Pair tries to salvage oil talks

Saudi, Kuwaiti ministers fear OPEC collapse

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates — The oil ministers of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait flew here Sunday in an attempt to salvage a July 28 ministerial meeting by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Informed sources said the two ministers were trying to avert a collapse at an upcoming meeting scheduled in Geneva as well as stem further downward pressures on oil prices, which have fallen by two-thirds since the beginning of the year.

The official Kuwaiti news agency said other ministers from the 13-nation OPEC may join Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Yamani, and Kuwait's oil minister, Ali al-Khalifah, in Abu Dhabi.

But United Arab Emirates officials said ther emirates' oil minister, Mana Said Otaiba, was visiting the United States and would not attend the meeting, despite the Kuwaiti news agency's report that Otaiba would join the meeting.

Saudi Arabia was reported earlier to have joined other OPEC members in shedding the production restraints of the cartel, which is believed to be already pumping more than 20 million barrels daily on the flooded international market. The Saudi newspaper Asharq al-Awsat reported last Sunday that nothing short of a miracle would produce agreement at Geneva and indicated that the divided cartel may be teetering on the brink of collapse.

The Saudi government, meanwhile, served an oblique warning to other producers that it has not "flooded the market with its full capacity" of around 11 million barrels daily. The warning was made in an official statement strongly denying Saudi responsibility for the price decline and reiterating the kingdom's readiness to accept a binding market-sharing agreement under a 16-million-barrel daily ceiling.

The statement did not give current Saudi production figures. It noted, however, that the OPEC agreement, which held Saudi Arabia to 4.35 million barrels a day and all OPECV producers to at total of 16 million barrels, is now widely ignored.

Midland child dies after liver transplant

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

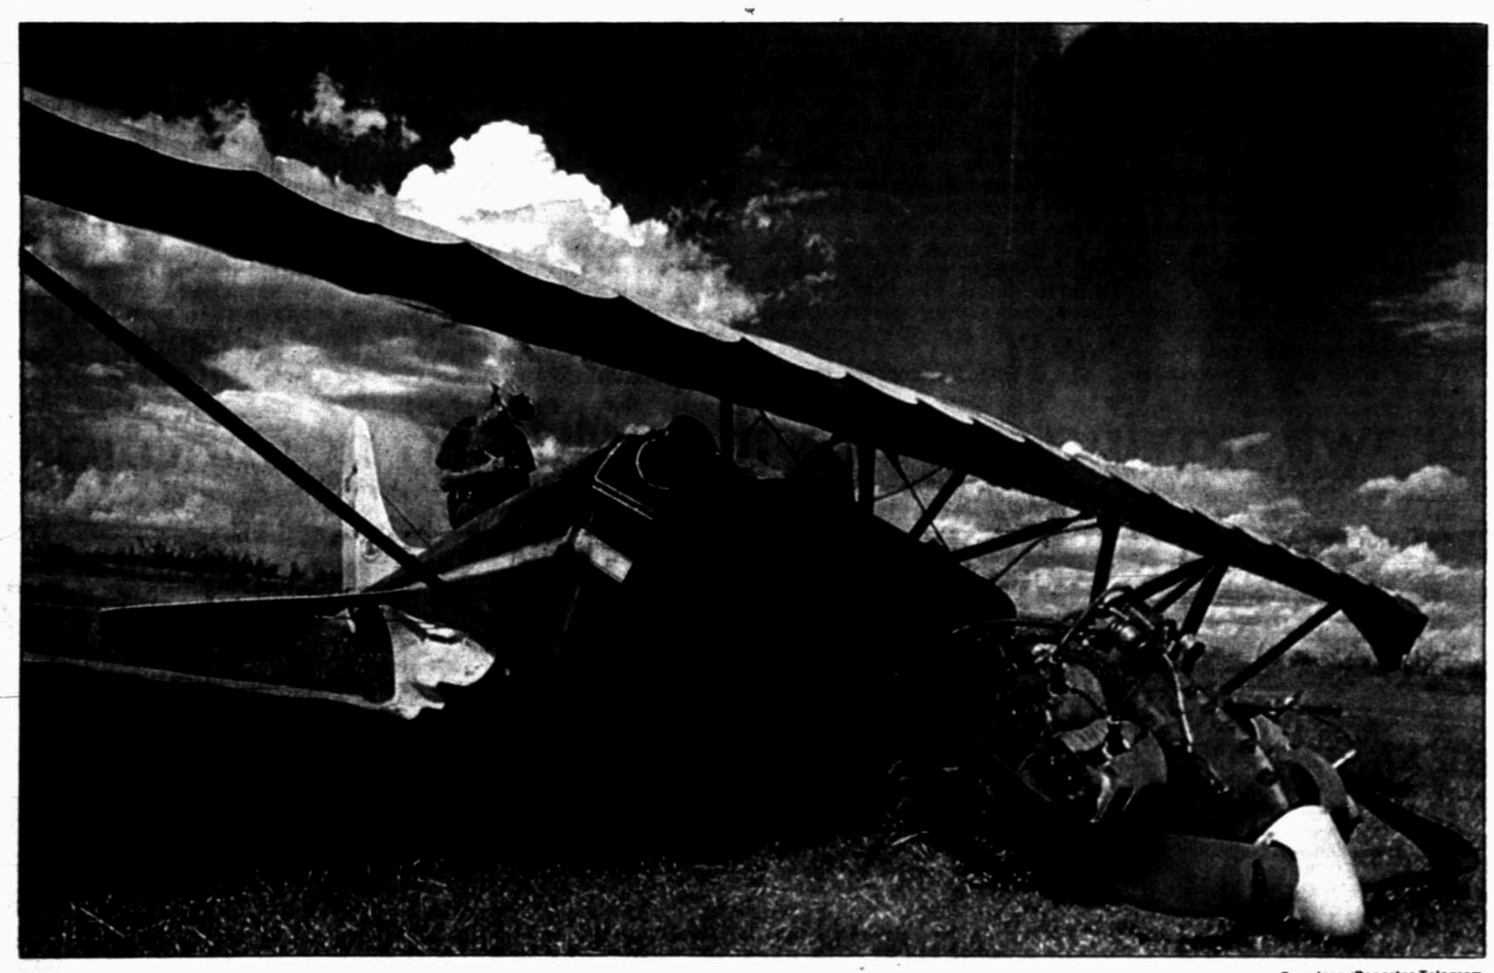

Though 5-year-old Cherie Shelburne's tiny body made it through the grueling 22-hour liver transplant surgery this past Thursday and Friday, it could not withstand the aftershocks.

Cherie of Midland suffered cardiac and liver failure and died at 2 p.m. Sunday in the pediatric intensive care unit at Children's Medical Center in Dallas, a hospital spokesman said.

Dr. Kenneth Hall, pastor of Crestview Baptist Church in Midland and trustee of the Cherie Shelburne trust fund, said the Shelburnes were due back from Dallas Monday afternoon.

"They're in shock, although this is something they knew was a real possibility," Hall said.

Local dentist injured when plane crashes

From Staff Reports

A 59-year-old Midland dentist was in serious condition early today at Midland Memorial Hospital following the Sunday afternoon crash of his biplane at a small airfield east of Midland.

Dr. David Conoley suffered head and internal injuries about 4:15 p.m. when the Rose Aeroplane Parakeet Biplane he was piloting attempted to make a low-level pass over the runway at Ryan Field, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety reports.

The front of the plane struck the ground east of the runway, then skidded onto the runway, reports said. The accident occurred approximately one-quarter mile north of Loop 250, just east of County Road 1150 North.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has been notified of the accident, the DPS reported.

West Texas ministers lead fight against pornography

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Ministers in this West Texas town will be back at City Hall on Tuesday as they work toward a city law that would ban sexually explicit literature.

"As far as my doctrinal stance, (pornography) is a perversion of a godly standard," said the Rev. Don Jackson of the Living Faith Church.

The group wants to label everything from Playboy magazine to romance novels to daytime soap operas as pornographic.

Jackson led a contingent of three evangelical ministers who last month asked the city for an pornography ordinance.

The ministers hope the city law will stamp out all forms of literature they consider to be pornographic. For Jackson, for instance, that includes not just hard-core pornography, but Playboy and Penthouse magazines, Harlequin romance novels, True Detective magazine and television soap operas.

"We'd like to see the standards of public morality return to the 1960s and 1970s," Jackson said.

More than two dozen ministers were listed on a petition of support for the proposed city law at the last appearance before City Council.

Views differ on causes of liability insurance 'crisis'

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

America doesn't get mad anymore — it gets even.

Such is the only common sentiment running through the platforms of doctors, lawyers and insurance executives who used to fight it out on the golf course, but now find themselves battling over a new green in the courtrooms — money.

The Heritage Foundation, a Washington D.C.-based public policy research institute, found in a recent study that lawsuits per 100 physicians doubled between 1979 and 1983.

But David Burrow, president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, counters the claim that Americans have become overlitigous by placing the burden on the insurance companies.

"When prime rates are high, as they were in the early 1980s, there are periods of high profitability. No "crisis" existed in the industry during 1980, 1981 and 1982 when the prime rate was in the 20 percent range.

"When the prime rate fell to minus 10 percent, as it did in 1985, combined with abnormal catastrophic losses (six hurricanes in 1985) the industry faced a new crisis.

"They had cut premium rates in the early '80s to obtain cash for investment purposes and concluded that by taking advantage of high interest rates, they could more than offset 'underwriting losses.'

"As the interest rates dropped, and the general economy receded in the mid '80s, the industry found itself in a trap of its own construction of having to pay predictable claims, as well as abnormal catastrophic claims, on policies they had underwritten at sub-normal premium levels," Burrow said.

Midland trial attorney Sandy Torres said that he has seen only a 9 percent increase in personal injury and malpractice cases from 1983 to 1985.

"I don't believe there is a litigation boom. I feel we are seeing a new society educated in consumer protection.

"His (the consumer) expectations of service and performance have gone up — many times to an unreasonable level," Torres said.

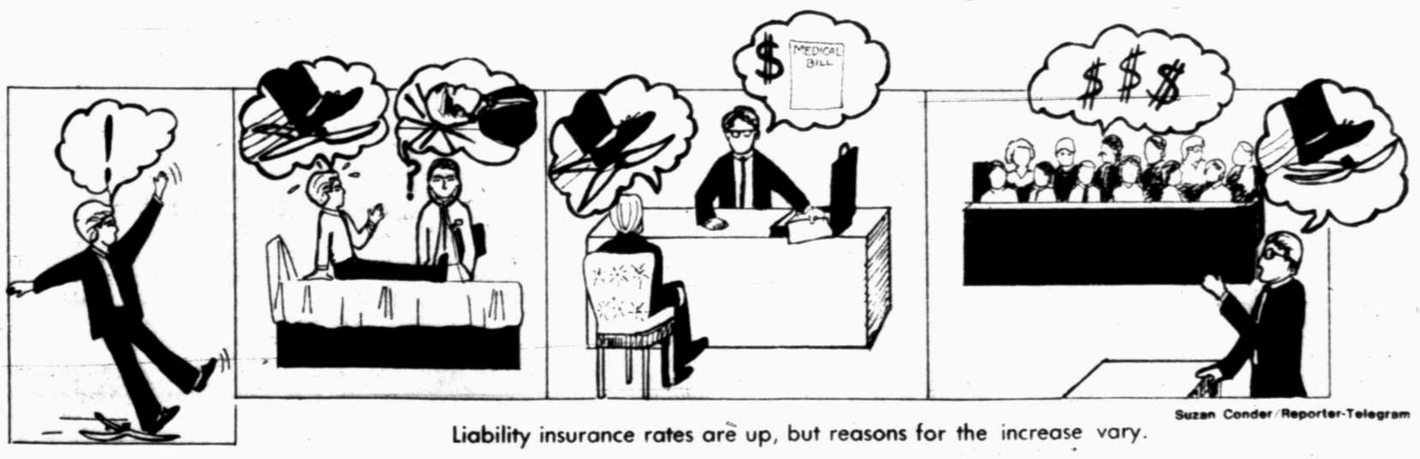

"The insurance companies are guilty of misrepresentation. They're blaming their financial crisis on lawyers and this 'over-litigous' society they believe exists.

"Any intelligent human being should realize that's not the only reason," Torres said.

The insurance companies remaining in the medical malpractice market, which now amounts to just 2 percent of all commercial carriers, have dramatically increased their premiums to cover soaring damage costs.

The Heritage Foundation study said the average medical malpractice jury award jumped from $220,018 in 1975 to $1,017,716 last year — reflecting a 363 percent increase and that while there were only three medical malpractice jury awards of more than $1 million in 1975, 1984 recorded 71 awards in excess of $1 million.

Tutu, Botha share 'forthright, friendly' talks on emergency

By ANDREW TORCHIA

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu met with President P.W. Botha today to discuss the nationwide state of emergency. Tutu said later they had a forthright, but friendly exchange.

The two men met for nearly two hours, one on one, in the president's office in the Union Buildings. It was their second meeting since the nationwide state of emergency was imposed June 12.

Afterward Botha led Tutu into a room where news photographers were gathered.

"They want your image and my image together," Botha told Tutu. The president made no statement to reporters.

"It could have been better but it was good that we met," Tutu said of their talks.

"It was a very friendly exchange, frank," he said. "Both of us — we didn't mince words. My own position with regard to sanctions also came into view."

The bishop said he and Botha also discussed the state of emergency and the thousands of detentions that have taken place.

To his suggestions on lifting bans on certain organizations and lifting the state of emergency, Tutu said, "The state president's response was that he is ready to deal with anyone who renounces violence. I say it should be unconditional."

■ Western labor leaders detained; Related stories — 2A

The two men discussed in particular some Anglican priests who have been detained, and Botha promised to have government ministers get in touch with Tutu about them, Tutu said.

Botha and Tutu last met in Cape Town on June 13. That session was their first meeting since 1980.

Tutu said after their first meeting: "We agreed we were Christians, anti-communists and anti-Marxists, and we had disagreements." Tutu said he objected to the security crackdown.

The emergency decree bans most public gatherings and gives police the power to detain people without charge. It also imposes restrictions on the media. Journalists may not detail the actions of security forces without permission, and may not report what the government considers subversive statements. The is also barred from naming detainees.

Since June 12, between 3,500 and 5,000 people have reportedly been taken into custody, and by government count, 164 people have been killed in political violence.

At a prayer service Sunday, Tutu, the bishop of Johannesburg, criticized violence by the state and by those fighting against it.

"We won't have peace coming, from the barrel of a gun, fired either by the police or security forces or the freedom fighters," he said. "We won't have peace with necklaces, coming from either the comrades or the vigilantes."

The "necklace" has become a common form of killing among rival blacks. A gasoline-soaked tire is placed around the victim's neck and set on fire.

"Comrades" is the name given in some areas to militant young blacks who oppose older more established figures in the communities. The "vigilantes," are blacks who, according to anti-apartheid activists, attack opponents of the government with authorities' tacit approval.

Tax, deficit talks heating up Congressional summer

By CLIFF HAAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' midsummer pace is heating up as legislators push on with an overhaul of the federal tax code, continue the battle against federal red ink and move toward a possible confrontation with President Reagan over U.S. policy toward South Africa.

Republican senators, wary of election-year fallout from Reagan's refusal to impose economic sanctions against the white minority government of South Africa, planned to meet with the president today to discuss the issue.

"We want to make it clear to the president on Monday that there's a lot of bipartisan concern," Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Sunday.

The president is due to make a speech Tuesday that aides are calling a major statement of U.S. concern about South Africa's system of apartheid under which that country's 5 million whites retain power and privilege and dominate 24 million blacks.

At issue on Capitol Hill is the administration policy of "constructive engagement" that emphasizes quiet diplomacy to pressure the South African government but shuns economic sanctions, which Reagan says would just inflict harm on South African blacks.

"We really need to know — and we support the president by and large — just what is constructive engagement. What has it accomplished and what will it accomplish in the next, let's say, six to eight months," Dole said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

"If we're really going to defend the administration policy, and perhaps we should, then we need to know precisely what's happened in the past several months" that would make it worthwhile to continue the current policy, Dole added.

He also hinted that the administration might send a representative to meet with the outlawed African National Congress, which has communist ties.

"I'm not certain who will meet or if there'll be a meeting, but I have a feeling that may be one of the areas that may be revealed" when Secretary of State George Shultz testifies before a congressional committee on Wednesday, he said.

He indicated that senators are interested in looking at sanctions such as withholding additional bank loans and investment in South Africa. But Dole said he does not favor going as far as the disinvestment called for in legislation passed by the House.

On the domestic front, House and Senate tax writers are resuming work today on a compromise version of sweeping legislation to overhaul the federal tax code.

In two days of meetings last week, the 22 bargainers did little more than stake out positions on the critical issues of increasing relief for middle-income taxpayers and increasing taxes for corporations.

"By about Thursday, we ought to start making major philosophical decisions," said Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the leader of the Senate negotiators.

Over the weekend, the bargainers mulled a list of about 100 proposed compromises on minor differences between the version of the tax legislation passed by each chamber. Hundreds of other differences — including tax rates and the fate of an array of popular tax breaks — must be settled before the conferees can meet an Aug. 15 target for completing their work.

While the negotiators ponder tax issues, various committees in the House and Senate will be working to come up with a three-year package of $24.2 billion in budget savings mandated by the fiscal 1987 spending blueprint Congress adopted last month.

In other fiscal action, the Senate could begin consideration as early as Wednesday on legislation increasing the government's borrowing authority by $244 billion, which would make the national debt limit $2.323 trillion.

Treasury Department officials have said the government faces default if the debt limit is not increased before Aug. 15.

Elsewhere, the House is tentatively set to vote Tuesday on whether to impeach Harry E. Claiborne, the chief U.S. district judge in Nevada who is serving a two-year prison term for his conviction on two counts of income tax evasion.

Labor leaders detained in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Three Western labor leaders were surrounded in a black township for a half-hour before being allowed to leave, and one said the incident showed "what it's like to be black and living in those places."

Reporters could not provide details of the incident Sunday in Johannesburg's Alexandra township because under the nationwide state of emergency declared June 12, they are barred from describing the actions of security forces.

One of the members of the group, which included AFL-CIO president Lane Kirkland, said in a telephone interview with a British domestic news agency that they had been surrounded and prevented from leaving by soldiers.

The three labor leaders are part of a delegation from the International Federation of Free Trade Unions visiting South Africa to seek the release of more than 200 black union leaders detained under the emergency.

In other developments:

— President P.W. Botha met today with black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu in Pretoria to discuss the emergency regulations and the increasing violence, a member of Botha's staff said. The two men last met June 13.

— A tear-gas canister smashed through the window of a car driven by the Rev. Allan Boesak as he drove away from a church Sunday. The anti-apartheid leader was not hurt.

— The government on Sunday said security forces killed two blacks, bringing the number of deaths under the emergency to 164. More than 2,000 people have been killed since the anti-apartheid struggle intensified in September 1984.

In addition to Kirkland, Norman Willis, general secretary of Britain's Trades Union Congress; and Ernst Breit, head of the West German union movement, visited Alexandra on Sunday.

Britain's domestic news agency Press Association quoted Willis as saying in a telephone interview from South Africa that, "While we were inside (a house) we were warned that one of the big army carriers ... carrying 25 soldiers, had arrived outside."

Press Association quoted Willis as saying that a total of about 100 soldiers arrived and prevented the union leaders from leaving. He said soldiers asked him whether he and the others were journalists, adding that the security forces apparently intended to take all reporters to a police station for interrogation.

Thirty minutes later, after the delegation was let go, they were stopped again and a lieutenant told them that they must first get permission if they wanted to go to another township, Press Association quoted Willis as saying.

"Just for a minute, foreign white VIPs had a little flavor of what it's like to be black and living in those places (the townships), and with no redress against uniformed people holding weapons," Willis told a news conference in Johannesburg.

Kirkland said that upon returning home, the labor leaders would press for international action against South Africa.

Common Market debates apartheid policies

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe met with his 11 Common Market colleagues today to discuss his efforts on the European trade bloc's behalf to urge change in South Africa's apartheid policies.

Last week, Howe visited Zambia, Zimbabwe, Mozambique and the United States. He is due to leave for South Africa on Tuesday for talks with President P.W. Botha and Foreign Minister R.F. Botha.

The meeting by the foreign ministers of the Common Market's 12 member nations comes three weeks after the trade bloc's government leaders sent Howe on his mission to urge dialogue and negotiations between South Africa's government and the country's black majority.

Britain and West Germany opposed the immediate imposition of comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa at the Common Market summit meeting held in The Hague, the Netherlands.

But the Common Market leaders outlined measures that might be taken in the future, including a ban on investments and on imports of coal, iron, steel and gold coins from South Africa.

The 12 leaders also called for the release of Nelson Mandela, head of the banned African National Congress guerrilla movement, and other black opposition leaders, and sent Howe on his mission to urge Pretoria to end apartheid.

Under the racial separation policy, South Africa's 5 million whites dominate the country's 24 million voteless blacks.

Black leaders in South Africa have called Howe's mission a waste of time, and the leaders of Zambia and Zimbabwe urged the Common Market to impose comprehensive economic sanctions without delay.

On his trip to South Africa this week, Howe is expected to again make visits to the country's black-ruled neighbors.

Today's regularly scheduled meeting of the Common Market's foreign ministers, of which Howe is the current chairman, comes at a time of growing controversy in Britain over Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's tough stand opposing sanctions against South Africa.

Mrs. Thatcher has repeated in recent weeks that she remains opposed to comprehensive, mandatory sanctions to force change in South Africa's policies, and has argued that they would hurt blacks.

Car bomb, rocket fire rattle Spanish capital

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A car bomb and explosions from rockets fired at the Defense Ministry shook the Spanish capital today, injuring at least nine people and filling the streets with smoke, police said.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but police said they suspected ETA, the Basque separatist group fighting for automony for the Basque region of northern Spain.

Government spokesman Manuel Moles said 12 rockets were fired at the Ministry of Defense. The preliminary investigation showed that six struck the facade, two hit parked cars, two exploded against walls, one exploded against a wall and the shrapnel hit a passing bus, and the 12th was fired but did not explode, Moles said.

One of the injured was Vice-Admiral Carlos Vila Miranda, deputy director of personnel in the Ministry of Defense, who was hit by flying debris when a rocket struck his office, Moles said.

No details were available immediately on the identities of the other injured people. It also was not known whether they were injured by the car bomb or the rockets.

Moles said the rockets were fired by remote control about one-quarter mile across the Paseo de la Castellana, Madrid's main north-south artery.

Police spokesman Daniel Herrero said the rockets apparently were aimed at the fourth-floor office of Defense Minister Narcis Serra.

The car carrying the rockets, a sedan, caught fired and exploded at 10:28 a.m., police said.

About 15 minutes later, a car bomb exploded near the wrecked sedan, police said. Both cars were parked in Manuel de Falla Street in an affluent neighborhood in northern Madrid.

Moles said the second explosion was believed intended to injure police officers who gathered to investigate the rocket blasts.

Police initially said they believed bombs had been planted in both cars.

Initial radio reports said police had found cars loaded with explosives parked near the residence of France's ambassador in Madrid, Francis Guttman. But police said later these reports were unfounded.

Police cut off streets and prohibited access to the area for fear of further blasts.

A week ago, 10 members of the paramilitary civil guard were killed when a car bomb exploded in the same area of northern Madrid. The device, set off by remote control, exploded as a bus carrying at least 40 civil guard trainees passed by.

On Saturday, France deported to Spain a suspected ETA member reported to have ties to ETA's "Spain-Commando," which set off last week's car bomb.

Brown having second thoughts on nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert J. Brown reportedly is having second thoughts about whether to accept a possible nomination as U.S. ambassador to South Africa, and an administration official says President Reagan is holding up the offer.

Brown was quoted in Sunday's New York Times as saying he wanted to consult with his family about accepting the nomination if it were offered and would make a final decision by today.

He was not reachable for comment until today, according to a woman answering the telephone Sunday at his home in High Point, N. C.

On Wednesday, when he went to the State Department to begin processing for the job, he said he would accept if it were offered. If nominated and approved, Brown, a public relations executive, would be the first U.S. black to be ambassador to Pretoria.

The Washington Post reported in Sunday's editions that Brown's proposed nomination was dropped after a White House meeting late Friday. Assistant White House Press Secretary Denny Brisley declined comment on the Post report.

An administration official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said "there's no green light" on the nomination because of questions concerning Brown's involvement with a Small Business Administration contract and opposition from organized labor leaders.

Brown's public relations company, B&C Associates of High Point, has engaged in union busting activities in North Carolina, the labor leaders claim.

Reagan had been expected to announce Brown's nomination in a speech at the White House on Tuesday, as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee begins hearings on the president's South African policy.

Congressional hearings in 1977 examined Brown's role in a partnership that received an $860,000 contract in 1972 for supplying food services to a California military base. The SBA contract was intended for disadvantaged minority firms. Brown at the time was an aide to President Nixon.

Brown, 51, has made several trips to South Africa. His last visit earlier this year with a group of black educators led to the development of a U.S. program to improve schooling for blacks there.

The present U.S. ambassador in Pretoria, Herman J. Nickel, has returned to the United States for what is being described as a long overdue vacation.

LIABILITY

Midland insurance agent Jim Mims has a favorite quote about this problem from a speech made by Lyndon Olson, chairman of the State Board of Insurance.

"The (insurance) industry has become a mirror of social excesses.

"Tort (any private or civil wrong for which the injured party may claim damages) is nothing more that the manifestation of our mores reflected by state legislators and senators," Mims said.

Mims adds that for the last 15 years, society has embarked on a notion of entitlement.

"Twenty years ago, if a man fell off a ladder, he felt clumsy for a few minutes, but then got up and got back to work.

"Nowadays, that man gets up from his fall and thinks, 'I'll sue the so-and-so who made the ladder!'," Mims said.

Mims said those complaining about higher premiums must remember that insurance companies don't sell anything.

"We underwrite the risk faced by the person or corporation by doing business. If it's not a good risk, the rates will be higher," Mims said.

