Carter pledges to curb federal spending

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — President Carter, delivering a campaign-style speech in sweltering heat, said Saturday his administration is determined to curb inflation, reduce red tape and rewrite regulations so ordinary people can understand them.

Carter vowed that he'll use the veto if necessary to hold down federal spending "even if it means I have to take the political consequences."

At his last stop on his two-day trip, the president went to Fort Hood, Texas, and watched a military firepower display estimated to have cost $1 million. Carter defended the firing of 30,000 rounds of ammunition as "well worth it ... just for my own education."

During his speech in Beaumont, Carter said: "It is not easy to refuse additional funds for such things as veterans, farmers, water projects, defense and education, for example."

"But somebody has to hold the line on spending and I am willing to do so even if it means I have to take the political consequences. ... Short-sighted selfishness can only lead to a spiral of inflation that nobody will be able to stop."

At least two women and one man were overcome in the 96-degree weather and had to be helped to the shade as Carter spoke at the dedication of a post office building here.

Carter returned to Washington on Saturday evening aboard Air Force One, arriving at Andrews Air Force Base at 7:06 p.m. EDT.

The president began his day in Houston, where he held a series of private meetings with business representatives, Hispanics, blacks and Texas campaign volunteers from the 1976 campaign.

From Houston, where Carter addressed a $500-a-plate fund-raising dinner on Friday night, the presidential party went to Beaumont, an oil refining town on the Gulf of Mexico.

Carter has said before that he'll veto inflationary spending bills, but during his Texas visit, the president repeatedly emphasized that he would use the veto even if it means angering special interest groups.

Carter identified the groups as highway and defense contractors, home builders and dam builders, farmers, educators, veterans, and local and state government officials.

"I am prepared to use the full powers of my office — every resource at my command, including the veto — to hold the line on the federal budget," the president had said the night before at the fundraiser.

Aboard the presidential jet, one Carter adviser, asking not to be identified publicly, said the president probably would veto even a politically popular tax cut if Congress includes in it "the regressive language" of an amendment offered by Rep. William Steiger, R-Wis.

Apparently the official was referring to an amendment that would cut the maximum rate of income tax on capital gains by almost half — from the present maximum of 49 percent to

Children among victims in attack on mission school

VUMBA, Rhodesia (AP) — Black guerrillas wielding clubs, axes and bayonets massacred a dozen British missionaries and members of their families at a remote school for blacks near the Rhodesian border with Mozambique, the government reported Saturday.

A 3-week-old girl and four other children were among those killed in the attack, the deadliest raid on a white-run mission in Rhodesia's 6-year war with guerrillas.

The Mozambique government said, meanwhile, that fierce fighting continued between its forces and Rhodesian troops who staged a cross-border raid into Mozambican territory. Mozambique said the helicopter-borne invaders killed 19 persons, including two Belgian U.N. workers, in fighting that began Thursday night in southwestern Mozambigue. Rhodesia said the report was "completely without foundation."

Six or eight black gunmen who infiltrated from Mozambique attacked the Emmanuel mission school Friday night and killed 12 of the 14 whites there, Rhodesian authorities said. The dead included members of three families.

The school, in this area of Rhodesia's rugged eastern highlands five miles west of the Mozambique border, was operated by the Elim Pentacostal Church, based in Cheltenham, England.

The missionaries, wives and children had been battered. Blanket-shrouded bodies lay beside the school cricket field when reporters arrived at the scene Saturday.

One badly beaten white woman missionary who survived, identified as Mary Fisher, 28, had staggered 50 yards from the scene of the massacre to the cricket field, where she was found by troops early Saturday.

Miss Fisher was taken to hospital in Salisbury, 120 miles northwest of the mission. Her condition was described as critical.

Another white, Ian Milton McGarrick, survived unharmed after being alerted by a black member of the mission staff. McGarrick apparently hid in the bush during the attack. He refused to talk to reporters.

They told reporters the guerrillas roused them from their dormitory beds and told them the school was being closed. They said they were then ordered back to the dorms, some 300 yards from the scene of the massacre, and were unaware of the killings until the bodies were discovered Saturday morning.

The students, who were evacuated to nearby Umtali Saturday, said the guerrillas described themselves as "Freedom Fighters from ZANU," the Mozambique-based Zimbabwe African National Union.

ZANU, headed by Robert Mugabe, is one of two guerrilla armies in the Patriotic Front alliance fighting to topple the biracial Rhodesian government headed by white Prime Minister Ian Smith. Smith has signed an internal settlement plan with three black moderates, designed to bring about black majority rule by the end of this year.

The guerrillas have denounced the plan and have stepped up their attacks, focusing recently on white missions.

A black member of the school staff said the attack came two days before the missionaries planned to move to Umtali, a heavily defended border town 10 miles north of here, because of increased guerrilla infiltration into the area.

British Foreign Secretary David Owen, speaking in his home constituency of Plymouth, England, denounced the attack as "senseless killing."

Thirty-three white missionaries have been killed since the guerrilla war began, five of them in the past three weeks. The last five deaths were in southwestern Rhodesian, in the area infiltrated by Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union, based in Zambia and Botswana.

The attack on the school came one day after Mozambique accused Rhodesia of mounting a two-pronged attack on an agricultural station 18 miles inside Mozambique.

A statement issued in Maputo said the "enemy murdered 17 refugees (from Rhodesia) and a Belgian and his wife," both of whom were identified as technicians for the U.N. Food and Agricultural Organization.

Rhodesia, which has repeatedly attacked guerrilla bases in Mozambique, denied responsibility for the latest attack.

Special education work completed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State public school leaders completed work Saturday on policies and procedures that would give every handicapped child in Texas a maximum opportunity to finish high school.

The third and final reading of the "Texas State Planning Design for Education for Handicapped Children" came before the State Board of Education in a special called meeting.

The plan was approved tentatively in February and May board meetings. Twenty regional workshops have been held throughout the state to gather public and professional comment plus five formal public hearings.

"This is our attempt to develop the very best document possible so our public schools can begin serving our handicapped children," said Don Weston, director of special education for the Texas Education Agency.

Don Patridge, TEA associate commissioner, said the new policies pinpoint four major changes in public schooling of handicapped children:

— The education of the handicapped child is basically the responsibility of the local school district.

— The full range of educational services for handicapped children is consolidated within a single program for the first time.

Callaghan arrives... ...late

WASHINGTON (AP) — British Prime Minister James Callaghan arrived here Saturday for talks with President Carter and American aviation officials. But his trip was delayed for almost two hours when one of Britain's supersonic Concorde jets developed an instrument problem.

Concorde's daily London-to-Washington flight, scheduled to depart Heathrow Airport at noon local time, finally left the runway an hour and 45 minutes later, airport officials said.

The British leader already was on board the needle-nosed aircraft when a pre-flight check by the cockpit crew turned up a discrepancy in instrument readings, a British Airways spokesman said.

"The delay to the departure was caused by an incorrect reading in one of two dials on the instrument panel," the spokesman said. "The engineers looked at the aircraft, which is standard procedure in such cases."

The spokesman said Callaghan and his party remained aboard the luxury 100-seat, single-class aircraft while experts examined it.

Callaghan learned shortly before he boarded that President Carter had agreed to meet him in Washington early Monday morning. The subject of their talks was not immediately disclosed.

Police arrest man along President's motorcade route

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Police arrested a man carrying a loaded, .22 caliber rifle along President Carter's motorcade route to this Southeast Texas city Saturday.

A Beaumont police spokesman said the man was traveling aboard a motorcycle on a freeway about one-fourth of a mile ahead of the motorcade.

Beaumont was the third stop on a four-stop, two-day Texas visit by Carter.

Carter spoke in Fort Worth Friday, and police there arrested two men spotted near the Tarrant County Convention Center shortly before Carter spoke there. The men were carrying a loaded rifle.

President's Houston visit to ease tensions: Jordan

HOUSTON (AP) — Rep. Barbara Jordan, D-Texas, said Saturday that President Carter's visit to Houston "helped ease some of the friction between the president and some black leaders.

Rep. Jordan, who is stepping down after six years in Congress, said some persons may disagree with her "but President Carter is not really in trouble with the black community. He may be in trouble with some black leaders, but there is still a hard core of Carter support among the blacks."

Carter met for 45 minutes with a group of about 50 black leaders of the Houston community. He had scheduled only 15 minutes for the session, but extended it an additional half hour as he answered questions about his urban program, the appointments of more blacks in top White House positions and the naming of a black to serve as a liaison officer with the blacks of the nation.

Rep. Jordan said the President "answered our questions in general terms, but did not go into details. Perhaps he didn't have the time for that.

"But this meeting gave us a springboard and we believe that now communications with the White House will be improved," she said.

Mickey Leland, who recently won the Democratic nomination to replace Rep. Jordan, said "the president made general overtures to our people and we are enncouraged. If he wants to be re-elected and does have future political ambitions, he will have to appeal to those of us who elected him in 1976 and were responsible in a large part for him winning in Texas."

Rep. Jordan said the president indicated he did not want to divide his White House staff in such a way that there would be someone handling only black affairs or women affairs. "He told us that the best way to communicate is directly to the president or to vice president Mondale. He told us he thinks the White House has the communications pretty well in hand now."

After the meeting with the black leaders, Carter shook hands with a group of his 1976 campaign volunteers and visited briefly with Rep. Bob Krueger and 27 businessmen backing the Democratic congressman in his campaign to unseat Republican John Tower in the U.S. Senate.

"The President called and asked if such a meeting would help Krueger," said Dave Dietko, Austin, financial director of the Krueger campaign.

"It worked out very well," Dietko said.

Beaumont man meets old boss

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Fifty-year-old Ray Starnes of Beaumont met his old boss Saturday.

Both are in different jobs now. Starnes is an instrument technician with Mobil Oil Co. and his ex-boss is the President of the United States.

President Carter was in Beaumont as part of a four-stop, two-day swing through Texas.

Starnes served under Carter aboard the USS Wyoming in 1946. It was Carter's first tour of duty after his graduation from the U.S. Naval Academy.

The pair shook hands and Carter said Starnes was "a fine young man who worked under me."

Carter said Starnes was promoted to petty officer some six months after they met.

"I helped him," the president said.

6,000 brave June heat to protest nuclear energy

SEABROOK, N.H. (AP) — More than 6,000 demonstrators braved the June heat, flies and piles of garbage Saturday to crowd onto an 18-acre former town dump adjacent to the seaside Seabrook nuclear power plant to rally against nuclear energy.

Soon after members of the Clamshell Alliance and their sympathizers entered the site, a colorful tent city had been erected.

There was a stage for concerts and speeches and alternative energy exhibits were set up. Demonstrators baked bread in a solar oven and sold T-shirts displaying a variety of anti-nuclear slogans.

Across a marsh from the camp site, a flotilla of small boats picketed an offshore drilling rig used for construction of cooling tunnels for the nuclear plant.

Clamshell leaders claim the three-day anti-nuclear demonstration will be the largest of its kind in the nation's history.

The demonstration area, once the town dump, is separated from the plant construction area by a chain-link fence, patrolled by about 250 police officers.

About one-third of the demonstration area is swampy, and half bears the vestiges of the dump. The remaining land is densely wooded.

State authorities and the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, majority shareholder in the plant, agreed to allow the occupation in exchange for an agreement by the Clamshell that demonstrators would remain inside the rally area, be non-violent and leave by Monday afternoon.

The protesters, who came from California, Florida, Tennessee, Oklahoma, New York, New Jersey and Canada as well as New England, made their way to the site Saturday in groups of 200 to 300.

"It really feels great," said Harvey Wasserman, a protest leader. "We've got our peaceful piece of turf here, and we're going to make the most of it ... There is no tension in the air. Everybody is pretty relaxed ... We're all set to have a good solid anti-nuclear weekend."

"They are tremendously dedicated," commented William Shaheen, U.S. attorney for New Hampshire. "I really have a lot of respect for them. I think this demonstration is amazing."

Among those present were several celebrities, including Dr. Benjamin Spock and comedian and civil rights leader Dick Gregory.

Talks aimed at reviving peace negotiations

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts met for two hours Saturday with President Anwar Sadat and other top Egyptian officials to explore ways to revive stalled Mideast peace talks with Israel.

The talks followed reports Washington is preparing to mount a new diplomatic offensive aimed at restarting direct Israeli-Egyptian negotiations, deadlocked since January over Israel's refusal to surrender occupied Arab lands or allow creation of a Palestinian homeland.

U.S. officials, who declined to be identified, said in Washington Friday that Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance plans to meet in London next month with Foreign Ministers Mohamed Ibrahim Kamel of Egypt and Moshe Dayan of Israel.

At the same time, Carter administration sources said Vice President Walter F. Mondale's visit to Israel later this month is being upgraded from a ceremonial trip to a diplomatic mission focusing on the U.S.-mediated peace talks. The sources said Mondale was adding a stop in Egypt to his itinerary and would meet Sadat July 3, after talks in Jerusalem beginning June 29.

Neither side would comment on Saturday's Eilts-Sadat talks in Alexandria, the Egyptian president's summer headquarters. Egyptian Vice President Hosny Mubarak and Foreign Minister Kamel also attended the meeting at Mamoura Palace.

Meanwhile, the No. 2 man in Egypt's Foreign Ministry, Dr. Butros Ghali, the minister of state for foreign affairs, met British envoy Willie Morris. There was speculation that meeting was related to the three-way Vance conference in London next month.

The Alexandria meeting came six days after the Israeli Cabinet refused to commit itself to full withdrawal from the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

North Yemen chief assassinated

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Ahmed al Ghashmi of North Yemen was assassinated Saturday in the explosion of a bomb hidden in a visiting diplomatic envoy's bag, the official Iraqi News Agency said.

Ghashmi was killed as the envoy from the rival South Yemeni government was about to hand him a message, INA reported. The envoy also was killed in the blast, INA said. The agency, whose reports are distributed here, attributed the information to North Yemen's government-run radio in the capital, Sana.

The bomb exploded when the envoy opened the bag to produce a letter for Ghashmi from South Yemeni President Salim Robaye Ali, INA said.

It was not clear from the report whether the envoy was believed aware of the bomb's presence.

INA quoted the North Yemen broadcast as saying Ghashmi "was killed from a quarter known for its perfidy against the nation and Allah." This was an apparent reference to the Marxist regime in neighboring South Yemen.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Tom Reston issued a statement that said in part:

"We have had a report from our embassy in Sana that a bomb exploded Saturdy morning in the Yemen Arab Republic (North Yemen) military headquarters and we are, of course, aware of reports saying that President Ghashmi was killed.

"However, we do not yet have a detailed account of the incident....As of last report, Sana was calm and the small American community was safe."

There was no immediate independent verification of the assassination report. If true, Ghashmi was the second North Yemeni president killed in the past six months.

President Ibrahim al Hamdi was mysteriously murdered in North Yemen last October. His assassins were never identified.

The Hamdi government had followed a policy of close alignment with North Yemen's rich and conservative northern neighbor, Saudi Arabia, and of increasing cooperation with the United States. Ghashmi, commander of the country's armed forces, was a close associate of Hamdi.

He became president only two months ago after serving as chief of a three-man presidential council that took over following Hamdi's assassination.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission is ending a stormy tenure by asserting that the government imposes too many regulations on the marketplace.

"All health and safety regulation increases cost, reduces competition, lowers productivity and diminishes consumer choice," said S. John Byington in an interview.

Byington's resignation will become effective Friday. The commission is responsible for protecting consumers from hazardous products.

"We're supposed to get a benefit for every regulation but the benefit has to outweigh these negatives before it can be appropriate. That is the biggest problem," he said.

President Carter has yet to name a successor to Byington, one of the last Republicans to head a federal agency. Byington is planning to enter private law practice here after his government service ends.

The chairman said bans and mandatory safety standards on products are "only fallback situations" that he hopes the product safety agency will use infrequently in the future.

Byington cited a safety standard on chain saws now being developed by the commission together with an industry group as the type of voluntary standard that the commission is turning toward.

Alluding to Proposition 13 in California, Byington said this and other tax-cutting actions reflect the fact that the public "wants to recapture its government from a sometimes insensitive bureaucracy."

Byington's views run counter to those of many critics of the agency he heads. These critics in Congress, the Carter administration and consumer organizations say the commission frequently has failed to act promptly to protect consumers from hazardous products.

Byington has been controversial since he was nominated for the post by former President Gerald R. Ford.

PASS THE DIRT, PLEASE!

Many years ago, when one person sold property to another, the two of them would go out on the land that was about to be transfered. While witnesses watched the seller would take a leaf from a tree or a clump or dirt and solemnly hand it over to the buyer. This was a symbol of the sale, literally showing the seller transferring the land to the buyer.

Then the "crivener" (a person who could write) wrote the agreement on some kind of druable material so it couldn't be erased or altered. The name of the seller was written down, he puts his personal seal on the "document," and that was it! The sale was complete with every one happy and satisfied.

Needless to say, things aren't simple anymore, and much more is involved in buying and selling property now. There is a veritable maze of detials and procedures that MUST be followed. An unwary person lost there could find himself with many problems, possibly causing the loss of much money. We, as professional Realtors know our way throgh that maze, and we guide our clients & customers throgh it safely and confidently!

Fighting wind erosion not a hopeless task

Problems with wind erosion have been particularly bothersome to Midlanders in their movement to sub-divisions surrounding the city, said Sam Nance, range conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service serving Midland County.

Nance said the "worst problems" with wind erosion "generally occur on land that was previously planted in crops."

"Sub-divided rangeland gives somewhat of a head start (in the battle against wind erosion), because some native vegetation is present," he said.

He offered suggestions on cutting down on wind erosion:

"If at all possible, do not disturb the existing grass cover, even if you plan to improve it by planting an improved variety of grass."

Nance said the native cover will protect the soil from erosion "while you are establishing a different species of grass and (will) act as a nurse crop for the new grass."

"Unless the existing stand is extremely dense, it will be of more benefit as cover than it will be competition for the new plants, he said."

Mesquite and "other undesirable woody species" may be removed by grubbing or killed off with chemicals.

Nance said the seed bed, seed quality, seeding rate and planting depth "are some of the most important items to consider" in the successful establishment of a grass cover.

"After planting, and if irrigation water is available, the top two-to-three inches of soil should be kept moist until the seeds are germinated," he said.

On a large garden tract, wind erosion can be prevented by planting a small grain crop in the fall, he said.

"This will also provide organic material and a greatly enriched soil for the summer garden."

Prior to planting time, the small grain can be killed by plowing or other tillage methods.

"The main point is to establish some type of cover," said Nance, who noted that "every situation is different."

—Alfalfa (perennial). Aug. 15 to Sept. 30. Plant one-half to one inch deep. Irrigation is a must.

—Rye, Wheat and other small grains (annual). Aug. 15 to Dec. 1. Plant one to three inch deep. Irrigation is desirable.

—Bermuda grass (perennial). April 1 to July 1 planting dates. Plant one-quarter to one-half inch deep. Irrigation is a must.

—Forage Sorghum (annual). May 1 to July 1 planting dates. Plant one to 2½ inches deep. Irrigation is desirable.

—Sideoats, Grama (perennial). Dec. 1 to June 1. Plant one-half to three-quarter inch deep. Irrigation is desirable.

Nance and Dick Hagelstein, district conservationist, can be reached for hints on reducing wind erosion and on other conservation measures in the SCS office on the first floor of the Federal Building in downtown Midland or by dialing 684-8722.

Nazis pelted in Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Nazi leader Frank Collin and about 15 of his followers were greeted with a shower of rocks and eggs on Saturday from thousands of counterdemonstrators at a federal building plaza.

Police kept the crowd and the Nazis separated. Collin, who like his band, was dressed in full Nazi regalia, was ringed by his followers carrying quarter-inch thick plywood shields.

A few injuries were reported, and all were believed to be minor.

Police said nine persons were arrested. Eight were identified as members of the militant Jewish Defense League and were charged with disorderly conduct. One man was charged with battery against a police officer.

Shouts of "Death, Death, Death to the Nazis," came from the crowd, which began forming about two hours earlier, as Collin and members of his National Socialist Party of America emerged from the federal building under heavy police guard.

"You will end up as fertilizer. You will fertilize the farms of my people in the future," Collin shouted through a megaphone. But his words were drowned out by the crowd which continued to chant anti-Nazi epithets.

Collin challenged the crowd to meet him July 9 during his scheduled rally in Marquette Field "if they had the guts."

Less than 15 minutes after the Nazis appeared, Collin and his band re-entered the federal building.

The Nazis, scheduled to arrive at the plaza at about 4:30 p.m., were held by police a few blocks away for about two hours.

One woman was handcuffed and led away by police as she came near a barricade shouting, "Kill the Nazis, Kill the Nazis."

Hundreds of riot-equipped policemen were on duty, on foot and on horseback, in the plaza. About 1,000 other officers were on standby alert, within a few blocks from the plaza, officials said.

About half an hour before Collin was to arrive, a plainclothes police officer suffered a cut on his face as he tried to break up a scuffle.

The fight occurred when a small group of angry demonstrators attacked a man who was making pro-Nazi remarks as he walked through the crowd. The unidentified man was pummelled and knocked to the ground, but it was not known if he was injured.

The counterdemonstrators began assembling in the plaza about two hours before Collin and his followers were to arrive. The Nazi demonstration began forming at party headquarters on the Southwest Side.

Collin appeared in work pants and a stained, tattered white T-shirt. He told reporters: "I'm not feeling so good. But I'll feel better after our little victory rally."

The march, dubbed by Collin as a "victory rally," was planned after a federal court order allowed his party to march in city parks without posting a $60,000 insurance bond.

Collin had anticipatedd violence at the march, saying, "We might, if we're lucky, end in killing Jews legally."

"The Jewish Defense League has promised to storm the police line to do battle with us," Collin, 34, told followers at a Nazi meeting Friday night.

Stu Feiler, the JDL's Midwest coordinator, said before the march that "violence is likely."

Search leads to 'substance'

Officers from the Midland Police Department, Midland County Sheriff's Department and the Texas Department of Public Safety carried out a search warrant Saturday at a residence in the 300 block of East California Avenue and confiscated about 10 ounces of a substance they believe to be marijuana.

One man was arrested after the search, police said.

President vows to curb spending by government

25 percent. Capital gains are profits earned on the sale of stock and other propert."

Carter was applauded warmly by the Beaumont audience when he pledged to reduce the number of government regulations, cut red tape and ensure that the regulations are "written in plain English so a peanut farmer can understand them."

The president came to this East Texas town to help dedicate a refurbished, 44-year-old federal building named for Rep. Jack Brooks. The Texas Democrat heads a committee that has authority over the president's effort to reorganize the federal government.

At Fort Hood, Carter watched a massive display of Army artillery firepower. Initial military estimates placed the cost of the demonstration at $2.1 million. Later, however, the Army reduced the figure to $1 million.

"It was just that it didn't cost as much as we thought," said presidential press secretary Jody Powell.

Later, Carter told reporters that "whatever expenditure was involved, it was well worth it."

The president, impressed by the firing of more than 30,000 rounds of ammunition by the Army and Air Force, said the cost was worthwhile "just for my own education."

Carter said his visit to Fort Hood was "a very important requirement of my job."

Army Capt. Bill Wisenbaker of Fort Hood denied that publicity about the cost of the firepower demonstration at the armor base was a factor in the lowering of the cost estimate.

"It was based on the president's scheduling, which was revised after original plans for the demonstration were made."

Wisenbaker said about $800,000 worth of artillery was to be fired, and another $200,000 was to be spent in ancillary costs like fuel.

IN AN EFFORT to keep the flames from a burning abandoned house from spreading to neighboring houses, Lt. W.L. Burchett with the Midland Fire Department mans a firehose. The house, which caught on fire Saturday afternoon, was completely engulfed in flames by the time firemen arrived, a Fire Department spokesman said Saturday. Firefighters spent approximately three hours trying to contain the fire. Owner of the house is unknown, as is the cause of the fire, the spokesman said. (Staff Photo by Brian Hendershot)

By JOYCE CRAWFORD

Everyone ages a little more every day. But when one is young, the problems of growing old seem very remote.

With this thought in mind, 43 Midland and Odessa senior citizens are traveling to San Antonio today to participate in the governor's conference on aging.

Theme for the conference is "Maturity Speaks -- Let's Listen," and Jeri Sweeney, 72, of Midland said she hopes people will.

Jeri Sweeney

The conference is an opportunity to talk and share ideas with senior citizens from throughout the state, said Mrs. Sweeney. Midland and Odessa senior citizens are sponsored by Ector and Midland county commissioners.

Mrs. Sweeney has been retired for 10 years, but was active in the senior citizen programs long before that. Before her retirement in 1968, she was a member of the American Association for Retired Persons.

Her philosophy, "we can't get anywhere sitting on our hands," shows the energy she uses to get the seniors recognized.

She said the idea of the conference is to bring problems encountered by older persons living on fixed incomes to the forefront. "By talking together we can figure out better ways for people to live as they grow older," she said.

"Most of us are victims of marginal housing with rents far beyond our inadequate and unsecured pensions," said Mrs. Sweeney.

She has lived in her apartment for almost four years, and she said the rent has been raised four times. "Now we have to pay utilities too." Mrs. Sweeney doesn't blame the landlords because all the things they must pay for are going up also, she said.

"The problem is," she said, "that we (people on fixed incomes) have no way of meeting the increase."

But the area that upsets her the most and the one she plans on talking about at the conference is inflation.

"I'm going to get up on my soapbox," she said. "Inflation is too much for us -- we can't cope with it."

She also said she had it easier during the depression, "and I had a baby then."

She described a television show she watched recently that said unions were the cause of inflation. "When they get a raise the prices go up, but our income doesn't go up," she said.

"No issue in our country today commands more urgency than the reality of old age versus inflation," Mrs. Sweeney said. "Young and old alike are victims of its burden."

Mrs. Sweeney is very active in Midland with programs to help the retired. "I love to contribute. Just because you get old doesn't mean you get dumb."

Right now she keeps the books for the nutrition program, which serves a hot meal each day at noon to those who need one. She praised the program, saying that some of the old people wouldn't get a decent meal without it.

Florence Little, who works with Senior Services, said the problem in Midland is that the services offered to senior citizens are not housed under the same umbrella.

Mrs. Sweeney agreed that the programs were not organized well enough, but said that is something they hope to learn about from other senior citizens at the conference.

Both women said although Midland did offer their senior and retired citizens some benefits, they were not as numerous as in many cities. There are programs in othercities where the elderly get discounts on utilities, movies, taxes, hotels, and more, said Mrs. Little.

Mrs. Sweeney said, "We need to feel ourselves a part of our community with the opportunity to serve through our experience, memories and perspective. This would enrich our own lives."

"Keeping us out," she said, "is a huge waste of human resources, because the percentage of society's population over 65 will rise with each decade.

But whatever position the elderly have in society, the fact remains there are certain services they need," Mrs. Sweeney said.

"We need changes in the delivery of essential services, such as medical care which is too costly for many. Basic necessities, more learning, recreation, work and social interplay are also needed," she said.

As an example of how hard the simple things most people take for granted can be for someone in her position, she told of a conversation with her daughter.

"I have trouble with my teeth," she said, "and one day my daughter asked me when I was going to get my upper dentures. I told her I would just as soon as I got $700."

Little, everyday things become problems, too. Even mailing a letter can be too expensive sometimes, she said.

"I wrote my grandkids a letter and then had to scrounge around in my desk for a stamp." She said she ended up putting four different stamps on it, all taped across the front.

She paused and added with a laugh that one of the stamps was a ¢6 air mail.

"I told those kids to save it for their stamp collection," she said. "I bet they never saw one before."

Bush assessing presidential 'winability'

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — George Bush, former director of the CIA, said here Saturday he will assess his "winability" and make an early decision whether to seek the 1980 Republican presidential nomination.

He made the statement at a news conference before addressing the Virginia State Bar at a banquet that ends a three-day meeting here.

While most of reporters' questions concerned his possible candidacy, Bush also commented on the United States intelligence community.

"The U.S. intelligence capability is the best in the world, but it's not as good as it should be," he said.

The capability has been "diminished by excesses of disclosure," he said. "We ought to get off the back of the CIA and the FBI."

Bush, a wealthy Texas businessman who has held no public office since Jan. 1977, has said recently that he would like Jimmy Carter's job.

"Someone who is an outsider like me would have to move early" in deciding whether to seek the GOP presidential nomination, Bush said Saturday.

He did not poinpoint when the decision would come.

There is a "mounting perception of an inability to lead in this county," he charged.

But he also said, "One could learn something from President Carter" about campaigning. "He wasn't a big shot...he went to small towns."

Hot in Midland; it could be worse

Midland was in the minority Saturday, as one of the few West Texas cities that did not experience temperatures of 100 degrees or more.

Saturday's high was 98 degrees. In other West Texas cities, Abilene had 103; Amarillo, 100; Lubbock, 103, and Marfa, 102. Saturday's 111 in El Paso broke Friday's record for the hottest temperature recorded in that city. The previous high of 109 degrees, set in 1960, was broken Friday by a temperature of 110. This is the 11th day of temperatures higher than 100 degrees in El Paso.

The forecast for the Midland area calls for fair today through Monday with hot afternoons. The high today and Monday should be near 100 degrees. The low tonight should be in the lower 70s. Winds should be southerly at 15 to 20 mph today and tonight.

Work finished for handicapped

the regular general education program whenever possible.

— The new policy defines state responsibility for special education, at the same time blending federal requirements into the state and local program.

"Within this framework, every handicapped child will be given maximum opportunity to graduate from high school," Patridge said.

The policy and procedures document calls for state appropriations of $237.9 million in the 1978-79 school year. A separate program for the deaf will get $12.2 million and another $2.9 million goes to the visually handicapped.

Texas will receive about $30 million in federal funds to help support special education during the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, 1978.

In approving the policy document, the board considered a "purpose" provision saying that: "Public education is the responsibility of the state for the purpose of providing all students regardless of abilities the opportunity to develop to their fullest individual potentials." On the motion of board member James M. Binion of Abilene the words "regardless of abilities" were removed.

"That would just get us into a can of worms with some people who have a different idea than we do," he said.

Human rights: real concern or political ploy?

EDITOR'S NOTE — Human rights advocacy around the globe is a policy the Carter administration has made its own since its fledgling days. Few quarrel with the ideal behind it, but what are the practical results? An AP diplomatic reporter assesses the record in the following account.

By ROBERT B. CULLEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's been a year and a half since President Carter walked up Pennsylvania Avenue on his Inauguration Day and, a few weeks later, wrote a personal letter of support to embattled Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov.

Carter doesn't walk around in Washington anymore, having long since given in to the circumstances of security and convenience which dictate that he ride in a motorcade. Nor does he write letters to Soviet dissidents.

Like his travel arrangements, Carter's human rights policy, the first foreign policy initiative of his administration, has been tempered. Some critics charge that its chief purpose was public relations, just like his well-photographed stroll from the Capitol.

The human rights advocates Carter has planted in the foreign affairs bureaucracy argue to the contrary. They say that Carter's policy has made human rights a worldwide issue and improved the lives of thousands of people who might otherwise be forgotten and left to sit in jail for political crimes.

It's hard to keep an objective scorecard on the policy. Relations with the Soviet Union appear worse than at any time since detente began, but State Department officials believe that irritants like Soviet involvements in Africa and the slow pace of arms limitation talks are more to blame than the human rights initiative.

In the Middle East and Southeast Asia, the administration has found that strategic considerations limit its ability to push for human rights. There has been no official American criticism, for example, of the dictatorial ways of the Saudi Arabian ruling families. The proud and sensitive Saudis wield too much power over world oil prices and other Arab nations to risk annoying them.

Authoritarian regimes of Latin America have been the most frequent targets of administration criticism, and they have not appreciated it. The U.S. military aid programs with Brazil, Uruguay, El Salvador and Guatemala were ended at the request of their indignant governments. Congress voted to cut off aid to Chile and Argentina, and the administration cut military aid to Nicaragua to little more than a trickle.

Balanced against those disturbances in friendly relations, the administration cites the release of 10,000 Indonesian political prisoners; elections scheduled this year to replace military governments in Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia; and, officials say, an intangible improvement in the image of the United States abroad.

Carter, of course, did not initiate the American concern for human rights. The Nixon administration's first secretary of state, William Rogers, negotiated the human rights provisions in the Helsinki accords.

Congress, led by younger Democratic members, has for several years been passing laws like the one requiring the State Department to publish annual evaluations of countries receiving American aid.

But for many people, Henry Kissinger embodied foreign policy from 1969 to 1976 and Kissinger laid no stress publicly on human rights. While he would sometimes intervene quietly on behalf of individual victims of repression, he believed there was no practical way for the United States to influence another nation's internal conduct, least of all by public pressure.

Against this backdrop, Carter's human rights initiatives represented a radical change in American policy from the last Kissinger years. And that, say some critics, was the point.

"Kissinger's amoral realism was not going down very well with the American people," Norman Graebner, a diplomatic historian at the University of Virginia, told a reporter. "Carter, as a new and relatively unknown quantity in foreign affairs, needed to create a foreign policy consensus. I see the human rights campaign largely as a public relations ploy for domestic consumption."

Patricia Derian, the Mississippi civil rights activist whom Carter appointed to the new position of assistant secretary of state for human rights, disagrees.

"It was done as a matter of principle. It was something we should have been doing. I think there is probably a domestic political payoff, but that is truly a side effect," she says.

Whatever its genesis, the human rights initiative soon became entangled in the realities of international politics.

The Soviets reacted with deep hostility and began hinting that detente could not survive a strong human rights offensive by the United States.

With critical negotiations on strategic arms in the balance, the focus of American criticism of Soviet human rights violations shifted from the White House to the Belgrade review conference on the Helsinki accords. Not coincidentally, the American criticism also faded from the world's front pages.

In the Third World, the problems the administration encountered are illustrated by Nicaragua and the Philippines, two longstanding American allies often cited by those who said the United States would prop up any dictator willing to say he was anti-communist.

Nicaragua was occupied by U.S. Marines in the 1920s and early 1930s when its government fell behind in payments on its debt to American and European banks. The Marines finally left in 1933, but not before forming for the tiny country a national guard and placing Anastasio Somoza as its head.

The guard, combining the functions of the police and the army, was a potent power base. Somoza seized control of the government in 1936. With one brief interruption, he and his descendants have ruled the country — with American support — ever since. The current president is West Point-trained Anastasio Somoza Jr., and Anastasio III is a major in the national guard.

The Philippines was a Spanish colony until the United States seized it in 1898. Immediately after World War II, it was granted independence and was a democracy until Ferdinand Marcos began ruling by martial law in 1972.

American influence is widespread in both countries. Because of that, the State Department has suggested, the United States has a greater responsibility for promoting human rights than it does in a country like Cambodia where there is no American influence (and no practical leverage).

The department's report on human rights in 1977 says that in Nicaragua, the Somoza regime improved its record by ending martial rule and allowing opposition and newspapers to operate freely.

The Marcos government in the Philippines, it said, "took no real steps toward the restoration of democratic government or the elimination of the more severe intrusions on human rights."

But when the time came to dole out American military aid in the 1979 budget proposals, Nicaragua, not the Philippines, was punished.

Nicaragua was the only American ally which the administration proposed to cut off from American grants and credits for purchasing arms. Normally, it would get $2.5 million.

The Philippines, on the other hand, will get $36 million in U.S. military aid, about the same it received under the Ford administration's budgets.

As Secretary of State Cyrus Vance noted in testimony before Congress, the Philippines has leverage. It is the last place in Southeast Asia where the United States is allowed to maintain military bases, and the two governments are negotiating renewal of the leases.

Nicaragua has no such leverage.

Ms. Derian did visit Manila, and she did repeatedly upbraid the Filipino leaders she met about human rights. One night she left a party in her honor and, dressed in an evening gown, visited the leader of the Philippine opposition, Sen. Benigno Aquino, in his prison cell.

But her demonstration of American concern had little tangible impact. Several months later, Marcos consented to hold elections to the powerless national assembly. But Aquino remained in jail. And after the elections, many others who had opposed Marcos in the campaign were thrown in with him.

But the new human rights officials at the State Department say they are encouraged. "The distance covered is dwarfed by the distance that remains to be traveled," says Warren Christopher, deputy secretary of state. "But our experience ... convinces us that while the journey is long, it is not impossible."

Texans honored by board

ATLANTA — Two Texans were recently honored for their "distinguished contributions to the advancement of higher education in the South" by the Southern Regional Education Board.

Senator W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland and former Representative Don W. Cavness of Austin were among a group of 26 Southern governors, legislators and educators to be recognized by the board. All of the men had served as SREB officers during the past 10 years.

Snelson was SREB treasurer for 1975-76 and chairman of the SREB Legislative Advisory Council for 1976-77. Former Representative Cavness chaired the Legislative Advisory Council in 1970-71.

Farm production costs climbing

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although farm income prospects are brighter this year, production costs are still climbing at a steady clip, according to the Agriculture Department.

As now projected, net farm income could rise to around $26 billion, up more than 27 percent from $20.4 billion in 1977, according to USDA analysts.

Farm production expenses, meanwhile, are expected to climb an additional 8.7 percent from 1977, only a third of the rate of increase projected for farm income.

The fallacy in that single comparison is that net farm income has gyrated wildly in recent years — from $17.8 billion in 1972 to a record of $29.9 billion in 1973 and then down again — while production expenses have climbed consistently over many years.

