BURKBURNETT, April 30.—Len and Will Ramming, both former citizens of Burkburnett, were over from Wichita Falls in their oil interests this week.

Claude Hanley, scout for the Gulf Company, who has his headquarters in Wichita Falls and Fort Worth, was in Burkburnett Monday.

WAGGONER FLOW 1,600 BARRELS DAILY

Well in 1,900-Foot Sand Creating Sensation

Flowing at the rate of 100 barrels an hour, for the first few hours, and with a conservative estimate of 1,600 barrels daily placed on the production the Texas Company's No. 215 Waggoner, in the 1900-foot sand, South Electra pool, Sunday was creating a sensation equal to that of the early days of the old Electra pool.

Offsetting wells pronoucing from the shallow sands, which first made this pool famous, this new well is the largest completed here in several years. It is not yet completely drilled in and is said to show good prospects for being an even bigger producer.

Third Big Well In 14 Days.

This is the third producer from the 1900-foot sand in this field in the past week, the others being completed by the Planet Petroleum company across the road and R. O. Harvey et al two miles further west. The Planet well is accredited with a reproduction of around 450 barrels daily, while the Harvey well is reported to be doing around 700 barrels daily.

The effect of these wells is already serving to stimulate drilling to a great extent. The Texas company has made two more locations and hauled out a boiler yesterday morning through a heavy rain and was getting material on the ground as rapidly as possible to get a test started one location to the south.

Out to See Wells.

Many people braved the muddy roads and blinding rains to go out and see the new gusher Sunday morning and afternoon. The spectators did not have the opportunity of seeing the well in action as in the early days, for the company had anticipated the flow and already had a battery of tanks ready to receive the oil. Pipe line connections were soon made and the oil was run out of the storage tanks almost as fast as it was pumped in.

The flow went into the tanks with tremendous force and showed a healthy gas pressure. Scores of men were out at the well getting the connection in shape and getting ready to offset the new well.

The Texas Company has several wells producing on this same lease from the 1400 and 1700 foot sands, the sands that have made the Gladiolus Hill famous, but this is the first well that has been drilled to the deeped sands.

Storage Ready

No. 215 was in a sandy lime the latter part of the past week and cement was set several days ago. The well showed considerable oil from the lime and after it went into the sand several feet the company and all who saw it realized that a big producer was likely. For this reason ample storage was ready and no oil was wasted.

PASTORS LEAD FIGHT ON FLOOD

Food Problem Now Serious

By Associated Press.

NEW ORLEANS, April 30.—While water flowing through the three crevasses in the lower Mississippi river continued to cover more land today, the fight to prevent other breaks in the levees was carried on ceaselessly. Thousands of men spent the day filling and piling sand bars to raise low stretches of the embankments to meet higher river stages than yet recorded.

In the third Mississippi levee district alone, no less than 10,000 men were engaged in the fight to hold the swollen river in its channel. The 4,000 employed by the government in this district being reinforced by more than 6,000 civilians who volunteered their services. Church services were dispensed with in many places, the pastors leading their flocks to the levees.

So far as could be determined late today there was no alleviation of the serious situation growing out of the depletion of food supplies at a number of the refugee camps, especially at Harrisonburg, La., where 1,500 persons were reported yesterday to be practically without food. Nothing is known here of the progress of the boat loaded with provisions which was despatched from New Orleans yesterday for the stricken Black river district, where 11,000 destitute refugees are existing on a very restricted diet.

Reports from Yazoo City, Miss., today state that food is scarce in that district, the supplies being practically exhausted, and that conditions were even worse in Issequena county where a large area had been under water for the last six weeks.

At Jonesville, La., where several hundred destitute refugees from the Black, Little, Tensas and Ouachita river districts are being cared for, back water from these four rivers

Mrs. Wilkerson said she visited Virginia Bell's famous "dancing academy" in Chicago since closed by police, who charged that it was but a place where girls gathered to meet Chicago's "tired" but wealthy business men. TRAIN CHILD TO EAT RIGHT

Right Feeding at Start Essential

"To think that such a scrap of pale leaf flesh and soft white flannel can be such a little despot," murmured the young mother, coming back to the table for the fourth time. She was still at the stage of dashing to the nursery at the least suspicion of sound from the little white bed where the new baby slept.

"He certainly holds this household in the hollow of his hand," said the young father, proudly. "But I wish he wouldn't wake at meal-time—always." And he ate cold pudding resignedly, after three rushes to the nursery between soup and dessert.

"Your mother says you always woke and cried at meal-time, dear," said the young mother, half reproachfully.

"I don't see why my son should follow such a bad example," began the young father, half rising at the sound of a squeak from the adjoining room.

King Baby Resigned Supreme.

And so it was at every meal during that first year.

Cold soup, cold puddings, half-eaten meals. Cooks who were constantly annoyed because meals were ruined while the fond parents waited on King Baby.

And King Baby himself, as he was graduated from bottles to spoons and cups, became a power unto his household. Meal-time was an abomination to the nursemaids, who came and went almost as promptly, because the baby was "spoiled."

The parents had contracted the habit of rushing away from the table at a cry from the baby, of bolting meals hurriedly, of catching trains with a sandwich in their hands.

The baby bolted his food, cried for the things he wanted, churned in his glass of milk with his first, and scorned cereal without thick coatings of sugar. He developed likes and dislikes. He wouldn't eat at meal-time, and he wept for food at awkward hours of the day and night. He wanted to be amused at meal-time. Sometimes he had to be bribed in order to eat.

Then came a little brother.

"Start right with this one," pleaded the grandmother who had come to visit. "Don't spoil him. Train him to eat properly. It's a simple matter if you start early."

And the young parents decided.

A Healthier, Happier Baby.

The new baby was fed and left in peace. There were no rushes to the nursery at meal hours. Visitors were debarred at bottle time, instead of being urged to come in and watch the little darling take his bottle. And the new baby was placid and happy, like a little animal. He ate, and slept, and smiled, and played with his feet and hands.

And meal-times in the household began to come back to normalcy.

When the second baby was graduated to a spoon and a plate he had learned to eat at proper intervals. To eat and drink what was placed before him. When chewing time arrived he was taught to chew his food thoroughly and encouraged to eat slowly. There were no more admiration parties in the nursery at meal-time.

He drank milk because it was set before him.

He ate bread without jam, or with jam, and had neither likes nor dislikes, because he had been trained to eat properly.

And he was a healthier, happier baby than the first.

A Wife or a Profession?

BY CAROLYN BEECHER

(Copyright, 1922, by Carolyn Beecher)

Chapter LXIV.

Each morning as it dawned found a question upon Annette's lips:

"How much longer shall I have to lie here, Howard? When can I get up?" And each morning came the same reply:

"Soon, I hope, Annette. You are getting stronger every day now."

Then one morning, about a month after the accident as they were breakfasting—Howard had had a table fitted so he could take his meals with Annette when she was well enough—she said without preamble:

"Shall I ever walk again, Howard?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"Answer me, dear. I heard one of the maids say something. She was pitying me. You know how I hate to be pitied."

"Yes, dear," he answered her last remark.

"Tell me, Howard! Shall I always be a cripple? Always have to lie here." Slow tears fell unheeded down her cheeks, but she smiled at him, a sad little smile that hurt him more than sobs would have done.

"We don't think so, dear." He spoke as brightly as he could. "Dr. Campbell thinks you will be able to walk as soon as you are strong enough to undergo a certain very delicate operation."

"Did you know about that operation, the kind I will have to have?"

"Yes, I performed it on one of the boys in France."

"Then you know?"

"Yes; but you must get very strong first, dear, must eat and sleep and keep up your courage. That will help more than anything else. I knew of an old lady over sixty who broke her hip. People of that age scarcely ever live. When they do they are crippled for the remainder of their lives. But this old lady is over eighty now and has never had to use a cane, does not limp, and has been perfectly well since she recovered. The surgeon who attended her, the physician who cared for her, the nurses who waited upon her, all said it was because of her cheerfulness and her exact obedience to the regime laid down for her that she recovered."

"That's a nice story. I'm sure I should be able to do as well as a woman of sixty. I'm not quite that yet."

"Of course you can, and will."

"Will you send for Claire? Tell her to come prepared to stay as long as she can endure a sick room."

"I'll write at once." Howard bent and kissed the pale face. She threw her arms about him and whispered: "You are the best husband a woman ever had."

Annette had spoken of enduring a sick room, yet the room she occupied was the brightest in the house. There was nothing to remind one that it was the room of an invalid except the silken covered bed upon which she reclined. Not another piece of furniture in the room betokened a sick chamber. Flowers bloomed everywhere, books and magazines littered the tables. A phonograph occupied a corner and Howard had provided all older operas that Annette loved. Three large French windows let in sun and air and gave the invalid a glimpse of lawn and trees as well.

It was typical of Annette that she took all this for granted. Prettily she thanked Howard for all the efforts he made for her comfort, but for the time he spent, the days when he scarcely left her side, she never thought of thanking him. His time belonged to her. Sick or well, she demanded it because he owed it to her.

Claire replied to Howard's urgent note of invitation immediately. She would come at the end of the week. She read between the lines. She knew Annette was in a critical condition, and she also imagined she read something of the latent regret of a disappointed man, a man who had made his choice and who would abide by it to the bitter end, but who had begun to realize what he had done to himself by that choice.

"Too bad he couldn't have had a wife and a profession both," she muttered. "I wish I could help him—but it is too late."

Annette welcomed her warmly when she arrived. Tears came to Claire's eyes when she saw the delicate invalid but she quickly brushed them aside and declared she was going to stay until Annette sent her home; that she loved that room, and that she probably would make her wild with her chatter.

"I have lots of gossip to tell you, Annette. All about the people you know. I never was much of a tale-bearer, but from now on that is part of my name. I must keep you posted."

For the first time in days Annette laughed and Howard, relieved, stole out and left them alone.

