Deposition by turns contrite, angry

By John Solomon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — By turns humble and defiant, President Clinton tussled with prosecutors over "the truth of my relationship" with Monica Lewinsky in a grand jury deposition released Monday by Congress and broadcast unedited across a broad spectrum of American television.

The videotape and 3,183 pages of printed material were provided by Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr to augment his report to the House. Republicans in Congress voted to release the material as a prelude to a possible impeachment inquiry.

The public's main focus was on the videotape of Clinton's Aug. 17 appearance before a federal grand jury investigating whether Clinton committed perjury or took other steps to cover up his relationship with Ms. Lewinsky, the former White House intern.

"It's an embarrassing and personally painful thing," Clinton declared in testimony recorded in secret and now laid bare to the nation and world.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, minimized the day's events.

"I don't expect a meaningful impact on the public's overall impression of the president or the process that's under way," he said. "Based on the expectations built up by both sides, the broadcast failed to register on the Richter scale."

Presidential spokesman Mike McCurry said it "should now be clear to everyone"

The Confederate Air Force's AirSho'98 on the weekend of Oct. 3 and 4 at Midland International Airport will feature more than a hundred vintage warbirds from the World War II era, supersonic military jet aircraft, aerobatic civilian airplanes, skydivers and a jet-powered truck.

The CAF's 35th annual AirSho is to begin at noon Saturday, Oct. 3, with a veritable showcase of aviation's premier fighters from World War I biplanes to today's supersonic fighters.

Sunday's focus is to be on the CAF's Ghost Squadron, which started off with Old Red Nose, a North American P-51 Mustang, under the leadership of the late Lloyd Nolen in 1957.

Tickets to AirSho'98 are $8 for adults and $4 for children in advance of the show and are $10 and $6 at the gate.

The CAF's aircraft include the old United States Army Air Force (USAAF) Curtiss-Wright P-40 Warhawk, the Republic P-47 Thunderbolt, the North American P-51 Mustang, the Lockheed P-38 Lightning; the Navy's and the Marine Corps' Grumman series of Wildcat, Hellcat and Bearcat fighters, the Grumman Avenger torpedo bomber, the Chance Vought Corsair; USAAF bombers, such as the Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress and B-29 Superfortress, the North American B-25 Mitchell and the Consolidated B-24 Liberator and former "enemy" fighters, including the German Luftwaffe Messerschmitt Bf. 109 and Japan's Mitsubishi A6M Reisen "Zero."

The Saturday, Oct. 3, AirSho is to feature aerobatic pilot Jan Collmer in his Fina 300L monoplane and Wingwalker Teresa Stokes; the Jet Truck "Shockwave," and the Toyota Airsports Corolla.

The CAF's "Evolution of Fighters" show at 2:30 p.m. is to feature World War I, World War II and Korean War aircraft as well as the U.S. Navy's McDonnell-Douglas F/A-18 Hornet, which is flown by the Navy's Blue Angels aerobatic team and a demonstration by the AV-8B Harrier.

The Saturday Night Special Event at 7:15 o'clock is to include performance by sailplane pilot

Flying Tigers among those to be inducted into Hall of Fame

World War II's American Volunteer Group (AVG), the famous "Flying Tigers," are among those United States aviators who are hailed as heroes in that 1939-1945 war to preserve freedom and liberty to be inducted into the Confederate Air Force's American Combat Airman Hall of Fame on Oct. 1 prior to the CAF's weekend AirSho'98 at Midland International Airport.

The aviators and ground crew and aircrew members to be honored in the second-annual American Combat Airman Hall of Fame include the celebrated Flying Tigers, who, in late 1941 through mid-1942, challenged Japanese air power over mainland China; individual U.S. Army Air Forces, Navy and Marine Corps aviators in the war's European and Pacific Theaters and a 1942 Navy Torpedo

MISSION VIEJO, Calif. (AP) — Florence Griffith Joyner, the glamorous Olympic speed sensation who won three gold medals at the 1988 Games, was found dead Monday at 38 after a history of heart trouble.

FloJo, as she was known, apparently died at home during the night. Her husband and coach, Al Joyner, called 911 to report she was not breathing. An autopsy was scheduled.

Track champion Greg Foster said he was told by Griffith Joyner's sister-in-law, Olympic track-and-field medalist Jackie Joyner-Kersee, that Griffith Joyner apparently died of a heart problem. She had also suffered a seizure in 1996.

At her height, she was the fastest woman alive and a dazzling combination of speed, style and attitude, with movie-star looks, a mane of black hair flying behind her, audacious bodysuits that showed off her muscular figure and brightly colored 6-inch fingernails.

"We were dazzled by her speed, humbled by her talent, and captivated by her style," President Clinton said. "Though she rose to the pinnacle of the world of sports, she never forgot where she came from."

Griffith Joyner's muscular physique prompted talk of steroid use. She insisted she never used performance enhancers and she never failed a drug test.

Hurricane Georges lashes through Caribbean islands

ST. JOHN'S, Antigua (AP) — Hurricane Georges began lashing the easternmost islands of the Caribbean on Sunday, forcing families to huddle in basements and businesses to pile sandbags in front of their entrances.

Winds were gusting to 50 mph in Antigua by late afternoon, with forecasters predicting the hurricane's full 130-mph fury by later Sunday evening.

Government officials throughout the region warned that Georges could cause the worst damage in decades. The storm is a category 4 hurricane, comparable to Hurricane Andrew, which tore through parts of southern Florida in 1992.

Residents of Guadeloupe and Dominica, fearing the hurricane would peel off roofs from homes, moved beds into their basements or headed to hurricane shelters in schools. Church congregations on many islands cut short Sunday services to convert their sanctuaries into shelters.

'Hurricanes come every year here, but this one looks like it's serious.'
— Jose Firpi, resident of San Juan

"We expect a full house tonight," said Priscilla Nicholas, a volunteer at the Seventh Day Adventist church in Cedar Grove, Antigua.

The eye of Georges was expected to pass over the small, eastern Caribbean islands late Sunday before moving on to the U.S. and British Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico on Monday, according to the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

The center announced a hurricane watch for the Dominican Republic on Sunday evening. Earlier, it warned that storm-surge flooding of 5 feet to 10 feet above normal tide levels and 5 inches to 8 inches of rain should be expected in islands within an 85-mile radius of the eye of the hurricane.

On Antigua, workers took down satellite dishes, while others removed aluminum light poles from the parking lot a shopping center. Rain began at noon and was growing more intense by the hour.

Emergency management officials moved through the shelters, handing out kits of flashlights, mosquito coils, water and toilet paper.

Officials in Dominica shut off water service at noon, saying silt caused by the heavy rains was overloading treatment plants. Emergency workers compared the storm to 1979's Hurricane David, which devastated banana farms — the island's biggest employers.

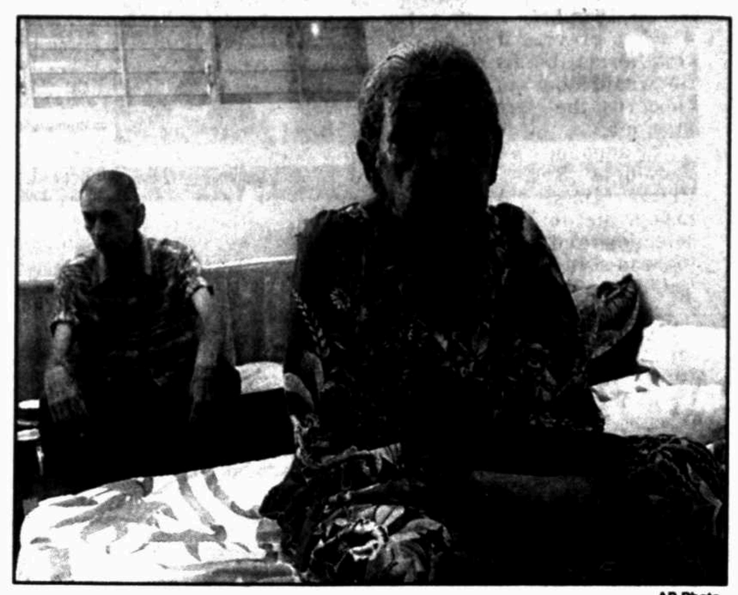

In Guadeloupe, raging seas swept into streets in the northern towns of Anse-Bertrand and Campeche.

In the U.S. territory of Puerto Rico, where 3.8 million residents waited in the path of the storm, many people rushed to stores for plywood, water and canned food.

"Hurricanes come every year here, but this one looks like it's serious," said Jose Firpi as he boarded up windows in his San Juan home.

Gov. Pedro Rossello activated the island's national guard and ordered officials to begin preparing more than 300 shelters. American Airlines — the island's chief lifeline to the U.S. mainland — announced it was canceling all flights into Puerto Rico on Monday.

The U.S. Federal Emergency Management Agency sent early response teams to the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico before the storm.

Malaysia police crack down on anti-government protests

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Ignoring a visit by the British queen, thousands of supporters of Malaysia's ousted deputy premier clashed Monday with police trying to end two weeks of protest — the biggest outpouring of dissent during Mahathir Mohamad's 17-year rule.

After calling on army reservists and riot police to quell the unrest that reflected a pitched battle for power in this Muslim nation, Prime Minister Mahathir joined Queen Elizabeth II at the finale of the Commonwealth Games.

The arrest of former Deputy Prime Minister Anwar Ibrahim added a volatile element to Malaysia's political and economic troubles.

With police helicopters buzzing overhead, more than 1,000 officers chased mobs of protesters down side streets and blocked roads in an effort to contain angry demonstrators.

Several thousand more demonstrators took to the streets in other parts of the capital, where they were chased by riot police. Reporters saw police detaining at least a dozen protesters.

Anwar, tossed out of the government earlier this month, was expected to face charges of sexual misconduct and disturbing the public order. He has vehemently denied the charges, saying they were cooked up by Mahathir.

As with many other Asian nations, Malaysia is struggling with a worsening economy. But those frustrations haven't mounted to the levels in Indonesia, where people rioted spontaneously during protests that led to the downfall of President Suharto in May.

But Anwar has been leading an increasingly vocal opposition to the 72-year-old prime minister since Sept. 2, when Mahathir fired the man he once had designated his successor.

Expecting to be arrested any moment, Anwar gave fiery speeches and incited crowds to shout "Mahathir out!" and "Long live Anwar." Such attacks on the dignity and authority of the prime minister were unheard of.

The sight of 35,000 people, punching the air with their fists, waving banners and shouting "Reform!" at a downtown square on Sunday may have been the last straw.

Two hours later, a masked team of special agents broke down Anwar's front door. Federal police said Anwar was placed under indefinite detention as a security risk.

A human rights group, Suaram, said 34 had been arrested on the streets Monday. Anwar and five allies were detained under the Internal Security Act, a law that allows indefinite imprisonment without charges or trial for those deemed a threat to national security.

The unrest threatened to overshadow the visit by the queen and her festive closing of the Commonwealth Games, which feature athletes from countries that once belonged to the British Empire.

By Monday night, Mahathir had declared that the Games were such a success he would make Sept. 28 a national holiday. He stood in the center of the National Stadium absorbing several minutes of applause, then greeted Queen Elizabeth, as well as Malaysia's queen and king, at the dance, song, and fireworks-filled closing ceremonies.

Thousands of supporters, who had chanted "Reform, reform" outside the courthouse where they had expected Anwar to be arraigned, were dispersed by riot police.

Anwar's wife, Azizah Ismail, designated the leader of the reform movement before her husband's arrest, waited futilely for his arraignment.

"If Dr. Mahathir thinks that by ordering the police to act like gangsters he will frighten the people from supporting this reformation movement, he is dreaming. I think he has cut himself off from reality," she told reporters.

Anwar has been accused of sodomy. Newspaper reports said Anwar's adopted brother and a friend allegedly confessed in a court hearing Saturday that they committed sodomy with him.

Anwar has charged that defendants had been tortured into confessing. Mahathir denied the allegation.

Sodomy is a crime in this conservative Muslim country, and both men were sentenced to six months in prison.

Secretary of State meets Iran's foreign minister

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Iran's foreign minister, in the highest-level contact between the nations in two decades, were meeting Monday with six other countries concerned about civil war in Afghanistan and the potential for regional conflict.

Convened by U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan, the meeting is the first by the group of eight nations since the Taliban overran the opposition stronghold Mazar-e-Sharif in Afghanistan on Aug. 8 and killed several Iranian diplomats. The Taliban religious militia controls about 90 percent of Afghanistan.

The Clinton administration has condemned the slayings, but has urged Iran not to respond with force. Tehran has amassed 200,000 troops at the Afghan border and has conducted intimidating military exercises.

Albright hoped to use Monday's forum with Iranian Foreign Minister Kamal Kharazi and other ministers to call again for restraint and to press Iran to become a "responsible member of the international community."

The so-called "six plus two" group of nations, which has met before at sub-minister levels, includes representatives from the United States and Russia and six Afghan neighbors — Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and China.

Not included in the U.N. talks were diplomats from the Taliban or the nearly overrun government of Burhanuddin Rabbani, which is still recognized as the official representative of Afghanistan at the United Nations.

Although the focus of the U.N. meeting was tensions along the Afghan border, the first face-to-face meeting between Albright and Kharazi also signifies increasing U.S.-Iran contacts that could lead to restoration of diplomatic ties.

Since moderate Mohammad Khatami became Iran's president in August 1997, the United States and Iran have been making tentative moves through cultural and academic exchanges toward repairing the dramatic rift that began in 1979 when Iranian students took 52 Americans hostage at the U.S. embassy for 444 days.

Iran is still controlled by hardline religious fundamentalists who see the United States as the "great Satan." But Khatami has called for a "dialogue of civilizations" and, like President Clinton, he was addressing the U.N. General Assembly on Monday. The last time an Iraninan president spoke to the General Assembly was in 1986.

Albright extended an olive branch in June, suggesting that the United States is ready to resume a bilateral dialogue with Iran — something Tehran's leaders have so far rejected.

"We are ready to explore further ways to build mutual confidence and avoid misunderstanding," Albright told the Asia Society in New York then. "The Islamic Republic should consider parallel steps."

She called for Iran to halt its support of terrorism and instead join "multilateral efforts to protect international security."

Last week, Albright said it is "interesting" that Kharazi has decided to address the Asia Society this Friday in what U.S. officials suggest could be a response to her speech.

"We have made clear that the United States is prepared to have a direct dialogue with Iran," said State Department spokesman James Rubin said. "They have not chosen to take us up on that offer. ... We are going to be watching very closely to see what Foreign Minister Kharazi says in his speech to the Asia Society."

Russia's Central Bank prints money, offers credits to help banks

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia has issued $55 million in new rubles in a bid to prevent the collapse of commercial banks, the Central Bank said Monday, playing down concerns the move would fuel inflation.

The announcement came while President Boris Yeltsin and Prime Minister Yevgeny Primakov met to complete Cabinet selections and work on a strategy to jump-start the moribund economy.

The financial crisis has caused a backlog of bank payments totaling more than $1.9 billion, Andrei Kozlov, first deputy chairman of the Central Bank, told a news conference Monday.

The bank launched an emergency rescue plan on Friday to help settle $613 million of the payments, Kozlov said.

As part of the effort, the Central Bank printed $55 million in rubles and issued short-term credits to banks. Kozlov stressed that the amount was too small to affect the ruble's rate and inflation.

But many analysts feared the move may set a dangerous precedent, and if such a policy is continued, it could fuel inflation and lead to further declines in the ruble. The ruble is officially valued at 16.3 to the dollar, down from six a month ago.

Critics have accused the government of responding slowly to the crisis. The rescue plan for the banks represents the biggest emergency effort so far.

Primakov has been in office 10 days but has yet to outline an overall economic strategy or put his Cabinet in place. Key jobs, such as the finance minister's post, are among about a dozen seats still empty.

The financial crisis has caused a backlog of bank payments totaling more than $1.9 billion.

"We are going to finalize the personnel issue with (Primakov) today," Yeltsin said at the start of his meeting with Primakov.

But only one Cabinet appointee was announced after the meeting: Gennady Kulik, 63, a Soviet-era agricultural official and a member of parliament's Agrarian Faction, was named deputy prime minister for agriculture.

Kulik, a defender of collective farms and a staunch opponent of private land ownership, has been among those who have blocked Yeltsin's plans to carry out land reform.

Deputy Prime Minister Alexander Shokhin, after meeting with Yeltsin on Monday, said the government's economic plan would be unveiled Wednesday. He did not reveal any details.

He also said that decisions on how much money the government should print should be made jointly by the Finance Ministry and the Central Bank.

In other economic developments:

■ Russia's Finance Ministry will meet Thursday with representatives of major Western banks who believe the government has given preferential treatment to Russian banks in tackling the crisis. Acting Finance Minister Mikhail Zadornov said Monday the government will seek a mutually acceptable plan for restructuring the government's ruble-denominated debt and all investors will be treated as equals.

■ The Central Bank canceled electronic currency trading on the interbank exchange, though street trading continued. The bank said it needed more time to determine which banks should be allowed to participate on the currency markets.

■ Russian stocks lost ground in sparse activity. The Russian Trading System Index fell 4.6 percent to close at 47.81, the first time the index closed below 50 points.

■ Primakov named Shokhin, considered a moderate reformer, to head Russia's delegation to the International Monetary Fund. An IMF mission is in Moscow for talks on Russia's loan program.

■ The State Statistics Committee announced that unemployment increased slightly last month to 11.5 percent. The rate is expected to rise because of the worsening crisis.

Rebels capture town in eastern Congo near strategic air base; make rapid advances

GOMA, Congo (AP) — Rebels fighting to oust President Laurent Kabila said Monday they had gained control of several more towns, and denied claims that government forces were bearing down on their strongholds.

Rebels said they had captured the eastern town of Kamituga near a strategic government air base on Friday after taking Matila, also in the east, and the northeastern town of Isiro on Thursday. The claims could not be independently confirmed.

When the rebellion broke out seven weeks ago, the rebels made rapid advances from their eastern base and even managed to capture key bases in the far west of the vast West African country. But they have been driven back in recent weeks since Angola, Zimbabwe and Namibia entered the fray to help Kabila.

The rebels, who say Kabila is corrupt and has failed to implement democratic reforms, still control large swaths of land and several major cities in eastern Congo. The government has promised that massive strikes against rebels in the east are forthcoming.

Rebel information officer Etienne Ngongura denied Monday that government forces were surrounding rebel headquarters in Goma and the major eastern town, Bukavu.

"Both towns are safe," Ngongura said in Goma. "There are no threats."

One week ago, local Mai-Mai fighters and Rwandan Hutu rebels allied with government forces attacked Goma for six hours before withdrawing.

Ngongura dismissed as "psychological warfare" unconfirmed reports that forces loyal to Kabila had distributed leaflets in Goma warning of another attack.

He said he had not seen any leaflets, and said even if they had been circulated, they were only meant to frighten residents and had no military significance.

Truck drivers plying the route between Goma and towns to the north said the roads were safe, and there appeared to be no military activity in the area.

Kabila claims Uganda and Rwanda are the driving forces behind the rebellion. Uganda admits it has troops in northeastern Congo to defend its security interests, and Rwanda has reserved the right to intervene to protect itself from Rwandan Hutu rebel attacks.

Both countries, which were instrumental in putting Kabila in power 16 months ago, say he has failed to get rid of Ugandan and Rwandan rebels who are using eastern Congo as a base from which to attack their countries.

Albanian prime minister calls for Cabinet changes to help stabilize country

TIRANA, Albania (AP) — Albania's prime minister promised Monday to make changes in his Cabinet to help stabilize Europe's poorest country — but only after the political unrest has ceased.

Prime Minister Fatos Nano said the changes would take place over three months, but gave no further details.

Violence exploded last week after the assassination of popular opposition leader Azem Hajdari. Hajdari's death sparked demonstrations by followers of former President Sali Berisha, who accused Nano of the killing and demanded he and the government resign.

Armed crowds stormed government buildings and took control of state radio and television for several hours.

After meeting with his Cabinet on Monday, Nano told state-run Albanian television that the ministers had discussed steps to prevent Albania from falling back to "abnormality."

Officials from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe visited Albania this weekend in an attempt to mediate. The officials criticized Berisha for inciting the violence, but also said Nano's government had been slow in fighting corruption.

"But we'll do one thing at a time. Now we're still cracking down on the attempt of a coup d'etat."

Albania's parliament lifted Berisha's immunity last week, paving the way for his arrest on charges of trying to overthrow the government.

The capital remained tense Monday.

The house of one of the prosecutors charged with investigating last week's violence was struck by grenades Monday. Prosecutors accused Berisha of orchestrating the attack.

Also Monday, the government-run ATA news agency said its former director Ilir Zhilla was arrested on charges of taking part in an armed uprising. Zhilla led the news agency under Berisha.

He is the second journalist to be arrested in two days.

Key Russian government positions remain vacant in time of crisis

By Michael Wines
New York Times News Service

MOSCOW — Russia's leaders offered more assurances Monday that the country's fiscal crisis could be tamed without provoking high inflation or social unrest. But with key positions in the government still unfilled, few people seemed to accord the promises much weight.

Neither President Boris Yeltsin nor his prime minister, Yevgeny Primakov, have settled on a choice for finance minister, perhaps the most important post in the new government next to Primakov's. The finance minister will carry out many of the government's crisis measures.

The man who currently holds the post, Mikhail Zadornov, pledged Monday that foreign investors would receive equal treatment with Russians in negotiations to reschedule the payment of $40 million in government bonds that was frozen when the crisis broke last month.

Zadornov also said the government would pay at least 40 billion rubles in back wages to government workers by the end of the year without having to print additional money that might spur a new round of inflation.

But both statements more or less contradict policies already announced by the central bank and one of the new deputy prime ministers, Aleksandr Shokhin.

Shokhin has supported printing money to quickly pay off wage arrears, and the central bank has already said that it will purchase government bonds held by Russian banks as a means of bailing them out of their financial difficulties.

Zadornov is one of the few market advocates remaining from the government that Yeltsin dismissed last month. He refused to say Monday whether his own job was in jeopardy, but Yeltsin is known to be looking at other candidates.

Shokhin said Monday that the government might issue a schedule on Thursday to pay wage arrears and improve tax collection. He also suggested that the government would soon unveil new financial instruments aimed at attracting investors with hard currency and perhaps guaranteed by a consortium of Western banks rather than the Russian government.

What little remains of Russia's financial markets took no solace from Zadornov's or Shokhin's remarks. Trading in the ruble was suspended at midafternoon Monday as the exchange rate reached as much as 19 rubles to the dollar, three times the level of barely a month ago.

In St. Petersburg, about 1,000 pro-Communist demonstrators, some carrying portraits of Stalin, marched through the center of the city to protest price increases. And in France, the leader of Russia's Communist Party, Gennadi Zyuganov, said Primakov's government might represent Russia's last chance to avert a military dictatorship or civil war.

"It is important for us to support Primakov's government," he said. "The Yeltsin era is finished. It is very important for us not to end up with a civil war."

One of the men seen as most responsible for Primakov's ascension to prime minister, the reformist politician Grigory Yavlinsky, was in a Moscow hospital Monday being treated for what doctors described as heart failure.

Yavlinsky, 46, leads the Yabloko political bloc, which controls 10 percent of the lower house of Parliament. Although a critic of the Communists and conservatives with whom Primakov is most closely associated, he urged legislators to support Primakov's appointment as prime minister as a means of unifying the country behind a single leader.

The precise nature of Yavlinsky's ailment was not clear. Doctors were quoted as saying he was already able to work and might be released by Tuesday or Wednesday. Yavlinsky entered the hospital over the weekend, they said.

Horse Liniment Eases Arthritis Pain

OCALA, FL -- An ingredient derived from hot peppers that decreases inflammation in racehorse's legs, is now recognized as safe and effective for human use. The ingredient has been formulated into a product called ARTH-Rx® and comes in a strength designed for humans. Researchers are excited and say the formula can relieve arthritis pain for millions.

Developed by the Phillips Gulf Corporation, ARTH-Rx is a breakthrough in the treatment of painful disorders ranging from minor aches and pains to more serious conditions such as arthritis, bursitis, rheumatism, tendonitis, backache and more.

Although the mechanism by which ARTH-Rx works to relieve pain is not totally clear, scientists suggest that pain is relieved because ARTH-Rx intercepts the messenger substance that sends pain signals to the brain.

ARTH-Rx is available in a convenient roll-on applicator without a prescription. According to a spokesperson for the company, due to the overwhelming demand for ARTH-Rx, supplies are sometimes limited. ARTH-Rx can also be ordered by calling 1-800-729-8446. ©1997 PGC

CLINTON: Videotape airs on networks

that "the president's conduct does not rise to the level of an impeachable offense." Still, he added: "The White House couldn't feel anything but awful about the day that we have gone through as a nation."

Much of the printed material released Monday was Lewinsky's version of the relationship as she testified over the summer to the same grand jury. Portions of her account had been published last week in Starr's report to Congress.

The president resisted persistent efforts by prosecutors to get him to admit that he committed perjury last January in the Paula Jones lawsuit when he denied "sexual relations" with Ms. Lewinsky. Prosecutors expressed exasperation and grand jurors forwarded a question to the president asking on what legal grounds he could refuse to answer the questions.

"Look, I'm not trying to be evasive here. I'm trying to protect my privacy," Clinton snapped. At another point, he said: "I can't explain why I didn't answer every question in the way you seem to think I should have."

Painfully aware that the video footage "will be forever in the historic annals of the United States," Clinton lamented that he had "to contend with things no previous president has ever had to contend with."

While the president repeatedly brushed aside questions about their sexual relationship, Ms. Lewinsky described them to the grand jury in sometimes-reluctant detail. "I've always felt that he was sort of my sexual soulmate," Ms. Lewinsky testified in her summertime appearance before the grand jury.

She rejected the president's legalistic descriptions of their relationship. "It's hard for me to feel that he has characterized this relationship as a service contract and that was never something that I thought it was," she said.

As chronicled in the Starr report, Ms. Lewinsky testified that her relationship with the president included fondling and oral sex that began while she was a 22-year-old intern in November 1995. She said Clinton suggested misleading testimony she could give in the Paula Jones sexual harassment lawsuit and tacitly agreed that she should hide gifts after they were subpoenaed.

Clinton, for his part, described a relationship that involved intimate encounters that began after her internship ended and she had shifted to a paid White House job. He steadfastly denied that he fondled Ms. Lewinsky or encouraged her to obstruct justice.

"I absolutely never asked her to lie," Clinton said emphatically during his Aug. 17 testimony. He did acknowledge: "It's an embarrassing and personally painful thing, the truth about my relationship with Ms. Lewinsky."

