Keith Williams of Rep. Larry Combest's office said congressional leaders in Washington, D.C., are amid an upheaval of unprecedented nature.

"Everything is in flux — I mean everything," Williams said. "From the doorkeeper's office right up to the speaker's office — Everything like that is in flux," Williams said about 24 hours after voters changed the face of power in both houses of Congress.

In Washington, changes in who handles the day-to-day running of government will continue through December, Williams said.

New leaders map conservative agenda

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In charge and eager to begin, leaders of the new Republican majorities in the House and Senate sketched a conservative agenda Wednesday including a balanced budget amendment and term limits for lawmakers.

A tax cut, welfare reform, crime legislation and health reform also are likely to be addressed in the 104th Congress — the first under GOP control since the Eisenhower era.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole and Rep. Newt Gingrich, House speaker-in-waiting, pledged cooperation with President Clinton wherever possible. "Maybe we can do some business," Dole told the president in a phone conversation witnessed by reporters.

Beyond that, Gingrich said in an interview that he and the president talked by telephone about being able to "disagree with reasonableness where we disagree."

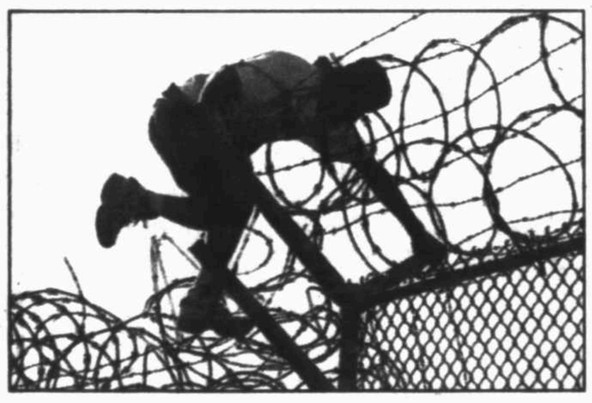

For now, Republicans exulted in mid-

Judge bars rein-in-illegals measure

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The day after California voters approved a measure that denies education and most health care to illegal immigrants, a federal judge barred statewide enforcement of Proposition 187 for a week.

Immigration activists swept into court Wednesday, charging that the proposition violates basic civil rights.

In barring enforcement of all sections of the measure pending another hearing, U.S. District Judge Matthew Byrne Jr. told attorneys he wants to know if migrants are being denied services.

"Basically, today is the same as yesterday and nothing can be done to these children. There shouldn't be any panic," said Felipe Fuentes, a legal assistant at the Center for Human Rights and Constitutional Law.

A state judge also took immediate action, barring enforcement of those sections of Proposition 187 that would expel undocu-

Two escape injury in crash landing

A pilot and his passenger walked away from a twin-engine aircraft that barely missed power lines during a crash landing in the middle of a field Wednesday afternoon, according to a Midland police spokesman.

"Both the pilot and passenger managed to walk away," said Midland police Sgt. David Garcia.

The pilot, Robert Cozby, 45, and his passenger, Larry Bates, both of Midland, were not injured in the accident that occurred about 1:30 p.m. Garcia said the plane — a Cessna 421 Golden Eagle — sustained only minimal damage.

Police were notified of the crash by a pilot who circled the downed plane until police could locate where it landed in a field about two miles north of Loop 250, just west of Midland Country Club, said Midland police Sgt. Andy Glasscock.

Glasscock said Cozby executed a "belly landing" and skidded before coming to a

Police in Canada, U.S. search for gunman in abortion shooting incident

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Police in two countries tried Wednesday to find the person whose bullets critically wounded a doctor and brought the increasingly violent fight over abortion into normally peaceful Canada.

While two U.S. doctors have been killed and another wounded by anti-abortion activists over the last two years, shootings are much less frequent in Canada, where guns are tightly controlled.

That made the attack on Dr. Garson Romalis as he sat at home eating breakfast Tuesday all the more frightening.

"It will affect the way people look at freedom. It will raise a level of fear," said Dr. Mark Schonfeld, president of the British Columbia Medical Association. "Our society has not resorted to this violent level in debates and discussion before."

Romalis performs abortions, a procedure that in Canada is readily available at most government-financed hospitals and clinics. He worked at both of Vancouver's clinics, and was one of the few area doctors who performed late-stage abortions, said Joy Thompson, spokeswoman for the British Columbia Coalition of Abortion Clinics.

Constable Anne Drennan said police weren't sure the shooting was abortion-related. "We have to look at everything. We can't afford to focus in on one angle only," she said.

She said police were looking for leads in the often-violent U.S. anti-abortion movement, and that U.S. authorities were helping in the investigation. Romalis, who was in in stable condition Wednesday, and his family were under police protection. Police were keeping an eye on the city's other abortion clinics, which remained open, and were temporarily watching the homes of other local doctors who perform abortions.

Canadian anti-abortion groups spoke out against the shooting.

"We condemn violence totally, unequivocably. We don't believe that violence solves problems," said Ted Gerk, president of the Pro-Life Society of British Columbia.

Canadian authorities also were talking to police in Oregon and Washington state, and in Florida, where three abortion-related murders have occurred in the last two years.

"Canadians seem to feel that the 49th parallel is an invisible barrier, that our society reacts differently," Schonfeld said. "It is shocking that now the same things are now happening here. That's not a very nice thought."

Bosnian leader refuses to admit defeat despite battlefield losses

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The Bosnian Serb leader, trying to rally support for a formal declaration of war, vowed Wednesday to defeat government forces who have inflicted humiliating losses on his troops.

"If the Muslims want war, they'll get it," Radovan Karadzic said as members of a self-proclaimed Bosnian Serb assembly gathered to consider declaring a formal state of war.

In a sign of growing tensions, U.N. officials said a plane flying from Serb-held territory in neighboring Croatia fired a missile at Bihac, a government-held town in northwestern Bosnia. The rocket attack followed an artillery barrage launched from the same Serb region.

Sarajevo radio Wednesday night reported the missile hit the town center and killed 10 civilians. The report was monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp.

Last week, the United Nations warned Serbs of possible NATO air strikes if they continued shelling Bihac — one of five U.N.-declared "safe havens" — in retaliation for a recent government offensive launched from the town.

There was heavy sniper fire again Wednesday in Sarajevo, undermining an already tenuous cease-fire for the capital. Five people were wounded, four seriously, hospital officials said.

Muslim-led government forces, helped in part by their Croat allies, have made unprecedented territorial gains in recent weeks.

The move toward officially declaring war reflects the Bosnian Serbs' growing isolation and their alarm at those defeats after 2 years of fighting.

Such a declaration would allow Bosnian Serb leaders to impose long prison terms and confiscate the property of those who fail to respond to a call to arms.

Karadzic also said he would be given the power to make some decisions without the approval of the assembly, which functions like a parliament for Serbs who have proclaimed their own state within Bosnia.

It was not certain, however, if the Serb assembly would approve the emergency measures. Some deputies reportedly felt it unnecessary. The assembly was to continue debate Thursday.

The U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, met separately with Serb and government military leaders in an effort to keep the situation in Sarajevo from deteriorating further.

Capt. Jim Mitchell, a spokesman for NATO's Southern Command, could not confirm a Serb plane had violated the U.N.-imposed "no fly zone" over Bosnia. "We never saw it go into Bosnian air space on radar," Mitchell said. "It doesn't mean it didn't."

Gasoline crisis signals long lines, economic turmoil

N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — For five days Muscovites have been yanked back to the bad old days of mass shortages due to a sudden pinch in gasoline supplies that forces motorists to choose between two-hour gas lines or paying $5 a gallon.

Coupled with last month's temporary collapse of the ruble's value, the unforeseen "gasoline crisis" may signal a winter of increasing economic turmoil in a country that still has over 25,000 nuclear warheads. Dealing with an unstable Russia could turn out to be among the most crucial tests of bipartisanship between the new Republican-controlled U.S. Congress and the Clinton administration.

Since gasoline lines erupted Friday, angry fingers have wagged at a host of suspected culprits, from President Boris Yeltsin to the chiefs of Moscow's big state owned oil refinery.

"It's a trick by someone to make money," said Konstantin Voronchuk, 29, as he crept through a 75-car queue in the university district. "There must be someone in Yeltsin's entourage who is behind it."

In an indication that some military officers are also increasingly fed up with economic turbulence, the Defense Ministry newspaper Red Star declared: "Tough measures are needed to prevent our nationhood from the delights of savage capitalism. We can only hope that the president, the parliament and the government have enough strength not to be led by the tail by events."

The front-page article was signed by a Russian Army lieutenant colonel from the Red Star editorial staff.

This is the first time since the fall of communism in December 1991 that waiting lines have reappeared on a mass scale in Moscow.

Endemic queues for such essentials as sausage, sugar and vodka virtually disappeared when Yeltsin and his team of market reformers ditched price controls in January 1992. But over the last nine months, Yeltsin has sidelined his free marketeers and relied more on government controls to steer the economy.

At the root of the gasoline shortage is the continuing decline in Russian oil production. Through October, Russia's independent-minded oil companies pumped 11 percent less oil compared with 1993. The companies openly acknowledge that they would prefer to sell more oil abroad since the world oil price is four times as profitable as subsidized official prices inside Russia.

The Fuel and Energy Ministry says an Oct. 29 accident at the state-owned refinery serving Moscow cut the city's gasoline supplies by 30 percent. But most newspapers dismissed this official explanation — some insisting that refineries elsewhere in Russia would have rushed to fill the gap except that the mayor of Moscow mayor insisted on holding down prices at government stations to around 52 cents a gallon.

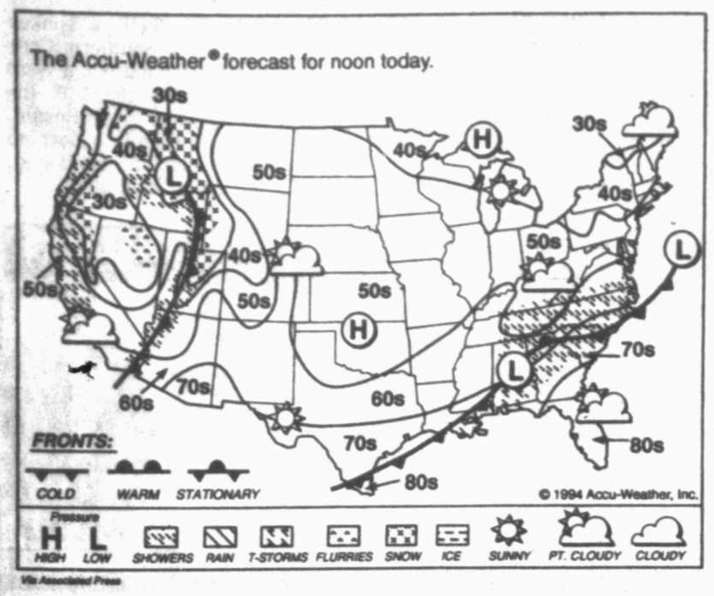

As supplies dwindled and lines multiplied over the weekend, some private stations jumped prices to $5.30 a gallon for high-test. At that rate, 10 gallons would cost a typical Russian factory worker three weeks' salary.

Some resident foreigners who didn't experience communist-era shortages were among the most amazed to pay that rate.

ROUT: Midland reacts to D.C. shift of power

he said.

Midland leaders were varied in their reaction to the election's outcome. Area Democrats area suffering a blow, but still have hopes for the future.

"There's a reason these are called 'races,'" said Midland County Democratic Chairman Chris McCormack. "There's always a lot of grief and heartache for those who lose competitive competitions," he said.

Democrats, however, will carry on, McCormack said. "When I got up this morning, the sun was still shining. . . . Life goes on."

Democrats will be assist the new Republican governor when they can and challenge him when his programs are perceived to be less than beneficial, McCormack said.

"We give him our congratulations and our best wishes. We hope he is able to lead Texas into the 21st century," he said.

"Being a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat, I can tell you I'm not a happy one," said Alma Marshall, a local minority leader.

Ms. Marshall said she must still wait and see what the government will be like after it organizes itself.

"This shift to the far right concerns me. I'm not saying that every Republican elected is on the far right," she said. "I think that way to the right or way to the left is a mistake — my opinion is that we may be in trouble," she said.

Ms. Marshall voiced concerns of what would happen to the Texas public education system. George W. Bush campaigned for change in the public education system but raised his two children in the highest-price private school in Dallas, she said. "He doesn't know anything about public education because he hasn't been there."

Although not pleased with the outcome, McCormack said this kind of election is part of the miracle of American government. This election represents a radical shift in power in the United States, that in other countries would have required a revolution or coup "and everybody is just going about their business," he said.

"People looked at Congress and decided they were not doing their jobs. . . . They decided to give the Republicans a chance to see what they can do," McCormack said. "People will be looking to see if they are doing what they promised to do," he said.

Other Democrats were undaunted by the change. Moderate businessman John L. Brown said fundamental change is just not possible in Washington.

"I think, as far as Washington is concerned, the newly elected people, in six months, will be just like the old ones were," Brown said.

Republicans, on the other hand, are looking to the future with great anticipation.

"What a great night for Texas. Barbara and I are very proud of George and his team," former President Bush said following his son's victory. "It was a tough race, but we admire him for the way he kept the campaign focus on a positive, forward-looking message. As governor, we know that George will more than fulfill the special trust placed in him and do a superb job leading our state into the future," he said.

"Of course, we're just very pleased — beyond expectations," said Midlander Lou Brown, former officer of the National Federation of Republican Women.

"We're excited for the future of Texas because of the Republican governor and all of the appointments the governor can make," she said.

"I'm very excited," said Rick Davis, a Midland attorney and representative on the state Republican executive committee. "(The new governor) is going to bring a different perspective than we've had in the governor's office in the past four years."

Although there likely will not be any major tax cuts because of the Republican takeover, there likely will be measures to reduce regulations and a move toward "less government-centered solutions," he said.

Davis said the Republican victories likely were not centered on the straight-party voters, since not all the "down ballot" races were won by Republicans. "Those who won were able to build on that straight-party ticket," he said.

Williams said that Combest and other ranking Republicans are going to ensure that the Republican promise to voters be upheld; even the promise to enter a term-limitation bill that could alter the newly gained Republican control.

"For the first time in history, you are going to see a term limits bill go to the floor," Williams said.

term elections that changed the face of government, leaving them with control of the House for the first time in 40 years, and producing a 53-47 edge in the Senate. That included Sen. Richard Shelby of Alabama, a Democrat who switched to the GOP as Republican aides cheered profusely at a Capitol Hill news conference.

Gingrich said Republicans would move ahead — as promised — on its campaign "Contract with America" in the first 100 days of the 104th Congress, which convenes in January.

In the House, the first-day agenda will include legislation to place Congress under the same federal laws that apply to the rest of the country, deeply cut congressional staffing levels, reduce the number of committees and subcommittees and implement term limits for committee chairmen.

Over the next 99 days, Gingrich and Republicans have pledged to bring several major bills to the floor for a vote. These include two constitutional amendments, one to balance the budget and one to impose term limits on lawmakers. Other proposals include a $500-per-child tax credit, with accompanying spending cuts to keep the deficit from rising, welfare reform, a crime bill, a capital gains tax cut, protecting the Pentagon's budget and other measures.

"We had a vote on it," Gingrich said of the campaign manifesto for GOP candidates everywhere. "The country voted for us. We now have an absolute total obligation to begin the first session with the contract, to enact the reforms in the contract."

Gingrich and White House officials talked of bipartisanship, and he suggested a concerted effort to work on areas of agreement early in the year "so we can prove a willingness on occasion to work together."

At the White House, chief of staff Leon Panetta said he believed bipartisan consensus could be found on matters like welfare reform, health-care reform, the line-item veto and tougher enforcement of criminal penalties.

In contrast to the House, Senate GOP candidates ran on a less specific platform and Dole offered fewer details about the chamber's legislative program.

"We need to clean up our own house," he told CNN in an interview.

"We've got to have votes on term limits, ethics in Congress, a new lobbying bill, a whole host of things that deal specifically with us — members of Congress." He said other items such as welfare and health reform would wait until congressional reform matters are addressed.

WIN: GOP gains unprecedented control

vatives to create an overwhelming majority."

George W. Bush ousted Richards to become only the second Republican governor since Reconstruction. a span of 120 years. Dallas oilman Bill Clements won in 1978 and 1986.

It was a trend seen in elections to state agencies and even some county seats.

Republicans will have a majority on the Texas Supreme Court for the first time this century, with the elections of Republican incumbent Nathan L. Hecht and newcomer Priscilla Owen. Democrat Raul Gonzalez also won re-election Tuesday, but the court flip-flopped from a 5-4 Democratic majority to a 5-4 Republican hold.

For the first time ever, Texas will have an all-GOP Railroad Commission and Republican-dominated State Board of Education.

In the Railroad Commission elections, Republican Charles R. Matthews narrowly edged Democratic Chairman James E. Nugent, ending more than four decades in government for Nugent.

Republican Carole Keeton Rylander defeated Democratic incumbent Mary Scott Nabers in the other race. The third seat on the commission is held by Republican Barry Williamson.

In the State Board of Education races, Republicans staved off labels as stealth candidates backed by the "religious right" to capture four of seven seats up for election, including two against Democratic incumbents. That gives the GOP eight seats on the 15-member board, compared with seven held by Democrats.

The GOP also made inroads in the Legislature. While Democrats remain in numerical control, Republican gains combined with the election of Bush will give them a powerful hand.

The domination was seen in some local races, as well. For instance, Wilbarger County elected a Republican to a local seat for the first time ever .

"The people didn't speak last night, they yelled at the top of their voices that we've had enough . . . of big government, big taxes and over-regulation in our lives," Bruner said. "I never thought I'd see in my lifetime what we saw last night."

TALK: Richards' attacks may have backfired

government.

In the debate, in her speeches, in her television advertising — she didn't have much good to say about Bush.

She belittled Bush, calling him a "jerk," "shrub" and "boy George." She questioned whether his ownership of a small piece of the Texas Rangers baseball team really qualified him to serve as managing general partner.

She often looked back, seldom forward. She touted her record but said little about the next four years.

Bush stuck steadily to his message — more local control for schools, tougher juvenile crime laws, reducing welfare.

He rode the rising Republican tide, which swept out Democratic incumbents across the nation.

He matched the nationally known Richards almost dollar-for-dollar in fund-raising, enjoyed an equally famous name, and caught the wave of voter demands for change.

"The voters are so hungry for change that they don't care what a non-incumbent did as long as he was talking about change," said Mark Sanders, a Republican political consultant.

"And Ann Richards never offered the flip side — where she was going to take this state over the next four years. She never said, 'This is how I'm going to complete the New Texas.' With all those negative ads, she sounded shrill," Sanders said.

Joe Cutbirth, a spokesman for the Texas Democratic Party, said Richards was forced to focus on Bush's background because he had breezed through the GOP primary without a significant opponent.

"There wasn't an examination of his record. That wasn't done in the primary, so it was left up to us to do that," Cutbirth said.

Former attorney general Jim Mattox, who lost the 1990 Democratic gubernatorial nomination in a bitter fight with Richards, said the governor failed to play to her strengths.

"I think that this campaign should have been run on Richards' personality and on the New Texas concept that got her elected in the beginning, rather than running on these Republican issues that she ran on," Mattox said.

An opinion poll of voters Tuesday found them more interested in issues Bush pushed than those Richards raised.

Take experience. Nearly all voters who considered that a critical factor picked Richards — but only one in five thought it important. Richards touted job creation, but only one in five thought that important.

Contrast that with crime. It was the top priority of more than a third of all voters, and well over half of them favored Bush.

In her narrow 1990 victory over oilman-rancher Clayton Williams, Richards got more than 60 percent support from women. This time, she got about 53 percent. Men favored Bush.

Although most pre-election polls found 60 percent of Texans giving her favorable ratings, Richards never seemed able to convert that popularity into political capital.

Three of her four appointees to statewide office were rejected by voters: Railroad Commissioner Lena Guerrero in 1992, U.S. Sen. Bob Krueger in 1993 and Railroad Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers this year. Her fourth appointee, Treasurer Martha Whitehead, squeaked to a 25,000-vote win on Tuesday.

Richards had pushed hard for voter approval of the "Robin Hood" school finance plan in 1993, only to see it resoundingly rejected.

While most candidates clamored for attention, Richards rebuffed requests for interviews from the Texas press. The only reporters to ride her campaign plane were from The New York Times.

CRASH: Two walk away stop. The plane's nose was down and the rear of the plane a few feet above the ground, he said.

"He did a good job of maneuvering around the mesquite," Glasscock said.

"Officers said the pilot did an excellent job in the emergency landing. . . . He barely missed power lines, which could have been trouble for him," Garcia said. "It was a very good job by the pilot to avoid disaster."

Cozby told police he had just taken off from Airpark Airport when the left engine halted. Garcia said Cozby was trying to return to the airport when he had to execute an emergency landing.

Units from the police, fire and sheriff's departments and the Department of Public Safety were called to the scene. A DPS helicopter landed near the site.

Garcia said the DPS would handle the preliminary investigation of the scene; the Federal Aviation Administration would conduct the overall investigation.

Both the pilot and the passenger had left the scene within a few hours of the accident, according to an officer at the scene.

Investigators for the FAA were on the scene just after dark. No one at the Midland FAA office would comment on the accident.

Garcia said police officers would remain on the scene until the FAA completes its investigation.

REIN: Federal judge delays illegal-alien measure

mented immigrants from California public secondary schools and its public colleges and universities.

San Francisco Superior Court Judge Stuart Pollak noted that the ballot measure conflicts with a 1982 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that requires states to provide a public education to all residents.

Voters' endorsement of Proposition 187, closely watched from Washington to Mexico City, touched off small protests in Los Angeles and Northern California and focused a glaring spotlight on the center stage immigration now commands in America. The United States, a beacon to migrants for more than a century, now shares the struggles of other nations faced with mass migrations.

Proposition 187 supporters hope to take their successful campaign to other states, including Texas. But Hispanic activists insist the racial and economic fears that motivated California voters are unique to this recession-hit state.

"It's opened up enormous wounds that are going to take a long time to heal," said Cecilia Munoz of the National Council of La Raza, a moderate Hispanic advocacy group in Washington. "Clearly, there are people out there who find the growth of the Latino population in America and in California very threatening."

But, Munoz added: "Texas and other states don't have the same type of recession, and the same type of backlash, that California has seen."

Gary Mounce, a University of Texas-Pan American political scientist, agreed it will be less of an issue there: "Those politics of hate or immigrant bashing, you find it here, but I don't think the major politicians are lending any credence to it."

In this city shaken by racial rioting just three years ago over verdicts in the Rodney King beating case, police braced for student protests. Wednesday evening, about 200 opponents rallied noisily but peacefully downtown. And in Northern California, high school and middle school students briefly shut down highways Wednesday morning.

Some Hispanics said they feared their looks would immediately make them targets.

"Let's say we're out on the streets and the police say, 'Oh, look at those Hispanics,' and stop us and say we're illegal. That's not right," said Lester, a 14-year-old student in the ninth grade at Hamilton High School on Los Angeles' west side. The teen-ager asked that his last name be withheld.

Proposition 187 supporters insist their agenda is not racist, but economic, bearing a message that Californians are fed up with spending scarce state tax dollars on people who don't belong here.

Republican U.S. Rep. Dana Rohrabacher lashed out at opponents of Proposition 187 who complained about the measure's purported racism and called Rohrbacher "a racist skinhead." He said the measure should send a message to poor people worldwide that the United States cannot help everyone.

"I think the word's going to get out that we will turn this tide in a very kind way, but a very forceful way," Rohrabacher said.

Gov. Pete Wilson ordered state departments to begin drawing up emergency guidelines to implement Proposition 187, but cautioned health care and other social service providers to wait for the guidelines before turning people away.

Much of the new law was in limbo anyway as civil rights groups rushed into federal and state courts with challenges. At least 10 lawsuits were planned.

