Light Industry Urged For Area Rural Towns

Littlefield Workshop Focuses On Economics

Springlake, Earth Set Day Seminar

Businesses of the Springlake-Earth community will jointly sponsor a business seminar for all farmers and business leaders in the community on Wednesday, March 25, beginning at 9:45 a.m. in the Springlake-Earth High School auditorium. Steven R. Branson, coordinator, said the seminar will conclude at 2:45 p.m., and is being conducted at no charge to anyone attending. The title of the seminar is 'You Can Paint Your Rainbow,' and seminar leader will be Dr. Bill Hinson, vice president of Baylor University. The seminar is expected to conclude around 2:45 p.m.

Teamwork, unity, and utilizing local potential formed the basis for an all day economic growth and industrial meeting in Littlefield on Thursday. Six persons from Muleshoe were among the more than 100 business and community leaders from the South Plains and Panhandle who attended the workshop at the Littlefield Agriculture and Civic Center.

and unity, including all sectors of a city, including all businesses, in order to have a successful project. She suggested renovating the existing businesses, then actively seeking new businesses to fill empty buildings.

Jon Krebs, manager of area development for Southwestern Public Service Co., suggested three to five communities go together to work on a concept of self help.

He said a community economic development team - consisting of individuals with expertise in areas of natural resources, utilities, transportation, labor force and education, be set up to call on industries that could help the entire area.

Industries who are looking for expansion, or a move, know what they are looking for, and the more individuals, and communities ready to answer their questions, the more likely the industry will become interested in a particular area.

The luncheon speaker, Nancy Garm, Amarillo attorney and chairman of the highly successful 'Amarillo in Motion' project, commented, "without conflict there cannot be any growth."

She suggested that if two people cannot agree on something, one of them is unnecessary.

"Keep rhetoric and conflict from sabotaging an entire project," she added. "And always remember, every group that comes together has something to offer."

Another speaker added, "just as you would prepare your home for company, prepare your community for industrial prospects."

Rural health prospects were discussed by Sue Boyd, who is an educator with the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center. She said rural health is in trouble, but could be worked out satisfactorily if teamwork is used.

Entomologist Gives Warning On Russian Wheat Aphids

By: Pat Morrison
Extension Entomologist
Texas Agricultural Extension Service
Lubbock, Texas 79401
The Russian wheat aphid, Diuraphis noxia, could become one of the most important insect pests of wheat in the Great Plains. An estimated 150,000 acres were treated in the Texas High Plains in the spring of 1986 for this new pest. The aphid injects a powerful toxin into the plants on which it feeds, resulting in potentially significant yield losses. Yield reductions of 30-50% have been reported. Although very little is currently known about its biology and the economics of control in the U.S., research is presently underway by State Experiment Stations and the Agricultural Research Service to find answers to these questions.

The Russian wheat aphid is indigenous to the Mediterranean region of the Old World, including southern Russia. It was regarded as a pest of wheat and barley there as early as 1900. In 1978 it was introduced into the Republic of South Africa where it has become established and is a major pest of small grains. Most of the research information we have on this pest comes from South Africa. The aphid was restricted to the Old World until 1980, when it was first reported as occurring in central Mexico. By 1983 it had spread north into the State of Coahuila, which adjoins Texas. There was no record of its moving further north until March 17, 1986, when it was collected near Muleshoe, Texas--its first appearance in the U.S.

By April 11, 1986, the Russian wheat aphid was reported from most of the Texas High Plains, eastern New Mexico, Cimarron and Texas counties in the Oklahoma panhandle, Baca County, Colorado and Stanton County, Kansas.

Prizes will be awarded at 10 a.m. on Saturday, April 25, in the parking lot of the Bailey County courthouse.

Participants are asked to set a goal, then seek pledges and donations to bring the pledges up to what you wish to win. Additional sponsor sheets are available at the Muleshoe Public Library.

Each participant will be given a map of the walkathon route, along with a checksheet. The checksheet must be signed periodically by a Jennyslider member along the route. On completion of the walk, participants will be given an envelope to collect pledge money. Tell pledges to make checks payable to "Jenny-slippers."

Texas A&M students design new facilities for Blue Bell Ice Cream

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M University architectural design students have proven they can't be licked in coming up with new ideas for expanding that little creamery in Brenham.

Howard W. Kruse, president of Blue Bell Ice Cream, asked the students to create designs for company distribution centers and ice cream parlors to be located in new market cities in Texas.

"I wanted them to stretch their imaginations and creativity," said Kruse, a

1952 Texas A&M graduate. "And, of course, have fun."

Kruse said he loves to have fun, especially when it involves his ice cream. He treated the students to tasty treats several times during the project.

