Himmler's daughter keeps past buried

By WERNER ZWICK
Associated Press Writer

MUNICH, West Germany — Gudrun Himmler, only child of SS chief Heinrich Himmler, has spent nearly 40 years burying her past. And except for a few glimpses, it stayed that way in what she described as her first face-to-face interview ever.

"I don't want to discuss politics. I was only 16 at the end of the war and knew nothing of the concentration camps," she said over tea and cakes at her modest three-room Munich apartment.

With her two adolescent children listening intently, she spoke of her father — an architect of the Nazi concentration camps where 6 million Jews died during World War II — and her mother, Marga, who died in 1967.

"She never believed in the stories about genocide. She never believed Jews were being exterminated," the 53-year-old woman said of her mother. "Until her dying day she never believed those reports."

Himmler's daughter, who agreed to be interviewed on the condition that her married name not be disclosed, has tried to conceal her identity since she and her mother were captured by U.S. troops in the Tyrol at the end of the war in 1945. Her father, who was captured separately, committed suicide.

"I was imprisoned for a year and a half," she said. "I wasn't beaten but it wasn't what you'd call an easy life."

Unlike relatives of some other prominent Nazis who have occasionally made headlines, including Hermann Goering's daughter, Edda, or Rudolf Hess' family, Miss Himmler has stayed out of the public eye.

She changed jobs 13 times to keep her identity secret, she said, and even her neighbors don't know who her father was. The whole family, her husband said, "acts like an intelligence service" to guard their identities.

The first crack in Miss Himmler's privacy occurred several years ago when Stern magazine published a page from her girlhood diaries. Then came a recent telephone call from a Jew in Israel who said he had her diaries and 700 letters written to her by her father.

Chaim Rosenthal, a 44-year-old painter whose relatives died in Nazi camps, called with a list of 25 questions for Himmler's daughter. But he was so shaken during the 10-minute conversation that he barely got any words out — all he could do was listen as she begged him to send her copies of the documents and not to publish them.

"I could feel things moving inside me," he said later. "Here was this woman, the daughter of Himmler, pleading, begging, in that soft Bavarian German, saying she had children and did I have children and couldn't I understand how all she wanted was to be left alone."

Gudrun Himmler was not left alone. The conversation was recorded and broadcast by Israeli television. Later, Himmler's daughter agreed to an interview with the Associated Press.

Himmler "never discussed politics at home, aside from the general remarks you could read in the papers," his daughter said.

"He certainly never discussed the Jewish question," she said, using the euphemism favored by those who do not wish to say that millions of Jews were systematically exterminated by the Nazis.

Reagan turns to 'pleasure' portion of trip

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan has completed his business in the West and plans several days of relaxation in Palm Springs, highlighted by a New Year's Eve party with friends from the business and entertainment worlds.

The president was flying late this afternoon to Palm Springs, after a 27-hour visit to Los Angeles for the recommissioning of the battleship USS New Jersey and a quiet evening at a hotel.

One of the few remaining pieces of business the traveling White House may conduct while Reagan is in the West will be the announcement of a presidential commission, appointed at the urging of Congress, to study possible basing modes for the MX missile.

Reagan's proposal to place 100 missiles in silos near Cheyenne, Wyo., in a closely spaced "dense pack" pattern met with strong objections in the House and Senate, forcing the president to agree to name a panel to give the issue further study.

An administration official, requesting anonymity, said that former Defense Secretaries Harold Brown, who served in the Carter administration, and James Schlesinger, a veteran of the Ford administration, were "highly likely" to join the commission.

The president was unlikely to play any part in the announcement of the commission's makeup.

The only appointment on the president's schedule today was a visit to his hotel suite by his tailor.

"Nothing tonight, nothing tomorrow," deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said on Tuesday afternoon.

The president, who flew to Phoenix, Ariz., Monday with his wife for an overnight visit with Mrs. Reagan's ailing mother, was joined Tuesday by White House deputy chief of staff Michael K. Deaver and National Security adviser William P. Clark.

Aides had said the president planned a number of bill signings this week to clear up the paperwork left him in Congress' rush to end its session last week.

But Speakes said none of the 40 to 50 pieces of legislation will be ready for Reagan's signature until next week when he is back in Washington.

So, Reagan had no official business to conduct once he arrives at "Sunnylands," the 200-acre estate of millionaire publisher, and former ambassador, Walter Annenberg.

Annenberg, who was President Nixon's envoy to Great Britain, and his wife, Leonore, have been hosts to Reagan and his wife, Nancy, for more than a decade of New Year's celebrations.

During his stay in the desert, Reagan will undoubtedly play what he describes as his "annual" golf game on Annenberg's private 18-hole course.

When he returns to Washington Sunday, Reagan will face a host of decisions, including chosing a new transportation secretary to replace Drew Lewis, who resigned effective Feb. 1 to go into private business.

Standing guard

A Miami policeman, with revolver in hand, stands guard as firemen extinguish a fire during rioting late Tuesday in the Florida city. The disturbance broke out after a man was reported shot by a police officer.

7 hurt in Miami rioting

MIAMI (AP) — Police kept part of a black slum sealed off today after a night of looting and violence by rock-tossing gangs angered when a Hispanic policeman critically wounded a black man at a video arcade. Police said they killed one looter.

Seven people were hurt in the Tuesday night disturbance in the Overtown area, and police spokesman Mike Stewart said 29 people had been arrested by early today.

Five police cars were destroyed, three by fire, and two journalists' cars were burned. A group of about 20 young men was seen swarming a young white woman, who was stripped of her clothes but fled, apparently unharmed, into an apartment building.

It was Miami's worst disturbance since a May 1980 riot claimed 18 lives and caused $100 million in property damage.

An 84-square-block area was sealed off, with exit ramps on a nearby highway closed, and about 50 officers equipped with riot gear were on patrol, said Stewart. Most roads were reopened today, but one area was blocked off because of an isolated rock-throwing incident that police spokesman Juan Santos said was "nothing major."

"Now it's real quiet," Stewart said today. "There's only sporadic incidents of rocks and bottles being thrown."

He said "a substantial number" of officers would stay in the area all day.

The man whose shooting by police prompted the violence, Nevell Johnson Jr., 21, was in critical condition today

Salvadoran troops, leftist rebels clash, vow escalation

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Government troops and leftist rebels clashed in the heaviest fighting since Christmas and vowed to strengthen their forces during 1983.

Military sources said eight soldiers, two policemen and seven guerrillas died in Tuesday's fighting, and one soldier was killed Monday. Rebels made no claims of how many soldiers or police they killed in the same period.

Troops in Usulutan province said leftists ambushed a troop truck near Santiago de Maria, killing eight soldiers and wounding an undertermined number of others.They said rebels set off three land mines under the truck and opened fire in the countryside ambush 75 miles north of San Salvador.

In Chalatenango province, a national guard commander said guerrillas surprised a security force patrol near San Jose las Flores, about 60 miles north of the capital, killing a police commander and a policeman. He said seven guerrillas died in fighting that followed.

Military sources in Usulutan province said guerrilla snipers attacked a national guard post at the El Coyolito bridge, 60 miles east of the capital, and killed one soldier late Monday.

In San Salvador, guerrillas riding through neighborhoods in cars dynamited at least seven soft-drink trucks, police said. No injuries were reported.

The countryside ambushes marked the bloodiest fighting in more than a week, and came five days after an informal Christmas truce urged by Roman Catholic leaders in the war-torn Central American country.

The truce started Christmas Eve and was first broken Sunday by rebels sabotaging power lines which left the eastern third of the nation without electrical power.

Human rights groups estimate 38,000 people have been slain in the three-year-old war between a coalition of rebel groups and the U.S.-backed government. Eighty percent of the victims are civilians caught in crossfires or murdered by right-wing "death squads" said to collaborate with the army.

Military sources said the army will add 10,000 soldiers to its force of 33,000. Two-year military service is required, but in the past year the government claims there has been no shortage of volunteers. A Western observer said the army had more applications than it was accepting.

The government's 1982 defense budget, mostly subsidized by the United States, will be increased in 1983 by 10 percent to $109 million out of a total budget of $832 million. The 1982 budget was $900 million.

The Reagan administration provided the government with $320 million in aid in 1982, including $81 million in military assistance and 50 American non-combat military advisers. It has pledged $226 million in military and economic aid for 1983, contingent on congressional approval.

The clandestine rebel Radio Verceremos said the guerrillas will increase their numbers, though it is not known what their present strength is. In San Salvador a freshly painted rebel slogan on a wall reads, "Join the massive recruitment of 1983 for a year free of repression."

After months of fighting, the rebels appear to have improved their maneuverability in areas of the northern provinces where many government security posts have been abandoned.

In a year-end message Tuesday, Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia urged the guerrillas to lay down their arms, saying, "There is still time to find a better road." The government has asked the rebels to end their fighting several times before.

Garcia also said the government will name a replacement shortly for his deputy, Col. Adolfo Castillo, held by the rebels since his helicopter was shot down in June near the Honduran border.

The high command had balked so far in naming a replacement because it had hoped Castillo would be released. It also was considered as going against the military code of honor.

Garcia told reporters, however, that naming a replacement for Castillo is "necessary." The announcement is expected on Friday, the last day of 1982, traditionally the date when Cabinet-level appointments are made here.

Development monitored of four Soviet missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials are monitoring Soviet development of four types of advanced land-based missiles, but say they lack enough information to tell whether Moscow intend to violate nuclear arms treaty curbs.

Three of the missiles are expected to be ready for flight-testing next year. The fourth failed in a test last October, according to U.S. intelligence sources.

The 1979 SALT II treaty allows the Soviet Union and the United States each to flight-test and deploy one new intercontinental ballistic missile. Both countries have agreed to stay within in the treaty's terms, even though neither country has ratified it.

The State Department has indicated it is satisfied that the Soviets' solid-fuel missile tested in October came within the limits permitted by the treaty.

But Soviet testing of any or all of the other three strategic missiles reported under development could raise serious questions, said U.S. government sources who declined to be identified.

Government sources said that two of these untested missiles appear to be advanced versions of current Soviet weapons, the powerful and highly accurate SS-18s and SS-19s.

If it turns out that these missiles are improved versions of current weapons, officials said that would not represent a violation of the treaty, provided the new versions did not exceed permissible limits in size and some other characteristics.

Government specialists indicated that the definition of what is considered a modification of an existing missile is "fuzzy" under the wording of the SALT II treaty.

Travelers' advisory issued as snow, drizzle forecast

The weatherman has put the city and surrounding area on wintery notice: bundle up for freezing drizzle or snow tonight and Thursday and, if you attempt to drive, drive carefully.

The romance of a white Christmas quickly fades after the season suddenly wanes, and snow and icicles become hazards to cope with rather than something to sing about.

On the heels of a three-inch snowfall Sunday, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has forecast a 30 percent chance of light snow or freezing drizzle tonight and a low in the mid-20s. Winds are to be southeasterly at 5 to 10 mph tonight.

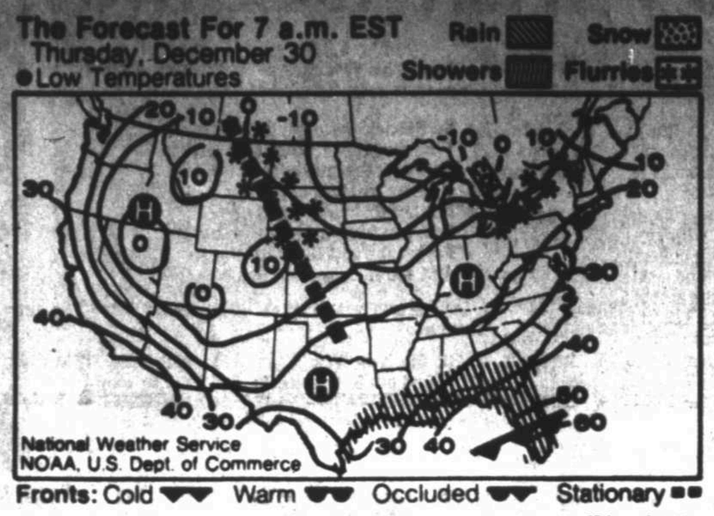

The probability of freezing drizzle and snow will increase to 50 percent Thursday, when the temperature is to hover in the lower 30s.

The weather bureau has issue a travelers' advisory for tonight and Thursday, when the snow or freezing drizzle likely will lead to hazardous driving conditions. Winds are to be easterly at 5 to 15 mph Thursday.

Tuesday's high temperature of 40 degrees was just half of the record low of 80 degrees for the date in 1964. The overnight low of 17 degrees was almost double the record low of 9 degrees for the date in 1939.

For the remainder of the week, the weatherman has forecast warmer temperatures and a slight chance of rain.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Storms claim 25 lives

By JUDY GIBBS
Associated Press Writer

Lingering winds from the most brutal blizzard of the young winter buffeted parts of the Northeast today while cities of the Midwest struggled out from under a foot and a half of snow.

But power had been restored early today to most of the 200,000 homes that went dark as the snowstorm roared from eastern Colorado to upper Michigan on Monday and Tuesday, snapping utility poles and blocking roads with 8-foot drifts in places.

The center of the storm had swept into Canada by early today, but strong winds raked the mid-Mississippi Valley and upper Appalachians and a storm warning was in effect for eastern Lake Erie. Gale warnings were posted over most of the Great Lakes region and along the New England coast.

A series of storms that began Christmas Eve claimed at least 25 lives by late Tuesday, mostly in weather-caused traffic accidents.

Winds gusting up to 70 mph and snow-packed tree limbs falling on utility lines knocked out power in parts of Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Kansas and Nebraska.

By this morning, service had been restored to most of the 96,000 homes that lost power when 60-mph winds snapped power lines in southern Michigan. Less than 1,000 of the 40,000 residents of Lincoln, Neb., affected by a blackout still were without electricity.

The National Weather Service called the storm the fourth-worst in Minnesota history. In Minneapolis and St. Paul downtown offices were deserted and the airport was shut for the first time in 25 years. More than 470 flights were affected during the 16-hour stoppage.

The storm moved into Canada on Tuesday evening after dumping up to 18 inches of snow in Nebraska and 17 inches in South Dakota and Minnesota. Michigan got up to a foot of snow and Kansas and Iowa recorded up to 8 inches in places.

"It's over with. The storm moved so fast the low pressure system's already in Canada. It's gone," said Alex Koscielski, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

There were record highs in some places, including 62 degrees in Boston. In Illinois, the Windy City lived up to its name when winds clocked at more than 50 mph toppled six 150-pound metal beams from a construction site on Chicago's Michigan Avenue, which was nearly deserted during the 5:30 a.m. incident. There were no injuries.

Hundreds of stranded travelers spent the night at truck stops, armories, hotels and motels and deserted vehicles were scattered across highways and streets in the Midwest. Most major highways were reopened by Tuesday night.

"People are doubling up, staying at neighbors who have kerosene heaters and portable generators," said Mayor Keith Krause of Mallard, Iowa, where power was not expected to be restored until today.

The gusting winds tore the roof off a school in Mayville, Wis., and a barn in Edgerton, Wis., and blew a landing bridge at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago against an empty Continental Airlines jet, breaking a window.

People were asked not to travel in the Twin Cities and the University of Minnesota closed for the first time since 1966.

The heavy snowfall meant jobs for some of the cities' jobless. Eighty people were hired at $4.25 an hour to shovel snow off the air-suspended roof of the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in Minneapolis.

"It was a big day for shoveling jobs," said Jodie Welch of Dolphin Temporary Help Service.

Fire of undetermined origin broke out shortly before 7 a.m. today in the Woodhill Office Park building at 3000 N. Garfield Ave. Several fire department units responded and were still on the scene at press time. One fireman said the blaze started in the basement and spread through the walls to the attic. No further details on the indicent were immediately available.

at Jackson Memorial Hospital with a bullet wound in the head. Two witnesses claimed the shooting was unprovoked.

Community leaders warned that violence might flare again, since Overtown is near the site of the Orange Bowl Parade on New Year's Eve, and the Orange Bowl college football game on New Year's Night.

"This weekend, that neighborhood is going to be a dangerous place," said Bill Perry, president of the local chapter of People United to Serve Humanity, who said he walked the streets to try to quell violence."These people are mad. We can probably expect a lot more trouble."

Perry said he thought many rioters wanted to avenge the shooting of Johnson. After he was wounded, three officers investigating the shooting were trapped in the arcade by an angry mob for about an hour before they could be freed with a tear gas assault, police said.

The Rev. Theoford Johnson, who was conducting church services a few blocks from the center of the disturbance, said: "People took to the streets in resentment of the shooting. They were mad, just like in the riots a few years ago."

Miami's black neighborhoods erupted in 1980 after an all-white jury in Tampa acquitted four white policemen in the beating death of black businessman Arthur McDuffie. That riot was centered in Liberty City and also spread to Overtown, five miles away.

Perry said he thought Tuesday's violence was "a little more intense" than the 1980 riots because "people in the other disturbance would hit and run. Brothers last night didn't run."

In Tuesday's violence, youths were seen running down a street with hams taken from a looted meat store.

"The brothers were throwing rocks and bottles like terrible," said Michael Patterson, a reporter for the black-oriented Miami Times weekly newspaper. "Every so often, a white person would drive by and they would throw at them. It must have been 500-600 people."

Up to 200 police officers descended on the area to quell the initial disturbance. One police officer was shot, but unhurt because of his bullet-proof vest, Stewart said. An unidentified 13-year-old boy was shot once in the leg.

An unidentified man who joined about 15 others in trying to loot a freezer company was shot and killed by a special-weapons police team after he allegedly pointed a gun at a two officers, Stewart said.

The incident that sparked the violence began when two uniformed policemen, both Hispanic, walked into a video arcade, the Recreation Establishment, at about 6 p.m. in a "routine check of a place known for drug transactions," Stewart said.

An officer "saw a bulge" on Johnson, who was playing a video game, Police Chief Kenneth Harms said at a Tuesday night news conference. The officer asked what the bulge was, and was told "That's a gun," Harms said.

As the officer began to make an arrest, the man moved suddenly and "the officer's gun discharged," Harms said. He refused to identify the officer or his partner.

But other customers said the shooting was unprovoked.

Marvin Brown, 26, who identified himself as Johnson's cousin, said the officers approached Johnson and one checked his pants pocket while the other held a gun near his head.

"He (the officer) immediately pulled the trigger."

Congress blocks sub disposal plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has blocked the Navy for two years from carrying out a proposal to dump radioactive parts from old nuclear submarines in the ocean.

When the House considered the nickel-a-gallon increase to the federal gasoline tax last week, Rep. Glenn Anderson, D-Calif., quietly added an amendment banning the Navy from sinking the subs in coastal waters for the next two years, except for research purposes.

The rider was approved without dissent by both the House and Senate. The gas tax bill is now awaiting President Reagan's signature.

The Navy didn't know about Anderson's amendment until it was approved. In a statement, the Navy said, "It would be premature to comment on how this might affect Navy plans in the future."

Bob Freeland, an aide to Anderson, said, "There was no reason to tell the Navy."

Anderson, whose district includes a large naval base, is not anti-Navy, Freeland said. But the question needs more study, he said.

Anderson, in a statement, was critical of past Navy radioactive dumping practices, and said he proposed the ban because "it is the duty of Congress to make sure our coastal waters are safe for fishing and recreation."

The United States has not dumped any radioactive wastes in the ocean since 1970 when the Council on Environmental Quality reported that the practice increasingly threatened the marine environment. From 1946 until then, 90,000 canisters of nuclear wastes had been sunk off the coast.

The Navy has already decommissioned five nuclear subs and plans to mothball up to 100 more in the next three decades. Most of the Polaris-class ships scheduled for the scrapyard were built in the 1960s and will replaced by the much more powerful Trident-class submarines.

But the Navy hasn't been able to decide what to do with subs' reactor chambers and other nuclear parts, which have some low-level radioactivity.

One proposal — postponed for 24 months by Congress' action — calls for dropping the chambers into remote, deep-sea sites. The sites are in the Pacific Ocean, about 160 miles southwest of Cape Mendocino, Calif., or the Atlantic Ocean, about 200 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C.

The other proposal would bury them on land at the Hanford, Wash., nuclear reservation or the Savannah River nuclear facility in South Carolina. Hanford already has a pair of waste disposal areas. .

The Environmental Protection Agency is studying both the land and sea disposal plans.

The two Navy proposals for disposing of the sub fleet have been criticized by environmental groups who charge that both plans could have adverse consequences.

The Navy says that when the submarines are decommissioned, all nuclear fuel and materials are removed, but some low-level radioactivity remains.

Last week, the Navy issued a draft environmental impact statement which indicated no preference for either method, but it did point out that it would cost $7.2 million to bury each ship on land compared to $5.2 million to sinking them.

Moderate-sized earthquake rattles area along California-Nevada border

BISHOP, Calif. (AP) — A moderate-sized earthquake, the fourth reported in California this week, rattled across a sparsely populated area on the California-Nevada border but caused no damage.

The quake, centered 40 miles east of Mono Lake, measured between 5.0 and 5.4 on the Richter scale and hit at 11:06 a.m. Tuesday, according to seismographic stations at the University of California at Berkeley and the University of Nevada-Reno.

"It didn't do any damage here," said Bill Martin of Benton Station, Calif., about 30 miles north of Bishop. "It was just a good roller."

Radio station KIOQ in Bishop said a worker at an agricultural quarantine station on the California-Nevada border told of severe shaking at the facility, but other callers reported no damage.

On Sunday morning, two mild quakes were reported near Clear Lake in northern California and in Monterey County, and another mild quake was centered about 50 southeast of Yosemite National Park on Monday.

There was no damage reported from those earlier quakes.

Himmler's daughter keeps past buried

became head of the SS, a quasi-military unit of the Nazi party used as a special police. She grew up in Munich, near Dachau. A 1941 entry in her diaries describes a visit to the camp where at least 40,000 people died:

"Today we went to the SS concentration camp at Dachau. We saw everything we could. We saw the gardening work. We saw the pear trees... We saw all the pictures painted by the prisoners. Marvelous. And afterward we had a lot to eat and each of us got a gift. It was very nice. A very big surprise."

Now, Himmler's daughter will not talk about the death camps, or about her feelings for her father, who was easily the most feared man in the Third Reich. "I don't want to make any political judgments," is all she will say.

Miss Himmler says the diaries and letters were stolen in 1945 along with her family's other belongings. They reportedly were obtained by a former SS man now living in Mexico, and found their way to Rosenthal through documents dealers.

Miss Himmler's son, 14, and daughter, 12, watched as she took out a faded photograph of Himmler in uniform, one of Miss Himmler's few remaining mementoes of her father. "Is that granddad?" the girl asked.

Himmler's daughter would like copies of her diaries, and said she might consider court action to block their further use. But she also wants to avoid the publicity any lawsuit would bring.

"I don't think I'll send her the photocopies," Rosenthal said. "The truth is, she annoyed me. Saying she was just a little girl then, and that she had suffered enough, and that I could surely understand. As though we were somehow partners through it all.

"I'm not saying she's guilty of anything. Of course she was just a girl then. But to tell me how much she had suffered? I can't help thinking about all the other little children who suffered and didn't survive."

Toasting dates back to 16th century Irish tradition

EDITOR'S NOTE: Skoal. Cheers. L'chaim. Sante. And, of course, here's mud in your eye. 'Tis the season for holiday spirits and what's a holiday spirit without a toast for the New Year? Here's one Irishman who's made more than a hobby of the art and practice of toasting.

By KAY BARTLETT

NEW YORK (AP) — If "here's mud in your eye" is the best you can come up with this New Year's Eve, you might want to take a tip from John Ryan, Irish toastmaster and a man who has researched the history of the toast.

"Everyone should have two or three toasts memorized for that inevitable occasion when they will be called upon to rise and give a toast," says Ryan, who has memorized about 30 toasts.

Some samples:

"May you live to be 100 — with one extra year to repent."

"Here's a health to your enemies' enemies."

"May the road rise to meet you;
"May the wind be always at your back,
"The sun shine warm upon your face,
"The rain fall soft upon your fields,
"And until we meet again,
"May God hold you in the hollow of his hand."

"Which I shall plant tomorrow."

The word "toast" comes from an old Irish tradition dating back to the 16th century, Ryan says. Imbibers of the day would put a piece of toast in a glass of whiskey or beer to improve the flavor, possibly to remove impurities. By the 18th century the word had taken on its present meaning.

"In the two centuries, people realized that a graceful thought adds more flavor to a drink than toasted bread," says Ryan, whose interest in toasting comes quite naturally. He's a seventh-generation distiller and a direct descendant of James Power, who founded Dublin's distilleries in 1791.

Ryan, the chief drum beater for the Irish Distillers Group, is happy to give a quick history of Irish whiskey as well. It started in Ireland with the monks in the sixth century. The secrets of distilling had been carried from the Far East where it was used in the production of perfume.

"The Irish quickly found a better use for it than making perfume," notes Ryan.

The tradition of clinking glasses is rooted in the same mythology as the ringing of church bells: Noise to ward off evil spirits.

Toasting is always done with the right hand, with the glass held straight out from the shoulder. This shows there is no sword or dagger concealed, as there sometimes was when toasting first began.

The first historical records of toasting are found at about the 14th century and the first written toasts come to light in about the 17th century. Toasting is mostly an oral tradition, Ryan says, citing regional differences he has found in the many Irish toasts he has collected.

The tradition of throwing the glass into the fireplace after a toast probably originated in Lithuania and Estonia during the 18th century.

"They were the first conspicuous consumers," relates Ryan. "A piece of glass was worth a great deal of money then and the Lithuanians and the Estonians were very wealthy. A wealthy nobleman would impress his guests by throwing the glass."

There are no truly American toasts, he says. They seem to have been killed off by Prohibition. Although whiskey returned, the toast did not. Ryan admits he doesn't have a clue as to where "here's mud in your eye" originated. Most of the toasts used in America are translations of the Irish, he says.

"Toasts are dying out. I'm one of the few people swimming against the tide. It's a great conversation starter. When I find myself in a strange town, I just propose a toast to the bartender. Of course, someone asks if I know any more. And of course, I can bore them to death with toasts."

Imbibers... would put a piece of toast in a glass of whiskey or beer to improve the flavor, possibly to remove impurities. By the 18th century the word had taken on its present meaning.

Ryan began his "research" in the pubs of Ireland. "Every Irish man or woman knows one or two toasts. I would write them down on the backs of envelopes and toss them into my bottom drawer."

He was on a talk show in America extolling the virtues of the toast, and Irish whiskey, when people started phoning in asking for his collection.

"I had to telephone Dublin and ask someone to go into my bottom drawer, type the toasts from the envelopes and make 38 copies. That's how it got started."

The Irish Distillers Group now puts out a booklet called "Slainte," pronounced Slawn-che and Irish for "health," which contains a sampler of his toasts.

One of his favorites is the longest, a tribute to St. Patrick. It goes:

"St. Patrick was a gentleman
"Who through strategy and stealth
"Drove all the snakes from Ireland.
"Here's a toasting to his health —
"But not too many toasting
"Lest you lose yourself and then "Forget the good St. Patrick
"And see all those snakes again."

Road out of youth camp smoother than road in

DAVY CROCKETT NATIONAL FOREST, Texas (AP) — It is a bumpy road that leads to Hope Center for Youth.

If nothing else, the dirt path that winds into the middle of the national forest is enough to convince a visitor that this is the wilderness.

But the boys and girls, ages 10 to 17, who come to one of the camps here are used to being isolated. For most of their lives they have lived on society's periphery. Hope Center is just another stop on the line.

They come here in various ways. As the victims or perpetrators of rape. As drug abusers or prostitutes. Many have been involved in car thefts or robberies. A few have had contact with murder.

With a boys' camp about 10 miles from Apple Springs and a girls' camp near Groveton, Hope Center is a receiving point for juveniles who for one reason or another have not followed the rules. For many, it is the last chance to adjust or be sent to the Texas Youth Council juvenile facilities. For others, it is a place to go after failing at the TYC.

BUT IF THE young people here can be classified as juvenile delinquents, they generally leave differently.

By independent studies, six months after leaving Hope Center — the time when the juveniles would be most likely to return to their former ways — 85 percent of those who go through the program are still in school and have not had any additional "negative" contacts with the police or court systems.

"Not everybody leaves here a perfect angel," the boys' camp director, Lyndon Langford, says. "We don't expect that. What we do expect is for them to leave here responsible adults who can function responsibly in society."

Responsibility is the password at Hope Center. It is drilled incessantly each day by counselors and teachers. The campers are told repeatedly that the help they receive here will come mostly from within, that no one will do the work or make the decisions for them.

Both Langford and the girls' camp director, Jeff Jamar, say that making the choice to enter the camp is the first step for a juvenile in learning what responsibility really means.

"ENTERING IS their decision, but they understand before coming that leaving is the choice of many others," Langford said.

To leave, a youth must get permission of his group of 10 or 12 campers and three counselors. Then Langford or Jamar arrange meetings with all the other people who would be affected by the release — family, juvenile probation officers and school officials.

If anyone cannot be convinced to agree, the boy or girl stays at Hope Center.

The average stay at the boys' camp is 12 to 13 months, while girls usually stay about 11 or 12 months.

Before entering the camp the juvenile must make three commitments: that he will not try to run away, that he will work on his own problems as quickly as possible so that someone else may take his place and that he will help the other people in his group work out their problems.

IN RETURN, HOPE Center promises no one will be kicked out of the camp, no matter what the offense.

"We expect some problems," Langford said. "That's why we are out in the woods. Nobody gets too excited if the warehouse gets broken into. There aren't any punishments here. We want to work out the cause of the problem.

"...If a kid goes out on homedays and steals a car, we will go to the court and tell them we will take the kid back. We will always take them back."

Each juvenile is responsible for building and maintaining his or her living area, and a decision not to cooperate can lead to serious consequences.

"They find that if they don't coopearte they don't get a structure built," Langford said. "If they don't get a structure built and it rains, somebody is going to get wet or a lot of people are going to be crowded when the others move in."

GETTING ALONG with the group is essential, but Hope Center also must teach the 100 youths involved in the programs to survive in a society where they had severe problems before.

To do this, both camps plan a number of trips — some for a few hours at a pizza parlor, others for days canoeing down a river — to get the youths to interact with others.

"They get to see people in a different light than they have maybe ever seen them before," Langford said. "They don't like the police and they talk bad about police. But on some of these trips they get to see the police in a helpful sort of way."

Both the boys and the girls are required to attend three hours of classes a day. Although that is less time than they would receive in a regular school, Langford said Hope Center boys average gaining 1.1 grade levels a year and girls 1.4 grade levels for each year in the school.

The education goes on every waking moment, from the time the campers wake up and cook breakfast to the solving of a drainage problem to a nighttime hike through the woods.

And for Langford and Jamar and all the others who work at the two camps it is all toward one end — to make the road out of Hope Center a little less bumpy than the one coming in.

Priest's body discovered; Police suspect homicide

HONG KONG (AP) — The body of a 75-year-old Italian Roman Catholic priest was found here today with a nylon string tied around the neck in what police termed a homicide.

They said a 34-year-old man was arrested shortly after the Rev. Silvio Lomazzi was found in the five-story building that serves as an office and residence for members of the Society of St. Francis of Sales.

A spokesman at the residence, who declined to be identified, said Lomazzi, a Turin native, was in charge of financial affairs at the center. He said Lomazzi had worked for more than 45 years in Hong Kong and Singapore.

Indonesian volcano wreaks havoc

TASIKMALAYA, West Java, Indonesia (AP) — Floods, mudslides and lava oozing from the Galunggung volcano have killed at least one person and wrecked 442 homes since last week, officials said today.

They said several villages near the volcano were devastated by flood waters caused by overflowing rivers in the area. More than 6,000 people have been forced to flee the area since heavy rains began last week, they said.

The volcano in West Java has erupted more than 300 times since April.

Israelis report violent occurrences

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Unidentified assailants lobbed a hand grenade at an Israeli vehicle in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, but no injuries or damage was reported, Israel radio said.

It said security forces searched the area after the Tuesday incident near the village of Tarqumiyeh, six miles west of Hebron.

In a separate incident, Arabs threw a firebomb at a local policeman outside the offices of Israel's civil administration in Jenin, in the northern West Bank, the radio reported. No one was injured, and police arrested one suspect.

At least 15 Arabs have been arrested in Nablus, the West Bank's largest city, during the past two weeks for throwing rocks and flying the outlawed Palestinian flag, Israeli news reports say.

Britain wants to be peacekeeper

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Britain has informed the United Nations it is sending an 80-man armored reconnaissance unit based in Cyprus to the multinational peacekeepers in Lebanon, becoming the fourth nation to join the force.

About 1,200 U.S. Marines and 3,200 troops from France and Italy have been patrolling the Beirut area since late summer. They were sent at the request of the Lebanese government to re-establish order following the June 6 Israeli invasion and subsequent evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from Beirut.

British Ambassador Sir John Thomson, in a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar made public Tuesday, said his government was responding to an official request from Lebanon and that the unit was being withdrawn for three months from the U.N. Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus.

"The date of the unit's deployment and its precise functions remain to be agreed," Thomson wrote in the letter, dated Dec. 22.

Argentine to aid laid-off workers

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The military government, conceding to union leaders who had threatened to call a general strike, has announced an assistance program for the 200,000 workers laid off this year.

The program, announced Tuesday, will be Argentina's first government aid program for the unemployed.

Railroad union leader Luis Etchezar told journalists, "The possibility of a strike has for the moment been postponed because the dealings with the government are producing effective results."

Social Action Minister Adolfo Navajas Artaza said single workers who lost their jobs in 1982 would receive $42 a month until June 1983 and married workers would receive $84 a month during that period.

Representative, others hoping to save wilds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of a House subcommittee, denouncing the Interior Department's decision to drop wilderness protection from hundreds of thousands of acres, says he may try to use an obscure law to block the action.

Two environmental groups, meanwhile, threatened to file lawsuits in an effort to stop Interior Secretary James Watt from removing wilderness protection from the land in 10 Western states.

"Secretary Watt's midnight raid on America's wilderness this week proves once again that he is unfit to be the nation's chief steward of the public lands," said William Turnage, executive director of the Wilderness Society.

"The Wilderness Society can sue to stop this tragic action, but only President Reagan can stop James Watt," he said, in renewing the group's demand for Watt's ouster. The Sierra Club also threatened suit.

Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio, head of the House Interior subcommittee with jurisdiction over public lands, said Tuesday that when Congress convenes in January he may seek to overturn Watt's action.

Under a section of a 1976 law, a single committee of Congress is given the power to declare an emergency to block the executive branch from taking actions in wilderness areas.

The Interior Committee once before used the power to block Watt from issuing drilling permits in 1.5 million acres of Montana wilderness in May 1981. Watt questioned the constitutionality of a single-committee veto of an executive branch action but he abided by the vote.

"Secretary Watt's midnight raid on America's wilderness this week proves once again that he is unfit to be the nation's chief steward of the public lands.The Wilderness Society can sue to stop this tragic action, but only President Reagan can stop James Watt."

