Mexico prepares new plan

Leaders realize tougher action needed as economy reels

■ Government concedes original plan announced by President Zedillo on Jan. 3 didn't arrest inflation, impending recession.

N.Y. Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — Clear signs that Mexico's economic crisis is worsening have forced the government to concede that its original economic stabilization plan has failed, and that a tougher new plan of budget cuts and tax increases will have to be enacted soon.

President Ernesto Zedillo announced his original damage-control plan on Jan. 3, but Mexican officials say it failed to arrest stampeding inflation and an impending recession largely because the United States took too long to deliver the vital financial assistance that President Clinton offered to help Mexico.

Ever since the $20 billion American rescue package was finally signed on Tuesday, Zedillo has been busy telling Mexicans the crisis is under control.

Meanwhile, his top financial advisers have been drafting a darkly realistic new rescue plan that shows Mexico is slipping further into the inflationary whirlpool of rapidly rising wages and prices that it had vowed to avoid.

Government officials who have worked on early drafts of the new plan, which Zedillo said would be announced "very soon," say it slashes predictions of economic growth for 1995 from 1.5 percent to zero or even negative growth, which would mean that the government is finally acknowledging the inevitability of a recession, which many economists believe has already begun.

Inflation, which was projected at 19 percent in the original plan, is now expected to soar to almost double that figure.

The projected exchange rate of 4.5 pesos to the dollar, on which the economic

Hospice provides much more than medical care to families

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Shellee Bruton was born Sept. 29, 1971.

Not long afterward, prospective adoptive parents learned of Shellee's birth defects — most notably cerebral palsy — and abandoned the adoption. The couple were reportedly told Shellee was destined to be a "vegetable."

"We found out a lot different," Judy Cavender said. Ms. Cavender and her husband, J.B., took in an 18-month old Shellee as a permanent foster child.

Foster care for the baby girl by other families had been short-lived. "She was headed for the state home when we got her," Ms. Cavender said.

As they did for their own two children and four other foster children at the time, the Cavenders provided a caring environment for the baby girl.

"Shellee screamed 22 out of 24 hours. She was a very irritable child," Ms. Cavender recalled. "But within three weeks we had a baby that cooed and made noises and tried to interact."

"By Christmas, she was in love with every Santa Claus she saw," Cavender added.

Probe finds that FAA didn't heed many warnings about ATR-72s

WASHINGTON (NYT) — American Eagle Flight 4184 had been holding for 32 minutes in a chilly drizzle last October when air traffic controllers in Chicago cleared the pilots to make a routine descent from 10,000 to 8,000 feet.

Although the pilots did not know it, a dangerous ridge of ice had built up on the wings, and in a fraction of a second, to their complete and ultimately final terror, the pilots lost control of the ATR-72 turbo prop.

The plane's controls moved on their own, tilting the right wing almost perpendicular to the ground. The pilots wrestled with the aircraft, but the wing tilted violently again, the plane flipped on its back and, without hope of recovery, the plane plunged toward earth.

All 68 people aboard were killed when the plane slammed into a soybean field near Roselawn, Ind., a crash so violent that few recognizable pieces of the plane were left intact.

It was a crash that did not have to happen.

A New York Times investigation has found that the Federal Aviation Administration had for years brushed aside repeated warnings from pilots, and experts, and from the behavior of the plane itself, that something was awry. The failure to heed those warnings rais-

Van Johnson to speak at symposium

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

Actor Van Johnson, star of more than 125 movies who will speak here Friday, spent many of his younger hours on the tennis courts. He particularly enjoyed the Naval officers and their wives whom he met at Coronado, Calif., where he vacationed frequently enough at the Hotel del Coronado to claim "I brought my kids up there." During one trip, he remembers watching a young girl practicing on the Del's courts at the same time daily.

"When my wife and the kids were changing and getting ready for dinner, I'd be sitting in the window looking at the tennis courts, which are empty by then, six or seven o'clock, and there was a little girl whose father was there making her serve a basket of balls, one basket after the other," Johnson recalled. "And she looked up at me and sent her eyes up to heaven as if to say, 'If he doesn't stop with these damn lessons.'"

"She's Billie Jean King. She became a champion," he said, a laugh coloring his words in the same way it does in his movies. "And I thought all those hours with that father, really a Mama Rose—the gypsy. He was really a backstage mother pushing that kid."

'Your honor may I approach' a sure sign of trouble

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — Talk about your bar brawls.

"Baloney!" says defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr. one day.

"Is he wearing the robe in this courtroom today?" prosecutor Christopher Darden sniffs toward Cochran another day.

"All right, children, please," Superior Court Judge Lance Ito implores more than once.

It's life at the O.J. Simpson sidebar, where everyone knows your name — usually "mud" — and folks don't have to worry about impressing or alienating anybody but each other and the judge since the jury can't hear.

Several times a court session the lawyers can be seen huddling with Ito at the bench — known in legal circles as a sidebar conference — and transcripts show that the conversations are usually more interesting, and revelatory, than what goes on in open court.

When the lawyers aren't taking digs at each other, they're outright insulting their learned colleagues. Even the judge takes his share of abuse. Humor, though, also is in plentiful supply. Informality is the norm.

The topics range from the arcane — many discussions center on such legal matters as hearsay objections — to what Denise Brown told a detective upon hearing her sister had been killed. ("He did it!" she said, referring to Simpson).

It also was revealed in a sidebar that Nicole Brown Simpson's family won't let either the prosecution or defense interview Ms. Simpson's children about what the kids may have told police the night of the murders.

Despite the often nasty tone of the sidebars, the lawyers usually reconcile; and by the time they get back to open court, the jury and audience, including reporters, have no clue that they've just been vilifying or vilified.

Until last week.

That's when a sidebar led to a contempt citation against Darden for repeatedly interrupting the judge and violating Ito's one-lawyer-per-side-per-topic speaking rule by putting in his 2 cents worth along with Marcia Clark.

'You know, we can't destroy the lives of every witness who takes the witness stand just to suit Mr. Simpson's needs. You know what? We have hit an all-time low here. I don't know if you guys can go any lower.'
— Prosecutor Christopher Darden, from sidebar transcripts last week at the O.J. Simpson case.

After a good deal of posturing between judge and prosecutor, Darden finally gave Ito the apology the judge was soliciting. Ito accepted and withdrew the citation.

The dispute that led to the sidebar clash — Darden's frustration with Cochran's trial tactics — has been brewing for months, and transcripts of past sidebars show that the two have long been needling each other.

In a Feb. 2 sidebar during Ms. Brown's testimony, Darden took exception to Cochran's suggestion that the prosecution wasn't allowed to pursue a certain line of questioning.

"Your honor, I don't know what Mr. Cochran means by, 'We can't allow ...' Is he wearing the robe in this courtroom today?" said Darden.

During another sidebar the day before, Darden took issue with the defense grilling of Simpson acquaintance Ron Shipp.

"You know, we can't destroy the lives of every witness who takes the witness stand, you know, just to suit Mr. Simpson's needs. You know what? We have hit an all-time low here. I think I don't know if you guys can go any lower," Darden said.

"That's baloney!" said Cochran.

Darden isn't the only one who has had words with Cochran. Clark, too, has expressed frustration, snapping at Cochran on Feb. 21 when he said the judge has already ruled on something: "No he has been given a chance (to rule). If you stop talking, he might."

Clark also has taken aim at the judge, complaining that he was giving the defense more room to ask hearsay-laced questions.

"When I have asked these questions, the court has cut me off at the knees," she said.

And Cochran repeatedly uses the sidebars to play psychological warfare with his opposition.

When Clark conceded one of her questions could have been asked in a "more artful fashion," Cochran responded, "Counsel was inartful. We'll stipulate to that."

At another sidebar, Cochran made reference to Clark's recent return to the courtroom from a high-level desk job, saying, "This is your first case in a long time. You have been an administrator, we can tell."

Often, the sidebars yield news, but few reporters ever know about it until much later. The transcripts rarely are made available the day of the conferences, and only then at a stiff same-day fee of $8.33 a page.

Sonny shares pizza as house civility crumbles over GOP legislation

By Marcy Gordon
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Nerves were frayed as the House Judiciary Committee wrestled into the night over legislation, so much on the edge that Rep. Sonny Bono bought pizza to restore civility.

That peacemaking move last week calmed things for a little while between sparring Democrats and Republicans, but invective and vitriol are more the norm than the exception in the House these days.

Midway through the majority GOP's 100-day deadline for House action on major bills, lawmakers are tired and cranky, Democrats feel desperate, and the customary civility has gone by the wayside. Tempers flared in key committees over an array of issues: legal reform, welfare restructuring and cuts in programs for low-income people.

"They're working harder over a concentrated period of time than they ever have," said Norman Ornstein, a veteran Congress-watcher at the American Enterprise Institute. "The stakes are high and they're talking about some highly controversial things. ... The pressure on those committees, particularly on Judiciary, is intense."

Much of the hostility has been displayed among members of the House Judiciary Committee, which is handling roughly half the legislation in the Republicans' "Contract With America."

Wednesday's drafting session began badly as Democrats accused the GOP majority of rushing through without adequate debate on a bill to limit damages awarded in lawsuits.

At lunchtime, the Democratic committee members huddled in their office and seriously considered a walkout, according to several Democratic sources.

That night, after hours of drafting and debate, Bono, a freshman Republican from California, had 15 pizzas brought in. The former pop singer and Palm Springs mayor, who also was in the restaurant business, apparently subscribes to the old adage about enemies breaking bread together.

"I'd like to move that we adjourn," Bono told Judiciary Chairman Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill. "The pizza is here and it's warm. I even bought some for the other side." The pizzas — cheese, cheese and pepperoni, and the works — smoothed the raw edges.

By the next morning, though, the bickering had started again.

Rep. Xavier Becerra, D-Calif., arrived breathless from another bill-drafting session, a few minutes too late to cast a key vote. He implored Hyde to order a second roll call, but the Republicans voted him down even though his vote against the bill wouldn't have reversed its adoption.

action in a place where we're supposed to be legislating," Becerra said later in an interview. "They're on this political race against time."

Hyde brushed off a complaint about the action from Rep. John Conyers of Michigan, the panel's senior Democrat, saying: "The business of the committee has to be done and, unfortunately, comity is a two-way street."

Down the hall, at the House Economic and Educational Opportunities Committee, a bill-drafting session on welfare reform was marked by Chairman Bill Goodling, R-Pa., banging the gavel amid shouting by Rep. George Miller, D-Calif.

"You ought to be embarrassed at what you're doing to the children in this nation," Miller told Goodling in one heated exchange.

The week before, a vote on the welfare reform plan in a House Ways and Means subcommittee brought an explosion of rancor between the panel's Republican chairman, Rep. Clay Shaw of Florida, and its senior Democrat, Rep. Harold Ford of Tennessee.

At a six-hour session Thursday night of the subcommittee that oversees health, education and other social programs, there were repeated tense moments as Republicans voted big cuts in job training and other important Democratic programs.

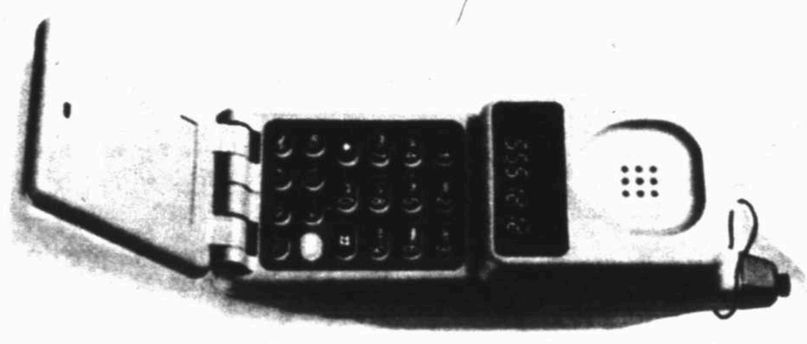

"I think it's just unconscionable, it's reprehensible," Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said of the housing reductions.

There were earlier eruptions that occurred soon after the Republicans seized control of Congress in early January. But those attacks came on the House floor, not in committees getting down to the nitty-gritty of writing legislation.

"It's rushing and bastardizing this process to meet an artificial deadline," Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., a senior member of the Judiciary Committee, said in an interview. "The quality of the work is the shoddiest I've ever seen. ... People were really upset about the procedures."

Republicans insist that the problem is obstructionism by Democrats. Said Hyde: "We are on a fast track and that is an obligation that we willingly assume."

A House-Senate dynamic to make the framers proud

By Robin Toner
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — They might be flustered by the daily news conferences, the constant drumbeat of talk radio and all the bright young freshmen with their laminated copies of the Contract with America.

But James Madison and the rest of the framers of the Constitution would understand very well the underlying dynamic of the first two months of this 104th Congress, scholars say. After years when the House and the Senate seemed to be growing more and more alike, the institutions have reverted to classic — and very distinctive — form in recent months:

The House, claiming a populist mandate, is roaring through legislation at an astonishing pace. The Senate, with a new Democratic minority embracing its deliberative tradition, has spent the past month debating one measure, the constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

Capitol Hill has become, in other words, a case study in bicameralism fit for the Federalist Papers, revised and updated for the Age of Gingrich.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, the 77-year-old Democrat from West Virginia, stood on the floor of the Senate last week, where he has seemed to be rooted of late, and scoffed at the fact that the House had spent just two days on the balanced budget amendment. "I thank God for the United States Senate!" Byrd declared.

Across the Capitol and a world apart, Rep. Jon Christenson, a 32-year-old freshman Republican from Omaha in his first elective office, said of Byrd, "The Senate needs to change its rules so we don't have people like the King of Pork thwarting the will of the American people."

Ross K. Baker, a political scientist at Rutgers University, said: "If James Madison were to come back and sit in the gallery of the House and Senate, he'd be pretty pleased with the way things are working The House is responding to the short-term influences of the election And the Senate is taking a longer and more measured and typically a broader view of the Contract."

This dynamic is of more than scholarly interest. It affects lobbying decisions, Democratic strategy in the White House and on Capitol Hill, even the behavior of some moderate Republicans in the House who may privately see the Senate as a safety net as they vote for legislation they might otherwise have qualms about. (Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., says the Senate has become the moderates' "enabler.")

Rep. Sherwood Boehlert, a Republican from upstate New York, said he cautioned against that temptation at a recent meeting with fellow moderates. "I expressed the concern that a lot of Republicans are going along with the idea that the Senate will save us from ourselves," he said.

For their part, many House Democrats, who as a class rarely saw much virtue in the Senate in the past (when it was blocking their legislation), now often view it as a last, best hope to temper the spending cuts and government rollbacks being pushed through a Republican House.

Democrats in the Senate, particularly Byrd, are capitalizing on the ample prerogatives afforded the minority party by Senate rules and its traditions of largely unlimited debate and amendment.

None of this means, of course, that the Senate, in the end, will produce vastly different legislative results from the House. (After a month of debate, for example, the Senate vote this coming Tuesday on the balanced budget amendment is still considered too close to call.)

Conservative Republicans are in the majority in both chambers for the first time in more than 40 years, and their leaders are determined to make the most of this moment.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M, chairman of the Budget Committee, argued that although the Senate might be moving slowly, it could still end up in the same philosophical place as the House.

Moreover, the contrast between the two chambers may be at its peak at the moment because of Speaker Newt Gingrich's commitment to getting the entire Contract with America, the House Republican platform from the 1994 campaign, through the House in the session's first 100 days.

Along the way, he is demonstrating just how quickly the House can move when there is a majority party with discipline and a leadership willing to muscle bills through.

At a recent Republican meeting, according to a participant, the House majority leader, Dick Armey, told the Senate majority leader, Bob Dole, that although both chambers were legislating, the House was making sausage while the Senate was curing ham.

Still, the sweeping turnover in the House has highlighted the more fundamental, institutional — and intentional — differences between the two chambers.

"The Senate was always intended to be the more deliberative body," said Charles Jones, a political scientist from the University of Wisconsin. The provision that one-third of the Senate stands for re-election every two years (compared with all of the House) "means it's unlikely to ever reflect a great big mass movement out in the country," Jones added.

'You've got a huge number of new people in the House and they're voting on a number of things they just don't have the time to evaluate. The Senate has much more of an institutional memory on things like WIC and the school lunch program.

— Sen. Warren Rudman, New Hampshire Republican

(Not until 1913 were senators even directly elected by voters; before that, they were chosen by state legislatures.)

As Warren B. Rudman, a former Republican senator from New Hampshire, put it, "You've got a huge number of new people in the House, and they're voting on a number of things they just don't have the time or the background to evaluate. The Senate has much more of an institutional memory on things like WIC and the school lunch program."

This institutional identity — some would call it superiority — runs deep. After the House roared through the national security provisions of the Contract with America this month, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said in an interview: "What you will see come out of the Senate will be a much more mature version, if I may be so condescending. I expect more in-depth debate, in hearings and on the floor."

Analysts like Jones note that the House is rewriting fundamental policies on poverty, crime and the legal and regulatory systems at an extraordinary rate.

In January, Jones said, the House was in session 16 days and held 143 committee meetings; during the same month two years ago, it was in session seven days and held 39 committee meetings.

"The idea that you'd do all these fundamental things fast is a little scary," the political scientist said. "So here comes the Senate, like the manager in what we used to call baseball, coming out to slow things down."

Or, in a renowned (and perhaps apocryphal) metaphor used by George Washington, as he supposedly defended the creation of the Senate to Thomas Jefferson: "We pour legislation into the senatorial saucer to cool it."

An administration official said the House-Senate dynamic has much to do with when the president speaks out on a measure.

"There's so much going on now you have to pick your spots," he said. The official described many of the initial battles in the House, where Democrats lack the protections afforded the minority in the Senate, as a time to "tell a story, through their amendments and their floor fights, about who the Republicans are and what they're trying to do."

The Democrats' hope, of course, is that in the Senate and in conference committees they can more effectively shape the legislation.

But Ed Gillespie, a spokesman for Armey, said that while the pace of the two chambers might be quite different, "We think in the end, most of what we pass here will prevail there."

CARE: Workers offer emotional support to families

(From 1A)

Despite her disabilities and health problems, Shellee possessed a drive to do what others did.

She loves Six Flags, riding every ride she's allowed. She's a competitive Uno player. And she's high spirited and has a good sense of humor, according to her family.

When she was 19 years old, Shellee moved to an independent living center in San Antonio. She attended school three days a week, and worked at the Red Cross filing cards and at La Quinta Inn folding towels and linens.

Last May she graduated high school.

About the same time she fell ill.

"Within four weeks from graduation, we had a diagnosis of mouth cancer and throat cancer," Ms. Cavender said.

Shellee had come upon an obstacle in life too great to conquer.

Today, she's back home with the Cavenders in Odessa.

Heavily sedated, Shellee lies in a hospital bed in the front room of the Cavenders' small home. She's undergone a tracheotomy and had her teeth pulled to reduce pain.

Shellee underwent chemotherapy and radiation treatment last fall. Additional treatment would have compounded her pain and only prolonged her life a few months. "Shellee understood these options and it was her choice not to do it," Ms. Cavender said.

Shellee's doctor expected the 23-year-old to die earlier this month.

"I felt we were going to need help getting through the rest of it," said Ms. Cavender, who with her husband has cared for upward of 40 foster children in the last 25 years.

Since the end of December, Hospice of Midland — an organization dedicated to serving the needs of the terminally ill — has assisted in the care of Shellee.

"Part of our being here is to prepare the family for what is coming ... so when the end comes, it's not a total surprise," said Greg Everett, a registered nurse who visits the family for about a half-hour daily during the week and as needed other times.

During his visits, Everett brings medications and other supplies, takes Shellee's vital signs and notes her condition. Everett provides answers to questions about changes in Shellee and the natural progression of the disease.

Once when Shellee pulled out her tracheotomy tube, Everett met the Cavenders and accompanied them to the hospital.

A large part of caring for Shellee revolves around pain management and keeping her comfortable.

Due to the disease and a "tremendous" amount of pain and anxiety medications, Shellee remains confined to the hospital bed supplied by Hospice.

"She can point to what hurts or turn her head or move her foot to let us know what she is trying to communicate," Ms. Cavender said.

A television is situated near the bed. Ms. Cavender names Shellee's favorite movies — which include Home Alone, The Mask, Pet Detective and The Flintstones — until the young lady motions what she wants to watch.

Watching television and sleeping fill Shellee's days.

Arrangements for her death — which Shellee had a say in — have been made.

Meanwhile, the Cavenders and Hospice just try to make Shellee comfortable.

"We just take it one day at a time," said Ms. Cavender, her eyes welled up with tears.

All patients receiving care from Hospice of Midland have been diagnosed by a doctor to have a year or less to live.

After Hospice receives a referral — usually from a patient's friend, family or physician — the patient is assessed for eligibility and needs, and a care plan devised. Hospice is a non-profit organization; all services are free.

Providing Hospice care is a team effort, which usually includes a Hospice nurse, social worker, chaplain, home health aide, volunteers and the patient's physician.

Hospice care takes place in the comfort of the familiar surroundings of a patient's home.

"We provide physical, emotional and spiritual support," said Margarite Mouton, patient care coordinator for Hospice of Midland.

Although care ranges from less than a day to several months, the average time is 53 days. And there have been cases where a patient diagnosed as terminally ill recovers.

During Hospice's last fiscal year, the organization cared for 172 patients.

The majority of patients suffer from cancer, but Hospice cares for those with any terminal illness such as emphysema, cardiac problems, Lou Gehrig's disease and AIDS.

Needs of the patient — including pain management — are addressed by Hospice as well as concerns from a patient's family about the stages and changes brought on by terminal illness.

Care usually consists of regular visits by a nurse and home health aide. Hospice workers are also on call around the clock.

The nurse in charge assesses the patient's condition, manages symptoms, teaches family care and advises family members on what changes to expect. Home health aides perform "a.m. care," such as bathing the patient and changing bed sheets.

In addition, volunteers offer help from running errands to visiting patients. A social worker is available for counseling and advice, such as managing finances or making funeral arrangements. And a chaplain can provide spiritual assistance.

But care is not just a list of duties performed by Hospice workers and volunteers. Oftentimes patients and families develop close relationships with nurses and aides who visit daily. "Sometimes it doesn't seem like a nursing visit," Ms. Mouton said.

And the friendship is mutual.

"They become your friends and it's hard to keep losing friends but it's good to know you helped," Ms. Mouton said.

Many of the memories told by John Brinkley are accompanied by tears.

But his mood quickly changes to smiles and laughter when the subject turns to Hospice home health aide Ken Jefferson and registered nurse Sherry Coplen.

"I've got the best help here in the world," Brinkley said motioning at the two. "I never knew that people cared. I never had reason to know. I was never sick in my 81 years."

Today Brinkley has prostate cancer.

Brinkley has received Hospice care for about a month. Jefferson comes by every week day.

"First, I check to see how he's doing, get him in the tub and bathe him and shave him," Jefferson said.

Sometimes, Jefferson said, Brinkley needs some stern persuading to get out of bed for his bath and to walk a little for exercise. A smiling Brinkley acknowledges he gets "lazy" sometimes but that Jefferson is always cordial.

Brinkley said he welcomes Jefferson's care and insisted on telling about one memorable visit. "He took that catheter out and I wanted to kiss him," Brinkley said laughing. "Yeah, he was happy that day," Jefferson added.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Sherry Coplen, nurse in charge, shares a joyful moment with patient John Brinkley, who has prostate cancer.

At one point in the conversation, Brinkley said: "He (Jefferson) treats me just like a daddy." A while later, Jefferson reflected: "I kind of adopted him as a son."

That interaction is part of what makes Hospice care special, Ms. Coplen said. "We do a lot of emotional support. A lot of what we do is not offered in a doctor's office or the hospital," she said.

And the physical help provided by Hospice allows Brinkley to stay at home with his primary caretaker — his mother.

An ill Brinkley moved to Midland from Los Angeles to be with his mother five years ago. "I told him to come home to get better," his mother, Beulah Mae Battle, said.

"I knew in here," a teary-eyed Brinkley said patting his chest, "we were both getting older and needed to spend some time together."

These days Brinkley seems content about his situation. And he offered a story to explain his attitude.

"Here we go again," Brinkley said smiling and tapping Jefferson on the knee.

While in the hospital several weeks ago, Brinkley said, he was being taken down a hallway in a wheelchair.

"Something came over me and I started crying ... and if I tell it I have to cry," Brinkley said.

"Down in the corridor, something came through the window — and it may sound like a fairy tale — and something touched my body," Brinkley said with streams of tears descending his cheeks.

The nurse asked why he was crying, he said. "I said I couldn't help it," he said.

"Two days before that I would have been ashamed to cry before another man," he said. "My tears are tears of joy."

As a result of the experience, Brinkley said, he hasn't been afraid to die and feels like he's recovering.

But for now, Brinkley — who has been diagnosed terminally ill — will remain in the care of his mother and Hospice.

"I don't want no one else but them," Brinkley said.

Nell Horn died of cancer on June 25, 1989, at the age of 72. Her husband, Erwin Horn, died of congestive heart failure on Feb. 9 of this year at the age of 79.

"There's a time in life when you don't get well and no one wants to talk to us about those times," said Glinda Duke, the daughter of the late Erwin and Nell Horn.

But Ms. Duke found an exception. "That's what Hospice does," she said.

Ms. Duke was introduced to Hospice when her mother fell gravely ill. A tumor was discovered in her liver; cancer that had been detected in her breast a couple of years earlier apparently metastasized.

"They told us she only had a couple of months to live," Ms. Duke said.

An oncologist who examined Mrs. Horn contacted Hospice, who in turn contacted Ms. Duke.

"I had never been with anyone who had died ... They (Hospice) made me aware of what signs to look for," Ms. Duke said. "In turn, I was able to share (that information) with my dad so he wasn't so fearful of what was going to happen."

Mrs. Horn spent a short time at her home before returning to the hospital where she passed away.

Almost five years later, Horn suffered congestive heart failure and related complications. A few months later, his condition worsened and he was hospitalized.

The doctor said Horn was dying.

Horn wanted to go home to his comfortable chair and remote control. Ms. Duke said she was concerned about him going home alone.

Horn went home but was hospitalized again in January. "Dad began to beg me to take him back home," Ms. Duke said.

She complied. "I didn't know how I was going to take care of my daddy. At one time he was 6 foot 4 and a big tough farmer," Ms. Duke said. "I was afraid I was going to make some mistakes."

Ms. Duke contacted Hospice. The organization arranged an ambulance to bring Horn home to a hospital bed and other home health-care fixtures.

"At this time dad was so weak he could not push himself up on the bed anymore. He was in a lot of pain," Ms. Duke said.

But Horn felt more comfortable at home, where his children and grandchildren could visit.

A home health aide from Hospice — Martha Robinson — came to watch Horn from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. "When she came, I felt there was so much pressure alleviated with me. She knew what she was doing. She was quiet and peaceful and very reassuring to me and my dad," Ms. Duke said.

Having someone from Hospice — rather than a family member — care for and bathe Horn allowed him to keep his dignity. "I was still my dad's little girl — and I'm 50," Ms. Duke said.

The day after Horn's birthday — Feb. 7 — Ms. Robinson came again at 7 p.m. That evening an exhausted Ms. Duke was told by the aide to get some rest.

"At 7 o'clock that morning, she came in and touched me on my shoulder and told me my dad was gone," Ms. Duke recalled.

"He did not have to struggle. He did not have to fight. He simply went to sleep," Ms. Duke said. "It was very peaceful. There was not a lot of stress."

BAR: Board nominates Midlander

Texas' 59,000 eligible lawyers will vote on their new president when ballots are mailed out on April 15. These ballots must be postmarked by the end of the month so that a count can be made by the first or second of May, Alsup said.

The nomination itself is considered a milestone in any successful attorney's career. "With only two selected out of approximately 59,000, the nomination by itself is quite an honor," Alsup said.

Alsup's nomination was made official in the Jan. 20 meeting of the board, which was in Laredo. "They meet at different places around the state," Alsup said. The State Bar has rules that ensure smaller cities participate alongside the state's major urban centers.

Also nominated is M. Colleen McHugh of Corpus Christi, a highly acclaimed attorney and mother of one. She heads her firm's department of labor and employment law in that city.

Alsup is a shareholder and president of the Midland firm of Lynch, Chappell & Alsup. His practice is primarily concerned with general civil cases including business and commercial litigation and trust and estate law.

After serving in the U.S. Army from 1956-58, Alsup earned a degree in business administration and his law degree from the University of Texas.

He served on the State Bar Board of Directors from 1990-93. While there he served as chairman of the Policy Manual Committee and was a member of the Appeals, Goals and Implementation, Legislative Policies and Facilities and Equipment Committees.

He is a former director of the Texas Young Lawyers Association and a former president of the Midland County Bar Association.

Alsup is active in the First Presbyterian Church as a deacon, elder, Sunday school teacher and chairman of two committees.

He has served the community in such organizations as the Permian Basin Area Foundation, Memorial Hospital and Medical Center board of trustees, Midland Chamber of Commerce, Industrial Foundations of Midland, Inc., United Way, Midland-Odessa MHMR, High Sky Children's Ranch, Junior Achievement of Midland, Family Services of Midland, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Midland Heart Association, Midland Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Midland Jaycees and Midland Arts Assembly.

Alsup is an author and speaker and has served as a panelist in law-related forums.

He and his wife, Sandra K. Alsup, have two sons, J. Devin Alsup and Jeffrey K. Alsup. The former son also is an attorney.

An outdoor enthusiast, Alsup enjoys running and triathalon events and has farming and ranching interests. Among his favored pastimes are reading, sports and travel.

PLAN: Mexican leaders draft new, tougher measures

projections of the plan were based, is replaced with an imposing new rate of 5 to 5.5 pesos to the dollar. This means that the peso would be worth no more than 18 to 20 cents, rather than 22 cents.

The new plan anticipates that taxes will be increased sharply, prices for gasoline and electricity produced by the state will rise and the federal budget will be cut severely to produce the surplus of five-tenths of 1 percent that U.S. officials demanded as one condition for signing a $20 billion rescue package.

The American assistance will go a long way toward resolving Mexico's most immediate problem — paying off billions of dollars in short-term debt — but it will do little to solve the economy's fundamental problems.

"Since Jan. 3, we've been fighting not to adjust the economy but simply to control a situation of economic panic," Zedillo said during an informal talk over tequila and chimichangas after several optimistic speeches on Thursday in the central state of Zacatecas, where he had gone to raise the spirits of Mexicans.

He said the original plan might have been successful in controlling Mexico's out-of-balance current account deficit, the broadest measure of a nation's goods and services, "but now we know the problems go far deeper than that."

Mexican officials working on the new economic stabilization plan also say it will differ from the original in that the social pact between government, labor and business, which has long characterized Mexico's preferred method of controlling the economy, will be abandoned.

Instead of sitting down with labor and business leaders to negotiate the kind of wage and price controls that so far this year have failed to hold the line, officials say the government will act on its own powers.

That will entail sharply cutting the federal budget and maintaining interest rates at historically high levels to restrain inflation and stabilize the exchange rate.

PROBE: FAA didnt' heed pilots' warnings about prop planes es troubling questions that go beyond the Roselawn crash, questions about the procedures and safeguards of the agency itself.

The agency does not routinely monitor crashes abroad of foreign-made planes operating in this country — as happened with the ATR. It also relies heavily on manufacturers' evaluations of their own airplanes — as with the ATR — rather than conducting independent tests. As a result, its own experts increasingly lack the hands-on knowledge to ask the right questions.

The FAA's bureaucratic culture keeps it from being aggressive, as does its reluctance to impose costly safety modifications on airlines.

There have been assertions for years that issues like wind shear — and de-icing — become priorities only after a fatal crash brings them to public attention. The experts call it "tombstone technology," and the ATR experience provides a compelling example.

The ATR-72 and the smaller ATR-42 were involved in a string of incidents in Europe and the United States, including a 1987 crash in the Alps that killed 37 people. In at least 20 incidents, the planes faltered in icy conditions. Yet the FAA failed to conduct a far-reaching, independent review of the plane's design until after 68 people were killed in the United States in October.

"It's a story of a series of linked incidents, and at least one accident, that all point basically in the same direction — that there is a problem in certain conditions with the aircraft," said William Waldock, a professor of aeronautical science at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University in Arizona and a leading safety expert.

"But until the blood gets deep enough, there is a tendency to either ignore a problem or live with it."

For their part, FAA officials vigorously defend the agency's actions in certifying the plane, and continuing to allow it to fly.

The pattern, they insist, became clear only after the Roselawn crash. It is only in hindsight, they say, that the ATR crash seems as if it could have been prevented.

Documents show U.S. Customs was warned year ago of smuggling risk

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — A federal program intended to speed the flow of cargo from Mexico by relaxing inspections may have become a drug smuggler's freeway, according to interviews and records obtained by The Associated Press.

The U.S. Customs Service designed the Line Release program to allow approved companies to transport hundreds of shipments across the border without the usual intensive inspection.

"It's a superhighway for smugglers. Line Release is a program that could have been designed for smugglers," said a veteran inspector who spoke on condition of anonymity because he feared retribution from superiors.

Former inspector Mike Horner agreed: "We are developing systems that are advantageous to the smuggler and a disadvantage to the inspectors."

Line Release was created for use by reputable companies in Canada that regularly ship merchandise to the United States. Customs began using the program with Mexico in 1987, and it has grown rapidly with the signing of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

In 1994, 2.7 million Line Release vehicles crossed the Mexican border, a 44 percent increase over 1993, said Customs spokesman Steve Duchesne.

Participants can send up to 249 shipments across the border before undergoing an inspection. Barring problems, the company does not undergo intensive inspection again until its 500th shipment.

While Customs runs background checks on businesses that ship goods under Line Release, it's less thorough in checking trucking companies and drivers.

That makes it easy for drug traffickers to hire truckers to mix narcotics in with legitimate cargo, inspectors say.

Finally, the companies admitted to Line Release don't always fit Customs' low-risk criteria, documents suggest.

Customs Commissioner George Weise and Lee Brown, director of the White House Office of Drug Control Policy, scheduled a weekend visit to the Customs port in San Diego in response to concerns about drug trafficking.

Among its critics was Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., who grilled directors of the FBI and Drug Enforcement Administration about Customs' weaknesses during a Judiciary Committee hearing this month.

But Weise and other top Customs officials were warned of the program's shortcomings a year ago in a memorandum from the Treasury Department's Office of the Inspector General.

The memo was written after Customs inspectors approached investigators with concerns that smugglers were benefiting from the program.

Charles Winwood, who oversees Customs' cargo operations from Washington, acknowledged the agency got the memo, but said Customs already was aware problems existed and was working on remedies, such as increased use of drug-sniffing dogs and X-ray equipment to screen commercial vehicles.

"We're not relying on good will," he said. "Are there checks and balances? There are some. Do we need to improve? Yes, we do."

Customs records show that less than 2,000 pounds of cocaine was seized from commercial trucks along the Mexican border in 1994, compared to 7,708 pounds in 1993.

Cocaine seized from non-commercial trucks on the southern border increased by about 10 percent, from 37,131 pounds in 1993 to 41,312 pounds in 1994, Duchesne said.

Customs intelligence records obtained by the AP show that Line Release participants include the Hipodromo de Agua Caliente, a Tijuana race track. Although races are no longer held at Agua Caliente, the track is approved by Customs to ship horses across the border under Line Release.

The track's part owner, Jorge Hank Rhon, was named in a 1990 Customs intelligence document as having possible connections to money laundering. And he was fined $25,000 in 1992 for trying to smuggle a rare white tiger from the United States to Mexico.

Customs officials said the allegations alone weren't enough to exclude Hank's company from the program.

They also said Agua Caliente's participation in Line Release was not considered a problem because the horses are checked by a veterinarian before entering the U.S. to safeguard against drug smuggling.

Hank, through a spokesman, declined to comment.

Rudy Camacho, commissioner of Customs' western region, said the decrease in commercial seizures and the corresponding increase in non-commercial seizures last year is evidence Customs is driving smugglers away from the Line Release.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A man who went into surgery to have his right foot amputated awoke to learn the wrong foot was gone.

The patient, in his 50s, was told of the blunder while he was in the recovery room at University Community Hospital on Monday.

The man's leg was severed midway between ankle and knee, hospital spokesman John Andreas said.

He did not know if the surgery team made an attempt to reattach the limb, and said patient confidentiality concerns and the man's wishes prevented him from naming those involved and providing other details.

The hospital was investigating the mistake.

Surgeon Emilio Echevarria, a member of the state Board of Medicine, said doctors commonly circle a kneecap with a marker or tie a ribbon on the correct limb.

Often they ask patients which side of the body, or which limb, is to be operated on before administering anesthesia.

"Sometimes the patient laughs at you — 'Are you kidding me, doctor? You don't know what side it is on?'" Echevarria said. "You can't be too careful."

Girl poisoned by bad burger to get $15 million

SEATTLE (AP) — A child who was poisoned by a Jack In The Box hamburger and fell into a coma for 40 days has won a $15 million settlement, The News Tribune of Tacoma reported.

The settlement was reached with the restaurant's parent company, San Diego-based Foodmaker Inc., and awaits the approval of a Superior Court judge, the newspaper said Friday.

"I'm pleased with it," said Rex Kiner, whose daughter Brianne was 9 years old when she fell ill in 1993. "I think the family's happy too, for what we've been through."

Brianne, now 12, was among an estimated 600 people who were sickened by contaminated, undercooked hamburgers sold by Jack In The Box.

Three children died. Their parents reached individual settlements with Foodmaker, including one worth $1.3 million. Terms of the other two settlements were not disclosed.

