Gramm: Compromise on budget 'difficult'

DALLAS (AP) — For the House and Senate to compromise on proposed balanced budget legislation will be difficult because the Senate has advanced an economic proposal and the House a political one, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, of College Station says.

"I'm not saying I'm pessimistic, I guess I'm realistic," Gramm said at a Sunday afternoon news conference in downtown Dallas.

A House and Senate conference committee will meet beginning Tuesday in sessions aimed at ironing out differences between the two versions of balanced budget proposals.

Gramm said he has drafted three or four options and has prepared compromise language in hopes lawmakers can agree on something.

"My goal is to settle this thing by Thursday so we don't have to find out what the next option is," Gramm said.

If an agreement is not reached by midnight Thursday, the federal government could shut down, defaulting on its financial obligations and sending at least 500,000 "nonessential" workers home.

The shutdown can be averted if Congress passes a stop-gap appropriations bill to fund government agencies past the expiration of the current temporary spending bill.

Some Senate officials have promised to start selling off gold reserves to provide funding for the federal government if a compromise is not reached, an idea rejected by President Reagan.

Gramm, a former Democrat, said he met Thursday and Friday with "key people on the Democratic side" and drafted a series of proposed amendments that he believes "represent compromises."

"This thing's got to be negotiated out," Gramm said. "I'm not ready at this point to put all my cards on the table, but what I've been trying to do is to work out language so if there is some break in this deadlock...we'll have some proposals to put on the table."

The committee will dicker over balanced budget legislation sponsored by Gramm, Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., and the House version of the bill.

The bill has been approved twice in the Senate.

"If they really are concerned about getting a greater degree of flexibility in a recession," Gramm said, "there are several ways of doing that. I've tried to draft each of three or four ways of doing that so that we've got language if we actually begin to negotiate."

Gramm's proposal is a five-year plan requiring Congress to balance the budget within a maximum allowable deficit. The budget would be binding, and spending more than appropriated would not be allowed.

The House bill requires a balanced budget but "exempts social programs for urban liberal democrats, exempts farmers for rural democrats and exempts defense contractors" for congressman with defense contractors in their district, he said.

As a result, the House proposal would exempt 71 percent of the budget from any consideration for funding cuts, he added.

On Veterans' Day, Edna Benninger remembers the years she served in the Navy during World War II. She was assigned to the Washington, D.C., area.

Women made their mark in military during WWII

Rita Craven joined to get revenge on the Germans who torpedoed and sank a ship with her fiance aboard.

Edna Benninger joined out of a sense of patriotism instilled by her German-born father.

Billy Aaron joined because she felt she was needed.

All three Midland women enlisted in the service during World War II to contribute what women were allowed to give to the war effort during the '40s.

"They told us our purpose as WAVES was to replace a man so he could go into duty," said Mrs. Benninger of her indoctrination into the Navy's Womens' Auxiliary Volunteer Enlistment Service. For most of World War II, few WAVE units were allowed overseas.

Control tapes reveal pilots knew proximity before crash

CLIFFSIDE PARK, N.J. (AP) — The pilots of a corporate jet and a small plane that collided over this New York suburb knew they were near each other minutes before the crash, which incinerated five residential buildings and killed at least five people, authorities said.

Authorities earlier feared the fuel-fed inferno had trapped 10 families living in the buildings, but by 5:30 a.m., all but one man had been accounted for, said state police Capt. Joseph Craparotta.

Two victims were found in the wreckage of a light propeller plane, a Piper Cherokee, that struck the front porch of a two-story apartment building in nearby Fairview. A mangled body was found beneath the wreckage.

The other plane, a Nabisco Brands Inc. Falcon 50 with two aboard, slammed into two two-story apartment buildings, leveling them and igniting a roaring fire that engulfed three other structures.

The flames were extinguished at about 11 p.m. Sunday, but firefighters were kept at bay early today by the heat of the smoldering rubble.

At least eight people injured on the ground were treated at hospitals.

The missing man was identified as Abdullah Taha, who lived with a brother and other relatives on the second floor of one of the demolished buildings. His brother-in-law, Abed Al Haleem, said Taha told him he wanted to sleep while the rest of the family was out.

Five relatives of Taha, several crying, gathered at the crash site early today as workers searched the rubble for the 34-year-old man.

Transcripts of conversations with the nearby Teterboro Airport control tower showed the pilots of both planes were aware of each other as they cruised over the densely populated suburbs across the Hudson River from Manhattan shortly after 5 p.m. Sunday, said FAA spokesman Peter Nelson.

Few see royal arrival at Penney's

WASHINGTON (AP) — A relatively small crowd of about 3,000 gathered at a suburban mall today as Prince Charles and Princess Diana toured a J.C. Penney store that had been closed to the public for the occasion.

"We actually thought there would be more of a crowd around here," said Warren Carmichael, spokesman for the police in Fairfax County, Va.

White balloons that Penney's had passed out to people in the Springfield Mall bobbed in the sunshine as the future king of England and his wife arrived for a 40-minute tour.

Princess Diana, wearing a white suit, turned her shoulder and waved before entering the store as part of a promotion to merchandise $50 million in the chain's "Best of Britain" sales campaign.

Some in the crowd had waited there since before dawn, but there were those who expressed interest only in shopping.

"I don't even own British clothes," said Janet Canfield of Woodbridge, Va.

But Barbara Anderson, who brought her two children at 7 a.m. hoping for a good vantage point, said, "We let two kids play hooky from school so they could come and see the princess. It's a chance of a lifetime."

"I'd like to take a picture of the future king and queen and send it to my grandchildren," one man said. Another said Charles, the Prince of Wales, "seems to be almost a man of the street."

The general public was not allowed in the store on this big shopping day, Veteran's Day, a federal holiday and therefore a day off for many in this area.

As Charles tells it, Diana didn't need to pick out anything for him on their visit to Penney's, since Americans already are turning out by the thousands just "to see my new clothes."

With wry humor, Prince Charles says he's finally put his finger on why he's getting more attention in the United States now that he's brought a wife along. It's his new shirts and ties, he claims.

The glamorous Diana, 24, was another photogenic hit Sunday, especially when she showed up at a British Embassy gala wearing a cream-colored gown with lace bodice and taffeta skirt — and a glittering diamond and pearl tiara once worn by Queen Mary.

Charles told reporters that "I don't know if I can be described as a salesman — but I do try to create some interest in things British."

The royal couple had little problem at that task Sunday. More than 12,000 people turned out when they attended religious services at the National Cathedral, and thousands more waved and chanted "Diana, Diana," when they visited the "Treasure Houses of Britain" exhibit at the National Gallery of Art.

Sunday night, Charles told Vice President and Mrs. George Bush and a score of other Reagan administration officials, "When we were in the National Gallery, a gentleman of the press asked me, I thought rather tactlessly really, why there was a bigger crowd outside the cathedral than when I was last there, on my own.

"The answer, of course, is that they all turned out to see my new clothes."

As his embassy audience of 125 people, including members of Congress and the Supreme Court, roared with laughter, Charles confessed "I discovered the other day that I was chosen by an obscure organization as one of the world's worst and most boringly dressed men. It always amazes me. Only a few years before, I was one of the best dressed."

Charles said that "my wife and myself have been completely overwhelmed by the extraordinary, enthusiastic and friendly welcome that we've received here in Washington.... Perhaps it's the fact that we got married four years ago in a rather well-known ecclesiastical bull ring in London...and it wasn't actually filmed in Hollywood."

Movie crew stirs little interest in Colorado City

COLORADO CITY (AP) — Residents of this West Texas City say they were unexcited when actors, actresses and camera crews arrived to begin filming a $2.5 million murder mystery.

"People are like that around here," says Pat Furlong, manager of the town's Dairy Queen and a resident in the area for a "jillion years" or so. "They just don't get too excited about anything - ball games, whatever."

Pat Poole, director and co-producer of the film "Shadows on the Wall," said the quiet nature of this city of 5,400 allows he and his cast and crew the freedom to film undisturbed.

Only occasionally does a Colorado City resident venture onto the movie set, he said.

Many resident said they are too busy to watch shooting. Janie Melendez, a waitress at Loyd's Place, where the cast has lunched twice, said she has yet to stroll down the block to the movie set.

Doyle Kiker, who works at the funeral home here and has lived in town 60 years or so, said he just has not found time to go down and watch the movie people yet.

"I stay here at the funeral home 10-12-14 hours a day, seven days a week," he said.

Poole, 38, a cigar-chomping filmmaker who grew up in Tulsa, Okla., said he has "always had a feel for this country. It's a filmmaker's dream to be out in this part of the country.

"It's open and the people are friendly."

Penny Solomon, Chamber of Commerce director, said Poole has promised to open the set up to spectators occasionally during the month-long shoot.

"Shadows on the Wall" was inspired by the once-popular, now-dilapidated Baker Hotel. Poole and his family were returning from a Dallas film conference last summer when they stopped off in the town and noticed the hotel.

Poole said he quickly wrote a script for a film set in a town he named "Crowder City" and, with financing from executive producer E.K. Gaylord II, assembled cast and crew and began shooting.

Storms spreads snow to Texas Panhandle

Associated Press

Wind-whipped snow continued to fall today in the mountains of eastern California, where up to 4 feet was already on the ground from a weekend storm that surprised campers, closed roadways and knocked out power.

The storm was part of an Arctic blast that hit much of the country, spreading snow from the Northwest to the Great Lakes and dropping temperatures into the 20s as far south as the Texas Panhandle. Seven deaths were blamed on the weather since Friday.

Campers and hikers in the Sierra Nevada slid and slipped their way down icy roadways to safety throughout the day, but three people still were missing in California early today.

Searchers worked through the night in Tuolomne County looking for two people reported missing east of the town of Tuolomne. In Nevada County, a rescue crew searched unsuccessfully for a missing man in the Grouse Ridge area 18 miles east of Nevada City before darkness forced a halt.

The storm knocked out power to about 3,500 customers of Pacific Gas & Electric Co. in two areas of the Sierra Nevada as snow-laden tree branches downed power lines.

Parts of Interstate 80 between the Nevada state line and Auburn, Calif., were closed because of blowing snow and icy conditions, and rainfall at lower elevations prompted flash flood watches.

One to 2 feet of snow lay on the ground throughout much of northwestern Nevada. The snow and gusty wind forced cancellation of an estimated 60 flights at the Reno Cannon International Airport, with visibility at times less than 800 yards.

Every major mountain pass in Washington state was affected by the snow, with snow tires or chains advised or required, and three were closed. The state's transportation department reported 26 inches of new snow Sunday at Cayuse Pass, and 24 inches at White Pass.

Chinook Pass, near Rainier National Park, was closed by a snow slide.

Snow tapered off further east after up to 2 feet fell in the Colorado Rockies, but heavier snow was expected again today, threatening tonight's football game between the Denver Broncos and the San Francisco 49ers.

The weekend snowstorms extended as far as the northwestern corner of Michigan's Lower Peninsula, where up to 10 inches fell.

Moscow rejects much of proposal

By R. GREGORY NOKES
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — In another indication that the road to the Geneva summit has become a rocky one, a top Reagan administration official says Moscow has rejected virtually every item in the U.S. draft of a proposed joint communique.

As a result, there probably won't be a joint communique after the Nov. 19-20 meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, Paul H. Nitze, Reagan's chief arms control adviser, said Sunday.

He said the rejection came in meetings Secretary of State George P. Shultz held in Moscow last week with Gorbachev and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

"There were objections to virtually every item on the draft," Nitze said on the ABC-TV program, "This Week with David Brinkley.""

Shultz and other senior U.S. officials came away from those meetings pessimistic that the summit would produce important results on arms control or other issues.

However, Shultz said in an appearance Sunday on the CBS-TV program, "Face the Nation," that his meeting with Gorbachev was worthwhile even though the Soviet leader interrupted him, and he interrupted back.

While a joint communique now appears unlikely, Shultz said, he anticipates some kind of report will be issued on "whatever happens at the big Geneva meeting and what form that will take remains to be seen."

"It depends on what amount of things are able to be put together at that time," Shultz said. He said it is possible the U.S. and Soviet sides would issue separate statements.

President Reagan said in an interview with U.S. News & World Report published Saturday that he will propose annual summit meetings in each country. Shultz said it is "certainly possible" the two leaders will agree to annual summits.

President Reagan leaves Saturday for the summit, which will be the first he has held with the top Soviet leader and the first U.S.-Soviet summit since President Carter met with Leonid Brezhnev in Vienna in 1979.

Prior to his departure, Reagan plans a major nationwide address on his hopes for the summit.

Shultz predicted a "strong conversation" between Reagan and Gorbachev and said his hope is that "there will come out of this a more constructive and stable kind of relationship."

Shultz said that in his meeting with Gorbachev in Moscow last week, "We had a good, vigorous strong conversation."

Of Gorbachev, he said, "He's bright...combative, that's true. He interrupted and I interrupted and we had a good vigorous strong conversation."

"Actually, a good strong combative conversation I liked it, I think you learn something that way," Shultz added.

But Shultz said Gorbachev's view of the United States "is very different from how I believe the United States is."

Nitze, who was in the delegation Shultz took to Moscow, said the proposed U.S. draft of a joint communique amounted to a "checklist" of issues the United States wanted to discuss in the Moscow meetings.

"So the secretary went down each of of the items in that communique to see the degree of convergence that we could achieve," Nitze said.

Soviet news media questions sincerity of Reagan address

MOSCOW (AP) — Official Soviet media, reporting on President Reagan's weekend radio address, questioned the sincerity of Reagan's call for better relations between the superpowers.

Reagan's speech, broadcast Saturday on the Voice of America, was criticized Sunday by a Soviet television commentator and the official news agency Tass, which said Reagan had included deliberate falsifications and raised doubts about U.S. attitudes toward the Geneva summit.

The president's address, broadcast a week before his scheduled departure for the Nov. 19-20 meeting with Gorbachev in the Swiss city, was aimed at the Soviet Union.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said U.S. diplomats in Moscow and Leningrad reported that the address was jammed on some frequencies but heard clearly on others.

Tass said Sunday that Reagan's speech was one of several pre-summit addresses for various regions of the world, but did not say it was aimed at the Soviet people.

"Really...the head of the administration uttered a good many words about peace," Tass said. "He maintained that the U.S.A. had no 'hostile intentions' toward the U.S.S.R. and that 'We do not threaten your nation and never will.'"

"But on the strength of the entire radio address one cannot so far, unfortunately, conclude that the U.S. administration is prepared to go its part of the road to meet the U.S.S.R. and to make its contribution to the cause of preventing an arms race in outer space and of radically curbing it on earth," it said.

"The president is calling for a dialogue in Geneva...but with what is the American side going to the talks?

Witnesses describe plane crash scene

By BOB McHUGH

CLIFFSIDE PARK, N.J. (AP) — Rob Wamsley looked up to see a jet in flames pass low over power lines and nosedive into an apartment building. Ronald Esposito heard a whirl and a bang and reached the scene seconds later to find a mangled plane door covered with blood.

"It was like a meteor, a whizzing sound...then an explosion. It was already in flames when it hit the ground," Wamsley said. "As soon as it hit, that was it. The whole building came down."

"It was ... a total blaze of fire. A lot of people thought it was a nuclear bomb," said Esposito.

At least five people were killed when the corporate jet collided with a smaller plane over this densely populated suburb across the Hudson River from Manhattan at about 5:10 p.m. Sunday. Two victims were found in the smaller plane that landed in nearby Fairview and a third mangled body was found under the wreckage.

The two pilots of the jet were killed when the craft crashed into two two-story apartment buildings here and ignited a fast-spreading fire that engulfed three other homes.

One man was reported missing by relatives who feared he may have been asleep when the fire swept through their house. Crews were using bulldozers to sift through the smoldering rubble.

Domenico Gentiluomo, a 38-year-old forklift operator, said the fire that gutted the house he shared with his wife and three children left him with "not even a penny to start my life now."

"I was sitting in the living room having a cup of coffee, just a cup of coffee, talking," he said. "As soon as I heard the explosion, we ran out. I'm happy with my life."

Esposito said that after he heard "a weeeeeeeeh and then a bang," he raced to the scene to find flames leaping 30 feet in the air and the bloodied wreckage. He also recalled seeing a white baby shoe in the street.

"It just spread like crazy. My feet were bouncing under me (with fear)," said Esposito.

Eugene Nappi, a 30-year-old Fairview firefighter, said he looked up to see the smaller plane's lights flicker as the jet hit.

"I couldn't believe to see those planes crash and know in five seconds there was going to be a disaster all over town," he told The Star-Ledger of Newark.

In Cliffside Park, two burned cars sat in front of the leveled buildings and chunks of brick and mortar littered the street. Metal wreckage from the plane and splintered beams protruded from the rubble.

Gary Dicso, 38, said he was watching television in his apartment when he heard the crash of wreckage hitting an adjacent building and rushed out without shoes or a shirt.

"There was a big yellow ball of fire. I heard the crash and the explosion and got everybody out of the house," he said.

Cliffside Park police Sgt. Robert Linardi said he was in his home

PLANES

The jet's pilot said he saw the Piper Cherokee and the pilot of the smaller plane said he was clear of the area where the Falcon 50 was supposed to be, Nelson said.

The spokesman said no determination was made of the cause of the crash, but that it appeared the air traffic controller acted properly.

Nelson said controllers can do little more than issue warnings when they see planes too near each other.

"I can't shoot him down. I can't send up an F-16 to intercept him," said Nelson. "It's a cooperative system."

Federal Aviation Administration officials plannned to search the wreckage today, and an investigative team was dispatched from Washington.

Harry Woodworth of the National Weather Service at Newark International Airport said there was excellent visibility at the time of the crash although exact conditions at the collision point could not be determined.

Donna LaSalle, 19, described seeing the collision from a shopping center about a half-mile away.

"A small plane was in front, going slow, then all of a sudden a very big plane going fast came up behind it. The big airplane just smashed into the small one," she said.

On the ground, debris was scattered for eight blocks around the Fairview crash site and police Capt. Tom Pierson described the Cliffside Park street as "something out of Mexico City or Beirut."

"As soon as the plane hit, two buildings almost immediately and simultaneously were demolished and burned and the fire immediately spread to three more buildings," said Pierson, of the nearby Fort Lee department.

"I heard a rumbling and the window just turned orange," said Michael Korinko, 16, who was in his bedroom in a building next door. "I just started running, just trying to tell everybody to run away. I just saw a big hunk of metal on fire."

"People were all screaming. People were crying," said Joe Vargas, of Fairview. "People just ran out into the streets. Everybody was very concerned about their relatives, their friends. It's a very small community."

State police Capt. Al Waldron described the jet as "a completely melted heap of metal" and said, "Anybody in there was melted with it."

Melvin Greyson, a spokesman for the Parsippany based Nabisco, said the jet was flying from Morristown, about 25 miles away. Craparotta said the jet was to pick up corporate passengers at Teterboro Airport, about five miles from here.

The victims on the Nabisco jet were Capt. Gregory Miller of Danbury, Conn., and co-pilot Allen Stitt of Highlands, Craparotta said.

It was not known who was piloting the smaller plane. Craparotta said the two bodies inside were those of Lucia Nocha, 51, of Ellenville, N.Y., and a man presumed to be her husband. Their plane had taken off from Caldwell Airport.

Authorities did not know whether the body found beneath the plane was of a person who had been aboard before the crash.

A New York City police department helicopter pilot saw the collision and estimated the planes were at an altitude of about 1,000 feet, Craparotta said.

WOMEN

Mrs. Benninger, 62, marched at President Franklin Roosevelt's funeral and stood in the same Navy pay line as actors Robert Taylor and Gene Kelly while she served in Washington, D.C.

From 1944 to 1945 while working in the Union Railroad Station information booth, Mrs. Benninger directed lost service wives back home after they saw their husbands off to overseas combat. She also directed legless and armless soldiers to Bethesda Naval Hospital in Maryland for artificial limbs.

"It was pretty depressing to see young people brought in on the trains on crutches and with aids.... It hurt...you just wished you could do something to help."

Ms. Craven, 64, changed spark plugs on B-24 and B-29 fighter plane engines at Davis Monthan Field outside of Tuscon.

"I wanted to be an airplane mechanic at 18, but I couldn't join until I was 21," said Ms. Craven, who served in the Womens' Army Corp from 1943 to 1945. Ms. Craven was 18 when her fiance went down with a torpedoed ship. She said she wanted to join right away to get revenge on the Germans, but was forced to wait three years.

Ms. Craven's one order to go overseas to New Guinea was cancelled at the last minute, much to her disappointment.

"I very badly wanted to go overseas...but of course we had our duties over here to see that the planes kept flying."

Ms. Craven said she uses her mechanical skills learned in the WAC at her local factory job working a plastic mold.

Mrs. Aaron said she wanted to get into communications and become an air traffic controller, but she was assigned as a secretary to Camp Elliott Naval Base outside San Diego.

"That's not what I wanted, but that's what I've been doing. I had visions of being an air traffic controller. They had us put our choices, but kinda crossed them out and put us where they wanted," said Mrs. Aaron, who has spent most of her life working as a secretary.

Mrs. Aaron said some men didn't like women enlisting.

"There were a lot of service men that didn't approve of women in the service. A lot of them resented it, but I personally didn't run into it. I guess I was lucky."

Mrs. Benninger said, "I was treated with nothing but respect, believe me. They seemed like they respected us."

Ms. Craven said, "Of course we had a lot to live down. The boys resented us, but they didn't say mean things to us. They just ignored us."

Both Mrs. Aaron and Mrs. Benninger said women shouldn't be combat soldiers.

"I don't think women should serve in combat. Women are just as capable as men. But I firmly believe some things should be left to men and some things should be left to women," Mrs. Aaron said.

"I still feel there are certain things women are not physically able to handle. Emotionally I could hold up to a man," Mrs. Benninger said.

However, Ms. Craven said she would have liked to have been a combat soldier.

"I think I'm equal to do any man's job that I'm physically able to do."