Seiberling said Tuesday, "It is difficult to view the timing (of Interior's action) as other than a deliberate attempt to evade the law and avoid the legitimate concerns of Congress about this administration's negative policies on wilderness protection."

Other members of Congress also questioned the timing of the Interior announcement, coming after Congress adjourned for the year.

"The administration is trying to put a fast ball by Congress," said Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont. "Secretary Watt obviously believes in the politics of confrontation. His action is going to infuriate Congress."

However, Interior Solicitor William Coldiron said the decision "will let the West be developed as it should be developed, for the future of America."

Coldiron, in an opinion to Watt justifying the move, said that the land in question had been improperly designated for review as wilderness in 1980.

Under a 1976 law, the Bureau of Land Management designated 24 million acres for study for possible inclusion in the national wilderness system. The department has another nine years to make recommendations on whether the areas should be added. While the areas are being reviewed, they receive the same protections as land already in the wilderness system.

The Interior action removes that protection and could open the land for mining, logging, road building and other development. However, Interior officials said such decisions will be made on a case-by-case basis and many of the areas will remain protected.

The study areas being removed from wilderness protection are those areas under 5,000 acres, areas where the federal government does not own the subsurface mineral rights and areas which do not have wilderness characteristics in their own right.

Interior officials said more than 805,000 acres in the states of Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming would be affected. Environmentalists said the department is underestimating the total land affected and that it could be as much as 5 million acres.

Drug available elsewhere OK'd in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — A studio photographer, a construction worker, an accountant and a homemaker — all with back pain so severe they could barely walk — crossed the border into Canada one spring day last year to be injected with a drug outlawed back home.

Three of the four now are free of pain. And the drug that they and thousands of other Americans sought as a less-expensive alternative to major back surgery has been approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration after almost a decade of testing.

Chymopapain, a drug derived from papaya fruit, will cut hospital stays and time off the job for many who once would have undergone surgery to correct slipped discs, a common cause of back, hip and leg pain, say doctors who have used the drug for several years in Canada.

"I'm very happy the FDA has finally seen the light," said Dr. John McCulloch, staff surgeon at St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto. He has used chymopapain to treat 5,500 patients, about a third of them Americans.

A REPORTER joined him in the operating room in April 1981 to observe the procedure and interview the four Americans who were that day's patients. In followup interviews recently, the patients had no regrets about their trek to Canada.

Ann Kennedy of Oaklawn, Ill., was barely able to walk in Toronto two years ago. Now, she said, she's "cleaning the house for the holidays and moving furniture." Her back hasn't bothered her in months, she added.

"I could get the treatment at a hospital right down the street from me now, but I couldn't have waited this long," said Mrs. Kennedy, 48.

When Mike Lengkeek arrived in Toronto, he had been flat on his back for six weeks after rupturing a disc on his construction job in Holland, Mich.

"I'm back to lifting anything and everything," the 26-year-old said recently. Even with travel expenses, he said, "the procedure cost less than half what it would've cost for an operation."

DEBRA IVERSON of Stillwater, Minn., had tried acupuncture and traction to relieve her back pain. When her U.S. doctor recommended back surgery, she went to the library and read about chymopapain. She ended up in the Tornoto operating room.

"I feel great now," said Ms. Iverson, 28, a studio photographer.

Of the four cases treated that morning, only Ralph Conrad, a 49-year-old Des Plaines, Ill., accountant, was disappointed. He said he felt better for more than a year but ended up back in the hospital in November. "Although it (the chymopapain) did do something, it didn't do the complete job."

In recent years, chymopapain has often been cited as an example of drug lag, a situation in which important new drugs are approved in other countries before the United States.

About 200,000 people have surgery in the United States every year to correct herniated, or slipped, discs. The condition occurs when the soft inner portion of the disc protrudes, producing pressure on the surrounding nerves and back and hip and leg pain.

CONSERVATIVE TREATMENTS such as traction and bed rest relieve the pain for most herniated disc patients; only 5 to 10 percent undergo surgery. Many of the surgery patients would be candidates for chemonucleolysis, a procedure where chymopapain is injected into the back to dissolve the herniated disc.

Surgery has the same success rate as chemonucleolysis, about 75 percent, but it is more expensive, requires longer hospital stays and has a longer recovery time.

Ann Kennedy of Oak Lawn, Ill., wipes her kitchen table. A common, uncomplicated task for most to perform, such a chore was almost impossible for Mrs. Kennedy because of severe back pain. But one day last spring she and three others crossed the border into Canada, where they were treated with chymopapain, a drug not available in the United States. All but one of the four report remarkable improvements. The Food and Drug Administration has approved distribution of the drug in this country.

"With today's economy, the financial implications of managing patients this way are just astounding," McCulloch said. "In two years, patients in the United States could save $500 million."

The FDA-approved drug will be sold as Chymodiactin by Smith Laboratories Inc. Smith was founded in 1979 by a nephew of Dr. Lyman Smith, who developed chymopapain and first used it on patients in 1964.

Another company, Travenol Laboratories Inc. of Chicago, which makes chymopapain as Discase in Canada, has been studying the drug since 1963. It has applied for approval to market the drug in the United States and awaits an FDA ruling.

THERE IS ONE serious risk with chymopapain — anaphylactic shock, a severe allergic reaction to certain medications, antibiotics or insect stings. In Smith's tests, anaphylactic shock occurred in 1 percent of 1,400 patients and two patients died, the FDA said. That's about the same mortality rate for disc surgery, the FDA said.

A joint committee of the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons and the American Association of Neurological Surgery have scheduled training sessions to familiarize physicians with the procedure.

The injection of chymopapain, usually performed in an operating room, takes about 30 minutes. The patient, under local anesthetic, lies on his side on the operating table.

The doctor sticks a hollow needle into the lower back. Using an X-ray machine to locate the troubled disc, the doctor injects the chympopapain. The patient is usually released from the hospital a few hours later.

New Mexico badlands subject to Watt move

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — With special permits, paleontogists have uncovered a treasure-trove of ancient fossils in the Bisti badlands and movie producers have used the area for an eerie, moon-like landscape.

Without a special permit, about all you can do in the fragile, coal-rich Bisti is have a quick picnic, and even a mining company wants to keep it that way.

But under a new order by Interior Secretary James Watt, the Bisti could lose the wilderness protection it has enjoyed while Congress decides whether to add it to the national wilderness system.

Watt's order Monday immediately erased wilderness protection for 805,000 acres of Western land, including the Bisti, under consideration for wilderness designation. It drew outcries from environmentalists who accused the Interior secretary of showing "contempt for Congress" by acting after both houses had adjourned.

Watt's action has galvanized support for the Bisti, a tract carved by centuries of wind and rain that exposed fossils of mammals and dinosaurs, making it heaven for paleontologists.

The Sierra Club, calling Watt "arbitrary and capricious," said it would take the case to court and to Congress.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., hustled to the Interior Department, where he was assured the area would be protected despite Watt's decision.

Even an official with Sunbelt Mining Co., which has been criticized for mining an adjacent area, said, "We'll do our darnedest to get that area protected by a wilderness management designation."

The Bisti, of which 3,520 acres had been designated a wilderness study area, was one of many tracts dropped from wilderness study because it was under 5,000 acres. Others were dropped because the federal government didn't own the mineral rights.

Despite the uproar, the Bisti probably is less endangered by the lost status than most of the areas dropped from the list — even though a deep, rich seam of coal ripe for strip-mining runs through it.

"The Bisti has been the focus of a lot of attention," said Sierra Club spokesman Ron Grotbeck. "They'd be crazy with all the concern generated by the Bisti to turn that over to a mining company."

The badlands have been the subject of a decade-long dispute.

Bisti is the Navajo word for badlands. Erosion has left columns of rock reaching toward the sky and has shaped the gray dirt into mounds and gullies.

"The Bisti looks something like the moon," said John Gumert of the Interior's Bureau of Land Management. "There's even been a lot of movies made out there."

BLM will use administrative measures to preserve the Bisti until Congress decides whether it should be a wilderness area, he said.

The northwest New Mexico badlands were so remote for many years that most New Mexicans were unaware of them. Then, nearly 15 years ago, a road was built through the area and tourists and scientists discovered the eerie scenery.

But the erosion also has exposed the deep coal beds that have led to a series of courtroom battles.

Sunbelt holds federal coal leases to 1,240 acres of the Bisti, but has been prevented from mining it by federal protection and court fights.

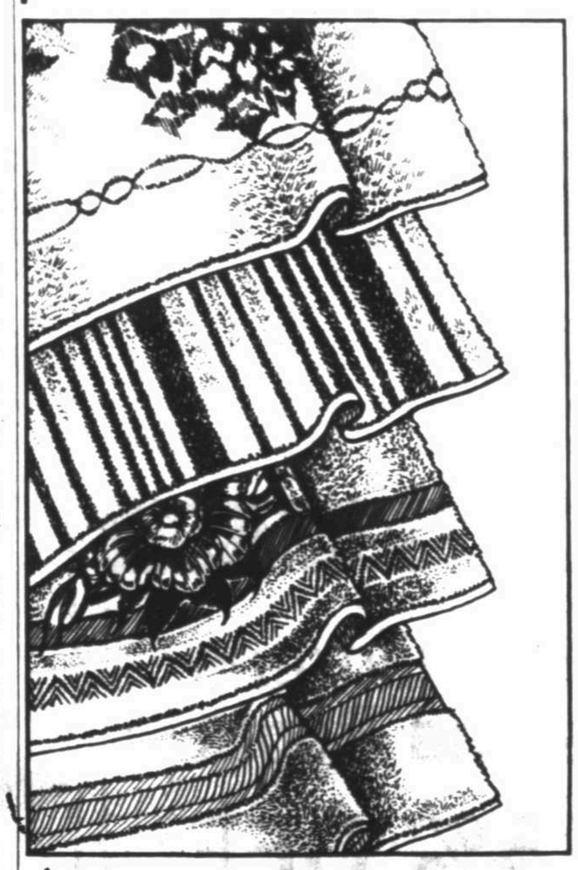

The Sierra Club has taken the company to court four times in an attempt to stop the Gateway Mine, which is located on state land surrounded on three sides by the wilderness study area.

But the company decided long ago the storm over the Bisti made a fight for mining in the wilderness area futile.

Hunt is on to find new transportation secretary

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is looking for a new transportation secretary, but no front-runners have emerged yet in the search for a successor to Drew Lewis, who has announced he is leaving to become chairman of Warner-Amex Cable Communications Inc.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the president hopes to name a successor by Feb. 1, but Lewis has agreed to stay a few weeks beyond that date if necessary. Speakes said the search is just beginning.

Lewis, who gained widespread attention by standing up against striking air traffic controllers in the summer of 1981, made the announcement Tuesday he is leaving the Reagan Cabinet to head the major cable television firm.

He said he had the "greatest respect" for the president and "the utmost confidence" in his policies, but added now is "an appropriate time for me to resume my primary career direction in the business community."

Reagan accepted the resignation "with great regret."

Lewis, 51, is the third cabinet officer to quit the administration. Secretary of State Alexander Haig resigned over policy differences with Reagan last June, and Energy Secretary James Edwards left in November to become president of a medical university in South Carolina.

In discussions with administration and industry sources, there appeared little consensus on a possible successor to Lewis. The names that emerged ranged from Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige to a number of out-of-work senators and congressmen, including former Sen. Harrison Schmitt, a New Mexico Republican who lost his re-election bid.

"And you have to include Darrell Trent," said one Transportation Department official, who, like the other sources, asked to remain anonymous. Trent is the department's No. 2 man and a close associate of White House counselor Edwin Meese.

A Commerce Department spokesman said he was unaware of any changes involving Baldrige.

Lewis said he accepted the Warner-Amex job Monday, although his resignation letter to Reagan was dated Dec. 12. It had been rumored for months that Lewis was thinking about leaving the administration in part because he was disappointed he was not offered a more prestigous Cabinet or White House post.

Considered one of the administration's most able Cabinet members, Lewis denied reports that he was miffed, but acknowledged he had not been offered another post within the administration.

"In no way do I think that I have been underutilized," he declared.

In assuming the job of chairman and chief executive officer of Warner-Amex, Lewis takes with him a reputation as an industry trouble-shooter who became a millionaire by setting ailing companies straight.

But he emphasized at a news conference that he does not consider Warner-Amex in financial trouble "by any stretch of the imagination." The company, which operates 147 cable systems nationwide, lost $20 million last year and is expected to have losses of $30 million this year.

Industry analysts said the company's deficits reflect a conscious policy of expansion in a growing industry.

The spokesman declined to disclose Lewis' salary. He earned $69,630 a year as transportation secretary.

As the country's seventh transportation secretary, Lewis became one of the administration's most visible and best known Cabinet members, although the post traditionally is considered an unglamorous one.

During August, 1981, he appeared on television daily as the administration's point man against the striking air traffic controllers. More than 11,400 strikers were fired by Reagan after they refused an ultimatum to return to work.

Labor unions called Lewis a strike breaker and criticized him for not allowing at least some of the former controllers back to work. His firm stand, however, has gained praise from the aviation industry, including airline pilots.

"If I leave here with two regrets, one is that we had to have the traffic controllers strike that affected so many people," Lewis told reporters Tuesday. But he insisted there was no way to allow the strikers back on a selective basis.

While the strike brought national attention to Lewis, his tenure also saw a number of dramatic transportation policy changes within the federal government. For example, Lewis:

— Directed the administration's push for the 5-cent increase in the gasoline tax, approved by Congress before Christmas. He fought for more than a year for the tax increase, saying it was needed to rebuild the nation's highways, bridges and decaying transit systems.

— Directed the phasing out of federal operating subsidies for mass transit systems and pushed to cut back federal construction money for new mass transit rail systems.

— Engineered the end of government assistance to Conrail and pushed through Congress a number of measure leading to the eventual sale of the freight line to private business.

— Reversed the direction of the federal government's role in auto safety programs, de-emphasizing government safety regulations.

— Developed a new air traffic control plan designed to meet the needs of increased air traffic over the next 20 years.

Lewis wants to help task force investigate killings

CHICAGO (AP) — James W. Lewis, having pleaded innocent in a $1 million extortion scheme linked to the Tylenol poisonings, now wants to help the task force investigating the killings, his lawyer says.

Lewis, 36, entered his plea Tuesday and then spent the night at the federal prison where his wife was being held on another charge.

"As any good citizen...we want to help the Tylenol task force," said Michael Monico, Lewis' attorney, after the 10-minute court hearing. But he added:

"I can't tell you what that means in terms of cooperation."

Lewis was taken to the Metropolitan Correctional Center, where his wife, Leann, has been held since she surrendered two weeks ago on a charge of misusing a Social Security card to obtain work. Lewis' next hearing was scheduled Feb. 14.

Correctional center officials declined to say whether the Lewises will be allowed to see each other.

Lewis' arraignment marked his first court appearance in Chicago since his arrest in New York City two weeks ago. Details of his return were kept secret, although U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb said a military aircraft was used to transfer Lewis.

Webb declined to provide details and said the stringent security was taken "for Mr. Lewis' own protection."

Authorities investigating the seven Tylenol killings have accused Lewis of writing a letter demanding $1 million from Johnson & Johnson, the parent company of the drug's manufacturer, MacNeil Consumer Products Co. Lewis allegedly threatened more killings unless the demand was met.

Authorities have also said they want to question Lewis about the killings themselves. Seven Chicago-area residents died in late September or early October after swallowing Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules laced with cyanide.

Webb refused comment when asked about other possible charges against Lewis.

Security for Lewis was extremely tight in federal court. Spectators were frisked before they were allowed to enter the courtroom.

The subject of a nationwide manhunt for months, Lewis stood quietly with his hands clasped in front of him. He responded only once when U.S. District Judge John Nordberg asked if he had sufficient time to consult with his attorney.

"I have, your honor," Lewis replied.

Nordberg granted a request by Webb to let Lewis' $5 million bond stand. Monico did not object.

Webb said at Mrs. Lewis' court hearing earlier this month that Lewis mailed a "death threat" to President Reagan. He did not mention that letter Tuesday, and at a news conference later, Webb said there was "no need" to detail the threat to maintain the high bond.

Mrs. Lewis also is being held on a $5 million bond and Monico said he will ask that it be reduced at a court hearing Thursday.

Asked about the tremendous publicity surrounding the case, Webb said, "I do not believe...there is any type of pre-trial publicity that would prejudice his right to a fair trial."

However, Monico indicated he was concerned about the impact of pre-trial publicity and said he will subpoena news reports on Lewis.

Tests show Anacin-3 poisonings probably not by single suspect

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — California officials said Tuesday that the combined amount of cyanide in 18 contaminated Anacin-3 capsules turned in by a San Pedro, Calif., housewife two weeks ago was only a fraction of the minimum amount needed to kill an adult human.

The officials revealed that those levels were in marked contrast to the amount of cyanide found in two unused capsules from another bottle of Anacin-3 that seriously injured a San Jose, Calif., housewife over Thanksgiving. Those two capsules each contained three to four times the fatal amount.

When asked, the officials said they simply did not know whether the disparity between the test results made it unlikely that the two poisoning incidents could be blamed on a single suspect.

Previous, less-specific tests of the 20 capsules turned in by San Pedro resident Jacqueline Kozel indicated the presence of cyanide in 18 capsules, according to Frank Baumann, head of the state Health Services Department's Food and Drug branch laboratory in Los Angeles.

The result of this composite test indicated that the combined level of cyanide in the 10 capsules was only about 20 milligrams, Dr. Alan Slagle, a pharmacist with the state Health Services Department, said Tuesday.

Slagle said the minimum lethal dose of cyanide for an adult is 50 milligrams, about 2 1-2 times the amount contained in all 10 capsules that were tested.

However, tests in Cincinnati by the federal Food and Drug Administration on two more of the 18 capsules found no detectable level of cyanide, Slagle said.

Sex symbol Bardot bares her soul on French television series

PARIS (AP) — Nearly three decades after rocketing to fame as an international sex kitten, Brigitte Bardot is baring her frustrations and resentments in the hottest holiday TV fare in France.

Brigette Bardot

At age 48, the star once known simply as B.B. has retained her long tousled blonde hair, and her waist is only slightly thicker than the 19 inches of old. It has been nine years since her last film, but she has not lost her ability to captivate the audience.

With broadcast of the TV shows, Brigitte Bardot has broken her customary silence to speak candidly of her 28-film career, her three failed marriages, her 1960 suicide attempt and her hatred of the paparazzi she says once made her feel like a hunted animal.

"There have been too many false things said about me," she said in explaining why she agreed to the three-part TV series, which began last week and concludes Jan. 2 on the French network Antenne 2.

The shows feature clips from old movies and interviews with her former co-workers, with her third husband, West German millionaire playboy Gunther Sachs, and with her former secretary, who outraged Miss Bardot 20 years ago by publishing an intimate book on her life.

The three French television networks do not conduct ratings surveys, but it is clear that millions of families included "Brigitte Bardot: The Way She Is" in their holiday plans. Before the first show appeared, French magazines put the former film star on their covers, and the French press has been awash with stories about B.B.

Television viewers get a look at a Brigitte Bardot dressed casually in pullover sweaters or low-cut summer dresses in interviews conducted last summer in Paris and in St. Tropez on the Riviera, where she has a home.

They learn she is bitter about the attention that went with being one of the century's most recognized sex symbols: She blames pressure from the press for her suicide attempt and the breakup of her four-year marriage to French actor Jacques Charrier.

Born into a upper-class Parisian family Sept 28, 1934, Miss Bardot began working as a model at age 16. Two years later, she married movie producer Roger Vadim, who launched her film career in 1956 with "And God Created Woman."

The film was a box-office hit and the birth of a star.

"It's an embarrassment to have acted so badly," Miss Bardot said of her early films. "I suffered a lot in the beginning. I was really treated like someone less than nothing."

Her most stinging comments, however, are reserved for the photographers who hounded her throughout the 1950s and 1960s.

"I can understand hunted animals because of the way I was treated," she said in the TV interviews with Alain Bourrgrain-Dubourg, who she met during her years of work to prevent the slaughter of seals and other fur-bearing animals. "What happened to me was inhuman. I was constantly surrounded by the world press."

"Nicolas' birth was awful, awful," she said. "The press coverage was barbaric."

Ten months later, she was hospitalized after taking an overdose of sleeping pills and slashing her wrists. Photographers were waiting when she walked out of the hospital in Nice several days later.

"It was a precisely planned suicide," she recalls, explaining that she had been depressed and wasn't ready for motherhood. "I barely escaped death.

"I was looking for roots then," she said. "I had none to offer."

Charrier was awarded custody of Nicholas when the couple divorced in 1963, and Miss Bardot said she and her son now have a good relationship.

"I thought it would be better for him to be raised by a man," she said.

Miss Bardot, who was one of the first major film stars to appear nude, speaks glowingly of another blonde sex symbol, Marilyn Monroe, who died of an overdose of sleeping pills 20 years ago at age 36.

"To me, she always has been everything a woman dreams of being," said Miss Bardot, who made her last film, "The Woman Grabber" at age 39.

Old Forge, N.Y., residents danacing up a storm.

Things are tough all over this town dubbed the "ice box" of the Adirondacks.

"We are getting a bit desperate," Robert Hall, president of the Central Adirondack Association, said earlier this week. "We have a few people around, visiting, waiting for the snow, but it looks like they will be moving on pretty soon unless we get some snow today or tomorrow."

But the lack of snow and ice isn't stopping residents from staging some kind of organized winter fun.

A "Christmas Open" golf tournament was held. "They (golfers) don't even have to use orange golf balls; there is no snow as an excuse for losing golf balls," said Hall.

The temperature was 24 degrees. Normally, it would be well below zero, and several feet of snow would be on the ground.

Ski trails, meanwhile, are "green as grass; not even a patch of the white stuff."

Hall says the nightly Indian-style "snow dances" will keep up until some of the white stuff falls out of the sky.

Puppeteer was in ecstasy filming 'Dark Crystal'

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — For Albuquerque puppeteer Michael McCormick, the 20 months he spent working in the foam-latex and fantasy world of "The Dark Crystal" movie were some of the best of his 41 years, even if producer-director Jim Henson did ax his pet Landleaper.

It was three years ago in the fall of 1979 that Henson, the famed creator of the Muppets, hired McCormick to work in the $20 million puppet-adventure movie, released this holiday season.

A professional puppeteer for 10 years, McCormick admits that "when you work on puppets you sort of get stuck on being 12 years old."

It was a childlike ecstasy he felt as he mingled with the Gelflings and Garthims, Mystics and Skeksis and other fantastic creatures that roamed the London set of "The Dark Crystal."

That ecstasy nearly equaled the awe he felt when toiling elbow-to-elbow with some of the top people in puppetry and design.

"I found myself working among the gods of the business," he said. "I had an overwhelming desire to run up too someone and say, 'Sign my body.'"

The "gods" included Henson; puppeteer Frank Oz, Henson's Muppet compatriot and the man who portrayed Yoda in "The Empire Strikes Back," and Brian Froud, one of the world's foremost fantasy artists and the architect for the movie's universe.

McCormick's road to the land of Oz, Henson and company started in Santa Fe. The puppeteer, a Brooklyn, N.Y., native who grew up in New Mexico, and his son Sean, now 17, were doing their puppet show in the capital city when singer Roger Miller spotted them.

Miller, an old acquaintance of Henson, liked McCormick's work and suggested he try to hook up with Mr. Muppet.

McCormick said he did not even know "The Dark Crystal" existed when, taking Miller's advice, he set off for London where Henson was doing his syndicated Muppet television series.

He got an interview and a job.

"They hired me straightaway," he said. "There followed an incredibly intense period in which they tried to find out what I could do."

One of McCormick's first assignments was to create a large, land-roving beast. He came up with a leggy, long-haired critter that looked like a cross between a giant praying mantis and an Old English sheepdog.

The Landleaper was McCormick's pride and joy, but Henson rejected it, opting instead for the Landstrider, an animal with legs like a giraffe's, a heart like a lion's and a mustache like Gene Shalit's.

"I went into a three-day funk," McCormick recalls with amusement. "My disappointment was so exaggerated it was almost theatrical. I really was like a kid who has had his special project taken away from him."

The movie was a learning experience for everyone, because no one had ever done a movie entirely with very lifelike puppets. No human beings appear on the screen, although it sometimes took four or five people to operate one of the complex puppets.

"It looked like a strange mass of dwarves running around," McCormick said. "There was one person inside a puppet and several outside crouched around it."

The puppets' movements were controlled by rods, grips and levers. Facial expressions were made via radio controls embedded in the foam-latex skin of the characters.

Following the demise of the Landleaper, McCormick threw his creative energies into the creation of fiberglass exteriors for the Skeksis, the evil race with the beaks of birds and the bodies of reptiles. In the movie, Skeksis dominate the land of the dark crystal.

McCormick developed the same sort of devotion to the evil buzzard-men that he had felt for the late lamented Landleaper.

Woodpeckers make life interesting

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — Woodpeckers are keeping John Pflueger's life interesting. Not the kind that sing peacefully from the treetops, but the kind that turn water black and smash windows.

Pflueger got the first inkling of his bird problem when woodpeckers kept ramming themselves into windows in his home. Woodpeckers, being territorial birds, seemed to be trying to chase off what they saw as intruders on their turf.

Then, the water in his home turned purple and, later, black.

"The water tank had a wooden top, but the birds drilled holes in it and stored their acorns," Pflueger said. "I pulled about a hundred pounds of acorns out of there."

Several days after the acorn caper, a power company meter reader noticed that Pflueger's living room window was smashed.

The meter reader called police. When officers responded with guns drawn, they and Pflueger entered the home looking for a possible prowler.

They found a red-tailed hawk.

State Game and Fish Department workers said the hawks normally eat rodents, but the hawk probably strayed into Pflueger's home while looking for woodpeckers for a change of diet. Pflueger said the hawk left his home when he opened a window behind it.

Amnesty dereed to mark anniversary

MOSCOW (AP) — Authorities decreed what they called a "limited amnesty" for prisoners to mark the Soviet Union's 60th anniversary, but did not say how many people would be freed.

The announcement by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, executive committee of Parliament, excluded all political prisoners, violent criminals and many people jailed for embezzlement, bribery and other economic crimes.

The official news agency Tass said the order applies to women, men who previously received high government awards, and combat veterans whose prison terms do not exceed five years provided they fit other requirements of the decree.

A similiar amnesty was announced in 1972 shortly before the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union on Dec. 30, 1922. A limited number of prisoners were released in 1967 to mark the 50th anniversary of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution.

Conscientious objectors hurt West German army's strength

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Almost 80,000 of a potential quarter million military draftees have told West German authorities they do not want to serve in the 495,000-member army, or Bundeswehr.

They join 30,000 others who have already begun the legal battle to be allowed to refuse arms and serve charities, the handicapped, old and sick instead, as conscientious objectors.

Coupled with a falling birth rate that will reduce the number of 18-year-olds available for military service by the mid-1980s, the increase in conscientious objectors could leave NATO's key European land army below strength.

So urgent was the problem that it was one of the few issues tackled by Chancellor Helmut Kohl's new center-right government as soon as it took power Oct. 1.

In just 10 weeks, the conservatives whipped a law through parliament that extends social service for conscientious objectors from 16 to 20 months.

Family and Youth Minister Heiner Geissler expects the tougher law to reduce the number of conscientious objectors.

Detractors say the severity of the law discriminates against pacifists and point out that military service lasts only 15 months.

Above all, objectors argue, the new law does not abolish "inquisitional" committees appointed to examine applicants' motives for refusing to bear arms.

Klaus Berger, 27, a teacher in Bonn, has been before these committees in hopes of being formally classified as a conscientious objector.

He first applied in 1973. Eight years and three legal battles later, he was granted the status.

Berger's first two attempts to register as a conscientious objector ended in tussles with committees.

At the first hearing, early in 1974, "I said I was against the Bundeswehr, and the chairman began shouting, "Do you think everybody in this room is for the army?" Berger said.

He said the committee threw out hypothetical questions like, "Russians or Americans, whatever, are drunk and come into the park where I'm sitting with my girlfriend and rape her — what do I do?"

Such questioning may not be typical. But the committees came under increasing attack as Vietnam war protesters in Germany swelled the ranks of conscientious objectors. They doubled from 6,000 to 12,000 from 1967 to 1968.

The leftist Social Democrat government at the time bowed to the criticism. In 1977, it decreed that conscientious objectors could get recognized simply by writing a letter to the local draft office.

The result was another leap in refusal to bear arms: 40,618 applicants in 1976 and 69,989 in 1977.

More than 200 conservative deputies in Parliament got the measure reversed. In 1978, the Federal Constitutional Court ruled against the 1977 law, and left conscientious objectors in limbo for more than four years.

Conservatives argue their new law will weed out lazy youths with no good reason to refuse arms. You cannot, says deputy Hermann Kroll-Schlueter, believe a Christian objector who boxes as a hobby.

Many young West Germans, nevertheless, profess to be pacifists.

Tens of thousands have turned out to protest public army ceremonies in the last three years. In Bremen in May 1980 the protest turned into a riot.

Dancers strip for charity

Mrs. Hurst, 23, a professional stripper who works at an Indianapolis nightclub called Scarlet's, was among go-go dancers from four local clubs who recently pooled their tips for a fund to buy Christmas gifts for children at two Indiana hospitals.

"We raised $873 from our group. Altogether, it came to $1,704," she said.

The money went to the children's ward at Central State Hospital in Indianapolis and the New Castle Children's Center. Miss Hurst said the dancers welcomed a chance to work in a Christmas charity.

"Anything that was given to us while we danced went into the pot. I like to think that we helped someone out this Christmas the way any other organization did," she said.

Hunters try to stave off threats of extinction

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

LONDON (AP) — Britain's red-coated hunters, who ride their mounts in to-the-death chases against foxes, hares and majestic stags, are in full cry against threats of extinction by left-wingers and animal protection groups.

They insist their sport is a "humane" way of dealing with crop pests, and charge their opponents are conducting a "class war."

Lovers of the centuries-old sport of the landed gentry (enthusiasts include Prince Charles) have for two decades brushed aside protests and sabotage attempts by anti-blood-sports groups. These have included spraying chemicals along hunts to wipe out the quarry's scent, an occasional smoke bomb and calls on a hunting horn to split the hound pack.

But now the British Field Sports Society, alarmed by an opposition Labor Party pledge to outlaw all hunting with hounds, distributed 1 million leaflets to people who turned out across the country Monday, the annual post-Christmas public holiday known as Boxing Day, and marks the peak of the equestrian hunting season.

News Special

The leaflets, which describe the sport as "humane," will kick off a campaign of lobbying legislators through 1983, expected to be a general election year.

"A lot of the opposition isn't based on allegations of cruelty, which we don't accept anyway," Field Sports Society director Robin Brockbank said.

The League Against Cruel Sports, the main anti-hunting pressure group, denies any "class" overtones and simply denounces the sport as "barbaric."

"Fox and stag-hunting, where dogs are set upon a victim to provide entertainment, are like the ancient Roman games in which thousands thrilled to the suffering of live creatures," said league director Richard Course.

The league claims about 14,000 foxes die agonizingly each year in the jaws of hunting dogs.

The society puts the number at 15,000 and says they die instantly, caught by the lead hound, which snaps the fox's neck. "They may be torn apart (by the hounds) but only after they are dead," said press spokesman Richard Tracey.

Tracey argues the hunt is a far more humane method of killing the quarry than shooting or snaring, which he said would otherwise be necessary to "keep a population balance of these pests (to crops)."

He says snaring of foxes and hares by "inexperienced" hands could be cruel, shooting is more likely to maim than kill, and poisoning and gassing, though outlawed, would probably be done if there were no hunting.

Anti-hunt activists say the hounds and huntsmen chase terrified stags for up to six hours until the animal turns at bay, exhausted and defeated, or collapses. The league estimates huntsmen kill 250 stags each season and also allege other animals die a brutal and terrifying death by being chased, in addition to torn apart.

Tracey said, "The stags are brought to bay. The animal then turns and it stands still and it is shot by the huntsman with a humane killer."

Despite rising costs, the sport is more popular than ever, with years-long waiting lists to join the 60,000 people who ride out annually.

A prospective hunter must pay between $1,600 and $16,000 for a horse, about $3,200 a year to keep it, and pay for the gear, including red jacket, top hat or black velvet riding cap, boots and jodphurs.

"You then write to the committee of a hunt and if they consider you a suitable person you can join," said society director Brockbank.

A season's subscription to ride with a hunt costs between $80, to join a no-frills hare hunt in Wales, to $2,400 in Leicestershire.

There are now nearly 400 hunts, packs of hounds, in Britain, compared with 350 at the turn of the century.

Among the oldest and most exclusive is a hunt run by the Duke of Beaufort at his Gloucestershire estate.

The present duke, holder of a title conferred in the 17th century, introduced Prince Charles, 34-year-old heir to the throne, to the sport.

Minister fights Americanization of French culture

EDITOR'S NOTE: The battle lines have been drawn in the war to defeat the "Americanization" of French culture. Leading the charge is France's culture minister, armed with a hefty new budget to wage the fight. Targets include the likes of "E.T." and "Dallas."

PARIS (AP) - Frenchmen are being asked to tighten their belts, their Socialist leaders having become born-again fiscal conservatives bent on cutting the country's crippling inflation rate. Yet Culture Minister Jack Lang, whose budget was doubled in 1982, just got a fat 16.6 percent increase for 1983.

Culture and politics have always been intertwined in France, and Lang, who has called for a "crusade" against U.S. "cultural imperialism," is being given the means to wage the battle.

But his attack in Mexico this summer on the "financial domination of the multinationals," clearly a shot at the United States, has triggered a reaction many people had thought impossible: a spirited defense of U.S. culture by French intellectuals on both the right and left.

The heavyweights of the French intelligentsia, including philosopher Bernard Henri-Levy and virtuoso theater director Antoine Vitez, blasted Lang for "cultural protectionism" and upbraided him for forgetting to mention the lack of cultural freedom in communist societies.

LANG'S REBUTTAL that he simply did not have time in his Mexico City speech to get into Afghanistan or Poland was considered a lame excuse by many French intellectuals.

Lang's attack also prompted suggestions that the charged rhetoric is really a product of a growing sense of French cultural stagnation and a cynical attempt to impress the Third World, while omitting any mention of France's own, deliberate effort to spread its culture abroad.

"He's crazy," says France's best-known entertainer, Yves Montand. "Nobody obliges you to go see American movies or buy American records. If we do, it's because they are very good."

Other signs of "Americanization" are everywhere in France, from rock music to fast food to "I Love NY" T-shirts.

The American television series "Dallas" has become a ratings blockbuster amid the generally tepid fare on the French tube. The French cinematic "New Wave" has ebbed, and the year's most eagerly awaited movie is "E.T." Scholarly French film quarterlies devote far more space to German directors than to French "realisateurs."

FRENCH THEATER survives largely on resurrections of Moliere, revivals of 1950s works by Genet and Anouilh and translations of English-language plays. No current French writer commands the international respect of a Sartre or an Andre Malraux, France's first minister of culture.

