Committee Takes Options For New Federal Building Sites

SUDDEN SINKING SPELL BELIEVED TAKING LIFE OF SOVEREIGN

SIX LOCATIONS APPROVED BY U. S. OFFICIALS

Meeting Tuesday Night To Prepare Data For Government

OWNERS TO ATTEND

New Step Taken in City's Program for New Edifice Here

Options on the sites recommended by government officials for the location of a new federal building in Wichita Falls will be taken at a special meeting between owners and a special committee at the chamber of commerce at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday night.

Descriptions and Prices

Owners of half a dozen possible locations have been asked to be present, and will be interviewed by the committee. Prices on the different sites, together with complete descriptions will be presented, and if owners are willing, the committee will begin the taking of options on all property involved. It was said that later meetings probably would be necessary to complete the tabulation of data on all the locations which are being considered. The options which are taken will be sent with the descriptions to John H. Bartlett, first assistant postmaster general at Washington, who visited Wichita Falls and looked over the ground here a few weeks ago.

It was emphasized by chamber of commerce officials that Tuesday night's meeting will make no recommendations and express no preference between the properties offered.

Committee Named

The committee for the taking of options was carefully and especially chosen, it was said, with a view to obtaining men would would be representative of the combined interests of all citizens of Wichita Falls.

Charles T. Francis, president of the chamber of commerce; Orville Bullington, first vice president of the same organization; W. S. Curless, chairman of the city zoning commission; Roscoe Staton, appointed from the real estate board at the request of the chamber of commerce, and O. P. Maricle, postmaster, make up the committee which meets Tuesday night.

The city is hoping for the erection of a $1,000,000 edifice if the government looks with favor upon the offers and conditions here. Members of the option committee expressed themselves as being optimistic regarding the outcome of Wichita Falls' efforts for a new federal building. The sites were designated and prices asked for governmental consideration by federal experts who visited Wichita Falls and looked over the ground a few weeks ago.

Airmail Pilots Cheat Death Itself To Obey Their Unwritten Law—'Get The Mail Through At Any Cost'

When Death Played Hide and Seek

"The air was a wisp of fog . . . Suddenly I saw the long, upraised hand of the Statue of Liberty ahead. I swung to the north, got my bearings and swept past to the open sea." That was a tense moment for Major Wesley L. Smith (right), veteran airmail pilot, who tells about it in this story.

Editor's Note: Every day, every night death rides in the airmail lanes, hiding and seek among the clouds with the daring pilots who whisk your letter through the skies for a five-cent postage stamp. Here is the first of five stories in which Major Wesley L. Smith, superintendent of the New York-to-Chicago division of the transcontinental airmail service, tells of the dangers faced by flyers in the airmail service. Nearly since 1919, Major Smith has flown a half million miles, or a distance of 20 times around the earth.

(By NEA Service)

Death rides the air lanes where the airmail wings its way. His fingers clutch from the fog, the storms, the lightning, the ice clouds. His score is 40 of the finest pilots America has trained in this new science of riding the skies.

But the times he has clutched at empty air are legion, for the daring youths who fly the skies have learned through grim experience to outwit their foe and outguess his moods.

Battling the fogs, the storms and the ice has become their business. Squeezing their planes between clouds and mountain tops, riding high, or roaring up valleys between the hills, are all part of the day's work.

Danger rides with them. Gambling with death is the spice which seasons the monotony of the long rides alone through the skies, under blazing suns, through blanket-like fogs, or riding high above the beacon lights which pick out the course at night.

The story of their brushes with death and the high degree of courage with which they battle their old time foe is almost an epic. And the story of Major Wesley L. Smith, one of the original airmail flyers and now superintendent of the eastern division of National Air Transport company, is typical of them all. He is in charge of airmail operations on the New York-Chicago division of the transcontinental airmail route. His headquarters are at Cleveland, O.

3000 Hours in Air

Smith is a war-trained pilot, a veteran of 5000 hours in the air, during which he has flown the equivalent of 20 times the distance around the world.

For eight years he flew the airmail, first on the original New York-Washington route and then on the "hell stretch" over the Pennsylvania mountain leg of the transcontinental route, the worst stretch of flying country in the United States. Still flies it, in fact if the emergency arises and he is needed.

He has crashed his plane on mountain tops, fought through the ice clouds to the clear air above where the stars kept him company; fought fire more than a mile high and brought his ship down safely—and lives to tell the story. A tale the fictionists couldn't imagine if they tried, yet a true tale of the dangers and the heroism of the men who fly the airmail.

Smith, who attended the University of California, was a war-trained flyer and a veteran of a summer of aerial barnstorming when he joined the airmail service. His first flight with the mail might have been his last.

Lost in the Fog

That was in the days of the original New York-Washington airmail route. He had left the Belmont

'LAME DUCKS' MEET TODAY

Big Issues Face Short Term Of Congress

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. (AP)—A bristling batch of unfinished business and the regular load of routine labor awaits the reassembling tomorrow of the 70th congress for its concluding term, ending March the 4.

Only the perfunctory formal opening with its roll call and immediate adjournment out of respect to members who have died during the recess is on schedule for tomorrow. Tuesday the last annual message of President Coolidge to congress will be transmitted and then the decks will be clear for the three months session.

But even before the senate swings into action again on the pending Swing-Johnson bill for construction of a dam on the Colorado river at Boulder Canyon and the house takes up the first of the appropriation bills, leaders will be busy tomorrow conferring on the fate of two well-known campaign issues—farm relief and tariff revision.

As soon as the house concludes its opening meeting, the Republican members of the ways and means committee will meet to determine if they shall undertake the upward revision of the tariff promised by their party heads in the campaign and, if so, when.

Leaders of both the senate and house also are scanning their calendars to find a place for action at this session on a farm relief marketing bill designed to meet the wishes of President Coolidge who last session vetoed the McNary-Haugen measure.

BYRD LEAVES WORLD'S 'EDGE'

Explorer Sails for Base Of Antarctic Journey

WELLINGTON, N. Z., Dec. 2. (AP)—Commander Richard E. Byrd and an advance party of 30 left Dunedin for the antarctic early today aboard the supply ship Eleanor Bolling which had in tow another supply ship. The party will establish a base in the Bay of Whales and remain there while the Eleanor Bolling returns to Dunedin for the remainder of the personnel and equipment.

The happiest man in these parts today probably is Dr. Vaclov Voutech, a young Czechoslovakian geologist whose original application to join the expedition was refused. Voutech was so keen for the trip, however, that he journeyed to Wellington, arriving soon after Commander Byrd. He renewed his plea and now has been given a place on the Eleanor Bolling when she makes her next trip South.

EXPEDITION FACES 2,000-MILE TRIP

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. (AP)—Nearly 2,000 miles of ocean lie between Commander Richard E. Byrd and his immediate objective, the Ross Sea ice barrier of the antarctic continent.

As the stout little Barque City of New York and the freighter Eleanor Bolling cast off from their Dunedin wharf and pointed southward, they faced a voyage that is among the most difficult on the globe.

For a few hundred miles they should have comparatively easy sailing toward the glaciated south polar continent which now is enjoying its poor apology for summer. But sooner or later the expedition ships will bump into the ice pack, that shifting blanket which shrouds the sea for vast distances off the shores of Antarctica.

By CAPT. F. E. KLEINSCHMIDT
Special Correspondent of the Record News and Daily Times and head of expedition to home of Santa Claus

EN ROUTE TO THE NORTH Pole, (By Wireless) Dec. 2—We are making splendid progress and Mrs. Kleinschmidt and I are delighted with the trip so far. After taking off we flew almost directly north and have kept steadily at it.

As Mrs. Kleinschmidt is an experienced pilot she has taken her turns at the controls and thus we have gotten our rest. The cabin of our plane which we have decided to call "The Santa Claus Special" is so roomy and comfortable that we have been getting along in great shape.

In Snow Storm

As I am sending this message we are flying about 6,000 feet above Canada and "Red" Garland is following closely. Already the air is very cold and we are fortunate in having our Eskimo parkas, made of reindeer skins, with us.

Saturday night we got into a snow storm and had to climb to about 10,000 feet in order to get above it. The plane is functioning perfectly and we are confident we will get through the long flight in first class shape.

We have the sky practically to ourselves. Before leaving the United State we did see a couple of mail planes. They waggled their wings in greeting to us and we waved back. Since then we have not seen any airplanes. There isn't any traffic problem up here where we are.

As I told your reporter when we took off, we intend to fly to the southern tip of Hudson Bay to

WEAKENING OF KING'S HEART CAUSES ALARM

Decline in Strength Causes 'Anxiety,' Says Latest Bulletin

PHYSICIANS RECALLED

Two New Specialists Called To Bedside of Stricken Ruler

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE
Record News Special Cable

LONDON, Dec. 3. (Monday) (UE)—King George V of Great Britain is believed to be on his death bed.

At this hour, three o'clock in the morning, with two physicians, Sir Stanley Hewett and Lord Dawson of Penn known to be in attendance, and perhaps others, and with the duke of York in the sick room, besides Queen Mary and with every cabinet member told of the king's grave condition, the best that can be learned officially from the palace is:

"So far as it is humanly possible to say, there is no valid reason for a change in his majesty's condition within the next 12 hours."

The prince of Wales, who will succeed to the throne in event of the king's death—very likely under the name of Edward VIII is aboard the cruiser Enterprise, 6,000 miles distant.

Never before in English history has the successor to the throne been so far away from the ancient coronation chair of Westminster when death's intervention summoned him to the crown.

The king's sudden sinking spell, which was first revealed today, came on the 13th day of the illness called by his physicians, plastic pleurisy.

Third Bulletin

At 10 minutes past midnight the physicians to King George issued their third bulletin since Sunday morning, the official statement this time being signed by two famous specialists in addition to Lord Dawson of Penn and Sir Stanley Hewett. The bulletin reads:

"His majesty, the king, has had some sleep during the past three hours. Further consultation confirms the opinion expressed in the last bulletin and in spite of the improvement in the lung, the anxiety concerning the strength of his heart persists.

Signed:
"Hewett,

"F. Farquhar Buzzard,

Altus Man Bags Quail Limit Shooting With One Arm

ALTUS, Okla., Dec. 2.—Nursing a badly slashed arm is not so much fun, but it could be worse, is the belief of Roy Mann, local sportsman, who finds that it is still possible for him to go hunting.

Holding a gun in his right hand and being unable to use the left one, Mann bagged the limit of quail in a hunt this week.

Mann's hand was seriously slashed accidentally while he and other men were dressing a deer they killed on a recent hunting trip.

ALTUS YOUTHS DROWN IN LAKE

Two Boys Lost As Boat Overturns

Special to The Record News.

ALTUS, Okla., Dec. 2—Ralph Killman, 17, and Robert Green, 16, high school sophomores of Altus, were drowned about noon today when a small rowboat in which they were attempting to cross the city water reservoir in the outskirts of the city filled with water from high waves and sank near the middle of the lake in 18 feet of water.

Vernon Hess, 17, also of this city, had gone to the scene with the two boys as the three were taking a Sunday hike together, and remained on the bank while Killman and Green embarked in the small boat as a pleasure stunt. Attracted by the shouts of his comrades, he saw the boat settling rapidly as it neared the middle of the lake where the waves, driven by a high wind were highest, and as it sank, dived into the water and swam to the spot where the boat went down. Neither Killman nor Green was a good swimmer, and before Hess could reach the place both had gone down. Hastening to a nearby power house, Hess summoned aid.

Will Drag Not

Late this afternoon neither body had been recovered and preparations were being made to drag the lake, which is of about 150 acre area, with grappling hooks. Failure to locate the bodies by diving or dragging will mean the draining of the reservoir, which it is said could not be completed before Wednesday.

Killman is the son of J. S. Killman, who resides about nine miles from Altus, and Mrs. F. E. Pauley of this city. He is survived also by four brothers and three sisters, one of whom, Mrs. O. M. Marshall, lives in Kellar, Texas. Green's parents are Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Green. Dr. Green is practicing dentistry in Altus. Besides the parents, one brother and two sisters survive. Dr. Green with his family moved here about five years ago from Sentinel, Okla.

Fourth Recent Fatality

With the loss of two lives in today's tragedy, the total fatalities in Altus as a result of accidents during the last eight days numbered four, with a fifth person critically injured. On Sunday, Nov. 25, at about the same hour at which young Killman and Green were drowned today, Bartow Huff and Roy Ware fell 5,000 feet in Huff's plane, crashing in a field near this city. Ware died the following morning, while Huff is said to be on his way to recovery. On Wednesday, Charley Pair, retired farmer of Altus, was struck by an automobile at a down town street crossing and died two hours later in a local hospital.

TWO PIONEERS FOUND INJURED IN BUILDING

H. B. Hines and F. R. Bolen Blood Covered When Discovered

POLICE PROBE CASE

Officers Fail to Find Any Weapon at Rooms Downtown

Police were trying to determine Sunday night who wielded a knife which slashed the face of H. B. Hines, pioneer Wichita Falls man, and cut and seriously injured Forrest R. Bolen, barber, who were found blood covered on the second floor at 707½ Ohio avenue shortly after 10 o'clock.

At the Wichita General hospital where ambulances rushed the injured men, Bolen was found to be suffering from contusions, minor cuts and possibly internal injuries. Several stitches were required to close the deep gash in Hines' face.

At midnight the police had made no arrests and had not ascertained whether a third person was responsible for the wounding of the two men.

Lee Payton, proprietor of the Elk hotel located on the third floor of the building, heard noises on the floor below. On investigating, he found the two injured men and was told by Hines to call an ambulance.

Officers Bentley, Timmons, Belcher and Roberson answered the call along with the Merkle ambulances and the injured men were carried to the hospital.

Bolen Beaten

When the police arrived they found Bolen lying face down on the floor in a hallway, apparently lifeless. Hines was huddled in a corner of his room with the blood from his face caked over the lower part of his face and his clothing. He could scarcely talk. The officers said Bolen's head was severely beaten and that he had apparently been stomped. He is a small man, weighing about 90 pounds.

A search failed to locate a knife or any other weapon.

Whether Bolen was suffering from broken bones or internal injuries was not determined Sunday night and it was deemed advisable to allow him to rest until morning before making x-ray pictures. Both men were given emergency treatment, Hines' face having been slashed to the bone so as to expose the teeth under his upper lip.

Hines Pioneer Here

Hines is one of the best known long time residents of Wichita Falls and still owns much of the extensive city property which he acquired in the early days. He is the owner of the Hines building, the St. James hotel building and other downtown property.

Bolen has been in the barber business here for many years and has taught many barbers of this section their trade in his barber school. Recently he formed a new partnership in the Bolen and Cooke shop.

Hines and Bolen were said Sunday night to have known each other for a number of years and Bolen has rented building space at various times from Hines.

After the examination Sunday night, Hines was ordered held in the hospital.

Confessed Two-Gun Train Bandit Captured After Sensational Holdup

MONROE, La., Dec. 2. (AP)—A ruse by officers led to the arrest today of a 22-year-old man who confessed, the sheriff announced, that he was the daring two-gun bandit who held up an Illinois Central passenger train near here last night and escaped with money and jewelry.

Sheriff Milton Coverdale said today, after questioning the suspect, C. T. (Blondy) Woodson, that he admitted holding up the train alone and obtaining a small quantity of money and two watches but denied firing a shot which entered the neck of a passenger.

Currency totaling $46.20, a woman's wrist watch and an inexpensive man's watch were found on his person. The sheriff said he was confident the additional loot, amounting to several thousand dollars, had been hidden somewhere.

Members of the train crew and passengers will be brought here tomorrow, the sheriff said, to identify Woodson as the man who held up the train and fired and shot.

