MEXICAN REVOLUTIONARY PLOT NIPPED IN BUD

FRIENDS OF DE LA HUERTA ARE RESPONSIBLE

UPRISING SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN PLANNED IN ARIZONA

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 8.—Papers received here from Mexico City give details of a revolution plot which they say was nipped in the bud by Guadalupe police.

According to the reports the insurrectionists planned to break out simultaneously in Guadalupe, Agua Calientes, Guzman and Jalisco for the purpose of drawing troops to these points in order that they might strike more fatal blows at other strategic points.

These attacks were supposed to have been planned to take place in Jalisco, Sonora and Zacatecas. The papers El Universal and Excelsior blame followers of Adolfo de la Huerta, former provisional president of Mexico for the plot. The plot was supposed to have been planned at Tucson, Arizona, in November by political exiles.

CORN FARMERS ARE TO BATTLE FOR THEMSELVES

BY EARL J. JOHNSON
United News Staff Correspondent
CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—Despairing of immediate relief from Washington, the farmers of the corn belt have decided to solve for themselves the corn crisis that threatens to push them back into pauperism.

Although some proposals are made for legislation designed to help dispose of the huge corn surplus that has depressed prices to drastically, the farmers, for the most part, have come to believe that relief with our people in the middle west.

In the last few days there has been a marked falling off of relief suggestions involving the government at Washington.

The plans contemplate some profitable disposition of the surplus, but the one that seems to be winning the most favor just now is the glorification of the old corn pone, corn fritter and corn bread.

Throughout Iowa, dining room men carry the admonition "eat more corn" and "day corn celebration" are planned in rural communities of numerous other states.

An effort will be made to have the stigma removed from corn sugar which the farmers say is just wholesome as that imported from Cuba. The first move in this campaign was started with the sending of a sack of corn sugar to the White House where it is being used by President Coolidge. A large Chicago agriculture foundation Friday evening announced a survey of 4,100 representative farmers showed that a majority of them believe their troubles could be ended by proper grain marketing machinery and co-operatives.

Only about three per cent have any faith in additional legislation, the survey revealed.

"WILD WEST" GANG IS TERRIFYING CALIFORNIA

PLEASANTON, Calif., Jan. 8.—Reverting to the tactics of "wild west" outlaws, a dozen desperadoes have undertaken a reign of lawlessness in this section.

Five of the gang, unmasked but wearing false moustaches, robbed the Amador Valley and First National Bank here Friday of $20,000. They swooped down upon the town in automobiles, went about their safe cracking violently and openly and sped away with a half hour's start of hastily summoned deputies.

Others of the band have been performing lesser robberies throughout the region for the last few days. Pleasanton is only 36 miles from the city of San Francisco, but the countryside is heavily wooded and rugged, highly suitable for use by bandits as a hiding place.

Miners and Owners Fail to Agree, But Meetings Continue

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Failing once more either to reach an agreement to settle the anthracite strike or to break up its negotiations, the joint conference of miners and operators adjourned at 5:35 Friday until 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

The delegates seemed to be as far apart as ever on the demand of the operators for arbitration and the demand of the miners for the check off.

Another unenlightened statement was issued at the conference adjourned. Its most significant portion was to the effect that there would be no night session. It was supposed that anyone holding any strong hope of settlement of the conference would have continued on into the evening as it did in the beginning.

VOODOO DOCTOR IS GIVEN FINE OF $50

DALLAS, Jan. 8.—Judge Wm. H. Cramer took time Friday during the trial of the case against the chiropractors to fine a negro "voodoo" doctor $50 and thirty minutes in jail for violation of the medical practice act.

"Voodoo" doctors are included among those against whom the state medical association is making a fight, T. J. Crowe, secretary of the state board of medical examiners, said.

Crowe was out on the stand Friday afternoon and defined each of 12 subjects on which board offers examinations, in the trial of Dr. S. T. McMurray, local chiropractor. Much of the time was spent by defense attorneys attempting to prove that chiropractors do not treat diseases they are not qualified to treat.

EARTHQUAKES VERY NUMEROUS IN EUROPE

From Gorge-Bled, Yugoslavia, strong signs of recurring Adriatic type earthquakes are reported in dispatches arriving in London. There were indications of greater disturbance at a considerable distance of Gorge-Bled. These quakes were the sixth of a series of shocks recorded in Europe this week.

Two hundred houses were damaged in Siena, Italy, during a twelve second quake Friday. The inhabitants were terrorized. Hundreds of persons are reported to be without homes as a result of the tremors. Three persons were hurt. At intervals during the early hours minor shocks continued.

The perfect at Rizzati rushed assistance to the affected regions. Slight tremors were felt at Canoli Italy, causing the populace to desert their homes for several hours.

STATE'S RIGHTS AND A MODIFIED PRO LAW ASKED

RITCHIE MUCH MORE OUTSPOKEN THAN GOVERNOR AL SMITH

By R. G. HOUSER
United News Staff Correspondent
CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—Hailed as the democratic presidential candidate of 1928, Governor Albert G. Ritchie of Maryland has submitted a national program of state's rights and Volstead law modification to the voters of the middle west.

In a Jackson address before the Chicago Linguists Club Friday night Governor Ritchie demanded restoration of personal rights and declared the democratic party is not without adequate leadership to win the next election.

Ritchie learned from many sources during the course of a day here that local democratic leaders were ready to boom his name as the party's presidential candidate in 1928. Mention of his presidential possibilities by Chairman A. A. Sprague and other speakers at the Jackson banquet brought cheers from the audience of 2,000 persons.

Over centralization in the present government is running away with personal liberties, he said. Let each state decide its own problems concerning the liberties of its own people, he urged. No two states are alike and it is foolish to try to fit them all to one standard of law.

"If for example, the people of any state are convinced that the ends of temperance can be best accomplished through light wine and beer rather than under present unfavorable conditions, then the people of such a state should be permitted to solve their problem in that way."

Governor Ritchie attacked federal subsidies to the states as another encroachment on state rights. "As a result of the enormous increase in subsidies," he said, "roads, agriculture, health, education, infant hygiene, motherhood and what not, the liberty of the state and of the individual, becomes impaired and the federal government impairs the development and the policy of the states and shames them not to fit the states' own peculiar needs but to fit the federal government's needs."

SOLUTION OF FARM PROBLEMS IS IN SIGHT

By ROBERT D. LUSK
United News Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Secretary of Agriculture Jardine is hopeful that he has found a solution of the perplexing farm relief problem. The panacea for the ills of the northwest, Jardine believes lies in the Dickinson bill, with reservations. These reservations he expects to work out during the next few days in conference with farm leaders, economists and business men. It is impossible that the amended measure will be ready to try out on the national co-operative conference convention here next week.

The Dickinson bill was introduced into the house early this week. In brief, it provides for the handling of the exportable surplus of fundamental farm products through co-operative organizations without government interference.

