MEN HURL GIRL TO DEATH FROM CAR

Sacco and Vanzetti Face Death in Chair Tonight at Boston

ALL EFFORTS TO SAVE PAIR MEET FAILURE

U. S. Supreme Court As Last Resort Gives No Succor

BOTH MEN READY

Convicted Radicals Had Already Lost Hope For Lives

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21. (AP)—Counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti obtained over telephone today from supreme court officials the summer addresses of all justices within a day's reach of Boston. Chief Justice Taft's summer address at Murray Bay, Quebec, was said to have been particularly requested.

By Universal Service.

BOSTON, Aug. 21.—The last hope of Sacco and Vanzetti to beat the death chair tomorrow night went glimmering today when Justice Brandeis of the United States supreme court refused to entertain a petition for a stay of execution.

Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes denied a similar petition yesterday.

Justice Brandeis declined to make any statement for publication but Arthur D. Hill, chief of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense counsel, said the justice had given as his reason the fact that his family was so interested in the case it would be unethical for him to intervene.

Counsel Disheartened

Hill visited Justice Brandeis at the latter's home in Chatham, 130 miles from Boston. When he returned to Boston with the news he was gloomy.

He has but one more move. That is to appeal to a supreme court justice, Harlan Stone, who is spending his vacation on the coast of Maine. Jane Adams of Chicago, went to see Justice Stone today to prepare a friendly reception for Hill.

Hill made his appeal to Justice Brandeis to stay the execution pending official filing with the supreme court at Washington for a writ of ceriorari. Undaunted by his

Verbal Dynamite Bombs Wreck Plan Of Universal Union of All Churches

Lausanne Conference Ends Wtih No Decision On Proposal to Combine Rival Denominations

Special Cable Dispatch. Copyright, 1927, By Universal Service.

LAUSANNE, Aug. 21.—"The tumult and shouting dies; the captains and the kings depart." To the sorrow of all among the 87 parties composing the world conference of faith and order, that conference has not so much adjourned as it has been dynamited by explosives whereof these dispatches gave warning. It has closed with interdenominational expressions of esteem, but called to prepare the way towards unity, its last act was to table the scheme for unity drawn up by its commission appointed to deal with that subject.

Lausanne is strewn with unionism's dead. The Rome universalists and half of the Baptists were never officially present. The eastern orthodox church has withdrawn its hundred and ten million. The Lutherans, old Catholics and Armenians are aloof.

Issues to Churches.

A series of statements of recommendations has been passed to receive formal transmission to the churches. The recommendations seem harmless to the uninitiated but it is admitted that they will not be endorsed by a third of the denominations; where these findings are not vague generalities, they are inadmissable to one sect or another. The last minute operation injected young blood into the continuation committee but the dream of adolescence lies shattered.

All along there have been two armies in this field, one hoping for doctrinal unity, the other favoring mers federation. True, a report on the gospel was received, although it evinced strong conservation, even the German higher critics agreeing that the church's message must be: "Jesus Christ, the eternal word incarnate." True, too, the credal committee pronounced the prescriptive a nice symbol and both these commissions included Quakers and Congressionalists. Nevertheless, the rupture inevitably came on the ministry and sacraments.

Power of Bishops.

Regarding the ministry, such communions as the old Catholics, who left Rome only on the question of papal infallibility, the or-

F. B. MASHBURN DROPS DEAD IN HOTEL LOBBY

Clerk of Joline Hotel Dies Suddenly Of Heart Attack

WIFE SURVIVES HIM

Mashburn Was Chatting With Friends As Death Comes

F. B. Mashburn, about 47 years of age, for the last few months night clerk at the Joline hotel, 907 Indiana, dropped dead while sitting with a circle of friends in the lobby of the hotel at 7:50 o'clock Sunday night.

Death came within 15 minutes after Mr. Mashburn swooned in his chair and fell to the floor. Night Chief of Police Glen and officers of the city force who arrived administered cold water applications and rendered assistance until the arrival of Dr. W. P. Lowry, who made last minute efforts to revive the heart beat of the stricken man with an injection of adrenalin chloride direct to the heart.

Cause Undetermined.

Direct cause of death is unknown, although it was supposed by Dr. Lowry that the fatal attack was one either of heart trouble or apoplexy, and a verdict of death from one or the other of these causes was returned by Justice of the Peace R. V. Gwinn, who was called to the scene.

Mrs. Lalla Mashburn, 1809 11th street, wife of the deceased, was brought to the hotel by friends.

Mrs. C. Joline, owner of the hotel is out of the city, and a long distance telephone message relating the occurence was phoned her in Rogers, Ark.

The body is being held at the Hines mortuary pending the announcement of funeral arrangements.

Here Since 1919

Mr. Mashburn came to Wichita Falls in 1919 from Burkburnett, where he was engaged at intervals in the oil and livery businesses, and for three years was owner of the Marion hotel here. He came to northwest Texas in 1909 from Cullen county.

Deceased is survived by his wife, two daughters, Misses Janice and Ferne Mashburn, both of this city; one brother, Marvin Mashburn of Hugo, Okla.; two sisters, Mrs. Hugh Ashford and Mrs. Carrie Rich, both of Park Springs.

Bandits Get $15,000 In Raid On Dice Game

TEXAS NEGRO DIES IN CHAIR

Ed Joslin Denies Guilt To Last Moment

HUNTSVILLE, Aug. 22.—(Monday)—Ed. Joslin, negro, convicted of criminal assault, paid the death penalty tonight for the crime after efforts to obtain a commutation of sentence from Governor Dan Moody previously had failed. Joslin went to the chair in the Huntsville death chamber at 12:19 a. m. and six minutes later was pronounced dead by prison physicians.

Joslin maintained his innocence of the crime for which he had been convicted to his last breath.

VICTORIA, Aug. 21.(AP)—Ed Joslin, 19-year-old negro, sentenced to die August 22 in the electric chair at Huntsville for criminal assault on a young white girl committed here, in all probability will go to the chair without further intervention by Gov. Dan Moody. Ten members of the jury, four of whom had once asked the governor to stay the negro's execution, wired the governor Saturday that they had misunderstood an affidavit executed by a local physician who had examined the girl, and urged against commutation of the sentence. The other six had already opposed commutation as had a number of court officials in the case.

Officials of the federal government, sportsmen and other outstanding men of the country are slated to receive famous Weatherford melons.

BILL ERWIN'S FATHER SOBS

But Mother Hopes For Lost Air Ace

DALLAS, Aug. 21. (AP)—Clinging to the hope despite discouraging reports of her son, Capt. William P. Erwin, lost with the Dallas Spirit monoplane in the Pacific ocean, Mrs. W. A. Erwin, mother, today said that she did "not feel that my son is lost to the world."

Mrs. Erwin maintained her composure in spite of the fact that her husband, the Rev. Mr. Erwin, who arrived here late last night from Pawhuska, Okla., is prostrated with grief.

"I feel that my son is alive," Mrs. Erwin said. "He can't be lost to the world. I believe that he is clinging to the rudder raft or wreckage of his plane and that he is alive."

Mrs. Erwin said she knew that the fuel carried by the machine would have been exhausted by this time, but said she had not lost hope.

Friends Sorrowful.

Friends of Captain Erwin and sponsors of the flight, as well as Col. William E. Easterwood Jr., donor of the $25,000 prize, for a Dallas to Hongkong flight, expressed sorrow for the flier today. Colonel Easterwood announced that when it was determined that Captain Erwin was definitely lost or dead, that he would send Mrs. Erwin, who is in North Collinswood, N. J., a check for $5000.

Prayers were offered in every Sunday school and church in Dallas for Captain Erwin and his companion, as well as the other five fliers lost in the Pacific.

The Rev. Mr. Erwin sobbed when asked what he thought of the flight. He begged to be excused, saying that he was too grief-stricken to discuss the fate of his son.

WIFE OF LOST FILER ABANDONS ALL HOPE

COLLINGSWOOD, N. J., Aug. 21. (AP)—Hope virtually was abandoned today by Mrs. Constance Erwin, young wife of Capt. William P. Erwin, pilot of the missing airplane, the Dallas Spirit, that he will be found alive.

Here at the home of her mother, where she has been ministering to a brother ill of typhoid fever, she has maintained that her husband would be rescued. Today, however, with no word of the missing plane, she collapsed.

"I want to be alone," she told her mother, Mrs. J. W. Ohl, as she sought the seclusion of her room. "I felt at first that Bill would come through. But now they tell me I must expect the worst. Why couldn't I have been with him when he fell?"

Technicality Saves Her.

Only a technicality is the reason for Mrs. Erwin's being here instead of "somewhere in the Pacific" with her husband. She and Captain Erwin had completed plans for a flight around the world from their home in Dallas, Texas. They planned to take part in the Dole flight to Honolulu and compete for the Easterwood prize for a flight from Dallas to Hongkong. Then, in leisurely hops, they were to continue around the world, spending several days at the American Legion convention in Paris.

Bomb Exploded At Foreign Ford Shop

CORDOBA, Argentina, Aug. 21. (AP)—A powerful bomb exploded at the Ford shops here this morning, doing much damage. The walls were blown out in some places and neighboring houses were partly wrecked. Scores of residents rushed into the streets.

It is thought the bomb raid is connected with the protest against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti.

LAST HOPE FOR FLIERS FADES AS HUNT FAILS

No Clue Discovered As Ships Ply Through Ocean Spaces

SEARCH CONTINUES

Little Chance Of Finding All Missing Ones Alive Seen

Seven fliers, five of them lost since their hopoff from San Francisco for Honolulu last Tuesday afternoon, and the other two missing since Friday night when a radio appeal from their plane in mid-Pacific told of their heavy ship being in a tail spin, appeared Sunday night to have been swallowed up by the hungry ocean waters which they had defied in their pursuit of aerial fame. With resources of the United States navy and of commercial ship lines maneuvering in full tilt, the search for the missing air navigators, six men and one woman, was still in progress over the wide reaches of the Pacific along the great circle course from California to Hawaii and hope had not entirely been abandoned that some of the fliers would be found alive.

Those missing and the planes they travelled were:

Miss Mildred Doran, passenger; Augie Pedlar, pilot, and Vilas R. Knope, navigator, of the "Miss Doran," one of the competing planes in the Dole air race.

John W. (Jack) Frost, pilot, and Gordon Scott, navigator, of the "Golden Eagle," another of the Dole race planes.

Capt. William P. Erwin, pilot, and Capt. A. H. Eichwaldt, navigator, of the "Dallas Spirit," which set out in search of the first two lost planes Friday afternoon with Honolulu and later Hongkong as its objective.

POLICE HUNT PRINCIPALS IN BRUTE KILLING

Unidentified Men Sought By Police After Woman Dies

MYSTERY IN CASE

Woman Succumbs Without Revealing Names Of Men in Car

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 21 (AP) After being thrown from a speeding motor car by unknown men and walking to her home where she refused to call medical attention and told her husband she had fallen in alighting from a street car, Mrs. Mary Lamar, 24 years old, mother of five children, died early Sunday morning. Death was due to concussion of the brain, according to the verdict of the jury assembled by Dr. Thomas Bird, coroner.

Mrs. Lamar, her husband said, left home about 8 o'clock Saturday night saying she was going to call upon some friends. About 10 o'clock she returned home walking, her nose bleeding and suffering from severe bruises about the limbs and body. She told him, he related, that she had stumbled on the steps of the street car but that she was not badly hurt and did not wish to call a doctor. He gave her what first aid he could and she went to bed apparently all right.

At 2 o'clock one of the children awoke him with its crying and Mr. Lamar, on arising found his wife dead.

The husband at once called Dr. Webb McGehee, his physician who pronounced life extinct and summoned the coroner and police.

Police on investigation learned of three witnesses, who had seen Mrs. Lamar thrown from the speeding car, a two-door coach and who, when she fell hitting her head against a concrete curbing had run to her assistance.

Mrs. Lamar, however, insisted she was not badly hurt and set off to walk home in silence. The three witnesses declared that men, whether two or three, they could not agree, had thrown the woman out of the car. Police are investigating the case and are making every effort to locate the death car. Mrs. Lamar was the wife of William Lamar.

Child Hurt In Accident Here Sunday Afternoon

An automobile accident between cars driven by Mrs. Leslie Coleman and P. Climmons, both residents of Wichita Falls, at the corner of Seventh and Ohio streets about 6:30 Sunday afternoon resulted in the slight injury of the 4-year-old son of Mrs. Coleman, according to a report given by Police Officer Fountain. The name of the boy was not ascertained. His lips were badly cut, but he was not hurt seriously, Fountain said.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Jog Over to Duster For Short Visit And You'll Know

Special to The Record News.

COMANCHE, Aug. 21.—Sand whipping over the ridge upon which a group of frame buildings stood as a nucleus of a Comanche county village gave to that place its name. When the little town was undergoing the throes of early development, the postoffice department was exacting in its demand for a suitable name. Three times titles were submitted, only to be rejected upon each occasion. Finally the department wrote to a hardy pioneer of the struggling village and he, recalling the sting of sand billowing over the mound upon which the infant town stood, suggested the appropriate appelation of "Duster." And so it is today that Duster is listed as one of the rising communities of Comanche county.

DANIEL TALKS ON PROMISES

God's Pledges Text Of Class Address

"The Promise of God" was the subject of the address delivered by Roy J. Daniel, assistant teacher of the class, at the regular meeting of the Kay Bible class of the First Methodist church Sunday morning. Attendance of the class at the meeting held up its quota with an aggregate of 160 members attending.

The contest of the address follows:

"We may, in this day and age, contemplate with pride what cities have been built in what was formerly the dreary solitude of western primeval lands; what states have been carved out of the prairies and mountains, extending from the Mississippi river to the Pacific; what great amount of commerce is being transported by land and then sent forth in the holds of ocean-going steamships which make white the waters of the seas. In this vast area have grown up the mighty cities of St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Houston and last but not least our own "City That Faith Built"—our city here on the banks of the Wichita—Wichita Falls. All these have come, and could only come, under the advance of Christian civilization, and under the protection and supremacy of law and order. Ever in this great western country the cowl of priest and carbine of soldier have marched side by side.