Refugees from Kupres adjust to displacement

SIPOVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Suddenly homeless and penniless, 3,000 Serbs are coping with life as refugees since an offensive by their newly united enemies forced them from their homes. Some say they were betrayed and some are talking about revenge.

Many of them are camping out on the slopes of Mount Mosor, 20 miles north of the central town of Kupres, where they had homes a week ago. They huddle around improvised stoves, some weeping and some just gazing silently.

Those who found shelter in the overcrowded town of Sipovo are little better off. Most of them are in a filthy school with no heating, and night temperatures are near freezing.

"We can't get back there, ever. It's all over now. Their army is getting stronger every day," said Vojko Jaksic, 51, from Kupres.

The offensive against Serb-held Kupres by Bosnian government and Croat forces could have ended as another unsuccessful attempt by the government to take some of the 70 percent of Bosnia that Serbs hold.

But with the advantage in men and recently beefed-up weaponry, the mostly Muslim Bosnian army made progress. The turning point came last week, when Bosnian Croat militia joined in. The Croats moved into Kupres Thursday, as government troops took up positions outside.

The Serb residents fled, leaving the town populated only by exhausted cattle and sheep who roamed the streets in search of food.

"It was our immediate neighbors, the Croats, who forced us out," said Grozda Pavlica, 61. "We had a front line with them which was quiet for two years."

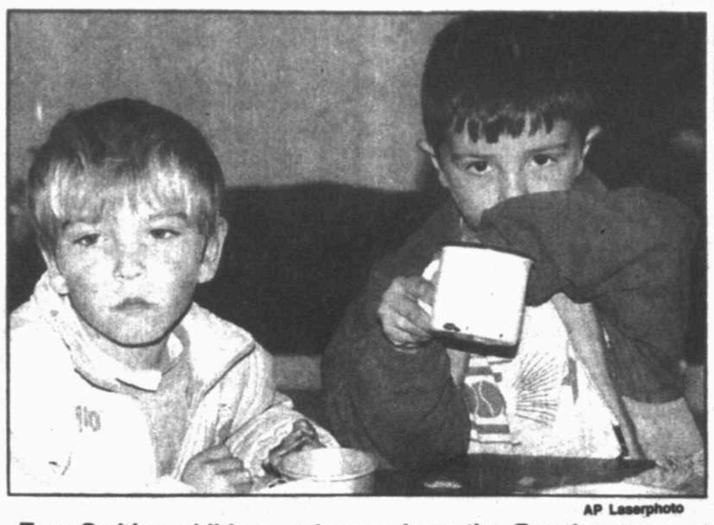

Some cursed their own troops for giving up easily, feeding rumors that they cut a deal with Croats. Before the war, the town of 3,500 was half Serb and 40 percent Croat.

"Treason! That's what it was," said Dragica Knezic, 23, holding her 2-year-old daughter Suzana. "Kupres was given up without almost one bullet fired."

"They said there were not enough troops, but they did not even try," she said.

Observers elsewhere have speculated that the defenders of Kupres may have run for several reasons: in exchange for fuel, of which the Serbs are short; in a deal under which Croats would promise not to take part in attacks on the Serbs' lifeline across northern Bosnia; or because Serbs would have to give up Kupres in a peace plan anyway.

Orthodox Serbs likely would rather cede the town to Croats, fellow Christians and sometime allies, rather than to Muslims.

AP Laserphoto

Two Serbian children, refugees from the Bosnian town of Kupres, drink milk at an improvised refugee camp in the village of Strojice, Sunday.

For some refugees, it was their third displacement since the war began in spring 1992.

Sema and Radojka Keramovic, 37- and 39-year-old sisters, first had to leave their hometown of Bugojno, 50 miles northwest of Sarajevo, when shifting lines left their town in government hands. They moved south to nearby Mracaj, only to flee once more when front lines changed again.

They had relative peace in Kupres for more than two years. That ended two weeks ago.

Serb authorities sent buses for them, said Sema, her eyes red and swollen. "There was no time to pack, no time to cry. I think I'm getting numb to all this."

What once was a school building in Sipovo, 60 miles northwest of Sarajevo, now accommodates some 400 refugees who sleep in classrooms, and prepare meals in the schoolyard.

Iranian planes bomb Kurdish base in Iraq; second attack in 3 days

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian warplanes bombed a Kurdish rebel base in northern Iraq on Wednesday, killing at least one person and wounding three.

The opposition Democratic Party of Iranian Kurdistan said a civilian woman was killed and three rebels were wounded. Its statement gave no details of damage.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, said its pilots had attacked the "command headquarters, munition depot and center of counterrevolutionaries."

It was the second Iranian attack in three days on Iranian opponents in Iraq.

The base is in Koi Sanjaq, in a no-fly zone established by the U.S.-led allies after the 1991 Persian Gulf War to protect the Kurdish population from Iraqi attacks.

There was no immediate comment from Washington on Iran's entry into the protected area, which is normally under surveillance of AWACS radar planes.

The air strike was unlikely to draw Iraqi retaliation because both Iraq and Iran have been fighting Kurdish minorities which have sought autonomy for decades.

The Iranian Foreign Ministry said Iran was within its rights to counter "terrorism" by any necessary means, IRNA reported.

The raid followed the arrests in Iran on Monday of what IRNA described as "the terrorist agents of a counterrevolutionary team" that intended to plant bombs in western Iran, along the border with Iraq.

On Sunday, Iran launched a missile attack against a base of the main Iranian opposition group, the Mujahedeen Khalq. The Mujahedeen said there were no casualties in the attack on its Ashraf camp in Iraq, about 40 miles north of Baghdad. IRNA said the attack was to avenge recent sabotage by the Iraq-based opposition.

Iraq reacted sharply to Sunday's attack, warning that it would retaliate when and where it chose to.

Iran and Iraq were at war between 1980 and 1988. Despite a U.N.-brokered cease-fire, the two historical foes have never signed a peace treaty.

Authorities ban French exhibit due to cruelty

PARIS (AP) — It may be the law of the jungle, but that doesn't make it art, said French authorities who shut down an avant garde show of spiders, snakes, scorpions and toads devouring each other.

Chinese artist Huang Yon Ping put the caged creatures on display at the Georges Pompidou Center, where they were to eat each other in a statement on humankind's dog-eat-dog world.

The city's veterinary services and police banned the work on Tuesday, citing laws forbidding cruelty to animals and unauthorized animal shows. The Chinese artist's creation now features photos of the animals.

The ban was a victory for the National Society for the Defense of Animals, which had taken the center to court for putting the creatures on show.

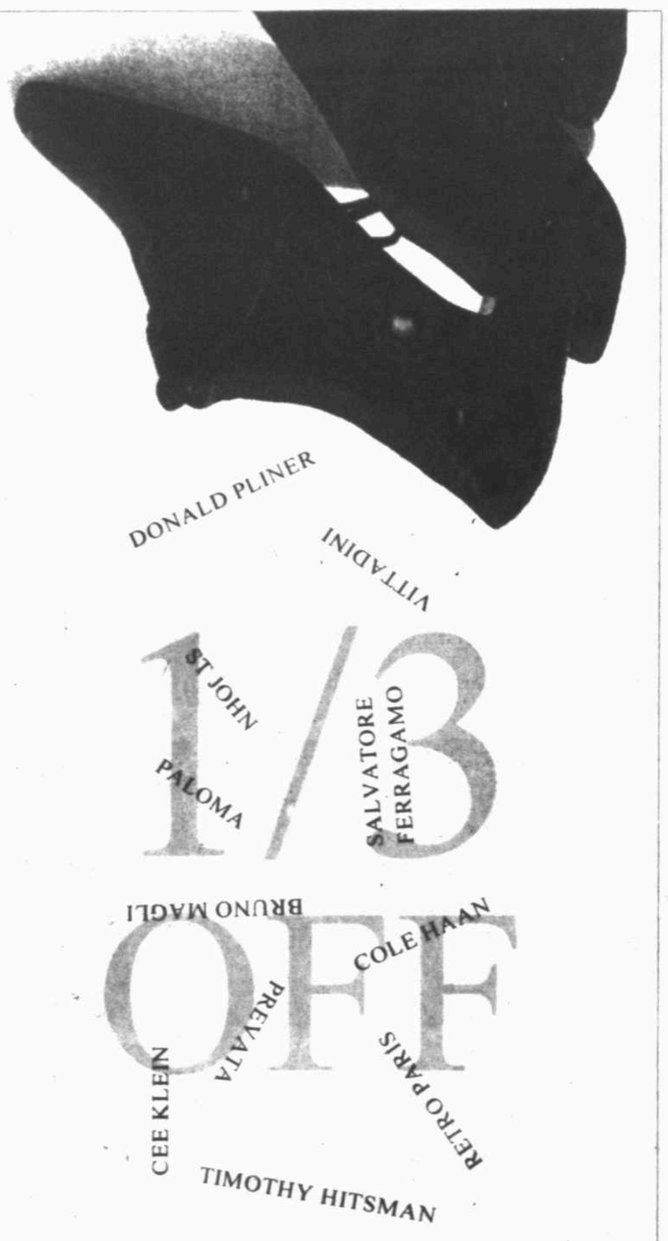

The exhibition, "Hors Limites, l'art et la vie, 1952-1994" (Beyond Limits, art and life), opened Tuesday at the Pompidou Center, a showcase for contemporary art and multimedia productions.

Dozens of animal rights crusaders protested outside the center wearing white ponchos, their faces covered by colorful butterfly masks.

The center stood behind its aesthetic choices.

"Rumors have exaggerated the violence of the work, which is supposed to appear as a metaphor of humanity," curator Jean de Loisy was quoted as telling the Figaro newspaper.

"Like humanity, the work is fraught with conflict and quarrels but also with brotherhood," he said.

Telecommunications industry expects deregulation from Republicans

By Edmund L. Andrews
N.Y. Times News Service

Few business sectors are as directly affected by Washington as the heavily regulated telecommunications industry, and the Republican Congress will end the reign of some titanic political personalities with strong views on the subject.

The general thrust of telecommunications policy will likely continue in the same direction, with Congress expected to repeat this year's effort to pass a broad bill overhauling telecommunications laws. That bill will again be intended to lower regulatory barriers to permit more competition between telephone and cable television companies.

And again, the outcome is likely to have more to do with the trench warfare among industry lobbyists than with clashes between Democrats and Republicans.

Still, in terms of the tenor and texture of the debate, the biggest change is the toppling of Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., as chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. Dingell, the principal author of this year's bill to overhaul communications law, has been a towering and often fearsome power for decades.

Dingell will have to cede control of the committee to a Republican, either to Rep. Thomas J. Bliley Jr. of Virginia or Rep. Carlos J. Moorhead of California, depending on who seeks the chairmanship. Neither has the ferocious and often autocratic demeanor of Dingell.

That said, with the Republicans in power, policy nuances may be different, with legislation likely to place greater emphasis on deregulation and to pay less deference to the perceived public-interest obligations of companies building new networks.

A Republican Congress may also offer more market freedom to the regional Bell companies and insist on fewer protections for long-distance carriers like AT&T Corp. that fear the Bells' entry into their markets.

"You're going to see the emergence of a more de-regulatory outlook on Capitol Hill," said Richard Wiley, a former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission who now represents broadcasting and publishing companies. "Whether or not that is pro-competitive depends on where you sit."

Instruments are able to measure radiation levels with accuracy

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — The atmospheric observatory aboard the shuttle Atlantis has measured the level of ultraviolet radiation streaming to Earth from the sun with unprecedented accuracy, NASA researchers said Wednesday.

Since the shuttle's 11-day atmospheric research mission began on Nov. 3, a trio of independently calibrated instruments in the ship's cargo bay have obtained measurements that agree within 5 percent, said the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Tim Miller, the chief mission scientist.

Even subtle variations in high-energy ultraviolet, or UV, wavelengths can influence the destruction of protective ozone in the Earth's stratosphere and induce subtle changes in climate.

"What we're doing now is providing a baseline for measurements in the future," said NASA researcher Ernest Hilsenrath. "It's a legacy for environmental investigators into the next century."

A decade ago, measurements of solar UV from space differed by as much as 10 percent. The first measurements obtained 20 years ago varied by 50 percent.

Bono comes to Washington for U.S. Congress

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — He got in, babe.

Ladies and gentlemen, the newest Republican congressman from California: Sonny Bono, whose previous jobs include stints as Cher's straight man, guest shots on "The Love Boat" and mayor of Palm Springs.

Bono knows there will be snickers when he first walks onto the House floor, but he says it doesn't matter.

"I learned a long time ago the secret is to just hang in there, to keep at it," he said last month. "Eventually, people will start to respect you."

Bono won 58 percent of the vote Tuesday to defeat former Navy pilot and Democrat Steve Clute. He said his victory was part of a backlash against politics as usual.

"You guys in Washington have got to be responsible. If you can't do the job, we're going to do it for you," he said.

Working his way up through nightclubs, hitting it big with a TV show, Bono had been famous mostly for a droopy moustache, bell bottoms and a song called "I Got You, Babe" — straight man to a drop-dead chick both taller and more talented.

When the show wound down and the woman left, he wandered around in a netherworld of guest spots on "Fantasy Island" and "The Love Boat."

Republican sweep mandates change

What occurred Tuesday at the polls can only be characterized as an election day rebuke of liberal political philosophy carried out by President Bill Clinton and the Democrats. It was literally a nationwide Republican sweep, as voters across the country unequivocally said through the ballot box they do not like the direction in which the nation is moving and they want a return to conservative principles.

In getting their message across, voters stripped the Democratic Party of majority control in both the U.S. House and Senate, and did the same in the governorship of 11 states including Texas, where George W. Bush, a former resident of Midland, ousted Democratic Gov. Ann Richards.

The election outcome means that the Republican Party will control the Congress for the first time in 40 years. While there is no question that voters intend that change to be translated into more conservative leadership, it would be wrong for either Clinton or the GOP leadership to lose the bipartisan spirit that is so critical to our form of government. If either Clinton or the GOP leaders refuse to work with politicians from the other party, the nation is liable to endure legislative gridlock once again and that would not benefit Americans.

Both Senate Majority Leader-elect Bob Dole and House Republican Leader Newt Gingrich have vowed to work with President Clinton, as Dole noted, "when we can."

At the state level, bipartisan cooperation will be just as important since Texas now has a governor and lieutenant governor from different political parties. Gridlock doesn't only occur at the national level but at any level when the spirit of bipartisanship is lost. American democracy will only continue to work well if President Clinton, Gov.-elect Bush, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, and the other public servants at the federal and state levels rise above partisan politics to work in the interests of the people of Texas and the United States.

For 40 years Republicans have longed for the time that they could gain control of both the U.S. House and Senate. Now, with the liberal philosophy of the Democrats soundly repudiated the Republicans have their chance to show that conservatism truly is the solution to the nation's problems. To a great extent, the ball is now in their court.

Midlanders 'tuned in' for United Way goal

Midlanders "Tuned In — The United Way" this year and the result was that the United Way's goal of $2,731,000 was exceeded by $2,094. It was a great conclusion to one terrific fund drive!

Of course, what the success of the United Way's drive really means is that 40,000 Midlanders who annually receive benefits from the 16 member agencies will continue to do so with no interruption, no lack of necessary funds.

That is a success story for every Midlander who is in need of the help provided by the 16 agencies. It also represents a pat on the back for each of the literally thousands of Midlanders who donate their time, talent and energy each year to raising the much-needed funds.

Thanks to them, the United Way works in Midland for 40,000 of their friends, neighbors and coworkers. Isn't that a wonderful feeling?

Public must take stand against school violence

The study about violence in the nation's schools that was released this week by the National League of Cities merely confirms what most Americans already thought rather than adding anything new.

That is to say, it repeats that there is too much violence in the schools, that too many young students are being killed or injured, and that school systems and police are working together to respond to the emergency.

What it doesn't say — and what is unthinkable — is that violence among a small minority of students is about to shut down the education system. One reason that is not going to happen is that communities are responding, and are determined to beat back the onslaught of violence, guns and other weaponry in our schools.

Fort Worth is no exception. It is an indictment of society, not of the schools, that every Fort Worth high school must employ metal detectors, that gun-and drug-sniffing dogs visit these schools regularly and that special police teams are assigned to each high school and its feeder schools.

Superintendent Thomas Tocco says he sees a "strong public consensus that it is time to take a stand in our schools and our neighborhoods against violence."

The answer is multilevel. Educators like Tocco, police chiefs, mayors, business leaders and ordinary people all must be on the board. They are the public. They are the community whose children are threatened.

Election reinforces conservative trend

WASHINGTON — President Clinton defined the election as a referendum on Ronald Reagan's 1980s, thereby taking up the gauntlet Republicans had thrown down with their Reaganite "contract." The referendum produced a lot of Reagan Republicans.

Will

If the election's results had been an indiscriminate massacre of incumbents, the election would have been merely a national temper tantrum. Instead it was a resounding ideological statement.

Conservatism's long march through institutions began 30 years ago with Barry Goldwater's capture of the Republican Party and now has produced turbulence that is especially remarkable because no remarkable issue or event catalyzed it. Slavery in the 1850s, the panic of 1893 and the Depression in the 1930s churned the party system. Today the nation is at peace and prosperous, yet it is seething.

However, the supposedly intricate and unfathomable feelings of the electorate are really neither. With breezy frankness voters have said approximately this: Something is amiss when a government that does not adequately deliver the mail delivers condoms to children. That is, government often is incompetent at basics and offensive regarding matters that are none of its business.

For Democrats, the point of nominating a "New Democrat," particularly a Southerner, for president was to reverse the Republican trend that already was alarming Democrats by 1968, when Hubert Humphrey carried only one Southern state, Texas. But Clinton has strengthened the trend, and at the expense of such legitimate "New Democrats" as Reps. Jim Cooper of Tennessee and Dave McCurdy of Oklahoma, whose Senate candidacies were swamped by Tuesday's anti-Clinton tide.

The country is much more conservative than it was when it elected Reagan, and significantly more conservative than in 1992. But liberals will be a larger portion of congressional Democrats in the 104th Congress than in the 103rd. However, if Clinton remains to the left, he will be trying to govern against the grain of the country and will be peripheral to the nation's political conversation.

If he moves to the right, he will alienate his base, such as it is — liberals, African-Americans and public employees. That base cannot re-elect him but can help unelect him. Regarding the dangerousness of disaffected liberals, Clinton should ask Jimmy Carter about the spring of 1980.

Clinton cannot win bidding wars with Republicans in tailoring tax cuts or welfare reforms for a conservative country. Yet if Clinton adopts a veto strategy regarding Republican initiatives, who then is the obstructor of "change" and the author of "gridlock"?

Clinton's decision to conduct the 1994 campaign as an argument with Reagan underscored the conservatives' contention that 1994 is year six of the Bush-Clinton era, and that Clinton, a passionate opponent of systemic change by term limits and a balanced budget constitutional amendment, clings to the status quo. The October fear-mongering about the campaign illustrated the Democrats' intellectual sterility.

And speaking of recycling ideas, some Democrats dream of Clinton emulating in 1996 Truman's 1948 run against the "do-nothing 80th Congress."

Prince Charles' medals are well-earned

Every time I see a photograph of Prince Charles in uniform, I wonder what all the medals on his chest stand for.

The other day I happened to be with my friend Nigel Cavendish when I showed him a picture of Charles in Newsweek. Cavendish, who served with Her Majesty's Horse Guards, explained: "They're all Good Conduct medals. I was certain that he had earned every one, but with the publication of his memoirs this month, I'm not so sure."

Buchwald

I pointed to one hanging from the Prince's chest.

"What is that?"

"That's the Royal Order of Unrequited Love. It is given to the future king automatically when he reaches 21 years of age and can't get permission to marry his true love. The one next to it is the Windsor Knighthood of the Garter. Apparently, Charles was once presented with a garter by an ardent admirer, but since he can't wear the garter he's wearing the medal instead."

"And the one next to it?"

"That is the British Empire Cross of Assignation. It's like the Distinguished Flying Cross. You have to have completed five assignations under heavy fire to wear it. The fact that Charles earned it has made him a hero to the British tabloids."

"Is the medal on the far right for committing adultery?" I asked.

"No, that's for playing polo. The adultery and polo medals look quite similar, and it is difficult to distinguish them. The medal he is wearing below the polo one is for adultery."

Cavendish continued: "I don't believe that there's a decoration on the prince's chest that he hasn't earned in battle. The green striped one was presented to Prince Charles because he was browbeaten by his father. The red one alongside it is the British equivalent of the American Purple Heart. That was awarded to him for the way he said his mother treated him when he was a little boy. The medal is very significant because it reminds Charles that his parents sent him off to Gordonstoun prep school at an early age where he almost froze to death, was forced to take cold showers and run across the moors without even boxer shorts on."

"Have there been any medals awarded to him because of the battles he fought with Princess Diana?"

"After the book on the princess came out by this fellow Hewitt, Charles' supporters thought he should get the Victoria Cross. But Prince Philip wouldn't hear of it, saying that if Charles had any guts at all, he should have fallen on his sword as soon as the marriage broke apart."

Salesmen lie: Simple home office furniture isn't

"It just snaps together?" I asked the salesman, pointing at the floor model of a simple plastic desk, just big enough to hold a computer and keyboard, a cup of coffee, a sweet roll, some note paper and a telephone — the tools of my trade.

"Right," the salesman said. "Just snap it together or unsnap it to take it apart."

Royko

"It doesn't have bolts, screws or anything like that?"

"Nope. All it has are grooves and tongues. Just slip one part into another and, pop, it fits into place. See, here? Got a nice tray for the keyboard that slides in and out."

"Something that slides? A moving part and it isn't too difficult?"

"Oh, no, it's real easy the way they make these things nowadays. Sell lots of them."

Real easy. When he said that, something in a dark corner of my brain told me that I should run.

I have dealt with real easy pop-it-together furniture before.

In the corner of my home office, there is a wood file cabinet that leans like a drunk at 2 a.m. I spent an entire Saturday twisting screws into that one. When I finished, I realized that the only way I might make it stand straight would be to take it apart and try again.

Even then, it might wind up standing like a drunk at only 1 a.m.

Next to it is a wood desk. Another hellish Saturday, full of screws, bolts, washers and other tiny things that fall down and roll under chairs and TV stands. And it ended up with a 20-degree tilt. But I adjust it with the old Christmas-tree-stand trick — jamming a paperback book under one leg.

This is all part of the curse of the home office. And it is something that the experts on home offices don't tell you about, when they chirp happily away in their advice columns and magazine articles about how easily you can create a friendly, comfortable and soothing work environment just the way you want it.

Yes, you create it by spending hours kneeling on the floor, looking at baffling diagrams and instructions written by some deranged America-hater in an Asian furniture sweatshop.

But there are few choices. If you buy something that is already put together in one neat piece, it won't fit in the back seat or trunk of the car.

You can rent a trailer or a small truck, but then you have to get someone to help you haul the object up the stairs, twisting and nudging it through doorways, and running the risk of scarred hands, a damaged spine or cardiac arrest, all of which detract from the comfort and productivity of a home office.

However, this desk was made of plastic. And I could not see one screw, washer, bolt or other object of pain on it.

"Real simple?" I asked again. "Just snaps together?"

"You got it," the grinning salesman said.

We hauled the cardboard box to the car, shoved it in the back seat, and 30 minutes later I was unpacking the pieces.

And as he had said, it looked simple enough.

But then I noticed something odd. There was not the usual sheet of instructions — pieces A, B, C, D, with arrows saying where they connect.

I shook the packing box and ran my hand inside. Could it be so simple that it didn't require instructions? It appeared so, and why not? We approach the 21st century and the promise of a high-tech age of never sweating or thinking hard.

Then I noticed that there was some printing on the box. A few simple pictures and brief set of instructions. None of it made any sense. It might as well have been written in Chinese or Korean. But if it was really simple, who needed instructions?

