Andrews shooting

ANDREWS — A 75-year-old Andrews man has been charged with murder and attempted murder after a shooting in which his son was killed and his daughter was wounded, officials said.

Cleatus Cosper was being held Tuesday in the Andrews County Jail. Bond had not been set as of Tuesday night, according to jail records.

Police Chief Bud Jones said the shooting erupted early Monday, following an argument that began Sunday.

Jimmy Cosper, 51, died Monday morning of a gunshot wound to his back.

His sister, Joan Burkett, 54, who was shot once in the lower back, was taken to Permian General Hospital in Andrews. Police said her injuries were not serious.

Cleatus Cosper and his son were arguing in a bedroom before Jimmy Cosper was shot in the upper back, according to police. Ms. Burkett rushed into the room to investigate, and she also was shot, Jones said.

U.S. targets Japan luxury autos

■ Administration threatens huge tariffs to force concessions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration threatened punitive tariffs Tuesday that would double the prices for nearly $6 billion of Japan's most popular luxury autos, escalating an already tense dispute between the world's largest economies.

The Japanese government immediately branded the threatened sanctions a serious challenge to the global trading system and announced it was filing an unfair trading complaint before the new World Trade Organization.

The U.S. threat was the latest effort to force concessions that would boost the sale of American autos and parts in the Japanese market and narrow America's record $66 billion trade deficit with Japan.

While many trade analysts predicted the dispute would be resolved before the sanctions actually took effect on June 28, neither side showed any willingness to compromise.

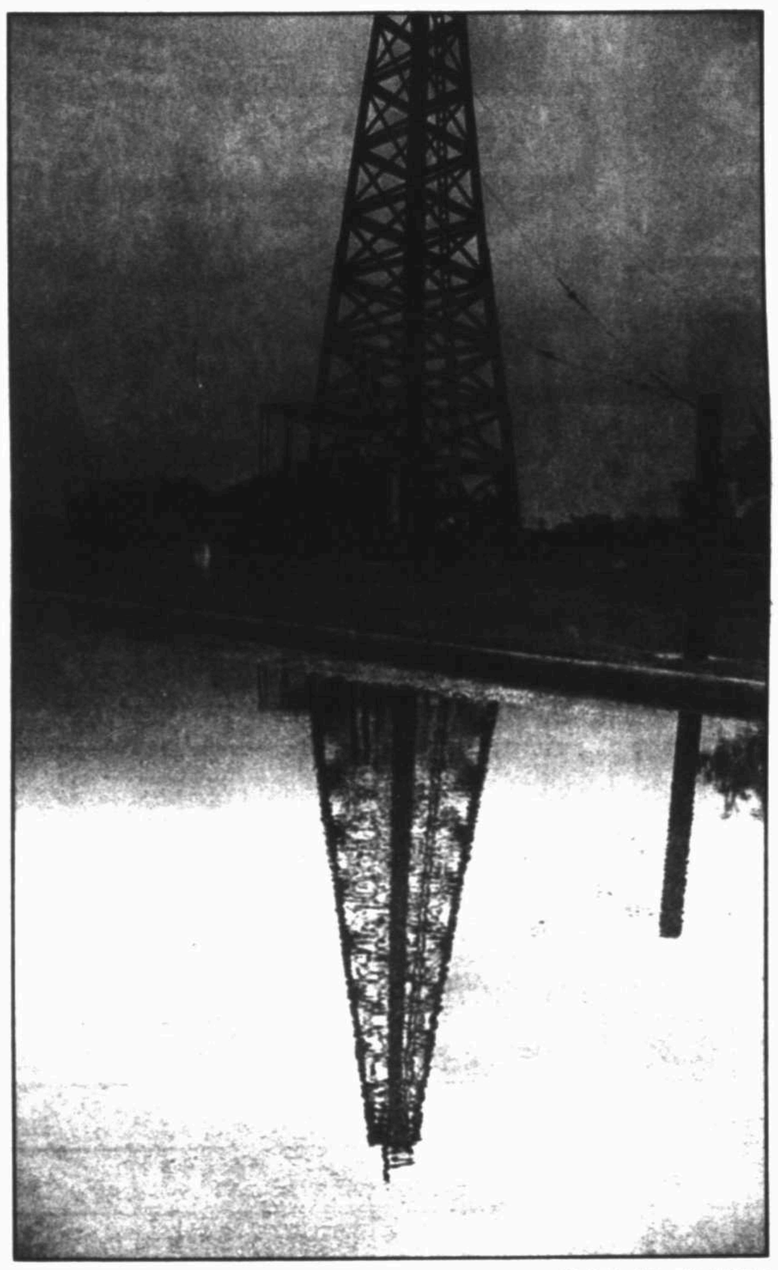

Representative of the 617 dealerships stocking the targeted cars warned of mass layoffs and bankruptcies.

House votes handgun bill; Bush to sign

■ Texas to become 38th state permitting citizens to carry concealed weapons.

N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN — The right of Texans to carry concealed handguns, curtailed in the post-Civil War chaos, was restored by lawmakers Tuesday after one of the most emotional debates of the legislative session.

The final House vote was 101-46.

"I believe this will make Texas a safer place," said Gov. George W. Bush, adding that he will fulfill his 1994 campaign promise to sign into law a bill that his Democratic predecessor, Ann Richards, blocked in 1993.

■ Waiting to carry arms/1B

"This presumably will take us out of the days of the old wild, wild West by allowing innocent people to protect themselves from people who do not fear the consequences of the law," Bush said.

Beginning Jan. 1, the bill allows those with licenses to carry concealed handguns. It authorizes the Texas Department of Public Safety to issue the licenses to Texans who meet numerous eligibility requirements, including lack of a criminal record or history of mental problems.

Applicants will have to complete 10 to 15 hours of classroom and shooting range training with a handgun, pay a $140 fee and fulfill other requirements.

Bill to allow county, city government mix awaits Austin action

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A proposed state constitutional amendment would give local voters the opportunity to consolidate county and city governments, along with the college and hospital districts.

The bill — sponsored by Sen. Jeff Wentworth (R-San Antonio) — passed the Texas Senate last week and is pending before the state's House of Representatives. Final approval of the bill would come from voters in November.

"The important thing about the bill is it doesn't mandate anything. It is simply an option local voters could explore," said Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood.

The amendment would affect 11 counties: Midland, Bandera, Bee, Bexar, Gillespie, Guadalupe, Kendall, Kerr, Nueces, Tom Green and Travis. Originally, the bill included all 254 Texas counties; when the list was reduced, Norwood requested that Midland County be included.

The bill essentially would allow the Commissioners' Court to create

■ Teacher who fled with ninth-grader surrenders

By Tom Hays
Associated Press

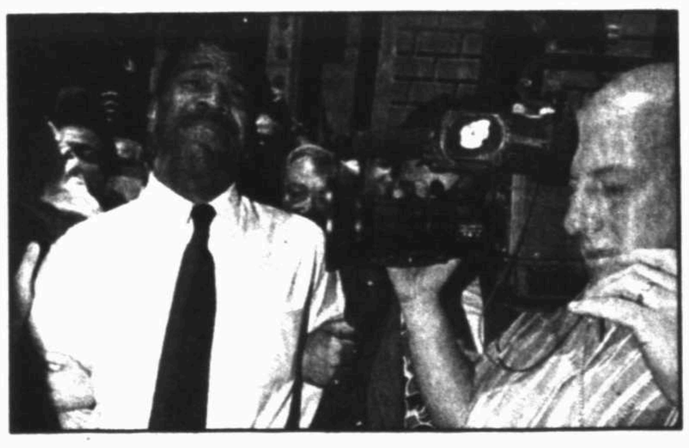

NEW YORK — A heartthrob gym teacher who took a ninth-grade girl on a cross-country odyssey of cheap motels, casinos and amusement parks surrendered Tuesday and claimed he was only protecting her from abusive parents.

Glenn Harris, 33, was arrested on kidnapping charges upon his return from Las Vegas, after what investigators suspect was a "Lolita"-style romance with 15-year-old Christina Rosado.

Harris and his lawyers refused to say whether he had a sexual relationship with the girl, and he accused the media — one tabloid branded him "a cradle-robbing Casanova" — of twisting his relationship with her.

State panel gives thumbs-up to Andrews County waste dump

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The proposed Andrews County low-level-radioactive-waste dump has been given a thumbs up by the Texas House Environmental Regulation Committee.

A bill to allow the site was passed earlier in the Senate and was endorsed 5-3 Monday by the House committee. The full House will vote on the bill in the next two weeks, according to an aide of Sen. Teel Bivins. Bivins introduced the bill at the request of site developers and Andrews County officials.

Most city and county officials in Andrews are in favor of the new mixed waste — toxic and low-level radioactive waste — landfill site. The site is expected to bring between 100 and 130 new jobs to the county, which has a population of less than 1,700.

"The Andrews people have looked at this very hard," said Buddy Alford, whose company, Waste Control Specialists Inc., plans to operate the Andrews site.

The proposed dump, however, has polarized some citizens over the issue of environmental concerns vs. economic concerns. Members of the national organization Alert Citizens for Environmental Safety (ACES) argue that the site could threaten the local environment for the next 1,600 years, said Marvin Resnikoff, ACES senior associate.

Alford maintains that the proposed Andrews landfill is safe because of its location in a natural clay barrier, over which a second, man-made barrier is placed, he said.

Andrews county was selected because of these clay-lined playa lake beds, its low population and low annual rainfall.

The bill, introduced May 1, would allow the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission to issue a radioactive waste disposal license to Waste Control Specialists.

"This bill is the fastest-moving bill in the Texas Legislature," said Tom Smith, executive director of the state office of Public Citizen. "And for us to overturn policy we've been trying to establish since 1980 — for the last 15 years — in 15 days, smacks of bad public policy and should cause alarm bells all over the state of Texas."

Smith said he is concerned because private radioactive waste sites in other states have encountered environmental problems, which state governments have been forced to step in and use tax mon-

Shells slam into Sarajevo as residents, vendors rush to cover

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Old Town vendors rushed to cover and city residents hid in bomb shelters Tuesday as hundreds of shells slammed into Sarajevo in the worst fighting in two years.

Battles for the city's front lines claimed the lives of the innocent, including a 12-year-old girl unlucky enough to be outside when government forces and besieging Serbs began battling for five areas of Sarajevo.

Clouds of smoke wafted over the Bosnian capital during a day in which shells began falling from the sky at a rate of up to three a minute. An armored vehicle manned by Russian peacekeepers was set afire by heavy machine-gun fire; the occupants escaped without casualties.

By nightfall, 10 hours after the shelling began, officials reported the girl and two others dead and 17 wounded — latest victims of a conflict that has left 200,000 people dead or missing since Bosnia seceded from the former Yugoslav federation in 1992.

The usually packed streets of the Old Town area were deserted Tuesday for all but those who dared dash across streets looking for shelter or on business important enough to risk their lives. Shopkeepers abandoned their goods on the stands to seek cover.

There were conflicting accounts of who started Tuesday's fighting. The United Nations said the Bosnian army shelled a Serb-held suburb and attacked a Serb supply road south of the city.

AP Laserphoto

A Sarajevo woman runs past a Muslim family as they cross an intersection targeted by heavy sniper fire in downtown Sarajevo, Tuesday.

The mostly Muslim army said the Serbs attacked first. And Serb sources said their fighters were trying to take out government snipers harassing civilians and traffic from Debelo Brdo, a hill confrontation line south of the city center.

Fighting began about 9 a.m. and continued into the evening as Serb forces pressed government forces in the south, said Maj. Guy Vinet, a U.N. spokesman. He said it appeared the Serbs did not appear to have enough manpower to make significant gains.

The precise cause for the surge in warfare — U.N. observers registered more than 800 explosions by dark — was unclear.

The fighting could reflect an attempt by the government army to flex its muscle. There have been increased calls by government and army leaders for the breaking of the Serb siege around Sarajevo.

In any case, Tuesday's fighting was enough the prompt a NATO response, if only in warning.

NATO planes flew low over Sarajevo, but the United Nations said it would not call for air strikes.

"What are you going to do, hit half of the city?" asked Alexander Ivanko, a U.N. spokesman.

"The people of Sarajevo have already seen more than enough blood in three years," he said. "They should not be put through another harrowing day of seeing shrapnel and bullets tearing people apart."

NATO threat of air strikes forced heavy weapons from the immediate perimeter of the city in February 1994. But the 12 1/2-mile "exclusion zone" has been increasingly ignored for months.

Look for high 80s, some clouds

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the upper 80s and southwest to west winds at 25-35 mph. Tonight should be mostly clear with a high in the mid-50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Thursday should be mostly sunny with a high near 80.

After an overnight low of 70, Tuesday's high reached 82, compared to the record high for that date of 100 set in 1946. The record low was 42 set in 1945.

STATE

Powerful thunderstorms began building Tuesday evening in Far West Texas, but most of the state was just plain cloudy and hot.

Temperatures reached 100 degrees in the Rio Grande Valley and peaked elsewhere in the 80s and 90s. San Antonio's high of 94 tied a 1948 record for the Alamo City.

Extensive low level moisture from the Gulf of Mexico, pushed inland by southerly winds, maintained muggy conditions statewide.

A dry line extended from northeast New Mexico southward through the Trans-Pecos and the Big Bend, triggering thunderstorms in Winkler County.

The North Texas forecast is for thunderstorms today, with some possibly severe. It will be windy in the western and central areas. Afternoon highs in the 80s. Tonight, clearing skies in the west, partly cloudy in the central area and mostly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms in the east. Cooler with overnight lows in the mid 50s in the west to near 70 in the southeast.

South Texas is expected to be cloudy with a chance for showers and thundershowers. Lows in the mid- and upper 70s and highs in the 90s.

Forecasters said West Texas would have a decrease in cloudiness in the west with showers and thunderstorms in the eastern sections today. Some storms possibly severe. Windy with areas of blowing dust this afternoon over the South Plains and northern Permian Basin. Partly cloudy to mostly cloudy Wednesday night. Highs today from near 70 north to the mid-90s in the Presidio Valley. Lows tonight mainly 40s and 50s.

NATION

Summer weather came early to the Gulf Coast, with scorching temperatures recorded from Texas to Florida, while storms bombarded the mid-South and southern Plains on Tuesday.

Heat records were set at many spots along the Gulf of Mexico, including Apalachicola, Fla., where the high of 94 topped the 1985 mark of 90. Corpus Christi, Texas, was 78 degrees in the morning, marking the third consecutive day of record warm overnight temperatures.

Intense thunderstorms with heavy rain and hail moved through eastern Kansas, Missouri, southern Illinois and Kentucky in the morning.

Winds gusted to 60 mph at La Harpe, Kan., and 65 mph at Fort Scott, while 2 to 3 inches of quickly rain fell on the region. St. Louis received 2.4 inches of rain.

Minor flooding was reported in eastern Kansas and parts of Missouri, Illinois and western Kentucky.

Several funnel clouds were reported in Warren County, near Bowling Green, Ky.

Power was still out in parts of Georgia, where violent storms uprooted trees, tore off roofs and killed at least one person Monday. Gov. Zell Miller declared a state of emergency Tuesday in nine counties.

The highest temperatures Tuesday were recorded in Cross City and Sanford, Fla., both at 92 degrees. The low was 28 at Ely, Nev.

Cool, showery weather continued in Southern California and moved inland toward the Southwest, while the Pacific Northwest enjoyed pleasant weather.

A cold front stretched from Detroit to Maine, and another hovered over the northern Plains.

Pick 3 Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — The Pick 3 winning numbers drawn Thursday by the Texas Lottery, in order:

9-1-8

TARGETS: Clinton signals tough line on sanctions

(From 1A)

The list includes all five models of Toyota's Lexus, three of Nissan's Infiniti and two models of Honda's Acura as well as Mazda's 929 and Millenia and Mitsubishi's Diamante.

"It is unbelievable that the U.S. government would wipe out an entire U.S. business segment in an attempt to send a message to Japan," said Walter E. Huizenga, president of the American International Automobile Dealers Association.

At the White House, President Clinton signaled a tough line on sanctions, saying, "We can't any more sweep this under the rug. We've got to go forward and we're going to do that."

If no agreement is reached over the next month, 100 percent tariffs would be levied against the 13 Japanese luxury models, ranging in price from $25,000 to more than $50,000.

The current tariff, or border tax, on these cars is 2.5 percent. Such a huge increase would be designed to eliminate all sales of those models in the United States.

The cars were picked because they are not assembled in the United States and they represent the models that provide Japanese manufacturers with their biggest profit margins.

Asked what he would advise American consumers if the sanctions take effect, U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor said, "Go take a look at some very good American cars."

However, auto analysts said the most likely beneficiaries of the stiff tariffs would be European manufacturers of such luxury cars.

The $5.9 billion total would represent a record amount in U.S. trade sanctions. To ensure that the Japanese do not rush cars into the United States to beat the deadline, the administration announced that the tariffs would apply retroactively to any cars entering after this Saturday — if there is no agreement.

The June 28 date for the sanctions will allow Clinton to raise the auto issue personally when he meets Japanese Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama at the annual seven-nation economic summit, scheduled this year for June 15-17 in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The United States is demanding that Japanese auto companies commit to increasing their purchases of American-made parts for their U.S. and Japanese assembly plants. The U.S. side also wants an increase in dealerships in Japan stocking U.S. cars and relaxation of safety regulations viewed as a barrier to the sale of American-made replacement parts to Japanese repair shops.

The auto talks, which have been dragging on for 20 months, broke off on May 5 in Canada after Kantor and Japanese Trade Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto were unable to bridge wide differences.

The biggest split was over the issue of the voluntary purchase plans, which were first put into effect in 1992 but which the Japanese now say were a mistake that they will not repeat.

In a statement Tuesday, Hashimoto accused the United States of "attempting to impose de facto numerical targets under the threat of unilateral actions."

He said Japan would counter this "serious challenge to the free trade system" by filing immediately a complaint with the WTO, an action that will begin a 60-day consultation period between the two countries.

Last week, in an effort to preempt the Japanese, the United States said it would file its own WTO case attacking Japanese auto barriers.

The administration's decision Tuesday was applauded by Detroit and congressional leaders.

Andrew Card, president of the American Automobile Manufacturers Association, and Alfred Gaspar, president of the Automotive Parts and Accessories Association, said in a joint statement, "Japan has steadfastly refused to open its closed market. The U.S. government has no choice but to take bold action."

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole said there was strong support in the Senate for the administration's tough stance. House Democratic Leader Dick Gephardt praised Clinton for "standing up against Japan's market restrictions."

CLASSANOVA: Student's teacher surrenders

(From 1A)

"A student came to me with horrific tales of brutal family abuse that lasted over years and years," Harris said. "Whatever happens, I hope someone steps in. (Christina) is a beautiful person. She deserves respect."

Christina is in good health and is expected to return to New York today, said Harris' attorney Michael Stuhff. Her immediate whereabouts were not disclosed.

Authorities and an attorney for the girl's mother ridiculed claims that Harris rescued the teen-ager from a sexually abusive father and a physically abusive mother.

"Anyone who thinks that Mr. Harris embarked on this 2-month-long trek simply to protect his student is quite naive," said Edward F. Stancik, special commissioner of investigation for the School Board.

Peter Antioco, an attorney for the girl's mother, Luz Diaz, said: "What is he smoking?"

The girl's parents do not live together. Authorities were trying to locate the father about the abuse charges, although one source close to the investigation said they believe those allegations were fabricated.

Harris, accompanied by civil rights attorneys William Kunstler and Ron Kuby, did not answer questions about whether he tried to marry the teen-ager. Authorities said he twice inquired about marriage laws while on the run.

Harris met Christina at the start of the school year, when the girl, then 14, arrived at the Creative Learning Center in East Harlem, part of the public school system. She was one of his students.

The pair took off on March 8, one day after Christina's mother intercepted a love letter from her daughter to the muscular, mustachioed gym teacher, authorities said.

They were traced through Washington, D.C., Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Texas, California and Nevada, turning up in a series of budget motels, rent-a-car offices, an amusement park and a casino.

The pair were last reported seen at Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas on April 17. On Tuesday, Harris flew into Newark, N.J., and surrendered at the school investigator's office with his lawyers.

Antioco said Ms. Diaz was "going to light a few candles and pray" for her daughter's safe return.

At Martin Luther King Jr. High School on Manhattan's West Side, the runaways were a hot lunchtime topic.

"If he really loved her, he should have waited till she was 18," said Shawn Anthony, 17.

"But you don't know what was going on, what he was thinking," countered Denise Mendez, 17. "Maybe he did love her, who knows? Maybe he was the only one who understood her at that moment. Kids are under pressure sometimes and their parents don't understand."

A lot of girls at Christina's school were said to have a crush on Harris. According to Stancik, Harris never mentioned the allegations of abuse by Christina's father until earlier this year, when school officials confronted him about his relationship with the student.

Even if the abuse allegations were true, it wouldn't justify Harris' behavior, Stancik added.

"There are ways to deal with that," he said. "Among those ways, I don't think we should include taking Christina out of school and traipsing across the country with her, staying in cheap motels."

MIX: Bill would provide option for consolidation

a charter commission to reorganize county and city governments under a single county governing body, according to Andrew Wise, Wentworth's chief of staff. The reorganization, as specified in a charter, would require approval by voters in the most populous city in the county and, in a separate vote, by voters in unincorporated areas, he said. Commissioners could initiate the charter commission or be petitioned to do so by residents, Wise said.

The bill also allows for other districts or authorities — except school districts — to be merged with the city and county into one governmental entity at the same time or at a later date.

Although government services and administration would be consolidated, there would remain some division of city and county residence. The bill provides that property taxes for county and city residents would be graduated by area based on level of services.

Norwood said he welcomes reviewing consolidation but that it's too early to advocate the measure. "I support the constitutional amendment and its ability, and anything that will make local government more efficient and less costly for taxpayers," he said.

The option for consolidation is the "ultimate in local control," Norwood said. "You can start with a blank page and design your own government in the most official way possible," he said.

Mayor Bobby Burns said he supports the general concept but the bill requires more scrutiny.

"The basic idea of the bill is very good — which is consolidating government," he said.

Nevertheless, Burns said, he has some reservations on how consolidation would be handled under the framework of the bill, which is unclear on some points.

WASTE: Construction on dump site has not begun

ey to correct.

For years, land owned in Andrews County by the University of Texas System has been discussed as a possible site for radioactive waste. In 1990, the Andrews County Industrial Foundation invited the UT System to conduct a study into the feasibility of placing a radioactive waste dump in the county.

ACES members maintain that recent earthquake activity in West Texas underscores the dangers of the Andrews site and a second site for low-level radioactive waste in Hudspeth County near Sierra Blanca.

"Work by the U.S. Geological Survey has found that quakes of magnitude 7.5 are possible along any of the fault scarps in the region," said ACES spokeswoman Kim Knowlton.

"We are concerned that the (Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Authority) has used a lower figure to estimate possible quake damage at the facility," she said of the Hudspeth County site.

Resnikoff said he was unaware of the Andrews County site, but had similar concerns for any radioactive landfill in the area.

Materials at either site are not the much-feared, high-level radioactive waste produced by the nation's nuclear fission reactors, Alford said. The low-level and mixed wastes are much safer than high-level waste, he said.

The mixed waste, however, is "much more voluminous," than other radioactive wastes, Resnikoff said.

Much of this mixed waste would be medical in nature, such as gloves worn by technicians handling radioactive medical supplies. Research waste from major universities would also be a source for the landfill.

Another source would be the scale inside oil-well tubing, which in West Texas and other areas can have a radioactive level mandating its treatment as low-level waste. This waste is called NORM — naturally occurring radioactive material — Alford said.

This NORM waste can have accumulations of uranium isotopes and such long-lived isotopes as radium 226, Resnikoff said.

Construction has not yet begun on the Andrews site, but state permits have been issued for the storage of toxic waste, such as that containing PCBs and other dangerous compounds.

Any waste materials placed here will be treated to reduce volume and to turn loose or liquid waste into a solid material that will be kept safely "for thousands and thousands of years," Alford said.

The bill, if passed, would allow out-of-state waste to be disposed in the Andrews site, but would apply tight restrictions to the importation of toxic and radioactive materials.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

GUN: Bush says he'll sign concealed-weapons bill

(From 1A)

Those with licenses will be free to tote their weapons at home — which is already legal — and in public, although guns will be prohibited in several locations, including churches, schools, bars and hospitals.

Sponsors initially opposed most of those site restrictions, saying they would leave law-abiding citizens defenseless against predators. But they compromised, saying the prohibitions were part of the political price for passage of the bill.

"There are instances where innocent people in this state face death every day, and because they are law-abiding they can't protect themselves," said sponsor Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston.

"Criminals don't care about the law," said Wilson, who said he was motivated to seek passage of the law when his wife and child were terrorized by a mugger about 10 years ago.

Co-sponsor Rep. Bill Carter, R-Fort Worth, agreed it is the law-abiding citizens who have suffered from the 1870 prohibition against the public wearing of handguns.

Twenty-five years after Texas achieved statehood, Reconstruction-era lawmakers added a phrase to the state constitutional "right to bear arms" provision stating that the Legislature could regulate the "wearing of arms" to promote public safety.

"The time has come for the Texas Legislature to change this carpetbagger law that disarmed Texans in 1870," Carter said.

"Properly used, a handgun can still be your best friend when attacked by a predator," Carter added.

Wilson and Carter said the training and eligibility requirements are the toughest in the nation.

But opponents, many of them minority representatives from urban areas, expressed fears that the law would put too many new guns in society without sufficient training or screening of applicants.

Authorities prepare to quarantine possible carriers of Ebola virus

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — With the threat of the deadly Ebola virus looming over the capital of 6 million, doctors and nurses created a hospital isolation ward Tuesday for the city's first possible carriers.

Small green rooms with floral curtains were sectioned off at Kinshasa's Ngaliema Hospital to hold a total of 20 people, and health workers in the isolation ward will have to stay there, too.

"This area will be quarantined for maximum, maximum, maximum protection," said the hospital's medical director, Dr. Maseb a Mwang Sulu.

Officials have been struggling to contain the virus to the region surrounding Kikwit, a city of 600,000 where the outbreak began in March, killing 77 people as of Monday.