Doctors aren't such good risks because it seems everyone is suing them these days, Mims said.

Recent studies by the American Medical Association found that 16 percent of all doctors were sued in 1984 compared with 3 percent in 1978.

The AMA study reported that medical malpractice premiums rose by 45 percent from 1982 to 1984, while holding that physicians' income rose just 9 percent.

A Midland family practioner, who asked not to be named, said he felt people who genuinely come into harm resulting from faulty medical care should be compensated in a reasonable manner.

"Medicine is not a science, but an art — albeit a scientific art. Doctors are human beings — things will slip."

But lately there has been a pretty expensive way of compensating the injured.

"The public doesn't realize that only $1 out of every $3 awarded goes to the injured party," the doctor said.

This family practitioner, who's never been threatened with a law suit, is paying 600 percent more today in premiums — up from $1,200 to $7,200 a year — than he did five years ago.

"I don't blame the insurance companies. I feel lucky I have insurance because many doctors don't. I also realize that we bear the brunt for the truly negligent doctors out there, too — that's the basic concept of insurance.

"The fault lies with the 'hyperlexia' or over-litigousness affecting America today," he said.

Malpractice premium rates have jumped dramatically for hospitals, as well as doctors, Ron Peterson, vice president of finance for Midland Memorial Hospital,said.

Figures show that MMH is paying almost 100 percent more this year than it did five years ago — up from $188,867 in 1981 to $369,000 in 1986.

Peterson credits the "contigency lawyers who will sue for anything" with the overall jump in rates.

"Just look at the number of lawyers in this county — it's skyrocketing. They have to do something to make a living," Peterson said.

"The private hospitals are suffering worse than the public ones.

"We're (MMH) covered by the Tort Liability Claims Act which limits our liability to $100,000 a claim because we're a political subdivision," he said.

As it stands now in Texas, there are no ceilings on pain and suffering or punitive awards or are there on attorney's fees.

Nor are there specific requirements forcing the plaintiff to prove that the doctor failed to provide treatment or care that any reasonable doctor would have provided under the circumstance, and that this failure caused the injury.

PORN

Catholic Bishop Michael Pfeiffer said he would counsel his flock that pornography is "unhealthy," but he said he was unable to comment on the proposed city law without more study on the legal issue.

Another minister, who wasn't identified, said he believes the city council to be morally obligated to pass the measure.

Failure to pass the ordinance "would show a lack of moral character on their part, and would reveal something about their personal lives," he said.

The committee's scheduled appearance this week follows the conclusion of the Meese Commission study and the issuance of its Report of the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography.

Inmate, 19, stabbed

MIDWAY (AP) — A 19-year-old inmate is in stable condition today after being stabbed in the rib cage after an alleged argument over tennis shoes, a prison spokesman said.

Mark Stephenson, 19, who is serving three years in the Ferguson Unit for three counts of burglary in Dallas County, was stabbed Sunday in the main hallway following the argument with another inmate, TDC spokesman Charles Brown said.

Stephenson is in stable condition today at a Texas Department of Corrections hospital in Galveston, Brown said.

His alleged assailant is a 22-year-old inmate serving eight years for sexual abuse and burglary in Harris County, Brown said.

Hall said that funeral services had not been scheduled as of today and that an autopsy was to be performed in Dallas.

Ray Davis of radio station KQIP had been spearheading an August 9 benefit for the Shelburnes to help offset the enormous expenses — $150,000 for the transplant alone — incurred as a result of her biliary atresia.

"We are looking into continuing the benefit merely because the family still needs the financial help," he said.

Also, C.F. Lawerence & Associates, Inc., donated the use of a corporate jet to fly the Shelburnes to Dallas for the surgery.

Richard Shelburne, her father, had said that when trying to explain to Cherie what the operation was for, he'd told her it was going to make her well.

As reported in the story about Cherie's transplant in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram, Shelburne had later been wary of the remark.

He had said, "...you know that can be a tall promise to keep."

After royal wedding, abbey will open to visitors

LONDON (AP) — Fifteen hundred select people have been invited to the wedding Wednesday in Westminster Abbey of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson, but after it is over the doors will remain open for the uninvited to see what it was like.

"We wanted people to see the setting — the flowers, the blue carpet and the wedding registers," David Dorey, the dean's verger at the abbey.

The abbey will be open Wednesday afternoon and the next two days to visitors. The abbey normally averages about 3 million visitors a year.

Arranging the wedding flowers was a two-day job, and because of other preparations and rehearsals the abbey was ordered closed for four days prior to the wedding. Daily Church of England services of Holy Communion, matins and evensong were shifted to St. Margaret's Church on the abbey's north lawn.

Queen Elizabeth II, Andrew's mother, was married and crowned in the abbey. Since William the Conqueror in 1066, all English monarchs have been crowned there except for Edward V who was murdered in 1483 and Edward VIII who abdicated in 1936 before the formal coronation.

The abbey is near Westminster Bridge and the Houses of Parliament. Its site has been used by the church for 1,000 years, 300 years before Henry III rebuilt the abbey in the 13th century.

Twelve kings and 16 queens are buried in the abbey and there are many other burials and about 2,500 memorials.

It's not an abbey any more, so it has no monks. It's not a cathedral, so it has no bishop.

It is run by a dean. Its official name is not Westminster Abbey but the Collegiate Church of St. Peter in Westminster.

"It's the closest thing we have to a national shrine and it's a very busy place," said Dorey.

"With voluntary helpers and bellringers, we have a staff of about 200 and everyone has something to do with the wedding."

Dorey, 48, chatted with a reporter in his tiny office near the west door as crowds of tourists streamed in. The abbey estimates that 80 percent of visitors are Americans.

Although they wear ankle-length black cassocks, Dorey and the other seven vergers are not clergymen.

"We are laymen who assist the priests to do their jobs," Dorey said. "We prepare the altars, books and vestments and lead the procession of clergy and choristers for the services."

The vergers are responsible for security and look after the eight sets of doors around the building.

"The abbey's mood changes according to what's going on," Dorey said.

"It's wonderful when the organ is going full blast, the trumpets are sounding and the TV lights are full on. And then at night it's all brooding silence."

Algernon Greaves, Dorey's predecessor, thought that the abbey was "really too famous for its own good," and complained that soft-drink bottles and candy wrappers were left on the floor.

"You might not think it but the abbey wears out," he said. "The flagstones crack and have to be replaced."

The most frequent question asked by visitors is where is Henry VIII buried, said David Mason, the abbey's deputy chief marshal.

"Henry's at Windsor," said Mason. "He's so famous because he's a sort of monster figure, with his six wives and two of them beheaded."

One of the voluntary helpers answering questions this summer is Stephen Harrison, 21, from Shreveport, La., a student of English history at the University of Virginia.

"I'm interested in architecture as well so I've found a post for both in the abbey. Being here among it all the power of absorption is wonderful," he said.

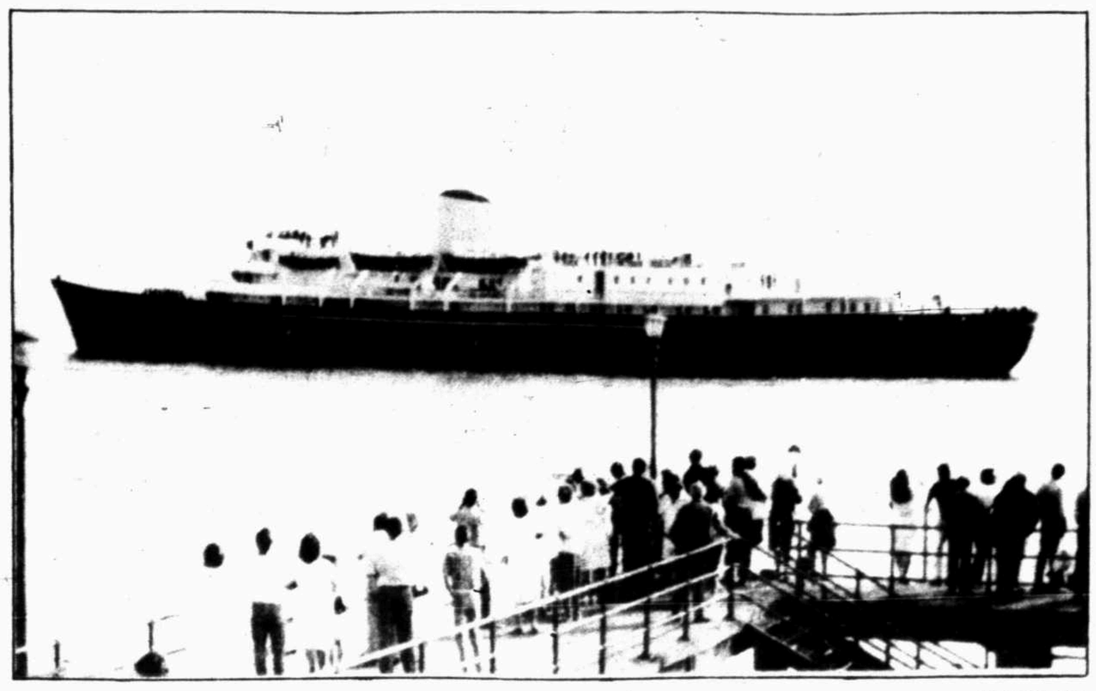

Entrance to the abbey is free, but there's a charge of 1.50 pounds ($2.30) to go beyond the nave.

"We can only keep the abbey open because our visitors are so generous," said Dorey. "It costs 1.25 million pounds ($1.9 million) a year to run and the heating bill alone is colossal.

"Despite the bustle, we are anxious to make it a living church, so every hour there's an announcement by a priest asking visitors to join him in one minute of prayer."

If Miss Ferguson follows tradition for brides at the abbey, she will place a bouquet on the grave of the unknown warrior.

The marble slab on the grave, which also contains soil from the battlefields of World War I, reads: "Beneath this stone rests the body of a British warrior unknown by name or rank, brought from France to lie among the most illustrious of the land."

Nancy Reagan in London for Prince Andrew's wedding

LONDON (AP) — Dozens of armed police and American Secret Service agents provided strong security as Nancy Reagan arrived in London Sunday night to attend the wedding of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson.

The wedding is to be held Wednesday and President Reagan's wife it to be in England for four days.

She arrived at Heathrow Airport in the "Executive 1" Boeing 707 with a 20-member entourage.

Security measures included marksmen on the roofs of buildings adjacent to the VIP area, dog patrols and officers armed with machine guns.

Mrs. Reagan, wearing a navy blue skirt and a red jacket, smiled as she stepped from the jetliner and walked to an armor-plated black limousine for the drive to Winfield House, the American ambassador's residence in Regent's Park.

She was asked how it felt to be in England and replied "Love it." She then was asked if she was looking forward to the wedding and she said, "I should say so."

As she strode briskly towards the car, the first lady stopped to kiss U.S. Ambassador Charles Price and his wife Carol and then shook hands with Foreign Office protocol officer Diane McGill, who was representing the British government.

Traveling with the president's wife were secretaries, a hairdresser and a personal photographer.

More anti-drug troopers to join Bolivian cocaine lab raids

TRINIDAD, Bolivia (AP) — Police and U.S. support troops who came up empty-handed in their most recent attempts to find and raid secret cocaine labs, will be reinforced today with 200 more officers from Bolivia's elite anti-drug squad, a source said.

Dense clouds and light rain swept over northern Bolivia's tropical Beni region Sunday, blocking further helicopter flights in the U.S.-backed campaign to smash this Latin American nation's giant cocaine industry.

The joint anti-drug force used the day to review intelligence reports in the operation, aimed at eradicating the clandestine processing centers that process the leaves of the coca plant, the source of cocaine.

Weather is unpredictable in the Beni region, a vast expanse of jungle and grassland, and forecasters said the cloud cover could last for days. U.S. and Bolivian officials refused to disclose if any strikes at particular targets were scheduled for today, weather permitting.

The rainy weather also forced a delay in the movement of police reinforcements to Trinidad, in the heart of the operational area and 260 miles northeast of La Paz, the capital, a police source said.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said 200 more members of the U.S.-financed and trained police unit known as the Leopards are scheduled to arrive at Trinidad airport today, after their flight was postponed Sunday afternoon.

The 200 additional Leopards, who are trained for anti-narcotics operations in the countryside, would bolster a 72-man contingent already participating in the operations.

About 160 U.S. military pilots, flight assistants, maintenance workers and other armed forces personnel were flown in last week from the U.S. Southern Command in Panama to give logistical and communications support to the Bolivians.

Also shipped in were six Black Hawk assault helicopters used to ferry the Leopards on raids, only one of which has proved fruitful in 2½ days of activity.

Raids began Friday with a successful strike against a clandestine cocaine laboratory north of the Josuani ranch, a staging base 140 miles northwest of Trinidad.

The lab, which included housing for about 75 workers, apparently had been evacuated several days earlier, according to Bolivian officials.

Three subsequent raids were failures. A Friday afternoon expedition was unable to locate its target and was forced to return to the ranch, a former cocaine processing center shut down by Bolivian police last year.

Two raids Saturday morning on suspected processing centers turned up nothing.

Four reconnaissance flights were then staged in an effort to improve intelligence, officials said. Two took place Saturday and two others Sunday morning, before heavy clouds forced suspension of flights.

More punishment recommended in Chernobyl negligence

MOSCOW (AP) — Kremlin leaders, blaming gross negligence for the Chernobyl nuclear accident, fired four officials, but some Soviet citizens suggested that those responsible should be punished more severely.

According to a report from the ruling Politburo published Sunday, 28 people were killed as a result of the April 26 accident, 30 remain hospitalized and 173 others suffer from radiation sickness.

The report said the accident at the nuclear power station in the Ukraine caused $2.8 billion in damage.

The nation's power supply was disrupted, local factories and farms forced to close, and 400 square miles of land in the northern Ukraine and southern Byelorussia were contaminated.

At least 100,000 people were evacuated from their homes around the plant.

Three government officials and a man involved in designing the No. 4 reactor were fired and several may face criminal charges as a result of the reactor explosion and fire at Chernobyl, the Politburo report said.

The report, published in the official media the day after the Politburo met in special session to discuss history's worst atomic power disaster, said the accident resulted from gross negligence when workers conducted poorly supervised, badly planned and unapproved experiments on a turbine generator.

Two dozn Soviets questioned about the report Sunday in Moscow's Gorky Park seemed less concerned with the economic consequences than with the punishment of those responsible.

"I'd give them all the highest punishments they could get," said a young man walking with his toddler son. "If the death penalty is possible, that would be okay," added the man, who was in civilian clothes but said he was a member of the military.

"The measures taken could have been sterner," said Yevgeny, a history student visiting from the town of Kalinin north of Moscow.

"This is something that affects not just our generation, but future generations as well," added his companion Ira, also a student.

Officials fired included Yevgeny T. Kulov, head of the State Committee on Safety in the Nuclear Power Industry; G.A. Shasharin, a deputy minister of power engineering and electrification; and Alexander G. Meshkov, a deputy minister of medium-sized machine building.

A reference book published by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency says the ministry to which Meshkov was attached runs some military-related programs. Kulov also worked there before being named to head the safety committee when it was established in 1983.

Soviet media have not mentioned any military function of the Chernobyl plant. Planecon Inc., a private group of economic analysts in Washington, has said Chernobyl-type graphite-moderated reactors can produce varying grades of plutonium.

New York Times correspondent John Burns waves to reporters from a Chinese detention center.

Wife of reporter held in China allowed to visit

PEKING (AP) — New York Times correspondent John Burns, detained by Chinese authorities on suspicion of spying, is in good spirits and says the accusations against him are unfounded, his wife said after visiting him today.

It was the first time Burns' wife, Jane Scott-Long, was allowed to see him since he was taken to Peking's Paozhu Detention Center on Friday.

As reporters watched through a gate, Burns, wearing a tie, picked up his two young children and kissed his wife goodbye in the compound of a Peking Public Security Bureau branch office, where the meeting took place.

British and U.S. officials saw Burns, a 41-year-old Briton, in separate 30-minute meetings earlier in the day. Security officials were present.

New York Times Executive Editor A.M. Rosenthal and Foreign Editor Warren Hoge were scheduled to meet Burns in the afternoon. Rosenthal and Hoge waited with reporters while Mrs. Scott-Long met her husband.

"He's in very good spirits," she said after the meeting. "He's not sure how long he's going to be held.

Chinese authorities say Burns is being investigated on suspicion of gathering intelligence while on a motorcycle trip through restricted areas of central China earlier this month.

Hostage's sister discusses plight with Syrian foreign ministry official

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — The sister of kidnapped American journalist Terry Anderson today met with a Syrian Foreign Ministry official to discuss the ordeal of her brother and four other American captives in Lebanon.

Issam Hayyani, head of U.S. department in the Foreign Ministry, was the first Syrian official to receive Peggy Say since she arrived in Damascus on Sunday seeking help in freeing Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, and the other hostages.

Mrs. Say, 45, of Batavia, N.Y., told reporters after meeting Hayyani that she was carrying letters from the hostages' families thanking Syrian President Hafez Assad for his support.

The five captives have been missing for between one and two years, and are believed held by Shiite Moslem extremists loyal to Iran.

During their meeting, Mrs. Say said she talked with Hayyani about appointments she would like with other Syrian officials.

Mrs. Say began her trip in Athens, Greece, last week and stopped in Cyprus before arriving in Damascus. She is accompanied by Charles J. Lewis, AP's Washington bureau chief.

Mrs. Say said she would like to meet with Assad, but would not be disappointed if that is not possible.

"We're interested in talking to any of the Syrian officials to pass on to President Assad our appreciation and hopefully to get some guidance from them," she said in a telephone interview with the AP in Washington.

Syria, which maintains about 25,000 troops in eastern and northern Lebanon, is regarded as the country's main power broker. It has denied any direct relationship with the kidnappers, but officials in Damascus have said Syria has been trying to get Iran and Shiite leaders in Lebanon to bring pressure to bear on the kidnappers.

Little known ending: Recovery of dead

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — As the S.S. Carpathia neared the harbor of New York City with the survivors of the wrecked luxury liner Titanic on board, another ship steamed out of Halifax, Nova Scotia, toward the Titanic's grave. Its mission — the dead.

More than 1,500 people perished in the waters of the North Atlantic when the Titanic hurled itself at 22 knots onto an iceberg on the night of April 14, 1912. Bodies of its victims dotted the ocean after the disaster, and the Titanic's owners — the White Star Line — chartered the little cable steamer MacKay-Bennett to recover and return the remains to Halifax for reclamation or burial in the city's cemeteries.

The search for the dead and their burial is a little-known aspect of the Titanic story. Some authors have indicated that only one body or no bodies were recovered. Overshadowed by the disaster itself, and by the stories of the Titanic's survivors, the search for the dead barely entered public consciousness.

But according to accounts of those aboard the MacKay-Bennett, the mission was an unforgettable conclusion to the story.

Two days after the sinking, the MacKay-Bennett, stacked with coffins and packed with ice, quietly embarked on its mission.

Fog and bad weather slowed the trip. The MacKay-Bennett arrived in the vicinity of the disaster a week after the Titanic hit the iceberg. The ocean was strewn with wreckage. Small icebergs known as growlers hid dangerously in the swells. During the middle watch, the first bodies were sighted. It was agonizing. Many of them were crushed and disfigured beyond recognition. Some women were found with infants locked in their arms. Other bodies, faces distorted with terror, clung to objects they had grasped in their anguish. Still others looked calm, as if asleep.

On Sunday, the first of the bodies were brought aboard the MacKay-Bennett. There were 51 of them. They were numbered and identified where possible, their property marked and stored. Some were embalmed and others were placed in ice-filled holds. That evening, the burial of the dead began.

From the diary of Frederick Hamilton, engineer, the MacKay-Bennett:

"The tolling of the bell summoned all hands to the forecastle where thirty bodies are to be committed to the deep, each carefully weighted and carefully sewed up in canvas. It is a weird scene, this gathering. The crescent moon is shedding a faint light on us, as the ship lays wallowing in the great rollers. ...For nearly an hour the words 'For as much as it hath pleased...we therefore commit his body to the deep' are repeated and at each interval comes splash! as the weighted body plunges into the sea, there to sink to a depth of about two miles. Splash, splash, splash."

For those buried at night — the dead who could not be identified — interment in the sea was suitable and touching, for many of them were thought to be members of the Titanic's crew.

For four more days the MacKay-Bennett drifted through miles and miles of the Titanic's wreckage, finding amidst the debris and ice sometimes solitary corpses, at other times, great clusters of them, appearing strangely like seagulls as they bobbed peacefully in the swells.

When fog made operations impossible, bodies already on board were searched, tagged and stowed away. It was hard on the men of the MacKay-Bennett.

Hamilton wrote: "Noon. Another burial service held and 77 bodies follow the others. The hoarse tone of the steam whistle reverberating through the mist, the dripping rigging, and the ghostly sea, the heaps of dead, and the hard weather-beaten faces of the crew, whose harsh voices join in the hymn tunefully rendered by Canon Hind, all combine to make a strange task stranger."

Holes filling with the dead, the MacKay-Bennett called for help and was joined by the cableship Minia, also stocked with coffins and ice.

The MacKay-Bennett, with as many dead on board as it could accommodate, headed for home. It carried 190 of the Titanic's dead and left 116 buried in the sea. Not all bodies badly deteriorated or without identification were left behind in the North Atlantic. It was later disclosed that all those thought to have been first-class passengers, no matter what their condition, were kept on board.

On April 30, the MacKay-Bennett approached the dockyards of Halifax. The city was prepared. Flags hung at half-staff, and coffins and hearses lined the piers as undertakers, reporters, police and families of the victims crowded together in the chilly Canadian morning.

For hours the unloading and removal proceeded. Crowds of onlookers, kept away from the dockyards, lined the hearses' route and silently paid their respects as the procession passed on its way to the Mayflower Curling Rink at the edge of town.

There, in the makeshift morgue, friends and relatives of the victims had begun arriving to claim their dead.

The first body claimed and removed from the rink was that of John Jacob Astor. The tiny crimson death certificate, barely adequate to the task, described his tragedy:

"Name of deceased — John Jacob Astor. Sex — M. Age — 47. Date of death — April 15, 1912. Residence, street, etc. — 840 Fifth Av., N.Y.C. Occupation — Gentleman. Married. Cause — Accidental downing. S.S. Titanic at sea. Length of illness — Suddenly. Name of physician in attendance."

Likewise, the body of Emil Brandeis, the Omaha department store magnate, was claimed and taken away. Frank Newell, busy embalming bodies at the rink, unexpectedly encountered the body of his uncle and collapsed from the shock. Of the 209 bodies eventually brought to the rink, only 59 were claimed and shipped away for burial.

Rediscovered ship stern seamen's next target

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — The freshly rediscovered stern of the Titanic, about 200 feet from the main part of the sunken vessel, is the next target of the expedition probing the remains.

Robert Ballard, leader of the expedition, says he hopes to find the name of the Titanic's English home port, Southampton, still emblazoned on the stern when he and other expedition members dive today in the expedition's tiny submarine, Alvin.

"At least one third of the ship, the stern section, is intact," Ballard reported Sunday when he announced the discovery by radio from his research vessel, Atlantis II, to the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution here.

"We were very surprised to find so large a section intact and sitting up in the water. Everything else was so damaged."

Ballard estimated the stern section was about 250 feet long and said it was discovered in photographs taken Saturday by a remote-controlled camera that was towed from the Atlantis II.

"We're going to go down tomorrow and find the stern section and try to see the name Southampton on the stern," said Ballard.

He said the stern section was in the debris field, a 660-foot stretch of ocean floor where many of the Titanic's objects fell as it sank to the bottom, 2½ miles below the surface of the Atlantic Ocean and some 450 miles southeast of Newfoundland.

Ballard also reported finding an engine room telegraph and more ship boilers.

The photographs of the stern were developed Saturday night or Sunday morning.

Southern cities bid for Democratic convention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hello again, South, the Democratic Party seems to be saying in its list of finalists for the party's 1988 national convention.

The Democrats also might be saying goodbye to big labor, one mayor suggested at a weekend site-selection meeting. But another mayor said it was high time to be wooing the South if the party hoped to regain the White House.

Out of eight cities that made formal bids for the convention over the weekend, the only two eliminated in a Saturday vote — Detroit and the Cleveland suburb of Brook Park, Ohio — represent big-union states in the now-rusting manufacturing section of the country.

But among the six finalists are three Southern cities — Houston, Atlanta and New Orleans — in a region that has slipped away from the Democrats after solidly supporting the party for decades.

Even if none of the three is chosen in the end, inclusion among the final six shows their region isn't being ignored by a party preoccupied with organized labor — as some officials contend happened in 1984.

The other finalists include two noted convention cities, New York and Washington, with only Kansas City, Mo., to represent the nation's heartland and no West Coast cities even given a mention.

The Democratic site selection committee, which trimmed the list, is to visit each of the final six cities before choosing a site for the July 1988 convention around the end of the year.

The committee's chairman, Nathan Landow, said in an interview after the decisions were announced, "The political questions were not considered in the analysis we made."

But at least two mayors presenting their cities' bids talked as if that were far from what they believed.

Washington Mayor Marion Barry, apparently fearing his city might be squeezed out, said at one point, "Let's not get tricked into that argument that the party has to go south to win the South."

And he suggested that Atlanta, Houston and New Orleans were in states inhospitable to unions, arguing, "We do not want to take our convention to a state where labor does not want us to go."

On the other hand, New Orleans Mayor Sidney Barthelemy complained one day earlier that "we have not carried the South since Jimmy Carter."

He said the convention should be brought to the South — preferably to his own city — because of "the political power that it will give the Democratic Party to regain the White House."

He was joined by Rep. Lindy Boggs, D-La., who said that in New Orleans, "We will welcome you to say that the South will indeed remain Democratic."

Landow said that although "at some point the political questions will come into it," Saturday's decision was based only on cities' abilities to put on the convention.

