Recession's here in area but signs are optimistic

Unemployment reported up; Bank deposits are too

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

There's another newcomer in West Texas, and he slipped in from somewhere else in the nation sometime in February or March. He's really been making himself known in the last few weeks.

His name is recession.

After a sluggish and worrisome first quarter, some area oil and business men report April, May and June were the worst months they have seen in years.

Consider these facts:

—Unemployment compensation claims in the Texas Employment Commission's Midland office this week were up ten-fold from last July, from 60 to 600.

—Job openings listed at the TEC here are down from 1,200 in July, 1981, to just 351 as of July 9.

—Nearly 40 new people a day come into the Odessa TEC office seeking unemployment benefits, compared with 25 a month six months ago.

"This is the worst we've ever seen it in the Odessa office," said Stan Whitley, who has worked there for 18 years.

Close to 2,700 active unemployment compensation claims are on file in the Odessa TEC office.

IN SPITE OF all this, it's difficult, if not impossible, to gauge the true impact of the recession in Midland-Odessa, or to determine whether the area has "bottomed out" yet.

Economic data for 1982 naturally pales in comparison to 1981's record-setting figures.

But indicators are often conflicting: Midland bank deposits are up, topping the $2 billion mark for the first time in the quarter ended June 30. Airline boardings at Midland Regional Air Terminal inch upward every month. Midland issued more building permits in the first six months of 1982 than it did in the same period a year ago.

The Midland housing industry is a good example of a business not sure of itself during the recession. A handful of builders here are laying off some workers because houses aren't selling as fast as interest payments on them are mounting, said Tim Tabor, president of the Midland Home Builders Association.

A few builders are delaying home starts now, or are offering homes at below appraised prices, he said.

AT THE SAME time, the number of interested lookers and contracts signed in the last two weeks is higher than it's been in the last two months, Tabor said.

Marketing spokesmen for Midland Park Mall and Odessa's Winwood Mall report traffic and sales are up, in some cases, "substantially," or "above projections." The local Texas Instruments plant is hiring people "as fast as we can," said a spokesman there.

So what is going on?

Predominantly blue-collar Odessa has been hit harder in the last few months than has Midland, although people in both cities report layoffs are beginning to extend to office and management personnel also.

Area oil companies are handling the recession in different ways. Some have had small lay-offs from time to time since January; two people here, three people there. Some, like Dowdco, have cut back on research and development. Others such as MGF and Kenai Drilling of Texas have cut back on their 1982

Paul Harvel: Economically, Midland's making it just fine

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Paul Harvel came to Midland four months ago as the chamber's new executive vice president. Since then, he's had time to evaluate the city and chamber and draw up short- and long-term goals.

Four months have passed since Paul Harvel came to Midland as the chamber of commerce executive vice president. During that time, Midland has fallen from a high of jet-rocket growth into a leveling off period.

While it has some longtime Midlanders concerned that the city may be dropping back into one of its bust periods, Harvel isn't worried. He's planning for the future and designing programs to keep the chamber moving.

"My overall impression of the area is that it's not only one of the most progressive and fastest growing areas now, but it will continue and stay that way," he said.

Harvel started in chamber work at Little Rock, Ark., where he was No. 24 on a 24-person staff. He moved up there and eventually was named executive vice president of the El Dorado, Ark., chamber. From there he moved on to the same top position with the Enid, Okla., chamber.

"A chamber executive, in terms of his career, wants to be in a very vital, fast-growing area. Yes, we're seeing a slowdown in a lot of areas. But in the long haul, there won't be any area in the nation that will have more activity than this one.

"AMERICANS WILL always demand energy," Harvel continued. "I don't see anything on the horizon that says Americans one day will say they no longer care for energy."

Harvel acknowledged that the country is suffering through a recession. "There are so few cities where their economic viability is holding their own. The cities and states that adopted a no-growth policy are the ones hurting the most today. The state of Oregon is a good illustration. A lot of people from there are looking for work."

Midland may have reached the point where it no longer depends entirely upon a booming petroleum industry to keep going, he surmised. "We've grown so much that the growth is beginning to feed on itself. Dallas and Houston both were founded on the oil industry," he said to illustrate his theory.

And Harvel intends to keep the city growing by attracting other industry with an eye toward selectivity.

"We will make some effort at economic diversification, keeping in mind that oil is our major economic base. I would like to see us attract district and regional offices, things like blue-chip type companies," he said.

The word "plants" has a bad connotation in the public's mind, Harvel noted. But it can also mean companies like Texas Instruments, which has a large operation south of Midland Regional Airport.

"We won't be out hustling polluting smokestacks; we won't be out to get just anything here. We will be selective," he said of the chamber's planned recruiting efforts.

THE PROBLEM in recent months has circled back to the recession. Of the Fortune 500 companies that he's contacted, Harvel said most of them are "pulling in their strings. These people aren't doing much. Capital for expansion just isn't there."

Large tracts of land held by PPG and Michelin to construct plants here in the late 1970s have reverted back to the Industrial Foundation. This land and that in the two industrial parks will serve as a magnet for drawing in new industry, Harvel contended.

"In industrial development, you don't stand a chance unless you have a good land inventory," he said.

Harvel is optimistic the recession is about over, and not just for Midland.

"In the last two weeks, in visiting with my friends in business, they seem more optimistic and are looking at advancing and expanding. Despite what layoffs we've had here, we haven't had anything like our neighbors, such as Arkansas."

The Permian Basin economy has yet to drop to the depths that it has elsewhere, he noted. "If a guy wants a job bad enough, he can get something here. It may not be the first door he goes in, but he'll get one. But I don't believe anyone in Cleveland, Ohio, can get a job."

After reviewing how the Midland chamber operated and getting in step with the attitude of Midland, Harvel has drawn up some goals for the office.

AT THE TOP of the list is to strengthen and expand the Conventions and Tourists Bureau. Midland has the smallest

Cause of 727 crash remains unknown

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Workers pulled more bodies from the scattered wreckage of a jetliner as federal investigators said Saturday night they had no hard evidence to determine what caused the Boeing 727 to smash into a residential neighborhood, killing at least 153 people.

Patricia Goldman, vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said the consensus of 25 people who saw the crash was that no lightning hit the plane as it was taking off in a raistorm from the New Orleans International Airport on Friday. It was the second worst air disaster in U.S. history.

Ms. Goldman also said tape recordings of conversations between the crew and the airport tower showed no indication before the plane came down that anything was wrong.

"There was no emergency call that we found on a preliminary listening," Ms. Goldman told a news conference. "There was nothing on the tower tape to substantiate an emergency, but you have to remember that they weren't in the air very long."

Earlier, an NTSB spokesman said both the cockpit and flight data recorders were recovered, apparently unharmed, and were sent to Washington, D.C., for analysis.

Lt. Lynn Sherman, spokesman for the Jefferson Parish Sheriff's Department, said Saturday night, "Any statements as to the exact nature of death...or the circumstances of events in the last moments of this crash are premature at this time.

"The coroner's office investigators, sheriff's investigators and federal authorities are still gathering evidence to make such a determination if it is possible, but do not have enough data to make any statement to this effect."

And Ms. Goldman said it would be premature to form firm conclusions on virtually any aspect of the crash, including the number of dead both on the plane and in the neighborhood where the jetliner went down.

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

NEW YORK — President Reagan, as commander-in-chief of the American armed forces, has agreed to a U.S. Marine escort from our Sixth Fleet to supervise a PLO withdrawal from shattered west Beirut, now under tight Israeli siege. It's a highly delicate decision, essentially to carry out a mission of mercy, which evoked mixed reactions in Congress and was spurned for the time being by PLO leader Yasir Arafat.

The president is on a "working vacation" in California, with the accent on "working," so in the absence of a secretary of state he called the signals as he received them via his White House staff from presidential envoy Ambassador Philip Habib. The latter is on the scene negotiating with Lebanon's embattled government, itself conferring around the clock with Arafat and other PLO leaders.

I believe that the president is justified in offering the Marine escort as part of a multinational supervisory force. France is supposed to join up in some undefined role but its government shows reluctance to spell out any details. Our government doesn't want the Soviet Union to get into the act so a U.N. peacekeeping role seems unrealistic.

The Russians warned President Reagan in a cryptic letter from their ailing President Brezhnev not to land the Marines in Beirut. They want to pose as a defender of Islam despite their occupation-invasion of Afghanistan, a Moslem nation whose people won't stand still for 125,000-man Soviet force trying to clamp Moscow rule on an alien state.

The mass of domestic issues, namely assorted aspects of the economy, keep piling up for the president but he gave the explosive Beirut bombshell his priority attention. It doesn't mean that he ignored home affairs. Not for a moment. Take a look at what he said about a flat-rate tax. Yet defusing the ticking bomb in Beirut required a command decision and President Reagan gave it. As Harry Truman once said (sitting at his desk in the Oval Office) "The buck stops here."

President Reagan showed his critics that he can quickly go to the heart of the matter in a devilishly tricky foreign affairs question. He wanted to keep the negotiations quiet but the radio in Israel and Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali let the cat out of the bag by going public. There obviously had been feverish consultations with friends in the Middle East, allies in NATO and special "alerts" for the Sixth Fleet plying Mediterranean waters where it's shadowed by Soviet submarines.

In making his announcement, President Reagan declared the concept as an agreement "in principle." The proposed force would total around 1,000

Midlander dies in car accident

A Midland man is dead and three other men are hospitalized after a traffic accident near Lenorah shortly before 8 a.m. Saturday.

Pronounced dead on arrival at Malone-Hogan Hospital in Big Spring was 20-year-old Perry Joe Kiser of 705 S. Midkiff Road. A passenger in Kiser's 1972 Plymouth, Phillip Dean Dozier, 22, of 2500 Copus, was listed in critical condition at Malone-Hogan with head and multiple internal injuries.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Kiser was southbound on Texas 137 when his car and a 1978 Chevrolet pickup truck driven by Jeronimo Regaldo, 32, of Denver City, collided at the intersection of 137 and Texas 176. Regaldo was eastbound on 176 at the time.

He was hospitalized with a broken leg, while a passenger in his vehicle, 25-year-old Ruben Regaldo, suffered a broken back. Two other passengers were released following emergency treatment.

Israeli shelling strikes rich, poor

By ALEX EFTY

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Embassy row, the city's most luxurious beach hotel and scores of high-rent apartment buildings and tenements were devastated in the latest Israeli bombardment of encircled west Beirut.

Fire engines were still fighting a blaze Saturday in the Summerland Hotel on Ramlet el Baidah Avenue, which runs along the Mediterranean, after the overnight shelling. The hotel has been empty for weeks.

On the other side of the street Syrian troops were sifting through the wreckage of the six-story Algerian Embassy that was devastated by half a dozen shells pumped into it from Israeli gunboats.

Nearby buildings housing the embassies of Iran, the United Arab Emirates and Iraq were also heavily damaged. The Kuwaiti Embassy further inland was also hit. Most of the diplomats moved out weeks ago.

The evacuated U.S. and British Embassies, more than a mile further up the road, were not hit. Neither was the Soviet Embassy, which was damaged in two previous shellings.

The heavy Israeli barrage apparently was directed at coastal fortifications manned by both Syrian troops and Palestinian guerrillas to guard against a possible Israeli landing.

There were no hits on the fortifications, but scores of shells punched gaping holes in nearby luxury apartment buildings.

They also blasted the Palestinian refugee neighborhoods of Fakhani and Sabra, about one mile inland, as well as the southeastern slum neighborhoods of the encircled city.

The slums were hammered by heavy artillery and tank fire from Israeli positions on the mountains east of Beirut during the incessant, nightlong bombardment, one of the heaviest in the 5-week-old invasion.

In the Palestinian refugee slum of Bourj el Barajneh there were at least 25 pulverized homes.

Protestors march against consulate

DETROIT (AP) — About 100 Lebanese-Americans occupied the Lebanese consulate here Saturday to protest fighting in their native country, a spokesman for the demonstrators said.

"We're doing this to show concern about Lebanon to the public," said Daniel Ferris of the American Lebanese League, a coalition of about 20 different groups.

"We feel all foreign forces should leave Lebanon, including the PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization), the Syrians and the Israelis," Ferris said.

"Lebanon has been an oasis for terrorists," he said. "Lebanon needs a strong government to control the export of terrorism."

A coalition of several other groups known as the Committee to Support the Lebanese and Palestinian People staged a protest march and rally in downtown Detroit on Saturday.

"We are calling for Israel to get out of Lebanon immediately and also for the U.S. to pull out of the Middle East and stop the genocide that's going on by cutting off all the weapons it sends in there," said Mike Shane, a coalition member. "We don't want the U.S. to get into a war over Lebanon."

Police estimated about 1,000 people filled a downtown city park. Some carried signs that read "U.S. Out of Lebanon" and others bearing slogans supporting the PLO.

Ferris said 100 people occupied the consulate but observers said far fewer participated. They tricked Consul General Samir Shamma into opening the building's doors by telling him a man needed his passport renewed to return to Lebanon, where his family had been killed, Ferris said.

Stolen U.S. army tank rampages through German town

MANNHEIM, West Germany (AP) — Someone stole a U.S. Army M-60 battle tank Saturday and wreaked havoc on a wild drive through Mannheim before the 50-ton vehicle plunged into the Neckar River, trapping the driver inside, police reported.

They speculated that the driver was an American soldier because the tank was taken from a U.S. Army base, but American officials said they could not confirm that.

Three other Army tanks were sent to the bridge to try to remove the upended tank that was in water 16 feet deep, but the effort failed when the steel cable snapped, police said.

It was not known if the driver was alive. Police said Army officials told them the tank was designed to keep out water, but fire brigade divers trying to rescue the driver said water was leaking into the tank.

They also reported the tank's hatch was bolted from the inside.

The tank left a trail of destruction behind it in the city's center, a grid of narrow streets.

One unidentified American was slightly injured when he tried to jump on the tank and open the hatch, police said. He was reported undergoing treatment in an American clinic in Heidelberg.

Three other people were injured, one seriously, as the tank lurched through Mannheim, crushing at least 10 parked cars and damaging the fronts of several shops and houses, police said.

The tank tore a hole at least three feet wide in the side of a streetcar filled with passengers, then ripped down power lines for the trolley network, bringing streetcar traffic to a brief standstill.

Lebanese Shiites become powerful

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Every war produces winners and losers, but the traditionally downtrodden Shiite Moslems already have benefited from the long years of violence afflicting Lebanon.

That may not be the same thing as winning — a goal that has eluded almost all of Lebanon's collection of religious communities since the civil war began in 1975. But it has provided the Shiites with new self-confidence and power.

Even before the Israeli invasion, the Shiites, for the first time in centuries, were considered major local players.

More numerous than the Israelis' Maronite Christian allies — and with much of their population situated in the sensitive section of southern Lebanon where Israel wants a demilitarized zone established — the Shiites have assumed even greater importance since the invasion.

Together, Maronites and Shiites may well emerge as the dominant forces in a new Lebanon, in the view of observers here, although they predict that the old Maronite desire for control almost certainly will have to give way to a more equal sharing of power and responsibility if the relationship is to endure. Any such outcome would diminish the power of the mainstream Sunni Moslems who long dominated Islam in Lebanon.

Until recently the Shiites' greatest failing was seen to be lack of leadership of the unchallenged kind exercised for the Maronites by Bashir Gemayel, head of the major Christian militias.

The Shiites' once-powerful feudal chiefs long since have been discredited. Their first modern leader, an Iranian-born cleric, Imam Moussa Sadr, disappeared in Libya four years ago in still-mysterious circumstances.

His place has been taken by Nabih Berri, a mild-mannered lawyer with an American wife and family living in Detroit. Since the Israeli invasion, the reflective Berri has come into his own.

He heads Amal, the only one of Lebanon's many militias that resisted the Jewish invaders. In an interview, he said that if the Israelis launched an assault on West Beirut, where many Shiites live in shantytown suburbs, "we will do our duty."

His southern Shiites are among the many Lebanese initially delighted by the Israeli crushing of the Palestinians, but Berri was wary.

"I am afraid Israel wants an excuse to stay in the south and will create a pretext," he said.

Already the Israelis have paved what had been a rudimentary Palestinian airstrip, flooded the south with their goods, arrested and tried to uproot Amal cadres in villages ostentatiously handed over to their surrogate, a Lebanese ex-army major, Saad Haddad.

Stirred by Shiite-dominated Iran's victories against Iraq and conscious of his 900,000 fellow Lebanese Shiites, Berri last month said his community was entitled to Lebanon's presidency — in the past reserved for the Maronites.

Behind the Shiites' emergence in Lebanese politics is Amal, Berri's militia. Despite its fragmentation — there are pro-Syrian, pro-Iranian and pro-Lebanese army branches — Amal remains the most powerful force in Shiite society.

Amal helped transform a once-lethargic community of poor farmers and day laborers organized on largely feudal lines into the one Lebanese group that fought against Israeli troops alongside the Palestinians.

Indicative of Amal's hold on the Shiite community was the major switching of gears required for that decision, since the Shiites and the Palestinians have fought bloody battles for control of Beirut suburbs and much of predominantly Moslem West Beirut in recent years.

After the French put Lebanon together in 1920 from the ruins of the Ottoman empire, the Shiites remained little better than a satellite force, controlled by their feudal lords in southern Lebanon and the fertile Bekaa Valley in the northeast and under the Maronites to whom France entrusted political power.

'Killer bees' mellowing on trip north

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — An estimated 8 million "killer bees" have been found in eastern Panama since the first hive was found last fall, but they have yet to cross the Panama Canal on their northward flight, agricultural officials say.

Thomas Bendigurg, national supervisor of agricultural education in the Education Ministry, said more than 100 hives have been located.

"They are there and we do not have any indications that they have advanced to the other side of the Panama Canal," he said Friday.

A government agronomist, who asked not to be named, said that at the current rate of expansion the bees will reach Costa Rica, 300 miles from Panama City, in about two years. At that rate, they will reach the United States sometime in the 21st century.

Bendigurg said that crossing with other species of bees as they moved north from their start in Brazil and Venezuela apparently was mellowing the aggressive instincts of the so-called "killer bees."

U.S.S.R. against proposed papal visit to Poland

By DAVID MINTHORN

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union on Saturday signaled its continuing opposition to Pope John Paul II's proposed visit to Poland in one of the harshest attacks on the Roman Catholic Church to be carried by the Soviet press.

The official news agency Tass quoted a Czechoslovakian newspaper's charge that the church in Poland was instigating political unrest and said the pope's 1979 visit to his native country was a key cause of the social unrest that occurred in 1980.

"The visit of Pope Wojtyla will only be possible when calm prevails in the country and the conditions are available for ensuring the necessary security," Tass said in a dispatch from Bratislawa, Czechoslovakia. The pope was Cardinal Karol Wojtyla of Krakow before his election, when he took the name John Paul II.

The Tass dispatch quoted Bratislava Pravda, a Communist Party newspaper. Tass typically only quotes at length foreign reports which coincide with the views of the Soviet government. The device allows the Soviets to make their views known without taking a formal position, which might expose them to charges of meddling in another country's affairs.

Negotiations are currently under way among Poland's bishops, the pope, and the Polish government over the proposed visit. The pope has said he would like to help his countrymen celebrate the 600th anniversary in August of the arrival in Poland of an icon known as the Black Madonna of Czestochowa, which is a symbol of both Poland's Catholicism and its national pride.

Polish Cardinal Franciszek Macharski returned to Poland from the Vatican on Saturday and told reporters in Warsaw that no decision has been made on whether to press for an August visit.

"I cannot tell you anything other than that I would like to see the Holy Father in Poland this year," he said to reporters, hinting that the visit may be postponed to a fall or winter date.

The Polish government has expressed reluctance to permit the pope's visit, at least in August. That month is already fraught with potential unrest because it will mark the second anniversary of the founding of Solidarity, the independent trade union which has been suspended by martial law.

The continuing Soviet campaign against the visit is likely to increase the authorities' reluctance.

"Polish Catholic churches are places where anti-socialist forces openly meet and are given support in the form of instigatory sermons right from the pulpit. Thus, the church is embarking on the path of intensive political activity," the Tass dispatch said.

"It was perhaps typical that disorders in many Polish cities broke out right after public worships in Catholic churches where organized provocateurs and anti-socialist elements had gathered," it continued, in a reference to last month's riots.

The Soviet dispatch also looked at the pope's last visit, a triumphal tour in 1979 when millions of Poles turned out to greet him.

"The election of the Krakow cardinal to the papal post and his trip to Poland were among the main signals calling for counterrevolutionary actions in that country," the report said.

The report charged that the Catholic church "stood at Solidarity's cradle" together with dissident groups to form a coalition against the Polish Communist Party and the socialist system.

The church has continued to oppose state authority since the introduction of martial law, the article asserted, by defending interned leaders of Solidarity and demanding their release.

The article concluded: "The turn of events in Poland demonstrates that religion, in a combination with nationalism and social demagogy, is a dangerous ideological means of manipulating believers among the working people and thus paving the way for large-scale acts of subversion."

Little to show for effort of U.N. arms conference

By MICHAEL J. BERLIN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — A special General Assembly conference designed to rein in the nuclear arms race ended Saturday after five weeks, with little to show for the effort.

The outcome was anticipated by most diplomats, and some observers saw it as typical of U.N. forums — a vague blueprint for inaction, papering over the failure of consensus.

Yet many diplomats saw this failure as more damaging than most, dramatizing the collapse of an international consensus on the theoretical goals of arms control that had existed for more than a decade and had been defined by the "action program" adopted by the General Assembly's first disarmament session, in 1978.

In the interim the program had produced no action, which was one reason the second special disarmament session was convened on June 7.

Arms control activists, led by Mexican Ambassador Alfonso Garcia Robles, had hoped to promulgate a "comprehensive program of disarmament," which would go a step beyond the theoretical by defining a series of target dates for a comprehensive nuclear test ban, limits on nuclear arms production and deployment, the reduction of stock piles, and a treaty banning the production of chemical weapons, among other prime arms issues.

In the past, despite the reluctance of the nuclear powers to be pressed on these issues in multilateral forums, there had been an activist and cohesive group of "middle powers" from the West and the Third World determined to elicit either grudging acquiescence or acute embarrassment.

This year, at a time when public awareness of the dangers of the nuclear arms race is far more intense, that core of activist governments has dissipated and Third World nations have fractured along East-West lines rather than press equally hard on Washington and Moscow for compliance with disarmament goals.

The conference organizers claim some success in public consciousness-raising, pointing to a rally that atttracted an estimated 750,000 people to New York's Central Park on the first Saturday of the session.

There was also intense press coverage of the speeches by governmental leaders such as President Reagan, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Most of the speeches, however, restated disarmament formulas, without fresh ideas or followup.

After the leaders left, the diplomats broke into working groups, where the specifics of the comprehensive disarmament timetable foundered in the face of objections from both East and West.

Two Midland men escaped injury Saturday morning when the engine on a Piper Turbo Arrow IV quit shortly after takeoff from Midland Air Park. The pilot, Byron Campbell Courtney, of 103 W. Shandon, attempted to turn the plane around after the engine died at about 5,300 feet, but he didn't make it. He safely landed the aircraft on a crop-dusters' dirt landing strip 2½ miles northeast of Air Park, near County Road 1150 and CR 60. Courtney, right, answers questions from an investigating Department of Public Safety officer after the emergency landing. Also aboard the plane was Dale Edward Creecy, No. 2 Linda Court, second from left. Courtney is a flying instructor and apparently was giving Creecy lessons in instrument flying when the engine died.

Bernardin named as Cody's successor

By JOHN DOWLING

CHICAGO (AP) — Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin of Cincinnati, considered a social progressive but conservative on church doctrine, was named Saturday by Pope John Paul II to head the 2.4 million-member Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago.

The announcement by the Rev. Pierfranco Pastore, deputy Vatican spokesman, ended more than two months of speculation on the choice of a successor to Cardinal John P. Cody, who died April 25 at age 74.

Bernardin

The appointment is effective immediately, Pastore said. Bernardin, who was informed of his appointment during a private audience with the pope last week, returned Saturday to Cincinnati from Rome.

Bernardin, 54, had been frequently mentioned as a possible successor to Cody, whose final months were haunted by allegations that he misused up to $1 million in church funds. A federal investigation of those charges was closed Tuesday without indictments.

News of Bernardin's appointment was greeted with joy and relief in Chicago, where the church has been rocked by dissension stemming from the financial scandal and what some had considered an autocratic church administration under Cody.

A former president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Bernardin was named archbishop of Cincinnati in 1972 by Pope Paul VI, becoming the youngest Roman Catholic archbishop in the United States.

Bernardin becomes the 11th man to head the Chicago archdiocese, the nation's largest and wealthiest. The last four archbishops were named cardinal after being appointed, and Bernardin is expected to receive that title as well, although no date has been set.

Vatican sources say the pope is a close friend of Bernardin, who served on a Vatican committee with the then-Cardinal Karol Wojtyla.

In a prepared statement issued by his Cincinnati office, Bernardin accepted the post and said he was grateful for the pope's "expression of solidarity and promise of support."

He also paid tribute to his predecessor in Chicago, saying Cody's accomplishments "have set the stage for continued growth in the life and ministry of the Church of Chicago."

Mayor Jane M. Byrne, a Catholic, sent Bernardin a telegram saying, "It is our prayer that your stewardship be long and successful."

In Ohio, religious leaders praised the selection. Calling Bernardin "a very gifted young man," Bishop Edward Herrmann of the Columbus Diocese said, "He has extraordinary leadership ability."

Bernardin, the son of Italian immigrants, was ordained in his home town of Columbia, S.C., in 1952 and held several key posts in the Charleston, S.C., Diocese. In 1966, he was appointed auxiliary bishop of Atlanta, becoming the youngest Roman Catholic bishop in the United States at the age of 38.

Soft-spoken and efficient, Bernardin is widely respected in Vatican circles. He has expressed strong conservative views on abortion and the role of women in the church, but has worked to fight racism and criticized poor treatment of the elderly.

Some members of the diocese had complained Cody was unresponsive to the needs of priests, nuns and lay people. Some of the critics said Saturday they hoped Bernardin would implement some reforms rejected by Cody, including full disclosure of archdiocesan finances and formation of a pastoral council of clergy and lay people to advise the archbishop.

"Just because Cardinal Cody died, those things will not end and we fully intend to pursue...those reforms," said Lawrence J. Gorski, coordinator of Concerned Catholics of Chicago, a group of 2,500 reform-minded Catholics.

The Cody controversy was sparked in June 1981 by a series of articles in the Chicago Sun-Times alleging the archbishop gave church funds to his stepcousin and lifelong friend, Helen Dolan Wilson of St. Louis. Cody and Mrs. Wilson denied the allegations.

Despite recession, area economy faring well drilling budgets.

Dresser Atlas and Halliburton have transferred employees out of the Permian Basin to other areas in Texas or out of state.

"It's hard to say what is going on," said Dan Pender, head of employee relations in Midland's Core Lab office.

"WE LAID OFF a small number of our well logging staff, probably less than 10 people out of 150 employees. But then, some departments in the company need more people.

"Production and exploration are hurting, but luckily, we're a diversified enough company," that employees can be kept on the payroll by transferring to another department here or elsewhere, Pender said.

According to Ed Miller of the Midland TEC office, roughly 150 to 200 oilfield employees have come into his office in the last week to 10 days.

They run the gamut from rig workers to management personnel. About 200 welders alone have been laid off in the last 60 days between the Midland and Odessa labor forces, he said.

The layoffs are the largest seen in Midland since November 1981, when the Levi Strauss plant closed, forcing close to 200 workers to seek jobs elsewhere.

Companies involved include a who's who of the Permian Basin: Drilco Industrial, Tenneco, OIME, Wooley Tool and Manufacturing, The Western Company, B.J. Hughes, MGF Drilling Company, Laguna Petroleum, OPI, Midway Manufacturing, Century Pipe and Supply, and others.

CHALLENGER RIG and Manufacturing of Odessa, and Basin Inc. of Midland, have had some layoffs or transfers as the result of those companies being bought by out-of-town firms.

The recession also affects trucking firms, air charter companies and corporate aviation departments. Several pilots and other aviation employees based at Air Terminal, including some from Tiger Charter, are looking for work.

The trucking industry, both heavy hauling and motor freight, has been especially hard hit.

"This May and June were the worst we've had in the last four years," said Buddy Kniffen, terminal manager for Merchants Fast Motor Lines. "This has a domino affect on us. Our business is a reflection of the economy of West Texas. If people are buying and selling, then we're hauling it."

A spokesman at Waggoners Trucking reported business was down 60 percent versus this time last year. Atlas Truck Line reported some lay-offs since March and that business was down 90 percent.

"YOUR TRUCKING industry in this area is really hurting, and you'll find that some companies have actually shut down," said a spokeswoman there. "Many of us have let our leased trucks go. We sent 12 trucks back to Houston and kept just four here."

Many independent drilling contractors have laid off rig hands due to the drop in drilling activity in the Permian Basin. The number of rigs making hole has fallen from 429 at this time last year, to 283 as of this week, according to data from Reed Rock Bit Company.

Most major oil companies are not laying off people, but are encouraging early retirement for some of their employees, Miller said.

People who took early retirement last year to start their own companies, to take advantage of the boom, are not being replaced, he pointed out.

"We're not having people from the outside come in as much as we did in the past," Miller said. "Last week we had a few from Houston. Apparently they felt the recession before we did.

"It's a static period."

Several of the people surveyed for this article said they believe things will improve in the 4th quarter of the year, in September or October, and they are basically hanging on until then.

"Depression/recession is a state of mind," said homebuilder Tabor. "If you talk negative, you get negative results, so we are talking positive."

department when compared to similar-sized cities, such as Abilene and San Angelo.

"We have less than $100,000 to promote conventions; other cities have $400,000. We can do a better job than San Angelo or Abilene because of our airport," he said. And while the hotel space is filled during the week with business persons, he said there should be enough open on weekends for conventions.

With a membership of 1,700 persons, Harvel has been trying to motivate these people to be a part of the chamber's activities. The board of directors adopted a revised committee structure and members were asked what committee assignment they preferred.

According to Harvel, this method of recruiting volunteers is working.

"We've had tremendous response on our committee preference. We're getting members more active. Eighteen months from now, I would like to see at least 300 to 400 very active volunteers within the organization."

Over the past year, a recruitment effort brought in a lot of new members and this is from where some of the volunteers are coming. However, Harvel said others are coming out of the old membership.

ANOTHER TOP PRIORITY for the immediate future is to improve airline service to Midland Regional Airport.

Harvel noted that "it's extremely fortunate to have American Airlines serving us and also airlines like Muse and Southwest. But I would like to add to the service by getting additional connecting flights.

"If we can convince Delta to come in and they can get the slot allocations, I think they will come. We're also working on TWA. Midland makes corporate sense for these two and fits into their hubs."

The chamber is operated like a business, according to Harvel. "My salary is paid by 1,700 members and I work for them. I try to keep that in mind."

And for their money, the members get an organization working to bring in more business and improve what Midland has, such as air service, he said.

"A chamber is a different type of organization. We have to work with so many different people, and many of them volunteers, to accomplish our goals."

At the base of Harvel's job is the task to "meet the people and write programs to fit the community. I'll make mistakes. But, hopefully, I'll make fewer by getting to know the community and what it wants."

He pointed out that while an idea may have been successful in Enid or Little Rock, it may not fit Midland.

"Midland is a more professional town. From the chamber's standpoint, they expect more from a professional staff."

When he interviewed for the position, Harvel said, "My first impression with the selection committee is that they wanted the best for their city."

Odessa men shot

ODESSA — One man is dead and two others were hospitalized in two separate shooting incidents here Saturday.

Raul Mata, 23, of Odessa was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Jimmy Harris at 5:30 a.m. Saturday following a shooting incident at the intersection of Jeter and Rose.

According to Detective Vic Sikes of the Odessa Police Department, Mata and several other people attending a party gathered outside near the intersection at about 4 a.m. Saturday when three men in a white two-door car stopped.

An argument apparently surfaced and two men in the car began firing handguns. Mata was struck by several bullets, while Augustin Gomez, also of Odessa, was struck once in the forearm, Sikes said.

Charges are pending further investigation.

In another incident, Luis Cano, 35, of Odessa was shot one time in the abdomen with a .22-caliber rifle. According to police, details of the incident are still very sketchy, but it is believed the shooting was the result of an argument.

Cano was reported in stable condition at MCH.

Police had no suspects in custody at press time Saturday night, according to Sikes.

Editor's Report

Marines and 600 French troops as a start. The Sixth Fleet, if the project finally wins PLO approval, will evacuate PLO guerrillas — estimated at 5,000 to 8,000 — to Arab countries like Algeria, Syria, Egypt and Iraq. The withdrawing guerrillas could carry with them their light weapons and be split up into varying sizes depending on the generosity of the host nations. The U.S. would bear the cost, around $2 billion.

Arafat, still hewing to the PLO line that we sponsored and supported Israel's armed incursion into Lebanon and its siege of west Beirut, rejected the Sixth Fleet's involvement. But he did not repudiate a role for U.S. troops in a multinational peacekeeping force. Israel agreed to the Reagan proposal and an anonymous highly-placed official commented: "It is a dramatic revolution in U.S. policy taken at great political risk to himself." He was talking about President Reagan.

Those "political risks" surfaced quickly in Congress. Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, usually a strong supporter of the president, repeated earlier concerns he voiced opposing a permanent American involvement in a peacekeeping force for southern Lebanon. He asserted: "It is not wise to introduce American fighting men in the Lebanese conflict." Measured support for the president's plan, though, came from others, usually opposing the president.

Most notable was Senator Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who also hopes to win the Democratic nomination for president in 1984. As a minority whip in the Senate, the Senator declared that while this could be a dangerous mission, the U.S. "must shoulder our share of the risk" for peace and stability in Lebanon. The principal fear of legislators was that American boys could be caught in shootouts between the PLO and Israelis and casualties might occur.

President Reagan is probably as much or more aware of the dangers than even the most compassionate of legislators. He wants to try to assure peace where there has been not an iota of tranquility in the past seven years. The small contingent of Marines would be in the area for 30 days, provided his agreement "in principle" is accepted by the PLO. The world is upside down: The leader of the most powerful nation on earth makes a substantive offer to an outlaw outfit to leave in protected dignity and elicits an ungrateful, "I won't accept it," as the immediate response. The PLO, most folks know, is the umbrella covering a dozen factions, including Communists. Arafat should get his signals straight sooner than later and know when he is well off.

Alexander M. Haig, Jr., who resigned as secretary of state on June 25, left office last Tuesday. He had been taking a Fourth of July holiday at a West Virginia resort, sharpening his golf game and thinking about his hectic term of office. He talked to President Reagan in California.

Forty years a soldier and statesman, Al Haig is a good friend of mine. Like all mortals, he is not perfect, but his talents far exceed any deficiencies. After his sudden resignation, he stayed on to help smooth the transition road for his successor, George P. Shultz, who has Senate confirmation hearings over the next 10 days.

Haig's keen and analytical mind will be missed even by the enemies he made though bureaucratic infighting. Abroad, he will be missed most by Israel as a staunch advocate of their affairs. But General Haig still has a lot to offer this nation and the free world. I hope that he intends to do so, whether in writing, debate or in stating public positions.

Hot! Hot! Hot!

The sun's blazing rays are expected to keep the mercury up in the mid-90s through Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

It should be clear and sunny through this afternoon with the high reaching the mid-90s. Tonight is expected to be near 70 with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms.

Monday should be a repeat of today with sunny skies and hot temperatures predicted to be in the mid-90s. Southeasterly winds are expected to breeze through at 10-15 mph.

Although Saturday's high might have felt hotter than 100 degrees, the 98-degree reading still didn't match the record high of 105 set in 1964. The overnight low of 70 was 8 degrees warmer than the record low of 62 set in 1947.

Fire damages one-story structure

A one-story wood frame structure was damaged extensively in a fire Saturday afternoon.

Midland Fire Department extinguished the fire at 600 S. Atlanta St. about 1 p.m. There were no injuries, but the blaze destroyed the storeroom and porch of the house occupied by Sontos Gonzales. The fire also caused heavy smoke damage throughout the house.

U.N. talks on arms finished

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. General Assembly wound down its second special session on disarmament Saturday, a session that failed to produce a comprehensive plan for ending the worldwide arms race.

The final meeting became a platform for the kind of East-West debate which some delegates blamed for the failure of the session to produce a more substantive disarmament program.

"Washington prefers to continue to escalate the arms race," said Soviet Ambassador Oleg Troyanovksy.

"The United States is proud of its record on disarmament," said American representative Edwin Feulner Jr., who attacked the Soviets for the invasion of Afghanistan, the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia, subversion in Central America, and the suppression of freedom in Eastern Europe.

The final product of the five-week session was a document that expressed the members' "profound preoccupation over the danger of war, in particular nuclear war, the prevention of which remains the most acute and urgent task of the present day."

The assembly also stressed "the need for strengthening the central role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament" and recommended consideration of enlargement of the 40-member Geneva Disarmament Commission "consistent with the need to enhance its effectiveness."

Disarmament advocates at the session had hoped to win consensus approval for a more sweeping document containing a disarmament timetable, starting with a nuclear test ban and concluding with elimination of nuclear and conventional weapons.

But in a climate of East-West tension, the unwieldy, 157-member assembly could agree on practically nothing. The United States and the Soviets continued to do their serious arms control negotiations in private, bilateral talks in Geneva.

Expressing the frustration of many delegates, Swedish undersecretary of state Inga Thorsson, chairman of her country's delegation, said it was "regrettable that most of the leading powers, and especially the superpowers, again have not shown themselves prepared to make use of United Nations as an instrument for genuine disarmament efforts.

"This is a fact which the overwelming majority of countries deplore today. The leading military powers will themselves deplore it tomorrow," she said.

"We must admit the session has not been a success," Assembly President Ismat T. Kittani of Iraq told the final meeting.

Jury indicts Haitian captains for conspiracy

MIAMI (AP) — A federal grand jury has indicted the co-captains and eight crew members of a Haiti-to-Miami ship aboard which passengers claim voodoo sacrifices were conducted last October.

A 15-count indictment involving conspiracy and alien smuggling charges was returned Friday.

Two of the 77 passengers aboard the wooden sailboat that landed in Florida last October say two men were thrown overboard in a sacrifice ordered by a voodoo priest. But Friday's indictment did not mention homicide charges because any slayings that were committed occurred outside U.S. territorial waters.

The indictment did say the 10 defendants intended to maintain control of the passengers with "use of force."

The indictment alleged that on Oct. 6, 1981, the crew and co-captains "did conduct a 'voodoo' ceremony for the purpose of successfully navigating the unnamed sailing vessel to the Southern District of Florida."

English vacationers forced onto roads

LONDON (AP) — A week-long strike by British train engineers forced thousands of vacationers to take to the roads Saturday. Buses to vacation areas were reported sold out through next Tuesday.

The Royal Automobile Club said a massive buildup of traffic on main highways occurred on Saturday.

Richard Marks, spokesman for British Rail, said that by 2 p.m. local time Saturday, 420 train engineers had shown up for work and 670 trains had run, out of a normal Saturday schedule of around 9,000 trains. On Friday, 840 trains had run by 2 p.m.

Marks said a key day will be Monday "when we are hoping for a massive return to work," by engineers willing to defy their union. If that takes place, he said, the state-owned company's board of directors "will have an incentive" to continue operations when it meets on Tuesday.

Otherwise, he said, the board might further curtail operations, suspending the guaranteed work week for all but a handful of employes.

The scheduling dispute caused the walkout. The railway system wants the right to schedule seven- and nine-hour shifts, a step it says could save $72 million per year. The engineers have had an eight-hour day since 1919, and they are unwilling to change.

Soviets send relief plane to Lebanon

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has sent another plane-load of relief supplies to Lebanese and Palestinians bottled up in west Beirut by Israel's invasion force, Tass said Saturday.

A special Aeroflot flight carried medicines, bandages, footware, clothing and other humanitarian supplies to "victims of Israel's aggressive and criminal war," the Soviet news agency said. Tass said the supplies were donated by several state-run groups, such as the Soviet Peace Committee.

The Soviet trade union federation said Wednesday it dispatched a plane-load of medicines and bandages to Palestinian and Lebanon workers and their families. An Aeroflot flight delivered the cargo to Damascus, Syria, where it was handed over to Arab trade unionists for transfer to war victims, Tass said.

France to sell arms to Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Junta coordinator Daniel Ortega Saavedra was scheduled to leave for Paris Saturday to meet with officials of the Socialist government of President Francois Mitterrand, the government announced.

France has agreed to sell arms to the leftist Nicaraguan government despite U.S. accusations that Nicaragua is supplying weapons to guerrillas fighting to topple El Salvador's U.S.-backed government. Nicaragua denies the charge.

Ortega heads a delegation that includes Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto and Supreme Court President Roberto Arguello Hurtado. He will meet Monday with Mitterrand and French Defense Minister Charles Hernu.

Argentine soldiers blame their officers for defeat

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — "There were kids who could hardly stand up they were so weak from hunger. We would ask the officers why there wasn't more food and they would say there just wasn't anymore. Imagine how we felt after we'd been taken prisoners and the English took us to the warehouses at the port and we saw tons of food stacked up."

Luis I., 19, draftee anti-aircraft gunner, Argentine 1st Army Corps, was talking about the Falklands war.

He told of huddling cold and hungry in a wet foxhole for more than two months in the Falkland Islands that his military government seized from Britain and held for 74 days.

He accused his commanders of logistical incompetence and corruption, charges also made by dozens of other soldiers quoted in recent weeks in Argentine newspapers and magazines.

Much of the Argentine public, led by the official media to believe Argentina was winning the fight until the final days, has reacted to the disclosures with bitterness.

Political leaders have called for inquiries and courts martial.

The military, reacting to public criticism, has created a commission, headed by Gen. Nestor Calvi, director of Army Institutes, to gather information on the army's performance during the campaign that ended June 14 with an Argentine surrender.

Luis said in an interview he had only 10 days to serve before his scheduled discharge when Argentine forces invaded the Falklands April 2.

"But I was glad and proud to go. We all wanted to go — to fight for the country," Luis added.

"It just didn't work out."

He attributed the defeat to a lack of experience and the incompetence of Argentine officers, as other soldiers had done in interviews with the Argentine media.

"We had high morale until the end, ready to fight to the death. But you don't win wars with morale," he said.

Luis said he spent nearly 70 days at his anti-aircraft position on a beach a mile outside of Stanley, the islands' capital, living in a foxhole with two other gunners. None of them bathed or had a change of clothes the entire time and their uniforms were inadequate for the harsh climate, with temperatures dropping to 14 degrees, he said.

They covered their foxhole with a tarp at night, Luis continued, but water — from hail, snow or rain that fell or condensation from the frequent fog — kept coming in, making it impossible to stay dry.

Trench foot was common, as was frostbite, and his 200-man unit had more than a dozen cases of amputed toes or feet, Luis said.

Luis charged that a thriving black market in cigarettes and other goods lined the pockets of many officers and non-commissioned officers with 500 percent profits.

"Some of the kids were so hungry they went to town to look for food, to dig through garbage or whatever," Luis said. "When they got back, the officers tied them down to the ground with stakes, covered them up to the neck with a tarp and left them out all night. Some of the kids got frostbite and I know of at least one who had his foot amputated.

"Some denunciations were made and I think those officers are going to be court martialed."

He said as prisoners the Argentine soldiers were treated well by the British, that after being searched each was given two blankets and "the best meal we had in weeks."

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The commander of Honduras' armed forces said Saturday he sent troops into disputed territory along the border with El Salvador to keep left-wing Salvadoran guerrillas out of Honduras.

Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez said he dispatched the troops last month after learning the Salvadoran army was about to launch an anti-guerrilla offensive in El Salvador's northern frontier province of Morazan.

"With the authorization of the president and...with knowledge that the Salvadoran armed forces were going to stage large-scale operations in this zone, we sent troops to the border to protect our frontier...to avoid the spilling of blood in our territory and to keep the criminal terrorists from fleeing onto our soil," Alvarez said.

The Honduran army had announced earlier the presence of 3,000 of its soldiers along the mountainous frontier, but this was the first time the government acknowledged the troops were inside one of six "pockets" of border territory disputed since a 1969 conflict.

Alvarez defended his action in an unusual nationwide television appearance with President Robert Suazo Cordova and the presidents of the congress and the supreme court. All four urged Hondurans to support the armed forces' battle against terrorism.

Alvarez accused Salvadoran leftist guerrillas of collaborating with Honduran extremists in more than 40 kidnappings, bombings, hijackings, shootings and bank robberies in Honduras during the past two years.

Hammer urges U.S.-Soviet summit

HYDE PARK, N.Y. (AP) — A U.S.-Soviet summit conference should be held soon to defuse superpower tensions, said a resolution adopted Saturday by participants at an international peace conference.

The approval of the resolution for a meeting between President Reagan and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev was made at the urging of wealthy Los Angeles industrialist Armand Hammer, sponsor of the fifth annual Armand Hammer Conference on Peace and Human Rights.

"If this conference did nothing else but to bring about a meeting of these two leaders, I think it would be crowned a great success," said Hammer, 84, board chairman of Occidental Petroleum Corp.

The three-day conference, which ends today, has drawn more than 50 representatives from 34 nations, including the Soviet Union and Poland. It is being held at the home of Franklin D. Roosevelt, where the former president was born 100 years ago.

Hammer said the need for a face-to-face meeting between Reagan and Brezhnev was illustrated last week by the Soviet leader's warning against the United States sending Marines into Lebanon to supervise the evacuation Palestine Liberation Organization members.

"It's one thing to send diplomatic messages, to use ambassadors, to use the hotline. It's another to sit down across the table," Hammer said.

Oklahoma state trooper shot

McALESTER, Okla. (AP) — Law enforcement officials aided by bloodhounds and aircraft were searching thick underbrush and woods along the Indian Nation Turnpike Saturday for a Tulsa man after an Oklahoma Highway Patrolman was shot after he stopped a speeding car.

Trooper Norman Kious, 53, was in satisfactory condition at an Oklahoma City hospital Saturday after surgery for gunshot wounds.

Three-year-old girl abandoned by mother

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — It was late at night when police found a 3-year-old girl sitting patiently in front of a church, where her mother had told her to wait for other children arriving for Sunday school.

The tiny child with blue eyes, straight brown hair and "such a personality" said her name was Bobby Jo.

Left with two boxes of toys, a bag of clothing and two jelly sandwiches Friday night, Bobby Jo said her mother had told her to wait for children arriving for Sunday school.

Clad in a yellow Holly Hobby T-shirt, red terry-cloth shorts and beach sandals, she was noticed in front of the Congregational United Methodist Church just before 11 p.m. by passers-by who called police.

"We're pretty sure this is a case where she has been abandoned," said police Capt. Donald Strand.

However, police said Saturday afternoon the girl's mother had been found in Iowa City and that she said she did not want to give up custody of the girl. They would not elaborate, saying the case was "very touchy."

Assistant Johnson County Attorney Dan Bray said he would begin legal paperwork to have the girl placed in the custody of juvenile court.

Police said the mother told them she would stay in Iowa City until at least Monday. She was not in custody, police said.

The mother and a male companion were spotted near the University of Iowa by campus security officers, who had been given a description of their vehicle.

Police would not say whether the mother's name was Tammy, as the girl had told a police captain. Nor would they say where the couple was from other than to say the woman and her companion were not residents of Iowa City.

Before the mother was found, Strand had tried to determine where the girl was from and find out about her parents, but without much luck.

"I sat her on my knee and we started talking. The first thing she said was 'Give me a Coke.'

"She's a bright little kid. She tells me she's 3 years old. She's about the same size as my 3-year-old (boy), so I guess she could be. She's a lot more mature than my 3-year-old is."

Police said the name "Bobby Jo Gilson" was written on the inside of a book in a box of toys.

She said the man with her mother is named Ricky, but Strand said the relationship between Ricky and the mother wasn't clear.

"She knows she was left," Strand said. "She said that they weren't coming back for her, she knew that much. She really didn't want to leave the church because she thought the kids were going to come to Sunday school with her.

"But I don't think she really cared that her mother wasn't coming back for her."

Bobby Jo told Strand she had been riding in a small truck that was pulling what Strand believes was a small camping trailer.

"She said they had been staying in truck stops, but judging from the bug bites on her legs and the trailer...I think probably they were staying in rest areas."

He said Bobby Jo mentioned Kansas City once but later said her parents didn't live there.

Strand said the girl was dirty and not wearing underwear when found, but appeared to be well-fed, weighing between 25 and 35 pounds.

Her neck-length, straight brown hair was combed. An examination at University Hospitals here indicated she was in good health.

Strand said another examination was being made to determine whether Bobby Jo had been abused.

In the meantime, Bobby Jo is staying with a foster parent.

"I just think it's horrible, myself," Strand said. "There's so many people that want kids, you know, and she doesn't even have to sell herself. She has such a personality, they wouldn't have had any trouble getting rid of her without dumping her like this...with the chance of some weirdo getting ahold of her."

Former Congressional page sticks by his original story

By JANET STAIHAR

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former congressional page, questioned by a House committee's investigators about allegations of homosexual activity on Capitol Hill, is sticking by his story that he had sex with three congressmen.

But Leroy Williams Jr., 18, of Little Rock, Ark., also acknowledged Friday that he had flunked a FBI lie detector test on his charges.

Williams testified again today at a closed-door meeting of the House ethics committee staff, starting at midday.

On Friday, Williams told the investigators that he engaged in homosexual sex with three lawmakers and arranged for a similiar liaison between a senator and a male prostitute, his attorney, Bob Scott, said.

The House ethics committee and the Justice Department, separately, are looking into allegations of sexual misconduct and drug use by some members of Congress.

Meanwhile, the Washington Post, in today's editions, quoted Williams as saying in interviews with the newspaper that he had lied about some details of his story.

IN REMARKS to the news media Friday, Williams defended his credibility despite his failure on a FBI lie detector test.

The youth said the FBI examiner who administered the test acted as if he were "persecuting a perpetrator instead of asking questions of a victim."

He accused the examiner of being biased, saying: "From the start, he was not very objective about the test. His test was pointed toward, 'was I condemning the congressmen?' ... He was just not very objective at all."

Williams' meeting with House ethics investigators Friday was conducted in an out-of-the-way building near Capitol Hill. Attempts by the committee staff to keep the meeting secret were foiled when Williams earlier told reporters that he planned to appear before the investigatory staff.

The committee has not yet met formally, relying instead on its investigators to lay the groundwork. The first meeting of the full committee is scheduled for next Wedneday.

As Williams emerged from the meeting Friday, Scott described his client's condition as "tired, very tired."

ASKED IF he thinks the investigators believe Williams' allegations, the attorney replied: "There isn't any way in the world I can tell you what the investigators believe."

But he said, "I am convinced of the objectivity of the investigation."

The Post said Williams admitted to it that he had sex with one of the congressmen only twice, instead of three times as he had said elsewhere.

"Some of the things I said were said in order to make sure the heat was put on them, not me. It was a self-protective measure," Williams was quoted as saying.

The newspaper said two of the three congressmen and the senator said Williams' assertions were totally untrue. A similar denial came from a congressional aide for whom Williams said he arranged sex with a prostitute. The third congressman could not be reached. None of their names was published.

Responding to a reporter's question about whether Williams would take another lie-detector test, Scott said, "We have no objection to any test, any time — by practically anybody."

He also said Williams was willing to testify under oath before any forum without a promise of immunity from prosecution.

ACCORDING TO THE attorney, all three alleged liaisons between congressmen and Williams occurred between last September and November. Williams left Capitol Hill last January.

Asked if Williams gave the investigators the four names, including the senator's, Scott replied: "There is nothing that is being withheld. The answer is yes to the four names."

In a separate probe into cocaine use on Capitol Hill, Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., who allowed his office to be used by undercover drug investigators, said Friday he possesses the actual investigative report that relates details about those members who used drugs.

"I'm going to dump this thing in their lap," Dornan said of a meeting that the House Select Commitee on Narcotics Abuse and Control has set for next Tuesday to determine whether it should conduct its own hearing into cocaine use by congressmen.

Dornan, in a letter to the narcotics committee of which he is a member, contended that investigators told him that six House members, one senator and two former House members have had allegations of cocaine use made against them.

Organization vows to lobby to swing policy toward Arabs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A national oganization of Arab-Americans vowed Saturday to mount an intense lobbying campaign to swing U.S. foreign policy away from Israel and toward the Arab world.

Robert Joseph, a Pittsburg businessman and president of the national Association of Arab Americans, said the group opposes the suggestion that American troops be sent to Lebanon to help the withdrawal of armed members of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"We do not want the lives of American boys on the line for Israeli aggression," Joseph said at a news conference at the Army-Navy Club here.

Joseph said the Arab-American community has been politicized by Israel's invasion of Lebanon and contended that Israel's image in the United States has "taken a sharp nose dive."

Joseph said his group will attempt to bring pressure to bear on members of Congress and appeal for a cutoff of all U.S. military aid to Israel.

"We're convinced that maybe some politicans will change because of this," Joseph said.

He said his group has chapters in 20 American cities and members in all 50 states and claimed to represent between 2-3 million Americans of Arab ancestry.

"It is our time to say 'never again,' " Joseph said. "It is time for a reappraisal of our relations with Israel. We are hopeful for change in the Senate of the United States. And we mean business."

Capitol Page School to undergo changes

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The prestigious school consists of a mere six classrooms, a multi-purpose room and a principal's office. Lockers clutter the hallways. Photos of former guest speakers, such as Hubert Humphrey, dress the wall of one room.

