Honors students recognized at banquet

By BEAR MILLS

It was the kind of evening that would prepare an over-achiever for a lifetime of recognition of his or her outstanding accomplishments.

The M.K. Brown Room of the Pampa Community Building was elegantly decorated with ivy, flowers and candelabras Thursday night as the Pampa Independent School District cited the honor graduates from the Class of 1989.

Soft and sassy music befitting an air of quietly dignified celebration was provided by the PHS Stage Band, under the direction of director Charles Johnson.

The top 24 graduates, the academic cream of the crop, were on hand to receive their gold cord and cap tassel, honor pin and a certificate confirming their place among the best students in PHS history.

Those symbols of excellence were presented by school board members as Dr. Keith Teague, vice president of the trustees, read a brief biographay of each student and recognized their parents.

"We realize there are times when young people might have moments of waivering," said Daniel Coward, high school principal, "and you parents have put them back on course."

It was appropriate that the speaker for the evening was Ray Thornton, principal at Wilson Elementary School. The last two valedictorians from PHS — including Sarah Ann Martinez this year — have been products of Wilson.

And since it was elementary school principals who first directed the educational path of these students, it was fitting that one should then address their departure into the vistas of collegiate academia.

Thornton told the honor graduates that whatever formal degree they pursued, he knew of seven more important degrees they should also work toward.

"These degrees are ones you won't find listed in a college catalogue or on a transcript," Thornton said. "I am confident you possess the ability to attain very lofty goals in life. But goals do not equal success and success is the real secret."

The seven degrees Thornton elaborated on were a degree of significance, degree of security, degree of acceptance, degree of love, degree of praise, degree of discipline and degree of belief.

"Scripture tells us in Matthew 6 to seek God first," Thornton said of the last degree. "You can know you are on your way to success when you recognize that."

The 24 honor graduates of the Class of 1989 then came forward, one at a time, and were received by board members and Dr. Harry Griffith, superintendent of schools, to be officially congratulated for their outstanding secondary-school work.

They were, in alphabetical order, Noelle Barbaree, ranked eighth; Christa Baumgartner, ranked 18th; Anissa Bradsher, ranked 12th; Jason Cameron, ranked 20th.

Jeff Carruth, ranked 10th; John Cooley, ranked third; Jason Heath Garren, ranked 13th; Jennie Haesle, ranked 14th; Madella Harmon, ranked 24th; Rankin Harvey, ranked fourth; Susanna Holt, ranked 17th; Dax Austin Hudson, ranked 22; Christopher W. Ickles, ranked 16th.

Jeff Jones, ranked 21st; Kristy King, ranked 19th; Christy Lowery, ranked ninth; Stacie Delaine Neff, ranked sixth; Robert Perez, ranked 15th; Christina Rogers, ranked seventh; Dale Sanders, ranked fifth; Patti Warner, ranked 23rd, and Terrell Welch, ranked 11th.

Ray Thornton delivers his address at Thursday's honors banquet.

Valedictorian Martinez and salutatorian Valerie Elaine Anderson were then honored for their academic leadership and achievements, which set them at the top of the scholastic ladder.

Thornton told the graduates that whatever course they took in life, he hoped they would never forget to temper their actions, both professional and personal, with self-confidence, a love that reaches out to others and the discipline to set boundaries for themselves and those they come in contact with.

Graduation ceremonies for PHS will be Thursday, June 1, at 8 p.m. in McNeely Fieldhouse.

Demos prepare quick action if Wright resigns

By STEVE KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, anticipating a historic resignation next week of Speaker Jim Wright, are making plans for quickly promoting Majority Leader Thomas S. Foley of Washington to the powerful speaker's post.

But intrigue is brewing for filling in the rest of the party leadership slots as some Democrats worry that Rep. Tony Coelho, Foley's likely successor, could hurt the party because of questions about his own financial dealings.

Foley, talking with reporters Thursday in Seattle, said he spoke to Wright earlier in the day and the speaker "repeated his desire to have an opportunity to state his case, his side of the case, to the widest possible audience, and he's determined to take that opportunity at the first time that seems appropriate."

"I assume that will be with either next week or shortly thereafter," Foley said.

Leadership sources in the Capitol said arrangements were being made for Wright to make a resignation address to the House next Wednesday, but the speaker himself had not yet decided on his precise course of action.

Wright, D-Texas, remained secluded in his office Thursday, but he released a statement making clear he no longer was seeking any "plea bargain" with the House ethics committee.

One of the most serious charges made by the ethics committee was that Wright's wife, Betty, was given a no-work job by Wright's friend and business partner, George Mallick. House rules prohibit gifts from people with interest in legislation, and the committee said it believed Mallick, a Fort Worth developer, had an interest.

Wright, who has vowed to clear his wife's name, dispatched his attorneys on Wednesday in search of a deal that would accomplish that, according to sources who said the lawyers offered his resignation in exchange for the panel dropping at least the charges that involve his wife.

But the deal fell through as Republicans and at least one Democrat on the panel resisted.

Wright on Thursday distanced himself from the effort and indicated it was over.

"There is no deal now. There will be no deal in the future," he said in the statement, insisting he had never personally engaged in the discussions.

It remained unclear whether Wright, if he resigned his speakership, would at the same time resign his seat in the House or if that would happen soon thereafter. The ethics committee would be forced to abandon its case only if Wright left the House.

If Wright resigns his speakership, his party would quickly caucus to fill his post and the House presumably would elect the popular Foley, the No. 2 House Democrat.

If Foley moved up to speaker, his post of majority leader would

Griffith: Drug testing of athletes dependent on community support

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

A broad base of cooperation and support from all levels of the community would be necessary to even consider implementing a drug testing program at Pampa High School, said Pampa Independent School District Superintendent Dr. Harry Griffith.

The comment came in the wake of recent revelations that four high school students had used anabolic steroids over the past 2½ weeks. The students were suspended from all school-related sports activities until at least next fall after admitting to PHS Athletic Director Dennis Cavalier that they had injected the potentially dangerous drug.

Griffith also praised Cavalier and his coaching staff for their professional and timely handling of the steroid issue.

"I'm proud of Coach Cavalier and pleased that the coaches have been able to move as swiftly as they have at the early stages of the problem," Griffith said in an interview Thursday afternoon.

"Our intent is to punish, but most importantly to help our students who need the guidance of caring individuals like our coaches," he continued. "The parents and the students involved have been very cooperative. In the end, we're only out to help these young people."

Griffith stressed that the coaches, the school system and the community at large have consistently waged an ongoing war against drugs.

"Our coaches do a pretty wonderful job of working with our kids on the ill effects of liquor or drugs of any kind," Griffith said. "You can walk into our athletic building and see posters saying, 'No Steroids.'

"And the school system has taken an aggressive stance against drugs. We implemented a 'Say kNOw to Drugs' program, and our teachers and counselors are trained to help kids who may be having problems. The most visible aspect of our drug policy has been bringing drug dogs to the high school.

"I'm personally pleased with the effort the city and the county has made in eradicating drugs from our community. I believe there have been significant improvements in Pampa."

Griffith and Cavalier have fielded numerous questions during the past week concerning the possibility of beginning a drug testing program at the high school. Griffith said that, as a microcosm of the community, the high school would follow the example set by the society it serves.

"Any discussion of a drug testing program would be very preliminary at this stage," Griffith said. "We are educators, and we would need cultural and societal support, as well as state support, to carry out such a plan. We need to know if our society perceives drug testing to be worthwhile."

The superintendent believes that the community as a whole must be willing to undergo drug tests if the students are expected to do so.

"One of the things I would ask the community and the local businesses — and the Pampa News itself — is if they would submit to such a test," Griffith said. "We're just a part of the community."

The Pampa Police Department initiated a criminal investigation Wednesday into the sale of steroids to the four high school students. Cavalier said the students informed him of the identity of the seller and told him that the initial contact had been made at the Pampa Youth and Community Center.

Griffith sought to dispel any ideas that the Youth Center had in some way aided or abetted the transaction.

"In no way does the school system intend to implicate the Youth Center," he said. "I'm absolutely convinced that any discussion of sources of drugs has nothing to do with the Youth Center.

"Someone may have come through the Youth Center, just as they might pass through a shopping mall. The Youth Center has been a great help to our high school athletic programs and is obviously against drug use."

Panel seeks workers' comp compromise

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — House and Senate conferees remained far apart trying to reach a compromise on workers' compensation, but were hopeful they could complete their job before the end of the regular session.

"I think there's reasonable people on both sides. I think we'll be able to work out a compromise piece of legislation that does exactly the things that we're all interested in doing," Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, said Thursday.

Meanwhile, Gov. Bill Clements reiterated his vow that if lawmakers fail to pass an "acceptable" reform to the system of compensating injured workers, they will face a special legislative session.

The workers' comp conference committee quickly found itself at odds on the issue of resolving disputed claims between injured workers and the insurance carrier.

"I hope very much we can reach accommodation ... but I don't underestimate the size of our task," said Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan.

With four days remaining in the session, the conference committee will try to settle major differences between Senate and House proposals.

The issue pits trial lawyers and organized labor on one side against business and insurance companies in a high-stakes game involving the $3 billion per year workers' comp insurance industry and coverage to millions of Texas workers.

Business interests, which claim high jury awards have caused workers' comp premiums to soar, support the House bill. Labor and trial attorneys, who say insurance companies and unsafe working conditions are to blame, support the Senate bill.

The Senate and House bills are poles apart on the issue of resolving claims that are disputed by either the insurance carrier or worker.

Under current law, workers' comp claims can be appealed to a state district court jury trial and the previous administrative ruling by the Industrial Accident Board is not admissible as evidence.

The House bill would allow appeals to a non-jury court trial, and the judge could review only whether the laws and procedures of those hearings were properly applied.

The Senate bill establishes a two-track system for resolving disputes. Under one track, claims can be decided in binding arbitration. Under the other, claims can be appealed to a court jury from the previous administrative hearing. The record of that hearing can be examined in court, but not the decision made by the hearing officer.

Smith, who authored the House bill, said the Senate proposal "doesn't address the fundamental problem that we face," in which he said insurance companies can "starve out" injured workers with legitimate claims by tying up the dispute in court for years.

In addition, Smith said, frivolous claims by a worker can prompt a settlement because the company does not want the expense of a court trial.

But Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said the Senate's binding arbitration proposal would eliminate a majority of disputed court claims.

Coelho, D-Calif., would be next in line. However, Coelho recently admitted that he failed to include on his financial disclosure forms a $50,000 bank loan that he used toward purchasing junk bonds.

On Thursday, the Los Angeles Times reported the Justice Department is conducting a preliminary criminal investigation of whether Coelho received favors from Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., the firm that issued the junk bond.

After the troubles surrounding Wright, some lawmakers were privately promoting Rep. Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., for the majority leader's post. Gephardt and Coelho are political allies, but the Missouri Democrat did not rule out such a run.

Gephardt press spokesman Deborah Johns said her boss is "waiting to see what the speaker is going to do. He's listening to people and at this time he just hasn't made a decision."

Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., also was being mentioned for a leadership spot. Contenders lining up for Coelho's No. 3 whip's spot, should he try to move up, included Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., the current chief deputy whip, and Democratic Caucus Chairman Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa.

The politicking was taking place quietly.

"There's a certain amount of inappropriateness in mounting a campaign before the funeral," quipped Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont.

Some Democrats were distressed at the turn of events, with the speaker seemingly being forced out before the ethics committee even moved into the phase of its proceedings during which Wright could testify and make his case.