"You are familiar with that beloved church hymn, 'Through faith I am standing on the promises of Christ my saviour; standing, standing on the promises of God.' Throughout the history of the world God has made promises to his faithful ones and they have stood upon them—stood upon them as firmly as you and I can stand upon the Rock of Gibraltar this morning were we in Europe. What was God's promise to Noah? In Noah's day the world had become soaked with sin from center to circumference, and God determined to destroy it and the sinful people by means of a flood. Noah was a godly man who lived 600 years before the flood came and then lived 350 years after the flood. He knew 125 years before the destruction of the world by water that it was coming. During that period of time he lived close to God and brought the people to forsake their sins and ungodly ways of living. Heed they would not. God promised Noah that he would be the second father of the human race. God told him to build the ark, and then to take into that ark his wife, his three sons and their wives, and the sale and female species of every living creature each after it kind. Noah obeyed. For 40 days and 40 nights the rain descended. Noah sent out of the kindow of the ark the dove with an olive branch in its mouth but the dove did not return. That meant the dove had found dry land. After the flood God gave Noah the rainbow in the sky as an everlasting covenant that never again would the Lord destroy the world by water, and Noah became a farmer and grower of grapes.

"What was God's promise to Abraham? God told Abraham to leave his happy home in Ur of the Chaldees and go into a new far distant strange land. God told him that of his seed He would establish a great race. Through faith Abraham obeyed the voice of God. You remember Sarah was Abraham's wife. In their old age when Abraham was over a hundred and Sarah in her nineties God gave them the son they wished—Isaac the father of Jacob. Abraham was a godly man who would not take the plunder of his enemies after defeat in battle. He did not want his enemies to be able to say they had made Abraham rich. Nowadays we don't care whether it is our enemies or our friends—just so we get rich! He would not quarrel with his kinsman Lot when their flocks and slaves increased. He made Lot a simple, fair proposition—you take the right hand road and I'll take the left, or you take the left hand and I'll take the right. God kept his promise to Abraham and made of his seed the great race of Israel.

"What was God's promise to Moses? The children of Abraham in time became slaves in Egypt. God looked down upon their suffering and determined to deliver them from their cruel masters. God called Moses in the burning bush to lead His people. What did Moses say? He said, 'Lord, I can't do this job because I can't make a speech.' God replied, 'I'll give you Aaron to make your speeches for you, Go!' Moses refused to be the son of the Egyptian princess and chose rather the hard lot of his own people and to follow the true and living God. The period of his training for leadership consisted of 40 years spent as a sheepherder in the land of Midian. Moses became the law giver and the greatest intellect of ancient times. God would not permit Moses to enter the Promised Land because one time when the Children of Israel were complaining about their hardships Moses lost his temper. God buried him upon the mountain side, and no man knows his sepulchre.

"What was God's promise to David? After David had established his capital at Jerusalem and had for himself a palace of cedars he wanted to build a temple for the Lord. But David was a man of war and had shed lots of blood so God denied David the honor of building the temple. But he promised David that his son Solomon would succeed him on the throne, and to Solomon would be the honor of building the holy temple. Solomon became the wisest king that ever lived, and the Golden Age began under David reached its flower and fruition under Solomon.

"What are God's promises to you and me this morning? He has promised us that what we sow that shall we also reap; and they that live by the sword shall die by the sword. He has promised us that when we feed the humblest of His hungry and needy that we also feed Him. He promises us that if we cast our bread upon the waters it shall return unto us seven-fold. He promises us that if we store up for ourselves treasures in Heaven that rust will not corrupt them nor will thieves break through and steal. He has promised that He has gone to prepare a place for us—a place of many mansions not made with hands—eternal in the Heavens. He has promised: 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you.' He has promised: 'Seek and ye shall find; ask and it shall be given you; knock and it shall be opened unto you.'"

Strange Brings First Bale to Burkburnett

GIANT WHEAT POOL OFFERED

Price Control Measure Is Proposed

By Universal Service.

RAPID CITY, S. D., Aug. 21.—Plans for formation of a giant wheat pool to control more than 200,000,000 bu. of winter wheat in five western states and thus bring to hard hit farmers a practical measure of farm relief, were presented to President Coolidge before his departure for the Yellowstone National park tonight.

The plans were laid before him by former Governor Sam R. McKelvie of Nebraska, a western spokesman of Secretary Jardine's latest farm relief bill, to which they are attempting to secure President Coolidge's endorsement.

Federal Aid Suggested

McKelvie proposed to the president a combination of private initiative and government co-operation as the means of enabling the farmer to hold his surplus crops off the market while prices are depressed.

Every farmer would join the wheat pool by payment of a small fee, according to McKelvie's plan. They would pledge themselves to turn their surplus crops into the winter wheat pool corporation. A large amount of private capital has already been offered the proposed corporation, he said, to finance its organization and to make loans to the farmers on their surplus.

According to McKelvie the $300,000,000 farm relief bill drawn by Jardine would do the balance. This bill would provide funds to build warehouses and terminal facilities to store the crops until the prices were suitable. It would also enable the farmers to borrow up to 90 per cent of the estimated value of their surplus crops.

Crop Holding Aid

McKelvie asserts that the combined plan would put the farmer into afinancial condition to withinto a financial condition to withuntil prices were satisfactory and would supply him with enough funds to begin making the next year's crop.

The president was told that this is an elaboration of the Canadian pooling system. J. W. Brinton, organizing director of the new movement, pointed out in a statement submitted to the president that July wheat was selling in Winnipeg at $1.62, while Kansas City July wheat was bringing only $1.29.

The pool will be organized in Nebraska, McKelvie said. It will be extended to Kansas, Colorado, Oklahoma and either Iowa or the Dakotas.

Two Infantile Paralysis Cases at Burkburnett

Special to The Record News.

BURKBURNETT, Aug. 21. — Since the death of the Ray baby last week, the first and only fatal case from infantile paralysis in Burkburnett, two other cases have been reported in opposite sections of the town. Both are under quarantine and are recovering. A Swanson boy, 13, will have no permanent injury, it is thought. The Holden baby about two, is a typical case, and may be a cripple.

No spread of the disease is anticipated by the local health department.

Girl Thrown Out Of Car During Collision

Miss Ethel Baines, 507 1-2 Seventh street, was thrown out of the car in which she was riding with J. E. Heath, and slightly injured when they collided with an Oldsmobile car being driven by J. D. Chasten at 11th and Lamar streets about 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning, according to a police report. Miss Baines' injuries are not serious.

Burglars Enter Two Wichita Falls Homes

Two Wichita Falls homes were entered early Sunday morning by thieves, who escaped with loot valued at several hundred dollars, according to police reports.

A diamond brooch adorned with a set of three stones, an Elgin watch, and several articles of clothing were taken from the home of J. F. Ryan and J. H. Mathews, 1905 McGregor; and the residence at 2004 Jolline was robbed of $7 in cash and a pair of trousers.

Prized Paper Tells Of Lincoln's End

Olustee Man Refuses $75.00 For Relic

Special to The Record News.

OLUSTEE, Okla., Aug. 21.—Probably the most valuable front page of a newspaper in the two states of Texas and Oklahoma is the battered page one of the New York Herald, dated April 15, 1865, a prized relic of bygone days that gives the first complete report of the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln. There is only one in existence known to these parts—and it is hung in a carefully prepared frame on the wall of the Union cafe of this city.

Its owner, R. W. Walker, proprietor of the cafe, was given the sheet by his grandmother about 45 years ago, and it was brought here with him when he moved from Erath county, Texas, in 1902. The type is still readable, and the page is in excellent condition.

The owner has persistently refused all offers for it, the largest one being $75.

Lost In Dark Depth Of Cavern For Week, Scientist Finds Way To Safety

Haggard, His Nerves Worn to Frazzle, Cave Explorer Mumbles Incoherently of His Escape

NICKJJACK CAVE, SHELL MOUND, Tenn., Aug. 21.—Lawrence Ashley, is alive and safe The geologist and explorer, who has been wandering frantically through Nickjack Cave since last Monday night, trying to find his way out, this afternoon, weakly staggered to the door of the home of Hope McReynolds, owner of the cave, near Castle Rock, Ala., Ashley had stumbled onto a hitherto unknown opening in the cave, five miles across Sand mountain from the mouth where he entered last Monday. Ashley entered the cave last Monday, seeking greater depths and added mysterious wanders he believed to exist. Ashley passed through a narrow and small opening, disturbing the loose earth and rock which avalanched down behind him and closed the path by which he might have returned.

For five days Ashley wandered, searching, clambering through narrow openings, losing sight of direction or depth, climbing, descending, crawling, walking, slipping until he became half crazed in the search for an outlet and life.

Other than being in a state of utter exhaustion, sore and bedraggled, muttering almost incoherently, Ashley was uninjured.

Antelope To Be Placed On Ranch

20 Fleet Animals Will Come to Texas

Special to The Record News.

KERRVILLE, Aug. 21.—Twenty fleet-footed antelope are now being caught on the wild ranges of an Calgary, Alberta, Canada, ranch to be shipped to the Schreiner estate near this city early in October.

The animals, thousands of which once roamed over the vast expanses of West Texas prairies, will be given an opportunity to "come back" in the hill country here. They are to be liberated on L. A. Schreiner's 3000 ranch and game preserve near Kerrville. There they will mingle in a rugged haunt already inhabited by other wild game life, including four buffalo, purchased last fall from the Colbert ranch at Stamford; a flock of pheasants and numerous deer and wild turkey.

Preserving wild animal life is a hobby with Schreiner, Kerrville banker and capitalist. His estate is protected so that no shooting is allowed and every encouragement is given to propogation of wild game life, both native and introduced.

Small Garage Fire Does Nominal Damage

Firemen from stations No. 3 and 5 were called about 12:30 o'clock Sunday to extinguish a small blaze in the garage in the rear of the residence of C. H. Schmidt, 2107 Holliday. The damage to the property will not go over $15, officials said.

Faculty Chosen For Schools at Haskell

HASKELL, Aug. 21.—Following is the personnel of the Haskell schools for the term of 1927-28: Superintendent J. Horace Bass; principal high school, M. B. Lebo, Haskell; Coach J. O. Dodson, Cooper. Other high school teachers, L. K. England, Commerce; Elfain Mills, Commerce; Mrs. Ed. Sprowles, Haskell; Mary Alston, Dallas; Clarine Brannom, Commerce. Grammer schools, Mrs. J. Horace Bass, Haskell; Mrs. L. E. Ballard, Haskell; Mrs. John V. Davis, Haskell; Miss Lela Welsh, Haskell; Miss Roella Chrisman, Gatesville; Miss Clabaugh Duke, Gustine; Miss Dolly Chambers, Abilene; Miss Mary Patterson; Georgetown; Miss Maybelle Taylor, Haskell; Miss Clough and Miss Manley.

Air Derby Keeps Trophy Moving

The Gordon Bennett trophy, shown in the picture, most coveted of ballooning awards, has been removed to Detroit where the 1927 international balloon competition will be staged Sept. 10. Judge Henry Hulbert, left, of Detroit, and Ray Cooper, manager of the race, right, flew from Detroit to Akron, Ohio, to get the trophy. Ward T. Van Orman, center, of Akron, turned it over to Hulbert, who accepted it in behalf of Detroit, but Van Orman, who is the present holder of the prize by virtue of his victory in the 1926 race, expects to bring it to Akron again for another year. Germany, Italy, Belgium, France, Spain and Switzerland will have entrants in the race.

PLANE TO FLY OVER VATICAN

Pope Grants Permit For First Time

By Universal Service.

ROME, Aug. 21.—For the first time in history the Vatican has given permission for an aviator to fly over the famous Vatican gardens. What the aviators of Italy have long been denied has finally been granted to Lloyd Bertaud, pilot of the Old Glory, who is about to start on his trip from New York to Rome in Old Glory.

By the terms of an agreement signed between the Italian government and the Vatican, no avintors are permitted to pass over papal property. Nevertheless the pope has graciously waived the restrictions and accorded permission to Bertaud to pilot Old Glory over the holy property on account of the "importance of the undertaking and its significance to both the Vatican and Italy."

Verbal Dynamite Bars Church Pact

thodox and extreme episcopalians and Anglicans' belief in apostolic succession, in transmission of a sacrament ordination from Christ to the apostles, from them to the later bishops, and from the bishops to the priests, only bishops having the power to ordain. Against this school were arrayed such sects as the Methodists, Scandinavian-Lutheran, bishops in an executive rather than an apostolic character, and protestant denominations including most American Lutherans which have no bishops at all.

This with a somewhat different alignment, applies to the sacraments. The conservatives accept the sacraments as a mystery whereas, generally speaking, they are considered in the opposing camp as symbolic. The former parties, for example, acknowledge the real presence of Christ in the bread and wine in holy communion; the latter call that service symbolic.

Views Too Extreme

Such extremes could not meet. To ask one of them to compromise on apolostic succession or the real presence was like asking the Baptists to relinquish total immersion. So these delegates, expressing every willingness to co-operate in the work, withdrew from further discussion. The idealistic Bishop Brent that it was not a walk-out but a Metropolitan eulogy from Paris to Geneva. The easterners, of course, are only one factor but the largest in communicants and their action stimulated other delegates widely diverged from them, yet every bit as sincere.

The Episcopalians and Anglicans went into supposedly secret canons where their high churchmen proposed the orthodox example. The bishop of Gloucester sensationally threatened, however, that if they openly claimed apostolic succession, he would rise in plenary session and declare that neither his church nor the Episcopalians ever had this inheritance. Nevertheless, certain Anglicans as individuals, served notice that their faction sided with the east.

The Fire Spreads

The fire spread. The American Lutherans made it clear that they would not submit to their churches the conference's suggestions at things approved by them. At least in the lobbies, the Baptists and Congregationalists expressed the fear that the conference was leaning towards church government by a bishop. The spokesman for the Quakers announced that his sect could not agree to the plans for unity owing to the society of friends' conception of the sacraments, which difficulty, although partially glossed over, never has been ironed out.

It is in the light of these dissenting opinions that the findings of the conference and its future are being weighed by the homecoming delegates. Optimists quote Bishop Brent to the effect that the intention was merely to register the level of agreement and say that this has been achieved. Their opponents point out that half the suggestions cannot be accepted by a third of the churches and the remaining half is capable of a dozen clashing interpretations.

Time Will Tell

"We must let time work," says one party. Says the other:

"You cannot secure unity through ambiguity and to submit recommendations that are certain not to be accepted is not make time work but to work time. In other words, mysticism and materialism are no nearer alliance than ever." No matter what mistaken enthusiasts assert to the contrary, here abides the issue.

What remains is something still worth while. A union in faith is as good as impossible, yet nobody has entirely deserted the conference idea. That somehow it will be continued. It might tend towards unity among the various groups whose doctrinal differences are slight. It might lead to larger combinations of such groups. Certainly there is an evident desire to return to see a undivided church although the way is dark. Meanwhile, a theological clearing house has ben established, a Catholicism of good-will exists. Unity, not of faith but works, is obtainable. The delegates have agreed joyfully, disagreed with as much mutual respect as sincerity; pride has gone without the compromise of conviction; still stands there the ancient sacrifice, "a humble and contrite heart."