FASHIONS

This Japanese Crepe Frock is Bead-Trimmed

Beaded fabrics are not new, as fabrics go, but heretofore this method of decoration has usually been applied to silks and wools, whereas the coming warm weather season will find many cottons that are more or less elaborately ornamented with beaded motifs. The sketch illustrates a charming warm weather frock made of pale yellow Japanese crepe trimmed all over in somewhat of an open design in small black wooden beads. The ripple panel on either side of the skirt and also the neck and sleeves are piped in black, and the finished result is a most charming and dainty costume.

Of course the color scheme may be varied to suit the individual taste. Not only are cotton crepes beautifully trimmed, but the trimming is also applied, and very effectively, to such sheer materials as voile.

The frock sketched is a straight line, chemise sort of model to begin with, the ripple side panels giving it a trifling side flare, and the string belt of self fabric holds it in at the waist line. The dress is a slip-over, opening just a trifle at the back to make this possible.

In the lineup of cotton frocks recently seen was a very dainty figured voile so simple that it would be well within the scope of the average home dressmaker. The waist, a little more than normal in length, was finished at the bottom with rounded scallops, each piped in a color matching the figure in the fabric, and the straight skirt, also scalloped and piped at its edge, was gathered on the scalloped edge of the waist giving a sort of basque suggestion to the dress. The neck was round, similar to the one on the dress shown today, and the elbow length sleeves had the same finish applied to skirt and lower part of bodice. The dress buttoned in the back, with small buttons matching the trimming.

Tub frocks promise to be more than ordinarily popular this season.

Pass Up Wine Cases.

The statement came from the fe...eral district attorney when he had referred to the Judge Pearman case with the statement that "it is not the policy of this district to prosecute its wine cases, because there are more whiskey and bootlegging cases filed than we could ever dispose of in the federal courts."

"The state courts," he said, "are going to have to try more of these liquor cases than they have in the past. We are going to urge it—they must try more of the liquor cases if the people of this state ever hope to enforce the prohibition laws.

"The state courts of Dallas and Fort Worth have already begun to try more of them than they used to, and their act has relieved the federal court of the district to a great extent."

To Probe Judge's Case.

The district United States attorney said that the case of Judge Pearman would be presented to the federal grand jury for investigation, during the present term of federal court.

Judge Pearman was arrested some time ago by federal authorities while he was enroute between Montague and Bowie. It being alleged that he had a bottle of wine in his possession. Complaint was filed against him, but no warrant has ever been issued for him.

It is believed that no case will be found against him when the matter is brought before the grand jury.

SAYS MEN FAVOR TEAS

Mrs. Susie Wilkerson who "spilled the beans."

(By Central Press)

MEMPHIS, April 30.—Mrs. Susie Wilkerson has the male members of Chicago's millionaire colony, benedicts and bachelors alike, gasping for breath and wondering just what friend wife is going to say.

For Mrs. Wilkerson, in her divorce suit here, "told tales out of school," and now the pet amusements of a number of millionaires have been broadcasted to the world and their wives.

Now they're too busy thinking up alibis for friend wife to have time for any of the numerous dances, teas and other social functions with which they were wont to while away dull monotony ordinarily with wives not their own, according to Mrs. Wilkerson.

She testified that she attended dances with Ford Rudney Carter, former president of the Chicago chamber of commerce; Edward Martin, Jimmy Brooks, Fred Cooper, Earl Coleman and Jarrett Martindale. Some of the men are married, but Mrs. Wilkerson said she never met their wives at the dances.

She testified the "teas" featured things stronger than tea, a little Scotch or a little gin, but she denied that she ever touched it.

Mrs. Wilkerson said she visited Virginia Bell's famous "dobeing academy" in Chicago since closed by police, who charged that it was but a place where girls gathered to meet Chicago's "tired" but wealthy business men. She said she had been an "instructor" there, but denied she ever saw anything to substantiate police charges.

"To think that such a scrap of pale-leaf flesh and soft white flannel can be such a little despot," murmured the young mother, coming back to the table for the fourth time. She was still at the stage of dashing to the nursery at the least suspicion of sound from the little white bed where the new baby slept.

"He certainly holds this household in the hollow of his hand," said the young father, proudly. "But I wish he wouldn't wake at meal-time—always." And he ate cold pudding resignedly, after three rushes to the nursery between soup and dessert.

"Your mother says you always woke and cried at meal-time, dear," said the young mother, half reproachfully.

"I don't see why my son should follow such a bad example," began the young father, half rising at the sound of a squeak from the adjoining room.

King Baby Resigned Supreme.

And so it was at every meal during that first year.

Cold soup, cold puddings, half-eaten meals. Cooks who were constantly annoyed because meals were ruined while the fond parents waited on King Baby.

And King Baby himself, as he was graduated from bottles to spoons and cups, became a power unto his household. Meal-time was an abomination to the nursemaids, who came and went almost as promptly, because the baby was "spoiled."

The parents had contracted the habit of rushing away from the table at a cry from the baby, of bolting meals hurriedly, of catching trains with sandwich in their hands.

The baby bolted his food, cried for the things he wanted, churned in his glass of milk with his first, and scorned cereal without thick coatings of sugar. He developed likes and dislikes. He wouldn't eat at meal-time, and he wept for food at awkward hours of the day and night. He wanted to be amused at meal-time. Sometimes he had to be bribed in order to eat.

Then came a little brother.

"Start right with this one," pleaded the grandmother who had come to visit. "Don't spoil him. Train him to eat properly. It's a simple matter if you start early."

And the young parents decided.

A Healthier, Happier Baby.

The new baby was fed and left in peace. There were no rushes to the nursery at meal hours. Visitors were debarred at bottle time, instead of being urged to come in and "watch the little darling take his bottle." And the new baby was placid and happy, like a little animal. He ate, and slept, and smiled, and played with his feet and hands.

And meal-times in the household began to come back to normalcy.

When the second baby was graduated to a spoon and a plate he had learned to eat at proper intervals. To eat and drink what was placed before him. When chewing time arrived he was taught to chew his food thoroughly and encouraged to eat slowly. There were no more admiration parties in the nursery at meal-time.

He drank milk because it was set before him.

He ate bread without jam, or with jam, and had neither likes nor dislikes, because he had been trained to eat properly.

And he was a healthier, happier baby than the first.

A Wife or a Profession?

BY CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter LXIV.

Each morning as it dawned found a question upon Annette's lips:

"How much longer shall I have to lie here, Howard? When can I get up?" And each morning came the same reply:

"Soon, I hope, Annette. You are getting stronger every day now."

Then one morning, about a month after the accident as they were breakfasting—Howard had had a table fitted so he could take his meals with Annette when she was well enough—she said without preamble:

"Shall I ever walk again, Howard?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"Answer me, dear. I heard one of the maids say something. She was pitying me. You know how I hate to be pitied."

"Yes, dear," he answered her last remark.

"Tell me, Howard! Shall I always be a cripple? Always have to lie here." Slow tears fell unheeded down her cheeks, but she smiled at him, a sad little smile that hurt him more than sobs would have done.

"We don't think so, dear." He spoke as brightly as he could. "Dr. Campbell thinks you will be able to walk as soon as you are strong enough to undergo a certain very delicate operation."

"Did you know about that operation, the kind I will have to have?"

"Yes, I performed it on one of the boys in France."

"Then you know?"

"Yes; but you must get very strong first, dear, must eat and sleep and keep up your courage. That will help more than anything else. I knew of an old lady over sixty who broke her hip. People of that age scarcely ever live. When they do they are crippled for the remainder of their lives. But this old lady is over eighty now and has never had to use a cane, does not limp, and has been perfectly well since she recovered. The surgeon who attended her, the physician who cared for her, the nurses who waited upon her, all said it was because of her cheerfulness and her exact obedience to the regime laid down for her that she recovered."

"That's a nice story. I'm sure I should be able to do as well as a women of sixty. I'm not quite that yet."

"Of course you can, and will."

"Will you send for Claire? Tell her to come prepared to stay as long as she can endure a sick room."

"I'll write at once." Howard bent and kissed the pale face. She threw her arms about him and whispered: "You are the best husband a woman ever had."

Annette had spoken of enduring a sick room, yet the room she occupied was the brightest in the house. There was nothing to remind one that it was the room of an invalid, except the silken covered bed upon which she reclined. Not another piece of furniture in the room betokened a sick chamber. Flowers bloomed everywhere, books and magazines littered the tables. A phonograph occupied a corner and Howard had provided all older operas that Annette loved. Three large French windows let in sun and air and gave the invalid a glimpse of lawn and trees as well.

It was typical of Annette that she took all this for granted. Prettily she thanked Howard for all the efforts he made for her comfort, but for the time he spent, the days when he scarcely left her side, she never thought of thanking him. His time belonged to her. Sick or well, she demanded it because he owed it to her.

Claire replied to Howard's urgent note of invitation immediately. She would come at the end of the week. She read between the lines. She knew Annette was in a critical condition, and she also imagined she read something of the latent regret of a disappointed man, a man who had made his choice and who would abide by it to the bitter end, but who had begun to realise what he had done to himself by that choice.

"Too bad he couldn't have had a wife and a profession both," she muttered. "I wish I could help him—but it is too late."

Annette welcomed her warmly when she arrived. Tears came to Claire's eyes when she saw the delicate invalid but she quickly brushed them aside and declared she was going to stay until Annette sent her home; that she loved that room, and that she probably would make her wild with her chatter.

"I have lots of gossip to tell you, Annette. All about the people you know. I never was much of a tale-bearer, but from now on that is part of my name. I must keep you posted."

For the first time in days Annette laughed and Howard, relieved, stole out and left them alone.

FASHIONS

This Japanese Crepe Frock Is Bead-Trimmed

Beaded fabrics are not new, as fabrics go, but heretofore this method of decoration has usually been applied to silks and wools, whereas the coming warm weather season will find many cottons that are more or less elaborately ornamented with beaded motifs. The sketch illustrates a charming white waistless frock made of pale yellow Japanese crepe beautifully all over in a geometrical design in jet beads, black worsted beads. The ripple panel on either side of the skirt and also the neck and sleeves are piped in black, and the finished result is a most charming and dainty costume.

