NICARAGUA REBEL TAKES REFUGE IN MOUNTAINS

GARDINO, CRUSHED BY U. S. MARINES CONTINUES STRONG DEFIANCE OF AUTHORITIES

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, July 20.—General Sandino, self-termed "Wild Beast of the Mountains", whose rebel and suffered severe defeat Sunday while trying to overcome a small contingent of United States marines and native constabulary, at Ocotal, has gone back into hiding in the mountains in an inaccessible part of the country. His forces are widely scattered.

Planes Turned Scales Strangely enough, it was the American bombing airplanes that turned the scale in favor of the marines, for, coming to the aid of a greatly outnumbered garrison, one of these aircraft raked the rebels, killing 200 of them. The planes and constabulary killed 100 of them. These figures have been confirmed by Colonel L. M. Quick, the fifth regiment of marines. A late advice from Ocotal, which is about 100 miles north of Managua, indicate that the death figure may be even higher. Since one wounded rebel straggled into the woods to die.

Major Ross E. Howell, who led the bombing planes to the attack on Ocotal, has been recommended the distinguished service medal. Dispatches to Washington by leader General Feland, in command of the United States marines in Nicaragua.

Sandino Gets Blame General Moncada, commander in chief of the liberal forces in their campaign against the conservatives, which terminated with the peace treaty arranged by Colonel Henry L. Stimson, as personal representative of President Coolidge, assumes responsibility for the "massacre" of 200 Nicaraguans on Sunday. General Sandino has refused to lay down his arms and return peacefully to Managua.

Moncada's statement, which he had in reply to a communication from the United States, declared that Sandino preferred to surround himself with his own men and fight to the death rather than to be captured and have his life spared.

A Birthday Check from Dad

just as he used to hand it to . . . his "little girl"

When she was ten, Dad's check had been for ten big dollars . . . her very own . . . to spend as she liked. After that it had never failed . . . through high school and boarding school and even after marriage . . . Dad never forgot. Always he remembered her as "just his little girl."

Dad's "little girl" has grown up . . . now has a "little girl" of her own . . . and a big capable husband to provide for her. But on Birthdays . . . she is still, at heart "just Dad's little girl." The envelope comes, no longer from Dad, but from the Southland Life to whom he delegated this sentimental trust.

What a thoughtful, beautiful expression of Father's love. One small policy even as small as $1,000 . . . specially assigned as a birthday remembrance, will pay from $44 to $66 annually. The Southland Life Agent will gladly explain its interesting angles, low cost, etc.

Proves Its Merits

When the so-called Domestic Science was introduced in the land, a great hubbalooboo was raised by the viewers-with-alarm of those days. What in the name of creation was the work of a woman who could not learn cooking and sewing at home, the way their mothers had learned the good womanly arts?

The last twenty years have given the answer. Cooking the way grandmothers did it—a handful of this, a little of the other, and a pinch or two of that—just simply didn't do any more. The good housewife in the kitchen today must know not only her onions, but all her vegetables, and her carbohydrates, starches, proteins, fats, and vitamins as well. The loose formula of raising a family on three square meals a day has given way to the precisely balanced ration. A kitchen mechanic, if there is such a creature left, must be governed by the sapient cook-chemist-dietician who can make assurance of the proper amounts of roughage and such stuff.

Doctors have become some of the most enthusiastic boosters of this newer order of exact cooking. The pioneers who sat in for instruction in some of the early domestic science classes have long since become heads of families and the physicians find that these women can listen to and carry out diet instructions with understanding.

Two Kinds

Few people among the hundred millions who go to the movies regularly ever heard of Ethel Hall until she was killed doubling for Dorothy Dwan in a wild west production the other day. A high-priced star heroine's neck, of course, is as valuable as a diamond and precious and is risked in any such business as occupying an ornate boat adrift running, boulder-adoomed rapids. For this work the $50-a-week heroine is brought forward and given her chance.

Ethel Hall was to be rescued by a valiant hero, Tom Mix, while the cameras were shooting at long range so that the double deception could not be penetrated. The rescue, however, failed to function until after the double had sustained a fractured skull.

With The News

If there be yet scoffers who doubt that our civilization is moving at breakneck clip, he has but to learn that knitting mills now rival the weekly magazines in the speed with which fabric designs must be kept abreast of current news.