Desks bear carved messages like "Smoke Mexican Marijuana," "Get High" and "VH is a Butch."

Among those who have attended are two former congressmen whose political careers were sunk by sex charges involving homosexuality.

This is the Capitol Page School, where youngsters from across the country take such subjects as mathematics, foreign languages, and social studies before getting their first lessons in politics as House and Senate messengers.

And according to recent allegations, those legislative lessons have included participation by some pages in homosexual and drug activities with members of Congress.

A former page, Leroy Williams, 18, is the chief accuser, and at least one other page, Jeff Opp, is known to have told law enforcement officers of sex and drug parties involving pages and congressmen.

Officials say there will undoubtedly be changes in the way congressional pages are supervised, regardless of the outcome of current investigations into the homosexual and drug charges.

"After this is all over with, there's still going to be some kind of page system," said House doorkeeper James T. Molloy, whose office oversees House pages.

Legislation calling for better supervision already has been proposed.

Passing grades must be maintained. Those pages employed for less than a full semester often bring school work from their home district.

All female pages must ride home when Congress adjourns after dark. When the House is in session, uniformed blue suits for men and dark skirts for women are required.

Pages cannot display "rowdiness on public streets or in private residences," and cannot use alcohol, drugs or tobacco — on or off duty.

The students participate in activities typical of any high school: student council, class officers, assemblies, black-tie graduation dances, class trips, report cards and a school newspaper.

After classes, pages usually work a six-hour shift in Congress. But the rest of the day — and night — they're basically on their own.

"From 6 at night until 6 in the morning, there's not the same kind of supervision, unfortunately," said Molloy, who has been asking for a permanent page dormitory for years.

"These kids are at a beautiful age. You'd like to see them better supervised," Molloy said. "I'm being very, very protective of these kids. These aren't mature adults."

The school has been shut for summer recess for several weeks. Principal John C. Hoffman talked briefly last week about the school and his disbelief of the sex and drug allegations, but by last Friday his office said he was "on leave."

The wall of silence has gotten so high that copies of the school yearbooks are now unavailable, suddenly considered "private and confidential."

When Vice President George Bush finished jogging at a high school track during his visit to Seattle Friday, 11-year-old Danny Martin asked, "Can I have your shirt?" Bush said, "Yeah, sure," took off the shirt and put on a warmup jacket. "Thought I was kidding, didn't you," Bush said, handing over the shirt and shaking hands with the youngster.

Hershey bars' price reaches 30 cents

By RANDOLPH E. BUCKLIN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The maker of Hershey bars has discovered it's hard to resist pressure to raise prices.

Between last fall and this spring, executives at Hershey Foods Inc. unsuccessfully struggled to maintain the price of their candy bars at 25 cents while M&M Mars Co. was charging 30 cents.

Management at No. 2 Hershey believed consumers would shy away from paying 30 cents for Mars' candy bars, which include Three Musketeers, Snickers and M&Ms.

After six months of holding the line, Hershey abandoned its low-price market strategy in March, announcing a price increase to 30 cents and an average increase in the size of its candy bars of 28 percent.

The new Hershey products are now reaching supermarkets and other retailers in the candy distribution chain.

Hershey's move to the 30-cent price marks a victory for recent market strategy by long-time archrival Mars. Hershey apparently went along with 30-cent prices for two major reasons: Its battle plan was frustrated by retailers who decided to charge 30 cents across the board for candy bars, and it was losing market share to Mars anyway, higher prices or no.

This most recent episode in the continuing battle for the allegiance of America's sweet tooth is a year and a half old. It began when Mars, which was losing market share to Hershey, boldly broke with candy industry tradition by increasing candy-bar size without raising prices.

"The move caught the whole industry off guard," says Janet Kitt, who watches the candy business for American Consulting in Chicago. "All of a sudden Mars was out there with bigger bars."

Smelling a bargain, candy buyers turned to the bigger Mars products and the company's market share went from 37.8 percent in July 1980 to 41.1 percent in July 1981.

Hershey lost market share, dropping from 27.3 percent to 26.9 percent. Two other major candy manufacturers also lost share to Mars. Peter Paul, maker of Mounds and Almond Joy, dropped from 7.6 percent to 6.7 percent, and Nabisco Brands, maker of Baby Ruth, Butterfinger and Junior Mints, fell from 8.2 percent to 7.3 percent.

In the $5-billion-a-year candy business, one percentage point of market share represents $50 million in sales.

About nine months ago, Mars upped its prices from 25 cents to 30 cents, a move that should have been to Hershey's advantage. Although it had smaller bars, Hershey also had lower prices and was selling its candy at about the same cost per ounce. Hershey decided to stand and fight at 25 cents.

But Hershey's strategy, backed by pointed advertising, was scuttled by most candy retailers who refused to deal with two prices, going with the higher one.

"The mom-and-pop store doesn't want to bother with, 'Is this bar Hershey's,' or, 'Is this bar Mars,' " Kitt said. "It was very difficult for (Hershey) to maintain the 25-cent price at retail level."

Continuing drops in cocoa prices helped Mars decide to make bigger bars for the same price. Cocoa powder accounts for about 40 percent of all ingredients used by U.S. candy manufacturers; raw materials make up 48 percent of candy production costs.

Mars is likely to have traded some short-run profits for gains in sales, but as the prices of sugar and cocoa declined substantially over the past 18 months, Mars' gamble probably paid off handsomely.

It's impossible to tell exactly how successful Mars has been, because the Fairfax, Va., company is privately owned. Sales are estimated at more than $3 billion, of which 40 percent is candy.

Three jailed for passing travelers checks

SEATTLE (AP) — Two men and a woman were jailed in lieu of $50,000 bail each after allegedly passing French travelers checks at a rate of one franc to the dollar. A franc is worth only 14 cents.

The three arrested Thursday were booked for investigation of larceny and possession of stolen property. They were identified as Joseph Eugene Endal, 49, Eugene Williams, 34, and Kathleen Marie Smith, 32.

Gary Flynn of the Seattle Police Department said those arrested admitted cashing 6,000 travelers checks, each made out for 50 or 100 francs. They allegedly got convenience store clerks and filling station operators to give them par value for the franc.

Aliens may have returned, says expert

HOUSTON (AP) — A Rice University economist says up to 40 percent of the illegal aliens deported after a series of raids in April may have been back at work in the United States within six weeks.

Immigration and Naturalization Service agents arrested 5,400 undocumented workers in Houston, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, Chicago, Detroit, Denver and Newark, N.J., during the week-long "Project Jobs" operation.

Donald L. Huddle, a specialist in Latin American relations who is studying the operation, estimated Friday that at least 20 percent and possibly as many as 40 percent of the aliens were back in the country within six weeks.

Man absolved in infant daughter's death

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The Navy has decided not to court-martial Chief Petty Officer Carl D. Jones, whose 16-month-old daughter died of heat exposure after being left in a locked car for at least six hours.

"The death of his daughter, Lorelei, has impacted severly on Chief Jones and his family," said Capt. William L. Dwyer, commander of Atlantic Fleet Aviation Special Operations Training Group. "When one considers the reason for imposing punishment, the only one that would apply in this case is retribution.

Dwyer's decision Friday relieves Jones of further legal proceedings in the case. The Navy had brought charges of involuntary manslaughter and negligent homicide against Jones after the baby was found dead May 26 in the family car, which had been parked in a lot at Jacksonville Naval Air Station.

Photographer's skeleton found

SEATTLE (AP) — The writer-photographer whose skeleton was found near Mount St. Helens last week was fascinated by the volcano as it smoked and rumbled before its big eruption two years ago, his mother says.

"He got up on Saturday morning — that would be May 17 — and he said, 'Mom, I've got a new camera, and I want to try it out,'" Ann Schmidt said.

"I said, 'Now, Paul, I don't want you to do any mountain climbing. You could fall into a crevasse and just lie there and nobody would find you.' And he said, 'Aw, mom, you worry too much.'"

Paul Schmidt, 29, a free-lance photographer and writer from Silverton, Ore., was one of the missing after the volcano erupted May 18, 1980.

His remains were found Thursday by a logging foreman on the edge of the blast zone, four miles from the mountain.

Flight 759's 'black box' found

NEW YORK (AP) — The "black boxes" or recorders recovered from the smoking wreckage of a Pan Am jet in New Orleans are little bigger than shoe boxes, cost more than $10,000 each and have survived to provide the cause of some of the most baffling airplane crashes.

"They're absolutely essential" to determining the cause of a crash, says Carol Roberts, chief of laboratory services for the National Transportation Safety Board in Washington.

In New Orleans on Saturday, investigators waited for the tail section of the Pan American World Airways jet that crashed Friday to cool so they could retrieve the flight data and cockpit voice recorders. Then they sent them — unopened — to the NTSB laboratory where they will be analyzed in the coming weeks.

NTSB spokesman Brad Dunbar said the flight data recorder was "charred on the outside, but it is designed to withstand tremendous heat. We're optimistic we can read them both out."

The recorders, virtually indestructible metal agents riding on every U.S. airline flight, collect vital information on the plane's movements and the pilot's actions.

"Sometimes you'll open one of them up and the answer will be glaring at you," Ms. Roberts says. "You know, right there: the cause of the crash."

Ms. Roberts studied flight and data recorders fished from the Potomac after an Air Florida jet crashed into the icy water in Washington, D.C., last January, killing 74 of 79 on board.

Most air disasters leave few clues. Often, as in the New Orleans crash Friday, there are no survivors. Fire or water can destroy aircraft parts that might provide a hint. The boxes are the first — and sometimes only — hope.

When an American Airlines DC-10 crashed in Chicago in 1979, killing all 271 people on board and two on the ground, the data recorder later told investigators that the plane had stalled after losing one engine.

The 25-pound metal boxes, actually a box within a box, can withstand temperatures as low as 67 degrees below zero, as high as 2,012 degrees for an hour and 437 degrees for three days. They can withstand a shock with a strength of six times the force of gravity.

Although they are often called "black boxes," most are painted orange to make them easier to find. There are two on each plane, sitting side by side in the tail section and hooked up to the plane's electrical system. No plane is allowed to take off if its control panel indicates one of the recorders is malfunctioning.

One houses a magnetic tape that records sounds in the cockpit. It records over itself every 30 minutes and has been required equipment in commercial aircraft since 1967.

The other box houses a flight data recorder which, depending on its sophistication, keeps between 25 and 150 hours of information about the plane's altitude, speed and 18 other factors. Data rcorders have been required since 1958.

Weather blamed for fatal air crashes

By The Associated Press

The crash of a Pan American World Airways 727 jetliner near New Orleans during a thunderstorm was the third fatal accident in the United States this year involving a large commercial carrier, and all took place in bad weather.

Federal Aviation Administration officials said all 145 people aboard the plane were killed Friday. The jet crashed into a residential neighborhood, and there were more fatalities on the ground.

It was raining at the time of the crash, shortly after Pan Am Flight 759 took off from New Orleans International Airport, and a heavy thunderstorm was reported in the area.

The other two major commercial crashes in the United States this year took place 10 days apart in icy January weather.

On Jan. 10, an Air Florida Boeing 737 took off from Washington's National Airport in a snowstorm, failed to gain altitude and slammed into the 14th Street Bridge over the Potomac River. Seventy-eight people were killed, including four motorists on the bridge. Five people aboard the plane survived.

At National Transportation and Safety Board hearings on the crash, testimony focused on whether the wings had been properly de-iced before takeoff. American Airlines crews who serviced the plane said the last de-icing took place 50 minutes before takeoff.

Despite the plane's inability to climb, tests showed "no evidence...to indicate there were any structural or mechanical failures," chief investigator Rudolf Kapustin said.

The board has said its report on the crash will be completed in August.

Ice also played a role Jan. 23 at Boston's Logan International Airport, when a World Airways DC-10 with 210 people aboard landed on an icy runway and slid into Boston Harbor.

The cockpit snapped off and two passengers slipped under the chilly waters and are presumed dead. Their bodies were never found.

Voice tapes released by the FAA indicated several pilots reported the runways were in poor condition, but controllers did not relay the information to the World Airways crew as it prepared to land.

A storm had dumped 3 to 4 inches of snow in the Boston area the day of the crash before it turned into rain, freezing rain and sleet in late afternoon.

Worst airplane crashes listed

By The Associated Press

Here is a list of the worst air crashes worldwide:

—1. March 1977: 582 killed in a collision of two Boeing 747s operated by Pan American and KLM at the airport on Tenerife in Spain's Canary Islands.

—2. March 1974: 346 killed in the worst single-plane accident. A Turkish DC-10 crashed 26 miles northeast of Paris.

Some victims headed for fun, others for funerals

By SCOTT KRAFT

Many were headed for a relaxing weekend on the Las Vegas Strip — cool swimming pools, casinos and showrooms. Some were en route to summer vacation spots or returning home.

At least 12 were going to pay last respects to loved ones.

Two sisters and their three children, stranded in Louisiana by car trouble, decided to fly to San Diego for their brother's funeral on Saturday. He had been killed in a motorcycle accident.

Seven members of another family from Baton Rouge, La., were headed for the funeral of an uncle in Las Vegas, Nev.

An engaged couple was returning to San Diego after a vacation in Panama. Eleven people from Uruguay were to be met by a Las Vegas tour guide and taken to a dinner show.

For the 145 passengers on Pan Am Flight 759, bound for San Diego from Miami and New Orleans with a stop in Las Vegas, there were dozens of these stories.

And they all ended the same way: a takeoff in a thunderstorm, a crash in a New Orleans suburb. No one survived.

"We had an airplane full of people coming to Las Vegas to have a good time," said Keith Braden, Pan Am's director for Nevada.

In El Cajon, Calif., the Cunnings family was driving to the mortuary to see the body of Lawrence Cunnings, a 28-year-old father of four killed in a motorcycle-truck accident on his way to work Wednesday. The entourage included Lawrence's widow and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Cunnings, of Howell, Mich.

Lew Daves, the funeral home director, had to tell them that two of Lawrence's sisters, Judith Cunnings and Patricia Hartford, and the women's three small children, had perished in the Pan Am crash.

"We had quite a trauma," Daves said Saturday. When they heard the news, the mother who had lost three children and three grandchildren within three days suffered a mild heart attack, he said.

"And a neighbor friend suffered a near fatal heart attack," he said.

"It's just about all we can do to cope with it ourselves," Daves said. The mother was treated by a doctor and not hospitalized. The neighbor was taken to a hospital.

The two sisters and their children had been visiting friends in Florida when they heard of their brother's death and had rented a car to drive across the country for the funeral. But the car failed on them Friday and a family friend in Howell allowed them to use her credit card number to buy plane tickets to San Diego. A few hours after she talked to the two sisters, she heard the news on the radio and phoned the funeral home.

Leslie Dartez had marked her 20th birthday with friends and relatives on the Mississippi Gulf Coast, and was returning home to Las Vegas on Pan Am's flight. Her brother's girlfriend had planned to accompany her, but decided to take another flight instead.

Dawn Niehuus, 22, and her fiance, Bob Mathews, 25, were returning from Panama, a graduation present for the bride-to-be from her fiance. They had been visiting Mathews' father.

The passenger list included people from France, Switzerland, Hong Kong and Uruguay.

Richard Purcell, 49, had a 90-day ticket allowing him to travel on any Pan Am flights in the United States. He had been to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, New Jersey and Michigan and was headed for Las Vegas to visit a friend. He panned to fly on to Los Angeles.

Purcell was a teacher and director of a private school in Puerto La Cruz, Venezuela. He had lived in Venezuela for 16 years.

"He had worked real hard last summer and this summer he decided to come up and have a good vacation, have a nice summer for a change," said Eva Deering, a sister in Dallas.

Donald E. Fitzgerald Jr., who says he's known as "Lucky," had just kissed his grandmother, three uncles and three aunts goodbye and bade them "have a safe trip," and was driving back home when he heard the news. The group was en route to attend a funeral for Donald's father in Las Vegas.

"I didn't try to go back," he said. "I realized there was nothing I could do."

Baby girl survives 'liner crash

KENNER, La. (AP) — It was a grim search in a once-quiet neighborhood. Workers uncovered body after body.

Then, someone yelled for joy.

"We've got a survivor," the voice said.

And for a couple of minutes Friday night, faces softened.

There was one tiny person breathing underneath the wreckage — an 18-month-old girl, listed Saturday in good condition at a local hospital.

Melissa Trahan, red from crying and wearing only a diaper and rubber pants, was found more than two hours after the crash of a Pan Am 727 in a residential area.

Her only apparent injuries were burns on her feet, but she was being kept at East Jefferson General Hospital for observation, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The girl was found by sheriff's deputy Gerald Hibbs, who said he was digging through debris when he found what appeared to be a mattress, "then I saw it going up and down."

"I pulled it over and I saw the baby lying there," he said. "I couldn't believe it. I said, 'Jesus, it's alive.'"

"I think everybody was convinced at that point that we wouldn't find anyone alive," said Mark Larkin, a civil defense worker.

"It was a really good feeling."

Gabe Trahan, Melissa's father, said his wife, Melanie, and daughter Bridget, 4, were killed.

Chicago gets ready for new archbishop

By T. LEE HUGHES

CHICAGO (AP) — Roman Catholics in Chicago will welcome their new archbishop, Joseph L. Bernardin, "with one voice and with one heart," the administrator of the nation's largest archdiocese said today.

"It is a joy to give thanks to God today for the gift of our new shepherd," said the Very Rev. John R. Keating, who was named temporary administrator of the archdiocese after the death of Cardinal John P. Cody.

Keating was joined in a Mass at Holy Name Cathedral by the archdiocese's two auxiliary bishops, Nevin W. Hayes and Alfred L. Abramowicz.

Pope John Paul II named Bernardin, who had been archbishop of Cincinnati, as the new head of the Chicago archdiocese, succeeding Cody, who died April 25 at age 74.

Keating opened the Mass by praying to God to "help your chosen servant Joseph to watch over your flock."

In a brief homily moments later, Keating said, "We look forward to the joy of receiving him as our teacher who affirms our faith...as our leader, who guides our steps toward eternal life."

Peter Foote, spokesman for the archdiocese, said Keating learned of the appointment less than 24 hours ago. He said the next step would be for Bernardin to present his credentials to the archdiocese and that "traditionally in the past, it's been a matter of weeks" before this happened.

A federal grand jury recently closed, without indictments, an investigation into whether Cody diverted up to $1 million in church money to a woman who was his lifelong friend and a cousin by marriage. Both Cody and the woman, Helen Dolan Wilson, denied any wrongdoing.

The Rev. Andrew M. Greeley, a well-known Chicago priest, was quoted last year in the Chicago Lawyer, a legal publication, as allegedly plotting to "get him (Bernardin) to become archbishop of Chicago" and to "get rid of John Patrick Cody" by turning "an investigative reporter loose on the archdiocese."

Bernardin, 54, responded last September to the article, saying, "such accounts are fantasies and there is no truth to them."

Asked whether it was ironic that Greeley's reported choice was named to take Cody's place, Foote responded that "the more important question" is Bernardin's accomplishments. He said of Bernardin, "An individual of that stature may have many admirers."

Whether Bernardin will address calls by Catholic organizations for more openness in church finances is a question which "should be reserved for the new archbishop when he comes to Chicago," Foote said.

The Chicago archdiocese had been "one of the pioneers" in extensive disclosure of church financial affairs, he said.

Official tries to comfort MIA families

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Defense Intelligence Agency official tried Saturday to reassure families of U.S. servicemen missing in Indochina that the agency will use whatever resources are necessary to investigate reported sightings of Americans still being held prisoner.

"It is our conviction that each report will be given a very thorough examination, a very thorough analysis," said Air Force Lt. Col. Jack Kennedy.

Speaking at the 13th annual meeting of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, Kennedy declared: "On this particular issue, I can assure you that I have no fiscal constraints."

He added that "the Defense Intelligence Agency is dedicated to solving the problem...and by God we will."

Kennedy's remarks echoed assurances Friday by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who said the fate of 2,500 Americans still unaccounted for in the Indochina conflict remains "a matter of the highest national priority."

Weinberger said the Reagan administration is "proceeding on the assumption that some Americans are still alive and still being held." During a Pentagon ceremony, he noted that there have been "over 400 first-hand sightings," many of them by refugees who claimed to have seen Americans held at various camps within Vietnam and Laos.

At Saturday's session, Kennedy was asked why the agency has not yet used its massive files of refugee reports and other intelligence data to come out publicly with an announcement about specific Americans being held prisoner in Southeast Asia.

Reagans spread gifts of Americana abroad

By DON McLEOD

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Great Britain's newest prince, William Arthur Philip Louis may have been born to the ermine and purple but the American portion of his ancestry is reflected in a Kentucky quilt for his crib.

The quilt was presented to the proud new parents, Prince Charles and Princess Diana, by President and Mrs. Reagan during the Reagan's recent visit to England.

Born on June 21, shortly after the Reagans' visit, Prince William is second in line to the throne behind his father. He would be the first British monarch ever with American blood — inherited from his mother's side of the family.

A gift from the Reagans, the country quilt fit for a prince reflects the first family's taste for fine Americana in the gifts they leave with their hosts on trips abroad.

Among the gifts distributed by the Reagans during their 10-day visit to Europe in June were other country quilts, fine sterling silver fashioned by the craftsmen of Colonial Williamsburg, Va., Wild West sculpture and momentos of James Audubon and the American birds he painted.

Prince William's quilt was hand-sewn in Kentucky. Its "Dutch Children Design" features images of little boys dressed in overalls with contrasting pockets and little girls in dresses and big bonnets, all appliqued over a green quilted background.

Danielle Mitterrand, wife of the president of France, also received a quilt from the Reagans, a red, white and blue fan-design that was pieced and quilted by hand in Pennsylvania. Hannelore Schmidt, wife of the West German chancellor, received a red "Lone Star" quilt fashioned in West Virginia.

The Williamsburg gifts were featured in the Reagan visit to France, a return of the visit of French President Francois Mitterrand to the restored colonial capital of Virginia last autumn for the Yorktown bicentennial celebration.

President Mitterrand was given a sterling silver and rosewood stationery box handmade by master silversmith Byron Whitehurst. It was inspired by an original silver inkstand made in 1794 and now in the Williamsburg collection.

The Mitterrand box is an exceptionally fine example of the "treasury" or "ambassadorial" style, descended from an inkstand first issued by the British treasury in 1686 and used by officials in England and America throughout the 18th century.

In addition to her Pennsylvania quilt, Mrs. Mitterrand received a delicate sterling silver box. This ladies "shell" box was patterned after a snuff box made in 1720 in London but now in the Williamsburg collection. The modern copy has Mrs. Reagan's signature engraved on the lid.

Mayor Jacques Chirac of Paris was given a paperweight and letter opener also inspired by pieces in the Williamsburg collection. Williamsburg officials call these "perhaps the most striking" of the 16 pieces in all they supplied the White House.

The silver paperweight is engraved with an early Great Seal of the United States based on a New England wafer iron. Dated about 1800, the seal shows only 16 stars. Both items feature Reagan's seal as well, and the paper weight is encased in a replica of a mahagony decanter stand made in England about 1760.

Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini of Italy received a pair of Williamsburg tankards, exact replicas of those made by Rhode Island silversmith Sanuel Casey in 1765 except for the addition of the presidential seal on each handle.

President Alessandro Pertini of Italy got the "Western" gift, a bronze sculpture called "Safe and Sound" that shows a rider on a horse rescuing a calf in a spring snow. It is by Harry Jackson, considered the foremost living sculptor of the American West.

Northern immigrants change Sun Belt

By DAN BALZ
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — When the northern and southern wings of the Presbyterian Church recently voted to reunite after more than a century of separation, one reason was the influence of northerners who have migrated to Texas.

When the Houston City Council recently put new restrictions on developers, the closest that Houston has come to zoning, it was also partly because of pressure from northerners who have moved to Texas.

And when graduates of Brooklyn's Tilden High School recently held a reunion in Dallas and had to turn away several hundred people for lack of space, that, too, was a sign of changes that have come because of migration from the North.

From religion to politics to cultural values, northern immigrants have begun to make lasting changes on the Sun Belt. Many have assumed leadership positions in local politics, neighborhood organizations, churches and the arts, and many are questioning the way Texans have traditionally done business. Their numbers are now significant enough to make them a force when they choose to exert themselves.

"We look at things differently," said Don Callenius, who came to Texas when the Boy Scouts of America moved their national headquarters from New Brunswick, N.J., to Dallas three years ago.

BUT IT is clear from conversations with many of these newcomers that living in the Sun Belt has changed them as well. They have adapted to a slower pace and to a style of living oriented to the outdoors. Many of them say that they are more involved in their churches than they were before coming to Texas and that they have become more conservative in their political views.

In the summer of 1980, Ric Robinson was on strike for the second time in eight years in northern Indiana when he decided to come here. Along with his brother-in-law, Robinson came to Dallas, camped by a lake and soon found a job. Today he is an established Texan — and vehemently opposed to labor unions.

"Here, if you shine, you shine," he said recently. "I hope unions don't come to Texas. I feel no desire to again be a union member."

Together with native Texans and immigrants from other nations, the northern migrants like Robinson and Callenius are forging a new regional style, neither northern nor southern nor particularly western. If anything, it may be an indicator of tomorrow's American center.

"In Texas, it's clear from voting patterns that the northerners are voting more conservative than back home and yet may be liberalizing the climate here," said Joseph R. Feagin, a sociology professor at the University of Texas.

If the United States is a melting pot, its hottest points today are in places like Dallas and Houston, and the effects of the northern migration are likely to be even more evident as this rapidly growing region continues to mature.

THE IMPACT of the migrants has created a backlash among the native Texans, and even some newcomers recognize that something significant is being lost through their arrival.

"The thing I really admired about Texas is something we're losing at a rapid rate, and unfortunately it's because of people like me. That's Texas pride," said John Steffens, who moved from Peoria, Ill., to a Dallas suburb in 1981.

Steffens isn't the only person to notice. A Dallas company considered running an advertising campaign with the theme of Texas pride, but found little enthusiasm for the idea with a group of residents it surveyed.

Texas immigrants may have embraced Texas chic with more fervor than the natives, but there is nothing lasting in their commitment to the styles and symbols that have been historically important to native Texans.

The "northerners" — and that word is used to describe the many Californians who have moved to Texas as well as immigrants from the East and Midwest — have come in successive waves: oil company managers, Boy Scout executives, airline pilots, teachers, advertising executives, computer programmers, and more recently unemployed carpenters, auto workers and steel workers.

After more than a decade of migration, population experts are still trying to understand the newcomers. "We don't have a good picture of who the migrants are," said Dudley Poston, director of the Population Research Center at the University of Texas at Austin.

THOSE WHO have studied the migration to the Sun Belt believe the first to come were predominantly conservatives. They helped establish the Republican Party in Texas and supported the 1978 election of Bill Clements as the state's first Republican governor since Reconstruction.

But their voting habits are not conventionally conservative, because it was with the support of many newcomers that Kathy Whitmire was elected mayor of Houston in November on a program that is fiscally conservative but socially liberal.

The latest wave of migration has brought Democrats: unemployed union workers from Michigan and Ohio and New York and elsewhere.

"The newest migrants are distinctly different," said Rick Ryan of the public opinion analysis firm of V. Lance Tarrance and Associates in Houston. "They're more pro-union, they're more pro-zoning, they're less imbued with Protestant ethic, and they're younger," he said.

Some have been swallowed up by their surroundings and have tried to capitalize on them. Ira Zack came from California about three years ago, opened a country-western nightclub and helped perpetuate Texas chic. But he is tiring of that now and said the most interesting thing to happen in his club recently was the standing ovation given to a group that sang "New York, New York."

Others are attempting to alter their new environment. John Larson came with the Boy Scouts in 1979, and the new landscape of suburban Dallas gave him the opportunity to organize a neighborhood association that he believes will affect local government. "They don't have a positive approach to their long-range planning," he said. "Those of us who come in with other expectations are a threat to the natives."

The two cultures have not been fully integrated, with suspicion on both sides. The migrants rave about the friendliness of native Texans, but say that hospitality goes only so far. "Where it gets real tough is when you get into the areas of religion, politics and race," one man said. "That's when the friendliness vanishes."

NEWCOMERS ALSO joke that it is difficult to find native Texans. In part that is because the migrants have settled in the newest suburbs. One of these Dallas enclaves, called Plano, grew more than 300 percent between 1970 and 1980, and most of the increase was because of people from out of state.

"We have few native Texans in our congregation," said the Rev. George Beimler of the First Presbyterian Church of Plano.

Beimler, who came from New York, said the major difference his congregation feels about being in Texas is the number of fundamentalist churches in the area. "When Jerry Falwell or Bailey Smith comes up, they don't like it," he said, referring to the leader of the Moral Majority and the Baptist minister who said that God does not hear the prayers of Jews.

Southern Baptist churches are the dominant denomination in Texas and are still growing, but so are denominations historically strongest in the North, such as Methodists, Lutherans, Catholics and Presbyterians.

The Rev. John Anderson of the First Presbyterian Church of Dallas serves as moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, the southern wing of the church. He says he can see the influence of the northern migration on the way his church is searching for his replacement.

"They're looking in all 50 states," he said. "Three years ago, they would have been looking only in Dixie."

ANDERSON AND OTHER Presbyterians also said that the influx of northerners to Texas helped move along the process of reunification of the church, which could be completed by next year. Texas is one of a number of states where the churches already belong to both wings and in which the Presbyteries, or governing bodies, are unified.

"I don't think the only thing that's influenced reunion is the northerners, but they've helped," Anderson said.

For some people, the migration to Texas has given them the chance to display openly political views they have long held. Jim Sproul is one. He and his wife left Boston for Dallas in 1980. A computer programmer and conservative Republican, Sproul is now a GOP precinct chairman in a Dallas suburb and pleased by his new environment.

Said Sproul of the advantages of his adopted home: "I've shoveled my last snow and fought my last Kennedy."

Algerians take $999 cab ride

HOUSTON (AP) — Yellow Cab Co. officials say they are investigating a report of a $999-ride taken by two Algerian tourists from Houston to the West Texas city of Odessa but so far have not found any file on such a trip.

"This is a weird one. How can people ride that far and not get a cab number?" said Freeman Rivers, supervisor of Yellow Cab drivers here.

Kheira and M'hamed Mahallem flew to Texas July 1 to visit Mrs. Mahallem's brother in Odessa. The couple, who spoke little English, thought the West Texas city was nearby, so they hailed a cab, told the driver where they wanted to go and settled back for the ride.

But they said the cab driver wasn't exactly sure where Odessa was, and drove there via Galveston and Dallas.

After arriving at the home of the couple's relatives 15 hours later, the driver demanded a fare of $999. After some negotiating, the Mahallems gave the driver $300 — every penny they had.

Rivers said Friday that a check of airport manifest records showed no entry for the out-of-town trip. Neither the Mahallems nor their relatives noticed the name of the cab company but recalled the vehicle was yellow.

Sonora woman wins $4.3 million from constructors

SONORA, Texas (AP) — A Sonora woman has won $4.3 million in a lawsuit filed after her husband was killed when a 250-pound rock blasted from a construction site smashed through a building and hit him.

A state district court jury made the award to Doris Taylor after deliberating for eight hours Friday. Mrs. Taylor had sought $5 million.

Her suit alleged that building contractor F.P. Ross Inc. of Houston was negligent by failing to hire a competent subcontractor, failing to properly supervise the subcontractor and failing to stop blasting when informed the blasting was dangerous.

Police rookies will be allowed to re-enter academy

HOUSTON (AP) — Two rookie policemen who repeatedly were recommended for firing have been allowed to resign from the force and re-enter the police academy.

Police Chief Lee P. Brown, who overruled the dismissal recommendations, asked Isaac Boney and Claire D. Phillips to resign Friday and promised they would be allowed to re-enter the academy Aug. 9.

Until then, they will remain on the payroll, working in traffic control and building security, Brown said.

Houston Police Officers Association President Bill Elkin called Brown's decision a "slap in the face."

"He may be the chief and can do what he wants with the program but letting these rookies back into the academy undermines the training officers," Elkins said.

Field training supervisors recommended in May that Boney and Phillips be fired because of their poor performances. Brown refused, saying the two men apparently had been mistreated.

On Friday, Brown ordered an audit of the training program, which focuses on operation guidelines, and demoted a field training officer accused of telling the two rookies that they would never have permanent spots on the 3,000-member force.

The department has an unwritten policy that any rookie who resigns during field training may re-enter the academy after a one-year waiting period.

Capt. L.D. Michna, the academy's training director, said he knew of no other rookies who were allowed to return to the academy before the waiting period had expired.

"It doesn't bother me if they get back in," Michna said. "They've already performed here once and they know what's expected of them. But I don't think Chief Brown is doing them much of a favor because the academy is one rough experience. Most police officers wouldn't go through it twice for love or money."

Boy Scouts to pay $10 million suit

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Boy Scouts of America have agreed to an out-of-court settlement in a $10 million damage suit filed after a 13-year-old boy was paralyzed from the waist down in a swimming accident during a scout camping trip.

Patrick McGlone, whose spinal cord was severed two years ago when he dived head-first over a waterfall into the Guadalupe River about 20 miles from Blanco, will get $4,000 a month for life, compounded at 3 percent annually. Actuarial tables say he will live another 59 years.

The settlement Friday also pays $250,000 over the next 25 years to the boy's mother, Susan Pollock, a member of the University of Texas nursing faculty.

Ms. Pollock said her son "has to be on a respirator almost 24 hours a day."

Coming home to Stanton brings good memories for all

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

STANTON — No matter how far a person wanders from the small town of his roots, the sense of belonging spawned by once having been other than a nameless face in the masses of humanity still surfaces upon return.

As several hundred persons "came home" to Stanton Saturday at the 49th annual Old Settlers Reunion, it was obvious the city still held that special place in its indefinable "soul" for each, and sharing this common bond lent a familial quality to the parade and games, get-togethers and barbecues.

"Hey, you 'member back there in '42?" went the conversation. "Or '32? Or just, way-back-when?"

It was a day for those old, long-submerged memories to surface, a day when acquaintances who had gone their separate ways decades before found that the passage of time and accumulation of vastly different worldly experiences had not dampened their friendships, only enhanced them.

Good goshamighty, haven't seen you in 20 years! Where ya livin' now? Did you hear about so-and-so? Yeah, sure miss the ol' place. You know, livin' the big city life's just not the same as bein' out here with all this sand.

And on and on went the sidewalk-talk.

A colorful parade brightened the streets Saturday morning, and by early afternoon the downtown sector awoke with the splatter of soon-to-be-fried eggs on city streets during the egg toss contest, the pop of sticky bubbles in the gum chewing event, and the squirt of brown juice in the tobacco spit-off. During the lull between the games of the afternoon and the barbecue-program that evening, persons could stroll through Stanton Community Center and hear ragtime piano, browse the "specials" displayed by downtown shops, join in on 40th and 50th high school class reunions or just mosey into the local barbershop and chew the fat for a spell.

The evening's activities took on the quality of a big family picnic, as lounge chairs and blankets were unfolded among the leafy elms of city park and everyone gathered for an old-fashioned barbecue and hoedown. While the odor of the catered beef, pinto beans and potato salad wafted across the grassy expanses, persons succumbed to nostalgia and re-lived the good old days as the music of a bygone era echoed nearby.

"Faded Love." "Cotton-Eyed Joe." "Jambalaya." The deft fingers of the members of the "No-Name Band" explored the music of the long-past with the dragging of horsehair bow across fiddle, the tremolo of a mandolin, bum-bum-bum of a base guitar, pluck of an unelectrified flattop.

The dull roar of thunder joined in occasionally, as in the western sky rose a V-shaped thunderhead of deepest indigo, its vaporous masses billowing, churning, constantly at war with itself.

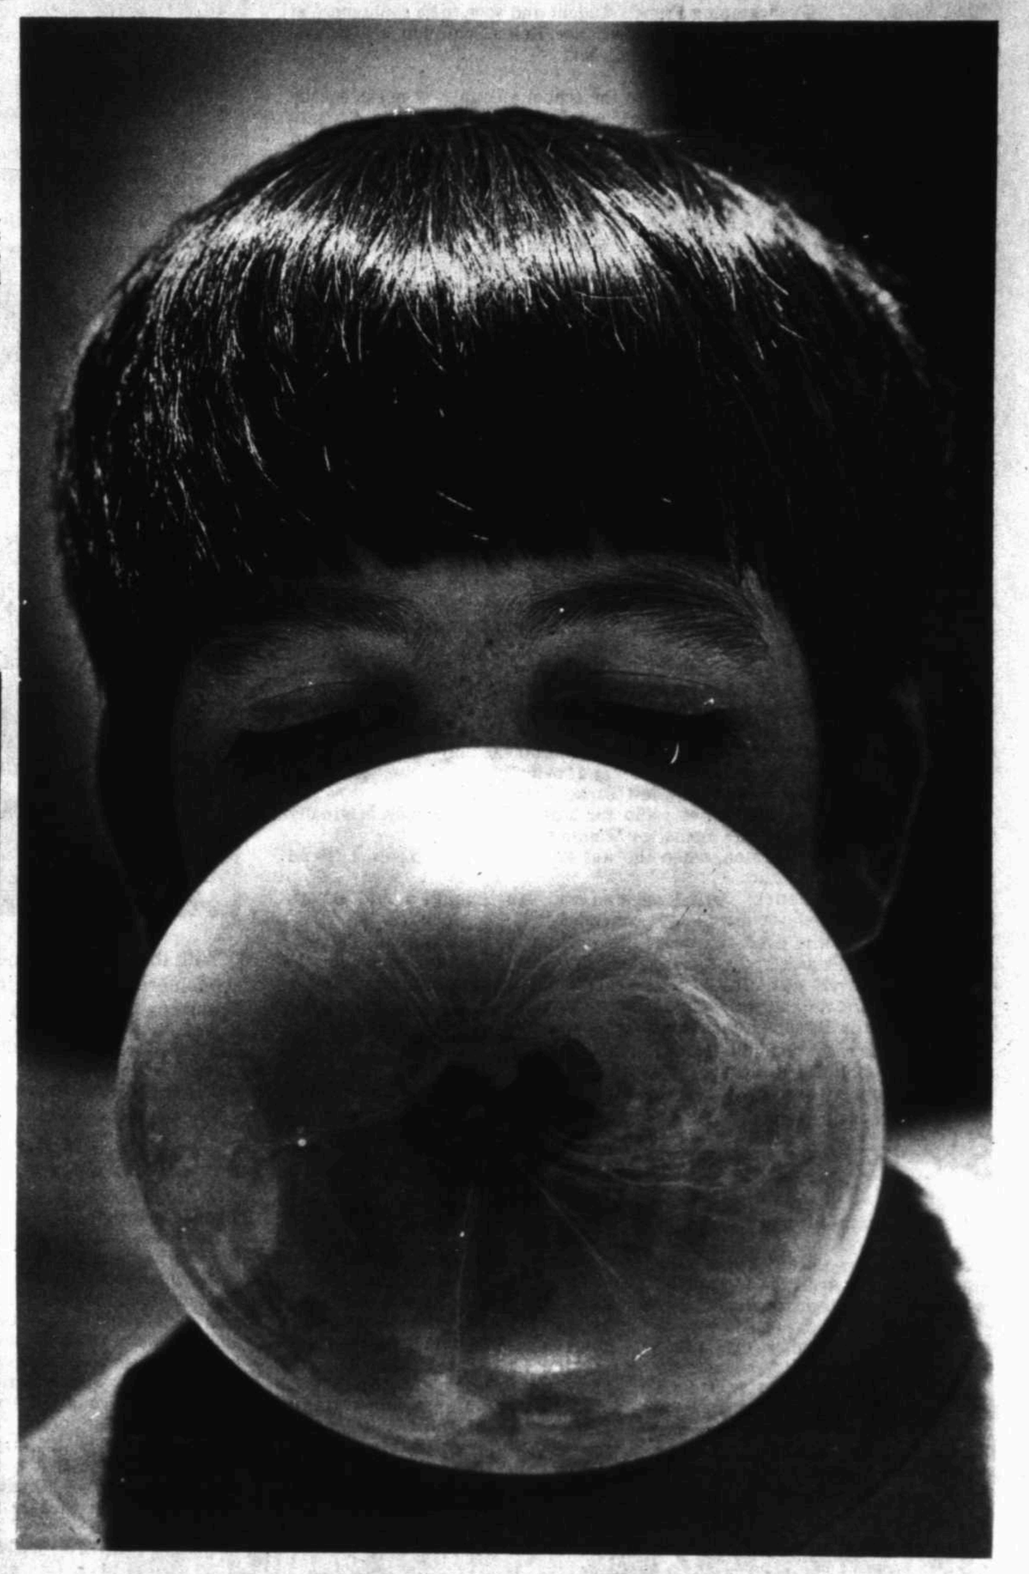
Staff Photos by Paul Gilbert

Re-living the good old days along the streets of Stanton Saturday during Old Settlers activities are, from left, Herbert Shipp, who came to the town in 1936; Sam Houston, a lifelong resident whose father was among the first settlers in 1886; and J.M. Payne, a late-comer, "only" having graced the town for 36 years.



The Old Settlers Reunion bubble-blowing contest was a blast for Shannon Donellson, as his face is almost hidden by a sticky orb that challenged the outer limits of Double Bubble and lung power.

Saga continues... maybe for a year

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The long, winding road to victory has ended in a detour for a new health service in Midland.

Three hospitals fought a year-long bureaucratic battle to persuade the state health agency that only their facility could provide the area with the best psychiatric, alcohol and drug dependency services available.

The Texas Health Facilities Commission made its decision July 2. But with it a motion for a rehearing will be filed by the loser, leaving the service in limbo — possibly for the next year or more.

—MIDLAND MEMORIAL HOSPITAL submitted an application to the THFC for a $3.4 million 50-bed chemical dependency facility to be built in northwest Midland.

—Parkview Hospital applied for a $500,000 conversion of its 60-bed existing general acute care hospital to a 60-bed psychiatric hospital with substance abuse services.

—West Plains, an Arlington Corporation, requested permission to construct a $4.1 million 60-bed psychiatric hospital with drug and/or alcohol abuse services to be located at Midland Regional Airport.

The THFC granted approval for two hospitals — MMH and West Plains — to construct their facilities. Parkview was denied on a 2-to-1 vote.

That vote has given Parkview officials hope.

Dick Liley, Parkview administrator, said American Medical Centers Inc, which owns the hospital, will file a motion with the THFC for a rehearing.

According to John Neal, THFC representative, Parkview has 15 days from July 2 to file for the motion.

"In the commission's opinion there is a need for either Parkview or West Plains — not both — but the law has left the door ajar," Neal said.

Neal said in the rehearing Parkview will ask the three-member commission to reverse its decision on West Plains.

Ten days from the filing of the rehearing, MMH and West Plains have the option to file written responses. The commission has 45 days to decide.

"It can go three different ways," Neal said.

THE COMMISSION CAN continue to deny Parkview's request, grant a rehearing and reverse its decision, or order a re-opening of the hearings with a hearing officer.

"The last one...this could last a day to a week, depending upon the commission...they can limit the issues brought forth. New evidence cannot be introduced," he said.

Parkview can appeal to the state in the Travis County Court only if the commission accepts the rehearing and then denies Parkview's application again. This could delay the final decision a year or more.

However, if the THFC reverses its decision, denying West Plains and accepting Parkview, West Plains has the option to go through the same process.

MMH and West Plains' officials said they will wait the duration of the 45 days before making any further plans.

"During this time we will not do any developmental work — seek funding. We will not attempt to pass a bond issue," said Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director.

"We will not do anything until we know what Parkview will do," said James Bingham, president of Southwest Health Inc., which will build West Plains. "We were planning to go through the same procedure if we had been denied. That was our fallback plan. When you spend $150,000 to $175,000 you take a close look and evaluate to see if you may have a shot and go for it."

Bingham added if the THFC stays with its original decision, West Plains would "shoot for a target (opening) date of January 1984, depending on the weather, availability of materials and possible litigation."

The 300 block of East Mississippi Avenue may soon be fenced off and closed to traffic if the city and a lawyer handling an estate case don't come to terms by the July 16 deadline set by the lawyer.

City may find it doesn't own one of its own streets

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

If a property issue between the city and a lawyer working on the estate left by a Midland couple can't be ironed out, motorists may soon find themselves confronted with "No Trespassing" signs on Mississippi Avenue between Edwards and Weatherford Streets.

"It's a mess," said attorney Bob Evans in commenting Saturday on the possibility of his closing the 300 block of Mississippi Avenue, which he contends doesn't belong to the city.

Signs already posted along the street say it will be closed Friday. Temporary barricades will be erected initially, according to Evans, and permanent barricades will take their place if the matter can't be resolved.

"We'll fence it off if necessary," he added. "The city has known about it for six or seven months, but we can't get them to take any action."

It seems the street actually belongs to the estate of the late L.H. and Gertrude Pittman, according to a land survey conducted during the process of settling the estate, and no record of the couple conveying an easement to the city can be found.

Mr. Pittman has been dead for several years and Mrs. Pittman died last year.

They owned the land on which the paved street sits for 30 or 40 years and apparently weren't aware they were paying taxes on a public thoroughfare.

"It amounts to the taking of property without due process," said Evans. "They should be compensated."

Evans says he has no idea how much the couple had paid in taxes and that he's asking the city to reconcile the matter "to see who owes whom what. They keep saying they're looking into it, but there's been no action."

City officials could not be reached for comment.

Shortwave learning enlivens languages

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Sitting at a desk against a wall in the classroom, Carol Adamson listens intently to the woman speaking fluent French. She looks up and with an apologetic smile admits, "I can only catch a few of the words."

Miss Adamson, 15, is a beginning French student and soon-to-be sophomore at Permian Basin High School. Her French instructor, Helen Eggleston, also is present in the room. The woman speaking French isn't.

She's in France.

But via the shortwave radio donated to the school a couple of weeks ago by John and Mary Cynthia Gunter, student and instructor alike may listen to not only live news broadcasts from different countries, but also to foreign political commentaries, quiz shows, commercials and music.

The frequencies that have been picked up during classes so far include Germany, Colombia, Nicaragua, China, Russia, Spain, France and Japan. Others can be picked up at night when the frequencies become much stronger, Mrs. Eggleston said. The radio, equipped with a recording device, allows her to tape broadcasts in the evening to play to her students the following day.

"I think it will help," Miss Adamson said. "You get to see the different ways other people talk, besides your teacher."

Mrs. Eggleston agreed, adding, "It's fun to listen to live broadcasts from all over the world. We use it instead of (basic language) tapes. Tapes are extremely boring and they are never up-to-date."

Besides hearing languages spoken fluently by, most likely, natives of that particular country, Mrs. Eggleston pointed out the political advantages as well.

"We can get other countries' points of view," she explained. "Midlanders tend to be limited in their outlook. It is an advantage to see the world as it really is. You get a more broad point of view."

According to Glen Walton, PBHS executive director, the shortwave radio offers students a more comprehensive type of learning experience.

"It is valuable in terms of students being able to listen to things live," he said. "It just makes it a little more real than just listening to some type of grammar or vocabulary drill."

When listening to news on different frequencies concerning the same subject, Walton noted it was interesting to "see the discrepancies" of the broadcasts in different countries.

Mrs. Eggleston said she did receive a few reports at night from the Falkland Islands. And with the daughter of another PBHS teacher living in Lebanon, foreign news broadcasts have been of particular interest.

During French news stories about Prince Charles, Princess Diana and the newborn Prince William of Wales, Miss Adamson said she only could pick out a few basic words such as "mother," "father," and "baby."

Mrs. Eggleston laughed. "But she's a fast learner," she said.

The idea of using a short wave radio for language proficiency originally stemmed from Mrs. Eggleston's memories, Walton said.

According to Mrs. Eggleston, when she was 19 and living in Japan, a friend had given her her first radio.

"I was always homesick," Mrs. Eggleston said, laughing. "I would always listen to (a station in) the country I had been in before."

Mrs. Eggleston, who lived "all over" the world, can speak Korean, Chinese, Japanese, Latin, French and German. Her radio was a constant companion in her foreign travels until she was 21 years old. Knowing she was moving back to the States, she shipped the radio on to Berkeley, Calif., before making one more trip to India. Disappointment awaited her when she returned to California.

"I turned the radio on and it spoke English," she remembered with a laugh. "I was just floored. It had always spoken Japanese."

Punching out a five-digit frequency, Miss Adamson found another French station. The sound of Olivia Newton-John's voice floated through the classroom.

"They play American songs," she said with a sly grin.

With the help of teacher Helen Eggleston, Carol Adamson, a 15-year-old sophomore-to-be at Permian Basin High School, dials in a station from France on the school's new shortwave radio.

State education board approves MISD suspension

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education Saturday voted 19 to 1 to uphold the Midland Independent School District in the suspension of a Robert E. Lee High School sophomore over a 1980 incident at a Halloween "spook house."

MISD trustees ordered that Lori Davis be suspended from Oct. 31, 1980, to Jan. 16, 1981. The suspension was appealed to the Texas Education Agency, with commissioner Raymon Bynum recommending that the suspension be upheld.

According to Bynum's written statement of the case, filed with the board members, Davis became involved in a struggle with choir teacher Marilyn Jones, who was dressed as a witch at the "spook house," kicking or kneeing Jones (who was taken to a hospital emergency room for treatment).

Davis' attorney contended that the incident was an accident resulting from excitement and that the school trustees had no power to expel Davis because the incident occurred off school property and that such a situation wasn't covered in rules regarding student behavior.

However, Bynum commented that the hearing held by TEA had resulted in testimony that "there had been a prior incident" resulting in "considerable friction" between Jones and Davis, and that while Davis had denied being in the spook house before the Oct. 30, 1980, incident, witnesses reported she was one of a group "who were orally reprimanded for defacing the premises."

Bynum also said that the argument that school officials lacked authority over the incident because it occurred off campus and after school hours was "without merit," and that to suggest that school policy would let a student "assault school officials so long as school boundaries are respected is patently unacceptable."

Virginia Currey of Arlington, the lone "no" vote at Saturday's meeting, argued the matter was "really ridiculous" and should never have come to the board, saying the education code has no rules "on how to behave in a spook house."

"I think it was a case of what I would classify as an accident," she said.

State board upholds teacher dismissals

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The State Board of Education on Saturday upheld the dismissals of two teachers — one who slapped a second-grader for laughing during the singing of "The Eyes of Texas" and one who cursed when he got excited at athletic events.

Mary Mathis, who had taught for more than 20 years, was fired by the Angleton Independent School District for slapping a boy who laughed during singing May 28, 1980. The laughter was prompted by another student who sang out a vulgar word.

The boy's babysitter complained to the school principal that the blow had left a mark on the boy's face, and an examination the next day verified there was a welt on his face.

In a brief submitted to State Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum, Ms. Mathis' lawyer recalled that Gen. George Patton had "impulsively slapped a hospitalized combat veteran and accused him of cowardice" yet Patton was only reprimanded — not discharged.

Bynum on May 7 said Ms. Mathis' action "represents a clear and present danger to the welfare and safety of the child," and he denied the teacher's appeal.

On Saturday the board upheld the commissioner's ruling 16-4, although board member Jim Hollingsworth of DeSoto said, "I don't think any irreparable harm was done to the child...I might have done the same thing myself."

Teacher-coach Jesse Johnson of the Karnack Independent School District lost his appeal from a Dec. 1, 1980, dismissal when the board voted to uphold another ruling by Bynum.

Johnson had been accused of using profanity, failing to pay school bills, leaving his classes unattended, making long-distance telephone calls on the school phone and of failing to turn in grade books.

Bynum's May 5 decision said Johnson "readily admits having used profanity during particularly excitable moments while coaching."

In support of his motion to overturn Bynum's ruling against the teacher, board member Don Cook of Mesquite said, "How many coaches do you know across the state of Texas who have used profanity during the heat of an athletic event?"

Ruff Ahders

Odessa lawyer has one-year TTLA term

AUSTIN — Ruff Ahders, an Odessa lawyer who practices civil and criminal trial law in state and federal courts in Midland, has been elected to a one-year term as a director of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association.

The board of directors is the TTLA's primary governing body. The association, which is made up of several thousand lawyers who largely represent consumers and individuals in legal matters, sets the policies for the state-wide legal specialty bar.

Ahders, 40, is son of Midland County Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders and his wife, Helen. He is a 1960 graduate of Midland High School and earned a bachelor of arts degree in political science from Stanford University in 1964 and the doctor of jurisprudence degree in 1968 from the University of Houston. He played both high school and collegiate football.

Ruff Ahders and his wife, Paula, are parents of two children, son Chase, 8, and daughter London, 5.

The new president of TTLA is Irving attorney John Collins, who pledged an increase in consumer safety efforts in 1982 and 1983.

"Most consumers are not in a position to find the hidden dangers in the complex devices now saturating the marketplace," Collins said. "The good old days of going to the store for a sack of flour and a poke of salt are long gone. Many of the toys we buy for our children, the food and pharmaceuticals we provide for our families, and the labor-saving tools we find in our home and work places have potentially disastrous consequences," he said.

"It is the trial lawyer's role to see that the public is protected from shoddy goods, poorly designed products and false and misleading advertising and warnings. Our goal of preventing injuries is best accomplished by increasing our emphasis on holding accountable those who design, manufacture and sell products."

DEATHS

Ethel Baillio

Services for Ethel Baillio, 61, of 2622 Franklin Ave., will be at 10 a.m. Monday in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Ho.e chapel, with burial in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Baillio died Friday afternoon in a Midland hospital after a lengthy illness.

She was born Oct. 23, 1920, in Spur and moved to Midland 22 years ago. She was a member of the Baptist Church.