Final Blow Last

The final blow was delayed until the concluding general session which considered the report of the commission on grounds. This was the whole purpose of the conference. The other commissions' reports, if not endorsed, at least were received by the delegates for for transmission to their various churches for consideration. This report however, the remaining sacramentalists thought too liberal and they mustered enough votes to pigeon-hole it by receiving it, not for transmission to the sects but for overhauling by the continuation committee which, of course, can do nothing without the approval of the now adjourned conference.

Lone Driver To Pit His Endurance Against Stability Of Auto Motor

Curiosity seekers in Wichita Falls will be given another thrill Tuesday morning, when a lone driver, a holder of three endurance records in widely divers fields will leave on a five days and five nights trip through the city of Wichita Falls and surrounding communities, strapped to his seat in an automobile. The drive is to be unending during this period.

The hero of this unusual affair is Rosser J. Newman, and he leaves from the Parmenter Motor company, 1013 Scott, at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. In this effort he will rival his world's championship record of driving 197 hours and 37 minutes without stopping. He also holds records in dancing, having broken previous marks by dancing 217 hours, and to cap the climax he topped all records in skating by keeping the wheels turning 72 hours straight. It is planned that the driver keep his car moving 125 hours without a stop.

Gears in High.

The gears of the Star sedan Newman is to drive will be locked in high, and he will be handcuffed and strapped in his seat by a city official, it is announced.

In order that the public may keep track of the movements of the driver, a miniature route board will be erected over the City Loan company, 613 Eighth, which will tabulate each movement of the car, it is announced. After Tuesday it is planned that the driver leave here every morning at 8 o'clock, returning at 5:30 p. m., leaving again at 10:30 p. m., and returning the next morning at 8 o'clock.

In City Four Hours.

The car will operate in the city averaging four to seven hours a day.

The public is invited to ride at any and all times, day or night, providing passes from the Parmenter Motor company are secured. The passes will only be permitted to passengers of age.

In this gruelling test of human and motor endurance, Mr. Newman states that it is absolutely necessary to use the best of products. He has secured Panhandle gas and oil, noted for its superiority to stand the test. It will be remembered that Panhandle gasoline won the recent Ford mileage contest in Wichita Falls, Mr. Newman has chosen James Brothers creamery for his required amount of milk daily. He is depending on Goodrich tires, furnished by the Service Tire company to carry him over the entire drive. He has chosen Mae's Coffee Shop at which his meals, and will appear there three times a day. He has chosen this cafe because of its noted cleanliness and healthful food. On the third night of his trip after three days and two nights of driving, he will appear at Lake Wichita at an hour to be announced later to dance for a period of time to further demonstrate his endurance. He will be released from the car on this occasion by a city official for only a few moments.

Needs Doctor.

Mr. Newman depends on chiropractic adjustments to keep him physically fit and it will probably be necessary to take one or more adjustments during the progress of the drive. He has been fortunate enough to secure the services of Doctors J. T. and T. H. Myers, who will give him an adjustment following the completion of the drive, and who will care for him during the first hours of sleep which will be in the window of the Parmenter Motor company. The window will be completely furnished with a bedroom suit through the courtesy of the Riley Furniture company. The drive will end after five days and five nights at Zale Jewelry company on the corner of Eighth and Ohio at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The Zale Jewelry company has furnished Mr. Newman with an Optima strap watch to enable him to travel by a correct schedule of time. In this drive Mr. Newman will require a certain amount of light bread which must be absolutely wholesome and of the best quality. He has chosen the Cream bakery to furnish him with this product.

Theft of Goods From Stephenville Reported

Theft of 15 casings, 20 inner tubes, several men's shirts and women's hats, and a fiddle and a guitar, apparently from a variety store in Stephenville, was reported for investigation of local police Sunday. The name of the store was not given in the report.

Six Girls in House Practice Home Work

Special to The Record News.

AUSTIN, Aug. 21.—Under the direction of Miss Gladys Flamson, visiting instructor in home economics at the University of Texas, there are six home economics students who are living in the practice house maintained by the department during the second term of school. These six students each have various problems in household management which they are required to work out during the six weeks.

Haskell City Council Buys Street Grader

Special to The Record News.

HASKELL, Aug. 21.—The city council last week purchased an Austin motor grader, one of the latest machines built by this company, for the purpose of keeping up the streets of Haskell. A deal was also made whereby Wayne Perry, former state highway engineer of this district, was employed by the city to look after the maintainance of the city streets.

$1500 Income Given Scholarship Student

By Universal Service.

AUSTIN, Aug. 21.—J. Fred Horn of Fort Worth, tutor in the English department of the University of Texas during the past year, has been awarded a scholarship by the general board of education of the Rockefeller foundation for the coming year. Mr. Horn's scholarship carries a stipened of $1500 and allows for a year's work in the George Peabody College for Teachers.

Texas Girl to Head Woman's Bank Unit

AUSTIN, Aug. 21.—Miss Helen Knox, formerly of Giddings, Texas, has recently been placed in charge of the newly organized banking department for women in the Chase National Bank of New York City, according to news received by the Ex-Students' association of the University of Texas of which Miss Knox was recently first vice president.

GOREE FINDS COTTON PEST

Whitish-Green Worm Feeds On Cotton Bolls

Special to The Record News.

GOREE, Aug. 21.—A new variety of cotton pest for this part of the country has been reported by farmers of this community in Knox county. It is a whitish green in color, being about one-fourth inch long and enlarged about the middle. The worm feeds upon the cotton bolls.

Despite presence of the pest in a number of fields, the cotton is very good, and the general corn outlook is promising. Maize and corn are showing up well, most of which is early and is now being headed or gathered. Corn acreage is larger than ever before.

There is a very appreciable increase in poultry in this section, and many farmers are now keeping nice flocks of chickens, most of them being the white leghorn variety. A gradual increase in dairy cows is also preceptible. Plenty of good hogs are in evidence, there being more on the farms than at any time since 1918.

Last year's crops are being shipped out by Goree farmers in order to make way for new products. Two cars of corn have been shipped, being the first to be sent out in 10 years. Sixty-nine cars of maize have been shipped. One hundred twenty-three full cars of Goree trade territory products have been shipped out to date.

ACADEMY TO OPEN SEPT. 6

Mary Immaculate Begins On 24th Year

The Academy of Mary Immaculate will open its 24th year September 6.

Elementary and high school subjects are included in the curriculum. The high school course is affiliated with the University of Texas and the Catholic University of America. The standard of scholastic work of the academy has always ranked high. In addition to the usual required and elective subjects of a standard high school excellent instruction is offered in music and expression.

Mrs. B. L. Fulton, well known in Wichita Falls for her successful work, will be in charge of the expression department this year. Instruction on the violin will be given by a member of the community, just returning from Europe at the completion of a three years' advanced course under an artist of Brussels. The piano teacher has spent the summer months in special studies at the American Conservatory of Music, Chicago. An attractive feature of the coming session will be the opening of an art department under a specially prepared instructor.

A large shaded playground with equipment for games and athletics provides a pleasant place of recreation for the academy student. The buildings located between Eighth and Ninth, Grace and Holliday streets, provide classrooms and auditorium, as well as the dormitory for resident pupils. Members of the faculty mingle with the students in their games and recreation hours.

Friends and prospective patrons of the school are cordially invited to call at the academy. The sisters in charge will be glad to receive and conduct them through the school.

Hope For Lost Fliers Fading

since "Lone Star Bill" Erwin set out to find these missing ones, there was not one shred of real fact on which to hang hope that any of them survived.

Some Still Hope

Some hope there was, it is true, but it lacked any basis beyond the knowledge that Commander John Rodgers had been found at sea nine days after his memorable takeoff from the Golden Gate and days after all hope for him had been given up.

One more ray of comfort was dimmed today when the Japanese steamer Shinyo Maru advised the Federal Telegraph company here it had seen no sign of any floating planes or life rafts. This was one of two ships which earlier had reported the sighting of flares. The other vessel had already reported the sighting of flares.

The Shinyo Maru's message added that the vessel was keeping a sharp lookout for any sign of the missing planes.

Listen For News

Here in the offices of the Federal Telegraph company, the radio corporation of America and the naval communications service, weary operators were hanging over their sets, "carrying on" in a dogged effort to do what human nature might. Grimly they hung onto their earphones, listening, listening, for some word that might aid in locating one or another of the missing fliers.

Out in Hawaii the same was being enacted, while at sea lookouts on more than 50 commercial steamers scanned the tossing waves of the Pacific in a search, thus far vain, for the gleam of an airplane's wing, a signal flare from a rubber boat or some other evidence that at least one of the missing might yet be alive.

Navy Aids Hunt

More spectacular, though no more earnest was the scene aboard the destroyers sent by the navy to aid in the search and the airplane carrir Langley whence an aerial search of the territory south of the great circle course is being carried on. With the Langley are the airplane tender Aroostook and the destroyer Meyer. Planes sent up from the Langley's huge deck are extending the search for a distance of a hundred miles on either side of the westward course she is plowing. One after another they went up yesterday, flew until the lessening fuel compelled them to return and came down, without a word of encouraging news. From the Aroostock a seaplane took the air at intervals but brought back nothing new.

Alowance For Drift

These craft are pursuing a course south of the route taken by steamers and south of that the missing planes are supposed to have followed. This is to allow for the drift of wind and current which would carry any object floating on the sea southward.

Over at Oakland airport fliers were incrasingly indignant as the news leaked out that Erwin had been urged to make a start for Hawaii last Friday afternoon.

Telegrams to the Dallas war ace had used the phrase "imperative" in urging this, according to the reports, and had told him he was "no longer news."

It was after reading these, the fliers said, that Erwin delivered himself of the expression, "me for hell or Honolulu," warmed up his plane and set out. Some aviators siad they wold not have yielded to any pressure but would have remained at the port until absolutely certain everything was protitious for a take-off.

May Defy Pacific.

Meanwhile, the Oklahoma was being readied by her pilot, Bennett Griffin, and Navigator Al Henley, for a flight to San Diego where they planned to have their engine completely overhauled. What will be done after that they have yet to determine.

The engine is in fair condition now for "anything but one of these so-called wet hops," according to Kenneth Boedecker, expert from the Wright factory. Boedecker installed a new number nine cylinder in the craft, to replace the one which had seized when the Oklahoma made her bid for fame in the Dole race last Tuesday but said the plane should have a complete new engine before attempting a trans-oceanic flight.

Engine Failure Found

The heating trouble which put this plane out of the race was run down and cured today with removal of the spinner and cowling at the front of the plane. These curved pieces of aluminum, Boedecker said, apparently had deflected the air away from the engine so that the motor was deprived of proper cooling. The plane, with spinner removed, made a successful test flight and was pronounced fit for the hop to San Diego.

For the information of the layman, the spinner is the conical piece of aluminum which is placed ahead of the propeller to afford a sharp nose for the ship and cut down wind resistance. The cowling is curved behind the engine to catch the car as it streams back from the spinner and deflect it to the side, to lessen resistance. Some planes using the same sort of radical air-cooled engine as the Dole fliers empoyed, are operated without either spinner or cowing over the engine, thus increasing the cooling of the engine at the expense of a decrease in speed.

Fair Sky at Sea

Early reports indicated continued fair weather in the area where the naval vessels are searching but all informed persons admitted this was only a comfort and not a ground for hope, especially in view of experiments made yesterday with a rubber life raft. These experiments were made in the sea of San Diego, when three bluejackets from the aircraft tender Gannet were put overside in a rubber raft similar to that with which the missing planes were equipped.

In one hour the raft drifted three-quarters of a mile, largely due to the influence of the wind, naval officers said. At times the comparatively smooth sea washed clear over the raft, neccesitating bailing. The sailors were cramped and uncomfortable on the raft and expressed themselves as well pleased to get back to the Gannet.

Kin in Collapse

Over in Hayward, the home of Alvin Eichwaldt, navigator of the Dallas Spirit, flown by Erwin, Mrs. Florence Eichwaldt was reported bearing up bravely in the face of her son's probable death, but almost at the end of her strength.

"I don't believe in a boy holding onto his mother's apron strings," she said, but, for the first time she wept. Heretofore, she had restrained her tears sustained by the thought that her son had escaped severe perils several times previously, especially in the destruction of the mine sweeper Turkey during the war.

Pray For Lost Men

San Francisco, like other cities, prayed today for the safety of the missing ones. In almost every church of the city petitions were offered up that a benevolent providence might see fit to spare the lives of the daring ones who had set out to conquer the air and the ocean.

Similar prayers were offered last night by the populace at large, Mayor Jas. Rolph Jr., leading them in person with an appeal voiced before the microphone of a radio broadcast station.

For a time, aviators had held that Captain Erwin probably was able to right his ship from its second tailspin Friday night and that his failure to send further radio messages was due to a collapse of his wireless set. Late last night, however, the last hour to which his gasoline supply might have been conserved was reached and passed without word of him and today they expressed doubt that, after all, he had extricated the Dallas Spirit from its spin.

"And if he spun down," said some of them, "he went on down; he didn't stop when he hit the water."

Carried Heavy Load

This view was based on the fact that Erwin took off with a tremendous load, more than three tons. He would have probably had little chance to lighten the ship by dumping his gasoline as the craft spun downward.

Others, more optimistic, argued that he might have a chance to right the ship sufficient to "make an arrival" on the water—that being aviation slang for a badly executing landing. They said that six hours of flying, such as Erwin had before the flow of radio messages ceased so suddenly, would have lightened his ship more than 350 pounds by fuel consumption and that, possibly, this had restored enough reserve lifting power to enable him to "pull her out of the spin."

Smith Gains Credit

Eichwaldt's graphic messages telling of the two tailspins have had one unexpected effect—they have gained for Ernest Smith a greater degree of credenc than some of the "wise ones" who did not know him, accorded his statement that the "city of Oakland" had spun down a turn and a half with him on his flight to Honolulu.

These doubters had held no ship loaded as was his, could have been righted from a spin. The last massage but one which Eichwaldt sent revealed that Erwin had just righted his ship, loaded more heavily after a spin.

Spin Puzzles Pilots

What the pilots cannot understand is, why the Dallas Spirit should have gone into a spin. The weather according to Eichwaldt's wirelessed reports, had not been rough, there was nothing to make the big monoplane lose its flying position, and, because of the lightened fuel load, it was actually in better trim than when it started. Eichwaldt had not reported any engine trouble, nor had any been anticipated when the plane took off.