The students' ideas came out as varied as the 30 flavors of ice cream offered by Blue Bell. They ranged from a "Blue Bell Beach" on Galveston Island with a windmill/lighthouse parlor and a Victorian renovation project on San Antonio's River Walk to a carton-shaped facility in Midland that would surround tourists and employees with ice cream.

Creative Living

by Sheryl Borden

Information on pruning trees and shrubs and cooking with rice will be presented on Creative Living on Tuesday, March 17 at 12 noon. (The show will not be repeated on Saturday, due to an hour-long "Creative Living" pledge drive special from 2:00 to 3:00 pm).

Jim Sais is the Extension Horticulturist with the New Mexico Cooperative Extension Service in Albuquerque. Jim will explain what pruning is and what it does for trees and shrubs, as well as demonstrate how to make the cuts. He will also show the equipment needed for pruning.

Rice is one of the most versatile and most economical foods to prepare. It's versatility comes from being neutral in flavor, which allows it to combine with so many other foods. Rice costs only about four cents per half-cup serving. Amy Lloyd is a home economist with The Rice Council in Houston, Tx, and she will demonstrate how versatile and economical rice is by preparing several different rice dishes.

Due to the Pledge Festival, Creative Living will not be seen on Tuesday, March 17 at 9:30 pm, but will return to its regular schedule on March 24.

On Thursday, March 19 at 12 noon, Creative Living will present "Sewing Today Across the U.S.A.," which will feature some of Spring's newest fashions to make -- fashions created with style and speed. Spring fashions are streamlined and feminine, form-fitting or form-skimming. The fashion show is divided into eight different segments and features over 50 different McCalls Patterns and fabrics from over 25 manufacturers. The segments are called: Made in the U.S.A., Island Brights, Town and Country Pastels, Primitives, Safari Time, Sophisticated Lady, Big Bands and Springtime Love. There will be something for everyone, from casual separates to pretty feminine dresses, from teen favorites to the classic "Woman's Day" collection. There will be new designs by celebrities such as Brooke Shields and Linda Evans, as well as patterns by Liz Claiborne, French Connection and Palmer and Pletsch. Pattern information will be available from KENW-TV.

Creative Living is produced and hosted by Sheryl Borden. The show airs on more than 95 PBS stations in the United States, Canada, Guam and Puerto Rico and is distributed by Pacific Mountain Network, Denver, CO.

Almonds Live Up Convenient Microwave Meals

Convenience foods and the microwave oven have revolutionized life in the kitchen. A real timesaver, Napa Valley Casserole, cooked the microwave way, is ready in only 7 minutes. So, next time you're in a hurry, let the microwave oven and versatile ingredients, like almonds and leftover turkey or chicken, make your meal a speedy success.

NAPA VALLEY CASSEROLE

- 1/2 cup slivered almonds
- 1 cup quick cooking rice
- 1 cup chicken broth
- 1/4 cup sherry or white wine
- 1/4 cup chopped onion
- 1/2 teaspoon rosemary, crumbled
- 2 cups cooked turkey or chicken chunks
- 1 jar (6 oz.) marinated artichoke hearts, drained
- Chopped parsley

Spread almonds in a single layer on a paper plate or baking dish. Cook on full power 1-1/2 minutes. Stir and allow to stand 1 minute. Cook on full power another 1-1/2 minutes; cool. In shallow 1 to 1-1/2 quart baking dish combine rice, sherry, onion and rosemary. Cover loosely with plastic wrap. Cook in microwave oven on full power 5 minutes. Arrange remaining ingredients over rice; cover loosely and cook 2 minutes longer, until rice is tender and casserole is heated through. Garnish with chopped parsley, to serve. Makes 4 servings.

To Cook In Conventional Oven: Cover rice mixture with aluminum foil instead of plastic wrap. Cook in 400°F oven, 12 minutes. Add remaining ingredients; cover loosely and cool 10 minutes longer.

New Label Regulations For Lean Meat, Poultry

New guidelines established by the U.S. Department of Agriculture require processors to follow labeling regulations for claims about the fat and lean content of meat and poultry products by March, 1987.

"Although some processors have already complied with the regulations, industry-wide labeling will mean that consumers can compare all products," says Dr. Alice Hunt, nutritionist with the Texas A&M University Agricultural Extension Service.

According to the regulations, "lean" and "low fat" may be used only for products that contain no more than 10 percent fat. "Extra lean" is reserved for products that contain no more than 5 percent fat. "Light," "lite," and "lightly" may be used on meat and poultry products that have a poultry products that have a 25 percent reduction in fat, salt, sodium or breeding from similar products.