There is no vaccine or cure for Ebola, which is spread through bodily fluids and kills 80 percent of those who contract it. Victims suffer from violent diarrhea and vomiting, and die within days with blood pouring from their eyes, ears and noses.

The fear that Kinshasa, 370 miles west of Kikwit, was at risk became concrete Monday with reports that a riverboat captain and a nurse who had fled to the capital from Kikwit were suspected carriers.

A search for the two was launched and they were tracked down Tuesday.

The nurse worked at Kikwit General Hospital, where the epidemic began, and fled in panic to her family in Kinshasa, said Dr. Abdou Moudi, the World Health Organization's representative in Zaire.

The captain was treated for bloody diarrhea at a Kinshasa hospital and released before doctors realized his symptoms were similar to those of Ebola.

Late Tuesday, Health Minister Lonyangela Bopenda Bo-nkuma said the captain had amoebic dysentery, not Ebola, and was released. He said he did not have any test results on the nurse, but that the case was still suspicious.

If she shows signs of Ebola, she will be quarantined for 28 days. Doctors will monitor her temperature for fever and check for antibodies to the virus.

"Why are they preparing the hospitals here just in case, even though they don't have any cases now?" Bopenda Bo-nkuma asked. "While in a war, you have to prepare for the wounded."

During Zaire's first Ebola outbreak in 1976, Ngaliema Hospital treated two nuns and a nurse; all three died. President Mobutu Sese Seko posted soldiers around the hospital then with orders to let only doctors enter or leave.

On Tuesday, the hospital's medical director said he was preparing isolation rooms for 15 to 20 people on Ward 5, which surrounds a beautifully tended garden.

"Even the doctors and nurses who work here will not be permitted to leave," Sulu said.

French president reaps praise as term ends

PARIS (AP) — Francois Mitterrand leaves office today as the longest serving president of France, taking with him a wealth of secrets and leaving a legacy rich in controversy.

Passing the mantle to conservative President-elect Jacques Chirac, Mitterrand closes a 14-year period of Socialist rule that ultimately defied the party mold. It became the Mitterrand era, and he espoused a notion of French grandeur that even enemies admired.

A consummate strategist, Mitterrand did not shirk at Machiavellian tactics, but remained loyal to friends tainted by corruption scandals that plagued his administration.

Mitterrand outlived the scandals, outwitted rivals and persevered without apologies for a past that included service in the collaborationist Vichy government.

Waging a battle against prostate cancer, Mitterrand, 78, retires amid an outpouring of attempts to unlock his mystique.

He bid farewell Tuesday with a brief written statement, saying he preferred not to appear on television to make a "theatrical adieu."

"I hope (Chirac) leads France in peace and justice," said the statement to the French people. "I extend to you my gratitude for all that I owe you and send my wishes for happiness to each and every one of you."

The dark silhouette of Mitterrand's trademark fedora and overcoat came to epitomize his solitude and secrets. In the public eye for more than half a century, he eluded familiarity.

Mitterrand is "an immense and complex personality," National Assembly speaker Philippe Seguin, a Chirac loyalist, said this week. "One of the greats of the century is going."

Changes during Mitterrand's presidency include abolishing the death penalty, decentralizing government, a shorter work week and longer vacations. The numerous architectural projects he sponsored altered the face of Paris.

But Mitterrand considers his paramount bequest to be the vision of a united Europe that he and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany polished and promoted.

True to form, Mitterrand ignited controversy in a last farewell to Europe during a speech in Berlin on May 8 to celebrate the Allied victory in World War II.

Calling German soldiers courageous, he said they "loved their country" despite the "bad cause" they fought for.

Some denounced the speech. Others said it was Mitterrand's finest hour.

He was alternately idolized by the nation and spurned even by his own party. Now the tide has turned again. Recent polls show a solid majority of French people believe he will have a major place in French history.

Crosswalk danger calls for action

Officials of the city's traffic engineering department are wise to respond to the dangerous situation that exists around Memorial Hospital and Medical Center where a nurse was struck by a vehicle last week while crossing Ohio Avenue.

The nurse, Rhonda Jordan, was struck by a vehicle that had stopped at the crosswalk on Ohio Avenue, then lurched forward as Ms. Jordan and another hospital employee were crossing the street.

While the crossings on Ohio and Illinois avenues are plainly marked and drivers are warned of the crosswalks by lights, a casual observation shows that some vehicles do not slow down as much as they should when traveling down either street, and often those individuals crossing the streets may feel unsafe doing so. And, as the recent mishap involving Ms. Jordan clearly illustrates, when vehicles and pedestrians are in such close proximity accidents can and often do occur. There have been other accidents in the past around the hospital.

Of course, the goal for the city should be to make crossing the streets around Memorial Hospital and Medical Center as safe as possible for pedestrians. And on any given day, numerous people cross those streets to visit patients, get treatment or for other reasons. As Midland's population continues to increase, it stands to reason that the pedestrian traffic around MHMC will grow heavier and the situation in the crosswalks will grow even more dangerous with more people crossing the streets and more vehicles traveling those streets.

It's obvious that the crosswalk situation needs to be thoroughly studied by the city. Perhaps more signs or flashing lights on the streets in question would result in more driver attention to the crosswalks. And there may be other steps that the city can take to make it safer for pedestrians crossing the streets around the hospital.

The relatively minor accidents involving pedestrians that have occurred there should be viewed as a warning. Precautions should be taken to prevent further accidents — before a pedestrian is killed while crossing the streets.

CHARLEY REESE

Wishful thinking won't work against force

Funny how people can look at reality and read different messages from it and react differently. Take the Oklahoma City bombing, for example. The message I read from that reality was nothing new.

Reese

I saw the same message years ago the first time I looked at a murder victim. I got the same message from history books: Homo sapiens is the most dangerous lifeform inhabiting planet Earth.

Most of things that kill people, like bacteria and viruses and cancer cells, don't know they're killing anybody. They are simply doing what they are programmed by nature to do — which is not kill anybody but reproduce. The death is just an accidental byproduct. But when humans kill, they know they are killing; when they inflict pain, they know they are inflicting pain.

All humans are potential killers but some among us are evil and predatory, just like whoever killed those people in Oklahoma. Evil can never be measured by numbers. To kill one child is the same morally as killing a thousand. Numbers of victims are just a matter of opportunity, circumstance or chance, not any difference in the killers.

My reaction to the Oklahoma bombing was the same as when I saw my first murder victim: Keep a gun handy. In a world in which predators exist, it is necessary for the nonpredators to have the means of defending themselves.

After seeing with my own eyes what terrible things one human can and will do to a fellow human being, my reaction was that I would never, if I could help it, put myself or the people I care about at the mercy of such a predator.

Ayn Rand, a gentle lady, put the matter quite well: The only logical reply to force is counterforce. When someone comes at you with a club, a gun or a knife, they are not coming to reason or persuade or dialogue. Reason and conversation are irrelevant. They have come to kill you or to coerce you into doing their bidding with the threat of death. Logically, the only reply to force is counterforce.

Many Americans, if they have been lucky enough to avoid personal encounters with predators, have forgotten that evil is part of the natural world. Nobody will ever reform the human race. There will never be a time when all the swords are beaten into plowshares. The sun will never rise on a day when human predators are not out and about looking for prey. Universal disarmament will never happen. War, in one form or another, in one place or another, will always be with us. So will crime, so will that type of crime called terrorism.

Yet people persist in acting as if that were not so. I heard more than one presumably intelligent official say of the bombing words to the effect that steps would be taken to make sure it never happens again. "Never again" is wishful thinking. It will happen again. The human species is not about to make a 90 degree turn after marching so consistently in one direction for all these thousands of years.

For heaven's sake, read a little history and look around you. No change. Humans today are the same as they were in 5,000 B.C. Only the toys and tools have changed and most of those, not much.

Other people think if they just ban ownership of weapons evil will go away. Wrong. They think the government can protect them. Wrong. They think education will prevent crime. Wrong. They think criminals can be rehabilitated. Wrong.

We have to live with the risk of violence just as we have to live with other risks such as infection or accidents or natural calamities. As every other human generation, we can take reasonable steps to defend ourselves and to defend our communities and our nation. And the most reasonable step in all cases is to be armed. Still, there is no guarantee of success — but a chance is always better than no chance.

I think what we need most in this country is more realism and less wishful thinking. Wishful thinkers always end up as prey.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

GOP may deliver balanced-budget package

WASHINGTON — Republicans may play a mean, low-down political trick on Democrats still railing at proposals to stem the tide of red ink: to put the budget submitted to Congress a few months ago by President Clinton up for a vote.

Safire

You may remember his punt-and-pray, you-go-first budget — not only was it "dead on arrival"; it was dead before sending.

That was because Clinton made few choices needed to slow the growth of the deficit. Instead, he projected another trillion dollars in debt over the next five years (even assuming steady growth and low interest rates, which won't happen if such government borrowing continues apace).

Everyone knew the Clinton budget was not to be taken seriously; it was his way of saying "you won the election; you balance the budget."

Rarely do presidents so completely abdicate their economic responsibility. He changed "the president proposes, the Congress disposes" to "the Congress proposes and disposes while the president treads water."

However, to ingratiate himself with the voters who rejected his party, he included a me-too tax cut in that budget. That compounded his mistake.

Now we are engaged in a great budgetary war. Contrary to Clinton's expectations, the feisty GOP House and the sobersided GOP Senate met his challenge and came up with what Democrats considered impossible: seven years to budget balance.

Nor do the GOP proposals "cut" actual spending; they follow the precept of the Civil War general to a gunner to "elevate them sights a little lower."

But it is undoubtedly a Mort Sahl budget. ("Is there anybody I haven't offended?") The lobbies of geezers and greens, of veterans and farmers, of root casuists at Justice and corporate welfare queens of Commerce are stunned.

You can feel the moral high ground move. Having smugly asked "what's your specific alternative?" — and having received a serious answer — Democrats now find themselves embarrassed at being asked the same question.

All they have in the way of an answer is the old Clinton budget, which won't do. If Bob Dole and Newt Gingrich bring the coagulated Pablum of that Panetta-Rivlin compromise to a vote, Congressional Democrats will be forced to desert Clinton, lest they go on record as deficit doves.

That's why you can sense a Democratic fallback position in preparation. Farewell to Clinton's long-promised "middle-class tax cut," now seen by Congressional Democrats as a wrongheaded response to the electoral debacle.

Those unreturned billions will be proposed to be sprinkled over endangered liberal programs — national services' subsidized volunteers, public broadcasting, education under federal standards, the arts, another veterans' hospital, etc. — to shore up core constituencies and show Democrats resisting this year's sanhedrin of skinflints.

This means the debate is no longer between budget balancers and the defenders of debt. It is now between balancers including a tax cut (with spending restraints in the near years) and balancers without a tax cut (with a slowing of spending back-end-loaded). That's a huge shift in argument, as borrowing is no longer seen as a gift to our old but as a theft from our young.

The best way to redirect our nation is with the stronger government spending restraint plus tax rate reduction; as Napoleon advised a temporizing general, "If you are going to take Vienna, take Vienna."

However, with the veto power still in Democratic hands, conservatives may have to settle for spending restraint first, tax cuts later — in effect, taking the suburbs now and the citadel in 1997.

What is the immediate political effect of this rightward shift in the debate?

It means Perot voters no longer need a third party to express their disgust with the unwillingness of major parties to come to grips with the deficit. Of five United-we-standers, three are likely to go Republican, one Democratic, one home.

Smart Democrats understand this, which is why Bill Clinton keeps taking credit for having reduced the deficit last year. It is why Democrats are now abandoning the "deficit as percentage of GNP" weaseling and are scrambling to get aboard the anti-deficit bandwagon. And it is why Republicans are so eager to make certain you know the impetus for budget balance comes from them.

Clinton misses boat on federal power limit

President Clinton said ... he wants Attorney General Janet Reno to find ways around a Supreme Court decision that sets limits on the reach of the federal government in local law enforcement. The president is grandstanding. Most states have the laws they need to ban guns from schools and their vicinity.

The 5-year-old federal law struck down by the court forbids firearms within 1,000 feet of public schools. By a 5-4 vote, the justices said the Commerce Clause of the Constitution cannot be stretched to allow such a federal prohibition. ...

The president has been trying to portray his administration as "child friendly" in contrast to alleged Republican Scrooges. Now even the Supreme Court finds itself implicitly accused of being indifferent to the welfare of children by setting some limits on federal power. ...

When the federal law was passed, Congress doubtless was responding to calls for assistance to the growing problem of violence in schools. ...

But it was never intended by the Constitution that all crimes be federal offenses, even though the Commerce Clause has been used over the years to give the Justice Department broad jurisdiction. ...

No politician can go wrong expressing his determination, as Clinton did, "to keep guns away from schools." But it can be done without trying to find ways around the Constitution.

Militias protect Americans' constitutional rights

Whenever I worry about my constitutional rights I call up the Camouflaged Michigan Militia. The other day I felt threatened that someone in the government would take my poison gas mortars away from me, so I placed a 900 call to the First Michigan Lowlife Brigade.

Buchwald

To my surprise, a woman answered the phone.

"I didn't know that women belonged to the Lowlife Brigade," I said.

"Oh," she giggled, "I'm not a member. I serve coffee and doughnuts and roll bandages for the troops at their AK47 canteen. They asked me to answer the phone for them. What can I do for you?"

"I have a tank-load of poison gas, and jackbooted government thugs are threatening to confiscate it."

"They're infringing on your constitutional poison gas rights. This is a Lowlife paramilitary problem if ever I heard one."

"I was hoping that you would see it from my standpoint. I have no intention of using the gas on anyone unless the FBI breaks into my house and shoots my dog."

"You need to talk to Gen. Lawless about this. He is with the militia right now, dug in along the Canadian border. As soon as he returns from active duty, he'll put his men on general alert. This is the third constitutional poison gas case we've had this month. The next thing you know they'll shoot their way into your home and take away your 155mm howitzers."

I told her, "That's what I'm really afraid of. I've got hand grenades, torpedoes, land mines and tanks under my bed. I feel naked when the government says that I can't keep them."

She asked, "Are you a member of the NRA?"

"Why? Should I be?"

"Apart from us they are the only ones protecting the constitutional rights of Americans. They have paid agents to ensure that everybody is armed and ready to defend themselves against the jackbooted government thugs."

"Who are the agents of the NRA?"

"The low-life congressmen who are battling for our right to bear arms."

"Is that music I hear in the background?" I said.

"Yes," she responded. "We're having a dance tonight for our boys who have returned safely from the front."

"That's nice," I said. "I had no idea that the Michigan Militia took such good care of our boys."

"They have fought the United Nations, the Trilateral Commission, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the U.S. Agriculture Department, and we owe them. Our place operates much the same as the Stage Door Canteen. Every chance he gets, Gordon Liddy drops by to do the dishes.

"Just a minute, you're in luck. Gen. Lawless just walked in."

I told the general my story, and he said, "We've been expecting something like this. Our intelligence people have warned us that the ATF were going to go after poison gas even if it's owned by law-abiding citizens who have a fear of terrorists and Soviet soldiers hiding out under the Detroit Airport. Stay where you are and I'll send over a platoon of Orange Berets to shoot any ATF people who try to steal your poison gas."

"Do you think that you can stop them?"

"We can if we aim for their heads and their groins."

"I can't thank you enough."

"No big deal," the general told me. "It gives my boys a chance to fight and makes them proud that they can serve the greatest country in the world."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, May 17, the 137th day of 1995. There are 228 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 17, 1954, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its landmark "Brown versus Board of Education of Topeka" ruling which declared that racially segregated public schools were inherently unequal.

On this date:

In 1792, the New York Stock Exchange was founded by brokers meeting under a tree located on what is now Wall Street.

In 1814, Norway's constitution was signed, providing for a limited monarchy.

In 1875, the first Kentucky Derby was run at Churchill Downs in Louisville. The winner was "Aristides."

In 1938, the radio quiz show "Information, Please!" made its debut on the NBC Blue Network.

In 1938, Congress passed the Vinson Naval Act, providing funds for a two-ocean navy.

In 1939, Britain's King George the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth arrived in Quebec on the first visit to Canada by reigning British sovereigns.

In 1940, the Nazis occupied Brussels, Belgium, during World War II.

In 1946, President Truman seized control of the nation's railroads, delaying a threatened strike by engineers and trainmen.

In 1948, the Soviet Union recognized the new state of Israel.

In 1973, the Senate opened its hearings into the Watergate scandal.

In 1980, rioting that claimed 18 lives erupted in Miami's Liberty City neighborhood after an all-white jury in Tampa acquitted four former Miami police officers of fatally beating black insurance executive Arthur McDuffie.

Cult crimes

Aum Shinri Kyo, the cult accused of carrying out the nerve gas attack on Tokyo's subways, has been linked to other crimes:

Kidnapping
Suspected of kidnapping opponents as well as members who tried to flee.

Weapons
Suspected of making guns, researching biological weapons and studying nuclear and laser-type weapons. Owns a Russian military helicopter.

Explosives
Suspected of placing an explosive near the home of a scholar who criticized the group.

Drugs
Suspected of making stimulant drugs and administering them to members, and of injecting knock-out drugs to believers who tried to escape.

After weeks of waiting, cult investigation comes together

TOKYO (AP) — The weeks went by. Police appeared to be making little progress in their probe of a doomsday cult. It wasn't even clear that they knew the whereabouts of the group's elusive leader.

Then on Tuesday, the pieces slipped into place like a Japanese wooden puzzle.

Riders on subway trains — the scene of terror two months earlier in a nerve-gas attack — smiled with strangers and shared newspapers announcing the arrest of Shoko Asahara, head of the Aum Shinri Kyo sect, and 14 other cult members.

Asahara will be charged with directing the March 20 nerve gas attack, which killed 12 people and injured 5,500 on Tokyo's subways, police say.

The investigation culminated as it had begun eight weeks earlier — with hundreds of police in full riot gear sawing their way into the doomsday cult's headquarters near Mount Fuji at dawn.

Why did it take police eight weeks to bring in the obvious suspect — the leader of a secretive cult with a history of concocting dangerous chemical brews?

Particularly at first, police proceeded cautiously because of accusations by the cult of religious persecution.

But prosecutors also insisted that police wait to build an airtight case against Asahara before arresting him, that they arrest all cult members who might try to retaliate, and that they ensure that the cult possessed no more nerve gas, according to the Asahi Weekly magazine.

Day after day, as Japan's police repeatedly raided the cult's facilities throughout the country, some Japanese looked admiringly at the speed at which U.S. investigators arrested a suspect in last month's Oklahoma City bombing.

But despite some grumblings over the slow pace of the Japanese probe, authorities were praised Tuesday for having avoided a disaster like the U.S. authorities' raid in Waco, Texas two years ago that ended in the deaths of more than 85 members of the Branch Davidian cult.

"Police handled the investigation well," said Akira Itoda, professor of criminal law at Osaka International University. "By arresting members of the cult one by one, police avoided the possibility of suicides by the group. They also protected people from the threat of another nerve gas attack."

In Japan, police and prosecutors usually work to build a very strong case before bringing charges — a factor that helps explain the country's astonishing 99 percent conviction rate in cases that come to trial.

But in the process, police sometimes bend regulations and use methods that would not be legal in some other industrialized nations. Police in Japan, for example, can grill suspects for as long as 23 days without formal charges, and often do so without lawyers present.

In what might be considered a fishing expedition in the United States, Japanese police arrested more than 200 cult members on charges unrelated to the subway attack — some as trivial as riding an unregistered bicycle, trespassing, or building a greenhouse without city approval.

Police relied heavily on confessions extracted from those suspects — and last week one of them provided the breakthrough.

Masami Tsuchiya, a top cult scientist who had been arrested on suspicion of helping other members evade police, admitted that he had led a cult team that produced sarin, the nerve gas used in the subway attack.

Police, however, have done little to throw light on their investigation, Japan's biggest criminal probe ever.

Pope: Mankind fails to learn lessons of war

VATICAN CITY (AP) — In a somber message to world leaders, Pope John Paul II warned that a "culture of war" threatens the destruction of mankind because it has failed to learn the "bitter lessons" of World War II.

"Sadly, the end of the war did not lead to the disappearance of the policies and ideologies which were its cause," John Paul said in a message released Tuesday to mark the 50th anniversary of V-E day.

"Arms are still roaring and human blood continues to be shed" in Europe, where wars are being fought in the Balkans and the Caucasus, the pope said.

The document was in many ways an anguished re-visiting of World War II, which started when John Paul was 19 with the Nazi invasion of his native Poland in 1939.

The pope recalled his 1979 visit to the Auschwitz death camp in Poland, calling it a "horribly eloquent symbol of the effects of totalitarianism."

But despite such reminders, he said, mankind has failed "to draw from its bitter lesson the necessary conclusions for the whole continent of Europe."

Medical officials: Two families are distraught over demolition delay

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Families of two women whose bodies remain entombed in the bombed-out federal building are "extremely distraught" over efforts to delay the building's demolition, a medical official said Tuesday.

Bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh's attorney, Stephen Jones, filed a motion in U.S. District Court seeking a 30-day delay of the implosion so he can inspect the site and take pictures and measurements.

U.S. Magsistrate Ronald Howland did not immediately rule. He previously denied a defense motion for the preservation of all evidence in the case, which would have included all the building's rubble.

Officials hope they will be able to recover the bodies of Christy Rosas, 22, and Virginia Thompson, 56, once the building is imploded.

After speaking with family members, Ray Blakeney, chief of operations for the medical examiner's office, said the families understood the difficulty of removing the bodies, but found the possibility of a delay frustrating.

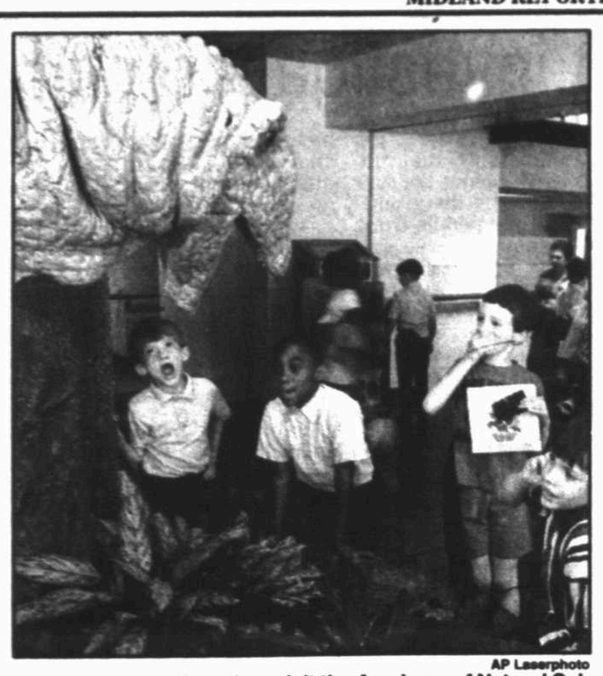

"I'd hate to see that thing sit there another 30 days," Blakeney said of the building.

Calls from The Associated Press to the Rosas and Thompson families rang unanswered.

Jones said the delay is important to his client's case.

"The government is undertaking to destroy not just certain physical evidence relating to the crime or certain physical evidence relating to the bomb site, but instead what is perhaps the single most important item of evidence in this case, the ... building itself," he said in court papers filed Tuesday.

Rosas and Thompson were employees of the federal credit union located on the third floor of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which was bombed April 19, killing 168 people.

Attorney general charges charity group with fraud

N.Y. Times News Service

The foundation, which sought money from universities and other nonprofit organizations with promises to double the money by matching it with funds from private philanthropists, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protections on Monday.

The Pennsylvania attorney general on Tuesday charged the Foundation for New Era Philanthropy with "serious instances of alleged fraudulent practices" and filed a lawsuit against them in Commonwealth Court.

The attorney general, Ernie Preate Jr., said that New Era and its president, John G. Bennett Jr., had defrauded charitable institutions, which they had promised to help, in violation of the the state's Charities Act, the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act and the nonprofit law.

The foundation, which sought money from universities and other nonprofit organizations with promises to double the money by matching it with funds from private philanthropists, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection on Monday. In the bankruptcy filing, New Era claimed estimated assets of $80 million and liabilities of $551 million. But lawyers for New Era had expressed uncertainty about the figures, citing the disorganized state of its records.

The attorney general's office said late Tuesday that it also planned to seek to freeze New Era's assets and to ask that they be put under the control of an outside trustee.

No criminal charges have been leveled against New Era, and the U.S. attorney's office in Philadelphia would not comment on whether it is examining the case. But Neal D. Colton, a lawyer for New Era, said that he had been informed that the U.S. attorney's office "has opened a file" on the case.

Judge Bruce Fox of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, where New Era sought protection, scheduled a hearing for Thursday to rule on the foundation's motion to keep the bankruptcy papers sealed until a more thorough review of its affairs can be carried out.

The judge will also hear a separate motion by Prudential Securities, where New Era has an account now valued at about $20 million, to permit it to turn over the funds to a disinterested third party, and to freeze the assets until a decision is made.

Renardo L. Hicks, director of public protection in the attorney general's office, called New Era "a classic Ponzi scheme." He added, "The deception was that many charities initially got their money up until now, which is the apparent point of financial collapse of this scheme."

"The right move."

Teen pleads guilty in slaying

18-year-old could receive life sentence for aunt's stabbing death

■ Testimony in punishment phase of Colby Ryan Goodman's trial to begin today.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

A Midland teen pleaded guilty Tuesday to murder in the stabbing death of his elderly aunt a year ago.

Colby Ryan Goodman, 18, pleaded guilty to the May 2, 1994, stabbing death of his 77-year-old aunt, Wanda Lucille Goodman.

Dressed in khaki pants and a blue button-down shirt, Goodman entered the plea at about 4 p.m. to 142nd District Court Judge George "Jody" Gilles following the seating of the jury panel. The panel will begin hearing testimony today in the punishment phase of the trial.

Goodman could be sentenced from five to 99 years, or life in prison, for the stabbing death of Ms. Goodman.

Goodman appeared calm as he entered the guilty plea; before entering the plea he stood tilting his head from side to side.