No ordinary patch of "rough air" would disturb the plane's equilbrium, pilots declared. Monoplanes, especially with such long wings as the Dallas Spirit carried, are notably more stable in the air than biplanes. With a normal load, it is even difficult to force some of them to stay in a spin. Yet—twice within four minutes Eichwaldt reported the Dallas Spirit was spinning.

What Did Happen?

What happened? Is it to be one of the mysteries locked in the breast of the heaving Pacific, or is it to be cleared up by the happy news, flashing across the blue wastes, that Erwin and Eichwaldt have been picked up? Aviators hope the latter but fear the former.

DOLE FLIGHT WRONG SAYS ERNIE SMITH.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 21. (AP)—The first trans-oceanic air race in history has taken a high toll in men and money. To date, the record shows three killed, seven missing and in excess of $300,000 spent to win $35,000 in prizes and fame.

The only contribution to the development of commercial aviation made by the flight, according to aviation experts, is that a professional aviator starting on a flight over a 2400 mile course to Honolulu has the odds four to one against his getting there. Originally there were 13 starters in the race who obtained planes.

Three were killed enroute to the take-off place, one never got far away from his home hangar and another was ruled out before post time.

Ernest Smith, the first civilian pilot to fly an airplane from the mainland to the Hawaiian islands said the whole Dole race was a "big mistake."

Stunt Flying.

"It is stunt flying," Smith declared, "and not practical with land planes.

"And now there are six men and a girl out there somewhere, battling for their lives. All for $35,000. It isn't worth it."

Of the eight who actually faced the starter's flag, two stumbled and crashed at the start; two put back with engine trouble or damaged planes, two reached Honolulu and three are missing today. The third was piloted by Captain William Erwin, who, after being forced back, started out in search of those who were missing in the race. James Dole, donor of the prizes, never contemplated an air race when he offered the awards. He believed, as did experts in the aviation world, that it would be some months before a properly financed aerial expedition could be equipped and sent on its way.

Instead, before the National Aeronautical association had time to formulate rules and fix a date for the race, two army lieutenants—Maitland anr Hegenberger—accomplished the feat for which the prize was offered but were not eligible to the award.

A few weeks later with glory as their only reward, two civilian aviators, Ernie Smith, pilot, and Emory Bronte, navigator, made the dash in a monoplane and reached an island in the Hawaiian group just as their gasoline supply exhausted.

Entries Flock in.

At this point the Dole prize money began to loom as the stakes for a race and a condition undreamed of by the Hawaiian millionaire resulted. Entries flocked into headquarters from all parts of the country and announced intention to be on the starting line on the day fixed.

But for the foresight of the Dole committee in calling upon the department of commerce and Lieutenant Ben H. Wyatt to make inspection of the planes entered and their pilots, the casualties might have been greater, aviation experts believe.

MODISH MITZI— By JAY V. JAY

How does Mitzi do it? Her clothes are always right. Her frocks are always new. The lines are always smart. What prompted her to buy the chiffon dress with the tiers of satin that give that very popular "up in front movement?" How did she know about the earring and the shoulder pin to match?

"Well, if you were me what would you buy?" asks Polly. Not that Polly is at all dissatisfied wth her chiffon and lace evening dress. It has a bolero blouse effect. But as Adelaide says, Mitzi is a bloodhound when it comes to a style scent. How does she do it?

Eleanor says that when Polly and Adelaide get through she'd like to ask Mitzi a question herself. Mitzi advised her so well in buying the georgette and transparent velvet dress she is wearing that she wants to know what to get next. Dad who thought he was going to have a quiet evening is growing a bit impatient.

They spent the evening talking about side flares, cape backs, spiral lines, all new styles. "Nothing but Clothes; Clothes! Clothes!" says Dad disgusted. "I should think you'd go into the business." Which gives Mitzi an idea. Why not? Establish an office for Clothes Advices. That's what she'll do. Dad may be sorry for this!

Tomorrow—Street Dresses and Hats.

Church Attendance Hikes Sunday Morning

After a decided drop in attendance at Sunday schools of Wichita Falls for the last three or four weeks, due, principally to adverse weather conditions, the absence of many from the city either on business or vacations, the tables were turned this last Sunday and attendance in five of the 10 schools that reported was increased over the preceding Sunday, in some cases doubled. From the report of these 10 churches, 2602 were in attendance, in contrast to 2419 on the preceding Sunday.

Whether this is the beginning of the awakening of interest remains to be seen. Cool weather promises to be with us, and next Sunday's record is slated to be even larger than this. Had all schools reported, the increase would have been much larger than that given, it is supposed. The complete record follows:

	Aug. 21	Aug. 14
First Christian	330	326
Highland Heights Christian	218	221

LONE WOLF BOY DIES IN RIVER

R. Whittington Drowns In North Red River

Special to The Record News.

ALTUS, Okla., Aug. 21.—Ruben Whittington, whose home is north of Lone Wolf, was drowned in the north fork of Red river Wednesday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock.

Whittington with several other people was swimming just below the Lugart dam and had been warned to leave the river as the contractors were preparing to open a gate to let some of the water through.

Whittington was swimming to land when he suffered an attack of cramps, and all efforts to rescue him failed. His body was recovered about 10 o'clock that night. He was married and was about 25 years of age.

Herder and 2400 Sheep Disappear

Rocky Mountain Retreat May Hold Secret

WEST CLIFF, Colo., Aug. 21. (AP) The mysterious disappearance of 2400 sheep and an aged sheep herder in the wildest and most inaccessible part of the Sangre de Cristo mountains has provided a mystery that organized posses are endeavoring to solve. The flock of sheep and man vanished during a period of three days.

The sheep herder, 65 years old, name unknown, reached the Nelles rance late Monday and was sent immediately to the sheep camp above the timber line. Tuesday a foreman who accompanied him, returned to the ranch and the next day the herder's dog arrived at the ranch. Ranch hands who went to the camp could find neither trace of the man or sheep and ranchers in the vicinity had seen nothing of the flock, as would be likely if it was driven out of the mountains.

Organized search over 100 square miles was started yesterday as it was feared the herder is dead and the sheep scattered by coyotes and mountain lions. The sheep were owned by D. C. Nelles, rancher in the Marble mountain section 15 miles from here.

Last Appeal In Sacco Case Fails

failure before Brandeis Hill left this evening to appeal to Justice Harlan Stone of the U. S. supreme court to stop the executions. Justice Stone is spending the summer on the Isle Au Haut off the coast of Maine and it will take the attorney 12 hours to get there.

Doomed Men Stoical

Sacco and Vanzetti were stoical when they received the news that Justice Brandeis had failed to act. They hadn't placed any hope on its success anyway. They have been disappointed too often before. Hope faded from their breasts when the full bench of the state supreme court denied all their motions last Friday.

They fully expect to die tomorrow night. They share the general impression here in that respect.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT NOT INTERESTED IN CASE.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21. — Breaking silence the department of justice today revealed that there is nothing in the secret files of the government touching upon the guilt or innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti, condemned to die for murder in Massachusetts.

Furthermore the files obtain no evidence of collusion between state and federal authorities in the arrest or trial of the defendants, it was declared.

This statement was issued after Arthur Garfield Hays of New York and Francis Fisher Kane, of Philadelphia, held a four-hour Sunday conference with Acting Attorney General George R. Farnum at the department.

No Official Request.

They had previously telegraphed asking for the interview and the privilege of reading and making public the secret department of justice file on the two condemned men. Judge Farnum reminded them that they represented no official agency and could not examine the much-discussed and carefully guarded reports. He said, however, that the files would be opened to Governor Fuller of Massachusetts or the authorities of that state upon their request.

He made it emphatic that the publication of the file could serve no useful purpose since it had nothing to do with the crime with which the condemned men are charged, but concerned their activities as alleged anarchists.

Farnum's Statement.

"Last night I received a telegram from Vermont signed by Arthur Garfield Hayes of New York City and Francis Fisher Kane of Philadelphia, stating that they would be at the department of justice this morning at 9 o'clock to interview me with reference to the department of justice files relative to the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

"They called this morning at 9 o'clock and I accorded them the courtesy of an interview which lasted four hours. They were accompanied by Frank P. Walsh of New York City. They stated that they were representatives of an organization which they described as the Citizens National committee, and also represented counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti.

"They requested that the department of justice files be opened.

"I stated that I had been informed after a thorough and recent reexamination of the files at Washington, New York, and Boston, that they contained no evidence tending to establish the guilt or innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti, or either of them, of the crime for which they were convicted in the Massachusetts courts, nor any evidence of any collusion whatsoever between the state and federal authorities prior to the arrest of Sacco and Vanzetti or prior, during, or subsequent to the trial of these two men.

No Federal Matter.

"I explained that the federal government had no jurisdiction whatever over the case, and that it was solely a matter for the state authorities of Massachusetts.

"I declined to permit access to the confidential files of the government to representatives of unofficial organizations and counsel on behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti as requested, but did say:

"While I do not authorize you to convey to the authorities of the commonwealth of Massachusetts any suggestion or message in any shape or form on my behalf, I do say to you that if it should happen that a request is received from Governor Fuller, the attorney general of Massachusetts, or the Lowell commission appointed by the governor, for access by them to our files, it will be immediately accorded.

Files Already Scanned.

"In reference to a suggestion that some one attorney be selected by me to examine the files, I stated that I saw no purpose to be served at this late date, as the files had already been checked and rechecked under conditions which tended to insure as impartial an examination as could be obtained."

Deaths

ROBERT E. NEWMAN.

Funeral services for Robert E. Newman, 47, 706 Grace street, who died in a local hospital Saturday night, were held Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock from the parlors of the Burris-Shepherd mortuary with the Rev. A. F. Doege, pastor of the First Evangelical church, officiating. Interment was in Riverside.

Mr. Newman came to Wichita Falls three years ago as business agent for the painter's union, a position he held until three weeks ago when he resigned on account of his health.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Sally Newman; a sister, Mrs. Frank B. Creighton of Wichita Falls; and a brother Willett Newman of Burbank, Calif.

KELLY RICHARDSON JR.

Funeral services for Kelly Richardson Jr., 7-year-old gradson of J. W. Nicholson, 2315 Princeton street, who died early Saturday night at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kelly Nicholson of Ardmore, Okla., will be held at the Nicholson home Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock. Interment will be held in Riverside. The body arrived here Sunday night at 9 o'clock from Ardmore, where services were held earlier in the day.

The lad had been ill about three weeks from blood poisoning resulting from a slight wound in his foot.

AERIAL SURVEY COVERS COAST

Photographs of Atlantic Seaboard Made

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21. (AP)—A six months aerial survey along the Atlantic seaboard from Philadelphia to Key West the northern and southern coasts of Cuba, the Isle of Pines, the west coast of Florida and the gulf as far as Brownsville, Texas, during which he flew 22,000 miles and photographed 3000 square miles of coast line was ended today with the return to Quantico, Va., of Lieut. C. Frank Schilt, marine corps aviator.

Schilt spent 310 hours in the air. He took five thousand pictures from an altitude of 10,000 feet in mapping the coast lines of Cuba for the hydrographic office of the navy and also photographed 146 sea plane bases and light houses which will be used by the navy in preparing maps for seaplane airways.

Double Message For Calvin

SENATOR SIMEON FESS journeyed all the way from Ohio to the Black Hills to tell the president that he was and is the choice of the leaders and rank and file of the republican party of the Buckeye state for 1928. Senator Fess was an educator before he became a politician. He is the dryest of drys. He has had his ear to the ground. He has been told that Virginia and Ohio are the only real mothers of presidents. He hopes that lightning may strike him in 1932 and he prefers Coolidge to Lowden or Dawes or Borah or Nick Longworth in 1928.

Nick has ambitions. He represents the wettest district in Ohio. He was rocked in a golden cradle. He inherited millions. He married the daughter of Theodore Roosevelt. He is an aristocrat with aristocrat, a commoner with commoners and an all around good fellow. He has been a member of congress 20 years. He is a popular speaker of the house.

He pals with John N. Garner of Texas and the idol of the cactus country has all the democratic simplicity that should be carried by a follower of Jefferson and is one of the best all-around mixers in the higher councils of the democratic party. If the republicans are going to win next year the Texan would like to see the amiable Nick step into the shoes vacated by the New Englander.

Speaker Nick is all right with Big Business but is not all right with the dry drys of the republican party. They have a suspicion that he is a bit moist.

On the other hand President Coolidge is as dry as the dryest and moist as the moistest but he knows how to play the game and advise and pray for proper enforcement of the pro laws.

Alabama on the Way

ALABAMA justice is on the way. Eugene Doss is aware of the fact. He headed a band of masked regulators. They dragged from a church into the woods a young man who had incurred their displeasure. They tied him to a tree and then they whipped him till he fainted.

He recognized the leader of the regulators. He appealed to the prosecuting attorney of his county, and the prosecutor went on the trail of the regulators. Doss and seven of his pals were arrested. They were indicted. Doss was sent to trial. He was convicted. He faced a judge who believes in the enforcement of justice in the courthouse and not in the woods. He sentenced Doss to eight years penal servitude.

According to the press reports Doss almost fainted when he realized the words of a judge and the fate that awaited him behind the bars of the Alabama penitentiary. Seven of his pals are on trial. Two turned states evidence. No doubt Doss will be happy if his pals are given the same dose that 12 of his peers, sitting in a jury box, gave the leader of the night riders and floggers who had terrorized the people of at least one Alabama county.

It is always safe to live within the law. It is always safe to bow to the majesty of the law. Men who take the law into their own hands are law violators, criminals of a cowardly type and it is well that they are brought to justice. All men who kick the laws of the land aside should be brought to justice. This is a law loving country and there should be one law for all, the rich or the poor, the high or the humble. No man should be above the law.

A Year of Flowing Gold

THIS is to be a year of flowing gold for the farmers. This newspaper is merely repeating the prophecy of an eminent American financier. Eugene B. Mayer is the guilty party. He is close to Calvin Coolidge. He is the head of the farm loan and farm credit banks of the government. He made the run from Washington to Rapid City. He held the ear of the president for an hour.

He was a messenger of glad tidings. He let it be known that the farmers of America would receive in excess of what they received last year for their products more than one billion dollars and this billion dollars would bring down upon their heads a tide of prosperity such as they have not known since 1920.

President Coolidge was delighted. Financier Mayer was delighted. All the publicity agents of the republican politicians were delighted. All the great captains of industry were delighted. All the merchant princes were delighted. And now if the American farmers get a billion dollars in excess of what they received for their products last year then the tillers should be delighted.