Regardless of the prices of wheat, cattle or other commodities, farmers have to meet certain bills if they remain in business. Except in minor ways, farmers who do stay in business cannot cut corners much when it comes to buying the things they need to produce.

In this regard, farmers are passive victims of inflation the same as other consumers. If the prices of fuel, fertilizer, machinery and other items go up, they have to accept this or quit.

The Agriculture Department each year publishes a survey showing how farmers spend money to produce the food and fiber needed by Americans and foreign buyers. Although the figures are not considered absolute or necessarily typical of all farmers, they do provide some perspective on the costs of agricultural production.

The most recent analysis was published last week by the department's Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service in a report, "Farm Production Expenses for 1977."

About 5,300 farmers and ranches were included in the survey. The information then was used to construct national figures for the 2.7 million farms in the United States, exclusive of Alaska and Hawaii.

According to the report, the average expenditure on production last year was $36,238 a farm, up almost 12.7 percent from the average of $32,165 in 1976.

DIRT, SQUIRT & QUIRT

Agent answers common queries

By CHARLES GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent—Agriculture

Many questions are directed to the County Extension office concerning various gardening problems. Today I will discuss some of the most frequently asked questions.

WHAT COULD BE CAUSING THE LEAVES OF MY PLANTS TO TURN BROWN ALONG THE EDGES? Probaby the foremost cause of leaf scorch in the West Texas area is the accumulation of salts in the soil from the irrigation water. If these salts are not periodically leached below the root zone of plants they can accumulate to the point that normal movement of water into the plant is restricted. Leaf—burn may also indicate some type of root injury, such as that caused by heavy amounts of fertilizer applied too near the roots of the plant. Other possible causes are root injury due to such things as nematodes, insects or physical injury of roots due to cultivation. Also overwatering or underwatering along with various types of diseases might cause leaf—tip burn.

I HAVE PLANTED SQUASH, CUCUMBERS AND MELONS IN MY GARDEN. WILL THEY CROSS—POLLINATE AND RESULT IN OFF—TYPE PLANTS? Odd tasting fruit from vine crops are often times believed to be due to crossing between plants such as cucumbers, cantalopues and squash.

In general, these crops will not cross. Even if they did the results of this cross would not show up until seeds from this year's fruit were planted in next year's garden. Home gardeners are advised not to save seeds from vining crops for next year's garden. Be assured tyhat planting cucumbers along with squash or melons in your garden will not result in off—flavor fruit.

WHAT CAUSES MY TOMATO LEAVES TO CURL? A very serious, and fatal disease of tomatoes in West Texas is curly top virus. This disease is vectored by the beet leafhopper. There is no treatment for a plant once infected. Control of the leafhopper could reduce the disease but is very difficult even with regular spraying. Some years this condition is more prevalent and 1978 seems to be a particularly bad year for curly top virus.

Another condition of curling of totamo leaves is called tomato leaf roll. The exact cause of this tomato leaf roll is notfully known. Tomato leaf roll generally starts to show up about the time of tomato fruit setting. The tomato plants begin to show an upward rolling of the leaflets of the older leaves on the lower half of the plant. This gives the leaflets a cupped appearance with sometimes even the margins touching or overlapping. The overal growth of the plant does not seem to be greatly affected and, in general, yields about normal. This condition appears to be more common on staked and pruned plants than on those that are not. Also, it seems to be common when overwatering keeps the soil too wet for too long a period. It also seems to be related to intensive sunlight which causes an accumulation of carbohydrates in the leaves. Some varieties of tomatoes, such as the TAMU Saladette and Monts Grande are characteristically curles due to genetic causes.

MY TOMATO PLANTS LOOK GREAT. THEY ARE DARK GREEN, VIGOROUS AND HEALTHY. HOWEVER, FLOWERS ARE NOT FORMING FRUIT. WHAT IS THE PROBLEM? Several conditions can cause tomatoes to fail to set fruit. Too much nitrogen fertilizer; high temperatures (over 70 degrees F. at night and 90 degrees F. daytime); hot, drying winds; irregular watering; insects such as flower thrips, and planting ill—adapted varieties. Anyone of these by itself can cause poor fruit set but combinations can be even more damaging.

CAN YOU TELL ME WHY MANY OF THE EARS OF CORN I GREW IN MY GARDEN ARE NOT FULLY-GRAINED AND UNDERDEVELOPED AT THE TIP END? Corn is cross—pollinated by wind-blown pollen from the male flowers or tassels at the top of the plant to the female flowers or silks about midway up the stalks. Each kernel develops from an individual pollinated silk. Silks develop near the middle and base of the ear first with those at the tip developing last. When unfavorable conditions such as dry winds, low mositure and nutrients occur, pollination will be poor, resulting in missing kernels and causing kernels in the tip to poorly develop A single row or even double rows of corn planted at right angles to the prevailing wind may result in poor pollination. It is best to plant several rows in a square design in the home garden.

French president's news conferences 'orchestrated'

By EDWARD CODY

PARIS (AP) — The president of France had embossed invitations sent out and spent the weekend at his country retreat getting ready for it.

The presidential palace staff turned on all 18 crystal chandeliers in the Salle des Fetes for it.

When it finally happened one mid-June day, 450 journalists turned up.

"It" was the sixth formal news conference given by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing since his election in 1974 and his first in 15 months.

By comparison, President Carter has held 24 formal news conferences in Washington since he took office last year.

"It's like High Mass," said a French journalist with years of French presidential news conferences under his professional belt.

A French presidential news conference — "press meeting" on the invitations — is a ceremony with a character of its own, a solemn and rare opportunity for journalists to come up close to the chief of state.

In France, where government and affairs of state get far more reverence than in the United States, words from the president also seem to be surrounded by more elegant trappings and carry more importance.

The news conference took place under the chandeliers and rococco painted ceiling of the Elysee Palace meeting and ball room, with open glass doors leading to vast manicured gardens.

Government-owned radio and television stations broadcast it live for two hours. Newspapers, which had been writing about it on the front page three days in advance, sent teams of top reporters and editors to cover it.

But the gatherings seem less a way for reporters to elicit information than a way for the president to make a speech to the French television public. The journalists, sitting in tight rows on gilded chairs with red velvet seats, provide a backdrop and their questions make chapter headings for the pronouncements.

Giscard d'Estaing orchestrated the two-hour appearance from start to finish, ignoring questions that didn't interest him, refusing questions that weren't on his own topic list and answering questions that were never asked.

To an Israeli radio reporter who wanted to ask about Lebanon, he held up his hands, palms out, and said from the raised platform where he sat: "Oh, we're not there yet."

When he decided the time for Lebanon was at hand, he took several questions at once, then made a little speech on France's role there, and left unanswered most of what was raised in the questions.

There was no opportunity for followup questioning as in U.S. presidential news conferences.

To a French reporter who asked Giscard d'Estaing whether he will run for re-election in 1981, he said: "I was expecting that question at the end of the news conference."

Giscard d'Estaing is following a long tradition perfected by the late Charles de Gaulle. In his presidential days, de Gaulle had his press aides plant the questions he wanted to answer. He took a half-dozen of them, then began a memorized speech.

When Giscard d'Estaing opened questioning on foreign affairs, a reporter from the government-owned Antenne 2 television station asked: "We were very impressed by the Shaba (Zaire) operation. But public opinion is wondering about African policy, whether this opinion will for a long time have to support regimes that are sometimes contested."

The president responded, "We'll see about African affairs later. I was thinking about the foreign situation."

Later — when he decided the time for Africa had come — he lectured the reporter for passing judgment on African governments.

"Mr. President, where do relations stand between France and Algeria, on one hand, and France and Libya, on the other?" another reporter asked. "Do you think these relations could evolve to permit winding down the Sahara and Chad conflicts?"

The president turned to the questioner and said, "If it's all right with you, you will ask the Africa questions together, since there is already one, and there is yours."

He took two more questions, then slipped into an uninterrupted, 4,000-word expose on French African policy, which included a criticism of press coverage of the Chad and Sahara conflicts, but said nothing about relations with Libya and Algeria.

Why travel to Egypt?

CAIRO (AP) — Tutankhamun, the boy king who ruled Egypt more than 3,000 years ago, and President Anwar Sadat, whose peace initiatives last winter propelled him into the world spotlight, have turned into a pair of goodwill ambassadors for Egyptian tourism.

Travel agents and tourism officials here say Sadat's trips to the United States and to Jerusalem, and the King Tut exhibit recently seen in the United States, have contributed to Egypt's attraction as a vacation spot. But an informal check of American tourists in Cairo indicated that many others are simply looking for a new place to visit.

Nearly 110,000 Americans visited Egypt in 1977, a 31 percent increase over the previous year. A total of about 1.1 million tourists came to Egypt last year.

"President Sadat's peace initiative has done a lot for tourism and the image of Egypt in the United States," said Mohamed el Sakka, chairman of Misr Travel and Shipping, Egypt's largest travel agency.

"The main thing, in my opinion, is it has given people some sort of security that peace is at the door, because they were always thinking that this is a troubled area," Sakka added.

The Egyptian Ministry of Tourism does not keep statistics on the home states of American travelers, so there is no way of determining whether there has been an upsurge in the number of tourists from specific areas, such as Washington and Chicago, after the Tutankhamun exhibition was there.

But Dan Pruitt, a tour-group leader for United States Travel in Washington, said his agency's "Treasures of Tutankhamun" tour became one of the most popular after the pharaonic tomb objects were displayed at the National Gallery.

The Cairo Museum, where the bulk of the Tutankhamun objects are still on display, counted 498,838 visitors in 1977, only a 4 percent increase over 1976.

However, a check at major tourist hotels and the museum failed to turn up anyone who cited either Tutankhamun or Sadat as a reason for visiting Egypt.

Snail darter decision may be 'disguised blessing'

By WARD SINCLAIR
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The endangered snail darter that swims in the path of the costly Tellico dam project in Tennessee may turn out to be a blessing in disguise, the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority said Friday.

S. David Freeman said the Supreme Court decision last week against the Tellico project as planned has forced TVA to look for alternatives that could, in the end, bring even greater benefits to the east Tennessee area.

"It may turn out to be a good thing for the taxpayer that legal constraints on completing the dam will cause us to take a harder look at how to make best use of the government's investment in the land," he said.

The court held that TVA cannot close the gates on the nearly completed dam on the Little Tennessee River because it would threaten the snail darter, a tiny fish protected by the Endangered Species Act of 1973.

"The real waste of the taxpayers' money may be in flooding the land," Freeman told a House merchant marine subcommittee that is considering an extension of the Endangered Species Act of 1973.

The future of the Tellico development project — that is, finding a way to assure that the $106 million-plus already spent is not lost — hangs heavily over the extension of the act.

Rep. Robert Leggett, D-Calif., subcommittee chairman, said the Tellico case is being cited as an example of the "inflexibility" of the law designed to protect endangered species.

"A central question is whether Tellico is bizarre and different or whether it is an indicator of future problems as we expand the endangered species list across the nation," Leggett said.

Indeed, other witnesses Friday testified at length against a simple extension of the act, which will expire Sept. 30.

Forest products, business and electric power representatives urged the subcommittee to amend the act to provide exemptions so the protection of obscure species does not stand in the way of economic development.

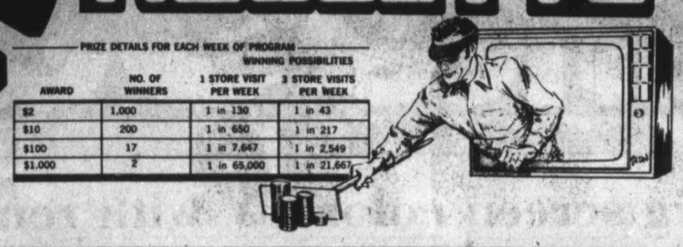

Freeman, although not taking a position on a specific alternative for Tellico, suggested the snail darter may provide the impetus for converting the project into an enterprise that would aid the valley even mre.

"I think it ought to be completed and I would argue very hard against anyone who says it should not," he said. "But we have to determine how it should be finished and what alternatives we have."

Nation has long history of strong fighting words

By JOE WING
For AP Newsfeatures

In the aftermath of the Vietnam war and Watergate, America's disillusioned youth might well take heart from the fighting words and inspirational phrases that have rung out like Independence Day bells through this nation's history. Here is a sampling:

"Taxation without representation is tyranny." James Otis, a leader before the Revolutionary war.

"All men are created equal." Thomas Jefferson, in the Declaration of Independence, 1775.

"I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." Nathan Hale, before his execution by the British as a spy, 1776.

"I have not yet begun to fight." John Paul Jones' defiance in the famous battle he won aboard the Bonhomme Richard, 1776.

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace." George Washington, to Congress, 1790.

"Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute." Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, after refusing to bribe French officials, 1797.

"Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!" Adm. David Glasgow Farragut, at the battle of Mobile Bay, 1864.

"I propose to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer." Gen. U.S. Grant, after battle of the Wilderness, 1864.

"This nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." Abraham Lincoln in his Gettysburg address, 1863.

"An American citizen cannot be a good citizen who does not have hope in his heart." Grover Cleveland, 1886.

"He serves his party best who serves the country best." Rutherford B. Hayes, 1877.

"The world must be made safe for democracy." Woodrow Wilson to Congress, 1917.

"The only thing we have to fear is fear itself." Franklin D. Roosevelt in first inaugural address, 1933.

"Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country." John F. Kennedy in inaugural address, 1961.

The mosquito, seen elarged 500 times with an electron microscope, is efficiently constructed for is pesky task. The biting female has many eyes (the tiny balls), two long, powerful antennae and an eight-pronged 'stinger' (seen extending down from the photo). Scientists now know that only the female bites. (AP Laserphoto)

It's the female who's 'dangerous'

By BRIAN SULLIVAN

NEW YORK (AP) — The mosquitoes are coming! The mosquitoes are coming!

Yes, with the first really warm summer days, comes that almost imperceptible hum, followed by the seemingly inevitable bite.

The mosquito — maddening on a summer evening, dangerous when carrying disease — but really little known by its scratching victims.

Consider this: only the females bite.

The male is the Ferdinand the Bull of the insect world, eating only the nectar of flowers, the sap of plants, fruit juices.

The female bites because she needs a "blood meal" to provide protein to nourish her eggs. After her first batch of 50 to 200 eggs, she must have blood for each successive batch. She will lay perhaps 10 batches in her lifetime of several weeks.

Attempts to control mosquitoes have been going on for years. The latest research is on use of hormones, bacteria and predator mosquitoes, all of which would interfere with growth before the mosquito emerges from its tiny shell as a full-grown insect.

Mosquitoes live in water, and each type — there are about 2,500 species — has its own preference for fresh, salt or brackish water. They don't swim well, so the water must be relatively still.

The ones that bother people the most generally live around houses — in the old days in the rain barrel, now in tin cans or old tires, in an unused toilet tank in a spare bathroom, in a basement sump pump, even in ivy placed in a jar of water to root.

So one of the best protections is to eliminate these breeding places. If you live near a salt marsh, that may be difficult.

And that can be more than just a question of controlling a nuisance that stings and makes you itch — if the mosquito is carrying the infectious agent for such diseases as malaria, yellow fever or sleeping sickness, which is an inflammation of the brain.

Actually, only a few types of mosquitoes prefer to feed on man, according to Agice Gray, scientific assistant in the department of entymology at the American Museum of Natural History. They prefer birds, dogs, horses, all sorts of animals.

"There are a few females who have the bad taste to prefer frogs," says Miss Gray.

As for the male, he has extremely bushy antennae used for hearing. These resonate in response to the wing beat of the female. The wing beat causes the mosquito's hum, and the female's slower — and lower pitched — wing beat is recognizable to the male.

From the eggs, which the female lays in the water, hatch mosquitoes that go through metamorphosis, from egg to larva to pup to adult. Like all insects, the mosquito grows by changing the external portion of the skin. This is called molting.

In the final stage, the outer shell splits a last time and the adult steps out onto the surface of the shell, as if on a raft, and is ready to fly — and, if female, to bite.

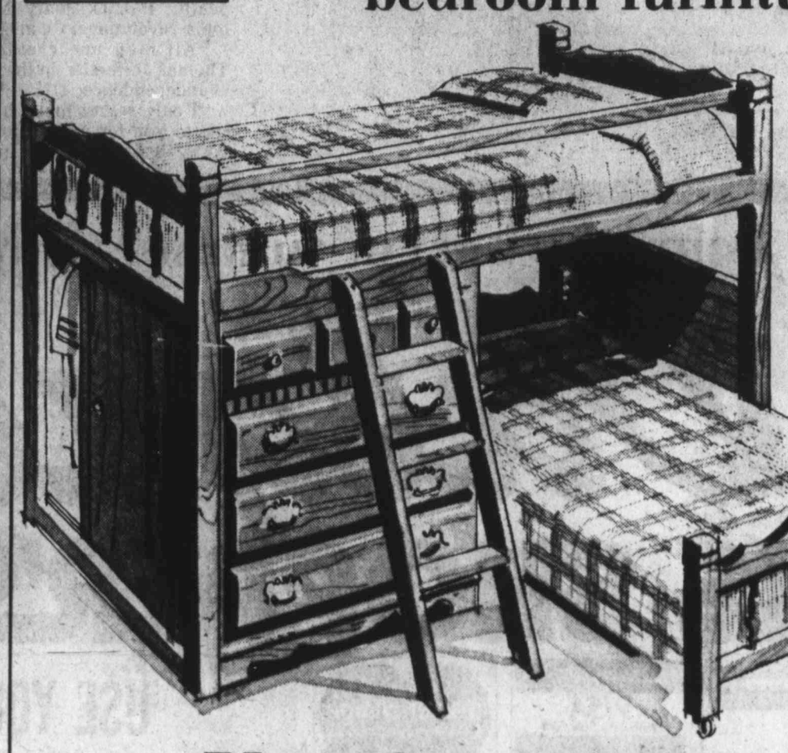

FCC may reconsider plans for communications cable

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission says it may reconsider its decison to block plans for a seventh communications cable under the Atlantic Ocean.

The commission has said the cable wasn't needed because of satellite communications. But that decision ran counter to recommendations by 26 European countries, Canada, all other U.S. federal agencies, six U.S. international carriers and American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Lietzke pitches way into lead

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Bruce Lietzke's dramatic pitch-in from the rough for an eagle on the final hole staked him to a 2-shot lead Saturday but his good friend Ben Crenshaw remained in a challenging position after three rounds of the Canadian Open Golf Championship.

"There's so many good players bunched up at the top, anybody could win," said Crenshaw, 3 strokes back of Lietzke's lead going into Sunday's final round of the chase for the Canadian national title and a $50,000 first prize.

"It's the kind of golf course anything can happen on," Crenshaw said, and added, straight-faced as could be, "Why, hell, somebody might make a '9' on a hole."

Crenshaw made that score, a 9, on the 18th hole in Friday's round. Given a par on that hole, he'd be leading the tournament.

Lietzke's pitch in from the rough produced an eagle 3 on that same hole Saturday and a second consecutive 4-under-par 67.

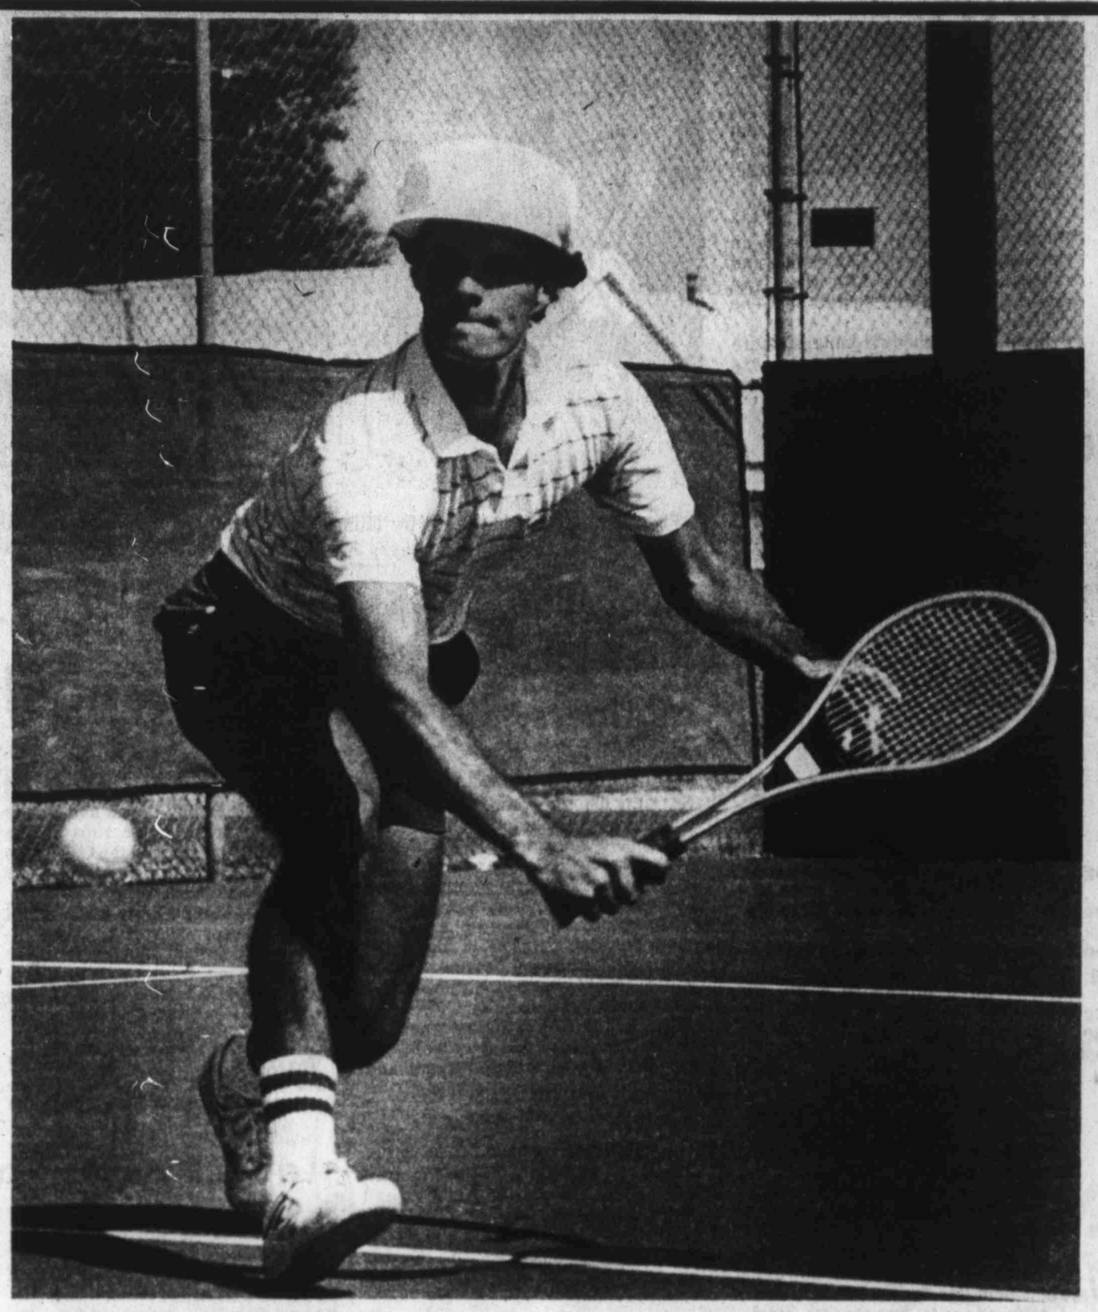

"It gives me a lot of confidence going into Sunday's round," he said. "I'll assess my position after the first nine holes and then adjust, change my game as I have to.

"If the players close to me are experienced men like Crenshaw and (Lee) Trevino, then I may have to do one thing. If the players close are rookies, inexperienced players, I may have to do something else.

"I'm not concerned about winning by 5 or 6 shots. All I want to do is win the golf tournament. I'll do everything I can, both mentally and physically, to do that, to win the golf tournament."

Lietzke, who started the warm, sunny day 3 shots off the pace, finished 54 holes with a 210 total, 3 under par on the difficult, 7,050-yard Glen Abbey Golf Club course.

"That's a very good way to end the round," Lietzke said of his 45-yard shot with a sand wedge that found the cup on the 18th hole. "It makes up for a couple of shots I threw away."

Highway 80 play comes to a boil

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

If there was any significant drop in Midland's water table Saturday, it was probably because of the Highway 80 Tennis Tournament. Heavy fluid intake was probably more important than skill as the temperature soared in the Tall City.

Despite the heat, the gigantic tournament is moving right along and only action in the semifinals and finals remain for today in all divisions. Today's action will begin at 8:30 a.m. and should end by mid-afternoon. All of today's play will be at the Midland High and Lee High tennis courts.

Only one division is complete after two days of action, and Midland's Bitsy Hopper had the distinction of winning the first crown. Miss Hopper took the girl's 12 singles title with a 7-6, 6-2 win over Abilene's Cathy Wilson in the finals for the first title of the tournament.

All of the other titles will be decided today, but there were some key upsets Saturday to keep things interesting.

In the girl's 16 singles division, top seeded Kendall Martin of Odessa was upset in the quarterfinals by Amarillo's Teresa Karr, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3. But Martin came back in the 18 singles and pulled off a big 6-0, 1-6, 6-4 upset over Wichita Falls' Joanie Waltho, that division's second seed. Midland Lee net star Karen Broe, the top 18 girl seed, advanced to the finals with little trouble, however.

In the women's singles action, third seeded Karen Young of Wichita Falls fell to Brownwood's Holly Harris, 6-2, 6-3, in a quarterfinal bout, and Big Spring's Dawn Estes pulled off a big win in the girl's 14 singles in the quarterfinals with a hard fought 7-6, 3-6, 6-2 win over seeded Susie Furman of Odessa.

The only major upset in the boy's 14 singles competition came from Mexico's George Jimenez, who defeated second seeded Trey Kent of Canyon, 6-4, 7-6, in the quarters.

The big story in the boy's 16 division came from Plainview's Keith Jordan, who pulled off a big upset over top seeded Pat Downs, 6-2, 6-3. Downs is the top ranked 16-year-old in Arkansas. Downs came back, however, in the 18 singles to reach the semifinals today against top seeded Jeff Bramlett, the Midland High ace.

Bramlett dropped a quarterfinal bout with Stacy Foster, 6-2, 6-4, in the men's singles.

Top seeded Jim Hanks of Odessa was lost in the men's 35 and over division when he had to retire from a match with Midland's Mike Bustilloz because of sickness. Hanks won the first set by a 6-2 count and Bustilloz took a 6-4 decision in the second set before Hanks left.

Doubles action also got underway Saturday, but there were few surprises heading into today's action.

Brazil nips Italy for third place, 2-1

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Undefeated Brazil came from behind in the second half Saturday to defeat Italy 2-1 and win third place in the World Cup soccer tournament.

The three-time world chamions, edged out for the finals of the champi-onship on goal average by Argentina, came alive in the second half with two perfect long shots by midfielders Nelinho and Dirceu.

Italy had hopes of victory after the 38th minute when mustachioed forward Franco Causio took a pass from striker Paulo Rossi and headed ds sptid softly in Brazil's net.

But the Brazilians had not lost in their six games at the World Cup and wanted to prove they were worthy of the finals. Furthermore, they wanted to erase the bitter memory of a defeat for third place by Poland in the 1974 World Cup in Germany.

Finally, at the 63rd minute, Nelinho tied the score on a shot from about 30 yards. Seven minutes later, the scrappy 25-year-old Dirceu, the spark of the team, sent Brazil ahead.

Nancy trails by eight in Lady Keystone Open

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Pat Bradley fired a 3-under-par 69 Saturday to scramble into a tie with veteran Jane Blalock after 36 holes of play in the $50,000 Lady Keystone Open at the Hershey Country Club.

Eight strokes back was rookie sensation Nancy Lopez, who was faltering in her bid to become the first professional woman golfer ever to win six straight Ladies Professional Golf Association tournaments.

Lopez, still dogged by writers and photographers, turned in a 38-36-74 to put her 3 strokes over par after two days of play. She fired a 1-over-par 73 Friday on the 6,398-yard course.

"I'm not giving up. I have tomorrow," she said after turning in her scorecard. "I may be out of it now, but I could come close tomorrow.

"I'm not playing as well as I was a couple of weeks ago, but I'm not going to let it bother me because I know the reason — I'm tired."

Bradley, looking for her first win in 1978, and the third of her career, picked up birdies on 9, 14 and 15.

Blalock, who fired a sizzling 5-under-par 67 Friday, shot a par 34-38-72 Saturday for a two-day total of 139.

Dallas Tornado rips Memphis Rogues, 3-0

DALLAS (AP) — Goals by Jeff Bourne, Jim Ryan and Tony Bellinger went unanswered Saturday night as the Dallas Tornado defeated the Memphis Rogues 3-0 in a North American Soccer League game before nearly 9,000 fans he.

The victory for Dallas avenged a 3-1 loss at Memphis earlier this year and put the Tornado atop the Cental Division of the NASL's National Conference with 92 points. Minnesota is second.

Dallas took the lead at 41:02 when Bourne scored his 13th goal of the season with assists from Glenn Myernick and Kevin Kewley.

Ford rejects Kansas City

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Phil Ford, Kansas City's No. 1 choice in the National Basketball Association draft, said he doesn't want to play with the Kings.

"I doubt that you'll see me in a Kansas City uniform next season," said Ford, an All-American guard at North Carolina.

Aeros summon Cubs' Buckner

EL PASO—Outfielder Jimmy Buckner received word here before Saturday's game that he had been promoted to Wichita, but he left the Midland Cubs with a bang.

Friday night, the Californian who led the Texas League in batting much of the first half, cracked a two-run homer in the ninth inning to give the Cubs an 8-7 win over the El Paso Diablos.

Buckner was scheduled to play Saturday night's game against the Diablos and then report to the Aeros of the American Association.

Buckner was batting in the .380 range when he received the good news, for him, and the bad news for Midland.

AN INJURY on the Chicago Cubs prompted the National League team to call up Leroy Scott to the varsity and Wichita Manager Harry Dunlop requested Buckner as a replacement.

"We'll miss his bat," said Midland General Manager Bill Rigney, Jr., "He has been our offense all year."

Rigney wasn't sure who the Cubs would get to replace Buckner. "It could be Jared Martin, who has been hitting over .300 in the California League all year," Rigney theorized, "But then they may have someone else in mind."

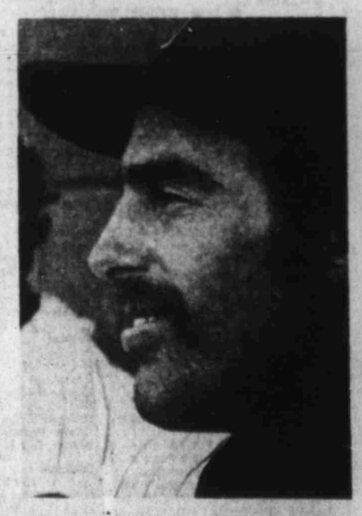

Martin was with Midland in spring training in Scottsdale, Ariz., and was optioned to Bakersfield, California League, where five Chicago Cubs farmhands are playing.

THE LOSS of Buckner and the ailing arms on the pitching staff are Manager Jim Saul's main worries as the Cubs come home for a day before departing for Amarillo the opening of the second half of Texas League play Monday night.

Saul got some encouragment Friday when David Overstreet, reporting from Pompano Beach, started and then Bob Clark came on and saved the win with a gutty ninth inning performance.

EL PASO had runners on first and third with none out and with the infield in, Clark got the first batter to ground to second baseman Kurt Seibert, who got the runner trying to go home. Clark fanned the next batter and got the final out on a pop up to preserve the one-run lead and pick up his fourth win.

The bad news is that Jack Ledbetter and Herman Segelke both have sore arms.

Jimmy Buckner...off to Wichita.

San Diego downs Astros

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Tucker Ashford singled Bill Almon home with one out in the bottom of the 10th inning Saturday night to give San Diego a 6-5 victory over Houston and move the Padres into fourth place in the National League West, two percentage points ahead of the Astros.

The Padres jumped on reliever Ken Forsch, 2-3, for the winning run when Jerry Turner singled to open the 10th and moved to second on a single by Almon.

Schmidt's 11th homer ignites 6-2 Phils win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt's two-run first-inning homer started the Philadelphia Phillies toward their fourth consecutive victory, a 6-2 triumph over the Chicago Cubs Saturday night and a one-game lead over the second-place Cubs in the National League East.

Larry Bowa singled with one out and Schmidt poled Ken Holtzman's first pitch over the right-field fence for his 11th homer run of the season but his first in two weeks and first at home since May 14.

The Phillies knocked out Holtzman, 0-2, in the second inning when they tallied three runs on three hits, an error, two walks and a wild pitch. It wrapped up the Phillies' third straight victory over the slumping Cubs, losers of five in a row and nine of their last 12.

Garry Maddox started the inning with a triple but was out at the plate one out later on Ted Sizemore's grounder. However, Sizemore took second on a wild pitch and winning pitcher Jim Kaat singled him home to make it 3-0.

Jerry Martin reached on first baseman Larry Biittner's error, Kaat scoring. Bowa's second single sent Martin to third and he scored on a wild pitch by reliever Paul Reuschel for a 5-0 lead.

Chicago picked up a run in the fourth on a single by Manny Trillo, an infield out and Larry Cox' single and added another in the fifth when Ivan DeJesus tripled and scored on Gene Clines' single.

Thompson, Kemp lead Tigers to win

DETROIT (AP) — Jason Thompson and Steve Kemp drove in two runs each Saturday night to help Jim Slaton to his seventh victory as the Detroit Tigers edged the New York Yankees 4-3.

The Tigers jumped on Yankee starter Ken Clay for three runs in the opening inning, one on a single by Thompson following a walk to Lou Whitaker and a single by Rusty Staub, then two on a single by Kemp.

After the Yankees tied it 3-3 with two runs in the second inning, Whitaker doubled in the third off Dick Tidrow, 3-5, and scored the winning run on a single by Thompson.

New York scored its opening run in the first inning on singles by Graig Nettles and Thurman Munson and Reggie Jackson's grounder.

The Yankees tied the score 3-3 with two unusual runs in the second. Gary Thomasson singled to lead off and Fred Stanley walked with one out. After the runners advanced on Brian Doyle's grounder, Slaton uncorked a wild pitch, allowing Thomasson to score. Stanley also raced home when catcher Milt May's throw to Slaton at the plate was wild for an error.

Slaton, 7-4, held the Yankees to four hits, only one after the second inning. That was Munson's one-out single in the sixth. But Jackson hit into a double play.

Washington leads Chisox attack

CHICAGO (AP) — Claudell Washington drove in four runs with a homer and triple and Wayne Nordhagen hit a solo homer Saturday night to pace the Chicago White Sox to a 7-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Washington blasted his second homer of the season after Alan Bannister walked to trigger a four-run sixth, which also included Nordhagen's third homer and a run-scoring triple by Eric Soderholm.

Washington tripled in the seventh after Don Kessinger's double and a bunt single by Bannister and then scored on a sacrifice fly by Nordhagen.

The victory snapped a four-game Chicago losing streak and went to Wilbur Wood, 7-5.

Alexander's slam paces Indians' romp

CLEVELAND (AP) — Gary Alexander belted a grand-slam home run and Buddy Bell added a two-run triple to power the Cleveland Indians to a 12-3 rout of the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday night.

The Indians jumped on Toronto starter Jim Clancy, 4-7, for four runs in the third inning to begin the romp.

The Blue Jays had taken a 1-0 lead in the second on Tommy Hutton's single, a bunt single by Luis Gomez and Willie Upshaw's single.

The Indians took the lead for good after Tom Veryzer led off the third with the first of his three hits and went to second when center fielder Bob Bailor bobbled the ball for an error. Jim Norris followed with a run-scoring single to tie the game, Rick Manning's single moved Norris to third and Bell tripled down the right field line for a 3-1 lead. Johnny Grubb added a run-scoring single, chasing Clancy.

The Indians added five runs in the fourth off Mike Willis, the big blow Alexander's 12th homer of the season and second in two nights.

Winner Mike Paxton, 4-4, gave up 13 hits before needing help from Sid Monge, who came on with one out and the bases loaded in the eighth and got out of the jam with a strikeout and a pop-up.

Augustine three-hits Mariners, 3-0

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jerry Augustine pitched a three-hitter and Gorman Thomas and Larry Hisle belted two-run homers, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 5-0 victory over Seattle Saturday night that snapped the Mariners' winning streak at a club record five games.

Augustine, 8-8, gave up a two-out single to Bob Stinson in the third inning and retired 17 of the first 18 batters until Larry Milbourne singled with two out in the sixth.

Milwaukee took a 2-0 lead against ex-Brewer Jim Colborn, 1-6, in the second on a double by Sal Bando and Thomas' 17th homer.

Cards beat Expos

ST.LOUIS (AP) — Recently aquired veteran Woodie Fryman teamed up with Darold Knowles and Mike Garman on a six-hitter and Ellis Valentine singled home the only run Montreal needed as the Expos downed the St. Louis Cardinals 2-0 Saturday night.

Fryman, 3-5, a 38-year-old lefthander making only his second start for the Expos, pitched out of first-and sixth-inning jams.

Following a two-out single by Mike Tyson in the second, Fryman set down the next 11 batters until Morales smacked a one-out double in the sixth. Morales went to third on a wild pitch but, after a walk to Hernadez, Fryman got Simmons and Hendrick to pop out.

