GROESBECK (AP) — A former bank teller and her husband have been charged with killing an executive at the bank where she worked.

Dava Beth Truett, 39, and husband Jerry Bayne Truett, 44, surrendered to Limestone County authorities around 8 p.m. Thursday, Sheriff Doyle Coslin said today.

Each was charged with murder and theft over $200,000 in the May 14 robbery at the First State Bank of Kosse. The Truettts were held in the Limestone County Jail this morning on $1 million bond each, although a bond reduction hearing was scheduled for today.

A grand jury handed up a sealed indictment against the two Wednesday and warrants were issued for them Thursday, Coslin said.

"It's been awhile," Coslin said. "I guess we won't have final closure til the trial is over, but I'm kind of glad to have it to this point."

Authorities allege the two killed bank vice president Michael Wells, 52, so he wouldn't report that they had embezzled more than $700,000 from the bank.

Mrs. Truett worked with Wells for more than 20 years. She told police an intruder who came to the bank's back door hit her in the head and knocked her out before the bank opened. She said that when she regained consciousness, Wells was lying near the unopened vault. He had been shot to death.

Federal, state and local investigators later found that more than $700,000 was missing from the bank.

The Truettts also were indicted in October on federal charges of embezzlement, bank fraud, conspiring to embezzle from the bank, conspiring to tamper with a witness and bank robbery.

• O.A. "Drag" Bynum Sr., 84, lifelong cowboy, former saddle shop owner.
• Earnest E. "Gene" Fenton, 73, retired employee of McCracken Electrical Company.
• Bonnie M. Holt, 91, former bank director.
• Frank Hughes, 54, pawn shop co-owner.

Possible Y2K power outages not seen as big problem, SPS reports

By MIRANDA G. BAILEY
Managing Editor

It will take approximately eight hours for power grids to be rebuilt if there are any power outages as a result of computers that are not Y2K compliant come Jan. 1, 2000, according to SPS officials.

"This is really encouraging," said Ken Hall, Pampa Emergency Management Coordinator.

Hall, and the city's financial director, John Horst, conducted the city's third community Y2K meeting at M.K. Brown Auditorium Thursday morning where about 25 people crowded into the building's green room.

News of the projected eight-hour response time, city officials said, affects Pampa in another positive way because the town's water supply uses power to pump in fresh water.

In a worst case scenario, said Horst, if the power was out longer and we couldn't pump fresh water to those tanks, then we would have to conserve water.

"It shouldn't be anything that we can't cope with," he said.

But citizens need to save water before the electricity goes out, Horst added.

"When we had the winter ice storm, we used water at a high rate," he said. "Worse than any summer day we've ever had."

He suggested that if residents fill their bathtubs with water this winter in the event that the power goes out, then they should do it a couple of days before the new year.

When asked by one resident, Horst said the average family in Pampa uses 8,000 gallons of water a month.

"I was trying to buy water up, but I can't buy that much," responded the resident.

The city will have diesel and water tanks "topped up" just prior to the first of the year, said Horst, and emergency generators will be on hand to keep city communications going.

"If everything goes as anticipated, there shouldn't be much problem," he said.

In addition, a spokesperson from Energas approached the group with more good news about his company's efforts to stay online New Year's week-end.

"Most of our equipment is mechanical and will not be affected by electronics," he said.

He added that Energas employees will be working New Year's Eve at Pampa's two stations on S. Price Road and S. Barnes to override the system mechanically if something goes wrong electronically.

"None of this should detract the public from being prepared," said Hall.

Embedded computer chips that are not able to be tested or spotted in electronic systems, said Ken Hall, is the biggest concern regarding Y2K issues.

He maintained that residents should at least plan to be prepared for a 72-hour period without utilities.

Stephanie Guest of the Pampa Red Cross said her office is still offering Y2K talks to interested groups and "we have a really good Y2K brochure," she added.

Beer bash goes bust 60 teenagers nailed at barn

It was a beer bash that went bust when an abandoned wrecked auto investigation led, rather indirectly, to the misbehaving teens.

Gray County Deputy Derek Peters was patrolling in the Bowers City area about 11:30 Saturday when he came across a one-vehicle wreck on FM 749. No driver could be found and the deputy began trying to locate the driver, according to Gray County Sheriff's Lt. Jim Scott.

He was soon joined by other deputies and Game Warden Mark McQueary. They noted there was an unusual amount of traffic around for what's normal in the area.

When they began to run down where the traffic was headed it wasn't long before the officers discovered the vehicles were going to a barn in a field just off Gray 12 1/2.

Inside the barn, deputies found over 60 young people having a beer party. Help in handling the group came from Constable James Lewis, DPS troopers Ron Shanks and Larry Pulliam and others who were called in to help handle the juveniles. Parents were called to pick up their children.

Three adults were arrested, Derek Lee Taylor and Jeremy

Three people were taken to Pampa Regional Medical Center when a Chevrolet van collided with a Geo Prism driven by Kay Kibbe Thursday afternoon about 5 at the intersection of Price and Highway 60. Kibbe was treated and released. The names and conditions of the occupants of the van weren't available pending the report's filing. The wreck is still under investigation by the DPS.

Chaplain's Program new for city's police

Pampa's police officers will have a chance to meet with members of the clergy on a regular basis thanks to a Chaplain's Program now being organized.

Police Chief Charlie Morris said various members of the city's clergy have been invited to come to police headquarters on a scheduled basis to meet with officers. All discussions will be held in confidence.

"They may discuss family issues, problems with stress or any concern," Morris recently told city commissioners. "It will be open to any subject ... whatever they want to talk about."

Morris said he's talked with a number of local ministers who are willing to donate their time to the program which will provide a voluntary opportunity for the officers to seek spiritual guidance.