DIRT, SQUIRT AND QUIRT

Pecan-tree damaging aphids appearing now

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Among the summer pecan pests, yellow aphids stand apart as a reliably present "bug" encountered in pecan production. Present in low numbers throughout the year, these "honeydew aphids" build to high populations in mid-summer most years. After feeding in large numbers for about two to three weeks, their population usually falls off just as quickly as it appeared. Although the actual severity of damage from this pest is widely debated, they can impair the normal level of leaf performance.

As the yellow aphid feeds on the undersides of leaves, "honeydew," or sugar water, is excreted by the pests. This stickly liquid falls down through the tree and is deposited on the upper leaf surface of leaves over which the aphids feed.

In more humid areas, this honeydew is perfect substrate for "sooty mold," a fungus that is ubiquitous in the environment. Under high humidity the fungus mold grows on the honeydew to form a dark-gray to black covering over the upper leaf surface. This effectively blocks the sunlight from the leaf, reducing photosynthesis. In dry West Texas this is normally not seen.

Defoliation does not usually result from yellow aphid feeding, although partial defoliation has been observed. Severe infestations ivisibly withdraw sufficient amounts of sugar to suggest that a significant reduction in pecan tissue growth and repair is occurring.

Leaves make food for all parts of the tree. Without the normal function of leaves, all other parts of the tree suffer. This means losses to both the current year's crop in the form of killing nuts, and to next year's crop in the form of reducted carbohydrates available for storage in roots, limbs and buds.

To determine the need to spray for yellow aphids, survey 10 leaves on each yard tree or five percent of the trees in an orchard. If an average of over 15 aphids per leaf is found, then you have an economic infestation that should be treated.

Homeowners may want to treat at lower levels than this because of honeydew dripping onto drieveways and parked vehicles. The honeydew can damage car paint.

A number of pesticides are labeled for yellow aphid control on pecans, including Zolone, Torak, Cygon, DeFend, Rebelate, Guthion, malathion, diazinon and disulfoton. Read all labels carefully for methods and rates of application, safety precautions, harvest and grazing restrictions and other limitations that apply to their use.

AGRICULTURE

Yellow aphids are attacked by several parasites and predators. The most effective in reducing aphid numbers are lady beetles and lacewing flies. Both larvae and aduits of these insects are predaceous on all species of aphids. Because high densities of these insects are helpful in keeping aphid populations down, they can be surveyed to assess their poulation levels and their potential effects on the aphid population.

DID YOU KNOW?

Okra, a popular southern vegetable, was introduced into the U.S. by the French colonists of Louisiana in the early 1700s. Okra is far less popular in other parts of the U.S. — people fail to appreciate it because they don't know how to use it.

Okra has become a very important commercial crop in certain localities in the South where thousands of tons of pods are grown for large soup companies. It is interesting to note that when ripe, okra seeds yield an edible oil that is equal to many cooking oils. In Mediterranean countries and the East, where edible oils are scarce, okra oil is no rarity.

In some countries, the ripe seeds of okra are often roasted and ground as a substitute for coffee. In Turkey, the leaves are used in preparing medicine to soothe and reduce inflammations of the joints.

White asked to review 'right to farm' legislation

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Dr. Robert Bernstein, Texas Commissioner of Health, has asked Texas Attorney General Mark White to rule on the effects of the so-called "right to farm" legislation passed by the 1981 Texas Legislature on the Texas Department of Health's authority to seek abatement nuisances.

The legislation limits nuisance actions which may be brought against agricultural operations and provides that actions can't be brought against operations which have been lawfully operating for a year or more.

The act also makes persons bringing such prohibited actions liable for the costs and expenses incurred by the agricultural operation in defending itself.

Bernstein said that the Texas Department of Health "gets after farmers from time to time — not usually individual farmers; usually larger outfits...about insecticides and one thing and another."

"There are not acute problems that I'm aware of," he said. "We just don't want to be in a position where we're violating the law."

Texas Tech to host Livestock Day

LUBBOCK — Livestock Day, which will focus on quarter horses, will be held Sept. 17 in the Texas Tech University Livestock Arena.

The event, heretofore tabbed Livestock and Money Symposium, is being sponsored by the American National CowBelles, American Quarter Horse, and the National Cattlemen's, National Wool Growers, Ranching Heritage, Texas Cattle Feeders, Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers and Texas Southwestern Cattle Raisers associations.

Livestock Day, which will begin at 10 a.m. on Sept. 17, will be the opening event for the National Golden Spur Award Weekend, Sept. 17 and 18. The spur award is given annually to the individual who has brought distinction and made notable contributions to the livestock and ranching industries. The 1982 spur award recipient will be J. Ernest Browning of the Mule Shoe Ranch near Willcox, Ariz.

'Ranch Management' roundup theme

DEL RIO — More than 100 of the ranching industry's experts and policymakers will share their expertise at the second annual International Ranchers Roundup (IRR) Aug. 10-12 here.

Keynote speakers will include Raymond D. Lett, executive assistant to U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block; Charles G. Scruggs, vice president and editor of Progressive Farmer magazine; Susan McBee, Texas state representative; Stan Parsons, Savory Grazing System consultant; Bob Bliss, Friona Industries representatives, and Terry Mitchell, Australian Department of Agriculture representative.

In addition to the talk sessions, a tour of Southwest Texas ranches will be on Aug. 9 and a tour of Mexican ranches will be conducted Aug. 13.

Registration deadline is July 15.

Ball, who has been involved in ASAE activities for more than 30 years, was founder and chairman of the ASAE public relations committee.

She'll get you there— wherever it is

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Leila Seal is one person who probably can make your tour to wherever you wish to travel more exciting than the last trip, even if you've not had a first.

"I can bluff a lot," she says, "but I don't lie."

That, if you've ever been to a foreign land or to an unfamiliar place on this continent, is the kind of person to have plan your trip.

Even before she became director of tours for Midland Travel Agency last year, Ms. Seal got her exposure in setting up tours by almost getting struck by God's lightning on a jet flight to New Orleans to behold the Egyptian King Tutankhamon (Tut) Exhibit in the late 1970s.

"It was absolutely hysterical," she says in setting up the drama of what she was about to disclose about her first staged tour of 40 Midland travelers. She was the Museum of the Southwest's public relations officer; before that, she was a housewife who did worlds of volunteer-type work.

Midlander in Profile

"Lightning hit the wing of the plane" in mid-flight. "We had the hell fire and damnation," she recalled, and knew from then on that "everything was going to be all right."

She was wrong.

JUST AS THE Midland tour group was preparing to return, a luggage truck rammed the jet and punched a hole in the aircraft. At that juncture, some from the King Tut tour group opted to catch another flight to Lubbock and hop on a bus to Midland; others decided to stay overnight.

Though the tour otherwise was "super," Ms. Seal in her zest- and jest-filled way resolved that, "if this is what tours are going to be like, I'm not going to take another one."

She did.

Though she's not yet a been-everywhere world traveler, Ms. Seal has taken tours across the United States, to Great Britain and The Continent, Alaska, Canada and Mexico. She is yet to take a group off on a fling to Hawaii, the Far East, Australia, Russia, the Middle East, South America or either Pole. But her time is coming.

She hasn't — yet — seriously proposed to set up a tour of the Falkland Islands, though someone — jokingly, she thinks — suggested a jet trip to the havoc-laden isles. "I can probably get you there," she responded, "but are you sure you want to go?"

Leila Seal's forte is getting you there — wherever you want to go on Earth — and not have you linger upon arrival. She's a director of tours for a travel agency.

SETTING UP a tour is a detailed chore: from making flights and bus connections throughout the trip to scheduling dinners, setting up tours within the big tour, sight-seeing, and arranging all sorts of accommodations, as well as trying to satiate every tour member's whim, craving and pleasure.

"I like people; I feel I get along affably with people," which, outside of knowing how to make everything seem to come off punctually and perfectly, is the benchmark of the consummate tour director.

"That is a very thin line you walk — being a tour director," she says. "All the responsibility is on your shoulders."

"You can be innovative."

The tour director's goal is making each traveler's trip enjoyable and pleasurable, though "no tour is going to go 100 percent the way it is supposed to."

"They can either be happy or totally miserable," Ms. Seal said of the travelers. "It's really a public relations situation."

IN PLANNING tours and coping with the unknown, Ms. Seal tries to "keep up on my reading" about other cultures.

"I'll go that extra mile for them; every girl in our travel agency does that. It's that extra mile that counts."

Ms. Seal's initiation to touring started at age 9 in the Western United States; she traveled with her grandparents, who were ranchers, in the summertime. "I got out of school, and they'd take me traveling. Not every place they took me I liked, but it's a wonderful experience for children."

"My grandmother (China Frances Baucum) was a real ol' Western character. Strong character. Lived to be 95 years old, and rode a horse almost up to the day she died." Her grandfather, Arthur Baucum, was the quiet type. "He was wonderful."

Ms. Seal came to Midland on Columbus Day in 1954, which, not incidentally, was the year her husband, Bill Seal, moved to Midland. "I met my husband when he came doodle-bugging through Utah." He was a geologist.

BEFORE THEIR arrival to Midland to stay for no more than six months instead of almost three decades now, the Seals had traveled the oilfield widely.

"We lived in every little West Texas town, because my husband was a doodle-bugger." Today, he's vice president of Teledyne Exploration Co. They are the parents of four children: Brad, a roughneck; Jeffrey, a telephone company management employee; Craig, a college senior; and Sally, a high school senior.

"I have a very thoughtful, considerate husband," who lets her roam while he stays home or at the office.

Ms. Seal views Midland people — her customers and friends — as "wonderful." And she notes that the travel business here is healthy.

"It has not slowed down with the economy. People are still touring for business and pleasure — fortunately."

Sewage, prisoner placement county agenda items

Two of Midland's and Odessa's more salient problems — sewage waters and pens for prisoners — are to be discussed Monday when the Midland County Commissioners' Court meets in the Commissioners' Courtroom on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

The meeting begins at 9 a.m.

Midland attorney Ted Kerr is to bring the commissioners into a discussion on the legal status of Monahans Draw, a creek which carries Odessa's effluent eastward and just south of Midland. Midland County has threatened to sue the city of Odessa for alleged damages to property and fresh ground water even though Odessa is permitted by the Texas Water Commission to dump its treated wastewater into the draw.

Also on the schedule is the likewise controversial stockade proposal. The Ector County Commissioners' Court on Monday morning is to consider signing a contract with Midland County on splitting building costs of a common stockade to hold non-violent Midland and Odessa criminal offenders. Should Ector commissioners approve the contract, which calls for a 60-40 cost split favoring Midland, the Midland County officials that afternoon are to discuss going along with the contract.

Initially, Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith had proposed a stockade to house prisoners from his crowded jail until a new or expanded jail could be built by the mid-1980s. The proposed initial site, a 7½-acre tract of Midland County-owned land in southeast Midland, drew criticism from Midlanders who suspected that the compound might depress their land values and inhibit the economic growth of the area.

Meanwhile, Ector and other counties, which are experiencing overcrowded jails, asked if they might lease space from Midland County to house some of their prisoners. Smith's proposal had the blessing as a "pilot project" from the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

Commissioner Charlie Welch, who, due to hospitalization following an operation last week, may not be at the Monday session, had sought prospects for alternate stockade sites and came up with an Odessa-owned 40-acre tract near Odessa's sewage treatment plant about 19 miles west of Midland but in Midland County. The site would be on the southeast corner of Section 3 of Block 41.

Odessa officials indicated that they would lease the land to Midland County. Smith would be in control of the stockade and its prisoners.

Midland commissioners have seemed somewhat less enthusiastic but more concerned about the Odessa-site proposal than did Odessa and Ector County officials.

Under the proposal, Ector County or any county sending prisoners to the stockade would pay costs, estimated at about $30 per day per prisoner, to room and board prisoners in barracks-like facilities.

Since Midland and Ector officials first met jointly July 2 and since they discussed a contract four days later, Midlander Ken Peeler, who objected to the 7½-acre site in southeast Midland, apparently has a proposal for another site in the Midland area should the Midland-Ector-Odessa plan fail.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Discuss MCI Telecommunications system with Valerie Ensminger.

—Listen to Ken Perry, director of the Museum of the Big Bend at Sul Ross State University, discuss the Sul Ross museum and its possible application to the county's museum, which now is housed in the basement of the Midland County Public Library.

—Consider architect Walter Pate's report on renovating the courthouse and designing and building a new jail and annex.

City Council

The epidemic of summer doldrums apparently has spread throughout City Hall as the agenda for the City Council meeting on Tuesday is sparse and filled with routine items.

The council will begin the session at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

At 11 a.m., the council will hold a public hearing on a request by MidTran to accept Title III funds under the Older Americans Act of 1965 to subsidize transportation for the elderly.

MidTran is the city's public transportation system.

The council will consider a resolution to issue bonds by the City of Midland Development Corporation to finance a high-rise parking garage for Wilkinson Realty Company. During the planning stages last winter, location for the garage had been on the southwest corner of Wall and Big Spring streets.

After selecting a second municipal court judge at the last council meeting, the board will consider the ordinance to formally hire him. Chosen to assist James Fitz-Gerald is Michael Abrams II.

The council will review the possibility of purchasing land from the Midland Independent School District in far north Midland for a fire substation. Voters last April approved the money for two substations to be located in northwest and northeast Midland.

An ordinance amending the City Code that pertains to possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages in public parks will be studied, as will an ordinance to allow a higher charge for transcripts of trials in the Municipal Court.

After approving the concept to let an Airport Zoning Commission determine air space zoning around Midland Regional Airport during its June 22 meeting, the council this time will pass the resolution to officially establish the group. In addition, members to the board will be appointed.

At 3:30 p.m., a public hearing is scheduled to consider annexation of an area east and northeast of the Midland City Limits as well as that portion of Green Tree Country Club Estates not currently within city limits.

Other items concern zone change requests, Hahn Properties, a request by Al McGuire to establish a fixed base operation at Air Park and a resolution for labor and materials to build lighting equipment at a new softball field at Hogan Park.

MISD Board of Trustees

Construction bids for the new elementary school, Quanah Parker, will be awarded during the regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the administration building, 702 N. N St.

The school, which will accommodate about 700 students in 22 classrooms, three kindergarten rooms, a cafetorium, learning resource center, special programs facility, administrative offices and two courtyards, will be built north of Bluebird Lane on the extension of Ward Street.

Trustees also are expected to consider the proposed insurance settlement of the Carver fire loss, revisions of lunch schedules for the senior high schools, revisions to the elementary school discipline handbook and policies for selection and removal of instructional and library media materials.

Bids also will be awarded for cafeteria paper goods, cleaning supplies, equipment, dairy goods, bakery goods and armored car services.

Board members are expected to authorize the official representative for the National School Lunch and Child Nutrition Programs.

Intent to adopt a tax rate not exceeding 3 percent of the effective tax rate for the 1982-83 school year budget is expected to be declared and the budget study, to be adopted in August, will continue.

Trustees will meet in executive session to discuss personnel and real estate matters.

Regional Planning Commission

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission board of directors meeting will be held at 2 p.m. Thursday in the Pecos County Exhibition Building.

The agenda includes considering a resolution accepting the review and comment of the Regional Development Review Committee on the following:

—The pre-application to the Farmers Home Administration from Meadowbrook Apartments, Ltd.;

—The grant application from Garry Crossley to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for an environmental review of the Western Sunset Estates Addition in Odessa;

—The grant application from the Southwest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf for dormitory construction and renovation;

—The grant application from Sidney R. Smith, Big Spring, to the Department of Housing and Urban Development; —And the review and comment of the Criminal Justice Advisory Committee on the Region 0900 Permian Basin Projects listed by prioritization.

Housing Authority Board

Policies ranging from personnel and ethics to living in low-income housing projects will be reviewed by the City of Midland Housing Authority board when it meets at 2 p.m. Tuesday in the City Hall Conference Room.

The board will look at amending the policies relating to admission to the HUD-Aided Low-Income Housing Projects owned and operated by the Housing Authority. Department of Housing and Urban Development funded Hillcrest Manor, a 100-unit apartment complex for elderly and handicapped persons.

In addition, the board will consider an amended grievance policy, a resolution to establish a procurement policy, standards of conduct for employees of the Housing Authority and a code of ethics for members of the authority.

Also listed for consideration is a resolution adopting personnel policies for the Housing Authority to conform with the city's policies.

Your electricity is costing more in 1982 mainly because the fuel to make it is costing more.

This year, we're paying more for fuels we use to make your electricity. This is partly because another low-cost natural gas contract has expired. But mainly it's because the price of all fuels keeps rising.

We don't make a profit on fuel; we charge our customers exactly what we have to pay for fuel. And we show the amount for "fuel" on your bill each month. The chart below shows an approximate increase in your bill this year compared to last year as a result of increasing fuel costs.

If you use (Kilowatt Hours Per Month)	Then your bill will increase about
500 KWH	$ 5.00
750 KWH	$ 7.50
1000 KWH	$10.00
1250 KWH	$12.50

At Texas Electric, we're trying to hold down fuel costs by using lignite coal — a cheaper fuel. And we're building a plant to use uranium, the lowest priced fuel available to us.

You can help hold down your bill by conserving at home. To learn how, please call us.

Doom and gloom game really good teacher

Staff Writer

There is a world of medieval fantasies, where dragons, monsters, dwarfs and elves dwell, atop dining room tables or sprawled out on the floors of dens in many Midland homes.

It includes quests for treasures, evil magic-users, good dragons and hungry monsters. It is played by humans, half-lings, dwarfs, fighters, thieves and clerics. It encompasses characters who can only see in infrared light, shields, daggers and grasshopper legs.

And magic potions and spells and dark corridors with concealed doors.

And hawks that fly at the enemy in order to distract him — or it.

And for 36 hours at least seven Midlanders, plus the countless people who idly wander in, will be caught up in the world of make-believe at Grandma's Playhouse, 1020 Andrews Highway.

ALL DONATIONS made at the marathon "Dungeons & Dragons" match, which began at 10 a.m. Saturday and is expected to conclude at about 10 tonight, will be given to the Culver Youth Center. Besides for pure pleasure, the object of the marathon game is to dispel some of the sensational rumors surrounding the not-so-attractive appeal of the game.

According to Gene Houk, dungeon master and ruling referee of the game, a lot of bad publicity has been given to the game due to people in the Society for Creative Anachronisms who physically don the costumes of their characters, complete with swords, helmets and chains, and crawl and creep through sewage systems and tunnels in several major cities across the United States.

"We're attempting to demonstrate what the game isn't made up to be," Houk said. "There has been a lot of bad publicity about everybody trying to kill each other. The game fosters cooperation and trying to work together. The team as a whole is important, rather than the individual."

The team members, ranging in age from 11 to 22 years and in game experience from one to seven years, have different amounts of strength, intelligence, wisdom, constitution, dexterity and charisma. Each has their own peculiar characteristics, such as the thief, who can pick locks, and the cleric who, hopefully, the god of his choice will protect.

ARMED WITH various weapons, provisions, clothing and animals, the team sets out under the command of a mysterious figure to slay a dragon who has taken over a castle outside of the village. But is the mysterious man as good as he seems to be, or the dragon as evil?

This is what the team will find out as they explore the castle with maps and weapons and torches in hand.

"It's a role-playing game," Houk explained. "Through the random chance of dice they develop the alter-ego characters they play. There are different quests and it puts you kind of in the middle of a book. You see what you would do when facing a dragon instead of what Sir George did."

The gold coin is important to team members in order to buy better weapons and supplies. In their hunt for the dragon, hopefully they will encounter hidden treasures. And if they come out of the castle, successful in slaying the dragon and still alive, they should receive some sort of unspoken compensation from the mysterious man who sent them on their way at the beginning of the game from the balcony of his mansion.

WHILE CHOOSING their inch-high figures from the assortment of individually owned made-over tackle boxes and large converted sewing kits, the players described some of the aspects and advantages of the game.

"Why you win is you get rich and famous — just like living," Paul Martin Thompson, 13, said with a smile.

According to Roena Houk, owner of Grandma's Playhouse, the money isn't the only thing the players attempt to gain.

"They go in and try to find the treasures and fortunes. But they also might find some people who were lost in there. It is a game that makes people think.

"One mother told me that since her son started playing Dungeons and Dragons, he has improved in his reading. It helps people develop their minds."

THE DEVELOPMENT of math skills, map graphing and quick and logical thinking also are improved through the game. As 15-year-old Dean Preston labored diligently with the map he was drawing of the castle as it was dictated by dungeon master Rouk, the others carefully budgeted their precious coins as they contemplated what additional supplies they would need in their journey.

Gene Houk, left, the dungeon master and ruling referee in this particular game, discusses strategy with three of the participants in the "Dungeons & Dragons" game being played at Grandma's Playhouse, 1020 Andrews Highway. The fantasy-adventure game was expected to continue until 10 p.m. today. The three participants are, from left, Charles Plumb, Kevin Jones and Dean Preston.

Contending that Dungeons and Dragons had a more popular image and larger following than did the game Monopoly, Plumb said, "Monopoly teaches greed and how to cheat. This teaches you how to use your mind, how to think fast, how to use your vocabulary."

And often the vocabulary used in medieval ages was used by team members when reacting to different situations they encountered, such as when they ran into a stranger with good advice before they entered the castle.

"And I say, 'Thank you, kind sir, for your warnings. If we happen to cross the paths of your children we shall make every endeavor to return them to your waiting arms,'" Thompson said formally.

"Catch ya on the flip, man," he added with a grin as the small band proceeded into the imagined castle.

Texan charged in northern state

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — A Texan has been charged in Dane County Circuit Court with endangering safety by conduct regardless of life and reckless use of a weapon in connection with a shooting incident at his former wife's home here Wednesday.

According to the complaint, Carlos L. Guillen, 36, of Corpus Christi had been staying with his ex-wife for several days when he allegedly became upset and threatened to kill her, her two daughters and a family friend.

There were no injuries in the incident, police said.

Midland kids enjoying day camp

By MERRY SCOTT
News Intern

When day camps are set up for children during the summer they are often not very successful. That is not, however, the case with the Parks and Recreation department's "Summer Fun Day Camp."

"Participation couldn't be better," said Em Carnett, superintendent of recreation. "The kids are very enthusiastic."

Program activities include games such as softball, tennis, soccer, basketball, toppleball, badminton and volleyball and contests such as hoppy taw, Frisbee, Hula Hoop, checkers, marbles and croquet.

Also included in the program are table games, folk dances, parachute play, jump rope and skateboard.

Some special activities include a field trip to Hogan Park nature center and picnic area, a day at Cole Park with olympic games and a cook-out, a hike to the Museum of the Southwest, a visit to a school of gymnastics and to a hospital, a day trip to Wild River Canyon and a Carnival Day.

The "camp" was organized to replace the old playground program, which had not been too successful in the past. It is designed for 6- to 12-year-olds and lasts from 8:30 a.m. to noon Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday and from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Wednesday.

For those who need transportation, MidTran has five pick-up locations to go to and from the Parks and Recreation gymnasium where the program is held.

Children are kept in small groups and are divided by age to enable them to interact with children their own age.

Usually, the schedule is to play first, have dancercise and then have counseling sessions in which the kids tell counselors what they like and dislike about the program and discuss any problems they might be having with other children.

"We have strict discipline," Ms. Carnett said. "We establish the rules early and usually have no problems."

Also, there is one counselor to about every 10 children, which gives them more incentive and an example to follow, according to Ms. Carnett.

Other new TIPRO officers are Bruce Anderson of Houston, secretary, and Bennie Downing of Austin, treasurer.

Texan's brother among crash victims

DALLAS (AP) — Richard Purcell was on his first extensive vacation in several years — a cross-country trip visiting friends — when he was killed in the crash of a Pan Am jet near New Orleans, his sister said Saturday.

"He had worked real hard last summer and this summer he decided to come up and have a good vacation, have a nice summer for a change," said the sister, Eva Deering.

Purcell, a 49-year-old bachelor who was born and reared in Electra, Texas, lived in Dallas before moving to Venezuela, where he had been teaching for the past 16 years.

"Summers or Christmas or anytime he was in the States he made his home with us," Mrs. Deering said.

Purcell arrived in Dallas in mid-May and, using a 90-day ticket allowing him to travel on any of Pan Am's domestic flights, had visited friends in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, New Jersey and Michigan, Mrs. Deering said.

She said that on Friday he took a Southwest Airlines flight to New Orleans for a connection with a Pan Am flight to Las Vegas to meet a couple of teachers he planned to share an apartment with in Caracas next fall.

He planned to spend a few days there before heading to Los Angeles to visit another sister, Theresa Riechmann of suburban Encino, Calif.

"He liked foreign countries," Mrs. Deering said. "He liked traveling. He was hoping to teach in Europe after this next year."

Purcell, who earned bachelor's and master's degrees at North Texas State University, had been teaching at and directing a school in Puerto La Cruz, Venezuela, but planned to teach this fall in Caracas. Both schools are private schools for U.S. children.

Earlier he had worked for Gulf Oil Co. for eight years in Venezuela, teaching the children of oil company employees.

Purcell, who also is survived by a third sister, Sister Jeannette Purcell of Tulsa, Okla., usually had spent his summers teaching or setting up schools, Mrs. Deering said. He was using his longer vacation this year to visit old friends.

"He had really enjoyed it. He even looked up an Army buddy from 20 years ago while he was in Philadelphia," she said.

Be aware of water safety before diving in

By MERRY SCOTT
News Intern

Water — cool, fresh and sparkling. Nothing can beat the feeling of diving into a pool, lake or river when it is sizzling hot outside.

It can, however, be dangerous to dive into unknown waters without first checking for objects floating in them or obstructions just below the surface.

Diving accidents cause about 500 spinal cord injuries each year and most of them occur in lakes and streams rather than in man-made pools, according to a study by Arthur D. Little for the National Swimming Pool Foundation (NSPF).

The study also found that of the injuries suffered in man-made pools, most occur in shallow water and the victims are usually males between the ages of 13 and 23.

As a result of the study's findings, the NSPF developed a list of tips for safer diving. They are as follows:

—If you dive down, you must steer up immediately with your head and hands up.

—Keep your hands tipped up, your head back, and your back arched when diving; do not dive too deep.

—You must plan your dive path into the water before you dive.

—Do not dive into unknown waters; make sure there are no submerged or floating obstacles.

—No back dives or running dives.

These tips will be distributed to the public through the National Spa and Pool Institute (NSPI). The NSPF also will be working directly with such organizations as the American Red Cross, National Safety Council, YMCA and other similar organizations to try to educate the public about pool and diving safety.

One of the places many people swim is apartment complex swimming pools. Most local complexes have about the same safety rules for the pool area. A condensed version of them would be: no glass in the pool area and do not run, shove, splash or behave in a disorderly manner. No children under 12 allowed to swim alone.

In local public swimming pools, pool and diving safety are taught (by example) and practiced by the Parks and Recreation department, according to Em Carnett, superintendent of programs.

Lifeguards at city pools must have very thorough training. They must have a current Red Cross lifesaving certificate and must pass a review given by the Parks and Recreation department at the beginning of each summer.

Once they become a city lifeguard they are required to wear standard lifegaurd shorts (to make them easily identifiable) and they must carry a whistle and know the code for sending messages to the other lifeguards, according to Ms. Carnett.

In addition, they must never leave their post or lifeguard stand until they have been replaced by someone else or turn their back on the area they are supposed to be guarding.

The swimmers at city pools, on the other hand, must follow the rules set down for them by the city and the lifeguards on duty. Some of the rules that swimmers must adhere to are:

—Only one person at a time on the diving board.

—Wait until the person who dived before you is out of the area before making your dive.

—Do not swim in the diving area.

—Do not dive off the side of the diving board.

Donna Dickenson, right, a lifeguard at the Doug Russell-Alamo Pool, tells swimmer Wade Dawson to observe the pool's rules. According to the Parks and Recreation Department, safety rules are important and must be observed at all city pools.

—Do not bring any glass containers into the pool area.

One rule the Parks and Recreation department has had trouble explaining to parents is the rule of no flotation devices in the pool, according to Ms. Carnett. The rule is to protect the people using the pool, however.

"The reasoning behind the rule," Ms. Carnett said, "is that it is easy to get into deeper water without knowing it and that could be dangerous." Also, she said it builds a false sense of security because a child finds that he can go in the deep end with a flotation device and sometimes will think he can go there without one. It also is very hard to get someone who has become dependent upon a flotation device to learn to swim without one, according to Ms. Carnett.

If a person fails to follow the rules set down by the city or the lifeguards, he or she can be expelled from the pool for a short time or a full summer if they repeatedly ignore the rules.

With the hottest summer weather yet to come, it is important to know the rules of safety for swimming and diving, so that everyone will have a safe, fun summer.

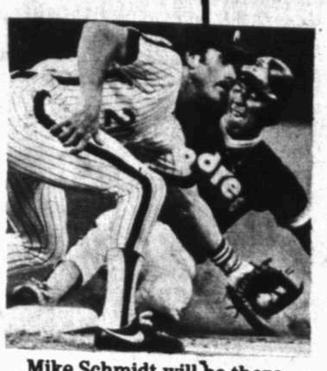
Montreal opens arms for All-Stars



Mike Schmidt will be there...

MONTREAL (AP) — Major league baseball moves it All-Star Game out of the United States for the first time Tuesday night as this Olympic city hosts the 53rd edition of a contest which in recent years has become the sole possession of the National League.

Olympic Stadium, where Bruce Jenner won the decathlon in the 1976 Summer Games and Roberto Duran battered Sugar Ray Leonard into his only defeat as a professional boxer, has long been sold out for the game. Seating capacity for baseball is 58,838 and organizers expect the stadium's baseball-attendence mark of 59,282 to be broken.

"It's probably the biggest attention-getter for Montreal sports in the history of this city for a one-day event," said John McHale, the president and general manager of the Montreal Expos. "The Olympics here in 1976 may have been greater, but that was spread out over two weeks."

In honor of its hosting the first All-Star Game in a foreign land, and the inclusion of baseball as an Olympic sport in 1984, Montreal has adopted an international baseball theme for the event.

Former all-stars from nine nations have been invited to throw out the ceremonial first pitches, and the pregame show will spotlight 46 national baseball federations.

The game is scheduled to start at 7:40 p.m. It will be televised in the United States by ABC.

As is the case when the Expos are home, the lineups Tuesday night will be announced in both English and French, a necessity in a city where the majority of residents proudly declare their non-British heritage.

And there will be several familiar names for Montrealers when public address announcer Richard Morency calls the roll.

Gary Carter, the Expos' multimillion-dollar catcher and the leading vote-getter, was among three Montreal players picked by the fans as a starter. Outfielders Tim Raines and Andre Dawson are the other Expos starters, with first baseman Al Oliver and pitcher Steve Rogers added to the roster by NL Manager Tom Lasorda of Los Angeles.

In the rest of the starting lineup for the Nationals, who have won the past 10 All-Star Games and 18 of the past 19, are first baseman Pete Rose, second baseman Manny Trillo and third baseman Mike Schmidt of the Philadelphia Phillies; shortstop Dave Concepcion of the Cincinnati Reds and outfielder Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves.

Bartosh agrees with UIL ruling

Gil Bartosh, Midland Schools Athletic Director, can't see what all the fuss is about. As far as he is concerned, the University Interscholastic League did what it had to do in prohibiting varsity athletes from participating in summer camps, no matter how innocent sounding the orginal intent.

"Those camps are tremendous money-makers, and would be even bigger money makers if they could be held in Texas and varsity athletes were eligible," he said.

"For example," Bartosh goes on, "Don Haskins (UTEP basketball coach) holds his camp in New Mexico. If he held it in El Paso and varsity athletes were eligible, it could be a tremendous recruiting device, as well. Then, before you knew it, you would have the alumni getting into it and offering money to players."

BARTOSH AGREED that permitting varsity athletes to participate in summer camps would quickly become a compulsory thing for coaches and players.

"The UIL is constantly on guard against one school getting an advantage over another and a rule that would let athletes attend camps in the sport in which they are varsity performers would do just that."

Bartosh said, "If Midland Lee Coach Spike Dykes and Midland High Coach Pat Culpepper were to hold camps in late July and August that would give Midland teams an advantage over high schools in, say, San Antonio or El Paso where the economy is so much different. The players in those cities couldn't afford such camps in many cases."

Not too many years ago when contests with District 5-5A schools had a heavy predistrict schedule with El Paso schools in the early season, the Border City teams were rarely ever able to provide meaningful competition for the Permian Basin teams.

One season in the 1960s, Midland High played Ysleta and scored a four-touchdown victory. The Bulldogs finished seventh or eighth in their distrmct. Ysleta won its district, and lo and behold, upset Odessa Permian in the bidistrict.

The reasoning offered was that El Paso players held summer jobs until school started and lacked the man hours to participate in preseason conditioning that is so important in early season games.

NOT TOO MANY years ago schools were getting into weight programs, isometrics and protein pills for players. It was popular all over the state. There was nothing wrong with it. What made it so great was that the school district didn't have to foot the bill.

"The booster clubs were paying for it," said Gil, "And again the UIL stepped in. Not all schools were

Perlman hurls Cubs past Captains, 3-1

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland Cub righthander Jon Perlman carried on a brazen flirtation without shame before the second largest Cubs Stadium crowd of the season, but when it was over, although he had wooed, he only won.

The perfect game and no-hitter disappeared when Rob Deer hit his first pitch in the sixth inning for a clean single. The shutout slipped out of his grasp on a two-out single by Kelvin Torve and a run-scoring double by Bob Cummings in the seventh. But Jon did wind up with a 3-1 win and a tidy 2 hour, 14-minute, five-hitter to send a crowd of 2,553 home happy.

EVEN WITH Perlman's superb pitching job, the victory didn't come easy. It took a three-run burst in the fifth off Jim Dunn, 4-6, and it was an inning he could have gotten out of with a little luck.

"That fly ball double, ordinarily Greg would have made a routine play," said Manager Jack Mull of the Captains, "but he misjudged it and then never did get straightened out going back for it."

The double was Dave Owen's second hit of the night that went over the head of centerfielder Greg Baker, who was playing tight. It came with one out. There were two out when Mike Kelley singled through the left side, scoring Owen from third.

Joe Carter then yanked a 2-0 pitch over the left field fence, his 12th homer and a game winner.

"I hit the ball decent," said Joe, "but I didn't think I hit it that well. He just threw a fast ball high and I got it up. But it was Kelley's hit that made it possible. It scored the run with two out."

PERLMAN IN winning his eighth in 13 decisions breezed through the first three innings in 1-2-3 style and by the fourth, anyone who could see the scoreboard had to be riding on every pitch.

First Baseman Carmelo Martinez made a leaping catch of Randy Kutcher's liner to open the fourth. Then Perlman went 3-0 to Doug Wabeke and with a perfect game still going, it was like pitching with the bases loaded and none out. Jon came back with two strikes and then shortstop Dave Owen made the play of the game, gloving Wabeke's rap up the middle and by the time he squared away to make his throw he was on the second base side of the bag. But he got the runner. It was the kind of play that make no-hitters possible and this kind of support, you had to figure Jon had a chance.

Jon breezed through the fifth to run his string to 15 straight batters retired. Then Deer drilled his single to left and was almost immediately erased by a double play.

"HE REALLY didn't hit it that well," Jon explained. "It was a slider up and off the bat, but he's a strong guy and got it through."

Of Cummings' run-scoring double in the seventh, "It was a bad pitch to throw a clean up hitter. I hung a slider."

Torve scored all the way from first as center fielder Henry Cotto chased it to the wall.

The Captains got two more hits in the eighth, both after two were out.

Perlman didn't issue a walk in hurling his fourth complete game and that's the second time in the last three starts. And both times Jon got the win.

Abila decisions Villicana, now 6-0

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Richard Abila made his sixth professional fight as successful as his first five Friday night when he won an eight-round unanimous decision over Houston's Gilberto Villicana. Gilberto Villicana? What happened to Enrique Muniz?

Before Abila and his manager Rick Fleetwood left for Beaumont on Thursday they were expecting to fight Muniz, a ring veteran with a 19-8 record. Abila was looking for an opponent with a lot of ring experience and still got in from Villicana who, in 23 fights, has compiled a 17-6 record. He was 17-5 before fighting the 120½-pound Midland super bantamweight.

"I found out about Villicano Thursday night when we got to Beaumont and I opened a newspaper," said Fleetwood who had two boxers in the ring Friday night. David Bates, an Odessan who fights out of Fleetwood's stable here in Midland, upped his professional record to 2-0-1 with his decision over Eddie Mitchell of Houston.

Going into the fight, Abila was the No. 6 ranked Texas super bantamweight while Villicano was No. 3. The win should move Abila up in the polls, especially the way he dominated his veteran opponent.

"He hurt the guy in the third and fourth rounds, in both with left hooks," said Fleetwood. "In the fifth round, the only time he had Villicana in trouble, Richard set him up with a left jab and came back with three straight rights that sent him to the ropes and buckled his knees. The guy had so much ring experience that he grabbed hold of Richard until the ref seperated them."

"I was surprised about the change of opponents," said Abila who went through a similar situation in his last fight. "When I heard he was No. 3 in the state I said I'm in trouble again. My manager (Fleetwood) told me to pack a lunch because he was going to be there all eight rounds. I was going to be there too because I wasn't going to go down. It was like a war."

"It was his first eight round fight and Richard came out in the seventh and eighth rounds looking as fresh as he did in the first," said Fleetwood. That's what pleased me most."

"It was a tough fight," said Abila. "It went all eight rounds. It was good experience for me, I learned from it. He was a very smart fighter, not a good fighter, but smart. He had a lot of ring saavy. He new how to protect himself."

BATES, A 160-pound middleweight, posted a six-round decision over Port Arthur's Eddie Mitchell.

"David set him up with left jabs and kept him at bay with with the left," said Fleetwood. "When Mitchell would work his way inside, David would hit him with body shots until he moved out and then he'd start with the jab again."

The victories by both boxers should help the draw at the gate for their next bouts. Abila and Bates will be part of a card on July 26 at Odessa's Ector County Coliseum where two other Midland boxers will make their professional debuts; Amos Taylor, a Pamona, Calif., boxer who moved to Midland and Dan Levario of Pecos.

Baseball Today...

Sunday, July 11

On this date in baseball in 1965:

Minnesota slugger Harmon Killebrew's two-run, two-out, ninth-inning homer off Pete Mikkelsen gave the Twins a 6-5 victory over the New York Yankees at Metropolitan Stadium. It was perhaps the biggest victory in Minnesota's march to the American League pennant ... the franchise's first since 1933, when it was located in Washington.

On this date in 1961:

Pittsburgh's Roberto Clemente rapped an RBI single in the 10th inning to lift the National League to a 5-4 victory at San Francisco's wind-swept Candlestick Park in the year's first All-Star Game.

The game's most enduring moment, though, came in the ninth, when Giant pitcher Stu Miller had his pitching motion broken slightly by the high winds, forcing him to commit a costly balk.

Waltrip winner of Busch 420

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip ended a brief victory drought Saturday night, running away to an easy triumph in the Busch 420 Grand National stock car race.

The defending Winston Cup champion raised his season total to six victories while winning for the first time in seven races.

Waltrip, a 35-year-old resident of nearby Franklin, Tenn., driving a Mountain Dew-sponsored Buick Regal, lapped the entire fielb in the first 151 laps on Nashville International Raceway's treacherous .596-mile banked oval.

Chiles says Rangers could lose $7 million this year

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers may lose as much as $7 million this year, and club owner Eddie Chiles says if the condition of major league baseball doesn't improve, he may think about selling the club.

The Dallas Morning News quoted a club source as saying the franchise is projected to lose between $6 million and $7 million this year.

"But this team has lost money every year; we lost four million last year," said Chiles, a Fort Worth oil man. "So this is no big deal. We're going as well as we can with the conditions we're working under."

THE RANGERS' sometimes outspoken owner said that if baseball's financial situation doesn't get better, he may get out of the game. He said he expects to lose as much this year as he did last year.

Chiles said he will advocate a restructuring of the leagues at baseball meetings next month in San Diego. If owners don't curb Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's power, Chiles said, "baseball will self-destruct."

Asked if he would consider selling the team if changes in the structure of baseball are not made, Chiles replied, "Yes, possibly."

"VERY FEW teams are making money — only a half-dozen teams are," Chiles said. "Of course we're not happy about losing money. We're not happy with our attendance. It's lower than we've ever had."

"But the reason we're losing money is the players salaries are higher than ever," Chiles said.

He met with his board of directors Tuesday to discuss the Ranger financial situation.

Rangers Executive Vice President Ed Meason said the Rangers are losing money because the cost to run a major league team has risen from $5.8 million to $9.5 million in the last two years.

MEASON, who heads Rangers business operations, denied he has been criticized by some board members for excessive spending.

By DOUG TUCKER

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — In Vermontsville, Mich., 34 years ago, a pitcher named Ken Beardslee went on a 24-1 tear, hurling eight no-hitters and two perfect games.

Greg Procell's sport was basketball, and in a three-year onslaught beginning in 1967, he scored 6,702 points for Noble Ebarb, La.

But nobody compares with Ken Hall.

During the Korean War, in the little town of Sugar Land, Texas, Hall set football records that may never be touched. For instance, Jimmy Jordan of Tallahassee, Fla., averaged 291 yards rushing a game in 1975. If Jordan had added 130 yards a game, he still would have been almost 10 yards behind the 428.8 yards Hall averaged in 1953.

These prodigious feats are chronicled in the National High School Records Book, now in its third — and largest — edition.

The National High School Federation, in cooperation with state associations, spent years poring over yellowed newspaper clippings and cross-checking musty files. The first official listing of national high school records finally rolled off the press in 1980.

Amazing achievements, unknowns, and a handful of the most famous names in sports spill from its 222 pages.

"It was quite a job putting the whole thing together," said Bruce Carnahan, the high school federation's director of public relations. "In some parts of the country, statistics and records were kept rather haphazardly."

NOT ALL of the nation's high school record-holders are unknown. The names of Renaldo Nehemiah, Jim Ryun and Russ Francis are yet to be erased by the accomplishments of latter-day performers. But the book is dominated by youngsters like Beardslee, Procell and Hall, who, for various reasons, faded into obscurity.

No one's star shines brighter than Hall's. From 1950-53, he went to the top in 12 football categories, including most points in a career, 899; most in a season, 395; most touchdowns in a career, 127; most touchdowns in a season, 57; most career yards, 14,558; most yards in a season, 5,146, and most yards per game, 428.8.

His total rushing yardage is almost double the amount current University of Georgia star Herschel Walker rolled up in his high school career. No.2 on the all-time high school rushing chart is Billy Sims, whose 7,738 yards for Hooks, Texas, fell almost 3,500 short of Hall.

Sims went on to Oklahoma, where he won the Heisman Trophy, and the Detroit Lions, where he is all-pro. Hall went on to Texas A&M, where he had a mediocre career because, old-timers say, he was too slow.

ONE OF the oldest standards is held by Passaic, N.J., High School. Passaic's basketball team won on Dec.17, 1919, and kept winning until Hackensack, N.J., took its measure 39-35 on Feb.6, 1925, 159 games later.

The most pointless basketball game ever played in regulation time came two years later, when Drain, Ore., sneaked past Wilbur, Ore., 1-0, in a score that has since been duplicated. The other Oregon schools, Dufur and Cascade Locks, hold the record for the most runs in a baseball game — 66. Dufur won, 63-3.

At the far end of the basketball scale, Chelsea Vocational and Manhattan Vocational, two inner-city New York teams, combined for a record 278 points in 1971, with Chelsea winning 153-125.

Griffin and Highland, Ind., went 28 innings in 1976 in the longest high school baseball game on record. Thirty-one is the most runs in one inning by a high school team, with Bullard, Texas, routing Neches, Texas, 43-0, last year. The game was called after four innings.

Joseph City, Ariz., held the old one-inning mark of 28 runs, but remains in the record book with a 1974 team batting average of .443.

In 1976, Ken Lisko of Youngstown, Ohio, Cardinal Mooney cracked a game-record five home runs. Among several individuals with four is James Rodney Richard, who went on to stardom as a pitcher for the Houston Astros.

Rcihard, who played for Ruston, La., Lincoln, is also one of 12 high school pitchers who share a never-to-be-beaten record for lowest earned run average in a season — 0.00.

SWITHH-HITTING Mark Franklin of Brookfield, Ohio, became the first prep player ever to hit home runs from each side of the plate in the same game last year. In a 21-6 victory over Hermitage Hickory, Franklin not only did it in the same game, but in the same inning.

Nehemiah's 12.9-second time in the 120-yard high hurdles for Scotch Plains, N.J., stands as the national record, as does the 3-minute, 58.3-second mile which Jim Ryun ran in 1965 for Wichita, Kan., East.

Francis, who became famous as an all-pro tight end for the New England Patriots, holds the high school record in the javelin throw of 254 feet, 11 inches, set for Pleasant Hill, Ore., in 1971.

One of many coaching marks in the Records Book belongs to the late Earl F. Quigley, a fixture at Little Rock, Ark., Central High from 1914 to 1946. Quigley coached 18 consecutive Arkansas boys state track championships. His fooball teams posted a 149-56-11 record and won eight state titles. His basketball teams won 306 games and lost only 95, while capturing four state championships. His baseball teams went 207-37 and were state champs nine times.

McMahon may pass Bears to become rookie free agent

CHICAGO (AP) — Quarterback Jim McMahon, first-round draft choice of the Chicago Bears, probably will not sign with the National Football League club, his agent says.

Agent Jerry Argovitz said Friday his client "will not be signed by the Chicago Bears in my opinion," adding that he will seek a court ruling next Friday to make free agents of McMahon and any of his clients who have not signed by then.

NFL Management Council, the owners representative in negotiations with the Players Association, advised teams two months ago that they cannot negotiate directly with players or agents after the current collective bargaining agreement expires at midnight Thursday.

Argovitz said he and the Bears are so far apart in talks on McMahon that he does not expect to call Bears General Manager Jim Finks before the negotiating deadline expires.

"Jim Finks does not negotiate," Argovitz said. "He is not a negotiator or a deal maker. He's an intimidator. If they weren't going to pay the player what he's worth, they shouldn't have drafted him."

McEnroe, Fleming win cup match

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — John McEnroe and pressure are constant companions, and the tempetuous left-hander from New York turns it into another weapon in his well-equipped arsenal.

"It's tough to stay on top," McEnroe said after he teamed with Peter Fleming to crush Anders Jarryd and Hans Simonsson 6-4, 6-3, 6-0 in doubles Saturday and give the United States a 2-1 lead over Sweden in their Davis Cup tennis quarterfinal match. "It's a lot easier when you're trying to get there."

It was the first time the American pair have faced competition since they lost the doubles final at Wimbledon last Sunday in straight sets to Australians Peter McNamara and Paul McNamee.

"We're not playing better as a team then we ever have before," McEnore said. "Lately, we've had our problems. We should play all our matches like this. A couple of years ago, we were concentrating on the doubles more. I guess we've gone into outer space or something."

McEnroe said Sweden's doubles team "were not at their best today. But they are young and will be back in the future."

"I was surprised" on how quickly Simonsson and Jarryd were dispatched, said Hans Olsson, captain of the Swedish Davis Cup squad. "McEnroe and Fleming played very well. It was difficult for our players to get into the match.

"McEnroe and Fleming played better and better as it went on."

Olsson also thought the loss at Wimbledon may have played a part in the Americans' Davis Cup play.

Parrish hits third grand slam of week

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Jack Morris scattered seven hits and Chet Lemon cracked his fifth home run of the season Saturday night as the Detroit Tigers beat the Texas Rangers 6-0 for a split of their twi-night doubleheader before a record Arlington Stadium crowd of 42,163.

Texas won the opener 6-5 on a record-tying grand slam home run by Larry Parrish in the first inning and Lee Mazzilli's tie-breaking solo homer in the ninth.

Morris, 7-6, walked none and struck out five for his ninth complete game, but his first good outing since June 14. The triumph snapped Detroit's five-game losing streak and was only the sixth victory for the Tigers' in their last 28 games.

The Tigers staked him to an early 3-0 lead. Tom Brookens and Bill Fahey opened the third inning with singles off Charlie Hough, 7-7, and Brookens scored on Alan Trammell's sacrifice fly. Fahey scored on a single by Lou Whitaker, who came home on Mike Ivie's double.

Lemon made it 4-0 with his homer in the fourth. In the sixth, Lemon doubled and scored on another double by Fahey, who scored on Whitaker's third single of the game.

Parrish's grand slam in the opener tied a major league record set in 1968 by Detroit's Jim Northrup of three grand slams in a week.

Mazzilli's homer, his third of the season, came off Tigers' reliever Dave Tobik, 2-4, with one out in the bottom of the ninth. Danny Darwin, 6-2, pitched two scoreless innings of relief for the victory.

White Sox 6, Blue Jays 5

TORONTO (AP) — Tom Paciorek had three hits, including a two-run home run, and drove in three runs to lead the Chicago White Sox to a 6-5 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday night.

Ernesto Escarrega evened his record at 1-1, relieving starter Jerry Koosman with one out in the fifth inning and shutting down the Blue Jays the rest of the way.

Chicago was the beneficiary of five Toronto errors in the first two innings. Toronto starter Jim Gott, 1-5, walked Rudy Law and Tony Bernazard to open the game. Steve Kemp's double scored Law and, one out later, Paciorek's single scored Bernazard, and Kemp came home to make it 3-0 when the ball got away from center fielder Barry Bonnell.

Red Sox 5, Twins 4

BOSTON (AP) — Rick Miller's two-run single, a pair of sacrifice flies by Dave Stapleton and a solo home run by Dwight Evans lifted the Boston Red Sox to a 5-4 victory Saturday over the Minnesota Twins.

Evans gave Boston a 5-2 lead in the fifth inning with his 11th home run of the season. In the Twins' sixth, Gary Gaetti followed Tim Laudner's single with his 12th homer to make the score 5-4 and chase winner Bruce Hurst, 3-3. Bob Stanley finished up and recorded his sixth save.

Bobby Castillo, 4-6, was the loser for Minnesota, which lost for only the third time in its last 12 games. The Red Sox, who had dropped 10 of their previous 16 games, began play one game ahead of Milwaukee in the American League East.

A's 3, Orioles 1

OAKLAND (AP) — Tony Armas' tie-breaking two-run homer in the third inning Saturday powered the Oakland A's to a 3-1 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Tom Underwood, 5-4, went 7⅓ innings and then got relief help from Dave Beard, who came on with a runner on first base and picked up his eighth save. The two Oakland pitchers scattered eight hits, the same number the A's collected off Martinez.

Armas, who brought a .223 batting average into the contest, has homered in three consecutive games. He slammed his 10th of the season with two out off Baltimore starter and loser Dennis Martinez, 9-6, following Dwayne Murphy's one-out single.

Brewers 7, Royals 0

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Paul Molitor slammed a three-run homer and Robin Yount and Ted Simmons added solo shots to pace a season-high 19-hit Milwaukee attack Saturday night as the Brewers defeated the Kansas City Royals 7-0 in a rain-delayed contest.

Randy Lerch, 6-5, scattered nine hits as he recorded his first American League shutout and his first complete game of the season.

Blue was rocked for 10 hits in three-plus innings of work and failed to retire a batter in the fourth inning as Molitor followed a double by Ed Romero and a bunt single by Charley Moore with his ninth homer of the season. The homer chased Blue in favor of Mike Armstrong.

included two players whose names were not on the computer-card ballots used to select the starters — Pittsburgh Pirates first baseman Jason Thompson and San Diego Padres outfielder Ruppert Jones.

But Lasorda bypassed some players who felt they were definite All-Star picks, including Tim Lollar of the Padres, the NL's top pitcher in terms of winning percentage, and several members of Atlanta, the leader in the West.

IN THE AMERICAN League, which trails the series 33-18-1, Oakland's Billy Martin is the manager through an ironic twist. On one of the two times he was fired as manager of the New York Yankees, Martin was replaced by Bob Lemon. This spring, Lemon was fired after taking the Yanks to the World Series in 1981; Martin was picked to replace him here because the A's were last season's AL West winners.

Four California Angels are on the AL starting lineup, including outfielder Reggie Jackson, who as a Yankee was constantly in hot water with Martin. The other Angel starters are first baseman Rod Carew (starting his 13th consecutive All-Star game), second baseman Bobby Grich and outfielder Fred Lynn. There are no California players among the reserves or pitchers.

The rest of the American League starters are catcher Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox, third baseman George Brett of the Kansas City Royals, shortstop Robin Yount of the Milwaukee Brewers and Oakland outfielder Rickey Henderson, on his way to smashing the major league stolen-base record.

Zokol, Levi hold GMO lead

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Canadian rookie Dick Zokol refuses to hold co-leader Wayne Levi in awe going into the final round Sunday of the Greater Milwaukee Open Golf Tournament.

"I've never played with Wayne before. But I don't care who I play with. I'm tuned out with my radio," said Zokol.

For three rounds, the 23-year-old newcomer has worn a radio headset to settle his nerves. It's worked. He's shared the lead after each round.

He was told rookies aren't supposed to lead a PGA Tour tournament wire-to-wire.

"No, they're not. But I like to be noticed," replied Zokol after Saturday's 2-under-par 70. "Yeah, I think I can win it. Anyone within six shots can win this tournament."

Levi disagreed.

"The field isn't too packed. It will be tough for those guys four shots behind to win," said Levi following his third straight 68.

The two leaders had 54-hole total of 204, 12 under par at the Tuckaway Country Club course.

Zokol says he has no game plan for the final 18 holes. Levi does.

