Session set for June 22

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Saturday said he expects to sign a bill permanently setting the state gasoline tax at 15 cents a gallon, and he will call lawmakers back for a summer special session beginning June 22.

The House and Senate, however, remained deadlocked over how to deal with sales tax legislation.

With no debate, the House gave final approval to the gasoline tax bill Saturday afternoon. That measure, which will raise about $1 billion over the 1988-1989 budget cycle, makes permanent what lawmakers passed as a temporary nickle-a-gallon hike last summer. The rate was scheduled to return to 10 cents a gallon Sept. 1.

"I would be surprised if I won't go ahead and sign that," Clements told reporters. "There'd be no reason not to that I can think of."

The regular session ends at midnight Monday, and no other signs of action on taxes or the state's 1988-1989 budget are in sight. Clements announced the date for the special session on the budget after a closed-door meeting with House Speaker Gib Lewis.

"We're coming back on the 22nd at 2 p.m.," the governor said. "Lt. Gov. Hobby has concurred in that, so that's when we're going to have it."

Legislators have spent five months trying to find a solution to a $5.8 billion budget shortfall — the amount lawmakers estimate the state will need to maintain current services and expand higher education and prison spending.

Old base comes to life as prison

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Supersonic jet trainers once flew in the skies overhead, and Air Force flyboys called this place home. Now, the former Webb Air Force Base is run by the Justice Department, and the 650 men who now live here desperately want to leave.

The base, which covered more than 1,200 acres southwest of the city, was abandoned by the military in May 1978. By the next June the facility was turned into one of the country's 47 federal prison units.

Lloyd McMillan, the camp's assistant superintendent, talked about the camp in the former office of the base commander, now occupied by Superintendent Troy Belaski.

"The Bureau (of Prisons) has a philosophy that if there is an Air Force base that can be converted to corrections, it would be easier and more cost-effective than building a new facility," McMillan said.

"And new facilities are needed. Within the last few years, there has been a tremendous increase in the number of inmates."

Although it has received little publicity, the federal system — like the Texas Department of Corrections — is choked with inmates, McMillan said.

"It is overcrowded," he said. "At this moment, there are 41,500 offenders. And, the forecast is that number is going to increase sharply."

According to the Comprehensive Crime Control Act passed by Congress, "good time" — credit for extra days that shortens the time an inmate serves — will be phased out. That will intensify the capacity problem, McMillan said.

Other factors, such as more aggressive enforcement by federal authorities against narcotics traffickers, will contribute to the expected rise in the number of inmates.

"We cannot operate with a 'no vacancy' sign," he said. "We're not going to tell a U.S. Marshal (transporting an inmate) that he's got to go find another place."

The federal system is being taxed by a burgeoning number of inmates who do not require incarceration at high security facilities, McMillan said. The security of each camp is rated numerically — one to six — Big Spring is a "1," while the end-of-the line federal lock-up in Marion, Ill., is a "6," he said.

"The majority are level one or two," he said. "Nearly half are level one institutions."

The camp here has no fences, no guard towers, nothing but a small sign to indicate it is a prison. In this type of setting, the boundary consists of a curb, since the site is bordered on all sides by public roads.

Despite the seeming lack of security, inmates are counted five times daily, and the camp averaged only a "walkaway" per month in 1986.

TEXAS LEGISLATURE

AIDS testing...

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate Saturday deleted a controversial provision from a House bill that would require Texans applying for a marriage license to be tested for AIDS.

The Senate bill, approved on a voice vote with little debate, leaves intact a provision that would allow for quarantining of AIDS carriers.

"This is extremely important within this session to give additional authority to deal with AIDS..." said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, referring to the immediacy of the AIDS problem.

Late-term abortion...

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Pro-life forces won a major victory Saturday when the Legislature sent a bill restricting late-term abortion to the governor's desk for his signature.

The House agreed to Senate changes that watered down the bill. Rep. Mike Millsap, the bill's sponsor, said he decided to go along with the Senate version because he was concerned that time would run out in the session if it went to a House-Senate conference committee.

Minority language...

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The racial tension that has wracked the Texas Legislature for two weeks eased Saturday as the House agreed to add minority-favoring language to one bill and the Senate agreed to take it out of another.

The first action came when Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, backed away from a filibuster threat on House Speaker Gib Lewis' bill that creates a state Department of Commerce. On May 15, Washington tacked an amendment onto that bill dedicating 10-percent of the total value of all annual agency contracts to businesses owned by women and minorities.