The materials released Monday by the House Judiciary Committee provides one side of the story: the evidence that Starr said supports his case for 11 possibly impeachable offenses against the president. The White House denounced the release as "deeply flawed" and "regrettable."

Two fat volumes of evidence accompanied the release of Clinton's videotaped testimony, adding to the president's embarrassment. The material included a picture of the dress the FBI concluded was stained with his semen, brief private phone messages he left on her answering machine, and dozens of love letters Ms. Lewinsky drafted but never sent.

The evidence also included a chart chronicling Clinton and Ms. Lewinsky's encounters, which began in August 1995 with "eye contact" and "flirtation" and led to "physical intimacy" that November. The last entry is Dec. 28, 1997 when Ms. Lewinsky gave Clinton holiday presents that included a suggestive candy gag gift.

In his testimony, Clinton brushed aside the question of whether he encouraged Ms. Lewinsky to hide the subpoenaed gifts with Oval Office secretary Betty Currie — an event Starr cited as evidence of obstruction of justice.

Ms. Lewinsky "may have been worried about this gift business but it didn't bother me," he declared.

Clinton received a standing ovation at the United Nations in New York where he gave a speech on combating terrorism. The first lady also was in New York, making a university appearance. Neither commented on the video's release.

With polls showing most Americans believe that release of the video was unnecessary, lawmakers reacted cautiously.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich brushed away most questions while campaigning in South Carolina. "I frankly wish the president had told the truth and none us would be engaged with this kind of sordid detail," he said.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said it was too early to determine "how damaging" the video would be.

Woven through the evidence are threads that Democrats were certain to seize on to question Ms. Lewinsky's credibility. At one time, the former intern admits there were "times when I was not truthful" in her conversations with Linda Tripp, her one-time friend who secretly taped their conversations.

The video footage was broadcast unedited Monday morning on a wide array of broadcast and cable TV outlets. Americans also could watch it on their computers via the Internet.

It gave a glimpse of a president speaking of the personal cost to a crisis he acknowledged was his own doing. "It's no secret to anybody that I hoped that this relationship would never become public," Clinton testified.

At one point he spoke with seething anger about the Jones lawsuit. "I deplored what they were doing," Clinton said of Mrs. Jones' attorneys, jabbing his hand at prosecutors for emphasis.

In more than a dozen instances, Clinton said he was unable to recall details of his relationship with Ms. Lewinsky, including whether he summoned her for a crucial meeting on Dec. 28, 1997. He fielded at least 43 separate questions about sex acts involving Ms. Lewinsky. On 10 occasions, Clinton referred prosecutors back to his opening statement in which he admitted to "inappropriate intimate contact" and "sexual banter" with Ms. Lewinsky.

And he insisted that in his January testimony in the Jones case, he was "determined to walk through the minefield of this deposition without violating the law, and I believe I did."

The president also lamented that Starr's multimillion-dollar investigation had "come down to parsing the definition of sex."

Ms. Lewinsky's testimony contrasted in tone and specificity with that of Clinton. She recounted her conversations with Clinton about concealing their sexual relationship, discussions that prosecutors allege amounted to obstruction of justice.

"I told him I could always — I would always deny it. I would always protect him," Ms. Lewinsky said. She was then asked by a juror to how the president responded.

"I'm seeing him smile and I'm hearing him saying 'that's good,' or — something affirmative. You know. Not — not — 'don't deny it.'"

Ms. Lewinsky testified it was Clinton who suggested she file an affidavit seeking to get out of her Jones testimony. Clinton denied, however, he ever instructed her to lie in the affidavit. "I felt quite comfortable that she could have executed a truthful affidavit, which would not have disclosed the embarrassing details of the relationship we had had," he said.

Ms. Lewinsky expressed frustration that Clinton did not allow their sexual activity to go further, saying, "maybe that was his way of being able to feel OK about it, his way of being able to justify it or rationalize it."

Clinton testified that he cut off the intimacy in March 1997 and was resigned that she would eventually disclose their dalliances.

"She's basically a good girl," Clinton said. "She's a good young woman with a good heart and a good mind. I think she is burdened by some unfortunate conditions of her upbringing."

"I knew that the minute there was no longer any contact, she would talk about this. ... She couldn't help it."

CAF: AirSho to feature battle reenactments

(From 1A)

Manfred Radius and his "Ultimate Glider," the Jet Truck "Shockwave," and Gene Soucy and his Showcat biplane. The grand finale is to be the "Flying Elvi" skydiving performance.

A Dallas dance band, The Big Time, is to perform from 9 p.m. to 1 p.m. in the CAF Hangar.

The Sunday, Oct. 4, flying acts at 10 a.m. are to feature flights by World War I and World War II aircraft, a Korean Conflict aircraft fly-by, warbird aerobatics, flights by Gene Soucy and acts by Wingwalker Teresa Stokes and Manfred Radius.

The Flying Elvi skydiving act is to take place at 12:20 p.m.

Demonstrations by the AV-8 Harrier, the Toyota Airsports Corolla, and the Jet Truck "Shockwave" are to begin at 1:20 p.m.

The CAF traditional reenactments of World War II aerial battles is to begin at 2:15 p.m.

During week of the AirSho, at 1 p.m. on Monday, Sept. 28, the CAF's B-28 Superfortress "Fifi" and B-24 Liberator "Diamond Lil" are to land at CAF headquarters at Midland International Airport in ending their 1998 summer tour to 25 cities in the continental United States.

The CAF's American Airpower Heritage Museum at noon on Tuesday, Sept. 29, is to unveil the first restored piece of the museum's 33 World War II "nose art" panel collection.

Entitled "Squeeze," the nose art is traced to a 1944-produced Consolidated B-24 Liberator that was in combat in the war's China-Burma-India Theater and flew 28 bombing and 24 fuel missions.

During World War II, the term "squeeze" signified contraband.

The war's nose art, which was drawn by Allied servicemen on fighters, bombers and transport as morale boosters, often featured "girlie" art and cartoon characters.

All told, the CAF's museum has 33 pieces of the historic nose art.

Funding for the restoration was provided by grants from the Arts Assembly of Midland.

JOYNER: FloJo held 2 world records at time of her death

(From 1A)

Ten years ago this week, she won three gold medals at the Seoul Olympics in the 100- and 200-meter dash and the 400-meter relay. She just missed a fourth gold medal when the U.S. team finished second in the 1,600 relay, which Griffith Joyner anchored.

At her death, she still held world records in the 100- and 200-meter dashes. She set the 100 mark of 10.49 seconds at the 1988 Olympic trials at Indianapolis, and since then, no woman has ever broken 10.60. She clocked 21.34 in the 200 in the Olympic final.

"Sadly, her life has passed as rapidly as her races," said Primo Nebiolo, the head of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, track's governing body.

At the Seoul Olympics, she painted three of her long fingernails red, white and blue and painted a fourth gold, for the medal she was after.

One of her eye-catching outfits was a purple bodysuit with a turquoise bikini brief, but with nothing over her left leg. She called the design a "one-legger."

At the 1987 World Championships in Rome, she caused a sensation by running in a skintight suit similar to a speedskater's togs.

"She liked her fingernails and pretty hair," said Olympic sprinter Evelyn Ashford, one of Griffith Joyner's chief rivals and her teammate in 1984 and '88. "What Florence brought to track was a flash and a flair that we didn't have, which was probably good for the sport and got attention for us."

Griffith Joyner was voted The Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year for 1988 and won the Sullivan Award as the nation's top amateur athlete.

In 1996, she suffered a seizure on an airplane flight to St. Louis. She was hospitalized for one day, and her family requested that no other details be released. The IAAF's Nebiolo said in Brussels on Monday that she had had some serious heart problems in recent months.

"The Olympic family is saddened and stunned by her passing," U.S. Olympic Committee President Bill Hybl said. "She was a role model for girls and young women in sports and her legacy will be one that included kindness and an interest in children."

After retiring from track in the wake of the Seoul Games, she served for a time as co-chairman of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports. Last year, the White House tried to replace her to make room for celebrity bodybuilder Jake "Body by Jake" Steinfeld, a big Democratic donor. But Griffith Joyner said she wouldn't leave without hearing from Clinton himself, and White House officials backed down.

In recent years, she also began designing and modeling clothes and working with children, both through sports programs and a series of books.

She attempted a comeback before the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta, but problems with the Achilles tendon forced her to abandon the attempt.

"It's been hard for me. All the training I've done. I've never had problems with my Achilles," she said at the time. "My husband tells me I'm getting older, I tell him to shut up."

Griffith Joyner was born in south Los Angeles, one of 11 children. Her father was an electrical technician and her mother a teacher.

She is survived by her husband and a 7-year-old daughter, Mary Ruth.

Funeral arrangements were not immediately known.

HALL: Flying Tigers to be inducted

Squadron Eight aircrew in the Grumman TBF Avenger.

"And these gentlemen," including the living and the dead, represent greatness, said CAF Col. Don Luttrell, who will be master of ceremonies in the 6:30 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 1, banquet in the CAF Hangar to honor the airmen.

To be honored in the event:

■ Maj. Gen. John Alison, a U.S. Army Air Forces (USAAF) Curtiss P-40 Warhawk pilot and ace who was credited with the first USAAF night victory in the China-Burma-India Theater. (To be an ace, a pilot must be credited with at least five enemy "kills" in air-to-air combat.)

■ Col. Rex T. Barber, a USAAF Lockheed P-38 Lightning pilot who on April 18, 1943, was credited with shooting down Japan's premier strategist, Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto, in Yamamoto's Betty bomber over Bougainville in the Solomon Islands.

■ Brig. Gen. Robert E. Galer, a U.S. Marine Corps Grumman F4F Wildcat pilot and ace who was awarded the Medal of Honor for heroism in action.

■ Col. Walker "Bud" Mahurin, a Republic P-47 Thunderbolt pilot who was the first USAAF double ace in Europe and who score more than a score of combat aerial victories in the P-47 and in the North American P-51 Mustang in the Pacific Theater of World War II and in the F-86 Sabrejet in the Korean Conflict.

■ Col. Robert Morgan, pilot of the illustrious Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress, the "Memphis Belle," which was the first heavy bomber to achieve 25 missions over Europe.

■ Torpedo Squadron Eight aircrew in the TBF Avenger. Navy Capt. Albert "Bert" Earnest, flying the Grumman TBF Avenger, and his radioman, now Cmdr. Harry Ferrier, were the only survivors of the Midway-based detachment of Torpedo Squadron Eight in the June 1942 Battle of Midway. Seaman Jay Manning, the Avenger's turret gunner, was killed in action.

■ American Volunteer Group, known as the "Flying Tigers" commanded by Col. Claire Chennault in China, flew for China in aerial combat in their Curtiss-Wright P-40 Warhawks against Japanese pilots in Zero fighters and other aircraft. The original Flying Tigers numbered almost 300 volunteers out of the ranks of the U.S. Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The AVG destroyed at least 297 Japanese aircraft and produced about a score of 16 aces. Production models of the P-40 were variously known as the Warhawk, Tomahawk, and Kittyhawk.

Of the original AVG, which included 97 pilots and 185 groundgrew men, only about 66 are surviving.

"They were the darlings of the Chinese people," Luttrell said, "because they were the only ones who really came to their rescue" in aiding the Chinese Air Force in combating the encroaching Japanese.

AVG pilots include David Lee "Tex" Hill, Gregory "Pappy" Boyington, and Dick Rossi.

"It was an interesting group," Luttrell said of the Flying Tigers. "And they are an uninhibited bunch of pilots."

Midlander Jack Edwards, a World War II naval aviator who flew Wildcat, Hellcat, and Corsair carrier-based fighters in the war's Pacific Theater, alluded to the "thousands of other aviators and pilots who were also involved in the war.

"They were just young men like Bert (Earnest) ... who got his wings (when) he probably wasn't over 21 years old.

"They were true American heroes," Edwards said of the flying warriors. "They were the ones who held the line (early in the war) when the forces against them were pretty overwhelming. You know (for instance), we were outnumbered, and outgunned, and outcarriered at there at Midway" in the 1942 Battle of Midway at a seminal point in the war against Japan.

The common theme among the CAF's Hall of Fame honorees is that during the war they had the courage to "stand up for what is right, for what is honorable," said Lucy Woodside, who director of development for the CAF's American Airpower Heritage Museum. "They put their life on the line to preserve freedom.

"Our young people today need true heroes: people that they can look up to and use as role models," Ms. Woodside said. "And these men provide that true role model because they put their life on the line for the freedom that these young people enjoy today. Freedom does not come free. You have to work for that freedom."

Tami O'Bannion, who is the museum's director, said that the war stories of the honorees are examples of patriotism and courage to "younger generations who (often) take for granted their basic freedoms. People sacrificed their lives 50 (plus) years ago" to preserve freedom. The price of liberty, our freedom, does not come free. There is a great sacrifice ..."

Inducted into the CAF Hall of Fame in 1997 were Maj. Shui-Tin Arthur Chin, a Chinese-American who flew for the Chinese Air Force in the 1930s; Brig. Gen. Joe Foss, a Marine Corps aviator, ace, and Medal-of-Honor winner; Col. Francis Gabreski, a USAAF P-47 Thunderbolt pilot and ace in Europe; Col. David Lee "Tex" Hill, a Flying Tigers pilot and ace in China early in the war; Brig. Gen. Paul Tibbets, who commanded and trained B-29 Superfortress aircrews that dropped atomic bombs on Japan in 1945; Navy Cmdr. Alex Vraciu, who piloted the F6F Hellcat fighter in the Pacific, and the Jimmy Doolittle Raiders who attacked Japan in 16 carrier-launched B-25 Mitchell bombers on April 18, 1942.

Airlines team up, forge global alliance

LONDON (AP) — American Airlines and British Airways teamed up Monday with three partners in the industry's second super alliance, saying they will be able to fly virtually anywhere in the world.

The alliance also includes Canadian Airlines, Australia's Qantas and Hong Kong's Cathay Pacific Airways — and they hope to expand soon with partners from continental Europe and Japan.

The airlines say their venture, called "oneworld," will be a tough competitor to the Star Alliance put together by United Airlines and Germany's Lufthansa.

But one rival warned that passengers may end up paying too much as competition dries up on some routes.

Billionaire Richard Branson, who runs Virgin Atlantic Airways, said the oneworld group will stifle competition on flights between Britain and Australia or London and Hong Kong.

Virgin said it controls 16 percent of the traffic between London and Hong Kong while British Airways and Cathay Pacific have the other 84 percent.

"For 'oneworld,' read one company, one monopoly and millions of passengers taken for a ride," Branson said in a statement.

Canadian Airlines and Australia's Qantas already had marketing partnerships with American and British Airways — and Cathay Pacific came aboard Monday.

Executives told a news conference that they had invited the Spanish flag carrier Iberia to join up. Finnair president Antti Potila said later his company was negotiating to get into the group.

The executives also have their eyes set on a bigger prize: Japan Airlines.

"It's really up to the Japanese to make their decision on that," said Don Carty, the chief executive at American. Asked about getting a Latin American partner, Carty said this, too, was a possibility although he said American already has an extensive route network in the region.

Oneworld was launched even as American and British Airways continue their fight to gain regulatory approval for a separate deal that would give them U.S. antitrust immunity to set prices on routes across the Atlantic.

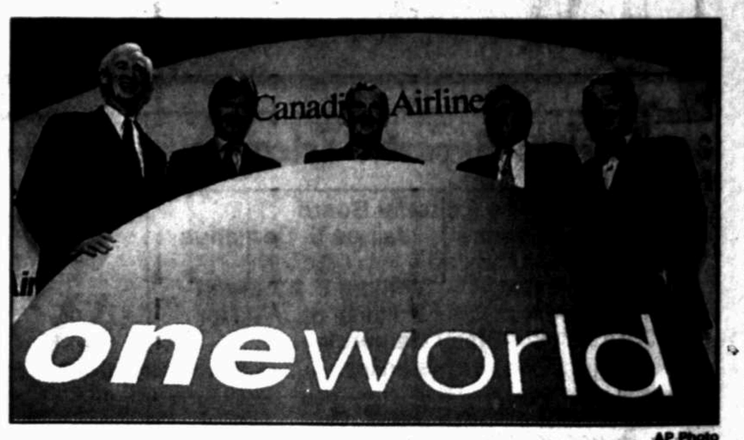

The new alliance is "not a substitute," said Bob Ayling, chief executive at British Airways.

The alliance is a first for Cathay Pacific, which said its associate carrier Dragonair, serving some destinations in China, might also join after setting up a frequent flyer program and making other necessary changes.

The airlines say they will coordinate their flight schedules and ticketing, while cooperating on their frequent flier programs to better serve customers beginning early next year.

Alliances are becoming increasingly common in the international aviation industry, where travel is booming, but leading airlines realized long ago it wouldn't be feasible to get big enough to cover the entire globe single-handedly.

The creation of oneworld gives the industry two big global alliances, although there are many smaller ones such as the deal between Northwest Airlines and KLM Royal Dutch Airlines.

Press group in Istanbul considers ethical standards

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — A press group decided Monday to move ahead with its controversial proposal to establish a code of ethics for journalists worldwide and an international news council to mediate complaints.

At a briefing ending a three-day conference of journalists and media experts, the World Association of Press Councils said committees would draft an ethics code and consider forming a body to ensure it is respected.

Another committee is charged with coming up with a plan for an independent news council that would rule on complaints by and against the press. Those committee members will look into the feasibility of establishing, financing and attracting media and public support for a body that would handle transnational complaints, said David Flint, chairman of the world association.

Flint is to lead the working group; its members also will include the president of the Turkish Press Council and a former executive of the Egyptian Press Council.

About 30 news councils exist worldwide. The most prominent in the United States is the Minnesota News Council, founded in 1971 to promote media fairness. Composed of journalists and non-journalists, its findings carry no sanctions. Complainants must waive their right to sue for libel — an incentive for media organizations to participate — but find the council a less costly route than the courts to public vindication.

The proposal for an international news council has been criticized by many in the industry, including the American Society of Newspaper Editors, fear such a mechanism could be used to restrict journalists.

"Who wants this?" asked Ronald Koven, European representative of the World Press Freedom Committee. "And in whose interests is it? Certainly not the press freedom organizations or the representatives of the industry."

The prospect of an international code of ethics for journalists also divided conference delegates. Claude Moisy, president of UNESCO's Advisory Group on Press Freedom, said a code for journalists would be wrong in principle, impossible to formulate and impossible t enforce.

Established in New Delhi in 1992, the World Association of Press Councils has 16 news councils in various countries to deal with local complaints about the news media.

The working committees are scheduled to submit their conclusions at a June conference in Brisbane, Australia.

Milosevic denies humanitarian plight, Kosovo leader quits

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic tried Monday to avert possible NATO intervention in Kosovo, denying reports that tens of thousands of ethnic Albanian refugees face hunger and disease because of his offensives.

"The term 'humanitarian catastrophe' which we have been hearing during the past weeks is not based on reality," Milosevic said in a statement released by his office following talks in Belgrade with the U.S. envoy for Kosovo, Christopher Hill.

Milosevic declared in a statement that the Kosovo Albanian "terrorists" have been defeated.

"Yugoslavia has been faced with unprecedented threats only because it defends its sovereignty," he said.

Despite international aid organizations' reports that some 275,000 people displaced in Kosovo since Serbs launched a violent crackdown against Albanian separatists in February are facing hunger and disease, Serbian officials say refugees are being sheltered and cared for.

In an attempt to prevent a humanitarian disaster, NATO has readied plans for possible military intervention to end the crackdown in Kosovo, a province in Serbia, the dominant republic in present Yugoslavia. Kosovo is over 90 percent ethnic Albanian, but is ruled by Serbia.

Also on Monday, officials in Serbia and Montenegro rejected an ethnic Albanian proposal for Kosovo to gain equal status with those two republics in the joint Yugoslav federation.

Miodrag Vukovic, an adviser to the president of Montenegro, told the Dnevni Telegraf daily that territorial autonomy for Kosovo that would change borders and position of Serbia in Yugoslavia is "out of the question."

Montenegro, which is much smaller than Serbia, apparently fears its position in the federation would be jeopardized if Kosovo became a separate unit.

According to ethnic Albanian proposal, published Sunday in Koha Ditore daily, Kosovo would be "temporarily part of Yugoslavia, as an independent entity equal to the other two republics in the federation."

A vice president in the Serbian government, Vojislav Seselj, said "Kosovo must remain in Serbia." He added the region could only be granted "territorial autonomy" within Serbia.

Serb forces and KLA clashed Monday in the central Drenica region, the ethnic Albanian Kosovo Information Center reported.

Residents of Dobratin village in northern Kosovo found two more bodies Monday, bringing the total number of corpses found to eight, since Serbs swarmed the area last week.

Two elderly men who buried the bodies of a 58-year-old man and his 37-year-old cousin early Monday said one was riddled with bullets, while the other had his jaw ripped off and his chest cut open.

Somali man indicted in death of Italian TV crew

The motive of the attack was unclear, and Italian authorities said they were looking for others who were involved.

ROME (AP) — A Somali man was indicted Monday in the 1994 slayings of two Italian journalists ambushed in the Somali capital of Mogadishu.

Hashi Hassan, who has been jailed in Italy since January, allegedly drove the Land Rover that blocked the Italians' vehicle when they were shot to death on March 20, 1994. The victims were RAI state television journalist Ilaria Alpi and cameraman Miran Hrovatin.

The motive of the attack was unclear, and Italian authorities said they were looking for others who were involved.

Hassan had come to Rome to testify against Italian troops accused of torturing local militiamen during the 1992-95 U.N. peace mission. He was arrested following accusations by the driver for the Italians.

The trial was set to begin Jan. 18, according to Italian news agencies.

Document merits careful thought of all Americans

Many Americans know the words by heart: "We the People of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Thanks to the tireless efforts of the Col. Theunis Dey and Lt. William Brewer chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR), appropriate attention is being drawn today to Constitution Week, which is observed each Sept. 17-23.

In almost every part of the world today, people are valiantly struggling against oppression. They do not have such a document promising them basic rights.

The observance commemorates the signing of the Constitution of the United States, the document that guarantees the liberties we enjoy today in this great nation. Yet most Americans probably take those liberties and the document itself far too casually.

In almost every part of the world today, people are valiantly struggling against oppression. They do not have such a document promising them basic rights.

How important are those rights? Consider this: Most people will go to any length, bear any burden, endure any risk just to have the opportunity to get to this country where they may enjoy the marvelous benefits citizenship in the United States brings.

During Constitution Week, contemplate all that the United States Constitution means to you and your life. The Constitution is a truly remarkable document that deserves your careful and thoughtful attention.

Today's Highlight in History:

On September 22, 1776, Nathan Hale was hanged as a spy by the British during the Revolutionary War.

Five years ago: President Clinton previewed his health care reform package in an address to a nationally broadcast session of Congress. Forty-seven people were killed when an Amtrak passenger train derailed and crashed into Bayou Canot near Mobile, Ala. The space shuttle "Discovery" and its five astronauts landed at Kennedy Space Center, ending a 10-day mission.

Cagey spymaster bad choice for freedom lovers

WASHINGTON — The man the Russian Parliament forced President Yeltsin to name prime minister is a former KGB agent, a friend of dictators in Iraq and Serbia, and an enemy of the West.

Yevgeny Primakov made it to the top because he was every power center's second choice. They all see this cagey spymaster as a transitional figure easily replaced after the worst is over. They may all be wrong.

Safire

The Soviet Union had three power centers: the Communist Party, the KGB and the Red Army. In Russia today, there are still three: (1) the oligarchs who stole the state's assets through corrupt privatization and socked away billions outside the country; (2) what's left of the Communist Party, supported by elderly pensioners, and (3) democratic reformers, many appointed and then scapegoated by the weakened Yeltsin.

Last spring the oligarchs directed Yeltsin to fire their own man, Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, who for five years had condoned their stealing of the state's assets. In went a reformist unknown, wet behind the ears, to take the fall for the inescapable devaluation and default. After that victim did his duty, the oligarchs told Yeltsin to put back Chernomyrdin.

But the Communists in Parliament would not go along. They threatened Yeltsin with impeachment and dared him to dissolve the Duma by pressing three times for the oligarchs' choice.

At this point, assuming the Communists would do well in parliamentary elections, the last of those reformers left standing — Grigory Yavlinsky, head of the Yabloko party in Parliament and untainted by association with failed Yeltsin policies — proposed Primakov as prime minister.

I reached Yavlinsky by telephone in Moscow to ask: Are you guys out of your minds? When Russia most needs the West, you put in a lifelong enemy of freedom? When Russia's economy most needs the price of its oil exports to go up, you put in the man who wants to get Iraqi production flowing to save Saddam and bring on an oil glut? When Russia most needs the rule of law and private property, you bring in a veteran Communist with no understanding of free enterprise?

"This was a painful compromise," he explained. "Primakov was the only one Yeltsin and the Communists could agree on. I have no deal with him." That turns out to be true; as Primakov surrounded himself with Gorbachev-era Communists, Yavlinsky turned down the offer of a deputy prime minister's post.

Yavlinsky's rationale is that Primakov has promised (1) not to use force in Chechnya; (2) to soothe the West with ratification of Start 2, and (3) to follow the Constitution in organizing elections. Averting civil war, he says, is not nothing.

After the years of ripoff by the crony capitalists, the pendulum of Russian public opinion has swung leftward. Capitalism never had a chance without courts to enforce contracts and cops to stop corruption, but the criminal oligarchy has left capitalism in disrepute and reduced most trade to barter.

In this angry atmosphere, Yavlinsky puts the protection of political freedom ahead of the adoption of sensible economic policies. "This is temporary," he insists, "and somebody has to be in office to protect the nukes and see to it we have free elections."

That's his case for Primakov, and we'll be hearing more of the same stabilizing stuff from his Manila dance partner, Secretary Madeleine Albright. But I wonder.