"We recognize that members of law enforcement agencies are often called upon to deal with life's tragedies, sometimes finding themselves caught up in frustration, despair and isolation," the chief said.

"These stresses can spill over into the individual's personal life causing negative impacts on domestic and professional relationships," Morris said at the commission's work session.

Weekend events abound! Eat, walk, dance, just look

By MIRANDA G. BAILEY

Plays, free food and entertainment are at the top of this weekend's list of things to do in Pampa.

The First Christian Church is hosting a free stew meal at the VFW during their "Souper Saturday" from 11 to 2 p.m. tomorrow, Sat., April 24. The meal is free and there are no qualifications or restrictions.

"Due to the many lay-offs that have occurred in the city, it is the hope of First Christian Church to do something to help the community of Pampa," according to Shirley Winborne.

Saturday afternoon, the Pregnancy Center of Pampa is holding its annual "Walk for Life" at the high school track.

Heart Gala Saturday night!

The day will begin with a coloring contest for children and face painting. A hot dog lunch will be served after the 2-mile walk. Call 669-2229 for more details.

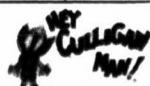

All fans of drama are invited to come out and watch ACT I's "Twelve Angry Men" tonight and Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. Tickets can be purchased at the door of ACT I's location in the Pampa Mall for $7.50 for adults or $3.50 for students. The entrance is on the west side of the building, next to Homeland.

For the young ... or younger at heart ... there is a benefit dance for high school cancer patient Amy Newhouse Sat., April 24 from 8 to midnight at the VFW building. All benefits are going to the family, and "Azria," a live White Deer band, is performing. Cost is $3 per person.

Also at the Pampa Chamber of Commerce building Saturday night is the American Heart Association's, "Country Heart Gala." Beginning at 7 p.m., the public is invited to bid in a live art auction featuring local artists as well as a silent auction with items donated from local merchants. Sponsored by the Cabot Corporation, the gala is providing live entertainment by the Magic City Cowboy Band. Tickets can be purchased at the door for $15.

Wright, both 18, from Pampa were charged for minor in consumption, and Logan Peter Stinnett, 19, from Pampa was arrested for evading arrest.

Six juveniles were also taken into custody, according to Scott, some for evading arrest and others because they were on probation. Those six were turned over to Juvenile Probation officials and later released to their parents.

"We want parents to know if they have information about these parties we will help them," Scott said. "And we want the kids to know that it's a dangerous situation. They don't need to be drinking and they should know we're out there watching."

Colorado teens had juvenile officers, other people fooled

LITTLETON, Colo. (AP) — Less than three months before their carefully planned attack on Columbine High schoolmates, Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris were impressing a juvenile-court officer as bright young men with "a great deal of potential."

He wasn't the only one fooled: Neighbors and friends say they were reassured by the teens' middle-class backgrounds and quiet, "utterly normal" family lives.

Klebold, 17, and Harris, 18, were caught breaking into a van last year and entered a juvenile-court diversion program allowing them to clear their records. They finished the program in February, with flying colors.

"Eric is a very bright young man who is likely to succeed in life. He is intelligent enough to achieve lofty goals as long as he stays on task and remains motivated," a diversion officer wrote in Jefferson County District Court documents released Thursday. The officer's name was blacked out by the court.

Of Klebold, the officer wrote: "Dylan has earned the right for an early termination. ... He is intelligent enough to make any dream a reality but he needs to understand hard work is part of it."

Each teen completed 45 hours of community service, received counseling and wrote an apology letter. Harris received additional counseling in anger management, which he enjoyed, the officer wrote.

"These guys came in and put their best face on," said District Attorney Dave Thomas, the diversion officer's boss. "Most of us in the system wish we were human lie-detectors, but we're not."

The teens' middle-class upbringing also lulled adults into complacency.

At school, Klebold and Harris openly admired Hitler, hurled insults at minorities and conducted a running feud with the school's athletes. In the presence of adults, however, they were polite and friendly.

Klebold lived in a home worth nearly $400,000, a modernistic cedar-and-glass structure tucked between two huge stone formations on a rural road.

His father, Thomas Klebold, 52, is a former geophysicist who now runs a mortgage management business from his home. His mother, Susan, 50, has worked for the Colorado community-college system for years, helping disabled students gain access to education.

His maternal grandfather, the late Leo Yassenoff, was a prominent Jewish philanthropist in Columbus, Ohio. The Columbus Dispatch reported today. The Jewish Community Center of Columbus was named for him.

"We're all scratching our heads right now," said Michael Briand, who knows Susan Klebold from Klebold, 17, and Harris, 18, were caught breaking into a van last year and entered a juvenile-court diversion program allowing them to clear their records. They finished the program in February, with flying colors.

Klebold lived in a home worth nearly $400,000, a modernistic cedar-and-glass structure tucked between two huge stone formations on a rural road.

Harris moved to Littleton in 1996 from Plattsburgh, N.Y., where his father, Wayne Harris, was an Air Force pilot. In Littleton, the family bought a two-story, $184,000 home on a quiet cul-de-sac.

his work as a community-development consultant at Arapahoe Community College.

Briand said Thomas Klebold is known as a liberal who favors gun control. Susan Klebold is a sensitive listener.

"As far as I can tell, this family was utterly, utterly normal," Briand said. "They did everything right. But somehow the pain and anger was too deep, and they didn't see it or couldn't reach it."

Harris moved to Littleton in 1996 from Plattsburgh, N.Y., where his father, Wayne Harris, was an Air Force pilot. In Littleton, the family bought a two-story, $184,000 home on a quiet cul-de-sac. Wayne Harris got a job at a flight-safety business, and his wife, Katherine, went to work for a catering company, according to the juvenile-court documents.