Tort reform...

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Negotiators worked late into the evening Saturday trying to keep tort reform alive as lawmakers moved into the last two days of the session.

Frustrated with the lack of progress in the House-Senate conference committee ironing out differences between the two versions of civil justice reform, Sen. John Montford divvied up the work and asked legislator to work it out one-on-one.

Heat wave crippling Northeast

Associated Press

Sweating Northeasterners fled to the beaches, played in fountains and lined up for ice cream cones, cold sodas and air conditioners in an effort to fight muggy air and record heat Saturday, while sightseers became a problem in Oklahoma as floods receded.

The heat wave spawned sporadic thunderstorms in the Midwest, and an Illinos man was killed when high winds blew a tree onto his camper.

"Cooler by the shore" was the motto in New York, where bridges and tunnels out of Manhattan were packed with beachgoers. Workers cleared trash and sludge from a 32-mile stretch of New Jersey shore, and bathers were assured that a greasy foam at the water's edge posed no health hazard.

In Philadelphia, 100 children and adults splashed in a fountain. Cold soda sales were good; canoe and bike rentals, and anything else that required exertion, bad.

Shake-up follows plane into Moscow's Red Square

MOSCOW (AP) — Defense Minister Sergei L. Sokolov and the head of Soviet air defenses were removed Saturday after the Politburo blasted the military for letting a foreign plane enter Soviet airspace and fly unimpeded all the way to the middle of Moscow.

The official Tass news agency said Sokolov, 75, was relieved of his duties in "connection with his retirement" and replaced by General of the Army Dmitri Yazov, 64, a World War II veteran.

The head of the air defense forces, Chief Marshal Alexander Koldunov, 63, was accused of negligence and lack of control over his units, and fired.

The ruling Politburo held a special meeting Saturday devoted to the violation of Soviet airspace by a small West German plane that landed in Red Square in Moscow on Thursday, Tass said.

The pilot, Mathias Rust, 19, of Hamburg, West Germany, was taken into police custody after he buzzed Red Square three times at low altitude and touched down his Cessna 172b near the Kremlin wall.

In his flight from Helsinki, Finland, Rust flew over 420 miles of Soviet territory before landing — without interference — next to the Kremlin, the center of Soviet power.

The West German also crossed through what the Pentagon has called the world's most extensive air defense system. The Politburo said Saturday that the Soviet armed forces had known about the plane's flight, but did not stop it.

In a report issued on Tass, the Politburo said, "it was established that the plane beloning to a Hamburg flying club was detected by radars of the anti-aircraft defenses when it was approaching the state border of the U.S.S.R."

"Soviet fighter planes twice flew around the West German plane," the Politburo said, but apparently did nothing.

The Soviet leadership said the air defense forces command had shown "intolerable unconcern and indecision about cutting short the flight of the violator plane without resorting to combat means."

That fact, the Politburo said, "attests to serious shortcomings in organizing (the) alert for the protection of the air space of the country, a lack of due vigilance and discipline, major dereliction of duty in the guidance of forces by the U.S.S.R. Defense Ministry."

The ruling-body said the decision was taken to "strengthen the leadership of the U.S.S.R. Defense Ministry."

Sokolov, who had been defense minister since December 1984, was not mentioned by name in the statement. His retirement and replacement were announced by Tass in a separate one-paragraph dispatch.

In September 1983, Soviet jet fighters shot down a South Korean jetliner that intruded over Sakhalin Island in the Soviet Far East, killing all 269 people aboard.

Falwell predicts 'revival' for PTL

GRAPEVINE (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell is working to save the debt-ridden and scandal-plagued PTL ministry, but that doesn't mean the politically active preacher has put aside planning for next year's elections.

Falwell, who took over the multimillion-dollar television ministry and its wide array of ancillary properties from Jim Bakker after Bakker's role in a sex scandal was revealed six weeks ago, predicts PTL will be back on its financial feet by summer's end.

"During the same time, we hope to get the thing spiritually in alignment so that this credibility problem is history," he said Friday night.

PTL — either Praise The Lord or People That Love — has raised more than $6 million in the last 11 days make its payroll and to begin to pay off its debts and avoid creditor lawsuits, Falwell said before a meeting of his Liberty Federation at a Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport hotel.

■ Local church leaders react to recent allegations leveled at former PTL minister Jim Bakker. — 1B

He said he hoped that PTL partners would raise that total to $10 million by Tuesday when May receipts are counted.