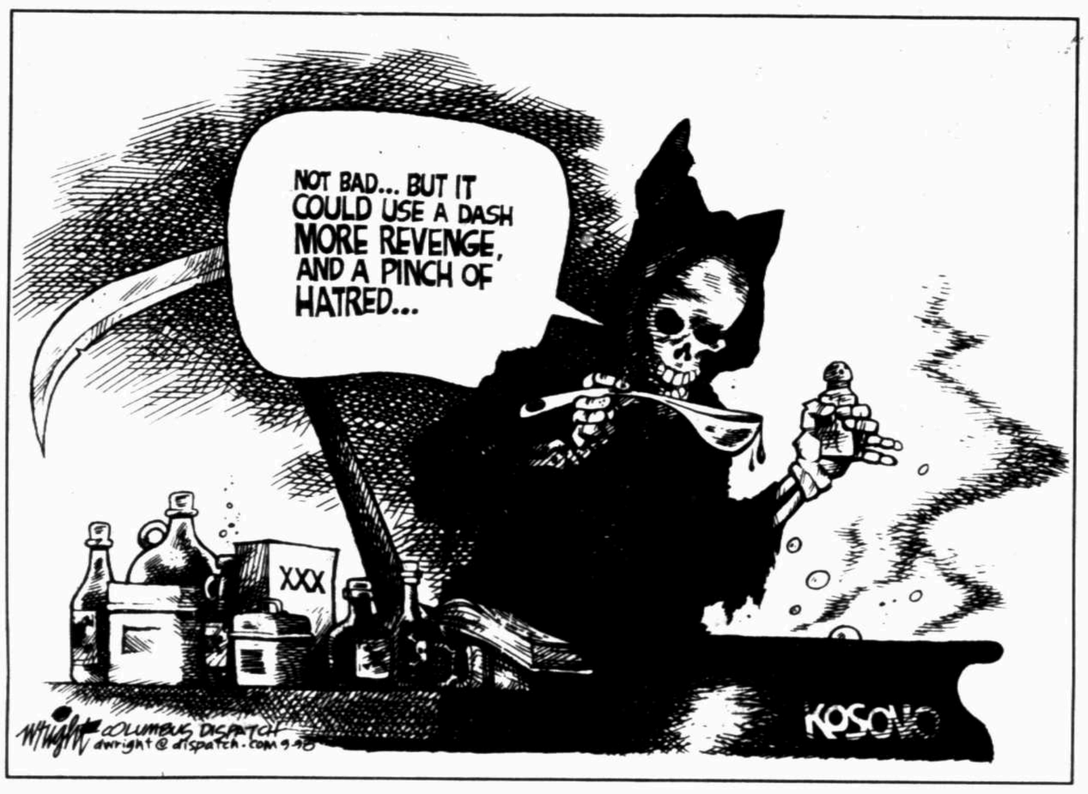

Here we see the oligarchs in bed with Marxist economists who promise to protect bankrupt enterprises and print inflationary money. Remaining democratic reformers hope that the ensuing disaster will be blamed on the lefties in the Duma elections next year and elections for the presidency the year after.

That's wishful thinking. Primakov will take Russia toward more state economic control, which is only a step away from central political control. The old KGB hand knows how to squeeze the oligarchs to make their media support him. Transition is not his ambition.

Should we bail out Primakov's ailing Russia? The Czech president, Vaclav Havel, offered a sage comment to the Clinton claque of applauding bureaucrats at their joint news conference Wednesday: "Better an ill Russia than a healthy Soviet Union."

Cherry tree lie still a lesson in virtue

Sometimes even a lie can contain the essential truth about how lies destroy everything. Parson Weems, the first president's first biographer, is the source of the story of how George Washington, 6, chopped into the bark of a beautiful young English cherry tree, cutting it so deeply that it would never blossom or bear fruit.

Fields

Young George's father saw the damage, saw the boy, and saw the hatchet and quickly put 2 and 2 together. Who did it? In Parson Weems' telling of it, young George, with "the sweet face of youth brightened with the inexpressible charm of all-conquering youth," took full blame. "I can't tell a lie, Pa; you know I can't tell a lie. I did cut it with my hatchet."

His father, much taken with the honesty of his young son, wrapped him in his arms. "You have paid me for it a thousand fold," he said. "Such an act of heroism in my son, is worth more than a thousand trees, though blossomed with silver, and their fruits of purest gold."

This is one of the most famous anecdotes of our history, and it's almost certainly a lie, repeated as truth, not fact. But it tells a lot about what we've always expected from those who would be president.

Nearly every commentary about the scandal swirling about the 41st successor to George Washington refers to his diminished moral authority. The strongest defense his supporters can make is that public policy does not require a virtuous private man. That may be, but it's a rotten message to send to our children. Such a defense is compounded by the president's defense lawyers who insult us with legal technicalities – lies, in other words — to parse the truth about who did what to whom in that little pantry off the Oval Office.

It would be as though little George said, "I cannot tell a lie, Pa; I held the hatchet, but the tree leaned against the blade and let itself be cut."

In another time, maybe, it was possible for a president's job performance to outweigh all other considerations, but that was before a president's lies not only became part of the national consciousness but influenced events around the globe.

Bill Clinton knew that better than most. "When George Washington first took the oath I have just sworn to uphold," he said in his first inaugural address, "news traveled slowly across the land by horseback and across the ocean by boat. Now, the sights and sounds of this ceremony are broadcast instantaneously to billions around the world."

That's true of scandal, too. To be exposed as a private liar makes a public man vulnerable, both here and abroad. Watching the president and Vaclav Havel, president of the Czech Republic, on the podium together for their joint press conference demonstrated how difficult it is to focus on foreign affairs when the press seeks the facts about a personal affair. The president's weakened moral authority was broadcast to billions around the world.

Hence, the impact of his first lie grows exponentially, diminishing his moral authority with his colleagues, his country, and the world.

Kenneth Starr has taken a beating for including so much salacious material in his report to Congress, but the double-talk by Mr. Clinton and his lawyers required it. The specifics of what happened comprise the only antidote to the lies. A lie has a thousand faces, as Montaigne observed, the truth only one. Truth invokes light, clarity, luminosity. A lie, by contrast, is enveloped in darkness and ambiguity, constantly changing its shape and size.

George Washington didn't really chop down his father's cherry tree (nor did he ever say he did), but he understood the importance of virtue and truth in both the private and public life of a president: "... that the foundation of our national policy will be laid in the pure and immutable principles of private morality, and the preeminence of free government be exemplified by all the attributes which can win the affections of its citizens and command the respect of the world."

Israeli government owes reparations to Palestinians

Israel isn't Switzerland. Dr. Azmi Bashara, a member of the Israeli Knesset, asked Israeli officials for an accounting of the property, the money in the banks and the funds in the Muslim and Christian endowments, all taken over by the Israeli government.

Their answer? "We don't know. We don't have those figures."

Switzerland has gone to a lot of trouble to find dormant bank accounts of Holocaust victims and has acted honorably throughout. So, perhaps someone should file a class-action lawsuit against Israel on behalf of Palestinian refugees for an accounting and return of the money and land confiscated by the Israeli government.

Reese

In a long conversation with the Palestinian legislator, Bashara made three key points. But before I get into them, by way of background, understand that there are three sets of Palestinians. They are the same nation, but they are in three different circumstances.

One set is made up of Palestinian refugees who are scattered around the world. These are people and their descendants driven out of Palestine by the Israelis in 1948 and 1967.

Another set of Palestinians are those who came under Israeli military occupation in the West Bank and Gaza in Israel's 1967 war.

The third set are those Palestinians and their descendants who remained in Palestine during the 1948 war and are now Israeli citizens. Bashara is one of them and is a resident of Nazareth. These people, he says, had 85 percent of their property taken from them by the Israeli government after they were allegedly citizens. They are still subject to racial and ethnic discrimination.

The Israeli government spends exactly half as much money educating its Arab citizens as it does its Jewish citizens. But even Arab citizens who get college degrees cannot find jobs. Bashara said the Israeli electrical company employs 25,000 people but only six are Arabs.

So the first key point Bashara made is that Israel is not a true democracy.

"It is a state of the Jews, not a state of its citizens," he said. "Technologically it is a modern state, but in its political culture, it is medieval state." Bashara said that the current prime minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, even ran on a racist slogan: Netanyahu is good for the Jews." Twenty percent of Israel's population is non-Jewish.

Key point No. 2 is that Israel, rather than seeking true peace, is maintaining an apartheid state. Israelis are free to travel anywhere. Palestinians are not. Even those Palestinians under Yasir Arafat are in isolated pockets surrounded by Israeli-controlled territory. They must get Israeli permission to cross from one place to another. Bashara said that this can take three to four days sometimes.

"They are creating Bantuslands," he said, referring to the apartheid South African government's policy of creating isolated and economically unviable "homelands" for the black Africans. Both Bishop Desmond Tutu and South African President Nelson Mandela have verified Bashara's description and condemned the Israelis for it.

His final key point is that both major Israeli groups, Labor and Likud, are in agreement on the final outcome: no sovereign state for the Palestinians, no sharing the sovereignty of Jerusalem, no dismantling of the Jewish settlements, no Palestinian control over the water and no return or compensation for the Palestinian refugees.

Bashara said that the Israelis have continued to confiscate Palestinian lands and to expand Jewish settlements all through the Oslo process. In the long run, he said, the world will not tolerate an apartheid state in the 21st century.

U.S. Embassy caught in middle — again — in Liberia's crossfire

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — His T-shirt stained with blood and his wounded 22-year-old son shaking beside him in the lobby of the embattled U.S. Embassy, former Liberian warlord Roosevelt Johnson knew Monday that it was time to be afraid.

"I don't know how we're going to get out of here," said Johnson, the chief rival of President Charles Taylor, nervously glancing around the room that has become his refuge.

A few feet behind Johnson, shielded by thick panes of bullet-proof glass, American soldiers in full battle gear, assault weapons at the ready, patrolled the hallways.

Johnson turned up Saturday morning after a government attempt to arrest him Friday night sparked gunbattles that killed 47 people.

The embassy, which repeatedly found itself the only safe haven in Liberia's capital during this West African country's brutal 7-year civil war, is again caught in the middle.

Although the embassy has been under heightened security since Johnson arrived, a Western journalist was able to visit the compound for part of Monday to speak with the former warlord and survey the situation.

Embassy diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the United States was not planning to hand Johnson over to the police, and said State Department officials in Washington were negotiating with the government.

"We've had three relatively sleepless nights here," said one American diplomat.

"Everyone is endlessly busy dealing with this ongoing situation," he said, his face etched with fatigue, his chest protected by a green army flak jacket.

Johnson, who has spent the past couple of days huddled on a few sheets of cardboard in the lobby, came under attack Saturday morning from Taylor's secret police as he tried to seek shelter at the sprawling seaside compound.

Four of Johnson's supporters were killed in the attack, two were wounded and two Americans were also injured.

Taylor's government has demanded that the Americans hand over Johnson and his retinue.

"If this man leaves (the country) and returns re-armed, he will be dangerous to the security of the state and the region," said Taylor's spokesman, Reginald Goodridge.

Although the capital was largely calm Monday with hundreds of Liberian soldiers and West African peacekeepers patrolling the city, there was little comfort inside the embassy.

At least half of the staff has been evacuated and extra American soldiers have been flown in by chopper. Nearly everyone on the grounds wears bullet-proof vests and helmets, and many are heavily armed.

Witnesses said at least one American returned fire when secret police shot at Johnson and his men. He and two other American security officers struggled to get inside the compound.

One of the injured Americans was evacuated to London where he was in good condition, officials said. The other was grazed in the shoulder.

A Johnson supporter died inside the embassy compound, where his body remains, and three more lay dead or dying outside, said the witnesses, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

One of Taylor's sons, 22-year-old Puna, was shot in the shoulder and the arms. Late Monday afternoon, he shook in pain from the wounds, tears streaming down his face as one of Johnson's men cradled his injured arm.

This isn't the first time a move by Taylor to arrest his longtime foe has erupted into violence — and embroiled a reluctant U.S. Embassy.

Taylor's attempt to arrest Johnson in 1996 — when both were warlords in Liberia's civil war — triggered wholesale bloodshed in Monrovia that left thousands dead and the city a burned-out, looted wreck.

Johnson fled to Ghana, after taking shelter in the U.S. Embassy and then flying out of the country in an American helicopter.

Liberia's civil war ended in 1996, after 150,000 people had been killed.

c.1998 N.Y. Times News Service

FRANKFURT, Germany — Two of Germany's national television networks said Monday that they would not broadcast the most sordid sections of President Clinton's videotaped testimony, while Chancellor Helmut Kohl said the release of the tapes "makes me vomit."

NTV, a commercial television news network, announced that it would replay most of the testimony but would delete the most "intimate" and most sexually explicit details.

Phoenix, a public channel that carries speeches and other public proceedings, interrupted its transmission of the testimony for live coverage of Clinton's speech at the United Nations. Network officials said that they would carry only testimony that did not "violate ethical and journalistic standards."

"We will carry four hours of testimony tonight," Bernd Schwintowski, a spokesman for the NTV network in Berlin, said Monday, "but when the testimony goes into the private sphere or the most intimate details of private life, we will not transmit it."

Schwintowski said the network's decision had not been the result of pressure from Kohl or other German politicians, virtually all of whom said they were revolted by the release of the tapes.

But the pressure was nevertheless intense, and several political leaders openly assailed broadcasters who planned to carry the testimony.

"It makes me vomit," said Kohl in Bonn on Monday morning. "I think the whole thing is a catastrophe," he said.

Gunda Roestel, a top official in the Green Party who is on the advisory board of the publicly owned ZDF television network, openly tried to prevent the Phoenix channel from carrying the testimony. Phoenix is jointly owned by ZDF and ARD, Germany's other main public television network.

Two indicted for murder charges in embassy bombing

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — A Tanzanian and an Egyptian escorted into a courtroom under heavy guard were charged Monday with murder in connection with the U.S. Embassy bombing in Tanzania. If convicted, they would be hanged.

Egyptian Mustafa Mahmoud Said Ahmed and Tanzanian Rashid Saleh Hemed each were charged with 11 counts of murder. The Aug. 7 bombing killed 11 people, all Africans. Resident Magistrate Amiri Maneto said no bail was allowed. A trial date will be set Oct. 5.

Police and soldiers stood guard while the two men arrived at the courthouse, in the center of Dar es Salaam.

Three FBI agents also were present at the hearing.

Although no details were released in court, local media said traces of chemicals that could have been used to make the bomb had been found in Saleh's home and car. Police, the reports said, also were seeking two unidentified men who had visited Saleh often before the bombing.

No information was available on why charges were filed against Ahmed, who authorities said also is known as Said Ahmed and Saleh Aben Alahales.

Ahmed told the court he couldn't understand why he was charged because he was not even in Dar es Salaam on the day of the bombing. He said he was in the northern Tanzanian town of Arusha.

Ahmed, a heavyset and bearded man, wore glasses, a gray T-shirt and faded slacks. Saleh, slender and bearded, did not make a statement. He is a native of the Zanzibar, an island off Tanzania.

A nearly simultaneous bombing at the U.S. Embassy in neighboring Kenya, killed 248 people. The National Disaster Operation Center in Nairobi confirmed on Monday the death of a woman injured in the blast, bringing the death toll to 248.

Two men have been indicted in federal court in New York in the murders of the 12 Americans slain in the bombing in Kenya, and several other suspects were being sought. Among them is Saudi dissident Osama bin Laden, who allegedly runs al Qaida, a radical Islamic network accused of planning the bombings.

Deforestation contributed to Mexico's flooding, official says

TAPACHULA, Mexico (AP) — Deforestation and the spread of illegal housing must take part of the blame for devastation wrought by flooding along the southern coast of Chiapas state, according to a government minister.

"The tragedy occurred in the coastal and mountain ... communities due to deforestation and the problem of irregular settlements on the edges of rivers," Social Development Minister Esteban Moctezuma Barragan said Sunday.

Farmers in the poor state have continued to clear forested land for fields. Earlier this year, their traditional practice of clearing fields by burning them was blamed for sparking an unprecedented rash of forest and brush fires in Chiapas.

The loss of trees and other plants diminishes the ground's ability to hold water and makes hillsides more likely to slide.

The government has confirmed 183 deaths in Chiapas from the recent flooding. Thousands of people remain unaccounted for, the government news agency Notimex said. With roads and bridges wiped out, many towns have yet to reestablish communication links to the outside world.

More than a dozen people died in other states when storms hit Mexico from both the Pacific and the Gulf of Mexico in early September.

On Saturday, flooding in the central state of Guanajuato killed three people and left two others missing, state authorities reported.

Tens of thousands have been left homeless in Chiapas. The government has begun building new homes in some of the affected regions and plans to distribute materials elsewhere for people to construct homes on their own.

More than 23,000 people are living in 83 shelters. The federal family assistance program said 25,000 people were receiving meals each day at its 434 community kitchens. It intends to open 50 more kitchens in isolated regions.

Masked men steal French paintings

NICE, France (AP) — Two armed men took a curator hostage Monday and stole two valuable impressionist paintings from a museum in Nice.

Several works of art have been stolen this year from French museums, and Culture Minister Catherine Trautmann said she was "deeply worried by the recent development of these new forms of crime."

In Monday's robbery, thieves wearing black masks showed up at the home of Jean Fournis, curator of the Fine Arts Museum of Nice, seized him and drove him to the museum. They bound and gagged the caretaker and another employee and shut all three men in the museum library.

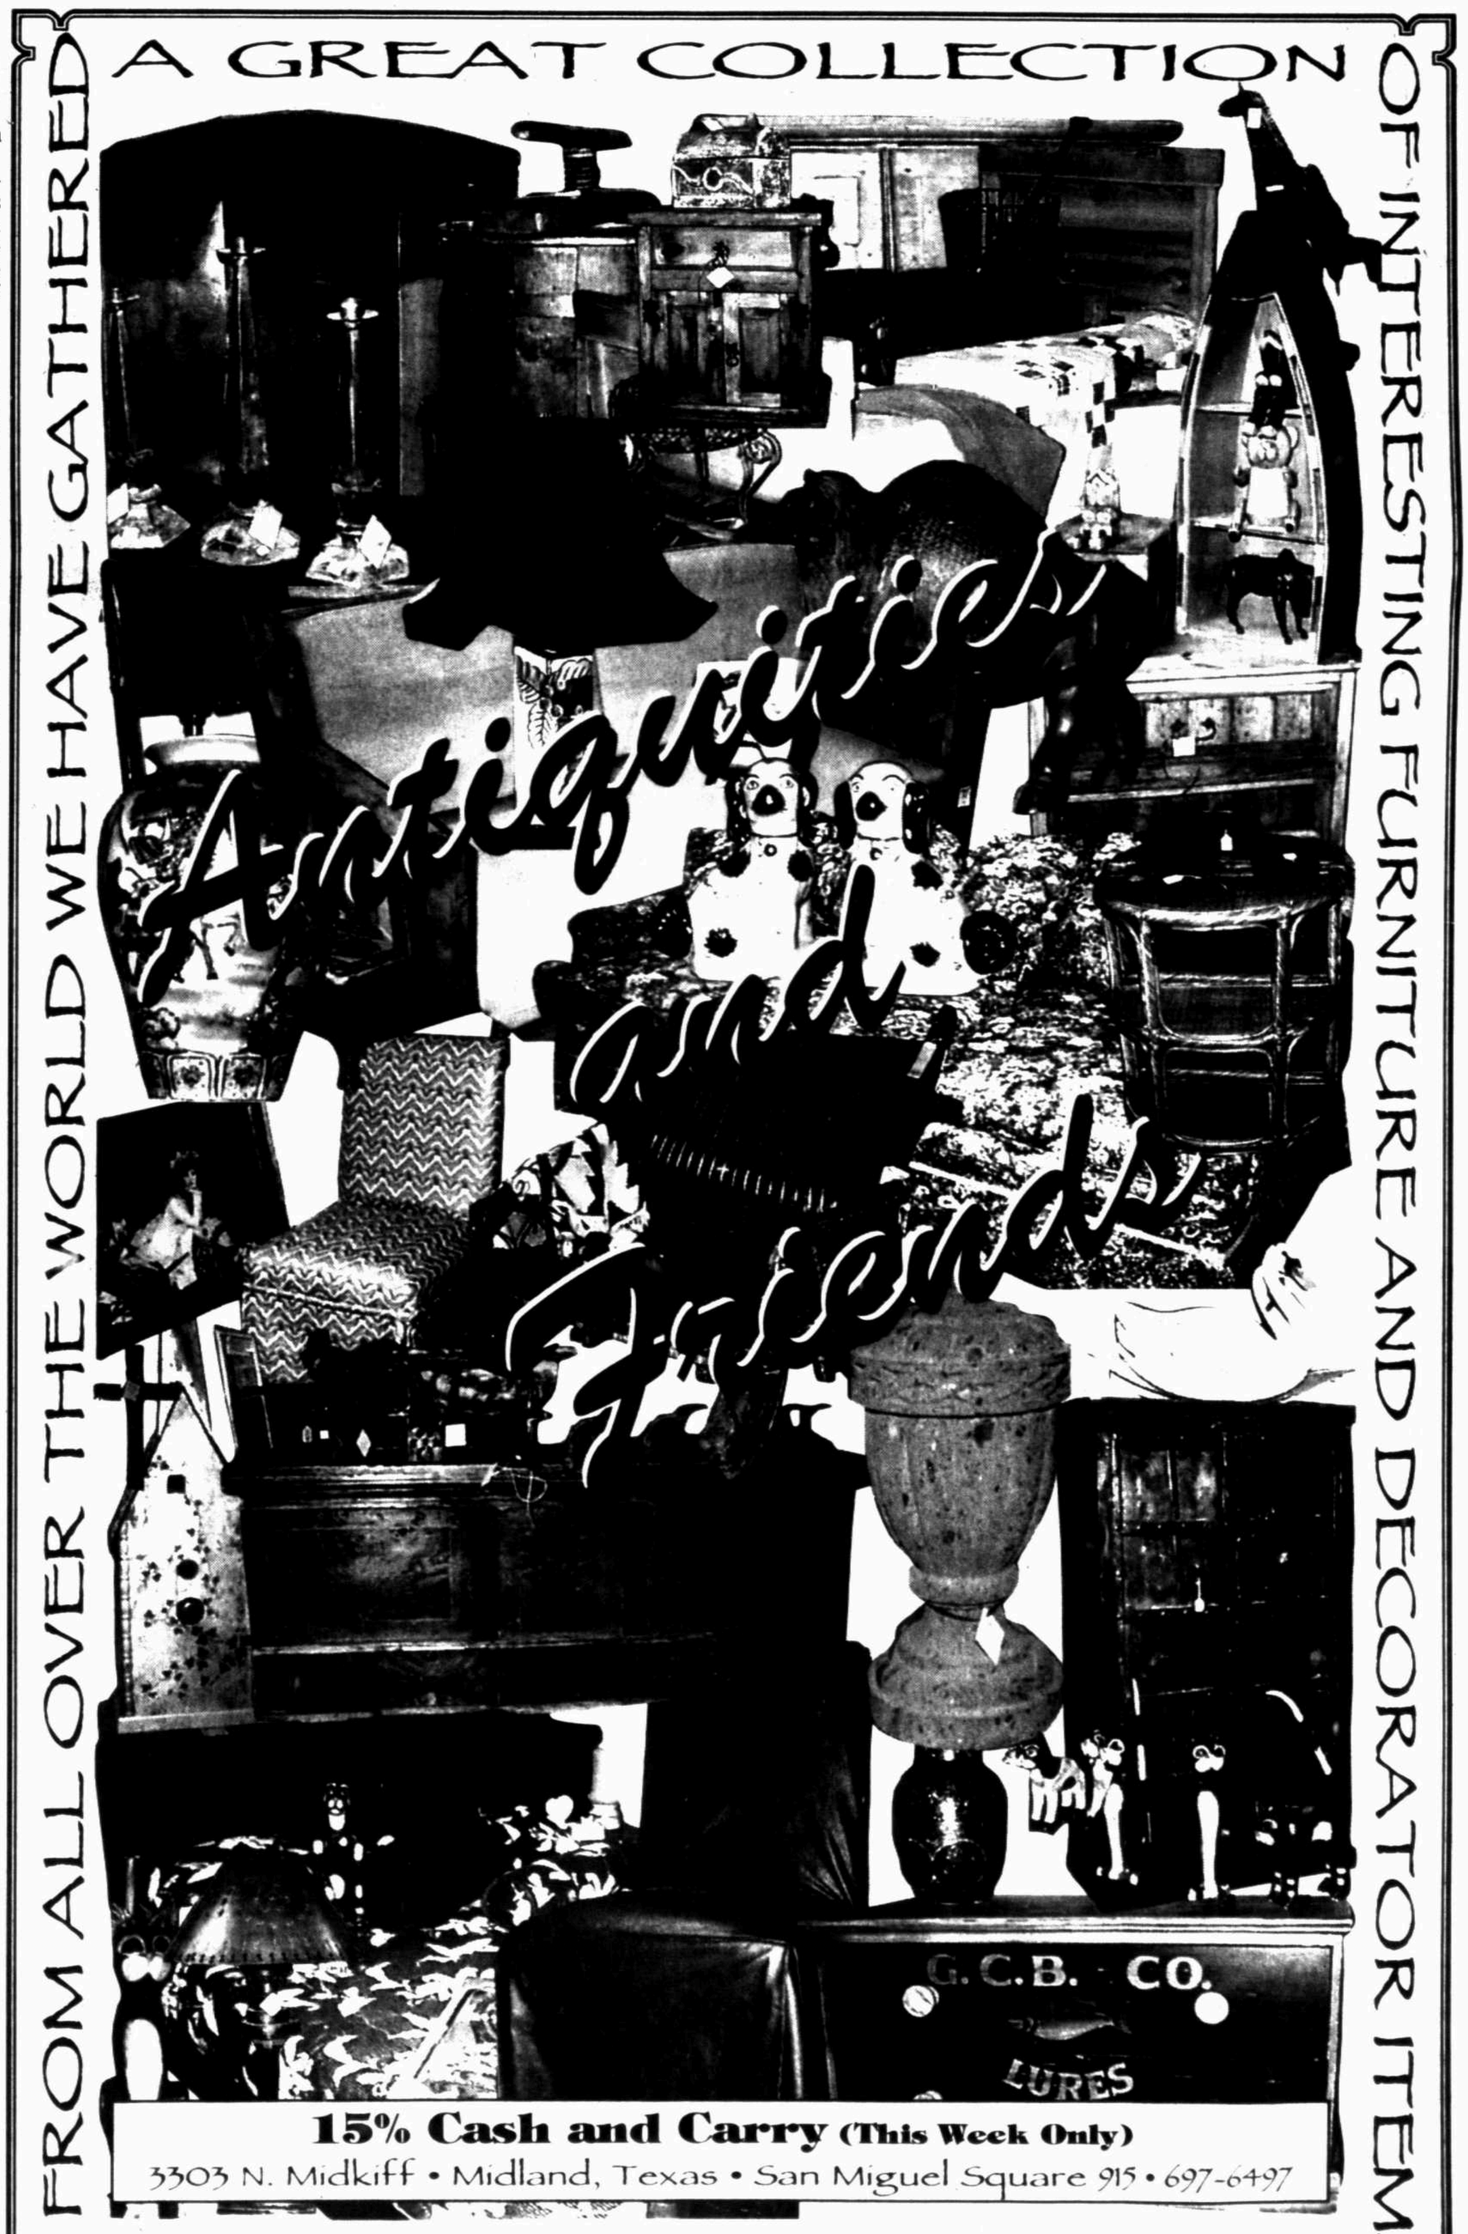

The museum alarm was turned off because the caretaker was on duty.