When a favorite movie star dies, the cotton mills must have a special weave and design of fabric on the market before the body gets decently chilled in the grave. When a racehorse becomes a national hero by repeated triumphs on turf or track, the designers must turn out a cloth bearing a woven head of this same nag.

Six days after Lindbergh took off for Paris, the mills were turning out "Welcome Home," and "Airway" prints. Ten years ago, looms used to turn out fabrics six and eight months ahead of the season. Today, this season's fabrics are out of style before the season arrives.

THE PLAINSMAN

It is with great pain and mental anguish The Plainsman reads that Texas convicts are dissatisfied over the new nine hour law, which has been placed into effect at state prison farms. Some how or other he just can't become reconciled to the fact that the lads and lassies who haven't done anything more than break a few laws are not happy in their state-operated homes. It is just heart-rending. The idea of making them work nine (9) hours every day in the week except Sundays is more than he can bear with calm demeanor. "In the language of the poets, something should be DID 'em!"

Just when did convicts get the power to object to rules and regulations of their prisons or prison farms? Is the state of Texas to operate its penal institutions along Utopian lines or are these institutions to be operated as they were intended—namely as places of punishment and detention? Who shall be pleased in the matter—the men and women who populate them because they have been found to be living menaces to society, or the rest of us who try, at least after a fashion, to be good, honest, upright citizens? The Plainsman does not believe these questions need a printed answer. Every intelligent person knowing that answer without having to refer to the public prints.

The Plainsman does not advise harsh, cruel or inhuman treatment of prisoners yet by no means does he permit his pendulum of calculation to swing to the other extreme and advocate turning the penal institutions into pink seas and otherwise social gatherings. He believes it will be best for society in the long run if every prisoner who serves a 'hitch' in a prison so dislikes that prison he'll never want to reenter that, or any other one. Turn the pens, farms and jails into delightful places of residence and you defeat their original purpose—namely to make them a place of penance and of punishment.

As The Plainsman sees it the great majority of the criminals must be subjected to stern discipline if they are at all to be turned from the paths of law violation. So-called humanitarianism will weep and wail for the soul of a hardened murderer or hijacker but listen to his pleas, turn him loose to again prey upon society and most of the time you'll find him made more daring, bold and callous by pampering than by the melting out of strict and unerring discipline.

You can't get the majority of criminals and at the same time protect society. Most of the lawbreakers must be MADE to understand that they will not be permitted to tamper with the law. The way to MAKE them see the light is through the medium of discipline and this discipline is best tempered by hard work. The average perpetual criminal has never been noted for possessing the work habit. He dislikes work more than any one thing and that dislike of times causes him to see easier methods of livelihood, which in turn call for the breaking of the laws and a prison term. These facts leave the question squarely up to society to answer. There are two ways out for society, namely, first to make the criminal work so hard and constantly while he is in prison that he'll decide, upon regaining freedom, that it is better to work less on the outside than to run risks of being returned to prison by breaking other laws; second to teach him while in prison, that honest labor is the basis of all comfort, satisfaction and success.

Prisoners being dissatisfied with a nine-hour work day looms as a huge joke to The Plainsman. Thousands of honest citizens, benefitting society, are working that long or longer every day without a murmur. If, as the Texans are so prone to shorten any work day let's move to shorten that of the man who is a good citizen instead of that of the man who has proved himself a poor one. The Plainsman does not claim to know how long prisoners should work but he does know that nine hours per week day is not too much—and he doesn't care a cigarette whether the prisoners like it or not.

CARTOONIST'S ART RECRUITED TO HELP DRY UP J. BARLEYCORN DOWN

By RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Writer. WASHINGTON, July 20.—The Anti-Saloon League and the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals are taking it back to the good old days.

In their own pure way, that is, plowing through the last month's mail, your correspondent discovers with the utmost astonishment that John Barleycorn, supposedly deceased, apparently is stirring in his grave.

The League and the Methodist Board, recognizing this fact, have gone back to the golden days before prohibition and resurrected some of their old standbys in the effort to keep old Jawn from squirming out.

Old Cartoons Dragged Out. If you do not remember the old-time temperance posters and cartoons which were used in the general onslaught on rum, depicting with awesome strokes the besotted workman, the skinny wife and the wizened children brought to their piteous plight by Demon Rum, then don't feel badly about it. You are about to enjoy the treat for the first time.