Of course the color scheme may be varied to suit the individual taste. Not only are cotton crepes to be procured, but the trimming is also applied, and very effectively, to such sheer materials as voile.

The frock sketched is a straight line, choose any sort of model to begin with, the ripple side panels giving it a trifling side flare, and the string belt of self fabric holds it in at the waist line. The dress is a slip-over, opening just a trifle at the back to make this possible.

In the lineup of cotton frocks recently seen was a very dainty figured voile so simple that it would be well within the scope of the average home dressmaker. The waist, a little more than normal in length, was finished at the bottom with rounded scallops, each piped in a color matching the figure in the fabric, and the straight skirt, also scalloped and piped at its edge, was gathered on the scalloped edge of the waist giving a sort of basque suggestion to the dress. The neck was round, similar to the one on the dress shown today, and the elbow length sleeves had the same finish applied to skirt and lower part of bodice. The dress buttoned in the back, with small buttons matching the trimming.

Tub frocks promise to be more than ordinarily popular this season.

WOODROW AND WARREN.

THERE is life in the old land yet. There is pep in the old man yet. And the old man in this instance is the grand old man of the world—Woodrow Wilson. This is his favorite limerick and he resurrected it when he received the National League of Women Voters. "For beauty I am no star. My face I don't mind it because I am behind it." Saltatorially speaking Warren G. Harding has put it all over Woodrow Wilson. The president has fifty pairs of trousers in his wardrobe. Democrats never were "no great shakes" when it came to styles in raiment. They belong to the hand-me-down suit party, with the exception of J. Ham Lewis and a few others ambitious to be Beau Brummels. Of course when the gaudy prince albert was in favor and slouch hats and long hair were emblems of statesmenship it may have been different.

WOMEN ON THE JOB.

MINIMUM wage and maximum forty-four hour week for women workers won the endorsement of the National League of Women's voters convention. Prohibition of night work for women is one of their demands. A proper standard of health and comfort is another demand. Representation on all federal and state agencies or commissions and appointment of women on all boards of education and health boards went over the top in a hurry. Woman hasn't been a voter very long but she has an eye on the main chance. This is a significant demand: Reclassification of federal civic service without discrimination on the ground of sex and the establishment of the federal employment service in the Department of Labor. Women wage earners are for a fifty-fifty program. They are going to give the professional politician something to think about in the future. They demand half the turkey and not all the feathers. More power to them and their program. Their labor is worthy of his hire regardless of sex and the loafer is worthy of quick dismissal regardless of sex.

A PUNK PICTURE.

WACO barred the Clara Hamon picture. When Jake was in the land of the living after he got the money he was never barred. Why, he became the confidential friend of a president of the United States. The Clara Hamon pictures should be barred because it is a punk picture. It isn't worth the price. Anyone who would sit through it would be too lazy or too tired and weary to get out of the house. There are women who swat gnats and then swallow camels. There are theirs and some of them censors who couldn't [illegible] meritorious picture from a Digger Indian dugout. Yes, life is a queer proposition after all.

A GAY OLD BOY.

CHAUNCEY M. Depew of New York has an international reputation. He is 88 and he says Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and his spirit pictures are very mis-leading. Among other things Chauncey Depew has been a bible scholar and he says there is nothing in the new or old Testaments to indicate that we may ever hope for a communication from the next world and on the otherhand there is nothing there to show that such things are impossible. Spoken like a true American politician. If its there it is there and if it isn't there it isn't there. This reminds the writer of a Texas candidate for congressional honors who declared in a recent speech for the right of labor to organize everywhere and for the open shop everywhere. In 1920 Chauncey Depew addressed a huge audience in the city of Chicago, in the auditorium where Warren G. Harding received his nomination. Now he says he expects to hold another Republican convention audience at 98 as he did in 1920. Speaking non-advisably this humorist and financier and veteran Republican leader must have stocked his cellars before the drought settled down upon the North American continent or that section of it over which Old Glory floats.

DR. CRANE'S EDITORIAL

THE BUDGET.

NOT only school children but the average citizen needs a good deal of primary and simple explanation of what is meant by the budget.

In a nutshell, the budget, when it refers to the nation, is a careful estimate of how much money the country needs to spend during the year.

Every private individual who has any business sense tries to find out what his income is going to be for the coming year and then aims to cut his coat according to his cloth.

Every corporation or business house does the same thing. It figures out its insurance, cost of general maintenance, depreciation, advertising, overhead expenses, and so forth.

Although this is nothing but plain common sense, it was only adopted recently by the United States government. Previous to that time Congress made appropriations by the pork barrel method. That is, each Congressman grabbed all he could for his own district, in order to please his constitutents and get elected again.

These appropriation bills were rushed through the last part of the session of Congress, and were the cause of much scandal as well as infinite waste.

Often at the end of the fiscal year it was found out that there were not enough funds to pay the bills, and Congress drifted into the habit of passing what were known as deficiency bills, or, in other words, voting money that yet remained to be collected. Any private firm that would have followed this method would have soon been in the bankruptcy courts.

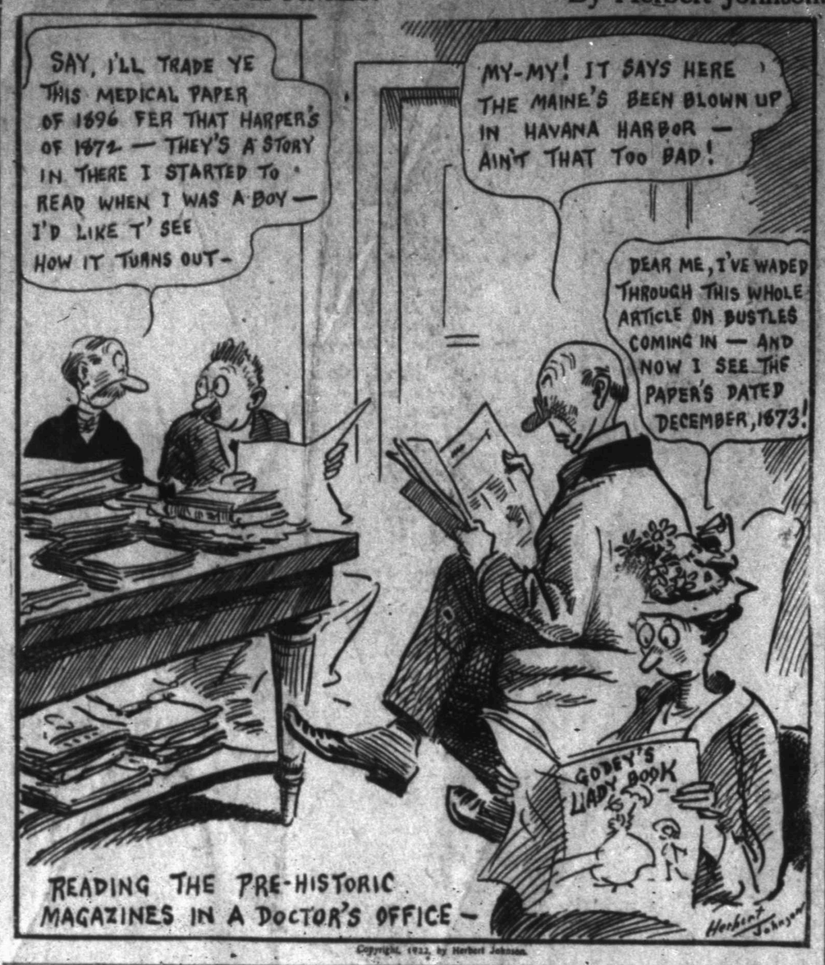

The bill for government expenses to which Washington affixed his signature in 1789 was but $639,000. The amount kept on growing however, until the sum appropriated by Congress during the year following the Armistice was $25,498,697,518. Thus in a century and a half the expenses of the government rose from about a half million to over twenty-five billions for a year.

It was for this reason that the president called in Mr. Dawes and an effort was made to put the expenditures of the country on a business footing.

Where does the government get its money? We usually say that the money comes from the taxpayers. It does so indirectly. The direct taxes that each citizen of the township and county pays, go merely to support his county and state, and none of it to the Federal government, except what is paid in the income tax.

The Federal government gets its money from internal revenues, such as taxes on tobacco and luxuries, from corporation, inheritance and income taxes, and from the sales of public lands, and so on. It gets a great deal of its income also from customs, which is a tax levied on goods imported from foreign countries into the United States. The idea of the tariff is not only to support the government, but to keep American manufacturers from disastrous competition with manufacturers abroad, who can make goods cheaper because of cheaper labor. It is the emphasis on this side of the question that makes some persons favor a high protective tariff. The higher the tariff, however, the more the price of all the commodities which the average citizen must buy, and this is the reason why the opposing party does not favor [illegible] protective tariff. This is the tariff [illegible]tion has always been an important [illegible]ical issue.

THE DAILY STORY

BLACK SATIN SHOES

When Helena Pratt went to visit her school friends, Gertrude Gardner, whom she hadn't seen in years, the first person she asked about was Vingie Potter.

"Oh, I never see Vingie any more," Gertrude answered, sadly. "She's out of my way entirely. Since her husband made all that money in steel the town has just carried him on its shoulders. He's the top of everything, and, of course, he has hauled Vingie along with him. They have a new house and car and a maid and a chauffeur, and she gets all her clothes in the city. I think she would be friendly if she ever had time, but she's into everything. I'm not. I haven't the head for anything more than tending my family. So we never meet."

"I want to see her," said Helena, stoutly. "I want a chance to talk to her. Why, I couldn't think of going away without seeing Vingie. I'll tell you, Gert. You invite her to supper the night you're going to have Annie Cook and the rest of our old crowd."

Gertrude gasped a little. "I don't believe she'd come," she answered.

"Ask her and see. I know she will. There must be some of the old Vingie left under all the gilt of affluence. I'd like a chance to find it."