Following a conference with Representative Dickinson, Iowa, republican, Jardine announced late Friday that he was pleased with the measure sponsored by the western congressman. He indicated that he would seek certain minor changes. Subsequently, Dickinson announced that these changes could be made without damaging the effectiveness of the measure.

MAN LEAVES WIFE FOR PRETTY NIECE

CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—Although he has a wife and seven children in Rochester, N. Y., John Dunleavy could not resist the charm of Elsie, his 15 year old niece who lived with her parents on an Iowa farm.

While visiting with his brother on the farm a year ago, Dunleavy, who is 60, kidnapped the little girl and brought her to Chicago. For the last 12 months he has held her a prisoner in a rooming house.

Through a letter that Elsie dropped out of the window of her room several weeks ago the parents learned of their daughter's whereabouts and Friday she was rescued.

Her father, confronting his brother outside the detective bureau attempted to strangle him but the two were separated by detectives.

"I did not have to kidnap her," Dunleavy said. She was glad to leave the farm. When the baby came I gave her good care and the child is healthy and well fed. If I haven't acted like an uncle, to her, what of it? Am I the first uncle to fall for a pretty face?"

EL PASO MEXICAN PAYS DEATH PENALTY

HUNTSVILLE, Texas, Jan. 9.—Agapito Rueda, Mexican, was electrocuted at 12:41, Saturday morning for his part in the murder of William Meers, El Paso, Texas, policeman in March, 1924.

Meers was guarding a bank messenger when several Mexicans beat the messenger. Meers opened fire and the Mexicans fired back killing Meers. Rueda was convicted of the murder.

Rueda spent Friday nervously pacing his cell. According to Warden Speer, Rueda only requests were for fruit which was given him. Rueda received the Catholic services before going to his death. The saying of mass for him held up the electrocution about fifteen minutes. Rueda was still nervous during the religious ceremony.

At 12:30 the deputy warden and four guards started with the condemned man for the death chamber. Rueda, who had previously had his head and leg shaved, was strapped into the chair and the current turned on at 12:36.

The Mexican could not speak English and did not deliver any message before the execution other than that he was innocent which he has contended all along. At the last minute Rueda became calm and went to his death stoically.

Dr. T. C. Gibbs and other prominent Huntsville citizens made a last minute attempt to have Rueda's sentence commuted to life imprisonment on the grounds that Rueda was not an American citizen and that because of this the state should not claim his life.

Father Caldwell, Catholic prison chaplain, accompanied Rueda into the death chamber.

RED MEN ARE LIVING IN CONSTANT TERROR, ATTORNEY SAYS—PROBE CONTINUED BY FEDERAL FORCES

OSAGE HOMES SURROUNDED BY BRILLIANT LIGHTS AT NIGHT AS MATTER OF PROTECTION AGAINST MURDEROUS HANDS ON OUTLAWS

GUTHRIE, Okla., Jan. 9.—"Nothing so far reaching in murders ever has been revealed. Before this probe is ended, the entire United States will be astounded by the revelations. This was the declaration of Edwin K. Brown, special assistant attorney general, following the second day's investigation Thursday of the Osage Indian murders.

Brown, who has been investigating the strange case for several months, said the Osage Indians have been in a state of terror because of the mysterious succession of violent deaths within their tribe.

Many of the Osage homes, he said, are surrounded by strings of brilliant electric lights that burn constantly through the night.

The men escaped in an automobile heading in the direction of Stephenville and Granbury.

Pussyfoot Johnson Score Christians; Turks Praised

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The terrible Turk is the apple of "Pussyfoot" Johnson's remaining eye. He is a superior person to the veteran prohibition worker, who arrived back Friday from a European tour, because of his attitude toward liquor.

Nine tenths of the saloons and four fifths of the hotels in Turkey, the genial reformer explained, were operated by persons calling themselves Christians.

In Constantinople itself, he said, out of 1,600 saloons, 1,100 are operated by Greeks and the majority of the rest by Americans and Jews.

Other indications of Turkish superiority pointed to by Johnson were the abolition of polygamy and the fez. As a representative of the world league against alcoholism, Pussyfoot found that light wines and beer hadn't solved the liquor problem in Scandinavia "where I learned that people are not satisfied with those beverages, even when they contain as much as 24 per cent alcohol. Consequently they have bootleggers in Norway and Sweden as much as we have here."

Johnson held out no hope for liquor addicts in America, but he promised to fight prohibition if he became convinced that it was feasible.

MAN GOES TO HIS DEATH CLAIMING INNOCENCE

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 8.—Steadfastly maintaining that he was innocent of the crime for which he was condemned, Tyron Clark, 28, was electrocuted Friday for the murder of L. M. Stout, a banker of Sulphur Springs.

T. E. L. Class Receives Letter From Rev. Engram

The T. E. L. class of the First Baptist church received a very interesting letter from Rev. Engram who only recently returned to Brazil to renew his missionary work. The letter so plainly describes his voyage and how he found conditions upon his return, we feel sure others would enjoy it. The letter came addressed to Mrs. Gunn, who is class treasurer, and reads in part as follows:

"My dear friends: "At last we are here again and oh how happy it makes us to be on the field again. We are so grateful that the Heavenly Father has permitted us to come back, for there is so much to be done, and the workers are even fewer than when we left, and now the funds are even smaller, so surely we ought to be rejoicing to let our lives count for something in such a great opportunity for the Master."

"We had such a pleasant trip down. The ocean was almost like a lake most of the time, and the boat a floating palace. I was elected chairman of all sports of the voyage, and conducted the services on Sunday. We were sixteen days from New York to Rio de Janeiro—two days late due to an accident to one of the propellers of the ship."

"In Rio de Janeiro we found the school winding up a fine year with their graduation exercises the very night of the day we landed. I was surprised to find, however, that they had only five graduates, all girls, and no seminary graduates at all. I found that funds have been so short in helping young people who want to prepare themselves for the Master's work that the ranks of such students had been greatly depleted. Dr. Porter, who had charge of our school in Sao Paulo, the Girls' Junior College, told me that we had six young ladies to graduate and I was so glad to know that you folks of Lubbock had made it possible for one of the finest of all and yet one of the most dependent, to finish her course. The thing that broke my heart in Rio was to see the administration building that was begun before we left, and had gotten as far as the walls up, and the roof on, standing just as it was the day we left. If it could but be seen by the three million Baptists at home, through the eyes of these Brazilians who go so much on show. Oh what a shame would come over the Baptist ranks of the debt that has come on the board, and the orders that had to be sent out to stop all work on all the foreign fields. To think, as the Brazilians do, that Americans are the wealthiest folks in the world, and then to see the building stand for two years, now almost like an ancient ruin, instead of the glorious building it was meant to be to teach the precious gospel of Jesus, you can but half imagine how they judge our church."