"My heart is so heavy that this could happen to the House of Representatives," said Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., who in 1986 ran unsuccessfully for whip.

Rangel said he was especially bothered by those members who have called for Wright's resignation because he is embarrassing the House.

Airlines prepare for busy season

By MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer

From labor travails to terrorist threats to rising fuel prices to aging planes, the nation's airlines face daunting challenges as their busiest season begins with the Memorial Day weekend.

Nonetheless, industry analysts and travel agents expect a strong summer for air travel as stable fares at home and a more valuable dollar abroad lure vacationers.

"I think it's going to be a record summer," said Louis Marckesano, an airline analyst for Janney Montgomery Scott Inc., a Philadelphia securities firm.

The airline industry has been turned on its head, with competition growing fiercer and takeover raiders swarming over profitable Northwest Airlines.

But the industry's biggest trauma this year, a bitter labor strike at Eastern Airlines, hasn't resulted in the mass inconvenience to travelers that originally was feared.

Instead, it's turned out to be a boon for Eastern's leading competitors. Delta Air Lines, American Airlines, Pan Am Corp. and USAir Group Inc., especially, are reaping profits from the woes of Eastern, which has been in Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection since March 9.

Together, the rivals have captured an estimated $6 million to $7 million a day in revenue lost by Eastern, which has been virtually grounded by the walkout that started March 4.

The extra profits have given many big airlines a cushion against surging fuel prices, sparing them from increasing fares, Marckesano and others suggested.

Eastern's sister carrier Continental Airlines announced last month that it was raising its "MaxSaver" discount fares by up to 18 percent. But Continental, often a price leader, recently retracted the fare increase after other carriers failed to match its initiative.

That could signal an end, at least temporarily, to what had been a trend of rising fares. Air tariffs have increased as much as 20 percent this year over 1988, some analysts say.

"I don't think there are going to be vast increases in fares," said Andrew Geller, who follows the industry for Provident National Bank in Philadelphia.

The halt to the fare spiral has occurred despite a dramatic rise in prices of jet fuel caused partly by the oil spill in Alaska and expectations of possible short oil supplies.

Jet fuel, one of the biggest costs in the airline industry, has jumped to about 65 cents a gallon from 58.7 cents in February, before the March 24 Exxon tanker spill that delayed shipments of crude oil to refineries.

The apparent slowdown in the economy, credited in part to higher interest rates that have discouraged consumers from spending, appears to have had little effect on air travel.

Robert Joedicke, an analyst at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. in New York, expects passenger traffic this summer to be at least as good as last year within the United States and "stronger than a lot of people think" overseas.

Thirty-seven students were honored for participating in the Take Home Computer program, 22 received reading awards, 11 were honored with Extended-Day Math Awards and 16 fourth- and fifth-graders were recognized with Authorship Awards for writing, illustrating and then reading stories to younger students at the school.

Consumer spending shoots up in April

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer spending shot up 1.1 percent in April, the biggest advance in nearly a year, outpacing a 0.4 percent increase in personal income, the government reported today.

The combination of a strong spending increase and the sluggish income gain produced a sharp reduction in the personal savings rate, which dropped to 5.3 percent last month from a three-year high of 6.3 percent during the previous month, the Commerce Department said.

The April increase in personal income was the smallest gain since income fell 0.2 percent last November. Personal income had risen a strong 0.8 percent in March and 1.0 percent in February.

Last month's increase in personal income, to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.37 trillion, would have been stronger were it not for decreases in farm subsidies over the past two months, coupled with bonuses for autoworkers and retroactive Social Security benefit payments that inflated March's figure.

Excluding those special factors, personal income advanced a strong 0.8 percent in April after rising 0.7 percent in March.

The 1.1 percent increase in personal consumer expenditures, to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $3.42 trillion, was the biggest advance since a 1.3 percent increase was registered last June.

Expenditures had risen just 0.3 percent in March and 0.4 percent in February, causing analysts to attribute part of the current slowdown in economic growth to slackening consumer spending.

Consumer spending is closely watched as indicator of the economy's health because it accounts for two-thirds of overall economic activity.

The rebound in spending last month was partly attributed to a rise in auto sales, which perked up somewhat in April after carmakers launched a round of rebates and cut-rate financing deals to lure customers back to showrooms.

The pickup in auto sales was the primary power behind a 3.2 percent increase last month in consumer spending on durable goods — "big ticket" items expected to last at least three years.

Spending on durable goods last month rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $467.1 trillion after declining during the previous two months, when auto sales had been weak.

Purchases of non-durable goods, meanwhile, rose 0.7 percent last month and spending on services rose 0.8 percent.

Disposable, or after-tax income held virtually even last month after rising 0.3 percent in March. After-tax income was held down by a higher-than-usual April surge in federal income tax payments that was partly attributed to the after-effects of the 1986 tax overhaul.

Gov. Clements may call special session

AUSTIN (AP) — With only four days left until the 1989 Legislature's regular session is history, lawmakers have again been warned that they will be called back if workers' compensation reform isn't enacted.

Gov. Bill Clements says he won't hesitate to call a special session if needed.

"The one thing that I have said for sure is that if we don't get a proper and acceptable workers' compensation bill, there will be a special session," the governor said Thursday.

Some Republican legislators said they had been discussing plans for a special session with the governor.

Clements told a news conference he saw the talks a little differently.

"I don't think I said we were making any plans. I was asking for recommended dates," he said.

The governor said he doesn't know whether an overtime session will be needed, but if one is called he said it likely would be "sometime after the 4th of July."

The House and Senate have passed vastly different versions of the legislation to reform the system of paying benefits to workers killed on the job.

Lawmakers — plus business, labor, trial lawyers and insurance lobbyists — have said those differences may be too great to resolve by Monday's midnight end of the 1989 regular session.

However, the governor was less clear about whether he would call such a session if the Legislature fails to pass a bill to fund AIDS treatment and education programs.

"No," he answered to a first question about an AIDS special session. "As far as I know it doesn't require a special session. They have had plenty of time and ample opportunity to come up with a bill."

Compromise leads toward continuance of ag department

AUSTIN (AP) — After months of wrangling, the Legislature is nearly finished with a bill to continue the Texas Department of Agriculture, and Gov. Bill Clements promises to sign it.

Clements agreed to a compromise plan Thursday, after lawmakers agreed to turn controversial Commissioner Jim Hightower's pesticide regulation powers over to a new board where he would have one of nine votes.

The deal pleased Hightower allies, who had feared Clements might veto the department out of existence. It angered Hightower opponents, who said they were disappointed with the governor's decision.

"We are very pleased that Gov. Clements agrees with us and four of every five Texans who want to retain our agriculture commissioner as an elected official," said Joe Ranking, president of the Texas Farmers Union.

"It does not address the inherent problem of TDA's existing structure. Under the existing structure, mainstream producers are virtually locked out of decisions that are important to agriculture," said a coalition that includes the Texas Farm Bureau.

Hightower, a two-term Democrat and self-described populist, angered chemical interests with tough new pesticide rules his department wrote and enforces.

Following Hightower's efforts to sell hormone-free beef to Europe earlier this year, the Farm Bureau called on the Legislature to abolish the elected agriculture commissioner's post and replace it with an appointee.

That political controversy peaked at the same time the Legislature was considering the Agriculture Department "sunset" bill, legislation that must be approved every 12 years to keep each state agency in business.

If the bill isn't passed — or is vetoed by Clements — the department would cease to exist on Sept. 1, 1990, lawmakers said.

But Clements said vetoing the department wouldn't have abolished the commissioner's post, since that was created by the Legislature with a separate law. The Farm Bureau and others need to understand that fact, he said.

"You can abolish the department, per se," Clements said. "There is no way that you can get rid of, in this case, Mr. Hightower."

Rep. Lena Guerrero, a one-time farm worker, said the pesticide board appeared to be the best deal Hightower could get.

"It's probably not the best way to set regulatory pesticide policy in this state, but it's a legislative agreement," the Austin Democrat said.

Rep. Rick Perry, D-Haskell, who led the drive to water down Hightower's power, said the plan is the best for all concerned.

"I've just got some problems with a single individual with total control over the pesticide regulation in this state. I just think the board's a lot better way to go," Perry said.

Hightower's press secretary, Andy Welch, said the commissioner would wait until the Legislature finishes with the bill before commenting.

Under the compromise, a new nine-member Agricultural Resources Protection Authority would set all policies and regulations on pesticide use in Texas. The board would coordinate efforts of all state agencies that rule on pesticide use.

The panel would be headed by the agriculture commissioner and include officials from universities and state agencies. The governor would appoint a consumer member and an agricultural producer.

It also would require that licensed pesticide applicators — private farmers or commercial applicators — make certain their employees "have a knowledge of each and every pesticide they work with," said Glenn Smith, an aide to Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who proposed the provision.

Perry insisted that even Hightower supporters should see advantages in an independent board.

Senate approves nearly 70 proposals as final weekend nears

AUSTIN (AP) — After a busy day pushing House bills to the governor's desk, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby told the Senate it was in good shape with the final weekend of the Legislature coming up.

The Senate acted on nearly 70 proposals Thursday, including final passage of bills that would promote foreign investment in Texas and limit the amount of money a small city can keep from traffic fines.

It also approved bills to create a health insurance pool for high-risk individuals and tentatively voted to tighten disclosure requirements in the Election Code.

Hobby said the "vast majority" of House legislation sent to the Senate had been approved or placed on a local calendar, where passage is routine.

On a 31-0 vote, the Senate sent to the governor a House bill that would authorize the Texas Department of Commerce to maintain regional foreign offices in Mexico, Europe and the Pacific Rim, and also would permit creation of satellite offices.

The Legislative Budget Board estimated the cost would be nearly $1.8 million in the fiscal year starting Sept. 1 and $1.56 million each year through fiscal 1994.

The Senate approved a bill to cap the amount a city of fewer than 5,000 may keep from traffic fines. Such cities could retain only 30 percent of all revenues collected by the city in the prior year, excluding federal funds and bond proceeds.

After the cap is reached, the city could keep only $1 of each fine collected. The bill is designed to control abuses of non-speeding charges by cities to raise money for city budgets.

Senators forwarded to the House on voice vote a Senate bill that would establish the Texas Health Insurance Risk Pool, which is patterned after similar pools in 15 other states. An estimated 2.8 million people in Texas do not have health insurance, which represents 17 percent of the total state population.

A Senate version of election law revisions would require the reporting of an acronym and what it stands for. It would require people who contribute more than $25,000 a year to report that fact to the secretary of state, and would require the disclosure of the occupation of any person who contributes more than $200.

Contributions to consultants would have to be identified with the type of good or service obtained.

The revisions were tentatively approved, with a final vote needed to return the measure to the House.

Senators voted to create an advisory committee to study the feasibility of providing state support for Bishop College in Dallas, which was closed in August because of financial problems.

The private college was created by ex-slaves in Marshall in 1881, and was moved to Dallas in 1961.

The resolution to create the 13-member citizen-legislator committee was sent to the House on voice vote.

In other action Thursday, the Senate approved and sent to the governor a bill that would make it a misdemeanor, punishable by up to 180 days in jail, to interfere with a law officer, fire fighter or emergency medical service provider while they are on duty.

Senators also sent to the House a resolution creating a commission to assist in developing a plan to preserve and mark the Old San Antonio Road, or Camino Real, which has existed for almost 300 years.

800 turtles put in gulf

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Scientists released 800 Kemp's Ridley sea turtles into the Gulf of Mexico off Padre Island as part of a continuing program to help the species survive.