Parades, ceremonies mark Veterans Day

Associated Press

The nation saluted its soldiers on Veterans Day with parades for those who fought and lived and wreath-layings for those who fought and died, while Vietnam veterans remembered the war with events in snowy Colorado and Spokane, Wash.

Parades were planned today in Los Angeles, Columbia, S.C., Boston and New York, where a gay veterans group was excluded from the march sponsored by the American Legion.

"We wouldn't have minded them marching as individuals; we have gays in our organization. But we didn't want them coming in with signs about AIDS," said John Morahan, a spokesman for the New York County American Legion.

John Paine, president of the Gay Veterans' Association, denounced the legion's decision and two court rulings upholding its action. The group said it would protest the decision today, holding a silent vigil at Madison Square Park.

At Fort Mason, near San Francisco, where President Reagan once served, veterans and World War II war brides gathered for a nostalgic celebration with a big band backbeat.

Ed Fisher, 67, who was captured in the Philippines and survived the Bataan Death March, said he was glad Americans remembered the Bataan veterans on Veterans Day.

"But if they forget, that's OK, too," he added. "Maybe the war should be forgotten — maybe all that pain should be left alone."

"We're just glad to be here," said Dale Doss, who spent five years as a prisoner of war in Vietnam, as he addressed a crowd of 1,500 in Tallahassee, Fla., where a new granite memorial honors Florida's 1,939 Vietnam dead.

"Bring 'em home!" some of those in the audience shouted as speakers asserted that some American servicemen may still languish in Southeast Asia.

Maureen Dunn, the wife of a Navy pilot, Lt. Cmdr. Joseph Dunn, who was shot down during the Vietnam War, today planned to deliver 75,000 letters to the Vietnamese ambassador to the United Nations urging his government to "to accelerate efforts to account for" missing servicemen and civilians.

"I'm doing it for Joe and all the guys in Vietnam," said Mrs. Dunn of Randolph, Mass., who is New England director of the National League of Familes of POWs and Missing in Action in Southeast Asia.

In West Hollywood, Calif., a largely gay community, former Russian Army soldiers from World War II joined with gay Vietnam veterans Sunday at a local park following a parade through the recently incorporated city.

"America is for everyone," California Secretary of State March Fong Eu told the crowd, a place where people are not judged by "their heritage or lifestyle ... or the person with whom they sleep."

In Tarzana, Calif., restaurateur Tuan Vinh, a former South Vietnamese Army officer, offered free beer to about 30 American veterans who came to sing songs, swap tales and see slides of Vietnam. "We always remember the time we were in the service," Vinh said. "It is ingrained in our daily thinking and nightly dreaming. We may suffer with it, but we are proud of it."

Anvil shooting is veterans' idea of bang-up celebration

HAMILTON (AP) — Veterans who want to start the Texas Sesquicentennial off with a bang have been reviving the traditional practice of anvil shooting.

The hobby, invented by blacksmiths, involves pouring gunpowder inside a heavy anvil, then placing a lighter anvil on top and lighting a trail of powder that ignites in a loud blast that can be heard miles away.

An anvil shooting at about 5 a.m. today in Hamilton's Pecan Creek Park was to alert residents to the 68th year the Veterans Day tradition has been celebrated.

The sound, similar to a cannon, was first heard in this Central Texas community on Nov. 11, 1918, when the Armistice was signed to end World War I, said John Sanders, vice commander of American Legion Post 222.

On that day, a group of Hamilton residents gathered downtown, curious about rumors that World War I was coming to an end.

"The group had gathered at the railroad station around the telegraph office because that was the means of communication at the time," said Sanders.

"About 4:30 a.m. they got the word (of the Armistice signing) and everybody was delirious," he said. "They decided to shoot the anvils to wake everybody up.

"They started setting 'em off and continued to shoot anvils all day until they ran out of gunpowder. There wasn't an ounce of gunpowder left in town," he said.

STATE

Sanders said anvil shooting Monday probably won't continue all day, but anybody who wants to can try the practice.

"We'll be doing it 'til we get cold, wet, hungry...or run out of gunpowder," he said.

Sanders said the town still has two of the original anvils used on that day in 1918, estimated to be more than 100 years old.

Anvils are heavy steel or iron blocks used by blacksmiths to forge metal.

Sanders said the heavier, 200-pound anvil is placed upside down on the ground and black gunpowder is poured into a hole on top of it.

A trail of gunpowder is run from the hole to the ground and the hole is covered with cardboard. A second, 185-pound anvil is placed on top.

A long metal rod is heated in a bonfire and the red-hot tip is dragged over the gunpowder trail to ignite it.

The gunpowder blows the top anvil into the air, sometimes as high as three feet, Sanders said.

"It comes down wherever it wants to," said Dr. Cyrus Cathey, an American Legion trustee who will help with the shoot Monday. The resulting boom can be heard four to five miles away, he said.

"Initially, we usually have 12 to 15 people (at the shoot), but by the third or fourth boom, people start coming in," said Sanders.

This year's shoot will be dedicated to Vietnam War veterans. Sanders hopes Hamilton can bring it to the rest of Texas during next year's Texas Sesquicentennial.

"We got to thinking what we could do in this community for the Sesquicentennial and decided this was a way we could participate," he said.

"We would love to go down and fire 'em in front of the Alamo, and at Washington on the Brazos," he said.

And at the end of 1986, Sanders believes an anvil should be shot at the San Jacinto Monument, commemorating the battle that led to Texas' independence from Mexico.

Alien problem doesn't offer easy solution

SAN BENITO (AP) — A member of an advisory group investigating illegal alien-detention problems says solving the problems could take a long time.

The Texas Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights ended a two-day meeting Saturday with a tour of Casa Oscar Romero, a Catholic Church-sponsored shelter here which has come under fire from neighbors and city officials because of the number of Central Americans at the home.

A day earlier, the 11-member group had toured a detention center in Bayview where illegal aliens, mostly Central Americans, awaiting deportation or deportation hearings are housed.

It also heard from immigration attorneys and immigration officials at a public hearing in Brownsville.

"Solving this problem is going to be a long process. I really hope that the commission can take a look at expediting their process," committee member Lynn Lipshy of Dallas said Saturday.

"I think there are certainly some administrative issues that bear scrutiny by the commission. And we are going to stake steps to give feedback to the national commission on some administrative issues," Ms. Lipshy said.

SISTER NINFA GARZA, director of Casa Romero, said a policy by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service of letting Central Americans out of detention, but not allowing them to leave the Rio Grande Valley is crowding the shelter.

"Most of these people have families or relatives, a cousin or aunt that they would be able to travel to leave the area and be able to go to the other district," Sister Garza said. "This is what we're trying to work out."

Last summer the number of Central Americans at the shelter swelled to more than 200 per day. Church officials said that many of the Central Americans released from detention had no place to go, so they went to the shelter.

Neighbors had complained and Mayor Cesar Gonzalez recently took a survey of neighbors' feelings on the shelter. He said neighbors were not opposed to the Central Americans being in the United States, but would like the shelter moved out of a residential area.

Church officials said they have no plans to move.

THE COMMITTEE WALKED through the shelter, talked to the transients there and to Sister Garza and other shelter workers. The shelter had approximately 150 residents on Saturday. Most of them were Salvadoran and Nicaraguan, Sister Garza said.

Ms. Lipshy also praised the efforts of church officials, recalling her ancestors who came to the United States from Europe.

"All of my relatives came into this country penniless, uneducated and people like this helped us," she said. "We arrived just like this."

The committee on Friday toured the federal detention center and talked to prisoners, many of whom complained about the food.

An immigration attorney, Thelma Garcia of Harlingen, told the committee that telephone facilities are inadequate and later accused some committee members of not being objective.

But J. Richard Avena, regional director of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, said the committee is not intended to be one-sided.

Other immigration attorneys charged that prisoners did not have enough toiletries and that their clients complained about food and water and lack of proper medical attention.

IMMIGRATION OFFICIALS, answering the charges, said some attorneys exaggerated cases. They said they wanted documentation of neglect or abuses to prisoners.

INS regional commissioner Ed O'Connor also testified he would look into the allegations of neglect and would report to the committee.

Avena said the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights will meet in Laredo in January and the Texas committee could present its findings to the federal panel at that time.

"We have a better idea, not only of the scope of the problem, but of the major concerns that exist on both sides of the issue," Ms. Lipshy said. "Visting Casa Oscar Romero is an experience with a lot of impact, just as visiting the detention center was yesterday."

Norse mythology guides questing couple

AP Laserphoto

An offering of mead is made to Odin, chief of the gods of Norse mythology, by Stephen McNallen, right, and Maddy Hutter, both of Breckinridge, who find spiritual guidance from the old teachings.

BRECKENRIDGE (AP) — In the den of the Breckenridge home of Stephen McNallen and Maddy Hutter is a stack of bumper stickers imprinted with the message: "God rides an eight-legged horse."

In the living room are a red wooden shield, a metal helmet, polished horns and other items that are replicas of weapons and household goods used by the people of Northern Europe at about the time Christianity was new.

On the living room mantle is a carved wooden statue of a bearded old man who is missing an eye. The statue, McNallen said, is a caricature of the face of Odin, the chief of the Norse gods.

McNallen, a 36-year-old man with a full reddish-brown beard, and his wife, Ms. Hutter, a bright-eyed, enthusiastic woman with a British accent, worship the ancient Norse gods.

McNallen earns his living by working in the family oil business. He was born in Breckenridge and was reared as a Roman Catholic. He went to college in Wichita Falls to study political science, then served in the Army, received training as a Ranger, and left after an enlistment of "four years, five days." He spent much of his time in Germany.

He met Ms. Hutter, with whom he has two children, while living in California. A native of England, Ms. Hutter was also reared a Catholic. She studied English at the University of London before coming to America with her first husband.

McNallen said he was the first in the family to turn to Norse mythology as a source of spiritual guidance. He was a devout Christian for many years, McNallen said, "but there came a point where I could no longer believe what I was taught — it went against my better instincts."

So McNallen began to read the literature and explore religious teachings from, among other places, the East and Middle East.

His decision to choose "Asatru," which McNallen says means "belief in the Gods" in old Norse, was not sparked by a religious tract.

Christian suppression worked against Odinists for centuries, but the gods are still "alive and well" and are beginning again to work actively in people's lives.
— Follower of Norse gods

McNallen said he was reading a novel on Vikings for entertainment, not spiritual guidance, when he realized that the "questing, adventuring spirit" and underlying religious beliefs of the Vikings were something that he understood and believed in himself.

Reliable information on the ancient Norse gods was not readily available, McNallen said. Historical records show Asatru was brutally suppressed by Christians in the early part of the Middle Ages, and the religion was not being practiced in modern times, McNallen said.

McNallen said he has reconstructed and updated Asatru and found "it still works as a religion, at least for us (his family). It meets our spiritual needs."

Asatru was not just the religion of the Vikings and Scandinavians. It was the original religion, McNallen said, of many Germanic tribes, such as the Saxons who lived in England. As such, he said, it is particularly suited to the numerous descendants of those people today.

Ceremonies and values of Asatru — many of which are considered traditional American values — were adopted as their own by Christians of the era, McNallen said.

"People don't realize that these values have roots" that go back to ancestors that lived before Christianity was introduced, McNallen said.

Many Christian religious ceremonies and the dates of religious holidays have their roots in old Asatru ceremonies, McNallen said.

Courage, heroism and close family ties are among the values passed on by ancient worshipers of Asatru, McNallen said.

McNallen said Christian suppression worked against Odinists for centuries, but the gods are still "alive and well" and are beginning again to work actively in people's lives. He believes the gods left the scene for reasons that have not been revealed to man.

In the early '70s, when he was exploring the tenets of Odinism, many other people had the same idea, he said.

Though members of the Asatru Free Assembly don't go "door to door" or actively proselytize, McNallen said, there are more than 1,000 Odinists in the U.S. and about 40 in Texas today.

In their home, McNallen and Ms. Hutter publish a newsletter, "The Runestone," for Odinists. They also distribute tapes and literature.

The registered non-profit organization kept a low profile for years, McNallen said, as members "developed a philosophy." Now the AFA is going public so people of similar beliefs can contact them.

McNallen said the public has nothing to fear from his group's religion. During worship, members dress in homemade clothing of the type worn by northern Europeans during the Middle Ages and gather in natural settings such as forests.

Swords are worn, but used only for ceremonial purposes. Human or animal sacrifices are not part of the religion, he said.

McNallen said his group's ceremonies frequently consist of an offering of mead — a wine made from honey — to one of the many gods. The wine is placed in a ceremonial horn and held up to be "charged" by a selected deity.

Thor, the god of Thunder, is a popular god. Thor carried a magic hammer, according to mythology, and hammers are religious symbols for the group.

Followers do not willingly "grovel" or "kiss the feet of anyone," not even their gods, McNallen said. There is no single book or leader to follow, McNallen said, and members of the assembly are encouraged to follow their instincts and the wisdom that is passed down "genetically" from their ancestors.

The group believes that traditional caricatures of the gods as having human shapes and characteristics are really just ways humans use to describe or understand spiritual beings. They believe the gods are real, McNallen said, but not in the physical sense that one might expect.

Still, there have been some minor problems in practicing his beliefs, McNallen said. In California, a printer refused to print their literature "until he talked with his minister." Their neighbors "know they're into something," Ms. Hutter said, but don't bother them about their beliefs.

McNallen said people in the small town of Breckenridge seem to be more tolerant than many of the people he met in the supposedly liberated state of California.

Most people have no idea McNallen practices a different religion.

"I think they meet once a year out in the sticks somewhere," neighbor Sally Satterwhite says.

"Lots of people" in Breckenridge have their own religious beliefs or even their own religions, Ms. Satterwhite said, "and I don't see how this is any different.

McNallen said members of the assembly are also tolerant of other religious groups.

Lease money may have enticed doctors

HOUSTON (AP) — Prosecutors are reviewing lease payments made by a Houston-based medical school to Hermann Hospital in an effort to determine if funds were illegally used to pay extra money to at least three doctors.

A report released last week by state auditors indicated money paid by the University of Texas Health Science Center at Houston for space at the hospital was actually used to pay several doctors in the center's anesthesiology department.

If money was improperly handled, Harris County Assistant District Attorney Don Stricklin said, criminal charges of official misconduct, theft or false entry into a government record could be filed.

The information was first uncovered in June by private investigator Clyde Wilson, who was hired by the Hermann Hospital Estate to look into allegations of possible mismanagement and theft in the charitable trust.

Seven people have been indicted on theft charges in the Hermann Estate investigation. The first criminal trial is scheduled for next month.

"I know these doctors wouldn't go to work for the money that UT was paying from the regular salary budget," Wilson said.

The investigation centers around $181,000 in lease payments made by the center to Hermann Hospital in 1983 and 1984.

Investigators said Hermann officials used the lease money, along with funds from the hospital's regular accounts, to pay $232,000 to three UT doctors, possibly others.

Wilson said Hermann officials want to recover the $51,000 paid to the doctors from hospital funds.

Dr. Joseph C. Gabel, chairman of the UT anesthesiology department, told the Houston Post the payments were not part of any sinister arrangement, only a way to solve a problem. Gabel refused to disclose the doctors' salaries.

Gable said John Porretto, the financial officer for the UT center, and Bill Smith, former hospital administrative director, knew about the arrangement.

Dr. Brian A. Hills, a physiologist, and anesthesiologists Drs. Ezzat Abouleish and James Mayhew were paid additional "consulting fees" by the hospital, Gabel said.

"Of course, you won't come (to an institution) unless you are paid properly. Where the money comes from is up to the administrators," Hills said.

The other two doctors were not at their office Sunday and could not be reached for comment.

Class clown training to be Ringling 'clown with class'

LEWISVILLE (AP) — An 18-year-old boy who said he has always been the class clown has been training with the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Clown College.

Doug Boyd, ringleader of a prank at Lewisville High School in which a chicken farm was set up in an interior courtyard, said he now wants to be a clown with class.

"Chickens were running around everywhere," said David Wright, director of student activities. "But only chickens — they couldn't get the cows over the roof."

Boyd, who is completing a 10-week clown course, will take his finals Saturday at the circus' winter quarters in Venice, Fla. It's a live show that will also serve as an audition before circus producer Kenneth Feld, who could make Boyd an apprentice clown.

Classmates said Boyd's career as a humorist began with pranks at his high school. In another joke, a huge sheet was hung from the top of the school's auditorium. It said, "This school is for sale," and listed the principal's telephone number.

"We had theater together (at the high school). He definitely contributed to the craziness in that class," said senior Kelly Fiore, 17. "When we needed someone to create a weird or bizarre character, Doug could always think of something."

Boyd developed his comical character into Rusty, the clown.

"He got me into clowning," said Ren James, 17, a senior. "I've watched him as Rusty, and Rusty and Doug are two totally different people. He becomes the clown."

STATE IN BRIEF

Body found in woods

BAYTOWN (AP) — The physical characteristics of a body found partially buried in wooded area match a description of an 11-year-old girl who disappeared on Halloween, police say.

The Harris County medical examiner's office in Houston completed an autopsy Sunday, but would not confirm whether the body was that of Mary Loraine Stiles.

The body was found Saturday afternoon near a mosquito-infested pond about 150 yards from the complex where the girl lived, said Baytown police Lt. James Hall.

"This is no longer a case of a missing child," he said. "It's a murder."

Hall declined to discuss possible suspects or leads in the case.

The blonde-haired, blue-eyed girl was last seen about 5:30 p.m. Oct. 31 by her older brother as she was playing outside the family's apartment.

Boy gets transplant

DALLAS (AP) — A spokesman for Children's Medical Center said it is uncertain how long a 3-year-old boy will remain hospitalized after getting a new liver over the weekend.

John Boulware of Corpus Christi returned to the hospital's intensive care unit about 5:30 a.m. Saturday following an operation that began at 7 p.m. Friday, said Anne Cummings, a hospital spokeswoman.

The child was reported in critical but stable condition.

The boy underwent a liver transplant operation because he suffers from a hereditary affliction that creates a deficiency in a chemical needed for proper liver function.

Gas explodes home

FORT WORTH (AP) — Authorities say a natural gas explosion and fire at a southeast-side home occurred after five gas valves in the residence were left in the open position, but were not connected to appliances.

Fire officials were terming Sunday's the blaze, which caused an estimated $45,000 in damage, as "suspicious" in nature.

The explosion at 7:30 a.m. was followed by three small fires that were quickly extinguished, officials said.

Many would allow cancer clinics

By LAWRENCE KILMAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Half of all Americans believe cancer clinics should be allowed to operate in the United States, even if the treatments they offer are opposed by established medicine, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

The nationwide telephone poll of 1,412 respondents also indicated that slightly more than half would seek treatments rejected by the medical community if they were stricken by serious diseases.

Four in 10 of the respondents said they feared one deadly disease more than any other; for the vast majority, that disease was cancer.

The second most commonly feared disease was AIDS, acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Each year, hundreds of Americans receive unproven cancer treatments, from drug therapy to massive doses of vitamins. If the unproven treatments involve drugs, the patients generally have to leave the United States to receive them.

Many of the patients of these clinics contend the treatments saved their lives. But other patients die, and some doctors fear that patients who abandon traditional treatments may be shortening their lives.

Fifty percent of the respondents in the Media General-AP poll said clinics that treat cancer and other diseases in ways opposed by mainstream researchers and physicians should be allowed to operate in the United States, while 36 percent said the clinics should not be allowed to operate. The rest were unsure.

Younger people were more likely than older people, and blacks were more likely than whites, to support the clinics.

If stricken by a serious disease, 52 percent of the respondents said they would seek "a medical treatment that promised a cure" even when the treatment was rejected by the established medical community.

Thirty-six percent said they would not seek such unorthodox treatments, and 12 percent were unsure.

Once again, younger people were more likely than older people, and blacks were more likely than whites, to seek unorthodox treatments. Men were slightly more likely than women to seek such treatments.

Dr. Robert Eyerly, chairman of the American Cancer Society's Committee on Unproven Methods of Cancer Management, said the poll indicated the strength of Americans' fears about cancer and the traditional methods of treating it.

"Because they fear cancer and radiation and chemotherapy, they would seek unproven methods that are less toxic than these because they fear the treatments as much as the disease," he said.

Respondents were also asked if they believed faith healing, diet therapies, vitamins and laetrile were effective in treating cancer and other diseases.

With diet therapies, patients are told to eat specific foods prepared to exacting specifications. Megavitamin therapy is based on the belief that high doses of specific vitamins strengthen the body's ability to destroy cancer.

Faith healing involves the use of prayer, laying on of hands and other practices that seek divine intervention to cure cancer. Laetrile is a drug believed by some to be effective against cancer but which was never shown to be effective in scientific tests.

Thirty-two percent of the respondents said faith healing worked, while 54 percent disagreed. Twenty-three percent said diet therapies alone were effective in treating cancer, while 58 percent disagreed.

Only 15 percent believed large doses of vitamins were effective in treating cancer. When it comes to laetrile, 14 percent said it was effective, 40 percent said it was not effective, and 46 percent were unsure.

"The biggest surprise is the results on diet therapies and megavitamins," said Eyerly. "I thought the food fad stores that have been peddling these things had been making more of an impression than they are. I'm pleased to hear they aren't."

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,412 adults across the country Sept. 1-7. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,400 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations in the sample. That is, if one could have questioned all Americans with telephones, there is only 1 chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this one by more than 3 percentage points.

The questions and the answers

NEW YORK (AP) — Here are the questions used in the Media General-Associated Press poll on unorthodox medical treatments:

1. Is there a deadly disease you fear more than any other, or do you fear all deadly diseases equally?

Fear one disease: 41 percent. Fear all equally: 48 percent. Fear none: 6 percent. Don't know, no answer: 5 percent.

2. Which?

Cancer: 78 percent. AIDS: 23 percent. Heart: 5 percent. Diabetes: 2 percent. Alzheimer's: 2 percent. Emphysema: 1 percent. (Some respondents mentioned more than one disease.)

3. Do you think clinics that treat cancer and other diseases in ways opposed by the established medical community should be allowed to operate in the United States, or not?

