PLO Opens Fire On Israeli Town

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Guerrillas in southern Lebanon fired a volley of Katyusha rockets into the Israeli frontier town of Kiryat Shmona today, killing one man and wounding seven other persons in a spiraling eye-for-an-eye fight between the Palestinians and Israel.

The Palestine Liberation Organization in Beirut said the town was rocketed in retaliation for Israeli air strikes on Palestinian camps some 12 hours earlier.

After the four or five rockets slammed into Kiryat Shmona, in the northern Galilee panhandle, Israeli artillery opened fire on Palestinian positions across the border, the military command said in Tel Aviv.

The army said five children in Kiryat Shmona were treated for shock after being evacuated from a building hit by one of the Soviet-designed rockets.

"Usually you can hear Katyushas," said one resident, "but this morning I didn't hear anything, just a massive explosion and then I was covered with dust. I took the children out to an underground shelter."

The woman, Mrs. Sima Ben-David, lives next door to a second-floor apartment that was demolished.

The military said the rocket attack was the first across the Lebanese border since last June, when Israel withdrew an invasion force from southern Lebanon after a 90-day sweep to drive Palestinian guerrillas away from the frontier.

Palestinian sources in Beirut said the Israeli air attack at sundown Wednesday killed or wounded as many as 27 persons. Israeli military officials said the raid was ordered in reprisal for a string of Palestinian bombings in Israel that have killed four civilians and wounded 70 since Nov. 1.

The Israelis also reported three persons slightly hurt in a grenade attack in the Old City of Jerusalem after nightfall Wednesday. It was the second bombing of the day in Jerusalem. An earlier blast in the doorway of an Old City restaurant slightly wounded six persons.

Egypt's Foreign Ministry denounced the Israeli attacks as "a threat to the current (Egyptian-Israeli) peace process." But Cairo went ahead with plans to send Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil to Brussels to meet with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance this weekend for another attempt to get the stalled peace negotiations going again.

PLO headquarters in Beirut said eight Israeli jets rocketed, strafed and bombed two Palestinian refugee camps and a civilian village along the coastal highway in southern Lebanon, 20 to 40 miles north of the Israeli-Lebanese border.

The Israeli military command said the targets — Bourj el Shimali and Qasumieh on the outskirts of Tyre, and Dahr el Bourj about 15 miles farther north — were training bases and staging areas for guerrilla attacks on Israel.

An estimated 10,000 Palestinians live at the Bourj el Shimali refugee camp.

The PLO statement said the raids killed two civilians and wounded 11. Other Palestinian sources said earlier that 27 were killed or wounded. Unconfirmed reports said the 13 casualties reported by the PLO were Palestinians and the 14 other reported casualties were Lebanese.

Israel said there were 10 to 20 guerrillas at each of the targets, but gave no estimate of casualties.

The air raid was the first Israeli military strike into Lebanon in 2½ months. On Oct. 5 Israeli gunboats shelled Moslem West Beirut during heavy fighting in the capital between Syrian peacekeeping troops and Israel's Lebanese Christian allies.

Israeli troops invaded southern Lebanon last March after a terrorist attack along the Tel Aviv-Haifa highway in which 35 Israelis were killed. The army pulled out in June after a three-month sweep against guerrilla bases. The region was turned over to a United Nations peacekeeping force or to Lebanese Christian militia units, but the Israelis claim that hundreds of guerrillas have filtered back into the 500-square-mile zone.

Solons Urge Action To Halt Alien Tide

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying the United States can no longer be a "safety valve" for Mexico and other developing nations with burgeoning populations, a House committee is recommending tighter laws to halt the flow of illegal aliens into this country.

The House Select Committee on Population released a report Wednesday that also urged better efforts to "seal" the U.S.-Mexican border by devoting more federal money and law enforcement personnel to keeping out illegal aliens.

Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., the committee chairman, said 60 percent of the "hundreds of thousands" of illegal aliens who come to the United States each year are from Mexico.

"They come for the simple reason that job opportunities and income are better here, and it is so easy to cross our borders illegally," Scheuer said at a news conference.

Scheuer wants the United States to seal its 1,950-mile border with Mexico to help hold back the growing tide of illegal aliens. He declined to go into details of how such "sealing" could be accomplished and did not give an estimate of the cost of such a project. But he emphasized that illegal aliens are costly to this nation, too.

(Plans now are underway to construct security fences in the areas around El Paso and San Diego to make it more difficult for aliens to walk across the border, but the move has drawn fire from some Mexican-American organizations in this country. The fences have been branded a "Tortilla Curtain" by opponents.)

Currently, Scheuer said, the United States has a "chaotic non-policy" of keeping track of foreign visitors who come to this nation to study, do business or see the sights. He said that means there is no reliable record of how many foreigners illegally remain in the United States.

He estimated that 40 percent of the illegal aliens enter the country legally as students or tourists, overstay their visa limits in violation of the law, and then melt into the immigrant community.

Although the committee report said there is no accurate record of how many illegal aliens are in the United States, it said estimates range between two million and 12 million.

"Unfortunately, we do have enough statistics about illegal immigration from Mexico to learn that it is potentially an explosive situation," Scheuer said.

To reduce the likelihood that illegal immigrants will be able to find jobs in the United States, the committee recommended setting up a fraudulent-document laboratory in the Immigration and Naturalization Service to control the large market for counterfeit Social Security cards, birth certificates and drivers licences used by illegal aliens.

The committee also urged Congress to pass a law making U.S. sponsors of legal immigrants financially responsible for them.

Jet Hijacked By Woman

MARION, Ill. (UPI) — A woman reportedly armed with dynamite hijacked a Trans World Airlines DC-9 jetliner today to Southern Illinois, where she demanded the release of a prisoner from the nation's highest security penitentiary.

Authorities said the unidentified woman seized TWA Flight 541 carrying 83 passengers and a crew of six from Louisville, Ky., to Kansas City, Mo.

The jetliner landed at Williamson County Airport near Marion and authorities reported that the hijacker and all the passengers and crew were still aboard.

"The woman says she has three sticks of dynamite strapped to her body," said an FAA spokesman in Washington. "She's demanding that a federal prisoner be released. We don't know yet who she wants released."

The federal prison just outside Marion, known as the modern-day "Alcatraz," was the scene last spring of a dramatic attempted escape by a hijacked helicopter. The helicopter pilot shot and killed the woman hijacker as the copter plunged toward the prison yard.

Three inmates and an alleged woman accomplice went on trial last week in nearby Benton. Two defendants pleaded guilty to escape charges after the trial started and closing arguments were scheduled Thursday for the others, including inmate Garrett B. Trapnell, 40, described by prison officials as "an extreme escape risk."

An FBI agent said it was possible the TWA hijacker was seeking the release of Trapnell, but Joe Frets of the Federal Aviation Administration in Kansas City described the hijacking as "kind of a wieldy type situation."

"She wants to talk to a prisoner," Frets said. "What is coming we don't know, of course."

Frets said it was doubtful she would hijack a plane just to talk to a prisoner.

The plane was hijacked at mid-morning over Missouri after an intermediate stop at Lambert Field in St. Louis. The hijacking occurred, an FBI agent said, while the DC-9 was on its final approach and "within five minutes" of scheduled landing at Kansas City.

The TWA flight arrived in St. Louis from Louisville at 8:20 a.m., took off at 9 a.m. and was scheduled to arrive at Kansas City at 10:04 a.m. It landed at Williamson County Airport near Marion at 10:48 a.m.

The jetliner halted at one end of the 8,500-foot north-south runway, the airport's longest, and out of sight of the terminal.

In the previous hijack on May 24, Barbara Oswald, 43, took over a helicopter from a St. Louis tourist service and forced pilot Allen Barklage to fly to the prison. She apparently hoped to land the craft inside the prison and pick up three waiting inmates.

Goodfellows Get Packages Ready

Christmas minus three days and counting...and sorting...and sacking...

The names are in, the delivery routes are being planned and the list of Monday morning's Merry Masked Men is growing, but it needs to grow more.

The 44th annual Goodfellow Christmas project for needy children is rolling toward 4 a.m. Monday when hundreds of volunteers will drive their gasoline-driven sleighs by the Merry Masked Men's North Pole and take a happy holiday to many poor children.

Thousands of sacks of toys, fruit, candy and nuts are being prepared at a cost of more than $1.50 per child.

The address for donations is: CHIEF GOODFELLOW, P.O. Box 491, Lubbock, Texas, 79408.

Persons wishing to volunteer to deliver Christmas packages early Monday morning need to come by Chief Goodfellow's branch office at The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal, Eighth Street and Avenue J, today and Friday to register for identification.

If you cannot come by the Goodfellows' branch office at The Avalanche-Journal, you can sign up at 4 a.m. Monday at the East Broadway entrance to the South Plains Fairgrounds, Broadway and Avenue A.

Bullet Hits DA's Home

By JACK DOUGLAS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Tragedy almost struck the home of Lubbock Criminal District Attorney Alton Griffin Wednesday night when someone shot through the front door of the house and barely missed the DA's 17-year-old son.

The shot, fired about 8:05 p.m., shattered a glass door at the 6122 Lynnhaven Dr. residence. The bullet traveled through the home and ricocheted in the den where Griffin's son, Russell, was watching television.

Sadat Airs Hard Line

MANSOURA, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat accused Israel today of "intentionally misleading the world" by claiming Egypt had introduced new elements in the peace negotiations.

In a speech broadcast live by Cairo radio, Sadat warned israel not to expect a separate agreement to result from any revived treaty talks that are arranged at a tripartite meeting in Brussels this weekend.

"Those in Israel must hear this again," Sadat told members of his newly founded political party in this Nile delta town. "There will be no separate agreement. There must be a comprehensive settlement through which the Palestinian problem is solved."

Developer Rebuffed By Zoners

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Zoning Board of Adjustment this morning ordered developer J.D. Chandler a second time to meet setback requirements for a townhouse at 8633 Knoxville Drive.

Last month the ZBA rejected a variance on the setback requirements, and this morning turned down a similar variance request.

Chandler will have to cut off part of the townhouse garage which comes within five or six feet of the side alley, instead of the required 20 feet.

Board members appeared to feel Chandler had acted in bad faith when he did not build the townhouse to conform with Lubbock City Council requirements on the construction.

Board chairman David Hester cast the only vote against denying the variance, saying it bothered him that the city had approved the plan showing the garage too close to the alley.

Planning director Jim Bertram said the question had become one of "principle" rather than a question of whether the privacy of adjacent neighbors would be protected.

Mother Hunts Hit-Run Driver

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — Young Kevin Showalter died five years ago — run down on a bitter cold Christmas Eve by a car that didn't stop.

No charges have been filed, and on Sunday the legal clock stops for negligent homicide — the usual charge for hit-and-run.

Kevin's mother, 58-year-old Lucille Showalter, has fought to find his killer, launching a private investigation and sparking a state police inquiry that pointed to a former New London mayor.

She still believes her 21-year-old son's death will be solved.

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again," she says, quoting Lord Byron.

"I still have absolute faith that this will be solved," she said in an interview. "...I only hope that someone in an important position will do something."

Top officials have stepped in before: just prior to Christmas 1976, Gov. Ella Grasso directed a grand jury be called to examine the evidence turned up by a special state police investigation.

This year, Mrs. Showalter appealed to State's Attorney C. Robert Satti to re-examine the evidence. He has said he will make no immediate comment on the request.

After Kevin died while changing a tire on his girlfriend's car at the side of a New London street, Mrs. Showalter began her effort. She amassed 20 volumes of interview transcripts and notes.

"When it's your flesh and blood, you have to know for him," she says now. "I have to know for Kevin."

But after his death in 1973, she sometimes felt alone. "It's a nightmare to look back and realize no one wanted me to find out what happened," she recalls.

Then came the special state police investigation, a six-month inquiry a source close to the case, who asked not to be identified, estimated cost over $250,000.

Superior Court Judge Joseph Dannehy, serving as a one-man grand jury, answered Mrs. Showalter's hopes and fears last February.

In a report, he declared it was "more probable than not" that the person who drove the car that knocked Showalter's body 50 feet was former New London Mayor Harvey Mallove.

But the judge said there were no grounds to prosecute, because the New London police investigation was "inept." He also suggested some witnesses had apparently lied.

Mallove, a jeweler who has said he saw another car when he passed the scene after Kevin's death, insists he is a victim of a "grotesque injustice." His statements were supported by a polygraph test.

Other legal avenues are open to Mrs. Showalter, including a possible civil suit if more evidence becomes available. Her lawyer says the driver of the car that killed Kevin might still be charged with perjury or obstruction of justice.

Mrs. Showalter is writing a book in memory of her son.

"I had to have some way of perpetuating his life," she says.

John Downey Gets State Post

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — John Downey, whose hopes for a governmental career languished 21 years while he was in a Chinese prison, has received a cabinet post from Gov. Ella Grasso.

DOWNEY

Gov. Grasso named Downey, a former CIA agent-pilot who was shot down while flying a mission over Manchuria in November 1952, as secretary of business regulation. The appointment takes effect in January.

The New Haven lawyer was an unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic lieutenant governor's nomination on Gov. Grasso's ticket earlier this year.

Downey, 48, said Wednesday he had always hoped for a career in government and politics. After he was released by the Chinese in March 1973, Downey studied at Harvard Law School before returning to his home state of Connecticut to practice law.

Flynt Must Stand Trial

ATLANTA (AP) — Hustler magazine owner Larry Flynt must stand trial on obscenity charges brought against him in September 1977, a district court judge has ruled.

FLYNT

Judge Dorothy Beasley overruled motions by Flynt's attorneys, who sought to quash the charges, claiming Georgia's obscenity law was unconstitutional.

Fulton County Solicitor Hinson McAuliffe, who filed the charges, said pretrial hearings in the case probably will be scheduled in January.

Flynt leased a bookstore in Atlanta in September 1977 to sell his adult magazines in defiance of McAuliffe's crackdown. He was arrested on a charge of distributing obscene material.

Muriel Humphrey Misses HHH

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Muriel Humphrey says she feels sadness but also a sense of thankfulness as she prepares to spend her first Christmas in 42 years without Hubert Humphrey.

It has been nearly a year since Sen. Humphrey died of cancer. The loneliness is just now setting in, she says, partly because of the winding down of her busy schedule and the upcoming holidays.

"We miss the great fun-loving dad and husband. We miss his great companionship. ... I miss his humor. I miss someone to bounce ideas off. I miss his teasing. I miss somebody to tease. It's coming along. It has its difficult phases. ... You do go through various stages in losing a loved one," she said.

It was a year ago Friday that a wan and weak Humphrey, accompanied by his wife, returned to Minnesota for the last time. He died Jan. 13 at the couple's lakeside home at Waverly about 40 miles west of Minneapolis.

Last Christmas, the Humphrey clan, a daughter and three sons and their families, gathered at Waverly for Humphrey's last Christmas. This year they will be at her daughter's home in Lake Minnetonka.

"We'll be together," she said, "but it'll be a little different."

Kissinger's Portrait Unveiled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Henry Kissinger's portrait, unveiled at a State Department ceremony, prompted the former secretary of state to quip: "They've painted out the scepter."

Wednesday's unveiling showed Kissinger sitting in a chair holding a document. The portrait, by J. Anthony Willis of Houston, will be displayed with those of other former secretaries of state.

"It's an excellent likeness," Kissinger joked, "swelled head and all."

Clement Conger, the department curator of furnishings and pictures, said an earlier Kissinger portrait by Gardner Cox of Boston was rejected because it was not dynamic enough.

Matter Of Time

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — For Craig King it's time and money.

He says a watch he took from a New Brunswick jewelry store was overpriced — and that means doing a lot more time.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

The watch was priced at $295, but 15 months later it sold for $189. The theft of goods valued at less than $200 is a disorderly persons offense in New Jersey, carrying a top penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine. But the theft of goods valued at more than $200 carries a more severe penalty — a three-year jail term and a $1,000 fine.

King questioned the timepiece's value at his trial, and the Superior Court judge called time out for an appeals court ruling.

The appeals court agreed with King Tuesday, saying it was time for a new trial.

PACs Give Generously To Senate Candidates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political committees — most of them sponsored by corporations, unions and other special interest groups — gave the winners in last month's Senate elections $6.1 million, according to campaign finance reports.

Of that amount, most was contributed by political action committees — a special breed known as PACs.

As defined by federal law, a PAC is a committee established by a bank, corporation, union or trade association to accept voluntary contributions which are then donated to candidates.

They have existed for more than 20 years but their number, particularly those with corporate affiliations, has grown dramatically since 1974 when a $1,000 limit was placed on what an individual could contribute to a candidate.

The action committees can give up to $5,000 to a candidate per election — a total of $10,000 if a candidate has a primary.

Many people share the view of Common Cause, a self-styled citizens' lobby, that the growth of the political action committees, particularly the rapid increase in the number with corporate sponsors, could make special interests even more powerful in congressional politics.

Others, like Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., have praised the growing role of PACs as a positive force that "provide for broad-based, open participation in the political process."

Percy raised about $435,000 from political action committees, tops among the 35 Senate winners in last month's elections, as he overcame an early deficit in the polls to defeat Democrat Alex Seith.

Conservative Rep. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., who unseated liberal Democratic Sen. Floyd K. Haskell, also is a firm believer in PACs. He raised $351,911 from political committees in 1978, the most of any newly-elected senator.

"I don't think we could have won without (the money)," Armstrong said in an interview. "I started out way behind and I had to use the money to catch up."

Armstrong said his campaign actively solicited money from corporate PACs and "groups interested in free enterprise."

"We had a team of four or five business people who went to Washington and other places and visited the political action committees to inform them about my campaign. We followed up later with telephone calls, mailings and additional visits," Armstrong said. "It was a straightfoward selling campaign."

"I never wanted some lobbyist coming into my office and saying, 'I put you here,'" Boren said.

Boren, who paid for his campaign with $765,808 from individual contributors and $1,078 from local Democratic committees, said he turned down about $150,000 from PACs. He claims the political action committees, whether union or business, "promote interest group mentality as opposed to 'I am an individual American.'"

The total number of registered political committees, including those affiliated with corporations, unions, trade associations and political parties, has risen from 608 in 1975 to 1,709 last October. The amounts contributed by PACs have also increased sharply from $22.6 million for congressional elections in 1976 to an estimated $40 million for this year.

The $1,000 limit placed on individual contributions in 1974 to prevent corporate executives from donating large sums to pro-business candidates has particularly spurred the growth of corporate PACs. They have risen in number from 89 to 776 in that period.

"The corporate PAC growth has been explosive," said Ben Albert, spokesman for the AFL-CIO's political action committee, COPE. He predicted that business PACs would soon dominate campaign financing.

"You're talking about the kind of money that no one else can muster," he said.

Albert said the AFL-CIO favors public financing for campaigns even though COPE remains a leading PAC contributor, giving about $1 million to congressional candidates in 1978.

Common Cause also favors public financing for congressional elections as a way to reduce the influence of special interests on government.

"The growth trend in PACs ... means more political decisions will be made on the basis of who has the most money, not the issues involved," said Fred Wertheimer, vice president of Common Cause.

However, officials for business PACs see the growth in their numbers as a positive trend that will lead to more candidates being elected who favor a strong "free enterprise" system.

"The growth in business political action committees means that business has the potential for reaching parity with labor unions in supporting candidates," said Joseph J. Fanelli, president of the Business and Industry PAC. "Business is doing no more than labor unions have done for decades."

Corporate PACs split their contributions about evenly between Republicans and Democrats in last month's congressional elections, according to the Federal Elections Commission. Labor PACs favored Democrats by about 12 to 1.

Although PACs tend to favor powerful incumbents, large sums also were funneled to candidates for open seats and challengers who were considered likely winners.

According to the candidates' campaign finance reports, the 20 Senate newcomers nearly matched the amounts raised by the 15 senators who won re-election.

While the incumbent winners averaged $193,294 from political committees, candidates who won seats in the Senate for the first time raised an average of $163,191.

Incumbent senators who received large amounts in 1978 included John Tower, R-Texas, $302,345; Jesse Helms, R-N.C., $289,697; Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., $250,550; Howard Baker, R-Tenn., $211,947; and Pete Domenici, R-N.M., $207,369.

Helms raised the most money of all the Senate winners — $4.7 million, but $4.4 million came from individual contributions, largely solicited through a mass mailing campaign to conservatives around the country.

Among the newcomers, six raised more than $200,000 from political committees. They are: Armstrong, David Durenberger, R-Minn.; Carl Levin, D-Mich.; Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn.; Thad Cochran, R-Miss.; and Bill Bradley, D-N.J.

Demos Eye New Hampshire Primary

CONCORD, N.H. (UPI) — In 1975, an unknown darkhorse named Jimmy Carter got the jump on every other White House contender with an earlybird campaign in the New Hampshire primary, and Democrats there want a repeat of the act before someone else thinks of it.

Carter began setting up an organization in New Hampshire more than a year before the nation's first presidential primary in 1976. He then was so obscure he attracted only a dozen people when he opened his campaign headquarters.

Carter hasn't said if he will run for re-election. But if he does, New Hampshire Democrats want him to repeat his early start, to head off challengers bent on repeating his come-from-nowhere feat in a state that likes underdogs.

Among those mentioned as possible challengers are California Gov. Edmund G. Brown and New York Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan. But top New Hampshire Democrats say they haven't seen any sign of either seeking to set up an organization in the state.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., has said he will not challenge Carter, but Democrats in New Hampshire concede he could give the president a difficult fight should he decide to run.

"If he's (Carter's) going to run, especially in a state like New Hampshire, it ought to be as soon as possible," House Democratic Leader Chris Spirou said recently.

"The state of New Hampshire is small and a lot of (candidates) would like to experiment," Spirou said. "We don't want to experiment with a situation we feel we are satisfied with."

Spirou said he passed that message to Carter at a closed-door meeting with the president during the Democrats' midterm convention in Memphis this month. Asked how Carter replied, Spirou answered: "He smiled."

Today is Thursday, Dec. 21, the 355th day of 1978 with 10 to follow.

The moon is approaching it last quarter.

The morning stars are Venus, Mercury, Jupiter and Saturn.

The evening star is Mars.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Sagittarius.

Soviet Premier Josef Stalin was born Dec. 21, 1879.

In 1620, the Pilgrims set foot for the first time on American soil at Plymouth, Mass.

In 1942, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the validity of six-week divorces granted in Nevada.

Explosion Causes Electric Outage

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — The Mayo Clinic and about half the city's 50,000 residents were without power following an explosion and fire in an electrical switching station.

The clinic's emergency generators did not go on for 30 minutes after the outage Tuesday morning, but no surgery was underway at the time and no deaths or injuries were attributed to the breakdown.

Cause of the outage — which disrupted power for several hours — may never be pinpointed, officials said, but the circuit breaker which exploded could have been damaged during a flood July 6.

Takeover Of Quebec Firm Proposed

QUEBEC (AP) — The Quebec government has proposed seizing control of Asbestos Corp., the province's second largest asbestos mining operation, from General Dynamics Corp. of St. Louis.

The takeover proposal was said to be part of a government policy to boost jobs and mineral processing in the province.

Details of the takeover plan were not disclosed by Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau, who announced the decision. But he said studies prepared for the government indicate the company is worth between $116 and $125 million.

The finance minister said the bill would not become law before the Assembly's current session expires Tuesday. It will be reintroduced when the next session begins in March.

General Dynamics, which holds a 54.6 percent interest in Asbestos Corp., said it considers "totally unacceptable" Quebec's estimate of $40 to $42 a share as the company's worth. Parizeau told the Assembly that General Dynamics' financial advisers had suggested a price of about $100 a share.

The company said the takeover plan is "an attempt to pressure the shareholders to sell their stock at an unrealistic, low price."

Asbestos Corp. shares were trading at $23.50 apiece before the government announced its asbestos policy, including a threat to expropriate companies, on Oct. 21, 1977.

The nationalization has been threatened for more than two years by the Parti Quebecois-led government.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

Whyte Alights On Blight

ONE BRAVE soul finally has mustered the courage to tell the awful truth about the mega-structures currently being touted as the salvation of the decaying downtown cores of the nation's major cities.

Although ostensibly built to infuse a declining urban area with new life, their massive concrete walls, artificial moats and limited entry portals present a highly inhospitable facade to the outside world.

Inside a typical complex, a visitor escapes from urban life rather than participating in it. "I can spend a whole day in Houston Center without going to Houston at all," quipped urban planner William H. Whyte Jr., author of "The Organization Man."

OFFERING A candid, critical appraisal of those oversized complexes is a chancy undertaking because business and civic leaders in cities from coast to coast have staked both their reputations and their fortunes on the success of the urban behemoths.

"Once inside, you're not sure what city you're in—or whether you're in a city or at an airport," groused Whyte at a recent Conservation Foundation convocation.

In another presentation to the conference, James W. Rouse, considered among the country's most imaginative and innovative real estate developers, offered a more sensible alternative.

Rouse relies heavily on rehabilitating old stores, abandoned warehouses and other existing structures. His shopping area is integrated with the surrounding neighborhood, not isolated from it. The relatively modest scale makes people feel comfortable with their surroundings—not threatened by them.

HE PROBABLY is best known as the developer of the thriving "new town" of Columbia, Md. In recent years, however, Rouse has devoted considerable time and thought to center city rehabilitation.

His successes include commercial projects that have attracted both retailers and customers to once-blighted downtown areas.

"In the 1980s and 1990s, the transformation of the center cities will be even more dramatic than the growth of the suburbs in the 1950s and 1960s," he predicted.

But the salvation of the cities surely won't be found in the convention center-hotel-office building-shopping arcade combination Whyte caustically describes as "the last convulsive embodiments of an era whose time has passed."

AT LEAST TO the extent of protecting the Health Sciences Center Hospital from being regarded as a "charity" facility, directors of the Lubbock County Hospital District are taking the right approach.

"Some people still think this is a free hospital," executive director Gerald Bosworth told the board. "This is not a free hospital. This is not a depository for bad debts" left by non-paying patients at other hospitals.

Indeed, the Health Sciences Center teaching hospital is expected to follow the pattern of other medical school-affiliated hospitals and be a place anyone would chose to go for the best care money can buy.

It has a ways to go before it can catch up with some of the other facilities now available, but for its size and stage of development, the HSCH is first class.

LARGER AND better-established hospitals here also will have an expanding role to play in the future as Lubbock's reputation grows as a medical center rivaling some of the best in the land.

It is unfortunate that any of these should have to absorb the cost of providing hospitalization to non-indigents who fail to pay their bills.

What the hospital district directors must do, as they will strive to do, is strike a happy medium between preserving a "reasonable mix" of paying and non-paying clients while making sure that the medical needs of the truly needy are met.

Holmes Alexander:

Now You Know Rest Of Story

WASHINGTON—When the long-expected year of 1984—made a code word of terror and gruesome expectations by George Orwell's pessimistic account of One World Under Big Brother—finally arrived, it was not as he gave it to us.

Perhaps the planners of One World were warned off because his best-seller "1984," divulged their methods and forewarned the victims or perhaps they thought they had found a better way to subjugate civilization.

Anyhow, the Central State, which we might as well stop being coy and call the Soviet Union, came to believe around 30 years ago that it could con its only essential opponent, the USA, into a state of submission with a lot less trouble than using kiloton bombs and secret police.

BT THE TIME 1984 rolled around, America had not radically changed its policies of defense, making no important alterations from Presidents Truman through Carter.

The idea was what a prominent Kremlinologist, Dr. Leon Goure, Russian-born but Western educated and oriented, simply designated as "punitive."

It calls for assured nuclear destruction in wartime of the Soviet cities, acknowledging that the same devastation would fall on our own, and making the perfectly reasonable assumption that the urban cities of both countries would be safe because such Assured Mutual Destruction (AMD) would restrain both governments from going to war.

But ever since Hiroshima, the Kremlin had found they had a hidden, if not a secret, weapon. It was a factor not reckoned as a phase of war.

IF THE RUSSIAN citizens could, as they did against other Western invaders, stand fast, they could not be defeated.

By constructing underground shelters for people and industry, there would be expected losses, but not unacceptable ones.

Meanwhile, the One World leaders assumed that the foolish Americans, relying on the AMD theory of an impossible war, could be caught in the open and slaughtered at will.

There was a major error in the Russian calculations. They counted on the valor of their civilian population, and invited the Americans to waste nonrenewable nuclear weapons on this indestructable target.

In November 1978, President Carter, who would leave office prior to the critical date of 1984, did propose a $2 billion, seven-year plan of civil defense, merging it with disaster-recovery from natural disturbances, such as floods and earthquakes.