The two thieves then stole an 1897 painting by Claude Monet called "The Cliffs of Dieppe" and one by Alfred Sisley dating from 1890 named "The Alley of the Poplars."

They sped off in the curator's car.

Both paintings belong to the French government. They are widely known and would be difficult to sell, Fournis said.

In May, an oil painting by 19th-century French painter Jean-Baptiste Camille Corot was stolen from the Louvre museum in Paris. It was valued at $1.3 million. In January, a stone fragment from about 400 B.C. was also discovered missing at the Louvre.

Doctors say more women now asking for Caesarean delivery

NEW YORK (AP) — The Manhattan woman was in the first trimester of pregnancy with her first child when she decided how she wanted the baby delivered. She had read about childbirth in pregnancy books, heard war stories from friends and relatives and feared that she could not endure whatever labor pain she might have before the epidural kicked in.

She told her doctor that when her pregnancy was full term, she wanted a Caesarean section.

"I spent a long time counseling her," said Dr. Andrei Rebarber, her obstetrician at New York University Medical Center. He told her that she had a greater chance for complications, including hemorrhage, infection and death, from a Caesarean section than from vaginal delivery. "I told her I won't do a Caesarean section without a medical indication. I feel that it's unethical."

But the woman, 46, a credit manager who spoke on the condition that her name not be published, saw the situation differently. "I was surprised it wasn't my choice," she said. "It's my body."

She said that she was willing to pay the extra cost of a surgical delivery if her insurance company did not cover it. Now five months pregnant, the woman has been trying to decide once and for all whether to stay with Rebarber, whom she respects, or switch to a doctor who will honor her choice.

'I'm not saying that Caesarean section is good and vaginal delivery is bad, but there's increased evidence that the picture is no longer black and white.'
—Dr. Sara Peterson-Brown, obstetrician

Needless to say, this woman's request is unusual. For years, pregnant women's choice has been synonymous with the most natural childbirth possible. And it has been a consensus in the medical community that many Caesareans are unnecessary, with the rate at about 21 percent of all births in this country, down slightly from a record high of nearly 25 percent in 1988 and far higher than the 5 percent of 1965.

Hospitals and medical groups pressure doctors to avoid doing Caesareans unless there is medical justification, like failure of labor to progress or signs of distress to the fetus. The Department of Health and Human Services has the goal of lowering the rate to 15 percent by 2000.

But the pendulum is beginning to swing, slightly, in the other direction. Though no figures exist for elective Caesareans, some doctors say that more women are asking for C-sections, even when they are not necessary. And doctors are sharply divided on how to respond.

Several recent reports that question the safety of vaginal deliveries in certain circumstances are driving this turnaround. For example, in May, the Food and Drug Administration issued a public health advisory on vacuum-assisted delivery devices, tools that are sometimes used for difficult vaginal births.

Each year for the last four years in the United States, according to the advisory, five newborns have died or been seriously injured after delivery with these devices.

Another report concerned the safety of vaginal delivery for women who previously had a Caesarean. Though doctors have encouraged such women to try to deliver vaginally, a large Canadian study published two years ago found that the chance of major complications to the mother were greater than previously shown: nearly twice as great as from a Caesarean section that was scheduled before labor. Major complications included ruptured uterus, which can be fatal.

In general, childbirth is considered extremely safe for both mother and child. Still, the findings on vaginal deliveries have left some doctors questioning whether the Caesarean section rate really is too high and left some women wondering whether it is worth the pain and uncertainty of going through labor when scheduled surgery is so convenient.

"The assumption that our C-section rate is too high is based on zero data," said Dr. Charles Lockwood, an obstetrician at New York University Medical Center and a member of the committee of obstetrical practice of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. Lowering the C-section rate to 15 percent, he said, "may be dangerous."

In England, there has been a marked increase in the number of women asking for Caesareans when they are not medically necessary, according to two commentaries published in the British Medical Journal last month.

The authors offered several reasons: medical advances like local anesthesia that have made Caesarean sections safer, and evidence that long, difficult vaginal deliveries can cause "substantial morbidity," like stress incontinence and other pelvic damage to the mother, and cerebral palsy or even death to the baby.

"We are at a turning point in obstetric thinking," said Dr. Sara Paterson-Brown, an obstetrician and gynecologist at Queen Charlotte's and Chelsea Hospital in London and an author of one commentary. "I'm not saying that Caesarean section is good and vaginal delivery is bad, but there's increased evidence that the picture is no longer black and white."

Elective Caesareans in England have increased to 6.5 percent in 1995 from 4 percent in 1980, said Dr. Robert Kyffin, a research fellow with the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists in Manchester.

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — James "Bo" Gritz, the former Green Beret colonel and leader of the right-wing Patriot Movement, was found with an apparently self-inflicted gunshot wound along a highway near his home after falling into despair over his pending divorce.

Investigators refused to say whether the 59-year-old Gritz, whose wound was not considered life-threatening, shot himself deliberately or accidentally.

But in an interview on Thursday, Gritz (rhymes with "heights") admitted he had contemplated suicide because of his marital problems, said Mark Potok, editor of the Southern Poverty Law Center's Intelligence Report.

"I've thought about looking at the other end of my pistol a few times ... because what kind of life do I have without my bride?" Potok quoted Gritz as saying. "I have lived such adventures, ... but what else is there to live for except for her, really? She's been my dream girl. Now my reality is my nightmare."

The Southern Poverty Law Center tracks the activities of right-wing groups.

Clearwater County Sheriff Nick Albers said deputies found Gritz on Sunday night just south of Orofino with what appeared to be a self-inflicted wound. Gritz lives nearby in Almost Heaven, a community he founded. Those who wish to live there must sign a covenant stating their willingness to defend the community if necessary.

Albers gave no information on the location of the wound. On Monday, Gritz was recovering at an Orofino hospital.

Mrs. Gritz separated from her husband on Aug. 22 and filed for divorce on Sept. 11. Potok said she cited irreconcilable differences.

Potok said the three-hour interview at Almost Heaven followed a three-hour meeting about property division that Gritz had with his wife of 24 years, Claudia.

Gritz told Potok that his third wife had been upset by his decision to go to North Carolina to try to find alleged abortion clinic bomber Eric Rudolph. His wife left Gritz the day after he returned from North Carolina.

The barrel-chested ex-military officer served as a negotiator in the FBI siege of separatist Randy Weaver and his family at Ruby Ridge in 1992. He also briefly was a mediator in the Montana Freemen standoff in 1996.

Gritz first came to prominence in the 1980s for staging several unsuccessful commando-style forays into Laos to retrieve American prisoners of war. His activities were curbed after U.S. authorities charged him with using a passport under a false name.

He ran for president in 1992 and is a leader of the so-called Patriot Movement, which rails against a U.N.-led "New World Order" and accuses the government of corruption and violence.

Renovation loans made available

■ Low- and moderate-income families may be eligible for low-interest loans of up to $40,000 for renovation, rebuilding.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The city of Midland is building a list of homes to be considered for renovation under this year's $350,000 Housing Rehabilitation Loan Program.

Low-interest and forgivable loans under this program are applicable to homes covered in the city's Community Development Block Grant program, which is geared toward providing funding for housing improvements in low-to-moderate income areas of the city.

"It's roughly areas east of A Street, south of Illinois Avenue and east of Midland Drive," said Sylvester Cantu, community development administrator for the city.

The funds are used for low-income families who cannot otherwise afford to bring their homes up to city code standards, said Rick Menchaca, assistant city manager.

Many times these renovations include major remodeling and replacement of entire systems, such as electrical and plumbing.

"They average 25 to 30 thousand dollars per unit," Menchaca said of the substandard housing loans.

To qualify for the loans, homeowners must meet certain income criteria, Cantu said.

The loans are low-interest and, in some income classes, a portion of the loan can be forgiven, Cantu said.

The maximum loan amount is $30,000 and generally are granted with a portion being paid monthly at 3 percent interest and another portion as a deferred payment loan.

It is the deferred payment portion that can be forgiven in most cases, Cantu said.

Income guidelines are the same as other guidelines relating to U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) funding.

For a single-member household, the maximum annual income is $21,100. For two people, the maximum

Encephalitis

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston area's second confirmed case of St. Louis encephalitis was announced Monday, and like the first victim the 31-year-old man recovered and has returned to work.

Earlier this month, a 45-year-old Houston man was confirmed to have the first SLE case reported in Texas since 1996. The mosquito-borne virus is potentially deadly, especially to the elderly.

The Houston Department of Health and Human Services reported that the second victim took ill Aug. 28 and was hospitalized three days later. The man was not identified.

Officials have detected the virus in Houston mosquitos all summer. Until this year, only four Houston-area human infections had occurred since 1993, a drop-off from the 52 from 1990-92.

The virus is transmitted to humans by the bite of an infected Culex mosquito, a night-feeder. Symptoms include fever, headache, nausea, drowsiness and disorientation.

Local science teacher becomes caped crusader for solar energy

Jessica Sweeney's square solar oven was among the most ornate used to cook wieners.

"We covered it in foil, so that it can reflect (the sun)," Jessica said. "We covered it in black paper so that way it can absorb heat."

Her oven had a penny on top.

"It's for luck," she said.

The students' teacher, Eric Setzler, said the solar oven experiment is one way to teach teens about solar energy.

Heart seminar to accentuate healthy living

■ Free cardiology seminar will also focus on diseases and current treatments.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The latest information regarding heart disease and living healthy will be the focus of an upcoming free seminar geared toward the lay person and aimed at replacing the daily bombardment of dubious heart-health information.

A panel of Permian Basin physicians are providing the first-ever cardiology seminar for the general public on Thursday.

Called "A Celebration of the Heart," the presentation on heart disease and related topics is being provided free to the public by Medical Center Hospital.

The seminar begins at 6 p.m. and is scheduled to continue through 9 p.m. at the Holiday Inn Centre in Odessa. With so much information to be presented, however, the seminar could run a bit longer, said Renee Henderson Earls, director of community relations for MCH.

Heart disease is the number one cause of death in the U.S. and this seminar will provide the very latest information on treatments and means of prevention, Ms. Earls said.

"It covers the entire gamut," she said.

The seminar begins with a presentation regarding chest pain. The causes of chest pain, kinds of chest pain will be discussed, as well as measures one should take when experiencing chest pain.

Next, the latest medical research and treatment regarding heart-vessel blockage will be presented. A separate discussion will focus on balloon angioplasties, devices to keep vessels open called stents, and new blockage removal techniques, she said.

Many people live with arrhythmias, abnormal heart beats, and a presentation and discussion will focus on this group of conditions and treatments.

Related to heart disease is peripheral vascular disease, and one presentation will be devoted to the problem of decreased blood flow throughout the body.

The benefits and limitations of small-incision heart surgery will then be discussed. Specialized surgical techniques

Cook-off to be held to benefit several West Texas charities

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin Cook-Off Inc.'s 14th Annual Barbecue Championship this weekend will benefit the Make-A-Wish Foundation and other West Texas charities in keeping with its mission of "making wishes and dreams come true for children and adults who earnestly need our help," said Jim Brammer, the cook-off's 1998 president.

The championship cook-off is to be held on Friday and Saturday in the Midland County Exhibit Building off U.S. Highway 80 east of Midland.

"We work hard, and we play hard," Brammer said. "We have good times ... sometimes to take our mind off the bad times ... but always we seem to meld together to get things done."

The 1998 cook-off is benefiting the Make-A-Wish Foundation for ailing children, Bynum School for students with developmental disabilities, the Allison Cancer Center's Look Good, Feel Good Shop, and, among others, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Midland International Airport.

At least 30 cook-off teams, mainly from the Southwest, are to participate in the event to which the public is invited.

The cook-off was formed in the mid-1980s by "visionaries who put together an energetic group to advocate, promote, and encourage a 'Permian Basin Championship Cook-Off.' "

Cricket conundrum

Cricket carcasses are shown Wednesday in Richmond. It was bad enough when crickets invaded the Fort Bend County Courthouse in Richmond this summer, hopping across courtrooms and falling from ceilings onto visitors. Now something else is bugging courthouse employees and visitors: Rotting cricket carcasses have stunk up the place.

Graceful appearance to mask disappointments admirable

More rambling thoughts.

— Overheard: "Only those I'm wicked with know how wicked I can be." And, yes, it was said by a woman.

Ott

— It is nothing to be particularly proud of, of course, but I can't remember the last time I dialed the wrong number. But if I did, I hope I had enough class to apologize, which most people don't seem to do these days.

— Good line from a country-western song: "I sobered up and got to thinking/ girl, you ain't much fun since I quit drinking."

— I don't know if I'm intrigued or turned off by people who refused to make eye contact.

— For what it is worth: It was one year ago today that sportscaster Marv Albert, whose voice I always found a bit grating, went on trial on charges of sodomy and assault.

— Which brings us to this point: I long for the day when a prominent person will get in trouble for something other than participating in naughty sex acts.

— Samuel Beckett once said, "We are all born mad. Some of us remain so."

— You know your day has gotten off to a good start when that angry telephone call you were anticipating first thing in the morning turns out not to be forthcoming.

— I hate to admit it, but I'm beginning to understand what Hy Gardner meant when he noted, "You know you're getting old when everything hurts. And what doesn't hurt doesn't work."

— The sounds of downtown are different, and better, than the sounds of busy shopping center on the outskirts of town. And I'm not sure why.

— I like people who are capable of gracefully bouncing back from personal disappointments, sometimes to the point that others are not even aware that the setback occurred in the first place.

— Of course, you can't help but worry what is going on INSIDE those people. Outward appearances can be deceiving.

— Overheard: "A man is only as good as what he loves."

— When people say, "I'll call you right back," they usually don t mean it, especially if you REALLY do want them to call you back. If, on the other hand, you don't care one way or the other, they can be quite punctual.

— Here's hoping I never read another story about Mike Tyson, or boxing in general, for that matter.

— Are there still families out there who attend church together on Sunday morning and then return home and enjoy a big dinner of fried chicken, mashed potatoes and gravy?

— I hope so.

— Most of us feel a tinge of guilt when we have a "testy" conversation with our parents.

— It's dangerous, of course, but when I see people riding in the back of a pickup truck it looks like they are having fun.

— And today's final quote comes from Groucho Marx, who once said, "There's one way to find out if a man is honest — ask him. If he says 'yes,' you know he is crooked."

He said Jessica's design was one of the better ovens set up outside the school.

"We ended up with 30 different projects out there," he said. "They were exceeding 130 degrees. Hot dogs were cooking in a matter of minutes. Then we took some hot dogs to their favorite teachers."

The students used aluminum foil and other reflective materials and clear wrap to build their ovens.

When the students first set up their experiment at noon, the sun didn't emerge from clouds and the experiment stalled. That in itself was a science lesson, Setzler said.

"I want the kids to realize that things sometimes don't work well," he said.

But the classes had plenty of fun regardless.

"We're using Oscar Meyer," Setzler said. "We sang the theme song before we came out, and I suspect that's what made the sun go away."

Setzler dressed up in a bright red caped costume to make things interesting. The sun emerged less than 30 minutes after lunchtime.

"We're in the middle of a unit on heat," he said. "We're learning about the sun and solar energy. I'm Heat Man — with a gut, because heat expands."

The students seemed to enjoy the experiment.

Tessara Sevin said she understands why the students are doing the exercise.

"It's to learn about heat and have fun with it. We're trying to make everything fun," she said.

Ben Richmond and his friends designed a pyramid cooker.

"Just because I thought it would be interesting," he said. "We've done rectangles before and I thought a triangle would be interesting."

Morgan Etheredge's group built a "flower petal" type of oven, with the aluminum folded outwards to catch the sun's rays.

"I got this design because we did this in the third grade and it worked," she said. "It's supposed to trap the heat and reflect on the hot dog and cook it."

Setzler said the teachers ate the hot dogs afterwards and in the scramble there weren't any left for him to eat.

He added that the experiment sets the stage for other experiments on energy and electricity. Ultimately, the world will have to consider solar energy.

"We love fossil fuels, but there's going to be a time when it runs out," he said. "West Texas is not only wealthy in fossil fuels, but also in sun. If push comes to shove, you might use that as an energy source."

The first day of solar cooking will lead into competitions for the best solar oven designs, he said.

Abell teacher finalist for state teaching award

By Richard Enos
Staff Writer

A Midlander is among the final three candidates competing for the Texas Education Agency's 1998-99 statewide Secondary Teacher of the Year award.

The TEA on Monday named Eric Setzler among the finalists. Setzler is an eighth-grade science teacher at Abell Junior High.

The 37-year old teacher said he continues to love teaching. Known for his hands-on experiments and funny costumes, Setzler is on a mission to promote science and make it interesting.

"When I was in eighth grade I was bored to death in science," he said. "I was declared dead twice, with the eyes rolled back in my head. (But) school has changed ... and you find that just sitting doing book work is not working for everybody."

The other two finalists for Secondary Teacher of the Year are Miriam Lancaster from Longview Independent School District; and Deborah Curtis from the Mansfield Independent School District near Fort Worth.

The three finalists for Elementary Teacher of the year are Sheryl Lambert from Fort Bend Independent School District; Norma Jackson from Grapevine-Colleyville Independent School District; and Joyce Diserens from Madisonville Independent School District.

For Setzler, having fun is important for him and his students.

"I look at science as the culmination of all the other subjects," he said. "We're trying to hand our young people the future. There's no resource that we have that is any more important than our people."

Abell Principal David Adams said he wasn't surprised by the good news.

"I think one of the things he does that's above and beyond is he is very innovative in the way he does things to involve the kids' interest," Adams said. "He's inspirational to the other teachers as well."

Setzler said he's grateful to be a teacher.

"I wanted to thank God for this opportunity to be a teacher and then be able to represent Midland in this competition," he said.

Setzler is married to Vicki Lee, a Project Think teacher at Ben Milam Elementary. They have three sons — 12-year-old Zack, 9-year-old Ben and 7-year-old Chris.

He is in his fifth year of teaching. He has taught at Abell for more than a year; during the previous three years he taught eighth-grade science at Goddard Junior High.

Setzler, formerly a geologist, received his teaching certificate through the Region 18 Alternative Teacher Certification program.

The TEA will announce winners in its contest on Oct. 12.

— DR. M. A. THOMAS —

India, one of the most unevangelized countries in the world, has a population of over 900 million people, one-fifth of the world's population. It is our desire to help take the Gospel to this needy country. Dr. M. A. Thomas, the director of Christ For India, will be in the evening service on Wednesday, September 23. Dr. Thomas' goal has always been to evangelize the nation of India for Christ. Dr. Thomas was saved during college and went on to study for the ministry at the Hindustan Bible Institute in Madras. His work began in 1960 when he moved his family to the city of Kota in the state of Rajsasthan in northern India, a state totally without the Gospel. Despite much persecution, the work has grown to 1,000 local churches, 95 Christian day schools, 16 Bible Institutes, 28 orphanages, a ministry among lepers in 70 leper colonies and much more. Dr. Thomas wants to share with us his burden for India.

COOK-OFF: Teams will fire up rigs on Friday

(From 1B)

Brammer said. Those founders included Chris Brashear, Leroy Childress, Mike Thornton, John Hebert, Kerwin Metzler, and Candy Walker.

"... Charity benefits tremendously from every dollar spent at and for the event," Brammer said. Aside from the joy of helping others, "There's the personal satisfaction of cooking a good bowl of chili, a rack of ribs, or a brisket and being recognized as sorta good by one's peers."

And, Brammer said, "What could be better in this life than uninhibited friendship and benevolent generosity?"

In 13 years of barbecuing, Permian Basin Cook-Off has donated almost $170,000 to Midland-area charities.

For this year's event, the cooking teams will be setting up and firing up their rigs on Friday and serving vittles.

By Saturday, the food fare, centered around chili and barbecued ribs and brisket, will be served to the public from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and at other times, according to Don Luttrell, who serves on the Permian Basin Cook-Off Inc. board.

"They can came out any time Saturday," Luttrell said, "and we can take care of them."

Admission to the event is "just a pittance," a nominal fee, Luttrell said. On Saturday night, live music will be provided by Big Spring's Jody Nix and the Texas Cowboys. Admission to the dance is $10.

Away from the grills, games on the grounds will include horseshoe-pitching and washer-throwing.

Numbered among the Cook-Off's cooks and board members are Tom Casbeer, Fred and Ted Williams, Kenny Reynolds, Bill Kelly, Roger Bain, Alan Summerlin, Mickey Sorrel, Phillip Sorrel, Chris Brashear, Frank Pannell, Lon Dominguez, Helen Cole, Patsy and Leroy Childress, Mike Watlington, Jerry and Jan Watson, and Boomer Kingston.

LOANS: Clean yard required for consideration income is $24,150. For a three-member family, the maximum annual income is $27,000, for four it is $30,150, for five it is $32,550, for six it is $35,000, for seven it is $37,400 and for an eight-member family the maximum income is $39,800.

Those who qualify must have owned or lived in their homes for the past two years, be current on their property taxes, have a clean yard and have sufficient credit to be considered for the loans.

Eligible repairs include heating, plumbing, electrical, painting, roofing, windows, doors, flooring and bathroom and kitchen repair.

Rehabilitation of the home must be economically feasible. If reconstruction is not feasible, a homeowner may chose to demolish and rebuild the home with a maximum loan under this program of $40,000.

Homeowners will be required to occupy and maintain the home during the term of the loan and must maintain homeowners insurance, Cantu said.

HEART: Panel of physicians will field questions have made it possible to perform some heart operations without opening the chest, making for vastly-improved recovery.

The presentations will end with the latest information regarding exercise and diet to halt or reverse heart disease and to keep hearts healthy.

Several survivors of heart disease will discuss their experiences with various aspects of heart care, and there will be time for the panel of seven physicians to field specific questions from those in attendance.

The numbers of angioplasties and heart surgeries performed locally have increased dramatically over the past six years, as Midland/Odessa hospitals become a greater provider of cardiac care for the region.

The use of the angioplasty procedure, to use a balloon to open blocked heart vessels, has increased greatly in use, Ms. Earls said.

At MCH alone, the number of these procedures has increased from 39 in 1992 to 539 in 1997, she said.

"Heart disease is the number one killer and is quickly effecting men and women of all ages," she said.

Texans react to Clinton grand jury testimony

DALLAS (AP) — Simultaneously enthralled and repulsed, Texans huddled around televisions Monday morning to watch President Clinton's grand jury testimony.

The videotape began playing unedited on television sets across America shortly before 8:30 a.m. central time.

At Dallas Love Field, travelers took a few moments before their flights to see the president testify about his affair with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

Some sympathized with Clinton as he underwent four hours of pointed questioning by Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's legal team. Others expressed anger and disgust.

"He's only telling what he wants to tell. I don't blame him. I wouldn't say too much, either," said Raymond LaFlier, a 25-year-old graduate student and self-described Democrat from Houston who sat with his feet propped on a black duffel bag.

At Southern Methodist University, students gathered around a television in the student center, eating lunch and watching testimony between classes.

The tape showed Clinton sometimes angry at prosecutors' questions and at other times expressing bitterness at how the Paula Jones lawsuit precipitated Starr's criminal investigation of the Lewinsky matter.

"It's kind of funny. I wanted to watch his facial expressions and reactions then, when he didn't think the video would come out," said Randall Gerrell, 21, a Republican and senior real estate finance major from Hawaii. "He's getting really angry. He always puts on this show and this is a chance for us to see him for his true self."

Clay Trosclair, a junior journalism major from Ponchatoula, La., said he thinks the House Judiciary Committee never should have released the videotaped testimony.

"I think it was a partisan decision. I'm not sure it was necessary for us to see it," said Trosclair, 20, who said he's a registered Independent. "As far as the whole issue, I don't think it affects how he does his job as president."

Near Lubbock in the Texas Panhandle, cotton farmer Johnathan Woods said he lost respect for Clinton when the president argued he was telling the truth when he said he was not having a sexual relationship with Lewinsky because he used the present tense. Clinton contends that at the time he said that, he had stopped having intimate relations with Ms. Lewinsky.

"Words don't mean anything to this man. He's playing us for fools, and those people who trust and believe in him probably are," said Woods, who has voted for candidates in both parties. "It's time to wisen up and realize this man only cares about saving his own skin."

Jessica Wilson, a 20-year-old dietetics major at Texas Tech, said she thought the tapes showed Clinton was trying to be evasive and misleading.

"He should have been more truthful," said Ms. Wilson, who also has voted both ways. "He obviously was trying not to answer some of the questions and being tricky with words."

Dead crickets make for a pesky situation at county courthouse

RICHMOND (AP) — It was bad enough when crickets invaded the Fort Bend County Courthouse this summer, hopping across courtrooms and falling onto people from the ceilings.

Now something else is bugging courthouse employees and visitors: Rotting cricket carcasses have stunk up the place.

"There was one day I walked out in the hall, and I couldn't take a deep breath," said state District Judge Thomas Stansbury. "It's terrible."

Following this summer's invasion, exterminators treated the courthouse and it seemed the cricket problem had been solved.

Then bailiffs went exploring and discovered thousands of cricket corpses under the copper-covered courthouse dome. More carcasses were strewn throughout the pink insulation, packed against the walls and lying in piles around the dome floor.

County Judge Mike Rozell has instructed the maintenance department to figure out what it will take to remove the carcasses and get rid of the smell.

DEAR ABBY

Church conversion can save husband

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I met my husband in church where he had recently been "saved." While we were dating, I found out he had come from a nonreligious, alcoholic home, but he told me how much he wanted to be a better husband and father than his father had been. The first few years I actually believed him when he said I had spiritual problems and was not submissive enough. I eventually realized it was his way of justifying emotional abuse toward me.

Van Buren

Over the years, he has become more and more distrustful and critical. Everything is black and white to him. Despite the fact that he says "no church I know of is worth going to," I have continued to raise the children in church. I refuse to allow them to become isolated and insist they participate in activities that interest them. I make sure they are around families who are good relationship models. I secretly went to counseling for a while. I have a lot of prayer support.

Why am I writing? Because I've known a number of women over the years who have found themselves in similar or even worse situations. They married a man from an alcoholic or abusive background who had a "religious experience." In every case, including mine, the man swept her off her feet and was in a big rush to marry. No matter how much in love a woman is, if a man comes from a troubled background, she should be VERY careful. Some men truly change, but many slip back into patterns that are familiar to them, and then the wife and family become the targets of his anger and pain.