"We were delighted beyond all expectations with the way our home and the school looked when we got to Sao Paulo. The flowers are just wonderful and the trees and grass had grown so much that the school campus and our yard looked like the Garden of Eden must have appeared to Adam and Eve. We are in the 'summer vacation' now and there are only two or three students here, but we have met many of them about the city and many of the teachers as well, and they all seem to be glad to see us that we are mighty happy that we are mighty happy that we came back."

Rev. Engram closes his letter by thanking the class for their help in money and prayers, and promises to write again soon.

Frocks Are Fashioned of Contrasting Fabrics

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

IN THE designing of present-day frocks, it is evident that stylists are proceeding along the theory that two materials are better than one. Just how the craze is for gray georgette, or crepe de chine, likewise dull crepe, satin trimmed with velvet of a darker shade. The effect is all that can be desired. Indeed, these charming gray costumes are at the moment outstripping in popularity the frocks in tan or sand shades.

A most effective fabric combination is that of georgette with crepe satin. The luster of the one offsets the dull finish of the other. In black or the darker shades the idea is worked out in a thoroughly practical manner in modish frocks for daytime wear. The dress pictured presents an interesting study in that the satin forms yoke, skirt, portion and applied plaits, while georgette serves for the long blouse portion. This is a very pretty suggestion of a between-season gown.

The newest idea for spring woolens is to combine materials alike in texture, but of contrasting color. A gray flannel collared, cuffed and bordered with like material in perfect blue indicates the latest in fashion.

Other information from style headquarters stresses the plain-colored skirt with tunic or blouse in gay print. Sometimes the tunic assumes a redolent aspect posed over a satin slip which is revealed at the front from a low neckline. Printed crepe de chine bordered with the material in solid color is the basis for very clever frocks. It is said that later on these crepe de chine compositions will include a costume cape to match. Indeed, fashion threatens to attach a cape to most anything in the way of blouse, wrap or dress this coming spring.

It is said that manufacturers, both of silk and woolen, alert to the prospect of combination effects, are helping the cause along by producing plain fabrics which exactly match some leading shade in the printed or novelty weave fabric. (© 1926 Western Newspaper Union.)

The other divisions of the contest will follow promptly after this division.

Dr. Here To Talk At Bovina
Dr. Paul W. Horn will leave this morning for Bovina where he will make talks before the Teacher's Institute there. His subject will be along educational lines and the importance of the Teachers' place in the school. This is the first engagement of the president since the holidays. He will fill many engagements during the next two terms, speaking to the various high schools over this section.

Sack and Baskin to Present 3 Act Play

A regular 3 act play will be presented to the public by the Sack and Baskin club during this term. The title of the play will be "The Charm School" by Alice Duer Miller. All characters will be selected from the roll of the club and practices will begin at once.

The play will be presented either at the high school auditorium or at the Lindsey theatre. The date will be announced later but it will be sometime during the next month. The club will also present a play at the close of school in June.

BLOOD AND SAND FROM EL TORO

We're peevish. Someone told us that instead of Blood and Sand, our column might have been named Bunk and Buck. We don't believe them—do you?

Anyway though, we're not quite so dumb as that girl in biology class the other day who, after the professor had explained that the human body contains 40 per cent water, said a varying amount of sulphur, exclaimed: "So that's why some girls make better matches than others."

However true that may be we do know that some of the Tech girls are a whole lot better than a bunch from other colleges we know of. Oh, you're quite welcome!

Seems that nothing interesting has happened. Didn't even snow enough to give us enough for snow balls. Well, maybe next time it will.

Toreador gets back to town today. That son of a gun has been A. W. O. L. (artfully wandering, out late for the past holidays, and he should have a few good ones to tell this time. We'll see.

We rather like our English teachers. Next to writing, we like best to talk. Especially to that cute little girl who went down to a local hospital to work the other day.

We: "What can you give me for my tonsils?"

Her: "Oh, sir, we don't buy them here, we only remove them."

Now that's the stuff. Book store has come across and is helping us out wonderfully. Since we didn't report for several courses we took last term, we decided it wasn't much use to keep our old books, and with the store buying them back, we can have lots more fun on that extra money. Only, now remember that we're telling you this just secretly, don't tell the home folks.

Headline: Alarming circumstance found to exist at the dairy barn! Pig born with an extra bone. Upon investigation however it was found to be the pig's sparerib. Next!

And the next day it rained. Actually there was a student in a certain class this morning who admitted that she wanted a certain teacher. And that teacher is handsome. Horrors! Scandal already.

TENANT FARMER IS PROSPERING IN THIS SECTION

(BY E. S. SHOAF)
LOCKNEY, Jan. 8.—The old saying, "That tenant farmer never gets anywhere," does not apply to John McDonald, Lockney farmer. McDonald has been a tenant farmer for the past ten years, and every year has been able to show a gain in his bank account.

In 1925 he planted 150 acres in milo maize, 25 acres in hygeri, 25 acres in sudan, 40 acres in millet, 45 acres cotton, 5 acres kaffir, 5 cane, 5 indian corn. He thought so little of his cotton crop that he has not gathered it. But has threshed over 6000 bushels of grain, and is saving 800 bushels of millet seed and 300 bushels of sudan, which he says that he will market at planting time.

McDonald is his own salesman and retails his seed direct to the consumers. Besides the grain crop the McDonalds practically raise everything that is used on their farm, besides canning over three hundred gallons of vegetables out of their garden they marketed $310.00 worth. About 400 Buff Orpington chickens are raised annually, and over $200.00 were derived from the sale of chickens and eggs this year. Besides McDonald his only help is his wife and two daughters.

McDonald came to Lockney in 1915 and says he was broke. Today he owns a quarter section of land in Lamb county that is very valuable and is free of debt, has ten teams of fine work stock, a good herd of jerseys, and several litters of fine hogs. McDonald says: "That a farmer to make good, must diversify, have determination, work hard, and produce most of his living at home."

Finds Sisters After Search of 20 Years

By United Press
FT. MADISON, Ia., Jan. 8.—William Hummer's search for his sisters, Helen and Mary, which began twenty-two years ago, ended today.

About a quarter of a century ago, Hummer, an adventurous youth, sought his fortune in the mining camps of Alaska. Two years later, disillusioned he returned to Des Moines where he expected to find his mother and sisters in the home which he left.

A cold vacant house greeted him, neighbors informed him that his mother died during his absence and that his sisters had moved away. No one could tell him where they had gone, but a rumor put him on a trail to Boise, Idaho.

His search in Boise was in vain. He roamed to other places, seeking the girls, but they seemed to have vanished. His wandering eventually led him back to Iowa, and for several years he has worked here.

Recently he stood on a corner waiting for a street car. A traveling salesman from Little Rock, Ark., waited beside him. Conversation about the weather led to actual introductions. The traveling man said he knew of two sisters by the name of Hummer who were in charge of an orphanage near Little Rock.

Hummer wrote at once. The answer to his inquiry today established their identity without question.