Last year, about 1,500 turtles were released into the Gulf, 1,150 of which were Kemp's Ridleys, the most endangered of the world's oceangoing turtles. The rest were loggerheads and several rehabilitated turtles.

Strong winds made the expedition rough, said Tony Amos, research associate with the University of Texas Marine Science Institute in Port Aransas, which donates the use of its research ship "Longhorn" to release the turtles.

"We try to keep track of where they go. We watch them as they take off and try to get an idea, but it's difficult," Amos said.

To help, researchers released a number of "drift cards" with the turtles to determine where currents might carry them.

Marine biologists began raising Ridleys in Galveston in 1977 in an effort to stave off extinction of the species.

The world is theirs — they think

Off Beat

By Bear Mills

This is the time of year when high school seniors are absolutely intolerable. They have reached the apex, the ultimate, the finale. They are the king of the hill and darn proud of it.

For the rest of the free world, the only consolation in dealing with a whole class of egos the size of the state capitol is realizing that in a mere three months these world-beaters will again be at the bottom of the rung as college freshmen.

For me, high school graduation was the highest of the highs. I had paid my 12 years of dues (and don'ts) in public school and my diploma was proof I was ready to conquer all known civilizations.

Of course, just getting the diploma was something of a feat in itself. My best friend graduated Magna Cum Laude. I graduated Lawdy How Cum?

When I entered high school I was about as bright as a 15 watt bulb. My first semester I bought a $5 elevator pass the senior boys were selling as a "fund raiser." It only took me six months to click in on the fact that I attended a one-story school.

Compounding the problem of my not being very bright was the fact that I kept getting in trouble for things that weren't my fault.

"Mrs. Ivabeef, do you think it's fair that I should be punished for something I didn't do?" I asked my math teacher one day.

"Of course not, Bear."

"Good, 'cause I didn't do my homework."

This kind of open rapport is not the stuff endearing relationships are made of.

By my senior year I was asking deep questions about life that teachers were simply not prepared to deal with. Things like, if shameful (meaning full of shame) and shameless (meaning having no shame) are opposites, why are they both bad? No one seemed to have an answer.

I had to admit it to myself — I was too smart for public school. After all, I was graduating. The teachers would remain trapped in that place year after year after year.

However, the morning after graduation I was hit with a rude awakening. After 12 years of longing to be free from the constraints of those tyrants known as teachers, I suddenly missed school.

I was an adult now. I would be moving into my own place, making my own decisions, paying my own bills and buying my own toilet paper. There is nothing more startling than having to buy your own toilet paper for the very first time.

Graduation also slaps you in the face with the fact that the real world is only four short years of college away. Then comes a job, marriage, a mortgage, kids, grandkids, retirement and death.

My whole life suddenly seemed so short. I was in a severe state of depression.

I'm happy to report that by the fall, however, this condition had passed. I was a peon again, a college freshman, a know-nothing, about as dumb as a steer at an orgy.

It was a very welcome feeling. Being faced with the prospects of the real world is almost too much for any 18-year-old to handle. I needed the security of being a mere cog in a state university. If that doesn't bring back a feeling of immortality, nothing will.

And to think, all of the high school seniors in the free world are chomping at the bit to get graduation over with. If they only knew ...

School bond amendments adopted

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans would be able to vote on creating a $750 million state bond program to help school districts build classrooms under a measure approved by the House.

That proposed constitutional amendment, approved Thursday, goes back to the Senate for consideration of House changes.

Another proposed amendment approved by the House to provide for a $75 million college savings bond program will go on the November ballot.

But in another Thursday vote, the House narrowly rejected a proposed amendment to a local government investment bill that would have restricted investment of public funds in corporations that do business with the Republic of South Africa.

The provision tracked federal language on South African investments, said Rep. Larry Evans. The Houston Democrat said the House's refusal to adopt sent a bad message.

"The statement is that we don't intend to do as much about ending apartheid in South Africa as we claim we want to do," he said after the 66-69 vote.

Rep. Nolan "Buzz" Robnett said in arguing against the amendment that it would place an "undue burden" on investment managers for large state retirement funds.

"Keeping up with that stuff is an absolute nightmare," said Robnett, R-Lubbock. Evans said it would not create a management problem because it "does not require anything be done, or prohibit anything being done, that isn't already the case."

The classroom bond program, which returns to the Senate for consideration of House changes, would allow the state to issue bonds backed by the Permanent School Fund. The money would be loaned to districts for facilities and equipment.

Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, has said the plan would give property-poor school districts the chance to get a better interest rate and issuance cost for bonds. The measure, adopted 120-20 by the House Thursday after failing to muster enough votes for passage Tuesday, would be on the November ballot.

The proposed college savings bond program is meant to help Texans deal with increasing education costs, according to backers. It would allow $75 million in such bonds to be issued by the Higher Education Coordinating Board, with proceeds from the sale to be used for student loans.

An investor could buy the tax-free bonds in denominations of $1,000 or less. The investment return would be guaranteed by the state and would be free of federal income taxes.

Critics said the bonds would not provide a true incentive for investors, because the interest rates on state bonds are lower than those available on taxable investments. The proposal will go to voters in November.

In other action, the House:

- Adopted a proposed constitutional amendment providing the authority for issuing $500 million in additional water development bonds. The measure, which would be put before voters in November, returns to the Senate for consideration of a House change.
- Texas voters approved a constitutional amendment in 1985 authorizing $980 million in such bonds, and another in 1987 allowing an additional $400 million.
- Approved a bill continuing the Texas Education Agency until Sept. 1, 2001, returning the measure to the Senate for consideration of House amendments. Given tentative approval were sunset bills for the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board and State Property Tax Board.
- Tentatively approved a bill expanding the powers of the National Research Laboratory Commission to work with the U.S. Department of Energy to build and operate the superconducting super collider.
- Tentatively approved a bill that would create an education program for students who are pregnant or are parents.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Let them work out their own problems

One of the most shameful things one can observe is when a large private corporation grovels for government bailouts or subsidies. The latest corporate raid on private enterprise is a movement among some auto industry executives to impose socialized health care — they're infuriatingly vague on the details — on the nation. It was practiced in Italy during the 1920s and 1930s, when government, unions and big corporations colluded to destroy the liberties of the people. Predictably, the main proponent of today's scheme is Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca, who has been dubbed the Motor City Mussolini for his backing of government control of the economy. Ford has signed on with Chrysler, alas, while GM is steadfastly resisting the notion.

Iacocca also supports keeping the protectionist quotas on Japanese cars, even as he sells Mitsubishi imports with "Dodge" and "Plymouth" nameplates glued on. He also accepted $1 billion in government loans in the late 1970s, then balked when, after Chrysler recovered, the government wanted to cash in on the stock it received for these loans. All the while Iacocca has made himself the highest paid executive in auto industry history.

True, health care costs are rising. But a good part of the problem comes precisely from past applications of the government involvement Iacocca and others want to impose. Because government health care is "free" (really paid by taxpayers, of course), patients and doctors are not inclined to keep down costs. This wasteful increase in demand then drives up costs for the entire health care market, including private health plans. Costs for all health care have risen from $419 million in 1985 to $542 million in 1988. And the period of skyrocketing health costs, the past 30 years, coincides precisely with government's skyrocketing involvement in health care.

Chrysler's own health-care bill has risen from $432 million in 1985 to $702 million in 1988; Ford's from about $700 million to $1 billion; and GM's from about $2 billion to $3 billion. Much of the increase is due to the aging of the auto work force, many younger employees having been laid off in the last recession.

Yet the auto industry protesteth too much. Profits also have rocketed upward during this period, to a record combined profit of $11.2 billion in 1988. And during this time, the big three auto companies have had so much extra cash on hand they could buy out such large firms as Hughes Aerospace and Electronic Data Systems.

Any problems the auto industry has paying for its health bills should remain something to be worked out by management and labor. Government involvement would only make things worse.

Berry's World

Intentions aren't enough here

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — It used to be said of something simple that it was "just as easy as ABC," but the ABC bill now being pushed to a vote in the Senate is anything but simple. This is the Kennedy-Dodd "Act for Better Child Care Services." It is a monstrosity.

The only thing good about this bill is the intention of its sponsors. They want to help millions of low-income and middle-income families who need day care for their children. The need for such services is clear, and the need is growing as more women enter the work force.

When that has been said, the best has been said. The bill would create a new entitlement program of gargantuan proportions. In Senate hearings it was estimated that 8 million children (defined as those under 18 years of age) would be eligible for the vouchers.

Only 6 percent of them might be aided under this bill. The average cost for the kind of day care envisioned under this program is $3,000 per child per year. If all the eligible children were to receive subsidized aid, eventually the annual outlay would come to more than $50 billion.

For starters, this bill would authorize a mere $2.5 billion, plus another $100 million toward subsidizing liability insurance. The federal budget for 1990 now projects a deficit of $100 billion. Where is the money coming from to finance this grandiose plan?

If cost were the only objection, some budgetary trickery probably could be devised to make the thing look plausible. Cost is the least of the objections. This act would thrust the heavy hand of "minimum federal standards" into an area that ought to be entrusted to the states. The old rock-solid principle of federalism would be further eroded.

At present some encouraging trends are developing in the private sector, as large employers provide their own day care facilities for the children of employees. A massive program of federal aid would deter these efforts just as they are getting under way.

The ABC bill holds the prospect of an administrative nightmare. Vapors of bureaucracy seep from every page. Within the Department of Health and Human Services a whole new division would be created, to be headed by an administrator of child care.

An unwieldy National Advisory Committee on Minimum Child Care Standards would set to work at once in fixing "group size limits" and "maximum appropriate child-staff ratios." A national standard would be fixed for "qualifications and background of child care personnel." There would be "health and safety requirements for children and caregivers." Great quantities of data would be gathered on "race, sex, enthic origin, handicapping condition and family income."

Every state would be required to create its own advisory commission. You might suppose that the states could be trusted to set up appropriate bodies, but no. The ABC bill spells out exactly how the state commissions must be constituted — not fewer than 21 members nor more than 30, including one pediatrician, one person in business, one person in organized labor, one representative of fire marshals and "at least one early child development expert."

The general idea is that each state would be allotted an appropriate share of the federal appropriation. Persons wishing to receive child care assistance would apply for a certificate to be used at an eligible day care facility. The operator of the facility then would turn in the certificate for reimbursement by the state. Two-parent families could not qualify unless both parents were working.

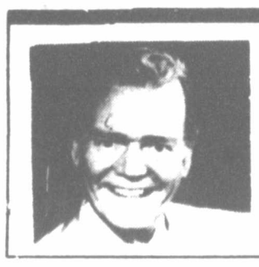

Roughly one-third of all day care now is provided through churches. These church facilities would be eligible for certification, but only if every trace of sectarianism were obliterated.

Said the Senate committee: "An entity receiving any form of financial assistance under this act shall not include any sectarian activities, worship or instruction in providing child care services. Section 19(a) embodies the committee's intent that all aspects of child care services ... be completely non-sectarian in nature and content." So much for grace at meals.

Given the something-for-nothing mentality that pervades so much of the nation, the sad prospect is that ABC will pass. A few conservatives, such as Orrin Hatch of Utah, reluctantly support the measure. Such moderate Republicans as Mancy Kassebaum of Kansas oppose it. It will be up to them to sustain a presidential veto when the time comes.

Health care needs applause

Paul Harvey

You have been misled. Most of the media have been viewing our nation's health care facilities through the wrong end of the telescope.

In headlines, our hospitals appear bloated, inefficient and dying.

Headline: "While hospital costs have remained somewhat stable, total health care costs in the United States increase faster than inflation."