What I would have seen during a long engagement was that my husband swings between being the greatest guy in the world to being angry, depressed and controlling. It's not true that only women from troubled families will be attracted to such men.

Abby, please don't try to contact me, as I save "rocking the boat" for important issues, like those affecting the children. I just want to help others avoid what I have experienced. If I had known at the beginning what I know now, I'd have had a greater chance to get my husband into counseling, and we might have a better marriage than we have now. — FRUSTRATED, BUT COPING

DEAR FRUSTRATED: I agree with some — but not all — of the points you have made. The myth of "Prince Charming" is difficult to dispel because girls take it with them from early childhood into young womanhood. Long engagements and premarital counseling make sense, if both parties are willing to take off the rose-colored glasses and take a good look at each other. (Who was it who said that the marriage contract should be invalid, because both parties enter into it while they're insane?)

You have a keen insight into your husband and the core issues that trouble your marriage, and for that, I congratulate you. Obviously the counseling you sought was of value, and you are in this for the long haul.

Of course, women who are dating men from troubled backgrounds should look closely at what they might be taking on, but so should men who are dating women from dysfunctional families. Counseling is very helpful to people who sincerely want to change and are willing to work on their issues.

I hope one day your husband recognizes that with some effort on his part, you both could have a happier marriage.

The Associated Press

UNDATED — Most said they were embarrassed for the president, or weary of yet more lurid detail, or disgusted by the whole affair — but woe to anyone who tried to change the channel.

"You can't not watch this," said Andy King, 23, as he sat watching President Clinton's grand jury testimony in a TV lounge at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. "It's on the front page of every newspaper. It's on every station. It is historical."

And so Americans watched, and passed judgment. There were few surprises in the footage of Clinton's testimony about his affair with Monica Lewinsky. But it wasn't what Clinton said so much as how he said it that many people noticed.

Attorney Bill Schwartz tuned in while exercising at a health club in Sacramento, Calif. The sound was off, so the 52-year-old Schwartz observed Clinton's demeanor with an attorney's eye. He didn't like what he saw.

"I think he blinks a lot," Schwartz said. "I think he's uncooperative, he's squirming. He's a nightmare witness."

Galina Lyons, 45, a civil service secretary, watched Clinton at the airport in Norfolk, Va.. She said the president looked like "he was trying to get out of it."

At one point, she walked away from the TV screen in disgust.

"When the guy asked him was his statement utterly true, and he said 'It depends on what your definition of 'is' is, that was it," she said. "I can't watch anymore."

'I can't make a final judgment about whether he's lying, but he looks good.He seems calm, perhaps a little irritated because the guy keeps asking him the same questions over and over.'

— Mark Croston, Baptist pastor

Some viewers thought Clinton held up well under the unrelenting questions posed by prosecutors off-screen.

"I can't make a final judgment about whether he's lying, but he looks good," said Mark Croston, 39, a Baptist pastor from Suffolk, Va. "He seems calm, perhaps a little irritated because the guy keeps asking him the same questions over and over. His eyes are clear, focused."

Clinton was not as confrontational and angry as news reports before the tape's airing made him out to be, said Steve Bozsa, a first-year law student at Cleveland State University. Clinton even came off as somewhat sympathetic, Bozsa said.

"I'm not a person who ever liked the president, but now I feel sorry for him," Bozsa said. "A normal person would not have to go through this."

Clinton supporters conceded, however, that it was not a good day for the president.

"It's a joke," said Rafael Cleveland as he shopped for a TV set in Orlando, Fla., and had to face more than 20 Clintons beaming out from a bank of televisions. "It can't get any worse."

Some people were too busy with their Monday morning routines to pay much attention. At a supermarket in Nashville, Tenn., shoppers rushed in and out for morning coffee with barely a glance toward the TV screen.

In Clinton's boyhood hometown of Hot Springs, Ark., the television was turned up at Hester's restaurant so customers could watch Clinton's testimony while they ate breakfast.

But owner Charles Atkerson said he would not watch a minute of it himself. Calling himself a lifelong Republican — until now — he said he's angry with his party for releasing the videotape.

"The American people are not stupid any more. They know the Republican Party is behind all of this," Atkerson said. "They've spent $40 million of the taxpayers' money just to satisfy themselves. The people don't care."

Web holds its own during Clinton's taped testimony

NEW YORK (AP) — In its first big test as a broadcast medium, the World Wide Web held its own Monday against the crush of computer users who wanted to see President Clinton's videotaped testimony online.

"So far, so good," said Gene Shklar of Keynote Systems Inc., a San Mateo, Calif., company that collects data on Internet performance.

Web watchers feared that too many people wanting to view the video online would paralyze parts of the Internet as happened when Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's report was released on Sept. 11.

But interest in the video testimony wasn't as high as anticipated.

"It wasn't quite as riveting as people expected," said Mark Cuban, founder of Broadcast.com, an Internet company that provided many of the news Web sites with their video.

All of the major news Web sites carried the video, which was "webcast" using a technology known as "streaming video."

Once connected, the testimony appeared in a 2-inch square window. The president's gestures were jerky and abrupt unless users had access to very fast phone lines, such as might be found in an office. Sometimes the video paused while the sound track continued, other times the reverse occurred.

Still, CNN spokesman Kerrin Roberts said this was the biggest day for video on the Web and added that CNN saw record numbers: At 11 a.m., almost 20,000 people were watching the live testimony; the video was accessed a total of 300,000 times. And CNN's Web site logged 350,000 hits per minute, breaking the previous record of 340,000 when Starr's report was released.

Grand jurors question, advise Lewinsky

WASHINGTON (AP) — Grand jurors asked Monica Lewinsky tough questions, made harsh judgments, even offered forgiveness for her "sins." Documents released Monday gave voice to the normally anonymous grand jury.

The grand jurors appeared to relish their role, questioning the former White House intern about extramarital affairs and intimate details of her relationship with Clinton.

In the initial day of questioning on Aug. 6, the questions were mainly framed by the prosecutors in an attempt to establish a clear timeline of Ms. Lewinsky's relationship with the president. Her second appearance, on Aug. 20, was largely given over to the grand jurors.

The 23-member panel, whose names remain secret, is dominated by women and by minorities. All are middle-aged or older residents of the District of Columbia. Their queries ranged from almost lawyerly attention to detail to essentially opinions on the case.

"Sometimes I go back and forth not understanding because you yourself were living a lot of secrets, a lot of lies, a lot of paranoia," one grand juror told Lewinsky, "but yet you wanted truth. ... Did you ever think that nothing real could come of this relationship?"

"I did," she replied.

Another grand juror asked Ms. Lewinsky how she could have an affair with a married man — apparently for the second time — despite the "hurt and pain" it caused those involved.

Andy Bleiler of Portland, Ore. has alleged that he had an extramarital affair with Ms. Lewinsky while she was in college.

The blue dress also became a hot topic for the grand jurors.

"Monica, why did you keep that ... dress?" one grand juror asked.

"Did you have a reason to keep it?" asked another grand juror.

"I didn't really realize that there was anything on it until I went to go wear it again and I had gained too much weight and I couldn't fit into it," Lewinsky said. "I took it with me to New York and was going to clean it up there."

But she said that changed when news came out about the affair.

Grand jurors were incredulous that Ms. Lewinsky would deliver the gifts Clinton had given her to secretary Betty Currie after they had been subpoenaed in the Paula Jones case.

"What did you plan to do with those gifts?" one grand juror asked. "Did it cross your mind ... that you should maybe give some of them to your attorney as responsive to the subpoena?"

"No," Lewinsky replied.

"No?" said the dubious grand juror.

The grand jurors were also understanding of Ms. Lewinsky's emotional state. When some of the more intimate details of her relationship with Clinton were raised, Ms. Lewinsky grew shy.

"Oh my gosh, this is so embarrassing," Ms. Lewinsky said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — In late 1997, when a distraught Monica Lewinsky was dashing off e-mail messages to a friend in Japan, she probably never imagined those correspondences would be read by millions of people.

But when the nearly 3,200 pages of Independent Counsel Kenneth W. Starr's supporting evidence became public Monday, the records included many of Lewinsky's personal e-mail. In one she confided to a friend: "So it's over. I don't know what I will do now but I can't wait anymore and I can't go through all this crap anymore. In some ways, I hope I don't hear from him (Clinton) again."

Like many people, Lewinsky assumed her e-mail messages were not permanent, especially if they were deleted. But unlike telephone conversations, which must be recorded to be preserved, e-mail messages automatically live on in computer hard drives — even if people who send them don't realize it. For that reason, investigators are turning more frequently to retrieved e-mail as evidence in court proceedings.

"People are using e-mail as a substitute for telephone calls," said James X. Dempsey, senior staff counsel at the Washington-based Center for Democracy and Technology. "But they are also creating records that are being used in civil and criminal proceedings."

There's no doubt e-mail usage is skyrocketing. According to a 1998 Forrester Research Inc. report, for example, 15 percent of the U.S. adult population, or about 30 million people, use e-mail. And that figure is expected to surge to 135 million people by 2001.

Under federal law, e-mail messages have the same protection as first-class letters or phone calls. They cannot be intercepted in transmission without a court order unless there is evidence of wrongdoing.

The catch occurs when e-mail messages are stored — and they become documents. They're stored either on the hard drive of the sender or recipient, or on the hard drive of an inhouse server or an Internet service providers (ISP), such as America Online Inc.

"Almost all messages obtained by the government are from stored e-mail, not transmitted e-mail," Dempsey said.

At the onset of the Iran-Contra debacle, for example, National Security Adviser John Poindexter went into his office one weekend to delete 5,012 of his 5,062 stored messages. Oliver North erased 750 of his 758 messages. Still, these messages were recovered and included as evidence because a low-level White House employee decided not to overwrite backup tapes.

"A civil servant decided somebody might come looking for those messages, " said Tom Blanton, director of the non-profit National Security Archive at George Washington University and author of "White House e-mail: The Top Secret Computer Messages The Reagan-Bush White House Tried to Destroy."

Commercial ISPs, such as AOL, also must turn over messages if ordered to do so by courts. Tricia Primrose, AOL's spokeswoman, said the company has a policy of giving customers 10 days' notice in civil proceedings. It turns over records immediately in criminal investigations. AOL keeps e-mail messages on its servers for several weeks.

Estimado vecino,

Mantener a nuestros vecinos informados de actividades en las facilidades de Midkiff/Benedum es de gran importancia para nosotros en Western Gas Resources, Inc. (WGR) Como parte de este esfuerzo, el siguiente folleto esta diseñado para proveer la información necesaria para reconocer y responder a una emergencia en una línea de gas.

Los derechos de paso de las líneas están localizados en comunidades urbanas, suburbios y rurales. Estos derechos existen para permitir que las líneas y el equipo sean utilizados con seguridad y mantenidos propiamente. La mayoría de las líneas están soterradas en un derecho de paso que es generalmente de 30 a 50 pies de ancho.

A todas nuestras líneas las cuales están marcadas se les da mantenimiento y se inspeccionan cada tres meses. Como parte de nuestro continuo programa de mantenimiento, vigilamos nuestras líneas através de una combinación de sistemas de detección y programas de seguridad computarizados. Además, nosotros patrullamos mensualmente nuestros sistemas de líneas por vía aérea y periodicamente caminamos la línea buscando señales que puedan afectar la seguridad de las operaciones.

La mayoría de las personas no están expuestas a un escape de una línea de gas natural, pero si estuvieras, es importante que sepas que hacer. Como vecino preocupado presentamos la siguiente información para asistirte a reconocer una emergencia en una línea de gas, pasos para reportar una emergencia a las autoridades pertinentes y sugerencias en métodos de prevención para evitar un accidente en la línea. Por favor, lea esto con cuidado y llamenos al (915) 535-2484 para notificarnos de cualquier actividad fuera de lo normal cerca de nuertras facilidades de líneas.

¿ Cómo yo se donde estan localizadas las líneas?

¿ Cuáles son los signos de un escape en la línea?

La mayoría de los escapes pueden ser detectados a través de la vista, sonido e indicio del olfato. Algunos de los signos de escape en la línea incluyen:

- Un olor extraño o poco usual en el área.
- Un sonido de silbidos o bramidos.
- Vegetacion muerta o descolorida.
- Escarcha o hielo en el derecho de paso de la línea o estación compresora.

En el evento de un escape en la línea, su respuesta rápida puede reducir la seriedad de la situación y potencialmente salvar vidas y propiedades. Si sospecha un escape:

- Abandone equipo.
- Deje el área rapidamente y advierta a otros de no entrar.
- Evite cualquier flama ardiente o otras fuentes de ignición. Estos incluyen vehículos de motor o equipo eléctrico.
- Busque la ayuda de las autoridades locales para aislar el área.
- Notifique a WGR inmediatamente al (915) 535-2484 para que el escape pueda ser verificado y los pasos necesarios de emergencia puedan ser tomados.
- Si es necesario, llame a los departamentos locales de bomberos y policía para asistencia. NO intente operar válvulas o extinguir fuegos.

¿ Cómo se puede prevenir el daño a las líneas?

WGR is miembro del sistema "Texas One Call." Cualquier persona que planea actividades de construir o excavar cerca de una línea debe llamar primero al 1-800-344-8377 de dos a diez dias antes de la excavación. El servicio es gratis para las personas que llamen y la línea es contestada 24 horas al día, todos los dias del año. Hacer una llamada puede asegurar que contratistas, excavadores, constuctores – hasta dueños de casa – encuentren donde estan las líneas de servicio público y líneas de gas antes de empezar cualquier tipo de excavación. Llamando primero puedes reducir la posibilidad de un accidente serio. Como miembro del sistema "Texas One Call," WGR va a ser notificada de cualquier trabajo de excavación cerca de nuestras líneas para que marquemos la localización y tipo de líneas cerca del sitio de excavación y coordinar las actividades de excavación para asegurar una continua operación de líneas con seguridad.

Si usted hace daño a la línea o descubre daños, por favor reportelos a nosotros inmediatamente. Daños menores tienen el potencial de crear problemas en el futuro si no son remediados promptamente. Nosotros contestaremos con mucho gusto cualquier pregunta adicional que usted tenga en respecto al gas natural o seguridad de lineas. Llamenos al (915) 535-2484.

Para reportar una emergencia 24 horas al día, llama al: (915) 535-2484

In nation's capital, Clinton's testimony hardly riveting

'The tape shouldn't have been released. It's part of a political witch hunt. What he did wasn't right, but he doesn't deserve humiliation like this.'

— UT biology student Jeff Young

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's video testimony reverberated through congressional offices Monday morning, but the rest of the nation's capital was hardly moved by the historic event.

And even on Capitol Hill, few congressional aides were riveted to television sets that aired Clinton's grilling by attorneys for independent counsel Kenneth Starr.

"The key word here is working," said Dave Schnittger (CQ), spokesman for Rep. John Boehner of Ohio, chairman of the House Republican Conference. "It's pretty much business as usual."

Behind almost every open door in House and Senate office buildings, a small television played the testimony. But staffers continued to stuff envelopes, answer phones and prepare for this week's legislative debates.

That business-as-usual attitude seemed pervasive elsewhere in the nation.

In the student union at the University of Texas in Austin, about 25 curious students watched silently as the president dissected the nature of his sexual relationship with Monica Lewinsky.

"The tape shouldn't have been released. It's part of a political witch hunt," said Jeff Young, a biology senior. "What he did wasn't right, but he doesn't deserve public humiliation like this."

At the Dayton Mall in Ohio, TV saleswoman Cathy Hockwalt has seen large crowds drawn to televisions like moths to light, as when the O.J. Simpson verdict was read or during coverage of Princess Diana's death. But Clinton's video testimony didn't attract the same level of interest, said Hockwalt, who added that several shoppers said they were tired of watching it.

Only a few dozen students quietly watched the testimony in the lobby of nearby Wright State University's Allyn Hall.

At the Roberd's appliance store in the Dayton suburb of West Carrollton, where about 100 TVs were playing, only a handful of shoppers paused to catch Clinton's testimony, said salesman Mark Florkey. "They mostly just watched, not saying much of anything."

At Poppa Rollo's Pizza in Waco, Texas, co-owner Mary Duty worried that the televised testimony would be bad for business. "This is not like the O.J. Simpson trial," said Duty, who once worked for a congressman on Capitol Hill. "This is embarrassing stuff. It's not really what you want to watch in mixed company."

Shortly before noon, people began crowding into Duty's restaurant and Clinton jokes began flowing.

"We had a lot of fun," a relieved Duty said later. "We asked people if they wanted to sit in the non-smoking, G-rated section or the smoking, R-rated section. And we got parental consent before we let children sit up front."

In the TV room at McLennan Community College in Waco, Sarah Perkins and Brandie Meyer chatted furiously Monday morning, ignoring Clinton's testimony. "They ask the same questions, over and over," complained Perkins, 21, a general studies student. "I don't care anymore.

Meyer said Clinton's testimony shouldn't have been aired on all three networks. "Definitely not," she said. "We're missing 'The Young and the Restless.'"

It was business as usual Monday morning at the historic hotel, where world leaders sometimes stay. People sipped coffee, ate fancy breakfasts and discussed politics and world events in a flower-filled, lavishly-draped dining area. But there wasn't a television in sight.

At nearby George Washington University, more than 50 students gathered in a dining hall. But few paid close attention to the large television screen. Freshman Margaret Scruggs showed only mild interest in the president's testimony as she ate breakfast.

"I think its just some big soap opera," said Scruggs, 17. "It's amusing in a way, but sad for the country. I think he's finally telling the truth about what happened. He should stay in office."

A handful of students, like Stephen Rosenlund, watched more carefully.

At Dean's Beauty Salon near the Howard University campus, the video of Clinton's testimony served mostly as background noise. Barber William Phifer said he is still a Clinton supporter and that the president's relationship with Lewinsky only reveals that he has human weaknesses.

"The testimony is really irrelevant," Phifer said

The video also failed to change the mind of Jackie Eagan, 70, who co-owns and operates Mr. Eagan's, a restaurant and bar which is often a hangout for politicos and downtown lawyers.

"Doesn't he have a hell of a nerve telling people what's appropriate," she said, responding to one of Clinton's answers. "This is no big surprise, though. We already knew he was a liar," she said.

But few others at Mr. Eagan's looked away from their lunch baskets.

Just around the corner from the White House, Michael Black served breakfast at the Old Ebbitt Grill, one of Washington's most popular political hangouts. The restaurant decided not to air the president's testimony out of fear the eatery might appear partisan and because language in the testimony might be offensive. Black said it was a good decision.

"I'm a waiter. I work for the public so I know I'll be offended today," he said. "I don't need any more of it."

Lewinsky's trail of evidence makes her Starr's best witness

WASHINGTON (AP) — Circled dates in her calendar. Never-sent letters. Indiscreet conversations. Even before she agreed to cooperate with prosecutors, Monica Lewinsky had created a trail of evidence about an affair she says was grounded in love and "a little bit of obsession."

Hundreds of pages of grand jury testimony, personal notes and e-mail exchanges released Monday reveal a deeply vulnerable young woman whipsawed by emotions during her affair with President Clinton.

Ms. Lewinsky circled dates in her calendar each time she met or talked with Clinton. Her home computer's memory was filled with undelivered letters to the president and e-mail exchanges with friends. She blabbed to several pals, including Linda Tripp, about the White House trysts.

Those actions gave prosecutors mountains of evidence — without or without her cooperation. By the time she appeared before a grand jury, prosecutor Kenneth Starr had a detailed chart outlining, in Ms. Lewinsky's words, "some of the highlights of my relationship with the president."

- "Pizza night," a Nov. 17, 1995: An encounter that included sex.
- "Thank you note" from Sept. 5, 1996: 'Tie is really beautiful.'"
- "Conversation, including job talk and phone sex": Feb. 8, 1997.
- "Private encounter. Christmas kiss": Dec. 28, 1997.

With or without a chart, Ms. Lewinsky's wide range of emotions were evident throughout the thousands of pages of documents released Monday.

She was in love.

"Bill, I love you with all my heart," she wrote. In an e-mail, she said, "I want to hug him so bad right now I could cry." She testified, "I fell in love."

Ms. Lewinsky said Clinton had a "beautiful soul. I just thought he was just this incredible person and when I looked at him I saw a little boy.

Asked if the relationship was love or sexual obsession, she said, "more love with a little bit of obsession. But definitely love."

She was poignant.

"It's just hard thinking my dad might see this," she said during an embarrassing stage of testimony. After Clinton confessed to the nation about their affair on Aug. 17, with nary a mention of her, she testified, "I had wanted him to say that I was a nice, decent person and that he was sorry this had happened."

Dear Neighbor,

Keeping our neighbors informed of activities at the Midkiff/Benedum Facility is of great importance to us at Western Gas Resources, Inc. (WGR). As part of that effort, this brochure is designed to provide the information you need to recognize and respond to a pipeline emergency.

Pipeline right-of-ways are located in urban, suburban and rural communities. These right-of-ways exist to allow pipelines and equipment to be operated safely and maintained properly. Most pipelines are buried below ground in a right-of-way which is generally 30 to 50 feet wide.

All of our pipeline right-of-ways are marked, maintained and inspected quarterly. As part of our ongoing maintenance program, we monitor our pipelines through a combination of computerized detection systems and safety programs. In addition, we patrol our pipeline systems by air monthly and periodically walk the pipeline by foot to look for signs that could affect safe operations.

Most people are not exposed to natural gas pipeline leaks, but if you should be, it is important to know what to do. As a concerned neighbor, we present the following information to assist you in recognizing a gas pipeline emergency, steps to report an emergency to the proper authorities, and suggested methods of prevention to avoid a pipeline incident. Please read the following carefully and call us at (915) 535-2484 to notify us of any abnormal activity near our pipeline facilities.

How Do I Know Where a Pipeline is Located?

Pipeline routes are clearly marked with pipeline markers. The markers stick out of the ground at every road crossing and fence line and list the product transported, the name of the pipeline company and a telephone number where Company representatives can be reached.

What Are the Signs of a Pipeline Leak?

Most leaks can be detected by sight, sound or smell clues. Some signs of a leaking pipeline include:

- A strange or unusual odor in the area.
- A blowing or hissing sound.
- Dead or discolored vegetation.
- Frost or ice in the pipeline right-of-way or compressor station.

What Should I Do if I Suspect a Pipeline Leak?

In the event of a pipeline leak, your quick response can reduce the seriousness of the situation and potentially save lives and property. If you suspect a leak:

- Abandon equipment.
- Leave the area quickly and warn others from entering.
- Avoid any open flames or other sources of ignition. These include motor vehicles or electrical equipment.
- Seek the aid of local authorities to isolate the area.
- Notify WGR immediately at (915) 535-2484 so the leak can be verified and necessary emergency steps can be taken.
- If necessary, contact local fire and police departments for assistance. DO NOT attempt to operate valves or extinguish fires.

How Can Damage to Pipelines be Prevented?

WGR is a member of the Texas One Call System. Anyone who plans construction or excavation activities near a pipeline should first call 1-800-344-8377 two to ten days before the planned excavation. The service is free to callers and the line is answered 24 hours a day, every day of the year. Making one phone call can ensure that contractors, excavators, builders — even homeowners — find out where utilities and pipelines are before they start any type of underground excavation. By calling first, you can reduce the possibility of a serious accident. As a member of the Texas One Call System, WGR will be notified about any excavation work near our pipelines so we can mark the location and type of pipelines near the excavation site and coordinate excavation activities to ensure continued safe pipeline operation.

If you damage a pipeline or discover damage, please report it to us immediately. Minor damage has the potential to create a future problem if not remedied promptly. We'd be happy to answer any additional questions you may have regarding natural gas or pipeline safety. Give us a call at (915) 535-2484.

Western Gas Resources, Inc. designs, constructs, owns and operates 25 natural gas gathering, processing and treating facilities in major gas producing basins in the Rocky Mountain, Mid-Continent, Gulf Coast and Southwestern regions of the United States.

Opening lead: King of ♣ The Official Encyclopedia of Bridge describes a Chinese Finesse as "an attempt to win a trick by leading an unsupported honor." But what do you call it when the perpetrator is Chinese? This deal is from the China-Australia Women's match at the recent Asian Championships.

North's two-club response was the Drury Convention, announcing the equivalent of a limit raise in spades and asking South to describe her opening bid. (We would have been satisfied with a raise to two spades.) The two-diamond rebid showed a full opening bid and South's subsequent jump to four clubs promised a singleton or void in that suit. North's four hearts was a distinct overbid and catapulted North-South into slam.

West led the king of clubs and continued with the ace, declarer ruffing. South's problem was that there was no place to put her heart loser except in the unlikely event of finding a singleton king of hearts. However, there was a good chance that East held that card, because West, who had passed in first seat, had already shown up with ace-king of clubs.

Without any further ado, South crossed to the ace of spades and led the queen of hearts! If declarer held A J in the suit, there probably was no chance to defeat the contract, so it seems right to cover. But East did not think so and, when she followed low, declarer had avoided losing a heart and quickly mopped up the rest of the tricks.

Bush says presidency unhurt by scandal

NEW YORK — George Bush believes the institution of the presidency remains strong despite the White House sex scandal.

In an interview with Newsweek, the former president refused to discuss the scandal that threatens to bring down President Clinton. He referred to it only as "current events."

But Bush told Newsweek he believes the institution of the presidency will emerge intact.

"When Carter left office, Lloyd Cutler wrote an article saying maybe the (presidency) had become too big for any individual to cope," he said. "Reagan came in ... and made very clear that he could cope."

Bush is calling attention to his own legacy, having written a new book, "A World Transformed," with his former national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft. The book chronicles how Bush handled the end of the Cold War.

MARTHAVILLE, La. — Country Music Hall of Fame member and former Gov. Jimmie Davis says his real profession was more down to earth than music or politics.

Former singer, governor says real profession was sharecropper.

"I was never a pro politician or a pro musician-singer. I was a pro farmer — a sharecropper," the "singing governor" said over the weekend during a celebration of his 99th birthday.

Davis said he farmed cotton until he went broke, then hopped a train to Louisiana College in Pineville, received his bachelor's degree and returned home to teach. His musical career, which included more than 400 songs, among them the 1930s hit "You Are My Sunshine," took off years later.

Davis still sings in public once or twice a month.

"I shouldn't perform," he said, taking a deep breath, "I don't want to kill myself doing it, but I do look forward to it."

MOSCOW — Rudolf Nureyev, the Russian ballet star who defected to the West during the height of the Cold War, has been posthumously rehabilitated.