Detroit officials had conceded they couldn't guarantee as many nearby hotel rooms as the committee asked. And committee members seemed wary of awarding the convention to Brook Park, which is a lengthy bus or car ride from Cleveland hotels.

Officials of all eight cities said they could provide spacious convention centers, grand hotels and fine food for delegates.

Reagan willing to address all aspects of nuclear arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is willing to negotiate on all aspects of nuclear arms control raised by recent Soviet proposals, according to published accounts of a draft reply the president has approved to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

If Soviet reaction to the letter is favorable, administration officials believe it is likely a U.S.-Soviet summit could be held in Washington before the end of the year, The Washington Post says in today's editions.

In the draft letter, however, Reagan does not respond directly to Soviet proposals to ban deployment of space-based defensive weapons for 15 to 20 years, The New York Times, also in today's editions, quotes sources as saying.

That, along with the restriction of space weapons research to laboratory testing, has been a Soviet condition for agreeing to major cuts in intercontinental missiles and bombers.

The Times says the president has decided against including any explicit overall formula to limit defenses against missile attacks in return for deep cuts in offensive nuclear forces. The Post says the Pentagon and the State Department are still at odds on the subject.

The draft letter deals with a wide range of issues, including nuclear arms, chemical weapons, the military balance in Europe and regional issues such as Central America and Afghanistan, the Times said.

Secretary of State George Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, Natonal Security Adviser John Poindexter and White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan all helped author the draft, and Reagan signed off on it Friday, according to the Post.

The letter is in reply to a message from Gorbachev on June 23, and also responds to proposals presented by the Soviets in the last round of the Geneva arms talks.

Meanwhile, Reagan has sent senior arms control adviser Paul H. Nitze to Europe to brief allied governments, an administration official said Sunday.

Reagan also assigned Edward L. Rowny, another arms control adviser, to Asia to brief friendly governments there, said the official, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

The president has sent the two advisers on similar missions before.

Nitze met with West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn, according to West German officials who demanded anomymity.

Officials said Friday that Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and Shultz were likely to meet at the special session of the U.N. General Assembly in late September to work on a summit agenda.

Officials tour baked farms to assess heat's damage

Associated Press

With little hope of relief from a blistering heat wave that has baked parts of Dixie in 100-degree temperatures for 15 days, federal officials moved in today to tour farms where drought has caused $700 million damage to crops.

A U.S. Department of Agriculture task force was scheduled to leave Atlanta this morning for a tour of farms in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas to assess drought damage to crops and livestock.

The federal officials were to meet early today with Georgia farm leaders at a hotel near the Atlanta airport before heading into the parched fields.

"We prayed for a gentle, soothing rain for the land, a rain without lightning and storm, a rain that will nourish the land and refill the ponds," Lutheran Rev. Henry "Hank" Moody Jr. said Sunday after leading about 100 people in prayer on the steps of the county courthouse in rural Lexington County, South Carolina.

Forecasters offered little hope their prayers would be answered. The National Weather Service predicted scattered thundershowers in North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama today or Tuesday, but no rain for South Carolina.

Sporadic storms have replenished water supplies in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia, but that did little to help farmers ravaged by the worst spring drought on record, the service said.

"Most of it just runs off," said forecaster Joe Cefaratti.

Temperatures from the low 90s to the low 100s were expected for the next two days in a sweep from the Gulf coast to the Central Atlantic coast.

On Sunday, temperature records were tied or broken in at least 17 cities, the National Weather Service said. In 15 of those cities the mercury climbed to 100 or above.

The temperature crawled past 100 across much of Georgia on Sunday, hitting a record 104 at Augusta, 106 at Macon, and 102 in Columbus, which saw its 45th consecutive day of highs at 90 or above and 15th consecutive day where the mercury hit at least 100.

In Savannah, Ga., it was 105 degrees Sunday, the coastal city's hottest day this century, tying its all-time heat record set July 12, 1879.

Other records included 100 at Greenville-Spartanburg, S.C.; 100 at Tallahassee, Fla.; 98 at Daytona Beach, Fla.; 104 at Memphis, Tenn., 102 at Nashville, and 100 at Atlanta. Chattanooga, Tenn., tied its 100-degree record and Charlotte, N.C., matched one of 101.

The heat was blamed for the death of at least 25 people in nine states this month. The human toll is also felt by all of those who depend on the farm economy for their livelihood.

"As agriculture gets deeper and deeper in trouble, it has a domino effect on the rest of the rural economy," said Jim Oliver, an agribusiness specialist for North Carolina's Commerce Department. "Look at the number of equipment dealers, auto dealers and other businesses that have already gone out of business in many rural communities."

Some North Carolina experts say $400 million of the state's $4 billion annual farm income may already be lost.

South Carolina crop losses are estimated at $100 million. Gov. Dick Riley said he would seek a federal disaster declaration for at least two-thirds of the state.

Carbon monoxide, dust leave allergy sufferers in 'smust'

By SCOTT McCARTNEY

GLENDALE, Ariz. (AP) — It began with tuberculosis outbreaks decades ago, doctors here say, as patients flocked to Arizona clinics seeking relief, or a miracle cure.

Allergy and asthma sufferers later joined the move to the dry desert around Phoenix.

But those days of environmental cures are gone, the doctors say. Cars and construction have produced carbon monoxide and dust, a combination some call "smust."

Sunbelt transplants and retirees have brought plants and trees and grasses with them, raising the pollen level and heightening the exposure for allergy patients.

Now, street-corner allergy and respiratory clinics cater to the pulmonary pilgrims and their offspring, who may be even worse off.

"We really have a genetic pool of bad genes here," said Dr. William Morgan of Glendale, a Phoenix suburb. "All these allergic people have moved out here, have married other allergic people and have inbred."

The belief that Phoenix was a clean haven for respiratory and allergy patients spawned a health care industry of its own — an industry growing as fast as any these days, according to the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce.

"Arizona has a high number of respiratory disease patients. This is not the place for them," said Jay Schied of the Arizona Lung Association. "We take a stance of discouraging those people (from coming). We have high levels of pollution, lots of dust, severe heat and low humidity. They can all cause problems for respiratory patients."

Weather, like automobiles, plays a part in the Southwest's pollution problems.

The attractive weather patterns — lack of wind, lack of rain and winter high-pressure inversions — also allow pollutants such as carbon monoxide and dust to build up, said Arizona State University climatologist Tony Brazel.

Retired postmaster Robert Schwartz came to the Phoenix area in 1939 at age 10, suffering from acute asthma. His parents had been told he'd be dead in six months if they didn't move out of New York City.

His asthma disappeared, only to return in the last 10 years. Some days, when he wakes and struggles to breathe, he knows he'll see the smog outside his window.

"My lungs are like a pollution meter," said Schwartz, now 56.

Sheila Morgan moved to Arizona from suburban Chicago in 1972 thinking it "was the Nirvana everyone was looking for."

She improved for a while, but then gradually developed allergies to pollens common to the Southwest — and different from those in Chicago.

"I had an 'allergic honeymoon,' then it all got worse again," she said.

Director's zeal for movie realism crumbled wall of legal protection

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Director John Landis flouted a wall of legal protections in his zeal to make "Twilight Zone: The Movie" a realistic film, say prosecutors trying him on charges of involuntary manslaughter in the deaths of three actors.

Landis, whose best-known credits include "Animal House," "The Blues Brothers" and "Trading Places," and four film crew members are charged with involuntary manslaughter in the July 23, 1982, deaths of Vic Morrow and child performers Renee Chen, 6, and Myca Le, 7.

The three died when a helicopter flying through special-effects explosions crashed onto them during filming. The scene required Morrow and the two children to run through a mock Vietnamese village on a set 40 miles from here.

The charges against Landis, special effects coordinator Paul Stewart, associate producer George Folsey, production manager Dan Allingham and pilot Dorcey Wingo are unprecedented in Hollywood history. Landis, Wingo and Stewart face up to six years in prison if convicted, while the others could receive a maximum of five years.

Superior Court Judge Roger Boren has said several pretrial motions would be taken up during opening trial sessions today and Tuesday. Jury selection is due to begin Wednesday — the fourth anniversary of the accident.

The trial has been delayed by a long series of pretrial hearings, motions and legal manuevering.

In documents filed last week, Deputy District Attorney Lea D'Agostino contended Landis was caught in a conflict between "his zeal to create a realistic movie and those laws, policies and standards designed to make motion pictures safe.

"Between these two forces, something had to yield," she said. "Unfortunately, what gave way was the wall of legal protections erected for the motion picture actor. The wall did not just crumble down in front of the defendants. The defendants engaged in a methodical, organized plan to tear it down."

Movie industry officials say some good may have come from the movie-set tragedy.

"The 'Twilight Zone' incident has made the employers and the unions more safety conscious," said Art Melli, business representative for Local 728 of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees.

"We say, 'This is the way it should be,'" said Melli, who also sits on the Industry Wide Labor Management Safety Committee, established shortly after the accident.

"Accidents have decreased, and rightfully so, because the public awareness of what's going on has made them more cautious," he said.

Shortly after Morrow and the children were killed, the Screen Actors Guild began a running tally of accidents and deaths on movie sets. Results are not available to the public.

"The industry is basically very safety conscious," said Chief Gordon Pearson of the Los Angeles County Fire Department, who also sits on the county's Film Commission. "We get calls constantly from special effects coordinators who want our movie location inspector to come out and take a look at a new idea."

The Directors Guild of America has instituted a safety hotline where directors on location can telephone to receive qualifications of stunt people and special effects experts. They are supposed to be licensed.

The Industry Wide Labor Management Safety Committee meets every month and issues safety bulletins dealing with procedures to be used in stunt and special effects work.

NATION IN BRIEF

Marcos' daughter gains stay in court decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Irene Marcos, daughter of deposed Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos, won't have to decide between a grand jury or contempt of court — and jail — until October at the earliest, a Supreme Court spokeswoman says.

A grand jury in Alexandria, Va., probing a defense contract awarded in 1983 has sought unsuccessfully to take testimony from Marcos and her husband, Gregorio Araneta, Assistant U.S. Attorney Ted Greenberg said.

U.S. District Judge Claude M. Hilton found them in contempt of court last month.

Chief Justice Warren Burger stayed a lower court ruling Saturday to give the full court time to consider whether to review the case of the Aranetas, Supreme Court spokeswoman Toni House said Sunday.

The Aranetas are required to file a petition by Aug. 5 in order to continue the stay until the full court meets again on the first Monday in October, Ms. House said.

First lady dines with Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, whose wife, Nancy, is in England for the wedding of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson, decided to have lunch with Vice President George Bush, who'll be traveling himself later this week.

The president on Sunday joined the Bush family for a lunch that lasted an hour and 40 minutes at the vice president's official residence.

On Friday, Bush embarks on an 11-day, three-nation tour of the Middle East, where, according to an administration official speaking only on condition of anonymity, the vice president will try to rekindle interest in Reagan's 1982 peace proposal calling for Palestinian self government in Israeli-occupied territories in association with Jordan.

Heated climate to rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — The predicted heating of the earth by the "greenhouse effect," if it occurs, could require $200 billion in new irrigation investments around the world, an environmental research organization says.

Scientists say the world's climate may be heated by as much as 8 degrees sometime in the next century because of increased carbon dioxide in the atmoshpere. That would generally shift the best growing weather toward the poles from the temperate zones.

The Worldwatch Institute said Saturday that an increase of 3.6 degrees in average temperature in the year 2000 could require 35 percent of the existing irrigrated area be taken out of production in the Western United States. It would cost $7 billion to $23 billion to build replacement structures to irrigate new lands, Worldwatch said.

Such a replacements could cost $200 billion worldwide, Worldwatch said.

Aleutian quakes taper off

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A flurry of about two dozen earthquakes that shook two communities in the Aleutian Islands over the weekend tapered off Sunday.

There were about six earthquakes measuring more than 4 on the open-ended Richter scale late Saturday and early Sunday, but none greater than 5, said said George Carte, a geophysicist at the Alaska Tsunami Center in Palmer.

"They quieted down quite a bit overnight," Carte said of the temblors that began late Friday.

A quake Saturday afternoon measuring 5.8 shook the towns of Unalaska and Akutan, knocking things off walls and shelves, shaking cars and knocking out runway lights at the Dutch Harbor-Unalaska airport, Carte said.

There were no reports of injuries or serious damage.

The Saturday afternoon temblor was centered about 40 miles southwest of Unalaska in the North Pacific, and none of the quakes triggered tsunamis, he said.

There is no accurate way to predict how long the quakes might continue, but Carte said they usually last only a few days when they do not exceed a magnitude of 5.9.

Unalaska is at the tip of the Aleutian chain, nearly 800 miles southwest of Anchorage.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number, from magnitude 5.5 to 6.5 for example, means that ground motion is 10 times greater.

An earthquake of magnitude 5 could do considerable damage in a populated area. The earthquake that devastated Alaska in 1964 and killed at least 114 people measured 8.5.

Diaper mistaken for bomb

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A TWA jet carrying 49 people made an emergency landing Sunday after a flight attendant spotted a suspicious package made of air sickness bags, and authorities found a soiled diaper when they detonated the parcel.

Authorities isolated the DC-9, evacuated the passengers and took the package to a disposal area, "then our bomb experts, using controlled explosives, blew the package apart and found the nasty diaper," said police Capt. Stan Phipps.

The two-engine jet was bound for Phoenix from St. Louis as Flight 169 when the attendant saw the package with nobody sitting near it, said TWA spokesman John Cherne.

The plane, with 43 passengers and six crew members, resumed its flight after a delay of just under two hours, officials said.

Infant fire victim dies

NEW YORK (AP) — A 2-day-old infant born prematurely after his mother was set on fire at a Harlem welfare hotel died Sunday, authorities said.

The cause of death for the baby, which was born a month prematurely, was not immediately known, said Patricia Kenny, administrator at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center.

Rethink spending

Gov. Mark White was late in calling a special session of the Legislature to deal with the state's budget crisis. As the oil industry has sunk deeper into despair with each passing month, it should have become obvious to anyone that legislative action would be required to salvage state programs. Now it will be a matter of rushing to fashion the changes necessary to balance state spending with income.

No matter. Now that the governor has called the August 6th session, the legislators' jobs are clear-cut. In fact, partisan politics aside, the state undoubtedly would benefit from lifting a chapter from Ronald Reagan's playbook of fiscal responsibility: Think spending less and avoid increasing taxes if at all possible.

The primary purposes of the legislative session, of course, will be to 1) reduce state spending as much as possible, preferably without killing any vital programs, and 2) consider and probably enact new taxes in some areas to generate new state revenue.

Obviously neither of the measures will be received by the public with open arms. The state's people already are feeling, to varying degrees, the impact of falling oil prices in the forms of record levels of unemployment, curtailed services, and bankruptcies. Although the word isn't encouraging, the best energy analysts available are predicting that the recession now engulfing Texas will last for several months if not longer.

Granted, it may be easier to raise taxes than to cut programs, but the legislators are elected to do the job no matter how difficult. Since the taxpayers already are hard-pressed by the economic realities, cutting spending should take first priority with raising taxes only a last resort option. If taxes are raised, Comptroller Bob Bullock's suggestion to broaden the state's sales tax base while cutting the overall rate appears to be a good starting point.

There was a day in the not-too-distant past when business and oil industry leaders in Midland and around the state were unequivocally optimistic about the future of the industry. The state was on the grow and riding the crest of the oil boom. Those days are gone for the present; now is the time to dig in, cut losses and act sensibly and conservatively in business matters.

It's not all gloom and doom, however. The state has weathered bad times before and always emerged better for the experience. The same will occur this time, but for the time being the state should plan to live on a more austere budget.

State legislators would be wise to think in those terms when they go to Austin next month.

Another View:
Drug desperation

The American military's part in drug raids in Bolivia has to be understood as an act of mutual desperation. Bolivia's part is easy to understand. Pitifully poor, it stands to be overwhelmed by a cocaine trade whose revenues, greater than the national budget, give criminals the means to control the economy, corrupt institutions and buy national elections. In the United States, drugs are a health problem and then a social and law-enforcement problem. In Boliva, which lacks the institutions and resources Americans take for granted, drugs assault the very integrity of the state. That is what led its democratically elected president to take the political risk of inviting an American military intervention.

The United States has its own desperation, bred of a seemingly chronic inability to rein in a deadly scourge. The drug-bust statistics of the Reagan administration break records, but use and abuse of drugs break records, too. Frustrated by the difficulty of cutting off the real engine of the drug trade — the lure of the phenomenally rich American drug market — the administration has turned up efforts to suppress this evil at the source. It has gone beyond the programs of earlier administrations to help willing producer nations eradicate drugs, plant substitute crops, beef up local law enforcement and improve their intelligence collection, and has been exploring ways to put American military forces directly into the battle.

For several years Air Force helicopters have been on drug patrol in the Bahamas, and Army units carried local forces to a raid in Colombia last February. A potentially momentous surge in activism came, however, in a secret presidential directive of April 8 stating, it is reported, the national security rationale for broad use of American military power to help foreign governments combat the international drug menace. The rationale is that the drug trade can destabilize political and judicial institutions. Bolivia is Exhibit A. American soldiers are there now ferrying a Bolivian strike force to the cocaine zones.

The initial congressional reaction to the American role seems mostly positive. But the new policy was devised in secret, and there has yet been little official elaboration or public discussion of it, so some important questions remain to be answered. There has been a general reluctance, not least in the military, to assign the military to a mission customarily treated as law enforcement. The terms on which American military forces might be committed, and American military men exposed to danger, are always vital questions. Careful, focused military-support operations could help, but people need to work first of all on the slow, hard, painful tasks of wringing drugs out of American society.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on July 21, 1961, Capt. Virgil "Gus" Grissom became the second American to rocket into a sub-orbital pattern around the Earth, flying aboard the Liberty Bell VII.

On this date:

In 1588, English forces attacked the Spanish Armada in the English Channel.

In 1831, Belgium became independent as Leopold I was proclaimed king of the Belgians.

In 1861, the first Battle of Bull Run was fought at Manassas, Va., resulting in a Confederate victory.

In 1925, the "Monkey Trial" ended in Dayton, Tenn. as John T. Scopes was found guilty and fined $100 for teaching Charles Darwin's theory of evolution. The conviction was later overturned.

In 1930, the Veterans Administration was established.

In 1944, American forces landed on Guam during World War II.

In 1954, France surrendered North Vietnam to the Communists.

In 1975, two Soviet cosmonauts returned to Earth aboard their Soyuz capsule, ending one-half of the first joint space mission involving an American Apollo spacecraft.

Ten years ago: The British Ambassador to Ireland, Christopher T.E. Ewart-Biggs, and his secretary were killed when a land mine went off beneath the ambassador's car in Dublin.

Five years ago: The United Nations Security Council voted to give Israel and Palestinian guerrillas 48 hours to end all armed attacks against each other across the Lebanese frontier.

One year ago: Members of the National Organization for Women, meeting in New Orleans, voted to elect past-president Eleanor Smeal their leader again.

Today's birthdays: Violinist Isaac Stern is 66. Singer Kay Starr is 64. Actor-comedian Don Knotts is 62. Movie director Norman Jewison is 60. Actor Edward Herrmann is 43. Retired singer Yussuf Islam, formerly Cat Stevens, is 39. Comedian-actor Robin Williams is 34.

Ethnic Turks under assault in Bulgaria

WASHINGTON — Cultural genocide is being systematically practiced against Bulgaria's Turkish minority by the communist regime. Those who resist the government's attempts to stamp out all traces of Turkish language and customs, and the minority's adherence to the Moslem religion, are either imprisoned or shot.

Jack Anderson

The plight of Bulgaria's ethnic Turks, who number about 1 million, or nearly 10 percent of the population, is described in cables to the State Department from the U.S. Embassy in Sofia. Our associate Lucette Lagnado has seen the cables and interviewed experts on the subject. Here's what she learned about this little-publicized tragedy:

— The communist regime does not acknowledge that there are Turks in Bulgaria. One embassy cable noted that the government "eliminated from statistical existence more than 1 million persons previously identified as (Turks)." This official creation of "unpersons" is "a socio-political feat of truly Orwellian proportions," the cable commented.

— In the past two years, the embassy reported, there have been "well-documented ... police terror tactics used to isolate remote villages and force inhabitants to change their full names from Islamic to Slavic/Christian Bulgarian names."

— The embassy reported that violence has resulted when ethnic Turks chose to resist the name changes and other attempts to eradicate their cultural identity. The militia, backed by the army, entered major Turkish communities and used "deadly force to reduce resistance," an embassy cable stated, adding: "There were several reported cases of mass civil violence, which resulted in hundreds of deaths and many more injuries."

— While some resisters were imprisoned on political charges, this relatively mild treatment was reserved for the "Turkish minority elite — party officials, teachers, etc.," the embassy reported. Most of the recalcitrant ethnic Turks were subjected to naked force. "Refusal to agree quickly to a name change was met by documented cases of summary executions. ... Individual killings seem to have been more widespread."

— As the poorest, least assimilated and already worst-treated of any minority in Bulgaria, the ethnic Turks are considered easy targets for Khomeini-style Moslem fundamentalism — a possibility that frightens the communist rulers. The embassy has received "reports of razed mosques and ... pressure against fundamental Islamic religious practices such as circumcision and funerals."

— Turkish-language publications were once numerous and widely read by the ethnic minority. But last year the government stepped in and the publications were "abruptly published only in Bulgarian," the embassy reported. At the same time, Turkish-language radio broadcasts were eliminated. "Today, not a single word of Turkish is published in Bulgaria," the embassy reported.

— The communist regime prudently applies its anti-Turkish discrimination to military service. As the embassy has explained: "The Bulgarian constitution's alleged 'equal treatment' of ... citizens does not apply to the Turks when it comes to military duty. The Turks are placed into uniformed labor battalions and are not entrusted with weapons. Very few Turks serve in the normal armed forces."

— The ethnic Turks are also frozen out of political activity that might conceivably win them better treatment some day. Most are kept from membership in the Communist Party as a result of the regime's "biased perception of the Turks," the embassy noted.

CONSTANT READERS: Members of the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography will undoubtedly be gratified that their thick report is being read closely where it counts: on Capitol Hill. Since its delivery to congressional offices on July 10, the detailed, explicit report has been eagerly pored over by young House and Senate staffers. They've been chortling over the exhaustive summaries and excerpts from pornographic books like "Tying up Rebecca," and movies like "Forgive Me, I Have Sinned."

MINI-EDITORIAL: Poor Adlai Stevenson III. It's hard not to feel sympathy — or at least pity — for this decent man as he limps toward apparently inevitable disaster in his quest for the Illinois governorship. But couldn't he pick his experts a bit more wisely? Four years after Stevenson brought up the subject of wimps by volunteering that he wasn't one, his "media consultant" had this to say about Stevenson and a recent run of bad luck: "He's like one of those bathtub toys that you push down and it keeps popping right back up again." So now, instead of "I am not a wimp," Stevenson's battle cry will presumably be, "I'm a rubber duckie."

Ambassador labels change 'cheap politics'

WASHINGTON — Herman Nickel, leaving as U.S. ambassador to South Africa, has privately echoed charges of cheap politics over his tentative replacement by black businessman Robert Brown and complained he is being made the fall guy for vacillating administration policy.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Nickel, widely respected for his handling of the difficult ambassadorial chore in Pretoria, felt he had been ostentatiously summoned home as Brown's name was leaked in Washington. On his way home through London, Nickel poured out his anguish to old friend Charles Price, U.S. ambassador to Britain. He assailed both the White House and the State Department for procrastination on South Africa.

A footnote: Efforts by South African President P.W. Botha to establish a confidential line of communications with President Reagan failed when a private letter ended up in national security adviser John Poindexter's hands. Botha was aghast when the response was delivered orally in Pretoria by Nickel.

PAT'S CONTRA PROBLEM

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan told administration officials asking for his vote on the new contra aid package that, as a strong Catholic, he wanted to switch his vote after Sandinista attacks on the Catholic Church but could not because of New York politics.

His support for the guerrillas, he said, would guarantee a liberal running against him for the 1988 Democratic Senate nomination. It also would threaten his loss of the Liberal Party line on the general election ballot, he added.

A footnote: Another Catholic Democrat, Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, also cited political reasons when administration officials asked him to switch from his earlier opposition. He favors contra aid, Biden said, but to vote that way could devastate his 1988 presidential bid.

KEMP'S MASSAGE

Supporters of Rep. Jack Kemp from around the nation, alarmed by reports of his presidential prospects in decline, were massaged in a super-secret day-long session July 2 at Washington's Grand Hotel.

Kemp was not present, but political operative Charles Black assured some 15 to 20 Kempites that the campaign was on track. Among those present were neo-conservative godfather Irving Kristol, former New York governor nominee Lewis Lehrman and ex-Nixon aide Herb Klein.

Black decried public debate over how closely Kemp should campaign on the supply-side agenda, and pledged all present to secrecy. Suggestions from the floor were abundant, with Kristol urging greater emphasis by Kemp on foreign policy and national security. The congressman's aides assured him that Kemp would do so while still preaching his tax-cutting gospel.

RR'S MINI-PURGE

Long-pending White House threats to punish non-supporting Republican members of Congress have resulted in a mini-blacklist of just four liberal GOP House members, three of whom are so secure they don't fear presidential sanctions.

White House political aides have decided President Reagan will do no campaigning for four Republican congressmen who have opposed contra aid and voted with him less than half the time: Reps. Jim Leach and Thomas J. Tauke of Iowa, Bill Green of New York and Stewart B. McKinney of Connecticut. McKinney could be ripe for an upset, but the other three are from safe districts and have asked for no help from Reagan.

A footnote: Facing a tough fight to keep Republican control of the Senate, presidential operatives plan no sanctions against senatorial candidates. Their rationale is that the least loyal GOP senator up for re-election, North Dakota's Mark Andrews, still supports the president 59 percent of the time.

KEAN FOR PRESIDENT?

He may not be considered as a presidential prospect, but Gov. Thomas H. Kean of New Jersey has been added to the list of potential candidates whose representatives meet periodically with Republican National Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf.