"Well, if you'll take the responsibility," Gertrude gave in reluctantly. "I'll send her a note. But be prepared for a refusal. The invitation will probably conflict with an open meeting of the woman's club or something like that. As I told you, Vingie is in everything of that kind in the town."

"Risk it," urged Helena.

So Gertrude sent a note to Vingie, and Vingie straightway replied by accepting the invitation.

"There!" Helena cried. "What did I tell you, Gert?"

"All the same, you must be prepared for a great change in her," Gertrude said. "Do you know I think her rise in life has made her a little vain. It's not to be wondered at."

"She couldn't be good looking if she tried," asserted Helena. "Of course, clothes can do a lot for you, but they can't change the color of your eyes and the shape of your nose or mouth. I daresay, there'll be enough of the old Vingie left to be plainly recognizable."

Supper was to be at 6, and Tom Gardner, Gertrude's big, good-natured husband, had left the store early and taken the "kids" for a picnic supper, "to get them out of the way." It was very thoughtful in Tom, and what it meant to Gertrude, Helena could easily guess when she saw how flustered her hostess was by the prospect of Vingie La Rue's appearance.

"I'm almost sorry I had her ask Vingie," Helena said to herself. "She must have changed more than I can imagine. Well, at least, I'm not afraid of her, and I'll help Gert all I can."

Yet at the last moment, when she went upstairs to change her dress, she had a nervous feeling of apprehension. Years had passed since Vingie and Gertrude and Helena and the half-dozen others were coming that evening were young girls together with common interests and enjoyments. Life had scattered them and brought to them many unexpected things. They had all touched the borders of love, romance, sorrow and disillusion. They were all middle-aged women, and it was going to be a doubtful experience trying to get back on the old level.

Helena smoothed her fast graying hair, applied a bit of powder to her cheeks and put on the dress which made the rest of her simple wardrobe passable. It was a gray foulard with a little good lace at the neck. She wished her husband and "Junior" could see her. They both took such extravagant pride in "mother's looks."

The doorbell had rung for the first time and Helena hastened down to assist Gertrude. It was too late now, of course, but she did wish she could have got a moment to straighten Gert's skirt before every one saw it. However, when she saw what Anna Cook and [illegible] wearing [illegible] Gert

La Rue" Elsie Warren whispered to Helena. "And is she really coming?"

"She really is, for all I know," said Helena, smiling.

Yet moments passed and Vingie did not appear. The girls began to glance at each other. Helena bit her lip. Gertrude was evidently trembling for her supper. "It can't be possible that Vingie—" Helena was thinking when the doorbell rang.

It was Vingie. Gertrude's welcome was almost hysterical. She had Vingie in among them. For a moment Helena's heart sank. It came to her that it was going to be very hard indeed to find the old Vingie under the carefully applied surface of Mrs. Henderson LaRue. Then she rallied to the occasion.

Vingie looked old in spite of her careful grooming. Her hair was almost white and her manner bore the necessary dignity to accompany it. She was most beautifully dressed from top to toe—black satin throughout. Even her shoes were black satin. The richness of her attire made the other women sink into mere background.

Before Vingie had been in the room two minutes Helena decided that there was something wrong with her. She was either very ill or very unhappy. She seemed to be suffering in some way, but with determination to conceal her feelings. When she rose to go to the dining room Helena was sure that she gave a little gasp as of pain or extreme fatigue.

Gertrude was a good cook, but Vingie scarcely touched her supper. She tried fitfully to talk, but her abstraction became more noticeable each moment. By the time shortcake appeared. Helena felt from the paleness of Vingie's lips she had reached the point where she could endure no longer. She leaned close to her and whispered: "Vingie, for heaven's sake, what's the matter? You look ready to faint."

As she spoke, she was amazed to see relief come into the woman's face. Instantly she replied, so all the table could hear: "I am Helena. As I was hurrying to get here I turned my ankle. I didn't know whether I could walk the rest of the way or not, but I was so anxious to come that I persisted. But it pains me horribly. If I could just slip off these high-heeled tight shoes——"

A half dozen exclamations of commiseration arose. But Helena dipped away to her room and came back with a pair of ample red felt Romeos, shaped to her own generous feet. Kneeling, she removed Vingie's black satin shoes and substituted the Romeos.

"Helena, you're a dear! That's just the kind of thing you used to do, I remember. And my feet feel so comfortable already. Now I think I can enjoy this delicious shortcake."

All the rest of the evening—and it continued until a late hour—Vingie sat with the old red felt slippers, several sizes too large for her, peeping out from under her lustrous skirt. But the sight of them seemed to make her more approachable. The others ceased to be shy before her and they all entered into a jolly good time together.

As for Helena, she smiled to herself. The old Vingie was not so hard to find after all. "Though I doubt if I should feel that way now if it hadn't been for those old red felts of mine," she told Gertrude afterward. "They seemed to bring her down to where we could understand her and she us. And even though she wears those black satin shoes at the party she's making for us all next Thursday evening I shall not fear her. For I've got quite another picture of her, and it's the picture of the real Vingie."

THE ONCE OVER

Is the corset going?

* * *

Is this to be a figureless year?

* * *

Will it soon be good form to be in bad form?

* * *

Are shapeless weeks in the offing?

* * *

These are serious questions. Serious questions are always popping up to complicate conditions in America. No sooner do we apparently solve all the major problems having to do with business and the home, and appear to be headed straight for peace, prosperity and normalcy, than up bobs some new serious question.

* * *

Now it's the corset. The old-fashioned rubber band garter is beginning to come back, according to the stylists. Everywhere the tendency among the fair sex seems to be to throw away something and put on something less.

* * *

Just what a garter has to do with a corset is a matter for no mere man to fathom, but 'tis reliably reported that general adoption of the old-fashioned "wrist" garter means the discarding of the corset. All of which is taken as meaning a great menace to two great American industries—the corset and bedroom furniture trades.

* * *

If the American woman stops wearing corsets the corset shops will, obviously, have to suspend business and of course, there will be no further use for bedroom chairs, since there will be no corsets to throw over the back of 'em.

* * *

The corset manufacturers are visibly alarmed. There are between 40,000,000 and 45,000,000 women in the United States. Over 66 per cent of them are "consistent corset wearers," according to a prominent corset magnate. The other 34 per cent are accounted for as follows:

* * *

Twenty per cent live in places like Canarise, Oil City, Wappinger Falls, and Dodge City. (They don't get out much, either).

Ten per cent think their husbands are blind.

Two per cent work in Al Woods shows or dress as if they ought to.

The other two have figures no corset can aid.

* * *

A "consistent corset wearer" is a woman who wears corsets because she has contracted the habit and who has passed the point where she can wear 'em or leave 'em alone.

* * *

Over 30,000,000 women in this country wear corsets every day. These are plain figures—or would be if they went around without corsets.

* * *

Now every woman has at least two pairs of corsets. That makes 60,000,000 corsets in this country. And, as Ignatius Innbadd would say, "that's a lot of corsets."

* * *

If all these corsets could be placed end to end they would—well, frankly, they would look like the very devil.

* * *

That isn't the way to place corsets. Nor would they show that way to the best effect. And after you placed them that way, think of the job lacing them! 'Sridiculous!

* * *

Thirty-five per cent of the corset wearers are stouts, near-stouts, or stylish stouts, according to estimates. The corset makers feel that this quota will never forsake them. Stout woman's place, they know, is in the corset.

* * *

All things considered, the corset makers incline to be optimistic. The garter craze, they hold, is a mere fad and will pass out after the husbands have gazed at their wives a few times and remarked, 'Whatzamattah, Ella? You're all out of alignment."

* * *

A rubber band garter may hold up a stocking, but it takes a corset to hold up a form.

* * *

The president of one of the five largest corset companies in the country announced the other day that exhaustive tests had been made with stenographers which proved that a girl in a well designed well fitted corset was in infinitely better shape at the end of a day than an ungirdled sister. "Better shape" is good.

FOLKS BACK HOME

THE GIRL ACROSS THE STREET

The butcher boy has opinions. Doubtless they are coined of his own mental processes, but to a man up a tree their form appears to be influenced by knowledge of the fact that the girl across the street has promise of a dowry consisting in thirty-seven acres of land two miles from town and a sum of money variously estimated at one, three and five thousand dollars.

He called upon the girl last night, and there being neither choir practice nor prayer meeting, she brought him over to "set a spell" with us.

The boy talked down as from a great height, and, while devouring cake and washing it down with lemonade, held forth concerning the majesty of man and the duty of wives.

"The man oughta be the boss," he declared solemnly. "If I was to marry a woman, the next mornin' I'd say to her: 'Now there's the pants, whichever of us is a-goin' to wear 'em had better put 'em on now.' That's what I'd say. It's a woman's place to keep house while the man makes a livin'. And if she's got anything—money, or things like that—she ought to turn it over to him, so's he can use it. I wouldn't marry no woman that wouldn't trust me with what she had."

To be the boss! How many men so highly resolve! How few have any authority to at all save that enjoyed at office or shop, far from the gentle tyranny of tears and of feelings that remain unhurt only when unopposed.

UNCLE GUS

"I been a-settin' here thinkin'," said Uncle Gus, as he refilled his blackened corn-cob pipe, "a-thinkin' about a feller's influence. My preacher says when sinners talk about hypocrites bein' in the church, it's just the devil givin' 'em a excuse fo' livin' on in the' wickedness, but I do' know. Young fellers is hard to fool. They respect a man what's so'enough good, but they mortally despise a man if he makes a big show o' bein' pious an' ain't. They ain't eager to jine up with a organization that asks 'em to be good while it's borin' folks that's meanin' a snake in the grass, an' I don't know as I blame 'em. Boys is purty good judges o' character. An' sometimes it seems to me the church ain't a-goin' to win the respect o' boys like it ought to until it gits enough o' the grace o' God to kick out them what is disgracin' pure religion an' stand in' in the boys' way."

ROOSTERS

The rooster's ability to crow is a gift of Nature; justification of the crow that is in him depends wholly upon his own endeavors.