Students Mourn Loss of Football Coach

BY H. O. THOMPSON
United News Staff Correspondent
BERKELEY, Calif., Jan. 8.

The chimes of the Campanine have been silent since "Auld Lang Syne" sounded out over the University of California campus as students scurried off to their homes for the Christmas holiday and when these students gather again at the beginning of the new term next week, memories of this "Auld Acquaintance" with Andy Smith and sorrow at his death will overshadow all scholastic duties.

Smith who led California through five years of football without defeat, died Friday at Philadelphia of pneumonia and a pulmonary abscess ended his career. He was 43 years old.

The blonde angular coach brought his spontaneous grin to the campus here ten years ago. Rugby football was being played on the coast at the time, and Smith was looked upon with some little suspicion as he sought to instill fundamentals of the American game.

It was discouraging to the new coach. He used to tell how he "wore out a good many pairs of shoes," trudging across the gridiron to congratulate rival coaches after his team had taken a drubbing.

But in 1920 Smith turned out the first of his "wonder teams" and did no more hiking toward his opponents' bench until last October, when the Olympic club, with its collection of former collegiate stars, sent the Golden Bears down to their first defeat in six seasons.

The 1925 machine was beaten three times, by Washington and Stanford in conference games. But Andy Smith lost no prestige with University authorities and he was of fered a new contract for the longest term ever proposed at California.

Such names as "Buck" Muller, "Babe" Horrell, "Peaky" Sprott, Archie Nesbit, "Duke" Morrison, became famous in California under the Smith regime. It was Muller who astonished the football world by his 50 yard forward pass in the Bear-Olio state game at Pasadena, five years ago. California won, 20 to 0.

Heavy Snow Falls At Slaton

SLATON, Jan. 8.—A heavy snow reached this section from the north about three o'clock this morning and it is yet snowing at 9 o'clock leaving the earth covered with a heavy blanket of snow which will greatly benefit both the land and the wheat crop. A warm temperature prevails which will add greatly toward the land taking up this moisture.

Most all farmers are through with the gathering of their cotton and are now busy in both the stocking of their feeds, breaking land and otherwise getting ready for the planting of another crop.

Requesting annulment of her marriage, Mrs. Catherine Muir of Hull, Eng., declared that she was induced to wed after being given beer that "tasted strange."

Snow at Crosbyton To Benefit Farmers

CROSBYTON, Jan. 8.—A light snow fell here today. Conditions indicate more precipitation. Recent rain and this additional moisture will benefit the growing wheat in this vicinity the prospects are much better than at this time last year as here is good underground reason.

THE AWAKENING OF AGRICULTURE

Agriculture seems to be awakening from its primitive state and proposed to adopt those practices which have been found necessary and profitable in other great industries. Agriculture is beginning to understand that the old law of competition means business death and that the orthodox theory of the law of supply and demand only applies to the portion of a commodity which is offered for sale.

The farmers' hardest problem today is connected with the marketing of his products at a price which will enable him to live and continue to produce. Co-operative associations seem to solve part of the problem, but there are those who argue that this system seeks to avoid the law of supply and demand and will result in high prices to the consumer. Powerful interests, whose deep profits are threatened, oppose this movement, even men who would not invent a dollar in any industry that was not self-sustained by co-operation, combination or trust.

But it has been suggested that there is a discernible trend to more colors and curves and criminal waves—the woman's dress of the day affords a suggestive display of the figure that is demoralizing whereas old boys stare at baby and young men are led away more so than others: grow up to adult women who held that woman's dress as a virtue between good and evil, menace to morality—an external and completely unregulated to understand all sorts of sexual appeal which has lured a host of men to destruction.

Notwithstanding the distressing picture, there are reasons which are enough to know, who say that women would be far less dangerous if she wore even less clothes than in the tight-fitting serpentine effect so many favor.

Anyways the die seems to be cast. Equal rights means much more than the mere matter of voting to give women fellow a position of the public payroll. It means the discarding of feminine fictitiousness and fear—aid as far as one is able to discover Miss America seems well able to take care of herself and demand a larger degree of respect and respect based on merit rather than pity. The world grows bigger and better with every revolution. Our most difficult task seems to be to break away from the portentous boxes of fear into the bright sunshine of truth and honesty that the Creator intended.

Discussing the new accord between Russia and Turkey for a three year pact, the Turkish governmental organ published at Constantinople, says that Turkey was forced to make an alliance with Russia to protect its interests and independence. Both Turkey and Russia regard the Locarno pact as a selfish arrangement by four western powers to consolidate their own front and insure liberty of action in preparing for concerted attack on eastern nations.

The Great Northern Railroad has begun a tunnel 7 miles long through the Cascade mountains, which will shorten the line 18 miles and lower the elevation 1,000 feet, at a cost of ten million dollars.

Just at the commencement of the new year is a good time to ask yourself: "What am I going to do with my life?"

We thank the referee for his/her

We think that every

We think that society in America has come to a point in the life of a limited income and to indulge in it and live within its income.

We think this is a peculiar world, but it seems to be so odd that very few people are lined up to want to leave it, but I have noticed that there is a wonderful amount of assistance given or offered those who do.

need it, but to those who really in need there seems the very little help offered. Why not resolve to reverse the matter this year.

We think it must take a pretty long time. It is stated that a sound is long voice to carry across the world, it takes many million times over the radio.

We think a city wide pet show would probably be a very disgusting thing especially if the participants were one's wife, for what is there more disgusting than public spooning.

We think many women do not care to care or value their husbands very much till some accident befalls them and takes them away, and then they are worth a million.

We think there certainly could be a lot of real happy people in Texas if it makes a voluntary convict happy to stand out side and look in.

We think that higher education tends to have missed the mark because from the way the "Charleston" is going to the heels of college students, the education has hit low of the mark.

WE LOVE THEM MORE WHEN THEY ARE DEAD

In love them more when they are dead
And strongly, too, it seems to me
I love them more when they are dead
Than when we ever could be free.

Just the living and distinct
As when the counsel they are Give.
And the dead fallow from the dust
Come to us every day we live.

The little neither better grows
With every hour that slips away
It seems to us that now she knows
All that we are and do and say
Then was we hurt them thoughtlessly
Or failed to note the trouble
But we recall them tenderly
And love too much to hurt them now.

Bad weather caused a postponement of the flight which was scheduled to start at noon. Shortly before dusk, however, the big ship took to the air and did not land until more than 30 minutes after dark.

HUGE LEMON IS GIVEN EDITOR: IS REAL FRUIT

It is not an unusual thing for the editor of this paper to be handed a lemon, but yesterday he got the biggest one that has ever been presented, and it was sure enough fruit.

The lemon was large enough to be mistaken for a grape fruit, and according to Bruce Bryan and Mark Cummins, who brought this along with a quantity of other Rio Grande Valley fruit, it is not unusual to the large varieties of lemons grown there. The fruit was taken from a tree in the yard of H. O. Glasscock Cummins' uncle at Mercedes, where the crop is very good this year.