Neighbors say Wayne and Katherine were quiet, sometimes waving across the fence while in the yard but making little effort to socialize. Eric's older brother, Kevin, played basketball with neighbors on trips home from college.

"They were pretty nice people, pretty quiet. They seemed to get along with everyone," said Matt Good, 46, who lives two doors away. Former neighbors in Plattsburgh remember the Harrises as a solid, middle-class family with a likable young son. They were shocked to learn that Eric Harris had shot up a school.

"My mouth just dropped," former classmate Kyle Ross said. "He was a typical kid. He didn't seem anything like what is portrayed on TV."

The families were avoiding reporters, but both issued statements expressing sympathy for the victims, and Klebold's family wondered what went wrong: "Like the rest of the country, we are struggling to understand why this happened."

Briand said Klebold's parents grew hopeful in recent months that their son was starting to lose his fascination with the black clothes and rebellious ways of "Goth" culture.

There are also signs that Klebold's father suspected his son was still a threat to himself and others.

On Tuesday, amid TV reports of gunmen in trench coats rampaging through Columbine High, the elder Klebold contacted authorities, suspecting his son was involved and offering his help as a mediator.

Officials said he was too late.

Seat belts do save lives — I'm living proof

Gray County Memories

Marie Bartholomew

I'm going to get on my soapbox and write about a cause that is important to me, especially this time of year with graduation and proms.

Recently I was in a store shopping when I heard a group of excited young ladies talking about their prom. The conversation drifted to their respective prom dresses. One of the young ladies mentioned that she was worried that the seat belt in the car would damage her dress. As I listened, they did a round robin on whether or not to wear the seat belt. Thankfully, they decided it was better to wear the seat belt and I was spared being the nosy older generation giving a lecture on safety.

Like Jeff West, I hate the idea that there is no freedom of choice regarding seat belts. It just goes against everything I believe in. However, seat belts do save lives. The only reason you're reading this now is because of a seat belt.

The day of my accident was like any other day. My boyfriend, Rick (now husband) and I were less than three miles from home, returning from an errand, driving on a residential street well under the speed limit. As we entered an intersection on a green light, a bobtail truck in the left turn lane facing us turned left into our car.

I wasn't one to always wear a seat belt. Rick, on the other hand, wouldn't move the car unless I was belted in. His insistence is what saved my life.

Rick was the driver and I was the passenger. Our car was a little Toyota MR2. The impact of the collision spun the car into a light pole that resulted in the rear left passenger side of the car to totally disintegrate. From the light pole we spun like a top 200 feet down the street. Fortunately there was no one else on the road.

We were lucky. Even though our small car was totaled, we walked away from the car with minor injuries. My knees will never be the same. Rick's shoulder will always give him trouble. But we are both alive. We wouldn't be if we weren't belted in. There is no doubt in my mind that without my seat belt I would have ended up going through the windshield. I was thrown around in the car so hard that I wore the imprint of the seat belt for a month.

Texas Editorials

By The Associated Press

A sampling of editorial opinion from Texas newspapers:

Fort Worth Star-Telegram on DFW Airport:
Although Fort Worth and the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport board did not really expect the U.S. Department of Transportation to change its position on air passenger service expansion, they had to go through the motions of requesting the agency to reconsider it.

Late last year, the transportation department ruled that the so-called Shelby Amendment — passed by Congress last fall as a modification to the Wright Amendment — takes precedence over the 1968 bond agreements that Fort Worth and Dallas entered into to pay for the construction of Dallas/Fort Worth Airport.

The modified Wright Amendment allows nonstop flights between Dallas Love Field and airports in Kansas, Mississippi and Alabama, in addition to the four states adjoining Texas permitted by the original legislation.

Fort Worth, the regional airport board and American Airlines have filed suit contending that the bond agreements prohibit Dallas from allowing expanded activity at Love Field that would compete with service provided at DFW Airport. The plaintiffs have prevailed in the state courts.

Dallas contends that it has no choice but to comply with the federal law that allows interstate flights to those seven states, as well as flights to any part of the nation using aircraft modified to carry no more than 56 passengers.

The city is supported by Continental Airlines, Continental Express and Legend Airlines, a company that wants to begin offering service at Love Field using the 56-passenger planes.

The lawsuit will go to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals unless Fort Worth and Dallas can hammer out a new agreement under which Dallas will commit to exercise its authority to limit commercial air passenger service at Love Field. They should give that one more try.

Texarkana Gazette on hazardous waste disposal:

If you dump it on the ground, one day you might be drinking it. That's a good rule of thumb for all to remember when dealing with hazardous chemicals.

It's something, though, that some folks either don't know about, or just don't care about. That's truly unfortunate for our environment, and for future generations who ultimately will suffer for our ignorance or intolerance.

And there's no question that improperly dumped chemicals pose a threat to our immediate and future health.

Dumping just a small amount of gasoline or motor oil on the ground can foul groundwater supplies for years to come. Considering just how many of our local people get their drinking water from wells, this could be a potentially big problem if it isn't dealt with properly and strictly according to law.

Dumping into creeks and on other rural sites also damages the environment. Local officials cite two complete fish kills in the past couple of years that were directly linked to chemicals illegally poured into two area creeks. The damage to our ecosystem sometimes cannot be measured for years to come—far too late to correct the problem.

Dumping hazardous chemicals into our drainage systems kills the microbes that work to treat our local wastewater, which in turn damage the machinery used in wastewater treatment. Breakdowns here could pose water quality problems, not to mention the cost to taxpayers of repairing or replacing broken equipment.

Carver Terrace. A good example of showing that what we don't know can hurt us. Lacking appropriate rules and regulations for disposal of hazardous waste, dumping at Carver Terrace wasn't regulated. We know how much this has cost both in tax and corporate dollars and in the quality of life for its former residents.

And these are just a few of the examples.