The rooster may be trained by man to become a warrior, and will then fight for his master without other provocation than the sight of an adversary.

In his natural state, however, he fights only when a stranger is seeking spoil of those perquisites that are his by right of discovery and occupation, or when a neighbor passes the boundary line that divides their bailiwicks. He will then leap to the attack and battle fiercely while he has strength to stand.

If he is beaten, he must thereafter snatch his living in fear and trembling and live always in dread of sudden attack. If the battle turns against him and he retires bleeding and spent, and yet has grace to stand at a distance and muster a defiant crow, one knows that he loves liberty still and will fight again as he has again.

There is no more encouraging sight in Nature than that of a rooster, sadly buffeted in the wars, wiping the blood from his eyes and preening his unsteady legs to declare himself unwhipped and undismayed.

This spirit it is that builds republics, and, when republics have learned the art of tyranny, risks life and fortune to establish again the ancient ways of liberty.

LOVE

A certain man who possessed great riches and an only son reached the end of his days and lay on his couch to die. The years had brought him wisdom, and he said to himself: "I shall leave the whole of my fortune to charity, and thus enable my son to develop self reliance and strength of character—for it is [illegible]ssed of the qualities essential to success, he has no need of my fortune whereas if he is born to failure, no fortunes as great as mine could not lift him from above the level of mediocrity. Moreover, I have seen many young men promise made fools by a fortune too easily acquired; but never have I seen a fool transformed into a man of sense by means of a legacy.

I am persuaded that to give a son properties he has not earned is by so much to rob him of manhood, and I have learned by observation that those who get something for nothing value it little and squander it quickly. One who must sweat for his bread grows to keep pace with his growing fortune, develops the ability to hold what he has gained, and is seldom made ridiculous by his vanity. Only the second generation is afflicted with swell-head by reason of the family's financial rating. Only adversity can build character."

Then the old man made his will and left all that he had to his son; for love gives the thing desired and takes no heed of logic, and by its petting dooms to insignificance those who might grow greater in aversity.

"I've noticed that the three things most interestin' to a man are himself, a dollar, and a widow."

BRUCE'S TALK

By ADDINGTON BRICE

Women addicted to the use of cosmetics as a means of improving their personal appearance may well take warning from a strange and sad story recently narrated in the American Journal of the Medical Sciences by two Minneapolis physicians, Drs. Moses and Barron and Harold C. Habein.

The story begins with the arrival at Minnesota University hospital of a girl sixteen years old, who was brought to the hospital in a stuporous, semi-conscious condition. From her father it was learned that she had for some months been complaining of recurrent attacks of pain in the legs and feet, that she suffered at times from colicky cramps, and at times was greatly nauseated.

Finally, shortly before being taken to the hospital, she became increasingly incapable of physical or mental exertion. All of which suggested to the hospital physician a systemic poisoning of some sort. The various tests they promptly made left no doubt that it was a case of lead poisoning.

But it was now too late to help the unfortunate girl. In a few days she was dead. And then, to their surprise, the physicians learned that within little more than a year three other members of her family—her mother, an aunt, and a younger sister—had unaccountably failed in health and died. Only the father and a brother remained, and they had been quite free from illness.

Why had they escaped when all the females of the family had been stricken? Pressing for an answer to this question, Drs. Barron and Habein learned that, about two years previously, the aunt had introduced into the household a cosmetic used for the purpose of whitening the skin. It was procurable as a powder to be mixed with water and rubbed in.

"A quantity of this powder," they report, "was turned over to us for examination. The heaviness of the powder impressed us at once. We examined it chemically and found it to be pure lead carbonate.

"On inquiry we not only found that it was commonly sold by all drug stores, including the very best recognized ones, but that it was freely admitted by the druggists to be lead carbonate, ground into an impalable powder and dispensed as the trade for cosmetic purposes."

In view of this fatal family poisoning and of other cases of poisoning known to have been caused by lead-containing cosmetics, it is the belief of Drs. Barron and Habein that much puzzling illness among women of a more or less serious sort, may be similarly caused.

They mention particularly rheumatic pains, constipation, abdominal pains, nausea, nervousness, and insomnia as symptoms that may be produced by lead poisoning. They speak also of loss of hair being sometimes due to the prolonged use of a lead-containing face powder, rouge, or hair preservative. Until such a ban is imposed, I would myself suggest that women who feel that they cannot get along without cosmetics of some sort, at least refuse to purchase any not guaranteed by the druggist to be free from lead.

Jewel Smugglers Escape Eye of Many Inspectors

KOVNO, Lithuania, April 30.—A solid gold kettle, hanging from a stick over the shoulder of a ragged refugee who recently passed into Lithuania, has caused several customs inspectors to receive sharp reprimands from their superiors in Moscow. The kettle was dented and covered with tin and its owner was seemingly so impoverished that the inspectors allowed it to cross the border without bewtowing more than a casual glance upon it.

Many clever schemes to smuggle valuables from Russia are revealed after their authors find themselves safe in Kovno. One traveler succeeded in passing the inspectors with diamonds and other precious stones valued at thousands of dollars concealed in sandwiches.

When he reached here he threw the dried bread and meat which had screened his jewels to some hogs. A few hours later he discovered that one of his most valuable stones was missing. Ten hogs were killed before the diamond was recovered.

Giants Grab Game After Six Spudder Slabsters Slip

KITCHENS HAS BIG DAY AT PLATE

Galloway's Homer In Thirteenth Too Much

Special to The Record News.

DALLAS, Texas, April 30.—As in Postum, "There's a reason," always, and if any one desires to know why Jim Galloway is called "Bad News" we point them to his activities of yesterday. His single in the ninth enabled Dallas to tie the score, and but for his terrific wallop over the left field fence in the thirteenth, after two Giants had been easy outs, the game would have probably lasted until Old Sol stopped it by going to bed. However, Jim by no means had the limelight all to himself.

Kitchens Busts 'Em.

"Poor Old Broken Down Pop" Kitchens pulled a few stunts, that the knockers have said were absolutely beyond his ability. In his first four trips to the plate he slashed a double, single, four bagger and drew a walk, all of them, excepting the single figuring prominently in the Spudder's tallies.

Jake Miller's lone single was nothing to brag about but his great throw to the plate in the ninth, cutting off Segrist with what would have been the winning run, prevented Dallas from ending the pastime in that canto.

After four Spudder hurlers and one Dallas slabster had been hit with everything except the piano, Steve Mokan and Carl Hill, both going in as relief men, put on a great pitchers battle from that time until the aforesaid Galloway so abruptly wrote the final chapter of the affray in the unlucky stanza.

O'Brien walked to start the game but was out at the plate a moment later trying to score on Homer Summa's two-ply swat to right. McDonald popped to second and Beck flied to center. Dallas went out in this inning.

Spuds Score First.

The Spudders started the fireworks in the second round. Miller was an easy out Stow to Galloway. Adams singled to right, stole second as White whiffed, and scored when Kitch let go his first wallop of the day, a double to the left field fence. "Old Folks" romped home a second later when Spencer dropped Abe Bowman's fly to left, the latter going to third when Spec made his second error on one batted ball by throwing wild to second. O'Brien again got a free ticket to the initial bag when Seely plunked him in the ribs. He and Abe then successfully executed a double steal, the former scoring. Summa fanned. Dallas got one back in their half, Donohue starting it with an infield hit, and scoring on Segrist double to the middle garden.

Tex McDonald, first up in the third, drove one at Falk that the latter could not handle and it went for an infield blow. After Beck popped to short, Miller forced "Thirty-Thirty" at second, Jake continuing to second when Falk threw wild attempting to complete a double play, and registered at the plate on Shorty Adam's single. The best Galloway's men could do in this inning was an infield by Spencer tap that went for naught.

The Salmites went out in order in the fourth, but Dallas gathered two markers. Matt Donohue parkered the first pitched ball for a circuit clout, a walk to Segrist, an infield out and Wheat's single account for the other tally. Wichita Falls again went out one-two-three in the fifth, and Dallas picked up right where she had left off in the previous inning. Spencer walked, went to second on another of those pesky infield hits by Allen. Galloway advance both runner with a neat sacrifice. Abe, in his eagerness to walk Donahue, threw the fourth ball clear out of Kitch's reach and Spencer counted as Matt walked to first. Knadler relieved Bowman at this juncture. Segrist, the first man to face "Barneo," laid down a bunt that scored Allen as he was being thrown out at first, but Donohue was nipped trying to make third, Beck to McDonald.

Kitchens Hits Homer

Kitchens tied the count in the first half of the sixth with a terrific home run over the left field wall, no one being on the bags, but Dallas again went into the lead in their half on a double by Falk and a single by Wheat, went further to the fore in the seventh, after the Spudders had been easy pickins'.

A walk, single, an error by White and a double steal, on which Kitchens threw wild to third, netted the Giants two markers in this inning.

Spudders Big Round

The Wichitians put on a great rally in the eighth, and when the smoke cleared away, they were leading by one run. Adams singled to right after Miller had skied to center. White, Kitchens and Bischoff, who batted for Knadler, all went to first by waiting for four wide ones to pass them, forcing Adams across with the first run, as well as writing "Finis" for Seely. Carl Hill took up mound duty for Dallas at this point. Tanner hit for O'Brien. Tanner hit to short, and when Falk dropped Stow's throw all hands were safe and White scored. Summa pasted a single to right that chased Kitch's and Bischoff across the rubber and sent Tanner to third. Summa then stole second, but he and Buddy were left stranded as McDonald popped to Galloway for the third out. Dallas tied the count in their half of the inning, and would have won but for Miller's great peg. Clancy strated to twirl for the visitors at the opening of this inning, but was yanked in favor of Ruth, after Galloway's single. Donahue's sacrifice and a walk to Segrist had put the Giants in a good position to score. Ruth lasted only long enough to wild-pitch Galloway to third and Segrist to second and walk Falk. Steve Mokan relieving him. Stow first man to face Steve, singled to right, scoring Galloway. Jake Miller's aforemention heave cutting Segrist off at the plate.