This is a serious blow to a society which celebrates intellectual life, treats intellectuals like celebrities and is led by a highly literate man, Francois Mitterrand, known for his graceful writing style and personal interest in the 18th century writer Francois Rene de Chateaubriand.

More than pride is at stake, and there is nothing particularly new about the French obsession with culture. It is one important way this medium-sized power can continue to be an international influence.

Two years ago, former foreign minister Jean Francois-Poncet called the evolution and development of French culture and language "one of the central objectives of the foreign policy of France."

The only noticeable change since the ascension of the Socialists to power last year has been an emphasis on the Third World, and nowhere is French "cultural imperialism" more evident than in Africa.

In the 26 French-speaking countries on that continent, many of the people, and most of the elite, eat French bread, drive French cars, follow French soccer results, read French books and newspapers, go to French movies and watch French television.

The currencies of 14 of those nations are directly linked and readily convertible to the French franc, and the basic government, military and educational structures of most former French colonies remained unchanged after independence.

A DOZEN private, government and quasi-governmental organizations, most notably the Alliance Francaise with 1,200 branches in 150 countries, are engaged in spreading French language and culture to the non French-speaking world.

"If any country is culturally imperialistic, it's France," says a Western diplomat who requested anonymity. "But the French are caught in the middle. They are both exporters and importers of culture.

"And being a proud people with a rich culture, they object to the imports but are not at all ashamed of their exports. At the political level, the Socialists are trying to associate themselves with the 'resisters.'"

"There's nothing imperialistic about it," counters Alliance Director-General Philippe Greffet. "French culture is not simply French; it's part of the world's heritage."

French is only the 12th most-spoken language in the world but, thanks to the large number of French-speaking countries, it is used by nearly 25 percent of the delegations to the United Nations.

THE U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) is headquartered in Paris. Its first president was a Frenchman, and it is now headed by the controversial French-educated Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal.

The cultural emphasis is not simply for overseas consumption. French voters have never been wooed or won by candidates with the common touch, and the Fifth Republic is no exception.

President Mitterrand's successful effort in the early 1970s to change his public image from that of an opportunistic politician in a succession of Fourth Republic governments to a sort of philosopher-statesman was a conscious part of his election strategy.

But the consensus about the importance of cultural and intellectual life makes for bitter disagreement over official policy, and the charismatic 43-year-old Lang is the most controversial member of Mitterrand's cabinet.

Despite the effort to keep their cultural influence alive through international organizations and the 15-year rear-guard action to purge "franglais" from the mother tongue, the French are keenly aware that they are slowly losing.

"WE'RE FINDING a whole generation of French kids around the age of 15 brought up on American television shows who know all about the Old West and nothing about their own history," Greffet says.

"For a long time, the French could tell themselves that while the United States was economically and politically powerful, 'we have the much loftier power of culture.' But that's slipping now," according to Paris-based, American cultural historian Diana Pinto.

"France has lost the great media war, and what we now find in countries like Tunisia is 'Dallas' translated into French," she says.

The works of the annual winner of France's most prestigious literary prize, the Prix Goncourt, used to be routinely translated in the United States, but "now they don't even bother anymore," she adds.

Judge awards twins' custody to Peter Pulitzer

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — After a divorce trial laced with tales of drugs and sex, a judge granted newspaper heir Peter Pulitzer custody of his twin sons and gave only modest alimony to his wife Roxanne, saying she engaged in "flagrant" adultery.

Circuit Judge Carl Harper, who listened to 18 days of headline-grabbing, reputation-blackening testimony that ended in November, offered little sympathy for Mrs. Pulitzer, 31, in his ruling Tuesday.

Roxanne Pulitzer

Peter Pulitzer

In a terse order blaming the former secretary, 21 years younger than Pulitzer, for the breakup of the 6½-year marriage, Harper said she had engaged in "flagrant acts of adultery and other gross marital misconduct."

The judge ordered that Mrs. Pulitzer get her jewels, valued at about $60,000; a black Porsche, valued at $20,000; $48,000 in alimony spread over two years or until she remarries; and a $7,000 interest in her husband's 74-foot yacht.

"I'm so happy. I can't believe it," said Pulitzer, 52, the grandson of publisher Joseph Pulitzer. He and sons MacLean and Zachary had been staying at his 8,000-acre ranch north of Lake Okeechobee since Sunday.

Mrs. Pulitzer, staying at the estranged couple's Palm Beach home, refused comment, said Pierrette Barr, a governess for the 5-year-old twins. She said Mrs. Pulitzer burst into tears and went to bed after hearing Harper's verdict.

"She was destroyed. She was absolutely destroyed," said Ms. Barr. "She was in tears. She said Judge Harper believed all the lies."

The trial rocked this Gold Coast resort community with testimony of cocaine abuse, extra-marital affairs, incest, lesbianism, menage-a-trois sex and late-night seances with a trumpet at the foot of the bed.

According to court documents, Pulitzer tried earlier this year to avoid the publicity of a trial by offering his wife the car, annual alimony of $45,000, four years in their home and a $200,000 home after that.

She turned down the offer, instead fighting in court for a share of her husband's fortune, which she estimated at $25 million in international hotels, orange groves and other properties. He placed his wealth at a tenth of that.

Harper wrote that a larger settlement was not justified, saying, "The wife's exorbitant demands shock the conscience...putting the court in mind of the hit record by country singer Jerry Reed, which laments: 'She Got the Gold Mine, I Got the Shaft.'"

Mrs. Pulitzer's legal team was awarded a lump sum of $90,000, plus $12,500 awarded in June.

In a 19-page decision, Harper ordered the "primary physical residence" of the twins to be with their father. But he said they must have "frequent, continuing and reasonable contact and visitation" with their mother.

Mrs. Pulitzer was barred from removing her sons from Palm Beach County without written consent from her husband.

Testimony in the trial was splashed on front pages around the world. "This hasn't been a kissing contest," the judge once said.

Marriage counselors testified that the tanned, white-haired Pulitzer complained of being unable to keep up with his wife's jet-set lifestyle.

A lawyer for Mrs. Pulitzer claimed the husband took her from "milk to champagne and then to drugs."

She claimed Pulitzer arranged drug deals with Colombian Indian chiefs, smuggled loads of cocaine and marijuana in his yacht and plane, preferred a poolside lunch to being with his children, and slept at least once with a teen-age daughter by a previous marriage.

Pulitzer countered that his young wife indulged in bizarre occult practices, sipped cocaine-laced champagne and had extramarital flings with Belgian Grand Prix racer Jackie Ickx, a French pastry chef, a real estate broker, a Gold Coast handyman and Jacqueline Kimberly, the 32-year-old wife of elderly Kleenex tycoon James Kimberly.

Mrs. Kimberly denied such an affair, but a former mate on Pulitzer's yacht said he saw the two women together in bed, in testimony described by the judge as "very damaging to the wife."

A court-appointed family relations counselor, Sheri Rifenberg, had recommended that the father get custody of the twins. She testified that people she interviewed claimed Mrs. Pulitzer had not reformed her drug use and still held "beliefs that are somewhat out of the traditional realm."

Pulitzer divorce trial judge offended by publicity

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The judge who sifted through allegations of kinky sex, cocaine abuse and occult practices in the lurid Pulitzer divorce trial is a family man brought up worlds away from the jet-set lifestyle of Palm Beach.

Judge Carl Harper, 55, left criminal court for civil court to escape the limelight, then found himself refereeing the country's ranking sex-and-drug trial in Palm Beach County Circuit Court.

On Tuesday, Harper awarded millionaire publishing heir Peter Pulitzer custody of the Pulitzers' twin 5-year-old boys, giving 31-year-old Roxanne less than $50,000 alimony over two years and visiting rights with the children.

During the trial, Harper, the son and grandson of Pensacola, Fla., policemen, didn't hide his unfamiliarity with the lifestyle of Pulitzer, grandson of the late publishing magnate Joseph Pulitzer. Testimony described trips to Europe and Aspen, Colo., summers on the yacht, weekends at the ranch and afternoons at the pool.

When a witness was asked to name stores the Pulitzers frequented in Paris, the judge suggested another topic. "The names of the stores where they shop would be totally meaningless to me unless it was Sears, Roebuck or J.C. Penney," he said.

Harper was clearly uncomfortable with the media attention to the trial, ordering court personnel to turn away most spectators seeking access to the small hearing room.

"I know there's a great deal of interest in this case, but I'm offended by the publicity that's attended this trial," he said. "I probably shouldn't say that, but that's my true feeling."

"When a man and wife have their marital disputes," he said on another occasion, "it ought not to be aired in public."

Navy's New Jersey relaunched from Long Beach

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Guns boomed above hundreds of sailors and Marines standing stiffly to attention as the renovated battleship USS New Jersey rejoined the Navy, almost 40 years after first sailing for war.

"Captain, the ship is manned," Cmdr. Richard B. McKenna, New Jersey's executive officer, reported at 1:36 p.m. Tuesday after nearly 1,500 sailors trotted aboard and lined the rails of the seagoing fortress draped with red-white-and-blue bunting.

"Adm. Watkins, the United States Ship New Jersey reports for duty," Capt. William M. Fogarty told Chief of Naval Operations James D. Watkins.

The patriotic ceremony to recommission the dreadnaught, which first saw duty in 1943 is rooted in traditions that were old when seamen fought with cutlasses amid black-powder clouds.

"Ship's company, atten-HUT." The command roared over some 10,000 guests and hundreds of white-hatted sailors snapped to attention as a squad of Marines, scarcely a trace of hair showing beneath dress uniform hats, brought bayoneted rifles to present arms.

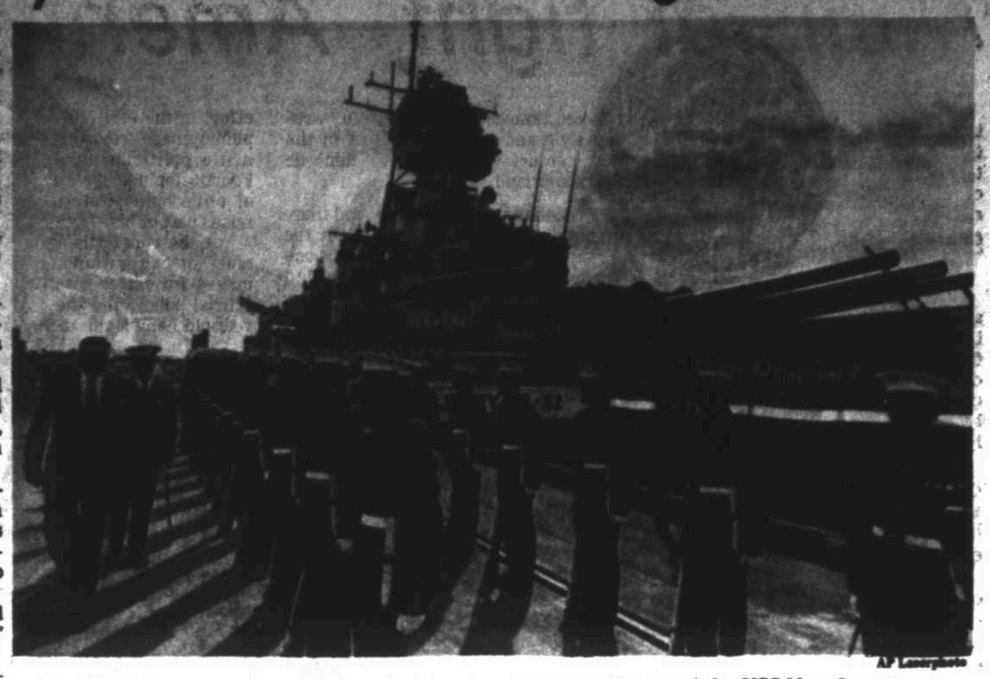

A ship's bell clanged to announce each arriving dignitary, most sporting sleeves and hats brimming with gold braid, and a battery of 44mm guns on the ship's portside fired booming, smoky 21-gun salutes to welcome President Reagan, who used the occasion to defend his defense policies.

"She's gray. She's had her face lifted. But she's still in the prime of life. A gallant lady, the New Jersey," Reagan said.

"This beautiful lady...is everything any commanding officer could ask for if called upon to venture into harm's way," Fogarty said. The ship is "just plain tough."

On the warship's superstructure, which rose like the skyline of a small city over the naval shipyard, were five rows of oversized campaign ribbons that mark the battles New Jersey has seen in World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

Mothballed and recommissioned three times now, the latest $326 million refurbishing added sophisticated electronics and missile batteries to New Jersey's nine 16-inch guns that fire projectiles heavier than some small cars.

Reagan officially accepted the nation's 514th warship, saying, "I hereby place the United States Ship New Jersey in commission. God bless and godspeed."

Then Fogarty ordered, "Hoist the colors and break the commission pennant," a whiplike star-spangled banner that signifies a working warship.

Then the captain ordered his executive officer to "set the watch" and, in classic military fashion, the command was repeated down the ranks.

The next command, "Pipe the crew to quarters," launched a flurry of activity and music, beginning with a shrill whistle on the bosun's mate's pipe.

1983 — a taxing year

If you're one of those "lucky" Americans who hasn't yet recovered from the financial shock of Christmas but already has discovered in your mailbox copies of this year's income tax forms, hang onto your hat. There's more in store.

In fact, the tax situation may make 1983 bleak for most Americans. Income taxes may be one of the first depressants of the new year, but on Jan. 1 smokers will find their habit costing a bit more, too.

The federal tax on cigarettes will double to 16 cents a pack. Coming on top of price increases of roughly 4 cents per pack that most major cigarette companies announced last October, the tax is expected to bring the cost of a cigarette pack to at least $1 in most places.

For the first time in 1983 federal workers will be required to pay a 1.3 percent Social Security tax (FICA) for Medicare coverage. Additionally, for the first time, taxes will be withheld from private pension payments when annual income from the pension amounts to more than $5,400 a year unless the recipient files a request that the taxes not be withheld. As of July 1, interest and dividend payments will be subject to a flat 10 percent withholding tax. The first $150 in payments from any one source will be exempt, however, and so will payments to low-income households and most people over age 65.

Just about everyone will be affected by the increase in the federal telephone tax, which goes from 1 percent to 3 percent on Jan. 1. It also will be more difficult to deduct medical expenses in 1983, though the pinch won't be felt until tax returns are filled out in 1984, officials say. Starting in the 1983 tax year, the deduction for one-half of health insurance premiums up to $150 will no longer be in effect and deductions will be allowed only for medical expenses exceeding 5 percent of a taxpayer's adjusted gross income, instead of the current 3 percent. Officials say many taxpayers would be well advised to pay outstanding medical bills before the end of 1982 so as to take advantage of the current rules.

But for all the dismal tax news that will confront Americans in 1983, there is at least one positive note. Next year is expected to be a net plus for most taxpayers. That's because on July 1 individual income tax rates are to be cut 10 percent — the third installment of the tax reduction plan Congress enacted in 1981 at President Ronald Reagan's behest. For that, we can all be thankful.

'Freedom is slavery'

For another example of George Orwell's "newspeak" in action, consider the resolution approved by the U.N. General Assembly, on a vote of 108 to 13, with 13 abstentions.

The resolution, on television broadcasts by earth satellites, asserts as its purposes and objectives "the right of everyone to seek, receive and impart information and ideas as enshrined in the relevant U.N. instruments." It goes on to assert that "such activities should promote the free dissemination and mutual exchange of information and knowledge in cultural and scientific fields, assist in educational, social and economic development, particularly in the developing countries, enhance the qualities of life of all peoples and provide recreation with due respect to the political and cultural integrity of states."

What noble purposes and objectives, but how does the resolution propose to attain them?

It would do so by establishing an international satellite telecast service "on the basis of agreements and/or arrangements with receiving countries" — in effect, as American delegate Charles M. Lichenstein pointed out, giving receiving countries "an unconditional veto over this form of broadcasting."

In other words, countries that suppress the right of everyone to seek, receive and impart information and ideas are given the General Assembly's cachet for suppression. In the words of Orwell's "1984," "freedom is slavery."

The resolution is of a piece with that "new information order" that the UNESCO has been wrestling with for years. It is not acceptable as a basis for negotiating an international convention. It is interesting that the only nations to join the United States in opposition were most of the western European democracies, Japan and Israel. It is a sad commentary on the attitude of most of the world's governments to freedom of information.

Another View:

An avoidable disaster

Not coincidentally, a presidential commission has issued a report proposing stronger state drunken-driving laws on the eve of the season when Americans drink most. If the established trend holds, more than 1,200 of us will die in automobile accidents between Christmas Eve and New Year's Day, about half in which a drunken driver is involved.

For the first time in memory, drunken driving is being treated not as an amiable eccentricity, but as the dangerous and often deadly phenomenon it is. A nationwide wave of anger already has resulted in tougher laws in a number of states. And the Presidential Commission on Drunk Driving now proposes that legislatures move immediately to establish a uniform nationwide response.

Among their proposals are a nationwide minimum drinking age — even for wine and beer — of 21, standardization of the blood-alcohol level that would establish drunkenness at one part per thousand (expressed as .10 percent), and mandatory jail time.

It may be a long time before national unanimity is achieved, especially with respect to a minimum drinking age, but clearly a national consensus has emerged in favor of treating drunken driving as both a serious social evil and a punishable offense. Taxi companies offering free rides home, bars that make breathalyzers available to departing customers, and toll-free phone numbers for reporting suspected drunken drivers all reflect this trend. One of the presidential panel's proposals is that funds from stiffer fines be made available for a comprehensive public education program about drunken driving.

It remains for legislatures and courts to translate the emerging popular will into an appropriate set of disincentives and punishments — including jail sentences when the circumstances call for it — for the drunken driver, taking care not to allow a fervor for reform to become vindictive excess.

Given that continued commitment, we need not, in the words of President Reagan, go on viewing drunken driving as "an unavoidable disaster like hurricanes or floods. ..." It is an avoidable disaster that deserves the high priority warranted by its grim harvest of victims.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Wilson plotted doublecross of protectors

WASHINGTON — In the checkered career of renegade CIA agent Edwin Wilson, no escapade is more revealing than his involvement in a scheme to engineer a coup in Sudan — doublecrossing his Libyan protectors in the process.

Jack Anderson

Wilson himself was eventually betrayed by an associate, tricked into leaving his Libyan sanctuary and brought to trial on charges of running guns to Col. Muammar Khadafy. Last week, he was sentenced to 15 years in prison.

But the Sudanese caper began while Wilson was still riding high in Libya under Khadafy's wing. Here's the story, according to sources close to Wilson, who provided documentary evidence:

Wilson met his initial Sudanese contact, Capt. Elnour Zarroug, on a plane from London to Tripoli in 1979. Zarroug worked for Gulf Fisheries, a company owned by the sheik of Kuwait. He was also an adviser to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, and was active in the maritime industry in Indonesia, Sri Lanka and the Philippines.

Not long after their chance meeting on the plane, Zarroug invited Wilson to work in Sudan. Wilson, still secure in his relationship with Khadafy, declined the invitation and told Libyan intelligence about it.

But by June 1981, as a result of columns I was publishing on Wilson and Khadafy, things were getting hot for the ex-CIA agent in Libya. So Wilson reopened the Sudanese connection by sending an associate, John Heath, to London for a meeting with Omar Mohammed el Tayeb, then Sudan's minister of national security — the Sudanese equivalent of the CIA. He is now the second most powerful man in the country. Tayeb also happens to be a blood enemy of Khadafy, so Wilson's negotiations were delicate.

Tayeb promised that Heath and Wilson would get V.I.P. treatment if they would come to Sudan, ostensibly to help set up espionage apparatus for the Sudanese government. Actually, Tayeb apparently had something more ambitious in mind than a coup against President Gaafar Mohammed Nimeiri.

Ever cautious, Wilson checked with Libyan intelligence sources, who encouraged him to go to Sudan and report back to them. Wilson sent Heath and another aide to Sudan on Aug. 8, 1981. They were met by Tayeb's deputy, Gasim Ahmed Gasim, bypassed customs and were whisked from the airport in an unmarked black limousine. They were put up in the president's well-staffed, well-guarded guesthouse.

According to Wilson's own typewritten report on the matter, shown to my associate Dale Van Atta, Tayeb wanted a shipping company set up as a front for Sudan's espionage operations abroad — something Wilson had done for the CIA and U.S. Navy intelligence in the old days.

Tayeb also wanted video and other surveillance equipment from Wilson for "security of the bridges over the Nile, the president's residence, their sugar factories and borders." The borders Tayeb was most concerned about were those with Libya and Chad.

"It is obvious," Wilson wrote, "that the Sudanese are most concerned with counter-revolutionary groups located in Libya, training in Libya and Chad, which provide an external threat to Sudan."

In three days of meetings with the Sudanese, Wilson's emissaries drew up a three-page list of equipment and training Tayeb wanted for intelligence and counterintelligence operations. He also asked for information on Libyan and other spy networks in London, Tripoli and elsewhere. At the end of the visit, Tayeb wrote a letter thanking Wilson for his "personal interest and concern in the welfare and security of my country," and expressing the hope that he would meet Wilson himself "in the near future."

Sources close to Wilson said he had received information that Tayeb's primary interest was overthrowing Nimeiri once Wilson had been hired to provide security for the Sudanese president. In other words, Wilson would be doublecrossing both Nimeiri and Khadafy by helping Tayeb seize power in Sudan.

The negotiations were still continuing when Tayeb, in October 1981, was promoted to third vice president by Nimeiri. (He has since been promoted to first vice president.) This apparently satisfied Tayeb, and he no longer needed the services of the treacherous American.

Footnote: A spokesman for the Sudan Embassy denied that Tayeb was planning a coup with Wilson. President Nimeiri himself authorized the negotiations, said the spokesman, in hopes of getting Wilson away from the Libyans.

LOST IN THE SHUFFLE: President Reagan's bipartisan commission on reform of the Social Security system has been stalemated by its failure to agree on recommendations for rescuing the financially shaky pension fund.

What's been largely forgotten is that Congress and the White House already have plenty of recommendations on reform of Social Security. They were offered in March 1981 by a bipartisan commission created by Congress in 1977.

One who has not forgotten the earlier commission is Rep. Elliot Levitas, D-Ga., one of its original sponsors. A year ago, he began writing the White House demanding to know why still another commission was being named to study a problem that had already been studied for more than two years.

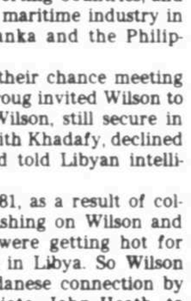

In March, Levitas received a letter from Kenneth Duperstein, a White House assistant, acknowledging that a repetition of the earlier study would indeed be "duplicative and wasteful." But Duperstein insisted that the new commission would be different. And on June 25, Levitas was told by Social Security boss John Svahn that "the absence of a complete, written evaluation of the 1981 commission's report should not be interpreted to mean that this administration has ignored that report."

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Central Americans awaiting papal visit

WASHINGTON — Pope John Paul II is expected to visit the Caribbean and Central America early in 1983, Catholic Church sources here say.

William Glandoni

The Holy Father is expected to start his trip in Haiti, the impoverished French- and Creole-speaking nation that shares the Caribbean island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic.

In Haiti, the pope has been invited to preside over a Haitian Eucharistic Congress and a meeting called by the Latin American Bishops Council (CELAM).

Then, tentative plans call for him to visit troubled Central America, including Nicaragua, where the Marxist-led Sandinistas are in power, and El Salvador, where Marxist guerrillas have been battling the government for over three years now.

Other countries that have invited him include Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica, Panama and Venezuela.

The pope's itinerary is far from complete.

As soon as word leaked out that John Paul II was contemplating attending the Catholic congress in Haiti, invitations or renewals of invitations showered down on him.

Most recently reported was that extended by Venezuelan President Luis Herrera Campins. The Venezuelan presidential office, Miraflores, announced that it had been informed the pope would visit Venezuela in April or May.

Catholic sources here said that all the mentioned dates for the trip were speculative and that a firm schedule for the pope's visit probably would not be announced more than a few weeks in advance.

They said that the Eucharistic Congress in Haiti will be firmly scheduled, once the dates for the pope's visit are made known.

After that event, the pope is expected to fly to Central America for visits of a day or so to each of the countries.

Security reasons were cited as one reason the precise timing of the papal visit has not been released.

Despite the guerrilla violence that troubles so many of the Central American countries, and the considerable tension that exists between the Marxist government of Nicaragua and the Catholic Church there, the consensus is that the pope would face no greater security threat in the region than he would anywhere else in the world.

"And it would not come from the guerrillas, nor from government troops, but rather from some 'crazy,'" a Central American Catholic here said.

In Central America, as elsewhere in Latin America, the vast majority of the people consider themselves to be Roman Catholics.

Even in Nicaragua, where Catholic churchmen are expecting the pope to arrive March 5, the church is an institution that most Nicaraguans, including many who support the Sandinista government, respect.

In fact, the ranking Catholic prelate in Nicaragua, Archbishop Miguel Ovando y Bravo, has been judged the most popular public figure in Nicaragua by widely cited opinion polls.

What is more, the Sandinista governing junta announced in November that it had invited the pope to visit Nicaragua.

There has been some speculation that the pope might not stop there because of the refusal of a number of priests to give up their positions in the Nicaraguan government.

Best known of them is Miguel D'Escoto, a Maryknoll priest, who is foreign minister. Others include Rev. Ernesto Cardenal, a Jesuit, minister of culture, Rev. Edgar Parrales, ambassador to the Organization of American States, Rev. Fernando Cardenal, head of the Sandinista youth movement, and Rev. Alvaro Arguello, a member of the council of state.

All six, however, reportedly have worked out an arrangement with the church hierarchy not to act as priests while they are in government service.

The trip would be John Paul's third to Latin America. He visited Mexico in 1979, stopping off in the Dominican Republic enroute, Brazil in 1980, and Argentina in 1982.

Two themes dominated his sermons during earlier trips to Latin America. First was his call to members of the church to refrain from use of violence in their efforts to improve social and economic conditions in their countries. The other was a virtual order to the clergy to get out of active politics and back to the pulpits to preach the Gospel. The pope was particularly emphatic on that point in Brazil where some cardinals, princes of the church, have supported violence-prone activist groups.

Expectations are that he would repeat the themes, particularly in Central America, where there is much greater violence rampant and where many more clergymen have been participating in extremist activities.

ART BUCHWALD

OPEC woes don't just hurt Libya!

The good news last week was that OPEC met in Vienna to discuss ways of keeping the price of oil up, and couldn't arrive at an agreement.

At least I thought it was good news until I talked to an American economist who told me it was bad news.

Art Buchwald

"Why is it bad news?" I wanted to know.

"Because the OPEC nations and the non-member producing countries will have to sell oil under the table at a much cheaper price."

"But shouldn't that be good news for the rest of the world?" I asked.

"Not necessarily. You see, the OPEC countries borrowed heavily from the Western banks, and if the price of oil falls they will have a hard time honoring their loans. If they don't pay back the money the entire Western monetary system will be in jeopardy."

"Why did the banks loan them so much money if they weren't certain they could pay it back?"

"At the time the banks made the loans, they considered the oil- producing countries blue chip risks because the price was going up and they were sure the cartel would help make sure it remained high."

"So what happened?"

"There was a glut because people couldn't afford the price. So the OPEC countries started double-crossing each other by selling oil under the table at a lower price than they had agreed upon. For example, everybody vowed to sell their oil at $34 a barrel and cut back on production to preserve it. But a lot of countries, up to their ears in debt, were forced to sell it for a lot less.

"Iraq went to war with Iran and needed money to pay for arms.

Nigeria spent more money than it had. And Khadafy of Libya sold his barrels way under price to sock it to Saudi Arabia."

"What a way to run a cartel," I said with disgust.

"The worst of it is that at the very moment OPEC was sticking it to us, the world went into a recession and demand dropped further. So instead of the countries dictating the prices, the free market took over, and with the glut the oil-producing nations found themselves fighting for the same customers."

"So aren't we all better off because OPEC decided to commit fratricide?"

"We would be except all the oil countries are in hock to the Western banks, and if the OPEC members default on their loans the banks could go under."

"Therefore the public has to root for the price of oil to stay up to keep our own banks afloat?"

"That seems to be the case."

"Why should we suffer because a bunch of stupid bankers were making a lot of stupid loans to a lot of stupid countries?"

"It was the only way we could recycle the money the oil countries were charging us for the oil. Until the oil glut the OPEC nations were our best customers."

"Wait a minute. Didn't the OPEC cartel put us in a worldwide recession in the first place?"

"They made a big contribution. But that's no reason to hold a grudge against them."

"That's easy for you to say because you're an economist. But it wouldn't bother me if they had to sell their oil for $3 a barrel again."

"Now you're talking like a selfish consumer. Don't you realize that every time Kuwait sneezes Chase Manhattan gets pneumonia?"

"I don't see that as my problem."

"It's everybody's problem. The eight largest banks in the United States could go down the same hole as the oil-producing countries if the bottom falls out of the petroleum market."

"So I'm supposed to cry for Libya?"

"I'm not asking you to cry for Libya. But you have to feel something for the Morgan Guaranty."

Palestinian Arabs began march into exile 34 years ago

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon — For most of the Palestinians, the long march into exile began 34 years ago. Although the British-mandated territory of Palestine had 1.3 million Arab inhabitants and about 600,000 Jews, with the Arabs owning 93 percent of the land, the United Nations approved a partition plan that would have given the Jewish minority 53 percent of the territory for the new state of Israel.

When the Palestinians balked at what they considered an injustice, the Jews, already armed and organized, proclaimed their state unilaterally. In the first Arab-Israeli war that followed, the Arab armies were defeated and 700,000 Palestinians fled into a new diaspora.

The events that led to the Palestinians' flight are clouded in controversy. The Israelis insist that the Palestinians simply abandoned their lands rather than agree to live in harmony within the new Jewish state. The Palestinians contend that their people were forced out of their homes by acts like the massacre of 254 Palestinian men, women and children in a town called Deir Yassin, led by the underground Irgun organization headed by Menachem Begin, today the prime minister of Israel.

DISPIRITED, LEADERLESS since the defeat of their first revolt against the British that began in 1936 and dispersed to refugee camps in the neighboring Arab lands, the Palestinians at first relied for redress of their losses on the flamboyant Arab leaders of the time, men such as Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser who took up the Palestinian cause as a tool for their own grandiose pan-Arab policies.

Such hopes, however, were dissipated quickly by the Arabs' humiliating defeat in 1956 when Israel, with the help of Britain and France, invaded the Egyptian Sinai — and the Palestinian Gaza Strip — on their first drive to the Suez Canal.

It was on the basis of conclusions drawn from that Arab defeat that Yasser Arafat and a few close friends then living in Kuwait, in 1959 founded the Palestine National Liberation Movement, whose Arabic initials spelled backward gave it the more familiar name "Fatah."

From its inception, Fatah strove to hew an independent course. It was that search for independence that led to the Nasser-sponsored creation of the umbrella group, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in 1964 as a tool to control the various new Palestinian resistance movements that, like Fatah, had begun to spring up to act on their own.

NASSER'S HUMILIATING defeat by Israel in the Six-Day War in 1967, which saw Israel expand its control over Palestine to include the West Bank of the Jordan River, the Gaza Strip and Syria's Golan Heights, doomed his efforts to dominate the PLO. Within a year and a half of the Arab disaster, Arafat had pushed Nasser's aide, Ahmed Shukairi, from power and taken over the PLO chairmanship that he has held ever since.

By the time Arafat took over, the PLO had begun to inspire concern in Israel as well as in Arab capitals. It had come of age a year earlier, in 1968, when Israel, in response to continued guerrilla raids from Jordan into the occupied West Bank, retaliated by sending a tank-backed infantry column against the East Bank refugee town of Karameh.

Instead of running away as the Israelis had expected, the guerrillas in the town not only decided to stand and fight but also shamed the cautious Jordanian army of King Hussein into joining them in facing the advancing Israelis.

Israel said 21 Israeli soldiers died in the battle of Karameh. The PLO claimed the number was as high as 200. Although as many as half of the PLO's 350 guerrillas also were killed, their willingness to stand and fight gave heart to the Palestinians and convinced them and other Arabs that in the right circumstances they could be a match for the Israelis.

Karameh, however, also spawned in the PLO self-destructive delusions of grandeur that in the years since have led it into countless political disasters in both Jordan and Lebanon.

BY 1970 the PLO's motley collection of gunfighters had all but taken over King Hussein's capital of Amman. They manned roadblocks in the streets, acted as if they and not the monarch ruled the country and clashed with the king's police and Army each time Jordan tried to curb their excesses.

About the same time, the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine began a series of airplane hijackings. In September 1970, it hijacked four planes in one week, bringing three of them down in the Jordanian desert to the embarrassment and rage of King Hussein.

No sooner had the hijacked passengers been freed, and the three planes dynamited in front of television cameras, than Hussein turned his tough, Bedouin-led army loose against the PLO to reclaim his capital. The two-week civil war that ensued ended with the PLO's expulsion from Amman and a trauma that has since been enshrined in the mythology of the organization under the name of "Black September."

Cast adrift and defeated by an Arab enemy, the PLO leaders gravitated toward unstable Lebanon to lick their wounds and rebuild the state within a state they had sought to create in Jordan. Remembering the weakness of their lightly armed guerrillas against King Hussein's superior army, the PLO also succumbed to the temptation to build its own forces as a conventional army, a decision that eventually gave Israel the grounds to invade Lebanon in the name of defending the security of its own borders.

IT WAS DURING the immediate aftermath of its humiliation in Amman that the PLO also did the greatest damage to its image by openly venting its frustrations through the sort of terrorism that left it with a repugnant reputation.

Persian Gulf waters too polluted for life

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MANAMA, Bahrain — The Persian Gulf is hopelessly polluted and it may well be too late to do anything about it, according to a report just issued by biochemists at Kuwait University.

The study warns that conditions in the gulf have deteriorated to such an extent that underwater life may soon be impossible.

"Industrial sewage, oil and other pollutants completely threaten life...a single, leaking supertanker will wipe out the final vestiges of life in the gulf waters."

The most polluted areas are the waters around the island country of Bahrain and the coasts of Qatar and Kuwait, according to the report.

Before the oil boom in the region, the waters and coasts were clean and fish supplies had seemed inexhaustible.

1983, A sensational sports year....

NFL narrowly averts strike over drug issue; Thrilla in Vanilla—Cobb-Cooney

By SCOTT OSTLER
The Washington Post
and Los Angeles Times

We are in for a sensational sports year in 1983, according to leading sports psychics I consulted. Here are some of the highlights from the next 12 months....

Another NFL player strike is narrowly averted when the players give in to a demand by owners and agree to submit to pregame drug testing. Rams quarterback Vince Ferragamo is one of the early casualties of the testing. He is suspended after the first test when he misses 10 questions on the true-false portion, and defines "free base" as "an intentional walk."