"I'm going to try for a fast start," said the Hawaiian Open champion, the only top 10 current money-winner in this $250,000 tournament.

"I've been playing the first three holes well. I figure if I can get a couple of early birdies, I'll be tough to catch," Levi said.

IT SHOULD be quite a shootout. Levi already is one of the game's established stars with yearly earnings of almost $180,000. Zokol, in contrast, has earned $2,743 in 1982.

Meanwhile, Terry Diehl, the 36-hole leader with Zokol, bogeyed two of his first three holes and slipped from the lead. He still matched par 72 and was next at 10-under 206 with Jim Colbert, the winner here 10 years ago. Colbert posted a 70.

Jay Haas, the defending champion, also came in with a 72 and was all but out of contention with 211, nine shots off the lead.

Barring a total collapse in the final round, Zokol assured himself of his best American tournament with his steady play Saturday. He has finished no higher than 32nd in 20 tournaments this year.

He needs a 22nd-place finish here Sunday for $2,800, beating his entire 1982 money total.

Levi and Zokol were never more than one shot apart after the Canadian newcomer bogeyed his opening hole.

An eagle-3 on the 524-yard sixth hole pulled Levi, the No. 8 money-winner with almost $180,000 this year, into a tie with his less-heralded opponent.

At stake is a first prize of $45,000.

The President, created for the Day-Date, is available in 18 ct gold or platinum only.
The Jubilee, created for the Datejust, is available in 18 ct gold, in stainless steel or in Rolesor, a combination of steel and gold.
The Oyster, created in 1938 for the whole Oyster range, has been perfected and modernized over the course of the years. For example, bracelets for Submariner models have been complemented by extension links and a safety clasp and thus can be worn over a light diving suit.
The Oyster bracelet is available in gold, in stainless steel and in Rolesor, a steel and gold combination. These exclusive bracelets by Rolex have all been specially designed to match the Rolex Oyster case perfectly. This creates a handsome, functional design with a character of its own. However, a few special gold bracelets are made to meet particular tastes.
All Rolex bracelets have an adjustable clasp. The President model is available made to measure with an elegant, concealed clasp revealed only by the Rolex crown.
The bracelets for Rolex Oysterquartz models follow the Rolex tradition of functional elegance with the concept of combining the bracelet and Oyster case to form an integral unit.

HOUSTON (AP) — Jose Cruz' ninth-inning home run lifted the Houston Astros to a 4-2 victory over the St.Louis Cardinals Saturday night.

With the score tied 2-2, Ray Knight singled to lead off the Houston ninth off Bob Forsch, 8-5. Knight was replaced by pinch-runner Denny Walling and Cruz hit the first pitch from Forsch into the right-field pavilion seats to win the game.

Joe Niekro, 8-6, allowed seven hits in going the distance.

Lonnie Smith hit his sixth home run of the year on the game's first pitch to give the Cardinals an early 1-0 lead, but Houston countered with two runs in their half of the inning.

Terry Puhl walked and Knight was safe when shortstop Ozzie Smith made a throwing error trying to force Puhl at second. One out later, Danny Heep and Phil Garner hit consecutive RBI singles to make it 2-1.

AP Sports Writer

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Defending champion Hollis Stacy blistering the Speidel golf course despite temperatures in the mid-90s, tied a tournament record with a 6-under 66 Saturday to take a 1-shot lead over Kathy Postlewait and Cathy Morse after the second round of the $125,000 LPGA West Virginia Classic.

Stacy, who won the 1981 Wheeling tournament in a five-way playoff that included Postlewait, sank birdie putts of 40 and 35 feet on the front nine en route to tying the tournament record set in 1975 by Karolyn Kertzman.

Postlewait and Morse, each at 6-under-par 138 going into Sunday's final round, both shot 4-under par 68s Saturday but couldn't catch Stacy, who plays so well in Wheeling that she calls herself "the honorary pro at Speidel."

"I feel so confident on this golf course," said Stacy, a two-time U.S. Open champion who currently stands seventh on the money winnings list. "It's hilly, but you don't mind walking the hills when you're making birdies."

Stacy, a two-time winner on the LPGA tour this year, had four birdies on the front side of the par-72, 6,150-yard Speidel course, then added two more birdies on the back nine despite the hills, heat and humidity.

"I took good care of myself on the course today ... I kept ice on my neck after every hole to keep my body temperature down," she said. "And my putting was what did it. I made some putts out there that I haven't made in months. My caddie calls them field goals. I made a couple of field goals today."

EIGHT GOLFERS turned in rounds in the 60s Saturday, including second-year pro Mindy Moore, who had a 67. Twenty-five golfers shot 1-under 71 or better.

Moore nearly tied an LPGA record when she shot a 6-under 30 on the front nine. She missed a 12-foot putt on the ninth hole that would have tied the tour record of 29 for nine holes. She stood at 3-over 147 following a first-round 80.

A stroke behind Postlewait, who has yet to win on the tour in nine years, and Morse were Alice Miller, who had a 3-under 69 after a first round 70. At 3-under 141, four strokes behind Stacy, were veteran pro Jan Ferraris and Kathy Young, each with 71-70—141.

Camps are nothing new blessed with booster clubs that could afford these training aides and the UIL put a stop to it. Once again, it was a case of an economic advantage that not everyone could afford."

The UIL rule on athletic awards resulted from the same desire to keep everyone on an equal footing, regardless of their economic environment. After that first $40 jacket for the first letter, the award limit is $6.

"Some Booster Clubs were rewarding their teams in ways that others couldn't afford," Gil said.

BARTOSH REMEMBERS that summer camps once were a big thing in Texas. The former Texas Christian University tailback recalls, "When I was in high school at Granger, the coach took money out of his own pocket and took us to preseason camp at Buchanan Dam. It was a fun time. We'd fish during the day and hold our workouts in the evening.

"Still, we had to pay $30 or $40 of our money. Not everybody could afford it, but you had to go or you didn't play. It was another example of rich-man, poor-man, the type of thing the UIL is constantly on guard against."

Magazine recruits anglers for acid rain test

BY RODNEY REELE

Acid rain, deplored by environmentalists and shrugged off by some industrialists as a freak of nature, kills fish and is a pestilence for fishermen.

In an effort to help fight acid rain, Sports Afield is launching a nationwide survey to be, conducted by fishermen who will test their home waters for contamination.

Acid rain contains sufficient quantities of sulphuric or nitric acids to sour lakes and streams, killing acquatic life.

"In New York's Adirondack Mountains, 300 lakes and ponds are fishless because of the rain and 300 more are threatened. Swedish scientists estimate that 20,000 of their ponds and lakes are fishless or about to become so. Ontario has lost 4,000 lakes and Nova Scotia at leest nine salmon rivers.

The SA Acid Rain survey provides a data card on which to record test results on snow, rain and local surface water. "Mail the card to us," advises Sports Afield, "We will tabulate the data, analyze it and submit it to the proper federal, state and private acid rain research organization.

YELLOW CATFISH have started biting at Lake E.V. Spence while channel catfish were continuing to show up in volume. Striped bass are forging back into the spotlight with everything from lightweights to a 17-pounder.

Joe Daniels and Jimmy Brown, Midland, took 23 channel cat, all over two pounds, a couple of yellow catfish and a goodsized black bass. Joe Robitson, Odessa, took the 17-pound striper...

Craig and Pamela Adams, Midland, hooked an eight-pound yellow and five channels to three pounds.

At Lake Thomas, fishing for crappie was fair to good with the best catches in eight to 20 feet with minnows and jigs. Black bass fishing is fair along the shore with minnows and plugs. As for channel cats, it was good to excellent with all kinds of bait.

At Oak Creek Lake, fishing has been good. The lake is clear and last Monday water was still running 11 inches deep over the spillway.

OUTSTANDING catches of walleyes on White River Lake near Crosbyton have Texas Wildlife Department officials enthused. Bill Provine said recent creel surveys at the 1,000-acre lake 70 miles east of Lubbock have shown good catches. "Not all our walleye stocking efforts have been successful," said the biologist. "But we are beginning to learn more about what the fish require for survival.

When walleye stocking programs began several years ago, the philosophy was to stock a large number of lakes with fish. "It is obvious now that many lakes don't furnish the necessary conditions for good walleye survival," says Provine.

"Now we are concentrating on a few carefully selected lakes and stocking them at high rates to create a fishery in a reasonably short time."

While White River is the current showcase of walleye, several other Texas lakes are producing well and may receive future consideration for stocking.

Some stocked with varying degrees of success are Moss Creek, near Big Spring; Buffalo Springs, near Lubbock, O.C.Fisher at San Angelo and Canyon Reservoir near New Braunfels.

"If you can establish a good enough crop of walleyes, they are not that difficult to catch," said Provine. "And it takes very little time before fishermen learn where they are and how to catch them."

During the spring, walleyes move into shallow water where they were caught on virtually all kinds of lures, primarily crankbaits. Later, the fish moved slighty deeper, but anglers are still catching good stringers and sometimes the 10-per-day limit on earthworms.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

After seven years of following the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society's profishing Tournament Trail, Cliff Craft, a 32-year-old Sugar Hill, Ga., fishing guide finally won a tournament.

"I've finished in the top 10 nine times but couldn't climb any higher than third. Eventually, I knew I'd win if I kept trying and could shake my one day of bad luck," said Craft, who led from the start to finish in the $68,000 Alabama Invitational B.A.S.S. Tournament on legendary Lake Eufaula.

Craft, who now fishes more than 200 days a year as a guide on Lake Lanier in Georgia and a touring pro, didn't cast his first line until 1975. His introduction to play-for-pay on the B.A.S.S. circuit is still vividly on his mind. His boat sank.

"I SPENT about an hour and a half in the water with my partner before a commercial fisherman picked us up," said Craft the sinking on Santee-Cooper Lakes, S.C. In those days before level flotation requirements.

The stocky-built, veteran stacked 68 pounds, 8 ounces of largemouth bass on the scales at the Lakepoint Resort Park Marina with a 20-bass catch, one shy of the seven-bass per-day tournament limit, for a runaway win over runnerup Larry Nixon of Hemphill, Tex., leading angler on the 1982 B.A.S.S. circuit, who claimed second with 31 pounds, 7 ounces. Defending tournament champion Roland Martin of Clewiston, Fla., the all-time B.A.S.S. winner with 14 titles, finished third with 30 pounds, 14 ounces.

LAKE EUFAULA, the 46,000-acre Alabama-Georgia impoundment, has been the site of many of the 15-year-old B.A.S.S. Tournament Trail's memorable moments. Here in 1968 John Powell of Montgomery, Ala., won with 132 points. And Bill Dance of Memphis, Tenn., gained fame as the "angler with the golden hands" for his plastic worm fishing success. Tom Mann of Eufaula used the lake as a springboard to national fishing acclaim and the "test tank" for his fruit-scented Jelly Worms and the famed tail-spinning Little George that celebrated its 20th year this summer. And from the old flooded Chattahoochee riverbed, Blake Honeycutt of Hickory, N.C., pulled 138 pounds, 6 ounces on July 10-12 to set the all-time B.A.S.S. Tournament Trail winning weight.

"I've heard all the old war stories," said Craft, "and they must all be true. I caught my fish all from the same general spot, a classic horseshoe creek bend at the mouth of Barbour Creek.

"The wind blew from every direction on the compass over the three days and I had to keep searching over about a 100-yard area to relocate the school of bass, which must be one of the biggest concentrations of big bass I've ever located."

THE FIRST morning of the tournament, Craft had his seven-bass limit of 24 pounds, 11 ounces in 90 minutes. He duplicated the feat with 23 pounds, 15 ounces the next morning. In the final round, he had to probe the creek ledge drop-off for the duration of his nine hours of allotted fishing time to land 19 pounds, 14 ounces and six fish.

"I got real concerned when I only had two small bass in the livewell by the time I'd been catching the limit," said Craft. "But when a fishing hole has been as good as that one, there wasn't any reason to think there was a better one anywhere on the lake."

If there was, none of the other 198 entries could find it. Certainly, not even Tom Mann, who went for broke and "big fish" the final round and blanked, falling from 14th to 35th place.

Custom-fitted mouthpiece..

Dentists advise caution

By MACK SISK

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Some dentists and trainers are trying to determine the veracity of claims that athletes have miraculously increased their strength with custom-fitted mouthpiece devices.

Dentists at the University of Texas Health Science Center here and Ohio State University are urging athletes, parents, other dentists, coaches and trainers to beware until the MORAs (mandular orthopedic repositioning devices) are scientifically proven.

ONE THEORY — advanced by dentist Richard Kaufman of Oceanside, N.Y. — holds that a person's athletic strength is greatly enhanced if he inserts a device into his mouth that effectively "sets his jaw" in an optimum position during athletic competition.

For instance, the U.S. Olympic bobsled and luge teams at Lake Placid, N.Y., were fitted with MORAs made by Kaufman. He also made MORAs for football and hockey players, baseball pitchers, a discus thrower, a pole vaulter and distance runners.

The squabble has heated up since Sports Illustrated published an article in June 1981 in which the MORA was claimed to have improved performances of several athletes.

Now some companies reportedly are selling the devices to athletes for $350 or more, and the trainer for the Philadelphia Eagles is upset that his team has been falsely portrayed as using the devices.

DR. WILLIAM Heintz, an Ohio State University professor emeritus who pioneered football mouthguards and who is credited with developing the National Collegiate Athletic Association's current mouthguard rule, further fears that the newly developed devices will jeopardize success of the NCAA mouthguard program.

For one thing, the devices, made of a hard acrylic resin and metal, do not meet NCAA requirements because they are too hard and because they don't cover the top teeth. Beginning this year, failure to use an approved mouthpiece or any other required equipment would subject a college team to loss of a timeout, Heintz said.

"These things are very controversial. There are pros and cons from a dozen people on both sides and there is plenty to confuse you. My opinion is that (claims of athletic enhancement) has not been justified or demonstrated by any research yet," Heintz said.

Heintz said the combination of NCAA requirements for face guards and mouth protectors had reduced mouth injuries in college football to one-quarter to one-half of one percent.

"With over 2 million playing under this rule, it is safe to say we are avoiding more than 150,000 injuries a year and we think this is pretty darn important," he said.

Both Heintz and Dr. Robert Morrow, who heads a UT Health Science Center team that fits both the University of Texas Longhorns and Prairie View A&M Panthers with mouthguards, said they fear the inflexible materials being used in the new devices might lead to injuries.

"I'm not saying it doesn't work," Morrow said. "I'm saying I'm from Missouri, I haven't been shown. With athletes what we get into too often is the placebo effect or the psychological effect."

SO INTENSE has become the divergent viewpoints that the Journal of the American Dental Association devoted considerable space to the subject in its March issue. Former Ohio State coach Woody Hayes, Heintz, Morrow and others will discuss the issue during a mouthguard seminar for trainers, coaches and dentists later this month.

The UT Health Science Center is sponsoring the seminar for coaches, trainers and dentists via a telephone conferrence hookup July 30 to examine "the current state-of-the-art in protective mouthpieces."

Morrow said the mouthguards he and a team of UT Health Science Center dentists and students have developed for the Texas Longhorns do include the occlusion, or bite, features boasted as a panacea by some people, but they are made of a thick, clear plastic that holds its shape, yet is flexible and comfortable.

"In effect, I think that's what we do. The way we make the mouthguard, we do put in a bite," Morrow said. "But I'm not about to say, with the evidence we've been presented at this point, that we're doing anything to affect the athletes.

Edwards was first in TV news

NEW YORK (AP) — Before Dan Rather, before Walter Cronkite, he was the first face in television news. Now, he's primarily a radio voice, although at 11:57 each morning, Douglas Edwards still has a precious minute of television airtime.

Edwards, who pioneered the first nightly newscast on TV in 1948, is in his 40th year with CBS. He spent 13½ of those years as anchor on "Douglas Edwards with the News," the precursor to Cronkite's "CBS Evening News."

In a television longevity record, Edwards has been doing a daily TV newscast — in one form or another — since 1948. His first news show was mostly narrative stories, some pictures and an in-studio chat with a newsmaker, the "Well-Doug Interview."

"Without a doubt, the big difference today is the technology," says Edwards, 65. "In the old days, if we shot a story and got it on two hours later, we'd be happy. Now, with satellites and the like, the delivery is instantaneous."

In the early days of TV, graphics were certainly not an art form. But that wasn't from lack of trying. When the Soviets launched the Sputnik, Don Hewitt, director of Edwards' show and later creator of "60 Minutes," searched for a way to give viewers a visual sense of the satellite.

Hewitt put a motor on a globe and attached it to a black wire hanger. On the other end of the hanger was a pingpong ball with tiny toothpicks. As the world revolved, the illusion was given of an orbiting satellite.

"It was straight out of a science class, but it worked," said Edwards.

"He wanted to pretend to cool off the country visually," said Edwards. "He had it brought into the studio, and it quickly melted under the hot TV lights. We were really stupid. We could have gone to the cooking show for ice cubes, and then brought the camera in real tight for a close-up."

Successful screenwriter from Oklahoma

A film based on a Hinton book is being released by the Disney studios this summer. Another has been completed by Francis Coppola, who is starting yet another one this month.

Who is S.E. Hinton?

If you're under 25, you probably know already. First of all, Hinton is a she — first names Susan Eloise. She has written only four books, but they have enjoyed immense popularity with the young generation. More than 10 million have been sold.

Ms. Hinton was recently visiting the Disney studios, with Matt Dillon, who stars in all three films based on her novels. The first is "Tex," due this month. The first Coppola film is "The Outsiders." The new one is "Rumblefish," for which Ms. Hinton co-authored the screenplay.

Susie Hinton wears frizzy hair, sloppy clothes and no makeup, and exhibits an Oklahoman independence. Her age? "I'm old enough not to tell." Make it early 30's.

She explained why she uses initials on her books: "I always write my books from a boy's point of view. That's what I am most comfortable with, since I grew up as a tomboy and really didn't understand girls' way of thinking.

"I realized I could reach a larger audience by not putting my full name on my books," she said. "Girls will read books about boys, but boys will not read girls' books."

Ms. Hinton was born and raised in Tulsa. She wrote "The Outsiders" while still a student at Will Rogers High School, drawing characters from the boys she knew. The book was successfully published, providing for her education at the University of Tulsa, where she met her husband, David Inhofe.

'Commuting chanteuse' stars in 'Nine'

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — Karen Akers used to be what you'd call a commuting chanteuse. She'd come here from Washington, D.C., sing in the better cabarets, then go home. Until "Nine," that is.

Now she stays here, a co-star in the hit Broadway musical. She plays Luisa, the patient, suffering wife of a famous, amorous Italian film director troubled by his career, his women and life itself.

"Sheer happenstance," she said of her Broadway debut in the show. "Tommy Tune, the director, was at a party last October with someone named Luciano, who'd listened to my tapes all summer.

"Tommy mentioned he was directing a show with 21 women in it, and Luciano said, 'God, Karen Akers has to be one of them.' Tommy said, 'Who's Karen Akers?'"

Well, she's six feet tall, almond-eyed, has the high cheekbones of a model, is 36 and speaks in a soft, low voice. She's also the wife of a Washington lawyer, Jim Akers, and has two sons, aged six and eight.

She went to Catholic college here and began as a folk singer. In the '70s she graduated to the works of Brel, Weill, Sondheim and Peter Allen, usually getting nice reviews but little fame.

With "Nine" came rave reviews and a lot of fame. And a Tony nomination for her first musical since the days she trod the boards with a small repertory company in Arlington, Va.

Yes, she quietly tells interviewers who keep asking, yes, eight shows a week on Broadway sure does cut a little into one's family life, particularly when one's family lives in Washington.

"Frankly, it's getting worse all the time," she mused. "Jim was asked that question for a magazine in Washington last week and I wanted to know what he said.

"So I asked when I called him that night and he said, 'It's the pits.' Then he laughed and said, 'Well, I didn't say that. I said I could tolerate it because it couldn't last this way forever.'

"Neither of us could. But it's strange, because I've found out what a love I have for this work. I've always known I loved singing, but now I finally have the courage to call myself an actress."

She opened in "Nine" on May 9, having come to Broadway with the show "on a wing and a prayer and a lot of hard work" that began with 12-hour days with "Nine" in its original workshop form last December.

Playing Luisa was exhausting then, is more so now. For that reason, she says, "I really can't do the show more than six months." And she's already looking ahead to other projects, including her possible debut —as a singer — in a movie, "19 Purchase Street."

Norm Crosby derides 'chairman of chairmen' in Las Vegas

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Norm Crosby, the man who murders metaphors for a meal ticket, believes Las Vegas could benefit from an old axiom — if it works, don't fix it.

Having started in the city's lounges in 1964 with the likes of Don Rickles, Shecky Greene and Dan Rowan and Dick Martin, he's watched Las Vegas grow while he evolved into one of its premier entertainers.

Now, he says, corporate chiefs with computerized minds are changing the city.

"When I started playing Vegas it was a lot more fun, less regimented," he said. "The corporations came in and now there's a vice president of vice presidents, a chairman of chairmen. I think the people coming to Vegas feel the difference too. It's not what the original concept was supposed to be.

"I don't understand these people who came in and thought they could make the city better. It was already a winner. They came in with their computers and comptrollers and said this lounge is X number of feet and it's never gonna make this amount of money, so take it out and put in a Keno parlor."

Crosby said that the lounges served a purpose, as did many other aspects of the city that have been eliminated.

"They were not Rhodes scholars, these people who founded this town," Crosby said. "But they were brilliant. They knew everything to do and they did it.

"The secret was to give the customer as much as you could as cheaply as you could because whatever he had left, he spent in the casinos. Today, the corporations figure if a steak sandwich costs $7, they'll charge $15. In the old town, if it cost $7, they'd settle for $5."

The builders of Las Vegas had a reason for the bargain prices, he said.

"They weren't crazy. Nor were they philanthropists. They knew if they gave you the best of everything, you'd be back. You could lose $100,000 and couldn't wait to get back. Nowadays, a guy who comes here and loses $100,000 goes bananas when he has to pay 75 cents for a Coke. That's what's driving them away."

Crosby recalls another era when he and other entertainers would go to the casino between shows, deal blackjack and mingle with players.

"The people loved it," he said. "We'd look at their cards, say 'Whatdaya need? A 4? Here's a 4.' So what if you gave away $30, $40. You got $8 million worth of publicity."

Sportscaster's color commentary done by ear

As a fan, he attends 60 National League games a year at Chicago's Wrigley Field, and went to his first baseball game at age 5.

Since he can't see baseball games, he hears and even smells them.

Blind since birth, Lynch can tell by the crack of the bat whether the ball has been hit hard or just tipped. The crowd reaction tells him about a long fly near the fence or an extraordinary infield play.

The chatter of infielders tells him how the pitcher is faring, and the smell of popcorn and the cries of the vendors tell him about the crowd and the sense of the game.

He called Triton's games in the recent National Junior College Baseball World Series, working with local broadcaster Steve Janakka of radio station KQIL in Grand Junction, where the games were played.

Sometimes, Lynch even does the play-by-play.

Van Zant competitive rock 'n' roller

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

Donnie Van Zant thinks of rock 'n' roll as a baseball game and he gets ready to go on stage like a football player.

He says, "It's a ballgame, the way I look at it. Somebody has to win. I'd rather for it to be .38 Special. A lot of groups say it should be a brotherly thing. I'm really good friends of a lot of groups we play with. But I think there is that competition there. You're out there to sell yourself. We definitely want to be the best at it and have the whole World's Series.

"That was the philosophy of my older brother, Ronnie. We did a 15-day tour with them once. Before every show he'd come backstage and say, 'I hope you boys are going to be real hot tonight.' It made Lynyrd Skynyrd come out and play that much harder. Basically I think that's the way .38 Special thinks today."

"I'm limping today because I jumped off a stage in Cincinnati," he says. "Sometimes I get carried away. I'm a whole different person when I'm up there. The crowd was so responsive and I jumped off the stage onto a cement floor. I bruised both ankles and bruised bones on my heels.

"I get to a gig an hour earlier than everybody else, to tape up, like a football player. I put on Ace bandages to the knee and put two thick pairs of socks over that. I come over that with a soccer shin guard. I pad with a tight bandage and put a pair of shoes on with a pad in the bottom of them half an inch thick."

Van Zant has a cheerful smile and often laughs, more than most rock musicians. Asked if he's enjoying life a lot, he says he is. He has a wife and daughter, Erica, 3, "the prettiest thing around," in Jacksonville, Fla.

"Rock is getting funner and funner to me, it really is. It has taken us eight and a half years to do what we've done. People sing along with our songs.

"We had a top-40 single with the third album and 'Wild-Eyed Southern Boys' sort of went crazy." It's a platinum album. The new, fifth album, on A & M Records, "Special Forces," was No. 12 and climbing on the best-selling chart of July 3 and the single, "Caught Up in You," was No. 11 and climbing on July 3.

Donnie Van Zant usually wears a hat made like the hats his late brother Ronnie wore. He says, "It's a weird thing. I really wore a hat before Ronnie wore a hat. But Skynyrd was on its way. I used to get criticized a lot for wearing a hat to try to look like him. It bothered me a little bit. I quit wearing it for a little while.

"After the crash, I thought, they can write anything they want to write. The hat means something to me."

Peter Rudge, who managed Lynyrd Skynyrd, also managed .38 Special. Van Zant says, "When the crash happened, I felt like his heart went away. He lost a lot there. Along with everybody."

Design for Today

by Belle Glaros

Food preparation today faces a two-fold challenge to both health and pocketbook. The seventies' trend toward exercise and simpler eating habits has greatly curtailed heart diseases. Today, even the French are abandoning somewhat rich sauces for the inherent tastiness and wholesomeness of fresh foods. Today's prices demand both a better understanding of the cuts of the butcher's cleaver and of preparations which make the most of poultry, fish vegetables and other alternatives. We intend to keep you informed, entertained and healthy by reading this column in the coming months.

The staff of LA BODEGA Is delighted to present this interesting and informative colimn for the reading enjoyment and edification or our many readers. In the weeks to come, we will be discussing many issues i the world of gourmet food. In the interim, we look forward to servingt you at our restaurant. In Midland, wer are located at 2700 N. Big Spring, (Tel. 684-5594) In Odessa, you will find us at 1024 E. 7th St. (Tel. 333-4469) Watch for Grand Opening soon in Abilene. Restaurant: 11-10 closed Tues. Bar: 11-midnight closed Tues.

'Tron' quintessential video game

"Tron" is the quintessential video game, and it is bound to make your conscience wince just a bit the next time you send gladiators to their death and starships to their doom.

This Walt Disney production is rated PG and is the story of Kevin Flynn (Jeff Bridges), a computer whiz-kid and video parlor proprietor whose program designs for video games have been stolen by Ed Dillinger (David Warner), senior executive of ENCOM corporation.

Since the theft, Dillinger has reprogrammed a computer known as the Master Control Program (MCP) to hide the deception, and only a "watchdog" program called "Tron" can locate the information. But MCP has grown in intelligence by 2,415 times its original program and controls Dillinger as well as all computer functions, refusing access even to the programmer of Tron.

So, with the help of Tron's programmer, Allen Bradley (Bruce Boxleitner) and mutual friend Lora (Cindy Morgan), Flynn attempts access to MCP. To his surprise, MCP has him disassembled and reassembled by laser beam into the computer matrix.

Flynn's fantastical voyage is the essence of this computer chip fantasy where the good guys glow blue and the bad guys are traffic light red. In fact, most of "Tron" is visually like a video parlor — cold and dark, with only basic rainbow colors for variety.

At times, the sight of a human face is like an oasis in the software seascape of bits and chips, but the screenplay by director Steven Lisberger anticipates this problem. Lisberger has caricatured computer counterparts for the real-life programmers — from the "old-timer" program designer, Walter (Bernard Hughes), to Dillinger. These electronic twins preserve that link with their human "users," while reinforcing the idea that we are part of everything we create, good and bad.

"Tron" boasts a host of computer, graphic and animation specialists who together with set designer Dean Mitzner create the fascinating video world. Even the costume designs bear up the futuristic vision with anatomic body models of irridescent arteries.

As might be expected, the music by Wendy Carlos is heavily synthesized, blending like computer Muzak, with no one melody a standout. But, instead of "shooting the piano player," it's time to "shoot the mixer." The music is so loud you may have to cup your ears to hear the dialogue and cover them to stifle the music. After some experimentation, it seemed to me the center of the theatre is the best place to sit — the place where the sound is most balanced.

With some straightforward and consistent editing, "Tron" moves right along, but the impact of the digital world can be dulling except, perhaps, to already addicted video wizards. "Tron" speaks to a select audience and if you take no pleasure in the '80s technology of small screens, digital displays, terminals, memories or "Pac Man," "Tron" is likely to activate your "Tilt" light.

Even the romantic element is like a missing bit that should have stayed missing. Almost as an afterthought we see the "programs" kiss and expect at least static electricity, but not even a spark, literally or otherwise.

"Tron" is for the video-wise and the computer-canny and except for some computer jokes anyone can enjoy (like "programs" sharing "bit brains" insults and suggesting "There's not a circuit built that can hold you!") "Tron" is the exclusive domain of the new breed of small screen viewer.

'Road Warrior' portrays new kind of gas war

By BOB THOMAS

"THE ROAD WARRIOR" takes place in the not-too-distant future, when the good guys and the bad guys are fighting small wars over the remaining supplies of fossil fuel. This Australian-made film is a product of rare imagination, stark in its depiction of a future that is not beyond the realm of possibility. George Miller uses the grim landscapes to heighten tension of the battle between possessors of a tiny oil field and an attacking army of leather-clad bikers who are totally fearsome. Miller has an inspired touch with car chases and crashes; he makes "The Dukes of Hazzard" seem like a Soapbox Derby. Mel Gibson, cut from the same Duke Wayne mold of the silent man of action, brings immense presence t the film as savior of the good guys. He could be a star on any continent. Rated R because of excessive, often bloody violence.

'Follow the Fleet' drafts Astaire into Navy

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — With a grateful bow in the direction of the late show, I had thought that my viewing of the old Fred Astaire movies was complete, going back to "Flying Down to Rio." But I had missed "Follow the Fleet," an omission rectified by the showing of this 1936 musical the other night on TV.

It was illuminating and great fun, this ancient epic summed up by TV Guide as: "Breezy tale of sailors and girls."

And who else was in the picture? Well, there was, incredibly, Randolph Scott, who would have been more comfortable astride a horse. Randolph Scott in a sailor outfit? Midway through the yarn, after wiser heads realized how sartorially quaint he looked in bell bottoms, Randolph Scott was promoted to petty officer. His name, I feel obliged to tell you, is Bilge.

History is well served in "Follow the Fleet," which includes a scene where Astaire, in white tie and tails (the Navy was more lenient in those days) is about to romp into his "Let's Face the Music and Dance" number. Around him are several unknown actresses. One is a sleek, tall blond named Lucille Ball. Another is Joy Hodges.

Doesn't ring a bell, that name? Well, Joy Hodges, not long thereafter, would be of assistance in acquiring a screen test for a friend of hers, a baseball announcer who was covering the Chicago Cubs in spring training at Catalina Island. He was traveling with the Cubs for a Des Moines radio station which broadcast their games re-created by the announcer from wire reports. Ronald Reagan, of course.

And there's a pretty good singer in her first film. That would be Harriet Hilliard, a vocalist then with Ozzie Nelson's orchestra. Flip those calendar pages and they are the stars of "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet" and the parents of Ricky and David. And let's see now, in the scene wherein Astaire is leading a sailor band, the saxophone player is Tony Martin...

Historically, aside from the footnotes of trivia, "Follow the Fleet" was the fourth Astaire-Rogers movie. But it was the first in which the tone was less than upper-crust and continental. Astaire pops up in tails but he is nonetheless, in most of the scenes, a gum-chewing sailor. And Ginger Roge's, who had been his partner in a dancing act, is a hostess in a San Francisco dance hall hard by the harbor. It would be as close as an Astaire-Rogers film ever came to rubbing elbows with the proletariat.

The plot is virtually indecipherable, its vacuities sufficient to sink the battleship on which Fred and his buddies are berthed. And the old comic reliables of the Astaire-Rogers films are not at hand — no Edward Everett Horton, no Helen Broderick, no Eric Blore, no Oscar Levant who, by the way, once offered the most accurate of all the descriptions of Fred Astaire's shy, loping dignity and his incomparable sense of grace and flow.

"Unstressed elegance," Oscar said of Astaire's moves. The two words are a far remove from the report issued on Astaire after his first screen test in Hollywood. Some have called the line apocryphal, a part of legend. I prefer to believe that it is true, that the report on Fred, fresh from the Broadway stage and facing the cameras for the first time, went as follows:

"Can't act. Can't sing. Balding. Can dance a little."

The dances are why we watch the Astaire-Rogers movies and, in "Follow the Fleet," they are marvelous in their buoyancy, the incomparable gentility and impeccable manners in free-flow, the lithe power. "Fred gave Ginger class and Ginger gave Fred sex appeal," said Katharine Hepburn and she may be right.

The attitudes in "Follow the Fleet" are strictly mid-1930s with, however, one foray anticipating the feminist future. In this scene, Harriet Hilliard is about to enter the Paradise Ballroom.

"I see," she replies. "Women aren't even admitted to Paradise without a man."

The great songwriters of the day — Gershwin, Cole Porter, Irving Berlin — always wanted Fred Astaire to introduce their works, such as "Lady Be Good" and "A Foggy Day" and "Change Partners." The songs inevitably became timeless standards — as timeless as Astaire himself.

Actor leaves show business to play Lincoln

By PETER S. HAWES

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Actor Richard Blake was sick of struggling, playing little reviews in community theaters in Chicago, so — because he was "6-foot-4 and had an ugly face," he says — he decided to impersonate Abraham Lincoln.

Twice a year for the past four years, Blake has left his home in Scottsdale, Ariz., packed a portable set of scenery into a light blue van and driven himself cross-country, portraying the 16th president of the United States.

"If I'd been six or seven inches shorter, I would have picked on someone else," says Blake, who appeared at the Wadsworth Atheneum in Hartford and in the University of Hartford's Lincoln Theater in West Harvard recently.

Blake once played Broadway, but gave it up.

"There are two words in show business — show and business. There are always actors looking for jobs, starving. That's the business. I'm not suffering," he says.

Blake says he is paid well, although he will not reveal his salary, which is paid by the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co. The company bought the right to use the Lincoln name from the late president's son in 1905 and Blake's tour is a company public service designed "to bring our heritage around the country."

All of his performances — from mock presidential luncheons and speeches at civic and corporate functions to mock news conferences before student reporters to the one-man play he wrote and performs — are free.

While he admits that the novelty of playing one of the most famous men in American history has worn off — "I approach it as an occupation" — he looks forward to the question-and-answer sessions he holds when the audiences are small.

The topics are limited. No questions about current affairs. No trivia questions. Just substantive queries on the Lincoln life and his years in office.

With Lincoln-like looks and an equally persuasive delivery, Blake gives "pat answers" to most questions. "The questions repeat themselves," he explains.

But when he is asked a difficult question, "I do as all politicians do. I keep talking until they forget what the question was."

Blake's sources are among the world's best. Before starting his national tour in 1978, he spent months researching Lincoln's past. Most of the time was spent at Eastern Illinois University, which offers a bachelor's degree in Lincoln studies.

Theatre I holds auditions for 'Superstar' roles

Auditions for Midland Community Theatre's production of "Jesus Christ Superstar" will be held Monday and Tuesday and July 18 at 2 p.m. and July 19 at 7 p.m. in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. Audition material is available in the theater's business office.

Roles are available for 25 men and 10 women with a singing chorus of 50 additional voices. Besides the strong vocal requirements, on stage actors will need to possess the ability to work in ensemble. Dancers will also be needed in the production. They will be required to sing, through not to the same degree as the soloists.

"Jesus Christ Superstar" will be the next show in Theatre I. It is scheduled to open Sept. 10 and continue for a nine-performance run. Rehearsals will begin in mid-July and continue until the play's opening date.

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivas lent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage bases upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.

Soft drinks start out as concentrates, manufactured and shipped to the bottling plants...

An American institution

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

In summertime the living may be easy, but it's also HOT!

When people get hot, they also get thirsty, and most don't reach for water, milk or lemonade, they reach for a tall, cool, refreshing soft drink.

America's love affair with soft drinks has been going on for many years now, with no end in sight.

TODAY'S SOFT DRINKS come in many different-sized containers, from 6-1/2 ounce bottles to 10 ounce bottles, to pints and all the way to two-liter giants. They also come in various flavors and colors, from dark colas through root beers, oranges, strawberries, ginger ale, to clear lemon-line.

The Dr. Pepper bottling plant in Stanton bottles soft drinks to be distributed in nine counties of West Texas, including Midland, Martin, Ector, Dawson, Andrews, Borden, Glasscock, Crane and Howard.

According to Jim Trimble, plant manager, the plant is equipped with three capping machines, which enable production of any size soft drink in bottles from 6-1/2 ounce to two-liter.

"We get the concentrate, mix it with liquid sugar. It goes into the blending system, then goes to the filler as finished," he said. "We can run bottles as fast as the blending equipment can keep it up. For two-liter bottles, we get 40-42 bottles a minute. Ordinarily, when we get on one package, (size of bottle and flavor of soft drink), we'll run all day on it. It saves labor from changing the equipment over."

He said the flavors bottled at the plant in Stanton are Dr. Pepper, Sugar Free Dr. Pepper, 7-Up, Big Red and Frosty Root Beer.

TRIMBLE SAID THE SYRUP CONCENTRATES to make the soft drinks come from different areas, and their ingredients are not known to plant operators. "The formula for Dr. Pepper is a closely guarded secret," he said. "It's a combination of several different fruit flavors. There are several imitations, but they can't be exactly the same because there's a law against it. If a customer asked me what flavors are in it, I'd have to say 'I don't know', because they don't even tell us. Seven-Up has a lemon and lime flavored base, but as far as everything in there, we don't know."

SUMMERTIME IS THE BEST TIME for soft drinks. Trimble said that in summer, consumption of "flavored-type beverages probably doubles. Dr. Pepper and 7-Up gain about 25 percent. There are really only about four months during the year when sales taper off. And national-brand soft drinks don't taper off that much. In my opinion, what makes sales taper off more than anything is wet weather. Maybe people just aren't as thirsty when it rains."

The plant in Stanton handles only bottles, not cans, and Trimble said maintains an average inventory of 15,000 cases. Some of these bottles are the returnable kind. Trimble said, "Returnable bottles coming in here get washed in a hot water-caustic solution to completely sanitize them, and then are reused. They can be used indefinitely, until they are lost or broken. Some can last as long as 20 years, but normally we don't get but about 20-25 trips out of them. The 32-ounce bottles we only get about five trips out of because the threads (for the twist-on cap) are not as rugged. Trips are from the plant to the market to the consumer."

TRIMBLE SAID THE BOTTLES originally are manufactured by different glass companies around the country, including one in Waco and several in Oklahoma.

The sugar used is a liquid sugar, he said, and though the amount used varies, depending on what soft drink is being bottled, the plant averages using about 5000 gallons of sugar a month.

The plant also includes a small laboratory where the employees run quality control tests on the soft drinks made there.

"They use well water — that's why the plant was originally put here (in Stanton), because of the well water," said Gene Minter, manager of Tri-City Beverages in Midland. "The water is tested once a month to make sure it meets health department standards."

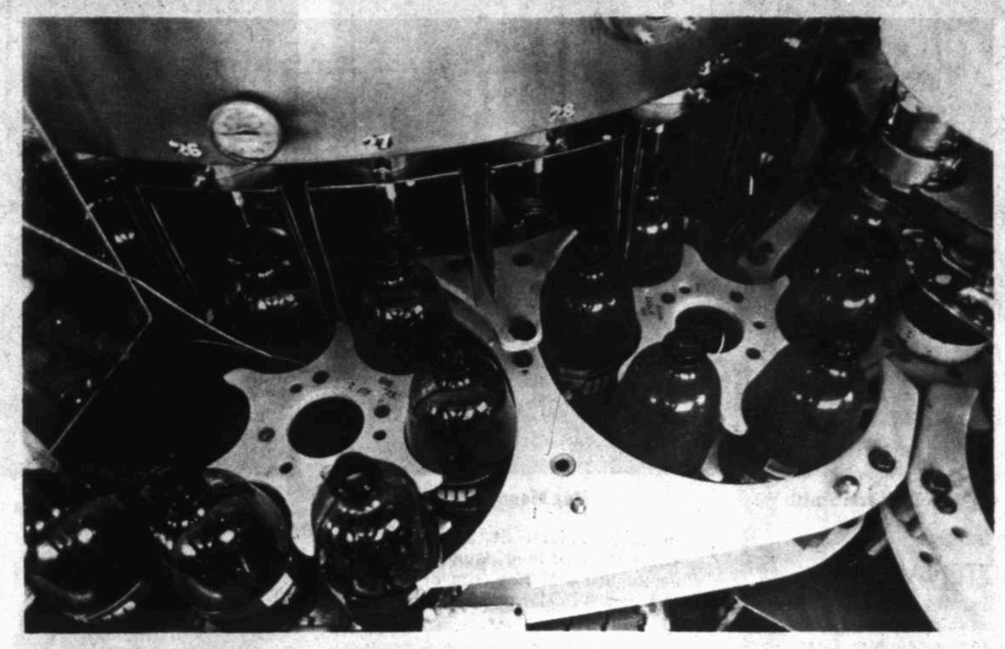
TRI—CITY BEVERAGES IS ONE of the warehouses which handle distribution of the soft drinks bottled at the Stanton plant. "Our main line is Dr. Pepper," said Minter. "Our second line is 7-Up. We also handle the Crush flavors, A & W Root Beer, Country Time Lemonade and Big Red."

"Dr. Pepper is one of the oldest soft drinks there is," he said. "It was started in the late part of the last century. Dr. Pepper has been very localized. Only in fairly recent times has Dr. Pepper attained national distribution, say since the end of World War II."

"The major bottling plant for this area is in Abilene," Minter said. "All of our cans and the bulk of our product come from the Abilene facility."

He said the warehouse in Midland has a capacity of approximately 40,000 cases of soft drinks. "There are 84 cases on each pallet. It doesn't take them long to add up."

MINTER SAID SALES OF SOFT DRINKS peak during hot summer months. "June, July and August are the three big months." he said. "In the soft drink industry, we have never been able to take off on the Fourth of July."



...The concentrate is mixed with water and liquid sugar, blended and sent to the filler. The bottles are shown here, left, being automatically filled with soft drink by the filler machine. After the bottles are filled they are sent to the capping machine, where they are fitted with the right-sized caps.

...In Stanton, the filled and inspected bottles are placed in cases by Johnny Hinojosa, above right, to be shipped to warehouses in the area for distribution to markets and consumers...

...Above, Johnny Paul, warehouse manager of Tri-City Beverages in Midland, stacks cases of soft drinks in the local warehouse. Both the bottling plant in Stanton and the warehouse in Midland distribute soft drinks to nine counties of West Texas, including Midland, Martin, Borden, Andrews, Glasscock, Ector, Crane, Dawson and Howard.

From the warehouse, the soft drinks are sent to distriution points, such as grocery stores, vending machines and convenience stores, where they may be purchased by consumers...

THEY MAKE MORE MONEY THAN HALF THE PEOPLE ON EARTH . .

But they don't make anything until you pay them!

IF YOUR PAYDAY IS FRIDAY AND YOUR BOSS SAYS, "COME BACK ON WEDNESDAY,"

HOW WOULD YOU FEEL?

Carriers don't make anything until they collect from enough customers to pay their bill for the papers they've received. You are the one who pays them. As independent merchants they buy their papers from us wholesale and make their profit by selling to you at retail. If you're late with your payment, your carrier must dig into his or her pocket to pay for your papers. Keep them in business, and they'll keep you in papers.

Remember, your newspaper carrier likes that secure payday feeling as well as you do. Paying him or her promptly means prompt delivery.

PAINLESS PERMANENT HAIR REMOVAL

You don't have to take our word for it! Read what medical experts have to say about the "no needle" electronic tweezer method of hair removal.

"Using ultrasonic waves is worlds better than conventional electrolysis primarily because it is absolutely painless. It is also extremely safe, somewhat more effective since fewer hairs return, and faster since many more hairs can be removed in a sitting because of the lack of discomfort.

You'll neither hear nor feel a thing. There is no questions that this is the preferred method for removal of unwanted hair.

Electrolysis hurts . . . of course the (elecrolysis) method is not 100% effective . . . many sittings are usually required since the patient can stand only just so much pain."

If you have any questions about removing your unwanted hair painlessly and permanently, call us for FREE consultation and demonstration. It is the intelligent thing to do.

Cutting fuel costs is elementary

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's schools can cut energy bills up to $2 million a day without increasing their budgets, according to an industry report.

Elementary and secondary schools can save 15 to 30 percent on annual fuel bills by managing energy use better with a time-shared computer system, the study by Honeywell's Energy Management Information Center reveals.

The time-sharing system allows schools to share the services of a central energy-control computer and its operators to manage energy use. The computer, which is linked to a school by telephone lines, operates air conditioners, heaters, lights, boilers, motors, pumps and fans at peak efficiency.

Country-wide, the schools could save from $358 million to $716 million a year by time-sharing a computer.

Steinem: Women will make big difference in next election

By MILDRED HAMILTON
Hearst Feature Service

In the first issue of Ms. Magazine ten years ago, Gloria Steinem wrote an article on voting patterns of women, military spending and health and social welfare issues.

"No one took it seriously," said Steinem, one of the founding editors of the only national feminist magazine in the country. "Then Ronald Reagan's stand against women's rights made it partisan. It has taken 10 years for the cultural vote pattern of women to become visible. Women do vote differently; we'll see the results this November.

Steinem calls the last decade "the beginning of the 'second wave' of feminism in this country. "It means not only the Equal Rights Amendment and full entry into the constitution, but the right to own our bodies and reproductive systems. The 'second wave' has set out to end women's status as a means of reproduction controlled by others, and unpaid or underpaid labor."

Her own look ahead sees that legal and social equality. "I see change and enormous growth in every community, but I am discouraged when I look at Washington and some of the state legislatures."

The states that did not ratify the ERA, Steinem stressed, "have hardly any women in their legislatures. If they had women as half of the members, we would have had the amendment long ago."

The 49-year-old editor-writer-lecturer pointed to two other blocks: the Mormon church and the insurance industry.

"A revelation to the Mormons that women are equal — much like the one they had that black males are equal — could have brought about immediate passage of the ERA."

She linked part of the nation's insurance industry — "the last big industry without federal regulation" — to much of the hostility in southern and western states. "Many of these legislators are insurance agents motivated to keep the actuarial tables unequal."

The main lesson the women's movement has learned in the 10-year ERA fight, Steinem said, is the "lack of democracy in state legislatures, where far too many are controlled by special interests."

She finds "a backlash against the Moral Majority backlash. The country is getting fed up with their ways. Because most Americans don't vote at all, the small vote controlled by their churches can make a difference. The women's movement is determined not to let that happen."

One way is enlistment in a bipartisan network of every woman touched by any women's program. "If we can get our own vote, we can beat the Moral Majority in a minute. The last presidential election had the oldest richest, whitest, most male electorate in history. Women have to see that they can make a difference."

Institute helps young burn victims

By ELEANOR ROBERTS
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — Two-year-old Joey sits propped up in his hospital bed at the Shriners Burns Institute, his tiny face a grotesque Halloween mask. His flesh is bright red. His features are hardly discernible — horribly disfigured. His lips are swollen open and his eyes are swollen shut.

Yet, although Joey will never be normal, if all goes well he will become an efficient individual and probably able to work.

There's a long, hard road ahead — years of reconstructive surgery, as Dr. John Remensnyder, chief of staff at the Institute, points out. Years of pain and frustration, of struggling to adapt to a world that recoils in shock.

Joey is one of hundreds of children — many from as far away as Bolivia, Casablanca, Kenya and the Philippines — who have been treated at the renowned Shriners Burns Institute since it opened its doors in 1968. Some recoveries have been miraculous — in a class with Lourdes. And the remarkable thing, in these days when medical costs are stratospheric, is that all these children up to age 18 are treated free of charge.

How do children like Joey, with 85 percent of his body burned in a gasoline explosion, cope with long months in the hospital and even longer years of returning for surgery? How do they handle pain? What approach does the dedicated staff take?

"Some children are so badly burned that bending an elbow or raising an arm can be excruciatingly painful," Anita E. Wright, Administrative Supervisor of Nursing, said. "But exercise must continue to salvage or preserve function, so we focus on the positive — always encouraging the children.

"We bandage their favorite doll. We work with puppets and Snoopy dogs enclosed in plastic, trying to reach them through an object familiar to them. And they respond well to object transference, making a real effort when we say, 'Snoopy wants to see how high you can raise your arm.' "

Few people realize the terrible hurdles young burn victims face. "There is total body dressing change twice a day in some cases. One-inch bandages saturated with silver nitrate require changing; they cause terrific pain in many cases," Wright pointed out. "Two nurses may work on a patient for as long as two hours."

Children get depressed in these long, tortuous, drawn-out cases. Mom has to leave; the loss to a little one is catastrophic. Nurses and members of the treatment teams become surrogate mothers to these youngsters.

"They require a lot of touching," Wright said. 'They need to be held for reassurance and comforting. But they are so badly burned, it is sometimes impossible. That is where the soft, soothing voice, the telling of a story, is so valuable. But there is always a line we must not step over. We can never play up an injury or we'll have a child who will act handicapped," Wright added.

There are so many things normal children take for granted that are denied burn victims. "Nutrition is important, but they must have something that they can deal with," Wright emphasized. "Getting orange or tomato juice through raw lips can be terribly painful, and they rarely can manage one of their favorite foods — spaghetti."

A multi-disciplined teaching approach is used, utilizing experts to manage special requirements. The nutritional team is sensitive to how complicated food can be for these children.

Re-socialization is important — learning to play, speak and re-pattern life. Combing hair or brushing teeth for a child whose arm is so rigid it often takes months to move it 10 inches from the body is a tremendous feat.

Adjustment is particularly hard for teenagers. Cindy, 14,whose nightgown went up in flames in a fire when she was nine, has made 20 return visits for reconstructive surgery after horrifying facial disfigurement and is now waiting transferral of a large, thin flap of skin from her upper chest and neck to her face.

"When you realize how upset a normal adolescent is about a mere blemish, you can understand how much support and encouragement a young burn victim needs," said Wright.

Re-entry from hospital to "normal" life is a tremendous step. By coordinating physical therapy, hospital readmissions, re-entry to school and social life, providing for follow up, special care and social services, the hospital guarantees that the care of the burned child continues in an uninterrupted flow after initial recovery.

"The three biggest problems are pain, anxiety and depression," said Dr. Frederick J. Stoddard, director of psychiatry at the Institute. "We work with the patient towards the future. There are many things we are able to do to help the disfigured child cope."

Crafts increasingly popular

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

While mass production has made handcrafts unnecessary for survival, it has not slowed a recent revival of interest in the creation and purchase of handmade objects for the home.

The interest today is, if anything, greater than it used to be. A study done several years ago found participation in arts and crafts was one of the few leisure-time activities on the rise.

Furthermore, in each of the 50 states, there are active organizations devoted to crafts. Nationwide, 16 general periodicals cover crafts, along with seven newspapers and newsletters. There is an almost constant round of fairs, exhibitions and sales, and even the sale of crafts kits has risen in recent years.

Some craftsmen think these kits give crafts a bad name. But Carol Sedestrom, president of the American Craft Council's marketing division, does not agree.

American Craft puts on five markets a year — at Baltimore in February, Dallas in March, Rhinebeck, N.Y., in June, Newport, R.I., in July, and San Francisco in August — where craftsmen get a chance to sell their work to retailers and consumers. Total proceeds of the events is around $10 million a year.

Mrs. Sedestrom says most of the kits people buy never get finished. "So they also learn how difficult it is to acquire the skills. That should make people appreciate that craftsmen are highly skilled — and their work is valuable."

She compares crafts to baseball. In baseball, there are many levels. Some move up through the ranks from sandlot ball to the major leagues. Those who participate enjoy the game, whatever their level.

Those who displayed their wares at a recent five-day Fair at Rhinebeck were more in the World Series than the sandlot category. Some 2,600 entrants competed for the available 580 booths.

A visit to the exhibits confirmed that usable objects created by the right hands can become objects of art as well. Some of those showing their work said one or more examples had been purchased by museums.

A visitor might be forgiven if the objects began to blur a bit after the first hundred stalls. But as in any museum or gallery, the special works that speak personally to a viewer had the power to captivate anew.

There was excitement in seeing familiar materials used in a new way. A constant stream of people filled the booth occupied by Ward Hartenstein of Rochester, N.Y., for example. They were entranced by the ceramic musical instruments he created. The music is made in most cases by the tinkling of marbles cascading down ceramic structures of Hartenstein's devising.

Ceramic sinks by Russell Kagan of Hartford, Wis., proved that even the most utilitarian objects can be transformed into an art form. And Jane Saur's hand-woven baskets of waxed and unwaxed linen and silk arrested a steady stream of viewers, as well.

Ms. Saur, who is from St. Louis, is also a painter. She offered an illustration of the fascination that one or another craft will sometimes hold for an individual. Seven years ago she saw a book on basket making and began to experiment. "I haven't painted since," she said.

Peter Adams, a woodworker in residence at the Penland (N.C.) School, was showing wood furniture that was all curves and planes. He calls the pieces table-benches. After exhibiting at Rhinebeck for the first time in 1981, Adams sold one of the pieces to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Jim Garrison's "paintings" of leather — stretched like canvas and then incised and colored with leather dyes applied with an air brush — showed that an unlikely material in the hands of an artist still has the power to surprise and reward the senses.