After the holdup, in which scores of passengers were terrorized, officers arranged to have a number

WAR PENSIONS CUT BY DEATH

West's Report Gives Varied Information

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. (AP)—The news that the union armies of the sixties had been cut 15,000 in a year by the toll of time is placed in a maze of statistics alongside the material fact that there are 30,000,000 acres of coal lands in the United States and Alaska, capable of producing 200,000,000 tons, the annual report of Secretary West of the interior department.

Humane and material considerations both find space in the bulky volume which contains information sufficient to give many a member of congress enough work to keep him busy for the short session, with its reports on Indian affairs, reclamation, national parks and a myriad of other subjects with which this busy branch of the government must deal.

Speaking in figures going up to the hundreds of millions involved in its multitude of activities, the department's bureau of pensions shows that it distributed from the government's chest last fiscal year the sum of $244,222,970, of which $183,965,672 was paid in pensions to veterans and their dependents, while $14,761,616 went to retired government employes.

Besides these figures which so certainly show the passing of an old order, the report shows that 164,708 Spanish war veterans, whose membership as a whole still is robust, have been taking under the government's protecting wing, but the largest army of American veterans—those of the world war—is being looked out for by the independent veterans bureau.

Humane Efforts

The report of Secretary West emphasizes the humane along with the material effort under his own direction and that of Dr. Hubert Work, who resigned to become head of the Republican National committee.

Stressing the need for a new definite policy for the administration of Indian affairs and reporting a general healthy condition on the federal reclamation projects, Secretary West declares that those two subjects represent the most pressing subjects under the interior department.

"The department looks to the establishment of closer cooperation between the states having Indian populations and the federal government," the report continues. "Probably states should ultimately assume complete responsibility for the Indians within their borders, but pending that time there is much to be done by the federal service."

Settlers on 22 of the 24 reclamation projects repaid $5,299,149 during the year and Secretary West attributes this to the general prosperity on the projects and to the new terms of payment established for delinquents under the relief act of 1926.

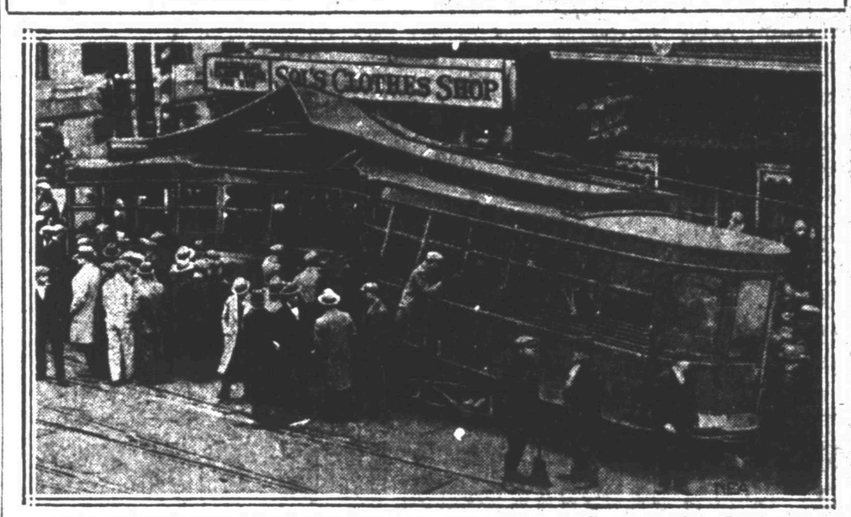

Settlers Still Needed

Crops valued at $133,207,210 have been grown on the projects comprising 1,956,910 irrigable acres developed at a cost of $175,116,945, while settlers are still needed on 160,000 acres. Works under construction involve an expenditure of $80,000,000 out of the bureau of reclamation's revolving fund of $166,000,000.

Studies by the geological survey, disclosed that in this country and Alaska, 65 developed oil and gas fields are producing 33,000,000 barrels of oil annually. It added that there are 4,000,000 acres of oil shale from which 60,000,000,000 barrels of oil may be produced.

The national park service has under consideration establishment of flying fields in the national parks and Secretary West has called a conference of park and railroad officials to make plans for the development.

ELKS LODGES HOLD SERVICES

Burk and Wichita Bodies In Annual Memorials

Annual memorial services of the Elks lodges in Wichita Falls and Burkburnett were held Sunday, the local meeting being at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, while that in Burkburnett occurred at 11 o'clock Sunday morning at the Presbyterian church.

Eulogies of the five members of the Wichita Falls lodge who have died during the last year were given by E. F. Fruechte, exalted ruler, when the following names on the roll brought no answer: B. H. Day, W. S. Tyson, N. N. Trent, J. W. Bradley, and C. B. Hunt.

Judge William H. Atwell, past grand exalted ruler, and C. K. Johnson were the speakers of the day. Judge Atwell gave a review of the origin and history of the order, while Mr. Johnson devoted his remarks to a commendation of the principles upon which it is founded.

The program was opened with a piano solo by James Youngblood. Following the invocation pronounced by A. L. Huey, Joseph Rabinowitz gave a violin solo. Mrs. P. M. Cordell, Mrs. Ray Wilhite, Mrs. C. H. Evans and Mrs. J. E. Stratton, accompanied by Miss Lorene Tucker, sang Sidney Homer's setting of "Requiem," written by Robert Louis Stevenson as his own memorial. The officers of the lodge conducted the ritual of closing the lodge.

Mr. Fruechte was the principal speaker in the morning memorial service at Burkburnett. Dr. O. T. Kimbrough of this city, and formerly of Burkburnett, also assisted in the service there, singing "Auld Lang Syne." Other features of the program were an introductory march played by Mrs. Pat Morrison; the opening ode sung by the lodge members; invocation pronounced by the chaplain; "O Dry Those Tears," sung by Miss La Nette Haynes; a reading by Mrs. C. W. Henderson; "The Vacant Chair," sung by Pat Morrison, and the closing hymn, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," sung by the congregation.

Besides the membership of the two lodges, it was reported that visitors attended the services in large numbers. A number of Burkburnett members visited the Wichita Falls lodge for the afternoon meeting here, while several from Wichita Falls were present with their fellow Elks at Burkburnett at the morning hour.

Another Wichita Man Testifies

Wife Gains on Orga[tone], "Wouldn't Be Without It," He Says

Still another well known Wichita Falls man comes forward with his unqualified endorsement for Orgatone. This time it is J. R. Terry, who resides at 1020 Bond street, that city.

"My wife has actually improved so much since she started taking Orgatone that it is almost unbelievable," said Mr. Terry in an interview recently. "And has been benefitted so much in every way that I am glad to make this statement, which I hope will be the cause of others who may be suffering as she did getting relief.

"She had been in such a run-down condition for the past 15 years that she felt like she should have been in bed most of the time. She was subject to frequent attacks of dizziness and sick headaches. She also suffered intense pain from the gas on her stomach, and she was habitually constipated. She had a tired achy feeling all the time, which left her so weak she could hardly stand up.

"She has been wonderfully benefitted by Orgatone. In fact, I consider it remarkable the way she has been built up, for she is almost like a different person. She has been relieved entirely of stomach trouble, headaches and that achy feeling. I am delighted more than I can tell with what Orgatone has done for her, and we would not be without it now for anything. It is by far the best medicine she has ever taken."

Genuine Orgatone is sold in Wichita Falls exclusively by the Allison Drug Store, under the personal direction of a special Orgatone representative who is meeting the public daily. Out of town customers supplied promptly by mail upon receipt of price one bottle $1.25 or six bottles for $6.25.—Adv.

Sheriff's Forses Make Two Liquor Catches

Three charges of violation of the national prohibition act will be filed before United States Commissioner Lants Monday as a result of the activities of Sheriff W. G. Eralley and his department Sunday.

From a house two miles southeast of town three gallons of whiskey, 50 bottles of beer, and 20 gallons of beer mash were taken. Two arrests were made. A Lamar avenue raid brought another beer and whiskey catch. Charges against the owner of the liquor will be filed Monday morning, the sheriff said.

Garner Ready to Lend His Help To Realizing Hoover's Farm Plans

By CHAS. F. HAYDEN
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—Unlike some of his colleagues in the senate Representative J. N. Garner of Texas, ranking minority member of the ways and means committee as well as prospective leader of the Democrats in the next congress, has expressed his willingness to cooperate with the Hoover forces in congress to bring about enactment of farm legislation, revision of the agricultural tariff schedules and such bills as necessary to promote development of inland waterways at this session. The Texas congressman arrived Saturday and issued a statement which, while he insists expresses his own views only, probably will form the basis of action by the Democrats in the house.

Some of the senate Democrats have taken the position that it might be good party strategy to join with senators from industrial states of the East to block farm relief and thus force the incoming administration to call a special session in accordance with the promise made by Mr. Hoover during the campaign. This, it is urged, would mean a general revision of the tariff as the first major act of the administration. House Democrats, however, feel that if the revision of the tariff is postponed a year it will go into effect on the eve of the next general election which, generally, has proven disastrous to the party in power.

Garner's Statement

The statement made by Congressman Garner is as follows:

"Speaking only for myself we are anxious and willing to be helpful in carrying out farm relief and especially do we think that the three major things suggested by President-elect Hoover can be accomplished during the next three months. They are: Farm relief, with ample funds to enable it to function; revision of the agricultural tariff schedules upward, equal to the consideration already given manufactured articles; and, to put on a substantial and progressive basis inland water ways development in order to help reduce transportation charges on products of the farm.

"As I recall, these were the three principal methods which Mr. Hoover stated he would favor in case of his election to the presidency, and we are willing to help put them on the statute books during the next three months.

"I believe the Democratic policy should be liberal and always constructive, and when the administration suggests something beneficial, that we should cooperate wholeheartedly, and that when we criticise we offer something definite in place of the measure so criticised; that we oppose with no suggestion of remedy only when the principle involved is violative of what we consider to be a fundamental of government.

Time Is Limited

"I am sure we will not have the time to revise all of the tariff schedules at the short session of congress, but that we would be able to give farm relief by increasing or establishing tariff rates on those commodities, and give Mr. Hoover cooperation upon the matter which he suggested.

"The house can pass these matters within a very few days. I cannot speak for the senate.

"There is no occasion for a special session of congress if Mr. Hoover's suggestions are accepted now, but without this legislation then undoubtedly Mr. Hoover will be compelled to have an extra session, if he keeps faith with the American people.

"The entire tariff law will have to be revised sooner or later, of course, and, the sooner the better. But since the country has endured the present law, which is the highest ever written, it seems possible that it could endure it for one year more, and take it up during the first session of the seventy-first congress if the farmer is given relief now."

Two-Gun Train Robber Caught

of automobiles driven along the roads leading to Monroe in the belief that the holdup man would ask for a ride.

About 3 o'clock this morning one of the drivers was accosted by Woodson seeking a ride. Permission was granted readily. When they reached the city limits of West Monroe a deputy sheriff who had been on guard for hours placed Woodson under arrest.

He was brought to the parish jail here and questioned by the sheriff this morning. Woodson formerly worked here and at El Dorado, Ark., as a bricklayer, but had been out of work for some time.

Threatens Engineer

Last night the holdup man boarded the train No. 203 bound for Shreveport here. Several miles west of Monroe he raised up from the engine tender and at the point of a gun forced the engineer, S. B. Delee, to halt the train. The negro fireman and the breakman, however, escaped and went through the train to warn passengers of the attack.

"You fire her. I can drive this train," came a stern command to the engineer and the bandit-driven train sped on to Forksville, a way station 15 miles from Monroe.

Halting the train and forcing the engineer to accompany him as far back as the first day coach, the robber encountered S. E. Frisby and ordered him to gather the money, watches and jewels.

Conductor Frisby, unarmed and powerless, passed the hat through the entire length of the train, even arousing passengers from their berths in the sleeping coaches.

K. M. Blount, a Memphis traveling salesman, received a bullet wound in the neck when he failed to turn over a watch in addition to his wallet. "I think I'll just kill you now," the robber was quoted as saying. No one else was injured.

A private funeral car was unmolested.

After the holdup the train completed its trip to Shreveport.

Hot Cake Champion Establishes Mark

BELLEVUE, Neb., Dec. 2. (US)—Another who's who in the log of the world's champions was added here when John R. Hughes, of this city, won the catch-as-catch-can hot cakes and sausage title.

Hughes won the stack of wheats championship by half a buckwheat cake, a mouthful of sausage and a tablespoonful of syrup.

The loser in the contest, sponsored by the American legion post, of Bellevue, was Pete Cockrell, who acknowledged defeat when his last mouthful of cakes and sausage failed to find a passageway to his stomach.

The official score stood:

	Cakes	Sausage	Coffee
Hughes	25	14	2
Cockrell	21	12	1

MAIL PILOTS DEFY DEATH

Veteran Airman Tells Of Experiences

Park, N. J., terminal headed for Washington, with bad weather ahead, planning to follow the Long Island shore, hop the bay to Jersey coast and then strike inland to Washington.

It was his first experience with bad weather flying. He set his ship on its course, plowing through fog banks and showers of rain. When he had been on his way 30 minutes, he looked below hoping to sight the bay. There was nothing below but fog.

Then housetops and church spires began to flash by, too close below for comfort or safety. He was off his course, flying over the housetops of Brooklyn.

"There was nothing to do but plunge on, dodging the high buildings if I could," Smith says. "Luck was with me. I found myself over the river and headed down the bay.

"The air was a soup of fog. Below I could hear the whistles of tugs and far away the clatter of the 'L' trains over the bridges. My goal was the Statue of Liberty. If I could find that, I could point my way down the bay and to the Jersey coast."

Dodges Statue of Liberty

The statue looms up large on Bedice's Island on a clear day. It is a different matter to find it from the air, when the air is full of fog and rain and you can't see where you're headed.

"Suddenly, I saw the long upraised hand of Liberty ahead," Smith says. "I swung to the north, got my bearings and swept past toward the open sea and the Jersey coast, waving a farewell to the Goddess as I passed. I was on my course again and the rest of the journey passed without incident."

On another occasion while still flying the New York-Washington route, Smith lost the ground soon after he left Baltimore, heading north for New York. For three hours, he flew blind through clouds and snow flurries, bound for the Newark, N. J., field, then the northern terminus of the route.

Knows Towns by Smells

But he overestimated the strength of a head wind and when he found a hole in the clouds and dove down to land he found himself in country covered with snow. He was at Orange, Conn., straight on his course, but he had overshot Newark by 40 miles.

Such "blind" flying is part of the airmail pilot's business today. He will battle fog and storms for hours on his course, if only he is assured of an even chance to land his plane at the end of the journey.

Their instruments keep them flying level and at a safe altitude, even though the fogs hem them in like a blanket. Some times they find their way home by the smells of the towns they are headed for. Many an airmail pilot has found the Chicago field by the smell of the stockyards. They know by the pungent odor of the oil refineries when they are passing Baltimore.

Next: Eight thousand feet up in a flaming plane.

Being Principal in Kidnaping Trial Proves Ideal to Young Mr. Ranieri

Boy 'Monarch' So Important He Has Personal Guard of Eight Cops, and School? Not for Billy!

CHICAGO, Dec. 2. (UP)—For pomp and attention, seven-year-old King Michael, of Rumania, doesn't have a thing on 10-year-old Billy Ranieri, of Chicago.

King Michael was born to fame; Billy Ranieri earned his. Cautious elders shield the Rumanian monarch from the glare of too much publicity; the Chi. "o "monarch" is allowed to bask in the rays of his distinguished position.

Wherever Billy Ranieri goes eight uniformed policemen go with him. Along toward 5 o'clock on these early winter afternoons the kids in Montana street gather at the curbstone and shout to one another:

"'Bout time for Billy to come along. Better wait."

In a few minutes a big police squad car rolls down the street, and there among the blue coats sits Billy Ranieri proudly acknowledging the greetings.

The police car stops in front of Frank Ranieri's house and Billy gets out and goes in.

"Hey, Billy, hi there, Billy. Wanna play football?"