One of the problems, observers say, is that we are seeing more and more illegal dumping of hazardous chemicals because the cost of proper disposal can be quite expensive. Those who follow the law understand that disposal of hazardous materials used in their work is just a cost of doing business.

There are those, though, who care about the almighty dollar far more than they do about the health and safety of people around them. Unsuspecting business owners are finding that some of the companies with whom they contract for chemical disposal services aren't following the guidelines set in place to provide for legal and proper chemical disposal—which today is a big business with bigger profits when disposal fees are pocketed because the dumper opted for a creek instead of a regulated disposal site.

So we all lose, and we all pay when tax dollars are used to clean up spills and illegal dumping. We pay with the future of our health, and in the environmental quality of life we leave for those who will come behind us—and are forced to live with or to deal with the cost of our complacency or our lack of concern for the environment.

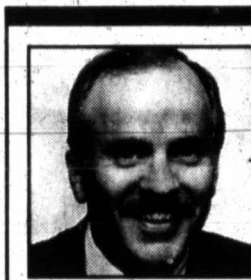

Tax code mocks democracy

The consent of the governed is the foundation of the American system of government. But anyone coming face to face with the Internal Revenue Code, as most of us have in recent weeks, might legitimately wonder: Who consented to this?

An illiterate could not legally be held to the terms of a contract he signed without grasping what it said, and most Americans have no more comprehension of their income tax laws than a 3-year-old has of "Paradise Lost." The current tax code runs to 1.3 million words — twice the length of "War and Peace," as journalist Amity Shlaes notes in her fine new book "The Greedy Hand: How Taxes Drive Americans Crazy and What to Do About It" (Random House).

But the code itself is only the Cliffs Notes version. To puzzle out what those 1.3 million words mean, you'd need to slog through the accompanying regulations, which contain another 5.75 million words (eight times as many as the Bible). By the time you finished them, of course, they would have been revised, and you would have to start all over. To implement the facetiously titled Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, the Internal Revenue Service had to draft and adopt no fewer than 1,260 new provisions, which works out to nearly one change for every day since the previous major tax bill was enacted in 1993.

An unwelcome result, of course, is that it is impossible to know whether you have fulfilled the obligations needed to avoid going to jail. When Money magazine asked 50 professional tax preparers to calculate the amount owed by a hypothetical middle-class family, the answers ranged from $12,000 to $36,000. Only 11 of the specialists came close to the correct amount, which was $23,400, and on average, the experts were off by $1,500.

Even the most conscientious law-abiding citizen has no hope of being able to conform her behavior to the law. The IRS may accurately categorize virtually any of us as a felon whenever it chooses.

But far worse is what all this suggests for democracy. Through its length, complexity and impenetrability, the tax code has effectively nullified the right of the people to rule themselves. The central instrument of government in modern America is one that citizens cannot possibly consent to, because they don't — and can't — know what's in it.

If voters were forced to choose between two ballot initiatives written in an alien and untranslatable language, you could say they agreed to the terms of the winning one. But the consent would be a grotesque parody of popular government. The same fundamental illegitimacy attaches to the tax code. Few of its components reflect the public will for the simple reason that few of them are even known to the public.

It may be said that it's not important for citizens to understand all the rules by which they are relieved of their earnings. Our system, after all, is not a direct democracy but a republic, in which voters delegate the power over such matters to elected representatives. Just as it's the job of Congress to oversee arcane subjects like weapons procurement and antitrust policy, which are beyond the ken of most people, lawmakers are expected to do the hard thinking on taxes so the rest of us don't have to bother our little heads about it.

Good theory, but it doesn't describe reality. The tax code is written mostly by bureaucrats given the assignment of putting flesh on the bones of laws passed by Congress. As for those laws, bills revising the tax code customarily consist of towering piles of paper that probably no member of Congress reads in full, never mind understands. They are produced on chaotic and fast-moving assembly lines, with dozens of people contributing one or two items and no one taking responsibility for the final product.

The marvel is not that our elected officials don't read these things; it's that we don't even expect them to. The people to whom we have assigned the solemn task of writing our laws have gotten in the habit of passing laws that others have written, whose contents are largely a mystery to them. They are legislating in ignorance, making a mockery of the idea that their actions should be expressive of, and accountable to, the will of the people.

Ordinary Americans can only guess whether the tax code created by Congress and the IRS reflects our preferences, because it is so inaccessible to us. But by now, it seems almost quaint that our colonial forebears revolted against rule by a British king, as the Declaration of Independence said, because of his practice of "imposing taxes on us without our consent." A tax code that we didn't vote for and can't understand is a threat to reduce American democracy to a hollow shell. And I don't remember anyone consenting to that.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, April 23, the 113th day of 1999. There are 252 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On April 23, 1899, Russian-American author Vladimir

Nabokov was born in St. Petersburg.

On this date:

In 1564, English poet and dramatist William Shakespeare is believed to have been born; he died 52 years later, also on April 23.

In 1789, President-elect Washington and his wife moved into the first executive mansion, the Franklin House, in New York.

In 1791, the 15th president of the United States, James Buchanan, was born in Franklin County, Penn.

In 1896, the "Vitascope" system for projecting movies onto a screen was demonstrated in New York City.

In 1940, about 200 people died in a dance hall fire in Natchez, Miss.

The real reason we are in Kosovo

Kosovo burst into our national consciousness all at once. A month ago, it was "Will Hillary run for the Senate?" and "Did Al Gore really say he had been a farmer?" Before we knew it, our planes were bombing Yugoslavia, refugees were pouring out of Kosovo, young Kosovar men were disappearing, and the United States was plunged into a debate over ground troops.