Matlack's 2-hitter beats Angels for Texas

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Jon Matlack tossed a two-hitter for his first American League shutout and Richie Zisk, Bobby Bonds and Bobby Thompson drove in the runs as the Texas Rangers stopped the California Angels 3-0 Saturday night for their fifth consecutive triumph.

Matlack, who has only a 6-8 record but a 2.57 earned run average, allowed only infield singles to Dave Machemer and Dave Chalk and only one California runner reached second. He walked one and struck out five.

Texas scored its first two runs off loser Dave Frost, 0-1, just back from the minors. The first one came in the third inning when Bump Wills singled with two out, stole second and came home on a single by Zisk.

Texas scored in the fifth without a hit. Bert Campaneris was hit by a pitched ball to lead off the inning and moved to second on Wills' groundout. Campaneris stole third and scored on Bonds' sacrifice fly, his ninth RBI in the last three games.

The Rangers' final run came in the eighth when rookie center fielder Thompson hit his first major league homer off reliever Dave LaRoche.

The victory was the Rangers' third straight over the Angels and second shutout in three games. Fergie Jenkins blanked California Friday night.

LaCock paces Kansas City

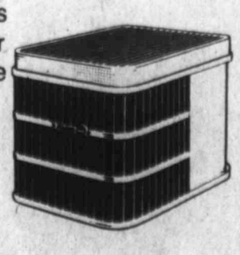

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Pete LaCock homered and doubled to drive in four runs and Andy Hassler recorded his first victory of the season as the Kansas City Royals downed the Oakland A's 7-5 Saturday night.

LaCock, a reserve first baseman, unloaded a three-run homer to cap a five-run first inning off Steve Renko, 2-3. In the third, he tagged reliever Steve McCatty with an opposite-field double to left that scored Al Cowens.

Hassler, who cut his hand in a spring training accident and didn't pitch until May 14, turned over a bases-loaded jam to Doug Bird with none out in the sixth. Tony Armas' grounder scored one run before Cowens speared Miguel Dilone's line drive in center field and pegged a strong throw to the plate to catch Glenn Burke trying to score.

Three of Oakland's runs were unearned because of errors by Hassler, LaCock and shortstop Fred Patek.

The victory kept the Royals in first place in the American League West, one-half game ahead of Texas. The A's, who fell out first place June 14, have dropped 15 of their last 17 games an are in fourth place, 4½ games out.

Goodwin tops TL with .385 bat mark

El Paso's Danny Goodwin raised his batting average to a league-leading .385, but found himself in a dogfight with teammate Bob Clark in the Texas League home run race.

Going into the week, the two were tied, but then Clark forged in front 17-15 and Goodwin finally reclaimed the lead Friday night with a couple of fourmasters against Midland to raise his total to 18.

Clark also leads Goodwin in rbi with 58 to 56. The former No. 1 draft choice in all of baseball a few years back has the lead in slugging percentage with .638, which gives Goodwin a shot at for titles and the possible triple crown, average, homers and rbi.

NEIL ALLEN,Jackson, regained his pitching leadership with three complete games, lowering his earned-run-average to 2.15, which puts him ahead of San Antonio's Rick Nitz at 2.35. Allen now has a league-leading 96 strikeouts.

In team batting, El Paso is averaging a robust .305 while Midland is third with a .278 as the Cubs fight to come out of a slump. A few weeks back, the Cubs were also over .300 as a team.

Midland retained its fielding lead with a ,9667. El Paso is right behind withn.9656. The Cubs are sixth in pitching with a team 4.87 ERA while San Antonio at 3.31 and Jackson at 3.37 top the list.

Jaws sees heavy title in future

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — "I'll be the next heavyweight boxing champion of the world in the next 12 months," said Osvaldo "Jaws" Ocasio of Puerto Rico.

Standing on a San Juan street corner just blocks from the waterfront where his father toiled as a dockhand to support his 21 children, the 22-year-old fighter confidently talked about the future.

"I'd fight (Larry) Holmes, (the new World Boxing Council champion) today if I could." Once a Holmes sparing partner, Ocasio got his nickname "Jaws" from the champion. He said, "I bit him on the ear. He called me Jaws and the name stuck."

Ocasio, in his first important fight two weeks ago in Las Vegas, scored a stunning upset by gaining a split decision over highly rated Jimmy Young.

The victory brought his record to 12-0, including nine knockouts.

"I knew i could take Young," said Ocasio, who wore a light two-or-three day growth of black beard. "I got in close with my combinations of left hooks and my right hand."

His manager, Bill Daly, a 74-year-old boxing veteran who has directed seven world champions, said of his new fighter: "Jaws won because he was in shape. The other guy (Young) was not."

Daly said he thought it would take Ocasio longer than a year to become champion. "I think he will be knocking on the door in two years. It takes time to be a polished fighter."

Mantle reported in stable condition

DALLAS (AP) — Former New York Yankee slugger Mickey Mantle was in stable condition at Brookhaven Medical Center Saturday where he was being treated for a bleeding ulcer.

A hospital spokeswoman said Mantle was "doing fine."

Mantle was hospitalized Wednesday after he became ill at a Dallas golf club. A doctor friend ordered him hospitalized and he spent some time in an intensive care unit.

Mantle said he hoped to be released from the hospital Monday.

"I've had a bellyache before but nothing like this," Mantle said. "I don't guess I've ever had anything this serious. I've been doing a lot of traveling. It seems like wherever I go, there's always a cocktail party. Maybe I was drinking a little too much."

Writer recalls Ol' Diz

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — You drive along a dusty country road with nothing but farmland and pastures for miles and miles, when out of the wilderness, a gas station appears. You pull in for a tankful and while he's pumping the gas, the attendant begins to talk baseball.

"That's about the way Diz sounded to the people of America," says Curt Smith, author of "America's Dizzy Dean," a new book about the late Hall of Famer who became almost as famous for his baseball broadcasts as he was for pitching prowess. "Listening to him was like listening to to themselves for millions of Americans in the small towns and rural areas of the country."

DEAN WAS the first player to move from the field to the broadcast booth when he began doing the baseball Game of the Week in 1955. "It was the first network sports series and the ratings were titanic," says Smith. "It was a religion in many sections of the country."

Smith thinks the reason Dean was so popular was that a large portion of America's people considered him their spokesman. "Few have had the empathy with middle America that Dizzy Dean had," the writer says. "Dean was their symbol."

wake and made Casey Stengel sound like a college professor. "All his mistakes were pre-programmed," claims Smith. "But his spontaneity was such that the listener at home couldn't tell."

SO DEAN told America about runners who "slud" into a base or batters who strode "confidentially to the plate" and then "swang" at the pitch or fielders who went out to their "respectable positions." He hated "statics," known to other announcers as statistics. First Buddy Blattner and later Pee Wee Reese shared the broadcast booth with Dean. They weren't his partners. They were his "podnahs."

Networks are always concerned about what goes out over their airwaves but when they tried to control Dean's impromptu comments, the effort backfired.

"Broadcasting executives have told me you couldn't tell Dean what to do or not do because, if you did, it just made him more determined to break your rules," says Smith.

So, after an airline commercial, ol' Diz resumed one broadcast by saying, "Podnah, I hate to fly." And when the game he was doing over CBS turned into a rout, Dean's observation was "This is the Game of the Week? Heck, there's a better one over on NBC right now."

The gasp that followed that remark came from networkland.

WHEN UMPIRE Bill McKinley made a call with which he disagreed, Diz dismissed it by saying simply, "They shot the wrong McKinley."

"At one point, the St. Louis Board of Education tried to get him off the air," Smith says in his book.

Dean's reply to that move and the related criticism of his destruction of the language was to borrow a page from another country orator, Will Rogers.

Schmidt's 11th homer ignites 6-2 Phils win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt's two-run first-inning homer started the Philadelphia Phillies toward their fourth consecutive victory, a 6-2 triumph over the Chicago Cubs Saturday night and a one-game lead over the second-place Cubs in the National League East.

Larry Bowa singled with one out and Schmidt poled Ken Holtzman's first pitch over the right-field fence for his 11th homer run of the season but his first in two weeks and first at home since May 14.

The Phillies knocked out Holtzman, 0-2, in the second inning when they tallied three runs on three hits, an error, two walks and a wild pitch. It wrapped up the Phillies' third straight victory over the slumping Cubs, losers of five in a row and nine of their last 12.

Garry Maddox started the inning with a triple but was out at the plate one out later on Ted Sizemore's grounder. However, Sizemore took second on a wild pitch and winning pitcher Jim Kaat singled him home to make it 3-0.

Jerry Martin reached on first baseman Larry Biittner's error, Kaat scoring. Bowa's second single sent Martin to third and he scored on a wild pitch by reliever Paul Reuschel for a 5-0 lead.

Chicago picked up a run in the fourth on a single by Manny Trillo, an infield out and Larry Cox' single and added another in the fifth when Ivan DeJesus tripled and scored on Gene Clines' single.

Thompson, Kemp lead Tigers to win

DETROIT (AP) — Jason Thompson and Steve Kemp drove in two runs each Saturday night to help Jim Slaton to his seventh victory as the Detroit Tigers edged the New York Yankees 4-3.

The Tigers jumped on Yankee starter Ken Clay for three runs in the opening inning, one on a single by Thompson following a walk to Lou Whitaker and a single by Rusty Staub, then two on a single by Kemp.

After the Yankees tied it 3-3 with two runs in the second inning, Whitaker doubled in the third off Dick Tidrow, 3-5, and scored the winning run on a single by Thompson.

New York scored its opening run in the first inning on singles by Graig Nettles and Thurman Munson and Reggie Jackson's grounder.

The Yankees tied the score 3-3 with two unusual runs in the second. Gary Thomasson singled to lead off and Fred Stanley walked with one out. After the runners advanced on Brian Doyle's grounder, Slaton uncorked a wild pitch, allowing Thomasson to score. Stanley also raced home when catcher Milt May's throw to Slaton at the plate was wild for an error.

Slaton, 7-4, held the Yankees to four hits, only one after the second inning. That was Munson's one-out single in the sixth. But Jackson hit into a double play.

Washington leads Chisox attack

CHICAGO (AP) — Claudell Washington drove in four runs with a homer and triple and Wayne Nordhagen hit a solo homer Saturday night to pace the Chicago White Sox to a 7-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Washington blasted his second homer of the season after Alan Bannister walked to trigger a four-run sixth, which also included Nordhagen's third homer and a run-scoring triple by Eric Soderholm.

Washington tripled in the seventh after Don Kessinger's double and a bunt single by Bannister and then scored on a sacrifice fly by Nordhagen.

The victory snapped a four-game Chicago losing streak and went to Wilbur Wood, 7-5.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Gary Alexander belted a grand-slam home run and Buddy Bell added a two-run triple to power the Cleveland Indians to a 12-3 rout of the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday night.

The Indians jumped on Toronto starter Jim Clancy, 4-7, for four runs in the third inning to begin the romp.

The Blue Jays had taken a 1-0 lead in the second on Tommy Hutton's single, a bunt single by Luis Gomez and Willie Upshaw's single.

The Indians took the lead for good after Tom Veryzer led off the third with the first of his three hits and went to second when center fielder Bob Bailor bobbled the ball for an error. Jim Norris followed with a run-scoring single to tie the game, Rick Manning's single moved Norris to third and Bell tripled down the right field line for a 3-1 lead. Johnny Grubb added a run-scoring single, chasing Clancy.

The Indians added five runs in the fourth off Mike Willis, the big blow Alexander's 12th homer of the season and second in two nights.

Winner Mike Paxton, 4-4, gave up 13 hits before needing help from Sid Monge, who came on with one out and the bases loaded in the eighth and got out of the jam with a strikeout and a pop-up.

Augustine three-hits Mariners, 3-0

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jerry Augustine pitched a three-hitter and Gorman Thomas and Larry Hisle belted two-run homers, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 5-0 victory over Seattle Saturday night that snapped the Mariners' winning streak at a club record five games.

Augustine, 8-8, gave up a two-out single to Bob Stinson in the third inning and retired 17 of the first 18 batters until Larry Milbourne singled with two out in the sixth.

Milwaukee took a 2-0 lead against ex-Brewer Jim Colborn, 1-6, in the second on a double by Sal Bando and Thomas' 17th homer.

Cards beat Expos

ST.LOUIS (AP) — Recently aquired veteran Woodie Fryman teamed up with Darold Knowles and Mike Garman on a six-hitter and Ellis Valentine singled home the only run Montreal needed as the Expos downed the St. Louis Cardinals 2-0 Saturday night.

Fryman, 3-5, a 38-year-old lefthander making only his second start for the Expos, pitched out of first-and sixth-inning jams.

Following a two-out single by Mike Tyson in the second, Fryman set down the next 11 batters until Morales smacked a one-out double in the sixth. Morales went to third on a wild pitch but, after a walk to Hernadez, Fryman got Simmons and Hendrick to pop out.

Matlack's 2-hitter beats Angels for Texas

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Jon Matlack tossed a two-hitter for his first American League shutout and Richie Zisk, Bobby Bonds and Bobby Thompson drove in the runs as the Texas Rangers stopped the California Angels 3-0 Saturday night for their fifth consecutive triumph.

Matlack, who has only a 6-8 record but a 2.57 earned run average, allowed only infield singles to Dave Machemer and Dave Chalk and only one California runner reached second. He walked one and struck out five.

Texas scored its first two runs off loser Dave Frost, 0-1, just back from the minors. The first one came in the third inning when Bump Wills singled with two out, stole second and came home on a single by Zisk.

Texas scored in the fifth without a hit. Bert Campaneris was hit by a pitched ball to lead off the inning and moved to second on Wills' groundout. Campaneris stole third and scored on Bonds' sacrifice fly, his ninth RBI in the last three games.

The Rangers' final run came in the eighth when rookie center fielder Thompson hit his first major league homer off reliever Dave LaRoche.

The victory was the Rangers' third straight over the Angels and second shutout in three games. Fergie Jenkins blanked California Friday night.

LaCock paces Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Pete LaCock homered and doubled to drive in four runs and Andy Hassler recorded his first victory of the season as the Kansas City Royals downed the Oakland A's 7-5 Saturday night.

LaCock, a reserve first baseman, unloaded a three-run homer to cap a five-run first inning off Steve Renko, 2-3. In the third, he tagged reliever Steve McCatty with an opposite-field double to left that scored Al Cowens.

Hassler, who cut his hand in a spring training accident and didn't pitch until May 14, turned over a bases-loaded jam to Doug Bird with none out in the sixth. Tony Armas' grounder scored one run before Cowens speared Miguel Dilone's line drive in center field and pegged a strong throw to the plate to catch Glenn Burke trying to score.

Three of Oakland's runs were unearned because of errors by Hassler, LaCock and shortstop Fred Patek.

The victory kept the Royals in first place in the American League West, one-half game ahead of Texas. The A's, who fell out first place June 14, have dropped 15 of their last 17 games an are in fourth place, 4½ games out.

Goodwin tops TL with .385 bat mark

El Paso's Danny Goodwin raised his batting average to a league-leading .385, but found himself in a dogfight with teammate Bob Clark in the Texas League home run race.

Going into the week, the two were tied, but then Clark forged in front 17-15 and Goodwin finally reclaimed the lead Friday night with a couple of fourmasters against Midland to raise his total to 18.

Clark also leads Goodwin in rbi with 58 to 56. The former No. 1 draft choice in all of baseball a few years back has the lead in slugging percentage with .638, which gives Goodwin a shot at for titles and the possible triple crown, average, homers and rbi.

NEIL ALLEN,Jackson, regained his pitching leadership with three complete games, lowering his earned-run-average to 2.15, which puts him ahead of San Antonio's Rick Nitz at 2.35. Allen now has a league-leading 96 strikeouts.

In team batting, El Paso is averaging a robust .305 while Midland is third with a .278 as the Cubs fight to come out of a slump. A few weeks back, the Cubs were also over .300 as a team.

Midland retained its fielding lead with a ,9667. El Paso is right behind withn.9656. The Cubs are sixth in pitching with a team 4.87 ERA while San Antonio at 3.31 and Jackson at 3.37 top the list.

Jaws sees heavy title in future

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — "I'll be the next heavyweight boxing champion of the world in the next 12 months," said Osvaldo "Jaws" Ocasio of Puerto Rico.

Standing on a San Juan street corner just blocks from the waterfront where his father toiled as a dockhand to support his 21 children, the 22-year-old fighter confidently talked about the future.

"I'd fight (Larry) Holmes, (the new World Boxing Council champion) today if I could." Once a Holmes sparing partner, Ocasio got his nickname "Jaws" from the champion. He said, "I bit him on the ear. He called me Jaws and the name stuck."

Ocasio, in his first important fight two weeks ago in Las Vegas, scored a stunning upset by gaining a split decision over highly rated Jimmy Young.

The victory brought his record to 12-0, including nine knockouts.

"I knew i could take Young," said Ocasio, who wore a light two-or-three day growth of black beard. "I got in close with my combinations of left hooks and my right hand."

His manager, Bill Daly, a 74-year-old boxing veteran who has directed seven world champions, said of his new fighter: "Jaws won because he was in shape. The other guy (Young) was not."

Daly said he thought it would take Ocasio longer than a year to become champion. "I think he will be knocking on the door in two years. It takes time to be a polished fighter."

Writer recalls Ol' Diz

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — You drive along a dusty country road with nothing but farmland and pastures for miles and miles, when out of the wilderness, a gas station appears. You pull in for a tankful and while he's pumping the gas, the attendant begins to talk baseball.

"That's about the way Diz sounded to the people of America," says Curt Smith, author of "America's Dizzy Dean," a new book about the late Hall of Famer who became almost as famous for his baseball broadcasts as he was for pitching prowess. "Listening to him was like listening to to themselves for millions of Americans in the small towns and rural areas of the country."

DEAN WAS the first player to move from the field to the broadcast booth when he began doing the baseball Game of the Week in 1955. "It was the first network sports series and the ratings were titanic," says Smith. "It was a religion in many sections of the country."

Smith thinks the reason Dean was so popular was that a large portion of America's people considered him their spokesman. "Few have had the empathy with middle America that Dizzy Dean had," the writer says. "Dean was their symbol."

wake and made Casey Stengel sound like a college professor. "All his mistakes were pre-programmed," claims Smith. "But his spontaneity was such that the listener at home couldn't tell."

SO DEAN told America about runners who "slud" into a base or batters who strode "confidentially to the plate" and then "swang" at the pitch or fielders who went out to their "respectable positions." He hated "statics," known to other announcers as statistics. First Buddy Blattner and later Pee Wee Reese shared the broadcast booth with Dean. They weren't his partners. They were his "podnahs."

Networks are always concerned about what goes out over their airwaves but when they tried to control Dean's impromptu comments, the effort backfired.

"Broadcasting executives have told me you couldn't tell Dean what to do or not do because, if you did, it just made him more determined to break your rules," says Smith.

So, after an airline commercial, ol' Diz resumed one broadcast by saying, "Podnah, I hate to fly." And when the game he was doing over CBS turned into a rout, Dean's observation was "This is the Game of the Week? Heck, there's a better one over on NBC right now."

The gasp that followed that remark came from networkland.

WHEN UMPIRE Bill McKinley made a call with which he disagreed, Diz dismissed it by saying simply, "They shot the wrong McKinley."

Dean's reply to that move and the related criticism of his destruction of the language was to borrow a page from another country orator, Will Rogers.

Mantle reported in stable condition

DALLAS (AP) — Former New York Yankee slugger Mickey Mantle was in stable condition at Brookhaven Medical Center Saturday where he was being treated for a bleeding ulcer.

A hospital spokeswoman said Mantle was "doing fine."

Mantle was hospitalized Wednesday after he became ill at a Dallas golf club. A doctor friend ordered him hospitalized and he spent some time in an intensive care unit.

Mantle said he hoped to be released from the hospital Monday.

"I've had a bellyache before but nothing like this," Mantle said. "I don't guess I've ever had anything this serious. I've been doing a lot of traveling. It seems like wherever I go, there's always a cocktail party. Maybe I was drinking a little too much."

Durocher takes Cedeno to task

By JOHN HALL
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — It is one of those curious coincidences that Leo Durocher and the Houston Astros have been in the neighborhood at about the same time. Durocher's last job in baseball was managing the Astros, with whom he concluded a 53-year baseball career. At least, it appeared to be his last job.

After a long absence from public affairs, Durocher breezed through the other day as a "goodwill ambassador" promoting baseball's 49th All-Star game July 11 in San Diego. Houston, without Cesar Cedeno, as usual, and not quite living up to expectations, as usual, finished its latest business with the Dodgers Thursday afternoon.

TWO BASIC laws of nature are clearly still intact. Leo is still talking and the Astros are still struggling. They always seem to be Exhibit A among unhappy ballclubs — prize examples in the endless lecture entitled "What's Wrong With Today's Ballplayer?"

As Durocher or almost any old-timer would testify, today's typical major leaguer is a lazy, pampered prima donna who knows nothing of the meaning of "team" and could care less. And Cedeno, 28, the center fielder once expected to make the Hall if Fame on his second at bat, is usually mentioned first as most typical of the typical. Right?

Cedeno has been everything but a winner since he first put on his Houston uniform in 1970. Before last week's injury (torn knee ligaments) that put him out for the season, the club fined him $5,000 for bruising his hand — slamming it into a dugout roof in a temper fit after one of his line drives wound up in a glove instead of against a fence.

IN HIS book ("Nice Guys Finish Last"), Durocher once said he regarded Cedeno as one of the three most talented players he's ever seen — along with Willie Mays and Pete Reiser — and young Cesar was the key reason he joined Houston after two dozen years of managing the Dodgers, Giants and Cubs.

"Willie Mays could do the five things you have to do to be a superstar — hit, run, hit with power, throw and field," Durocher said. "And he had the other magic ingredient that turns a superstar into a Superstar. Charisma. He lit up a room when he came in. He was a joy to be around."

Durocher on Reiser: "Pete might just have been the best player I ever saw. At the age of 22, he hit .343 to lead the league. The next year he was hitting .380 in July when he ran into a fence in St. Louis and busted himself up.

"You think Willie Mays could run in his heyday? You think Mickey Mantle could run? Name whoever you want and Pete Reiser was faster. You want to talk about Lou Brock? He couldn't get out of the box with Reiser. He ran to first base consistently in 3.6 and 3.7 and, believe me, there has never been anybody before or since who could do that.

"PETE REISER had everything but luck. Willie Mays had everything!"

Durocher put Cedeno in the same class. "Natural talent? Cesar has it to burn," Leo said. "Cedeno came to Houston at the age of 19. The year I got there (1972), he was 21 and at the end of the season was hitting .320 with 55 stolen bases, 22 home runs and 82 RBI. He could cover center field just as good as Mays, too, which was absolutely vital in the Astrodome."

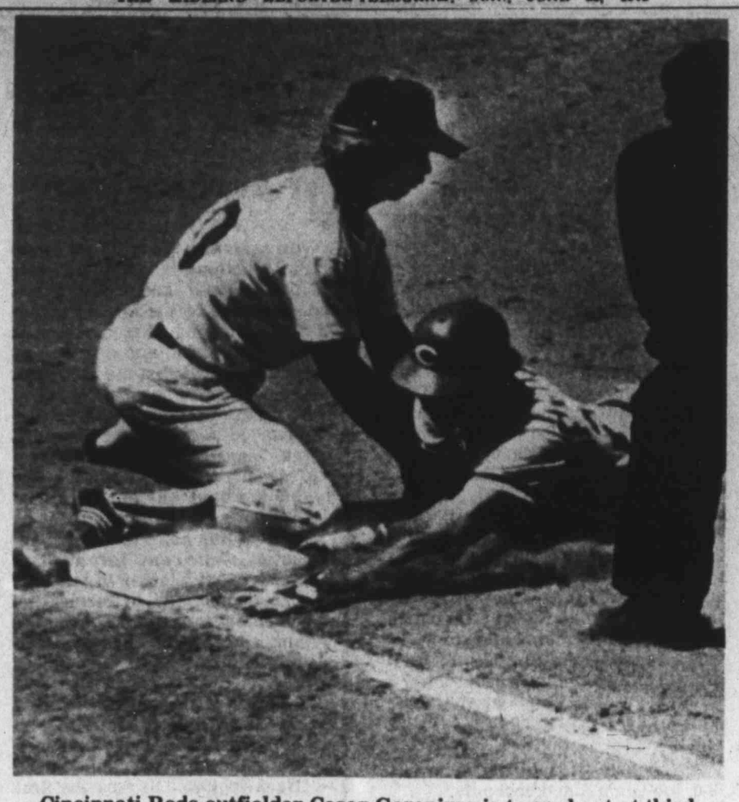

It was an impression that soon went down in flames. Cedeno hit .320 again in 1973, but that was the last time over .300, and, with all his brilliance he's never really made it.

The difference in attitudes of Willie Mays and Cesar Cedeno is the typical difference between most "greats" of the last generation and the "greats" of now.

"When I got to managing Houston, I could see that the talent was there. But I could also see Cedeno was not like Mays," Durocher said. "Every day with Mays I would come to the ballpark, pick up the lineup card and write his name in. Willie Mays was never sick, he was never hurt, he never had a bellyache, he never had a toothache, he never had a headache. He came to the park every day to put on the uniform and play.

"WITH CEDENO it was: 'No feeling good today, got tummyache. Got headache, I dunno if I can play.' He had a very high susceptibility to injury and a very low threshold of pain. Even when he was playing, he was complaining.

"All Mays did to loosen up for a game was get a rub on his arm, chase fly balls and get into a pepper game. Cedeno was in the outfield every night stretching his legs back and forth and doing situps...Calisthenics is the only way you can lay down on a ball field and make it look legitimate. It kills you. You spend your life looking for the great talent that comes along about once a decade and you have to sit there and see it being thrown away."

Hobson, Fisk spark Red Sox over Orioles

BOSTON (AP) — Butch Hobson drove in two runs with a homer and a single and Carlton Fisk drilled a solo homer Saturday as the red-hot Boston Red Sox whipped the Baltimore Orioles 8-3 behind unbeaten Luis Tiant.

Posting his sixth victory in his last seven starts — he also had one no-decision in that stretch — Tiant allowed seven hits, including solo homers by Rick Dempsey, Eddie Murray and Doug DeCinces in boosting his record to 7-0 for the season.

Dempsey gave Baltimore a 1-0 lead with his fourth homer of the year in the third inning. However, Hobson got that run back with his 15th homer in the Boston third.

Murray drilled his 15th homer, some 15 rows deep into the bleachers beyond the Boston bullpen in right center in the fourth. But Fisk came right back to tie the score with his eighth homer over the left field screen.

Boston routed starter Scott McGregor, 8-5, during a three-run sixth, then added two runs in the seventh.

Tiant struck out six and walked two in his 198th major league victory. After bailing out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the fourth, the 37-year-old right-hander allowed two harmless hits and DeCinces' homer with two out in the ninth, the rest of the way.

The victory was Boston's 13th in the last 15 games and 23rd in the last 29, giving the American League East leaders a 49-21 record, best in the major leagues.

Except for the three home run pitches, Tiant was in trouble only once.

After Murray led off the fourth with his homer, the Orioles loaded the bases on a single by Ken Singleton, a walk and a single by Terry Crowley. However, Tiant got DeCinces to ground into a double play, from third base to home to first, and Dempsey on an easy fly ball to end the threat.

Dodgers nudge Cincinnati, 4-3

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers broke a tie with two runs in the sixth inning, one on a bases-loaded walk to Jerry Grote and the other on a grounder by Dave Lopes, and held on for a 4-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday in a nationally televised game.

Don Sutton, 7-6, with relief help from Charlie Hough and Bob Welch, earned the victory, the 11th in the last 14 games for Los Angeles. The loss was only the third in the last 10 games for the Reds, but it dropped them three games behind front-running San Francisco in the National League West. The third-place Dodgers are 5½ games back.

Geronimo hit his fifth homer of the season leading off the second, but Los Angeles tied the score in the bottom of the inning on doubles by Ron Cey and Bill North. The Dodgers got an unearned run in the fourth when Sutton singled home Steve Yeager. Cincinnati tied it 2-2 in the fifth when Pete Rose, who had four hits, singled, stole second and scored on a hit by Dave Concepcion.

The Dodgers loaded the bases with none out in the sixth on singles by Dusty Baker and Lee Lacy and a walk to North. Grote then walked, forcing home Baker, and Lacy scored when Lopes grounded out.

Foster hit his 16th homer with one out in the eighth. The Reds then got two runners on but Welch came in and got pinch-hitter Ken Henderson on a popup, ending the inning.

Tom Hume, 2-7, was the loser.

Giants nip Braves, 2-1

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Roger Metzger's two-run double with two out in the sixth inning lifted the San Francisco Giants and Jim Barr to a 2-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday.

The triumph was the 12th in the past 15 games for the Giants, leaders of the National League West.

Barr, 3-4, blanked the Braves for five innings before Atlanta broke a scoreless tie with a run in the sixth. Barr, winning his first game since May 3, scattered nine hits.

Bucs slam Mets in 12th

NEW YORK (AP) — John Milner's grand slam home run, the sixth of his career, capped a five-run Pittsburgh burst in the 12th inning and gave the Pirates a 7-4 victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

Milner's homer, his second of the season, came after Omar Moreno broke a 2-2 tie with a run-scoring single.

Kent Tekulve, 4-4, the third Pirates' pitcher, was the winner, going 2 2-3 innings before leaving in the 12th for a pinch hitter. Dave Hamilton, the second Pirates pitcher in the 12th after the Mets scored twice, got his first save. Paul Siebert, 0-1, the fourth Mets pitcher, was the loser.

Milner had four hits, four RBI and scored two runs against his former teammates.

Cubs homers knock off Diablos, 8-7

EL PASO—Midland's Cubs pushed over two runs in the ninth inning to edge El Paso, 8-7, before 4,386 fans here Friday night in the next to last game of the Texas League first half race.

Steve Macko, Aaron Randall and Jimmy Buckner hit home runs for Midland while Buckner and Joe Hernandez collected three hits each. El Paso's Danny Goodwin reclaimed the home run lead from teammate Bob Clark by cracking out two to raise his total to 18 for the season. Goodwin knocked in five runs for the Diablos.

Lefthander Bob Clark, coming on in relieve of David Overstreet, making his first start since returning from Pompano Beach, notched his fourth win in five decisions while Daniel Boone was the loser.

Lange sets junior mark in vault

Lange, a freshman at East Bridgewater-Raritan High School in East Bridgewater, N.J., set the record with his 16-foot vault on his second try at that height, which broke the old best of 15-7½. That effort landed him in fourth place overall in the event.

"I knew I could do it if I got up on top of the pole," Lange said. He admitted to "butterflies," before his jump, which he said he knew would be a record if he made it.

"I'm just happy, that's all, the first record is the nicest," he said.

Randy Hall, competing unattached, won the event and set a meet record at 17 feet. It was the first time the 19-year-old Texas A&M freshman had cleared 17 feet.

Ten events were concluded in the Amateur Athletic Union competition for men aged 19 and under and women a 18 and under Saturday.

Ex-quarterback faces strong rush

By JACK STEVENSON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As a quarterback for the Southern California Trojans, Los Angeles Rams and Detroit Lions, Jim Hardy was no stranger to the third-down, long-yardage situation.

Now, as general manager of the venerable Los Angeles Coliseum, Hardy faces the same situation.

Anaheim Stadium has conducted a flirtation that could lead to a 1980 marriage with the Rams. Carroll Rosenbloom, owner of the National Football League team, says he will decide in late July or early August just where the Rams play when their contract with the Coliseum expires after the 1979 season.

The Coliseum, owned jointly by the city of Los Angeles, the county of Los Angeles and the state of California, has been the Rams' home since they moved from Cleveland in 1946. They pay more rent than the University of Southern California and UCLA combined.

The loss of the Rams would mean the Coliseum would not be on a paying situation unless another NFL team is lured West.

Mayor John Seymour Jr. of Anaheim says it's as much as 95 percent certain that the Rams will make the move.

One big problem for the Coliseum group is the 1984 Summer Olympic Games and whether they will come to Los Angeles.

"Right now, you know as much about the Olympics as I do," says Hardy, one of the prime movers to bring the Games to Los Angeles.

"As for the Rams, the ball is in their court. When we talked to them last week, Carroll Rosenbloom said they were weighing a number of options and they soon make up their minds. Every authoritive report and valid source of information we have tells us that they are gone to Anaheim.

"I cannot believe that and I just can't believe it until it becomes a reality. I just can't see them vacating Los Angeles to go to a baseball park. Until they do, I'm keeping my communications open with them, trying to find some area or avenue to entice them to stay."

Rosenbloom, since he traded the Baltimore Colts for the Rams in 1972, has urged changes in the Colisium to make it better for football and its fans.

Those changes include lowering the field so there will be more seats in better locations and construction of executive suite boxes.

"Our commission, and I might add our mayor also, are committed to to making improvements," Hardy said, "but until the determination of the Olympic site is made, we cannot go ahead with that."

Booming fem tennis circuit open to top bid

By ELIZABETH WHEELER
The Los Angeles Times

Women's professional tennis has come a long way, baby, and just how far will soon be apparent.

Earlier this year the Women's Tennis Association (WTA) broke with Virginia Slims, a million-dollar sponsor, and offered the winter circuit to the highest bidder.

An announcement is due soon on which companies will step into the $1.7 million void created by the failure to come to terms with Slims. Executive director Jerry Diamond says the WTA has offers from Avon, Bancroft and others, and the tour may have more than one sponsor. Said player and WTA board member Rosie Casals: "We have a lot of interest. It just depends on who comes up with the bucks."

Interestingly, the bucks were not the issue with Slims. When negotiations for a 1979-80 contract began last October the issue was tournament format.

The WTA believed the 8-year-old circuit — 11 equal tournaments in 11 cities leading to one championship — had grown stale for the players, the public and the press. It wanted to make two of the tournaments (probably Los Angeles and Chicago) richer and have the winners of those automatically qualify for the $400,000 championship.

Virginia Slims argued that elevating two tournaments would in effect downgrade the others, that a successful promotion depends on presenting a uniform product across the country.

WTA countered that a format change would increase the success. The attendance at Slims tournaments increased sharply in 1976 and 1977, Diamond noted, but the past season the growth rate slowed. Many of the top players said the press was not as interested as in previous years.

Diamond: "The women did not want more money. They wanted a redistribution of the money and special events within the format — special events that would be easier to publicize and more likely to attract television."

Attracting television is not necessarily a boon to Slims, a cigarette brand, because all banners and advertisements must be taken down.

After each side presented its position, the WTA executive board voted 13-1 for a change. A negotiating committee of Casals, Billie Jean King and Janet Newberry went to Slims with six new proposals. All were rejected.

"We just wanted to make it more exciting," said King. "We said: 'Please, please, please, please' and Slims said: 'No, no, no, no, no.'"

"The relationship just reached the point where there was nothing to do," said Casals. "It's unfortunate because we respect Virginia Slims and what they've done for women's tennis."

Slims expressed disappointment and wished the players good luck.

Japan wins over U.S. in opener

TOKYO (AP) — Seisuki Toyoda and Hidetake Horiba each went 3-for-4 and drove in two runs apiece Saturday, leading Japan to a 7-3 victory over the United States in theGopening game of the seventh annual U.S.-Japan collegiate baseball "World Series."

It was the second time the American collegian all-stars dropped the series opener to their Japanese counterparts since the first series was held in Japan in 1972.

Prince Hiro, the eldest son of Crown Prince Akihito, threw out the ceremonial first ball at Tokyo's Meiji Jingu ballpark before 12,000 spectators.

The U.S. took a 1-0 lead in the third inning on consecutive singles by Pat Proulx of La Verne University and Marty Barrett of Mesa Community College and a sacrifice fly by Larry Reynolds of Stanford.

The Japanese went ahead with three runs in the bottom of the fourth inning on four consecutive singles off Bill Bordley of Southern California and a squeeze bunt.

The Americans cut the lead to 3-2 in the fifth on a solo homer by Barrett,

Something new in golf

By JIM MURRAY
(C) 1978, The Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Tired of the same old faces on the golf tour? Fed up with all those perfect swings, flawless putting strokes and flat-bellied slacks? Had enough of blonds from Brigham Young shooting 65s on their own ball? Need a rest from Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson, Lou Graham and all those Andy's?

Has Wes Parker got a tournament for you! Hoo-hoo! You'll love it!

How would you like to turn on the TV and see a guy with a 30 handicap standing out there in the rough with a chance to win $150,000 if he can break 90? Like to see a guy four-putt the final green for an 11, throwKhis hat in the air and yell, "I've won the Open!"

Like to see "Cutshot" Clancy, the pride of the caddy shack at Muggy Meadows, playing off with two truck drivers from Albuquerque and a fry cook from Sheboygan? Who needs Arnold Palmer when you can get an 11 from Chula Vista? Like to see a whole field of guys with loops in their backswings instead of just Miller Barber? Like to see guys whose pants don't fit and shoes don't match winning all that heavy money? Tired of hair spray? Had it up to here with straight left arms?

IN A way, it'll be a kind of Chain Letter Open. Here's the idea: An organization calling itself the World Golf Association plans to charge the nation's duffers $25 a pop to join — $35 after Aug. 1. Sixty percent goes back to the golfers as prizes as they begin a massive qualifying round.