Fahrenkopf added Kean because he met the two criteria: speaking dates outside his own state and a political action committee contributing to candidates nationwide. While they deny presidential ambitions, Kean's aides readily accepted the invitation.

Plan for nuke war survival; government isn't

Unfortunately, when something is declared unthinkable, most people don't think about it.

It should not, therefore, surprise anyone that the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the bureaucracy in charge of civil defense, recently reported that America's civil defense is in such a state of neglect that national survival, in the event of a nuclear war, is doubtful.

Charley Reese

People victimized by the propaganda of anti-nuclear hysterics will say, "So what's new about that? Nuclear war means the end of everything."

Sadly, it does not. I say "sadly" because if nuclear war did in fact mean the end of the Northern Hemisphere, then we could all relax — because neither the Soviet nor the American system of choosing leaders is likely to elevate a suicidal maniac to power.

Nuclear war, like conventional war, can be waged on different levels. We waged limited nuclear war on Japan. But not only is Japan still around, both of the target cities, Nagasaki and Hiroshima, are thriving metropolises. There are, believe it or not, limits to the destructive power of nuclear and thermonuclear explosions.

Suppose you are in a brick building of a few stories and the Russians explode a one megaton bomb just 16 miles away. What do you think it would do to the building? You could expect destruction of windows, doors and thin partitions, and perhaps cracks in the upper walls. The building would stand. Most of the people in it would survive. Sixteen miles is the outer limit of the blast radius at which light damage is caused by a one megaton bomb detonated on the surface.

The blast radius, by the way, does not increase in direct proportion to the increase in explosive power. The comparable outer limit of a 10 megaton blast is 31 miles, not 160.

That's still an awesome bang, but the grim fact is if a nuclear war occurs, millions of Americans are going to be outside the blast radii of the bombs and warheads. That means they are going to be standing around, uninjured, their homes and communities intact, wondering: "What do I do now?"

I have long argued that it gets close to criminal negligence for the government not to answer that question, but that's what happens when people decide that something is unthinkable. Fallout, which the nuclear hysterics also exaggerate, is a manageable hazard. In the first place, air bursts of nuclear weapons create almost no fallout. In the second place, fallout follows the wind, so if you're up-wind of a target area, you get no fallout. In the third place, the radioactivity in the fallout decays. If the initial dose rate is 1,000 roentgens per hour, in two weeks it will have decreased to 1 roentgen per hour. A continued dose of up to 100 roentgens over 10 days will not produce pathological symptoms.

This information is taken directly from a Soviet civil defense textbook. If you would like to read it yourself, you can order an English translation from the U.S. Government Printing Office. Ask for stock number 008-070-00382-1. The price used to be $3.45 but it may have gone up.

I am not suggesting that nuclear war would be easy to survive or anything but horrible. Nevertheless, if nuclear war occurs, American citizens are going to survive the initial blasts and could survive the aftermath — if we prepare. The Swiss are prepared. The Soviet Union is prepared. The United States and several other countries are not.

An active civil defense program would strengthen our deterrent. Anti-nuclear hysterics argue that civil defense would be provocative. That's malicious garbage. You will notice, of course, that the Soviet Union did not worry about provoking us by instituting an enormous civil defense program.

Nuclear war is, thank God, unlikely, but it is possible. As long as it is possible, prudence dictates preparation. We know, of course, that Congress and most of the intellectual establishment are not prudent. Individuals should probably plan for their own survival.

City's sluggish economy breeding many multimillion-dollar swindlers

HOUSTON (AP) — From his somber police mug shot, convicted swindler Al Cooper stares vacantly across assistant district attorney Russel Turbeville's cluttered office.

On Turbeville's better days, the photograph tacked to his office wall reassures him that his division's most ambitious investigation paid off, putting the former Kingwood investment counselor behind bars.

But, more often, it is a grim reminder of a less comforting trend: Houston's sluggish economy is breeding an increasing number of multimillion-dollar swindlers.

"A lot of people were making money in sloppy business deals five years ago," said a frenzied Turbeville, who heads the consumer fraud division of the Harris County district attorney's office.

"In the last three years they couldn't make money sloppily, so they've turned to stealing."

Like other consumer advocates across the city, Turbeville's staff is having a difficult time balancing growing demands with limited resources.

Many of the same fast-buck artists who once barely operated inside the law now have turned to illegal schemes, Turbeville said.

AS THE city's housing market flounders, multimillion-dollar home equity schemes flourish. And, with the city's soaring unemployment rate, many of its idled workers have become unwitting victims of fraudulent employment firms, unscrupulous debt collectors and promoters of pyramid money-making schemes.

"Houston has become a haven for the fastbuck entrepreneur," said Dan Parsons of the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Houston.

Parsons' office handled almost one-third more complaints from dissatisfied consumers than it did a year ago. Other agencies have experienced the same growing workloads.

Allegations involving fraud in government programs and business scams are on the rise, said Johnie Joyce, a spokesman for the Houston office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

At Turbeville's office, more than 200 disgruntled consumers seek help each day. But it is the nature, as much as the number, of those allegations that disturbs the assistant district attorney.

When Turbeville was named to head the consumer affairs office six years ago, citizen complaints were simple. They typically involved an individual who claimed he had been duped by an unscrupulous automobile mechanic or home repairman, he said.

Todya's cases are more complex and often involve hundreds of victims.

"THE FIRST time I saw a $30,000 case, I thought that was a big deal," Turbeville recalled. "Now, I have million-dollar cases all over the place."

Six years ago, his office filed no more than 10 cases, Turbeville said. Last year, it prosecuted about 90 felony cases and recovered more than a million dollars in restitution pay for victims. But, because today's allegations often are more complex, investigating them is a time-consuming task.

In his 18-month investigation of investment counselor Cooper, Turbeville scrutinized 73 bank accounts. More than 200 victims, including widows and children, were involved in the $12.5 million investment scam, he said.

"Sometimes I feel like a juggler," he said. "I keep trying to keep all of the balls in the air, and we keep adding little balls."

That is little consolation to victims like Sharon Menzel.

Last fall, Mrs. Menzel contacted Turbeville's office after paying a remodeling contractor more than $16,000 to remodel her home, she said. A few months after work began, the back of her home was still ripped apart, its sewer system was exposed, and there was a four-foot drop-off behind it, she said.

Mrs. Menzel's pleas brought no immediate results. Finally, she and her husband paid other workers for the job to be completed, she said.

"IT WAS bad enough that we had been ripped off," she said. "But nobody wanted to hear about it. That's what has been the slap in the face all along."

Turbeville said his office still is investigating Mrs. Menzel's claims. Under state law, failure to perform a service is not a criminal offense. Prosecutors must prove the contractor never intended to perform the work.

"That may be very difficult here," he said.

Unlike many other cities, Houston offers few avenues for dissatisfied consumers such as Mrs. Menzel to pursue.

Lawyers with the state's attorney general's office in Houston handle consumer complaints. But they can take only civil, and not criminal, action.

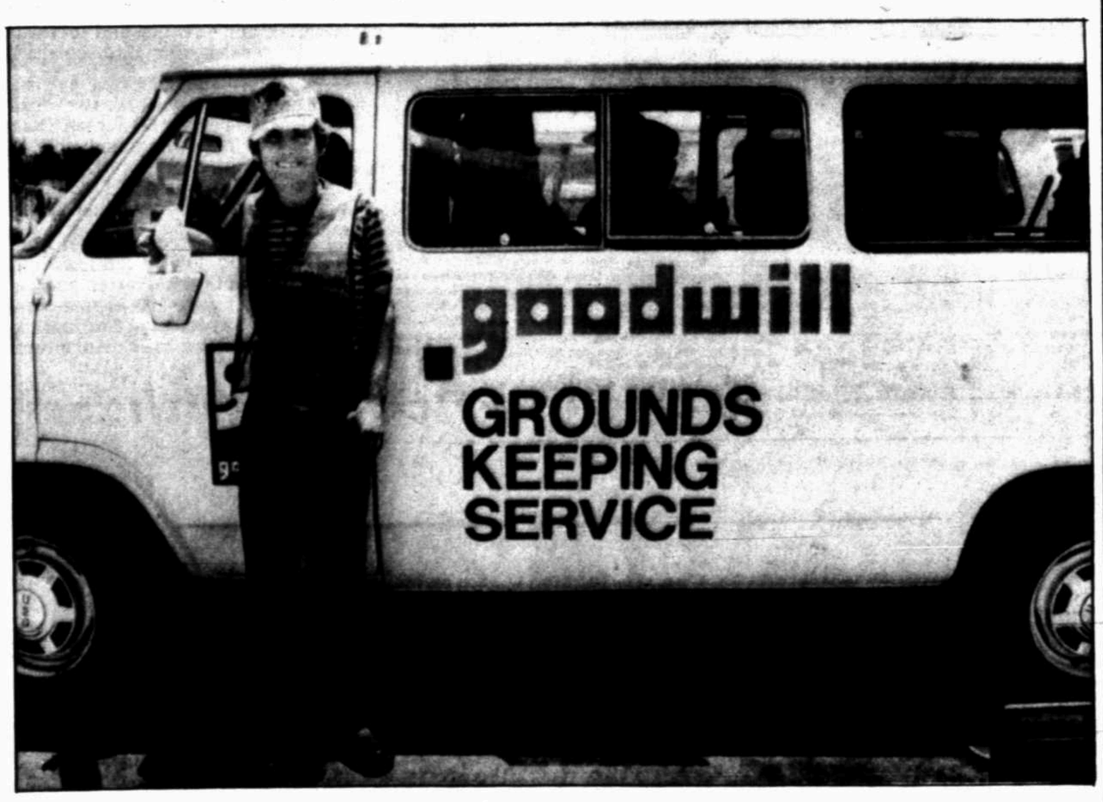

Postal inspectors with the U.S. Postal Service also investigate consumer fraud. Their investigations are limited to those scams in which the mail has been used.

The city's police force has only two officers who investigate more than 500 cases of fraud each year, said one of those officers, Sgt. Bobby Jancik. Their efforts primarily involve street scams rather than contractual disputes, Janeik said.

SO, FOR most of the county's consumers, Turbeville's office is the only one they can turn to for criminal prosecution.

It has long been understaffed, its chief said. Two lawyers, three secretaries, three part-time law students and four police investigators are employed there. The office needs twice that number of staffers, Turbeville said.

"We're considered something of a stepchild," the assistant district attorney said. "Nobody lobbies for the consumer."

Jerry Subin, a Goodwill Industries employee in Dallas, stands beside one of the company's groundskeeping trucks. Subin, whose brain was damaged in a 1980 auto accident, collects litter along Dallas streets. He was named Goodwill's 1985 Achiever of the Year.

Goodwill Industries recognizes desires of unemployable misfits

By LOLO PENDERGRAST

DALLAS (AP) — Jerry Subin bends from the waist like a wooden puppet, snatching up paper scraps along LBJ Freeway, forced to make modest wages after a car wreck dashed his chances of ever having a thinking man's job.

His partners on groundskeeping crew No. 210 include a schizophrenic, a mentally retarded man, a former junkie, a prison parolee and a woman with palsy.

The everyday occupational world calls them misfits, or unemployable for their handicaps.

But Goodwill Industries recognized their drive to be independent, their pride in a job and their desire to make money like anyone else. The agency gave them a most basic task — stooping over and plucking beer cans, newspapers and junk from area highways.

If not for these jobs, these individuals might be idle at their homes or in boarding or halfway houses or in the streets, regressing physically and mentally.

"I earn money and the money goes into the bank in my name," boasts Subin, whose brain was damaged in a 1980 auto accident. "I keep a little nest egg."

Despite the briars, antbeds, 100-degree days and hassles at restaurants or restrooms, this workforce of about 100 is generally content. Believe them, trash pickup is more than just a job.

"We try to make the road to independence available to them," said Dennis Kutach, who oversees the three-year-old Goodwill Groundskeeping Services. "That's really the thing — the chance. And most of them are picking themselves up and doing it — themselves."

Their carefully ordered workday begins about 7:30 a.m. The workers — some deaf, partially blind, emotionally troubled or bent from cerebral palsy — assemble at Goodwill offices for the equivalent of office workers gathering around the coffee pot.

At 7:38 a.m., 61-year-old Janet Williams is a chatterbox. Today she's packed some hot tea in her thermos, along with bananas and fresh vegetables for lunch. She's got a new cap she pulls tight over yellow-white curls, and tall boots "to step in those snaky weeds," she says.

In moments, you know Ms. Williams has no kin and an independence unlike many 22-year residents of mental institutions.

"I like this job. It agrees with me," says Ms. Williams, who jabs trash with a specially made spear and clamp. "It makes me a lifestyle I'm content with and gives me money so I can do things I enjoy."

At 8 a.m., Goodwill loads its vans, dispatching 75 to 80 people on a state highway department contract to clean along interstates. Another 25 set out on a U.S. Army Corps of Engineeers contract to clean up around Lake Lewisville.

The 25 people in crew No. 210 have two days to do the LBJ Freeway job, and today is the second day.

"I tell them we've got to finish this highway today," says Billy Wheeler, Goodwill's contract manager, whose right arm is limp from an industrial accident.

"I say: 'You got to put a little more glide in your stride.

" 'You got to put a little more dip in your hip.

" 'You got to put a little more pep in your step.'

"If one is down, we try to help him back up. We work together or we don't work at all."

By 9:31 a.m., 40-year-old Ruby Johnson has cut a clean swath beside the freeway. Heat streams off the hot asphalt. Traffic rushes by in a blur. Ms. Johnson, the crew firebrand, pays it no mind.

"I'm the only one that's the fastest one," says the woman, who lives in an Oak Cliff boarding home. "I feel like more of a challenge out here. A lot of these people don't know much about picking up paper until I got out here."

Ahead of schedule, the crew searches for public restrooms, where prejudices against them have arisen in the past. At 10:10, they find a service station where they're accepted.

"We've gone to places where they didn't want them in, said they didn't act right," Wheeler says. "Some people see them walk in and just stare. It bothers them to a certain extent. I guess it's hard for some places to take the handicapped."

These people would be tied to society without their jobs.

The work is emotionally rewarding as well, said Goodwill's Fred Sherman.

"It's productive, and they know they're doing something good," he said. "It's no play work. And they can see the results of their work."

The crews bag as much as 18,000 pounds of trash a week, he said. Working six-hour days, crew No. 210 holds strictly to two breaks and a 30-minute lunch.

By day's end, the crew has bagged a Texas Tech knit cap, cigarettes, a case of beer, a beach ball, cheese dip, an album cover with Cher on it and countless cola cans.

But Subin notes that there's more to this than clean highways.

"Half of my brain is still floating around up there, so I've got to go and make me another life out of myself," says the man who was named Goodwill's 1985 Achiever of the Year. "The thing I find most out here is love."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Thunderstorms could develop

From Staff and Wire Reports

A slight chance of thunderstorms tonight could cool off Midlanders, says the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Tonight's low will be in the mid 60s with winds south at 5 to 10 mph.

Tuesday will be partly cloudy with a high in the mid 90s. Winds will be southeast at 5 to 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 97 degrees was 7 degrees cooler than the record high of 104 degrees set in 1936. The overnight low of 70 degrees was 10 degrees warmer than the record low of 60 degrees set in 1970.

STATE

A weak cold front moving down through the northern half of Texas brought showers and thunderstorms to the Panhandle and northern sections of the low Rolling Plains this morning.

Isolated showers and thundershowers dotted the southern sections of the low Rolling Plains and the South Plains and also developed near the northern border of the Trans-Pecos and Edwards Plateau. Elsewhere around the state, skies were mostly clear.

Winds were variable throughout the state in the 5 to 10 mph range.

Overnight temperatures around the state were mostly in the 60s and 70s. However, the extremes were 81 degrees at Dallas-Fort Worth Airport and Waco and 58 degrees at Marfa.

The National Weather Service said widely scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms were likely throughout West Texas, North Texas and Southeast Texas.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms ranged across sections of the West and Midwest today as heavy storms headed out to sea after pushing through the mid-Atlantic states and a heat wave continued to sizzle the Southeast.

Showers and thunderstorms fell across Colorado, New Mexico, southern Utah and Arizona, and thunderstorms were moving into southeast California.

Thunderstorms were also scattered across parts of Arkansas, Oklahoma, the Texas Panhandle, Wyoming, Nebraska and South Dakota.

A few showers lingered along the Virginia and North Carolina coasts.

Early morning temperatures were in the 70s to low 80s throughout America's southeast quarter, and another day of near-100 degree temperatures was predicted for Georgia, South Carolina and northern Florida.

Jan Geddes
...gal on a roll

DANVERS, Mass. — Jane Geddes, who won the U.S. Open championship in a playoff last week, fired a 4-under-par 68—281 Sunday for a one-stroke victory over rookie Deb Richard in the LPGA Boston Five Classic. Geddes birdied the last two holes in outduelling Richard, Pat Bradley, and rookie Ok-Hee Ku of Korea. Geddes' victory was worth $42,150. Richard, finishing second for the second time on the tour, won $25,437.

Bradley finished one stroke behind Richard and in a tie for third with Ku, who had a final-round 71, despite a disastrous triple-bogey seven on the 14th hole. Ku came back with an eagle three on the next hole, but still fell short...

COAL VALLEY, Ill. — Mark Wiebe shot a 2-under-par 68—268 Sunday for a one-stroke victory over Curt Byrum in the $400,000 Hardee's Classic. Wiebe, who won the Anheuser-Busch Classic last year, sank a 13-foot birdie putt on the par-3 17th hole to break a tie with Byrum, who bogeyed the previous hole.

After his birdie putt on the 17th green circled the cup and fell in from the backside, an elated Wiebe threw up his arms in triumph. "If I'd have made that putt on (hole No.) 8, no one would have remembered it, but because it came at the end of the round, it's a great shot...

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Jim Ferree sank an eight-foot birdie putt on the first hole of sudden death Sunday to win a three-way playoff and his first PGA Senior Tour victory at the $250,000 Greater Grand Rapids Open. Ferree, 55, , shot a 1-under-par 70—204 to force a playoff with Gene Littler and Chi Chi Rodriguez. Rodriguez and Ferree were given a reprieve when Littler, who was leading the tournament at 10 under, three-putted the 18th for a bogey to put him into the playoff. It was Littler's only bogey of the final round...

CART-Toronto

TORONTO — Bobby Rahal won the inaugural Molson Toronto-Indy race, his first triumph since the Indianapolis 500 in May. Rahal and pole-winner Emerson Fittipaldi were penalized were for passing the pace car under a caution flag. Rahal took the lead from Al Unser Jr. on the first turn of lap 92 and led the rest of the 103-lap event, beating Danny Sullivan, who had won the last two races, to the finish line by 2.25 seconds. Mario Andretti was third, followed by Unser and Kevin Cogan, all one lap down...

Pocono 500

LONG POND, Pa. — Tim Richmond survived a photo finish to win the Pocono 500 in a NASCAR race that started 95 minutes late and was halted 50 laps short because of fog. Richmond, who has won three of the last four races on the Winston Cup circuit, finished a few inches in front of Ricky Rudd with Geoff Bodine, posting a time of 3 hours, 1 minute, 7 seconds for an average speed of 124.229 mph...

Norman finally wins a Major

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

TURNBERRY, Scotland — Greg Norman of Australia finally won a major golf tournament, running away with the 115th British Open championship Sunday to win by 5 shots on Turnberry's Ailsa Course, the most difficult layout for a major tournament in many years.

The 31-year-old long-hitter led by a shot going into this final round, just as he had in this year's Masters and U.S. Open. He failed to win either, causing some to wonder if he could win a major event. He had tied for the 1984 U.S. Open after 72 holes, only to be beaten by Fuzzy Zoeller in the 18-hole playoff.

Norman answered his doubters Sunday, blasting out of a bunker into the hole for a birdie at No. 3. He never looked back on his way to a one-under-par 69. This gave the 6-foot-1-inch golfer an even-par 280 and the slim silver cup that has gone to the winner since 1872. It also gave him the biggest margin of victory in a British Open since Johnny Miller won by six shots in 1976.

"You get a monkey on your back not from yourself but from people around you," Norman said. "I woke today and was a little jumpy and nervous. All I said was that I wouldn't let myself have a letdown like I did at Shinnecock." Shinnecock Hills on Long Island was the site of the U.S. Open last month.

Norman had no letdown. His nearest rival was Gordon Brand of England, who eagled the 17th Sunday to jump into second with 71 for 285. Bernhard Langer of West Germany shot 68 to tie Ian Woosnam of Wales, who closed with a 72, at 286.

Nick Faldo of England was fifth at 287 as American golfers turned in their worst showing at a British Open in 17 years. Gary Koch, a native of Louisiana, was the low American, shooting 71 to tie Seve Ballesteros of Spain for sixth at 288. Ballesteros, the pre-tournament favorite, had a strong finish as he shot 64 for the day's best round.

The last time an American was as far down was when Jack Nicklaus was sixth in 1969 at Royal Lytham. Norman became the third straight non-American to win the British Open, following Ballesteros in 1984 and Sandy Lyle of Scotland.

Some Americans left with not only a poor showing but with strong complaints, concerning such subjects as the conditions of extremely narrow fairways, extremely high rough and even the enamel used to paint the cups.

The first three rounds of this Open were played in atrocious conditions: gale-force winds Thursday, strong winds again Friday and gale-force winds with heavy rain Saturday. Norman kept his composure, even equaling the single-round record for the British Open and all other major tournaments with a 63 Friday.

Because he had the lead by a shot after all that foul weather, it was fitting that on the one beautiful day, he made a shambles of any competition. The sun came out and the winds slowed to zephyr strength.

Norman, who leads the American PGA Tour in earnings this year with a record $547,000, got $105,000 Sunday. This is not included in his PGA Tour earnings.

Astros win in 15, stay in first place

Associated Press

Bill Doran beat first baseman Keith Hernandez's throw home on a bases-loaded grounder by Kevin Bass with one out in the 15th inning Sunday, giving the Houston Astros a 9-8 victory over the New York Mets.

The 5½-hour game was the longest of the season. Houston remained tied with San Francisco for first place in the National League West with its third straight triumph over the NL East-leading Mets. New York's three-game losing streak matched its longest of the year.

Doran led off the bottom of the 15th with a single against Roger McDowell, 7-4, and moved to second on a sacrifice bunt. Denny Walling was issued an intentional walk and Glenn Davis was hit by a pitch before Bass, who had homered earlier in the game, grounded to Hernandez.

Doran arrived at the plate just as catcher Gary Carter received Hernandez's throw. The Mets briefly argued the call at home.

Bob Knepper, 12-7, working in relief for the first time in two seasons, got the victory. McDowell lost his fourth straight decision.

Giants 5, Cubs 4

Jeffrey Leonard's eighth-inning infield single tied the game and Chris Brown's sacrifice fly scored Rob Thompson with the go-ahead run as San Francisco edged Chicago.

The Giants started the eighth trailing 4-3, but Randy Kutcher reached on shortstop Shawon Dunston's fielding error. Thompson's single chased starter Dennis Eckersley, 3-6, and Leonard singled against Lee Smith. Smith struck out Chili Davis before Brown hit his fly ball.

Dodgers 7, Cardinals 2

Franklin Stubbs and Steve Sax hit solo home runs and Rick Honeycutt combined with two relievers on a four-hitter as Los Angeles downed St. Louis.

Honeycutt, 6-5, gave up all four hits as he pitched into the seventh. Tom Niedenfuer squelched St. Louis' two-on, none-out threat in the seventh, then Ken Howell pitched two innings for his seventh save.

The Dodgers had 14 hits, the last a two-run single by Stubbs in the ninth.

Dallas Cowboy quarterback Steve Pelleur

Backup Pelleur new Dallas bullet thrower

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Wide receiver Gordon Banks makes a juke move to the sidelines and the ball arrives in his hands like a bullet just before he steps out-of-bounds.

"In previous training camps of the Dallas Cowboys, such rifle passes usually came off the arm of Gary Hogeboom, who was traded to Indianapolis because of his unhappiness over losing the starting job to Danny White.

The new rocket thrower for the Cowboys is Steve Pelluer, the hero of the Cowboys' 28-21 victory over the New York Giants that clinched the NFC East in 1985.

With White and Hogeboom both knocked out, Pelluer took the Cowboys on the winning touchdown drive that included a 28-yard pass to Karl Powe on third-and-15 from the Dallas 48.

"Pelluer is showing tremendous poise," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "His performance in that New York game under pressure was tremendous. I never saw anybody who did that in lthe NFL without having played in a game before. He never looses his cool."

Landry said Pelluer was having a tremendous training camp.

"He has a good enough arm to throw the sideline pass and I'd rate him in the upper echelon in the league in arm strength," Landry said.

Pelluer was a fifth-round draft pick in 1984.

"I don't think anyone but the Cowboys realized what a tremendous athlete Steve is," said offensive coordinator Paul Hackett. "He really surprised me how well he can me. He's quite an athlete."

Pelluer has progressed to the point where the Cowboys will be far from helpless if White goes down again this season.

"He's a legitimate NFL quarterback," Hackett said. "He got over the hump with the Giant game. Until a guy goes in and does what he did you don't know he can perform when it counts. With Pelluer we know. I personally underrated him."

Pelluer, who checks in at 6-4 and 208 pounds, is a quiet-spoken, hard-working type who doesn't like to make waves.

NT PGA tourney begins at Mission today

The North Texas Section of the Professional Golfers Association club pros began a gruelling 54-hole medal play tournament at Mission Country Club with the winner qualifying for the national club tournament in Palm Springs, Calif.

The tournament is a test of stamina as well as skill, since play opened with a demanding 36 holes today. The pros were scheduled for shotgun starts at 8 a.m. and 2 p.m. The final 18-hole round is scheduled for Tuesday. There will be no cut.

In Sunday's pro-am event, the team of Terry Lester, Brett Smith, Carl Crowley, and Harry Bettis, one of four teams to card 128s, was the winner on a card playoff.