Brianne was perhaps the most acutely ill child to survive. She suffered a stroke that resulted in brain damage, and also suffered damage to almost every organ system in her body.

She now undergoes rehabilitation at a special boarding school which her parents will only say is "somewhere in the Southwest."

Karen Bachmann, vice president of corporate communications at Foodmaker, declined to discuss settlement details.

The Kiner suit was not part of a class-action suit by other E. coli victims against Jack In The Box. Last July, four unidentified families split a $533,523 settlement with the fast-food chain.

Justice, ACLU clash on N.J. bid to register sex offenders

WASHINGTON — A tough New Jersey law that requires police to register convicted sex offenders and warn community residents of their release has triggered a clash between the Justice Department and civil libertarians.

The Clinton administration said this month that it will oppose the American Civil Liberties Union and attorneys for sex offenders who argue that the provision, known as Megan's Law, is unconstitutional, violating the released offender's rights.

In New Jersey, any convicted sex offender who fails to register by Tuesday faces a $500 fine and six months in prison.

"The public deserves a chance to be on guard," Attorney General Janet Reno said in announcing the Justice Department's decision to support New Jersey's defense of the law in federal court.

According to the Justice Department, about 40 states now have some sort of requirement that released sex offenders register with law enforcement officials. Two states, New Jersey and Washington, have the strictest regulations, requiring that convicted sex offenders deemed dangerous register no matter how long ago they completed their prison terms.

After a sex offender is released from prison, New Jersey prosecutors may classify the offender as low, moderate or high risk. Moderate and high-risk offenders are indentified to their communities through institutions such as schools and day-care centers.

President Clinton supported a provision in the 1994 crime bill, endorsed by both Democrats and Republicans, that threatens to deny some federal funds to states that fail within two years to enact laws mandating sex offender registration. Gov. Weld is currently studying the possibility of proposing such registration.

"Political leaders want to do something about crime. But doing something sometimes does more harm than good," said Edward Martone, executive director of the ACLU of New Jersey. "This law is unconstitutional and impractical. It applies to people who committed their offenses 20 or 30 years ago and served their time."

Megan's Law is named after 7-year-old Megan Kanka, of Hamilton, N.J., who was raped and murdered July 29 after she went outside unescorted to visit a neighborhood friend. Jesse Timmendequas, the man charged with luring her into his house by offering to show her a puppy, then raping her and strangling her with a belt, is a convicted sex offender who lived across the street. He is awaiting trial.

The law's proponents, including Megan's parents, argue that if they had known that Timmendequas was living nearby, they would have been able to avoid the tragedy.

"I never would have allowed her to walk out the door alone," said Maureen Kanka, Megan's mother. "And I would have told her, 'That man is dangerous. That man hurts children.'"

The intent of Megan's Law is to provoke a "common-sense reaction," not vigilante attacks, on convicted child molesters, Associate Attorney General John Schmidt said in an interview. The law does not inflict additional punishment on people who have already served their time, which would be unconstitutional, Schmidt said. Rather, he insisted, "it serves a legitimate public safety purpose."

In New Jersey, state Attorney General Deborah Poritz said hundreds of sex offenders have already registered since October, when the law went into effect. She warned that registration is not a panacea, because "every sex offender commits a first offense," but added that she believes community awareness will help to deter some sexual assaults.

"I never would have allowed her to walk out the door alone. And I would have told her, 'That man is dangerous; that man hurts children.'

– Maureen Kanka,
mother of 7-year-old rape-murder victim

Opponents of Megan's Law, however, argue that notifying communities of the presence of sex offenders has already lead some molesters to flee. And in some cases, neighbors have tried to run the men out of the area.

"As long as people are running around with fliers with the pictures of sex offenders on them, sex offenders are not going to be able to get a job or an apartment, and they are just going to run and hide," Martone said.

The convicted sex offender in New Jersey who filed a federal lawsuit challenging Megan's Law, for example, had planned to start a new life this year after completing a 12-year sentence for rape, Martone said. Carlos Diaz had hoped to live quietly with his mother in Passaic, N.J., Martone said.

But instead of securing anonymity after his release from prison, Diaz was greeted at his mother's apartment by a phalanx of Guardian Angels, a self-styled group of community activists, passing out pictures of him stamped with a warning: "Beware." Now, some say Diaz has fled to Puerto Rico; others say he has moved to Texas.

More serious than flier harassment, Martone said, are incidents of death threats, rock-throwing, beatings and arson aimed at released sex offenders around the country. In Lynnwood, Wash., last year, Joseph Gallardo was released from prison after serving three years for raping a 10-year-old girl. After police notified the community of Gallardo's intention to move into the small wood-frame home owned by his father, the house was burned to the ground.

Washington has had a registration requirement similar to Megan's Law for four years, known as the 1990 Washington Community Protection Act. But civil libertarians there are focusing legal challenges on a provision in the law that allows indefinite involuntary commitment of offenders classified as "sexually violent predators," even after they have served their prison sentence, until they convince authorities that they no longer pose a threat.

The ACLU is challenging the Washington program, arguing that it inflicts involuntary incarceration on offenders who have already served their sentences. And the Washington State Psychiatric Association condemned it as "an exercise in preventive detention, not medical therapy."

Privileges end for convicted LIRR gunman

N.Y. Times News Service

MINEOLA, N.Y. — He no longer has a telephone in his cell, but Colin Ferguson is still calling his lawyers several times a day, even as they argue over the appeal of his conviction in the Long Island Rail Road shootings.

The phone, installed when Ferguson was acting as his own lawyer, was removed after his conviction on Feb. 17, jail officials said.

Ferguson also lost additional time for research in the jail law library and permission to choose his food in the prison cafeteria because of his fears of being poisoned, officials said.

However, Ferguson, convicted of killing 6 people and wounding 19 others, remains in isolation in a separate wing of the jail under a 24-hour security watch, still fearful that other prisoners, as well as the guards, are plotting to kill him.

Ferguson's chief legal adviser, Alton G. Rose, said that Ferguson planned to pursue an appeal, but, because he is indigent, would ask the state appeals court to appoint a lawyer to represent him.

But two other legal advisers, William M. Kunstler and Ronald L. Kuby, who have had their differences with Rose, said that Ferguson called them within 24 hours of his conviction and asked them to represent him on appeal.

Kuby said that Ferguson had agreed that the appeal would be based on the argument that Judge Donald E. Belfi of Nassau County Court had erred when he ruled that Ferguson was capable of understanding the charges against him and had a knowing understanding of his right to refuse counsel and act as his own lawyer.

Ferguson faces a maximum of 200 years in prison when he is sentenced on March 20. Rose, who said he would no longer represent Ferguson after sentencing, has continued to insist that Ferguson does not want to raise the issue of mental competency on appeal.

Rose assumed the role of legal adviser during the 14-day trial when Ferguson refused to accept the advice of Kunstler and Kuby to pursue an insanity defense. Ferguson dismissed both Kunstler and Kuby as his lawyers, choosing to defend himself, but kept both on as out-of-court advisers.

Rose, however, appeared to be distancing himself from the case, declining to return telephone calls and messages left with his office over the last three days.

Probation officers, meanwhile, are preparing a statement for the judge that tells of the impact of Ferguson's crimes on his victims and their families. It will be used in preparing a sentencing recommendation to the judge.

Gramm goes hunting for Iowa surprise

By Mike Glover
Associated Press Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa — Texas Sen. Phil Gramm launches his drive for Iowa's precinct caucuses not widely known and lagging in the polls in the state with the first test of GOP presidential strength.

In other words, he's perfectly positioned in Iowa, where it's often as important to surprise as it is to win.

"Gramm is going to be a lot better known, and he is going to go up," said Kayne Robinson, a veteran Republican operative and Gramm supporter. "We are already very, very pleased with where we are."

At a rally of about 500 supporters Saturday in Des Moines, Gramm declared, "Our government has not lived in the real world for 40 years, and if I am elected president that is going to change.

"I didn't come here to Iowa today to tell you it's going to be easy to fix all of the problems we face," he said. "I came here today to tell you we can fix these problems."

Gramm drew his loudest applause when he declared "I will never send U.S. troops into combat under U.N. command."

Gramm's rally formally opened his campaign in the state, but he's been busily organizing for a couple of years and has quietly built a network of supporters that's impressed even some of his rivals.

"I think he's off to a good start," said Steve Roberts, a former state Republican chairman who is backing Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "He's built an organization over the last year or two that's very respectable."

Gramm opened the second day of his announcement swing Saturday in Manchester, N.H., hammering his sharply conservative themes.

"We're either going to have to change the policies of our federal government or we are going to lose the American dream," Gramm said at a rally attended by about 400.

He also repeated his pledge to step down after a single term if he can't balance the federal budget.

Dole won the Iowa precinct caucuses in 1988 and has maintained solid ties to the state. This year, he's leading in the polls and is the heavy favorite to win the caucuses again.

"Expectations for us are pretty low," said Bob Haus, who is running Gramm's Iowa campaign. "It's the first time around the block for us."

By picking up the backing of important Republican figures like Robinson, State Auditor Richard Johnson and Secretary of State Paul Pate, Gramm has built credibility in state GOP circles. He's also secured the backing of seven members of the 17-member State Republican Central Committee.

For organizational contests like Iowa's caucus campaigns, that type of support is like money in the bank — something Gramm also possesses.

"Gramm is clearly in the top tier," said Iowa Republican Chairman Brian Kennedy.

But even his supporters concede there are some rough spots ahead, not the least of which is the daunting task of denting a Republican establishment long courted by Dole.

"Dole has been here, been building in this state since the mid-1970s," Roberts said.

And then there's what rivals delicately refer to as "the ethanol problem," a thorny situation in farm-state politics.

Ethanol is made from corn and blended with gasoline to make low-polluting fuel. That's very popular with farmers who grow corn, but oil interests favor an oil-based gasoline additive, and there's a big fight between oil companies and farmers.

Being a Texan, Gramm is on the wrong side of an arcane issue that can be deadly in farm-belt politics.

"It is something we will have to deal with," conceded Haus.

Gramm also had hoped to find a rich lode of support in the state's influential Christian Coalition but learned just last week that Dole is competing there as well.

Steve Scheffler, a field organizer for the religious conservatives, signed onto Dole's campaign, declaring him "solid on the issues and more electable."

Wild, wacky, outrageous Mardi Gras begins

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Nothing succeeds like excess during Mardi Gras week. No costume is too gaudy, no drink is too strong and absolutely nothing is too outrageous.

The first wave of revelers put on their Mardi Gras party favors of cheap, plastic beads Friday and began the annual ritual of wandering into bars and Bourbon Street strip clubs.

Another sign of a party: the greasing of poles and columns to keep drunken revelers from climbing onto hotel and restaurant balconies. There's also the arrival of 50 state troopers to help 1,500 police officers keep the mayhem safe.

"Anybody who's going to think of committing a crime, when they turn their head, they're going to see a police officer," said Assistant Police Chief Mitchell Dusset.

As many as 300,000 tourists are expected to join the locals before Fat Tuesday, and the total crowd could swell to 1.2 million, police say. Hotel occupancy is running around 95 percent.

By midday Friday, Pat O'Brien's bar had as many partiers as it could take.

"They're jammed in like sardines here," manager Pat Harding said. "Today, it's just unbelievable."

The Carnival season officially begins on Jan. 6, with mostly private parties and balls among the city's upper crust.

It culminates at midnight Tuesday, the last day of self-indulgent excess before Ash Wednesday and Lenten solemnity take hold in this heavily Roman Catholic city. When the party's over, police and garbage trucks herd people off the streets.

More than 40 parades roll through the streets of the city and its suburbs from Friday night until Tuesday.

There are celebrity parade marshals, such as actors Chuck Norris and John Larroquette. And floats with papier mache designs that look like exquisite works of art roll alongside tacky collections of bangles and sequins.

Those who display the most outrageous, and sometimes lewd, behavior are rewarded with beads, playing cards and occassionally some panties thrown from the floats.

It's all touted as the world's biggest free party, but that doesn't mean money doesn't change hands. Last year, Mardi Gras-related spending pumped an estimated $660 million into the metropolitan area economy.

Massachusetts judge separates twins in custody battle

N.Y. Times News Service

PLYMOUTH, Mass. — In a decision that opens a window onto the uncommon flexibility within the most personal of courts, a county family judge has ordered the separation of identical twin girls, temporarily giving custody of one to her mother and the other to her father.

The 10-year-old girls, Tara and Sheena Raymond of Wareham, had been living with their father, Dana Raymond, since the parents divorced two years ago. After their mother, Jean Ardizoni, sued to modify the custody arrangement, both parents, their lawyers and expert witnesses went to Plymouth County Probate and Family Court here on Feb. 14, prepared for a scheduled two-day trial.

Instead, Judge James R. Lawton ordered that the girls be picked up from their elementary school, then talked with them privately for 20 minutes. He ordered that Sheena live with her mother until a hearing on June 30, canceled the trial and left that day for a 10-day vacation in Florida.

Lawton's decision, viewed as Solomon-like by some and cruel by others, offered a glimpse into the normally private world of Probate and Family Court, where decisions on the most emotional and intimate of matters are handed down daily by judges guided more by their personal values than by strict legal guidelines common in criminal and civil courts.

Court officials say that judges must use every tool they can to clear their increasingly heavy dockets. The case is one of thousands choking the state's probate courts, which settle disputes over trusts and estates as well as personal issues like domestic abuse, child support, guardianship, the right to die and commitment of mentally ill to institutions.

Lawton, in an interview with The Associated Press, said he "simply wanted to do what the girls said they wanted."

"I was not performing surgery on Siamese twins," he said.

Where some legal experts and court administrators see flexibility, John E. Murphy, the lawyer for the twins' father, said he saw caprice. He said consistency and predictability were "the whole idea of the law."

"Then you go into court and there's chaos," Murphy said. "In probate court the judge can go on his whim of the day."

Dorothy Gill, who represents Ms. Ardizoni, 34, said the judge's action was appropriate. "What the judge did was listen to the children and fashion something that addressed their concerns," she said.

Had the girls committed a crime or been the victims of one, their names and faces would have remained secret. But in Massachusetts and other states, family court records are open to the public unless sealed by the judge. Although the press normally does not cover such cases, this one has drawn widespread attention to the family.

Although the blue-eyed, blond twins still see each other at school, they have said they were surprised and upset at being separated.

Raymond, a 44-year-old unemployed cable splicer, said he was enraged by the decision and by the cancellation of the trial. "The politicians, somebody, has to look at the immense power one man or one woman has to destroy a family," Raymond said. "We waited about 10 months for this trial. You have the right to a fair trial, the right to be heard."

Rosemarie Haigazian, a lawyer on Martha's Vineyard who practices family law and has represented children in divorce and custody cases, said decision making in probate court differed from that in other types of legal cases.

"In civil cases, there are dollar amounts and often the help of a jury," she said. "In criminal cases there are standards of what constitutes a crime and often the help of a jury. In probate cases, it falls to the judge to take the facts, which are many and conflicting, and the law, which is voluminous, mix them together and come up with a decision."

Other than state guidelines for child support, there are no rules to guide family judges. For example, Judge Catherine P. Sabaitis, who had handled the Raymond case earlier, refuses to talk to children in divorce and custody cases, because her philosophy is that children should be shielded from adult matters, said several lawyers who have presented cases before her. Judge Lawton, on the other hand, counsels new judges to listen to children.

John E. McNichols, court administrator for the Massachusetts Probate and Family Court Department, said such broad discretion for judges was essential. "Can one establish guidelines to deal with that highly emotionally charged an issue?" he said. "I don't think so. If that were the case, you could put a computer behind the bench."

Colosio assassination report eases some doubts

By Joseph B. Frazier
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — The arrest of a presumed second gunman in Mexico's most staggering political assassination in a half-century has confirmed some suspicions but has raised many more.

Yes, it seems another gunman was involved when Luis Donaldo Colosio, a reform-minded candidate for the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, was shot to death while campaigning in Tijuana on March 23, 1994.

Yes, it appears evidence was tampered with at the scene, indicating what many Mexicans have thought all along — the assassination was a conspiracy, not the work of an independent killer.

But by whom? To achieve what? And if there was a conspiracy in this shooting, what about the September murder of the No. 2 man in the ruling party, Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu?

In a country where cover-up, impunity and protection of the powerful are a way of life, people tend to suspect the worst and often are not disappointed. Most Mexicans believe high-ranking party officials ordered the murder.

"It can't end like this, there are other people involved, there must be, politicians, of course, at the highest level," said Guillermo Feria, 55, interviewed at the Zocalo, Mexico City's main plaza.

Some speculation has put the guilt for both killings in the laps of PRI leaders opposed to reforming the party.

■ News analysis

More than a dozen people were arrested in the Ruiz Massieu case, but the PRI congressman suspected of masterminding his killing has vanished, and police say he may be dead. Ruiz Massieu too was a party reformer.

Federal Attorney General Antonio Lozano Gracia announced Friday night that Othon Cortes Vazquez was the alleged second gunman in the Colosio case and that the 38-year-old native of the southern state of Oaxaca was in custody.

"The investigation is not finished, only the first stage," Lozano said. "We will continue with the investigation until all the facts are clarified."

Press reports listed Cortes as either an employee of the Tijuana International Airport or a member of the information department of the Tijuana branch of the district attorney's office.

He is described as having been a PRI militant for at least 10 years.

Mario Aburto Martinez, a 23-year-old factory worker, has already been convicted in the Colosio case and is serving a 45-year sentence. But it is unlikely either he or Cortes planned or ordered the Colosio killing, and few Mexicans think they did.

"These guys are scapegoats," said Miguel Hernandez, a 25-year-old juice vendor. "Of course there was a larger conspiracy."

So who did?

Photos taken at the time, reprinted in Saturday morning newspapers, show Cortes as a swarthy, intense-looking man in a white shirt and jacket a foot or two away from Colosio. They do not show a gun.

The attorney general's report said that in reconstructing the crime "the deputy district attorney concluded that (the scene) was not only not preserved but was tampered with."

China claims to have closed fake video factory

N.Y. Times News Service

BEIJING — With the deadline for a trade war between China and the United States just hours away, Chinese officials announced early Sunday that they had shut down a well-known company for illegally copying U.S. movies, including "Jurassic Park."

The action, reported by the New China News Agency at 1:30 a.m., appeared to be aimed at preparing the way for a last-minute resolution to a prickly dispute over intellectual property rights. That dispute, characterized by public accusations, threats and counterthreats, has dragged on for months.

It was not immediately clear if United States negotiators would be satisfied with China's action, or if other outstanding differences would prevent an agreement and provoke a trade war.

More than $1 billion of new tariffs against the Chinese were to take effect Sunday afternoon in Beijing if an agreement was not reached by 12:01 a.m. Eastern standard time, and China has promised to retaliate with $1 billion of its own taxes on U.S. exports.

In response to demands from the United States that it enforce copyright, trademark and patent laws, China has publicized a series of crackdowns on the sale of illegal compact and laser disks in the last week, confiscating pirated disks and arresting retailers.

But U.S. officials have said they want to see a stronger symbol of China's commitment to enforce the laws, by going to the source, and not just to the marketers, of copyright violators. There are 29 factories known to be capable of reproducing compact and laser disks, most of them in Guangdong Province, near Hong Kong.

Perhaps the best known of all is the Shenfei Laser and Optical System Company, a maker of audio and video disks that is frequently cited by United States negotiators as a flagrant copyright violator. It was the closing of Shenfei that was announced this morning.

One U.S. official said last week that he suspected Beijing had been reluctant to prosecute Shenfei because its management includes relatives of senior Chinese leaders.

The nation's paramount leader, Deng Xiaoping, made a well-publicized visit to Shenfei when he toured southern China in early 1992.

Whatever the reason for waiting until the last minute, the authorities appeared to be trying to dispel doubt about China's commitment to further action.

"Investigations have found that the Shenfei Company made illegal visual disks of the 'Jurassic Park' and other audio laser products for certain foreign businessmen," the news agency reported. "Its products were found not only available on the Chinese market but also on some overseas markets.

"It has been a consistent stand of the Chinese government to protect copyrights and to crack down on piracy," the news agency said.

The current round of talks began on Feb. 14, 10 days after U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor announced that sanctions would begin against China today if no agreement was reached.

The talks intensified last week when the deputy trade representative, Charlene Barshefsky, flew here from Washington, but in daily comments before and after negotiating sessions neither side revealed exactly what separated them.

"If there is going to be agreement, there will have to be significant progress today," Ms. Barshefsky said before the talks began on Saturday morning. "Whether that is possible or not, I can't predict."

The talks are expected to resume here early Sunday morning. In other trade negotiations in recent years, U.S. and Chinese officials have employed a variety of tactics and bluffs, sometimes delaying final discussions until minutes before a deadline. All the while, other gestures have signaled hardening or softening at various points in the talks.

In what appeared to be one such carefully timed action, the Beijing Intermediate People's Court held a hearing Friday on a case against two video stores in Beijing brought by eight big Hollywood film studios, which accused the shop of copying 18 movies illegally. A judge postponed the case until next month, requesting more evidence.

The film studios have urged U.S. negotiators to concentrate on Chinese factories that copy Hollywood movies and export them across Asia, a practice that potentially costs the studios millions of dollars in lost sales.

Under pressure from the computer software industry, the U.S. negotiators have also asked China to convince Chinese companies and officials to pay for computer software, beginning with China's trade ministry, which the Americans say uses hundreds of pirated copies of Microsoft software.

"It's not surprising that there are differences in Sino-U.S. trade and economic relations," said Chinese Trade Minister Wu Yi, according to a New China News Agency report Saturday. "What's important is that the controversies should be settled through consultations on an equal footing."

Military finalizes its plans for withdrawl of U.S.-led troops from Mogadishu

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Looters will be the chief problem confronting American-led forces helping the United Nations withdraw from Somalia, a top military official said Saturday.

Marine Lt. Gen. Anthony Zinni predicted the withdrawal operation would be ready sometime Sunday.

"That doesn't mean we are going to start then, but I tell you we have finished up the last details," he told pool reporters at a U.N. military base just outside Mogadishu, the Somali capital.

More than 2,000 U.S. Marines and Italian soldiers are expected to sweep ashore at some point during the next week to secure part of Mogadishu's port and airport facilities. They will form a rear guard for the withdrawal of about 2,000 Pakistani and Bangladeshi troops.

Zinni said he was pleased with preparations for Operation United Shield, which will involve seven nations, 23 ships and more than 14,000 troops.

He said he expected few major problems except for looters trying to steal equipment. Such problems have beset U.N. forces in their final days.

The operation marks the end of a two-year U.N. mission that helped prevent starvation but failed to restore political order and end clan rivalries.

Hundreds of Somalis and more than 120 U.N. troops, including 42 Americans, have been killed during the mission.

Carter denies receiving chilly Haitian reception

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Winding up a 54-hour visit Saturday, Jimmy Carter denied he had been given a chilly reception by the people he helped save from a potentially bloody U.S. intervention last year.

"We didn't have a single negative comment from President (Jean-Bertrand) Aristide," Carter said before he, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and former Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman Colin Powell visited Aristide for the third and last time before leaving.

Anti-Carter grafitti was splashed across the capital's walls the day before the delegation arrived.

Practically no public figures declared their satisfaction at his coming and no representative of the Haitian government welcomed him at the airport.

On Sept. 18, the three men had negotiated a settlement with defacto President Emile Jonassaint permitting a 20,000-member U.S.-led multinational force to intervene and put an end to more than three years of military rule.

Aristide at first opposed the agreement. After his return Oct. 15, Aristide slashed the 7,500-member Haitian army and transferred the remaining 1,500 to an interim police security force. On Monday, he discharged all officers above the rank of major.

"There is no army. And whether there will be in the future, I think will depend on the decisions made by Haitian leaders," Carter said.

During small anti-Carter demonstrations, left-wing militants accused the former U.S. president of wanting to keep former repressive soldiers in the interim security force.

They also accused him of pressuring the highly popular Aristide to refrain from influencing voters in June legislative and local elections.

At the end of March, the U.S.-led multinational force will be transformed into a 7,000-member U.N. military mission.

"The transition from war to peace, from a totalitarian rule and human rights violations to democracy and freedom has been a great tribute to the people of this country," Carter said.

Powell complemented the multinational force on the "sense of stability" it has brought Haiti, then added, "That is a real success story ... there should be no problem with the turnover to the United Nations."

The U.N. military mission will remain under U.S. command and comprise 2,400 U.S. troops.

Gore calls for removal of barriers on Information Superhighway

By Elizabeth D. Wise
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Foreign investors will be allowed to buy American phone and satellite companies beginning this year if their countries open up their own telecommunications markets, Vice President Al Gore said Saturday.

Gore was speaking at the Information Society conference organized by the G-7 group of rich industrial nations in an attempt to encourage common standards for the development of the $1.1 trillion global market in computer and communications technology.

American rules currently limit foreign investors to owning no more than 25 percent of American telecommunications companies. The Clinton administration will raise that to 100 percent "for investors of all countries who have opened their own market," Gore said.

That wouldn't affect American restrictions on foreign ownership of television stations and other media companies, he said.

The promise to open the world's largest telecommunications market was sure to please executives of more than 45 top high-tech companies meeting with officials from the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan.

"We must drop our barriers to foreign investment together," the vice president said. "The U.S. is prepared to take steps this year to move boldly in that direction."

Some nations have been concerned about the implications of an information age free-for-all. Many in Europe are afraid that U.S. companies, which already dominate the European film market, have a head start in the information business that will be hard to overcome.

A draft of conclusions expected to be adopted Sunday gave only a tepid endorsement of free trade.

The draft, obtained by the Associated Press, said rules "should not prohibit the emergence of global players." But they added that the liberalization of services, structures and investment should be carried out within an "appropriate framework."

In addition to economic concerns, France and other nations worry that the international revolution in telecommunications is posing a threat to their culture and language.

Gore tried to calm such fears, insisting the new technologies were "about bridging the differences between nations and people, not erasing them."

"Such fears are based on a myth. The free flow of information is in the best interest of all people," he said at a news conference.

Business leaders, invited to a G-7 meeting for the first time, showed off a dazzling display of electronic gadgets to impress the politicians, ranging from computer link-ups for long-distance medical treatment to virtual reality tours of the Vatican.

Their message was clear — governments should stay out of their business.

"Politicians must ensure economic freedom and the removal of trade policy restrictions," said Mark Woessner, CEO of the German media company Bertelsmann.

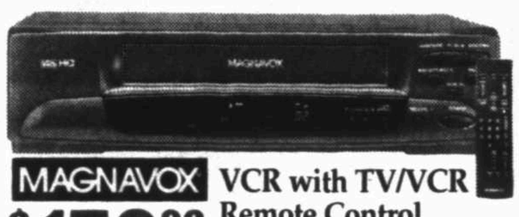

The weekend conference was expected to avoid possibly divisive political issues. The G-7 nations expected to agree on 11 international cooperation projects including joint training, a global electronic library network and a maritime information exchange.

According to figure released last week by the European Union, the United States had 35 percent of the world information and communication market, the EU 27 percent and Japan 16 percent.

SPEAK: Johnson to transport listeners back to slower times

(From 1A)

Johnson was last at the Del about a year ago as one of the stars featured in a magazine story. He discovered, "like everything else, you can't go home again. I loved the village of Coronado and used to love to walk from the ferry where there was a great delicatessen. But, like everything else, it has all grown up."

During his Midland engagement, he will transport listeners back to the days before fast foods, hotel chains, freeways, shopping malls and overpopulation. In a career that spans more than half a century, Johnson has starred in movies with a list of leading ladies too numerous to count, which includes Elizabeth Taylor, Judy Garland, Deborah Kerr, Lana Taylor and Katharine Hepburn. He's played opposite such movie legends as Humphrey Bogart, Spencer Tracy and Clark Gable.

Included in his talk for the "Pilots & Poster Girls" International Symposium commemorating the 50th anniversary of World War II, will be movie clips and stories of the Hollywood that existed when the world was snared in the last world war. The symposium, hosted by The American Airpower Heritage Museum and Midland College, is being held at the Midland Hilton and the Confederate Air Force Hanger.

Johnson's presentation Friday, which will include an explanation of the significance of his wearing red socks throughout most of his career, falls between a 6 p.m. banquet and a dance featuring the music of Top Brass, all of which are at the Hanger. SRO tickets, which do not include dinner, will be available at the door.

"I couldn't work if I didn't have laughs," said the gregarious star, who lives "very happily" in a penthouse on the East River, near where Greta Garbo used to live.

"I sure miss that tall lady 'cause we'd walk the neighborhood," he said, adding that "Kate" Hepburn lived on the other side of him.

Since his housekeeper retired about a year ago, Johnson has been preparing his meals. Every weekend he fills his dutch oven with chili, or short ribs or spare ribs or a heavy soup, then cooks enough to dine on the rest of the week.

"I love to read cookbooks," said Johnson, who also is an avid reader of biographies. He plans to cook all those wonderful recipes he finds, but so far hasn't.

"And another thing I love is room service. When I check into a hotel, I get into bed and get all the room service menus and start ordering. I love hotel life. Clean sheets everyday. And push buttons."

A native of Newport, R.I., Johnson, who also is an artist, is not from a show business family. He doesn't know where his love for acting began, but he suspects he can trace it back to his first exposure to theater.

"My mother took me to my first show, I think it was the 'Cat and the Canary,' with Julia Sanderson. She was a beautiful blonde ingenue. And it was the first time I ever saw people on the stage. My mother brought me backstage afterwards and the smell of backstage is like something no other place in the world has. It's the smell of grease paint and dust and glue and scenery and rosin boxes. I got hooked. It changed my whole life seeing her."

Johnson has acted in live theater for decades. "I have always loved the theater, I think more than movies." The advantage to movies is "you shoot from 9 to 6 and you're through. And I always took a nap in my dressing room at noon to prepare for the afternoon.

"At the theater, no matter what you do during the day, the mind is geared to that 8 o'clock curtain. You can't smoke or drink or go out to lunch or do many interviews.

"I used to get to the theater at 5 o'clock everyday for my singing warmup, and my teacher would ask, 'Did you have an interview today?' I would say, 'Yes, Joan, how did you know?' 'I can tell by your eyes.'

"It was so exhausting to go out into the world. But, once you step on the stage and the curtain goes up, you get the juice from the audience."

He feels it's "very important for movie actors to do a show once in a while, just to sharpen up your timing. I know many actors, I won't name them 'cause they're still alive — the few of us who are left — who never went back to the theater.

"Spencer Tracy always said to me, 'No matter how many movies you make, you always think about in the back of your mind to go back to the stage. Go. Don't wait as long as I did or you'll lose your nerve."

In 1961, Johnson took Tracy's advice and spent two years in London, where he received standing ovations nightly for his starring performances in "The Music Man."

"It was a wonderful experience, but it takes the cream of vitality," Johnson said.

Now, he does a one-man show, called "The Best of Times — A Musical Odyssey," which features highlights from his motion-picture, stage and nightclub career. Also, he annually appears in four episodes of "Murder She Wrote," saying of Angela Lansbury, "She's the greatest gal in the business. Why? Because she has been so loyal and faithful about hiring her old school pals from MGM for guest shots during the year."

He's become somewhat of a recluse since suffering hearing loss when he flew back from London a year ago. At the time of the flight, he was suffering from a "terrible" cold. Yet, he refuses to let anything discourage him. "I live each moment to the fullest and when a chapter is finished, I go right on to the next."

Citizens to speak on bilingual issues

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Tuesday night television ratings in Midland are liable to take a beating when the Midland Independent School District board meets. More than one topic which has ended in heated debate (at previous meetings) is scheduled to be discussed beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Anticipating a large crowd, the regular school board meeting will move from the district office to the Midland High School auditorium.

Citizens are scheduled to address the board on bilingual education, school discipline and school violence. Two parents of students in Goddard Junior High School said they are concerned with violence occurring at the school. Leaders of the minority community have asked to address the issue of bilingual education.

■ The first speaker scheduled at 7:30 p.m. is Robbyne Hocker Fuller, chairperson of the local organization Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS). She will address the board concerning some remarks made at a previous board meeting concerning the effect of the cluster system on bilingual education. She will address the board along with Margie Titus, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

■ The next scheduled speaker is Les A. Vela, the League of United Latin American Citizens state chairman. In a letter to the board, Ms. Vela wrote, "Many individuals, including students, had requested in writing to address the board during the Feb. 14 meeting, but due to the wisdom of the school board, we were not given the opportunity to do so."

Ms. Vela has asked to speak concerning bilingual education.

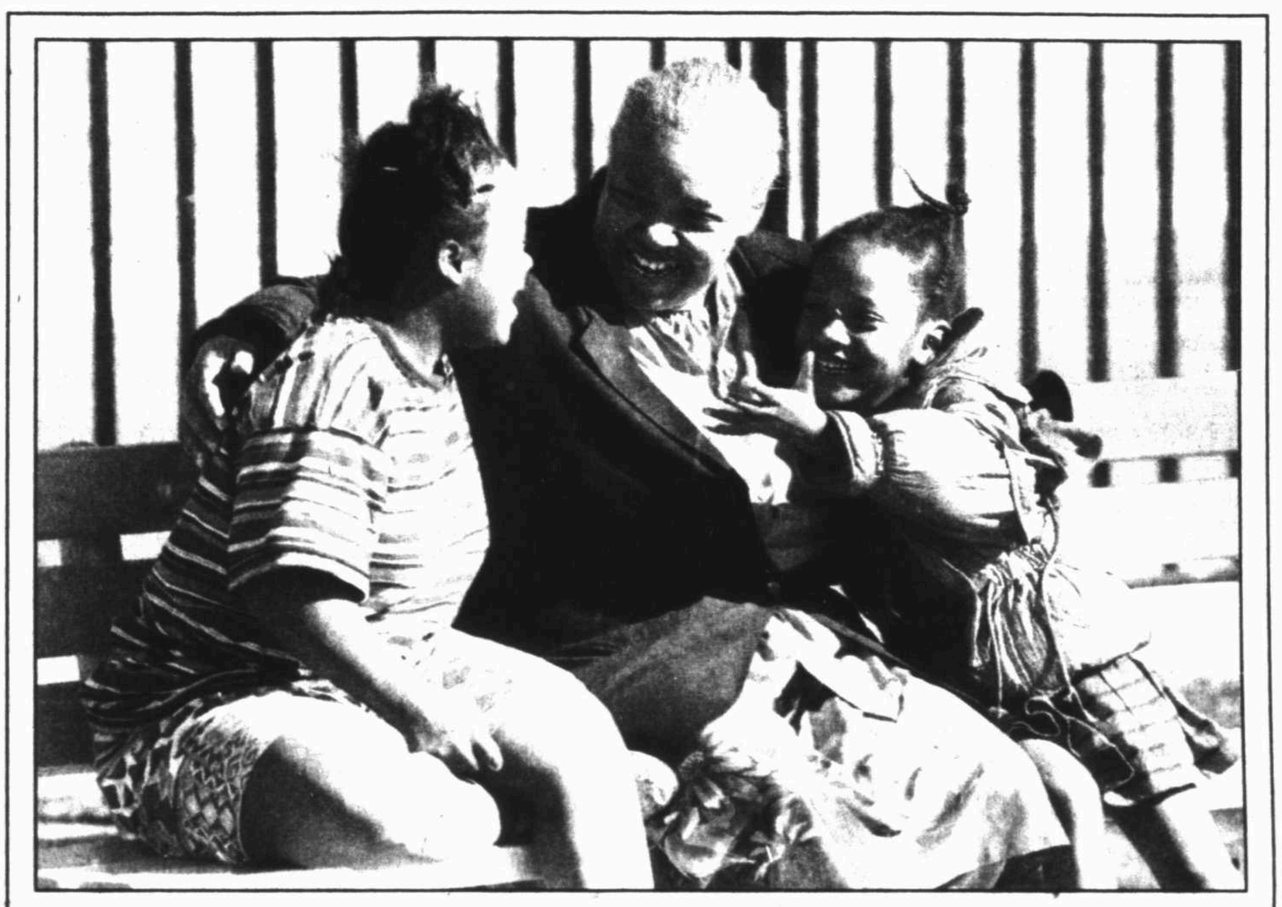

■ Following Ms. Vela's presentation, members of the Midland Association for Bilingual Eduation (MABE) will speak on the same topic, as well as English as a Second Language (ESL) which is taught in the secondary schools. In a letter to the board, MABE said Midland's Hispanic community became concerned about the status of bilingual education as a result of remarks make by Dianne Anderson at a board dinner presentation on the subject.

The letter from MABE said Ms. Anderson's recommendation of early immersion in English raised concerns that "we were going back to teaching only English, a traditional way in which many of us were taught, and the memories we hold of being punished for speaking Spanish came back."

■ Helen R. Johnson, a third-grade elementary school teacher, will address the board publicly concerning her district-level mandatory improvement plan. "I'm requesting to speak to the board in order to defend myself against being placed on a district level mandatory improvement plan by Thomas Miller, principal at Ben Milam," she wrote to the board.

■ Mark Thomas, who described himself as a "second time," resident of Midland, said he lived outside the Tall

Grandparents provide support

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

They have provided knees to bounce on, shoulders to cry on and arms to wrap around little ones whenever comfort was needed - they are grandparents.

And what better way to honor them than by proclaiming 1995 as "The Year of the Grandparent."

This year offers a great opportunity to show grandparents how important they are. Nationally, the U.S. Congress and, locally, Mayor Bobby Burns have declared 1995 "The Year of the Grandparent."