You need 200,000 entries for this thing to fly. Then, the golfer mails his accredited handicap to a WGA computer and it assigns foursomes. The mathematics eludes me but Wes Parker, a former Dodger first baseman who is commissioner of the WGA, assures me you cut out 150,000 ribbon clerks with the first round and slash it down to 200 golfers by the fourth round, by which time, $2,125 richer for winning their early rounds, they tee it up in November 1979 at the El Prado course in Chino, Calif., for the $150,000 first prize.

TO PLAY in the U.S. Open — although you might not think it to look at some recent ones — you have to be a two or under even to make the qualifying. In most PGA regular tournaments, you really have to be, like, a plus-three to have a chance. In commissioner Parker's tournament you can be a solid 29 and going up. In fact, it's the kind of tournament where a guy dumb enough to get down to a one probably won't make the cut.

It'll be no threat to the Open, although the USGA might not like what it does to the Publinx tournament.

But I'll tell you someone who would have loved it. Titanic Thompson. Titanic would have rubbed his hands, gone out, found himself some little country boy whistling 1-irons through a Force 10 gale to guarded greens and knocking down flags, would have dressed him up in Army-Navy store clothes, got him established a solid 15 at some goat-pasture course in Texas, and would have taken dead aim on that 150 grand. The opportunity for larceny would appear to be limitless. You might even put a beard on a recent Masters winner. For that kind of money, Bobby Riggs is liable to go back to the hustle.

Commissioner Parker says not even Titanic Thompson could fool the computers. Maybe. If so, they're better than some department-store computers I know.

Wes says you never adjust handicaps upward. And a swing of more than 20 percent below your listed handicap, you get more strokes lopped off.

I suppose anything's possible. But I know some hustlers who could win without ever tipping their hands — or handicaps. They just beat you by one shot whatever you or the rest of the foursome shoot. The computer would think he was Diogenes.

But, I like the audacity of it. I wonder, if I just change that right-hand grip just a little and try that pendulum putting stroke...! I(wonder if even Nicklaus could handle me at 25?

Only 1st counts in baseball

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Baseball has always had a hangup with being first.

Unlike other sports, which permit also-rans in their playoffs, you have to be first to make it in baseball.

Nobody remembers who finished second in the AL West or the NL East or either league's batting race. The key is to finish first.

And perhaps the game's most famous question, thanks to the comedy team of Abbott and Costello, is "Who's on first?"

With that in mind, we offer an alternative that is definately not designed for front-runners. Instead of firsts, it is concerned with famous lasts.

See how many of these baseball personalities, remembered not for their firsts but for their lasts, you can identify:

1—"I was a member of the 1927 Murderers' Row New York Yankees and also played with the St. Louis Cardinals' Gashouse Gang. I also made the last out in the last of Johnny Vander Meer's consecutive no-hitters. But I am remembered best as a manager who had some much-quoted thoughts about being last. Who am I?"

2—"I am a former American League batting champion with a keen eye who was involved in baseball's most controversial one-for-one trade. I also made the last out in two of Sandy Koufax' record four no-hitters. Do you remember me?"

3—"I was a major league outfielder for 11 years and had a career batting average of .312. But I'm most remembered for taking a called third strike to end one of the most memorable World Series games. Do you know me?"

4—"I am one of baseball's all-time leading home-run hitters. I won Rookie of the Year and Most Valuable Player honors. But I may be remembered best for making the final out in a World Series on a ball that almost reversed the result. Can you name me?"

5—"I was one of baseball's greatest all-time hitters and closed my career with a home run in my last at-bat. I later was a manager but was considerably less successful at that than I was as a hitter. Who am I?"

6—"I was a great outfielder, with a quick bat and rifle arm, who starred in the 1971 World Series. My last career hit was a baseball milestone. Do you remember me?"

7—"I am one of baseball's top current sluggers and was one of the most sought-after free agents last winter. I am also the last active player listed in the Baseball Register. Do you know me?"

8—"I was a famous National League umpire who retired following the 1956 World Series. The last game I worked behind the plate was Don Larsen's perfect game. Who am I?"

9—"I was the manager of the last Chicago Cubs team to win a pennant, 33 years ago. Today, it seems like a fairy tale. Do you remember me?"

10—"I was the last batter to face Harvey Haddix on May 26, 1959, when he pitched 12 perfect innings. I also was the first one to get a hit off him that night. I later managed the club that Haddix currently works for. Who am I?"

ANSWERS

1—Leo ("Nice Guys Finish Last") Durocher; 2—Harvey Kuenn; 3—Dale Mitchell (struck out to end Don Larsen's perfect game in the 1956 World Series); 4—Willie McCovey (lined out to Yanks' second baseman Bobby Richardson to end the 1962 World Series with the tying and winning runs on base for San Francisco); 5—Ted Williams; 6—Roberto Clemente (last hit was the 3,000th of his career); 7—Richie Zisk; 8—Babe Pinelli; 9—Charley Grimm; 10—Joe Adcock (doubled home winning run for Milwaukee; later managed Cleveland).

Midland College inks 2 more basketballers

Fred Jones, a guard from Houston Lamar, and Mark McCurry, Brownwood, have signed letters of intent to play basketball at Midland College, it was announced by Coach Jerry Stone.

Jones, a 6-1, 165-pounder, averaged 14.6 points a game at Lamar and was coached by John Meehan. "Fred played both forward and guard in high school," Stone said. "He was named the most valuable athlete at Lamar this year, was the team free throw leader and was named to all-tournament in the Baytown tourney. He is a good student, with the type attitude and background all coaches are looking for. He played in District 18-4A, which know for its strong basketball teams."

McCurry played one year at Brownwood and was named all-district in 4-3A. He is 6-8, 200 pounds and averaged 17 points and 12 rebounds a game at the post position.

He previously played at Houston Clear Lake in 23-4A. "Due to his move from Clear Lake to Brownwood, we think a lot of coaches overlooked Mark. He is a smooth offensive player at either post or forward with a lot of potential. We feel he might be a sleeper who is capable of becoming a star for us."

Cubs' White is disabled

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Chicago Cubs placed rookie outfielder Jerry White on the 15-day disabled list Saturday as a result of a left shoulder separation White suffered in the second game of a twi-night doubleheader against the Philadelphia Phillies Friday night.

Williams quits school

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Dwight Williams, the Providence College basketball star charged with stabbing a fellow student, has withdrawn from the Dominican-run school.

PC spokesman Joseph T. McAleer said Friday the school administration has accepted the letter of withdrawal from Williams, the ECAC's Division I player of the year last season.

The six-foot, playmaking guard was suspended from PC on April 13 after Providence police charged him with assaulting Raymond Romagnola 22, of Somerset, Mass.

Swiacki picks baseball

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Swiacki Jr., son of the former New York Giants' football star, has decided to try professional baseball instead of the gridiron sport.

Swiacki, 21, who stands 6 feet 7 inches and weighs 230, signed with the Los Angeles Dodgers and has been assigned to their San Antonio club of the Texas League.

Borg seeks to equal Perry mark

LONDON (AP) — Not since the great Fred Perry did it in 1936 has any man managed to win three consecutive singles tennis titles at Wimbledon. On Monday, Bjorn Borg of Sweden starts the long road toward what he hopes will be his third straight.

Many of the greats have tried and failed. Rod Laver, John Newcombe, Roy Emerson and Lew Hoad all won it twice but faltered. There is nothing to suggest it will be any easier for the flying Swede.

Wimbledon, despite the introduction of a plethora of other championships and titles, remains the big one, the world's leading lawn tennis tournament. It is an institution. And for that reason, every top player in the world wants to win a Wimbledon title.

But it is an ambition only few few manage to fulfill.

Borg's greatest challenger will almost certainly be the No. 2 seed, enigmatic American Jimmy Connors. He has hit his peak at just the right time. Last week he won the John Player tournament in emphatic style, dropping just six games in a five-set final against Mexico's Raul Raimirez, seeded No.7 at Wimbledon.

"I'm playing better and better," Connors said afterward. "I'm not afraid of anyone the way things are going."

Last year he was beaten in the final at Wimbledon — by Borg.

The value of Wimbledon seeding is that players like Borg and Connors are supposedly protected from their more dangerous rivals until the later stages.

But while Connors has what looks like an easy first-round match against New Zealander Russell Simpson, Borg might well have hoped for an easy opponent initially than 6-foot-7 American Victor Amaya.

Big-serving players like Amaya are always a danger at Wimbledon — but Borg hasn't lost a match here since 1975 when he fell in the quarter-finals to eventual champion Arthur Ashe.

The major challengers to Borg and Connors, the 1974 champion, are mainly Americans.

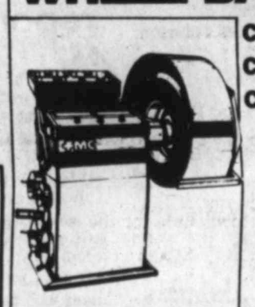

Vitas Gerulaitis, only 23, is seeded third. Fifth seed Brian Gottfried, who defeated Borg once last year, and Roscoe Tanner, seeded sixth, cannot be overlooked. Tanner was a semifinalist in 1975 and 1976 before going out to Britain's John Lloyd last year in the first round. His powerful game is well-suited to Wimbledon.

It would be foolish, too, to write off such men as fourth-seeded Argentinian Guillermo Vilas, Ilie Nastase, Sandy Mayer, and even the out-of-form Ramirez.

Wimbledon has a habit of bringing out the best in players. It would be no surprise to see a giant-killer emerge from the unknowns.

Rodeo, entertainers to highlight 'Western Week'

Jon and Jim Hager, stars of the weekly television show "Hee Haw," are among the scheduled entertainers for the AJRA and Local Rodeo, set to get under way at 7:30 p.m. July 19 at Midland's Thorp Arena on FM 868, a mile west of Holiday Hill Road.

The four-day event is being sponsored by the Thorp Arena and the non-profit Midland Rodeo Association and will highlight seven days of activity during "Western Week," said Joe Thorp president of the Midland Rodeo Association. Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. is expected to proclaim "Western Week" to run from July 15 through July 22.

Scheduled for nightly appearances are singer Lyn Childress and "Showdown." The Hager brothers are to appear July 20 and 21 for two of four evening dances at the arena's brand new pavillion. The dances start at 10 p.m. and will continue until 2 a.m., according to Thorp.

The Hagers, who are seen by a reported 45 million people each time they appear on "Hee Haw," will also provide entertainment during rodeo intermssion the nights of July 20 and 21. They regularly tour the nation's clubs, state fairs and rodeos.

Thorp said Bessye Cowden Ward, a prominent woman rancher and local civic leader, of the F-Bar Ranch south of Odessa, will be honored by having the arena's new dance pavillion dedicated to her in appreciation of her "numerous contributions to community life."

The rodeo itself is being dedicated to Frank Cowden Sr. and Frank Cowden Jr., also prominent and longtime area ranchers and community leaders.

Thorp Arena, which is having additional bleachers and new restrooms installed, is the site of two AJRA rodeos each year. The one held last April drew a record 467 entrants, the largest number in AJRA history, according to Thorp.

The statistics are in the process of being tabulated for submission to the Guiness Book of World Records.

In honor of "Western Week," a parade is scheduled for July 15. It will begin at 2:30 p.m. from the Western State Bank parking lot in the 1000 block of Andrews Highway and proceed to the intersection of Main and Wall in the downtown area.

Thorp said that although parade entry blanks have been mailed out to potential participants, any interested persons can pick them up at the Western Wear stores in Midland or Odessa. Contest entry blanks for rodeo competition can also be obtained at those establishments.

The parade will be judged and prizes awarded in each category. Everyone is encouraged to take part and late entries are welcome. The parade will line up in the bank parking lot at 2 p.m.

A special calf scramble is on tap nightly in the arena for all children 12 years old and under. There also will be nationally known rodeo clowns on hand for the event.

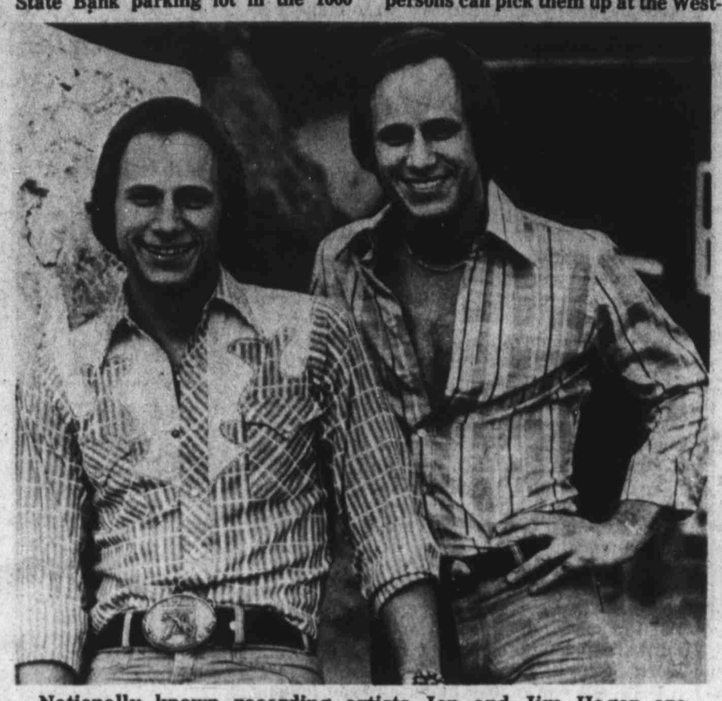

Bull riding, barrel racing, pole ending, bareback riding, and several categories of roping are among the competition events. Thorp said they should keep both the spectators and contestants busy.

Highlighting the last day of the rodeo will be "Kids Night," with prizes and surprises in store for children 11 and under. Free tickets are availale at most local business establishments.

The West Texas Childrens Home an the High Sky Girls Ranch are among the special guests invited for "Kids Night".

General admission for the rodeo will be $2 for adults and $1 for children 11 and under. Stock is being provided by Bobby Kelly of Stanton.

Additional parade information may be obtained by telephoning (915) 563-0978. For futher information on the rodeo, Joe Thorp may be telephoned at (915) 694-0813.

Nationally known recording artists Jon and Jim Hager are scheduled to be among the guests who will be on hand for the upcoming AJRA Rodeo in Midland. The four-day event is to begin on July 19.

Jury process contract topic for commissioners

Midland County commissoners are scheduled to consider contracting for the jury selection process when they meet at 1:30 p.m. Monday in the Midland County Courthouse.

The method in which the jury wheel is put together came under fire recently when defense attorneys in a capital murder case challenged a jury panel, charging that the wheel was not put together in accordance with state statute and that access to the wheel had not been sufficiently controlled. The district attorney later conceded that there had been "irregularities," and the trial was postponed until afterWthe jury wheel is reconsti tuted for another year.

Also Monday, the commissioners are to consider adopting a resolution to support the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission's application for a technical assistance grant from the Farmers Home Administration.

In other business, the Commissioners Court is to discuss fixtures from the old American Legion Building, which the county now owns; consider accepting titles to completed roads in 349 Ranch Estates, consider accepting road easements and consider tables and benches for the courthouse porch.

Budget review slated Monday

Midland City Council will begin reviewing the city's budget for the coming year in a budget study to begin at 9 a.m. Monday.

City Secretary James McCullough Saturday said the council will spend several days going over the budget item by item with the various departments.

The meetings will be in the conference room in the basement at City Hall, and are open to the public, McCullough said.

Welding items reported missing

Welding equipment gauges valued at $560 were reported missing Saturday from Challenger Rig and Manufacturing Co., about three miles east of the Midland County line on Interstate Highway 20.

A spokesman for the Midland County Sheriff's Department said employees noticed the theft, which reportedly took place some time after 6 p.m. Friday, when they opened the business at 6:30 a.m. Saturday. Entry had been gained by cutting a chain locking a fenced-in yard area, the spokesman said.

Concorde going to Dallas?

NEW YORK (AP) — British Airways said Saturday it will ask the British Civil Aviation Authority to approve a new route for its Concorde supersonic jets to Dallas-Fort Worth, Tex.

If approval is granted, the airline said, it will extend its thrice-weekly London-Washington service to Dallas-Fort Worth.

The application will be made under the terms of the Anglo-U.S. air services pact in which the London-Dallas-Fort Worth route was designated for one American and one British carrier.

Braniff International already has started direct nonstop service on the route. The pact stipulates the British carrier must operate via an intermediate point until July, 1980.

Presentation on Israel scheduled Monday

A multi-media presentation on Israel is scheduled for 8 p.m. Monday in the auditorium of Alamo Junior High School, 3800 W. Storey Ave.

The program, titled "After 40 Centuries, It's Great to Be 30," commemorates the 30th anniversary of the establishment of the modern state of Israel. It is presented by the Israel Government Tourist Office and is non-political and non-parochial, according to organizers of the event. The Midland showing is one of 20 presentations scheduled in Texas.

The program uses films, slides, sound effects and narration to tell the story of Israel by depicting its landscapes, its holy places and historic sites, its people, its Biblical background and centuries-old history.

The show will be presented by Israeli native Menachem Dayan, born on a Kibbutz on the shores of the Sea of Kinneret, or Sea of Galilee.

The Monday night program will be open the public. There will be no charge for admission, it was announced.

Three Midland students elected officers of Bluebonnet Girls State

SEGUIN — Three Midland students were recently elected state officials of Bluebonnet Girls State, a citizenship training program for high school age girls sponsored by the Texas American Legion Auxiliary.

Tamara Leigh Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Smith, is the new Nationalist State Chairman. The city attorney is Socorro Scott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L.D. Scott, and Claudia Goebel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Geobel, is treasurer of City F.

Another area student elected to office was Karla Simpson, of Stanton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nolan Simpson. She is the health officer for City J.

Midland College has consolidated its senior citizens' transportation services in order to provide expanded and more efficient operations.

All calls by senior citizens for transportation now are being handled by a dispatcher at Casa de Amigos. Requests by senior citizens for free transportation should be made between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays by calling 682-9701 the day before transportation is needed.

The two Midland College vans and the Casa de Amigos van are equipped with 40-channel CB radios for more efficient dispatching and routing.

All the vehicles are used to take senior citizens from their homes on trips to pay bills, shop, or go to banks, beauty shops, or other places. The vehicles also take senior citizens on field trips, to special educational or recreational activities, to the Nutrition Program, or other community activities.

Further information may be obtained by telephoning Jan Reed, director of senior services at Midland College, 684-7851, or Margaret Hernandez at Casa de Amigos, 682-9701.

Summer job seekers hike Midland unemployment

Unemployment rose in Midland during the month of May, but the Texas Employment Commission is attributing the increase to summer workers looking for jobs.

The unemployment rate went to 3.5 percent, which means that 1,520 persons were seeking employment.

While the unemployment rate went up, the number of employed persons also increased, according to the TEC. In May a year ago, 38,890 persons were employed. In May this year, 43,110 persons were working. This was more than the April figure which showed 42,270 persons working.

By August, the TEC expects the unemployment rate to improve, with an estimated 43,810 persons working and students and summer workers returning to their fall routines.

Midland's unemployment rate is 23.6 percent above the April figure of 2.9 percent. The current 3.5 percent rate is the sixth lowest in Texas, according to the TEC. Texas has a 4.2 overall unemployment rate, while the nation has 5.5 percent. The August rate should drop to 3.2 percent, according to a spokesman with the TEC.

Even while the unemployment rate rose, the TEC spokesman said Midland's steady growth has continued. Manufacturing grew and gains were reported as a result of new orders. Non-manufacturing jobs led the growth rate with advances made in all areas except construction, which reflected a small decline, the spokesman said.

There still is a demand for skilled labor. During May, 232 of the job openings were canceled because of the lack of qualified persons. Shortages of personnel exist in most occupations, including those in the professional, technical, clerical, skilled, semi-skilled and unskilled occupations. Some hard-to-fill positions are accountant, engineer, machinist, construction, nurse, clerical, truck driver, mechanic and restaurant worker.

The TEC spokesman said there should be about 35,780 jobs in August. Manufacturing should increase. Most areas of nonmanufacturing should grow also to meet Midland's expansion, according to the spokesman. Unofficial reports place Midland's population between 68,000 and 75,000.

Midlander joins A&M ship's crew

GALVESTON — A Midland man is bound for South America this summer with the crew of the Texas A&M University training ship TS Texas Clipper.

Frank Agar joins more than 250 cadets, prep-cadets and faculty members of the Texas Maritime Academy on a 58-day cruise highlighted by ports of call at Fort de France on Martinique and a trip through the Panama canal on the way to Peru's west coast.

The cadets sailed from Galveston June 10 aboard the 15,000-ton training vessel on their way to 10 stops throughout the Caribbean and South America.

Iraan service projects started

Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. currently is working on several projects to improve local telephone service in the southern Midland area and to upgrade long distance service between Midland and Iraan, District Manager Juanita Bryant said recently.

Construction has begun on the $174,500 cable project to improve local exchange service for residents along south Texas Highway 349 out of Midland.

"We will be replacing the aerial wire with buried cable," Ms. Bryant said. "The purpose of the project is to give our customers better service by relieving existing open wire now operating at full capacity."

Completion is scheduled for early December, she said.

Construction on a $1.5 million intercity cable project connecting long distance toll cable from Midland to Iraan is scheduled to begin this month, Ms. Bryant said.

"This project will increase our capacity to handle long distance calls from Midland to Midkiff, Rankin and Iraan," she said.

The 200 to 600 block of South Marienfeld Street will be partially blocked for construction from late June to late August, according to Ms. Bryant.

Ex-student sentenced to 25 years

SAN ANGELO — A former Angelo State University student was formally sentenced Friday to 25 years in prison for the murder of Leandra Morris.

Robert Mark Wagner, 19, was convicted of murder in the stabbing death of the 19-year-old Angelo State University student and recommended a sentence of 25 years in prison.

Tax office opening

AUSTIN — State Comptroller Bob Bullock has announced the opening of a new sub-office in Midland to serve taxpayers in Howard, Martin and Midland counties.

Tom McCright will be in charge of the office.

The comptroller invited area businessman and women and other taxpayers to drop by the new office and get acquainted with the tax experts who will be serving them.

"It's a heck of a lot easier, and more pleasant, to deal face-to-face with someone you know and trust than trying to communicate with a computer in Austin," said Bullock.

The new office is located at 2811 N. Big Spring and will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. The telephone number is 684-5807.

Southwestern Bell expanding two sites

Southwestern Bell has two construction projects under way. One is in progress while the second is in the architectural stage, according to Juanita Bryant, District Manager of Midland.

Construction recently began on a $100,000 addition to a Midland service operation center located at 1302 Holiday Hill Road. The 21-by-40 foot metal structure will supply room for offices and vehicle parking, said Mrs. Bryant.

"The addition will provide for the routine growth of our installation and repair units under District Manager of Installation and Repair Jean Parks," she said.

Completion of the addition is scheduled for mid-August. J.W. Cooper Construction of Odessa is the contractor.

Construction is scheduled to begin in mid-November to expand the capacity of the 563 Terminal central office. More than $350,000 is to be spent, said Mrs. Bryant.

The central office, which serves customers in both Odessa and Midland, is situated at Third and Avenue D in Terminal. Mrs. Bryant said "we have projected a substantial growth in this area, and the addition will provide us with capacity to meet that growth and serve future customers."

She said the 40-by-100 foot addition will house switching equipment and is to be framed for a second floor. Completion of the structure is due in September 1979.

Airport and L Street top council concerns

Further improvements and construction at Midland Regional Airport and a way to finance them are expected to be presented to the City Council for consideration when the panel meets at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday for a regular meeting.

The council plans to consider a resolution accepting a bid for seats at the Airport Building, a resolution to approve plans and specifications from BFW Construction Co. to build an addition to the baggage claim area and a resolution authorizing the purchase of a carrousel for that addition.

One possible method of financing these improvements through revenue bonds probably will be discussed with a representative of First Southwest Co.

Also taking up part of the agenda will be several items concerning North L Street. The council may consider an ordinance establishing a 20 mph speed limit on parts of North L and another ordinance authorizing stop signs at certain intersections along that street. A traffic island at the intersection of North L Street and Neely Avenue may be discussed along with the proposal to prohibit parking 50 feet back from all corners on North L Street and cross streets.

At the last council meeting, residents along North L Street outlined problems they had experienced with teen-agers driving along that street and stopping to talk with each other. The council suggested various ways to reduce the problem and asked for suggestions from the residents.

On the agenda are a resolution approving a schedule of fees for using the city landfill, a resolution to accept a bid for the pro shop at Hogan Park Golf Course and another to accept the bid for golf cart paths at Hogan Park.

An ordinance to prohibit glass containers in any public park or playground will be presented to the council.

Also, public hearings will be held on various rezoning requests.

POSITIVE THINKING

'King Heroin is my shepherd, I shall always want. He . . .'

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

It seems that some people are dissatisfied with life in general and with themselves in particular. Not a few have an inner dissatisfaction with themselves, with what they are and with what they are doing about themselves.

This could be part of what underlies the widespread exasperation of our times. It may be related to the pathetic spiritual vacuum which seems to exist for a good many. This personal dissatisfaction ranges all the way from petty annoyances to serious problems.

Recently I saw a copy of a typewritten note found by a police officer in a telephone booth. Apparently written by a drug addict, it read as follows:

"King Heroin is my shepherd, I shall always want. He maketh me to lie down in gutters. He leadeth me beside the troubled waters. He destroyeth my soul. He leadeth me in the paths of wickedness for the effort's sake. Yea, I shall walk through the valley of poverty and will fear all evil for thou, Heroin art with me. The needle and capsule try to comfort me. Thou strippest the table of groceries in the presence of my family. Thou robbest my head of reason. My cup of sorrow runneth over. Surely heroin addiction shall stalk me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Damned forever."

On the reverse side was written, "Truly this is my psalm. I am a young woman, 20 years of age, and for the past year and one half I have been wandering down the nightmare of the junkie. I want to quit taking dope and I try but I can't. Jail didn't cure me. Nor did hospitalization help me for long.

"The doctor told my family it would have been better, and indeed kinder, if the person who first got me hooked on dope had taken a gun and blown my brains out. And I wish to God she had. My God, how I do wish it."

Here is a tragic example of how deeply personal dissatisfaction can go and how destructive a force it can become. Yet, in this tragic human situation, there is one element of hope. The girl's honesty about her addiction. With that honesty as a base, she still may be able to extricate herself from the misery in which she is living.

But whatever unhappy circumstance one may face there is the beginning of an out in self analysis and honest self scrutiny. It can be a most painful experience for anyone to tell himself the honest truth about himself. The human mind is very clever when it comes to rationalization or the process of trying to make the irrational appear rational. Forthright telling it "like it is" is never easy. But it is a pretty healthy procedure.

There was something admirable about the woman who wrote that pathetic note. With all the suffering because of her problem, she could at least face herself honestly and admit she had a real problem. And such honesty is the beginning of the solution of any problem. Here's hoping she really uses that honesty to work her way out of her heroin habit.

It's no good to let the feeling of personal dissatisfaction govern oneself, for it can steer one wrong. Problems must be faced for exactly what they are. The mind must not be allowed to disguise them.

Every person is, after all, a free spirit and as such will not let himself be destroyed by frustrations. Honesty is the key to personal freedom.

The formula for success is to look at oneself objectively. Recognize yourself for what you are, both bad and good. Being completely honest with oneself a person may then begin to deal creatively with those things that cause dissatisfaction and come out on top of them. There are always better days for anyone.

Gulf declares different prices not out of line

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Customers of Gulf Oil Corp. have been advised there is nothing unusual about several gasoline prices appearing at different service stations at a single traffic intersection.

Besides differences in gasoline cost, Gulf says, a variety or prices may reflect the varying business methods the dealers have adopted to operate their stations.

"The first dealer may opt for low prices and large volume; the second, for higher prices and smaller volume," Gulf reports.

"Another retailer may offer full service, with considerably greater operating costs than a fourth dealer who chooses self service."

Gulf presented its views on gasoline prices in a consumer news digest brochure distributed to its credit card customers and a spokesman said the response was about 100-to-1 favorable.

The brochure said the pump price elected by a dealer will depend to a large extent on how he interprets the needs of his customers and what marketing practices he employes.

The price of gasoline has been subject to federal price controls since the early 1970s and there also are government-mandated price ceilings establishing the maximum price a dealer may charge.

Gulf said pump prices also have differed from one retailer to another because of variations in dealer margins which existed in May 1973.

"If one dealer's margin for a certain grade of gasoline was 8 cents per gallon on that date, he could retain that margin under price controls," Gulf explained.

"If another dealer had a 5-cent per gallon margin on that day for the same grade of gasoline, he could only retain that 5-cent margin. Once controls were in effect, subsequent adjustments were made to the ceiling price to accommodate increased dealer operating costs."

To remain competitive, Gulf said, few dealers have charged the maximum allowable price.

The Gulf brochure also includes an estimated cost breakdown for a typical gallon of regular grade gasoline that carried a national average full service pump price of 63.8 cents last Nov. 1.

The crude oil used in processing the gallon of gasoline cost 28.9 cents or 45.3 percent of the selli price.

The cost of crude just a year earlier, Gulf said, was 24 cents or 40.7 percent of the cost of a gallon of regular grade.

Federal, state, and local taxes represented 19.6 percent of the November gallon. On the national average, the combined taxes total about 12.5 cents a gallon, with Mississippi, Georgia, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and New York also imposing an additional sales tax on gasoline.

In addition to the 4-cent federal tax, state tax rates range from 5 cents in Texas to 11 cents in Connecticut, Delaware, and Washington. Also, 26 states have city, county or transit taxes which range from 0.5 to 4 cents a gallon.

The dealer's margin or markup amounts to 8.50 cents a gallon or 13.3 percent of the selling price. This covers the difference between what the dealer pays for the gasoline and what it sells it for, and, in addition to profit, covers such operating expenses as rent, utilities, and labor.

The combined cost of crude oil transportation, refining, product transportation and product storage accounts for 7.4 cents or 11.6 percent of the selling price.

Drilling declines

HOUSTON (AP) — After setting 20-year highs three consecutive weeks, domestic oil and gas drilling operations declined a bit last week.

The weekly Hughes Tool Co. survey released Tuesday indicates 2,283 rotary drilling rigs were in use the week ending Monday compared with 2,293, 2,288, and 2,286 the three previous weeks.

MGF declares dividend, re-elects its directors

MGF Oil Corp. has announced the declaration of a three percent stock dividend, the closing of the largest publicly fregistered limited partnership drilling fund it its history, and the expansion of the company's exploration and development program into the Rocky Mountain Region.

Following last week's annual meeting of shareholders, MGF's board of directors delcared the stock dividend payable July 15 to shareholders of record June 30. It will be the fourth stock dividend paid in the last 19 months.

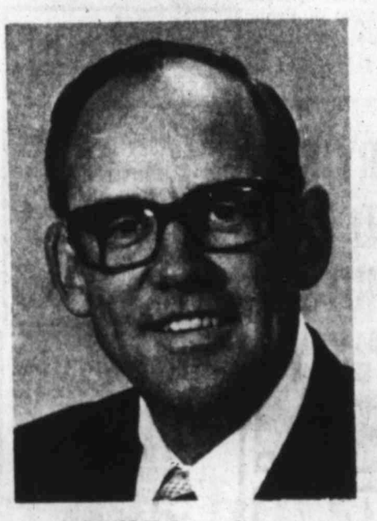

Presdinet R. O. "Jack" Major told shareholders the company has finalized its 1978 limited partnership drilling fund with total available capital of about $17,500,000. Included are $13,922,000 in public subscriptions, $1,078,000 from MGF as limited partner and approximately $2,500,000 from MGF as general partner. As a result of its contributions, MGF will own an approximate 35 percent interest in reserves found in the program.

Major also told shareholders that the comapny plans to begin drilling its first Rocky Mountain exploratory well within 60 days. MGF and its 1978 fund can earn a half interest in 5,275 acres in Campbell County, Wyo., by drilling an 8,600-foot test of the Muddy formation. Natural gas is being produced from the formation one mile to the east.

Shareholders re-elected 10 directors. They are Major, president and chief executive officer; Aaron F. Giebel, chairman of the board; William O. Bowers III, former assistant secretary of the state of Texas, San Antonio; William H. Craig, business consultant, Denton.

And, W. Phillip Marcum, senior vice president and assistant to the president; Bobby W. Page, senior vice president-Finance and secretary, and James O. Strahan, partner in Texas Insurers and chairman of the board of Christian Fidelity Insurance Co. of Fort Worth.

WASHINGTON OIL

Levy on imported oil may start at $2 per barrel

By CLYDE LA MOTTE
Reporter-Telegram
Washington Oil Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The Carter Administration is facing a dicision soon on whether to press for its proposed crude oil equalization tax or to accept the enery package as it now stands without the tax.

It's a good bet that it will give up on the tax and, instead, announce a plan to levy an import duty on crude oil and products, probably starting at $2 a barrel.

The crude oil equalization tax would make up the difference between the controlled price of domestic crude and the price of foreign crude. The tax would be phased out gradually so that eventually the wellhead price of domestic oil would reach the world level.

A purpose of the tax could be to make U.S. consumers pay the "real" price for oil rather than the artificial price existing under government controls. This, the Administration believes, would help slow down the demand rate for oil and thereby help reduce dependency on overseas supplies.

It is also obvious that the Carter Administration wants to offset criticism by other countries that the U.S., by far the world's largest consumer of energy, is making an effort to reduce demand and thereby stretch world supplies.

Consumer groups object to the tax on the grounds that it would be an added burden to consumers and would impact especially on the poor.

In any event, the tax has been in trouble. The Senate Finance Committee balked at it last year and it has made no headway since.

Futhermore, the Proposition 13 vote in California recently was an indication of a growing public reaction to higher and higher taxes. Members of Congress, keenly aware of this mood, are getting extremely skittish about voting for any type of tax increase.

Although the Administration has continued to insist that it wants the crude oil equalization tax adopted as a part of the over-all energy plan, many congressional leaders doubt that the tax has any real chance of passage, especially not after the Proposition 13 vote in California regarding real estate taxes there.

The issue has to be settled in order to get final action by Congress on the other parts of the energy bill, including the compromise natural gas pricing bill.

There is growing sentiment in Congress to move ahead with the four parts of the energy bill on which there already has been House and Senate agreement and to let that constitute the energy policy program.

The agreements that have been reached cover such aspects as conservation, conversion by industrial plants to coal or other fuels, restructuring utility rates to discourage big consumers, and the natural gas bill.

Even supporters of these measures do not feel that the resulting energy package is likely to accomplish a great deal but maintain that the actions are about as much as can be accomplished at this point.

If, then, the crude oil equalization tax is dead, President Carter will go through with his threat to impose an increased import levy on imports, an action he is empowered to take under existing law without any legislation by Congress.

There would be an attempt by some members of Congress to get legislation enacted to withdraw this authority from the President but such a move would have little or no chance of passage.

The industry has become divided over the equalization tax issue. Domestic producers strongly oppose it because, in their view, it would drain away money they need for futher exploration and development work.

Some majors are willing to accept the tax, feeling it is important for the nation to have a national energy policy and to demonstrate to other nations it is serious about trying to help solve the energy problems.

C.C. Garvin, Jr., chairman of the board of Exxon Corp., expressed this view at a press conderence in Washington last week.

Gas system completed

Houston—United Gas Pipe Line Co., interstate gas transmission subsidiary of United Energy Resources, Inc., announced it has begun receivinng natural gas deliveries into its pipeline system from a newly completed offshore pipeline system in the Gulf of Mexico offshore Louisiana and Texas.

The new 200-mile, $350-million pipeline system is called High Island Offshore System (HIOS), a five-company partnership venture which recently was completed and placed in service, John F. Brown, president and chief operating officer of United Gas Pipe Line Co., said.

The HIOS partners inclued subsidiaries of Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. of Detroit, Peoples Gas Co. of Chicago, Texas Gas Transmission Corp. of Owensboror, Ky., and Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. of Houuston in addition to United Gas Pipe Line Co. Each company owns a 20 percent interest in HIOS.

United Gas Pipe Line owns and operates an 8,900-mile interstate pipeline system in portions of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, southern Alabama and northwest Florida.

Regulation check starts

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Attorney Tony Canales said Friday a task force has been formed to investigate possible Houston violations of oil price regulations.

Canales said the investigation of a case that is not linked with any similar cases in other areas is being handled by members of his staff and FBI agents.

Dana Caro, assistant FBI agent in charge, said the investigation includes possible violations of federal racketeering laws.

Caro said the Houston situation differs substantially from a "daisy chain" scheme that has been under investigation in Florida since the Arab oil embargo of 1973-74. Under such a scheme, oil is allegedly purchased and repurchased through a series of companies so as to artifically boost the price.

Caro said the Houston investigation is not related to the Florida probe although FBI agents here did assist substantially in the Florida investigation.

Offshore oil yield told

AUSTIN—State and federal leases in offshore Texas petroleum provinces produced 128,561 barrels of crude oil during April 1978 in contrast to 88,091 barrels in the same month of 1977 and 123,776 barrels in March 1978, the Railroad Commission's Oil and Gas Division reported.

Gas well gas production on offshore state and federal leases amounted to 19,241,026 Mcf in April against 17,956,783 Mcf a year earlier and 22,870,550 Mcf in March 1978.