The truth is the American farmer hasn't had a fat year in the seven that have slipped by since 1920. Now Prophet Meyer appears to be confident that the farmer is coming into his own. Is he?

Edison Not Flier

THOMAS EDISON is not a flier. He is not going to take a ride in the clouds. He is 80 and loves life. Henry Ford is only 63. He hopes to build the greatest of fliers some day. He made an ascension aloft with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. He enjoyed it hugely and then a New York reporter was given an assignment to interview the wizard of the world and asked him if he intended to do the flying stunt in the near future.

"Nothing doing," remarked the world's greatest inventor. "Let Henry do it."

Henry and Thomas are great pals. John Burroughs when in the land of the living was another pal of Henry and Thomas. It must have been a remarkable trio when these men fled from the haunts of civilization and camped in the woods.

Thomas A. Edison sold newspapers in Detroit when a lad of ten. Henry Ford was a humble mechanic taking down $22.50 a week 26 years ago.

Edison has been sitting on top of the world for 40 years and Henry Ford became the second American billionaire.

Exclusive Central Press Dispatch To The Record News

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—Rain begins to pour down on the city in great angry sheets. And the laborers working on the new paving of Park avenue dash from the excavation and take refuge under the canopies of fashionable hotels. They stand there, chewing tobacco, smoking and spitting, glad for a brief rest. Elaborately gowned women gingerly pick their way through a mass of evil-smelling overalls in order to enter ornate town cars.

Not more than a few years ago I noticed a small lunch room with a sign hanging in front reading "Coffee Pot." Alongside of the lettering was a silhouette of a pot. There were but few of these places then, and they served merely snacks, such as doughnuts, crullers, cakes, pies and ready-made sandwiches. Coffee was the big attraction and it was good coffee.

These first "Coffee Pots" then were attractive little places. They were clean, efficient, and the food, though limited in variety, was satisfying when one only wanted a bite between meals. But now the situation is greatly changed. Virtually every white-tiled or Greek restaurant in the city now calls itself a "Coffee Pot."

The menus are as bad and uninteresting as ever, but the "Ladies Invited" sign has been taken down and the stock coffee pot sign hung up. Apparently all of the signs are manufactured by the same firm. They are absolutely alike. This is also true of another brand of restaurant—the cafeteria. The signs on these are of the same lettering; they are made of letters which stand out from the wall on which they are placed. This is certainly a city of standardization.

I watched a monkey playing in the Variety pet shop on West 49th street. Someone had dropped bits of a banana into the dog pen. The monkey would sit on the rail above; then, watching his chance, slip quickly down and snatch a bit of banana. The dogs would turn and pursue him. With one leap, he was up again on the rail, grinning at the growling mob below, and devouring the tid-bit.

* * *

Perhaps it is because I seldom have my pants pressed. Or it may be that I have a kind face. At any rate, I am always receiving unsolicited confidences from waiters, taxi drivers, but conductors, newsboys, soda jerkers and ushers. The other night I was standing in the foyer of the Rivoli at the opening of the Duncan sisters' new film, "Topsy and Eva." The young man who stood at the door, directing those who entered, was listening sullenly to short, terse words from the head usher. Evidently he was being bawled out. When the superior left the lad cursed under his breath furiously. Three people entered.

"Seats this way, please," he murmured, with cultured expression, in dulcet tones.

Then he turned to me.

"Head usher!" he sniffed. "If he's a head usher, I'm a doorman."

And the thing that troubles me is that I still do not know whether the position of doorman is a lofty or a servile one, in the code of the movie usher.

Sally's Shoulders

READ THIS FIRST:

Sally Jerome, pretty and clever, is the prop and mainstay of her family in the absence of her father, who has not lived with her mother for nine years. The family consists of Mrs. Jerome, the twins, Beau and Millie, and Sally, herself. Mrs. Jerome enjoys poor health, so Sally does the housework mornings and office work for grouchy Mr. Peevey, downtonw, afternoons.

In the flat below the Jeromes' flat lives Ted Sloan, an automobile salesman, who wants Sally to marry him and keep on working. But the only man who interests her is John Nye, whose real estate office is just across the hall from Mr. Peevey's. Nye hires Millie as his secretary and becomes blindly infatuated, buying her expensive gifts and lending her his car, etc. But Millie confesses to Sally that, although she intends to try to marry Mr. Nye because of his money, she is much more in love with a man named Davidson. She had known Davidson when she worked at Bursall's, where he was a bond salesman.

Beau and Millie give very little towards the upkeep of the flat. They even borrow from Mrs. Jerome when one of her husband's checks arrive. Sally has a hard time keeping house, and occasionally has to borrow from her aunt, Emily Jerome, who is giving up school teaching to turn her old home into a wayside inn. Aunt Emily wants Sally to go into business with her, but Sally is afraid to give up her $21 a week with Mr. Peevey to take a chance elsewhere.

Beau gets $110 from Ted Sloan by means of two bad checks. When Ted threatens to turn him over to the police, Sally borrows the money to pay him from Mr. Peevey. But when she gives it to Beau, he uses it to elope with his fiancee, Mabel Wilmot. Sally starts paying off both Ted and Mr. Peevey at the rate of $2 a week. Beau and Mabel borrow from her, too, and she is at her wits' ends when Millie is taken sick and has to have a doctor, which means more money. Mrs. Jerome has turned over her last check to Beau and Millie for a wedding present and Sally is almost without a dollar. One afternoon while Millie is sick at home, and John Nye is out of town, Sally sees Davidson at Nye's office door, asking for Millie. She goes out to speak to him.

(Now go on with the story.)

CHAPTER XXIX.

"Did you want to see Millie?" asked Sally, walking straight up to Davidson and shaking hands with him in her brisk, business-like way.

"Yes—but I'd rather see you," Davidson answered, holding her hand in both of his. "Do you work up here?" His cold, gray eyes lifted and looked beyond her into Mr. Peevey's funny, old-fashioned office, with its electric stove, its roll-top desk and red calico chair cushions.

"Millie's at home today. She was awfully sick last night," she said. "And Mr. Nye's out of town. I'll tell Millie you were here. Good-bye."

She was turning to go back to Mr. Peevey's office when a sudden thought struck her and she came back to where Davidson stood watching her.

"Millie said something to me last night about your coming to work for Mr. Nye," she said. "Do you mind my asking if that was what you came for?"

It was a daring question, but Davidson answered it with a jerk of his head.

"The bond business hasn't been so good lately, and I thought I'd try selling lots instead," he said shortly, with a smile that did not light up his gray eyes. "How would you like to meet me after work today, and we'll go and buy Millie some roses?"

Sally shook her head at him and laughed. "I imagine you can buy roses without any of my help," she smiled. "You look as if you'd bought plenty of them in your time. Besides, I've got to hurry home today."

"Sally—Sally—get home here's fast as you can!" she heard her gasp.

That night when she got home Millie was sitting up in bed eating chocolate ice cream in a big bowl. Beside her sat Mrs. Jerome with another bowl of it in her lap.

"Ice cream!" exclaimed Sally, coming to a stop in the doorway. "Did the doctor say Millie could have ice cream?" It seemed to her that chocolate ice cream was a pretty heavy diet for an invalid.

Mrs. Jerome looked guilty. "Well, he said she could have liquid food," she said. "And ice cream is liquid—after it's melted. We were so hot, and we just telephoned the drug store man to send a quart of it up to us. Millie says she's burning up."

Sally saw at a glance that Millie was feverish. Her eyes had a hard glitter and her cheeks were flushed to the temples.

"You give me that stuff!" cried Sally, and leaning across the bed she took the bowl out of her sister's small, clutching hands. "Mother, you know that she shouldn't have a thing but clear soup or milk. . . . That's what the doctor meant by a liquid diet."

"Well, there wasn't any milk in the house, or any soup either," replied her mother with a pathetic quiver in her voice. "I suppose I could have gone traipsing out in the heat for some—but the drug store is so nice about delivering things, and I thought the ice cream wouldn't Millie a bit—"

The sound of her voice followed Millie out to the kitchen, where she threw the remaining ice cream into the sink and turned a stream of hot water upon it.

She opened the ice box to see what there was for supper. A bowl of cold mashed potatoes stood there. An uncooked sirloin steak was wrapped in waxed paper on the top shelf and there was a big dish of salad greens beside it.

"We'll have potato balls and salad and tea for supper—that will be plenty for mother and me," Sally said to herself. "Millie doesn't need anything tonight. And in the morning I'll use half of that steak to make her a bowl of soup. The other half can be broiled for tomorrow night's supper."

She knew that it was going to take a good deal of careful planning and figuring to get through the week with the tiny sum of money that lay folded tight in the bottom of her purse. . . . Seven dollars. Not quite seven dollars.

She went back to Millie's room, where Mrs. Jerome was finishing her ice cream in an aggrieved silence. She sniffed and looked out of the window when Sally came and stood beside Millie's bed.

"Dear," said Sally, quietly, "I hate to talk to you about money just now—but I had to give the doctor $5 last night, and I wonder if you have any money left from your salary."

Millie raised her eyebrows. "I suppose it will all go on doctor bills," she grumbled. "And it was just nonsense to call Ambleside for me. I didn't need him at all."

She shot a look of fury at her mother. "Why don't you go and call Beau and Mabel up and ask them to give you back part of that $200?" she drawled, her blue eyes smouldering. "Then you could pay the doctor without calling on me for the little bit of money I've got—"

"I've tried to get them all day," quavered Mrs. Jerome, half rising from her chair. "But Beau wasn't at the bank and Mabel wasn't at Bursall's. I don't know where they can be."

"Probably out spending the money!" Millie came back at her indignantly. "Why don't you try to get them at their boarding house?"

As she spoke there came a loud drumming on the front door.

The three women looked at one another. . . . That was Beau's knock!

"Talk about the angels and they're sure to appear," quoted Mrs. Jerome. "There are Beau and Mabel now." She turned to go let them in.

"You get some of that money from them. Do you hear?" Millie shouted as she vanished.

"Hush!" Sally said pleadingly. "Don't get yourself excited, dear. Do you lie down and take things easy. You look so hot, Millie. Don't you think I ought to have the doctor again?"

But Millie shook her head and slumped down in bed. "Just let me sleep. I'm all right," she said crossly, and Sally left her.

In the living room Beau and Mabel and Mrs. Jerome were all crowded at the front window looking down into the street.

Mabel turned at the sound of Sally's step on the carpet and seized her by the arms, dancing her around the room. "We've bought a car!" she squealed. "A car!—A roadster! Take a look—see!—Beau and Mabel have got a car of their own at last.

She seemed to be beside herself the cozy little room, waving her with joy as she pranced around arms and kicking out with her slim silk-clad legs.

Mrs. Jerome looked at her with great disfavor. "I don't see what you're yelling about!" she said grimly. "It strikes me as a great piece of tom-foolishness! To buy a car when you don't even own a single stick of furniture and haven't a nickel laid away in the bank for a rainy day!"

She went out to her own room and banged the door shut behind her.

Sally, herself, could have wept as she looked at the gaudy little second-hand roadster that stood out in the street. Even through the twilight its bright red paint glowed like a bonfire, and its hood was decorated by a shiny brass figure of a bathing girl. It was exactly the kind of car that she would have expected Mabel to pick out.

"Beau," she couldn't help saying, "you might have paid some of your debts first."

She thought of the load of them he had laid on her own shoulders, and that she was doing her level best to pay off within a year.

But if the thought of them weighed down her spirits it did not seem to worry Beau at all. Not a shadow crossed his blond face or settled in his eyes.

"Got anything to eat?" he asked blithely. "We've been riding around all afternoon and we're as empty as can be."

"We've got hollow legs, we're so hungry!" warbled Mabel, following him to the kitchen where they soon made short work of the steak that Sally had been saving for the next day.

"We've rented a flat," Beau said, between great mouthsful of it. We're going to move in tomorrow. It's furnished."

"It's as cute as a crow's nest," added Mabel. "Everything built in. In-a-door beds, and breakfast nook, and everything! I'm just as batty about it as a bat."

They were having a fine time with Mrs. Jerome's check. That was plain enough.

The next morning when Sally left the house at 10 minutes after 11, Millie was still asleep.

Sally had looked in once or twice during the morning and each time Millie had been lying in the same position, her face flushed, her breath coming regularly but quickly.

"She's just fine," Mrs. Jerome had decided. "Sleep's what she needs. She's hardly ever in bed before 1 or 2 o'clock, you know—and it's my guess that she's just worn out."

So Sally had not been worried when she started out into the bluest, brightest, windiest October day that ever was.

The office was empty when she arrived, and the morning mail was scattered on the floor by the door where the postman had slipped it.

Sally took off her hat, smoothed back her hair with her fine, sensitive hands, and began to open the envelopes.

The telephone rang shrilly.

"That's Mr. Peevey to see if I'm here on time," thought Sally and she smiled to herself as she lifted the receiver.

But the smile vanished instantly.

For it was her mother's voice at the other end of the wire.

"Sally—Sally—get home here as fast as you can," it gasped. "Millie—get here, Sally!"

Then there was a click and silence.

LEAVE YOUR MOTHER ALONE

Don't Pull Her Away From Old Home

After You're Grown, Don't Overdo Your Duty to Your Mother by Uprooting Her From Her Old Home and Transplanting Her in Yours, Where She's Just a Visitor With Nothing to Do but Be Bossed.

"When I hear mothers complaining that their children neglect them I think that perhaps they are not so badly off as they think they are," said a whimsical old lady to me the other day. "I speak with feeling on the subject for I, myself, am the victim of three devoted daughters, who, in their desire to do their duty to me, almost boss me to death.

"Of course, I know that their tyranny is inspired by their affection and their sincere desire for my well-being, and I try to bear it with humility and fortitude. But, believe me, there are few more painful experiences in life than being chicken-pecked, and so there are times when I actually envy the mothers who have ungrateful children that let them alone, and who go their way and let her go hers.

"Now I am neither infirm in body, nor senile in mind, and I still possess all of my faculties. I am quite as capable of getting around and attending to my own affairs and making my own decisions as I was in the days when my daughters were children and had to look to mother for everything and obey her. But the shoe is on the other foot now and it's mother who has to mind and do as she is told to.

"And I don't like it. I don't like being treated like a moron who hasn't intelligence enough to take care of herself, and who has to have some kindly, wise person direct her every movement.

"Positively there are times when I have to bite my tongue nearly off to keep from screaming with exasperation when I hear my affectionate mentors say for the millionth time: 'Mother, hadn't you better move out of that draft?' 'Hush!' Sally said pleadingly. 'Mother, don't you think you had better go and lie down and take a little nap now?' 'Mother, don't you think you are drinking your coffee too strong?' 'Mother, do you really think you should eat steak for dinner?'

"My children do not realize that they are offering me a gratuitous insult by suggesting that I have grown so feeble-minded that I do not know whether I am hot or cold, or when I am tired, or what food agrees with me, and so I swallow my resentment and smile sweetly to hide my rage. But let me tell you it takes the patience of Job to enable the old to endure the incessant nagging of the young.

"I am bored to extinction because I have nothing to do. For forty years I was a breathlessly busy woman. Running a house. Rearing a family. Managing servants. Cooking. Sewing. Nursing. Managing. Contriving ways and means. Launching daughters in society. Getting them married. All of the myriad responsibilities and activities that fill a competent wife and mother's hands. Now I have nothing to do. Nothing to plan for. Nothing to look forward to. Nothing to do but to kill time.

"When my husband died, my dear, good dutiful daughters snatched me out of my old home while I was so grief bewildered that I did not realize what they were doing. 'Mother has worked long enough. Mother must rest and take things easy the balance of her life. Mother must let us cherish and comfort her and take care of her now and repay her for her devotion to us,' they said.

"So they sold the old house to which I had gone as a bride and where all the happy years of my married life had been spent, and sold the old furniture that was not furniture to me but memories, and they took me away from my old friends and associations to the cities in which they lived and turned me into a perpetual guest, which is the most strenuous and wearing career on earth.

"For I have no home. I am just a visitor and must be always on my P's and Q's not to interfere with any of the arrangements of the house in which I am staying. I must make a constant effort to be agreeable and pleasant, as that is the only way in which I can pay my board. I have no friends—only acquaintances among people of my daughters' age, and when I am asked out to dinner or lunch it is only a courtesy to Mary's or Jane's or Sally's mother, not because I am personally desired.

"My daughters are filled with self-righteous satisfaction and they think how good they are to mother. They pat themselves on the back when they reflect that mother has not been left lonely in the old home where she would have to worry with incompetent help and have the burden of housekeeping on her. I haven't the heart to tell them how much happier I would have been if they would have only left me in my old home, among my old friends, with plenty of work to do.

"Worse still, my daughters have not left me a vestige of personal independence. I have to give an account of my every act, and before I can do the simplest thing a family council has to sit upon it. Last summer I had planned to go to Europe with a friend and all our arrangements had been made, but at the last minute I had to give it up because my daughters were so worried for fear something would happen to me! I suppose the felt they couldn't trust me not to fall over the rail of the boat, or that I would get lost in Paris or London.

"I can't get a letter without their wanting to know who it is from, I can't make a visit without telling where I am going and just when I'll be home. I am not even permitted to go down town by myself. I have to wait until one of the girls finds it convenient to go with me, and decency forbids me telling them that I want to go alone; that I am fed up on daughters, and desire to go out by myself and do the things that I want to do, instead of the things that they think I should do.

"And my daughters pick out my clothes for me. It's been years since I had the privilege of consulting my own preference in the matter of hats and dresses. I always exemplify in my appearance the taste of the particular daughter with whom I am staying, and, little as they suspect it, I consider myself a martyr because I have to wear the blacks and grays that my girls pick out for me instead of the cheerful blues and pinks for which I yearn.

"People always say to me: 'How blessed you are in having such devoted daughters!' and I respond properly: 'Oh, yes,' when inwardly I am thinking that there are no greater despots on earth than our children who love us and try to manage us for our own good. With the best intentions in the world, they make our lives a burden to us. And that's why I sometimes envy the neglected mothers."

THREE CAUSES OF TUBERCULOSIS

The bacillus of tuberculosis is usually found in the sputum of patients suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, but with many well advanced cases it has often been impossible to find any trace of this bacilli which is so commonly cited as the cause of tuberculosis. The fact that it is not always present should show us that the infection with this germ is not the primary cause of tuberculosis.

One in every 10 deaths in the United States may be attributed to this disease and, although the death rate is decreasing each year, there is still an appalingly needless loss of life from a disease which could be easily prevented if the fundamental cause were better understood.

From practical experience in diagnosing and treating thousands of cases of pulmonary tuberculosis, I have been forced to the conclusion that there are only three important underlying causes of this disease. I will mention them in the order of their importance:

EVERY TUBERCULAR PATIENT HAS A TIGHT, ALMOST IMMOVABLE DIAPHRAGM.

The diaphragm is a flat muscle separating the chest from the abdomen, and it is with this muscle that we do all of our breathing. As the diaphragm expands and contracts, the air is drawn in and forced out of the lungs. The lower ribs should open up and expand at inhalation, and be able to depress and contract at exhalation. This action of the chest the tubercular patient is unable to do satisfactorily.

The tendency to a tight thorax and diaphragm can be discovered early in life and corrected by suitable breathing exercises.

ENERVATION ALWAYS PRECEDES THE STATE OF TUBERCULOSIS.

Such weakness may be caused entirely by lack of exercise, and can be prevented by the use of calisthenic exercises, long daily walks, or any other desirable kind of physical culture training. Weakness simply means the absence of strength, and strength can only be produced by the requisite amount of physical exercise.

DIETETIC ERRORS CREATE TOXINS IN THE BLOOD WHICH FURNISH THE SOIL FOR THE GROWTH OF TUBERCULOSIS.

Eating too much food and the use of the wrong kinds of foods are responsible for creating a catarrhal condition in the body which the enervated patient with the tubercular diathesis is unable to eliminate. A proper study of scientific dietetics will enable one to easily eliminate this cause, and would play a large part in preventing the development of tuberculosis.

QUESTION: Torreon writes: "I have been dieting according to your instructions in the paper. I have lost 19 pounds—did weigh 158. I notice after eating, when digestion begins to take place, I have a very pronounced metallic taste in my mouth. What would cause this, and will it disappear?"

ANSWER: You should lose still more weight, and if you will keep on dieting until your weight becomes normal the metallic taste will disappear. This is produced from an improper balance of your digestive fluids, and continued dieting will correct such trouble.

QUESTION: Mrs. Marilyn H. writes: "All of my family are being benefitted by your diet and health articles in our paper, and we wish to tell you of our appreciation. Also, just one question: What foods are meant when we use the term 'protein'?"

ANSWER: Generally speaking, we mean the animal and its products, viz. meats, milk, cream, cheese, butter, fowl, eggs, rabbit, fish, etc.

Hollis City Council Sets Aside Plot As Market Place For Cotton Buyers

Special to The Record News.

HOLLIS, Okla., Aug. 21.—Ever since there has been a town here at Hollis, it has been the custom for the cotton buyers to congregate in the middle of the street between the two banks, and at times, there are 20 or 25 cotton wagons standing in the middle of the street, and a great crowd would assemble, blocking traffic and seriously interferring with entrance to buildings on each side of the street.

With the growth of the town and the greater amount of traffic down Broadway, the condition had become a serious problem, and was finally taken up by the city council which designated a new market place, where farm produce and especially cotton, shall be sold. The arrangement will relieve danger to property and persons, and at the same time will serve the farmers and buyers just as well as they will all know where the market is located, which is just south of the National Bank of Commerce, north of the old cotton yard. This will prove a convenience to the farmers, as it will enable them to drive directly to the market place, without having to pick their way through crowded streets.

Thalia Farmer Brings First Bale in Foard

Special to The Record News.

CROWELL, Aug. 21.—Foard county's first bale of 1927 cotton grown by D. E. Anderson of the Thalia community was sold at auction in Crowell Saturday to Crews-Long Hardware company for 20 1-2 cents per pound. The bale weighed 470 pounds and a premium of $53.25 was raised in Crowell by the chamber of commerce for Mr. Anderson.

BANK DEPOSITS CHARGE.

Special to The Record News.

HOLLIS, Okla., Aug. 21.—The banks of Harmon county, beginning with September 1, are considering making a carrying charge for accounts less than $50.

HEY

"Who's the crazy guy on first base with the whiskers?" guzzed one fan to another during Waco infield practice.

"Oh, that's just Art Shires acting natural," came the reply.

Shires, with his head in the stand as usual, showed up Sunday p. m. with red House of David hirsute facial adornment, straw hat, galluses and pants tucked above the knees. The young man apparently toddles along under impression he is another Nick Altrock.

The present pair of arbiters on the job here certainly isn't "giving" the Spudders anything, not even advantage of the doubt. Close plays through the Waco series invariably seemed to go the other way. Umphs Bob Countryman for one acts as if he enjoys belying that age-old belief that Doak Roberts umpires always award the breaks to the club at home.

* * *

Countryman must be "on" Lamb. He certainly didn't give Lucy a chance yesterday. Two decisions on Lamb in the first game came exceptionally tough. Lucy was called out in the third stanza on an attempted steal of second when it looked very much like he had slid under Pratt's tag. He was called out in the sixth couplet on a bunt when if he did not have the throw beat by a foot he at least rated a tie in which case the verdict goes to the runner.

Shires between games addressed the right wing of the stand for five minutes or more with all the grandiloquence of a chantauqua orator spouting on the tobacco evil. At one stage, Oratorical Arthur gurgled, "I think a lot of Wichita Falls. I like it fine," and some solemn guy up in the stand drawled back in what sounded suspiciously like a bored tone of voice, "Sorry, friend, that we can't say the same in return for you."

* * *

Jud Waller, the Wichita Falls sandlotter who caught on the other day for a trial with Beaumont, has been hitting stronger in the Texas league than he did in the twilight league. All of which proves, coyly remarks Wild Bill Spencer, the twilight is a better league than the Texas league.

THANKS

The great Gardner kept 50 per cent of his word yesterday in regard to his promised press coop handout between games. Tired (?) telegraph operators and overworked (?) sports writers relaxed at the close of the first contest and gorged on an ample spread of chicken sandwiches sent up by the noble Spud prez. But the brew failed to show and the boys had to pay Bill Hewell's robbery toll for common sody pop.

* * *

Lamb, by the way, appears headed for the unique distinction of launching throws from the outfield to cut down more runners at third and at the plate than any other Texas outfielder. He has the truest arm in the Spudder outfield and appears to display better judgment than any gardener over the circuit. Hardly a day passes Lamb doesn't throw out somebody. He launched two plays yesterday, one getting a runner at the plate, the other cutting one away between third and home.

* * *

Benton begins to look like the most dangerous bunter in the league. He lays 'em down and outfoots 'em with regularity.

THAT "FIGHT"

Back to the hilarious Mr. Shires, the loud youth indulged in a slight run of fistics with Johnny Mann, a 160-pounder who can hit with only one hand because the other is broken, during the last inning of the second game. Shires' 190 pounds did not look so formidable against the one-handed 160 pounds. The Wacoan swings with that well-known fly-swatting motion, stands high with his chin in the air and goes into action like a barn door caught in the wind. Wouldn't it have been a tough break if he had swung on some guy like Pug Griffin instead of one-hand Johnny? It would have taken a matter of three seconds or so for any straight-puncher or bird with a limber back to duck and fill Arthur full of upper cuts or step in and shoot a few knuckles to the chin for a polish-off the way Art walked in windmilling at Johnny. Mark my words, some day that young man is going to speak out of turn to a regular tough guy and get hurt.

* * *

How'd the fight start, what there was of it (the cops stopped it after a few random pokes)? Johnny got hit by a pitched ball and took his base. Waco players either didn't believe he was hit or thought he had not tried to dodge. Anyhow, an argument with the umphs followed at the plate. Arbiter wouldn't reverse, so the boys went back to their positions. Shires lumbered back to first base, kicked some dust across Johnny's dogs and muttered, "You blankety-blank-blank!" you know, and Johnny straightaway forgot his maimed mitt and unwound. He took a swing at Art and a regular knuckle-and-dance act was on. A couple of Waco haymakers glanced off of a Wichita Falls cheek bone. Otherwise no damage was done before some cop butted in and coldwatered the entertainment. Shires was swinging high and wild. Johnny was leaning back on his heels like he was trying to get set for a one-two or something when the law got in the way. Both players were ejected and this lucky guy Stump Edington went to first base, whereupon the Waco infield fell onto a snappy double play, killing our rally.

Spudders Split Twin Bill With Waco Outfit

Kiefer Starts Poorly Then Hurls Great Ball While Mates Fight Uphill to Capture Opening Game

Wichita Falls gained a half game on the second-place Houston team Sunday afternoon, splitting a riotous doubleheader with the Waco team while Shreveport was shading the Buffs in an extra-inning affair in the Louisiana bailiwick. The Spudders copped the first game, 5 to 4, after a brilliant uphill fight behind the masterful pitching of Harlem Joe Kiefer, pudgy Spud righthander. Waco tagged the nightcap by a 3-1 score, Herbie Cobb tossing a noble brand but continuing as the prize hard-luck hurler of the circuit. Home runs by Moore and Vigare accounted for the Cub victory. A rousing bombardment of Kiefer in the first frame of the opening game gave the Wacons four runs. Thereafter, Joe was invincible while the Spudders packed away at Bill Shores, scoring little by little until in the seventh inning Joe Cobb, the catcher, scored the winning run.

The bargain matinee was enlivened almost at the close (during the seventh inning of the second game) by a short fist fight staged by Arthur Shires, Waco first baseman, and Johnny Mann, sent in as a Spudder pinch hitter. Nobody got hurt. Just a few feelings were ruffled. Police halted the argument and the umpires put the two players from the game.

Six Hits, Five Runs.

The Spudders made six safeties with an error beat Shores in the starter, saving their blows until the opportune moments. Kiefer was tagged for 11 hits but kept them scattered after the first round.

Windle opened the matinee with a full-length two-cushion swat to left center. He went to third on Moore's long fly to right center but held his base while Kiefer was tossing out West. Pratt doubled to left scoring Windle. Blackerby two-baggered to the same sector, scoring Pratt. He stole third and then Shires homered over the right field fence. That constituted the Waco advance. Wolgamot doubled in the sixth and Shores followed with a single to right, but Lamb came in fast and cut Wolgamot at the plate with a sweet peg to Joe Cobb. Blackerby started the eighth with a single and was bunted to second, but Vigare lined to Benton who chunked to Turgeon, doubling Blackerby off.

Benton Hits.

Wichita Falls scored one run in the first inning of the first game. Turgeon drew a walk with one away, hoofed it to third on Benton's single and scored after the catch when Lamb flied to deep left. Benton, incidentally connected for three of the six Spudder hits garnered in this game.