But this civil defense plan, depending on annual donations by Congress, was not designed to protect America's well-known Military Industrial Complex.

The rolling around of 1984 found a situation very different than the One World planners had expected.

They could not sensibly expect the gigantic American military Industrial Complex to expend its energies and resources by striking a defensive pose like the docile if valiant Russian civilian population.

The remedy was to make certain that the American superiority in technological warfare never lagged, and to indoctrinate the American people to the principle of the First Strike.

The idea that America would never shoot first had outlived its lunacy by the fateful date, so that 1984 proved a year much like the one we are living in today. Not the best that the world every knew, but not the worst either.

Sylvia Porter:

Many Of Us Living On Borrowed Dimes

(Second of three columns)

CONSUMER DEBT HAS soared at an explosive rate in 1978—and if you have borrowed money recently, you're fairly typical of the average American.

But does this trend necessarily mean that consumers in general, and you in particular, have taken on more than you can handle? Are you changing your habits of saving and planning?

Have you abandoned the tradition of saving in uncertain times, lost your feeling that being deeply in debt is vaguely immoral? Are you instead borrowing as a way to beat inflation?

There is no doubt that the psychology of inflation is among the greatest evils of 1978's steep inflation rate. You expect prices to climb, so you buy now to get ahead of the price hikes.

OR YOU BORROW money today with the intention of repaying tomorrow in cheaper dollars.

Or if you can't quite bring yourself to borrow, you're not saving either, because you figure you're earning a "negative" interest rate on your savings (living costs are rising faster than the interest you can earn on savings).

If this is a permanent change, then you are indeed responding in a markedly different way to inflation than in the past.

In previous periods of economic turmoil, you tended to increase your savings to be sure you would have enough money available to pay for such essentials as food, rent, any emergency.

This attitude has been remarkably stable—and the basic evidence still is that your anticipatory buying and heavier borrowing will not last.

MOST OF YOU continue to believe that today's steep inflation signals trouble for the economy and that you should cut back on spending and try to save as much as possible for bad times ahead.

But the American consumer seems to be borrowing anyway—much more than four years ago when double-digit inflation also undermined the economy and sent us crashing into the worst slump since the end of World War II.

* One reason, I submit, is that you have become more resilient, and you have come to accept the prospect that prices will climb, and thus, you don't snap your pocketbooks shut as quickly as you did in the past.

* Continuing and accelerating inflation has impelled you into borrowing to accumulate assets—most notably, houses. You consider real property—homes and such accompanying durables as furniture and appliances—as your best hedge against inflation.

YOUR PURCHASES of such costly goods as these have spurred the upsurge in debt but also enhanced consumers' assets.

* In addition to inflation, demographic and social factors have contributed to the rapid rise in debt. Particularly important has been the influx of younger consumers into the market, reports my associate Brooke Shearer.

The "baby boom" generation has now entered the household and family-forming stage of life, when consumers customarily use more credit.

Between the ages of 20 and 45, families' needs are greatest but their incomes are relatively low. These are the millions who borrow against their prospects for higher future incomes and a greater capacity to repay.

* On top of the bulge of heavy debt users in the population, debt may be climbing because credit has been easier to obtain.

For one thing, the law forbids lenders today from discriminating against women and minorities—groups who in the past were routinely denied credit.

Today, too, banks and credit card companies actively court new customers, and the number of credit cards in constant use has risen sharply. And still other explanations include:

* CREDIT TERMS FOR consumers have been made much easier—although the recent shift by the Federal Reserve System to an aggressively tight money policy may make it tougher for the consumer to get the money.

Auto loans, for instance, can be stretched out for five years as against the previous normal of three and the maximum of four, while monthly payments have been lowered.

* There are more single-person households and households headed by women. Studies of people with serious debt problems disclose that the unmarried—especially the separated, divorced, and widowed—are more likely to be inclined toward debt troubles. The same holds true for households headed by women.

Tomorrow: Who Gets Into Debt Trouble?

John D. Lofton:

Lane's Veracity 'Unimportant'

WASHINGTON—Hallelujah! Tear down the Washington Monument! Replace it with the Bob Cassidy Monument! Diogenes call your office!

Bob Cassidy? Who's he?

Why he's the 22-year-old finance major from Putney, Vt., who heads the University of Vermont's Student Association Speakers Bureau.

So, what'd he do? Are you kidding? He told Peoples Temple lawyer Mark Lane to take a long walk on a short pier, that's what he did!

As Cassidy explained it to me in an interview, here's what happened when Stu Ross of New Line Presentations called to offer Lane to lecture for $2,750 on "The Horrors of Jonestown:"

"When Stu called and wanted to know if I was interested, I told him I'd take the offer to our speakers committee.

"WHEN I MET with the committee I told them I didn't think we should hire Lane because we didn't know all the facts and it would be in bad taste. The committee agreed with me unanimously. So, I told Stu.

"The only thing I know about Lane is from press stories and from what I've seen he's got a lot of explaining to do. He may have known all about the suicide drills and the fact that they had guns and ammunition there.

"And maybe he should have been more persuasive in telling Rep. Leo Ryan and his entourage not to visit Jonestown. I think Lane was in a position to persuade Ryan not to come. I don't know.

"Lane has also been quoted as saying he is going to spread the story of the Peoples Temple. Well, he's not going to spread it here.

"We're sick and tired of Guyana and the whole atrocity and we didn't want to exploit it with a sensationalistic lecture by Lane. We didn't want people coming to hear him out of morbid curiosity.

"ALSO, WE DIDN'T want to hire Lane now with the possibility that in the future we might know more later about his role in this thing but still be under contract to him. This would be ludicrous."

Right on, Robert! So, what does Stu think about all this? Concerning the exploitation bit, he tells me:

"Well, what can I say? There's not much to say. My politics aren't his. I just offer him. I just tell schools we have Lane, I tell who he is and what his role was. We say he's very controversial."

Fascinating, Stu. And just what was Lane's role in the Jonestown business? (This is a fair question since at least one relative of a person who died at Jonestown has been reported in the Washington Post as saying that because of what he knew, when he knew it, Lane is guilty of "complicity in the crime.")

The Brighter Side...

But on the last day of his vacation he caught one fish.

"See that fish," he said to a bystander, "it cost me $1,000."

"Ain't you lucky," said the bystander, "that you didn't catch two."

A man was brought before the judge for speeding and asked if he had anything to say.

"Yes," said the man, "I wish I was in a place where there weren't any cops."

"Granted," said the judge, "thirty days."

ROSS SAYS:

"I don't know, myself. I just say he was an eyewitness. On this basis alone we sell him. We never touch the politics of this thing. He talks about cults.

"There's no sensationalism. He doesn't have slides. If he did this we wouldn't be so hot on selling him."

Ross maintains that his outfit does have standards and says New Line would not sell someone like the Grand Dragon of the KKK or a Nazi.

But, let's return to Lane, I say. You mean you're selling this guy and you don't know if he's telling the truth?

Stu says:

"I don't think anybody knows what Lane's role was in Guyana. Whether Lane is or is not telling the truth, believe it or not, is very unimportant."

BUT, WHAT ABOUT those standards? Don't they require that, at the very least, you ought to be able to vouch for the veracity of the person you're peddling?

Stu:

"The question of Lane's truthfulness never comes up when he's being sold to a school. It's not up to us to raise this question. I think I would be very happy, if indeed the guy is lying, to see this come out in his lecture."

When I ask Ross how he would characterize Lane's credibility, based on what he knows about him, he replies instantly:

"Dubious."

We both laugh.

But it's not funny. Stu says that overall there's been no problem at all selling Lane and he's booked solid from Jan. 15 through March 15.

Ugh. Pass the Kool-Aid.

Computer Brings Changes To Art Of Bartering

By DALE SINGER

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — If an accountant needs acupuncture, a physician wants a pheasant stuffed and a taxidermist needs his taxes figured, Mark D. Hart may be able to make them all happy — with no cash changing hands.

Hart is director of the St. Louis Trade Exchange, a new member in the growing fraternity of barter brokers helping Americans use their talents instead of their money to get what they want.

Barter is nothing new, of course. But in the computer age it is considerably different from the days when a farmer would take his produce to the village square and haggle with a blacksmith for new horseshoes.

Hart's exchange brings together owners of small businesses, plus professionals such as doctors and accountants.

"Traditionally bartering has been popular when money is tight," Hart said in an interview. "Instead of spending cash for something, people can just trade for it and conserve their cash flow."

The St. Louis Trade Exchange is part of the International Trade Exchange System, which operates mostly in the East and Midwest and helps members in different cities get together. Similar exchanges operate in other parts of the country.

Members accumulate credits which can be used for goods and services offered by other members. The exchange keeps track of all transactions on its computer and takes a 10 percent commission for its trouble. Part of the commission is in cash and part in trade credit that is used for office equipment and rent.

Membership in the exchange costs $100 a year, plus a $200 lifetime membership fee.

Hart said the exchange guarantees a return of the $300 investment in business or the money is refunded. "It's our challenge to bring business your way," he said.

The exchange works simply. If a member dentist, for example, needs a couch, he asks the exchange to find a member furniture dealer. He then gets the couch by direct barter or using credits he has accumulated by performing services for other members.

The trading helps everyone save, Hart said. To use a one-to-one example, the dentist may get a $1,000 couch for his office and perform $1,000 worth of dental work in return for the furniture dealer.

"The couch may have cost $400, so the furniture dealer got a $600 discount on his dental work," Hart said. "The dentist benefits because he got the couch, he filled an open appointment and he probably got future business."

Hart has a quick answer for anyone who thinks barter is a good way to cheat on taxes: no.

"There are no advantages tax-wise. Everything is listed on the computer. The IRS loves us. There is nothing that can go under the table.

"If you traded by yourself on a one-to-one basis, you might be able to beat some taxes, but that's not the way things work here. We want to be around a while. We don't want the IRS breathing down our necks."

Eventually consumers, not just business executives and professionals, will be able to get into the act. The future, he said, seems unlimited — almost.

"We're not saying we can do away with cash transactions entirely," he said. "You can't pay for utilities or pay your taxes with barter.

"But it's growing because it's exciting. It's something different. It captures the imagination, and it's beneficial to both buyer and seller."

Wars, Crises Face Africa

By RAYMOND WILKINSON

NAIROBI (UPI) — Guerrilla war, political conflict and natural disaster, dominated by the escalating guerrilla war in Rhodesia and the unfolding drama in Namibia, face black Africa with another year of uncertainty and crisis

Nigeria, the continent's largest nation, plans to return to civil rule after 12 years of military dictatorship as did Ghana. A score of countries led by Kenya, Senegal and Ivory Coast expect continuing social, economic and political progress in the new year.

But the bad news again overshadows the good in one of the most turbulent areas of the globe.

In addition to Rhodesia, bloody localized wars rage in Angola, Ethiopia, Eritrea and Chad. The armies of Uganda and Tanzania stand eyeball-to-eyeball along their uneasy frontier.

South Africa retreated further under the stern guidance of its new premier, P.W. Botha, apparently ready to defy the world and risk U.N. sanctions over its policies on apartheid and Namibia.

While the policies of the United States and the West gained only spotty acceptance at best in black Africa, the Soviets and Cubans, already operating effectively in more than one-third of the area's countries, remained poised to further exploit the deteriorating situation in southern Africa.

Analysis

In political and economic terms, the bulk of black Africa's population appeared worse off more than two decades after the start of the independence movement than under the former colonial yoke.

Natural disaster, too, devastated large areas. In Ethiopia alone more than 2 million persons faced starvation because of drought and famine. Locust clouds swarmed through the Horn of Africa wreaking destruction.

Rhodesia and Namibia, however, are still the major flashpoints for 1979.

Prime Minister Ian Smith early in 1978 tacked together an internal government with black moderate leaders, promised majority rule by Dec. 31 but at the last moment postponed elections until April because of the escalating guerrilla conflict which engulfed the entire country.

At least 15,000 persons had already been killed in the six-year war. Record numbers of whites were fleeing the embattled nation as the new year began.

The Patriotic Front guerrilla leadership of Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo promised more of the same. Both Smith's renewed promise of elections and frantic Anglo-American efforts to hold an all-party conference to reach a peaceful settlement appeared doomed.

Although the war was likely to continue throughout the year, military analysts emphasized that Rhodesia would not collapse as pundits have predicted for years.

Rhodesian military experts said the country could last at least another five years as presently constituted. Mugabe, too, predicted it would take at least another two years for the insurgents to win an outright military victory.

Both sides appeared to agree 1979 would be a year of escalating war, futile political maneuvering, record white emigration and ecoomic recession — with the Soviets and Cubans continuing aid to the guerrillas and threatening to enter the conflict even more directly by answering calls for help from such neighboring states as Zambia and Mozambique.

Namibia too faced a year of decision. As 1978 ended South Africa, which has ruled the mineral-rich area since 1920, defied U.N. threats of economic sanctions and held its own elections for a constituent assembly. Its poll attracted an exceedingly high voter turnout of 81 percent.

Pretoria seemed more amenable to holding a further U.N.-sponsored election, but the politicians who ran in the first ballot warned: "We might have elections, but would say the chances were no better than 30 percent."

South Africa itself under Botha grudgingly yielded only inch by inch to increasingly persisent Western pressure over Namibia and its internal apartheid system. South Africa appeared ready at any moment to retreat fully into itself and "hunker down" against the outside world.

The Pretoria government faced an unexpected internal crisis, however, which rocked Botha's infant cabinet with disclosures high officials had spent millions to infiltrate the mass media at home and abroad to promote apartheid policies.

But if the situation appeared generally bleak throughout sub-Sahara Africa, there were major positive developments.

Nigeria's military government, ruling black Africa's largest and potentially most important nation, continued plans to hand back the government to civilian politicians late in the year.

The military rulers of Ghana, which began black Africa's independence movement when it won independence from Britain in 1957, also announced they would hand back power to civilians despite staggering economic difficulties which crippled the country.

Village Plays Bingo To Raise Money

VALLEY SPRINGS, S.D. (AP)— The residents of Valley Springs would like a $171,000 recreation facility. But the only way they know how to fund it is by playing bingo.

With only 800 residents in the eastern South Dakota community, funds aren't always available for recreation areas. So, when the federal government offered a matching grant through the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation, local residents said they would try to raise their half of the $171,000 through bingo games and other fund-raising projects.

The games, have netted $20,000 so far. They are played at the local American Legion Post.

The goal is to build a baseball diamond and a softball diamond, tennis courts, horseshoe and basketball courts and a swimming pool.

Laser Fusion Used In Development Of Future Energy Source

LIVERMORE, Calif. (AP) — Twenty chunks of invisible light crash into a microscopic glass bubble and a star is born — a tiny star that burns for a fraction of an instant, but which may promise energy for centuries.

Crushed by the world's most powerful laser, hydrogen fuel inside the bubble explodes with a firecracker-pop in the beginnings of thermonuclear fusion, the reaction that powers the sun, the stars and the hydrogen bomb.

Lawrence Livermore Laboratory's $25 million laser, called Shiva, is a top entry in the race to produce energy with fusion — a potentially limitless source of power that may fuel the 21st century and beyond.

Fusion energy would, its boosters say, be clean, almost free of dangerous wastes and would generate electricity at about the same cost as some conventional nuclear power plants. Its fuel would be a type of hydrogen that can be taken from the oceans that cover three-fourths of the Earth.

"If you had it, you'd love it. It's wonderful stuff," said Dr. Alexander J. Glass, second in command of laser fusion at this federal research center run by the University of California.

But, he adds, decades will pass before electricity from a fusion power plant reaches an American home.

"We hope to introduce a thermonuclear power plant into the economy during the first part of the next century," Glass said. "If we're going to do that, we have to move quickly. We may already be too late."

The task is impressive. To produce the energy of the stars, scientists must reproduce the incredibly harsh conditions deep within the sun, where temperatures approach 100 million degrees and matter is crushed to 1,000 times its normal density.

That's where giant lasers, such as Shiva and its somewhat different relatives at Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and Sandia Laboratories in New Mexico, may come in.

Scientists are beginning to approach solar conditions by concentrating the immense power of such lasers on a single point.

Shiva is built around a superstructure of white steel girders decorated with the 20 blue tubes that protect and feed the laser beams as each races 215 feet to the target.

Its beam, split into 20 foot-long pieces of ultraviolet light, can plough 30 trillion watts of power into the hydrogen-filled target in less than a billionth of a second.

The target is compressed until it's 10 to 50 times as dense as normal and many of the atoms inside the glass sphere are fused together in an energy-releasing reaction. Fusion is the opposite of nuclear fission, in which energy is obtained by splitting atoms apart in a nuclear reactor or atomic bomb.

But Shiva's world-record performance must be 10 times more impressive just to prove that fusion can be tamed and power plants can be designed around lasers.

So Livermore scientists designed Shiva Nova — a $195 million remodeling project that will double Shiva's already massive size, give it 40 arms and produce 10 times as much power.

Shiva Nova should fire its first burst about 1983 and "we hope to prove scientific feasibility by about 1985," Glass said.

That timetable is crucial if fusion energy is to make a contribution in the next few decades. It's also important, Glass said, because "we are not alone in this world."

A dozen or more different projects are vying for shares of the federal government's half-billion-dollar annual fusion budget. Each is designed to cash in the winning ticket and go from research oddity to practical power plant.

"There is both a sense of competition and a real competition among all the contenders," Glass said.

The sweepstakes has two major categories: Laser fusion, known to scientists as inertial confinement; and magnetic confinement.

Two Indian Hijackers Surrender To Authorities

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Two young air hijackers who demanded the release of former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi from jail surrendered today after almost all their 130 hostages fled out the jetliner's rear exit. The hijackers' weapons turned out to be a toy pistol and a red cricket ball "grenade."

Mrs. Gandhi remained in jail, and other officials of her Indira Congress Party charged the hijacking was a plot to discredit the party.

The hijackers were taken to Lucknow, 260 miles southeast of New Delhi. Officials said they would be allowed to hold a news conference, meeting one of their demands.

No one was hurt in the incident Wednesday. At least one American was aboard the plane.

The hijacking was the most unusual occurrence in a day of violence touched off by a parliamentary vote Tuesday that ousted Mrs. Gandhi from the parliamentary seat she won last month and sent her to jail for the rest of the current session of Parliament, scheduled to end Friday.

Follow-Up

In the nationwide disturbances, more than 18,000 supporters of the former prime minister were reported arrested, many voluntarily to embarrass the government, and five persons were reported killed.

Here is how the hijacking unfolded, according to various sources:

The Indian Airlines Boeing 737 left Calcutta Wednesday afternoon for Delhi with three intermediate stops. Ten minutes after takeoff from Lucknow, the third stop, with 126 passengers and a crew of six aboard, the aircraft was seized by two men in their late 20s. They were identified as D.N. Pandey and B.N. Pandey, but it was not known if they were related.

D.N. Pandey, with the toy pistol, and B.N. Pandey, with the cricket ball he said was a hand grenade, ordered the pilot to fly to Katmandu, Nepal, or to Patna, in eastern India. Informed that night landings could not be made at either place, they settled for Varanasi, also known as Benares, the sacred Hindu city 375 miles southeast of New Delhi.

"At times tension would be high — when they took the public address system and announced they would shoot if things got out of hand," said passenger Ron Moring, 28, an engineering consultant from Rockford, Ill.

At Varanasi, the plane was surrounded by commandos, and R.N. Yadav, chief minister of Uttar Pradesh state, arrived and began negotiating over the control tower radio.

On the plane the hijackers handed out leaflets demanding that "Indira Gandhi, the beloved leader of the Indian masses be released," and "all concocted cases" against her and her son Sanjay be withdrawn.

Moring said they were loudly applauded by passengers when they announced they wanted to free Mrs. Gandhi.

In the leaflets the hijackers identified themselves as members of the Uttar Pradesh unit of the Indira Congress Party and also demanded the resignation of Prime Minister Morarji Desai, Mrs. Gandhi's successor, whose motion and majority in Parliament put her in jail.

The hijackers demanded over the cockpit radio to speak to Desai and asked that both Sanjay Gandhi and a prominent supporter of Mrs. Gandhi, Mohsina Kidwai, be notified by telephone of the hijacking.

Moring said the hijackers' hold on the passengers began to unravel after one man opened the rear exit door and escaped down the emergency chute. By dawn today, all but 20 of the passengers had escaped in the same way, and the captain convinced the hijackers to release the remainder while keeping hostage the six crew members. Eventually the hijackers surrendered.

Mrs. Kidwai, a member of Parliament, refused to have anything to do with the hijackers, and Buta Singh, general secretary of the Indira Congress, said the two were not connected with the party. He said he suspected the hijacking was a plot to tarnish its image.

But the United News of India quoted Sanjay Gandhi as saying D.N. Pandey was a member of the party's youth wing.

Mrs. Gandhi, prime minister for 11 years until ousted in the 1977 election, was expelled from Parliament and sent to jail on a finding that she blocked a 1975 parliamentary investigation of the auto business Sanjay started. Desai's resolution found her guilty of contempt of Parliament and breach of parliamentary privilege.

Thousands of supporters crowded around the jail 10 miles from the Parliament building on Wednesday, while other pro-Gandhi demonstrators set fire to buses and a policeman in Bombay, stoned and torched railway cars in Bangalore, and attacked post offices, railway stations and studios of the state radio network in other cities.

Cleveland Mayor, Council Meet

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Cleveland City Council members met today to go over a compromise proposed by Mayor Dennis Kucinich to resolve the fiscal crisis that caused the city to default last week on $15.5 million in bank loans.

Although Council President George Forbes, the mayor's chief antagonist, said earlier the council would vote to call a special election requested by Kucinich, last-minute disagreements threatened to destroy the fragile compromise reached this week between Cleveland's warring political factions.

The council was expected to vote later today or Friday to call a special election to let city residents decide whether to sell the city-owned Municipal Light Plant and whether to approve the mayor's 0.5 percent city income tax hike proposal.

But council members indicated they were demanding that Kucinich drop the city's $330 million antitrust suit against Cleveland Electric Illumninating Co. The mayor has refused to do so.

Wednesday, trustees of the State Police and Firemen's Disability Pension Fund in Columbus dealt Cleveland a blow, voting 5-1 to place a lien on the city's income from two tax sources because the city failed to pay the fund $2.7 million due Nov. 15. A 30-day grace period ended Friday.

Default came Friday when Kucinich stood firm against sale of the Municipal Light Plant to Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co. and the council refused to approve the tax hike request without agreement to sell the plant.

Earlier this week, Kucinich asked the Council to put the issue on the ballot in the form of a City Charter amendment. Kucinich still contends selling the light system to CEI will give the giant utility a monopoly in the Cleveland area.

Banks would be asked to refinance the notes, on strength of predictions voters would approve the tax, thus boosting city revenue by $38 million a year. Approval by Cleveland residents is expected because three-fourths of the cost would be borne by suburbanites working in the city.

"We hope that what emerges is something that all parties can support," said Frederick Cox, vice chairman of Cleveland Trust Co., holder of $5 million of the notes.

National City Bank, the second largest creditor with $4 million of the notes, was more noncommittal.

"We need a draft of the formal program before we can give an inkling as to our thoughts on rolling over the city notes," said Ted Jones, National City vice president.

While Council members prepared for a possible special session today, leaders of 17 city unions were to meet tonight with representatives of "the highest level" in the city's business community, including bankers.

Cleveland Firefighters Association President Jack Gannon disclosed the meeting plans after union leaders met for the second straight day Wednesday — this time to hear a report from their own accountants, who had examined the city's books. Gannon, speaking for the unions, said the accountants had determined, "There is a serious problem."

But he said the accountants also concluded the city has enough cash to meet its current payroll until February. As a result, he reiterated the unions' strong opposition to Kucinich's planned layoffs of 2,000 city workers Jan. 2. Should the banks refinance the notes, the mayor has said he could postpone most of those layoffs, which would include about half the city's police officers and fire fighters.

The mayor initially said large-scale layoffs would be the only way to avoid bankruptcy by February.

FAA To Upgrade Safety Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration said today it intends to upgrade safety procedures and machinery at the nation's major airports.

It conceded that numerous safety deficiencies were found at the San Diego airport where a commercial jetliner and a private plane collided three months ago, killing 144 persons

FAA Administrator Langhorne Bond said the agency has ordered an 11-point program to improve operational safety at San Diego and said "implementation of these measures on a nationwide basis are appropriate."

He said the FAA will announce details of its plans for other airports next week.

Bond said he ordered an investigation of safety procedures at San Diego's Lindbergh Field after the Sept. 25 collision over San Diego of a Pacific Southwest Airlines 727 jetliner and a private Cessna aircraft. A total of 144 persons aboard the jetliner, the small plane and on the ground were killed, making it the worst air crash ever in North America.

As a result of the crash investigation, Bond said, "there will be a good many changes" in airport safety procedures around the country. He declined to say what specific airports were being examined most closely.

Bond told a news conference that the government has "been lulled into too great a security" concerning aerial collisions because there had been no similar accidents in the United States for six years preceding the San Diego tragedy.

Bond faulted his own agency for giving too much credit to existing radar systems, saying "the success was more apparent than real."

Talmadge Injured In Bathtub Fall

JONESBORO, Ga. (AP) — Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., was treated at a local hospital early today after slipping on a bar of soap in a bathtub and bruising his chest and legs, an aide said.

He was taken to Clayton General Hospital for X-rays and was released at about 1:30 a.m.

"The senator slipped in the tub on a bar of soap," Talmadge aide Paul Slappey said in a telephone interview from the hospital.

Rideout Denies Forcing Wife To Have Sex

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — John Rideout "honestly believed if you are married to a woman, you have a right to sex," but he did not force his wife to have intercourse, his attorney says.

Rideout is on trial on a charge of raping his wife. The prosecution says Greta Rideout will testify the intercourse took place as their 2½-year-old daughter watched and cried, "Mommy, Mommy."

The charge was filed under a 1977 revision of Oregon's rape law that removed marital privilege as a defense against rape. Attorneys for both sides say the trial is the first in the nation in which a husband is charged with raping his wife while they were living together. Mrs. Rideout is now seeking a divorce.

District Attorney Gary Gortmaker told the four-man, eight-woman jury Wednesday that 21-year-old Rideout chased his wife and repeatedly hit her before the alleged rape. He said testimony will show the couple fought the night before about extra-marital affairs.

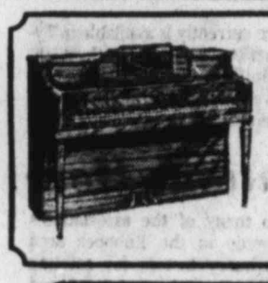

But defense attorney Charles Burt says sex was always a problem in the young couple's stormy marriage, and it was their custom to make up after a fight by having intercourse.

Burt told the Marion County Circuit Court jury that Rideout admits to having intercourse with his wife Oct. 10, but denies using force. He said testimony will show Mrs. Rideout inquired about Oregon's rape laws before accusing her husband of rape.

Burt said the rape accusation stemmed from Mrs. Rideout's "serious sexual problem." He told jurors Mrs. Rideout kneed her husband in the groin and was slapped in the face Oct. 10, the day of the alleged rape at their apartment.

Temporary Gas Supplies Excellent In Texas

HOUSTON (UPI) — Americans at the colder end of the nation's natural gas pipelines have lived with curtailment — the bureacratic term for winter shortfall of supply — for nearly a decade.

Now, almost unbelievably, some experts say that, although the word won't disappear from the energy ills lexicon, it likely will be heard less frequently for awhile.

"What you're seeing right now is not a direct result of the Natural Gas Policy Act," said one industry spokesman, who asked that his name not be used.

"The supplies that you're seeing right now are the result of long-term investment. Our company alone has spent $1 billion since 1970."

Increasing production availability, expanded storage and reduced demand because of previous winter service cutoffs, conservation and higher prices, have contributed to a temporary bulge in supplies that may last a few years.

This, of course, does not affect all of the nation's interstate pipelines, where posted curtailments still range as high as 40 percent. But some experts say the federally regulated numbers have become almost academic.

"While curtailments remain in effect at the pipeline level, I don't think you'll find many at the retail level," said one industry source who asked not to be identified. "The customers are getting all the gas they need.

"It is a very strange situation, I must say, and very difficult to understand for the layman who has heard all these stories of shortages or curtailments and is not seeing the effect of them."

George Mitchell, president of Mitchell Enengy Corp., is blunt about it.