Gene Aube of the Dallas Athletic Club, however, was the winner of the individual competition for pros only, beating out Jack Barger, Lake Oaks of Waco, and Charles Bishop, Oak Grove of Terrell, by one stroke.

A field of 56-club pros will tee off and Bishop, a former Texas Tech golfer, ranks defending champion Lindy Miller, Butch Mitchell and Rives McBee as the players to beat.

Miller did not play Sunday, but was scheduled to be on hand for the tournament proper. Mitchell was last year's runner up while McBee, a former Midland Country Club assistant, was the winner three years ago at Midland's Green Tree Country Club.

Lamesa golfer wins third straight Key Seniors

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

A.J. Broyles owns the Frank Key Senior Invitational golf tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

On Sunday, the Lamesa golfer fired a 72 to go with Saturday's even par 70 for a two-day total of 142 and a seven stroke victory in the championship flight.

The victory was Broyles' third straight and fifth in the last six years. Not only did Broyles win the overall tournament by seven, but he shot low round both days. In fact, his high round of 72 was two shots better than any other golfer.

Shooting 74-75-149 for second place was Midlander S.C. Terry, four shots better than three golfers tied at 153, Dean Strack (third), Buddy Redden (fourth) and Don Pyle (fifth).

In the eight flights of the tournament, two came down to a playoff, the second and fourth.

Tied at 153 after 36 holes, San Angelo's Jack Lieber and Midland's Jolly Hartsell went into sudden death. The tie remained through the first extra hole and was broken on the second when Lieber birdied to Hartsell's par.

Jacque Stoltz won the fourth flight after a tie with Raymond Casey. Both golfers — each from Midland — shot 159s.

In other flights, Wayne Potter claimed first in first flight with an 82-75-157; Tom Garber of Midland won third flight with 77-84-161; Midland's Bill Turney ran away with fifth flight with an 82-80-162.

Kermit's Duane Wells won sixth flight with 84-79-163; seventh flight was won by Midland's William Henry with 87-84-171 and Larry Coggan claimed eighth flight with 97-88-185.

TWO OF the tournament's oldest golfers played in the the eighth flight, finishing in a tie for sixth at 199: Midlander Ted Witte and Odessan Tony Volotko.

Both golfers are long-time Permian Basin residents and are native born Texans. Witte is 77 and Volotko is 76.

"I've been in Midland 38 years," said Witte, who moved here from the Dallas area and first started playing at Ranchland Hills in 1951.

Los Angeles Dodgers right-hander Bob Welch is 4-8 this season and has won only one of his last 16 starts. Last season Welch was 14-4 and posted a 2.31 earned run average.

Fraudulent lawns no place to play baseball games

By Barry Lorge
Copley News Service

ST. LOUIS — Every time I watch a series on AstroTurf, my distaste for it is renewed. I know it's here to stay, like non-dairy creamer, but we don't have to like it.

If God had intended for baseball to be played on plastic, He wouldn't have invented grass stains or Oxydol to get them out of uniforms.

The game on false blades just isn't the same as on a natural field, and if you can't sow it, grow it and mow it, I'd rather not know it.

I'm not saying this because the San Diego Padres lost two of three to the Cardinals at Busch Stadium, including a 13-3, 20-hit fiasco

I just hate to see all those mile-high choppers, scooters through the infield, Super Ball hops over outfielders' heads, doubles that should be singles, triples that should be doubles, crazy caroms in the corners, and other abnormalities that result from playing on a rug.

These perversions of the grand old game can get on your nerves faster than the Budweiser jingles that the organist here plays until you wish that he'd get trampled by a Clydesdale.

Sandlots are one thing, but if you're going to play on AstroTurf, you might as well be on asphalt. Abner Doubleday would not approve. They paved paradise and put up a parking lot.

I even hate AstroTurf as I sit here after the game, looking out on an empty stadium in the afternoon sun. It's not a real ballpark. Ballparks have grass. They smell nice. You can't see where a guy spat his tobacco juice. They don't have electronic tarps that attack players during the playoffs.

From the dugout at Busch Stadium on a steamy summer afternoon, you can see heat rising from the field in a shimmering, stifling wave. It looks like the special effect in old movies that told you what you were about to see was a mirage or a hallucination.

The concrete bowl becomes a cauldron, routinely 20 or 30 degrees hotter on the field than on the downtown sidewalks outside. Players take showers after batting practice.

"When we come back here later in the summer, we put aluminum foil in our shoes to refelect the heat downward, just so you can walk on the field without burning your feet," said Padres' batting coach Deacon Jones. "The foil gets all crinkled after an inning or two and you have to change it."

You have to salute Cards' manager Whitey Herzog for building a ballclub for a park where chlorophyll is unknown. He understands perfectly that baseball on AstroTurf is a track meet with bats and balls.

He has one of the great defensive teams of all time, and speed throughout the lineup.

Shortstop Ozzie Smith has hands so quick and smooth that he could field nine grounders out of 10 if they played in a rock garden. Put him on AstroTurf, where every bounce is as true as it is lickety-split,and he vacuums the rug.

Outfielders Vince Coleman in left, Willie McGee in center, and Andy Van Slyke or Tito Landrum in right can go get 'em with anybody. Give those guys a baton, they'd be a relay team. They can run down fly balls in the wide-open spaces and cut down the size of the alleys, which is crucial in a symmetrical stadium where the dimensions are 330 feet down the lines, 383 feet to the alleys, and 414 feet to dead center.

The Padres' outfield suffers in comparison, particularly in left, where Carmelo Martinez or John Kruk run and field like Tweedledum and Tweedledee. Martinez misplayed a ball that should have been either an out or a double — the former if the fielders were positioned correctly — into a triple that set up the winning run And when you are uncomfortable in the outfield to begin with, the excessive caution dictated by pastures of AstroTurf can make you really tentative.

"You have to be careful how you charge balls because they can bounce over your head ... If you try to come in on a low line drive, it can skip by you and it's an inside-the-park home run," said Padres manager Steve Boros. "I think our outfield has done a good job, but when you compare it with Van Slyke and Landrum and McGee and Coleman, it's going to suffer in comparison, just because of footspeed."

Boros coached for Herzog at Kansas City, where he also structured his club for artificial turf. He accepts the surface for its only redeeming feature — that it can be maintained easily and squeegeed back to playing condition quickly after rain.

"I understand why they have to have it, especially in Kansas City," said Boros. "Thirty percent of their people come to games from more than 100 miles away. They come in for weekends or four or five days, and they do so because they know the game will be played. They don't call many games in Kansas City because they have the machine that cleans off the surface. There might be an hour delay, but as soon as it stops raining, they'll play, and they'll wait two hours for it to stop raining. That is a big part of their attraction, that people know they can buy tickets in advance, drive to kansas City, and the ballgames will be played, even though they have some pretty severe thunderstorms.

"So the redeeming virtues are economic, if you think of economic virtues as redeeming. But if you're a baseball purist, you just don't like it."

At least it is comforting to know that when we get to heaven, we'll have real cream for our coffee and baseball will be pasturized.

Eagles, Jaworski due to settle differences

Associated Press

NFL Camps

The Philadelphia Eagles, engaged in a housecleaning of unwanted veterans, announced Sunday that they had reached an agreement with 35-year-old quarterback Ron Jaworski.

Jaworski was expected to sign the four-year contract on Monday and report to training camp by that afternoon, but financial terms weren't revealed.

The agreement with Jaworski leaves four veteran free agents and seven rookies unsigned.

Veteran guard Steve Kenney walked out of camp Saturday, the latest in a growing number of veterans to leave since Buddy Ryan was named coach. Center Mark Dennard and linebackers Reggie Wilkes, Joel Williams and Anthony Griggs also are gone via trades or releases.

Kenney was demoted to the second team, behind last year's first-round draft pick, Kevin Allen.

"He thought he was better than I did," Ryan said...

The Washington Redskins opened camp with a host of rookies and free agents and a few selected veterans. How many of the latter remain, and for how long, is yet to be decided.

Among those who won't be around at all is veteran running back John Riggins who already has been waived. Among the unlikely may be Joe Theismann, who broke his leg Nov. 18. The 36-year-old Theismann is expected to take a physical sometime this week. If he fails, he is expected to retire and sign on as a a commentator with CBS.

And then there is 38-year-old Mark Moseley, who is trying to remain the only straight-ahead placekicker in the NFL.

Also set to face stiff competition are defensive linemen Dave Butz and Darryl Grant. They may get a break, however, with the absence of top draft pick Marcus Koch, a defensive lineman from Boise State, who like most high draft choices is a holdout.

Only two of the 28 first-round draft choices have come to terms with the teams that drafted them.

"I don't like it," Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs said when asked about Koch and another high pick, wide receiver Walter Murray of Hawaii. Washington GM Bobby Beathard expects to resume negotiations Monday.

"I've called around the league and it seems everyone is waiting to see what the other top picks get before they'll agree to anything," Beathard said...

Walter Payton says he is not looking forward to an eight-hour airplane ride to London where the Bears will play the Dallas Cowboys Aug. 3. But the NFL's all-time leading rusher says he wouldn't mind meeting Queen Elizabeth.

The Bears leave camp Sunday for London...

Tight end Greg Hawthorne — who had been cut — figured at least he would get another week's pay when New England Patriots Coach Raymond Berry asked him to return to the team last October.

Berry called him again in March.

This Day in Baseball

July 21

1945 — The Detroit Tigers and the Philadelphia Athletics battled 24 innings and ended in a 1-1 tie. Les Mueller pitched 19 2-3 innings for the Tigers.

1956 — Brooks Lawrence of the Cincinnati Reds had his 13-game winning streak snapped as Roberto Clemente's three-run homer led the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-3 victory.

1975 — Joe Torre of the New York Mets grounded into four double plays in a 6-2 loss to the Houston Astros. Felix Millan had four singles but was wiped out each time.

Today's Birthdays: Dave Henderson 28.

MAJORS

Phillies 9, Reds 3

Juan Samuel had four hits and scored four runs and Von Hayes keyed a four-run sixth inning with a two-run double as Philadelphia ended Cincinnati's five-game winning streak.

Charles Hudson, 5-9, broke his personal six-game losing streak as he allowed five hits in eight innings.

Pirates 4, Padres 2

Johnny Ray singled in a run and Jim Morrison doubled in another during a three-run sixth inning and Junior Ortiz hit two sacrifice flies as Pittsburgh beat San Diego.

Larry McWilliams, 2-5, pitched three hitless innings for the victory. After a 25-minute rain delay in the ninth, Don Robinson got the last two outs for his fourth save.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Mariners 9, Red Sox 5

Scott Bradley drove in five runs with a homer and single, pacing Seattle past Boston.

Bradley hit a three-run, pinch-homer in the fourth inning and delivered a two-run single during the Mariners' five-run sixth.

The AL East-leading Red Sox lost for the fourth time in their last five games. Boston's Don Baylor hit his 300th career homer, a two-run shot.

Blue Jays 6, Angels 3

Lloyd Moseby's RBI single broke a 2-2 tie in the 10th inning and George Bell followed with a three-run homer, leading Toronto over California.

The Angels scored twice in the ninth, but Damaso Garcia opened the Blue Jays' 10th with a single against Doug Corbett, 2-2.

White Sox 8, Yankees 0

Neil Allen pitched a two-hitter for his second consecutive shutout and Ron Kittle hit two solo homers to propel Chicago over New York.

Allen, 7-1, did not a walk a batter and held the Yankees without a runner until Dave Winfield singled with two out in the fifth. Allen won his third straight decision.

Tigers 4, Rangers 0

Rookie Eric King pitched a six-hitter for his first major-league shutout and Detroit took advantage of Texas miscues.

The Tigers swept the four-game series and extended their winning streak to five. Kirk Gibson had the game-winning RBI in each of the five games, a major-league record.

King, 6-2, struck out six and walked one.

Rangers first baseman Pete O'Brien made a double error that allowed two runs to score, and shortstop Scott Fletcher's throwing error produced another run.

Orioles 8, Twins 3

Rookie Jim Traber, subbing for injured first baseman Eddie Murray, hit a three-run homer while driving in four runs as Baltimore beat Minnesota.

Mike Boddicker, 12-5, gave up four hits over eight innings and won for the second time in his last six decisions.

Traber, recalled from Rochester last week when Murray was put on the 21-day disabled list, had three hits in the Orioles' 13-hit attack.

Royals 3, Indians 2

Frank White hit reliever Dickie Noles' first pitch in the bottom of the ninth inning for his 12th home run of the season, lifting Kansas City over Cleveland.

Kansas City's George Brett, playing for the first time since missing 14 games because of an injured right rotator cuff, was hitless in four at-bats, including an RBI groundout.

Brewers 7-2, A's 2-4

Alfredo Griffin's RBI single capped a three-run third inning and Jose Rijo pitched a seven-hitter and struck out 12 as Oakland salvaged a doubleheader split with Milwaukee.

In the first game, Ernest Riles hit a three-run homer in the fourth inning and Dale Sveum followed with a homer. Teddy Higuera, 11-7, won with a seven-hit performance over seven innings. The Brewers ended Oakland's four-game winning streak.

COWBOYS

"I'm here to support Danny White," Pelluer said. "I just want to help this team anyway I can. I'm not trying to take Danny's job."

Pelluer said his performance in last year's playoff game gave him confidence.

"I'm trying to build on that game now and get even better," he said.

Hackett, who came to the Cowboys in the offseason from the San Francisco 49ers, said "I was first impressed by Pelluer on the basketball court. I said this big guy can really move. It surprised me. He has picked up the offense just great."

In 1985, Pelluer hit five passes on eight attempts for 47 yards.

"We're going to give him a lot of action during the preseason this year," Landry said. "He's earned it."

Russia amasses 13 more Golds

By BERT ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, which dominated the inaugural Goodwill Games, ended the competition with a flourish Sunday, capturing 13 gold medals and finishing with 99 more medals than the United States.

The games, billed as a battle of the superpowers, was a mismatch, as the powerful Soviets overwhelmed the Americans.

Sunday, the Soviets won nine of 11 head-to-head races against the Americans in rowing at the Krylatskoye rowing canal, they took all three medals in super heavyweight weightlifting, as Leonid Taranenko won the snatch, clean-and-jerk and overall titles, and in judo, they grabbed one of a possible two golds in judo.

That, along with six silvers, gave the Soviets a total of 118 golds and 241 medals overall.

The Americans, meanwhile, earned only the two golds and nine silvers in rowing, including an upset by their men's eight-oar team over the Soviet world champions, and finished with 42 golds and 142 medals overall.

Following the competition Sunday, the games, designed to promote goodwill and peace through sports, were officially ended with the closing ceremonies. And the organizers, including American broadcasting magnate Ted Turner, looked optimistically ahead to the next scheduled Goodwill Games, at Seattle, in 1990.

Turner and Robert Wussler, executive vice president of Turner Broadcasting System, said they hope to attract 5,000 athletes and more than 100 countries to Seattle, compared with some 3,500 athletes and 76 countries that competed in Moscow.

Goodwill Games

Sunday, the big surprise was the performance of the U.S. eight-oared rowing team, which powered through the canal in 5 minutes, 36.98 seconds in upsetting the Soviets (5:41.22).

Christopher Penny of Middletown, R.I., said the team had been put together about two weeks ago, and "this is the first time we've done 2,000 (meters) at race cadence."

"The eight is our priority boat," team leader Peter Zanderberger said.

Angie Herron of East Thetford, Vt., registered the Americans' other rowing victory, capturing the women's lightweight single sculls in 7:53.05 over the Soviet's Tatyana Mironova (7:59.15).

Back in his younger days, around the age of 18, Witte was a one and two handicap golfer.

"I used to play in championship flights in a lot of the tournaments around Dallas," said Witte, who is now a 25 handicapper.

Volotko, a 23 handicap, has also lost a few strokes off his better days.

"Years ago I had it down to 13," said Volotko. "That's as good as I've ever been. It doesn't bother me if it goes up or goes down as long as I have fun."

Volotko moved to Odessa in 1959 "from Houston and I wouldn't move away from here now," he said.

Now, retired, golf is a big part of Volotko's life.

"I started playing when I was around 30 years old when I got out of the navy. That's all I do now is play golf. We have a foursome in Odessa that plays three or four times a week."

Witte, who is recovering from recent health problems, is just returning to the links.

"I've only been back playing about three-and-a-half weeks since last August," said Witte. "I've had some health problems."

Even though the two are senior golfers, they admit there are problems competing against the kids just coming of age.

"Us old folks don't have a chance against the 50-year-olds," said Witte, who is 11 years younger than the tournament's oldesd entrant Paul McHargue.

McHargue, 88 years young, was only able to play nine holes but was still around the course Sunday afternoon when the "kids" were out there playing. He was having a good time showing off his business card:

Watson, Ballestros blast British fairways

By JOHN RADOSTA
N.Y. Times News Service

TURNBERRY, Scotland — Tom Watson, a five-time winner of the British Open, and Seve Ballesteros, who has won twice, led a chorus of protests Sunday about the extremely narrow fairways in the Open this year.

Watson said he intended to write a letter to the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, which conducts the championship. Ballesteros made his remarks at a news conference in the presence of Michael Bonallack, the secretary of the Royal and Ancient.

Earlier in the week, Jack Nicklaus said sardonically that he was surprised to find any fairways at all. Throughout the week, after practice and competition rounds, players have been complaining about the penalizing width of the fairways.

THE NARROWNESS of the fairways, none more than 25 yards wide, was intensified by the tall, dense and tangled rough and by the severe winds that blew on the first three days. In 1977, the only previous time the Open was played here, the fairways were narrow, but, because of a drought, there was almost no rough and there was no wind.

Watson and Ballesteros expressed their opinions after completing the final round, in which Ballesteros shot a six-under-par 64 and Watson a 71. Ballesteros finished at 288, eight shots behind the winner, Greg Norman. Watson had a 296.

Watson was equable in his comments but Ballesteros was caustic.

Watson was interviewed outside the scorers' hut behind the 18th green. He said he had paced off some fairways at 20 to 23 yards wide. "That's not enough," he said. "Even with no wind that applies.

"I cannot believe these fairways, especially No. 1, where there is a 15-yard area from the right bunker to the left rough with a big crown in the middle. How are you supposed to put the ball in the fairway? Sixteen is 20 yards wide, Eight is 16 yards.

"I don't understand the logic behind it," Watson continued. "Somebody didn't use his head. It is tough to play Turnberry under these conditions. Not the weather, it's just that we should have somewhere to hit with the driver. I played stupidly. I hit the driver too many times. I admit that."

BALLESTEROS called the course preparation "too severe" and added that it "takes something from the people who come to the gate to see better golf than that."

"They don't want to see players coming to the last hole 20 over par," he said. "I've played in the Open 12 years and have never seen a course set up so severe.

"I am sure other players have the same opinion, but some don't want to say anything. I say this for the benefit of the game of golf."

Ballesteros was asked if he would write to the Royal and Ancient.

"I'm sure they can read English," he answered.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Tuesday, July 22, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You will find you have more friends than you ever imagined. Mental concentration is the key to achieving career goals. A financial turnaround affects your health as well as your pocketbook in a positive way. There will be greater emphasis on the things you most enjoy in life. A fair amount of luck comes your way.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Opera soprano Licia Albanese, comic Orson Bean, designer Oscar de la Renta, Toronto Blue Jays pitcher Dave Steib, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole (R-Ks.), matriarch Rose Kennedy, baseball's Cliff Johnson and Dennis Gonzalez.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Extra cash for investment could come from an unexpected source. Harmony is the key to success, and it comes today through careful cooperation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A member of the opposite sex could keep you on the run today. Do not get so distracted you miss work deadlines or your bank account could suffer. Consider taking an ocean cruise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not worry about achieving a special goal. You will have all the pizzazz you need to climb any mountain today. You feel more mellow than usual this evening. Romance takes a happy turn.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clear up a misunderstanding with your mate or a good friend before the situation escalates. Do not overlook an important anniversary or birthday. Travel adds to the joy of a vacation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): This is a good day for cementing partnerships. Lock savings away where you can not get at them, because you are in the mood to spend lavishly. Luck comes to those in love.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Vary your routine to avoid boredom today. You may have to find new sources of income to pay off creditors. Mutual respect will provide you with something to build a relationship on.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Quick thinking will put you in a strong leadership position today. Some of the pressures you have had to endure lately will begin to recede. A member of the opposite sex cheers you up.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Learn to delegate responsibility and you will find that happiness and productivity will both rise. The future is what really counts; put the past behind you. Do whatever is necessary to protect a friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Deal with problems as they occur. The longer you put them off, the tougher they will be to handle. Travel and high-tech careers will be open now to those who pursue them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stay in the driver's seat but listen to an adviser. Promotional activities may require more of your time, but the payoff could be great. Travel brings pleasure and money today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Some heavy wheeling and dealing could be the order of the day, and you will love every minute of it. Keep your wits sharp and the results will be pleasing. Get additional career training.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take care of unfinished business before accepting new responsibilities. Let your head rule the decision-making; emotions could be deceptive. Make sure you get shoes that fit.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠87 ♡652 ◇KQ9873 ♣82
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♣	Pass	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner has asked you to bid your best suit and, at the same time, has announced a very powerful hand. Your hand has distinct trick-taking possibilities that would not be described by a bid of three diamonds. Since you have already limited your hand by passing, jump to four diamonds, or even five, now.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠93 ♡AQJ1052 ◇7 ♣J983
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—That depends on your methods. If you are employing weak jump overcalls, this is the hand for that action: a good six-card suit and no defense outside your own suit. If you cannot make a weak jump overcall in your system, bid one heart.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ93 ♡7 ◇QJ62 ♣K1043
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
A.—You have the perfect shape for a takeout double, but with only one king and no ace your hand is a trifle too weak for such action. Pass, and see how the auction develops.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ1054 ♡AK8 ◇9 ♣KJ7
What is your opening bid?
A.—You have a very strong hand, but it is a whisker short of a demand bid. If you count losing tricks, this hand has five, one more than the maximum for a strong two bid. Open one spade.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ95 ♡AK8 ◇K9 ♣KJ7
What is your opening bid?
A.—Again this hand is a trifle weak for an opening bid of two spades. However, it is too strong for one spade. Bid two no trump. You have a balanced hand, and a five-card major need not bar you from making your natural opening bid.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q7 ♡Q4 ◇832 ♣AKQJ65
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	1 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner should have quite a fair hand and good suit for his overcall of one spade, so you might have enough for game even though your queen of hearts is of doubtful value. However, you could almost surely make three no trump if partner has a heart guard. Start by cue-bidding two hearts to test partner's reaction. If he simply rebids two spades, make one more try with three clubs.

Autry recovering from hip surgery

Autry

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Gene Autry, owner of the California Angels baseball team and a former singing cowboy, was resting comfortably following hip surgery.

Autry, 78, was listed in good condition Sunday at St. Joseph Hospital in Burbank and showed no complications from Friday's surgery, said Angels' spokeswoman Cathy Griffin.

Autry's right hip joint was replaced with a metal prosthesis. He broke his hip in a fall Thursday.

He is expected to be released from the hospital in 10 to 14 days, Ms. Griffin said.

Baryshnikov

TOKYO (AP) — Ballet superstar Mikhail Baryshnikov sipped champagne with Japan's Prince Takamado to toast his first spin on a Tokyo stage in 15 years.

Emperor Hirohito's nephew and his wife, Hisako, were among luminaries who welcomed Baryshnikov and the American Ballet Theater Sunday.

Baryshnikov last appeared in Japan as part of Russia's Kirov Ballet Company.

The dancer, who defected to the United States in 1974, was among the 292 people sworn in as American citizens during the Liberty Weekend celebrations of the Statue of Liberty's 100th anniversary.

Baryshnikov brought 10 dancers to Japan for the July 20-31 tour.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lucille Ball, after a 14-year absence from series television, filmed her first new show for ABC with a "vintage Lucy" performance that brought the cheering audience to its feet, an ABC spokesman said.

"The last scene was vintage Lucy excitement," said Jasper Vance, a publicist for ABC.

"This is the first audience in a very long time. I appreciate your coming and I love you," said Miss Ball, 74, who is returning to series television for the first time since 1974 in a series called "Life With Lucy." The show is expected to begin in September.

CHICAGO (AP) — Britain's Prince Charles isn't arriving until September, but preparations already are under way for his one-day visit.

The Chicago media met organizers of the trip on Friday and were told by a representative of the British Consulate not to expect interviews, "so don't ask."

"And don't fear that anyone else will get an interview because they won't," Caroline Cracraft said.

The prince arrives in Chicago on Sept. 4 — without Princess Diana — and attends a benefit Polo Ball at a Marshall Field's store. The next day, he tours a promotion of British goods at Field's, visits a magnet school, attends a reception sponsored by the British consul general and plays a polo match.

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Dr. Karl Menninger observes his 93rd birthday Tuesday, still worried that man may soon blow himself off the planet.

The famed psychiatrist still receives a steady stream of callers seeking advice, interviews and wisdom at his office on the campus of the Menninger Foundation on the northwest outskirts of Topeka.

"I never expected to be 93, but I feel pretty good. I don't deserve to," he said. "I don't expect to be 100. But I might be."

"I feel a little hope, and I don't know why. The country is so apathetic," he said. "I don't hear a conclusive determination that there's going to be peace."

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Bill Cosby, Larry Hagman and Tom Selleck command the highest salaries for weekly television programs, and Richard Chamberlain, Joan Collins and Sophia Loren top the list for TV movies and miniseries, says TV Guide.

Cosby earns $10 million annually from his weekly NBC show plus commercials, concerts and comedy albums, the magazine says in next week's issue.

Hagman receives $125,000 an episode plus a percentage of profits for "Dallas," and Selleck also gets a cut of the take plus $100,000 per episode of "Magnum PI," according to the magazine, which conducted a confidential survey of actors, agents, producers and other Hollywood insiders in estimating the figures.

Don Johnson of "Miami Vice" recently signed a new contract reportedly worth at least $1.5 million this season, and Michael J. Fox, who became a movie star in "Back to the Future," received a $1 million bonus to continue working in "Family Ties," the magazine says.