Shrewd player agents continue to demand attractive bonus-incentive clauses for their major league clients. Error-prone shortstop Rafael Ramirez, who once coerced his club into promising him a bonus should he win a Gold Glove, is guaranteed a $10,000 bonus if he wins the Nobel Prize.

Steve Garvey's agent, inspired by Hal McRae's contract calling for an extra $25,000 if McRae maintains his weight under 185 pounds this year, demands a similar clause in Garvey's contract. The Padres agree to pay Steve $25,000 if he keeps his height over 6-1.

IN THE WORLD Cup ski races, America sweeps the giant slalom with a 1-2-3 finish by Wilt Chamberlain, John Matuszak and Too Tall Jones.

Tennis promoter Bill Stamp stages yet another Borg-Connors exhibition match in Los Angeles. This time there are no freshly painted seats, no ticket snafus and no misleading press releases about the number of sets to be played. However, some fans demand refunds after Connors comes out alone, returns some serves from an automatic ball machine for 45 minutes, and leaves. Stamp notes that some patrons simply did not read their tickets carefully. "It doesn't say Connors vs. Borg," he explains. "It says Connors or Borg."

A UFO lands in Cleveland and the world's first interplanetary cultural exchange program is worked out. We get E.T. from the planet Zxrqk, in exchange for World B. Free and three Pac-Man machines.

Not to be outdone, the major league owners appoint E.T. commissioner of baseball.

The high-five hand slap fades from use after the surgeon general announces that this popular form of congratulation can cause irreversible palm and knuckle damage. The high-five is replaced by a similar maneuver in which the two athletes slap at one another's hand but miss in midair. This so-called "phantom five" is accidentally invented by two white players attempting a standard high-five.

LOS ANGELES loses the 1984 Olympics when the Greece Supreme Court invokes eminent domain and orders the Games returned to Athens.

The Chicago Cubs, who startled baseball with their "revolving managers" in the early '60s, introduce yet another revolutionary leadership experiment, called "no managers." The lineup is made out by democratic vote of the players, pitching changes are made by the catcher, and a Las Vegas lounge comedian is hired to provide colorful post-game locker room quotes for sportswriters. The Cubs win the National League pennant and World Series.

Gerry Cooney and Tex Cobb battle it out in Las Vegas in "The Fight of the Weekend," also billed as "The Thrilla in Vanilla." Through 15 rounds, neither fighter lands a punch. Larry Holmes announces he has signed to play baseball in Japan.

No. 5 UCLA steals one from cautious Cardinals

"Don't touch it, it's ticking." Clemson and Kansas State players react to basketball like it was a time bomb during the Sun Bowl tournament at El Paso. Actually, it's just a loose rebound. Story 4B.

Alabama, Georgetown, Arkansas claim wins

By Associated Press

Louisville basketball Coach Denny Crum admits he's a bit of a gambling man — a couple of bucks on a golf game or a quarter in a slot machine — but he says he didn't bet on the Cardinals' game against UCLA.

With 2:35 to play and the score tied 72-72, he called a timeout, and it appeared he would wager that his Cardinals could either hold the ball for the last shot or draw a foul.

Instead, UCLA forward Darrin Daye stole the ball from Rodney McCray, and center Stuart Gray hit a slam-dunk that gave the No. 5 Bruins a 76-72 victory over the 13th-ranked Cardinals Tuesday night.

"At the end, we were looking for an inside play and not just the last shot," Crum said. "We were trying to score."

TWICE, UCLA rallied from 10-point deficits in the second half. Gray, a 7-foot sophomore, scored all of his career-high 14 points in the second half, hitting each of his seven field goal attempts while playing with four fouls.

"The coach stuck with me and the team stuck with me," said Gray, who spent most of his freshman year on the bench. "I know when I had four fouls they tried to foul me out, but I didn't change my style.

"At halftime I said to myself, 'You're a big slow center.' I don't mind it when other people say it or write it, but when I say it to myself I get mad."

The Cardinals, 8-2, led 44-34 at the half and 64-54 with 11 minutes to play before the Bruins, now 7-1, surged ahead.

Rod Foster scored 16 points for UCLA, while center Charles Jones topped Louisville with 18.

RANKED TEAMS were involved in three tournaments. Sixth-ranked Alabama defeated Southern Cal 74-61, and 10th-ranked Georgetown clobbered Wisconsin 71-43 in the first round of the Winston Tire Classic at Los Angeles. No. 8 Tennessee downed San Jose State 50-42, and 15th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas walloped Wagner 120-70 in the opening round of the Las Vegas Holiday tournament.

In a doubleheader in the New Jersey Meadowlands, No. 11 Arkansas edged St. Peter's 52-48, and 17th-rated North Carolina State beat No. 20 West Virginia 67-59.

Top Ten

Ennis Whatley scored 20 points as Alabama, 7-0, earned the right to meet Georgetown for the title in the Winston Classic. The score was tied 28-28 at halftime, but Alabama outscored Southern Cal 10-2 to open the second half. Bill Martin scored 14 points as Georgetown breezed to a 26-point halftime advantage over Wisconsin.

Tennessee will meet Nevada-Las Vegas for the title of the Las Vegas Classic. The 8-0 Volunteers got 24 points from junior guard Michael Brooks to beat San Jose State. In his first game, transfer Jeff Collins scored 25 points to pace Nevada-Las Vegas to its one-sided victory over Wagner.

Iowa, 7-1, takes on Seton Hall in Wednesday's final of the Rochester Classic. Michael Payne hit two free throws late in the game to help the Hawkeyes hold off James Madison. Seton Hall upset St. Bonaventure 76-74 in overtime in the opener.

Second Ten

Center Joe Kleine scored 16 points and Alvin Robertson had 16 as Arkansas edged St. Peter's in the first game of the Meadowlands doubleheader. Robertson scored and was fouled for a three-point play in the final 10 seconds to give the Razorbacks, 8-0, a four-point lead, 50-46.

In the second game of the high-powered twinbill, Dereck Whittenburg scored 19 points and center Thurl Bailey added 18 to boosted North Carolina State over West Virginia. The Wolfpack, 5-1, also got 12 rebounds and nine blocked shots from Bailey. West Virginia fell to 8-2.

Tournaments

Terry Lewis scored nine of his game-high 19 points in the final eight minutes to help Mississippi State beat Tulane 51-47 in the first round of the Sugar Bowl Classic at New Orleans. Graylin Warner scored 22 points to give Southwestern Louisiana a 71-66 victory over Michigan State in the other game.

Cliff Pruitt and Jerome Mincy scored 19 points apiece as Alabama-Birmingham clobbered Alaska-Anchorage 102-60 in the UAB Classic at Birmingham, Ala. Birmingham meets Murray State, a 93-63 victor over Fordham, in Wednesday night's final.

Maurice Davis and Linwood Davis scored 21 points apiece to lead Jacksonville over Iowa State, 78-60, in the first round of the Gator Bowl tournament at Jacksonville, Fla. Jacksonville will meet rival Florida in the title game Wednesday night. Florida got 19 points from Eugene McDowell to clobber Penn State 82-60, giving Coach Norm Sloan his 499th career victory.

Reserve Michael Johnson scored 15 points to help New Mexico over Butler, 72-61, in the first round of the Lobo Invitational at Albuquerque, N.M. Princeton, led by freshman John Smyth's 20 points, won the other game, 67-39, over Weber State.

OREGON STATE won the right to meet Idaho for the title of the Far West Classic in Portland, Ore. The Beavers beat Lamar 76-61, and Idaho defeated Oregon 56-53. In the two consolation semifinals, Tennessee State downed Drake 66-63, and Portland defeated Montana State 66-44.

Four tournament champions were crowed Tuesday night. South Alabama beat Northeastern 87-61 in the title game of the Senior Bowl at Mobile, Ala., and Marquette downed Cincinnati 69-52 to win the Milwaukee Classic.

Lee girls wallop Tribe, 80-39

King, Armstrong pace victory

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland Lee's Lady Rebels, behind the hot shooting of Yshun King and Shelly Armstrong with 23 and 16 points, respectively, successfully concluded their pre-district basketball schedule Tuesday night with an easy 80-39 victory over the Seminole Maidens at Lee Gym.

Lee wasn't as impressive on the court as the one-sided score tends to indicate. Turnovers, missed shots and poor free throw shooting (only 14 of 32) plagued the Rebels on offense.

"It's the first time we've played in about a week so we're going to lose some timing, lose some coordination and lose the eye for the basket," said Lee head coach Shirley Stephenson. "I'm sure that's why we looked a little sloppy."

Though the offense seemed to be a bit off, Stephenson, overall, was pleased with the Rebels' performance and was exceptionaly happy with the pressure defensive efforts of her girls which set up several easy baskets.

"We were doing a lot of good things on defense, the defense was playing real good tonight," said Stephenson.

THE FIRST quarter was the only close quarter of the game as Seminole rallied from an 8-3 deficit to knot the score at 9-9 and again at 11 before the Rebels could begin to pull away, 17-14 at the end of the frame. Lee totally dominated the remaining periods, outscoring Seminole 21-10, 16-8 and 26-7 for the 80-39 victory and a 12-4 season record (1-0 in District 4-5A play).

King was among the team leaders in nearly every statistical category. Not only did she contribute 23 points, she hauled down 15 rebounds and tied Felicia Farias in assists with three.

Defensively she led the Rebels in blocked shots with three while Armstrong, her scoring cohort who is recovering from knee surgery, knocked away two others and King came away with two steals. Stacy Harmon led that category with three.

For Seminole, Mecky Beaubien was the leading scorer with 12 points while Karen Howell added nine.

WITH THE pre-district schedule behind them, the Lady Rebels must turn their thoughts to their 4-5A opponents and especially toward cross-town rival Midland High, the next team on their schedule. The junior varsity-varsity doubleheader is scheduled for 6:15 and 8 p.m. Thursday at Midland High Gym.

In JV action Tuesday night, Seminole came away with a 69-62 victory over Lee to keep the Maidens perfect season alive. Perfect, that is, against other JV opponents. In 11 contests this season, Seminole is 9-2 with the only losses coming against varsity squads. Lee fell to 12-4.

For the Maidens, Natasha McComal scored 17 points and Theresa Jeffcoat. Brenda Haven led the Rebels with 14 points followed by Megan Pace with 13 and Diana White with 11.

Seminole (39): Jenkins, 0-0-3-0; Howell, 4-1-3-9; Sheets, 3-1-5-7; Winsor, 1-3-5-4; Jones, 0-1-2-1; Brasfield, 0-0-0-0; Trent, 0-0-0-0; Rosales, 1-0-0-2; Beaubien, 5-2-1-12; Fleming, 0-2-1-2; Brooks, 1-0-3-2. Totals: 15-9-22-39.

Midland Lee (80): Hatch, 1-2-1-4; Eaden, 1-0-1-2; Oudems, 0-0-1-0; McFadden, 3-3-0-9; Haney, 2-0-2-4; Harmon, 3-1-0-7; Farias, 2-1-2-5; Sanders, 1-4-2-6; King, 11-1-3-23; Armstrong, 7-2-2-16; Bigler, 2-0-0-4.

Austin Peay wins tourney

ABILENE (AP) — McNeese State Coach Glenn Duhon watched Austin Peay wipe out his team's comfortable ten-point lead and thought his late-game strategy was backfiring.

McNeese overcame several turnovers and held on to win the Cowboy Classic championship Tuesday night, beating Austin Peay 66-60.

But Duhon left thinking that he should have put his team in a delay game, that could have held the lead, sooner than he did.

SMU's Carter works up mad for Pitt Panthers

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist cornerback Russell Carter says he doesn't believe the Pittsburgh Panthers have much respect for the unbeaten Mustangs.

"To me, I think they think we are a joke," said Carter, a second-team Associated Press All-America.

Carter, who is from Ardmore, Pa., was heavily recruited by the Panthers and has visited with some of his friends on the Pitt team before Saturday's Cotton Bowl Classic.

"The impression I get talking to some of my friends is they feel they can look down on us," Carter said. "It's a cocky attitude. They feel they can blow us out and we won't give a fight."

Pittsburgh players said they don't understand where Carter gets his impressions.

"How are we not going to have respect for a 10-0-1 team no matter who they played?" asked Panther defensive tackle Bill Maas. "Maybe he just saw us out at night or something."

Carter said Pitt players are projecting the attitude that "they are just here to play SMU so they can mope around. There's no excitement on their part."

Not so, says Maas.

"We're excited about playing in the Cotton Bowl," he said. "It hurts not playing for the national championship, but we do care and we want to win."

Bear writes final chapter to Bryant football saga tonight

Tide meets Illini in Liberty Bowl

MEMPHIS — The final chapter will be written tonight to the most successful coaching career in the history of college football.

At the age of 69, Paul "Bear" Bryant is calling it quits after a 38-year head coaching odyssey that took him from Maryland to Kentucky to Texas A&M and finally back to his beloved alma mater, the University of Alabama, a quarter-century ago.

WHETHER BRYANT bows out with 323 victories or the 322 he now owns — he passed Amos Alonzo Stagg's mark of 314 last season — is immaterial. And whether Alabama defeats Illinois in tonight's 24th annual Liberty Bowl game or suffers a fourth consecutive defeat for the first time in Bryant's reign, the Bear will leave a standard for success which many will strive for but few, if any, will reach.

From 1971 until this season, Alabama lost as many as three games only once. This year, the Crimson Tide lost four times and Bryant decided to pack it in. A 7-4 record might be utopia to some coaches; not Bear Bryant.

"IF we were winning, I'd still be coaching," he said Tuesday, shortly before his last practice at the helm of the Crimson Tide, followed by an emotional farewell speech to the troops during which the crusty old Bear reportedly broke down and bawled a couple of times.

"I've been saying for 10 years that I wanted to coach as long as we were doing well," Bryant went on. "I didn't want the program to run down and then get out. I wanted to leave someone else good personnel, and that's what I did. I think I did what was best for the university.

With Alabama's poorest record since 1970, this is not a typical Bear Bryant team. Nor was last year's squad, despite a 9-2-1 mark.

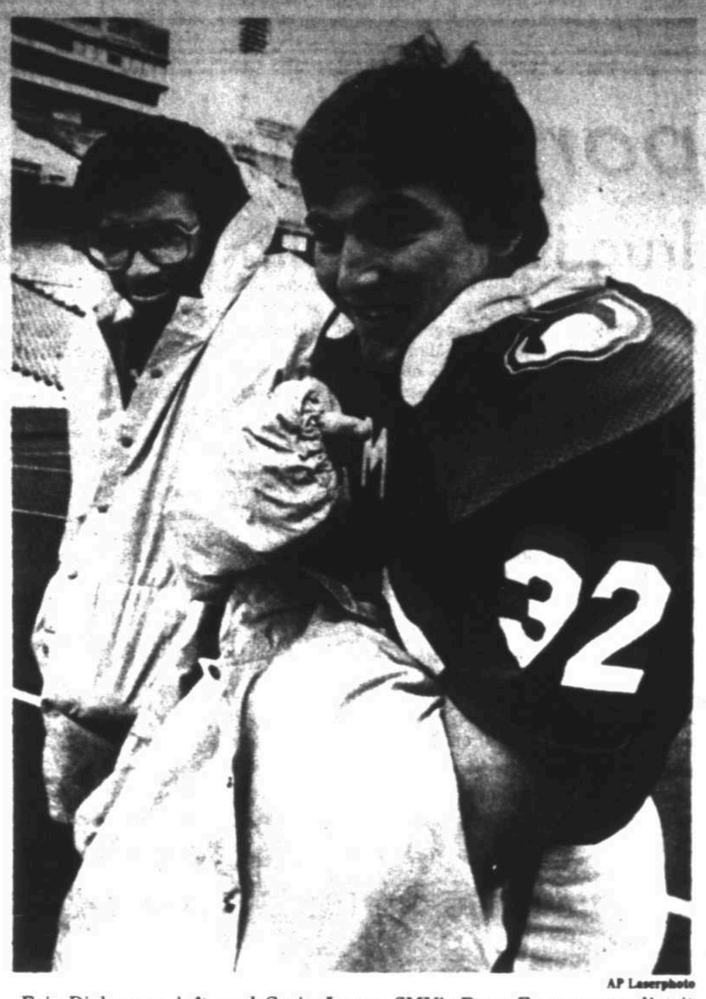

"My teams have always gone cheek-to-cheek and jaw-to-jaw, and we didn't have a lot of that this year," Bryant said. "But when it happened was not this year, but last year. If last year was 15 years earlier, I'd have gotten rid of six or seven guys right quick.

"Last year, two ordinary teams beat us, and that hadn't happened but one time in 15 years. I thought this year's personnel would be around the top fighting for the national championship. I thought it would be a great team late in the year.

"But the year is over and we only played five games like we're supposed to play and we lost one of those (Auburn)."

So Bryant realized it was decision time. Two weeks ago, he announced his retirement — he will remain on as athletic director for a few months — and Ray Perkins, a former Alabama star now coaching the New York Giants in the National Football League, is to succeed him.

"I don't really know when I made the decision," Bryant said. "Probably after the Southern Mississippi game (a 38-29 setback between losses to LSU and Auburn). "From the middle of the season I'd been talking to my wife and children about it. After the Southern Mississippi game, I knew something was wrong. I didn't have control of the players like I used to have.

Eric Dickerson, left, and Craig James, SMU's Pony Express, predict it will take a couple of catastrophes for Mustangs to finish No. 1. See Scratchpad.

SMU's title hopes are slim and none

FOOTBALL—SMU running back Craig James says the only way the unbeaten Mustangs can win the national championship is to beat Pittsburgh in the Cotton Bowl and hope there's a blizzard in New Orleans and a hurricane in Miami. "It's a crime that we are ranked No. 4 and haven't lost a game while two teams (No. 2 Penn State and No. 3 Nebraska) are ahead of us with losses," They'd have to get snowed out in New Orleans and have a hurricane on the Florida peninsula for us to make it." Teammate Eric Dickerson added, "We could beat Pittsburgh 50-0 and we still wouldn't be No. 1. The pollsters favor the East Coast and the West Coast. They don't know anything about Southwest Conference teams. They might say we're easy but they can come down here and play us and find out." Dickerson said if the Mustangs should defeat Pittsburgh and finish No. 2 nobody will ever remember it. "You don't invite the Vice President to a party if you can get the President."...

New Kansas U. coach Mike Gottrfied is looking forward to the challenge of improving the Jayhawks' 2-7-2 season, although KU is being investigated by the NCAA. "This is the third time I've been in this situation. I'm not concerned. Anything can happen. There are a lot of possibilities in athletics if you get the right people."

A season-long slump had Miami punter Tom Orosz mystified until he lifted a 61-yard punt that sent Buffalo's Robert Holt reeling backwards toward his own end zone and the Bills to the brink of elimination from the NFL playoffs as the Dolphins defeated the Bills, 27-10. "I really felt good before the game. I believe my concentration was better than it has been all season. I hope my performance will get me on a good track again. It had been a frustrating year until tonight." The second-year punter entered the game averaging just 37.6 yards for 27 punts and had been subject of Shula's concern the past week. He punted five times for a 46-yard average Monday night.

Holt got his hands on Orosz' punt, but couldn't hold it, and the ball rolled into the end zone where Hester recovered. The Dolphins were given possession at the 2-yard line, however, because the play was ruled a muff — not a fumble — which cannot be advanced.

Young Oilers surprise Russians, 4-3

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Soviet hockey teams have often destroyed the best teams of Canada and the National Hockey League by exploiting their weaknesses.

But the Edmonton Oilers, a young and emotional bunch of Canadians led by center Wayne Gretzky, beat the talent-laden Soviet national team 4-3 Tuesday night in the first of a six-game Soviet-National Hockey League exhibition series.

The Soviets play next in Quebec against the Nordiques Thursday night before meeting the Canadiens in Montreal on New Year's Eve.

The Oilers emerged victorious before 17,498 cheering fans in the Edmonton Coliseum by avoiding penalties, making few costly mistakes and beating the Soviets at two of the strongest facets of their game, skating and power plays.

Edmonton scored twice on three power-play chances — both by Gretzky — and then stopped the Soviet power play so badly that it managed just three shots on goal in two manpower advantages.

"We didn't play our best when we were at equal strength and that's why we didn't play our best with the man advantage," said Soviet Coach Viktor Tikhonov.

The Soviets, showing some signs of jet lag after a 25-hour flight that got them to Edmonton Monday night, started fast in the first period but faded quickly.

Sparked by former Canadian Olympic team member Glenn Anderson and linemate Mark Messier, each of whom had a goal and two assists, the Oilers showed early that they could skate with the Soviets.

They overwhelmed the visitors in the first period, outshot them 17-6 but emerged with only a 1-0 lead on Anderson's goal because of the brilliance of Vladimir Myshkin, a late replacement for Vladislav Tretiak who was running a fever.

Hue and Cry due

An AP Sports Analysis
By BRUCE LOWITT

There will be a great hue and cry and gnashing of teeth next week when, for the first time in the history of the National Football League, a team with a losing record is officially accorded playoff status.

Some folks have suggested that the NFL had cast itself in the image of the National Hockey League or the National Basketball Association since their playoffs, too, seem to involve every team in the standings.

BUT WHAT, after all, are playoffs for?

To decide which teams deserve to contest for the right to be called the best in the league — and to pump a lot of money into the teams' and players' bank accounts in the process.

"This is a one-season aberration," Commissioner Pete Rozelle said of the expanded 16-team playoff field, of the conference (rather than division) standings deciding the qualifers and of the certainty that at least one team will qualify with no better than a 4-5 record.

"IN A SHORTENED season like this, we realized that this was a distinct possibility," Rozelle said. "You just can't avoid it. But I think we made the right step in having eight teams qualify in each conference, because a team getting off to a slow start wouldn't have had much of a chance. That was the primary reason we made it a 16-team field rather than eight or 10, to give everybody a chance."

And to keep the folks coming to the parks on the premise that they were watching prospective champions, not just players going through the motions.

And to keep the players happy, too, with the prospect of extra game checks for six teams which normally would not advance to the playoffs, which this year have been dubbed the Super Bowl Tournament by the league.

If it had wanted to, the NFL could simply have assembled all 28 of its teams in order of victories and proclaimed the winningest team the best. That's how the league did it in its first dozen years, 1921-32.

OF COURSE, BACK then, when the Green Bay Packers, the New York Giants and the Chicago Bears were winning titles (along with the Canton Bulldogs, the Frankfort Yellowjackets and the Providence Steamroller), the Kansas City Cowboys' fans and the Minneapolis Marines' fans — not to mention the followers of the Duluth Kelleys, the Rochester Jeffersons and the Louisville Bresks — lost interest halfway through the season when it became clear their teams wouldn't finish first.

Back then, first was all that mattered. Second meant thank you very much, drive home safely and come back next year.

It wasn't until 1933 that the late George Preston Marshall, the owner of the Boston Redskins, suggested that two divisions and a playoff game might be more enriching. It was then that the word "division" became part of the NFL lexicon. It was changed to "conference" in 1950, then divisions within conferences became the thing in 1967, when the league was re-drawn and quartered. And who can ever forget the inception of "wild card," when the merger brought about in 1970 the league's present six-division alignment?

AND ONCE the playoff format took hold, nearly half a century ago, the best was no longer necessarily first.

Four years ago, when the NFL expanded its regular-season schedule from 14 to 16 games, the Minnesota Vikings became the symbol of either parity or mediocrity, depending on the point of view, when they won the National Conference's Central Division title, and thus a playoff berth, with an 8-7-1 record. That was the year Oakland, Seattle and San Diego had better records than Minnesota's but failed to make the playoffs.

The Vikings were anything but a trend-setter, though.

Rebs end slump against Lovington

CLOVIS, N.M. — The Midland Lee Rebels ended a five-game losing streak here Tuesday afternoon with a narrow 63-62 victory over Lovington, N.M., in first round action in the Clovis Invitational Basketball Tournament.

Lee is now 2-12 on the year as Tod Brown led the Rebel charge with 18 points, but he got plenty of help from Sylvester Johnson and Derek Westbrook, both of whom hit for 13 points. Bryan White added 11 points to the cause.

Nathan Cathoe led Lovington with 13 points while Vince Homer had 12 and Perry Howard 10.

Lee fell behind 15-10 in the first period, but led 32-26 at the half. Lovington put on a fourth quarter charge with 26 points, but Lee's 19 was enough to hold off the rally by a two-point margin.

Lee meets St. Pius today at 6:30 p.m. in the winner's bracket. St. Pius is the defending AAA state champion of New Mexico. St. Pius defeated Carlsbad, N.M., Tuesday by a 49-43 margin.

Newest Padre, Garvey, should play in Clerical collar

The Washington Post
and Los Angeles Times

It should have come as no surprise to anyone who knows him that Steve Garvey opted to become a Padre. I mean, what is he going to want to be – a Red? A Pirate? The only other real option open to him was to become a Cardinal.

Steve Garvey is the only ballplayer I ever saw where, when he began to talk, you could almost feel the organ music and candlelight and incense. Who, when the choir struck up the Ave Maria, he could turn to his date and murmur "Listen, darling, they're playing our song." Garvey's so good, he should have been burned at the stake. They named a school after him but they should have named a grotto. He should play in a Roman collar. And they should give him his signals in Latin. A puff of white smoke should have come out of the stadium chimney when he won the MVP.

A LOT OF US thought it was nice to name a school after a guy who led the National League in hits instead of a guy who led 100,000 young men to their deaths. But, not everybody wanted to believe Garvey wasn't a guy who pulled wings off butterflies or poisoned canaries in secret. He was "Steve Goody" to a lot of ballplayers in the league, not all of them on other teams.

Steve didn't exactly take vows of poverty, but what is undeniably true is that he was, cheerfully, the most underpaid player in the National League for years. Garvey kept his counsel and said his beads when the franchise signed 2-7 pitchers or nonconformist relievers for twice what Garvey was making. Not even when a 20-year-old rookie lefthander with a 13-7 record held out because he was making only $25,000-a-year MORE than Garvey did Garvey hold his breath and scream. He told friends privately he expected the Dodgers would make it up to him when the time came. "I played faiv with them, they'll play fair with me" – it's one of the Beatitudes, I believe.

Well, the great day dawned. Garvey showed up with his agent, expecting a blank contract which he could fill out at will.

PONTIUS PILATE should have had the decision. The Dodgers squirmed. They had a choice of being Ebenezer Scrooge. Or Santa Claus. Neither role appealed to them.

Consider the view from the front office: Here was this 34-year-old, too-short first baseman who was good to his mother, devoted to charity, and an old-fashioned guy of the type the Dodgers professed to admire. He also had six 200-hit seasons, driven in 1,000 runs for them, and was made out of equal parts of bubble gum and spinach. He talked in wall mottoes.

Still, he had shown a dangerous slippage. Not in binding up the wounds of animals, but his annual .300 batting average was down to .282. The home runs, once a robust 33 a year, had dipped to$16.

The Dodgers are the most notoriously unsentimental team in baseball, followed closely by the Yankees. In other words, the two most successful franchises in the game. You will note, for example, that the Boston Red Sox never got rid of Ted Williams, nor will they ever unload Carl Yastrzemski. Even the Cardinals couldn't screw up enough courage to unload Stan Musial.

THE DODGERS have always operated on the Branch Rickey principle: "It's better to get rid of a player too soon than too late."

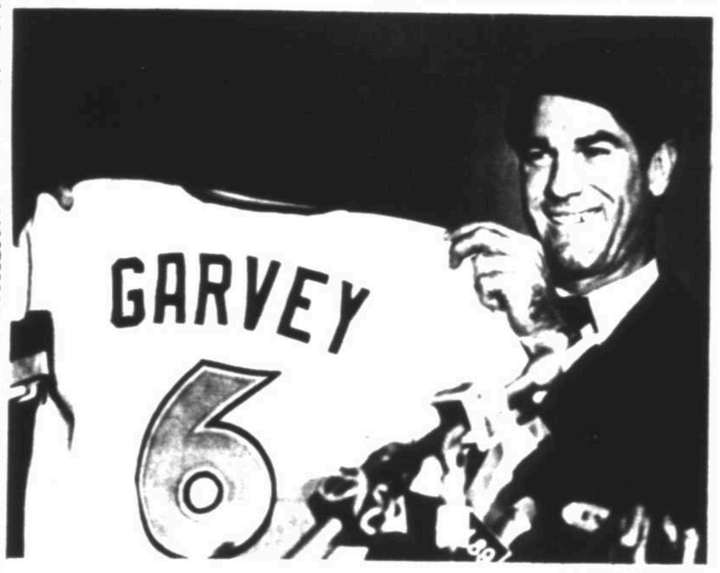

Who, for example, is the most-famous player for all seasons who ever wore a Dodger uniform? Why Jackie Robinson, of course. The Dodgers had no qualms in dealing him off to the supposedly hated rivals, the Giants. Robinson refused to report, and the Dodgers were even bitter about that.

Who are some of the other Dodger heroes? Hall of Famer Dazzy Vance? The Dodgers dealt him off to St. Louis after he had won 190 games for them. Van Lingle Mungo? They wrote songs about him, but the Dodgers assigned his contract to the Giants after 12 years. Duke Snider? The Dodgers retired his number when he made the Hall of Fame. But they dealt him off to the New York Mets when he got to be 36 years old. Gil Hodges? They fobbed him off on the Mets, too, when the couldn't get around on the fast ball anymore. The only guy that ever beat the Dodgers to the punch was Sandy Koufax, who quit them before they could quit him.

IF THE DODGERS were sincere about wanting to keep Steve Garvey, the time to have made him an offer was at the beginning of last season, not the end of it. Garvey knew it. The Dodgers knew it. The League knew it.

Other teams in the league needed credibility. They had to show their fans they were serious ownerships. They needed fatter TV contracts, bigger gates, fan good will. The Dodgers didn't need any of these. The Dodgers didn't even need a first baseman. What they needed was a stick with a carrot on the end of it. They needed an offer good enough not to insult Garvey, but not good enough for him to take. It was a delicate operation. One false move, and you're stuck with Garvey – or with fan ill-will.

The Dodgers came out of it smelling like Branch Rickey. They usually do.

And the program really works. Three of the ex-smokers who have been helped by the Stop-Smoking program at Central YMCA shared their experiences. With the Telergram on Nov 17, 1982.

Silverman said the first session in the Stop-Smoking program is a free orientation session. [This is a very important aspect of the program because we talk about the dynamics of the smoking habit. We also explain behavior modification and clinical hypnosis in helping to stop and continuing to stop smoking],

AFTER ATTENDING AN ORIENTATION session , a smokers wishing to be a non-smoker attends three session that first week, which are held on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The following five weeks the non-smoker attends a reinforcement session once a week. [New people can join every Tueday,] Silverman said.

In Addition to the Stop-Smokeing program, Central YMCA's Positive Lifestyle Center offers a variety of self-improvement programs, including Back Pain Relief, Weight Management, and testing and counseling services. Walker wouldn't be same without Squab

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Herschel Walker would just as soon leave his shoulder pads in his locker as take the field for a game without rubbing the bald head of Harry "Squab" Jones, a fixture around Georgia football since 1910 and a good luck charm since the Great Depression.

"A long time ago, it was in 1929, we had a boy at Georgia from the North, Austin Downes," Jones said, recalling how his head got to be an institution at Georgia.

"All the boys were telling him, 'Rub his head,' but he just told them, 'No, y'all are just superstitious. Y'all believe that if you want to.'

"Finally — it was the Yale Bowl — and he did it. Yale kicked off to Austin Downes, and he took it all the way for a touchdown"

"If he misses me before the game, he'll come back and get me at halftime," Jones said as top-ranked Georgia practiced for Saturday's meeting with No.2 Penn State in the Sugar Bowl.

Jones is listed in the Georgia press brochure as an "athletic assistant." Among other things, he sees to it that coolers, cold drinks and ice are available for the players.

"I have never been on the Georgia payroll," he said.

Still, with only a two-year break for World War I, he has missed very few games, he said.

One was the 1947 Sugar Bowl, in which Charles Trippi led Georgia to a 20-10 victory over North Carolina and Charley "Choo Choo" Justice.

Jones believes Trippi was the greatest football player in Georgia history. "The greatest in the history of America. They went both ways, then," he said.

"Even Jim Thorpe said, before he died, that Charley Trippi was the best."

The greatest running back? "Herschel Walker is the greatest ball carrier that ever lived," he said.

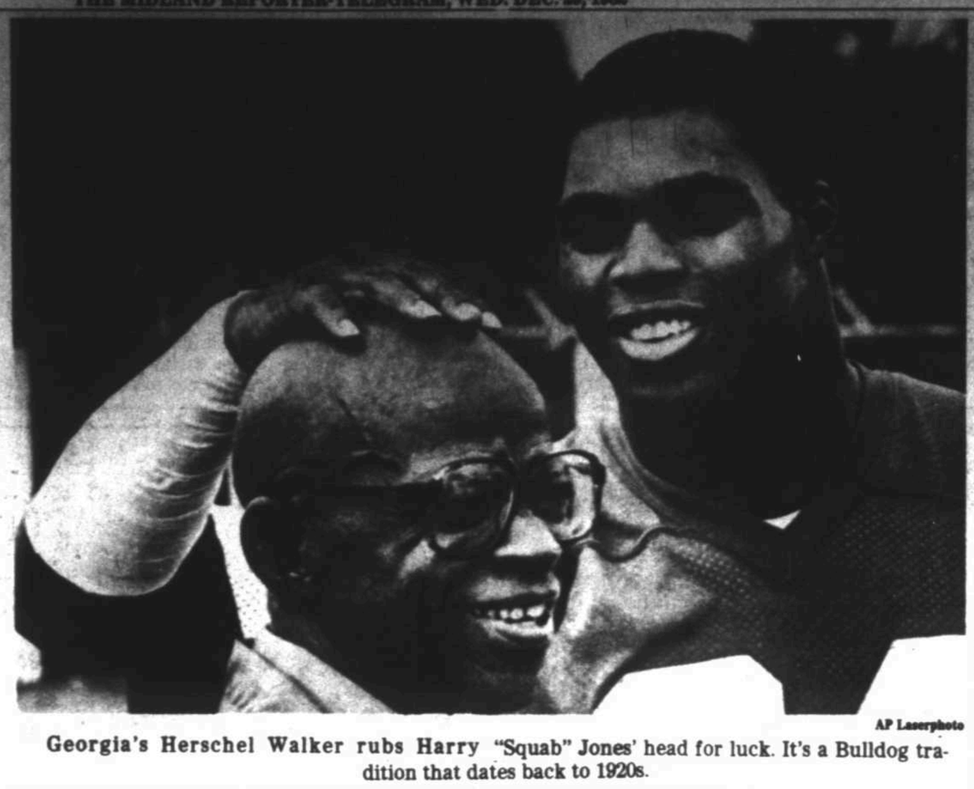

He said it was hard to judge which Georgia teams have been the best because players went both ways on the old days, but he finally said, "These last three years have to be the greatest teams." Georgia won the national championship in 1980, finished fifth after a Sugar Bowl defeat by Pittsburgh last year and is No. 1 right now.

But he said the once-defeated 1927 team has to be considered a contender for all-time best.