"Even more important for consumers is the fact that labels which carry these terms must also clarify the product claim," says Hunt. "The actual amount of fat, for example must accompany the claim, or be noted with an asterisk and placed elsewhere on the package."

The nutritionist says that comparative expressions of the "lean or fat content of products, such as "leaner ground beef," must also carry an explanation on the label.

The explanations must tell the fat content and the basis for comparison, such as "this product contains 20 percent fat, which is one-third less fat than allowed by the USDA standard for ground beef."

When buying lean or light meat or poultry products, especially those that are breaded, Hunt advises to consumers to consider how they will cook the food as well. If you take "light" chicken patties home, and then fry them, she says, "you just add back the fat you cut by buying the light product."

Reports of infestations over the next 3 months tracked the aphid as it spread over most of New Mexico, into 4 additional Oklahoma counties (Beaver, Ellis, Woodward and Harper), into 31 counties of western Kansas, most of eastern Colorado and into Laramie County, Wyoming. The latter represents its northernmost distribution to date. In October, it was reported from Nebraska (Kimball and Banner Counties) for the first time where it was found on volunteer wheat. During the first 7 months of its occurrence in the U.S., the aphid has extended its range to include parts of 7 states.

The Russian wheat aphid is relatively small in size, less than 2 millimeters in length. It is green in color with an elongate, spindle-shaped body. Although it is similar in size and color to the greenbug, Russian wheat aphids can be easily distinguished from other aphids occurring in small grains by 1) a characteristic projection above the cauda (or tail) which gives it a "double tail" appearance in side view and 2) the apparent absence, to the naked eye, of prominent cornicles (or dorsal tubes) typical of other aphids.

Economically important host plants of this aphid include wheat, barley and triticale. It can feed and reproduce on rye and oats but these are less preferred. Other U.S. grass hosts include various brome grasses (e.g. rescue grass and Japanese brome), jointed goatgrass, cheatgrass, timothy, squirreltail, little barley and wild oats. It is not able to utilize sorghum, corn or Johnsongrass as hosts although transitory aphids have been observed on these plants.

Leaves fed upon by the Russian wheat aphid exhibit white, longitudinal streaks. This intervenal chlorosis becomes more pronounced as more aphids feed on the leaf for a longer period of time and infested leaves can ultimately become almost white. This distinct symptom is a result of the injected toxin which disintegrates the chloroplast membrane. A reduction in chlorophyll content in leaves of up to 85% has been measured. Heavily infested plants may also exhibit a flattened appearance, with tillers lying almost parallel to the ground. Occasionally, a purpling of infested plants will also be noted. Aphids tend to prefer the uppermost leaf or leaves of a plant. Infested leaves will curl tightly, much like a straw. Because of the location of the aphids within infested plants, they are not readily visible upon superficial examination of plants in the field. It is easier to look for symptomatic tillers (white streaking) when quickly scouting a field.

The Russian wheat aphid has the potential of serving as a vector for several diseases. It has been implicated in transmitting Barley Yellow Dwarf, Brome Mosaic and Barley Strip diseases, all of which are present in parts of the Southern Great Plains.

The potential role of parasites and predators in regulating Russian wheat aphids' population in the U.S. is not known at this time. The South Africans do not, unfortunately, consider beneficial insects to play an important role in limiting numbers of this aphid. They attribute this to the location of the aphids within tightly curled leaves. It is known however, that the greenbug parasitoid Lysaphlebus testaceipes will parasitize Russian wheat aphids in the field in Texas.

Observations in South Africa and Texas support the idea that this aphid prefers dry conditions. Wheat that is subjected to relatively few stress factors will probably tolerate pest infestations more successfully. Biologically, the Russian wheat aphid must find host plants on which to successfully overwinter and would additionally need to exhibit a degree of cold hardiness to overwinter in at least the Southern Great Plains. Field surveys in the summer of 1986 showed the pest to be present in volunteer wheat in parts of New Mexico, Texas and Colorado. Volunteer wheat will probably serve as the primary overwintering host in the U.S. Its ability to overwinter in our area has not yet been demonstrated. However, in December, 1986, overwintering populations has survived several nights of cold temperatures in the Fort Collins, Colorado, area.

Economic thresholds, or treatment levels, have not been determined for wheat grown in the U.S. However, in South Africa treatment is recommended when 10% of the plants are infested at the growth stage (Feekes 6) when the first node of the stem is visible. A plant is considered infested when only 1 tiller or leaf has aphids present. If heavy reinfestation occurs following treatment, a second application is recommended when the flag leaf is first visible and 10% of the tillers are infested. Most damage is done between the time when the flag leaf first appears (Feekes 8) and the head is first visible (Feekes 10.1). Their strategy is aimed at protecting the flag leaf because of the major contribution it makes to the eventual yield.