"I would say this year all curtailments could end if they let intrastate people furnish all the gas they could to interstate people," Mitchell said.

Intrastate to interstate transfers — uncommon under old energy rules because of price differentials — supposedly will grow under the new Natural Gas Policy Act, although there is confusion as to just how or when they will begin.

(According to a spokesman for Pioneer Natural Gas Co., which serves the Lubbock area, supplies for the winter months should be ample here.

("We are in exceptionally good shape this year. Pioneer has bought more natural gas than last year, and we don't foresee any problem in the West Texas area we service," said Pioneer assistant manager B. J. Hackler.)

"There's probably one trillion cubic feet of gas available right now in Texas," said Mitchell, one of few industry supporters of the compromise law.

That would be a substantial addition, considering the nation at peak consumption in the earlier 1970s burned 22.3 trillion cubic feet per year and, last year, because of conservation, used 19 trillion.

Others familiar with the industry are less confident than Mitchell, but agree the nation's gas supply-demand situation has been a lot less balanced since curtailments among the 36 major interstate pipelines began in 1970.

"I don't know that I would say (curtailments will) end — certainly drop significantly," said Dave Morehead of the American Gas Association in Washington. "I think curtailments are going to become less severe."

Joe Solters of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's pipeline certificate and curtailment division in Washington said the gas companies may be overreacting.

"They see a little daylight and they like to proclaim that they're healthy again and some people misconstrue their purpose and their bottom line," Solters said.

RMS Acceptance Limited

AUSTIN (UPI) — A new "residential measured rate service," designed to save up to 30 percent of the monthly telephone costs for older Texans and others who use the phone sparingly, is receiving only limited acceptance, Southwestern Bell officials said.

The Public Utility Commission ordered Southwestern Bell to implement the measured rate service on a trial basis in 15 Texas cities.

Under the plan, persons on a single-party line could reduce their monthly telephone bills by 30 to 40 percent by requesting the measured rate service and making fewer than 25 calls per month.

But the installation charge for the service is $24, meaning in most cities customers would have to use the measured rate service for more than a year merely to recover the installation costs.

(RMS, as the service is known within the Bell systems, has been offered to Lubbockites only since December, so little information is available regarding its reception here.

(Jim Goodwin, public relations supervisor for Southwestern Bell in Lubbock, commented, however, that so far local response to the service "has not been great."

(According to Goodwin, four to five percent of the "new connects" — customers whose phone service has just been connected — are taking the residential measured service.

("Very few who already have phone service are switching over, however," Goodwin said.

(Goodwin suspects the $24.25 charge for changing from regular residential service to the measured service is a deterrent to people who might otherwise switch.)

Bell first made the service available Nov. 1 in Tyler, and the response there has been less than overwhelming. Through mid-December, only 18 Tyler customers had signed up for the service. Only 20 customers are taking the service in Harlingen, which Bell officials list as the city with the most measured rate service business.

"It's not really a bandwagon type thing, it doesn't look like," said Dale Johnson, a public relations representative for Bell in Dallas.

The service currently is available in Tyler, Harlingen, Amarillo, Lubbock, Wichita Falls, Midland, Corpus Christi, San Benito, Galveston and Austin. By the end of January it also will be provided in Dallas, Fort Worth, Beaumont, San Antonio and Houston.

"The prognistications we have made on the use of it have now shown heavy usage in the beginning," Johnson said. "Once people price it out and determine if it will save them any money, that may change."

The measured rate service would permit Austin customers, for example, to reduce their monthly teleihone bills from $6.50 for a single-party line to $4.20 for up to 25 calls per month. The customers would be charged eight cents per call for all calls over 25, meaning a person who makes 53 calls per month would pay about the same for the measured service as for the flat rate service.

Bell is allowing customers who switch to the measured rate service to pay the $24 installation charge in five installments to reduce the impact.

Alan Erwin, a member of the three-man Public Utility Commission, said: "I think probably the biggest beneficiaries are going to be two groups, older people who don't use the phone that often, and younger professionals who don't have anyone at home during the day. Both of groups tend to be lower income groups."

Erwin said the Texas measured rate service plan is different from that offered in most other states in that it is optional, and Southwestern Bell customers can keep their existing flat rate service or choose the optional measured rate system. In states where the measured rate service is mandatory, many customers have encountered higher telephone bills than under a flat rate system.

Bell is required to make a survey of the use and results of the service after it is in use six months, and report back to the PUC on its findings.

"Both we and the PUC will study the report and determine if the plan needs to be modified or broadened," Johnson said.

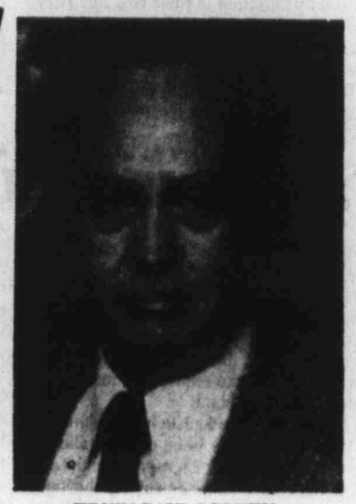

Ginners Plan Conventions Here

The Texas Cotton Ginners' Association has chosen Lubbock as the host city for all future even-year conventions, according to Tony Price, association vice president.

Price signed contracts for the Ginners' 1980 and 1982 conventions and discussed future convention plans with Lubbock Memorial Civic Center officials and personnel from the Lubbock Visitors and Conventions Bureau Wednesday.

The success of the convention hosted in Lubbock in March of this year and the fact that so many of the association's members reside in the Lubbock area were the primary factors for rotating back to Lubbock each even-numbered year in the future, Price said.

Dates through 1988 have been selected and plans for the March 12-16, 1980 convention are being formulated. More than 60,000 square feet of floor space in the Civic Center will be used to show farm machinery, supplies and services related to cotton ginning, production and marketing.

ERVIN PAUL LOONEY

Ervin Looney Succumbs At Residence

Services are pending at Franklin-Bartley Funeral Home.

Looney had been a city employee since March, 1969, when he retired as an Air Force finance officer and started work here as internal auditor for the city. He served as internal auditor until he was appointed to the newly created position of rate analyst about a year ago.

Born Sept. 2, 1927, in Floydada, he grew up in Floydada and attended East Texas State University at Commerce before entering the Army Air Corps during World War II. He continued with the Air Force after the war and retired as a captain in 1969 at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio.

City Manager Larry Cunningham said today that Looney "has been a tremendous asset to the City of Lubbock since he's been here. His interest in utilities and utility rates was unbelievable.

"He was quite dedicated toward assuring that consumers and companies both were treated equitably in rate regulations," Cunningham said. "His loss is going to be a loss not only to his family but to this entire community."

Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy ruled this morning that he died of natural causes. The time of death was estimated at 3:30 a.m.

Looney was a member of St. Luke's United Methodist Church.

An active member of the Democratic Party, he had attended the past three state Democratic conventions.

Survivors include his wife Maxine; three daughters, Linda, Celia and Teresa, all of Lubbock; two sons, Paul and Jack, both of Lubbock; and three brothers, Joe and Lynn, both of Albuquerque, N.M., and Pete of Ralls.

Vance, Gromyko Begin Discussion

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — American and Soviet negotiators sparred inconclusively today through the first session of talks that they hope will wrap up a SALT II treaty and pave the way for a summit meeting next month.

"We're just beginning. It's too early to make any extensive comments," said Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko as he and Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance emerged from the meeting.

Asked how much of the treaty was left to negotiate, Gromyko held his hands about a foot apart and replied: "Medium."

Vance said the opening round consisted of both sides "stating our views and positions." Some of his aides, speaking privately, said the real bargaining would occur in meetings this afternoon and on Friday.

As he arrived in Geneva this morning, Vance said he hoped this would be the last of the many meetings he has held with Gromyko in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. The quest for a second treaty has been going on since 1972, when the first SALT agreement was signed.

Vance also was preparing for weekend talks on the Middle East deadlock with Egyptian and Israeli representatives in Brussels.

The session will involve Vance, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil and will be the first face-to-face session between Egyptian and Israel ministers in a month.

However, there is little expectation it will lead to an immediate breakthrough in the current stalemate.

Regarding the SALT talks, however, American officials said there were only a few relatively minor issues left to be resolved by Vance and Gromyko.

That was their assessment when speaking privately. The public rhetoric, on the other hand, was aimed at deflating any premature expectations.

"I do not foresee the conclusion of the accord in this round. This is too much to hope," Gromyko said when he arrived here Wednesday.

"There are still substantive issues that remain to be negotiated," State Department spokesman Thomas Reston said this week.

The American officials said there has been disagreement over whether Vance should even attempt to complete the negotiations here.

The three were arraigned this morning before Justice of the Peace Charles Smith and released on personal bonds.

The charges alleged the three intentionally and knowingly operated a gambling place.

About 150 persons were present when police raided the 4002 Ave. A location about 8:30 p.m. The location was most recently listed as the meeting place for the Serenity Group of Alcoholics Anonymous.

MORE THAN A LIBRARY — "I hope that visitors who come here will achieve a closer understanding of the office of the Presidency, which affects their own lives so greatly. I hope that those who shared in the history of this time will remember it and see it in perspective, and that the young people who come here will get a clearer comprehension of what this nation tried to do in an eventful period of its history." Lyndon Baines Johnson. (Staff Photos by Ted J. Simon)

Library Gives Visitors Insight Into Presidency

By TED J. SIMON
A-J Travel Editor

There are libraries — and there are libraries. The Lyndon B. Johnson Presidential Library isn't a place where you go to check out a book on the current best seller list.

Covering 14 acres on the University of Texas campus at 2300 Red River Street in Austin, the huge building houses important documents pertaining to the career of the 36th President of the United States, Lyndon Baines Johnson.

Admission is free to the ultra modern structure constructed and paid for by the University of Texas. Once inside, visitors discover a memorable and sometimes surprising insight into the presidency in general. Whatever your political background or party preference, a tour of the library is a visit every person should include on a "must do" list.

This writer wishes some word other than "library" had been used to name the structure and its contents. To me, the term library may keep some people from enjoying a remarkable experience. Everything from a Ford model T automobile to a rock from the moon will urge a casual visitor to spend hours at the library, and to then make a mental note to return for a longer stay.

Exhibits, mobile displays, slide programs, motion pictures and closed circuit television help a person to know what it is like to occupy the most important office in America and perhaps the world.

Speaking of the office, a replica of the Oval Office of the White House is on the eighth floor. The room is furnished as Johnson knew it during his presidency. Even the row of television sets he watched is near his unpretentious desk.

If the room appears smaller than what you expect — it is. The replica has about one fourth the floor space of the actual Oval Office. But, everything else is authentic or an exact duplicate of the office at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue when LBJ was president.

Johnson, never far from a telephone, also had a multi-line phone inside the coffee table near his rocking chair. Against one wall are teletype printers that were connected to the major news gathering organizations. Family pictures and personal memorabilia seen by world leaders, advisors and the White House staff are on the tables and walls.

Be sure to press a wall button at the entrance to the Oval Office to hear a recording of the warm Texas drawl that welcomed foreign dignitaries and just plain folks to the White House.

Johnson's voice also can be heard near the visitor information desk on the first floor. LBJ's commanding personality is highlighted by a showcase of his humor over a special telephone. It isn't unusual to see persons listening and chuckling for five or ten minutes at a time.

From simple handmade gifts of the American people to monumental decisions, from the Great Society to foreign affairs — it's all there. Pulling no punches, one hall even describes the controversies of the sixties. And all political parties are represented in another hall containing political memorabilia from 1789 to the present.

If you want a lapel button that says "I Like Ike" — or a token of Teddy Roosevelt's "Carry a Big Stick" era — or a reminder of Adlai Stevenson, who campaigned for more income for farmers — you'll find many interesting items for sale at the museum store.

The Library is operated by the National Archives and Records Service under the General Services Administration, and is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. A visit to the LBJ Presidential Library, east of the Texas Memorial Stadium, is worth a special trip to Austin.

Austin Offers Visitor Variety Of Sights

Austin offers more than the State Capitol Building and a football team. But, too often a person will only visit the interesting city for business or to wedge into a seat at Memorial Stadium. Sometimes both activities are considered one and the same.

Austin originally was named Waterloo, with a population of approximately 20 persons living next to the Colorado River. The name was changed when the site was selected in 1839 for the state capital.

It is no wonder that the site was recommended by Mirabeau Lamar, Vice President of the Republic of Texas, after he and a party of buffalo hunters camped near what became the Congress Avenue Bridge. The countryside was then and still is beautiful with rivers, lakes, rolling hills, rich soil, sturdy trees and acres of flowers in every season.

Now with a population close to 300,000, Austin continues to enjoy the friendly atmosphere of a smaller city. But, Austin presents a diversity of things to do and see found in few cities anywhere near its size.

First of all, there's the State Capitol Building that is larger than that of any other state; the dome is higher than the dome of the United States Capitol. Built of native pink granite, the State building is beautiful in daylight or when it is bathed by floodlight at night.

A tourist information center in the rotunda has tour schedules on the capitol complex that include the Daughters of the Republic of Texas Museum. Free tours of the capitol are conducted daily (except Christmas Day) from 8 a.m. till 5 p.m. The museum is closed on holidays.

Also on the capitol grounds is the Governor's Mansion. Tours of the stately home offer an opportunity to see furnishings that belonged to Stephen F. Austin and Sam Houston.

Some distance away is a simple house that was the residence and office of the French Legation. It is the only building (constructed in 1840) in Texas that was built for a representative of a foreign government. The structure is an excellent example of Creole architecture. A tour of the house may offer an opportunity to see the attic room that still has holes in posts for servants' hammocks. There were never enough hammocks; one servant always remained awake to warn of an Indian attack.

Henry Home where the famous short story writer lived for about a year; the State Cemetery where nearly 2,000 Texans are honored for their service — the "Arlington of Texas" includes the tomb of Stephen F. Austin, the Father of Texas; on the University of Texas at Austin campus is the Texas Memorial Museum, Art Museum, Henry Ransom Center, and the LBJ Presidential Library.

Foe Of Shah May Accept High Post

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — One of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's veteran political opponents reportedly has agreed to form a civilian government, but leaders of the anti-shah movement have spurned him.

Informed sources said Golam-Hossein Sadiqi accepted the premiership in a new government after the shah agreed to a number of political conditions.

The sources, who refused to be identified, said Sadiqi's demands included dissolution of the current Parliament. It was not immediately known if that demand would be met. Under the constitution, the government would have to hold a general election within six months after Parliament is dissolved. The shah had already pledged to hold free elections next June.

The sources refused to spell out other conditions set by the 73-year-old Sadiqi, a sociology and philosophy professor at Tehran University and a Cabinet minister in Mohammed Mossadegh's government in the 1950s, which briefly drove the shah into exile.

The shah gave Sadiqi two weeks to put together a civilian government to replace Gen. Gholam-Reza Azhari's military regime, the sources said.

An opposition deputy in the lower house of Parliament said Sadiqi may announce formation of a government within four days. But the deputy, Ahmad Banni-Ahmed, predicted the new government would not be able to defuse the political crisis "so long as the shah remains."

The 59-year-old monarch has been fighting to stay on his Peacock Throne against widespread political opposition to his one-man rule and even stronger religious opposition to his efforts to modernize Iran's traditional Moslem society.

Several previous efforts by the shah to form a civilian government have foundered because no one with sufficient political clout could be found to take the premiership.

Sadiqi has some solid credentials that could win him opposition support. Educated at the Sorbonne in Paris, he was interior minister under Mossadegh, who nationalized Iran's oil industry in 1951.

He helped found Mossadegh's National Front, a forerunner to the current National Front opposition, and was jailed by the shah five times for his political activities. He spent a total of three years behind bars between 1953 and 1963.

However, Sadiqi is at odds with with the National Front's current leader, Karim Sanjabi, who last week refused an offer from the shah last week to join a coalition government.

The sources said Sanjabi has written to Sadiqi telling him the National Front will not support him. However, the shah's advisers hope Sadiqi may be able to draw the support of a growing dissident faction within the opposition.

The 11-month old anti-shah campaign reportedly claimed three more lives Wednesday. Informed sources said two of the dead were agents of SAVAK, the shah's security police. The sources said they were clubbed to death by a mob of the shah's opponents in the sprawling Tehran bazaar after one of the agents shot and killed a demonstrator.

At least 1,400 persons have been reported killed since the violence began in February, but the opposition claims the toll is much higher.

The sources also said authorities forced hundreds of oil workers to go back to work in the oilfields of southwestern Irah Wednesday and about 100 strikers were arrested there. The oilfield strike that began 17 days ago in a bid to force the shah's abdication cut production to 1.2 million barrels a day, 20 percent of normal, but it has risen again to more tha 3 million.

Troops fired to disperse several hundred student demonstrators at the Tehran University campus today and intervened in a funeral in the western city of Tabriz, where mourners shouted anti-shah slogans.

The Iranian army intervened to stop the student demonstration, as several hundred more teachers and students staged a sit-in inside the campus to press political demands.

Ice Storm Plagues Northeast

A-J News Services

An ice storm in New England and a blizzard in the Rockies provided a suitable setting for the official arrival of winter tonight, but Lubbockites probably won't notice the difference.

No sharp changes in weather are expected for the next several days and those who dream of a White Christmas will be disappointed to learn that no snow is in the forecast.

Pointing up the difference that can exist between the actual and the official, winter has emphatically been here for the past several weeks but will not arrive officially until 11:21 p.m. today.

The forecast calls for fair weather today and Friday and a clear, cold sky tonight as temperatures drop into the mid-20s.

Highs today and Friday should be near 60 and in the mid-50s.

West winds of 10 to 15 mph today, dropping to 5 to 10 mph tonight, were predicted.

The Christmas weekend outlook is for fair skies, no precipitation and "seasonal temperatures."

A fast-moving Pacific cold front moved through the South Plains and into the Gulf of Mexico early today after dropping the overnight low temperature to 22 in Lubbock.

The high Wednesday, 56, was lower than the reading at midnight Tuesday, 60, at the National Weather Service office at Lubbock International Airport.

Dawn temperatures around the South Plains today included 17 at Muleshoe, 18 at Floydada and Littlefield and 19 at Abernathy, Olton and Silverton.

It was more like spring in Kentucky, with heavy and steady rain. Waters from the floods in Arizona and New Mexico, where eight persons were missing and feared dead, receded.

Freezing rain that belted the Midwest Wednesday pelted New York state by nightfall and Massachusetts a short time later, turning roads to sheets of ice and causing numerous accidents.

Police throughout New York urged motorists to avoid any unnecessary driving. Interstates 90 and 787 around Albany were closed for a time.

Ice-slick roads caused several chain-reaction accidents near Boston.

Snow began falling in New England and heavy snow warnings were in effect for New Hampshire and southern Maine. Six or more inches of snow was predicted away from the coast, and gale warnings were in effect along the coast.

Strong, gusty winds raked the northern Rockies, blowing snow into drifts that hindered travel. Cutbank, Mont., reported gusts up to 83 mph Wednesday night.

Blowing and drifting snow also caused travel problems in parts of the Great Lakes region — western parts of Lower Michigan and the eastern portions of Wisconsin.

Officials Pondering Tax Boost On Leaded Gas

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's chief inflation fighter told Congress today that the administration is considering boosting taxes on leaded gasoline while lowering them on unleaded gas.

Alfred E. Kahn said this would help eliminate wide price differences between the two fuels and discourage motorists from modifying fuel tanks on late-model cars to accept currently less expensive "regular" gasoline.

Testifying before a House Commerce subcommittee, Kahn conceded that recently announced price increases by oil-producing nations, coupled with possible administration action to lift existing price controls from petroleum prouducts, could boost gasoline prices from seven to 10 cents a gallon.

Kahn said the administration is still studying whether to remove federal price controls on gasoline — once planned for mid-January — and controls on domestically produced crude oil, an option Carter can take after this May under existing law.

Kahn, chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, noted that unleaded gasoline now sells for far more than leaded gasoline that can be used in older cars.

"The bigger the price differential, the greater the incentive to cheat," Kahn said.

He said the administration is considering legislation that would shift the federal tax on gasoline — currently 4 cents a gallon — to make it larger for leaded gas and less for the unleaded variety.

"It's a possibility we are examining," he testified.

Subcommittee Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich., said that although the Department of Energy claims the difference between the price of the two fuels averages 4.4. cents per gallon, a check by panel staffers showed the price spread was closer to 6 to 9 cents.

Kahn said he has mixed feelings about lifting price controls from gasoline and other petroleum products. While he said he generally favors deregulation, "we must recognize we are talking about deregulation and letting the price go to a cartel level, a monopoly level."

He said that would present serious problems to Carter's anti-inflation effort, which he heads.

Kahn said the recent 14.5 percent price hike by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would likely drive up the price of gasoline about 3 cents a gallon.

Rep. Philip Sharp, D-Ind., asked whether deregulation of gasoline — plus other steps being considered by the administration affecting oil pricing — wouldn't add an additional 4 to 7 cents to each gallon of gasoline, making the overall increase in the 7-to-10-cent range.

" You are perfectly right. There is a possibility, under not unreasonble assumptions, of increases of that order of magnitude," Kahn replied.

Deputy Energy Secretary John F. O'Leary also was called to testify before the panel on the price of gasoline, one day after the American Automobile Association released a study saying gasoline costs a nickel a gallon more this Christmas than last.

The administration had planned to lift the gasoline price controls in mid-January, but President Carter and his advisers are giving that more thought in light of the stiff price increase recently voted by OPEC.

Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal cited the OPEC action as a main reason for raising the administration's prediction of next year's inflation rate to 7 percent from an earlier projection of 6 percent to 6.5 percent.

Chairman G. William Miller of the Federal Reserve Board said earlier he expects the inflation to exceed 8 percent in 1979, down only slightly from the 1978 rate of about 9 percent.

The proposed OPEC price increase on imported oil is expected to raise home-heating oil prices at least a penny a gallon this winter in addition to leading to increases in gasoline prices and for a wide variety of products which rely on manufacturing processes using petroleum. Blumenthal said the chances for "somewhat lower" price increases "would be enhanced" if oil production returns to normal in Iran.

Davis' Lawyers Silent On Plan

HOUSTON (AP) — Defense attorneys say they intend to reel off four witnesses today in a prelude to an expected post-Christmas appearance by millionaire defendant Cullen Davis.

The quartet includes two district attorneys' investigators and two private sleuths.

Three members of the team defending the Fort Worth industrial czar on murder conspiracy charges hinted that Davis would be their next-to-the-last witness.

However, they steadfastly refused to confirm a published report that the four attorneys and their client agreed unanimously that Davis must testify.

"Hell," grinned lead defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes. "We can't even agree on where we eat breakfast."

If the report is correct, Davis would not take the stand before next Wednesday.

"If a person takes the stand he does so for all purposes," said prosecutor Jack Strickland, suggesting that the state is poised for a sweeping cross-examination.

Davis, 45, who went on trial almost eight weeks ago, is accused of plotting the contract murder of his divorce judge.

He insists he was framed.

Prosecutors say they expect Davis to take the stand after the 5-day Christmas break to furnish his version of his curious relationship with FBI informant David McCrory. McCrory once worked for Davis and the two were pool-shooting companions and drinking buddies.

The state's key witness, 40-year-old McCrory, contends Davis ordered him to find a "hit man" to kill his estranged wife, Priscilla, his younger brother, the judge and others.

The case revolves around two tape-recorded conversations between Davis and McCrory at a prearranged parking lot rendezvous.

Prosecutors say only Davis can explain why he discussed mass murder with McCrory and allegedly paid him $25,000 in a mistaken belief the judge was dead.

Strickland pointed to testimony from the defendant's honey-blonde girlfriend Karen Master, as a telltale clue that Davis would testify and what he might say.

Mrs. Master said she received a telephone call from the FBI on August 10 and that Davis talked with one of two agents involved in the investigation of a 1977 extortion threat against the defendant.

"There is no evidence of such a call," Strickland said.

Davis was arrested 10 days after the phone call in question.

The defense has maintained from the outset that Davis was framed by Priscilla, McCrory, and Fort Worth karate expert Pat Burleson.

Mrs. Davis, 37, was one of two wounded survivors of a 1976 shooting spree at the $6-million Fort Worth mansion she shared at the time with her lover Stan Farr.

Farr, 30, and Mrs. Davis' 12-year-old daugher were killed by a midnight intruder the state contends was Davis, dressed in black and wearing a woman's wig. Davis was acquitted of a murder charge stemming from that bloody episode and his lawyers undoubtedly will argue that questioning about the shootings would be improper at the Houston trial.

"I tend to think not," said Strickland. "I expect the defense to come with motions to limit questioning. But we will do everything the law allows."

office, said he and his wife were at a friend's house when the incident occurred. Asked this morning who he thought might want to harm him or his family, Griffin said, "I don't have any idea."

Griffin's son told police he was sitting in a chair when the phone rang. He said he had to cross in front of the doorway to answer it. However, when he picked up the phone, the caller hung up, he said.

The youth said he had just passed by the door again when a bullet crashed through the glass storm door. The inner front door was open when the shot was fired, reports show.

Police say the bullet traveled into the den and hit a table lamp in the back of the room. The bullet then ricocheted off into a paneled wall. A small-caliber slug was recovered by police at the scene.

Reports indicate only one shot was fired at the house.

Police say a study of the trajectory of the bullet shows the gunman would have had to be standing in the district attorney's front yard when he fired the shot.

Police Lt. Bill Rutherford said there were apparently no witnesses to the shooting.

Griffin will step down in January as district attorney to be replaced by John Montford, who won nomination to the office by a landslide in the Democratic primary.

Trucking Firm Receives Calls

SULPHUR, La. (UPI) — The telephone number for DSI Transport Co., a trucking firm, is similar to the toll-free number for a Santa Claus switchboard. Consequently, DSI employees have had the opportunity to speak with lots of children seeking a conversation with Santa — collect.

The confusion started when the Santa Claus line number — operated at the Fort Polk, La., Army base — was published. A Missouri newspaper ad misplaced a digit and the number was the same as DSI's.

"I think it's going to wind up costing us between $400 and $500 when we get our phone bill," Chuck Griffin, owner of the firm said Wednesday.

members a denial of the variance would cause an "unnecessary hardship on the homeowners, the builder and the future townhouse owner."

He said Chandler had complied "99 percent with the spirit of the ordinance."

Terry Quest, the leading opponent of the variance, noted Chandler had been notified shortly after construction was begun that he did not meet the setback requirements, thus had time to correct the situation.

Also this morning, ZBA members denied the request of Southland Corporation to install self-service gasoline pumps at a convenience store located at 2334 Broadway.

Jerry Cannon, who appeared on behalf of Southland Corporation, said the gas pumps were considered a way of saving a business "which has not shown a profit since it opened in 1977."

The request opened old wounds with the Overton South Neighborhood Association, which opposed the initial construction of the store and vigorously protested the destruction of a large elm tree on the store site.

Roger Loter, the association's chairman, said the corporation had failed to keep promises of extensive landscaping around the store after the tree had been cut down.

Also opposing the gas pump installation was County Court-at-Law Judge E.H. Boedeker, who owns property adjacent to the convenience store.

"The question is whether you want to preserve Broadway as a historic place or destroy it," he said. "The store is a sore eye to me, but a filling station is personally obnoxious to me," he said.

Bertram noted Broadway is under consideration as a design-historic district by the newly formed Urban Design Commission, and said he did not recommend approval of the exception.

Another hot potato before the board was the approval of construction plans for a water treatment facility at Plains Cooperative Oil Mill.

Board members continued the case until January and requested more information on the proposed facility, after hearing opposition from those who live north of the mill.

Harold Chatman, spokesman for those opposing the current construction plans, said his main concern is the possible hazard to the health of area residents.

Defense Secretary Brown Secure In Position

By ROBERT KAYLOR

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Four days before President Carter scrapped the B-1 bomber, he met alone with Harold Brown. A White House staff member said the defense secretary left "looking like he had just lost his best friend."

Sources close to Brown, who believes some form of manned bombers will still be needed in the future, said Carter told the defense secretary in that mid-1977 session he did not "favor" the plane.

Brown's final and formal recommendation went to Carter the following day — accelerate the cruise missile and cancel future B-1 production completely.

Whether or not the 51-year-old nuclear scientist really did want some form of B-1 program, the story illustrates one of his major assets in Jimmy Carter's cabinet as well as what some see as a liability.

Brown is a loyal team player, unquestionably a master of technical aspects of his job. But some critics in Congress and the military have wondered how far he is willing to push defense programs when political considerations are at stake.