"They called it 'The Dream and Wonder Team,'" he said. "Georgia Tech beat us in the rain and mud. It was the first time all year that we had a wet game."

He extended the little finger of his left hand. "I'm going to get me one for this one this year," he said. "I never wore a ring until 1976. I told the coach, get me one, because I may not be around for the next one.

Landry not fond of Monday nights

And he's had a third of his National Football League strike-shortened regular season schedule on Monday nights this season.

Dallas is only 11-10 on Monday nights, and the Cowboys have another one in store next week in Minnesota.

"I don't relish coming back to Dallas at 3 a.m.," Landry said Tuesday.

Landry also doesn't like the idea of having to play on Monday night and losing preparation time for the first-round game of the National Conference playoffs on Jan. 9.

"It's tough coming off a Monday night, particularly if you have to travel, and getting ready to play again," Landry said. "The guys are tired for two days."

Dallas lost to Pittsburgh 36-28 in the Monday night season opener, but beat Houston 37-7 in another Monday night game.

Landry said the Cowboys would have to get their running game into high gear to beat the Vikings. Dallas has been having trouble spurring All-Pro tailback Tony Dorsett for long gains, and Dorsett has expressed dismay over not breaking a long one.

"Dorsett should be frustrated and I'm with him," Landry said. "When we look like that, anything I called could have been better. It's not hard to second-guess it."

KC Kings shock Celtics, 129-124

By Associated Press

When you play the Boston Celtics, you also play their tradition.

The Kansas City Kings were thinking about that when they took the court against the multiple National Basketball Association champions Tuesday night.

"At first our players may have been in awe of the Celtics," said Kansas City Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons.

But once they got over that awe, the Kings showed Boston something of their own, and whipped the proud Celtics 129-124.

"We changed some shots, but we weren't really intimidated. We shook out of it," Fitzsimmons said. "I thought the key was in the fourth quarter when we traded baskets with them. Every time they hit, we hit. That was a confidence builder."

FITZSIMMONS also said the Kings had an edge because they played Boston at home, where the Kings hosted an enthusiastic sellout crowd of more than 16,000.

Boston Coach Bill Fitch, who received two technicals and was ejected in the last seconds of the game, was unhappy with the officiating.

"I'm going to do plenty officially," Fitch said. "I'll tell you, whatever action a coach can take officially, I'll take it. We said the Kings would be tough to beat here. They don't need any help."

Bucks 113, Bulls 103

Sidney Moncrief, who scored 28 points and Marques Johnson, who had 27, combined for 18 in the fourth quarter to lift Milwaukee over Chicago.

Hawks 123, Clippers 113

Suns 116, Trail Blazers 94

Walter Davis and Larry Nance led a balanced Phoenix offense with 22 points apiece as the Suns rolled past Portland.

Maurice Lucas added 13 points and 10 rebounds as Phoenix won for the sixth time in its last nine games.

76ers 104, Rockets 93

Philadelphia's Julius Erving poured in 29 points and Moses Malone added 24 points and 17 rebounds as the 76ers whipped Houston.

NFL suspends Michael Jackson

SEATTLE (AP) — Michael Jackson, middle linebacker of the Seattle Seahawks, has been suspended for the National Football League team's season finale Sunday against Denver.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle took the action Tuesday because of a series of infractions, including striking an official. No fine is involved, but the suspension is expected cost Jackson a game check of about $5,000.

Jackson, speaking through club spokesman Gary Wright, said he would appeal the suspension but refused to comment further until after the appeal is heard.

Wright said he expected the 6-foot-1, 220-pound Jackson to fly to New York and "try to sit down and talk to the commissioner this week."

Coach Mike McCormack said the Seahawks would not join in the appeal.

"It's between Michael and the commissioner," McCormack said. "We feel that it is unfortunate, but the commissioner is certainly within his rights."

When asked if he felt Jackson's actions in home games against Chicago and New England were flagrant enough to warrant the suspension, McCormack replied:

"The commissioner did. I don't think I should discuss it until something is settled."

McCormack said Jackson "was disappointed. He never has been suspended before and he doesn't understand it."

It is the second suspension of a player this year for out-field action and the third in the history of the NFL. On Dec. 8, Rozelle suspended New York Jets linebacker Stan Blinka for one game, the Jets' 32-17 victory over Tampa Bay on Dec. 12, for a flagrant personal foul against Green Bay wide receiver John Jefferson two weeks earlier.

Rozelle's statement Tuesday said Jackson had been suspended "for a series of infractions, including striking a game official, two fights and several instances of unnecessary roughness and unsportsmanlike conduct during games with Chicago on Dec. 12 and New England on Dec. 19."

The incident involving head linesman Bob McLaughlin occurred in the first quarter of the New England game when Jackson struck him in the eye, "stunning him and causing the officating crew to work shorthanded for the next seven plays while McLaughlin recovered from the blow," the statement said.

New England won the game 16-0.

At the time, Jackson appeared to be celebrating an apparent fumble recovery. While flailing about, he struck McLaughlin.

Boxing Kid's dad doesn't fear injury

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Clarence Richard Adams II looks and acts like any other 8-year-old until he puts on boxing gloves and steps into the ring.

"Either he was made for boxing or boxing was made for him," says Richard Adams, the youngster's father.

There are some figures to back up the parental boast. "Bones," as the younger Adams is known to just about everyone, has had 35 amateur bouts in three years. He has lost but three.

Despite the bad publicity recently given professional pugilism, Richard Adams does not fear for his son's health when he steps into the ring.

"BOXING IS the safest sport, no matter what you hear," Adams said. "It's just been given bad publicity; things have been blown out of proportion.

"How many kids have you seen paralyzed from football? I'd rather have my kids boxing anytime."

Twice a week, Adams leaves his Henderson, Ky., home and takes Bones and his other son, 13-year-old "Tank," across the Ohio River to the Boxer's Den, an Evansville gym which is little more than a basement room.

RICE, AN Evansville police officer, won three local Golden Gloves titles and was undefeated in six pro bouts. His father, Garfield, was an Indiana lightweight champion.

Rice calls the young Adams, "extraordinary for his age. I haven't seen anyone as young as he is as good as he is."

Bones has also impressed crowds that have watched him from St. Louis to Memphis.

"People really take to him at the exhibitions," Adams said. "They love him. He's their darling."

In conversation, Bones is just your average 8-year-old. All that changes, however, when he enters the ring.

"He's a Jeckyll-and-Hyde," said his father. "His whole personality changes. He's all business."

His father is constantly on hand at ringside to watch over his sons. There is a white towel nearby.

"If I see him take a really hard punch or if I see he's scared, I'll throw it in."

Long punts may cause problem for Hawkeyes

ATLANTA (AP) — Reggie Roby's penchant for long punts may be a problem as well as a blessing for the Iowa senior, who leads the nation's college football punters with a 48.1-yard average going into Friday's Peach Bowl contest with Tennessee.

"He has a cannon for a leg," said Iowa coach Hayden Fry. But because Roby lacks some of the delicacy needed on shorter punts, Fry uses sophomore Tom Nichol inside the 50-yard line.

"Last year, I would kick into the sidelines, but it went so far the ref couldn't tell where it went out of bounds," said Roby. "So he would say it went into the end zone. I worked on that all last summer. Really, I can place it. No problem. Course, I'd rather kill it."

Roby has led the nation for two consecutive years. In 1981 his 49.8-yard average set a single-season NCAA record.

"Last year, I was highly upset," he said. "In my last punt, I needed the ball to roll one yard for a 50-yard average."

ROBY'S LOVE OF kicking goes back to his childhood in Waterloo, Iowa. At the age of six, he would stuff old detergent boxes in his jersey for shoulder pads and then kick rubber playground balls. When he managed to kick the ball over his house, he switched to footballs.

Roby said he spent hours after school practicing, even when snow covered the ground. "Some people might think that's senseless."

Rangers sign Larry Biittner, again

ARLINGTON (AP) — Larry Biittner, one of the original Texas Rangers, was signed as a free agent by the American League team Tuesday after he was released by the Cincinnati Reds of the National League.

He hit .10 at Cincinnati last year.

Biittner hit .259 in 1972 and .252 in 1973 for the Rangers before he was traded to Montreal.

Peeters notches 4th Bruin shutout

By Associated Press

Pete Peeters is worried that he may be overworking himself, but right now he doesn't look too worse for the wear.

Playing in his 28th game for Boston in goal this season, Peeters posted his league-leading fourth shutout to lead the Bruins to a 3-0 National Hockey League victory over the St. Louis Blues Tuesday night.

"I'm feeling great physically now," said Peeters, "but I've never played this many games in so short a time span before. I have to learn how to rest."

Peeters was only a part-time goalie for the Philadelphia Flyers in four previous seasons before coming to Boston in June. But the way he's been playing for the Blues this season, it's been hard for Coach Gerry Cheevers to keep him out of the lineup.

Peeters, who stopped 20 shots, recorded his 12th victory along with three ties in his last 15 starts and lowered his goals-against average to 2.38. It was the first time in 120 games — since April 4, 1981 — that the Blues had been shut out.

Defenseman Mike O'Connell gave Peeters all the cushion he needed when he beat St. Louis goalie Mike Liut with a short-handed goal nine minutes into the first period. O'Connell, getting his sixth goal of the season, has now scored in each of his last four games.

NHL ROUNDUP

Nordiques 4, Whalers 1

Michel Goulet and Wilf Paiement each collected one goal and an assist as Quebec sent Hartford to its fifth straight loss.

The Nordiques outshot the Whalers 45-25 and dominated throughout. Daniel Bouchard, the Quebec goaltender, lost a bid for his first shutout when Mike McDougal scored at 18:24 of the final period.

Jets 4, Canucks 4

Morris Lukowich scored from a wild scramble with two minutes remaining to rally Winnipeg into a tie with Vancouver.

The tying goal came after the Canucks twice squandered two-goal leads in the third period in which the Jets outshot them 19-7 and had many close-in chances on Vancouver goalie Richard Brodeur.

Capitals 6, Penguins 3

Glen Currie scored to break a third-period tie and then stole the puck to set up another goal by Gaetan Duchesne as Washington scored four times in the final period to beat Pittsburgh.

The Capitals, with one loss in their last 16 games, moved to within two points of first-place Philadelphia and the New York Islanders in the Patrick Division.

Flames 3, Black Hawks 2

A goal by Lanny McDonald at 15:56 of the third period led Calgary over Chicago. The goal, McDonald's second of the game, was his 34th of the season — a league high.

The victory, which stopped Chicago's six-game winning streak, lengthened the Flames unbeaten string to four — 3-0-1.

Maple Leafs 4, Canadiens 4

Defenseman Larry Robinson scored on a shot from the blue line at 15:28 of the final period to lift Montreal into a tie with Toronto.

Iowa nabs Peach 'spy'

ATLANTA (AP) — An unidentified photographer using a telephoto lens was ordered to leave Tuesday's practice session for the University of Iowa football team, which is completing preparations for the Peach Bowl.

The Hawkeyes are practicing behind closed gates at the Lovett Prep School for Friday's game against Tennessee, and Coach Hayden Fry has brought Johnson County Sheriff Gary Hughes from Iowa City to oversee security at the workouts.

But Fry joked frequently as he discussed the incident and said he did not consider the presence of the photographer to be a serious matter, saying the situation was "more fun than anything."

The photographer was spotted by one of Hughes' deputies, who was stationed on a roof near the practice field, Fry said.

"The guy had a telescopic lens that long," the Iowa coach said, holding his hands about two feet apart. "We ran the rascal out once for taking pictures and he went all the way around across the (Chattahoochee) river, where we saw him in the bushes."

Fry's oldest son, Randy, then was sent to block the photographer's exit and stopped the man as he was leaving.

"He was scared to death," Fry said of the photographer. "Randy asked him who he was making pictures for and he said, 'Oh, just for myself.' Then Randy said, 'What are you going to do with the pictures?'

"The guy said, 'I don't know. I haven't developed them yet.' Randy said, 'What were you shooting?' And the guy said, 'Just different things.'"

Fry said his son got the license number of the photographer's car, but the Iowa coach declined to reveal the state.

Iowa has conducted closed workouts ever since Fry became head coach four years ago. When the Hawkeyes played in the Rose Bowl last year, Fry took some university security officers with the team to keep people away from practice sessions.

Oklahoma Indians suddenly found themselves very rich

By BILL JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY — Oil and Indians always make interesting stories, and when you merge the two you have an unbeatable combination.

Take for example the Creek Indians who were relegated to what was believed to be the most worthless land in the Creek Nation, near Cushing.

It was under these dirt farms that Tom Slick discovered one of the nation's greatest pools of petroleum. As the Oklahoma Historical Society publication, "Drill Bits, Picks, and Shovels," puts it:

"Indians who previously had struggled to feed their families by farming the poor land suddenly found themselves rich. The allotment of Jackson Barnett produced $24 million worth of oil. Sarah Rector, the descendant of a Creek slave, was paid $300,000 for her property, and Denny Tucker, a black member of the Creek tribe, received a monthly oil royalty of $6,750."

All this occurred after Slick, who came to Oklahoma only one year earlier to seek fame and fortune, saw his dream come true on March 12, 1912, when crude spewed 40 feet above the derrick on the Frank Wheeler farm.

Slick tried to keep the find secret, and even went so far as to cap the well and spread fresh dirt on the pools of oil spilled by the gusher. And in an attempt to slow the efforts of the competition, he made cash deposits to reserve all the horses and buggies in Cushing.

The Cushing Field was yielding 23,000 barrels of oil per day by March 1913 before production from the shallow wells began to decline. But just as oilmen were beginning to believe the Cushing boom was over, the Prairie Oil and Gas Co. hit at 2,600 feet. The Bartlesville sand formation produced wells with an initial daily production of between 4,000 and 5,000 barrels and, at one point in 1914, was producing 160,000 barrels of oil/a day from 160 wells.

"The Cushing Field soon became the jewel of the Mid-Continent Region," the Historical Society publication stated. "It had the highest grade of oil found in large quantities west of the Mississippi River. By 1914 peak production was 21,945,000 barrels. Cushing's peak year was 1915 when 49,090,000 barrels of crude poured from the earth."

The other big Indian-oil story occurred on the Osage Reservation — what is now Osage County. Although some oil was found between 1900 and 1920, it was in May 1920 that the Marland Oil Co. completed its first well in what was to be the Burbank Field.

"Burbank's production was astounding," the publication states. "Some leases produced as much as 20,000 barrels per day per acre. ... The spectacular production of the Burbank Pool and the many other pools of Osage County resulted in extremely high prices for leases. One quarter-section was sold to the Marland Oil Co. for $1.99 million."

Since the Osage Agreement of 1906 had given the tribe control over its mineral rights, the Osage Nation grew richer with every new discovery and more than $1 million a year was going into the tribe's treasury by 1914.

The Osages originally had issued a blanket lease to Edwin B. Foster to search for oil on the reservation. The Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co. eventually bought the Foster rights, but the blanket lease policy was thrown out in 1915 by the Interior Department, opening the reservation to outside oilmen. As a result, the competition for leases pushed up the price so that by 1923 payments to the Osages reached $12,400 per headright.

Auctions of leases were held under a huge elm tree in Pawhuska, near the Osage Council House, which became known as the Million Dollar Elm. On one June afternoon in 1924, auctioneer E.E. Walters of Skeedee sold a total of $10.89 million worth of leases.

The third Indian story involved another early Oklahoma oil man, E.W. Marland, who later became governor. He had enjoyed some success in the Pennsylvania and West Virginia oil fields before going to Ponca City in 1906.

After drilling one dry hole, Marland was convinced there was oil on an elongated hill near Bois d'Arc Creek. But the site was sacred ground for the Ponca Indians, and Chief White Eagle opposed any violation by oilmen.

Marland enlisted the aid of George Miller, one of the brothers who owned the famous 101 Ranch and a man trusted by the Indians. Finally, White Eagle gave his permission for a well to be drilled on the slope of the hill, but not on the crest.

In June 1911, the No. 1 Willie Cries blew in, heralding the rush of oil men to Kay, Noble, Garfield and Grant counties.

Meadows Foundation tenders to Mesa

DALLAS (AP) — A charitable foundation holding 26.2 percent of the stock in General American Oil Co. of Texas has decided to tender its shares to Mesa Petroleum Co., but has not agreed to the terms of the offer.

Mesa has offered $40 a share for up to 51 percent of General American stock. General American is battling the takeover attempt with a counter offer of up to $50 a share for 8 million shares of outstanding common stock.

The Meadows Foundation Inc. announced Tuesday it would tender its more than 6.6 million shares to Mesa, an aggressive Amarillo-based oil production and exploration company.

But the foundation said its tender was not acceptance of the cash offer it called "inadequate." American General common stock closed Tuesday at $43 a share.

"The stock has been tendered, not sold," said J.W. Bullion, a Meadows Foundation trustee.

"The foundation reserves the right to withdraw its shares from the Mesa offer prior to the withdrawal deadline," the foundation said in a statement.

Analysts said the foundation's move was designed to insure it gets the most cash it can from Mesa if the company wins control of General American.

The Meadows Foundation, which doles out money to Texas charities, was set up by General American's founder, Algur H. Meadows.

Mesa, which earlier in the week filed a lawsuit asking a federal court in Delaware to block General American's counter offer, announced it has signed an agreement for $1 billion worth of financing to go ahead with the takeover attempt.

Earlier this year, Mesa failed in its attempt to take over Cities Service.

FNMA chief says $1.3 trillion in mortgage money needed

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Through the balance of this decade, $1.3 trillion — equal to half the total U. S. Gross National Product in 1980 — will be needed to finance homes for Americans, Federal National Mortgage Association chairman David O. Maxwell said in Washington recently.

If the financial community fails to meet the mortgage and other credit needs of ordinary citizens, he warned, "the genie of deregulation will be stuffed back in the bottle so fast it would make your head spin. And the new rules might well be worse than the old."

Maxwell also challenged the proposition that housing consumes too much captial in this country. Nothing that housing creates jobs and a crucial motivation for productivity, Maxwell asserted that, in fact, "Housing needs more capital, not less."

One of the major challenges confronting the financial community today, he said, is finding ways to satisfy that need. It was to begin that process, he explained, that Fannie Mae is today convening more than 250 leaders from the housing and mortgage industries, Wall Street and the government for a one-day think-tank session.

The conference is focusing on changes needed in the secondary mortgage market, where lenders obtain long-term funding for mortgages they originate. Maxwell said the secondary market now accounts for half the new funds provided annually to the mortgage market and that this heavy reliance will continue.

Traditionally, the secondary market has been comprised primarily of thrift institutions, buying and selling mortgages amongst themselves, and three government-charged entities: the Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA), an agency within the Department of Housing and Urban Development; the Federal Home Loan Bank System; and the Federal National Morgage Association, FNMA, (or Fannie Mae), a shareholder-owned corporation with residual federal regulatory ties.

Thirfts are now net sellers, rather than buyers, of mortgages, Maxwell said, and "there is no way FNMA, GNMA, and FHLMC can by themselves close the mortgage credit gap. Nor should they be the sole vehicles to get this job done.

"On the contrary," he said, "we should define the changes in law and regulation required to facilitate the development of a viable, privately financed secondary market." The secondary market, like the primary market before it, he said, must be deregulated, if it is to have the flexibility to meet American's diverse home finance needs.

Fannie Mae itself, Maxwell said, has committed a record amount of mortgage funds to the market this year — nearly $20 billion — and reduced its own losses by running its operations like a business.

"The point is that Fannie Mae cannot be successfully run for the benefit of one group of mortgage lenders or as an instrument of ever-changing national housing policy. Like federally chartered banks and thrifts, FNMA needs to be able to plan business strategies for years ahead. And yes, to provide even more robust, financially sound support for the housing market, Fannie Mae needs the ability to diversify. In sort, Fannie Mae needs deregulation, too. And, indeed, so does FHLMC."

Maxwell said GNMA's fate depends on that of the Federal Housing Administration, which insures some home mortgages. If FHA is maintained to serve the lower cost end of the housing market, GNMA would be needed to provide a secondary market for those loans. "I would think it very unwise, however," Maxwell said, "for either FHA or GNMA to expand beyond this limited mission."

The Federal National Mortgage Association, (NYSE) is a federally chargered, shereholder-owned corporation. The nation's largest single supplier of home mortgage funds, FNMA purchases mortgage loans from local lenders, thereby replenishing those institutions' supply of mortgage money.

Business continues as usual on the New York Stock Exchange floor yesterday after trading was halted from about 10:20 a.m. to 11 a.m. EST by a small smokey fire that forced evacuation of the trading floor. The fire, which resulted from welding outside the exchange, was extinguished and there were no injuries.

Dollar slips, gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar slipped slightly early today in quiet, post-holiday trading on European exchanges. Gold was little changed.

Dealers said the dollar's weakness was due to expectations of lower U.S. interest rates. On Tuesday, Chase Manhattan bank cut its prime rate half a percent to 11 percent.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day gets under way, the dollar fell for its seventh straight session, closing at 233.70 yen, compared with Tuesday's 235.50. Later in London, the dollar was quoted at 232.55 yen.

Cuts in windfall tax coming

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — U.S. Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., says significant cuts in the windfall profit tax on oil will come with the new year.

Effective Jan. 1, the tax will be reduced substantially on crude oil from small stripper wells and from newly discovered wells, Dole said, the Tulsa World's Washington bureau reported.

The tax relief was enacted in the 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act, but the effective date was delayed until 1983.

Also, just before the recent lame duck Congress session adjurned, it passed legislation to extend the royalty owner exemption to certain trust interests that had not previously been eligible.

Chase Manhattan cuts prime lending rate to 11 percent;

November building activity up as FHA mortgage rate falls

NEW YORK (AP) — Although no major banks quickly followed Chase Manhattan Bank in cutting the prime lending rate, economists expect Chase's 11 percent rate to spread.

Chase cut its rate by one-half percentage point Monday, establishing the lowest prime rate since August 1980.

It was the first reduction in the prime rate since major banks adopted an 11.5 percent rate on Nov. 22.

The prime is the base upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term business loans.

David Jones, an economist at the investment firm Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., said the big banks are reluctant to follow because they want to protect their profits from exposure to problem loans to foreign nations.

U.S. bankers are "penalizing their domestic customers for their banks' own mistakes in loaning money to foreign customers," Jones said. "Major banks are dragging their feet," he said. "They prefer a very wide margin between lending rates and the cost of money, to cushion themselves."

BUILDING UP

NEW YORK (AP) — A new survey says building activity spurted in November as mortgage interest rates fell.

The value of newly started construction surged 16 percent to a 19-month high of $12.9 billion in November, the F.W. Dodge Division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. said Tuesday.

Its seasonally adjusted index of contracting for new construction rose to 122 in November, its highest level since the 123 recorded in April 1981. The index, which stood at 100 in 1977, fell to 105 in October from 117 in September.

"Both one-family and multifamily housing rose sharply in November as the decline of mortgage rates accelerated," said George A. Christie, chief economist at Dodge. Interest rates on conventional home mortgages fell from 17 percent in August to 14.5 percent, and Christie said there is "still more room for mortgage rates to fall."

The value of residential building rose 12 percent in November, although the value of residential construction started in the first 11 months of the year was down 6 percent from a year earlier.

DEFICIT UP

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's budget planners are at loggerheads over strategies to prevent the federal deficit from hitting $200 billion.

The problem is that all the choices — higher taxes, cuts in Social Security and military spending, further reductions in previously pared social programs or simply accepting a $200 billion deficit — are either politically unacceptable to Congress or philosophically unacceptable to President Reagan, officials said. They discussed the quandary on condition that their names not be used.

"I think the big boss doesn't want to face reality," complained one official, who described budget planners as "depressed and despairing."

A third official groused that Reagan had yet to decide on a strategy for dealing with Congress.

Gulf changes oil team

Gulf Oil Corporation has announced organizational changes in its U. S. Exploration structure that have resulted in realignment of Gulf's exploration organization and management in Midland.

In Houston, Gulf Oil Exploration & Production Company announced that existing Exploration Areas were eleminated on December 1 and that two new positions and organizational units were created. They are Manager — Exploration Studies and Manager — Exploration Operations.

"These positions reflect a change in organizational structure from one with a geogeraphic context to one emphasizing tasks, projects, and results," the announcement said.

The intent, Gulf said, is creation of a structure that "will be capable of implementing the strategy of U. S. Exploration and respond to the changing technical and economic environment."

Ward and Nordling have been, respectively, senior staff geologist and eastern Area Exploration manager in Midland.

Continuing in their respective positions under Woodard are George Puscas, manager - Production Geology; James J. Storrie, Manager -Production Geology; James J. Storrie, manager - Technical, and David H. Messer, Manager - Land.

Creation of the new exploration studies and operations units will maximize flexibility to permit the fullest utilization of individual capabilities and promote career development, the Gulf announcement said. Emphasis will be on staffing the units with combinations of explorationists including geologists, geophysicists, and land agents.

"The best way for a self-employed person to save up to $15,000 in the next 1 days."

If you work for yourself, then you have until Friday, December 31 to open a KEOGH account at First National.

That's only 1 banking day away.

If you act now, you can designate up to $15,000 (or 15% of this year's earned income, whichever is less) without paying taxes on it until you retire.

Best of all, your contribution doesn't have to be paid until you file your 1982 tax return. For most, that meant April 15, 1983, and not a second sooner.

Maybe you planned to open a KEOGH account this year but just never got around to it.

Stores don't usually suffer after-Christmas blues

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After-Christmas shopping is often thought to be reserved for four different types of people.

There are those dreaded, cranky customers who annually barter gifts at the wrong stores in hopes of obtaining a nicer item at little or no cost.

There are the hordes of giggling teen-agers who surge into stores to spend the money carefully divided between nieces and nephews by those second whatevers on dad's side.

After-Christmas shoppers also include those pushing, flustered folks who face-mask anyone who gets in their way around the sale rack. Frustrated partly because that's their nature and partly because the sizes they tried on were pre-Christmas sizes, they realize that the best bargain buys are in a size too small for them following the fattening holiday feasts.

And finally, there are the totally mysterious and much-misunderstood people who calmly crosses from store to store in peaceful perusal, serenely studying their next-Christmas lists, tranquil in the knowledge that if they don't complete their organized shopping today, they still have over 300 days to find the perfect present, buy and wrap it (in the half-price Christmas paper recently purchased) to be placed with the other neatly labeled packages in the closet.

SWAPPING SIZES, using gift certificates and buying simply because of a sale have one thing in common, according to the merchants. They all get people into the stores.

And while those who dared to venture into shops this week may have found them less crowded than expected, Midland merchants at a few stores randomly contacted by The Midland Reporter-Telegram seemed pleased with their business.

"The first (shopping) day after (Christmas), Monday, we were busier than last year's first day after," Gordon Young, general manager at Peyton's Toys on Michigan Avenue, said Tuesday. "There are a few exchanges but it still brings people into the store. And you're still comparing like figures to like figures because last year we had exchanges too."

According to Young, after-holiday trade also includes quite a bit of new business. "There are children who get a lot of dollars for Christmas — and they're still interested in toys."

"We've done a lot of exchanging and returning, but people also are in here buying," Bill Warner, manager of Dillard's at Midland Park Mall, agreed. "Only after one day, we had a real good increase over last year's first day. And then after today, it looks like we're having another increase. Business is good. There are always a lot of people in here exchanging and returning — but they're buying as well."

AT J.E. Borron's on Colorado Avenue, the after-holiday sale begins following New Year's. But that doesn't seem to deter customers from coming into the store.

"We've been pretty busy, actually," Borron explained. "There are exchanges and then there are people in here buying with the money they received for Christmas."

"I can tell you that the people in the shop have been swamped," said Mike Williford, an employee of Ski Skellar Sports in La Villita shopping center. "We've been pretty busy. I was here last year and we were busy then too."

Although not very many exchanges or refunds take place at the store, Williford said that other areas, such as ski rentals, have kept business booming before and after the holidays.

"We are rented up totally for the New Year's weekend — like we were for the Christmas weekend."

At Radio Shack in Plaza Shopping Center, manager Bill Conner said the situation is similar to the way it has been during previous years — good. "Business is about the same. Last year was so big that it's kind of what we've been comparing it to, but over an average of the last six years, I'd say it's been above that."

"WE HAVEN'T HAD near what we thought we would," Robbie Hamm, manager of Butler's at Midland Park Mall, said about exchanges. "We've had very little brought back for return of money. Wrong sizes have been exchanged basically. There was one woman that had bought a pair of boots for herself and then her husband gave her a pair too. She came in and said that she liked hers more and wanted to return the others."

At Williams Jewelry and Gifts in San Miguel Square, post-Christmas trade rarely consists of exchanges. According to employee Stephen Badcon, most of the jewelry sold is customized for the customer, "so people usually order what they really want.

"After Christmas trade is usually sizing of the items they receive, like rings and that type of thing. But we love those people who get Christmas bon-

After-Christmas receiving

Although returning and exchanging merchandise received for Christmas can sometimes be a hassle, most store managers don't mind because it gets people into the shops. Glen Ragland, pictured here, returns a pair of ski boots at Oshman's Sporting Goods, Inc., in Midland Park Mall, because of a defect in the boots.

Cosmos spawning lunar phenomenon early Thursday

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

If cosmic phenomena spawn a sense of wonder within your soul, rise a little early Thursday — say 3:30 a.m. — and watch the shadow of the earth crawl across the face of the moon until it is consumed.

It's a lunar eclipse, an event which will not be seen again in Texas until Aug. 16, 1989, and unlike its solar counterpart when permanent eye damage can be wrought, no protective glasses need be donned.

"You don't need any special precautions," said Dr. Harlan Smith, director of famed McDonald Observatory atop Mount Locke in the Davis Mountains. "It is nice to have a pair of binoculars or small telescope to watch the craters and mountains go out and come back in."

The craters and lunar seas will begin to disappear at 3:50 a.m. and will be completely obliterated for 31 minutes beginning at 4:58 a.m. Even at its darkest, however, the moon will glow copperish due to a meteorological condition a quarter of a million miles away on earth — volcanic ash in the atmosphere.

"The basic notion is, just as the sun casts your shadow when you're out walking, the earth throws a shadow out in space," said Smith. "As the moon orbits around the earth, occasionally it goes through the earth's shadow. That happens two or three times a year. When it does happen, the moon of course darkens, and we call it a lunar eclipse."

The earth's shadow is approximately twice the diameter of the moon at the point where the satellite passes through it, he explained, which accounts for the fact that a lunar eclipse lasts several hours.

"Even when the moon is in the center of the earth's shadow, it's not fully dark," said Smith. "Bending or refracting of light around the edge of the earth through the atmosphere brings some of the sunlight within the earth's shadow."

The moon appears as coppery red, he said, because blue light's short wavelength spells its doom in the long path through the atmosphere, while the long wavelength of red light allows it to penetrate better. "It's the only thing left to get to the moon," explained the longtime lecturer and author. "And in

Joe Golding Jr., Midland Independent School District trustee and local businessman, discusses memories of his father, who served as football coach of Wichita Falls High School from 1946-1961. Golding and his sister were recognized in festivities during the 1982 Pioneer Bowl, dedicated to their father, earlier this month.

Father's drive has been son's inspiration

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

They called him Marse Joe, but not to his face.

On Dec. 18, about 300 of his former players, along with the Wichita Falls community, gathered for the 1982 Pioneer Bowl to watch Eastern Kentucky University and the University of Delaware play in the stadium that Marse Joe was responsible for getting built. The game was dedicated to him.

His son, Midland Independent School District trustee and local businessman Joe Golding Jr., and daughter, Patricia Blancett of Garland, were presented a plaque and attended parades and parties in honor of their father, who died in July 1979.

Golding's coaching record in the decade in which he reigned over football in Wichita Falls and much of the state was 154-24-2. It included a bi-district championship in 1957, state finals in 1959 and 1960, and state championships in 1958 and 1961. In 1949, he was named Texas High School Coach of the Year and was inducted into the Texas High School Coaches Hall of Fame in 1968.

"He was a brilliant man and his life was devoted to football," Golding said of his father. "We had a film room in our house. He'd come in and watch films until 2 or 3 a.m. He never showed emotion — sort of like Tom Landry. He would set up a metal fold-out chair on the 50-yard line and he rigged up a telephone in 1951 on the sidelines up to the spotters' box. He didn't rant or rave. He'd just sit there and talk on the phone."

In 1961, Rider High School was built and administrators asked Golding to serve as athletic director over both schools, while remaining as head coach of WFHS.

"He thought that would have been unethical, coaching at one and being A.D. over both," Golding remembered. "So he quit. He would say kids are changing, and the times are changing and that he couldn't coach the same way he had before. He said that over and over."

But he was a man of dreams and when he left the field, he constructed new ones.

"He'd accomplished everything he could accomplish so then he had to set some new goals," Golding said. Due to his father's efforts, the first high school stadium with astroturf in the United States was built in Wichita Falls.

"The loyalty my father had is what I admire the most," Golding said. When the stadium was built, he said his father made sure that a 2,500-square-foot living area was included for the caretaker, Clyde Graves, who had been with the senior Golding throughout his coaching career.

Golding, who sits in his office at his clothing store under framed photographs and newspaper articles about his father and of the stadium, said his father died shortly after the tornado which swept through Wichita Falls in 1979 heavily damaged the stadium.

"That's what really killed him," he said. "That's what hit him really bad, was seeing that stadium go down."

But it went back up, and so did the memories of the coach during the Pioneer Bowl.

"I think Daddy would have been a success at whatever he did," Golding said.

State highway officials happy with funding cut

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas highway officials are pleasantly surprised that the state's share of federal highway funds will double next year, but say they still will seek a $5.7 billion, two-year appropriation from the 1983 Legislature.

The federal windfall for Texas' roads was produced last week when the U.S. Congress, meeting in a lame-duck session, approved a 5-cent-a-gallon federal gas tax increase.

Texas' congressional delegation even managed to win a guarantee of an 85 percent return on every transportation dollar Texas sends to Washington. Texas' return before was about 70 cents on the dollar.

Nevertheless, highway officials said Tuesday they are sticking by their state budget request, already pared by the Legislative Budget Board to $3.1 billion for the biennium.

When the new federal gasoline tax goes into effect on April 1, Texas will get about $750 million for fiscal 1983. In 1984, the figure goes up to about $850 million.

Deputy Engineer-Director Henry Pearson said Texas had been doing about $400 million worth of business with the federal government yearly.

"It will be a doubling of the program, and we didn't really expect that," he said. "But I don't think it will affect our state budget request any, because our budget request is irregardless of the type of funds we get."

Highway officials say a big boost in federal funds does not mean a corresponding drop in the state's budget request because of a "backlog" of projects on the department's "20-year" plan.

Highway funding will be one of the biggest spending issues when the Legislature convenes on Jan. 11, already facing the unhappy proposition of voting the first state tax increase in 12 years.

Highways share with public education in a 5-cent Texas gas tax. Some legislators have suggested raising the levy, as well as vehicle title and license fees which go to build and repair roads. A tax on car repair work also has been proposed.