"That would at least start getting us out of the intensive care unit," he said.

Falwell, who said his own Lynchburg, Va., church had not suffered from his role at PTL, compared the situation at PTL with the Iran-Contra affair.

"We're having a lot of the same problems that conservative Republicans have with the Iran-Contra situation," he said. "The prolonging of the soap opera, the drama, the saga at PTL is not to the benefit of what we're trying to accomplish."

But Falwell said both the PTL and Iran-Contra scandals are "isolated, high-profile material" and don't indicate a reversal in the spiritual revival he claims still is sweeping the country.

"The overall picture is a good one," he said, citing declines in the number of abortions, divorces and the divorce rate, and the number of stores selling pornography.

"Family values are back in today," Falwell said. "I am very, very glad that our country feels such a negative revulsion against the Gary Hart issue, the Jim Bakker issue and of course Iran-Contra.

"Our people in this country today are looking on moral issues the way they should — with a very dim look."

SOVIET

The area around the Kremlin in central Moscow is known to be heavily defended.

Both Sokolov and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev were attending a Warsaw Pact meeting in East Berlin when Rust buzzed the Kremlin. They returned to Moscow on Friday.

The Politburo said Koldunov, head of the air defense forces, was fired "for negligence and lack of organization in cutting short the (plane's flight), lack of due control over the actions of the anti-aircraft forces."

He had served as chief of the Soviet air defense since July 26, 1978.

The Politburo said the Soviet prosecutor's office was investigating the actions of other officials in connection with Rust's flight, and said the pilot's "responsibility" was also being investigated.

As of late Saturday, Soviet authorities had not said whether Rust would be charged, nor had they provided details of his detention.

The Politburo statement and the announcement of Sokolov's removal were read on the main evening television news program "Vremya" (Time), guaranteeing the news would be known to millions of Soviets.

However, the statement did not mention that the flier had landed beside the Kremlin, indicating the Soviet leadership was sensitive about informing citizens that a foreign aircraft was able to fly all the way to the bastion of Soviet power.

A soldier for more than half a century, Sokolov made his way into the Kremlin from the front lines after joining the army in 1932.

Despite his appointment as defense minister, he never rose higher than non-voting membership on the Politburo, unlike his predecessor, Marshal Dmitri Ustinov, who was a full voting member.

Sokolov graduated from the Military Academy of Armored and Mechanized Forces in 1947, then attended the Military College of the General Staff, a program he completed in 1951.

His other postwar service included command of a tank regiment, a mechanized division, chief of staff of an army district and commander of another, according to an official biography.

In 1960, he served as chief of staff of the Moscow military district and in 1964 became first deputy commander of the troops of the Leningrad military district. A year later, he was named commander of the district.

He became first deputy defense minister in April 1967 and a full member of the Communist Party Central Committee in 1968.

He took on a high profile that year when the illness of Ustinov forced him to drop out of sight and presumably from his official duties.

Sokolov became defense minister on Dec. 2, 1984, following Ustinov's death.

His health had recently been the subject of widespread speculation. He missed the Revolution Day parade in Red Square last Nov. 7, regarded as a protocol must for the defense minister.

A Soviet official later said he had been ill.

HEAT

"We're going to the museum where it's nice and cold," said Mike Hall of Collingswood, N.J., who took his family to the Philadelphia Museum of Natural Sciences.

The weather pattern that brought the Gulf of Mexico's swampy heat to the Northeast had caused heavy rain and tornadoes from Texas to Wisconsin earlier in the week. In Oklahoma, officials said damage could reach $20 million.

The hot weather brought problems along with the crowds at beach resorts.

"We'll get bad sunburn, heat stroke, heat exhaustion, some heart attacks," said Gail Losee, nursing supervisor at Virginia Beach General Hospital. "We get a lot of water types of injuries — drownings, near drownings, things like that."

Northern New Jersey was hotter than the desert Southwest or any other part of the nation at the afternoon, with a record 98-degree reading in Newark. In New York the mercury reached 97, snapping the record of 92 set just one year ago.

Near Weehawken, N.J., a train carrying more than 550 people lost power in a tunnel under the Hudson River for more than two hours, and at least 20 had to be treated for heat exhaustion. None of the 20 had to be admitted to the hospital.