Headline: "Federal spending for health care fastest growing budget item; increased 20 percent in two years."

Headline: "Megatrend tracker predicts 2,000 hospitals will be closed or absorbed."

Headline: "Nurse shortage may total 50,000 in 10 years."

Headline: "Medicare payments outpaced by provider costs"

Americans, as our nation launches National Hospital Week, how about balancing the books with at least a one-week examination of the sunshine side of the ledger?

Our nation's "wellsprings" are still providing the best health care for the most people of anywhere on planet Earth.

Our improved health care is the major factor adding 16 weeks to the average American's life span every 24 months.

This year, 1989, one in every seven of us will go to bed in a hospital. One in three of us will need some hospital's emergency facilities. Nine of 10 of us will require some kind of hospital outpatient treatment.

That is one helluva load!

To try to keep up with our demands, these "wellsprings" will have to hire another 3.2 million people these next 10 years, according to Labor Department estimates.

All the vast burgeoning computer and data-processing industry will add maybe 600,000 jobs.

And the miraculous machines that modern medicine requires are astronomically costly. Just one potentially life-saving diagnostic tool, an MRI machine, purchased and installed, costs more than $3 million. The newest PET machine, $5½ million.

You try to run a hotel with sick people in every room and see how much it costs, yet Americans today pay more for many first-class private hotel rooms than for a comparable hospital room.

Let's get our perspective back in focus.

Riverside Methodist Hospital, Columbus, Ohio, has 853 beds; the largest private general medical center in the state.

Yet its president and CEO, Eric Chapman, makes the time to work alongside his laundry crew and his kitchen crew and his X-ray technicians. Periodically he sheds his necktie and dons denim coveralls and pitches in. Why? Because patient service is his No. 1 priority and the best way to make it the No. 1 priority of everybody in the hospital is by example.

And there are a lot of Eric Chapmans out there diligently working to make a difference. And there are 3/6 million professionals following them. And there are 11 million volunteers supporting them.

A selfless army of dedicated health-caring people ready to rescue you and me whenever we holler for help.

We must learn never to fear the truth

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

NBC Television inadvertently got its tail caught in a crack recently when it broadcast a documentary exploring why blacks dominate certain sports, including baseball and basketball. No one, I am sure, will accuse NBC of consciously promoting racist opinions. But it was condemned for reinforcing a "racist assumption" anyway because two academic researchers interviewed on the program were allowed to present what they claimed was proof that physical differences between whites and blacks partially explain the mystery.

Perhaps NBC was foolhardy even to address the question, since the subject of differences between the races is probably the tenderest in all of American society. But we will never solve our problems unless we are allowed to discuss them calmly and rationally, and I hope the patience of my readers will extend to my own attempt to shed a little light on this matter.

No doubt NBC assumed that there could be no offense to blacks in the proposition that they are superior to whites in certain respects. But that overlooks the fact that, if blacks are conceded to be innately superior to whites in certain particulars, it might equally well be argued that they are innately inferior to whites in other particulars. And that contention is, of course, among other things, one of the key tenets of racism.

The result is that foes of racism have often preferred to argue that there is no inherent difference between the races of mankind in regard to athletic ability (or, by extension, in any other regard). All differences — and there manifestly are differences — must instead be attributed almost entirely to environmental factors.

That was the position taken by Richard E. Lapchick in an article published on the op-ed page of The New York Times in reply to the NBC documentary.

Lapchick (who is director of Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society) rightly points out that over the years commentators have taken wildly inconsistent positions with respect to the supposed superiority of various groups at various sports. In 1933, Ed Sullivan wrote that Jews "take naturally" to the game of basketball because they are willing to "take chances." In 1971, Sports Illustrated speculated that "perhaps because of a physical inheritance, no black has ever been a swimming champion" — a theory that went up in smoke at the Seoul Olympics last summer, when a black man from Suriname won a gold medal in swimming.

Lapchick argues that blacks are simply best in those relatively few fields — notably sports and music — where they have been allowed to perform and excel. "For me," he writes, "science has still proved little" concerning the alleged genetic superiority of blacks as athletes. He adds, "Culture, class and environment" — all three of which boil down to environment — "still tell us the most."

Lapchick may be right, but I cannot escape the uneasy feeling that he is heading for a fall, and in the process seriously misleading the very blacks he seeks to protect. There is simply no gainsaying the fact that there are major genetic (or inherent, or innate) differences between the races of mankind: in skin color, to take only the most obvious example. And if so, is it likely that these differences have no measurable consequences whatever?

"One wonders," Lapchick remarks, "about the children of Asian immigrants who are outperforming white students in the classroom. Why are no scientists busy trying to prove the innate intellectual superiority of Asians?" I'm not sure scientists ought to be "busy trying to prove" (as distinguished from test) any particular thesis, but that one looks pretty convincing to me.

The point is that we must never fear the truth. This is God's world, and he is on the side of his creatures.

Bush heads to NATO summit, may reveal troops reduction

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, saying the Western alliance faces "new challenges and unparalleled opportunities," set out early today on a four-nation European trip highlighted by a potentially contentious NATO summit.

With the North Atlantic Treaty Organization grappling over a major dispute about nuclear weapons policy, the Washington Times reported that Bush planned to use the summit as the stage for announcing a reduction of up to 10 percent in U.S. troop strength in Europe, "as many as 34,000 troops."

White House officials declined immediate comment. "Anything we have to say, we'll say in Europe," said spokesman Bill Harlow.

The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sam Nunn, told CBS News that a 10 percent reduction "is the probable amount of reduction that would occur if the Soviet Union accepted the NATO proposal on conventional arms control which is now tabled."

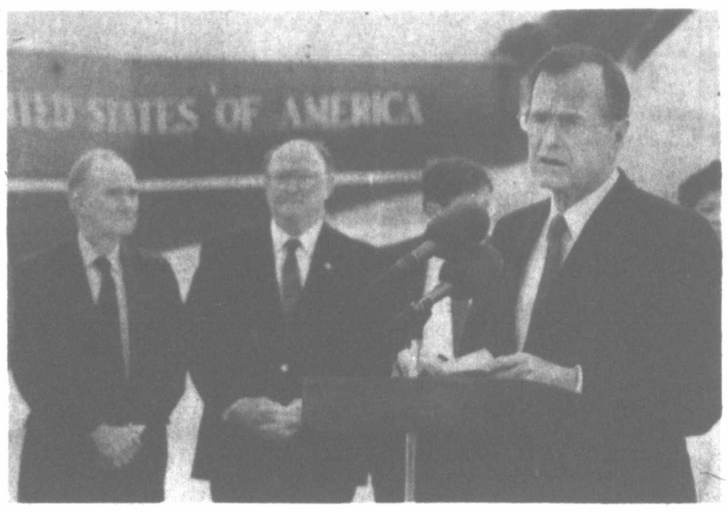

A senior NATO official, asked by reporters in Brussels about the report, said "our delegations here on the spot have not been apprised of this." He spoke on condition of anonymity.

In his departure remarks, Bush provided no hint of a significant American counter to recent Soviet arms proposals. He said, "The importance of the alliance and its democratic underpinnings is the message I now take to Europe."

At Andrews Air Force Base, he said, "NATO has been a success by any measure but success breeds its own challenges. Today, dramatic changes are taking place in Europe, East and West. For us, those changes bring new challenges and unparalleled opportunities."

Bush expressed hopes to see a Europe "that is truly free, united and at peace" and repeated his desire to move beyond the Cold War policy of containment "to integrate the Soviet Union into the community of nations."

Bush added: "We welcome the political and economic liberalization that has taken place so far in the Soviet Union and in some countries of Eastern Europe. We watch hoping that more changes will follow."

Following the early-morning departure ceremony at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, Bush was flying to Rome for a two-night stay and talks with Pope John Paul II as well as with Italian leaders.

Manfred Woerner, who is NATO's chief executive, said failure to settle a dispute over nuclear weapons would be "a rather unfortunate situation but it would not be a crisis or a catastrophe."

Amid growing doubts in Washington that a settlement was near, Woerner said in Brussels he would like the allies to reach an agreement "and avoid the impression of being split in an important matter."

Setting the stage for the NATO meeting, Bush will deliver a speech on Sunday at an American cemetery in Nettuno, on Italy's seacoast 39 miles south of the capital.

On Sunday, the president will arrive in Brussels where leaders of the 16-nation alliance will begin two days of formal talks on Monday. From Brussels, Bush will go to West Germany and Britain, stopping in each country for two nights.

The summit, called to mark NATO's 40th anniversary and its success in keeping the peace in Europe, was thrown off track in advance by a dispute over short-range nuclear missiles in central Europe.

The chief players in the argument are West Germany, which is demanding East-West negotiations soon to curb the missiles, and the United States and Britain, which oppose such talks as long as the Soviet Union maintains a major advantage in ground troops, tanks and other conventional weapons.

The missiles, with a range of less than 300 miles, are largely deployed in West Germany and would be used there in the case of war.

The Bonn-Washington dispute is aggravated by a tide of disarmament sentiment in West Germany, fanned by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's promises to reduce conventional and nuclear forces.

Explosion strikes train disaster area

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A gasoline pipeline exploded and killed three people just days after residents were assured it had not been damaged by a runaway train that plowed through the same neighborhood two weeks ago.

"It looks like a bomb went off over Duffy Street," City Attorney James Penman said after the Thursday morning blast that sent flames 300 feet skyward and produced heat so intense that pets and corn stalks were singed two blocks away.

Thirty-one people were injured in the explosion that also destroyed 10 homes and 18 cars. About 300 people were ordered to leave their homes for the night.

"It's like a nightmare," said Delores Jones, whose house was destroyed by the fire. "I haven't slept since the train wreck. It's come back to haunt me."

The May 12 train wreck leveled a row of homes and killed four people.

The National Transportation Safety Board is investigating the explosion, but Calnev Pipeline Co. manager Ken Seal said there was a "very good possibility" the company's 14-inch pipeline was damaged by the train accident.

The city and an attorney for more than 100 residents announced plans to file lawsuits against the Las Vegas company. The residents also plan to sue the city and the rail line, Southern Pacific.

"We did not feel in the first place they should have started up that railroad as quickly as they did. And we particularly tried to get the pipeline shut down. Now look what happened," said residents' attorney James H. Davis, who was hired after the train wreck.

The neighborhood was evacuated for several days after the train jumped the track because of fears the pipeline might have been weakened. The it was assured the line was safe when it reopened several days ago, Penman said.

The body of a woman killed in the blast was found in the back yard of a home, pinned to a chain-link fence. The other two fatalities, an adult and child, were found next door.

Japan named on trade violators list

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say they hope immediate trade talks can open markets in Japan, Brazil and India and avert any backlash in those countries over being named to the administration's list of top trade violators.

"This exercise is not intended to be offensive," U.S. Trade Representative Carla A. Hills told a news conference Thursday night as she announced the administration is targeting those countries for priority action under the 1988 trade law. "I hope there is no backlash."

The 1988 Omnibus Trade Act requires the administration to issue what amounts to a hit list that names the countries whose trade barriers are most harmful to American producers. The government then has 18 months to negotiate away the barriers.

Failure of the talks could lead for tariffs of up to 100 percent on selected exports from the offending countries.

While Hills expressed hope the action would not generate bitterness, Japanese Ambassador Nobuo Matsunaga issued a statement calling the decision to include his country "extremely regrettable."

Hills also announced the United States would be watching closely 25 countries suspected of failing to protect U.S. copyrights and patents and said the Bush administration would reveal the status of the eight most flagrant ones in November.