Few argue with the highway department's case for the state's rapidly deteriorating roads. Designed to last 12 to 20 years, most are closer to 30 years old, and the state's phenomenal growth rate has only added to an already bad situation.

The department has predicted it will need $60 billion over the next 20 years to maintain the current highway system and build needed new roads.

Greeks wondering what amensty's effects will be

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

ATHENS, Greece — Ilias Alevras, 70, is Greek, but he has spent the past 33 years in Romania as a political exile.

The mild-spoken Alevras is a Communist, one of the tens of thousands who fled to the East Bloc after the bloody 1946-49 civil war in which the conservatives, back by the Western allies, won charge of Greece's post-war political fortunes. Since then, the Communist exiles, stripped of Greek citizenship and largely barred from returning, have come to symbolize political discrimination in Greek life.

Now, under a mass amnesty declared over Christmas by Premier Andreas Papandreou, Alevras and an estimated 35,000 political refugees like him can recover their citizenship, simply by filling out a form, and come home.

Whether they will choose to do so, and whether their return will rekindle the bitter but dormant passions of the civil war are questions being raised by Papandreou's action.

The Socialist's choice of Christmas for the amnesty move has caused the conservative New Democracy opposition party to accuse Papandreou of attempting to distract the electorate from Greece's economic problems.

The unspoken implication is that Papandreou is at the same time trying to curry favor with the modern-day Communist Party, whose support he needs if his austerity program for 1983 is to succeed.

New Democracy, in contrast with all the left-of-center opposition parties, had also criticized Papandreou's prompt post-election step last year to recognize formally the outlawed Communist groups that had spearheaded wartime anti-Nazi resistance. Most of the political exiles belonged to these groups.

The elderly Alevras is one refugee who intends to take advantage of the amnesty. "Yes, I will definitely come back. I've spoken to other friends in Romania over the phone and this is an occasion of relief and joy for all of us," he said in an interview on Greek state radio. He was in Athens for Christmas under a special law that, since 1974, has permitted some exiles to visit.

Alevras added, "We have suffered a lot. We have been able to keep the Greek language alive and teach it to our children thanks to special schools. But Romanian customs and traditions are very different from ours. We have been intensely homesick."

However, the image of waves of still dedicated — if nostalgic — Communists flooding back to Greece, which is troubling to some, may not materialize.

Older exiles like Alevras face the issue of pension and other social security payments, which they currently get from their host countries. These countries, especially the Soviet Union, where the largest Greek-exile community is found, are reluctant to spend valuable foreign exchange to keep up these payments to expatriates.

Papandreou has suggested that the Greek state could undertake this expense, receiving an equivalent value of imports from these countries. By that formula, Athenians could come to owe a renewal of their Hungarian-built bus fleet to the return of the Communist refugees. But no agreement has yet been reached.

Housing and employment will also pose a problem — particularly at a time when the ranks of the Greek unemployed, like those elsewhere, are growing.

Without advance arrangements on these practical issues, life in the home country can be bleak, as some exiles found on returning under a case-by-case statute introduced by the New Democracy government that followed the 1973 collapse of the colonels' junta.

A second-generation political exile, Lambros Koumantanos, 26, said on the radio show, "I came back to Greece in 1978, from Poland. I was an art student there. But since I got back I've had to work at any kind of odd job just to survive.

"I always felt I had to come back to Greece, that this is my country. But the government now should be aware of the practical problems and try to help resolve them," he added in heavily accented but correct Greek, learned in Poland.

If and when the Communists do come back, few observers foresee a large-scale revival of civil war hatreds.

Political analysts note that the conservatives attacked Papandreou for the allegedly demagogic style and timing of his amnesty rather than the actual decision to let the exiles return. They also stressed that the process had started under the New Democracy administration.

These observers agree that the most immediate and tangible result of Papandreou's gesture is, rather, the unanimous praise that it drew from all the left-wing opposition parties, most importantly the Communist, which through its power in the trade unions holds the key to labor cooperation in Socialist Greece.

Minister returns to jail after drug charges arrest

ODESSA — An Odessa minister and civil rights activist out on bond for burglary charges in Monahans last month was in the Odessa city jail today on drug charges.

Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore set bond of $10,000 on 45-year-old Lawrence Charles Hurd of 4590 N. Texas Ave.

Hurd, head of a southside Odessa church and leader of the Odessa civil rights group CRUCIAL, was arrested Monday after he allegedly tried to sell cocaine to an undercover Odessa narcotics officer, according to police.

CRUCIAL has been active in local civil rights activities, most prominently in the desegregation of the Odessa school system. A police spokesman in Monahans today said Hurd was arrested in that city Nov. 22 on charges of burglarizing a Monahans business establishment and was freed on $5,000 bond.

Odessa explosion caused by gas connection leak

ODESSA — The cause of an explosion and fire that killed an elderly Odessa couple early Tuesday morning has been listed as a leaking connection on a natural gas pipe leading to a bathroom heater, fire officials said today.

The couple, 80-year-old Henry J. Cunningham and his wife, 75-year-old Lelia L. Cunningham, died when an explosion ripped through their wood-frame home at 3812 Melody Lane shortly after 5 a.m. Tuesday.

Odessa Fire Marshal Wayne Coggins said this morning the leaking connection apparently allowed gas to accumulate and explode in the bathroom.

A few days earlier, according to Coggins, the couple had smelled gas in the house and a different line leading to a wall heater was replaced.

Body found in grave

ODESSA — The decomposing body of a young woman found in a shallow grave in far northeast Ector County Nov. 30 has been identified as that of 18-year-old Blanca Arreolla Guerreo of Odessa.

Identification was made by a forensic dentist in Dallas, according to police, who said the woman was three months pregnant at the time of her death and was last seen getting into a pickup truck at the Albertson's Super Market parking on East 8th Street lot May 17.

An anonymous caller tipped police to where the body was buried. Police said today no cause of death could be definitely established and that an investigation is continuing.

Sketchy reports indicate rape

A woman was raped in rural Midland County late Tuesday afternoon, according to sketchy reports from the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

A news release from the department today said the woman was forced into a car in the city limits about 4:30 p.m. and taken to a location on Cottonflat Road five miles outside the city, where the rape allegedly occurred.

She was then driven back to town and released. No other information was provided.

uses," he added, laughing.

Another business that does little exchanging after, or before, Christmas is Jerry's Perfect Pet Shop in the mall. According to assistant manager Angie De Lof Reyes, although several people have tried to return merchandise, most of the items are non-refundable.

"Believe it or not, we have had some people try to return puppies," she said. "They'll get them home and find out that they are a little more active than they thought and think that they'd rather have something that just laid around."

But has anyone who received a surprise gift consisting of a bounding ball of fluffiness that looks at them adoringly with big eyes actually tried to trade it in?

"Not after Christmas, no."

Sky watchers be prepared for lunar eclipse Thursday

Smith said that unlike solar eclipse, lunar eclipses offer virtually no opportunities for scientific study with instrumentation. "There are two exceptions to that," he noted, "(undertaken) by two or three scientists around the world: to see how bright the moon is during the eclipse because that is a very crude measure of what the earth's atmosphere is doing, and...to use infrared or short-wave radio to map parts of the moon before, during and after the eclipse by measuring how quickly the different parts of the lunar surface cool off and heat up when sunlight strikes it again. This, in turn, gives some information about the nature of the surface, but it's not very sensitive."

Smith, who hopes to have the 300-inch primary mirror for what would be the world's largest telescope on order next year, said that in historic folklore, a lunar eclipse has not been as terrifying an event as the sudden death of the sun. "The sun, it's obvious, was very important to every group of people, and if it disappeared they believed the world was ending," he said. "But the moon, to them, was just a pretty object, and even if it went out it wouldn't have affected their lives much."

The Holiday Sandwich Wreath is not only easy to prepare and adds a festive touch to your New Year's party, but allows the hostess a chance to enjoy her guests' company as well as the food.

Make Sandwich Wreath for easier entertaining

Sometimes it seems that no sooner are the presents opened, the turkey cut and the dishes cleaned from Christmas than it's time to start planning for yet another holiday — New Year's Eve. For many of us, New Year's parties are as much a part of the holiday tradition as mistletoe and holly. Whether the first party of the New Year will be for a large group or just a few close friends, your concern will probably be for creative yet simple entertaining. If this is the case, the Holiday Sandwich wreath will prove to be a true ally to you.

For all its beauty, the Sandwich Wreath is easy to prepare and it's as delightful to the palate as it is to the eye. It doubles as an attractive centerpiece as well as a scrumptuous appetizer. By simply alternating party rye and pumpernickel sandwiches filled with delicious sreads of deviled ham, liver pate and chicken salad you get the contrast necessary to create a decorative wreath. Just place the mini sandwiches upright in a circle and then add a bright satin bow for the festive finishing touch. And best of all, the Holiday Sandwich Wreath can be prepared well in advance of your party.

The Holiday Sandwich Wreath is a tasty and equally beautiful beginning to your New Year's festivities and while entertaining family and friends, it gives you an opportunity to enjoy your company as well as the food.

HOLIDAY SANDWICH WREATH

Deviled Spread

1 can (4-1/2 oz.) deviled ham
1/4 cup chopped celery
1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 loaf (8 oz.) party pumpernickel bread slices
Softened butter

Chicken Apple Spread

1 can (4-3/4 oz.) chicken sread
1/4 cup chopped apple
1 tablespoon sour cream
1 loaf party rye bread slices
Softened butter

Nippy Pate Spread

1 can (4-3/4 oz.) liverwurst spread
1/4 cup chopped green pepper
1 tablespoon mayonnaise
1 loaf (8 oz.) party rye bread slices
Softened butter

Combine first three ingredients in each of the three recipes. Spread bread slices with softened butter. Spread half of bread slices with meat spread mixture; close sandwich with remaining slices. Each recipe makes 10 sandwiches. To form wreath, on a large round plate arrange sandwiches around the edge of plate. Decorate wreath with a satin or paper bow. Wreath contains 30 small sandwiches.

New Year's resolution: Try new recipes

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

The ball has dropped in Times Square, toasts and proclaimers alike have been toasted, confetti is still settling, and thus we introduce ourselves to the bright promise of a brand-new year.

Ever since the ancient Egyptians celebrated their "new year" when the Nile overflowed its banks each June, this special time of past, present and future rubbing shoulders is marked by cultures worldwide, an occasion bathed in countless traditions.

Janus, two-faced god of early Rome, ruled the new year with double vision. One pair of eyes gazed forward into an unknown future as the other pair kept tabs on the past. He moonlighted as god of gates and doors, beginnings and endings. The Persians of old were also ones to appreciate the significance of a fresh start by bestowing gifts of eggs in honor of a new life hatching.

IN OLD ENGLAND people took to the custom of having their chimneys cleaned on New Year's Day, the philosophy of which Americans adopted by creating the adage, "Wipe the slate clean." Thanks to England's sooty flues, we now "wipe our slates" each New Year in the form of New Year's resolutions. These little promissory notes to ourselves, whether champagne inspired or formed by thoughtful introspection, are individual efforts to better the times ahead.

One such change for the better could be to plunge into the unknown via untried recipes. The humble kitchen can set an exciting stage for palate-broadening experiences. Daring a new recipe once a week is a fun way to widen horizons and adhere to a resolution more pleasant to keep than a three-week starvation diet.

Here are some recipes to take you through January on your resolution for 1983:

HAMBURGER NESTS

2 tbsps. butter or margarine
1/4 cup onion, chopped
1/2 green pepper, chopped
1 lb. lean ground beef
2 cups soft bread crumbs
Salt and pepper to taste
1 tbsp. prepared mustard
Milk
1/4 cup cereal crumbs
4 small eggs
1/4 cup shredded Swiss cheese

Preheat browning skillet in microwave 2 1/2 minutes. Place butter, onion and green pepper in skillet and cook 1 minute, stirring once. Mix with beef, bread crumbs and seasonings. Form meat mixture into four doughnut-shaped rings about 4 inches in diameter. Brush with milk, coat with cereal crumbs. (If you chill the rings they will hold their shapes better, but this is optional.)

Arrange hamburger nests in greased shallow baking dish. Cook in microwave 2 minutes. Rotate dish one-quarter turn, cook 2 minutes more. Break an egg into each nest (be sure to pierce yolk); top with cheese. Cook in microwave 3 to 4 minutes till eggs reach desired doneness. Let stand 2 to 3 minutes. Serve with shredded lettuce and pickle garnish. Serves 4.

PILAF

1 cup chopped onion
1 cup chopped celery
1 tsp. rosemary, crushed
1/2 tsp. curry powder
1/4 cup vegetable oil
4 chicken bouillon cubes
4 cups boiling water
1 cup cracked wheat (bulgur)
1/4 cup seedless raisins
1/4 cup dried apricots, chopped
3 tbsps. butter or margarine
3/4 cup long grain rice, cooked
1 tbsp. sugar

Place vegetables, seasonings and oil in 2-quart casserole. Cook 7 minutes in microwave. Add bouillon cubes and water. Cook 2 minutes. Stir in cracked wheat, cook 7 minutes. Add raisins, dried fruit and butter, mix to distribute fruit. Cover and cook 5 minutes. Stir in cooked rice and sugar. Let stand covered for 15 minutes. Fluff mixture with fork before serving. Serves 6 to 8.

WELSH RAREBIT

1 cup beer
1 tbsp. butter or margarine
1 lb. sharp cheddar cheese, grated
1 egg, beaten
1/2 tsp. dry mustard
1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. paprika
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
Dash cayenne

Pour beer into 2 quart casserole; add butter. Cook 2 minutes in microwave. Stir in cheese. Cook, covered, 2 minutes. Stir. Cook 1 minute more. Blend egg with seasonings and stir into cheese mixture with wire whisk. Cook 1 to 1 1/2 minutes. Stir well before serving over hot buttered toast. Serves 6.

APRICOT BAKED CHICKEN

1 fryer (3 lbs.), cut up
1/4 cup bottled Russian dressing
2 tbsps. mayonnaise
1/2 cup apricot preserves
1/2 envelope dry onion soup mix

Arrange chicken pieces in 2-quart oblong baking dish, placing thickest pieces around edge of dish. Mix remaining ingredients together and spread over chicken, being careful to coat each piece. Cover with wax paper. Cook 20 minutes in microwave until fork tender, turning dish around after 10 minutes. Let stand 5 minutes, covered. Serve over noodles. Serves 4.

Bananas are healthy food

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

A growing concern of nutritionists is the lack of fiber in our average diet. Too little, they believe, can be a contributing factor in intestinal problems.

Increasing your fiber intake doesn't mean a radical change in your eating habits. One excellent source is the mellow banana, a favorite of people of all ages.

Fiber is the part of whole grains, fruits and vegetables that resists digestion. Because we eat so much refined and processed food, we miss the amount of fiber we need to function normally.

Bananas are healthy in other ways. The contain a high supply of potassium and are rich in vitamins. They also provide the iron essential in building red blood cells.

Most important perhaps, bananas are 99.8 percent fat free and contain no cholesterol, an important factor for those of us who indulge in such high cholesterol foods as eggs, butter, heavy cream and fatty meats.

Even though the banana is said to be the No. 1 fruit in North America, it is not grown commercially in the United States or Canada. Latin America supplies the bulk of the fruit, but its roots trace back to Asia. The Malay Peninsula is generally regarded as the birthplace, and it is believed to have been the most ancient of fruits.

Cultivation of the banana spread to the Middle East and eventually to Africa. Then, as European explorers ventured to the New World, they brought bananas with them. They were a rarity in the United States before the late 19th century, however, because sailing ships were not fast enough to ship them here before the cargo spoiled.

The completion of a Central American railroad and the dominance of the steamship finally brought the banana to our shores. Today 13.5 billion bananas are consumed each year by Americans, but medical experts still feel we should eat more during our meals to get the needed fiber.

One dish recommended by health specialists consists of stir-fry carrots, and bananas sprinkled with raisins. Here's the recipe:

3 tablespoon butter or margarine
3 medium carrots, pared and thinly sliced
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1/4 teaspoon ginger
3 firm bananas, cut into 1/2-inch slices
1/4 cup raisins

Melt butter or margarine in a large skillet. Add carrots and cook over medium heat until crisp-tender, 5 to 10 minutes. Blend in lemon juice, brown sugar and ginger. Add bananas and raisins and cook until just heated through. Yields 4 servings.

Buttermilk versatile for baking

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

After cream has been churned in the process of making butter, the liquid that remains is termed buttermilk. This residue of almost fat-free cream has some surprising benefits for bakers and imbibers alike.

Back when most households churned their own butter, the fresh buttermilk was saved to drink and also to bake with. When the milk soured slightly and thickened, due to lack of refrigeration and a bacteria naturally present in the milk, cooks using the sour buttermilk found their baked goods turned out lighter and of a better consistency.

Today, sour buttermilk is manufactured commercially by adding a lactic-acid-producing bacteria, or starter. Cultured buttermilk is pasteurized skim milk to which a starter is added, and allowed to sour until curdling occurs.

What was a baking secret of, and a mystery to, early American bakers, is now common sense to today's dairy scientists. When buttermilk is used for baking, the acid content of the milk enhances the leavening action of yeast or alkaline baking soda when combined. Also, natural emulsifiers in the milk, called phospholipids, help to mix shortening with the batter and disperse it evenly through the batter.

POWDERED BUTTERMILK is also available on the market and is covenient for use in baking. To use buttermilk powder in recipes that call for regular milk, use 4 tablespoons buttermilk powder and 1 cup water to replace each cup of milk. But remember to decrease baking powder by 2 teaspoons and add ½ teaspoon baking soda in your recipe to provide correct proportions and allow buttermilk to react with the soda to create leavening.

Whether you prefer the processed powder, cartons of buttermilk from your supermarket, or churning it yourself, buttermilk lends a hand in the vegetarian kitchen.

BUTTERMILK BRAID

2 pkgs. dry yeast
½ cup warm water
6 tbsps. shortening
2 tbsps. sugar
2 tsps. salt
1½ cups buttermilk
3 eggs (reserve 1 yolk)
7 cups unbleached flour

In a small bowl, dissolve yeast in warm water and add a pinch ofsugar. Do not stir. Let stand 10 minutes. In large bowl combine shortening, sugar, salt, room-temperature buttermilk, eggs (reserve one yolk) and 3½ cups of flour. Stir in softened yeast and mix well. Add enough remaining flour to make dough that is soft and easy to handle. Knead on floured board 5 to 10 minutes until dough is smooth and elastic. Cover and let rise until doubled. Punch down and divide into 3 parts. Divide each third into 3 parts, rolling each piece into a long strand. Braid into 3 loaves, pinch ends together and tuck under. Place each braided loaf into a greased bread pan. Mix reserved egg yolk with 1 tablespoon cold water and brush tops of loaves. Cover and let rise until doubled. Bake at 375 F 45 to 50 minutes until golden brown. Makes three loaves.

To use buttermilk powder, add 6 tablespoons buttermilk powder to flour mixture. Substitute 1½ cups water for the 1½ cups liquid buttermilk.

APPLE BREAD

2¼ cups unbleached flour
½ tsp. baking soda
1¾ tsps. baking powder
¼ tsp. salt
1 tsp. cinnamon
½ cup butter or margarine
1½ cups sugar
2 eggs
1 cup buttermilk
2 cups apples, peeled, cored and chopped
1 cup nuts, chopped

Preheat oven to 350 F. Sift together flour, baking soda, baking powder, salt and cinnamon. In a separate bowl, cream butter and sugar until fluffy. Beat eggs until foamy and add to butter mixture. Beat thoroughly. Add dry ingredients and buttermilk alternately, starting and ending with dry ingredients. Do not overbeat — beat only until smooth. Fold in chopped apples and nuts. Pour into two greased and floured bread pans. Bake 50 to 55 minutes, or until loaves test done with a toothpick. Let cool for 10 minutes in pans, then remove and cool on rcks.

To use buttermilk powder, add 4 tablespoons buttermilk powder to dry ingredients. Omit cup of liquid buttermilk and add 1 cup of water instead.

ZUCCHINI BREAD

3 cups unbleached flour
4 tbsps. buttermilk powder
1 tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. baking soda
½ tsp. baking powder
1 cup vegetable oil
2 cups sugar
3 eggs
1 tsp. vanilla
2 cups zucchini, shredded

Preheat oven to 325 F. Sift together flour, buttermilk powder, cinnamon, sat, baking soda and baking powder. In a mixing bowl, beat oil and sugar until blended. Beat eggs till foamy and add to sugar mixture with vanilla. Add dry ingredients and mix till just smooth, being careful not to overbeat. Thoroughly mix in shredded zucchini. Pour batter into two medium well-greased and floured bread pans. Bake 45 to 50 minutes until loaves test done. Let cool for 10 minutes in pans, then remove and cool on rack.

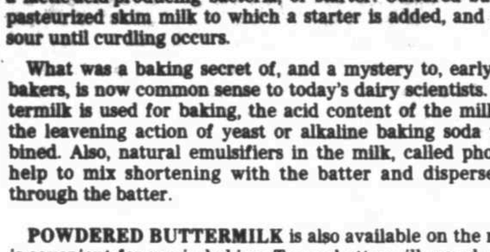

BUTTERMILK-HERB SALAD DRESSING

½ cup buttermilk
½ cup mayonnaise
½ tsp. dried basil
½ tsp. dried dill weed
Dash of Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper to taste

Combine all ingredients in covered jar and shake well to blend, or use blender. Makes 1 cup of dressing.

To use buttermilk powder, substitute 2 tablespoons buttermilk powder and ½ cup milk for liquid buttermilk.

DEAR ABBY

Photo out of sight, not out of mind

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My mother died three years ago after being happily married to my father for 38 years. Four months ago my father married a lovely woman near his age (60ish), and they came from New York to spend the Thanksgiving holidays in Connecticut with my husband, children and me.

It was a wonderful three days. And although it was strange to see my father show affection to a woman other than my mother, I am honestly thrilled that he found someone so lovely.

After they left, I went into the guest room they had occupied and I noticed that my mother's picture had been turned toward the wall! At first I felt anger and resentment. Then I felt thoughtless and guilty for not having realized it was there and taken it down. In a way I feel hurt and outraged that either my father or his wife would turn my mother's picture to the wall. I can't seem to get it out of my mind, Abby. My husband says I am overreacting and to forget it. But I can't stop thinking about it. Should I mention this to my father or his wife? And if so, what should I say? — MIXED EMOTIONS

DEAR MIXED: Don't mention it. They will probably have a few mixed emotions of their own when they realize that they left the picture turned to the wall.

If I were you, I would find another place for that picture.

DEAR ABBY: In your Thanksgiving message you suggested that the surest cure for post-holiday blues is to "call someone who lives alone and invite him (or her) over for leftovers."

What an insult! Don't forget, Abby, the poor and lonely have their pride! My advice would be: Never invite anyone who lives alone over for leftovers! If you don't want to ask the lonely person for "the real thing," finish your leftovers yourself — or feed them to your dog! — LIVING ALONE IN HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

DEAR LIVING: Sorry. I meant no offense. Most people (myself included) often find leftovers more flavorful than the initial serving.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is an only child and his mother is a widow, so when my mother-in-law invited us to pack up our kids (we have three — ages 2, 4 1/2 and 6) and come for Thanksgiving we thought it would be a great idea. We drove 125 miles to get there.

Granny, you should know, is very well-to-do, has traveled all over the world and is a collector. Her home is cluttered with treasures she's collected from all over the world. It looks like a museum!

The whole time she watched the kids like a hawk for fear they'd break something. I spent most of my time policing the kids to be sure they wouldn't touch anything. They aren't deliberately destructive or careless — they are normal, curious children. Needless to say, I was a total wreck and my nerves were shot by the time we went home.

When we left, Granny said, "Promise you will come again next year!" Abby, no way will I bring those kids to her house until they're grown.

What should we say when she invites us again? — STILL TREMBLING

DEAR STILL: Thank her, and tell her it's her turn to come to visit you!

DEAR ABBY: How long is "always?" — DISILLUSIONED IN PETERSBURG, VA.

DEAR DISILLUSIONED: Just a little short of "forever."

(Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

LIVING TODAY

Party fashions for 1983

By SHARON HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

The main influences for the New Year's holiday dress is the continuing of the romance of the Renaissance, a softer version of the prairie look and the sophisticated tuxedo look.

Silhouettes will range in variety from lots of ruffles and frills to the simple loose styles.

The elegance of taffeta has returned. This fabric will be showing up in all forms for the holiday — solids, prints and plaids. We should see blouses, cummerbunds, skirts, dresses, pants and jackets. The number one item to up-date a wardrobe with will be something in taffeta.

Metallics will still be shown but toned down from last year's looks. Simple gold or silver thread will be woven into fabric for blouses and dresses. Gold lame and black will give sparkle and sophistication to any holiday look.

Velvets, velveteens, panne, silks, jacquards and tapestries will be prevalent during this season to give the romantic, feminine approach to fashion. Blouses will have full sleeves — pleated or gathered. Ruffles around the cap of sleeve puts the romance in the prairie look. Bows also add to this look.

Skirts are full or straight, and hem lines go to all extremes, long to short. The bubble skirt will also be making its return.

Sparkling belts in all widths will add to the festive air of the season. Cummerbunds made of bright plaids or solids will complete the tuxedo look.

All in all the fashion for the 1982 New Year's holiday will be festive and romantic.

'Roasting chickens' often over-priced rip-off

By MERLE ELLIS

For my money, there is nothing much more appealing to the palate than a pefectly roasted chicken. For your money, however, there are better buys on birds labeled other than "Roasting Chicken." In far too many markets, the labeling of chickens, particularly roasting chickens, is, by anybody's definition, a rip-off.

As defined in "Larousse Gastonomique," chicken is "the generic term used to describe the barnyard fowl, and includes in modern (French) parlance everything from the very young chicken (poussin) to the large hen suitable for the stock pot. The spring chicken (poulet de grain) weighs from 1-1/2 to 3-1/2 pounds." Fat hens and roasting chickens weigh from 3-1/2 to 5-1/2 pounds and are called "poulardes" in French. In America, we don't have poussin, poulet, or poulardes. We have broilers, fryers, and roasters.

However, the difference between them is the same: SIZE!

Normally, young chickesn under 2-1/2 pounds are labeled broilers; between 2-1/2 and 4 pounds, they are most often called fryers; and those over 4 pounds (and sometimes up to as much as 6 or 8 pounds) are roasters. But there are no legal lines drawn to designate the difference between one and the other, but judging from what I have seen in many markets around the country, perhaps there should be.

I HAVE GONE into countless markets from California to New York, from Minnesota to Texas, and found 3-1/2 to 4 pound frying chickens selling in the same meat case at 40 or 50 cents per pound less than 3-1/2 to 4 pound roasting chickens. The only difference is that one chicken is poultry while the other chicken is poppycock! If there is no difference in weight, there is no difference in the bird. You are being had if you pay a premium for a roasting chicken when you can buy the same size bird called frying chicken for less.

As far as I'm concerned, even a real honest to goodness "roasting chicken" that does, indeed, weigh 5-1/2 or 6 pounds is not worth the premium you are asked to pay for it. Three or 3-1/2 pound fryers are far and away my favorite chickens for roasting. I would go with those even if I couldn't save 40 or 50 cents a pounds on every poulet I put in the oven. For one thing, they cook faster and more evenly without drying out.

Also, they are much easier and more attractive to serve. They don't have to be carved, simply quartered. And to my taste, a crisp, juicy quarter of well-roasted chicken makes a much nicer presentation on a plate than a few dry slices from the breast of the largest bird. Even if I have company coming and plan on serving six or eight people, my choice would be several 3- to 3-1/2-pound fryers rather than one large roaster.

ROASTING a chicken (large or small) is a snap. As always, though, even for the most simple procedure there are varied opinions as to how it should best be done.

For years, I have simply seasoned the bird inside and out wih salt and pepper, rubbed it well with softened butter and roasted it at a constant 400 degrees until done (about an hour), basting every few minutes with more butter until there are enough pan drippings, then basting with the drippings until the bird is a beautiful brown and the skin is crisp.

Some cooks start the bird with the breast down for the first half of the cooking time, then turn it over and roast it breast up for the last half. I'll admit this does make for a crispy skin on the back of the bird. But that part usually ends up in my stock pot for tomorrow's soup anyway, and turning a hot chicken can be a pain in the palm, or thumb, or pinky or whatever part of your hand gets spattered with pan drippings in the process.

There is a fairly new gadget on the market that eliminates the necessity for any turning and turns out a marvelously well-roasted, crisp, juicy chicken (and duck) every time.

I'm not usually impressed with gadgets, but the Spanek vertical roaster has earned a reputation in my kitchen for being not a gadget, but an indispensable tool when it comes to roasting a chicken. To quote Jane Benet, Food Editor of The San Francisco Chronicle, who turned me on to the device, "It's nifty." That's an understatement. It's fantastic!

WHAT IT IS is a simple, cone-shaped frame of tempered steel wire upon which the bird is impaled. It holds the bird vertically in the roasting pan, allowing the heat to brown the skin evenly on all sides. The steel frame conducts heat to the inside of the bird to speed roasting time. To say the very least, "It's nifty!"

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

No evidence that caloric intake affects risk of cancer

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that some of the things we eat may cause cancer. But does how much we eat have anything to do with it? — Charlie, New Haven, Conn.

Dear Charlie: There is no hard evidence that a person's total caloric intake affects the risk of cancer. However, obesity has been linked indirectly with the development of some types of cancer.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 8-year-old son is quite a bit overweight and I want to put him on a diet. How much weight do you think he should lose each week or each month? — Mrs. D.D'A., Queens, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. D'A.: I would strongly advise that you check with your pediatrician before subjecting your son to any program of weight control. An 8-year-old child is growing, and his nutritional needs should not be overlooked. In fact, weight loss may not even be necessary. In a sense he would be losing weight if he added inches while his weight remained the same.

Weight loss alone does not guarantee good health. Your son's pediatrician may help you avoid aggravating the situation, and I urge you to check with him.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it true that there is something that can be used in place of butter and that will help a person lose weight? My daughter says she heard something like this on the radio, but she's not sure where you can go to buy it. Would a health food store sell it? — Dave, Elkton, Md.

Dear Dave: Your daughter is probably referring to a product called sucrose polyester, which I wrote about some time ago. It is a synthetic fat that has so far been used only in experimental trials. It cannot be digested or absorbed by the body, and appears to be effective in the treatment of obesity and for reducing cholesterol levels.

In one study, obese volunteers were tested during two 20-day periods. They consumed 60 percent of their daily food intake at three meals and, in addition, were permitted to have another 60 percent of their intake in the form of snacks. Thus, they could exceed their regular food intake by 20 percent.

The sucrose polyester was incorporated into their diet in cooking or as one of the ingredients in a salad dressing, or it was processed in the form of a margarine, or it was mixed with milk to resemble a milk shake.

The bottom line is that all the volunteers not only lost significantly more weight while taking sucrose polyester, but showed a reduction in their cholesterol levels as well. The product may indeed be helpful in the treatment of obesity, but longer-term studies must be done before it can be said to be safe and effective.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What are the chances of a woman who has had a kidney transplant having a successful pregnancy? I mean both for the baby and for the mother. — Dotty, New York City

Dear Dotty: Studies of the effect of pregnancy on women who have had kidney transplants are not all in agreement. Some studies have indicated that graft rejection usually does not occur; and that if it does occur, it happens only during the time the woman is pregnant.

Now a study by Dr. John Whetham, of Toronto General Hospital, suggests a different outcome. Dr. Whetham studied five patients who had had kidney transplants and had been stable for at least two years. Only two of the five patients retained good kidney function after the pregnancy. However, all of the babies, who were delivered by cesearean section, were healthy and free of birth defects.

If you are contemplating a pregnancy and have had a kidney transplant, I suggest you discuss with your physician what you might expect.

Dear Dr. Solomon: At my last physical examination, I happened to mention to my doctor that my wife has started complaining that I snore at night. He seemed to take this seriously and began asking me all sorts of questions. What's so important about snoring? — Tom, Durham, N.C.

Dear Tom: Snoring as such may not be important, but it may be a symptom indicative of a more serious condition. If it is accompanied by symptoms such as gasping for air at night or high blood pressure, it may be a sign of sleep apnea, or absence of breathing.

Dr. German Nino-Murcia, of the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, explains that with apnea, the muscles of the upper airway involuntarily collapse, obstructing the flow of air through the mouth or nose. It is this obstruction that results in the snoring.

Therefore, while snoring itself may not be considered serious, the underlying condition that gives rise to it may very well be.

Dear Dr. Solomon: All the publicity about insanity in the papers lately seems to be about men. One story I read had to do with men who claimed to be schizophrenic so that they wouldn't go to jail. Don't women ever become schizophrenic? — Douglas, Staten Island, N.Y.

Dear Douglas: Women develop schizophrenia at about the same rate that men do, but it generally starts earlier in men and their outlook for recovery is not as good. Dr. Mary V. Seeman, of the University of Toronto Faculty of Medicine, suggests that women have some protection from the development of schizophrenia which she attributes to biologic factors.

For Stephanie, Hartford, Conn.: Malnutrition is defined as faulty or inadequate nutrition, and this definition certainly applies to obese individuals. A person does not have to be starving to be considered malnourished.

Cave dwellings have advantages

PEKING (AP) — About 40 million Chinese live in cave dwellings, and this housing has many good points despite calls in some places to get rid of it, China's leading newspaper says.

The People's Daily reported that the cave dwellings along the middle and upper reaches of the Yellow River are cool in summer and warm in winter, save energy and building materials, are cheap and do not take up precious farmland.

With new agricultural policies boosting incomes of China's peasants and a building boom going on in the countryside, some areas are calling for replacing all the cave dwellings because they are too rustic, the paper said.

Breeder talks on various dogs' characteristics

Copley News Service

Lauren Day not only breeds dogs, grooms them and trains them, she also counsels clients who are shopping for a pet.

She owns the Breezeway Dog Grooming and Training store in San Diego. She played a word-association game in order to give prospective dog owners an idea what they should expect from various breeds. The following are her impressions:

Afghan: Bred to hunt by sight as opposed to smell. Difficult to train. Require much care. Ideal show dogs but not for average family.

Shetland sheepdog (or Shelties): Her favorite. They live 15 to 18 years. Easy to train. Very healthy. Small. Shed in spring and fall. Excellent with children. Good watchdog, which means they bark a lot.

German shepherd: Risky because of bad breeding in recent years. Have hip problems. Excellent watchdogs. Strong, sturdy.

Labrador retriever: Delightful pets but tend to be a bit hyper. Very strong. Must be trained at early age.

Chow chow: If not carefully trained, a dangerous pet. Loyal to owner but might bite friends, letter carrier or anyone who appears to be an intruder.

Poodle (small breed): Bred as lap dogs in Europe. People tend to pamper them. Very hyper, nervous dogs. Not very healthy. Must be groomed professionally every six to eight weeks. Hair in ears must be removed regularly or they develop infections. Must be groomed at home regularly.