A 92-year-old record fell in Washington, D.C., when the temperature hit 97, and a 93-degree reading broke a 58-year-old record in Windsor Locks, Conn. High temperature records also tumbled in Alpena, Mich., Allentown Pa., and Youngstown and Mansfield, Ohio.

"There's a big high-pressure system over the whole eastern part of the country, and nothing's moving," said Jack Main of the National Weather Service in Norfolk, Va.

Basketball fans sweated inside Boston Garden, which has no air conditioning, as the Boston Celtics edged the Detroit Pistons 117-114 in Game 7 of the NBA Eastern Conference finals. Doors "that haven't been opened in a year" were opened to ventilate the sweltering hall, said Celtics spokeswoman Patty Vetrano.

The heat and humidity created scattered thunderstorms that dropped rain and hail across wide areas of the Midwest. Lightning strikes caused some ground fires in Edinboro, Pa., and 55 mph winds felled power lines in Ohio's Lorain County. Winds were clocked at 71 mph in Parma, Ohio.

In Illinois, Steven Gurley, 35, of Metropolis was camping with his family near Unionville when high winds toppled a tree onto his camper, killing him, authorities said.

Golf-ball size hail, gusty winds and heavy rains pounded southern Texas for another day Saturday, uprooting some trees and flooding roads and a business, authorities said. A funnel cloud was sighted near Mathis, the National Weather Service said.

In Cleveland, lightning knocked bricks off a church steeple, and police roped off the street, fearing more bricks might fall.

Severe thunderstorms in Indiana spawned high winds that destroyed a mobile home near the Ohio border, capsized seven boats on an Indianapolis-area reservoir and tipped over six planes at Indianapolis Metropolitan Airport, which handles primarily small, private aircraft. No serious injuries were reported.

BUDGET

Both Clements and Lewis, however, said they expect to reach a resolution during the 30-day special session. Clements, who has pledged to hold new taxes at $2.9 billion, said he expects three weeks' time off will help break the impasse.

"It gives the members of the Legislature — both the House and the Senate — ample time to go home and listen to the people at home talk in terms of no-new-taxes, because they don't want any new taxes," the governor said.

Lewis said the limited agenda of a special session will help lawmakers "concentrate on the budget."

Saturday morning, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby attempted to break the sales tax impasse by suggesting that the Legislature extend the current 5.25-percent rate — now set to revert to 4.125 percent on Sept. 1. — for one more year. The chief House tax writer rejected the offer minutes after the words left Hobby's mouth.

"Another bad idea," said Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen.

The House in March voted to make permanent the temporary sales tax increase. Senators, hoping for broader tax reform in the special session, voted last week to extend the rate through Dec. 31 — bringing in revenue while the the comptroller gears up to collect new taxes.

If the bill dies, Schlueter said, any tax bill lawmakers pass during the summer would need a difficult two-thirds vote in both the House and Senate to take effect by the Sept. 1 start of the fiscal year. "That's hardball," he said.

AIDS

The provisions dealing with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome were included in a bill that updates laws regarding the control of communicable diseases by the Texas Department of Health.

The changes likely will send the bill to a conference committee to resolve the differences between the Senate and House versions.

Under the House's version, beginning in September couples would have to present the AIDS test results to county clerks when they apply for marriage licenses. But the law would not prohibit the couple from marrying if one or both tested as AIDS carriers.

The version approved by the Senate would require local health officials to inform one spouse if the other spouse tests positive for AIDS or the AIDS virus.

The bill calls for a host of procedures and restrictions regarding blood banks, including a provision that would require a blood bank to report AIDS-positive blood test results with the donor's name to other blood banks.

Improper disclosure of tests results, however, could result in a fine of up to $5,000 under the bill.

The measure also would allow the Texas Department of Corrections to test inmates for AIDS, but would not require it as under the House-approved version. Inmates found to have AIDS or the AIDS virus would be separated from the rest of the prison population.

In other action Saturday, the Senate approved:

— a bill that would authorize the land commissioner to trade state-owned property for other land that would become the site for the super-conducting super collider if the federal research project comes to Texas. The state is proposing two sites, one near Dallas and another near Amarillo, for the multi-billion-dollar atom smasher. The measure has passed the House.

— a bill that would lengthen the time in which a child victim of sexual assault can file charges against an assailant. The bill, which passed in the House, would increase the statute of limitations from five to 10 years for sexual assault of a child and from three to five years for indecency with a child.