New system for victims of overdose

By T. LEE HUGHES
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Researchers have developed a system they say will help provide faster and more-reliable treatment for patients believed to be suffering from a barbiturate overdose.

Using the system, an emergency-room doctor can more readily determine whether a symptom such as a coma is largely caused by an overdose or another problem such as a head injury, researchers say.

The system, reported in today's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, also can help the doctor assess whether the patient is a drug addict.

"Hopefully the doctor will be able to diagnose (the patient) more quickly and improve his evaluation of him," said Dr. Margaret M. McCarron, one of the Los Angeles researchers involved.

She said that in the past, doctors have faced a problem in treating suspected victims of an overdose of so-called "short-acting" barbiturates — some kinds of sleeping pills or the "yellows, reds and rainbows" commonly sold by street pushers.

A doctor could assess the physical symptoms. Laboratory tests could show the amount of barbiturate in the patient's blood.

But it was difficult in individual cases to determine how much of the drug should have caused what symptoms, the researchers say.

That is because a person with pneumonia or a head injury, for example, would react more severely to a barbiturate than one without. But it would take more barbiturate to produce severe symptoms in a drug addict than in a non-addict.

"We have been using the tests, but we had difficulty in interpreting them in many cases," Ms. McCarron, associate medical director of the Los Angeles County-University of Southern California Medical Center, said in a telephone interview.

Greeks stress hospitality to tourists

By KERIN HOPE
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — After a disappointing tourist season throughout Greece last year, the nation's tourism authorities have put the word out that skimping on hospitality does not pay.

"We've reached the point where sun and sea are simply not enough to attract foreign tourists," says Stelios Panagopoulos, secretary-general of the Greek Tourist Organization. "We have to make sure the beaches stay clean, standards of service improve and the people not go for quick profit."

On the rocky island of Mykonos, which has set the pace and trend for Greek tourism for more than 20 years, Mayor Matthew Apostolou opened the new season by ordering unsightly overhead cables moved underground.

Despite the boom, the island has managed to preserve its old-world charm and traditional ways, and officials say Mykonos' success as Greece's tourist mecca is its stubborn refusal to provide services and facilities that seek fast profits.

In many other Greek resorts, however, crowded beaches, inflated prices and sullen service at giant modern hotels have painted a different image of vacationing in Greece.

Last year 5.6 million tourists came to Greece, more than in 1980 but well below the 1979 record of more than 6 million. This year Panagopoulos expects "a small drop in numbers."

"A 3,000-year-old sense of hospitality gave us the same word for guest and stranger, but it's often forgotten in the rush," said a Mykonos hotelier who asked not to be named.

Tourism earnings totaled just under $2 billion in 1981, only up 8 percent from 1980. Per-capita spending rose minimally from $361 to $369.

Among the steps being taken to help attract foreign tourists:

—On Mykonos, a sewage-treatment plant is close to completion, making certain the island's blue Aegean Sea waters remain clear. A desalination unit supplies extra water for increased demand in the rainless summer months.

—As an experiment, authorities decided to cast a blind eye on nude swimming and sunbathing on remote beaches. Elsewhere in Greece, nude bathers are routinely fined or jailed for offending public morality. Panagopoulos has asked police to treat nudists more leniently this summer.

—The authorities have ordered garbage disposal facilities to be improved swiftly in major tourist centers. Hotel inspections are more frequent this year, with fines for slack service.

Black male club dates to 1800s

By THERESA HUMPHREY
Associated Press Writer

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Following the American Civil War, the men who worked as waiters, butlers, coachmen, janitors and cooks for Wilmington's white aristocrats had more than their black skin in common. They all had Mondays off.

It became a tradition — for men only, that is. And in 1893, that tradition became the Monday Club Inc.

Now boasting a membership of about 187 men, they still play a little cards. But the liquor they drink is legal. And the men, who range in age from the early 20s to 84, are now doctors, lawyers, businessmen and other professionals instead of servants.

The Monday club celebrates its 89th anniversary this year.

"The club has always been the type of club to inspire men to do a little better," said State Sen. Herman M. Holloway Sr., D-Wilmington. "And it has, until this day, remained a place where all mix in an atmosphere of complete relaxation. The unwritten rule is to leave your title on the doorstep. It equalizes men."

As the membership shifted from domestics, so did the talk in the clubhouse.

Prior to the administration of President Franklin Roosevelt, Holloway described the club as the "fountainhead" of the Republican Party in Wilmington.

"Out of the total membership of 60 to 70 men, only three were Democrats," he said. "The GOP was so entrenched here. For pure survival, blacks had to give support to the GOP machine."

But the club's Republican leanings changed, as the evolution in membership continued.

"The newer, younger members today, are pressuring for a more activist image in the community," the 60-year-old Holloway said. "There's no resistance, but there is impatience on the part of those wanting to go faster, as opposed to those lounging. They feel the club is strong enough to have commentary on issues."

Outsiders say that the club is where major decisions concerning blacks in Delaware are made, and that the members are the "movers and shakers" of the black community there.

Although the club remains all black, that designation was removed from the organization's charter about 12 years ago. Still, there have not been any applications from non-blacks, says Carrol T. Bailey, the club's 74-year-old president.

There are no plans to add women to the roster.

"We have special days — what we call open house," Bailey said. "I always thought it was nice for the women to come in and see what we were doing. We started it 20 years ago."

Aside from the special days, women are allowed in the lounge areas of the club as guests of a member.

The club annually awards a college scholarship to a qualified male high school graduate.

All applicants are screened, not only by members, but by the local police department. Convicted felons are not allowed.

The clubhouse stays locked and members have their own keys, so no one knows for sure what goes on behind the closed door.

"We maintain it in the style that's comfortable to us," Holloway said. "It's the only place in Delaware where I can go and carry on and cut up."

Scotland: Ike's castle near the sea

By JANET LOWE
Copley News Service

A cliff-top castle by the sea, a keep, a cottage and boathouse below on the beach, woods and a walled garden — the setting for a Gothic novel if I've ever seen one.

As a matter of fact, we discovered Western Scotland's Culzean Castle as easily as an innocent heroine stumbles into the setting of a Gothic mystery romance.

We'd found ourselves ahead of our traveling schedule, with an afternoon to — well, not exactly kill — let's say to squander. Passing through the Ayrshire village of Maybole, we saw a signpost to Culzean and decided to follow a whim.

As we passed through the gates and motored down the long, winding lane toward the castle, I knew mystery, or at least intrigue, lurked nearby.

But first about the estate.

Culzean (locals insist it's pronounced Cull-een, with emphasis on the -een) was owned by the Kennedys of Dunure, once headed by the earl of Cassillis and now represented by the marquis of Ailsa. The marquis gave his former home to the National Trust of Scotland for a country park.

The 565-acre estate includes a swan pond with its own tea cottage, a camellia house, orangerie and a fountain park.

"It's just a new castle," observed my disappointed traveling companion, who prefers nothing younger than the Tower of London's original buildings.

Culzean was extensively expanded, rebuilt and remodeled in the mid-1700s by the architect Robert Adam and is considered one of the most perfect examples of 18th century classical architecture.

Originally a North Atlantic fort, the castle became a military outpost again during the Napoleonic Wars. The entry hall is hung with a vast collection of weapons from that conflict. During World War II, the castle was given to Dwight D. Eisenhower for use for the rest of his life. Eisenhower was then supreme commander of the Allied Forces in Europe, and used Culzean during his visits to Scotland. A small museum has been established in the room where the general stayed.

The house, famous for its absolute symmetry, is furnished for living more than for show. From the great drum tower, visitors get a clear view of Ailsa Craig, a craggy lighthouse rock 10 miles offshore in the Firth of Clyde.

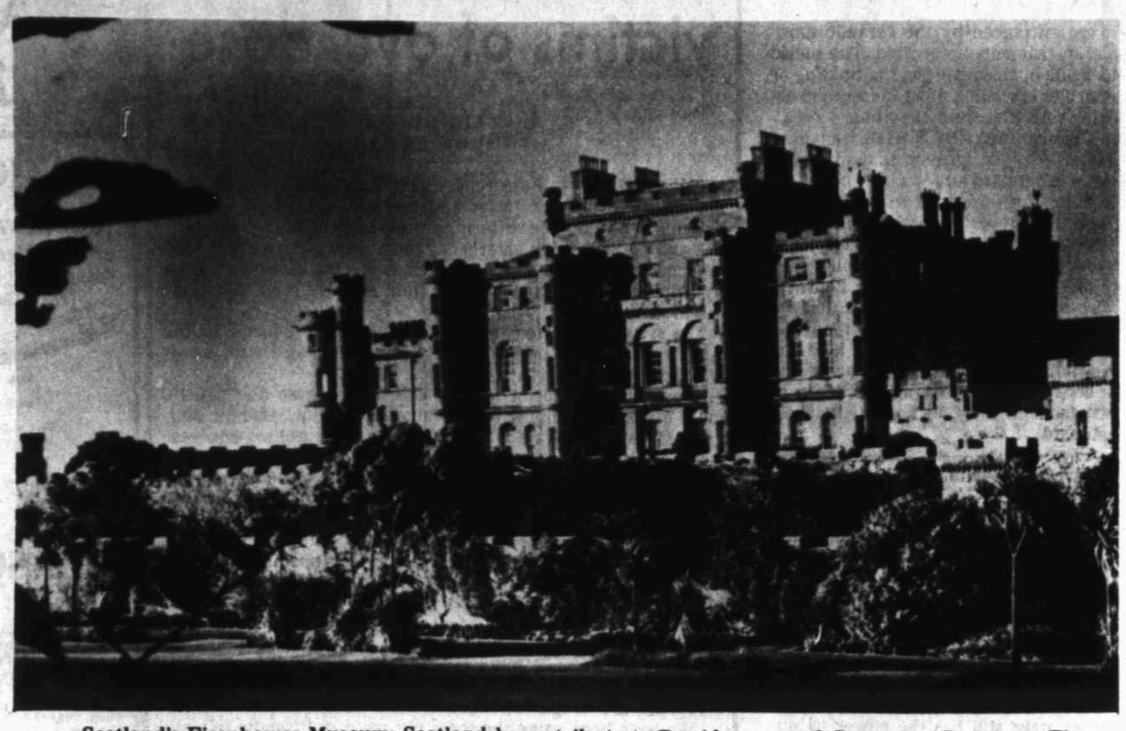
Because it's a country park, visitors to Culzean virtually have full access to the gardens, fields, woodlands, cliffs and beaches. It easily takes a full day to explore the avenues bordered with silver firs, the walled vegetable garden, which still feeds those living on the estate, and savor the view from the long stairs down to the beach.

The entrance fee to the park is modest, though there is an additional charge for touring the castle.

This west coast region has exceptionally mild weather for Scotland, allowing the cultivation of fruit, vegetables and flowers not possible to grow in other areas of Scotland. One Scottish writer described his delight at "snowdrops in the spring, hydrangeas in the autumn and bamboo all year around."

But the castle has been the scene of skulduggery and romance as well. In 1602, Sir Thomas Kennedy of Culzean was murdered on the beach near the castle, bringing to a merciful end, historians say, years of turmoil and feuds, feuds which Sir Thomas had done much to foment.

The ninth earl, who brought agriculture reform to Ayrshire, and the 10th earl, who finished remodeling the castle, were both bachelors. The 10th earl left his title and lands to a cousin, an American who had been born and brought up in New York. The cousin had lost everything in the American Revolution, only to find his fortune miraculously revived by the inheritance of one of the most exotic and productive estates in Scotland.



Scotland's Eisenhower Museum: Scotland has a tribute to President — and General — Dwight D. Eisenhower at Culzean Castle in Scotland.

Old English inn found Snoring

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times

How could an old English inn in a village called Great Snoring be anything but a delight?

I have never been to Great Snoring, but I promise myself that on my next trip to Britain I shall peek in on it.

A villager sends along a glowing report concerning the Great Snoring's Old Rectory, a former manor house rising on 1 1/2 acres of gardens.

"The house and surroundings offer peace and seclusion in the heart of the north Norfolk countryside," writes the villager.

That, it should be noted, is not far from Walsingham and about 115 miles northeast of London. My contact adds that Great Snoring is within easy reach of the coast.

The Old Rectory is believed to have been occupied as far back as 1500. Its guests view the garden from mullioned windows. Logs blaze in the fireplace. Birds twitter in the trees outside. All of which is enough to cause one to settle snugly onto a sofa and take a snooze in old Snoring.

I have a bundle of correspondence from other innkeepers, hoteliers and the like, telling of similar charming shelters. A letter from one Jane Marsden describes a manor house, Studley Priory, in a village known as Horton-cum-Studley that is near Oxford.

Studley Priory is set among 14 acres of park land and its management takes delight in preparing such specialties as venison, suckling pig and fresh salmon. Dating from roughly the same period as the Old Rectory at Great Snoring, Studley Priory appears much as it did in Elizabethan times, I am told, except for such creature comforts as central heating and the addition of private baths for each of its 19 guest rooms.

My correspondent writes: "The house is advantageously situated on a ridge offering views to the west over Blenheim Palace to the Cotswolds and to the east along the line of the Chilterns . . . whilst to the north lie the once-desolate lands of Otmoor."

Deep in the Cotswolds there's another gem, the Lords of the Manor Hotel at Upper Slaughter. Lords of the Manor provides greath warmth, charm and excellent cuisine. I know this for sure, for I have been there. Set among rolling green hills, the Lords of the Manor features 16 guest rooms, lakeside gardens and a peacefulness resulting only from such tranquil surroundings.

Also in the Cotswolds there is Cockbury, "a miniature hamlet nestled high above the picturesque old town of Winchcombe." Proprietor Michael Blanchard has converted an old barn into "two delightful guest cottages." Other "select holiday dwellings" are situated elsewhere on this 16th-century estate, he writes.

"We operate like a hotel. I prepare home-cooked items, including oven-fresh bread for our guests," Blanchard adds.

To get a fix on Cockbury, it is 30 minutes from Stratford-on-Avon and roughly one hour from Oxford. It features a heated swimming pool, a tennis court and croquet. Arrivals will find fresh flowers in the cottages as well as Blanchard's homemade bread. The proprietor also prepares cakes, pate, quiches, roasted chickens and yogurts.

"These can be ordered in advance of arrival or bought daily from the farmhouse kitchen," he writes.

Minimum bookings at Cockbury are for one week in summer and two to three days during other seasons. At Cockbury one has the choice of Barn Cottage, Tythe Barn, Badgers Mount, Cockbury Cottage, Mole End, Honeysuckle Cottage or the Gazebo, a circular building with a thatched roof, Italian cane furniture and "magnificent views."

Owlpen's cottages are supplied with irons, teakettles, toasters and blenders. These plus logs for the fireplace. Guests may buy farm-fresh vegetables, goat milk, ranch eggs, lamb and beef from Nicholas Mander. Or if one wishes, homemade take-away meals are also available from the proprietor.

One cottage at Owlpen features an ancient gristmill that's been converted into a snug shelter with its own garden and wicket gate. The property lies secluded at the bottom of the valley, a river running by its door.

Meanwhile, lords of 30 historic country homes in England and Scotland bid guests to share their meals, savor their wines and liqueurs, fish their trout streams and hunt their game.

Lifts by helicopter are arranged from airports throughout the U.K. while those less hurried are conveyed by chauffeur-driven limousine to the various estates.

Everyone who visits Great Fosters has good things to say about this 400-year-old country hotel only 20 miles from the heart of London. Great Fosters (a former hunting lodge in the Royal Forest of Windsor) attracts royalty, film folk and ordinary travelers who enjoy the pleasures of a four-star hotel. Period furniture is scattered about the rooms with their ornate plaster ceilings and oak paneling. There's an oak welled staircase and an immense Jacobean fireplace in front of which guests sink into deep sofas to be lulled to sleep by crackling logs. The perfect spot on one of those rainy English afternoons.

And there's Swynford Paddocks, once the home of Byron's half-sister, Augusta Leigh, the estate having been given to her husband by the then Prince of Wales. Writes my source: "Frequently left alone whilst her improvident husband was away racing, (gaming or avoiding his ever-present and ever-pressing creditors), Augusta became bored and dissatisfied and welcomed the attention of her handsome and licentious half-brother, Lord Byron, when he visited her at Six Mile Bottom.

"Their romance during the summer of 1813 scandalized London society and whilst we shall never know for certain that Medora, born to Augusta the following April, was Byron's daughter, most historians have held Medora to be the fruit of their incestuous love, and certainly the girl always claimed Byron as her father."

Whatever, Swynford Paddocks provides a dozen rooms, all with private bath, antique furniture and great bouquets of flowers.

This lovely old estate stands within Ian Bryant's 40-acre stud farm that's barely 15 minutes from Cambridge and about 90 minutes from London. Its menu lists such delights as steak and oyster pie, poached fillets of sole, roast duck, rack of lamb, crab pancakes and smoked salmon filled with prawns.

Meanwhile, Bill and Gretchen Stevens, a couple of displaced Kansans, have opened their home in West Sussex to the wayfarer with a promise of "personal service to each guest and guaranteed privacy." In addition, Gretchen declares: "Our guests will not stand in queues because theater tickets, car rentals, dinner reservations, etc., are done free of charge by us."

Their Edwardian home, which they call Arundel Holt Court, stands in 17 acres of secluded woodland not far from the English Channel. Besides Arundel Holt Court, Bill and Gretchen Stevens have recruited a number of other homeowners whom they represent under the banner, At Home Country Holidays. They tell how one may "travel through history in a variety of residences-Elizabethan, Palladian, Georgian houses, Edwardian manors, thatched cottages, a windmill ...."

As for myself, I still have in mind slipping off one of these times for a snooze in the Old Rectory at Great Snoring.

And so a toast: to the Queen, Prince Charlie, Princess Di and all the rest (Great Snoring, indeed!).

Colombia offers both modern and traditional

By FAYE HUNTER
Copley News Service

BOGOTA — Colombia is not what you would consider a typical tourist destination.

It doesn't offer its visitors a well-traveled passage into its history and folkloric traditions. Instead, it draws them into its culture and way of life — through the food Colombians eat, the roads they drive and the sights along the way way.

What is sure to strike the first-time visitor to this country is the diversity and patchwork quality of the cities.

Bogota, a city with a booming population currently registering 6 million, is the capital and the site of the major museums and government offices.

Despite its cosmopolitan functions, it has managed to remain firmly rooted in the past. Small boys flick their whips over the heads of the horses which draw carts along the main roads of the city. Cows graze in the middle of a divided highway and are driven in by men at the end of a long day of grazing. And cars which would be considered classics in North America are used in everyday driving down here — the older the car, the better.

TRAVEL

But don't let this seemingly archaic way of life fool you. Bogota is a modern city in every sense of the word. There are a variety of excellent museums which can be used as a starting point in an exploration of Colombian history and way of life.

There are more than 20 museums in the city of Bogota, offering everything from pre-Hispanic gold artifacts to colonial art. If the way people lived in the recent past — the last 300 to 400 years — interests you, be sure to check out the National Museum (Museo Nacional). It is a showcase for Colombia's history and ethnography and was created by executive decree in 1823.

The Museum of Anthropology (Museo Nacional de Antropologia) is situated on the ground floor of Bogota's National Museum. It brings together a wide variety of objects from the Indian cultures, which inhabited what is today known as Colombia, over 2,000 years ago. There are also samples of the present-day aboriginal tribe-works. A separate Gallery of Folklore displays outstanding examples of the handicrafts of the different regions of Colombia.

For a different taste of Colombia's past, be sure to visit Quinta de Bolivar. The villa was given to Simon Bolivar by the Colombian people in 1820 to be used as his private retreat between army campaigns. The home is an interesting combination of the times in which Bolivar lived and his personal tastes. Each room can be viewed from the covered porch which surrounds the house. The gardens surrounding the house are magnificent — cool and lush with greenery of all types.

If you have only a small amount of time in Bogota and can only manage to see one museum, be sure to visit the Gold Museum (Museo del Oro). Here you can view the world's largest collection of gold artifacts. Gold was used for the Indians' highest artistic expressions — and the pieces all show a high degree of technical precision.

A visit to this exhibit is climaxed by several minutes inside a huge vault, surrounded by cases of gold artifacts. As the lights come up, the array of gold pieces is staggering — the walls and bottoms of the cases are covered with pieces — earrings, nose rings, pectoral plates, anthropomorphic figures and filigreed zoomorphic ornaments. It is certainly an impressive way to accent the artistry and variety of the pre-Hispanic Indian gold work.

With a sense of where Colombia has come from, it is a little easier to get a feeling for where she is now. An excellent way to explore the diversity that makes up the country of Colombia today is to visit a shop run by the government and used as a showcase for the handicrafts of today — Artesanias de Colombia.

There are several locations throughout the city of Bogota and in other major cities of Colombia. The one which is particularly convenient to the two largest hotels in Bogota, the Hotel Tequendama and the Bogota Hilton International, is fairly small. Yet it offers a good selection of native folk art: multicolored wool blankets and ponchos, leather handbags and briefcases, clay figures and pottery, baskets and embroidered cotton dresses and shirts.

The array of local handicrafts is another testimony to the diversity that is modern Colombia. All the pieces shown in this store are reasonably priced since it is owned and operated by the government.

Undoubtedly the best way to explore a city is on foot. That way you can make your own way and turn off down small side streets that would rush by the window of a car. In Bogota, this is also true.

But, a word of caution. The small urchins of this city are notorious for their thievery. Stay on the main roads and don't wander up into the small shantytowns which can be found just off the major roads.

Before I scare everyone off, let me say that I walked the streets of Bogota and found them safe. I must admit that I was more alert to dangers than normal and perhaps that saved me from putting myself into a situation which would cause problems.

The best area for a walking tour is the old city — the area known as La Candelaria. Within a six-block radius of the Plaza de Bolivar, it is a good collection of colonial homes and churches. The plaza itself is a notable landmark — a large square of tile with a fountain in the center and massive buildings — government and religious — surrounding this open space. It is set at the foot of the mountains which run along Bogota's eastern side — an impressive backdrop.

There are organized tours of the area. If you wish to do it on your own, many hotels offer information on how to proceed.

Don't be afraid if you should find yourself short of breath — Bogota is located at 8,700 feet above sea level.

It's height may cause some problems the first few day of your visit — shortness of breath, headache and fatigue. But you will soon acclimate to the altitude.

In addition to the normal tourist destinations of Bogota, there is a diversity of cultural offerings in this city. Symphony, opera, a museum of modern art and a variety of nightclubs. All these give a look at life in Colombia today.

Munich tomfoolery

Follow simple rules, feast and be merry

By FLOYD THOMAS
Copley News Service

The prisoner was still sneezing from the attack of the dreaded snuff machine as he was led around the cellar with a chain, his head and hands protruding from stocks resembling a gigantic horseshoe.

A room full of shouting people taunted him, ridiculed him. The victim, who had voyaged across an ocean to meet this fate, seemed to be enjoying himself. A masochist? Only to the extent that all travelers willingly invite some pain.

This happily hapless fellow, an American, was enduring punishment for breaking one of the many German rules governing the ingestion of a medieval meal in a time-warped restaurant in Munich.

Amid the jeers and laughter, it was hard to tell which regulation the castigated customer had breached, for they outnumber the courses.

Some of the admonitions:

— Let a wench bib you.
— Be of good cheer.
— Break bread and share it with your neighbors.
— Order a good, strong, dark Augsburg beer.
— Eat the good, filling food set before you.
— Do not stab the bread or your table.
— Don't throw food about.
— Let yourself be entertained with music.
— Don't act drunk or be loud, except to show appreciation for the food.

One other directive is frankly sexist, but defended on the grounds that this is how things were in those days. If men and women dine together, the latter must serve the former, and woe be to any male who serves himself.

Punishments for offenses can range from letting a servant kiss you (for mealtime misdemeanors) to the aforementioned pillorying (for food-time felonies).

The snuff machine, incidentally, is not considered punishment. Any guest is subject to having this device, which resembles a crossbow, shoved under his nose. Mercifully, a blindfold averts flinching as the loud sneeze trap is sprung.

The site of all this Middle Ages madness is the Welser Kuche, at Residenzstrasse 28. The address may sound familiar to old Munich hands, and a sign over the door confirms that it is — or was — the Feldherrnkeller, a restaurant of long standing.

The Welser Kuche, despite its theme, is relatively new at that spot, and is an offshoot of a medieval-style restaurant in nearby Augsburg. However, the owners say the building did belong to the Welser family in bygone centuries and has merely returned to the fold.

The menu ($37 plus drinks) is fatty, heavy and light on the salt that was so expensive in medieval times:

— Mead in a bull's horn.
— Bread with lots of dripping.
— Quails wrapped in bacon.
— Pike soup.
— Stuffed eggs in yellow herb sauce.
— Game pie with cherry sauce.
— Lamb from the spit with bread dumplings, leaf spinach or spring onions, and pea puree.
— Allgau cheese cured in the South Tyrol.
— Tarts spiced with sage.
— Apple fritters.

The meal and tomfoolery last easily three hours, but the house literature says medieval folks used to eat every three hours. No wonder people then got little else done. The Welser Kuche serves up an opportunity to spend an evening doing it with them.

Hong Kong known as Chinese culinary delight

Copley News Service

HONG KONG — "Take a taxi as far as you can go on the Kowloon side, board the three-minute ferry and step ashore with care. It's probably wet and slippery underfoot."

Not a very reassuring invitation to one of the truly great culinary adventures in Hong Kong. But the advice came from an old China hand who knows and loves the noble city better than most, so we set out in good spirits to find, if not a fabulous dinner, at least a reportable adventure.

We should have had more faith in our friend.

Lei Yue Mun is the name of the channel which separates Hong Kong Island from the mainland and also of the tiny island to which we were directed. Actually, it is only an island at high tide, but a funky junk is available at all times for those who do not wish to risk a sudden change in tides.

The island is an enormous fish market, Chinese style. In fact, the evening we found this bit of paradise, we seemed to be the only Westerners there, though that condition won't endure, I'm sure.

The market is white-tiled and neon-lighted and the fish are live — all of them — in tanks and baskets all over the place. And fresh. This is where the men who fish the China Sea and adjacent waters bring their daily catch — and keep it fresh and live in huge tanks filled with sea water.

Chinese take the subject of food seriously. Very seriously. Especially the matter of fish. We watched a man pay $100 U.S. for an enormous garoupa for his party.

No American we know would have put such a value on a finny friend, but the Chinese have their own wisdom.

Our own party quickly divided as each of us found a special treat, and watched it weighed on ancient, hand-held brass scales. The cost is computed on an old abacus, which, in the hands of a skilled Chinese, is almost as fast as any electronic calculator.

Then the catch is dumped into a plastic bag and the party wanders on through the seemingly endless market. In the course of about 10 minutes we had accumulated the makings of a feast: shrimp, in several sizes, langouste, that delicious in-betweener of the shellfish family, tender white crabs, rosy lobster, delicate baby abalone, craggy oysters, still-jumping garoupa.

No market at home could offer such a selection.

Plastic bags in hand, we wandered out of the market, down a narrow lane lined on either side with restaurants. More neon and white tile — not exactly intimate as the traditional round tables are set for eight or 10 apparently famished people.

Finally, we found a pleasant place outdoors, near a tree and an arbor with the kitchen close enough to assure that what should be hot would be. The smiling chef, owner, maitre d', chief factotum gathered up the bags, murmuring: "black bean sauce here, a little chili with this one — "

We settled at the table, brushed away a few flies, ordered some wonderful cold Tsing Tao beer in big brown quart bottles and, as dish after steaming dish arrived, always accompanied by more icy beer, we FEASTED, royally.

Nothing was more important than doing justice to that superb seafood, prepared and served so simply and so satisfyingly.

The last ferry back could hardly hold the crowd of well-fed passengers, all beaming and burping politely. And remembering that ancient adage about Rome, we joined right in.

Nothing is familiar in Bali, nothing but Emily

By SARA RIMER
Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Before the Far East, I had traveled mostly in this country. I was always coming to places that recalled, through certain scents or sounds or trees or faces or just the way the wind blew through the sea oats on a North Atlantic beach, another place, another time. But everything about the Far East was so exotic that for the first time I found myself in cities that recalled nothing. In Peking even the light was strange, as if filtered for an eternal gray and golden dusk. Everything was new, and this was both exhilarating and lonely. And then I went to Bali, and there was Emily, who was so familiar.

She was English, the 8-year-old daughter of Geordie and Sally Dawson, an antiques dealer who dreamed of making his living as an artist and an exercise teacher who dabbled in pottery. Geordie was 35 and Sally 28, only a year older than I. It startled me that I could be so close in age to Emily's mother. They had stopped on the island of Bali in the South Seas on their way to Australia, where they hoped to find a new life. I had come from Peking with a friend who is a foreign correspondent there. It was the middle of last winter, and China had been very cold, the restaurants unheated, the apartments drafty, the coal dust-choked air unkind. We were searching for warmth. Bali, with its deserted palm tree-shaded beaches and erotic costumed dances, has become a cliche for adult daydreams of romance and escape. I would find my unexpected escape in Emily.

WE MET LATE one afternoon, after I had been swimming for what seemed like hours. As I floated drowsily on my back, Emily appeared in the sea before me like a little girl out of a watercolor — a pale, delicate-featured wash of blue eyes, white-blonde hair and fair skin. She was splashing about in just the bottom of her bathing suit, the way a little girl could, the way I used to during my own childhood summers in the Philadelphia suburb where I grew up and at the New England shore, where we went each August to visit my grandfather.

Emily gave me a winsome smile, and we drifted into conversation. She told me she was from the city of Bath. I told her I had been to Bath the year before. "We stayed in a guest house on a hill," I said. "It was called Rosewynn. It was fall, but I remember that it was very cold and that a white rose was blooming in the garden. We went to that wonderful costume museum. Have you been there?"

"Oh, yes, it's lovely, isn't it?" Emily said. Emily's word was lovely, like Emily herself, like the sound of her lilting voice — wind chimes in a summer breeze. She told me her family was staying at Laghawa, the cluster of 10 bungalows, hidden in a tropical garden not far from the beach, where we were also staying, the only Americans among a group of Australians and English.

"I LOVE BALI," she said. "I love going to hot places. It's cold and dull in Bath at this time of year." I told her I loved going to hot places, too. Emily was filled with wonder, enraptured by each boat on the horizon, each leaping fish, each change in the cumulus clouds. She told me she had never been to Australia and couldn't wait to see another new place. She asked at what age I had first gone abroad, and when I answered that it had been when I was 16, she was amazed, and later she would tell her mother, "Sara didn't go abroad until she was 16!"

Emily told me she wanted to be an actress someday. She told me she loved monkeys and longed to have one as a pet; she despised spiders and lizards. I said I preferred otters to monkeys but shared fully her loathing for spiders and lizards. She told me she hated disco, she loved jazz. Here, I was in total agreement. We talked about money and what makes people happy.

"I don't think money makes people happy," she said. "I know rich people with big swimming pools, and they're not happy."

"What do you think makes people happy?"

"I think love makes people happy."

"Are you in love with anyone?"

"Not yet."

And that was Emily, all innocence and possibility, a girl who believed that if she could only concentrate hard enough she could fly. It seemed fitting that she had landed in Bali, in the village of Sanur, at Laghawa, which means, in Balinese, "promise."

WHILE EMILY AND I talked, my friend — Daniel — sat on the beach, watching a volcano in the distance disappear n the evening mist. It was about 5, and the sun was beginning its pink and golden dissolve behind the palm trees. The Balinese, who admire white skin and so avoid the sun came down to bathe then, and their laughter drifted across the water. We breathed the scent of incense that always floated on the wind in Bali, burning amid the offerings of flowers and fruits the Baline e made to their Hindu gods.

Emily's 6-year-old sister, Alannah, blond and blue-eyed like Emily, called to her to come out of the water and get dressed for dinner. Emily, who had been so grown-up and polite, turned petulant. "Oh, shut up!" she called back in the same proper English accent with which she had been discussing love and jazz. And the sudden transformation from sophisticate back to child won my heart.

Emily said goodbye and splashed out of the water. Moments later I followed, running through the sand to Dan. "I just met the most wonderful little girl, her name is Emily, she's from Bath, her family's staying at Laghawa, too, and they're on their way to Australia."

He smiled. "She came out of the water talking about you. She told her parents you were very nice. She said, 'Sara's been to Bath.'"

Emily visited my bungalow the next night. We were shy at first. I showed her the wooden frog I had just bought for Dan. It was stout, with red spots all over, a parasol held aloft in one hand, and the expression of an endearing curmudgeon. Emily loved the frog. She said it reminded her of Mister Toad in "The Wind in the Willows."

"It's my favorite book," she said. "I'm bringing it to Australia. I read it every morning."

I TOLD EMILY I worked as a newspaper reporter in Washington, D.C., where the president lives. She told me she was writing a book about her trip and again I felt that sense of floating between past and present, somewhere in a time where Emily and I could be the same age. I, too, had written books about my family's trips, which were, not to Bali, but to places like Salem, Mass., where my grandfather lived on Leach Street in an old frame house with flowered wallpaper. Salem was as magical to me as Bali was to Emily. She ran across the garden to her bungalow to fetch her book: "Emily's Trip Around The World." She read aloud her descriptions of the tropical fruits she had eaten ("Today I tasted papaya...."), of the Balinese taxis called bemos ("special taxis without backs"), of a cremation she had seen, ("They gave him cigarettes for the trip to Heaven"). Her spelling made me smile; Emily was a delightfully terrible speller. After that, she read me new chapters each day.

We told each other about our daily discoveries and adventures. Soon I could see Bali through Emily's eyes, and she through mine. I told her about the day Dan and I went bicycling in the rain, across lush green rice fields, through villages where pigs, cows, chickens and children shared the same muddy path. I told her about the cave beside the ocean at Tanalot, where a guide shined his flashlight on the long green snakes sleeping in the darkness. I told her about the blind masseur Dan visited in hopes it would ease the pain in his back, who worked behind a white curtain in a room lit by a single bulb. I told her about the moss shimmering in the stone pools at the temple at Tampatsiring, about the three rainbows we saw one afternoon after a storm.

Emily told me about the elaborate cremation ("Everyone was happy. No one was crying. In Englnd people are sad at funerals. Are they sad in America?"), about the suckling pig her parents ate at an outdoor market. ("I thought it was horrid. It had a cabbage in its tail"), about the crab ("Today I saw a big purple crab, it was the most beautiful crab I've ever seen!").

EMILY HAD ENDLESS questions: "Who was your best friend? Who is your best friend now? Who was your first boyfriend? What is the most exciting thing that you've ever done? What was the most horrible thing that you've ever written about? What was the most beautiful place you ever lived? What is America like?"

She wondered, "Do people in America make fun of Prince Charles' big ears?" When I told her they did, she laughed. "I thought they did."

Emily had nicknamed her family The Last Minute Family because she said, they did everything at the last minute and were alway late. They had moved to Bath by accident; they traveled there on vacation eight years ago from Ireland — where Sally and Geordie were born and raised — and never left. Geordie was a lanky brown-haired, blue-eyed man who called his daughters "pet" and soothed them with wiskey when there were so sunburned they couldn't sleep. He would sit in the groove of palm trees by the sea, painting gay watercolors that he would rip up later, muttering cheerfully that they were no good. But Geordie was a talented artist.

Sally was tall and voluptuous, with knowing blue eyes and curly brown hair that fell to her shoulders. She was 18 when she married Geordie. She liked to talk about the trip she and a girlfriend had taken to the island of Eleuthera a few years back. They stayed three months, living simply. She loved her family, but she also loved her freedom and was filled with ambivalence upon her return to Bath. Sally, who let her children run free on the beah, made being a mother look effortless. She and Geordie were tired of England. "England's dead," Sally said.

DAN HAD TO leave Bali two days before I did to return to Peking. After he had gone, Emily must have sensed my sadness because she stayed close. She brought me shells with my name painted on them and a bottle of lilac bubble bath from the Isle of Wright. Dan, who had begun painting again in Bali, had left me a watercolor of the path we walked each day to the beach, through a stone arch shaded by an umbrella-like tree that I never could identify. Emily read his sentimental inscription. "It's lovely what Dan wrote," she said. "Did that make you fell better?"

I shopped for wooden frogs for Emily and Alannah, but none was as perfect as the one I had boguht for Dan. I decided I would write them a book — "Emily and Alannah Go to China." In it, they visit Dan, who lives, in my book, in a red pagoda at the Summer Palace, with a Chinese-speaking Balinese monkey as a pet. They ride bicycles and chase a Giant Panda who escapes on a bicycle from the zoo because he is sick to tears of eating bamboo all day while people stare. They invite him to live with them at the Summer Palace. He accepts gratefully. They go ice skating on lakes surrounded by temples. They board the Marble Boat, the beautiful but useless boat that an ugly empress built with the money she was supposed to have spent on the Navy. They go backstage at the Peking Opera and watch the actors with shaven heads paint their faces like warriors. They eat 1,000-year-old eggs and Peking duck with plum sauce and pancakes as thin as paper. They refuse to eat sea slugs, even if they are considered a delicacy. I read the book to Emily and Alannah. Later, Emily hugged it to her chest. "This book makes me so happy. I'm going to read it whenever I'm sad. I'm going to get it published."

All day she talked about the Marble Boat. "I wish I could sit on that boat."

WE ALL WENT to dinner that night. Each of us must have thought it was a special occasion because we had been living in bathing suits, cotton sundresses, sarongs and thongs, but on this night we dressed up. Emily wore her necklace of white shells and her blue batik dress with the gold threads in it. I wore my white dress with the Mexican embroidery. We sat on bamboo chairs in the garden of the restaurant. We ate avocado salads and grilled turtle and fried squid and duck and fried rice. For dessert Emily had lemon pancakes. Geordie talked about one of his happiest days in Bali, when he had spent the afternoon painting at a warung — the Balinese version of an outdoor cafe. The woman who served him was, with her dark eyes and dark hair and her grace, hypnotically beautiful, as all the Balinese women seemed to be. She would, from time to time, lift her shirt and breastfeed her child. What fascinated Geordie was her complete lack of concern with him, with his painting, with his Western face. The sweet scent of frangipani blossoms floated on the night air. It seemed as though we would be friends forever.

The next morning was my last. I saw the sunrise. I had to catch a plane to Singapore and then back to Washington, home. I gave Emily my straw hat with the wide brim. In it, she looked like one of Renoir's little girls. We promised to write. People always say that, but I knew that Emily and I would write. We both wished we were closer in age. Emily talked of visiting me when she wsa 21. "But you'll be 38," she said, suddenly melancholy, and I didn't have the heart to tell her that she'd figured wrong' I'd actually be 40. She gave me chocolates for the plane ride. "So your ears don't pop." The family lined up in the garden to see me off. I hugged Emily and told her that Australia would be wonderful. She ran down the sandy path and chased after the bemo. I sat in the back and waved until her blond hair disappeared into the sunlight.

A few weeks ago, when I had almost given up, a letter from Australia appeared in my mailbox. The mispelled enchantment with this new place — Sydney — was endearingly familiar. Emily went to the zoo and saw a green slimy snake wrapped around a branch and seals balancing balls on their heads. The flat where she lives is very nice and has a view of the sea and island. Every day she sees lots of boats come in, and one day she saw a big black submarine. She goes to school and has made lots of friends. She sends her love.

Bali seems like a dream now, four months afterward. Everything has changed, as it always does. Even Emily, who last month turned 9, just two weeks before I turned 28.

Tips for traveling in Europe

By ART BERMAN
Los Angeles Times

Lord and Lady Bellamy we're not.

But for a week in London, my wife and I enjoyed living the "Upstairs, Downstairs" life style in a Victorian brownstone converted to a charming hotel.

It was one of the pleasant surprises of our three weeks in Europe this spring. It was our first trip there, a honeymoon we'd postponed for 25 years, and we did it our way: Sampling six countries in both Western and Eastern Europe.

—Muddling along by plane, train, bus, taxi, Underground (and boat on the Thames and Seine) without a tour guide or packaged itinerary and with only a smattering of French and Spanish language ability between us.

For the most part, aided by guidebooks and sympathetic Europeans, it worked better than we had hoped. There were some uneasy moments, and so now we feel qualified to pass along some tips to the uninitiated, just as we picked the brains of our more-traveled friends and colleagues before venturing forth.

AMONG OUR FINDINGS: The hotels of Western Europe, all recommended by those who had gone before us, were generally delightful and not terribly expensive. The hotels of Eastern Europe (we stayed in two in Romania) were adequate, if a bit dreary.

Those bargains we've all heard advertised must have been on streets we didn't walk down. America doesn't have a monopoly on inflation, and the merchandise we saw, from $50 white duck pants in London to $150 shoes in Italy, was priced on a par with better stores in Los Angeles.

Restaurants, however, were reasonable, particularly in Rome where $20 would buy a full meal for two, with wine. Theater tickets to an excellent play in London ("Amadeus") were $19 apiece. But the seats were good.

Money, in general, proved a major concern. Not paying for the trip so much as keeping track of the pounds, francs, lire, Austrian schillings, Hungarian forints and Romanian lei — and trying to have the right currency at the right time and to remember what it was worth in U.S. dollars.

In England, fumbling with some pounds and thinking, with this odd-looking money, that I was playing some British version of Monopoly, I apologized to a waiting cab driver.

"I'm not very familiar with British money," I said.

"We're not very familiar with it, either," the driver replied.

We thought of his comment often, as we wondered how the average European managed to buy very much with prices so high. (We got one answer in Romania, where we visited relatives: They just didn't have very much.)

If we were embarrassed by anything in Europe, it was by our lack of linguistic ability. When my high school French faltered on a Paris bus, a well-dressed woman asked, "May I help you?" and proceeded to translate.

When we had visa problems on the Orient Express to Bucharest, we were aided by an Austrian customs inspector, a Romanian man, and a woman of unidentifiable nationality, all of whom spoke some English.

When I had a problem buying chocolate bars in a Hungarian train station, a young woman stepped from a crowd and helped negotiate the transaction.

And in Romania, where English is taught in grade schools, there were English-speaking employees at hotels, restaurants and the airport.

WHETHER OR NOT they knew our language, we found people generally willing and often anxious to help. In London, as we stood on a breezy street corner and studied a tourist map, looking for the British Museum, an elderly gentleman approached and insisted on walking with us for two long blocks until he was certain we were headed right. In a Hungarian train station a man who spoke no English helped us with our heavy baggage and led us through a labyrinth of corridors to the waiting room.

It was in London where our trip began. We spent six days there, both to recover from jet lag after 10 hours from Los Angeles and to immerse ourselves gradually into European life.

We stayed at 11 Cadogan Gardens, a Victorian hotel in Chelsea. It was the most expensive of the hotels we visited, $86 a night with an overabundant breakfast (croissants, rolls, jam, cold cereal, fruit, warm milk and coffee) served in the room along with a British newspaper by a white-coated porter. The room and bath were both large and well-appointed. The front door of the hotel was always locked, but was quickly opened by a porter when someone buzzed.

The hotel also featured an elegant drawing room with dark, plush furniture and paintings where one could sit and order tea — a long way from a paper cup of beer at Dodger Stadium.

While other guests seemed to come and go in taxis, Mercedes and an occasional Rolls-Royce, we often walked a couple of blocks to the Underground. For less than 80 cents each we could get almost anywhere in central London in 20 or 30 minutes and we also got a close look at the British people.

Other places we stayed included the Hotel de Lutece on L'Ile de St. Louis, an island in the Seine in Paris. It cost $57 with breakfast in a dining room, was less spacious than the London hotel, but was clean and comfortable and in an old neighborhood of narrow streets that, in two short blocks, opened to reveal the magnificent Cathedral of Notre Dame. The Left Bank was a short walk. The Louvre was not far on the Metro (and there are artworks in the Louvre Metro station).

IN ROME OUR hotel was the Scalinata di Spagna at the top of the Spanish Steps, an ideal location for touring. The hotel was in an old building that had been modernized but some rooms shared a W.C. down the hall. It is a small hotel and, like many of the nicest places anywhere, books its rooms well in advance. The price was about $44, with breakfast in a small dining room.

(One discovery at the Rome train station: Men offering a taxi may mean a "bandit" cab, which will cost three or four times more than a franchised taxi. Line up, as the Romans do, and take a yellow taxicab with a government-inspected meter.)

Florence also had something special, the Hotel Berchielli, built in the 16th century. The building has been lovingly restored and faces the Arno River, the famed Ponte Vecchio, and tiers of old pastel buildings on the opposite bank. Our room was huge, with the bed area curtained off from the parlor and a bathroom as big as many motel rooms. It cost $57 a night, with another of those omnipresent breakfasts served in a dining room.

In Romania, hotels were a touch cheaper — $45 a night at the Capitol in Brashov and $55 at the Nord in Bucharest. They even had black-and-white TV sets.

Romanians used packs of cigarettes, preferably Kents, as a means of exchange. We had read that good service would be assured by, for example, giving a waiter a pack of Kents when you were seated at dinner. It worked. One waiter even brought us beer in a china teapot, then explained he was not supposed to serve beer in the dining room.

We found in both Eastern and Western Europe that credit cards were not as readily accepted as the ads would have us believe. Many small restaurants, shops and hotels don't honor them.

It is a good idea, particularly when going from one country to the next, to write down a simple conversion chart. (A small calculator proved invaluable.) We always carried a scrap of paper that showed so many lire or francs equaled so many dollars, etc.

'Bittersweet Country' of the Ozarks

By RICHARD RHODES
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Whenever I think of the Ozarks, I think of a story my Aunt Espy Travis tells about my mother. Mother's family farmed an Ozarks hillside out of a log cabin 75 years ago. The youngest girl of a crowd of sisters and brothers, Mother was sickly. The nurse who visited the hill people examined her and prescribed — oranges.

Weekly my grandfather went to town to buy them. Once a day my grandmother gave one to Mother. She peeled it carefully, savoring the fruit a section at a time. And then, Aunt Espy tells, Mother passed on to her watching sisters the bright, bitter peel. They divided it and, solemnly, they ate it.

Not that they were hungry. But oranges were rare.

The wild, rough highlands of the Ozarks are bounded by the Missouri River on the north, the Mississippi on the east, the Arkansas on the south and the prairie on the west. Their 50,000 square miles are wonderfully watered by crystal springs that feed cold, clear-running rivers.

Vast areas of the Ozarks are preserved as national forest, and travelers from far away visit in season to see dogwood blooming pink and white or foliages of flaming sumac. Deer and wild turkey thrive.

But it was never easy to live in the Ozarks. The settlers had to clear and farm the pocket valleys that the rivers had shaped and filled with soil. They cut the trees, floating the logs to the Missouri and the Mississippi above and below St. Louis.

"Tie hacking" — cutting lumber for railroad ties — became a major Ozark industry in the 19th century. The great transcontinental railroads were floored with Ozark-hewn ties.

Life got harder as the forests filled up with scrub and the thin soil washed away. People moved out, abandoning farms and whole towns. Those who stayed behind learned to be unusually resourceful. They still are. Ozark people have made a virtue of necessity.

I think first of caves. The Ozark highlands are predominately limestone. The area's 40 annual inches of rainfall trickles down through leaf litter and soil, becoming mildly acidic by the time it settles atop the bedrock limestone.

Over eons it has dissolved the limestone, leaving caves. Families have made a living showing the ones on their property. You may go through on foot or in a people-carrier, depending on the cave. Young people still arrange to be married in front of calcite assemblages that look like ranks of organ pipes.

"Bittersweet country," some Ozark people have called their region. Those who are born there must make, early in their adult lives, a single, central decision: whether to stay or go. Staying unfits them for going because living outside takes job skills and education that young people can't find at home. But not many jobs at home pay above the minimum. People survive as they can.

I got to know an elderly Ozark gentleman named Jesse Howard. Small, gray, wiry, soft-spoken, Jesse had worked as a farmhand and a farmer all his long life.

After he retired, Jesse began painting his own messages on wooden signs. "Whatever became of John the Baptist's head?" is one I will always remember. He hung them around his small spread on a hill outside Fulton, Mo. They were remarkable signs, "primitive," as Grandma Moses' paintings were "primitive," and many of them were bought for display in art museums.

Nothing ever went to waste around Jesse's place. When someone in Fulton tore down a house, Jesse showed up to collect the weathered boards for signs. He used the porthole-like door of an abandoned clothes dryer for a window in a shed he built.

Body massage for excellent all-over skin care

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Skin care products for the face can be found in many places, from supermarkets and discount stores to expensive boutiques and even health food outlets.

But skin covers the entire body, not just the face, and skin care is necessary for the entire body.

"We do everything in reverse in this country. European women would rather spend money on a facial and body massage than on a new dress," said Erica T. Miller, aesthetician — skin care expert — and beauty director of the Greenhouse, health and beauty spa for women in Arlington. She said American women often forget that skin care doesn't mean just facial care, "but it's beginning to turn around."

FOR SKIN CARE OVER the entire body, Ms. Miller strongly recommends body massage. "I believe in body massage at least once a week, for everybody," she said. "Basic therapeutic body massage for improvement of beauty, relaxation, muscle toning, helping to eliminate cellulite..."

"A client is going initially because it sounds like it feels good, is relaxing,"she added. "We can also help set up a program of diet and exercise. Massage can help break down fat. There are motor points through the body we can also gear into. A professional knows which motor points, which muscles, knows the proper technique for manipulating the muscles."

Erica T. Miller

MS. MILLER RECEIVED HER TRAINING as a skin specialist and beauty consultant in England from the Christine Shaw School of Beauty, in Paris and in Japan from working for Kanebo Cosmetics in the beauty research division. "In Japan I got my best training," she said. "That's where I learned Shiatsu — the Japanese acupressure technique, using the fingers to apply pressure to the right part of a nerve or muscle to stimulate or relax."

When a person receives a body massage from a professional, Ms. Miller said, that person becomes "thoroughly relaxed, usually feels better, more energetic. It's an energy builder — when someone is massaged, it improves their circulation and metabolism."

"MASSAGE IS NOT A PANACEA," she said. "Massage alone cannot eliminate cellulite. Anytime there's a lot of salt in the system, it causes water retention and helps fat buildup. Bottled mineral water is much, much better for you (than tap water). Water is the best thing in the world for you."

"Massage, depending on the products and techniques used, has the effect of polishing the skin," Ms. Miller said. "The skin looks pretty when you get through. And later, when you are taking a bath, or the next day, your skin feels so much more soft than the last time you touched it. Massage causes sloughing off of a lot of dead cells you didn't know you had."

MS. MILLER SAID AN AESTHETICIAN can help organize a program of skin care suited to each individual. "I highly recommend going to a professional aesthetician just once, if only to be analyzed. The skin has to have some oil because oil is what holds the body's water in, keeps it from evaporating. Grease and oily creams block the skin's breathing system. Most poeple who haven't had advice on how to care for their skin treat it terribly wrong."

"Go once, learn a little bit more what the skin is like," she said. "The American female wastes more money trying to find the best — buying different products for the skin — than if she went to a professional and had it done right."

MS. MILLER ADVISED that, except for makeup, "You shouldn't mix lines in skin care. Skin care products are chemically formulated to work with each other in a range. Mixing the lines can cause sensitivities, breakouts, breakdowns of chemical balance — they can cancel each other out."

"The day is coming when people truly will take care of the body properly from head to toe, and not ignore what doesn't show," she said.

Ms. Miller, in addition to being beauty director and technical consultant to the Greenhouse, is also the editor of "Aesthetics World Journal," which she described as the "only independent trade publication in the world," and is the owner of her own skin care company, Correlation Inc.

"We primarily deal with the skin care and makeup aspect of professional salons that are independent," she said. "We don't deal with retail stores. It's primarily an educational program. We teach different types of massage."

ONE TYPE OF MASSAGE that is becoming popular is aromatherapy. "It's fairly new to this country, but the concept is ancient," Ms. Miller said. "Using various types of massage oils in conjunction with certain types of massage. It's very therapeutic in a lot of ways. For instance, lavender used in massage technique is very relaxing."

Ms. Miller was in Midland recently to conduct a training session at Back Stage. Susan Suggs, owner of the salon, is an aesthetician, a masseuse and makeup artist, and devotes her salon to care of the skin. "We don't do hair," Ms. Suggs said. "We have a man who comes in from Neiman's twice a month and he does hair. The atmosphere we want is a serene, quiet atmosphere and you can't do hair and have that kind of atmosphere."

MS. SUGGS, WHO STARTED HER BUSINESS four years ago, said that at first, "no one believed the business would go — they didn't understand how it would work. It's successful because from the minute you walk in to the minute you leave, the whole policy is to treat every woman who comes in as special and pampered. We love to spoil them because nobody else does. Our families take us for granted, so it's great to be special for an hour."

Ms. Suggs has also had an extensive education as an aesthetcian, having received training in Houston, Dallas, New York and Paris.

She said her shop "was the first shop of its kind in Midland. It's under no franchise obligation."

"Body massage is a therapeutic treatment that concentrates on muscles, circulatory and lymphatic systems of the body. The purpose is to increase the blood flow to all parts of the body," she said. "The lymphatic system can either be moved by exercise or by massage."

MS. SUGGS SAID BODY MASSAGE can be therapeutic in several ways. "It stimulates the lymphatic system, it improves the skin tone. There's a psychological aspect, too. It also helps unblock tense areas that may crimp off certain areas that have minimized blood flow."

"There are energy pathways in the body," she said. "If they are blocked they can cause numbness in the body, dullness of thought. Diseases can be started by blocked pathways in the body."