Why did this crisis erupt so suddenly? The Clinton administration has been dealing with Slobodan Milosevic for six years. It was content to see Serbia lob mortars into downtown Sarajevo, round up Bosnian Muslim men and starve them in concentration camps, engage in the systematic rape of Bosnian women and girls, and more — all with hardly a protest and certainly without the claim that American or NATO credibility was at stake. (At the end of the Bosnian conflict, NATO did drop some bombs, but only after years of dithering and only when Croatian troops were settling the matter on the ground.)

Certainly it is difficult to credit the claim that President Clinton was overcome with humanitarian concern. As the CATO Institute's Doug Bandow has pointed out, "At least twice as many people died in January alone in Sierra Leone than in all of Kosovo last year." And this administration instructed the United Nations in 1994 not to use the word "genocide" about the slaughters in Rwanda, lest the emotional freight of the word impel action.

So why are we now embarking upon a military adventure that has not been thought through, has no clear goals and has precipitated some of the civilian suffering it was designed to prevent — all in a region where no American interests are at stake?

Mona Charen
Syndicated columnist

The answer may very well be "wag the dog." This is a serious charge, but then, we are dealing with a president who is not above bombing unfriendly countries to distract attention from the grand jury testimony of former paramours. ("Frontline" recently revisited the question of whether the pharmaceutical plant we bombed in Khartoum, Sudan — following Clinton's testimony before the grand jury — was truly manufacturing chemical weapons and reported that the evidence was "inconclusive.")

Why does the president need a distraction right now? Not to cover up his sexual squalor but to create a smoke screen before his national security squalor.

Almost unnoticed amid the Kosovo agitation was explosive testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee recently by Notra Trulock, formerly the director of intelligence at the Department of Energy. Trulock testified that he had approached senior Energy Department officials with information suggesting that our nuclear labs had been penetrated by Chinese intelligence and that key nuclear technology, including the design for the neutron bomb and for the W-88 nuclear warhead, our most advanced, had been stolen. Trulock told the senators that "Beginning in early 1997, senior DOE officials, including my direct supervisor, urged me to cover up and bury this case."

The Clinton-appointed officials were concerned, Trulock explained, that information about theft of secrets would harm the credibility of the laboratories and might affect congressional funding decisions. (No kidding.) Besides, he was told, the presence of a spy at Los Alamos would not "affect" the Clinton administration's policy of using the laboratories to further its engagement policy with China.

Quite true. The administration's response to reports of Chinese spying has been so lax as to suggest indifference. National security adviser Sandy Berger, who represented Beijing as a lawyer before assuming his post, was first told about Chinese espionage at the nuclear labs in April 1996. Yet Berger withheld the information from the president until July 1997. But even then, he did not detail the nature of the security breaches.

Wen Ho Lee, the scientist identified by the FBI as the main suspect, was fired from his job in February of this year but not arrested. Only within the past several days has the FBI even searched his house.

The initial response by the president to the revelation of this devastatingly successful spying by China was political. It all happened on Reagan's and Bush's watch, he claimed. When it became clear that the worst had happened since 1995, and that the president had lied about it, his response was ... Kosovo.

Puppies are easier to take care of ... Religion briefs...

The next day after I finished my morning pot of coffee, thumbed the fat Sunday newspaper and put on my yardworking duds, I looked again at Evie's number magnet on the front of my refrigerator.

"I wonder who in the world would let their daughter call BST," I mulled. "And why would any child want to do that? It must be a joke. This child must watch too much television."

But Evie's voice haunted me. It lacked the confidence or outrage of a child miffed with a mother who makes her mind or a father who demands her homework be perfect.

In fact, Evie's voice sounded abandoned. Abandoned and alone and well, little. As if no blossom had forced her soul open wide for the pleasures of being loved like a little girl deserved.

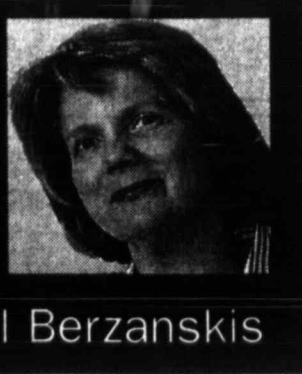

Again, for some mysterious reason, except it must have been a graceful serendipity, I picked up the telephone and called Evie's number.

"I'll bet her mother will answer and we'll have a good laugh over Evie giving herself away like a puppy," I thought.

After two rings, the telephone was answered. It was the same little voice I'd heard the day before on BST.

From the Back Pew...

By Cheryl Berzanskis

"Hello."

"Hello, is this Evie? Are you the girl who called BST yesterday?"

"It's me. Do you want a little girl?"

"Evie, my name is Agnes Best. Is your mommy home?"

The line was heavy with Evie's silence.

"Evie? Are you there?"

"My ma is not here. She dances all night and she sleeps a lot. I think she's sick."

"Why do you want a new home? What does your mommy say? Does she know you called BST?"

"She knows. She said if I could find I good home, I could go. She said she'd rather have a puppy anyway."

"Where do you live? I'll drive out to see you."

Based on Evie's rather sketchy directions, I found the shack that only the most generous definition could call a home with a refrigerator well-stocked with moldy food but no fresh milk and only hairy green bread in the cabinet. A fire engine red telephone was enshrined on its own altar, complete with telephone book.

Evie and I perched on whopsided chairs and she told me her story, as much as a child can tell when she doesn't know how to describe a mother who dances all night and who might be sick. It was from hearing the travails of that little unblossomed soul, that I purposed to take Evie home with me. So I sat and waited for her mother. I waited until dawn.

When her mother came home the next morning, sick and exhausted from dancing all night, it was okay with her for Evie to stuff her little duds in a convenience store sack and ride off with me. After all, she said, a puppy is easier to take care of.

For a better understanding

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — There have always been a lot of born-again Christians in the nation's prisons. Now, inmates are converting to more diverse faiths, including Islam, which adherents say is the world's fastest-growing religion.