Nureyev, a star of Leningrad's Kirov ballet theater, was granted political asylum in France in 1961. A year later, in the Soviet Union, he was convicted in absentia of high treason and sentenced to seven years in prison.

Nureyev died of AIDS in 1993 at 54.

Alexander Zvyagintsev, a senior official in the Prosecutor General's office, was quoted Monday by the ITAR-Tass news agency as saying that Nureyev had been forgiven under the law on the rehabilitation of "victims of political repressions."

Zvyagintsev said a review of Nureyev's case found no evidence of high treason.

LOS ANGELES — Media mogul Rupert Murdoch and his estranged wife, Anna, have put their Beverly Hills-area house on the market for $19.5 million.

The couple, who filed for divorce in July, owned the home for 12 years.

The Mediterranean-style home, built for a film director in 1927, has eight bedrooms and features a circular courtyard with a wishing well, fancy gardens and a pool.

Petersen, who played Jeff Stone on "The Donna Reed Show," couldn't get an acting job after the hit TV series ended in 1967. Mickey Rooney, another former child star, finally gave him some advice.

"He came to my house, sat down in front of me and said, 'Paul, they're not going to let you work for another 25 years. Get out of town and get an education,'" said Petersen, who was in town last weekend for the Temecula Valley International Film Festival.

Petersen took Rooney's advice, moving out of Hollywood and eventually earning college degrees in English and history.

Now 53, Petersen runs a nonprofit group called A Minor Consideration. Its aim is to change the law to provide legal protection for child performers.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — John Glenn's name will adorn a new institute at Ohio State University aimed at getting young people involved in public service.

The Ohio senator and astronaut said the John Glenn Institute for Public Service and Public Policy will sponsor conferences, offer students experiences such as managing dormitories and provide them information about serving in Congress.

The center is a response to what he called the "cynicism and apathy" that permeate society, especially among young people.

"There's plenty wrong in politics — no doubt about that — there's plenty wrong in government. That doesn't mean we abandon it. That means we get in there and do something about it," Glenn said in announcing the project last week.

Foe of bilingual education's advances in race for superintendent

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — It was 1985 and first-grade teacher Gloria Matta Tuchman was under orders: Teach bilingual education or risk reprimand.

Matta Tuchman, whose Mexican-American parents were adamant that their children speak English, refused. Exasperated, her principal declared, "Lady, if you don't like it, you go change the law."

So she did. Matta Tuchman would co-write the ballot measure last June that banned bilingual education in California — a campaign that has propelled her into a runoff election in November for the job of California superintendent of schools.

How did a Texas-born 56-year-old schoolteacher in Santa Ana come to threaten Schools Superintendent Delaine Eastin, an incumbent with the backing of the 285,000-member California Teachers Association?

"Nothing I have ever tried in my life is impossible," Matta Tuchman said, pointing to a handwritten sign declaring "I Can Do Anything!" that is pasted on the wall of her classroom.

Proposition 227 was approved by 61 percent of voters June 2, though opposed by Hispanics 2-to-1. Matta Tuchman campaigned for the measure with Silicon Valley millionaire Ron Unz.

The law scrapped California's 30-year-old bilingual education system and replaced it with a one-year English immersion program based largely on methods Matta Tuchman had been using in her 34 years in the classroom.

Supporters of bilingual education argue that children who don't speak English must be taught in their primary language if they're to learn anything. But Matta Tuchman and others contend bilingual education consigns non-English speakers to a second-class system.

In the five-way contest in June, Eastin got 43 percent of the vote — short of the 50 percent needed to win the race outright — and Matta Tuchman got 26 percent. The contest is officially nonpartisan, though Eastin is a Democrat and Matta Tuchman a Republican.

"There's no question about it. I'm sure that what gives her just more credibility this time around is her association with that initiative," says Kevin Gordon, assistant executive director of the California School Board Association.

A Field Poll released in late August indicated Matta Tuchman still has a long way to go. Eastin led Matta Tuchman 37 percent to 18 percent.

Besides having the backing of the powerful teachers union, Eastin, 50, has won the endorsement of the 15,000-member California Association of School Administrators. She was first elected in 1994.

Eastin has said she wants another term so she can continue to fight for smaller classes and higher standards. She supports bilingual education but said she will enforce Proposition 227, which is being challenged in court by civil rights groups and some school districts.

On a recent afternoon, Matta Tuchman was putting her teaching philosophy into action at Taft Elementary School. A 6-year-old boy who arrived from Vietnam three months ago carefully traced the number 5 and didn't look up when Matta Tuchman told students to take out their crayons. But as he saw other students reaching into their baskets, he quickly followed suit.

When Matta Tuchman told students to write down their names on a sheet of paper, he didn't move until she walked up behind him, tapped his paper and repeated the instruction. "I make sure that I explain and show," Matta Tuchman said.

At the end of the day, a Vietnamese-speaking aide spent a few moments with the boy, explaining some of the day's lessons. Such bilingual classroom aides are permitted under Proposition 227. "Tell him he did a good job," Matta Tuchman told the aide.

Federal agency investigates Ford floor mats

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal safety agency is investigating whether driver-side floor mats on some late model Ford F-150 pickup trucks can creep up on the gas pedal, potentially causing drivers to lose control.

Forty-nine people complained that mats in pickups from the 1997 and 1998 model years slid out of position, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said Monday in a monthly report on its auto investigations. No crashes or injuries have been reported because of the problem, the agency said.

An estimated 1 million of the best-selling pickups are on the road. But Ford spokeswoman Karen Shaughnessy said that only about 15 percent of those pickups have the mats.

"We're aware of the investigation and we're cooperating with NHTSA," said Ms. Shaughnessy.

Ford Motor Co. officials told the agency that the floor mats are made so there is enough clearance between the mat and the gas pedal. Ford also said people often buy floor mats that are not made by the company and that 11 of the complaints involve those mats.

Ford documents given to the agency show company concern that people at dealerships or home may not be properly installing the mats, the report said.

Ford made a design change in July 1997 to minimize the likelihood the floor mat could interfere with the pedal, and Ford issued two service bulletins to mechanics to emphasize the importance of proper floor mat installation, the report said.

The federal safety agency also is investigating late model Monte Carlo Z-34 cars for potential braking problems in wet weather.

There were more than 70 consumer complaints about a delay in braking power or reduced braking capability on the cars, with most complaints occurring when it was raining or the road was wet. Drivers reported three crashes and one injury.

Five-million-gallon water tank ruptures

WESTMINSTER, Calif. (AP) — A 5-million-gallon water tank ruptured early Monday, sending a rumbling wave through the streets that swept away trees, cars and condominiums.

One firefighter was hospitalized in serious condition. Another firefighter and five residents suffered minor injuries.

A search through the rubble of collapsed buildings determined no one was killed or trapped.

"You know how before an earthquake you heard a rumble? It was just a big rumble," said Rose Scorsone, whose family was not hurt. She said a pickup truck wound up inside her neighbor's kitchen.

"I've never been this scared before in my life," she said.

Authorities were unsure why the tank ruptured.

A giant portion of the concrete tank's wall blew out around daybreak, sending an estimated 4 million gallons of water rushing down two residential streets in this city of 82,500 people about 25 miles south of Los Angeles.

"It's a mess out there. It's like Armageddon," police Lt. Bob Amren said.

At least 50 condominiums or garages and 14 vehicles were damaged.

Hundreds of people, many in bathrobes, wandered through standing foot-deep water and debris, waiting to be allowed to return to their homes. The worst damage was to a large condominium complex.

Huge chunks of the tank wall, splintered wood, smashed cars and shredded trees were left in the aftermath.

The flood apparently ruptured natural gas lines.

"The smell of gas got so bad you just started choking," Ms. Scorsone said. "You could see the layer of gas on top of the water."

The Red Cross set up an evacuation center, and 200 members of Temple Beth David who had hoped to observe the Rosh Hashana holiday were moved to a nearby town.

Permian's Williams leaving big mark

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

Odessa Permian's Roy Williams is quickly showing he is not a player just trying to stay afloat in the expectations of being the little brother of former Permian and Tech All-American Lloyd Hill. He is riding his own wave.

Last year, Williams came in as a sophomore with potential to be one of the best receivers to wear a "P" on his helmet, but if the numbers he's already put up are any indication, he might end up being among the best the district has ever seen. Williams may already be THE best.

With the junior blazing the path that future receivers should be shooting at for a long time, the Permian Panthers are winning again, and again winning big. Last year Permian won three games all year.

For these three wins, Permian has outscored its opponents, 113-35. The closest game — the 25-13 win over Amarillo High Friday night — wasn't a thing of beauty, but ended up being a decisive Permian win.

■ 4-5A Report

One key to the win was Williams. He caught second-half TD passes of 23 and 71 yards to give Permian the lead two different times.

For the game, Williams registered career-highs for catches (7) and yards (194). For a while, he was the passing game. Quarterback Leland Morris' didn't complete a pass to another receiver until the fourth quarter.

Williams, with 13 catches for 414 yards and six TDs this season, has been a factor in the transformation of Mojo from sweep left and right to pass left and right and sweep later.

This season Williams has games of 194 and 187 yards, which ranks him third and fourth on the all-time Permian list. He is also the only receiver in 4-5A history to have two games in the top nine, ranking sixth and ninth on the all-time 4-5A list.

Williams' four receiving touchdowns versus El Paso Irvin in the opening week ties him with Cooper's D.C. McDonald (1984) for the most in any 4-5A game.

In his eight varsity games, Williams has 39 catches for 765 yards and 12 TDs. That is well ahead of older brother Hill who had 24 catches for 593 yards and four TDs in his first 14 games.

If Permian makes the playoffs after a 3-6 record in 1997, Williams will be a big reason. Of course, that is the way he wants it. What good is a school receiving record if the team is not playing December?

"I'm not worried about records," Williams said. "I'm worried about playing on the Texas Stadium turf (in a state playoff game). That is what I am worried about.

"If records come, they come. What I am worried about is the team thing."

What he means to the Permian team could be seen against Amarillo High. Over the course of Friday night's game, the Williams factor played itself out, spreading out the AHS defense. That opened the door for PHS running back Koefie Powell, who rushed for 81 yards and a TD on 13 carries in the second half after gaining just five yards on 12 carries in the first half.

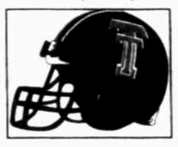

Morris has also benefited from his 6-

Tech has 4-0 start in sights

By Chris Newton
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK — After a heart-stopping, last-second victory against Fresno State, the Texas Tech Red Raiders say they're focused on achieving their first 4-0 start since 1976.

Fortune seemed to smile on Tech in their 34-28 victory on Saturday — the Raiders won only by virtue of a fumble recovery in the end zone.

But Tech (3-0) also got another dynamite performance from Ricky Williams. The star running back ran for 244 yards, two touchdowns and reclaimed his spot as the nation's leading rusher.

He also took Big 12 Player of the Week honors and has a decisive lead over Missouri's Devin West and Texas' Ricky Williams in the race for the league rushing title.

Williams said the upcoming Iowa State game will be another chance for the team to shake criticism that they haven't played any tough games. Tech's other victories came against North Texas and Texas-El Paso.

"We've played some pretty good teams, teams we were supposed to beat," Williams said. "Iowa State will be another good chance to see where we really stand."

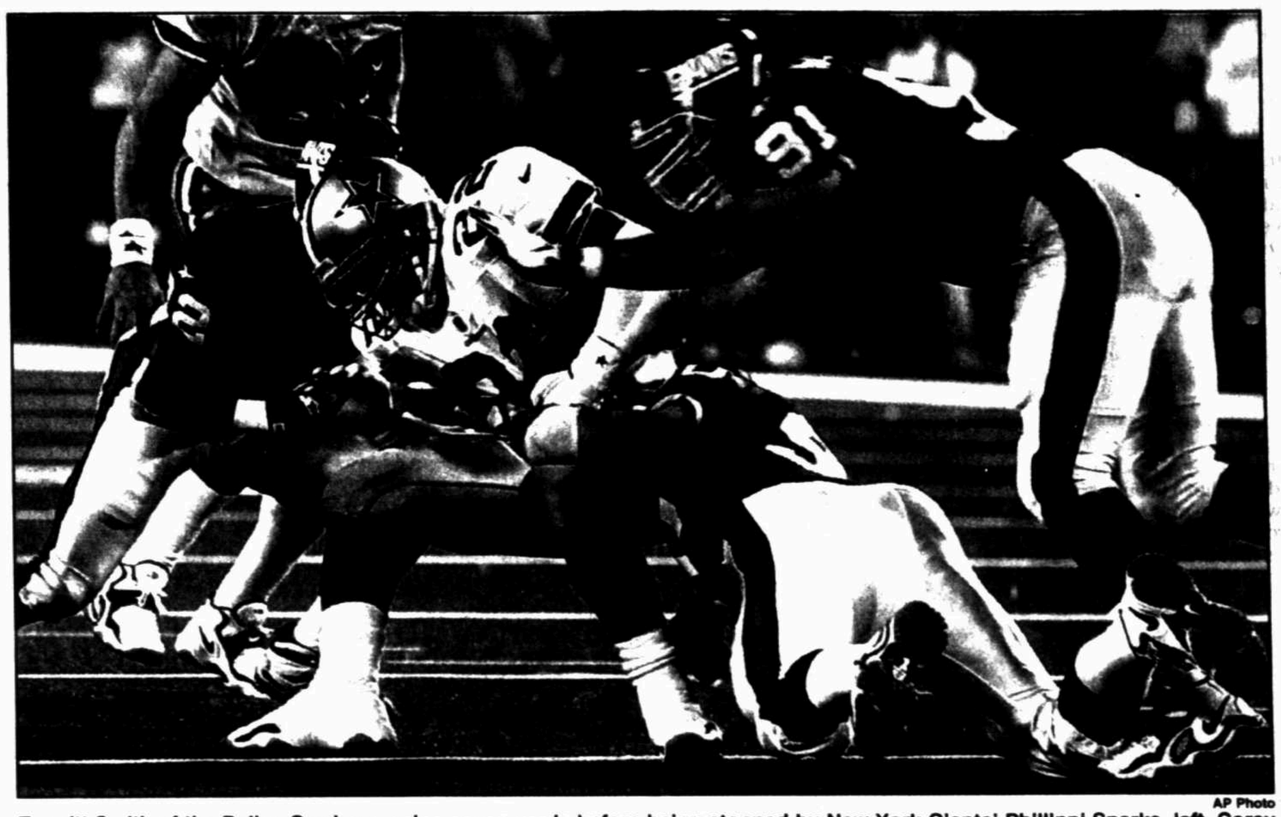

Iowa State will probably try to use its size to shut down Tech's running game, Williams said.

"They have a lot of big guys," he said. "They're going to try to close holes and contain the run but I think if our passing game is good we can take off some of the pressure."

He said he doesn't mind if the team begins to pass more effectively and he doesn't put up numbers like he has in Tech's first three games.

The Red Raiders have plenty of confidence going into their first Big 12 game. Tech led most of the game against Fres-

Deion returns Dallas to win

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Who needs Troy Aikman or Emmitt Smith when Deion Sanders does it all?

Sanders returned a punt 59 yards for a touchdown; set up another TD with a 55-yard reception; and returned an interception 71 yards for a score, piling up 226 yards on offense, defense and special teams.

The result: a 31-7 victory over the New York Giants that put the Dallas Cowboys back where they think they should always be — at the top of the NFC East.

"I don't have to tell you, he's a special athlete," Cowboys quarterback Jason Garrett said. "He does some unbelievable things and he does them over and over and over again."

Garrett, making only his third career start for the injured Troy Aikman, connected with Billy Davis on an 80-yard TD pass and Sherman Williams ran 18 yards for a score after Sanders' long reception as Dallas (2-1) became the only team in the division with a winning record.

The Cowboys, who fell to 6-10 and fourth place last season after five straight division titles, won despite being without two of their quartet of stars — Aikman, who broke his collarbone last week, and Smith, who left in the second quarter with a pulled groin muscle and did not return.

Even Sanders, who added a 39-yard punt return in the third quarter, sat out most of the second quarter because of dehydration.

"It's exhausting but I love it," Sanders said of his multiple roles. "It keeps me focused on the game."

For the Giants (1-2), the loss broke a nine-game streak without a loss in the division they won last season with a 10-5-1 record. They had 11 penalties for 92 yards after getting 15 for 90 yards in a loss at Oakland last week and had no sacks after entering the game tied for the NFL lead with 13.

How bad was it?

At one point, the Giants had two straight illegal procedure calls against them and had five overall, three by left tackle Roman Oben. That's not supposed to happen at home before a record crowd of 78,039.

"I'm confused right now where this team is mentally," coach Jim Fassel said.

"No matter what we tried, we just made mistake after mistake after mistake. More than once they made a play

FloJo's unique sense of style and flair will endure

By Bert Rosenthal
AP Track Writer

NEW YORK — Florence Griffith Joyner was one of a kind.

The fastest women's sprinter in history, she also established the standards for fashion in track and field.

No one has matched the feats she set 10 years ago — world records in the 100- and 200-meter dashes, marks that still stand. And no one has duplicated the flair she displayed — her flamboyant, colorful, one-legged outfits, her elaborate, well-polished, 6-inch fingernails.

Sprinter-hurdler Gail Devers and 400-meter hurdler Sandra Farmer Patrick have tried to emulate the glamour of Griffith Joyner, who died Monday of a heart-related problem at 38. Devers has become noted for her extremely long fingernails and Farmer Patrick for her stylish attire, but neither star has received the acclaim nor captured the imagination of the flashy, provocative "FloJo."

■ Tribute

Farmer Patrick was devastated by Griffith Joyner's death.

"Florence was like a sister to me," she said, crying uncontrollably. "We shared so much together. We shared lots of childhood memories and career goals. We had similar values and religious beliefs."

Griffith Joyner was the godmother of Farmer Patrick's 4-year-old daughter, Sierra.

"I chose her because of her strength and her courage," Farmer Patrick said. "I loved her dearly."

So did many others, even though there were rumblings during the 1988 Olympics that Griffith Joyner was using performance-enhancing drugs because she appeared bulked up. Nothing ever was proven.

One special admirer was President Clinton.

"We were dazzled by her speed, humbled by her talent, and captivated by her style," Clinton said in a statement. "Though she rose to the pinnacle of the world of sports, she never forgot where she came from, devoting time and resources to helping children — especially those growing up in our most devastated neighborhoods — make the most of their own talents."

"She was very good with kids," said John Smith, one of the premier sprint coaches in the world. "Whenever she

Hitting 65 no retirement for McGwire

By R.B. Fallstrom
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS — Having achieved the lofty home run goal his 10-year-old son set for him this spring, Mark McGwire now tries to see if he can top it.

The St. Louis Cardinals slugger has six games left, all at home, to build on his major league record of 65 homers and try to hold off Sammy Sosa, who is two homers behind with five games to go, all on the road. McGwire's stretch drive begins Tuesday night with the first of two games against the Houston Astros, and the team concludes its season with four against the Montreal Expos.

No. 65 was special for McGwire because that was the number Matthew McGwire, the Cardinals' batboy whenever he's in town, had forecast for his father before spring training.

"That's all I thought about when I was running around the bases," McGwire said Sunday. "That ball means a lot to me. I hope I get it back."

He could have had No. 66 on Sunday except for a controversial call by umpire Bob Davidson. The Cardinals asked the NL to review the ruling, but league president Len Coleman called St. Louis general manager Walt Jocketty on Monday to say the request had been turned down.

How many more long balls does McGwire have in him? At this stage, no prediction is too outrageous.

"He's got a chance to do it every at-bat," Cardinals pitcher Kent Mercker said.

Or he could go the rest of the way without another homer and no one should complain.

"What Mark and Sammy have done this year, if they don't hit another one that's a lot of taters," second baseman Delino DeShields said. "I've had my share. I'm satisfied. I don't know if he can push the envelope anymore."

Likely, it will be someplace in between. Manager Tony La Russa figures the final count depends on the amount of pitches McGwire gets to hit. Give him one in the zone, and it's goodbye.

As for McGwire, there are no predictions.

"I'm going to give it six great shots," McGwire said. "Six games, and give it my best, and wherever the chips fall, they fall."

The NL Central champion Astros have yielded five home runs to McGwire, although the starters on Tuesday and Wednesday, left-handers Mike Hampton and Randy Johnson, aren't among the victims.

He faced both pitchers on the Cardinals' first trip after he broke Roger

Offensive MVP

Shemond Davis, RB, Midland High: Davis, a senior, had his third 200-yard game (new school record), had his third straight 200-yard game (ties city record) and broke his district's best single-game rushing total in 1998 with 296 yards and 1 TD rushing in MHS's 27-17 win over Lubbock Monterey. Davis also became the Class 5A rushing leader with 732 yards in three games. He leads Abilene High's Sneezy Beltran in the district and state race by 92 yards. Beltran has played four games.

Defensive MVP

Jason Hernandez, LB, Odessa High: The standout linebacker registered 14 solo tackles, one knocked down pass and also forced a fumbled in the Bronchos' 10-7 double-overtime loss to El Paso Coronado. For the season, he has 39 tackles and four forced fumbles.

City Standouts

Midland High

Offense: Rusty Reed: The senior left tackle helped open holes for a Midland High 352 yards rushing and 423 yards in total offense. Reed, the only returning starter from last year, registered four pancakes and two knockdowns and graded out high for MHS. "That was the best game he played this year," Midland High head coach David Browning said. "He has improved his run blocking and I'm pleased with his pass protection. He has done a real good job of that."

Defense: Mike Neu: The middle linebacker recorded eight tackles for MHS and graded out at 83 percent overall on a defense which gave up just 81 rushing yards in the win over Monterey. Neu is a first-year starter. "That was the best game he played all year long, the most physical game," Browning said. "He is an intelligent kid who plays with a lot of emotion."

Midland Lee

Offense: Steve Subia: The huge offensive tackle blocked at over 90 percent and registered nine pancake blocks (which was second to Rex Richards' 14) in Lee's 35-6 win over Arlington Martin. "He had his best game as a Rebel," said Midland Lee head coach John Parchman of the 6-foot-3, 310 pound Subia. "He has been playing well all year, and has consistently been among the top linemen."

Defense: For the second time, Drew Anderson (a 5-9, 185 middle linebacker) gets the nod. Friday, Anderson had nine tackles and six assists to earn high-point honors on a defense that is playing very well as a unit. "They have dominated the last two opponents," Parchman said. "The whole defense has been playing well. It is hard to single anyone out. There is not any cases where just one player made a tackle by himself."

4-5A: Abilene High suffers first defeat to Euless Trinity foot-4 new best friend, achieving impressive results himself. His 261 yards against Irvin is the second most-prolific performance by any Permian thrower.

Also, last week's 220 yards versus Amarillo High was Morris' second 200-yard game of the season which makes him one of four QBs in school history to do that. He can now join Vic Vines (1978) as the Permian QB to throw for 200 yards three times.

So, yes, "Air Mojo" is alive and well at Permian, and there a few 4-5A coaches who would like to have it any other way.

AHS LOSES PERFECT MARK: The winning streak to start the season ends at three for Abilene High. The 3-1 Eagles were manhandled by a Euless Trinity which rushed for 348 yards en route to a 49-24 last Friday.

"We ran into a buzz saw. They can play," AHS coach Steve Warren said. "They ran the ball extremely well and their offensive line did an outstanding job blocking. Our offense played well. We just couldn't slow them down enough to get the ball back."

Euless is a settlement inside the Metroplex. The football program has benefited from a large Tongan population which settles in Euless. One player from that Tongan sect, Robert Lolohea, had 180 yards and two TDs.

For the first time this season, AHS didn't force a turnover.

"We tried to see if we could get a non-district schedule where our nose would get bloodied and it did Friday," Warren said. "We will be fine. Our kids will dust themselves off."

INJURY REPORT: Midland High: DB Joey Kindred - out (knee); Lee: DE Trey Atwater - doubtful (shoulder separation); OHS: QB Rick Leach - out (foot), K Jeff Marrs - questionable (sprained ankle); Cooper: LB Somdy Vorasane - out (knee), LB Paul Mock - out (knee), CB Lee Haggerty - out (wrist), QB Jeremy Janssen - out (broken collarbone); Abilene High: None. Permian: No Report.

4-5A FACTS: The district went 4-2 this week to improve to 15-5 (.750) overall... Unlike last week, the marquee matchups are few and far between. Permian does travel to play Temple, a team Abilene High has already beaten. Abilene High plays former 4-5A foe San Angelo Central... Friday's win over Amarillo High was Permian's 100th win at Ratliff Stadium... OHS played its first-ever overtime game against El Paso Coronado... OHS' Juan Gonzalez set a school and Odessa city record with 42 carries, breaking the old marks set by OHS' Freddy Espinoza (37) and Permian's John Williams (39)... Midland Lee allowed 204 yards rushing to El Paso Coronado in Game 1. In the last two games, the Rebels have allowed 183 total yards.

HE SAID IT: "He was running for something (Saturday)," said Midland High head coach David Browning of Shemond Davis's 296-yard performance which gave Davis three-straight 200-yard games. "There was no question about it. It was like seeing the eye of the tiger. He had a goal in mind and was going to get that goal."

Tech was poised to regain the lead, driving all the way to the Fresno 1, but Williams lost a fumble and the Raiders lost possession with 1:40 left. Then, in a wild turn of events at the goal line, Fresno State's Jaime Kimbrough was stripped of the ball by Reagan Bownds and Kyle Shipley recovered for the winning score.

"It was a tale of two cities out there that night, a roller coaster," said coach Spike Dykes. "We were lucky to win the game ... but a lot of credit needs to go to this team for not ever giving up. They could have just played the game out, but the defense made a big stand to keep Fresno on the 1 yard-line for two downs. That led to the touchdown."

Tech's defense, ranked 7th in the nation, limited Fresno to just 9 yards rushing. Defensive end Montae Reagor dominated Fresno's line, posting six tackles behind the line of scrimmage.

"They double- and triple-teamed him, and it didn't make any difference," Dykes said. "He could not be stopped."

STEWART DOREEN

Why didn't Davis receive preseason hype?

Shemond Davis has come a long way already this season, even though he didn't have to.

Doreen

Before the season, talk about the district's best running backs usually centered around Abilene High's Arturo "Sneezy" Beltran, Permian's Koefie Powell, or maybe, even the multitude of runners at Midland Lee.

That has changed thanks to the Midland High senior, which raises the question, "Why wasn't anyone talking about the current Class 5A leader in rushing?"