The Japanese lobbied in recent weeks to stay off the list of top trade violators. They were less successful, however, than the Koreans, who made a number of trade concessions in recent days and did manage to avoid inclusion.

Japan was cited for its refusal to buy U.S. supercomputers and satellites as well as its barriers to purchase of U.S. wood products. The United States ran a trade deficit of $52 billion last year with Japan, or 44 percent of the $119.8 billion U.S. trade imbalance.

India was cited for barriers that bar foreign investment and the closing of its insurance market to foreign companies. The administration cited Brazil for quotas on imports and licensing restrictions.

Besides citing Japan, Brazil and India for flagrant trade barriers, the administration placed eight countries on a "priority watch list" of nations that have failed to protect U.S. copyrights and patents. It declined, however, to target any countries for priority action on that issue.

Countries named to the priority watch list for patents and copyrights were Brazil, India, Korea, Mexico, China, Saudi Arabia, Taiwan and Thailand.

President Bush also has directed Cabinet officials to open separate negotiations with the Japanese on eliminating "structural impediments" to sales of U.S. goods within their economy. The impediments range from pricing mechanisms to bid rigging.

On Capitol Hill, Senate sponsors of the trade law reacted favorably to the administration's action.

"I expect we'll hear howls of outrage from both sides on this, claims the action was either rash or timid," Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said in a statement.

Bentsen called the move "only a first step but an important one in establishing an effective trade policy. ... We've let the world know where our priorities lie when it comes to opening markets."

Liberal leaders placed in custody in China's power struggle

By DAN BIERS
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang was placed under house arrest and stripped of his post as conservatives began a purge of liberals to gain control of the deeply fractured government, sources said today.

Zhao lost power in a bitter fight with conservative Premier Li Peng, the Chinese and diplomatic sources said. Peng last week ordered a crackdown on students, who are occupying Tiananmen Square to press demands for a freer society and cleaner government.

Officials who have worked under Zhao to chart political and economic reforms will face disciplinary action with some losing their jobs, the sources said. Among those reported in trouble were the party's propaganda chief Hu Qili and Vice Premier Tian Jiyun.

The reports were not officially confirmed.

Zhao has been a leading proponent of market-oriented economic reforms championed by 84-year-old senior leader Deng Xiaoping, but the two differed over political change. Zhao has expressed clear sympathy with the student protesters' goals.

Deng ally President Yang Shangkun told top officials Thursday that Zhao's actions "had a very bad effect" on the nation, a government source said.

Millions of Chinese throughout the nation have taken up the students' cause, with demonstrations erupting in dozens of cities demanding Li and Deng step down.

Chinese and diplomatic sources said Zhao was under house arrest. A document circulated today to county- and district-level party officials said Zhao was no longer head of the party, according to a diplomat who has proved reliable in the past.

No successor was named in the document.

Sources said conservatives accused Zhao of heading an anti-party clique, splitting the party, instigating disturbances, revealing party secrets, corruption and taking credit for Deng's achievements during the past decade of economic reform.

Two sources said National People's Congress Chairman Wan Li was under detention in Shanghai, and one source said a member of the party's decision- making Politburo was also under house arrest.

The reports could not be officially confirmed and were not the first time top leaders were said to be in trouble during the power struggle. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Thursday that Zhao retained his post.

But the official media has indicated the conservatives at this point are winning the behind-the-scenes battle for power.

Li appeared on nationwide television Thursday for the first time in six days and defended his martial law decree. Zhao has not appeared in public since May 19.

Yang, speaking to Politburo members, retired revolutionary leaders and Beijing delegates of the national legislature, said the troops eventually would assume control of the city's streets, the Chinese source said.

But the 81-year-old president said the army would not move immediately "in order not to worsen the situation."

Two sources said Wan Li was under detention in Shanghai after being prevented from returning to Beijing on Thursday. The official Chinese press said he was staying in the nation's largest city for "medical treatment."

Maverick nominated to Supreme Soviet

MOSCOW (AP) — The first competitively elected Soviet congress today nominated maverick Boris N. Yeltsin and several prominent reformers to be representatives in a smaller, full-time lawmaking body.

The moves came in the second day of debate in the 2,250-member Congress of People's Deputies, which itself is the latest step in the nation's experiment with democratic reform.

Only one member of the ruling Communist Party Politburo appeared on a congressional list of nominees for the smaller legislature, the Supreme Soviet, assuring an overhaul of its traditional makeup.

The congress, in the first day of its inaugural session, Thursday reaffirmed its predecessor's choice of Mikhail S. Gorbachev as president. He ran unopposed.

Gorbachev's selection to a five-year term came in televised proceedings that showed unprecedented debate in Soviet government.

Yeltsin withdrew his name when it was submitted for the presidency, but he appeared on a list disclosed today of candidates for the new 542-seat Supreme Soviet, which under Gorbachev's overhaul of the political system is make the nation's laws.

Yeltsin's election was not assured, however. He is among 12 deputies nominated by a caucus of the Russian federation, the country's largest constituent republic, for their 11 seats.

Yeltsin, once a rising star among Gorbachev's key aides, was fired for criticizing the slow pace of reform, then staged a dramatic comeback by winning a landslide victory to the new Congress in March.

A number of other progressive Moscow deputies faced stiffer competition for a limited number of seats. The Moscow caucus nominated all 55 of its members and Congress must trim the list to 29 in a complicated ballot process.

Among those nominees were some of the nation's best-known progressives, including historian Roy Medvedev, economist Gavril Popov and agriculture reform advocate Yuri Chernichenko.

Vitaly I. Vorotnikov, chairman of the Russian federation's Council of Ministers, was the only member of the Communist Party's ruling Politburo on the list, indicating the Supreme Soviet will be led by a new group of leaders.

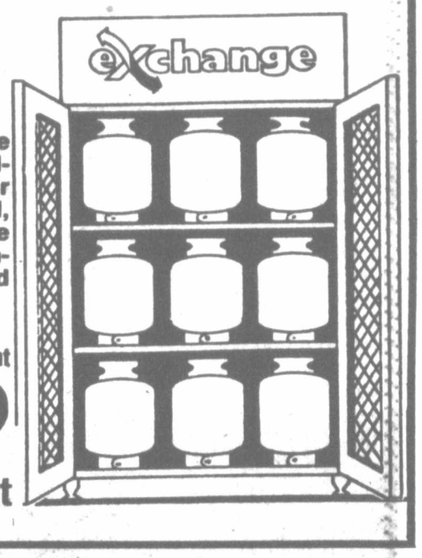

On Thursday, after winning election as president from more than 95 percent of the congress, Gorbachev pledged "to use these new opportunities and duties to do all that is possible for moving forward our great cause of perestroika in the interests of renewal of our society, development and strengthening of glasnost, democracy, improving the life and position of people in our society."

These naked steel poles with their whining copper wires are a symbol of tingling surging power; power which can lighten work and light cities, run a factory or illuminate a book. Power carried by these wires transforms a nation and makes possible ways of life that could not happen without it.

The Bible repeatedly speaks of the power of God released in human life making it new and vibrant. We all want the power of new life, but how do we get it? Well, to get power from the electric wires it is necessary to be attached to them, literally to become a part of them and share their pulsating singing life. It is like that with God, too. To have life from Him one must trust Him enough to become attached to Him, dependent upon Him, obedient to Him, sharing His way of life in love, and sharing the community of love which is His Church.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: And we know that in all things God works for the good of those who love him, who have been called according to his purpose. (Romans 8:28 NIV)

I want you to know an ongoing miracle is happening at my house!

Remember the Bible story about Jesus feeding more than five thousand people with two small fish and five small loaves of bread and had twelve basketsful of food left over? Well, at my house, nothing profitable happens; however, the dirty laundry does miraculously multiply. For every load of wash I do, five new loads appear, and I always have dirty clothes left over. It never ends!

God works in mysterious ways His wonders to perform. One poor, deprived daughter swears her clothes aren't varied enough, so she borrows. Thus, I'm blessed each wash day with dirty clothes I've never seen before.

Another daughter apparently collects ragged tee shirts from boyfriends. Goody, goody! More classy clothes for me to wash.

Worry, worry, worry! Watch the worries pile higher and higher. Watch the worries linger and perpetuate themselves. Watch new, previously unperceived worries appear. Watch us hurry to worry one thing through so we can get on to the other worries awaiting us.

Like washing dirty laundry, the more we worry, the more worrying there is to do. Our worry-work is never done!

However, we Christians have the option of early retirement from this futile drain on our time, energy and health.

All we have to do is faith-step down from our self-appointed effort to manipulate circumstances (which are beyond our control and wisdom anyway) and let God do His job as only He can do.

For the rest of our lives we can live on the unlimited income of soul serenity!

CHEVY CHASE, Md. (AP) — Church leaders from South Korea and communist North Korea worshipped, discussed and sang together in a rare gathering contemplating reunion of their divided country.

In the first visit to the United States since Korea was divided in 1945 at the end of World War II, four North Korean Christians met with South Korean church representatives, along with about 100 U.S. church leaders.

The National Council of Churches sponsored the conference.

The council launched an ecumenical campaign to educate U.S. church members about continuing human costs of a divided Korea, including separation of families and a devastating war in which 4 million died.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Two independent, evangelical organizations in the Presbyterian Church (USA) have joined in a new broad-based organization called "Presbyterians for Renewal."

A conference here of nearly 1,000 Presbyterian evangelicals formed the new group from the former Presbyterians for Biblical Concerns and Covenant Fellowship of Presbyterians.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The moderate candidate for the Southern Baptist Convention presidency, the Rev. Daniel Vestal of Atlanta, says he will try to dilute the power of the office if he is elected.

Fundamentalists have won the presidency over the last 10 years and used the presidential appointive power to name trustees controlling denomination agencies.

Vestal is to oppose the fundamentalist-backed incumbent president, the Rev. Jerry Vines of Jacksonville, Fla., when the Southern Baptists meet June 13-15 in Las Vegas, Nev.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Television journalist Bill Moyers says he sees evidence of a powerful spiritual stirring in the world that makes religion the key "story of the next 50 years."

He told the annual convention of the Religious Public Relations Council that the search for faith, meaning and values represents a major challenge to the news media.

Citing a record response to a series he did on the Power of Myth, he said he now is focusing more on spiritual issues than on politics or international affairs.

"It's the biggest story of the millennium," he said.

Baptist Men retirees building churches

By TERESA RIECHER
Ennis Daily News

ROCKETT, Texas (AP) — For room to park their motor homes and one meal a day, the Texas Baptist Men are building a new church in Rockett.

"Everybody pays his own expenses," says founder and coordinator, Olen Miles.

"As a boy, I used to see it happen in the country," he said. "If a farmer got sick, people would gather his crops; and if a barn burned, they built it back."

Miles, 83, said that the group has about 250 church projects on its waiting list.

According to Miles, all the work is voluntary. 'I just tell them to go where the Lord sends them,' said Miles.

"When we started out, we had 12 trailers and built three churches a year," he said. "Now we build about three churches per month."

The organization, now in its 11th year, consists of one group that builds Baptist camps and three groups that build churches.

The congregation that wants the church has to pour the slab, "then we work from the slab up," said Miles.

According to Miles, the 34 couples working on the Rockett church are all retired. Not many of them were in construction work prior to retiring.

Those who were serve as "lead men" on the project, Miles said.

"We have a lead plumber, a lead electrician and a lead carpenter," Miles said. "The lead electrician is from New Mexico."