So those who work with prisoners in Missouri are attending an Islamic Center to learn what it means to be a follower of Islam. The latest enrollees were 24 jail administrators, staff, guards and other corrections employees at prisons and jails in Moberly, Fulton, St. Louis and Jefferson City.

Islamic Center director Mohammed Eldeib told the group that the key to eliminating stereotypical attitudes is to understand the basics, the foundations and the principles of the religions.

And, he said it is important for those who deal with Muslim prisoners to know their customs so they can help them meet religious tenets. Muslims, for example, are required to pray five times a day and with a congregation on Friday, their holy day.

Eldeib said corrections officers who are sympathetic to converts will reap benefits in the inmates' behavior. They will see a transformation, he said, because the inmate becomes more open-minded, more understanding.

Billboard ads are 'words of God'

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — It's not every day you see a message from God. Especially on a billboard. There it is, overlooking the strip mall parking lots: "Come on over, and bring the kids. — God."

Nondenominational messages began appearing on billboards in the Fort Lauderdale, Fla., area last year, funded by an anonymous donor.

They now appear in 200 cities in 40 states, on more than $13 million worth of donated ad space, said Sheila Hays, spokeswoman for the Outdoor Advertising Association of America, which has adopted the campaign.

Andy Smith of Fort Lauderdale, whose ad agency designed the campaign, said the donor is a religious person who "thought if people started thinking about God, maybe things would get better around the world."

Among billboard messages attributed to God:

"What part of 'Thou shalt not ...' didn't you understand?"

"Let's meet at my house Sunday before the game."

"I can think of 10 things that ARE carved in stone."

Weekly ends 'pray and publish' ads

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Catholic Telegraph, the official newspaper of the Cincinnati archdiocese, has ended its long-standing practice of printing "thank you" ads to saints.

The weekly newspaper, in its 168th year, said the ads, which cost $30 apiece, were dropped as of April 1 because they appear to make promises that cannot be guaranteed.

The so-called "pray and publish" ads typically give thanks to a particular saint for answering a prayer. The prayer is published in the ad and others are encouraged to use it. But after the prayer is said, the ad maintains it must be published for it to work.

Telegraph Editor Tricia Hempel said she decided the ads resemble chain letters.

"Our mission is to educate, to inform, to encourage dialogue and to evangelize," Ms. Hempel said. "I looked at these ads and could not see that they fit in with our mission in any way, shape or form."

A dog named Mohammed?

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Lebanese singer Najwa Karam returned to Egypt when officials lifted a ban imposed in the belief that she named her dog after Islam's Prophet Mohammed.

Muslims consider dogs unclean, and to insult Prophet Mohammed is blasphemous.

Egyptian security officials barred Karam from entering Egypt in early April, saying she insulted the founder of Islam and criticized Egypt. The ban was canceled after she wrote to the information minister, asking him to reconsider.

A magazine had claimed Karam, a Christian, had named her dog after the founder of Islam. She denied the accusation, saying the "enemies of success and religion" were behind it. The claim prompted many radio and TV stations to ban her songs.

Nontraditional Wedding Ring Doesn't Carry Traditional Weight

DEAR ABBY: I'm a desk clerk at a hotel in Arizona, and I get hit on a lot. I think the reason probably is that I do not wear a traditional gold wedding band. I am not into diamonds and gold. My husband and I prefer simple silver and turquoise rings.

You would not believe how many rude comments I receive about my ring. When I pointed to my ring and told one man I was married, he said in an exasperated tone, "But that's not a wedding ring!" Says who? I wanted to sock him.

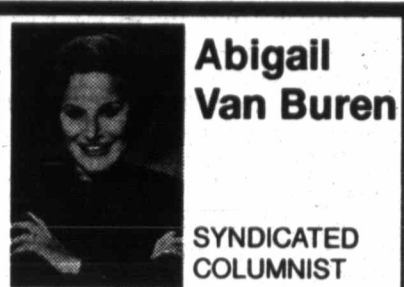

A co-worker referred to my husband as "your husband, your boyfriend — whatever," I said, "Husband! We're married." He said, "Well, where's your wedding ring?"

Abby, women are the worst. Once I mention I am married, I see their eyes glance to see what kind of "rock" I have, and a mixed expression of revulsion, pity and disbelief washes over their faces. It makes me feel uncomfortable and angry. Sometimes I feel like hiding my hands to avoid this treatment. Why should I have to feel ashamed of my wedding ring?

I have considered trading in our silver and turquoise rings just to please the crowd. Abby, sort of toting my wedding certificate around in my backpack, what can I do to fend off this rudeness?

lessness of co-workers and hotel guests, but don't let their comments get to you.

I see no reason why you should replace the ring your husband placed on your finger. Nor should you have to carry around a copy of your marriage certificate. A better way to get your message across would be to keep a small, framed wedding photo nearby to present when words fail you.

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column for years but have never written. However, I felt compelled to do so after reading the letter from Donna R. Berryman, stating: "Bookstores are just what the name implies — stores."

Abby, my husband and I own a bookstore. We do research and place special orders for our customers as well as provide many other services. We have a terrific staff consisting of teachers, math and science majors, and other college students.

Our store works hand-in-hand with a local library, and we have donated books to it as well as sent customers their way. In return, they refer people to our bookstore.

I ask that Ms. Berryman not pass judgment on bookstores. I also invite her to visit ours — we welcome the opportunity to show her how we compare with a library. I think she would be impressed.