After two years running the military and civilian machine that is the biggest single part of government, Brown's position with his boss is secure. And a recent news magazine survey taken among 100 top Washington figures in and out of the administration rated his performance above all other cabinet members.

Introverted and shy, the bespectacled Brown once described himself by saying "I have never pretended to be terribly gregarious or politic." He shuns the formal briefings and meetings popular at the Pentagon, instead wading through documents at great speed, jotting notes in a tiny and cramped handwriting.

On a tour overseas when soldiers were lined up to meet him, he confessed to one that "I'm supposed to talk to you but I really don't have anything to say."

Analysis

But he is able to deal easily with a president who is interested in highly technical defense issues and he also has proved adept at bureaucratic infighting. Administration sources say he has strengthened his own position as a result.

They cite as an example CIA Director Stansfield Turner's campaign to become "czar" of all intelligence gathering functions, including spy satellite and electronic snooping functions that had been controlled by the Pentagon.

Brown was forced to give budgetary control to Turner, whom Carter holds in high esteem from their days as classmates at the Naval Academy. But the defense secretary stubbornly fought giving him operational control of intelligence hardware. When Carter made his decision, Brown won.

Brown designed some of the nuclear warheads in the nation's arsenal and has long experience inside the Pentagon, where he headed a vast engineering staff as a 33-year-old "whiz kid" in the Kennedy administration.

He is committed to arms control — a view he says was reinforced by witnessing actual nuclear explosions — and is regarded as Carter's closest adviser on SALT negotiations.

His original marching orders from Carter included reducing defense spending, but Brown has recommended an increase despite a tightened national budget next year.

Brown has some problems with lawmakers, who are impressed with his expertise but were angered by lack of warning on Carter's veto of a key defense bill last year and hold the defense secretary personally responsible.

Pentagon sources also list personal dealings as a shortcoming. Brown has admitted he unnecessarily bruised feelings in what was billed as a major reorganization of his staff that would result in firings last year, but in the end only shuffled bureaucrats from one office to another.

Federal Bill Collectors Get Advice

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the General Accounting Office has some un-Christmas-like advice for the officials who run federal agencies — get tougher with the people who owe the government money.

Elmer Staats told a Senate finance subcommittee this week that private firms are more efficient at collecting unpaid debts than the federal government, which is owed billions of dollars.

Staats said one study showed a federal agency spent an average of $8.72 to go after debtors until the money was repaid, written off or referred to the Justice Department.

A large retail firm, he said, spent less than $3.50 to accomplish the same goal, and did it much faster.

"Many agencies have not been aggressive in pursuing collection and ... present collection methods are expensive, slow and ineffective when compared with commercial practices," he said.

Staats said that as of Sept. 30, 1977, the federal government was owed debts of about $118 billion, including some owed by foreign governments.

While much of that will be repaid routinely, Staats said, "A large and growing part requires some type of collection action and, of this, a substantial amount will be written off as uncollectable if collection methods are not improved."

He recommended several steps federal bill collectors could take:

—Report debts to credit bureaus, although in most cases this would require new legislation.

—Improve the content of demand letters.

—Make greater use of automation, including automating the letters.

When it comes to writing letters, Staats said:

"We found that government demand letters were not as specific as those in the private sector in describing actions that would be taken. This results in a less forceful message to the debtor and this lessens the likelihood of prompt repayment."

Committee Votes To Repeal Regulation

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — Connecticut has repealed a state regulation adopted the year World War II broke out that required horseshoe-shaped toilet seats in homes and public buildings.

The rule, believed to be the only one of its kind in the country, was put on the books in 1939. It came at a time when some people, despite disclaimers from doctors, believed they could contract venereal disease from soiled, circular toilet seats.

"It is with great reservation that we move to adopt this," Sen. George Gunther, R-Stratford, quipped this week as the Legislative Regulation Review Committee broke out in giggles. "This is a monumental piece of regulation."

Gunther, a chiropractor and veteran legislative maverick, said he'd like to see the rule retained for public toilets. But he said that would be difficult because the federal government has dropped the requirement for their buildings.

"I think it's a very good hygienic requirement," Gunther joked. "I have one at home."

Follow-Up

The state Public Health Department decided to drop the regulation — subsection (w) of section 19-13-B45 — from its books in September. The committee's approval was required before the rule could be repealed.

Toilet manufacturers had complained to the Health Department that it was expensive to make horseshoe-shaped toilet seats in the various colors and designs used in homes because they couldn't be sold in any other state.

MASS MURDER CONVICTION OVERTURNED — Elmer Wayne Henley, left, is shown going to court in Houston on August 17, 1973 after being arrested in connection with the mass sex slaying of 27 youths. Henley was convicted in six of the slayings and sentenced to six consecutive 99-year prison sentences. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday reversed the conviction saying that Henley was denied due process of law when the judge hearing the case refused to allow him to present evidence on a motion to move the trial to a different location. Firms To Miss Out On Premium Cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — A State Insurance Board executive says several thousand businesses will miss out on about $7 million in premium cuts because of delays in the board's workers compensation hearing.

Board actuaries recommended a 5.3 percent average rate cut, but a 2½-week recess in the hearing will postpone the reduction beyond the normal Jan. 1 effective date.

Willis McVey, manager of the board's Casualty Insurance Division, said policies of some 5,000 firms expire Jan. 1 and will have to be renewed at current rates.

If the board placed the staff-recommended reduction into effect Jan. 1, those 5,000 companies would enjoy about $7 million in rate cuts, based on their pro-rata share of total reductions estimated at $60 million, he said.

But the delays make that impossible, since workers compensation must be published 15 days before taking effect.

If the board gets back on its normal Jan. 1 rate schedule next year, and rates resume their upward trend of the past decade, those same businesses would receive no cuts at all.

The hearing began Nov. 28, ran to midday Nov. 29, then was recessed to Dec. 18, when it ran to 11:15 p.m. before adjourning. The board has given all parties until Dec. 29 to file additional information.

Long presentations by the Texas Association of Business (TAB) and the Texas Trial Lawyers Association stretched the hearing far beyond the four or five hours it usually takes.

Both groups challenge the existing rating formula, even though it produced an indicated cut in premiums this year.

And both associations indicate they will appeal to the courts if the board does not adopt a new formula that would result in even greater reductions.

Gerald Dorsey, general counsel of the TAB, said his group was not trying to trade immediate reductions for the 5,000 companies for lower rates in the long run.

"Our feeling is that the board was remiss in its responsibility to the buyer of workers compensation in not setting a hearing date early enough so that these issues could be heard and resolved," Dorsey said. "The board has known for some time that this was going to be a protracted hearing."

Acting board chairman Ned Price said, however, there were no indications beforehand that the hearing would last more than a day.

"It's never been protracted before. ... We had to recess it. I don't recall the reasons. ... I offer no apologies at all for the recess," Price said.

He said when the hearing was recessed Nov. 29, Dorsey was there and "didn't say one blamed thing."

Millard Flythe, manager of the board's workers compensation section, said the hearing was set for Nov. 28 because "our data was not available sooner than that."

As for recessing to Dec. 18, Flythe said Price checked the calendar and found the board had that date free, "and it was agreeable to the other parties."

Lawyer Scores Double Victory

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney Will Gray won a double victory when the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals overturned the convictions of two clients who are central figures in two of the state's most sensational murder cases.

Elmer Wayne Henley was given six life terms in 1974 for killing six youths as part of the 1973 Houston mass sex-torture slayings that left 27 boys dead.

Ignacio Cuevas was sentenced to death for slaying a woman hostage during the Fred Gomez Carrasco 1974 siege at the Huntsville state prison.

"I had no doubts about Henley, but I was a little worried about Cuevas," said Gray in Houston Wednesday. He was a court-appointed attorney in both cases.

Justices in Austin Wednesday reversed the Henley conviction because State District Judge Preston Dial of San Antonio refused to give proper consideration to an effort to gain a second change of venue and move the trial out of San Antonio.

Henley's case has been ordered returned to San Antonio.

Harris County District Attorney Carol Vance said, "We are going to ask for a speedy trial and attempt to try the case at the earliest possible time. ... I am very disappointed the verdict was reversed and we will have to go through a very costly and expensive trial once again so many years from the date of the offense."

Henley was 18 when the grisly, homo-

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: My future son-in-law (I'll call him Paul) is 21, and we like him a lot, but he has one very annoying fault. He has terrible table manners. He wolfs his food down and, before anyone is half finished, he's grabbing for seconds. He eats like an animal; just watching him can spoil a person's appetite.

Paul lives a long distance from here, so he comes over every Friday after work and stays until Sunday evening. It has been a ritual for a year now. We enjoy having him, but we dread mealtime.

My daughter can't do anything about it. She's tried telling him for his own good in a nice way, and she's even embarrassed him, hoping that would work, but his eating habits are so deeply ingrained I'm afraid he's hopeless. The wedding is a few months off and our resentment builds every time we sit down at the table with Paul. Is there a solution?

Future Mother-In-Law

Dear Mother-In-Law: I don't believe Paul is "hopeless." If he wanted to improve his table manners, he could. But if your daughter is willing to tolerate Paul's boorishness and gluttony, she can expect the problem to last as long as their marriage. And unless YOU want to tell him you have the option of putting up with it or seeing as little of him at mealtime as possible.

DEAR ABBY: My grandmother is in her 80s and is in good health. After grandfather died several years ago, she drew up a will to provide for disposition of her real property and investments, but she did nothing about her personal possessions.

Granny owns some things that may mean little to her, but their disposition might provoke a family battle after her death.

How can her heirs gently suggest now that she specify who shall inherit what without appearing greedy or giving the impression that we are waiting for her to die?

I doubt that she has given this any thought. What do you suggest?

Grandson In A Large Family

Dear Grandson: I know of no way to "gently suggest" to a woman in her 80s that it's time she specified who shall get her personal possessions after she's gone.

If a family battle breaks out later, it won't be Granny's funeral. She'll already have had hers.

DEAR ABBY: I met this guy a short time ago and we hit it off right from the start. He's good-looking, very successful in his business and great company. I flipped for him. So what's my problem?

He smells just like my ex-husband, and this turns me off. I haven't got the nerve to tell him to use some other kind of cologne (or after-shave) but so help me, Abby, when he gets close to me, the smell of him brings back so many memories, both happy and painful, that I am turned off!

Am I crazy? And how can this problem be solved?

Turned Off In Jersey

Dear Turned: You are not crazy, and your problem can be easily solved. Buy the gentlemen ANOTHER brand of cologne (or after-shave) and ask him to wear it just for you. If he's as great as you say he is, you shouldn't mind paying through the nose.

Children Buy Gifts Through Project

In keeping with the spirit of the season, Lubbock Jaycees planned a special project for youngsters at the Lubbock Children's Home and Lubbock Boys' Ranch.

Under the direction of Bobby Hutto, project chairmen, the Jaycees collected donations of $800 to support the project.

Jaycees took about 80 children from the two local schools shopping at a local store, giving each child money with which to purchase gifts for family and friends.

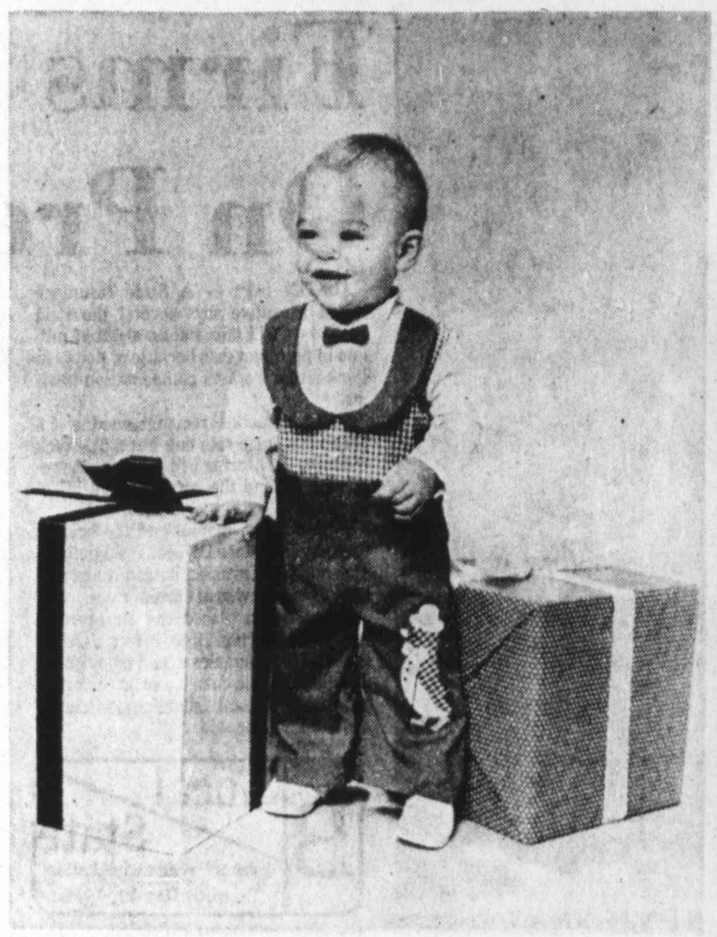

They then returned to the Children's Home for a wrapping party. Paper, tape, ribbons, cards and punch and cookies had been provided by local businesses.

Working with Hutto on the project were Lynn Harms from the Children's Home and Les Murphy from Boys' Ranch. Thirty Jaycees participated, including four couples from the Slaton Jaycees.

This is the 22nd year that local Jaycees have sponsored this project. Hutto commented that "It could not have been done without the cooperation of the people and businessmen of Lubbock."

Opening lead: King of ◇.

Here's a chance for you to test your play technique. Declaring six hearts, should South take a safety play in trumps? Or should he play the ace in an attempt to drop the king? Or should he lead the queen in the hope of smothering a singleton jack in the East hand?

South's jump to Blackwood was a little aggressive, for it could have resulted in reaching a slam off the ace-king of trumps. As it turned out, the final contract was a sound proposition.

Considering only the trump suit, the best chance to avoid a loser is to cash the ace. That works if either defender has a singleton king, which is double the odds of finding East specifically with the bare jack.

Declarer also has the option of guaranteeing himself no more than one trump loser via a safety play. He simply leads low from either hand and covers whichever card the defender produces. This will neutralize all 3-0 splits.

Which line did you choose? The answer is neither. Declarer doesn't know how to play the trump suit until he discovers whether or not he has a club loser—he must eventually take the finesse in that suit.

Correct technique is to win the ace of diamonds and lead a club to the jack. If this loses, declarer cannot afford to lose a trump. Therefore, he should then play the percentages by leading a trump to the ace, hoping to drop the king.

If the club finesse wins, the contract is secure provided declarer loses no more than one trump trick. So now he should employ the safety play. He leads a low trump and when West follows with the seven, declarer inserts dummy's nine. If East wins, the ace will pick up the outstanding trump. As the cards lie, East fails to follow, but the contract is still safe.

Children Rely On Toys For Education

NEW YORK (NEA) — Toys are a child's friends and his teachers. They inform and educate about the world around him and also protect him from that same world. They provide a private place for a child to keep, protect and develop his own person.

Today's toys are tomorrow's adult tools, scaled down versions of real life objects. With them children can create imaginary, life-like situations.

Children have apparently always had toys. In the pyramids of Egypt and the burial mounds of ancient Persia, many dolls and toy animals were found. In the ruins of ancient Crete, anthropologists found delicate dolls dressed in embroidered gowns decorated with precious stones. The Dutch are generally credited with inventing the first doll houses which over the years developed as teaching tools to help little girls learn how to keep house properly.

Toys also frequently played a role in children's religious training. Ancient societies often gave their children toys to ward off evil spirits, guard against ill health and insure a long life. Modern-day versions of such holy figures can be seen in the Christmas creches that decorate many homes and churches and recreate the birth of Jesus and the manger scene.

In the early Christian church, priests used puppets and marionettes to tell Bible stories to people who couldn't read. And even flying a kite, to some people, signifies the Resurrection.

While toys have existed since ancient times, only in recent years have we come to understand their more extensive role and the meaning of play to a child's growth and development, according to the Toy Manufacturers of America.

In more primitive, simple societies, children learned through play to familiarize themselves with their environment and to develop skills that would help them find food and provide shelter to survive. In an increasingly complex society, children today must learn more for survival. They must develop physically, mentally, emotionally and socially in order to cope.

This learning process begins for children through their play, and toys are the educational tools to aid in this development. Though no toy can teach a child anything all by itself, with proper interaction between a child, his toys and other people — and particularly with his parents — toys can teach many things.

It is considerably more difficult for children today to mature from child to adult. Life patterns are more complex and a child is not always sure of his adult role. Toys help them prepare for adulthood by increasing their confidence, flexibility and self-expression. They help introduce children to modern technology and contemporary living by emulating current social trends, attitudes and interests.

Children gain a sense of values from their toys. As we said, toys by themselves cannot shape a child, but they can help to reinforce the lessons we teach them.

Perhaps most important of all, toys teach children to love. They have traditionally provided companionship and security and served as objects of love for children. A favorite doll, a teddy bear or other special toy has helped many a child cope with difficult moments in his young life. Children have to learn to love and they learn partly from loving their toys.

DR. LAMB

Lose All Fat

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — My doctor recommended a low-fat, low-sodium diet for warding off high blood pressure. While my weight loss is noticeable, my pressure does not lower. Do you have any suggestion for dieting or exercises?

DEAR READER — I'm glad to hear you are losing weight. Perhaps you haven't lost enough. The best effects of weight loss on blood pressure are seen after all the excess body fat is gone. Do it gradually and sensibly.

I usually recommend walking as an excercise for a person who has high blood pressure. Unless you already have complications from high blood pressure, there isn't any reason that you can't do a sensible amount of walking on a regular basis. In fact, you can break it up in parts so you can walk several times a day. This also will help you lose weight.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 1-8, Blood Pressure. It will give you more information on what causes the blood pressure to be elevated and how blood pressure actually fluctuates in normal people.

Occasional high readings don't necessarily mean you really have high blood pressure or what is commonly referred to as essential hypertension. It's a persistent high blood pressure that's important. Other readers who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y., 10019.

There are some recent good studies on the influence of fat reduction on blood pressure. These studies show what many good doctors have known for years. If you are overweight and get rid of fat, in many instances blood pressure will return to normal levels.

In other instances, the loss of fat will decrease the amount of medicine needed to control the blood pressure. The important point, though, is to lose all the fat, not just a little bit of it.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Is it true that men who have a vasectomy should stay on a low-cholesterol diet as they are more prone to have hardening of the arteries?

DR READER — It's the prudent thing to do even though all the evidence for this is not in.

There have been reports on monkeys that showed that if they had a vasectomy they are more apt to develop fatty-cholesterol deposits in the arties. However, these research studies were done in monkeys that were consuming a great deal more cholesterol in the diet than the average American male does. The average American male is thought to consume too much cholesterol already.

The explanation as to why a man would develop an increased tendency to have fatty-cholesterol changes in the arteries after a vasectomy is relatively complex.

The thought is that the sperm cells that are not allowed to escape remain in the body. They break down into the fundamental protein from which they are made. These behave like foreign protein and the body literally develops an immune mechanism to them. This immune type response is thought to make the arteries more susceptible to developing fatty-cholesterol depositing.

I don't mind recommending that men who have had a vasectomy should be on a low-cholesterol diet because the simple facts are that if all men were on a low-fat, particularly low-saturated fat, low-cholesterol diet, there would probably be a lot less arteriosclerosis with its complications of heart attacks and strokes.

Department Seeks Mine Claim Bans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department is asking Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus to ban new mining claims on 11 million acres of Alaska's national forest land for up to two years while Congress considers how the land can be used.

The Forest Service, an agency of the Agriculture Department, manages surface use of the land and has already acted to limit such things as timber sales pending a final decision on use of the land. Assistant Interior Secretary M. Rupert Cutler said Tuesday existing valid mining claims will be honored.

Study Shows Sex Roles Unchanged

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Women take heart. A survey concludes that many men agree they should help with housework and child care, even though most don't follow through.

Despite the impact of the women's movement, the study reports that 90 percent of wives and 85 percent of husbands say the woman does all or most of the household chores.

The study, prepared by the Harvard-based Project on Human Sexual Development, examined how parents teach their children about sex. It surveyed 1,400 mothers and fathers in Cleveland who had children between ages 3 and 11.

Overall, the survey finds that not much has changed in the way mothers and fathers acquaint their children with sex.

Most parents handle the subject the same way their own parents did. And usually, this means avoiding any mention of it.

To find out what kind of examples parents set for their kids about sex roles, the researchers asked men if they thought it was the woman's responsibility to run the house and care for the children. Half the men disagreed.

But even in families in which the woman has a paying job, the wife still does most of the housework.

In less than 3 percent of the households, the parents report that the father does most of the household tasks. Twelve percent said they share the work equally.

The survey, directed by Elizabeth Roberts, also found:

—Almost 40 percent of the mothers who have girls between 9 and 11 say they have never discussed menstruation with them.

Hens Continue To Shell Out

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's hens continued to shell out last month, producing 5.62 billion eggs, up 1 percent from November 1977, says the Agriculture Department.

Officials said Wednesday that as of Dec. 1 the rate of lay for 291 million hens averaged 65.5 eggs per 100 birds. That compared with 64.6 on Nov. 1, and 65.1 a year ago.

Gold Disappears From Office

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials say 325 pounds of Uncle Sam's gold — worth about $1.1 million — may have gone up a New York chimney in smoke or out the door with a thief. They know it's gone, but they really don't know where.

"We'll never be able to answer all the questions," Assistant Treasury Secretary Joe Laitin acknowledged Wednesday night.

If there was some way to determine that it was all stolen, officials said it might be the largest theft of government-owned gold from a federal facility in the nation's history.

The government isn't even sure exactly how much gold is missing from its U.S. Assay Office in New York City. But it estimated the amount at 5,200 ounces Wednesday in an announcement.

Meanwhile, it is still checking its books — as well as nooks and crannies of the building in lower Manhattan where the assay office is housed.

Officials say there are two basic problems in trying to pinpoint the amount of gold missing and where it went.

First, the office's records from the time it opened in 1854 to 1973 are so bad it's hard to say exactly how much gold was supposed to be there in 1973, when record-keeping procedures were improved. That raises the possibility that the amount missing since then might be more than announced, or a bit less.

Second, the office's main task is not storing gold but melting down golden objects such as necklaces or nuggets. Some gold is lost routinely in the fiery refining process.

"The laws of standard commercial practices" indicate nearly half the 5,200 ounces would have been lost in refining since 1973, Laitin said. Other ounces may be smudged on walls or lodged in cracks, he said.

"But we're not overlooking the possibility that somebody has been stealing," he said.

The U.S. Secret Service, the Treasury agency conducting the investigation, has been searching for a culprit for months, he said. That investigation has led to no arrests, although one employee was caught trying to steal gold earlier this year and now is in prison, officials said.

The Treasury Department first began looking into the matter about a year ago when Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., received a letter alleging gold thefts and turned the letter over to Treasury.

An initial investigation didn't add up to much, but about three months ago extensive audits began adding up to answers in the minus column. As Laitin put it: "They saw a lot of gold on paper they couldn't find anywhere."

Laitin said the building housing the New York assay office is on prime commercial land in the Wall Street area and might well be sold one day.

Noting the likelihood of gold traces smeared and imbedded in its interior, however, he said, "We'd probably keep the building and try to melt it down."

AT&T Making Too Much

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s largest customer — the federal government — says the telephone company is making too much money.

The General Services Administration, which oversees the government's telephone communications system, said Wednesday that it is asking the Federal Communications Commission to investigate whether AT&T's rate of return authorized by the FCC is "excessive under current economic conditions" and should be rolled back.

That action came as AT&T announced in New York that its quarterly earnings were up 18 percent, and chairman John D. de Butts predicted that this year's results "will be our finest ever," and 1979 "will be another year of improvement" for earnings.

The FCC's limit on telephone company profits has been 9.5 percent to 10 percent since 1976.

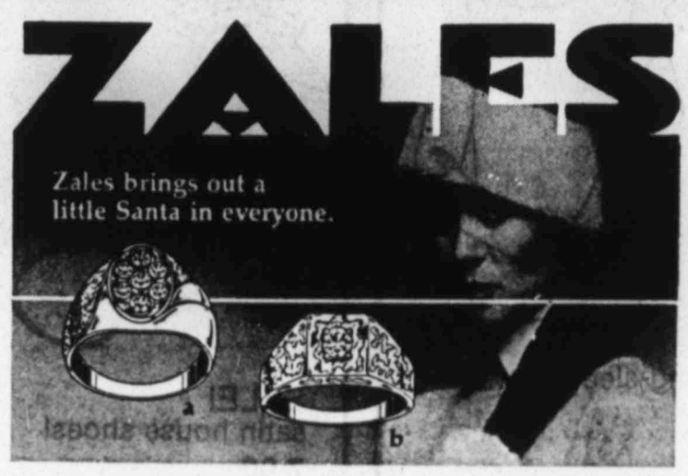

"We think the 9.5 to 10 percent rate should be reduced to around 9 percent, which would result in savings to all telephone users of more than $600 million a year," said GSA Administrator Jay Solomon.

He said that despite the government ceiling of 10 percent, AT&T's earnings from interstate service "have consistently improved (and) recent company reports indicate its 1978 return is about 10.4 percent, or more than $200 million a year" over the maximum.

Firm To Boost Production

TOKYO (AP) — Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., the world's largest electric appliance maker, said this week it will push local production of color television sets and other appliances in the United States to counter "increasingly difficult export circumstances."

The first step in the direction is the appointment, effective Jan. 1, of Matsushita President Toshihiko Yamashita as president also of the company's main U.S. subsidiary, Matsushita Electric Corp. of the U.S., a spokesman said.

He also said the production department of Quasar Electronics Co., a subsidiary in Franklin Park, Ill., will produce not only Quasar brand color television sets but Panasonic brands as well.

The spokesman said Matsushita is planning to locally produce video projectors and microwave ovens as well in the future.

Behind the move, according to industry officials, is the fact that it has become increasingly difficult for Japanese companies to export products to the U.S. because of the yen's appreciation.

As president of Matsushita Electric Corp. of the U.S., Yamashita will preside over three local firms — Quasar, Matsushita Industrial and Panasonic Co. in Secaucus, N.J. — thus strengthening production coordination among them as well as between the parent company in Japan and the U.S. subsidiaries, the spokesman said.

INDEX RISES

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada's consumer price index rose 0.8 percent in November and was up 8.8 percent from November 1977, Statistics Canada said this week. The index, with a base of 100 equaling 1971 prices, rose to 180.8. Higher transportation charges, particularly for new automobiles, were a large factor in the latest monthly increase.

Kennedy Willing To Confront Carter On Cuts

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is determined to maintain public and private pressure on President Carter to halt what the senator and other liberals see as a drift to the right by the administration.

Carter describes his differences with Kennedy on domestic policy as "minor." But Kennedy has made it clear he's willing to risk a major confrontation with the administration if Carter decides drastic cuts are necessary on domestic programs.

Health insurance is the biggest issue. But Kennedy is trying to avert budget slashes for a number of existing programs and also is certain to press Carter to keep his campaign promise to eliminate tax law provisions that benefit the rich.

In a recent meeting with senior White House aides, Kennedy argued against administration budget plans. "They weren't talking about cuts, they were talking about zero money," was how one Kennedy aide described the administration position.

The Massachusetts senator ranks even with Carter — some polls say higher — in popularity among Democrats.

In the weeks leading up to the Memphis convention, Kennedy hedged on whether he planned to attend. He didn't want to spend a lot of time at the meeting answering the usual questions about whether he plans to challenge Carter in 1980.

But there was going to be a discussion of health insurance, which Kennedy is determined to make a major issue in the 96th Congress.

Kennedy aides contacted the White House and obtained a commitment that Carter would voice support for national health insurance. But there was no commitment that the president would agree to Kennedy's timetable.

Carter arrived at the convention on a Friday night and lectured the delegates on the need to fight inflation while promising that he wouldn't forget the underprivileged.

The president returned to Washington the next day.

Kennedy swept into the convention complex a few hours later to the enthusiastic greetings of delegates, many of whom still seem uncertain what to make of the party outsider from Georgia.

It was clear when the health insurance panel got underway before a standing-room-only audience that Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano knew what was going to happen.

Since the secretary spoke first, Kennedy hadn't yet uttered a word when Califano said the administration would ask the 96th Congress to act on health insurance.