Olen's wife, Morene, 81, said that when a project comes up, Miles sends out a letter asking for help.

"He's never failed to have enough yet," she said. "We had a man from Arkansas who stayed with our group for two years to learn how to do these things, and after he went back to Arkansas he got organized and wrote us that he has built three churches this year."

Pascal Harris, a retiree from Lake Palestine, has been with the group for three years. He has helped build church in Arkansas, Minnesota, Texas and returned six weeks ago from Germany where he spent 25 days helping build the new Stuttgart International Baptist Church.

As to why he's not taking life easy in his retirement, Harris said that's not what he wants to do.

"That's not what most of these men want," Harris said. "We're all Christian men who want to serve the Lord."

According to Miles, all the work is voluntary.

"I just tell them to go where the Lord sends them," said Miles.

Rain has been a continuing hindrance to the project in Rockett.

"Usually, we work on Saturday until noon, but because it rained Friday, we're working all day," Miles said.

Ordinarily, the group finishes a project in two weeks, but "this will go over into the third week," Miles said.

The Texas Baptist Men have become familiar across the state for its relief work following natural disasters such as tornadoes.

"We built 23 homes and a church in Saragosa following the tornado there," he said.

Miles said the homes built in Saragosa were a special emergency and not something the organization normally does.

The organization also rebuilt two wrecked churches in Paris after a 1982 tornado and one in nearby Emberson a year earlier.

Wives of the group's members visit nursing homes, home bound people, invite citizens to revivals, and handle domestic chores.

Miles said the women don't have a clothes dryer at the campsite in Rockett, so they hang clothes on the line "hoping the Lord will dry them."

The new church, sponsored by the First Baptist Church of Waxahachie, is approximately 6,700 square feet, according to pastor Wayne Gray.

The church negotiated for the property — five acres at $6,000 an acre — then got a loan from the Ellis County Baptist Association of $10,000 with no interest. Another $250,000 was borrowed from the Baptist Loan Association. The foundation was poured in mid-April.

'We had a man from Arkansas who stayed with our group for two years to learn how to do these things, and after he went back to Arkansas he got organized and wrote us that he has built three churches this year.'

The congregation has been holding services in a mobile home on the construction site for nearly two years, Gray said.

"So far, we have 33 adults and 70 enrolled in Sunday school," Gray said.

The new church should be finished by August 1.

Gray said that nearby Baptist churches in Red Oak and Palmer had reached 75 to 85 percent of their expected capacity.

"What you have to understand about church growth is that churches tend to become fat and happy," Gray said. "New churches tend to be more aggressive."

Gospel missions serving widened range of needs for the homeless

By SANDRA WALEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Gospel rescue missions, long a champion in the inner city for the homeless, are responding to a whole new range of needs that were practically unthinkable even a decade ago.

Expansion in the role of these downtown missions was highlighted at the recent annual convention of representatives of about 300 such missions in cities across the country.

It long has been a stereotype that they mostly serve older alcoholics and drug abusers. However, young adults, women and children are just as likely to seek help these days.

That has put a growing load on rescue missions to meet needs not met by state or other agencies.

"In the last 10 to 15 years, things have changed drastically," said the Rev. Stephen Burger, president of the International Union Of Gospel Missions. "We've been called on to do things we hadn't done before."

A look at some of the issues raised at the IUGM's 76th annual conference here earlier this month tells part of the story: AIDS, children's nutrition, unschooled minors, battered women, drugs.

It used to be almost unheard of to have to worry about children in the missions, Burger commented at the close of the five-day conference. But women and children now are the fastest growing proportion of those served, now amounting to about 40 percent.

Burger, nephew of retired Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger, in August will become executive director of the nonprofit Protestant organization which oversees some 300 rescue missions in the United States and Canada.

He says there has been a vast upheaval in the social fabric of this country. "Today there are millions of homeless in America — a population that continues to grow and become more diverse," he says.

No city has been left untouched by the homeless problem, he notes, suggesting a look at the shuttered up steel-mill towns of Pennsylvania, or a place like Astoria, Ore. (population 15,000).

"I thought of that as a picturebook place and here they were with the fishing industry falling apart, the lumber industry falling apart, alcoholism on the rise. And all of a sudden," recalls Burger, "we have a homeless problem."

Astoria is one of a number of cities across the country which have turned to the IUGM in setting up programs for the homeless and what Burger calls the "near-homeless," or those people whose whole condition is unstable and regularly move in and out of the system.

He says there is agreement on causes of the homeless crisis: the disintegration of the family, changing values, drug and alcohol abuse, a changing economy.

What is not so clear are what the solutions will be.

But there is reason to hope, Burger says. "The church has become awakened to the possibilities."

He says there are more volunteers, and churches which over the years have tended to move away from the inner city are getting more involved. He says one key is to persuade people to pitch in.

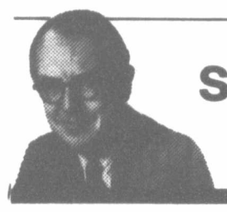

"Part of the problem is we've challenged but we haven't told them what to do. You have to provide the vehicle to get people downtown," a formidable task, Burger says, when there are already so many demands on people's daily lives.

Another key, he adds, is creating innovative programs to help those trying to rebuild shattered lives.

"Even those of us in this work can get a fortress mentality ... and not see the new needs — the mentally ill, the Hispanics, the folks being dumped out of hospitals, the elderly being kicked out of homes being turned into condos," Burger says.

"Government can provide funding, but it can't get involved with people on a personal level to help overcome years of abuse, alcoholism. ..."

Burger says the thinking now must be: "How do you get that person to see, with God's help, what they can do" as well as "What are you doing to keep people out of the mission."

Saints and Sinners

George Plagenz

Do you say prayers for plants?

This summer in my garden I will have pole beans, tomatoes, cucumbers and summer squash.

It won't be a very big garden but it always produces a bountiful crop — probably because I pray for my vegetables.

I have no scientific evidence that prayer makes beans grow taller and tomatoes grow redder. I can tell you a few stories, however, that might make a believer out of you.

Fifteen years ago the giant catalpa tree in our front yard appeared to be dying. Most of the leaves were dry and brown. I called the tree surgeon who determined after an examination that it was a terminal case. He told me what he would charge to cut the tree down.

I had recently finished reading a book, "The Power of Prayer on Plants," by a Presbyterian minister, Rev. Franklin Loehr. In it he told of a prayer-for-plants experiment conducted by the Religious Research Foundation which he headed.

Each member of a Sunday afternoon prayer circle took a bottle of spring water, prayed over it and passed it on to the next person. When the bottle had gone the rounds, the water was given a closing group prayer.

Then it was poured into a pan in which eight kernels of corn had been planted. Into another pan in which eight kernels of corn had been planted, unprayed-for water was poured.

Two Sundays later the members of the prayer group saw the result. Seven corn seedlings had sprouted in the pan with the prayed-for water, only three seedlings had come up in the other pan.

It was only one of 700 controlled experiments using 27,000 seeds conducted by Loehr's research group. By this time Loehr was convinced that prayer on plants works.

I decided to do a test of my own on my dying tree. I would go out in the early morning when I could be fairly certain no neighbors were watching and I would talk to my tree. I told it how grateful we were for the shade and beauty it provided for us and how we would miss it if it were cut down.

Well, I'm not saying I believe that talking to a dying tree can bring it to life. And I'm not saying I don't believe. All I am saying is that catalpa tree in my former yard is as healthy today as a tree can be. I sometimes take skeptics there to see for themselves.

Loehr did not carry on his research in order to grow bigger and better plants. The studies were intended to show that "prayer is not just a state of mind but an objective energy capable of producing visible results."

Cleve Backster is another with an amazing story to tell. A polygraph expert and former CIA employee, Backster once attached a polygraph (lie detector) to a philodendron plant in his Manhattan office. He wanted to see whether plants experience the same reaction to stress as humans.

He was about to pull a match out of his pocket to burn one of the plant's leaves when there was a dramatic upward swing of the polygraph needle. Backster hadn't moved or touched the plant. His conclusion was that he had frightened the plant with his decision to burn it. The leaf, responding to the impact of a threatening thought, exhibited apparent human emotional responses.

During another experiment, when live shrimp were dumped into boiling water three doors down the hall, the recording needle on the polygraph attached to a plant in Backster's office leaped frantically.

Backster considered this to be evidence of the interconnectedness of all life and the harmony between all living cells.

Texan searches for Israelite treasure

QUMRAN, Israel (AP)- For 21 years, Texan Vendyl Jones has been using the Dead Sea Scrolls like a treasure map to search surrounding desert caves for riches of the Jewish Temple buried by the ancient Israelites.

Among the lost artifacts Jones hopes to recover are the "Ashes of the Red Heifer." These, according to the Old Testament (Numbers 19) were derived from burning a rare, solid-red cow and using the ashes for purification rites by the ancient Israelite priests.

Many Orthodox Jews and Christian fundamentalists believe that finding the ashes would be a step toward fulfilling the biblical prophesy of rebuilding the Jewish temple on the Temple Mount, currently the site of the Moslem holy shrines known as the Dome of the Rock and Al Aqsa.

"The ashes are the future. This will allow the establishment of the third temple," said Jones, 58, a former Southern Baptist minister from Arlington, Tex.

Rabbi Menachem Burstein, one of a small number of rabbis trained to use the ashes if they are recovered, said the ancient relics would be used to purify Jews so they could enter the Temple Mount without defiling it.

"If it's clear the ashes are authentic, it can help us prepare for building the new temple," he said. "For nearly 2,000 years there haven't been any ashes."

However, any attempt to restore a Jewish temple on the site would be certain to stir tensions throughout the Moslem world.

According to the so-called Copper Scroll, the Ashes of the Red Heifer were buried in the first century A.D. along with other temple treasures by the mystical Essenes sect, who hid the Dead Sea Scrolls in the same desert caves to avoid plundering by the advancing Romans.

The Copper Scroll is one of the Dead Sea Scrolls written by the ancient Essenes and discovered in a cave in Qumran in 1952.

Among the Temple treasures it says were buried with the Ashes of the Red Heifer were gold, silver, the vestments of the high priests, the balsam oil used to annoint the Israelite kings and the original Israelite tabernacle built by Moses and Aaron.

By carefully deciphering the document, etched in Hebrew on three pieces of copper measuring nearly eight feet in length, Jones believes he has been able to locate the cave where the Temple treasures are buried.

But locating the cave among the thousands that dot Qumran was a formidable task. Jones walked for miles guided by aerial photographs before he finally found a dome-shaped hill rising above a wadi, or dry riverbed.

Study: Early menopause could signal body is aging faster

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman's age at natural menopause may be an indicator of her body's aging rate and general health, according to a study that suggests women reaching menopause before age 45 may tend to die earlier.

Early natural menopause may signal that the body is aging faster than normal, said co-author David Snowdon of the University of Minnesota.

He and colleagues from the university and Loma Linda University in California presented the work in June's American Journal of Public Health.

Other scientists called the work interesting, but cautioned that its conclusions are limited because of the study's methods.

Menopause, when a woman permanently stops menstruating, generally occurs around age 50.

The study was conducted on 5,287 white Seventh-day Adventists who had experienced natural menopause. They filled out questionnaires in 1976, when they were ages 55 to 100. Of this group, 663 reached menopause before age 45.

Six years later, 772 of the women had died from a variety of causes, including 139 who had menopause before age 45.

Women whose menopause had occurred before age 40 showed a 95 percent higher risk of dying during the six years of the study than did women of similar ages whose menopause came at ages 50 to 54.