SUZANNE E. LAYFIELD,
LITTLE PROFESSOR BOOK CENTER, MC KINNEY, TEXAS

DEAR SUZANNE: It sounds as though you have a wonderful bookstore. Many people find it helpful to use both bookstores and libraries for their needs. Over the last 10 years, bookstores have become increasingly diverse, dynamic and customer service-oriented. However for those who cannot afford to buy books, or need help researching what they need, the library is an invaluable resource.

changed. Don't push yourself. Tonight: Get a good night's sleep.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★ Expenses could go way overboard if you aren't careful. Be strong and resist taking any financial or emotional risks. They will not pay off under the present stellar influences. You are obligated to make an appearance; smile and make the best of it. Tonight: At a favorite restaurant.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ Accept an invitation for a day trip, though you might prefer to sit home and flip through travel catalogs. You need some time away from it all. Even the household pet could be getting on your nerves! Be indulgent with others as well as yourself. Tonight: Try a new eatery.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★ A partner means well, extending his hand to you and caring in his unique way. You might see this person as cold or repressed at times; remember, you chose to have him in your life. Don't let a misunderstanding escalate. Could you be making more of this than need be? Tonight: Be vulnerable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★ The financial implications of a decision might be uncomfortable. Join friends and make the most of the convivial atmosphere. You don't need money to visit and to have a good time. Others want you around because no one can add to a gathering like you can! Tonight: Wherever it's happening!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★ Be honest. You are clearly out of sorts and are unable to deal with mounting pressure. Take a break, cancel plans and take care of yourself. Decide to make an appointment for a checkup, or perhaps consider a visit with a nutritionist. Tonight: Prepare for work, then early to bed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★ Ingenuity and mental acuity mix. Brainstorm with others. How you view another and what you ask for may be affected by your mood. You could be out of sorts about plans. If so, change them and create what you want. Think in terms of trips and vacations. Tonight: Write that letter.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Pressure escalates on the homefront. Do what you need to do. Don't allow another to intimidate you. Scrap plans, if necessary. A partner needs your attention and time. Discussions need to be heartfelt and open. Don't let the future cloud your thinking now. Tonight: Continue talks.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★ Others clearly want your attention. However, you are just one person, with the same 24 hours in a day. Be willing to say "no" to an authority figure for now. A partner or important friend really does need your time. Your steady influence grounds this relationship. Tonight: Dinner out — why cook?

BASKETBALL

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — After two days of grieving with their neighbors, the Colorado Rockies were relieved to be playing baseball again.

Playing for the first time since 15 people died in the shootings at Columbine High School in suburban Denver, the Rockies had seven straight hits while scoring five runs in the first to defeat the San Francisco Giants 8-5 Thursday.

"It was huge to play again. I think you could tell by the first inning, guys were getting up there and hacking," Darryl Hamilton said. "The last few days have been extremely tough."

The Rockies, who postponed home games against Montreal on Tuesday and Wednesday, had "CHS" patches on their right sleeves in memory of the victims.

"I think there was some pent-up energy there, we hadn't played in a while," said Dante Bichette.

Rangers regroup for win

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When Matt Lawton's right shoulder slammed into the left side of Ivan Rodriguez's face, a rough stretch seemed about to get a lot worse for the Texas Rangers.

The Rangers had lost four of five heading into Thursday night's game at Minnesota. Their starting pitching had been dismal, and their imposing lineup mostly punchless.

Then it looked like they might lose their seven-time All-Star catcher for a significant amount of time.

But instead of a serious facial injury, Rodriguez was diagnosed with a slight concussion, and instead of another loss the Rangers regrouped for a 6-4 victory over the Twins.

Aaron Sele turned in 5 2-3 solid innings, rookie reliever Jeff Zimmerman extended his career-starting scoreless streak to 10 innings and four players supplied the power as Texas avoided a three-game losing streak.

"As long as we keep it at two all year we'll be fine," manager Johnny Oates said. "Aaron threw really well early in the ball game, the bullpen did the job and we had that one big inning (eighth), which has been the case for us a lot this year. That's the type of offense we have. We get going and we can put a crooked number up there pretty quickly."

That's the key for the Rangers: If they get going. Their 8-8 record still is good enough for first place in the AL West, and they have done it with one of the AL's worst pitching staffs and 1998 MVP Juan Gonzalez stuck in a deep slump.

Gonzalez, who set a major league record with 36 RBIs last April, hasn't driven in a run in seven games and hasn't hit a homer all season after hitting at least 42 each of the last three years.

It appeared Thursday that they might have lost Rodriguez, too. But X-rays showed no serious injury. He was diagnosed with a slight concussion and a bruised left cheekbone and is listed as day-to-day.

Oates refused to speculate on when Rodriguez might return.

"It was one of those things you hate to see happen, but that's the way to play the game of baseball," said Lawton, who also left the game with a right shoulder injury.

The Rangers responded quickly to Rodriguez's departure.

Rafael Palmeiro made it 1-0 in the second inning with his third homer, and Lee Stevens hit his team-leading fifth leading off the third for a 2-0 lead.

Sele (3-1) allowed only one runner past first through five innings, then left after allowing one run in the third. Zimmerman wiggled out of a bases-loaded jam after relieving Sele with two outs in the sixth, and then the Rangers added four runs in the eighth on consecutive two-run doubles by Roberto Kelly and Rusty Greer.

The Twins rallied with three runs in the ninth, including Torii Hunter's RBI triple, but John Wetteland got the final out for his fifth save. It wasn't the kind of dominating performance the Rangers expect, but it was a win and, as far as Rodriguez was concerned, it came without a significant long-term loss.

"We've had inconsistency from everywhere," Oates said. "But the good part about it is we've got a lot of time to get it all ironed out."

The Twins wasted a strong start by Eric Milton (0-1), who allowed just three hits through seven-plus innings. Two of those were homers, and he also allowed four walks as he gave up four runs.

Losing Lawton, who is hitting .522 in his last six games, took a lot of the bite out of Minnesota's lineup. But he expects to be able to play tonight.

"Milton certainly pitched a good game and gave us a chance to win," manager Tom Kelly said. "We couldn't do anything offensively to help him."

Pampa at Hereford

PAMPA — Pampa goes to Hereford on Saturday for a key District 3-4A baseball game, starting at 1 p.m. A win would clinch a playoff spot for the Harvesters, who lead district with a 6-1 record.

Hereford is at the bottom of the district standings with a 1-6 mark, but the Whitefaces have been no pushover. Palo Duro had to hold off a late rally by Hereford before claiming a 5-4 win Tuesday.

In their first meeting, Pampa and Hereford were involved in a slugfest with the Harvesters pulling away to a 12-10 win at Harvester Field.

Pampa, 15-10 overall, could have clinched a playoff spot and a tie for the district championship Tuesday against Dumas. However, three home runs by Brent Phelps, Casey Owens and Brandon Hill couldn't overcome Pampa miscues in the field as Dumas came away with a 9-8 win.

The Harvesters are going for their second straight trip to the playoffs.

Caprock downed Borger 10-3 in another 1-4A game played Tuesday. None of the district teams have been eliminated from the playoffs yet. Borger meets Dumas and Palo Duro goes against Caprock in other Saturday action.

District 3-4A

Team	District	Overall
Pampa	6-1	15-10
Dumas	4-3	11-11-1
Palo Duro	4-3	9-10
Borger	3-4	6-14
Caprock	3-4	7-12
Hereford	1-6	4-14-3

Girls 13 to 23 years old are eligible to enter. Entry forms, rules and general information can be obtained by contacting the rodeo office at 200 N. Ballard, Pampa, or by calling 806-669-0434.

Winners will receive many outstanding prizes, including saddles sponsored by JLB Ranch and Ace Transportation; buckles sponsored by The Clark Carr & Sons Memorial, Carla and Randy Norris; tiaras donated by Bob Clements, Inc., and others. A scholarship will also be presented to Miss Rodeo Top O' Texas.

CHILDRESS — Caryn Lowrey of Pampa competes in breakaway roping for the Tri-State High School Rodeo Club.

During a recent Tri-State rodeo in Childress, Lowrey placed seventh with a time of 5.7 seconds. Many of the average rodeo fans, Leeann Winton believes, don't understand the rules of the girls' event.

Winton, an adult sponsor of the Pampa Tri-State High School Rodeo Club, said the object of breakaway roping is for the contestant to tie the end of their rope (with Tri-State approved string) to their saddle horn. They nod for their calf as in calf roping — take off and (catch as catch can) their rope must go over the calves head.

Winton said the contestant than pulls her slack, stops her horse and time expires when the string tied to the rope and saddle horn break.

"Caryn was lucky because her slack tightened on the calves back hooves just before the calf ran completely through the loop," Winton said. "Luck is a big word in the sport of rodeo since you're dealing with live animals."

Committee approves revamped tax bill

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate Education Committee today approved a school funding bill that includes $1.7 billion to boost teacher compensation as well as the bulk of a $1 billion property-tax relief package.

The 8-0 vote came after committee members voted for a mechanism to ensure school districts actually spend at least 60 percent of the money intended for teacher salaries on such raises. The measure now goes to the full Senate.

While the bill got a unanimous vote to move forward, it drew questions from one senator over whether it might be used as a vehicle for a separate, hotly debated measure — a proposed pilot program of public funding for private school tuition.

Sen. Royce West, an opponent of the so-called voucher proposal, raised the issue with Senate Education Committee Chairman Teel Bivins, sponsor of the voucher measure and the school funding bill.

Bivins, R-Amarillo, has been working to muster support for vouchers but said the votes aren't there "at least today." A two-thirds vote is necessary to bring up a bill for Senate debate.

"Do we have your word as a senator, as the author and as chairman of this committee to resist any amendment to put vouchers in this bill?" asked West, D-Dallas.

Bivins responded, "The pilot voucher program is my bill. My resisting it is ... asking me to compromise my beliefs."

He later said he knows of no effort to offer such an amendment. "I am certainly not going to use this bill as a vehicle to offer an amendment for my voucher program."

The school funding package includes more money for teacher pay and less for tax relief than a measure Bivins offered earlier. The proposed property tax relief is about half that sought by Republican Gov. George W. Bush.

The package includes, under the heading of tax relief, $750 million for facilities; $100 million to extend a homestead exemption increase; $50 million for fast-growth school districts; and $125 million for school districts with declining property values.

The last item is in the state budget rather than in the bill approved today.

Regarding teacher pay, the bill would raise the state minimum salary schedule for classroom teachers and full-time librarians by $4,000.

The committee today moved to address concerns that teachers who already make more than the proposed new minimum wouldn't get a raise. A number of school districts already supplement the state minimum salary with additional local money.

Under the bill, school districts would have to use at least 60 percent of the new money to raise teachers' pay above the amount to which they were entitled the previous year.

Bivins' school funding bill is SB4.

Restaurant chain wants Yahoo! to reveal posting source

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston-based restaurant chain has asked a judge to force Internet hub Yahoo! to reveal who has been placing "unlawful messages" on its site about a seafood chain.

Executives of Landry's Seafood Restaurant contend that the electronic notes have contributed to the company's financial woes. "Landry's believes that certain individuals have in the past made, and may in the future make, certain false, defamatory, libelous, slanderous, threatening, or otherwise unlawful statements on Yahoo Message Boards about Landry's or individuals associated with Landry's," the petition, filed Wednesday in state district court, stated. "Some of these statements suggest knowledge of 'inside' information detrimental to both Landry's, its investors and the stock market as a whole," the petition read.

The restaurant chain said the derogatory comments on the Santa Clara, Calif.-based Yahoo began on Nov. 26, 1997.