Wichita Falls tabbed a couple in the third. With one out, Fitzgerald coaxed a base on balls. Turgeon flied out to center and Benton singled past Pratt at second, Fitz legging it to third. A passed ball sent Fitzgerald home and put Benton to second. Rabbit continued to third when the pitcher muffed the catcher's throw to the plate after Fitz. Lamb singled to left, scoring Benton.

Benton beat out a bunt at the beginning of the sixth, stole second, went to third Lamb's sacrifice and scored on Jenkins' long fly to right.

Win in Seventh.

LaFayette walked in the seventh. Cobb singled to left, sending George to second. Kiefer bunted, forcing LaFayette at third. Cobb went to second and scored a moment later on a dirty drive to right center for two bases by Fitzgerald. That gave us the victory margin. The Spudders failed in the eighth and Kiefer held Waco off.

Caldwell held Wichita Falls to five hits in the seven-inning second game. The Spudders' only run was scored in the fourth on a double to center by Jenkins, a sacrifice bunt by Swenson and a walk to LaFayette who was forced by Tobin while Jenkins was scoring.

Moore homered to right in the Waco third with nobody on. Blackerby's single and Vigare's home run over the left fied fence scored the other two Waco runs in the sixth.

CATS WIN COUPLE.

FORT WORTH, Aug. 21.—Fort Worth took a double header from Beaumont here Sunday afternoon to make a clean sweep of the four-game series. It also put the Cats over the .500 percentage mark for the first time since early in the season. Paul Wachtel brought a 6 to 3 victory to the Cats in the opening game, while Lefty Johns pitched Fort Worth to ta 6 to 0 shutout victory in the after piece. Score:

DALLAS TEAM INVADES TODAY

Steengrafe Billed to Toss Opening Game

Turkey E. Gross and his Dallas team, striving hard to beat Waco out of third place money, hit the deck this afternoon for the first game of a three-game series. It's "Ladies day."

Milton Steengrafe looks like Manager Williams' probable starter against the Herd.

Yesterday's split while the Buffs were losing one puts us 10 1-2 games ahead this morning. Not hard to take with 24 games to go.

Adverse Winds Delay Another Ocean Flight

By Universal Service.

CURTISS FIELD, L. I., Aug. 21.—The absence of a west wind precluded the possibility of a Rome flight today, according to James Dewitt Hill, who together with Lloyd Bertaud, are to pilot the Fokker monoplane "Old Glory" across the Atlantic.

The flight would not be attempted without this favoring wind, Hill added.

Blankenship Beats John Smith, 2 to 1

SHREVEPORT, La., Aug. 21. (AP)—Henry's error on Harris' grounder that allowed Bloxsom to scor efrom second base, broke up a splendid pitching duel between Blankenship and Smith in the twelfth inning and gave the home club a 2 to 1 victory over the visitors. In the early innings Blankenship's wildness got him in trouble and it was Smith's wildness in the twelfth that put Bloxom on base. Score:

Spudders All Will Be There

Maybe Rest of Fans Won't Like Mantell Bout

Not many fans are expected to turn out for the Mantell-Reed "wrestling" match Tuesday night at the Ross stadium because both Mantell and Reed, due to their unorthodox tactics are in ill repute with mat fandom here. But all the Spudder baseball team will be there, Manager Carl Williams said Sunday. The Spudders like the rough stuff. They'd rather see a couple of tin ears get in and try to croak each other with plain old barroom tactics any night than sit on the most scientific match ever carded.

So although not many regular customers are expected to show up for the program, the wrestlers will have a pretty enthusiastic audience, anyway, for next to that loud-mouthed Waco team the Spudders are the noisiest in the league when they get interested in something.

Yaqui Joe wrestles Silvio Checco in a preliminary finish match. They will be rough, too. The Reed-Mantell affair is to be a finish affair, also. Mike has never met Dutch, the promoter says.

Sandwich Nearly Spoils Dempsey

Fight With Jack Sharkey Almost Wrecked

(This is the sixth of a series of articles written by Leo P. Flynn in which the noted boxing man tells his own story of how he brought back Jack Dempsey).

By LEO P. FLYNN
Manager of Jack Dempsey.
Written expressly for Universal Service.
(Copyright, 1927, By Universal Service.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—A ham sandwich, under the proper circumstances and with plenty of mustard, is to me a work of art. I am a great admirer of the ham standwich.

But I'm willing to admit it is no dish to set before a 32-year-old battler on the day before he is supposed to fight Jack Sharkey. The sandwich that Dempsey ate on the afternoon of July 20 almost forced me to call off the big fight.

It made Dempsey sick, and it was no trifling sickness, either. He became bilious and beads of perspiration broke out on his forehead. I felt his head, and it was cold and clammy.

Looking back now, I realize I never should have allowed him to eat it. On the exterior, Dempsey appears to be a man without nerves. Actually, he is quite the opposite. He burns up inside. The stomach of a man like him should be given only the plainest of food on the eve of an important event.

Years ago, Dr. J. Bentley Squire gave me a prescription for a nervous stomach. It comes in the form of a powder, and I always carry some of it with me.

When I realized the condition Dempsey was in, I pulled out my powder and mixed it up in a glass.

"Here you are, Jack, down this, and you'll feel better," I said.

Dempsey paid me a compliment that I never will forget. He didn't ask me what it was, and he didn't hesitate. He lifted the glass, and drank it off without a question.

Dempsey knew, and he knew that I knew that I could have made a fortune by turning traitor in those closing minutes. He did not know what was in those powders, but he trusted me. I don't believe the man lives who could cross a fellow like him.

That is the outstanding trait of Jack Dempsey's character. When he gives his confidence, he gives it whole-heartedly.

My prescription worked, to my great relief. He felt better before we reached New York. The biliousness disappeared, and he was almost normal by the time we reached my apartment. I took no chances, though. I gave him a light meal.

We sat and talked for two hours before he went to bed. We talked about everything under the sun but the fight.

The general belief is that fighters can think and talk of nothing else on the eve of battle. As a matter of fact, we spent the entire evening discussing Colonel Lindburgh, of whom Dempsey is very fond. Lindburgh sent him a telegram of congratulation after the fight, and Jack took that home with him. That is one message he intends to keep.

Everyone expected a lively scene when the two Jacks met to weigh in the next day. Dempsey was all set for it. I think Sharkey would have come off second best, just as he did every other time he tried to work his peculiar and profane brand of psychology on Dempsey.

But it probably was just as well that the boxing commission decided to have them examined at different hours. Sharkey might have been knocked out twice that day, although I will say that he would have had to take the first punch. Dempsey has always made that fellow look ridiculous.

(To Be Continued.)

Helen Wills To Seek Net Crown

American Tennies Queen On Comeback Trail

By Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—Down that long comeback trail a queen will walk next week to a throne she never lost. Illness forced Helen Wills to forfeit her national tennis championship in 1926, but it did not make her relinquish her supremacy among women players in this country. Now she is about to regain the last of the titular appositives that belong to a monarch of the tennis world.

Most of the best women racquet handlers in the world are entered in the national tournament beginning Monday and scheduled to end Saturday at the West Side Tennis club, Forest Hills, L. I. The professional, Suzanne Lenglen, and the Spanish champion, Senorita De Alvaraz, will be among the few great absentees. Even lacking their presence, however, the event has all the demeanor of a world's championship.

Suzanne is a "pro," and consequently no longer a candidate for world tennis honors in the only way which they can be acquired at the present time. Senorita De Alvanez had her opportunity to vanquish Miss Wills in the final of the Wimbledon singles tourney, and she failed.

NEW LUMINARY AT MISSION

Chorus Girl Blazes Way To Stardom

BY STEVE STEVENSON.

A new luminary star to be exact made an appearance Sunday in the Wichita Falls theatrical sky.

She is Carrie Cunningham, cast in a character part of "The Country Girl," presented by Honey Hank Harris at the Mission theater.

One week ago Carrie was a chorus girl—Honey needed a character woman in his company to fill the place of Rose Harris, the leading comedienne in Texas, who was taken ill. Honey is rated as the best musical comedy producer in this section of Uncle Sam's domain and when he selected Carrie to "pinch hit" for Rose he demonstrated his ability.

Was Elvie Herndon, "the red-headed gal" there? We'll say she was. Elvie can sing and dance with the best of 'em and better than the most of 'em. And when Elvie concludes her "number" she has all unmarried male customers desiring to know her "telephone number."

Of course Honey furnished the comedy—if he wasn't in the show there wouldn't be any. When that boy can't make a customer laugh, its time to see the doctor.

Zoe Frazell, the queen of "blues" singers, is singing one of her own numbers in "The Country Girl." Zoe manifests that she is just as good a composer as she is a singer. The number is titled, "Its All Over, Babe." And, dear readers, the song is a "wow."

Fat Houghton, one of the best ballad singers ever appearing in Wichita Falls, sings the song that made Olsen and Johnson, well known vaudevile team, famous. The song written by Ole and Johnny, "Knock At the Door," is handled by Fat in a clever manner, assisted by the Honey Girls, composing "The Country Girl" chorus.

Honey Harris presented a real, honest to goodness trio Sunday. It was composed of Paul Scott, Bob Capers and Fat Haughton. Those boys can certainly do their stuff as "combo singers."

And before saying "goodnight" on this yarn the Honey Harris chorus must be mentioned. The names of the girls composing the "line" are not available, but at any rate they're all potential prize winners in anybody's bathing beauty contest. And can they sing and dance? Well, a blind man would assert, "You tell the world, they can."

WHY GIRLS ARE LONELY

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

SHE PREFERS A "WILD BUNCH" TO LONELINESS.

BUT SHE IS LONELY IN THE MIDST OF THEM.

Popularity Does Not Require Loss of Your Ideals

By Beatrice Fairfax,

An Authority on the Problems of Love and Marriage.

WHAT a bugaboo loneliness can be at times!

Dread of it brings a shudder to many a girl, who is haunted by fear of being left out of her "crowd," or worse still, finding herself without "boy friends."

Many of these lonely girls are pretty and attractive. But, for some reason, they do not quite fit in with the young people about them. They are a little "different."

Not long ago I printed a letter signed "Lonesome." The writer was certain that she was lonesome only because she refused to pet and drink and do other things she felt were not quite "straight." Now comes a reply to this letter, which I shall print for the benefit of lonely, discouraged girls who feel they would be successful—no longer lonely—if they would but lower their standards and ideals.

"DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

"Will you please print in your column this message to Lonesome? I thank you.

My Dear Miss Lonesome: I was once in your position. My one and only desire was to have my fling at being popular.

Well, I must say my wish was granted and is still being granted. I have become just one of those popular flappers—in fact, too popular—who smoke and use cosmetics and drink a little, once in a while. I always go out with a fast and wild bunch. I am never chaperoned in any way! I do as I please and go where I please and that is that!

But listen, Lonesome, I would change places with you any day in the week. Oh, yes, when it comes to getting sheiks, I never have any trouble, for I am a baby with big blue eyes. I weigh 120 pounds and am five feet four inches tall. But the men I attract are not the kind who settle down. They are always looking for something new.

Dearie, when your man comes along, he will be a man. For a real man will always choose an old-fashioned girl as his wife, and will leave out the flappers. So please take my advice, Lonesome, and continue to be an old-fashioned girl. Remember, you are not the only one who gets lonesome. I am getting very tired of being a 1927 flapper. Yours in lonesomeness."

"'A FLIP-FLAPPER.'"

There are two ways to combat the bogey of loneliness and unpopularity. "Flapper," who wrote the frank and friendly letter I have just quoted, chose one way. She compromised with her own ideals to the extent of associating with a "wild bunch" and drinking with them. She now receives any amount of attention—of a kind.

But is she satisfied? No; because the attention she receives is not the sort of devotion and friendship she wants. Looking a little ahead, she realizes she is losing out. The men who date her are not the kind of men who make good husbands, nor is she the type of girl worth-while, dependable men are most likely to choose as a loved life-partner and helpmate.

"Flapper" is now even more lonely than before she began her "flapperish" career. For to be lonely in the midst of a crowd is the worst kind of loneliness. And she realizes she has lost her best chance of winning The Man.

Thank you, "Flapper," for your frank letter. Not every girl is as honest with herself as you are. I would suggest a better way out than the path you chose—a course that will not mean regrets and loss of self-respect.

Accept solitude if it comes your way and make the best of it. By this I do not for one instant mean that a sensible girl should not do her full share of entertaining, and should not make herself as attractive and lovable as possible.

But cease to hate loneliness. Evenings at home won't hurt you. Solitude has been the making of great souls, from David to Colonel Lindbergh, from Joan of Arc to the mother of Lincoln.

We need more solitude than we manage to find time for—most of us—in order to keep sane, well balanced, wholesome mentally and physically.

Take up courses of study in home-making, singing, a foreign language or playing the harp, those long, lonely evenings. Learn to dance well. Read, write, think. Give time to the cultivation of your own healthful beauty. Take time to think out ways of being helpful to others.

Learn to be good company for yourself, then you will love, not dread, solitude. And the moment you become self-reliant, poised, cheery, fine company for your own self, one with the entire world in friendly good will, others will begin to seek you out—both men and women. You will then be a someone, not a nobody. You will be a magnet for friendship and love.

Many a charming, loved woman, a wonderful wife and mother, has learned the secret of her success by transforming loneliness to happy solitude in some of the ways I have suggested.

As "Flapper" points out wisely, when The Man comes he will be looking for your kind of girl—a girl who has not compromised with honor to banish loneliness—as his trusted and adored wife.

Your Child Needs the Etiquette of the Telephone

By L. Lamar Matthews.

IN THE midst of a busy morning my telephone rang and rang. I regretfully pulled myself out of the paragraph that I was writing; walked down a flight of stairs and answered the urgent ringing.

L.LAMAR MATTHEWS

"Hello! What number is that?" demanded a man's voice.

I told him. Then he yelled back in an accusing tone:

"Aw! That ain't a want. That's the wrong number."

"Well, I'll excuse you," I stated in a tone that I hoped was a mild rebuke.

But not so.

"You'll excuse me?" the strident voice sneered, "I'll excuse YOU."

Then I laughed. For it was quite evident that the man was absolutely unaware of the fact that he was in error. Nobody had ever told him anything about courtesy. The chances are that his parents before him knew nothing of the gentle art of politeness.

It is a child's nature to be courteous—that is the usual child. He is naturally kind and cheerful and obliging. When he is rude or impolite it is either because something has upset his equilibrium or because he has not been taught the rules of common politeness.

The telephone is a marvelous test of one's breeding. The ill-bred naturally assume that because the unknown person at the other end of the wire is at a safe distance there is no necessity for wasting courtesy upon a mere voice.