Four hours later, it was time for the inevitable scream of rage, which is also part of the home office process.

It brought the blond up the stairs, with the rebuke, "Don't shout those filthy words. The neighbors can hear you."

"Let them hear. That's what they get for not moving into a better neighborhood."

"It isn't going too well?"

"No. It is the sliding keyboard tray. I should have known that if it had a moving part ..."

But she was out the door and down the stairs. Some people cannot handle their share of a crisis.

Moving parts. That should have set off an alarm bell back at the store. Never buy anything with moving parts. Little white plastic roller things that have to fit into groves, then slide along. Why should a desk have moving parts anyway, even drawers? You just put things in there and never see them again.

So there it sprawls in a corner — half a desk and some of its scattered limbs, like a battlefield casualty.

And there it will remain forever, because I can't take it back. If I do, some slack-jawed, glassy-eyed youth will shuffle out of the back room and pop it together like a Tinker Toy, making me feel stupid. I'd rather be furious than stupid.

Tomorrow, I'll go to the grocery or poultry store and get a couple of empty wood crates. Then from the lumberyard, I'll buy a piece of plywood and put it on top of the crates, and I'll have a functional desk.

Neighbors support father after joke goes bad

N.Y. Times News Service

WEST MONROE, La. — Out by the noisy sawmill, the trailer parks, the taxidermist and the scrubby bait shops where Bobby Crabtree lives, there is very little mystery about why he shot the daughter he doted on early Sunday morning.

And the idea of blaming Crabtree for what happened when his high-spirited 14-year-old, Matilda Kaye, decided to play a practical joke on him, is far removed from the minds of most. He might have acted a little hastily, some say tentatively. But there are more people who not only sympathize with the 53-year-old ice-company driver but see themselves doing the same thing.

It all came down to a matter of seconds, when Matilda jumped out of a closet and shouted, "Boo!" as her parents came home after midnight.

Keeping a loaded firearm in the house — and using it in response to an unexpected noise from a dark closet — is not strange to residents of this blue-collar community, where gun control isn't mentioned without a dark look of disapproval. This is the sort of place where women go deer hunting, and it is deeply conservative country: David Duke gained one of his few pluralities in surrounding Ouachita Parish, in the 1991 governor's race.

"I wouldn't look for any charges because it was purely accidental. I don't think any jury in the world is going to do more to him than he's going to do to himself.'

— Maj. Michael Worley, Ouachita Parish Sheriff's office

"I do believe in having a gun," declared Norma Price, who works at an agency for the mentally retarded, next door to the cinderblock-and-tar paper Crabtree home just outside town. "I think I blame the daughter as much as anything. She pulled a practical joke that backfired on her."

That practical joke — hiding in a closet to surprise Crabtree — is one Matilda had often pulled, but always during the day, said the father of her best friend, Stacy Redding. On Saturday night, the two girls decided to try it again, according to authorities here, and to a neighbor across the street, Steve Redding. Crabtree arrived home about 1 a.m., after a night of visiting friends with his wife.

The house was dark, and the Crabtrees thought that their daughter and Stacy were staying at the Reddings, as previously arranged. But Crabtree heard a noise in the back of the modest, one-story house, Maj. Mike Worley of the Ouachita Parish Sheriff's Office said.

Crabtree picked up a .357-caliber pistol he kept loaded, and went into his daughter's bedroom. The door of the darkened closet opened, Matilda sprang out shouting "Boo," and her father shot her in the neck at very close range, Worley said. She died about 12 hours later at a hospital here, and was buried on Tuesday in nearby Winnsboro, after a service attended by fellow students from the school where she was a freshman, West Monroe High School.

The sheriff's office has not filed charges.

"I wouldn't look for any charges because it was purely accidental," Worley said. "I don't think any jury in the world is going to do more to him than he's going to do to himself."

Indeed, Crabtree, staying in a nearby town with relatives, was by several accounts still in deep shock. A number of people here said that he had been thoroughly devoted to his daughter, his only child by a second marriage, bragging about her at work, often buying presents for her, even fetching breakfast for her every morning at the Short Stop grocery down the road.

"His main concern was what could he do for her — every day," said Crabtree's boss at the Party Ice Co., Huey Smith. "She had her own TV, VCR, telephone." As for Crabtree's paycheck, Smith said, "he would spend it on her."

Knowing all that, several neighbors were even less inclined to blame him.

"That man couldn't help what happened," said Linda Allison, one of the owners of the Short Stop.

No one was inclined to view the shooting as a reason to curtail gun use. "I think everybody should have a loaded gun in their house," said Donald Zuber, owner of Daddy's restaurant, just down the road. "I don't blame the gun. The gun didn't do it," he said.

Redding, who sat in his trailer Wednesday in front of a case full of rifles, reflected on the killing. He talked about how much his daughter was going to miss Matilda and echoed the views of other gun advocates.

"I don't think the gun is an issue," he said. "I think, maybe, it was a bad decision on the part of the father. Guns are part of our lives. In this part of the country, guns are like cars."

Obscure candidates defeat icons

By Fred Bayles
AP National Writer

A month ago, Michael Flanagan's congressional candidacy was relegated to such obscurity that his name was a trivia question on a Chicago radio talk show. Earlier this year, George Pataki was an unknown New York state senator facing a national Democratic icon.

Now the two Republicans are among a group of political giant killers, a group of mostly unknown candidates who have brought down household names like Foley, Cuomo, Richards and Rostenkowski.

The results were nearly as shocking for some of the victors as they were for the defeated.

"They're calling me a giant killer. I still can't believe it," said Steve Stockman, a 37-year-old accountant thrust into the national spotlight after his defeat of 21-term Democrat Jack Brooks, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

"We've taken out one of the most powerful men in Washington," said Tom Pauken, the Texas Republican Party chairman. "It's the shocker of the year."

But there were plenty of shocks to go around as the election dust cleared on Wednesday.

House Speaker Tom Foley conceded defeat Wednesday afternoon to Republican neophyte George Nethercutt, marking the first time in 134 years that a House speaker was denied re-election.

Flanagan, a 32-year-old contracts attorney who had never run for office, defeated Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

In Kansas, 18-year incumbent Democrat Dan Glickman, chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, was defeated by conservative state Sen. Todd Tiahrt.

Perhaps the biggest upsets came with the Democratic losses of the New York and Texas governorships.

Mario Cuomo, the spellbinding speaker at the 1984 Democratic Convention who dallied with a presidential bid, surrendered his 12-year governorship to Pataki, the former mayor of Peekskill, N.Y., hardly known to voters a year ago.

Ann Richards, the plain-speaking Texas politician who came to prominence for her jibes at George Bush, fell to the former president's son, George W. Bush.

"We had a great four years," Richards said. "This is not the end of the world. It is the end of a campaign."

The reasons for defeat varied.

Exit polls of Texas voters showed two of Bush's major campaign issues — cracking down on juvenile crime and improving schools — played well.

In New York, Pataki pledged to cut income tax rates by 25 percent and sign legislation reinstituting the death penalty. He constantly hit Cuomo with a simple theme: "Too liberal for too long."

In the national races, defeat seemed linked to the notion that the incumbents' ties were closer to the Washington power circle than to the voters they represented back home.

Rostenkowski, who staved off a primary challenge while under the cloud of a federal indictment, was a no-show until the last week of the campaign. Brooks' vote for the Clinton crime bill raised the ire of anti-gun control voters in his district.

Foley was labeled a big-government congressman out of touch with the district. Glickman was accused of voting against the wishes of his constituency in order to keep his committee chairmanship.

Company recalls 9,000 pounds of ground beef for possible taint

N.Y. Times News Service

The Department of Agriculture has announced the recall of 9,000 pounds of ground beef from Monfort Inc., a food processing firm in Greeley, Colo.

The company is voluntarily recalling the meat because it may be contaminated with E. coli, a bacteria that was responsible for the deaths of four children and the illness of hundreds of others in the Northwest last year.

Two products are affected by the recall, which was announced on Tuesday.

One is Monfort 100 Percent Pure Beef Ground Round in 3-pound packages with "freeze by 11/3/94" on the label, sold in Walmart stores in Arkansas and Texas.

The other is Manor House 100 Percent Pure Ground Beef in 5-pound packages marked "use or freeze by 11/03 EST969," sold in Safeway stores in Denver.

Inspectors in Florida found the bacteria, E. coli 0157:H7, in the Monfort meat during routine testing and notified the Department of Agriculture. So far, there have been no reported cases of illness.

The USDA began nationwide testing in retail stores and processing plants for the same bacteria on Oct. 17. Butthe agency has been sued by seven trade associations representing the retail and wholesale food business and the meat industry. The plaintiffs are seeking an injunction to prevent the agency from conducting tests, claiming it lacks the authority to test for bacteria in meat and that the testing is unfair because the sampling is too small.

Michael Taylor, acting undersecretary of agriculture for food safety and inspection services, said the inspections were intended to put the industry on notice.

"The Florida sampling program shows that through testing we have the opportunity when we do find E. coli to protect consumers by removing products from commerce," he said. "But more fundamentally it should encourage companies to do their own testing and put in place preventive measures."

In the announcement of the lawsuit last week, the plaintiffs acknowledged that 0.2 percent of the nation's meat supply is contaminated with E. coli. But, according to a 1992 publication, a supermarket survey of fresh meat showed that 3.5 percent of ground beef was contaminated with E. coli.

Consumers with questions can phone the USDA at (800) 535-4555.

People can help save environment

■ Commission to sponsor Texas Recycles Day, Tuesday.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Midlanders can help Keep Midland Beautiful Tuesday by observing Texas Recycles Day and by pitching in to help save the environment and reduce landfill waste.

Sponsored by the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission — formerly the Texas Water Commission — Texas Recycles Day was created to make the public more aware of recycling and the resources available in the community to recycle, according to Cindy Botes, Keep Midland Beautiful executive director.

She said Midland County residents throw away almost 1.1 tons of garbage per person each year — about 6.7 pounds per person a day.

In order to meet the EPA's national goal of reducing landfill waste by 25 percent, it is necessary to reduce the amount of waste

Bush vows to fight for education, welfare reform, tough crime laws

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov.-elect George W. Bush vowed Wednesday to fight for Texans' "clear mandate" to reform education and welfare, get tough on juvenile crime and stop frivolous lawsuits he believes are stifling business.

"I don't mind expending the political capital necessary to make it work, and so six months from now, if I stand here bloodied and bruised, it's not because I didn't try to do what the voters of Texas sent me to Austin to do," he said.

But Bush, who beat Democratic Gov. Ann Richards to become Texas' second Republican governor since Reconstruction, said he expects no trouble dealing with a Democrat-controlled state House and Senate.

"There's going to be a lot of Democrats who will support my plans to make our schools better, our streets safer and the welfare system more responsib-

Program encourages fathers to be involved with children

By Bob Banta
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — It's a heartwarming scene: mom in the hospital recovery room cooing over her newborn baby while dad hovers nearby, snapping pictures.

But if the couple aren't married, both need to get serious about dad's legal responsibilities while he is still cuddling the kid.

State officials say that means getting the man to sign a form saying he is the biological father of the child. If he doesn't, says Kammi Siemens of the Texas attorney general's office, he might flee his duties when the newness wears off.

Siemens manages a year-old program designed to persuade unmarried fathers to voluntarily acknowledge paternity while the child and mother are still at the hospital. The attorney general established the Volunteers in Paternity program to relieve the need to file paternity actions.

"Down the road, fatherhood turns out to be not as much fun as they thought," Siemens said. "Too many men end up not fulfilling their financial obligations to the child."

In addition to support payments, a child also can collect Social Security, health coverage and veteran's benefits from its biological father, as well as inherit part of the father's estate, Siemens said.

Money from the father often prevents a woman from having to become one of the 789,000 Texans who draw monthly from more than $547 million in federally and state-funded grants from the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

Janie Flores, a 40-year-old homemaker in San Antonio, knows how valuable a designated father can be.

She was 20 when she began dating a man in the Navy.

"I got pregnant, and he was in the military and he took off," she said. "He said he couldn't handle the situation."

Even though the man was present when her daughter, Lovenia, was born 16 years ago, he told Flores he couldn't support the child. Flores filed a paternity lawsuit, and a blood test proved he was the father.

The man sent Flores some child support money for Lovenia, but it was sporadic. "The payments stopped

RECYCLE: Residents can help Keep Midland Beautiful

going into the landfill, Ms. Botes said.

Recycling saves valuable landfill space, conserves natural resources and helps the community meet its goal, she said.

According to Keep Midland Beautiful information, a national waste profile shows paper and paperboard taking up 42 percent of landfill space; food and yard waste take up 25 percent. Glass and metal each take up 9 percent. Plastics take up 7 percent; a variety of other goods takes up 9 percent.

Ms. Botes said Midlanders can make a difference simply by recycling. The following items can be recycled in Midland: metals, newspapers, magazines, computer paper, cans of motor oil, household appliances, batteries, tires, plastic bags and cardboard.

She said all Midland school campuses have bins for aluminum cans and paper, including newspapers, magazines and catalogs.

Butts Recycling's Public Recycling Center, 26 W. Industrial Loop, has bins set up for a number of recycleables.

Ms. Botes said some materials aren't recycled in Midland because the markets, or recyclers, aren't available locally. Those materials include plastic and glass.

Keep Midland Beautiful is working on getting these services and will let the public know as soon as any services are arranged, Ms. Botes said.

She said Time Machine in Odessa takes plastics like milk jugs and soda pop bottles.

She said because there is no market for it, toilet paper rolls and cereal boxes aren't taken anywhere locally.

According to the Recycle Midland flyer, newspaper recycling is available in Midland as a result of the Reporter-Telegram establishing a new market for the recycled goods.

Ms. Botes said Midland recycles 40 tons of paper a week.

In observation of Texas Recycles Day, there will be a presentation from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Tuesday at First United Methodist Church, 305 Baird St., Room 101. Robert Cox of the Corporate Recycling Division of Texas General Land Office will speak and provide a demonstration of E-Source, a new on-line computer bulletin board service offered by the General Land Office.

E-Source helps Texas businesses and governmental entities locate and market recycled goods. The bulletin board can be accessed with a computer and modem 24 hours a day year round; there are no fees for using E-Source.

For more information on the E-Source program or to get Recycle Midland handouts, call 688-4190.

DIFFERENCE: Woman's habits rub off on friends papers stack up and discovered plastic grocery bags all over her house, she began wondering what effect all this waste would have on the environment.

"If one family of two can save all this stuff, look what the whole town could do," Ms. Weathers said. "This could save having to dig new tanks at the landfill."

"It makes me angry to see people put things that can be recycled in the Dumpster," she said.

She saves plastic bags including grocery sacks and bread bags, egg cartons, plastic foam from meat packaging, aluminum cans, paper bags; toilet paper and paper towel rolls and cereal boxes.

She collects money for her cans and takes the other items to schools. The egg cartons and plastic foam she donates to Carver Elementary School for the students to use.

Ms. Weathers follows the recycling pattern by reducing, reusing and recycling.

Not only is reducing and reusing good for the environment, it is also economically beneficial.

"I try to find uses for everything," she said. "And I enjoy doing it; I hate to throw anything away."

Her environment-conscious ways have influenced her husband, who assisted her in making sure 450 plastic bags were empty before hauling them off to be recycled. She said a friend has started saving items for her to recycle or reuse.

"I guess I'm rubbing off on them," she said with a smile as she looked into the next room to survey the bags and boxes of items ready to be taken away for recycling day.

GOVERNOR: Bush vows to reform welfare, education

le," said Bush, predicting that his 53 percent of the vote will fuel his agenda for change.

Bush said he already had spoken with House Speaker Pete Laney, D-Hale Center, and Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, who presides over the Senate. Bush also said his staff was meeting with Richards' aides to plan for the transition of power.

During a news conference at the same hotel where hours before people danced at his victory party, Bush extended a hand to those who didn't support him.

"I am not intending to divide our state. I want to unite our state," he said.

Asked about an issue that divided California — the newly passed Proposition 187 denying illegal immigrants access to public schools and most health and welfare benefits — Bush said he doesn't think Texas needs a similar measure.

"I think Texas has the obligation to educate all children, regardless of who their parentage is . . . Same with social services," he said. "I do believe that the federal government should do everything in its power to enforce the border."

Addressing an area in which Richards takes pride — the diversity of her appointments to state boards and commissions — Bush said, "I will be a governor who finds people from all walks of life to serve our state."

Bush repeated his themes of support for more local control of schools; holding juveniles responsible for the crimes they commit; keeping people from being caught up in a cycle of dependence on welfare; and reforming the legal system to eliminate "the dangers of frivolous and junk lawsuits."

The legal system change will help business and "enable Texas to expand its job base so that anybody who wants a job can have one," he said.

DAD: Program gets fathers involved with children

when he married someone else," Flores said. "He wanted to cast her out of his life, but I told him no matter how many women he married, he'd have to support his child."

Because she established paternity through court action, a private group called Child Support Enforcement of Texas was able to track down Lovenia's father.

Today, Flores gets $406 a month from the man to help support the teen-ager. "It helps keep a roof over her head, buy her clothes and buy food," Flores said. "Before this, I had to work two jobs."

There are no records showing how many women have filed paternity lawsuits using private attorneys. However, officials of the Texas attorney general's office say state-filed paternity lawsuits are increasing.

Under new federal regulations, the attorney general's office is required to find the absent fathers of children who might end up on AFDC programs and collect child support to offset the taxpayers' cost of funding AFDC.

In 1993, the latest year for which statistics are available, attorneys for the state filed suits establishing the paternity of 30,429 children in Texas. That number is 25 percent higher than the 24,289 established in 1992.

The Volunteers in Paternity program takes that responsibility away from the attorney general.

Under the program, staff members at 275 hospitals in Texas have been trained in methods of persuading unmarried fathers to voluntarily sign a form certifying paternity for their child while the baby is still at the hospital.

Since August 1993, nearly 11,000 paternities have been legally acknowledged through the program, Siemens said.

In Travis County, the state has established more than 1,000 paternity and child support orders during the past year, according to officials for the state attorney general's office.

While most of the lawsuits are instigated by mothers, a larger number than might be expected are filed by men.

To Russell Fish, obtaining paternity for his 5-year-old son, Tommy, meant becoming a part of the boy's life.

Fish's legal battle to establish paternity began four years ago in California, where he was a computer company executive.

"I had reached middle age and had decided I wanted to have a family," said Fish, 41.

He and a woman friend agreed to have a child without getting married, he said, but the relationship ended.

Several months later, Fish learned the woman was pregnant. "She did not want me to put my name on the birth certificate," Fish said.

He and Tommy's mother moved to Texas and engaged in a four-year legal battle. A court finally established paternity last spring, and Fish was awarded joint custody. He also pays $250 a month in child support for Tommy.

Financial responsibility for the boy is well worth it, he said.

Proposition 187: Many expect Texas to follow California's lead

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Esperanza Zendejas's school district is "exploding at the seams," in part from illegal immigrants.

But she looks at California's passage of the anti-immigration measure and hopes Texas won't follow that road.

"We should not place the responsibility on children for the actions of adults on this side or that side of the border," said Zendejas, herself an immigrant from Mexico who earned a doctorate at Stanford University and now is superintendent of Brownsville schools.

"Many of these children are going to be legal future residents," she said Wednesday, arguing that it's more productive for society to raise educated children, legal or not, than deprive them of means to better themselves.

California often is a political trend-setter. Some people expect Texas and other states experiencing high numbers of undocumented immigrants to follow California's lead.

"It's a question of when it will happen, not if," said Jim N. Taylor, a retired agriculture executive from Harlingen. "You sink any ship if you load too much on it. Any country has to control its borders."

But others note that Texas, currently in an economic expansion, has a less hostile attitude toward immigrants than California.

"Those politics of hate or immigrant bashing, you find it here, but I don't think the major politicians are lending any credence to it," said Gary Mounce, a University of Texas-Pan American political scientist.

"It might be an underlying attitude for some people, but you've got to have a politician like (California Gov.) Pete Wilson making political hay out of it to bring it to the forefront," Mounce said.

By a 2-to-1 margin Tuesday, California voters passed Proposition 187, the centerpiece of Wilson's successful re-election campaign.

The measure, which already faces constitutional challenges, cuts off education and other state services except emergency health care to illegal immigrants and requires teachers and doctors to turn them in.

But in Texas, both Hispanic and non-Hispanic voters revealed little concern over immigration in exit polls.

Fewer than 5 percent mentioned it as a top issue in 1,600 interviews with voters outside precincts around the state, conducted by Voter News Service, a cooperative of the four television networks and The Associated Press.

Still, analysts noted that Hispanic Texans remained loyal to Democrats as the state and nation as a whole shifted heavily toward Republicans.

An exit poll by Southwest Voter Research Institute found that three in four Hispanics supported Democratic Gov. Ann Richards and U.S. Senate candidate Richard Fisher, who each lost soundly.

"I imagine the Latino population feels fairly isolated after this election, and feels probably that their loyalty to the incumbent (Richards) did not pay off," said Southwest Voter's executive director, Robert Brischetto.

"Hispanics are not participating in the realignment in the South," Brischetto said. "My concern is that this will lead to something like Proposition 187 being used to punish this different minority."

With her 40,000-student school district growing by more than 1,000 students a year, Zendejas said she understands why California moved to cut back on services to illegal immigrants. One report attributed half of the growth in Brownsville schools to illegal residents from Mexico.

"In terms of facilities, we are exploding at the seams," she said.

But she expressed hope that Texas will work for "a more intelligent way of handling the problems we face, a manner in which you are not putting cultures against cultures and people against each other."

Confusing accident leaves 2 children dead, sends grandmother into shock

MESQUITE (AP) — A grandmother's routine trip to pick children up from piano lessons turned tragic in a confusing curbside accident that killed her grandson and her fiance's daughter.

According to police and witnesses, 48-year-old Sandra Spell had gone to get to the children about 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

She pulled her Toyota Camry in front of the home, and the children, 6-year-old Nathan Hankins and 10-year-old Kim Harlow, got in the car. Nathan got in the right rear seat and Kim got in front, police said.

As Ms. Spell began to pull away from the curb, the 6-year-old inexplicably got out or fell out of the back seat, said Mesquite police officer Bill Hedgpeth. Ms. Spell stopped suddenly when she heard his screams.

Kim opened her door and got out, screaming for Ms. Spell to reverse the car, police and a witness said. She did so in a panic, sending a car door slamming into the girl.

When told the children had died, Spell — still grieving from the death of her son in a car wreck two years ago — went into shock and was rushed to the hospital, police said.

She was treated at Medical Center of Mesquite and released.

The boy, who apparently was Ms. Spell's daughter's child, died from head injuries, according to the Medical Examiner's office, about an hour after he was hit. An autopsy was being performed on the girl Wednesday.

Neighbor Shana Jones said she heard the girl scream, "Back up, back up!"

"I turned around to see what happened," she said. "I saw someone stand up and hit the ground. I was freaking out."

Another neighbor, Donna Henry, said she tried to comfort the mortally wounded children by putting towels under their heads.

Ms. Spell joined her, holding her grandson in her arms and talking to him softly.

"She was saying 'Take a breath. Oh God, just breathe,'" Ms. Henry said.

When the ambulance arrived and carried the boy away, Ms. Spell "went to pieces."

Fired agents say their side of story was ignored

DALLAS (AP) — The two federal agents fired for not calling off last year's blown raid on the Branch Davidians said Wednesday their side of the story was ignored by investigators looking to blame someone for the tragedy.

Phillip Chojnacki and Charles Sarabyn said they were wrongly slammed in the Treasury Department report that led to the loss of their jobs as heads of the Houston office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"Someone had drawn a conclusion and the investigation was being manipulated to come up with that conclusion," Chojnacki said. "They took everybody else's opinion but ours."

Chris Peacock, spokesman for the Treasury Department, said that Chojnacki and Sarabyn were given a chance to give their side of the story when they met with investigators in Texas and Assistant Treasury Secretary Ronald Noble in Washington.

"All agents were giving an opportunity to be heard fully and completely in the review," Peacock said.

Chojnacki and Sarabyn, speaking publicly for the first time since the Feb. 28, 1993, attack against David Koresh and his followers, told The Associated Press that all along they felt like they were being shafted.

"I felt they had decided what I did before I ever talked to them," Sarabyn said. "I tried explaining things and they said, 'No, that's not what happened.' "

After talking to investigators, Sarabyn wrote a letter to Noble explaining that he felt like "they weren't listening to me."

Chojnacki, who was with the ATF 24 years, and Sarabyn, an 18½-year ATF veteran, were blamed in the Treasury report for not stopping the raid after hearing Koresh tell followers "the ATF is coming."

They say that several agents heard the statement, but none of them thought anything of it because Koresh, a doomsday prophet, said things like that often.

But this time Koresh was right and the Davidians were armed and ready when ATF agents attacked. Four officers and six sect members died in the confrontation that led to a 51-day standoff.

The stalemate ended April 19, 1993, when Koresh and more than 70 followers died in or just before a fire that destroyed their wooden home.

When the report was released Sept. 30, 1993, the pair were put on administrative leave. They had little doubt they'd eventually be back at work, although they expected to be demoted and-or transferred.

They were shocked to get a letter in February outlining possible action against them and were surprised again by an Oct. 26 letter saying they were fired.

"It was still beyond our wildest dreams that we would end up being terminated," Chojnacki said.

Now, in an attempt to be rehired, they're appealing their dismissal to the Merit Systems Protection Board, through which federal civil service workers can petition disciplinary actions.

They hope to have a hearing within about four months, although they'd be just as happy with an earlier settlement that includes them getting their jobs back.

MC plans Child Care Provider Conference

Staff Report

A Child Care Provider Conference, "Climbing the Ladder," will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday in the Fine Arts Auditorium at Midland College.

The purpose of the conference is to provide training that reflects the needs and interests of all providers who care for children.

Addition of black prosecutor in Simpson trial is necessary, DA says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A black lawyer was brought into the O.J. Simpson case to help an overworked prosecution team, not to sway the predominantly black jury with his race, the district attorney said Wednesday.

"We need more people," District Attorney Gil Garcetti said. "The defense has nine lawyers — nine lawyers in the courtroom. How many do they have in libraries? I don't know."

The addition of Deputy District Attorney Christopher Darden raises the prosecution team to seven lawyers and four clerks, the largest assembled since he took office in 1992, Garcetti told a news conference. The numbers will probably get larger before testimony in Simpson's murder trial begins, he said.

■ SIMPSON UPDATE: Call Cityline 560-2400, enter 6202.

This week's addition of Darden, the first black on the team, was criticized by defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr., who said it was suspicious coming shortly after a 12-person jury with eight blacks was seated to try a black man. Cochran, who has been on the Simpson team since summer, also is black.

Garcetti said Darden is a 13-year department veteran picked because he is best qualified for the job.

"It could very easily backfire," Garcetti said. "There could be a juror who says, 'Are you just bringing him on just because he's black?' The answer is obviously no."

He said the two lead prosecutors, Deputy District Attorneys Marcia Clark and Bill Hodgman "have literally been killing themselves" on the case.

"They have been working so hard," Garcetti said. "They have been sacrificing so much."

Meanwhile, the search for 15 alternates to augment the 12-member jury continued to creep along Wednesday. Six of eight prospects made it past the in-depth questioning phase, including three Hispanic men, a black woman, a white woman and a black man who said he believed Simpson was innocent of the killings but insisted he could put that aside and be fair.

"You're a tough case," Superior Court Judge Lance Ito told the man after prosecutors challenged him for bias. "I don't know what to do with you."

Ito ordered the man back Dec. 5 with other alternate prospects, at which time the panel of 15 alternates is expected to be selected. Prosecutors could dismiss him with a peremptory challenge at that time.

One black woman was dismissed after she demonstrated extensive knowledge of the case against Simpson.

"My concern is you have been poisoned by outside influences," Ito told her. "This is not your fault. It is the fault of the hysteria surrounding this case."

The judge recessed jury selection until Monday, giving lawyers two days off for the Veterans Day holiday.

Unlike the first batch of prospects questioned last month, the new jury candidates seemed unfazed by possible sequestration at a hotel for the duration of the trial, which could last until April.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A new relationship will affect your economic standing in a positive way. You begin to handle your money more wisely. Set aside some regular time for family activities. A teen-ager needs guidance and encouragement. Artistic and creative endeavors will produce lasting financial gains. Choose your associates with care. It is dangerous to surround yourself with yes-men.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Roy Scheider, songwriter Donna Fargo, comedian Sinbad, "227" actress Alaina Reed.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Let others know of your special skills and strong credentials. Your talents will make a lasting impression on someone in authority. Focus on projects that will bring widespread recognition.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not try to mix work with pleasure today. An alliance that has been strictly business should stay that way. Put yourself in a partner's shoes. Take a crash course in the art of negotiation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may have to work like a dog to stay on schedule this morning. Distractions are likely. Refuse to allow a financial upset to ruin your day. Find a fun way to unwind tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A creative idea will not get off the ground unless you go all-out to promote it. Work hard to attract favorable publicity. Your artistic powers are at a peak. Be bold!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A struggle could come to a successful close today. Sharing the applause with mate or business partner will pay handsome dividends later on. Someone at work may disappoint you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Work hard and you will end up in the right place at the right time. You now know, once and for all, where a current romance is headed. Steer clear of people who gossip.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Taking chances in romance or finance is too risky today. Be realistic; tune in to your ESP. An inspiring experience could transform your life. Sitting behind a desk all the time could lead to stagnation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get an agreement in writing. A worrisome detail could upset you needlessly. A companion who is under some stress may not want you to know why. Respect loved one's privacy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You would be smart to investigate a business offer further. There may be strings attached. Guard against appearing insensitive to another's needs. Although the wheels of justice grind slowly, you will get what you deserve.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your budget could end up in tatters if you go overboard when shopping. Keep your wallet and credit cards out of sight. Try a little tenderness with older relatives. Romance will heat up very soon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may find people dependent on you for a change. So long as you and a partner share the same ideals, an alliance should proceed smoothly. Do not feel intimidated by someone who has influence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can expect to fall under the spell of a dynamic person now. You might pick up the wrong signal concerning a business trend. Do not become so anxious that you make a premature move.

TODAY'S CHILDREN: Passionately independent, these little Scorpios will let you know exactly how they feel long before they learn to talk. Count on them to be excited by the new and exotic. Nothing bores these lively youngsters more than the routine and ordinary.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	4♣	4♡	5♣
Dbl	Pass	5♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ◇

Do not commit yourself to a play until it is absolutely necessary. For example, a finesse that will work at trick one will be just as successful at trick four or, for that matter, trick 12!

After a highly competitive auction, South became declarer at five hearts. South doubled five clubs, expecting to defeat that contract on sheer power. With such a distributional holding, North was having none of that. After all, the Law of Total Tricks states that with 11 trumps in the combined hands, the contract should be played, not defended, at the five-level.

West led the four of diamonds and the jack was covered by the queen and taken with the king. Declarer was looking at two spade losers and a diamond and, unless diamonds split evenly, there was no way the contract was getting home. So after winning the first trick declarer drew trumps, then led a diamond to the ace. When West showed out, declarer could not avoid losing three tricks — down one.

Look at the difference if declarer withholds dummy's jack of diamonds at the first trick. After winning the king, South draws the outstanding trumps, ruffs a club and ducks a spade. If West wins and returns a diamond, declarer is committed to the finesse. But as the cards lie West has no diamond, and East cannot lead the suit without giving away a trick. Declarer wins the spade return, ruffs the remaining club and then exits with a spade. The defenders now must either yield a ruff-sluff, or else East must lead away from the queen of diamonds. Either way, the diamond loser vanishes.

NEW YORK — Want an expert's opinion? The Mayflower Madam is going to cover the trial of the reputed Hollywood Madam.

Mayflower Madam to cover trial of Heidi Fleiss.

The cable channel America's Talking said it has hired Sydney Biddle Barrows to be a regular contributor, covering the Los Angeles trial of Heidi Fleiss.

"If you want an expert on war, you get a retired general," Barrows said. "I'm not exactly a general, but I am retired."

Fleiss is accused of procuring four women for prostitution. Prosecutors say she ran an exclusive call-girl ring whose clients purportedly included Hollywood's rich and famous.

Barrows once ran two $200-an-hour escort services in New York City. She pleaded guilty to prostitution a decade ago and was fined $5,000.

ATLANTA — Major-league baseball star David Justice and his wife, actress Halle Berry, have gone Hollywood — in search of a normal life.

They bought a house in the Hollywood Hills section of Los Angeles, where their neighbors include comedian Jerry Seinfeld and actress Sharon Stone. They go skating at the beach almost every day.

"Believe it or not, you feel like more of a normal person," Justice, the Atlanta Braves outfielder who had made his off-season home in the Atlanta suburb of Sandy Springs, told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

"I can go anywhere I want, do anything I want. Out there they are so used to seeing so many so-called celebrities that they are just used to it. It is nothing to them."

LOS ANGELES — Rap star Ice Cube is being sued by six men who claim they wrote a hit song with him and are still owed part of the profits.

Their lawsuit, filed Tuesday, claims they helped Ice Cube, whose real name is O'Shea Jackson, write "Wicked," a hit song on his 1992 album "Predator."

Lee Young, a lawyer representing Ice Cube, did not return a phone call seeking comment.

The six claim they had an oral agreement with Ice Cube to produce and supply the instrumental part of the song.

So far, they claim, they have received a combined $30,000 in production royalties and no songwriting royalties. They are seeking a total of $50,000 plus damages, said their lawyer, Neville Johnson.

Last week, a Florida judge ordered rapper Luther Campbell to pay rap artist MC Shy D $1.6 million in back royalties, punitive damages and interest.

LONDON — Italian fashion is joining with a Mozart opera on the London stage.

Giorgio Armani to design costumes for a Mozart opera.

Giorgio Armani will make his first venture into opera by designing costumes for an updated version of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte," to be directed by Jonathan Miller, the Royal Opera House said Wednesday.

"Jonathan Miller has devised an original and elegant way to present 'Cosi fan tutte' for us in London and then in Rome, which cried out for coolly elegant Italian costumes," said Nicholas Payne of the Royal Opera.

The production's international mix will include two American singers, mezzo-soprano Susan Graham and tenor Bruce Ford.

Opening night is Jan. 18. After eight performances, the production is to move to Rome.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Veteran comedian Pat Cooper says he's more than satisfied with his share of success.

"I'm 65 years old and making a living!" he says. "I've done it all. Jackie Gleason, Johnny Carson, David Letterman. I'm not the biggest star in the world, but I'm still there."

There, at least, until he knows it's time to walk off stage for good.

"I will quit a winner," says Cooper, appearing next week at Trump Plaza. "I don't have to be hit over the head with a bat."

The game originally was scheduled for Sept. 2 in Lubbock.

Texas Tech now will open its 1995 season at Penn State on Sept. 9 before returning to Lubbock to play Missouri. After an open date on Sept. 23, the Red Raiders will open Southwest Conference play at Baylor on Sept. 30.

Harper plans to play

IRVING — Alvin Harper plans to play Sunday against the San Francisco 49ers even if the injured Dallas Cowboys wide receiver is less than 100 percent.

"My knee is feeling much better," Harper said on Wednesday after he tested his left knee ligament strain by riding a stationary bike. "I'll be in uniform and on the field Sunday during the warmups."

Harper's hard week took another twist after he left practice Wednesday. He borrowed Michael Irvin's Mercedes Benz and was in a parking lot when he said another vehicle crashed into the car he was driving. The Cowboys said Harper banged his ribs but was OK.

Before the mishap, Harper vowed he was ready for the 49ers.

Harper said "I'm going to play Sunday regardless of what the doctors say. I was hurt worse against Minnesota last year. My knee didn't swell up as much this time. There is more flexibility."

Harper has caught six touchdown passes, a career-high for him during the regular season. He got hurt in the 38-10 victory over the New York Giants when he twisted the knee trying to catch a pass.

"I'm probably 45 percent and if I can get to 50 percent I'll scare most opponents," Harper said. "I can at least take some pressure off Irvin."

Worthy retires

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — James Worthy, the last link to the "Showtime" days of the Los Angeles Lakers, will retire today.

The team said Wednesday night the retirement of the seven-time all-star and MVP of the 1988 NBA Finals will be announced at an afternoon news conference at the Forum.

Worthy, 33, started this season on the injured list because of tendinitis in his left knee and wasn't being counted on by new coach Del Harris to play a prominent role.

He left the team last month when his mother died in North Carolina and he hasn't been with the Lakers since.

He averaged 17.6 points and 5.1 rebounds for his career and leaves as the 54th leading scorer in NBA history with 16,320 points. Last season, he played in 80 games and averaged 10.2 points, 2.3 rebounds and 20 minutes a game — all career lows.

MCHS returns to main road

■ Midland Christian begins playoff run for fourth state title against Fort Worth Temple Christian Saturday.

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Midland Christian used some bumpy side streets on its journey to the playoffs this year.

But the Mustangs have returned to the main road and now travel a familiar throughway as the favorite to win their fourth consecutive Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools six-man championship

Alex Awtry

Nash

The Mustangs lost three games this year. An unusual occurrence for a team that came into the season with a 32-game winning streak that dated back to 1991. Midland Christian (7-3, 3-0 in District 1) even had unseemly 1-2 and 4-3 records earlier in the season.

But the Mustangs, whose first round opponent is Fort Worth Temple Christian (7-2-1) at Midland Christian at 2 p.m. Saturday, are probably the team to beat in the TAPPS six-man playoffs. That despite having more losses than six of the eight playoff teams.

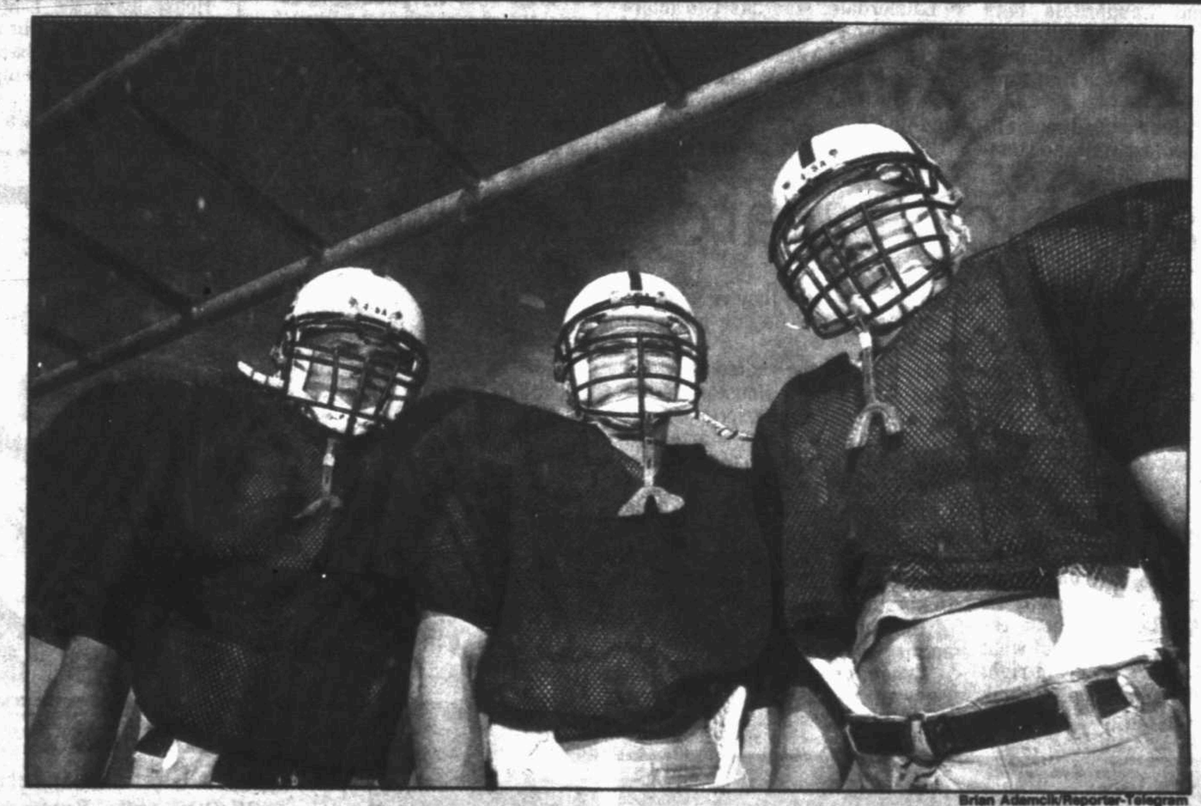

"We can go as far as we want to if we make sure we take care of business," said Midland Christian coach James Blake, whose Mustangs are ranked as the top TAPPS six-man team in the state by Walk Sports Services. "The teams that come out of our district are ... the contenders and I don't see any difference from that this year."

Midland Christian got something of a break this year when El Paso Jesus Chapel, the team it beat in the championship game last year, had too big an enrollment for TAPPS six-man and instead played an independent schedule. The Chargers beat the Mustangs in El Paso earlier this year 36-12.

The Mustangs beat Temple Christian 56-6 in a state semi-final last season. Both teams are rebuilt from last year. But the Mustangs beat Arlington Texas Christian Sept. 23, 38-23, and Temple Christian lost to Texas Christian last

Lee secondary plays primary role

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

At the beginning of the season, Midland Lee knew that the offensive side of the ball was going face a revamping since no returning backfield starters were on hand.

But the one team strength seemed to lie in the Lee defensive secondary where there was some depth and senior leadership. Seniors Kevin Jordan and Lee Lauderdale returned to the safety positions. Returning cornerback Dedrick Adams, however, moved from the defensive side of the ball to quarterback to help the ailing

'Boys crave respect

■ Despite winning the past two NFC championship games, the Cowboys feel San Francisco does not respect them.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — After three consecutive victories over the San Francisco 49ers, the Dallas Cowboys feel the heat is on their rivals heading into Sunday's NFC showdown in Candlestick Park.

"This week is what it's all about but I can guarantee the 49ers we're no Michael Moorer," said offensive lineman Nate Newton, referring to the vanquished foe of heavyweight champion George Foreman.

Fullback Daryl Johnston said the Cowboys feel that despite two consecutive NFC championship victories over the 49ers "they still don't respect us. They don't think it's going to happen again. They don't think they're going to lose to us again."

Johnston said it's just another game to the Cowboys. The 49ers have all the pressure.

"This is just week 10 on our schedule," Johnston said. "It's not going to make or break us."

The Cowboys are 8-1, best in the NFL, and San Francisco is 7-2.

Quarterback Troy Aikman said the game has possible home-field playoff significance.

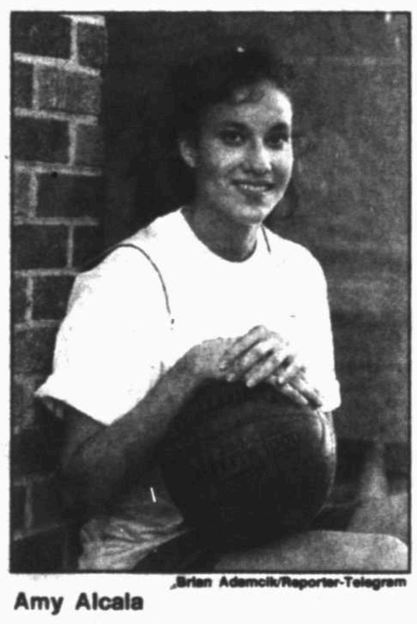

"It's not any more important than the other 15 games will be," Aikman said. "It could have some significance to the home-field but beyond that it's not any more important. The fans and the media are excited. The media has been pointing to this game since the schedules came out."

"We've won the Super Bowl the last two years and that's their goal. We came out of nowhere two years ago to beat the 49ers in the NFC title game. Last year we proved it was no fluke. I guess San Francisco sees the game as a measuring stick."

Aikman said the fact the Cowboys played a Monday night game and will have to fly to the West Coast should have no bearing.

"We usually handle that real well,"

Amy Alcala

Alcala signs with SWC program

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

On the day after casting her ballot for the first time since turning 18, Midland High's Amy Alcala still had another important form to fill out.

Surrounded by her Lady Dawg teammates, three television cameras and about 20 friends and family members, Alcala made her early verbal decision of playing basketball at the University of Baylor final by signing a letter of intent Wednesday at the Midland High gym.

And when the MHS senior signed her name to the last of the several sheets of paper in front of her, the small group applauded and Alcala let out a long-awaited sigh of relief.

"It's been a while since all this recruiting started with colleges and them calling and letters and stuff like that and it just got to be real stressful," Alcala said.

Alcala took advantage of the NCAA's early signing period. Like Abilene Cooper boys' star Andrae Patterson of Abilene Cooper, who signed early with Indiana, Alcala felt like she avoided what could have become a distracting situation.

"It took a lot off my shoulders," said Alcala. "I got this out of the way. I can now focus on the season. I've felt so distractive the last month or so, not knowing where I was going to be and people asking me and I didn't have an answer for them."

Alcala, who has been getting loads of correspondence from colleges since leading the Lady Dawgs to the District 4-5A title as a sophomore in 1993, said

Owls turn back clock for title run

Rice finds itself in a precarious position. The Owls can go to the Cotton Bowl for the first time since 1958 if it can defeat Baylor and Houston and TCU must lose one game. The pressure is mounting as the weeks go by. Where does a team turn when the heat is turned on.

Petitt

Rice has turned to coach Ken Hatfield. Hatfield led the Arkansas Razorbacks to the conference championship in 1989 and he has used that keep this young Owl team focused.

"I have told them about other championship games and teams," said Hatfield on Wednesday. "I've told them that it all boils down to execution and think that has given them some assurance."

Ironically, the 1958 team faced Navy in the Cotton Bowl. This year the Owls meet Navy in the next-to-last game next weekend.

With fans holding their breath from Houston to Lubbock, the conference readies for its dash to the finish line.

Baylor 28, Rice 20: Texas Tech fans hope that Spike Dykes sends a book on "How to Win Football Games After an Open Date" to Baylor coach Chuck Reedy. The Bears have had two weeks to prepare for the ground-oriented offense of the Owls. The game should move quickly with the top two rushing attacks in the league colliding. The Bears must eliminate turnovers, they have committed 21 this season, second highest in the league. Rice has won three of the past five meetings.

Texas 35, Houston 20: John Mackovic claims he has been in a depressed state following a collision during the Colorado game on Oct. 1. It may not have been the hit, but the fact that Texas has lost three of five, all to conference teams, during that five-week run to make him depressed. James Brown is likely to start for the Longhorns, who still need one win to qualify for a bowl game. Texas must stop Houston's Jermaine Williams, but the Longhorns have had trouble stopping the opposition's big back (ie. Chris Martin of Pittsburgh and Rashaan Salaam of Colorado). Texas should have enough firepower to get by the Cougs.

TCU 33, SMU 17: TCU has quietly put itself in a position to take the SWC crown. The Horned Frogs lead the league in total offense with 410.6 yards per game. Running back Andre Davis leads the league in rushing with 136 yards per game and is second in receiving with 4.9 catches per game. Quarterback Max Knake is tops at quarterback with 1,859 yards and 19 touchdowns. SMU's Ramon Flanigan has kept most defenses confused but he has no support from his backfield.

Texas A&M 30, Louisville 10: This has become a resting stop in the Aggies' run to the Cotton Bowl for the last two years. A&M has won the past two meetings by an average score of 41-12. A&M could be ripe for a letdown after an emotional 34-10 win over Texas last week in Austin. Louisville (5-4) has had 10 days to prepare for A&M after a loss to Boston College.

Texas Tech 35, Southwest Louisiana 13: Some would consider this an automatic 'W' with Spike Dykes' 8-1-1 record following an open date at Tech, but the Ragun' Cagun's are 5-4 this year and would like to spoil a Parent's Day crowd in Lubbock. The Raiders need two wins to qualify for a bowl and must defeat Houston and TCU to have a shot at the Cotton Bowl. The Red Raiders are 13-3 the final three games of the season since 1989.

Last week 2-0, overall 38-10 (.792).

REBELS: Secondary leads defense

offense.

However, senior Isaac Millican, a reserve last year, was back and ready to assume starting duties. The Rebels did have to call on sophomore cornerback John Norman for rushed duty, but he held up his end of the bargain with a team leading three interceptions. Senior Michael Barber filled in when needed.

But the pressure was on the three seniors to see that the job got done in the secondary.

"I don't think you can say we were the strength of the team because we play as a whole team," Lauderdale said. "But we have held up without injuries and have had some good games. Still, I don't think we have played to our potential because we've had too many small mistakes that add up to not winning against the good teams we have played."

Jordan, who is also the league's leading punter while averaging just under 41 yards per punt, feels the team has done well despite the three league losses.

"Getting to the playoffs shows a lot of hard work by this team. We had a lot of the people in the skill positions gone. It doesn't matter how you get to the playoffs as long as you are there."

Jordan also thinks that Saturday's 1 p.m. bi-district outing against No. 10-ranked Amarillo High is a key to the Lee overall season.

'Maybe, this is the game where we get some recognition for what we have done. I feel like this is our second chance to show people what this team really is. It's a chance to show that we belong in the playoffs.'

— Lee Lauderdale
Midland Lee defensive back

"This is a huge game for us. This is a chance to gain some momentum and get our attitude sky high."

Lauderdale agreed, "Maybe, this is the game where we get some recognition for what we have done. I feel like this is our second chance to show people what this team really is. It's a chance to show that we belong in the playoffs."

Millican said, "I'm glad we're in the playoffs. We just need to play our best and give everything we've got. Amarillo High is really a good team and we can't make mistakes."

Jordan and Lauderdale both knew the pressures of starting going into the season, but Millican experienced that for the first time this season.

"I played behind a good senior in Brian Quinonez last year, so starting was new for me," Millican said. "I didn't feel any more pressure than anyone else, but I did find out that you have to work a lot harder as a starter."

Lee head football coach Earl Miller, a hard man to please on the defensive side of the ball, says the overall effort here has been good, but he wants even more.

"In certain areas, the secondary has done a great job, like on run support," Miller said. "However, our intereceptions are down this year and I felt we would have more takeaways. We've dropped a number of potential interceptions.

"Still, they have come up with some big plays. Lauderdale gave us an interception with a long return against Permian to give us a chance to win."

Lauderdale, who has two interceptions this year, looked to have an open field when he intercepted a Permian pass near his own goal line. He was chased down near mid-field.

"A lot of the guys were joking with me that if I had more speed I would have scored on that play, but we watched the film and he had a 15-yard head start," Lauderdale said. "There is no question that would have made my season if I had taken that back for a touchdown."

Jordan is having his best season ever punting the ball, and with the average close to 41 yards per boot, he always seems to get Lee out of trouble.

"I started punting in the seventh grade and this is the best season average-wise that I've ever had," Jordan said. "I seem to be hitting the ball well with the wind and against the wind. It gives us a fighting chance if you keep good field position."

Jordan, a second baseman on Lee's baseball team, hit .494 last season when the Rebels went undefeated in district play. He hopes to play baseball in college, but would also like a chance to punt.

"I will definitely try to play baseball in college. I would like to go D-1, but I'll go where I can, and I would like to try punting in college if the opportunity was there."

If Lee can pull off the major upset against the highly touted Sandies Saturday, you can bet the Lee secondary will play a big role in the game.

MCHS: Blake wary of Fort Worth Temple

Nonetheless, Blake thinks Temple Christian is better than Texas Christian. And he's wary of first-round playoffs opponents.

"When you get to the playoffs it seems like the first game is always the hardest," Blake said of Saturday's state quarterfinal game. "So we're making sure we're mentally prepared."

Temple Christian's Eagles return only three players from last year.

"We were picked to finish fourth in our district (but) we've made every goal we've set this year except winning district," Eagle coach Robby Ballew said. "I was nervous this year. We were trying to rebuild a program and I didn't want to get 45 (point ruled) every game. I didn't want to get (the players) discouraged and not come back for football next year."

Tailback-quarterback Andre Houze leads the Eagle offense with 1,500 yards throwing and 500 rushing. Linebacker Brad Neill paces the Temple Christian defense.

"(Houze) has got a real good arm on him and he runs well," Blake said. "Those teams down in that area run what I call an invert. Some people call it the shotgun. They do a lot of sweeps and run a lot of leads but they throw the ball quite a bit."

Midland Christian's offense features Michael Nash, the team's leading rusher (5.8 yards per carry) and scorer with 78 points. Fullback Allan Awtry has scored 64 points for the Mustangs and tailback Cory Patteson 58. Quarterback Alex Awtry has completed 75 of 105 passes for 1,164 yards and 15 touchdowns. Twelve players have scored in the Mustangs balanced offensive attack.

The two coaches decided to play in Midland with the agreement that the teams would play in Fort Worth the next time they meet in the playoffs.

Midland Christian will play the winner of Friday's Winston (8-1)-Waco Christian Fellowship (8-2) game in Bynum if it beats Temple Christian. In the other TAPPS six-man games Texas Christian (8-2) plays Abilene Christian (7-3) and Bryan Allen Academy (8-2) plays Waxahachie Cornerstone (8-2).

ALCALA: Bears sign guard

the heavy recruiting started at the end of summer when recruiters can actually make personal contact with a potential player.

"At first it was neat to know that I was going to have a chance to play somewhere," Alcala said. "And then after a while it got hectic. They wanted to know what I wanted to do. I didn't know. And the questions kept coming and coming and I didn't know how to answer them. Finally, I just talked to my parents about it and figured out what would be best for me, what would suit me most," she said.

"If I hadn't found the place I wanted to go early, I wouldn't have signed early," Alcala said. "But I visited three places and as soon as I went to Baylor, I knew that's where I wanted to go. It wasn't a very hard decision."

Alcala turned down Texas Christian, Wayland Baptist, Sam Houston and Texas-San Antonio before choosing Baylor.

"I looked at this high school program that I came in to and it was sort of at the bottom working its way up," Alcala said about the Lady Dawgs. "That's kind of what I see with Baylor's program right now. It's on its way up. I think with coach (Sonja) Hogg coming into the program, they're going to really turn the Baylor program around."

Alcala said she visited Wayland Baptist and Sam Houston before taking her decisive trip to Waco.

"(When the trips started) I would have liked to go to the Southwest Conference but I wanted to try different size of schools and see which one I fit into the best," Alcala said. "When I went to Wayland Baptist, I really liked it. I really did. But it didn't offer some of the things I was interested in and it wasn't as big.

"When I went to Baylor, I just knew that was where I was supposed to be," she said.

In the championship game, the Geckos beat the Lubbock Comets, 3-1, as Jimmy Butler scored his first hat trick, one on an assist by Pervier.

The Geckos travel to Abilene in two weeks to defend their title.

The Pink Panthers went 5-0 in the tournament and did not allow a goal. The Amarillo Bears finished second in the same division with the Odessa Gators coming in third.

Beals set to race in Baja 1000 run

MEXICALI, Mexico — The Beal brothers of Midland are going to try it once again.

Kelly, Spencer and Carty Beal will team again Friday in an effort to compete in the Baja 1000. This is the fourth time they have teamed to enter the famous race that runs the length of the Baja penisula over all kinds of surfaces.

The Beals have entered their four-wheel drive, modified, Nissan Pathfinder in the Class 3 Division.

The race begins Friday morning with 141 entries set to begin the race. Nowhere near that number will complete the race.

"We hope to cross the finish line in less than 26 hours," Spencer Beal said of the team's goal this year.

Abell wins eighth grade M-O crown

Midland Abell has won the Midland-Odessa eighth grade football championship with a perfect 9-0 record, two full games ahead of 7-2 Odessa Crockett.

COWBOYS: Oddsmakers favor 49ers

(From 1C)

Aikman said.

Wide receiver Michael Irvin said the game "is more of a rivalry for them than it is for us. All I know is we'll be ready. We have the mentality we're going to win no matter who we play."

The Cowboys found humor in the fact they are three-point underdogs.

"I love being the underdog," said running back Emmitt Smith. "That's great. Being the underdog doesn't mean anything. You only lose if you think you're going to lose. I think it's funny we're the underdog."

Smith said the 49ers have built their team trying to matchup with the Cowboys.

"It would be a big feather in their pocket if they win," Smith said. "But it's not the end of the world to us if we lose. In fact, I've seen teams like Detroit beat us and have trouble winning another game because it takes so much out of them."

Coach George Seifert of the 49ers agreed all the heat is on San Francisco.

"I agree the pressure is on us," Seifert said. "Dallas is the world champion and we're trying to catch up again."

Moon completed 33-of-57 passes for 420 yards and three touchdowns in the Vikings' 21-20 victory over New Orleans on Sunday. In winning his second weekly honor of the season, he beat out Dallas running back Emmitt Smith, Chicago quarterback Steve Walsh and Minnesota wide receiver Cris Carter.

Americans capture turf war on ice

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Combining elements of professional wrestling and Broadway theater, international team competition came to figure skating Wednesday night

■ Ice Wars

On a night featuring some spectacular skating and some uninspired stuff by eight of the world's most renown performers — all of them far more relaxed than they could possibly be for an Olympics or world championships — the U.S. team, led by the wonderful work of Kristi Yamaguchi, won the technical program of Ice Wars.

The finals are Saturday night in Providence, R.I.

Like anything the WWF might have offered in its heyday, the results were predictable: a tight lead for the U.S. team over the world squad. Thanks to Yamaguchi, clearly the best of the four women competitors, the United States led 114.85 to 113.55.

The crowd of 10,559 at Nassau Coliseum didn't care that Oksana Baiul, Nancy Kerrigan and Paul Wylie had major problems with their jumps. All three displayed the artistry that carried them to Olympic fame, although Kerrigan — in her first competition since finishing second to Baiul at Lillehammer — lacked fire, failing to complete a triple jump.

That left it up to Yamaguchi, the 1992 Olympic champion, and Katarina Witt, winner of the previous two Olympics, to carry the show for the women.

Yamaguchi, dressed like a psychedelic soldier from Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, was sensational. Her unusual music sounded like something from the Roaring '20s to a disco beat. But there was nothing unusual about her performance, which featured a strong triple lutz-double toe loop combination and dazzling footwork and spins.

Witt nearly matched her, although her technical maneuvers were not as difficult. Both far exceeded the skating of their counterparts.

From the outset, the men were stronger in the technical program in this first international team event in what is being dubbed the "New Era" of figure skating. Viktor Petrenko, the 1992 Olympic champion, and Kurt Browning established a lead for the world team by barely outperforming Brian Boitano and Paul Wylie.

Hakeem's 45 'paces' Rockets

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Hakeem Olajuwon's 43 points and 16 rebounds carried Houston past Indiana in a game in which the crowd pelted the floor with trash to protest an official's foul call.

Indiana's Mark Jackson hit a 3-pointer with 30 seconds remaining to cut Houston's lead to 105-101, but Sam Cassell and Mario Elie each hit a pair of free throws to secure the Houston victory. Reggie Miller, who had 25 points, attempted a 3-point shot with nine seconds left, but was called for an offensive foul.

Play was suspended for 10 minutes as angry Pacer fans, who had already seen Indiana coach Larry Brown ejected, flooded the Market Square Arena floor with trash.

Spurs 109, Jazz 101

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson's 30 points and 17 rebounds directed San Antonio to a win over Utah.

The win gave the Spurs a measure of revenge against the team that eliminated them in the first round of the Western Division playoffs last season.

Sean Elliott scored 21 points for San Antonio, Terry Cummings 17 and Chuck Person added 15, including three 3-pointers.

Karl Malone led Utah with 23 points and 15 rebounds. John Stockton added 19 points and a game-high 13 assists. Felton Spencer scored 14 points.

Suns 106, Hawks 102

PHOENIX — Kevin Johnson made four free throws in the last 11 seconds to give Phoenix a win over Atlanta, winless in four games this season.

After Johnson made his first two foul shots to give the Suns a 104-100 lead, the Hawks took a timeout. Mookie Blaylock missed a 3-pointer and Dan Majerle got the rebound, whipping a quick pass to Johnson, who was fouled again with five seconds left.

Danny Manning scored 16 of his 30 points in the third period.

Charles Barkley missed his third straight game, this time with the flu. Earlier, he was out with an eye injury.

76ers 98, Bullets 97

PHILADELPHIA — Dana Barros' steal and layup with seven seconds left gave Philadelphia its first victory of the season, over Washington.

Jeff Malone had 22 points for the 76ers, including 13 in the fourth period when Philadelphia rallied from an 18-point deficit.

Tom Gugliotta led the Bullets with 19 points and 10 rebounds, and Rex Chapman also had 19.

The Bullets took a 83-65 lead on a jumper by Don MacLean with 7:54 to play before Philadelphia went on a 20-8 run and closed to 91-85 on two free throws by Clarence Weatherspoon.

Sharone Wright had 17 points and Barros 16 for Philadelphia.

MacLean had 17 for Washington, which was charged with eight technical fouls in the game, all for illegal defense.

Nets 110, Bulls 109

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Kenny Anderson hit a game-winning jumper with 17 seconds to play as New Jersey blew a late 10-point lead but came back to defeat Chicago.

The victory in their home opener was the Nets' first in the season after three losses under new coach Butch Beard.

Lakers 122, Timberwolves 99

MINNEAPOLIS — Rookie Eddie Jones scored 31 points as Los Angeles beat Minnesota, its fourth double-digit loss in as many games.

Cedric Ceballos added 25 points as the Lakers smothered Minnesota with their pressure defense and forced 23 turnovers as the Wolves lost their 14th straight game dating to last season.

Three of Minnesota's four losses this season have been by 20 or more points, including a 32-point loss to Houston Saturday that ranked as the worst home defeat in team history.

Magic 130, Hornets 128, OT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Shaquille O'Neal had 46 points and 20 rebounds and Nick Anderson's layup with one second left in overtime gave Orlando a victory over winless Charlotte.

The Magic rallied from an 18-point deficit for the win and led by two points in overtime on five separate occasions. But the Hornets stayed even to the final second as Robert Parish hit two free throws with 22 seconds left.

Alonzo Mourning fired a desperation 30-footer at the buzzer that fell short.

Mourning, who sat out the first three games of the season with a toe injury, finished with 26 points in his season debut. Larry Johnson had 25 points for the Hornets, and Dell Curry added 20.

Horace Grant had 25 points and 15 rebounds for the Magic.

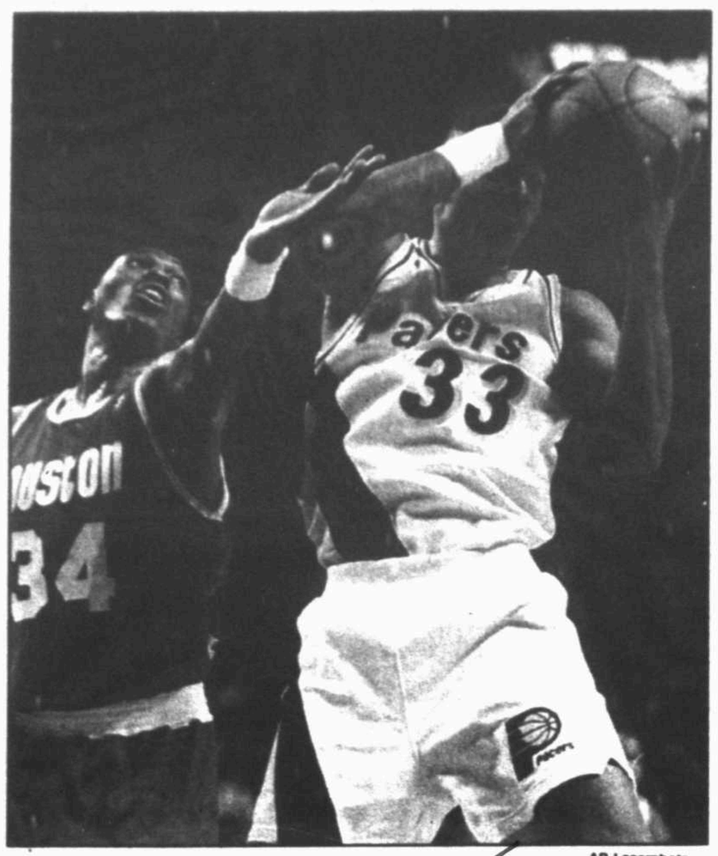

Kings 108, Sonics 100

TACOMA, Wash. — Mitch Richmond scored 28 points and Walt Williams added 19, leading Sacramento to a victory over Seattle.

The Kings, off to a surprising 2-0 start, broke an eight-game losing streak to the Sonics and won for the first time on the Sonics' home court since April 9, 1990.

The Sonics trailed by 18 in the third quarter but rallied for an 89-88 lead with 4:45 left in the game. The Kings responded with an 11-1 spurt for a 99-90 lead capped by Richmond's 3-pointer with 2:58 left.

Shawn Kemp led the Sonics with 21 points. Sarunas Marciulionis added 20 points.

Nittany Lions make run for roses Saturday

By Rick Warner
AP Football Writer

The last time Penn State played in the Rose Bowl, Warren Harding was president, Jack Dempsey was heavyweight champion and Joe Paterno wasn't born.

The second-ranked Nittany Lions can return to Pasadena with a victory at Illinois on Saturday. A win would clinch the Big Ten championship for the Lions, whose only previous Rose Bowl appearance was a 14-3 loss to Southern Cal in 1923.

"Growing up in Big Ten country, I always thought about playing in the Rose Bowl," said tailback Ki-Jana Carter, who is from Westerville, Ohio. "It's the granddaddy of them all, the most prestigious of all the bowl games."

If Penn State wins the Rose Bowl and goes undefeated, it could win the national championship if No. 1 Nebraska stumbles. To keep those title hopes alive, the Lions must play better than they did last week, when they gave up two touchdowns in the final two minutes of a 35-29 win over Indiana.

"We weren't quite as sharp as we've been," Paterno said. "We got a little sloppy at the end."

Saturday's game matches Penn State's explosive offense against Illinois' dynamic defense. The Lions are leading the nation in total offense (533.5 yards per game) and second in scoring (48.4 points), while the Illini are fourth in total defense (253.6 yards) and second in points allowed (11.3).

In this case, good offense beats good defense. The Lions, favored by 11½ points, simply have too many weapons ... PENN ST. 31-14.

NHL strike may near end

NEW YORK (AP) — Hopeful signs of ending the NHL lockout emerged Wednesday, with one management source telling The Associated Press it's possible the season could resume next month.

"If the talks continue this way, they could be playing hockey by the first of December," said the source, speaking on the condition he not be identified. "A lot will hinge on tomorrow's meeting."

Others were not as optimistic, but no one dismissed the possibility completely.

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman and union head Bob Goodenow met for seven hours Monday and players have softened their stance against a rookie salary cap, the source said.

They are to meet Thursday, possibly in Buffalo, N.Y. This marks the first time the sides talked twice in one week since Oct. 4-5.

"There are still a lot of issues on the table," the source said. "Everything depends on how well the meeting goes Thursday. But the fact that they met Monday and are meeting again Thursday is a major breakthrough. They did make some headway (on Monday)."

In an ESPN radio interview Wednesday, Brian Burke, vice president in charge of hockey operations for the NHL, said, "I am optimistic that a deal can be worked out in time to save the season."

It was a direct reversal of Burke's position last week when he said he felt the NHL was at risk of losing the season.

"We will find out in the next couple of days whether there is momentum or not," Burke told The Canadian Press. "I think it is a real good start. It was the best discussion we had in months.

"The next meeting is key in my mind because that good start could turn into momentum or it could grind to a halt and that, to me, is going to be the key of whether I am optimistic or not."

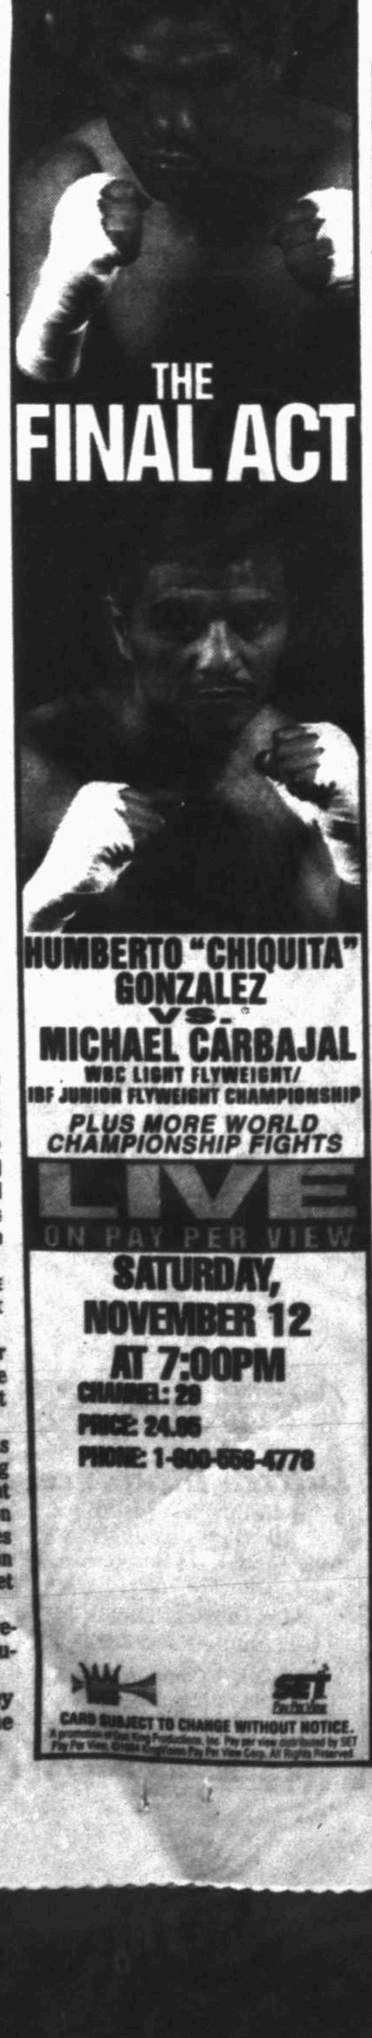

Goodenow said Wednesday the union had not made any specific proposal to the league.

"Since the league rejected our last proposal on Oct. 10, we have not made another proposal — not at all," Goodenow told the CP.

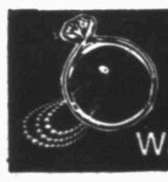

The rookie salary cap issue has been one of the major stumbling blocks in the owners' lockout that began Oct. 1, the day the season was scheduled to start. The sides also disagree on a luxury tax plan to raise money for small-market teams and salary arbitration.

Agent Jay Grossman, who represents 60 players, expressed "cautious optimism."

"It's a sign in the sense that they had substantive discussions," he said.

NEW YORK — Gasoline futures prices dropped sharply Wednesday on news of an unexpected increase in U.S. supplies. Crude oil moved lower as OPEC reported higher production levels and Iraq moved closer to recognizing Kuwait.

The December contract had gained 1.46 cents Tuesday amid unfounded rumors of a refinery fire and expectations that a weekly industry report would reveal a decline in national gasoline stocks due to last month's Houston flooding, which ruptured a key pipeline to the Northeast.

However, after the market closed Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute reported that U.S. gasoline inventories increased by 4.3 million barrels in the week ending Nov. 4 to 202.35 million barrels. Refineries operated at 90.1 percent of capacity, up 2.8 percent from the previous week, the API said.