With the jury out of the courtroom, Gilles asked Goodman a series of questions to make sure he knew what he was doing and if he was pleading guilty because he actually committed the crime.

"Are you pleading guilty because you are guilty?"

"Yes sir."

"You're not pleading guilty for any other reason?"

"No sir."

Opening remarks in the punishment phase will begin this morning.

Ms. Goodman was found in a storage unit behind the house at 3515 Thomas Ave. that she shared with the defendant.

Police said Goodman was at the house when officers arrived after receiving a 911 call about 7: 18 p.m. Officials found the woman's body and determined that her throat had been slashed.

Reports indicate Goodman originally told police he had found his aunt's body and then notified other relatives who

Commissioners' Court to begin budget planning for fiscal '95-'96

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Budgeting is a trial of discretion, and the results, though planned, may fall on happenstance.

And that is what the five-member Midland County Commissioners' Court will be doing beginning mid-June: budgeting for the county's 1995-96 fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

Midland County Law Librarian Kim Duff is concerned that her projected operating revenues will not fund her $50,000-to-$60,000 budget.

But before the court puts a spin on the projected $18 million general-fund budget, it must analyze the department heads' wish list, trim the list, tally the projected outflow and balance that with the projected income from property taxes, fines and fees, sales tax and state and federal grants.

"This will be a very difficult year on the budget," said Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood.

"The county is currently operating on a $750,000 deficit budget," Norwood said. "And our tax reserves are at a dangerously low level — about $2 million."

Financial advisers recommend reserves of at least a fourth of the budget. It would amount to $4.5 million.

"And we simply don't have that. So, my goal is to have a balanced budget this year," he said.

"And I will not support a deficit budget. But that means we are going to have to make some very difficult decisions during the budget process. Every dollar counts."

Helping Norwood — the county's chief financial officer and the presiding officer of the Commissioners' Court — are commissioners Henry Goulet, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and James Brezina.

In drumming up operating funds, Nor-

Police probe disappearance of teen-ager, 35-year-old man

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Midland police are looking into the reported disappearance of a Midland teen-ager and a 35-year-old former youth minister, according to officials.

Sgt. David Garcia said police are trying to find 35-year-old Chuck Adair and 15-year-old Kristen Berryhill, who both disappeared Saturday.

He said police could not say if Ms. Berryhill went with Adair willingly or if Adair kidnapped the teen-ager.

"Right now, we are investigating the situation and trying to decide the legal avenues we have against this guy," he said.

Garcia said the Berryhill family came to police when their daughter disappeared. They said that Ms. Berryhill was with Adair, a former youth minister at the Golf Course Road Church of Christ.

"The family felt strongly that this girl was with Adair," Garcia said. "She knew Adair."

Police also are looking into allegations against Adair concerning sexual misconduct with other girls while he was a youth

Waiting to carry: Law would be good news for gun proponents

By Kevin O'Hanlon
Associated Press

PLANO — Any way you slice it, people such as Ken Taylor stand to gain if Gov. George W. Bush signs into law a measure allowing Texans to carry concealed guns.

Taylor owns the Bullet Trap, Inc., a Plano gun store and shooting range he calls a "gun pro shop." It's full of scores of handguns that people would be able to pack in purses or under coat jackets. The guns range from enormous, stainless steel Smith & Wesson ".44 Magnums" to .22-caliber revolvers easily palmed in the hand.

And even if they already own guns, people who want to carry would be required by law to take gun safety classes offered at places like the Bullet Trap.

"My guess is that we'll see a quarter of a million people apply for licenses in the first year in Texas," Taylor said.

Bush has said he will sign the bill, which was given final approval Tuesday by the House.

The training provision has Taylor's support.

"We try to talk people out of buying a gun unless they know how to use it," he said. "I tell them to buy a can of Mace."

Taylor now offers basic handgun safety classes weekly or biweekly, depending on demand. The classes cover basic gun safety and include a crash course on ammunition and how it works.

At TargetMaster, a shooting range and gun store in Garland, about 20 people a week have been paying $95 each to take a basic, six-hour gun safety course.

The new law will require 10 to 15 hours of training, said TargetMaster employee Ken Hunter.

"You're going to have to know something about guns before you even take it," Hunter said. "(The class) will probably get into the law, safety, threat assessment, shoot and no-shoot situations and conflict resolution tactics."

TargetMaster will charge $200 to $250 for the new classes, he said.

Hunter said interest in the new classes was intense even before the bill was passed.

"Every other phone call has been people asking when we're going to have concealed-carry classes," Hunter said. "It's going to be big time."

Once the bill becomes law in Texas, only Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma and Wisconsin will prohibit carrying weapons, according to Handgun Control Inc., a Washington-based anti-gun group.

Taylor said he hopes those states follow Texas' lead.

CARRY: Gun proponents wait for governor to make bill law

(From 1B)

"The law has nothing to do with bad guys. It has to do with licensing good guys," he said. "It's one of our rights to protect ourselves. It's an issue of the public being responsible. Give us the opportunity. If we violate the law, punish us — but don't punish us beforehand."

As Taylor looked over his indoor target range, he said it's doubtful that concealed guns will cause an increase in shootings, as some opponents contend.

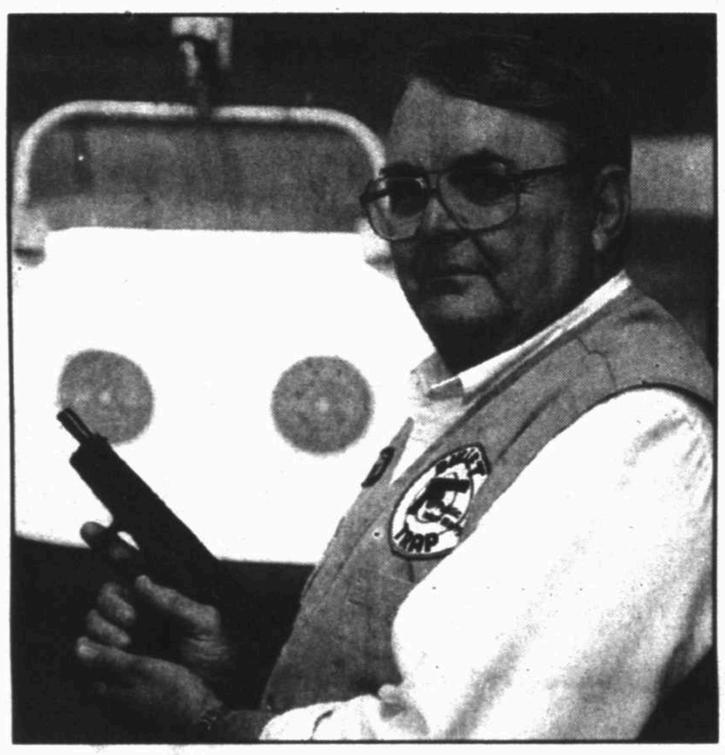

"They think we're going to have the gunfight at the O.K. Corral," Taylor said. "But they can't point to any of those states (already allowing people to carry guns) and say that's happened."

William Henderson of Dallas, who was shopping at Taylor's store, said he'll feel safer when Bush signs the bill.

"I think I'd just feel safer if I could carry a gun," he said. "Not all the time, just in certain situations — like when I get off work late at night."

Taylor said the law will curtail crime.

"Say you've got two houses and you give one owner a gun," he said. "Go down to the penitentiary and ask a burglar which house he'd break into."

Ken Taylor, owner of Bullet Trap, Inc., a Plano gun store and shooting range, poses with a Glock 17-L target pistol. Taylor predicts a quarter of a million people will apply for licenses to carry handguns in the first year if Gov. George W. Bush signs the concealed weapons bill into laws.

Education conference panel decides on vouchers

■ Committee co-chairman offers to take measure out of bill in return for easing of class-size restrictions for proposed home-rule school districts.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — A proposal to allow some Texas students to use public money to attend private school was left on the cutting room floor Tuesday as lawmakers negotiated an agreement on legislation to overhaul education.

Sen. Bill Ratliff, co-chairman of the House-Senate education conference committee, offered to take the Senate-backed voucher pilot proposal out of the bill in return for easing class-size restrictions for proposed home-rule school districts.

His "double-barrelled" compromise — approved 9-1 by the committee — would enforce class-size limits only to campuses with below-acceptable performance in home-rule districts. The 22:1 student-teacher ratio applies in kindergarten through fourth grade.

Home-rule districts, created with local voter approval, also would be free from many other state requirements. The House had wanted class size limits to apply to all home-rule campuses, and it had rejected a voucher program.

Ratliff's compromise was greeted with dismay by Sen. Jane Nelson, R-Flower Mound, a voucher supporter who wanted home-rule districts to be entirely free of class-size restrictions.

"I feel like I've been just shot with a double-barrelled shotgun," she told Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant.

The only member of the conference committee to vote against the compromise proposal, Mrs. Nelson noted that the voucher plan would target disadvantaged students.

The voucher pilot program is among ideas supported by Republican Gov. George W. Bush, who campaigned on shifting more control of education to the local level.

Supporters say the idea would improve public schools through competition and give a way out to students stuck in poor-quality schools.

But opponents say it's wrong to funnel money that's needed in the public school system to private entities — even if they agree to abide by some state requirements, as would have been required under the voucher proposal.

Opponents also call the voucher idea an untested and possibly unconstitutional one that could put students at risk and land the state in court. And they say other moves to revamp education make the program unnecessary.

Bush wouldn't say Tuesday whether he would veto the bill if specific items, such as vouchers, aren't included.

"This bill must empower local people, must encourage innovation, must have strict accountability, must have a concept of zero tolerance. I believe it will," Bush said.

"I may not have 100 percent of what I campaigned on in the bill ... but if it adheres to those principles, then I look upon it favorably. If not, we will have to deal with that at the appropriate time," he said.

The compromise education legislation, which is aimed at giving local communities and schools more control over how students are educated, is expected to get a final committee vote next week.

The measure then will go to the House and Senate. Both chambers' approval will send the measure to the governor for consideration.

The legislation contains provisions that Bush supports, such as the home-rule school districts.

But Ratliff said that ironically, provisions in the bill to free all school districts from numerous state rules — ranging from where they can buy their school buses to how many times a day the principal can make announcements on the public address system — will make it less attractive for them to choose home rule.

"The most important thing (in the legislation) is all of the minutiae that's not in there which the state's been meddling in," said Ratliff. "We have reduced the control on all school districts so much, the incentive to move to home rule is not as great.'

On other issues, negotiators agreed to increase the teacher contract from the current 183 days to 185 days next school year and about 187 the year after that. The extra days are to be used for teacher training and development.

The instructional year would remain at 180 days. Ratliff said many school districts now shorten that to 165 by getting waivers from the state to provide more days for teacher training.

The minimum teacher pay scale also would be increased. A beginning teacher would make at least $20,000, up from the current $17,000 minimum, in the 1996-97 school year. A teacher with 20 years of experience would get $35,590, up from $28,400, that year.

Richard Kouri of the Texas State Teachers Association said educators would be pleased to get their first increase in the minimum pay scale in six years. But he noted that the majority of teachers wouldn't get a state-paid raise because they already make more than the minimum, with local supplements.

It's estimated that 22,000 teachers and school librarians would get raises in the coming school year, and 70,000 in 1996-97. There are about 220,000 teachers.

"I guess this is some progress in the right direction," Kouri said. However, he added, "If local (school) boards don't do anything (to raise pay), most teachers will end up working additional days without additional compensation."

lived at the residence. A family member made the 911 call from another location, police said.

Police reports indicate the woman was stabbed between 6:30 p.m. and 7:18 p.m. while family members who lived at the residence had gone out to dinner.

Goodman was questioned for several hours and later admitted that he cut his aunt's throat with a small kitchen knife, police said.

In December, defense attorney H.W. "Woody" Leverett asked the judge not to allow the reported confession into evidence at the trial because Goodman believed he was under arrest, while he was not. Gilles ruled the confession could be entered as evidence at trial.

Goodman remains in the Midland County Detention Center in lieu of $50,000 bond.

BUDGET: Commissioners to review county's needs

wood said "the only thing that is off the table is a property-tax increase, as far as I am concerned. I will not support a property-tax increase.

"But everything else is on the table, and we have to look at ways to economize county government wherever possible. The fines and fees are determined by state law. So, we have very little option there. We need to cut spending where possible and find ways to manage what we have more efficiently."

The test is reconciling allocated money with the needs and demands of department heads; such as the sheriff, tax assessor-collector, constable, librarian, prosecutors, district and county clerks, district, county and county court-at-law judges, treasurer and auditor.

In some cases, projected operating funds may outstrip projected revenues. For instance, the Midland County Law Library, which primarily is financed by legislated $20 fees from civil filings in district and county courts, is projecting a shortfall in the upcoming fiscal year.

"I cannot support myself (the library) totally. I need help," said Kim Duff, a paralegal who is the law librarian.

While her budget is minute compared with the multi-million-dollar budgets for the public safety and the court system, the principle is the same: how to supply needed funds without raising taxes.

Ms. Duff, whose salary is $18,000 and whose budget ranges between $50,000 and $60,000, is concerned that the projected $42,000 in those $20 fees and $6,000 in photocopying revenues at 20 cents a copy will not fill the library's needs.

Her budget includes $39,000 in legal books and updates, called pocket parts. "They (books) are no good if you don't keep them up; you have to keep right after them."

By law, the Commissioners' Court is required to provide a law library, and the court administers funds to operate it. However, the county is "not liable for the costs" to operate the library. Fees are to fund the library.

"They do not think the public wants to put any ad-valorem tax money into the law library," Ms. Duff said.

Norwood said that "legally, we are required to provide the inmates in the jail access to a law library, and that is ordered by federal courts that inmates have a right to a law library."

"The public needs the library, the lawyers need it, the judges need it, and all the prosecutors in this courthouse need it," Ms. Duff said. "The public is No. 1; they don't have any place else to go. The (Midland County) Public Library has "very little law," and they do not have a legal assistant, paralegal, over there."

Norwood said that "increasing costs of maintaining those law books and with keeping them current with all the latest updates" will cause the law library to run up a $14,000 shortfall.

"And it's something that we are going to have to explore to see if there are other options on how to fund the law library ... and determine the best way to fund it" without raising taxes.

In the operation of the jail, the commissioners are studying the privatization of food service. "We have got three bidders on that," Norwood said.

"There are a lot of measures that we can look at to make county government more efficient and to control spending. And we need to look at every option available to downsize government because we cannot continue to increase property taxes," Norwood said. "That is unfair to the taxpayers, and it makes home-ownership more and more difficult for the people of Midland County."

House endorses Medicaid reform legislation

■ Under bill, state's system would move toward managed health care.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — The state's Medicaid system would be restructured to maximize federal dollars under a bill tentatively approved Tuesday by the Texas House.

The bill by Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, is similar to a Senate bill passed in March. The bill requires a final vote in the House before being sent to the Senate.

Under the measure, the state's Medicaid system would move toward managed health care. State and local health-care providers, who now separately offer services to Medicaid patients, could join together as a nonprofit corporation and operate a health-care system for a geographical area.

The system would allow state and local health-care providers to pool their resources and pull down more federal matching dollars, Berlanga said.

"We want to be able to give the state of Texas and the governor in particular all the options available to him to be able to adjust based on what Washington does with Medicaid," Berlanga said.

If the federal government decides to end the disproportionate share program, which gives more federal money to health-care providers who serve a large number of Medicare patients, the state could lose as much as $900 million, lawmakers say.

According to House research, the managed health-care system is expected to protect that funding as well as save the state $12 million in general revenue in the next biennium and $82 million in the 1998-99 biennium.

The bill would not require all health-care providers to join the nonprofit health-care organizations, but it would leave the door open to providers who wanted to join later.

Rep. Jack Harris, R-Pearland, tried to amend the bill to eliminate what he called the "cumbersome government structure" that would result from several health corporations that the state Health and Human Services Commission would have to oversee and review.

He and his supporters were concerned about estimates that the commission would have to add more than 350 new employees next year as a result of the bill.

His amendment, which would have divided the state into 11 managed health-care regions, was defeated.

One difference between Berlanga's bill and the Senate version concerns who could be included in the Medicaid managed health organizations.

Berlanga's bill allows all health-care providers — dentists, orthodontists, podiatrists and others specialists — access to the new managed care groups for at least three years. The Senate version allows access to primary care physicians only.

The driving forces behind the managed care system are cost containment and prevention, Berlanga said. A primary physician would be assigned to a patient, and that doctor would decide when a patient needed to see a specialist.

The idea is to cut down on expensive emergency room visits by Medicaid patients who now either have no where else to go for routine medical care or wait to seek help until a medical problem has become severe.

Man wins $13 million in all-terrain vehicle accident

EDINBURG (AP) — Honda will appeal a jury's award of $13.4 million to a Texan who was paralyzed from the waist down while driving a borrowed Honda all-terrain vehicle in Mexico, a company lawyer said Tuesday.

Alfredo Barrera, 21, of Roma, contended that an unstable design of the 1984 Honda ATC 200S caused him to lose control, plunge over an embankment and land on his back, severely damaging his spine when he was 17.

"Even if you take all the precautions, this vehicle will fail," Joe E. Garcia, one of the plaintiff's attorneys, said Tuesday.

But Austin attorney Richard T. McCarroll, who represented Honda, argued that Barrera caused the accident himself by driving too fast and carrying a passenger against the manufacturer's warnings.

The Hidalgo County jury ruled late Friday night that Honda should pay $8.4 million in actual damages and $5 million in punitive damages. Pre-judgment interest for the 1991 accident boosted the award to more than $15 million, attorneys said.

The company argued during the trial that its product was not defective.

McCarroll said the company will argue in appeals that Mexican law should have applied because the accident occurred in Mexico. Mexican product-liability law is more favorable to defendants than Texas law, he said.

The company also contends that the case had no connection to and should not have been tried in Hidalgo County, where juries have a reputation for imposing large verdicts against big companies.

Garcia said Barrera borrowed the three-wheeler during a weekend outing at a ranch across the Rio Grande from Roma.

"There was no alcohol involved. There was no horseplay, recklessness or carelessness," Garcia said.

Besides attacking the design of the three-wheeler, plaintiff's attorneys contended Honda was negligent in failing to educate potential users about the upper body motions necessary to make safe turns.

In April 1988, Honda and other three-wheeler manufacturers reached a consent decree with the Consumer Product Safety Commission stopping U.S. sales of the vehicles for 10 years or until the industry can develop voluntary performance and safety standards.

Plaintiff's attorney Randy Reeves contended that Honda was negligent for not recalling the three-wheelers it had sold before the decree. McCarroll said the decree never required a recall.

A passenger also was injured in the accident, although not as seriously. A sticker warning motorists not to allow passengers had peeled off the vehicle, Reeves said.

"They (the stickers) were not made to last the lifetime of the vehicle," Reeves said.

The State in brief

■ Committee agrees on juvenile crime bill

AUSTIN — House and Senate negotiators have agreed on an overhaul of the state's juvenile crimes laws that would include provisions for intervention as well as incarceration.

The conference committee still needs to formally approve the final report before the measure is sent back to the House and Senate for consideration, lawmakers said Tuesday.

Republican Gov. George W. Bush had made reform of the juvenile justice laws one of his key goals for the 1995 legislative session.

"This is a good bill," Bush said. "It reflects the will of the state of Texas to be tough-love toward our children."

According to a summary of the agreement provided by Rep. Toby Goodman, R-Arlington, negotiators OK'd a provision that would lower the age at which youths can be tried as adults.

Following the Senate's version of the bill, youths accused of capital or first-degree felony offenses could be tried as adults at the age of 14.

The conference committee plan also includes a provision saying that once juveniles are certified as adults, they remain certified for all subsequent offenses.

■ Authorities catch thief after escape

ABILENE — A convicted robber who fled a work party spent just over two hours at large Tuesday before he was caught north of Abilene, authorities said.

Ricardo Salinas, a 27-year-old prisoner at the Robertson Unit, was working in a squad on Jones County Road 476 when he disappeared about 2:45 p.m., said prison spokesman David Nunnelee.

"He just walked away from that squad unnoticed," Nunnelee said.

The work site was about 15 miles north of the Robertson Unit.

Salinas was caught two hours and 15 minutes later, said spokesman Larry Fitzgerald with the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Salinas had served 2 1/2 years of a 12-year prison term for theft and forgery from Hidalgo County.

■ Exxon gives $3 million to Texas schools

HOUSTON — The Exxon Education Foundation gave more than $3 million in unrestricted grants to 104 Texas colleges and universities on Tuesday through its matching gift program.

During a ceremony in Houston, the heads of seven colleges and universities accepted the grants, which came from the matching gift program and Exxon employee contributions.

The 40-year-old program has given more than $418 million to schools.

Awards were presented to: Rice University, $506,136; Texas A&M University, $472,871; University of Texas at Austin, $439,590; Lee College, $197,596; Baylor University, $164,249; University of Houston, $161,595; and Abilene Christian College, $112,350.

The seven received more than $2 million of the $3 million given to Texas institutions.

The program made grants totaling $12.6 million to 952 colleges and universities nationwide.

■ Police arrest murder suspect after robbery

SULPHUR SPRINGS — The suspect in the mutilation murder of a Sulphur Springs woman was captured Tuesday after allegedly robbing a post office and leading police on a 25-mile car chase.

William Earl Hill, 27, was arrested about five miles north of Saltillo after allegedly robbing the post office in Como at gunpoint about 8 a.m.

Authorities said he took $100 from the post office and $15 from a postal employee before leading officers on a chase through the back roads of Hopkins County, police said.

Hill is suspected of killing Lisa K. Little, 18. Her nude, mutilated body was found May 9 in the bathtub of the apartment she and Hill shared in Sulphur Springs, police say.

Hill was arraigned Tuesday on a first-degree murder charge. Bond was set at $1 million. Police were questioning him Tuesday.

Attorney wants to move trial in Selena's slaying

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The attorney for the woman accused of killing Tejano music queen Selena is looking for a place to move the murder trial outside of the singer's home town.

"Frankly, I am calling around to try and get some advice about where I might want it to be sent if we can get it sent somewhere where there's a better venue than Corpus Christi," said Doug Tinker, the court-appointed lawyer for Yolanda Saldivar.

Tinker has yet to file a motion for a change of venue. He did, however, file a motion Monday asking state District Judge Mike Westergren to lower his client's bond from $500,000 to $10,000.

"Yolanda Saldivar has made a genuine effort to post bond in the amount of $500,000, but has been unsuccessful in raising the money," the motion states. "The bail required of $500,000 is excessive."

Nueces County Assistant District Attorney Mark Skurka said prosecutors are opposed to a reduction in bond. A bond hearing was scheduled for Thursday.

Ms. Saldivar, a Selena Fan Club founder and former personal assistant, is charged with shooting the Grammy-winning singer on March 31 during a dispute over money.

In San Antonio, the Selena, Etc. boutique — once managed by Ms. Saldivar — was reopened Tuesday with 200 fans waiting outside the door. The store management let in small groups one at a time to avoid fire-code violations.

The store had been closed since the shooting, and fans covered it with flowers, pictures and graffiti to pay tribute to the slain icon. Last week the family ordered a whitewashing of the graffiti to prepare for the reopening.

Selena's family has been battling a thriving business of bootlegged Selena merchandise, including T-shirts with unauthorized pictures of the singer in her casket.

On the day of the shooting, Selena went alone to meet Ms. Saldivar at a budget motel with the intention of firing her, police say.

Police reports indicate that Ms. Saldivar admitted to shooting the 23-year-old singer once in the back.

Tinker filed a motion to block prosecutors from presenting Ms. Saldivar's statements to a jury when the case goes to trial, scheduled for October.

State House sends governor bill on telecommunications

AUSTIN (AP) — The state House on Tuesday sent Gov. George W. Bush a bill aimed at easing regulation of the state's telecommunications industry and opening competition in the local phone service market.

Bush said he was still reviewing the measure, which was given final House approval on a voice vote. The bill passed the Senate last week.

The bill has been criticized by consumer groups as a sweetheart deal for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. and GTE Southwest Inc., which currently have a monopoly on local phone service in Texas.

Rep. Curtis Seidlits, D-Sherman, who sponsored the bill, said the measure would provide a smooth transition from a highly regulated environment to a free market. He said Texans could expect to see lower local phone rates in the near future.

"It's going to bring about competition, which is going to bring down prices," he said.

The bill allows big long-distance companies to enter the local telephone service business if they build their own phone networks. They may buy access to the existing telephone network for up to 40 percent of the area they serve.

Those restrictions would be eliminated if Congress allows Southwestern Bell and GTE into the long-distance business, lawmakers said.

Long distance companies such as AT&T and MCI say requiring them to build their own networks would prohibit them from competing in the local phone service market. The companies waged an expensive television ad campaign in an effort to derail the bill.

Seidlits said the long-distance companies will compete, most likely by teaming up with cable television companies, which already have networks reaching most households.

"This market is too big for AT&T and MCI to look the other way," Seidlits said. "They will be a competitor one way or the other."

> 'It's going to bring about competition, which is going to bring down prices.'
> — Rep. Curtis Seidlits, D-Sherman

The measure would free local telephone companies from limits on their profits and loosen other regulations, while requiring them to cap basic local rates for four years.

Telecommunications companies would have to spend $1.5 billion over the next 10 years to improve the telecommunications network for schools and hospitals.

Treasury Department unveils Bentson's portrait

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lloyd Bentsen doesn't regularly walk the halls of the Treasury Department, but he now has a permanent presence there.

The nation's 69th treasury secretary, who stepped down last December, witnessed the unveiling of his official portrait Tuesday during a private ceremony that brought together friends and former colleagues.

Bentsen's successor, Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, lifted the veil on the oil painting, which hangs in the third-floor corridor outside the secretary's office.

Painted by Maryland artist Peter Egeli, the portrait depicts the ever-dapper Bentsen standing in front of his desk in a dark suit with conservative red striped tie.

"The last time I looked this good was our wedding picture," the 74-year-old said at the ceremony, according to quotes provided by the Treasury Department.

Bentsen, who now divides his time between homes in Houston, the Rio Grande Valley and California, told guests that "the Bentsens are doing well, enjoying being in charge of our own time."