From the beginning of the tenth to the end of the game men on bases were mighty scarce, only an occasional single coming on each side until "Bad News" jumped on one of Mokan's fast one's and gave it a ride.

THE CHALLENGER. —By Ripley.

By ROBERT L. RIPLEY.

Harry Greb, the human windmill, is a remarkable ring man. He is after three world championships and is a leading contender for each of them.

Greb is most likely Dempsey's next opponent. There is a strong rumor that the match is already made and that the men will meet for the world's championship this summer in a six-round bout in Philadelphia.

Greb is also practically matched to meet Gene Tunney, the light heavyweight champion, in Madison Square Garden next month.

And, like many others, Greb hopes to get Johnny Wilson, the middleweight champion, in a ring some time. Greb will agree to make 158 pounds for the middleweight chanpion.

Speaking of veteran coaches and such. Consider Walter Christie. He is now busy in his twenty-first year as coach of the University of California track team. Quite a span of years to devote to one sport at one college.

LEX SOREY IS LOANED TO GASSERS

By "Spike" Cooper

In a telegram last night from Manager Walter Salm, he announced that due to the crippled condition of the Shreveport club, he had loaned Lex Sorey to Manager Smith for a few days. Just what transaction took place in the deal was not mentioned, but from the tenure of the message it seems that Sorey remains the property of the Spudders, but at present to be carried on the Shreveport roll.

The Gassers were badly crippled in the opening game of the season when Ewoldt, the flashing third sacker was forced out with a broken foot. Since that time, Smith has secured two infielders, O'Shaughnessy and Kane, both of which joined the club during the recent series here. Neither seems to have filled the gap in the Shreveport inner defense, and Sorey will probably be used there, or filled in at second, sending Hollahan to the hot corner.

During the pre-season games, and in the first few games of the season here, Sorey demonstrated his fielding ability, but seemed a little weak at the plate. He is an excellent sacrifice hitter, and may fit into that position on the Gasser team.

In the game yesterday, the above arrangement was used in the line-up that way. Ezzell, formerly with San Antonio played third and Hollahan was sent to center field, Sorey going to right in place of Jackson who was injured when he crashed into the fence during the Wichita series here.

Robertson Hurls No Run; No - Hit Game

TIGERS FAIL TO REACH FIRST BASE

Only Six Balls Are Driven Out of Infield

By Associated Press.

DETROIT, April 30.—Charley Robertson, Chicago American league pitcher, entered baseball's hall of fame today by pitching a no-hit, no-run game against Detroit, the White Sox winning two to nothing. Not a Tiger reached first base.

In keeping the Tigers from first base throughout the nine innings, Robertson, obtained by the White Sox from Minneapolis, paralled the feat of Addie Joss, hurling against Ed Walsh of Chicago, October 2, 1908 and "Cy" Young for Boston against Philadelphia, May 5, 1904.

Robertson was given faultless support, particularly by McClellan and Collins, whose snappy fielding retired six Tigers at first. Collins also retired four on flies. Only six balls were driven far into the outfield and these were gathered in by Hoop and Mostil with little difficulty. Robertson fanned six Detroiters as part of his contribution to a perfect day's work.

Manager Cobb called in two pinch hitters in the ninth in an effort to stop Robertson, but they went down as their team mates did before them.

Aside from the second inning, in which the visitors scored their two runs, Pillette, also showed splendid control.

Robertson is a former member of the Sherman team, when that club was a member of the Western association. The White Sox obtained him from that club, and for the past two years he has been with Minneapolis in the American association. Last year at the close of the season he was recalled, and his performance of yesterday will go a long way toward establishing him as a member of the disrupted staff, due to the failure to come through by Bickie Kerr.

Most housewives will envy the big league managers. The pilots are already part way through their canning season. And the ladies will tell you it's always quite a job.

NEW YANK

"Whitey" Witt, obtained from the Philadelphia Athletics, with which team he hit over .300 for the past two seasons, makes a strong factor in the New York Yankee team this year.

SCHOOL LEAGUE TURNS INTO RACE

13 Teams Remain Undefeated in Districts

By ROY B. HENDERSON.

AUSTIN, April 30.—Some important and interesting developments have occurred the past week in the University of Texas Interscholastic league high school baseball race, although some of the leaders are losing time in arranging games which would narrow the race down to fewer teams. Austin invaded southwest Texas, losing to Houston Central and winning from Galveston. This trip dropped Austin to a percentage of .833, but with two games arranged with Houston at an early date to be played in Austin, the capital city lads will have a chance to recoup.

Agua Dulce, the Ltile school in South Texas, continues its march on the larger schools, Sinton having felt the strength of the Dulce boys since the last report. Crowell won from Chillicothe which counted as a double win because of the previous tie game.

The bureau is unable to publish batting averages this week due to the State meet rush. Only schools having a percentage of .500 or more are mentioned in the standing of teams. Some teams have been dropped because late reports have not been made.

Standing of exams having .500 per cent or more:

1.000 per cent—Agua Dulce, Clyde, Claude, Fort Worth Central High, Houston Central, Mission, Milford, McKinney, Paris, Stephenville, Temple, Vernon.

.867 per cent—Amarillo.

.833 per cent—Austin, Bonham.

.800 per cent—Bartlett.

.750 per cent—Fort Worth North Side, Cleburne.

.500 per cent—Crowell, Gatesville, San Benito.

WRESTLERS TO GET LETTERS AT TEXAS

Austin, Texas, April 30.—Wrestlers at the University of Texas will be awarded T's by the Athletic council which will meet for this purpose within the next week or so. Under the present rules of the council four men are eligible for letters, which carry with them membership in the T association. These men are: G. A. Basse, Fredericksburg, 145 pound class; D. D. Shropshire of Plainview, 158 pound class; Leon Gorman, Winnsboro, 175 pound class and Walter Craddock, Austin, heavyweight.

Four men on the Varsity squad this year have letters for wrestling for last year. Basse has won a letter every year in wrestling; while the Scurlock brothers of Cleburne, Franklin J. and Nelson, and Albert Nash, Cleburne won letters last year.

ELECTRA VETS PUT ON FAST BOUTS

Jackson Meets Webb In 10-Round Scrap

ELECTRA, Texas, April 30.—The American Legion is planning for their first boxing bout which will be held at the Grand theater, Monday night. The primary card is a fast ten round bout between Russle Jackson and Daubert Webb, two of the fastest lightweights in this section of the country, Russle Jackson claims the junior lightweight championship of the southwest, while Daubert Webb hails from the Pacific coast and has a good record behind him.

An interesting semi-windup will be between Tommy Courtney, well known in Electra and Wichita Falls as a baseball player, and Sailor Williams. All who have ever seen Tommy don the mitts know that he is a fast scrapper and has had much experience in the mitt game. Williams claims the lightweight championship of the Atlantic and Pacific fleets.

Several good preliminaries, including a wrestling match have been arranged and a battle royal will be an added feature. Seats are on sale at all local drug stores and the advance sales indicates that much interest is being shown in the revival of boxing in this city.

BOK BUYS FLORIDA'S ROOF FOR WARBLERS

LAKE WALES, Fla., April 30.—Fourteen acres of land at the peak of the hill near here known as Iron Mountain, the highest point in Florida has been purchased by Edward W. Bok, of Philadelphia, for many years editor of the Ladies Home Journal, with the intention of establishing on the site a park and bird sanctuary. Mr. Bok, it is said, has told friends he expects to give W. H. Olmstead, well known landscape architect, now in Europe, carte blanche in laying out and beautifying the property.

Iron Mountain, included in the Mountain Lakes corporation, is 324.9 feet high and, according to the United States Geological Survey, is the highest point yet measured in Florida. It also is said to be the highest land within sixty miles of the Atlantic ocean or Gulf of Mexico between Orange Mountain, N. J., and the Rio Grande river.

WOLVERINE NET SCHEDULE IS OUT

Eight Meets With Conference Teams

ANN ARBOR, Mich., April 30.—University of Michigan's tennis team will go into action this year.

The Michigan schedule this season is the most pretentious in the history of the sport at the University, due to increasing interest in this activity.

Virtually every Western Conference team will be met by the Wolverines this year. The team is being built around two former "M" men, Captain Charles Merkel and Manager George Reindel, Jr.

Walter Webrook, former star, but who is ineligible this season because of the three-year rule, is coach of the squad, which numbers 300 men. Among the more promising candidates are Fritz Worcester and Julian Zemon.

Michigan's conference schedule follows:

May 5—Illinois at Ann Arbor.
May 11—Ohio State at Ann Arbor.
May 22—Northwestern at Ann Arbor.
May 25, 26 and 27—Conference singles and doubles championship at Chicago.
May 29—Minnesota at Minneapolis.
May 30—Wisconsin at Madison.
June 3—Chicago at Chicago.
June 1, 2 and 3—Second annual interscholastic tennis tournament, singles and doubles at Ann Arbor.

The Wolverines also will play the University of South California University of Oklahoma, University of Pittsburgh, Carnegie Tech, University of Pennsylvania, Lehigh and Cornell.

ENGLAND MAY HAVE CHURCH OR FINE LAW

LONDON, April 30.—The alternative of going to church on Sunday or paying a fine is suggested by the Rev. Robert Forman Horton, one of England's most noted Non-conformist ministers, as a means of raising sufficient revenue "to run the country without plunging it into bankruptcy." Such legislation, he declares, would net 80,000,000 pounds a year.

Dr. Horton's suggestion is said to be based on a law passed in the reign of Edward VI, when anyone absenting himself from church "without lawful or reasonable excuse" was fined one shilling. This law was repealed, but re-enacted and rigidly enforced in subsequent reigns.

"The 50 or more churches in the square mile around the Bank of England contained full congregations in those days, but few persons enter them on weekdays now except American tourists, and the Sunday congregations, Dr. Horton declares, "do not exceed a baker's dozen."

SEYMOUR PARK WILL BE USED

Travelers to Be Given Service

Special to the Record News.