Oil futures prices declined despite a reduction in supplies. The contract for December's deliveries of light sweet crude oil settled at $18.16 per barrel, down 42 cents.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 50 cents to $16.50 a barrel.

The API report said crude stocks fell 798,000 barrels last week to 337.68 million barrels.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for December's deliveries settling at $1.775 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 2.1 cents.

Dollar surges

NEW YORK — The dollar surged to a four-week high against the German mark and advanced against other key currencies Wednesday after the Republicans captured both houses of the U.S. Congress for the first time since the 1950s.

But in domestic trading, the currency slid slightly from its highs for the day as more cautious investors worried that a Republican-controlled Congress facing Democratic President Bill Clinton would mean gridlock in Washington.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 1.5273 marks, up from 1.5093 late Tuesday.

The dollar also was changing hands in New York at 97.81 Japanese yen, up from 97.13.

Rates cool city's housing sales

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland housing sales for September show a balanced, if slowing, market.

"Typically this is our slow time of year," said Pat Orseth, president of the Midland Association of Realtors. "Summer transfers are pretty much over when school starts."

In September, 133 homes were sold, compared to 110 in September 1993. However, year-to-date totals are reversed, with 916 homes being sold so far in 1994, compared to 1,157 for the same nine-month period of 1993.

Not only have moves by residents decreased, but higher interest rates have also cooled the market, Ms. Orset said.

"When you look at the overall year, higher interest rates have probably impacted sales," Ms. Orseth said. "At this time last year, the lower rates contributed to the market staying busier. The market is still OK; it's normal for this time of year. Last year was the exception just because we had that wonderful interest rate."

Rates — which hovered at 30-year lows last year — have climbed to 9 percent.

Listings are up, with 765 active listings seen in September, compared to 683 a year earlier. Ms. Orseth said active listings hit an all-time low of 618 in January of this year.

Sellers can expect to get a better price for their home this year and to sell it faster.

According to the association, the average sale price for a home rose to $97,111 in September — up sharply from $87,244 in September 1993. For the year-to-date, the average sale price in 1994 is $97,111, compared to $83,364 for the same period in 1993.

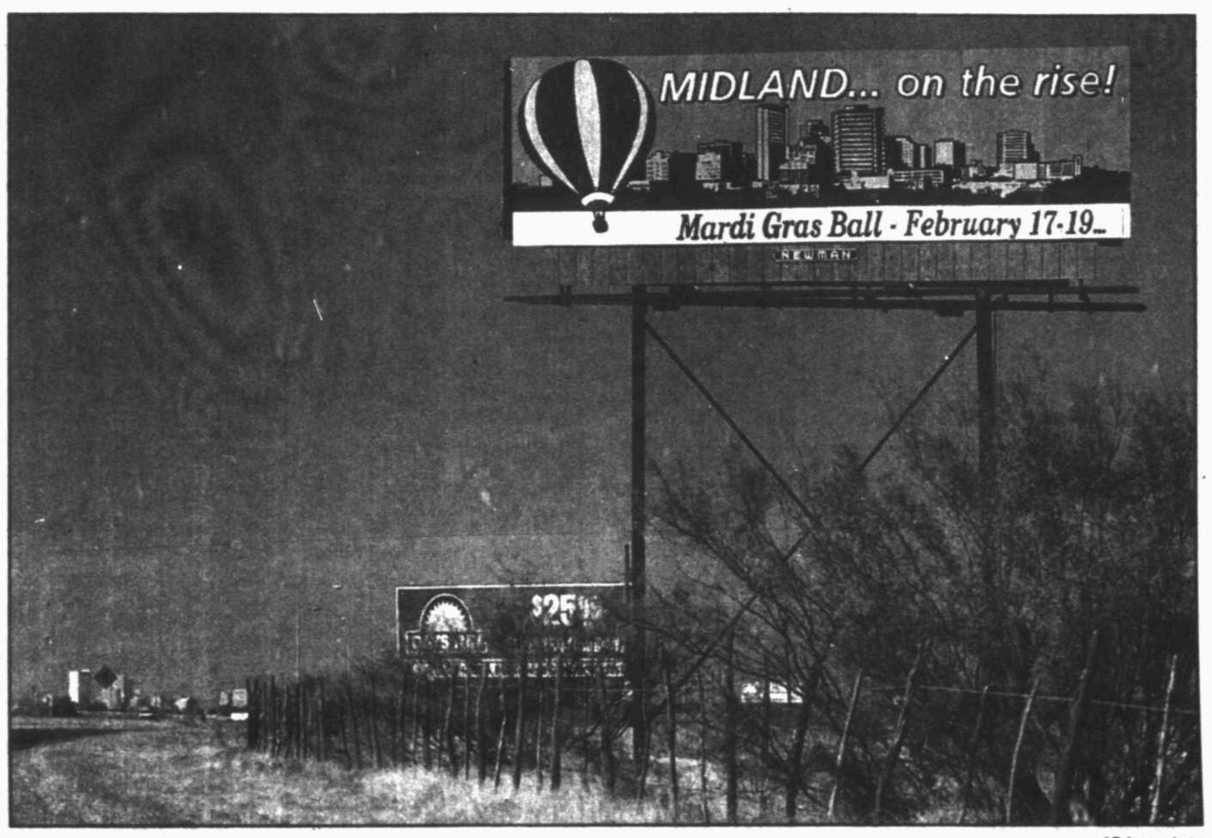

Residential listings stayed on the market an average 104 days through September, a shorter period than the 120-day average seen in 1993. The average listing price has grown to $105,844 from $94,415 last year.

Realtors sold seven new homes in September for an average price of $206,619. Last year, Realtors sold seven new homes in September for an average price of $169,166 — the same as last year.

For the first nine months of 1994, Realtors have sold 60 new homes for an average price of $165,064, compared to 74 new homes sold for an average of $141,954 in the first nine months of 1993.

There were 126 existing homes sold in September, up from 103 sold in the same month of 1993. The average sale price was $82,796, up from $81,677 a year earlier.

In year-to-date 1994, 989 existing homes have been sold at an average sale price of $80,899. In the first three quarters of 1993, 1,083 homes were sold for an average price of $79,360.

The Midland Chamber's Convention and Visitors Bureau has put up six billboards along I-20 — three from Abilene east and three from Van Horn west — to attract travelers.

Picture this: City's billboards lure travelers

Staff Writer

Midland is sending signs to travelers on Interstate 20 that the Tall City is worth a look.

The Midland Chamber's Convention and Visitors Bureau has put up six billboards along I-20 — three from Abilene east and three from Van Horn west — to attract travelers.

"The idea is they'll see the billboard and want to stop," said Suzy McElmurry, director of the bureau. She added that "the billboards appear to be working great. We've had a lot of comments from people who have seen them, both residents of Midland and visitors. At the Permian Basin Balloon Festival, we had people comment that they had seen the billboards, and that was a good feeling."

The billboards differ as they near Midland. The ones further out feature the Midland skyline and the phrase "Sign of West Texas Hospitality" along with mileage to Midland.

'The billboards appear to be working great. We've had a lot of comments from people who have seen them, both residents of Midland and visitors. At the Permian Basin Balloon Festival, we had people comment that they had seen the billboards, and that was a good feeling.'

—Suzy McElmurry, bureau director

Nearer Midland, the billboards feature a hot-air balloon and changeable banners that promote various events such as Septemberfest, the CAF Airsho, Celebration of the Arts or the Balloon Festival.

"The committee that helped come up with the design felt that the skyline shows we have lodging and restaurants and entertainment, that we're a big enough city that anything personal a traveler might need is here in Midland," McElmurry said.

As to the mileage, she said, "If you'll notice going down the Interstate, the Highway Department hasn't put up a lot of signs that say 'X number of miles to Midland,' and we feel this reinforces the fact that we're out here and we're a great place to visit."

The billboards are rented with funds from the chamber's general promotion fund that the city allocates from hotel occupancy tax collections.

"This is what the money is designated for," McElmurry said. The billboards have been contracted for a six-month period.

Two advertising agencies submitted designs, and McElmurry said the billboards incorporate parts of both designs.

"We're proud of them and we're glad to have them. It's been a while since we had that we felt were dynamic billboards promoting Midland," she said.

AT&T calls new $1 billion phone lines in Mexico

- Leading U.S. long-distance company to spread investment over four to six years.

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — AT&T Corp., seeking to cash in on Mexico's appetite for better communications, announced Wednesday a $1 billion venture with Mexican conglomerate Alfa to provide business and residential phone service.

AT&T, the leading U.S. long-distance company, said the investment would be spread out over a period of four to six years.

"We expect the market in Mexico to grow dramatically over the next decade, and this is going to require an enormous amount of capital," AT&T Executive Vice President Victor Pelson said at a news conference with Alfa executives.

Mexico has only eight phones lines for every 100 inhabitants despite a rapid and ongoing overhaul.

The companies said the alliance would combine AT&T's brand, product and services range, reputation, technology and network expertise with Alfa's broad customer base and local experience in high-growth industries.

Alfa, which posted 1993 revenues of $2.5 billion, employs 22,000 Mexicans making everything from the fibers for polyester and nylon fabrics to aluminum engine heads. This would be its first major foray into telecommunications.

The venture is one of a handful of billion-dollar partnerships announced since last January's launch of the North American Free Trade Agreement by the United States, Canada and Mexico.

MCI Communications Corp., GTE International Telecommunications Inc., Sprint Corp. and Bell Atlantic Corp. have also announced plans to enter Mexico.

The alliance was announced hours after Californians approved Proposition 187, a ballot measure to deny public services to illegal aliens in that state. Some have warned ill will generated by the measure would hurt trade.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

IRA early-withdrawal penalties can be avoided

By Bill Doyle

Q: Next year I will turn 59. I won't be 59½ until August. I would like to start withdrawing from my individual retirement account in January and start getting monthly interest checks. My husband says that I must be 59½ before I can start withdrawing monthly checks. If he is correct, might I ask why the government cares which month I become 59½?

Doyle

I think it's the year in which you become 59½, not the month.

A: In general, you have to wait until you are 59½ to avoid being hit by a 10 percent early-withdrawal tax penalty. It's the month you become 59½, not the year.

But there are some exceptions. Before you reach 59½, you can set up an Internal Revenue Service-approved distribution schedule for the rest of your life and, if you like, for the rest of your beneficiary's life. The monthly withdrawals are based on your life expectancy and, if you choose, that of your beneficiary. You can ask your IRA trustee or a tax adviser for more detailed information on the scheduled early-withdrawal possibility.

Certain disabled IRA owners also can start withdrawing money, without penalty, before age 59½.

Q: I have both a 401(k) retirement account and a previous IRA. When I have to start drawing money out at age 70½, will they be calculated separately or in combination? I will be 70 in December and wish to withdraw the minimum amount that's required, in order to reduce my tax liability.

Do I have to take money out of each account?

A: The IRS considers your two retirement accounts as one for calculating the minimum annual amount you can withdraw. You can take your withdrawals from either account or some from both.

You can calculate your minimum through life-expectancy tables for you and your beneficiary, if applicable. You can get those tables from your IRA and 401(k) account trustees.

The IRS allows you to delay withdrawals until as late as April 1 of the year following the calendar year in which you turn 70½. Thereafter, the required distribution for the year must be made by Dec. 31.

Whether you should start taking your withdrawal in May or wait until April 1996 depends on your tax situation. If you start taking your money out at age 70½, you'll have to pay tax on it. If you wait, you would save on your taxes for 1995 but would have to take two distributions in 1996 — one in April and another before Dec. 31 — which might push you into a higher tax bracket for the year.

If in doubt, consult a tax adviser.

Q: I contacted my bank about buying U.S. Treasury bills and was told that they were "bearer certificates" and could be cashed in by anyone presenting them, making it necessary to buy through a larger bank or broker and pay them storage fees for safekeeping.

How can I be sure that my Treasury bills are safely issued and stored?

A: Someone at your bank gave you incorrect information.

Treasury bills haven't been available in bearer form since 1982. But, back then, you could also get T-bills in registered certificates that no one else could sell.

Now, you don't get certificates. You get a "book entry" account with the Treasury or a financial institution, such as a brokerage firm or bank. Everything is registered on computers.

If you use the "Treasury Direct" system, buying directly from the Treasury, there is no fee charged. If you buy from a bank or broker, you pay a fee for the service. Either way, your T-bills would be safe.

Only you can initiate the sale of your T-bills.

Capriati fades in return to circuit

■ Virginia Slims

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jennifer Capriati, appearing to tire in the third set in her return to tennis, lost 6-4, 3-6, 6-1 Wednesday night to Anke Huber in the opening round of the $750,000 Virginia Slims of Philadelphia.

Capriati, who spent more than a year away from the women's tour because of burnout, injuries and legal problems, dropped the first four games of the final set to the 19-year-old German, who is ranked 13th in the world. She then held to 4-1 with her first ace of the night, but never threatened.

The 18-year-old Floridian smiled while receiving a warm greeting from the 4,500 fans at the Pennsylvania Civic Center. She wore a blue skirt, white shirt and a baseball cap supporting the Arthur Ashe Foundation for the Defeat of AIDS.

Capriati's groundstrokes were sound in the first two sets. She was able to find corners and hit deep forehands, as is her trademark, and stayed with Huber's power for most of the first set until the German won the final two games.

Capriati, making her first tournament appearance since the 1993 U.S. Open, won the first four games and took the second set.

Huber broke Capriati to draw to 5-3, but Capriati broke back to win the set. At set point, Capriati, now coached by Jose Higueras, came from behind the baseline to reach a drop shot and pulled it past Huber.

EC Championship

ANTWERP, Belgium — Canadian qualifier Sebastien Lareau beat Michael Stich 6-7 (0-7), 6-3, 6-3 in the $1.1 million European Community Tennis Championship, pushing the German out of next week's world championship.

With American Todd Martin losing in Moscow, it left the way open for Stefan Edberg, who won here Wednesday, and Alberto Berasategui, playing in Buenos Aires, to claim the last two places in the Elite Eight IBM-ATP Tour World Championship in Frankfurt.

Kremlin Cup

MOSCOW — Sergi Bruguera and Todd Martin, the top two seeds, were eliminated Wednesday at the $1.1 million Kremlin Cup.

Bruguera, the No. 1 seed from Spain, lost 6-3, 5-7, 4-6 in the first round to Karl Kucera of Slovakia on the fast courts at Olympic Stadium.

Martin lost to American compatriot Chuck Adams in the second round 6-7 (5-7), 3-6.

Two other seeds fell in the second round — No. 4 Wayne Ferreira of South Africa and No. 8 Andrea Gaudenzi of Italy.

Field chases Stockton in season finale

■ Senior Tour Championship

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Dave Stockton made his point.

"My goal this year was to prove that last year was not a fluke," Stockton said, referring to his five victories in '93 that made him the top money-winner on the seniors Tour.

"Obviously, I've done that."

Stockton, practicing Wednesday before today's start of the season-ending Senior Tour Championship at the Dunes Golf and Beach Club, has three wins this season and again leads the money-winning list with a record $1,338,419.

With Lee Trevino recovering from neck surgery, only Ray Floyd has a chance to catch Stockton in the $1.35 million tournament sponsored by Golf Magazine.

Only a win by Floyd, another three-time winner this year, and a finish of 10th or lower by Stockton could deprive him of the money-winning title.

So Stockton has changed his approach this week to guard against a let-down. His goal? Jim Albus and the birdie title.

"I'm seven behind him," Stockton said, "and I'm trying to catch him. If I focus on that, on making seven more birdies than he does, I'm going to be more aggressive, be more motivated, and it keeps me from thinking about the money."

But the money-winning title is important, Stockton said.

"It's a very big deal," he said. "I couldn't believe I won more than $1 million last year. To do it two years in a row is mind-boggling."

With $240,000 going to the winner, "If I have a good tournament here, I could have a total that might be hard for anyone to break in a long time," he said.

And he has every expectation of playing well.

"My ball-striking has been extremely good all year," he said. "But I kind of went in a putting slump for a while. I think I've worked it out."

His chief opposition in the 28-man field appears to be Albus and Floyd, like Stockton already the winners of more than $1 million this year, and Bob Murphy, who has won two of his last three starts.

Floyd, who has played only 19 senior tour events this year, said the money-winning title was not a particular target.

"I didn't even know I had a chance to win it until somebody told me this week," he said. "If the money title was important to me, I'd have played more than 20 tournaments."

U.S. Senior Open champion Simon Hobday, the South African called "Scruffy" by his fellow pros, is defending the title he won a year ago in Puerto Rico.

Norman captures second straight grand slam event

■ Grand Slam

POIPU, Hawaii (AP) — Greg Norman, putting an exclamation point on his round with an eagle on the final hole, shot a 6-under-par 66 Wednesday to win the $1 million PGA Grand Slam of Golf for the second straight year.

The Australian finished at 8-under 136 for the 36-hole event on the island of Kauai, winning the four-man tournament by three strokes. He completed the second round without a bogey and won the first prize of $400,000.

The tournament format calls for the winners of the four majors, but Nick Price's victories in the PGA and British Open elevated Norman into the Grand Slam field.

Price of Zimbabwe was second at 139. Ernie Els, the South African who won the U.S. Open, was third at 143 and Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain, winner of the Masters, was fourth at 144.

Norman won the tournament last year when it was played at the PGA West Course in La Quinta, Calif.

With the winds much calmer than the first day at Poipu Bay Resort Golf Course, Norman took charge early and then held off Price. Price, this year's leading money winner, pulled even with five birdies between the sixth and 13th holes.

However, Norman, granted relief after his ball landed on the cart path, produced his go-ahead birdie on the par-4 15th hole by rolling in a 4-foot putt.

The lead widened to two strokes when Price bogeyed the 16th, but he quickly gained that stroke back with a birdie on the par-3 17th.

Norman climaxed the tournament when he hit his second shot on the par-5, 550-yard 18th within two feet of the cup to set up the closing eagle.

Norman, who finished second on the money list ($1.3 million) and won this year's Vardon Trophy, edged American Tom Watson for a spot in the field by finishing fourth at the PGA. It marked the first time an American has failed to make the tournament.

Magazine is for new generation

By Clara G. Herrera
N.Y. Times News Service

OK, so you hate the term Generation X already. And slacker, well, just doesn't have that style and status you're looking for out of life. You don't even want to think about the label post-baby boomer.

A new term might be on the horizon if David Lauren has anything to do with it. How about the "Swing" generation?

Touted as the magazine for people in their 20s, Swing debuted Oct. 25 on newsstands and in gourmet-coffee-filled bookstores around the nation. Lauren, 23, is its publisher and editor-in-chief.

It's called Swing because twentysomethings have the voting power to swing public policy and political decisions. This age group also influences what music gets radio play and what movies are filmed, Lauren said.

Swing could be The New Yorker disguised in Generation X drag. It won't jump out at you like an MTV video in its use of color and design, but it might in its content. There's poetry, politics and Fads and Follies, "Swing's guide to the hipper things in life."

Also within the 104-page issue is a story about young computer whiz Marc Andreessen, who might be at the heels of Microsoft billionaire Bill Gates, and an article about starting a retirement plan.

Flip past the first 13 pages of ads, which include Polo, Revlon, Tommy Hilfiger and Fila watches, and you may find something you'd like to read listed in the table of contents.

While reading Swing, you'll find that much to your horror, Oxford might not be the best university in the world. Paradox may be the only thing this generation has in common. And AIDS hasn't stopped young adults from taking a chance to dance with death.

"I think what we were able to accomplish was to create something that was intelligent and yet fun to read," Lauren said.

This is Lauren's first full-time job since graduating from Duke University in 1993 with a political science degree. He's the son of designer Ralph Lauren.

None of his father's bucks is invested in the magazine, which the younger Lauren originally created for his peers at Duke. The money comes from undisclosed private investors, Lauren said.

But there are six pages advertising his father's products in the November issue.

"I think he's advertising in it not because he's my father but because he really thinks it's great," David Lauren said. "And clearly, he can see from the magazine that it's worthy of his ads."

Lauren expects Swing to be popular because it combines a variety of topics like politics, job searching and entertainment. About 200,000 copies of the premier issue were printed.

Here are some thoughts about Swing from some Fort Worth readers, some of whom went to college but none of whom graduated from Ivy League schools.

"People might buy that magazine for an article, but I don't think they'd subscribe. There's enough for everybody, but not enough for somebody. It's like a bike with too many gears. It just looks like a magazine that people who watch talk shows would buy. You know, I've got my 'Geraldo' and I've got my Swing." — Paul Cook, 23, waiter

"I was interested in just about everything. I love the picture ads. I don't usually buy magazines, but I might buy this one. I like the AIDS article. I think that's something that a lot of people can relate to." — Alice Watson, 21, senior at Texas Wesleyan University

"It's too general. You're covering everything in that magazine and it just seems like other magazines have more specifics." — Albert Cano, 24, sophomore at Tarrant County Junior College

"It's trying too hard to be a voice for a generation. It also seems to emphasize material possessions and image. It's all about appearance." — Dan Darr, 24, architectural intern

Spring fashions displayed

By Anne-Marie Schiro
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Ralph Lauren is back on home ground. After forays to Indochina and medieval England in his last two collections, the spring show last week was a return to more familiar territory.

Taking inspiration from cool Hollywood beauties like Grace Kelly and Audrey Hepburn, he showed clothes that were quiet and understated in the softest of colors and the finest of fabrics.

He used opalescent tones of pink and blue for satin and cashmere, chose pastel hues for floral silk chiffons and put white linen collars and cuffs on black dresses and sweaters.

Shapely little jackets went over matching shifts or flared slip dresses in satin or chiffon. Sweater sets were worn with classic trousers or bias-cut satin skirts.

There were reminders of early Ralph Lauren collections in schoolgirl coats, blazers worn over polo shirts, and pants suits in pastel tones with matching shirts and ties.

Bias-cut long slips and halters with straps that crossed in back provided the requisite glamour for evening, especially when covered with cream or pale-pink sequins.

THE COLLECTION was nostalgic but not blatantly retro. Some retailers in the audience were disappointed by the lack of creativity, but others were pleased to see refined clothes their customers would actually want to wear.

Before the main Ralph Lauren collection took to the runway, the designer sent out samplings of styles from his two lower-priced lines, Ralph and Polo Sport. The Ralph collection included cropped polo shirts and capri pants; jumpers and slip dresses worn over striped T-shirts, and floral-print dresses and skirts in every length, from mid-thigh to ankle.

AN AUDREY Hepburn lookalike opened the Gemma Kahng wearing a pale blue square-neck dress that grazed the top of her knees, a yellow chiffon babushka, black gloves and oversize sunglasses.

It set the tone for a collection of dresses and suits that brought back images of the ladylike clothes worn in the early '60s, even to the big straw hats with downturned brims.

Ms. Kahng, who's been known for fancy buttons and whimsical prints, took a step in the direction of sophistication, but could clean up her act even more.

THE ONE THING missing from Todd Oldham's show last week was Billy Beyond, the cross-dressing model, who sat this one out in the audience, wearing men's clothes. It required real women's breasts to wear the bras and decolletage that marked nearly every outfit.

There were satin bras, gold lame bras, bandanna-print bras and Chinese parasol-print bras. Not to mention rhinestone ones that barely covered the nipples. There were body-hugging overshirts open nearly to the waist, unbuttoned shirts tied under the bosom and the lowest-cut slip dresses in town.

Oldham always takes his audience on a trip, and this time he touched down in the Far East, with satins embroidered like Chinese rugs; in India, with tiger and snakeskin patterns; in his home state of Texas, with red bandanna prints, and in never-never land, with prints inspired by fairy tales.

But with all the fun and games, there were lots of nicely cut jackets, skinny pants, A-line miniskirts and pencil-thin knee-length skirts that should keep him in business.

BETSEY JOHNSON'S over-the-top presentation, with models sprouting wildly colored mops of hair and cavorting down the runway, tends to detract from the clothes themselves.