Comes for instance, by post, one of Wayne B. Wheeler's bi-weekly messages of gloom for the wets and good cheer for the dries. One half of the surface of the long envelope is devoted to a cartoon entitled "Shall He Enter?" One sees a large doorway. On one side are papa, mama, two kiddies, a doll, a pup, a kitchen table piled with dishes and a motto which says "God Bless Our Home." On the threshold, in the act of shaking hands with papa, is a well-dressed fiend labeled "Compromiser." Apparently he intends to stay awhile, for he carries a bag, which the league has inscribed "Beer and Light Wines Made Up 92 Per Cent of the Old Saloon Business." Behind him, "Compromiser," and quite out of sight of papa and mama and the kiddies, is a ghostly gang whose members are variously labeled "Saloon Keeper," "Dope Fiend," "The Old Sock," "Criminal," "Death," "Poverty" and an unnamed but attractive hussy whose significance is all too obvious.

YOUR OLD HOME TOWN

We should pass a city ordinance requiring every inhabitant of Abilene to make a journey of at least 500 miles in any direction out of the city, once every year.

Only in that way can we hope to bring to our people a realization of the beauties and stories of their own home city.

It isn't speaking disrespectfully of any other place on earth to make a suggestion like that. It is merely by way of saying that the people of Abilene live in one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and that they will fail to appreciate that fact unless they get about once in a while and gain a new perspective.

The gist of a French proverb (or is it Scandinavian?) is that "you can't see the forest for the trees." Most people can't see beauty where nothing but beauty exists. They can't appreciate symmetry without something rugged and uneven to compare it with. Beauty has a way of slipping under broken up by a bit of something less delicate.

Really, every city should compel its citizens to go about a little and behold the beauties and ugliness of other cities. Only in that way can they gain a just appreciation of their own particular city—whether it be the most marvellously beautiful city on earth. If they don't think it is, they should move somewhere else.—Abilene Reporter.

IN NEW YORK SEE-SAWING and DOWN BROADWAY

NEW YORK, July 20.—Fragments of squalor squat at the very feet of the lane of wealth which is Lower Broadway, jutting over a couple of blocks—short blocks—The elevated runs into the very windows of Morris street—the day's wash hangs upon the fire escape and children sit cramped behind the awning against the hot sun—More children perch on dirty window-sills—All day and all night the elevated trains shriek at them.

There is no yard—There is no street—Only a narrow sidewalk chattered with cheap shops and dark cafes—Below the elevated there is little light—Through the track ties penetrate filtered beams that draw check-futurist and children sit cramped behind the awning against the hot sun—More children perch on dirty window-sills—All day and all night the elevated trains shriek at them.

In no place is there less privacy than on those streets whose windows open directly upon the "L"—Spinning along on the "L" you get kaleidoscopic flashes, as in a dream, or a modernist movie—There is nothing self-conscious about those under observation—They give not the slightest attention to the eyes of the passing world, save at those times when they lean from the windows to pass the time watching the trains flash past.

A shop on Armenia, Syria and Turkey runs directly up the Battery off Broadway—How fast these colonies go American! Washington street once fed its kind and clothed its kind—Now the first cafe that hits the eye is, called "The Silk"—In the window is a large colored portrait—it shows the proprietor in the garb accepted by the movies—A ferocious mous tache droops from his mouth—His arms are folded—His white turban drops a veil about his shoulders—But there is a twinkle in his eye.

Those shops that once flashed the silks and costumes of the Orient now display vari-colored silk stockings of American mills side by side with rich shawls and draperies from Smyrna, Cairo and heaven knows where.—The girls in front of the fruit stands who once stood barefooted now flash shapely legs incased in checker-heeled silk stockings and their red, toe-turned boots have become high-heeled brown and black suzettes.—The candy store that parveyed Oriental sweets now has American-made boxes and colored American advertising.—Upstreet there still remains the window full of Turkish water pipes—Gold bowls and glass bowls and a cat lazily playing with the long rubber of a pipe stem.—The old church remains, with its ornaments in Syrian script—A Chinese restaurant has invaded the district and there are two lunch rooms that seem made to order for the typists who run over from the Broadway skyscrapers to have a little "atmosphere" with their meals.—This colorful old quarter stands at the cross-roads—Half Oriental—half American—In a few years perhaps it will swing completely into American ways or be torn down to make way for the expanding city.—GILBERT SWAN

Jungle Breath

By Den Lucien Burman

THIS HAS HAPPENED
Attempts have been made on the life of ELSIE MARRBERRY, an American girl owning considerable property near the little town of PORTO VERDE, in the central Brazil.