Teach your child that he must be as considerate and as polite over the telephone as he is when face to face with visitors. Teach him to say "pardon me" and "thank you" when the interruption or the kindness calls for such expressions.

Teach him to talk directly into the receiver. Nothing is more irritating than the faint, far-away, indistinct tones of a child over the telephone. There is something in the shrill high voice of a child that makes it difficult for his words to carry over the wires, and it is very necessary for him to speak at the right distance from the receiver and in well-modulated tones.

Have a pad and pencil near the telephone so that the child can write down numbers or reminders for you. He can say, for instance, "My mother is not here now, but if you will leave your number I am sure she will call you."

Or "is there any message that you would care to leave for her?"

You might be surprised to know the opinions that your friends or business associates form of your child on account of his telephone communications.

Another thing to teach him is unfailing courtesy to the telephone operators. Several generations have come and gone, apparently believing that an operator is some sort of mechanical device without feeling or human emotions. But you can save your son or daughter a lot of needless stress and strain and strife and struggle by teaching him to be polite to the girls at the switchboards.

Some people get remarkable results from using the telephone. Others get nothing at all but bare facts—and sometimes they are raw. Which kind will your child become? It all depends upon what you teach him about telephone etiquette.

Folly's Daughter

A Thrilling Mystery of New York Night Life

By Ann Lisle

Jill's Mother.

"YOU'RE not my mother," Jill protested. "You're not. You couldn't be."

Folly Duane smiled. And her lips twisted in bitterness.

ANN LISLE

"I wish I were not," she said. "When you came into the world, peace and comfort came to an end for me. I have had to lie and hide and cheat and contrive to protect you. And you have only given me hate in return for the life I've smashed to keep you going. They didn't want you. The wonderful family you've always dreamed about wouldn't have you. You saw your cousin Vivian reject you just now. That is the way they all were. And I pretended you weren't mine, flesh of my flesh and blood of my blood, because I thought you'd do better in the world if you weren't publicly identified with the woman I became for you. And now you stand there and tell me you hate me."

And the worst of it was that even in this moment, Jill couldn't change it. She hated Folly. She had to begin loving her at once. She had to—and she couldn't. She found that when you had been thinking a woman a liar and a cheat and a thief, you couldn't stop all in a minute and begin loving her because she said she was your mother.

"I don't believe you," came rasping from Jill's throat. It was not what she wanted to say. It sounded horrible as it flashed out.

Folly began to laugh, jerkily, hysterically, bitterly.

"That's what I get," she said. "I've made a fool of myself for your sake and you sit and judge me. I won't have it! I won't have it, I tell you. You shan't judge me."

"How can I help it?" Jill asked sadly. "How can I help it?"

Folly stared at her. Her lips quivered, her eyes filled, but she only stared and didn't speak. So Jill began talking, half to herself.

"Don't you remember the time a month ago when I said I wished you could love me because I loved you so terribly. And you told me not to be an idiot but to save my love for the right person. But you put me off. You said not to—slobber over a woman. You hadn't a bit of tenderness for me then. How can I have any for you now when you suddenly claim that you're my mother?" She laughed hysterically and rejected Folly with scorn. "But you couldn't be. You couldn't—"

"I am," Folly exclaimed eagerly. "It was the mother talking to you then. I didn't want you to know that a tired little—butterfly like me was your mother. I wanted to let you dream of somebody as grand as a queen on a throne. I wanted you to aspire high."

"I did. Oh, I did," Jill wailed. "I thought all your sudden emotion was something a man had aroused. I talked like a mother. I warned you. And you told me that the most interesting man you met so far was old enough to be your father—and was just your friend—I couldn't make you out then. I can't make you out now."

"You called Vivian a dumb-bell," Jill said with unconscious impudence.

"And I'm a dumb-bell about you. I always have been," Folly sighed. "Instead of bringing you up to be dependent on me, to be obedient to me, to be grateful to me for every breath you drew, I let you think of yourself as separate from me . . . I didn't use my power while I had it. And now you don't acknowledge that I—have any."

They sat silent for a long time then. The thoughts that lay behind Folly's china blue eyes deepened and darkened them. The truths that were coming to Jill twisted her young face into new anguish.

"If you're telling the truth now, you've lied to me all along," she said. "And if you've always lied to me, why should I believe you now."

"Don't talk like a prosecuting attorney," Folly shuddered. "I was telling you half-truths all the time. And I did it to protect you."

"Why don't you go on 'protecting' me if you think it is so terrible for me to be your daughter?" Jill asked in a hard voice.

"I have to tell you the truth now. That fool Vivian made it almost clear. I've known for a long time that I must tell you. I didn't want to. We were involved in an ugly—scandal, you and I and Vivian and the family. I've carried the burden alone for years. I didn't want you to go around knowing the—hate that had spoiled your youth."

"I've always had a dream," Jill said. "Beppo was the gardener. He came to my nursery with a great rose-bush in his hand. And the roots were red."

"Blood," Folly shrieked and crumpled into her chair. But when Jill ran to her she was sitting up and smiling lightly: "The heat is terrible and the argument brings back the past. Listen, Jill, you know enough. You know too much of that past. I told you your mother's family was a fine one. I told you they cast her off on account of you. I said that she had nobody to turn to but me, that I was the only one who could be trusted to look out for you. Well—it's all true. I, your mother, am the one friend you've ever had in all the world" . . .

"I had a friend!" Jill accused. "And you spoiled it by making me ask more than he would give . . . And yesterday you pawed through my things, you spied, you found his card. And you went to him. What right had you to go? Why couldn't you have stopped to think that your—interfering might spoil my life?"

Folly stared at her for a moment.

"I didn't know," she gasped. "I didn't know—what it meant to you. I guess I have spoiled your life."

She flung herself across the bed and great sobs shook her. But Jill stood across the room, her young face hard and cold. It was horrible to hate anyone as she hated Folly now.

Two Frocks for Any Age

Republished by Arrangement with Good Housekeeping

THE two frocks illustrated here would be charming for the young college girl, for her older sister or for her mother.

The first, of georgette, is for evening wear. It has a deep, full, pointed flounce, soft satin ribbon sash and a boutonnier of silk flowers. It might be of white, orchid, French blue, coral or black.

The second is a flat-crepe dress with double box plaits on each side-front of the skirt. The long front opening has a vestee and folds of white crepe de Chine. A snakeskin belt lends a finishing note of smartness.

-:- Our Rhyming Optimist -:-

By Aline Michaelis

THERE are banners that wave and lift down the ranks of the growing corn, where the Summer breezes drift and a whisper of song is born; verdant banners that proudly fly while the sun's golden rays beat down as the Summer passes by, like a queen in her flower-decked gown. And the whisper of song they send adrift on the Summer breeze—does it tell of blue skies that bend over meadows and hills and trees? Does it hint of the Winter days when the harvests shall all be stored? Ah, no; from the fields of maize a rarer song has soared! From each banner that waves and lifts comes a message of hope and trust, of the earth and its bounteous gifts, of the grain that shall grow from the dust!

Fashion Fads and Fancies

Aviation Theme Flourishes in advance Fall millinery, the skull cap of last Spring being succeeded by an aviator's helmet of felt. Stitched in metal thread, or silk of a contrasting color, New York skyscrapers are outlined on one side, and a well known Parisian landmark—such as the Eiffel Tower—on the other. In the centre, an aeroplane is pictured, against a background of clouds. Doubtless, an undecorated, felt hat, following the same lines, will become popular during the coming season.

Hair Gleaming Through Hair is what forms woman's "crown of glory" this midsummer season; for large, transparent, hair hats are being worn by girls and matrons who adhere closely to the vogue. These huge hats seldom have other trimming than a velvet ribbon, banding the crown and tied in a careless bow at one side. Sometimes, however, a flower-trimmed model is seen.

Every Dog Has His Day in the new canine cut-outs of calfskin, that are used to trim the pockets of wool sports frocks and are appliqued upon the crown of many a felt sports hat. Every variety of dog, from Pekinese to bull, from terrier to greyhound, is represented in this kennel-inspired mode.

Captivating Capes will distinguish the Fall wraps, for the cape-coat is expected to enjoy a great vogue during the coming season. Some individual capes will be worn, but the greater number will be part of a coat, such as a triple cape treatment, confined to the back of a smartly cut coat.

Bonnets and Boutonnieres are frequently created of the same flowers. A toque of cornflowers, matched by a boutonniere of the same blossoms, was especially chic when worn with an afternoon frock of navy georgette combined with the same fabric in cornflower blue.

Cooking by Electricity

By Hannah Wing.

ELECTRICITY has done as much for other household processes that women are naturally eager to know what it will do for cooking. Over and again come the questions—"What Does It Cost?" "Can I Afford It?" "Is It Slow?" "Do the Ranges Wear Well?" In all cases we hasten to tell them that the possibilities of cooking by electricity are limited by but two things: A reasonable rate for adequate electric service and the skillful use of an efficient range by the woman who cooks. The last item is even more important than the first, for women who use electricity wisely and well have found that by planning their meals and arranging the cooking to save useless waste of fuel they can cut the first cost of cooking by electricity from twenty-five per cent to fifty per cent.

Naturally the size of the family affects the bill for cooking. The nearest approach to a study of cost per person has been made by power companies one of which places the cost at about 6½c per person per day for the average family of 4 persons at a 4c cooking rate.

On an electric stove with four cooking plates, the heating capacity of the plates varies. The front right plate may use 1,000 watts, the front left plate 1,500, the rear left 1,000, and the rear right only 660. It is evidently foolish as well as expensive to select a plate that uses 1,500 watts for a job that one using only 660 could do as well. Skill in selecting the plate for the job and in shifting from one plate to another as cooking progresses comes with experience.

Each plate has three cooking speeds, high, medium and low. A plate that on high uses 1,000 watts uses only 500 on medium and 250 on low. As soon as cooking is well started it can be continued and finished on medium or low.

The fewer plates you use at one time the less electricity is consumed. The oven cuts the cost of cooking by electricity. This calls for skill in planning menus in which oven cooked vegetables will be included with the day's roast, and thinking ahead so that tomorrow's pudding and Billy's custard will all be completed when the time and temperature are right in the one heating of the oven.

Why Common Fruits Are Valuable in the Diet

By Chas. A. L. Reed, M. D., Former President of the American Medical Association.

YOU, I hope, are not one given to a lopsided diet, all meat, all fruit, all milk, all eggs, all nuts. If you are, you're a dietetic nut—no pun intended.

CHARLES A.L. REED, M.D.

When, therefore, I emphasize the importance of fruits in diet I wish it to be understood that I speak of them as constituting a part of a well-balanced diet.

Everyone knows the saying "an apple a day keeps the doctor away," but not many people could explain why. The truth is that the apple, a king among fruits, is alkaline and full of essential salts. It helps to prevent acidity, with the consequent ailments of gout, rheumatism and jaundice, and the nerve and skin troubles which result from self-poisoning through sluggishness of the liver.

The best time to eat an apple is two hours after a meal, when the food is just beginning to leave the stomach, and a particularly excellent time is the last thing at night. It has a mild antiseptic and cleansing effect upon the teeth which removes the acid and unpleasant taste from the mouth and it neutralizes all the excess acids which have accumulated in the system during the day. By doing this it conduces to sound and refreshing sleep and a general feeling of fitness and good health on rising next morning.

If the apple is the king of fruits, the grape is the queen. Grapes are well saturated with glucose in its purest form, crystalized and distilled by the rays of the sun. They also contain a great variety and abundance of minerals such as chlorine, iron, magnesium, calcium, phosphorous, potassium and sulphur. This makes them invaluable tissue—and blood-builders and vitalizing agents.

Lemons replenish the system with the potassium salts in which it is deficient, purify the blood and stimulate the circulation. They cause an alkaline reaction by the citric acid which they contain, and help to throw out acids, waste and poisonous matter. They are a plentiful source of vitamin C.

Oranges, besides keeping scurvy away, are tonic, stimulating and anti-toxic. They should be taken every day to tone up the system and purify the blood. They are especially valuable for children, as they enable the system to use the lime which is provided in other foods, thus preventing rickets and helping to ensure normal development and growth.

Pears are very nutritious and aid digestion, besides being a mild laxative when ripe.

Pineapples, since they contain natural pepsin, are very beneficial to all sufferers from dyspepsia.

Melons are blood purifiers and general kidney sweepers.

Raisins contain much sugar in its purest and most beneficial form. Since they are rich in iron, they give energy and life to sufferers from anaemia and debility.

Strawberries are particularly good for the skin, and counteract inflammation, gout and rheumatism. They are, however, one of the fruits to which some people are intolerant. This intolerance or "idiosyncrasy" shows itself in acute indigestion or eruption such as nettlerash. It is Nature's signal to keep away from that particular article of food which causes it, and simply means that there is something in the food which does not suit the blood of that particular individual.

You can see in these facts why you should eat the commonly grown, commonly excellent and commonly distributed fruits even though they command an uncommonly high price.

DO YOU KNOW THAT—

If London continues to grow at the rate it has maintained during the past century, it is computed that there will be a population of twenty millions by the year 2000?

Thunderstorms approaching New York are "observed" by an automatic device which commences to ring a warning bell when the disturbance is still 200 miles from the city?

Out of the fifty-five principal private estates in Great Britain, at least thirty-five are not for sale, either because their owners do not need the money or because they can't dispose of them?

For four centuries the massive oak table in St. Thomas' Hospital, Canterbury, has been in daily use. It seats twenty persons, and was intended for poor pilgrims to the shrine of St. Thomas a Becket?

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEHOLD

When washing linoleum avoid the use of soda, strong cleaning powders, or scouring soap, as these tend to remove the oil and break up the compressed cork substance of which linoleum consists.

A pinch of bicarbonate of soda stirred into milk that is to be boiled will keep it from curdling.

Cold potatoes used instead of soap clean the hands and make the skin soft and smooth.

Sour milk will often remove iron rust from white fabrics.

Correct MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

The Groom's Ring.

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

I am about to be married. Some of my friends say that the groom must buy the bride's trousseau and others say that the mother must buy it. I think the groom should. Am I right?

(2) Is it all right to have the bride's ring of white gold and the groom's ring of yellow gold?

LOU.

YOU are terribly wrong, dear friend: To allow the groom to buy the bride's trousseau would be a most serious social error for the bride to make. Tradition has always decreed that the groom's financial obligations begin with the wedding journey, and he must not be allowed to supply any of the trousseau of the bride.

(2) Yes. Usually now the bride's ring is of platinum, and sometimes of white gold, and not, as formerly, of yellow gold; but if the groom wears a ring, it is of yellow gold.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)