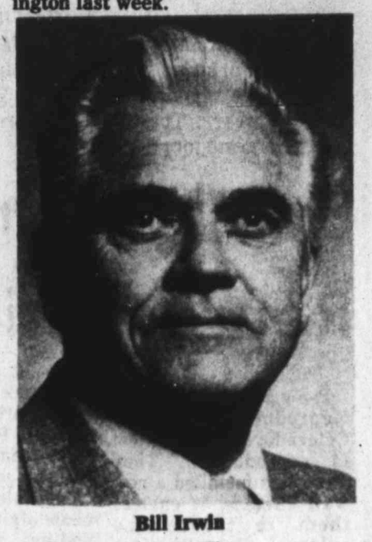

Casinghead gas production totaled 379,735 Mcf in April against 208,197 Mcf in the same month of 1977 and 273,090 Mcf in March 1978.

Condensate production on the state and federal leases amounted to 136,315 barrels in April, up from 58,107 barrels a year earlier but down from the 176,489 barrels in March.

Wells on state offshore leases in April produced 52,076 barrels of oil, 119,956 Mcf of casinghead gas, 13,891,128 Mcf of natural gas and 132,290 barrels of condensate.

In April 1977, offshore state leases produced 75,660 barrels of crude oil, 190,773 mcf of casinghead gas, 11,158,082 Mcf of natural gas and 52,895 barrels of condensate.

Through April 1978, cumulative production in state and federal waters off Texas totaled 17,920,691 barrels of crude oil and 2,598,790,821 Mcf of natural gas. January-April 1978 production totaled 519,792 barrels of curde oil, 1,394,283 Mcf of casinghead gas, 89,529,467 Mcf of natural gas and 685,412 barrels of condensate.

U.S. could save energy

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister James Callaghan says the United States should cut back its energy consumption as a contribution to international economic recovery.

In an exclusive interview Thursday at No. 10 Downing St., his official residence, the Labor Party leader told The Associated Press:

"America is using 50 units of power for every one used by India or 24 by the United Kingdom. So their use of energy per head is twice as large as ours and 50 times that of India. It's possible, and I'm not criticizing the U.S., for there to be a useful conservation program ... without hardship."

Callaghan spoke shortly before reports circulated in Washington that President Carter may act on his own to raise fuel prices if Congress does not act on his year-old energy bill. The prime minister said he favors unilateral action by Carter to curb oil consumption if Congress fails to move.

The related issues of rising U.S. oil consumption and trade deficits will be central at the semiannual economic summit meeting the goverment chiefs of the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Japan, Italy and Canada in Bonn next month.

Shark wins big fish tale

MONTAUK, N.Y. (AP) — The shark hunters aboard the charter boat Ebb Tide on Friday night have a fish tale to tell — about a half-day fight for a great white shark, whose dimensions grew as the day wore on.

You guessed it — it got away.

"The fish won fair and square," Capt. John Sweetman of the Ebb Tide, radioed to the Montauk Marine Basin on Friday night after, he said, his 40-foot wooden boat was dragged for almost 14 hours by a shark.

During the long day, the fish had been described as being from 20 to 40 feet long and weighing from 2,000 to 8,000 pounds.

According to Sweetman, his son, Jimmy, sunk a harpoon into "a very, very big white" at about 7 a.m.

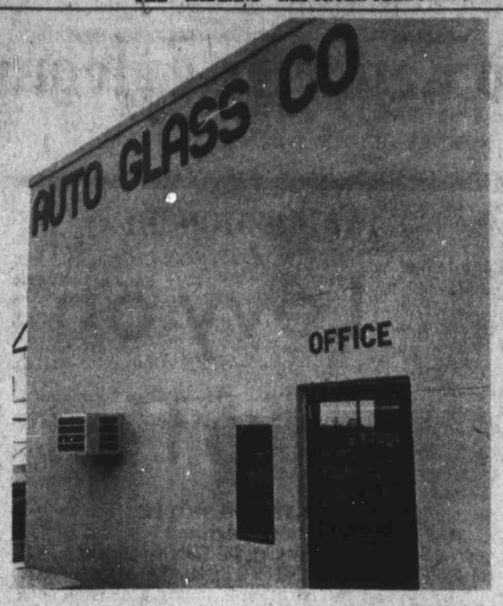

The end came when the big fish, which had surfaced only twice during the fight, snapped a quarter-inch, 1,650-pound-test line attached to the harpoon.

The fish got away, Sweetman said, when the boat was 30 miles south of Montauk Point at the eastern tip of Long Island, about a dozen miles from where the fish was first sighted, and the men on board were manuevering the boat so the fish could be killed.

Throughout the day, the only information about the battle came from the professional shark hunters aboard the boat.

But while there was no independent confirmation of the harpooning, there seemed to be no question that the boat had hooked something big. The fish pulled the Ebb Tide at speeds the crew said ranged from one-half mph to 3 mph.

Carl Darenberg, operator of the marine basin, said there were two reports of shark sightings in the area Friday — one by the Ebb Tide and the other, of a smaller shark, by another charter vessel, the Montauk.

Resumption of trial set in Berlin

BERLIN (AP) — Terrorist suspect Till Meyer, captured in Bulgaria 24 days after he broke out of a West Berlin prison, will go back on trial for murder and kidnapping with his co-defendants next Tuesday, officials reported.

Meyer is one of six persons on trial for the 1974 murder of a West Berlin judge and the 1975 kidnapping of a city politician. The court said earlier he would still be considered part of the trial if recaptured within 30 days.

Two armed women helped Meyer escape from a West Berlin's maximum security Moabit prison May 27.

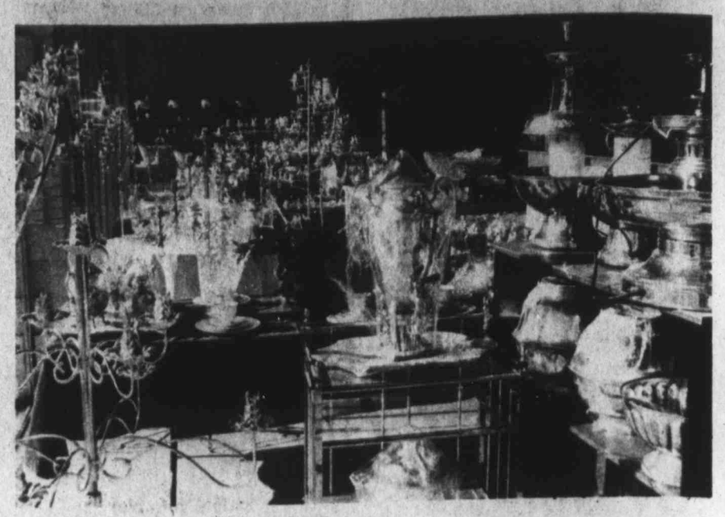

He was flown back here Thursday, one day after he and three other West German reputed terrorists were captured by West German police while they lounged in beach clothes at a Bulgarian resort.

Four cars pulled in front of a cafe where the four were sitting, and West German plain-clothes officers jumped out with drawn pistols and arrested them, Panka said.

Monsanto study shows laws could offset effort

DAYTON, Ohio—Efforts by some industries to reduce energy consumption may be offset by additional energy requirements for air and water pollution control, according to a study done by Monsanto Research Corp. for the Power Technology and Conservation Branch, U.S. environmental Protection Agency (EPA), Cincinnati, Ohio.

The organic chemical manufacturing and petroleum refining industries are expected to be hit especially hard by anti-pollution energy requirements, the study says. However, alternative methods to those currently used for water pollution abatement could reduce energy requirments.

The study is based on requirements in 1972 amendments to the Federal water Pollution Control Act, administered by the EPA. These amendments require the application of "best practicable control technology currently available" by 1977, and application of "best available technology economically achievalbe" by 1983.

New amendments in 1977 to the water pollution law extended compliance dates by one to four years, depending on the pollutant and whether the treatment facilities are operated by an industry or by a municipality. The effect of the 1977 extensions was not taken into account by the study.

The report says that 2.2. percent of total U.S. energy requirements in 1977 would be needed for pollution control, and that the percentage would increase to 2.9 percent in 1982. About two-thirds of the energy requirement ould be expended by industry, with the remaining one-third divided nearly equally between electri c power plants and municipal treatment and disposal facilities.

There are discrepancies among reports ranking industries according to energy requirements for water pollution control, according to the Monsanto Research Corporation study. However, the study notes, all reports agree that a major portion of the projected energy burden for wastewater treatment will fall on the chemical industry, and that the organic chemicals segment will account for about 95 percent of the chemical industry requirement.

The study predicts that about 9 percent of the energy used in the manufacture of organic chemicals will be expended to meet 1983 water pollution control regulatios.

When air pollution is taken into account, the primary metals industry will account for the major portion of the energy requirement. Within the metals industry, most of the burden will fall on iron and steel manufacturing operations.

The study says its estimates are based primarily on current methods of treating water pollutants after they ave occurred that is, as they come out of a pipe at the end of the manufacturing process. By using alternative treatment techniques, particularly changes inside plants to reduce pollutants in wastewater, the energy requirements needed to combat pollution could be reduced, according to the report.

The study gives alternate, in-plant water treatment techniques reported in the literature for several industries, including organic chemicals, petroleum refining pulp and paper, iron and steel, and canned and preserved fruits and vegetable packing.

The study was reported at a recent American Institute of Chemical Engineers meeting in Philadelphia.

Platform demand increases

TULSA, Okla. — Heavy petroleum exploration and production activity in the Gulf of Mexico has spurred demand for offshore platforms.

But Gulf Coast fabricators are confident they can maintain their brisk pace of platform construction and keep up with demand.

Fabricators' order books are nearly full, the Oil & Gas Journal reports in its June 19 issue. A spot check of 13 operators showed 35 drilling or production platforms on order or under construction. Three or four times that many operators are active on the outer continental shelf (OCS).

Fabricators don't expect lead times—the period between initial order and platform delivery— to extend to the critical levels of three and four years ago.

Construction yards have been expanded, and new fabricators are entering the market, broadening capacity. The industry is estimated to be able to build 50 to 70 production platforms a year, depending on size.

At present 10 or 12 construction yards are said to be capable of building platforms for the OCS. As recently as four years ago, there were only six.

There's no way to determine exactly how much platform demand is rising. Operators say demand for production platforms is greater than it has been in recent years.

Number of total platforms appears relatively steady. The U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) estimates it approves installation of about 100 structures of all types a year in the gulf, which has been the rate the last five years.

USGS says many of the units are major platforms, defined as those having space for at least six wells and containing production and separation equipment.

Most orders are for platforms in less than 250 feet of water. But fabricators tell the Journal demand is increasing for platforms to be used in deeper water.

And orders are increasing for special structures, such as stout, mudslide platforms for work in unstable areas.

Operators in 13 OCS sales held since 1973 have leased 1,099 tracts, most of which are off Louisiana and Texas. Two more gulf sales are proposed this year, and two others are planned for 1979.

Thus, platform demand probably will remain strong and may increase.

The USGS estimates 2,251 platforms have been installed on the OCS. Of these, 1,044 are considered major platforms.

Applications approved

AUSTIN—The School Land Board has approved two gas pooling applications for units in Pecos and Loving counties.

Wilson Brothers Leasing Co. received approval for the Wilson-State Unit, Tippett, South field, Pecos County. The board reduced the size of the requested unit from 80.016 acres (all state-owned) to 40 acres.

The low-pressure, low-volume gas well was completed in 1959, produced for several years, then was plugged until being re-entered by the operator early this year.

C&K Petroleum, Inc., received approval for the Dimmitt Deep Unit, Slash Ranch field in Loving County. The unit includes 640 state-owned acres.

ARCO looks forward to strong oil future

NEW YORK—The president of Atlantic Richfield Co. said last week his company is looking ahead to a strong foreseeable future in the oil and gas business, while "turning to new possibilities" for the longer term.

In prepared remarks, Thornton F. Bradshaw told a meeting of New York oil analysts, "we expect solid petroleum business opportunity as far in the future as we can see" but, he acknowledged, "the opportunities for truly exciting growth could be restricted."

He cited coal, chemicals, copper and aluminum as the company's chief options for long range growth.

Noting that oil and gas in 1977 returned more than 87 percent of Atlantic Richfield's pre-tax profits (net income was $701,515,000), Bradshaw said "the bulk of our capital spending over the next five years will go for oil and gas exploration and production. We think there is oil to be found, and thanks to the North Slope, we have the money to look."

The executive pointed to accumulated lease holdings as important areas of coming activity, listing locations in Louisiana and Texas, the Overthrust Belt of the Rocky Mountain States, offshore in the Gulf of Mexico, Baltimore Canyon and Lower Cook Inlet, as well as Kuparuk and Lisburne formations adjacent to Alaska's Prudhoe Bay field.

Turning to coal, Bradshaw said Atlantic Richfield is "bent on accomplishing probably the most rapid buildup in the history of the industry."

He noted that the company's first mine, Black Thunder, near Gilette, Wyo., was dedicated last month and is expected to produce 20 to 25 million tons of coal per year by the mid-1980s. Coal Creek, a second mine 15 miles to the north, will begin construction later this year and is expected to produce 10 to 12 million tons a year.

Looking beyond the currently depressed state of the chemicals market, Bradshaw said,"we are convinced that, whatever condition the market is in in the late 70s and early 80s, this company will command its share of the business, for several reasons."

These include, he said, a high-volume raw materials base coming from Atlantic Richfield's large Houston oil refinery to its nearby petrochemicals operations at Channelview, Texas, new world-scale manufacturing facilities at Channelview, the company's efforts toward achieving a unique, balanced exposure to various chemicals markets with its output divided between so-called building block chemicals and numerous specialized products and proprietary manufactured processes.

Bradshaw referred to Atlantic Richfield's acquisition of Anaconda as a "bargain" purchase bringing raw materials, particularly copper and aluminum, that "will provide a sound secondary enterprise to supplement our oil and gas business over the next 15 to 20 years.

African conflicts create dilemma for refugees

By LARRY HEINZERLING

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Guerrilla wars, tribal rebellions and repressive dictatorships are creating refugees in rapidly growing numbers across black Africa, straining the resources of relief organizations.

They are visible in the streets of Dakar in Senegal, the cafes of Nairobi in Kenya, the villages of northern Zambia, the special camps in Mozambique and elsewhere on the continent.

"Since the end of World War II we have never been involved in so many conflicts in one continent at the same time," a spokesman for the International Red Cross said in London recently.

The spokesman, Alain Modoux, said 2 million refugees, displaced persons, prisoners of war and political detainees have been created by the conflicts now plaguing Africa.

"One Red Cross man in Kolwezi, Zaire, is struggling to feed 60,000 people, including 12,000 children." Modoux said. "In Rhodesia, half a million persons have been displaced by the fighting there."

Other Rhodesians have fled to Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana where tens of thousands are kept in makeshift camps served by United Nations and private relief organizations. Some have joined guerrilla armies fighting in Rhodesia.

Thousands of black South Africans, many of them students from the black township of Soweto outside Johannesburg, have fled to neighboring Botswana, Swaziland and further afield.

As with the Rhodesians, some have been recruited by black nationalist movements to train as guerrillas.

Thousands of others, blacks and whites, have been uprooted by the recent invasion of Zaire's Shaba province and killings in Kolwezi by rebel tribesmen based in Angola.

Many Zairians have fled into Angola to escape either the fighting in Shaba or the autocratic rule of President Mobutu Sese Seko, including the invading Lunda tribesmen now seeking Mobutu's overthrow.

Angolan authorities announced earlier this month some 220,000 refugees from Zaire are currently in Angola.

"The situation of Zaire refugees is alarming because they arrive in bad shape, many come as skeletons and it is clear they can hardly survive in camps among others because we cannot help them immediately," said the Angolan state secretary for social affairs, Assuncao Vahekany.

While some blacks are fleeing Zaire, an estimated 400,000 others have flooded into that country from northern Angola, many of them Bakongo tribesmen, victims of either the continuing civil war in Angola or the colonial war that preceded it.

Others have fled the fighting between rival tribal factions in Angola's three-year-old conflict into Zambia and northern South-West Africa, also known as Namibia.

Uncounted thousands of other Africans are fleeing civil wars in Chad, Ethiopia, South-West Africa and the western Sahara.

There are an estimated 500,000 refugees in Senegal who have fled the West African Marxist dictatorship of President Sekou Toure of Guinea in the past two decades.

Other Guineans, many of them leading figures in the intelligensia, have moved to the Ivory Coast, Sierra Leone, Liberia and Mali.

Thousands of Ugandans fleeing President Idi Amin's rule have made their way to Tanzania, Kenya, Sudan and eastern Zaire.

A reign of terror since 1968 in Equatorial Guinea has forced thousands to flee to Cameroon, Gabon and Nigeria.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Artificial ear may work best

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son lost most of his left ear in an automobile accident. Should he have plastic surgery in the hopes of improving his appearance—he is so sensitive about his looks right now. We do hear conflicting reports though on just how successful this sort of operation is likley to be.—Wilma D.

Dear Wilma: Reconstruction of the ear can be difficult, and the operation is not always successful—although there have been some very encouraging reports from Stanford University researchers within the last few months.

Why don't you first look into the possibility of having an artificial ear made? In certain medical centers around the country, these artificial body parts—called prostheses—are now produced with extraordinary artistry and skill. Often, you cannot tell them from the real thing except on very close inspection.

An artificial ear of this kind would be made of plastic or silicone rubber, carefully shaped to match the other ear and tinted just the color of the skin on that ear. It is affixed with adhesive and stays on safely through activities like swimming or, for that matter, most other sports. It is removed part of the time—at night, as a rule—so that the skin beneath remains in a healthy condition.

If you think this might be worth trying, ask your doctor to recommend you to a center near you where this work is being done. I certainly hope you will be able to be in touch with one that is not too far away.

Dear Dr. Solomon: There has been quite a bit of stuff in the papers about the Encare Oval. And I gather it is just about as foolproof as a birth-control method can be—and yet without the side effects of the Pill. Should I rush and buy?—Allie F.

Dear Allie: The company that makes the Encare Oval cites German studies, according to which this vaginal suppository is extremely effective. "The Medical Letter", on the other hand, cautions that there have not been any controlled U.S. studies comparing the Encare Oval to other birth control methods.

The "Letter" notes that the Oval's spermicide, nonoxynol-9, is the same as that used in various other topical contraceptive products—foams, creams, or gels—and that the Oval requires manual placement high in the vagina and a 10-minute waiting peroid. The "Letter's" conclusion is that the Oval has no established advantage over other topical spermicidal products that have been available for many years. Surveys show that the topical contraceptives have a failure rate a good deal higher than the Pill, although the side effects are much slighter.

If you are concerned afor you. discuss this with your doctor. You can get reliable pamphlets from a number of sources as well—including Planned Parenthood-World Population, 810 Seventh Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Red spies at work

The crippling of the FBI and CIA by post-Watergate revelations and restrictions seems to have encouraged the Russians to step up their spying activities against the United States, as many of us feared that it would.

The recent discovery of an electronic eavesdropping device in the chimney of the American Embassy in Moscow is the latest in a rash of Soviet espionage to be uncovered.

United States officials recently warned of elaborate electronic installations at the Soviet consulate in San Francisco, which, it is feared, monitors international telephone traffic going out from microwave broadcasting towers atop an Oakland building. Similar concerns have been voiced about microwave monitoring by Soviet consulates on the East Coast.

And in Washington there are more Communist spies at work than there are American counter-intelligence agents available to watch them, according to John Barron, an authority on Soviet intelligence-gathering operations.

The number of Soviet and other Communist-bloc intelligence agents in the United States is reliably reported to have increased 50 percent since 1972 and now is estimated to be 800 in number.

This is ridiculous, and we apparently are not interested in doing much about it. And there are those in high places and elsewhere who say we shouldn't question Communist doings at home or abroad. It might irritate them. Hogwash!

Aside from the FBI-CIA convulsions, the United States is at an intelligence-gathering disadvantage because it is an open society in contrast with much more closed Communist nations which keep up with every foreign visitor.

Detente has increased the opportunity for surveillance of this country by Communist agents entering as diplomats, businessmen, journalists, students or tourists; 40 U.S. ports are open to Soviet ships, which bring 26,000 Russian crewmen ashore each year.

Inasmuch as the Soviet Union never ceases to regard the United States as its greatest antagonist, it is only natural that this country should be the chief target of its vast espionage system.

And it is only natural that our instinct for self-preservation should call for more effective countermeasures than those we now perceive.

Let's quit downgrading our own FBI and CIA agents and turn them loose once again to take out after the Soviet spies who have invaded our shores in larger numbers than we like to admit. Self-preservation, indeed, is at stake.

Noose is tightening

The new president of Costa Rica, Rodrigo Carazo Odio, should be commended for making it plain Robert Vesco is unwelcome in the Central American country.

Vesco is under indictment in the United States for securities fraud and for making an illegal $200,000 contribution to Richard Nixon's 1972 presidential campaign.

The millionaire fugitive began to feel he wasn't wanted when listening to Carazo's campaign speeches, and eight days before the new president was inaugurated, Vesco boarded his private plane and flew off to a new refuge in the Bahamas.

Vesco has had his own way in Costa Rica since his arrival in 1972. He immediately formed a business partnership with then President Jose Gigueres and then contributed heavily to the campaign of Daniel Oduber Ouiros, who was elected to succeed Gigueres.

Carazo isn't having any part of that sort of shenanigans. He has ordered that border posts search vigorously and not allow Vesco to re-enter.

It appears also that Vesco would not be welcome in Panama.

Slowly, the noose is tightening.

INSIDE REPORT:

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

Evans

Novak

WASHINGTON — President Carter's reorganization plan taking civil defense out of the Pentagon and putting it in the White House soon will be followed by a secret National Security Council (NSC) study demolishing the arms control lobby's arguments that Soviet civil defense does not matter.

The reorganization plan was fought to the end by Secretary of Defense Harold Brown, a confirmed skeptic about civil defense. The NSC study is passionately opposed by chief disarmament negotiator Paul Warnke, who contends that civil defense is useless. Taken together, the two moves suggest a radical and wholly unexpected shift in Carter administration policy.

However, this is only a beginning. As unconvinced defense-oriented members of Congress point out, there is no money commitment approaching what the Russians spend to protect their people. But Mr. Carter now has the organizational and theoretical base to generate public support for civil defense, if he desires.

Civil defense has been dead in this country for 15 years, killed the last year of the Kennedy administration. Mr. Carter seemed ready to bury it for good March 30, 1977, when he announced U.S.—Soviet plans to "mutually agree on forgoing major efforts in civil defense." Secretary Brown publicly belittled Soviet civil defense and privately muzzled Air Force intelligence officers worried about it.

Intentionally or not, this fit the arms control theology which holds U.S.—Soviet agreements are possble only if American citizens perceive that civil defense cannot prevent mutual destruction. Adam Yarmolinsky, counselor of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA), privately contends that advocates of civil defense are saying, "a nuclear war could be no worse than a bad cold."

Change was generated last year from an unlikely source: Bardyl Tirana, a liberal Washington lawyer with no military background who opposed the Vietnam war and supported George McGovern. Named head of civil defense in the Pentagon to his own and the military's consternation, Tirana quickly concluded that Jimmy Carter could not take a position countenancing mass slaughter of Americans in a nuclear war. Thus, Tirana became an energetic convert for civil defense.

Simultaneously, NSC staffers, led by former Harvard Prof. Samuel Huntington, began drafting Presidential Review Memorandum (PRM) 32 as a rebuttal to the arms control theology. The preliminary draft for the first time has the U.S. government recognizing the Kremlin's real outlook.

"The Soviets do not subscribe to the view that mutual vulnerability is stabilizing," says the PRM-32 draft, classified secret. "To the contrary, they believe that deterrence requires, in addition to offensive forces, a credible defense from attack. In their view, a lack of significant damage-limiting capability inhibits the credibility of retaliation."

PRM-32 also argues that the "essential equivalence" of strategic strength between the U.S. and the Soviet Union "must also involve equivalent survivability of the two societies." Therefore, "a civilian defense program directed towards the goal of equivalent survivability is a necessary corollary to U.S. strategic forces policy."

To arms control theologists, this is Martin Luther tacking up his theses at Wittenberg. ACDA Director Warnke "is really screaming," according to one senior official, and will file a strenuous dissent to PRM-32.

As usual, Brown has been subtle, even inscrutable. While not objecting to PRM-32, he has fought backstage against the reorganization plan putting civil defense in the White House. Brown's aides wrote unusually vigorous letters (over Deputy Defense Secretary Charles Duncan's signature) May 4 and May 10 attacking the plan as "unwieldy."

But in opposing the reorganization, Brown has embraced civil defense as never before. Arguing that civil defense "cannot be considered as independent of the rest of strategic nuclear programs," he talked about "its deterrent effect" and "possible effect on reducing casualties."

Advocates of civil defense, suspicious that Brown was changing his tune merely to keep the program under his thumb, backed the reorganization. So did NSC Director Zbigniew Brzezinski, who on May 23 urged that the new disaster agency's chief be given a seat on the NSC, alongside Harold Brown, when appropriate.

On June 2, President Carter chose the option calling for the reorganization. He now has a new agency and a new doctrine in PRM-32, but a projected maximum of only $200 million in annual civil defense spending compared with cumulative Soviet expenditures estimated at $65 billion. Although the constrained theory and structure of the past 15 years are gone, it is up to the president whether this is translated into true protection of the nation's citizens, with all that means for global strategy.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Political scandal in California

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — A political corruption case in California, reminiscent of the Watergate scandal, has been covered up by worried state officials. But the cover-up, as in Watergate, is now starting to unravel.

The story began back in 1974 when Earl Brian, with the active backin of then-Gov. Ronald Reagan, reeigned as California's top health official to go into politics. The tall, caustic Brian conducted a losing campaign to become the Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate.

A number of nursing home owners allegedly were pressured into contributing to Brian's campaign, in exchange for past favors and promises of future ones. They laundered cash and funneled corporate contributions into the Brian treasury. The Senate Committee on Aging, according to a confidential committee memo, has belatedly found "some 25 possible violations of the federal election law...by nursing home officials or officers of the 1974 U.S. Senate campaign of Earl Brian."

Yet this was discovered three years ago by two investigators for California's health department. Nervous higher-ups responded, however, by abolishing their jobs and ignoring their findings. Other state agencies also looked the other way.

Insiders say Gov. Jerry Brown's people continued to ignore the explosive evidence when they took over the state government. A principal in the scandal, Robert Glenn Oleis, testified behind closed doors that Brown received "$25,000 to $30,000" from the California Association of Nursing Homes.

Confided Oleis: "It was requested by Governor Brown that we not give it through the (association) because he did not want to receive it in that fashion, and requested that individual contributors give it directly to his campaign."

Oleis was an active fund raiser for the earlier Brian campaign. Investigators found that Oleis himself had contribeted $1,300, in the name of his mother and $2,500 in the name of his wife, using her name from a former marriage. His 17-year-old stepson was also down for a $700 contribution.

himself, but attempted to disguise them by having his relatives report the contributions," the Senate memo charges. His comptroller also gave $500, "reimbursed by Oleis," the document adds.

Oleis allegedly laundered another contribution through Robert Litman, a pharmacist who supplied his nursing homes. According to Litman's secret, sworn testimony, he "had been approached by Robert Oleis to make a $2,000 contribution to the Brian campaign, for which Oleis would reimburse him." Litman said he kicked in the money and, indeed, "was reimbursed by Oleis' corporate check."

We have also seen the secret testimony of Oleis' former administrator, Donald Harlow, who told of calls from Brian, pressing the nursing home operators to contribute to his campaign. "The pressure was on," said Harlow.

Brian threatened to close down a pilot program, which funneled state funds into nursing homes, if they didn't cough up. As Harlow recalls being told, Brian had demanded: you will come up with the money or the pilot treatment program is dead in the water by the end of the week."

Harlow testified that he discovered $12,000 in corporate funds listed as a bonus and questioned Oleis about the money. Oleis "indicated that this was the money that was to go to Mr. Brian," Harlow swore. No long afterward, Harlow was fired.

Under the pilot project, Oleis collected an extra $5 a day to care for each disabled patient. But "audits indicate that he really spent only 78 cents per patient per day," the Senate memo alleges. The state is now suing him for $57,000 in overpayments.

Another nursing home owner who passed the hat for Brian was William Bauer. He has already pleaded guilty to making illegal campaign contributions to an obscure San Diego county supervisor. The Senate memo suggests that "Bauer pleaded guilty readily for fear of authorities learning about similar activities in ... other campaigns."

Bauer's biggest beneficiary, the memo indicates, was the determined Brian. The sordid details were provided by Bauer's former comptroller, Dan Varner, who testified that Bauer helped raise funds for Brian because "it required money to grease the skids" to get a rate increase.

Other nursing home owners have acknowledged that they were pressured into giving money to Brian's campaign. Yet some are listed in elections records as "housewife" or "retired" to disguise their nursing home connections.

But the three-year cover-up is about to collapse. The Federal Election Commission is investigating the campaign violations, and the FBI is trying to determine whether extortion laws were violated.

Footnote: A spokesman for Gov. Jerry Brown's health department told our associate Howie Kurtz that there was no attempt to quash the probe and that evidence wes turned over to federal authorities. Brian and Bauer would not return our calls. Oleis said only that "there are no facts in these allegations." In his secret Senate testimony, he insisted he did not "reimburse anybody for any contribution they gave to anybody."

NICK THIMMESCH

Contradictions in president's words and actions confusing

By SEN. HENRY JACKSON

WASHINGTON — Like the Kremlin leaders themselves, many Americans have found it difficult to understand the policy of the Carter Administration toward the Soviet Union. The Administration's approach to East-West relations remains confusing, uncertain and often contradictory, even after President Carter's effort to "clarify" his policy in a recent major speech at Annapolis.

The confusion stems from the contradiction between Administration words and actions. The words reflect a growing recognition that the Soviet Union in a repressive totalitarian state that seeks to expand its influence through a massive military build-up and the use of a latter-day Afrika Korps of Cuban troops supported by Soviet arms, logistic and financial support. That, in essence, is what the President said at Annapolis. Yet the action that ought to flow from that recognition — a firmer bargaining stance across the whole range of U.S.-Soviet negotiations — has been strangely absent.

Our policies have reflected anything but hard bargaining. Negotiations between Washington and Moscow have been marked by a one-way flow of concessions (from West to East) and a disturbing tendency to appease the Soviets by accepting their terms on such matters as a new strategic arms (SALT) treaty, a comprehensive ban on nuclear weapons tests, arms control in Europe, and a slackening interest in human rights in the Soviet Union.

At Annapolis, President Carter, while challenging the Soviets to choose between cooperation and confrontation, offered simply more of the same: more SALT negotiations; more negotiations on other issues of arms control; more trade and cultural exchange. The tough talk was offset by weak action. The speech was a velvet fist in an iron glove.

Strong policies and not harsh rhetoric are the sensible course for dealing with the Soviet Union, especially at a time when the Soviets have, under the cover of detente, sought to exploit American forbearance in Africa, in the Middle East and in negotiations concerning conventional and strategic weapons. As Shakespeare's Hamlet put it: "Fit the action to the word, the word to the action."

Strong and appropriate policies need not be aggressive or extravagant. They should have the simple purpose of achieving understandings with the Soviets based on reciprocity — on strict equivalence. It is time to stop the dangerous practice of entering into unequal deals with Moscow in the misguided belief that they will reward our generosity with restraint in international affairs.

Why, for example, should we sign a SALT treaty that will permit the Soviets to have more than 300 large, modern intercontinental missiles while we are allowed none? Why should all of our strategic bombers count in the treaty (even those that have been disassembled and mothballed) while the new Soviet Backfire bomber, of which they can have some 400 during the life of the treaty, does not count at all?

Why should a U.S. cruise missile in Europe with a range of 400 miles be prohibited, while a Soviet ballistic missile in Europe with a range of 4,000 miles is permitted — and in unlimited number? An American willingness to enter into such a manifestly unequal agreement is certain to persuade the Soviets that we are weak, however strident the rhetoric in presidential speeches.

How are the Soviets to interpret the failure to take any action to back up the words of protest at the sentencing to seven years in a concentration camp of Yuri Orlov, a brave young man who sought to monitor Soviet compliance with the pledges Mr. Brezhnev made at Helsinki? And what will the message of the Orlov case mean for those now awaiting trial under similar circumstances — courageous men like Alexander Ginzberg, Anatoly Shcharansky and Vladimir Slepak?

It is time to take action to support our words about human rights in the Soviet Union. There are licenses that enable the Soviets to purchase our high technology — they could be rescinded or cancelled or turned down. There are Soviet commercial ships operating from some dozens of U.S. ports — while we are permitted to use only four Soviet ports.

It is time to pare down the list to equal numbers on each side. There are exchange programs in technical areas — like space-research — in which we get little and the Soviets get a great deal. Perhaps some should be cancelled or cut back.

Until we insist on equality, the Soviets will continue to believe that they can shrug off the tough words because they are able to drive a tough bargain. And to the leaders in the Kremlin, that is what counts.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Back on what must have been a hot (Texas summers being what they are) June day in 1865, a group of some 40 citizens, perhaps distressed over rising prices and the decreasing value of the dollar, broke into the State Treasury Office.

Apparently the group was under the impression that since Gov. Pendleton Murrah was out of town, and the Legislature wasn't in session, they would find no particular opposition to their plans for a direct-action wealth distribution program.

However, some Austinites objected, and a fracas resulted, with the result being that one of the 40 was killed, several wounded, and only $1,700 of the $300,000 was carried away.

Some historians see this incident as merely one of a number of examples of raids on the treasury by various special interest groups which have continued on down, more or less unbroken, to the present.

But it also provides an opening to talk — again — about tax reform, or taxpayers' revolts.

Proposition 13 has resulted, after politicians recovered from their initial shock, in a movement among many Texans politicos similar to, and perhaps as superficial as, the radical chic which swept college campuses in the 1960s.

Suddenly, everyone is interested in helping the taxpayer — and even Gov. Dolph Briscoe, who has viewed special sessions in the past with as much enthusiasm as the Montagues showed for the Capulets, began talking about having a pre-1979 fiesta of tax reform.

Briscoe was criticized in the last session for not taking an active enough role in tax-reform efforts — particularly for not exerting pressure to get the Senate to approve the tax reform measure by Rep. Wayne Peveto of Orange.

That shouldn't be interpreted as meaning Briscoe was anti-tax-reform in 1977, however, since gubernatorial pressure appeared absent except on increasing spending for highways and public school finance.

Briscoe did, in fact, have a modest proposal on tax reform — knocking off the state's sales tax on utility bills.

That failed to pass — and the Senate killed Peveto's measure, proving that while the Southeast Texas apostle had made believers in the House, the Senate remained more or less pagan territory for the gospel of tax reform.

But since it begins to appear that those pagans are being offered the choice of converting or having their political heads metaphorically chopped off, Peveto may be lucky to squeeze in for services when the Senate convenes.

Obviously — undeniably — the property tax system, and other taxes as well, need an overhaul.

Peveto's measure, drawn up and refined through the legislative furnaces, may have been no panacea — but it does have the benefit of not having been drafted in haste, to be later litigated at leisure.

Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements, in his recent debate with Democratic nominee Attorney General John Hill, argues that he is for "tax relief" while Hill is for "tax reform."

While that semantic distinction may make for good speeches and arguments, it tends to cloud the fact that both phrases mean more or less the same thing, and that the real argument is over how to bring about reform and relief — which is long overdue to many taxpayers.

Almost everyone is willing to pay his fair share of taxes — and almost everyone feels he or she is already exceeding that burden.

Those who say that tax reform is overdue in Texas are undeniably correct — but there's more than a little irony in the eagerness of many of the same lawmakers and officials who turned down attempts to implement a start in that direction now chomping at the bit, and pushing to be first in line to provide tax reform/relief.

But this is a case where "fast, fast, fast relief" may not be best, and any attempts to empty the State Treasury — or to stop money flowing to it or other governmental entities — need to be watched carefully.

Any maybe it would be wise for folks to keep an eye peeled for any large groups riding towards Austin.

ART BUCHWALD

The great family conference

WASHINGTON — The White House Conference on Families, scheduled for 1979, has been postponed until 1981. The reason was a famly fight in the Administration. Ms. Patsy Fleming, who works for Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano, resigned as chairperson because some people objected to the fact that she was divorced and had three children. Califano, who denied he was bowing to pressure, said he would appoint a Catholic father from an intact family as co-chairperson to balance the program. This didn't go down too well with happily married Protestant and Jewish people who felt they should have as much to say as Catholics about the role of the family in American society.

The only reason the conference was scheduled in the first place is that President Carter, in a rash moment of the campaign, promised to hold one if he were elected.

I suspect President Carter would like to forget about the whole thing, but he's stuck with it. I have a solution to the President's problem that would cost the taxpayers no money and keep the conference from turning into a religious, ethnic and sociological brawl.

Every day, lined up around the White House, there are at least a thousand tourists waiting to get in. They include a cross section of Americans from every state — middle-class people, poor people, white people, black people, Chicanos, Indians and Orientals. Some are families with both mothers and fathers in attendance; others are divorced people with their children: still others are grandparents. Everyone in line has a family of some sort or they wouldn't be there.

On a rainy day, which would not be announced in advance, the line, instead of moving through the public rooms and then being shuffled out into the street again, would be escorted into the East Room of the White House. There they would be given badges by Hamilton Jordan and then seated in gilt chairs.

Califano would come out and announce that he was swearing them in as delegates to the White House Conference on Families.

He would ask for suggestions on how the government could improve the health, education and welfare of the family.

The tourists could all have their say. A divorced person might ask for more alimony; a brother might ask the government to do away with sisters; a middle-class family might ask for larger tax credits for education; an unmarried couple with children could ask for a presidential pardon.

The session would be transcribed by an HEW secretary.

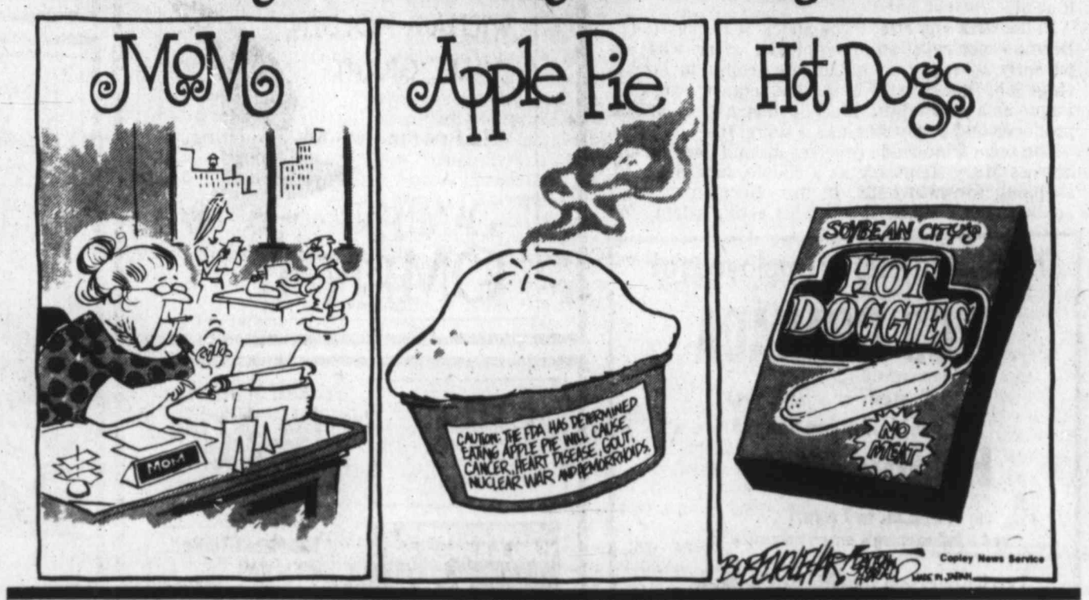

After an hour Califano would adjourn the meeting, thanking everybody for their time, and announce that as a surprise treat Amy Carter and her class would do a clog dance for them.

Then they would all be handed a tiny bottle of Amoretto by Jordan as a sourvenir of the conference, as they were quickly shown out to Pennsylvania Avenue.

Califano would have the transcript of the meeting typed up and printed. The first copy would be presented to President Carter on television, and he would hold it up to show that no matter what obstacles he faced he once again did keep one of his most important campaign promises.

With the White House Conference on Families out of the way, everyone in the Administration could devote their full energies once again to figuring out how to get the Cubans out of Angola.

THE GREAT AMERICAN DREAM (1978)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Good old rules

To The Editor:

You recently wrote an editorial entitled "Throw rascals out!" dealing with teachers' struggle to maintain discipline in classes. In doing some research on Midland Christian College, I ran across a copy of the ideals and rules published by the college and I pass them on to your readers.

In 1908 Midland was selected as the site of a junior college by the Trustees of Texas Christian University. The college was successful and operated until 1921 when it went the way of many private junior colleges — its demise was caused by lack of financial support, having neither tax money or endowment funds.

The college published the following ideals in its catalogue: "Institutions, like men, have much in common which it is their purpose to be and to achieve, and like men also they have their own individual characteristics, which give to them their chief value. The more exalted the purpose the greater the value of any school. The preeminent purpose of Midland Christian College is character building. Above all else is the desire to prepare and send out into the world men and women of true worth. The influence of the chapel exercises consisting of singing, reading prayer and short talks, calculated to cultivate correct ideals and standards of life, and to create a love for the good, is of inestimable value. The moral tone of the school is such as to build strong, clean noble manhood and womanhood."

It also set out the campus rules:

"1 — Students shall be gentlemen and ladies in their conduct.

2 — Prompt and regular class attendance is demanded.

3 — The use of tobacco in and about the college building is forbidden.

4 — Loafing in town is forbidden.

5 — Contracting unnecessary debts is forbidden."

In dedicating the Official Texas Historical Site Marker for this college. J. Evetts Haley said — "We gather to testify that it is not for substance or money, but rather for great and enduring principles that man struggles through life. We dedicate this marker, hopeful that those who come behind us find it a marker on the path to Christian principles which must be maintained if this nation is to survive."

Mr. Merchant...

To The Editor:

This is an open letter to the retail merchants of Midland:

I have a problem that I hope you can help me with. I find it very difficult, as the chief consumer of a very typical family of four, to spend our money in Midland. Sure, we spend housing, utility and grocery money here. But within just this past year, our family has bought a number of items in neighboring communities, not because we were looking for a "better deal," but because the items we needed were simply not available in Midland. Those items included sporting goods, fabric, craft supplies, furniture and antiques, trees and clothing.

It is fun to get out of town occasionally and do some shopping while we're wherever. But when it's impossible to find a bathing suit on the day the pools open, and no one stocks a pair of boy's dress shoes between sizes 3 and 7 or a man's size 40S suit, and all stores carrying them are out of size 24 gym shorts and my daughter's were stolen the day before (probably for the same reason), and it's three weeks 'til Christmas and the only cards left are the cheap assortments, and it's been going on like this for the 30 years I've lived in Midland, then something is wrong.

I used to think maybe it was just us — you know, a daughter with long legs, a husky son, a short husband, an overweight mom. Probably no one else's kids outgrew their windbreakers between the winter sales in January and a trip to Colorado in July. Then I realized that through the years, I've heard many others voice the question, "Why is shopping so bad in Midland?"

I am not a merchandiser, so I don't know what problems you face in your business. But as a consumer, I make these observations:

1 — There are many (enough it would seem) stores in Midland, most attractively designed and in convenient locations with plenty of parking and a wide range of prices.

2 — Everyone (in the same business) carries the same things, in similar sizes and quality, mostly average.

3 — You sell the average early and don't restock, so the average guy is out of luck when you've sold out.

4 — If one needs a typical item or size, you didn't stock it and he's out of luck, too.

All I want to do is to spend in Midland the money we make in Midland. Will you help me?

Take time to help

To The Editor:

This is on the family of an alcoholic. Please if you have a friend or relative with an alcoholic in the family, don't avoid them or stop dropping by for a visit or a cup of coffee. We live with someone you can never discuss anything with, and have to watch this self-destruction day by day by day.

Sometimes we get so lonely it's hard to think of getting up and facing another day. We so desperately need a word of encouragement. Someone to say we care. It's an every minute battle to try to hang on to our sanity, plus the many extra burdens we have to carry. Many days we feel if tears would just come it would help a little.

If you know someone like this, reach out a helping hand, ask them over for a cup of coffee, give them a call.

Please — we need your help.

Why difference?

To The Editor:

I am confused. I understand by reading your paper that Texas Electric Service Company is going to ask for a 24 per cent increase in rates. Ostensibly this increase is to enable the company to convert their plants to fuels other than oil or gas as well as to finance additional power generating facilities.

My confusion is this: Why does the electric company have to have an enormous increase for such activities when other businesses, including your newspaper, borrow from the banks to increase capacity and change operational methods and repay the loans from future income, rather than ask for intolerable increases. Why can't the electric company operate like the rest of us?

If an increase is granted, would it be rescinded when these changes are complete?

For the dormant

To The Editor:

Re: Mad as Hell!

What we need in this country is a couple of sports stations — stations that have only sports 24 hours a day so all the other stations can be free of them. Then nothing could interfere with a sports event. Then all the donothings, those who enjoy spending hours and hours on their duffs watching others having fun and keeping their bodies fit, can waller seven days and nights in their dormant world.

If we had fewer of these duffers in the world and more red blooded people with healthy minds and bodies, this tax situation would have been under control by this time. Thank goodness there ar enough live, thinking, interested, active, intelligent and cougrageous people that have pride, faith, and hope that our great country can be cured and rid of the spendthrift politicians that think we are all stupid and feeble-minded.

Thank goodness for Proposition 13. However, I know the politicians are not getting the true message. Now that the taxes are to be cut and less money is available, the main things to keep and preserve are the garbage collectors, the police department, the fire department, and the teachers. These are vital to each and every one no matter what position he holds in life, no matter how much money or how little he has. Start the cutting from the top down and not the bottom-up.

To The Editor:

The Associated Press story datelined Saturday, June 17, 1978, from Abilene, Texas, stating that boxes near Abilene Christian University voted 85 percent for unrestricted liquor sales in Abilene was completely in error. Our boxes were 85 percent against unrestricted sales and not 85 percent for, as AP reported.

Inasmuch as the position of Abilene Christian's friends and supporters has always been against liquor sales, I would appreciate your personal attention to running this as a news item or as a Letter to the Editor.

Control your cat

To The Editor:

A recent column by Ed Todd described the loss of a pet cat. The owner of the cat mentioned that she had allowed it to roam free, not wishing, as Mr. Todd described it, to limit the cat's independent nature.

Although there is a city ordinance prohibiting the free roaming of dogs, there is none limiting the travels of cats, and the Midland SPCA is of the opinion that comments such as those expressed in Mr. Todd's column might lead cat owners to believe that it is acceptable and desirable to allow cats to roam free.

This, of course, is certainly not the case, as may be seen by the large number of cats and kittens run over, and by the continuing complaints concerning noise produced by nocturnal cat activity.

It is very much in the interest of sound pet ownership for cat owners to contain their pets, just as dog owners are required by law to contain their animals. The Midland SPCA strongly advises all cat owners to have their pets neutered or spayed in order to reduce the tendency of the cat to want to roam.

The Midland SPCA wishes to thank The Reporter-Telegram for its assistance in locating suitable owners for cats. The "Pet of the Week" pictorial feature run weekly in the newspaper has been an outstanding success. Without exception, every pet featured as "Pet of the Week" has been adopted.

On the ball

To The Editor:

On June 5, 1978, we called the Midland police and ambulance service to transport Julia Wesson from her apartment at Hillcrest Manor to Midland Memorial Hospital.

We were all impressed by the three men who answered our call. They were very efficient and very concerned about the comfort of the 86-year-old lady.

We would like to commend them for a job very well done.

To The Editor:

This letter is in regard to the L Street article in the June 14 issue of The Midland Reporter-Telegram. As a former journalism student at Lee High School, I do not feel that this story presented a fair picture of the average teen-ager. The story mentions a spokesman for the teens at the hearing, yet there were no quotes of anything this spokesman said. There were only about three sentences which even presented the teen-agers' point of view, while the rest of the article consisted of quotes from L Street occupants, who condemned all teen-agers for driving down "their" street.

Admittedly, there is little demand for the teen-agers' point of view; many people in Midland have already decided that all teen-agers are vandals and criminals, and shouldn't be allowed on the streets. Personally, I don't really appreciate being called a vandal and criminal. Perhaps I would feel differently if I had done something wrong, instead of being labeled a public menace just because of my age.

A small group of culprits has been allowed to give all teen-agers a bad reputation; so bad that we can't even drive down a public street without being pulled over by the police. This happened to me when I was merely driving down L as the shortest route to Golf Course Street. My only crime was that I was a teen-ager, and happened to be driving a sports car. I was not speeding, nor was the car a loud one. The officer informed me that there had been complaints about "those kind of cars" driving down the street. Does this mean that all citizens have the right to complain that they don't like the kind of cars that are driving down their streets?

I realize that L Street residents have had a lot of damage done to their property, and I don't intend to ignore that fact. However, I'm tired of taking the blame and punishment for something that I did not do. L Street has now been so highly publicized that every teen will go there now, if only to see what all the fuss is about. It will be very hard to keep all teens off this street, and the same group of vandals will probably keep coming back. Even if the teen-agers were to stop going there, that is no indication that the vandals would also.

There are other incidents of vandalism in Midland besides those on L, but these have been virtually ignored, probably because the teens do not drive on that street as often.

As an example, I am acquainted with residents living north of Midland who repeatedly have their mailboxes knocked down, street signs stolen, and other criminal mischief of that nature. One resident there said that her mailboxes have been run down a total of 26 times. Yet this area has not been given the same coverage as L Street, even though the vandalism problem may be as bad. Possibly it is the same group of vandals, but there are not a lot of teens in that area to put the blame on.

In closing, there is no place a teen-ager can go without being accused of something, whether the teen is guilty or not. I don't know a solution to this problem, but I do know that the solution is not to take it for granted that everyone in this age group is just out looking for a chance to get into trouble.

Street needed

To The Editor:

The Reporter-Telegram reports the city and the county are fixing to block off the 200 block of North Baird Street so the county can build an annex.

As a 27-year resident of Midland and watching, approving and voting for many desirable things, I wish to give my opinion that the proposal to block this street, which leads directly to the post office (Federal Building), for any purpose is very foolish.

I use this street nearly every day to go to and/or from the post office and/or other government offices. Already there exists a big — and I mean big — problem. Closing off Baird would aggravate it substantially. I think hundreds of fellow citizens would agree with me on this.

Also, I believe blocking off the street would place a permanent, artificial barrier in the way for further expansion and commercial improvement of the entire surrounding area.

If the planned city-county agreement is already made in private, then I would suggest that public discussions with the citizens of Midland be held for a thorough airing of the many problems which would arise from closing the street. We already have Proposition 13 to ponder on and both the city and county officials should think seriously and intelligently before offering any new items to the voters for approval. This street matter, of course, doesn't require any voter's approval.

'Nothing to do'

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to commend the Midland City Council for its intelligent solution to the L Street problem. Our City Council, elected by the majority to serve the majority, has chosen to inconvenience the hundreds of people who use L Street to silence a few dozen home owners in the area.

Suppose that all of those hundreds of normally apathetic people, most of whom will be able to vote in the next election, decide to remember who represents them and who doesn't.

Actually, by placing four-way stops instead of the present two-way and by lowering the speed limit, the so-called vandals of L will find it much easier to see and stop friends along the way.

Of course, if they wanted to put four-way stops somewhere useful, why not at the corner of Wadley and Big Spring Streets, or are they waiting for another Mack truck to hit another school bus?

Another solution would be to build an alternative to L Street, but if they are going to get uptight about underage drinking they are going to have a lot of police cars cruising, but nobody else.

As it is, the teens have nothing left to do but move to another street until they're forced to move elsewhere. Before closing I'd like to give a special thanks to Mr. Mike Farris; you are cordially invited to join us on I Street.

Concerned Cruisers

Comedian Shelley Berman and actress Mary Hennessy share the spotlight, and the responsibility, in "I'm Herbert," a mirthful vignette in "You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running," currently onstage at The Mansion dinner theater.

Berman shows much acting skill

Everybody knows that Shelley Berman is a splendid standup comedian — the kind who more often than not sits on a tall stool in front of the microphone and regales an audience with his own special brand of wit and wisdom.

But what most people don't know (I, for one, certainly didn't) is that Berman also is a skilled comic actor, fully as adroit and at ease in that genre as he is in cabaret comedy.

A review

Berman's accomplished acting is readily apparent in "You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running," the current attraction at The Mansion dinner theater between Midland and Odessa, in which he is the star performer.

Aided and abetted by a remarkably good cast (Mary Hennessy, C.E. Pogue, Mort Sertner and Patsy Allen), "You Know I Can't Hear You" emerges as a quality production. It's not the wackiest or funniest show to hit The Mansion's stage in the last year-and-a-half (because it's not slapstick) but it is highly amusing and a well-put-together show. The Mansion's Enid Holm directed it. "You Know I Can't Hear You" is not just a play, but a collection of one-acts — playlets, you might call them — created by dramatist Robert Anderson. In its original version, it contains four vignettes, but in The Mansion's staging, only three are presented. And that's just fine with me, because the fourth playlet is, to my way of thinking, tasteless and boring — I don't miss it at all.

In the first vignette, "The Shock of Recognition," Berman portrays an unemployed actor who apparently is ready to go to any length to land a stage job. Others in the humorous sequence are C.E. Pogue as a playwright, Mort Sertner as a theatrical producer and Patsy Allen as a secretary.

The second interlude revolves around Berman and actress Mary Hennessy as a couple, long married, shopping for twin beds. In this, Berman displays another, more subtle facet of his acting talent, and Miss Hennessy gives a good portrayal of the wife. Patsy Allen is excellent as Jill, a waif-like young woman who brings the couple's slowly-eroding marriage into sharper focus. C.E. Pogue is seen as the store salesman in this vignette, titled "The Footsteps of Doves."

The third vignette, "I'm Herbert," shows yet another side of Berman as actor, and he is aided in the skit by a very skilled characterization provided by Miss Hennessy. The two portray an aged couple in their rocking chairs, neither of whom can remember very clearly who their earlier marriage partners were, or in what sequence. It's a toughie for actors, this vignette, because it's a long string of one-liners and unrelated throw-aways, without much of the traditional give-and-take dialogue. But the actors provide first-rate characterizations and the interlude is truly amusing, sometimes wildly funny. Berman and Hennessy complement each other very well in this funny-sad treatise on old age and forgetfulness. Fortunately, it's more "laugh with us" than it is "laugh at us," and that's good.

"You Know I Can't Hear You" will play through July 16 at The Mansion. Sunday matinees begin at 2:30, followed by supper for the audience, and weeknight performances begin at 8:30, preceded by dinner between 6:30 and 8. Table reservations for all performances may be made by telephoning the theater at 563-1133 or 367-8658.

Fine acting, simple staging together make play moving

Fine acting and simple, thoughtful staging combine to make "I Never Sang For My Father" a rather moving theatrical experience.

It is poignant and engrossing, this Robert Anderson drama which opened Friday night at Theatre Midland as Midland Community Theatre's fourth major production of its current season.

A review

It also can be painful on occasion, bringing into fresh focus as it does the regret and contrition that most of us feel for not having always been as loving or as understanding toward aging parents as we might have been, or should have been — or as those parents would have liked us to be.

Anderson's drama is not a preachment for filial duty or devotion but the story of one family caught up in the age-old generation gap between children and parents — the void that regrettably does not miraculously close as the years go by. The drama is sad, but it is not a deliberate tearjerker (although certainly there are places in it that provoke tears), and Anderson has wisely steered away from melodramatic flamboyance, although there are indeed melodramatic moments in the play.

The drama centers around a 40-year-old man who keeps trying desperately to be a dutiful son to his octogenarian father, only to be defeated time and again by the old man's self-centered petulance. The old man is not a villain, not cruel or evil in the truest sense, so much as he is merely selfish and a bully — and a crashing bore.

Don Liscum is in the role of the son who, in the father's final years, cuts and runs for his life, before he is consumed. Filled with guilt following the old man's death, he points out that "death ends a life, but it does not end a relationship," and his anguish at never having sung for his father — that is, never having been able to give the parent the love he feels he should have — runs deep.

Veteran Midland Community Theatre actor Bill Shaner is the other pivotal player in the drama — the crusty old father — and he and Liscum provide excellent characterizations of a father and son who never really understood each other.

Pat Griffith as the old man's devoted and endlessly-forgiving mate, whose death creates fresh problems for father and son, is delightful in her characterization of wife and mother — and the death of this steadying force in the household is as much desolation for us as for the stage family. Shirley Ireland comes on strong and convincingly as the daughter of the household who years before had been banished by her father for marrying a Jew. (It is she who urges her brother to flee before the selfish old parent's endless demands on him ruin his life.)

Other players in various of the sequences and flashbacks in the drama include Eric Barker, Jane Ward, Rosa Lee Cook, J.H. "Blondy" Huggins, Harold W. Shaner Sr., and Bob Cooke. The production has been staged and directed by MCT managing director Rick Schiller.

The simple, single set for "I Never Sang" is interesting and workable, furnished with modular pieces that serve a variety of purposes. The simplicity of the staging is reminiscent of the traditional no-set kind of set used for "Our Town" productions. It heightens the drama of the piece.

"I Never Sang" has six more performances — Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights this week, a matinee next Sunday and final presentations on July 7 and 8. Seat reservations are available through the Theatre Midland box office, 682-4111.

SFO to present comedy as second production

SANTA FE, N.M. — A sparkling operatic comedy, "Count Ory," by Giaoccino Rossini, will be the second production of the season at the Santa Fe Opera.

"Count Ory" will have its first performance here on July 8, following the opening of the SFO season on July 5 with a presentation of Puccini's famous "Tosca." A second "Tosca" performance will be given July 7.

"Count Ory" was Rossini's next-to-last opera, written in 1828 for the Paris Opera. The libretto by Scribe is based on a Picardy ballad which revolves around the title character, the young Count Ory, who has a strong resemblance to Don Juan in his penchant for chasing any and all women. "Count Ory" ranks among Rossini's comic masterpieces, rivalling his "Barber of Seville" in sheer lyricism. Its score is witty and sophisticated and contains all the composer's famous trademarks — beautifully-controlled crescendi, lovely ensemble passages and an abundance of coloratura singing. It was a very popular opera in its time, holding the stage in Paris for some 20 years, and it was much admired by both Franz Liszt and Hector Berlioz.

The opera was revived about eight years ago at London's Sadler's Wells (now the English National Opera) and was received with great enthusiasm. Richard Gaddes, the Santa Fe Opera's artistic administrator, remembered the successful British production and mounted a production at his Opera Theatre of St. Louis last year, which also was well-received. The upcoming Santa Fe Opera production will utilize the St. Louis Opera sets, which will be augmented by a large turntable on the Santa Fe stage.

"The turntable is a focal point," says Gaddes, "and it is used in the actual direction of the opera. The singers will 'freeze' at the end of a scene and revolve away while a different side of the set comes around to provide the scenery for the next scene. The opera takes place during the Middle Ages and the sets, props and costumes have a fairy-tale, storybook look," Gaddes points out.

Santa Fe's production will have John Aler singing the title role, while the role of the Countess Adele will be shared by sopranos Elizabeth Hynes and Noelle Rogers.

Stadium setting planned at Casa

FORT WORTH — Casa Manana will become a simulated version of Arlington Stadium for the next two weeks with the Monday night opening of "Damn Yankees."

The robust musical comedy, one of the major hits of the 1950s on Broadway, brings famous actor Van Johnson to Casa's round stage for performances through July 8.

Johnson, the superstar of movies, TV and stage, will be in his second Casa Manana engagement. He played the con-man, Prof. Harold Hill, in Casa's production of "The Music Man" during the 1975 summer season here and his return is by overwhelming demand of Casa audiences.

The entertaining musical is the first play or musical comedy concerned with baseball to become a hit and break theatrical records in its original New York version. The Casa Manana version will involve the Texas Rangers in place of the Washington Senators, says director Jack Bunch. The Rangers organization has loaned uniforms and equipment to Casa to establish authenticity, and the real Ranger players and their families will be special guests at Monday's opening performance. During the second week of the show, the New York Yankees will be playing at Arlington Stadium.

"Damn Yankees" is the amusing tale of a middle-aged baseball fan (played by Roy Broadway in the Casa Manana production) who, in exasperation over the consistently poor record established by his favorite team, vows he'd give his soul if he could only get in there and win some games for his team.

In a flash, the overweight, middle-aged citizen becomes not only youthful and athletic, but a sensational ball-player. The part of the transformed baseball buff will be played by Tom McKinney, a Texan now living in Los Angeles who has a long list of credits in musicals, opera and TV.

Much of the appeal of "Damn Yankees" comes from the fact that the young athlete misses the home and wife he left behind in favor of baseball glory. To foreclose the mortgage on the fellow's soul, the Devil calls in his assistant, a phenomenally-attractive expert at home-wrecking named Lola, who will be portrayed by pretty Linda Kaye Henning. Miss Henning, who is both a TV and a stage personality, played Betty Jo on the popular "Petticoat Junction" television series for seven years.

Two of the best-known songs in "Damn Yankees" are "Whatever Lola Wants," the seductive siren-song to be sung and danced by Miss Henning, and "You Gotta Have Heart," the theme-song of the baseball players.

"Damn Yankees," based on a novel by Douglass Wallop titled "The Year the Yankees Lost the Pennant," was adapted by George Abbott. Music and lyrics are by Richard Adler and Jerry Ross, who also created the songs for "The Pajama Game."

Other members of the Casa Manana cast include Helena Humann, Joyce Ingle, Gay Kruger, Peter Ray, Christopher Allen, Michael Bailey, George Stephens, Sheryll Fager-Jones and Charles Ballinger. The Ranger team members will be portrayed by Richard Laster, Sam Scheffler, Francesco Spera, Tyrone Clemons, Tim Rhodes, Buddy Crutchfield, Michael Bailey, Terry Runnels, Ron Abshire, Michael Capes, General Hambrick and Kenneth Slaughter.

"Damn Yankees" will have performances at 8:15 p.m. Monday through Saturday through July 8, in addition to Saturday matinees at 2 p.m. Seating for all performances may be reserved through the Casa Manana box office, 817-332-6221, or at numerous ticket outlets in the Fort Worth-Dallas metroplex.

Superstar Van Johnson, as the Devil, controls the situation at hand as the seductive Lola, played by Linda Kay Henning, tries some friendly persuasion on Texas Ranger super-hitter Joe Hardy, played by Thomas McKinney. The three are the stars of the robust musical comedy, "Damn Yankees," which opens Monday night at Fort Worth's Casa Manana. The show will run through July 8 at the well-known theater-in-the-round.

Mummers group relocating for melodramatic summer

Midland's Summer Mummers will launch their 30th season Friday night in a new location— — the new American Legion Hall on Air Park Drive.

Back for another season are the standard features of Mummers melodramas — the true-blue hero and red-blooded sidekick, the pure young heroine and her militant duenna, the black-hearted villain and assorted assistants-in-evil, plus a host of colorful supporting players.

This year's opus is "Titillation on the Tigris," or "Hanky Panky in the Harem," and as the titles suggest is a tale of Middle Eastern intrigue. The melodrama is from the pen of William S. Davis who has supplied the Mummers with many of their most popular "river" shows of past seasons.

Heading the cast are the hero, Steadfast Starbuck, and heroine, Pamela Purepants. Joining them are such intriguing characters as Seaweed Sam, Bidet de Lance, Miss Philomena Fenway-Park, Osmond Oilslick, Hassan ben Kist, Cyrus Fatchance, Captain Conrad Contagious, Ali Billi Booboo and Shish Ka Bob. And certainly not least are Fatima, proprietress of the infamous cabaret, "Hashish House," and dancing girls Nympho Tigris and Mania Euphrates.

Mummers shows will be presented Friday and Saturday nights weekly through Sept. 2. Thursday night performances also will be offered beginning July 20. Tickets for Friday and Saturday performances will be $4 per person, with tickets for Thursday shows to be priced $3. Tables seating four to 10 people are priced $5 and $6, depending on location.

Ticket and table reservations for all performances are now being accepted through Midland Community Theatre's box office. The telephone number is 682-4111.

Shakespeare fest begun

ODESSA — The Globe of the Great Southwest's 10th annual Shakespeare Festival is under way.

The first matinee performance of "Othello" will be offered at 2:30 p.m. today, with reserved seat tickets to be for sale at the box office in advance of show time. Wednesday through Saturday performances this week will begin at 8.

The second production of the festival season is Shakespeare's "Love's Labour's Lost." The comedy will enter the festival repertory on July 7.

Museum of Southwest opens diverse summer art exhibition

Items from the permanent collections of Midland's Museum of the Southwest make up a new summertime show at the museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Included in the exhibition are paintings, graphics, drawings, sculpture, Indian rugs and potterypieces. A special section of the display is devoted to prints of works by contemporary artist Merritt Mauzey.

The museum will be open to visitors between 2 and 5 p.m. today. Weekday hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission to the public is free at all times.

Big Bend shows to open season

ALPINE — The Theatre of the Big Bend initiates its 13th summer season this coming weekend.

The opening production is an old-time melodrama, "Because Their Hearts Were Pure," or "The Secret of the Mine." The opus was written by Morland Cary, author of "Love Rides the Rails."

The second production of the season enters the repertory on July 4. It is the light-hearted musical, "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown," featuring the entire "Peanuts" gang.

Also on tap for presentation during the season are performances of Neil Simon's comedy, "God's Favorite," an updating of the Biblical story of Job, and Robert Anderson's "You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running," a warmhearted quartet of humorous one-acts. The four productions will alternate in performance during the season which continues weekly through July and into August.

Theatre of the Big Bend is sponsored by Sul Ross State University, and all performances are given at the Kokernot Lodge outdoor theater located on the northeast outskirts of Alpine. Performances begin at sundown.

Complaint decision may have saved U.S. billions

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The Supreme Court's decision on a trade complaint against Japanese imports may have averted price increases in the United States amounting to billions of dollars.

According to the Commerce Department's estimates, some $50 billion worth of imports — or about half of the current annual volume — comes from countries which exempt their exports from indirect sales or value-added taxes.

Zenith Radio Corp., in a suit it lost this past week, argued that Japanese exporters of radios, televisions and other electronic goods were receiving an unfair subsidy from the Japanese government because the exports were exempt from a Japanese commodity tax.

But the court rejected the U.S. manufacturer's plea that duties equal to the tax break should be imposed by the U.S. Treasury.

The amount at stake in the Zenith case was minor compared to the billions in additional duties which might have been imposed if a precedent meant a new policy on all goods from Canada, German, France and other countries with a similar tax breaks.

Treasury officials argued successfully that such exemptions from taxes in Japan didn't result in an unfair advantage because the products were still subject to the same state sales tax that U.S. products are. If Japan didn't rebate the commodity tax to exporters, the Treasury argued, the goods would be subject to double taxation.

The court's unanimous decision in the Zenith case was considered significant both for the electronics industry and for steel companies who have similar complaints in litigation.

But it does not spell the end to a long-standing debate over government subsidies to export products and how they effect trade.

The question is a major focus of talks in Geneva aimed at rewriting sections of an international trade law, The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Under GATT rules, the definition of what is a subsidy, subject to countervailing duties by the importing country, is "a grey area" said Peter Kenen, a professor of international finance at Princeton University.

The result has been a scramble of interpretations and some bitter negotiations on what and how rules should apply.

The process is complicated by the fact that in many countries the ties between government and industry are far closer than in this country.

The United States' trade statute governing the Zenith case, for instance, allows the U.S. Treasury to levy an equal counterveiling duty when any foreign government pays a "bounty or grant" to an exporting manufacturer.

The U.S. steel industry, which has blamed lagging sales on increased imports of foreign steel in the past few years, complains that governments in Japan and Europe don't necessarily pay "bounties." But they argue that foreign governments are so integrally involved in their steel industries that they can afford to produce steel at profit levels which would be impossible for a private U.S. company.

In other business developments this past week:

—President Carter renewed his threat to raise oil prices through administrative action if Congress doesn't act on his proposed tax on crude oil. Although the President didn't set a deadline, he told Congressmen that he was considering making such a proposal a formal pledge at an international summit in Bonn July 16.

Administration officials say Carter isn't eager to impose import fees but is concerned that his energy tax proposal has been stalled too long in Congress. The president wants to raise oil prices in an effort to reduce energy consumption, which international leaders see as crucial to restoring the United States balance of trade position and combating inflation.

—LTV Corp. and financially troubled Lykes Corp. were given federal approval to merge in a ruling by the Justice Department. Attorney General Griffin Bell rejected advice from his antitrust staff and said the merger would be acceptable because Lykes is a failing company that can be exempted from antitrust laws. If stockholders also approve the merger, the combined operations would create the third or fourth largest steel company in the nation.

LTV's subsidiary, Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., is the nation's seventh largest steel producer. And Lyke's subsidary, Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., is the eighth.

—A standby gasoline rationing plan for use in a national emergency was announced by the White House. Energy Secretary James Schlesinger said it was unlikely the program will have to be used. It would ration gasoline on the basis of motor vehicle registration, with buses and trucks getting more gasoline than passenger cars.

Just how much gasoline someone would get depends on how serious the shortage. But Schlesinger said a repeat of the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo would result in a ration of about two gallons of gasoline per day for every vehicle in the nation.

—Kennecott Copper Corp. and Curtiss-Wright continued to fight for control of the nation's largest copper company. At a reconvened annual meeting to announce results of the May 2 vote, Kennecott declared its incumbent board had been re-elected by a margin of 1.6 million votes. But Curtiss-Wright, a minority shareholder which nominated a rival slate of Kennecott directors, challenged the election inspector's report and is seeking a new election.

—Proposed labor law revisions were sent back to committee, after a 19-day Senate filibuster led by Republicans. Although supporters of the measure declared the bill would be back and was not dead, the move was seen as a major setback for the Carter administration and labor leaders who support it.

The bill calls for stiffer penalties against labor law violators and would give unions additional leverage in drives to organize workers.

Desert could breed oil tycoons

By RAY KIPP
Copley News Service

Nuts from jojoba (Pronounced ho-ho-ba) plant, a scrubby-looking desert shrub native to Southern California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Mexico, are being billed as one of the answers to America' dependence on foreign oil and the savior of the sperm whale.

The odorless liquid wax squeezed from the dark brown peanut-sized nuts has a variety of cosmetic, pharmaceutical, manufacturing and lubrication uses.

Its quality is considered as good as or better than the oil taken from the sperm whale, the leviathan being hunted to nar extinction by Japan and other countries although the United States banned their kiling in 1970.

Jojoba's quality lends itself to the making of penicillin, anti-viral uses, coating for pills, cosmetics and skincare creams, jet engine lubricants, floor waxes, motor and transmission oils and a variety of other uses, including its natural appetite-retarding traits as a potential diet aid.

Jojoba's value—nuts well for $4 to $6 a pound and a galon of pure oil can command $70 to $90 lends itself to a potential multimillion-dllar industry for those who get in on the ground floor. So this desert plant with its greeen, leathery leaves and branches which grow four to eight feet high, which has grown virtually unnoticed for centuries, could be the world's new oil well.

It is a resilient plant, requiring only four or five inches of rain a year to survive and absoring temperatures of 115 degrees or more. Its only enemies are frost, which can kill the plant, and cows, deer, gopers and other animals which find the plant appetizing.

Indians of Western reservations already harvest wild jojoba plants. Commercial development began following several years of research by Arizona and California universities.

Gov. Jerry Brown, who hs promoted jojoba's development in speeces around California and the naion, has backed up his interest by helping obtain a $669,000 federal grant to finance projects on California Indian reservations.

A nimber of farmers, adventurers and entrepreneurs have established plots of one, five, 10 and more acres with seedlings that will take up to four years or more to begin producing nuts, and up to 10 years or more to begin producing nuts, and up to 10 years to reach full maturity.

A few companies now provide seedlings—at from 20 cents to $1.50 each cdpending on volumn to people wanting to try their hand at growing a natural oil resource.

Foreign countries with climates that might support jojoba, such as Israel, Australia, Egypt and Costa Rica, are expressing interest in the plant.

Researchers say there is little doubt jojoba is a crop of the future, but some also express a need for proceeding with deliberate study.

'Transforming a wild plant into cultivaion takes a lot of work and time," said Dr. Lemoyne Hogan, University of Arizona horticulturist. "We've got to detemine effects of planting certain types of the jojoba in different climates, yield variations an other things."

Hogan said the oil commands premium prices now and is primarily used for cosmetics.

"When we get production up then the price will go down and it will be economical for a number of other uses," Hogan said.

"But with a price drop, there will be a lot less profit for those with only a small amount of plants."

Hogan said nut production varies widely from young plants (four years old) producing only a pound or two, and sometimes none at all, to adult trees producing five or 10 pounds.

Nuts, which mature once a year, vary in size and productivity because of climate differences, and studies are under way to determine which ones do best in different climates.

But Hogan agrees with Dr. Wade Saleeb, a University of California at Riverside researcher, that jojoba is a money maker for those hwo hit it big.

"When we get into commercial production, then we can attract the lubricant, wax and food industries," Saleeb siad. He works with Dr. Demetrios Yermanos, considered on e of the leading authoritie on jojoba.

"We have th only plant that has a market waiting for it to get into production," Saleeb siad.

However, he estimated it will be several years before jojoba has the necessary commercial developments of the hundreds of thousands of acres which will make it economicaly feasible to replace sperm whale oil.

Membership in NAR continues to increase

CHICAGO—Membership in the National Association of Realtors, alreadythe world's largest professional and trade organization, continues to rise at a double-digit annual rate.

The increase is attributed by the association's president, Tom Grant Jr., to a recognition of continuing value that membership offers.

During the first five months of the ear, membership increased 32,518 to a new high of 602,988, Grant said.

The increasse represents a 5.7 percent hike for the five-month period, and 12.35 percent on an annual basis.

In 1977, the National Association of Realtors' membership increased by 89,423, or 18.4 percent over 1976.

Grant noted that members have opportunities for improving knowledge of the field "and for honing tools for serving persons interested in residential sales and purchases, real estate investments, industrial and commercial properties."

He added that the association offers courses and seminars throughout the nation, and that almost 30,000 persons annually take at least one course. Professional designations also may be earned through the association's nine affiliate groups, he added.

There are other benefits from membership, ones not as readily apparent," Grant said. "Each member agrees to abide by a strict code of ethics. Thus, the public should have considerable confidence in members."

Although the association's 602,988members represent only slighlty more than a third of all agents, Realtors account for almost 90 percent of all transactions, Grant pointed out.

As of May 31, the top 10 states in total membership were: California, 122,491; Texas, 42,490; Florida, 41,509; Ohio, 40,592; Illinois, 26,345; Michigan, 25,243; New HYork 18,956; Virginia, 16,182; Pennsylvania, 15,476, and Maryland, 15,411.

Top states for percentage increase during the first five months swere Alaska, 12.05 percent; Nevada, 11.96 percent; Arkansas, 11.1 percent, Georgia, 10.87 percent, and Vermont, 10.7 percent.

San Fernando Valley is followed by San Jose, Calif., with 7,302; Houston with 6,972; Greater Dallas, 6,535; Cleveland, 6,237, and Northern Virginia, 5,646.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Interim construction loan limit may change

BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—New regulations, including one to extend the time limit for interim construction loans from 24 to 36 months, are being considered by the Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission.

At a recent meeting, the section approved regulations on supervisory mergers, which had been adopted earlier as emergency rules, S&L Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff reports.

The section also is looking at two other possible new regulations, one to make it clear that payment of dividends is part of the operating expense of a savings and loan association, and a second to assure that an association applying for a branch office is in compliance with new loss reserves requirements of the Savings and Loan Department.

Also discussed--but no acted on--by the section was removing the requirement for "equal payments" on amortization of loans, to allow greater flexibility in lending.

But Vandygriff says that such an action "might encourage 'ballon' payments for loans..and that's one of the things we've tried to discourage."

Vandygriff, incidentatlly, was elected president of the National Association of State Savings and Loan Supervisors at the group's 39th annual convention in Scottsdale, Ariz., earlier this month.

State Board of Insurance members and their staff are to huddle at 10 a.m. July 6 to discuss rate and rules changes proposed back in February at the annual fire and allied lines rate hearing.

Chairman Hugh Yantis says he had hoped to have a meeting earlier, but said problems with vacation schedules had resulted in delays in getting key personnal together all at once.

Yantis reports insurance industry representatives want another opportunity to convice him he is 'wrong' on position that no increase in homeowners rates is needed.

As yet, it appears undecided as to whether additional testimony will be taken at the July 6 session.

The Texas Insurance Advisory Association has asked for an average overall increase in rates for fire and allied lines of 13 percent, and for an average increase of 14.1 percent for homeowners.

SBI staff members have proposed 11.4 and 13.1 percent respectively.

Texas Bankers Association has issued a second call to its members for funds to support its lawsuit against Government Employees Credit Union of San Antonio over share drafts.

TBA reports that out of its membership of 1,348 commercial banks, all but 483 have responded, with some 70 percent of its goal reached.

That goal, TBA says, is around $100,000.

Member banks are being urged to give "immediate attention" to contributing to the fund for the lawsuit on what "important banking industry question."

TBA, University National Bank and Central Park Bank (both of San Antonio) filed suit against the credit union in 131st District Court this spring, alleging the use of share drafts constitutes engaging in banking and that the credit union is doing so at more than one location, in violation of the Texas Constitutuion.

That suit also alleges that the share draft program amounts to a deceptive trade practice and constitutes unfair and illegal competition with "duly authorized bands."

No date apparently has been set to hear the case.

business beattitudes

by Bill Beattie

We could all profit from the advice of William James: "The first thing to learn in intercourse with others is non-interference with their own particular ways of being happy, provided those ways do not assume to interfere by violence with ours."

Violence is generally negative in content. It is against some person or thing. It does not offer constructive alternatives and is not conducive to creating the thoughtful atmosphere where positive answers may be formulated.

Shakespeare states, "Violent fires soon burn out themselves, small showers last long; but sudden storms are short; he tires betimes that spurs too fast." Violence often defeats its own ends.

Where we cannot drive we can always persuade. A gentle word, a kind smile can work wonders and accomplish miracles. There is a secret pride in almost every human heart that revolts at tyranny. We may order and drive an individual or group, but we cannot make them like and respect us.

Abraham Lincoln was President of the United States during one of its most trying and violent times. The following quote of Mr. Lincoln bears repeating today. "The strongest bond of human sympathy, outside the family relation, should be one uniting all working people, of all nations, and tongues, and kindreds. Nor should this lead us to a war upon property, or the owners of property. Property is the fruit of labor; property is desirable; is a positive good in the world. That some should be rich shows that others may become rich and, hence, is just encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him labor diligently and build one for himself, thus, by example, assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built."

VIOLENCE is the business of barbarians.

Poster child 'part of reason'

BY GEORGE ESPER

SEABROOK, N.H. (AP) — Bree Inoue is one of the several thousand people gathered this weekend for a protest against the construction of the Seabrook nuclear power plant. She is also the youngest.

Eight-month-old Bree, her big brown eyes popping out at you, is the poster girl of the Clamshell Alliance, the anti-nuclear organization.

A year ago, her mother, Berri Inoue, three months pregnant with Bree, was one of 1,414 anti-nuclear demonstrators arrested for occupying the Seabrook site.

Mrs. Inoue, 27, of nearby Newmarket, returned this weekend carrying Bree in a backpack covered with the poster of the two headlined: "Do you know what plutonium is?"

"We've been doing this a few years," said Mrs. Inoue, pointing to her husband, Naoto Inoue.

"I take her every place," Mrs. Inoue said. "Part of the reason we are fighting is for our kids. They might as well be a part of it, too. For me, the main concern is the nuclear waste. There's no way to store it or get rid of it.

"We are paying so much money for it now. My power bill went up 17 percent. It just isn't that practical. If they put as much money into solar energy, they could supply everybody. We heat our home with wood and solar energy. You have to educate the people."

Mrs. Inoue said she had no fears for Bree's safety because the alliance, state officials and Public Service Co. of New Hampshire agreed on allowing a legal rally on an 18-acre site adjacent to the power plant.

New treaty with U.S. sought by Phillipines

Agence France-Presse

MANILA — The Philippines hopes to conclude by the end of this year negotiations on a new treaty for military bases and an economic agreement with the United States, President Ferdinand Marcos said.

In a Foreign Ministry Day speech this weekend, Marcos said the Philippines must also accelerate the pace of negotiations with Japan on a new trade treaty and added that this, together with the economic accord with the United States, should strengthen the Philippine economy.

Marcos last month accused the United States of foot-dragging on the talks to revise a bilateral treaty governing American use of Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Navy Base near Manila. The talks began three years ago.

Addressing some 500 foreign office officials and employees and foreign diplomats at the Malacanang Palace Friday evening, Marcos said, however, that "we hope to conclude this year" the negotiations not only on the bases treaty but also on a new economic agreement to replace the lapsed Laurel-Langley treaty.

Traditional fears again surfacing

By WILLIAM GLASGALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Only a few weeks ago, higher interest rates were being greeted with unusual enthusiasm on Wall Street.

But traditional fears of tight credit are resurfacing as stock prices have begun to slip.

Rising interest rates traditionally have led to falling stock and bond prices as investors attempt to increase yields on their securities. But this spring, stock prices were rising as interest rates climbed.

The higher rates were said to be good news because they would help check inflation. The rising cost of money in the short-run would be out-weighed by the slowdown in cost-of-living gains, the optimists said.

"Now you throw the same news out and the market falls apart," commented Larry Wachtel at Bache Halsey Stuart Shields.

The interest-rate rise was attributable partly to Federal Reserve action. The Fed, fearful that the nation's money supply during the past 15 months has grown faster than targeted, has been tightening credit to fight inflation.

According to David Jones at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. Inc., that policy would continue. In the past week, the Fed let the key target rate on "Federal funds," the name for loans among banks, move up one-quarter point to 7¾ percent. "They might wait a week or two before considering pushing it up to 8 percent. They're going to let the dust settle a bit," he said.

In addition, the spread between the discount rate — the Fed's charge on short-term "emergency" loans to member banks — and the Federal funds rate has widened to ¾ percent.

"At 7 percent, loans at the 'discount window' are mushrooming. The Fed has become a cheap source of funds, and the Fed doesn't like this," said Jones.

A ¾-point spread "has been a trigger point," and the Fed is likely to consider "another firming mode" to boost borrowing costs, he said.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which gained nearly 120 points between February and mid-June, finished this week at 823.02, down 13.95. The drop came after a 22.26-point decline the week before.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index was off .90 at 53.90 and the American Stock Exchange market value index fell 2.89 to 147.27.

"We've had a lot of damage done in the past week and a half in the market," said Charles Jensen at Merkin & Co. "Each time the stock market went up in the face of higher interest rates there was an attempt to rationalize the move as an answer to actions against inflation. That rationale in the past hardly ever worked, and now we're back where we should be."

But William L. Silber, an economist at New York University's graduate school of business, maintains the market slippage may just be an aberration.

"The public is aware that inflation is bad for stock prices," he said in a report. "If monetary restraint can curtail inflation, then the cost in terms of higher short-term interest rates might very well be discounted."

Of the current situation, Silber said in an interview that "if the Fed is making a really convincing fight against inflation by pushing interest rates up, the outlook should be bullish. But people aren't convinced that the fight against inflation is going all that well."

According to Robert H. Parks at Advest Co., the "demon of inflation is not going to disappear with cyclical drops in economic activity."

RINGING THE BELL

Boley 'built' for rodeo time

Boley Rodeo Rides Again — The Black Experience — As described by bellringer Bob L. Brashear in The Black Oklahoma Eagle: Rain. Seems like it wouldn't be Boley Rodeo time without rain. Yet this year (1978), the sun wasn't out long enough to dry things out. And if you were "into it" it was mud. The town, as usual, filled with folks. Only this year, "urbanization" seemed to be crowding out the Western feel like a bully at a bar. Disco music was everywhere.....

The food, better than ever. Perhaps the heaviness of the air kept the smells down lower, leading one constantly into "just one more" stand. The best open grilled Bratwurst, the smokey savory sultan of sausage, and sauerkraut, plus beans or potato salad, only $1. Next door were raisin pies, apple pies and sweet potato pies, fresh baked, impossible to avoid. And it wouldn't be Boley Rodeo time without sun, sweat and beer. Or in the Bratwurst seller's spot, sweet pink "Champale." A touch of class.

The parade, bigger and better, longer, more vans than ever. More politicans than ever. Who can forget the Gov. Boren convertible without Boren....The crowd kept pressing into the streets, perhaps to get as close as possible to flashy drill teams like the Comanche Park drill team. Urban kids bringing new pride to a place that needs to feel it in a place that is the birthplace of so much.

Boley is "Roots" Oklahoma style. The crowds that were huge to say the least, kept the motorcycles from performing their usual feats of street skill that make over spectator feel like a bull-fighting clown. Horses, more horses than ever. Someone said more than 250. You've got to hand it to the club that makes it all the way from Hobbs, to be here.

The rodeo, opened by the expert horsemanship by the club from Fort Worth, executing split-second, needle-threading timing. Monents of bull-riding and broc-bucking stand out like slow-motion replays in the mind. In the end, the weather won.

With all that barbecue, it makes sense that Boley's newest industry is "Smokaroma"—hottest new item in the industry, revolutionary concept in hickory smoked barbecue preparation. It would warm the heart of Booker T. Washington, who 73 years ago called Boley "the most enterprising, and in many ways, the most interesting of the Negro towns in the United States."

And after as usual, the little town is as busy as Times Square, on New Year's Eve.

Changes, here and there. But going to Boley for the many thousands who come from all over the nation for this festival around Memorial Day each year, is like the Mosiem's pilgrimage to Mecca.

"It's time to retouch the 'Roots', to celebrate a dream that carried to so many places, so faraway. To fill the quiet town for two days of life is like reaffirming to one's self a dream that won't die. A dream that has something to pride of having the Oklahoma sun, the earth, the hope of escaping oppression, the pride of having carved out a tiny place where destiny could be self-determined. A dream of a people to endure much, survive. A celebration of a place to be—Boley, Oklahoma.

Democracy triumphs, but chic it won't be

PARIS (AP) — She is 21. He is 38. She is of straitlaced Catholic upbringing. He is a playboy. She is a princess of Europe's oldest dynasty. He is a commoner.

It is common knowledge that there was quite a row behind the heavy oaken doors of the Monaco royal palace over Caroline's choice. Her father Prince Rainier III and mother Princess Grace, the former movie star Grace Kelly, wished she would pick someone closer to her age and less flamboyant of reputation.

But Caroline, a pretty young woman with a mind of her own, was insistent. And in ceremonies Wednesday and Thursday in the tiny principality nicked into France's Mediterranean coast, Princess Caroline Louise Marguerite Grimaldi will take an additional name: Junot.

Junot, an international financier and a ruggedly handsomé man in the Gallic manner, has bought her a ring with a giant sapphire. But that is as far as extravagance goes in this wedding.

Perhaps reflecting the family's reluctance over the marriage, the ceremonies will be low-keyed compared with the sumptuous wedding of Rainier to Grace Kelly in April 1956.

The palace has even banned aircraft overflights during the ceremonies to prevent photographers from snapping the proceedings from the air.

But the wedding tumult of 26 years ago took its toll on Princess Grace's nerves, and that is one reason the princely couple, who also have a younger son, Albert, and daughter, Stephanie, decided to keep their elder daughter's affair at a low profile.

But the Monaco citizenry was disgruntled. A big wedding meant lots of fun and a boost in tourism, the principality's main source of income. They protested, and Rainier met them halfway, agreeing to a festive reception for his 4,500 citizens and a luncheon for 300 guests, including 47 Monegasques born the same year as Caroline.

To the mild consternation of her parents, she frequents Paris nightclubs and cafes in jeans and T-shirts and consorts happily with commoners like Junot.

This is a radical change for the princess, whose mother's strict Catholic childhood in Philadelphia was legendary. Caroline was educated at a private convent in Monaco, Dames de Ste. Maur, and spent two years of high school under the Victorian discipline of St. Mary's school at Ascot, Britain.

Britain's Prince Charles has turned down an invitation to the wedding, pleading other engagements.

The royalty invited includes the deposed and exiled, like Prince Fuad of Egypt and King Humbert of Italy, and the royalty of Hollywood, like Frank Sinatra, Gregory Peck and Ava Gardner.

Special session up to him, governor asserts

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe has let enthusiastic tax relief advocates know there will be no quickie call of a special session and none at all unless he is convinced it would be successful.

"I would not expect the studies going on will be complete until the latter part of the week," the governor told newsmen Friday night in Houston, after introducing President Carter at a Democratic dinner.

However, Briscoe did not rule out a special 30-day session, which only he can call for a specific purpose.

"I am giving serious consideration to various proposals," Briscoe said in his first official statement on the subject Friday. He added later, in Houston, that "the real advantage of a special session is that they permit pinpointing one or two specific issues and concentrating all the effort on those matters."

Briscoe has had Speaker Bill Clayton and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby in and out of his office almost every day of the past week. He said his staff was working with representatives of Hobby and Clayton to see if "meaningful tax relief could be provided the citizens of Texas and limits placed on future taxes and spending."

The governor's indecision apparently stems from a lack of agreement that reportedly exists among Briscoe's, Hobby's and Clayton's men on the way to approach tax relief — by limiting spending or limiting taxes.

One of the main points of discusion is Clayton's plan for a constitutional amendment that would freeze state and local government spending, except for small inflation increases, and would require a two-thirds vote of the legislature on any new taxes.

Attorney General John Hill, Democratic nominee to take Briscoe's place, also has doubts about tackling Clayton' constitutional change program in a 30-day special session.

Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements said he generally agrees with Clayton's program. However Clements wants a special session to consider another constitution change — one to allow voters to pass legislation by a petition and referendum process such as Proposition 13 in California.

Generally speaking, all factions apparently agree a special session could handle proposals to repeal the 4 percent sales tax on utility bills, to raise the inheritance tax exemptions from $60,000 to $200,000, and provide $5,000 homestead exemptions from local taxes for those 65 years or older.

More complicated, and controversial, plans call for taxing farm and ranch land according to productivity instead of market value and elimination of the 10 cent state property tax used for state college construction.

"I get a quaking feeling in my knees when I think of 181 newly minted Howard Jarvises descending on Austin," said Rep. Chase Untermeyer, R-Houston, in reference to the author of Proposition 13. "If Governor Briscoe wants to keep a session from becoming a 30-day tent meeting, he will have to limit it in very specific terms."

MEN—WOMEN

When you sign up for the Army today, you can also sign up for Europe. It may not be the easiest way to see the world, but it could be the most rewarding.
You'll be there to do a job. You'll soldier. Bivouac in the mud of Grafenwoehr's rainy season, squint into an early August sun in the valley of the Rhine, and fight the chilly January winds of Hohenfels.
And just about the time you wish you had never left the States, you'll be celebrating the Oktoberfest in Munich, eating bratwurst in Frankfurt, or learning the slopes of Garmisch. And all the tough work will have been worth it.

THE NEW BUSINESS OF CHANGING OIL CAN CHANGE YOUR FINANCIAL POSITION.

But now there's Quick Lube.

Quick Lube is a new franchise opportunity that has been conceived to fill the gap created by self-service gasoline retailing.

Quick Lube provides it's customers with an oil change, lubrication, fluid level check, and other services for less than $13.00 and in only 10 minutes.

For additional information on Quick Lube franchise opportunities, owners and/or investors should contact Bill Hilton, at Marketing Innovations, call collect, 1-512-454-4637. Cash requirement, $15,000.

Era of child star returns

By JANET LOWE
Copley News Service

Rodney Allen Rippey ensured himself a bright future by touting hamburgers on television. The Osmond family produces a new kid star every few years. Brooke Shields wows the world by her performance in "Pretty Baby," the story of a juvenile prostitute. The era of the child star is back.

Children on stage and screen are nothing new. They've been with us since long before little Mary Pickford flounced her curls across the silent screen and Ethel Barrymore had her diapers changed from a stage trunk.

Yet for several reasons, we're forced to look at today's young media sensations in a different way. In the first place, behind almost every child star there is a backstage parent, most likely a mother. In past generations, most stage mothers had nothing else they could sell for such a high price; no other way of supporting their families. So the children went to work, dancing, singing or acting. Today's women are expected to live their own lives, rather than the vicarious lives of their children, and in today's economy, generally it is possible to do so.

But the big difference is that today's child star is so visible. Movies, television shows, commercials, sporting events and rock concerts get so much media spotlight that it's impossible to ignore the glorification of show biz kids. It's even more difficult to ignore the vast amounts of money they earn. What parent wouldn't be tempted?

And is it so terrible for the child? Look at Shirley Temple. She's had a successful screen career, a happy life as a wife and mother, and finally she has become active in national politics. Yet the question persists, how much of our children's lives are we entitled to live for them?

Though she doesn't attempt to answer that question, Diana Serra Cary, a California author and former child star, has written a book that at least analyzes the subject. "Hollywood's Child—An Inside Account of the Child Star Era," (Houghton Mifflin Publishing Co.) takes the reader back several decades to an era we've enough distance from to see clearly. Diana Cary began her movie career when she was just 22 months old. Her father was a cowboy stunt man and Diana was taken on a visit to a movie set by her mother. There was seen by producer Fred Fishback, who signed the little charmer to a seven-year contract.

Almost before she could talk, Diana became the female counterpart to Jackie Coogan. As "Baby Peggy," she made several hundred silent movies, satirizing such early film greats as Pola Negri and Rudolph Valentino. Her career was over by the time she was 11 and her teeth had fallen out. And herein often lies the tragedy of a child star. The early experience of failure.

Show business is a rough business, and unless a child is prepared for the fast fame and the equally rapid return to reality, the experience can be a long-lasting trauma.

"One thing about being a child star," says Cary, "is that people never want to see you again as an adult on the screen. You are forever their baby. When Deanna Durbin had her first kiss on the screen, it was the end. And it was the same with Shirley Temple. It's very peculiar. It's a psychological thing."

Another danger, and one that any parent who hopes to see his or her child performing for millions should be wary of, is that of role reversal. In a Newsweek interview, Brooke Shields talked about her mother, Teri:

"People think that she pushes me, that all she wants is for me to be a big star and made a lot of money. But if I wanted to stop everything, she'd let me."

Diana Cary warns that even a child feels she can give up her career, there are subtle, underlying pressures that keep her going. The child star knows her going. The child star knows that she provides the family might be obscure and socially powerless. The child knows that she pleases her parents as well, with a good performance. Most children want the approval of adults who ultimately control their lives.

"Even today," writes Diana Cary, "with modern economic, legal and psychological safeguards, parents who knowingly enter into the inverted relationship with their child should not expect to come through it emotionally unscathed. By its very nature, such a wrenching reversal of roles between responsible provider and helpless dependent invites devastating consequences for both."

Cary's book, or even today's morality, won't put an end to the child star business. Let's hope not. Movies, television, and theater would be mightly dull without the talented kids who parade there.

Don't blame rise in male impotence on women in pants

By ABIGAL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read that there is a growing problem of male impotence in America, and no one seems to have the answer. I'm a male, and a fellow I work with may have put his finger on the reason. He says he is turned off by women in slacks, boots and mannish haircuts.

I agree with him. Nothing turns me on like a woman with long, soft, fragrant hair and a frilly, feminine dress.

Clothes make the woman, too. If more men are becoming impotent, it just might be that the mannish look of some women is the cause.—LOVES LAVENDER AND LACE

DEAR LOVES: If male impotence seems to be on the rise, it could be because (a) it has never before been as thoroughly recorded, or (b) male sexuality suffers from the revved up pace and intensified pressures of modern life.

Plenty of men are panting over women in long pants and short haircuts.

DEAR ABBY: I am 24, single and have been dating the same man for two years. Neither of us has dated anyone else since we met.

About a year ago, friends and relatives (especially aunts) began asking us (separately, of course), "When are you two going to get married?"

I must admit that when the question first started I felt as if I had to come up with some kind of answer in order to satisfy people's curiosity. I think we'll eventually marry, but I want to live on my own awhile and not go directly from my parents' home to living with another person. My boyfriend feels the same way, and we're both happy with things as they are, but we can't seem to get this across to some people.

Some friends of mine recently broke up because of repeated questioning from her parents. He wasn't ready for marriage, and she started to pressure him to set a date.

I wish well-meaning friends would leave the decision and timing up to the people involved. Thanks for letting me air my gripe. Is there anything I can say to stop these questions and still be polite?—NOT YET

DEAR NOT: You can't stop insensitive and nosey people from asking questions that are none of their business unless you put it just that way. An appropriate reply would be, "When we decide, we'll let you know."

DEAR ABBY: Through a very reliable source, we found out that our son has been peeping into various neighbors' windows. He is an average teen-age boy, brought up in a respectable home. We have no idea why he does this.

Because of the humiliation that would be brought upon the family, we do not wish to consult a doctor. Can you help us?—VERY SMALL TOWN

DEAR VERY: Yes. I can "help" you by assuring you that you would suffer no "humiliation" whatsoever by consulting a doctor.

If your son had a "kink" in his back, you'd seek medical advice in order to correct it, wouldn't you? So why, when he has an obvious "kink" in his thinking, do you choose to ignore it?

Window peeping is usually a symptom of a deeper emotional problem and should be neither hushed up nor ignored. You owe it to your son (and to society) to get him to a doctor.

AT WIT'S END

Loneliness now too expensive

By ERMA BOMBECK

I got a theory as to why there is so much unrest and violence in the world.

No one can afford to be by themselves anymore. Think about it. We're all being thrown together because the cost of being along is so prohibitive.

Apartment dwellers are doubling up with roommates they don't even know. Elderly people are being forced to live with strangers. Guided vacation tours are cheaper by the busload. Car pools attract people who have only one thing in common . . . mobility to anywhere. There are crowds at 34,000 feet in the air and on the ocean floor.

I've been seated in restaurants with people I don't know, matched with two unknowns in doubles for tennis, and have even gone to groups with my encounters. Private rooms in the hospital are hard to come by.

Never do I get the feeling of fighting my way out of a White Sale more than when I am in New York City. Nothing moves in New York until it is filled to capacity—elevators, cabs, buses. They turn in your order for food only after the entire table has ordered. They take your luggage to your room only when the entire cart is filled in the lobby. They don't even get your car until there are two or three other orders to fill.

Where then does a person go if they want a moment to themselves just to reflect, perchance a dream.

A clean movie. You don't know what solace is until you're sitting there in a dark theater surrounded by sound and a few well-behaved children accompanied by their PG parents.

An evening with slides of your trip to Williamsburg, showing such provacative teasers as mother coming from a public restroom with toilet tissue on her shoe and daddy with his head and arm through the holes of a stockade. You will never feel so alone.

A dinner table following a meal. Just say, "Who's one for dishes?" and it becomes the last Bastille of solitude especially when there is a table full of dirty dishes to be washed and dried.

Need time to talk to yourself and meditate? Go to a tennis court in a new pair of tennis shoes, a new racket and announce you are playing tennis for the first time. You will think you're the last man or woman on the face of the earth!

A friend of mine once told me the loneliest spot in the world was in a limousine Cadillac with tinted glass, by the side of the road with a flat tire. I can't relate to that.

TV a decorating problem

By CAROLE EICHEN
Copley News Service

In most apartments where space is at a premium the problem arises of where to put the television set.

Today almost every home has at least one TV and sometimes more. As vital as television is to most families (the average home has it on for six hours and 20 minutes each day), it also is a decorating problem that remains largely unsolved, especially in apartments.

All too often, televisions are placed in the living room, bedrooms, kitchens and even the bath with no regard to their relationship with the rest of the environment.

In many cases, the television sits in the corner of the living room or bedroom on its own wrought-iron stand making the place look like a motel room. With a little thought, it could be incorporated into the design of the room or possibly be concealed in a piece of furniture not originally designed to encase a TV.

Fortunately, today's TV sets are better designed and many are asthetically pleasing. A portable television properly placed on an existing piece of furniture can be more pleasing than on a TV stand.

If the television set is used frequently, then place it in the living room of the apartment and make it a focal point of the room ... even if it takes rearranging the furnishings.

One idea is to put the television on an armoire or a shelf which is centrally located. This could become a media center in the room and also hold a stereo, tape deck, radio and record albums.

An old china cabinet that doesn't fit into the dining area of the apartment can be converted into a container for the television set. When the doors are closed, the set is concealed so that it does not disturb the design of the room.

If there is no floor space for the television set, suspend it from the ceiling or build a shelf high up which can serve as a platform for a portable. This is a particularly good idea for the bedroom since you can lie in bed and view your favorite program without having to prop up two or three pillows. A remote control for changing channels makes this an ideal set up.

50th anniversary party to fete Herbert Collings'

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Collings

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Collings will be honored on their 50th wedding anniversary with a reception to be given from 2 to 4 p.m. today in the First Baptist Church parlor by their daughter, Mrs. R. W. Harrington of Odessa, and her husband, and a daughter, Mrs. Pat Taylor of Weatherford.

Mr. and Mrs. Collings' four grandchildren, Rice Harrington of San Marcos, Sara Harrington of Odessa, Dick Taylor of Weatherford and Mrs. Terry Cashion of McAllen, and great-granddaughter, Robin Cashion of McAllen, are expected to attend.

Residents of Midland 50 years, Mr. and Mrs. Collings were married in the parsonage of the Southside Baptist Church of Abilene. The Rev. J. C. Burkett, a former pastor of the First Baptist Church of Midland, officiated.

Collings came to Midland in 1928 as manager of a new branch of the Walker-Smith Wholesale Grocery Co., with headquarters in Brownwood. He had a retail grocery store on North Big Spring Street from 1950 to 1968, when he retired. He grew up in Somervel County and worked for the J. R. Milam Department Store in Glen Rose before coming to West Texas, working for the wholesale company in Sweetwater, Plainview and Abilene.

Mrs. Collings grew up in DeLeon, attended college in Abilene and worked there for Walker-Smith until her marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Collings are members of the First Baptist Church, and have been active in church, school, civic and club activities.

Mom gets degree 13 years after HS graduation

PONCA CITY, Okla. (AP) — "Learning how to study all over again was the hardest part of returning to school 13 years after finishing high school," says Judy Queen, 36, who recently received a bachelor's degree from Oklahoma State University in Stillwater.

Now the family lives in Ponca City and he drives back and forth to nearby Braman, where he's the minister of First Baptist Church.

After about five years of marriage, when her husband had some health problems, Mrs. Queen realized she might have to rear their three young children alone.

"Knowing I needed more education to give my family what I wanted them to have, I planned to go to college but had to wait about three years because we were moving around a lot, and that delayed my schooling," she said.

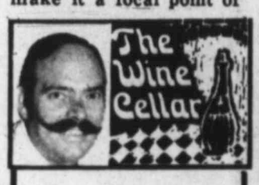

Eventually she enrolled at Northern Oklahoma College in Tonkawa, which she attended for three years before transferring to OSU to get a home economics degree and qualify for a vocational teaching certificate.

Besides the chore of commuting about 80 miles back and forth to OSU, she feared that as an older student she'd feel out of place or the kids, so much younger, might "wonder what this old lady is doing in school." But that wasn't the case.

"The younger students have been just great and accepted me as just another person in their class," she said. "I tried not to give advice.

"Once, when completing a project with a classmate, we talked about our families. When she heard I have three children — Jackie, 17; John, 15; and Julie, 14 — she said, 'Oh, you're not that old. We don't think of you as older. You're one of us.'"

Though for a time Mrs. Queen didn't think she could really accomplish her goal, she said, "Everyone was so good about boosting me on. The five years actually haven't seemed long now."

Wine drinkers favor light wines these days. Even burgundies and clarets, once famed for their heavy, full bodied flavor, are more popular in their lighter forms today. As a result, wines from the Rhone region are little known. They have a strong, rough taste. Most Rhones have to be aged in the bottle at least four years before they are 'tames'. So if you are looking for a wine with a lot of color, a lot of taste, and a strong bouquet, try a French Rhone.

And if you are looking for a great selection of wines and spirits, you need look no further than IMPERIAL LIQUORS, 3209 W. Wadley, 694-4256. Check our outstanding array of imported beers for your July 4 festivities; it's probably the biggest selection in town, and be sure to say hello to the moustache in our drive-up window. Hours: 10-9 Mon.-Sat.

HELPFUL HINT:

Early man remains found

CLEARLAKE HIGHLANDS, Calif.(AP)-Archaeologists have turned up what they believe may be one of man's earliest footholds in Northern California.

Ann Peak, a consulting archaeologist working at the site near Clearlake, and her associates discovered it as they made a preconstruction survey of a sewer project site on a knoll that once was a peninsula in the lake, said to be the oldest in California.

They found small chips and obsidian tools in the dirt taken from rodent burrows and then dug down about 10 feet to a prehistoric village site that may predate a 12,000-year-old site at nearby Borax Lake.

Canning methods differ

Have you wondered about the difference in water-bath and pressure cooker processing of foods in home canning?

The water-bath method is used for processing fruits, rhubarb and tomatoes and is done using a pan with a lid and rack. The pan is large enough to cover the jars with one to two inches of water, so that the jars are surrounded with boiling water. The lid is used to help retain the heat. The acid in some fruits and vegetables helps prevent the growth of some bacteria which is the reason the water-bath process can be used.

However, low acid fruits and vegetables must be canned using the pressure cooker. The spores of some bacteria are highly resistant to heat, which makes it necessary for them to be destroyed by high heat. This is accomplished with the pressure cooker.

What are foods processed by these methods? The water bath is used for such foods as peaches, plums and tomatoes. The pressure cooker is used for such foods as beets, peas, corn, beans, greens and okra.

To learn more about canning and freezing of fruits and vegetables attend the Food Preservation Program scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Flame Room of Pioneer Natural Gas Co. Judy Germany, Midland County extension agent(home economics), will be discussing and demonstrating the various methods of food preservation.

Cousins write book

COLLIRENE, Ala. (AP)-Two cousins have become successful co-authors of a book about this small village.

After six years of work, June Middleton Albaugh of New Jersey and Rosa Lyon Traylor of Alabama, put together a detailed history of the first seven families of this area.

"It has really been an interesting experience," said Mrs. Traylor. "It was a lot of hard work, but we feel it was worth it."

She said the first printing of 500 copies was sold through subscription, mostly to descendants of those families. The book is now in its second printing, they said.

COLLEGE STATION—Apples—with only 70 calories—supply needed vitamins and minerals plus fiber, an important contribution for its cleansing effect on teeth and gums.

In addition, it's hard to beat the firmness and natural sweetness of a fresh apple, says Marilyn Haggard, foods and nutrition specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Or, slice the apples into about 10 pieces each and place in a saucepan with enough water to cover the bottom of the pan.

Or, serve cold with vanilla ice cream.

For a more elegant dessert, core apples and fill each with raisins and brown sugar. Bake in a shallow pan containing about one-fourth inch of water for one hour at 375 degrees F.

Gossip is negative; share good thoughts

COLLEGE STATION—Conversation and sharing through gossip is a negative and unsatisfactory form of communication, a family life education specialist says.

Gossip—often referred as though-poison—attacks the mind as well as the spirit, Dorthy Taylor continues.

It may appear to be subtle, but it accomplishes big things. It warps and twists a person's thinking processes because it is based on a distortion of facts, she explains.

Gossip creates guilt feelings and causes a person discomfort when he meets the person that was the victim of gossip.

Miss Taylor is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the Texas A&M University System.

(1) Do I always have good things to say about others?

(2) Do I enjoy spreading rumors?

(3) Do I like juicy reports of a scandal?

(4) Do I tend to judge others on the basis of facts?

(5) Do I encourage others to share rumors with me?

(6) Do I constantly say, "This is just between you and me..."?

(7) Do I keep confidential information strictly to myself?

(8) Do I feel guilty about my report of other people?

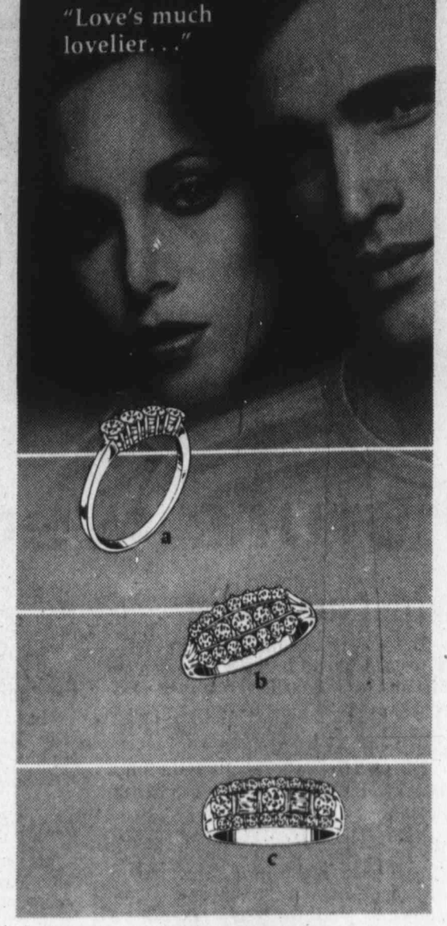

(9) Do I deliberately find fault when someone is getting ahead of me?

(10) Do I ever go to the victim of gossip to find out the truth?

Actually, it's all right to talk about people, but keep the facts straight and the conversation positive, the specialist suggests.

Sharing good thoughts is motivating.

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

Outdoor barbecues that include children sometimes end up looking like disaster areas, something to keep in mind when you plan one.

If youngsters aren't kept busy, they'll look for excitement on their own. What they find to do might cause a little excitement — and it isn't all fun and games.

At one barbecue five children managed to liven the social endeavor. For example, while the adults were enjoying a pre-barbecue chat, the youngsters were scouting outdoors and indoors for ways to express their individuality.

One 5-year-old boy found a can of green paint and then looked for a place to put it. Why not the white marble bust in the living room?

One little girl decided to try her hand at fishing in the aquarium tank. She caught a few angel fish and put them in her soft drink filled paper cup. This, too, escaped the attention of the host at the time because it was left on a windowsill in the recreation room.

At one barbecue where the men were planning to fish at a nearby stream, disaster struck before you could say, "Go fish." A youngster investigating his father's bag of tackle — he had helped collect the worms — managed to get a fish hook into his thumb.

Parent and son spent hours at the local clinic waiting while similar repairs were made to other unwilling victims of weekend accidents. Among them was a child who had cut his hand badly picking up a broken bottle in the grass — he couldn't tell it was broken; another child was covered with poison ivy, and another had been bitten by a hornet — he had tried to kill it. Also on hand for treatment was a scoutmaster who had gotten in the way of a stray fishing cast made by one of his troop. He had a fishing lure caught in his leg.

To avoid possibilities of accidents, one parent hires a sitter for all the youngsters when a summer party is planned. It gives the parents a breather and the watchful eye of the sitter helps keep the youngsters in line, she explained.

"It is worth whatever it costs and sitters are delighted with the change of pace. They look upon it as a fun assignment. I've had two foolproof outdoor parties and am keeping my fingers crossed."

Nevertheless, all her parties start with an array of medicines within arms reach. She keeps bandages, cotton, antiseptic and other aids near at hand.

Children of divorce need teachers' help

Just take the approach to Father's Day in some schools, said Joyce A. Brothers of Menlo Park, Calif., a marriage, family and child counselor.

An elementary school teacher may decide that her pupils will make gifts for their father for Father's Day.

Now put yourself in the small shoes of a child — or children — who are being raised by a divorced mother and who haven't even had a phone call from their father in years.

How would you feel? Brothers asked in an interview.

"Along with finding sexism and racism in the school systems, we also find what I call 'nuclear familyism.' This is the idea that everyone ought to be in an intact family with a mother, a father and the kids," she added.

The children of divorce need special understanding and, at times, treatment in school by everyone from the school principal and teacher to the counselors and secretarial staff, Brothers said.