Standard poodle: Easier to care for than lap poodles but must be groomed the same. Sturdy dog.

Dachshund: Cute, playful dog, a fun pet. Long-back dogs have disc problems and may suffer paralysis of the hind legs. Not a pet for smaller children (under 6) but great for older children.

Spaniel: American spaniel less predictable than the English breed. English spaniels have better temperament. American breed may be a problem dog. Have ear problems and require daily grooming.

Terrier: Very hyper, active dog that was bred in England to hunt rats and badgers. Don't expect peace and quiet if you have a terrier. Prone to be aggressive around other dogs.

Boxer: Another favorite of Day, whose family bred them for 20 years (she now breeds Shelties). Extremely strong but often stubborn. Big, need space to exercise. Another breed that requires early obedience training, as do most dogs.

Chihuahua: Very hyper, fearful and snappy. People spoil them. Like babies, Chihuahuas have a soft spot on head, but it never gets very tough. A delicate pet. OK for caring adults and mature children.

Shih tzu: Cute little rag of a dog. Must be combed a lot. Needs early training. Ideal lap dog.

Doberman pinscher: Better dogs than reputation. Breeders have recently improved Dobermans. If cared for and given gentle handling, the dog won't turn on you as many people fear, and they make ideal pets. Big. Good watchdog.

Rottweiler: Big, huskier version of the Doberman. Take care in selecting breeder. Excellent guard dog. Should be raised from puppy, and if trained and loved, an ideal pet.

Golden retriever: The up-and-coming breed. Very popular, strong and healthy. Must be puppy-trained. Remains a pup at heart for early years. At 6 years of age, they leave puppyhood, Day said with exaggeration. They love to retrieve Frisbees, and are ideal for teens and young adults. Require much attention.

To postal service, 'junk mail' anything but; It moves the mail

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — One of the most durable of traditions is the daily pile of mail: welcome cards and parcels, certainly, but more often catalogs, subscription offers and pleas for contributions — in a word, junk mail.

But the message in the mail this year is very non-traditional. Eleven years after the Post Office was reincarnated as the U.S. Postal Service, the keys to its future, and to the price of postage stamps, are a nine-digit zip code and more junk mail.

"We don't have any such thing as 'junk mail,'" objected Postmaster General William F. Bolger in an interview. "We call it advertising mail."

Last year the Postal Service handled 113 billion mailed items, perhaps half the mail on the planet, delivering an average of 1,412 articles to each of the nation's 80 million households. Only 6 percent of that was personal cards, packages and letters. The rest was business mail, such as bills and orders, and advertising mail.

Now the Postal Service is the nation's third biggest advertising medium, after television and newspapers. Householders bought $110 billion worth of goods through the mail last year, according to the Direct Marketing Association (DMA), and the trend is upward.

PARTLY FOR THAT reason, the Reagan administration is discussing further deregulation of the mails, opening the possibility that private companies might compete with the Postal Service even in delivering personally addressed letters. It is "still in the talking stage," according to White House officials, with no immediate prospects for legislation.

Delivery services already compete strongly on parcels and other kinds of mail. But private firms are cautious about total deregulation, for replacing the Postal Service in remote rural or dangerous inner-city routes would be a major undertaking.

"If you think the mails are fouled up now, you should oppose deregulation with your dying breath," said a congressional staff member close to the issue.

In fact, independent surveys show that 95 percent of all zip-coded first-class mail that should be delivered overnight does in fact get there the next day. For second-day mail, the figure is 88 percent and for third-day mail 90 percent.

"Even if it you make only a 1 percent error, that's 3 million pieces of mail going astray every day," Bolger said. "People remember that and forget the rest."

BOUND BY THE Postal Reorganization Act of 1971, as well as tradition, to deliver all that mail at uniform prices to every square inch of American territory, the service must pay for clerks, sorters, carriers, buildings, uniforms, vehicles, gasoline and so on whether it delivers one letter to Aunt Minnie or 150. So the flood of catalogs makes the whole task do-able, according to Bolger.

If more mail moves faster, costs can be shared among more pieces, which means stamp prices do not rise. Predictable rates, essential for advertisers' planning, is Bolger's goal.

"The total system is helped by volume increases anywhere along the line," Bolger said. "We've increased the volume by 30 billion pieces since 1970, we're delivering mail to 18 million addresses that didn't even exist then, and we're doing it with 70,000 fewer employees."

He is also doing it at a profit, although not for long. The Postal Service ran an operating surplus of about $700 million last fiscal year, plus a bookkeeping profit from unused reserve funds that brought the total to $1.08 billion. But the plan is that this excess will cover losses expected as future costs rise, and that another rate increase will be needed in 1984. Bolger hopes to make the cycle routine for everybody, including Congress.

Large mailers love the idea and oppose deregulation. "The first thing to go if you got rid of the monopoly would be the single-price, first-class stamp," said the DMA's Richard Barton. Rates would have to vary depending on distance and accessibility, he said, and mass mailers would not be able to function. To achieve his stable rate cycle, Bolger wants to move even more mail and move it faster, which he says means more automation that in turn means the nine-digit zip code. Last year the idea was delayed until next October by a horrified Congress.

ALL SIDES AGREE that the Postal Service bungled its first attempt to sell what it calls "zip plus four." Congress worried that the public, already assaulted by Social Security, license and telephone numbers, never would be able to remember nine digits. The outcry drowned out Bolger's insistence that the system would be voluntary and used mainly by mass mailers.

A recent General Accounting Office report criticized the Postal Service's use of "uncertain, sensitive and soft" numbers to justify the $2.76 billion investment it wants to make in machines to read printed zip codes, machines the report said have not been very well tested.

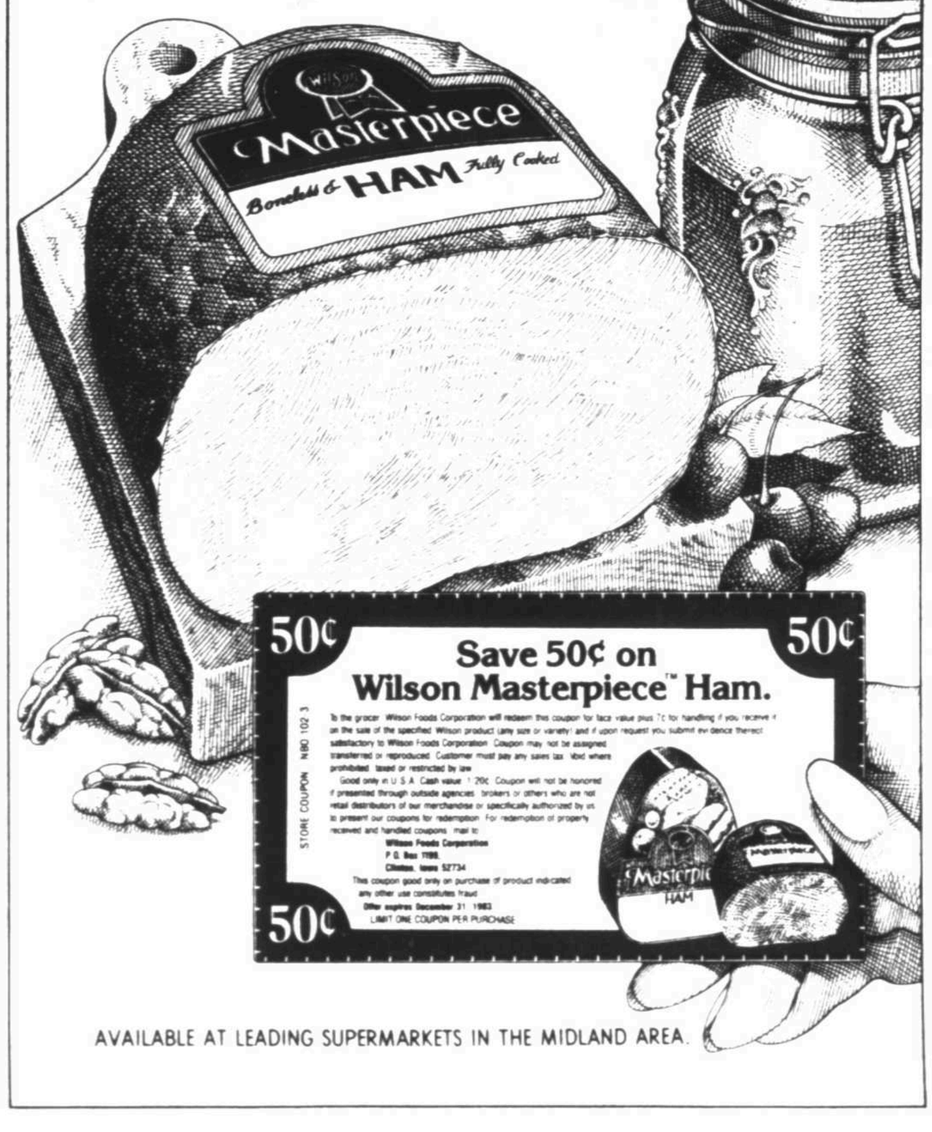

There are "some risks involved that cannot be assessed at this time," the report said, including the degree to which major mailers will overhaul their addressing equipment.

Instead of earning a 20 to 25 percent return each year as the Postal Service estimated, the report said, a return of 16 to 18.6 percent is more likely. "What the devil is wrong with that?" Bolger said. "If that's the worst case, I'll take it."

The Postal Service's Board of Governors recently approved a price cut to get major business mailers to use the superzip. Unless Congress balks again, new machines will be installed gradually to begin the new system next October for business letters.

New alcohol, health correlations revealed

BOSTON (AP) — A doctor investigating the effects of drink on sex says that overindulging in alcohol reduces the sexual function of men, but not the reproductive capacity of women.

Recent research also indicates that a healthy diet does not protect alcoholics from liver disease, said Dr. Jack Mendelson, director of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Research Center at McLean Hospital in suburban Belmont and at Harvard Medical School in Boston.

Mendelson discussed the findings at a recent meeting of distillery representatives here.

"Thirty laboratories now concur that in males — including humans, rats and mice — excessive drinking can lead to problems with impotence and the procreative function," Mendelson said.

"In men, the problem lies in transport of testosterone, the major male sex hormone which gives signals to the brain," he said. "In women, we found no acute individual changes in estradiol, the hormone secreted by the ovary needed to become pregnant or sustain pregnancy."

In an interview, Mendelson said, "The good news is that acute alcohol intake does not decrease sexual function in women. The corresponding bad news is that alcohol does not suppress ovulation."

Mendelson told the distillers about studies at McLean Hospital that dispel any myth that good eating habits protect alcohol abusers from liver damage.

"Good diet won't protect those who abuse your products," Mendelson said. "Now we know that even if alcohol were fortified with vitamins and minerals, that alcohol can change the intestinal gut so it can't absorb them."

Joseph E. Seagram and Sons Inc. has matched contributions from other companies for recent studies at McLean. A larger, five-year study at Harvard began in 1980 when the U.S. branch of the Canadian distillery gave $5.8 million to a professor at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

The diet-liver research was based on data from 3,411 patients in nine private hospitals.

Student's number wrong

AUSTIN (AP) — Mark White — a college student, not the governor-elect — wasn't prepared for the telephone bombardment that followed the November general election.

Since Attorney General Mark White was elected governor, White, a business administration major at Austin Community College, said he has received about a call a day, wanting to congratulate the governor-elect. The calls have come from all over Texas and as far away as Illinois.

White, 20, said he had to put his foot down recently when somebody identifying himself as the governor-elect's lawyer called from Mexico — collect. "There was no way I was going to pay for that one," he said.

Vaccine possible

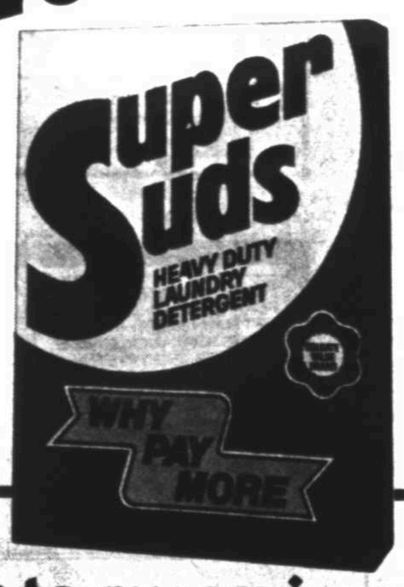

CHICAGO (AP) — A single-shot vaccine against herpes developed at the University of Chicago could be available for use in humans in three to five years, a researcher says.

Bernard Roizman, a molecular geneticist at the university, said he plans to test the genetically engineered vaccine on people next year. It has already proven effective in animals, he said.

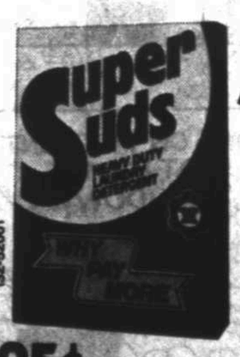

The vaccine consists of live herpes organisms that stimulate the immune system without causing symptoms of the disease, he said.

The vaccine could be useful for certain high-risk groups, such as couples in which one partner has herpes, he said.

Old Coot 'mad as Hell' over politicians voting themselves raises

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CAMARILLO, Calif. — Roberta Bickerstaff is a tough old lady who lives with birds and chickens and ducks and dogs and an amiable husband in a home tucked into a hillside. She used to have a dozen geese but gave them up when they began chasing the neighbors.

She loves growing exotic ferns and pampering the dozen or so cockatiels around the wooden house she and Lealon built with their own hands 26 years ago on an acre of avocado trees that still shade the chicken coops.

In fact, it would be all right with Roberta if puttering were all she ever did. "The Old Coot of Camarillo," as she likes to call herself, is 68, has a bad heart and cataracts, and dragging herself into a righteous rage is getting harder every year.

She would like to just hand the Mad as Hell movement over to someone else, but she concedes with a long sigh that there probably just isn't anybody else quite like her.

"Let's face it, honey," she said, smoking a cigarette and drinking black coffee, "I'm unique." The skeleton of an African wild dog peered at her from atop a cabinet near her small kitchen. "I am the Movement."

"THE MOVEMENT" is a prairie fire of a force that began burning about two years ago when the Ventura County Board of Supervisors tried to give itself a 42 percent raise over the objections of a meeting room jammed with protesters.

The way Roberta tells it, the supervisors listened to the noisy protests, then voted themselves the raise anyhow, an act of arrogance that brought her to her feet.

"Gentlemen," she drawled in the voice of a rusty band saw, "I'm mad as hell and I'm startin' a referendum."

If there was a snicker or two among the five supervisors, it died in their throats over the next few days as Roberta rounded up an army and gathered 5,200 signatures on petitions opposing the raise. It was an auspicious first venture into politics.

The local press began calling it the Mad as Hell movement, a phrase that echoed both Roberta's attitude and the attitude of Peter Finch in the 1977 movie "Network," in which he tells everyone to stick his head out the window and holler, "I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take it anymore!"

The Board of Supervisors, acknowledging the prairie fire headed their way, ran for cover. The raise was rescinded.

ROBERTA BICKERSTAFF became an instant celebrity. One newspaper called her "the Ma Kettle of grassroots activism." "It's a hell of a thing," she replied modestly.

When the publicity died down, she went back to her chickens and ducks and dogs and birds.

"The truth is," she said the other day, "I prefer animals to politicians. I used to go up to the Oregon Regional Zoological Center and study animal nutrition as a hobby, but when I got cataracts I couldn't drive and that ended that. So I started a farm of my own."

But it just was not in the cards for Roberta Bickerstaff to raise animals and tend the ferns on her cool and peaceful acre behind an overgrown hedge.

The Old Coot of Camarillo was being summoned again.

Just a month ago, the Board of Supervisors, most of its members new, decided once more they ought to give themselves a raise. This time Supervisor Edwin Jones came up with a plan that would have fixed the board's salary permanently at 70 percent of Superior Court judges' pay, an increase of about 40 percent over the next five years.

ONCE MORE Roberta put aside the chicken feed, stoked the fires of the Mad as Hell movement and organized a petition drive. Either the board rescind its self-granted raise, she warned, or face a referendum.

Privately she growled, "If politicians are willing to spend as much as they do to get elected, they ought to be satisfied with the pay."

Forty-one days later, the Mad as Hell army had gathered 30,600 signatures, more than twice the number needed to force an election. Once more, the Board of Supervisors got the message and voted to repeal the pay increase.

They did not even wait for the signatures to be certified.

The man who had proposed the raise in the first place was one of those who finally voted against it. Why? Edwin Jones thought about that for a moment, then asked, "You ever try spitting into the wind?"

Then he added, "You've got to give the woman credit. She played by the rules and won the game." Pause. "You try gathering 30,000 signatures."

"IT ISN'T really that we don't want them to get more money," Roberta said. "It's just that we want the people to get a chance to vote on it. That's simple enough for even them to understand."

Word of the second triumph by the Mad as Hell movement rippled out of Camarillo.

"I began gettin' letters by the ton, and that damned telephone ain't never stopped ringing," Roberta said, lighting another cigarette.

"One man wrote and said he wanted to be put on our mailing list. Hell, we don't even have a mailing list. Another called from New Orleans and wanted to know what to do about potholes in the street, and I said fill 'em with political B.S." She did not abbreviate.

Mad as Hell groups have sprung up here and there across the country, she says, prompted in part by her appearance on talk shows.

"We're not really an organization. We don't hold meetings. There's no membership, no dues, no nothin'. It's just that when something needs doing, we get on the phone or write a letter and say 'Did you hear about such and such? Well, that makes me mad as hell ....' "

LOS ANGELES-born Roberta is a graying, heavy-set woman with a quick sense of humor and an iconoclastic manner. You need both, she explains, to do what she has been doing. She has not attended college formally but in the 42 years of her marriage has taken courses wherever she could. Husband Lealon was in the Navy for 24 years and retired in 1958.

Her failing eyesight makes fighting government difficult. She wears thick-lensed glasses and uses a magnifying glass when necessary. An irregular heartbeat adds to her problems. Roberta admits that she does not help it any by smoking two packs of cigarettes a day.

"Hell," she said grumpily, "I stopped drinking regular coffee and drink that damned decaffeinated stuff now. That's something." A shake of the head. "Life ain't hardly worth living without good coffee...."

Having twice fought the Ventura County Board of Supervisors, Roberta is seriously thinking of taking on the State of California. She does not like what she senses to be an attitude that might erode the benefits of Proposition 13, the 1978 initiative that sharply reduced property taxes. She fears "the rape of 13," as she calls it.

"I phoned one assemblyman already and he told me I was a dirty old woman and ought to mind my own business," Roberta said.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, Dec. 30, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: English poet Rudyard Kipling was born on this date, as were "Hawaii Five-O" star Jack Lord, Bo Diddley, former "Miss America" host Bert Parks and coach Sandy Koufax. The planning you do now paves the way for financial success in the future. A job change could prove very lucky. Your mate gives you the strength to do the right thing. You find the business climate improving along with profits. A lost opportunity turns out to be a plus. Use your contacts wisely. Sports begin to play a bigger role in your life. Remain open to new ideas.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Boredom could be interfering with your productivity at place of employment. Better change either your attitude or your job after the first of the year. Be discreet about any problems.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You have the facts you need to win an upcoming confrontation. It might be better to remodel your old home than to buy a new one. A stranger complicates your personal life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance will blossom if you and mate become more sensitive to each other's needs. Reconfirm any travel reservations. Someone may not appreciate your sense of humor. Money matters take care of themselves.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone tries to shuffle his burden onto you. Offer to help, but do not be duped. Follow up on a money matter. An old flame returns. Romance heats up very quickly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not expect others to always include you in their social plans. Extend some invitations yourself. Plan a party at home for New Year's Eve. Business results are mixed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Indecision has you climbing the walls at place of employment. Accept the fact that nothing will be decided until after the start of the new year. Some great developments lie ahead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): News from afar gives you the edge in a partnership. Be willing to make important concessions. Play a waiting game if a major decision will affect a romantic relationship.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Private talks regarding career or finances provide valuable information. Romance is grand. Probe beneath the surface to find answers to personal questions. Dine out with loved one this evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Stick to the facts when trying to straighten out a career or business matter. A blind date proves thrilling. Be on the lookout for unusual opportunities. You could get a real financial plum.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A friend or neighbor gives you interesting data related to your field. Do not act foolishly where investments are concerned. Follow the experts' advice only. Your evening should be romantic.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A lucky day for creative or speculative ventures. The tides turn in your favor. You get a much needed boost from someone influential. Look out! Romance is rocky.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Finances are uppermost in your thoughts. Postpone any appointments that interfere with completing projects on time. A meeting with a friend could lead to a romantic interlude later today.

Some years ago in the bridge clubs of New York, there was a kibitzer who became known as the Rabbi — not because of his religion, but because he was inclined to pontificate on all aspects of the game. Although delivered with great seriousness, the validity of his observations was open to question on a practical basis. One of his favorite sayings was: "When the king is singleton, play the ace." Obviously, today's declarer had never heard of the Rabbi.

The auction was normal, even though three no trump was an absolute laydown. When North's Stayman inquiry elicited the information that South had a spade suit, it was natural for North to select the suit contract because of his ruffing value in clubs.

The hand was soon over. Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and led a trump to his queen and West's king. No matter what declarer did then, he could not avoid losing two more trump tricks and the ace of hearts for down one.

The Rabbi would have been delighted to pass on his bit of sagacity—and he would have been right! You don't have to be magician to work that out. Had declarer paused to take stock of the hand before playing to the second trick, he might have come up with the winning solution.

Declarer has only one loser outside of the trump suit, so the contract is safe as long as he can hold his trump losers to two. Playing the ace of spades at the second trick is the best way to bring about that result. If both defenders follow to the ace of spades, declarer crosses to dummy and leads another trump. Should East play low, declarer inserts the queen. If that wins, declarer loses either one or two trump tricks, depending on the distribution. If West wins the king, there is only one more trump outstanding, so declarer can't lose more than two tricks in the suit. And if West started with four trumps, including the king, declarer is doomed to defeat no matter what he does.

Senate award begun

WASHINGTON (AP) — In one of the final acts of what many lawmakers called the least productive congressional session in decades, the Senate quietly voted to establish a new congressional award: The "U.S. Senate productivity award."

The measure, passed by unanimous voice vote in the closing hours of the 97th Congress, will allow each senator to select one home-state individual or business a year to receive the medallion.

Citing a drop in U.S. productivity, not to mention the near paralysis that gripped the Senate in the closing days of the lame-duck session, Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, told colleagues:

"This award will bring successful productivity practices to the attention of thousands of others who could also implement them."

The money will be used to contract a private firm to provide each senator with "the materials necessary for the proper implementation of the award presentation process."

Tower's car noisy no more

WASHINGTON (AP) — Peace and quiet finally has been restored to the suburban Washington neighborhood of Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John Tower, R-Texas.

The long familiar roar from the rusted-out muffler of Tower's 1972 Dodge Charger has been silenced for good.

Some of Towers' neighbors had been extremely upset; but for months their protests fell on understandably deaf ears. Local police were summoned. They labelled Tower's muffler "marginal," but declined to order him to have it replaced.

But now, all that's been changed.

The muffler finally fell off Tower's car altogether, on the Capitol grounds, and Tower was forced to replace it.

The old muffler was retrieved by Tower's staff. They took his entire muffler and tail-pipe assembly and turned it into a floor lamp. The contraption, complete with a lamp shade and red bow, was presented to Tower for Christmas.

When asked how he liked the new muffler, Tower sighed, conceded it was quieter, but complained: "I used to get nine miles a gallon with the old muffler, but with the new one I only get eight."

Byrd ruffles feathers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., in his final speech of the year to the Senate, sought to portray Senate Democrats as ever-willing to help the Republican majority in winning approval of major programs.

Rather than seeking confrontation, Byrd said, Senate Democrats had performed as an "invisible minority."

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., a large, hulking man, took issue with Byrd's remarks. "You're not saying I'm invisible, are you?"

How's Reagan rate?

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan had to pause for a moment and fumbled words a bit, when he tried to appraise the highs and lows of his second year in the White House.

Blame it on the sophomore slump.

Or the economic slump.

Reagan emphasized accomplishments abroad, and said again that he's convinced the economy soon will turn upward. A year ago, his emphasis was the other way around.

IN THE first year of his presidency, Reagan bowled over Congress. He was the Republican president who took effective control of the Democratic House. He won even when it looked as though he would lose. Reaganomics ruled. Lower taxes, curtailed spending, the promise of balanced budgets some year soon, all that would combine to bring the economy surging back by spring.

It didn't happen, not by

An Analysis

springtime, not by Election Day.

Actually, by Reagan's first autumn, Congress was starting to have second thoughts. The victory string ran out. An administration package of $13 billion in followup budget cuts was rejected. Reagan had to back away from suggestions that Social Security spending be curtailed.

Congress left town skeptical last year, and came back more skeptical in January. The budget Reagan submitted was rejected outright, and it took all spring to fashion a compromise he could accept and Congress could approve.

DEFICIT forecasts soared — there now are estimates of up to $190 billion — and pressure mounted for a tax increase Reagan didn't want. He came around, and agreed reluctantly to a $98.3 billion, three-year increase — saying by the time it passed that it was an integral part of his economic program.

He vetoed an appropriations bill as a "budget buster," and the Republican Senate joined the Democratic House in two-thirds votes to override him.

He summoned Congress into lame-duck session and got less than half the loaf he had wanted. While he celebrated its final act, the 5 cent gasoline tax increase to finance road and transit repairs, it was an idea that came lately, and grudgingly, onto the White House agenda.

So there were no budget or tax breakthroughs to boast of this time.

And when he was asked last week whether he'd set his own agenda this year, or had spent more time reacting to foreign crises, he didn't argue with the premise.

"WELL, I have not thought about it much in that line, except that we can say that in this year and even in the preceding year the Soviet Union has not advanced further into expansionism than it had two years ago," he replied. "It has not gone further into additional countries."

Reagan said there had been great progress in relations with U.S. allies.

"And I think that the initiative that we have taken in the Middle East is probably the greatest accomplishment," he said. That is the Sept. 1 peace formula, based on the Camp David accords, and stalled now, with Israel firmly opposed to the Reagan formula.

And disappointments?

"Well, you always have some disappointments," Reagan said. "Every time you send something up to the Legislature, you do not quite get what you wish you had gotten."

Reagan's chief of staff, James A. Baker III, put it another way.

"We set a pretty tough standard for ourselves in the sense that in the first 22 months of this administration, we've been rather successful on Capitol Hill," he said.

Agency rules on wine label

From Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — A long-fermenting controversy, marked by spirited debate from Virginia to California, has culminated in a federal ruling permitting vintners from three states to designate their wine bottles with "Shenandoah Valley" labels.

Wine produced in a 12-county region of Virginia and West Virginia may carry the "Shenandoah Valley" appellation, according to ruling by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Wine from California's Shenandoah Valley, a region centered chiefly in Amador County near Sacramento, must be bottled under a slightly more explicit label, the federal agency said. The West Coast wine must be marked "Shenandoah Valley, California."

The announcement tickled California wine producers and politicians who had feared their state might lose its rights to the Shenandoah label under new federal regulations. But it brought far more robust responses in Virginia, ranging from delight to disappointment to denunciation.

"I HAVE NOTHING against the wine producers of Amador County, Calif., but I continue to object strongly to their effort to appropriate for their own commercial use a name which has national recognition as that of a Virginia area," said Rep. J. Kenneth Robinson, R-Va., who represents much of the state's Shenandoah Valley wine-growing region. He complained that California's Shenandoah is a "miniscule valley" that has drawn "scant notice through the years, even from map makers."

An aide said Robinson would likely ask Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan to overturn the bureau's ruling and reserve the "Shenandoah Valley" label exclusively for Virginia wines. Robinson may also propose legislation to deny the "Shenandoah Valley" mark to California vintages, the aide said.

The federal ruling, set to take effect Jan. 27, stems from an effort by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to impose stricter regulations on wine labeling to benefit consumers.

"The use of the name 'Shenandoah Valley, California' allows consumers to readily identify where grapes used to make that wine are grown," the bureau said in its announcement. "The name 'Shenandoah Valley' for the Virginia and West Virginia viticultural area is well known and does not require adding the name of the two states."

Some Virginia officials detected in that reasoning a sour whiff of compromise. "It sort of reminded me of the King Solomon episode in the Bible," said Archie Smith Jr., chairman of the Virginia Wineries Association. "He said we'll just split the baby down the middle."

FEDERAL WINE regulators rejected such assertions. "This is not a compromise, as I see it. It is merely to avoid consumer confusion," said James A. Hunt, a research and regulation coordinator for the bureau who helped prepare the ruling.

The wine battle has aged since 1961, when federal proceedings, including public hearings in Virginia and California, were initiated. California, which has a major wine industry, firmly contested claims from Virginia, where commercial wine businesses only recently started expanding.

"We were making wine in the Shenandoah Valley of California long before they were making it in Virginia," an aide to Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said. "We feel we had it first."

The federal ruling drew praise from the California Wine Institute and from Rep. Norman D. Shumway, R-Calif., who represents the state's Shenandoah area. Even among some Virginia wine makers, there were some toasts.

Brazilian film goes too far

The picture is "Pra Frente Brasil," Portuguese for "Let's Go Brazil." It is fictional, but it portrays events that really happened in the 1970s when the military rulers of Latin America's biggest country carried out a ruthless crackdown against leftist guerrillas.

Brazilian producer-director Roberto Farias, with financial backing from Embrafilme, a movie production company controlled by the government, decided to make "Pra Frente Brasil" two years ago, after the military regime announced a sweeping political liberalization.

The movie won this year's Brazilian version of the Oscar for best film and was entered in the Cannes Film Festival. But in April, just days before its commercial debut, government censors banned it for the general public.

The official reason was that "Pra Frente Brasil" might "incite the people against constituted authority." Brazilian press reports said that top military brass simply felt the movie went too far.

The movie tells the story of an average middle-class citizen, with no interest in political events, who is arrested without a warrant and thrown into an unmarked car, apparently because secret security agents have mistaken him for a leftwing terrorist. While the hero is brutally initiated into the political realities of the dictatorship's back rooms and torture chambers, the rest of the nation is conveniently distracted by the exploits of Brazil's world champion soccer team.

"Pra Frente Brasil" was the soccer team's theme song when it won the World Cup in 1970. And the real government at the time, headed by President Emilio G. Medici, a general, actively used soccer-fever propaganda to create a positive image of military leaders among ordinary Brazilians.

Farias said when the film was censored, "I didn't make this movie with the intention of inciting anybody. It tells an important part of our country's modern history that can't be covered up, no matter how painful the memories might be."

"Pra Frente Brasil" also cost Embrafilme's president, Celso Amorim, his job. Amorim was fired without explanation after it became public knowledge the company had aided in the making of the controversial picture.

Newspapers here speculate that censors waited until after November's nationwide elections before taking a second look at "Pra Frente Brasil."

President Joao Figueiredo, a retired general who has promoted press freedom and a political opening-up, had his prestige on the line when he allowed free voting for thousands of municipal state and federal offices. Although the four opposition parties got 62 percent of the vote and captured many influential offices, Figueiredo's government party won the largest single bloc of seats and retained control of Congress.

Plastic bags kill sea turtles

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Discarded plastic bags eaten by endangered leatherback sea turtles are killing the giant reptiles who mistake the floating debris for jellyfish, their favorite food, according to scientists.

"Autopsies of leatherbacks have revealed stomachs and intestines blocked by plastic sandwich bags, potato chip bags, trash bags and other plastic items," said Robert C. Schoelkopf, director of the Marine Mammal Stranding Center in Atlantic City, N.J.

British writer says documents support existence of King Arthur

LONDON (AP) — There may really have been a King Arthur behind the legend of the Round Table knights: Seekers of the Holy Grail and symbols of chivalry for more than a thousand years.

Documents discovered by an American historian are said to support the theory that the noble Arthur was more man than myth.

Arthur is mentioned in three early French chronicles "that nobody noticed before," said Geoffrey Ashe, a British writer, lecturer and specialist on the Arthurian legend.

"The research by Professor Barbara Moorman of the University of Southern Mississippi confirms my long-held feeling that Arthur was more than a legend," Ashe told The Associated Press.

Some historians believe Arthur led British- Celtic warriors against the invading Saxons in the fifth century, after the Romans left Britain in A.D. 410.

"IT'S A VERY obscure period after the Romans left Britain, as there was a lot of destruction and looting of records by the invading Saxons," Ashe said. "But we seem now to have a British king in the fifth century as the original of the Arthurian legend."

Modern historians think there probably was a British ruler named Arthur, who fought the Saxon invaders coming in from what is now the Netherlands and the north German coast.

The shadowy figure was embellished by storytellers into a chivalrous hero, leader of the knights of the Round Table and seeker of the Holy Grail,which legend says was the chalice of Christ's Last Supper. According to the myth, the cup was endowed with miraculous powers and would be revealed only to the purest knight.

Ashe and Mrs. Moorman are members of a committee of genealogists and historians investigating the legend for a book to be published by Debrett's Peerage Ltd. in 1984.

In a telephone interview from his Somerset home in Glastonbury, where legend says Arthur is buried, Ashe said old British records mentioning Riothamus, a title meaning High King, suggest he was the original King Arthur. Ashe said one document refers to Riothamus as Arthur.

According to notes sent by Mrs. Moorman, Ashe said, the most important of the three pertinent French chronicles is a record of events up to the year 1525, written in French by Philippe de Vigneulles.

THE TWO other documents are both in Latin, written by monks, Ashe said.

"All three refer to King Arthur and put him in the right period; they all converge and match up with other records of what was going on at that time," Ashe said. One gives "quite a long account of Arthur being involved in some sort of diplomatic relations with other rulers who we know existed."

A 12th-century writer, Geoffrey of Monmouth, embellished the Arthurian legend with his "History of the Kings of Britain," once described by an Arthurian expert as "the most successful work of fiction ever composed."

Ashe said, "Geoffrey of Monmouth was wild and fanciful, but the point is that he had a lot about Arthur leading a British army overseas to Gaul (France). Historians have assumed that was moonshine. I thought that perhaps it happened and as soon as I looked at the records they seemed to show the man himself."

According to the French records, the Riothamus-Arthur warrior crossed the Channel from England and fought in Brittany, northwest France, but that aspect of the story had been overlooked by British historians until now, Ashe said.

Professor Leon Fleuriot, a French historian of Brittany, is working on the French records and is on the Debrett's committee.

Factions forming in Reagan's coalition

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's governing coalition seems to be fraying at the far conservative edge, but there's a case to be made that he would risk a lot more if he catered to the right.

It is made by A. James Reichley of the Brookings Institution. He's one of those pragmatic Republicans the conservatives mistrust most.

In Reichley's view, Reagan was elected as the candidate of a coalition, and while he has turned government sharply to the right, he has held it together through his first two years, and needs to keep doing so.

Reichley writes that the frictions within the coalition were inevitable because it spans the Republican spectrum, from establishment conservatives to the religious New Right and supply side economic theorists to the moderate and progressive wings of the party.