Too Important to Play

"Hello," says Billy, pushing out his chest and running his hands down into the pockets of his new long pants. But he doesn't take much interest in football. He is too important now for childish things like that.

The eight policemen get out of the car and deploy about the Ranieri home. They wait there until morning when the squad car comes back and Billy is carried away again.

One of the things that make Billy Ranieri such a hero is that he doesn't have to go to school. Instead, he spends his days as the center of attention in a large criminal court room down in the loop where two men and a 16-year-old boy are on trial for their lives, charged with kidnaping Billy and holding him for $10,000 ransom.

The kidnaping, which occurred last summer, was the beginning of Billy Ranieri's fame. Billy was on his way home from summer school several months ago when two men in an automobile invited him to take a ride. He accepted and they took him down in the country and kept him there for 13 days. During that period, the city of Chicago was all but turned upside down in a frantic search. Every day his father received a mysterious letter or call telling him that unless he paid the kidnapers $10,000, Billy would be murdered.

On a farm near Bourbonnais, Ill., Billy was enjoying the first of his many adventures. He was locked up at night, but in the day time he was allowed to play in the yard with the farmer's children. Billy had never been on a farm before. His father was a real estate dealer and owned nothing but city lots.

Then one day the farmer, Andrew Cappellano, a defendant in the kidnaping trial, gave Billy a $10 bill and told him to walk to a nearby oil station and say that he was Billy Ranieri, of Chicago. Billy did and was restored to his parents.

Later Billy was taken for an airplane ride all over northern Illinois in the hope that he could identify the farm on which he had been held captive. When it was found Cappellano and his boy, Tony, and Angelo Petitti, were arrested and brought to trial.

But that did not stop the threats against Billy's life and hence the ever-present body guard.

Billy is trying to keep up with his studies by bringing his textbooks to court and by reciting during recess periods before Assistant State's Attorney Sam Huffman, one of Billy's former school masters.

Civil Service To Banish Sharpsters

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. (US)—"No crooks need apply."

This, figuratively, is the sign posted by the civil service commission in establishing a system whereby eventually everyone entering the federal civil service will be fingerprinted.

The fingerprint system has been installed in some 250 cities throughout the nation and already is proving its worth. An applicant for employment in the Philadelphia postoffice was found to be under indictment for a hold-up in Los Angeles. Another, applying at the Detroit postoffice, was revealed as having served a sentence at Leavenworth for embezzlement from the Cleveland postoffice.

Kleinschmidt On Way to Pole

Moose factory, a Hudson Bay post. We will land there to take on additional supplies of fuel. Then we will follow the western shore of Hudson Bay to Cape Churchill, where the last outpost of the Hudson Bay company is located. From here we will take a N. N. W. course for Bathurst inlet on Coronation gulf, and if conditions are favorable, not stop but cross Coronation gulf and land at the southern shore of Victoria land. This is the home of the blond Eskimos of which you have heard, and I have many friends there who will be waiting for me and I will be quite at home.

Search For Santa

We will leave the two airplanes here in the hands of two capable mechanics ready for the return journey, and secure dog teams and reindeer and with Eskimo drivers will proceed in search of Santa's home.

While my wife has been at the controls I have gotten my camera in shape for action so I will be able to get some good pictures when the subjects present themselves. There is a motion picture camera in the equipment and it is possible I will have an opportunity to take some interesting scenes with it. At any rate there will be some good snapshots which I will wireless back to The Record News and Daily Times within the next few days.

You will remember that when Mrs. Kleinschmidt was coaxing me to bring her, she said something about wanting to cook my meals. That is funny, as we look at it now.

Neither of us has eaten any hot food since we left. We have had hot coffee, of course, which we brought in thermos bottles. But the only food we have had or cared for is a few sandwiches. There are too many things to watch, about the plane and about the country we are flying over, to give us time to think about food.

We just crossed a river which is frozen over. That gives some idea of how cold it is. Men were cutting ice out of it and hauling the ice away with horses. It must be at least 20 below zero. And the air up here where we are is colder than that. But fortunately our cabin is tightly closed and heated by the exhaust of the engine.

The snow storm has been the most serious difficulty we have encountered, but it wasn't nearly as bad as sleet would have been. And of course it is too cold for sleet. You may remember how much trouble Lindbergh had with sleet when he was making his Atlantic flight. But snow doesn't stick to the wings when the weather is as cold as it is here and the snow didn't bother us beyond making it difficult to see far ahead. But we watched the altimeter to make sure that we didn't run into any mountains and everything has been lovely.

I will send another story for The Daily Times Monday afternoon and by that time I am sure there will be more to report.

LOWER AUTO LEVY SOUGHT

Tax Collectors to Meet In Dallas This Week

Members of a committee representing the county tax collectors of the state will meet in Dallas some time this week to draft a law advocating a reduction in the cost of automobile licenses and the institution of a three-cent state gasoline tax, Guy C. Raley, chairman of the committee, said Sunday night.

The meeting was first planned for Monday, but no official notification has not yet reached the members from the president of the tax collectors association, Mr. Raley said. Unless the call comes early Monday morning, the meeting will probably be held Friday or Saturday of this week, he said. Last minute news may bring the eight committee members together in Dallas by Monday night, but the chairman is not expecting such a development.

At a convention of county tax collectors last summer, plans for asking the legislature to reduce and graduate automobiles license costs, to leave the money collected in the county where the car is registered, and to let the state get its money through a 3-cent gasoline tax were adopted. The committee then appointed, with Mr. Raley at its head, will draft the proposed bill and support its adoption when the legislature meets in January.

"We suggest that high priced cars be assessed about $15, and that the price be reduced to around $5 for the least expensive makes," the collector explained.

Constantly we are finding new and better ways of doing things

THE new Ford was a good car when it was first introduced. It is a better car today. Constantly we are finding new and better ways of doing things. Ceaselessly, untiringly, our engineers are working for the improvement of the car. Every new idea that seems to promise advancement is studied and tested in every conceivable way.

Not only in the laboratory, but out on the road in actual running. As soon as we are sure of its value we put it into the car.

The result is an automobile that is always new. There is no such thing as saving improvements for a yearly model designed to speed up sales or capture a passing fancy.

No matter when you buy a new Ford—in January, May, August or December—you know that it embodies every latest development that has proved sound and good.

You know more than this. You know that in design, materials and workmanship it is the best car that can possibly be made at a low price. The deciding thought behind every move is not sales or profits—but "What will give the most service to the public?"

Our whole effort is toward simplicity—to give you complete, well-rounded performance with the least amount of machinery and without sacrificing quality anywhere along the line. You cannot make a complicated car at a low price without cutting corners somewhere.

The new Ford is a truly great car because it brings you a proved, sensible balance of every essential feature of an automobile. No one part has been over-developed at the expense of another.

You get remarkable acceleration and smoothness at all speeds. You get speed of 55 to 65 miles an hour. You get uncommon power and hill-climbing ease. You get reliability and economy of operation that will save you many dollars in the up-keep of your car.

You get more than this . . . a fully enclosed, silent six-brake system—four Houdaille hydraulic shock absorbers—Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield—the full and immediate advantage of many improvements developed exclusively by the Ford Motor Company.

Arrange now to see the new Ford and know the thrill of driving it. Judge it not only on acceleration, power and speed, but also on safety, comfort, ease of control, reliability, economy—on its long life and the security of its trade-in value.

You will know then that today, more truly than ever before, there is nothing quite like the new Ford in design, quality and price.

The Day Book of a New Yorker

By GRANT DIXON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—After an existence of 72 years, house wreckers are now demolishing the old brown stone courthouse in City Hall park at Center street. This in itself is not of great importance, but history tells us that some of the most famous criminal trials ever held in this county were tried in this old pile.

For more than 40 years all the best legal talent in the city was at one time or another called as counsel to defend some one whose life or liberty was at stake. Some 34 years ago the city had outgrown the cramped quarters of the building, and erected a new one bounded by Center, Franklin, White and Worth streets, a few blocks away.

In the new building many important trials were held, but criminal history really was written for the record back in the day when two parts of the court took care of all the criminal business in New York, which then included what is now Bronx county. A handful of assistant district attorneys did the work of putting bad men in jail. Now there are nine parts of the criminal courts to take care of Manhattan alone. Of course, the population and the character of the gangster has changed in these many years. The enlarged criminal court facilities are needed to cope with the underworld, which has grown amazingly in the past few years.

New York's famous Whyo gang, the first and best of its kind following the civil war, met its defeat in the brown stone courthouse. It was here that its last member was convicted, walking back to the Tombs prison, then as now at Center and Franklin streets, and there was hanged. It was the last execution in New York City. In those days the city maintained a horse-drawn wagon to convey prisoners from court to prison, but frequently these men were walked. It is a queer part of the story of those times that of the hundreds so paraded through the streets only three or four escaped, and it is written that they paid for this privilege.

The Manhattan bank robbers, whose membership contained some of the best known names in criminal history, all walked to the bar of justice there. Each in turn heard the verdict of the jury and the sentence of the court which sent all of them up the river. One of the last members of this band died only recently. He insisted that he had been a victim of circumstances and was not guilty. He did seven years, just the same.

Carlyle Harris as a medical student, startled the world when it was shown that he had murdered Helen Potts with poison. It was the forerunner of a number of poison cases that attracted newspaper attention. He was convicted and executed despite the fact that his mother made a frantic effort to save him.

Closely following this famous case Dr. Buchanan broke into the murder picture by giving poison to his sweetheart. A great legal battle was waged in his behalf, but the jury failed to believe his story and his doom was sealed with a verdict of guilty. He was taken back to the Tombs and for many months he fought through counsel to save his life. He was unsuccessful and heard his fate in the new Criminal Courts building when sent back for the court to fix a date of execution. He was legally put to death. Dr. Myers, whose case was not quite so prominent, but also a poisoner, had his day there, as did countless smaller fry who were just grist for the hopper.

The Poverty of Wealth

"OUR wealth has made us rich and left us poor, and it has increased our power and destroyed our peace."

This statement comes from a report adopted by board of home missions and church extension of the Methodist Episcopal church. Coming, as it does, on the heels of 6,000,000-share days in the stock exchange, it seems rather timely.

We have grown into a rather peculiar attitude in the past decade. Despite the fact that a good many citizens have had to go hungry at various times in that period, we have been, on the whole, very prosperous. Gorgeous new buildings have shot up in every city. The number of automobiles has increased tremendously. The radio has come into existence as an added luxury for the ordinary man. Movie theaters have grown ornate as grand opera houses.

All of this has given us a warped outlook. We have fallen into the habit of judging everything on a hard cash basis. No more do we respond to appeals to our idealism or our altruism. The man we will follow is the man who can tell us how we shall get more money in our pockets. We gauge our progress in dollars. We believe that we have advanced greatly because we are vastly richer than we used to be—and if anyone dissents we put him down as a bolshevik.

Now, most refreshingly, an organization of churchmen raises its voice to remark that there are other standards than the money standard. It suggests that there may be even more important things than prosperity.

Heresy, of course. But it is quite possible that the American people, in steadfastly-increasing numbers, will come to adopt such attitudes in the near future.

Although Europe has called us a nation of dollar-chasers for generations, we are not and never have been, a materialistic people. From the very beginning Americans have been idealists and visionaries. Our entrance into the world war, for instance, may have been, at bottom, a matter of money; yet the support of the people as a whole was won by appeals to the intangible values—liberty, democracy, freedom.

Ever since the war we have been content to follow the dollar. But the pendulum will swing the other way. We shall discover, in due time, the truth of this remark of the churchmen—that we can be vastly rich in money but lamentably poor in the things that are most worth having.

When that day comes we shall realize that material prosperity is a means to an end, and not an end in itself.

Youth Knows Pain, Too

IN Boston a 15-year-old boy, an honor student in high school, went out on a lark with another lad of the same age. The two boys "borrowed" an auto that was parked along a street and drove aimlessly around the city and suburbs almost all night. Dawn was breaking when they finally abandoned it and started for their homes.

The high school youngster saw a light in his parents' home, realized they had sat up to wait for him, and was afraid to go in. He wandered about the streets until it was time to go to school. At the school house door his father was waiting for him. The father sternly escorted him home.

A severe lecture was forthcoming. The father, a policeman, tried to frighten the boy by telling him he had committed an offense that might send him to the reform school. When the lecture ended, the boy was sent up to his own room to meditate on his shortcomings.

Shortly afterward the parents heard a shot. The boy had taken his father's revolver from a dresser and had shot himself through the head, killing himself instantly.

And that's all there is to that little story.

It isn't altogether uncommon to read of children in their early 'teens committing suicide. Usually their reasons seem woefully inadequate. A parental scolding, a fancied slight by schoolmates, a failure in studies or sports—and out goes the light. It is unspeakably tragic, pathetically puzzling.

These people who are always talking about the happiness of youth and the great joy of being young fail to realize that youth has capacity for unlimited misery. Youth is so pitiably unfamiliar with the world. The slightest mishap can loom up like an earth-destroying catastrophe. The depths of despair open easily beneath the feet of a boy who is only 15.

Consider this lad's case. Like all healthy youngsters, he felt the urge to do something reckless and adventurous. The best thing he could think of was to appropriate an auto and drive idly about deserted streets—as pointless and silly a stunt as could be imagined.

Then, when it was over, came remorse and shame. He felt like a criminal. Who knows what pictures of disgrace and ruin came to his mind as he sat in his bedroom after that parental scolding? They must have been intense. Look at the thing they made him do.

It is always dangerous to be severe with youth. A boy or girl getting experience of the world for the first time can be so easily crushed. The sense of shame is too easily aroused. Of all the correctives in the world, the one that parents should avoid most is fear. It can have terrible consequences.

Nature's Way

DESPITE the fact that this is an age of mechanical inventions, the age-old forces of nature can still be enlisted to anvantage in doing the work of the world.

The biological survey and the bureau of plant industry of the U. S. department of agriculture have been experimenting on new methods of helping farmers rid their orchards of destructive grubs and insects, and one of the best ways has been found to be the enlisting of an army of insect-eating birds.

Careful researches have shown the investigators what birds are an orchard's best protectors. Now they are studying methods of breeding that will enable a farmer to maintain these birds on his land.

Odd, isn't it? We use machinery for more varieties of work every year; but nature's methods of keeping the insect population in check still seems to be the most effective.

The INN of the HAWK and RAVEN

By George Barr McCutcheon

COPYRIGHT, GEORGE BARR MCCUTCHEON—INTERNATIONAL NEWSPAPER SERVICE, NEW YORK

During the summer, Jonifer takes Gerane and his nephew, Peter, to Edelweiss on a pleasure jaunt. They are disguised as gypsies. While there, they see Starcourt acting as the escort of the princess, on her return to the palace. One look at Gerane's face, when she sees Starcourt, tells Jonifer that she loves him. Peter arrives at the same conclusion, and is none too pleased, for he secretly loves Gerane. However he knows he can never marry her, for not only was his father, Jonifer's half-brother, of illegitimate birth, but he himself was born out of wedlock. Jonifer, being the legitimate descendant of the Duke of Droon, who was made an outlaw, many, many years ago, after his attempt to seize the throne, exercises his prerogatives as head of the family in a way that the son of his deceased illegitimate half-brother often finds distasteful. Peter instantly becomes jealous of Starcourt, who, according to a spectator, is about to undertake the extermination of the bandits in the Forest of Droon and has been made a colonel, for he has voluntarily undertaken the task.

Urged on by his mother and his brothers, who hate Jonifer, Peter contemplates a revolt against his uncle's authority.

Jonifer, who, on learning that Gerane is in love with Starcourt, makes some secret plans that involve the soldier, takes a trip to Moscow. On his way home, near the Axphain border the stage-coach is held up—not by his men however. The arrival of a troop of soldiers results in the capture of the robbers. The incident serves to inform Jonifer that Starcourt, with 500 picked men, is in the forest of Droon to run down the Davos band, no matter how long the task keeps him there. Jonifer and his companion.

John Crispo and Jonifer Davos quietly disappear that night and make their way home, realizing that the situation is too serious to permit of their running the risk of capture.

Jonifer's return puts an end, for a time at least, to Peter's thoughts of rebellion. The chief's next move is an attempt to capture Starcourt in a surprise attack at night. He is defeated, however.

Later, coming upon Starcourt while he is swimming in a mountain pool, Jonifer captures him. The colonel's men believe him to be drowned.

Meanwhile, he is among the robbers in the valley, free to do as he pleases, but unable to escape.

Jonifer tells Gerane that he has captured Starcourt as a birthday present for her. The bandit chief takes it for granted that the soldier will fall in love with his daughter and that they will marry. He is amazed when Gerane, in a fit of rage, says she will marry Peter—anybody but the soldier.

When Starcourt at last makes friendly overtures, Gerane repulses him.

Jonifer, acting on a suggestion of one of his lieutenants, who informs him that Gerane has killed a hawk that Starcourt had hoped to train as a carrier-bird, and thereby get into communication with the outside world, tells his daughter that he is going to have Starcourt executed.

Gerane, although she is not fooled by Jonifer's threat, says the soldier is not to be shot—that she has decided to have his life that he may instruct her in English.

While the Graustark authorities are still making fruitless efforts to recover Starcourt's body from the pool in which the soldier was supposedly drowned, the minister of police, Baron Dangloss, is informed by one of his men, Peter Corpaz, that the Countess Jabassy has in her possession a famous diamond that was taken from a Russian princess in the Forest of Droon by Davos' men. The detective also says that the count and countess are living on a scale that is far beyond their means and asks where the money comes from. He says that he believes the count and countess to be Davos' confederates.

Corpaz, disguised as a fruit vender, stops the Countess Katrane on the street and, taking a long chance, tells her he is a messenger from Jonifer Davos and has been sent to tell her that her connection with the robber band is known to the police. Despite her desperate efforts at self control, Corpaz sees how alarmed she is and decides that his suspicions are correct.

INSTALLMENT 25

In the meantime, Katrane Jabassy had gone to her husband's bedchamber. The count was in the habit of lying abed late. She burst into the room without knocking. He was lying in bed, reading a novel, the coffee things on a tabourette at his elbow. She closed the door.

"Get up!" said she, out of breath. She sat down heavily. He noticed that she was pale and trembling. Never before had he seen her pale and trembling. So he laid his book on the bed.

"Peter Davos has deserted Jonifer," she said hoarsely. "He is after the reward offered by Princess—"

"What's this?" he broke in, getting up with amazing celerity.

She told the story of the huckster. He listened, an unhealthy pallor gleaming through the sweat that broke out on his face.

"Who was that man, Katrane?" he asked, sucking in his thin lips. He sat on the edge of the bed, his hands gripping the mattress. He was a lean, tall man, with saturnine face, deeply lined.

"He would not give his name. I do not blame him. I have never seen him before, Emlen; but there is not the slightest doubt that he came from Jonifer. What is to be done? It is serious. We must act quickly."

"He mentioned the blue diamond in particular?"

"He spoke of nothing else, I tell you. Do not sit there, gaping," she cried. "If you wish to be finicky about it, Emlen, he did not even go so far as to say that I have it. He said no more than I have told you. But any fool would understand that he knows where it is. It was not necessary for him to tell us that I have it. He—"

"When did Peter leave?"

"Good Heavens, man, must I say to you again that he said no more than I have already told you? He warned me, that is all."

"I—I wish I could have seen him. I'll wager my soul I would have got all of the facts out of him."

He spoke irascibly as he shuffled over to a cabinet, where he poured himself a drink.

"The first thing to do," said she, "is to warn Shenke and Delawar and Mingovard. Are they all in town?"

The Count was frowning. "If I had had the chance to speak to this fellow—why did you not send him to me? Naturally, he hesitated about talking to a woman in a—"

"For Heaven's sake, Emlen, put on your clothes!" she cried. "It is too late to growl about that."

"Perhaps, if I hurried out and looked for him, I—"

"I asked you about Shenke and the others. Are they in town?"

"They were here yesterday."

"You must see them today—this morning."

"I am lunching with Count Delawar."

"See Shenke and Mingovard first. They must be told without delay. And, Emlen, you and I are leaving for Vienna tonight. Go at once to the railway station and—"

"See here, Katrane," he broke in sternly, "you must pull yourself together." The brandy had put courage into him. "This may not be as bad as it looks. In any case, it isn't likely that Peter will have—"

"What do you know about it!" she snapped. "Isn't it enough that Jonifer got the warning to us as speedily as possible? Why wait? We can catch the Rome express out of Vienna tomorrow. What is the sense of sitting here and waiting for something to happen? It may be that nothing will come of this, but I shall feel more comfortable in Rome, let me tell you, than I do here at this minute. If nothing happens, we can return whenever we choose. But, if Dangloss gets word from the princess that one of Jonifer's men has come to her with—well, we leave here tonight, that is all I have to say."

"Before you do anything else hide the diamond," cried he, impressed. "While I do not believe that Dangloss is likely to hear anything for several days—it may be weeks—still it is best to be on the safe side. It is possible, too, that Peter may have a change of heart. More than that, you can be sure that Jonifer is not idle. He is on the rascal's heels, I'll warrant, and if he catches him—"

She cut him short. "Do you realize what they will do to you and me, Emlen, if they prove that we are" she lowered her voice to a whisper— "that we are associated in any way with the robbers of Droon Forest?" Her face was ghastly. "They will execute us—both of us. If Peter tells them that I am Jonifer's sister—"

He was getting into his clothes with nervous, clumsy haste.

"They have not beheaded a woman since I was a little girl," she muttered, twisting her fingers. "But I remember hearing my mother tell of three women whose heads were cut off in the Citadel plaza, with thousands of people looking on."

"They were in the plot to assassinate the prince. Six men and three women. But the law has been changed since then, Katrane," said he, in what was meant to be a comforting tone. "The condemned person nowadays may have his choice between hanging and the block."

"What fools we are to be talking like this," she broke in, springing to her feet. "Come. Don't dawdle Emlin. I will put a few things into your traveling-bags while you are out, and pack my own boxes. We go tonight, without fail—and we stay away until it is safe to come back. All may turn out well—and then we can return—but we must take no chances now. I will go at once and hide the diamnd where there is no likelihood of its ever being found, unless they pull the house down, brick by brick."

"You would better hide the rubies and—"

"I will attend to all that," she interrupted ur w. At the door she paused. "Come home as soon as you have warned the others. No—go to the bank and railway office first. Do not dawdle, Emlen. But, on the other hand, don't arouse suspicions by hurrying. No one in Edelweiss has ever seen you hurry."

She was gone. A few moments later he strolled into her boudoir, buttoning his gloves. A servant had brought several portmanteaus and valises to the room and had gone off to carry up the trunks. The Countess was engaged in transferring a number of small articles from a drawer to one of the bags. Her jewelry lay in a heap on the top of this table, the blue diamond pendant gleaming like a small azure flame in the morning sunlight that poured in through the window.

"I am off, my dear," said he, squaring his shoulders.

She had removed her street costume and was in a peignoir of green satin and lace. Her hat and box and gloves were on a chair across the room.

She eyed him scornfully. In that case, I should advise you to back to your room and put on a carvat, Emlen, dear."

At this juncture the door leading to the corridor was thrown open and two men in the uniform of the royal police stepped into the room. They appeared as if by magic. There had not been the faintest sound to indicate their presence in the house, much less their approach to the boudoir. The Jabassys were speechless.

"The compliments of Baron Dangloss," spoke the first of these corporeal apparitions, displaying a document on which there was a big red seal; "and you are requested to accompany me forthwith to his chambers in the Tower."

Still the Jabassys were motionless. The officer's quick, alert gaze lighted on the jewels. In an instant the Countess Kathrane recovered from her stupefaction. But, in doing so, she lost her head completely. With a little cry, she stretched out her hand and fumbled for the convicting blue diamond.

"Wha-what do you want?" she almost screamed.

The count haughtily faced the intruders.

"What do you mean, breaking in upon—" he began, with well assumed indignation.

"We come with a crown warrant, Count Jabasey," interrupted the officer. "My instructions are to escort you and the countess to the Tower at once. I am also to bring with me such jewelry as may fall under my notice."

"This is an outrage! What does it mean? What does Baron Dangloss mean by—"

"You will have to ask that question of Baron Dangloss, sir. My orders are simple. I am to fetch you to the Tower at once. Will you be kind enough to come with me without further argument?"

The Countess arose. "This is most incomprehensible," she said, with dignity. "Why does not Baron Dangloss come to this house, if he desires to see us? He is welcome here. Our door is open to him. What jest is this?"

"It is not a jest, madame."

"Return to Baron Dangloss then, and assure him that Count and Countess Jabasey will present themselves at his office within the hour," said the count, compously.

The officer shook his head. "I am obliged to inform you, sir, that you are to accompany us, and without delay."

The countess flared. "Do you mean to say that we are to walk through the streets with—with policemen?" she exclaimed.

"There is a carriage waiting, madame. A carriage for four," he said, with meaning. "I must trouble you to pass all of those jewels over to me. That blue diamond, first of all, madame."

"I—I do not understand," she murmured, as if bewildered.

"Nor I" blustered he count.

"Come, come!" said the officer crisply. "If you will be good enough to attire yourself, madame, in—in something else, we will allow you time to do so. Five minutes should be sufficient."

A third policeman entered the room and a fourth was visible beyond the doorway. Not one of these men knew that he was playing a part in a game of bluff, almost grotesque in the very nature of its conception.

"The servants have started, sir," announced the newcomer, touching his cap.

The faces of the Jabassys were livid. The game was up. Dangloss knew everything!

"If you will step into the hall, officer, I will change my dress and be ready to accompany you in a few minutes," said the lady, in a scarcely audible tone. Her mind was not on the jewels, nor the police, nor even the present situation. She was thinking only of the block and the headsman's ax. "Go.—If you please. Wait, Emlen! Assist me with my dress."

"The jewels, madame," said the first officer, advancing. She dropped them into his hand, the blue diamond among them.

"Who is—who is responsible for this outrage?" demanded Jabasey, plucking up a little spirit.

"Peter," replied the officer, and spoke the truth. "We will wait in the hall—with the door open, if you do not mind."

"I do not mind," said Katrane, dully.

A moment later the and her husband were alone. Not a word passed between them as they stood gazing into each other's eyes. Then she took up a reticule from the table and fumbled among the contents. Producing a small phial, she unscrewed the cap and poured several small white tablets into her palm.

"Here!" she said, in a low voice. "It is all over. Our only way out, Emlen. Have you the courage?"

"Yes, Katrane," said he. Then he smiled. "You always said these things would come in handy, my dear."

He put his arm around her, and they walked across the room and sat down upon the couch.

"I do not like the idea of falling," said he grimly humorous. "We are both rather tall."

"Hush," she whispered.

A few minutes later the policie officer strode into the room. The Jabasays were sitting side by side on the couch, but there was something about their attitude that drew a loud cry from the lips of the officer. Their bodies were bowed upward, their heads against the wall.

BEAST SENSE —By Montague

We were cosily housed in a little weather-tight tent somewhere north of Montreal. Outside, the first winter winds had just begun to sweep down over the hills that by courtesy are called the Laurentian mountains. Old mountains these, perhaps the first that were ever thrown up by the internal fires of the earth after it had begun to cool. That cooling process had been pretty thorough through the eons. Never before had I been in a region where the mercury in the thermometer disappeared along in November and did not thrust up out of the bulk again till April. In such a country the fauna need not blush for its ancestry. It was probably the longest settled area on the earth. And there, if anywhere, dumb animals must have learned something of life, and the means to preserve it.

The pilot, who was doing the talking, seemed to think that this was the case.

"You can talk as you please about instincts and unreasoning brutes," he said, and he snuggled down a little deeper under the bearskin robe, "but I've got plenty of evidence that the animals up here have something higher than instinct in their heads. They ought to. They've been here a long time. Before our own ancestors were pulling up trees by the roots to kill saber toothed bears, the forefathers of these animals up here were getting their living in the worst possible weather conditions, and it has taught them a lot of sense. In the five months I've been here I've found that out, and I'm prepared to prove it to anybody who wants to make a little bet on it.

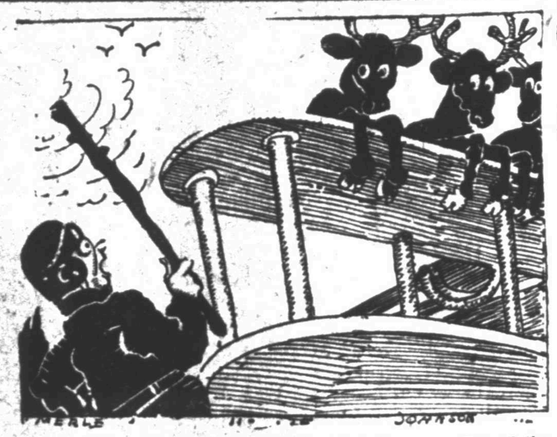

"It's all right to say that an animal's desire for food and warmth is the only thing that guides him. But I tell you they keep up just as 'stiddy a thinkin'" as Old Brer Terrapin was supposed to in the Uncle Remus stories. There isn't any other way to account for their taking over the inventions of civilization and using them for their own purposes."

"I've never heard of anything like that," I ventured.

"Of course you haven't. You haven't lived up here, over a winter like I have. The beasts down in the country you came from are so used to depending on man that they've never learned to look out for themselves. What would the skunks down there do now if the farmers didn't raise chickens for them to eat? Starve! What would the rats and the deer and the minks and muskrats do? Die of hunger! Men provide them with food. They just live on the wastage of the human race. But the animals up here are different. They know how to get it themselves, and store it up over the winter. More than that they have learned how to use man's greatest invention for their own purposes. Let me tell you something about it.

"In the old days the only transportation up here was by dog sled. That didn't interest the animals any. They could out-run a dog any time, so why hitch hike on a sledge, and lose time from their schedules? Then the trains came. Of course the trains only went over certain routes, and if the animals didn't happen to be traveling that way they paid no attention to them. But if they were going that way, they would climb aboard the trains at sidings, either getting on blind baggages or on brakebeams, and save themselves a lot of hard hiking. I don't know anything about that from personal experience, having only been in here about a year, but brakemen tell me that sometimes the tops of the trains would be so covered with owls and eagles and all sorts of birds stealing rides that they could hardly move along them. And now and then a deer or a cougar would leap up on the engine tender and save himself the trouble of running for five or 10 miles. This was particularly true when they were being chased by their native enemies.

"But the trains were only popular at certain seasons of the year. With planes it was different. We work along through most of the winter when the course is clear, and since we have been on this survey job we have been going north and south on a five hundred mile course every day or two. When we first began that I used to see the creatures down below looking over me speculatively, as if they were figuring on getting some sort of assistance out of me. And then one day in the late summer a bunch of migratory birds going south came alongside and lit on the wings, and took a free ride. They were little birds and their weight didn't make much difference, so I made no effort to chase them off. But when ducks and brant and wild gees began to come aboard I couldn't keep the boat up in the air, and had to make a landing to chase them off.

There Were Seven Caribou All Crouched Down on Top of the Wings and Trying to Make Themselves Look Inconspicuous.

"When I got off the ground again the next morning they would all come back, and by and by it was necessary to arm the photographer who rode with me with a shotgun, and keep the wings clear that way. But he had to keep firing all the time, for we kept going through new countries where the birds knew nothing of the danger of firearms.

"We were troubled that way through all the migratory season, and of course we lost a lot of time. When I tried to explain to the company what was going on they thought of course that I was lying. But I had made regular trips on schedule for so long that they didn't fire me, only told me to let liquor alone. Well, at the end of the season when the birds were all out of the country—that is, all that were going—the animals began to travel south. They must have been watching the ship and thinking about what a cinch it would be if they could get rides on it, for every morning or so I would find a lot of rabbits sitting on the wings, and looking hopefully at me when I came down to get the motor started.

"Of course, I would chase them away, but sometimes as soon as my back was turned a lot of them would climb on board again, and they would be pretty heavy to carry. I used to try banking to spill them off, but they soon learned to stick pretty tight. Still they didn't make the machine so heavy it wouldn't fly, and I put up with them, though it took a lot more gas to ferry them to and fro.

"The last week I spent up here that year was pretty cold, and apparently a lot of caribou had held a conference and decided they had better get down into the wooded country where there was more clover. I saw them three or four mornings standing around and looking me over, but I never suspected what they were up to till one day just at dawn I went down to start. I couldn't get the plane off the ground. She acted as if she was anchored. I tried half a dozen times but she simply wouldn't leave the skids.

"So I shut off the motor and got out to see if she was loaded with snow or something, and what do you think? There were seven caribou all crouched down on top of the wings and trying to make themselves look inconspicuous. They put up quite a fight when I took a club to them, but I finally got them off and started the motor again. Put every one of them leaped up on the wings again and cuddled down as before.

"Well, the only thing I could do was to shoot all of them, and then get away before any more showed up. And do you know, to this day I can't convince the company manager that this really happened. He says I am just a liar, in spite of the fact that I have shown him the hoof prints of the animals on the wings. It's funny how thick those managers are, ain't it?"

Life Is Feast or Famine, Depending Entirely Upon Individual's Attitude

Whether Life Is Sweet or Sour Depends on How We Take It, Says Dorothy Dix—We Can Turn It All Into Wormwood and Gall, or We Can Find Much That Nourishes Soul and Body.

An old man, looking back across the long stretch of more than 80 years, said to me: "I have eaten what was set before me and asked no questions." Could any philosophy be broader or more comprehensive than that? Could any attitude toward life be braver than that? Isn't it the very quintessence of the sporting spirit to take life as it comes, without whining when things go badly, without boasting when they go well? All of us would like to be born with the traditional gold spoon in our mouths, and to have life be a perpetual banquet, at which every plate is a masterpiece of the culinary art prepared by a chef.

Few of us get our desires. The dish that fate sets before most of us in youth is poverty, garnished by self-denial and seasoned with hard work, and whether we get joy and strength and health out of the eating of that, or whether it sours upon our stomachs and gives us the bilious dyspepsia that makes us pessimists and anarchists, depends altogether on the spirit which we bring to the meal. Our own attitude determines whether it is a feast or a famine.

We can rail at the destiny that cast our lines in hard places. We can rage because others have automobiles while we have to walk. We can be filled with envy of those who are better off. We can turn the whole of life into wormwood and gall.

Or we can eat what is set before us and ask no question. We can accept our portion of poverty and find in it much of sweetness and goodness, much that nourishes soul and body.

Or, if we crave finer fare, we can still eat with gratitude the humble food that gives us the buskiness and strength, and furnishes the spiritual vitamines that enable us to climb the ladder of success. For there is no education equal to the education that poverty gives. There is no spur to ambition that goads one on as does the desire for better things than one was born to.

In matrimony how much of scandal and divorce and domestic misery might be prevented, how many children might be saved from being half-orphaned, how many homes might be kept together instead of being broken up if only husbands and wives would make up their minds to eat what was set before them on the domestic table and ask no questions.

The man finds out that even the most lovey-dovey sweetheart is converted by marriage into a prickly creature all feelings and nerves and temper, and about as soothing to live with as the fretful porcupine. He also ascertains that matrimony is an expensive luxury that takes all, and a little more, than a man can earn to support.

The woman finds out that marriage changes a husband from a handsome matinee hero into an unappetizing stranger who is often unshaven and unshorn, and whose principal indoor sport is knocking her faults. She finds that marriage has brought her sickness and suffering and sacrifices of which she has never dreamed.

So the man is disillusioned with the woman and the woman is disappointed in the man, and both are disgruntled with matrimony. They try to find consolations on shady pathways, but they never find peace there, nor happiness.

How much better it would be for them if they would only eat what was set before them and ask no questions. If they would make the best of each other and the situation and try to forget that they ever had a sweet tooth, or that they were foolish enough to think marriage would be all pie!

All of us make mistakes as we go through the world. We are blind and stupid and we blunder into pitfalls. We are weak and easily led into temptation. We are foolish and credulous. We are careless and inexpert in our work and we fail because we have not the courage and grit to pay the price of success.

Then we sit down and beat upon our breast and whine over our luck. We grumble over our corned beef and cabbage and look with envious eyes upon the dainties on our neighbor's plate. We refuse to face the fact that we also might be feasting on luxuries if we had been willing to work a little harder and deny ourselves a little more, and if we had had a little more self-control and determination and ambition.

If, however, it is difficult to sit down to a scant meal with an equable mind, the true test of character is to eat what is set before you and ask no questions when fate spreads out a banquet before you. Then it is that some of us become pompous and chesty and swellheaded. Then it is that some of us forget the friends of other days who gave us handouts when we lacked the price of a sandwich. Then it is that some of us become arrogant and boastful of our achievements, and when we tell a weary world all about our period dining rooms and French chefs, and how we import our own caviar, and the sort of sauce we serve on our nightingale tongues.

Others eat their feast of success in silence, with humble gratitude for what they have been permitted to achieve, with the same calm acceptance of good fortune with which they accepted bad luck.

Happy those brave souls who at the end of life can say: "I have neither whined nor boasted, I have eaten what was set before me and asked no questions."

O' These Women

By LEOLA ALLARD

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. (US)—A lady in a suburb of New York is so much interested in a seven-year-old boy that she is trying to persuade his mother to let her and her husband adopt him. The father isn't in the picture. The mother comes home at 2 and 3 in the morning and the child has no place to stay. The other night the woman who wants him came home from the city on a late train and she and her husband found the child asleep in the railroad station.

After showing him much consideration on various occasions, the lady now leaves her door open at night and when the child can't get into his own home, he comes to her house and finds a bed to sleep in.

The other morning she heard a clatter in the kitchen and the child had washed the dinner dishes, which were left for a maid, due next day. He got himself some breakfast and made enough coffee—good coffee—for her and her husband, and was fixing a tray of breakfast for his fairy godmother.

"I don't know what his father was," she told me, "but that child, with that mother and practically no training, has the most beautiful manners, and the finest instincts. When he is our guest he even pulls my chair out for me when I sit down to dinner. And he is seven years old!"

So far the mother hasn't consented to the adoption, but what a Christmas it's going to be in the fairy godmother's house if and when she does.

There isn't any happier Christmas than one that ushers a little child into a childless home. I had the extreme pleasure of giving for adoption one Christmas time, five babies. And if the new parents didn't write me the following year and ask me if I couldn't get brothers and sisters for Christmas presents for these children! But I hadn't encountered any orphans that year and I couldn't fill the order.

It is surprising how few women who adopt children bring them back again, to the orphanage or wherever they got them. Sick or well, bad or good, they keep them and love them. That's the history of adoptions, with very rare exceptions.

The Chicago woman that adopted a red head, a boy of nine months on the Christmas I mentioned, hired a nurse and then wouldn't let the nurse do anything for the baby except watch over him while he slept. She wanted his every wide awake moment.

When I called on the child six months after he went to his new parents, to see if everything was all right before the adoption took place, the new father said: "Try and get him away! Why you have not a chance. I'd fight like I would for my life."

If you don't know what you want for Christmas and you haven't any babies, you might think it over. Doctors, orphanages or hospitals can help you.

You will get the laugh that should go with this column when that baby comes into your home.

CHIC CHERIE — Latest Fashions

Flannel is good for sports frocks, too. You might have forgotten that, there's been so much talk of black jersey. This flannel sports dress of Cherie's is tan and cocoa color.

Cherie is reading Ernest some of her correspondence on the subject of the Picture Budget Contest and Ernest is being very helpful.

Edwin came over to be helpful also. Cherie has been snowed under with budgets and now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the contest. This dress of Cherie's has leaf applique of green on a background of brown crepe. Notice the molded lines of the skirt and bodice, and the raglen shoulders.

This wasn't what they meant when they offered to help! Each other's company wasn't what they wanted! Cherie's tweed ensemble has a separate fur collar, Cherie's satin turban has wings, Cherie's business is elsewhere and—how many budgets do Ernest and Edwin think they can look over before she gets back?

BIBLE STORIES ARE ARGUED

Truthful Doctrine in Form Of Tale, Is Claim

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE
Record News Special Cable

LONDON, Dec. 2. (US)—Nobody asked Jesus if the story of the Prodigal Son was true, says the Right Reverend Albert Augustus David, one time headmaster of Rugby and now Bishop of Liverpool. And then he adds that Jesus Himself did not intend the prodigal son story and the good samaritan anecdote as narratives of actual fact but as "doctrine in story form."

This statement is in his comment appearing in the Sunday Dispatch upon the fierce controversy aroused by the publication earlier in the week of the "new commentary of Holy Scripture, including the apocrypha," which represented contributions by the best theologians in Britain under the general editorship of the Reverend Charles Gore, former Bishop of Oxford, and which characterized as "myths" such stories as Noah's Ark, Jonah and David and Goliath, and which also called the biblical "Song of Solomon," erotic poetry.

Storm to Be Result

In England, perhaps less than in the United States, this assault on fundamentalism will start repercussion, because the "cover to cover" Bible believers are not so strong as in Tennessee, for instance, but even here Bishop David's support of the advanced thinking of the New York's contributors will create a small storm.

"There are still some people who have been brought up to believe that every book in the Bible was dictated word by word and that we must take all parts of it as literally and equally true, in the sense that what is written there actually happened, and that to interpret them in any other way is to question their inspiration," said the Bishop of Liverpool.

"During the last hundred years those studying the Bible intelligently have been led to recognize that the Bible is not one book but a whole library by writers who, at various times and under various conditions of life, declared their ideas about God and His dealings with mankind.

"This they did sometimes by recording events, sometimes poetically, sometimes revealing their own meditations and experiences, and sometimes by stories like Jesus told. Such stories are not intended to be narratives of fact but vehicles for teaching which in those times could best be given in that form.

Stories Hold Truths

"In His teaching Jesus used this form constantly. But it calls for time and thought on the part of listeners. Today we suppose we have little time and we do not like the effort of thinking in that way. It would seldom occur to a modern writer with truth to tell to wrap it up in a story.

"It is only because we are no longer accustomed to this way of expressing the truth that some people attach such importance to the stories of the creation, or Job, or Jonah as records of actual fact. For instance, I know a man who said that his faith had been greatly strengthened by meeting somebody who had seen a whale's inside capable of holding three men standing upright.

"Read the story of Jonah as a piece of history and you will find yourself concentrating on an effort to believe it, but if with your mind you will study the mind of the man who wrote it, you will penetrate its eternal truth. This masterpiece of doctrine in story form shows in symbolical form how the Jewish nation first rebelled against the higher conception of God and was finally converted thereto."

The bishop adds that this "new view" of the Bible not only enriches its meaning and message, but helps us to a worthier idea of God. He believes Dr. Gore's new commentary "helps us to magnify God, which now, as always, is the basis of true religion."

John Coolidges Will Live Simply As 'Plain Folks'

By PEARL GROSS
Universal Service Writer

FARMINGTON, Conn., Dec. 2.—Florence Trumbull—fiancee of President Coolidge's son, John—really doesn't want to be married in the White House.

Flushed and starry-eyed with excitement and happiness, Miss Trumbull declared:

"I don't want a big, fussy wedding."

Just Plain Folks

"John and I want to be married simply and quietly as possible because we're—just awfully plain folks, you see. We are going to be married right in this country town where we have spent our happiest hours."

They might have announced their engagement months ago, admitted Miss Trumbull but young Coolidge "wasn't set" in business just then. Like many other ambitious young men, he wanted to "try out" different jobs the first year he was out of college, before he settled into one for good.

With his recent decision to remain in the railroad business—he holds a clerkship in the offices of the New Haven railroad—the Trumbull-Coolidge engagement was formally announced Wednesday night.

"All my girl friends knew anyway," admitted Florence laughingly, in an interview at her parents' home in Plainville, a suburban district near here.

"A White House wedding might appeal to lots of girls—but not to me. It would be gorgeous, of course, but we aren't ready to be married yet. John wants to devote months more to his work and I will do some travelling in the meantime."

The engagement ring Miss Trumbull wears is a medium-sized diamond set in a platinum basket design. It exemplifies her inherent modesty and disdain for an extravagant display.

Nevertheless, Miss Trumbull who is 24 years old, is a vivacious, attractive young women with lovely reddish-brown hair and an independent, saucy tilt to her chin.

Motoring is her favorite pastime. To all Plainview folks the sight of Miss Florence and young Coolidge driving all day Saturday and Sunday afternoons is a familiar one.

"Here," Miss Trumbull declared, "is where I want to live forever." She points to the rolling Connecticut hills and the farm lands near her childhood home where she has lived all her life.

"John and I love the simple life. By next summer, I hope to have selected a house around here."

VELVETS WIN GREATER USE

Smart Paris Society Seen In New Creations

By GEORGE W. HINMAN, JR.

PARIS, Dec. 2.—The printed velvets that a month ago began to dispute for favor with the black and red that have been the favorite nuances this autumn seem today are coming gradually to the fore. They are especially noticeable at the afternoon tea parties frequented by the smart set, such as the Ritz, Sherry's, Colombin's and Rumpelmayer's.

At the Rumpelmayer's this week Mrs. Hall Garnsey's beautiful elder daughter was pleasantly conspicuous in one of those new creations from Phillippe and Gaston, while her younger sister, Miss Virginia Garnsey, wore one of the tan ensembles in Jersey with a pleated skirt and a slightly bloused bodice, of which Molyneux is making a specialty.

Others in the party were Mrs. Jay Gould Day, wife of the famous horse owner from somerville, near Charleston, South Carolina, in a Grey ensemble, and Mrs. Lucien Hold, of New York and Smithtown, in one of Lanvin's famous beige crepe-de-chine frocks, famous chiefly because of itself, and secondly because it is meant to, and does, shade in with any type of fur coat.

Mrs. Hold also wore her gorgeous blue-white diamond, a jewel that is symptomatic of the present prewinter craze for effect, and lots of it.

With the creation of gowns practically at a standstill, with Mlle. Babrielle Chanel, Mlle. Madeleine Vionnet and others locked in their ateliers designing what will become in January the "dernier cri," or last word, and with society now definitely back in Paris from the hunting season, the strong boxes are being unlocked, and the famous jewels that have dazzled the eyes of countless generations of men and women are coming out of their hiding into the light.

Brady Farmers Make $120,000 on Turkeys

BRADY, Texas, Dec. 2. (AP)—Brady farmers realized $120,000 from their sale of Thanksgiving turkeys and will, perhaps, double this amount on Christmas birds, since most local farmers have decided to hold their flocks for the December market.

The bank roll of local farmers increased at the rate of $18,000 daily during the seven-day turkey marketing season in November. Dressing plants paid 35 cents per pound on the opening day of the market and advanced to 36 cents, but closed the season several cents lower.

Fifteen carloads of dressed turkeys were shipped from Brady in November. The total was 300,000 pounds or an amount sufficient to feed Texas' largest city.

Thirty or more cars of Christmas turkeys will be marketed here

The proceeds from the quilt that was sold will be donated to the East Side Presbyterian Mission Aid society. Dime bags were passed around and the donations will be used to buy something for the new church.

Miss Webb taught the lesson on "Moccisan Making" and gave a talk on proper care of the feet. She also discussed fallen arches and weak ankles.

JIM BOTTOMLEY NAMED 'MOST VALUABLE' IN NATIONAL LEAGUE

LINDSTROM IS CLOSEST RIVAL

Grimes, Benton, Critz And Traynor Next in Voting

By BRIAN BELL

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. (AP)—Jim Bottomley, St. Louis first baseman with a sunny disposition, was today declared the most valuable baseball player in the National league in 1928. "Sunny Jim" will have his name placed on the roll of baseball's hall of fame and receive $1,000 in gold from the National league.

The choice of the first sacker by eight baseball writers gave St Louis a clear majority in the competition over the five years of its existence for he is the third Cardinal player to be honored. The others were Rogers Hornsby and Bob O'Farrell. The "most valuable player" class is completed by Dazzy Vance of Brooklyn and Paul Waner of Pittsburgh. Vance won in 1924 when the contest was started. Hornsby in 1925, O'Farrell in 1926, and Waner in 1927.

Bottomley won with a total of 76 points of a possible 80, next to the highest recorded. O'Farrell's victory in 1926 was gained with 79 votes. Bottomley won the honor over Fred Lindstrom of the Giants who was credited with 70 points.

Hornsby Again Listed

Rogers Hornsby, now a member of the Cubs but the league's leading hitter as a Boston Brave last season, was given 10 points. Hornsby is the only player who has been given a place in the most valuable player standing in each of the five years it has operated.

The system of selection calls for a member of the Baseball Writers' association in each National league city to vote for 10 men in the order he considers them the most valuable to their teams. Not one of the eight judges placed Bottomley lower than second while Lindstrom, the runner-up, had two third place ratings and one sixth.

Bottomley was given four first and four seconds, Lindstrom scored three first, three seconds, a third and a sixth.

Burt Whitman, Boston, who as president of the Baseball Writers' association, was in charge of the selection, called on the committee members for their ballots before the world series, so Bottomley's playing in the autumn classic was not an influence.

Bats .325 Despite Slump

In spite of a September batting slump which continued into the world series, "Sunny Jim" batted in 133 runs during the season, which he finished with a batting average of .325. He scored 124 runs.

Well behind the winner and runner-up were Burleigh Grimes, Pittsburgh's hard working pitcher, Larry Benton, the Giants' pitching ace, and Hughie Critz, sensational second baseman of the Cincinnati Reds. Grimes received 53 votes and Benton and Critz 37 each.

Members of the committee making the award were: Burton Whitman, Boston, chairman; Nick Flatley, Boston; Tom Meany, Brooklyn; Jack Ryder, Cincinnati; Irving Vaughn, Chicago; Boseman Bulwer, New York; Steve Graulev, Philadelphia; Ed Ballinger, Pittsburgh; James Gould, St. Louis.

Honorable Mention

In addition to the 10 players given votes, an honorable mention list of 10 players is compiled. The first 10 in the balloting:

Bottomley, Cardinals, 76; Lindstrom, Giants, 70; Grimes, Pirates, 53; Benton, Giants, 37; Critz, Reds, 37; Traynor, Pirates, 28; Wilson, Cubs, 21; Hogan, Giants, 17; Jackson, Giants, 16; Maranville, 14.

Others credited with points: Vance, Robins, 13; Hafey, Cardinals, 11; Hornsby, Braves, 10; Hartnett, Cubs, 6; P Waner, Pirates, 5; Richbourg, Braves, 5; Douthit, Cardinals, 5; Bissonette, Robins, 3; Flowers, Robins, 3; Whitney, Phillies, 2; Ford, Reds, 2; Thompson, Phillies, 1.

Those named in the honorable mention list: Frisch, Cardinals; Sisler, Braves; Stephenson, Cubs; Heathcote, Cubs; Bancroft, Robins; Haines, Cardinals; Reese, Giants; Maguire, Cubs; Walker, Reds; Welsh, Giants; Petty, Robins; Hich, Alexander and Sherdel, Cardinals.

Bottomley is 28 years old. He was born in Oglesby, Ill., but now is a leading citizen of Nakomis, Ill. He was graduated to the Cardinals in 1922 after minor league service with Mitchell in the Dakota league, Houston of the Texas and Syracuse in the International.

Baer Facts

By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER

(Copr., 1928, International News Service)

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—Prince Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden inhaled a ride in the New York subways this week.

He took the all-scenic route from Times square to the battery through the jitney gorge.

Gustavus started by dropping a coin into the slot and then was whirled through the turnstiles until he got the brass ring.

After that he started for the Brooklyn train, was picked up by the military police as a straggler, landed on a local station in the Bronx and was stranded in Grand Central station for 30 hours without food or water.

After following the green line until it turned a pale pink he joined the second wave of shock troops trying to get to Staten Island and lost his identification tag.

Then he was shuttled, wobbled, pressed and ironed. After 20 minutes on the Fourteenth street platform he joined a triumphal procession headed for Washington Heights and wound up in Harlem by the waiver route.

He had an engagement with Mayor Walker on city hall steps, which had been carefully soaped for the occasion.

He finally got on the right train with a thousand other hermits and listened attentively to a subway sound describe the next stop in Magnavox static.

A subway guard massaged him briskly and a courteous conductor closed the door between his shoulder blades.

Being a prince in the subway isn't so good on the feet because there is a sleeping beauty in every seat.

So the prince joined the flatbush huddle in the end car, ran through the signals and made 16 unsuccessful forward passes at a strap.

He was fortunate. Next year they are going to take out the turnstiles and put in sausage machines.

But one who is born to the purple is not easily bulldozed. The prince joined the graduating class at city hall station, wired back home for a new hat and remarked:

"It was a terrible trip but the worst they can give me is a draw. Wait until the company tries to get rid of that Swedish dime."

Sunny Jim's Sunnier Now

Jim Bottomley

Picked by a committee of baseball writers as the most valuable man in the National league, Jim Bottomley, St. Louis Cardinals' first baseman, will receive $1,000 in gold. Bottomley had a total of 76 points. Freddy Lindstrom, New York Giants' third baseman, in second place, received 70 votes.

Dailey Names 9 of 11 Selected On Composite Conference Team

Brown, Williams, Sanders, Beavers, Hume, Petty, Ford and Koch Lead Voting in Associated Press Poll

Larry Dailey, sports editor of The Record News, selected nine of the 11 players named on the composite all-Southern conference first team, as picked by sports writers of leading newspapers and other critics of Texas for The Associated Press, and published yesterday.

Dailey's selection, included in The Associated Press poll, showed the choice of Ford, Texas, and Petty Aggies, ends; Williams, T. C. U. and Brown, Texas, tackles; Sanders, S. M. U. guard; Powell, S. M. U., center; Hume, S. M. U., quarterback; Gilliland, Baylor, halfback and Beavers, Arkansas, fullback, to be nine of the 11 chosen on the composite team. Dailey's other first-team guard, Van Sickle, was beaten for that place only by Koch of Baylor. Dailey's other halfback, Hughes of Texas, was supplanted on the composite team by Love of S. M. U.

Jere Hayes Picks Ten

Jere R. Hayes, sports editor of the Dallas Times Herald, named 10 of the 11 chosen in the composite selection. He selected Schoonover of Arkansas for end in place of Ford.

Ben A. Hill, sports editor of the Dallas Dispatch; Andy Anderson, sports editor of the Houston Press; Jinx Tucker, sports editor of the Waco News-Tribune, and George White, sports editor of the Dallas News, also named nine of the 11 selected by the composite poll. Hill's team shifted one back from his regular position, while Tucker's first eleven showed two changes of positions in his backfield as compared to the composite selection.

Beavers and Hume High

Gordy Brown, mighty Texas tackle, led the voting in the Associated Press poll, with 25, being named by every writer for the first team. Other players to receive many votes were Williams, 23; Sanders, 21; Petty, 19; Ford and Koch, 14; Gilliland, 11, and Powell, 10.

Beavers and Hume polled high votes, but for different positions. Hume was given 19 votes, 13 for quarterback; five for halfback and one for fullback. His nearest competitor for quarterback was Wilson of Baylor, who received six votes. Beavers received more votes than any back, getting 21, of which 14 were for fullback and seven for halfback. Love of S. M. U. got 15 votes for halfback and was second in the race for fullback, getting three votes for the latter position.

The vote of sports editor of leading papers, as compared to the Associated Press poll, follows:

Horace McCoy, sports editor, Dallas Journal—eight, three backs shifted.

Oswin K. (Uncle Jake) King, Dallas Journal—seven, two backs shifted.

Jere R. Hayes, sports editor, Dallas Times-Herald—10.

COAST TEAMS TROUNCE EAST

Far Western Elevens Rout Best in Effete Area

By ALAN J. GOULD

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. (AP)—Whether or not the brand of football played in the far West is essentially better than that played east of the Mississippi, the fact today is that after a three-day period of spectacular intersectional rivalry, the score stands:

Pacific coast 80; east 27.

Three smashing triumphs, two on Eastern soil and one on the West coast, offer by far the most striking accomplishments by college gridiron forces of any one sector in a season fast drawing to a close, in the bewilderment of its inconsistencies, the astonishing character of its upsets and the immensity of its popular interest as displayed in figures of record attendance and gate receipts.

Not even the fact that Boston college, alone of the Eastern clan, and Detroit, alone of the Middle Western troupe, were winding up unbeaten seasons in brilliant fashion yesterday could take away the spotlight from the far Western avalanche.

Southern California's defeat of a somewhat sub-normal but dangerous Notre Dame team at Los Angeles was expected but the drubbing administered by Oregon state to New York university Thanksgiving day, and by Stanford yesterday to the Army represent the most crushing setbacks the East has ever received in so short a span.

East's Best Outclassed

Here were two of the East's acknowledged leaders, two teams with a brace of the country's greatest stars in Ken Strong of N. Y. U. and Red Cagle of West Point; two well-knit powerful aggregations coached by menters of the high calibre in Chick Meehan and Biff Jones, masters of strategy. Yet they were both outclassed beyond argument.

Less than a week after Eastern critics were acclaiming New York's Violets as one of the greatest in the country, after their triumph over Carnegie, Strong and company were being smothered by an Oregon horde led by Chunky Howard Maple. Exactly a week after the husky Army team had walloped the formidable Nebraskans, Cagle and his clan were being routed disastrously by the white-shirted Stanford host coached by Pop Warner and led by Biff Hoffman, who earned his nickname by the way he smashes a line.

Two of the East's best not only were licked but were overwhelmed. Their defenses were battered, they were bewildred by the speed and deception of the invaders, and their attacks were almost smothered by the defensive bulwarks of those hard-charging lads from the Pacific coast.

Neither Oregon state nor Stanford were good enough to win the Pacific coast conference championship. The Beavers were beaten by California, Washington state and the University of Oregon, yet they had enough stuff left to trim the mighty Violets. Stanford was beaten by Southern California, thereby being put out of the running on the coast, but the Cardinals looked as powerful yesterday as any team in the country.

They're Lucky at That

It always has been the Eastern supposition that transcontinental journeys had a distinctly adverse effect, taking at least one or two touchdowns out of a team's system. If so, the Army and N. Y. U. may consider themselves fortunate in holding each of these invading parties to four touchdowns each.

Stanford turned loose enough power before 86,000 at the Yankee stadium yesterday to score seven or eight touchdowns. Only the most courageous defensive work by the cadets prevented the contest from being more one-sided than it was. The Cardinal line ripped the Soldiers' forward wall to bits, Biff Hoffman outpassed Cagle with the aid of better protection, and Stanford's great array of ball carriers outrushed the Army nearly four to one, whether figured in yardage or first downs.

Not in years has any such exhibition of brilliantly harnessed power, coordination of line and backs, plus deception in execution of plays, been witnessed on any Eastern gridiron. There was weight, power and experience enough in the Army line but even with two, three and sometimes four replacements it was unable to stand up against the Californians.

The only thing now that stands in the path of a far Western sweep in the intersectional tussle for this campaign is Georgia Tech's Tornado, which will sweep out of the South to play California in the New Year's day game at Pasadena. Nothing east of the Mississippi so far has shown anywhere near the power, speed and cleverness to cope with these wild Southerners and California, on the strength of ties with Stanford and U. S. C. figures to be as strong as the rest.

Tech Well Equipped

Tech, however, is well equipped for the last charge with a team that has mowed down all opposition so far and figures to keep its slate clean against the University of Georgia Saturday. The Tornado has lost one of its biggest threats through the illness of Warner Mizell, triple threat back, but has a wealth of reserve backfield power behind one of the strongest lines of the year.

Georgia Tech and Florida, its rival for Southern conference honors, only major teams anywhere in the country to be neither defeated nor tied. Tennessee, alone with Southern California and Utah, champions of the Pacific coast and Rocky Mountain districts, have experienced nothing worse than ties, but all of the others in the front rank—California, Stanford, Texas, Illinois, and Pennsylvania, to mention a few—have had at least one defeat. Michigan, Yale and Notre Dame each suffered four defeats and the Navy three to show how ordinarily mighty outfits have fallen.

The Annual Disease Is Here

DAILY DOPE

By LARRY DAILEY

ANY BELIEF entertained by the East and Middle West that they hold football supremacy was dispelled finally and convincingly last week. The fall of foremost teams of those sections, particularly in the so-called effete area, was especially marked, and was accomplished by elevens of the Far West. They were pleased to rate New York university as leader in the East, following the Violets' crushing victory over Carnegie Tech, and in view of the fact that the Gotham club had lost only a lucky break to Georgetown. Then Oregon Aggies, making the long trek across the country, handed a decisive 25 to 13 licking to New York.

They tried to laugh that off, in some measure, with an alibi about Al Lassman, Violet captain, being out of the game. But you can't explain a 25-13 score. It explains itself. And Oregon Aggies do not rate as leaders of the Pacific Coast conference; they had, to the contrary, been beaten by Southern California, Washington State and Oregon.

HARDLY HAD THE lifted eyebrows of the easterners regained their normal position after the Thanksgiving day upset, than the Army, rates as another of the leaders in that area, took it on the chin. And this also by a Far Western team that followed the Oregonians' precedent of traveling cross-country. Only Stanford made it more convincing. Indeed, it was a rout. The score of 26 to 0 left no doubt as to the superiority of the Cardinals by an overwhelming margin.

WHILE THE CADETS were thus being out-Cagled by Biff Hoffman and outrushed by the rest of the mighty Stanford team, a Southern California machine was grinding Notre Dame into its grist. This also by a decisive count, of 27 to 14. And at Detroit, which is rated as in the Middle West, the Titans of the auto city were crushing Georgetown, which had been beaten but once, 23 to 13.

THE SOUTH and the Far West dominate the grid situation. Not a major eleven in the East and Middle West is unbeaten. Four teams survive as claimants to the mythical national title. Georgia Tech and Florida have not been tied or beaten in the South, while California and Southern California are undefeated in the Far West. Southern California and California tied in their own game and the Bears also were held even by Stanford. Southern California also defeated Stanford and is champion of the Pacific Coast conference.

Remaining games this week and a New Year's day battle will have vital bearing on the national grid situation. Georgia Tech plays Georgia and Florida meets Tennessee next Saturday, dangerous tests for the leaders of the South. The meeting of the rival Georgia teams always is an outstanding game of the year and while Tech holds a decisive edge on the dope, there is the possibility of an upset, such as delivered by Tech last season, when their positions were reversed on pre-game form. Tennessee hasn't been defeated, though it was tied last week by Kentucky, and the Vols will give the 'Gators a strenuous engagement.

IF TECH GETS BY Georgia, another obstacle remains in the Tornadoes' quest for highest national ranking. They meet California out at Pasadena on New Year's day and if there was any doubt on the class of those Far Western teams, it was removed last week. So it will be seen that Tech has a mighty tough row ahead and if it surmounts to obstacles of Georgia and California, with its fine record to date, there will be few to deny the Tornadoes' claim to about all the highest honors for the season.

SECTIONAL TITLES were decided, in addition to the intersectional games of far-flung interest last week. Texas won its first conference title for several years by trouncing the Aggies in the most decisive victory scored by the Longhorns over the Farmers for more than a decade. T. C. U. dealt an upset to S. M. U.. Incidentally, the two defeats sustained by S. M. U. by conference teams advance the cause of football in this section, as the Ponies held the East's vaunted Army to a standstill, it will be vividly recalled.

GEORGIA TECH and Florida continued on their unbeaten marches with impressive wins over Auburn and Washington and Lee, 51 to 0, and 60 to 6, respectively. Kentucky spoiled Tennessee's record in a scoreless tie. Alabama beat Georgia, 19 to 0.

Oklahoma closed its season successfully by trouncing Missouri. Nebraska beat Kansas Aggies, though held to a surprising low score, 8-0, and won the Big Six title. Drake captured the Missouri Valley championship by beating Creighton. Tulsa ran a crusher over Oklahoma Aggies, 31 to 0, the Sooner Farmers closing their season with the most disastrous season ever sustained by a team of that institution.

UTAH WON the Rocky Mountain conference honors by beating Utah Aggies. Eastern games which involved ancient traditions but meant nothing else resulted in victories of Syracuse over Columbia, Pennsylvania, over the weakest Cornell team in years, Brown over Colgate, Pittsburgh over Penn State and West Virginia over Washington and Jefferson.

DETROIT AND Boston college have not been beaten or tied, alone of clubs in the Middle West and East. But though they have met some leading teams, the schedules of either have not been sufficiently representative to accord them national ranking equal with Georgia Tech, Florida, California, Southern California, though they will rate as among the best in their own sections.

GRID CAPTAIN IS SPORTSMAN

New York U. Leader Congratulates Oregon Ags

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Dec. 2. (UP)—Albert Lassman, New York university football captain who nearly gave his life that his team might win from Carnegie Tech Saturday week, has shown that he is also a good loser. With the help of a direct telegraph wire to his sick room at Mercy hospital, the Violet captain played the losing game of his alma mater on the coverlets of his bed here yesterday and went down with them to a totally unexpected defeat before the Oregon Aggies.

But even as the gun resounded in New York announcing the completion of the New York defeat the Violet captain rose to the command once more.

"To Captain Maple, Oregon Aggies," he dictated, "congratulations to you and your teammates on your splendid victory. Sorry I was not able at least to sit on the sidelines and watch such a wonderful team in action. Hope you have an enjoyable trip home."

Lassman suffered a concussion of the brain in the Carnegie Tech-New York university game from which he is recovering slowly.

CARLIN MEETS WATERS HERE

Well-Known Grapplers To Clash Wednesday

Teddy Waters meets Johnny Carlin here Wednesday night, on Matchmaker Alex B. Ross' weekly athletic card at 821 Indiana avenue. The match is to be enacted under New York commission rules, best two falls of three to decide.

Both of these battlers have appeared in the local ring before and are scrappers of no mean ability. Scott, who has been battling busily during the past year, is reported to be in fine shape for his affray with Hooks. The latter has achieved a number of creditable victories in recent months.

The curtain raiser for the program will be a four-round battle between Kid Burns and the Wichita Kid.

"Kid" wrestling fans will be admitted to the show for a dime, Matchmaker Ross announced.

The Steam Rollers scored early in the second period when J. Cronin, halfback, rounded the Pottsville left end for a 12-yard run for touchdown in back of splendid interference. Sonnenberg kicked the extra point.

Pottsville threatened to score twice, but on both occasions was held for downs within the Providence 10-yard line.

Use Raw Cabbage

The amount of cabbage consumed throughout the world is enormous. Of all vegetables only the potato exceeds it in popularity. Indeed, in many parts of the world cabbage is practically the only fresh vegetable obtainable during the winter months.

While raw cabbage is quite a wholesome vegetable, the cooking process seems to make the sulphur compounds of cabbage peculiarly volatile, causing cooked cabbage to be a great gas producer.

There is art in the selection of the choicest cabbage. Properly selected cabbages are young, crisp and as fresh as possible. The exterior leaves should present a green appearance. Unfortunately cabbage may remain crisp for several months after being picked, and if the outer leaves are removed, can be made to appear fresh for several weeks; however, the longer cabbage has been kept the more gas-forming it becomes.

When properly selected and eaten, cabbage furnishes a valuable bulk to the intestines and is rich in vitamins.

Cabbage should be avoided by those with asthmatic or flatulen tendencies. The cabbage family contains a number of related vegetables such as brussels sprouts, cauliflower, kale, kohlrabi, collards, red cabbage and savoy cabbage. These are all wholesome, but like the cabbage are gas-forming.

Sauer kraut is cabbage preserved by cutting the fresh heads into fine shreds and mixing with salt in barrels or crocks and allowing the mixture to ferment. Because of the large amount of salt the general use of sauer kraut is not advisable, but it may be used occasionally when fresh vegetables are not obtainable. It is slightly cathartic because of the excessive amount of salt. Sauer kraut should be washed to remove the surplus salt. Here are a few recipes for preparing cabbage, which you may find interesting:

Tomatoes Stuffed With Cabbage

Remove the centers from tomatoes, leaving the shell intact. After cutting a raw cabbage into small pieces, run through a vegetable chopper and mix with grated small carrots, finely chopped celery, the tomato pulp and olive oil. Mix well and place in tomato shells. If this is served on lettuce you will enjoy a tasty dish.

Apple and Cabbage Salad

To one small head of finely shredded cabbage add the chopped leaves of one head of lettuce, two chopped apples and a half cup of finely chopped celery. Pour cream over mixture and allow to stand for 15 or 20 minutes before serving.

Cabbage and Raisin Salad

To two parts of finely shredded cabbage add one part of grated carrots and one part of seedless raisins. Pour over this mixtures a dressing made of diluting peanut butter with cold water to the consistency of cream. Almond butter may be substituted for the peanut butter if you prefer.

Five Minute Cabbage

Into boiling water immerge a cabbage head that has been cut into several pieces. Boil vigorously for not longer than five minutes and remove from the stove. Do not add salt until served. Prepared in this manner, cooked cabbage does not have as much of its usual gas-forming tendency.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Removing Wrinkles

Question—H. K.: "Can you suggest a good prescription for removing wrinkles? I don't know what to buy, as there are so many removers from which to choose."

Answer—It is dangerous to use preparations for removing wrinkles except as they are used by a trained cosmetician. Sometimes liquid preparations are used, and others use a peeling induced by a burning of the ultra-violet light. Massage treatments can then be given to the skin and ice applied several times daily to produce a good blood circulation. The very small wrinkles can be almost entirely removed by such methods, but of course the large ones cannot be changed except by facial surgery, and the final results of this method are very disappointing. Watch for the articles appearing tomorrow and Wednesday.

Rancid Butter

Question—Hazel asks: "What causes the rancidity of butter? And is there any method of making it fresh again?"

Answer—The bitter taste of rancid butter is caused by butyric acid which has formed. This acid can be removed to a large extent by thoroughly washing the butter with frish milk which absorbs the butyric acid. After this, the butter should be mixed with water to remove the milk.

High Blood Pressure

Question—Mr. K. D. writes: "I am 80 years old, fairly well preserved, and weigh 155 pounds, but my blood pressure is far too high. Have a dizzy feeling and abnormal heart action. Now please tell me if high blood pressure could kill without my heart giving warning of approaching danger."

Answer—Abnormally high blood pressure, when it reaches the dangerous stage, may give warning by pain and oppression in the heart region; difficult breathing, faintness, a dull stupor, delirium, etc., but it usually strikes like a snake in the dark. I have written a special article on high blood pressure and will gladly send it to you without charge if you will enclose a large, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request.

KING'S HEART CAUSES ALARM

Crowds Gather Before Palace on Sabbath

name does not appear in the king's medical household, but he is a stand and bacteriology specialist at Middlesex hospital.

York at Palace

At 1:30 o'clock this morning, the duke of York, who had been summoned to the palace was still in the sick chamber of his father.

Shortly after midnight when the bulletin was posted on the palace gates, the crowds broke through the police lines in their eagerness to read about the king's condition.

Many continued to wait outside the palace throughout the night, although it was not expected that another bulletin would be issued before morning.

At 1:45 a. m. Buzzard and Whitby left the palace, as did Princess Mary, the duke of York remaining.

The second bulletin of the day, posted at 8:30 tonight, said:

"His majesty had a quieter sleep during the day. The infective process has continued to diminish and his temperature tonight is 100. At the same time there is a decline in heart strength which causes anxiety."

A report of the king's death spread during the afternoon, and was officially denied from Buckingham palace.

Secretary Returns

Home Secretary Sir William Joynson-Hicks, to whom Universal Service read the night bulletin over the telephone at his home, 70 Queensgate, said that he had returned "as planned" from the weekend at Newark, near Cambridge. Last night, however, his housekeeper said on the phone that the home secretary did not intend to return until Monday.

It is the duty of the home secretary to be present at deaths as well as at births, in the royal family.

The whole atmosphere at Buckingham palace Sunday was one of the most acute anxiety. The "anxiety" appearing in the early bulletin, the first time since the king became ill, gives a good reason for the worry.

At that hour there was a crowd estimated at 5,000 stretched in a queue for almost a half mile around the palace.

The printers and editorial crews of all the London morning newspapers were "standing by" tonight.

Days of Prayer

The royal standard with its quaint quartering of mediaeval heraldry is still at top staff over the main portico of Buckingham palace, but through a day without wind and heavy with black fog it hung limp and spiritless, failing to spread its rampant lions over the heads of the anxious thousands before the great gates.

Sunday, which was a day of prayer for the king's recovery, over all the empire from Labrador to Tasmania, witnessed the greatest outpouring of London's breathless anxiety since that day in May, 1910, when King Edward the Seventh lay dying.

The great palace gates and the high fence with its steel spears before the smoke stained pile where another king is now fighting for his life, have all day been the shrine for anxious thousands. As early as 3 a. m. the wide roadway between the Victoria memorial fountain, ghostily splashing, and the great fence, was sliced by the lights of cars stopping while men and women in evening clothes descended to read last night's bulletin. Then with the oncoming of a bitter cold dawn, humbler subjects afoot began to congregate in little knots.

Crowds Are Silent

They knew there would be no bulletin until 11 o'clock, yet they came in increasingly greater numbers and stood about like restless ghosts in the morning's chill, hardly exchanging a single word.

Poor men swathed in mufflers; women with shawls; some of them with babies fretting in the cold, waited—for what? Perhaps only to see a smuggish snake of smoke curling from the chimney pot above the north wing of the palace where their "little man" lay, and to know that, cold as they were, their king was being kept warm.

The cold day with its dark fog gradually stole over London, with the sick sun only suggested by a dull glare through the smoke pall, and the gathering increased from scores to hundreds. Now an increasing number of private cars discharged smartly dressed women, and men in toppers and morning coats, on their way to church. They must pause, even without the reward of a bulletin to read, as if the very act of stopping was devotional.

Democratic Gathering

It was a most Democratic mingling of high and low—fish mongers, flower sellers from Wapping and Haymarket, "young nuts" from their St. James Square, sedate professional men, women of the half-world with their last night's painting making their eyes staring, dowagers with female companions and lap dogs, who ordered their chauffeurs to go ask "Bobby" for news.

Hours slowly passed and the queue diminished, but that space between the ghostily splashing fountain and the palace gates continued to be the shrine of the great city's devotion. All day long the sentries of the guards, with their huge bearskin shakos and long plum colored coats, with bayonets affixed to their guns, did their sentry go at a brisk step—twenty paces and turn. They had the movements of automatos and faces of wood, but you may be sure they too had their minds upon the "little man" behind that smoke stained facade of stone.

The major event of the theatrical season so far this year, "Rio Rita," is to be at the Majestic theater Monday night. Make no mistake about it. Don't pass it up and then say that Wichita Falls does not get good, big shows while they are new.

There is nothing as new and spectacular on the road that has the chance to come here as "Rio Rita." Roger Wolf Kahn's Serenaders, a notable orchestra, is with the show as is a Mexican novelty orchestra of note.

◆ ◆ ◆

"Rio Rita" tickets are still available, and they should be nabbed at once, according to H. C. Federer, city manager of Dent theaters.

◆ ◆ ◆

Another good show, a movie with sound, is opening here Monday. It is Alice White in "Show Girl" at the Strand. According to all advance notices, "Show Girl" is a hot one from one end to the other. Alice White is billed as the girl with "these, them and those,"

◆ ◆ ◆

Corinne Griffith's "Outcast" at the Majestic the past two days has attracted good crowds.

◆ ◆ ◆

A Rex Beach story, "The Michigan Kid" with Renee Adoree in the leading roll, is at the Mission. Conrad Nagel, who recently made a bunch of sound pictures, is seen in the leading male roll.

"Some Pumpkins" is the title of the Zippity Zip musical tab show at the Olympic.

Youth, 21, and Woman Minister, 50, Wedded After Strange Elopement

BOSTON, Dec. 2. (US)—Arousing the Rev. Glenn Morse out of bed early yesterday morning, Teresa Eliza Deane, 50-year-old ex-woman minister and Leonard Clerke Wade, Swampscott youth just past his 21st birthday, were married in West Newbury.

Immediately after the ceremony, young Wade rushed to a telephone and informed his mother of the wedding. He assured her that "he didn't want her to forget that he loved her," but that he could do "no different."

After Mrs. Deane had blushingly informed the minister that the marriage was the result of an elopement, Mr. May and Mrs. December disappeared.

Parents Oppose Match

The youth's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Wade, of Swampscott, violently opposed the match.

"Our boy Leonard," said Wade, "met Mrs. Deane when he was 14 years old.

"Up to that time he was bright and capable boy, but not enthusiastic about Sunday school.

"When Mrs. Deane appeared as teacher, he suddenly acquired a new fondness for Sunday school. We found nothing wrong when the woman came to our house, and were even pleased at her interest.

"Some time later, the congregation began to whisper about the attachment between the two and this gossip began to reach our ears.

"We chided the boy, but he only laughed. Our first alarm came when Leonard called on Mrs. Deane at the room she had in a Lynn lodging house. His only excuse was that she helped him with his studies.

Far Off Look

"Our alarm increased when we noticed Leonard sitting with a far off look in his eyes. We noticed that he was no longer the same boy.

"After this period we began to talk and have others talk to persuade Leonard to break with Mrs. Deane, all of which was of no avail.

She finally resigned from her church work and Leonard immediately followed suit.

"We hoped that the attachment might wear off. Last Sunday Leonard was 21, and we were startled last Friday night to hear from a newspaper reporter that the couple had filed marriage intentions Monday morning in Lynn and Swampscott.

"She knew that had they applied for a license before Leonard was 21, that our objections would have overruled her plans."

Young Wade was graduated from Lynn English high school two years ago. He has been employed as a leather inspector in Peabody.

Mrs. Deane was an ordained minister and was an assistant pastor for a time. She has also had some experience as a nurse, and was once employed as an attendant in prisons.

Sunday School Reports Slump

An even 300 of those who attended Sunday School in Wichita Falls on Nov. 25, in preparation for Thanksgiving day, failed to recover or return from the holiday vacation activities to make up as good an attendance yesterday. Lawton Flier Burns to Death

DUNCAN, Okla., Dec. 2 (AP)—Lieut. Park Sanders of Lawton, Okla., was burned to death and his mechanic, Clement Migliore, received severe burns when their airplane was destroyed by fire while they were taking off from Halliburton field here today.

Migliore lives in New York.

Lieutenant Sanders was the son of the late R. T. Sanders, street commissioner of Lawton. He was piloting the airplane, a Curtis Falcon, from the army post at Lawton, to Galveston, where he was stationed at Fort Crockett.