The survey suggests television salaries have not yet peaked, even though an unidentified United Artists executive said they "are out of control."

Guest appearances also can be lucrative, according to the magazine. The average guest shot pays $2,500, but "The Love Boat" has paid as much as $50,000 for special two-hour episodes filmed aboard.

The producers of "Hotel" offered Laurence Olivier $250,000 for a special appearance but he declined. The role eventually went to Stewart Granger for $10,000.

Baer

MARTINEZ, Calif. (AP) — Jacob "Buddy" Baer, who knocked down champion Joe Louis in the first round of a boxing match 45 years ago, has died at age 71.

Friends said Baer, who died Friday at the Veterans Administration Hospital in this community near the San Francisco Bay, had Alzheimer's disease.

Baer, 6-foot-6 and 250 pounds, was known by friends as the gentle giant of professional boxing.

He fought Louis twice, losing both times. His knockdown of Louis came May 23, 1941, in Washington, D.C.

Baer had 55 professional fights, losing only seven and had 43 knockouts. He retired from the ring in 1942 and joined the Army.

His older brother was heavyweight champion Max Baer.

Buddy Baer also had a film career, appearing in 17 movies, including "The Big Sky" with Kirk Douglas, "Slightly Scarlet" with John Payne and Rhonda Fleming, and "Quo Vadis" with Robert Taylor.

In the 1970s, Baer was a sergeant-at-arms in the state Senate in Sacramento. He retired from that after injuring his back by stepping off a raised platform while performing sergeant-at-arms duties.

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Donald A. Pugnetti, a former editor of The Tacoma News Tribune and Tri-City Herald, died Saturday. He was 69.

Pugnetti, who died in a Seattle hospital, worked as a reporter at The News Tribune and in 1947 moved to Pasco as managing editor of the Tri-City Herald. He later became its editor.

In 1973 he was named editor of The News Tribune. He became a director of the Tribune Publishing Co. the following year.

The Sad Monkey Train rides, above, offer tourists a 20-minute trip through the canyon's history and geology. In top left photo, security guard Pete Petruccione examines a cable tool drilling rig exhibit at West Texas State University in Canyon. People wait in line, far right photo, to get into the musical "Texas." At right, people enjoy barbecue before the musical.

One of the highlights for summer visitors to Palo Duro Canyon Park, often called a miniature Grand Canyon, near Amarillo is the presentation of "Texas," a musical drama about the history of the Texas Panhandle which focuses on the 1880s.

To take the audience back in time, the noted author, the late Paul Green, started with the land — a desert until a great underground river was found beneath it and tapped by windmills. He describes the conflicts between men's — Indians, ranchers and settlers — use of the land, and he shows the ways the land shaped them with storms, dust, drought and distance.

The story is told by 80 people — actors, dancers, singers and horseback riders. They are backed by 60 more backstage.

More than 1.6 million people have seen the production since its opening in 1966.

Job Club offers job-hunting skills to individuals of all walks of life

FORT WORTH (AP)— If you can't find a job and don't even know how or where to look, the Job Club can help.

"We teach people how to find a job," said Daphne Mackie-Myles, director of the Women's Center's Job Club, a three-phase, free program that helps unemployed people get hired. "We offer it to anyone. We've served people with graduate degrees and we have people who can't read. They come to learn how to find a job."

About 80 percent of the Job Club's clients get jobs, said Janet Smillie, Job Club III coordinator. Those who don't get jobs during the first two phases, which last two weeks apiece, can move into Job Club III.

"Eventually, if they want a job they'll get one," she said. "They may not get the job they want, but they can begin to work toward that."

The Job Club philosphy is that of the Women's Center. "Karen (Women's Center executive director Karen Perkins) says we teach people how to fish," Ms. Smillie said. "We don't give them the fish — we show them how to get their own. That's a lot of what we do here."

When the Job Club started three years ago, only women enrolled. Today, men are involved in the program. "That tells you something about the curent employment situation," said Ms. Mackie-Myles.

Each Job Club segment addresses a particular need of the unemployed. Job Club I is for people who don't know what kind of work to look for. Most clients have been out of work for a long time or have never been employed. The two-week course helps them clarify their goals and needs.

Job Club II, the centerpiece of the program, is for people who know what they want to do and need a job right away but are having a difficult time finding one. This class helps them identify barriers to employment, be it attitude, dress habits or a poorly constructed resume.

Job Club III is for people who've completed the second phase and have been looking for work but haven't found it yet.

"It's all done in a group setting, which offers positive reinforcement to these people, many of whom have very low self-esteem," said Veronica Allen, who conducts Job Club II.

"For example, a woman may come to us with excellent skills, but she's been in a marriage where her husband has told her she's worthless and she's bought it. The group can help her realize, regardless of what anyone thinks of her, she can make it, she is marketable."

Ms. Allen uses role playing to instruct students in interviewing, and she helps them write resumes. She teaches job-search techniques, including how to spot bogus ads, the ones that really are too good to be true.

"We also tap into the hidden job market," she said. "We teach them how to use all the resources available to find a job, not just to stop at the newspaper or employment agency."

Ms. Smillie said it takes a lot of work to get clients motivated and keep them thinking positively.

Jaycees give 5-year-old wish trip to Disneyland

From Staff Reports

Five-year-old Ector Martinez, Jr. of McCaney got a wish of a lifetime. He and his family are spending four days at Disneyland, Calif.

The trip was sponsored by the Midland Jaycees in cooperation with Arlington's A Wish With Wings Inc.

Jaycee member Annette Cross said A Wish With Wings Inc. grants "a wish of a lifetime to kids with catestrophic illnesses."

She added that the group does not give out the name of the illness because, "they want this to be a postive experience for the child and the family."

The Martinez family left early this morning and will return July 24.

"We (the Jaycees) are very excited about granting a wish. It is something we wanted to do and would like to do it again," Ms. Cross said.

A Wish With Wings Inc. is a nonprofit nationwide organization.

Area groups to tour Mexican industrial sites

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A group of Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce and Permian Basin International Trade Forum members will spend three days later this month touring industrial sites and meeting with business representatives in the Mexican State of Chihuahua.

The group is scheduled to leave July 28 and return July 30.

According to Jill Berg, assistant director of economic development for the Odessa chamber, the group will tour industrial facilities and the industrial park in Parral July 29, have a noon luncheon and working session with area business leaders and view exhibits of local work of foundries, machine shops and wood working shops.

Late that afternoon the group will leave Parral and travel to Chihuahua City where they will spend the night.

On July 30 the group will be bussed to the Chihuahuaese industrial promotion office, where they'll have an orientation session with local business people. Prior to a noon luncheon the group is scheduled to tour the Chihuahua City industrial park and the Ford Motor Co. plant in the area.

The group is scheduled to leave Chihuahua City late that afternoon and return to Odessa.

The purpose of the trip is part of the ongoing effort to explore and encourage trade opportunities between Mexico and Permian Basin businesses.

Awards for service to the Auxiliary were also presented to radio station KJBC-AM and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Alleged arson victim charged with previous crimes

HOUSTON (AP) — A 33-year-old Houston man who claimed he was tied up by an armed robber who later set the house on fire was indicted on arson charges.

Robert Lowery told investigators he returned to his house in the middle of the morning of Dec. 19 to get a briefcase he had forgotten and surprised an armed intruder.

According to proseuctor John Cossum, Lowery said the man tied him up and covered his head. He said he smelled smoke some time later.

Lowery was indicted Friday with setting the December fire that destroyed or damaged five houses in the Champions Forest subdivision, prosecutor John Cossum said.

Police hold name of fatally wounded Midlander

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Late this morning police continued to withhold the identity of a 23-year-old Midland man fatally shot early Sunday.

Cpt. John McAhon said officers began trying to contact the man's next of kin Sunday morning but had been unsuccessful.

According to McAhon the shooting occurred in the 1100 block of Blackshear Steet about 1:20 a.m. Sunday. The 23-year-old victim was shot once in the face and died about 8:10 a.m. at Medical Center Hospital, he said.

The victim and three friends had come to Odessa from Midland earlier Saturday and were on their way back to Midland, McAhon said. The four had left a bowling alley and were at the intersection of East 42nd Street and Dawn when they met four black males in their late teens or early 20s, according to police reports.

The two cars pulled onto the parking lot at Permian High School where the four men from Midland talked to them for a few minutes.

They then followed the other car to the intersection of Fitch Avenue and Lubbock Street, where one of the men went into the Rondavoo Club, stayed for a short time, then returned and told the Midland men to follow them.

According to three of the Midland men, both cars parked in the 1100-block of Blackshear Street, near the old Blackshear Stadium field house. McAhon said the three witnesses said the other four came over to their car, pointed a gun at them and demanded all their money.

After taking their money, witnesses told investigating officers, the four men began assaulting them. The man holding the gun pointed it at the 23-year-old Midland man snd shot him once in the face.

Police and a Fire Department ambulance crew called to the scene found the wounded man lying in the driveway of the old Blackshear Field House. Thr victim was taken to Medical Center Hospital where he was pronounced dead about six hours later by Peace Justice Jimmy Harris, who ordered an autopsy.

Police report photographic equipment stolen

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Sheriff's Department today reported the burglary of more than $1,000 in photographic equipment from a vehicle. Robert Altany, 4510 Amigo Dr., reported a 35 mm camera valued at $300 and assorted lenses valued at $920 were stolen from a 1986 Toyota parked on County Road 116.

Reports said the burglary apparently occurred between 5 p.m. Saturday and noon Sunday.

In other reports, the Midland Police Department reported two auto burglaries and a residential burglary. Michael Spicer, 2609 Ward St., reported two bank bags containing $687 in loose bills and change was stolen from the trunk of a vehicle.

Joanne Maloney reported to police the burglary of an automobile in the 4400 block of Andrews Hwy. A stereo valued at $440 was reported stolen.

Two 19-inch color televisions and an AM-FM cassette, and eight-track stereo of unknown value were reported stolen from a residence in the 500 block of W. Scharbauer. Dr. Chris Gilbert told police someone apparently entered the residence through the front door.

A Midland woman was listed in serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital today following a shooting Saturday in the 900 block of East Missouri Ave. Police said Marlinda Lydia, 28, of Cedar St., was shot about 11:50 a.m. following an argument and an exchange of gunfire allegedly with her ex-husband, 33-year-old Fred Lewis of Midland. Mrs. Lydia was shot once in the throat and underwent surgery Saturday afternoon, police said.

Lewis, who suffered gunshot wounds to the back of the legs and the elbow, was treated and released from MMH Sunday.

Charges in the case were unknown pending an investigation by detectives, police said.

Police Roundup

CANYON

It will be performed nightly, except Sundays, through Aug. 23, beginning at 8:30 p.m. each evening.

But there is more to Palo Duro than just the production. Among the choices are:

— The Sad Monkey Train ride, a miniature open train, which passes unusual rock formations.

— Horseback riding.

— An air lift, which provides riders with an aerial view of the park.

— Numerous picnic areas throughout the canyon.

— A scenic drive the encircles the park area.

— A creek which crisscrosses the scenic drive and, following thunderstorms, can produce flood conditions in the canyon.

— Canyon walls which expose geological formations dating back hundreds of millions of years.

DEATHS

W.M. Stephens

LAMESA — W.M. (Bill) Stephens, 83, of Borden County died Saturday afternoon at a Lubbock hospital following a lengthy illness.

White, to patch TSTA problems, says 'no more testing of teachers'

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — Challenger Bill Clements says the Texas State Teachers Association won't make a gubernatorial endorsement this year, but Gov. Mark White made it clear he is working to patch up any problems he has with TSTA.

Both candidates drew mixed responses — applause and murmurs of discontent — in back-to-back appearances at the TSTA leadership conference Saturday night.

After his presentation to the 700 teachers, Clements told reporters, "I suspect they won't endorse. They'll sit it out."

Asked if it would be a victory for him if the traditionally Democratic group did not back the Democratic incumbent, Clements said, "I don't consider it a victory when they don't endorse me."

White won TSTA backing in 1982 when he ousted Clements. But the White-TSTA relationship soured a bit when the governor pushed for basic literacy testing of all educators.

The teachers have taken the test, but TSTA is asking the Texas Supreme Court to rule it was illegal.

White recalled that TSTA was part of his 1982 team. He also acknowledged the group has differed with him on the testing issue.

"Four years ago, in this very room, you and I formed a partnership," White said.

"We've come a long way together and we need to keep going," he said, adding that the 1984 education reform package included "rough spots and loose ends."

The governor did not mention the literacy test in his speech, but it came up during the questions from the teachers. He was asked if the second part of the testing plan — subject matter exams — would ever come to fruition.

"There will be no more testing of our teachers," he said, drawing a partial standing ovation.

He also told the teachers he would soon form a new panel — including teachers — to keep him in closer touch with educators' concerns.

Committee considering cuts in highways, higher education, pay

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Highways and higher public education, human services and state employees pay raises head the list of $1.3 billion in proposed budget cuts the House Appropriations Committee began considering Sunday.

Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said the agencies affected will have no opportunity to plead their cases before the committee. He pointed out that the agencies have already volunteered about $380 million in cuts.

"It's now our turn to do the duty we have," Rudd said. "They may still believe the Senate will never go along with it and go over there and play defense."

The committee will meet another two or three days in preparing a final list for the entire Legislature to consider when it comes to Austin for a special session beginning Aug. 6. While the House goes ahead with its budget cutting proposals, Senate leaders continue to call for some tax increase to offset the revenue lost due to the massive drop in the price of oil.

Rudd said he expects the committee to vote, "probably Tuesday" on a plan that will save enough to allow the state to pay its bills through next May. Today he hopes to have available a study of how many state employees would lose their jobs under the plan as well as more extensive reductions that would cut $2.3 billion to $3 billion from the state's fiscal 1987 budget.

"That'll get the money," Rudd said of the $1.3 billion plan. When asked if his proposal would work even after Comptroller Bob Bullock increases the projected deficit to more than $3 billion later this week, Rudd said, "We'll have plenty."

The list offered two options for cutting the 1987 public schools budget by about $204 million. Houston Rep. Paul Colbert, budget chairman for public education, said some of the proposals "obviously are going to damage the education of kids in the classroom."

Colbert particularly criticized a proposal — included in both options — to eliminate the $5.9 million summer school program for children who have limited understanding of the English language. "Here you're trying to get kids to participate in an educational program at an equivalent level to other children, and you say, 'We're just going to cut that out,'" he said.

"That's not right."

One of the options included a proposal, offered by state education officials as the "least objectionable," that would force local school districts to raise property taxes to come up with an extra $160 million next year. The other option cuts $93 million from the career ladder bonus pay plan for outstanding teachers, $36 million from a program designed to help retain experienced teachers and $29 million from vocational education.

The staff of the Legislative Budget Board prepared the list at Rudd's direction. They started with the $380 million in voluntary reductions and looked for an additional $600 million to $1.6 billion.

"I instructed them just to do the job and do it the best they could," Rudd said.

In addition to the voluntary reductions, the list includes cuts of:

— $303.2 million for highways.

— $148.5 million from higher education, including more than $690,000 from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

— $70.5 million by eliminating the 3-percent pay raise for state employees.

— Little or nothing from the Department of Corrections, the Teacher Retirement System and the Department of Mental Health-Mental Retardation.

— All 1987 funding for Texas A&M University's Rodent and Predatory Animal Control Service, the Natural Fibers and Food Protein Commission and the State Ethics Advisory Commission.

— More than half of Gov. Mark White's office budget, most from the elimination of grants to regional planning commissions such as the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

Attorneys confused on whether conviction was conspiracy to murder or kidnapping

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A jury that convicted a Hill County rancher, his son and a former ranch foreman of organized crime did not find the men guilty of murder conspiracy, a member of the panel says.

But another juror said she believed drifter Anthony Bates, 27, of Huntsville, Ala., was murdered on the ranch in March 1984.

Most of the jurors contacted over the weekend declined to comment.

The finding on whether the three men were convicted of murder conspiracy was key in determining their sentence, and prosecutors have said the defendants got sentences that were far too lenient.

The jury last week convicted Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 54; his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33; and Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21, of violating the state's organized crime law.

They had been accused of conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in a slavery scheme that led to the death of Bates.

After the jury issued its verdicts late Wednesday, attorneys in the case said they were confused as to whether the defendants had been convicted of conspiracy to murder or simply conspiracy to kidnap.

The verdict sheet, because of the way it was written, seemed to indicate the men had been convicted only of conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping.

Because of the confusion, State District Judge Tom Blackwell told jurors they could assess prison terms up to life for the three men. Such a sentence would be imposed if the convictions had included murder conspiracy.

But late Friday, the panel handed down a 15-year term for the younger Ellebracht, seven years probation for his father, and 14 years in prison for Caldwell.

Caldwell, who has served 27 months while awaiting trial, could be out on parole by the end of the year.

The junior Ellebracht's attorney Ray Bass asked for a new trial and vowed his client would never serve a day behind bars.

The judge ordered 120 days in prison for the senior Ellebracht because the jury found he had used a deadly weapon in the crime.

The state claimed the Ellebrachts lured hitchhikers like Bates to their ranch with the promise of work, then forced them into slavery.

Prosecutors also alleged Bates was tortured to death with a cattle prod, then his body burned at the ranch.

The state focused its case on several tape recordings of torture sessions involving Bates.

Juror Vernon William Ottmers, a maintenance worker at the Kerrville State Hospital, said the tapes were shocking.

STATE IN BRIEF

Investigator says neither Cessna engine operated

ADDISON (AP) — A federal investigator said neither engine of a Cessna 421-B was operating when the plane crashed on takeoff from a suburban Dallas airport, killing a neurosurgeon, his family and co-pilot.

J.O. Johnson, an investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board, said indications were the right engine of the Cessna failed during takeoff Saturday. The left engine then either stalled or was shut off before the crash, he said.

The airplane fell into an open field, just short of a busy street in a heavily developed area, police said.

Killed were Dr. David Weaver, 36, of University Park, pilot and owner of the craft; his wife, Tamsin Weaver, 23; their son, Richard, 8 months; and co-pilot Dan Barrett, 21, according to Addison police investigator Lee Waldin.

The four were headed to Atlanta with a final destination at Myrtle Beach, S.C., where the family had planned a vacation, authorities said.

Johnson said the plane struck the ground upside down, then flipped onto its belly after impact.

"If you get a twin-engine not running at a certain speed with an engine out, the plane will overtake the pilot," he said. "Neither engine was running at the point of impact."

Six Flags site of black-out

ARLINGTON (AP) — People were stranded in a high-rise elevator and on about 30 rides at Six Flags Over Texas amusement park Sunday during a power failure that was termed the most serious in the park's 25-year history.

No injuries were reported, park spokesman Bruce Neal said. About 21,000 visitors were inside the park at the time, he said.

"There was a momentary failure over the entire park about 9 p.m. Approximately half of the park came back on after just a second," Neal said.

Park employees using battery-powered emergency lights and flashlights helped visitors off the rides, he said. Passengers were stranded on the rides for varying lengths of time, but most were off in less than 30 minutes, Neal said.

"It was done rather slowly because it was so dark," Neal said.

Power was restore to the entire park about 10:10 p.m. Kirby Sewell, a spokesman for Texas Electric Service Company, said the outage occurred when a piece of equipment failed outside the amusement park and blew a fuse.

Four people were stranded for the duration of the failure in a car about 15 feet above the ground at the Texas Cliffhanger free fall ride, Neal said. A back-up generator, which is supposed to switch on during a power failure, did not work, Neal said.

Six Flags Over Texas is located on Interstate 30, midway between Fort Worth and Dallas.

Farmers may make rubber

RIO GRANDE CITY (AP) — After years of research, state and government scientists say they are pleased with pilot projects aimed at determining whether Texas farmers can profitably produce natural rubber — a product the United States now has to import.

Test plots are being observed near Rio Grande City, Pecos and Fort Stockton, as well as in parts of Arizona, New Mexico and California.

The star behind the hoopla is guayule (pronounced why-YOO-leh), a bushy shrub native to the Trans-Pecos area of West Texas and the Chihuahua Desert in northern Mexico.

"We found out that we can establish the plant, and it produces pretty well," C.L. Gonzalez, a U.S. Department of Agriculture researcher told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

To date, the United States has been able to produce only synthetic rubber, which is unacceptable for use in tires and important defense applications.

As a result, the U.S. has had to import about 800,000 metric tons of natural rubber each year from Indonesia and other parts of the Far East at a cost of about 40 cents a pound.

Adequate rainfall coupled with low-cost land make producing guayule cheaper in South Texas than at any other location, Gonzalez said.

"I'm saying it has potential to be a new crop. I am not saying it could revolutionize farming," said John P. Wagner, associate director and principal investigator of a guayule project conducted by Texas A&M scientists at Pecos and Fort Stockton.

Texas A&M's guayule project began in September 1983 under the auspices of the U.S. Army Tank Automotive Command, which provided an initial $300,000 to build a pilot guayule processing plant at the Texas A&M Research Extension Annex in Bryan, Wagner said.

Tropicana juice pulled

FORT WORTH (AP) — Employees of Kroger stores pulled Tropicana orange juice products off their shelves Sunday after an anonymous caller said cyanide had been injected into the products.

The call was received by the ABC news bureau in Grand Prairie, which relayed the information to police at 1 a.m. Sunday, said police spokesman Doug Clarke.

Officials deliberated for several hours before notifying the media for fear the report would prompt prank calls, Clarke said.

'Fergie fever' spreading

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

He's the one who stuck a carnation in Maragaret Trudeau's cleavage, put bubble bath in the swimming pool at Windsor Castle and spray-painted a pack of American photographers.

He has been called alternately a war hero and a spoiled rich kid. But he's best known for his social skills — namely, entertaining a string of dazzling models, actressess (erotic and otherwise) and beauty queens.

Meet Andrew Albert Christian Edward Mountbatten-Windsor.

He's Queen Elizabeth's second son — the palace prankster and naughty playboy whose toothy smile and headline-grabbing indiscretions are legend throughout the realm and then some.

He's also the one who's getting married on Wednesday to that red-haired, freckled-faced, wholesome (read size 14) girl next door named Sarah Ferguson.

And, although the scene at Westminster Abbey will have all the splendor of a fairy-tale wedding, "Randy Andy" and "Fergie" are not pop-up, storybook characters. Central casting would never send these two 26-year-olds on a movie call.

"Her private life has been rather unorthodox," says Harold Brooks-Baker, publishing director of Burke's Peerage, which chronicles the British aristocracy.

"If it weren't for the fact that she led a rather busy social life, it would be an acceptable match " adds Brooks-Baker, a reference to Sarah's former live-in boyfriends, Kim Smith-Bingham and Paddy McNally (22 years her senior).

ANDREW HAS been equally busy. His royal roster included model Gemma Curry (1980), porno film star Kathleen (Koo) Stark (1981-83), Lady Carolyn Herbert (1983) and actress Katie Rabett (1984).

Sarah's social life, however, has been of little concern to Buckingham Palace. After all, unlike Charles and Diana, who will one day rule as king and queen, Andrew and Sarah will always be rather minor royal players. With the birth of Charles' two sons, Andrew's place in the order of succession fell from the important No. 2 slot to a backfield No. 4 position.

Still, Maj. Ronald Ferguson, Sarah's 55-year-old father, is rather miffed at all this talk of his daughter's "past."

"She had a certain number of boyfriends," said Ferguson, a gentleman farmer, speaking from his study at modest Dummer Down House. That certain number, according to Brooks-Baker, is six in six years.

"All the press is rather more inclined to drag up the bad things," said Ferguson, who lives with his second wife about 50 miles from London. "One feels it is all rather unnecessary."

Unnecessary or not, the British popular press has been relentless in evaluating Sarah's personal appearance, personal relationships and, of course, personal habits. The intensity of the reporting prompted one friend of hers to say, according to a wire service report: "Any minute we will have the ex-hamster giving an in-depth interview on the day she forgot to grate his carrot."

No detail is too small, too innocuous or too obscure.

THOSE CONSUMED with Fergie fever know that she exercises at 7:30 a.m., never uses sugar in her coffee, enjoys lunch at Claridge's, loves to ride and types a 39 words per minute.

Fergie fanciers can buy a replica of her ruby engagement ring set with 10 drop diamonds for about $28. And five hours after the actual ceremony, those same fanatics can pick up a copy of her wedding dress at Debenham's on Oxford Street for about $1,350.

"We're reasonably private and don't really like all the publicity," said Ferguson, who is Prince Charles' polo manager and was an unknown outside the horsey set until his daughter's engagement March 19.

Sarah's ancestral life — known as breeding — remains impeccable. Sarah and Andrew are sixth cousins, says Brooks-Baker of Burke's Peerage, sharing common ancestors in the fourth Duke of Devonshire. She is also a direct descendant of Charles II (who reigned from 1660 to 1685). Her mother is another story.

In 1973, Susan Ferguson, then 36, fled placid Dummer Down House to run off with Hector Barrantes, an Argentine and world-class polo player. Today, they live outside Buenos Aires but are regulars on the international polo circuit. The couple visited Greenwich, Conn., last month for a series of games at the local polo club.

"She's very natural and easy-going," said a close friend. And with her loose, shoulder-length hair and unaffected good looks, Susan Barrantes does not look like the type to enjoy a staid tea or a restrained gesture. She will have to practice both for her daughter's wedding.

FOR THOSE not satisfied with the superficial details of Sarah's life, Ambassadors of Britain runs a more scholarly royal wedding lecture tour at a cost of $9.30 for two hours and $15.50 for four hours.

The tour includes glimpses of where Sarah used to live in a Victorian house on Lavender Garden, the Mayfair publishing office where she used to work and the Royal Snack Bar (renamed after the engagement) where she used to breakfast. Not to mention Westminster Abbey, Buckingham Palace and one of Sarah's favorite shops, General Trading Co., a tony London emporium with a royal warrant, of course.

The store ranks as a landmark, because it is here that Andrew and Sarah have registered more than 400 much-needed gifts for a new home, which the palace says they have not yet chosen.