BACK STAGE IS A SKIN CARE SHOP exclusively for women, by women. Ms. Suggs said that when a woman is being given a body massage, she is draped as if she were in surgery, so that the only area of her body that is exposed is the area being worked on by the masseuse. "Modesty is an important part in body massage," she said.

Women who have extremely bad varicose veins or women who are pregnant are advised not to try body massage.

"We have doctors sending people to us, which is completely unbelievable in America today — it's very rare," Ms. Suggs said.

TO BECOME A MASSEUSE, a woman has to have a talent for it. "A masseuse has to have a certain touch," said Ms. Suggs. "You cannot teach that. Touch is a gift. It's a giving thing. You have to be a very open, giving person. Touch is essential to an excellent masseuse. When having a treatment such as this, communication is also essential. You must tell the person what you want."

"A masseuse has to be in very excellent physical condition," she said. "It's hard work."

Ms. Suggs said that she believes massage will become more and more popular. "In the next ten years, body massage will be the accepted thing."

Some of the methods of skin care offered at Back Stage include care of the nails — manicure and pedicure; facials — which contain 49 massage movements, that Ms. Suggs said "stimulate the circulation to send oxygen to tissues — and nutrients — and to take away toxins;" and hand and foot treatment.

"I RECOMMEND DIFFERENT at-home treatments according to skin type," Ms. Suggs said. "I vary my treatments according to lifestyle, according to what's happening in my life and according to the time of the year."

"After you have a facial, you should not apply makeup for six to eight hours because the skin is so stimulated it will drink up what you put on it," she said. "It's not good to put makeup on a face that is stimulated. Body massage oil is expensive and fine — by the time a full massage is done, it has penetrated the skin. It does not block the pores. It's a very light oil."

IN WEST TEXAS, THE WATER can also cause problems in skin care. "One sad part of being out here is we do have terrible water," said Ms. Suggs. "If you have dry skin, you should stay away from the water, except to splash on the skin to refresh you. Try not to get your bath or shower too hot. BEFORE you bathe or shower you should apply your oil."

"You need to use a much milder soap, or use a body shampoo. If you have to use a strong soap, use it, but don't use it all over your body," she said.

"We are just getting to the tip of the iceberg now in physical care because we are getting into physical fitness," Ms. Suggs said. "It's very difficult to have excellent skin if you are not in good physical condition."

"Massage should be an essential part of people's lives," she said.

Children can 'check out' animals from library

By DENNIS GEORGATOS
AP Writer

SANTEE, Calif. (AP) — When 11-year-old Matthew Dorworth came home from the school library last summer, he didn't have a bundle of books under his arms — he had a 2-foot snake.

"The snake didn't bother me at all, except one time when it got stuck up a vacuum cleaner hose and it took us 1½ hours to get it out," says his mother, Sherrilyn Dorworth.

Rosey the Boa, as the snake is known, is safe and sound and back at the Cajon Park School animal library, where for good academic work and solid citzenship, a pupil can "check out" a favorite pet for a weekend, or for a longer time during vacations.

Books do not line the shelves of this library. But youngsters can cuddle Bucky the friendly rat, cozy up to Sniffles the lop-eared rabbit, feed two ring-necked doves, handle a snake or pet Rascal the hamster and Pepper the guinea pig.

Doug Kaye, a fifth-grade teacher at the school, started the library in 1971 and continues to oversee the menagerie.

"Eleven years ago, this area was still pretty rural," Kaye says. "They used to have Labrador retriever trials down the street and hunters let pigeons go and then shot them so the dogs could practice retrieving.

"One student brought a wounded pigeon to class. We splinted the wing and brought it back to health. We decided it should be a class bird and one child took it home to care for over the weekend. The next Monday, I had 27 notes on my desk from kids asking if they could take the bird home, too."

The word spread fast in this small community about 25 miles northeast of San Diego.

Within a week, a construction worker brought in an injured cottontail rabbit he found at a building project, and the PTA donated two quail eggs. The eggs were put in an incubator and hatched, then added to the library's "inventory."

Kaye says that the library has raised a small alligator, a barn owl, a raven, sparrows, doves, chickens and more conventional pets such as hamsters, guinea pigs, rabbits and rats.

Some animals, such as the barn owl, have been released in the nearby Silverwood Sanctuary run by the Audubon Society. Others, such as the chickens, were donated to local farmers after students had a chance to raise them and learn about their behavior.

But the library isn't just for the children to have fun. Kaye says pupils feed and care for the animals and clean the cages.

To earn the right to check out an animal or hold it during off-class hours, a pupil has to earn "animal affection points" by researching a particular pet, and then presenting the findings in a written report and making an oral presentation to classmates.

"It puts kids in touch with life situations. I would like to think my pupils come out of here not only with a wholesome respect for animals, but human life as well." Kaye says.

Arched windows accent Parade of Homes entry

Among 30 others, the Pettis home will be on display August 21-29 in the Wydewood Addition, which is west of Midland Drive just off Neely Avenue. The parade will benefit Christmas in April. Tickets are $2 to tour all 30 new homes, and will be available at the gate.

The living area has a corner fireplace and access to a patio, plus entrance into the gameroom and the foyer area. Colors of soft earth tones enhance the 2,000 square foot home. Another feature of this contemporary-Victorian home is a sunken family room.

A sitting area provides additional space in the master bedroom, while track lighting graces the ceiling. The master bath features separate tub and shower. The master bedroom has an oversized walk-in closet.

The home at 2304 Wydewood has a planter area for greenery in the formal dining room. The kitchen features spacious custom cabinets and an adjacent breakfast nook.

An extra in the home is a gameroom, just off the family room. The room has a wet bar and large windows.

An original design by K. R. Pettis, Inc., the home will be on display in the second annual parade sponsored by the Midland Homebuilders Association. Chairman of the event is David Hail.

'Bittersweet Country' of the Ozarks

Whenever I think of the Ozarks, I think of a story my Aunt Espy Travis tells about my mother. Mother's family farmed an Ozarks hillside out of a log cabin 75 years ago. The youngest girl of a crowd of sisters and brothers, Mother was sickly. The nurse who visited the hill people examined her and prescribed — oranges.

Weekly my grandfather went to town to buy them. Once a day my grandmother gave one to Mother. She peeled it carefully, savoring the fruit a section at a time. And then, Aunt Espy tells, Mother passed on to her watching sisters the bright, bitter peel. They divided it and, solemnly, they ate it.

Not that they were hungry. But oranges were rare.

The wild, rough highlands of the Ozarks are bounded by the Missouri River on the north, the Mississippi on the east, the Arkansas on the south and the prairie on the west. Their 50,000 square miles are wonderfully watered by crystal springs that feed cold, clear-running rivers.

Vast areas of the Ozarks are preserved as national forest, and travelers from far away visit in season to see dogwood blooming pink and white or foliages of flaming sumac. Deer and wild turkey thrive.

But it was never easy to live in the Ozarks. The settlers had to clear and farm the pocket valleys that the rivers had shaped and filled with soil. They cut the trees, floating the logs to the Missouri and the Mississippi above and below St. Louis.

"Tie hacking" — cutting lumber for railroad ties — became a major Ozark industry in the 19th century. The great transcontinental railroads were floored with Ozark-hewn ties.

Life got harder as the forests filled up with scrub and the thin soil washed away. People moved out, abandoning farms and whole towns. Those who stayed behind learned to be unusually resourceful. They still are. Ozark people have made a virtue of necessity.

I think first of caves. The Ozark highlands are predominately limestone. The area's 40 annual inches of rainfall trickles down through leaf litter and soil, becoming mildly acidic by the time it settles atop the bedrock limestone.

Over eons it has dissolved the limestone, leaving caves. Families have made a living showing the ones on their property. You may go through on foot or in a people-carrier, depending on the cave. Young people still arrange to be married in front of calcite assemblages that look like ranks of organ pipes.

"Bittersweet country," some Ozark people have called their region. Those who are born there must make, early in their adult lives, a single, central decision: whether to stay or go. Staying unfits them for going because living outside takes job skills and education that young people can't find at home. But not many jobs at home pay above the minimum. People survive as they can.

I got to know an elderly Ozark gentleman named Jesse Howard. Small, gray, wiry, soft-spoken, Jesse had worked as a farmhand and a farmer all his long life.

After he retired, Jesse began painting his own messages on wooden signs. "Whatever became of John the Baptist's head?" is one I will always remember. He hung them around his small spread on a hill outside Fulton, Mo. They were remarkable signs, "primitive," as Grandma Moses' paintings were "primitive," and many of them were bought for display in art museums.

Nothing ever went to waste around Jesse's place. When someone in Fulton tore down a house, Jesse showed up to collect the weathered boards for signs. He used the porthole-like door of an abandoned clothes dryer for a window in a shed he built.

Body massage for excellent all-over skin care

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Skin care products for the face can be found in many places, from supermarkets and discount stores to expensive boutiques and even health food outlets.

But skin covers the entire body, not just the face, and skin care is necessary for the entire body.

"We do everything in reverse in this country. European women would rather spend money on a facial and body massage than on a new dress," said Erica T. Miller, aesthetician — skin care expert — and beauty director of the Greenhouse, health and beauty spa for women in Arlington. She said American women often forget that skin care doesn't mean just facial care, "but it's beginning to turn around."

FOR SKIN CARE OVER the entire body, Ms. Miller strongly recommends body massage. "I believe in body massage at least once a week, for everybody," she said. "Basic therapeutic body massage for improvement of beauty, relaxation, muscle toning, helping to eliminate cellulite..."

"A client is going initially because it sounds like it feels good, is relaxing,"she added. "We can also help set up a program of diet and exercise. Massage can help break down fat. There are motor points through the body we can also gear into. A professional knows which motor points, which muscles, knows the proper technique for manipulating the muscles."

Erica T. Miller

MS. MILLER RECEIVED HER TRAINING as a skin specialist and beauty consultant in England from the Christine Shaw School of Beauty, in Paris and in Japan from working for Kanebo Cosmetics in the beauty research division. "In Japan I got my best training," she said. "That's where I learned Shiatsu — the Japanese acupressure technique, using the fingers to apply pressure to the right part of a nerve or muscle to stimulate or relax."

When a person receives a body massage from a professional, Ms. Miller said, that person becomes "thoroughly relaxed, usually feels better, more energetic. It's an energy builder — when someone is massaged, it improves their circulation and metabolism."

"MASSAGE IS NOT A PANACEA," she said. "Massage alone cannot eliminate cellulite. Anytime there's a lot of salt in the system, it causes water retention and helps fat buildup. Bottled mineral water is much, much better for you (than tap water). Water is the best thing in the world for you."

"Massage, depending on the products and techniques used, has the effect of polishing the skin," Ms. Miller said. "The skin looks pretty when you get through. And later, when you are taking a bath, or the next day, your skin feels so much more soft than the last time you touched it. Massage causes sloughing off of a lot of dead cells you didn't know you had."

MS. MILLER SAID AN AESTHETICIAN can help organize a program of skin care suited to each individual. "I highly recommend going to a professional aesthetician just once, if only to be analyzed. The skin has to have some oil because oil is what holds the body's water in, keeps it from evaporating. Grease and oily creams block the skin's breathing system. Most poeple who haven't had advice on how to care for their skin treat it terribly wrong."

"Go once, learn a little bit more what the skin is like," she said. "The American female wastes more money trying to find the best — buying different products for the skin — than if she went to a professional and had it done right."

MS. MILLER ADVISED that, except for makeup, "You shouldn't mix lines in skin care. Skin care products are chemically formulated to work with each other in a range. Mixing the lines can cause sensitivities, breakouts, breakdowns of chemical balance — they can cancel each other out."

"The day is coming when people truly will take care of the body properly from head to toe, and not ignore what doesn't show," she said.

Ms. Miller, in addition to being beauty director and technical consultant to the Greenhouse, is also the editor of "Aesthetics World Journal," which she described as the "only independent trade publication in the world," and is the owner of her own skin care company, Correlation Inc.

"We primarily deal with the skin care and makeup aspect of professional salons that are independent," she said. "We don't deal with retail stores. It's primarily an educational program. We teach different types of massage."

ONE TYPE OF MASSAGE that is becoming popular is aromatherapy. "It's fairly new to this country, but the concept is ancient," Ms. Miller said. "Using various types of massage oils in conjunction with certain types of massage. It's very therapeutic in a lot of ways. For instance, lavender used in massage technique is very relaxing."

Ms. Miller was in Midland recently to conduct a training session at Back Stage. Susan Suggs, owner of the salon, is an aesthetician, a masseuse and makeup artist, and devotes her salon to care of the skin. "We don't do hair," Ms. Suggs said. "We have a man who comes in from Neiman's twice a month and he does hair. The atmosphere we want is a serene, quiet atmosphere and you can't do hair and have that kind of atmosphere."

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

The controversial sperm bank in San Diego County has a limited partnership, no drive-in window and a low rate of interest.

Depositors are limited to Nobel Prize winners and erudite scholars. It doesn't matter who withdraws as long as she is female and willing to carry a baby sired by a genius for nine months.

The purpose, according to the director, is to create "brighter children" from the ranks of whites.

I was thinking about this the other morning when I turned on the light in my bathroom. Had a less-than-physically-perfect deaf man not invented it, I would be in darkness.

I turned on the radio for my morning news fix and suddenly realized if a deformed hunchback had not had a major part in its development, I would be left in silence.

I literally grew up under a president whose political record has never been matched, yet who could not walk or, indeed, move his legs.

The automobile I drove had been invented by a high school dropout. The planes I traveled in had been developed by two brothers from Dayton, Ohio, who also dropped out of high school.

I thought of Leo Tolstoy, Thomas Hardy and Joseph Conrad, who had never won a Nobel Prize for literature.

I thought of the parade of black athletes who had stirred this country with their accomplishments and all the minorities who battled their way through prejudice to make a million contributions to our arts and sciences. I thought of Martin Luther who had an I.Q. of 115 and Abraham Lincoln who was also below the "genius" level.

None of them would have been eligible as sperm donors of the "new society."

But mostly, I thought of a man who finished the fourth grade and worked for a Midwestern city, who married a 14-year-old girl from an orphanage – and had me.

A genetic disaster? Maybe. But I'm bright enough to know genes don't dominate us — we overcome them!

Midland woman wins state Speak-off

Kathy Atkin won the Individual Development Plan Speak-off at the State Convention of the Texas Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs Inc. in Houston recently. Kathy is a member of Midland's Uptown Chapter of Business and Professional Women's Club.

Ms. Atkin will represent Texas at the 1982 convention of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs Inc. in San Antonio this week.

This is the third successive year that members of the Uptown Club have represented District 8 at the State Convention. In 1980 Marion Kimberly was also the state winner.

Individual Development Plan Course I and Course II are offered each fall by the Uptown Club, and are open to the public. Course I focuses on building self confidence and helping participants get their ideas across in public.

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The wife of a professional photographer is "Baffled" because they've been friends with another couple for 20 years, but when it came time for their friends' daughter's wedding, another photographer was engaged to take the pictures. May I be "Dear Abby" for a minute?

"Dear Baffled: Haven't you ever heard that it's not wise to mix friendship with business? Perhaps because this couple values your friendship so much, they hired an outside photographer.

"Reason No. 1: They want you to attend as a guest — not someone who has come there to work. (Taking pictures is a lot of work if it is done properly.)

"Reason No. 2: Even if your husband is the greatest photographer in the world, something could go wrong, or the bride might not like the shots, and she will scream, 'You ruined my day!' Then a 20-year-old friendship would be ended.

"Please give your friends the benefit of the doubt. Believe me, they're doing you a big favor." — SADDER BUT WISER

DEAR SADDER: "Understanding in Cold Spring Harbor, N.Y." adds Reason No. 3:

"Your friend may have engaged another photographer because she feared that your husband might use his professional talents and materials without charging you, and this is her way of avoiding an embarrassing situation."

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to add my 2 cents' worth about wedding pictures: It doesn't really matter who takes them as long as they're taken by a professional. The worst mistake anyone can make is letting a friend or some member of the family take pictures of a wedding — or any other memorable occasion.

I know. My brother was an amateur photographer, and some of his pictures were pretty good, so when he offered to take the pictures of my wedding I said OK.

That was the dumbest thing I've ever done. Some of the film was bad, and most of the pictures didn't turn out at all. Also, he was trying to make an impression on a girl at the time, so he brought her to the wedding, and, Abby, every single picture he took had this girl in it! He just followed her around and took pictures of her.

It's been years now, but every time I think of it I get mad all over again. — HAD IT WITH AMATEURS

DEAR HAD IT: If my readers can stand one more bit of recycled advice: "Hire the best photographer you can get to cover special occasions, because once the occasion has passed, it's gone forever. Don't rely on well-meaning amateurs just because they have a fortune in equipment and 'love' to take pictures."

DEAR ABBY: To the bride's mother who included little notes with the wedding invitations to "remind" the guests that her daughter had everything she needed, so an ideal gift would be "something that could be tucked into a purse or pocket":

How thoughtful! My suggestion would be two handkerchieves: One for the bride and one for the groom. And possibly a third for the bride's mother to be used to wipe away the tears when she realizes that no cash will be forthcoming. — NO TEARS IN SEATTLE

Teenage abortion rate doubles in Japan; doctors urge sex education

By DEBORAH SMITH
AP Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Despite an overall decrease in abortions in Japan, the rate of cases involving teenagers has doubled in the past two decades — leading social workers and doctors to urge a lifting of taboos against sex education that still exist in many schools.

"It is not a question of whether (teenage) sex is right or wrong, but whether the young person has the ability to make the decision. That is our job — to give them information," said Tsuguo Shimazaki, assistant director of the Japanese Association for Sex Education.

"Teachers and parents think sex education is important, not the mechanics but from the view of human sexuality. But when it comes to when, where, who, what and how far the topic should be handled, they can't agree," he said.

In feudal Japan, ordinary farmers practiced "mabiki," or abortion and infanticide, in order to meet rice quotas and still manage to feed their families.

Mabiki was banned in the late 1800s, abortion legalized in 1948. Japan later acquired a reputation as an "abortion haven" that attracted women from other countries. Today the majority are Japanese who take advantage of the law allowing abortion for economic hardship reasons.

In 1980, there were 598,084 abortions reported, according to the Health and Welfare Ministry, but the actual number is considered higher. "In order not to be taxed, doctors don't always report all the abortions they perform," said Dr. Seiichi Matsumoto, a medical-school director who specializes in adolescent pregnancies.

Matsumoto said some parents feared increased sex education would lead to more sexual activity. Yet it is generally recognized that Japanese youths know little about birth control — the pill is seldom available — and that, plus social pressure against the unwed mother, is blamed by some authorities for the rise in teenage abortions.

Records show 19,048 abortions were performed on girls 15 to 19 in 1980. Some officials contend the real figure is twice that. The rate of 4.8 abortions per 1,000 teenage girls was almost double the 1965 rate of 2.5. And the ratio of teenage to total abortions has risen from 1.6 percent to 3.2 percent.

Sister Lucina, one of the Missionaries of Charity sent by Mother Teresa last year to open a home for unwed mothers, said, "It is considered a stigma for a Japanese young girl to get pregnant. In many countries a girl can come to us, have the baby and give it up quietly for adoption. Here it is not so easy. It is like they have no choice (other than abortion)."

Each child must be entered into the family registry which clearly indicates whether it is legitimate. If the child is adopted, it also lists the natural mother's name. A copy is required for application to schools or companies and often by prospective in-laws.

Sachiko Kanematsu, a counselor with a Tokyo welfare office, said fear of "dirtying the family registry" sometimes acted as a "brake." However, she said, young people are enticed by magazines which romanticize sex.

Schools routinely expel or suspend pregnant students, leaving the teenage girl with few job opportunities. Many unwed mothers work in nightclubs, taking advantage of bar-operated nurseries.

'How to Make Love' pleasant diversion

By ELAINE WARREN
Hearst Feature Service

It would have been a nice touch to report that when inspiration struck Michael Morgenstern to sit down and write his new book, "How to Make Love to a Woman," he was in a crimson frenzy of passion.

He wasn't. He was burned out on writing dry, academic stuff.

Given the title of his first work, "The Role of the Federal Government in Protecting Its Citizenry from Communicable Diseases," or his second, "An Epidemiologic Incidence of the Guillane-Barre Syndrome prior to the 1976 Swine Flu Program," it's not hard to understand why he told his agent he wanted to work on something a little sexier.

Morgenstern, who is a lawyer,, and two other author-lawyers buzzed around the country for several months, interviewing approximately 200 women about their sex lives. The women were eager to talk, and he emerged with the not-so-new news that the the sexes are often as not on a collision course and the casualties are high.

Armed with this knowledge, he sat down to write, and the book reached the market on May 27. Morgenstern hit the publicity trail.

But for all the hype, what lies between the covers of this book is as stale and unexciting, perhaps, as the sex lives of those who rush out to buy it.

In the chapter titled "What Women Find Sexy in a Man," Morgenstern writes, "Most women don't find the ability to perform like a 'stud' attractive. What women really find sexy in a man is a different story entirely. When I asked random women the same questions, the answer was almost always the same. The single most attractive thing about a man is self-assurance."

Or this, under the chapter "Fears of Flying:" "If a woman's thinks her breasts are too large or too small, you need to let her know that you appreciate them as they are. If you're one of the many men who prefer small breasts, let your partner know that; it will put her at ease.

In the chapter titled "No More Macho, No More Wimp," Morgenstern advances his theory – one that's been around for about 10 years – that the women's movement has thrown most men into a tizzy, not knowing whether women want them to be domineering or submissive.

But here comes the really hot, important news. Men today are on the frontier of discovering something cataclysmic. "The return of sex roles in the '80s won't be a return to stereotypes or stereotyped sex," Morgenstern writes breathlessly. "Making love is a shared responsibility."

Morgenstern likes to reveal little gemstones of wisdom in a cozy, chatty, confidential tone. But don't get the wrong idea – the book isn't based on Morgenstern's own personal experiences. As Morgenstern proudly announced during a promotional stopover, "I didn't embark on this book as a self-help adventure. I've always considered myself fairly adequate."

Yet when one of his women friends nearly smacked him for pulling the chair out for her – right there at the American Bar Association dining room in front of all his lawyer friends – he was all shook up. That's what got him thinking about the deep, depressing chasm between men and women.

In Morgenstern's simplistic view, there's a neat and tidy answer for everthing. The women's movement is responsible for making everything confusing.

By the same token, although the major complaint among women he interviewed was that men are still treating them as sex objects, "I think women bring it on themselves," he says.

"The way I see the whole scenario is that in the 1950s you had men treating women as sexual objects. After the women's liberation movement and the sexual revolution, women discovered that they could have pleasure with sex. But now that women have tried sex and they're dissatisfied with it, they've basically come full circle and are saying that they want more than just sex."

Way found to manufacture morphine

Copley News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — A federal scientist has developed the first practical way of synthesizing painkilling drugs like morphine without using the opium poppy.

The research, announced at the annual meeting of the American Chemical Society, represents a major advance toward the large-scale manufacture of these drugs.

As such, it would help protect the United States from future opium shortages, like the one that occurred in 1973-75 because of crop failures. At that time, shortages forced federal officials to dip into the nation's strategic reserve of opium to meet medical needs.

The availability of large quantities of synthetic opium-like drugs also will help researchers to better explore the chemistry of the brain and the nervous system.

The process, invented by Dr. Kenneth C. Rice of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., provides the "first relatively simple and practical total synthesis" of three important substances needed to make opiates. These substances — dihydrothebainone, dihydrocodeinone and nordihydrocodeinone — can be transformed into natural morphine, codeine, thebaine and their chemical cousins.

"These unnatural opiates are structural mirror images of natural opiates and do not occur in nature," Dr. Rice said. "They are extremely useful, however, in research on the chemistry of the nervous system."

For example, scientists know that the painkilling action of certain opiates, such as morphine, occur when the drugs lock into specific receptors in the brain. These receptors are keyed to the natural opiates and do not recognize their unnatural relative. Thus unnatural morphine could be used to help researchers find out if a given effect on a laboratory animal involves a receptor or not.

Scientists have been trying to develop a way to manufacture synthetic opium for years, as a hedge against unreliable foreign sources. Morphine, codeine and other opiates are now manufactured exclusively from opium or poppy straw imported from abroad, principally from India. Cultivation of opium crops in this country is illegal.

The medical importance of codeine alone, one of the most commonly prescribed analgesics and antitussives in the world, is reflected by its rising annual production and use. In the United States, more than 121,000 pounds of the drug is currently used; worldwide, the figure is 418,000 pounds.

Several years ago, Drs. Henry Rapoport and D.D. Weller of the University of California at Berkeley created a process for making normal opiates from intermediate chemicals. But the process proved to be too complex and inefficient for practical applications.

But Dr. Rice worked out a relatively simple method of manufacturing chemical intermediaries required to synthesize opium. The key to the process was the use of a so-called "super-acid" — trifluoromethanesulfonic acid. The acid helps to trigger the chemical reaction and keeps the number of steps involved to a minimum.

Synthesis of a number of unnatural opiates, funded by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, is now in progress at Research Triangle Institute under the direction of Drs. F.I. Carroll, G.A. Brine, and A.H. Lewin. Patent applications protect the United States' interests in the new process.

Author says women have not achieved emotional liberation

By BARBARA HUSTON
Hearst Feature Service

We've had women's liberation for 20 years, but we have not yet begun to get emotional liberation, Dr. Penelope Russianoff says.

The tall, striking, 64-year-hold psychologist — who practically played herself in the movie, "An Unmarried Woman," with Jill Clayburgh as the patient — says most women don't even realize they are thinking, "I am nothing without a man."

That's why Russianoff wrote "Why Do I Think I Am Nothing without a Man?" (Bantam), which feminist Germaine Greer called "a small masterpiece of common sense."

Common sense is what it is. No hostile harangues against men who sold America the belief that a woman was nothing without a man. When you stop thinking of yourself as victim, you stop thinking of man as a villain, Russianoff says. "You don't have to get hostile when you're in synch with yourself.

Russianoff is not into deep spiritual searches for feminine energy or meditations on loneliness. "I'm a behavioral psychologist," Russianoff says. "I send my patients — or readers — out to change their ways of practicing relationships. I challenge their underlying, sometimes hidden assumptions about the importance of men. I think when behavior changes, underlying feelings change.

Russianoff challenges assumptions that are, apparently, ready to be challenged:

•Women are chronically concerned about their appearance in order to please men.

But the most popular woman Russianoff knows in New York, "who has more men than she knows what to do with," isn't particularly beautiful. Her secret? She likes herself and likes others.

•Women who conceal their intelligence, who "wait for him to call," are usually so preoccupied with worry over what a man will think of them that they aren't "all there" when he does arrive.

Russianoff clearly doesn't endorse "feminine" or "masculine" roles. She doesn't endorse role reversal. She goes for role-dropping. "When you're not thinking about sex all the time, you can have deep male and female friendships."

•Women who think sex is an absolute must for self-assurance or even physical health — "I don't actually like the men I sleep with, but I know it's good for my health," someone once told her — can find stronger sources of self-assurance and good health.

Believing in an exciting life goal for yourself is the essential replacement of the cultural obsession about men, Russianoff says. It makes life with a man richer, too, she's found in her long marriage to a well-known clarinetist who is shorter than she.

Book answers gynecological questions

By ANNE BEATON
Hearst Feature Service

True or false:

a) Most breast tumors are benign.
b) Birth control pills can reduce sexual desire.
c) Menstrual cramps are primarily psychological.
d) Monkeys have homosexual tendencies.

New York gynecologist Dr. Niels Lauersen answers these questions and many more in his newly revised book, "It's Your Body," a veritable encyclopedia of gynecological care.

From contraception to child bearing, from fibrocystic breast disease to cancer, it's all there: everything you want to know — and how it works.

Lauersen, on the teaching staff at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York, debunks myths that many still hold — for instance, that douching helps prevent pregnancy, that sex during menstruation is harmful and that menstrual cramps are psychological.

His message is simple: be informed.

"Before, women didn't talk about their problems to their husbands, boyfriends, friends or doctors. They just blindly did what they were told," Lauersen said. "But they must ask questions. Change doctors, if need be. It's your body and you make the final decision."

Lauersen recently completed updating "It's Your Body," which first came out in 1977 and has won high praise from both feminists and medical professionals. New sections deal with fibrocystic breast disease and endometriosis, new drugs to combat them, toxic shock syndrome, and the latest research on estrogen.

Lauresen notes that breast lumps don't automatically mean cancer. Most are fibrocystic and non-malignant, though often painful. If there's no pain, it's more likely to be cancer.

Cystic breast disease occurs during the premenstrual period in 15 to 20 percent of women aged 20 to 50. Breast cancer strikes 7 percent and is far more likely to occur later in life. While taking vitamins B and E and eliminating caffeine from the diet often takes care of the problem, a new hormonal drug, danazol, is now available.

Danazol also has been used to treat endometriosis, an infertility problem that often is caused by tension and stress.

On toxic shock syndrome, Lauersen is practical. While the minimal chance of contracting the disease can be almost entirely eliminated by forgoing tampons, women may balance the benefits and convenience of tampon use against such a slight risk.

Similarly, the advantages of the pill as a birth control device must be weighed against its disadvantages, which Lauersen notes have been significantly reduced since the introduction of pills much lower in estrogen than earlier ones. There also is evidence that the pill protects the breasts against cancer.

Lauersen devotes considerable space to another recent phenomenon: women who wait until their 30s to have children. He is frank: postponing childbirth creates a multitude of potential problems, not the least of which are a higher incidence of fibrocystic breast disease and breast cancer, infertility and birth complications that can threaten the fetus.

But if a woman is aware that these problems may occur and takes care of herself, she can significantly reduce the risks. He prescribes exercising, eating well, watching your weight (overweight women have more infertility problems and a higher incidence of breast cancer), using proper birth control (the IUD is out, because of potential fallopian tube damage) and watching closely for any signs of venereal disease.

The last part of the book is devoted to sex — from traditional to kinky. Here Lauersen's matter-of-fact tone also prevails.

These painting tips are on the house

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

The expressions about certain people following the sun might be applied to those who paint their houses.

When doing exterior painting on a sunny day, it's a good idea to start on the side where the sun has been and then, as you continue, follow the sun around the house. There are three advantages. First, the side you start on will be completely dry. Secondly, the painted area will not be subjected to the rays of the sun and therefore won't dry too fast. And finally, it's a lot more comfortable to paint in the shade than in the sun.

Be sure you are standing on a sound ladder and that it is firmly planted on the ground before you ascend it. The distance from the foundation of the feet of the ladder should be about one-fourth the height of the ladder. Thus, a 20-foot ladder should have its feet about 5 feet from the house. If the base of the ladder is to rest on soft ground, place a board under it in such a position that it cannot slip. If the feet are on concrete, they should be equipped with rubber safety treads or some other kind of safety equipment.

It is usually better to paint from top to bottom, starting at a left-hand corner if possible. Professionals sometimes work across a house, especially when working with assistants and with special equipment. You may have to move the ladder often when you have to work from top to bottom, but it's safer that way. The important thing is not to stretch any farther than your natural reach, advice that goes whether you are using a brush or a roller.

With an all-wood house, it is usually better to paint the siding first, the trim and sash later. This is not always practical, though, particularly when painting on a high house. In that case, do the siding and the trim at the same time, if feasible, so that the ladder does not have to be moved too many times.

As with interior painting, the preparation of the surface is all-important. Loose and peeling paint must be scraped and sanded. Remember, too, that new paint will not take well on old paint if the latter is glossy, in which case the shine will have to be dulled. Do all nailing and caulking before you begin the actual painting.

The matter of which type of paint to use is sometimes a problem, but shouldn't be in most cases. Most of the time, it's best to use the same kind of paint as that used previously. Latex will take over oil- or alkyd-base paint, and vice versa, but you must take such a step with care. See what the paint-can label says about putting one coat over another and whether any special preparatory in-between coat is necessary. The oil- and alkyd-base paint manufacturers say their products give better coverage and have better durability. The makers of the good latex paints say it isn't so and that latex not only permits an easier cleanup, but is actually better because it drys faster, can be applied even if the surface is not fully dry, and allows the wall to breathe, hindering blistering and peeling. Regardless of the claims, never put on latex over the so-called chalking paints, which chalk during rainy weather and get rid of dirt when they do so.

Can you get by with one coat? You may with a good paint advertised as a one-coater, since it is formulated to have more hiding ability. But the big thing about using only a single coat is whether the new paint is a lighter or darker color. If it's the same color or darker, it has a much better chance of doing the job with a single coat. If the new coat is lighter in color, the possibility exists that you may not cover as well as you thought and that, even if you do, the coverage may not last as long as it should.

Antibiotics fed to animals cause drug-resistant bacteria

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Half of all antibiotics used in the United States are fed to farm animals, and researchers say this has led to the growth of drug-resistant bacteria that are hazardous to humans.

Their study is the first evidence that bacteria are attacking humans after evolving genes inside farm creatures that make them immune to common antibiotics.

These drug-resistance genes are passed from one kind of bacteria to another, and the doctors warn that they may make other common, disease-causing germs hard to kill with currently available drugs.

Doctors from Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston discovered the link in three strains of salmonella. These bacteria cause food poisoning, and whether found in people or animals, they carry the same drug-resistance genes.

The doctors believe that people acquired bacteria with these genes by eating animal products, such as beef or milk.

Farmers routinely feed antibiotics to cows, hogs and other animals to prevent disease and promote growth.

The 2½-year study was directed by Dr. Thomas F. O'Brien and published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

The bacteria's drug-resistance genes are carried on rings of DNA called plasmids. This resistance evolves as billions of bacteria are repeatedly exposed to antibiotics.

The doctors examined three strains of salmonella and found identical plasmids in bacteria attacking people and animals. One strain infected 26 people in Massachusetts and California as well as cattle in 20 West and Midwest states.

By JOHN RICE
AP Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Let's say that you ate bacon and eggs for breakfast, with a muffin and jam on the side.

For lunch, you downed a hamburger with ketchup, some pork and beans and a cola. And for dinner you munched on tossed salad with Caesar dressing, gnawed on barbecued ribs and french fries and slurped ice cream with butterscotch syrup for dessert.

That feast would have filled your belly with about 150 food additives, many with frighteningly unpronounceable names — jawbreakers unknown before scientists started fiddling with food in the post-World War II era.

But, says Willis A. Gortner, most are completely safe.

Gortner was head of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's human nutrition laboratory from 1964 to 1976. And he's co-author, along with Nicholas Freydberg, of a new 700-page paperback, "The Food Additives Book," published by Bantam Books.

"I'm personally very bullish on food additives," says Gortner, a trim 68-year-old. "I myself want additives in my food. I want my food to have a long shelf life. I want it to be safe from germs and so on...But I want it to be safe."

Gortner said that he spent three years on the book, listing the additives in 6,000 brand name foods.

The book describes why the additives are used, what scientific studies say about them and who should be cautious about consuming them. About 80 percent are listed as safe. A few Gortner warns against. Others rate a question mark.

Have you, while reading the ingredients panel on your breakfast food, frozen in mid-swallow at finding mannitol? Ethyl maltol? Sodium calcium aluminosilicate? Calcium stearoyl-2-lactylate? Worry no more, says Gortner: Scientific evidence is that they're safe.

Do you feel comfortable eating pure, natural foods, such as nutmeg, paprika and whey? Think again, the book warns. They can be dangerous for some people. Nutmeg, for example, can cause hallucinations, nausea and stupor in larger than usual doses, Gortner says.

"The complexity of a chemical doesn't really give you a clue as to whether it is safe," he said.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Bathe sprinklers

GIVE SPRINKLER A VINEGAR BATH

DEAR HELOISE:

I have a problem with my oscillating lawn sprinklers because of the hard water in our area. Nothing I have tried has removed the mineral deposits inside the sprinklers.

Have you, or any of your readers, ever solved such a problem? I'm getting tired of buying a new sprinkler every other season. To date, I have five non-oscillating oscillating sprinklers. Help! — John Clancy, Jr.

Put the sprinkler in any container that you can fit it into, then pour enough white vinegar in to completely cover it. It may take two or three gallons — but that's still cheaper than buying a new sprinkler.

Let this stand until you are sure the lime deposits are completely dissolved. Swish the sprinkler around in the vinegar from time to time.

Before using the sprinkler, check the holes to be sure they aren't clogged. Turn the water hose on and rinse the holes out, using a toothpick, or anything similar, to remove any remaining deposits. Oil if necessary, then the sprinkler should be ready to oscillate.

If you like, save the vinegar and repeat the process before storing the sprinkler at the end of the season. Then it will be in tiptop shape when you need it again next year. — Heloise

FRESHER POTATO CHIPS

Dear Heloise: The greatest way to seal one of those stiff potato chip bags after opening is with a spring-type clothes pin.

Simply squeeze out the excess air, then fold the bag over once or twice and snap on the clothespin.

Place the bag in the freezer and the chips will stay fresh for days and days. — Cynthia Graham

ENERGY SAVER

Dear Heloise: A little hint... To keep from popping the door open every few minutes to see if the mail has come, I put a leaf under the mailbox lid.

When I look through my window and the leaf no longer shows, I know my mail has arrived. Saves on my fuel bill in winter and keeps the warm air out in summer. — Mrs. Hudson

LESS TIRING CHORES

Dear Heloise: I find that when I have several things to do, if I switch about and do different things I don't get as tired.

For instance, if I am sewing, I sew for a while then go wash a load of clothes or straighten a room, go back and sew again for a while, then do something else.

I really get more accomplished and don't get so bored. This is especially good when sewing as I get some exercise. — M.B. Blackman

Some scares good for kids

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Don Bluth, an animator and producer of "The Secret of NIMH," insists, "It wasn't that we all got older and grew up that made animated films seem less than they were 30 years ago. It was that stories got weaker, shallower."

Bluth originally wanted to be a teacher but eventually became a Disney animator before founding his own company which is releasing "The Secret of NIMH" this summer.

As a contributor to some of the so-called scary Disney films, Bluth — whose own first feature film "NIMH" has "scary" episodes — thinks suspense serves useful purposes.

"Children have looked at the early animated classics, and the scary times have been a catharsis for many," he says, "allowing them to face their fears and work through some of them in the protective arms of their parents.

"Some conflict, I believe, is good, necessary for the building of the person.

"And when the lows are really bad, that makes the highs seem so much better."

"The Secret of NIMH" is a version of a Newberry Award-winning novel by Robert C. O'Brien, "Mrs. Frisby and the Rats of NIMH."

It was directed by Bluth.

Daniel Guntzelman and Steve Marshall, the executive producers of "Gloria," Sally Struthers' new series for CBS, say they're committed to the idea that "reality is a lot funnier than TV contrivance."

So they won't go for pratfalls in the new show but, instead, will try to reveal what it's like when a girl who's been sheltered becomes an independent, single parent in the 1980s.

For Struthers, the launching of "Gloria" ends a bad period which lasted for three and one-half years. It included unemployment, the failure of a television pilot, the failure of a play and the failure of her marriage.

However, it wasn't without at least one triumph.

"I created a character called Samantha who has just turned 3," Sally says proudly.

She calls her past three and a half years "a learning experience," a time during which she grew up.

"A failed Broadway play, a failed television pilot and a failed marriage tends to do that to you," honest Sally says.

"... I gained an inner strength (during my bleak years) I never knew I had. I'm old enough now to be complaisant (about unemployment).

"Motherhood made it feel OK to be staying home."

She also says, "It was a time period God had planned for me ... I wouldn't trade it, because it brought me inner peace, humbled me."

She originally left "All in the Family," not because of any conflict or mad ambition, but "because my contract was up.

"If I'd stayed in 'All in the Family,' I might not have had Samantha."

At that point, she thought she'd shucked the Gloria image forever.

Now, though, she's thrilled to be Gloria again, and not just because the role means a job.

"The woman I'll play in the new series is totally different from Archie's little girl who was almost a throwback because of the sheltered life she led.

"It will be like doing a new character but one with a name the public knows."

Also, working in "Gloria" will keep Sally in Los Angeles, close to home and to her daughter who will be able to spend time on the set.

"If the series can run 10 years, Samantha will be 13," Sally reflects. "Then maybe I can get back into movies and go to Yugoslavia and make a film with Tom Selleck."

Jay Bernstein who, by his own account, made Farrah Fawcett the perfect 30-year-old woman of the 1970s, plans to make Linda Evans the perfect 40-year-old woman of the 1980s and Bruce Boxleitner, already a good actor, a hero.

And since that's what Bernstein is planning to accomplish, it's probably as good as done. For he's a man whose abilities should never be underestimated.

He's already transformed himself from a publicist, pure and simple (if you're careful how you construe those adjectives), into a personal manager of the stars and an executive producer of "Bring 'Em Back Alive," a new CBS series starring Boxleitner.

A man who can do that may not be entirely pure and certainly isn't simple, which explains why the phrase must be weighed carefully.

In any case, explaining his expectations for Evans, Bernstein says, "Because of the post-World War II baby boom, most people are now 40 years old."

So a lot of people will either identify with or lust for a woman of that age.

Further, Bernstein enlarges, women now are keeping themselves in better physical condition than their mothers and older sisters may have done, so at 40, they are scarcely middle-aged frumps.

Linda, he intends, will become the dream girl of the progeny of GI Joe.

As for Boxleitner, Bernstein says confidently, "The '80s is a time for leading men. ... The past seven years were a period of beautiful women. The '80s is the time of the Tom Selleck type. ... Tom is just the beginning of what they're looking for.

"We went through a decade of common men types," the master manager goes on. "Today we need heroes desperately."

While forging Boxleitner into a type to fill this need, Bernstein has discouraged him from taking less than heroic roles.

For instance, Bruce was offered the part of a Nazi, accepted by Stephen Collins, in "Inside the Third Reich." But on Bernstein's advice, he turned it down.

He'll be seen this summer playing the title role in Disney's anticipated smash, "Tron." Soon after he'll be presented playing love scenes with the perfect 40-year-old woman, Linda Evans, in a four-hour television production, "Bare Essence."

"If two out of three of these projects work out as well as we hope, Bruce will be a major star by the end of the year," says Bernstein.

Asked how he'd feel about becoming an heroic male sex symbol in the manner of Selleck, Bruce says without hesitation, "I'd love it. I've dreamt all my life of starring in a television series."

Yes, he did play Jim Arness' nephew in the series "How the West Was Won," but Arness was star of the show. He continued in the role of Luke Macahan in "The Macahans."

However, Boxleitner doesn't consider these opportunities in the league with the chance he's getting in "Bring 'Em Back Alive," in which he plays Frank Buck, the person from history who made the phrase famous.

The real Buck was an adventurer-trapper, but not much like the character Boxleitner enacts.

The real Buck made movies, but they weren't akin to the upcoming CBS series.

Actress has royal connections

NEW YORK (AP) — Catherine Oxenberg, who will portray Princess Diana of Wales in the Hallmark Hall of Fame television production of "Charles and Diana: A Royal Romance" late this fall, has had little experience as an actress. But the young model has more than a passing acquaintance with royalty.

Through her mother, Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia, she is related to the royal houses of Great Britain, Greece and Russia. Her grandmother is Princess Olga of Yugoslavia, born a princess of Greece; her great-aunt was Princess Marina of Greece, who became Duchess of Kent; her great-great-grandmother was Queen Olga of Greece, born Grand Duchess of Russia, and her grandfather was Prince Paul of Yugoslavia, regent of that country during World War II.

Mail-order shopping and sales are on the increase

AP Newsfeatures

It's no coincidence mail-order sales are booming. Toll-free telephone numbers and credit cards have made mail order an easy way to shop.

The gas- and time-saving aspects have also played a role, as has the proliferation of catalogs and the great variety of available merchandise.

TODAY, MAIL-ORDER SALES total about $40 billion a year, and it has been estimated this form of shopping is growing at a rate of 15 percent a year, or double the growth of retail sales in stores, The industry trade association estimates about 20 percent of Americans are regular mail-order buyers and two out of three have made at least one mail-order purchase. Their figures indicate that more than 4,000 companies circulate one or more catalogs a year.

Although comparative figures for earlier years are not available, indications are the mail-order sales of home furnishings, like other products, have increased recently. In 1980, the first year for which there are separate figures, American consumers spent about $290 million on home furnishings purchased through the mail, according to the Direct Mail Marketing Association.

THE AUTHORS OF A RECENT CATALOG of home furnishings mail-order sources point out that virtually all products for the home can be purchased through the mail. Furthermore, add Arthur Leaman and Jose Wilson, authors of "The Second Complete Home Decorating Catalogue," some shoppers have been sending for catalogs, even if they do not intend to buy, simply because they present an easy way to comparison shop.

The two discovered that many catalogs contain advice and information on subjects such as how to arrange a room, choose a color scheme or make a repair.

According to Philip Liss, president of Peerless Imported Rugs, a Chicago-based firm that specializes in mail-order sales of oriental rugs and tapestries from Europe, there are two reasons why mail-order buying appeals to consumers: to save money and to have access to merchandise that would otherwise be unavailable.

ALTHOUGH MAIL-ORDER DISCOUNTERS do exist, nowadays most home furnishings mail-order catalogs offer access to unusual items rather than discounts.

"In some rural and suburban areas, home furnishing items that city residents take for granted are simply unavailable," Liss said. Mail order or a trip to a large city are, therefore, the only ways some consumers can acquire the items they want.

Peerless has been selling oriental rugs by mail for about six years.

"We sell about 100 rugs a week by mail," Liss said, adding that a customer will sometimes buy small rugs in several colors to see how they look in the home and then send them all back, ordering the rug of their choice in a larger size.

"Since they have 30 days to return it, it is an easy method of shopping," he said.

Returns average only about 3 percent of sales, he said, indicating consumers are satisfied with buying rugs through the mail.

ON THE OTHER HAND, not every type of home furnishings product lends itself to mail order. Fred Hochberg, senior vice president of Lillian Vernon Corp., said the home furnishings catalog his firm mailed to about a million consumers this year had been only a qualified success.

Consumer response convinced him there is a market for all types of home furnishings by mail, but some items, such as bulky furniture and antiques, are too costly and difficult to ship safely. "We are putting our next edition on 'hold' while we re-think the home furnishings operation," he said.

BUYING ITEMS SIGHT UNSEEN from unknown companies can be a cause for some apprehension. But Leaman and Wilson offer some advice to minimize the risks.

Keep a record of what you have ordered, including the name and address of the company, description and catalog number of the merchandise, date ordered, amount paid, and your check number or money-order number, they say. They also advocate making two copies of the information — one for your permanent records and one in case the original order gets lost or misplaced and you need to communicate with the company. And, they add, never send cash through the mail.

Pushy parent needs professional help

By WILLARE ABRAHAM, Ph.D.

Q. My husband is driving me up the wall about a problem that I think he is creating.

We have one child, a 5-year-old little girl whom we both love very much. It now looks as though she will be our only child, and that seems to be breaking his heart because he has always talked about having a son.

However, that isn't the issue I'm leading up to. The one that concerns me is his constant pressuring her to get involved in mechanical activities. He buys her electrical trains, cars and other toys, forces her to participate with him in all kinds of repair work around the house, and already talks to her (and everyone else who will listen) about the kind of career she will pursue. It is always related to engineering or something like that.

I have pleaded with him to stop it, even though she shows no resentment against these pressures of his. I resent them, though, because I feel strongly that he is trying to influence her unnecessarily and unnaturally.

Please tell me how I can cope with this problem so that he will begin to lay off.

A. What he seems to need is the objective counseling of a professional person whom he respects and who has access to full details of your family and your child's interests and capabilities.

I can't qualify because, despite your sharing with me, I don't have his side of the story or maybe even all of the facts on your side.

A family psychologist or counselor to whom your little girl's school might refer you could be helpfu.

One possible "solution" that occurs to me is related to adoption of a son, but that approach is far too personal for discussion through this column with only the details you have brought up.

Q. Have you ever heard of a kid who wants to eat hamburgers all the time? For breakfast, lunch and dinner, every day, our 6-year-old could be happy having a hamburger or two, with or without a bun, and with nothing else.

My husband is a meat-and-potatoes freak, so I guess our son comes by it naturally. But it is strange. Don't you think so?

A. Some people could eat ice cream at every meal — or salads — or pickles — or almost anything — but that doesn't mean that they actually do.

Your task is pretty clear. It's to provide your boy with balanced meals that can contribute to his healthful growth. A hamburger once in a while, but how about also providing fruit, milk and all the rest that you know he should have? Even if you don't think your husband is a good model, you can be one in what you serve and what you eat.

Q. Our pediatrician used the term or expression "MBD" in describing our young child and it's all a mystery to me. Because I didn't ask for an explanation at the time, I'm somewhat embarrassed now to bring it up.

Do you have any idea what in the world he might have been talking about?

A. Perhaps he was referring to "minimal brain dysfunction." It is sometimes used in reference to specific learning disabilities that a child might have.

You are not alone in being reluctant about asking a physician to explain medical or other labels that are not easily understood by laymen. However, it seems to me that we are wrong to hesitate in pressing professional people for clear, concise explanations of the jargon that they sometimes hand out. Whether we're talking to physicians, teachers, lawyers or any others whose services we use, we are entitled to understand without confusion what they are telling us.

That is what good communication is all about.

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

The most volatile segment of the real estate market is the development and sale of condominiums.

For example, consider the "condo conversion" market — the conversion of rental apartments into condominiums. This phase of real estate activity reached boom proportions from 1978 through 1980, then dropped sharply last year.

ONE RECENT REPORT, reviewing the 18 top markets in the United States, showed sales of condo conversion units peaked at 90,000 in 1980, then dropped to 56,000 last year. Projections for this year are about 26,500 units.

Long-range projections, however, point to a substantial increase in the number of condo conversions and development of newly constructed condos within the next five years. Our demographics and social trends make the condo and town home the most practical housing type for most Americans in future years.

THE REASONS for the current slowdown in the condo conversion market are (1) high cost of financing, (2) increasing restrictive legislation, (3) oversupply of condos in some areas.

The oversupply problem is primarily being experienced in Florida and California. Individual cities outside those states feeling the oversupply pinch are Denver, Phoenix and Seattle.

THE DEMAND FOR CONDOS will grow, using up the existing inventory of unsold units and creating a market for more condos — conversions and new construction. There will be an increasing number of condo buyers from the singles market, older empty-nesters and young families who are adjusted to and satisfied with a condo for at least a temporary "dream home."

During the 1980s there will be a 17 million net increase in the number of households in the United States. That means by 1990 there will be a 50 percent increase in the number of household formations over the number in 1970.

An ever increasing proportion of those households will be residing in a "home sweet condo" residence.

ANOTHER INTERESTING TREND is evolving in the current scenario of condo happenings. The types of properties being condoized are expanding.

Condo units within commercial and industrial buildings are becoming increasingly popular with business owners. Even small offices are being purchased as condo units to achieve tax and investment benefits.

Other types of properties being offered as condos: shopping center units, warehouse-storage space and campground sites.

THEN, OF COURSE, there's a new world of condos being offered on a time-share basis — a few weeks of ownership each year. This includes resort accommodations and central city hotel units even far-out offerings like accommodations on cruising ships.

Q. I was interested in your column on the FTC report regarding real estate sales commissions. How can home sellers be expected to know that commissions are negotiable?

A. A real estate broker, responding to the same column, pointed out that this bit of important information is usually carried in the printed listing form and the Multiple Listing Service (MLS) book — the publication describing current MLS-listed properties.

Q. I've heard that a real estate developer in San Francisco is offering a Hawaiian vacation for a nickel. Is that for real?

A. Sure, but there's a small catch. To qualify for the nickel vacation you must purchase a condominium in San Francisco from the developer, priced from $135,000 to $450,000.

You can be sure the cost of the vacation is worked into those condo prices. There's still no free lunch, and certainly no free Hawaiian vacations.

Inquiries are invited and may be answered in this column. Write: James M. Woodard, 825 N. San Marcos Road, Santa Barbara, CA 93111.

BLUEBERRY PIE

It has a luscious creamy filling.

1-3rd cup sugar
2 tablespoons corn starch
1 cup milk
1 cup sour cream
1½ teaspoons vanilla
1 cup fresh blueberries
8-inch baked graham cracker crust

In a 1½-quart saucepan stir together the sugar and cornstarch; gradually stir in the milk, keeping smooth. Over medium heat, stirring constantly, cook until mixture shows it is boiling because it bubbles and sputters and mounds slightly when dropped from a spoon. Off heat, with a wire whisk gently stir in the sour cream and vanilla until blended. Fold in the blueberries. Turn into the graham cracker crust. Refrigerate to set — several hours or overnight.

Consumers want packages that are easily resealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers prefer resealable packages, and lack of this convenience is cited as a major problem, according to a survey conducted recently by the Package Designers Council.

The study, "Consumers' Perceptions of Food Packaging," was carried out in supermarkets, where shoppers were questioned about their preferences in packaging.

The study shows that among four packaging characteristics found to be of particular importance to consumers, three concern storage life. In order of significance, the three characteristics are: storage life of unused portion, ease of resealability, and ability to store at home. The fourth factor is ease of recognizing contents by the package exterior.

Sixty percent of consumers polled said that packaging influenced at least some of their purchase decisions.

"The objective of the study was to provide guidance to the package design industry in order to improve food packaging relative to consumers' expressed needs," said Stuart M. Berni, president of the Package Designers Council. "Since consumers expressed strong concerns about being able to reseal food packages in order to keep contents fresh longer, new packaging should feature ease of resealability."

"With smaller families and more singles living alone, consumers require smaller portions of food," notes John B. Carroll, vice president of the Closure Manufacturers Association, the industry group representing leading makers of metal and plastic caps. "Resealable metal and plastic closures on jars put a lid on freshness, assuring the safe sealing of food to preserve taste, appearance and nutritive content."