The lemon is 12 inches in circumference, and weighed one and a quarter pounds.

Lubbock County Man Pardoned; Officers Mad

The ire of the members of Sheriff Johnston's force has been raised by the action of her highness, the governor, in pardoning I. B. Dunlap of Lubbock county from the state penitentiary at Huntsville.

Dunlap, who was arrested here late in February, 1922, attempted to make fight with Deputy Sheriff Verne Ford, in fact according to the officer, leveled a gun at him, but withdrew it when Ford made a threat to use his gun and commanded Dunlap to drop his gun.

Dunlap was sentenced to serve one year in the state penitentiary on conviction on a charge of bootlegging, and at the time he was arrested together with B. A. Martin, who was sentenced to serve two years in the penitentiary, a quantity of whiskey was taken by the officers. This was presented as evidence in the trial of the case.

It does us a mighty lot of good to arrest and assist in the conviction of a bootlegger to have him turned loose after serving only a part of his term. Deputy Sheriff Ford said yesterday in commenting on the case. That he was displeased with the action of Governor Miriam Ferguson in pardoning Dunlap was expressed in a manner that could not be misunderstood.

Sheriff Johnston shared disappointment with Deputy Sheriff Ford over the pardon that was given Dunlap.

The members of the sheriff's force yesterday declared that they know nothing of what pressure was brought to bear in obtaining the pardon of Dunlap.

Future of The Jew Will Be Discussed At Sunday School

The above is the subject to be used by M. H. Duncan in the first of four addresses to be delivered to the members of the Goodfellow's Bible Class in the auditorium of the First Baptist Church on Sunday mornings at 9:45 o'clock on the Jewish Question. Some events are happening in the world that every thinking man wants to understand and the only one who does understand them is the one who reads his Bible and believes its message. We are living in an age when more of the plain prophecies of the Bible are being fulfilled than perhaps in any former age except that when the Savior first came into the world. Every thinking man will be interested in these addresses and all not attending Sunday School elsewhere are cordially invited to hear them. Music every Sunday by a splendid male quartette.

Electric Bakery Not Involved In Manhattan Sale

C. L. Purdue, owner and manager of the Electric Bakery is still very much in business despite the fact that in reporting the sale of the Manhattan Parlor a news writer for the Avalanche confused the names of the businesses and stated that the Electric Bakery was sold to the Citizens National Bank, whereas the bakery was in no wise affected by the sale.

The Manhattan Parlor occupies the front of the building, the rear of which is occupied by the Electric Bakery, and while the Manhattan parlor has been closed for some time the Electric Bakery has been in operation constantly since its establishment and business has been good, Purdue declares.

The Electric Bakery deserves a place among the progressively managed institutions of Lubbock, and any reflections that might have been cast on the business were entirely unintentional and the result of an oversight on the part of the news writer.

Fortunate for the Avalanche, Manager Purdue readily saw that the mistake was just one of those that will occur, and cheerfully waived it aside as one that will not do him a great deal of harm.

Electric Bakery products are sold in many of the leading groceries of Lubbock, and a big demand is made for them.

"Lamb Bites Wolf" would be an unusual headline, but one entirely appropriate to a recent dispatch from Duluth, which said: "George Lamb was fined for biting Morris Wolf during a fight over a bottle of whiskey."

Idalou Man Makes Race For County Commissioner

E. N. (Uncle Ed) Harrison of near Idalou, was here yesterday looking after business and authorized the Lubbock Morning Avalanche to announce his candidacy for the office of commissioner of Precinct No. Three.

Mr. Harrison, voters of that precinct will remember, made the race for that office last year, and in the July primary held second place only eight votes below the leading man. In the general election that fall he lost by only six votes, and believes that close margin is sufficient reason for his making the race again.

Mr. Harrison has been assured the hearty support of a large number of his friends there.

SLATON COMMERCIAL CLUBS LOOKS AT NEW YEAR POSPEROUS

SLATON, Jan. 8.—Everybody seems optimistic over the future possibilities of this year. As Slaton's Commercial Club together with the whole farming interest is featuring an outstanding diversified farm program. The poultry, hog, dairy, and more feed committee are now busy outlining and concreting a fixed program for the year's work.

It will be the purpose of this educational and farm program to foster those propositions that carry with them a general diversification, looking after, watching and maintaining both home and community interest. Embodied in this program are those far reaching and practical principles that have for their meaning and purpose to ever refrain from speculative or abusive credit and reach back and bring up the ark of the home covenant to grow your living at home. We anticipate through the application of this far reaching program to not only relieve the much embarrased and abused credit system but will further go in the development of both economy thrift and prosperity.

PAMPA CHAMBER TO IN- FLUENCE OUTSIDERS TO BUILD

PAMPA, Texas, Jan. 8.—The Pampa Chamber of Commerce is endeavoring to interest outside capital in building apartment houses to take care of the influx of people caused by the oil and general development in Pampa. This information was sent to the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. It is estimated that 200 houses will be needed before next spring. Requests for 15 houses were received last week. Pampa is also working to get a hard-surfaced road across Carson and Gray counties, and this will aid in the development of this region.

Sykes Wood, linotype operator, who has been employed on the Morning Avalanche, left yesterday for Wichita Falls for a short visit, from where he will go to El Paso thence to Holtville, California, where he will be employed on the Holtville Tribune. Too much cold weather on the plains was given as the reason for the move.

She laughed gaily but all she said was "Heaps!" After awhile she added, "But we mustn't reminisce, Teddy. It may transpire that some day I shall have nothing left but reminiscence. If that happens, I'll want them all saved up. You'll be one of the best of them."

He caught her hand, when she rose, and held her. She did not draw away, but stood quietly, her eyes meeting his. She was so close to him that he felt the warmth and tenderness of her, and that she was almost breathless. For one brief instant his brain went into a riot and he was dizzy. When his head cleared he felt her crushed against him, and realized that it was his own arms that were holding her there, holding her so tightly that already her lips were paling. He would have dropped his arms and released her but she caught them, and let him understand that she was yielding. She was even holding her pale lips to him. When, at last, she stirred, he kissed her again, and then freed her. Before she drew back she said to him:

"I would like to love you, Teddy, and if I could, I would. No one has ever said so fine a thing to me as you have—that you'd not only want me but take me however I am. That is so different than being told that I'm wanted but mustn't be had! I'll remember it whatever happens."

Before they reached the gates of the Villa Amette grounds Joanna brought up his threat to do the sporting thing with Kenilworth. "I'd rather you'd not tell him that I know what has been in the past between him and Yvonne," she said. "It hasn't interested me at all, you know."

Somehow, Teddy thought, it did interest her. He was foolishly bitter about it, and resentful, which he didn't have a chance to show, however, because they were turning in to the villa path and Joanna, with a flirt of her crop, broke into a final gallop toward the stables.