Among the items still available are a pair of lamps with a heron motif ($434 each plus $80 a shade), an old-fashioned sofa that can be made into a bed for overnight guests ($1,520), a set of pastel dhurrie rugs from India ($1,280 each) and a half-dozen sets of glasses (24 each) in both plain crystal ($17.60 for a small goblet) and cut crystal (double the price of plain).

"There's only one proper antique," said Lotty, one of the sales people who take orders for the royal registry. It's a 1780 Georgian mahagony tray-top commode (like a sideboard) that goes for $2,320. Most of the furniture is either an antique reproduction or of the garden variety.

WHEN IT COMES to discussions of Sarah's fashion sense and figure (36-26-38), there is no quibbling. Everyone agrees she has neither, although many Fergie followers like her pretty-as-a-milkmaid good looks.

"The consensus has been that on three or four formal occasions, she looked disastrous," said Bob Houston, the editor and publisher of Majesty, a slick British monthly magazine devoted exclusively to the goings-on of the royal family.

"I don't think she will be a fashion queen," said Houston, who said she looks best when she's not trying to be a clothes horse. "She has no shape for it," he explained.

So it seems unlikely that Sarah will upstage the glamorous, glittering Princess Di show. But what Sarah lacks in looks, she makes up for in character, said Houston. "She's much more rounded, mature and self-confident than Diana," he explained. Besides, he added, "She's a very sexy lady."

And so when all is said and scrutinized, a clear picture emerges of Sarah Ferguson. Summing it all up, Michael Barratt, a British TV personality, said: "She's a nice girl with all that red hair and freckles."

Much the same can be said of Andrew. "He's got a nice set of teeth," said Barratt, who has produced a half-dozen documentaries on members of the royal family, including one on Andrew.

Andrew's abilities seem best described by what he won't accomplish and can't do.

Although he has attained the rank of a Royal Navy lieutenant, served with distinction during the Falklands conflict and can pilot a helicopter, he will never become an admiral of the fleet. "Andrew's skills and enthusiasms have been physical rather than intellectual," says Barratt.

Ad understated

LONDON (UPI) — Andrew McGill, a formerly jobless 23-year-old man from Liverpool, will be among the footmen for the "glass carriage" taking Britain's Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson back to Buckingham Palace following their wedding ceremony on Wednesday.

McGill told the London Daily Mirror that the royal appointment was the result of a job advertisement he answered two years ago.

That rather understated ad taken out by Buckingham Palace said simply: "Footman in household required. District London. Possibility of travel."

DEAR ABBY

Marriage is give and take

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I couldn't believe your advice to "Don't Do Shirts in Florida." You suggested that she learn to maintain her car and her husband learn to iron his own shirts — that way, neither would be at the mercy of the other. Perhaps. But what is marriage if not the sharing of "mercies" for one's mate?

If more couples did for each other without keeping score to make sure it was 50-50, there would be fewer divorces. — I DO SHIRTS IN MICHIGAN

DEAR I DO: You read me wrong. I didn't suggest that couples keep score in order to keep things 50-50. I recommended that they do away with the old stereotypical "women's work" as opposed to "men's work."

Please read on for the sad tale of a couple who were entirely dependent on each other:

DEAR ABBY: My grandparents adjusted well to retirement. They were a loving couple who shared almost everything, but Grandma always said her job was to take care of Grandpa.

Last February Grandma died, and Grandpa was devastated. He would have been so much better off if he had learned how to cook a little and do the laundry. He's helpless around the house.

Abby, please encourage husbands to learn how to look after themselves. It's hard to learn "womanly chores" after their wives are gone. — KAY

DEAR KAY: Here's the other side of the coin:

DEAR ABBY: Sam and I were married for 49 years. I know how to drive a car, but I seldom drove because Sam thought that was his job, and we had only one car. He died last year and I had to learn how to drive all over again. I was petrified of traffic and had never driven on a freeway. It was a nightmare, but I knew I had to learn how to drive in traffic or I would be isolated. So, women, don't let your husbands be the chauffeur. The time may come when he's not around. — MY OWN CHAUFFEUR

DEAR ABBY: I am a 38-year-old male who recently moved from a rented house to a large high-rise occupied predominantly by elderly widows and widowers. I mean 85 and up.

How is it living with all these old people? I find them charming, witty, intelligent and a pleasure to be around. They are of a generation taught impeccable manners and are always polite. They are lonely and love to engage in pleasant conversation. They are experienced in life and I learn from them. Instead of coming home to mowing the lawn, I come home to helping a 90-year-old lady with a walker up to her apartment with her groceries, which I consider much more important than cutting grass.

Please tell your readers that when they are apartment hunting, not to overlook the seniors buildings. They could be passing up the greatest place they ever lived.

I could be from Anywhere, USA, but please just sign me ... HAPPY IN SYRACUSE

DEAR HAPPY: Thanks for a lovely day brightener.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell people, especially those with high blood pressure, the danger of taking over-the-counter decongestants without first consulting their physicians. There are enough heart attacks and strokes without adding to the number. A warning is printed on the packages of these decongestants, but the print is so small, it is difficult to read — especially for the elderly. — PAUL SAUNDERS, SALEM, VA.

DEAR ABBY: When I was 17, pregnant and unmarried, I slashed my wrists in a suicide attempt. Now I'm married, in my 20s, and very self-conscious about the scars on my wrists. I was told by a veterinarian that there's no way of getting rid of those scars, so I guess I will have to learn to live with them.

What should I say to people who ask me what happened? I don't want to admit the real reason, but when I say I had an accident, they press for details. I fabricated a story, but I don't think it was very convincing. Please help me come up with a solution. — YOUR FAN IN THE SOUTH

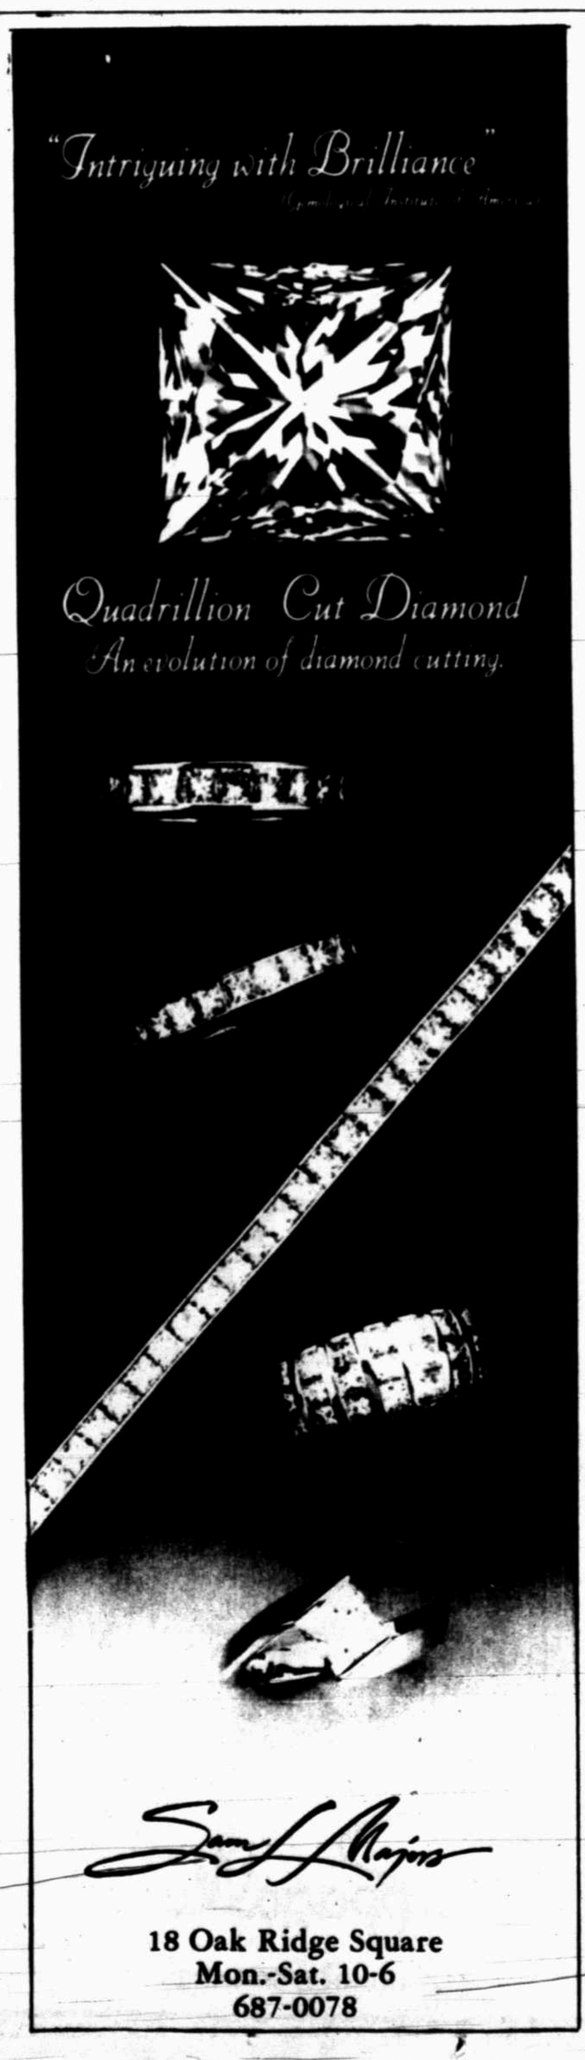

DEAR FAN: Before you accept the word of the veterinarian, please see a plastic surgeon about the possibility of minimizing the conspicuousness of the existing scars. Bracelets might also hide them. And to those who press for details, a direct, "I'd rather not discuss it," is better than a fabricated story.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Dollar weakens

LONDON (AP) — The dollar plunged to a new record low against the Japanese yen and lost ground against the West German mark today. Gold surged up, then lost some of its early gains.

Traders said fears of central bank intervention were deterring them from driving the dollar down further. They said trading generally was quiet.

The dollar fell to just over 2.13 marks, its lowest level against the West German currency since April 1981, and one dealer said it could drift down to 2.08 before the Bundesbank, West Germany's central bank, intervened.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell 1.95 yen to close at 155.50, its lowest against the yen in 40 years.

Dealers in Tokyo said the Japanese central bank intervened when the dollar fell to 154.85 in the first 10 minutes of trading. They said the dollar's latest drop was triggered by its fall in New York on Friday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—2.1305 West German marks, down from 2.1490

—1.7205 Swiss francs, down from 1.7410

—6.8825 French francs, down from 6.9475

—2.4020 Dutch guilders, down from 2.4215

—1,467.00 Italian lire, down from 1,476.00

—1.3745 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3775

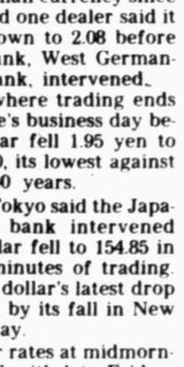

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.4963, compared with $1.4900 Friday.

Gold opened sharply higher at a bid price of $355.50 a troy ounce in London, compared with late Friday's $350. It then lost about $2 in the first hour of trading and at midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $353.

Same old problems plague Bank of America

By PAUL FARHI
Hearst News and Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO – One morning last month, securities analyst George Salem met with senior officials of BankAmerica Corp. to hear their assessment of the company's second-quarter performance.

With the quarter two-thirds complete, the executives reported that the nation's second-largest bank, Bank of America, was having definite but not dire problems in its huge loan portfolio. According to Salem, the company's representatives said they expected to add about $300 million to BankAmerica's loan-loss reserve, the fund used by banks to absorb loan losses.

Last week, the financial community found out how wrong that forecast was: BankAmerica actually had to set aside $988 million, including $600 million after writing off its bad loans – more than three times what it had predicted only a month ago. The big loan loss provision helped lead to a quarterly loss of $640 million, the largest in BankAmerica's history.

What went wrong? To Salem and other longtime BankAmerica followers, the startling decline in the banking company's fortunes in only one month points up a key failing of BankAmerica's management: an inability to accurately identify problems before they worsen.

"There was no press release, no warning," said Salem, who works for DLJ Securities in New York. "They claimed they learned everything in the late part of June after they assessed their world energy and real estate situations. What they found is that their field executives were too optimistic in forecasting their ultimate losses. It's the same old problem, an absolute inability to predict anything with certainty. Every time they promise that they've fixed things, another surprise pops up."

Such volatility in the big bank holding company caused several analysts to reconsider where BankAmerica Corp. might be headed for the rest of the year. After raising hopes of a recovery with a profit of $63 million in the first quarter following last year's $377 million loss, BankAmerica now seems unlikely to be profitable on an operating basis this year, some analysts say, and will have to sell assets and rely on tax credits if it is to show any black ink at all.

William Welsh of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. refused to predict the company's annual earnings, although he said he was revising his $1.50-a-share forecast downward.

"The amount of the bank's charge-offs for bad loans ($988 million) was not out of line with what other banks have done," Welsh said. "But the quantum step is the huge reserve for loan losses. That's more important than the earnings in this quarter. And the big question is, 'Why?' "

That uncertainty is now being reflected within the corporation. Despite frequent statements from upper management that it has taken steps to resolve its loan problems and heighten its responsiveness, BankAmerica's chief financial officer John Poelker conceded last week that the rapid deterioration of the bank's loan sector took him by surprise.

"A month ago, we began to be concerned about the energy and real estate segments," Poelker said in an interview with Reuters News Service, "but we were not getting signals that we were having serious problems (Loan losses) will probably be higher than $1.2 billion (as had been predicted), but how much higher, I am reluctant to say as we are trying to reassess our portfolio. And I don't know if I am in a position to say that non-performers are at the top of the curve yet."

Poelker indicated that the non-performing loans in the troubled energy and real estate sectors actually increased by more than $300 million during the quarter, meaning those sectors are getting sicker at a faster rate than others.

Dollar sets record low against yen

TOKYO (AP) — The dollar opened at a post-World War II record low of 155.12 yen Monday on the Tokyo Foreign Exchange Market, down from Friday's close of 157.45.

In the first 10 minutes of trading the dollar dropped further to 154.85 yen, setting a new post-war low, then recovered slightly and traded at about 155.15 yen at the end of the first hour. At mid-morning, the greenback was trading at about 155.05 yen.

The drop reflected the dollar's decline Friday on currency markets in London and in New York, where it recorded a low at one point of 155.85 yen.

The previous record low for the dollar in Tokyo was set last Thursday when the U.S. currency hit 156.30 during the day's trading.

A Bank of Japan official said Monday that the exchange rate was not likely to change markedly during the day.

Officials at the central bank said Saturday that it would "try to stabilize the yen-dollar exchange rate for the time being," Japan's Kyodo New Service reported. The comment was interpreted as meaning the bank would intervene in support of the dollar.

Bank of Japan officials routinely decline to comment directly on its market activities.

Boeing to build plant in Louisiana

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — Gov. Edwin Edwards is expected to join Monday with officials of Boeing Military Airplane Co. at a news conference here to unveil plans for a proposed aircraft maintenance center at Lake Charles.

Boeing Military recently announced that Lake Charles would be the site of the plant if the Air Force awards the company a major contract it is seeking. BMAC officials had been scheduled to arrive Saturday in the southwest Louisiana city to complete paperwork on the project.

The 22-plane facility with an estimated payroll of $20 million would be housed at the old Chennault Air Force Base. Lake Charles officials offered to spend $35 million to upgrade the facility for BMAC.

"It pleases me to see Lake Charles and southwest Louisiana take the lead in the diversification of Louisiana's economy to get us away from our reliance on oil and petrochemicals," Mayor Ed Watson said. "I am positive it's going to put us on the route to recovery."

Selection of Lake Charles for the proposed $53 million aircraft maintenance center was hailed by Rep. John Breaux, D-La., as "the best news I've received in the 14 years I've been in Congress."

The Air Force contract BMAC is seeking would pay about $70 to $80 million a year for five years' worth of scheduled maintenance on the Air Force's 640 Boeing-built KC-135 Stratotankers. The jets can refuel other planes in flight.

The contract calls for work on 120 planes a year. Each plane is supposed to go through the inspection and repair process every four years. The contract must be renewed annually.

The Air Force is expected to announce what company gets the work sometime this fall. Final proposals are due by the end of this month.

"This is one whale of a boost to the economy," said Ed Steimel, president of the Louisiana Association of Business and Industry.

Extensive hearings will be held on permit needed for dump site

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — A member of the Texas Water Commission says it could "take years" for the U.S. Department of Energy to obtain a state permit it needs to begin testing a Panhandle site for a high-level nuclear waste dump.

Commissioner Ralph Roming said the commission will conduct "extensive hearings" before it decides whether to grant the federal agency a permit to drill a test shaft at the Deaf Smith county site.

The Department of Energy has agreed to comply with a little-known state law that requires anyone drilling a shaft through an underground aquifer to first obtain a permit from the Water Commission.

The government has said it plans to drill two test shafts through the Ogallala Aquifer northwest of Hereford, one of three finalists for the underground repository that will be designated by the president in 1994.

The other prospective sites are in Nevada and Washington state.

Roming said he would not prejudge the department's permit request, but he said it would be "scrutinized extensively and exhaustively" and predicted there would not be a quick decision.

"This application ... will have to meet all the technical requirements and all the laws that are in force and active at that particular time," he said.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Fed signals plans to push interest rates lower

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve conveyed new signals that it's willing to push interest rates lower in an effort to spur a rebound in the sluggish U.S. economy.

The central bank, which cut its chief loan rate on July 10, announced that it was de-emphasizing a key money target as it works to keep alive the economic expansion.

The Fed's action came in its revelation of revised money targets for the rest of the year, released Friday. The Fed plays a key role in controlling economic growth through its power over the nation's money supply.

Census reports gap between wealthy, poor

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau, in its first-ever assessment of wealth in America, says that the top 12 percent of American families control almost 40 percent of household wealth, while the typical black family has less than one-tenth the assets of a white family.

The report released Friday showed a wide gap between the wealthiest families and the poorest, with the two groups differing significantly in terms of race and education.

The study said that the typical American family had a net worth of $32,667 when the statistics were gathered in late 1984, with by far the biggest portion of this wealth, 41 percent, accounted for by equity in a home.

Domestic sale of Krugerrands now limited

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — The government has limited the domestic sale of gold Krugerrand coins to 6,000 a week to protect its dwindling bullion reserves.

International Gold Corp., the marketing arm of South Africa's Chamber of Mines, said in a weekend statement it had agreed with the Finance Ministry and the Treasury to restrict sales of the coin within South Africa.

"Despite an increase in premiums, demand for Krugerrands has continued at a particularly high level, draining off potential South African foreign exchange earnings," Intergold said.

Congress urged to ban cigarette advertising

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress should ban all cigarette advertising to save lives and protect future generations of Americans from becoming nicotine addicts, a House subcommittee was told.

Captain Kangaroo, Yul Brynner's daughter and the grandson of tobacco magnate R.J. Reynolds joined the medical establishment Friday in endorsing a bill to outlaw all promotion and advertising of tobacco products — in newspapers and magazines, on billboards and as part of sales displays.

The bill also would ban tobacco companies from using a brand name in sponsoring public events such as sports tournaments.

Union workers reject contract, will be replaced

CHICAGO (AP) — A union local representing 685 meatpackers rejected a contract offer Sunday from Oscar Mayer Foods Corp. by a margin of more than 2-1, and a company official said replacement workers would be hired.

Most of the members of Local 100 of the Food and Commercial Workers union were laid off last month because they had no contract, said plant manager Allen Dieter.

The workers rejected a contract that would have frozen wages and benefits for 10 months by a vote of 367-146, he said. Employees had rejected two earlier offers.

60,000 Ford vans to undergo evaluation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says it is conducting a "preliminary evaluation" of reports of fires and leaking fuel in 1984-86 Ford E350 vans.

NHTSA officials confirmed the probe on Sunday after a private safety watchdog group said Virginia officials who license the vans for use as ambulances have sent out a nationwide alert about the problem.

The center says about 60,000 vans are included in the study, some of which are used as ambulances.

CSX Transportation retires Chessie the cat

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Chessie has slept through the Depression, world war and social unrest. But if she had been awake these 52 years, watching one railroad gobble up another, she might have known it would come to this.

Chessie, the cat whose sleeping silhouette on Chessie System locomotives and boxcars became one of the nation's best-known railroad symbols, is being dropped as the company's logo.

CSX Transportation Inc., which owns the Seaboard System and the Baltimore & Ohio as well as the Chessie System, is imposing an austere, geometric "CSX" logo on its railroad subsidiaries.

Since July 1, Chessie System cars and engines going in for repairs and repainting have emerged from the shops with Chessie erased and the three-letter logo in her place.

Tiny Boston brewer taking on international brewing giants

BOSTON (AP) — A tiny Boston beer company is taking on two giant international brewers, claiming the top European imported beers couldn't be sold in West Germany because they don't meet that nation's beer purity law.

In a series of radio and newspaper ads, Boston Beer Co. has challenged the the quality of the Beck's, St. Pauli Girl and Heineken beers sold in this country.

Beck and Co. of Bremen, West Germany, which brews Beck's and export-only St. Pauli Girl, denies the claim. Netherlands-based Heineken, brewer of the No. 1 import, acknowledged that its contains corn and they don't try to sell it in West Germany, according to the Boston Business Journal.

"It's sort of common knowledge among brewers that the beers are doctored," said James Koch, whose company began selling Samuel Adams beer a little more than a year ago. "If you're going to bring beer from that far away and have it drinkable, you've got to do something to stabilize it."

Koch even boasts in the ads that Samuel Adams is the only American beer to pass the purity law and be sold in West Germany, albeit in small quantities.

"The German purity law is very simple. It says that if it's beer it can have only four things: water, yeast, malt and hops. That's all my beer has in it," said the former management consultant.

The people who distribute Beck's, the No. 3 imported beer in the United States, don't find Koch's ads very funny.

They note that he has a secret of his own: Samuel Adams is brewed under contract in Pittsburgh, not in Boston. Koch says it's made to his own family recipe.

"I think it's an effort on his part to build his brand up by taking shots at others," said Thomas Schwalm, vice president of sales and marketing for the importer, Dribeck Inc. of Greenwich, Conn. He said Beck's asked Koch to "stop his false advertising."

Koch's $100,000 ad campaign recently ended, but he says it was for a lack of money, not out of a fear of a suit.

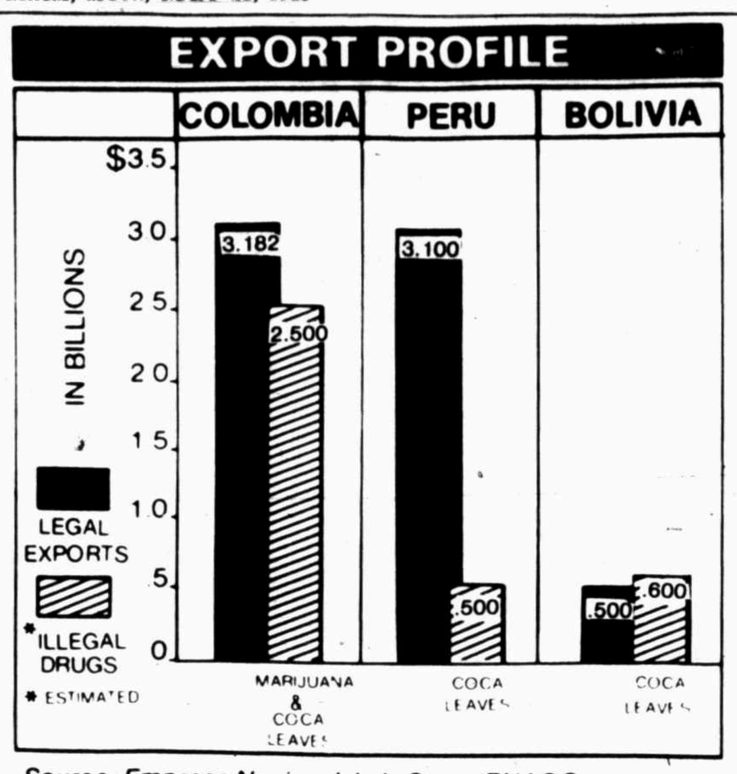

"If I were wrong, do you think they would let me get away (with) saying there's something fishy in their beer? They'd squash me like a bug," he said.

Koch said he has proof that Beck's adds sugar to the beer it exports. He said he sent a German brewmaster on a tour of Beck's brewery, and that the visiting expert asked about a pipe connected to a brewing kettle.

"The guy said 'That's where the white sugar comes in,'" Koch said.

Koch also said he had a Cambridge laboratory test export Beck's and that it found some type of refined sugar or starch, which would be a violation of the West German purity law.

Schwalm said Beck's had two West German labs test export Beck's last month and both found it passed the purity law.

Major oil companies turn to retailing networks to boost profits

New York Times News Service

WALL TOWNSHIP, N.J. — The nation's major oil companies are finally taking the plunge: opening high-volume convenience stores that sell foodstuffs and paper products along with gasoline.

Popularized by 7-Eleven and other food-store chains, the hybrid outlets began to appear in the oil companies' retailing networks in sizable numbers at the end of the 1970s, but almost all of them were owned by independent dealers. Oil executives, scornful of becoming involved in food retailing, at first treated the outlets as poor relations and steered clear of direct ownership.

But that view has changed as economic conditions in the oil industry began to worsen, and the majors — huge integrated companies with exploration, production and refining arms in addition to retailing — scrambled to find ways to squeeze more profits from the downstream end of the business. The gasoline-convenience stores — with shelf after shelf of higher-margin products — suddenly seemed to be an answer.

Now Chevron, Conoco, Sun and the other 15 majors have opened hundreds of their own gasoline-convenience stores, operating them directly, or leasing them to independent dealers in profit-sharing arrangements.

Even the Exxon Corp., the nation's largest oil company and probably the last holdout, has given in, opening 120 company-owned gasoline-convenience stores in the past year or so. Exxon has 18,000 stations in all, including independently owned operations.