In addition, he points out, "Caps insure potency of 2½ billion prescriptions and pharmaceuticals each year and maintain the quality of beverages, household products, cosmetics and toiletries. We find that today's economy is making shoppers more intent on avoiding waste, so they look for packages that help keep foods fresh."

Overall, he adds, the advantages of resealable containers are that they:

—Allow the consumer to use only a portion and save the rest.

—Provide a longer life after opening. But consumers should remember to read the label to see if the product calls for refrigeration after opening; those that do not require refrigeration should nevertheless be kept in a cool, dry place.

—Are recyclable after use; keep grains, rice and breakfast cereals fresher by transferring them from box to wide-mouth jar.

Master plan proposed for new government offices to be built on Capitol Hill legislative complex

By SAM HALL KAPLAN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Congress is scheduled to begin hearings this summer on a proposed master plan for the sprawling legislative complex, national symbol and tourist site that is Capitol Hill.

The last time a plan shaping the federal presence here was introduced, in 1902, it took Congress 27 years to approve the document. This time approval is expected by the end of the year.

THE REASON FOR THE OPTIMISM is that the plan for most of its 81 well-documented pages is fortuitously modest and relatively non-controversial. It overcomes the federal government's penchant for arbitrary edifices while sensitively promoting the city's stature as a pre-eminently designed capital.

Prepared over a five-year period by a cadre of consultant planners and architects directed by George White, the Architect of the Capitol, the new plan is designed to guide development on the Hill for the next 50 to 75 years. The plan is a conscientious successor to some notable past efforts.

THE FIRST PLAN ESTABLISHING the city's powerful geometry of radial avenues and focal points was designed in the Baroque tradition by Pierre Charles L'Enfant in 1792. It was embellished in 1872 with a landscaping plan by Frederick Law Olmstead and in 1902 by the McMillan Commission plan. The latter was developed by Daniel Burnham in the neo-classical style of malls and marble monoliths.

THE NEW MASTER PLAN confines itself to the 246 acres on Capitol Hill, which includes the Capitol, the Supreme Court, 12 House and Senate office buildings and annexes, three Library of Congress buildings, two garages, a power plant and the botanic gardens.

Much of the growth on the Hill beyond its major symbols of the Capitol, the court and library buildings has occurred in the last two decades as the number of employees serving the 435 House members and 100 senators has grown from about 8,000 to nearly 24,000.

"Everytime we needed a new building, finding a site for it was like playing pin the tail on the donkey," White says.

The result has been a haphazard placement of new buildings and annexes on the Hill encroaching into the adjacent historic residential neighborhood to the east, also known as Capitol Hill. And with the growth has come a plague of cars.

COMPLICATING THE PROBLEMS the plan has had to contend with is the growing crush of tourists that daily descend upon the Hill, turning the Capitol and its grounds into sort of a civics theme park. An estimated five million tourists a year visit the Capitol, which functions both as a government building where laws are considered and as a museum.

THESE ISSUES AND OTHERS concerning historic continuity, the environment and land use were raised in 115 public hearings the office of the Architect of the Capitol and its consultants held as they drafted the plan. During this process the plan also was reviewed by various of the nation's most distinguished designers.

The resulting plan recommends, among other things, limiting the number and size of new buildings on Capitol Hill, banning the parking now defacing the East Plaza, preserving the adjoining neighborhood, closing selected streets and creating landscaped plazas and promenades to enhance pedestrian use.

"We are suggesting that there be no more monoliths like the Rayburn building; that any new buildings be more to human scale; that they incorporate public amenities like shops and restaurants; and that generally the Hill be made more comfortable and inviting for people," White says.

HE SUMMED UP THE PLAN as "humanistic," as opposed to the formality of the Capitol's long love affair with neo-classicism. "Every Architect of the Capitol has wanted to put his stamp on the Capitol and I hope 'humanism' will be mine," adds White, the ninth presidential appointee to hold the position since 1793.

White stressed that even after approval the plan will just serve as a guide to development on the Hill and that each new element, such as an office building, will have to be acted on and funded separately, "if and when needed." The plan itself costs $500,000 to prepare and, in a display of political acumen, offers no dollar estimates of its implementation.

HOWEVER, IT DOES make recommendations as to the sequence of implementation. High on the plan's priority list is the banning of the congressional perk parking on the East Plaza of the Capitol. In its place will be extensive landscaping originally proposed by Olmstead more than 100 years ago.

According to the plan, the restoration of the plaza will first require the construction of underground parking facilities to make up the loss of spaces and to accomodate a portion of the expected growth on the Hill.

IF REDUCING PARKING may be controversial, so is the plan's proposal to eventually move the United States Supreme Court out of its hallowed marble palace a block from the Capitol to some distant location. The rationale offered by White for the move is that the court as the judicial branch of government should have its own distinct status and site out of the shadow of the legislative branch, such as the executive branch has as symbolized by the White House.

The proposal to move the Supreme Court should not hold up the approval of the plan. With a low priority for implementation and no relocation site indicated, the proposal is not expected to surface for at least 50 years, according to court and congressional observers.

A MUCH LESS CONTROVERSIAL proposal is that "future development should respect the integrity of the Capitol Hill Historic District" east of the Capitol grounds.

Under the plan, the front yards of houses facing the Capitol would be protected and put under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol so they can be landscaped to better define the transition between the neighborhood and the Capitol grounds. Substantial tree planting along nearby streets also is proposed.

CONSPICUOUSLY MISSING from the plan other than to review its parking and landscaping needs is any recommendation concerning the Capitol itself, the focus of the Hill and its most prominent landmark. No mention is made of the Capitol's crumbling west front, the temporary braces there and the controversy over what to do about it.

Congress, preservationists, historians, architects and other assorted groups and persons concerned with the Capitol have been debating for years whether the west front should be simply restored or stabilized by building an extension. The cost of restoration has been estimated at $59 million and the extension at $67 million, though the issue is not money but the integrity of the historic structure facing the mall.

SLATED FOR EARLY CONSTRUCTION under the master plan, if approved, is a new House office building on the south slope of the Hill. Combined with other new buildings there and a closing of the street the complex will form a series of small plazas creating a needed and attractive "gateway" from the south to the Capitol.

A similar scaled-down complex centering on a plaza is planned in the distant future for the expansion of the Senate on the north slope. The conversion there of Delaware Avenue into a landscaped pedestrian promenade linking Union Station with the Capitol should greatly enhance the flow and pleasure of the public, particularly tourists.

Stating that there is "an environmental capacity that can be established for humane development of the Capitol Grounds," the plan limits the growth of buildings there to a total of 14.2 million square feet and the number of persons working on the Hill to 38,000. The totals at present are 9.4 million square feet and 24,000 persons.

GIVEN THE CRITICISMS of Congress for the growth of its committees, staffs and operating budgets over the last decade, there also may be political limits as well as environmental.

How to patch the screen

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

No matter how small the hole in a screen, a mosquito or other insect will find it. To paraphrase the saying about a chain and its weakest link, a screen is only as protective as its smallest opening.

Fortunately, it's relatively easy to patch a screen. Sometimes all it requires is a little household cement. When the hole in the screen is very small — say, a quarter of an inch in diameter — you need only dab it with the cement and allow it to dry. It might be noticeable if it's at eye level, but it will keep out insects. Most of the time, it won't be noticed at all.

An opening larger than that can be effectively covered with a ready-made screen patch available in almost all hardware stores and home centers. It is placed over the hole and the tiny, loose ends bent over the old mesh. Like the cement, it can be noticed, but it's what might be called a neat, noticeable patch. You also can make that kind of patch if you have a piece of old screening. Cut a piece of it large enough to cover the opening with an extra inch or two on each side. Loosen the outside strands and then bend them over, the same as with a ready-made patch.

When the entire mesh needs replacement, you can do the job yourself even if you have never attempted it. Care more than skill is required. As you remove the old mesh, see exactly how it was attached — with staples, brads or a flexible spline of plastic, rubber or whatever. If staples or brads were used, attach the replacement mesh with staples. If spline, take it out carefully and it can probably be used again. A small tool can be purchased for resetting the spline in the grooves.

However the screening material is to be attached, be sure you get a few inches more on each side than will cover the opening in the frame. After the mesh is attached, whatever is still hanging over can be trimmed with a knife, blade or scissors.

When the spline is pushed into the grooves with the tool just mentioned, it draws the mesh tight and eliminates bulges, but this cannot be done when staples are required. A good way to get the mesh taut is to place the frame on a flat surface, then put a board under each end of it.

Fasten clamps on the frame at the center on each long side. This will produce a frame higher on both ends than in the middle. Now, when you attach the staples, you won't have to worry about stretching the mesh to its utmost. When the attachment has been made and you remove the clamps, the screening will become tight. Trim the mesh and replace the mouldings. If the mouldings were damaged in removing them, buy new pieces of the proper size, but most of the time you can salvage the old mouldings if you take them off carefully.

It is best to buy screening material of the same type that was there, if only so it will match the other screens. Usually, though, it will take some time for the new screening to weather before there is a good match. If you aren't sure whether it is aluminum or fiber glass or whatever, take a piece of it with you when you purchase the replacement material.

Should the wooden frame of an old screen be loose and you don't want to spend the money to replace it, consider repairing it with metal mending plates. These will hold the parts of the frame tightly together and last indefinitely. Or you can make a frame of either wood or metal, usually with so-called do-it-yourself aluminum.

Alcoholic organization specifically for women

By BARBARA HUSTON
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — "Mary, you can't feel that way," was the reaction of three men following an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting at which Mary had shared the problem of feeling low self-esteem.

So Mary also joined Women for Sobriety, where conversation often concerns feelings and relationships. "We can talk about our needs, desires and frustrations — which we don't discuss with men," says Tammy, another member. "The men think our concerns are unimportant."

Women for Sobriety, which has 10,000 members nationally, was founded by Dr. Jean Kirkpatrick, 59, an alcoholic who has been sober since 1971.

"I had been drinking for 23 years and went to AA for three years. Then I drank for 13 years more and could not go back to AA. I wanted to talk about women's problems and feelings, the importance of vitamins and other things the men didn't want to discuss."

But she says her first objection to AA is its emphasis on recollecting the past. "Men tell their drinking stories to reinforce their machismo," she says.

Included in the 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous are suggestions that members make a personal inventory of themselves and share it with a wise person, and to list people they have harmed and make amends to if possible.

This is what Kirkpatrick calls living in the past. "For women it revives regret and guilt," she says. "Women are more sensitive than men. It's tough on their self-esteem. They already feel guilty enough. And if they don't, society does it for them.

Asked how she had experienced this hostility, she said she had sought funds from 600 foundations to provide a sustaining fund for Women for Sobriety — with no success.

A second reason Kirkpatrick could not follow the 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous, she says, was a philosophical difference about the spiritual development of the recovering person. "AA advocates turning, in all humility, to a power greater than oneself," she says.

"But Women for Sobriety is rooted in a metaphysical philosophy that has existed for thousands of years." She describes it as a statement that "I am what I think. If you think negatively of yourself, as all alcoholic women do, the world will treat you like that."

Members of Women for Sobriety are asked to meditate 20 minutes each day on changing their negative thoughts to positive ones. Asked if that was not a spiritual program, Kirkpatrick said, "A spiritual program can't be translated into words. We don't have to define it. Most people know what it means."

She insists that Women for Sobriety, though it was formed because she could not find sobriety in Alcoholics Anonymous, is not in competition or rivalry with AA.

"It's just that AA was formed by men for men," she says. "Women in our culture have never been taught to have a sense of self-worth. They need to develop a greater sense of ego strength. That's why so few women recover in AA."

She quotes the 47-year-old AA's membership estimate as 404,000, of which 31 percent, or 137,000, are women. "But there are 10 million practicing alcoholics in the United States and 5 million of them are women, according to nationally accepted estimates."

Her own story includes a lonely struggle, beginning in 1971, to discover why she would go to the liquor store after 12 days of sobriety.

Author: child's death hardest to accept

By BARBARA HUSTON
Hearst Feature Service

"The death of a child is always the most somber event anyone ever encounters," Dr. Frances Sharkey writes. "But it is a tragedy that can be compounded by a second tragedy: the denial of death."

Sharkey, 51, is accustomed to saving the lives of children in her pediatrics practice. But when she loses, she has learned to avoid that second tragedy.

"I think the worst death is a child's death because a child is connected to the future as well as the present," she says. "When a child dies, dreams die also."

The author of "A Parting Gift" (St. Martin's Press) and mother of six children has been practicing pediatrics for 15 years.

Twenty years ago, when she was in school, medical schools taught students to regard death as a personal enemy. They were taught that emotional involvement with a dying patient could distort medical judgment. They were taught not to discuss emotions with patients.

But a girl named Laura changed Sharkey's way of approaching death forever. A 15-year-old who knew she was dying, Laura showed such despair and frustration when Sharkey told her she "would feel better in the morning" that the doctor's smile disappears, even today, when she discusses Laura. "She was begging someone to acknowledge what was happening to her. But we thought it better not to."

Laura's agony led Sharkey to Elizabeth Kubler-Ross' "On Death and Dying," wherein the terrible loneliness of the dying and the need for honesty and companionship was first documented for the modern scientific world.

Companionship with the dying is not a new idea, Sharkey says. When death was accepted as a part of life before modern medicine developed and when doctors visited the home more often, compassion and sympathy were commonplace. She hopes that way of dying is returning.

But Sharkey didn't know how abandonment of the sterile, impersonal, hospital approach to death would work until a beloved patient named David began to die of leukemia after six healthy years of remission.

Sharkey decided she would tell him the truth when the right moment came. She decided a hospital death is only convenient for a physician; most parents take their cue from that in deciding where their child should be.

What if the child actually preferred to be at home? David did. Withdrawal changed to peace, relaxation, absence of normal pain and a quiet death with a relaxed expression on his face.

Having permission from her and his parents to die, Sharkey says, David did not have to devote his entire strength to keeping up a false front. "Children feel guilty at dying if no one permits them to do it."

David's parents, not having to devote their strength to keeping up a false pretense, were free to give him absolute love. "That gave David freedom to concentrate on himself and die in peace."

"Death will always be mysterious and frightening," she says. But we're all going to die. Being able to share the experience with those who love us utterly changes the quality of life for the dying."

Light, refreshing lemon pie

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
½ cup milk
4 large egg yolks
½ cup sugar
1 pint half-and-half
Grated rind from ½ medium lemon (1½ teaspoons)
¼ cup lemon juice

In a medium bowl sprinkle the gelatin over the milk to soften. In the top of a double boiler beat the egg yolks slightly; gradually beat in the sugar until thickened and lemon color; add the half-and-half and beat to blend. Cook over boiling water until mixture coats a spoon — about 10 minutes. Off heat, stir in the lemon rind and the gelatin mixture until gelatin dissolves; gradually stir in the lemon juice. Turn into a 1-quart mold; cover and chill to set — 6 hours or overnight. Unmold at serving time and garnish as desired. Makes 6 servings.

Learn to prevent, repair wood warpage in doors

By AL CARRELL

Under the wrong conditions, wood can warp. If the wood happens to be a door, this presents a heck of a problem, but one that is fairly common. Warping doesn't ordinarily happen if the wood is properly sealed. In the case of a door, that means it must be finished on both sides as well at the top and bottom. Many times folks will plane off some of the top of a door to solve another door problem, and then not seal the bare wood the plane left. The result is that moisture enters the door, and the door can warp.

The doors most likely to warp are entry doors and bathroom doors. Both of these doors are exposed to more moisture than usual. One of the results of a warped door is that it may no longer latch. With an entry door, this blows your security. With a bathroom door, this blows your privacy.

There are lots of ways to try to straighten a warped door. One of the best is to do it with weights. It doesn't always work, but usually will. Since you have to remove the door for at least 24 hours, this may not be practical on an entry door.

The idea with weights is to eyeball the door and see where it needs to come down to become straight. Then place the door up on blocks or bricks with the curved inside facing down. The weights are then placed on the top. Bricks or concrete blocks are good as weights. They are also rough, so be sure to protect the door's surface. At the time you put the weights on, use a straight board or level to see just how far it bows, and then after 24 hours, check to see what progress is being made. If it hasn't made any, try a little more weight. If it's made progress, but hasn't quite got the door in line, give it more time. The whole weighting process does better if the door can be placed out in the hot sun. However, don't leave it out overnight if there'll be rain or even dew during the night. Artificial heat will help in the absence of the sun.

Some people prefer the clamping method. This is where you place the door on a 4x8 sheet of ¾ inch plywood and use C-clamps to bring it flat against the plywood. The C-clamps are turned only slightly every day, and this takes a long time. Sometimes it also results in bringing the plywood to a bend to conform with the door's warp. I've never liked this one, but have had folks tell me it worked for them.

There are some ways to maybe accomplish the straightening while the door is still in place. Sometimes adding an extra hinge can bring the door back into shape. Most entry doors will already have a middle hinge, but this could help that bathroom door.

Another way to force an entry door back could be with the addition of slide bolt type locks. Let's say the door sticks out at the top of the latch side. With a slide bolt lock installed in that corner, if you can push against the door enough to allow the bolt to be pushed into the strike plate, it will hold it in a straightened position. Then if you lock this every night as well as when you're at home or when you go out another entry, you end up with the possibility of strightening the door over a long period of time. It may take weeks or even months, but in the meantime, you'll also have better security.

Proper use of a turnbuckle may also help straighten out a door that is left hanging. The idea here is to put a 2x4 across the part that is bowed up. Then install screw eyes into the door at the top and the bottom. With a clothesline wire and turnbuckle stretched from the two screw eyes, you can bring pressure against the 2x4. Each day, turn the turnbuckle slightly to gradually straighten out the door. When the door is straight, fill in the holes left by the screw eyes.

With any straightening, after it's done, be sure to seal the door. Otherwise, the warp will probably come back.

Caution is urged when insulating home

Copley News Service

INSULATION POINTERS — When you buy insulation and have a contractor blow it into your house, there are a few cautions you should exercise to make certain you get your money's worth.

Dean Hansell, a Federal Trade Commission attorney whose specialty is energy, said in a phone interview there are two common ways you can be shortchanged.

First, the contractor may not fill your attic with enough insulation.

An insulation-like cellulose is blown in. However, Hansell said it will settle "like a fluffed-up pillow," so the Federal Trade Commission has required that insulation bag labels give consumers the "settled density" rating.

Insulation is rated with R factors. The FTC requires that labels on each bag of insulation show how much is needed to cover an area properly. This is shown in inches deep and feet square.

For example, a cellulose bag may show that 5.1 inches are required to bring the level up to R19. However, cellulose will settle. So the government has come up with a formula to correct this.

If 5.1 inches of cellulose is needed to cover the attic, to offset the settling effect, the 5.1 is multiplied by a factor of 1.27, meaning you actually should have a depth of 6.47 as you blow the product into your ceiling. It will later settle to about 5 inches.

You can determine if there is enough cellulose by measuring the depth after a few days when most of the settling has occurred, Hansell said. If you come up with less than 5.1 inches, inform your contractor. The product should be spread evenly — with no valleys, Hansell said.

Hansell said some tricksters will cover only the part of an attic you can see from the entrance.

"You have to crawl in and look for yourself to know if you're covered properly," he said.

Caution: Don't accidentally step through the ceiling and be sure to avoid pressing down on the material — to be effective, the cellulose must be fluffy.

Matt Sulston, California president of the Insulation-varytractor's Association, said equipment used by companies may vary in how it blows in the cellulose. Some will initially be thicker, some thinner. And, he said, it can take up to 30 days for it to settle.

HOW ABOUT THAT? — Some things you may not have even wondered about ... Perfume smells good for about a year, then the fragrance deteriorates.

Keep houseplants outdoors

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

Let nature help you take care of your houseplants this summer by keeping them outdoors. Some houseplants do better there than indoors if they are adaptable to conditions.

Move them out when danger of frost has passed. Some plants will need protected areas, such as porches, patios or terraces. If they are hanging plants, shield them from strong winds. African violets and other varieties require protection from extremes of light, heat and moisture.

Some plants, such as geranium, poinsettia, lily and amaryllis, can be placed directly into the garden, in outdoor planters, in borders or beds. Others, such as begonias, schefflera, philodendron, sansevieria and fuchsia are much better off in filtered light or shaded places.

All indoor plants should be taken inside by late August. In taking them out and in, it is a good idea to move them first to a garage or porch, so that the transition will be gradual.

We bury some of our houseplant pots up to the rim in the garden. To assure good drainage, put a layer of gravel at the base of the pots.

Don't forget to inspect plants periodically — outdoors as well as indoors — for insect or other damage. Nature will water them some times, but the plants will need help during dry spells.

Plant Containers

The type of containers your houseplants are in can have a strong influence on their growth, because the pot can affect the water supply.

Important factors include the size and porosity of the container, and whether or not there is a drainage hole in the bottom.

The pot size in relation to the plant can affect the water and nutrient supplies. If the plant is too large for the pot it is likely to dry out rapidly. In an oversized pot, a plant may suffer from too much water, and nutrients in the potting soil may be leached out before the plant can use them.

Also affecting the water supply is the porosity of the container. In an unglazed clay pot, a plant is less likely to suffer from too much water than a plant in a glass or plastic container, because water can get out and air can move into the soil through clay. Roots need air as well as water. If soil is drenched with water that can't get out, air is expelled and roots can't function properly.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — From his gigantic ears to his eager-to-please expression, the enormous pup was, without a doubt, Pinkerton — which meant the illustrator had to be Steven Kellogg.

"Ooh, he is real," confirmed one youngster as Kellogg, with a few squiggles, made the characters from his best-selling books — Pinkerton (a Great Dane), Alphonse (a mysterious tadpole) and the Skog (undefinable) — fairly leap off his drawing paper.

It was Steven Kellogg day at Gladstone Elementary School, and the amiable children's author and illustrator from Sandy Hook, Conn., was proving that, indeed, authors are real people, a primary goal of the 100 or so school visits he conducts annually.

Kellogg, who claims to have been born with a picture in his head and a crayon in his hand, is the creator of such volumes as "Can I Keep Him?" and "The Mysterious Tadpole," both recipients of American Library Association citations, "The Island of the Skog" and "Much Bigger than Martin."

Now he is completing his third "Pinkerton" book, dealing, like its predecessors, with the misadventures of a dog that's as big as a horse. Originally, the volumes were intended to portray fairly realistically the real Pinkerton, who shares the Kellogg family's pre-Revolutionary War farmhouse. But the books have evolved to sagas of "a really outrageous, generally madcap personality."

Realism is not an issue with his young readers, apparently. Fan mail pours in from across the country.

"Is it fun to be an author? Is there a lot of pressure on you? Are you nervous?" wrote one youngster. Another invited him to call, explaining, "I will ask you if you can eat dinner and sleep over."

FOCUS: William B. Wilson

Petroleum, ponies, painting, politics, philosophy

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Oil and gas, polo ponies, fine French art, some of the latest ranching techniques, politics, American history, and computerized office systems: these are but a few of the subjects that have caught the eye of William B. Wilson.

Known to his friends as "Willie B.", he is some kind of Renaissance man with a drawl. So far, he has started eight companies from scratch and now oversees a total of about 1,000 employees.

They are involved in oil and gas exploration, gas gathering, anti-pollution and waste water disposal, selling brine for drilling, manufacture of oilfield pipe testing equipment, and automated office systems consultation.

"I like to do new things," says Wilson, who claims he starts a new company every couple of years. "I like gadgets of any kind, and I think I'm highly imaginative. I'm an entrepreneurial type."

Besides all of this, Wilson, at a vigorous age 68, skis, plays tennis and jogs. He was instrumental in starting the Midland Polo Club about 20 years ago and raises and sells ponies. He still plays in polo tournaments across the nation and abroad.

"I can't imagine my life without polo or without business," Wilson says, although he clearly loves all that he does. He loves the game, but he would never be a professional polo player because he would consider that "too frivolous."

"For me to be a professional athlete would not give me the satisfaction that I find from doing other things. To be a professional athlete requires complete dedication to just that one pursuit, which I would never be satisfied in doing."

Wilson says his good health is no accident. "I wasn't born with anything more than anyone else, but I've not smoked since I was 17, and only had two cups of coffee since then. I try to have good exercise and good nutrition.

"I don't ever intend to be old."

Wilson believes in developing an idea to its fullest, even if it's by means of hard work, risks or what he calls "avant-garde techniques."

He likes to be in the forefront of things. Take his three ranching operations, for example.

He grew up on a Sutton County ranch and began his business career when he was 15. During the Depression, his mother was going to give away her herd of goats, and Wilson told her she might as well give the herd to him to raise. Through that deal he got half the herd and began to sell mohair.

William B. Wilson.

Through the use of the latest techniques of embryo transplantation into surrogate mother cows — Brangus and Limousin — he has upgraded the original herd.

"I started off in 1956 with, frankly, a bunch of mediocre Aberdeen Angus cattle that I bought for practically nothing, and through careful breeding and selection, and artificial insemination, I developed some top quality cattle. The first thing I did was performance testing to identify the top quality cattle.

"It has been a business practice of mine, generally, to start small and not make any costly mistakes; to make mistakes with small amounts of money," Wilson says.

"It's improper to call me cautious, but on the other hand, I'm willing to take chances, but I don't take chances beyond what I can recover from.

"That's my golden rule. I am a risk taker, but I don't take a risk so large that I've lost the farm, so to speak, if I fail."

Wilson admits that, through this philosophy, he has succeeded beyond his wildest dreams, but has been slow getting there.

He started his career 45 years ago after graduating from the University of Texas Law School. He practiced law in San Angelo for six years, ranched, and eventually became involved with the oil and gas industry, making his first deal in 1935.

Today, he is developing acreage that took him 30 years to put together.

He recently bought two office data processing companies in Washington, D.C., Micronet and Kappa, because he's intrigued with the idea of a paper-less office. The firms do consulting work for other businesses, recommending what type of computer software and programming fit their needs.

Perhaps the company he finds most interesting, but the least profitable compared to the others, is The Fun Learn Company.

The company offers a series of four albums containing 12 cassettes each of graduated vocabulary words.

It grew out of Wilson's passion for language, for the meaning and history of words.

"What I view as my greatest accomplishment is my large vocabulary, and what success I've enjoyed is the result of using it."

He keeps a notebook on his desk at all times to record new words he learns, and he has an impressive collection of dictionaries.

"Vocabulary is the key to everything else I've done. Until Newton spoke of gravity, nobody ever thought about it, but he had a concept.

"You have to have a word. It's a label for an idea. The more words you have, the better you can think. Sanity is seeing differences; insanity is thinking everything is the same. Vocabulary allows you to see differences, and leads to more efficient thinking."

At the Human Engineering Laboratory in Fort Worth, Wilson was tested about 20 years ago and was found to possess a vocabulary larger than 99 percent of the population.

"They told me vocabulary was a concomitant of success, and they said I could be president of anything I wanted to do, so I gave it a lot more attention," says Wilson with a laugh.

Another big interest of his is politics. It's a relatively new area of involvement for Wilson, but like everything else he does, he is very active. He belongs to the Republican Senatorial Trust, a group of 200 Americans with the goal of electing a Republican majority in the U.S. Senate.

"For a long time, I have viewed with quite a bit of concern the direction in which our government is going. I decided I wanted to do something. I saw us heading for national bankruptcy.

"I felt if the country was going to fail, I didn't want to say I didn't try to do something about it."

Wilson calls himself an old-style Jeffersonian Democrat who believes in a laissez-faire economy, but he feels the Republican Party is going in the direction he thinks best.

"In comparison to 60 years ago, there's been a hell of a loss of freedom in this country. We're reaping now what we sowed in the '30s. The income tax is very socialistic: when you take from the productive people and give to the non-productive, you're rewarding non-production. It's like in a tennis game, giving the cup to the losers."

Wilson is also a fine art collector, having the largest collection in the world of Impressionist paintings by John Strevens, an Englishman who was a contemporary of Renoir.

He says most things have turned out well for him, and one factor he gives credit to is his recent belief in Scientology.

He says it has heightened his sense of ethics and responsibility, helped his thinking processes, his business, his marriage and his familiy life.

"It's practical, logical, and not really in competition with other religions," he says, although he admits religion is an emotional, touchy subject for most people.

"It's been attacked by a lot of different people who don't understand it. Scientology is one of the most logical things I've ever run into, and that's what attracted me to it. I was very much from Missouri at first; I was skeptical."

Wilson says whoever gave out minds gave him a simple, logical mind. "A lot of things I see as simple, other people don't. I tend to reduce things to simple terms." Perhaps this is how he has managed to successfully juggle the demands of so many different business and personal interests.

Housing project planned

A unique new subdivision featuring 172 moderately-priced manufactured homes on large lots, has been announced for south Midland.

Quail Glen will be located on 87 acres south of Interstate 20, off the Rankin Highway. It is bounded by Cottonflat Road and Davis Road, five minutes from downtown Midland and close to major access roads.

The subdivision is a project of Amtex, which is a general partnership between Amdec, a subsidiary of Albuquergue Federal Savings and Loan, and a group of Texas businessmen.

It introduces a new concept to the area: single family, detached, manufactured homes on lots of about 1/3 acre, from $40,000 to $58,000.

Similar projects have been developed in other parts of the country, said Albert Mull of Amdec.

Different financing methods will be available, including adjustable rate mortgage loans at 11 7/8 percent, as well as FHA, VA and conventional mortgage plans.

The International Mortgage Company of Dallas is providing financing.

The homes will have custom-type features including paneling, drapes, carpeting, fancier bathrooms and more built-ins than are found in traditional homes in this price range.

They will range in size from 960 square feet with two bedrooms and two bathrooms, to 1,680 square feet with three bedrooms.

The developers plan to create a landscaped, formal raised berm entry to the subdivision. Sixty homes will be available in the first phase of the project, with another 112 added as soon as possible.

The project will get underway in August and the grand opening is expected in late August or early September, when five fully decorated and furnished model homes will be open to the public.

The home the buyer chooses can be delivered to Quail Glen by the time the buyer's credit is approved for the mortgage, in 30 to 45 days, Mull said.

These houses are not mobile homes, he emphasized.

"Our primary function is to provide homes people can afford," Mull said. "We observed that there is a lot of building going on in Midland, but it's all on the high end of the spectrum, especially with lot prices as high as $20,000. There is a pent-up demand for moderately-priced housing.

"We expect 50 percent of our market to be Midlanders, not newcomers, who are currently being priced out of owning a home."

New warehouse serves Midland

A $1 million multi-tenant warehouse-distribution facility is nearing completion in the Midland Industrial Park south of the city.

Phase I of the project, a 68,000 square foot building, was begun in March and approximately 20 percent of it had been pre-leased by July 1.

The building is part of a 14-acre warehouse/office showroom and distribution center called Midland Business Park, developed by Scott R. Steenson of Midland and Dwight L. Lieb of San Antonio.

The multi-tenant, rail-served concept is new to Midland but has proved popular in other parts of Texas and the Southwest, Steenson said. Phase I consists of a 68,000 square foot building which is rail served and easily accessible from U.S Highway 80, Interstate Highway 20 and FM 1369.

The building is divided into 10 bays of 6,800 square feet each. It features 24-foot ceilings, 40-foot by 170-foot bay areas, steel overhead doors, paved loading areas, and individual, recessed tenant entries of bronze, aluminum and glass.

Each bay can be custom finished to tenant specifications for offices, distribution areas or light manufacturing. The bays will have energy-conserving skylights and prominent tenant identification.

Tenants may lease more than one bay if they need larger facilities.

The aggregate concrete tilt wall warehouse/distribution center is the first of its kind in the Permian Basin. The entire complex will feature ample off-street parking and landscaping.

Rig counts down, down and up

The Permian Basin rotary rig count took a downward turn last week. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co., the tally was 283. The previous week the figure was 294.

The national rig count has also shrunk. The International Association of Drilling Contractors' report for July 6 shows only 2,816 active rigs — a 25-month low.

The count was a decline of 58 from the previous week and 1,168 from the 3,984 total on the same date a year ago.

Since the end of 1981, when a record of 4,530 active rigs were working, the total has dropped 37.8 percent.

The IADC weekly figures show 737 land rigs working Texas, and 80 drilling offshore. New Mexico was credited with 99.

The International Count continues to increase steadily. IADC's May count revealed 1,486 rigs active outside the United States and Canada. The April score was 1,462. May, 1981's tally was 1,374.

In Africa 208 rigs were busy during May. There were 247 in Europe; 271 in the Far East; 538 in Latin America; 185 in the Middle East; and 37 in the South Pacific region.

Hot spots were: Algeria with 78 rigs; Italy 36; Indonesia 61; Mexico 191; Turkey 26; and Australia with 26 rigs.

Arby's builds in Midland

A new Arby's Roast Beef Restaurant is currently under construction at Midland Drive and Andrews Highway in Midland. According to Frank Montano, Foodservice Concepts, Inc., the Arby's unit is scheduled for completion in early September.

The new Arby's building will feature a contemporary interior decor package emphasizing a 21 item salad bar in the dining room. The restaurant will also offer drive-thru window service.

Arby's Roast Beef Restaurant offers a complete line of roast beef sandwiches, in addition to baked potatoes, fries, potato cakes, shakes, and desserts. The roast beef sandwich chain recently introduced four new Deli sandwiches in markets across the U. S.

Scott Bell, area supervisor for the Midland location, states that he plans to employ over 75 employees from this area.

Arby's Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Royal Crowbn Companies, Inc., has 1150 restaurants in 46 states, the U. S., the Virgin Islands, Japan and Malaysia.

Peugeot, Rover coming

Peugeot Motors of France and Range Rover of England have approved the John J. Schaler III Collection Inc. of Midland to represent their automobile companies for authorized sales, parts and service.

The first such cars are scheduled to arrive at the automotive dealership in July, 1982.

This is part of a planned expansion of lines and services for the Midland dealership, located at 8383 West Highway 80. The agency carries one of the largest inventories in the world of luxury cars, with Rolls Royce, Bentley, Aston Martin and Lotus also represented. Buyers have come from areas as far away as New York, California, Indiana, and from Toronto, Canada.

The Schaler organization was awarded the "Order of the Silver Lady" by Roll Royce Motors for excellence in sales and service in 1981. In addition, the Aston Martin Company has announced that the Schaler Collection was their leading sales and service outlet in the United States in 1981.

The fund-raising goal for 1982 in $750,000, and the projects include the Andy Williams kick-off benefit dinner, held July 9, the upcoming oil show, the PGA sanctioned LaJet Classic Golf Tournament, Oct. 4-10, and the 4th Annual JVCC Oilfield Equipment and Services Auction slated for Wednesday, December 1, 1982.

Box plant to be built

HALTOM CITY, Texas (AP) — Liberty Carton Co., a cardboard box maker, has announced it will build an $8 million plant here.

The 200,000-square-foot facility that will employ 150 to 200 people is to be financed mainly by industrial developmnet revenue bonds. Groundbreaking ceremonies are set for July 27. The plant is to open on the first quarter of 1983.

Liberty Carton is an affiliate of Liberty Diversified Industries of Minneapolis. Liberty Carton already operates a manufacturing plant at nearby Richland Hills, which will keep operating after the new plant opens.

Liberty makes cardboard boxes, special display cartons, and fiber board. The company sells mostly to industries, including meat packers, clothing makers, and snack food firms.

The Haltom City plant will specialize in making display cartons.

Bank company's assets up

DALLAS (AP) — Commerce Southwest Inc., a bankholding company, says assets have increased 23 percent compared to assets held at mid-year last year.

The company said Thursday that assets at mid-year 1982 increased to $1.4 billion. Loans increased 48 percent to $9.4 million, and deposits rose 25 percent to $1.1 billion.

The company announced that net income for the second quarter, ending June 30, 1982, was $4.6 million, or 24 cents per share, compared to net income of $4.1 million, or 23 cents per share, during the same period last year.

Commerce Southwest has 10 member banks in the Dallas and Houston areas.

Borrowers getting short end of stick

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

"Tell me not in mournful numbers," said the poet Longfellow — and the problem in today's capital markets is that nobody's a Longfellow. Everybody's a Shortfellow.

You've heard the mournful numbers before: Short-term business loans continue to rise at a 20 percent annual rate — defying most past recessionary precedents.

In the first quarter, according to preliminary Federal Reserve data, business loans at commercial banks and commercial paper volume rose at an annual rate of $80 billion — a record, and, noted Edward H. Boss Jr., economist at Chicago's Continental Bank, "surprising given the sharp rundown in inventories and a weakening in business spending on fixed investment."

Some economists have theorized that corporations are borrowing to pay taxes: At the beginning of this year, noted Arnold X. Moskowitz of Wall Street's Dean Witter Reynolds, the Treasury boosted its penalty interest rate on late tax payments to 20 percent from 12 percent. Better to borrow at 16½ now (the prime rate) than pay a 20 percent penalty, figured corporations. Moskowitz expects this borrowing to "abate very shortly."

Other explanations are given: Boss blames "the need for corporate working capital" — partly for tax reasons, partly because of the profits slump, partly because of trade credit, and partly because, ironically enough, "at today's level of borrowing and the high interest rate structure, interest payments themselves are taking an increasing share of working capital."

Since short-term borrowing was also surprisingly strong in the 1973-1975 recession — dropping abruptly as the recession ended in the first quarter of 1975 — Boss, Moskowitz and other economists are sanguine that as this recession ends this summer, business borrowing will plunge and rates will fall.

Corporations then should be able to borrow in the long-term bond sector, where volume has been very low and maturities have been getting shorter and shorter.

But don't bet your long johns, or your short shorts, on this scenario. For there's another problem: the U.S. Treasury. It will be borrowing, in all probability, at least $100 billion in the second half of this year.

Where will it do the borrowing? Short, you can bet. "While the increasing reliance on short-term debt by the private sector has received widespread attention, that of the federal government has not," said Irwin L. Kellner of New York's Manufacturers Hanover. State and local governments, too, have been increasingly borrowing short, Kellner noted.

He puts the watershed at October 1979, when the Federal Reserve took the monetarists' advice and decided to try to manipulate the money supply rather than interest rates.

"During the 10 calendar quarters beginning Oct. 1, 1979, and ending March 31, 1982, almost 40 percent, or $90 billion, of net new cash raised by the Treasury was derived through sales of three-, six- and 12-month bills. By contrast, during the 10 calendar quarters prior to October 1979 — when a total of $72 billion of net new cash was raised — there was actually a net paydown of Treasury bills outstanding," noted Kellner.

Remember the days of yore? Money market funds were a novelty. S&Ls and banks didn't have savings certificates tied to Treasury bill rates — so nobody knew what T-bill rates were. People didn't even know what T-bills were. Those were the good old days — long, long ago.

These are the short days. Inverted yield curves (when short-term interest rates are higher than long-term rates) seem to be almost the rule, rather than the exception.

It's not just the buyers who want to stay short. "Borrowers and lenders alike have converged in the short end of the debt markets — the former to avoid locking in costly long-term funds, and the latter to seek the more attractive yields prevailing in the money markets," said Kellner.

He (along with others) is urging the Treasury to fund long. "One way to unclog the money markets would be for Washington to aggressively step up its long-term debt sales. True, this means that Washington will be locking in costly, and non-callable, long-term funds. But it could have salutary side effects. If the Treasury had limited bill sales in this fiscal year to only 10 percent of net new cash to be raised, short-term borrowings would drop by an astonishing $50 billion — not far from the total size of the non-financial corporate commercial paper market," he said.

He may be right — and Boss and Moskowitz could be right in predicting that the short borrowing will dry up, rates will drop and some semblance of normalcy will return.

Pardon my cynicism. I demur. Rates will come down — but won't stay down. What we are seeing in the corporate and government sectors is simply the beginning of the end for long-term financing in this country. We're one of the last countries with truly long-term bonds. We used to be one of the last with long-term fixed-rate mortgages — but they're going the way of the dodo now.

As long as government taxes, spends, borrows and prints money at today's relative levels, there is no reason why a rational person should lend money out for 30 years at a fixed rate of interest. After all, rational expectations should be just that — rational.

In today's volatile capital structure, the long-term bond market is a haven for gamblers — often heavily leveraged — placing bets on quick swings in interest rates. Widows and orphans — and others who want to conserve their capital — should remain short. And corporations wanting to survive should do everything they can do to reduce borrowings — both long and short.

That, unfortunately, is the long and short of it.

Survey shows Gulf Coast oilmen are optimistic

LAFAYETTE, La. — Despite the downturn in drilling activity and oil prices, a survey of nearly 40 oil and gas company executives in the Gulf Coast region indicates a mood of industry optimism in the months ahead.

The study was conducted by Gulf Coast Oil Reporter, which will detail its findings in an eight-story series in its July issue. The magazine, formerly known as the Oil Field Monthly Journal, was renamed after its purchase last month by Hart Publications of Denver, Colorado.

"The common impression is that the oil industry has fallen on hard times – the rig count is down and money is tight," said Ben Daviss, managing editor of the new magazine. "But underneath that, in the Gulf area there's a real bedrock of optimism about the future."

The factors influencing the belief that recovery is on the way:

–Lease costs are lower because fewer companies are bidding for leases.

–Drilling costs are down by as much as 30 percent and in some areas footage rates are available instead of just day rates.

–Because it's cheaper to drill, some operators find profits are still adequate despite decreases in oil prices and sales.

–Well permits have increased and some refineries have upped production, indicating that the "oil glut" is over.

–Now that Congress has adopted the 1983 budget, companies are better able to judge how much loan money the financial markets may be able to provide.

"There are companies that haven't drilled a well all year because credit is tight and drilling fund money is down," said Daviss, acknowledging that small independents are "hurting." But for companies that are short on cash, there are strong reasons for hope in the near future. Oil prices appear to be strengthening."

In addition to providing an outlook of companies' drilling plans for the balance of the year, the magazine reviewed industry statistics for the region and came up with a surprising discovery. For the first five months of 1982 compared to a year ago, both footage drilled and well completions are up – and 1981 is considered the banner year for the industry.

"Relying on the rig count as the barometer of the health of the industry can be misleading," the editor pointed out. "When you look at all the factors, things don't appear so bad."

Daviss, formerly associate editor with Western Oil Reporter magazine in Denver, said interviews with industry figures will highlight the new magazine's coverage. In the past, the Journal concentrated on Louisiana, but Gulf Coast Oil Reporter will cover both onshore and offshore activities from Texas to western Florida.

Barton valve laying off hands

SHAWNEE, Okla. (SWN) — Barton Valve Co., Inc. announced last week it is laying off 60 employees at its manufacturing facilities in Shawnee, Oklahoma, effective July 9.

The layoffs were made necessary by the recent decline in exploration and drilling for oil and gas. The majority of the employees being laid off are manufacturing employees hired in the last year.

Barton Valve is engaged in manufacturing valves, chokes, blowout preventers and related equipment used in the drilling for and exploration of oil and gas.

Midland American — Serves new need

In March, 1981, six Midlanders got together to discuss the banking situation in Midland. They saw the city growing fastest in its northwestern quadrant. People living in the new developments springing up there would no doubt need banking services convenient to their residences, they surmised.

They saw the very high per capita bank deposit ratio here: $2 billion in deposits from a city with less than 90,000 people. And, they saw the makings of a new bank for Midland — Midland American Bank.

The first meeting of the 68 stockholders and 6-member board of directors is set for July 12.

The bank itself, located at the northwest corner of Midland Drive and Loop 250, will open to the public July 26.

Burton B. Jones, one of the original six, is the bank's chairman of the board. He was one of the principals who formed Metro Bank at Midland Regional Air Terminal in December, 1979. He's currently in the process of starting up another bank, Odessa Industrial Bank.

Russell Richardson, president of Midland American Bank, has been in the banking business 12 years, and with the Burleson State Bank for the last 11.Most recently senior vice president, cashier, and board member, Richardson is "young and aggressive and can see the needs of the public where others can't," in Burton's words.

"What really attracted me to this area, and to this bank, is not only the needs and the tremendous potential," says Richardson, "but the attitude of the directors. They see that same need."

One drawing card for Midland American Bank is its NCR Computer Banker 80 System, an in-house system enabling Richardson to offer several good services to the public.

The bank will credit savings accounts on a monthly, rather than quarterly, basis. Interest will be posted directly to the customer's consolidated monthly statement, along with data on all other savings accounts, CDs, IRAs, loan balances and checking account balances.

All the information the bank has on a client will be readily available and comparable, on a monthly basis, on one statement.

"We will have the ability to adapt new programs as the need arises," Richardson says. "I think being in such a competitive market place as we are now, we need to be flexible."

The new bank will be capitalized with $1 million to start, but Richardson is predicting total assets could reach $7- to $10 million in 12 months.

"We're not going into this with the idea of becoming part of a holding company in the future," Richardson says. "I won't say there's no advantage to a holding company, but they can be very stringent on what they expect from their member banks.

"I just think independent banks should be able to compete."

Richardson says the bank wants its customers to feel they are people with individual needs, rather than feeling like a number or an account.

"When you get right down to it, there's not a bank in this city or in the state of Texas that can't offer the same services. The difference is in how you package the services, and the people you have in the organization, and the image they have in the community.

"And to go along with that is convenience. Ninety percent of the people bank where it's convenient, so there's a need for banks in outlying areas of Midland. We know this is a temporary structure. This building will probably not last us two years, but it'll get us started.

"This may be the center of town in 20 years, who knows?"

The bank will be open Saturday mornings. It will offer PetroPlus Club, a checking account that (for a small monthly fee) offers free personalized checks, no-service-charge checking, free cashiers' checks and money orders, free travelers checks, free photo copies and notary service, and a choice of three different types of accidental death insurance.

Other checking and savings accounts will also be available, along with money market funds, personal, consumer and commercial loans, and other traditional bank services.

Petrolplex — In the black in eight days

After being open just eight business days, Midland's new Petroplex Savings and Loan had taken in $1.83 million in deposits and was in the black, with an income of $12,364.04, by June 30.

The locally-owned S & L opened June 21.

"Our philosophy is pretty much a reflection of the people in Midland," Everett says. "We'e hard-working and we believe in our community very strongly."

The Midlanders who put Petroplex together did it so funds they had on deposit here originally wouldn't be "funnelled to Houston, Dallas, or to mobile home parks across the country, but would stay right here," he says. R.V. "Red" Roberts is chairman of the board.

The group of about 10 investors began meeting off and on in February, 1980.

The application process for the S & L began in the summer of 1981. By June 11 of this year, all the state and federal approvals had been obtained.

"It's kind of unusual in that none of the founders had strong business or personal ties to each other, as is normally the case when a group creates a new bank or S & L," Everett says. "They're just a group of people that liked what they saw for prospects for a new savings and loan in Midland, one that didn't have any old loans on the books that would drag them down. They're all entrepreneurial."

None of the founders has any ties to other banks or S & Ls in town, other than as customers.

Petroplex is capitalized with $1.5 million and has 310 stockholders, none of whom own more than 6.5 percent of the stock.

Jim Everett

The goal is to have $15 million in assets after 12 months of operation, Everett says. By June 30, assets were already $3.45 million.

Everett, who is starting his 13th year in the financial industry, came to Midland in January from his previous position as manager of the Longview branch of Jacksonville Savings Association.

Petroplex intends to be what Everett calls a "hybrid" — a mixture of both commercial bank and savings and loan services, concentrating on the real estate and home loan market.

"It's had so great a past we feel it's got to have a great future," he says of the real estate industry. "Somebody has got to finance the homes we live in."

The S & L features a drive-in bank across the street from the main office, which is located in the Paragon Building at Michigan and Marienfeld. Services and hours are comparable to a commercial bank, and include automatic teller card service called Teller/2 Pulse.

Eventually, customers will be able to get cash at automated teller machines at Air Terminal and Midland Park Mall, he says.

Everett says rumors he's heard on the street that a conglomerate is already trying to buy out Petroplex are false. "I have not been approached by any one individual, holding company or other S & L.

"It would be almost impossible for anyone to purchase us, as diversified as the stock is, unless they really wanted to lay out the money, and if they did, we'd just turn around and form another S & L."

In fact, the directors of Petroplex are looking at a couple of small savings and loans in West Texas to acquire themselves, Everett says. "We are in the position of being an acquirer rather than an "acquiree" because of our capital position," he adds.

Petroplex plans to develop branch banking in the future. Establishing an oil and gas department is also high on the agenda.

Savings and loans are getting less regulated all the time and are approaching the point of being very similar to banks. Several in the nation will begin selling securities and insurance in the near future.

"For once, I feel very comfortable with the changes coming about," Everett says. "We've seen more changes in the banking industry in the last two years than we had in the last 200. The big deal is that the banks and S & Ls are not fighting each other anymore.

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Tax cheaters, welfare spongers and moonlighters are cos' 'ng hard-pressed West European governments an estimated $60 billion a year in lost revenue, an Associated Press survey shows.

No one really knows the exact extent of the gigantic rip-off — except that it is probably costing a lot more than official estimates indicate, amid recession, high unemployment and hefty sales taxes.

By comparison, the so-called "black economy" — income never reported to tax authorities — in the United States totaled an estimated $97 billion last year, according to the U.S. Internal Revenue Service.

But other estimates put the figure as high as $400 billion, or around 10 percent of the U.S. gross national product.

Most West European governments have launched crackdowns. Italian authorities have started jailing public servants caught working at tax-free second jobs during office hours.

Joel Barnett, former British Treasury minister and chairman of Parliament's watchdog Public Accounts Committee, said the growth of Britain's black economy "dwarfs all other problems that face the Treasury."

Italy's former president, Giovanni Leone, called absenteeism by government employees with second, undeclared, jobs "a national plague." Officials say some civil servants turn up for work only for a few hours, then go off to more lucrative pursuits.

The center of Italy's black economy is Naples. Mayor Maurizio Valenzi, a Communist, abandoned a campaign to clean up the city when he discovered how many people would be put out of work. Police estimate, for example, that about 200,000 people in the Naples area earn a living by selling contraband cigarettes.

"Naples exports five million pairs of gloves a year," Valenzi said. "Yet we don't have a single (legal) glove factory."

Tax evasion permeates all levels of West European society these days. It's no longer the preserve of the rich. Officials say a sizable proportion of the tax dodgers are criminals, drug traffickers, prostitutes and others involved in shady dealings.

But the largest part of the income hidden each year from the taxman is the money pocketed by millions of otherwise respectable citizens, including attorneys, doctors and farmers, battling with inflation, sales taxes of up to 30 percent and rising prices.

The Italians have elevated tax evasion and second jobs to a bizarre art. Naples traffic policeman Francesco Cozzolino was fired last year after he was discovered playing piano in a bar when he was supposed to be sick in bed. He had worked only 43 days in 1980 at his police job.

The AP survey shows that unreported wages account for an estimated one-third of Europe's black economy, with the French apparently the worst tax dodgers and moonlighters.

The Budget Ministry in Paris estimated the annual loss of revenue from all forms of fiscal fraud at 100 billion francs (about $16 billion) — roughly equal to this year's anticipated budget deficit.

Next is Italy, with around $9 billion, an estimated 30 percent of the country's gross national product, the sum of all goods and services. Sweden was close behind with a black economy estimated at $8.5 billion, or 10 percent of the GNP.

Officials in Stockholm said Sweden's black economy has grown tenfold in the last 15 years. The Swedish economist Gunnar Myrdal complained that his countrymen, who have to grapple with some of Europe's harshest taxation, have "turned into a nation of chiselers."

Britain's Inland Revenue Department estimates that about 4 billion pounds ($6.38 billion) a year never shows up on official receipts. But some economists put the total as high as 28 billion pounds ($49.28 billion), around 15 percent of GNP.

Lamented columnist Peter Grosvenor in London's Daily Express: "The saddest side of the black economy is that whereas the British, unlike the French and Italians, used to be ashamed of tax evasion, the majority now seem almost proud of it."

The black economy has long flourished in Greece. Officials estimate some 120 billion drachmas ($2 billion) a year escapes the taxman.

Most Greeks finish work at 2 p.m., leaving a vast labor pool for second, undeclared jobs among the small businesses that make up 75 percent of the country's commercial life.

Some countries, like West Germany, Spain and Greece, have increased the penalties for tax evasion and other such frauds. The average for them is now a two-year prison term with fines of around $20,000.

Other countries have stiffer penalties, with fines of double the amount involved in the fraud. Tax-dodgers in France can be jailed for up to 10 years with fines of up to 700,000 francs ($113,000).

Britain's Inland Revenue has formed a dozen new investigation teams but is cautious about how much of the missing millions it will be able to collect.

"We owe it to the many who pay up to flush out the evaders," Transport Under Secretary Linda Chalker declared as the government intensified a campaign to nail auto tax dodgers who cost the government an estimated 100 million pounds ($180 million) a year.

But, unlike the United States and most European countries, British authorities have no legal powers to make random checks on income tax returns to track down dodgers.

British officials estimate that at least one taxpayer in five is "on the fiddle," with an additional 40 percent "possibly" on the make. But they note they must first have evidence of evasion before they can act.

President Francois Mitterrand's Socialist government in France, badly in need of hard cash and exasperated with widespread tax fraud, has tapped computer data stored by official agencies to track down dodgers.

Caterpillar announces pretax losses, layoffs, pay cuts

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Caterpillar Tractor Co., the nation's largest manufacturer of earth-moving and construction machinery, says falling sales will force pay cuts for 21,000 employees and layoffs for an additional 2,000 factory workers.

The company lost $19.2 million before taxes in the second quarter of 1982, its first pre-tax loss since the Depression, treasurer C.E. Rager said Friday. Earnings after taxes fell 93.9 percent.