Taking off from Halliburton field, the plane developed motor trouble and was forced to return for repairs. The ship then soared into the air again. It rose 60 feet, nosed sharply down and struck the cornice of a house in the corner of the field, tearing away six feet of the right wing. The plane's momentum carried it 60 feet farther before it struck the earth and there burst into flames. Migliore was thrown from the plane with his clothing ablaze.

Lieutenant Sanders' body was consumed with the plane.

This was revealed today in a statement of the canal's traffic records made public by the war department.

Smoke in Automobile Agency Causes Alarm

Smoke doesn't always mean fire, so the fire department reported "no fire" on returning to headquarters Sunday night from McFall Brothers automobile agency at 600 Scott avenue. As the place was closed, the firemen believed the smoke in the place had hung there after some automobile motors had been run with smoky exhausts.

A fire at the home of H. F. Porterfield broke out at the same time the McFall Brothers call was received. The place, located at Avenue E and Harrison, was damaged to the extent of $1,000 according to fire department estimates.

State to Ask Death In Dallas Slaying Trial

DALLAS, Dec. 2. (AP)—Indications that the state would demand that V. Ray Adams of Bartlett, charged with having killed Orville Mathews, Dallas, in a controversy over an election bet, pay with his life for the slaying, were seen here today when District Attorney McCraw announced that he would qualify the special venire, drawn for the case, on the death penalty.

The trial is set to open tomorrow and the state will answer ready, said prosecutors. The defense, however, said that it would answer ready only if all its witnesses were present.

Suspect in Blast Slaying Goes on Trial

ROCKFORD, Ill., Dec. 2. (US)—The trial of Paul Reed, 24, a draftsman charged with the murder of Vernon Plager, radio salesman, opens here tomorrow.

On July 19 last, Vernon Plager waved goodbye to his wife and six-year-old daughter as he left his home to report for work. He stepped on the starter of his car and the explosion that resulted blew his body to pieces. As he died he accused Reed.

Theosophist Urges Lodge Here In Address on Principles of Science

"Wichita Falls is a logical place for the establishment of a theosophical lodge," said Capt. L. L. Bartlow of Lawton, Okla., president of the Theosophical Federation of Oklahoma, in an address Sunday afternoon to a small gathering of Wichita Falls people at the Kemp hotel who gathered for the purpose of organizing a study group here.

Capt. Bartlow was accompanied by a small company of members of the Oklahoma organization, and was leader in an informal discussion of the principles and practices of theosophy.

"The easiest question to ask and the hardest one to answer," he said, "is, what is Theosophy? Theosophy is not a religion, although it has a religious aspect. It regards all the great religious systems of the world as branches of that one body of transcendental knowledge that the human race has never lacked. It is also a science, in that it presents the accumulated observations of many years of careful experimentation and observation of superphysical phenomena together with the laws and principles deduced from them."

A study group was organized to meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. N. Hankins, 1506 Tenth street, on Monday evening of each week. The first meeting will be held Dec. 3. Invitation was extended to all those interested to attend.

Thrill Driver to Boost Dance For Playground Band Uniform Fund

A complete set of new uniforms for the Wichita Falls Playground band so that their concerts next summer may be good to watch as well as hear, is the goal of a dance at the Kemp hotel the night of Dec. 22, and of a 101 hour automobile drive by Buck Hoover.

Buck is a Texas cowboy and all around dare devil. He is also interested in kids, so that he has consented to make the drive here as an advance advertising stunt for the big dance.

Music is needed for a band, and the Wichita Falls Playground band has grown to 40 pieces. The need, felt for some time, of adequately caring for the band will be filled if the automobile drive advertises the dance enough to make the dance a success.

Buck's drive will be a continuous affair without food or sleep, and he will be chained to his car on the entire drive. He may drink water, however. The car will be a Durant.

During the war, Buck was an ambulance driver, and at that time conceived many of his wild feats he has since capitalized on for exploitation.

His scrap book reads like a combination of an old time Diamond Dick, 10 cent novel, and a modern movie thriller.

More details of his proposed exploits will be given out as soon as they are developed.

Second Temblor Felt in Chile As Toll of First Mounts to 152 Lives

SANTIAGO, Chile, Dec. 2. (US)—While the death toll of known victims of Chile's earthquake mounted to 152 tonight, with the number of those seriously injured estimated at more than 300, another temblor was felt at Madruga, earlier in the day, according to reports received here this evening.

The second quake at Madruga, following the violent on which occurred shortly after midnight yesterday, was not of such intensity as the earlier one. Although it was not believed to have caused any further extensive damages, it caused a panic among the inhabitants who already were nerve wrecked because of their previous experiences.

No estimates of the property damages caused by the first earthquake were possible tonight, but it is known the loss will be enormous. The cities of Talca and Chilan are reported in ruins, and Oswald Cortes who arrived here tonight from a ranch near Curico, declared that city was wrecked by the temblor. He added that the government buildings were in debris, and there were many bodies of victims laying about the streets.

HUGE REPTILE GAINS LIBERTY

Giant Alligator Loose Near Newport

Special to The Record News.

NEWPORT, Texas, Dec. 2.—All efforts by parties that have been trying to find the big alligator that escaped from Coyle lake during the fall when the drought caused the water in the lake to get low, have failed thus far. The reptile was seen about two weeks ago by some small boys in a water hole in a spring branch three miles from the lake and near the Jacksboro highway.

When parties went to the place to capture the animal they found him safely hid away in a cavity behind a stone wall of a large concrete bridge. Since then he has left that place of hiding and is in some of the water holes along the spring branch, the banks of which are almost hidden by a heavy growth of overhanging brush, briars and grass, which makes it easy for the alligator to hide from his searchers.

During the last three years the alligator has been in the lake he has been known to leave the lake and seek refuge in large nearby tanks, but no one ever thought about the animal traveling over rough, rock timbered hills for miles to other quarters.

Larger Flowers Grown Under Electric Rays

ABILENE, Dec. 2. (AP)—Flowers grown electrically attain almost twice their normal size.

This has been disclosed through an experiment by Joe A. White, of Abilene. The test was made in an especially laid out flower bed in White's back yard.

Three beds of chrysanthemums were planted and over the extreme end of the garden was swung an ordinary 300 watt electric lamp. The flowers grew rapidly and after budding, matured quickly. The experiment showed that the flowers farthest away from the light measured about two inches in diameter, gaining in size, until those directly under the light's rays measured six inches in diameter.

The hunter unloaded between 12 and 15 No. 6 shot into the supposed wildcat's chest, arm and upper abdomen but none of them penetrated deeply enough to cause serious injury. Saxerud himself was out hunting when he was mistaken for "game."

CHURCHES GIVE KGKO PROGRAM

Sacred Music and Talks Heard Over Radio

Three different churches presented hour programs over station KGKO Sunday afternoon, the First Christian of Electra broadcasting from 3 to 4 o'clock, laymen of the First Christian of Wichita Falls giving the 4-5 o'clock program, and the Grant Street Methodist Episcopal church giving the program from 5 to 6 o'clock.

Rev. C. C. Klingman of the Electra church combined his sermon with several musical numbers given by the church choir. The songs were so selected that the text of each comprised a part of the body of Rev. Mr. Klingman's address. The choir was directed and accompanied by Miss Mary Ellen Scott, teacher of piano in the Electra schools.

Hines Makes Talk

Harry Hines, local oil operator, and R. E. Shepherd were the performers representing the First Christian church. Mr. Hines occupied the first half of the hour with a layman's sermon on "The Spark of Divine Light." Mr. Shepherd's selections, with Mrs. Shepherd accompanying, included "The Holy City," "I'm a Pilgrim," "When They Ring the Golden Bells," "The Hand of His Hand," and "His Eye Is On the Sparrow."

The last hour of the afternoon's program was filled by a mixed quartet from the Grant Street Methodist church and Rev. Pat Moreland, pastor. The quartet sang three numbers, and Rev. Moreland delivered a short sermon on "The Light That Failed." He chose for his text: "For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this splendid world," and stressed the impossibility of attaining any worthy goal without high ideals.

Following is the text of Mr. Hines' radio talk:

"Our scripture reading for this period is a bit of spiritual inspiration from Matthew vii:7-14. Let us meditate together on the thought of the spark of divine light. God created you and me in his own image—the highest honor and benediction he could have possibly bestowed upon us. He patterned us after his own likeness. He breathed into our nostrils the breath of life, and since the creation of humanity, we have been the recipients of God's love. He who is the donor of all good and perfect gifts. In the creation of man God planted the seed, or placed the spark of divine light, in our hearts.

Works Patiently

"No one has ever arrived at a true estimate of men, and their influence as has our Lord and Master. Jesus' attitude toward men furnishes a sharp contrast to the current present-day attitude of human beings. Jesus was aware of how slowly the minds of the average man could be on spiritual analysis—yet He had a profound respect for the mind of man, and He works patiently that man shall share His truth and experience. We can learn from Him much to warm and hearten us. He never judges men by their knowledge or cleverness. He has a deeper penetration into the larger values of common human beings. His reverence for the common man, His patience with the common mind, form one great reason why Christianity has grown steadily.

"By nature every man and woman is naturally religious. In some it never reaches the surface. We should then seek the Lord while He may be found. He would have us confess our sin and acknowledge His name. The flagrant violations of God's laws, that should give us concern are the great sins of omission, the things in life that we leave undone, as much as the wrong things that we do. If we want a mansion in Heaven, we must realize the necessity of furnishing sufficient material to build it. The gifts we give must be of the heart. For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have life everlasting."

'Christmas Bungalow' For Season's Mail Rush

BEAUMONT, Texas, Dec. 2. (AP)—A Christmas "bungalow" erected in front of the Beaumont federal building is planned by Postmaster Charles Ledwidge as a unique idea to take care of the additional holiday mail rush with present postoffice facilities.

After a consultation with superintendent of schools, M. E. Moore it was decided to have the structure erected by high school manual training students.

The postoffice, crowded for space in normal times, soon is to be enlarged. This lack of space creates an impossible congestion during the Christmas season.

"RIO RITA" TO PLAY TONIGHT

Famous Musical Comedy At Majestic

The "Rio Rita" musical comedy company, 100 strong and every one a New York actor, will arrive in Wichita Falls at 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon for their one presentation here at the Majestic theater Monday night. The curtain goes up at 8:20 o'clock.

The advance sale has been heavy, according to H. C. Federer, but there are still a number of good seats available. Those who wish good seats should call at the Majestic as early in the day Monday as possible, Mr. Federer said, in order to be sure of good seats.

A new musical extravaganza that has never before been presented in Wichita Falls, "Rio Rita," is the outstanding follower of "Rose Marie" and "The Vagabond King" among the musicals.

It is a Shubert show with Lucia Hackley, originally a San Antonio girl, playing in the title roll of Rio Rita. Artheur Rogers, who won fame as the leading man in "Broadway," will be seen opposite Miss Hackley.

Ruth Fullmer, assisted by Jimmie Lee, and Charles Lee, are in charge of large amounts of comedy in the show. Jules Bennett, "Ina Leeland," Cedric Brown, Virginia Evans, Eugene Yarnell, Ellen Eckler and James Givens are among those scheduled to stand out and make particular hits with the fans.

A beauty chorus of 60 will be seen with Miss Billie Blythe, who is an international beauty contest winner.

Guy Bolton and Fred Thompson wrote the show, and Harry Tierney and Joseph McCarthy wrote the music.

"Rio Rita," "Sweethearts," "Following the Sun Around," "March of the Texas Rangers," "When You're in Love You'll Waltz," "The Jumping Bean," "The Moonlight Ballet," "Are You There," and "I Can Speak Espagnol" are among the musical hits of the show.

The scene and action of the play are in Texas and Old Mexico. Arthur Rogers plays the part of a Texas ranger, and almost all of the characters represent either Texans or Spaniards.

Two Arrested Here In Young County Theft

Two young men, arrested here Saturday by Officers Stubblefield, Rohatsch and Lowrey, were turned over to Sheriff J. B. Foster of Graham for Young county Sunday. The return trip to Graham was started at once.

The men are to be charged with the theft of a truck tire and rim, the sheriff said. The tire was recovered in good condition in Wichita Falls.

Brief Meeting of City Council Scheduled

Having passed 1,006 ordinances the Wichita Falls city council is declaring a holiday Monday night on ordinances of any kind. The aldermen are scheduled to meet as usual, but they do not face the consideration of any new or old ordinances as the slate is clear of this kind of work. A short meeting is predicted by the city officials.

Kiwanis Club To Elect New Heads

The Kiwanis club of this city will devote its regular weekly meeting Monday noon at the Kemp to the election of officers to serve for the coming year, it was announced Sunday by Paul Pearson, secretary. Only members of the club will attend Monday's luncheon.

Two Girls of 11 With Charges of Theft in Jail Here

Socks and Gingham Dresses Give New Touch to Life in Cell

Two little girls in socks and gingham school dresses are locked up in the woman's ward of the Wichita county jail awaiting the filing of charges that may lead to a sentence in the Girls' Training school at Gainesville.

The children are 11 years old and small for their ages. They have spent two nights alone in the juvenile division of the jail quarters, sleeping in cots behind bars. They aren't afraid, they say, because the matron leaves the light burning.

In the office of Juvenile Officer James McDonald is a pile of pitifully childish trinkets which the little prisoners have admitted stealing from homes and stores in Wichita Falls and Burkburnett. They were caught on the streets Friday afternoon, loaded with their pilfered toys. Three skates and a cheap little harmonica are amoung the goods. There are four little imitation gold rings, a 10 cent toy watch, two bottles of perfume and a fountain pen. A pair of tiny ukeleles, made only for small children, lie beside a stack of five packages of cigarettes. These things and others, with about four dollars in cash, were taken from the pair after their arrest late Friday.

The two ran away from homes in Burkburnett for the second time last week. They were going to Fort Worth, they told Mr. McDonald, to search for the father of the youngest who is separated from their mother. Their goal was a town in Oklahoma on their first adventure into the wide world. Neither of them like school or home they say.

The pair look very small and lost in the austere, barred room. They have to stand on tip-toe to peer out through the peep-hole in the heavy door. Their bare legs are grimy and scarred from rough and tumble play. One is a brown eyed child, quick with her answers, mischievous and attractive when she smiles. She is a few months older than her blue-eyed comrade, whose pale blond hair is pushed back behind her ears.

"Yes, I guess we'll to to Gainesville because we've been mean," admitted the leader. "We'll be good there and good when we come home." She was apparently not oppressed at the prospect. But her playmate was quiet and near to tears.

"I haven't any father to help me and I am afraid her father will get her out and I'll have to go alone," she said.

The little girls like the jail quarters well enough, they said Sunday. "They're as good as any I've ever had if I cpuld just get out" one of them explained.

Home conditions for both girls are unsatisfactory, Mr. McDonald says. He is expecting to file delinquency charges in the 78th district court within the coming week, explaining that under the circumstances the children can not be expected to improve if sent back to their homes.

Special to The Record News

ABILENE, Texas, Dec. 2.—Students from three of the schools in Abilene will help to entertain delegates to the annual convention of the Texas Hotel association to be held here Dec. 3 and 4.

A combination banquet and concert on the evening of Dec. 3 will be one of the highlights of the meeting and all the talent for the program of that affair with two exceptions will be supplied by the college and university in Abilene.

The orchestra from Abilene Christian college will play during the program, an octet from the fine arts department of McMurry college will give several numbers and a one-act play will be presented by the speech arts department of Simmons university.

Hon. R. W. Haynie, past president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, will act as master of ceremonies, and Dr E. B. Surface, pastor of the Central Baptist church, will deliver an address.

Indications are that over 200 will attend the meeting here. The local chamber of commerce will give the visitors a barbecue at the Abilene Country club at noon on the second day of the meeting.