"Grandparents have a major influence and are an excellent support system for children," said Ludi Navarro, community relations coordinator for Casa de Amigos. "Grandparents certainly deserve a special year just for them."

"We need to honor (grandparents) who do so much for their grandkids. They're an influence on our young people," said Isabel Gonzales, director of Base closings are fewer than many expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political pressures and the up-front costs of closing military bases kept the Clinton administration's draft closure list shorter than many expected.

The list, to be made official Tuesday, spares facilities in politically important states while recommending far more "realignments" than outright closures. The proposed shutdowns awaiting approval by Defense Secretary William Perry include none of the huge bases that formed the bulk of earlier cuts.

"There are no big-time bases on that list," one congressional official familiar with the closure process said Saturday. "The easy ones have already been done. Now we're getting into the tough choices."

Military sources, lawmakers, congressional aides, and local officials confirmed key elements of the proposed closure list to The Associated Press on Saturday. Pentagon officials cautioned that Perry could make last-minute changes. And the list still must win approval from the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission, as well as Congress.

"They're upstairs working on it even as we speak," Defense Department spokesman Glenn Flood said Saturday.

But in the three previous base closure rounds, most of the Pentagon's recommendations were approved.

This year's draft list spares Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole's home-state Army post, Fort Riley, Kan., and protects facilities in the all-important presidential election states of New Hampshire and California.

Ellsworth Air Force Base near Rapid City, S.D., home state of Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, also dodged the axe. A military source said Saturday that Ellsworth was on a draft Pentagon list for realignment but not closure. The plan, still being considered by Perry, was to move some of the tanker aircraft from Ellsworth to MacDill AFB near Tampa, Fla.

Also missing from the list is the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard in Kittery, Maine, just across the harbor from New Hampshire, scene of the first presidential primary a year from now.

And California, a state vital to Presi-

Three-legged cat finds friends

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The three-legged, bobtailed cat, which hobbles like a pump-jack when she walks but in a rush moves like lightning, has found a home among friends and neighbors.

"It's simply amazing the way she moves," said an admiring Jerry Helmer, who feeds and strokes Alley the cat when her daily caretakers, Walton and Bobbie Schuyler, are out of town.

She is named Alley, due to her past wanderings down the alley in roaming for food, shelter, survival, and friendship. She "worked" the east side of the street along the 2000 and 2100 blocks of H Street in central Midland.

That was two years ago. Today, she is still the respectable feline which she always was but now has city papers and tags to prove her honorable status, citizenship, and health. She's vaccinated against rabies and feline leukemia.

Among her human friends, the neighbors, Alley's sterling quality is her sense of wholeness. She apparently doesn't know that she is handicapped; she doesn't beg for sympathy.

"When it's a deliberate walk, it's very pronounced — the fact that there are only three legs," Helmer observed. "There is motion up and down while there is forward motion.

"But when that thing moves fast, I mean, it's just a blur," Helmer added. "That hind leg acts as two legs. Consequently, it is uninhibited, literally, you know, as if it had no handicap. It's phenomenal. It's a marvelous cat."

Neighbor Bobbie Schuyler agreed.

"It's a darling cat," Mrs. Schuyler said. "She really doesn't know she's crippled. She thinks that (her three-legged stance) is normal."

Her left rear leg is missing.

GARY OTT

It feels like Information Superhighway is passing us by

Ott

Do you sometimes get the feeling that the so-called Information Superhighway is passing you by?

Yeah, me too. Maybe it all started while we were taking a nap, but something strange is going on in this country and the person in charge forgot to tell us.

So while we slept, a revolution of sorts was taking place.

Now it has exploded. Everywhere you turn there is talk of new technology that is being hailed as "the wave of the future." No longer do people waste their time with such mundane devices as ballpoint pens, typewriters, or, in some cases, even the old-fashioned telephone. Now everything is computerized.

As a result, the language has changed accordingly. If you want to survive in today's world it is imperative that you learn to use such words as "E-mail," "Internet," "databases," "online" and something called "CD-ROM."

It also helps if you know what those words mean. But even if you don't, it is wise to casually toss them out from time to time so that your friends — at least the ones who are as dumb as you — will think you know what you're talking about.

In other words, fake it. After all, most normal human beings (and I emphasize the word "normal") are as confused by all of these changes as you are.

Indeed, the more I ponder this recent phenomenon the clearer it becomes that it is all part of a massive conspiracy by those nerdy little people in high school who were members of the Math Club, wore extra-thick eyeglasses and always carried 14 pens and a slide rule in their front shirt pocket .

They knew the rest of us were making fun of them behind their backs and they vowed someday to get even.

That day has arrived.

While we weren't looking they created a whole new culture, one in which only they would be completely at ease. Now they can communicate with one another

THREE: Four families adopt crippled cat

(From 1B)

Every time she takes a step, her rear-end hits the ground.

"And then she runs like a streak of lightning," Mrs. Schuyler said. "She climbs the fence like it wasn't there."

The cat's appeal, like the appeal of all cats to people who develop into cat fanciers, was her initial aloofness, her independence, her three-legged ways, her homeless wanderlust, and, as Helmer described Alley, her "beautiful" tiger-striped fur and her "beautiful" yellow eyes that are graced with "a suggestion of green."

About two years ago, when the cat first appeared in the neighborhood, Helmer "tried to lure" the stray cat, "but I didn't have the power stroke."

Neighbor Wanda Shaw, who kindly works with saving and helping animals as an avocation, did. She coaxed the feline and, "in a sense," tamed her.

"Evidently, the cat was tamed before," Helmer surmised, "but the cat was displaying a lot of 'Well,-I-don't-know-whether-I-want-to-go-around-these-folks-or-not' (attitude)."

She relented.

"It's been sort of a neighborhood project," Helmer said of caring for the former stray, now a neighborhood friend and pet. "It's kind of a neat story."

Among the neighbors, Mrs. Shaw, who is president of Animal Outreach Association and who is a volunteer at Midland's Animal Control, became the cat's first trusting friend in the neighborhood.

Though the cat apparently "had been wild," Mrs. Shaw elicited the cat's trust, approached her, and "I started going 'meow.' "

The then-wild cat replied. "'Meow,'" as if to say, "'I kind of like you,'" Mrs. Shaw recalled. And from that dialogue two years ago, Mrs. Shaw was convinced that "this cat is going to be a nice kitten" and thereafter proved to be a "lovely" and loving cat and friend who can run "like a bullet."

Neighbors, all in a row, beckoned and fed Alley: Claude and Orene Mitchell, Chad and Wanda Shaw, Jerry and Joan Helmer, and Walton and Bobbie Schuyler.

From the outset, it was Mrs. Shaw who "got to petting her," Mrs. Schuyler said. "Everybody in the neighborhood was taking her food in the alley."

For about a year, Alley sort of adopted the Shaw family, whose schedule eventually got so busy that Alley, with the Shaws' blessing, went over to the Schuyler place last fall.

"We were home a lot," Mrs. Schuyler explained.

The wintry season moved in.

"I told my husband that somebody ought to build that cat a cat house," Mrs. Schuyler said.

Her husband was that somebody.

The generous wood-and-metal house, insulated, carpeted, roofed with copper, and heated by electric pad at 60 degrees, is fitted on wheels for ease of movement and for now is on the Schuyler patio.

"That's the first one (cat) I've ever had," Schuyler said. "She's quite a cat. She comes around; she wants to be petted all of the time. (But) she won't get up in your lap."

Rather than a lap cat, Alley is a bench or sit-beside-you cat.

"At first, she was pretty shy around strangers," Mrs. Schuyler said. "After awhile, she's pretty gentle if you pet her."

And neither the neighbors nor the veterinarian know the cat's origin, her breed, except Manx and "mixed," her age or just how, by birth or accident, she lost her leg.

"I don't know where she came from," Mrs. Schuyler said. "They lost a good friend."

And the H Street neighbors, for sure, gain one.

YEAR: Grandparents deserves special honors

senior citizen activities for Casa.

"Grandparents and older folks are a positive influence on young people. They can give grandchildren a feeling of security by helping them learn about the past and helping them know who they are by knowing their roots," Ms. Gonzales added.

Especially this year, she said she is encouraging grandparents and grandchildren to get together and spend time appreciating one another.

"Strong relationships are built when grandparents and grandchildren interact in a variety of ways including playing games and reading, but mostly when we listen to them, when we hug them and tell them how special they are," Ms. Gonzales said.

"My grandmother meant so much to me," Ms. Gonzales recalled. "The memories are good to have."

Now, Ms. Gonzales has nine grandchildren of her own with whom who she is working to build special relationships.

"We don't always realize what a special relationship it would be with our grandparents until it's too late," she said.

Ms. Gonzales encourages grandchildren to share a favorite memory with their grandparents.

Casa de Amigos and Community and Senior Services representatives want to remind everyone that it only takes a few seconds to say "thank you."

"It doesn't cost anything to say 'I love you' and it doesn't hurt to give a hug to a grandparent for all the love and support. Grandparents are truly grand because they have the time and resources to spend with children in this fast-paced world," Ms. Navarro added.

Ms. Gonzales said a special tribute should be paid to grandparents raising their grandchildren.

Casa de Amigos is sponsoring a local contest for children 18 and under asking them to recall some fond memory of their grandparents and recount it briefly in 50 words or less.

Entries will be separated in two categories, one for primary and another for secondary school students. Entries can be submitted at Casa de Amigos with a March 31 deadline. Four prizes will be awarded with two for each category.

"Grandmothers and grandfathers play special roles in families today. They link generations together. They teach, give advice, offer friendship and serve as role models for young people. We think it's important to recognize grandparents and the contributions they make to our lives. If you think one of your grandparents is the best, nominate them for grandparent of the year," states the contest entry form for Grandfather and Grandmother of the Year.

This nationwide contest is sponsored by Crayola and Caring Grandparents of American. Entry forms for this contest are also available at Casa de Amigos.

Casa de Amigos plans to sponsor events all year long to honor grandparents.

BASE: Closing list not as long as expected, some say

dent Clinton's re-election chances, would suffer only two outright closures — the Oakland Army Base and the Navy's shipyard at Long Beach.

The economics of base closing also worked against a longer hit list. Shutting down bases carries high up-front costs. Typically, the even point comes seven or eight years after a base is ordered closed.

Texas appears to be one of the hardest-hit states in this round.

On the closure list are the Red River Army Depot at Texarkana, with about 3,500 jobs, Reese Air Force Base near Lubbock, with 1,700 jobs, and Brooks Air Force Base, in San Antonio, with more than 4,500 jobs. The Pentagon is also proposing to relocate the Navy's air station at Corpus Christi to Pensacola, Fla., at a cost of about 700 jobs.

But Texas lawmakers cautioned that not all of the realignment plans were known and that the state could make gains through closures or consolidations in other states.

It was a measure of the mildness of the draft list that one of Texas' senators was relatively unconcerned.

"I feel very good," Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, said earlier this week. "Our major bases are intact and we've got very good cases to make for the ones that are on the list."

Also on the draft closure list:

- Fort McClellan in Alabama, still alive after two previous appearances on the closure list and site of some 8,000 military and civilian positions.
- Fort Indiantown Gap in Pennsylvania, with 2,000 jobs.
- Fitzsimmons Army Hospital near Denver, with 3,000 jobs.
- South Weymouth Naval Air Station in Massachusetts with more than 800 military and civilian positions.
- Fort Hamilton, an Army recruiting post in New York City, with 800 military and civilian jobs.
- Indianapolis Naval Air Warfare Center.
- Meridian Naval Air Station in Mississippi, with 3,200 jobs at stake.
- Naval Ordnance Station at Louisville, Ky.
- The Army's Fort Chaffee Reserve Center at Fort Smith, Ark., with about 1,000 jobs.
- The Navy's Air Engineering Station at Lakehurst, N.J., with more than 3,500 jobs.

Targeted for shrinking or consolidation are the Army's Fort Eustis in Virginia, its Marine Ocean Terminal at Bayonne, N.J., and Fort Monmouth at Eatontown, N.J., and the New London submarine base in Connecticut.

Air Force facilities to be reduced include: Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque, N.M., which could lose 6,000 of its 20,000 jobs; and Hanscom Air Force Base in Bedford, Mass., which faces a slight reduction.

The laboratory at Griffiss Air Force Base at Rome, N.Y., would move to Wright-Patterson AFB near Dayton, Ohio, according to the list.

Some communities were bracing for bad news.

"I'm not very hopeful at this point," Indianapolis Mayor Stephen Goldsmith said of the naval air warfare center. "You can't land a plane here or dock a ship."

Others were promising a fight.

"We will be taking our case to the commission," said Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., after being told that Louisville Naval Ordnance Station was on the list.

But the base closure commission cannot remove a base from the list unless it finds that a Pentagon recommendation was a "substantial deviation" from the criteria for closure.

City for seven years. He said, in a letter to the board, that he returned to Midland to discover "the Midland school system has become somewhat of a day care center for gang type trouble makers." Thomas has a son in the seventh grade at Goddard Junior High School.

- Midlanders Lloyd and Donna Hoelscher have also requested to speak to the board on violence. They have children attending Goddard and one attending Midland Freshman High School. In speaking to their children, they said, "We hear about a great deal of violence from both of them."

Items scheduled prior to the 6:45 p.m.-7:30 p.m. dinner break include a presentation by Susan Lara, Ed.D. and coordinator of Bilingual Education at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "I believe that the facts regarding the research related to bilingual education have not been fully revealed ... My concern is that people fully understand the importance of native language instruction and its impact on the learning of English," she said.

OTT: High school nerds have taken over information at great length, knowing full well that you and I don't have the foggiest idea what they're talking about.

And worst of all, they are smug about this knowledge. They show off. They intimidate. They rub our noses in it.

It is as though they are saying, "OK, Mr. Fancy Pants, maybe you WERE captain of your high school basketball team 20 years ago, but try to figure out what this simple sentence, which appeared in a recent magazine article, really means: 'InfoSeek Search, a natural language search engine from startup InforSeek Corp. in Santa Clara, Calif., helps users tame the disorganized information on the Net by allowing English language queries of World Wide Web pages, Usenet newsgroups, and online computer publications.' Can't do it, can you? That's because you're no longer a part of the 'in' crowd. The world has changed and you haven't. So step aside. The high school nerds — yes, those of us you used to tease unmercifully — have taken over."

Well, fine, see if I care. And I hope you trip over your slide rule and break those silly-looking eyeglasses while you're at it.

The National Association for Bilingual Education along with Coca-Cola and Apple Computer Inc. recently sponsored a national writing contest. In order to encourage participation in this nationwide competition, the local Cola-Coke distributor sponsored a citywide writing contest.

The topic for the writing contest was "Why Bilingual Education is Important to Me." Local entries were received from Milam, Anson Jones and South elementary schools, Abell Junior High School and Midland High School.

Members of the MISD Bilingual/ESL Coordinating Committee judged the entries and local Coca-Cola distributors provided plaques for the first-, second-, and third-place winners.

Winners of the local writing contest were recognized at a ceremony honoring outstanding Bilingual/ESL students in all MISD schools for the first three six weeks. More than 100 students received certificates recognizing them as outstanding Bilingual/ESL students for the first three six weeks of school.

Each first-, second-, and third-place winner read their winning essay at the ceremony. The winners were:

First place: Anais Jordan, Milam; Cesar Perez, Abell; Sandra Cruz, MHS; second place, Daisy Campos, Milam; Maria Mendez, Abell; Trinidad Rodriguez, MHS; third place, Patricia Vallin, Milam; Eder Castorena, Abell; Francisco Zamarripa, MHS.

The students also received 3 1/2-foot tall Coca-Cola bears in addition to their plaques.

The fifth honoree was Steve Odom of Midland. He is the Council Trust Consultant. He retired from professional scouting in 1987 after 35 years of service. He served on the staff in Houston and was the Scout Executive in Pampa and in Midland when he retired. He is an member of the Rotary Club and an elder at Memorial Christian Church.

The James E. West Fellowship Awards were given to Midlanders Neil Florer, Mary Bruton, Rod Stephenson, David Pearce, Bill Russell and Marvin Eastman. Endowment fund drive gets boost Midland College's endowment fund drive received a noteworthy boost recently in the form of a $1 million donation from Dorothy and Clarence Scharbauer Jr. In honor of that outstanding donation, the college's board of trustees voted last week to rename the student center at the college the Dorothy and Clarence Scharbauer Jr. Student Center.

Both the Scharbauer donation and the renaming of the student center in honor of the Scharbauers were worthy events for the Midland community.

We agree wholeheartedly with Midland College President David E. Daniel who noted that renaming the student center in honor of the Scharbauers is appropriate since it is, perhaps, the most frequently used building on the Midland College campus and serves as a central gathering point for students, faculty and visitors.

While the Scharbauer donation truly bolstered the drive for the Chaparral Circle Endowment Fund by pushing the total to 73 percent of the $5.75 million goal, it also underscored their commitment to higher education in Midland. The endowment fund, Daniel pointed out, will help maintain a quality of excellence at the college including maintaining equipment and keeping faculty salaries competitive.

No doubt the Scharbauer donation will give even more impetus to the endowment drive. Already, Midland College has collected $4.2 million of the goal and this donation should spur more donations to the fund.

There is, perhaps, no greater gesture for mankind than contributing funds toward the continuation of the quest for knowledge. Through knowledge, man is able to achieve his greatest potential. Education is the key to a better life.

Through donations such as the one made by Dorothy and Clarence Scharbauer to the Midland College endowment fund, the future of higher education in Midland will be assured. Their gesture was most laudable.

ANOTHER VIEW

Two ideas would help expand Texas exports

The Wall Street Journal writes that if confirmed as Gov. George W. Bush's selection to head the Texas Commerce Department, Houston businesswoman Brenda Arnett will not have an easy job. True.

The department certainly has suffered from a lack of resources. And it's likely many of its international offices will be trimmed back by dollar-conscious legislators.

But here are two suggestions to help develop Texas businesses.

First, Ms. Arnett, get the Legislature to appropriate funds for the Texas Business Enhancement Fund. The Legislature created the fund in 1989. But no dollars have ever been appropriated.

That's too bad. The Texas fund was created to encourage banks to consider small businesses that fall just short of loan approval.

In Michigan, a similar program has had eye-catching success. With a $6 million investment, Michigan has helped expand $120 million in bank credit to small businesses. The default rate has been only about 6 percent.

So, why not invest $6 million in Texas' program? Why couldn't Texas get a similar 20-1 spinoff?

The program is not a subsidy. Lending would be encouraged through placing state funds in a loan-loss reserve account at a participating bank. The bank would contribute fees to the reserve account. And the bank would make all lending decisions.

The second suggestion for Ms. Arnett is to secure more dollars for an underfunded program created in 1989.

The Texas Exporters Loan Fund works this way: When a qualifying business requests bank money to help fill an export order — purchasing raw materials, for example —the Commerce Department can guarantee a loan of $350,000 for a year.

So far, the program has received only $2 million in appropriations. That limited investment has generated about $85 million in economic activity. Not bad.

But why not appropriate another $5 million? A similar California initiative with $5 million in annual appropriations has generated $800 million in export sales since 1986.

These two ideas won't solve the department's woes. But they can spur small businesses, unleashing a pronounced ripple across Texas' economy. Shrewd investing can pay off.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Feb. 26, the 57th day of 1995. There are 308 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 26, 1919, Congress established Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona.

On this date:

In 1802, French literary giant Victor Hugo was born in Besancon.

In 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte escaped from the Island of Elba to begin his second conquest of France.

In 1846, "Buffalo Bill" Cody was born near Davenport, Iowa.

In 1870, New York City's first pneumatic-powered subway line was opened to the public.

In 1929, President Coolidge signed a measure establishing Grand Teton National Park.

In 1940, the United States Air Defense Command was created.

In 1945, 50 years ago, a midnight curfew on night clubs, bars and other places of entertainment was set to go into effect across the nation.

In 1951, the 22nd Amendment to the Constitution was ratified, limiting a president to two terms of office.

JACK ANDERSON

Act would erode environmental protection

WASHINGTON — Shortly before Republicans captured control of Congress with help from the "Contract With America," Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., sought a seamy side deal with the Environmental Protection Agency. Lott now says it was all just a "joke."

Anderson

For Clinton administration officials, it was a deadly serious omen of how Republicans want to ride roughshod over an agency whose public health agenda is targeted for dismantling by conservatives.

One thing that's clear is that Fred Hansen was innocently caught in the crossfire last fall as his nomination to be deputy administrator of the EPA hit a snag in the Senate. Lott had placed a "hold" on Hansen, who enjoyed bipartisan support and has served both Democratic and Republican presidents. With time running out in the last Congress, Lott got a phone call from EPA Administrator Carol Browner, who was looking for answers.

According to Clinton administration sources, Lott informed Browner that he routinely puts holds on nominations and only later determines if he has a problem with the individual agency or department. Lott said in this case he has no problem with the EPA or the nominee and would remove the hold — with one catch.

"I just want you to remember this when I do have a problem," Lott told Browner. One administration official, who says Browner was affronted by the conversation, describes Lott's intentions as: "I'll be back and you'd better be nice to me." It wouldn't be unprecedented for the wheeler-dealer Republican: Lott reportedly intervened with the EPA during the 1980s on behalf of companies with records of environmental violations.

A Lott spokesperson says he was merely "answering in a very jocular way" and being "light-hearted" with Browner. "He said the proof is there is no quid pro quo," said the spokesperson, adding that Lott denies putting routine holds on nominations and thinks White House officials "are reaching and need to get some sleep."

There will be little time for rest in the last half of the GOP's 100-day deadline for passing the "Contract With America" — especially since the Job Creation and Wage Enhancement Act before Congress is a fight Clintonites are spoiling for. The bill's euphemistic label belies its lethal danger to public health. It raises the specter that a generation of important laws, which stopped the flood of sewage into rivers, cleaned up hazardous waste disposal and reduced lead in the air — and in children's blood — may be gutted.

Lott and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., support the ruse of "risk assessment" and "cost-benefit" analysis to carry out the contract on the EPA. Under their plan, bean counters would be overruling biologists in setting public health standards by forcing EPA to quantify how the benefits will "justify the costs" of any agency initiative.

As a recent study by the Natural Resources Defense Council concludes:

"No light is shed on how agencies are to place dollar values on such imponderables as: preventing a child's learning disability, avoiding cancer or birth defects, reducing infertility, preserving an endangered species, protection of a National Park, or any of the other benefits of environmental protection programs."

Welcome to the wonderful world of "job creation" and "wage enhancement."

GEORGE WILL

N. Carolina may be right about line-item veto

WASHINGTON — So strong was the spirit of liberty in North Carolina in the 18th century, when the central government was being reconstituted, that state refused to ratify the Constitution until the Bill of Rights was appended. And so durable has been North Carolinians' wholesome distrust of central authority, their state constitution never has given the governor any veto power whatever.

Will

Since 1909 Tar Heel governors have been the only governors so unarmed. Forty-three of the other 49 governors even wield the formidable power of the line-item veto — the power to strike only offending portions of bills. In 1996 North Carolina voters probably will decide whether to risk creating an overbearing executive by entrusting subsequent governors with a general veto power — the power to veto entire bills. But they will not give governors the sharp surgical instrument of a line-item veto, with its powerful potential for punishing and coercing individual legislators.

In Washington, where today's most interesting arguments are intramural Republican ones, conservatives are arguing about which flavor of line-item veto to favor. But before choosing they should pay North Carolina the compliment of considering the threshold question of whether the line-item veto truly serves conservative values. It can, but need not, and there are conservative reasons for reluctance about giving presidents a power that one day might be the answer to the question, Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed, that he is grown so great?

The word "veto" appears nowhere in the Constitution, which says "every bill" passed by Congress must be "presented" to the president, who shall approve or return it. Congress can override his disapproval with two-thirds votes in both houses. But because of the omnibus nature of many bills, presidents often must either swallow gargantuan legislation larded with pork, or plunge large portions of the government into chaos.

Proponents of the line-item veto argue that it will restore what the Constitution's framers intended — a presidential negative that has been vitiated by the practice of bundling disparate bills into single behemoths, and by the natural elephantiasis of legislation in an era of elephantine government.

Currently a president can request that Congress rescind funding for items in bills he has signed, but Congress can ignore the request. Under one proposed form of line-item veto, called "expedited rescission," Congress would have to pass a law enacting the president's entire package of rescissions from a particular bill. That means a majority in either house opposed to the cuts could stop them. Under a second form of line-item veto, called "enhanced rescission," if both houses re-enacted the disputed spending, the president could veto the re-enactment. Thus one-third plus one in either house could enforce the frugality.

Both forms of rescissions would enable presidents to drag parochial, frivolous spending into the glare of publicity and to dare Congress to endorse it explicitly. "Enhanced rescission" might result in a bit more frugality, but there are other values, as conservatives would remember when a president made vital weapons systems the targets of rescission.

The intended consequence of a line-item veto is to deter spending that lacks a national rationale. However, the unintended consequence might be to make Congress even more conscienceless than it is about voting such spending: Legislators could cheerily say presidents have the power, and hence the responsibility, to tidy up after they have had the fun of voting for spending demanded by parochial interests. Indeed, the line-item veto might result inincreased spending if presidents agreed not to exercise it on legislators' pet projects in exchange for those legislators' support on other matters.

Sen. Robert Byrd, the seven-term Democrat from West Virginia, argues that any line-item veto diminishes the dignity of the legislature, an argument more meritorious than its maker. His career of unapologetic rapacity on behalf of his state has done much to legitimize the undignified legislating that has brought the line-item veto to the brink of passage.

Byrd probably can muster 40 votes to sustain a filibuster against "enhanced rescission." But "expedited rescission" might be enough. The nation should not be overeager to do what liberty-loving North Carolina has been so reluctant to do.

Abortion, affirmative action are wedges for '96

PORTLAND, Ore. — Every political operative dreams of finding the perfect "wedge issue" — of placing the wedge in a crack in the opposition's traditional support, and then using a sledgehammer to split off a great segment of the other party's vote.

Safire

Here are the 1996 wedge issues:

For Democrats, it is abortion rights. The Clinton White House is well aware that a great many conservative Republican women deserted George Bush on this issue. Democratic strategists have noted how Republicans, sensitive to the way pro-life speakers turned off a majority of TV viewers in prime time at their 1992 convention, are now seeking to defuse an issue that divides the conservative-libertarian and religious right.

Clinton, who in his first week as president delivered on his pro-choice promises, recently sought a way to re-ignite the issue. He found it in his selection for surgeon general, Dr. Henry Foster.

Much has been made of White House blunders in not getting straight the exact number of abortions this gynecologist and obstetrician performed in his career. The mistake, if any, turns out to be a forward fumble; attention is now focused on abortion again.

GOP senators are doing contortions to say the issue is credibility, not the performance of legal medical procedures. But White House chief of staff Leon Panetta is slamming home the wedge: a vote against Foster is an anti-abortion vote. Right-to-life groups eagerly joined with right-to-abort advocates to help him make his point.

I met the redoubtable Foster coming out of the office of Sen. Arlen Specter, the Republican presidential candidate who urged he be given a fair hearing; later, in New Hampshire, Specter reaffirmed his pro-choice position and rejected the kak-handed pronouncement of the Christian Coalition's Ralph Reed that the GOP ticket had to be pure pro-life.

The abortion wedge is in; Clinton's adviser, James Carville, is wishfully thinking that not one of the pro-choice "three W's" — Pete Wilson, Christie Whitman or Bill Weld — has a chance for a GOP nomination.

Meanwhile, Republicans are driving in the anti-affirmative-action wedge, and Democrats may soon be singing "racial preference is busting up that old coalition of mine."

The key word is "color-blind." After three decades of penance for two centuries of discrimination, most whites (and many merit-conscious blacks) reject the compensatory reverse discrimination that has led to de facto quotas in hiring and favoritism in government contracts.

Racial preference in contracting led to the Wedtech scandal of the 1980s, and tax breaks to minority-fronted enterprises led to today's attempted billion-dollar Viacom tax dodge. The Gingrich-Dole Congress is now striking down the IRS rule under which the FCC allows minority-owned companies to defer taxes on capital gains on sales of stations. A big winner in the Viacom fast-shuffle is the black attorney who cooked up this profitable preference in the Carter administration.

"On affirmative action, we clearly oppose moving backward," says Panetta, assigned the wedging and counter-wedging task usually done by a vice president.

However, a large portion of the traditional Democratic strength — now classified as "angry white male" — showed in the '94 election it is disaffecting from the party of minority preferences. To a white job applicant who loses out to a less qualified black, the Democratic theme of "fairness" seems less than fair, and the Republican direction of color-blindness seems to be forward.

Will Democrats, old and new, find a way to compromise on "affirmative action," the euphemism for compensatory racial preference? Will Republicans, so close to undivided power, find a way to compromise on abortion rights, even if it results in a platform that stands mute?

If so, we will have the blessing of a big-tent, two-party system that ameliorates the most divisive issues before they are brought to a vote.

If not, we will be cursed with a knock-down, drag-out, four-party election — the polarizing politics of the Double Wedge.

Money should be used in personal manner

I have an office located on North Big Spring Street, Texas State Highway 349, in Midland. On the afternoon of Feb. 16, my work was interrupted by the noise of a jackhammer. Investigation and a phone call to the Texas Department of Transportation revealed that it was work being done at the corners of every block to bring the sidewalk into compliance with the American Disabilities Act.

I would like to point out that I feel that I am an open-minded person and that I have no desire to cause undue difficulties upon anyone, certainly not a handicapped person; however, in the 12 years I have been at this location, I cannot recall a single handicapped person attempt to utilize this sidewalk.

Further investigation revealed that the work on each corner cost about $600 and that contracts now exist for this work in Midland alone in the amount of $350,000. Also it appears that the cost to Texas is estimated at $62,000,000. The representatives of the Texas Department of Transportation stated that this is an unfunded mandate, and that they had no option except to do the work.

This is not a perfect world and there is no guarantee that the playing field will be level; even though we should afford all reasonable assistance to the handicapped this does not seem to be reasonable. Just think, we are spending $600 on every sidewalk corner, on every state or federal highway in America. Would it not be more beneficial to handicapped people to use this money in a personal manner such as better wheelchairs, artificial limbs, therapy, medical treatment, research and many other personal, useful ways rather than building ramps on sidewalks that will never be used.

Our liberal politicians in Washington would be much better received by the American people if the "tax and spend" way of running our country resulted in a desirable goal and did not spend money on useless projects. Not only do the people have to pay unreasonable taxes, they are wasted on such projects as replacing sidewalk corners.

Speaker, not flag should be cropped

I noticed with dismay that you cropped the flag on the Iwo Jima memorial statue pictured on Monday's front page. Far better would have been to crop out the pictured speaker, who 25 years after that epic battle said that he loathed the military.

Jail procedure costs son much money

My son is serving time in the Midland County Jail for non-payment of child support. He was sentenced to 120 days and thereafter until approximately $5,000 of past-due child support and attorney fees are paid.

When he was sentenced to jail, my son was self-employed. The judge agreed to a work-release commitment which means he leaves jail at 7 a.m. and returns at 7 p.m., Monday through Friday. He spends every night and every weekend in jail. It costs him $10 every day ($50 a week) in "processing fees" to go in and out of jail. Due to the restrictions of his work-release time-frame, he has lost much work. In fact, after several months, he now has very little work left. He cannot pay the past-due child support, much less any current or future child support. He has not seen his daughter (4 years old and a resident of Midland) since around Christmas, when my husband and I had her at our house.

My point is this: How has this helped his child? He can't catch up financially. He's getting further behind. How long will the judge keep him in jail before he notices that the man does not have the money to pay to get out? Or does it matter? In the meantime, the taxpayers of Midland County are paying for him to be in jail. There is something wrong with this picture. Surely, the judicial system can find a better way to handle this situation! If my son had stolen the money, and paid his child support, he would have had a better chance of getting out of jail! In Midland County, we let criminals walk the streets, but fathers who are behind on child support get locked up. I have heard that the judges in Midland County are proud of being known as a county that is tough on "dead-beat" dads. But are they also concerned about whether the child is supported or not, whether the child has enough to eat, or clothes to wear, or knows the love of both her parents, or is it just easier to throw that dad in jail when he gets behind? Child support is important. So is liberty!

Erskines question has been beaten to death

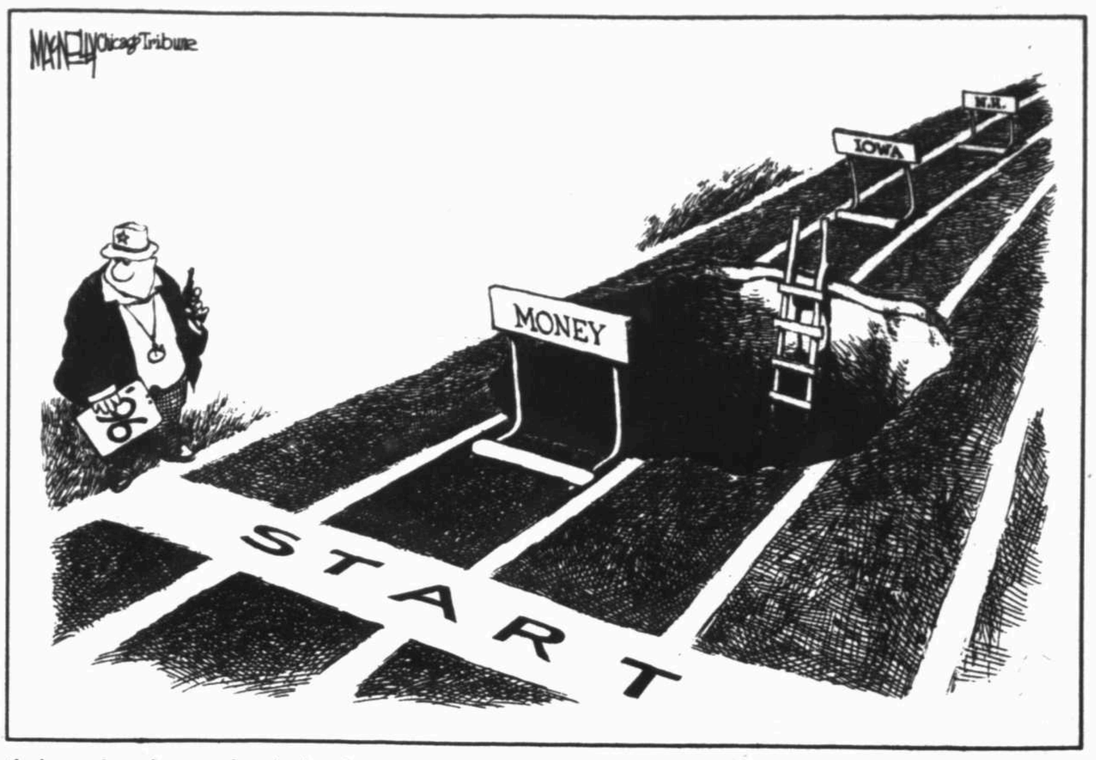

Enough already! The questions concerning the Erskines wildlife rehabilitation activities have been beaten to death. No one has faulted the Erskines for their work and no one has insisted they quit. The question is should they be allowed to continue the work in the city in violation of city codes? The fact is the Erskines are free to do anything they want except knowingly violate city codes — the same conditions imposed on all of us.

If the Erskines are allowed to continue at the present site then the basic purpose of the city codes concerning the keeping of animals (domestic and/or wild) and of lot maintenance is called into question. In fact, the work as presently carried out represents some hazard. We may argue the degree of hazard, but an obvious hazard exists. Are we all to be permitted to keep as many animals of whatever kind under whatever property conditions we deem appropriate within the city limits without regard to the health, safety and comfort of others?

The city offered the use of some city-owned property as a wildlife rehabilitation area. Certainly it is not as convenient as the present location, but it is a viable alternative. The EOS supporters should raise funds to upgrade the area offered by the city or purchase a more suitable area. Instead of moving in a positive direction, they insist on inserting emotional mush in the discussion or attacking the character of city council members and others that don't agree with them.

Regrettably, it seems the Erskines have taken the position of our way or no way. Let us hope that reason soon prevails in this matter and an acceptable alternative is found.

Prayer, support gives needed encouragement

Now that I am back in school and my life has pretty much returned to normal, I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone who included me on their prayer list and to my friends and my Mom's friends who continually called and made the trip to Abilene while I was there. In times of crisis a person hopes that friends rally around to show their support, to let you know that you are important to them, that they are there for you.

I sincerely appreciate everyone's concern and I would like to especially thank Becca Harvey for setting up the medical fund; and thank those who generously contributed to that fund who are too numerous to list here; to the Pickwicks and Rene Brewster for their calls, cards and generosity; to my friends at Lee (especially Shelly Sherman who kept in touch throughout the whole ordeal) for their visits at both hospitals, a few who stayed nights with my Mom at the Abilene hospital including her friend Carla Seidenberger; and especially to Lee Lauderdale who hardly left my side and who continues to support and encourage me; to my new friends Jeff and Sherry Stewart who live in Abilene and continue to check on me and who even wrote a song about me and a special thank you to Beverly Lawson, whom I've never met, but who sent me such wonderful words of encouragement.

My accident showed me that Midland and Abilene are truly communities that give time and effort to those in need when support is needed. I strongly believe that the prayers on my behalf are the reason I am still here. Thank you, everyone, for helping me; it is good to be back in school and preparing for graduation, knowing I now have a future.

Children need more sexuality education

The very great tragedy of Julianne Powell's death should alert all of Midland to the need for sexuality education in every one of our schools. Make children aware of stranger danger and acquaintance danger. The Rape Crisis Center has age-appropriate programs, but parental opposition denies access for many students.

With the constant bombardment of sexual messages on TV, movies, magazines, etc., our children need guidance in dealing with this aspect of our society — not "how to" information, most of them have seen that on TV, but the kind of information to help them understand their sexuality. Teach them how to cope with peer pressure, how to deal with inappropriate behavior by people of any age, the dangers of sexually transmitted diseases and the tragedy of teen pregnancy. Without giving truthful and accurate information about sexuality, we fail our children.

Let Julianne's death be a wake-up call for Midland. Arm our children with knowledge. Insist that our schools offer age appropriate sexuality education to help protect our children.

Readers' views on: School board meeting

Hamilton's rudeness was most surprising

I was recently in attendance at the Feb. 14 school board meeting and was greatly disappointed at the way the meeting was conducted. Jackie Hamilton was rude to several members of the audience as well as the teachers who were in attendance. What I found most surprising was her discourteous manner towards Mr. Fuller.

He was merely trying to voice his opinion on the matter and was very rudely "put in his place." Is this the way to treat a fellow member of the school board? What kind of example are we setting for the children who were there? We talk about ways to ensure more parent involvement and when parents do become involved in their children's education they are told they only have one hour in which to do it.

As an educator myself I am angry and disappointed that parents and children where not allowed to speak. Are we not supposed to be advocates for the children? How are we to know what is best for them if we do not first listen to them? If everyone does indeed feel the need for a bilingual director, put your money where your mouth is and find us one. All children deserve a quality education and it is up to the school system to provide it.

Board members are condescending

I am writing in regards to the school board meeting on Feb. 14. First of all I would like to applaud the Hispanic community for turning out in such numbers in order to support their children's education.

I have attended many school board meetings and was appalled at the manner in which the school board conducted itself. Specifically Jackie Hamilton, Dianne Anderson and the school's superintendent. Ms. Hamilton was condescending to not only the parents but also to the teachers. She treated the audience as if we were not worthy of being heard. Was it because they didn't speak English?

Ms. Anderson and the superintendent spent a great deal of the time whispering and smiling while members of the audience spoke. Is this the way a school board conducts itself? The school board is there to represent the entire district. How can they do this and make a sound decision if they are not willing to hear members of the community? The greatest outrage I felt was when the board refused to listen to children who were there to address the board.

I would like, however, to commend certain members of the board — Mr. Fuller, Ms. Marmolejo and Mr. Dobey — for willingness to hear our voice. I would also like to thank Mr. Torres for translating for members of the audience.

Anderson's call gave greatest compliment

First of all I want to extend a big Texas size "thank you" to all the persons that attended the last school board meeting and supported the concept of bilingual education.

On Wednesday morning just as second period ended, I got a phone call at school from a school board member, Dianne Anderson, who gave me the greatest compliment I have been given in a long time. She told me that I was using Alma Marshall techniques and sounded just like her. I have always admired Ms. Marshall's ability to speak out for what is right, her ability to express no fear of retaliation from those she works for, and her ability to provide factual data based on knowledge as well as great articulation.

Mrs. Anderson visited my classroom on that same day during fourth period. I would like to thank my students, especially fourth period, for their willingness to accept visitors at any time, to continue with learning as usual, and fully participating in the lesson. I do invite Mrs. Anderson to visit my classroom and I also extend an invitation for her to come during my conference so that we can discuss bilingual education as well as English as a Second Language instruction.

At the board meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 14, Mrs. Anderson said that a student entering this country from another with at least six years of education should only need one year of English as a Second Language instruction. I am willing to pay the cost for Mrs. Anderson to take German for the same time period that public schools are in session and at the end of that time period she will be tested with a German I.Q. for adults and with a German normal referenced exam used for adults entering college. She also has to agree to have her scores published in the newspaper.

ESL students only have two periods of instruction so that is all she can get of formal instruction a day. ESL students do not have tutors so she could not have one either. MISD ESL students do not have a book that they can take home to study so she would also not have a book to take home. When ESL students go home they are submerged once again into their first language so there may be no additional instructional materials, tapes, or other forms of media at home in German. If she firmly believes that teen-agers can learn to understand, speak, read, and write the English language with complete mastery in all content areas in one year, proving it by giving us all a personal example at no cost to her should be a breeze.

School officials take skills training from students

By Anthony G. Smith

Anthony G. (Tony) Smith is the department head and an instructor of the Automotive Technology Program at Midland College. He is in his third year with Midland College, prior to which he owned and operated European Auto Service for six years. Smith has an Associate of Science degree from Midland College and a Bachelor of Business Administration degree from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The Midland Independent School District (MISD) is robbing our children of a future. U.S. Department of Labor statistics suggest that for every 20 jobs requiring a bachelors degree, there are 30 applicants; however for every 60 jobs requiring vocational-technical skills there are only 20 applicants. These are not low-wage, low-skilled jobs, but are high-tech, skilled occupations.

Until now MISD has contracted with Midland College (MC) to provide vocational-technical training to high school students. These students receive college credit for training in Automotive and Welding Technology. These courses give students the skills that make them employable, that give them a future. The Automotive Technology program at MC is one of only 13 in Texas that is a Master Certified Training Program by the National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence (ASE). The Welding Technology program recently completed a major renovation of its facilities and will soon be accepted into the American Society of Welders (ASW). These two programs offer MISD students usable skills training according to national standards and truly prepare them to enter the work force. MISD has decided to abolish these programs or turn them into courses that will be of little benefit to students or employers. So why does MISD want to take these programs away from our children?

The MC Automotive and Welding Technology programs have been provided to MISD at a financial loss to MC for more than 10 years. For this school year, Midland College negotiated a new contract that reflected MC's costs for providing these programs. Although MC is still providing facilities, tools, and equipment for these programs at no cost to MISD, it is nearer the break-even point for faculty and supplies costs than it was under the previous contract. Is it because MC is now recovering the costs of providing these services that MISD has decided to end these programs and rob our children of the education they deserve?

According to sources at MISD, these programs are ending because of cuts in state and federal funding. However, according to the Texas Education Agency no cuts in funding are forecast for the coming school year. This school year, $355,666 in state and federal funds for vocational programs were dispersed to MISD. These amounts are up $77,965 from the 1993-94 school year. The MISD budget for fiscal year 1994-95 only allocates $189,305 for vocational education — $73,295 of which is in salaries for one administrator and a part-time secretary and another $3,000 for consultants. Where is the other $166,361 in state and federal money going, and why is it not going to our children?

In the 1993-94 school year, nine MISD students received college credit for completing the Auto Tech program at MC. Indications are that as many as 30 students will get college credit for their work in Auto Tech and Welding this school year. Based on the information we now have, the programs MISD will offer will not meet the criteria as a Tech Prep program or Midland College standards for granting college credit for these courses. MISD has chosen to deny any new students, and even these fine students who are now in these programs, the opportunity to gain usable skills training and college credit for completion of these programs. These actions by the administration at MISD are unethical at best and may even border on criminal. Certainly these actions have exhibited a complete disregard for the wishes or best interests of the students of MISD.

MISD's decision to make such dramatic changes to existing, growing programs without the courtesy of consulting with the people involved reeks of unethical, petty politics. It is the complete lack of concern exhibited by MISD toward the future employability of its students, our children, that alarms me.

It is my opinion that this move by MISD is misguided and in very poor judgment. Any attempt to diminish the quality of instruction that our kids receive should be protested strongly to the MISD administration and the school board.

It is truly a shame that they are taking one of the best opportunities for these students away without considering these kids' future.

These students deserve a future that includes the opportunity to continue their training in fields that offer them usable skills for which employers will pay a living wage and keep them off of welfare.

On-line bulletin boards are inexpensive addiction for many people

By Yardena Arar
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Sandra Bishop's first on-line experience was in 1986 on a national service that cost only $9.95 a month plus an 8-cents-a-minute on-line fee.

"I didn't realize how addictive it was chatting to people, and I was chatting with people all over the U.S.," recalled the Newbury Park resident.

Her first bill was for $750 a month, and although she cut down to $250 her third month, Bishop realized she'd have to indulge her passion elsewhere.

And soon, she was on one of several local bulletin board systems — or BBSes as they commonly are known — that she has joined in the last eight years. None cost her more than $10 a month for a yearly membership with unlimited connect time, "and that's pretty cheap entertainment," she said. Not only does she save money, but she's developed a whole circle of friends through the in-person get-togethers sponsored by most local boards.

It's this combination of reasonable price and the ability to make local connections — be they social, business or informational — that continues to power a variety of local boards and on-line services even as the big national networks and the Internet attract more and more users.

"Because people are local to the board, I've gotten in touch with them," said Brian Bailey, 48, of North Hollywood, who goes by the handle Connor on the Annex, a board he joined recently when it bought out his previous BBS, the Castle. "I don't think I can do that so efficiently with America Online."

Because the Annex has Internet access, Bailey also corresponds regularly with friends and family members in Poland, Cameroon, Hawaii and Chicago.

A doctoral student at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, Bailey is on a tight budget, and "this is my main source of fellowship," he said.

"It serves the purpose of bringing the community together. You can't get anybody on the phone anymore — you just get their answering machine. And I like the games, of course."

Bishop says she maintains memberships on three local boards. Her primary hangout is the Motherboard, a 40-line fixture on the Los Angeles BBS scene for more than 10 years. She moderates a poetry discussion board there and also verifies phone numbers of new users in her area.

Bishop is also a moderator on Beeline, and she has an account on Hard Disk Cafe, a Northridge-based board with Internet e-mail and Usenet access plus an impressive array of on-line interactive games including Yahtzee, Backgammon, Trade Wars and Kyrandia.

"I like to tell myself I am not so addicted that I can't do without it," said Bishop, a divorcee in her mid-40s who does word processing out of her home. "And I prove it to myself every once in a while by not logging on a day or two at a time."

But, Bishop said, when she got home recently after a three-week absence for a family crisis, "I had some of the most beautiful mail.

"People sent me poems and all their sympathy and condolences, and it was so nice to know that I have so many people who care. It's like an extended family.... True, it's an addiction, but if you use it right, it's a harmless addiction."

"A lot of people don't want to spend $2 an hour to go on something like America Online," said Hard Disk Cafe system operator (sysop, in BBS parlance) Ira Goldstein. "And there are other people who don't want to be on a really large board."

"One of the things is the availability of each other — that's what people really find (on local BBSes)," said Celeste Clark, sysop of the Motherboard, which she operates out of her Simi Valley home.

"Many of the local services have gatherings where they get together. Our service offers the ability for men and women to meet each other. They can do this on a national network, but this is just geographically convenient for them, and it gives them access to people who have similar values because they live in the same community."

Local BBSes realize that to compete against the big national services, they must find new and different ways to serve their communities. Dave Harrison, sysop of the 160-line Westside, is planning to start a Westside Junior board for children and their parents. "Kids need a good, safe place to play," he said.

These days, joining a local bulletin board doesn't have to mean doing without the outside world. Many of the larger BBSes — including the Annex, Westside and Hard Disk Cafe — already offer e-mail and other Internet services, and more and more plan to do so.

Mendelsohn, who is in the process of testing Internet services promised to subscribers within two months, said local bulletin boards can be a lot more helpful to Internet novices than the national networks.

"The lines are less crowded, you will get more support, and for users who are new to the net, there are on-line classes. It is a whole lot more friendly, it makes people's lives a whole lot more easy, and they feel like they're getting more attention, which they are."

The price is also very competitive; BBSes generally offer several levels of membership, with fees depending largely on how much access time you're allowed per day and how long term a membership you buy. The Motherboard, for example, charges anywhere from $18 for a one-month membership with limited access to $120 for a year's membership with unlimited access (the plan Bishop has).

In contrast, America Online's basic fee is $9.95, including only five hours of connect time. After that, you pony up $2.50 an hour — not as steep as the $4.80 per hour Bishop was playing for live chat in 1986, but enough to put a serious dent in a hard-core netsurfer's budget.

Being on the net also allows BBSes to attract customers from outside the area who connect via telnet, the Internet tool that allows one computer on the network to hook up with another.

"We couldn't survive without the Internet," said Greg Gooden, sysop of the Annex, which, with the acquisition of the Castle, now has nearly 200 phone lines.

"In five years, if a BBS isn't on the net, then they're a specialty board with two lines."

Outsiders account for about 15 percent of the Annex's 1,000 subscribers, Gooden said, adding that outsiders join for the same reason as locals do — the people and the on-line games.

"Our motto is, 'Your rest stop on the information superhighway.' We don't want to be an on-ramp so much as an off-ramp," Gooden said.

While so-called "chat boards" provide the human interaction of the major services on a local level, other local services focus on content.

Psychologist Tracy Cabot's Loveline is a Valley-based service that offers an on-line "love encyclopedia" based on Cabot's writings over two decades. There's a matchmaking component — users fill out an extensive questionnaire, and Cabot requires them to submit a copy of their driver's license to verify at least age, gender, height and weight — and for $15 a shot you can get an e-mail answer from Cabot to a specific question.

"A lot of the people know me personally. They feel they can trust the bulletin board or what it says," said Cabot, who right now is charging only $15 for a start-up membership that includes a copy of one of her books.

The Vine is a Windows/Macintosh-based service for entertainment industry professionals — and co-founder Marc von Arx says prospective users are screened to weed out the wanna-bes. Membership fees range from $36 a quarter to $150 a year, depending on what features you opt for; these include e-mail; various publications, Usenet news groups and AP news feeds; industry databases; virtual offices for such organizations as the American Film Institute and the American Society of Cinematographers; and chat groups geared toward industry professionals.

L.A. Online is an advertiser-supported service that offers several community publications, including an on-line version of the L.A. Reader, local and world news from Reuters, movie listings and shopping guides. There's no chat, but there is a new Minds On-line section where people can leave their opinions on a weekly topic.

"We offer a tremendous amount of content, and when people find out about it, they join.... Our philosophy is that the general public just doesn't want to pay for it," said owner David Silverberg, adding that 20,000 log-ins were recorded last month.

While the service is free to callers, L.A. Online is marketing a graphical user interface (GUI) that allows access to, among other things, on-line comics for a one-time charge of $39.95.

Relatively new to the local on-line scene is Valley Online, a Windows-based (Macintosh software is in the works) service described by co-founder Sean Solimon as "a virtual marketplace."

Valley Online offers chat, message boards and — eventually — complete listings of restaurants, movies and merchants in the area. The basic listings will be free to the businessman, but they have the option of paying extra for a more extensive presence; for example, restaurants can post photographs of food or decor.

Certain businessmen will pay for exclusive rights; there's only one on-line doctor and one accountant. But they also offer free on-line advice in publicly posted messages. Users pay $8 a month; software is free and can be obtained by calling Solimon at his Woodland Hills store, All Computers.

America Online charges some of its on-line vendors several thousand dollars, "and the shoe store down the street is never going to go on-line like that," Solimon said. "We think that the next thing is to have everybody on-line, and you can go on your computer and do anything you want."

'Family Viewing Hour' has become hour of anything goes, some say

By Ray Richmond
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — "Mad About You" is what many would call the quintessential 9:30 p.m. adult comedy: Sexy, sophisticated, brash and intimate, it's the perfect sitcom to watch after the kids are tucked into bed.

But as its legion of Thursday night fans can tell you, "Mad About You" doesn't air at 9:30, but at 8 p.m., when Junior is still awake and presumably commandeering the living room TV set.

It once was known wistfully as the Family Viewing Hour — that time between 8 and 9 p.m., when network shows reflected a life both innocent and grand.

Yet, in the 1990s, the 8 o'clock hour has taken on a decidedly different look as programming guidelines have loosened and the definition of what passes for appropriate early-evening fare has broadened.

"The standards have fallen, and there is no 'family hour' anymore," said Joan Ganz Cooney, the founder of the Children's Television Workshop and creator of "Sesame Street."

"I suspect it has something to do with what has happened to the family in general. Family life has simply disintegrated along with the proliferation of media, and the lowest common denominator is finally prevailing. The old family rituals have become less and less."

It used to be that Mom, Pop, the kids and Grandma would gather together to watch TV after dinner, and the networks' 8 p.m. offerings reflected that: "The Waltons," "The Brady Bunch," "The Flying Nun" and "The Partridge Family," "The Odd Couple," "Happy Days," "That Girl" and "Little House on the Prairie."

Even into the 1980s, the 8 o'clock hour was dominated by such unthreatening family fare as "Webster," "The Facts of Life," "The Cosby Show," "Highway to Heaven," "Full House" and "Murder, She Wrote."

But the idea of what an 8 p.m. show should be — or is — clearly has evolved of late.

Janice Myers, 33, of Palmdale thought she was safe when she and her two youngsters tuned in at 8 p.m. Mondays to watch "The Nanny," NBC's hit sitcom about a hip woman who cares for three precocious kids. But during one recent episode, the title character made a racy joke about sex.

"My little girl looked at me kind of funny and said, 'Mommy, I didn't get that last part.' "I told her, 'It's OK, you shouldn't have gotten it.' Then I walked over and turned off the television. I couldn't believe they could say something like this on a family comedy with kids," said Myers.

"The networks seem to forget that it's families who pay their bills," Myers said. "They've stopped programming for families and gone straight for the dollars instead."

Fox's short-run version of the new "Get Smart," for instance, targeted for the younger crowd at 7:30 p.m. Sundays, showed the lead characters engaging in double-entendres and slapstick takes on sexual intercourse. This was at the same hour that once featured "Walt Disney's Wonderful World of Color" and "Lassie."

Fox's 8 p.m. fare also includes "Melrose Place," its soap about young hunks and babes in perpetual lust, on Mondays, and "Martin," in which the lead character becomes involved in a variety of sexually suggestive situations, on Thursdays.

"It would appear that all bets are off and the networks can do pretty much whatever they want," said Grant Tinker, the former chairman of NBC and creator of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show."

"But that is even more true with cable. Due to inattention or carelessness, they seem to be caring very little about what kind of material is seen by the family," he said.

Take the case of "Absolutely Fabulous," a British comedy series on cable's Comedy Central. The main characters are two women in their 40s who smoke too much, drink too much and dabble in narcotics and rampant sex.

The racy "AbFab" airs in Los Angeles at 7 p.m. Sundays, 8:30 p.m. Mondays and 1 p.m. Saturdays, just after the morning kiddie cartoon block. A decade ago, the show may have been considered too outlandish to even make it to American screens at all.

Tinker figures the new permissiveness simply may be a reflection of changing times. But Peggy Charren, founder of the Massachusetts-based watchdog group Action for Children's Television, has a different theory.

"The remote control has destroyed any sense of parent safety, because there are so many choices and every kid knows how to find them," Charren said. "The kind of stuff you used to have to go to Paris to get — and bring home in a book bag — is now everywhere on TV."

But some network executives do feel responsible for making their 8 p.m. shows all things to all people — especially when explicit movies and programs are being peddled just up the cable dial.

Ted Harbert, president of ABC Entertainment, said his is the only network to wear seriously its badge as a family programmer. He points to ABC's much-vaunted "T.G.I.F." sitcom lineup, its "ABC Family Movie" on Saturday and shows such as "Sister, Sister" and "America's Funniest Home Videos."

Harbert also admits he becomes uncomfortable when he goes channel-surfing at 8 p.m. and stumbles onto a love scene on "Melrose Place" or an off-color joke on "Martin."

"I'm not a conservative, puritanical guy by any means, but my eyebrows do raise, and I'm not ashamed of that," said Harbert, who is considering moving the landmark "Roseanne" from 9 p.m. to 8 p.m. in March.

"The numbers tell us that there are a lot more young people watching TV at 8 than at 9 or 9:30. And as programmers, we still have a responsibility to put on shows that parents can watch with their kid and not feel uncomfortable, or that the material is unsuitable for the hour.

"We don't want to be bound by archaic rules," he said, "but we have to remember parents don't want a lot of surprises on their TV set at 8."

Dan McDermott, executive vice president of current programming and specials for Fox, agreed.

"We feel like with the advent of the multi-set household, the idea of family watching shows together has also changed a little bit," McDermott said. "Instead of Mom and Dad and the kids and Grandma and Grandpa watching the same show, now you have the parents in one room, the kids in another and the grandparents out back, all doing their own thing."

Even so, many an eyebrow was raised when NBC decided last season to move "Mad About You" — a comedy originally developed for 9:30 p.m. — to 8 p.m. Thursdays, while retaining the show's adult themes.

NBC Entertainment president Warren Littlefield said the move was borne of his desperation to find a show to compete against Fox's animated hit, "The Simpsons." "Mad About You" has proved to be a smash in its new time period, moving into the top 10 in the ratings this season.

Since then, Littlefield has duplicated the strategy by moving "Wings" to 8 p.m. Tuesdays and slating "Friends" for 8:30 p.m. on Thursdays.

"Is there some humor that will go over the heads of children in 'Mad About You' and 'Wings'? Sure there is," he said. "But in 'Mad About You,' kids can respond to a young married couple who are desperately in love with one another. That's very positive."

"Mad About You" creator and executive producer Danny Jacobson likewise defies anyone to find something inappropriate for kids in his show.

"My opinion is that the definition of what is a family show is changing, and 'Mad About You' is a family show," Jacobson said. "It's a family show because it's a loving show. Yeah, once in a while we refer to intimacy and to lovemaking, but I think to avoid those issues is unrealistic and insulting to the audience."

And if kids don't understand the sexual references, Jacobson added, the dialogue simply will fly over their heads.

"Whatever they do get is being presented in an honest way, not in a way that embarrasses them or makes them feel uncomfortable," he said.

"Wings" premiered in 1990 as a 9:30 p.m. show, but hasn't changed its focus or level of material since being moved to 8, said executive producer Mark Reisman.

"I can't tell you how little discussion there is in the room about keeping the material consistent with the hour we're on," Reisman said. "We all think that the audience we have at 8 is the same one we had at 9:30. We have just continued to be 'Wings.' It's that simple."

Littlefield attributes the expansion of the 8 p.m. choices to the changing values of the country and to the evolution of the time period to acknowledge adults.

"For too long, shows at 8 o'clock had kind of narrowed their appeal mostly to young audiences," he said.

"So we just kind of said, 'Wait a second, we can get adults to come to the set at that hour as well.' We ultimately realized we can give people smart, quality shows at 8. If we can respect the audience when we program at 9 and 10, we can also respect them when we program at 8."

Respect doesn't much come into the equation for Ed Hynes, a director with Morality in Media, a Washington, D.C.-based nonprofit group that fights what it perceives as pornography, obscenity and indecency in the media.

"The death of family viewing on television is inevitable in a medium so dedicated to gratuitous sex, nudity and foul language that have nothing to do with plot or story development," Hynes said. "Kids are being bombarded with smut, and not only in the evening. You see people grabbing their crotches and mooning one another during the daytime talk shows, too."

Scout to receive his Eagle Badge in Court of Honor today

From Staff Reports

Rockets' glare blinds 'Dogs

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

EL PASO — Midland High won't be back to defend its Region I crown next weekend at Chaparral Center after a Class 5A area basketball border run was caught dead in the water by the El Paso Irvin Rockets, 85-64, here Saturday night.

MHS, a Final Four team a year ago and the defending Region I champion, bows out of the 1995 playoffs with a 24-8 record while Irvin, under first year head coach David Castillo, shoots to the region quarterfinals with a 22-6 mark after winning the District 1-5A title in his first season at the helm of the Rockets.

"I give all the credit to these kids," Castillo said, "but I have to admit that this is special to win your first playoff game after returning to your own alma mater.

"The kids had a great attitude about this game. Midland High beat us in Midland in the finals of a tournament there before Christmas and they wanted to come back and get a little revenge. They did a good job of what had to be done."

The Rockets brutilized the Bulldogs on the boards, and that more than anything, spelt defeat in this one. The Rockets had a huge 47-18 edge off the glass.

It also didn't hurt any that Allen Clanton arrived at the game in a basketball mood as the 6-foot-5 senior had a career night with 31 points and 14 rebounds.

"Midland beat us once this year and I wanted to make sure that didn't happen again. I had 12 points when we played Midland the first time, but, as a senior, I knew this was the last game I would ever play in high school if we lost. I wanted the game bad."

Irvin also got 15 points off the bench from Billy Dunn and 14 more from 6-2 Marcus Faison. Also, Edmund Stansbury, a sophomore who is the quarterback of the football team and who played junior varsity basketball all season, came in to ignite the Rockets to a 10-point lead in the third quarter when he led a 10-0 run for the Rockets with eight points.

Still, MHS was in the game until the fourth period. The Bulldogs were down by only 10 points at the six-minute mark. Past history would say that MHS had Irvin right where they wanted them. Last Monday against Lubbock Monterey in bi-district play, MHS rallied from 12 points down in that same time span.

The miracle didn't come here on Irvin's home floor as the Rockets exploded quickly to a 20-point lead, 77-57, with 2:53 left to play as Clanton scored 13 points in the period and Dunn six.

"We knew it was going to be tough coming in here to play in front of their home crowd, but our kids never gave up," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We just

Lady Rebels leave Bulldogs in 'Hayes'

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

In their first-ever District 6-5A meeting against cross-town rival Midland High, the Midland Lee girls completed a huge fifth inning to break open what had been a scoreless tie through the first four to take a 7-1 softball win Saturday afternoon at the Bill Williams Softball Complex.

With the win, the Lady Rebels improved to 8-0 for the season. The Lady Bulldogs fell to 5-2 making it their second loss against their Tall City rival. It was the district opener for both teams.

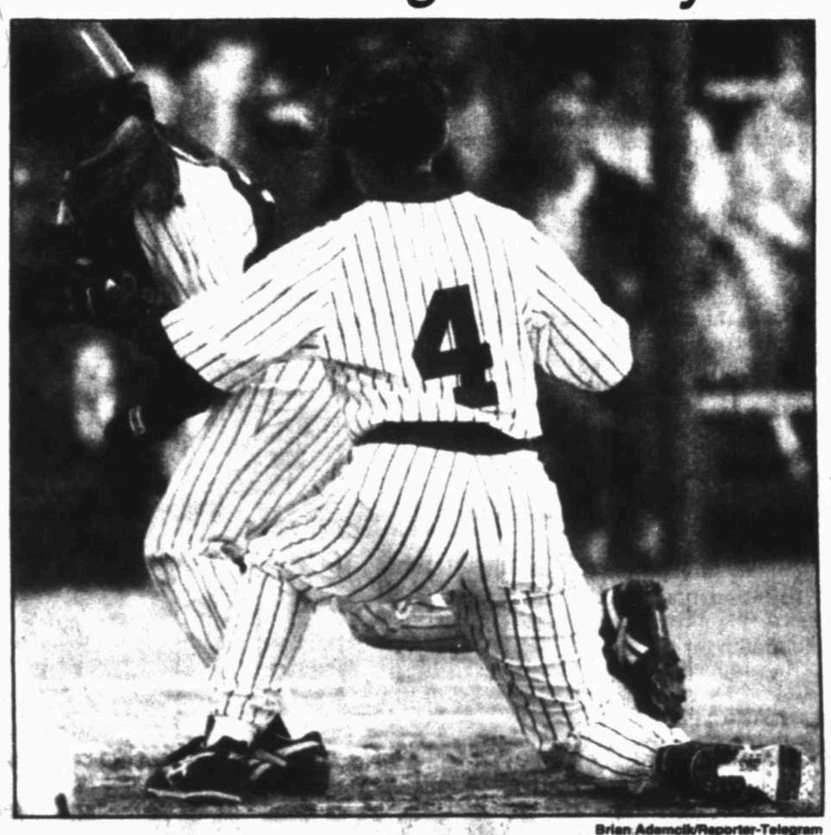

Although Midland starter Jennifer Shelton, a sophomore, was bombarded with five hits from the powerful Lee bats, excellent fielding provided Shelton with a shutout through the first four innings of the seven-inning contest.

But the Lady Rebels finally took advantage of one of the Lady Bulldogs' few weaknesses — inexperience on the mound — in the key fifth.

"With our entire pitching staff being sophomores, I think Jennifer did a great job considering Lee's strong hitting," said MHS coach Sherri Culwell. "They finally started hitting the ball in the gaps and you can't defend against base hits. But we had our chances and I think we can take them next time."

In the fifth, Lee's Kimberly Murphy

Tall City trio leads district

■ Midland coach Jim Raughton, guard Amy Alcala and Lee sophomore Jamie Rhoads earn district's yearly honors.

Staff Report

For the third straight season the Midland High duo of Amy Alcala and coach Jim Raughton earned the top nod from the District 4-5A coaches.

Alcala, the Lady Dawgs' leading scorer for three years, was again selected as the district's Most Valuable Player making her a three-time pick as the league's best player and ending a career which has brought Midland High three district championships and two regional tournament berths.

Raughton

Raughton, who in the three-year span that Alcala was on the team has lost only three district games, was named the Coach of the Year. Raughton has taken that honor the last three years of his five-year tenure.

But the honors for Tall City teams did not stop there.

Records fall as Lee girls, MHS boys capture 4-5A

Call it the chill of victory.

Angela Sanchez hugged her mother and then, shivering, held back tears long enough to talk about her surprising, record-setting performance in the 100-yard breast stroke at Saturday's District 4-5A Swimming Meet. The Midland Lee sophomore's league mark smashing 1:09.63 highlighted the Lee girls' and Midland High boys' meet victories. Sanchez' was one of seven league marks that fell at the hands of Midland swimmers.

"It's sent my confidence skyrocketing," said the 16-year old Lee swimmer. "I'm still shaking I'm so happy."

■ Amarillo High captures Tall City Invitational.

Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

Even the weather couldn't get in the way of the Amarillo boys' golf team.

The Golden Sandies blew through the Tall City Invitational much like the front that delayed the progression of the tournament Saturday at Green Tree. Amarillo captured their second team title in as many weeks, and their leader Ty Cox rolled to a victory of his own in the medalist race.

"We played good considering the conditions," Cox said. "Par was 73 so you're going to shoot higher. It was a fun tournament."

Amarillo, coming off last week's win in Plainview, made it for two-for-two for the defending Region I champions in 5A. The championships are nice, but the main interest for coach Wade Walker's team is to play as well as they can individually.

"They won't be too happy even with the title, because they didn't finish well," Walker said. "You want to play well every time out, so you are used to winning. The main thing is they play the course well."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram
Midland Lee's Ryan Lovell fired a second round total 85 as the Lee team finished 9th in the Tall City Invitational Saturday at Green Tree Country Club.

The same type of domination was found in the medalist race where Cox won, beating out Corey Driskill and teammate Ryan Palmer by three strokes. Cox, who remained cool and confident throughout the round, went wire-to-wire finishing at two-over-par for the win.

"It's gotten to the point where par is a bad round for him," Walker said. "It's a whole different mind set than a player trying to break 80."

Lady Texans make first-ever trip to state tournament

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

The spirit of cooperation got the Arlington Sam Houston girls basketball team through what could have been a disaster Saturday afternoon in the finals of the Region I-5A girls basketball tournament at Chaparral Center.

Sam Houston coach Charmaine Johnson got some help from an unexpected source as the Lady Texans discovered a hidden reserve of energy to defeat Euless Trinity 67-52, making Sam Houston (28-6) the first girls team from Arlington to make the state basketball tournament.

Less than 12 hours after the Lady Texans survived an emotional overtime win over Midland High in the semifinals in front of a racous pro-Lady Dawg crowd, they were back on the court to try to find the answer to a team which owned a 2-1 advantage over them in their three previous meetings.

But additional guidance for the Lady Texans and their young coach came in the form of Sam Houston boys coach David Clyde, who had experienced a similar situation when he brought his team to Chaparral Center for a regional tournament a few years ago.

"Before we even left the gym (Friday night) we talked to these girls about having to come back the next day," said Johnson. "And coach Clyde had been here before and won an emotional overtime game in the semifinals only to lose to (Fort Worth) in the finals because the guys had expended a lot of energy celebrating the night before.

■ Region I Tournament

"He was a great addition to the team."

Sam Houston senior Shaka Massey got the message loud and clear.

"Actually, the pressure that they put on us to get back to our rooms and get to sleep kept us from being flat for this game," said Massey, who fired in 19 points

Perry drains birdie on final hole for Nissan lead

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Kenny Perry, brimming with confidence and fine golf shots, rolled in a 40-foot birdie putt on No. 18 Saturday for a one-shot lead over Corey Pavin after three rounds of the Nissan Open.

Coming off a victory in the Bob Hope Desert Classic last week and a record-tying round at Riviera Country Club the previous day, Perry shot a 3-under-par 68 to go to 13-under-par, as he tries for two in a row.

Pavin also is trying to make it two straight, only in the Los Angeles tournament. The defending champion, Pavin began the third round a shot behind Perry, drew even with a birdie on the first hole, then went ahead when Perry bogeyed No. 3.

Pavin went on to open a two-stroke lead after four holes and was up by one until he missed a 5-foot par putt on No. 16. The 1994 tournament champion, trying to become the first player to win the event two years in a row since Arnold Palmer in 1966-67, then parred the final two holes.

Craig Stadler, who picked up some ground with a hole-in-one with a 5-iron on the 170-yard sixth hole, and Jay Don Blake were two shots off the lead. Stadler had a third-round 67 and Blake a 66.

Others within striking distance of the lead included Scott Simpson and Bob Estes, four shots off the pace; and two-time LA winner Lanny Wadkins, in a group another shot behind.

Fred Couples, who won at Riviera in 1990 and 1992 and finished second the past two years, had a 68 and was six shots off the lead. John Daly was seven strokes behind the leader after a third-round 71.

Jacobsen, who won at San Diego and Pebble Beach before taking the week of the Hope Classic off, shot a third-round 69 and was nine strokes behind Perry.

Medterranean Open

VALENCIA, Spain — Vicente Fernandez of Argentina carded a 1-under-par 71 to move into second place behind Robert Karlsson of Sweden in the third round of the $480,000 Mediterranean Open.

■ Golf Roundup

Karlsson kept the lead with a 71 and 204 total going into Sunday's final round of the tournament, the sixth in this year's PGA European Tour.

Scotland's Sam Torrance drew even with Fernandez with a 71 on the 6,909-yard Escorpion Golf Club course.

Karlsson needed three putts at the par-3 eighth hole and bogeyed the par-5 12th with two putts after pitching out of a bunker.

Karlsson's countryman Anders Forsbrand shot a 5-under-par 67 to move up to third place, three strokes behind the leader.

Spain's Jose Maria Canizares was seven strokes off the lead with a 71, in a group of eight players tied for seventh place.

Scotland's Sandy Lyle, returning after a three-month break from play, carded a 75 to finish 14 strokes off the lead.

Dunhill Challenge

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Greg Norman and Vijay Singh led an Australasian resurgence , as the western Pacific team won six of eight matches against Southern Africa to pull within three points in the Alfred Dunhill Challenge.

Behind 6 1/2 to 1 1/2 at the start of the second day of the Ryder Cup-style tournament for the southern hemisphere, the team comprising players from Australia, New Zealand and Fiji was within three points at 9 1/2-6 1/2 with nine singles matches remaining today.

The Southern Africans, with players from South Africa and Zimbabwe, need three points from the singles to triumph in the inaugural Dunhill Challenge, scheduled to be held every two years. If the tournament ends in a tie, a sudden death playoff between one player from each side would occur.

The draw pits Nick Price of Zimbabwe, the world No. 1 last year, against Norman, the Australian ranked No. 2, while Ernie Els of South Africa, the U.S. Open champion ranked fifth, takes on Singh, number five on the U.S. money list this year.

"We didn't blitz them like we would have liked to have done," Norman said of Saturday's comeback. "I think we've got a strong chance."

Singh, of Fiji, teamed with Lucas Parsons of New Zealand to win a morning foursome, or alternate shot match, over David Frost and Retief Goosen of South Africa. They the.. battled Price and Frost to a draw in the afternoon best ball format.

Singh's day included a 148-yard 9-iron for an eagle on the par 4 fifth hole in the morning, but erratic putting in the afternoon that prevented a probable victory.

Norman and Australian Robert Allenby won their morning foursome over South Africans Wayne Westner and Fulton Allem. Norman teamed with Wayne Grady of Australia in the afternoon to defeat Goosen and Hendrik Buhrmann of South Africa 2 and 1 in the fourball, with Norman firing six birdies, four on the back nine when the outcome was still uncertain.

The team tournament gave players outside of the United States and Europe a chance to experience a Ryder Cup atmosphere.

Chang coasts into U.S. Indoor finals

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Defending champion Michael Chang barely worked up a sweat against Paul Haarhuis in a 51-minute 6-2, 6-0 rout Saturday to reach the final of the U.S. Indoor championships.

Chang, who beat Haarhuis for the title here last year, could become the first repeat winner since Tim Mayotte in 1987-88. He will face the winner of a Saturday night match between second-seeded Andre Agassi and Thomas Enqvist of Sweden.

Trailing 2-1, Chang won 20 of the next 26 points and broke Haarhuis twice to win the opening set. Chang had the lean Dutchman flying all over the court in the second set in lengthy baseline exchanges, losing only 10 points. Match point was a 107-mph service winner. Haarhuis, who also reached the doubles semifinals, said it was like playing against a wall.

WTA Linz

LINZ, Austria — Top-seeded Jana Novotna of the Czech Republic beat Meike Babel of Germany 6-2, 6-4 Saturday in the semifinals of a WTA tournament.

Novotna will play for the title against Germany's Barbara Rittner, who beat Beate Reinstadler of Austria 6-1, 6-3.

Babel lost last year's final to Belgium's Sabine Applemans.

■ Tennis Roundup

Novotna goes into today's final a heavy favorite.

Eurocard Open

STUTTGART, Germany — Michael Stich not only beat his archrival Boris Becker in the semifinals of Eurocard Open on Saturday, he sent his fellow German to one of his most embarrassing defeats.

Stich beat the top-seeded Becker 6-0, 6-3 in match that took only 64 minutes.

Stich's victory put him in the final against Richard Krajicek, the big-serving Dutchman who rolled past qualifier Martin Damm of the Czech Republic 6-2, 6-3.

Stich, the No. 5 seed, had never beaten Becker in five previous indoor encounters, though he has defeated him three times in 11 outdoor matches

But he seized control from the start. The victory resembled Stich's 6-1, 6-1 triumph over Becker on clay in the semifinals of the 1992 German Open in Hamburg.

Stich was elated with the one-sided victory over the player who remains more popular in Germany and with whom he has often feuded.

Little wins Goodwrench

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — Chad Little overpowered the field Saturday on the way to his second straight Busch Grand National victory, this one coming in the Goodwrench 200 at North Carolina Motor Speedway.

Little, who earned his first career victory a week earlier at Daytona Beach, Fla., started on the outside of the front row. He easily took the lead from pole-winner and defending series champion David Green at the start and lost the lead only on pit stops in the 197-lap race.

It wasn't even close, with the Ford Thunderbird co-owned by NFL quarterback Mark Rypien, beating the Ford of runner-up Mark Martin to the finish line by 9.39 seconds — about a third of the 1.017-mile oval.

"I never had to hustle the car all day," Little said. "You don't get cars like this very often. It was fun to drive a race car like this."

"We were no match for Chad," Martin said. "He whipped it on us real bad."

Little is the first driver to win two straight Grand National races since Martin won Darlington and Richmond in September 1993.

Terry Labonte, who won this race a year ago, finished third, followed by Johnny Benson and Morgan Shepherd. Green, who was running fourth at the time, went out just past the halfway point with an engine failure.

Little's average speed of 120.753 breaks the NCMS Grand National race record of 118.433, set in Oct. 1992 by Martin.

Former collegiate standout gives himself 1 final shot at the 'show'

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Herb Brooks gave himself an unusual birthday present — one more chance to play professional baseball.

With four years as a college player at Georgia State and four more seasons as batting practice pitcher for the Houston Astros, Brooks decided to take a leave from his job as a chemist to pursue an alternative career.

He made the decision on Feb. 4, his 32nd birthday, and signed a minor league contract on Monday as a shortstop-second baseman prospect.

"I had hoped the players would be back because I have to be in shape for April (to throw batting practice) when they came back to [illegible]," Brooks said. "Then, it didn't look like they were going to get anything settled.

"Now, I don't know about the situation but I do know I'm here to do whatever I can.

"I don't know the public's feeling but I think anybody who had the opportunity would do this."

It didn't take Brooks long to make a decison.

"It's not a lot of pressure," Brooks said following Friday's practice. "It's just an opportunity to come out and get in shape and hope that baseball gets back to normal.

■ Spring training

"When it's over, if there's no place for me, I'll be happy to go back to pitching batting practice."

On a team that hasn't named any replacements, Brooks definitely fits the profile. He played baseball and earned his degree at Georgia State University and tried our for two springs with the Oakland As and Atlanta Braves before settling into a career out of baseball.

Brooks was a college shortstop and also is working at second base in his first season in pro baseball.

He's one of two players on the Astros roster who have been away from the game for awhile and he's the only one talking about the experience of getting to play again.

Outfielder Ted Milner, who ended a four-year minor league career in 1988, declined to discuss his comeback attempt.

10 Ranger replacements walk out

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — Ten minor league players walked off the Texas Rangers practice field Saturday in protest of plans to use them in exhibition games during the protracted major league strike.

"I let them know I wasn't coming down here to be a replacement player. It can be a bad influence on your career and the rest of your life," catcher Craig Colbert said.

Joining Colbert in the walkout were outfielder Donald Harris; pitchers Dave Geeve, Steve Sadecki and Lance Schuermann; infielders Marty Brown, Mike Edwards, Erik Johnson, Rich Schu and Duff Brumley.

Infielder Trey McCoy walked out, but returned to talk to Rangers' management and said he would let the club know of his decision today.

The players association has said minor league players who participate in exhibition games would be considered strikebreakers.

"I have two years in the big leagues and I respect what the union did for me," Colbert said.

Rangers spokesman John Blake said the players would return when minor league camp begins in mid-March.

Geeve, a minor leaguer who has never played above Double A ball, said: "I consider myself a prospect. I don't feel I deserve to be in this situation. It's not best for my future. I don't know whether they understand my point of view."

Jayhawks win, near Big Eight title

The Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Jerod Haase scored 12 of Kansas' first 14 second-half points and the No. 1 Jayhawks recovered from an ice-cold start to beat No. 14 Missouri 88-69 Saturday and move within one game of the Big Eight title.

Haase, who finished with a career-high 26 points, also ignited the Jayhawks in the first half, scoring nine points in a take-charge 25-4 run that erased a 12-point Missouri lead and restored the momentum to Kansas.

The Jayhawks (21-4 overall, 10-3 Big Eight) swept the season series from the Tigers and need only to beat No. 18 Oklahoma State in their regular season finale next Sunday to replace Missouri as Big Eight champions.

No. 3 North Carolina 80, Florida St. 78

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Jeff McInnis' steal with time running out saved third-ranked North Carolina, preserving a victory that moved the Tar Heels into a three-way share of first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

With two seconds left, McInnis tipped the ball away from Florida State's Bobby Sura, who was trying to tie or win the game for the pesky Seminoles, who were in position for the upset despite never leading in the second half.

Florida State (12-13, 5-10) pulled within two points with 58 seconds left on LaMarr Greer's steal and ensuing 3-point shot, setting up McInnis' end-of-game heroics.

No. 4 Connecticut 75, Seton Hall 61

STORRS, Conn. — Donny Marshall scored 16 points and Ray Allen added 14 as Connecticut put together two runs in the last 12 minutes en route to a win.

The win guaranteed the Huskies (22-2, 15-1 Big East) at least a share of the Big East regular-season title with Villanova (21-6, 13-3), which beat St. John's 74-70.

No. 5 Massachusetts 77, St. Joseph's 58

PHILADELPHIA — Lou Roe was 9-for-10 from the field, scored 24 points and grabbed nine rebounds to lead No. 5 Massachusetts to a victory over St. Joseph's.

The Minutemen (21-4, 11-3 Atlantic 10) pulled away to the win with a 13-0 run after the Hawks (15-10, 8-7) had closed within 53-48 with 7:12 to play. Roe had eight points in the run that gave Massachusetts a 66-48 lead with 3:38 to play.

Sophomore center Marcus Camby played sparingly because of an upset stomach didn't need him as the Hawks struggled from the field throughout the game.

Hakeem's 38 points vanquishes Warriors

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon had 38 points and 15 rebounds and Sam Cassell added a career-high 16 assists Saturday night as the Houston Rockets beat the Golden State Warriors 112-105.

Cassell, who finished with 13 points, keyed Houston's fourth quarter, collecting 10 points — including three 3-pointers — as the Rockets held off the Warriors.

Latrell Sprewell had 30 points and Tim Hardaway 24 for Golden State. Ricky Pierce came off the bench to add 18.

The Warriors trailed by 106-103 with 2:40 left as Sprewell hit a 3-pointer, but Houston's defense took charge, forcing a 24-second violation and a turnover on Golden State's next two possessions.

Olajuwon and Clyde Drexler, playing with five fouls, then hit back-to-back baskets to put the game out of reach. Drexler finished with 22 points.

The Rockets trailed for most of the first half by as many as eight points before a 14-2 run to close out the second quarter, including seven points from Olajuwon, gave them a 58-50 halftime lead. Olajuwon started out 1-for-7 in the game before finishing the first half with 21 points.

The Warriors used an 11-3 spurt in the first three minutes of the second half to pull even at 61-61 before a basket by Olajuwon and a pair of free throws gave the Rockets a 65-61 edge. Golden State tied it again with 3:50 left in the third period but never could regain the lead.

The victory pulled Houston within 3 1/2 games of Midwest Division-leading Utah.

Cavaliers 105, Nets 102

CLEVELAND — Danny Ferry sank the go-ahead 3-pointer with 13 seconds left and scored a career-high 24 points as Cleveland rallied to beat New Jersey.

Ferry also made a key defensive play, blocking off Kenny Anderson's drive to the basket in the closing seconds.

The Cavs won for the fifth time in six games overall and completed a four-game season sweep of the Nets.

Chris Morris scored a season-high 31, including 23 in the first half, to lead New Jersey. Jayson Williams had a career-high 20 points.

Tony Campbell scored a season-high 23 for Cleveland, which played without ailing starters John Williams (flu), Tyrone Hill (broken finger) and Bobby Phills (sore shoulder).

Cleveland trailed for most of the second half until Michael Cage made a layup for a 99-98 Cleveland lead with 1:06 to play.

New Jersey's Derrick Coleman answered with a short jumper, and after Cleveland's Terrell Brandon shot an airball, the Nets tried and missed three shots from close range in heavy traffic.

Ferry then drilled the 24-footer that put Cleveland ahead to stay 104-102 with 12.9 seconds left, and he forced a loose ball by blocking Anderson's drive to the basket at the other end. Chris Mills grabbed the ball, was fouled and made both foul shots for a 104-100 Cleveland lead with 2.8 seconds left.

Cage had 16 rebounds and Brandon 13 assists for Cleveland.

Bullets 102, Kings 98

LANDOVER, Md. — Chris Webber's alley-oop with 9.6 seconds left broke a 98-98 tie and helped the Washington Bullets snap a six-game losing streak.

Webber, who led Washington with 25 points, took a lob pass from Juwan Howard, who was double-teamed in the left corner. Howard finished with 18 points.

Sacramento, which has lost a season-high four straight games, tied the game at 98 with 27.3 seconds left on a 3-pointer by Mitch Richmond, who had 32 points.

But after Webber's dunk, Richmond fouled Scott Skiles as the Kings moved upcourt, and Skiles hit a pair of free throws with 3.8 seconds remaining for the Bullets' final points.

Olden Polynice had 17 points for the Kings, who have lost the first three games of a five-game road trip, their longest of the season, and five straight on the road.

Texas 109, Baylor 75

AUSTIN — Terrence Rencher had 25 points and 10 rebounds and Tremaine Wingfield added 19 in leading Texas to a 109-75 victory Saturday afternoon over Baylor, the Longhorns' 24th straight at home.

The Longhorns (18-6, 9-3) broke open the game in the first half with a 19-1 run, holding the Bears without a field goal for 7:16 on their way to a 51-25 halftime lead.

Roderick Anderson had 17 points and 11 assists for Texas. Its home-court winning streak is second in the country, behind only Coppin State, which has won 30 straight.

Baylor (9-17, 3-9) never got closer than 26 points the rest of the way. Brian Skinner led the Bears with 22 points and 14 rebounds, both career highs. Rodrick Miller added 18 points, and Doug Brandt had 16 for Baylor.

After Baylor took an early 8-6 lead, the Longhorns went on their first run, using good inside play by McIver to take a 25-9 lead.

The Longhorns then went on another 13-5 run, and closed the half with a 9-0 run for a 51-25 halftime lead. Rencher had 14 first-half points.

In the second half, Texas gradually expanded its lead, substituting freely and continuing both its pressing and outside shooting.

They took their biggest lead, 109-68, with 1:06 left in the game. The game was the first after Texas' loss at Texas Tech Thursday night, that dampened their hopes for a SWC regular season title.

Tech trailed the entire first half on Saturday before going on a 17-0 run that sparked the Lady Raiders an 80-70 victory over the Lady Longhorns on Saturday.

Baylor guard Rod Miller (32) dives over Texas' Rich McIvor (44) and Tremaine Wingfield (3) during the 'Horns 109-75 win Saturday in Austin.

Michi Atkins had 31 points and Melinda White had 18 points and 10 rebounds as Texas Tech (25-3, 11-1 Southwest Conference) rallied from a 34-31 halftime deficit and clinched its fourth straight SWC regular-season title.

Nekeshia Henderson had 24 points for Texas (10-14, 6-6).

HOUSTON — Jennifer McLaughlin had 35 points and 11 rebounds as SMU defeated Houston.

The Lady Mustangs (17-8, 8-5 Southwest Conference) shot 63 percent as they rang up the second-most points ever allowed by the Lady Cougars.

SMU jumped to a 48-38 halftime lead, then turned it up in the second half by shooting nearly 65 percent.

Houston (13-12, 7-6) got within 63-62 with 14:01 left, but a missed layup led to a 10-1 SMU run and the Lady Cougars couldn't get closer than five.

Kim Brungardt scored 26 points for SMU and Kerri Delaney added 18. Kim Brandl scored 14.

Pat Luckey led Houston with 25 points, 11 rebounds and five steals. Stacey Johnson and Tanda Rucker each had 15 points and six assists, Fleceia Comeaux had 12 points and Jerrie Cooper added 10.

Rice 73, Baylor 54

WACO — Kristin Mayberry scored 19 points as Rice struggled to a slim halftime lead then pulled away from Baylor.

The Owls (10-14, 6-6 Southwest Conference) led 35-32 at the half despite the Lady Bears (13-12, 4-9) shooting only 23 percent.

Rice made the Lady Bears pay for their cold shooting in the second half by keeping Baylor off the free throw line.

Angie Wilson led Baylor with 10 rebounds and nine points. Tonia Harris had nine points, seven rebounds and three steals.

The Owls were led by 13 points for Kim LaLonde. Tammy McCallum had 12 points, eight rebounds and five assists.

Shutout keeps Lee in playoff contention

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

Midland Lee overcame more than a district rival Saturday in its 1-0 win over San Angelo. The Lady Rebels played with a different lineup yet again and won a game they had to have to stay close to a playoff spot.

With two players in defensive positions they haven't played all year and a forward at a new position for only the third game, the Lady Rebels blocked two penalty kicks and scored on a Christi Johnson shot in the 13th minute for the victory. The win ties them for third in District 5-5A with Abilene High at 6-4 (9-5 overall).

"Anytime you survive two penalty kicks you're fortunate," Lee coach Van Gravitt said. "But I think we deserve some breaks. I'll take it."

Lee played with Kristina Farmer and Leslie Keel at fullback positions for the first time. And Johnson was seeing her third game at forward. The Lady Rebels avenged a shootout loss to San Angelo in the teams' first meeting this year.

"The team had confidence to win this game because we thought we should have beaten them in San Angelo," Johnson said.

Johnson crossed a pass to Jamie Welch in the first half that got past the San Angelo goal keeper for the winner.

"The girls rose to the occasion," Gravitt said. "From the end of the shootout in San Angelo they've wanted a second chance at these guys and they took advantage of it."

The Lady Bobcats (12-5, 6-3) didn't take advantage of their chances. Forward Courtney Appleton missed both of her penalty kicks thanks to stops by Lee keeper Jamie Calhoun. The first in the first half went right at Calhoun and the second Calhoun went to ground to smother in the second half.

"I think they believed they could win (the rest of their games)," Gravitt said. "They were up for this game, and I know they believe they can win out now."

The Lady Rebels outshot the Lady Bobcats only 16-15. But they got their fourth shutout in district play and their third in four games.

"(Sweeper) Crystal Zachry played a great game and (stopper) Jennifer Smith play a great game," Gravitt said. "We needed this one."

Johnson's goal may have come on an attempted pass. But that didn't take anything away from the play.

"She was pushing the ball outside on the right," Gravitt said. "Jamie Welch was there if it hadn't gone in. It was a great play no matter what."

Lee hosts Permian Tuesday before ending its regular season March 4 at league-leading Cooper. Permian fell to Abilene High Saturday to allow the Lady Rebels to jump over them in the standings.

Bulldogs gather split of playoff teams

■ Kermit scores six in extra inning to outlast Midland High 10-4 in home opener.

By Bill Petitt
Sports writer

The Kermit Yellow Jackets rolled into the big city to face a Class 5A team with one of the area's top pitchers in junior lefthander Conde Montez.

Montez silenced a Midland High Bulldog offense that had scored in double figures in their first game of the season — and the two scrimmages prior to that — with a nasty breaking ball and elusive fastball. And the Yellow Jackets opened their season with a 10-4 win over the Bulldogs at Christensen Stadium Saturday afternoon.

MHS rebounded to capture a 12-8 decision over Big Spring, a Class 4A state finalist a year ago, in the nightcap of a twin bill.

The split leaves Midland at 2-1 on the year while Kermit improved to 2-0 record after a win over the Midland junior varsity later in the day. Big Spring drops to 1-1 on the year.

Early season miscues cost MHS the win in the first game as the 'Dogs tied the game at 4-4 when they scored two runs off four hits in the sixth, but could not bring home the winning run in the sixth or seventh innings.

Clay Johnston led off the inning with a single and following an out, Keith Lant, Craig Coleman and Jeremy Kimbell hit consecutive singles. Senior outfielder Roy Coats, who was being used as a pinch runner for Lant, was thrown out at home plate on a relay from left field by catcher Kyle Davis.

In the seventh, shortstop T. Stewart hit a single with one out but was caught stealing after missing the signal from coach Lew Kennedy.

"We made a couple of base running boo-boos and we didn't get the key hit when we needed them," said Kennedy.

Montez, the most valuable player in District 8-3A a year ago after compiling an 11-1 record, held MHS to just three hits over the first five innings, but grew weary in the later innings when the Bulldogs made their run.

For Midland, starter Sammy Alvarado allowed four runs, all earned, in two innings of work before reliever Heath Grizzle came in to work six innings. He held Kermit, 18-9 and District 8-3A champs a year ago, to one hit over the first five innings before allowing a leadoff triple to Arnold Navarro in the ninth to ignite the Yellow Jackets six-run rally.

Midland had nine hits in the game, all singles. Johnston went 3-for-4 with Stewart and Kimbell collecting two hits.

the Golden Sandies early, but would roll later to hang to second place in the team totals, distancing themselves from Odessa Permian by six strokes over the day. It was a performance excited MHS golf coach Aubrey Culley and his players, considering all of District 4-5A were at the tournament.

"It's going to be a good moral boost for the team," Culley said. "All these tournaments are a preparation for district. Maybe we can take another step up."

"Looks like we're getting together," Carey Gentry, who tied for eighth, said. "It makes me feel better about district. It taught us we could beat every team in district."

Also playing well for Midland High was Josh Jacobs, whose 151 was good for fourth place, overall. Jacobs, who could never get the putter working the whole weekend, is optimistic about the future.

"We have all the teams in regionals and we beat them," Jacobs said. "I hit the ball great, but I just couldn't putt it."

Midland Lee brought two golf teams to the tournament, but just could get either one quite on track. Despite the team performances (Lee I finished eighth and Lee II finished 13th), saw flashes of brilliance that Lee golf coach Bobby Dunn hopes will translate to better performances later in the season.

"We were not real consistent," Dunn said. "That's what we are striving for. The more kids that play the better our program will get."

Louganis' coach takes different posture on issue

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Seven-time Olympic coach Ron O'Brien on Saturday said he would handle the issue of diver Greg Louganis' HIV infection differently now.

O'Brien did not inform the U.S. Olympic Committee team physician at the 1988 Olympics that Louganis had the virus that causes AIDS.

The Fort Lauderdale Diving Team coach spoke for the first time since Louganis revealed Friday night on ABC News' 20-20 that he has AIDS, the Sun-Sentinel in Fort Lauderdale reported for Sunday's editions.

O'Brien and Louganis' personal physician were the only ones who knew Louganis had tested HIV-positive four months before the Olympic Games. O'Brien said he would do the same thing again if confronted with a similar situation, only he would tell the attending physician.

"I consider the relationship confidentiality between coach and athlete the same as a lawyer and client or doctor and patient," O'Brien said. "The one thing I would change is ... if it happened again in a heated battle, I would tell the doctor."

O'Brien kept the promise he made Louganis in March 1988 that he would not tell anyone, not even his wife, of the diver's illness. He also honored the former University of Miami and Mission Bay diver's wish that he not discuss it until the 20-20 interview aired.

USOC team physician Dr. Jim Puffer and Dr. Ben Rubin, the U.S. Diving team physician, had only 20 minutes to close a bleeding wound on Louganis' head after he hit it on a 3-meter springboard during preliminaries. When Louganis exited the pool after the dive, O'Brien wiped away blood that had trickled down the diver's neck so as not to alarm anyone.

HONORS: 13 city players earn all-district to claim their first postseason berth since 1992 and continue a long line of Lee playoff tradition.

Lady Rebel senior post Krissy Woodard ended her three-year varsity career with a first-team nod for the second consecutive year making it three appearances on the team because of her second-team selection as a sophomore.

But a new sophomore emerged for the Lady Rebels in 1995. Forward Jamie Rhoads was named the Newcomer of the Year and will be back to help Lee in their attempt to return to the playoffs in 1996.

Also for Midland, junior point guard Ogonna Merritt earned first-team honors in her first year on the Lady Dawg varsity.

Abilene High, who finished in second place ahead of Lee, got the most first-team selections with senior Tasha Newman leading the way. Newman, a 6-0 post, was the top newcomer in 1993 and a first-team selection last year. Also on the first team for the Lady Eagles were juniors Julie Massey and Jamie McDaniel.

Odessa Permian and Odessa High, who tied for fourth place, garnered two first-team selections each. Permian's 6-3 senior post Angie Braziel makes her second appearance on the first time and was joined by teammate Machiec Crawford, a senior guard. For Odessa, senior post Donelle Jones made the team while point guard Linda Garcia joined Rhoads as one of only two sophomores on the first team.

Season provides learning curve for Cowboys' Switzer

By Will McDonough
N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — Every time he thinks about it, he has to laugh because it hurts so bad.

"It's still hard to accept," says Barry Switzer, "that the biggest game of the year — the one we pointed to all season, the one we had to win to get to the Super Bowl — we play our worst game of the year.

"We get six snaps of the football and we are down, 21-0. It was a comedy. I started laughing on the bench because I was so frustrated."

The Cowboys coach won't forget that 38-28 loss to San Francisco in the NFC Championship game for some time. The disappointment was great, but the loss was not total.

"As bad as the start was, no one quit," says Switzer. "We never gave up. We always tried to get back in the game, and if the official made the right call, we would have been back in the game. That one cost me $5,000 because I jumped all over him. It was pass interference. But they wouldn't make the call in San Francisco against Deion Sanders. That wasn't going to happen."

Despite not taking the Cowboys to their third straight Super Bowl victory, Switzer is at peace with himself after nearly a year of tumult. Last March, Cowboys owner Jerry Jones reached out to him on short notice and brought him back from coaching limbo to replace Jimmy Johnson.

"It has been a great year for me," says Switzer. "It really has. It is a tough situation when you have to inherit a coaching staff, but the coaches here were great to me. They made the transition easy for me, and I allowed them to coach.

"When you first become a head coach, moving up from an assistant, it is hard to take the headset off and turn it over to the assistants. It happened to me at Oklahoma, but gradually I stepped away and let the coordinators do what they should be allowed to do — coach. Eventually, this will happen to guys like Norv Turner (at Washington) and Dave Wannstedt (Chicago), who still wear the headsets. Norv is an offensive guy and he wants to stay involved in the offense. Dave is the same way on defense. But, eventually, they'll get away from it and they'll see the same things."

SOFTBALL: Lee wins first-ever league tilt led off with a walk and that set the tone. Catcher Amee Pullen then followed with a single to left field which looked to be catchable until the wind blowing in from the outfield knocked it down in front of the MHS defender.

Another walk to Stephanie Gentry loaded the bases and Suzanna Reed drove the ball up the gap between first and second to score Murphy and Pullen giving Lee a 2-0 lead.

Lee has now outscored MHS 21-1 in their two contests but a Lady Rebel win was not assured until the big fifth and coach J.C. Gotcher said he was relieved to escape with a win.

"They're (Lady Bulldogs) real competitive and I'm glad to get this out of the way," said Gotcher. "She (coach Culwell) has done a great job of coaching those girls. They are so young."

The Lady Rebels, who finished with 11 hits, finally had the Lady Bulldog pitching staff on the ropes in the fifth, however, and they took advantage of it.

With no outs and runners on first and second, Lee right fielder Christian Lance loaded the bases on a successful bunt attempt. It looked like the MHS defense might hold, however, as Lee pitcher Emily Hayes flied out to second and Shelton struck out April Rice. But a wild pitch sent Stephanie Gentry across the plate for a 3-0 lead.

Then Lee's Adrian Nobles worked over Shelton with a long at-bat which included several fouls out of play before finally straightening it out for a deep drive to right center field. The MHS outfielders got their wires crossed and neither came up with the play as Reed and Lance came around to score to put the Lady Rebels up 5-0. Midland finally ended the inning on a fly out but the damage was done.

Lee added two more runs — one each in the sixth and seventh — as Pullen drove in a run with a single and Nobles got her third out-of-the-park home run in three games.

"We've got several long-ball hitters and we would have tagged the ball a lot more if it weren't for that wind blowing into the outfield," said Gotcher. "But they (Lady Bulldogs) had to deal with that too."

Despite the loss, Culwell sees improvement in her team's ability to hit against Lee's ace Hayes, who improved her record to 5-0 by giving up only four hits and striking out four.

"I feel great about the game," said Culwell. "For us to come out hitting against Hayes shows we've improved."

Midland, whose only score came in the bottom of the fifth, is the only team to record any hits against Hayes, who has thrown three no-hitters already this season. She pitched both wins over the Lady Bulldogs.

The Lady Bulldogs scored by taking advantage of the only Lady Rebel error as Jennifer Thompson stretched a single to second base when the throw got away from Lee first baseman Nobles.

Then MHS first baseman Jessica Moss advanced to Thompson to third on a sacrifice bunt before Jenifer Neatherlin drove in Thompson on a fielder's choice. But Hayes shut down MHS the rest of the way facing only the minimum six batters to go the distance.

"They have improved against Emily," said Gotcher. "But I can understand that because they know who's going to be pitching and they're determined to swing because they know Emily's not going to walk anybody."

Lee and Midland, who have been picked by the district's coaches as the favorites to finish 1-2 in league play, resume 6-5A play Tuesday. The Lady Bulldogs travel to Abilene Cooper while Lee hosts Abilene High at Bill Williams Complex. Both games are set for 4 p.m.

BULLDOGS: Irvin dashes return to Austin can't get into a half-court game like this one. It also got very physical and we can't play that kind of game. We had some advantages taken away from us. And again we didn't shoot well (22 of 54 from the field)."

Irvin held MHS' leading scorer Jumon Hailey to just 17 points and only six in the second half. Hailey, averaging more than 21 points per outing, was just five-of-19 from the field after burning the nets for three treys in the first period.

Guard Cornelius Mitchell had 12 points and Lavius Taylor had 10 for the Bulldogs. But it wasn't as much the lack of points as it was a lack of rebounds. Irvin took many trips down the floor with two, three and four shots at the basket. The smaller Bulldogs paid the price.

"Rebounding was a big key," Castillo said. "Clanton (14 rebounds) and (Jose) Escobedo (15) controlled the boards. We thought we should be able to do that in this game."

Irvin will play cross town rival Riverside in the region quarterfinals Monday or Tuesday here in El Paso. Riverside defeated Lubbock Coronado 61-59 in Midland Saturday. Riverside and Irvin have not met this year, but one of them will be headed to Midland next weekend for the Region I tournament. Midland High won't be in attendance this year.

"I'm still very proud of these kids," Stephenson said. "We've won something like 67 games in the last three years, and when you do that, you've got something going.

"Still, I hurt for these seniors. We think we will be just as good or better next year, so I have another chance to come back and do this again. These seniors don't, and we're just like family here."

Freshman helps Texas to 13th straight title

AUSTIN (AP) — Freshman Michelle Schroder won three gold medals helping Texas easily win its 13th straight Southwest Conference women's swimming and diving championship Saturday.

The Lady Longhorns scored 1,002 points, well ahead of the 776 points for second-place Southern Methodist. Texas A&M was third at 546.5, followed by Rice at 424.5, Texas Christian with 329 and Houston 314.

Texas has won every SWC women's meet since its inception. The 1,002 points was the highest since 1992.

"That was pretty good for us," Texas coach Jill Sterkel said. "We came in knowing we had a chance at 1,000, but it meant we had to do well (in the prelims) and we did."

■ SWC Swimming

Schroder led a gold-silver sweep for Texas in the 200-yard breaststroke to earn a tie for high-point swimmer honors with SMU junior Sandra Cam, who also won three golds.

Cam won her third gold in the 1,650-yard freestyle with a NCAA automatic-qualifying time of 16: 12.04. She had previously won the 400-yard individual medley and the 500-yard freestyle.

The high-point honor "was in the back of my mind," said Schroder, "I knew I had a shot, but it wasn't foremost in my mind."

Both swimmers automatically earned spots in three events at the NCAA Championships, to be held at the Texas Swimming Center March 16-18.

Robin Carter of Texas won the platform diving competition to earn high-point diver honors. Carter beat teammate Sherry Wigginton to take her second gold of the meet, adding to her 3-meter diving title.

Texas put any faint SMU hopes of a title away in the next event. Darby Chang won the 200-yard backstroke in an NCAA automatic-qualifying time of 1: 57.27.

SWIM: Sanchez sets meet record

(From 1C)

"That's the race of the day right there," Swendig said. "Angela shouldn't even be in her (Stroman's) league, and to beat her record is unbelievable. I'm shocked. That's what good about these meets. Somebody always does something good like that."

And plenty of Lee and MHS swimmers and divers did something good Saturday. Stroman set district marks in both of her events, as did Midland High's Howard Flowers. The Lee girls, who more than doubled second-place San Angelo's 57.50 points with 126.50, set 4-5A marks in the medley and 400 relays.

The meet proved both Lee's girls and MHS' boys are well on their way to repeating as Region I champions.

Even with that, Sanchez' 100 breast swim stood out.

"We've known she's been right there close and we've been waiting for her to explode and it happened today," Lee and MHS coach Ted Carson said. "It was a remarkably good swim."

Especially considering Sanchez' thoughts the night before Saturday's finals. Friday the Lee sophomore swam a 1: 12.76 in the meet preliminaries and her previous best had been around 1: 11.9.

"I told her last night, 'Angela, just do a 1: 10,' " said Angela's mother, Cruz Sanchez. "And she said, 'Oh, Mom, I'm pretty nervous. I don't know if I could do it.' "

But she did even more. Or, as Sanchez' teammate Joi Goodwin put it in congratulating her, "That swim was so awesome."

One of many awesome swims.

Stroman set marks in the 200 individual medley (2: 08.90) and the 500 free (5: 07.84).

The Midland High girls finished tied for third (43 points) with Margaret Ann Brown the high-point swimmer. Lee's boys just missed third with 77 points to San Angelo's 80. The Midland High boys had 111 points even with one of their top swimmers, Blake Johnson, hurting with the flu.

"The majority of our kids are not shaved and tapered so the times they had are good," Carson said. "It tells me once we get rested, once we get everybody shaved I think we're going to see some incredible swims."

'Angela shouldn't even be in (Stroman's) league, and to beat her record is unbelieveable.'
— Brad Swendig, COM club coach.

The Lee girls won two of three relays with all sophomores and juniors.

"We knew we could do well here but we're really looking forward to doing better at regionals in two weeks when we're more rested," said Lee's Candice Apperson, who swam on the record-setting relays.

Flowers was concerned he wouldn't do well in the 100 backstroke because of his showing in the 200 IM, which was slower than he had been used to even with his district mark of 2: 01.22. But he broke the backstroke record with a 53.14. He has high hopes for the region meet in two weeks.

"We lost a lot of people from last year and I thought this season would be a lost cause," Flowers said. "But we've turned it around and made a lot more out of it than I thought we would."

Lee's Carl Walker led his school's boys' team, winning the 200 and 500 freestyles. But he hopes to swim better times at the region meet.

"In both my events I got out ahead and i just kind of slowed down and didn't have anybody to push me," Walker said. "When we get to regionals and everybody's shaved and tapered they'll be somebody there to push me."

The In diving, Midland High's Sarah Vaughan won the girls event with a 391.85 score and seven points.

Stroman best summed up Lee and Midland High's efforts. "Nobody swam awful," she said.

EL PASO — Midland Lee's Raymond Martinez connected for a single, a double and a triple as the Rebels poured on 14 hits to defeat El Paso Andress 12-3 and win the championship of the Ysleta Tournament here Saturday.

Martinez, who also drove in two runs, helped Lee to an early 4-1 season record after they fell behind 2-0 in the first inning.

Justin Ham drove in three runs for Lee and connected on a double and Lance Watters was two-for-two from the plate with a double. Mike Phillips also drove in two runs.

Crippled Lee falls to San Angelo

SAN ANGELO — San Angelo scored four straight goals here Saturday to beat Midland Lee in a District 5-5A soccer game. The Rebels were playing without three starters out with penalty cards and one starter out with an injury. They fall to 4-6 in the league with the loss but still are only one game out of the third place finish needed for a playoff spot.

Lee suffered another injury blow in the game when sophomore forward/midfielder Adrian Castresana went down with a broken lower leg in the first half.

"We were playing real well together and it was 2-1 at the half," Lee coach John McCulloch said. "(But) our defense made some mistakes and we had some new guys and some guys moved up from the JV."

The Rebels scored first when forward Kyle Smith was assisted by Brandon Doty in the third minute. But San Angelo (8-8, 4-5) got two goals from Billy Johnson, one from Jerrod Gladden and a penalty kick from Chad Luther to go up 4-1 by the games 49th minute. Lee came back with a Doty penalty kick. But the Bobcats scored on goals by J.D. Sickle and Jeremy Scott to go up 6-2.

Lee closed out the scoring with Sean Svoboda getting his first score of the year with an assist from Doty in the 73rd minute.

The Rebels play at Odessa Permian Tuesday.

"They (Amarillo) played in the rain better than we do," said Lee coach Phyllis Sutton. "They are playing very well. I lost a lot of players from last year but as a beginner team, they are as good as any team I've had at this point."

Lee plays three sophomores in addition to the two seniors Christin Sutton and Betsy Brininstool.

Midland High's top scorer was Robin Dameron, who shot a two-day total of 98-93—191.

Jason Brooks of Georgetown finished second by shooting 2-under on the final nine holes. Evan Little was third with 1-under on the back and Jason Garduno, from Monahans, was fifth with 1-under on the back. Andrews' freshman Derrick Pursley shot even on the back but did not finish in the top five.

Big Spring tennis cancelled

BIG SPRING — After Friday's competition in the Big Spring Boosters tennis Invitational, Midland High was winning in the point standings over District 4-5A rival Odessa Permian. The matches, however, were postponed until Saturday due to inclimate weather. Non-stop rain, however, forced the cancellation of the match.

Carrie Geltemeyer was to play in the girls singles final and the duo of Kevin McIlvain and Bryan Sheffield were to play in the boys doubles final. In boys singles, Nathan Lawrence was to play a semifinal match in the main draw in order to advance to the boys singles final.

"Odessa Permian was the only team who had a chance to catch us in the point standings for the team title," said MHS coach Tom Heiting, "but we would have had to lose almost all our matches and we were playing too well for that to have happened."

Also for Midland, Sarah Innerarity and Elizabeth Britton were to play for fifth place in the girls doubles while Brie Eben and Katherine Gieb were to play for sixth. In girls singles, Kallie Kerr was set for a seventh place match. Terrell McDonal was to play for the consolation title in boys singles while David Castle and Nick Nichols were set for the fifth place match in boys doubles.

Midland travels to Odessa on Friday and Saturday.

Rangers even mark with win

Andy Watzl had three hits and two RBIs Saturday to pace the Greenwood Rangers to a 7-1 win over Slaton. Watzl, 1-0, threw a four-hitter over six innings and had a double. The Ranger junior varsity also won, 4-1.

Greenwood broke out to a 3-0 loss in the first inning. K.C. Otho, Rusty Purser, Michael Otho and Blane Moody also had mulitiple hits for the Rangers (1-1). Greenwood plays at Seminole Monday.

MHS JV drops game with Kermit

Chad Villarreal's two-run, third-inning homer pulled the Midland High junior varsity to within a run of the Kermit varsity Saturday. But the Bulldogs fell 7-6 in the game played at Zachery Field in Midland.

Villarreal was on the mound for Midland and threw three strike outs in six innings. Kermit scored two runs in the bottom of the second for a 2-0 lead. Midland's Mike Carrasco had a double and the Bulldogs' Russell Dunlavy, Hector Morales, Eric Clark and Daniel Christenson also had hits.

Lee pitches no-no for M. Christian

HAWLEY — Midland Christian's Colby Lee pitched a no-hitter as the Mustangs defeated Jim Ned 10-0 at the Hawley baseball tournament on Friday near Abilene.

Lee also went 3-for-3 from the plate with five RBI while Allan Awtry had a home run and Patrick Hughes had a double.

Also on Friday, MCHS fell to Stamford 13-11 as Awtry went 3-for-4 with a double and Lee hit a home run. Cory Patteson was 2-for-3 with two stolen bases while Hughes was 2-of-3 with a home run and four RBIs.

MCHS, 1-2 for the season, was the play Hawley on Saturday but the game was rained out. The Mustangs host Loraine at Ernie Johnson Field on Tuesday.

REGION: Arlington avoids letdown for win

before fouling out. "Besides, we were so tired. The game ended at 10:30 (p.m.) and we didn't get out of here until 11 and we didn't get back to our rooms until 11:30. So we fell right asleep by about 12."

It would have been understandable for the Lady Texans to come back to Chap Center flat. After all, it was their first appearance in the regional tournament since 1985 and just to make it to the finals would have been a good point to build on with talented junior Lynn Pride coming back for next year.

And the Trinity Lady Trojans had already been turned back in the regional final when they fell last year to eventual two-time state champion Amarillo High. Plus, Trinity expended virtually no energy in defeating El Paso Irvin in the first semifinal on Friday in what was one of the least emotional playoff games of the season. The basketball gods surely would not deny the Lady Trojans a second-straight time.

But because of their expert advice from Clyde, the exact opposite happened. Instead of being the more vitalized team, Trinity could not find the answer to beat the Lady Texans for the third time this season.

"That might have been a factor," said Johnson. "We had to scrap to win that first game and it got our juices flowing. But if you can't get up for the regional final, you're in trouble. I know (Trinity coach) Sue (Cannon) had her kids ready to play."

The smaller Lady Trojans matched points with Sam Houston throughout the fast-paced first quarter and matched them when it slowed down in the second, trailing only 26-22 at halftime.

But the Lady Texans stepped up their defense and held Trinity without a field goal until 4:17 to play in the third and on offense they were surprisingly effective from outside even though their strength lies near the basket. Pride, who also scored 19 for Sam, hit two 15-footers and guards Christy Schlottog, Lynette Jones and Nikki Pete all connected on outside jumpers to pace the Lady Texans to a 45-33 lead heading into the fourth quarter.

Then, just like in the win over Midland, the Lady Texans hit their free throws down the stretch for the win and their first-ever state tournament berth. Sam Houston hit nine-of-14 from the line in the final eight minutes.

Trinity coach Sue Cannon could only complement her counterpart Johnson for preparing a different game plan to try to even the score between their teams.

"She's done some different things with the basketball since we've beaten them," said Cannon. "And with those changes they were able to beat us. You know she did her homework."

Trinity ended its season with a 29-8 mark.

Class 2A power captures team award

WACO (AP) — Goldthwaite, which defended its Class 2A high school football title and reached the championship for the third straight season, was chosen Saturday as the state's outstanding team.

The Eagles will be presented with the Gordon Wood Trophy next Saturday at the Texas High School Football Hall of Fame inductions banquet.

Alamo Heights coach Gaylard Fenley also will be honored that night as this year's recipient of the Tom Landry Award for the outstanding coach.

The players in the 1995 class of inductees are Noble Doss of Temple, Maco Stewart of Corsciana, Mike McClellan of Stamford, Bill Atessis of Houston Jones, Joey Aboussie of Wichita Falls and Jerry Gray of Lubbock Estacado.

This year's class of coaches being inducted are Darrell Tully of Spring Branch, Jesse Bolles of Lufkin and Felton Wright of Ballinger.

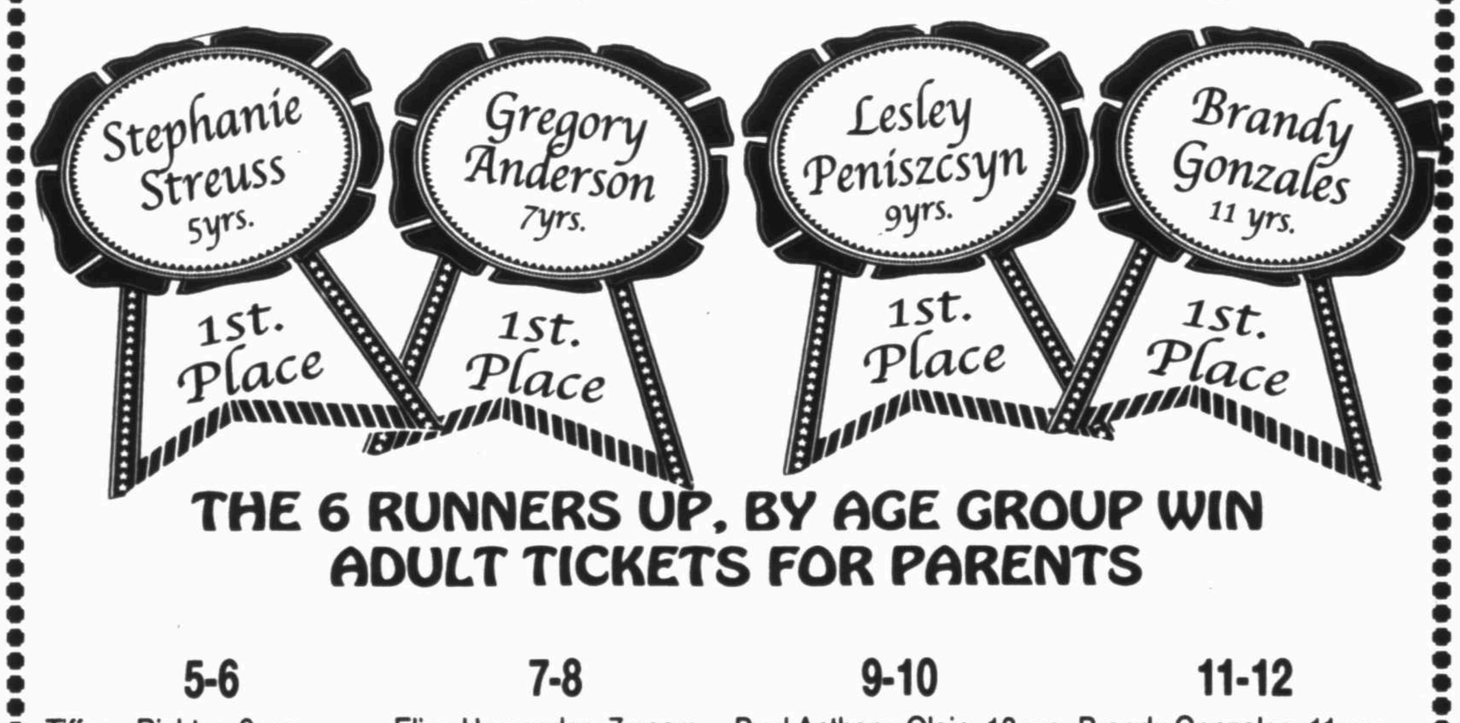

Goldthwaite capped a 15-0-1 season with a 20-7 victory over top-ranked Schulenburg in the state finals. The Shorthorns beat the Eagles 35-20 in the 1992 title game.

Goldthwaite got a scare in the area round when it trailed Riesel 14-7 with less than a minute to play. Keith Cockrum threw a touchdown pass to J.T. Aldridge with 42 seconds left, a kick tied it and the Eagles advanced 3-2 on penetrations.

HOMES
& Classified

The Door is Open

When a builder creates a home for himself, one can be fairly sure that it is going to contain some interesting and original features.

This charming, four bedroom, three bathroom family home is certainly no exception. Set in a quiet part of Northwest Midland, it is far enough away from major roads to be very peaceful, but close enough to major shopping areas to be very convenient.

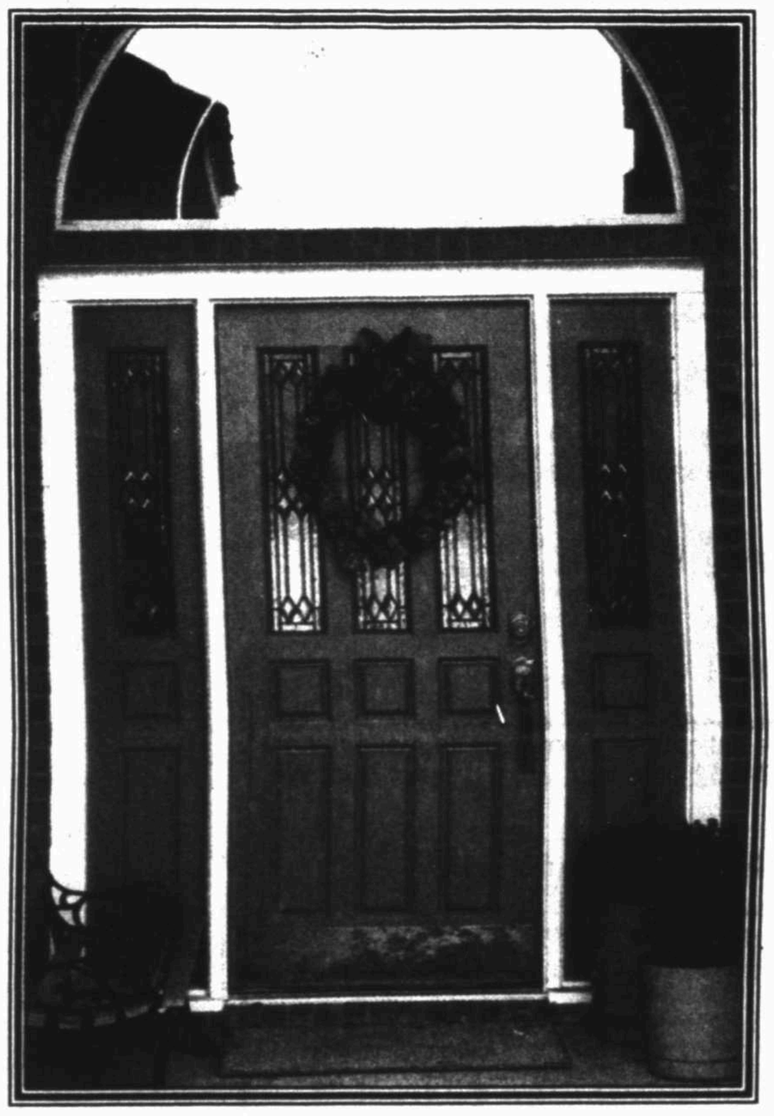

Set on landscaped grounds with two separate yards it offers a two-car garage, parking pad and a circular driveway. It is however, the interior that really makes an impression. No part of the house is more dramatic than the combination of living and dining rooms. Softly lit by large, decorative windows, the feeling of space is increased by the unique, triple pan ceiling. Wood accents on the ceiling add to the continuity of the room by reflecting the tones of the built-in bookshelves, entertainment center and the earth hued brick fireplace.

The kitchen, which leads off from the family room, offers everything one would expect from a house of this calibre: elegant wood cabinetry, a moveable center island, a plethora of built-in appliances and masses of counter space. The room acts as the hub for a lot of family activity in this house because it is of an open plan design, sharing space with an informal sitting area and breakfast nook, both of which look out over the side yard. Tiled for convenience, the kitchen also boasts a large walk-in pantry and a separate utility room.

Listed at $129,900 by Ruth Young, Remax of Midland, this house is full of custom touches such as window treatments and the marble tub in the master bathroom.

The whole sequestered master suite reflects an air of elegance with its bookshelves and built-in desk. The elegance is only matched by the practicality of the suite: the master bathroom is wonderfully laid out, with masses of storage space in two closets and double vanities.

Home ownership offers more advantages than shelter

Ruth Young
Re/Max of Midland

One of the greatest freedoms in our country is the right to buy, sell, and own private property. Often referred to as "The American Dream", a home is usually the largest financial investment of a lifetime. Because of its importance in our lives, let's take a look at the benefits of home ownership.

SHELTER

Unlike all other capital investments, the home satisfies one of our basic needs for shelter. Shelter means more than keeping us secure from the natural elements. It also assures us the right of privacy which guarantees our individual freedom. The old saying that equates a home to a castle is quite accurate in that home ownership allows us to live our lives according to the preferences of our own lifestyle, provided restrictions on building and use of property are followed.

PRIDE OF OWNERSHIP

The free enterprise system is one that rewards success. Traditionally, a home is one of the most significant signs of success. The obvious pride that one feels in owning a home is one of the great emotional and psychological rewards for attaining some degree of success in our society. This feeling of pride is continually nurtured as home owners upgrade the quality of homes they own.

TAX ADVANTAGES

Despite many changes in the Internal Revenue Service tax laws, home ownership continues to provide unique tax advantages for ownership of a primary residence and a second home. Mortgage interest and property taxes are allowed to be deducted from regular income before tax computations on a primary residence. Ownership of a second home provides these same tax advantages plus depreciation allowances if the property is rented to a third party.

PROFIT POTENTIAL

Unlike other investments, where you make a return only on the amount of money invested, home ownership allows you the opportunity to obtain a return on both invested and borrowed money. This technique, known as leverage, provides a unique method for every homeowner to enhance his or her net worth.

Corporations commonly require radon testing prior to real estate transactions

Peggy Strong, CRS, GRI
Chaparral Realtors

In continuation of our environmental issues for residential real estate, I appreciate the clarification and technical information as supplied by Texas Consulting Services. Today, we will discuss radon . . . what, where, and why is it and what to do about it???

Radon is a naturally occurring, odorless, colorless, chemically nonreactive gas. Radon finds its way into the lungs either as a gas or attached to fine particulates. In terms of how many cases of cancer it is estimated to cause each year, radon is among the most dangerous of toxic substances in the U.S.

Radon usually enters the home from the soil beneath the foundation or from well water. Since homes are usually poorly ventilated, the major source of exposure is from indoor air.

Lung cancer is the primary threat from radon. The best estimate is that about 10% of all cases of lung cancer in the US are caused by indoor radon. Smokers are more susceptible to radon exposure than non-smokers.

Many hardware store shave kits for testing for the existence of radon. These are inexpensive and easy to use. Our area, fortunately, is in one of the lowest areas of risk to radon. It is a commonly required test for corporate real estate transactions.

Several options are available to those who have high radon levels. The basements or crawl spaces of most houses have slightly lower air pressure than does the soil beneath, and this speeds up the rate of radon entry. One remedial step is to install proper venting to the outside. An air blower can be used to pressurize the basements and crawl spaces. Walls in houses are treated the same way, by increasing the ventilation to the outside air. A heat exchanger is commonly used to take the heat from the exhausted air and warm the incoming cooler air in winter. Sealing cracks in the foundation has not been shown to be an effective means of controlling radon.

Since testing for radon is so inexpensive and easy, it makes sense to test your home and put away any fears of the unknown. Gig'em!

Real Estate Facts . . .

"Law of Agency" provides concept of representation

Vicky Garrett
Chaparral Realtors

What do real estate "agents" do? Who do they represent? What is the meaning of the word "agent" in the contest of real estate?

Real estate is practiced under the "Law of Agency" - a concept in which one party, the "agent", represents the interests of another, "the principal". Their relationship is said to be an "agency relationship".

In the past, real estate brokers have most often acted as the representative of the property owners, the sellers. As the sellers' agent, the broker acts on their behalf, and with their best interests in mind, to locate a suitable buyer for the property.

When the broker represents the sellers, buyers must be treated honestly and fairly, however they are not "represented" by theat broker. Keep in mind that the sellers' agent - the broker - must be always faithful to the sellers' best interests (not those of the buyer).

The concept o. agency is an important one to buyers also. Most buyers are not "represented" by an agent. Their buying decisions are made using factual information presented to them by the sellers or their "agent", the real estate broker.

Can buyers be "represented" by an agent? Yes. This relatively new concept, called "buyer agency" is quickly becoming more common. To gain representation in their purchase, the buyers may employ a broker to represent their interests. This broker becomes their "agent" and has the obligation to faithfully serve the buyers.

What's the real message about agency? Both buyers and sellers should know whether or not they are represented in a real estate transaction. Your real estate professional will explain in detail how the process will work.

As an informed buyer or seller, with factual information in hand, it is possible to make a good real estate decision. Learn the facts about agency relationships before you buy or sell.

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1995 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

More rigs were up and running this past week, Baker Hughes reports.

Drilling improves

Drilling activity increased for the week ended February 17, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count rose nine rigs to 115 for the week and is above the year-ago level of 98.

Lea County, N.M. remains the most active in the Basin with 18 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 15 rigs and Crockett County with nine rigs.

Nationwide, the rig count rose 18 to 724 for the week but remains below the year-ago count of 752.

Union Supply buy

Union Supply Co. of Midland has acquired Jim Woods Pipe & Supply of Odessa.

Jim Woods Pump & Supply is a full-line supply company furnishing supplies to the oil and gas industry. The acquisition will be merched with Union's existing store at 3334 Kermit Highway. Jm Woods will be the store manager.

With 15 stores and one sales office, Union has served the Basin's oil and gas industry since 1939.

Pipe connections lie on the floor of a drilling rig.

Prices weaken

Oil prices weakened during the holiday-shortened week, a sharp contrast to the previous week when oil prices closed just shy of the $19 level, boosted by concerns about tightening supplies..

Late in the week, April contracts for delivery of West Texas Intermediate closed at $18.43 a barrel, the posted price at $17 a barrel.

Prices fell both on the expiration this past week of the March contract and followed gasoline prices, which fell sharply on expectations six Wisconsin counties would be allowed to suspend mandated sales of reformulated gasoline.

Natural gas prices closed at $1.46 per thousand cubic feet.

Pipeline purchase

LAKEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — K N Energy Inc. announced Thursday it has finalized its previously announced $80.1 million purchase of natural gas pipeline and gas storage facilities from Meridian Oil Inc. in Texas.

The purchase of the Morgan Creek and MoTrans pipelines in West Texas is part of K N Energy's strategy to continue to build up its pipeline system.

"K N Energy has been very pleased by the expression of interest from customers on these pipelines and by the potential growth opportunities these pipelines offer," said Larry D. Hall, K N Energy's president and chief executive officer.

Floyd Oil raises stake in Basin

By John Paul Pitts
Business/ Oil Editor

Floyd Oil Co. of Houston has substantially increased its stake in the Permian Basin with the purchase of Conoco interests in eight fields in the Basin. The acquisitions will add 775 barrels of oil daily and 750 Mcf of gas, nearly doubling the company's daily production.

Among the properties acquired are: interests in the Vacuum and Vacuum West fields in Lea County, New Mexico. There are a number of operators in the field, including Texaco, the largest, and Conoco. Joseph A. McClintock, Floyd Chief Financial Officer, said the acquisition of 103 wells operated by Conoco.

Other significant properties in the package include: 10 wells in the TXL field in Ector County; 16 wells in the Fullerton field of Andrews County; 26 wells in the Howard - Glasscock field of Howard County and 95 wells in the Garza field in Yoakum County. Smaller interests include wells in the Lusk field of Lea County and the Ownby field in Yoakum County, as well as an interest in the Velma field in Stephens County, Oklahoma. The purchase was effective August 1, 1994 and operations were transferred on February 1.

Said McClintock: "Floyd's net daily production from the Permian Basin now

API reports decline in products

WASHINGTON - Unusually warm winter temperatures in January resulted in a 2.3 percent decline in deliveries of petroleum products for the month, the American Petroleum Institute reported in its "Monthly Statistical Report."

The API also reported that imports of petroleum products fell almost 25 percent in January to 1,473,000 barrels per day, the lowest level for any month in nearly four years.

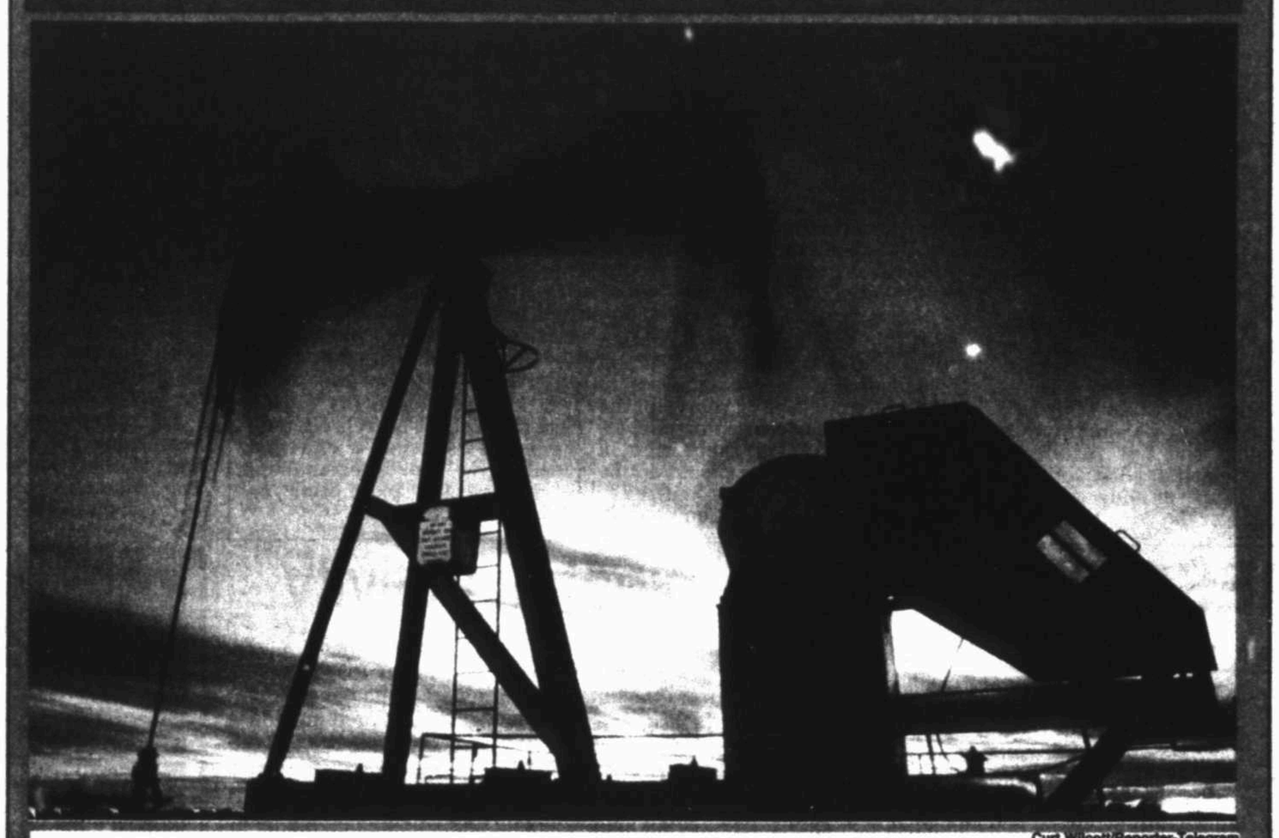

At the same time, domestic crude oil production fell 2 percent.

Nationally, temperatures in January were 13 percent warmer than normal for January and 20 percent warmer than the severe cold of January 1994. This change cut 350,000 to 400,000 barrels a day from heating oil demand compared to January a year ago and 150,000 to 200,000 barrels a day from propane demand. Residual (heavy) oil use also declined 390,000 barrels a day, principally because of reduced heating and electric generation demand.

At the same time, the favorable weather and winter driving conditions increased gasoline demand, an effect estimated to have added 1 to 2 percent to January deliveries of gasoline.

OIL AND POLITICS

A pumpjack works doubletime. New legislative incentives could keep marginal wells working double overtime, if passed in Austin and Washington D.C.

Proposed laws may aid industry

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

A cache of new laws being introduced in Austin and Washington D.C. could bring a breath of relief to Permian Basin oil producers.

In Austin State Representative Tom Craddick (R-Midland), chairman of the House Republican Caucus and the House Committee on Ways and Means, has introduced a package of legislative measures he says is designed to strengthen the Texas oil and gas industry and provide relief to Texas consumers.

The legislative package includes:

HB 676: This measure would provide needed tax relief for byproducts of oil and gas wells which have been returned to active status after three or more years of inactivity. This bill strengthens a similar measure which was passed during the last legislative session by adding condensates to the tax relief provision.

HB 683: This measure would provide an incentive to drill new wells and continue production from marginal wells. The bill authorizes the Texas Railroad Commission to issue "chits" to operators of new wells for each barrel of oil equivalent of average daily productive capacity for the new wells. These chits could then be used to obtain a permanent exemption from the oil and gas severance taxes for hydrocarbon production from certain marginal oil or gas leases.

HB 684: This bill would grant a permanent exemption from oil and gas severance taxes to hydrocarbon production from certain marginal oil leases. Currently there is not tax relief provision for oil or casinghead gas produced from a marginal oil lease. Approximately 8,000 oil wells are plugged and abandoned each year in Texas, effectively losing the reserves potentially producible from these wells. This measure would provide an incentive to reactivate these wells.

HB 704: After August 1995, there will be no incentive in either oil or gas severance tax laws for production from inactive wells brought back into production. This measure would encourage the reactivation of marginal wells by granting a permanent exemption from oil and gas severance taxes for production from a lease which has been inactive for two years and which resumes production between August 1, 1995 and September 1, 1997.

HB 838: Since oil and gas are commodity products and sell in commodity markets, there should be no difference in price from county to county. However under the current tax code, appraisal offices in each county are

Federal laws target energy industry

Federal legislators speculated that meaningful energy legislation would not be brought to the table until after the first 100 days of Congress and the basics of the Contract with America were underway.

But now, as the first 100 days of the 104th Congress nears the midway mark a number of new bills have been introduced that should have a positive impact upon the oil industry.

Here is a summary of energy legislation compiled by the Association of Oilwell Servicing Contractors.

HR 9 — This, of course, is the "Contract with America" bill. While it is not directly an energy bill it does have a number of ingredients that will be helpful to the oil industry. The bill is designed to create jobs, strengthen property rights, reduce the power of government and increase accountability of federal officials.

HR 70/S 70 — This legislation which calls for an end to the ban on Alaskan North Slope crude oil exports would put an end to the glut of oil on the West Coast and improve oil prices for California producers.

HR 577/S32 — Also in committee, this law would amend the tax code of 1986 to provide tax credit for production from marginal and new wells.

HR 578/S34 — One of the most inequitable taxing

Report finds reserves declined in final quarter 1994

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Domestic reserve values declined in the fourth quarter to a median value of $4.50 per barrel of oil equivalent from the revised third quarter value of $4.58. This slight decline follows a three-quarter rise in values.

The decline was reported in Houston-based Strevig & Associates Inc.'s Quarterly Reserve Report issued this month.

Domestic reserve values showed consistent improvement through the first three quarters of 1994, ending with a slight decline in the fourth quarter, unlike the roller coaster ride of 1993. While quarterly median values were up for the year, uncertainty still exists as to wellhead price.

Fierce competition in the market continues to be the dominant factor in the minds of operators and investors alike, as seen in the increasing trend of prices paid for reserves. Aggressive independents continue to battle for the big deals. Consolidation is becoming a prominent feature of the market, with more likely to come.

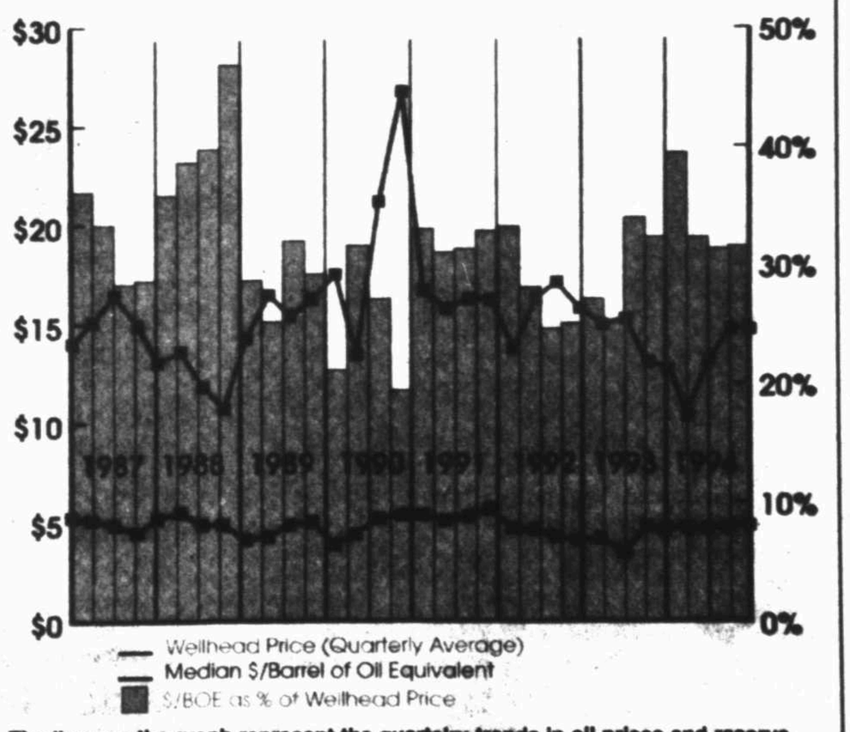

The fourth quarter median was derived from 64 transactions, a 19 percent increase from the revised number of deals, 54, closed in the third quarter.

The aggregate value of transactions was $831 million, a 13 percent decline from the revised aggregate of $958 million traded in the third quarter. There were two deals completed that equaled or exceeded $100 million and two that fell in the $50 to $100 million range. All others were below the $50 million mark. Eight of the 64 deals represented 72 percent of the aggregate value traded.

For the entire year, the median price paid was $4.50 per BOE, up less than 10 percent from the 1993 median of $4.14. The number of transactions reported decreased slightly from 245 in 1993 to 226 in 1994. The aggregate value of the transactions was $3.4 billion, down slightly from $3.8 billion in 1993. Eight transactions, compared to six in 1993, equaled or exceeded $100 million. This comprises approximately 47 percent of the aggregate value of the transactions. Transactions ranging from $20 to $100 million totaled 26, leaving approximately 82 percent of the transactions concentrated under the $20 million threshold. The average transaction size was $18.4 million during 1994.

Modest growth remains dominant with the average deal just under $18 million and over 80 percent of the transactions falling under the $20 million mark. Over allowed to develop an average price for oil and gas interest for ad valorem tax purposes. This bill would allow the state comptroller's office to determine the average price for oil and gas for each day of the year, creating uniformity across the state.

AID: Measures promise incentives

HB 942: This measure would provide a competitive incentive to increase oil and gas production in Texas by enacting a limited exemption from the oil and gas production taxes for oil and gas wells using horizontal drilling technology. Existing Texas production incentives, such as those for enhanced oil recovery, reactivated wells and high cost gas recovery, have been estimated to account for 945 million barrels of additional oil and gas producing over $1.8 billion in tax revenues to the state. The total economic benefit to Texas is estimated to be $41 billion. By adding the exemption for horizontal wells, Texas will realize substantial additional tax revenues as well as the creation of new jobs within the oil and gas industry.

HB 1237: The use of 3-D seismic technology is one of the best tools available for promoting increased oil and gas activity within the State of Texas. The technology is environmentally sound and has resulted in an increased drilling activity. This measure provides a tax credit against the severance tax on oil and gas production in connection with the use of 3-D seismic technology.

HB 1238: This measure would provide an incentive to increase oil and gas production in Texas by providing an exemption from the oil and gas production taxes for incremental hydrocarbons produced from certain enhancement projects. While current incentives already are in place, additional incentives are needed to attract Texas investment in additional production enhancement activities.

"These eight measures will provide the Texas oil and gas industry the incentives that it needs to increase production and remain competitive in the national and global economy," Craddick said. "At the same time they benefit Texas consumers by allowing tax savings which can be passed on directly to them. These measures will also allow the creation of much needed jobs in the oil and gas industry, a benefit especially important to Midland, Reagan and Glasscock counties."

Craddick said HB 836 would help to eliminate certain inequities in the taxing of oil properties. "For instance, if an oil company pays more for its own oil for bookkeeping purposes, but pays market price in another county, it should not be penalized by taxing entities." Under the bill the Comptroller would set the an average price across the state. Operators would be able to use that price or its own price if they could show that it was different.

Since 3-D seismic has been so successful, Craddick said the purpose of HB 1237 was to inspire and encourage additional use of the expensive technology. The same logic applies to exemptions sought for enhanced oil recovery projects and horizontal drilling.

One of the most successful programs in the last incentive package passed 18 months ago was a bill that gave credits for restoring to active service , wells had been inactive for three years or more.

"This program returned millions of dollars to the state in new production, jobs and economic activity, and HB 636 is just an extension of that incentive," said Craddick.

So far the most popular bill proposed for this session is HB 683 which would provide chits on new wells that could be applied to marginal wells, Craddick said. "This is the bill that has the industry excited and the one that Barry Williamson, Chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, is particularly proud of."

If an operator drills a well that produces 10 barrels per day, he would be issued a chit that would give him a permanent severance tax exemption on marginal production.

AGA revamps organization

ARLINGTON, Va. - The American Gas Association has announced a restructuring of its organization that will better focus the association on the priorities of its membership, according to AGA Chairman Robert Catell.

"The first step in this re-engineering process is the selection of three group vice presidents who will direct the missions identified by AGA's Long-Range Planning Task Force as the association's highest priorities - advocacy, information gathering and dissemination, and demand growth," Catell said.

The three group vice presidents are Roger Cooper, Jay Copan and Richard Kolodziej.

In addition, AGA President Michael Baly has been elected chief executive officer and AGA Vice President and Treasurer Kevin Hardardt has been named chief financial officer.

Cooper, currently AGA's deputy general counsel, will oversee the advocacy and analytical functions of the association. The government relations group and the policy and analysis group will report to him.

Copan, currently vice president, industry finance and administration, will serve as group vice president for member programs and financial relations. In addition to retaining responsibility for the Financial and Administrative Section, Copan will supervise the operating and engineering services group and the international affairs group.

Kolodziej, currently an AGA senior vice president, will coordinate the activities of the marketing services group, the advertising division, the communications group and the consumer and community affairs group.

In addition to directing the budget and financial management of the association, Hardardt will also oversee the implementation of the Long-Range Planning Task Force's recommendations.

totals 1,700 barrels of oil and 1,450 Mcf of gas, and we are looking to buy more." He said the company was not a seller of production. He said proved reserves acquired total approximately 3.1 million barrels of oil and 3.2 billion cubic feet of gas.

Floyd is a Houston-based independent engaged in the acquisition of long life properties located chiefly in the onshore areas of Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma. Its activities are funded primarily by institutional investors.

Floyd has acquired approximately $182 million in properties since 1986, and has total net daily production including the Conoco acquisition of 2,900 barrels of oil and 33,600 Mcf of gas.

Aquila buys Brazoria properties

HOUSTON - Aquila Energy Resources has acquired 100 percent working interest in three wells located in the Southwest Danbury field of Brazoria County for $7.7 million.

The interest includes proved reserves of 9 BCFE and probable and possible reserves of 5.8 BCFE. The acquisition complements an ongoing Gulf Coast strategy and is adjacent to Aquila's 3-D seismic shoot over the Danbury Dome field. Aquila will extend the shoot to include the 1,600 acres added by this acquisition. Aquila plans to continue actively pursuing acquisitions and drilling opportunities in its core areas of operations.

RESERVES: Gas dominates activity

20 percent of the transactions involved properties with good potential for additional development and/or exploitation. Over 32 percent of the transactions involved an acquisition or merger that significantly strengthened an independent producer's position in a particular area. Eight transactions involved major oil companies, up from four during the third quarter. With the Apache/Texaco transaction set to close in march, Unocal is the only major remaining with a significant property package on the market.

Natural gas is still the favored product, dominating 74 percent of the number of deals in the fourth quarter. In terms of actual reserves traded, gas accounted for 79 percent of the reserves. The median price paid for transactions involving a significant amount of natural gas was 75 cents per Mcf, a one cent decline from the revised third quarter median of 76 cents per Mcf.

Natural gas also dominated throughout 1994, representing 67 percent of the number of transactions and 70 percent of the total reserves traded, up from the 1993 calculations. The median price paid for transactions involving a significant amount of natural gas was 74 cents per Mcf, an increase of 3 cents from the 1993 and 1992 values. Not since 1991 have the quarterly medians for gas reserves stayed at or above the 70 cent per Mcf mark for the entire year. Activity in natural gas reserve purchases eased the decline in the median price paid on a BOE basis. The median price paid for gas-dominated transactions - gas representing over 50 percent of the reserves - was $4.50 per BOE, whereas the median price for oil-dominated transactions was $3.26 per BOE. For the fifth consecutive quarter gas dominated transaction median values have exceeded those of oil dominated transactions.

The ratio of reserve values to wellhead prices in the fourth quarter yielded an above average 32 percent compared to the historical 30 percent, depicting a market in favor of the seller for the sixth consecutive quarter. The market eased in prices paid for both oil and gas reserves, however the 1994 fourth quarter median is approximately 10 percent higher than the 1993 fourth quarter median. There were several large transactions announced during the fourth quarter not reflected in the numbers due to the fact that transactions are not included in the report until a closing takes place.

Gasoline deliveries amounted to 7,219,000 barrels a day, up 4.4 percent.

Distillate deliveries (home heating oil and diesel fuel) amounted to 3,468,000 barrels a day down 6.1 percent.

Residual fuel deliveries averaged 876,000 barrels per day, down 30.9 percent.

Crude oil production averaged 6,625,000 barrels a day, down 2 percent from a year ago.

Imports of crude oil and petroleum products averaged 8,075 ,000 barrels a day, up 2 percent.

Refineries operated at 91.6 percent of capacity.

Total inventories of crude oil and petroleum products at the end of January amounted to 1,046,200,000 barrels, down 2 percent from December.

Untapped natural gas reservoirs lie underneath world's oceans

By N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — Enormous, untapped quantities of methane — more natural gas than the United States has used since the turn of the century — may lie locked in marine sediments off the Carolina coast, geologists said Monday.

Although the full extent of the deposits is uncertain, a major exploratory drilling program scheduled to begin this year off the coast of Charleston, S.C., could give scientists their first detailed look at a potentially vast new source of energy for the future.

Worldwide, deposits of gas hydrates — crystalline solids that contain large amounts of gas — are conservatively estimated by the U.S. Geological Survey to hold twice as much energy as the world's known reserves of fossil fuels — oil, coal and conventional natural gas — researchers said at a conference of the American Association for the Advancement of Science on Monday in Atlanta.

Outwardly, gas hydrates look very much like ice. But University of North Carolina geologist Charles Paull said that because hydrates are solids, formed under extreme pressure, they contain up to 200 times as much methane as the same size reservoir of conventional gas. They also appear to be widely distributed throughout the world.

"Hydrates do not exist in the reservoirs of Texas and the Middle East because temperatures are usually in excess of 70 degrees," he said. "But almost every section of the ocean bottom has the kinds of temperatures and pressure that are suitable for their formation."

In an effort to learn more about hydrates — and how they might be extracted from ocean sediments — researchers this year plan to zero in on two areas on the continental shelf east of Charleston that appear to contain extremely high concentrations of hydrates — the Carolina Rise and the Blake Ridge, which stretches as far south as the coast of Georgia.

Starting in October, a consortium of scientists from 16 countries aboard the ocean drill ship JOIDES Resolution will punch a series of carefully planned holes into the ocean bottom 40 to 70 miles off the Carolina coast.

Because the Carolina deposits lie nearly a mile beneath the surface of the ocean — and because they can't simply be pumped out like oil and gas — the cost of extracting large quantities of energy could make them uneconomical.

Even if they can be recovered, researchers agree, large-scale production from such deposits is still decades away.

Because hydrate deposits also occur under the frozen tundra of Siberia, small quantities of natural gas from hydrates have already been tapped by Russian gas wells. Because they clog Russian pipelines built to transport conventional gas, they have often been treated more as a nuisance than a resource.

But interest in new sources of energy, however difficult exploitation may seem at first, is heightened by the fact that sources of natural gas — those on land and in shallow water — are being steadily depleted.

"Methane trapped in marine sediments as hydrate represents such an immense carbon reservoir that it must be considered a dominant factor in any estimation of unconventional energy resources," says William Dillon of the U.S. Geological Survey. "We can't say for sure what contribution they will make yet, but it is important for us to learn how hydrates form and what factors control their concentration in certain locations."

In addition to the sheer size of the resource, however, other characteristics of methane make gas hydrates even more attractive.

Because of its chemical structure, methane releases small amounts of carbon when it is burned — a feature that makes it environmentally more benign in a world increasingly concerned about the buildup of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, which many scientists believe is leading to an increase in global temperatures.

Dresser reports lower profits in quarter, reflecting impact of slower project activity

DALLAS (AP) — Profits dropped for Dresser Industries Inc. in the first quarter, reflecting slow new project activity in pipeline and hydrocarbon processing markets, the company said.

For the three months ended Jan. 31, Dresser had profits of $22.6 million, or 12 cents per share, on revenue of $1.3 billion. The results include a one-time charge of $16 million for an accounting change.

The company earned $195.3 million, or $1.08 per share, on $1.4 billion in revenue in the first fiscal quarter of last year. The year-ago results include a $147 million gain from the sale of interest in Western Atlas and an $11 million gain in an investment related to a Mexican affiliate.

Operating profit was $89 million vs. $131.9 million in the year-earlier period. The decline also reflects the sale of Dresser's M-I Drilling Fluids business, the company said.

"Overall, the first quarter was slightly ahead of our internal plans," said John Murphy, Dresser's chairman and chief executive officer.

"As expected, we felt the impact on earnings of the low levels of new project activity in pipeline and hydrocarbon processing markets over the past 12 to 15 months. There are clear signs of an upturn under way, however," Murphy said.

Bookings and backlogs are better for hydrocarbon processing and engineering services, and bidding for planned projects is high, "reflecting the impact strong economic growth is having on demand for petrochemicals and refined hydrocarbons in developing and developed economies alike," Murphy said.

Dallas-based Dresser supplies engineered products and services used in hydrocarbon energy-related activities.

New features to highlight Houston's annual Offshore Technology Conference

RICHARDSON, Texas - The offshore industry is on the move, both technologically and geographically. Nowhere is this trend better reflected than in the international exhibition and technical program for the 1995 Offshore Technology Conference set for May 1-4 in Houston's Astrodome U.S.A. Complex.

More than 30,000 professionals from some 80 countries throughout the world are expected to attend the 27th annual OTC, to share information and ideas, and to see the latest technologies, equipment and services from the 1,300-plus exhibiting companies.

Expanding offshore technical capabilities and geographical operating arenas, and the challenges associted with both, are recurring themes in the conference's 49-session technical program, whose highlights include two general sessions and three keynote technical addresses.

The technical program opens May 1 with seven concurrent sessions. The opening block of sessions cover a range of topics, from subsalt exploration and platform construction and deisgn, to prospects and chalklenges for flotaing production and storage systems and a report on the Oman-India gas pipeline.

General sessions on May 2 and May 3 will address the key issues involved with deepwater developmetns and offshore potential in the Asia-Pacific.

A new feature of the technical program will be the OTC Active Areana, where the OTC will focus special attention on an emerging technology or geographically active offshore arenas. This year's program will highlight South America with special sessions May 3 on activities in Brazil and Venezuela.

Texaco plans to increase 1995 spending

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. - Texaco Inc. announced that it plans to boost its 1995 capital and exploratory spending program by more than 20 percent to approximately $3.3 billion, an increase of nearly $600 million over 1994's $2.7 billion program.

Approximately 55 percent of the company's program is targeted for international development and 45 percent for domestic programs. While two-thirds of the investments this year are directed to maintaining and improving the profitability of Texaco's core businesses, fully one-third of the budget is aimed toward high-impact new business growth opportunities. "This capital and exploratory spending program fully reflects our determination to expand upon our core activities and aggressively pursue attractive opportunities around the world to grow shareholder value in 1995 and beyond," said Texaco Inc. Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Alfred C. DeCrane Jr. "We are focusing our investments on profitable opportunities where Texaco has a core competency or a business presence that we can leverage."

The increase in Texaco's spending, noted DeCrane, is linked directly to the initial success of its plan for growth, announced last July. Proceeds from the sale of 300 scattered, underperforming producing fields in the U.S. and the sale of its worldwide chemical activities will be redirected to growth opportunities around the world.

Upstream expenditures are channeled toward a worldwide risk-balanced exploration program, while expanding production in core properties. Among the key upstream projects targeted are:

- Continuing offshore developments in the North Sea, such as the Captain field; the Dolphin gas field in Trinidad; offshore West Africa; and in the Partitioned Neutral Zone between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

'Revolution' hits oil and gas companies, electric utilities

By GREGG JONES
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — Are oil companies an endangered species? Is the battered natural gas business in for better times? Is there a revolution under way at your local electric power company?

It's an annual rite of passage in the energy business to ponder such questions. And 1995 is yielding some provocative prognostications.

Some industry experts and executives are proclaiming a new era in which solitary, self-sufficient oil and natural gas companies will eventually become extinct. Survivors will have to forge broad alliances, inside and outside the energy industry, to flourish. Companies that adopt new technology and ideas the quickest will gain a critical edge on rivals.

"'Know thine enemy' might have worked in the past," Joseph Stanislaw, managing director of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, told nearly 700 energy executives in Houston a few days ago. "'Know thy friend' is the key to the future."

Companies will have to find innovative ways to gain market share in emerging markets — or lose business to competitors. For instance, if Exxon can't carve out worthwhile opportunities to find and produce petroleum in, say, Vietnam, the Irving-based corporation could try to establish a business beachhead in that booming market by building a power plant or a refinery.

In this new energy world, profit margin — not commodity prices — could dictate company decisions. That would be a marked departure from a mindset in which oil and natural gas prices have traditionally shaped corporate strategy.

"Being lean has been a condition for survival in a difficult environment," said Franco Bernabe, managing director and chief executive of the state-owned Italian energy giant, ENI SpA. "But companies now need to focus again on growth."

Gazing into their crystal balls, energy executives and consultants see natural gas and electric power as possible areas to achieve that growth.

Although no one is predicting the demise of oil, cleaner-burning natural gas has been crowned as the fossil fuel of the future. But that day hasn't arrived just yet, and there could be more bumps in the road for companies betting their future on natural gas.

Perhaps the most dramatic changes in energy will occur soon in electric power. Deregulation and competition are in the wind in the United States, and even industry stalwarts such as Texas Utilities and Central and South West could face uncertainty.

The bottom line, say forecasters, is that consumers don't care what energy source runs their cars, heats their homes or powers their appliances. In a world awash with competing sources of energy, companies will have to win their customers, country by country, one at a time.

"A generation ago, small inefficient producers could stay in business by selling products such as gasoline or lube oils in small or regional markets," said James Dunlap, senior vice president of Texaco Inc.

"Today, there are few isolated markets. Companies compete worldwide and customers shop worldwide. And only the strongest and most efficient companies can make it."

Until recently, OPEC was the center of the oil universe. An increase in production by the 12-nation cartel could push world crude prices — and oil company profits — down.

But over the past year or so, OPEC has emerged as a model of stability, maintaining steady production of about 25 million barrels a day.

Now non-OPEC producers are stealing the spotlight.

Millions of barrels of new production, particularly by non-OPEC countries in South America and the North Sea area, are pushing the world's oil supply upward, even with the collapse of the Russian oil industry. Other factors will continue to send production higher: Technological advances have cut development costs, and new production techniques have increased the amount of oil being recovered from older fields.

The result: Even though oil demand is rising everywhere except the former Soviet Union, crude prices should remain below $20 a barrel for the foreseeable future. That's good news for consumers but bad news for producers.

"We're pretty much in a holding pattern as far as oil prices are concerned," said Dennis O'Brien, chief economist for Caltex.

There could be a brief upturn in April, when North Sea production is reduced for maintenance, but prices will settle back by summer, he said.

Ann-Louise Hittle, world oil director at Cambridge Energy Research Associates, foresees oil prices averaging between $17.75 and $18 a barrel this year, assuming that the United Nations doesn't allow Iraq to resume exports in 1995. If Iraq does resume exports — and that seems unlikely — prices could slip to an average of $16.75 to $17 a barrel, she said.

On the refining side, margins aren't expected to improve much, if any, this year. The worldwide demand for gasoline is forecast to rise 1.5 percent in 1995, but global production capacity will rise 5 percent.

Some of the biggest changes in the oil business are expected in marketing.

"You've got to go out and find a market," said Stanislaw, the Cambridge Energy analyst.

Texaco, for one, has forged marketing alliances with Burger King, McDonald's, Taco Bell, Subway and Dunkin' Donuts, and is rapidly expanding the "co-development" concept.

A Weatherford, Texas, Burger King/convenience store/Texaco station that opened in the fall is doing a brisk business. Service station revenues are running 13 percent ahead of projections, said Joby Humphrey, spokeswoman for Star Enterprise, a joint venture of Texaco and Saudi Aramco.

"Customers love this," said Ms. Humphrey. "It's almost like a shopping mall concept. We basically feed off each other's business."

On the corporate front, some industry experts believe the successive waves of downsizing at oil companies may have run their course. Some oil companies will cut more jobs, but the strategy may have reached the point of diminishing returns, industry experts said.

"We have to prevent a lean company from becoming an anorexic company," said Bernabe, the ENI chief executive.

Stanislaw agrees. Cost-cutting was necessary, he said, but some organizations "may have destroyed the next generation of the company. The cost-cutting culture of the 1980s and '90s will be put aside as companies focus on obtaining the maximum value from their human resources."

Natural gas may be the fuel of the future, as many in the energy industry like to say. But when is that future going to arrive?

For much of the 1980s and early 1990s, natural gas producers suffered through a period of pitifully low prices. Last year, as surging demand for natural gas finally soaked up years of excess supply, it looked as though the recovery was at hand.

But a year later, the market is flooded with natural gas again, and the spot price has fallen about 30 percent. That has many gas producers worried.

"In the long run, natural gas will win," O'Brien, the Caltex economist, assured producers in Dallas a few days ago. "But we may be out of business by then."

In the meantime, natural gas producers will have to take solace in all the talk of a promising future.

"Natural gas has become — or is becoming — the fuel of choice in many markets, particularly in the Far East and Latin America," said Roger Beach, chief executive officer of Unocal Corp. "It's relatively clean-burning and an excellent source of electric power generation."

The global explosion of natural gas consumption shows no signs of slowing. Liquefied natural gas plants around the world are being expanded. And long-term projects to develop vast natural gas discoveries, such as the Natuna project being undertaken by Exxon and the government in Indonesia, are under way.

The growth in electric power demand in the United States and overseas will be a boon for natural gas — gas-fired plants are cheaper and easier to build and thus are filling a growth share of new-power generation. But that, too, is occurring slowly.

"The bottom line is that the short-term demand for gas will increase only modestly," said Jerry Langdon, president of Republic Gas Corp. in Houston. "But long-term demand will increase as new generations come on line."

In the short term, natural gas prices could start to recover as companies reduce exploratory drilling and cut production.

Michael Phelps, chairman and chief executive of Westcoast, Inc., a Canadian natural gas company, said he's confident the current low price of gas "is not going to continue very much longer." He foresees a nominal spot price of about $1.90 in 1996 and $2.30 the following year.

MEETINGS

Petroleum Accountants schedule meeting

The Petroleum Accountants Society of the Permian Basin will meet Tuesday at the Petroleum Club.

The meeting will begin with a technical session at 5:30 p.m. The session, entitled "We're Broke But It's Not the Geologists' Fault" will be presented by Gary R. Jackson, CPA. The session earns one hour continuing education credit.

Social hour will begin at 6 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:45 p.m. Dinner speaker will be Ernest Angelo, who will speak on "Politics In the Oil Industry."

WTGS members host BEG geologist

David L. Carr will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's meeting of the West Texas Geological Society. The meeting will be at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Carr will present a paper he co-authored with Bob A. Hardage and Virginia M. Pendleton entitled "Sequence Stratigraphy, Structure and Sandstone Reservoir Distribution in the Boonsville 'Bend Conglomerate' Gas Field, Fort Worth Basin."

Operators efforts to optimize gas production from Pennsylvanian sandstones in the Midcontinent region have long been frustrated by complex stratigraphy, discontinuous reservoir facies, mixing of clastic and carbonate lithologies and a scarcity of cores and modern log data, the three note. As part of a BRI/DOE-sponsored research team developing technologies to overcome these problems, they applied sequence stratigraphic concepts to the reservoir architecture of Atoka "Bend Conglomerates" in the prolific Boonsville gas field.

WeCTOGA holds annual meeting in Abilene

Munn will discuss the new Naturally Occurring Radioactive Materials rule passed by the Railroad Commission and Lilley will speak on "Rabid Environmentalists and Endangered Liberties."

Speaker at the noon luncheon, to be held at the Abilene Civic Center, will be Carole Keeton Rylander, newly elected to the Railroad Commission.

Torch Energy declares cash distribution

HOUSTON - Torch Energy Advisors Inc., as sponsor of Torch Energy Royalty Trust, has announced a cash distribution of 70 cents per unit payable March 10 to unitholders of record on February 28. This cash distribution is for production attributable to the fourth quarter of 1994.

Unitholders will also be entitled to tax credits under Section 29 of the Internal Revenue Code for coal seam and tight sands gas produced and sold during the period associated with this quarterly cash distribution. The estimated tax credit associated with this cash distribution is 11 cents per unit.

Torch Energy Advisors reported that production attributable to the underlying properties, excluding Robinson's Bend field, was 3.09 billion cubic feet of gas and 61,708 barrels of oil during the period associated with this quarterly cash distribution. The quarterly production from the underlying properties in Robinson's Bend field was .98 billion cubic feet of gas or .25 billion cubic feet of gas above the .73 billion cubic feet volume limitation to which the trust is entitled.

Revamping tankers to cost less

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Avondale Industries Inc. hopes the cutting torch will chop the cost of converting oil tankers into double-hulled carriers required by federal law.

In the aftermath of the Exxon Valdez spill in 1989, Congress decided that single-hull tankers were not good enough to operate in U.S. waters, leaving petroleum carriers with two costly alternatives: all-new tankers or expensive conversions.

Avondale officials say they believe they have cut the cost of conversions and hope a $143 million contract with American Heavy Lift Shipping Co. will prove it.

Four of the company's tankers will be sliced in two. The original fore section of the ships, where petroleum is carried, will be hauled away and replaced by new double-hulled sections. At the same time, the bridge and engine area of the stern section will be overhauled.

Ron McAlear, head of Avondale's marketing, said the ships will be the first U.S.-flag tankers built by an American yard in eight years — and will be the first U.S.-flag ships to qualify under the Oil Pollution Act of 1990.

Another federal law restricts domestic coastal shipping to U.S. flag ships operated by U.S. crews and built in U.S. yards. Crude-oil supertankers that operate internationally are being built abroad with double hulls at prices well below those of U.S. yards.

WHAT A LITTLE DOLL

TEXT BY LINDA ANDERSON

What do ladies in ball gowns, sleeping babies and little girls in old-fashioned dresses have in common? They are all porcelain dolls who live at Midessa Porcelain Dolls, the shop owned by Elisabeth Horne, president of the Society of Permian Basin Doll Artisans.

Mrs. Horne has been enamored with porcelain dolls — their creation, clothing and display — for more than a decade.

Tea for two is the setting for these two Victorian dressed procelain dolls on display at Midessa Porcelain Dolls.

"My husband and I own a ranch," Mrs. Horne said. "One day he said to me, 'Why don't you get a hobby and get out of my hair.' " On that day in 1983, Mrs. Horne's love affair with porcelain dolls began.

At that time, she said, no one in the area had any equipment or supplies for making porcelain dolls, and nor were there any teachers living in the area to help her learn how to make them.

"I called my cousin (who was a porcelain doll maker already), and she said it was too expensive to get into without proper training." So Mrs. Horne found some out-of-the-area experts who taught her the craft. Eventually she found herself with a master's degree in porcelain doll making, "and I'm working on my Ph.D.," she said.

When she completed her training and began making porcelain dolls, Mrs. Horne said she found several other people in the area who were interested in the same thing but didn't know how to get started. "At that time we had no teachers or supplies in the area," she said, so she began teaching others who shared her craft, "and the first thing I knew, I was in business."

Society of the Permian Basin Doll Artisans has grown out of that shared interest.

Although a fairly new in the Permian Basin, porcelain dolls and their creation have been in existence for hundreds of years. "Some date back to the 1400s and come out of China," Mrs.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Couple showered with pre-nuptial festivities

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

After a honeymoon to New Zealand, Stirling Warren and his bride, the former Anne Harkrider, will make their home in Victoria. They were married Saturday evening at The Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. The bride's parents, Carolyn and Hugh Harkrider, hosted a reception afterward at Midland Country Club.

McKnight-Harrison

Pre-nuptial festivities began in Midland last December when the bride's parents and the groom's parents, Carole and Johnny Warren, co-hosted an engagement party at the Warrens' home.

Additional parties that weekend included a kitchen shower at the home of Susan Askins and a Honey-Do shower held in the Midland Country Club Hideaway. Hostesses with Susan were her daughter, Kendall Collins; Susan (Mrs. Jack) Eiteljorg, Leslie Whitsit and Martha (Mrs. D.E.) Poss. Host couples for the latter party were Nadine and Tom Craddick, Linnie and Art Donnelly, Sharon and Gene Floyd, Sue and Dan Secker and Sandra and George Staley.

A bar shower was given in Austin last November by college friends of the couple, both of whom are University of Texas graduates.

Festivities continued this weekend with a Thursday night party at the home of Kathy and David Childress. The other host couples were Patricia and Martin Allday, Polly and Ferrell Davis, Susie and Don Evans, Donna and Ted Fergeson, Bettye and Don Jones, Karen and Tim Thompson, and Nancy and Woody Woodman.

A bridesmaids luncheon was held Friday in the home of the groom's parents. Hostesses were Stirling's sister, Mary Pat (Mrs. Jim) Nelson and his sister-in-law, Lynn (Mrs. Rick) Warren. That evening, the groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner at Midland Country Club.

The home of Patti and Watson LaForce was the location for the wedding day luncheon. Other hosts were Nancy and Robert Vineyard, Kaye and Bill Franklin, Carol and Bob Boyd, Barbara Way and Diana and Ed Weyman.

A brunch is being held today at the Warrens' home for the wedding party and out-of-town guests.

CONGRATULATIONS TO Martha Floyd, who recently celebrated her 75th birthday.

Mrs. Floyd was honored on Feb. 15 by her daughter, Brenda Gray of Arlington. with a party at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Held in the club's lounge, the party featured baskets of flowers, balloons and a large birthday cake. Approximately 50 friends joined in the celebration.

AMANDA BROOKS recently was elected to the office of formal rush coordinator of the Alpha Phi sorority chapter at Texas Tech University. The daughter of Midlanders Marilyn and Morris Brooks, Amanda is a sophomore pre-med major.

MIDLAND WAS WELL REPRESENTED at one of the most unusual and beautiful weddings of the winter season in Houston on Feb. 4.

Native Midlander Christopher L. DeVault, grandson of Ruth and S.T. "Buddy" Miller and nephew of A. Lee Miller, all of Midland, was married to Dominique Movsessian at St. Matthew Lutheran Church in a late afternoon ceremony.

The groom is the son of Jan and John L. DeVault of Houston, formerly of Midland. The bride, born in Tehran, Iran, is the daughter of Stella Bartholomew and granddaughter of Vartoi Sarkisian.

Representing the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia at the wedding and reception was Princess Sari al Faisal of Riyah, Paris and London.

A formal seated dinner and dance were held at the Omni Inn of the Park Hotel after the wedding ceremony.

The bridal gown, made and designed in Paris, was an eight-month project and incorporated handsewn pearls and precious stones. The Italian-style sanctuary was beautifully decorated for the ceremony, which combined elements of both Protestant and Armenian services.

In addition to the groom's grandparents and uncle, other Midlanders enjoying the festivities were his cousins, Scott Monette and Jeff Monette; William D. Hays III, Helen and Judge Ray McKim, Ray McKim III and Linda and Ron Aaron. Former Midlanders present were Bill, Ann and Chris Kithas and Scott Shaeffer, all of Houston.

After a honeymoon in Rome, the newlyweds will reside in Houston. Both recent graduates of St. Thomas University, they will pursue graduate degrees in psychology.

DOLLS: Craft is relaxing, addictive

(From 1G)

Horne said. "It (porcelain doll making) is now the fastest-growing hobby. It has surpassed stamp collecting. Some antique dolls sell for thousands of dollars." She knows of some dolls that have been valued at $1,000 per inch of height.

Mrs. Horne said she has created somewhere between 500 and 600 dolls in the past 12 years, and still loves her hobby-turned-profession as much as she did when she started.

Evelyn Hadley, secretary of the doll artisans organization, explained the attraction as "addictive. I can start 'playing dolls,' as my family calls it, and deciding what to sew for them, how I want to paint (their features) ... I have my sewing room set up (to make the dolls' clothes). I can do anything on that sewing machine — embroidery, it doesn't matter. That is so relaxing to me. I don't think about anything that might be bothering me, I just think about making dolls."

"When we're working on dolls, we don't have time to worry ..." Mrs. Horne added.

"It's something we do for us," said Mrs. Hadley.

"It's good therapy," Mrs. Horne agreed. "Everyone out here (in the club) has family and children, but it's something that we do just for ourselves. My family appreciates what I do — it's something so unique and beautiful."

And it's something to share. Both women said they often give away the dolls they have created. Mrs. Horne often sells some of her dolls in the shop, but many she keeps. "I've got some that there's no way I'd sell," she said.

Mrs. Hadley has given some of hers to her daughter, daughter-in-law and granddaughter. "My daughter has collected dolls for a long time," she said.

Even her 18-month-old granddaughter has taken to carrying around back issues of Doll Crafter magazine because "she want to look at the babies," Mrs. Hadley said.

Doll making is fun and relaxing, Mrs. Horne said, but it isn't easy. The process can take several days. Take, for example, the process of making a vinyl doll: First, the prospective doll maker needs to purchase a kit for whichever doll he or she wants to make. Then they have to "clean it. That takes all morning," Mrs. Horne said. "Then, I high-fire it the next day." After that, constructing the doll takes about three days with about four hours per day.

"I've got six kilns out back," at the back of her shop, Mrs. Horne said. "You can put the body together and do a lot of work while firing."

"Somewhere between 80 percent and 90 percent of our dolls have cloth bodies that we have to construct," added Mrs. Hadley.

Making dolls is a very creative — and very personal — process, stressed Mrs. Horne. "You are putting your own personality on that doll, when you paint it and dress it.

"I do not paint on my students' dolls. It's their doll. No two are alike."

The local chapter of the doll artisans group is affiliated with a national organization and receives the latest information on the craft. "It's a learning club," Mrs. Horne said. "We bring teachers from all over the world to teach (the newest techniques) in our shop."

The women agreed that their favorite doll is "whichever I'm working on" at the time, Mrs. Horne said.

The Society of the Permian Basin Doll Artisans will sponsor its eighth annual Doll and Ceramic Show and Sale Friday and Saturday at the Holiday Inn Centre, E. Highway 80 in Odessa. The annual event is presented "one year in Odessa, one year in Midland," Mrs. Horne said. "We welcome anyone and everyone to come."

An auction will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Friday. The show and sale will be 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday. Admission will be $3.

Funds raised "goes to furthering the education of doll club members of this area," Mrs. Horne said.

"Anyone who has (porcelain) dolls can enter," said Mrs. Hadley.

"They (the dolls) don't have to be made by them (the entrants)," Mrs. Horne added. "We're going to have some wax dolls this year."

The club itself meets at 10 a.m. the first Thursday of each month at the doll shop on Coors Road, the women said. "We bring a lunch and have a nice day. Everyone is welcome to come, even if they don't join (the club)," Mrs. Horne said.

Prospective members shouldn't be too worried about their artistic capabilities, Mrs. Hadley said. "A lot of people think they can't do it, but if I can do it, they can."

Besides, added Mrs. Horne, making porcelain dolls is very rewarding. "I tell my students it's like dope — it's that expensive and that addictive. (But) it's a lot cheaper than going to a psychiatrist!"

For more information about entering or visiting the doll show and sale, call 563-5557 or 367-6105.

Take precautions with unused winter plumbing

Associated Press

To prevent unused pipes from freezing. Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau advises:

- Turn off the water supply at the main shutoff valve.
- Empty toilet bowls by siphoning or bailing and sponging. Pour a mixture of antifreeze and water into toilet bowls and traps of sinks, showers, and tubs. Do not drain these traps, as they keep sewer gases out of the building.
- Shut off the furnace and its electric or gas supply.
- Open every faucet in the house, allowing for complete drainage.
- Drain outside faucets and remove garden hose.
- Drain the water heater, shutting off electric or gas supplies.

DEAR ABBY

Rude questions deserve just the right response

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Many years ago, I had surgery to enlarge my breasts. The procedure cost $3,000, and I suffered considerable pain. I never would have done it had I not been strongly encouraged by my husband — who is now my "ex."

Van Buren

The problem I now face is the colossal nerve of folks who ask, "Are they real?" or, "Are they yours?" Such remarks are equally rude whether they come from a lingerie saleswoman, a co-worker or a new acquaintance.

Abby, how should I answer? I would like to say, "Yes, they are 'real' and they are mine," but I hate to lie. Any other answer would make it obvious that I do not want to answer because they are "altered" or "not real," which isn't something I care to advertise.

Perhaps through your column, people might realize their curiosity can cause embarrassment. — ENHANCED

DEAR ENHANCED: You are not compelled to answer a rude and intrusive question.

There are a variety of appropriate responses in addition to the obvious "It's none of your business." Choose one:

■ "I can't believe you asked that."

■ "If it were any of your business, you'd know."

■ "What an incredibly rude question!"

■ "If you forgive me for not answering, I'll forgive you for asking."

DEAR ABBY: I have recently learned that my father is currently having affairs (an old habit of his). It bothers me that my mother is unknowingly being exposed to sexually transmitted diseases. I avoid her as much as possible because I'm afraid I might say something that will hurt her and possibly cause a divorce. My parents have been married for 37 years.

I have lost all respect for my father because of this — especially because he slept with my best friend when she was 17. He was 40 at the time. I just found this out.

Should I tell my mother? I can't avoid her forever. — TORN DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Since your mother cannot protect herself from a sexually transmitted disease unless she knows that she is at risk, she needs to know. Tell your father that you are aware of this behavior, and give him the option of breaking the news to your mother. Let him know that if he doesn't — you will.

DEAR ABBY: At the age of 84, I am still trying to maintain a sense of humor, and pray that I will be able to do so until I pass on. I have always believed that laughter is the best medicine.

I couldn't resist sending in this quip regarding your column in which a reader suggested writing letters or exercising while waiting to see the doctor:

It seems that a little old lady named Amy waited and waited and waited to see the doctor.

Finally, the doctor came out of his office — looked over in the corner and said, "Amy, it's about your lunchtime — aren't you getting hungry?"

"No," she replied, "but I am getting homesick"! — J.W. IN NASHVILLE

Consumers are warned against 'credit repair' scams

By Clare Collins
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — When Minnie Blake, 61, of the north Bronx, heard a radio advertisement several weeks ago for a credit repair service, she thought she had finally found a way to deal with a problem that had nagged her for nearly six months. Although she had paid her account in full, she had kept getting past-due notices from Sears, and she feared that her credit record would suffer.

A man who answered the phone at Credit Resources Management, in Riverside, Conn., she said, told her that for an up-front fee of $95 the company could remove any negative information — accurate or not — from a customer's credit report. He also persuaded her to read him the numbers at the bottom of her check, thus authorizing the company to withdraw the $95 from her checking account, which it did immediately.

With a week, the company sent Mrs. Blake a contract and asked her to send in $355 more. But she stopped all contact with the company that night after seeing a television news report saying that Credit Resources was one of nine credit-repair companies cited by the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs for violating the city's Consumer Protection Law and the New York State Credit Services Law by charging up-front fees and implying that they can fix any negative credit reports.

MRS. BLAKE'S experience is far from unusual. "Credit-repair scams are a large problem nationwide," said Donald d'Entremont, a staff attorney for the Federal Trade Commission's division of credit practices. "What these con artists do is to target people who are in desperate financial condition and make their situation worse."

Even if a credit report is marred by loan defaults or bankruptcy, the repair companies may be of little help. As Gloria Schaffer, the Connecticut Commissioner of Consumer Protection, put it: "There is nothing anyone can do to change information on your record that is true, even if it's negative information. They can't provide a clean credit history if your credit is bad."

Indeed, it is illegal for anyone to promise to remove accurate information from a credit history, d'Entremont said. A consumer can have inaccurate information removed himself, usually at no cost.

Alfred C. Cerullo 3rd, New York City's Commissioner of Consumer Affairs, said the nine companies cited by his agency were scheduled to respond to the charges this month, after which a settlement would be drawn up or fines levied. He said the charges were civil, not criminal.

Mrs. Blake said she should have known better than to give her checking account number to a stranger. "I'm an insurance claims adjuster," she said. "My job involves not letting people get things over on me. He was so smooth, real confident. He told me I couldn't do this myself, and I believed him."

ATTEMPTS TO reach Credit Resources Management at the number Mrs. Blake used were unsuccessful, and Directory Assistance had no other number for the company.

Generally, Cerullo said, "the only thing that can repair a bad credit history is time."

Indeed, according to the Federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, reports of loan defaults, liens or other credit problems like long-overdue payments cannot be removed from a credit record for 7 years, while information about bankruptcy must remain in place for 10 years. But this information remains available forever to any company from which you are seeking $50,000 or more in credit or insurance and to any employer if you have applied for a job that pays more than $25,000 a year.

If information on a credit report is inaccurate, of course, the time limits do not apply. Although it is legal for companies to offer to do the legwork in correcting a credit history, in many states, including New York but not New Jersey or Connecticut, they are prohibited by law from charging an up-front fee for doing so.

Many states also require that such companies be bonded and provide the customer with a written contract stating exactly what items they plan to remove and by when.

THE NEW York City Consumer Affairs Department says credit repair companies typically dispute every negative item on a person's credit report, whether or not it is accurate, by asking the credit bureau to verify the information.

The bureau will then ask the creditors to supply verification. If a creditor can't do so within 30 days, the item is removed from the report. But all accurate information makes it way back onto the report as soon as verification is obtained, Cerullo said.

Mrs. Blake had written to two credit bureaus asking for copies of her report, and was waiting for responses when she turned to Credit Resources. Soon after doing so, she learned that her report did not contain any negative items.

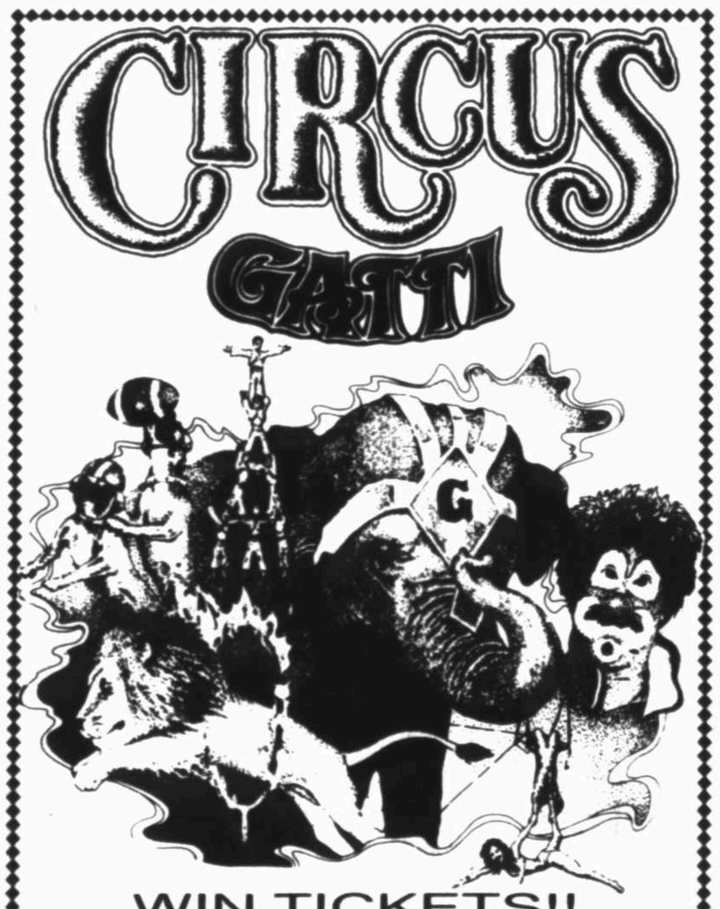

Another common tactic of the repair companies, d'Entremont said, is convincing someone who has filed for bankruptcy that he needs to establish a new credit identity, a process known as file segregation.

Here, the customer is illegally instructed to apply for an employer identification number from the Internal Revenue Service. These numbers, which resemble Social Security numbers, are used by businesses, not individuals, to report information to the government.

THE CUSTOMER is told to use the number in place of a Social Security number when applying for credit, to use a new mailing address (perhaps that of a friend) and also to apply for a driver's license using the new address. But it is a federal crime punishable by fines or jail to make a false statement on a loan or credit application, to use a false employer identification number or to misrepresent one's Social Security number, according to the FTC.

In addition, if you use the telephone or mail to apply for credit under such false pretenses, you could be charged with mail or wire fraud and sent to prison.

Angel Fire Resorts
Guaranteed skiing, results

After a well received introduction last year, Angel Fire Resorts is announcing their "Family Reunion" ski package.

The three-day lesson package is designed to improve the skiing ability of the whole family by teaching adults and children in their own respective programs and then reuniting the family for a free half-day lesson.

"Family Reunion" lessons are taught by top instructors with the emphasis placed on all family members having a great time. The first two days of the program are priced at the regular ski school rate, the final half day is free.

The first two days focus on teaching each family member to ski comfortably. The last day is spent showing the family how to enjoy skiing together: by being supportive instead of critical.

Angel Fire will also be offering their one-day program geared toward families of experienced skiers. Called "Family Practise", the half-day course is designed for families who have already mastered the fundamentals of skiing, and who want to improve their skills as a family. The program is taught by instructors who have been specially trained in teaching students of different ages and abilities. The program is available by appointment only: to ensure appropriate instructor availability.

There are also two great learn-to-ski programs that are geared for first time skiers. The first is the Five-day Guaranteed Program for kids aged six and up. Angel Fire guarantees that by the fifth day, children will be able to ski the mountain independantly from top to bottom, on appropriate terrain, and comfortably ride the chairlift. Children aged three to five will improve as much as they are physically and emotionally capable. They will also be able to ski independantly, on appropriate terrain and get on and off chairlifts by the fifth day.

To prove that Angel Fire means business, the fifth day is free.

The second program is offered to first-time adults who enroll in the Beginner Special Program. Angel Fire Resorts guarantees that first time skiers will be able to comfortably ride the beginner lift and make linked wedge turns: or they will receive free instruction until they can.

These programs are offered in addition to Angel Fire Ski School's regular schedule of group and private lessons.

Whether it is your first time or favorite pastime, Angel Fire Resorts can fulfill your teaching requirements with programs that place the emphasis on fun in a friendly environment.

For further information on guaranteed and family ski programs, or to arrange reservations, contact Angel Fire Resort at 1-800-633-7463.

Refurbished in 1986, the inn has a distinctive feel thanks to the combination of Roaring Twenties style and Southwestern elements. During the rennovation and refurbishment, careful attention to detail prevailed, and the hotel now boasts historic reproductions and original pieces from around the country.

With one of the few elevators in town, the Hotel St. Francis was one of Santa Fe's most luxurious hotels. A tradition it continues to this day.

Mortgage misconceptions leave many could-be homeowners missing out

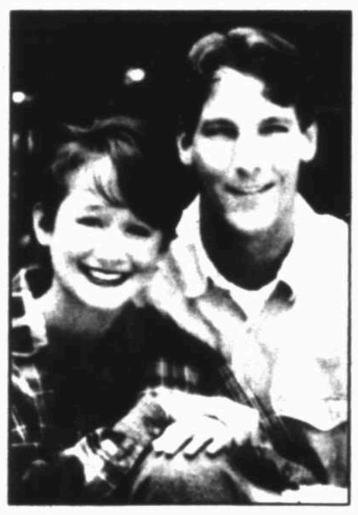

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many would-be homeowners are missing out because they mistakenly think they won't qualify for a mortgage, says the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, an industry group.

One of them is the belief that it takes a 20 percent down payment; in reality it can be as low as 3 percent, says Pickett. Most lenders have flexible credit history requirements, too, and a person making $28,800 a year could qualify for a loan of as much as $75,000, he says.

Marinate pork makes a spicy filling for tortillas. Serve a quick-cooking rice as an accompaniment to Citrus Pork with Chucky Guacamole.

Marinade serves double-duty for pork tortillas

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Marinated pork makes a spicy filling for tortillas. The zesty flavors of salsa, lime juice and beer soak into the meat for several hours before cooking. After draining the meat, you save the marinade to flavor the quick-cooking rice.

CITRUS PORK WITH CHUNKY GUACAMOLE

1¼ pounds pork tenderloin
1 cup salsa
½ cup lime juice
½ cup beer
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon snipped cilantro or parsley
1½ teaspoons ground cumin
¼ teaspoon ground red pepper
¼ teaspoon black pepper
1 recipe Chunky Guacamole (recipe below)
12 flour tortillas
1½ cups quick-cooking rice
Nonfat yogurt (optional)
Sliced green onion (optional)

Partially freeze pork; thinly slice across the grain into bite-size strips. Place the pork in a plastic bag set in a bowl. Combine salsa, lime juice, beer, garlic, cilantro or parsley, cumin, red pepper and black pepper. Pour over pork; seal bag. Marinate in the refrigerator for 3 to 4 hours. Prepare Chunky Guacamole; cover and chill.

Wrap tortillas in foil. Heat in a 350-degree oven for 10 minutes to soften. For rice, drain pork and set aside; reserve marinade. Add enough water to marinade to equal 1› cups. In a saucepan bring marinade mixture to boiling. Add rice. Remove from heat. Let stand, covered, for 5 minutes.

Meanwhile, spray a 10-inch skillet with nonstick cooking spray; preheat over medium heat. Add half of the pork to the skillet. Stir-fry for 4 minutes or until no longer pink. Remove from skillet using a slotted spoon; drain liquid if necessary. Repeat with remaining pork.

To serve, fill tortillas with pork and Chunky Guacamole. Top with nonfat yogurt and sliced green onion, if desired. Roll up. Serve with hot rice. Makes 6 servings.

CHUCKY GUACAMOLE: Halve, seed, peel and cube 2 avocados. In a bowl combine avocados and 3 tablespoons each of lemon juice and salsa. Cover and chill for up to 24 hours.

Once considered rival becomes friend, 'Dad'

By Michael Dorris
N.Y. Times News Service

I began to address my father-in-law as "Dad" on the day, more than 13 years ago, that his daughter, Karen Louise, married me — but I didn't exactly mean it. "Her dad" better approximated what I initially felt. Or "my rival for her affections." "Incomparable model for the role of husband, father, man." "Impossible act to follow."

My relationship with Dad started out with two strikes against it: for one thing, I had been raised by a single mother and so had no idea what to expect from or to ask of a "father figure." For another, Dad was as close to perfect in all his paternal incarnations as I could imagine — and therefore quite daunting.

Here is a man who has been a selfless and enthusiastic instructor at a Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding school for his whole career; the tennis champion of Wahpeton, N.D., and a husband with whom his wife, seven children later, remains obviously very much in love, and he with her.

Here is a man of such infinite patience that he can teach the rules of chess to a 4-year-old, of such attention to detail that he knows, from blossom through fruition, the story of each apple on his many, well-tended trees, a man fully capable of rising at dawn, clearing snow off a pond and then coaching neighborhood children in how to form figure 8's.

Oh, sure, Dad has his famous quirks. He's funny about food, believing it's healthy to consume all meals at room temperature, and once he even made an odd dinner for his family that involved a sauerkraut accent in every dish.

He's a tough and unpredictable literary critic, a writer of pun-filled limericks, a walking almanac of the ebbs and flows of North Dakota real estate prices. He receives gifts with reluctance and can be obsessive and unyielding about the health hazards of secondhand smoke.

Worst of all, I suspect that from the first he saw right through me, penetrating my hidden, awful bluff: the pretense that I was worthy of his precious eldest daughter.

Naturally, I was insecure. If I answered the telephone when he called, did he truly want to speak to me or was I merely the intrusive conduit to The Flesh and Blood? Was I, to him, a person in my own right or simply a hyphenated appendage, emotionally linked by only fragile circumstance-in-law? If I dared let him be the father to me I always yearned for, would he genuinely make a place in his heart where I could join the rest of his natural sons?

SUCH QUESTIONS rarely yield immediate answers — rather, they evolve over time and shared experience. Through the long distance of telephone connections, I was with Dad when he lost his mother, and he was beside me when my son was killed by a speeding automobile.

With increasing frequency, we have laughed, uncompetitively, at the sayings of my daughters, his granddaughters, who in their quirky independence from any DNA-mandated program amaze and delight and defy us both.

We have grown older together, me now not much younger than he was when I first met him, he the beacon of what I, if I work hard at it, might yet become. We've now and then, when the need arose, talked over and found brotherhood in male things — from our mutual mistrust of home redecoration to our shared knowledge and concerns about prostate cancer.

We harbor a few important secrets between us — confidences shared, at least by me, with no one else. And as the father of daughters who may someday bring home husbands whom I'm supposed to ... welcome, Dad's example will be there to instruct me.

I expected, when I thought about it, that marriage might bring many gifts: a soul companion, children, a new and coupled direction to a previously self-steered life. But somehow I knew I was in for more than I had anticipated the first time I visited Louise's parents in North Dakota.

Behind their modest frame house explodes the tangle of an unfettered garden. Tomatoes and squash, corn and chili peppers, red cabbage and cucumbers weave at will amid flowers of every color. There is no apparent order, no fixed plan that requires weeding and fussing, simply a wild bouquet of the summer's bounty.

The yield is rich, varied, spontaneous as the fact that a son, flawed and lonely, wary and silent with long unexpressed need, could find a man who, in spite of everything that's complicated between us, will still answer kindly, naturally, as a matter of course, when I, just as un-self-consciously, call him Dad.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Battle against weeds is constant but can be waged successfully

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

Since the fall, weeds have been a problem in the garden. Weeds can blemish an otherwise good-looking lawn, pretty flower bed or well-planned garden. Besides ruining the appearance of things, weeds can have a wide range of other disadvantages.

Benge-Frost

Typically, weeds are the most assertive, toughest and most prolific of plants in the plant kingdom. Weeds generally grow rapidly, spread aggressively and set big seed crops no matter how hostile the growing conditions. When it comes to competing for water, nutrients and space, they almost always win out over desirable plants. This type of obnoxious muscling will cause good plants to be weaker, smaller and more susceptible to other problems, such as insects and disease.

WEEDS ARE able to come out on top because they've adapted to survival. They have propagation abilities that ensure their continued existence. Some really difficult-to-control weeds, such as nutsedge (commonly called nutgrass), can spread by seeds, rhizome (below ground runner) and tuber.

The mere fact that this plant has many means of spreading makes it difficult to control.

Weeds generally set lots of seed, even in harsh conditions. A kochia weed generally grows to a two- to five-foot height, but if kept mowed down in a lawn, it will still flower and set seeds at a two-inch height. It can also grow in the crack of an asphalt parking lot, with only the rainfall that makes its way into the crack, and grow to a five-foot height, producing who knows how many seeds.

THE FAMOUS grass burr produces a sharp, spine-covered seed that can lie dormant in the soil for up to seven years and still germinate, if the proper conditions occur.

So it's obvious that if you've got problems with weeds, you've got a battle on your hands. Instead of relying only on one source of help, use a whole range of management practices in the weed battle. Let's take a look at some of them.

Avoid disturbing the soil. If you till, spade or rake the soil, chances are it will come back in a solid mass of weeds. Don't disturb soil unless you've got a specific project in mind. Random tilling or cultivating can destroy or weaken native vegetation, allowing rampant weed seed germination to occur.

WHEN THE soil is disturbed for a garden, bed, etc., use a generous layer of mulch. Mulch is material laid on the soil surface to conserve water, insulate temperatures, reduce salts and inhibit weed growth. A three- or four-inch layer of mulch shades the ground to reduce weed seed germination and inhibit weed growth from plants already present. Mulches can be made of organic or inorganic materials, but organic is generally the best.

Keeping plants healthy and vigorous can cut down on weed growth, especially in solid plantings. If turf grass is kept thick and vigorous through proper cultural practices, the chance of weeds getting established is slim.

Regular consistent mowing, fertilizing, and proper watering can give your lawn the competitive edge over weed. In a landscaped bed of trees, shrubs and ground cover, a spreading cover of desirable plants can keep the soil shaded and help prevent weed seed germination.

If you have a serious weed problem that will require the application of a herbicide, it is very important to know your target weed. You need to know life cycle, growing season and plant type.

THE LIFE cycle of weeds can be classified as annual, biennial or perennial. Annuals germinate, grow, flower, set seed and die in one growing season (such as careless weed), and biennials take two years to do the same thing. There aren't many biennial weeds. A perennial is a weed that lives three or more years and has a persistent root part that allows them to survive year to year, such as the dandelion.

The growing season in this case means whether a plant likes to grow in cool or warm conditions. Crabgrass is an example of a warm-season grass that germinates in the spring or early summer and dies in the fall. Henbit is a cool-season plant that starts germinating in the fall and dies in early summer. Knowing when the weed seed germinates is important in determining when to use a herbicide. A pre-emergent herbicide must be applied before the seed germinates, so a cool-season annual needs to be treated in fall. A post-emergent herbicide must be used after the seed has germinated.

PLANT TYPE refers to whether the plant is a grassy-type weed or a broadleaf weed. Sometimes this distinction causes confusion. Some broadleaf plants have narrow leaves and are confused with narrow-leaf or grassy-type plants. The difference is easy to determine if you look closely at the veins in the leaves. Grasses have parallel veins (running side by side), while a broadleaf will have netted or branching venation.

This is important information in determining what herbicide to use. Some herbicides are formulated to be effective on grassy-type weeds, while others control broadleaf plants best. A few herbicides will control some grasses and some broadleaf.

Get the low-down on weed control in the home lawn by attending the third session of the Spring Garden School: Home Lawn Care 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Confederate Air Force Headquarters. Dr. Richard Duble will present the A to Z on healthier, easier home lawn and pest control. Preregistration fee is $5 per household. Registration at the door will be $0 per household.

TO PREREGISTER contact the Midland or Ector County Extension Offices. In Midland, call 687-1351. The number in Odessa is 335-3071.

Deborah Benge-Frost is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Seasonal fruits can make dessert family favorite throughout year

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Apples, pears, nectarines or plums. Take your pick from whatever fruits are in season to make this all-time-favorite dessert.

Not only do you pick the fruit for the filling, but you also choose from three delicious toppings.

Best of all, your microwave oven cooks it about three times faster than Mom's regular-oven recipe.

CHOOSE-A-FRUIT CRUMBLE

4 cups sliced, peeled apples or pears, or sliced nectarines or plums
2 to 3 tablespoons honey
2 tablespoons water
Oat Topping, Granola Topping or Coconut Topping (recipes below)
Vanilla ice cream, light cream or milk (optional)

Place prepared fruit in a 1-1/2-quart microwave-safe casserole. Combine honey and water (if using pears, omit water).

Pour over fruit. Cover with microwave-safe plastic wrap; turn back one corner to vent steam. Cook on 100 percent power (high) for 3 to 5 minutes or until fruit is almost tender, stirring once.

Meanwhile, prepare desired topping.

Sprinkle topping over hot fruit. Cook, uncovered, on high for 2 to 3 minutes or until fruit is tender and topping is heated through, giving the dish a half-turn once. If desired, serve warm with ice cream, light cream or milk. Makes 4 servings.

Oat Topping: In a small mixing bowl combine 1/3 cup quick-cooking rolled oats, 3 tablespoons all-purpose flour, 2 tablespoons brown sugar and 1/2 teaspoon ground allspice.

Cut in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine until crumbly. Stir in 1/2 cup chopped nuts.

Networking focus of MC Career Fair

By Elise Coombes

Opening doors in today's job market is the purpose of Midland College's Career Fair set for March 9.

One hundred people representing more than 40 companies will be at the fair, giving students a chance to talk to people who will be doing the hiring for their company, according to Michael LaPlante, Career Placement coordinator.

Students who attend the fair will have an advantage in the search for jobs. "The key to the job market is networking," he said.

"Look at the Career Fair in terms of the future—by networking now, the future is clearer," LaPlante said. "The more contact students have with businesses the better the opportunity to find a job."

"The key to the job market is networking."
—Michael LaPlante

The Career Fair allows students to network with businesses without having to leave campus.

A wide range of businesses including the U.S. Customs Service, Midland Hilton and Towers, Health South, Physicians and Surgeons Hospital and the Texas Army National Guard will let students see what job opportunities are available in the area and what employers are looking for, LaPlante said.

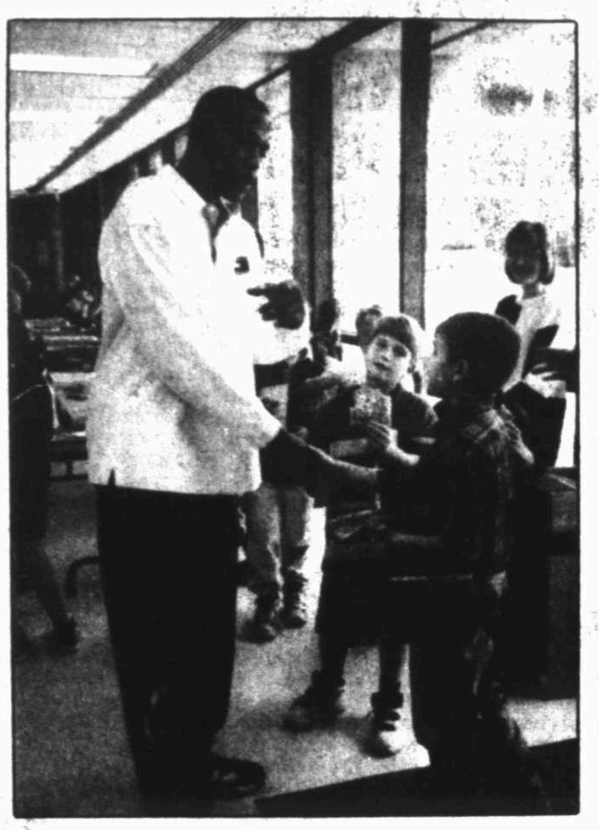

Some businesses will be interviewing to hire immediately, but, LaPlante said, there are other advantages to students who attend the fair.

"The name of the game from now on is networking," he said. Being able to meet with 100 people with connections in the business community means the potential for finding a job increases dramatically.

Additionally, students can sharpen interviewing skills and find an answer to the question "what do I have to do to be successful in this particular company?"

Although the fair is geared toward Midland College students who are ready to graduate, members of the community also are invited to attend. LaPlante said businesses may still sign up for the fair until March 8.

The Career Fair will be 10 a.m.-2 p.m. in the Midland College Scharbauer Student Center. For more information, contact the Vocational Career Center, 685-4764 or the Job Placement Office, 685-4781.

Neil Simon's 'Odd Couple' provides good, clean humor

Who doesn't want to laugh? These days its hard to find good clean humor anywhere, much less two whole hours of it. Fortunately, for the students of Midland College, it's free. I'm talking about MC Theater's production of The Odd Couple. Director John Cimics has decided to do Neil Simon's female version of this classic play.

I had decided to forgo acting this semester but when Director Cimics called and asked if I would be interested in playing a character in the play, I was excited.

Allred

And, much to my delight, I learned he had assembled a cast of professional and talented people, many of who were former cast mates.

We decided to get together and do a read-through of lines. We hadn't read for five minutes before we were practically rolling on the floor with laughter.

It was literally sidesplitting humor—a cross between Seinfeld and Cheers. At the time, it was difficult to hear the lines because an enterprising reader would be reading ahead and laughing.

Have you ever heard someone guffaw before? You would have if you'd been there that night. That night, we left the college certain of one thing—we had a monster hit on our hands.

We have no doubt that audiences will love the show and leave the theater feeling as though they have spent their time wisely.

Our only problem is that we're still having trouble keeping a straight face during rehearsals.

This is definitely an entertaining play.

We hope to see you there.

In this adaptation of the classic comedy, Neil Simon has kept the simple structure of his original Odd Couple but added so many new jokes and comic situations that he's created an entirely new play that is sure to delight even those audiences who may know the original version well.

The female version of the Odd Couple will be presented free to Midland College students.

General admission tickets are $5. The play continues next Thursday and Friday nights with a matinee today and Sunday, March 5.

Truvy's Beauty Salon, where all the ladies who are anybody come to have their hair done, opens for business at 8 p.m. Friday when the Permian Playhouse stages its production of Richard Harling's "Steel Magnolias."

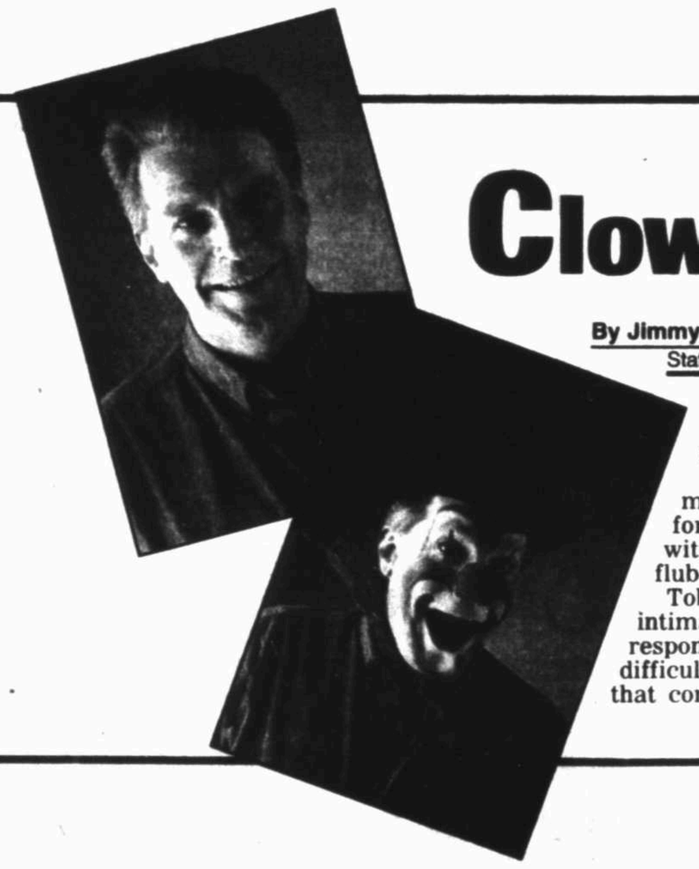

"It's going to be a great show," said director Barbara Robinson. "The story concerns women's relationships and that's nice to do on occasion. I think guys come because the lines are so funny and they can see their mothers, sisters, wives, grandmothers in this story."

Clowning around

To be a clown. What a huge responsibility that must be.

To be responsible for making children laugh and for making adults identify with their own foibles and flub-ups.

Toby Circus Ballantine is intimately familiar with those responsibilities, as well as the difficulties and sheer delights that come with being a clown.

Ballantine, now an advance man with Circus Gatti, no longer performs for a living, but he did don the makeup and the red nose for many years. Certainly he's had his fill of lows and his share of highs when stomping around the three rings in those big ol' clown shoes.

Circus Gatti will stop at Midland's Chaparral Center March 5 and March 6. This year's edition features two Colombian pantomime clowns, a clown with a comedic dog act and a host of other big top attractions for, as they say, the kid in all of us.

Ballantine, the son of Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey Circus Clown Bill Ballantine, was given the name Toby after British clowns who work the roadways leading up to the circus itself. And yes, his middle name is actually Circus, which provides further proof of his family's deep roots in the traveling tent shows.

In his 1982 book, "Clown Alley," Ballantine's father wrote of one of his childhood recollections of clowns: "In the circus performance ... we saw three or four grizzled professionals leaping on and off broad-backed, snorting horses and squirting water, shrieking, slapping and kicking each other, exploding things, and blowing horns, while recklessly tumbling on the broad auditorium stage within a big wooden ring spread with sawdust. Those clowns were great fun, doing everything backwards or stupidly the wrong way; they were full of impudent disobedience. I loved them.

Makeover for 'The Odd Couple'

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

The principal element John Cimics looks for in selecting a play to be produced at Midland College is "merit. Neil Simon is a pretty reliable source if you want theatrical quality," said Cimics, who directs the production of "The Odd Couple (The Female Version)" on stage at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium today and March 3-5.

Tickets, priced at $5 for the general public and $3 for MC faculty and staff, are sold at the door. MC students are admitted free. All proceeds go toward scholarships for MC students. Curtain is at 2:30 p.m. today, 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 2:30 p.m. March 5.

Simon, who has received the Pulitzer Prize for drama and the Tony Award for best play, is considered by many to be the most successful playwright of his era.

"He's had more smash hits than any other playwright," Cimics said. "He's pretty much averaged one hit a year since 1961."

When Cimics toured shows in mainland China before moving to Midland, he discovered Simon was the most widely read Western playwright there, surpassing even Shakespeare.

"I was very impressed at the thirst that the Chinese people have to learn about American culture. So, it was very interesting to me that Neil Simon was someone who fascinated and intrigued them so much. I'm not entirely surprised because he has really got a universal appeal."

When he was researching the play, Cimics found Simon's explanation of how he believes the public views him and his work enlightening.

Cimics quoted Simon as saying, "I know how the public sees me because people are always coming up to me and saying 'thanks for the good times.'"

Cimics finds "that's really a key to his success because he's very much of a humanist in my mind. He has a wonderful insight into our little human foibles and quirks and can be a source for delightful comedy."

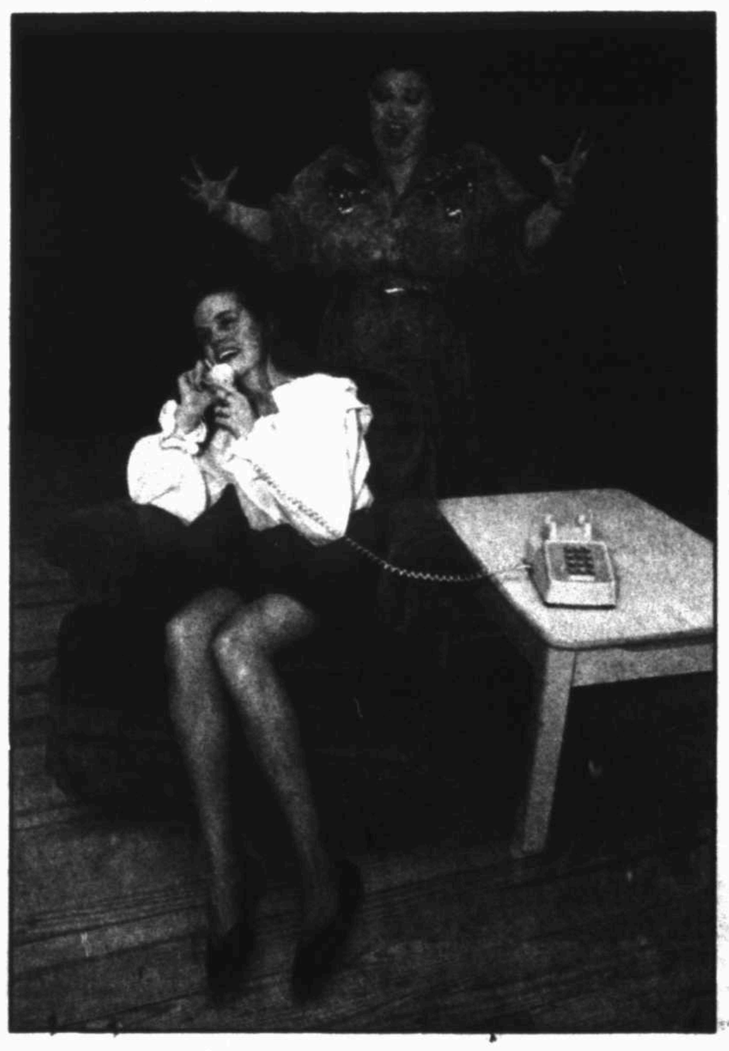

Cimics selected comedy for this production for several reasons. First, he finds there is a "real need for comedy. Laughter really does lighten your heart."

Also, he plans to do a variety of plays at MC and has thus far presented a musical, a classic and a drama.

"So, it seemed to me it was about time for having a comedy," said Cimics, who was drawn to the female version of "The Odd Couple" because the play represented a new approach to an established work.

"I'm fascinated by ways of coming up with a new approach — a creative, imaginative approach to things theatrical. And that's what he did here. He took a show that he wrote in 1965 for

CLOWNS: Ballantine remembers moment he decided to follow his father's footsteps

(From 1H)

Their wild show of freedom made a walloping impression."

Those same words could be spoken by son as well as father, as Toby Ballantine realized at age 7 that it was his life's dream to live the clown life. In fact, it was Ringling Brothers clown legend Lou Jacobs who helped convince Toby the boy that his future would be in the circus.

"Lou made people laugh so hard," Ballantine recalled. "I thought it was fantastic that he was able to get all the people at the show to laugh. And I remember sitting there saying to myself when the water came out of Lou's head that I wanted to be a clown. He sat there on that car radiator and made it look like water was shooting up through his whole body and out of his head. It was a simple thing, and I thought maybe someday I could do something like that."

"Being a clown," Ballantine said, "is a big responsibility, because it makes people forget their troubles and their cares. Laughter is a great relief for people. Studies have actually shown when people smile their blood pressure goes down and when they laugh they get healthier.

"As a clown, when you make children laugh, the parents will laugh, too. It's an intergenerational thing. It brings people together."

As for adults, Ballantine said clowns are enjoyed by the older audience members because, "They see something in themselves when they laugh at a clown. That's when adults laugh the most ... when they see something they relate to. Most jokes and gags performed by a clown are directed at themselves. Then, the adults who are laughing will say, 'Hey, I had something like that happen to me once.' It brings the humor back in their lives.

> 'I remember sitting there saying to myself when the water came out of Lou's head that I wanted to be a clown.'
> — Toby Circus Ballantine

"People have serious problems to solve in their lives and one of the greatest things is to be able to get them to calm down and laugh. It's a magnificent feeling when you're in the circus ring and you didn't expect to get a laugh, but people laugh anyway — and you did it."

Ballantine said there are basically two types of clowns — the overbearing and the foolish buffoon.

"The foolish buffoon," Ballantine said, "thinks he's very smart. And he's generally very clever. The overbearing clown is the one who usually gets taken for a ride and becomes angry. The angry, overbearing clowns are usually the ones in white makeup; the buffoons are usually the ones with red face with big, baggy clothes."

But being a clown is not all fun and games. Aside from endless weeks and months on the road in towns whose names run together, clowns are generally a misunderstood lot.

"Many people look upon clowns as being fools or idiots," Ballantine said. "They are not fools. Being a clown is a very complicated theatrical craft. A clown never stops learning his art. He may be able to be competent at it one day, but he never stops getting better at it."

The movie "Shakes The Clown" didn't help the clown's reputation either. Starring Bobcat Goldthwait, the movie portrayed clowns as little more than drunken bums.

"We hated it," Ballantine said of how he and his peers felt about the movie. It was exploitative. A number of clowns got sucked into it and had to work in it and now regret it immensely."

Clowns, Ballantine said, are nothing like those pictured in the motion picture, which was roundly panned by critics. Instead, Ballantine said, clowns are "normal people. They have families ... daughters. And they're usually people who know the circus from front to back."

Ballantine himself is a father of two girls, ages 10 and 5. His wife is a social worker with the Ryan White Foundation in New York.

Asked what one incident in all his years of clown work remains in his memory more than any other, it's a moment that didn't happen in front of throngs of laughing circusgoers.

"I think the one moment," Ballantine said, "is when both my daughters, when they were both 1 at the time, saw me as a clown before they could speak. The wonder in their eyes because daddy looked really different ... that was a special feeling."

Buried inside the clown is a desire to make a lasting difference on someone's life. Sure it's important to make kids and adults laugh alongside one another. But there's a higher-calling, as Ballantine put it.

"I've had people come up to me after a performance and say, 'Mary hasn't spoken a word in three years, and you were the first person she talked to.' That's one of the highest callings of the clowns. To see a little girl who hasn't spoken in three years say, 'Silly clown.' It's a wonderful feeling.'"

MAKEOVER: Women become odd couple men and 20 years later managed to rewrite it for women. He keeps the same basic structure, but it's a new script with a lot of laughs. You've still got the idea of the chronic neat person and the dedicated slob trying to somehow live together. It's all new jokes and the dialogue, the humor itself, is new.

"So I think people who come to see this would feel at home in the sense of recognizing Madison and Ungar. No matter how well they know the original odd couple, they would find themselves being surprised and laughing because Simon has given us a whole new script."

The script calls for six women and two men. Olive Madison, the slob, is played by Chyree LeMaster, who also is co-directing the comedy, and Florence Ungar, the tidy one, is played by Darcey Georges. Instead of the Friday night poker players, four female friends play Trivial Pursuit. Those actresses are Peggy Bartay as Mickey, Monica Allred as Renee, Heidi Hargrove as Vera and Gina Perez as Sylvie. Rounding out the cast are Curtis Lloyd as Dusty and Jeff Barger as Bubba, the West Texas cowboys who live upstairs.

"They've just been a delight," Cimics said of the cast, which is comprised of six MC students, one alumni and a member of the faculty staff. "I heard it said once that if you want to play tragedy, you have to be very tired, and if you want to play comedy, you have to be very energetic and well rested. These people are great. They've got so much energy it just lights up the stage."

roughs as Miss Clairee, an eccentric millionaire; Dana Ritter as M'Lynn, the local social leader; and Amy Burns as her daughter, Shelby, who is about to marry a "good ol' boy."

The biggest challenge for the cast and crew — which includes Midlanders Amy Burns, stage manager Sue Smith and set designer Jack Harding — "Is not crying when we get to the last scene. Everybody cries," Ms. Robinson said.

Another challenge is dressing hair on stage.

"We have two people who have to actually style and wash and do hair on stage," Ms. Robinson said. "Figuring out when that happens, and what hair is supposed to be done when is kind of complex. If you have people who are in the roles and don't do hair, someone has to teach them how to do that."

Neither Ms. Dominguez nor Ms. Harding are hairdressers by trade. "They don't do hair," Ms. Smith said. "They are doing what we all know how to do. Most women can sort of get through a hair set." So far, it's "going very well."

The most difficult task Ms. Robinson has found in presenting "Steel Magnolias" hit before rehearsals even began.

"We had a very good turnout," Ms. Robinson said. "We had over 40 women. It was rough making a decision because there were so many good people. We did extensive auditions and then we had callbacks. Sometimes it's how people look with each other, like the mother and daughter need to look like they could come from the same family, and how all six will look together is important as well. Who reads best. Sometimes, you have to go with a gut reaction."

"Apparently, a lot of women feel strongly about this show," said Ms. Smith, who doesn't mind the drive to Odessa, which she sometimes makes twice a day, to participate in theater. "Because it's an all-woman thing, I think that appeals to the feminist in all of us. And a bunch of folks did turn out."

Mrs. Smith has been in three Odessa productions since September, including "Texas Toast," for which she served as show chairman. She has auditioned at Midland Community Theatre but hasn't been cast yet. Her husband has performed at both Permian Playhouse and MCT.

"I've just gotten to know those folks in Odessa and feel at home there," said Mrs. Smith, who feels a special affinity for "Steel Magnolias."

"This is a woman's show that I feel really strongly about because I saw the movie and liked it a lot," Mrs. Smith said. "It's a piece about bonding and about strong women, and that appealed to me."

The popularity of "Steel Magnolias" can be traced to several elements, Ms. Robinson said.

"The familiarity. We all know someone like one of these characters at least. It's very well written. The writing is just extraordinary, and I think it touches us. The underlying seriousness of Shelby and her illness and what she faces touches everybody."

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Focus on building stronger personal and professional relationships. A regular savings program will help your dreams come true. In June, look into real estate investments after making a realistic appraisal of your housing needs. Next fall is the best time to discuss a pay raise. Know what you are worth and go after it! December finds you beautifying your home and entertaining new friends. Welcome 1996 by hosting a party.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Fats Domino, attorney Victoria Reggie Kennedy, swimmer Jenny Thompson, legendary comedian Jackie Gleason.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You and a close pal could decide to go into business together. Coupled, you can accomplish much more than you could individually. Come up with a fun entertainment idea and share it with friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your idealism may be tested by someone's behavior. Keep a low profile until you have reached an important decision about a career commitment. A more experienced friend's advice will set you on the right track.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance keeps you guessing. Do not expect easy answers. Be honest with yourself about your career goals. A change of scenery could send your spirits soaring.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family life becomes more fulfilling. Pay closer attention to details or a project could go sour. A social function brings a secret out into the open.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It is up to you to reduce the tension at home. Strive to create a more harmonizing atmosphere. If looking for a way to boost your income, brainstorm ideas with close friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A visit from an old friend will make this a special day. Carrying out certain plans proves surprisingly easy. Share the good things that come your way with those who have proved their loyalty.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get in touch with people who can help you sort out a difficult problem. A stranger may capture your attention. Keep your guard up until sure that this person is reliable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You need to be aware of your mate's priorities as well as your own. Only a compromise will prevent a serious misunderstanding. An argumentative neighbor should be ignored.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A romantic relationship that develops slowly is more likely to be long-lasting. Check travel arrangements. Hosting a special event will help you cultivate influential people.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Change your social plans if the weather or the company is not what you expected. Although a friend professes love, you are not sure. You will have to take on additional responsibilities soon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A blue mood may be due to mental fatigue. Give yourself a break from intellectual pursuits. An active love life will keep you busier than usual.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Family life is a source of real strength now. Seek your loved ones' advice on important matters. Making your talents known to a wider circle will turn business worries into a thing of the past.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are multitalented, flexible and interested in almost any topic. Their intellectual curiosity knows no bounds! At school, these youngsters will be most comfortable in small, intimate surroundings. Although hard-working in the subjects they enjoy, these Pisces may slack off in a class where the teacher is boring.

The bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♠	Pass	2NT	Pass
6NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ♡

Pay careful attention to your spotcards. That proved to be the key to success on this deal.

North-South got to slam the direct way. With South showing 13-15 points and a balanced hand, North knew the pair's combined assets were enough for a small slam and no more.

West led a heart, taken in dummy. There were 10 fast tricks available and, if spades divided evenly, that would produce the two tricks required. If spades were 4-2, declarer could set up a long spade, and the slam would then depend on the club finesse.

Declarer crossed to the king of spades and continued with a spade to the ace. The 5-1 split was demoralizing. Now it seemed that declarer needed not only a successful club finesse, but a 3-3 split in the suit as well. The fate of the hand was soon settled. Declarer led a club to the queen and, when that lost, the contract went down the drain.

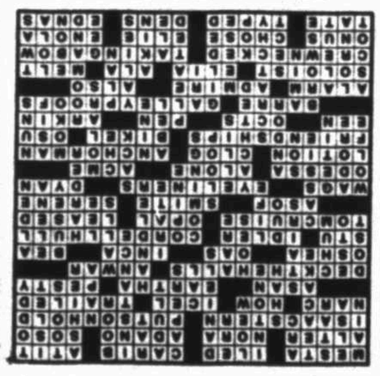

Let's look a little deeper in the club situation. The ten of clubs on the table and the eight in hand gives declarer an additional chance that could be tested without cost. At trick four South should have led the ten of clubs from the board, with the intention of running it.

As the cards lie, if East does not cover the club, West will be forced to win the king. When clubs break well, 12 tricks are easy. But even after East covers with the jack and the queen loses to the king, all is not lost.

Suppose West returns a safe heart. Dummy wins, the three of clubs is led and the eight is finessed. With the nine onside and the suit splitting 3-3, the slam limps home.

■ Playwright honored

LAWRENCEVILLE, N.J. — Rider University Theatre presented William Mastrosimone's play "Shivaree" this week in the Fine Arts Studio Theatre.

Included in the cast was Midlander Marvin LeMaster, a senior elementary education major.

The production is part of the university's Mastrosimone Festival, which honors the playwright, a Trenton native and one of Rider University's most prestigious alumni. The playwright graduated from Rider in 1974 with a degree in English.

■ MCT stages 'Annie'

The production is on stage in Davis Theatre One through March 18. Based on the comic strip, "Little Orphan Annie," the musical traces the exploits of the carrot-topped heroine and her trusty dog, Sandy — from their hard-knock life with Miss Hannigan at the Hudson Street Home for Girls to the loving arms of Daddy Warbucks.

Co-producers are Wagner and Brown. For reservations, call 682-4111.

Artist Jay Hester from Borne will teach the class. He has a degree in art from Samford College and completed graduate work at the Art Center College of Design in Los Angeles.