For women who had reported menopause at ages 40 to 44, the risk was 39 percent higher.

In contrast, no relationship between age at menopause and death appeared in 3,166 other Seventh-day Adventists whose menopause was caused by surgery.

Previous studies have suggested that loss of estrogen production at menopause puts women at increased risk of heart disease. But the new study found that replacing estrogen did not increase longevity, as well as the finding that surgical menopause did not show the link to death that natural menopause did.

That suggests that something other than loss of estrogen caused the mortality differences, Snowdon said.

The study is "the sort of thing you cannot dismiss," said Robert N. Butler, chairman of the department of geriatrics and adult development at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York. "I certainly take it seriously."

AIDS brochure issued by HHS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government has issued a new AIDS prevention guide specifically intended for parents and other adults to use in counseling young people about the disease.

"Too many of our young people are dying from AIDS and unless we take immediate action the epidemic will continue to spread among this very vulnerable population," said Health and Human Services Secretary Louis W. Sullivan.

The new guide is packaged in a folder containing a number of loose pages bundled in three categories — one aimed directly at adults emphasizing the importance of young people learning about AIDS, one with specific information on the disease itself, and the third with material written for various age levels that parents can pass on to their children if they desire.

The publication is being accompanied by radio and television public service spots encouraging parents to call the National AIDS Hotline — 1-800-342-AIDS — if they wish to have copies mailed to their homes.

The prevention guide is the cornerstone of the third year of the Public Health Service's education campaign entitled "America Responds to AIDS."

"I ask the people of America — parents, guardians and others — to take one simple, direct action to protect our children's health: to sit down and tell them how they prevent infection with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS," said Sullivan.

More than 18,000 of the nearly 95,000 Americans who have been diagnosed with AIDS were between 20 and 29 years of age when the diagnosis was made. Because a person can be infected with the HIV virus as long as 10 years before symptoms of AIDS appear, scientists believe a significant number of people in that age group were infected when they were still teen-agers.

Dr. James Mason, head of the Public Health Service, emphasized that the new guide is carefully tailored so parents can decide how to present the subject to their children in a way that takes into account each family's own values.

PHS spokesman Jim Brown said 500,000 copies of the new guide have been printed in English and 100,000 in Spanish. The television announcements promoting the guide have been produced in both English and Spanish.

The one-page "handout" included in the kit for parents to give to late elementary- and middle school-aged children focuses largely on the ways a person cannot get AIDS. But it does state that a person can become infected "either by having sexual intercourse with an infected person or by sharing drug needles or syringes with an infected person."

The handout written for high school students advises "don't do drugs of any kind" and "delay sexual intercourse." It offers five reasons for delaying sex, including avoiding unwanted pregnancy.

Hubbard and fellow team members will meet at the Lord's Boot Camp in Florida on June 17 to begin two weeks of intensive training which will include devotions, Bible studies, block laying, steel tying, digging, building procedures, concrete, evangelism, music, and puppetry.

Kreuzfeld is located about 30 miles from the East German border. The main project for Hubbard, along with a group of 30 teens, will be to roof a 60' x 60' old farm building to be used for student housing at Christlicher Jugendhof Bible Campgrounds. The job schedule calls for five and a half days of work each week with Saturday afternoons free. Sundays will be for sharing their love for the Lord in the surrounding area through personal testimonies, songs, and puppetry.

At the conclusion of their project and before returning home, the Germany team with join with other teams for a Team Missions "debrief". Classes including "How to Help My Youth Group" and "How to Share My Summer" are designed to help the young missionaries get more involved at home.

Hubbard will share the highlights of her experiences on August 20 at The Bible Church of Pampa, where her father is pastor.

Sitter who lost her temper winds up losing her client

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 17-year-old girl who has been baby-sitting since I was 13. I've had a lot of problems with one family in particular. (I'll call them the Joneses, which is not their real name.)

One Friday night, Mrs. Jones called and said her husband would pick me up at 9 o'clock the next morning. I was all ready and waiting at the door at 9 a.m. when Mr. Jones drove up at 9:45! I got into his car and slammed the door hard, then I looked straight out the window to let him know I was angry.

He said, "My, aren't we in a bad mood this morning. What's the matter, did you break up with your boyfriend?"

I ignored his question and asked, "Do you know what time it is?" He looked at his watch and said, "It's 9:45."

I said, "You were supposed to be here at 9 and I got up early to be ready. I've been waiting for you for 45 minutes!"

Well, Abby, that was three months ago, and the Joneses have been calling my younger sister to baby-sit ever since. They told her to tell me that if I ever wanted to baby-sit for them again, I would have to change my attitude.

Abby, for two years I've been bathing their kids and changing their diapers, and they dropped me because I reminded Mr. Jones that he kept me waiting for 45 minutes. Do you think I was wrong for saying what I did?

ANGRY SITTER

DEAR ANGRY: It wasn't what you said; it was probably your tone and the manner in which you "reminded" Mr. Jones of his tardiness. You would do well to learn from his criticism and change your attitude to a kinder and gentler one.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a readaholic. Since he has retired, the only time he isn't reading is when he's sleeping, driving the car or in the shower. He doesn't communicate (talk) hardly at all; he's too busy reading newspapers, magazines, books — anything handy.

Can you tell me if this is some kind of affliction, compulsion, obsession or what? I would sure like to know if I should accept this kind of behavior cheerfully. Please help me. This is something new.

LONELY IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR LONELY: Write your husband a note and ask for an appointment to speak with him. Tell him you will make it any time it's convenient for him. This man is clearly shutting you out, escaping behind the printed word.

If this behavior is something new, perhaps he needs a physical checkup. A sudden change in behavior should not be ignored. It could be a symptom of a more serious problem.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a small gift shop attached to a popular restaurant. I'm amazed at the number of people who come into the gift shop with toothpicks in their mouths. They not only talk to me with toothpicks in their mouths, they suck on them, and some even pick their teeth while talking to me! Some drop these toothpicks on the floor or leave them on the counters, and I am left to pick them up and dispose of them.

Am I being "picky" (no pun intended) to find this practice disgusting? Perhaps a word from you would put them wise.

DAYTONA BEACH

DEAR DAYTONA: I wooden count on it (pun intended). Have a box of tissues handy, and when someone starts to talk to you with a toothpick in his or her mouth, hand the clod a tissue, and smile when you say, "This is for your toothpick, Sir (or Madam).

Mears in pole position for Indianapolis 500

By STEVE HERMAN
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Rick Mears says the pole position in a 500-mile race is more a responsibility than an advantage.

"You can win from any seat in the house," said Mears, who will start from the pole in Sunday's Indianapolis 500. "There's a lot of time to work your way through traffic. The big thing, for me, is it's a little safer starting up front at the beginning.

"I can set a pace, if we can lead the race at a pace that I feel is comfortable on the car, on the tires, for the conditions, then we'll do that," the defending champion and three-time winner said.

Mears, who owns a record five poles at Indy, was criticized by some drivers for setting too slow a pace at the start of the 1982 race. Just before the leaders approached the starting line, Kevin Cogan's car veered to the right, clipped A.J. Foyt and bounced back in front of Mario Andretti. Foyt's car was repaired and ready to go when the race was re-started, but Andretti was eliminated.

Andretti blamed Cogan, and Cogan blamed Mears.

"That was to my advantage," Mears said, recalling the slow 1982 start. "I'm the pole-sitter. I'm supposed to pace the race at what I feel is right. I felt I could get a better jump at that speed, in that particular gear, and get to the corner before the other guys. That's really my prerogative to do that. But everybody hollered about it so much, I figured I just might as well pick it up and go whatever."

This year, Mears was the fastest driver in practice at more than 226 mph and the fastest in qualifications at record speeds of 224.254 for one lap and 223.885 for four laps. He doesn't think those make him the favorite on Sunday.

"Everybody has more faith in me than I do, I guess," he said. "In 1986, the car never bobbled all month long. But on race day, the car couldn't do anything. We just couldn't balance it. When we got in traffic, we couldn't go anywhere. So you just never know about this place until you see the checkered flag."

Mears also said the close competition — six cars were qualified at more than 220 mph and five others were above 218 — makes a pre-race prediction meaningless.

The only thing he will predict is that the race will be fast.

The two-hour final practice on Thursday lent credence to that opinion, with eight drivers turning faster laps than the 215 that Mario Andretti led with in last year's "carburetion day" practice.

Al Unser, Mears' teammate, was fast at 217.407, followed by Andretti at 217.286, Teo Fabi of Italy at 217.233 and Mears at 216.710.

Rangers' Franco heads RBI list

ARLINGTON (AP) — Julio Franco says he's been in the wrong place all his life — until now.

"I've never batted fifth in my life," Franco said after knocking in his American League-leading 40th and 41st RBIs Wednesday. "I guess I've always been batting in the wrong spot."

He also thinks he was batting for the wrong team for six years.

Franco, batting leadoff for the Cleveland Indians last year, didn't reach 41 RBIs until August.

His reputation as perhaps the best second baseman in baseball didn't erase his moody, trouble-maker reputation, and the Indians traded him to Texas for outfielder Oddibe McDowell and infielders Jerry Browne and Pete O'Brien during last year's winter meetings.

The Rangers moved Franco down in the lineup, behind another newcomer, Rafael Palmeiro, who is hitting .343, and Ruben Sierra, who is hitting .313 as cleanup.

Franco, hitting .327, sixth-best in the AL, said the hot bats of Palmeiro and Sierra have as much to do with his success as anything.

"The guys are getting on base and I'm getting the big hits," Franco said. "It's really that simple, because if those guys don't get on base, then I don't get no RBIs. I still get the hits, but no RBIs.

"I'm just hitting in the right spot."

Franco, who has an 8-game hitting streak going into Friday night's game at Minnesota, also attributes his success to new surroundings.

"I like the stadium, no doubt about that," he said.

Franco is hitting .366 with 25 RBIs in 23 games at Arlington Stadium.

"I'm very happy here in Texas," Franco said. "I want to stay my whole career here."

Cabot moves into second with win over Glo-Valve

Tracy Peet outdueled Rayford Young 4-1 as Cabot Corporation knocked Glo-Valve Service from the ranks of the unbeaten Thursday in an Optimist Major League contest.

Peet stilled the usually potent Glo-Valve bats by striking out nine. He walked two and hit one batter in gaining his third victory of the year against one defeat.

Kyle Parnell led Cabot in hitting with two hits, including a two-run homer in the fifth. Bryan Calfy contributed a double and Matt Weatherly and Peet had singles for Cabot.

Young struck out six, walked two and gave up only five hits, suffering his first loss of the year against two wins.

Dale Noble continued his torrid hitting for Glo-Valve with three hits, including two doubles and a run batted in. Jim Bob McGahen had the only other Glo-Valve hit.

Glo-Valve opened the scoring in the first with a walk to Todd Finney and a double by Noble. Cabot took the lead in the fourth on singles by Parnell and Weatherly, a walk and a Glo-Valve error. Cabot iced the game in the fifth with a single by Peet, followed by Parnell's homer.

With the win, Cabot pulled into second place in the National League with a 4-1 record behind Celanese with a record of 5-0-1. Glo-Valve fell to 4-1 and third place.

Horton struck out five and allowed two hits for the win, while Alasha Earl took the loss. Joley Briggs paced all hitters with five, followed by Misty Plunk and Horton with four hits each. Been had three hits, Tracy Trotter and Susan Wood, two each; Heidi Phetteplace, Elasha Hanks, Katie Hamilton, Charity Trotter and Stephanie Cooper, one hit each.