Should be: 50 percent. Should not: 36 percent. Don't know, no answer: 14 percent.

4. If you had a serious disease, would you seek a medical treatment that promised a cure that was rejected by the established medical community, or not?

Would seek: 52 percent. Would not: 36 percent. Don't know, no answer: 12 percent.

NATION IN BRIEF

Bishop expects support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The leader of America's Catholic bishops says he expects an imminent worldwide gathering of Roman Catholic leaders to build up rather than rip up sometimes-controversial church changes of the past 20 years.

The gathering, he said today, should reinforce of the idea of strong national bishops' conferences, such as the U.S. conference that has received criticism as well as praise for its broadsides on nuclear weapons, poverty and other thorny issues.

The president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Bishop James Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, said one need for the special synod of bishops in Rome later this month would be "simple: that the synod add its voice to the leadership we have received from the (Second Vatican) Council and the popes on social questions."

His comments came in a speech prepared for the opening session of the U.S. bishops' annual meeting.

Marcos had transplants

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos had two kidney transplants during periods of speculation that he was gravely ill, according to prominent Filipino physicians quoted in a report published Sunday.

The transplants were performed in August 1983 and November 1984 in the Philippines National Kidney Foundation in Manila, The Pittsburgh Press quoted Dr. Enrique Ona and Dr. Potenciano Baccay as saying in a copyright story.

In August 1983 and November 1984, there were rumors that Marcos was gravely ill. After the 1983 rumor died down, Marcos said he suffered only allergies.

Marcos, 68, who celebrated his 20th anniversary Saturday as ruler of the Phillipines, has called presidential elections for Jan. 17. He has insisted for the last three years that his health is good.

Teacher crisis 'improving'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Carnegie Foundation report says the nation is making "slow but steady progress" in addressing a crisis in the teaching profession, with pay increases outstripping inflation and more people choosing teaching as a career than predicted.

Ernest L. Boyer, the president of the foundation, said Sunday there are "grounds for cautious hope," but added: "The challenge confronting teaching in this country is far greater than its achievements."

He urged immediate action to tighten professional standards, boost teachers' pay and recruit stand-out students for the job.

Transplant patient dies

CHICAGO (AP) — A 2-year-old who had already undergone three liver transplants and whose illness drew financial contributions from hundreds of well-wishers has died while awaiting a fourth operation.

Chasity Gibson, 2, died of kidney and Cardiac failure on Sunday, said Mary Ann Redeker, a spokeswoman for Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

Doctors had been planning a fourth transplant for Chasity but "her condition worsened during the night," Ms. Redeker said.

Residents throughout western Kentucky, southern Indiana and Illinois have given money over the past two years to help pay Chasity's medical bills.

Mike Hite, a neighbor and bank manager who served as treasurer of Chasity's medical fund, said $204,000 was in the account.

Benson shown respect

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Though not yet announced as the 13th president of the Mormon Church, Ezra Taft Benson, taking his place in the Salt Lake Tabernacle for a meeting of young women, smiled and waved and was accorded the respect Mormons pay their president and prophet.

The capacity crowd stood Sunday night until Benson motioned them to be seated.

The church's governing body, the Council of the Twelve, met earlier Sunday in the upper room of the Salt Lake Temple to choose a successor to President Spencer W. Kimball, who died Tuesday at age 90.

Although no announcement was made after the meeting, it was expected that Benson, 86, as senior member of the council the traditional successor to the church's highest post, had been named as "prophet, seer and revelator" and that he choose his counselors to make the new First Presidency.

Water projects bill stirs fans, fighters

WASHINGTON (AP) — To critics, it's an overloaded pork barrel. To defenders like Rep. E. Clay Shaw Jr., R-Fla., it's "pure Sizzlean."

But both sides agree on one thing: the $20 billion Corps of Engineers authorization package pending in the House is the biggest water projects bill Congress has seen in 15 years.

Few things interest members of Congress more than federal spending in their districts, and the omnibus water project legislation is capturing the attention of members from all corners of the country.

It contains some 370 proposals for flood control and hydroelectric dams, river widenings, harbor deepenings, drinking water systems, shoreline protections and tangential items like $61 million for a pair of bridges between Kentucky and southern Ohio.

But with all these carrots is a stick: language to require local beneficiaries to pay a greater share of the cost of projects that generally have been financed mostly out of a federal Treasury now riddled by budget deficits.

The issue of cost-sharing is the principal reason why a big omnibus water projects bill hasn't become law since 1970 and why Congress hasn't authorized any new projects in almost a decade.

Succeeding where previous administrations failed, the Reagan White House has convinced Capitol Hill that cost-sharing is overdue.

When House debate began last week, no members attacked the overall package, although some objected to specific proposals, usually those outside their own districts.

For example, Rep. Bob Edgar, D-Pa., who wanted to know why Mississippi River flood control projects were exempted from cost-sharing. But Rep. Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, was quick to defend the plan.

Rep. Robert Roe, D-N.J., as chairman of the Public Works water resources subcommittee, put together a measure that would authorize the projects. But members must deal with Whitten's committee to get the separate legislation needed to provide the money.

Whitten isn't the only congressman working to protect his own district's interests in the bill.

Roe is from New Jersey, and so is James Howard, the Democrat who chairs the Public Works Committee. Their state is in line for some 27 projects worth more than $630 million. In addition, it shares five projects worth $531 million with New York.

New Jersey's list is second only to California's: some 30 projects worth more than $2 billion, including a flood protection system for the Santa Ana River, the bill's most expensive at $1.21 billion.

The Kentucky-Ohio bridges are being officially described as navigation projects. They are being unofficially described by congressional aides as going-away presents for Kentucky's Gene Snyder, the ranking Republican on Public Works who is retiring next year.

Besides the congressional infighting over which state will get what, the measure has drawn outside criticism.

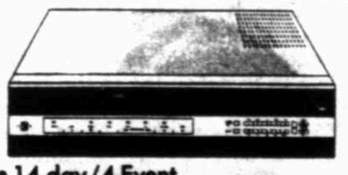

The Office of Management and Budget said in a policy statement last week that the House measure is not acceptable because it authorizes too many projects "of dubious economic or environmental benefit."

Brent Blackwelder, director of water resources for the Environmental Policy Institute, complained: "No public criteria for selection of projects was ever given. ... No attempt has been made ... to prioritize water projects in terms of need or cost-effectiveness."

Hodel's concern

Donald Hodel made an interesting and thought-provoking point while in Midland the other day. It wasn't a new point, just one that needs to be hammered home time and again until this nation's leaders sit up and take notice.

The Secretary of the Interior merely reiterated the point that the United States will be facing another "energy crisis" a few years down the road and needs to get cracking to avoid being caught unprepared again.

The natural tendency on the part of a lot of naive Americans will be to disbelieve that this country can ever again face the kind of energy crunch that hit in the early 1970s. After all, isn't there a worldwide "glut" of oil currently? Hasn't the price of gasoline been dropping in recent months?

Yes, on both counts. But in a sense that's a primary reason for this nation's energy "problem." The Congress typically will not address a situation until the nation's back is up against a wall. That's too late. The lack of a comprehensive, sensible energy policy at this time — even after the hard lessons of the past decade — is the best example of this failing.

What should this nation be doing to prepare for the coming energy crunch Hodel and others in the energy business are saying will come in five to seven years?

First and foremost, the Congress must enact an energy policy that deals with the situation realistically by giving energy producers the ability to search for and produce energy at a profit. Drilling an oilwell isn't like any other business in the world. It's costly and risky, and in other businesses if the attempt fails, the entrepreneur still has something to show for it. Not so in the oil business. If the oilman fails, he only has a hole in the ground, nothing else.

Even though there's an abundance of oil on the world market at this time, the domestic oil industry must be maintained as strong as possible because of the two- to three-year lag time between prospect to pipeline. Such a lag in the instance of an energy crunch will be disastrous.

All types of energy must be developed — coal, nuclear, even solar — if this nation is to achieve energy independence. Simply relying on oil in this day and age isn't realistic, particularly in light of the fact the U.S. can't produce enough oil to meet even its own domestic demand.

Environmental concerns, while a consideration, must be addressed appropriately in light of the situation. For too long, this nation has allowed the environmentalists to set its policies in regard to energy, and the nation has suffered as a whole because of that fact. Offshore oil is the only realistic source for meaningful future supplies of oil and must be utilized, regardless of the inherent dangers.

Hodel made legitimate points in his Midland visit. The United States should not procrastinate where energy is concerned. If it does, it will be forced to relearn the lessons of the recent past once again.

Another View:

Great spaghetti spat

The renewal of the Pasta War is instructive. It demonstrates the ineffectiveness of present treaty structures to work out solutions to old problems, and it demonstrates the futility of retaliation, however righteous the indignation.

The anger of the United States with the European Economic Community is understandable. This is an old dispute, pulled back from the brink once before. The Europeans should have eased the barriers against American citrus and permitted the U.S. exporters a fairer competition with the Mediterranean producers. But getting an agreement out of the 10 community nations is never easy, and on this subject at this time — as the community anticipates the January entry of Spain, another major citrus producer — decision-making seemed an impossibility.

So the United States slapped an enormous tariff on Italian pasta — a move that will bring tears to the eyes of the millions of Americans who cherish the product, and that will please only the U.S. pasta producers. The Europeans, unrepentant, immediately retaliated with restrictions on lemon and nut imports. So Italy, one of America's most cooperative allies, and California growers are to be punished for everybody's sins.

A day after the lemon-and-pasta crunch the American and European negotiators resolved another stalled agreement — this one concerning the flood of European steel shipments that seemed to exceed the limits agreed to earlier. That served to show that agreements could be had, sometimes.

The Europeans have defended their Mediterranean citrus preferences as an important contribution to key economies in the region, and so they are. Their piety, however, need not have prevented steps to narrow the difference between tariffs for Mediterranean and American products, as recommended within the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Europeans have snarled back, noting the preferences extended by the United States to selected hemispheric neighbors through the Caribbean Basin Initiative. The comparison is not altogether fair, in that the United States maintained in the Caribbean agreement a provision to permit trading partners to lodge the very kind of fairness challenge that the United States brought on Mediterranean citrus.

The penalties will cost Italian pasta makers about $32 million, and U.S. lemon and nut growers will lose about the same. That hardly seems worth the trouble, given the scale of U.S.-European Community trade. In the first nine months of this year the United States exported $34.3 billion in merchandise to the European community and imported $50 billion in goods. Last year U.S. exports to the community were 22 percent of total American exports, and European Community shipments were 18 percent of the total imports into the United States.

The impatience in Washington that renewed the Pasta War was probably not all due to the indecisive Europeans. The pressure for protectionism being generated in Congress raises the risk of further foolishness.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Nov. 11, the 315th day of 1985. There are 50 days left in the year. This is Veterans Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 11, 1918, fighting in World War I came to an end with the signing of an armistice between the Allies and Germany inside a railroad car in the forest of Compiegne in France.

On this date:

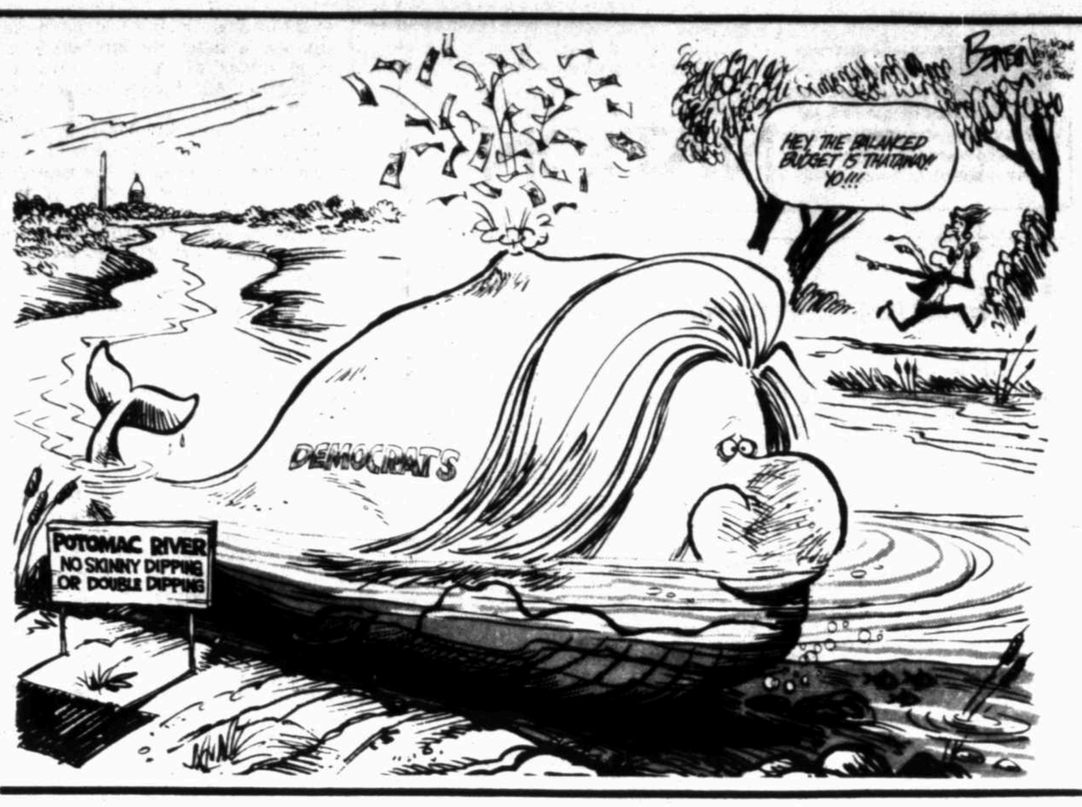

In 1620, 41 Pilgrims signed a compact aboard the Mayflower, which was anchored off the Massachusetts coast. The compact called for a "body politick" to enact "just and equal laws."

In 1778, Iroquois Indians in central New York state killed some 40 people in the Cherry Valley Massacre.

In 1889, Washington became the 42nd state.

In 1921, President Warren G. Harding dedicated the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery. The inscription on the tomb reads, "Here rests in honored glory an American Soldier known but to God."

In 1939, Kate Smith first sang Irving Berlin's "God Bless America" on network radio.

McFarlane thinks POWs still held

WASHINGTON — Veterans Day is an appropriate occasion to remind Americans once again that nearly 2,500 U.S. military men remain unaccounted for in Southeast Asia 10 years after the war ended. Some of them are almost certainly alive — on the authority of no less than the president's national security adviser.

Jack Anderson

Yet for all its bold talk, the Reagan regime has done little more than previous administrations to help these men in their unimaginable agony. The Defense Intelligence Agency, while professing great concern about reported sightings of live American prisoners in Vietnam and Laos, has systematically tried either to squelch the reports or discredit them.

According to our sources, the Pentagon has received more than 400 reports since 1981 of live American prisoners. The Defense Intelligence Agency has been unable to discredit more than 100 of these eyewitness reports, even counting some pre-1981 sightings. Supposedly, they are still under investigation.

Granted, this administration, like its predecessors, is in a frustrating position. The Vietnamese flatly deny that they have American prisoners-of-war. Faced with this official obstinacy, the White House's only option seems to be a Rambo-style raid to liberate the POWs. But the intelligence information isn't up-to-date enough to guarantee a fair chance of success, even if the administration were willing to risk such an operation.

Rather than acknowledge its impotence, the Pentagon resorts to a shameful game of semantics over the word "evidence." Unable to deny that sightings have been reported, the military simply challenges the reliability of the evidence, demanding proof or corroboration that is impossible to get.

There's a double standard at work. We made a careful study of the live-sighting reports; then compared them with the top-secret reports that give evidence of Soviet arms-control violations.

The sources of information are similar in both cases: "humint" or human intelligence from refugees and other eyewitnesses, supplemented by spy satellite data. No one has come up with an official Vietnamese document acknowledging the existence of American POWs; but then, no one has come up with an official Soviet document admitting arms treaty violations, either.

But the comparison makes clear that the White House has accepted far flimsier evidence on arms-control breaches — sometimes even called "strong evidence" in the reports — than it is willing to accept on live POWs.

Indeed, National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane made a startling admission last month in remarks that he thought were off the record. A former congressman (and a staunch conservative at that) taped the remarks and released them to friends in the media.

"I think there have to be live Americans there," said McFarlane, stressing that this was only his personal opinion. He paid obeisance to the official line that the evidence wasn't conclusive, but then said: "There is quite a lot of evidence given by people who have no ulterior motives and no reason to lie, and they're telling things that they have seen."

Finally, McFarlane admitted that the administration hasn't done enough to gather intelligence on the missing Americans. "And that's bad," he said. "That's a failure."

If admission of error is the first step toward correcting it, maybe the government is finally making some progress.

BARBERSHOP BLUES: President Reagan strode into the White House barbershop the other day for a haircut. The television set was blaring, with ex-Secretary of State Al Haig on camera. Barber Milton Pitts offered to turn off the set. "No," said the president, "let's hear what Al has to say." Afterward, Pitts told the president that Richard Nixon had once entered the barbershop while the TV was on. An aide had turned it on deliberately, said Pitts, "so the old man can hear what they're saying about us." But Nixon went straight to the set and switched it off, muttering that he didn't want to listen to the slander.

MENGELE INQUEST: With a haste that almost seemed born of relief, government officials accepted the findings of forensic experts who declared that skeletal remains dug up in Brazil earlier this year were those of Dr. Josef Mengele, the Nazi "Angel of Death." But some of the war criminal's victims are not convinced. An organization called CANDLES, made up of twins who survived Mengele's ghastly experiments at Auschwitz, will hold an "inquest" this week in Terre Hauteto look into whether the exhumation in Brazil was part of a gigantic hoax.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Certain self-important citizens of this supposedly republican capital have become obsessed with the visit of Britain's Prince Charles and Princess Diana. Members of Congress, high officials and the merely wealthy have gone to extravagant lengths to make sure they'll be able to fawn personally before the royal couple. Of course, there have always been highfalutin Americans who regret that George Washington didn't accept a crown — and then appoint a whole retinue of dukes and lords and other royal lackeys. Fortunately, most Americans — outside Washington, that is — regard the visit as a non-event. We second the motion.

EVANS & NOVAK

Falwell's collection plate suffers

WASHINGTON — Far-flung political and social operations by the Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder and head of the Moral Majority, are incurring a multimillion-dollar deficit that deeply concerns other New Right leaders.

Rowland Evans

Donations are falling below what is needed to finance Falwell's ambitious expansion plans, especially for his Liberty University in Lynchburg, Va. The drop in contributions is attributed partly to controversy caused by the evangelist's support of South Africa's white regime, partly by anti-abortion resentment over his early presidential endorsement of Vice President George Bush.

Robert Novak

Falwell also is suffering from the loss of two key staffers: Ron Godwin, his political mastermind who built the Moral Majority from scratch, and public relations expert Cal Thomas, who has returned to journalism.

NOBODY TOLD RON

The strange word reported from the White House West Wing is that President Reagan did not learn for five days what a National Security Council (NSC) staffer, Rear Adm. John Poindexter, knew on Nov. 8: Ukrainian seaman Miroslav Medvid reportedly slashed his wrists when forced back on a Soviet grain ship in New Orleans.

Not until Nov. 13 was the president informed. He was described as perplexed by domestic White House aides who are furious over the handling of the Medvid affair. In particular, these aides were outraged that a Soviet lawyer was present while Medvid was interviewed by U.S. authorities.

But the State Department contends the seaman's case was handled according to the U.S.-Soviet consular agreement. State and NSC specialists see the Medvid affair deflecting concentration from preparation for the Geneva summit and want to dispose of it quickly.

TEDDY IN '88

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is dropping broad hints of his desire for another presidential try by seeking out leaders of the Democratic Party's moderate-to-conservative wing and obliquely asking for their support.

Kennedy received encouragement from at least one moderate Senate colleague. But most of these less-than-liberal politicians approached by him are uninterested. They have their eyes on Gov. Charles Robb of Virginia, especially after last Tuesday's Democratic sweep in his state.

A footnote: Kennedy wants to dull his super-liberal image by seeking to build support in Texas, not only with labor and minority groups but right-of-center Democrats. Former conservative lieutenant governor Ben Barnes ran a fund-raiser for Kennedy on his last trip to the state. The senator also keeps in touch with two other conservative Texas Democrats: former Democratic National chairman Robert Strauss and former White House press secretary George Christian.

SUBBING FOR JESSE

With Sen. Jesse Helms suddenly abandoning his plans to accompany President Reagan to the Geneva summit, conservative hopes are riding on Sen. Malcolm Wallop of Wyoming to counteract State Department influence there.

Helms had been arguing with his key political adviser, Tom Ellis, that his presence as chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee was needed here, with farm legislation on tap. But he had decided to go until our report of those plans. He then accused aides of leaking the news and canceled his plans

The energy bill may also keep Wallop in Washington.

But other conservatives — former U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, maybe evangelist Pat Robertson and possibly Ellis — will be in Geneva. In addition, a small, potent senatorial delegation is seeking a last-minute Oval Office chat with Reagan before he heads for Geneva to urge him to hang tough.

SOVIETS LOSE CHAMPAGNE

Deputy White House Press Secretary Ed Djerejian lost a bottle of champagne when he bet a colleague the Soviets never would print two truthful charges President Reagan made in his interview with four Russian journalists.

He charged that the Soviets booby-trap children's toys in Afghanistan and that post-war Soviet conduct in Eastern Europe violated all their promises to the West.

When the government newspaper Izvestia finally published the president's interview, Djerejian found he was wrong on the booby-trapped toys, right on Eastern Europe. But since his wager was a package bet, he had to fork over the champagne.

CHARLEY REESE

Congress should set controls

A great many of the nation's financial problems, including the current crisis in the farm credit system, stem from a decision some years ago to deregulate interest rates.

Charley Reese

A money-lending business has to charge more for the money it lends than it pays for the money it gets from depositors or investors. Interest is the price of money. You can't sell money at a loss any more than you can sell wheat at a loss and stay in business.

The key factor then in the money-lending business is the spread between what is paid for money on the wholesale level so to speak and what is paid for money on the retail level. When the federal government lifted the ceiling on what could be paid for money, those wholesale prices naturally went up and so, too, did the retail prices.