Rager announced that 2,000 workers will be laid off in August and September, while pay will be cut — also for the first time since the Depression — for another 21,000 salaried employees worldwide starting Aug. 1. The pay cuts also will apply to the chairman and president of the company, he said.

Also Friday, Mack Trucks Inc. announced it would schedule extra shutdowns at three plants in Allentown, Pa., and Hagerstown, Md., and cut salaries by 5 percent for "several thousand" non-union employees because of reduced demand for heavy trucks. All three plants, which employ about 8,000 people, were already scheduled to close for three weeks in late July and early August, said Mack Truck spokesman Don Miller.

The action by Caterpillar will bring its total number of layoffs in the United States to 18,500. At the end of June, Caterpillar had 52,800 employees working.

Rager said earnings after taxes for the second quarter were $9.7 million, or 11 cents per share, compared with $158.9 million, or $1.83 per share, for the same period last year. Sales of $1.85 billion for the quarter were down $380 million, or 17 percent from a year ago, he added.

The pretax losses were offset by investment credits on capital expenditures and tax deferrals on export sales.

Domestic sales for the quarter were $793 million, 16 percent lower than in the second quarter of 1981, Rager said. Foreign sales were $1.06 billion, a decline of 18 percent from the comparable quarter a year ago.

The U.S. sales slump was blamed on an uncertain business climate including continued high interest rates, that hampered construction, mining and petroleum development.

Caterpillar, along with other major American companies, is barred from selling U.S. oil and gas equipment to the Soviet Union for construction of a 3,700-mile gas pipeline from Siberia to West Germany.

The company froze the wages of at least 12,800 management and weekly salaried employees in May, the first freeze of its kind ever imposed by Caterpillar.

Rager said the layoffs and pay cuts, coupled with a reduced estimated tax rate, should help profits in the second half of the year.

RRC reports refinery output

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent announced that 65 refineries in Texas processed 123,601,299 barrels of crude oil and hydrocarbon blends during March 1982. Through the first three months of 1982, Texas refineries ran 357,959,345 barrels.

This volume compares with 130,769,869 barrels in the previous March, the RRC's Oil and Gas Division reported in its monthly recapitulation of Texas refinery operations.

Inputs of crude oil and blends totaled 110,955,831 barrels in February 1982.

Texas refineries ran 94,349,195 barrels of crude oil in March compared to 105,153,796 barrels in March 1981 and 83,588,532 barrels in February 1982.

Products manufactured in March 1982 totaled 123,855,099 barrels, down from 130,291,157 barrels in the same month the previous year, and up from the 111,532,276 barrels in February 1982.

March 1982 manufacture of motor gasoline totaled 51,153,969 barrels, compared to 50,688,933 barels in the year-earlier month and 44,589,589 barrels in February of 1982.

Texas refineries manufactured 8,397,656 barrels of home heating oil in March 1982 - a decrease of 917,002 barrels from the year-earlier volume. February 1982 output was 8,784,655 barrels.

The Railroad Commission adopted emergency rules recently to insure that vehicles converted to use LP-gas as fuel are safe. Existing rules regulating conversions were repealed. The new rules go into effect immediately.

The popularity of lp-gas vehicles has increased the number of conversions taking place in Texas. Technological advances in the LP-gas industry made existing rules inadequate to protect the public, according to Hugh Keepers, director of the Liquefied Petroleum Gas Division.

Twenty-four independent school districts, for instance, converted their school buses to LP-gas before the emergency rules were adopted. Existing rules did not take school bus conversions into consideration.

Keepers said the new rules equal or exceed standards set by the National Fire Protection Association. In many cases the new minimum standards for equipment are higher than standards under the old rules.

Emergency rules are effective for 120 days. During that time, the Commission will publish the rules in the Texas Register for public comment so that they can be considered for permanent adoption.

AMOCO takes real money

CHICAGO — Amoco Oil Company introduced its Discount for Cash program in the Chicago Metropolitan area July 1, enabling motorists to receive a discount on each gallon of gasoline purchased by paying cash.

"The purpose of this program is to give motorists a choice between cash or credit purchases and to provide our service station dealers with increased flexibility in attracting those customers who typically pay cash for their gasoline," a company spokesman said.

Stations participating in the new marketing concept are marked with plainly visible signs on the street and at the pumps.

Jackson to explore SEA

Dallas-based Jackson Exploration Inc., has successfully negotiated two separate agreements for oil and gas exploration in Southeast Asia.

Jasra Jackson Private Limited, a Brunei company 75 percent owned by Jackson Exploration, has acquired petroleum rights to approximately 40 percent of the continental shelf of the State of Brunei. Jackson is the first company other than Shell to have a concession offshore Brunei. All eight existing fields in Brunei are offshore.

In another transaction, Jackson Krutei Basin Exploration Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Jackson Exploration, signed a production sharing contract with the government of Indonesia under which Jackson becomes the contractor for Pertamina, the government oil company, to explore for and produce hydrocarbons in the Adang Block, a 2.5-million acre onshore tract in the Kutei Basin of East Kalimantan (Borneo).

Melvin W. Jackson Jr., chairman of Jackson Exploration, said the Brunei concession is Jackson Exploration's first major international venture. It followed a three-year political, economic and technical evaluation which identified Southeast Asia as the area with the greatest potential for the company.

Brunei lies in the Northwest Borneo Basin in the center of a large (Miocene-Pliocene) deltaic complex which contains reservoir quality sandstones and oil generating shales. Hydrocarbon trapping mechanisms have been provided by contemporaneous and subsequent folding, faulting and diapirism which have created structural closures. Although eight major fields have been developed offshore, at least a dozen discoveries, many of which may extend into Jackson acreage, await appraisal and development. Brunei's continental shelf is similar to other major producing deltaic provinces such as South Louisiana and Nigeria.

The Jackson concession contains over 700,000 acres and is located 5-9 kilometers offsore in water depths of 60-600 feet. The company plans its first exploration well in 1984.

The Kutei Basin of East Kalimantan is one of the more attractive basins in Indonesia, with over one billion barrels of oil produced to date from 13 fields. Most of the basin remains relatively unexplored, and estimated undiscovered reserves are 22.9 billion barrels of oil.

Jackson's Adang Block covers 10,140 square kilometers and is bounded on the north and northwest by blocks recently awarded to Mobil and Elf, and to the east and southeast by blocks containing the producing fields held by Huffco and Union. Signatures Bonus paid for the Adang Block was $1 million, with a six-year work commitment of $40 million.

Jackson Exploration has recently established an office in Jakarta. This operation is headed by Bob Harrison, exploration manager for the Southeast Asia Region. Prior to joining Jackson Exploration, Harrison was chief geologist for Phillips Petroleum's OK region. Also in the Jakarta office will be Jerry Bower, who is chief geophysicist for the Indonesian Division, and Jim Eger, chief geologist.

"The acquisition of our Brunei concession is a major step in achieving the company's objective of selective international expansion," Jackson said. "The acquisition of the Adang Block symbolizes our international recognition as a competent, mediumized independent oil company, capable, in the opinion of an established oil producing nation, of conducting efficient and successful operations. After all the prospects are defined and rated, we will invite coventurers to invest in drilling and production activities.

"Although we may take minority positicns in other efforts, the company will not serve as operator of any additional international ventures until the Adang Block and the Brunei Concession begin production."

Texan heads OCS advisory committee

AUSTIN — William L. Fisher of The University of Texas at Austin has been elected chairman of the Outer Continental Shelf Policy Advisory committee which advises the U. S. Secretary of Interior on policy matters relating to the leasing of offshore Federal lands.

Fisher, who is director of the Bureau of Economic Geology and professor of geological sciences at UT Austin, was appointed to the committee in 1979 by the Secretary of Interior on recommendation by the Govenor of Texas.

The committee was formed in 1975 and is composed of representatives from 23 coastal states and 11 members from various private sectors.

Fisher was Assistant Secretary of Energy and Minerals in the Department of Interior from 1975 to 1977 and was responsible for programs in the outer continental shelf.

"The lands beneath the Federal waters of the U. S. have long been productive of oil and gas offshore of Texas, Louisiana and California," said Fisher.

"These lands, especially those in frontier or underdeveloped areas, hold the major promise for additional domestic supplies of oil and gas," according to the UT Austin geologist. "Prudent and expedited exploration of the outer continental shelf is in the paramount interest of the nation in its quest for energy self-suffiency."

Good year seen

HOUSTON — The oil industry is slowing exploration and development spending in the United States below previous record levels, but spent more in the first six months of 1982 than in first-half 1981. However, activity continues to increase at an accelerating rate. Offshore and overseas where drilling operations, are less sensitive to the short-term vagaries of oil markets, Petroleum Information International says in its July 5 issue.

The weekly publication says industry analysts are backing away from predictions that the industry's outlays would top 1981 and now say spending will be flat or marginally below last year.

But, it adds, the analysts caution that the spending outlook masks the fact that oil field costs have declined sharply and rig efficiency levels have leaped upward - a combination which could keep 1982 well completions and footage drilled close to last year's totals.

PI International notes that the recent precipitous drop in oil field activity, while steeper than anticipated, was not expected, since Wall Street analysts and company executives acknowledged that the brisk growth rate of the past two years was unsustainable and that a slowdown this year was unavoidable.

Although drilling rig activity in the U.S. during the second quarter declined about 30 percent from the start of the year, well completions in the first half our approximately 20 percent ahead of a year ago.

PI International says that if rig activity continues at its present rate through the second, half, well completions would reach about 71,000 to 75,000 this year and 1982 would still be the domestic industry's second best year ever.

PRODUCTION — 1) The process of obtaining oil or gas from a subsurface reservoir; 2) The yield of an oil or gas well.

PROSPECT — An area recommended by the geologist where the possibilities of finding petroleum are believed to be favorable.

REEF — A build-up of limestone formed by skeletal remains of marine organisms which often make excellent reservoirs for the accumulation of petroleum.

The logical choice

While there are more than enough reasons to consistently support joint projects of Midland and Ector counties, the proposed stockade jail to house non-violent prisoners now being considered by the two counties doesn't seem to be such a project.

Midland Sheriff Dallas Smith's laudable brainchild for housing the county's overflow of prisoners until a new county jail can be constructed was transformed into a massive endeavor that will cost the involved governmental entities something in the neighborhood of $260,000 if Midland County commissioners select the joint stockade plan on Monday. Actually, though, the stockade's total price tag under that plan could run much higher. The plan, evolving from talks with Ector County officials, calls for construction of the barbed-wire facility on land owned by the City of Odessa in southwest Midland County.

Midland County would be expected to pick up 40 percent of the tab or about $104,000. That is initially a considerable savings that appears to be in the interest of Midland County taxpayers — on paper, at least. Over the long haul, though, we suspect Midland's taxpayers would be better served if commissioners decide to go with the one-county stockade route.

It's true that the initial construction cost would be higher under that concept, estimated at about $150,000. But when one considers transportaion cost of prisoners and jail personnel to the joint facility site (said to be 19 miles from Midland one way), necessary maintenance costs of the stockade facility regardless of how many or few Ector County inmates were housed there and future utilization of the structure by Midland County after its value as a stockade has ended appear to make the savings to taxpayers in the long run only minimal if at all existent.

Rather, it seems Sheriff Smith's original proposal to have the stockade located on land now owned by Midland County much nearer the city with the structure being built by inmate labor is the best of the two. It's controversial no doubt. Landowners in that sparsely residential proposed site, a seven-acre lot near the intersection of Henderson Boulevard and Taylor Avenue, don't want the stockade built there because they fear it will devalue their property.

Their concerns are understandable, but they do not outweigh the concerns of every taxpayer in Midland County. Under the latter proposal Midland County would retain possession of the stockade facility for future use. It should be kept in mind that the stockade is a pilot project with state authorization for only three or four years. To obtain full value of the county's investment, that facility would need to be utilized later for storage or other purposes, or dismantled for materials.

With the stockade located near the city, it can be presumed that security and control of the facility by Sheriff Smith and his department would be maximized. And, of course, there is the old unwritten rule that the simpler a plan can be, the better. Getting too many governmental units involved only threatens to undermine the success of the stockade plan. It seems that the better plan would be for Midland County to build its own stockade on its own property and to lease space to Ector County when and if that county needs additional space.

The stockade idea is a progressive concept we believe can benefit Midland and many other counties overburdened by their prisoner loads. But a good concept should not be overburdened at the outset. Midland County originally got into the stockade discussion as a way to save tax dollars while relieving overcrowding at the county jail. The overcrowding problem still exists and Sheriff Smith believes it will exist for some time to come, until the new county jail can be constructed, at least. But that's in the future and the county needs more prisoner space now.

Keeping that in mind, it's logical to assume that commissioners should choose the best and most economical method for providing that space. That appears to be, in the long run, construction of a stockade owned and controlled entirely by Midland County.

Another View:

The economy wreckers

Military men who seize power in various countries have an almost universal failing which causes them to be lousy rulers. They don't know beans about what makes an economy go.

The Argentine military men are even worse than military officers running a great many other countries in the world. For, in addition to implementing programs which virtually wrecked the Argentine economy, the Argentine military junta decided to invade the Falklands to take Argentines' minds off the terrible economic conditions at home.

The Falklands fiasco, which led to perhaps the most humiliating defeat in Argentina's history, now has pushed the inflation rate up to 150 percent and put that country's economy on the brink of collapse.

In desperation, the military rulers have reshuffled the deck again and made Maj. Gen. Reynaldo Bignone president. Bignone in turn has selected a cabinet of nine civilians and only one military officer, which is a big step in the right direction and could pave the way for the election of a civilian president in March 1984.

Rather than wait until 1984 for elections the people of Argentina would be better off to move the elections up as much as possible to get a representative government rather than have military commanders constantly playing musical chairs with the government.

A well-managed Argentina under a free enterprise system could perform wonders for that country. Maybe it's time to call Milton Friedman to show the Argentines how a free market system works. Friedman gave Chili quite a boost a few years ago when that country was having economic woes.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Sandinistas no better than Somoza crowd

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — It has been three years since Anastasio Somoza was chased out of Nicaragua by the Sandinista rebels.

In that time, the Nicaraguan government has changed from a right-wing personal fiefdom to a radical leftist regime. Unhappily for the long-suffering Nicaraguan people, the more things have changed, the more they have stayed the same.

My investigations of Somoza caused him to blame me bitterly for undermining his government and precipitating his downfall. I feel entitled to hold his successors, therefore, to the same strict accountability. The catalog of similarities between the Somoza and Sandinista regimes is long and depressing. No amount of revolutionary rhetoric will sugarcoat the unpleasant facts.

— Like Somoza, the nine-man Sandinista directorate has created a one-party state propped up by military force. Somoza called his political opponents "communists"; the Sandinistas call theirs "counter-revolutionary imperialists." But the net result is the same: opposition to the government is regarded as treason.

— Repression of human rights did not disappear with Somoza. The Miskito Indians — whose main crimes are their location in an insecure border area and their desire to be left alone — have been cruelly persecuted.

— Press freedom has been all but strangled in its revolutionary crib. Strict censorship is enforced. The only independent daily newspaper is La Prensa, which courageously opposed Somoza and has been outspoken in its criticism of the Sandinista regime. It has been repeatedly closed down for printing news that the directorate didn't like. The government-controlled press, meanwhile, has grown ever more shrill in its attacks on La Prensa.

— Nepotism is rampant in the new regime, just as it was during Somoza's era. Only the families have changed. Ortegas, Carrions and Cuadra Chamorros are found in key positions throughout the government and the ruling FSLN party (Frente Sandinista de Liberacion Nacional).

— A new Somoza-style dynasty may be in the making. The Ortega Saavedra brothers have maneuvered themselves into positions of virtually absolute power. Humberto Ortega is commander-in-chief of the armed forces, defense minister and a member of the FSLN directorate that controls the supposedly autonomous three-man ruling junta. Daniel Ortega is commandant and coordinator of the junta.

— Corruption was the single most notorious feature of the Somoza regime; it has reappeared in the "new Nicaragua." Even FSLN apologists privately lament the extravagant, bourgeois lifestyles of the party hierarchy. Self-proclaimed proletarian revolutionaries drive fancy foreign cars and live high off the hog in palatial residences expropriated from Somoza cronies in the most exclusive suburbs of Managua.

In short, Nicaragua in many ways has simply replaced one set of masters for another. Aside from what exhilaration they may enjoy from the Marxist rhetoric of their new rulers, the Nicaraguan people's lot has not improved.

There is one important difference between the Somoza and Sandinista regimes: their attitude toward the United States. Somoza was a disgrace, but he was a staunch ally of this country. The Sandinistas are openly hostile.

Part of this anti-U.S. attitude can be explained by political expediency. The Sandinista regime, like any government in trouble, welcomes the chance to blame its failures on an outside force.

The United States is a made-to-order scapegoat, and unfortunately there is enough truth in the Sandinistas' anti-U.S. rhetoric to make it persuasive to most Nicaraguans. For 100 years or more, U.S. administrations have sown in the wind in Nicaragua; now we are reaping a whirlwind of resentment.

Though Nicaragua achieved its independence from Spain in 1821, it won independence from the United States only three years ago. Throughout this century, American presidents have treated the little Central American nation as a vassal state. U.S. Marines were repeatedly dispatched to keep order, with or without invitation.

The last time the Marines took over Nicaragua was in 1926; they stayed for seven years. And every Nicaraguan schoolboy knows what the Marines left behind in 1933: the Somoza family dynasty and a U.S.-equipped national guard to keep it in power.

It's no accident that the popular movement that threw Somoza out was named after the one Nicaraguan who refused to surrender to the hated Marines — Augusto Cesar Sandino. When the Yankees finally sailed away, Sandino eventually laid down his arms, and was promptly murdered on orders of the first Anastasio Somoza.

Unfortunately, the Reagan administration's shrill "hard line" on Nicaragua has succeeded in rallying the Nicaraguan people behind Sandino's heirs. Every time Washington ululates about the "Red menace" in Nicaragua, the Sandinista regime wins a new lease on life.

Indeed, sources told my reporter Jon Lee Anderson, the junta is delighted when a new denunciation issues from the White House or State Department. It makes it easier to justify the buildup of the militia and the continued presence of Cuban and East German soldiers and advisers — the military muscle that keeps the Sandinistas in power.

The Reagan administration's goal — toppling the leftist regime — would be easier to accomplish, these sources say, if Washington would just leave the Nicaraguans to their own devices. There are still some true Sandinistas in Nicaragua, men who remember Augusto Sandino's vow: "I will fight until the last foreign soldier leaves Nicaragua."

GEORGE F. WILL

High court labored over common sense ruling

George F. Will

WASHINGTON — On page 15 of a 27-page Supreme Court opinion, this thought appears: "The value of permitting live performances and photographic reproduction of children engaged in lewd sexual conduct is exceedingly modest...." Scrambling farther out on a constitutional limb, the Court adds:

"We consider it unlikely that visual depiction of children performing sexual acts or lewdly exhibiting their genitals would often constitute an important and necessary part of a literary performance or scientific work."

The Court complains mightily about its work load. But it has only itself to blame for the fact that it churns 36 pages of hairsplitting opinion and concurrences, just to rule — unanimously — that New York did not act unconstitutionally when it prohibited distribution of materials depicting children in "actual or simulated sexual intercourse, deviate sexual intercourse, sexual bestiality, masturbation, sado-masochistic abuse, or lewd exhibits of the genitals."

I will not give readers migraines by detailing the intricate arguments by which the Court lumbered to a common sense conclusion. Even when the Court rules sensibly in free-speech cases it does so for a chef's salad of wrong reasons. In this case it furrowed its collective brow to devise a justification for banning child pornography that is not (I'm not making this up) legally obscene. One justice mused: New York has an interest in protecting its children from exploitation, but what of a pornographic movie "if the child actor resided abroad"?

A state court, conscientiously struggling to comply with previous Supreme Court decisions, denied the constitutionality of a law banning an extraordinarily repellent and exploitative form of filth. Then the Supreme Court labored nervously and with ludicrous complexity to justify pulling such pornography out from under First Amendment protection. How did we get to such a situation?

We got here by a series of Court decisions that are beads without a string — opinions without a coherent constitutional theory of the scope of the free-speech guarantee. We got here by sleepwalking down a path strewn with irrational and grandstanding rhetoric, such as the idea that the First Amendment is an "absolute" (Hugo Black), that "even a reasonable regulation of the right of free speech is not compatible with the First Amendment" (William Douglas), that "one man's vulgarity is another's lyric" (John Harlan).

Regarding free speech, the Court has acted as though a multiplicity of distinctions and criteria can make up for an absence of serious constitutional analysis. The Court has set itself and other courts such tasks as: detecting a "dominant theme" of pornography; measuring appeals to "prurient interest"; determining when offensiveness is "patent"; announcing when pornography is "utterly" without redeeming social value; gauging affronts to "contemporary standards."

Were the Court to go back to basics, it would begin by saying that free speech serves three basic values: individual development, individual enjoyment, and the discovery and dissemination of political truths. The first two are important private rights deserving broad scope, but are not the concern of the First Amendment. That amendment is an instrument of government. It concerns the democratic disposition of public power. Hence, its protections extend only to political speech.

A Court that accepted this premise would have quite enough to do monitoring the distinction between political and non-political speech. It could find uses for the hours hitherto spent watching pornographic movies and pondering the "expressive" value of nude dancing.

The First Amendment, properly understood, protects not "expression" but speech. As part of a political instrument, the amendment protects political speech — language addressed to other persons with a view to persuading them about political matters. Speech, unlike "expression," is intrinsically connected with the distinctive human capacity: reason. It is by reason that the individual governs his or her self; it is by reason that groups achieve self-government.

The Court took a radically wrong turn when it "incorporated" the First Amendment into the 14th Amendment, thereby imposing on states the restrictions that the authors of that amendment clearly intended to apply only to Congress. It is, of course, arguable that, absent "incorporation," state governments would impose, and democratic processes would not correct, intolerably foolish censorship. And it is arguable that trusting democratic discretion would produce a worse situation than we have: unstanchable pollution by pornography, and courts improvising antic theories about how this and that "expression" involves constitutional — that is, political — values.

All that is, as I say, arguable. But it is rarely argued. Many people cite their libertarian interpretation of the First Amendment as evidence of their brave receptivity to all thoughts, but have minds sealed against more rational interpretations of the First Amendment.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On July 11, 1804, Vice President Aaron Burr mortally wounded statesman Alexander Hamilton in a pistol duel in Weehawken, New Jersey.

On this date:

In 1767, the sixth American president, John Quincy Adams, was born in Braintree, Mass.

In 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt announced he was available for an unprecedented fourth term.

In 1979, the U.S. Skylab space station, after six years in orbit, returned to earth as a flaming shower of debris scattered over the Indian Ocean and Australia.

Ten years ago: The three Apollo 15 astronauts were disciplined for carrying 400 unauthorized postal covers to the moon the previous July and giving 100 of them to an acquaintance, who sold them.

Five years ago: Spain devalued its currency and announced tax reforms to stimulate the nation's economy.

One year ago: Cuba said it had foiled a plot to kill President Fidel Castro and had captured five operatives who it claimed were trained in Florida.

Seeing opponents endorse welfare proposal encouraging

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — While it's fairly standard for reporters — and much, at least, of the public — to be cynical where politicians are concerned, every once in awhile one feels an urge to say something on behalf of the lawmakers.

In this instance, those feelings have been stirred by the behavior of Texas' top state officeholders on behalf of the proposed constitutional amendment to amend the ceiling on state welfare payments.

Admittedly, "welfare" is one of those words which has a plethora of negative connotations — the idea of folks not being independent is just not one of those concepts much in favor among the majority of Texans.

But a majority of Texans also seems much in favor of helping those folks who are in need of help — and that, too, is a traditional attitude.

So it was good to see Gov. Bill Clements and Attorney General Mark White, who aren't in agreement on much else these days, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and his opponent, George Strake, and a number of other officials all lining up on behalf of Proposition 2 on the Nov. 2 ballot.

That proposal would change the current limit for Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) payments from $80 million annually to one percent of the state budget (or around $100 million this year).

Phil Strickland, director of the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission and chairman of Citizens Concerned About Children, says his group is trying to overcome the "myth of the welfare Cadillac."

AFDC payments now average $34 per month, Strickland says, and won't automatically go up if the amendment is adopted — because the Legislature still must determine the actual benefit amounts.

And, he adds, only Mississippi has smaller AFDC payments than Texas — "we are a long way from being a welfare mecca."

A typical AFDC family — a mother and two children — receives only $323 per month for AFDC and all other assistance payments, such as food stamps and Medicaid, combined, he says.

And the average recipient is on the rolls only 54 months and never returns after leaving them, Strickland reports.

"People aren't getting wealthy off welfare," he argues. And if the amendment isn't approved, Texas could be faced with the choice of either reducing the amount of payment per recipient or denying needy children assistance.

All the statistics, CCAC reports, "indicate that Texans on welfare are worse off than their counterparts nationally and their benefits are lower than in any other state of comparable population or wealth."

CCAC reports that it's encouraged not only by the support from the state's politicians but from other folks as well.

Members of the State Bar, at their Austin convention, adopted a resolution supporting the proposed amendment. Forty-five "key" organizations throughout the state have also announced their support.

CCAC is in the process of setting up coordinators in the state's major cities and says that it appears support for the amendment is widespread, including liberals and conservatives, Republicans and Democrats.

Attorney General Mark White, in calling for approval of the amendment, said the proposal is "a matter of responsible government.

"If needy children do not have enough to eat or otherwise have their basic needs met, they will grow up being needy all their lives; be on welfare forever, perhaps become criminals and, in general, be a burden to a society created by a state which failed to meet its responsibilities.

"I don't believe," he added, "Texas voters are going to let that happen."

Strickland's feelings about the need for approval are somewhat different — it is, he says, a matter of "basic survival" for children on AFDC.

"We feel like the need for passage of this constitutional amendment probably rests most fundamentally on the premise that children in the state of Texas should not grow up acutely deprived of the basic necessities of life."

And perhaps Texans don't believe that much in the "welfare Cadillac" — at least not as much as they used to.

Twenty years ago — or even 10 years ago — any politician voting for a proposal that could be seen as possibly increasing welfare benefits would be likely to be bludgeoned with that vote by an opponent.

In 1982, incumbents and their opponents are together in support of such a proposal.

And while the cynical may find some other motivations for that tactic, it's nice to think that the reason is because they agree it's something that would be in the best interest of all Texans.

SPEAKING OUT

Midland does well in its frame of sky

By LAWRENCE H. CONNOLLY

Lawrence H. Connolly, a Midland resident since 1976, holds a degree from the University of Texas at Austin School of Architecture.

The following treatise is in response to The Reporter-Telegram's suggestion that I comment on the city in toto.

My first draft concerned architect Frank Welch's award-winning work in town. In my second, I chronicled Midland's growth as a city. The first subject seemed not pervasive enough and the second too obvious and after due consideration, I decided to write about the features of the omnipresent sky in Midland.

From more than 20 miles away on the Garden City Highway at the rise of a hill you can see it. The first time I did, six years ago, it looked like an apparition. Numerous tall buildings rising above a flat landscape — a Land of Oz. Midland may just have more office square footage per capita than any other city in the United States. Remarkable for a city located 300 miles from the nearest metropolitan area. What makes that distinction even more dramatic is the immediate context the city is in. West Texas, land as consistently flat as a pool table, renders an enormous sky. This omnipresent virtue makes the Tall City appear even taller than it really is.

It is the sky that bestows upon the city its physical prominence. It's like a small painting hung with an enormous mat and frame. Or like a full-page advertisement with its message taking up only a tenth of the page. Because of this large frame, the subject that it envelopes is clamoring for attention. Midland's majestic frame is the changing cloudscape coupled with the flat terrain.

With the ground being so flat it's often possible to see for miles if the view is uninterrupted. Hence, vistas are an important feature of Midland. Within the city these vistas are defined by the streets and reinforced first by trees and then by buildings or houses that line the street. Gordon Knox and the Visual Improvement Committee (VIP) of the Chamber of Commerce understand the importance of vistas. Several years ago they lined Wall Street from Andrews Highway with live oaks. This wonderful improvement has since been supplemented by similar plantings on Scharbauer Drive and at the Terminal.

Some buildings have taken deliberate advantage of the vistas formed by the streets and addressed them head on. The Episcopal Church on Illinois does this at the intersection with "H" Street. Looking north on "H" Street from as far away as Holloway, it is possible to see the prominent main entry with its rose window.

Other buildings, because of their height, have also taken advantage of vistas, but from less than obvious street relationships. Originally, Midland's streets were oriented north and south with Front Street bisecting the town. Since then, all subsequent major streets have been platted parallel to section lines. "A" Street is the western edge of original Midland and its later developments. Most of these less than obvious visual relationships occur between west of "A" Street and downtown.

The Wilco Building enjoys one of these relationships, as it is the focus of a vista. Looking east on Missouri Street from as far away as Wall, it is possible to see this venerable landmark. Similarly, Midland National Bank Tower West and the Paragon Building provide focuses for their respective streets, Texas and Michigan.

Midland National Bank Towers and the Paragon are also notable for their responsiveness to the sky in terms of energy conservation. They represent some of the latest development in high-rise office design. Office building convention had been to have the same wall and window treatment on all four sides. These two buildings disregard this convention and respond to each orientation differently although both silouette the sky with a similar stair-step form. Midland National responds to the sky by having all of its windows facing either north or south. The east and west sides are deliberately windowless to avoid the intense low rising and setting sun.

The Paragon boasts three different window/wall solutions to respond to the path of the sun. On the south side, it has short recessed windows. This shades the windows from the high direct summer sun, yet allows the low sun in winter to shine into the windows and warm the building. Paragon's east and west sides are treated the same. Both have a minimum amount of glass flush with the wall. Then the north side has tall continuous glass that is not recessed as it does not receive much direct sun.

Both of these buildings are testaments that energy-conscious design need not be mundane.

In addition to these buildings there are other places in Midland where the sun is sensitively tempered. Plaza Centre and Oak Ridge are a couple of shopping centers that have used trees prominently to shade their buildings and their patrons' cars from the brilliant West Texas sun. More recently,when Midland High expanded its parking lot, it wisely left two existing pecan trees. The new lot may not be as efficient (some parking spaces lost), but they gained some direly needed visual relief to their block of asphalt as well as some shade.

Trees are very important to the physical beauty of Midland and how we adapt to the climate here. A single tree in a forest doesn't merit much attention, but a tree with its sky blue frame in West Texas does. Trees can also help camouflage an ugly building and make a good one look even better.

Midland is blessed with a unique natural beauty. The big sky on the flat terrain permits panoramic views, vistas and makes everything that displaces the volume of the sky important. Therefore, it is critical that Midland in its development be worthy of its frame.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

Unique reason

To The Editor:

How fortunate Midland County is to have county commissioners who arranged for the construction of a new badly-needed library building without calling for a bond election to finance it.

I applaud them for their wisdom. For public officials to cooperate with the private sector for the good of the community is an unusual but very desirable situation.

Another example of what makes Midland unique!

It's Billy, y'all

To The Editor:

The news media have told us lately of a rather prominent baby boy in the U.K. that has been named William Arthur Philip Louis. I am sure that all will agree that that is one hefty monicker to lug through this vale of sorrow and tears.

It will be a lot easier for the young man if we can persuade the family to emigrate to West Texas for in no time at all W-A-P-L will be known as "W.A." or perhaps "Billy Art."

Parkview, too

To The Editor:

Imagine my surprise when I opened the Sunday paper and saw the excellent article about arthroscopic knee surgery. The article gave the impression that Dr. Dean is the only doctor in the area who does this surgery and that Midland Memorial Hospital is the only hospital that houses his equipment.

I had just had the identical surgery on Friday at Parkview Hospital with Dr. Cockran doing the honors. I did a little telephoning and found that all the arthropedic doctors in town are doing arthroscopic surgery, and they are doing it at both hospitals.

My experience with the surgery was very surprising as I had had the open knee surgery five years ago in Hobbs, N.M. and it was miserable — this new procedure was almost painless — I didn't even have an aspirin after the surgery.

There was one more very important difference that was not brought out in the article. I am not an athlete — I am a 54 year old grandmother with degenerative arthritis — and the procedure takes out the painful bone spurs without tearing up the whole joint. It has only been seven days and my knee feels a great deal better already — when it has had time to fully heal it should be much improved over my seven day diagnosis.

Please let me say in closing that the 24 hours I stayed at Parkview I felt extremely well cared for. A nurse took vital signs regularly and reassured me. The anesthetist was gentle and excellent in her profession. The room was one of the private, patio rooms, the food was excellent. The O.R. crew was excellent and the whole experience was enjoyable instead of frightening.

Thanks to official

To The Editor:

Thanks to councilman Steve Davidson for taking the time to spend two and one half hours with us, a group of concerned eastside citizens. It isn't often that an elected official will take the time to come into our segment of the community.

We admit that we are not as informed about the policies that govern our city as well as federal programs being offered, therefore we must rely on their expertise.

Expertise also includes the ability to communicate with all people of the community.

We feel that we were enlightened about the uses of community development funds, even though we question HUD's thinking in not wanting to allocate monies for low rent housing in blighted areas, especially "across the tracks" in southeast Midland. Could the Midland Housing Authority have influenced this decision?

At least the meeting accomplished one goal, that being allowing an oppressed people to vent their frustrations. There are still many in the community, who like me, have not "arrived" and left the meeting totally uninspired by the options.

Maybe language makes some signs so ineffective

Signs are like orders: How they're given can determine their effectiveness — the spirit in which they are followed or ignored. Take this one:

NO TRESPASSING
Without Permission

Can you trespass with permission?

Perhaps the most common and generally annoying type of sign is the one which threatens to summon some force to tow your car away "at owner's expense" if the vehicle is not permitted to be parked in a certain slot on a certain lot, be it private, public or church.

And that's all right, but the wording often seems unnecessarily harsh. Why not just put "Posted. No hunting, No parking, No romping; Those who trespass pay" or simply post "Don't." In court, though, lawyers in their arguments would toss out common sense, get semantics all so complicated and distorted and say the alleged offender didn't understand what "don't" meant not to do. Pshaw.

If you're the lot keeper and effect the tow away, just make sure you can guarantee the wrecker service towing fees. If someone were to park his car in your driveway and you had no idea why, you might be tempted to move it or have it moved and later ponder the apparent inconsideration — if any.

There's a story, and it's probably true, about a closing-the-door sign in a plant operated by big business or the government; they're both about the same. It said, in a gobbledygook-ish way, "Please secure the door when egressing or ingressing the premises." The door usually stayed ajar if not wide open until the sign was discarded and replaced with plainness: "Shut the damn door...please."

Short of war, signs ought to be cordial. If they're not followed, then brandish the rod and whip but only after a summary trial has determined guilt and no valid excuse for breaking the rule. Enforcement is the solution. Any unenforced "Thou-shall-not" or "This-means-you" sign might as well be discarded.

Most everyone knows that stealing is wrong, so why even say "Shoplifters will be prosecuted." Would you, were you the actor and got caught, expect not to be taken before a judge? Thievery goes on despite warnings to the contrary.

Midland lot and shopkeepers ought to be more innovative and lighthearted in posting their policies. Don't try to intimidate. It pays not.

Among the more disheartening signs today are those "No checks accepted" notices. Now, the reasoning behind the signs is evident — hot checks and overdrawn accounts. Any businessman who accepts checks knows that chances are a percentage of the notes will bounce; unfortunately, that's part of doing business. Even some businessmen will jack customers around or be dishonest by deed or misdeed. That's a bad check and is a trespass on rights of fellow human beings.

Negotiations at critical stage

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor
The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — With growing indications that Israel may resort to military action to crush the 5,000 to 6,000 Palestine Arab guerrillas concentrated in West Beirut, American efforts to avert a new castastrophe in Lebanon have reached a critical stage.

Hope that Philip C. Habib, President Reagan's special envoy, could negotiate a peaceful withdrawal of the Palestine Liberation Organization's forces from West Beirut were fading in official Washington circles.

Some, but not all, high ranking officials concerned with the crisis felt that a well-targeted Israeli attack against the PLO fighters might break the impasse that has developed with PLO leader Yasir Arafat over withdrawal of PLO forces from Lebanon. Rather than have his guerrillas annihilated and his military power completely destroyed, it was thought Arafat might then offer to surrender to United Nations peacekeeping forces in return for a ceasefire and safe conduct out of Lebanon.

In the Habib negotiations to arrange the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, conducted with Arafat through Lebanese leaders and Saudi Arabia, the PLO leader has kept raising the ante on his demands ever since President Reagan pressured Israel to refrain from launching an all-out attack against West Beirut.

Although Arafat has never publicly said he would leave Lebanon, he originally led Lebanese intermediaries to believe he would agree to the gradual withdrawal of his forces if they were allowed to keep their small arms and leave "with honor," and Israeli forces were withdrawn from south Lebanon.

Hank's Offers Advanced Training

A wise man once said,"The shortest distance between two points is a straight line." And the fastest way to go that distance is by flying. But you can't always get a seat on a commercial flight, especially on short notice. So if you have to go somewhere fast, and don't feel like waiting on a commercial flight, why not learn to fly? Hank's Flite Center, located at Midland Regional Air Terminal, offers the most advanced private pilot training in the Permian Basin.

While most pilot training courses offer only the minimum 40 hours of flight training, owner Hank Henry requires 50-66 hours of in-flight training before a pilot can apply for licensing. The 40 hour minimum was set by the FAA in 1930, before pilots used radio or radar, instrument flying, runways, flaps, or made cross-country flights or cross-wind landings. Hank feels that to be thorough in training pilots, he must require the extra hours to teach the extra points.

Besides private pilot lessons, Hank's also offers training for commercial, instrument, flight instructor, multi-engine, and air transport pilot. Ground school at Hank's is as thorough and comprehensive as the in-flight training. This assures you that when you get through with your pilot training at Hank's, you will be a well-qualified pilot ready to fly. Cost of the ground school is $180 plus equipment. Classes are now forming for ground school to be conducted July 17 & 18.

Hank administers the FAA-approved written and in-flight tests for pilot licensing for the Permian Basin area. Mechanics exams may also be taken at Hank's. Hank's Flite Center has been turning out qualified and skilled pilots for almost 17 years now.

After you receive your pilot license, you may turn to Hank's Flite Center for your new airplane. Hank's sells both new and used aircraft of almost any make. Or, if you just want to use a plane for an upcoming trip, Hank's rents planes, too.

For more information on pilot licensing, buying an airplane, or renting a plane, call Hank's Flite Center at 563-1192. With Hank's thorough training, before you know it you will be flying off "into the wild blue yonder" in your own plane.

Oil and Industry Notes

A-1 Serves Permian Basin

The "Engineering Plastics" group consists of acetal (Delrin-Celcon), Nylon, Teflon, Acrylics, Cellulosics, Vinyls, polycarbonate, polyolefins, industrial laminates, and polyvinyl chloride.

Acetals offer a high degree of toughness, impact strength, dimensional stability, low coeffecient of friction, good chemical resistance, and good electrical properties.

Nylon is the most widely used because it is extremely strong, tough, weather-resistant, and is self-lubricating. These important properties make nylon ideal for use in gears, bearings, bushings, valves, wear strips, pulleys, conveyor channels, and rolls. It outlasts metal in many applications and reduces noise where it replaces metal to metal contact.

Nylatron GSM Tubular Bar is widely used to replace brass or bronze bushings in pumping units. Saddle bearings, tail bearings, and Pitman Arm bearings that have the Nylatron GSM material last longer because of its superior lubricity and resistance to shocks and abrasion.

Teflon offers a unique combination of heat resistance and low friction together with good chemical and electrical properties.

Acrylic, which is available in sheet, rod, or tube has a unique combination of properties: excellent transparency and clarity, good impact strength, lightweight, excellent weatherability, good resistance to most chemicals, formability, and easy machinability and fabrication.

Billiard Balls, magnetic tape, animation in the motion pictures, and overlay films are just a few of the products and applications for cellulosics material.

Some vinyl applications are face shields, drawing instruments, lamp shades, dial covers and faces, scales, lighting diffusers, menus, shims, insulating spacers, airline seat pocket cards, and many other decorative applications.

Polycarbonate is the toughest material that you can see through; it can withstand everything from baseballs to hammers without shattering or breaking. It is an excellent replacement for windows, skylights, and signs.

Polyethylene (low and high density), polypropylene, and UHMW polyethylene are called polyolefins. They are all corrosion and abrasion resistant, chemical resistant, easy to fabricate, and have good electrical properties.

Industrial laminates (Phenolic material) are used in the appliance, automotive, textile, machinery, metal finishing, aviation, chemical, electronics and electrical industries. This material makes strong, reliable insulators for applications in relays, switches, bus bars, stand-offs,panels, sockets, terminal strips, fuses, coils, motors, generators, transformers, circuit breakers, condensers and many others.

Rig vessels recover Britain's war losses

By DAVID PALLISTER
(c) 1982, The Guardian

LONDON — Britain is secretely attempting to recover some of the valuable and militarily sensitive equipment that went down with the ships that were sunk in the Falklands war. Two modern Swedish oil rig maintenance vessels, equipped with deep sea diving bells able to reach 1,500 feet, have been in the South Atlantic for more than six weeks.

The Stena Seaspread and the Stena Inspector, both owned by the Stena line of Gothenburg, were chartered on April 13 and May 26 respectively. The Inspector had been working in the Gulf of Mexico where it was involved in efforts to cap the blown oil well in the Bay of Campeche in 1980. The Seaspread had been operating in the Thistle field in the North Sea.

The ships were first taken to Ascension Island — with the Inspector having a refit in Savannah, Ga., en route — and recrewed with merchant navy seamen and Royal Navy advisers.

The British Ministry of Defense will not comment on the vessels' role in the salvage operation other than to describe them as repair ships. The Seaspread, a spokesman said, was chartered as a precaution before any ships were damaged or sunk. The Inspector, significantly, was added to the task force on the day the HMS Coventry and the container ship Atlantic Conveyor were sunk in 600 feet of water in the approaches to the Falklands Sound.

Repair work is certainly believed to be part of the ships' job. In Savannah, the Inspector was fitted with lathes and drill presses and the 100-ton crane was reduced to take loads of 15 tons with a more flexible boom to produce greater speed and maneuverability. But according to the Inspector's captain, David Ede, who was transferred from his command on the Seaspread on May 26, the ship "is a phenomenally sophisticated vessel."

The material lying on the ocean floor includes an enormous amount of ammunition, electronic hardware and supplies. Some of the most valuable cargo went down with the Atlantic Conveyor. Apart from heavy-lift Chinook helicopters the ship was carrying a portable landing strip for Harriers jets and all the ancilliary equipment for a fighter refueling and repair airbase. According to defense analysts it may also be necessary to dispose of the ammunition littering the bed of San Carlos Bay, and to take out any sensitive computer and signals equipment that could be accessible to divers from Soviet submarines.

It is not generally believed, however, that any attempt will be made to examine or salvage equipment from the HMS Sheffield, the destroyer that was hit by an Exocet missile on May 4 and went down in deep waters while under tow outside the battle area. But because the Defense Ministry has refused to issue a categorical denial, speculation continues that the Sheffield was carrying nuclear depth charges.

Trade group defends UK's aluminum ships

News accounts of the Falklands naval engagements have created impressions about the use of aluminum in ships that are erroneous and which deserve correction, the Aluminum Association reports.

In a recent published statement, the trade group said:

Aluminum is a wholly appropriate material for naval vessels and we have no evidence that the material used — whether it was steel or aluminum — was a factor in the loss of the ships that were sunk. In fact, the destroyer Sheffield, whose loss has drawn the most attention, was essentially an all-steel vessel. The sophisticated missiles and bombs were simply too powerful for these vessels, which were unarmored or lightly armored; they were sunk for reasons unrelated to the materials used. We understand injuries are being conducted in the United Kingdom regarding these battles and all the information will come out in due time.

Meanwhile, BBC-TV aired a Falklands' special program which included the following interview with HMS Sheffield's commanding officer who made these comments about the use of aluminum in vessels (other than the Sheffield):

"Now, people have said aluminum catches fire. it doesn't, actually; it melts, or certainly deforms, and becomes soft at a temperature of about 600 degrees centigrade. Well, that is so hot that anybody in the vicinity would be stone cold dead, long before the aluminum had melted. People have said that it made it more difficult to fight the fires. I, myself, doubt whether that is true. I had nothing whatever to do with fitting aluminum there, but I unhesitatingly would support it, because it's the only way that you can preserve stability in a small hull."

Our concern regards comments about the U. S. Navy, which has made use of aluminum in the superstructure of many of its warships. This was done to increase the combat effectiveness of these vessels. Because aluminum is lighter than steel, using aluminum above the waterline adds to a ship's stability, maneuverability and speed. Otherwise, it would be difficult to accomodate the weight of sophisticated radar and electronic gear which must of necessity be mounted high on the ship.

As for suggestions in stories that marine aluminum can "burn", this simply is not true in the commonly accepted sense of contributing to combustion the way that wood or rubber does.

Gas tops fuel oil for heat

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The overall energy efficiency from wellhead through the burner tip of natural gas for residential space heating is 5% to 14% greater than that of fuel oil, according to an analysis of the American Gas Association.

George H. Lawrence, president of A. G. A. said "the results of this study clearly shows that from an efficiency and ultimately an energy savings standpoint gas heat is more advantageous for the nation's homeowners than fuel oil."

The analysis, entitled "A Comparison of the wellhead to End-Use Energy Efficiency of Nstural as and Oil for Residential Space Heating", emphasizes that with new high-efficiency gas and oil furnaces now on the market, the overall efficiency of the gas system can reach as high as 86 percent compared to 74 percent for the oil system.

"Natural gas is a more efficient fuel to produce, process and deliver than oil because it requires minimal processing while oil has to be refined," Lawrence pointed out.

In addition, he said natural gas can be used more efficiently in the home as a result of the development of new, high efficiency equipment.

The analysis notes the current availability of gas-fired high efficiency condensing furnaces (87% efficient) and pulse combustion furnaces and boilers (up to 96% efficient) which are being installed in new homes and in the conversion of existing heating systems for oil and gas.

"The conclusions of this analysis carry a message to U. S. homeowners who presently use oil heat, that conversion from a conventional oil furnace to a new high efficiency gas furnace is a wise choice from an efficiency and long-run economic perspective," Lawrence said.

SBI proposing 20 percent increase in 1984-85 budget

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance officials are proposing a 20 percent increase in their budget for the 1984-85 biennium, in hopes of dealing with growing problems of policy approvals, premium taxes, hearings and other matters.

SBI Chairman William P. Daves told a Legislative Budget Board hearing that he was "not proud of the request for a 20 percent increase in funding for base resources" (excluding benefits) but said "it is our best effort to bring to the attention of the Legislature and the governor the areas we feel are most critical."

Daves also noted that not only is SBI self-supporting, the agency turns back millions of dollars to the State annually in premium taxes which it collects.

SBI is seeking $25.3 million for fiscal 1984 and $28 million for fiscal 1985, compared to $18.3 million budgeted for fiscal 1983, with an increase in employees from 726 to 781.

In making the request, SBI noted that in January, the board suspended review of a number of routine (or "plain vanilla," as one SBI official puts it) policy forms because of the large backlog which had developed. The suspension is to last for one year.

But even with that suspension, Daves reported, the agency remains hard-pressed to deal with the requests for approval of more exotic types of policies–with policy approvals running the full 60 days allowed by law for processing.

Daves also noted that court decisions have required additional hearings–as in the case of the Texas Catastrophe Property Insurance Association (which deals with insurance in coastal areas).

The State Fire Marshal's office also is conducting more hearings--and an increased workload on agents' licensing also has developed.

Daves also stressed that he would like additional personnel to deal with worker's compensation policies, noting that that section of the agency also promulgates experience modifiers based on losses experienced by each risk.

Currently, only 10 percent of the policies written and filed with the department can be reviewed, he said.

Commissioner Sam Kelley, Office of the Consumer Credit Commissioner, has issued an interpretation on HB 1228, the interest rate ceiling bill passed by the 1981 Legislature, regarding retail charge agreements.

In the interpretation (No. 82-11), Kelley considers whether a credit desiring to adjust the dollar amounts of rate brackets must give the "then existing account obligors" an opportunity to pay off the balance.

Kelley concludes the creditor must do so, and "at the rate previously agreed to and at the minium payment terms previously agreed to," since there is no authority in the law for a creditor to "unilaterally amend a retail charge agreement."

In another recent interpretation Kelley concludes that individuals making or retaining a secondary mortgage loan to secure the unpaid purchase price of the property do not need to be licensed under the Consumer Credit Code--unless they are in the business of making loans.

"If a seller of property is in fact engaged in the business of making secondary mortgage loans (an example would be a business concern which purchases single-family residences, repairs them, resells them to the public and takes secondary mortgages for part of the purchase price) and charges Article 1.04 interest rates that seller would be subject to Chapter 5" and would have to become licensed, Kelley concludes.

Senate Jurisprudence Committee Chairman Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, has asked attorney General Mark White to rule on two questions related to the Credit Union Commission's consideration of a credit union's loans to an official of the credit union.

Mauzy has asked whether the credit union commission "pierce the corporate veil" in determining whether the 10 percent limitation on such loans has been reached, and whether the commissioner must consider each loan to a corporation, "whether controlled by an officer of the credit union or not," as a separate transaction subject to that limitation.

In another opinion request, Rep. Bob Simpson, D-Amarillo, chairman of the House Insurance Committee, has asked White to rule on whether bonds and certificates of deposits may be filed with the Department of Public Safety to meet the requirements of the safety responsibility law for motorists.

Simpson also asked White to rule on whether such a bond or certificate would constitute evidence of financial responsibility under the law.

Gov. Bill Clements has named Truman Graham, Houston, to the Industrial Accident Board for a six-year term, representing employers on the IAB.

Offshore drilling significantly up in '81

HOUSTON — Worldwide offshore drilling increased significantly last year, while offshore oil production grew as a share of the total crude supply, according to Offshore magazine, a Houston-based petroleum trade publication.

The total of 2,847 wells spudded offshore in 1981 is 27 percent higher than the year before, when 2,237 were drilled offshore. The United States led the race with 1,033 wells last year, up 11 percent from 1980 figures. The United Kingdom was next in line with 209, compared to 176 a year before, and Indonesia was third with 204 wells, compared to 75 in 1980.

Although down slightly in daily output figures, the offshore share of total world oil production showed a marked increase, the magazine reports in its June 20 issue, which features a statistical survey of 1981 worldwide exploration and production activities.

The daily average of offshore crude production from around the world amounted to 13,664,610 barrels in 1981, a 0.16 percent decline from the 13,687,490 barrels per day reported a year earlier. The total offshore share of world crude oil production, however, rose from 22.8 percent in 1980 to 24.45 percent in 1981.

Worldwide offshore natural gas also dipped last year to 27.6 trillion cubic feet (Tcf) per day as compared to the 27.8 Tcf per day recorded in 1980 – a decrease of 0.74 percent.

The magazine also notes Mexico has moved into the ranks of the top five offshore oil producing nations after more than doubling its output in 1981. Saudi Arabia still tops the list, increasing slightly to an average of 3 million barrels per day, and Mexico replaces Abu Dhabi in third place after reaching 1.1 million barrels per day. The United States and Venezuela finish off the list, producing slightly over a million barrels per day.

U.S. offshore activities continue to be centered in the Gulf of Mexico, where crude production slipped and gas production soared in 1981. Oil companies operating in the Gulf produced 264.6 million barrels last year, down almost 3 million barrels from the 267 million barrels recorded in 1980. Meanwhile, the 4,877 Tcf of gas produced in 1981 was up over 200 billion cubic feet from the 4.6 Tcf counted the previous year.

The offshore pace will accelerate along the U.S. West Coast, where area operators plan an ambitious comeback, especially in the Santa Barbara Channel and Santa Maria Basin. Alaska's offshore wildcatters will focus upcoming efforts on the Beaufort Sea, while disappointed U.S. East Coast operators reevaluate the petroleum potential of the Georges Bank and Baltimore Canyon.

Mine rules well enforced

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission's surface mining and reclamation rules meet all requirements of federal surface mining laws and are being properly enforced, according to a review by the Department of the Interior's Office of Surface Mining.

The review, conducted by OSM's regional office in Tulsa, Okla., looked at the way topsoil is segregated at Texas surface mining sites and at RRC procedures for handling topsoil replacement once mining is complete.

OSM made the study at the request of the Texas Committee on Natural Resources and the Environmental Policy Institute, which is located in Washington, D. C. Letters filed by the groups expressed concern that Texas mine operators were violating federal law by mixing topsoil and subsoil as earth was removed during mining operations.

After a May meeting with representatives from the Commission's Surface Mining and Reclamation Division, the director of the Oklahoma regional office said Texas surface mining and reclamation rules comply with federal statutes and that the Railroad Commission was properly enforcing those rules.

RRC permits for six lignite mining sites where the mixing of topsoil and subsoil has been approved were examined by the regional office at the meeting.

OSM found that "evidence presented to the RRC in permit applications, at public hearings, and developed in investigations by the Surface Mining and Reclamation Division staff was sufficient for the RRC to determine that the resulting soil medium is equal to or more suitable for sustaining vegetation than the available topsoil."

The director of OSM's regional office and RRC representatives also toured Texas Utilities Generating Company's Big Brown mine in Freestone County to observe areas where land had been successfully reclaimed using mixed topsoil and subsoil. Independent university studies of the area concluded the mixed soil promotes plant growth better than the original topsoil.

Railroad Commission surface mining rules were developed in 1979 to implement the Texas Surface Coal Mining and Reclamation Act.