Several mysterious deaths have occurred, but so far she has escaped harm due to the shrewdness of her cousin and protector, VILAK, who masquerades as her attorney under the name of WILK. Vilak is a curious mixture of American and Oriental blood, is a student of criminology. He tries to persuade Elsie to leave the country, letting him stay with his friend, LINGOLN HUNNALLY, an elderly American chemist, to solve the mystery.

After her two-year-old orphaned nephew is kidnaped, to be found again by the alert Vilak, and another attempt is made on their lives, Elsie agrees.

She leaves Porto Verde in a motor car, but is overtaken by a band of floods. Messengers ride through the countryside, warning the natives. Vilak decides to go to the house of GAYLORD PRENTISS, a ruthless and forbidding man and an enemy of Elsie's, whom she suspects of a knowledge of the conspiracy against her. Nevertheless, she agrees it is their duty to warn him.

Vilak learns that the flood warning was a ruse to get Elsie out of the house and to inform him. The party is besieged in a small stone tower next to Prentiss' house by armed attackers. Vilak finally disperses them by dynamiting a dam and causing a real flood. When the water recedes they discover Prentiss has been killed.

The next day, TINKY, Elsie's two-year-old orphaned nephew, is kidnaped for the second time. A native reports Prentiss has been seen with a baby. The trail leads into the jungle and Elsie makes a desperate bid for a long journey in pursuit. With native trackers, they take up the trail. Calamity overtakes them. Two of their reliable natives are hurt, others desert, and two of their white friends are fewer victims. Treachery shows in their ranks. A great battle ensues. Elsie and Vilak emerge from the jungle and come upon a dying white man whom they had known in Porto Verde.

NOW BEGIN THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXVIII

With the aid of his two companions, who had come running up, he had done on the occasion of Barbetta's death, began to go and lower the stricken man to an attempt to bring air to this oxygen to his paralyzed body. He had scarcely begun when the other's hand on his shoulder told him that a further effort would be useless. Cicerone was dead.

"Must have been lying there at least a poor devil," Vilak murmured. "Can tell that by the amount of dust that collected on the under part of his clothing and that these birds are only bird-eaters, or he would have fared worse than he did." He tried the body to the side of the road and began heading stones on to protect it from the caribons.

As he first tried to look at him gracefully as children might see some coveted prize was stretched from them, then began to pout about his head, screaming wildly. He beat them off, and proceeded down the road.

A few hundred yards away, beyond a low rock which had prevented his beholding it before, he saw upon what at first appeared another body but on closer inspection proved to be a skeleton in fragments of blue trousers and orange peasant's shoes. A great pile of bones, decorated with a few shining shells. A glance at a few grimy papers in the man's pockets confirmed what he already knew: this was the skeleton of Detto's friend and constant companion, Pasquale Bronze, the patched cheek and enormous hat's man.

"Undoubtedly was stricken at the time as Cicerone," Vilak muttered. "Only Detto had more resistance and lasted longer. The rdg and ants have made quick work of him, poor wretch." Shortly before supper they passed the ruins of a small, tangle resting on a ledge of volcanic rock over them. The roof had long since disappeared. Half of the red walls had collapsed and many of the stones tumbled to the road below, but enough of the building remained to show that it had been sterner after those magnificent sea temples ruthlessly destroyed by the Spaniards under Pizarro, and whose ruins of great stones had together so expertly that no mortar was needed, still amaze the visitor to Bolivia or Peru. Three rocky doorways shaped, Inca fashion, like the head of an ox were all that remained of the red facade: a few hundred feet away, facing east, was a crescent of tall, white ones.

A mile farther on they pitched camp. A hot spring steamed nearby. Vilak shot a small, owlish animal much resembling a opossum. They ate, then he took a notebook and began studying a small calendar at the back.

"If my theory's correct, we ought reach our journey's end quickly," he muttered. "And have news of Tinky." He gazed at his cousin, who was flatly laying down cards on the sand before a crackling fire. He took her delicate hand and pressed it in his steely fingers. "I hate like the devil to do this to you. But I think I ought to. It's taken as much longer to get here than I expected. I'm going that everything will still be all right. But there's a possibility it won't. Our news may be bad news."