The portraits of Bentsen's 68 predecessors are scattered throughout Treasury hallways with the nation's first treasury secretary — Alexander Hamilton — the only one boasting two paintings.

"One hundred years from now maybe somebody will walk the halls and say 'That Bentsen team made a difference,'" Bentsen mused.

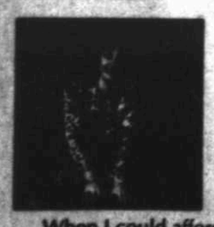

The paintings of the two Texans who preceded Bentsen at Treasury, John Connally and Jim Baker, hang down the hallway from Bentsen.

Bentsen posed for the portrait in 1994 during his 20-month Treasury tenure. He selected Egeli from among several artists who had submitted sketches.

Among the 30 or so guests at Tuesday's ceremony were Bentsen's wife, B.A.; Rubin and his wife, Judith; top Treasury brass and former Bentsen staffers.

Bentsen is now affiliated with a prestigious Washington law firm with offices in Houston and Austin. He served in the House for six years and the Senate for 22 before joining the Clinton administration in 1993. He was the Democrats' vice presidential nominee in 1988.

Lercy Owen, who runs Lercy's Diner in Winnie says he has not heard anything negative or positive about Rep. Steve Stockman, who has been embroiled in controversy about comments made recently about government agencies role in the Waco raid.

Dems rush to denounce congressman's comments on Waco raid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Democratic caucus chairman is calling on House Speaker Newt Gingrich to renounce comments by a Republican congressman who accused the government of initiating the Waco raid to drum up support for gun control.

The June issue of "Guns & Ammo" includes an article by Rep. Steve Stockman in which the Friendswood Republican writes that the government "executed" the Branch Davidians who died in the 1993 confrontation with federal agents.

Democrats rushed to denounce the Stockman article, with a White House spokeswoman calling his allegations "outrageous and absurd."

In the latest partisan criticism of Stockman, Democratic caucus chairman Vic Fazio of California wrote Gingrich on Tuesday to urge the speaker to renounce Stockman's "extremist, uncivil and inflammatory" comments.

"In his article, he brings disrepute upon the Congress as a whole by acting as an agent of extremism," Fazio wrote. "His comments are so beyond reason that you should feel compelled, as speaker, to break this unusual silence you are maintaining about a member of your conference."

Gingrich spokesman Tony Blankley said he hadn't seen Fazio's letter. But he questioned whether Fazio was as quick to condemn recent comments by Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas.

Frost, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, accused Gingrich in a March fund-raising letter of promoting "terrorist" policies. The DCCC, which Fazio once chaired, later acknowledged the letter was inappropriate.

"Has Mr. Fazio sent a letter to the DCCC yet condemning them?" Blankley asked. "If he hasn't done that, I assume he is just being partisan right now."

Stockman, one of Congress' staunchest gun-rights supporters, has kept a relatively low profile since the "Guns & Ammo" article drew widespread media attention last week. His press secretary, Kevin Bishop, didn't immediately return a telephone call Tuesday about the Fazio letter.

Stockman canceled a scheduled appearance Sunday on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley," where gun control was discussed.

On Friday, Stockman issued a news release attacking the "liberal press" for pouncing on him while ignoring comments by Democrats critical of federal law enforcement.

Specifically, Stockman cited comments by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., who referred to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in February as "jackbooted American fascists."

Dingell, whose comments were widely publicized and criticized, never suggested that the Clinton administration encouraged the Waco raid to aid passage of gun-control laws.

Legislature targets retirement loophole

EL PASO (AP) — The Legislature has moved to close the legal loophole that allowed a judge to retire for one day so he could collect his retirement pay on top of his $92,000 annual salary.

A bill tentatively passed Monday in the Texas House of Representatives rewrites the retirement law to prevent judges from double dipping. The measure is expected to go to the Senate by Wednesday.

"It will effectively eliminate the loophole that allows Judge (Sam) Paxson to take advantage of the system," said Rep. Pete Gallego, D-Alpine.

The Legislature began reviewing the state's judicial retirement law after reports surfaced in April that Paxson, of El Paso's 210th District Court, was receiving annual retirement benefits of $27,600 in addition to his salary.

The 60-year-old judge, who was re-elected in November, retired Dec. 31, allowing him to begin collecting his retirement annuity, then returned to the bench a day later at full salary.

Paxson has declined to comment on his situation, besides saying he has done nothing illegal.

State officials have generally agreed that Paxson's double dipping was not specifically prohibited by law. The judge has still received criticism, however, for what has been termed a "regrettable" decision.

"He did nothing wrong," said Rep. Pat Haggerty, R-El Paso. "It was totally legal, and now we closed the loophole."

Legislators also plan to attach a rider to the new appropriations bill that specifically reduces Paxson's pay by the amount of his retirement supplement.

That provision would apply only if legislation closing the loophole fails to become law.

The rider would apply only to the upcoming two-year budget, while the separate legislation continues as state law unless future lawmakers change it.

Blood on glove matches victim's, DNA expert says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A glove found on O.J. Simpson's estate contained blood matching Ronald Goldman's and appeared to have that of Nicole Brown Simpson, a DNA expert testified Tuesday. The testimony was the first to place both murder victims' DNA on Simpson's property.

Gary Sims, a California Department of Justice scientist, also reinforced testimony from another DNA expert that Ms. Simpson's blood was consistent with blood on one of the socks at the foot of her ex-husband's bed.

Sims said the pair of socks was splattered with microscopic blood drops, bolstering the state's claim that Simpson wore them while committing the murders June 12.

A blown-up photo of the black glove, which is the centerpiece of the prosecution and defense cases, was displayed on a large video screen as Sims told jurors how it arrived at his laboratory packaged inside-out, exposing a fabric lining stained with blood.

At one spot inside the glove's index finger, he said, the blood of Goldman and Ms. Simpson appeared to be mixed.

"Those two combined stains could produce the stain, G-1," Sims said in the same flat, scientific lexicon with which he delivered all of his findings. Another spot, on the interior ring finger, matched Goldman's blood.

Sims didn't say what percentage of the population shared the genetic makeup of Goldman's blood or of the mixture. However, with this type of sophisticated testing — called RFLP — odds are high against anyone else having the same genetic makeup.

Sims' testimony about the RFLP tests involved only one blood stain on one sock and two spots on the glove. So far, he excluded Simpson as a possible source of the blood. However, prosecutors have said Simpson's blood was found on both items, and jurors have heard that his blood type was matched to blood drops in his foyer and driveway.

The right-handed glove was found behind a guest house at Simpson's estate. His lawyers have argued it was planted there by a racist detective. The left-handed mate was found near the victims' slashed bodies outside Ms. Simpson's condominium.

Defense lawyers say Simpson is an innocent victim of overzealous detectives and sloppy technicians whose combined acts set him up as a murderer.

In testifying about the socks, Sims told jurors that when he examined them under a microscope, he found about 10 blood splatters on one and about 19 on the other.

He suggested blood specks were on areas of the socks where the blood could have splashed up from the ground. His testimony was designed to cast doubt on a defense claim that blood was planted by police.

Sims, whose lab looked at the socks after the Los Angeles Police Department analyzed them, also said he saw no evidence of blood passing through one side of the sock to the other, as it might if blood were placed on it while the sock was lying flat.

The socks are the only items of bloody clothing found inside Simpson's home, and his lawyers claim they were planted.

Sims said the socks arrived at his lab on Sept. 26 and were subjected to repeated review and tests, but the small stains did not become apparent until Oct. 25.

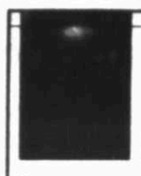

Jurors saw photographs of the socks blown up on a courtroom screen with pieces missing from one sock where it was cut for analysis.

Sims, under questioning by Deputy District Attorney Rockne Harmon, stepped down from the witness stand and showed jurors on his own feet where stains would have been located.

"Those stains would either be both on the outside (of the foot) or both on the inside," he said, depending on how the socks were put on.

Jurors in the back row of the jury box were allowed to stand and peer at Sims' feet during the demonstration.

The prosecution's first DNA expert, Robin Cotton of Cellmark Diagnostics, also testified that blood on one of the socks was consistent with Ms. Simpson's.

Simpson trial update

Tuesday, May 16, 1995

- Gary Sims, a scientist with the California Department of Justice, said Nicole Brown Simpson's DNA was found in bloody socks in O.J. Simpson's bedroom the day after the murders. Sims said he found about 10 blood spots on one sock and 19 on the other.
- Sims also testified that Ronald Goldman's blood matches blood found on the interior ring finger of the glove found at O.J. Simpson's estate.
- Judge Lance Ito said scientist Robin Cotton did not have to provide statistics of genetic matches to accompany her testimony that a blood stain on the steering wheel of Simpson's Bronco came from more than one person.

Officials investigate shipment of bubonic plague bacteria

■ Investigators seek to learn what man who claims to be white supremacist planned to do with bacteria he received in the mail.

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A man who said he was a white supremacist was arrested for allegedly obtaining bubonic plague bacteria through the mail, and investigators say they are trying to learn what he planned to do with it.

Larry W. Harris had "rather radical views" and told colleagues at a food testing lab he was a white supremacist and sympathetic to the militia movement, Superior Labs spokesman Brad Starrett said Tuesday.

"He's very open about it," Starrett said.

The company fired Harris Monday because he used lab equipment and certification without permission to obtain the bacteria, Starrett said. Harris was a well and tank inspector at the suburban Dublin lab.

He was charged with buying $300 worth of yersinia pestis, the bacteria that causes bubonic plague. Police say he bought the vials through the mail by falsely claiming he owned a laboratory.

Officers searching Harris' Lancaster home after his arrest Friday said they spotted an Aryan Nation document hanging on a wall. They also found hand grenade triggers, homemade explosive devices and detonating fuses.

Starrett said Harris told him he was a member of white separatist groups, including the National Alliance.

Police confiscated the freeze-dried bacteria — which is harmless in that form — before it could be reconstituted. The bacteria can be reconstituted by using a combination of heat and water.

Harris, 43, pleaded innocent to receiving stolen property, which carries a maximum penalty of 18 months in jail and a $2,500 fine.

He has an unlisted phone number and could not be reached for comment Tuesday. His lawyers declined to comment.

Bubonic plague killed one-fourth of the European population in the Middle Ages. Although fatal if undetected, it now is treatable by antibiotics, said Ohio public health spokesman Randy Hertzer.

"The immediate public threat was probably minimal," he said. "The long range, who knows? That's why we wanted to get it back."

Authorities were alerted by a suspicious telephone operator at American Type Culture Collection in Rockville, Md., which sold Harris the vials.

Harris ordered the bacteria be sent by Federal Express from the biomedical company.

The company's vice president, Frank Simione, said different requirements exist for sending different cultures. Simione said Harris represented himself as a microbiologist who was qualificatied to receive the bacteria.

Starrett said Harris was certified only to test drinking water for bacteria.

New find might be tomb of Ramses II's sons

N.Y. Times News Service

Ramses II, one of ancient Egypt's greatest pharaohs, is said to have fathered more than 100 children, including 52 sons. Archeologists have now discovered an enormous mausoleum with at least 67 chambers, the largest tomb ever explored in the Valley of the Kings, and they think this was the resting place for most of those royal sons.

Working their way through a narrow entrance in the limestone hillside, archeologists were astonished to find a central hall with 16 pillars, a passageway to a statue of the god Osiris, and other corridors leading away to many separate chambers. In the dim light they could glimpse wall decorations and alabaster fragments carrying inscriptions with the names of four sons of Ramses, and sarcophagus pieces, mummy fragments, and statuary strongly suggesting that the tomb was used for their burials.

The sons never attained the power of their father, whose reign lasted 66 years, and their elaborate burial place is not likely to yield treasures similar to those in the tomb of Tutankhamen, the young King Tut. But the newly explored tomb, archeologists said, promised invaluable insights into Egypt's royal family at a crucial period in ancient history.

The discovery was described on Monday by Dr. Kent R. Weeks, a professor of Egyptology at the American University in Cairo who directs a project to map the monuments at the ancient Egyptian capital of Thebes, 300 miles south of Cairo. The tomb is part of the necropolis, known as the Valley of the Kings, where monarchs and nobles were buried from 1600 B.C. to 1000 B.C. The site is on the west side of the Nile, across from the ruins of Karnak and Luxor.

"It's like no other tomb I know of anywhere in Egypt," Weeks said in a telephone interview.

Most ancient Egyptian tombs consist of only a few chambers, and these are small and laid out along a single axis. Tomb 5, as the new find is designated, not only has at least 67 chambers arrayed in a complex plan, but stairs and sloping corridors — yet to be explored — apparently lead to even more rooms on a lower level. These lower rooms may be the actual burial chambers, Weeks said, and the total number of chambers could be more than 100.

Dr. Peter Dorman, an archeologist from the University of Chicago who works across the river at Luxor and has visited the site, praised the discovery as "a very significant find, very impressive and certain to give us a much clearer picture of the family of Ramses II." He also noted that the tomb's architecture was "completely unlike any other tomb" in Egypt.

Dr. David O'Connor, an Egyptologist at the University of Pennsylvania's University Museum, said the grandeur of the tomb complex "seems to say something important about the status of royal princes during the Ramses reign." Princes usually rated much more modest burial places.

Weeks wondered if there could be other multiple burials for the families of other pharaohs that have gone undetected.

"Tomb 5 raises many questions about what else the Valley of the Kings and other areas at Thebes may have to offer," Weeks said in a statement issued by the American University of Cairo. "It is an entirely new type of New Kingdom burial structure."

Egypt and a large part of the known world in the 13th century B.C. were dominated by the long reign of Ramses II. He was one of the most powerful rulers in antiquity and a prolific builder of monumental architecture. His empire extended from Libya east to the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, from Turkey south to Sudan. His charioteers fought many battles against the Hittites, arch-enemies in what is now Turkey and Syria. Tradition has it that Ramses was pharaoh at the time of the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt.

According to the Book of Exodus, the first son of the pharaoh was killed by God. In Chapter 11, Verse 5, it says: "And all the firstborn in the land of Egypt shall die, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the firstborn of the maidservant." The eldest son of Ramses II was named Amon-her-khepeshef. He is one of the sons whose names are inscribed on the walls of Tomb 5.

The tomb occupies a prominent place in the necropolis, 100 feet from the tomb of Ramses II himself and not far from King Tut's. In fact, when the English archeologist Howard Carter excavated Tut's tomb, he unknowingly piled dirt and debris over Tomb 5's entrance, further obscuring it.

That entrance was discovered once in 1820 by an English traveler, but he explored no farther than the three outermost chambers, which were unprepossessing and damaged by floodwaters. In the 1980s, Weeks and other archeologists rediscovered the hidden entrance by studying the diaries of 19th century travelers. They also followed the lead of an ancient papyrus now in a museum in Turin, Italy. It described the trial of a thief in 1150 B.C. who was caught trying to rob the tomb of Ramses II and also one "across the path," presumably the one now called Tomb 5.

Cutting test trenches on the slopes near the Ramses tomb, they uncovered the narrow entrance and did some preliminary investigation. But debris washed in by floods hampered exploration. Only in February was Weeks and his team able to remove debris blocking the door leading off the grand hall with 16 pillars.

Once through the door, they found less water damage and one surprise after another. They followed the passageway leading past 20 doors of smaller chambers and ending at the statue of Osiris, god of the underworld. Two branching corridors each had 20 doors to other rooms. The smallest rooms were about 10 by 10 feet; the largest was 60 by 60 feet.

This was when Weeks realized he had entered, as he said, "the largest tomb in the Valley of the Kings and maybe the largest ever found in all Egypt." It was certainly more complex and extensive than the standard royal tombs, which are simple structures with a single corridor leading to a main burial chamber.

In an interview with the Reuters news agency in Cairo, Abdelhalim Nourredin, head of Egypt's Supreme Council for Antiquities, described the structure and the many chambers as magnificent, even if some of the rooms were badly damaged by water.

Chinese intellectuals call on Beijing to lift Tiananmen verdict

BEIJING 9NYT) — One of China's premier nuclear physicists, a designer of the country's first atomic bomb, joined 44 other scientists and intellectuals on Monday in calling on China's leaders to lift the "counterrevolutionary" verdict from those who took part in the 1989 prodemocracy movement at Tiananmen Square.

Wang Ganchang, who is now 88, led the elite group of Chinese physicists who developed and tested the explosive assembly and triggering system for the fission bomb that was exploded on Oct. 14, 1964. Since then, he has continued to play an influential role in China's scientific institutions and as a senior adviser to the government.

His official biography says he was "one of the leading scientists responsible for the development of China's nuclear weapons."

Wang has added his name to those calling on the Communist Party to "release all those who have been imprisoned because of their thoughts, religious beliefs, or acts of speech, and boldly end the ignominious tradition of literary inquisitions that has persisted in our country since ancient times."

The petition was signed by the largest and most prominent group of Chinese intellectuals since the pro-democracy appeals of 1989, when open political dissent led to the climactic confrontation in which troops fired on unarmed students, workers, and bystanders the night of June 3-4, killing hundreds.

In a letter addressed to President Jiang Zemin and Qiao Shi, chairman of China's leading parliamentary body, the National People's Congress, the intellectuals called on the government to treat all "political thought and religious belief with the spirit of tolerance and never again regard individuals of independent thought and independent views as 'hostile elements' and submit them to repressive attacks, surveillance, house arrest, and even detention."

A cover letter identifies Xu Liangying, 75, as the drafter. Xu is a translator of Einstein's collected works into Chinese. He said the draft of his appeal "received the support" of many of his colleagues at the Chinese Academy of Sciences, including that "of my respected teacher," Wang, who served as a representative of China's scientists in the People's Congress during the 1980s.

In a telephone interview, Xu said separate letters to Jiang and Qiao were mailed on Monday. Xu said party officials had apparently become aware of preparations to issue the document as it was circulating for signatures. Xu said he received a summons on Friday from the Communist Party secretary of his research institute. "He asked me not to engage in any activities, and not do to anything that will affect social stability," Xu said. "I told him what we're doing is good for social stability."

A year ago, Xu was briefly placed under house arrest and later close surveillance after he and a half-dozen intellectuals publicly called on the government to end its harassment of dissidents, including Wei Jingsheng, China's best-known political prisoner, who disappeared on April 1, 1994, and is being held without charge at an unknown location.

Rafsanjani says aborted U.S. oil deal a big error

TEHRAN, Iran (NYT) — President Hashemi Rafsanjani of Iran tried to appeal directly to the American people on Monday, asserting that the United States missed a chance to improve relations when it forced the cancellation in March of a $1 billion deal that Tehran had made with an American oil company, and urging Washington to lift its recent trade embargo against his country.

But the Iranian leader also exhibited his long-held antipathy to the United States. In a 75-minute interview with ABC News, he said that the Clinton administration owed Iran "a thousand apologies" for what he called efforts to weaken the 16-year-old revolutionary government with "lies" and "bullying." He repeatedly asserted that Washington owes Iran billions of dollars from the time of the shah.

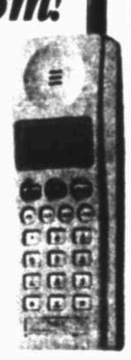

Rafsanjani, who has virtually no contact with Americans and seldom grants interviews to American news organizations, was unable to hide his curiosity about American policy. He more than once asked Peter Jennings, the ABC anchor who interviewed him, whether the Clinton administration's characterization of his country as an outlaw state spreading global terror and desperately seeking nuclear weapons was justified.

"We invited an American firm and entered into a deal for $1 billion," Rafsanjani said of the agreement with a Dutch subsidiary of Conoco, the Houston-based oil company, to develop two off-shore oil fields. "This was a message to the United States, which was not correctly understood. We had a lot of difficulty in this country by inviting an American company to come here with such a project because of public opinion."

The Conoco deal would have represented the first major American investment in Iran since the 1979 revolution and therefore would have sent an important signal to other investors at a time of huge inflation.

Gingrich predicts house passage of GOP balanced-budget package

WASHINGTON (AP) — A confident House Speaker Newt Gingrich on Tuesday forecast passage for the GOP balanced-budget plan, despite a suggestion from President Clinton that Republicans were headed "off the deep end" by cutting taxes for the wealthy while seeking huge savings from Medicare.

With a showdown set for Thursday, conservative Democrats produced an alternative to the GOP plan that also would wipe out deficits by 2002, but shun the tax cuts Republicans want. It would use the money to soften the blow against Medicare, agriculture and other domestic programs.

"Rather than starting with tax cuts, let's cut spending first," said Rep. Bill Orton, D-Utah.

The budget vote approached as House and Senate negotiators agreed Tuesday on separate legislation to slice $16.4 billion from previously approved spending. Public housing, job training programs, airport improvements and federal construction would be among the hardest hit by the cutbacks, which drew a veiled veto threat from the White House.

On the pending House budget bill, which sets guidelines for spending for future years, there seemed to be no doubt Republicans would have the votes Thursday to send their measure to the Senate.

The GOP has a 231-203 majority in the House, with one independent. Gingrich, asked whether the far-reaching measure would pass, replied with one word — "Yes" — and predicted that five to 10 Democrats would climb on board when the final roll was called.

The GOP plan relies on more than $400 billion in savings from Medicare and Medicaid, health programs for the elderly and the poor, to help erase deficits over seven years. It also envisions wiping out three Cabinet departments and erasing hundreds of federal programs.

Republicans have made it the cornerstone of their effort to shrink government. Several members of the leadership said Tuesday that lawmakers have expressed surprisingly little reluctance to going along with the contemplated changes in Medicare — savings of about $280 billion over seven years.

Instead, the leadership worked to ease a variety of other concerns, including those of farm-state Republicans who are being asked to approve cuts in planned spending of $9 billion over five years.

Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said language had been drafted to assure these lawmakers that Republicans would grant farmers regulatory relief while cutting the farm programs. "If the farmer relies less on federal dollars and government protection, the other side of that equation is he should also experience regulatory relief, tax policy reform and aggressive and consistent export policy," he said.

For their part, Democratic leaders met at the White House with Clinton to discuss their strategy.

"My concern is I don't want to see us just jump off the deep end of Medicare cuts without understanding what the implications are to pay for huge tax cuts, which we plainly can't afford and which mostly go to upper-income people," the president said. Despite the criticism, it was a relatively mild rendering of the standard Democratic attack that Republicans want to cut Medicare to finance tax breaks for the rich.

Republicans counter that Medicare is headed toward insolvency, and say reforms are needed if it is to survive.

Grocers abandon inner cities, poor suffer, study says

By Jennifer Dixon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Many low-income Americans pay more for groceries and have fewer choices among healthful foods because large supermarkets have fled their inner-city neighborhoods, according to a study Tuesday.

Researchers with the University of Connecticut and Public Voice for Food and Health Policy, a liberal Washington advocacy group, used federal demographic information and a census of supermarkets in 21 of the country's largest metropolitan areas to document a "grocery store gap."

According to Public Voice, the flight of supermarkets from the inner city has forced many poor families to shop at small groceries and convenience stores where they pay higher prices for a less nutritious food selection.

This increases family food bills, contributes to malnourishment and reduces the purchasing power of federal food assistance dollars, Public Voice said.

"This research confirms what most of us have long suspected — that there is an unacceptable grocery store gap in America," said Ronald W. Cotterill, director of the Food Marketing Policy Center at the University of Connecticut.

An industry spokeswoman said grocery companies are working to move stores into underserved neighborhoods in numerous big cities but have encountered difficulties.

"It is much more complicated in an underserved area — zoning restrictions, transportation issues, all kinds of license fees. Just to get the land parcels together is an issue," said Karen Brown, senior vice president for the Food Marketing Institute, a trade association representing supermarket companies, including large chains.

According to Tuesday's study, many supermarket chains left inner-city neighborhoods over the past 35 years for more "lucrative investment opportunities and a more secure business climate in the suburbs."

Cleveland is a major exception, the study said. That city has more and larger supermarkets in low-income neighborhoods than high-income ones. The study does not examine why stores left, but focuses on the number and size of grocery stores in low-income ZIP codes and neighborhoods with high percentages of households receiving public assistance. The study sampled nearly 6,000 supermarkets in more than 3,500 ZIP codes in 21 major metropolitan areas.

The number of supermarkets per 10,000 residents was 30 percent lower in the lowest-income ZIP codes than in the highest-income ZIP codes, Public Voice found.

Families in the poorest neighborhoods are also less likely to own cars than those in affluent areas, the study said. This means that unless extensive public transportation is available, families may not be able to leave their neighborhoods to shop for bargains at larger stores.

The 21 metro areas covered in the study are: Atlanta; Boston; Bridgeport; Conn.; Chicago; Cleveland; Dayton, Ohio; Detroit; Hartford, Conn.; Houston; Los Angeles; Memphis; Minneapolis; New Haven, Conn.; New Orleans; New York; Oakland, Calif.; Philadelphia; St. Louis; San Antonio; Washington, D.C., and Wichita, Kan.

Brown of the industry group said grocery companies are trying to move into underserved areas of Houston, Dallas, Newark, N.J., Detroit, Cleveland, Hartford, Conn., Miami and south Florida, and the Harlem area of New York City.

MAJORITY TO MINORITY TRANSFER

The majority-to-minority pupil transfer policy provision is an important part of the desegregation plan of Midland elementary schools. This transfer policy allows eligible young children to attend the same school as older brothers and sisters in grades 4,5, and 6. The majority-to-minority transfer policy states:

A primary-level pupil (grades 1,2, or 3) may transfer from a school in which the pupil's race or ethnic background is the majority to another school in the assigned elementary school cluster, serving the residence, in which the pupil's race is the minority. Transportation is provided by regularly scheduled bus routes which transport intermediate level pupils (grades 4, 5, and 6) within the elementary cluster.

Pupils in grades 1,2, and 3 may transfer to another school in the elementary cluster when their race or ethnic background is a majority in the home school. Also, the race or ethnic background must be in a minority in the receiving school. Transportation is provided by regularly scheduled bus routes within the elementary cluster. You may receive more information by contacting the principal of any elementary school or Jimmie Kelly at the Office of Compliance at 689-1098.