It was in the Englishman's love for fine horses. He seldom returned for a ride with Joanna, and these rides through the fragrant beauty of the Riviera hills were as frequent as she would grant, that he did not watch the groom rub down their horses and perform the countless little services which the British stable master finds as necessary to his charges as are the ministrations of a watchful maid to the grooming of her dainty mistress. Rest of the steeds they had ridden that morning had been his gift to the Golden Girl, brought from the stables in Sussex he had inherited with his other fortunes. It was significant of him that while Roddy Kenilworth showered her with things made from diamonds at every excuse for a gift that presented itself, and while Brandon, with a finer sense, found rare bits of bijouterie for her delight, Teddy had made it horses, with exquisite trappings coming along in periodical installments.

Joanna left him among the grooms after an affectionate rub at her steed's nose. Martha, who had caught the echoes of the gallop through the bridge path of Villa Amette had hurried out from the house with a soft cape for her mistress' shoulders, but Joanna waved her away and turned in among the beds of gorgeous pinks and French violets which lined the walk on either side up to a glistening white summer house, a miniature of the Petite Trianon of Versailles. This spacious summer house with its broad porches and crystal windows was famous along the Riviera in legends more or less romantic. When the grounds of Villa Amette were thrown open to some exotic revel the house in the "Amette Trianon" was the center of bizarre festivities. From its porches one might look along far stretches of the deep blue Mediterranean, and weave many idle fancies about the snake-like ships coming in from Suez or steaming along to Corsica.

Joanna dropped onto a step beneath the window and, with her customary trick of pulling up her knees and resting her chin in them, fell into a profound study. She did not notice when her riding crop slid from her listless fingers, nor when Martha who had been observing her, came across the lawn and stubbornly pressed the case, which was heavy enough to break the always cool and breezy, around her slim shoulders.

Of what Teddy had said to her only one thing hurt a bit. The talk among that circle of butterflies and butterfly hunters which make up the gay colony of gamblers—gamblers in love of one kind or another as well as in money of the only kind—that credited her with deliberately "stealing" from Yvonne, one by one, that rich company of devotees whose constant banging on about her had classified them as her own particular army of servicable gallants. It was true, of course, Brandon, for whom, she knew, Yvonne would have sold whatever soul she had; Roddy Kenilworth, who had once been much to Yvonne's count, and who, for some strange reason, might still command her when he chose to drop his gallant mask and tear hers aside; Michael, the Russian, who had saved his fortune from the debacle at St. Petersburg and had been generous with it to Yvonne's benefit; one or two others who flattered around her in London, and Paris and who counted in a lesser way, and even Teddy Dominister himself—for there always had been before a sort of genuine affection between Teddy and Yvonne which Yvonne had called upon at those times when she was a little tired of everything. All of these had made a coral of her own treasure chest and had climbed into it, each with his separate manner, and separate intent. Yet Yvonne had never revealed the slightest gesture of concern. Indeed, there were times when Joanna fancied that she gloried in the fickleness of her satellites. It was almost as if she deliberately invited it. And, then, there were other times, Joanna reflected, when she had surprised the weariness in the dense black eyes of the woman who had been, from her perspective, the ideal pattern in the minds of Miss Twenty-seven and her excessively modern kind.

Joanna had become so accustomed to riddles that she wouldn't fight them too long when they persisted in baffling her. A quick, nervous shrug of her shoulders was the sign that whichever way things went they would get to where they were going anyway. She reached for her riding crop which lay at her feet. While she was clasping it she was conscious of voices that floated out from the rose hung window just above her. She would have called out merrily for one of the grooms, was that of Yvonne, but one word pierced her brain as sharply as a sudden shock. Yvonne was saying—John! Her mind just escaping from the thrall of her reverie, it was caught and held again. Joanna was totally unconscious for a time, that she was listening. Yvonne was saying:

"I don't imagine his coming will make much of a difference. If he told her of this visit, or if she knew of it, she has not mentioned it. I doubt if he knows. It isn't a thing she would be secretive about."

The other voice was Brandon's. "Nevertheless he will have to be reckoned with. She hasn't seen him since she left America, and the situation is changed now. John Wilmore is the fumbling rascal you know. He was a year ago. He's around the popular enthusiasm. He is sufficient of a celebrity to be acclaimed in Europe.

"John wouldn't have me then," she said simply—"I doubt if he'd want me now."

"The homage people are paying him probably has ironed out some of the kinks in that condescending philosophy which irritated her when she wanted to find out how fast a pace she could go. He'll probably measure up fairly decently now."

Joanna felt the touch of irony in Yvonne's reply. "You'll hardly be afraid that he will measure up to Roddy, is he?" she asked. "Roddy is frankly worried by him. That I can understand because when Roddy goes on an emotional spree he scents a battle in every lone scout that gives his quarry a chance. But you are usually confident. And, if I'm not mistaken, you hold the whip and can swing it, whenever you are ready."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Only my careful deductions, my dear. I know you too well not to have my conclusions over every move you make. You've been so deliberate in your play that I know you can afford to take your time. That, to me means you're holding a trump of some kind. I won't ask you if I'm right, for of course you wouldn't tell me—the truth anyway."

He answered something, but Joanna had conquered herself and shut the voices away from her. She recovered her crop, rose quietly and went toward the house.

Chapter XXIV
Old Memories
In the house Joanna called her butler and inquired if any message, a telegram or cablegram, had arrived for her. The servant assured Mademoiselle none had. If John was coming or, as she understood from the conversation she had overheard, he was already some place near in the South of France, he had sent her no word.

She knew he was in London. He had written from there, his usual letter, glowing with the details of his reception by British architects, telling of some of his plans, and restrained affectionate. He had said he would "run down" to the Mediterranean soon, but had mentioned no time. She made sure of this omission by hunting out his letter and reading it again.

around at Michael's that the Golden Girl had stolen the prince away to rendezvous that required less possibility of intrusion than that offered by many palm hung nooks on his own estate. She talked of some of the details of the night before, and didn't mention that she knew of John's coming or arrival.

"Roddy turned up this morning after you had gone," she remarked, "and was in a fearful fret. I gave him what consolation I could which didn't satisfy him. I suggested he join us at tea at the Hermitage. I am supposed to drop in, there, on Michael. You will come along?"

Joanna agreed enthusiastically. "I must make some amends to Roddy," she observed. She didn't add that she was glad of the opportunity to settle the gossip over her and Michael by being seen casually, with him and Yvonne. She wanted to disprove any notion that she had time for an affair with this Russian whose emotional amusements were never romantic. She preferred that he remained classified as belonging to the other woman.