This time she showed 1940s floral-print dresses in mini and knee lengths (think DKNY), slip dresses and boleros appliqued with daisies, princess-shaped satin minidresses, and shiny vinyl corselets. There was even a quite proper strapless dress in red satin with a flared skirt that just covered the knees.

She also borrowed an idea from Helmut Lang and put clear vinyl skirts or aprons over dresses.

DEAR ABBY

Newlyweds' showers bring questions

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I recently attended a shower for a couple who were married only eight months ago. Two months after their wedding, the house they were renting burned to the ground, and they lost everything they owned. The people in the community, as well as their coworkers, family and friends, responded immediately with money, food and clothing. (Following the fire, they had moved into her parents' home with no expenses whatsoever.)

Van Buren

They have been given two "replacement showers" to replace the gifts they had received from the four or five showers prior to their wedding. (I had attended one.)

I recently learned that they were fully insured and have been compensated for everything they lost.

Now they are preparing to move into a very expensive home they're building. I'll probably be invited to a housewarming next — and most likely to one of the many baby showers for the child they are expecting in four months.

I don't mind helping people in time of need, but don't you think these "replacement showers" were tacky and a bit much to ask of people who had already given and done so much? — APPALLED DOWN SOUTH

DEAR APPALLED: It was indeed tacky for the couple to have accepted two "replacement showers," knowing that their losses were completely covered by insurance. Shame on them.

When the news of their reimbursement gets out (and it will), many other will be "Appalled Down South."

DEAR ABBY: Regarding that letter from Earl Brown who complained about canned laughter on TV: Thank the good Lord! I was beginning to think maybe I was the only one who was irritated by it.

I wrote to NBC, ABC and CBS. Only NBC answered my letter, but apparently they have no intentions of changing their policy.

I have been trying to organize a group who will band together and change that policy. I would call it HALT (Humans Against Laugh Tracks), but I don't know how to go about it. I can't afford a lawyer, but maybe if I could get on one of those TV talk shows, I could rally enough support to get somewhere.

It seems to me, with all the marvelous technology we have today, we should be able to get rid of those annoying laugh tracks without throwing the TV against the wall.

I know I am not alone. Maybe I should address my complaints to the sponsors. — DANIEL RISCH, NEWPORT, KY.

DEAR DANIEL RISCH: You could try. It may not help — but as my sainted grandmother used to say, "It couldn't hoit."

DEAR ABBY: You recently ran a column about the importance of wearing shoes that fit. In it, you mentioned the fact that one foot is usually a little larger than the other.

Abby, any shoe salesman worth his salt knows that with ladies, one foot is usually a little SMALLER than the other — never LARGER. —"O, SUSANNA," TULSA, OKLA.

DEAR ABBY: I recently took a vacation trip with two friends to a place 700 miles from here. We agreed to divide the expenses equally. We used my car, and I volunteered to do the driving, which put 2,000 miles on my car.

The gasoline came to about $34 apiece. I own a very nice, expensive car, which I paid for myself, and I did all the driving. My question: Should I have had to share equally in the cost of the gasoline since I provided the car?

If I were a passenger, I would feel obligated to contribute a lot more than just one-third of the gasoline. (One of the passengers did treat me to dinner at an inexpensive franchise-type restaurant on the way home to show her "appreciation.")

Obviously, I need to educate my passengers and come to some sort of understanding about car expenses, but I am not sure what would be a fair assessment. Please advise me, Abby. I am sure many others would like to know also. — LOYAL READER

DEAR READER: I agree, your passengers should have contributed more than one-third of the cost of the gasoline. You paid for the costs of servicing your car before the trip, and there is also the wear and tear on your brakes and tires to be considered.

However, you agreed beforehand to divide the expenses equally with your two friends, so it's too late now to change the terms of the arrangement. Chalk this up to "a learning experience."

Children need 'no' in no uncertain terms

By Erma Bombeck

I was browsing in a bookstore recently when I came across a book on child raising. It was a thin little volume of about 15 or 20 pages that used the word "love" on every page and "reinforcement of self-esteem" on every other page.

Bombeck

I leafed through it several times looking for the word that no parent should raise a child without: "No." It wasn't there.

"No" means different things to people.

To a child, "No" is a noun, a negative response to anything that smacks of a good time, happiness, a future or a reason to live.

To a parent, "No" is an adverb used to express denial, refusal, fear, rationale, protection and love.

Parents live in hope that someday when the kids are older, they will thank them for saying "No" as often as they did. In their dreams. Children have memories like a computer bank and remember every single time you refused them something.

They will also use every con game in the world to keep you from saying the "N" word. A classic case is a cousin of mine whose 16-year-old son approached her one day and said, "Can I go to a football game?"

"Of course," she smiled.

"It's in Pittsburgh," he added (about 80 miles away).

"Who's driving?" she asked.

"We're going on a bus," he said.

What he didn't tell her was that he was driving the rental bus with 40 kids aboard and he didn't have a permanent driver's license.

I actually sat down once with one of my kids and tried to explain the meaning of "No." "It means I love you enough to want you to have as smooth a journey through life as is possible. I don't pretend to know where all the chuckholes are, but I've fallen in a few, and I want to save you from doing the same thing. When I see you going in the wrong direction, I have to say no to get you back on track.

"I don't want you to be hurt or hurt someone else. A lot of noes can make this possible. I want your trust that I will say yes as often as I can, but no when I must.

"I'll be honest with you. When I say, 'We'll talk about it later,' or 'I'll ask your father,' there isn't a chance of a snowball in Phoenix in the summer that the answer will be yes. I'm stalling because I don't enjoy the look of disappointment on your face and I want to be loved."

My son sat there for a long time without speaking. Then he said, "So, why don't you ever want me to have a good time?"

Researchers question cost of prenatal care

By Gina Kolata
N.Y. Times News Service

Prenatal care is often described as preventive medicine that pays for itself by averting future costs, but a new analysis says the savings have not been substantiated.

The investigators hasten to add that prenatal care is medically important and that all pregnant women should receive it. But they say the argument that for every dollar spent far more will be saved is a myth.

For more than a decade, it has been widely accepted that the cost of prenatal care will be more than offset by a reduction in the number of premature babies, whose medical costs can be astronomical.

This contention is used to persuade state legislatures to pay for prenatal visits for poor women, and is repeatedly cited by those who argue that preventive medicine must be included in health insurance programs.

The analysis of the prenatal-care literature was conducted by Dr. Frederick Connell, who directs the maternal and child health program at the University of Washington in Seattle, and Dr. Jane Huntington, an internist at the Group Health Cooperative in Seattle. Their paper is being published Thursday in The New England Journal of Medicine.

Connell and Dr. Huntington looked at more than 100 papers claiming that prenatal care saves money by preventing the births of premature babies. Most papers cited the same few studies, and those studies, they found, were deeply flawed.

The researchers found that the studies, for example, compared babies born to women who had prenatal care with those of women who did not. But the women who did not receive care tended to be poorer and to have social problems like drug or alcohol abuse that might lead them to have low-birth-weight babies anyway.

The studies also assumed that routine care was enough to help poor women with complex problems. But most experts say women at high risk of having premature babies need intensive care, starting early in pregnancy, to identify problems like violence at home, poor nutrition, and drug and alcohol abuse. Such comprehensive care is much more expensive.

Most studies also made insupportable assumptions about the effectiveness of care and the medical costs of prematurity.

They assumed, for example, that the care largely prevented the births of very premature babies, that is, those born after 28 weeks or less of pregnancy. But if prenatal care helps prevent prematurity at all, it prevents premature births in the last trimester, when medical problems are not nearly so severe, the researchers said.

Despite these problems with the studies, Connell and Dr. Huntington say, advocates of prenatal care have even put dollar amounts on the supposed savings, with what the researchers term "remarkable precision."

Health planners have said that for every dollar spent on prenatal care, $1.70 or $2.57 or $3.38 will be saved.

Connell and Dr. Huntington say they have qualms about questioning the cost savings. "It's goring the sacred cow," Connell said. "I don't want this to be construed as an anti-prenatal-care article."

Other experts had the same concern. Dr. Bernard Guyer, chairman of the department of maternal and child health at the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health, said that even though the money-saving arguments do not stand up, "No one should ever interpret this as saying women shouldn't get good prenatal care and that prenatal care shouldn't be covered by public programs."

But Connell said, "It is disturbing that the public has so confidently and with such precision embraced the idea that prenatal care saves money."

Dr. Marie McCormick, chairwoman of the department of maternal and fetal health at the Harvard School of Public Health, said it was true that "justification of these services on a cost-benefit analysis is a weak reed," but added that "people were reduced to this kind of effort" by politicians reluctant to spend money on services for the poor.

Speaker-elect pledges to address wrongs of left

N.Y. Times News Service

MARIETTA, Ga. — The former history teacher said it felt weird to be making history. But Newt Gingrich adapted quickly.

The Georgia congressman, who is likely to ascend to the influential role of speaker of the House in Washington's new Republican universe, says he wants nothing less than to change the very character of the country.

Although Gingrich said it might take a decade, he promised to bury any remnants of what he disdainfully calls the "Great Society, counterculture, McGovernick" legacy and return America to a more black-and-white view of right and wrong.

"There are profound things that went wrong starting with the Great Society and the counterculture and until we address them head-on, we're going to have these problems," Gingrich said on Wednesday morning in an interview at the suburban Atlanta mall where he had been celebrating and expounding for about 12 hours — with an hour and a half break for bed.

Gingrich was having so much fun basking in his glory that when he received a call from the president this morning at 9:05 he decided to stay on his portable phone to finish an interview with a local radio talk show. He told an aide to tell Clinton that he would call back. An hour and a half later, Gingrich called back the president and an aide to the Georgia congressman reported that their chat was "positive and hopeful."

In the final weekend of his re-election campaign, Gingrich created a stir by declaring that the confession of Susan V. Smith, the young woman in South Carolina who was accused of drowning her two small children, was evidence of "how sick this society is getting."

But while he claimed that the "liberal media elite" had distorted his comments, Gingrich also reiterated on Wednesday that the new Republican leadership could profoundly improve the moral climate of the country.

"A society which punishes violence and a society that is emphatic about right and wrong tends to have less sickness and less violence," he said, adding that since the 1950s, America had spiraled down into "a culture which is extraordinarily tolerant of violence, with a situation-ethics morality, in which your immediate concern about your personal needs outweighs any obligation to others."

Although he gave dozens of warm and fuzzy interviews on Election Night and the next morning about his eagerness to work with President Clinton, Gingrich revealed a colder view of the chief executive when he talked about morality and the need to pass a constitutional amendment restoring school prayer.

He dismissed the first lady's "politics of meaning" with a grimace, and made it clear that he thought that Bill and Hillary Clinton had failed to provide the moral leadership the country needs because they are counterculture McGovernicks.

"That is honestly who is he is," he said of the president. "He's a very smart, very clever tactician whose core system of activity is a combination of counterculture and McGovern. He was McGovern's Texas director, he and his wife were counterculture at Yale, and why wouldn't you accept that they really are who they are? Their problem is, that is a contradiction with the vast majority of Americans. So you have this constant internal stress and what the American people were saying is 'Enough.'"

He said the election proved that the "American people are clearly fed up with what they see as the decay of American society."

Clinton accepts responsibility for party defeat

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Even as President Clinton reached out a hand to victorious Republicans Wednesday, the White House was casting about for ways to govern that would not require congressional cooperation.

Looking somewhat chastened and sounding very conciliatory at a White House news conference, President Clinton accepted his share of responsibility for the devastating defeats suffered by Democrats in Congress, and he said that he would try to seek common ground with Republicans on issues like welfare reform.

But while congratulating Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, who is almost certain to be the new majority leader, and Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, the apparent next Speaker of the House, Clinton also warned that his political rivals must now do their part to help him govern.

"We were held accountable yesterday," Clinton said of Democrats in the White House and Congress. He said that Republicans would now have "a larger responsibility for acting in the best interest of America." He called on them "to join me in the center of the public debate where the best ideas for the next generation of American progress must come."

But the mood at the White House was grim as Clinton's advisers tried to grapple with the enormity of the defeat. With both houses of Congress soon to be in hostile hands, advisers to Clinton said Wednesday that he recognized that much of his legislative agenda might be doomed.

The advisers said that Clinton might have to resort to regulations, executive orders and other presidential tools to work around Capitol Hill, much as Ronald Reagan and George Bush did when the House and Senate were in Democratic hands.

"There's a lot you can do without Congress, and believe me, we'll be looking at everything," a senior White House official said.

The aides also spoke with apprehension about the likelihood that Republicans led by Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato of New York would intensify a congressional inquiry into the Whitewater affair to make it a permanent distraction. D'Amato is in line to be the new chairman of the Senate Banking Committee.

In painting a picture of the second half of Clinton's term, these advisers said he had concluded that it would be pointless to wage a confrontation with Capitol Hill across a broad front. They said he would aim to strike accords with Republicans on measures that have bipartisan support, like an effort to overhaul the welfare system.

But the president now expects only modest changes in the health care system, they said, and has little chance of winning backing for the new domestic spending he has portrayed as a necessary investment.

The president will also have to contend with initiatives like a balanced-budget amendment and term limits that Republicans have made central to their campaigns and which they are now likely to try to rush into law.

Clinton has been opposed to both proposals, but his chief of staff, Leon E. Panetta, equivocated when asked about them today, suggesting that he could be open to a compromise. Clinton's advisers say that while he would almost certainly have to begin exercising his veto power, he is wary about being seen as the kind of obstructionist that he has spent two years railing against.

Asked at his news conference Wednesday about the road ahead, Clinton declared, "I will still work for the things that make America strong." But as he called repeatedly for bipartisan cooperation, he conceded that his own power has been substantially diminished. "A lot has changed since yesterday," the president said.

Clinton and his advisers had steeled themselves for the prospect that Democrats might lose the Senate, and some had warned that the House, too, might be at risk. But none had foreseen that the losses would be so heavy. While he did not name any of them, the president took time to express regret that Congress would now be without so many Democrats he said had "made this a lot better country."

The defeat is the biggest setback for Clinton since 1980, when he lost in his first bid to be re-elected governor of Arkansas, and he plainly recognized that today marked an important moment.

He told reporters he had taken time to reread the speech he gave three years ago as he began his quest for the presidency, when he said that the job of government was to create opportunity and let citizens assume the responsibility for making the most of it.

"They don't think we've done that yet," he said, and his advisers conceded that he might now be badly weakened as he begins an expected quest for a second presidential term.

The President had traveled nearly nonstop for the last three weeks to build support for Democrats by calling attention to his achievements at home and, with four frenetic days in the Middle East, to what had accomplished abroad.

Son stabs, kills mother, police report

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A man found in bed with pieces of his mother's corpse confessed to her killing, telling police she was a "vampire devil" and that he "cut out both of her hearts."

Henry M. Heepe told police he beat his 77-year-old mother, Barbara Heepe, to death, then stabbed her and removed her organs.

Officers found some of the body parts in a pan on a stove, and Police Capt. Paul Callahan said investigators believe Heepe may have eaten some of the others. His mouth was smeared with blood when he was arrested, Summit County Coroner William Cox said Wednesday.

"I killed my mother," Heepe was quoted as saying in a police report. "She was a vampire devil. I cut out both of her hearts. It took her five hours to die."

An autopsy that lasted all day Wednesday showed Heepe's mother had been beaten around the face, head, chest and arms and strangled, Cox said. She was stabbed and disembowled after she died, the coroner said.

Heepe, 50, was charged with murder. His arraignment was delayed while he was hospitalized Wednesday for treatment of diabetes.

Police entered the Heepe home Monday night after a neighbor, Mary Hendrickson, said a boy raking leaves reported hearing a woman cry for help.

As officers checked the house, they heard a man chanting, "Die, die, die," the Akron Beacon Journal reported Wednesday. They said Heepe had barricaded himself inside a bedroom and refused to come out.

After trying for more than an hour to talk him into leaving the room, they finally forced open the door and discovered him nude on the bed, surrounded by pieces of the corpse.

He was apparently engaging in a sex act with the bowel, Cox said.

The lower half of the woman's stomach, her right eye, her spleen and a small part of her small intestine were missing.

A knife was found near a toilet, which left open the possibility Heepe may have flushed the missing body parts down the toilet, Cox said.

Heepe was a patient at Akron General Hospital, said spokeswoman Susan Hobson, but she declined to discuss his condition.

"Because of the nature — it's sort of a psychiatric situation — we can't release any information," she said.

Hendrickson said Heepe often acted oddly. Police said he had been unstable since his younger brother committed suicide in 1970.

"It's a dirty shame," Hendrickson said of his mother's death. "She took care of her son."

Man remembers era with memorabilia

By Frank Fisher
Associated Press

CARTERVILLE, Ill. — It was a time when coal was still king — and when owing your soul to the company store was not just a line from a song but a reality.

R.R. "Tip" Tippy has memorialized that period in an extensive collection of elaborate old mining certificates, coal lamps, postcards and scrip — especially scrip.

"Scrip was the coin of the realm," said the 80-year-old Tippy, whose ranch house is in a tract built on a former strip mine. "Kids would grow up in some places and hardly know what U.S. currency was."

Known as stickers, flickers or clackers, scrip came in an assortment of brass, copper or aluminum shapes found in areas where mining companies would build and run whole towns.

The companies gave it to miners who took an advance on their paychecks to shop at the notorious company store. A miner who spent too much might soon say to himself, as Tennessee Ernie Ford did in the 1955 song "Sixteen Tons," "I owe my soul to the company store."

"Back when I was growing up, it was King Coal in this area," said Tippy, who got a biology degree from the University of Illinois. "My father was a schoolteacher, but he worked in the mines in the summertime."

Times have changed. The 10,192 Illinois coal miners working in 1990 dwindled to 7,389 last year, thanks in part to increased competition and tougher clean-air rules, which make burning high-sulfur coal unattractive, according to the Illinois Coal Development Board.

Although the number of miners is dwindling, Tippy is making sure they aren't forgotten. In 1972 he helped found the National Scrip Collectors Association, which has more than 400 members in 45 states.

"It's just a group of dedicated collectors that are out there to preserve the history of each state and county that had coal mines and used scrip," said Mark Ballard, a former miner and, like Tippy, a past president of the group. "There's all kinds of people into scrip. We've got doctors, lawyers, coal miners, postal workers, you name it."

Tippy also collects "pit checks," the numbered medallions miners once used to identify the cars they loaded. In many mines before mechanization, men were paid by the ton.

He knows of mining first-hand, having worked at Peabody Coal Co. more than 50 years ago. Part of his six years with Peabody was spent in a company store in Kentucky's Harlan County.

"I feel anybody that is cognizant of the coal miners of yesteryear, has got to have compassion because of the dangers and the way they lived," he said.

HIGH SKY AREA
LOOKING FOR EXTRA INCOME
OR A STEADY PART TIME JOB.....
Does a Weekly and Monthly Income Sound Appealing????

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an opening on one of its "Special Allowance" routes. This route receives a regular income from rack sales, $250 per month gas allowance in addition to the regular monthly route profits.

As with all newspaper distributorships, this opportunity requires a P/T, a 7 day a week commitment (when you go out of town, you must arrange a substitute for yourself) and it is early morning work which allows for time to go to your "regular job".

Newspaper distributorships can provide great supplemental income for housewives and/or mothers, senior citizens, college students or any other adult wanting to "moonlight".

Apply in person or contact:

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON, DC — President Clinton met with three top level Hispanic Appointees and spoke to them about their important role within the Administration, as Hispanics and as public servants. The President met with Gilbert Casellas, Director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; Edward Baca, nominated to be Chief of the National Guard Bureau; and Gabriel Guerra, Ambassador to Chile, during the morning of October 31.

President Clinton has kept true to his commitment to appoint Hispanic Americans at all levels of his Administration. He has appointed more Hispanic Americans to senior positions than any other President. Overall, Clinton has appointed two-an-a half times more Hispanic Americans than the Bush Administration.

Following the meeting with President Clinton, the three Hispanic Appointees came out to the stake-out to answer questions from reporters. Gabriel Guerra spoke about strengthening ties with Chile and the United States during his tenure as Ambassador to the South American nation. Mr. Guerra was confirmed by the Senate on September 12, 1994.

Edward Baca, although not yet confirmed, spoke about the need to maintain the strength of the National Guard.

Gilbert Casellas, was confirmed on July 1, 1994. He spoke at length about his role as the Director of the EEOC. In summary, Casellas said he and his team will begin to search for new ways to do business in an agency whose policies no longer work. They will also find more adequate ways to serve the people who look to the EEOC for guidance. He said he will make equal employment opportunity real for all people.

Is the United States too pluribus for unum?

By Octavio Emilio Nuiry

Give me your meek, your tired, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free. — Emma Lazarus

Because I am an immigrant, a Cuban-American immigrant, who has experienced the ethnic and racial slurs of the dominant population in this nation, the anti-immigrant hysteria sweeping the United States has an especially poignant resonance for me.

Back in the 1960s, when my family boarded a Pan Am flight from Havana to Miami, the United States still welcomed newcomers — sometimes gladly, sometimes grudgingly. It embraced Cuban immigrants as "political refugees" fleeing Caribbean communism.

And Cuban families like mine cherished the opportunity offered us, and we considered Emma Lazarus's inscription on the base of the Statue of Liberty a welcomed abrazo — a symbol of a great nation that helped other countries during hard times.

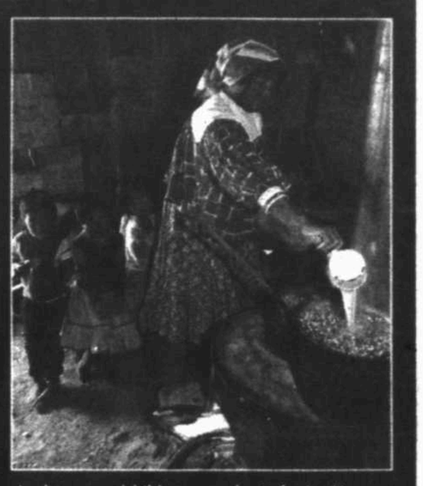

But as the 20th century nears its close, this hospitality has turned into hostility as immigrants, particularly Latin Americans, are scapegoated for many of the nation's economic and social problems. Today's immigrants — both legal and illegal — have become all-purpose whipping boys, to blame for whatever problem ails this country.

Lost your job? Blame it on the indocumentados.

About 35 Tarahumara Indian children have died since August from malnutrition as the region suffers through the third year of severe drought.

A dream comes true in West Texas

By Jeffrey McDonald

For more than five years, a small, dedicated group of volunteers has pursued the dream of building a memorial to the men and women of West Texas who answered their nation's call to glory, and served in the United States Armed Forces during the Vietnam War.

Earlier this year, on Memorial Day, they broke ground on their dream, and construction of the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial began.

The memorial was inspired by Vietnam veteran Randy Gilliam of Fort Worth, Texas, with final design by the architectural firm of Pate & Associates of Midland, Texas. The contract for construction went to the Campbell Construction Company of Midland.

At the base of the memorial is a five-pointed granite star with a pentagon at it's heart, acknowledging the five branches of the United States armed forces that saw action in Vietnam. The top point of the star leads to another piece of granite - this one carved in the shape of the state of Texas. The entire memorial will be backed by a masonry wall, and will include flagpoles bearing the United States, Texas, and POW/MIA flags.

Carved into the granite of the state of Texas will be the names of 223 men and women, from thirty counties in West Texas, who were killed-in-action or are missing-in-action in Vietnam. Research into the list of names that appear on the memorial is an ongoing process, and it is expected that more names will be added in the years ahead.

Visitors will reach the memorial by following a Memorial Walk, which will be paved with bricks that have been inscribed with personalized inscriptions from contributors. The sale of these inscribed bricks is also an ongoing process. Although the deadline to place bricks in time for the ceremony has already passed, plans have been made to place new bricks, as they arrive, in the years ahead.