Then Kennedy delivered the rousing speech that brought delegates to their feet cheering.

It looked like Kennedy had accomplished a major coup by pulling the administration reluctantly on board the move to enact a program next year.

But that remains to be seen and no one knows it better than Kennedy.

Analysis

The 96th Congress, a shade more Republican and more conservative, isn't likely to embrace Kennedy's call for health insurance.

Rousing speeches in Memphis may turn on the party rank and file. But Sen. Russell Long, D-La., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is singularly unmoved by Kennedy. And Long will have the single most powerful voice in the Senate when it comes to consideration of health insurance.

The only way Kennedy can alter that power balance is to get Carter to accept a leadership role in the fight.

Kennedy is spending a lot of time on the road, holding health insurance hearings one day in Queens, N.Y., the next in Orange County, Calif. Wherever he goes he attracts attention and uses it to try to build a national concensus strong enough to impress the president that this is an issue whose time has arrived.

And there is no doubt that if Carter doesn't willingly accept a leadership role on health insurance, Kennedy will ask why he hasn't.

Presidential Speculation Continues

By ARNOLD SAWISLAK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Teddy Kennedy was the socko act in Memphis. The Massachusetts senator's speech on national health insurance provided just about the only excitement during the entire three days of the Democratic midterm conference.

As a result, there were some people who interpreted the Kennedy appearance and the response it received as the first small sign that the senator might be toying with the idea of a 1980 challenge to President Carter.

That is an interesting idea, except for two points.

The first is that Kennedy did not remain in Memphis to lead the battle for the health insurance proposal he is pushing in competition with the administration's plan. Had he done so, it surely would have been taken as a sign that Kennedy was staking out a possible place in the 1980 picture.

The second is that there was no visible political follow-up to the Kennedy appearance or any organized apparatus working on his behalf in Memphis. The Kennedys are not new to campaign organization and nothing happened at Memphis that looked liked a Kennedy operation.

So what conclusion can be taken from Kennedy's impassioned appeal to the midterm conference?

There is the possibility that the speech was exactly what is was labeled — an expression of Kennedy's deep belief that he is right and the administration is wrong on the issue of implementing a national health insurance program.

It is also possible that Kennedy, without having made any fateful decision about a presidential run in 1980, used the occasion to keep himself in the eye of the party rank-and-file in case he does decide to make a move toward the White House.

The president made it very clear that he realizes Kennedy is not just another United States senator; that he "represents a family within the Democratic Party that is revered because of his two brothers." That "makes him a spokesman not only in his own right but also of a much broader ... constituency. I recognize this and I have no objection to it."

Carter also said Kennedy was especially interested in the health insurance subject "having devoted several years of his legislative life" to it, while as president, "I have to look at a much broader range of issues than does Sen. Kennedy."

The president obviously is not looking for a fight with Kennedy, but he also cannot afford to look like he is afraid of him.

Guerrillas Fight On In Angola

By ERIK VAN EES

LUANDA, Angola (UPI) — "And this," said Armindo Mababa proudly, "is an example of how South Africa helps the guerrillas."

He slapped the side of a flatbed truck with mounted machine guns, still loaded with large gleaming cartridge belts, captured, according to a note placed on the side, on Aug. 29, 1978.

The truck, bearing civilian license plates from a Johannesburg suburb, was captured at Calai, on the Angolan side of the frontier with South Africa.

Angola's armed forces, backed by an estimated 19,000 Cuban troops and with Soviet arms, have launched repeated offensives against the widely scattered but well armed and disciplined forces of Jonas Savimbi, the charismatic leader of UNITA (National Union for the Total Independence of Angola).

According to Mike Nicholson, a British television journalist, who was rescued last month after four months with Savimbi's forces in southern Angola, UNITA is armed, fed and clothed by South Africa, France, Iran and Morocco.

Despite far superior numbers and striking power, Luanda has not managed to destroy Savimbi's hold on the Ovimbundu tribesmen in the region, who give the guerrilla leader information and support on the ground.

In fact, by their well-planned, strategic strikes at transport routes and supply lines, UNITA has developed into a headache for President Agostinho Neto he cannot easily get rid of.

"Until Neto makes a rapprochement with UNITA, the country will have serious problems," said a qualified Western observer. "The question is how to do it?"

UNITA has all but stopped the road transport of food from the south, which, produced 85 per cent of Angola's food before the civil strife started in 1975, by attacks on produce trucks. These have scared most drivers and food carriers away and caused serious food shortages in the capital, Luanda, a city of an estimated 200,000 inhabitants.

The guerrillas also have prevented the complete reopening of the Benguela railroad which crosses the country from east to west and was a major copper export route for neighboring Zaire and Zambia.

Though some sections of the railway are open to traffic, no trains have yet been able to reach the Atlantic ports of Benguela and Lobito with copper shipments from Zambia and Zaire.

European and diplomatic sources said Neto's MPLA (Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola) had increased its foothold in the south, and was able to hold political rallies and meetings there — which it could not do 18 months ago. But they noted the continued fighting was a serious economic strain the nation could not afford.

President Neto has firmly ruled out ending the fighting through negotiations.

After a meeting with visiting U.S. Sen. George McGovern recently, western journalists questioned Neto on the chances of reconciliation with UNITA.

"Reconciliation? With South Africa?" he asked, saying the guerrillas were being run by the Pretoria government.

"UNITA is a traitor to our country and we cannot reconcile with traitors or fascists-racists (South Africa)," Neto said.

South Africa had large troop concentrations on the border with Namibia and carried out hit-and-run raids into his country and violated its airspace, Noaroed. He cited this "insecurity on the south border" as the main reason for keeping the Cuban forces in Angola. When the South Africans withdraw, the Cubans can go, he told McGovern.

The Western observers also said it would be "difficult locally to justify Savimbi's entry into politics" if Neto could or wanted to persuade him to take part.

The UNITA leader is characterized as an imperialist in speeches by MPLA politicians and firmly linked to "fascist-racist" South Africa, and the observers said it was unlikely that with such an image Savimbi could take a seat in Luanda's Central Committee or the Politbureau — should he ever accept that.

Armindo Mababa, guiding visitors through Luanda's military museum, and showing captured weapons and memorabilia relating to Neto's political rise, had a simple answer to the problem.

"We must catch him and shoot him," he said.

The National Foundation-March of Dimes says it raised $62,395,849 in campaign contributions for 1978. It says this was an increase of nearly $7 million over the 1977 total and the largest amount ever received in a single campaign.

KIDS-ONLY CLUB

Paper Pinata Easy To Make

By SHARI LEWIS

In Mexico there is no Christmas tree tradition. Instead, above the children's heads is hung a pinata, which is a wonderfully decorated earthenware jar filled with nuts and candies. The kids, blindfolded, try to smash the pinata with sticks. When it breaks, the goodies are scattered all over the floor, and there is a great scramble.

Why not make a paper pinata for your party?

Here's how: Paint (with poster paints) bright decorations all over the outer surfaces of a paper shopping bag. Hang the bag (filled with nuts, candies and tiny favors) in the center of your party room or in a large doorway. Substitute rolled newspapers (two sheets rolled tightly, and taped) for the sticks, blindfold the guests, and let them try one at a time to break the homemade pinata. Start with the youngest kid present, and give each guest two swings.

Yesterday's Brain Twister: What is it we eat for breakfast and drink at dinner?

Answer: Toast. (A copy of "The Kids-Only Club Book" is on the way to Melod Isakson of Sandy, Ore., for sharing this Brain Twister with us.)

Today's Brain Twister: Find a short word denoting a sound in each of these words: stick, popular, heaping, buzzard (example: humble: hum). (Look for the answer in tomorrow's Kids-Only Club column.)

Candidates File For Vacant Seat

AUSTIN (AP) — Three persons have filed as candidates for the House seat to be vacated by Rep. Jim Nugent, D-Kerrville, who joins the Texas Railroad Commission on Jan. 1.

Filing on Monday as candidates in the Jan. 16 special election were Elizabeth Rohn of Kerrville, W. P. Dodson of Uvalde and Ernest Boyett of Junction.

Mrs. Rohn, 47, is a member of the State Republican Executive Committee and is a sales representative for radio station KERV in Kerrville.

Boyett was executive secretary of Gov. Coke Stevenson in the 1940s and was sergeant-at-arms of the House.

All three labeled themselves conservatives.

Nugent resigned from the House to accept appointment by Gov. Dolph Briscoe to the railroad commission following the resignation of Commissioner Jon Newton.

Coffee Rates As Most Political Product

By DIGBY A. SOLOMON

SANTOS, Brazil (UPI) — Mrs. John Q. Public may think her morning cup of coffee is just a nice, albeit expensive, way to start the day.

Little does she know that this most political of products is an endless source of speculation, intrigue, rumors and downright lies that would put to shame the worst machinations of the CIA and KGB.

It's complicated enough when consumers seeking the cheapest beans clash in the market place with profit-minded sellers, but the waters really get muddy when governments and speculators get into the act to carve out a profit.

Nowhere are the waters muddier than in Santos, the coffee capital of the world's largest coffee producer — accounting in a normal year for between 20 million and 25 million 132-pound bags of beans.

Thus it's easy to pick up reports here that what you thought was a breath of fresh air was in fact a "killer frost" that will create a shortage of beans for months to come — and cause prices to rise.

But when the coffee trees really die, as they did during the famous "Black Frost" of 1975 that wiped out 73 percent of the crop, prices really soar — from $1.21 before the frost to more than $4 afterward.

Irate consumers in the United States, the world's leading coffee-consuming nation, launched a boycott that drove prices back down, but their brand of price manipulation was peanuts compared to the big boys.

The chain that links the coffee trees to Mrs. Public begins with the growers, who sell their beans to brokers, who sell to exporters, who sell to companies that process and package the coffee and sell it to supermarkets.

All these people take a profit because they did something with the beans, but there are others in the game who do nothing — they just buy it, sell it, hoard it, dump it, even lie for it, anything to ensure a profit.

If a frost kills some coffee trees, for example, the powerful and official Brazilian Coffee Institute will paint the gloomiest possible picture of future harvests, hoping to raise prices.

But if the harvest is abundant and prices start to slide, the institute will try to keep supplies down and prices up by buying it from growers and even exporters at a price above what others would pay.

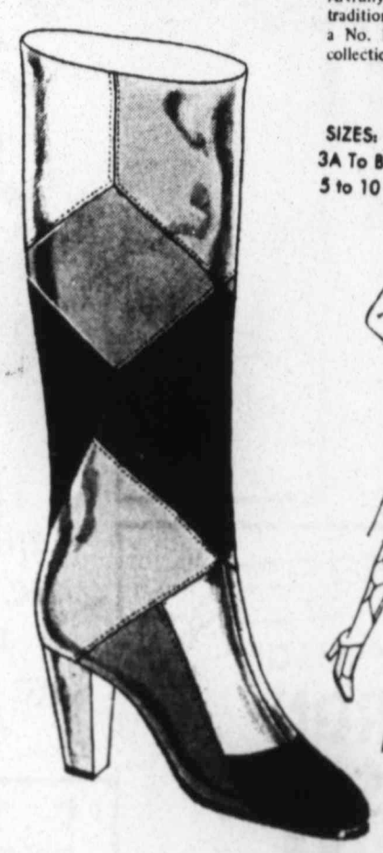

Prices also can be affected by private speculators who buy and sell coffee on the London and New York coffee markets and profit from the price spread — all without ever taking delivery of a single bean.

The same bag of coffee is sold, bought and resold so many times that in 1977 the two markets traded twice as much coffee as was actually harvested.

If frost ruins Brazil's coffee crop, for example, the speculators will jump to buy up as much coffee as they can and will resell it later when prices shoot up.

Police Locate Dying Animals

CHICAGO (UPI) — Inside the apartment, police found two dozen starving dogs and cats lying on feces-covered floors with the partially eaten body of another dog nearby.

Les Zegart, shelter manager for the Anti-Cruelty Society, Wednesday estimated the animals had been inside the apartment for about a week without food or water.

When the door to the apartment was opened Tuesday, the animals were "running all over, cringing in fear and lying sick and dying," he said. "Feces were spread from one end of the apartment to the other."

The 15 cats and nine dogs "were absolutely emaciated and dehydrated," Zegart said.

Police found the partially eaten body of a dog inside.

"Normally, animals in those situations will not resort to cannibalism ... until they have to," Zegart said.

The apartment tenant, Christine King, has not been seen by her neighbors since Monday. A missing persons report was filed on her.

A neighbor, Rose Warner, said Mrs. King "always loved animals. If someone had a stray dog, she'd take it in. She would go without eating in order to feed her dogs. I don't understand."

U.N. General Assembly Recesses

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. General Assembly, unable to complete its work on schedule, recesses today after three months of meetings highlighted by economic questions and Mideast and African conflicts.

Among items to be taken up when the assembly resumes its 33rd session on Jan. 15 are budget matters which the budgetary committee was unable to complete before the year-end holidays. Also held over for the resumed session were plans for a restructuring of U.N. units and an apartheid debate.

The session began last September and one of its first acts was to admit its 150th member, Solomon Islands. Later the assembly admitted the 151st member, the tiny Caribbean island of Dominica.

Following organizational meetings came the customary general debate, with government leaders, foreign ministers and ambassadors outlining the views of their governments on foreign issues.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance sought in his speech to promote the Camp David agreements on the Middle East, then newly negotiated and lacking any firm U.N. endorsement.

By adjournment friends of the United States took some comfort in the fact that no major attempt had been made in the assembly to upset the Camp David accords. British Ambassador Ivor Richard commented, "I can't imagine any Arab country, other than Egypt, viewed the accords with great enthusiasm. Still there was no major attempt to derail Camp David nor to criticize Egypt or the United States on that score."

The assembly adopted a number of resolutions critical of Israel for refusal to withdraw from Arab lands and for its occupation policies. The United States was criticized directly for supplying arms to Israel.

The session included a controversial International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. Israel protested the event, charging it glorified Palestinian terrorists, and the United States boycotted the ceremonies.

In the economic field, the assembly repeatedly endorsed a need for a new international economic order beneficial to developing countries. It also voted to hold a special conference in 1981 on "new and renewable sources of energy" and agreed on a preparatory conference to draw up an economic program for the next decade.

Debate on Namibia was held against the background of Security Council sessions and delicate diplomatic efforts to get South Africa to go along with a U.N. plan for advancing the territory to independence.

South Africa's staging of its own elections in South-West Africa, as the territory is also known, brought harsh reaction from the African group and its protege, the South-West Africa People's Organization. Still before the assembly was a resolution proposing sanctions against South Africa if it refuses to agree to U.N.-supervised elections as a step toward Namibian independence.

On Wednesday, the day preceding adjournment, the assembly re-elected Martti Ahtisaari as U.N. commissioner for Namibia for a third one-year term. Ahtisaari, a Finnish diplomat with long experience in Africa, would head the U.N. supervisory team in Namibia as the special representative of Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim.

The assembly also adopted a resolution accusing Chilean authorities of continuing violations of human rights and and another resolution authorizing binding U.N. arbitration to settle the problem of missing persons in Cyprus. In addition, it endorsed past resolutions urging that the U.N. Development Program "consult and cooperate closely with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people," on projects for the Palestinians.

Italian Leftists Strike Again

ROME (UPI) — Leftist terrorists bombed a nightclub in Rome, a police station in Milan and a businessman's villa in Naples today in the third straight day of the biggest wave of politial violence in Italy since last spring.

At least 27 cars were destroyed in the attacks by the urban guerillas. Two persons were injured in the nightclub bombing.

Since last Friday, urban guerrillas have struck in 21 Italian cities, killing three persons, injuring nine others and causing millions of dollars in damage.

Today's attacks were the third straight day of the most sustained terrorist strikes since the abduction and killing of former Premier Aldo Moro. Moro was abducted in March and found dead in May.

The attacks came a day after police raided 27 apartments in the northern city of Bologna and arrested 13 persons believed linked to the First Line Organization. The First Line group is Italy's second most active urban guerrilla gang, after the Red Brigades.

In today's most serious incident, a powerful time bomb packed with five pounds of explosives went off in front of a suburban Rome nightclub, severely damaging the building and injuring two persons inside. Police said 20 autos parked outside were damaged.

Rome police said five other automobiles were burned by arsonists.

An anonymous telephone caller told the newspaper Il Messaggero the car burnings were carried out by a group calling itself the Communist Territorial Squads.

Milan police said a powerful time bomb damaged the San Siro area police station and two autos parked in an adjoining courtyard.

An anonymous telephone caller told the Italian news agency ANSA the bombing was carried out by the Proletarian Organization for Counterpower to retaliate for the death of one of its members while in jail.

In Naples, police said a time bomb damaged the villa of businessman Raffaele Barbato just outside the city.

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Lack of forethought could create some problems for you, but luck will be on your side tomorrow. Another will intervene. You'll come out better in the long run.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Take care of obligations early tomorrow, no matter how difficult it is for you. When all the fun begins later, you'll be free to join in.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Plans might be difficult to organize and threaten to throw everything out of kilter tomorrow. Don't fret; somehow, everything will work out beautifully.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You might just as well call it an early day tomorrow with your work, since your heart and mind won't be in it. Plan for a fun evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It's best that you don't depend on others to come through for you on any issue that's important. Your luck will lie in things you do for yourself tomorrow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Tomorrow could start out with family members being a mite touchy or grouchy, but things will turn about quickly and all will end up in a happy mood.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You might be called upon tomorrow to help someone with an unpleasant task. Do it cheerfully — you'll still have more than enough time for your own needs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) All in all, a pretty nifty day is coming up tomorrow. The one problem area on the horizon is your tendency toward extravagance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be careful tomorrow that you aren't too self-serving. You'll be embarrassed later when people show they have gone out of their way to be kind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You could start tomorrow off with patience for those who don't support your views. Later, that old, charming, you will emerge to the delight of all.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) A friend might abuse your generosity tomorrow. Happily, a little later another will make up for it in much larger measure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You may have to hold in check too much emphasis on the "self" tomorrow. Go easy. The day will turn out in your favor anyway.

Soviet Probe Touches Down

MOSCOW (UPI) -- An unmanned Soviet probe soft-landed on Venus early today, automatically placed an image of Lenin on the surface and transmitted information back to Earth for almost two hours before falling silent, Moscow radio reported.

The probe, which was carried aboard the Venera-12 spacecraft launched Sept. 14, touched down on the 900-degree-hot surface of the cloud-covered planet at 6:30 a.m. (10:30 p.m. EST), the radio said.

The probe separated from Venera-12 when the spacecraft broke into two parts as planned on Dec. 19. The other half zipped past the planet at a distance of 21,750 miles to serve as a reflector to beam back signals to the Earth.

Moscow Radio said after the probe touched down it automatically placed an image of Vladimir Lenin, leader of the Bolshevik Revolution and founder of the Soviet Union, and a seal of the Soviet Union, on the planet's hot surface.

A second Venus spacecraft, dubbed Venera-11 was launched Sept. 9 and was scheduled to pass the planet Dec. 25, the broadcast said.

The unmanned probe was equipped with television cameras.

New Evidence Disputes Report

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — New evidence reportedly shows bullets aimed at President Kennedy were fired from the grassy knoll area as well as from the Texas School Book Depository, disputing the lone assassin conclusion of the Warren Commission.

The evidence raises the possibility of a conspiracy in Kennedy's assassination, rejected by the Warren Commission. The commission found Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in killing the president and that only three shots were fired, all from the Book Depository.

The new acoustical evidence, two members of the House assassinations panel said Wednesday, shows "beyond a reasonable doubt" that four shots — from two directions — rang out in Dallas 15 years ago.

Rep. Harold Sawyer, R-Mich, said the acoustical experts, testifying before a private committee session Monday, "concluded that there were four shots, the third of which was fired from the grassy knoll."

The grassy knoll area borders the route followed by the Kennedy motorcade in 1963, and has long been the subject of unsubstantiated reports as the source of gunfire and the hiding place of a second assassin.

Rep. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., who confirmed Sawyer's disclosure, said the evidence raises serious questions about a second gunman. But he said the committee had not been able to conclude from other evidence that a second assassin was involved.

Despite the new acoustical study, Sawyer noted there is absolutely no other physical evidence supporting the four-shot theory.

Sawyer said the experts concluded there was a 95 percent chance that four shots were fired at the Kennedy motorcade Nov. 22, 1963.

Sawyer said he could not remember the names of the experts.

"I don't know of any reason not to accept it," Sawyer said about the new evidence. He said the disclosure "leaves me entirely up in the air" about Kennedy's assassin.

In Washington, a committee spokesman and officials in the office of Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, assassinations committee chairman, refused comment on the disclosures.

But a knowledgeable source said: "I don't think Mr. Sawyer would go on radio and lie."

The committee's work is supposed to be completed by Dec. 31, but Sawyer was uncertain what action the committee would take.

The new evidence came from a "refinement of the earlier analysis" of a tape recording, made during the assassination, of the sound coming from a motorcycle police officer's radio. The radio transmitter was left on for about 5½ minutes, including the period when the president was shot.

Experts used a technique which allowed them to refine sounds on the tape "down to a very narrow window," analyzing details such as building echoes, Sawyer said.

The work of another acoustic expert, James Barger, who testified before a public session of the committee Sept. 11, showed a 50-50 possibility that there were four shots aimed at Kennedy, one from the grassy knoll.

Barger studied the recent work of the two experts and agreed with their conclusion that four shots were fired, Sawyer said.

U.S. Attorney Shot In Hip

WASHINGTON (AP) — An assistant U.S. attorney who has been investigating a drug ring was listed is in good condition after being shot while he walked into the federal courthouse here, Justice Department officials say.

Police said Barry Leibowitz was wounded in his hip Wednesday when a man in a car opened fire with a small-caliber handgun as the prosecutor walked through a parking lot behind the courthouse.

Leibowitz, 31, was described by U.S. Attorney Earl J. Silbert as "alert and, all things considered, (he) is doing well."

Silbert also said he discussed the incident with Attorney General Griffin Bell and Deputy Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti, who "are particularly concerned about a shooting of a law enforcement officer engaged in his official duties in carrying out the law."

Leibowitz, 31, has worked in the U.S. attorney's office for six years and for the last two years he has concentrated on drug violations in the Washington area.

Silbert said city and federal officers are investigating the shooting.

Robbery Figure Set At $3 Million

NEW YORK (UPI) — Authorities now believe the seven bandits who staged a well-planned heist of a Wells Fargo armored car made off with up to $3 million in cash, putting the theft in the ranks of the largest cash robberies in U.S. history.

The robbery Tuesday was the second in New York City in nine days involving more than $1 million. On Dec. 11, a band of armed men stole up to $5 million in cash, making it the largest cash robbery in U.S. history.

They were attempting to put together composite sketches of the bandits provided by witnesses during questioning Wednesday.

Originally, police reported the bandits stole "in excess of $1 million," but on Wednesday, investigators confirmed that it was close to $3 million.

A spokesman for the armored car firm declined to confirm that the men stole up to $3 million, saying, "We're still saying it was in excess of $1 million."

The men were able to steal the cash packed in canvas bags Tuesday by surprising the truck's guards as they waited in line at the Food 'n Things Delicatessen — their regular lunch stop.

The planning of the robbery was evidenced in the way the three armed men produced enough handcuffs to shackle the two guards as well as 11 customers and employees of the shop.

After handcuffing the people in the shop, the bandits surprised another guard in the truck, then drove it to a location where the three bandits were joined by four others in transferring the sacks to a waiting car.

Police said they did not believe the Staten Island robbery was related to the the pre-dawn Dec. 11 raid on the Lufthansa cargo hangar.

Henley Wanted To Be Preacher, Says Mother

HOUSTON (UPI) — To the parents of the victims, Elmer Wayne Henley was a scurrilous, perverted killer. But to his mother, he was an innocent boy who had always wanted to be a preacher.

Henley was 14 years old when he became part of the sex-torture-murder ring led by Dean Corll, who Henley eventually shot and killed Aug. 8, 1973, when the bachelor electrician seemed ready to molest and kill Henley and two friends.

The bodies of 27 boys were found, primarily through Henley's leading authorities to three mass graves, and Henley was sentenced to 594 years in prison — a 99-year sentence for each of six counts.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday overturned the 22-year-old man's conviction and granted him a new trial on the grounds that pretrial publicity in San Antonio, where the trial had been moved from Houston, made an impartial jury impossible.

"They can't kill him, but they can do that for us," said one the parent of one victim after Henley, who reportedly received $200 for each boy he procured for Corll, was sentenced.

"I'm just so happy," another said. "Thank the Lord. Thank the people. Thank the state. Thank anybody around."

"I guess it's fun to watch them (the victims) squirm and scream and plead for their lives," a prosecutor said during closing arguments in the case." What kind of human being — a word I'm reluctant to use — takes that kind of pleasure in taking another little human being's life?"

But Mary Henley, mother of the junior high school dropout, contended her son was the victim of "a kangaroo court if ever there was one."

"There's no way to describe it," she said. "It wasn't fair."

Mrs. Henley also maintained her son was innocent, overlooking the confession given Pasadena police about his procuring young boys for Corll and then helping kill them.

She said he had been active in the Methodist church and had wanted to be a minister since he was 5 years old. She said her son also took Bible correspondence courses while he was jailed awaiting trial.

Henley's trial was filled with gruesome testimony about the drug and homosexual parties. The last such orgy came to an end when Henley awakened from a drug-induced sleep to find himself naked and strapped to one of Corll's torture boards.

Henley convinced Corll to untie him so that he could kill two other teen-agers Corll had strapped down. Then Henley shot and killed Corll, reported a third ring member — David Owen Brooks — to police.

In his confession given to police and read at his trial, Henley said:

"The ones (victims) that I can remember by name are Charles Cobble, who I killed and we buried in the boat stall. I shot Charles in the head with Dean's pistol. Then Marty Jones. Me and Dean choked him. We killed a boy by the name of Billy Lawrence. I don't remember how we killed him. But we buried him up at Dean's place on Sam Rayburn Lake."

By that afternoon police were digging up the first layer of bodies soaked with lime in an empty boat shed. In the next three days, the search went to a spot in the East Texas woods and to a beach on the Texas Gulf Coast.

Always, Henley, the skinny boy with long, scraggly hair would sit passively and watch the digging.

In the trial, defense attorney Will Gray argued Corll, 33, was the culprit who influenced Henley and Brooks. Summing his case up, Gray said of Corll, "The monster is dead," and he asked for mercy for Henley. At a later trial, Brooks was given a life sentence on one murder conviction.

In granting the new trial Wednesday, the Texas Criminal Court of Appeals said more than one half of the 124 jurors questioned had formed an opinion as to the appellant's guilt or innocence — raising at least a question of the fairness of keeping the trial in San Antonio.

Cuevas Survived By Fainting

HOUSTON (UPI) — News of the survival of Ignacio Cuevas after an ill-fated prison escape attempt engineered by Fred Gomez Carrasco was received with bitter hatred Aug. 3, 1974, by a man threatened with death for 11 days at the hand of Carrasco.

Cuevas, described by one hostage as a "robot" who would have done anything for Carrasco including killing all the hostages, was found after the bloody gunbattle between the escapees and Texas Rangers lying among a pile of dead bodies.

Ranger Capt. G.W. Burks, one of the first to inspect the inmates and hostages after the shootout, said it appeared Cuevas was dead. He was not moving and was covered with blood and lying near his dead confederates — Carrasco and Rudolpho Dominguez.

Burks said, however, it was discovered Cuevas had escaped death by passing out. "He just fainted flat."

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday overturned Cuevas' capital murder conviction and death sentence for his role in the escape. He likely will be tried again.

Cuevas' survival that hot summer night caused an emotional outburst from Ron Robinson, one of the hostages held for 11 days in the Huntsville prison library by Carrasco, Cuevas and Dominguez.

"The warden came back and told us, 'two of them are dead ... and that — Cuevas doesn't have a scratch on him,'" Robinson said.

"I said, 'Damn, damn, damn. Why should he be alive?' I released in those seconds the 11 days of hatred that had built up in me."

During the trial, another Ranger captain, J.F. "Pete" Rogers, testified: "The hostages were lying there in a pile. I moved to where the defendant (Cuevas) was. He was in a sitting position with his head lowered in his lap."

Department of Public Safety Officer Danny Williams added, "I thought he was dead until I took the helmet off and saw the veins moving in his neck."

A pistol found under Cuevas contained one live round and four shells. The shells fell into the wash of the water from high pressure hoses used to stun the inmates and their hostages during te first moments of the escape attempt.

"I caught two of the hulls," Williams said, "but two fell into a stream of bloody water rushing by his feet."

Other hostages described the 42-year-old Cuevas as "a robot — if Carrasco said, 'shoot the hostages,' he would have shot the hostages."

Cuevas, who spoke little English, according to hostages, was a Mexican national from Acapulco serving a 45-year sentence for murder at the time of the escape attempt. He was the only rebel inmate to survive the breakout, which ended an 11-day siege, the longest between prisoners holding hostages and prison officials in American penal history.

Cuevas subsequently was convicted of the capital murder of hostage Julia Standley even though the prosecution admitted he did not shoot her. He was also at one time accused of shooting the Rev. Joseph O'Brien, 47, Huntsville, in the back.

"The blood of Mrs. Standley is as much on his hands as it is Dominguez," prosecutor Bert Graham told a jury.

It took the panel 20 hours to agree that Cuevas' sentence should be death instead of life in prison, the other alternative.

Texas law makes an accomplice as liable for murder as the gunman, but it was not the prosecution's case which caused the Texas Court of Criminal appeals Wednesday to overturn the conviction. The majority in the 5-4 decision said State District Judge Miron A. Love erroneously failed to disqualify a juror who said he would sentence any convicted murderer to the death penalty.

Cuevas' attorney Will Gray was not available for comment Wednesday.

Following the sentencing in 1974, Gray told reporters, "He asked me to appeal and I will. I do not think he will ever sit in the electric chair."

sexual rape-torture murders unfolded in 1973.

The Pasadena high school dropout was arrested after telephoning Pasadena police and telling them he had shot and killed Dean A. Corll, head of the torture ring.

During a hunt that lasted several days, Henley led officers to 27 bodies buried in a boat shed in Houston, on a beach near Galveston and in the East Texas piney forests north of Houston.

Pasadena Police Sgt. David Mullican, taken by Henley to the boat shed where 17 were found, said Wednesday he can still remember the smell of the decomposing bodies.

"If I thought something could happen so that he (Henley) could go scot free, I would be bitter," he said. "But there is no chance for an acquittal. The case is too tight against him."

In their decision, the justices also expressed "deep concern" over Henley's contention he was denied a fair trial when the court refused to sequester the jury and overruled his objection to placing newsmen within the bar.

The Cuevas conviction, which evolved from one of the nation's longest attempted prison breakouts Aug. 3, 1974, was overturned because of the judge's refusal to grant a defense challenge to a prospective juror.

The high court returned the case to Walker County (Huntsville) for retrial, where District Attorney Mark Ward said their decision "was quite a shock.

"We'll have to read the opinion to see where we are. Most likely we will try the case again." he said.

Cuevas joined convict strongman Carrasco and Rudulpho Dominquez as they seized the top floor of a prison unit and took a number of hostages July 24, 1974.

In tense bargaining with prison officials, the trio threatened to murder the hostages. Authorities refused to budge, and the convicts tried to escape by hiding behind a movable shield and hostages.

The attempt ended in a hail of gunfire that killed Carrasco, Dominquez and two hostages.

Cuevas, the lone survivor of the trio, was tried in Houston on a change of venue from Huntsville.

Gray said the disqualification of the juror was the key point of the Cuevas appeal.

Even State District Judge Preston Dial of San Antonio, who the appellate court said erred in not hearing the change of venue motion for Henley, has complimented Gray's work.

"I've never seen a case where the defense lawyer has preserved possible error as well as in this case," Dial said at the time. "The record will allow the appellate court a good look."

Gray agrees.

"We couldn't have done better with possible appeals if we had written the script ourselves," he said Wednesday.

Producers May Face Prosecution

HOUSTON (AP) — Militant farmers trying to establish a direct sale program for their wheat may face federal prosecution because of their storage methods, a San Angelo newspaper reported.

Farmers from the American Agriculture Movement hauled the wheat to a Port of Houston elevator last month in an effort to prove farmers do not need a "middleman" salesman.

But according to a copyright story in the San Angelo Standard-Times, much of the 280,000 bushels in storage is being held as collateral for Agricultural Stabilization Conservation Service loans.

Farmers agree to notify county ASCS representatives if they move the grain, but many failed to do so before taking the grain to Houston last month, the newspaper said.

The Port of Houston elevator has accepted the grain into a central account - that of Parity Inc.-a direct-sale company of farmers still in the incorporation process.

Since the grain is credited to one account, individual farmers have not been given the receipts they need to prove they still own the grain they borrowed against.

Unless the snafu is corrected, farmers holding loans could face federal prosecution for illegal transfer or sale of grain.

"It appears that some of the farmers need replacement receipts for the wheat delivered in Houston earlier this week to turn in to their county ASCS officers," said Kermit Decker of the ASCS office in College Station. He said most of the wheat in question is from Colorado and Oklahoma.

Clinics Plan Receives Blow

AUSTIN (AP) — Possible establishment of federally supported rural health clinics received a blow Wednesday from Attorney General John Hill.

In a legal opinion, Hill ruled that Texas nurses cannot give patients medication unless a physician has prescribed treatment for an individual patient.

Claire Jordan, president of the Texas Nurses Association, said Hill's legal opinion would prevent establishment of rural health clinics in the state. She also said the opinion means that "nurses who give immunization shots to school children and who treat veneral disease patients in VD clinics are doing so illegally."

In another opinion, Hill said midwifes may perform any service normally connected with childbirth. Texas doctors had opposed allowing midwives to perform certain functions during and after delivery of a baby.

PUBLIC NOTICE

FACT #1 Everyting in our inventory on Jan. 1 is taxable.
We had much rather cut 2 to 3 hundred dollars off the price than to pay the same amount in tax dollars.

FACT #2 After Jan. 1 the taxes paid on unsold cars must be considered expense.

FACT #3 Wide car buyers know this
They take advantage of it and they tell their friends about it too!

Robber Grabs Woman's Purse

A Lubbock woman, waiting in her van Wednesday night for her daughter to come out of a grocery store in the 600-block of Idalou Road, was confronted by a man who threatened to kill her if she did not hand over her purse.

Inez Ramirez, 37, of 3315 E. 13th St., said she resisted the 8:30 p.m. holdup, but the bandit grabbed her purse, containing $163 cash, credit cards and a check book, and ran northeast on foot.

Reports show the suspect, a short, thin black man about 30 years old, wearing a brown coat, jumped in a blue and white Buick and drove south on Guava Avenue.

Mrs. Ramirez was not hurt in the incident, according to police.

Several persons returned to their cars at Lubbock Country Club Wednesday night to find they had become victims of burglars.

However, some of the property stolen from the vehicles was recovered when police arrested five boys who are suspects in the crimes.

Alan Bruce Drake of 4512-B 65th St. said he returned to his 1979 Cadillac to find $500 in property, including cash, checks, purse and tapes, stolen.

Items totaling about $240 were taken from Robert D. Wagner's car while he was in the club. Wagner, of 5430 50th St., Apt. 19, said the break-in occurred between 7:10 p.m. and 9:15 p.m. Wednesday, about the same time the other two burglaries occurred.

Milton Harris of 2926 E. Colgate St. said he lost a $40 antenna to burglars while he was in the club.

About $1,150 in stereo equipment was taken by burglars when they hit Greg Dale Hulett's home at 3105 Ave. V between 8:50 a.m. and 6:50 p.m. Wednesday.

Alice Aguirre of 2626 E. Auburn St. reported a $500 set of wedding rings stolen from her house sometime in the past two weeks. She named a suspect.

A stereo, television set and clothing, valued at $1,210, was the loss reported by James Aaron, who said his house at 2013 10th St. was broken into Wednesday.

Police were looking for whoever burglarized Alice C. Escobedo's 208 N. Ave. R residence between 7:35 p.m. and midnight Wednesday and stole $575 in property, including a television set and Christmas presents.

A woman visiting in Lubbock told police Wednesday that a young black man who came to the door of the eastside home where she is staying raped her.

The 27-year-old woman said the suspect, between 14 and 17 years of age, rang the doorbell of the residence and when she answered the door told her he was selling fruit cakes. The woman said she told the youth she wasn't interested in making a purchase and he left.

He returned about five minutes later, however, and when the victim answered the door the second time, she said, the youth produced what appeared to be a gun, directed her to admit him to the house, where he forced her into a bedroom and raped her.

After the attack, she said, he demanded the victim's money. She said she gave him $8 and he then started looking through a closet. At that point, the woman said, she grabbed a robe and ran to a neighbor's house, where she called police. She said she saw the suspect leave the residence and run northeast.

She said the youth was wearing a white T-shirt, jeans and possibly tennis shoes. He was about 5-feet-9, she said, and of medium build.

Police late Wednesday were questioning a 16-year-old youth in connection with the incident and also were searching for a 19-year-old suspect in the rape.

In other activity Wednesday, Dora Hernandez said burglars pried the front door of her 1913 Baylor St. residence between 7:40 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. Wednesday and made off with more than $1,590 worth of property, including $125 cash, a television, stereo equipment, jewelry and clothing.

Mae Christian said that she had just driven into the driveway of her 1611 Ave. O residence about 6:20 a.m. Wednesday and was getting out of the car when a black man grabbed the wallet that she was holding. She said the wallet contained $320 cash.

Stephanie Briseno of 2722 E. Seventh St. said burglars kicked open the door of her home, causing $50 damage to the entryway, and ransacked her house Wednesday morning. Missing, she said, was a $300 television, $220 worth of stereo equipment and a $180 car radio.

John H. Songer told police that while his car was parked on the north lot of the South Plains Mall late Tuesday burglars unlocked the driver side door and took $160 worth of tools, a $150 camera and $108 worth of clothing.

Tony Gonzales, assistant manager of the Pizza Inn at 1220 50th St., said he arrived at that business at 8:45 a.m. Wednesday to discover the back door open and an undetermined amount of cash missing from the restaurant's floor safe. He told police the business had been locked after cleaning up about 1 a.m. Wednesday and there was no sign of forced entry to either the building or the safe.

FTC Issues Franchise Rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — With franchised shops bursting forth like spring blooms, the Federal Trade Commission has moved to help investors determine whether they're being offered tulips or poison ivy.

The commission issued a regulation Wednesday that will require companies to make detailed information available to persons considering buying franchises.

It "will provide would-be investors with the factual information they need to make an informed investment decision," said Albert Kramer, head of the agency's Bureau of Consumer Protection.

A franchised business is one in which a parent company sells the right to do business under its name in a certain area. Many provide training and assistance to the local business and sell it necessary supplies.

The buyer gets the benefit of the national name and advertising of the parent firm as well as the management assistance and other help it gives him.

After the new rule takes effect July 21, companies offering franchises will have to give prospective buyers a disclosure statement at least 10 days before a contract is signed or any money changes hands.

The statement must outline the business experience of the company and tell something about its key management personnel, such as whether they have ever been sued or gone bankrupt.

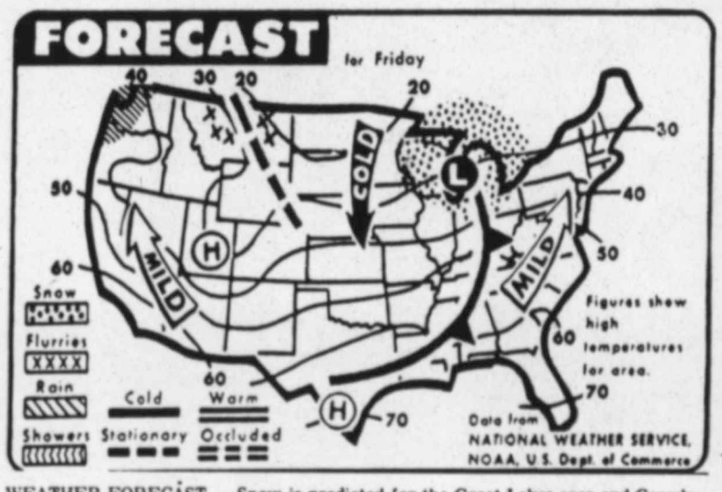

It also must detail the costs of the franchise — along with termination, cancellation and renewal provisions — and disclose any restrictions on how the people buying the franchises can operate their businesses.

In addition, the rule forbids the company from making claims about potential sales or profits unless the these can be substantiated in a second detailed statement.

The rule will have the force of law and will subject violators to fines of up to $10,000 per violation.

A commission lawyer said the franchising industry has undergone a tremendous growth in the last 15 to 20 years to the point that one of every three retail sales in the United States is now made by a business holding a franchise. In 1976, total retail sales through franchises were an estimated $248 billion.

FTC lawyer John M. Tifford declined to pinpoint any particular type of franchise operation as having more problems than others. He said the primary problem has been lack of reliable information for prospectve franchise buyers and no way to verify what they are told by the franchisor or his salesman.

Bell Presents Calling Hints

If you plan Christmas greetings by phone, Southwestern Bell suggests you plan ahead and save time and money.

The holiday is traditionally the heaviest calling day of the year across Texas and the nation.

"We're expecting more than 1.6 million long distance calls to be placed in Texas this year, and a record 17 million interstate calls are expected nationwide," according to Bob Dunbar, division manager for Southwestern Bell in Lubbock.

"To avoid delays, the best time to call on Christmas Day is in the early afternoon, between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m.," he said.

Dunbar said telephone customers also will find that their calls will go through much faster if they dial them direct, using One-Plus during these hours. One-Plus rates, no matter what the hour, are lower than operator-assisted calls, he added.

Customers can avoid the Christmas calling rush and save extra money by placing their holiday calls on Sunday, December 24, before 5 p.m. or after 11 p.m., when weekend discounts are in effect. Weekend rates are even lower than holiday rates, Dunbar said.

Group Serves Annual Dinner

Heading the hostess group was Mrs. Sarah Rosen, assisted by Annette Joachim, Danny Joachim and Bobbie Freid.

Music was provided by Mrs. Raymond Marshall and Mrs. Coleman Cowan.

CARTER PRAISED

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has received high marks for his record on environmental issues from a group of 33 leading conservationists. "President Carter's record stands in stark contrast to the standard set by his predecessor," said a statement signed by leaders of nearly all major U.S. conservation groups.

Employees Honored For Tech Service

Eight Texas Tech University and School of Medicine employees were honored Tuesday for outstanding service.

President Cecil Mackey presented awards to Toby Avila, Rita Chrane and Richard Fischenich of the Medical School and Xantippe Stafford, Meredith J. Walker, Mattie Jo Stroud and Mary Crittendon of the University staff.

Dr. Reagan H. Gibbs, director of the Student Health Service, received the first Vice President's Award for outstanding service.

Avila, audio-visual technician at the El Paso Regional Academic Health Center, was commended for "exemplary friendly and cooperative efforts in accomplishing needed tasks" and for "going beyond the level of his job requirements to be of help to faculty and staff alike." A Tech employee since May 1977, he studied advertising art and photography at Crozier Technical School in Dallas and art at Southern Methodist University.

Educational program assistant in the Office of Continuing Medical Education, Mrs. Chrane was cited for dedication evidenced by hard work, organization and planning of continuing education programs, willing cooperation and maintenance of a high level of professionalism. A medical school employee since 1975, she holds bachelor and master of business administration degrees from West Texas State University.

Fischenich, chief of Biomedical Electronics, was cited for his efforts to reduce maintenance costs, development of systems and procedures and dedication to his profession. He has continued his education, Dr. Mackey noted, through coursework in engineering and business administration, and through manufacturers' technical training programs.

Dr. Gibbs, director of Student Health Services, joined Texas Tech in 1974. A graduate of The University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston, he is certified by the American Academy of Pediatrics. He was commended for his implementation of high standards of performance, quality of communications with the student community and his overall concern with and interest in university students.

Mrs. Stafford, a secretary in the Department of Mass Communications, was originally employed in 1967 as administrative assistant in the School of Business Administration. Since 1971 she has worked with Mass Communications during its most dynamic growth period, Dr. Mackey pointed out, as the department has grown from fewer than 200 majors to almost 1,000. Her responsibilities include coordination of all clerical and secretarial services.

Walker has been a maintenance mechanic in Residence Hall Operations since 1957. President Mackey commented that during his long tenure Walker has made many friends among the students and has impressed other staff with his knowledge and ability. "The residents make many requests, from removing lost contact lenses from the drain to replacing overhead lights. These daily problems are taken care of by the cheerful and dependable Mr. Walker," Mackey said.

Serving as Centrex supervisor since 1974, Mrs. Stroud oversees all three shifts of telephone operators, who staff the Centrex system 24 hours a day. "This dedicated service has won for Mrs. Stroud a special place in the hearts of her employees and the University community," the Tech president said.

Mrs. Crittendon, programmer project leader in Tech's Information Systems, joined the University in '73. One of her primary responsibilities is the programming and maintenance of the payroll system. Fellow workers commended her willingness to work 10 hours per day and on weekends when necessary and always without complaint. "She works in a small office at the very end of the hall but touches every person employed at Tech through his or her salary checks," Dr. Mackey noted.

Hospital Plans Body Scanner

Earlier this year Methodist Hospital installed the first computerized tomagraphic (CT) scanner in the city.

The CT scanner, which was introduced in 1972, provides a cross-sectional view of the human body using X-rays, thus eliminating the need for much exploratory surgery.

Operation of the body scanner begins with the patient being placed on a bed and inserted into the machine. A complete scan of the body is accomplished by one rotation of the X-ray tube around the patient.

Improvements in the scanner since the original 1972-model have reduced the rotation time for the X-ray tube to a maximum of no more than 18 seconds, a hospital spokesman says.

Radiation exposure is "modest compared to the information obtained," Robertson says.

Health Sciences Center Hospital expects the scanner in the future to perform approximately eight to 12 testings per eight-hour shift.

Companies Change Names

By United Press International

When American companies take their products into Oriental countries, they change the name into the local language.

Often, rather than a literal translation, they ask that the name be changed into the characters that, when pronounced, sound just like they do back home in America.

For example, when Esso decided briefly to change its name to Enco a few years ago, it ran into a problem in Japan. The Japanese characters that produce the phonetic sounds "Enco" mean "stalled car" in Japanese.

Repetition

THERE'S BEEN SOME idle talk among a few of the local high school basketball coaches lately. I know that's nothing new. But in this case the subject isn't zone defenses or long bus rides. So what has tongues flapping, you, you ask? The upcoming ABC Caprock basketball tournament, set to start next week in the Coliseum.

And not all that chatter has been of the complimentary kind either, I might add. Mostly, the opposite.

You betcha, the tournament does have a good purpose and group behind it. A little charity never hurt anyone. And, yeah, it's always nice to play in a tournament during the Christmas holidays. But those aren't the main reasons teams play basketball. At this time of year—with less than a month until the opening of the district action—coaches want their clubs to get a little heavy duty competition under their belts. At the Caprock tournament, everyone knows, competition is harder to find there than a a full house.

There's a very good reason, too, behind the statement. Of the eight teams entered in the Large School Division, five of them are from Lubbock—Dunbar, Coronado, Estacado, Lubbock High and Monterey. The three others are Wichita Falls, a legitimate AAAA school, and Dimmitt and Morton, a pair of basketball powers but still only AA teams. (Incidently, the only change between this year's tournament and the one a year ago is Wichita Falls replaces Iowa Park. Other than that, it's the same.)

If given a choice—which the coaches don't—the mentors contacted all agreed they would rather play somewhere else during the Christmas break, charity or not. But the teams are expected to be in the Coliseum next week, so they are.

"You can't ask for a better cause," said Estacado coach J.J. Wood. "But as far as the competition goes, there really isn't any there for us. No matter what happens, we'll end up playing the other Lubbock schools."

When the tournament was mentioned around one local coach, he said, he'd be glad to talk abou it—off the record. "I stay in enough trouble," he quiped.

The coaches do have a right to squeal, though. And rather loudly if they have a mind to.

LET'S TAKE A look at this year's pairings. In the first round, Dunbar is matched with Lubbock High. For those not in the know, the two have already played twice this year with Dunbar winning both. The outcome of third game should be no different than the previous two. Unless, Dunbar is forced to use seeing-eye dogs.

And, also, if Monterey beats Morton in the first round and Estacado does the same to Wichita Falls, the two locals (Monterey and Estacado) will meet in the second round. And there's a very strong possibility of that happening, too. The Plainsmen and the Matadors played last Tuesday night with MHS taking an eight-point victory.)

But this isn't the only time this has occured. It's been going on for some time. Last year, alone, Coronado did not play a team other than a local one at the Caprock tournament, opening with Estacado, meeting Lubbock in the second round and finally Monterey for consolation. That meant by the end fo the year the Ponies had played three teams a total of eight times. Not a coaches dream schelude, folks.

For another quick example, if the forces of nature and basketball had worked its way (which in this case we were lucky they didn't), Estacado and Dunbar could have easily played in the Caprock finals last yeear If that had happened, the two would have met each other four times overall, counting two district games and a playoff.

BASKETBALL COACHES AREN'T the only ones suffering because of this Lubbock-styled tournament, the fans aren't doing much better themselves. Tell me, who wants to go see a couple of teams play for a third time in less than a month? I don't. Not that I'm some great sage, but I feel most fans feel about the same way.

Everyone that lays down a couple of bucks for a ticket should be given an opportunity to see quality basketball games, not just basketball. Good teams plus good basketball games equals good crowds. That translates into some pretty hefty bottom-line figures for the club. It doesn't take a mathematician to figure that one out.

This isn't to say that games betwen locals schools can't be exciting. But they are even more so when played during district competition when something more important than a trophy is on the line.

SO WHAT CAN be done? That's a very simple question to answer.

For starters, let only two Lubbock schools play in the tournament. The other three can go to Tibet or Andrews, if they want to. This could be a rotated type

Cyclone Defenders Laud A&M Runner

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — "I don't know if he's the best I ever played against, because I've played against Sims, but he's one of the best I've ever played against," said defensive end Rick White of Iowa State.

The Cyclone defender was talking about Curtis Dickey, a junior speedster who destroyed Iowa State with 276 yards on 34 carries Wednesday night as he led Texas A&M to a 28-12 victory in the Hall of Fame Bowl game.

White, who had 12 tackles and was named the top defensive player in the game, compared the speedy A&M runningback with this year's Heisman Trophy winner, Billy Sims of Oklahoma.

Sims gained slightly more than 200 yards against Iowa State earlier this year, but sat out much of the final quarter.

Dickey, a 205-pounder who won the NCAA indoor 60-yard dash last March and the Southwest Conference 100-meter dash last spring, applied the killing blow to the Cyclones when he scored on a 19-yard run early in the final quarter to give the Aggies a 21-12 advantage.

"We didn't plan to give the ball to Dickey any more than usual," said A&M coach Tom Wilson. "He just had a hot hand, so we tried to get him the ball as much as possible. He's the best I've ever seen."

Dickey had 184 yards in the first half and recorded a half dozen runs of 12 yards or more, including a 54-yard scamper in the first quarter that failed to produce points.

A&M's other scoring came on a 1-yard run by David Brothers, the lead blocker during most of Dickey's 34 carries in the game; on Mike Mosley's 4-yard pass to Gerald Carter; and on a 5-yard run by Adger Armstrong.

Dickey's outstanding performance overshadowed a brilliant effort by Iowa State senior Dexter Green, who scored both Cyclone touchdowns and rushed for 148 yards on 21 carries.

Green scored on a 28-yard run on a fourth-and-two situation and on a 5-yard pass from Walter Grant, who kept the crowd buzzing throughout the game with long passes, most of which were unsuccessful.

With both teams finishing their season with 8-4 records, Iowa State's downfall came in its kicking game.

The Cyclones missed an extra point because of a bad snap, fumbled away a punt at their 5 and also interfered with a fair catch, setting in motion one of A&M's scoring drives.

Dickey said Iowa State was "tough and quick, but my offensive line opened some big holes. I got a little tired out there toward the end, but I didn't mind carrying the ball so much."

"I've never seen him run as hard as he did tonight," said Mosley, a sophomore. "He lowered his head and got some extra yards when we had to have them."

Dickey, one of the top rushers in the Southwest Conference, was playing healthy after being injured most of the last half of the SWC season.

McKinneyPaces Kings To Win Over Phoenix

By The Associated Press

A year ago, Billy McKinney was sitting in the stands at Chicago Bulls games.

Wednesday night, he started his second straight National Basketball Association game and scored 23 points to pace the Kansas City Kings to a 114-95 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics.

A sixth-round draft choice of the Phoenix Suns, McKinney was cut during preseason last year. He ended up as a salesman in Chicago for a printing company which had season tickets to the Bulls games.

Kansas City signed him as a free agent this season and he got his chance to start when Phil Ford was injured. He scored 23 points last Saturday against New Orleans and duplicated that point total Wednesday while handing out nine assists.

"I just go in there and do what I'm asked," McKinney said. "I don't have to impress anybody. I practice with these guys every day."

"We're not going to push Phil (Ford) coming back," said Kansas City Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons. "Billy's playing well. We can win with either one of them. Of course, we're at our best when we have both of them."

The Midwest Division leading Kings broke open a close game in the third quarter, outscoring the injury-riddled SuperSonics 34-15 and leading by as many as 32 points.

"The injuries hurt us, but that's no excuse for the way we played tonight," Sonics Coach Len Wilkens said. "I don't like the way we lost. After we got down by 12 points in the third quarter, we were mentally out of the game."

Warriors 85, 76ers 81

Four free throws in the final minute by forward Sonny Parker gave Golden State its victory, although the Warriors went scoreless for a seven-minute span in the first half and scored only 10 points in the second period.

Center Robert Parish scored 14 of his 20 points in the third period and Parker finished with 18. Doug Collins led Philadelphia with 26 points.

Hawks 121, Knicks 112

Atlanta jumped out to a 14-2 lead and continued its onslaught in downing New York. The Hawks were paced by John Drew, who scored a season-high 44 points, snapping Atlanta's two-game losing streak and the Knicks' three-game winning string.

Bullets 137, Suns 129

Forward Bobby Dandridge pumped in 36 points, Elvin Hayes added 29 and Kevin Grevey 27 as Washington held off a third-quarter rally by Phoenix to defeat the Suns. High for Phoenix was Paul Westphal with 36 points.

"I thought Dandridge played a great game," said Washington Coach Dick Motta. "I've been in the league 10 years and I've never seen a better small forward. He's great from A to Z."

Nuggets 121, Jazz 112

George McGinnis' season-high 39 points and David Thompson's 32 paced Denver over New Orleans. The Nuggets never trailed in the final quarter, but the Jazz moved to within two points several times.

Rockets 108, Nets 105

Mike Newlin, who didn't enter the game until midway through the third period, scored 16 points — including 12 from the free throw line — as Houston held off New Jersey in the final period. The Rockets scored 34 points in the fourth quarter, 22 coming on foul shots.

The Nets were led by John Williamson's 32 points. Bernard King, who was arrested Monday on charges of cocaine possession, driving while intoxicated and driving without a license, received a one-minute standng ovation at the start of the game and finished with 29 points.

Celtics 121, Pacers 105

Chris Ford scored 32 points and Marvin Barnes added 22 — season highs for both — as Boston crushed Indiana. Player-coach Dave Cowens added 21 points and JoJo White 19 to hand the Pacers their fifth consecutive defeat. High for Indiana was James Edwards with 20 points.

ALL IN A NIGHT'S WORK — It was just another typical night in the National Basketball League Wednesday night as players passed, dribbed and played defense. Terp Sophomore Hits 44 Points As Maryland Upsets NC-State

By The Associated Press

Ernie Graham missed his first two shots — after that he could hardly miss at all.

Maryland's superior sophomore more than made up for a slow start by scoring a school-record 44 points that helped the Terps upset fourth-ranked North Carolina State 124-110 Wednesday night.

"After I missed those early shots," said Graham, "I felt like I owed myself some baskets."

Graham's fierce determination not only helped knock out the Terps' strong Atlantic Coast Conference colleagues, but helped him erase the long-standing school record of 43 points by Al Bunge in 1960.

Graham scored 14 of his points in the first half, then really came on strong in the second with 30. He hit on 18 of 26 shots from the floor, and his 18 field goals broke another school record — the 16 by Gene Shue in 1953.

Graham had played only 25 minutes when he had accumulated 15 field goals and when Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell heard that he was close to Shue's record, he sent him back into the game.

"I told him to get a good shot, not to force it," Driesell said. "He went one-on-one right away, and got it."

Maryland's onesided victory didn't surprise North Carolina State Coach Norm Sloan.

"Maryland really got it rolling and they seemed to pick up the momentum as they went along," said Sloan. "We haven't played too well the last couple of weeks. I've told our kids that, but they haven't listened. Maybe now they will."

In other action involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 13 Marquette defeated Western Michigan 76-60 and No. 14 Georgetown whipped Fresno State 49-42 in the opening round of the Wolf Pack Classic in Reno, Nevada. Nevada-Reno won the other Wolf Pack opener with a 116-84 decision over Eastern Kentucky.

Odell Ball and Bernard Toone sparked a second-half rally that helped Marquette beat Western Michigan. Ball and Toone each scored six points in a 17-4 stretch in the first seven minutes of the second half to put the game away.

"I give them a lot of credit," said Marquette Coach Hank Raymonds. "They're the first team to score 60 points on us this year. Our rebounding was good and that was the decided advantage.

"We weren't quite patient enough out there, but we stuck to our game and didn't try anything fancy. Western really played well. They hustled and never gave up."

Houston Roasts Pan Am, Hits Road

By The Associated Press

The Cougars next contests are Saturday and Monday against Alaska at wintry Anchorage.

Meanwhile, Baylor was the only other Southwest Conference team pounding the boards Wednesday as Vinnie Johnson poured in 30 points to lead the Bears past Texas Wesleyan 87-81.

Baylor Coach Jim Haller announced before the game that freshman Jimmy Carter, a 6-8 post man, has been suspended indefinitely.

Texas Wesleyan stayed close through most of the game but six straight points by Johnson midway through the second half put Baylor ahead to stay. The Bears are now 5-3 on the season.

Mike Ray topped Wesleyan's scoring with 23 points.

Spurs Nail Bulls, Look To Rematch

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — San Antonio Spurs Coach Doug Moe has only one regret about his team's masterful 131-102 demolition of the Chicago Bulls — it doesn't count for anything in Friday night's rematch in Chicago, where the Spurs have never won.

George Gervin pumped in 29 points and James Silas hit 14 in a blistering 40-point third quarter Wednesday night as the streaking Spurs pounded Chicago for their fifth consecutive National Basketball Association victory.

"If you play that well, you're pretty tough to beat," said Moe. "That third quater was a pretty good display of basketball, probably as good as any team can play in one stretch. I just can't imagine anyone playing better than we played in the third quarter.

"Unfortunately, it only counts for one game and it doesn't have anything to do with Friday's game," he added. "You don't have to be a genius to know that game will be different up there."

The Central Division-leading Spurs have lost all four of their trips to Chicago in San Antonio's two NBA seasons.

San Antonio shot a smoking 69 percent in the third period and held leads of as many as 34 points in that quarter. The Spurs outscored Chicago 40-22 in the period and led 99-69 heading into the fourth quarter.

"I think we lost a little pride when we got so far behind," said Chicago Coach Larry Costello, whose team had six times held opponents under 100 points in winning eight of its previous 10 games. "The players had been playing good defense lately, but tonight it looked like we had our feet tied to the floor.

"The defense went out the window. In fact, we didn't have any defense," he added.

"They drove around us, through us and by us," guard John Mengelt said of the blistering Spurs.

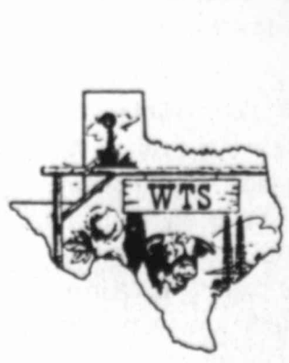

Gervin, the NBA's leading scorer, had 23 of his points in the first half and didn't play in the final period. Larry Kenon added 22 points and 14 rebounds and Billy Paultz hit all nine of his shots to finish with 20 points. Silas had 18.

When Garfinkel Talks, Cage Bosses Listen

By FRED ROTHENBERG

If for no other reason, Howie Garfinkel is special because he can quietly tell Bobby Knight where to go and the fiery Indiana coach will listen.

Knight listens because he considers Garfinkel the most important man in college basketball recruiting, and there are many other people in the game who agree.

Garfinkel is not a coach, nor he is a member of any scouting staff. What he is is a basketball addict who invented the numerical rating system for high school players. He has a keen eye for their talent and potential and a sixth sense about their desire and attitude.

Garfinkel, 49, provides information on hundreds of high school seniors in his High School Basketball Illustrated (HSBI) Report, which is bought by colleges across the country. He also is co-director of the Five Star Basketball Camp, where top high school players gather for instruction, competition and to be seen by college coaches.

Third In A Series

"If I were recruiting a player in the East, Howard's opinion would weigh heavily on my thinking," said Knight, who guided Indiana to the national title in 1976. "If Howard said the kid couldn't play for me I wouldn't go after him."

Knight is known as a high-strung motivator, an approach which doesn't work on every psyche. "Howard is a great evaluator of talent, but I'm not sure Christ could judge attitude," Knight said. "But if he said the kid was sensitive, I would accept his advice. He's not infallible, but the guy's the best at what he does."

There are other basketball reports — Bill Croneauer puts one out in St. Petersburg, Fla., and Dave Bones does one from Toledo, Ohio — but Knight says what sets Garfinkel apart from the rest is his concern for the player he rates and the coach who buys his service.

"He doesn't just have an interest in the outstanding athlete, the superstar," Knight said. "He does all he can to help the kid who can't play at the major schools."

Garfinkel, a chain smoker and chain talker, says the focus of his efforts has shifted from the reports to his camp. He used to put out a more detailed report, listing the player's position, size, school, coach, grade point, SAT scores and race — plus long descriptions of the player's ability, ending with Garfinkel's assessment of his prospective level of college ball.

His ratings go from 1 (small college) to 5 (big-time), with pluses and minuses providing 15 possible levels. He once said Adrian Dantley was an 8.

Four years ago, he gave a high school player in New Jersey a 5 and was mocked by his peers. "The kid had no speed, no quickness and was turned down by many of the big-time schools that saw him. All he had was the best basketball mind since Bill Bradley, and I said so."

The player is Jim Spanarkel of Duke.

Today, for $200, subscribers get shorter published reports and phone information on players the schools are specifically interested in or tips from Garfinkel on players the schools should be interested in.

"I'm like a guidance counselor," Garfinkel said. "I want to be able to pinpoint players to teams. Everyone knows the 5s and the 1s, it's the 2s, 3s and 4s that take the ability."

It's these middle-ranked players who receive the most-needed attention from being rated by Garfinkel. And since scholarships have been reduced to 15 for any 4-year period, coaches can't afford many mistakes and rely heavily on Garfinkel's evaluation of the middle-range players.

Sacred Heart University is a small school in Connecticut, which has no chance at the 5s. "So I'll tell them about a Mike Macky from Midwood High School in Brooklyn. Fast, 5-10 guard. Excellent floor leader. Communicates. Passes well with either hand. Fair shooter. His grades call for a Division II school, so I'll call my subscribers who can accept him.

"In my mind, that's a service. I'm saving everybody involved a lot of time. I wanna help the kid. I wanna help the school. You won't find Mike Macky's name on any other list in the country."

Along with his helper, Tom Konchalski, Garfinkel is a high school gym fixture, evaluating talent, talking to the coaches and players. "If a kid tells me he wants to stay in the East, I won't call Washington State. If he tells me he wants to study forestry, I'm not gonna call St. John's. A lot of this is my judgment."

But what if he under-rates a kid? Isn't he hurting his chances for a scholarship?

"The only kid I can ever hurt is the one that has one scholarship offer and I tell that school to stay away, and I'd never do that. There's a school for every kid, provided the coach and kid are on the ball, provided he answers letters and behaves himself.

"If a kid has a shaky attitude, I have an obligation to tell my subscribers the truth. I have to protect the schools that buy my reports from successfully recruiting players who have no chance of lasting there.

"My track record speaks for itself. I like to bat .800, and I do. Otherwise, the coaches wouldn't call me. I'm not God; I'm good."

But that influence does not sit well with some coaches — Dave Gavitt, for example. "I'm opposed to any foreign body being involved in the recruiting process," said the 1980 Olympic coach, who will be retiring as Providence's coach after this season. "We don't take anybody's reports."

Some suggest that Garfinkel might influence a player to go to a school that uses his reports over one that doesn't.

"I'd like to do it, but I don't," he said. "I certainly root for that kid inwardly to go to one of my schools. But when most kids in the New York area get down to five or six schools, 90 percent of them are HSBI subscribers."

He says he never offers advice to players, but will volunteer information when asked. Several years ago, Adrian Dantley asked.

"With his coach's consent (Morgan Wootten of DeMatha), I talked to him. He mentioned four or five schools, and I gave him the strengths and weaknesses of each. He selected Notre Dame, which was the only one of his choices that didn't buy my report at the time."

Garfinkel says the biggest blunder he ever made was with Heyward Dotson, who was a great guard for Columbia's super teams a decade ago. "He was a mechanical center with his back to the basket who had nothing," Garfinkel remembered. "I didn't see a backcourtman. I blew it."

More typical of his accuracy is Bobby Willis, a guard for James Monroe in the Bronx with no following. Garfinkel saw him play in a scrimmage and loved him. He also loved his attitude and intellect.

"The report wasn't coming out for a couple of weeks, so whenever I talked to my good scholastic schols, I talked up Willis. I said he was a 5, 'the greatest sleeper since Rip van Winkle.' Within two weeks he had 25 inquiries, and his career was launched. He became heavily recruited, eventually signed with Penn and now is one of the best guards in the East."

Garfinkel, also on the selection committee of the McDonald's All-American team, works out of a small apartment in New York City. The motif is early basketball, with file cabinets and a desk as the living room's centerpiece. On top of the desk are stacks of unopened mail, camp cards, ashtrays, coffee cups and a very busy telephone.

A lot of the calls he receives are from high school kids who want to go to his summer camps, which have two sites — Honesdale, Pa. and Pittsburgh — and are co-directed by Garfinkel's partner, Will Klein. The camps, which have been sold out for the last eight years, have a total of five sessions this summer.

The instructors who teach and lecture and officiate games are mostly high school coaches, except for the few college or pro coaches who have been with the camp for many years. Hubie Brown, for example, who now coaches the Atlanta Hawks, was at Five Star's first session in 1965, and has been there ever since.

The NCAA forbids college coaches from contacting players at camps like Garfinkel's, so the charge has been made that the college coaches who are on the staff have a recruiting edge.

"I trust my coaches, and they're not getting an edge," said Garfinkel. "The No.1 rule which we stress at every player orientation session is that they can't talk (recruiting) to any college coach. And my staff and the visiting coaches are told that recruiting is verboten."

When the remark was relayed to Garfinkel, his face lit up.

"It means a lot to me that people notice we're doing things right," said the single most important man in college recruiting. "I really don't want that power. Who do you think I am? Walter Winchell?"

Fiesta Crowd Disappoints Porker Coach

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Lou Holtz, University of Arkansas football coach, says he's naturally disappointed that only about 3,500 Razorback fans will be on hand for Arkansas's Fiesta Bowl meeting against UCLA on Christmas Day.

But Holtz told a news conference in surburban Scottsdale on Wednesday that he doesn't want to judge anybody.

"You know, any time you go into an area, you like to bring a lot of fans with you," he said. "But on Christmas Day, everybody has to make that decision for themselves.

"I do know there is a tremendous amount of interest in Arkansas over this game."

But Arkansas people are very religious and they are very family oriented, he pointed out. "It is just difficult to have a good Christmas on the road."

He said a lot of Arkansas fans apparently thought it would be easier to remain at home for the holidays and watch the game on television. Kickoff is set for Monday at 1:30 p.m. MST at Sun Devil Stadium in neighboring Tempe.

"You know, the band playing and the fans calling the Hogs really does a great thing to you," said Holtz. "We're just going to have play like we are in a vacuum and generate the momentum ourselves if we are going to have any because we can't count on the fans."

Meanwhile, Holtz said his Razorbacks aren't as well prepared as they should be for the game against UCLA.

"We just haven't be able to prepare the way I would like," said Holtz.

He noted that final examinations, along with poor weather conditions the past few weeks, have hampered practices. In addition, he said the coaching staff has been scattered around the country on recruiting trips.

"We just haven't had a good practice session since the end of the season," said Holtz, whose Razorbacks have a 9-2 record.

To make matters worse, Holtz says preparing for UCLA's 8-3 Bruins is extremely difficult.

"They run a multiple defensive scheme," said Holtz. "We think we can anticipate what we're going to get on defense, but on offense I don't know.

"Terry Donahue is always been a veer offensive coach. This year he went to the I. But I personally believe that they will go to the veer.

"I think they will change their offense a great deal."

Fairbanks Returns To Patriots

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Coach Chuck Fairbanks, grim, drawn and tired after a suspension of slightly more than 48 hours, tried to pick up the pieces today in getting his New England Patriots ready for the National Football League playoffs.

Fairbanks, suspended without pay just before the regular season finale at Miami after admitting he had accepted the head coaching job at the University of Colorado, was reinstated by the Patriots Wednesday in another sequel to a wild chain of events challenging any soap opera.

"I will devote all my energy to success in the playoffs," the 45-year-old Fairbanks said, while obviously still hoping for golf, skiing and other luxuries in the Rockies as coach at Colorado.

"We are happy to have him back here to get the team ready for the biggest chapter in the history of the Patriots," said club owner Bill Sullivan, who suspended Fairbanks on the grounds that "no man can serve two masters" after a meeting in Miami Monday just hours before a nationally televised game with the Dolphins.

Fairbanks was returned to active duty, in time to get the Patriots ready for their playoff game against either Denver or Houston here Dec. 31, after Sullivan approved an agreement reached between Fairbanks' attorney, John C. Russell, and the owner's son, Chuck Sullivan, an attorney, in New York.

However, Fairbanks' future, which includes four years remaining on a contract renegotiated in July, 1977, remained clouded.

He was reinstated after sending a telegram to the University of Colorado, saying he was not "in a position at this time to engage in any further negotiations with you or to execute a contract with you."

Later, at a news conference, he emphasized that he had not rejected the Colorado offer. Colorado Athletic Director Eddie Crowder said the same thing while wishing Fairbanks and the Patriots success in the playoffs.

Sullivan, who lured Fairbanks from the college ranks at Oklahoma for a reported $150,000 a year in 1973, stood his ground as owner, however. He said of Fairbanks' contract, "We'll cross that bridge after Jan. 21 (Super Bowl date). Later Sullivan told The Associated Press, "We won't lose him without a contest."

Monterey Ace Cops A-J Honor

Craig Ehlo, the versatile Monterey guard who hit 18 points to lead the Plainsmen to a win over Morton and 16 in a victory over Estacado Tuesday night, has been honored as the Avalanche-Journal's high school basketball player of the week.

Also nominated were Wayne Williams of Dunbar, Coronado's Steve Ahlenius, and Tim Perrin of Lubbock Christian High.

Copping the girl's weekly honor was Gleena Jeffreys, a sophomore from Lubbock Christian High. Miss Jeffreys led the Eagles in scoring this past week, hiiting 15 of 30 shots from the field and pulling down 18 rebounds the past two games.

Lisa Caviel of Dunbar, an all-tournament selectee at Plainview a couple of weeks ago, was also cited by local coaches.

Prior to the start of the season, Monterey coach Joechalka went as far as to call Ehlo, "one of the top players in this part of the country."

So far, Ehlo hasn't disappointed his coach.

During the past 14 games, Ehlo has hit 99 of 188 shots from the field and 58 of 79 free tosses, totaling 258 points. He has also pulled down 122 rebounds.

Perrin, named to the all-tournament team at the Reese tournament, is LCHS' leading scorer, averaging 17 points an outing. He has also pulled down 88 rebounds and dealt out 45 assists.

Williams continues to carry the scoring load for Dunbar. Over the past three games, the 5-9 guard has bucketed 56 points and handed out 16 assists.

Leading the Ponies in scoring is Ahlenius with points. Ahlenius also leads the team in rebounding with 126.

Honored from Christ The King, was Randy Kitten. Kitten has been one of the city's most productive rebounders during the past week, pulling down 39 caroms. He also scored 57 points in four games.

Lazzbuddie Travels To LCHS

The Lubbock High Christian Eagles have brought validity to the saying, "You don't get something for nothing" so far this season. But Coach Gary Bowe has been trying to change things this week.

For some unknown reason, the Eagles have been only been hitting 50 percent of their free shots. But the Eagle coach thinks he has a remedy.

"We've been shooting a 100 free throws a day," said Bowe. "I don't know what the problem is exactly. I guess we're just not concentrating as much as we should be."

Tonight, Lubbock Christian will see if the extra free throw practice has paid off when they host Lazbuddie in the Lubbock Christian gym. Tipoff is slated for 8:30 p.m.

The Eagles will bring an 13-2 record into the contest. However, both Lubbock Christian loses resulted in the recently concluded Reese Christmas Basketball Classic, and though the Eagles defeated Cotton Center 73-60 Tuesday night, Bowe admits his team's morale has suffered.

"We're a little down right now," said Bowe. "We've played 15 games and that's going to take something out of the team. "It's just a case of concentration and I think the Christmas break will help."

Bowe expects Lazbuddie to set up in a high-low post on offense and use a 2-3 zone on defense.

"The last time we played them our 2-2-1 zone press hurt them," the Eagle coach recalled. "We'll try it again tonight."

Since meeting Lazbuddie the first time, the Eagles have improved their depth situation.

"We have one player back that played football," said Bowe. "He makes it possible for us to play five in and five out."

That player Bowe was referring to is Steve Sykes. Sykes returned to action Tuesday night and scored seven points against Cotton Center.

When asked who he'll start, Bowe said, " the same five we always do."

Those same five include Tim Maynard (5-11) and Billie McConnell (5-11) at the guard spots, Shawn Bowe (6-3) will play forward, with Tim Perrin (6-2) and Shawn Williams (6-3) at the post postions.

"Lazbuddie has about the same size that we do," said Bowe. "In fact, they're picked to win their district."

Harris Overcomes Heart Problem

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Craig Harris comes up as a topic of conversation among Lubbock high school basketball fans about as often as the king of Morocco does.

So, to briefly fill you in, Harris plays forward for the Estacado Matadors. He's listed as second string on the Matadors depth chart. So what makes him worth writing about?

Well, Harris probably will go down in the basketball record books as making the greatest rebound in the city of Lubbock's history—rebounding from a heart condition in less than a year.

Last year, at the city track meet on April 1, Harris began to feel sick prior to running an event. So, he decided to take a nap and when he awoke, Harris felt worse. Thus, after a consultation with trainer Bob Ramos, Harris was taken to St. Mary's hospital. Harris remained in the hospital until a day after his birthday on Aug. 15.

"Craig had a congenital heart defect," said trainer Ramos. "His problem was that some of his heart muscles had slowed down. In fact, he almost died twice."

Harris distinctly remembers his hospital tenure and the memories aren't pleasent.

"I felt sorry for myself," recalled Harris. "That was about the hardest thing mentally to overcome."

But for a birthday gift, the 6-1 Matador forward restored his presence of mind and began strengthing his body.

"Besides taking medication, I ran from my house (a mile and a half from Estacado) and changed my diet," said Harris. "I ate two ounces of meat and drank skim milk."

Harris' conditioning paid dividends as he strengthed his heart enough to pass the physical by the time school started this year.

"We were really shocked that Craig could play this year," said Matador coach J J Wood. "In fact, we had already scratched him out of our plans."

When Harris returned for workouts his senior year, the Matador forward said the biggest problem he had to fight was getting his teammates not to feel sorry for him.

"My teammates have really been an inspiration to me," said Harris. "They're always telling me not to work too hard. But besides that everybody treats me now as if it never happened—except my mother."

At first during workouts, Harris couldn't run bleachers, a fast break and couldn't jump.

"The heart condition effected my jumping most of all," said Harris. "I just can't jump as high as I used to."

How high was that?

"I don't know," replied Wood. "But I tell you one thing. Craig is only 6-1 and can still dunk the ball."

Harris feels he can regain his old form in time and right now is the most enthused when practices are called.

"Besides my jumping ability, the layoff also rusted my shooting ability," commented Harris. "Acturally, I just need work on the basics."

And how does a basketball mentor coach a player with a heart condition?

"Actually, I don't make any special concessions," said Wood. "We don't make any changes in our practice routines because of Craig. What I let Craig do, however, is coach his own physical stamina."

Though, Harris' heart has healed enough to pass the physical, Harris admits he's not 100 percent yet.

"When I exert myself for too long of time, I'll get a heart pain," said Harris. "I'll stop, take a deep breath and it'll go away."

As a safeguard, Ramos also keeps his eyes on Harris during a game.

"I can tell by monitoring his movements how he's doing, said Ramos. "I've watched him long enough now to tell coach Wood if he's getting tired and should be taken out."

It's a good thing for Wood that someone knows how Harris is feeling. That's because Harris will never admit that he's tired.

"Everytime I ask him, Craig says he's feeling fine," said Wood. "In fact, he has never told me that he's feeling bad."

Staubach, Campbell Lead NFL

NEW YORK (AP) — Roger Staubach of Dallas was the passing leader, Earl Campbell of Houston won the rushing title and Rickey Young of Minnesota took the pass receiving title in final 1978 statistics announced by the National Football League.

Staubach just edged Pittsburgh's Terry Bradshaw, according to NFL statistics released Wednesday, 84.9 to 84.8 points in the complex system by which the league rates its passers. San Diego's Dan Fouts was third at 83.2.

Staubach completed 55 percent of his passes (231 of 413) for 3,190 yards and 25 touchdowns, while Bradshaw hit 56.3 percent (207 of 368) for 2,915 yards and a league-high 28 TDs.

Miami's Bob Griese was the most accurate, with a 63 percent completion rate, and Fran Tarkenton led the league in interceptions (32) and most yards thrown for (3,468).

Campbell, the 1977 Heisman Trophy winner from the University of Texas, had 1,450 yards rushing, 55 more than runner-up Walter Payton of Chicago, last year's NFL rushing champ when he gained 1,852.

Campbell was one of 11 players who ran for more than 1,000 yards, two more than last season, when there were 14 games instead of 16.

Young, obtained by the Vikings from San Diego before the start of the season, caught 88 passes, 14 more than Tony Galbreath of New Orleans. Wesley Walker of the New York Jets, who had 48 receptions, led the league in two categories: yards gained (1,169) and average (24.4).

Rookie Frank Corral of Los Angeles was the NFL scoring leader with 118 points (31 conversions and 29 field goals), while running back David Sims of Seattle was the top scorer among non-kickers with 90 points on 15 touchdowns.

SKIING

CABLE, Wis. — Alaska's Allson Owen-Spencer won the first officially sanctioned Nordic World Cup race, capturing a women's five-kilometer event in 17:14.43, 13.93 seconds ahead of runner-up Maria Johansson of Sweden, who was timed in 17:28.36.

FOOTBALL

MOBILE, Ala. — Head coaches Walt Michaels of the New York Jets and Dick Nolan of the New Orleans Saints were chosen to coach in the 30th Senior Bowl football game Jan. 13.

Michaels, whose club posted an 8-8 record this year, will coach the North squad. Nolan, whose Saints posted their most victories ever in this year's 7-9 campaign, will lead the South.

The Jets and Saints staffs will assist in North-South preparations.

NEW YORK — Rookie Earl Campbell of the Houston Oilers took the honors as the National Football League's leading rusher, as the league announced its final regular season statistics.

Campbell's rushing total of 1450 yards was 45 yards better than runner-up Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears. Dallas' Roger Staubach was the league's leading passer, while Rickey Young of the Minnesota Vikings was the league's leading receiver.

GENERAL

BANGKOK, Thailand — North and South Korea played a scoreless overtime tie in soccer as the eighth Asian Games ended.

The match, held as part of the closing ceremonies of Asia's Olympics, resulted in a gold medal for each team but did not affect the overall medal standings.

Japan took top honors with 70 golds, 69 silvers and 47 bronzes, while China was second with 51-53-48. The two sports powers were followed by South Korea, North Korea, Thailand, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, The Philippines and Iraq.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — John Mauer, a former basketball coach at Tennessee, Kentucky, Army, Florida and Miami of Ohio, died at a Knoxville nursing home. He was 77.

Mauer was Tennessee's head basketball coach from 1938-47 and served as an assistant Vols football coach those years, as well as from 1960-63. He compiled a 123-61 record in his eight years as Tennessee's basketball coach and won two Southeastern Conference championships.

NEW YORK — Jack Nicklaus, who has won more major tournaments than any golfer in history, was named Sportsman of the Year by Sports Illustrated magazine.

Wanted: Giant Grid Coach

By HAL BOCK

Who'll be next in the New York Giants' funhouse?

What's that, Mr. Paterno? You're not interested? Well, we can certainly understand that since you're sitting there in the Nittany Mountains of Pennsylvania with the No.1 college football team in America on your hands. Good luck in the Sugar Bowl ... and when you see Mr. Bryant, you might tell him to give us a call.

How about you, Mr. Walsh? Can we transfer the franchise to northern California so you won't have to move again? Well, that may prove difficult, but we'll certainly investigate the possibilities and get back to you.

Mr. Allen, what would you say to ...

What's that? You've already assembled a staff of assistants and you were waiting for our call? Well, you surely are a go-getter, but these are just preliminary talks. Don't call us. We'll call you.

Mr. Stram, you'd be dynamite on the sidelines at the Meadowlands with your fancy vests and rolled-up programs. Do you think you could design an offense of the '80s for a team still living in the '50s? If you think bucking Cosell on Monday nights is tough, try untangling this mess.

Mr. Reeves, we were certainly pleased to hear of your interest, but we are concerned that you may have become spoiled by the constant cashing of Dallas' playoff checks. That is a fringe benefit in which our employees do not participate.

Mr. Fairbanks, we are fascinated by your hop-scotching demonstration and if things ever get boring in New England or Colorado or wherever you happen to be coaching at the moment, keep us in mind. We would, however, prefer if you'd limit yourself to one job at a time.

We're sorry, Mr. Sherman, Mr. Webster and Mr. Arnsparger, but you are all ineligible. You've all had your chances — only one debacle to a customer.

In the wake of another losing season with fans burning their tickets and enemy aircraft circling the stadium carrying signs that spelled out the discontent of the fans, the Giants did the expected this week, resolutely chopping off the head of Coach John McVay.

Now they have a real problem. Where will they find someone foolish enough to accept the coaching responsibility for this team that so often seems beyond all help? At least McVay showed up for work every morning, willing to let the Giants toy with his mind week after miserable week. Will anyone else with so much as a semblance of football competence be as anxious to turn his emotional well-being over to this bunch?

Now, let's see. Who would be that perfect somebody to succeed McVay as coach of the team some New Yorkers now call the Jersey Giants? Bob Hope is unavailable, but the new man will need his sense of humor. Henny Youngman is unavailable, but then this team is funny enough without him. Rodney Dangerfield is unavailable although he'd certainly fit in.

Whoever turns out to be the winner of this job derby must start the reconstruction of the team at quarterback. Joe Pisarcik is not the answer and neither is Randy Dean. Forget about Jerry Golsteyn because the Giants certainly have.

The new man will have to erase the memory of The Fumble, that infamous play that turned a victory over Philadelphia into an improbable last-second defeat.

That game carved its way into the psyche of the club and will live as the trademark of the 1978 Giants. Here was a game they had won. All they needed to do was run out the clock, fall on the football, the most basic maneuver in any football playbook. The Giants instead chose a handoff, promptly fumbling away the football, the game, the season and their coach.

Now the search is on for a new man to endure the aggravation. McVay has done his term in the Purgatory of the Meadowlands. Now it's somebody else's turn.

Step right up, guys. But check your mind at the door, so that it will be there for you to pick up on the way out.

Nat Moore Own Worst Enemy

MIAMI (AP) — Nat Moore would like to get more recognition as one of the National Football League's top receivers, but he probably is his own worst enemy in that respect.

The explosive Miami Dolphins receiver is feared by defensive players throughout the league, but he isn't particularly well known among fans. He was passed over for the Pro Bowl this year, to the disappointment of Coach Don Shula.

"I really thought he deserved it. When you've got a player like that, you like to see him get the recognition," Shula said.

But Moore's moody relationship with the media perhaps is one problem. After nationally distributed Sport Magazine set up an interview, Moore decided not to go through with it. The magazine did a story on linebacker Steve Towle instead.

He's indicated he doesn't hold the news media in high regard because he feels they have treated some of his teammates unfairly.

Another problem is that he has insisted on downgrading himself this year.

"I don't feel I've played up to my capabilities this year. I've had a disappointing season," Moore said.

"My concentration hasn't always been good. A lot of times I didn't come up with the big plays. I've let some big passes go off my finger tips," he said.

Moore's statistics — 48 receptions for 646 yards and 10 touchdowns — are still among the league's best. He might have led the league in touchdown receptions, but a 69-yard score against Dallas was called back because of a holding penalty, and he has been interfered with twice in the end zone.

"I know that he's been saying that about himself, but we certainly don't feel he's had an off year," Shula said. "He had such a great year last year, but it would be hard for anybody to do that two years in a row."

Moore had 52 receptions for 765 yards and 12 touchdowns in 1977, his fourth year as a pro.

He made the Pro Bowl last season and admitted his disappointment at being passed over this year.

"I think anytime you don't make it, you're disappointed. But I guess I'm not really surprised," he said. "My yards-per-catch average is down and when push comes to shove, I think people get chosen on their statistics."

Moore also noted the Duriel Harris, with 45 catches, and tight end Andre Tillman, with 31 receptions, are enjoying their finest seasons and have made the Dolphins passing game better-rounded.

Shula, who calls Moore "the best all-round athlete in football," likes to use him out of the backfield occasionally.

"A lot of times, things like that bring down my average. But that's not my worry. All I want to do is whatever is asked of me. Whatever Nat Moore can do to help the team, that's what I'm interested in.

"Last year Nat Moore had a good year and the Dolphins didn't make the playoffs. This year Nat Moore had a lackadasical year and we're in the playoffs," Moore said.

BYU Coach Silent On Starting QB

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Brigham Young Coach LaVell Edwards is keeping the lid on which of his two quarterbacks will start against Navy in the inaugural Holiday Bowl football clash Friday night. But the Midshipmen are expecting it will be junior Marc Wilson.

"If BYU doesn't start Wilson at quarterback, I'd be very surprised," one Navy assistant said Wednesday.

Both teams move into San Diego Stadium today for their first workouts on the field where they'll play under the lights beginning at 8 p.m., CST, Friday before a capacity crowd of more than 52,000.

BYU Sports Information Director Dave Schulthess said Edwards isn't neccessarily trying to keep Navy's defensive preparations off balance by keeping the wraps on his quarterback choice but, "It never hurts to throw a little suspense in there."

Wilson and sophomore Jim McMahon each contributed as Brigham Young compiled an 8-3 season record to win the Western Athletic Conference championship and a Holiday Bowl berth.

"I've always been a one-quarterback man," Edwards said. "I realize it could be controversial, but I've been flirting with the idea of using both quarterbacks.

"I've never done that before, but in this case, because of their particular personalities, it could be different," the coach added. "Both want to start, but each recognizes each other's ability. They both have the ability to throw."

Schulthess said Edwards might not make a decision before Friday.

Navy, 8-3, after winning its first seven games, stumbling against Notre Dame and losing three straight, came back to finish by whipping Army 28-0 in the annual inter-service game. The Midshipmen are a ball-control team featuring strong running behind quarterback Bob Leszczynski.

They will have to find a way to control the ball against BYU's roughhouse defense.

"I don't think we can give BYU too many opportunities the way they can throw the ball," said Leszczynski, who set a Naval Academy record with 26 career touchdown passes.

Navy alternates a trio of running backs, Steve Callahan, Mike Sherlock and Kevin Tolbert. And split end Phil McConkey, one of Leszczynski's favorite targets who caught six touchdown passes, is healthy after missing much of the Army contest with injuries. But missing will be fullback Larry Klawinski, who is out after undergoing knee surgery.

Bob Griese, Little Said Questionable

MIAMI (AP) — Quarterback Bob Griese and guard Larry Little watched from the sidelines Wednesday as the Miami Dolphins began preparations for their Dec. 24 wild card game with Houston.

Griese has bruised ribs and is listed as questionable, while Little is questionable with a sore ankle and knee. Both were injured in Monday night's victory over New England.

Halfback Delvin Williams worked at half-speed on a sore knee. He has gained just eight yards on seven carries the past two games.

deal with the two schools being replaced every other year. (The two teams could even be placed in opposite brackets and then there's an even greater chance they won't play.)

That would allow three openings for the tournament committee to fill with teams like, Midland or Clovis, or even a Dallas or Fort Worth club.

Also, if a tournament has two divisions, a large and a small, the upper group should be only Class AAAA team. No one else. Placing smaller schools in the large school division certainly doesn't help a tournament.

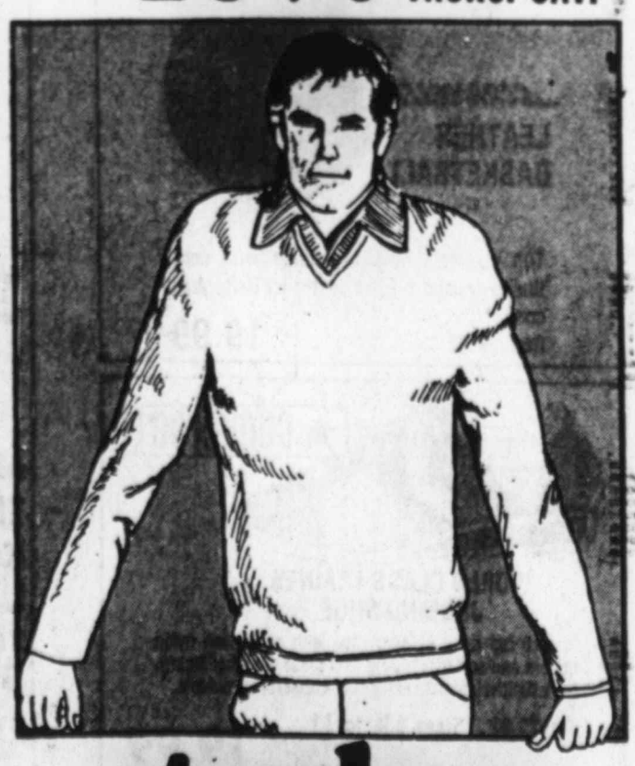

With the facilities Lubbock has to offer, a quality tournament isn't out of the questions. But it will take some time—and work.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Mondale's Greetings Expensive

By FRANK CORMIER

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's easy to get the idea that aides to Vice President Walter F. Mondale are a trifle sensitive about the cost of Christmas cards mailed this year by Mondale and his wife, Joan.

The sensitivity reflects the fact that — in a one-to-one comparison — the Mondale cards cost three times more than the greetings mailed by the President and Mrs. Carter.

It took three inquiries to Mondale's office to pry loose the fact that the vice-presidential cards cost slightly more than 40 cents each.

A White House spokeswoman said the Carter cards cost 13 cents each.

One reason the Mondale card cost more per copy is the fact that only 5,000 were mailed, whereas the Carter card went to 100,000 homes.

That meant the cost of making printing plates to reproduce the painting on the Mondale card had to be apportioned among far fewer copies.

In both cases, the cost of cards and postage is being paid by the Democratic National Committee.

There are similarities between the Carter and Mondale cards. One shows a snow-clad White House and the other a snow scene featuring the vice president's official residence.

Keeping In Touch

Speaking of Christmas cards, the White House press center was nearly buried this week under a small avalanche of cards mailed to Washington reporters in care of the White House.

Almost every available flat surface except desk tops was needed to spread out the cards, which bore the printed sign-off, "Betty and Jerry Ford."

Of course, former President Gerald R. Ford has all but said he won't seek the Republican presidential nomination in 1980. Presumably he just wants to keep in touch.

Security Differs

The last couple of weeks have produced a heavy round of Christmas entertaining by Carter and Mondale — and have revealed a markedly different approach to security precautions by their respective bodyguard forces.

When Mondale invited 75 reporters, columnists and editors to a Dec. 13 reception at his home, invitees were required to supply the names and birthdates of their spouses.

That information was needed to make a computer check of the guests for security purposes.

But when the Carters invited 600 newspersons and spouses to a White House reception Wednesday night, no birthdates were sought.

Added Postscript

After finishing his broadcast announcement from the Oval Office on normalization of relations with China last Friday, Carter added a five-word postscript that was not heard by his television-radio audience.

"Massive applause throughout the nation," Carter intoned in a manner that suggested he meant the remark as self-deprecating humor.

Well, it was another case of a public official talking into an open microphone that he thought had been turned off. The Carter postscript was not broadcast but was piped to network technicians making tape recordings of the announcement.

Broadway is not only one of the best known streets in the world, it is also one of the longest. Starting at the southern tip of Manhattan, it continues 150 miles up into Albany, N.Y. For part of the way it is also called Route 9.

Department Releases Farm Population Figures

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's farm population, continuing to decline, includes significantly more men than women in a reversal of the sex ratio in cities, a government report says.

The report, released today by the departments of Commerce and Agriculture, is based on 1977 population surveys and earlier census information.

It showed slightly more than 7.8 million persons lived on farms in 1977 — 4,072,000 males and 3,734,000 females.

"There were 109 males on farms for every 100 females, whereas there were only 93 males per 100 females in the nonfarm population," the report said.

The disparity "is most pronounced in the late teens and early 20s and again in the late 50s and older ages — when women have the highest probabilities of being single and widowed, respectively," it said.

An important reason for this, the report said, is that there is probably "a tendency toward increased outmigration of young farm women as they reach maturity, and of older farm women upon widowhood."

But this also results in more farm women indicating they are "married with husband present" than do women in nonfarm areas, the report said.

The survey also showed farm families more likely to be headed by married couples.

Although a smaller proportion of farm families have children under 18 — because of the older age structure of the farm population — those who do have children tend to have more than corresponding non-farm families.

The report said fertility data for June 1977 showed the average number of children born to farm women 18-to-44 years of age was "significantly higher" at 1,973 per 1,000 women than that of nonfarm women, which was 1,597 per 1,000.

Records showed the 1977 farm population of 7.8 million declined from about 8.25 million in 1976 and made up about 3.6 percent of the U.S. population.

In 1960, when it was about 15.6 million, the farm population was about 8.7 percent of the U.S. total.

Other findings included:

—The average age of farm residents was 35.2 years, about six years older than non-farm people.

—Farm residents were "just as likely to be working in non-agricultural industries" as in agriculture.

—Measured in 1976 dollars, the median farm-family income was more than 20 percent less than the median for nonfarm families, $11,663 to $15,065. Median income means half the families earned more and half less.

—The number of blacks on farms has declined more rapidly than that of whites since 1970, a drop of 53 percent against 16 percent.

—For the first time, figures were gathered to show the number of Spanish-origin people on farms. Those numbered about 112,000 or 1.4 percent of the total U.S. farm population.

TODAY'S STOCK PRICES

Stock Mart Disregards OPEC News

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market moved higher today as it shrugged off news that further increases in crude oil prices may be announced next year.

At noon, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was ahead 4.56 at 798.08, with advances outnumbering declines by nearly 2-1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues. Big Board volume picked up to 13.08 million shares in the first two hours of trading from 10.8 million at noon Wednesday.

In the day's economic news, Rene Ortiz, secretary general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, said OPEC may decide to raise prices again before June if the dollar continues to decline and if "the international economy deteriorates rapidly."

OPEC's announcement this week of a 14.5 percent price boost for 1979 sent the stock market into a steep decline on Monday.

Boeing rose 1⅛ to 72⅝ afer announcing $120 million in new aircraft orders. Occidental Petroleum, which dropped its attempt to buy Mead Corp. in the face of Mead's heated opposition, rose ⅜ to 16. Oils were generally higher in active trading, with Standard Oil of Indiana up 1¼ to 56⅝ and Exxon up ¼ at 49¼.

ATT, which reported an 18 percent quarterly earnings gain, fell ⅛ to 60¾ ater a Federal Communications Commission staff report said the company has tallied "an apparently unlawful rate of return" and is "in violation" of FCC rate orders. ATT denied the allegation.

Sheriff Airs Warning On Scheme

MIDLAND (UPI) — Businessmen should beware of solicitors asking for funds for a holiday rest stop program because the salesmen have misrepresented themselves and are probably involved in a fraudulent scheme, says Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith.

Rather than conduct his own "quiet investigation," Smith said he went public Wednesday to spare gullible businessmen holiday grief, by exposing what he believed to be a fake fund-raising organization.

He said local businessmen have been contacted by solicitors purporting to represent a lawmen's association in Albuquerque, N.M. One fund-raiser told a businessman he knew the Bernalillo County, N.M., sheriff well, Smith said. But the businessman knew him, too, and the names didn't match, he said.

Authorities in Midland, Dallas and Albuquerque reportedly are investigating what is believed to be the latest edition of a number of similar schemes. At least one Dallas man linked to earlier schemes is involved in the rest stop scam, Smith said.

The fundraisers apparently "were real active" in Midland, Smith said, judging from a few telephone calls. But the sheriff said he had received only two official complaints and had no evidence the solicitors were still around.

But neither is their project, he said.

"We dadgum sure couldn't find out any place here that there will be a rest stop," Smith said. Solicitors apparently hoped to capitalize on public knowledge of legitimate rest stop ventures sponsored by civic groups in the past, he said.

Al Beatty, president of the Midland Better Business Bureau, said he had been informed of the scam Wednesday and had spoken to his counterpart in Albuquerque only briefly.

'HIPLEX' Gets Federal Funds

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Water Development Board has agreed to accept $680,000 in federal funds from the U.S. Department of Interior to be used for continuation of the so-called "HIPLEX" weather modification project.

The federal money will be used in conjunction with some $70,000 in state monies.

The 1979 HIPLEX (High Plains Cooperative Program) will involve the following contracts:

• An agreement with the Colorado River Municipal Water District which is to provide an aircraft, pilot, meteorologist, "rawinsonde" technical, radar equipment and is to seed clouds according to approved HIPLEX work plans and provide required support services and installation of support facilities.

• A contract with Texas A&M University to provide a chief scientist for the HIPLEX program, to analyze data, operate a "mesoscale field program," compare radar echo patterns to synoptic features and apply existing mesoscale computer models to the Texas HIPLEX project area.

• An agreement with Texas Tech University to analyze 1977 radiance satellite data and analyze imagery data of the 1978 satellite tapes, to perform rainfall analyses of individual storms and general rainfall patterns affecting the Texas HIPLEX rain-gauge and to collect and process radar data.

CBS Takes Over First Place In TV Ratings Competition

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS bumped ABC from first place in the networks' prime-time ratings competition for the first time since baseball's World Series in October, thanks in large measure to strong showings on two nights during the week.

In fact, CBS' "All in the Family" was the highest-rated show during the week ending Dec. 17, capturing half the audience during its time slot Sunday night.

Three more CBS Sunday night programs were listed in the A.C. Nielsen Co.'s Top 20 for the week, including "Kaz" in eighth place, "60 Minutes" in ninth and "Dallas" in 18th.

CBS' Monday night lineup was a hit, too, with "M-A-S-H," "One Day at a Time" and "Lou Grant" all in the Top 20.

CBS' rating for the week was 19.8, with ABC second at 19.7 and NBC last at 15.2. The networks say that means in an average prime time minute, 19.8 percent of the homes in the country with TV were tuned to CBS.

ABC had been second only twice this season, during NBC's broadcast of the World Series. CBS, meanwhile, spent the first five weeks of the season in third place, and had been runnerup to ABC since late October.

ABC's top-rated Tuesday night hits, "Laverne and Shirley," "Happy Days" and "Three's Company," each slipped a notch to accomodate CBS' hour-long "All in the Family" episode.

The rating for "All in the Family" was 33.1, which Nielsen says means of all the homes with television, fully a third saw the show. Of sets in use between 7 and 8 Central time Sunday, 50 percent watched the comedy special.

Here are the week's Top 10 programs:

"All in the Family," with a rating of 33.1 representing 24.7 million homes, CBS; "Laverne and Shirley," 30.7 or 22.9 million, and "Happy Days" and "Three's Company," both 30.1 or 22.4 million, all ABC; "M-A-S-H," 28 or 20.9 million, and "One Day at a Time," 26.5 or 19.7 million, both CBS; "Mork and Mindy," 26.3 or 19.6 million, ABC, and "Kaz," 25.9 or 19.3 million, "60 Minutes," 25.8 or 19.2 million, and "Barnaby Jones," 24.8 or 18.5 million, all CBS.

The next 10 shows:

"Love Boat," "Nestor, the Long-Eared Christmas Donkey," and "Frosty's Winter Wonderland," all ABC; "Lou Grant," CBS; "Perry Como's Early American Christmas Special," "Taxi" and "Barney Miller," all ABC; "Dallas," CBS, and "What's Happening" and "Fantasy Island," both ABC.

Young Singer Debby Boone Makes Holiday Special Debut

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Christmas is a magic and giving time, and television likes to do its part for the yule season. The networks, in fact, have a special "Christmas season," to go along with their summer season, fall season and mid-season seasons.

As in the real world, television's Christmas season is a time of giving. TV's favorite gift is the Christmas Special.

It's a useful, versatile gift, and sometimes serves a double purpose. One gift can fill two stockings — the viewer's and that of the holiday celebrity.

The holiday celebrity is a performer who sort of drifts around on the fringes of our awareness until a holiday magically hurls him (or her) onto center stage with a holiday special. Easter is O.K. for this kind of thing, but Christmas — Christmas is best.

Not many holiday celebs out of work this time of year.

Happily, the networks aren't the only ones who feel the cheer of the season. Viewers, too, know the meaning of Christmas, and usually greet the specials with a gift of their own — nice ratings.

Viewers who ordinarily would rather shovel snow or fertilize the winter grass than watch a musical variety show suddenly dash to the screen when Perry Como or The Carpenters or Mac Davis or John Davidson show up with a few carols and some guest stars (usually other holiday celebrities.)

TV audiences have pulled the plug on each of the above performers in tries at weekly series. But put these celebrities in a Christmas special, and America scurries to make up for past neglect.

A newcomer this year, and a slight variation of the species, makes her holiday special debut tonight. Debby Boone checks in (on NBC) with a musical version of O. Henry's "Gift of the Magi," the story of a young Christmas couple who cared but had nasty luck with gifts.

Debby, Pat's girl, is different from most other holiday celebrities just because because she's never had her own failed show. She's never had any show. She's never acted. Debby is here on the strength of her pop music hit, "You Light Up My Life."

That's all right, though; one of her costars in this musical is Peter Graves, not reknowned for his singing talents.

John Rubinstein, son of pianist Arthur, also stars.

Debby entered sort of a lull period after her huge, Grammy-winning hit, appearing mostly on talk shows to sing "You Light Up My Life." Even though she admits, "I don't know if I can act — it scared me to death," she is certain she doesn't want to limit her show biz career to making records.

"I want to do a little bit of everything," she says. "I'm always wondering what I'm going to do. See, I don't want to do just one thing."

Mary's Condition Puts Joseph's Love To Test

(EDITOR'S NOTE — Even the great human love story of the Gospels had its moments of tribulation. Here, based on ancient but non-canonical accounts, is a reconstruction of the greatest and unique trial of Mary and Joseph. This is the fourth installment of a five-part Christmas series, "A Special Love Story.")

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Writer

Back from his building expedition, Joseph bar Jacob entered the house and found Mary standing alone before the hearth. Her back was toward him. She did not move. Quickly he hooked the door curtain aside to admit more light.

He started toward her, swept with eager devotion. He had not seen her for six months.

She turned about, facing him. An armload of firewood she held crashed to the floor at her feet.

He stopped.

Beneath the gray cowl, her face was pale and drawn, and her eyes burned with anguish. Her palms spread imploringly defenseless, at her sides. Her body bulged. She was full, meleah, with child!

Breath failed him, and his countenance sagged in disbelief and dismay. He took a step or two, and halted again, staring at her in shattered incredulity.

She seemed to shrink from him, her fingers twisting at the folds of her cloak. She lowered her head, and then, clenching her lips, bent and began rapidly picking up the kindling and stacking it in a heap.

He opened his mouth to speak, but no words came. A wave of helpless compassion came over him, an urge to take her in his arms and console her. Yet he remained rooted, sick at heart, shocked and confounded.

Abruptly he turned and plunged out of the house into his carpentry shed. He flung himself down on a pile of sackcloth.

"Oh Lord, my God," he moaned. "What shall I say concerning her?"

He wept bitterly.

"For I received her a virgin out of the Temple of the Lord, and have not preserved her such."

Rage boiled in him.

"Who hath thus deceived me? Who hath committed this evil in my house? Who hath defiled her?"

In the very dawn of matrimony had come betrayal. At the beginning of paradise, it was lost.

His fingers dug in his face.

"So hath it befallen me also."

Angrily he lurched to his feet. With a stroke of his arm, he sent a rack of boards smashing against the wall. He strode outside and into the grove. He walked until his bones ached along with his heart, and then returned to confront her.

Now it was night, and a lamp flamed on the sideboard. He called to her, and she emerged from an inner chamber, looking on him with swollen, defiant eyes. He drew himself up determinedly, and said:

"Why hast thou done this?"

Her lips parted and her throat muscles moved in little spasms, but speech eluded her. He could see the veins purpling beneath her translucent skin, and sorrow shook him.

All his senses insisted that she could not have done this thing, she who was so prudent and full of grace, she who was schooled in the very Temple itself, yet here she stood, her unfaithfulness a taunt to his face.

Fourth In A Series

"Why...?" He shook his head. "Why hast thou, who has been so much favored of God, thus debased thy soul?"

Suddenly, tears burst from her in a flood, and she clasped her hands to her face, crying out shrilly:

"I am innocent, and have known no man!"

He stood there, dumbstruck, pitying her, loving her, detesting her, believing her, doubting her.

"Then," he said unsteadily, "how comes it to pass you are with child?"

A new burst of tears convulsed her.

"As the Lord my God liveth, I know not by what means."

She bent almost double, covering her face in her arms, and whirling, rushed from the room.

For a time, he stood there, abashed, deadened, hearing her rending sobs from the blackness of the inner chamber. Then, his shoulders slumped, he went out again into the night.

An edge of fear formed in him, along with his shame and grief.

"I am innocent..."

She had been under strict covenant to him, and any breach in it was adultery. Mosaic law said, "If a damsel that is virgin be betrothed...and another man lie with her... then ye shall stone them with stones until they die."

Yet he could not see her slain.

His head throbbed. He could put her away privately. Yea, so he could, without trial or clamor. He would deliver her to kinsmen in Judea, away from the prattling tongues of Nazareth. He was a just man, and had loved her greatly.

He stumbled on in darkness, oblivious to the limbs that whipped his face.

Oh, God, the day star is fallen and hope is become despair. It would not have been unlawful, even though unseemly, if he himself had known her before. Jealousy consumed him, and her cry haunted him like some wraith of Sheol.

"I am innocent... innocent!"

If only, within reason, he could believe her, or pardon — for a good man is long-suffering, and unafraid of scorn — but he could not.

Somewhere in the night, somewhere in the gulf past purpose or return, he dropped to his knees, bitter tears mingling with his supplications.

He could not say how long he prayed there, and finally he fell to the ground and slept a tumid and teeming sleep.

"Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son... He shall save his people from their sins."

He jerked erect, his heart beating wildly, his eyes feverish and exultant. It was true! A mystery unveiled! It was their Maker's doing, and the Lord of Hosts is his name. For this cause had the Lord wrought and kept her. He got up, his body stiff, his mind aflame.

He ran, dodging and leaping, as the shot silver through the trees. He came to the house and found her waiting. His arms went around her, and with these two all wea well.

But there were suspicion and glowering looks in Nazareth. After Mary's state was known, women pointed and whispered. Joseph found himself shunned. His salutes were ignored.

For, while cohabitation was not illegal for the betrothed, it was considered a violation of decorum. The case was expecially notorious in regard to Mary, for her merit and rectitude had been especially acclaimed.

Joseph also had been credited as a temperate and judicious man. Thus the community was scandalized, and Joseph, along with Mary, was summoned before the elders to confess the deed or denounce her.

"Bear no false witness but speak the truth," the beetle-browed rabbi demanded. "Thou has married her by stealth . .. and hast not bowed they head under the mighty hand of God that thy seed should be blessed."

Joseph stood silently, yielding to the indictment. For to have resisted it would have subjected Mary to a capital offense. He walked out of the synagogue, a silent psalm of fortitude in his soul.

"For a good man sheweth favor, and lendeth ... He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. His heart is established, he shall not be afraid."

"Therefore shall a man... cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."

At that moment, it is said, a couple's name is proclaimed in heaven. And they were not ashamed nor confounded, and none could remove their peace.

About that time, it was decreed by the provincial Roman legate that all citizens should register at the cities of their birth, to be taxed. Since Joseph was of Bethlehem, he journeyed there, taking Mary with him, even though this was not required, for he would not leave her among the mockers of Nazareth.

A veteran Florida CBer and ham operator talked for 23 minutes last February with Jonestown, Guyana — site off the ill-fated Peoples Temple cult.

The topic of the conversation — verified by a QSL card — was the beauty of the country, and the "work" of the American colony.

Robert Boone (handle "Daniel Boone"), will-known to CBers in the Venice-Bradenton-Lakeland, Fla., area, had been listening to "Sarah" broadcasting from Jonestown on several occasions.

"It was for a period of several weeks on 20 meters, or about 14.300, and I decided to talk with her myself," he explained.

"I was trying to pass the 100-country status in Amateur Radio, and the 8R3 prefix added a necessary country," he said.

"When I put the call in, an Al Touchette answered with his call sign — WB6-MID, and added Portable 8R3 — which meant that, though the license had been issued to a California station, it was operating as portable from a foreign country.

"Touchette then turned the mike over to a woman, 'Sharah,' and she carried on the conversation."

Boone said "Sarah" had a pleasant voice and wanted to talk about the country where she lived, terming her surroundings "beautiful, vibrant with flowers and lush greenery."

She urged Boone to tell his friends that they should come to Jonestown and help the Peoples Temple Agricultural Mission. She made no mention of communal living of her own background. She gave no indication of the mass suicide-murder tragedy to come.

"I had read about the 'Moonies' so I was somewhat familiar with the cult idea," recalled Boone. "But I had no indication that Touchette or 'Sarah' were into this sort of thing."

Bob Boone got caught up in CBing when he was a junior high student about 15 years old.

"I loved every minute of it, and then I started doing the skip bit," he said. "Realizing that that was illegal, I decided I might as well get into amateur radio where I could be honest. I built my first 'ham' rig about five years ago.

"As a matter of fact, that is how I came across the QSL card from Jonestown. The other night I was going through my QSLs so I could get my next award. As I got near the end of my stack, my wife noticed that I was looking up '8R3' and said that the card mentioned Jonestown. It was the day the mass suicide was reported."

Crusty Satire Rates As Standout Event

By WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernard Shaw's two-for-one drama "Man and Superman" is back on sterling display at Broadway's Circle in the Square Theater.

The crusty satire about humanity's "Life Force" may no longer pack the punch that shocked the theatrical establishment when it was first done in 1905, but the production which opened recently brings out every nuance of lively contemporary relevance. And it bristles with some of the tart Irishman's wittiest meditations.

Most attractive of all is the inclusion of the "Don Juan in Hell" sequence frequently omitted nowadays — or staged separately out of concern for audience endurance.

The company assembled under the experienced, quiet direction of Stephen Porter — who mounted another intact version 13 years ago — paces through the 3½-hour presentation with constantly engrossing artistry. Events moved with polished skill.

George Grizzard enacts the central role of Jack Tanner, a renegade from the stuffy ranks of British privilege, with slight touches of epicene fussiness that ultimately make Shaw's contrived central romantic plot that much more acceptable.

His main ally is Philip Bosco, an always interesting actor, who performs with edgy suaveness the dual role of a Spanish brigand and an urbane Lucifer in the "Hell" interlude.

Highly commendable also is Ann Sachs. Perhaps a bit too sophisticated and obviously scheming at first as the lass who always gets her own way, her interpretation finally fuses into a pert image of liberated femininity.

Then there are Richard Woods, perfectly incarnating Blimpish smugness, and Laurie Kennedy as the girl whose secret marriage to an American visitor (depicted by Michael O'Hare) provides the counterpoint for Shaw's mischievous fugue.

For this production in the Circle's rather awkward physical facilities, a section of seats has been installed on the fourth side of the playhouse that pulls the action together and raises attendance potential.

Papers Not Allowed To Publish Demands

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The government Tuesday refused again to let newspapers publish guerrilla communiques as part of ransom demands to free four kidnapped foreign executives.

A guerrilla group called the Armed Force of National Resistance is demanding the publication of anti-government messages, the release of political prisoners and ransom, reportedly $20 million, for the release of a Japanese textile executive, two English bankers and a Dutch businessman kidnapped during the past month.