(When they crossed the lounge into the palm room, at the Hermitage the smartly gowned women and debonaire, idle men who gather from all parts of the world for this fashionable tea hour, exchanged furtive and curious glances. The two men were most discussed of the Riviera habitués, and the woman and the girl the season's brightest ornaments. For several weeks there had been rumors of some forthcoming event at Villa Amette. The Golden Girl, so the rumors ran, had wearied of such stereotyped thrills as spectacular plays at the roulette tables in the Casino, commonplace revels as were on the dull weekend among the Cap Martin villas—as Michael's for example. With her apparently endless supply of money and Yvonne's customary disregard of convention to support her, the news was, Mademoiselle Joanna was about to give the Riviera something actually worth while talking about. These echoes were vague, indefinite, but, it was observed, workmen already were mysteriously engaged on parts of the Villa Amette grounds.

"I have been approached by an exact dozen of people," Roddy remarked when they had settled to their tea, "so far today with a request for inside information as to what's coming off at Amette. Monte Carlo is getting uneasy."

"And you've told what they expect to hear, haven't you?" Joanna asked lightly, "that it's to be just another wild extravaganza of the mysterious American child?"

"I've told them nothing," he returned. "It will be time enough when I am entrusted with a few invitations to extend. I may have some of my friends, may I not?"

"Yvonne is really the hostess, you know," Joanna informed him, "I'm only helping to pay the bills. I haven't spent anything for an age, now, it seems. I must have a real fling."

It was then that Prince Michael cut in and set Joanna's pulses to racing. "I am reminded," he remarked, "Haven't I heard that Mademoiselle counted among her acquaintances at home this architect chap who is causing such a commotion just now? Wilmore, John Wilmore, I think it is. Sufficient importance for our season's journals to announce his rival at Monte Carlo. Extraordinary compliment, what with so many dukes and duchesses, right and left handed arriving daily. Am I right Mademoiselle? Have I heard his name and yours together?"

Joanna answered quietly. "It is possible. You hear so much about names being linked together, down here." She smiled at him quizzically.

He laughed pleasantly. Prince Michael was always pleasant, this Russian who found nothing in his thirty-five years to make him otherwise except on such temporary occasions as when outwitted in some amorous adventure. It was a pleasant, though, that impressed as a mask. The night before Joanna had known quite well there would have been no wedding formalities if she had found herself in Genoa with him. LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Prince of Wales suddenly has shown a disposition to forego the white lights and night air of London for the bucolic pleasures of his hunt country, and the assiduous accept of phenomena as an additional indication that he is not a Swedish Prince. Astrida of Sweden, who will play an "official" visit to the British court in the spring.

If the prince has not fallen in love he certainly gives indications of preparing to settle down to the business of being a king, and to take responsibility for placing an heir to succeed to the throne.

Since his return from Argentina, Wales has changed the gay schedule which used to take him into the west end of London most nights for a dinner, supper and dance until tea, and has substituted a more serious time hunting as usual, but instead of hurrying to the city after the hunt he is remaining at Melton Mowbray, where his stables are, to be fresh for the morning start.

Although London scarcely realizes it at the time, Wales has returned from the New Year's party with his brothers, the Duke of York and Prince Henry, the Prince spent the eve at Melton Mowbray.

England is eagerly awaiting the arrival of Astrida in the spring, believing she may be the future queen of England, and she is the one person it is reason to believe with some basis of fact, that Astrida's betrothal to Wales may be announced while she is in London. It is said that Wales fell in love with the Swedish princess in November. They met and danced together at the New Year's party, and the prince's usual gentle manners in the Melton Mowbray country. She is fond of outdoors sports, as is the prince.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—First prize for naivety goes to the Pennsylvania state boxing commission.

Nothing has handed a certain section of the sporting public such a good laugh as the commission's appeal to Jack Dempsey to fight in Philadelphia during the sescentennial exposition.

William H. Rocap, chairman of the chairman of the commission based his appeal on the grounds of "patriotism."

What led the boxing lords of Pennsylvania to imagine the heavy weight champion would be moved by patriotism from his celluloid pedestal and the conception of Dempsey has steadfastly refused to listen to reason, sportsmanship, adequate financial offers and the demands of the boxing fans whose support made him what he is today.

It is probable that he was stirred by motives of patriotism back in 1916.

And again, where does the "patriotism" enter in? The promoters of the seignior-confederal want to make all the money they can, and are willing to do anything which other promoters who can bring attractions to Philadelphia during 1926 and go 50-50 on the profits.

One hundred and fifty years ago, historic events shaping our nation, took place in Philadelphia. Just because they were there, the memory of these events would be furthered by the appearance of Jack Dempsey in tight's is a mystery to some of us.

Quite naturally for Dempsey, the champion replied that he would have to know more about the Pennsylvania seignior confederal proposal before he could give a definite answer. Jack will want to know how many dollars are going to Jack for this exhibition of "patriotism."

Kell Looks To 1926 With Hopes Of a Great Year

WICHITA FALLS, Jan. 28.—Frank Kell, railroad builder, and millionaire grain man thinks that Texas will experience a year of unusual prosperity in 1926.

Kell, a director of the Federal Reserve Bank of the Eleventh district, Dallas, pointed out in an address that the re-discounts of the Reserve Bank are only $10,000,000, compared to $117,000,000 the year following the par, indicating that Texas farmers are nearly so heavily indebted to their bankers as they have been.

"The cattle industry," he declared, "is to stage a wonderful comeback and soon will assume a place it long has held in the state's regular agnarian enterprise as one of the leading industries in Texas."

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 17.—Billy Wolf's barber shop on Congress Avenue is more than a barber shop. It has been the place where notable of the state have had their faces shaved and their necks clipped for years.

Back in the days of the private shaving man, Wolf refused to and held the patronage of the politicians and big business men around the picturesque state capital.

Eccentric as he is, Wolf's idea of having a hall of fame in his shop has made it even more famous than the one in London.

One hundred and fifty five framed photographs of Wolf's distinguished customers grace the walls of the renowned consorial parlor.

Attorney General Dan Moody, Texas' "man of the hour" is the latest addition to Wolf's "Hall of Fame." His photograph was hung last week.

There is only one person whose photograph graces the shop who didn't come to the shop for shaves. She is Miriam A. Ferguson, Texas'

THE FOUNDATIONS OF GREAT- NESS

It is an old saying that heroism is founded upon weakness—of other men.

Greatness of most men is built upon the meidity of the masses.

Napoleon's career emphasizes this. As Venice, a character in Anatole France's The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnet, explains:

"He (Napoleon) was violent and frivolous; and thus profoundly human. But that I mean, like other people."

He aspired to enjoy unlimited power, which is what the ordinary man esteen and desires.

"He himself was possessed of the illusions with which he inspired the people. They constituted his strength and his greatness, and were his chief adornment."

"Concerning life and society he held about the same opinions as one of his grenadiers."