Brothers, who is not the same Dr. Joyce Brothers seen on TV, has her master's degree in counseling psychology from UC-Berkeley.

"We find that a lot of schoolteachers and school systems don't really understand what goes on with children when there is a divorce in the family," she said.

STITCHING WITCHERY

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Can you believe that? I've made a lot of things in the last 20 years, but I have never had the nerve to tackle an umbrella! Good luck, Pauline.

Dear Mrs. Kinser: Would you please tell me how to adjust my slacks pattern so the front seam won't be too long? The back and side seams fit perfectly.—Mrs. Ellis Grigg, Port Isabel, Texas.

A. It is an easy task, Mrs. Grigg. A couple of inches below the waistline make a horizontal cut through the center front line toward the side seam. Do not cut through the side seam. Lap these cut edges to remove the excess length. Tape edges in place; straighten center front line. This alteration does not change anything else, so your slacks should still fit perfectly.

Dear Betty: I am making new dresses over old patterns. I need to lengthen the skirts about six inches. Do I just add the length at the hem, or do I have to cut the skirt pattern in two?—Virginia Chirstensen.

A. It depends on the style, Virginia. If the skirt has a straight silhouette, you can add the length at the bottom edge. However, if there is any flare to the skirt, you need to cut the pattern sections in two somewhere below the hipline. Separate pattern the necessary amount, back with tissue, tape cut edges to tissue and fill in side seams and center lines. Be sure you change each pattern section in the same place.

This method of alteration also applies to slacks that do not have straight legs. The change must be made below the knee, but above the flare.

NEEDLEPLAY

Make framing an integral part of needlepoint

By ERICA WILSON

A few weeks ago I answered a letter about framing needlepoint, describing a Chinese plate design surrounded by pale green velvet, very successfully done by a needleworker in San Francisco. Now I'm writing from La Jolla, Calif., where an exciting needlework show I helped to judge was filled with such inspiring ideas that I must continue the framing saga. What is it about the West Coast? They seem to be wonderfully adventurous and imaginative. Perhaps it helps to be in the midst of perpetual summer—or in the case of La Jolla, perpetual spring.

I think the secret of successful framing is to consider your project as a whole before you pick up your needle. It isn't just a matter of finishing your canvas and slapping a plain wood or steel frame around it—which is why I'm going to highlight three rather imaginative framing techniques I've just seen. You might not want to go quite so far, but perhaps these three examples will whet your appetite—nudging you in the direction of more exploration when it comes to your next stitching project. Make framing an integral part of the whole—instead of merely the "last stage" of a project.

One of the most dramatic pieces in the show was an art nouveau motif—a bare-shouldered lady in black, white and yellow, with tiny touches of scarlet in very clean lines of needlepoint. This was framed in a brushed satin-finish stainless steel square, which was mounted on a larger piece of mirror, which in turn was framed in the same brushed-satin finish steel. It set off the stitchery magnificently, giving a very elegant, very 1920s mirrored look to the project. The stitchery itself appeared to be almost suspended in space.

HERRINGBONE STITCH

Lacing with this stitch is the best way to stretch your fabric out on any kind of backing prior to framing it.

Another piece was softer but had an equally stunning effect. It was a beautiful Chinese-inspired needlework— —pigeons amongst trees and blossoms. This was framed in rubbed gold bamboo, and was mounted on a larger piece of clear glass that was framed in the same bamboo. The total effect, again, was one of suspension—the needlework itself seemed to be floating.

The easiest way to achieve this feeling (or to explain it to your framer so he can) is to first frame a piece of glass or mirror 4 to 6 inches larger than your finished needlework. Then, before placing your needlework in an identical but smaller frame, drill two holes at each of the four corners (8 holes in all). To establish the position of these holes, draw a "mental" diagonal line across each corner, and place your holes at either end of this line. Put a long screw in each of the holes, so that they project through to the back of the frame. Now drill corresponding holes in the framed glass and allow your screws to project right through to the back of this. Then tightly wrap around each of these pairs of screws with wire, secure each with a nut, if necessary, and there you have it—your framed needlework securely fastened to the framed glass behind.

The third project from the needlework show was, perhaps, the ultimate floater. It was a Hindu dancing figure—stylized— —done in the form of a large wall panel—so large that the young couple who worked it had to build a box on top of their VW to accommodate it so work could be done at school (they are teachers) as well as at home. The intriguing material used to make the frame was copper piping. The needlepoint was brought to the edge of the tubing and the tube itself was wrapped over and over with wool.

The reason I say that this project was the ultimate floater is because the stitchery was suspended from a larger piece of the same wool-wrapped tubing with fabulous strips of ribbons, beads, braids and crochet. This was absolutely ingenious, as it fitted beautifully with the Indian fresco feeling of the design.

And that's what framing is all about—not fitting AROUND your needlework, but fitting INTO it!

Israel's woman has wrong image

Copley News Service

The image of the Israeli women fighting side-by-side with the men has fostered a myth about the place of women in that society, says Aviva Cantor of New York City, an editor of Lilith magazine, which represents the views of Jewish feminists.

Cantor first lived in Israel when she was attending Hebrew University in Jerusalem from 1958 to 1960. Later, she returned to Israel for two summers in the early '70s and met with Israeli women and began developing a clearer perception of the status of women there, she said.

"It is true," she said in an interview, "that women did fight side by side with men in the 1948 war, but even then there was a struggle for that equality, and it was grudgingly allowed because it was a situation of national emergency."

It is also true, she said, that Israeli women get basic training — but the weapons training generally consists of shooting a gun about five times.

The reality is, she said, even when women have done some men's work, men have never done women's work. The Israeli women are still locked into stereo typed sex roles.

"The kibbutzim," Cantor said, "set the pace for social development and in kibbutzim men never worked in the children's houses. They do wait on the tables, but that's about it, and it's worse now than ever before. The women are the servants and do the work in the kitchen, the laundry, the baby house."

Part of this, she thinks, is because the country has remained on a war footing, which tends to discourage changes and also encourages the idea of having larger families.

"People want to have more children 'just in case' — just about everyone has lost someone in a war at some time."

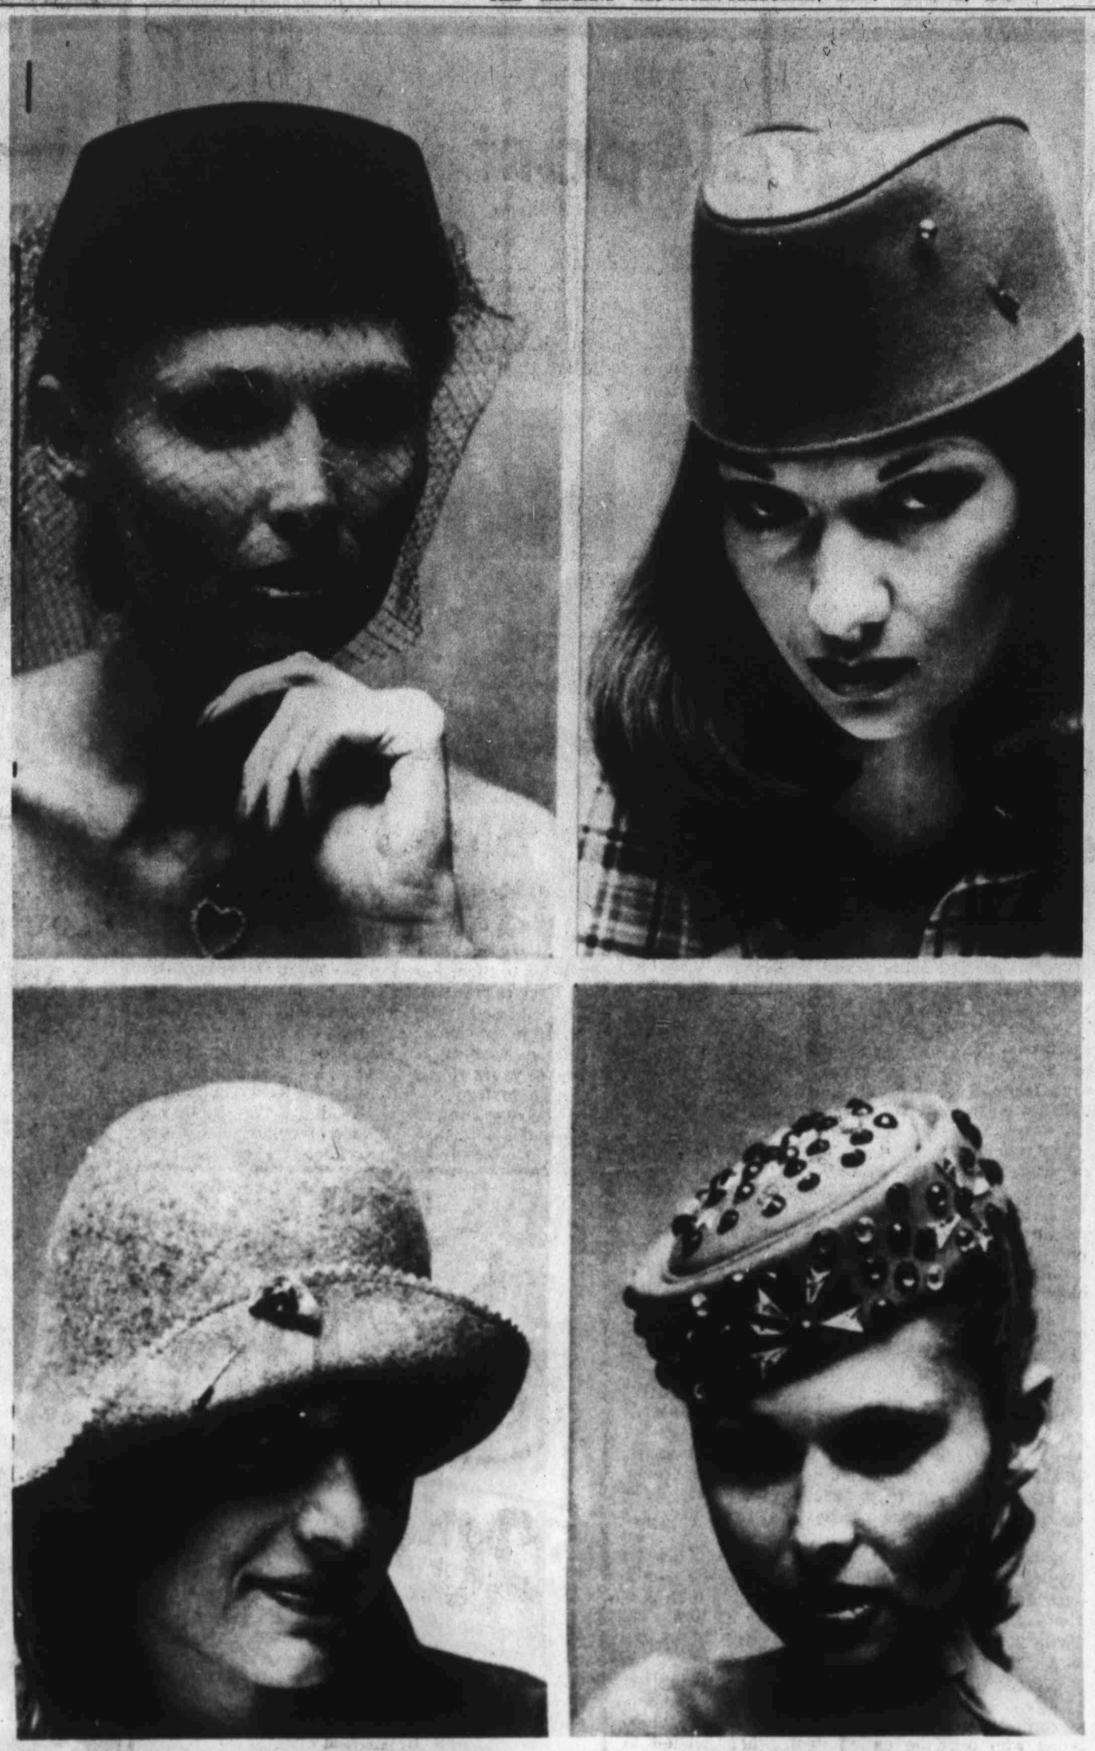

Another reason is while the ruling culture is Western, about 55 percent of Israelis today have come from Middle Eastern countries and among Middle Eastern Jews, she said, the position of women is "horrendous."

Most of the Middle Eastern Jews, she said, live in poverty conditions in the cities or in small development towns, have many children, work from dawn until dusk, all in culture that is totally male chauvinist.

Postal service offering opportunities to women

By JOY STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When Frances D. Schneider was appointed U.S. Postal Service Women's Program Coordinator for the Northeast Region recently, she added one more chapter to her family's history in the service.

She and other members of her family repres ent 177 years of postal service, starting with the 40 years put in by her father, Francis Donnelly, at one time postmaster of Mill Neck, N.Y.

Mrs. Schneider was also a postmaster at Mill Neck, serving for five years before her new appointment, as was her husband, George, who is now postmaster at Carle Place, N.Y. Each has 21 years of service.

"My mother started as a 'wartime indefinite' during World War II and worked 13 years as a clerk for my father," Mrs. Schneider, 4 3, said in an interview. "Like her, I started as a clerk for my husband at Mill Neck. When he was promoted to a larger branch, I went before the review board with other candidates under the merit selection system, and succeeded him as postmaster in 1973."

Adding to the family service total are the 40 years her uncle, Frank

Responsible for coordinating employment and advancement opportunities for women in eight states, plus Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, Mrs. Schneider works through her nine district coordinators "encouraging women to get training and seek upward mobility."

Giving doesn't cost a dime; all hospital wants is blood

Midland's citizens have a reputation for giving to all community projects as they roll around each year.

The people are being asked to give again, but it won't cost them a dime. All Midland Memorial Hospital wants is blood.

The MMH Blood Bank is starting a new idea known as a Blood Club. Bruce Palmer with MMH explained the hospital enlists businesses, churches and other organizations to join the club with their employees to give the blood. When an employee donates blood, he is credited with that amount.

One advantage to the club is that MMH is a member of the American Association of Blood Banks, as are many of the hospitals in the larger Texas cities. When a donor is admitted to one of the member hospitals and he needs blood, he can get it because of the credit he has, Palmer said.

Odessa's Medical Center Hospital also is starting a blood club in conjunction with the one at MMH. "This is a joint effort where it is for the welfare of all area people," said Dr. Martha Madsden, pathologist at MMH. The two cities will be working together as much as possible in the blood club idea, she added.

Blood bank personnel decided "to start at home" with the hospital employees, said Palmer. They have had several churches and organizations to sign up, and are trying to get many of the major businesses, he said. The bank would like to get 20 to 50 member businesses, with 20 to 25 percent of the employees giving blood. "Our goal is to have one drive a week," Palmer said.

Walk-in donors give about 150 to 200 pints of blood a month, but this is not enough to meet the needs, according to Palmer. While the MMH blood bank is about 80 to 90 percent efficient, "with the new wing opening up, we envision we are going to be busier," he said.

Not only will the blood bank have a larger supply of blood on hand with the blood club, but it will be able to compile a larger list of donors with rare blood types who may be called upon when needed at critical times. "The more people involved in this, the fewer we will have to call in between drives," Dr. Madsden said.

The AABB is operating a clearing house for clubs with too much of one type of blood and not enough of another, Dr. Madsden said. This is in addition to being ble to call one of the member clubs for specific types of blood.

She said a company by the name of Blood Services tried to come into the area and it attempted to meet the city's blood needs. But, recalled Dr. Madsden, the firm only would accept monetary payment for the pints of blood used. This is unlike the current plan at most hospitals and with the blood club where the blood used can be replaced by more blood. "We (MMH blood bank) wanted to do our own thing and to do it in for our own community," Dr. Madsden said.

While blood bank personnel will go to each business or organization and set up their equipment, Madsden expressed a wish for a bloodmobile. "We have to transport all our equipment and set up the special beds. With a bloodmobile you can drive right up to the business," she said.

Persons wishing to donate blood must be between 17 and 65 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds, and have no history of hepatitis, yellow jaundice or tuberculosis. The prospective donor also should not have had a cold, fever blister or upper respiratory illness prior to giving blood, according to Palmer.

Old-time 'junkyard' images dirty nation's recycling effort

NEW YORK (AP) — The negative image of the old-time "junkyard" continues to influence local officials, to the detriment of the nation's recycling efforts, says M.J. Mighdoll, executive vice president of the National Association of Recycling Industries.

"How can effective recycling in the community be accomplished if the industry's facilities are labeled 'junkyards' and its vehicles designated 'junk carts,' subject to fees and restrictions not imposed on other industries?" Mighdoll asks.

"While everyone agrees that recycling is vital to energy and resource conservation and in helping to control mounting solid waste problems, there are state and local laws that actually restrict recycling industry operations," he adds.

The restrictions, he notes, include licensing and zoning regulations which relegate recycling yards and plants to locations far from urban waste sources and the industrial manufacturers that buy the recycled material.

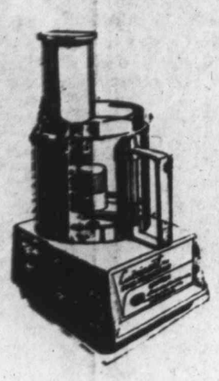

"They also include so-called 'beautification' laws which ignore the fact that recycling operations are as acceptable aesthetically as other industrial facilities," Mighdoll says, adding that "discriminatory" laws and regulations can — and sometimes do — put recycling operations out of business.

Unless there are nearby industrial markets for the metals, paper and other materials that are to be recovered, he points out, these municipal projects can be counterproductive.

"Junk, in the real sense, may be an eyesore, but recyclable resources are not," he adds. "It's about time everyone appreciated the difference."

By JEAN GREEN
Union City Daily Messenger

UNION CITY, Tenn. (AP) — Folks say Mattie Austin Douglas was born restless, and the 73-year-old woman says it must be true. She's been hitchhiking for 50 years and says she isn't ready yet to quit the road.

"People have been nice to me. I don't know how many raincoats they have taken off their backs and given me," Mrs. Douglas said in an interview.

She was 21 and had been married less than five months when she hitched her first ride.

"I went looking for my first husband," she said. "He ran off with another woman."

Mrs. Douglas had to interrupt her travels with the birth of her first child, but she didn't waste much time before she was thumbing again.

"I took to the road when the baby was 10 months old, hitching to Florida. I worked in people's homes, did a little housework and they would give me what they had put back, they wouldn't eat, or clothes they didn't need. I don't know how I really got by, but I did," she said.

Mrs. Douglas' family — a son and a daughter — live in the Chicago area but the gray-haired hitchhiker says the weather there goes against her health.

When Mrs. Douglas isn't on the road she can usually be found scratching a knot — hitchhikers' lingo for taking a short rest — at a small shack east of Dukedom, Tenn., on a rural deadend road. She doesn't know who owns the place.

"I'm not here long at a time, but I always know I got a place to go when there's time for a rest," she said. "They tell me I was born restless. I have to stay on the road."

There are no lights, no water, no telephone in Mrs. Douglas' home but she says she gets along nicely without them.

Mrs. Douglas, who last hitchhiked from Florida, is leaving just as soon as she plants a small garden to come back to. She says she'll head for Chicago, and on to California.

Spanish government working to protect natural bird refuge

By FENTON WHEELER

COTO DONANA, Spain (AP) — At dusk snowy egrets take over the trees, wild boar grunt through the underbrush and mosquitoes hum off the water, as deer pause for a drink.

Despite the sound of hundreds of tourists sipping their evening beers almost within gunshot range, Spain's Coto Donana, a swampy quarter-of-a-million acres emptying into the Atlantic, and Europe's biggest natural bird refuge, may yet survive.

After allowing years of ecological abuse, the government is finally acting to protect the Coto, its moving sand dunes, spotted lynx and Spanish imperial eagle, 50 miles south of Seville in southern Spain.

Philip IV, "the hunting king," bagged game while meeting with his cabinet in the Coto in the 16th century. And dictator Gen. Francisco Franco, who routinely brought home 2,000 partridges from a weekend hunt, had only one question when he visited the Coto in 1952 and observed an abundance of water-sucking eucalyptus trees. "Are they damaging the hunting?" he asked.

The present government of Premier Adolfo Suarez, after wrestling with the more urgent problem of leading Spain to democracy after 40 years of Franco dictatorship, has now decided to move to guard one of the country's natural wonders by doubling the size of the 90,000-acre national park.

Included in the government program are buffer zones for visitors, artificial lakes and tightened regulations on poaching and tourist development.

But with builders already holding a 4-mile beach strip along the edge of the Coto to construct an expected 30 hotels and 5,000 chalets for 70,000 sea-loving residents, the job will not be easy.

As the changing world moves in, Amish families keep their ways

A mile down the road the driver reins the snorting horse onto a steeply rising lane that leads through withered corn stalks to a secluded white farmhouse.

The bearded driver dismounts in the late afternoon shadows cast by a windmill and half-filled silos. Six huge work horses graze near the house, where firewood is stacked on the porch.

No, unfortunately, for the 14 Amish families who have just moved to this area in southern Wisconsin. The world's busiest airport is just 100 miles away and the Amish know it. They know, too, about factories, cars, tractors, telephones and electricity. So — perhaps more than ever — they heed the warning of Romans 12:1. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

"Industry is making land too expensive," said John Henry Whetstone, deacon of the new Amish church district along Wisconsin's southern border. "Where some of us came from — Indiana, Illinois and Iowa — young people have a hard time buying land. They have to work in factories. That's not our way.

"Mostly that's why we came here."

Whetstone's sister-in-law, Edna Yutzy, her husband, John, and seven children were the first Amish family to settle near here. They moved from Milroy, Ind., to a small farm just southwest of Evansville on Oct. 1, 1975. Whetstone, his wife and four children followed three months later, moving to a 160-acre farm east of Brodhead.

Seven Amish families — including a blacksmith — moved here from New Glarus, Wis. Three families came from Iowa, two from Illinois.

"At first, there were all kinds of stories about us," said Whetstone. "They said we didn't pay taxes, didn't buy anything from anybody, didn't send our children to school — all sorts of things that aren't true. Now, we're accepted as hard-working neighbors who use horses instead of tractors.

"I could use a tractor — if I wanted to join another church," said John Yutzy. "We don't have electricity because we don't want our children watching television and getting strange ideas. The most important thing is keeping our family together.

"We have our troubles, too," said Whetstone. "But we don't have your crime or juvenile delinquency or broken families.

Congressmen approve 'echo' of tax measure

ROLL CALL REPORT

HOUSE

ECHO OF PROP. 13 Adopted, 220 for and 181 against, an amendment to cut $800 million from the budgets of the departments of Labor and HEW. The vote was interpreted as a direct response to the so called taxpayer revolt sparked by passage in California of Proposition 13. The amendment was attached to the $57.9 billion fiscal 1979 appropriations bill for the two departments. The bill (HR 12929) was later passed and sent to the Senate.

The amendment effects a two percent, across-the-board cut in all programs except those such as Social Security whose spending levels are fixed by law. Decisions on which programs would be cut and by how much are left up to Labor and HEW officials. No single program may be cut by more than five percent.

Rep. Clarence Miller, R-Ohio, the sponsor, said the HEW budget is larger then that of the 50 states combined. "Almost everyone is concerned today about the exexplosive cost of government. The vote in California...on Proposition 13 underscores what the public thinks."

Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., an opponent, asked: "Just where would this cut come? Would it be in the basic opportunity grants program, the Title I Elementary and Secondary Education account, or perhaps health resource funding...research in cancer, heart, lung, arthritis, child beating? Members voting "yea" favored the amendment.

Reps. Charles Wilson, D-2, Bob Echkardt, D-8, Jack Brooks, D-9, Jake Pickle, D-10, W.R. Poage, D-11, James Wrigh , D-12, Jack Hightower, D-13, Richard White, D-16, Barbara Jordan, D-18, George Mahon, D-19, Henry Gonzalez, D-20, and Abraham Kazen, D-23, voted "nay."

Reps. Olin Teague, D-6, John Young, D-14, Kika de la Garza, D-15, did not vote.

FREEBIES Adopted, 214 for and 159 against, an amendment to curtail the practice of House members having free access to congressional wall calendars and agricultural yearbooks (which they mail to constituents) and plants from the U.S. Botanic Garden and shipping trunks (which many members utilize personally or in their offices). Under the amendment, members would have to pay for such items out of their office expense allowances. Presently, government agencies provide such accesories at virtually no cost. The amendment was attached to HR 12935, a bill appropriating money for the legislative branch, later passed and sent to the Senate.

Rep. William Armstrong, R-Colo., the sponsor, said that House members often say: "Of course, the calendar practice is reprehensible. Of course it is not a good expenditure of the taxpayers' funds. Of course we ought to curtail it some day...." Armstrong added: "Year after year the same refrain. Well, I think this would be an excellent time to do it."

Rep. Bob Traxler, D-Mich., an opponent, said: "There is no more popular publication among my rural constituents than the Agricultural Yearbook." He said he would ask Armstrong "not to take away that publication that represents to my constituents their communication with the American government that they pay taxes to."

Teague, Kruger and Milford did not vote.

TELEVISION Voted, 235 for and 150 against, to put the House rather than private journalists in control of the cameras when the House begin televising floor proceedings. The vote adopted an amendment—to a bill funding congressional operations (HR 12935)—stipulating that money cannot be spent for operation of cameras by any party other than the House.

Network news departments and other journalistic organizations say the controversy is a First Amendment question of who will control the news, government or the governed. Many House members, however, say the networks would televise them in a "circus" context that would convey an unrealistic picture of House activity.

Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Tex., a supporter, said: "We are not trying to pass judgment...on the journalistic skill or objectivity of network journalism.....The question is whether we have confidence in the U.S. House of Representatives to record its own proceedings with dignity and integrity as an historic record for now and for the future."

Majority Leader John Rhodes, R-Ariz., an opponent, said: "I would much rather put my faith in the content of television programs which come from this House in the networks, because I think they may be unfair to all of us, but in an absolutely fair way.

Members voting "nay" favored network control of House TV cameras.

Teague, Krueger and Milford did not vote.

SENATE

FILIBUSTER Failed, 58 for and 41 against, to achieve the three-fifths majority required to end the filibuster against the bill (HR 8410) to amend the 1935 National Labor Relations Act.

The bill is favored by organized labor and the Administration and opposed by the business community and many Republicans and conservatives. The thrust of its many changes in the 43-year-old law is to make it easier for workers to organize and win contracts from management. The bill has been passed by the House.

Senator voting "yea" wanted to end the filibuster.

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D, and John Tower, R, voted "nay."

New varieties of rum suit versatile market

By TOM HOGE
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Time was when Americans quaffed rum only in fruity drinks, and cooks limited their use of the liquor to rich, gooey desserts. But not any more.

Today, the Puerto Rican rum industry, which accounts for more than 83 percent of the rum consumed in this country, is putting out two new types which are considerably more versatile.

It began when the rum industry decided to make a rum for both the "white liquor" (gin and vodka) and the brandy-whiskey markets. The result was white rum, which is being promoted as the main ingredient for bloody marys and martinis, and gold rum, which tastes remarkably like cognac.

The new types have also opened up a new field of rum cookery. White rum has proved an excellent ingredient in the glaze of turkey, ham and other meats. Gold rum is used to baste roast pork and a dollop of the white gives a lift to shrimp pate, to cite a few recipes. The gold is even used as an ingredient for French toast.

Virtually every major city in the world consumes rum in one form or other, a custom which began centuries ago. It seems an obscure Asian sugar planter — there is some confusion whether he was Indian or Chinese — was grinding cane between stone rollers when he made a discovery. He found that when the juice of the cane was boiled and the sugar crystallized, there was a sticky brown residue that tasted pretty good. Today we know it as molasses.

The inquisitive planter also found that this gummy residue had an interesting tendency to ferment. He decided to help things along with a little wild yeast and the result was something pretty close to rum.

Since all this took place at least 800 years before the birth of Christ, rum is believed to be the oldest of the so-called hard liquors. Of course, it was not called rum in early times. For instance, Middle Easterners called it "arak," derived from the Arab word for spirits.

Rum played a role in the sailors' life in old England. An English admiral named Robert Blake is said to have started the custom of issuing a daily ration to seamen in the Royal Navy to discourage mutiny. And well it might have, since I'm told they doled out a fiery liquor that ran 151 proof.

1 cup orange juice

½ cup white rum

½ cup brown sugar

1 tablespoon ginger

A few whole cloves

Combine above ingredients and bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer about 30 minutes, till syrupy. Strain. Brush over ham several times during last hour of cooking.

Texas inmate may be second executed in decade

GREG MacARTHUR

Next year an inmate in Georgia, orida or Texas is likely to become e first person legally put to death in e United States since Gary Gilmore as executed by firing squad in Utah Jan. 17, 1977.

But the next execution probably ill involve someone who has been ghting to stay alive — unlike Gilore, who pressed Utah authorities carry out his sentence and became e first person executed in this coun- in almost a decade.

In 1967, the federal courts declared moratorium on executions pending review of death penalty laws by the .S. Supreme Court, and in 1972 overrned all existing capital punishent statutes as unconstitutionally rbitrary.

On July 2, 1976, however, the Sureme Court upheld new death statutes in Georgia, Florida and Texas, uling that they provided "guided disretion" about the exercise of the enalty and satisfied constitutional emands.

Death penalty cases again moved wiftly through the courts of those hree states, and eventually, 18 other tates adopted similar death statutes.

Opponents, searching for some momentum as the possibility of renewed xecutions nears, say they believe the ourt responded to public pressure in 976.

"It's going to be a very close race etween society waking up and the tate again beginning to kill," said illiard Farmer, an attorney with the tlanta-based Team Defense roject.

"We sometimes like tc think these court) decisions are made in a vacum, but there's no doubt in my mind hat public opinion — public fears bout crime and that sort of thing — nfluenced the (supreme) court.

"It's a barroom mentality — a simle solution to a complicated problem. nd unless we do our job better, we ould very well have an execution by 979," he said.

For some of the condemned men and women in Georgia, Florida and Texas, the appeals countdown that began two years ago likely could draw to a close in early 1979.

John Spenkelink, a 29-year-old Californian incarcerated at the state prison in Starke, Fla., may be closer to execution than any other death row inmate in the country.

Spenkelink has exhausted all his appeals in the Florida state court system and now is awaiting a ruling by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. An adverse decision would leave him one last appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court before the setting of a final execution date.

Assistant Florida Attorney General Ray Marky says Spenkelink is farthest along from "a procedural posture," and it is "highly probable that we will have an execution in Florida sometime next year."

Depending on how fast the courts act, an execution could be carried out as early as this December, Marky said. "But not many governors would sign an execution around Christmas. You don't give an execution as a Christmas present," he added.

Spenkelink has been under death sentence since Dec. 20, 1973. He was convicted of the Feb. 4, 1973 murder of Jospeh Szmankiewicz, a prison escapee. Spenkelink claims Szmankiewicz robbed and sodomized him during a cross-country auto trip, and that Szmankiewicz was killed during a struggle.

Prosecutors claim Spenkelink shot Szmankiewicz while the victim slept in a Tallahassee, Fla., motel room. Spenkelink is white, as was his victim.

Jerry Jurek, 27, has been under a death sentence in Texas since February, 1974. He was convicted of the kidnap-slaying of a 10-year-old girl in Cuero, Tex. Jurek is white as was his victim.

Like Spenkelink, he too has exhausted all available appeals in the state court system and is before the 5th U.S. Circuit. Jurek's attorneys, however, have yet to argue that appeal.

"Given a reasonable set of circumstances, he would be the first one executed (in Texas)," according to Assistant Texas Attorney General Anita Ashton. She cautioned that "you can't outguess a court," but predicted that Texas' first execution would "probably be held sometime in the spring or summer of 1979. The entire (appeals) process takes about three years from start to finish."

In Georgia, where 415 executions occurred prior to 1964, several death row inmates are nearing the end of their available state appeals and preparing to take their cases into federal court. Charles Tidwell, Gov. George Busbee's legal advisor, said the state's first electrocution since 1964 could be conducted "in six to 12 months — probably sometime next year."

As of late April, 462 men and 6 women were under death sentences in the United States, according to figures compiled by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Legal Defense Fund. Thirty-six states have some form of death penalty on the books, but only 24 have inmates on death row. Florida has 108, Georgia 72 and Texas 70.

No one will be executed, however, if the coalition of groups opposed to capital punishment succeeds in demonstrating that death sentences under the new laws are applied as unfairly and arbitrarily as those under the laws voided by the Supreme Court in 1972.

Spenkelink's lawyers have asked the federal appeals court for time to complete statistical research they contend could show a "pattern of arbitrariness" in the imposition of the death sentence, according to Jack Boger, a lawyer with the Legal Defense Fund.

In addition, defense attorneys have presented results of research conducted by Dr. William Bowers of Northeastern University in Boston, Mass., which they say shows that the race of the victim determines the severity of punishment.

According to Bowers, four percent of the homicide arrests in Georgia, Florida and Texas between 1976 and 1978 involved a black offender and a white victim, while 36 percent of the death sentences imposed were for the killing of whites by blacks.

The battle for public opinion, according to Bowers, may not be won until his side loses the immediate battle.

"I hope there are no executions, but I do think the reality of renewed executions would move people who right now may not be moved by the abstract threat of state execution," he said.

Groups such as the NAACP, the American Civil Liberties Union and National Council of Churches are part of a loosely knit coalition of about 60 organizations working to prevent the resumption of executions.

The National Coalition Against the Death Penalty in New York City, N.Y., coordinates the efforts of these groups.

Less has been heard from supporters of the death penalty since the 1976 Supreme Court decision.

In Georgia, however, state Supreme Court Chief Justice H.E. Nichols not only publicly supports capital punishment, he has declared that the appeals process in Georgia is so complicated that legal delays are undercutting the deterrent effect of the death penalty.

Nichols, who has proposed a "unified appeal" to reduce the time between sentencing and execution to "no more than a year," says lengthy appeals are "making a mockery out of the law."

According to Nichols, "We ought to repeal the statute or we ought to execute the judgments in a reasonable time."

y GEORGE A. KRIMSKY

EL MINA, Lebanon (AP) — The oal was to find a town in Lebanon ith all the prerequisites for peace: Christians and Moslems living in armony. No recent bombings or gun attles. No armed militias, guerrillas r occupation armies. No war refuees living in squalid camps or squating in other people's homes.

To find a reasonable facsimile, one as to come to northern Lebanon. ince the civil war, it has been largely emoved from the waves of crisis that till engulf the country from Beirut own to the Israeli border.

Driving up the highway that snakes long the rocky edge of the Mediterranean, one comes to this port city on he outskirts of Tripoli, Lebanon's econd largest city 55 miles north of eirut.

El Mina is a town of peace where loslems and Christians coexist with asy grace, as rare in this country as diamond in a coal mine.

This municipality of 50,000 has all he characteristics looked for, except ne: there is still an occupying force f Syrian soldiers, who police the ragile peace here as they do throughut most of the country. Public reacons are mixed on whether El Mina ould maintain its quiet without hem.

There are numerous communities n Lebanon that live in varying degrees of peace, where a casual political argument in the street or a nighttime stroll into another neighborhood do not necessarily lead to trouble. But all too few towns can boast of real coexistence between religious and political sects.

Most Lebanese villages are either Christian or Moslem, but not mixed. In the cities, the communities are usually segregated.

The estrangement between sects has been a main factor in the civi strife that has taken nearly 40,000 lives.

In this town, the Moslems, making up two-thirds of the population, and the Christians live together, work together, go to school together and even marry each other — the last a taboo for many Lebanese.

Why is it different from other communities?

It seems to be a mixture of historical accident and self-interest, woven together into a tightly knit social fabric.

President, or mayor, Abdel Kader Alameddine says El Mina escaped all but marginal involvement in the civil war and has been thriving ever since, "because no strangers came to make trouble."

During the war, both Christian and Moslem youths formed neighborhood vigilante groups to make sure no outside "rabble rousers" stirred up trouble, Alameddine said in a recent interview.

The town's harbormaster, Victor Razzi, a Christian, stressed the value of economics as a peacekeeper. "Both sides needed their jobs, needed the money coming in from the port and needed each other. They saw no future in the fight going on outside."

History and geography also provide some answers to El Mina's good future.

As a port, El Mina has always been a mecca for fishermen, for the unskilled willing to sweat and for artisans working the wood and stone shipped from outside. The main criterion was workmanship, not religion or politics.

The mountains rising immediately east of El Mina and Tripoli are populated by Maronite Christians whose ancestors first fled from persecution 1,400 years ago. The highlands provided a natural barrier to invasion and assimilation.

"Besides trading with each other, our people still go to the mountains in the summer and they come to the city for the winter," Rashid Karami, a former Moslem premier from Tripoli, said in a recent interview.

President Alemeddine is a Moslem, but the ruling municipal council on which he serves is religiously divided 3-3. "When we have a deadlock, we can usually work it out because disagreements have nothing to do with religion or political affiliation," he said.

GINA MONETTE HARPER, 19, of Midland, will be entered as Miss Golden Life Health Spa in the Miss West Texas Pageant June 29-30 and July 1 in the Ector County Coliseum in Odessa. Miss Harper will sing in the talent phase of the beauty contest. She is a 1977 graduate of El Dorado High School in Albuquerque, N.M., and attends Midland College. She was a homecoming princess, cheerleader and a drill team member in high school and is a member of Kappa Omega sorority. Miss Harper is daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vic Armendariz of Midland.