Davis entered the 1998 season as the second leading returning rusher in the district with 922 yards. A case could be made that he was as good as any district running back at the end of last year because his totals in weeks 8 and 9 against Abilene Cooper (191 yards) and Odessa High (172) were the most allowed by the two stingiest defenses to any 4-5A running back. Neither had allowed a 100-yard rusher up to that point in the season.

So yes, he was, and still is, a force to be reckoned with, not that many people noticed until he started racking up 200-yard games. This past Saturday in MHS' 27-17 win over Monterey, Davis got his third-straight 200-yard effort (which ties a city record held by Lee's Farris Strambler), totaling 296 yards (which is tied for third on MHS' all-time single game list). Davis also became the first MHS back to rush for at least 200 yards in three games in one season. He still has seven more games to go.

Now the spotlight is on Davis, and whether he wanted the attention or not, people will notice. As a featured back in 4-5A, defenses were going to key on him anyway, but with terms like "record-breaking," and "state-leading" preceding Davis, he becomes a marked man. Also, for every yard he adds to his total of 732, the bull's eye on his chest will get that much bigger.

Watching Davis run, it appears that he is up for the challenge that is ahead of him. While he can run in open space with the best backs around, he doesn't shy away from contact. In fact, Davis makes an extraordinary amount of yards after the first hit, a telling sign of a remarkable back.

However, while MHS' success depends on No. 5 being able to do his thing, playoff possibilities for a school, which hasn't seen the postseason since 1951, rely on another weapon coming to the forefront — presumably of the aerial variety.

So far this season, the Bulldogs' passing game has been inconsistent. Over the last two games, the Bulldogs are 19 of 39 for 185 yards, 1 TD and two interceptions. Saturday, the team was 9 of 18 for 71 yards, which wasn't bad, although there was plenty left on the table. A handful of big plays were just missed.

If those plays are made on Saturday, or down the line, an already potent offense closes in on being unstoppable. And while Davis still needs all the touches MHS can give him, some extra help might reduce the stacked defenses which are sure to greet him come October.

"It ought to all work hand in hand," Midland High head coach David Browning said. "With our running game, our play-action pass ought to work more, and likewise, if we throw the ball and are successful doing that, then they've got to play the pass and that ought to make Shemond more successful."

And if Davis has more success, watch out.

PREDICTIONS: Abilene High's Beltran out gains Davis this week. Beltran, who trails Davis by 92 yards in the district and state rushing standings, will have the biggest day of the season against San Angelo Central. In week one, Central allowed 489 yards rushing to Brownwood... Lee coach John Parchman gets his 30th win as Lee's head coach after the Rebs beat El Paso Irvin by 30. Parchman's current record is 29-7-1...

FLOJO: Sprinter was role model for many young women came to see me, she brought a FloJo doll for my daughter, Noel."

While many young girls saw FloJo as a role model, she never felt that way.

"Kids tell me: 'FloJo, I want to be just like you,'" she used to say. "And I tell them, you have to be yourself first, and strive to be better than me and set your own goals."

Griffith Joyner authored many children's books, featuring the character Barry Bam Bam; she wrote poems; she was a beautician, an artist, a model and a clothes designer; she performed in movies and television; she did numerous commercial endorsements; she made many speaking engagements, and she designed the uniforms for the Indiana Pacers.

She did them all with style and grace. Just like she ran.

And in 1988, she ran like no one else, winning Olympic gold medals in the 100, 200 and 400 relay, and a silver in the 1,600 relay.

"I remember her from '88, just taking the world by storm and surprising all of us," said Evelyn Ashford, whose world record in the 100 Griffith Joyner broke. "In '88 ... she was the one we all had to beat."

Greg Foster, a three-time world champion in the 110 hurdles who was once engaged to FloJo, called her death "a shock." Roger Kingdom, the 1984-88 Olympic hurdles champion, remembered Griffith Joyner's bubbling personality.

"We were always joking around, making little side bets," he said.

Craig Masback, executive director of USA Track & Field, said FloJo's records "might last into the 21st century," but that should not be the only thing for which she is remembered.

"She revolutionized the way athletes dress," he said. "Her flair and everything else she did captured the imagination."

One of the most appropriate tributes to Griffith Joyner came from Primo Nebiolo, president of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the world governing body for the sport.

"I will never forget this extraordinary athlete who stunned the world in Seoul 10 years ago with her amazing sprints and spectacular outfits," Nebiolo said. "Sadly, her life has passed as rapidly as her races."

DALLAS: Cowboys resume Monday night mastery of Giants

(From 1C)

But after the Giants first series of the second quarter, Sanders struck. He took Brad Maynard's low punt, zigged left, then zigged right and zagged back into the middle of the field for the 15th return touchdown of his career, the fourth on a punt.

"I don't catch the punt and go 10 yards," Sanders said. "I try to score every time."

But on the next series, Garrett found Davis over the middle on a third-and-10 from his own 20. Then, after Mathis intercepted a pass by Kanell, a pass interference penalty on Phillippi Sparks set up Richie Cunningham's 40-yard field goal that made it 17-7 at halftime.

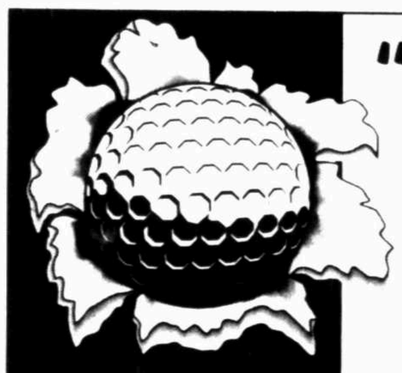

Garrett, who finished 12-of-28 for 222 yards, connected with Sanders on a third-and-8 from their 20 on their second offensive series in the second half that carried the ball to the New York 25. That set up Williams' touchdown dash up the middle.

That left Smith to sum up Sanders' night.

"He had a super game, a superb game," he said of Sanders. "Anything less would be uncivilized."

Notes: The victory made the Cowboys 6-0 against the Giants on Monday night. One of those wins came in the opening game of 1986, one of two for New York in a season in which they won the Super Bowl. ... Several New York Mets, who were off Monday night, attended the game, including Mike Piazza, Al Leiter, Brian McRae, John and Matt Franco and Butch Huskey. ... The 80-yard TD pass was the longest of Garrett's career. ... Dallas had lost three straight to the Giants. ... Cowboys backup linebacker Nate Hemsley dislocated his ankle covering a punt in the fourth quarter... The Cowboys play the Raiders next week in Dallas.

Last two weeks have left Longhorns sore

By Owen Canfield
AP Sports Writer

Back-to-back poundings at the hands of nationally ranked opponents have taken a physical and, perhaps more importantly, emotional toll on the Texas Longhorns.

It's something coach Mack Brown says has him "really concerned" as he goes about the task of repairing the damage.

"It's my job to get my head back up and go back and work as hard as I can this week, as a role model to my assistant coaches and players, to let them know they better not get down," Brown said Monday during the Big 12's weekly coaches teleconference.

The Longhorns (1-2) lost 48-7 to Kansas State on Saturday, one week after losing 49-31 to UCLA. The Texas defense had a tough time in both games, just as it did in the opener against New Mexico State.

The Longhorns rank 98th nationally against the rush, dead last (112th) against the pass and 109th in total defense. They figure to get another test this week with Rice, which runs the option.

Brown said he's beyond the point of making personnel changes on defense. Instead, he plans to hold "tryouts" each week.

"The guy that performs the best in practice will play during the ball game, so we may be making decisions as late as Thursday," he said.

The game of football, he said, involves "taking crises and turning them into positives. We've had two crises and it's time to get those turned around."

One team that turned things around last week was Baylor, which defeated then-No. 20 North Carolina State, 33-30. The Bears needed a shot in the arm after going 2-9 last year and then losing their opener to Oregon State.

■ Big 12 Notes

Baylor coach Dave Roberts said the victory was huge for his program, but came up short of calling it a possible turning point in the season.

"Every game's big for us because of the schedule," he said. "We just have to try to improve this week and see if we can't get a little better."

CORBY'S COMPLAINT: Following Missouri's 35-14 loss to No. 1 Ohio State, quarterback Corby Jones questioned the decision to pass so infrequently. He was just 6-of-11 passing for 20 yards.

"I think we would have done better if we would have mixed it up," he said.

Coach Larry Smith had no apologies for the game plan. He said neither the coaches nor the players have enough confidence in the passing game at this point.

"They (the players) say they do, but they don't," Smith said. "I watch 'em practice. I'm not going to call things that I don't have confidence in."

SHIFTY WILDCAT: Kansas State's David Allen has returned three punts for touchdowns this season, including a 93-yarder against Texas on Saturday. What's the secret?

"He doesn't have the greatest speed in the world, but he has great vision, changes directions extremely well," coach Bill Snyder said. "He's kind of an old throwback in that he sets up blocks really well.

"He'd be the first to tell you this, he's not going to have the successes he's had if not for the other 10 guys on that unit. I'm equally proud of them."

Bands suspended after fighting in football game

PRAIRIE VIEW (AP) — The marching bands from Prairie View A&M and Southern University were suspended from their next two football games Monday, two days after a brawl among the musicians.

The fight, which occurred at halftime during the schools' neutral-site game in Beaumont on Saturday, resulted in thousands of dollars in damage to instruments and uniforms. Both schools are investigating, but Southwestern Athletic Conference Commissioner Rudy Washington acted swiftly.

"We felt something had to be done, because actions like that will not be tolerated at our games," SWAC assistant commissioner Lonza Hardy said, noting the action was necessary despite the drawing power of the conference's entertaining marching bands.

Calling the melee a "tragic incident," Larry Raab, Prairie View vice president for university operations, promised a thorough investigation.

"PVAMU takes student safety and security very seriously, and we intend to ensure that our students and fans are adequately protected at any university-sponsored event," Raab said.

Raab said the fighting started when the Southern band, leaving the Lamar University field after performing, charged through Prairie View musicians who were lined up on the sideline ready to begin their performance.

"They marched vigorously into our band members," he said.

But Southern band director Isaac Greggs said the Prairie View band members blocked his group's exit from the field and then attacked drum major Terrell Jackson, who sustained minor injuries.

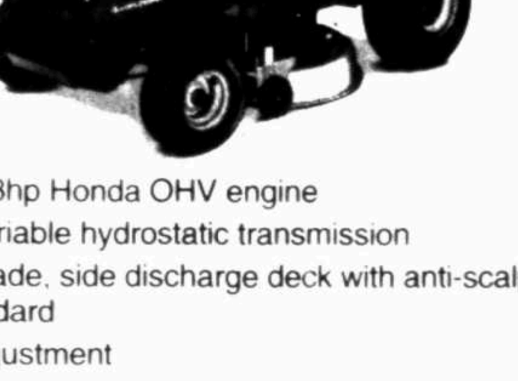

When the fight erupted, students used their instruments as weapons, assailing each other with drumsticks and trombones. Several students either received medical attention on site or were treated and released from a Beaumont hospital.

On Monday, Southern Chancellor Edward R. Jackson held both bands accountable for the fight, which occurred during Southern's 37-7 victory that extended Prairie View's NCAA-record losing streak to 80 games.

"After viewing videotapes from various sources, it is evident that errors were committed by both sides," Jackson said. "At this point, it is unimportant to determine who did what or who hit whom first. Guilt is not that critical."

Enjoy a fiesta of food for few pesos at Dona Anita's

They were noted in Texas Monthly as having excellent Mexican food and inexpensive prices. They've received a perfect score from the Health Department on the last two inspections. They're a favorite of the Governor of Texas. They're Dona Anita's, perhaps Midland's best-kept Mexican food secret.

It's no secret how they consistently serve up such wonderfully appetizing food. Owners Jesse and Luz Reyes are in the kitchen making sure their recipes are made fresh daily, using only the freshest ingredients. For the Reyeses, pleasing customers is a labor of love. That attitude is also why they keep their prices low.

A portrait of their most famous customer overlooks the staff at Dona Anita's. Luz Reyes (second from right) and jazz-piano-playing son Michael Mendoza (behind her) say they'll treat you famously, too.

Consistency counts. Luz relates that some customers which had moved away recently came back to Dona Anita's. They told her, "The food here is exactly like we remembered it." That's consistent quality.

Saturday nights feature the soothing piano jazz of son Michael, who's been entertaining the clientele for several years now.

For 16 years, Jesse & Luz Reyes have served up the best in Mexican food at Dona Anita's, located at 305 W. Florida. Hours are 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays and 5-9 p.m. on Saturdays. Closed Sundays. Call 683-6727.

New tax laws impact estate planning

No West Texan can change the fact that he/she won't live forever—but we can control some things that happen beyond our time on earth. One way is with estate planning, which means deciding what will happen to your wealth after you die. You can draft a proper estate plan with help from your professional financial advisor, estate attorney and certified accountant.

Whether you already have an estate plan or are considering creating one, you should know that last year's Taxpayer Relief Act contains more than 40 provisions directly affecting estates. Following are nine key areas the financial newsletter Bottom Line says you should cover with a specialist who's knowledgeable about the new law.

Van Pearcy

1. Your current will. An up-to-date will is now even more important for larger estates, because the current $625,000 estate tax exemption per individual begins rising each year until it reaches $1 million in 2006. Your will should express this amount in terms of a formula that will entitle your estate to the full tax-exempt limit in effect at the time of your death.

2. Other important documents. Insurance and insurance trusts are just two examples of legal documents that may need updating due to the new tax law. Also, review any Power of Attorney documents for compliance.

3. Gifts to reduce estate tax. If your portfolio is larger than you will need for your lifetime, you might consider giving assets to family members now to reduce the impact of estate taxes after your death. It is important to understand the allowable amounts before you begin using this estate planning tool.

4. Charitable remainder trusts. Because of new requirements, it's important for you to conduct a thorough review with an expert in this field before deciding if charitable remainder trusts are appropriate for your estate. These can be complicated, but there are a few investment professionals in our area who can help with this type planning.

5. Life insurance. Once you consider how the new tax laws will affect your estate, you may decide you need more or less life insurance to cover estate taxes. Always remember to review your beneficiary forms to insure they conform to your estate plan.

6. Regular IRA vs. Roth IRA. The Roth IRA offers some estate-planning advantages such as undisturbed assets that can be passed to heirs free of income tax if you don't need them in your lifetime. There are benefits and disadvantages to both types of IRAs, depending on your needs and situation. Completely understand your options and any penalties before you act. Again, like life insurance, make sure your IRA beneficiary forms conform with your entire estate plan.

7. Selling your residence. The new law offers a generous exemption from capital gains tax on the sale of a principal residence. This could make it more advantageous for you to sell your home now, rather than leaving it to heirs. If you'd like a smaller home or condo, look into this new tax provision.

8. Selling other appreciated assets. The new, more liberal 20 percent long-term capital gains tax for most taxpayers may make it more attractive for you to sell securities and other appreciated assets rather than holding on to them for heirs.

9. Change in business ownership. Some small or family-owned businesses could benefit from the new provisions. It may be worth discussing this with your attorney.

Make a small investment of your time today to learn how these provisions could affect your estate. It is very, very important. Chances are, changes in your estate plan are warranted, but these changes will benefit you and your heirs, and ensure that your wishes are carried out.

Get quality carpet and service from Southwest Floors

"We value our customers—we want them back again," says Southwest Floors owner Robert Burton. He achieves that by offering customers service, affordability and quality, not to mention the wide selection pictured.

"We believe we offer customers the best carpet value there is," says Southwest Floors owner Robert Burton. "We sell only quality carpet, and we sell it at the lowest price possible."

"Never buy simply based on price," Robert warns. "You will probably get what you pay for. Buying an inexpensive carpet will result in a floor that won't last long. No one likes to replace their carpet every few years."

"Good carpet will resist wear and retain its good looks much longer, providing the buyer satisfaction on his investment," Robert explains.

Customer satisfaction is the main goal at Southwest Floors. "We want our customers to be happy with the floor they bought for a long time," says Robert. "Our business was built on reputation, not on repetitive blitz advertising."

Part of that customer satisfaction comes from service after the sale. "We have the best carpet installation crews in town," says Robert, whose long experience in the carpet business makes him an expert. "I started out in this business as an apprentice installer 28 years ago. I served five years as an apprentice before becoming a master. All of our installers have served apprenticeships before becoming masters."

"At Southwest Floors, we sell only first-quality carpet," says Robert. "A lot of other carpet stores have rolls and rolls of carpet in stock that aren't first quality. They sell mostly second and off goods that have no mill warrantees."

This is not the case at Southwest Floors. Because they order only first quality carpet, the average order at the store usually takes about seven to 10 days. When it's time for your carpet to be installed, the crews at Southwest Floors will move all your furniture at no extra charge.

In addition to carpet, Southwest Floors sells ceramic tile, hardwood floors, laminated wood, Armstrong and Nafco Vinyl floors.

"We really value our customers," says Robert, "and we want them back again."

Southwest Floors was opened by Robert Burton in 1990. They carry a wide selection of carpet, tile, wood and vinyl flooring. The address is 1113 Andrews Highway, next to McDonald's. The phone number is 689-9312. Store hours are 9-5:30 Monday through Friday and 10-1 Saturday. They take Visa, Master Card, American Express and Discover.

Jib's owner is at home on the range

If you happen by Jib's early some morning, you're likely to see something you may not find at any other restaurant—the owner, Joe Harper, cutting steak fingers, chicken strips and catfish and peeling potatoes for that day's customers.

At Jib's, they don't take any pre-fixed food out of bags and dump it in a pot. Everything is made from scratch every day.

The steak fingers are cut a certain way from top quality, tenderized round steak to remove imperfections and to make them as tender as possible. Then they're refrigerated until you order them, at which point they're dipped in an egg and milk wash and dropped in flour. This procedure is repeated, then they're fried to a golden brown. After that, they come to you hot and fresh.

Jib's chicken fried steak, chicken strips and catfish are treated in a similar manner. The chicken strips really strike home with a number of customers. "Quite a few people have told me that our chicken strips are different from any they've ever had," Joe says. And they mean they're really good.

No matter how closely you look, you won't find any heat lamps in the Jib's kitchen, because there aren't any. They only serve your fried food freshly cooked so it'll be as hot and crisp as possible when you sit down to enjoy it.

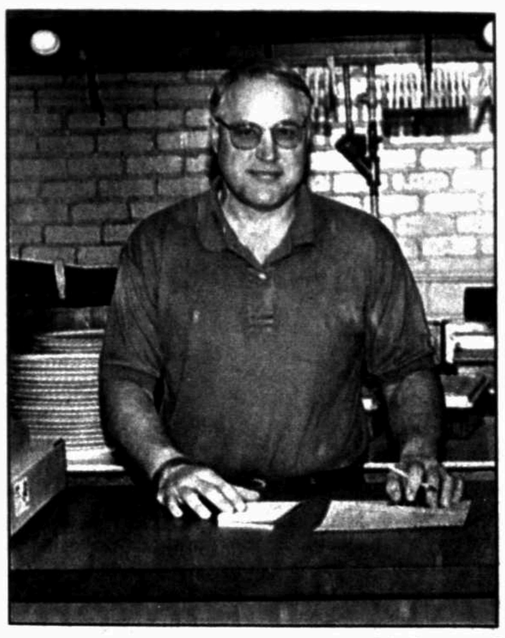

Of course, barbecue takes longer, so Joe starts that in the smoker the night before. He cooks it very slowly—about 12 hours—so it'll have that deep mesquite-smoked flavor and all the tenderness you could ever want. You can get barbecued St. Louis-style ribs, brisket, sausage or sandwiches of sliced or chopped beef. Whatever barbecue you get, don't forget to smother it with Jib's special barbecue sauce—another delicious offering made right in Jib's kitchen.

Joe treats his side dishes with the same home-kitchen care as he does the main courses. Potatoes, for example, are peeled right there in the Jib's kitchen. They don't dump potato salad out of a food service tub and then scoop it onto your plate. They boil the potatoes till they're tender, then mash them. Some stay as fluffy mashed potatoes, while others get all the flavorful seasonings to become Jib's one-of-a-kind potato salad.

In fact, Joe says he has carefully selected everything on the menu, knowing it will be prepared right there in the kitchen, like Mama used to do it.

Whether it's the grill in Jib's kitchen or the wide open West Texas plains, Joe Harper and his staff are definitely at "home on the range." You'll probably notice the difference, and it'll leave a good taste in your mouth.

Located at 3316 W. Illinois, just north of Dunlap's, Jib's features steak fingers, chicken fried steak, chicken strips, deep-fried pork chops, catfish, shrimp, barbecue, smoked sausage, St. Louis style ribs and more made-from-scratch Texas fare. Their hours are 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and until 9 p.m. Friday. Call ahead for carryout orders at 699-3008.

On the range, at the fryer or at the counter taking your order, Joe Harper is at home giving Jib's customers some of the finest home cooking this side of Mom's house.

Now you can afford warranteed appliances

Do you need a new washer, drier, stove or refrigerator but can't swing a new one? Are you tired of searching garage sales, hoping to find something that will probably work?

Affordable Appliance Center is your answer. All the appliances they sell have been fully reconditioned before being put out for sale. Appliances they sell come with a warranty of 90 days to one year. This warranty includes any in-home service calls that may be necessary.

Every appliance they receive is cleaned thoroughly. Then it goes through a checklist of up to nine points (the checklist is available to customers), and needed repairs are made before the appliance goes on the sales floor. If it can't be fixed properly, it is scrapped—only appliances in good working order are for sale at Affordable.

"Most of the appliances we receive just need cleaning and a few minor repairs," says Affordable's Alvin Roberts. "But even if it needs major repair, we make sure the appliance is working properly before we put it on the sales floor. We put a warranty on everything we sell."

Prices fall mostly between $100 and $250. And at Affordable Appliance, unlike most appliance store, your trade-in will probably be worth real money.

If you'd like to pay it out, layaway is available with a down payment of one third of the price.

Delivery is available, and they can pick up your old appliance as well. Alvin says they deliver to Odessa, Andrews, Big Spring, Greenwood, Gardendale and other places in addition to Midland. A delivery fee may apply.

In the shop, there are affordable refrigerators, gas and electric ranges, plus gas and electric dryers. Occasionally you'll find cooktops, microwaves and even a stackable washer-drier unit. Alvin says you're likely to see just about any brand, but the most popular are Maytag, Kenmore and Whirlpool. "These are the ones that generally are the best made units to start with," he says.

While many of Affordable Appliance's customers are on a tight budget, Alvin says apartment complexes and oilfield companies make up a significant part of their business.

Affordable's service technicians also offer repair service. Alvin, Greg Wells or Blaine Hale can come to your house, or you can save money by taking it by the shop. They also keep a good stock of reconditioned parts on hand if you're more the do-it-yourself type. All three are ASE-licensed to work with refrigerants used in refrigerators.

Go ahead, give up on that old appliance. Now you can afford a fully reconditioned one with a real warranty at Affordable Appliance.

Affordable Appliance, owned and operated by Family Maytag, carries a wide range of reconditioned, guaranteed appliances. They are located at 1005 N. Midkiff, next to Don's Deli. Store hours are 9-6 Monday through Friday and 9-5 on Saturday. The phone number is 520-8080. They accept Visa, Master Card and Discovery, and layaways are available.

NFL facing serious QB shortages

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

Ryan Leaf's line in Kansas City was almost impossible to believe: 15 passes, 1 completion, 4 yards.

In fact, he had more turnovers (5) than yards.

Yes, on-the-job training for NFL quarterbacks can be embarrassing. But in a league where there aren't enough capable quarterbacks, what other way to teach a rookie?

"I'm going to play 'til I'm 50," said 36-year-old Bubby Brister, who relieved John Elway on Sunday and helped Denver to a 34-17 win in Oakland. "There are certainly enough jobs for experienced, old guys.

The problems for the young guys were evident Sunday for three rookies — Leaf, Peyton Manning of the Colts and Charlie Batch of the Lions. Leaf and Manning were making their third NFL starts and Batch his first.

But they were equally evident for some second-year starters — Kordell Stewart of the Steelers, Bobby Hoying of the Eagles and Jake Plummer of the Cardinals.

The Cardinals and Eagles struggled through three quarters at 0-0. That was the first scoreless three quarters in the NFL since 1987 in a strike-replacement contest between the Giants and Bills that can hardly be considered major league football.

All this demonstrates is how hard it is for quarterbacks to step right in.

The only instant success in the past two decades is Dan Marino, who became Miami's starter late in his rookie season of 1983 and in his second season set a passel of records, including 48 TD passes. But he had the benefit of joining a team that had been to the Super Bowl the previous season, unusual for a first-round quarterback.

But John Elway had problems, so did Terry Bradshaw, who at various times lost his job to Terry Hanratty and Joe Gilliam. And Brett Favre was so little thought of by Atlanta, which drafted him in the second round in 1991 that he was traded to Green Bay after the season. Even Roger Staubach, who came out of the Navy in his late 20s, began his career as a backup to Craig Morton.

Some stats:

■ Of the 30 first-string quarterbacks in the NFL, six are in their first year as a starter, five more are in their second and two more in their third. Thirteen essentially are undergoing on-the-job training.

■ Of the rest, five have more than 10 seasons in the league — Marino, 37; Elway, 38; Warren Moon, 41; Steve Young, 36; and Randall Cunningham 34.

■ Of the remaining dozen, only Drew Bledsoe, Mark Brunell, Jeff George, Jim Harbaugh, Troy Aikman, Brad Johnson, Elvis Grbac and Favre are first-rate starters in their prime. And with Harbaugh, Johnson and Aikman hurt, the talent pool is reduced even more.

The backups?

Brister, 44-year-old Steve DeBerg and a few decent (or at least experienced) quarterbacks — Cunningham, filling in for Johnson; Rich Gannon, Grbac's backup; the Eagles' Rodney Peete; the 49ers' Ty Detmer; the Ravens' Eric Zeier; the Oilers' 40-year-old Dave Krieg; the Jets' Vinny Testaverde; Doug Flutie, the Canadian refugee in Buffalo; and maybe Kent Graham of the Giants, one of the most sought-after free-agent quarterbacks this year, even though he was a backup.

Then there are busted starters — Dave Brown of Arizona, Scott Mitchell of Detroit, Gus Frerotte of Washington.

But all the backups are backups for a reason. Peete, for example, relieved Hoying on Sunday night and moved the Eagles. But he also fumbled to set up the game's first touchdown.

Why so few quartebacks?

1. Salary cap.

"You can't afford to keep a high-priced backup," said Colts president Bill Polian, who traded Harbaugh to the Colts before he even drafted Manning. So letting Manning sit behind a veteran isn't an option. His backups are Kelly Holcomb and Doug Nussmeier.