And that is the childish seriousness which takes delight in word play and the beating of drums, and that kind of innocence which makes good soldiers. "He had a sincere respect for force. "He was a man among men, flesh of their flesh. "He never had a single thought that did not express itself in actions that were grandiose and ordinary. "Heroes are the product of this vulgar greatness. And Napoleon is the perfect hero. "He never traveled more quickly than by hand, that beautiful little hand that ground the world. "He never for a single moment cared for anything he could not realize."

We possess the collection of Napoleon's writings and his speeches. In this mass of ideas there is not a hint of philosophical curiosity, of any interest in the unknowable, of any preoccupation with the mystery of destiny.

His great dream of life was earth-bound.

Such is the condition of most men of genius. They live entirely for the moment, and their genius is concentrated on one point.

They do not develop; one condition merely succeeds another in a series of deeds.

Hannah Mantou, wife of a blacksmith at Troy, N. Y., is reputed to have been the first person to make collars and cuffs separate from men's shirts, just 100 years ago. If our laundrymen possess a spark of gratitude they will erect a monument to their benefactor in honor of the centennial of her invention.

DALLAS, Texas, Jan. 8.—J. Edgar Few of Dallas, an officer of the Sun Company and president of the American Petroleum Institute, has just made public a set of figures indicating the size of the oil industry in Texas, which are startling.

The total amount invested in the petroleum industry in Texas alone amounts to $961,572,232. Texas' oil refining plants have a capacity of 500,000 barrels. Texas produced 133,000,000 barrels of oil in 1924. There are 400,000 miles of pipe in the state, and 70,000 men are employed in the various departments of the industry. (The railroads of the state employ 74,000.)

$20,865,432 was paid in oil royalties to the state in 1924, and with bonuses and lease rentals the total income to the land holders amounted to $192,115,166 in 1924.

A dental college for women has been opened in Manila, with a woman dean, this being the first institution of its kind for women in the Philippines.

MARKETS

New York Finance
By TODD W. WRIGHT
United News Financial Editor
NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The stock market started down in expected fashion at the opening Friday as a result of the increase in the New York Federal Reserve Bank's re-discount rate to 4 per cent.
Little headway was made after the initial reaction, however, for those who realized the higher rate was nothing to worry about as a market factor were busy accumulating stocks at what they considered bargain prices and an irregular recovery proceeded throughout most of the session.

It is plainly evident from the market's behavior that the time was not yet ripe for any general reaction, for the most stubborn resistance was displayed by virtually every department at any attempt to force prices down after the opening slump.

Those of a conservative frame of mind (and they greatly outnumber those otherwise inclined) looked upon the increase in the bank rate as a constructive factor rather than one to cause alarm.
They argued that worry over the increase had precipitated numerous reaction in the past and that regularly every week the bears had been able to create much unnecessary uneasiness by circulating rumors of an impending increase in the bank rate.
With this disturbing factor out of the way, now, the usual mid-week irregularity will be eliminated to a great extent, they believe, which should help the market to maintain even tenor.

Perhaps the cost interesting feature of Friday's stock market was the heaviness in Woolworth shares due to news of the sale of 50,000 shares of stock by Barbara Hutton, 15 year old grand daughter of the late five and ten cent magnate.
The sale is said to have involved more than $10,000,000 and is one of the largest single private stock transactions ever made in Wall street.

Gypsy, the Black Bear, his head pressed just as close against the bars of his cage as he could get it, was listening with all his might. At the last words of Polar Bear he suspected:

on the rock? Or wasn't that water over your head? You couldn't catch me in a pool any deeper than my shoulders, I'll tell you that!"

Polar Bear threw back his head and laughed long and loud.

"Why, even a baby Polar would scorn a pool shoulder deep. I am a swimmer, my friend, and there are few creatures of the Sea that can beat me at cutting the waves. Was that water over my head? I should say so! Goodness knows how many Bears could have stood up straight upon my shoulders in the depths to which I sank and still not have poked a nose above the surface. That was a glorious dive. I remember it quite as well as if I took it but yesterday."

Then Polar Bear thought, looked about him and sighed, but he went Special requests received at a recent concert over KUT were so numerous that two University students were kept busy taking them down, it is said. According to radio performers, the University broadcasting station is one of the best in the country.

Town Pump Gives Gasoline Drilling Finds No Source

JAMESTOWN, N. D., Jan. 8.—(United Press).—Parity of the old town well at Robinson, 75 miles northwest of here, which suddenly started yielding oil where only water was desired or expected, and persisted of more recently drilled wells which refuse despite prayers and exhortations to produce anything but pure water, has created considerable dissatisfaction with nature in this corner of North Dakota.

For 20 years the old town well at Robinson, a cavern 600 feet deep, provided a never-failing supply of clear, cold water. It was the best drinking water in the village and 500 inhabitants, all of Robinson, depended upon it.

But one day the bucket emerged from the well containing a liquid contaminated with a foreign substance, later identified as oil. The contamination continued with increasing intensity until finally it was the purest mixture of gasoline and petroleum ever found in the United States.

The brown fluid tested 62.8 per cent. Only twice before in American oil history had petroleum in its natural state attained a test of 60 per cent. Geologists called upon to investigate said Robinson's oil supply filtered through a formation of quick sand and alkali which accounted for its unusual purity.

The oil continued to form a coating over the water in the town well and ruined utterly the formerly faithful source of supply. Many residents bemoaned the condition. But foreign ers, with little interest in the quality of Robinson's water, reacted differently to the news of oil where only water had been before. All projects started immediately to appear.

Notable among the ventures launched was that of A. C. Townley, organizer and head of the Nonpartisan league during its political heyday. On a five acre tract near Robinson he caused to be erected a derrick towing 85 feet into the air and around it a 15-foot board fence.

It was rumored outside the inaccessible enclosure that $20,000 worth of casing and equipment was at the foot of the $5,000 derrick and that Townley was spending a total of $100,000 in his effort to tap the source of contamination of the Robinson town well.

Thus far, however, there has been no report of oil anywhere in the state except what accumulates in the well. Only pure water has been secured under the crust of earth in Robinson and its environs. Other projects than those already started are planned. Hope for those to come and annoyance with those already started runs high.

LONGHORN QUINTET STARTS NEW YEAR WITH GOOD RECORD

By United News

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 8.—The Longhorn quintet of the University of Texas enters its basketball schedule in 1926 with an enviable record of past victories to uphold. Of 154 conference games played since 1906, some 112 have been won by the Longhorns. Scores against the various conference teams on the 1926 Longhorn schedule are as follows: Texas Christian University 1, Texas 11; Rice Institute 8, Texas 25; Southern Methodist University 2, Texas 19; Baylor University 10, Texas 31; University of Arkansas 0, Texas 4; A. and C. College 17, Texas 13. The games played with Centenary College this year also counts on the conference standing of the University.

Fumiko Mitani, a Japanese, has been awarded the cup annually given to the "perfect girl" of the senior class of Mount Holyoke College, she being the first foreign student to win the coveted honor.