While most of the problems with the Russian wheat aphid might well occur in the Spring, there has been concern over the possibility of overwintering populations moving from volunteer wheat into fall-sown wheat. Fortunately, economic infestations of this kind occurred in only isolated parts of New Mexico and Colorado in 1986. The possibility of the need to apply a soil systemic insecticide at planting remains questionable at this time. It will take several years of experience with this new pest before the possible need for this practice in certain situations can be assessed.

Insecticide trials were conducted in Texas and Colorado in 1986. In Texas, it was found that the following insecticides provided very good control in trials using a hand-carried boom: Cygon 400 at 3/4 pt./acre, Di-Syston 8 at 1/4 and 1/2 pt./acre, methyl parathion 4 at 2 pts./acre and Lorsban 4 at 1 and 1 1/2 pt./acre. All of these materials are registered except Lorsban. It will probably be important that aerial applications be made with adequate volume to ensure good coverage.

In summary, the Russian wheat aphid was first reported in the U.S. in March, 1986, from a wheat field in Bailey County, Texas. It has subsequently spread throughout the Southern Great Plains and has now been reported from 7 states. We presently have very little experience and technical information from which to make predictions and advise growers. However, research programs have been initiated. If the pest follows the same trend with its invasion of the U.S. as it did in South Africa and Mexico, we can expect the Russian wheat aphid to become a permanent member of our insect pest fauna of small grains. Infestations will probably vary in intensity within its geographic range and from year to year.

Rev. Rickey Vernon of Metlakatla, Alaska, and a Muleshoe native, will be preaching at Calvary Baptist Church Sunday morning for the 11 a.m. worship service.

The Rev. Vernon is a 1968 graduate of Muleshoe High School and a 1983 graduate of the Pensacola Bible Institute in Florida. His wife, Cindy, is the former Cindy Lorange, who is also a native of Muleshoe and attended Muleshoe schools.

They are the parents of three children, Brian, 16 and a sophomore; Jared 15 and a freshman and Christy, eight and a third grader.

Following Vernon's 1983 graduation, they moved to Idaho, where he taught for two years in a Bible Institute in the Treasure Valley Baptist Church of Boise.

They have resided in Alaska, where Metlakatla is a small island, for the past year, where he founded and pastors the Bible Baptist Church. They are one hour by ferry boat from Ketchikan, Alaska, and the ferry runs only on Tuesday and Wednesday. It is also the only way can get their car off the island.

and be a part of a community. It all boiled down to "team-work and unity can help turn around a depressed economy."

When industry comes looking, we need to be ready and have answers for them. It will take the efforts of everyone, not just a few, to prepare an entire community for industry prospects.

The low and depressed economy is widespread, and the individuals who attended the workshop brought home a lot of ideas to help boost the flagging economy. However, they need the help of everyone.

From Muleshoe, Toni Eagle, Weldon Eagle, Darrell Turner, H. John Fuller, Hubert Kidd and Clea Williams attended the all day workshop.

Rural Texas Hospitals Feel Brunt Of Economics

In 1986, 18 Texas hospitals closed, according to the Texas Hospital Association, a trade association representing the hospital industry. This compares with nine closures in 1985, and eight in 1984.

"Nearly all of the 35 community hospitals in Texas that closed during the past three years were relatively small and the majority (19) were located in rural (non-MSA) counties," said Karl Shaner, Dr. P.H., vice president, research and information services. All but one of the closed hospitals had less than 100 beds. "With regard to their ownership status at the time of closure, seven hospitals were publicly owned, 10 were private/non-profit institutions and 18 were investor-owned, either by individuals or a corporate system," Shaner noted.

enforcement of regulatory requirements, closure scrutiny in the delivery and utilization of services by the peer review organization (PRO), and inadequate payment from Medicare/Medicaid programs.

"Rural hospitals also face the problems of attracting sufficient numbers of qualified professional personnel and physicians, less access to capital and insufficient funding for marketing and diversification in order to respond to a more competitive health care market," said Charles Bailey, JD, vice president of legal affairs and THA's liaison with smaller hospitals.

"In Texas, small and rural hospitals account for 170 of the hospitals in the state, and serve an estimated 3 million people. Recent changes in the payment and review of care provided Medicare beneficiaries have had dramatic effect on these hospitals," Bailey said. "Because small, rural hospitals also serve a greater than average proportion of Medicare patients, changes in payment policies have a more profound effect on their facility and its ability to preserve financial stability," he added.