Streak comes to an end for Brenham pitching ace

HOUSTON (AP) — Jon Peters' stomach told him something wasn't right, a sensation he hadn't felt before any of his national record 53 consecutive high school pitching victories.

"When I woke up this morning I had a bad feeling about this game," Peters said. "I've had butterflies in my stomach all day."

Peters, who last month set the scholastic record of 51 straight wins, lost for the first time in his high school career Thursday when Brenham was no-hit 3-0 by West Orange-Stark in a Class 4A regional semifinal.

Eric West and Kyle Free allowed eight walks but combined to hold Brenham hitless in the second game of a best-of-three series. Brenham, 27-2, won the opener 5-2 on Wednesday. The final game is tonight.

Peters allowed five hits in seven innings. He struck out eight and tied a career high with five walks. He also threw a wild pitch in the second inning, allowing the Mustangs to score their first run.

Brenham also committed five errors.

"In a way I'm relieved the streak is over, but I'm sorry it had to happen like it did," Peters said.

He said the loss won't tarnish what had been a perfect four years.

"It's not a sin to lose a game," Peters said. "I feel like 53 is something to be proud of. I wish I could have won some more, but that's baseball."

Peters was 13-0 as a freshman, 15-0 as a sophomore and 14-0 last year. He fell to 11-1 with Thursday's loss.

Peters, who will attend Texas A&M, had not lost since the final game of his Little League career when Brenham lost to Taiwan in the semifinals of the 1985 Little League World Series.

Follett knocks Lefors out of baseball playoffs 15-3

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

The Lefors Pirates suffered their first and last defeat of the season Thursday afternoon, a 15-3 loss to the Follett Panthers in the area round of the state baseball playoffs at Harvester Field.

The Panthers uncorked a six-run effort in the top of the fifth to secure the victory and halt the contest by the ten-run rule after only five innings. Follett will advance to the regional semifinals next Monday against Petrolia at Vernon Junior College. The game is scheduled to begin at 6 p.m.

With only four games behind them prior to Thursday, both teams moved to 4-1 on the season. Follett had previously lost to Higgins by one run, 12-11, while the Pirates were undefeated.

The Panthers showed remarkable similarity to the Follett team from last year, which advanced to the Final Four in Austin before falling to Maud, 10-6, in the state semifinals. Pitching got the 1988 Panthers to Austin, and it could be the ticket again in '89.

Starter Darren Todd lasted 4 2-3 innings on the hill to collect the win, striking out five while yielding six bases on balls. He allowed only two hits, both of them in the first inning, before giving way to reliever J.J. Neptune, who struck out Mitch Flores to end the game.

Todd also paced the Panthers at the plate, hitting 3-for-4 (triple, 2 singles) and scoring three runs. Teammates Shad Jergenson and Matt Freeman each added three base hits, and Jergenson scored twice. Overall, eight of the nine Follett players got at least one hit.

Neptune opened the scoring with a two-run homer over the left-field fence in the top of the first inning. Lefors responded with a run of its own when Heath Keelin walked, went to second on a hit by Jarrod Slatten and made it home on Dusty Roberson's RBI single.

But the Pirates' upsurge was short-lived. They couldn't manage another hit for the remainder of the game, and when shortstop, relief pitcher and cleanup hitter Dusty Roberson was sidelined by a grounder that took a bad hop and hit him in the eye, Lefors never recovered.

"That was the killer blow," Lefors coach Dale Means said. "It definitely hurts to have to take out your cleanup hitter and put in your 10th man."

Follett posted two runs in both the second and third frames and three in the fourth to chase Lefors starter Heath Keelin, who surrendered nine runs on ten hits.

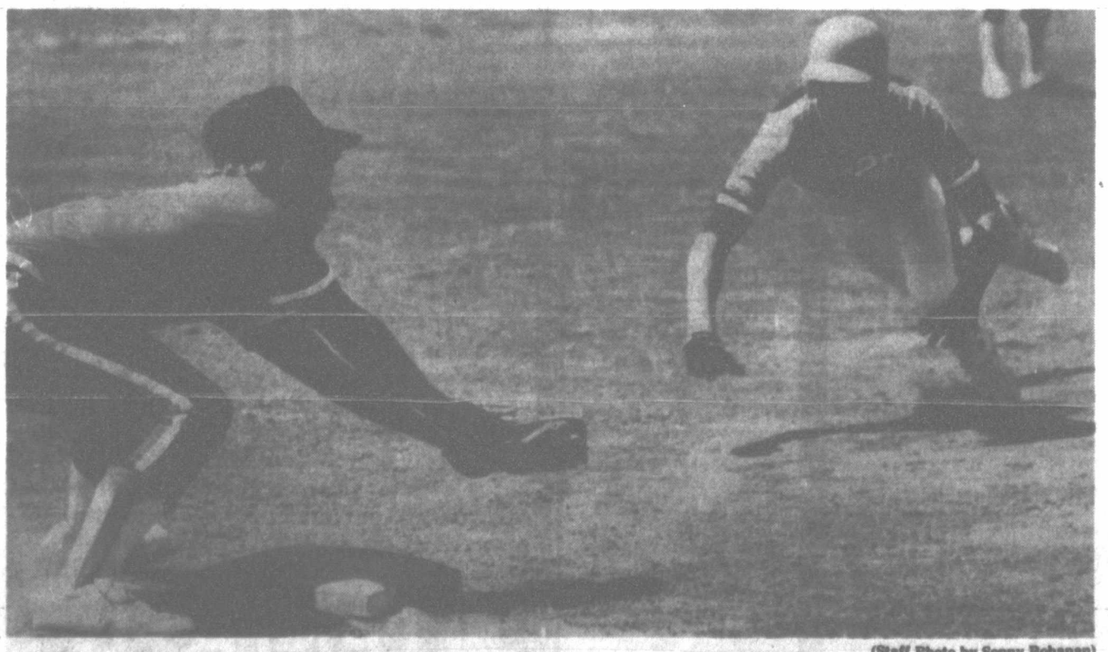

Kevin Mayfield took the mound for the Pirates in the final inning. He faced ten Follett batters, and all but two of them reached base. The Panthers collected six runs on four hits and stole eight bases, all in the fifth inning.

"We'd never seen Lefors play before," Follett's interim coach Gary Steinberger said. "We had a couple of games scheduled with them, but they were cancelled. I knew they had a couple of good hitters, but I thought if we played our game, we'd get them."

All told, the Panthers racked up 14 hits and 15 stolen bases and committed only one error. The Pirates scored two runs in the fifth inning to finish the day with two hits, three steals and five errors, two of the errors in the final frame.

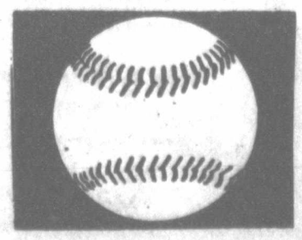

"They shot our hitting down, but they didn't strike us out much," Means said. "It just seemed like everywhere we hit it, someone was there. We forgot the oldest rule in the book, which is, hit it where they're not.

"Still, we played one of our better games today. Even when we were down 9-1, we didn't have that many errors. We just got beat. They had nine guys that could hit the ball well."

Blake takes one-shot lead

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer

MARIETTA, Ga. — It took a couple of victories in hometown tournaments for Jay Don Blake to get the financial backing he needed to join the PGA Tour.

"My golf game kind of went in limbo for a year and a half," Blake said Thursday after posting a 6-under-par 66 to take a one-shot lead in the first round of the Atlanta Classic. "I didn't even play competitively."

Blake had come out of Utah State as a top college player, winning the NCAA championship in 1980 and finishing second in 1981.

He failed several times to qualify for the PGA Tour and settled into a job at a golf course and in a hardware store in his hometown, St. George, Utah.

Then, in 1986, he won those two hometown tournaments two weeks apart, each worth $1,500.

"People in my hometown really gave me a chance after that, threw in money and got me going again," he said.

With financial backers in his corner, Blake qualified at age 28 in the fall qualifying school of 1986 and joined the tour the next year.

He tied for ninth in last year's Pensacola Open — his best finish so far.

Blake had one bogey in his opening round of the $900,000 event on the 7,018-yard Atlanta Country Club course, catching a tree with his drive on the par-4 12th hole.

Six of his eight birdies came from inside 10 feet as he built his one-shot lead over Mike Hulbert.

"I played well, hit a lot of good shots and made pars when I had to," Hulbert said.

Baseball clinic is Saturday

A Pampa Harvester baseball clinic for ages 6 to 14 will be held from 10 to 12:30 Saturday at the high school field.

The clinic will be conducted by the high school coaching staff. PHS strength coach Mike Shklar will also talk about weight training and nutrition for athletes.

Youngsters who turn in an Optimist Book coupon will not be charged for the clinic. Otherwise, admission is five dollars.

Fundamentals will be stressed during the clinic. In case of bad weather, the clinic will be moved into the indoor facility at the high school.

Higgins ends Kelton's season

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

BRISCOE — After trailing the Kelton Lions 4-1 in the fifth inning, the Higgins Coyotes finally pulled ahead in the eighth to capture a 5-4 victory in Class 1A area playoff action Thursday afternoon at Briscoe High School field.

The loss brought the season to a close for the Lions, who finished 2-7 overall. Higgins, 3-3 on the year, will advance to the regional semifinal round next week.

James Clem, who relieved Freddy Valenzuela after four innings, went the last four frames to pick up the win. Chad Caddel lasted all eight innings for Kelton.

Higgins managed two runs in the first inning, although only one of them made it into the scorebooks. Shane Clem pounded a homerun but then failed to touch the plate as he rounded home and was called out.

The score remained 1-0 until the top of the fourth, when Kelton's Chad Caddel drove in Brian Walden and Steven Bodine with a single to center field. The Lions got two more runs in the fifth on a hit by Bodine to go ahead, 4-1.

Higgins' Shane Clem walked in the sixth inning, stole second and third bases and scored on a fielder's choice to pull the Coyotes within two. James Clem cracked a leadoff homer in the bottom of the seventh to make it 4-3. Caddel struck out the next two batters before Hugh Landers slammed yet another homerun to knot the score at 4-all. Caddel struck out the final batter to retire the side.

In the top of the eighth, Caddel made it all the way to third, but got stranded there. Higgins' leadoff hitter Shane Clem tripled, and Caddel loaded the bases with a walk and a bean ball. Duane Willyard blooped a Texas Leaguer over the shortstop to drive in the game-winning run for the Coyotes in the bottom of the eighth.

"Chad (Caddel) pitched well," Kelton coach Dave Johnson said. "He gave up those homeruns, but he also struck out 14.

"Our biggest problem was we left 13 men on base again. That's probably the best game we've played, but we couldn't get a hit with men on."

Calgary wins first NHL title

MONTREAL (AP) — By playing Montreal's game in Montreal's building, the Calgary Flames came away with the Canadiens' most cherished prize.

For the first time in Canadiens history, the Stanley Cup made its triumphant trip around Montreal Forum ice in enemy hands.

Using a defensive system that reminded Montreal of its own tight-checking style of play, Calgary won its first NHL championship Thursday night, beating the Canadiens 4-2 to win the best-of-7 final round in six games.

"The Flames were good at protecting the lead and that's our game," Montreal's Ryan Walter said. "Defensively, they were tougher than I expected. Their forwards come back all the way into the defensive zone. (Goalie) Mike Vernon makes all the big saves. And their defensemen just dump the puck into our end.

"They deserved to win the Cup."

By becoming only the sixth franchise in the expansion era to win the Stanley Cup, Calgary prevented Montreal from winning its 24th league title.