2. Few pro-style quarterbacks in college.

The best prospects are Tim Couch of Kentucky, Damon Huard of Washington and Daunte Culpepper of Central Florida, with Syracuse's Donovan McNabb a prospect who will take time to learn NFL ways. Down the road: two high-school seniors with good genes — Chris Simms, son of Phil, in New Jersey, and yet another Manning, Eli, in Louisiana.

But Rick Mirer, David Klingler, Andre Ware, Dave Brown and other first-round failures demonstrate that some prospects don't necessarily deliver. Some prospects simply end up good backups.

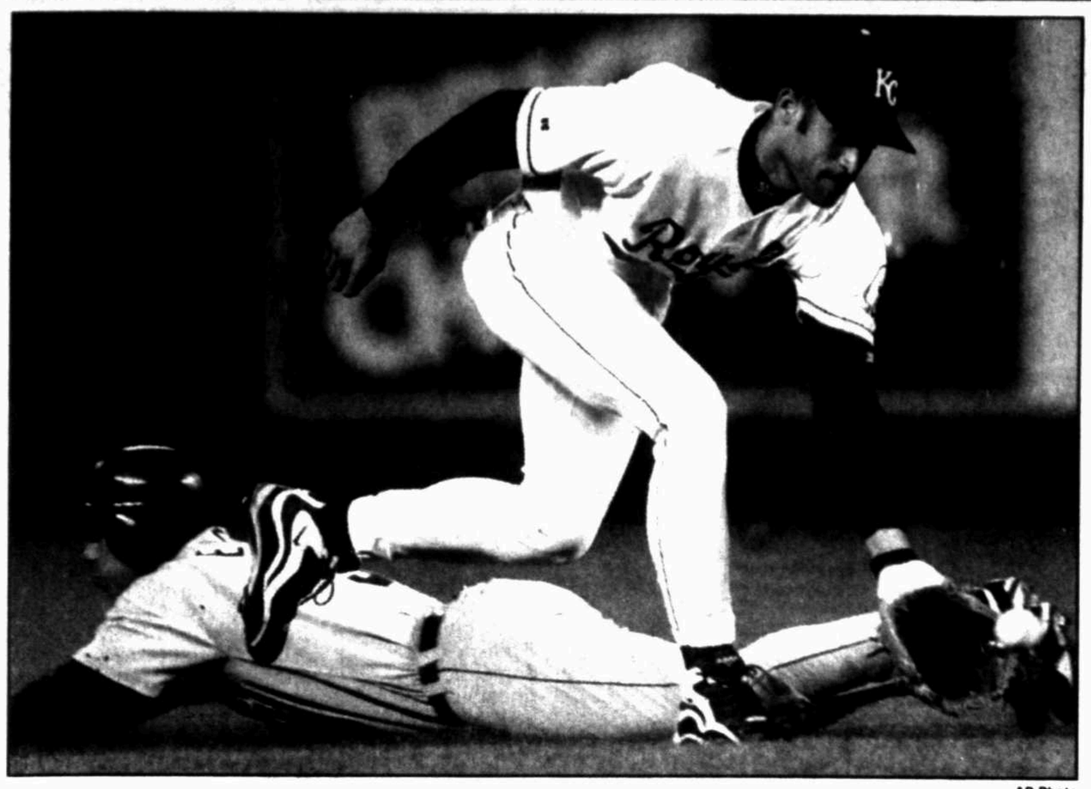

3. Expansion.

When Cleveland rejoins the league next year, there will be 31 teams. With injuries so prevalent, that means 62 respectable quarterbacks will be needed.

They don't exist.

So Leaf, Manning, Batch (and Brian Griese with Elway's retirement) will get on-the-job training.

Associated Press

TORONTO — Roger Clemens earned his 20th victory, winning his 15th straight decision and striking out 15 as he pitched the Toronto Blue Jays past Cal Ripken and the Baltimore Orioles 3-1 on Monday night.

A day after ending his streak of playing 2,632 straight games, Ripken returned to the Orioles lineup. He went 2-for-4 and passed Babe Ruth for 34th on the career list with 2,875 hits.

Clemens (20-6), who tied Atlanta's Tom Glavine for the major league lead in victories, has the longest winning streak since Gaylord Perry won 15 straight in 1974 for Cleveland. The five-time 20-game winner pitched eight innings, allowing seven hits and three walks.

Dan Plesac got one out for his fourth save. Shawn Green hit his 33rd home run and Carlos Delgado hit his 35th.

Devil Rays 8, Red Sox 4, 2nd game

BOSTON — Boston kept crawling toward a wild-card berth, dropping the second game of a doubleheader when Bubba Trammell homered and drove in five runs for Tampa Bay.

In the opener, Keith Mitchell singled in the tiebreaking run in the sixth for his first RBI of the season, and Tom Gordon extended his major league, single-season record of 40 successful save conversions.

The Red Sox, 7-14 in September, are 3 1/2 games ahead of Toronto. They held the same lead over Texas and Anaheim, which played later Monday.

Bret Saberhagen (15-7) won the first game, and Tony Saunders (6-15) took the loss. Boston's John Valentin hit his 23rd homer.

Terrell Wade (1-0) won the second game. Carlos Reyes (1-1) was the loser. Mo Vaughn hit his 38th homer for Boston.

Indians 4, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Enrique Wilson hit his first grand slam, leading Cleveland past New York in a matchup of AL division champions.

The Indians, who beat New York in the first round of the playoffs last year, are 4-4 this year against the Yankees with three games remaining.

Charles Nagy (15-10) allowed five hits in eight innings, and Paul Shuey got three outs for his second save. New York's Andy Pettitte (16-11) gave up eight hits and four runs in seven innings.

White Sox 7, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Jim Abbott improved to 4-0 in his comeback with Chicago, limiting Minnesota to one run and six hits in six innings.

Chicago's Ray Durham scored three runs to take over the AL lead with 123, one ahead of New York's Derek Jeter. Durham was 3-for-5 with an RBI. Bob Tewksbury (7-12) was the loser.

Minnesota's Paul Molitor doubled in the first to tie Paul Waner for 10th place on the career list with 605.

Tigers 7, Royals 5

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Joe Randa scored the go-ahead run on Scott Service's wild pitch in the eighth inning as Detroit beat Kansas City.

Dean Crow (2-2) was the winner, and Todd Jones got the last three outs for his 27th save. Service (6-4) took the loss.

Rob Fick, called up from Double-A Jacksonville on Saturday, hit his first home run for Detroit. Bobby Higginson also homered for the Tigers.

Reds 8, Phillies 5

CINCINNATI — Tony Tarasco's pinch-hit grand slam in the seventh inning rallied the Cincinnati Reds to a victory over the Phillies.

The start of the game was delayed by rain for 2 hours, 23 minutes. Once it began, Scott Rolen hit two home runs and a double as the Phillies took a 5-4 lead.

Tarasco hit his first slam in the majors, and the first pinch-hit slam for the Reds since Lenny Harris did it on Aug. 31, 1996, against the Florida Marlins.

Giants 8, Pirates 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Jeff Kent hit a three-run homer and Orel Hershiser (10-10) pitched seven strong innings to break a six-start winless streak, leading San Francisco past Pittsburgh.

The Giants moved within 3 1/2 games of the idle New York Mets in the NL wild-card race with their fourth victory in five games.

Kent has 30 home runs and 122 RBIs.

Joe Carter also homered for San Francisco.

Jose Silva (6-6) was the loser.

Sosa slumping at absolute worst moment for contending Chicago

By Rick Gano
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa's locker overflows. There are hats, boxes of congratulatory letters, a replica of a Chicago expressway billboard that features him swinging, even a cereal box with Roberto Clemente on the front.

A bodyguard follows him everywhere, a public relations man guides him from interview to photo session to ball signing. People shout his name with every step he takes. Flashbulbs snap every time he swings.

Sosa is in an 0-for-17 slump. Not only have his homers dried up since he hit No. 63 in a grand slam last Wednesday in San Diego, he can't get any hits, either, and he's struck out six times during the skid.

The Cubs, meanwhile, have fallen one game behind the Mets for the NL wild-card berth. At a time when the Cubs need Sosa the most, he hopes to regroup against his favorite pitching staff — the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Cubs play two games in Milwaukee before finishing with three in Houston. Sosa has hit 10 of his homers against the Brewers this season, his most against any team.

"I will go out there to Milwaukee and Houston and forget about everything here and try to play a lot better. I think we will have our chances," Sosa says.

After winning three of four games in San Diego, the Cubs came home and were swept in three games by the Cincinnati Reds. The poor play spoiled a weekend of celebration for Sosa's season, capped by a Sunday ceremony featuring his family and dignitaries from major league baseball and his native Dominican Republic.

Sosa admitted after going 0-for-5 with two strikeouts Sunday that he might have been trying to impress.

"I am a human being," he said. "I have to take what happened like a man."

Sosa enters Tuesday's game at County Stadium two homers behind McGwire, who hit his 65th against the Brewers on Sunday.

"I am going to go over there and relax and make something happen," Sosa said.

Chicago manager Jim Riggleman maintains the Cubs are not struggling because of the Sosa hype. But he acknowledges the hoopla is wearing on his best player.

"One person has gotten so much of this and handled it so well and at some point it has to be a distraction for Sammy," Riggleman said.

"I feel for him. I know it would be tough for anybody to handle. He's been outstanding. But as a team I don't think it is a distraction. As I said to the team, we need to take all this attention and turn it into a positive."

Sosa's four-game skid is certainly not the reason the Cubs played so badly in their final regular-season homestand.

Chicago's pitching has been poor, especially middle and setup relief, and getting to closer Rod Beck, who is one save from 50, has been a chore. And the loss the of rookie Kerry Wood, out with a sprained elbow ligament, has hurt the starting staff.

"We just have to go out like the last three days didn't happen," Sosa said. "We have to play much better. To me it will be another day."

NBA sides can't agree on times

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — NBA owners and players discussed getting together for another bargaining session, but the idea was dismissed when the sides couldn't agree on the ground rules.

Deputy commissioner Russ Granik and players union president Billy Hunter both acknowledged Monday that talks aimed at ending the lockout could have resumed almost a week and a half ago, though they differed on why such a meeting never took place. Only one formal bargaining session has been held this summer, and the league is expected to begin canceling exhibition games later this week.

"We invited players to come back to the table, and they declined," Granik said. "They said as long as we would be talking about a hard cap or some system that set a defined percentage of revenues to go toward player salaries, they didn't see any point of meeting."

Hunter said he proposed a small meeting, with four representatives from each side. But when commissioner David Stern asked that the meeting be held when the eight members of the owners labor committee were in town, Hunter declined.

"I just don't think it's progressive or beneficial when there are 40 people in the room," said Hunter, who nonetheless tried to call Granik on Monday afternoon to discuss moving the process forward.

Both sides are still waiting for a decision from arbitrator John Feerick, who will rule on the players' grievance contending that some 220 players with $800 million worth of guaranteed contracts should be paid during the lockout. Feerick's ruling is not expected until early October.

In the meantime, it appears the impasse will keep training camps from opening as scheduled Oct. 6. The regular season is scheduled to begin Nov. 3, but without a new collective bargaining agreement the league will be forced to cancel games because of a work stoppage for the first time in its history.

The sides remain far apart on the main economic issue of the salary cap, with owners saying they need a new system that will not allow salary growth to continue to outpace revenue growth. Owners had the right to opt out of the old labor agreement if the percentage of basketball related income devoted to salaries rose above 51.8 percent, and the league claims that number topped 57 percent last season.

The owners haven't made a formal proposal since June, before the lockout began, and the players' most recent proposal on Aug. 6 was rejected emphatically as Stern, Granik and six owners walked out of a bargaining session upon hearing it.

Hunter said the league has taken a longer look at that proposal since then, and claimed Granik told him that the players' newest ideas had substance.

Cal's break from baseball lasted only one day

By David Crary
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO — It was a short furlough for Cal Ripken.

A day after ending his astonishing streak of 2,632 consecutive games, Ripken was back in the lineup for Baltimore on Monday against Toronto, the same team he faced when the streak started on May 30, 1982. With time to contemplate his decision, Ripken was sure he made the right move.

The SkyDome crowd rose to its feet when Ripken trotted to third base in the bottom of the first inning, and he responded to the ovation with a wave of his cap.

Then in his first at-bat, he singled off Roger Clemens in the second inning. It was Ripken's 2,874th hit, moving him ahead of Babe Ruth into sole possession of 34th spot on the career list.

"I felt much better being inside the game than outside," Ripken said after going 2-for-4 in the Orioles' 3-1 loss to the Blue Jays.

With time to contemplate his decision, Ripken was sure he made the right move in ending the streak Sunday night.

"No regrets, no second thoughts," he said during a pregame news conference at SkyDome. "I felt great about how it went. It was a great celebration instead of a sad event."

He admitted feeling strange about watching a game from the dugout, and sounded relieved to be returning to the field.

"I still consider myself an everyday player," he said. "I have a lot of baseball left in me."

Ripken closed his record run Sunday night, removing himself from the starting lineup in the Orioles' final home game of the season against the Yankees. The move came more than three years after he broke 2,130-game streak of Yankee iron man Lou Gehrig — a record that had stood for 56 years.

Now that he's finally taken a day off, the next question is: Can anyone ever come close to duplicating his record run?

(From 1C)

Maris' 37-year-old record with No. 62. Three days after the historic homer and in the midst of an 18 at-bat homerless drought, he was 0-for-3 against Hampton. The following day, Johnson, though weakened by flu symptoms, held him hitless in two at-bats with a walk that broke Barry Bonds' NL record.

On the other hand, McGwire hit what then was the longest homer of his career, a 538-foot shot June 24, 1997, when he played for the Oakland Athletics and Johnson, a college buddy from Southern California, played for the Seattle Mariners. McGwire topped that shot with a 545-footer off Florida's Livan Hernandez at Busch Stadium on May 16.

For his career, he's 1-for-7 (.143) against Hampton with no homers. Against Johnson, he's 6-for-27 (.222) with two homers and 12 strikeouts.

Houston pitchers that are on McGwire's homer list are Jose Lima (No. 32), Shane Reynolds (No. 33), Billy Wagner (No. 38), Sean Bergman (No. 39) and Scott Elarton (No. 40). For the second straight series McGwire will miss Lima, among the league leaders in homers allowed with 32.

McGwire has only one home run against the Expos. He hit his first career homer at Olympic Stadium, and ninth of the season, off Trey Moore on April 21. Moore has been on the disabled list since July after rotator cuff surgery.

The Expos' likely rotation for the final four games: Javier Vasquez, Miguel Batista, 14-game winner Dustin Hermanson and rookie Mike Thurman or Carl Pavano. Vasquez is among the league leaders with 30 homers allowed.

McGwire has little or no history against any of those pitchers, going 0-for-3 with three walks and a run batted in against Batista and 0-for-1 with a walk against Hermanson.

NEW YORK — Crude oil and gasoline were little changed as traders awaited news of any possible damage from Hurricane Georges to refineries in the Caribbean, the biggest source of U.S. refined product imports. The hurricane forced Amerada Hess Corp. to close its 545,000 barrel-a-day St. Croix refinery in the Virgin Islands, the second-biggest crude oil refinery in the Western Hemisphere. Four other refineries in the region, which together process almost 200,000 barrels of crude a day, were in the storm's path.

October crude oil was unchanged at $15.49 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. October gasoline was little changed at 45.47 cents a gallon, down 0.11 cent, while October heating oil was down 0.29 cent at 41.99 cents a gallon.

Crude oil has risen 36 percent from the 12-year low of $11.42 a barrel on June 15 amid weather-related supply shortfalls and coordinated export cutbacks by oil producers.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar rose Monday against the Japanese yen and several other currencies as a plan to help Japanese banks ran into trouble, but edged lower against the German mark, Italian lira and Canadian dollar.

The dollar made its strongest advance of the day against the Japanese yen. It was quoted in late New York trading at 134.49 yen, up from 132.60 yen late Friday.

The dollar fell to 1.6916 German marks in New York from 1.6955 marks late Friday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.3892 Swiss francs, up from 1.3890; 5.5710 French francs, up from 5.6590; 1,670 Italian lire, down from 1,675; and 1.5278 Canadian dollars, down from 1.5280.

Lockheed buy

BETHESDA, Md. — Just after failing to buy Northrop Grumman Corp., defense giant Lockheed Martin Corp. is embarking on another ambitious acquisition attempt.

Lockheed said that it planned to buy satellite access provider Comsat Corp. for $2.7 billion. Completion of the deal, announced jointly by both companies, is contingent upon pending federal legislation aimed at privatizing the worldwide satellite communications network.

Blair seeks overhaul of IMF, World Bank

■ British Prime Minister says current financial system unable to handle 'new international financial age.'

Associated Press

NEW YORK — British Prime Minister Tony Blair on Monday called for a radical refurbishing of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to deal with the crisis engulfing global financial markets.

Blair said the institutions, set up in the aftermath of World War II, needed to be refurbished "for a new international financial age."

"The current crisis, in my view, illustrates the weaknesses of the existing international financial system," he said in a speech to about a dozen American business executives at the New York Stock Exchange. "It needs to be modernized to meet the challenges of a new century."

Blair urged policymakers to adopt a broad vision in revamping the financial system and seek ideas from developing nations, business executives and others.

"We should not be afraid to think either radically or fundamentally," he said. "We need to commit ourselves today to build a new financial architecture, a new Bretton Woods for the next millennium."

The IMF and the World Bank, created at a conference in Bretton Woods, N.H., have borne the brunt of the financial crisis that began in Asia more than a year ago, spread to Russia and is now rattling the stock and currency markets of Latin American nations.

Critics contend the institutions are unable to deal with the vastness of the current financial turbulence. They also argue that the IMF's prescription for healing ailing economies, which includes high interest rates, has hurt more than helped some nations.

Blair offered few details in his speech. But the Financial Times of London reported in Monday's editions that British officials would flesh out the ideas later in the week at meetings in Washington. The daily said the British government would seek a partial merger of the IMF and World Bank "so there is a single institution charged with supervising and regulating the world economic system."

Airlines weigh value of standby fliers

■ All customers no longer equal on jam-packed airplanes.

Associated Press

ATLANTA — At the end of a work week in Atlanta, Dallas computer consultant Avi Saxena found himself in a line at the airport, hoping to catch an earlier plane than his 11:30 p.m. flight home.

For six available standby seats, he was one of 90 waiting. He knew his chances were slim. "I carry my notebook computer, so I just sit and wait, sit and work," he said.

In these days of jam-packed airplanes, passengers trying to fly standby are realizing that not all customers are created equal.

With load factors — the percentage of an airplane's seats filled — nearing 80 percent, airlines weigh the value of each passenger when doling out the few empty seats on popular routes. They decide by looking at such things as ticket price and frequent-flier mileage balance.

Airlines don't track the number of passengers who fly, or try to fly, standby. If a seat is open and someone with a ticket to the same city on the same day wants it, airlines allow the person to board.

But if an airline is faced with a crush of standby passengers trying to get on one flight, the decision may come down to a database appraisal of each customer. The bottom line: how much each passenger's satisfaction means to the airline.

Such gateside evaluations have quietly been the norm for years, carriers say. But with seats on many flights becoming scarcer, passengers may find this behind-the-scenes ranking becoming more visible.

"It's not hidden or secret," American Airlines spokesman Tim Smith said. "Whether everyone understands it, I don't know."

Leisure travelers — those who fly on bargain, highly restricted fares — usually end up sitting at the gate when a throng starts jockeying for a few open seats.

Terry Overby, a cellular phone technician from Garland, Texas, said he finds that standby seating on many flights, especially at week's end, is "iffy."

"You take your chances," he said while waiting in line at the Atlanta airport in hopes of snagging an earlier flight home. He managed to leave Melbourne, Fla., early when his training conference ended, but needed to make connections in Atlanta.

Those who pay the most — first-class and business-class travelers— are rarely turned away.

"In general, it's the best system that works for us," said Kristina Price, a spokeswoman for United Airlines in Elk Grove Village, Ill. "We reward those who do pay more."

American Airlines, like most of its rivals, uses a computer to rank standby passengers. American's system first considers ticket price and check-in time.

Atlanta-based Delta looks at the ticket's fare code and the passenger's frequent-flier status.

"We take care of our best customers first," said Delta spokeswoman Kay Horner.

Most airlines recommend calling their reservations centers a day ahead to learn how many standby seats are open on the flight you want.

Otherwise, Overby said, "you just sit and read."

Standby passenger Avi Saxena, 30, of Dallas, waits in line on the Delta Air Lines concourse at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport in Atlanta. Saxena was attempting to fly home earlier than his scheduled flight to Dallas, after completing his business early. For six available standby seats, he was one of 90 waiting.

Texas to see part of $1.5 billion contract

■ Part of work under Pentagon contract to be done in San Antonio.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Divvying up the spoils of a closing Air Force base in California, the Pentagon on Monday announced its intention to award the depot's repair missions to a government-private sector consortium that intends to shift the work to Texas and Utah.

A partnership of the Boeing Co. and Hill Air Force Base near Ogden, Utah, emerged victorious in the competition for a contract valued at $1.5 billion over six years, with a three-year option. The partners prevailed over a team led by Lockheed Martin Corp., which intended to keep in California the work now performed at McClellan AFB near Sacramento.

Boeing will do its share of the work at its new aircraft maintenance center in San Antonio, located on the grounds of the closing Kelly AFB. Maintenance of the Air Force's KC-135 tankers, in a contract Boeing valued at $500 million over nine years, could mean as many as 800 jobs to the city.

Hill AFB will gain repair of the A-10 attack jet and will perform maintenance on aircraft hydraulic, electronics and instrumentation subsystems. The Utah base would gain a similar number of jobs.

The McClellan competition proved sensitive for the Clinton administration, which was accused of meddling in the process by enticing Lockheed Martin to enter the bidding, presumably to save jobs in vote-rich California. Campaigning in 1996, President Clinton had vowed to protect the California jobs.

Politics "played no decision in my choice," Darleen Druyan, the Air Force official in charge of acquisition and management, said at the Pentagon.

The contract calls for a one-year transition, beginning immediately, followed by a five-year contract with the potential of three option years tacked on.

The contract award remains in provisional status, however.

A formal award will not be granted until the General Accounting Office completes its review of how the McClellan competition was set. An Alabama defense contractor filed a protest with the GAO, alleging that the bundling of McClellan's missions prevented it from bidding for just a share of the work.

Rep. Ciro Rodriguez, D-San Antonio, expressed little concern about the GAO review, expected Friday. "It should be okay," he said.

The contract will result in savings of $638 million over nine years, Ms. Druyan said, freeing money for much-needed weapons modernization and readiness improvements.

Stock market recovers from sharp losses

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks rebounded from sharp losses Monday as traders were relieved there were no new damaging disclosures when Congress released the president's videotaped grand jury testimony on his relationship with Monica Lewinsky.

The Dow Jones industrials, down 184.61 in a global selloff in the morning, recovered by the close. The rise of 37.59 to 7,933.25 left the Dow back above where it began the year, at 7,908.25. But the average of 30 blue-chip stocks still was 15 percent below the record 9,337.97 set July 17.

Broad-market indicators finished mostly higher and well above the day's lows. But more issues declined than advanced on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow dropped sharply at the opening bell just as Congress released videotapes and thousands of pages of evidence gathered for a grand jury investigation of Clinton's relationship with Ms. Lewinsky. By afternoon, with no new shocks apparent, buying accelerated and major indexes shook off big losses.

The Standard & Poor's 500 composite rose rose 3.80 to 1,023.89, and the technology-heavy Nasdaq composite index rose 16.66 to 1,680.43, but the NYSE composite index declined 0.11 to 507.43.

The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies declined 0.61 to 362.64. But the American Stock Exchange composite index rose 1.17 to 628.33.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by a 4-to-3 margin on the NYSE, where volume dropped to 607.51 million shares from Friday's heavy pace. Many traders were observing te Jewish New Year holiday.

Despite the sharp recovery by the Dow, the stock market has some serious problems in dealing with the financial crises in Asia and Russia, which already are hurting profits of major companies.

Especially upsetting Monday was the apparent unravelling in Tokyo of a set of bank reform measures that investors view as critical to a recovery from a deepening recession.

Tokyo's Nikkei stock average fell 2.8 percent to a new 12-year low. The FT-SE 100 index in London fell 1.3 percent, and the DAX index in Frankfurt declined 3.6 percent.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

By Eric Tyson

Q: I am 1+ years from having to start withdrawing money from my individual retirement account (IRA) which is invested in various mutual funds. Given the recent market slide, should I sell now to prevent further losses?

Tyson

A: Assuming your IRA is properly diversified (i.e. not all in stocks with a healthy helping of bonds), no, I don't think you should sell.

Even though mandatory IRA withdrawals begin in the year following the one in which the account holder reaches age 70+, remember that only a small portion of an account balance must be withdrawn. The required minimum is based upon the life expectancy of the account holder and a designated beneficiary.

For example, if in the first year of mandatory withdrawals IRS tables show you to have a combined life expectancy of 20 years, you would be required to only withdraw one-twentieth (5 percent) of your account balance. So, you'd hardly need to sell everything at once!

As there are different ways to determine beneficiaries and life expectancy, be sure to get a grounding in these areas before you need to make these important elections. Consult with a tax adviser and/or pick up a tax guidebook such as "Taxes for Dummies" (IDG Books) for more information.

One final note: If you don't need to spend the money as it's withdrawn from your IRA, you could simply reinvest it into the funds you're selling to make the withdrawal.

Q: With interest rates as low as they are, why are junk bond fund prices going down?

A: During the recent market correction, some were concerned that U.S. companies may see a slide in earnings.

Such an environment is generally not perceived to be good for junk bonds.

Remember that junk bonds are so named because the bond-issuing company has a relatively low credit rating, and, thus, the bonds are riskier for investors to hold. If the economy takes a turn for the worse, defaults on riskier bonds generally increase.

Q: In a recent column, you gave advice to someone to consider bankruptcy who was making payments on his $48,000 in credit card and other consumer debt. Many people sleep better knowing they have not kept others from borrowing money by defaulting on their debts.

The rest of us pay a higher interest rate to cover those who default. Wouldn't you agree that the banks could make the same amount of money charging a lower rate of interest if they had fewer defaults?

A: In filing bankruptcy, no one is keeping others from borrowing money. Banks make piles of profits on credit cards and they have provisions for write-offs.

Sure, the banks could charge a lower interest rate on credit cards if no one defaulted, just as they could charge corporate customers less if they didn't default either. Loan defaults are part of the territory.

Finally, as I advise people through my various work, don't carry a balance on your credit cards! The interest rates are high, offer no tax breaks, encourage people to live beyond their means and, as you point out, the interest rate also includes defaults.