Her red lips grew faint; then she turned her arms around his gaunt neck and with her head against his began to weep silently. He turned to her soothingly, but she said nothing.

her grief, mechanically, dully, she played a few hands of Canfield, which Vilak permitted her to win, then lay down on a heap of grass to sleep.

When they stopped for a hasty lunch, they were only three or four miles from the mountain. Half a mile farther on, a high crumpling cylinder of stone, capped at the top like a mushroom, probably an ancient watch tower, overlooked the road. As they passed it they saw on the ground beneath a solitary caracantho watching a white-clad form crawling slowly toward the mountain. Vilak broke into a run. He caught up with the creeping figure. It staggered slowly to its feet.

"It was Liberty Potts. His hard, brutal face and the front of his grimy linen were covered with dirt of the road; his hair hung tangled and unkempt over his forehead. The movements of his hulk body came in quick wooden jerks. He was the mechanism of an automaton; his eyes were gleaming with the same feverish intensity which had marked the eyes of Tony Barbetta and Detto Cicerone.

He stared stupidly at Vilak. "Ugh," he muttered drunkenly. "What's directly before me? What are you doing here? ... What are you doing here? ... You are ... come here ... like me ... Dam fool ... They'll get yer ... Get ... He toppled and fell to the road dead.

Once more the travelers heaped up a few stones, then hastened on. They passed the foot of the mountain. The path became a road which led gradually up its steep red side.

They passed another mushroom-like watch-tower. The road turned sharply; they had reached the western slope. They climbed a low rock and looked beyond. Stretching along the horizon as far as the eye could see was desert, white, bleak, bare of tree or brush, except a few green cactus plants sparkling like emeralds directly below the mountain on which they stood became a wide plateau which dropped sharply to the desert. On this plateau was a city.

It was not a large city, occupying no more ground perhaps than the average American town of six or seven thousand inhabitants; but to the travelers who saw it in its entirety and in their course of weeks had seen only the rush huts of one hunting-village, it seemed a metropolis.

Three sets of ruined stone walls completely encircled it, the inner wall, which was the highest and in the best state of preservation, rising thirty or forty feet above the plateau. Within this, at the end nearest the travelers, was a low, ax-like doorway; this, too, like the walls, was directly below the mountain. Some distance behind was a great stone figure. In front of it a fire was burning. Behind it were two shafts of stone, then another building. These were the only erections on the mound, the only structures of any size in the city. Everywhere else was nothing but small stone adobe or rubble.

All the buildings were roofed with straw. Men and women, pigmies in the distance, were walking in the narrow streets.

"Inca ruins there, all right," Vilak grunted. "Very much like those I've seen in Ecuador. Somehow don't look quite right, though, even at this distance. Looks as if something's been done to them fairly recently."

They resumed their march. They passed a third hot spring, then a small geyser spouting vigorously a few feet into the air. The road turned again and began going through a deep ravine. The travelers could see tiny puffs of smoke coming out of a crevice in the slope above them. They walked in the ravine a few moments. Vilak muttered:

"Don't like the looks of this at all," he muttered to the old man. "That smoke, right as it is, this geyser, and these hot springs are obvious signs of subterranean activity. In an old volcanic region like this, it's pretty apt to mean sulphur dioxide and a few other, unpleasant, poisonous gases. There's not a leaf or a blade of grass here. Everything's been killed off. Look as if things had tried to grow but were destroyed before they had a chance. Doesn't it look that way to you?"

The chemist nodded eagerly. "Quite so—likely to be sulphur gases here. Almost certain—er—certain. Sulphur in any volcanic region. Even in water."

Vilak scraped his finger nail thoughtfully along the rock that which rose redly on both sides of the ravine. "This ravine's a natural channel. If there are any gases coming out anywhere above us, it would be nothing for someone from the city we've just seen and who's watching up on the mountains, to shift a couple of stones and let the gases drift down here whenever he felt like it. Make the city absolutely immune from attack. Might very well be that which has given the mountain its sinister reputation, particularly since the nice thing about some of these gases is that you can't either see or smell them."

"Frightfully, I'm quite skeptical about this spot. If we weren't probably as near one end as the other, I'd be strongly inclined to turn back and try to find some other way."

He began quickly walking forward again, the end of his long, hooked nose quivering as he capably sniffed the air. He had been walking for perhaps three or four minutes when he felt his nostrils tingle as though they had been touched with some invisible acid.

"Run!" he shouted to his companions, and turning swiftly to see that they had indeed, began darting toward the end of the ravine, now only two or three hundred yards away.

The stinging in his nostrils increased in its fiery intensity. With reeling brain, he turned again, to see Elsie fall motionless to the road. He turned back, reached her, stooped

Having uttered that threat, the man wheeled and plunged into the shadows. "Gosh!" gasped Willie. "Now we're in a scrape! He'll keep his word!" "Let him," said Jack. Morning came, sunny and bright. Birds sang in the trees. Jack cooked bacon and eggs while Darling and McNally got the rest of the breakfast ready.

They were so ravenous that it seemed no breakfast had ever tasted as good as that one. In the midst of it, however, they were interrupted. Three men, the sheriff, a deputy, and Elain Frye, descended upon them. "I guess I'll have to take you lads to the lock-up," said the sheriff, producing a document. "Frye's swore out a warrant for ye." "Told ye I would!" said Frye. (To Be Continued)

Baseball Mogul Celebrates 25th Year For Giants

(By Associated Press) NEW YORK, July 20.—Baseball's greatest manager, John J. McGraw, celebrated his 25th anniversary as manager of the New York Giants, who won ten National League pennants and three world's series championships for the nation's metropolis and who in 25 seasons at the helm has finished in the second division only once.

It was 25 years ago Tuesday that McGraw came to New York as manager of the New York Giants during the bitter days of a baseball war. McGraw at that time left the American League to return to his first love, but American league magnates turned out his job title to say tribute to his remarkable career.

Subject and Johnson Aid Col. Jacob Kuppel, owner of the Yankees, took a prominent part in the celebration and Sam Johnson, retiring head of the American League and once one of McGraw's bitterest foes, was an honorary member of the executive committee. Despite showers, 20,000 turned out at the Polo grounds where a parade was held in McGraw's honor with many notable in line. Mayor Walker of New York and the trans-Atlantic air hero, Commander Richard E. Byrd, and Clarence Chamberlin headed the march. Other celebrities were Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw Landis, President John H. Sawyer of the National League, Secretary John Barrall of the Minor League and Earl Fuchs, owner of the Braves. McGraw received numerous gifts of silver and flowers along with scores of congratulatory telegrams from all parts of the world.

The Phantom Pool of Kenia, largest fresh water lake of New South Wales, has moved nearly 500 ft. in the last ten years. At this rate it will take less than 40 years to reach the nearest village.

Exposition where we will have a large exhibit of dairy cattle. There could be no better animals shown as a whole from a Texas county. Miss Opal Wood reported that in prospect was in the communities among the women's clubs for the fair, and that already they were arranging to make many entries.

Hubbers To Play Plainview Here This Week-End

The Hubbers will meet the Plainview nine here Sunday afternoon at the Merrill Park in the first scheduled game with the club of Hale County this year. The Hubbers have suffered three successive defeats handed to them by the Amarillo Mets and Manager Sanders plans to drive the home-ings to victory over the Plainview aggregation.

The Plainview club consists of veterans of the game who are residents of that city and who have in the past played great baseball. It will be remembered by the local fans that several years back the Plainview and Lubbock nines battled some of the most interesting diamond-clashes ever played on the South Plains. Several of the veterans of the Plainview club are still in the game and will be on hand for the occasion Sunday.

At Lamesa Today Today the Plainview club is meeting Lamesa in the first of a new game series with the Lubbock aggregation. They will meet the Midland Cubs before returning to the South Plains. The Plainview crew has several games to their credit having defeated Hereford, Lockney, Floydada and other clubs of the North Plains.

Manager Sanders is doubtful as to who will lose the game for the home-ings Sunday as Terry worked the last two games and Taylor, ace hurler of the local staff, is away for this week. However, "Satch" Hill, ace hurler of the Mustang staff, is here and will be likely the moundman for the locals.

MUSKOGEE, Okla., July 20. (AP)—Two unidentified "tramps" were killed and two more seriously injured on a Katy freight train which was wrecked near Eufaula this morning, according to word received here. Lindbergh Is Off On National Tour

MITCHELL FIELD, N. Y. July 20. (AP)—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh in his Spirit of St. Louis, stopped off from Mitchell field at 12:50 p. m. today for Hartford, Conn., on the first leg of his three months air tour, which will take him to seventy five cities and every state.

Before starting he pointed out that his nation-wide air trip is in no sense to be a personal journey. It is being made, he said, solely to interest people in the possibilities of commercial aviation.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grand-mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

den slipped from his arms. He stretched out his hands heavily, like a blind man groping in the darkness; then slumped against the canyon wall, and dropped to the red ground. (To Be Continued) What unseen force is at work against Vilak and his friends? In the next chapter, there is a strange awakening. FERDINAND (Continued from Page 1) part and Ferdinand decided to remain in Bucharest sacrificing himself rather than as he thought sacrificing his country. For months King Ferdinand's body assailed by many maladies, has been withering away and his weight reduced to less than 100 pounds. Creates Government One of the last acts of Ferdinand's reign was to bring about the creation of a government under the Bratianos whom he trusted and who, with him, were influential in swinging Rumania into the World War on the side of the Allies—an act in which Ferdinand flung himself against his own kin, for he was a Hohenzollern. Only a few weeks ago Premier Averescu, to whom dictatorial dreams were credited in some circles, was removed from the head of the government and a more inclusive government was formed under Prince Stirbey, one of the richest Rumanians and long favorite at court, to hold rein until the Bratianos were ready to step into power again.

Those who know Rumania are quite unanimous in the conviction that the regency for young Prince Michael, Carol's son, will rule as provided by law and that there is almost no possibility of Carol ascending the throne.

Win Big Victory The Bratianos and the party candidates won an overwhelming victory in the recent elections to parliament and the Bratianos, now strongly entrenched in power, are solidly opposed to Carol as is Prince Stirbey, who with them form a little group of the richest and most powerful men in Rumania politically and economically.

Prince Michael, the six year old son of Carol, who is destined to become king when he comes of age, has not been a particularly healthy child. Twice this year his mother Helen has taken him to the seashore, presumably for his health, but actually, it is stated here, to strengthen his constitution, particularly his throat and lungs.

Wife Popular Figure Princess Helen, Carol's wife, who has conducted herself with great calm and dignified abstinence, is a popular figure in Bucharest, where apparently all classes sympathize with her.

What Queen Marie, who for years has been better known to the world than her more retiring husband, will do in European politics now that she is retired from the throne, is a question which already is being thought of, whether she will be as influential in international affairs with the regency ruling as she was sharing the throne with Ferdinand is the problem.

Government Firm In Carol's Edict

BERLIN, July 26. (AP)—The Rumanian government has wired Prince Carol the news of his father's death, at the same time telling him that Rumania is firmly decided to respect the decision of January 19, 1926, which accepted his renunciation of the throne and established the regency for young Prince Michael, says reports received here from Bucharest.

TEXAN, LIKELY MINISTER TO MEXICO SILENT

CREAGER REFUSES TO COMMENT ON STATUS OF HIS CASE

(By Associated Press) HOUSTON, July 26.—R. B. Creager, republican national committee man for Texas, declined to comment here today on rumors that he had been offered the post of ambassador to Mexico by President Coolidge.

"Three years ago before Mr. Sheffield was appointed I was offered the post," Mr. Creager said. "At that time I made my reasons clear why I could not accept the post. In the first place, the financial outlay required to maintain the position of an ambassador is too great in comparison with the salary paid. And too, it would mean the giving up of my business connections."

Declines Comment He declined to state whether his views on accepting the post had changed during the past three years.

"Conditions in Mexico are too chaotic at present to expect great things to be accomplished," he declared. "If Oregon is elected to succeed Calles, as he probably will, I expect conditions to continue to improve in Mexico. However, it is going to take years, possibly generations, for Mexico to establish a secure political and economical status."

Fire Department Draws Comment Of State's Men

Seven salaried, full time men and seventeen volunteers compose the Lubbock fire department, which has recently evoked the comment of state inspection officials and insurance representatives as to the efficient work of the organization. Chief W. E. Twitty, who has been in service for almost 14 years, is flanked by six men in his work. Guy Casey, Cecil Casey, Pat Hood, Bob Buckley, Barney Millsap, and J. M. Bryan are the full time workers with Chief Twitty.

One of the greatest needs of any department, for the effectiveness of training, is a drill tower, Chief Twitty believes. Fort Worth and Dallas have both aided this equipment to their training tools.

The tower, which might be made of brick, concrete, or frame, should be about five stories high, with windows and all the appearances of a large building. A 15-foot square drill tower, which can be erected at a relatively small cost, affords training in ladder work and wall scaling.