Those are the factions Reagan had to beat to win his GOP nomination, but they have supported the administration, because of his popularity, because they see it as important to the party future, and, according to Reichley, because they agree in large part with his programs.

The conservatives complain that Reagan has spent too many appointments and tailored too many programs to the liking of the Republican center, instead of doing what his real friends want done.

But according to Reichley, the programs came first and the more liberal Republicans came along because they agreed on goals. "Many of Reagan's initiatives expressed elements in the moderates' and progressives' own philosophies, though he often carried these beyond what they would have preferred," he writes. "Moderates and progressives, like most other American conservatives, believe deeply in the ideas of federalism and the market system. Both ideas have been given new life by Reagan."

According to Reichley, some elements of the Reagan coalition, particularly the groups he calls conservative fundamentalists, are irate at the president's moves away from dogmatic ideology, in his appointments, in such steps as the tax increase passed last summer, and in a relatively cautious approach to the Soviet Union.

They certainly are. Richard A. Viguerie, the conservative fund-raiser who has become a spokesman of the New Right, calls Reagan's foreign policy "Carterism without Carter."

"The domestic policy is not too far away from that reality, either," Viguerie says, arguing that Reagan takes conservative support too much for granted and so is risking it.

But Reichley argues that "the United States is so diverse a country that a party or an administration tightly limited by rigid ideology could hardly survive, let alone govern effectively."

Students and faculty at Goddard College in Plainfield, Vt., say the financial troubles that have put their college on the brink of collapse haven't dampened their enthusiasm for the institution. School overcomes survival threats

PLAINFIELD, Vt. (AP) — Goddard College, two years ago on the brink of financial and academic collapse, is "getting its act together" with high hopes that the progressive liberal arts school will survive.

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges recently agreed to remove Goddard's two-year probationary status, meaning the college is no longer threatened with loss of accreditation.

The decision brought a breath of life into the experimental college that has been struggling to convince prospective students, creditors, guidance counselors and financial aid institutions that it can make a comeback.

"That decision tells the world this isn't a place that's shaky and isn't a good bet. It says this is a place that's getting its act together," said college president Jack Lindquist.

A loss of accreditation probably would have meant the end of the 44-year-old institution.

"Frankly, we probably would have closed the college and tried to reorganize," Lindquist said.

Now, however, he feels Goddard is headed toward recovery.

"It's going to happen. The accreditation solidifies that," he said. "But it isn't going to happen easily. There will be some delicate times as we nurse it along...and a lot of work needs to be done to improve the public image."

The accreditation loss was threatened after Goddard almost went bankrupt several times. Financial burdens stemmed from mortgage payments, operating expenses and back salaries owed.

But Lindquist has seen enrollment pared down and administration streamlined, both essential to the survival of the college that apparently became overextended during the college growth period of the '60s.

Lindquist, 41, former academic dean of the college, took over as president in May 1981 after two presidents resigned within a year. With the impending threat of financial collapse, faculty and staff worked without pay for three weeks to help keep the college alive.

But with a debt of nearly $3 million, more sacrifices were unavoidable, administrators said.

Four of Goddard's programs were sold to Norwich University and Vermont College, and a large part of the campus was put up for sale. The faculty and administration were reduced, with about half of the 100 staff members 2½ years ago remaining.

The college needed to cut its enrollment drastically, said Lindquist. But that was an easy task because applications had dropped off almost completely.

In the 1960s and early '70s, up to 1,900 students were enrolled, and just two years ago there were 1,000 students. Now there are 153, Lindquist said.

When the New England association decided two years ago to recommend that accreditation be lifted, some newspapers reported the accreditation actually had been lifted.

While Goddard successfully appealed the recommendation and its accreditation remained intact, the image of a broken college stuck.

"Our enrollment just stopped then," Lindquist said. "Our public image was that the school had been closed. When I showed up at conferences with a name tag that said Goddard, people would look confused and say, 'Is that the Goddard that closed?'" he said.

Novelette Stewart, a Goddard junior, said the students were committed to the institution.

"At Goddard, you have a very unique set of students who stuck together when we didn't know if we'd be open from one week to the next," she said.

The college had no grading system and avoided traditional teaching methods such as lectures. Unusual courses such as fire safety were offered.

While the 1960s and '70s were a period of great growth, the '80s will be a time of pared-down enrollment and a streamlined administration, Lindquist said.

"Our current plan is to move back to 250 to 300 students and stay there," he said.

The college has been fighting high energy costs by encouraging students to work on independent studies off campus. Only a third of the students live on campus; the rest are scattered across the globe, doing research projects, writing books, or other creative pursuits.

"During a recession, many people are concerned about getting jobs, and so in many ways, an education that involves working in the 'real world' is more practical," he said.

Couple wants to sell their Oregon town

DREW, Ore. (AP) — The post office is closed, the old store could use some work and on rainy days Elk Creek swells to within spitting distance of Gus and Trish Franceschis' back door.

But all things considered, Mrs. Franceschi figures $36,000 is "pretty cheap" for a whole town that's up for sale.

Drew, all 1½ acres of it, hugs a curve on a winding road that links tiny Canyonville to tinier Trail, deep in the hills of southern Oregon.

Even in its prime, it was hardly a bustling metropolis, although oldtimers remember when loggers from miles around gathered at a dance hall Saturday nights to drink and kick up their heels.

But when the Drew post office closed in 1972, "it more or less started the demise" of the community, said Franceschi, a kindergarten teacher who works 37 miles away in Tri City and bought the town four years ago on a whim.

Now, Drew, five buildings' worth, is for sale.

"We want someone to come in here and carry forth with what we can't afford to do," said Franceschi, 31, who lives with his wife and 15-month-old daughter in the back of what used to be the Drew Cash Store. "We want somebody to put a mom-and-pop little grocery store in here that will serve the local people."

Exactly who those local people are depends on what one considers Drew's boundaries.

In downtown Drew, two small cabins and a three-bedroom barn owned by the Franceschis are vacant. A third cabin is rented by Richard Bean, who works for the U.S. Forest Service.

Around the bend is R.M. Bonney, 64, known as "Bob," who hauled logs for 20 years before retiring three years ago. Bonney, the town's longest-tenured citizen, was 2 months old when his parents came to Drew in 1918 to homestead and raise cattle.

Across the street from Bonney is Hugh Ziemer, 82, at one time a cowpuncher, mechanic and logger who says he now does "everything but raise marijuana."

Other people are scattered "up and down the canyon and in the mountains," Franceschi said.

To live in Drew, a person has to like solitude and simple pleasures, said Franceschi, who first arrived in town "with nothing more than a backpack and a thumb."

The Franceschis' way of life is still austere by most standards. There's no television, no stereo and, on a clear night, the portable radio picks up two stations. Telephone service arrived in time for Christmas.

Ironically, though, lack of privacy is one reason the Franceschis have decided to sell the town and move on.

Since Franceschi erected "town for sale" signs on the face of the old store, he says curious passers-by, as many as 10 or 15 some days, have dropped in during at all hours to inquire about it.

"You wouldn't believe the number of people stopping by — curiosity-seekers mostly. It sort of wears us out," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police have arrested an 18-year-old city man in connection with a wave of tire slashings in a five-block area near the Capitol.

Police said Brian Frost, whose address was not immediately available, was charged late Tuesday night with one count of destruction of property.

Authorities said they believe three or four people slashed the tires on 133 cars between Monday night and early Tuesday morning.

Scores of motorists emerged from their homes Tuesday morning to find their cars tilted one way or the other, if not sitting lower to the ground because of four flats.

"You could probably understand it if they had taken a couple of tires, a dope addict or a thief," said Jim Piper as he removed two tires from his car. "But this is sick."

CDC urges Times Beach residents to move

EUREKA, Mo. (AP) — More than half of the 800 homeowners in the poison-tainted community of Times Beach have asked for temporary housing, say federal officials who want more residents to move out.

The federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta warned last week that dangerous levels of dioxin had been found in the 2,200-resident town southwest of St. Louis.

Dr. Henry Falk

At a town meeting Tuesday night, where about 800 people packed a school gymnasium, Dr. Henry Falk of the CDC urged residents to stay away until more extensive tests by the Environmental Protection Agency are completed.

"The best medical and scientific judgments indicate that people should avoid exposure to dioxin as much as possible," Falk said.

Dusty streets in the community were sprayed in the early 1970s with waste oil apparently contaminated with dioxin, a highly toxic byproduct of herbicide production.

Residents first learned of the contamination last month, and their problems were compounded when the Meramec River overflowed and filled the town with eight-foot floodwaters in early December.

Patrick Breheny, regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said at the meeting that more than 500 of the town's 800 homeowners had applied for temporary housing for flood victims, which the agency decided to provide after the CDC warning.

The government might set up a "temporary town" to house some Times Beach residents advised not to return, he said.

"Those who want to walk out, we'll put them up. We'll pay the rent. We feel sorry for you and I pray for you," Breheny said.

But some residents remained unconvinced.

"I'm staying here," 48-year-old Evelyn Zufall said at the meeting. "I love my home, and I've raised seven healthy children in it. I can't believe it (dioxin) is as dangerous as you say."

EPA technicians wearing protective suits and respirators had just begun a first round of soil sampling when the floods hit. They found dioxin concentrations up to 300 parts per billion. The EPA has ordered cleanup of sites with as little as one part per billion.

The EPA was not represented at the meeting, despite being invited by state officials. "It's sort of like having a wedding without the groom," said Bob Feigenbaum, chairman of the state House's energy committee, who helped arrange the meeting.

Many residents said they were unhappy that the EPA had not started its second round of soil samples in Times Beach.

"The U.S. government can put people on the moon, but they can't run these tests immediately," said Bob Atkinson, 48. "We need to know what is going to happen with our property; mine is useless with this thing hanging over my head."

"My home wasn't for sale before the floods, and its not for sale now," said Willow Johnson, 41. "Times Beach is a beautiful place to live. And our children want to go home."

Nuclear fusion reactor test successful, researchers say

PLAINSBORO, N.J. (AP) — The first U.S. test of a nuclear fusion reactor proved its superiority to other experimental fusion designs and opens the door to regular testing of the pioneering device in April, say Princeton University researchers.

The test of the $314 million Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor was called "a magical event" by scientists Tuesday. As is intended, it lasted only 50 milliseconds, barely a blink of the eye.

But at a news conference, the scientists said they were pleased with the experiment at 3:06 a.m. on Dec. 24, when the machine successfully heated hydrogen gas to form what is known as a plasma, in which the electrons and the nuclei are separated, a crucial early step before fusion can occur.

"This shows superior confinement qualities than other experiments," said Harold P. Furth, director of the Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory.

Fusion, which some scientists hope could power the 21st century, is the joining together of atoms to produce energy. It is the same process that makes the sun shine and is the opposite of the fission, splitting atoms apart, now used to generate nuclear power.

The Princeton scientists said fusion could be the energy source of the future because its major fuel, deuterium, can be extracted from ordinary seawater. It does not pose a major nuclear hazard and it does not burn scarce fossil fuels.

In the event of an accident in a fusion reactor, the reactions would end immediately and cooling would begin, instead of meltdown, which could occur in fission reactors.

Scientists achieved the initial fusion reaction at the odd hour because they were working around the clock, hoping for success before quitting for the Christmas weekend.

Having proven that the machine works, scientists now hope to stick to a timetable calling for "break-even," a point when the fusion process will produce as much energy as it uses, by 1986.

Furth said his group hopes to begin regular tests in April, slowly introducing changes such as different types of fuel, so that the amount of power required to ignite the reactor will decrease.

In 1993 or 1994, Furth said, "the energy creation becomes large," if experiments are successful. "By 2000, we could see serious commercialization start," he said.

The Tokamak is a doughnut-shaped, 35-foot-high stainless steel structure housed in a concrete building with 4-foot-thick walls. It was built on Princeton's sprawling James Forrestal Research Campus under a continuing grant from the U.S. Department of Energy.

Furth said the initial test did not produce any significant energy, but it was nonetheless "a magical event."

"The important thing is not the duration of its pulse, but that it came and we know that it happened," Furth said.

Robert H. Bauer, manager of the Chicago office of the Department of Energy, said the test used ordinary hydrogen gas as fuel. Later, scientists will use deuterium and tritium, both forms of hydrogen that are more easily fused and therefore require less energy to ignite.

The test was the first use of the Tokamak design for a nuclear fusion reactor, which was worked on in the Soviet Union in 1950 but never successfully implemented. Tokamak is the Russian acronym for the cylindrical magnetic chamber used in the process.

Other Tokamak facilities are currently under construction in Great Britain, Japan and the Soviet Union.

Massachusetts prisoner takes female social worker hostage

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — A state prison inmate, believed armed with a knife, grabbed a female social worker and held her hostage while demanding to speak to a television reporter.

Darnell Murphy, director of prison social workers, was taken prisoner in a counseling area at about 4 p.m. Tuesday, officials of the state prison at Walpole said.

The inmate had no accomplices and the rest of the all-male maximum security prison about 20 miles southwest of Boston was calm, said Gail Darnell, an assistant to the correction commissioner.

Officials would not identify the prisoner, but said they believed he was armed with a knife.

"This is an extremely serious situation," said Dennis Humphrey, an associate commissioner of the corrections department.

Asked if officials feared for the life of the woman, he said: "That's always a possibility, that an employee could be hurt. We're praying that doesn't happen."

In an unsuccessful attempt to satisfy the inmate's demand, officials allowed David Ropeik, a reporter for WCBV-TV in Boston, into the area at 11:30 p.m. Ropeik said he could be seen by the inmate, but could only see silhouettes of the hostage scene.

"He did not recognize me as I stood in the doorway," Ropeik told fellow reporters at 1:30 a.m. "After offering driver's license and a press card, he would not accept that." At one point, Ropeik was asked to provide a camera.

"He asked for another reporter from Channel 5, Jorge Quiroga," Ropeik said at the briefing in a prison cottage. "I am on standby now. It's Jorge's thing now."

Ropeik said Quiroga, also of WCBV, and the station's news director had been contacted.

Correction officers specializing in crisis intervention began talking to the inmate at 8 p.m., officials said. They are "trained to deal with exactly this type of situation," Ms. Darnell said.

Kelly injured in robbery attempt

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — John B. Kelly Jr., elder brother of the late Princess Grace of Monaco, was reported resting comfortably today in a hospital after he was shot resisting a robber.

John Kelly Jr.

The 55-year-old vice president of the U.S. Olympic Committee and a former Philadelphia city councilman was shot in the groin with a small-caliber pistol after he stopped at a service station to make a phone call, police said.

Kelly told police he was approached late Monday by a man brandishing a silver revolver who demanded his money and that he was shot when he resisted.

The gunman grabbed Kelly and as he "pushed the culprit back," police said, the gunman took a step backward and fired one shot into Kelly's groin.

"His condition is good and he's resting comfortably," a nursing supervisor at Broward General Medical Center, who refused to be named, said today.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — When Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. moves out of his celebrated, sparsely furnished apartment across from the state Capitol next week, only the first name will have to be changed on the mailbox.

Edmund Brown

Assembly Speaker Willie Brown said Tuesday that he plans to move into the state-owned apartment where the governor, who is not related, has lived for eight years.

"I need some place to stay," Willie Brown, a flamboyant San Francisco Democrat, told reporters. "I'm tired of living in a motel."

Edmund Brown, defeated in his race for the U.S. Senate by San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, leaves office Jan. 3. His successor is George Deukmejian, California's Republican attorney general.

It hasn't been decided if the Assembly speaker will get the governor's one-bedroom apartment or an identical one across the hall, which the state police has been using for security, said Jim Knibb of the General Services Department.

Knibb said the rent for the speaker will probably be the same as it is now — $425 a month.

The governor has paid the rent for his apartment, but the state has paid for the one across the hall.

The governor furnished his apartment with what he said were "odds and ends picked up from various state warehouses."

But the speaker, known for his stylish attire and expensive cars, said emphatically, "Any place I live in will not be furnished with early Goodwill."

Artist's New York studio robbed

By MARIANNE ARNEBERG
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Paul Foropouloscq could barely lift his eyes to the stark white walls of his Astoria art studio. Twisted, broken and empty picture frames littered the floor. The glass shards of a vase lay splintered in the corner. Colleagues and friends spoke in hushed tones, often at a loss for words of condolence.

Foropoulos, a 35-year-old artist internationally noted for his three-dimensional murals and paintings, had been robbed.

Sometime over the Christmas holiday weekend, thieves entered a roof-top skylight leading to his second-floor studio, walked down several flights of stairs, thwarted a burglar alarm, methodically stripped 41 works of art from their frames, loaded the paintings, ceramics and wood carvings into a vehicle and made a clean getaway, police said.

Their haul, including $2,400 in cash, is estimated at $400,000, according to Foropoulos, who recently moved to Whitestone from Maryland. But more important, he said softly as he sat in the barren remains of his studio, the art represented more than two years of work. The missing money, he said, is comparatively inconsequential.

"A number of years ago, I realized that I was not coming across to the wide-angle of the public," explained Foropoulos, a native of Greece. He decided he wanted to hold an exhibition. "So, for the last two and a half years, I tried to reduce selling paintings through commission to increase my private collection."

Detictive Tom Pinder said there are no leads in the case. People in an adjacent building heard an alarm ring for about three minutes at 4 a.m. Christmas Day. The apartment dwellers, however, did not see anything suspicious and the alarm was not reported to police, he said.

"It was definitely a professional job," Pinder said.

Just a few weeks ago, Foropoulos exhibited his works in a show at the Carnegie Conference Center at Rockefeller Center. "It was a celebration, a dream evening," he said, shuffling through photographs of the event. "It was the first time in many years that I had enough paintings for an exhibit."

His gaze was fixed on the photographs of the Dec. 3 opening. "But right now," he continued in his thick Greek accent, "all this work I did for exhibition is gone."

Foropoulos has been at the Broadway studio, which once housed a Greek theater, for only six months — conducting art classes, painting, sculpting and accepting commissions from a variety of private collectors who live in more than 30 countries, he said. He is perhaps best-known for a patented formula for paint that withstands temperature change and humidity and is used in his scenic work. His three-dimensional paintings are sold for $3,000 to $15,000 and take anywhere from a few weeks to a few months to complete.

Foropoulos is no stranger to robbery, however. While visiting New York in 1979, he was driving when another motorist cut him off, forcing him to slam into a parked car. When he awoke from the accident in a hospital, he learned that $51,000 worth of contract sketches had been stolen from the trunk of his demolished car.

Marilyn Monroe murder claim 'fabricated,' probe concludes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A claim by a private detective and writer that actress Marilyn Monroe was murdered 20 years ago is probably "a fabrication," officials have concluded after a 3½-month investigation.

The death of the platinum-haired starlet, an international sex symbol, was either suicide or caused by an accidental overdose of barbiturates, according to a 29-page document released Tuesday by the district attorney's office.

"The facts, as we have found them, do not support a finding of foul play," said District Attorney John Van de Kamp, adding no further investigation is planned.

Milo Speriglio, a private detective who claimed that the actress was murdered, promptly labeled the report "a cover-up."

"We know some of the witnesses lied to the district attorney's office," said Speriglio, whose agency has been investigating Miss Monroe's death for 10 years.

"The fact that I have a book on Marilyn out now has nothing to do with it," said Speriglio.

The district attorney's report said a murder would have required a "massive, in-place conspiracy" of everyone at the death scene, including "the actual killer or killers; the chief medical examiner-coroner; the autopsy surgeon...and most of all the police officers assigned to the case as well as their superiors."

The report added, "All known existing evidence causes us to believe that the (murder) story is a fabrication."

Van de Kamp said it was possible that while Miss Monroe's "ingestion of a lethal quantity of barbiturates was voluntary, she may have been in such a state of emotional confusion that she, herself, lacked a clearly formed purpose."

Speriglio said he intends to file suit in January seeking a grand jury investigation where witnesses would have to testify under oath.

"I'm very disappointed," he said. "I provided the district attorney with hard facts and evidence indicating that Marilyn Monroe was murdered. I gave him the identity of her killers."

Speriglio declined to reveal the identities to the press, describing them only as "a very famous political government appointee," "a prominent movie actor 20 years ago who is still alive today" and a doctor or person with medical knowledge.

Speriglio and Robert Slatzer, who contends he was secretly married to the actress on Oct. 4, 1952, in Tijuana, Mexico, claim Miss Monroe was killed shortly after the end of a romance with then-U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

Slatzer also criticized the district attorney's office, saying it was "slanted" in its investigation.

Miss Monroe was killed because she planned to call a press conference to talk about her relationship with Kennedy and an alleged CIA plot against Cuban leader Fidel Castro, Speriglio said.

Xavier Cugat hospitalized

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — Xavier Cugat, the flamboyant maestro of Latin music who became known as the "Rumba King," is hospitalized with heart failure, and attending doctors today called his condition "grave."

The 82-year-old Spanish band leader, who has lived in his hometown of Barcelona since returning from the United States five years ago, has been in an intensive care unit since Christmas Eve, associates said.

It was the second time Cugat needed intensive medical care for heart failure in less than a year.

Cugat's associates said he felt ill during Christmas Eve dinner at the hotel where he is living.

Cugat, the prime mover behind the Latin music craze of the 1930s and 1940s, sparked the careers of stars Desi Arnaz and Dinah Shore, among others. The Spanish-born, Cuban-raised "Cugie," as he was nicknamed by friends, came to America in the 1920s.

While winning fame as the king of the rumba beat, Cugat also made headlines with his fiery marital disputes.

Cugat had a fistfight with fashion designer Oleg Cassini when he found Cassini dancing with his second wife, Lorraine Cugat, in a Hollywood nightclub. She later sued for divorce, claiming she surprised Cugat in a Chicago hotel room with his band singer, Abbe Lane, then 19.

Tea still important part of Indian life

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW DELHI, India — "Won't you have a cup of tea?"

Throughout the Indian subcontinent, whether at a hurried meeting in a busy government office or in a chance encounter in some remote mud-hut village, there is always time for this basic offer of hospitality.

And the offer is rarely refused. For, despite the pressures of modernization that have virtually erased such niceties in some parts of the world, here the tea ritual is part of a tradition, a valued part of life's rhythm. It is also a fundamental ingredient of common courtesy and an important lubricant in commercial dealings.

"Many old values have been weakened by modern influences, but hospitality is still an essential part of our lives," said Yogendra Singh, chairman of the Center for the Study of Social Systems at Jawaharlal Nehru University here. "So far, none of the counter-values like efficiency, science or technology have touched it."

To a Westerner, the limits of this hospitality are often surprisingly broad. For example, in India it is not at all unusual for house guests to settle in for weeks or even months. The host may grumble, but because the ability to provide generous hospitality is a revered social value, he will rarely ask his guests to depart.

AN 18TH-century English traveler recalled that a merchant in Kashmir built a new home for himself rather than expel his guests of four years. Attitudes have changed some since then, but not a lot.

"A household with visitors is considered to be lucky," said Veena Dua, a Delhi University sociologist. "It is a sign that the host is both prosperous and generous."

For members of India's Parliament, the obligations of hospitality can be especially arduous. Constituents who make the long journey to the capital expect to be taken care of by the man they helped elect.

Many members have set aside small, dormitory-like rooms in their homes to accommodate visiting constituents. Others, with the help of party donations, put their visitors up in nearby commercial lodgings.

"An MP can suffer difficulties but he can't turn away his voters," Dharam Dass Shastri, a member of Parliament, said.

Convention requires that a visitor, even if stopping only briefly and calling unannounced at one's home, must take at least some food or drink before leaving. This tradition remains largely intact, despite occasional strains.

SOCIOLOGIST DUA recalled that she consumed so much tea while doing house-to-house field work in rural north India that she often became ill. Her status as an honored guest, which meant tea with a high milk content, only made the problem worse. Still, she did not refuse her hosts.

"It would have been a degrading insult if I had," she said.

So strong is this obligation to accept food or drink offered by one's host that militant low-caste Hindus pushing for equality have employed it as a tool in their struggle.

In Afghanistan, guerrilla groups carry no food, water or tents because they know they will be fed and housed by villagers along their route.

"It's a matter of honor to share what you have," an Afghan tribesman said.

HOSPITALITY IS anchored in ancient tradition. In Hindu India, Vedic scriptures exhort the host to treat his guest as if he were a god; generous hospitality brings good karma.

In northern India and in Moslem Pakistan, where Mogul kings once held sway, the Arab tradition of honoring the guest reinforced existing custom. In Afghanistan, hospitality is a cornerstone of the age-old Pushtu tribal code.

Whatever its origins, hospitality survives, even in such unlikely places as the bureaucracy. In New Delhi, at the most harried government press briefings, white-suited waiters carrying trays of tea and snacks weave their way through crowds of scribbling journalists.

Visitors who by mistake get into the wrong office are often redirected only after sharing a cup of tea.

Westerners, many of whom tend to dismiss the rituals of hospitality as a waste of time, quickly learn here that pausing for a cup of tea may delay slightly the desired action, but that refusing it will more than likely preclude the action altogether.

"Wat you see as a frill we believe contains a lot of substance," Singh said.

SOMETIMES, HOWEVER, this difference is difficult for even the most understanding Westerners to understand. A group of foreigners on a government-sponsored outing to a new family planning clinic in Rajasthan last year was treated to a sumptuous lunch en route, followed a few hours later by a lavish afternoon tea, then arrived at the clinic shortly after it had closed for the day.

Still, however superfluous these things may seem to the outsider, a key reason for their survival is that they serve a need. In a part of the world where personal relationships are vital in accomplishing even routine tasks, such as getting an airline ticket or having a telephone installed, hospitality is an important factor in making and maintaining such relationships.

"Hospitality forms the necessary bonds to survive in life," said Romesh Thaper, social critic and editor of a New Delhi magazine that addresses social issues.

The expectation of hospitality is so engrained in South Asians that those who travel to the West often find it extremely difficult to adjust.

"I became a nobody," a disillusioned senior Pakistani government official said after his first visit to the United States earlier this year.

NEW DELHI psychoanalyst Sudhir Kakar said that a friend who went to New York for the first time was crushed that an American acquaintance he had once entertained in his home not only failed to meet him at the airport but was unable to see him for several days.

"He felt that something horrible had happened to the relationship," Kakar said. "He was very hurt."

Although there is little doubt that the pleasantries of South Asian hospitality slow the pace of life, there are people who argue that they generate efficiency in the long term.

Social scientist Yogindra Singh said that studies conducted in American factories found that a good personal relationship among the workers was the most important single factor in the level of productivity.

"The notion of efficiency as it is known in the West is short-sighted," Sikh said. "Maybe it would be more efficient to spend a bit of time sipping tea and getting to know someone."

Legislator has last word

Rep. John Rousselot, R-Calif., was the lame-duck lawmaker who got in the final word as the House quit for the year.

Moments before the chamber was gavelled to adjournment, Rousselot, defeated in his bid for re-election, gave a swan-song speech and ended it by declaring: "I move we balance the federal budget."

180-pound baby born

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The baby was three weeks premature. But what's three weeks when your mother's been pregnant for 22 months?

The newborn in this case was a 180-pound baby elephant born at the Washington Park Zoo, said public relations director Jane Hartline.

The baby female, doing well after birth, made its debut before the public Monday,Ms. Hartline said.

The Portland zoo has successfully bred 22 elephants, the most of any zoo in the world, partly because it has special equipment to control the huge beasts, the spokeswoman said.

"Bull elephants are the most dangerous animals in the world," she said. "There are hardly any zoos that have any bull elephants at all, and we have two."

Doubtful Mao's widow's execution will be carried out

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PEKING — By solemn order of the Supreme People's Court of China, Mao Tse-tung's widow and a chief lieutenant face execution within 30 days for capital crimes committed during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution. But there are strong doubts here that the executions will be carried out.

Their two-year reprieve for rehabilitation expires Jan. 25, and top officials recently said that neither Jiang Qing, the 69-year-old former movie star who married Mao in the 1930s, nor Zhang Chunqiao, 67, the former vice premier, has shown any sign of repentance. Under the country's 3-year-old criminal code, they would normally be executed at the end of the reprieve by a single shot fired into the back of the head.

The widespread belief among Chinese and diplomats here, however, is that a last-minute commutation will amend the sentences to life imprisonment. But there are also indications that final agreement has not yet been reached within the leadership. Indeed, the press has been reporting an upsurge of leftist obstruction to Deng Xiaoping's policies, and renewed prosecution of Gang of Four subordinates. All this may indicate pressure on Deng to carry through with the death penalty.

Other Marxist countries have a tradition of New Year's Day amnesties, but not China. The only da she (big release) took place in 1959 on the 10th anniversary of the People's Republic. Then the decree was signed not by Mao but by President Liu Shaoqi, who later became the chief target of the Gang of Four. The verdict rendered against Madame Mao on Jan. 25, 1981, by the Special Bench of the Supreme People's Court specifically found that she "framed and persecuted" State President Liu and on her orders he "was persecuted to death."

Zhang's crime was that he "collaborated with Jiang Qing in organizing and leading a counter-revolutionary clique for the purpose of overthrowing the People's Democratic Dictatorship" and specifically engineered an armed clash to seize power in Shanghai in 1966.

THROUGHOUT THE GANG of Four's trial in late 1980 and the beginning of 1981 Zhang defied the court by refusing to speak. Jiang Qing frequently interrupted the proceeding to defend her role in the Cultural Revolution and was seen on television being dragged from the courtroom, which was open to selected Chinese but closed to foreign journalists.

Of the other Gang of Four members, former Party Vice Chairman Wang Hongwen, 50, drew a life sentence and Party ideologist Yao Wenyuan, 49, was sentenced to 20 years. Ten lesser co-defendants, all elderly, drew terms up to 18 years but recently were reported paroled to hospitals because of poor health.

Meanwhile a Hong Kong newspaper with authoritative Peking connections, Da Gong Bao, said in early November that preliminary legal proceedings had begun in Peking against Jiang Qing's "five big commanders" in the Cultural Revolution, four university students and one teacher, whose speeches and wall posters ignited the 10-year upheaval. There has been no mention of the students, Nie Yangzi, Kaui Dafu, Tan Houlan, Wang Dabin and Han Aijing, in the official press. Teacher Nie Yangzi is credited with putting up the first poster of the period, a polemic against so-called capitalist roaders that was immediately endorsed by Chairman Mao.

Trials of provincial followers of the Gang of Four apparently have been underway fairly continuously since the chief defendants themselves were toppled from power in October 1976, a month after Mao's death. One proceeding in Shanghai was reported just before the National Party Congress in September.

A long interruption midway through the original Gang of Four trial at year end 1980-81 suggested strong differences if not downright embarrassment over the proceedings. Only short portions were televised, but apparently these were enough to win sympathy for Jiang, who insisted she was carrying out Chairman Mao's instructions and defended the instructions as correct. A year later, the Communist Party Central Committee finally went on record that Mao indeed was personally responsible for the Cultural Revolution.

Deng Xiaoping, who became China's paramount leader soon after the leftists were purged, told a visiting statesman this summer that he expected Jiang would be spared. A published report in Hong Kong during the summer claimed that Deng himself petitioned the Supreme People's Court for clemency, citing three grounds: First that "a poisonous snake is harmless after its fangs are pulled out," second that the condemned woman's relationship to Mao should be taken into consideration, and finally that it would not be politically useful to execute her. Months have passed, however, without any mention of the subject in the official Peking press. A usually well-informed official source said as recently as Tuesday that he doubted there would be an execution.

WHILE THE OFFICIAL press has ignored the approaching end of Jiang Qing's reprieve, it has been busily reported instances of obstructionism by leftist survivors. In strategic Jiangsu Province of Eastern China, according to a Nanking newspaper's report this fall, supporters of a party branch secretary who "rose to prominence" during the Cultural Revolution openly rebelled when police arrived to arrest him last February. "The prison van was surrounded, its sides were torn up and its right front and rear tires were deflated," the Nanking newspaper reported. "Nine judicial personnel were surrounded and attacked for more than four hours. As a result, Pan Changxiu the party secretary was not taken into custody that day." Eventually he was sentenced to eight years and kicked out of the party.

One problem for Deng and his allies in handling Jiang Qing's case is that while the new party line allows no exemptions from the law for government officials and party functionaries, Jiang and Zhang would actually be getting special treatment if their reprieve is, in effect, made permanent without any contrition.

Peackeeping force may be increased, official says

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A senior White House official today said that the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon may have to be quintupled to 20,000 men in order to effect a total withdrawal of the 30,000 Israeli troops, 40,000 Syrian forces and 8,000 to 10,000 PLO guerrillas still in the country.

That will mean at least a doubling of the current U.S. contingent of 1,200 G.I.'s, the official said, although he was unwilling to predict when the additional forces would be required. The MNF today numbers about 4,000 troops,mostly from France, the United States and Italy.

A large percentage of the new forces are believed required to police the Beirut-to-Damascus highway which would be the main exit route for thousands of Syrian forces, which have been in Lebanon since they came in 1976 in the guise of an Arab peacekeeping army.

The disclosure was made as Lebanese and Israeli negotiators held their first official negotiations since 1949, meeting for six hours under American sponsorship to discuss the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon as well as the signing of a non-aggression pact between Israel and Lebanon.

ALTHOUGH THE U.S. is energetically trying to persuade other nations, including Great Britain, Canada, Brazil and several other Latin American nations to contribute peace forces, a considerable strengthening of the U.S. army there is inevitable because of the desires of the Lebanese Government.

President Amin Gemayel wants the United States, which so far has taken a secondary role to that of France, to play a key part in guaranteeing security in the 25-mile zone adjacent to Israel's northern Galilee border, which was the site of the PLO buildup that led to the June 6th Israeli invasion.

That prospect is welcomed by officials here because they believe Lebanon, with American help, could play an increasingly important role in guaranteeing the security of the Middle East, in particular in the Persian Gulf, although they acknowledge that is still a long way off.

National Security Council staffers, for example, have developed contingency plans that might permit U.S. warships to call at Lebanese ports, an invaluable strategic asset that a peaceful Lebanese settlement might make possible for the first time.

Above all, officials here believe the Israeli-Lebanese negotiations, which will resume on Thursday in the northern Israeli town of Kiryat Shmona, will begin to transform the atmosphere and enable the spotlight to gradually shift from Lebanon back to the broader Arab-Israeli peace process.

IN PARTICULAR, the policymakers hope that by February Jordan's King Hussein will offer to join peace talks with Israel for a settlement of the Palestinian dispute on the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

"If we started to get troop withdrawals," he added, "this would change the environment quite dramatically. The Egyptians would be pleased which in turn would give everyone on the margin (Jordan, moderate West Bank Palestinians and Saudi Arabia) a little more courage to go forward."

A phased withdrawal of Israeli and Syrian troops is envisaged with the remaining PLO guerrillas quitting Lebanon before there are any substantial Israeli or Syrian withdrawals. The multinational peace force would be simultaneously beefed up as the other foreign troops withdraw.

Vital to the success of this game plan are the visits here in January of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak followed by the rescheduled visit of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who canceled his planned U.S. trip last month when his wife died suddenly.

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.876%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payment.