SEYMOUR, Texas, April 30.—Through the efforts of the chamber of commerce, immediate improvements at the Tourist's Park will be made by the city council at this place.

Seymour has a municipally owned city park embracing 40 acres, and about six acres have been set aside as a tourist's park. Water, lights and wood were provided for last year and this year furnaces and huts are to be added to the conveniences of the ground. There is an abundance of shade in the grounds and the site is within three blocks of the business district.

Last year it was made use of so generally that with the marking and advertising being done by the F. F. F. Highway association, which passes through Seymour and the tourists who will be attracted by the Big Wichita Irrigation project, it is thought that Seymour will have an exceptionally large amount of tourists this year.

STAMFORD GETS '22 CONFERENCE

Some Objection to Choice

The Older Boys' Conference, after three days of instructive entertainments and meetings, drew to a close yesterday afternoon, after a full day of devotional services. The meeting was carried on in the most orderly manner and the officials all declared that this conference was as well conducted as any that they had ever attended, and that they will remember always the hospitality showed them by the citizens of Wichita Falls.

The delegates all assembled in the Empress theater at 9 a. m., and had a Sunday school among themselves, with Wayne Holmes of Wichita Falls Christian church being the teacher-in-chief. L. A. Coulter, state secretary of the Y. M. C. A. delivered an address on the subject of "The Fundamental Basis For Service," which had some very vital points that all the youths should remember, and doubtless will. The boys went in bodies to their various churches. The Methodist, Christian and Baptist churches had the largest numbers present.

Dinner was served at the Y. W. C. A. cafeteria to a large majority of the boys, and the program drew to a close with the report of the committee and adoption of the platform that the boys are pledged to follow. Mr. Demand made the last stirring address to the delegation on an appreciated topics: "A Living Sacrifice," and all voices joined in heartily in a farewell song "Blest be the tie that binds."

Stamford was voted as the tentative meeting place for the conference for the next year, but there was some objection on the part of some of the representatives, as Stamford is inaccessible to many of the towns of the Northwest Texas, handily and possibly another place will have to be decided later on by the state committee.

Electra Adds More Production

Special to The Record News.

ELECTRA, Texas, April 30.—Review of the drilling operations in the Electra field for the month of March as compiled by the Oil & Gas Journal shows that out of 26 wells completed in the Electra district that only one of them was a failure. Out of the 25 producers, a total new production of 950 barrels was added which shows an average of around 35 barrels per well. Most of these wells were finished in the shallower sands and the largest producer of the month was accredited with 150 barrels, while the smallest producer was good for 10 barrels daily.

It is such records as this and the unusual life of the production in the field that is attracting capital from all over the United States into this field. In the past, many of the operators have been lured from this district to others where the initial production is greater and where the life is less. For promotion propositions and stock selling schemes, the big producers are the best appeal to "potential" suckers, but a field that lasts a life time, where drilling is cheap and where the chances of failure are less appeal to the investor or capitalist who is looking for a business-like investment in oil. The Electra field is not known so extensively as others because the promoters and ballyho artists have not flared the name of the fair field across the tops of two page advertisements connecting it with vast wealth that accumulates overnight.

PUBLIC DROPS OLD HABIT OF BUYING THROUGH EYEFUL

"Buying with the eye, or, to put it another way, buying an eyeful, is a practice which the American automobile buying public is rapidly discarding," says C. J. Wneider, local Franklin dealer.

"The bulk and size of car, its impressive lines, its tremendous horse power rating, are no longer considered correct education of the real worth of an automobile from the standpoint of transportation.

"The wonderful increase in the good roads mileage of this country, and the establishment of national highways with numerous tourists' camps, have made long distance travel an every day matter. The average yearly mileage is mounting rapidly and instead of 5,000 miles a year, 10,000 miles more nearly approximates the distance the average owner drives today.

"When one is going to buy a car for this kind of use, what possible criterion of a car's capabilities can be gained from a pleasant spin around town or a few miles into the country over a well kept state road? Why should not the prospective buyer be given a demonstration of sufficient distance and over a sufficient variety of roads to give him a clear indication of what the real capabilities of the car he is about to purchase will be."

Denver Road Holds Up Paving Project

Special to the Record News.

VERNON, Texas, April 30.—Progress on the undertaking to pave the Colorado-to-Gulf Highway in Wilbarger county is finding an immediate delay occasioned by the Denver railroad in holding up permission to tunnel its tracks at Odiaunion.

D. R. Henry of Fort Worth, senior highway engineer in the Federal Bureau of Public Roads, and Messrs. Vincent and Hemming, highway engineers of Fort Worth, were in Vernon this week for the purpose of making an inspection of the road to be paved. Tunneling the Denver tracks offers the chief obstacle at this time in furthering the undertaking.

LEGION FACING LOSS ON MEET

Crowd Goes Out But Flyers Are Idle

Jupiter Pluvius, at the eleventh hour, prevented the establishing of future world's records, when a slow rain, falling Sunday around the noon hour and during the time that the second day of the American Legion aviation meet was scheduled to begin, broke up the performance, and sent many of the flyers sailing homeward.

With the second day of the meet called off, legionnaires who had been in charge of the event, announced Sunday evening that the Pat Carrigan post had encounted a loss of $1,000 on the entire performance.

The flyers who thrilled the mammoth audience Saturday practically all journeyed to Call Field Sunday afternoon in time to start the contests at 1 o'clock despite the falling rain, and were all on the grounds when the officials in charge decided that the weather was of such a nature that the meet could not be held.

Many enthusiasts also braved the weather and traveled to Call Field only to return dissatisfied because the flyers didn't fly.

University Buys German Chemicals

AUSTIN, Texas, April 30.—Chemicals for use in the laboratories of the University of Texas are obtained from Europe because of the great difference in price and the inability to obtain many chemicals in this country, it has just been learned at the University.

On March 8 an order amounting to 316,340 marks was placed with the firm of Bender and Hobein of Munich, Germany, for materials which cannot be obtained in this country.

J. H. White, merchants' night watchman, who is now a joint employe of the city and county, and who received notice that the city desired to discontinue his services through Chief of Police McCormick, will remain in the employ of the merchants exclusively, if he is granted a policeman's commission by the city, he said Monday.

He said that he would make his arrangement if it were satisfactory to the police chief and police commissioner, and said that he believed it would be.

BALLOT IS KAY'S TEXT

Vision of Isaiah Has Parallel

Judge John C. Kay addressed a large audience at the Olympic theater Sunday morning on the right exercise of the ballot in Texas. Basing his remarks upon a scriptural illustration, to which he drew a parallel case of the present day, he spoke at length.

This old prophet Isiah, for the first time in his life, had a change of administration in the kingship of his country. We have that every two years or four years. It became a milestone to him and a very important milestone. The most profound impression he ever had in his life were borne into his memory and on his lips as the king died.

The change of administration does not affect us that way. On the 4th of July or some other occasion you hear orators get up and call us a free people. We like that word. Free doesn't mean what you think it does anyhow.

Now when are you free if you are living in a free country? Let us boil that down to something more than the 4th of July. When are you free and how long are you free? The only time you are ever free is when you stand above the ballot box ready to drop your ticket into that little hole, and the minute you let go of your ticket you delegate your power and authority to someone else for two or four years. So then our boasted freedom doesn't last for more than two or three seconds under a representative government as we have it arranged. Then the most important thing that you do is to cast that ballot, and it behooves you when you do go to exercise the only act of freedom that you have, that you exercise it soberly and sensibly and patriotically.

Now I some times think of all the people in the United States the people of Texas can get up the smallest issues to elect their officers on of any people in the world, and I think I have been here long enough to talk about us a little. Hear me when I tell you, my friends, that prohibition is not an issue, and yet we have men running over Texas today seeking office on that ground. The saloon, like Lot's wife, has turned into a pillar of salt and will never, never more be seen among us, and a man might as well run on George Washington's coffin as to run on such an issue. We are not marching in that direction, not digging about in the ashes of the past.

There is something they could do in Texas if they wanted to do it and had the right size men, here is the state penitentiary with nearly four thousand men in it. They do not eat anything but corn bread and cabbage, and the like. They lost one million dollars last year. They say, how "would you have done it, Brother Kay?" I would have boarded them at the hotel for less money than that!

The schools are another issue; the university is an issue; and the Lord help us, the courts are an issue. This secret organization that you have read about so much in Texas is just a symptom, it is an eruption that has broken out on us because we have another and different disease. Our courts in many instances have broken down; our criminal laws in many instances have failed and become a laughing stock to intelligent people.

Now why is that? Because you free fellows go up there and try to get off the jury. Oh, yes, law ought to be enforced, but not by me; the constable ought catch the robbers but not take me along to help get them. That is our trouble.

Now this man Isaiah had a vision. Our politicians do not have a vision. He was a politician as well as a prophet and a saint.

What is the first thing that Isaiah did? You get out here and talk about citizenship once in a while. Somebody calls upon me to speak at a school house or some place like that upon citizenship. The first thing he did was to clean up himself. When he got this message and this vision he said, I am a man of unclean lips. What a confession that was, too, men! I am a man of unclean lips! How many men here are willing to hold up their hands and say they will try to keep their lips clean? To go around and tell smutty stories and use ugly words is to lead and live the life of a swine because you are feeding on the very swill and husks of life.

How did he get his mouth clean and his lips clean? With fire, that is how. You cannot cure that in a minute with some light palliative remedy. It takes repentance to do that, and it takes shame and a feeling of shame. I think I said it to you before, but what does that word "repentance" mean? Repentance is a terrible word. It does not mean to go up and start back the other way or change yourself round or something like that. It comes from the same Latin as penitence, as pain and painful and penalty and penitentiary and it means the strong, hard, suffering pain; a bigger word than perhaps some of you thought it was. It takes fire to cure it.