Gasoline futures prices surged to three-year highs Tuesday after an oil company reported another refinery shutdown just before the start of the busy summer driving season.

Marathon Oil said it shut down nearly half its 70,000-barrel-per-day Texas City, Texas, refinery because of an unknown mechanical problem. The company said there had been a small release of pollutants and did not know when the gas component unit would be restarted.

Gasoline futures for June delivery settled 1.40 cents higher at 66.30 a gallon, the highest near-term contract price since June of 1992.

West Texas Intermediate for June delivery settled 18 cents higher at $20.08 a barrel; June natural gas closed down 1.3 cents at $1.717 per 1,000 cubic feet on profit-taking.

Phone deal

NEW YORK — AT&T Corp., the nation's biggest long-distance telephone company, is reportedly talking with Time Warner Inc.'s cable television unit about a phone service alliance.

Time Warner, the nation's second-biggest cable TV system operator, is said to be interested in getting the advantage of AT&T's brand name as it begins offering local phone service to the first of its 9 million cable subscribers.

Stocks mixed

NEW YORK — Stocks settled for a mixed showing Tuesday, as marginally weaker blue chips snapped a six-day winning streak while broader market gauges gained enough to provide Wall Street with several more records.

Sliding interest rates, amid widening confidence that the economy is slowing but not lapsing into recession, supported stocks.

The Dow Jones industrial average bobbed around neutral throughout the session. At the finish, it was lower by a modest 2.42 points to 4,435.05, marking the first session since May 5 that the popular indicator hasn't established a new high.

The NYSE composite index climbed 0.26 beyond the record reached Monday to 284.27. Standard & Poor's 500 stock index rose 0.45 above Monday's high to 528.19.

Gainers beat losers by better than a 3-to-2 margin on the Big Board where volume swelled to 366.15 million shares.

The Nasdaq Stock Market achieved a record as its composite index advanced 5.19 higher than Monday's old mark and hit 868.25.

Midland firms in upbeat frame of mind

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland businesses continue to operate in an increasingly optimistic frame of mind, according to a recent survey of local business owners.

According to the biannual Midland Business & Economic Pulse survey — conducted by Midland College for Norwest Bank — 65 percent of the 376 respondents believe business conditions for their own companies will be better or much better over the next six months, while 48 percent felt the same about their industry.

In addition, 71 percent of those responding to the eight-question survey believed business conditions would be better or much better in the city, and 69 percent felt the same about the state.

Respondents were less optimistic about conditions nationwide, with only 37 percent predicting improved conditions, while 45 percent expected no change over the next six months.

A majority of respondents — 51 percent — expect to see improved profits. The majority, however, will not change capital spending and investment plans — 66 percent — or the number of employees — 78 percent.

"This is just fantastic news," said Wayne Merritt, president of Norwest Bank in Midland.

He said that optimism by independent businesses in Midland translates into increased spending and hiring "and that's what drives the economy."

Merritt said the source of the optimism is the attitude of the local consumer: businesses are doing well because consumers are spending money.

"The customers are feeling confident about their employment and about their economic future."

And as customers spend more, businesses invest more and continue fueling the economy, he said.

He recalled that the first Pulse survey found a high level of confidence among businesses, and, while met with some skepticism, that finding has been borne out by follow-up surveys.

"The first survey was pretty much in line with what was starting to happen on Loop 250, and the last few surveys have confirmed what the original survey found," Merritt said.

While the current retail boom is the first he can recall that didn't have its roots in an energy boom, Merritt said that a number of the survey's respondents are in the energy business.

File photo

Optimism by Midland businesses has its roots in development along Loop 250, where restaurants such as Outback Steakhouse and retailers have built or are building stores.

"We're seeing independent energy businesses doing well. They've adjusted, done their downsizing and now they're feeling optimistic."

End of an era

General Motors Corp. announced Tuesday that it would end production of its largest cars, such as the 1995 Cadillac Fleetwood, top, and the 1995 Buick Roadmaster, and Chevrolet models, produced at its Arlington, Texas plant after the 1996 model and begin making trucks at the plant beginning with the 1997 model. The announcement means the world's biggest car company won't be making the big rear-wheel-drive cars that were once the foundation of the U.S. auto industry.

Signs point to slow economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — More signs of economic sluggishness emerged Tuesday — the fourth straight decline in single-family home building and the lowest industrial output in nine months.

Analysts attributed the lackluster performance in both key economic sectors to high interest rates that had produced a glut of unsold cars and houses. But they noted that rates have fallen recently and said both sectors apparently are stabilizing.

The Federal Reserve has sought a slower economy for more than a year as it engineered seven short-term interest rate hikes to dampen any inflationary explosion.

Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan emphasized again Tuesday that stable prices are necessary for consumers to feel confident enough to make long-term investments such as cars and homes.

"They need to feel comfortable that they will have the income to make their monthly mortgage payments," he told the National Association of Realtors.

Although the Commerce Department reported Tuesday that construction of new single-family homes and apartments rose 0.4 percent in April, the advance was due to a 2.4 percent increase in multi-family housing. Single-family homes — 80 percent of starts — slipped 0.1 percent, the fourth straight decline.

Overall, housing starts totaled 1.24 million at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, up from 1.23 million in March, which had been the lowest since 1.07 million in March 1993.

In a separate report Tuesday, the Fed said production at the nation's factories, mines and utilities fell 0.4 percent in April, marking the first back-to-back declines since December 1991 and January 1992. Output had fallen 0.3 percent in March.

Factory output dropped 0.5 percent, including a 0.4 percent fall in auto production.

NBC, Microsoft form software, information delivery alliance

By Evan Ramstad
AP Writer

NEW YORK — NBC and Microsoft Corp. will work together on a variety of software and information delivery products for personal computers and eventually two-way TV, the companies said Tuesday.

The alliance at the outset gives Microsoft a badly-needed boost for the online service it plans to launch this summer.

Until now, Microsoft had not lined up a major information provider for its service, to be called The Microsoft Network and be distributed with its Windows 95 operating software for personal computers in August.

NBC will abandon its current on-line venture on America Online after Sept. 30. Its CNBC and America's Talking cable networks will leave Prodigy later this year, a network spokesman said. In return, the company is getting special pricing arrangement from Microsoft.

Gates

Wright

The companies provided no other financial details on their alliance. However, in most areas, both companies are still free to work with rivals of the other.

The deal marks the second time a major network has aligned itself with a software company. In December, Capital Cities-ABC announced a joint venture with Electronic Arts Inc. to produce computer programs. The venture, called ABC-EA Home Software, is working first on games based on ABC children's shows.

While the product focus of NBC and Microsoft will heaviest in the on-line area first, they may also have a CD-ROM program ready by late summer, the network spokesman said.

NBC would contribute its television audience reach, editorial and production expertise, and links to advertisers and TV show creators.

Player found dead

CAMDEN, N.J. — A pitcher for Rowan College who disappeared more than a month ago after becoming depressed about his baseball career was found dead in a creek. Authorities Monday used dental records to positively identify Patrick Hayney, 21, of Camden, a day after his body was recovered from the Pennsauken Creek.

Autopsy results were pending Tuesday, but authorities believe his death was a suicide. Hayney, a junior at Rowan in Glassboro, was considered a major league prospect. But family members said Rowan became depressed in recent months because of problems with his arm.

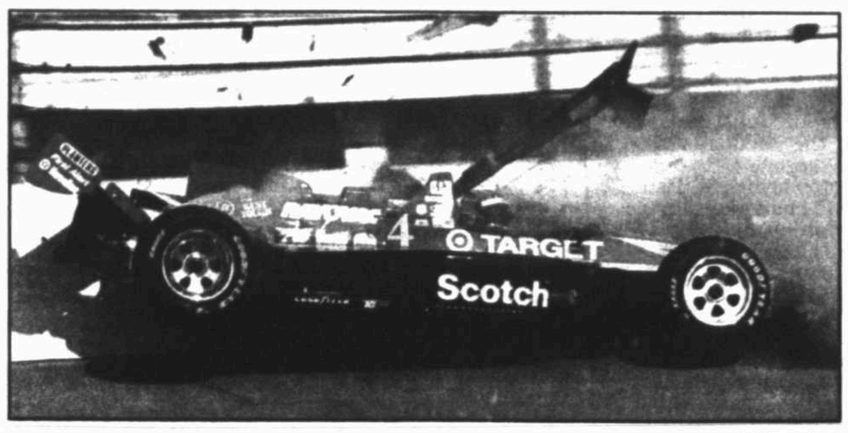

"He just wanted to play ball," said his mother, Dolores. "This was his life, that was what he wanted."

Hayney disappeared April 11 after telling his family he was going jogging. He was hospitalized for 12 days for depression a week before his disappearance. By all accounts, Hayney had a promising career as a pitcher. Professional teams began scouting him when he was 16. At Bishop Eustace High School, Hayney had a 15-1 record as a starting varsity pitcher and was also the starting football quarterback his senior year. Hayney pitched for Rowan until February. He began complaining of shoulder pains during the spring preseason. Last summer, Hayney declined an offer to play minor league baseball, choosing to wait another year.

Bryan Herta's Reynard-Ford crashes into the wall during practice for the Indianapolis 500 on Tuesday. Herta was admitted to the hospital with a mild concussion.

Unser, Fittipaldi do battle

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Two of the biggest names in racing, Al Unser Jr. and Emerson Fittipaldi, were at it again Tuesday, trying to find enough speed to qualify for the Indianapolis 500.

■ Indy 500 Practice

A wet track didn't help.

The two, driving for the usually pace-setting Team Penske, were hampered somewhat by rain that kept the 2 1/2-mile oval closed until mid-afternoon.

On Monday, wily team owner Roger Penske brought out a year-old Penske chassis for Fittipaldi to compare to the 1995 Penske-Mercedes cars that he and Unser have been trying to get up to speed without success.

On Tuesday, Penske's team wheeled out a 1994 Reynard chassis fitted with a new Mercedes engine for Unser to test. The car, which had been Roberto Guerrero's backup, was purchased from Pagan Racing.

Before getting into the Reynard, Unser said, "What we're going to try to do is just drive it, feel it, try to figure out what the difference is from a feel point between

Spurs fall, Magic stiffs Bulls

■ Spurs had finals in sights but Lakers rebound for a 98-96 victory in overtime on Nick Van Exel's winning three-pointer.

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs had the Western Conference finals in sight until Nick Van Exel got in the way.

Van Exel took a pass from Vlade Divac after a scramble for a loose ball and hit a 3-pointer with 0.5 seconds left Tuesday night, giving the Los Angeles Lakers a 98-96 victory in Game 5 of the Western semifinals.

The Spurs, who would have advanced to the finals with a win, still lead the best-of-7 series 3-2. Game 6 will be Thursday night at the Forum.

Van Exel also hit a 3-pointer at the end of regulation to tie the score 88-88 after Los Angeles went more than nine minutes without a field goal. The two 3-pointers were his only ones of the game after he missed his first five.

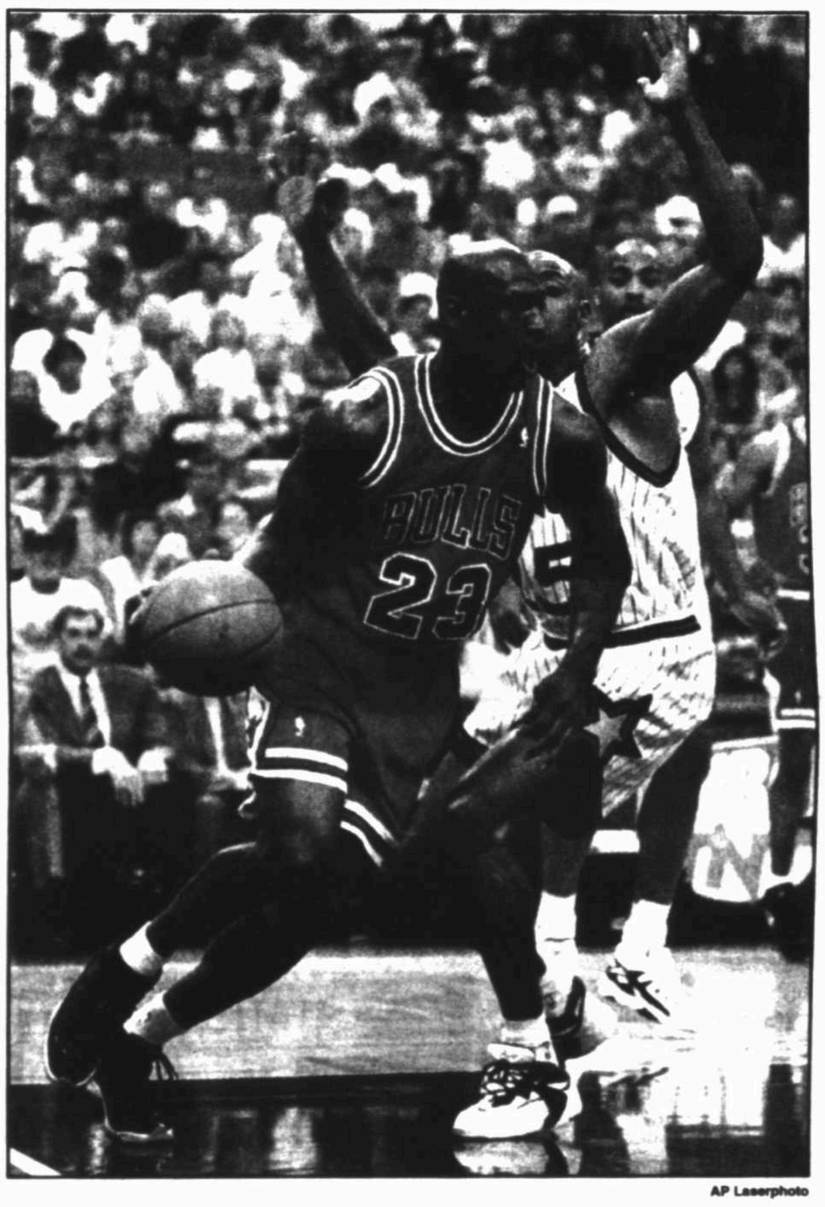

With the Spurs leading 96-95, the Lakers' Elden Campbell missed a finger-roll with four seconds left. San Antonio's Dennis Rodman, making his return after a one-game exile by coach Bob Hill, nearly had the rebound in his hands, but teammate David Robinson tipped the ball away.

Divac grabbed it, and with Lakers coach Del Harris frantically trying to get a timeout, the Lakers center passed to Van Exel, who quickly stepped forward for the high-arching game-winner.

The second-year point guard slapped his cheering teammates' hands and smiled in disbelief after his 3-pointer, when the Spurs called a timeout. Sean Elliott missed a desperation shot at the buzzer.

Robinson led the Spurs with 34 points and 17 rebounds, and Elliott scored 22. Van Exel scored 22 points and Cedric Ceballos 20 for the Lakers.

Rodman, after a public feud with Hill for days, didn't start, but finished with 11 points and 15 rebounds.

Chicago Bulls' Michael Jordan (23) drives past Orlando's Nick Anderson during Game 5 of the teams' Eastern Conference semifinal series Tuesday night.

■ Shaquille O'Neal and Magic blast playoff theory to rally for a 103-95 Eastern Conference playoff victory.

By Wendy E. Lane
AP Basketball Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. — Too young. Too inexperienced in the playoffs. Those were just two of the reasons the Orlando Magic weren't supposed to challenge the Chicago Bulls, winners of three NBA titles.

Shaquille O'Neal and his teammates blasted that theory to pieces Tuesday night, bouncing back from a dreadful first half to beat the Bulls 103-95 and take a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 Eastern Conference semifinals.

"This was a gut-check for them," Magic coach Brian Hill said.

In just its sixth season overall and second time in the playoffs, Orlando can advance to the conference finals with a win Thursday in Chicago. Neither team, however, has been able to win two in a row in this series.

"It appears to be hard, doesn't it?" said Michael Jordan, whose 39 points and 9-of-14 second-half shooting weren't enough to resuscitate the Bulls. "Neither team has done it yet, but if we expect to win the series, we have to win two in a row."

To do it, the Bulls will once again have to tinker with their inconsistent offense. During the series, a good game for Jordan has usually meant a poor one for his teammates.

This time, Scottie Pippen added just 10 points and Toni Kukoc had another one of his off nights, scoring five. B.J. Armstrong had 18.

By contrast, four of Orlando's starters scored 19 or more. O'Neal scored 15 of his 23 points in the second half and had 22 rebounds and five blocks to lead the Magic's dominating second half.

Horace Grant, the most tested Magic player in the postseason, had 24 points and 11 rebounds, Dennis Scott

MHS honors Coats, Alcala as top 'Dogs

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

Tuesday night was Midland High's night to honor its top 'Dogs on and off the court as Midland High had the 1995 Athletic Awards Banquet at Midland College's Chaparral Center.

Midland High's Roy Coats and Amy Alcala walked away as MHS' Outstanding Athletes of the year. Alcala, who won the award last year, was also named the basketball's Most Valuable Player for her work on the court where she earned District 4-5A MVP for the third year in a row. The Baylor signee was also named as one of the team's offensive MVP's.

Coats received MHS' top award for his work as a three-sport letterman. Coats was named football's MVP after a record setting year on the grid iron, which included a city single-game record of 337 yards set against El Paso Bel Air. He also lettered in baseball and track, where he was a regional qualifier in the 100-meter

New Rankin coach Althof starts today

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

Rankin football coach Greg Althof starts his new job today. And it shouldn't take his players and coaching staff long to figure out what the Red Devils' new approach will be.

"The ball is going to be thrown," Althof said from his home in Ingram, where his quarterback threw for 1,700 and 1,800 yards the past two seasons.

The 30-year-old Roscoe native replaces three-year Red Devil coach Raul Sanchez, reassigned to Transportation Director in February. Althof's Class 3A Ingram team went 14-16 in his three years as head coach there. He coached at San Jacinto Junior High in Midland in 1989.

"We're going to base out of the one-back set and try to be very balanced," Althof said. Rankin ran the veer under

Trip to Shea brings baseball realization

Ask around. You will hear that New Yorkers are aloof, rude and uncaring. It's a common perception.

And having never been to the Big Apple until last week, it didn't take long for one to understand that this was not West Texas. New York grows buildings like Texas does tumbleweeds, only taller.

Williamson

The taxi drivers think every day is Indianapolis 500 qualifying day. The fastest time in the world is said to be the time it takes for a New York light to turn from red to green and a taxi horn blasts.

Still, this is New York and it was felt that a trip here would be meaningless without a ball game. The Mets and Braves were playing at Shea Stadium. The best way to the park was said to be on the subway (the No. 7 train). No problem here since I was traveling with Gene Mills, a paper colleague who was a Big Apple veteran on his third trip.

Naturally, Mills got us on the wrong train and we got off somewhere that history will never record. Angels protected us since old No. 7 came scooting to the rescue within minutes.

Shea Stadium appeared like magic. It should have been magical, but we felt like a couple of Southern Baptists entering a den of iniquity. New York, and most other baseball communities in the U.S., haven't exactly embraced baseball this year. Only 8,000 sinners showed up, and even the sinners were feeling guilty.

We sat by two fans from Brooklyn. They were the backbone of the Mets. One was a season ticket holder a year ago. And the other, a Braves fan, had a bet on the game with his friend. Of course, New Yorkers are not friendly, so the word goes, and I guess that's why I tried to start a conversation. They loved to talk. And they loved baseball with a passion I've never seen in West Texas.

"You can't blame the fans for not coming back," one said. "They've ruined two seasons as far as I'm concerned. The players are making a million dollars a year and most of us would play for $50,000 or less."

So, what was this guy doing at the ball park? I was feeling guilty enough for just being there.

"Well, considering that I once owned season tickets and since this is my first game this year, you might say my baseball is in decline," he said. "I may not go to another one if the Mets lose."

The Mets won and the two Texans and two Brooklynites were headed back to old No. 7 for the return trip to the city. The Texans were more than a little worried about being on the subway late at night, praying that no other train mistakes were made.

But that portion of the trip was the best. The Knicks were playing Indiana in the NBA playoffs. As soon as we entered No. 7, these rude, uncaring New Yorkers were dishing out minute-by-minute happenings of their beloved Knicks. The Knicks lost in overtime before the trip was over and the talk and excitement ended. We might as well have been on the Bataan Death March after that.

The trip to Shea made me realize how much sports means to our society. The passion brings people under a single banner. And baseball better learn that simple fact. The passion was missing at Shea Stadium, but the same fans were a single unit when it came to the Knicks.

If baseball thinks it can't lose its fans, another look better be taken. The results are coming in and baseball has a lot of work to do to get its fans back. Passion can go in other directions.

It also taught me that New Yorkers may have a bad rap. If only someone would tell the taxi driver.

Big 12 football playoff probable, sources say

KEYSTONE, Colo. (AP) — As Big 12 officials prepared final recommendations on everything from record-keeping to revenue-sharing Tuesday, a conference football playoff looked like a sure bet, no matter what coaches say.

Despite the unanimous opposition of the coaches, sources at the highest levels indicated support for an early December showdown between the Big 12 North and South division champions.

Athletic directors, faculty representatives and primary women's administrators met Tuesday to put the finishing touches on all transition issues. After one last joint meeting with the faculty on Wednesday, final recommendations will be forwarded to the Big 12 presidents, who meet June 12-13.

Bill Marolt of Colorado, chairman of the Big 12 athletic directors, said the decision was made Tuesday to submit to the presidents a revenue-sharing plan that includes projected figures for a championship game.

Incoming commissioner Steve Hatchell has been asked to pin down for the presidents exactly how much above his preliminary estimate of about $6 million a playoff would be worth.

But sources said the report to the CEOs will estimate the refined figure at between $7 million and $8 million, and at least one CEO said that ought to be plenty.

"If the numbers make sense ... then we will seriously consider a playoff," Marolt said.

Kansas State president Jon Wefald said: "If the athletic directors see favorable numbers and recommend a playoff, then I think the CEOs will as well."

The presidents, who have final approval on all major issues, stayed away from these five-day meetings. But Wefald, who chaired the search for a Big 12 commissioner, said presidents under pressure to enhance women's athletics were suitably impressed by the preliminary projection of $6 million for a football playoff.

"When you talk about $500,000 per school, you're talking about an extraordinarily important amount for Title IX and gender equity," Wefald said from his office in Manhattan, Kan. "The $500,000 would make it very attractive to the CEOs. We're looking at the big picture here."

Other top honors included Jumon Hailey receiving the MVP of the boys basketball team. Hailey, the District 4-5A MVP, scored 43 points at Abilene High to set the MHS scoring record. MHS boys basketball coach Jack Stephenson, whose team placed second in district, honored John Marc Sanon as the outstanding defensive player. Stephenson also had an announcement that will be affecting future teams as his team will now play all of its home games at Chap Center.

The Lady Dawgs, who won District 4-5A for the third time in as many years, gave top offensive honors to Alcala and Jamie Rand. Ogonna Merritt and Veronica Poage were named Jim Raughton's top defensive players.

The MHS soccer team, which won district for the second year in a row, gave its highest honor to Kiley Miller, an all-state performer for his work on and off the field. On the girls' side, Jacque Ketter and Sonya Lackey won the offensive and defensive MVP's respectively.

On the softball diamond, Sheila Vines was named Sherri Culwell's MVP. The catcher/outfielder will join teammates Heather Klein and Joye Lewis at Cisco Junior College as MHS' first softball signees. Lew Kennedy named Jeremy Kimball as the top player off the MHS baseball team. Brian Crowley was honored for his hard work and heart as baseball's Zachery Award winner.

RANKIN: Althof brings pass to Red Devils

(From 1D)

Sanchez. "I think the style of offense that we brought to Ingram has warranted (the change). It makes a real good combination. Two out of three years we had a 1,000-back rusher out of that one-back set."

Althof played under former Rankin coach Troy Kennedy at Roscoe when the Plowboys lost the state championship game to Union Hill in '82. Kennedy also ran the veer at Rankin.

"He was a big believer in the split back veer so it will be a little change from the triple option to a more run-throw balance," Althof said. "Once the kids learn the system I think it will have great benefit."

Most of that learning will have to take place in August. Rankin has only a week and one half left in its school year, making Althof's job a tough one for the next few days.

"We have to cover a lot in a very short time," Althof said. "I need to meet with the coaches and kind of start laying some ground work."

Sanchez had coached for 18 years, six of them in Rankin. He took the Red Devils to the playoffs in '92 and '93 with 10-2 and 11-2 records. But last season Rankin lost its first four quarterbacks to injury, went 3-7 and failed to make the playoffs for the first time in the 90s.

"Coach Sanchez took a little better job in the administration area," Rankin I.S.D. superintendent Leonard Kent said. Sanchez was also the school's athletic director. But Rankin principal Jim Watson has taken over that post.

"I'm not going to comment on the former coach," Althof said. "But they do have tradition and they expect to win."

The Red Devils will have several returners from last year's team.

"There's a lot of quality athletes there," Althof said. "They return seven (on offense) and seven (on defense) from last year's squad. In some ways by having that injury bug last year it gave kids experience who will come back this year. As far as positives that is one of the positives about having those injuries."

Althof admits he's not too familiar with teams in Rankin's District 8-1A, although Ingram did play Menard in recent seasons. Eden won the league last year and Rankin finished in a three-way tie for third at 2-3.

"We expect to be right there in the middle of it," Althof said.

So Althof has gone from a Plowboy to a Red Devil. And he likes his new nickname.

"It's kind of catchy, isn't it."

Texas women double up on Florida, win NCAA tennis

■ NCAA Division I Tennis

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Texas lost four singles matches then swept the doubles to beat top-ranked Florida 5-4 Tuesday and win the NCAA Division I women's tennis championship.

Texas' Anne Pastor and Farley Taylor defeated Jill Craybas and Divya Merchant 6-2, 5-7, 6-2 in what turned out to be the decisive match after the two other doubles finished earlier on the courts at Pepperdine University.

Florida was within one victory of clinching the national title after winning four of the six singles matches. The Gators had swept three previous teams in advancing to the finals, where their streak of 20-meet winning streak was snapped.

The No. 3 team of Cristina Moros and Kelly Pace started Texas' comeback by defeating Bonnie Bleecker and Dawn Buth 6-2, 6-2. Then Ashley Johnson and former Midland College netter Lucie Ludvigova beat Florida's Lori Ann Freedman and Cathrine Insteboh 6-4, 6-4.

Taylor and Pastor clinched the title an hour later, having built a 5-0 lead in the third set.

In singles, Florida's Buth edged Ludvigova 6-3, 3-6, 7-5; Lisa Pugliese defeated Cristina Moros 7-5, 6-1; Freedman routed Pastor 6-2, 6-0; and Bleecker defeated Nomena Rasolomalala 6-1, 6-4 before Pace and Taylor stopped the singles sweep.

In No. 1 singles, Pace outlasted Craybas 7-5, 3-6, 6-3, while Taylor defeated Merchant 6-1, 3-6, 6-2 at No. 3 singles.

Oliver signs with old team Miami

DAVIE, Fla. (AP) — Louis Oliver, once a top-round Miami Dolphins draft pick, signed with the team Tuesday as a free agent.

The 29-year-old safety agreed to a two-year contract with the Dolphins after a short stint at Cincinnati. Oliver will get $1 million cash and up to another $1 million in incentives for starting and Super Bowl play, said agent Drew Rosenhaus.

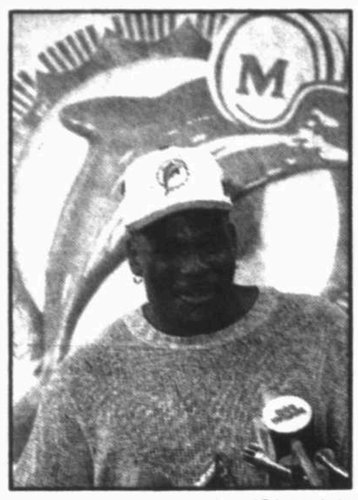

Oliver played five seasons for coach Don Shula after Miami selected him in the 1989 draft. But two years ago, he held out through training camp before unhappily agreeing to a one-year contract.

He was released shortly after the season and picked up by Dave Shula at Cincinnati. The younger Shula last week released Oliver, who missed four games and most of a fifth last year with a broken tibia.

But, there were no hard feelings, only smiles as Oliver appeared at a news conference at Dolphins camp.

"I'm home, and I'm ready to play," he said. "When I was in Cincinnati I gave them everything I had, but it was just that my heart and soul was here in Miami."

At 6-foot-2 and 224 pounds, Oliver still looks the part of the potentially dominant safety, but injuries may have taken their toll.

Louis Oliver heads to Dolphins

Oliver had foot surgery prior to last season and made only one preseason game. He still had 63 tackles, three interceptions and one sack before suffering the season-ending injury last Nov. 27.

In 1991, his best year in Miami, Oliver had 73 tackles and five interceptions.

Hill, Kidd to share rookie honor, source says

FORT WORTH (AP) — Dallas Mavericks guard Jason Kidd may have had just enough steam at the end of the basketball season to catch Detroit Pistons forward Grant Hill in the NBA's Rookie of the Year race.

Kidd and Hill will be the co-winners when the award is announced Wednesday, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Tuesday, citing two unidentified NBA sources.

The NBA wouldn't confirm or deny the report.

"We are making the announcement tomorrow," league spokeswoman Teri Washington said Tuesday.

The Mavericks called a news conference for 11 a.m. CDT at Reunion Arena "regarding the rookie of the year award."

Kidd had been out of town, but returned on Tuesday.

Winning rookie of the year was something he had hoped for, Kidd said.

"It was a goal I set on draft day. It means a lot to me, but it also means a lot to my teammates. They know what kind of player I am, and they were very much a big part in helping me to win this award. So, it's not just an individual award, and that's not the way I looked at it," Kidd said.

"At the same time, it's great to be honored, that it is a split with Grant Hill, because he's a great player."

Kidd averaged 11.7 points, 7.7 assists and 1.91 steals for the Mavericks, who won 23 more games than the previous season. He had four triple-doubles, all within a three-week span in April.

Hill, the top vote-getter for the All-Star Game, averaged 19.9 points, 6.4 rebounds and five assists. He helped Detroit win eight more games than the previous season.

The last co-winners of the rookie award were Boston's Dave Cowens and Portland's Geoff Petrie in 1970-71.

Hill, the top overall vote-getter for the All-Star Game, has been the frontrunner for the award, which is decided by a vote of 105 media members.

The Mavericks could've drafted Hill with the second-overall pick in last summer's draft, but they instead chose Kidd.

Kidd had a slow start, but wound up the season with impressive numbers and dazzling play. He led the Mavericks to 23 more victories than they had the previous season, an improvement that nearly landed them in the playoffs.

MAGIC: Jordan's 39 points not enough to stop comeback scored 22 points and Anfernee Hardaway 19.

(From 1D)

"It was a whole team effort," Grant said. "It's what we need to win a championship."

The same team that seemingly couldn't hit anything in the first half came to life after halftime, beating the Bulls to loose balls, controlling the boards and running up and down the court. By the end of the third quarter, the Bulls looked tired.

"The first half, we controlled the tempo. The second half, they controlled it," Jordan said. "We kept trying to get into the style of game they were playing. When we took shots we only got one shot. We were playing right into their hands."

Leading 78-70 at the end of the third quarter, Orlando stretched the lead to 11 early in the final period. Jordan scored six straight points to cut it to 89-83 with 4:56 to play, but Chicago went almost three minutes without a field goal after his layup with 3:25 remaining.

"Momentum just seemed to keep building their direction," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said, "and we just couldn't seem to stop the momentum once it got going."

Hardaway's jam over Bulls center Bill Wennington gave Orlando a 95-85 lead at the 3:02 mark and took the last bit of wind out of the Bulls. Chicago called timeout, and Hardaway bounced back to the Magic bench pumping his fist in celebration.

If they were dispirited by their rocky first half, the Magic didn't show it, making 12 of their first 15 shots of the third quarter. O'Neal, held to eight in the first half, had nine in the period as Orlando outscored Chicago 21-10 to lead 64-60 with 6:59 remaining in the quarter.

Dominating the boards, the Magic hit 14 of 20 field goals for 70 percent, while the Bulls missed 14 of 22 shots for 36 percent.

It was a big turnaround from the first half, when the Magic missed layups, putbacks and open jumpers. O'Neal even botched a dunk.

Weight loss hurt Garcia, Arum says

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Boxer Jimmy Garcia may have set himself up for injury by having to lose 30 pounds, or nearly 20 percent of his body weight, in the two months leading up to his ill-fated fight with Gabriel Ruelas, his promoter says.

Promoter Bob Arum said Tuesday he believes Garcia was dehydrated and vulnerable to injury after being forced to go from 160 pounds to 130 pounds in the two months leading up to his May 6 fight with Ruelas.

"My theory is he didn't have enough time to replenish the fluid in his brain after taking diuretics to make the weight," Arum said. "His brain didn't have protection."

Arum's comments came as Garcia remained in critical condition at University Medical Center, where he was on life support systems. Garcia's kidney function improved Tuesday and he moved when pinched, indicating there was still brain activity, said Dr. Albert Capanna.

"At this time, he's not brain dead," Capanna said.

Arum, meanwhile, called for doctors to examine the impact of losing weight on fighters, and for active boxers to be weighed on a weekly basis by their local commissions.

"Every case we've had of a boxer suffering brain injuries has been as a result of extreme weight loss," Arum said. "This is an issue that needs to be addressed immediately."

Arum noted that Gerald McClellan, who suffered a similar injury Feb. 25 in a fight against Nigel Benn in London, was notorious for having to lose large amounts of weight in the weeks before a fight. McClellan was on life support for days but later improved and is recuperating at Ann Arbor, Mich.

INDY: Herta first driver to hit wall this year the Penske and the Reynard.

(From 1D)

"All I need is one day in the Reynard and we'll be right there. I just need a few laps to feel it and we'll know right away if it's got more downforce, if it goes through the corner better. Whatever it is that the Penske doesn't have at this point, we'll be able to feel right away.

"I've been in a Penske for the last two years. This will give me the opportunity to feel a different car," the defending pole-winner and race champion added. "That's exactly what Emerson was doing yesterday with my '94 car, trying to get a feel for what's missing so far in the '95."

Unser said he knows Penske will do whatever it takes to get in the race, even if it means using Reynards or Lolas in the weekend qualifying sessions instead of his team-built cars.

"Looking at it, the Penske, the attention to detail in this car is immaculate," Unser said. "I want to go into this year's Indy 500 in a Penske, if at all possible. It's a safer race car. It fits me. Now, I'm adapting myself to fit the Reynard at this point."

The Penske crew was still not smiling at the end of the practice session after Unser ran 44 laps with a top speed of 218.050 mph and Fittipaldi did 70 laps in his own race car and had a fast one of 221.141.

Practice will continue each day through Friday, with qualifications resuming Saturday.

It appears, with 25 drivers already qualified for the 33-car field in the first weekend of time trials, that it will take a four-lap average of at least 225 to make the field.

Asked if the Penske team still has enough time to get the job done, Unser said without hesitation, "You bet."

Bryan Herta, who finished ninth in last year's 500 as a rookie, became the fourth driver to hit the speedway wall since practice began on May 6.

He was knocked unconscious after slamming into the concrete barrier in the second turn, but was conscious and alert when transported by ambulance to Methodist Hospital for further examination.

The 24-year-old driver from Valencia, Calif., was admitted with a concussion and was reported in good condition late Tuesday. He was to be held overnight in the neuro intensive card unit for observation and evaluation. There were no other injuries immediately apparent.

Herta missed half of last season after receiving serious leg injuries in a crash at Toronto. The '95 Reynard-Ford he crashed on Tuesday was the one in which he qualified on the outside of the sixth row last weekend at 225.551 mph.

Others who have crashed at Indy this month are rookies Davey Hamilton, who spent two nights at Methodist with a concussion and broken foot; Andre Ribeiro, and 1994 runner-up Jacques Villeneuve. Ribeiro and Villeneuve escaped serious injury.

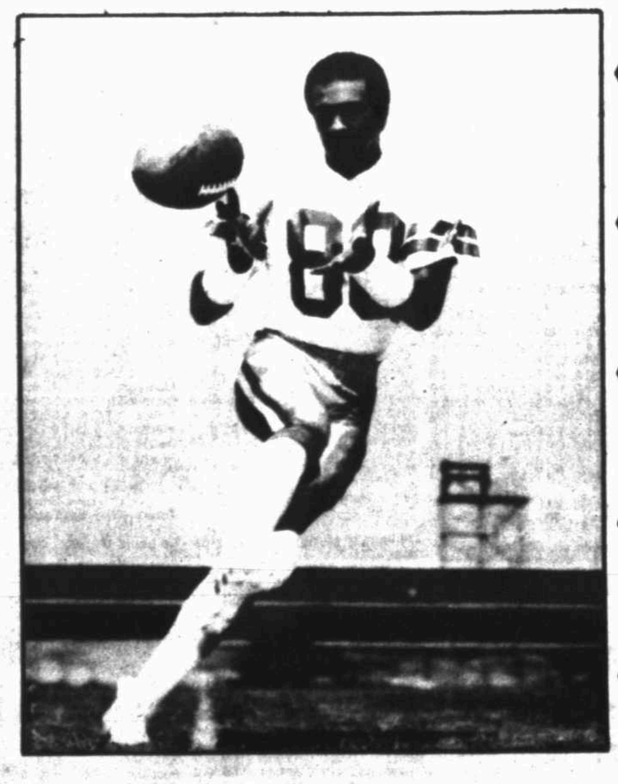

Only 21 cars made it onto the track during the rain-shortened session that finished under sunny skies. Teo Fabi and rookie Gil de Ferran were the fastest drivers of the day, turning 226.998 and 226.250 in backups to the cars they already have qualified.

Christian Fittipaldi, Emerson's nephew, was the fastest of the drivers in non-qualified cars, hitting 222.723. Johnny Parsons was next at 222.124.

Michigan AD sticks with Lloyd as interim football coach

By Harry Atkins
AP Sports Writer

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Saying he did not want to be rushed into such an important decision, Michigan athletic director Joe Roberson will temporarily stick with Lloyd Carr as football coach of the Wolverines.

Carr, appointed interim coach a week ago after Gary Moeller resigned in the wake of a drunken confrontation with police, will serve at least through the 1995 season.

"I'm trying to reduce the pressure on me," Roberson said at a news conference Tuesday. "Putting pressure on to rush the situation seemed totally irresponsible."

Roberson said the move will not only allow him to search at a more leisurely pace but will give his team greater stability.

Carr, 49, will be starting his 16th season at Michigan. He was close to Moeller and upset his friend was forced to resign. At that time, he assailed the media. On Tuesday, he apologized.

"I have been criticized over some comments I made last week and I don't say those criticisms were unjust," Carr said. "I'm an emotional guy."

Roberson had originally planned to hire a new coach before the start of the season, which opens Aug. 26 when the Wolverines play host to Virginia in the Pigskin Classic.

But talks with former Michigan coach Bo Schembechler and Penn State coach Joe Paterno, among others, convinced Roberson to pull back and take his time.

"Joe Paterno said, 'Be sure and do this right. The Big Ten and national intercollegiate football cannot afford to have Michigan slip into mediocrity. If it can happen to you, it can happen to anybody,'" Roberson said.

"That's a pretty powerful statement from a man of the stature of Joe Paterno. It's one that makes one hesitate, to not do things too quickly, to do them right."

Carr takes over after five seasons as assistant head coach and eight seasons as defensive coordinator. He joined Schembechler's staff in 1980 as defensive secondary coach.

If Carr leads the Wolverines to a successful season, Roberson might call off the search.

A similar situation occurred with the basketball team. Steve Fisher guided the Wolverines to the NCAA championship in 1989 while he was interim coach. Schembechler, then athletic director, soon dropped the "interim" from Fisher's title.

"All I expect is the best they can do," Roberson said. "If they win seven, that's fine. If they win 13, that's better. If he wants to be a candidate, I'll judge him like everyone else. I'll judge him on his leadership ability, his record — including this year — and everything else that goes into the appointment of a head coach.

"There won't be any special criteria for Lloyd, or anyone else, if he chooses to be one."

Carr said a week ago he only wanted the job on an interim basis. He has since changed his mind.

"To be a coach at Michigan is the dream of any coach," Carr said. "Joe is going to choose the best guy, and that's the way it ought to be. Anything can happen. The worst thing I can do is worry about 1996."

Two players on hand for the news conference were pleased with the decision.

"I think this keeps us better together as a team," said freshman Scott Dreisbach, who will probably replace graduating Todd Collins at quarterback. "It's like we're against everybody right now. We have to stick together, and I think we will."

Dreisbach said many other players he talked with were relieved. He added that all the work put in during spring drills won't be wasted with Carr as coach.

"As a team, this will make us stronger. We will all pull together," sophomore linebacker Jarrett Irons said. "It's always been us against the world. Everybody has always tried to give Michigan their best shot. So nothing is going to change."

Roberson said he would like to hire a permanent coach between the end of the season and the bowl games.

Citadeed ruled out of Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP) — The field for the Preakness fell to 11 on Tuesday when Citadeed was ruled out with an injured left foreleg.

Citadeed, the England-based colt who finished ninth in the Kentucky Derby on May 6, developed an inflammation of the leg on Tuesday, trainer Richard Violette said.

"We took the bandages off and he had a slight inflammation. As you stood back and watched, the thing grew like bread rising," said Violette, adding that the problem wasn't career-threatening. "There's no fracture, all the bones and ligaments are fine, but it's certainly very painful."

The track oddsmaker on Tuesday installed Derby winner Thunder Gulch as the 2-1 pre-draw favorite for Saturday's second leg of the Triple Crown.

The rest of the early odds had Talkin Man as second favorite at 4-1, followed by Timber Country (9-2), Tejano Run (6-1), Our Gatsby (10-1), Star Standard (12-1), Oliver's Twist (12-1), Mecke (15-1), Mystery Storm (20-1), Itron (20-1) and Pana Brass (30-1). Eddie Maple, who would have ridden Citadeed, will be aboard Pana Brass.

Talkin Man briefly battled Thunder Gulch for the lead in the Derby but faded and finished 12th, while Tejano Run was second, Timber Country third and Mecke fifth.

Violette said if Citadeed heals quickly, he'd consider running him in the 1 1/2-mile Belmont Stakes on June 10.

In Tuesday workouts at Pimlico, Mystery Storm breezed 5 furlongs in 1:00 3-5 over a fast track ... Tejano Run worked a half-mile in :48 ... Itron went a mile in 1:43 with exercise rider Jerilyn Brown up ...

Star Standard, trained by Nick Zito, was expected to arrive late Tuesday, while Robert Perez's Pana Brass was due Wednesday, along with the rest of the contenders.

Sampras jeered for Italian Open loss

ROME (AP) — Pete Sampras didn't blame the crowd for its reaction to his precedent-setting performance at the Italian Open because it wasn't the kind of history he wanted to make.

"The Italian crowd is very vocal," the top-seeded American said Tuesday after fans jeered him for losing to an unseeded player. "They were just as disappointed as I was. It didn't feel that great to walk off the court."

He did so as the only top seed and defending champion ever eliminated in the first round. France's Fabrice Santoro beat him 6-4, 6-3.

A year ago, Sampras looked invincible on the red clay as he ripped through the field and crushed Boris Becker in straight sets in the final. What a difference a year makes.

"I dug myself into a hole and couldn't get out of it," Sampras said of the Santoro match. "I had an off day. On clay, it's harder for me to get out of it than on other surfaces."

No. 9 Jim Courier, a two-time champion (1992, 1993), was upset 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (7-3) by French qualifier Thierry Guardiola. No. 6 Yevgeny Kafelnikov of Russia lost 3-6, 7-5, 6-3 to Italian qualifier Corrado Borroni.

No. 3 Goran Ivanisevic won 7-5, 6-1 over Oscar Martinez of Spain; No. 4 Wayne Ferreira of South Africa beat Cedric Pioline of France 6-4, 6-1; No. 7 Thomas Muster was a 6-4, 6-4 winner over Paul Haarhuis; No. 8 Sergi Bruguera downed Australia's Patrick Rafter 6-4, 7-5; and No. 14 Andrei Medvedev defeated Daniel Vacek 6-1, 6-2. Mats Wilander, a wild card, lost 6-3, 6-2 to Jacco Eltingh.

Chicago Cubs right fielder Sammy Sosa leaps to rob San Francisco's Matt Williams of a home run in the Cubs' 2-0 win over the Giants in National League action Tuesday afternoon.

Chicago beats Giants with 'Stick'

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Jamie Navarro was in the dugout, an out away from his fourth straight victory when Barry Bonds pounded a pitch from Randy Myers.

On another day, it might have been a homer. But the Candlestick Park winds held it up in deep right field and Sammy Sosa made the catch at the warning track as the Chicago Cubs beat the San Francisco Giants 2-0 Tuesday.

"I said, 'Come on, just stay in the ball park,'" said Navarro, who held the Giants to three hits over 8 2-3 innings. "I could see Sammy going back, back but he was there."

Navarro (4-0) struck out six and walked none before giving way to Myers after surrendering a two-out single to Robby Thompson.

Myers came on to face Bonds, a three-time league MVP, and his sixth save came on the long fly to right.

Bonds said he believed he had made good enough contact to drive the ball out.

"I thought I had it," he said. "I hit it pretty good. It tricked me out."

Navarro, who joined the Cubs in the spring after spending five years with Milwaukee, retired 18 straight at one point, including Sosa's leaping catch of a deep drive by Matt Williams in the fourth.

Mets 1, Astros 0

HOUSTON — Bobby Jones held Houston to three hits over seven innings for his third straight victory, leading New York to a victory, the Astros' fourth straight loss.

Jones (3-1) didn't allow a hit after the third inning and has allowed two earned runs in his last 30 innings. He finished with five strikeouts and five walks.

Doug Henry pitched two hitless innings to record his first save.

■ NL Roundup

Jones' performance overshadowed the effort by Houston starter Shane Reynolds (1-2), who struck out five over seven innings and kept alive his string of not walking a batter this season in 20 2-3 innings.

Chris Jones, in his first game since being purchased from Class AAA Norfolk, got the first hit off Reynolds with one out in the third. He was sacrificed to second by Bobby Jones and scored on Brett Butler's single to center.

Expos 7, Reds 3

MONTREAL — Rookie Shane Andrews hit a two-run homer and Carlos Perez won his second straight start as Montreal beat Cincinnati.

Perez (2-0), whose flamboyant mound antics made him an instant crowd-pleaser, allowed two runs on four hits, struck out four and walked one before leaving with two out and two on in the sixth.

Braves 15, Rockies 3

ATLANTA — David Justice assured manager Bobby Cox before the game he was ready to play and went out and proved it.

Justice drove in four runs with four hits, including a two-run homer, as Atlanta had 20 hits in continuing its mastery of Colorado.

The four hits matched a career-high for Justice for the sixth time, the last on Sept. 12, 1993, at San Diego. Fred McGriff also had four hits, with three RBIs.

It was only the fourth victory in the last 12 games for the Braves, who lifted their overall mark against Colorado to 23-2, including 11 of 12 in Atlanta.

The Braves also got home runs from Jeff Blauser and rookies Jose Oliva and Chipper Jones, helping John Smoltz (2-2) improve his lifetime record against the Rockies to 5-0. Jones, McGriff and Justice — the 3-4-5 hitters — were 11-for-14 with eight RBIs.

Phillies 9, Marlins 7, (10)

MIAMI — Philadelphia scored two runs in the 10th inning for a victory over Florida, shaking off Gary Sheffield's game-tying grand slam with two out in the ninth.

Sheffield was the first batter Heathcliff Slocumb faced in the game and it was his second pitch that cleared the left-field fence and made it a 7-7 game.

The Phillies improved their record to major-league best 14-5 with runs in the 10th on an RBI groundout by Mickey Morandini and a run-scoring single by Dave Hollins.

Slocumb (1-0), who leads the majors with eight saves, was unsuccessful in protecting a lead for the first time this season, but he got the win by working the 10th.

Norm Charlton started the ninth for Philadelphia with a 7-3 lead and retired two of the first three batters. He then hit Quilvio Veras and walked Jeff Browne to load the bases. Slocumb came on and gave up Sheffield's third career grand slam. Robb Nen (0-1) pitched the 10th for the Marlins.

Rogers goes down winning

The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Kenny Rogers won his third straight start but left with a strained hamstring, and the Texas Rangers beat the Toronto Blue Jays 6-1 Tuesday night.

■ AL Roundup

Rogers (3-2), whose right leg began bothering him during the third inning, allowed two hits in five shutout innings, struck out seven and walked two. He walked Alex Gonzalez starting the sixth and then was replaced by Terry Burrows, who finished for his first career save.

Texas, which took a 6-0 lead in the third, had 12 hits, giving the Rangers 26 in consecutive games against the Blue Jays. Mark McLemore went 3-for-3, and Benji Gil was 2-for-2 with a pair of walks.

Toronto's run came in the seventh on Ed Sprague's sixth homer. Al Leiter (1-2) was tagged for six runs and 10 hits in six innings with six strikeouts and five walks.

Texas sent 12 batters to the plate in the third. Dean Palmer hit a two-run single, Jeff Frye and Will Clark hit RBI singles, McLemore doubled in a run and Otis Nixon walked with the bases loaded.

Angels 9, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Tony Phillips and Damion Easley hit consecutive homers in the sixth inning as California rallied from a six-run deficit to beat Minnesota.

California trailed 6-0 after three but took the lead on Phillips' two-run homer off Eddie Guardado (0-1). Easley greeted Mo Sanford with his first homer of the year.

Mike Bielecki (1-0) survived a rocky beginning in his first start of the season. After Marty Cordova's three-run homer gave the Twins their six-run lead, Bielecki retired nine of the next 11 batters before giving way to Ken Edenfield starting the sixth. Lee Smith pitched the ninth for his league-leading seventh save.

Tigers 9, Orioles 8

BALTIMORE — Travis Fryman hit a two-run double off Doug Jones in the ninth inning as Detroit overcame a pair of two-run homers by Rafael Palmeiro and beat Baltimore.

Palmeiro had four hits for Baltimore, which has lost five of six. Baltimore overcame a 6-2 deficit in the fourth, talking a 7-6 lead on Cal Ripken's second homer of the season.

Joe Boever (1-0) pitched one-third of an inning and Mike Henneman, Detroit's fifth pitcher, got three outs for his second save.

With Baltimore leading 8-7 in the ninth, Cecil Fielder reached on a throwing error by third baseman Leo Gomez. Kirk Gibson blooped a single off Jones (0-2) and Fryman doubled down the right-field line.

Palmeiro's fifth homer of the season gave the Orioles a 2-0 lead in the first, but Detroit batted around in the second and took a 4-2 lead as Ben McDonald threw 43 pitches.

Athletics 7, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Mark McGwire extended his hitting streak to a career-high 13 games, going 2-for-2 with a go-ahead home run as Oakland beat Chicago in a game shortened to five innings.

Steve Ontiveras (3-1) allowed one run and three hits in five innings as Oakland won for the sixth time in seven games.

Jason Bere (0-2) was tagged for seven runs and eight hits in 5 1-3 innings. Umpires called the game after a rain delay of 1 hour, 3 minutes in the top of the sixth.

With the score tied 1-1 in the fifth, Geronimo Berroa singled with two outs and McGwire followed with his seventh homer. Ruben Sierra then hit his fifth homer for a 4-1 lead.

Indians 10, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Albert Belle again picked on the Yankees in general and Jimmy Key in particular, homering and scoring four times as Cleveland prevailed.

Belle went 3-for-4 with a double, and Manny Ramirez and Paul Sorrento also homered.

Cleveland ended an 11-game losing streak to New York that began in 1993. The Yankees were 9-0 against the Indians last year, the only time they ever swept another team for a whole season.

Ramirez also homered as the Indians won for the 11th time in 14 games overall. Mike Stanley, Bernie Williams and Pat Kelly homered in New York's third straight loss.

Royals 4, Mariners 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pat Borders and Joe Randa homered as Kansas City rallied to send Seattle to its seventh loss in 10 games, beating the Mariners in a game shortened to five innings by rain.

The game was called after a wait of 1 hour, 38 minutes.

Chris Haney (1-0) got a complete game, allowing four hits, striking out three and walked two. Dave Fleming (1-3) also pitched a complete game, giving up seven hits in 4 2-3 innings. Seattle took a 2-0 lead in the second when Jay Buhner singled, Edgar Martinez walked and Mike Blowers hit a two-run double.

Voigt to Rangers, Dettmer to Orioles in trade

BALTIMORE (AP) — One day after being cut from the Baltimore Orioles roster, Jack Voigt has a new home.

Dettmer, 25, who was pitching in relief at Class AAA Oklahoma City, will report to the Orioles' Class AAA Rochester affiliate in the International League. Dettmer opened the season with the Rangers and appeared in one game, a relief outing on opening day. In 12 lifetime major league contests, including nine starts, Dettmer has an 0-6 record with a 4.47 ERA.

Voigt, who turns 29 Wednesday, broke into the majors with Baltimore in 1992 under Johnny Oates, who now manages the Rangers. Voigt had a .272 batting average in parts of three seasons with the Orioles with nine homers and 43 RBIs. He has had only one at bat this season — a pinch-hit single — as the sixth outfielder on the club. His value as a utility player on this year's squad was lessened by the emergence of Jeff Manto, who has the same flexibility and more power.

Dallas Stars want to forget quick playoff exit

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — It was a year the Dallas Stars want to forget. Quickly.

Odds things kept happening. Like leading goal scorer Mike Modano being lost for the year with a leg injury.

It proved their downfall in the quarterfinal Stanley Cup series against the Detroit Red Wings, the second best in the NHL during the regular season in power-plays.

Detroit put the series away early by winning the first three games when it was 9 for 18 on power-plays.

Not even the great Andy Moog, who played in his 116th career playoff game in the Stars' season-ending 3-1 loss to the Red Wings, could stop every shot particularly when Detroit had a man advantage.

The Stars need an injection of firepower and the sale of a controlling part of the team to Ross Perot Jr., could give Gainey the money to put some fizz into the Dallas offense. Without Modano, the Stars were a punchless bunch.

Dallas was the 16th and last team to qualify for the playoffs and had to meet the NHL's best during the regular season, the President's Cup winning Red Wings. The Stars were knocked out four games to one.

"We never did get it all together," Gainey said. "It was a struggle all season long."

One of the team's best players, Dave Gagner, said injuries kept things off balance. Players like Modano, Derian Hatcher, Grant Ledyard, Peter Zezel and Craig Ludwig kept going down.

"It seemed like someone was always going down," he said. "A lot of things went wrong and injuries certainly were part of that."

The Stars made the playoffs. But everyone knew the offense wasn't good enough for them to last very long.

Dallas got to the second round by sweeping St. Louis last year. This season, the Stars were just lucky to be there.

Lack of record-setting performances point to decline of youth track

By Brian Higgins
The Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Read between the lines in the Texas high school track and field record book, and an untold story unfolds.

Of the 32 University Interscholastic League all-classifications records, only 13 have been broken in the 1990s.

Seven of Texas' 16 boys track records have stood for at least 10 years. In girls track and field, six of the 16 records have stood for at least 12 years.

The preservation of many of the state's marks — year after year — might reflect their integrity. But across Texas and the nation, there is growing sentiment that failure to break those marks is a direct reflection of the sport's decline.

And while records reflect quality, rather than quantity, there is also growing sentiment that a decrease in participation at the high school level is doing nothing to lower the records.

"It's very discouraging to me to see that track numbers are down as far as kids' participation goes," Olympic gold medalist Carl Lewis said. "That's the key thing. Kids are not interested anymore. The public has never really backed the sport, but track always had good participation. That's not the case anymore, and that's real scary."

Nationwide, the number of participants in boys track and field fell more than 45,000 (9.3 percent) between 1984 and 1994, according to the National Federation of State High School Associations. Girls participation dipped by 5,500 (1.6 percent).

Texas officials say that the state's numbers increased from 45,000 to about 52,000 annually because of the emergence of rural programs, but that numbers significantly decreased in urban districts such as Fort Worth.

In 1984, 536 boys and 369 girls participated in track at Fort Worth high schools. A year ago, those numbers had plummeted to 346 boys (a decrease of 35.5 percent) and 234 girls (off by 36.6 percent), according to figures supplied by the Fort Worth Independent School District School District.

In Arlington, which added a fifth high school and saw a 20 percent increase in enrollment from 1984 to '94, boys track participation slipped from 238 to 227 during that period, according to the district. Girls participation kept pace with the district's growth, jumping slightly less than 20 percent (122 to 146).

And stagnant records are not indigenous to Texas. Eleven of Florida's 16 state boys records are at least eight years old, and nine have been on the books at least 11 years. Similarly, 11 of California's 16 boys marks are at least eight years old. Nineteen of the 32 national records have lasted more than 10 years.

Theories abound on why interest in track and field has declined. Among the commonly expressed concerns of coaches and experts are:

— Outstanding young athletes are concentrating more on sports in which they think they have a chance to make a living.

— Deteriorating track facilities at financially strapped schools.

— The academic requirements of "No pass, No Play."

— Lack of full-time coaches.

Trimble Tech boys track and field coach Royce West — who has coached in Texas for 34 years — said it's difficult to motivate athletes to come out for his team.

"This 'No Pass, No Play' thing comes along in the spring," West said, referring to the grading period in the middle track season. "And senior year, they have all these expenses, like cap and gowns, prom and senior rings. And the kids get opportunities to work. And they want transportation to get back and forth to jobs."

The Trimble Tech girls' team, which won four consecutive state titles from 1976-79, was down to six runners this season from a high of more than 30 only 10 years ago. This week, a school district administrator recommended that the school's athletic department be disbanded because of a lack of participation.

James Hyden, athletic director for the Arlington school district, said other sports have lured away athletes who probably would have participated in track before.

"The reason (for the decline) is, girls softball and boys and girls soccer has become so popular," Hyden said. "We don't seem to be losing the kids, just the athletics that they choose."

Refugio's Toya Jones, who won 17 medals in four years at the 2A state meet, said track is not an "in" sport, that the repetitious workouts are a turnoff to most.

"More kids would go out if it wasn't so much work," Jones said. "Most kids see it as a hassle. If they put in the work, they'd enjoy it."

Jones said the drop off will probably continue because "when there's not too many people out there, it's not that much fun."

Skip Stolley, who developed an instructional seminar program for Southern California's Amateur Athletic Federation, said it's difficult for coaches to identify good track athletes.

He believes a major factor in the decline is that physical education classes are no longer required on a daily basis for graduation in high school. Formerly, coaches could identify potential track athletes and the students could get a feel for the events.

"In the '60s and '70s, phys ed was required for students every day," said Stolley, the former track and field coach at Indiana State.

"Traditionally, most kids have had their first exposure to track and field in PE classes. Now the kinds of things that are offered in elective PE seldom have to do with track. They tend to be things like Frisbee golf, or jazzercise."

Track and field is also often dependent upon coaches who are assistants in other sports and simply filling a void in the spring.

That may be especially true in Texas, where football is king. Thumb through the state's coaches directory, and you'd have a hard time finding a football-playing school whose football coach is not also the school's athletic coordinator.

"What I hear from coaches a lot is you've got more athletes that are specializing in one particular sport than before," said Jim Duel, the sports information director for the California Interscholastic Federation.

San Antonio Sam Houston coach Gentris Hornsby, who has coached boys track at Texas high schools and colleges for 33 years, blames high school football spring conditioning.

"My program has dropped tremendously because of the emphasis they're putting on off-season football," Hornsby said.

No matter the theories, all suggest a crisis.

"I think all these factors, in combination, are affecting our sport," Buchicchio said. "We've talked about that at clinics: Why isn't track the sport it used to be? And how can we get it back on track?"

The earthy sweetness of the beet juice in the following recipe from "Charlie Trotter's" cookbook provides just the right balance for sea scallops. Preserved ginger and watercress add exotic and peppery qualities, and the slightly crunchy leeks add textural contrast to the soft scallops.

SEA SCALLOPS WITH VEGETABLES AND BEET JUICE

Beet Juice (recipe below)
½ tablespoon Preserved Ginger (recipe below)
Braised Turnips (recipe below)
1 tablespoon grapeseed oil
1 tablespoon butter
Four 2- to 2½-ounce sea scallops
Salt and pepper
1½ bunches watercress
¼ cup julienned leeks (they can also be cut into rings)

Prepare the beet juice; set aside. Prepare the preserved ginger; set aside. Prepare the braised turnips; set aside.

Heat a heavy-bottomed saute pan to a medium-high heat. Add the grapeseed oil and butter. Quickly place all of the scallops in the pan. After about 1 minute, flip them over and continue to cook for another minute. Remove the scallops from the pan, season with salt and pepper, and set aside in a warm spot.

Add the watercress to the pan, which should have a little of the scallop juice in it, and lightly wilt for about 40 seconds. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and remove from pan.

Poach the julienned leeks in boiling water until wilted but still slightly crunchy. Toss them with the preserved ginger. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Warm the beet juice.

To assemble: Place 2 or 3 slices of warm braised turnips on four plates. Distribute the watercress evenly on top of the turnips. Place a scallop on each mound of watercress; top with leeks. Drizzle warm beet juice around the plate. Makes 4 servings.

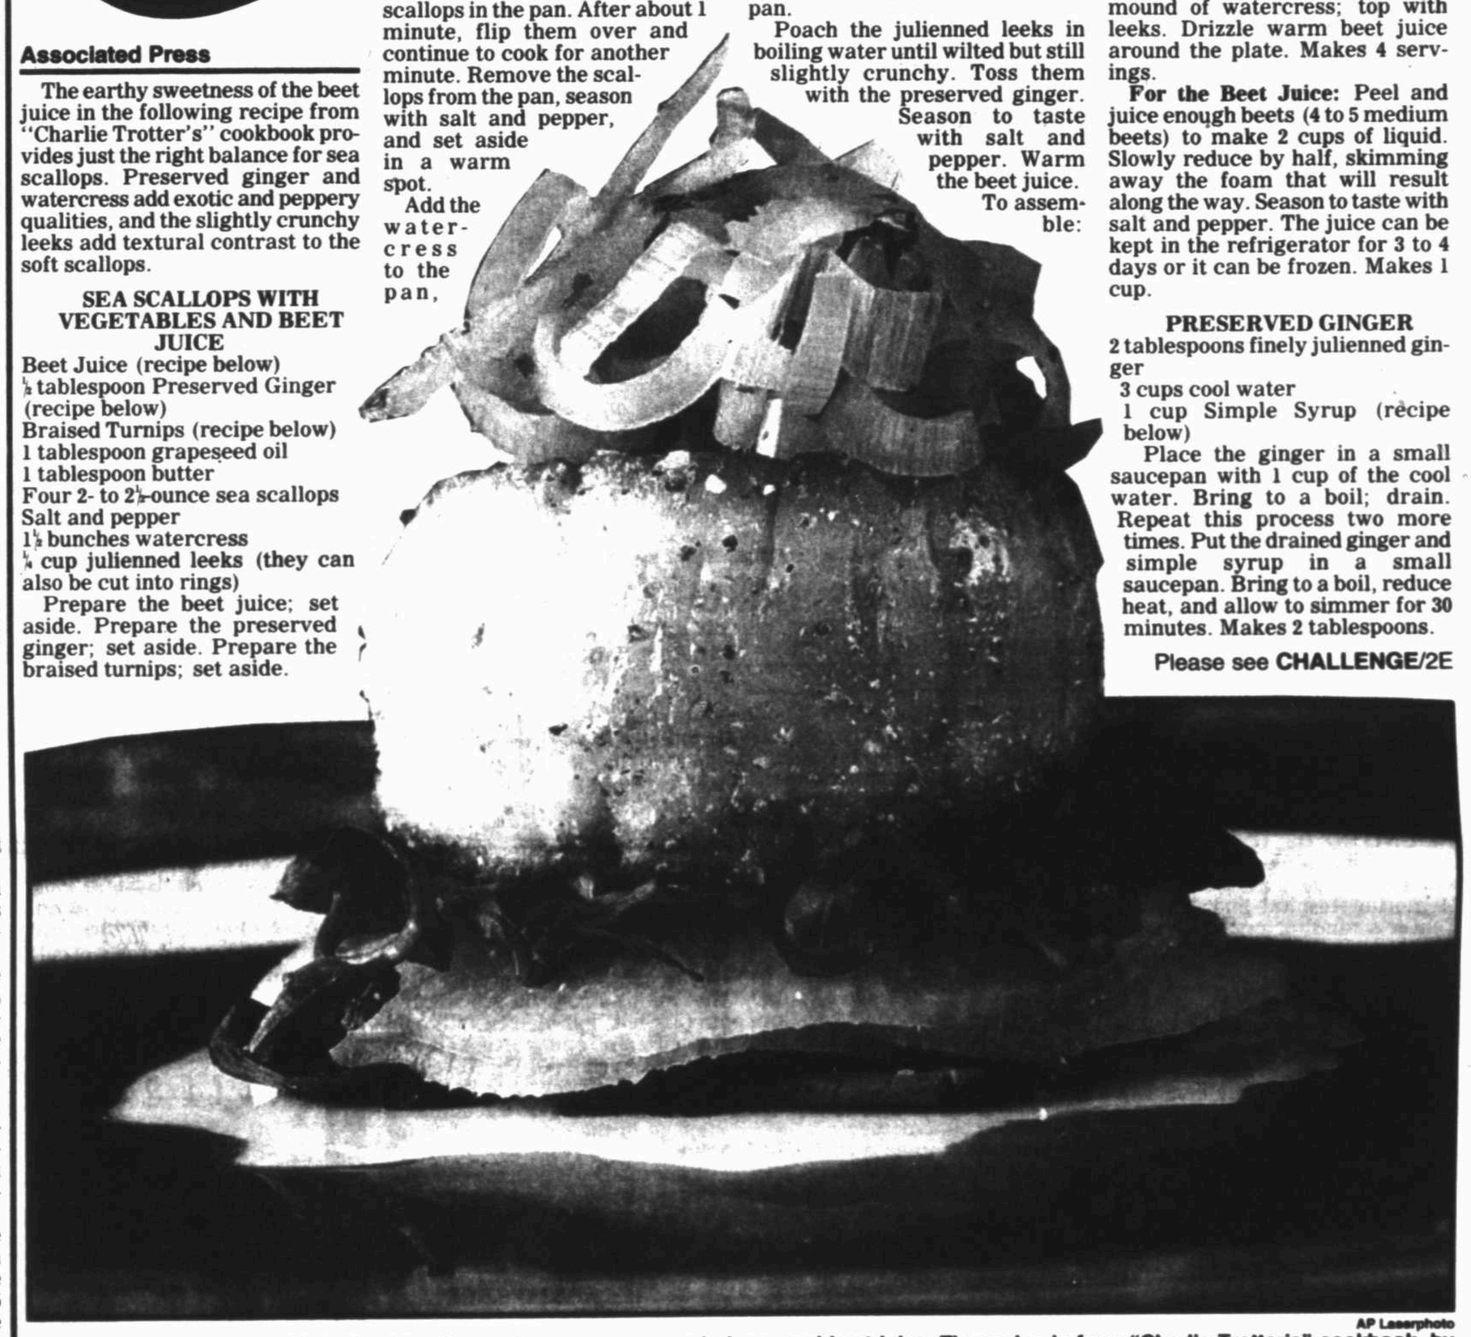

For the Beet Juice: Peel and juice enough beets (4 to 5 medium beets) to make 2 cups of liquid. Slowly reduce by half, skimming away the foam that will result along the way. Season to taste with salt and pepper. The juice can be kept in the refrigerator for 3 to 4 days or it can be frozen. Makes 1 cup.

PRESERVED GINGER

2 tablespoons finely julienned ginger
3 cups cool water
1 cup Simple Syrup (recipe below)

Place the ginger in a small saucepan with 1 cup of the cool water. Bring to a boil; drain. Repeat this process two more times. Put the drained ginger and simple syrup in a small saucepan. Bring to a boil, reduce heat, and allow to simmer for 30 minutes. Makes 2 tablespoons.

Attorney heats up kitchen

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

David Lindemood of Midland is a partner in the law firm of Brockett and Lindemood. He earned an undergraduate degree from Oklahoma State University in 1973 and a law degree from the University of Tulsa Law School in 1979. As an attorney, Lindemood leads an active professional life.

At home, he's a husband, father and dynamite cook.

Cooking is "just a hobby," Lindemood said. "I enjoy doing it. It's one of those things where nobody is asking me any questions."

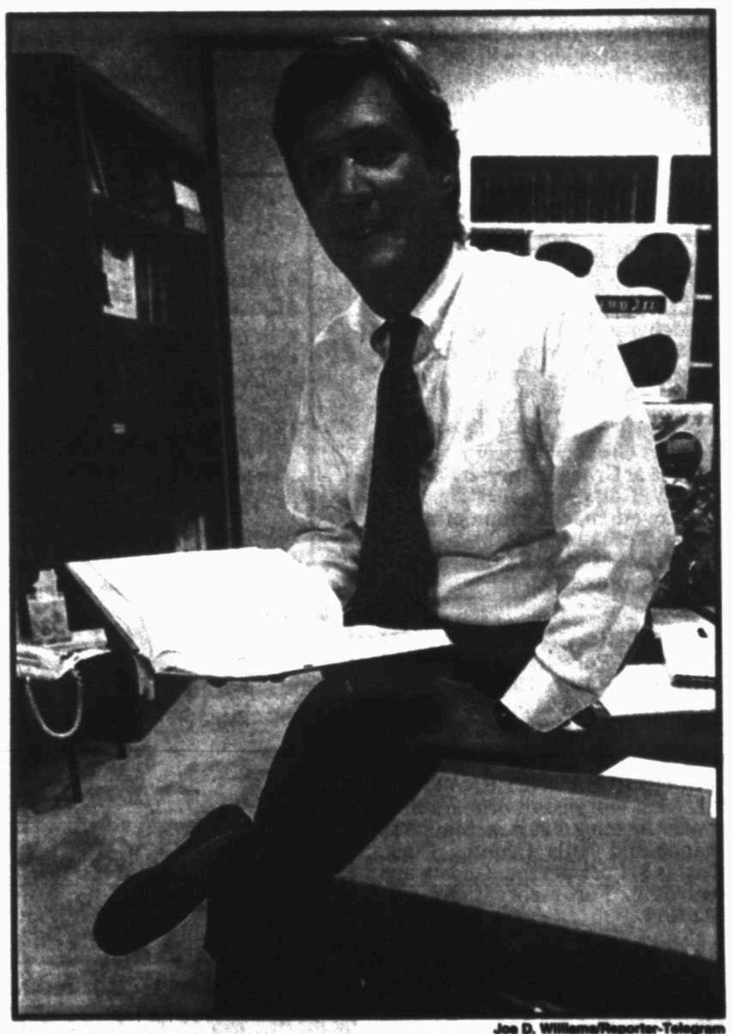

While he was in college and living in an apartment, he learned to cook, mostly out of necessity. Although he doesn't remember the first dish he prepared — or the first dish he cooked that he liked — he does know that today one of the things he enjoys preparing most is pasta. "My wife got a pasta machine for me a couple of years ago."

Lindemood said that he doesn't really have a specialty when it comes to cooking specific foods, but "my specialty probably is that I can get everything done very quickly."

Many of his male friends are good cooks too, he said. In fact, some of their group's dinner parties involve whole meals prepared by the men. "The guys do a lot of the cooking," Lindemood said.

He and his wife, Becky, have four children — Keri, Amber, Jessica and Joe — and Joe, the only boy, also is turning out to be a good cook, Lindemood said. "Joe is probably the only one who cooks of

In his cookbook, "Cooking with David Burke of the Park Avenue Cafe," the author writes that although some people won't eat red meat and others are allergic to or don't care for fish, most people will eat poultry — a great plus when giving a dinner party. His recipe for poached chicken breasts with ratatouille orzo ragout is served with a tablespoon of mascarpone cheese or grated Parmesan cheese and garnished with a basil leaf or parsley.

POACHED CHICKEN BREASTS WITH RATATOUILLE ORZO RAGOUT

1 cup canned tomato sauce
4 boneless, skinless chicken breasts, about 6 ounces each
Coarse or kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 red bell pepper, diced
1 yellow bell pepper, diced
1 zucchini, diced
1 yellow squash, diced
1 small eggplant, not peeled, outer 1½ inches only, diced
½ small onion, diced
3 cloves garlic, minced
1 cup chopped fresh basil or 2 tablespoons dried basil
2 cups cooked orzo pasta
½ cup mascarpone cheese or grated Parmesan cheese
4 basil leaves or parsley

Season chicken with salt and pepper; add to pot. Cover and simmer 5 to 10 minutes or until chicken is cooked.

Add all remaining ingredients except the cheese and basil leaves or parsley, stir, and simmer for an additional 2 minutes. Remove chicken breasts and keep warm.

Cook vegetable-pasta mixture until vegetables are tender and orzo is hot. Correct seasoning. Makes 4 servings.

To build this dish: Spoon ratatouille orzo ragout into 4 large bowls. Cut each chicken breast horizontally into two pieces and place over ragout. Top with a tablespoon of mascarpone cheese or grated Parmesan cheese and garnish with a basil leaf or parsley.

that group (the children). He enjoys cooking. He could be a chef if he wanted to."

Cooking is one thing — cleaning up is another. Like most other families, in the Lindemood house, the person who cleans up after the meal is "whoever is unlucky enough to be there," Lindemood laughed.

The following recipes could be the entire menu of a dinner party, courtesy of Lindemood — with a little help from his friends.

CARROT RELISH
(Courtesy Steve Aikman)

1 part finely chopped fresh habenero
1 part finely chopped fresh carrots
1 part finely chopped fresh onion
1 part finely chopped fresh garlic

Mix together and add fresh lemon juice to taste. Serve with various cheeses and crackers as an appetizer.

SALAD
(Courtesy of Lindemood's mother, Virginia)

Fresh grapefruit sliced into rings
Avocado cut into quarters
Star fruit (if available)
Red onion cut into rings

Arrange on salad plate and add Italian dressing. Refrigerate until served.

NOTE: Lindemood said that if star fruit is not available, raspberries or some other colorful fruit can be substituted.

RACK OF LAMB
(Courtesy of Liz Chancellor)

PREPARATION: Trim excess fat from rack of lamb. Marinate rack in Italian dressing and carrot relish (optional) in large glass dish.

COOKING: Over hot charcoal grill, place rack in the dish six to eight inches above charcoal for 10 minutes. Turn rack; place back in dish and cook for another 10 minutes. Take rack out of pan and cook 10 minutes per side over coals.

PASTA WITH ASPARAGUS

Cook pasta as regular. Saute fresh asparagus in fat-free dressing of choice until asparagus stalks are tender.

FLAN

Using Jell-O Egg Custard mix, substitute half-and-half for milk and cook as directed. Add liqueur such as chocolate or coffee over top when served.

Mom always makes the world's best potato salad

By Beverly Bundy
N.Y. Times News Service

Here's my one theory about food. Everyone's Mother Makes The World's Best Potato Salad.

So, OK, it's not up there with the Theory of Relativity or maybe not even the Peter Principle, but it's true nonetheless.

I once told a friend about the theory and he disagreed.

"That's wrong," he said. "My grandmother makes the world's best potato salad."

You don't go to restaurants or the supermarket deli counter to get good potato salad. You go to family reunions and church suppers. You wangle an invitation to a Juneteenth picnic. Potato salad has to be made at home and it has to be made by a mother.

I don't want to hear any politically correct business about this. You know why the potato salad at almost every barbecue restaurant in the world is so mundane? It's because most 'cue joints are run by pit masters, not pit mistresses. They're great with the meat but the potato salad (and the coleslaw, for that matter) is as dreadful as that pillowy white bread that comes on the side.

What follows is the recipe for my mom's potato salad. It is, of course, the best in the world.

There are no tricks, but here are a few little tips. I've called for mayonnaise in the recipe, but use salad dressing if that's what's on special that week. (One of them is always on special.) You can use light mayonnaise or light salad dressing, but do not use that awful fat-free stuff.

This recipe calls for garlic salt, an ingredient I usually shun, generally preferring to use fresh garlic, plus salt. But this is tradition, so I use what Mom uses.

And although it's true that Everybody's Mother Makes The World's Best Potato Salad, it's not true that the mayonnaise going bad is what can make people sick after eating potato salad. Jarred mayonnaise is pasteurized and uses a lot of high-acid ingredients — vinegar, lemon juice and salt — that inhibit bacterial growth. It's mixing hot ingredients with cold ingredients and letting it sit around at room temperature that promotes food-poisoning bacteria. The reason the jars recommend storage in the refrigerator is for taste, not safety.

Your mother is going to disagree with this piece of information, but stop her from calling me to argue. Get her in the kitchen and have her whip up some potato salad.

THE WORLD'S BEST POTATO SALAD

3 pounds russet potatoes, unpeeled
1 cup chopped celery
1 cup chopped onions (sweet onions, if possible)
3 hard-cooked eggs, shelled and cut into sixths
1 cup mayonnaise
1½ to 1¾ teaspoons garlic salt

Boil potatoes until tender when pierced with a fork. This is the most important step. You want potatoes that are cooked through but not mushy. We're not making mashed potatoes here. The potatoes should hold their dice.

When cooked, peel potatoes and cut into desired size cubes. I like them fairly large, ½- to ¾-inch.

Combine potatoes with all remaining ingredients. Refrigerate immediately. This potato salad is best after a day in the refrigerator. (Serves 8)

BERRY: Strawberry Oven Toast wins recipe contest

(From 1E)

Recipes were rated on interesting use of strawberries, originality, practicality for home cooks, appetite appeal, appearance and suitability in relation to an entire meal. Entries were judged by a panel of food specialists.

Strawberry Oven Toast

½ cup strawberries, sliced or chopped
5 ounces cream cheese, softened
1 loaf French bread, sliced ¾ inch thick
10 eggs
¾ cup table cream or half & half
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
Strawberry Sauce (recipe below)
1 tablespoon butter, melted

The night before:

Combine strawberries with cream cheese. Spread thickly on one-half of the bread slices and top with the other slices to form strawberry sandwiches.

Mix the eggs, table cream and vanilla in a wide, shallow pan. Place the sandwiches in the pan, turning to ensure that the egg mixture soaks into both sides. Cover the pan with plastic wrap and leave overnight in the refrigerator.

Prepare strawberry sauce.

The next morning:

Coat edged cookie sheet or two baking pans with melted butter. Transfer the sandwiches onto the buttered pan. Bake in a 375-degree oven for 25 minutes or until golden. Serve with warmed strawberry sauce and maple syrup. Makes 4-6 servings.

Strawberry Sauce

1 quart hulled strawberries
½ cup sugar
2 tablespoons water
2 tablespoons orange-flavored liqueur (optional)

Cook all ingredients for 5 minutes in pan over medium heat. Remove sauce from the heat and cool.

DEAR ABBY

Readers have timely advice for the chronically late

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You missed it in your answer to the woman who complained about the chronic lateness of her mother and younger sister.

Van Buren

People who are always late don't merely need to know how one feels about their lateness; they need help. A friend of ours who was always late was urged to get psychiatric help — which she did — and she became a completely different person. Not only did she change her ways, she became a very happy and outgoing individual.

Sometimes the chronically late need to obtain help, and they should be strenuously urged to do so. — BARTLETT BURNS, OLYMPIA, WASH.

DEAR MR. BURNS: You make an interesting point, and one worth considering. That letter must have touched a nerve, because it stimulated a ton of mail. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: In reference to "Had It in Cincinnati," whose mother was always late: Start the events without waiting for the late ones! I've done it. Or, tell them to come an hour and a half before you want them to show up. That also works.

But do NOT depend on them. And don't let them spoil your day. Only you are responsible for your own happiness. — AURELIE HOWARD, BROOKINGS, ORE.

DEAR ABBY: My reply to "Had It in Cincinnati" would have been to tell her mother and sister that a 6 p.m. celebration was actually an hour or so earlier. I have tried it, Abby, and it works! — LAURA IN SCHENECTADY, N.Y.

DEAR ABBY: Over the years, when the stress was getting too much and I was late to every social event, my solution for my grown family was as follows:

I asked them not to tell me the actual time of the event, but to name a time somewhat earlier. I would still be late, but not as late as I would have been if they had told me the correct time.

Perhaps this will help the hosts to stay within their comfort zones — and the stressed-out victims will be able to relax a bit, too. — DOROTHY CALENDER, SEATTLE

DEAR ABBY: My mother-in-law was the reverse. She would come an hour earlier than she was expected. Consequently, we started telling her to come to our home one hour later than we wanted her for dinner. That way we had time to get the table prepared and ourselves dressed. It worked — and my mother-in-law and I remained good friends. — MRS. C.G. LEVY, LAS VEGAS

DEAR ABBY: I had the same problem with my best friend. She would not just be one hour late; she would be three or four hours late. At first I got worried. Then I got angry. Now, if I want her here at 5 p.m., I tell her to show up at 2 o'clock sharp. It works like a charm. She's "on time" now — and I don't freak out! — RELAXED IN TEMPE, ARIZ.

DEAR ABBY: I, too, had finally had it with my in-laws who were always late. I laid down a firm rule: Dinner is at 6 p.m. Those present eat; those who are tardy will have to fend for themselves. If we are eating dessert when they finally arrive, they have to scrounge around the kitchen and do the best they can, because I do not get up to wait on them any longer.

Surprisingly, they began to arrive on time! "Had It" needs to be firm. If guests can be rude enough to be habitually late, you can be aggressive enough to go on with your plans. — FEELING BETTER IN DALLAS

P.S. I told my doctor, barring some emergency, I wait 20 minutes. After that, his fee diminishes by my hourly salary. I rarely have to wait, and the doctor said it forced him to do a better scheduling job.

Fat free cookies win less than rave reviews

By Linda Anderson

I know, I know, I'm beginning to sound like a broken record with all this stuff about low-fat or no-fat cookies, but there sure are a lot of them out there and I do love cookies, so if I can find some that are low (or no) in fat and good in taste, I figure it's my duty to let you know.

Anderson

The "Cookies of the Week" this week are from Pepperidge Farm, one of my favorite companies for baked goods. They have introduced Chocolate Chip Blondie and Fudge Brownie bar cookies that are advertised as being "Fat Free." Couldn't resist buying a box of each to check them out.

Each 7-ounce box contained "5 Individually Wrapped" bar cookies that were probably almost 2x4-inches in size, but not quite. That makes for fairly large cookies.

Each box cost $2.29, which is fairly expensive for only five cookies too.

Label advertising goes like this: "Some things are worth waiting for... Like a fat free homestyle blondie (brownie, depending on which box you're reading) that's moist and golden (brownies are "fudgey") and made from only good things — like egg whites and real chocolate chips (brownies have "real imported cocoa") — and nothing artificial. Our bakers have tinkered and baked and baked and tinkered until they knew you'd be satisfied. Take one bite and we think you'll agree... fat free never tasted more like Pepperidge Farm."

Nutrition label on both boxes shows that one brownie or one blondie contains 120 calories and no fat. (One question: How can you have "real chocolate chips" and still be fat free? I mean, I love chocolate but no one ever accused it of being fat free. Wait, here it is — on the ingredients label it says that some of the stuff in chocolate chips "adds a trivial amount of fat." Oh.)

The taste test was, shall we say, revealing. Most of the testers here at the office are fans of Pepperidge Farm products, and even so, most were disappointed with the company's Fat Free Brownies and Blondies. The best they could do was the "not bad" from two testers. They rest didn't say much, just took a bite and walked away. One did lean over my desk and whisper, "Needs more fat."

I guess I'll just keep searching the supermarket shelves for no-fat cookies I can call my own. But with any luck I'll be off this cookie jag in time for next week's column.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Recipes make home cooking more healthful

By Beverly Bundy
N.Y. Times News Service

A dietitian I know says that most attempts at healthful eating fail for a simple reason. When patients are put on new diets by their doctors, the menu plans are filled with unfamiliar foods that the patient tries once or twice and then ignores.

I think she may have a point.

Food should be a comfort — like sleeping in our own beds at night. Sure, it's fine to try out different cuisines here and there, rice cakes and turkey burgers, but face it, most of us like the food we've always liked — Southern lovelies like fried chicken, vegetables flavored with pork, and biscuits.

So when the new "Reader's Digest Down Home Cooking The New Healthier Way" (Reader's Digest, $28) crossed my desk, I took notice. This new book is sensible, for one thing. Instead of rigorously chopping fat on every recipe, some recipes are presented in their undiluted glory. The chicken-fried steak, for instance, has 694 calories and 55 grams of fat. (That, dear readers, is not a typographical error. Kind of makes those arteries seize up right there at the breakfast table, now doesn't it?)

The more healthful version, though, has 400 calories and 20 grams of fat, with, I've got to say, not a whole lot of modification. The ¼ cup vegetable oil for frying the meat is reduced to 2 tablespoons, 1 egg and 1 egg white are substituted for 2 whole eggs, and 1 percent milk (for the battering) is substituted for whole milk. In the gravy, more low-fat milk and half-and-half or whole milk substitute for 1¼ cups heavy cream.

The fried chicken (recipe follows) uses a few other tricks to reduce fat. Skinning the bird and finishing off the cooking in the oven greatly reduces the amount of fat the chicken takes on. (And a bonus, cooking chicken with this method makes kitchen cleanup a lot simpler.)

Another nice thing about this book is that it presents a variety of regional fare. Texans will see familiar food like chili, corn bread, fajitas, chicken and dumplings, tamale pie and Mexicalli rice bake. Other regions of the country are represented with New England boiled dinner, Kansas City strip steaks, Hillary (Clinton's) chicken and Brown Derby Cobb salad.

Desserts also get their due. Hummingbird cake, a Southern favorite, cuts the vegetable oil in half by upping the mashed bananas in the recipes. Again, the word here is sensible. We're never going to give up the food that gives us comfort, and as this book demonstrates, we don't have to. Following is a selection of recipes from "Down Home Cooking."

RICHMOND FRIED CHICKEN
(Serves 4)

½ cup all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon each salt and paprika
¼ teaspoon each ground allspice and crushed red pepper flakes
⅛ teaspoon each ground cloves and nutmeg
1 (3-pound) chicken, skin and wing tips removed, cut into 8 pieces
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1¼ cups (1 percent) milk

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Line 13x9x2-inch baking pan with foil and grease lightly. On piece of wax paper, combine flour, salt, paprika, allspice, red pepper, cloves and nutmeg. Set aside 2 tablespoons of mixture.

Dredge chicken in remaining flour mixture. In 12-inch nonstick skillet, heat oil over moderately high heat. Brown chicken, turning occasionally, for about 6 minutes or until golden-brown. Using a slotted spoon, transfer to baking pan, reserving 2 tablespoons drippings in skillet. Bake chicken, uncovered, for 10 minutes on each side until crispy.

Meanwhile, prepare gravy: Whisk reserved flour mixture into drippings in skillet. Cook over moderate heat for 2 minutes or until cinnamony brown. Gradually whisk in milk, lower heat and whisk constantly 5 minutes more or until gravy is slightly thickened.

Nutritional analysis per serving: 408 calories, 14 grams fat, 147 milligram cholesterol, 477 milligrams sodium, 31 percent calories from fat.

FRIED GREENS
(Serves 4)

2 pounds fresh greens (collard, mustard or turnip)
2 slices lean bacon, diced
¼ cup red bell pepper
3 tablespoons chopped yellow onion
¼ teaspoon black pepper

Wash greens, leaving droplets of water on leaves. Remove tough stems and tear leaves into bite-size pieces. In 12-inch nonstick skillet, cook bacon over moderate heat for 5 minutes or until crisp; transfer to paper towels. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of drippings in skillet.

Add red pepper and onion to drippings in skillet and saute for 5 minutes or until soft. Stir in greens and black pepper. Saute 10 minutes longer or until greens are tender. Top with bacon.

Nutritional analysis per serving: 95 calories, 2 grams fat, 3 milligrams cholesterol, 93 milligrams sodium, 19 percent calories from fat.

TEX-MEX CORN BREAD
(Serves 12)

1¼ cups all-purpose flour
¾ cup yellow cornmeal
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon each baking soda and salt
1½ cups low-fat buttermilk
1 large egg
1 large egg white
3 tablespoons vegetable shortening, melted
3-ounce jar roasted red pepper, drained and chopped
3 tablespoons each minced scallions and fresh or pickled jalapeno peppers, including seeds
1 cup fresh, canned or thawed frozen corn kernels
3 tablespoons shredded Monterey Jack cheese

Preheat oven to 425 degrees. Generously grease 10-inch cast-iron skillet or other heavy skillet (cover handle of second type of skillet with foil) and place in oven to heat.

In large bowl, combine flour, cornmeal, sugar, baking powder, baking soda and salt. In medium-size bowl, whisk buttermilk, egg, egg white and shortening. Stir in red peppers, scallions and jalapenos.

Pour buttermilk mixture into flour mixture all at once and stir just until blended. Fold in corn, spoon batter into skillet and sprinkle with cheese. Bake for 20 minutes or until golden brown and toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Serve immediately, straight from skillet.

Nutritional analysis per serving: 268 calories, 6 grams fat, 27 milligrams cholesterol, 392 milligrams sodium, 20 percent calories from fat.

N.Y. Times News Service

Along Interstate 10, toward the heart of Cajun country, billboard after billboard screams out the names of restaurants boasting of the biggest crayfish anywhere. But as in other matters, size is not everything.

Some of the sweetest crayfish are found at Hawk's, a backwoods roadhouse nine miles outside Rayne, La. Finding Hawk's, which has no street address, can be an adventure. But on a busy night, as many as 600 people manage to make their way to eat in the bright restaurant. Boiled crayfish, which have a succulent, lobsterlike taste, are king here — and practically the only thing on the menu.

L.H. Hawk Arceneaux opened the restaurant 13 years ago, and he claims to have been one of the first people to employ what is now a popular process called purging to clean crayfish and remove any gritty taste or odor before they are cooked.

Purging is necessary because a crayfish's life is a rather dirty affair. Crayfish are commercially raised in rice fields and burrow into the ground, where they breed during the heat of the summer. In the fall, after the harvest, they emerge from the ground and release their young.

At Hawk's, a full, 3.5-pound order costs $9.45; a half portion, $4.75. Hawk's is open 5-10 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday, from Dec. 1 to the end of the crayfish season, typically around mid-June; (318) 788-3266. It does not take reservations.

To reach Hawk's, drive west from Lafayette on Interstate 10 and get off at the Rayne exit. You will see a McDonald's on the right; turn left onto State Highway 367 and drive eight miles. Turn left onto State Highway 1110. Go two miles and bear left at the fork in the road. Drive about one mile: Hawk's will be on the right.

Jump into the social swim and make the most of your opportunities to meet people. A more mature attitude means greater domestic stability. Follow your intuition in investment and insurance matters. New work assignments bring good luck. Travel with a loved one early in 1996.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Dennis Hopper, broadcaster Kathleen Sullivan, boxing great Sugar Ray Leonard, actress Maureen O'Sullivan.

Opening lead: King of ♣

When the opponents bid a game on skinny values, odds are that declarer is planning to score tricks with ruffs. Effective defense, therefore, is to lead trumps at every opportunity. West caught on a trifle late, and the execution then was slightly faulty.

We like South's bold jump to game with a distributional hand and two aces, even though it contained only four trumps. West could not believe that the opponents could make game against the best hand at the table and one with a five-card holding in trumps to boot, and said so forcibly by doubling.

West's assessment would have been accurate had the opening lead been a trump, and had the defender continued with a second trump on gaining the lead in clubs. Unfortunately, West opted to lead the king of clubs, then shifted to a low trump after getting a look at dummy.

Dummy's ten won, the ace of diamonds was cashed and a diamond was ruffed in the closed hand. A club ruff was followed by a second diamond ruff in hand. After cashing the king and ace of hearts, another club was trumped on the table. A red card was ruffed with the ace as West underruffed helplessly and another club was led to complete West's discomfiture. Whether the defender ruffed high or low, dummy's queen of trumps became the fulfilling trick.

West missed a chance to be brilliant. If the defender shifts to the king of trumps at trick two, the contract can be defeated! When declarer ruffs a diamond or heart with the seven of spades at trick 10, West overruffs and declarer can come to no more than nine tricks.

R.E.M.'s Bill Berry is back, giving band a medical theme for its tour

SAN FRANCISCO — The R.E.M. tour picked up where it left off in March, when drummer Bill Berry was stricken with a brain aneurysm.

"We finally named the tour," singer Michael Stipe joked to a San Francisco crowd Monday night. "We'd like to welcome you to the first show of Aneurysm '95."

Bill Berry is back behind drums after brain surgery.

The band showed videos of X-rays and CAT scans on a large screen as it performed "I Don't Sleep, I Dream." Stipe sang about "some medicine for my headache" to a beeping EKG backbeat.

Berry was back behind the drums after recuperating from brain surgery. The tour was suspended after he fell ill during a show in Lausanne, Switzerland.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A former handler for Garth Brooks says her ex-business partner froze her out of the country superstar's career.

Lewis accused Doyle of fraud, breach of contract and breach of fiduciary responsibilities. She is seeking unspecified damages.

PARIS — Fashion designer Francesco Smalto was fined $120,000 Tuesday for supplying call girls to the president of Gabon.

Smalto was convicted earlier this year of recruiting the women for Omar Bongo between 1990 and 1993, during the designer's trips to the West African nation to sell Bongo clothes.

Bongo hasn't denied that Smalto brought him prostitutes from Paris, saying it's a private matter. Bongo bought up to $600,000 worth of Smalto's fashions every year.

Smalto testified that Bongo paid the women $2,000 to $8,000, plus travel expenses. The Italian-born designer said he didn't know for a fact that the women had to sleep with Bongo.

Unlike pandering, prostitution isn't a crime in France.

LOS ANGELES — Julianna Margulies isn't a nurse, but she plays one on "ER." Some people just don't seem to understand that.

"I was at the gym the other day and I was on the Stairmaster and a girl fainted a couple of machines over and everyone looked at me," Margulies said in an "Entertainment Tonight" interview for broadcast Wednesday.

"I was like, 'What do you want me to do about it? I can't do anything. I just play one on TV.'"

Margulies plays nurse Carol Hathaway on the NBC show.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — With a heroin conviction behind him, country rocker Steve Earle has been hit with crack possession charges.

Steve Earle has been hit with crack possession charges.

Earle was arrested on the heroin charge July 25 and released on bail. Later that day, police allegedly found crack in his car. He was indicted on Friday.

Earle's manager, John Dotson, said Tuesday the new cocaine and drug paraphernalia charges were a surprise.

"Speaking with his attorney, it was clearly all of our understanding that there was not going to be any pursuit of these charges," Dotson said. "I'm not sure where in the system communications failed us, but it did."

Earle, 40, was released from jail in September after serving a month on the heroin conviction.

The National Weather Service observed Monday's opening of the 1995 typhoon season in the eastern north Pacific Ocean — that's here — by announcing this year's names for tropical storms and hurricanes:

Adolph, Barbara, Cosme, Dalila, Erick, Flossie, Gil, Henriette, Ismael, Juliette, Kiko, Lorena, Manuel, Narda, Priscilla, Raymond, Sonia, Tico, Velma, Wallis, Xina, York and Zelda.

Forecaster Richard Pasch of the National Hurricane Center said there is a six-year cycle of names, with replacements made only in the event of "particularly devastating storms." This year's names, for example, were used in 1989.

Prosecutors claim divorce attorney got out of hand, paid thug to break opponent's arm

By Jan Hoffman
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — As every lawyer knows, when negotiations in a case reach gridlock, it's time for a little arm-twisting.

But according to the Manhattan district attorney, a 29-year-old matrimonial lawyer named Svi Zer went a bit further. Prosecutors say that in trying to resolve one of his divorce cases, Zer paid a thug $200 not just to twist the opposing lawyer's arm, but to break it.

To many members of the bar, divorce lawyers are a lower form of life, and divorce law, a "gutter practice." They say that not only can divorce bring out the worst in clients, it can have a similar effect on lawyers, goading them to cross the boundaries of zealous advocacy.

Happily for Zer's opponent, a 59-year-old Queens lawyer named Israel Weinstock, the thug whom Zer is said to have hired turned out to be an undercover police officer.

Upon his arrest last month, Zer pleaded not guilty to charges of attempted extortion and attempted assault. In his view, which he conveyed this week during a telephone interview from Rikers Island, he was merely trying to do his best for a client in a tough case made all the more maddening by Weinstock's stonewalling.

"From Day 1, he wasn't shaking hands like every other attorney," Zer said. "He was full of hate. Weinstock is screaming and yelling at me, and from there, it just rolled on.

"Every divorce case he takes becomes the nightmare from hell," Zer continued, his breathless narrative breaking up whenever other inmates, waiting to make calls, reached over his head and impatiently punched the buttons on his phone.

Indeed, to Curtis J. Farber, Zer's defense lawyer, Zer is an aggressive fighter in court, not a criminal. "We have divorced women calling on his behalf," he said. "They love him and feel he's a strong advocate for them."

Weinstock may have been an intransigent opponent, but Zer, a slight, handsome young man who wears his jet black hair parted raffishly in the middle, was no less difficult. During his battle with Weinstock, Zer froze the opposing lawyer's bank accounts and sued him for defamation.

The divorce and custody case at the heart of the men's quarrel has been before at least five Manhattan judges and after two and a half years has yet to be settled.

The two lawyers met and clashed over the breakup of the 1990 marriage between Aaron Joseph Unger, a 40-year-old Hasidic Jew from Borough Park, Brooklyn, and Pamela Bonsignore Unger, a 32-year-old former Catholic who had converted to Orthodox Judaism before being introduced to her husband by a rabbi at a Torah study class in the Catskills.

A handful of facts are actually not in dispute. Mr. Unger inherited and operated a nursing home on Manhattan's Lower East Side, which he lost in 1992. Soon after, the marriage soured and Mrs. Unger fled with their young son to room with a female friend in the Bronx.

Both Ungers have a history of psychiatric problems, their lawyers say. A Family Court judge gave custody of the boy to Mr. Unger, Weinstock's client.

Enter Zer, who said he spotted Mrs. Unger sobbing in the kitchen of his former law firm, Yerushalmi, Shiboleth, Yisraeli & Roberts, where she had been seeking a new lawyer. He offered to come to her rescue and get her custody of her son.

To what does Zer attribute what he sees as Weinstock's animus? Zer, explaining that he indeed succeeded in getting the boy returned to his mother, said, "It was a blow to Weinstock's ego that someone like me at 28 can do that."

That Zer is ambitious and bright is not in question. In a lawyers' directory, he has listed English, Hebrew, French and Thai as his languages; in Israel, where he was born and educated, prosecutors said, he had a high enough academic standing to postpone military service so he could finish law school.

A colleague at Yerushalmi, Shiboleth, where Zer worked for a year doing mostly commercial litigation, praised his work and demeanor.

But other lawyers portray Zer as excessively litigious and wont to fly off the handle. "He's a bully," said Jan Levien, a Manhattan matrimonial lawyer. "When he loses on the substance of a case, he goes after his adversary." (Zer sued Ms. Levien for defamation, because during an explosive divorce hearing, she used an anatomical reference to describe him to another lawyer in the courtroom.)

About a year ago, Zer left the firm and began to build up his matrimonial practice.

In the meantime, Unger vs. Unger grew exponentially in paperwork and rancor. Weinstock fought the custody ruling. Zer was convinced that the husband had stashed away millions of dollars.

Science tunes into mystery of music in man's brain

By Sandra Blakeslee
N.Y. Times News Service

A 61-year-old Canadian businessman, who asked that his name not be used, recently took his wife to a fancy restaurant to celebrate their wedding anniversary. As they sat down, he asked the musicians to play the couple's favorite song, "La Vie en Rose."

When the meal ended, the man turned to his wife and said: "I'm so sorry, darling. They didn't play our song."

She looked back sympathetically and said: "But they did play it. Three times."

Neither of them was really surprised.

Since suffering a stroke 15 years ago, the man has been afflicted with a rare condition called amusia. He cannot recognize any music or songs, however familiar they once were, though his speech and other auditory faculties are mostly normal. He can hear music, tap out the rhythm and dance to it, and even respond to it emotionally. But the music sounds weird and distorted, and he cannot distinguish Beethoven from Chuck Berry.

Patients like this man are helping neuroscientists plumb the mysteries of music in the human brain, raising questions whose answers are as deep and intricate as a Bach cantata:

How is music perceived by the brain, and which cells and circuits come into play?

Has music blossomed in the march of human evolution, becoming a uniquely human trait, or are other animals, such as songbirds, equally musical?

What is the relationship between language and music?

Why does music tap our emotions?

What makes a tune stick in our heads? What makes some people more musically talented than others? Are musicians' brains wired differently from other people's?

And, finally, a question asked by many parents: How does music influence a developing child's brain?

While many answers are being found with the help of brain imaging machines and experimental techniques, the question of how and why music arose in human evolution remains speculative.

The ability to perceive and enjoy music is an inborn human trait, said Dr. Mark Tramo, a neurobiologist at Harvard Medical School. While many animals use intricate sounds to recognize one another, attract mates and signal danger, humans have developed the richest musical repertoires of any species.

A crowning achievement of human evolution is the ability to communicate complex ideas and emotional states, Tramo said. The human brain has evolved specialized circuits, called feature detectors, for this purpose, which can be used to decode aspects of both speech and music. For example, the temporal lobes at both sides of the head contain cells that recognize and process pitch, which is the unitary pattern of frequencies that one hears when a musical instrument or the vocal cords are vibrated.

"Pitch is a part of grammar," Tramo said. "When you ask a question, the pitch rises. When you string individual speech sounds and sequences into sentences to express ideas, you begin to use pitch."

Pitch is also an integral part of music. When the brain listens to music, Tramo said, it uses many of the same pitch detectors that are used in decoding spoken language.

The first musical instrument was probably the human voice, Tramo said. As language flourished, so did music, with cultures inventing different kinds of resonators — flutes, reeds simple strings. While language was used to transmit knowledge, he said, music was used to promote social cohesion through shared tribal rituals.

Some scientists think that language and music are two sides of the same intellectual coin, a view supported by the anatomical distribution of feature detectors in the human brain. Cellular circuits that recognize language and music are found on both sides of the brain, said Dr. Jamshed Bharucha, a psychologist at Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H.

But the left hemisphere also contains regions that specialize exclusively in language and the right has some regions that exclusively serve musical perception, he said. In the brains of musical idiot savants — individuals who are talented musicians despite severe mental retardation — the dichotomy is especially pronounced.

N.Y. Times News Service

The Endangered Species Act, hailed by its supporters as the strongest conservation law in the world, has come under heavy criticism in Congress, and its future is in doubt.

Although the act seemed to champion odd creatures like the snail darter and the furbish lousewort, it has been used by conservationists for a broader purpose: protecting whole ecosystems and their associated plants and animals, as in the case of the spotted owl, whose protection may have saved the old growth forests of the Pacific Northwest.

This bold and effective use of the act affected loggers, landowners and property-rights advocates, who are seeking radical changes in the 22-year-old act that is now up for renewal.

One of the favored instruments of opponents of the act is a bill introduced last week by Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., that in effect would abolish the government's principal method of enforcing the law on private property: fines or imprisonment for those who destroy the habitat of an endangered species.

The bill would also eliminate other important protections of the law, including its objective of conserving "the ecosystems upon which endangered species and threatened species depend."

"The Gorton bill upends every aspect of the act," said John Kostyack, counsel for the National Wildlife Federation.

A memorandum by a Gorton aide that came to light last month shows that representatives of timber, mining, ranching and utility interests were heavily involved in drawing up the bill.

House Republicans are preparing their own bill. Meanwhile, another measure already passed by the House would require the government to compensate landowners whose property values are reduced by federal regulation, including those under the Endangered Species Act.