Farm banks get their money basically by selling bonds. They have to offer a high enough interest rate to attract bond buyers. Then they have to charge the farmer a high enough rate to pay the bond holder plus the overhead.

The situation now is that so many farmers are in default or in danger of default that the farm banks themselves are in danger of defaulting on the bonds. That's why they are in Congress now asking for about $6 billion in tax bucks.

The best solution is for Congress to re-impose control on interest rates. In other words, impose price controls on money.

The principle that government can regulate the price of money is well established. There are still laws against usury — an exorbitant price — though many lawmakers have peculiar ideas of what constitutes usurious rates. If they keep raising the ceiling on usury, there won't be much difference between normal business and loan-sharking. That will put a lot of finger-breakers in the unemployment lines.

Money is not a commodity even though lobbyists and toadies for the money-lending business always claim it is. Money is a creature of government. The amount in circulation is controlled by government. In our case, the Congress foolishly delegated this authority to the central bank. Nevertheless the Federal Reserve was created by Congress and could be abolished or modified by Congress anytime there is a majority with the guts to defy the money-lending lobby.

The pieces of paper labeled Federal Reserve Notes are backed by nothing but the good faith and credit of the government. That's a fancy way of saying they are backed by the power of the government to tax our labor. They are also backed by the legal tender law which compels us to accept them at their face value for all debts even though they aren't worth their face value.

To paraphrase William Jennings Bryan, the American people are being crucified on the cross of interest rates. The price of money is built into every product and service we buy. It is built into every tax bill from every level of government. When you consider the interest paid on borrowed money and built into the price of the good in the whole long line of transactions from raw materials to finished product, you can see that most of us are in effect working for money-lenders.

High interest rates also tend to divert savings into past consumption (debt paper) away from production.

An old banker with a martini nose said once, "There ain't but two kinds of people in the world: those who pay interest and those who collect it." I realize that you will think this column stinks if you are on the collecting side of the equation.

Still, if Congress imposed price control on interest which could be paid, then the price of money lent would fall and we might yet avoid national insolvency.

A money lender is entitled to a profit. I'm not against a reasonable spread. I'm just saying Congress had better cap the price at the wholesale level before the economy has a seizure.

Honoring dead

South African minister of Defense General Magnus Malan lays a wreath to the unknown soldier in Kempton Park, on the outskirts of Johannesburg, as part of a country-wide tribute to the war dead.

Foreign blacks must leave South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The leading financial newspaper said today that the government is planning to send home hundreds of thousands of foreign black workers in a "mad and provocative act" certain to anger Western countries.

The Department of Manpower had no immediate comment on the report in Business Day, and said it was preparing a formal reply.

Without citing sources, Business Day said it had learned the State Security Council, a body of senior military and government officials, had decided on the repatriation. The paper gave few details and no figures.

President P.W. Botha has said in recent months that if foreign sanctions against South Africa drive up unemployment, the government will have no option but to send home foreign workers to ensure that South Africans have jobs.

Meanwhile, police headquarters reported scattered rioting in 14 black and mixed-race townships in the 24 hours that ended this morning. There were no new deaths in the 15-month-old anti-apartheid unrest that has left more than 800 dead.

Incidents of rock-throwing and arson broke out in Mamelodi, a black township near Pretoria that previously had escaped involvement in the violence, police said. They reported 57 arrests.

Police reported Sunday that four blacks died in anti-apartheid violence over the weekend. They also said a policeman was shot and wounded in a black neighborhood near Worcester in Cape province.

In Cape Town, relatives of arrested activists said Sunday at least 32 detainees had begun a hunger strike at Pollsmoor Prison to demand the release of all people held under state-of-emergency powers imposed in the western Cape last month.

WORLD

The government says about 1.5 million blacks from neighboring countries work in South Africa, but only about 350,000 are in the country legally.

About 80 percent of the legal workers are employed by the mining industry, with 200,000 coming from Lesotho and Mozambique. Income from migrant laborers in South Africa accounts for more than half of Lesotho's gross national product.

In a front-page editorial accompanying its news story, Business Day said repatriating foreigners also would strengthen the move among foreign countries to impose economic sanctions on South Africa, and lead to further devalue the already battered currency, the rand.

"Pretoria is about to put the boot into the economies of at least two of our neighbors, Lesotho and Mozambique, in a clear act of defiance and provocation that will rebound heavily on our own economy," the editorial said.

Clive Knobbs, president of the Chamber of Mines, the association of mine owners, said about 350,000 of the 700,000 black miners employed by South Africa's largest industry are foreigners, and that they would be very hard to replace.

"It would result in enormous loss of revenue, affect production and productivity and they supply of contracts," Knobbs said. "It would take years for us to recover. It also presupposes we could find the people (locally) to replace the migrant laborers."

Although President Reagan and Britain's prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, have fought stiff sanctions, Botha "is giving our allies and trading partners...this mad and provocative act," the paper said. "If this be true, we are inviting retaliation, especially over our foreign debt repayments."

Hussein: Arab flag to fly over Jerusalem

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein told military cadets that the "Arab flag" will soon fly over Jerusalem, and warned of a crackdown against Syrian rebels in an overture to the Arab neighbor that opposes his plan for peace with Israel.

Meanwhile, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, who has joined Hussein in proposing the plan for peace with the Jewish state, met today with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in Cairo, and Mubarak dispatched his foreign minister to Amman with a message for Hussein about future moves for peace in the Middle East.

The message carried by Esmat Abdel-Meguid was reported to center on Arafat's "Cairo declaration," made in the Egyptian capital Thursday, in which the Palestine Liberation Organization leader disavowed terrorist attacks on civilians "anywhere."

Arafat, however, said in an television interview taped in Cairo the following day and broadcast in Abu Dhabi on Sunday that his Palestinian group remained committed to "escalating armed struggle inside the (Israeli) occupied territories."

King Hussein, whose plan with Arafat calls for Israel to relinquish lands seized in the 1967 Middle East War in exchange for peace, told a military graduating class that the West Bank's major city lost in that conflict will soon be under Arab control again.

"It will not be long before the day that the Arab flag will fly over Jerusalem and the voices (from the mosques) will cry, 'God is great' and the bells will ring from the churches," Hussein said at the Royal Military Academy in Amman.

Israel, which captured the Old City of eastern Jerusalem from Jordan in 1967 and later annexed it, has said it will never relinquish control over the site, holy to Jews, Christians and Moslems alike.

Peace, Hussein said, should be based on "right and justice" and should restore "the occupied territories to their legitimate owners." He did not say how Arabs would regain control over Jerusalem.

Jordan seeks negotiations with Israel through an international peace conference including the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council, the PLO, and all other parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Israel seeks direct negotiations with Jordan. Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres told members of his Labor Party on Saturday that Jordan and Israel were "very close" to holding negotiations.

Syria, the major Arab foe of Arafat, has opposed Hussein's plan. In an open letter Sunday to his prime minister, Zaid Rifai, Hussein said he had only recently discovered that Syrian dissidents opposed to President Hafez al-Assad's government were being harbored in Jordan.

"Suddenly the truth is revealed," Hussein said in the letter, read in part on state-run television. "We realize what we had not known."

"It turns out that some who did have a connection to the bloody events in Syria were present in our quarters" and were sheltered by "those whose hearts were devious and disguised in the clothes of our religion," Hussein's letter said.

Jordan is one of the few Arab nations on relatively good terms with the Moslem Brotherhood, a fundamentalist group Syria considers responsible for assassinations and bombings that culminated in the 1982 battle of Hama.

Colombian leader tried to negotiate with rebels

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — President Belisario Betancur said at a memorial Mass Sunday that he tried to negotiate with leftist guerrillas who occupied the Palace of Justice during a 28-hour siege that left at least 109 people dead.

Among the victims were 12 Supreme Court judges, and the 11 surviving court members boycotted the Mass held at the National Cathedral.

The Bogota newspaper El Tiempo said on Saturday the judges contend Betancur refused to negotiate with the guerrillas of the April 19 Movement, known as M-19.

Sunday night, the official Cuban news agency Prensa Latina quoted an M-19 leader, identified only as Commandante Alonso, as saying that if the guerrillas had known the military would attack they would not have taken the building by force.

The report, monitored in Mexico City, quoted the rebel leader as saying the guerrillas had expected the army to intervene, but thought the government would begin negotiations after about 10 hours.

Commandante Alonso said 55 rebels participated in the assault, including eight women, and all were killed along with 53 court officials and civilians who were "sacrificed deliberately by the army," the news agency reported.

Prensa Latina said the guerrilla leader spoke at a "clandestine news conference for foreign reporters" in Bogota, but did not say who attended.

Betancur arrived on foot at the cathedral, located on the same plaza as the Palace of Justice. He led a group of Cabinet ministers, generals and other government officials past a file of presidential guards.

The president glanced briefly at the fire-blackened Palace of Justice as he entered the cathedral where former Colombian presidents and foreign diplomats were among the audience.

Following the memorial service, broadcast on national radio and television, Betancur said in a speech at the cathedral that he did everything possible to save the lives of those trapped inside the building with the rebels.

But he said the government "waited in vain for a response to a dialogue and solution within the law that never was accepted" by the guerrillas of the M-19, who take their name from April 1970 elections they claim were fraudulent.

Betancur called Wednesday's attack on the Palace of Justice "the most inhuman and irrational that our country has suffered."

He said his only option was to remain "loyal to my oath of office and the constitution because my responsibility is to those who live and will live in the future in our country."

The army seized the Palace of Justice Thursday after dynamiting through the building's walls following gun battles and a fire that swept through much of the five-story marble building. According to government officials, at least 41 guerrillas were involved in the takeover and all were killed.

Betancur said on television Thursday that he took responsibility for the military action and the demand for the rebels to surrender "was not negotiable." He also said the only thing the government was willing to offer the guerrillas was their lives and a fair trial.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Hostages begged to live

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Army cannon fire killed several hostages, and a guerrilla executed a Supreme Court justice with a shot in the head at point-blank range during the rebel takeover of the Palace of Justice, a survivor was quoted as saying in an interview published Saturday.

The survivor, Supreme Court Judge Humberto Murcia, was quoted in the interview with the respected Bogota daily El Tiempo as saying hostages begged on their knees for leftist terrorists to spare them, and pleaded with the army to halt its all-out assault.

The siege started at midday Wednesday and ended 28 hours later. At least 109 people died, including 12 justices, 17 soldiers and all 41 of the leftist guerrillas, according to official reports.

Murcia was quoted as saying he hid with three others in his office when the takeover of the five-story building in the heart of Bogota began. "We just lay there quietly on the floor because bursts of submachine gun fire went on without stopping. Then there were explosions that sent parts of the walls crashing down."

Elections disputed

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — Amid charges that the elections were rigged, the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party claimed victory Sunday in all 51 mayoralties in Nuevo Leon state.

Officials of the ruling party, known simply as PRI, said their candidate had a 3-to-1 lead in the state capital of Monterrey with 22 percent of the vote counted. They refused to release their count.

Immediately, however, the opposition National Action Party said its count of 20 percent of the vote showed the PRI was losing Monterrey. The officials of the PAN, as the opposition is called, also refused to release their count.

PAN candidates and officials accused the PRI of paying people to vote, distributing phony voter credentials and changing polling places at the last minute to confuse voters. The PRI denied the charges.

Munich center opens

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — President Richard von Weizsaecker on Sunday opened Munich's huge new Culture Center, built on the site of the tavern where Adolf Hitler started his Beer Hall Putsch on Nov. 8, 1923.

The Nazi leader's attempt to seize power was put down in bloody street fighting and Hitler was sentenced to five years in jail. He was released after serving less than nine months and gained power in 1933 when he was named chancellor.

On Nov. 8, 1938, a bomb exploded at the Buergerbraeukeller beer hall moments after Hitler and other Nazi leaders left the building. The bomb killed seven people and wounded 63 but the Nazis escaped unhurt.

'Air' smoker charged

LONDON (AP) — A psychologist who insisted on smoking a cigar in the no-smoking section of a TWA jetliner has been charged with assault, Scotland Yard said Sunday.

Steven Varvaris, 52, of Jackson, Miss., will appear Monday in Uxbridge Magistrates Court on the charge of assault "occasioning actual bodily harm," said Scotland Yard spokeswoman Marion Irving.

Cooler evening forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders may want to put an extra blanket on the bed tonight as cooler temperatures are expected in the area, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Mostly cloudy skies and a less than 20 percent chance of light rain are expected to pull temperatures down to a low in the lower 40s tonight, forecasters said. Tuesday's skies will become partly cloudy with continued cool temperatures,reaching a high in the lower 60s. Winds will be from the southeast at 5 to 10 mph tonight, increasing from the south Tuesday to less than 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 72 was 13 degrees below the record set in 1964. This morning's low was 23 degrees above the 1950 record of 16 degrees.

For the month to date, the area has received 0.07 of an inch of rain, pushing the yearly total to 16.35 inches, which is about 3 inches more than the average for this area.

STATE

Residents of an East Texas apartment complex were evacuated early today after heavy rains prompted by a stationary cold front flooded some streets and underpasses and prompted travel advisories.

Henderson police said about 75 residents of an eastside apartment building were ordered to leave about 4 a.m. after a small, unnamed creek nearby overflowed its banks.

"Water was up past the electrical outlets inside the apartments," said a police spokeswoman who declined to be identified.

The National Weather Service posted a flash flood watch for the eastern portion of North Texas, where some street flooding was also reported in the Longview area.

"We have had some bridges closed most of the night in the downtown area," said Jan Escobar, a police dispatcher. "Some of the streets were near Davis Creek."

Dorothy Johnson, a dispatcher for the Rusk County sheriff's office, said some streets in downtown Henderson were also closed.

The front stretched from near Texarkana to the Hill Country and westward to the Pecos River. Other showers and thunderstorms developed ahead of the front over portions of South Central Texas, the Coastal Bend and the lower Rio Grande valley.

A travelers' advisory was posted for the Permian Basin because of dense fog.

Elvin Hayes fears for college athletics

Ex-UH, NBA star sees wasteland developing

NEW YORK (AP) — Former National Basketball Association star Elvin Hayes, who recently re-enrolled at the University of Houston, says that college athletic programs are in danger of becoming "wastelands"unless more attention is paid to the academic performance of student-athletes.

"We can no longer afford to be complacent concerning the plight of student-athletes," the 39-year-old Hayes writes in the December issue of the magazine, Newsweek On Campus. "All too often, they are dumped aside once their four years of eligibility have lapsed.

"The institutions that courted and wooed them as high school recruits are the ones that shun them once those athletes can no longer produce revenue for the school," added Hayes, a two-time All-American at Houston and The Associated Press' Player of the Year in 1968. "The responsibility for graduating the athletes rests with both the students and institutions in which they enrolled."

Hayes holds the NBA record for most regular-season games played (1,303) and is the third-leading scorer in the league's history (27,313 points).

Although his pro basketball career left him financially secure, Hayes, now a senior at the university, laments that he didn't take advantage of the educational opportunities when he was an undergraduate during the late 1960s. He feels his return to school will fill a void in his life.

"I feel that my accomplishments would be incomplete without a college degree," he writes.

Same Old Oilers back

By JOHN F. BONFATTI

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — He was the leading runner Sunday in the Buffalo Bills 20-0 shutout of the Houston Oilers, but quarterback Bruce Mathison said he didn't see his future as a ball carrier.

"You have to remember that I played at Nebraska and they use that option all the time so I know how to run," said Mathison, who took over for the starter in the Bills' first eight games, Vince Ferragamo.

"I'm going to run if they give me the opportunity to, but I'd rather throw the ball or hand it off to someone," said Mathison, who rushed for more yards (57) than any Buffalo quarterback since M.C. Reynolds' 65 yards in 1961.

Mathison, who joined came to Buffalo after being waived by the San Diego Chargers following the first game of the season, gave the 2-8 Bills the flexibility they lacked in the immobile Ferragamo.

"Mathison hurt us a couple of times when Ferragamo probably wouldn't have," conceded cornerback Patrick Allen of the Oilers, who snapped a three-game winning streak and dropped to 4-6.

But the Oilers' own ineptitude accounted for the victory as much as anything the Bills did.

Houston entered the game the second-ranked AFC team in the giveaway-takeaway ratio with plus 6, and that ranking plumetted in the steady rain as quarterback Warren Moon threw three interceptions and Houston also lost three fumbles.

The Bills scored 13 points on the six Houston turnovers.

The Buffalo scores came on two Scott Norwood field goals, Mathison's 5-yard run and a 2-yard touchdown scramble by Greg Bell.

The shutout, more a tribute to Houston's offensive ineffectiveness than the Buffalo defense, was the first for the Bills since they blanked Pittsburgh 13-0 on Dec. 12, 1982.

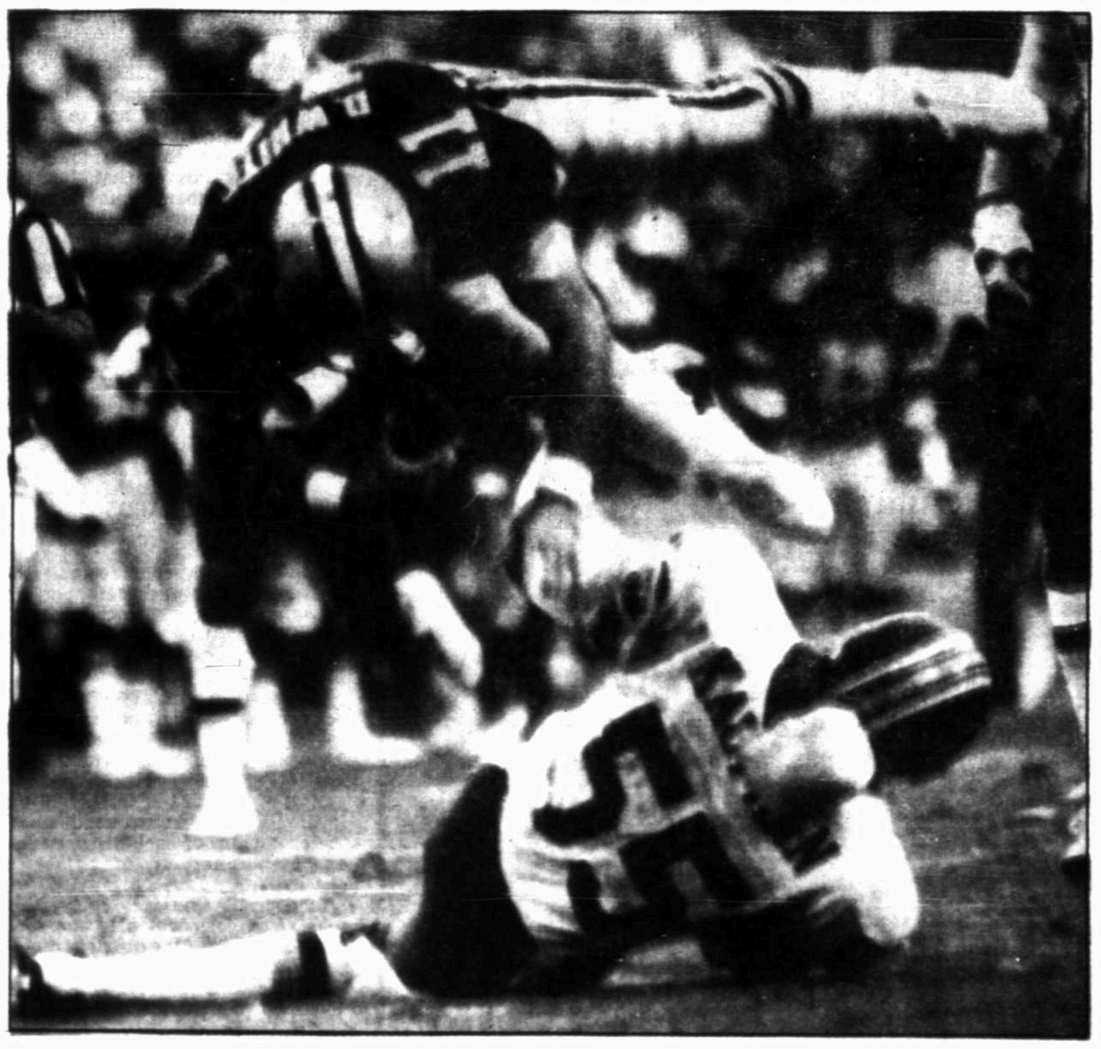

As they had in their past three games, the Bills, who won only two games last season, jumped out to a 10-0 lead. Unlike their last three games, Buffalo built on the lead and kept Houston out of the end zone.

Moon, who was replaced by Oliver Luck with three minutes to play in the third quarter, completed only 3 of 14 passes for 22 yards and three interceptions.

The Bills' Anthony Steels fumbled the opening kickoff, but, three plays later, the Oilers gave Buffalo the ball back. Moon's pass from the Buffalo 20 was intercepted by Charles Romes in the end zone.

Buffalo was forced to punt after advancing to its own 44, but Jeff Donaldson fumbled the punt and the Bills got the ball on the Houston 14.

The Bills had to settle for a 24-yard Norwood field field goal that gave Buffalo a 3-0 lead.

Dallas Cowboys Quarterback Danny White goes to the air, but not the way Coach Tom Landry prefers.

Studious Jeffcoat flunks Redskins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defensive end Jim Jeffcoat did his homework this week and that is one reason the Dallas Cowboys are still holding a share of first place in the National Football Conference Eastern Division.

Jeffcoat, who registered a team-record five sacks, led a swarming Cowboy defense Sunday that shut down the Washington Redskins 13-7 in the nation's capital.

Jeffcoat provided the impetus for Dallas, which swept the season series from the Redskins for the first time in four years.

With All-Pro Joe Jacoby sidelined with a knee injury, Jeffcoat lined up against inexperienced Dan McQuaid and gave the first-year player a lesson he won't soon forget.

"I studied a lot of films on him and saw the weaknesses he had and worked on the that," said Jeffcoat, the Cowboys' first-round draft pick in 1983. "It was my best game as a pro."

"He was just bull-rushing me. I expected him to go inside or outside," said McQuaid, who at 6-7 and 278 pounds is two inches taller and 15 pounds heavier than Jeffcoat. "He just went straight up and drove me straight back."

The victory was especially sweet for coach Tom Landry, who won his 250th as a head coach in the NFL. "Anytime you come off being embarassed in a Monday night game and you come back to beat Washington, it's very important."

The Cowboys lost to the St. Louis Cardinals 21-10 last Monday.

The victory raised the Cowboys record to 7-3, the same as the New York Giants, winners over the Los Angeles Rams on Sunday.

The Redskins, the defending division champions, fall to 5-5.

Danny White's 48-yard touchdown pass to Tony Dorsett and two Rafael Septien field goals provided the only offense in a game marred by 17 penalties, 11 by the Cowboys.

Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann, who was intercepted 8 times in the Cowboy games, has seen more than enough of Dallas.

"They are playing as well as I've ever seen them in 12 years of lining up against the Cowboys. I'd put this football team against anybody in the league," he said. "This is a good football club."

Septien had staked the Cowboys to a 6-0 lead with field goals of 40 and 36 yards. White and Dorsett then combined on their 48-yard scoring play to put the game out of reach for the struggling Redskins.

The touchdown was Dorsett's 76th, tying him with Bob Hayes on the team's all-time touchdown list.

Dorsett, the Cowboys' leading rusher, ran 22 times for 86 yards. White completed 16 of 29 passes for 245 yards.

Trailing 13-0 after three periods, the Redskins scored their lone touchdown on an 11-yard Theismann-to-Gary Clark scoring pass two minutes into the final period.

The Redskins had moved into scoring position on the final play of the third quarter on a 44-yard Theismann pass to Art Monk.

The touchdown drive was their last hurrah, however, as the Cowboys defense shut the door for the final 14 minutes.

The Cowboys clung to a 3-0 lead at halftime as penalties and miscues dominated the first two quarters. The lone score of the half came 10 seconds into the second quarter on Septien's 40-yard field goal.

Arkansas muddies waters in SWC race

Arkansas' win over Baylor not only proved popular everywhere in the Southwest Conference except in Waco, it set up a unique situation in post-season play.

As a result of the Razorbacks' victory, the distinct prospect that a coach could wind up playing 'his own' team in a post-season bowl contest loomed.

Don't believe it? When the Hogs went out in the barnyard and left the SWC's backdoor wide open for any passerby, Arkansas moved to the forefront of the Cotton Bowl picture.

And should Arkansas earn the invitation, Ken Hatfield could wind up coaching against Air Force, one of the prime favorites for the role of guest.

Hatfield is in only his second year at his alma mater, still close enough to his Air Force hitch to call most of the Falcons by their first names.

IT IS a little premature, however, to be matching up Cotton Bowl opponents, if for no other reason than Arkansas still has Texas A&M and SMU left.

Baylor was in the driver's seat going into Saturday's game, and still has the most favorable finishing schedule, Rice this week and then Texas at Austin, where the Bears, nevertheless, have traditionally encountered rude welcomes.

A&M finishes with Arkansas, TCU and Texas while the Longhorns still have Baylor and A&M left after TCU this week.

With a 14-0 lead in the second half, the Bears seemed have the situation under control. The final two periods, except for the 88-yard bomb, Baylor had enough trouble containing the Hogs' offense without the undisciplined mistakes—primarily after-the-fact personal fouls—that repeatedly made bad situtations worse.

ANOTHER interesting development over the weekend far from the maddening roar of the dispute for the SWC lead, Texas Tech created unexpected excitement of its own.

Freshman quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver injected fresh hope in what was a long, boring exercise in futility for the Red Raiders.

Tolliver, throwing a record five touchdown passes, triggered an offense that gained 699 yards, 422 through the air. And, even against TCU, decimated by the recruiting scandals and only a faint memory of what it once had been, the 63-7 carnage had to be impressive.

The question uppermost is whether the "discovery of Tolliver" came too late to save Coach Jerry Moore's job.

For two weeks now, the rumor mill has Mississippi State Coach Emory Bellard coming back to West Texas to replace Moore at Tech.

There have been denials, but Bellard, despite his protests, may be ready to leave Starkville, where his Bulldogs, considered a SEC contender, has suffered a season as disasterous as Tech's. MSU has yet to win a conference game.

And Moore...his future may have been determined by a gamble in the final seconds of one game and a couple of dropped passes, also in the final seconds of yet another frantic finish.

Against A&M, Moore elected to go for two after a late touchdown. It failed and Tech wound up a one point loser. Against Rice, touchdown passes on the game's last two plays, both from Tolliver, incidentally, were dropped and Tech again lost.

If those two games had gone the other way, Moore would be 6-3 and making plans for next season.

Now, Tolliver's performance may have given pause, but only victories in the final two games presumably could alter Moore's destiny.

That means wins over SMU and Houston on the road.

Lee-Amarillo tangle Saturday in playoff opener

Prep Game of Week

The state Class 5A football playoffs is supposed to be a pressure cooker of live or die situations — win this week or store the gear. So why is Midland Lee football coach Jack Tayrien so ready to plunge forward on playoff ground?

"Am I ever ready to see district play come to an end," says Tayrien. "I don't know if I could take another week of that. I'm glad our kids can now talk about the playoffs."

It's not that Tayrien is taking the 9-1 Amarillo High Sandies lightly. In fact, that's not the case at all. But few can blame him if he is ready to face some new blood at 2 p.m. Saturday in Lubbock's Jones Stadium. Regular season play hasn't been easy.

"It was a tough situation for us going into the Midland High game. We were already in the playoffs whether we won or lost. I thought our kids did a tremendous job of getting ready to play against Midland High, but it's tough not to think about the playoffs for youngsters.

"You can tell the kids that this game means this or that, but it's hard to keep them from thinking ahead. I'm glad they can think about Amarillo High now."

COMPLICATING matters this past week was the fact that playoff arrangements had to be made. Just going through those motions adds to the next week attitude.

"It's really hard for everyone concerned because there are certian preparations that have to be made for the playoffs. Where are you going to play? How are you going to get there? What officials are we going to use? What date do you want to play on? All those questions had to be answered while we were preparing for the Bulldogs," said Tayrien.

To add to the Lee woes was the fanatical effort staged by Midland High. Lee survived entering the playoffs on a losing note by erasing a 21-7 MHS lead for a narrow 27-21 victory.

"I've been saying all along that nothing is easy in this league. It's a war every week. People just don't realize that there just isn't a great deal of difference between a team that finished 2-5 in the league and one that finished 6-1," added Tayrien.

IT'S BEEN a tough voyage for the Rebels to get this far — a third consecutive playoff berth. There was that miracle come-from-behind 12-7 victory over San Angelo, the 7-6 nail-biter against Odessa High and the 14-point comeback over Midland High to consider. And if you want to throw in the 35-28 race horse victory over Abilene High, a tough — physically and mentally — 13-7 loss to Odessa Permian and a one half tester against Big Spring, you can easily see that the Sandies of Amarillo High hold no more fear for the Rebels than what they have already faced and survived.

"There is no question that this team isn't as good as the ones we've had the past two years, but I'm awfully proud of these kids. It takes a lot to come back from 14 points against any team, much less one that is playing good football.

"I think the Midland High game is going to help us more than any we've played this year. It's got to have some carryover value when things get tough. It may turn out to be the biggest win we had all year."

Amarillo High is best noted for its aggressive defense this year, but the Sandies have had some bad news offensively after losing tailback Timmy Smith to injury during the Palo Duro game.

The Sandies just survived weak Lubbock High last Friday night, 14-6, without Smith, but Tayrien says the Sandies will be ready to play the Rebels Saturday in Lubbock.

"Amarillo High has a good team or they wouldn't be the champions of District 3-5A. They are an extremely good defensive team and give your offense a lot of problems with a lot of different looks. They use a lot of motion on offense and that can present some major problems for your defense.

"I'm sure Amarillo High remembers the 30-3 win we had over them in 1983. They'll be sky high to see that that doesn't happen again. We'll have to be ready to play or it's over."

LEE IS 20-4 under Tayrien the last two years, the best winning percentage over any two-year span in Lee football history. Spike Dykes was 21-5 over the 1982-83 span, more victories but a worse percentage. And, hopefully, the Rebels aren't through adding to that win record.

It's interesting to note that Lee owns a fantastic 40-10 record over the past four years since converting to the wishbone offense, maybe the greatest move in Lee grid history. In the four years prior to the wishbone, two under Gil Bartosh and two under Dykes, Lee owned a 29-10-1 record with the split back offense, which isn't a bad mark in itself.

The eight-year mark of 69-20-1 is a record that a lot of teams would like to have. Only Odessa Permian has a better eight-year mark and a better four-year mark among 4-5A teams.

State playoffs begin this week

Prep Roundup

The Texas high school football season moves into the state playoff phase this week with more than 30 teams having won every game and several others boasting records blemished only by a tie.

All the teams in AP's Top 10 of each class are playoff bound, except for Hempstead, fifth-ranked in Class 3A, whose season ended with a 16-13 loss to Bellville.

Most of the ranked teams will be favored again next weekend, since the champions of each district take on the runners-up of adjacent districts.

In districts split into zones, the zone champions will play the second-place team of the district's other zone.

Some schools in Class 4A and 1A don't end their regular season until this week, however.

Houston Yates, the top-ranked club in Class 5A, defeated Houston Wheatley 68-0 on Saturday to pace six unbeaten, untied ranked teams in the big school class.

Second-ranked Aldine kept pace Saturday with a 13-10 victory over Aldine MacArthur, and fifth-ranked San Antonio Clark joined them at 10-0 by beating San Antonio Marshall 21-7.

However, if Clark is to keep its state championship hopes alive, it will have to win this week against eighth-ranked Converse Judson, which beat San Antonio Lee 56-6 to improve to 9-1 for the year.

Eight Class 4A ranked teams have avoided losing, along with seven 3A ranked clubs, six 2A ranked teams, and seven 1A clubs.

In other games last weekend involving top-ranked teams, Navasota defeated Brookshire Royal 27-0 in Class 3A, Electra rolled by Jacksboro 49-6 in 2A, and defending 1A champion Munday won its 26th straight game, slamming Bryson 78-0. Tomball, the top-ranked 4A team, took the week off.

Odessa Permian, third-ranked in 5A, finished the regular season at 9-0-1 by thumping cross-city rival Odessa High 37-7. The Panthers captured their sixth straight district title and beat Odessa for the 21st year in a row.

West Orange-Stark, fourth-ranked in 5A, raised its record to 10-0 with a 24-0 shutout over Vidor. Willowridge, the No. 6-ranked club, is 10-0 after a 33-0 triumph over Sugar Land Clements.

The No. 2, 3, 4 and 5 teams in 4A all won and improved their records to 10-0. Denison beat Gainesville 28-6, Corsicana blanked West Mesquite 28-0, Bay City defeated Wharton 40-7, and Huntsville knocked off Crosby 52-2. Eighth-ranked Lubbock Estacado went to 8-0-1 by beating Pampa on Saturday 21-6.

Daingerfield, ranked second in 3A behind Navasota, improved to 10-0 by beating Pittsburg 21-15. No. 3 Kermit and No. 4 Van Vleck are 9-0 for the season after Kermit's 50-13 victory over Fabens and Van Vleck's 16-0 win over Boling.

In 2A, five other teams kept pressure on Electra by keeping perfect records intact. No. 2 Hamlin beat Rotan 63-0, No. 3 Groveton beat Lovelady 62-0, No. 4 Pilot Point beat Southlake Carroll 29-0, No. 5 Universal City Randolph beat Jourdanton 42-7, and No. 6 Quitman beat Hawkins 28-0.

In 1A, No. 2 Goldthwaite and No. 4 Italy kept pace with Munday's 10-0 record. Goldthwaite beat Rising Star 49-0 and Italy defeated Maypearl 39-0. For Italy, it was the ninth shutout in 10 games and gave the Gladiators 450 points to 14 for their opponents. Ninth-ranked Forsan also is 10-0 after beating Roby 40-0.

Todd Taylor caught eight passes for 56 yards in Dublin's 30-26 victory over Hamilton Friday night, running his total of catches for the year to 80, breaking the Class 2A state record set by his brother, Sammie, in 1980. Hamilton fell to 4-6 for the year.

Agents may be contaminating best athletes

DALLAS (AP) — Many of the best college senior athletes in the country may be receiving money and other benefits from agents in a scandal that has been brewing on campuses as long as the controversy over boosters, The Dallas Morning News reported.

One prominent agent estimated that 40 percent of the seniors who will be taken in the first rounds of the National Football League and National Basketball Association drafts next year have already been signed by agents and are receiving money.

Some say that agent Leigh Steinberg's estimate could be conservative.

"I'd say right now from 70 to 80 percent of the players are being taken care of," said Tony Degrate, the former Texas defensive lineman who won last year's Lombardi Award and was wooed by agents.

NBA and NFL officials estimated that 75 to 100 agents give the business a bad name.

Scramble for Cotton wide open

Game of Week: Ags-Hogs

By HARRY KING

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Baylor Coach Grant Teaff put the Southwest Conference race in perspective.

"We've said all along that the winner of this game was not a cinch to be in the Cotton Bowl and the loser was not a cinch to be out of it," he said Saturday evening, moments after his Bears suffered their first SWC loss, 20-14 to Arkansas.

"But as I told the players after the game, by losing we took the harder road," he said.

Baylor and Arkansas are 5-1. Texas and Texas A&M are 4-1. Baylor is home against Rice and at Texas. Arkansas is on the road against A&M and home against Southern Methodist. Texas is home against Texas Christian and Baylor and at A&M. The Aggies are home against Arkansas and Texas and on the road against TCU.

All that means is that the host spot in the Cotton Bowl is very much undecided. It also means the other bowls are on hold — representatives of five bowls watched the Baylor-Arkansas game.

The Razorbacks, down 14-0 in the middle of the third quarter, won because Baylor couldn't run consistently and had five turnovers, including four pass interceptions.

The first, by Nick Miller, came with 10 seconds left in the half and Baylor on the Arkansas 10 with a 7-0 lead. Greg Gatson's interception late in the third quarter didn't hurt, but Richard Brothers' theft and 21-yard return to the Baylor 25 set up the touchdown that cut the lead to 14-12.

Greg Lasker preserved the victory when he picked off a pass at the Arkansas 16 with slightly more than a minute remaining.

David Dudley's fumble recovery, with an unsportsmanlike conduct tacked on, meant the Razorbacks had to go only 29 yards for their first touchdown — the first TD against Baylor in more than a dozen quarters. Arkansas' go-ahead touchdown came with 6:09 remaining when the Baylor secondary went for a play fake and tight end Luther Franklin got behind everybody for a 50-yard pass from Greg Thomas — Thomas' only completion of the game.

Arkansas linebacker David Bazzel said the players were deflated and so was the crowd after Tom Muecke's 88-yard TD pass to Matt Clark put Baylor on top 14-0. "I was going around to all the guys trying to get them fired up," he said. "I told Greg Lasker we had to make something happen. And at the same time we both said, 'And right now!'"

Moments later, Dudley recovered.

"It put them back in the game," Teaff said. "We seemed to be in control up until that point."

"It's the biggest win we've had in the five years I've been here," Bazzel said. "We've always choked before. We could have gone to the Cotton Bowl last year, except we lost to SMU in the last game. In '82 we were 7-0, but we lost to Baylor and then tied SMU. We'd never really won a big game when we had to, until this one. It's still going to be tough, but we've got a chance now because we beat Baylor."

"We have choked in almost every big game," said Lasker, a senior who has started for four years. "I didn't want to choke again."

Georgia wrecks Gators' hopes

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer
From Wire Reports

The problem of probation and college football titles appears to be moot — at least for this season.

"Our hopes for a national championship are definitely over," quarterback Kerwin Bell said after his No. 1 Florida team lost to Georgia on Saturday. "Now, we just have to try for it next year."

The position of No. 1 in college football has always been a precarious one, and it has been particularly troublesome this year. This week will bring a new top-ranked team, almost certainly Penn State. The Nittany Lions would be the fifth team to hold that spot this year, and they would have to defend that ranking Saturday at home against surging Notre Dame.

Parity, along with probation, has been one of the buzzwords in college football during the last few years. Three of the last four national champions — Clemson, Miami (Fla.) and Brigham Young — were unranked at the beginning of the season.

That balance has produced a succession of No. 1 teams in recent years. In 1981, a total of seven teams held that ranking, believed to be the most ever in one season. That trend has continued in 1985.

Oklahoma began the season as No. 1, but fell out of that preseason ranking without playing a game when Auburn took over the top spot.

When Auburn lost to Tennessee, it was Iowa's turn as No. 1. Then, Iowa lost to Ohio State. That gave Florida its chance to be No. 1 for the first time in its 50-year history.

"We're very happy the voters looked at who we've played and what we've accomplished," Florida Coach Galen Hall said last week when the Gators were voted No. 1.

That ranking, however, created a predicament that caused furors in 1957 and 1974. Should a team placed on probation by the NCAA be allowed a chance to win the national championship?

Florida was stripped of its first-ever Southeastern Conference title last year because of NCAA sanctions, imposed after a two-year investigation revealed recruiting violations. Those NCAA penalties carried into this season, and the Gators began the year minus some scholarships and knowing that they would not be allowed to appear on live television, could not win the SEC crown and could not go to a bowl game.

But, they would be able to win the national championship. The weekly poll, a tabulation of votes by writers and broadcasters from across the country, rates all college football teams that are allowed to play on the field. That situation has created an uproar and, some say, a contradiction.

Now, it appears it will be Penn State's turn to be No. 1. The Nittany Lions are 9-0, with games left versus Notre Dame on Saturday and then against struggling Pittsburgh.

Sports in Brief

HOCKEY

STRATFORD, N.J. — Pelle Lindbergh of the Philadelphia Flyers, the top goalie in the National Hockey League last year, was listed as brain dead after his sports car slammed into a cement wall early Sunday morning. The Swedish-born Lindbergh, 26, was being kept alive by a respirator at the John F. Kennedy Hospital-Stratford Division. Lindbergh, who had a 40-17-7 regular season record last year, won the Vezina Trophy as the league's outstanding goaltender in his fourth NHL season.

BOWLING

SEOUL, South Korea — Yang Ae-sook of South Korea averaged 209 for six games for a 1,231 total Sunday to lead the 43-nation field in the women's division of the 21st World Cup Tournament.

TAYLOR, Mich. — Pete Weber averaged 226 while rolling past four opponents to capture his third title of the year, the Budweiser Open. Weber knocked off top-seeded Tom Baker, 204-181, in the championship game to earn the $21,000 top prize.

AUTO RACING

MIAMI — Danny Sullivan, who struggled for most of the season after winning the Indianapolis 500, had the spotlight stolen from him despite a runaway victory in the inaugural Beatrice Indy Challenge at Tamiami Park.

While Sullivan was charging away from second-place finisher Bobby Rahal late in the race, the unfolding drama was the race between Al Unser and Al Unser Jr. for the CART-PPG series championship.

GOLF

HANNO, Japan — American Jane Blalock came from behind with a spectacular 8-under-par 64 Sunday and won the $300,000 women's Mazda Japan Golf Classic at the Musashigaoka Golf Course, two strokes ahead of Taiwan's Tu Ai-yu.

KAPALUA, Hawaii — The Americans won five of six matches against Europe in the finals Saturday, taking the title by a 10-2 margin in the inaugural Nissan Cup competition of the Kapalua International Club Tournament.

TENNIS

LARGO, Fla. — Eighth-seed Stephanie Rehe of Highlands, Calif., outlasted third-seeded Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina 6-4, 6-7 (7-4), 7-5 Sunday to capture the final of the Florida Federal Open, her first major professional tennis title. In the doubles, Sabatini and Carling Bassett of Canada defeated Lisa Bonder of Saline, Mich., and Laura Gildemeister of Miami, 6-0, 6-0.

SOCCER

LONDON — About 500 soccer fans clashed with police after a match Saturday and four officers were injured in the melee, Scotland Yard said. One policeman was reported hospitalized with severe facial injuries, and 17 people were arrested. The violence came the day after a London court imposed a life prison sentence on a soccer fan convicted of riot and assault after a game.

GYMNASTICS

MONTREAL — China's Tong Fei and Daniela Silivas of Romania broke the Soviet stranglehold on gold Sunday, winning world titles on the last day of the 23rd World Gymnastics Championships.

China's Li Ning and East German Gabriele Fahnrich also won golds, but Soviet gymnasts continued their domination of the week-long competition, winning nine of the 30 medals awarded Sunday.

The substitutes, fourth and fifth among Soviets in the preliminaries, had been eliminated from the finals by the rule which allows only three entries per team to advance. The Soviet Union, which thus swept the team and all-around titles, had five gymnasts in the top seven after preliminaries. However, injuries to the second and third best Russians moved Omeliantchik and Shoushounova into the finals, from where they became the first women's all-around co-champions in International Federation of Gymnastics history.

Barnes leads Montreal

MONTREAL (AP) — Quarterback Joe Barnes, a calm and collected playoff performer, passed for almost 400 yards, and rookie Tony Johns scored touchdowns on runs of 3 and 1 yard, sparking the Montreal Concordes to a 30-20 Canadian Football League triumph over the Ottawa Rough Riders in the East Division semifinal Sunday.

The Concordes will face the Tiger-Cats in Hamilton next Sunday to decide the East's representative in the Grey Cup, which Montreal plays host to Nov. 24.

A slim crowd of 11,372 — well below expectations — shivered in freezing temperatures, but Barnes, former Reagan County and Texas Tech star, and his teammates gave them much to cheer about, especially in the final 17 minutes when Montreal broke open a 16-13 game.

The Concordes moved into a 23-13 lead as the gun sounded to end the third quarter, with Barnes tossing a 20-yard TD pass to Nick Arakgi, his favorite target in the game. Arakgi shook free from a pair of would-be tacklers for the score.

Barnes then engineered a five-play, 63-yard touchdown drive that ended with Johns ploughing over from the 1 line at 3:56 of the fourth quarter. The Montreal quarterback, playing in his fifth game since being acquired on Sept. 30 from the Calgary Stampeders, expertly used the screen pass — including one to Johns for 23 yards — to move the Concordes down the field.

Bombers 22, Eskimos 15

WINNIPEG, Manitoba — Wide receiver James Murphy scored twice and the Winnipeg Blue Bombers survived six turnovers to defeat the Edmonton Eskimos 22-15 in the CFL's Western Division semifinal Sunday.

The Bombers, the defending Grey Cup champions, now advance to the Western Division final against the B.C. Lions next weekend in Vancouver, British Columbia.

The Bombers scored the winning points after consecutive turnovers late in the third quarter when they were trailing 15-14.

Wide receiver Jeff Boyd fumbled the ball and Edmonton recovered near their own goal line. But on the next play, Eskimos running back Milson Jones fumbled and Winnipeg recovered, scoring a touchdown on the next play to take the lead.

Winnipeg's defense stopped the Eskimos on a third-and-three gamble at the Bomber 8-yard line with about five minutes left in the game to secure the victory.

Howie Long NFL's best at maiming ball carrier

"The thing I would hate about playing Howie Long if I were a quarterback is the way he laughs at you," the offensive lineman who declined to have his name used was saying. "I mean, you get the feeling he's enjoying it.

"You don't mind Alzado playing out of a rage, or Gastineau playing for the cameras, but Long just kind of grins at you like you're something he's going to pull the wings off of, or push downstairs in a wheelchair."

In other words, it'd be a great part for Richard Widmark. If Widmark went 270 and stood 6-5 in his bare feet.

Howie Long is, by consensus, the best in the NFL at what he does – which is, basically, maim the ball carrier, eat the quarterback, bury the offense.

Defensive end is a semi-glamour position. It's not quarterback or running back or wide receiver but it has its devotees and Howie Long rates high on any consumer recognition list. He is in some demand for outside commercials selling everything from razor blades to magazine subscriptions.

BUT HOWIE'S position has its limitations. And frustrations. Last week, for example, Howie Long and his front set held the Seattle Seahawks to an average of 2.8 yards per rushing play, sacked the quarterback twice, forced him to hurry and miss on 12 of 21 passes, held Curt Warner, a great runner, to 2.2 yards a carry and a long run of four yards. The Raiders still lost the game by 30 points, though, because Long and the defense kept turning the ball over to their offense.

Maybe Howie Long is kicking the wrong butts?

Howie doesn't think so. "I just wish we (the defense) could break open a game like that ourselves, run back fumbles for touchdowns, block kicks for touchdowns."

What is really intriguing is, maybe Howie Long is in the wrong position. As well known as he is, he is as anonymous as a waiter compared to a mere rookie who was drafted as a defensive tackle by the Chicago Bears.

The whole football world is talking about the icebox that talks, the human appliance that keeps falling on the Green Bay Packers and San Francisco 49ers.

William (the Refrigerator) Perry may well be the most famous defensive player ever to play the game. Not even Dick Butkus, Bronko Nagurski or Mean Joe Greene commanded the public attention this 308-pound food-storage cabinet attracts. Advertisers are taking numbers to get an audience with him. TV is clamoring for his appearances. Movies are dangling offers.

He is calling into question the whole philosophy of big-time football. It is a game in which the basic strategies were never devised with 300-pound human beings in mind who could run 40 yards in anything under a day.

BEAR COACH Mike Ditka is being hailed as an innovative genius for inserting this Monster of the Midway into a lineup where he gets the ball. But, any kid who ever played sandlot football could tell him it not only works, but wonder what took him so long to try it.

I don't know about you but every street game we ever played in, if a guy 100 pounds bigger than the rest showed up, there was no one to tell him he was going to play in the obscurity of defense or the sacrificial slot of blocking. He wanted the ball and he got the ball. If you were smart you said to your teammates "OK, you get the big guy. I'll fade back in case he passes."

Of course, he didn't pass. You knew he wouldn't. He just ran over people.

I haven't seen that the game has changed so much. Coaches just aren't as smart as kids in public parks were. Coaches actually tried to tell the Refrigerator to lose some weight. Coaches are that way. Coaches would probably cut King Kong because he was too slow. Coaches would tell Paul Newman his eyes are too blue.

We would have played the Refrigerator in my old neighborhood. And the only time he wouldn't have had the football was when he was home eating.

HOWIE LONG would have gotten the football in the old hometown, too.

It might solve his frustrations and the Raiders' problems now, too. If Long sits up nights, dreaming of ways to get the ball away from the other team's defense as the only way to win, why not give him the ball in the first place?

Well, one reason is, Howie doesn't want it. "My job is to stop the football," he said. "That's what I'm trained to do. My job is to move in a yard, penetrate and stay low and hold ground. Pretty boring, my job, come to think of it."

Exactly. Doesn't sell Toyotas, either.

I'll tell you one thing. Back in the old gang, when we had a big guy, we didn't have to settle for any field goals to keep from getting shut out.

And you know that play where the Refrigerator caught the pass and was all alone in the end zone? You think that was because of the design of the play?

Forget it. I know from the old playground days. Nobody wanted to be near him. It was the same way in the old days. We'd all pretend to be covering someone else. Bet me the Green Bay Packers weren't fooled on the play, either. They read it all too well. They were in a prevent defense. Preventing their own suicide.

Bears keep streak alive with old-fashioned football

St. Louis running back Stump Mitchell seems to be the center of attention as Tampa Bay defenders close in.

Associated Press

"It was old fashioned football — old fashioned Bear football," running back Walter Payton said of Chicago's latest victory, its 10th straight National Football League triumph.

Payton rushed 26 times for 107 yards Sunday — his fifth consecutive 100-yard game and the 69th of his career — as the Bears, 24-3 winners over Detroit, continued their best start since the 1942 team won all 11 of its regular season games.

"The weather helped us more than it did Detroit," Bears Coach Mike Ditka said of the blustery, rainy and windy conditions in Chicago.

Bears backup quarterback Steve Fuller, playing for the injured Jim McMahon, agreed.

"The weather conditions were devastating," said Fuller. "The toughest thing to do is play the Chicago Bear defense on a day like this. But you have to give the credit to the guys who went over 200 yards and the offensive line."

Matt Suhey, usually the blocking back for Payton, rushed 16 times for 102 yards, his first 100-yard game in two years. The last time the Bears had two backs going over 100 yards each was the same tandem in 1983.

Tonight, San Franciso is at Denver.

"I know my role," said Suhey. "When you play with Walter, you know what you have to do. Whatever they ask me to do, I do."

On Sunday, the weather dictated what the Bears asked Suhey and Payton to do.

Fuller completed seven of 13 passes for 112 yards, scored on runs of one and five yards and set up another touchdown by completing passes of 33 and 11 yards to Payton.

Buccaneers 16, Cardinals 0

Quarterback Steve DeBerg connected with Adger Armstrong on a 1-yard touchdown pass and Donald Igwebuike kicked three long field goals as Tampa Bay halted a nine-game losing streak for the Bucs and was only the ninth for Tampa Bay in its last 42 games.

Igwebuike, a native of Nigeria, kicked field goals of 46, 47 and 50 yards. James Wilder ran for 120 yards on 29 carries and DeBerg completed 11 of 27 passes for 196 yards.

The triumph was only the ninth for Tampa Bay in its last 42 games and was the first for the franchise under Coach Leeman Bennett, who replaced John McKay last winter.

Eagles 23, Falcons 17

One play after Atlanta pinned the Eagles on their own 1-yard line with a punt, quarterback Ron Jaworski and wide receiver Mike Quick combined on a 99-yard touchdown pass play 1½ minutes into overtime to give Philadelphia its victory.

The Eagles, 5-5, had blown a 17-0 third-period lead before Jaworski and Quick combined for the longest play of the season in the NFL.

Bengals 27, Browns 10

Second-year quarterback Boomer Esiason passed for 262 yards and a touchdown, outshining Cleveland rookie Bernie Kosar. The Bengals' third consecutive victory kept them tied for first place in the AFC Central Division with Pittsburgh at 5-5. Cleveland fell to 4-6 with its fourth straight loss.

Esiason completed 23 of 33 passes without an interception, while Kosar was 16 of 32 passes for 229 yards in his fifth pro start. However, the rookie was just nine of 22 for 139 yards going into the game's closing minutes.

Patriots 34, Colts 15

In a two-minute stretch in the third quarter, Irving Fryar scored on a 77-yard punt return and a 5-yard pass, sparking New England, 7-3, over Indianapolis, 3-7.

The Patriots scored 17 points after three third-quarter fumble recoveries, while a second-quarter interception by Fred Marion set up one of Steve Grogan's two touchdown passes.

Packers 27, Vikings 17

Quarterback Lynn Dickey came off the bench to lead Green Bay to victory, completing nine of 11 passes for 135 yards, including a 63-yarder to Phillip Epps that set up a 1-yard touchdown pass to Eddie Lee Ivery.

The Packers, 4-6, were trailing when Dickey replaced starter Jim Zorn. After Dickey threw to Ivery for the go-ahead score, Mark Murphy interecepted a Tommy Kramer pass and returned it 50 yards for the clincher.

Giants 24, Rams 19

Joe Morris scored two second-half touchdowns as the Giants rallied from a 13-point deficit to defeat the Rams. It was the Giants' fourth straight victory.

The Giants had trailed 13-0 late in the second quarter but got back into contention on a 36-yard scoring pass from quarterback Phil Simms to wide receiver Bobby Johnson with 16 seconds left in the half. Eric Schubert added a 40-yard field goal midway through the third quarter to bring the Giants to within 16-10.

Steelers 36, Chiefs 28

Louis Lipps returned a punt 71 yards for the go-ahead touchdown and Gary Anderson kicked a team record five field goals as Pittsburgh pounded Kansas City. It was the sixth loss in a row for Kansas City, 3-7.

Seahawks 27, Saints 3

Quarterback Dave Krieg led a 17-point fourth-quarter explosion and the Seattle defense throttled New Orleans through the final 30 minutes of play. Krieg threw for 282 yards and a fourth-quarter touchdown.

Chargers 40, Raiders 34

A 17-yard touchdown dash by Lionel James 3:44 into overtime lifted San Diego over the Raiders. The Chargers victory snapped a four-year, seven-game losing streak at the hands of the Raiders.

Quarterback Dan Fouts threw for 436 yards and four touchdowns — the sixth time in his career his has thrown for 400 yards, an NFL record — including a 14-yard strike to Charlie Joiner with 53 seconds remaining in regulation to send the game into overtime.

Raiders quarterback Marc Wilson completed 18 of 32 passes for 297 yards and three touchdowns.

Dolphins 21, Jets 17

Returning from a seven-game layoff, wide receiver Mark Duper caught nine passes for 217 yards and two touchdowns, one a 50-yarder with 41 seconds left to boost Miami past the Jets.

Earlier, Duper was on the scoring end of a 60-yard bomb from quarterback Dan Marino. Duper's 217-yard effort broke the Dolphins single-game record of 210 yards set by Nat Moore against the Jets in 1981.

49ers try to dig out of pit

Super champs languish at 5-4

DENVER (AP) — Do they finally have their act together, or has history struck again?

Defending Super Bowl champions have, in recent years, had a tough time of it, and the jinx appeared to have hit the San Francisco 49ers early this season. Losers of four of their first seven games, the 49ers fell far behind the division-leading Los Angeles Rams.

The last two weeks, however, the 49ers have shown signs of righting themselves, knocking off the Rams 28-14 and Philadelphia 24-13.

At 5-4 and three games behind the Rams, the 49ers may have dug themselves too deep a hole to win their division, but a National Football League playoff berth is not out of reach, provided they keep winning.

"WE REALLY cannot afford to lose any more games," said cornerback Ronnie Lott.

The 49ers' road back to respectability continues Monday night when they visit sold-out Mile High Stadium for a game with the Denver Broncos, 6-3. The forecast calls for a chance of snow and temperatures in the 30s, but meteorologists say it probably won't be a repeat of last year's Green Bay-Denver game on Monday night which was played in a blizzard.

"Historically, championship teams have suffered problems the next year, and this has been true in all sports," said San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh. "We made our mistakes early. We botched a number of games. But hopefully we've found ourselves. If so, I think we'll be a factor this season.

"I think we're close enough record-wise to be a wild-card candidate. In the meantime, we just have to play our best football from week to week."

WALSH is a good student of history. In the season following their Super Bowl triumph in January 1981, the Raiders slumped to 7-9. San Francisco, the next world champion, was a disastrous 3-6 in trying to repeat during the strike-shortened season of 1982. Washington, the 1983 Super Bowl winner, made it back to the title game the following year but was bombed by the Raiders 38-9. The Raiders then barely managed to make it into the playoffs last year, losing in the wild-card game.

The 49ers' problems, Walsh says, have included injuries and a sub-par passing attack.

"We're not really putting any more emphasis on the run this season, it's just that we haven't thrown very effectively," Walsh said. "Our throwing is not near what it has been, because of injuries to (quarterback) Joe Montana and other reasons. We averaged over 400 yards per game last year. This year we're in the mid-300s, and I would suspect that's all because our passing numbers are off."

Montana, nursing an injured shoulder and breastbone, missed last week's game but is expected back against the Broncos.

Denver jumped off to a fast start this season, winning four straight games to go to 6-2 before being routed by San Diego 30-10 a week ago.

IN THEIR first five games, the Broncos relied on the strong arm of quarterback John Elway. In their last four games, however, Elway has failed to throw a touchdown pass, and the Bronco defense has risen to the occasion — until the debacle in San Diego.

Coach Dan Reeves is anxious to get both units working together.

"Losing one game doesn't create a panic situation," said Reeves. "But it's clear we've got to get more production from our quarterback. It's not so much John's fault as the team. We've got to give him better protection."

Deadline is Dec. 2 for submitting javelina hunt applications to be held in January and February on the Black GAP, Chaparral, James Daughtrey and Walter Buck WMAs.

For feral hogs, hunters have until Dec. 9 to apply for hunts at Gus Engeling WMA in January and February. Feral hogs are domestic-strain hogs gone wild....

THE TRACKING study of smallmouth bass and walleyes in Lake Meredith already is producing some interesting results. Biologist Jack Kraai said eight smallmouths and one walleye were fitted with ultrasonic transmitters which tell the fishes' preferred depth, habitat, water temperature and movements. Exact locations of each fish are plotted weekly on detailed maps and posted in local bait stores to aid anglers in locating fish.

"During July and August, smallmouths were commonly in 20-40 feet of water near rocky points and dropoffs," Kraai said. "With water temperatures decreasing during Sept., the majority of smallmouths being tracked move to shallower waters and were in depths less than 16 feet." He said rocky points and dropoffs were still important habitats, but many fish also associated with inundated brush near shore.

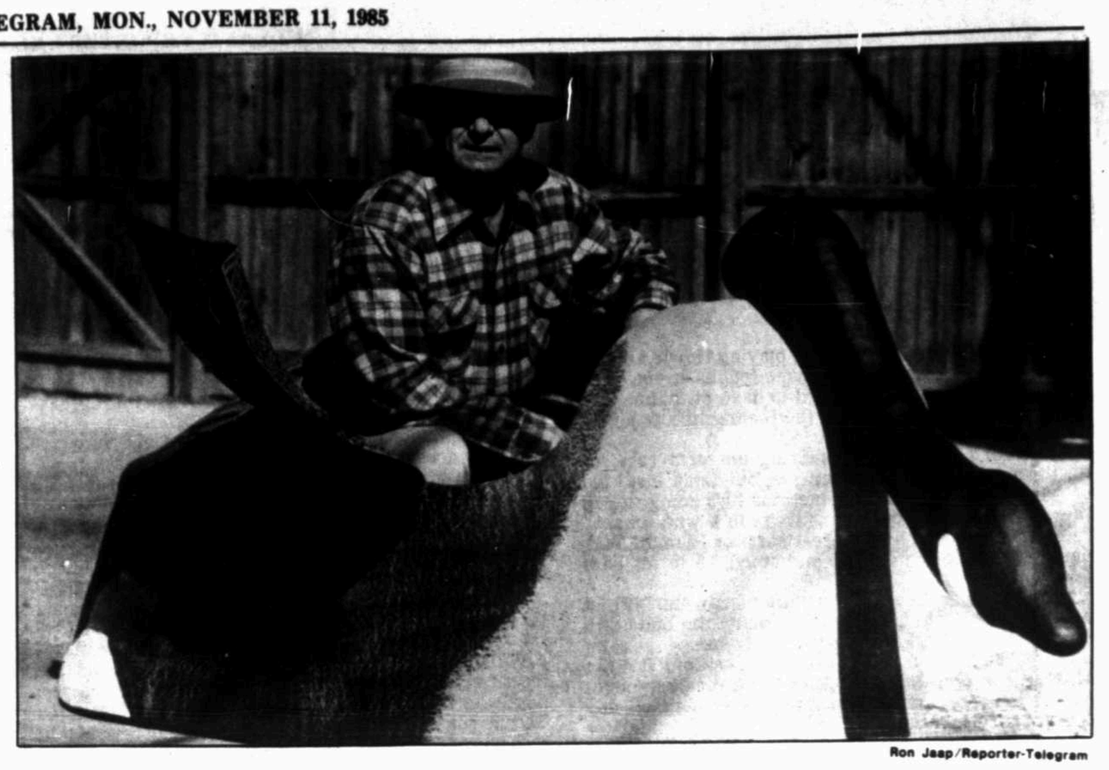

TPWD biologists are conducting genetic studies of six red drum recently obtained from South Carolina to determine if they differ from Texas native fish.

Bill Rutledge, hatcheries chief, said if the South Carolina fish prove to be genetically different they could offer several potential advancements for future red drum culturing.

"First, if they are different, we can use them to produce genetically marked fingerlings for stocking," said Rutledge. "This means we would be able to gauge the success of stocking programs by identifying the stocked fish months of years after release."

ONE OF the largest artificial reefs on the east coast is being created by Tenneco Oil. Retired oil and gas production platforms will be placed in the Atlantic Ocean between Fort Lauderdale and Miami to increase fish populations and the diversity of marine life in the area to benefit sport fishermen and divers.

The platforms were submerged last month, 1.5 miles offshore near the Broward/Dade County line. The new reef is the second established by Tenneco off Florida. The first, also a complete platform, is 22 miles southeast of Pensacola. Charter boat operators report that it began producing excellent fishing almost immediately after its installation in 1982...

November 'choice' month for dedicated hunter

By NELSON BRYANT

November is to the hunter as June is to the angler. In June, the latter is torn between going after trout and black bass in streams and lakes or striped bass and bluefish in the ocean. In November, the hunter must decide whether to pursue deer, upland birds or waterfowl.

In a state as large as New York, there are various hunting zones and seasons. One can make the most of this by beginning up north, where the openings are earlier, and moving south as winter approaches.

There are five waterfowl zones in the state: Western, Northeastern, Lake Champlain, Southeastern and Long Island. At present, hunting for ducks and coot is under way in the Western and Lake Champlain zones, and the seasons for Canada, snow and blue geese are open statewide except for Long Island, where the dates are Nov. 13 to Jan. 1.

Waterfowling lends itself to many approaches. One calls for simply visiting a marsh, lake or river, hoping to startle birds from their resting and feeding places, a technique known as jump shooting. Most country boys start their duck hunting careers in this fashion. If you work hard at it and are willing to crawl 300 yards sometimes to get within range, this method had its merits. Don't, by the way, yield to the temptation to shoot at the birds on the water. It is both unsportsmanlike and inefficient. Most of the vital areas of a floating duck are underwater.

Another uncomplicated way to go duck hunting is to engage in so-called pass shooting, which involves situating yourself along routes used by the birds between large expanses of water and more secluded spots. This is most productive on wild days, when the birds are seeking shelter from the wind and waves. Pass shooting is the ultimate test of a shotgunner's skill. It is one thing to bag birds 35 yards distant that have cupped their wings before settling among the decoys, and quite another to bring them down when they are hurtling past 50 yards or more away.

If a good-sized river is close by, you can also enjoy some good hunting by building a blind across the bow of a canoe or skiff and drifting or paddling down on the birds. Years ago when I lived in New Hampshire, a friend and I used this approach with success on the Connecticut River. Inland waterfowlers in the more northern areas of New York and New England have to do their hunting before truly cold weather arrives and lakes, ponds and marshes freeze over. If you are able to do two things at once, you can occasionally combine upland bird hunting and waterfowling.

I was reminded of this a short while ago while grouse hunting in a remote region of northern New Hampshire. I had come down a mountain and was skirting a huge beaver bog when I heard black ducks talking to each other. They were resting in one of the ponds the beavers had created and it would have been possible to creep up on them. Although the waterfowling season was open, I didn't bother to try because I had not yet purchased the annual duck stamp required of every waterfowler. I walked toward them through a maze of alders until they saw me and sprang from the water and flew east.

To many, decoying is the most interesting aspect of waterfowling, whether one has set out only three or four decoys for black ducks in a pond, or 100 of them for bluebills in some bay or sound. This is also the most time-consuming approach and one that requires some knowledge of where the bogus birds should be anchored. Two good books on this subject are Zack Taylor's "Successful Waterfowling" (Crown), and Ralf Coykendall's "Duck Decoys and How To Rig Them." First published in 1955, the last-named was reissued in 1983 by Winchester Press.

However you go after ducks and geese, you will make a greater contribution to the family larder if a good retriever is at your side. Such a dog, will probably increase your harvest by 25 percent and will virtually eliminate the dreadful business of losing a crippled bird.

Early opening of deer season benefits hunters

AUSTIN (AP) — A Texas Parks and Wildlife Department expert says the earlier opening of the white-tailed deer season this year may be good news for hunters.

The season is opened Saturday.

Horace Gore, white-tailed deer program leader for the department, said Wednesday he expects a good harvest this year, with about 250,000 bucks and at least 100,000 antlerless deer taken.

The season opening was changed this year to the second Saturday in November rather than the Saturday nearest Nov. 15.

The change, which is expected to remain in effect in succeeding years, will result in a 58-day hunting season in some years in addition to moving the opening day up a full week.

Gore said reports indicate that "the deer are rutting in the Edwards Plateau region and other areas of the state except for South Texas.

"The early start may mean that hunters will see more bucks on the opening weekend than they did last year, because rutting activity will keep them moving," Gore said.

Gore said the rut usually begins in mid-October across most of the state and normally is over about mid-November.

"The season is starting only a week earlier this year, but it could well be enough to catch the last part of the rutting period," he said.

Gore said hunters this year will notice an additional antlerless deer tag on their hunting licenses.

"This means they can take an extra antlerless deer, provided they are hunting on land where the landowner has been issued sufficient antlerless permits," he said.

Another possible plus for first-week hunters is the moon, which is moving into the dark phase in the first week of the season. Many hunters believe this causes deer to feed more during daylight hours, Gore said.

There are some potential drawbacks to the earlier start, however. Gore said the warmer, windy weather could curtail deer movement during the day.

The right to shop may not be enshrined in the Declaration of Independence along with the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. But those who must depend on charity for the very shirts on their backs face an added mental burden in a consumer-oriented society where most people take the ability to clothe themselves for granted.

An alternative exists, however, for those who can't afford Dillard's, or even K-Mart. The St. Vincent De Paul Society's thrift store at 1411 Garden Lane features clothing with prices so low they're more symbolic than real.

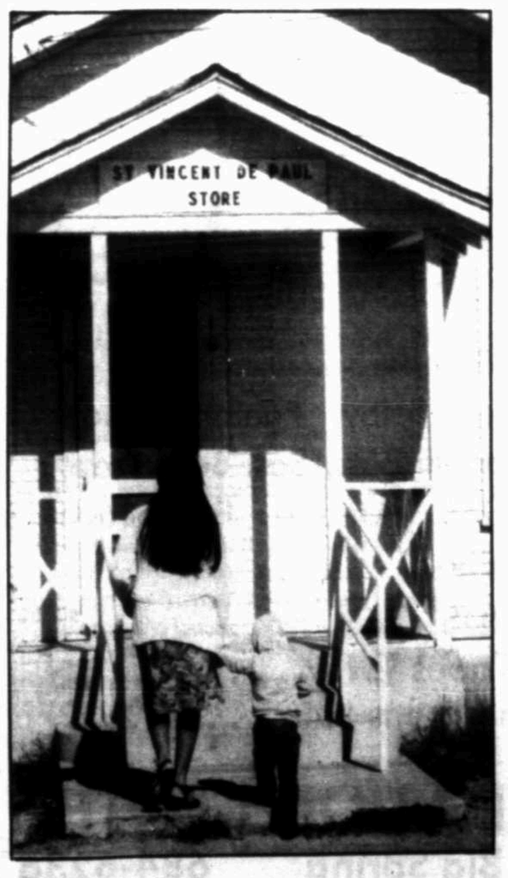

"We have sold some $300-$400 men's suits for $5," said Rose Walch, the Society's telephone receptionist. According to Ms. Walch, the store is intended to serve people who don't like to accept charity but can't afford to buy new clothes.

"Their pride gets in the way and they won't take it — but they'll buy it," she said. "Everything in there is donated."

"All the prices are at a minimum," said Ms. Walch's cousin Irene Crevier, who manages the store. They are the only two paid employees of the St. Vincent De Paul Society's Midland chapter, a group of about 30 members of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

"We're an international organization associated with Catholic churches throughout the world," said Joe Gifford, president of the Midland chapter. "Our job is to try to reach out to the poor people."

Injury accident

This unidentified man was injured about 7:25 this morning in a two-vehicle accident at the intersection of county roads 60 East and 1275 North in northwest Midland County. No details of the accident were available from the Department of Public Safety at press time.

Officer involved in accident

From Staff Reports

A Midland police officer whose driving record was the subject of a grand jury probe last week was involved in another accident Sunday when a 5-year-old girl ran in front of his police car, according to traffic reports.

Samantha San Miguel, 129 W. Gist, suffered cuts after being struck about 11:06 a.m. in the 1900 block of South Main Street by a police car driven by Sgt. Vince Castillo, 3417 N. Midland Drive. She was treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

"He was traveling very slowly, and this little girl ran from behind a parked truck and ran out right in front of him," said Patrol Capt. Herman Wicker. "It can happen to anyone."

Last week a Midland grand jury investigated allegations by Mothers Against Drunk Driving President Cynthia Grubb that Castillo had been driving while intoxicated when he lost control of his car Aug. 25 and hit a utility pole, and that the Police Department had covered up the incident.

Officers at the scene of that accident reported Castillo appeared under the influence of alcohol, but he was given no blood test or breathalyzer test. He was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital for treatment, and officers who saw him there told the grand jury he didn't seem drunk. Castillo was off duty and driving his own car when that accident occurred. No indictments were handed down by the grand jury.

There was no indication Castillo had been drinking before Sunday's accident, which occurred while he was on duty, reports said.

In other reports, police are still seeking a suspect in the Saturday morning armed robbery of the Lexington Motor Inn, 1003 S. Midkiff.

A black man described as being six feet tall and about 185 pounds pulled a knife on a clerk about 4:20 a.m. and escaped with an undetermined amount of cash, reports said.

A trailer house being used as a workshop was destroyed Sunday by a fire of undetermined origin, according to fire reports. The trailer was located on County Road 130 just east of Midkiff. The fire, reported at 11:40 p.m., was extinguished with about 4,000 gallons of water, reports said.

A $200 Nazi Youth dagger and other rare knives were recovered Sunday after being stolen from the home of Daniel Byers, 2203 Culver, by a 13-year-old boy, reports said. Byers' knife collection, which also included a $100 Arabian knife and a $25 Italian bayonet, was taken Sunday by a boy who lived in the neighborhood, but returned after a police investigation identified the culprit, according to reports. Juvenile authorities are investigating the matter.

A 3-year-old girl injured Oct. 14 in a traffic accident on Loop 250 northeast of Midland was released Friday from Midland Memorial Hospital, according to an MMH spokeswoman. Kimberly Bollinger had been critically injured in that accident, which occurred when her mother's car collided with a truck.

UT system cancels Bible classes

AUSTIN (AP) — Effective with the end of the current semester, Bible classes will no longer be offered by institutions within the University of Texas system, state officials say.

Kenneth Ashworth, a Texas college and university coordinating board commissioner, said a memorandum will be sent to universities asking them to disassociate themselves from religious organizations and strike Bible classes from their spring curriculum.

A Sept. 11 state attorney general's opinion concerning Bible chairs prompted the action, Ashworth said last week. Bible chairs are teaching positions funded by religious organizations.

The attorney general's opinion said religious organizations can fund Bible chairs at state universities, but should not exercise control over teaching selection.

Patricia Ohlendorf, a UT legal counsel, said the university decided the current Bible chair system needs changing to comply with the attorney general's opinion.

Ashworth said a question about separation of church and state is raised because the university advertises Bible study courses and offers grade credit without full control of teacher selection.

Ervin Crain, a senior minister at University Christian Church, which sponsors a Bible chair at UT-Austin, said the move took him by surprise.

Crain said he doesn't believe the courses violate the constitution.

"If it were really violating someone's constitutional rights, I am surprised it took 80 years to surface," Crain told The Daily Texan, the University of Texas' student publication.

Religious organizations pay for and nominate teachers for all eight Bible chairs offered at UT Austin.

STORE

The Society was founded in Paris in 1833, and named for a 16th-century French saint who was "one of the first Catholic priests to take the poor on as his responsibility," according to Gifford.

St. Vincent De Paul visited prisons, set up orphanages for street children and established nursing homes for the elderly. His modern-day Midland emulators provide emergency help with rent for those about to be evicted; with utility bills for those about to be cut off; with medical bills, car repairs, "and all kinds of things that people need," Ms. Crevier said.

"We help with anything and everything," Ms. Walch said.

Society caseworkers "go out and visit each one of our cases on a person-to-person basis," Gifford said, but they don't try to win converts for Catholicism: "We say, 'You can repay us by going out and helping your neighbors.'"

The Society decided to open the thrift store about three years ago, and Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church provided the wood-frame house behind its church on Garden Lane on Midland's east side.

"The store was actually started to be able to clothe the poor," Ms. Crevier said, though furniture items, tableware, kitchen items and other household goods are also sold there.

The store is open to the public on Mondays and Wednesdays from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. The stock comes from donations which haven't been earmarked for someone on the Society's list of needy people.

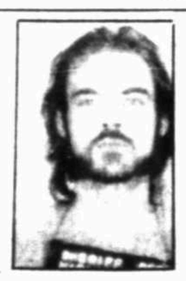

"If nobody needs it we put it in the store for sale at a very small price," Ms. Walch said. "It's mostly clothing, because as fast as the furniture comes in, we have somebody who needs it."

"This town has a lot of millionaires, but it has a lot of poor people, too," she said. "This is something we feel we have to do to help the needy."

DEAR ABBY

Reading problem not tired eyes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: After four years of marriage, I found out that my husband can neither read nor write; he can only sign his name. He admitted this after he lost his job and I had to help him fill out some job applications.

During our courting days, his inability to read or write never came up. I was a widow with two children. He was divorced. He makes a very good appearance, but has always had trouble holding down a job. Now I know why. He is very good at fooling people. He would ask me to read everything from menus to instructions to him — saying his eyes were "tired."

His mother and members of his family have known all along that he was illiterate, but they kept it from me. He has many good qualities, but I am angry because I didn't get a husband, I got a child in a man's body! Am I wrong to be mad at his family for covering up for him? — FOUND OUT TOO LATE

DEAR FOUND OUT: Don't place all the blame on your husband's family; he should have told you himself.

Millions of American adults are functionally illiterate — unable to read a help-wanted ad or directions on a bottle of aspirin, and cannot address an envelope. Somehow they manage to bluff their way through, as your husband did.

However, if he really wants to learn, there are adult basic education classes available through your local public schools. And many public libraries provide one-on-one tutoring for adults. To find out the location of free programs near you, call or write: The National Coalition for Literacy, P.O. Box 81826, Lincoln, Neb. 68501. Send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope. Its toll-free number is 1-800-228-8813. The people there can also tell you how to become a volunteer tutor. "The only degree you need is the degree of caring."

DEAR ABBY: After only three months of marriage, my wife left me for another man. She refuses to get counseling to save our marriage. It looks hopeless, so I may as well accept her decision.

My question is, What should be done about our wedding presents? Should we divide them between us according to who gave them to us — all the gifts that came from her friends and relatives should go to her, and those that come from my friends and family should be mine?

Or should we return them all to the senders? What about the gifts that have been used? Thank-you cards have already been sent out for all of them.

If you print this, you may use my name. I have nothing to hide. Otherwise, sign me ... STILL IN LOVE IN MISSOURI

DEAR STILL: The unused wedding gifts should be returned. Gifts that have been used should be divided — those from her family and friends are hers. Those from your friends and family belong to you. I'm sorry you're hurting. I wish you happiness again — and soon.

DEAR ABBY: I am an introvert. I cherish my privacy and try to protect it whenever possible. My sister-in-law is coming to town for 10 days, and she's written to tell me — not ask me, but to tell me — she is going to sleep on my couch!

Abby, the couch is in the middle of the living room, and if she sleeps there she will disrupt my privacy. She's a late sleeper, and I have to get up at 6:30 a.m. to bathe, breakfast and dress for work in the morning.

This sister-in-law lives 2,000 miles away and I barely know her. I would not want my best friend sleeping in the middle of my living room for 10 days — or even overnight!

The cost of a motel is no problem. Her brother (my husband) thinks this is OK. Am I wrong to resent it? — NO NAME, NO CITY

DEAR NO NAME: Of course you're not wrong to resent it. If you wrote to get my approval to be resentful, you have it. Get in touch with her as soon as possible and don't ask her — tell her that you're making motel reservations for her.

Santa Rita Club celebrates anniversary

From Staff Reports

Midland's Santa Rita Club is celebrated its 10th anniversary last week with a champagne reception hosted by the Petroleum Museum's board of directors.

The volunteer group serving the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame had its first general meeting Nov. 5, 1975, at Midland Country Club.

The organization, named after the Santa Rita discovery well in the prolific Big Lake Field, began with 28 charter members under the direction of Mrs. Charles Cole, now of Houston, with Mrs. Reg Hyer and Mrs. Ed Runyan, both still active members here, assisting her.

In the 10 years since then, the Santa Rita Club's membership has increased almost tenfold. It's current total membership is 259.

The group's activities include operating the museum's gift shop, conducting docented tours, training docents, providing items for the museum that are not in its budget, assisting with exhibits, aiding the library's archivists and conducting a puppet show on local history for Midland's schools.

From Sept. 1975 through May 1984, 459 Santa Rita members gave a combined total of more than 72,280 hours. One member reached a total of 3,500 hours donated and 10 members had worked each month from the museum's opening to the end of 1984.

The club's current top officers are Joyce Hauke, president, Linda Borders, vice president, Tommie Underwood, secretary, and Nancy Gill, treasurer.

'School phobia' more than hooky

Hearst News Service

All children have days when the mere thought of school brings on a stomachache. But for certain kids, "school phobia," the abiding reluctance to attend class, can lead to serious emotional difficulties stretching into adulthood, says Dr. Steven Schultz, a child and adolescent psychiatrist associated with Del Amo Hospital in Torrance, Calif.

The school, Schultz says, is the child's most important forum for learning social skills for getting along with others.

"If school attendance is interrupted, the potential harm to the child can be so serious that any healthy child who has not been attending regularly is in vital need of psychiatric evaluation," he says.

Generally, Schultz says, "school phobia" has two peaks, one between the ages of 7 and 9, the other between 14 and 16.

"In the case of the younger children, they are anxious, clinging, and usually say they have headaches or upset stomachs that clear up when they are allowed to stay home."

OLDER CHILDREN, Schultz says, fall into two categories. One child will have symptoms similar to a panic attack, and will be afraid to leave his room.

"When teen-agers withdraw socially like this it's a very dangerous sign and they should receive professional help," Schultz says.

The other category of teen is made up of habitual truants who are prone to getting into trouble with drugs or petty theft. These children still may be within reach of their parents or school counselors, Schultz says.

Schools bear part of the responsibility for truancy because regulations have been relaxed, at least at the high school level, Schultz says. But he believes the primary responsibility for seeing that children attend school remains with the parents.

"For the learning disabled," says Sandra Goldstein, a Van Nuys, Calif.-child psychologist specializing in school phobia, "school may be much too demanding, with challenges that are beyond their capability. These children are going to need extra support from an educational therapist."

But in the great majority of cases, Goldstein says, young children afraid to go to school are really afraid to be separated from mom and dad.

"The children are afraid to leave for another world, and the problem can be complicated by parents who often inadvertently send a message to the child that it's OK to stay home. I almost always have to work the parents as well as the children in cases of school phobia. The parents have to set firm guidelines about attendance."

SCHULTZ SAYS there may be concrete fears associated with school. The child may fear a school bully, or fear undressing in front of other children in gym, or fear competing in team sports.

"But it's more worrisome when a child's reluctance to attend class is part of a social withdrawal, as in the case of a child who previously had shown normal social behavior but now has withdrawn from friends and prefers to be alone.

He says that normally children learn to control new-found feelings of self-importance by testing them against the realities of the school yard. But an isolated child may continue to have unrealistic grandiose ideas of self-importance that could lead to later emotional problems.

Goldstein says an older child who has a history of being rejected by his classmates can get so discouraged that he gives up the idea of ever making friends at school.

"These children have quite serious emotional problems," she says.

Schultz says separation anxiety also could mean the child feels compelled to stay home to protect the parent. As an example, he says one 8-year-old was afraid to leave her mother because she had once heard the father, during a drunken rage, threaten to kill the mother.

IN DEALING with school phobia, the main task is to get the child back in school, he says. If the child refuses to go to class, at least put him with the school nurse.

Millions of adult Americans cannot read

Associated Press

To those of us who read every day — who depend on newspapers and magazines for information and entertainment, fill out insurance forms, comparison shop at department stores, look up numbers in the telephone directory and relax with a good book — life without the written word is incomprehensible.

And yet for as many as 60 million adult Americans, one in three words are at best a mystery, at worst fearsome and shaming roadblocks.

According to Better Homes and Gardens, the numbers are huge and chilling:

- 27 million adult Americans are unable to read.
- At least 30 million more are functionally illiterate — they read and write so poorly that they cope only marginally.
- In just 15 years the functionally illiterate population could be as much as 70 percent of adults.
- Every year 2.4 million functionally illiterate people are added to the ranks, some are immigrants who may or may not be literate in languages other than English, and, incredibly, 1 million come out of our schools.

Easy enough to understand is the private tragedy of illiteracy as it affects individual lives. We can sympathize with people such as the Connecticut mother who was passed through school without learning to read. "I behaved in class," she says, "and I was graded on behavior. No one believed me when I told them I couldn't read."

More difficult to grasp is the public tragedy and how it affects us. "The condition is a national disgrace and a growing threat to the promise of America," says Jim Cates, director of the Adult Performance Level project at the University of Texas, which has conducted research on functional literacy in the country.

"We are all victims of illiteracy. We pay the price for it one way or another," says Cates. "We pay because those who cannot function fully don't pay their share of taxes, can't maintain basic health and nutrition standards, can't understand governmental processes, and can't share civic responsibilities."

Research done by Cates' group found that just under 50 percent of all Americans over age 18 are truly proficient and in command of the skills needed to cope in our complex society.

One reason the problem is growing is that standards are higher today. Cates' research found most people can read and write, but society has become so sophisticated that those simple abilities are not enough.

Life is limited for the more than 40 million people who are "marginally" literate. They are people, for example, who can read well enough to perform their jobs adequately or to accept a promotion. A woman who left school to work after the sixth grade says it simply: "When you can't read too good, there's a lot of things you don't know."

Virtually every community has some people who are illiterate. Many who read and write poorly manage to stay, if not in the mainstream of society, at least on the edges. Others, however, do not. They are the poor, unemployed, disaffected. Those people cost as much as $6 billion each year in welfare and unemployment payments. Many are in prisons.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK87632 ♡10752 ◇8 ♣4
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—On this auction you have a very fine hand and there is no doubt that partner could have a number of holdings that would make slam an excellent proposition. On most of those, however, partner would have made some bid other than three spades. Therefore, we suggest you pull in your horns and bid a quiet four spades.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q8 ♡KJ6 ◇AJ987 ♣1065
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 ◇	Dble	Rdble
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—The choices are between a diamond raise and a rebid of one no trump. Considering the auction, it seems that, if you have a game, it is more likely to be in no trump than in diamonds. Make that suggestion to partner now by bidding one no trump—you can always support diamonds later in the auction if partner shows a dislike for no trump.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A7 ♡K105 ◇Q94 ♣QJ873
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You took advantage of being in third seat to open light, since you don't have two defensive tricks. Now you must alert your partner to that fact before you get overboard, or he doubles the opponents should they compete. Pass.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ83 ♡AQJ5 ◇9 ♣762
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner is showing a hand worth about 19 points in support of spades, so you are in the slam zone. However, Blackwood won't solve your problem, since you could have two fast losers in clubs, and you have nothing to cue-bid. The only way to communicate your interest to partner is to bid over game. Jump to five spades.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ102 ♡10983 ◇Q76 ♣Q3
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♠	1 NT	?

What action do you take?
A.—East is going to find little or nothing in his partner's hand, and he is going to be trapped between you and your partner. Make him pay for his venture into the auction. Double.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A105 ♡A93 ◇Q1073 ♣J43
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a very fine hand, but your 11 plus points and partner's 19-20 just don't add up to slam. In that case, there's no point in getting beyond game. Raise to three no trump.

Writer calls 'Doctor' Cosby a sham

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Bill Cosby's Ed.D., like many an advanced education degree, is a sham, says writer Reginald G. Damerall in a new book, "Education's Smoking Gun."

"Everybody knows Cosby," says Damerall, a former University of Massachusetts professor. "He just happens to illustrate the point."

Damerall, quoted in the current issue of People magazine, says Cosby received credits for appearances on such television shows as "Sesame Street" and "The Electric Company," and his 242-page doctoral dissertation discussed ways that teachers could use his television shows as educational tools.

But Louis Fisher, acting dean of the University of Massachusetts School of Education when Cosby received his doctorate, told People that the comedian's dissertation was "a very respectable piece of work."

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II placed a wreath of poppies at Britain's war memorial and led a two-minute silent tribute to those who died in the two world wars.

Several thousand veterans, politicians and clergy members braved a cold wind to join the queen and other members of the royal family in the Remembrance Sunday ceremony at The Cenotaph, the memorial in the center of Whitehall.

Among those who laid wreaths were Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and leaders of the other political parties and the queen's second son, Prince Andrew, a Royal Navy pilot who flew combat missions in the 1982 Falklands War.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Helen Hayes has been given the 1985 Pearl S. Buck Foundation Woman's Award for her "career, devotion to family and children, and pursuit of humanitarian goals."

Miss Hayes, 85, received the award Sunday in a ceremony at the Plaza Hotel.

The Buck Foundation, established by the late author in 1964, provides medical, educational and psychological assistance to Amerasian children in six Asian nations.

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — The city hopes billboards proclaiming that "David Letterman slept here" and "Steven Spielberg had a close encounter here" will generate more business for the community.