Since 1980, hospitals have seen a decline in discharges and in their average daily census; however, this has affected small and rural hospitals more severely. "In the first half of 1986, occupancy rates were 25 percent or less in small hospitals with fewer than 25 beds, and 35 percent for hospitals with 26-49 beds," Bailey said.

Small, rural hospitals also have experienced a decline in net patient margins while experiencing higher expenses, including higher malpractice insurance costs. "The net effect of these changes is that many small, rural hospitals are in financial distress, affecting the accessibility to health care services of those living in many rural communities in Texas," Bailey said.

"Changes in the reimbursement of small, rural hospitals is essential if rural hospitals are to survive and needed services are to continue to be provided to persons living in rural communities," Bailey said.

Among the recommended changes in the treatment of rural hospitals are:

- * Consider exempting rural hospitals from the prospective pricing system (PPS).
- * As an alternate, change the PPS to more adequately reimburse rural hospitals in such areas as reducing the differential of payment between rural and urban hospitals, revising payments to reflect severity of illness, changing the definition and payment of "sole community providers," establishing low-volume adjustment payment, revising outlier payment policy and continuing pass-through of capital costs.
- * Increase the flexibility of the Application of Medicare Conditions of Participation to rural hospitals.

New Long Distance Regulation Studied

Legislation designed to alter the state's long distance telecommunications regulatory policy is now before the Texas Legislature.

Senate Bill 229 sponsored by Senator John Montford, D-Lubbock, and House Bill 468 by Representative Bill Haley, D-Center, would reduce the regulatory restrictions placed on AT&T and encourage direct competition among the more than 160 long distance companies now doing business in Texas.

"The legislation ensures that all Texans, not just those in major metropolitan areas, receive the benefits of an extensively competitive long distance market place," said Pres Sheppard, AT&T vice president external affairs. "Only an economically sound telecommunications industry can provide Texans with the latest technology and attractively priced services and options."

Today, AT&T is the only long distance company that must endure prolonged regulatory proceedings by the Texas Public Utility Commission before changing its prices, or offering new products and services.

"AT&T serves every long distance customer in Texas. Our competitors often neglect rural areas and concentrate their services in larger cities with more customers and more long distance calling," Sheppard said. "In light of today's economic situation in Texas it simply makes no sense to regulate and restrict AT&T while giving preferential treatment to the other long distance companies."

Sheppard added that the legislation contains strong safeguards for rural Texans. It assures that all customers in the state have access to the latest technology and that no one is left without reasonably priced long distance service.

Some 26 other states already have approved forward-looking long distance telecommunications policies and are positioned to use those policies in their quests to broaden local economies and attract hightech industry.

"Texas cannot afford to lag behind other states in developing the potential of this important industry," Sheppard said.

A&M professor says historic preservation could boost economy

COLLEGE STATION — Economic recovery in Texas can get a boost from history, say organizers of the new Center for Historic Resources at Texas A&M University.

An expansion of historic preservation work — which totaled more than $1.4 billion on 194 projects in Texas from 1982 to 1984 — can stimulate even more expenditures by private interests and the federal government in the state, said Gordon Echols, a professor of urban and regional planning.

"More than 13,500 persons were employed in these projects and nearly $90 million was produced in local, state and federal taxes," he said, quoting reports to the Texas Historical Commission.

Using the example of the City of San Antonio with its Alamo and River Walk, Echols said historic preservation also plays an important role in increasing tourism, another important industry for the state.

The center will serve as a headquarters for research and state and community development efforts to discover, develop, preserve, restore and conserve the historical heritage of Texas and other areas, said Echols. It received the recommendation of the Texas Historical Commission and was formally authorized by The Texas A&M University System Board of Regents.

Letter To The Editor,
I am a businessman who travels Eastern New Mexico and West Texas. I really enjoy staying in Muleshoe. The Heritage House Inn is one of the best places to stay in my district. The people and service are great and the Inn is very clean. They make my stay in Muleshoe a pleasure. Also, I enjoy eating at Leal's Mexican Food Restaurant. The food is great and the people and service are excellent. These are two reasons that I stay in Muleshoe. I go to the store and buy gas and support other business. And thanks, to Robert D. Green and his fine people, also.

Some towns I will not stay in because of the lack of good restaurants or Inns. I have not met a person in Muleshoe that I have not liked or enjoyed. You have a very nice town. I hope the people of Muleshoe realize, how lucky they are to have great places like, The Heritage House Inn and Leal's in town, and support them. Thank you people of Muleshoe for making we travelers feel at home in your fine town.