Now this man had a vision. Where would we get to without a vision? That makes the great difference in men. I can look back down there in old Jacob's time when these 11 or 10 brothers of his—or how many of them were there—saw Joseph coming through the cow pasture and said behold this dreamer cometh. What was Joseph dreaming about when he saw the sheaves of wheat bowing down there, nothing but that he was only going to feed his white haired daddy down in Pharoah's country, and a long time after that, nothing but that he was going to preserve these lives in a terrible day.

But Isaiah had a vision and he said who is it that can do these things? "It's me, it's me." You know when you want something done you should go and do it yourself. The best way in the world to handle a young lawyer is, when he comes in the office to an experienced one, to tell him to get out of here, get in your own shop and work this out, let me alone. A man comes up and wants another man to sign his note according to Sam Jones. Sam says, what is it you want, do you want me to stand for you down at the bank, why don't you stand?

Going back to this question of unclean lips. Why do they do that? A man that cusses all the time confesses he hasn't enough language to go around. He is so ignorant that his words do not go together and he chokes up the cracks with cuss words where he ought to have some other words. He confesses that he has no sense of humor because he uses dirty humor.

How did that work out with this man Isaiah after they took a chunk of fire and burnt his lips and they were clean? He went out and had the greatest command of language in all history after his lips were made pure, his teaching stood up for every man who would seek to use the highest and finest language. So if you don't do anything else, I want you, if you ever do get any benefit out of these proceedings down here, to never go out here and besmirch yourselves and besmirch me with profane language and unclean lips.

Isaiah laid his life down, then went out, not for office. You know some of the biggest men in the world refuse to run for office. The greatest man I know told me he did not have time to run for office. It looks like that among people that ought to have things right they would have thrown out these Jews kings and put in Isaiah.

Now then I have come in sight of the thing that I want to say to you. It is not the governors and the judges that we need improvement on, it is not politics that we need to improve, it is not law that we need to improve, but we have to raise up a more intelligent, a more competent, a more patriotic set of voters. Why doesn't somebody raise his hand on that? Because whatever your voter is, your judge and your governor and your sheriff is going to be, and if you have an ignorant or unpatriotic voter he is going to elect his candidate on some little issue that the lightening bugs would not light a lamp over because an incompetent voter does not know an issue when he finds one and he is more apt to get stirred up over a little issue than he is over a big one.

Now, I have laid these things before you, not that I know any more than you do, most of you have thought about these things. You ought to be able, gentlemen, to know the voice and the cry of a demagogue when he goes among you shouting for office.

WOMAN HEADS EXPEDITION

Dr. Esther Lovejoy of Richmond, Va., and types of the Monastir citizens injured in the blast.

Dr. Esther Lovejoy headed the expedition of six American doctors from the American Women's hospital which rushed to the relief of the Monastir explosion victims. From Veles, where the hospital is located, the party had to travel over fifty miles of bad roads through the mountains.

Hardy Case to Be Tried Again

Among the numerous cases which have come into prominence through having been brought into the federal courts here, and which will be delved into during the two weeks which the federal court of the northwestern district of Texas, Wichita Falls division, will be in session here, is the case of the United States vs. Dan M. Hardy, charged with conspiracy to bribe a federal officer.

Hardy's case, written on the federal dockets as "cause No. 130," has been tried in federal court here once, and he was convicted, but when the case was brought before the circuit court of appeals, it was reversed and remanded.

The case against Hardy grew out of a case against H. M. Splawn, Jack Lankford and J. B. Flowers, known as "cause No. 129," the defendants being charged with transporting liquor into Indian territory, or interstate, from Texas to Oklahoma. All of the defendants were convicted, and their cases were affirmed by both the circuit court of appeals and the United States supreme court.

Hardy was tried and convicted of the same offense, and both the circuit court of appeals and the United States supreme court affirmed the action of the district federal court, but the defendant was granted a pardon by former President Woodrow Wilson.

The case pending against him in the federal court here sets forth that Hardy conspired to bribe federal officers in order that the liquor could be transported interstate, according to the district attorney.

BOYS MEETING IS ENDORSED

Pittenger Points to It as Solution

Using the prophecy or Isaiah as the scripture and text of the morning, T. S. Pittinger, of the First M. E. Church, preached upon "Immigration: The Challenge of the Churches of America" and showed that the greatest problem confronting the churches here in America at the present time is converting the immigrant to our culture, customs, mode of living and to the religion of Jesus Christ.

The scripture of the morning showed how Christ had been rejected by his own people, and had then given commissions to his apostles to go throughout the world preaching his gospel and converting sinners, he had told them that, while it was yet four months 'till the harvest time, their fields were white unto harvest, and this the preacher of the morning compared with the conditions that exist in America today, with its millions of immigrants arriving from every shore, and settling in various communities all over the land.

The pastor said St. John had stated that "The spirit of the Lord was upon him to help do the Lord's work, and that he should have the same feeling in regard to the Lord's work today. We have been talking about the needs of the world for a long time and have never found the right solution for its needs. Bolshevism has been tried in Russia, brute force in Germany, and diplomacy at Washington but neither has succeeded. The boys' conference here will do more in the right line than all these others to help solve our problem. What we need to do is to help lift people and show them the right ways of living and how to be better men and women and better citizens."

Arrests Average Seven Day Here

An average of seven arrests per day is the report which J. W. McCormick, chief of police, filed with the city secretary Sunday as the record for the police department for the month of April.

Other arrests included in the report follow:

Held for investigation and transferred to federal authorities, 13.
Cases of theft, 1.
Held for investigation and transferred to county authorities, 7.
Cases of gaming, 24.
Disturbances of the peace, 30.
Vagrancy cases, 40.
Charges of being drunk, 52.
Juvenile cases, 41.

RODEO DETAILS NEARING END

Participants Coming In Daily

Details pertaining to the big Round-Up which will open at the ball park Wednesday afternoon for a three days series of contests are rapidly nearing completion.

Cowboys and cowgirls who will take part in the various contests are arriving in great numbers. A car load of contestants specially trained roping and bulldogging horses arrived Sunday. The wild Brahma steers which will be used in the steer riding, together with the outlaw bucking horses and long horn Mexican bulldogging steers will be shipped from the Tri-Angle ranch today.

Stable Tents Up.

Two large horse tents which will be used as stable tents have been erected on the strip of ground back of the ball park proper. The chutes and corrals are nearly completed and are said to be the most elaborately arranged of any ever seen in this part of the country and with these corrals and chutes the performance should be the fastest ever seen here as with the arrangements it is possible to saddle as many as ten horses at one time.

Tom Burnett has spared no expense in an effort to make the coming show the biggest, snappiest contest that he has staged here.

There will not be a single contest in which the competition will not be keen from the spinning of the first fancy loop in the fancy roping until the winners are announced in the grand finals of the bulldogging it will be a contest all the way, with the winners having to extend themselves at all times before beating the rest of the field.

Many Contestants.

Morgan Opposes Cash Bonus for Vets at Present

"To say that I am for a cash bonus at the present time for the former service man would be misleading," declared S. A. L. Morgan, candidate for congress to fill the unexpired term of the late Lucian W. Parrish from the 13th district, on the eve of his departure for Denton, Texas, Sunday night.

"I am for every form of compensation for the sick and injured ex-soldiers," he said, "and for any benefits for the former soldiers that the country will stand. But I do not favor the payment of a cash bonus to able bodied ex-soldiers at this time, because I do not believe the country is in a condition to stand it."

The statement was similar to remarks made at the Wichita theater Saturday night, and which was printed in the Record-News Sunday morning, following Mr. Morgan's address to a large audience of enthusiastic followers who had assembled at the theater in a Morgan rally.

Mr. Morgan's itinerary has been mapped out for him at Denton, and may possibly be changed somewhat after he has arrived there, it was intimated, but it is known that he intends to follow closely upon the heels of Guinn Williams, a candidate for the same post whom Wichitans consider Mr. Morgan's strongest opponent.

WHY A FLAPPER

She has been editorialized, sermonized and debated, and a recent attack by a Texas revivalist in which he said: "When girls show their knee you can see the world's finish," has brought about this photographic reply:

LEGION LOSES RAIN INSURANCE

Pick Wrong Hours to Gamble On

Pat Carrigan post of the American Legion will not collect $2,000 which they bartered for as insurance against rain on either of the two days in which the aviation meet was to have been held in Wichita Falls.

Officials of the post who had announced early last week that insurance against the intervention of rain had been secured said Sunday night that the amount could not be collected because of the fact that they had inadvertantly chosen the wrong number of hours to be guarded against.

The insurance read for payment of $2,000 on both Saturday and Sunday, in the event of falling rain, however, only six hours of the day were insured, these being in the morning from 6 o'clock until 12 noon during which time one-tenth of an inch of rain would have to fall.

Rain began falling here early Sunday morning, but slacked up sufficiently before noon to prevent the necessary tenth of an inch.

CIVIL CASES TO COME UP FIRST

Criminal Docket May Be Tackled Early

Civil suits will have the right of way during the first week of federal court which opens here today, according to Henry Zweifel, United States district attorney, who said Sunday that grand jury investigations would also occupy much of the first week's time.

If the civil docket is hurriedly cleared, or "falls down," the district attorney stated, criminal prosecutions will begin during the latter part of the week.

Several important cases will be brought up for trial during the criminal hearings, District Attorney Zweifel said, among the most prominent being cases against C. L. Nailing and W. F. Berryhill, charged with violations of the Mann white slavery act; cases against R. J. Watson, W. L. Lediston, Rex Beard, W. H. Barnett et al, all of whom are charged with transporting stolen automobiles interstate.

The case of the United States vs. Joe Parker, charged with having in his possession freight stolen during interstate transportation, will also be tried, it was said.

Two or three mail fraud cases will be presented to the grand jury for investigation, Attorney Zweifel said, and those who are connected with the cases as defendants will be invited to appear before the grand jurors and testify.

None of any of the mail fraud cases pending on the dockets will be tried during this term of court, he said.

Our Great May Sale of White and Summer Cottons, which opens today will be welcomed by every frugal housewife. Values in piece-goods yet unknown. See our windows today. P. B. M. Co. (Adv.)