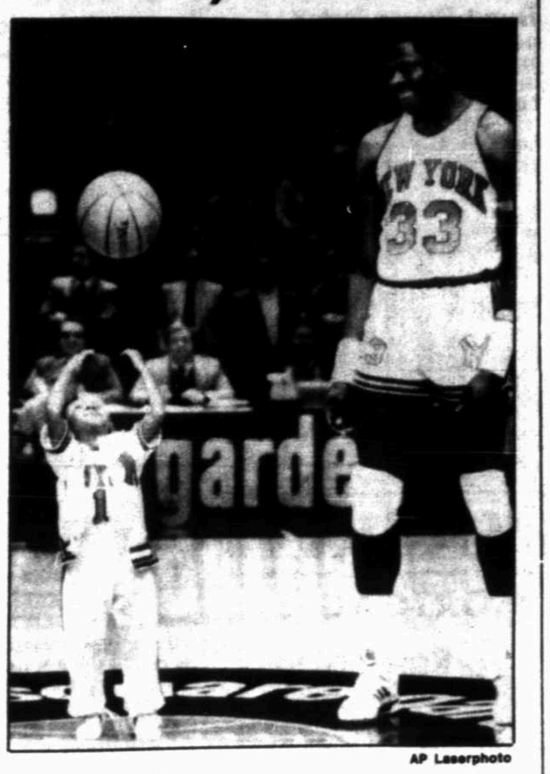

"The idea was that something happens here," said Gary Demaree, marketing consultant for the Delaware County Convention and Tourism Commission.

Letterman, star of NBC-TV's "Late Night With David Letterman," has been a celebrity in Muncie since his days as a disc jockey at Ball State University, from which he graduated 15 years ago.

The billboard citing the Letterman connection features a pillow inscribed with the initials BSU. Below that is a message that informs readers there are "14 Muncie area hotels to choose from."

The Spielberg slogan refers to the film director's fictional use of Muncie as a backdrop for "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Tourism officials said they were unable to reach the celebrities to ask permission to use their names.

Tall, short of it

Emmanuel Lewis, star of ABC's "Webster," shows New York Knickerbocker star Patrick Ewing his "short shot" Saturday during a game with the Chicago Bulls at New York's Madison Square Garden.

But David Robertson, commission president, said the signs are factual statements, not endorsements.

"Our legal people said they didn't have a problem," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Student-athletes too often are not getting the education they need to adjust to life after sports, warns former National Basketball Association star Elvin Hayes.

Hayes, 39, who returned to the University of Houston after 16 years in the NBA to finish earning his bachelor's degree, writes in Newsweek On Campus that he decided to go back to school because completion of his education "provides balance in my life" and sets an example for others.

He noted that only one in 12,000 college athletes makes it into the professional ranks, making "it all too clear that the student-athlete can no longer continue to sacrifice education for athletics."

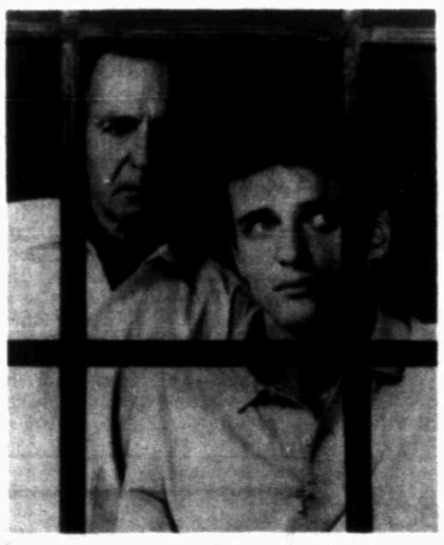

At Houston, Hayes, a senior, is working with the school's athletic department on programs to make sure that student-athletes get the proper educational training off the field.

• • •

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Silent screen star Mary MacLaren, a cover girl who played opposite Douglas Fairbanks Sr. and Rudolph Valentino but later was mired in hardship, has died. She was 85.

Miss MacLaren died 6 p.m. Saturday at West Hollywood Hospital of cardiac arrest and severe pneumonia, nursing director Rodney Casoria said Sunday.

Weather, lead reduction keeps gas prices climbing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pleasant autumn weather that sent motorists to the road also forced up gasoline prices, which were rising anyway because of the cost of reducing lead in fuel, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

Gas prices nationwide jumped an average 0.30 of a cent a gallon for all grades in the two-week period ending Nov. 8, Lundberg said Sunday. He surveys 17,000 gasoline stations in 50 states bi-weekly for his Lundberg Letter.

"The increase reflects a fairly strong Indian summer consumer demand as well as the growing increase in refinery costs in phasing down lead content," Lundberg said.

"Should a cold snap occur, this could turn things around, but so far the pleasant driving weather is maintaining strong consumer demand," he said.

The average price for all grades of gasoline nationwide was $1.207, he said.

At self-service stations, which account for 77 percent of all sales, the average price for leaded regular was $1.085 a gallon. The average price per gallon for unleaded regular was $1.161, and premium unleaded was $1.29.

Gas prices reached a 1985 peak of $1.241 in July, then slowly fell, Lundberg said. During the past month, pump prices began to climb again.

The response to an Environmental Protection Agency mandate to reduce the amount of lead in gasoline to 0.10 of a gram per gallon by Dec. 31 has pushed prices up, Lundberg said. Adding lead to gas is an inexpensive way to boost octane; unleaded gasoline requires more crude oil.

Consumers of leaded regular gasoline are paying the most to meet the clean-air standards. During the past two weeks, leaded regular went up 0.42 of a cent, while unleaded regular and unleaded premium went up 0.39 of cent and 0.28 of a cent, respectively.

Lundberg predicted more price hikes as increases in wholesale gasoline prices outstripped retail price increases for the fourth straight week.

During the past two weeks, wholesale prices increased by 0.83 of a cent per gallon, more than a half-cent more than the retail price hike.

During the two-week survey period ending Oct. 25, the wholesale increase was 1.08 cents, while the increase at the pump was only 0.19 of a cent per gallon, he said.

"There's a reluctance in dealers to take the lead in passing the price on to the street," Lundberg said. "It indicates pretty fierce competition. What this is saying also is that the price of gasoline will continue to increase."

Mel Baker, executive director of the Antelope Valley Board of Trade, stands in the frame of one of the many new homes being constructed in the Antelope Valley area, which is rapidly becoming the Los Angeles area's newest bedroom community.

Building boom joins sonic booms

Antelope Valley home of aerospace industry

LANCASTER, Calif. (AP) — Since man first pierced the sound barrier in 1947, sonic booms have rolled across the Antelope Valley, almost as often as the wind-driven tumbleweeds.

Now a boom of a different sort is thundering across the high desert valley. Fueled by a boosted defense budget and long-haul commuters looking for affordable housing, the region is rapidly becoming the Los Angeles area's newest bedroom community.

Once home mostly to prospectors and rattlesnakes, the Antelope Valley, including the vast Edwards Air Force Base, has been the cradle of the nation's aerospace industry since the closing days of World War II.

Every jet-propelled advance — from the Bell X-1, in which test pilot Chuck Yeager bested the speed of sound in 1947, to the space shuttle — rocketed to fame over the valley. A visitor today can look up and see sausage-shaped and knife-edged profiles of prototype aircraft swooping and soaring in the clear desert sky.

Dubbed "Aerospace Valley" by the locals, these 2,500 square miles of Joshua trees and sagebrush sit on the edge of the Mojave Desert about 60 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

The current housing surge is chiefly affecting the valley's two largest communities — Lancaster, with a population of 60,000, and Palmdale, population 23,000.

The kind of single-family, detached homes that cost $135,000 and more in the crowded Los Angeles suburbs sell for about $50,000 less in the Antelope Valley.

Many new arrivals are "road runners," commuters who drive 50 miles or more to jobs "down below" in the Los Angeles basin, said James Gilley, Lancaster's city manager.

"The commute is not that bad in today's real world ... if you drive at a normal speed of about 100 mph," joked Phillip E. Maher, manager of the local telephone office.

The president's push to rearm the military has strengthened the airplane business, which in turn has been good for the Antelope Valley's economy.

Most of the big aerospace companies have plants in the valley. Gilley expects they will eventually move their headquarters there, too, much the way that computer firms congregated in the Silicon Valley south of San Francisco.

At the Rockwell International complex in Palmdale, 6,000 people are assembling four B-1B strategic bombers every month, with price tags of $282 million each. The $100 million operation is part of Air Force Plant 42, where Northrop and Lockheed also maintain assembly and testing facilities.

The optimism of a California real estate boom enhances the patriotic spirit associated with building military planes for America, said Mel Baker, executive director of the Antelope Valley Board of Trade.

"World events are the reason that Aerospace Valley happened," Baker said. "First, Edwards Air Force Base was a bombing range during World War II. Then it was needed for test flights. Now (because of the aerospace industry), the valley helps shape world events."

One development prospect hovering like a mirage on the desert is the proposed Palmdale International Airport to ease congestion at Los Angeles International Airport, 70 miles away. Civic boosters have pressed their case for 17 years.

The Los Angeles Department of Airports owns land near Plant 42, but the Air Force opposes an airport for security reasons and because civil aviation could hamper the wide-open conditions that make the high desert ideal for flight testing.

But regardless of whether the airport is built, planners, politicians and area residents see growth and prosperity blooming on the desert floor.

Home sales, prices up during third quarter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of sales of previously occupied homes is edging closer to the record 4.2 million set in 1978 as home prices and interest rates moderate over most of the nation, even though prices in some cities are spiraling further out of reach, new surveys show.

Two surveys released Friday by the National Association of Realtors showed real estate sales increased in 46 states and the District of Columbia in the third quarter of this year. If the third quarter rate were to be projected across a full year, it would produce 3.76 million sales, up 24.9 percent from a year ago.

With interest rates at their lowest in six years, there is increasing pressure on home prices in the Northeast, since there are more willing buyers than sellers.

In the Northeast, the metropolitan areas of Boston; Albany, N.Y.; Hartford, Conn.; New York; Philadelphia; Providence, R.I.; and Syracuse, N.Y. all saw double-digit increases in the median price of a resale home, compared to the third quarter a year ago.

Boston, with a 36.1 percent increase over the year in the median price, became the most expensive place outside of California to buy an existing home, with half of the homes selling for more than $138,800.

Half of all sales in the Hartford area were above the $100,000 plateau for the first time ever, bringing to seven the number of metro areas where fewer than half the homes could be purchased for less than $100,000.

In 1983, only the Anaheim-Santa Ana area of California was on that list.

Washington, D.C., at $98,300 and Dallas-Fort Worth at $94,500 got closer to the $100,000 mark.

Despite the prices in the D.C. area, sales increased by 45.9 percent in the last year.

Sales soared 86.8 percent in Indiana and 45.3 percent in Tennessee.

Nationwide, the 44 cities on the Realtors' list posted a 4.5 percent price gain compared to a year ago.

Buffalo had the lowest median price in the nation, $46,300.

There were no dramatic declines in prices or sales posted in the third quarter.

Chevron agrees to sell 4,000 gas stations

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Chevron said Friday that it has agreed to sell a network of 4,000 gasoline stations in 10 Northeastern states to Cumberland Farms, a family-owned convenience store chain based in Canton, Mass.

The sale was one in a series of deals announced Friday involving most of Chevron's Northeastern marketing properties. The San Francisco oil company said it expected to realize $500 million in cash from the sales, which it would use to reduce its debt.

The nation's No. 2 oil company has sold various oil and gas properties over the last several months to reduce the debt that it took on when it acquired Gulf Oil for $13.2 billion last year. The $500 million from the sales would lower Chevron's debt to $10.4 billion from its current $10.9 billion. The debt was $15.5 billion at the begining of the year.

The sale would transform Cumberland Farms from a fairly small gasoline marketer to one of the largest in the Northeast. Chevron ranks among the top five sellers in the Northeast, where it accounts for 7 percent of petroleum products sales, primarily gasoline. Cumberland currently operates 600 gasoline stations located at convenience stores in the Northeast and Florida.

Chevron said it owned 520 of the gas stations involved in the sale and the rest were supplied under contract. It said it might continue to supply some of the gas stations under a contract with Cumberland.

The company said it also agreed to sell four heating oil businesses to Champion Oil of Greenwich, Conn; its interest in a southeastern Pennsylvania pipeline to the Penn Central Energy Group of Tulsa, Okla.; and its Bulk Petroleum, a no-frills gasoline marketer based in Chicago, to R.J. Evensen, the manager of Bulk Petroleum.

It said final details of the sales would not be worked out for another six months.

Impact of Mexican curbs called unclear

New York Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — It is still too early to measure the actual impact of new curbs on foreign banks in Mexico, according to experts here.

Concerned by the peso's dramatic fall in recent weeks in the free market, Mexico's central bank announced restrictions Tuesday night on foreign banks operating here. The measures are meant to stop speculation in the peso and restrict transactions in the currency outside of Mexico.

Under the restrictions, the banks and other financial institutions, such as currency exchange houses, will be limited in conducting transactions involving the peso outside of official Mexican currency exchange channels and in operating in the credit market in pesos.

In the past, the office of a foreign bank here could accept deposits in pesos and pay them out in the United States as dollars. The pesos were held in accounts that the foreign banks maintained in Mexican banks.

Under the new rules, Mexican banks must supervise the activity in the accounts. If a bank suspects that activity in a foreign bank's account is meant solely to purchase dollars, the bank is required to intervene, according to American bankers' interpretations of the new regulations.

One American banker said that the plan was "astonishingly effective" and "extremely simple" and brought "control back into the hands of the Mexicans." Basically, he added, "it means that in one fell swoop the futures market in the peso has been killed; it means that the normal spot transaction between offshore entities has been eliminated."

But some sectors of the business community reacted to the new rules with suspicion, labeling them a form of exchange controls and worrying that this move could presage further steps leading to complete exchange controls.

"We had exchange controls after the financial crisis in 1982 and they were a disaster," said a spokesman for the American Chamber of Commerce. "It would be a mistake to have them again, but these new rules could be a step in that direction."

In announcing its new rules, the Bank of Mexico said that Mexico's banking authorities "are concerned that banking credit and deposit operations in pesos are taking place outside of the country and diminish the effectiveness of monetary regulations." The central bank said it wanted to make peso credit transactions abroad more difficult and reduce the peso market.

In the so-called "free" exchange rate, the peso has gone from 370 pesos to the dollar before the September earthquakes that struck Mexico City, to the 500-peso range. On Friday, private exchange houses bought dollars for 512 pesos.

The free peso exchange accounts for about 20 percent of Mexico's foreign exchange.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gained more ground today, extending the strong advance of the past two weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which closed Friday at a record high, rose another 8.94 to 1,413.30 by noontime today on Wall Street.

Gainers held a 7-6 lead over losers in the midday tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Some dropoff in trading activity was expected with many banks and other businesses closed for Veterans Day. The government securities market did not operate.

The New York and American stock exchanges interrupted trading at 11 a.m. EST for two minutes of silence in observance of the holiday.

Still, analysts said some residual enthusiasm was apparent among traders. The market's recent advance has been fueled by hopes for lower interest rates and a strong economy in 1986.

Those hopes have been based in large part on indications that the Federal Reserve has been seeking to stimulate economic activity by holding rates down.

Among actively traded blue chips, International Business Machines rose ¾ to 133¼, and Sears Roebuck gained ¼ to 36⅛, while American Telephone & Telegraph was unchanged at 21⅛.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Exclusion' profit from home sale not added to adjusted gross income

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My wife and I, both 65, are collecting Social Security. We sold our home in August and realized a substantial profit. When we file our 1985 federal income tax return, we plan to declare that profit as tax free.

Am I correct in assuming that we will not have to add that profit to our adjusted gross income to determine if part of our SS benefits will be taxable?

Dovle

A. You're absolutely correct, assuming the profit from the sale of your home was $125,000 or less.

You're hit with federal income tax on your SS benefits only when your adjusted gross income, plus all tax-free interest you receive from municipal bonds and half of your SS benefits exceed a "threshold" — $32,000 for married couples filing joint returns, $25,000 for individuals and zero for married couples filing separate returns.

This complicated formula is driving lots of retired folks up the wall and into the arms of professional tax preparers. It boils down to the fact that, since this rule went into effect in 1984, up to half of SS benefits have been taxable.

However, the tax-free profit you realized from the sale of your home is not included in this calculation.

Anyone 55 or older is allowed to use a "once-in-a-lifetime exclusion" and not pay tax on up to $125,000 of the profit from the sale of the principal residence he or she has lived in for three of the five years before the sale.

You take that exclusion by filing Form 2119 with your federal income tax return. You do not add the amount of that exclusion to your adjusted gross income and tax-free interest to determine if part of your SS benefits are taxable.

• • •

Q. I wholeheartedly agree with your statement that the new arrangement lumping adjusted gross income with tax-exempt interest and half of a person's Social Security benefits is "a backdoor way for Uncle Sam to tax some municipal bond interest." I said exactly the same thing to a number of friends, even before I read those words in your column. I never heard or read this was to be, until I prepared my 1984 income tax return. I have been buying municipal bonds and collecting the tax-free interest they pay for almost 20 years. So, the new wrinkle came as a big shock and I had to pay income tax on half of my 1984 SS benefits.

When did Congress pass this law?

A. In April 1983. The arrangement that has you and many other retirees hopping mad was enacted as part of the Social Security Amendments Act, which became effective Jan. 1, 1984.

If you didn't know anything about it until you sat down to do your '84 return, you weren't reading newspapers in general and this column in particular. The papers carried many stories about that legislation. I've been explaining the tax impact on SS recipients since shortly after it was enacted into law.

Nevertheless, many people on Social Security still seem to be in the dark about how some of their benefits might be subject to income tax.

Some just don't know about the new wrinkle. Others just ignored it. Everyone whose SS benefits became taxable for the first time in 1984 and who didn't comply with the new rules will hear from the Internal Revenue Service eventually. The revenooers' computers are programmed to catch things such as that.

• • •

Q. Now that up to 50 percent of Social Security benefits are subject to the same federal income tax as wages, why shouldn't SS recipients be allowed to establish individual retirement accounts based on 50 percent of their SS benefits?

A. You'll have to put that question to the members of Congress, who write the laws covering taxes, SS and IRAs. As things now stand, you can make an annual contribution to an IRA only if you have "personal service income," such as wages, salary, commissions, fees and tips.

Employee 'Suggester of the Year' saves GMC $3 million with his tips

By WARD MARCHANT
Associated Press

DENVER — Michael G. McKay, a 40-year-old machinist for General Motors Corp., is proof of the power of suggestion.

McKay, who carries a picture of inventor Thomas Edison, has stuffed his company's "suggestion box" about 250 times in the past 21 years with ideas he felt would save GM money. The company estimates about 200 have been implemented at a savings of $3 million. Many of the rest are still being evaluated.

Enlisting the employee is the drive for greater efficiency has never been more popular in the United States as managers, economists, politicians and consultants decry what they see as slipping U.S. productivity and increasing competition from other nations, especially Japan. The modern form of the suggestion box is growing more important in the effort.

Employee suggestion programs have been around a long time — Eastman Kodak Co. established the first in 1898. And the National Association of Suggestion Systems began in 1942 when 35 suggestion administrators from different organizations met in Chicago and decided to establish a clearing house through which affiliated organizations could benefit from the experience of others.

The association has grown rapidly and now feeds information and expertise to 900 companies and government entities that have set up departments to encourage and study employee's ideas.

Member companies reported savings of approximately $800 million last year and a like amount in 1983 through their suggestion systems. Last year alone they paid at least $98 million to employees for suggestions that were adopted.

Suggestion programs have developed from the old "suggestion box" concept to programs that favor participation by employees in management, said Nicholas Fritsch, corporate suggestion coordinator for Eli Lilly & Co. in Indianapolis. He is the current president of the association.

But the key to making the concept work is still the guy on the job who sees a better way of doing something.

And that describes McKay. For his history of money-saving ideas, the 40-year-old machinist from Ortonville, Mich. was flown to Denver last month to be honored by the association as "Suggester of the Year."

> His biggest reward is just "having an idea and making it work. It makes me feel good to see the company pick up on my ideas. The reward is minor. Seeing your idea implemented just makes you feel good."
> — Michael G. McKay
> "Suggester of the Year"

Persistence also pays. "I got $15,000 once on a suggestion that was turned down four times before it was accepted," he said.

His suggestions have ranged from his first — in 1964 when he was a new employee at the Pontiac, Mich., press metal plant of GM's Chevy-Pontiac-Canada Group — to a redesign of a pump the company says will save $3.5 million in the next five years.

"My first suggestion was important to me, but fairly insignificant," he said. It involved setting up a canteen arrangement for workers to eat their lunches, instead of sitting on the floor or on boxes.

"I got $25 for that one," he said. For his adopted suggestions in 1984, McKay received about $80,000 from the company.

Runner-up in the annual "Suggester of the Year" competition was Moses Hogan, an employee of the Aftermarket Branch of Parker Bertea Aerospace of Irvine, Calif. Finishing third was Michael D. Fedy, an associate cost engineer for IBM Canada Ltd. in Ontario.

Frat brothers' 'brand' makes advisors cringe

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Some collegians settle for a fraternity pin, but Lindsey Montgomery had somebody burn a brand on his left arm.

"I got a medium-sized one: four or five inches wide and six inches long," Lindsey said of his permanent brand.

The practice of college fraternity members showing their loyalty by searing their skin, usually in Greek letters representing their fraternity name, is not meeting with general approval, said college advisors.

"It's certainly not something the national office approves of," said James Holland, a biology professor who serves as faculty advisor to the Omega Psi Phi chapter at Indiana State University.

"I get some negative reactions and some positive ones," said Montgomery, president of the Omegas at Indiana State. "Most of the brothers who brand themselves do it to show their love for the fraternities."

The practice is confined mostly to black fraternal groups, according to Robert F. Marchesani Jr. of the National Interfraternity Conference, which represents 58 black fraternities.

"It's just like sailors on leave; it's the thing to do," Marchesani said. "There's a lot of peer pressure to do it."

No one has been branded by force, said Marchesani and others familiar with the practice, and it is not part of any initiation ceremonies.

"It shows loyalty, actually more like brotherhood," said Sidney Triplett, president of an Omega chapter at Purdue University. He said 14 of the 16 members of his chapter had chosen to have themselves branded.

"They're actually 'hits,' not brands. That's what we call them," he said. "You don't hold (the branding iron) against the skin. You just touch it, hit it, and it burns the first layer of skin."

Triplett, who said he spent seven years in the Marine Corps, compared branding to the practice of wearing tatoos. "I have one (brand) on each arm," he said in a telephone interview.