"THIS IS AN experiment," said George Ruddy, the 57-year-old operator of the Brielle Circle Exxon station in this Jersey shore community, one of seven gasoline-convenience outlets that Exxon recently opened in the state. "If it works, there'll be more."

Analysts and marketing consultants are less cautious. They say the new-found commitment to the stores by the oil companies is certain to grow, as the majors continue to seek ways to bolster profits.

Indeed, the focus on convenience stores is just part of an intensive push by the oil companies to strengthen brand loyalty and improve earnings, according to Charles L. Bowerman, vice president of marketing for the Phillips Petroleum Co.

At Phillips, the broader offensive has included a few completely automated stations, which have cash machines or accept charge cards. The stations, like the gasoline-convenience stores, offer lower prices than traditional outlets, yet are still more profitable because they have virtually no labor costs.

The Chevron Corp. has started a $600 million consolidation program, in which two or three regular stations in a target area are replaced by a giant high-volume outlet intended to capitalize on economies of scale. And some of the majors have revived the promotions, premiums and giveaways widespread in the 1960s and early 1970s.

THE MARKETING gyrations have increased in the last year, as the price of crude oil tumbled nearly $20 a barrel, to about $11 now, and inventories swelled.

While the majors have been struggling in their refining and production operations, the gasoline-convenience stores have been flourishing.

In 1981, the outlets dispensed 11 percent of the gasoline sold in the United States, or $9.6 billion worth, according to Kerley LeBoeff, executive director of the National Association of Convenience Stores, a trade group. That share is now 15 percent, worth $16.3 billion. And the number of outlets has grown to 30,000, from about 21,000 in 1981, the trade group said.

By the end of 1985, more than 12,000 of the outlets were part of the major oil companies' networks, about 2,000 of which they directly operated, according to the National Petroleum News, a trade publication. The majors have more than 140,000 stations of all kinds. (Industrywide figures are not available on the number of company-owned gasoline-convenience stores that are leased to independent operators such as Ruddy.)

During the same five-year period, the number of traditional service stations in the country dropped to about 124,000, from 158,000.

The growth of the gasoline-convenience outlets has been led by the Southland Corp., owner of the 7-Eleven chain, and the Circle K Corp. Over the last five years or so, both companies have been adding pumps to a substantial number of convenience stores. More than 40 percent of Southland's 7,757 convenience stores and 51 percent of Circle K's 3,350 stores now sell gasoline, and the other big convenience-store chains have similar percentages, according to the National Association of Convenience Stores.

THE ADDITIONAL products sold at the convenience stores make gasoline retailing less vulnerable to price changes, analysts say, noting that many of the items — soft drinks, paper goods, candy and the like — have much higher profit margins than gasoline.

"The matter of 1 cent a gallon at the pump, up or down, can make a tremendous difference in a station's balance sheet," said Gerald Lewis, chairman of CDI Designs, a New York consulting firm. "So anything that can help a dealer maintain a positive income stream is helpful. That's what a convenience store can do."

Moreover, analysts say, the typical convenience store generates more traffic — and sells more gallons of gasoline per pump — than the traditional gasoline station.

Also, because most of the convenience stores use self-service pumps and offer no car repair service, their labor costs are much less. The result is higher profits on the gasoline itself.

The typical convenience store has a 7 percent profit on gasoline sales, according to the National Association of Convenience Stores.

By comparison, many traditional gasoline stations show only a 2 to 3 percent profit, said Vic Rasheed, executive director of the Service Station Dealers of America.

Lewis of CDI Designs said the growth of the outlets in recent years reflected the public's increasing need for convenience. "As life gets more complicated, time becomes more precious to more people," he said.

THAT NEED is apparent to Patricia Ruddy, George Ruddy's niece, who oversees the compact, 1,100-square-foot convenience store at the Brielle Circle station here.

"The commuters love it," she said. "They can run in and get a cup of coffee while the car's being filled up. And mothers leave the children in the car and pick up a box of diapers."

The principle of using other products to support gasoline sales is not limited to food items.

"Car washes, video rentals, dry cleaners — anything you can think of that draws customers, you'll find a service station somewhere offering it now along with selling gasoline," said Gail Jamin, a spokesman for the Mobil Corp.

Indeed, the gasoline-convenience stores run by the chains or by independent entrepreneurs have become increasingly sophisticated, particularly in the South and West, where they have grown the fastest, said LeBoeff of the convenience store association. Some of the newer ones have several different profit centers, including bakeries, burger stands, salad bars, film development operations and florists.

Oil companies, car makers argue about overall quality of gasoline

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Exxon's ad depicts its powerful tiger crashing through a formidable barrier with the ominous label "FOULED INJECTORS." Mobil's fuel will "actually unclog dirty fuel injectors." Arco trumpets a clean fuel injector "guarantee."

The current advertising blitz for gasoline makes it sound as if the oil industry is heralding some breakthrough in fuel technology. Instead, it is responding to a growing problem with car engines — and the solution is nothing new.

It seems that many brands of unleaded gasoline tend to clog fuel injectors on automobiles, cutting the flow of gasoline by as much as 25 percent and causing engines to stall. General Motors says gummed-up fuel injectors have become one of its biggest car-related headaches, and virtually every auto maker reported the problem at a recent auto engineering convention.

The answer has been to load up gasolines with detergent, a type of fuel additive that auto makers and others complain has been used in diminishing amounts over the past few years as a cost-cutting move by oil refiners.

It is a charge that is roundly denied by Big Oil, which uniformly says that its gasoline has impeccable credentials and grumbles that engines are getting too sensitive. But ever since GM called attention to the fuel injector problem last November in a letter to the oil giants, there has been a nice surge in business for the chemical companies that make detergent additives.

WHILE DECLINING to say which refiners are buying them, Thomas Johnston, director of the fuel products group at Lubrizol, a specialty chemicals firm in Wickliffe, Ohio, that makes such a detergent, said: "Let's put it this way: There's a much higher degree of interest than we anticipated. We're going to sell a lot more than we expected."

Although the problem afflicts most domestic and foreign makes of cars equipped with the widely used Robert Bosch Corp. fuel injection system, it was a letter last November from the vice chairman of the world's biggest auto company, GM's Howard Kehrl, that created all the excitement.

When Kehrl was subsequently invited to speak before the National Petroleum Refiners Association in Los Angeles in February, he was amiably introduced as the industry's "pen pal." But he recalls that there was an edge to his missive, reflecting a broader dispute between the huge, mutually reliant oil and auto industries over the quality of gasoline generally.

As automobile engines have become more sophisticated in the wake of government and customer demands for fewer emissions and greater fuel economy, GM and other companies have become increasingly critical of the composition of gasoline. The auto companies have blamed fuel for everything from a rotten egg smell in some Toyotas to generally poor "drivability."

POPULAR SCIENCE magazine called it "Bad Gas," and the criticisms have other independent support.

"We find that the general quality of gasoline does not meet the requirements of modern engines," said Nick Korens, manager of the energy technology economics program at SRI International, a Menlo Park, Calif., research organization.

While the clogged fuel injectors represent just one part of that problem, Joseph Colucci, head of the fuels department at GM's research labs, said: "What this has done is bring home to the oil companies that gasoline quality is not as good as it should be."

The fuel injector, once a creature only of exotic performance cars, is now replacing the carburetor as the device under the hood that moves gasoline to the engine. It is more efficient and precise and improves everything from fuel economy to starting the engine.

GM began using large numbers of them in the 1985 model year and has sold nearly 1 million cars with Bosch's so-called multiport fuel injection systems — the type having problems. Joseph Borruso, the Detroit-based auto sales vice president for Bosch, said that the company was selling the same basic multiport injector system to Mercedes Benz and Volkswagen as long ago as 1967.

The multiport injectors, or those that squirt fuel separately into each engine cylinder, have such tiny openings that the slightest deposit of particles in gasoline can be baked on to the openings by engine heat, clogging them, GM said.

THE CLOGGING problem suddenly became noticeable about 18 months ago, said Borruso, who blamed the clogging then on a shortage of detergent additives in every brand of unleaded gasoline. He says that Mobil was subsequently the first to fix its fuel and won mention from GM's Kehrl in the letter that he wrote to refiners.

Mobil cheerfully took note of GM's implicit endorsement in its ad campaigns, and the slightly arcane issue was out in the open — touching off a war of words, advertising and one-upmanship in the oil business over what SRI's Korens has called the "black art" of gasoline additives.

Exxon subsequently rushed to market with a new, detergent-soaked product that it calls XCL-12, "gasolines so advanced they can typically clean fouled fuel injectors in as little as a single tankful." Similar products are coming from other oil companies, according to GM.

But others — including Arco and Chevron — insist that their gasolines have always had enough detergents. They say that they have no plans to develop new products in response to the fuel injector problem.

"The deposit control features of gasoline varies tremendously among manufacturers," said Donald Beers, manager of gasoline product quality at Chevron USA. "Since the early 1970s, we've had a very high level. We're still convinced that it's the best one in the marketplace."

GM'S COLUCCI replied that "Chevron thinks their gasoline is fine, and that's great. But I think they're looking at other additives."

Arco, in a marketing move that has attracted some hoots from the sidelines, announced a "guarantee" on its unleaded gasoline: If a car's fuel injectors require cleaning within 30 days after a motorist has made at least two 10-gallon purchases of Arco unleaded, the company will pay cleaning costs of up to $50.

But as the guarantee does not count on cars that are still under manufacturer's warranty — and as the trouble usually turns up quickly and is most prevalent on cars introduced in the last two years under standard three-year, 36,000-mile warranties — competitors sniff that Arco is not likely to go bankrupt cleaning fuel injectors.

Whatever the oil refiners have or have not been doing to their gasoline, there appears to be plenty of blame to go around. Colucci said: "We changed the engine. It isn't fair to blame it all on the oil companies."

One reason the problem was not detected before the cars entered production might be that the auto makers are permitted by the Environmental Protection Agency to use special fuels with a heavy load of detergents in their 50,000-mile durability tests, according to Lubrizol's Johnston.

"They've ended up testing their new cars with a fuel that wasn't representative of the market at all," he said. "That didn't matter with carburetors, because it takes a lot less detergent to keep a carburetor clean. But it means they wouldn't see the problem with the fuel injector."

A MORE IMPORTANT reason, Colucci said, is that the 50,000-mile test is run almost constantly — and does not reflect the type of stop-and-go driving that helps foster the problem.

Now that the multiport injectors have entered the mass marketplace, to be driven by average motorists whose driving and maintenance habits might contribute to the problem, Chevron's Beers said, it becomes the auto industry's responsibility to make the devices less finicky.

Stock Market Mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was little changed today.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials edged up 2.25 to 1,780.23 by 11 a.m. on Wall Street.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 5 to 4 in the midday tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Colt Industries jumped 26⅞ to 93⅝. The company said it planned to distribute $85 plus one new share for each existing share of its stock as part of a recapitalization plan.

Merrill Lynch gained ⅜ to 35⅛. The company reported earnings for the second quarter of 86 cents a share, up from 69 cents in the comparable period last year.

Smithkline Beckman fell 3½ to 89¼. The company posted higher quarterly profits, but the increase evidently fell short of advance expectations on Wall Street.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .16 to 136.19. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .26 at 266.14.

Volume on the Big Board came to 52.32 million shares at noontime, against 65.71 million at the same point Thursday.

Eastern adds frills

MIAMI (AP) — For 25 years, passengers on Eastern Airlines shuttle flights in the Northeast corridor got by without frills or seat assignments and bought their tickets on board.

But with Pan Am getting ready to leap into the market, using landing rights recently purchased from New York Air at three airports served by Eastern, passengers on some Eastern shuttle flights are getting more creature comforts.

The Miami-based airline has been testing passenger reaction to drinks, snacks and seats with extra legroom on flights from New York to Boston and Washington.

Ground facilities will be changed to speed up movement on and off the Boeing 727s and wide-body Airbus A-300s. Eastern passengers received seat assignments for the first time this month.

More than 60 million passengers, including a lucrative business clientele, have ridden Eastern's bare-bones shuttles for 25 years.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Some will handle small investments

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Being a business administration major in college and studying computer information systems, I have become enchanted by the technology and success of one of the companies in that field. I want to become a part-owner of that company by buying some of its stock, which currently trades at about $150 a share.

The problem is that I can't afford to invest much at this time. Is it possible to invest as little as $1,000? If so, how do I get started?

Doyle

A. You can invest that amount through many securities brokerage firms. Although some brokerages won't handle such relatively small orders, others will. Telephone or visit a number of brokerage offices until you find one willing to accommodate you.

You'll have to open a brokerage account, place your order and pay the purchase price, plus commission, within five business days. You'll become a stockholder.

With the money you have available, you can buy six shares of that stock at $150 each — a total cost of $900, plus commission. Commissions vary from one brokerage firm to another. So, you might want to shop for commission costs when you go looking for a broker.

Many companies, including the one you named in your letter, have dividend reinvestment plans, allowing stockholders to use their dividends to buy more full and fractional shares and also to make optional additional investments.

When you make an optional additional investment, you send a check to the company's dividend reinvestment agent and buy still more full and fractional shares.

The company you're eyeing permits stockholders to invest up to $5,000 every three months that way. The beauty of that arrangement is that many companies with such plans absorb most or all of the commission costs.

If you go the dividend reinvestment route and make optional additional investments, you'll build your holdings of stock in that company. Except for your initial purchase through a brokerage firm, you'll never have to deal with a broker again. You'll save a bundle of commission dollars.

• • •

Q. I am a foreigner and intend to buy shares of stock in an American company while I am living in the U.S. Will it be possible for me to continue to own those shares after I return to my country?

A. You will, unless your nation has some restriction on stock ownership. Check that out with your country's embassy. There are nations with such restrictions. 'Tis said, however, that many citizens of such countries do own U.S. stocks.

When you head back home, you can take your stock certificates with you or leave them here. You might want to leave them in "street name" — registered in a brokerage firm's name — or in some other safekeeping or custodian account. If your shares are in a dividend reinvestment plan, they will be held by the plan's agent. Regular statements showing the status of your account will be mailed to you.

• • •

Q. I had the same problem some of your other readers have trying to sell one share of stock. The lowest brokerage commission I could find was $35. That's more than the share was worth.

So, I wrote the company. I received a reply from an investment club whose members are company employees. That club, which can buy up to five shares, paid me the stock's closing price on the day my endorsed certificate reached them. There was no charge for handling or postage and, better yet, no commission.

Some other companies might have similar arrangements. Isn't this worth mentioning to your readers?

A. Indeed, it is. Besides employee investment clubs, individual employees sometimes buy small lots stockholders want to sell. Anyone who desires to sell one or a few shares and who want's to avoid selling costs is wise to write the company and ask if there are potential buyers.

It must be said, however, that you lucked out. More often than not, it's impossible to sell as you did.

Metropolitan Life, MONY offer change

By CHET CURRIER

NEW YORK (AP) — When people buy life insurance, they seldom give much thought to how their beneficiaries will collect when they have a claim.

Insurance on your life, after all, is a unique financial proposition — a bet you would prefer never to win.

But the subject has been raised lately by two large insurance companies that have adopted new systems for fulfilling their commitments when a policyholder dies.

The traditional arrangement is simple. The insurer issues a check to the beneficiary in the full amount of coverage paid for, minus any outstanding loans on the policy.

Now Metropolitan Life Insurance and MONY Financial Services are offering the alternative of a checkbook instead of a check. It would be no surprise if the change represents the start of a trend in the insurance industry.

When they receive due notice of a policyholder's death, the companies automatically set up an interest-earning money market account in the beneficiary's name, against which checks can be written.

Met Life has adopted this as standard procedure for claims of more than $10,000. MONY sets its minimum at $5,000.

Metropolitan says it will continue to offer beneficiaries the choice of a lump-sum check, on their request, as well as other options such as certificates paying interest guaranteed by the company.

MONY, by contrast, says all claims will be paid through the checkbook system. Of course, it says, those who want all their money immediately can get it by ascertaining the balance in the account and writing a check for the full amount.

Met says it adopted the new system, which it calls its Total Control Account, after conducting research with widows and widowers.

French aerialist eyes canyon to dismay of park officials

NEW YORK (AP) — French high wire artist Philippe Petit announced plans last week for a tightrope theatrical act over the Grand Canyon, whose walls plunge as deep as one mile to the bed of the Colorado River.

However, a National Park Service spokesman said the agency had not granted permission and was not likely to do so.

Petit said he wanted to "put together the most immense theatrical event ever made...a kind of aerial opera in the Grand Canyon."

He said he had been seeking permission for the stunt, but Park Service spokesman George Berklacy said he couldn't find anyone at the agency familiar with Petit's plans.

"I know we'd be philosophically opposed to it," Berklacy said. "We're charged with the protection and enjoyment of our visitors, not their demise."

Petit, 37, gained international attention in 1974 when he walked a tightrope between the twin 110-story towers of the World Trade Center in Manhattan.

He returned to the scene of his earlier triumph for last week's announcement, and caused some palms to sweat when he began to hoist himself onto the rim of the Trade Center's roof to pose for pictures.

"Uh, Philippe, please don't do that," observation deck manager Al Pettenati pleaded. Petit complied, settling instead for a railing set back from the rooftop's edge.

Petit's original Trade Center feat was done surreptitiously and illegally, but he said Monday that his guerrilla theater days are over. He said he had signed a contract with an Easton, Conn., promotion company, Sundance Enterprises, which would announce and promote his future performances.

Sundance owner Jim Ward said Petit was not necessarily planning to walk all the way across the Grand Canyon, which ranges up to 18 miles in width.

Petit also announced plans for a tightrope act between two 16-story office towers in Stamford, Conn., next month.

Genetically engineered hormone for milk cows stirs debate

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — A genetically engineered hormone that allows cows to produce as much as 40 percent more milk is stirring debate within the dairy industry, even though the hormone's commercial use is years away.

Proponents say use of the hormone will increase milk production without altering the milk or adversely affecting the cows. Opponents say the hormone's widespread use will eliminate thousands of jobs, accelerate soil erosion and harm the animals.

"There is a misconception sometimes in the popular press that the growth hormone — which is really not a good name — will produce 10,000-pound cows," said Dr. Dale Bauman, a Cornell University nutritional biochemist who pioneered the technology that created the hormone.

Actually, he explained, the hormone allows cows to use protein, which would otherwise produce fat, for milk production. "It (the hormone) allows the animal to gain in efficiency," he said.

The hormone is a protein called bovine somatotropin and nearly replicates the growth hormone that is produced in cows naturally, Bauman said.

A coalition that includes Wisconsin farmers, environmentalists and the Humane Society of the United States has petitioned the Food and Drug Administration to prevent the hormone's use until the agency assesses its economic and environmental impact.

Opponents also question Reagan administration support for the drug's development when the government is subsidizing, at a cost of $1.8 billion, the slaughter of about 1 million cows, heifers and calves in an attempt to reduce perennial milk surpluses.

According to one estimate, about 30 percent of today's 300,000 dairy farmers would be put out of business in five to six years after a projected 90 percent of the industry adopts use of the hormone.

Bauman and his colleagues at Cornell began research on the hormone in the late 1970s, following up on efforts by English scientists, who in World War II, tried to produce more milk by injecting cows with a pituitary extract.

Those efforts produced no practical applications, because as many as 100 cows had to be slaughtered to accumulate enough extract for a single dose for one cow.

Bauman's initial tests using the natural growth hormone to achieve greater production were successful, but he encountered the same problem as the English in producing sufficient quantities at an acceptable cost.

Around the same time, Genentech Inc., a bio-engineering company, and Monsanto, the pharmaceutical giant, made a major breakthrough.

Using Bauman's results, the two companies were able to synthetically produce the growth hormone through recombinant DNA technology.

Testing has shown the growth hormone can boost milk production by as much as 40 percent, depending on the quantities of the hormone injected into the animal, said Bauman.

Bauman said there had been no indications the growth hormone would alter the composition of the milk or have any physical side-effects on the animals themselves, a claim that is contested by opponents.

"When a cow is demanded to increase production beyond what it is naturally designed to produce, it will create a stressful situation," said Michael Cannell, a Cazenovia, Wis., dairy farmer.

Cannell is a board member of the Wisconsin Family Farm Defense Fund. The fund is part of a coalition that includes Douglas LaFollette, Wisconsin's secretary of state; the Foundation for Economic Trends, a Washington consumer activist group, and the Humane Society of the United States.

To counter Cannell's charges, Bauman cited collaborative studies conducted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the New York State College of Veterinary Medicine.

"The dramatic increases in efficiency we have observed with bovine growth hormone treatment would have never occurred if cows were unhealthy or stressed in any way," he said.

The coalition also questions what the hormone's commercial availability will mean to the dairy industry.

Wedding plans finalize into 'razzmatazz'

LONDON (AP) — A royal spectacle unfolds Wednesday in Westminster Abbey, where British monarchs have been crowned, married and buried for 920 years.

Prince Andrew, Britain's playboy prince, and Sarah Ferguson, a bouncy redhead called "Fergie," will step to the abbey's magnificent high altar at 11:30 a.m. (6:30 a.m. EDT) Wednesday and exchange marriage vows before a potential television audience of 300 million people in 32 nations.

Not since the wedding five years ago of Prince Charles, the heir to the throne, and Lady Diana Spencer has the world seen such a display of pomp, circumstance and royal razzmatazz.

The nuptials of Andrew, second son of Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip and fourth in line to the throne, has not generated anything like the feverish excitement that brought a million people into the streets of London in 1981. An estimated 750 million people watched that ceremony on television, and London was awash in Union Jacks and red, white and blue bunting for weeks.

But few here doubt it will be a jolly good show just the same, a welcome diversion from concern over the nation's industrial decline and a chance to dispel fears of terrorism that have kept many Americans away from London.

Nothing, least of all security, is being left to chance.

Scotland Yard has said 2,000 police will be along the mile-long processional route from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey.

According to Press Association, Britain's domestic news service, blue bereted marksmen from Scotland Yard's D11 Firearms Squad will take up rooftop positions and armed police disguised as footmen in ceremonial frocks and tricorn hats will ride on the horse-drawn carriages carrying the wedding party.

Westminster Abbey will be sealed off from the public for four days before the wedding, while seating is arranged for the 1,800 guests and workers set up television lights and cameras, flowers and a royal blue processional carpet. Arranging the flowers alone is a two-day job.

And just in case the wedding cake gets spoiled on the way to the capital from a Royal Navy supply school 250 miles away, navy chefs have baked an identical spare cake.

At dawn last Thursday, 156 cavalrymen from the queen's Household Guard accompanied by eight empty horse-drawn carriages rumbled along nearly deserted streets to time the wedding procession down to the last second.

Absent was the carriage that will carry Miss Ferguson and her father, Maj. Ronald Ferguson, to the church from Clarence House, home of the Queen Mother Elizabeth. The Glass Coach, built in 1910 and used by King George V for his coronation that year, is never used in rehearsals.

Prince Andrew and Miss Ferguson walked down the aisle last Wednesday in a rehearsal designed primarily for the four young bridesmaids and four page boys, including Andrew's 4-year-old nephew, Prince William. Andrew's brother, Prince Edward, 22, is the best man; Miss Ferguson will not have a maid of honor.

The couple has decided to allow TV cameras to record the exchange of vows.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

LUXURY IN THE FAST LANE-The Toyota Corolla LE Sedan offers luxury features with an affordable price tag. The 1986 model boasts an optional power package that includes power windows, power door locks and dual electric remote-controlled mirrors. The package is standard on the LE Limited model.

COROLLA: A Car A Variety of Needs

by Tom Cooper

Toyota's best-selling line of Corolla models dresses up for 1986 with eye-pleasing refinements inside and out, solidifying its position as the car for all tastes - -and pocketbooks.

A versatile eight-model line-up presents a bountiful array of choices for the demanding car buyer. Corollas are available in three body styles, with a choice of three engines and three transmissions. Driving flexibility is enhanced further by separate applications of both front - and rear-wheel drive.

After a well-received introduction in 1985, the exciting GT-S Liftback and Sport Coupe models return to deliver unequaled, sporty performance in the Corolla class. Both models feature a twin-cam, 16-valve, fuel-injected engine, high performance suspension and braking components, and sporty interior upgraded for 1986.

Additional Corollas that live up to the line's reputation for reliability and value for the money are three four-Door Sedans, including the LE Limited, which provides an unmatched level of comfort and standard features. Rounding out the '86 line are a two-door SR5 Sport coupe and a three-door and five-door Liftback.

Major exterior alterations to the new Corollas reflect a concern for upgrading all around. Hi-tech halogen headlights are found on every model. Previously, they were available only on the LE and LE Limited models. Inside, the addition of dual door packets and thicker padding on the upper door panels bestows a look of elegance on Deluxe- and LE-grade models.

With a touch of class befitting the higher-priced Sport models, the rear seat on the front-wheel-drive Liftback models has been restyled to include built-in headrests, adding both comfort and an improved luxury appearance. Following that luxury lead, a power package will become standard on the LE Limited model and optional on the LE model. It includes power windows, power door locks and dual electric remote-controlled mirrors.

Both front and rear-wheel-drive models are powered by a 1.6-liter, four-cylinder, OHC gas engine. Combustion chamber efficiency has been improved by the enlargement (unshrouding) of the intake and exhaust valve areas in the cylinder head. The result is a four-point increase in horsepower and 1 ft./lb. of torque.

A new convenience on all Sport Corollas is a handy cupholder located in the center console. This unique feature conceals into the console lid when not in use and folds down when needed to provide a secure cup holder.

Adding further excitement to the sporty GT-S models is the adoption of a newly styled leather-wrapped steering wheel to harmonize with the leather-wrapped gear shift knob and other upscale interior appointments, such as new carpet-covered inside door panel pockets and color-keyed fabric headliner.

Toyota's four-speed automatic overdrive transmission with lock-up torque converter is available again in 1986 on the front-wheel-drive LE and LE Limited models. Sport models receive the proven five-speed overdrive gearbox, with the exception of the two-door SR5 Sport Coupe, which presents the convenience of a four-speed automatic.

This feature appears each Monday as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram