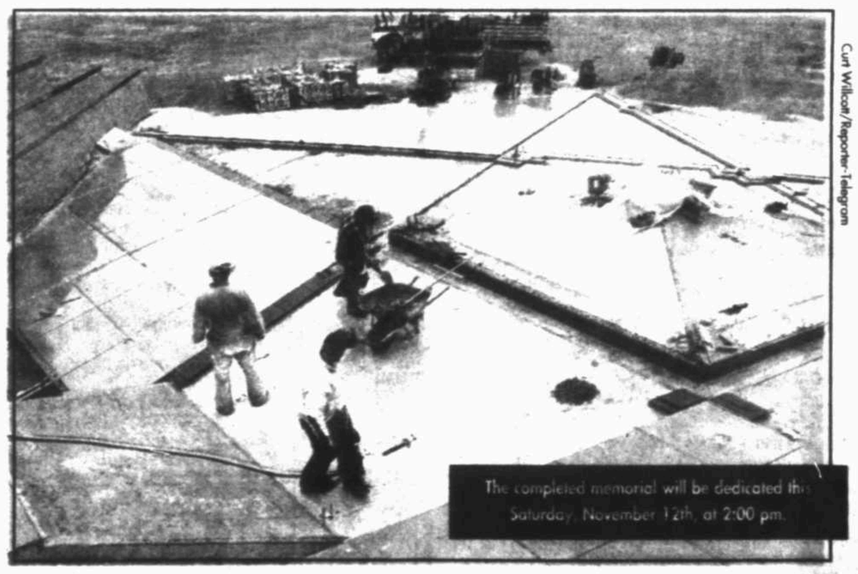

The memorial is located on Wright Drive, immediately north of Midland International Airport and west of the headquarters/museum of the Confederate Air Force - which serves as a memorial to the men and women who served during World War 2. Immediately adjacent to the memorial site, a park is being constructed by local Rotary clubs of both Midland and Odessa, Texas (the memorial is located halfway between the two cities).

John Philbeck, president of the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial Committee, recalled the emotions he felt during his first visit to the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C. He believes that the memorial in west Texas, which will be open throughout the year, 24 hours-a-day, will raise similar emotions in those who come to visit.

"A memorial like this will allow them to deal with their emotions in their own way, in their own time," he said. "Late at night, early in the morning, lunch hours, weekends. People can go there and interact with their emotions on their own, at a time of their choosing."

"These guys, they had to do what they had to do. They fought for each other and for us. And some of the died for each other and for us."

It is expected that people from throughout the state of Texas will be in attendance at Saturday's ceremony. Many will be veterans of the Vietnam War, recalling their experiences in that conflict, and remembering those with whom they shared those experiences.

Curt Wilcox/Reporter-Telegram

The completed memorial will be dedicated this Saturday, November 12th, at 2:00 pm.

"Well, I don't know. The dedication I feel is part of it, part of the experience," said Paul Valenzuela, of Fort Stockton, in Pecos County. "I felt like I was a very dedicated Marine, and I feel like that has carried over into civilian life."

Today Valenzuela is dedicated to many things, to his family and to his community, where he serves as an elected representative for Precinct #4 of the Pecos County Commissioner's Court. But in 1966, Valenzuela was 19 years-old and fresh from college as he enlisted in the United States Marine Corps.

"Oh, I tell you, it's been so long ago," he recalled. "Back then, I know, I felt it was my duty. Like my dad, who had served in the Second World War, in the Army. Well, just about all the guys I went to school with ended up joining. Most went overseas and were there, in Vietnam."

A corporal with the First Marine Air Wing, Valenzuela was stationed at Da Nang, an American airbase, from June of 1968 through August of 1969.

"One of my closest friends, Pablo Acosta - he's from Odessa - and I got to see him over there a couple of times. And we had joined under the 'buddy plan' and I got to see him over there, and that was pretty good. The one that I didn't get to see was Salvador Duran. And we went to school together at Sul Ross University, in Alpine. We were roommates at Sul Ross. And he was one that got killed over there in Vietnam."

There are few communities in West Texas that were not touched by the Vietnam War, that did not experience the sadness of a young man or woman lost in that conflict.

Tom Rivera, of Pecos, will be among those in attendance at Saturday's ceremony.

"When we were growing up, my dad, Joe, Senior, was very patriotic," recalled Rivera, who serves as President of the Pecos Chamber of Commerce. "So he passed that on to us, encouraging us to serve our country. It's just the way we were raised. Including myself, there were six of us brothers in the service. And three of us went to Vietnam."

Of the three bothers who served in Vietnam, Joe Rivera, Junior, served in the United States Marine Corps. Tom and his younger brother, Joe Louis "Corky" Rivera both served in the United States Army.

"I enlisted in January of '65, and retired in February of '85. I was in the United States Army, and I was in Vietnam from August '69 to August '69," said Rivera. "I was in a place called Dong Tam, in the Mekong Delta, with the 9th

Sister cities, educational exchanges highlight growing U.S.-Mexico ties

(NU) - Since the advent of the new North American Free Trade Agreement, the surge in U.S.-Mexican commercial and business ties has been accompanied by a flurry of social and cultural exchanges that are bringing the two North American nations ever closer together.

New academic exchange programs looking south

Students at top U.S. centers of learning, such as Stanford University, Carnegie-Mellon University, the University of Texas and others, can now participate in exchange programs with Monterrey Technical Institute, one of Latin America's pre-eminent business schools. At Arizona State University, a student exchange program has been established with Mexico's technical universities in Hermosillo and Mexicali.

At the University of Colorado, demand for Spanish classes has nearly doubled since 1990, while its College of Business is among 12 U.S. business schools now requiring students to learn a second language.

More Americans are learning Spanish now than any other foreign language, according to Berlitz International, Inc., one of the world's largest language and educational training firms. Large and small U.S. companies are even paying for their employees to learn how to "hablar español."

Likewise, the demand for English language classes is growing in Mexico, especially in industrialized cities such as Monterrey, where close to 100 English-language schools have opened in recent years.

The scientific community is getting into the act too. The U.S. National Science Foundation, Mexico's National Council on Science and Technology and Canada's Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council have established a program to give promising young North American scientists the opportunity to work at research institutions in any of these three countries for up to a year.

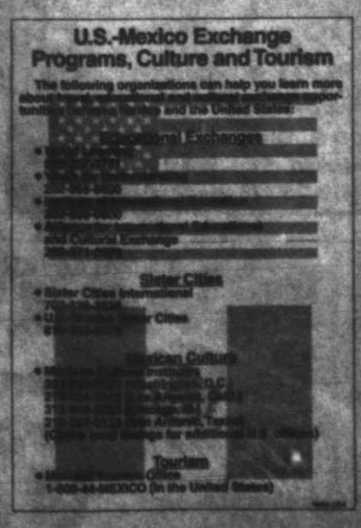

Sister cities building commercial and cultural ties

To promote international goodwill and encourage greater cultural and commercial exchange, more than 100 U.S. cities have formed "sister-city" relationships with their counterparts in Mexico — including Monterrey-Dallas, Chihuahua-Albuquerque, Mexico City-Los Angeles, Hermosillo-Phoenix and Cuernavaca-Denver.

Some cities, such as Pensacola, Fla., and Merida in Yucatan, have entered into relationships to promote trade.

Building cultural awareness, however, continues to be a top priority. The Museum of Contemporary Art in San Diego recently organized an art exhibition with the Centro Cultural de la Raza in sister city Tijuana, showcasing the works of Mexican, Mexican-American and non-Mexican artists.

The Guadalupe Cultural Arts Center in San Antonio has been promoting cross-border culture for the past 13 years and has helped spark the recent trend in Tejano music, which blends the sounds of German immigrant polkas and waltzes with Mexican folk music. It is now one of the hottest musical sounds in Texas, California, New Mexico, Arizona and beyond.

Noviembre es el mes nacional de diabetes

Ya ha llegado noviembre y niños por todo el Estado de Texas todavía están reponiéndose de todos los dulces que se comieron en Halloween. Pero para los niños que padecen de diabetes, las golosinas de Hal l oween pueden ser peligrosas. Casi 14 millones de americanos padecen de diabetes, incluyendo casi 800.000 tejanos. Aun más espantoso es el hecho de que la mitad de los que tienen diabetes no lo saben. Por eso, la Asociación Americana de Diabetes ha designado noviembre como el Mes Nacional de Diabetes.

La diabetes es una enfermedad que debilita y lisia a sus víctimas impidiendo la capacidad del cuerpo de convertir en energía el azúcar de los alimentos. La mayoría de la gente no se da cuenta de que tiene la enfermedad hasta que ya es demasiado tarde y afronta una de las complicaciones relacionadas con la diabetes, como por ejemplo la ceguera, una enfermedad cardíacá, la apoplejía o una amputación de la pierna o del pie. Desgraciadamente, con demasiada frecuencia la diabetes es fatal. Hay que estar en la mira de las señales de peligro de la diabetes, que incluyen la fatiga, una sed inusual o una pérdida de peso, la visión poco clara y lesiones o moretones que tardan mucho en curarse.

Los hispanos tienen aun más probabilidades de padecer de la diabetes - - en realidad, dos veces más. Aproximadamente uno de cada 10 adultos hispanos tiené la diabetes. Habiendo crecido en el sur de San Antonio, vi a muchas personas, incluyendo a mi padre y tío, padecer de la diabetes. En nuestra comunidad no se trataba de si uno conocía a alguien con diabetes, sino de cuántas personas uno conocía con la enfermedad.

Afortunadamente, la medicina moderna ha demostrado que las complicaciones de la diabetes pueden controlarse por la atención preventiva rutinaria. Siguiendo un buen dieta, haciendo ejercicios con regularidad y estabilizando los niveles de azúcar en la sangre para que sean tan cerca como posible a lo normal, se puede reducir dramáticamente las probabilidades de presentar los síntomas de las complicaciones relacionadas con la diabetes.

Actualmente, no existe remedio. Sin la atención y el tratamiento apropiado, la diabetes puede llegar a dominar y controlar la vida de uno. Parte el corazón ver a un amigo o a un familiar querido sufrir de esta enfermedad terrible. Con más educación e investigaciones, sin embargo, podemos evitar que ocurra esto.

Infantry Division."

"Corky? He joined sometime after I did, in 1969. United States Army. He was with the 4th Infantry Division, up in The Highlands."

As the summer of 1969 was drawing to a close, Tom's tour of duty was coming to an end. But each year of the war brought a new wave of young men and women to Vietnam, and it was soon learned that Corky - fresh out of training and now assigned to his unit - would be among them.

The older Rivera, already an experienced soldier with four years of service, including a tour of duty in Vietnam, offered the United States Army an alternative to sending his younger brother to the war.

"Well, the thing that is foremost in my mind is I tried to extend while I was over there so that my little brother wouldn't have to go," said Rivera. "I applied because he was getting ready to come over just as I was leaving. They turned down my request for an extension, and I got shipped-out and he got shipped right over."

Joe Louis "Corky" Rivera was killed-in-action in Vietnam when his patrol was ambushed. The younger Rivera had been the point man on that patrol. His body was recovered and returned to the United States. His name, along with 222 others will appear on the memorial.

"Well, I'm very proud to see this happen," said Rivera. "We're looking forward to seeing that dream, that a lot of folks have had for so long, finally realized."

For some, only part of the dream is being realized. This is especially true of the families and friends of the MIA's, the men and women who are listed as missing in action, and who are yet to be accounted for.

A native of Fort Stockton, Ricardo Gonzales Davis was already a veteran of military service when he reenlisted in the United States Army in 1967 and was assigned to Military Assistance Command, Vietnam - Studies and Observation Group, or MACV-SOG.

A joint-service command, MACV-SOG was engaged in highly classified operations throughout southeast Asia, including deep-penetration reconnaissance and interdiction missions.

On March 20, 1969, Specialist First Class Davis was the leader of a six-man team which was engaged on just such a mission, west of Kham Duc, in the Saravanne Province, eleven miles inside Laos. Davis' team was attacked, and witnesses saw Davis take hits from rifle fire in the upper chest and face, calling to his sergeant as he went down. Stil. under fire, the team's second-in-command frantically searched for pulse and respiration, but could detect neither.

Advancing enemy units and a strike by United States aircraft that were rapidly approaching the area, forced the team to withdraw without Davis. Continued airstrikes and the presence of the enemy in force - in fact, they continued to hold that portion of Laos for the remainder of the war - prevented any return to the area where Davis was last seen.

At the very least, Davis was seriously wounded in that battle. However, the United States Army did not place him in the "Killed/Body Not Recovered" category of American casualties. Rather, he was classified as "Missing In Action", one of 600 Americans to be so designated as a result of action in Laos during the Vietnam War.

His wife and family still wonder to this day if the Laotians might be able to account for Davis, due to their strong presence in the area where he was last seen.

The story of Richard Davis took a strange turn earlier this year when his were one of six sets of dog tags found in a bag, 20 miles from the former American airbase at Da Nang, Vietnam - which is more than 130 miles from the spot in Laos where he was last seen. The dog tags were accompanied by a letter written in Vietnamese, which is now being translated by authorities in Washington, DC.

The other five pairs of dog tags have all been accounted for as belonging to servicemen who have long since returned to the United States. To date, this latest find has raised more questions than answers for Davis' loved ones, who wonder if he might still be alive.

The Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial will be dedicated Saturday, November 12, at 3:00 pm. The memorial is located on Wright Drive, immediately north of Midland International Airport. The memorial can be reached by exiting US Highway 90 or Interstate Highway 20 at the "Airport" exits, halfway between the cities of Midland and Odessa, Texas.

For more information about the memorial and the dedication ceremony, to suggest additions to the list of west Texas KIA/MIA's that will appear on the memorial, or to purchase an inscribed brick in the memorial walk, you may contact committee president John Philbeck at (915) 682-0461.

Visitors find culture, beauty in Mexico

(NU) - If thoughts of a Mexican vacation only bring to mind beaches and pyramids, think again. Mexico does have some of the world's most beautiful beaches, as well as hundreds of majestic Aztec and Mayan monuments to Mexico's ancient past. But to fully experience Mexico — rich in history, culture and natural beauty — requires a visit to some of the country's other varied treasures.'

Ecotourism and Outdoor Adventure

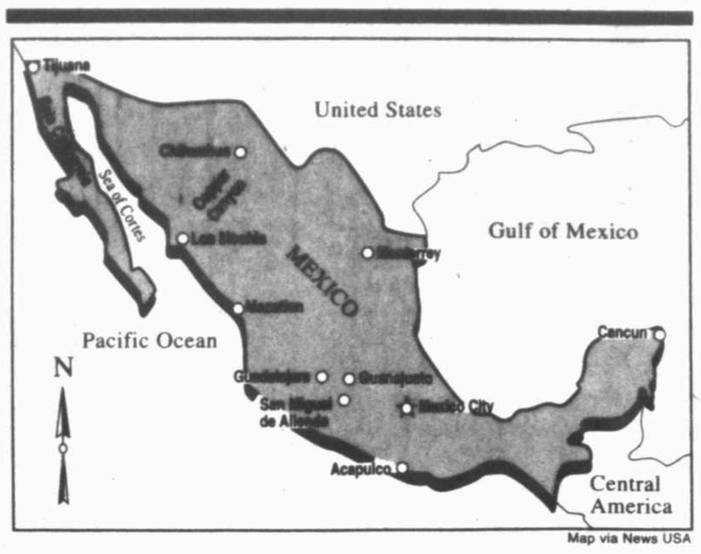

If outdoor adventure is what you're after, you may want to explore Mexico's spectacular Copper Canyon, which is located in the northern state of Chihuahua. This world-famous wonder is four times larger and 240 feet deeper than the Grand Canyon and offers breathtaking vistas.

There are several different ways to explore Copper Canyon. One of the latest — and most unique — is by luxury train. The Chihuahua El Pacifico line now offers passengers deluxe-class travel along its 400-mile, 16-hour route across the canyon from Los Mochis to Chihuahua. The Orient Express-style trains offer incredible views from a dome-seat car, where one can take in snow-covered mountain peaks and subtropical rain forests — not to mention five-course gourmet meals.

Mexico offers many other spectacular "ecotourism" opportunities as well. The country has some 58 national parks and biosphere reserves. One of the most fascinating is the Baja California and Sea of Cortes area. Just offshore, a series of islands designated as biosphere reserves are home to more than 570 species of plant life, 33 species of native reptiles and 850 species of marine life. The Sea of Cortes is a breeding area for whales and has been declared a whale sanctuary.

Colonial Cities

The beauty of Mexico can be seen not only in nature but also in the man-made structures erected throughout the country's history. The ruins of ancient cities bring alive the country's Aztec and Mayan past, but to get a full sense of Mexican culture requires a visit to the country's colonial cities. These cities — which date from 1521 to 1821 — reflect the colonial period's rich customs and institutions, with their colorful "mercados" (markets) and magnificent architecture.

Map via News USA

Just two hours northwest of Mexico City is San Miguel de Allende, a city with an international reputation as an artistic and intellectual center. A charming, picturesque town of cobblestone streets and lush gardens, San Miguel is located on a mountain plateau, and contains an endless array of galleries, shops, and cathedrals and churches from colonial times.

A little farther down the road is Guanajuato. An unusual street plan leads pedestrians through the twists and turns of cobblestone alleys that open to stunning plazas. Guanajuato hosts the International Cervantes Festival every October, bringing together world-renowned symphony orchestras, drama companies, ballet troupes and other performing artists.

The Marvels of Mexico City

It's not surprising to find a variety of historic and cultural sites right in Mexico City. Take Chapultepec Castle, located in magnificent Chapultepec Park, with its zoo, lake and sweeping view of the city. The castle has served as a military academy and, after restoration of the Republic, home to Mexico's presidents. Today, it's a museum of Mexican history.

Perhaps the most visible landmark is the Monument to Independence, with its golden "angel" flying atop a majestic column, sitting on the famous avenue, Paseo de la Reforma. Just down the street from the strikingly modern Bolsa — Mexico's thriving new stock exchange building — the monument was dedicated on Sept. 16, 1910, the 100th anniversary of Mexico's independence.

A monument of a different sort is the Fine Arts Palace in Mexico City — home of the Mexico Folklore Ballet. People from all over the world come to see the palace's beautiful architecture and enjoy the colorful performances of traditional Mexican dances.

For visitors making Mexico an increasingly frequent stop — especially with the growing business and economic ties in North America — Mexico's many historic treasures offer a fuller sense of its fascinating culture, people and natural beauty. UNITED STATES: Closer toward totalitarianism

Running for governor and your popularity is sinking in the polls? Blame the politically powerless undocumented immigrants.

Immigrant-bashing, which periodically shows its ugly face during austere economic times, has once again reopened an age-old political question: Is the United States, with its increasingly diverse population, too pluribus for unum?

While illegal immigration has always been part of our demographic, what is curious about today's rising tide of anti-alien propaganda is the wide array of Big Brother tactics being employed to end it.

Beefed up border patrols, a 2,000-mile Berlin Wall, tamper-proof ID cards, even special dusts to spray on the "illegal aliens" are being proposed by get-tough politicians.

To stop Cuban refugees and their Haitian neighbors who risk their lives to flee dictatorships, the United States herds them off into concentration camps in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Panama.

But of all ideas being touted to counter illegal immigration, none is more extreme — or misguided — than California's Proposition 187, which seeks to eject undocumented children from public schools. Sponsored by right-wing yahoos who are trying to scapegoat Mexican immigrants for the state's economic problems, the fractious anti-immigrant referendum is dividing voters along racial and cultural lines.

Why are we blaming the newly arrived? Illegal immigrants didn't destroy the aerospace business. Nor did they have a hand in the savings and loan scandal or engineer the stock market crash. They did not play a part in the real estate slump.

But they are visible and political powerless. Demagogic politicians like Republican California Gov. Pete Wilson and Democratic Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles are fanning the flames of bigotry against all people of brown skin, spreading falsehoods about the economic "burden" of immigrants.

Immigrants nationwide contributed $28.7 billion more in taxes than they used in services last year, according to a new Urban Institute study.

In California, they contributed $12 billion more each year than they cost in schooling, health care and other services. What this suggests is that the positive effect of immigration strongly outweighs the negative.

California's current economic crisis, and that of some other states, cannot be blamed on a young Mexican gardener cutting grass in an upscale West Los Angeles neighborhood. Nor can Florida's economic problems be pinned on a Nicaraguan nanny, changing diapers for a two-income yuppie family in Miami.

Indeed, the vast majority of undocumented workers are doing the work that others — even those on welfare — will not do. Newly arrived immigrants are filling a gap.

The vast majority of today's immigrants come here for the same reason your grandparents came: the United States is the land of opportunity. Like your grandparents, they are tough, aggressive, hard-working people.

But when a democratic nation sets out to persecute a segment of its population, to hunt them down and deprive them of basic health care and education, that moves dangerously closer toward totalitarianism.

Indeed, the United States owes its greatness to immigrants. But while the words chiseled on the base of the Statue of Liberty may ring hollow for many nativists, the masses of tired and poor, whether Mexican, Chinese or Haitian, find themselves less and less welcome in this nation of immigrants.

Perhaps, Emma Lazarus's famous words on the Statute of Liberty should be replaced with this time-tested dictum: When times are tough, blame the newcomers.

Joseph Garcia-Prats, M.D. - Baylor College of Medicine in Houston

Heridas de la espalda podría ser costoso

Houston—(1 noviembre, 1994)—Los chalecos de apoyo se han hecho accesorios importantes para las personas que quieren evitar una herida mientras levantan objetos pesados. Pero un experto en las heridas de la espalda dice que podría ser un error costoso confiar únicamente en estos chalecos.

"Los chalecos pueden proteger contra las heridas, con tal de que las personas que las usen todavía hagan ejercicios preventivos y levanten y muevan objetos pesados correctamente," dijo el Dr. Terrence Glennon, un profesor asociado de medicina física y rehabilitación de Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

"La técnica correcta de levantar as tan importante como el ejercicio," dijo Glennon. "Siempre levante usando los músculos de las piernas. Agáchese para agarrar el objeto, luego enderécese usando las piernas."

Glennon dice que los ejercicios para estirar los músculos y desarrollar fuerza en la espalda se pueden hacer en casa sin pesas o máquinas de ejercicio.

Glennon sugiere dos ejercicios disehados para fortalecer los músculos que apoyan la espalda.

La contracción abdominal es semejante a un ejercicio en que se pone el tronco recto desde una posición supina. Acuéstese en el piso con los pies encima de un sofá o una silla. Relaje el cuello y los hombros con los brazos doblados sobre el pecho. Luego levante los hombros del piso y manténgalos así mientras cuenta hasta cuatro, y repita esto 20 veces.

El otro ejercicio es el opuesto de una contracción abdominal. Acuéstese boca abajo con los brazos juntos a los costados y levante el mentón y el pecho del piso, cuente hasta cuatro, y repita 20 veces.

Glennon también sugiere que se haga estiramiento para desarrollar más fuerza y flexibilidad:

— Acuéstese boca abajo y empuje el pecho para arriba con los brazos, manteniendo la pelvis y las rodillas pegadas al piso.

— Permaneciendo boca abajo, doble la rodilla y levante una pierna a la vez hacia la nalga. Agarre el pie con la mano del mismo lado hasta que sienta un poco de tensión en el músculo cuadriceps del frente de la pierna. Este músculo es importante para mantener la pelvis una posición correcta para fuerza y buena postura.

— Para estirar el tendón de la corva acuéstese boca arriba. Doble la rodilla hacia el pecho hasta que forme un ángulo recto. Sosteniendo la rodilla con una toalla, lentamente enderece la pierna hasta que sienta tensión en el tendón de la corva. Mantenga esta posición por un cuento de cuatro.

Estos ejercicios y estiramientos, cuando hechas por lo menos tres veces a la semana, deben de proporcionar mayor fuerza en los grupos de músculos que apoyan la espalda inferior. En combinación con un chaleco de apoyo, la probabilidad de herida debe de quedar reducida.