ABORTION

The measure cleared the House on a non-record voice vote. The bill severely restricts a women's right to an abortion during the last three months of pregnancy, when pro-life advocates say the fetus can live outside the womb.

Pro-choice proponents dropped most of their opposition after the Senate toned down the legislation last week. The bill — the first new law restricting abortions since before the Civil War — does not interefer with a woman's right to an abortion during the early stages of pregnacy. Currently, Texas has no law regulating abortions on the books.

"Even as the bill is drafted, even though it was weakened somewhat in the Senate, it still is a bill restricting late-term abortions," said Millsap, D-Fort Worth. "It doesn't restrict as many late-term abortions as we would have liked, but it does restrict some."

Gov. Bill Clements staff said the governor supports the legislation but wants to read the bill before he signs it.

A doctor who performs a late-term abortion can be disciplined and stripped of his medical license by the State Board of Medical Examiners unless the abortion fell within certain guidelines, such as saving the mother's life or health. Also, late-term abortions would be legal if the doctor discovered the baby would be severely abnormal.

Bill Price, director of the 100,000-member Texas Coalition for Life, said the Legislature's action is the "first step" toward total restriction of abortions. "The approval of this bill will save some lives and provide an important statement, that the status quo, which allows the killing of unborn children, for any reason, at an stage of pregnancy is bad public policy," Price said.

Millsap said he hadn't decided if he will push for tougher anti-abortion legislation in future sessions. Price, however, said his group will continue to lobby for more restrictions.

MINORITY

When Lewis indicated he would fight that amendment, Washington called him a racist and pledged to filibuster if the bill returned to the Senate floor without the amendment.

A week later, Washington tagged an amendment onto Rep. Ron Lewis' "Buy American" bill. The amendment requires municipal governments to give preference to bids submitted by women- and minority-controlled businesses if those bids are "equal in cost and quality" to other bids. The bill gives a 10-percent preference to American-made products our U.S. companies in bidding for government contracts.

Compromise arrived Saturday when the Senate accepted the speaker's version of the Commerce Department bill and the House reluctantly went along with the amended "Buy American" bill. "Although I can't think of anything more important to me and to minorities and women in this state than their opportunity to have a fair share of the pie in terms of getting contracts from this state office, I don't think it would serve the purpose of either women or minorities in this state to stand in the way of passage of" the Commerce Department bill, Washington said.

The House voted 85-48 to accept the "Buy America" bill despite Rep. Gerald Geistweidt's complaints that Washington's language gives preference to all women, regardless of their nationality.

"Any women, whether they own 51 percent of a corporation in Russia or in Cuba or some other place will have an advantage over others," said Geistweidt, R-Mason.

Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville, defended the bill. "Women are Americans, blacks are American, Hispanics are Americans, Indians are Americans, and they deserve an equal opportunity," he said.

TORT

Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, who has acted as a referee in the negotiations, predicted a compromise would appear Saturday night, perhaps as late as midnight. "I think we'll get something tonight or in the morning or else we might not get anything," said Harris, R-Dallas.

The Senate passed its tort reform package at the beginning of the month and the House passed its last week. But the conference committee — officially at least — has not reached an accord on any of the major portions of the package.

As the session draws to an end, tort reform advocates said they were concerned about a filibuster in the Senate. Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, said he and a handful of other senators will talk the bill to death if the Senate negotiators give up too much in their deliberations with House members.

"If it's a bad bill I can talk a long, long time," Lyon said.

The House version makes it more difficult for injured people to recover for damages in court in an effort tort reformers said should restore balance in the courtroom, where they consider injured people to have the advantage.

The anti-tort reform team wants to stick with the more-moderate Senate plan worked out between Montford, D-Lubbock, and Sen. Kent Caperton, a Bryan Democrat who worked for the plantiff attorneys.

The two sides spent most of Saturday offering proposals and counterproposals. Both sides said a main sticking point is joint and several liability, a legal doctrine that can force a co-defendant only minimally responsible for an injury to pay the entire judgment if the other defendant is broke and uninsured.

The Senate version modified the joint and several liability rules but exempted toxic and pollution cases from the changes. The House package treats environmental cases the same as others, a position Caperton said the Senate will not agree to.

"We've made a lot of progress today," Montford said. "I don't think it's dead."

Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston and sponsor of the House plan, said he needs an agreement by early today for tort reform to pass this session. Toomey said, however, that Gov. Bill Clements assured him that tort reform will be on the agenda of this summer's special legislative session.

Teen pilot wanted to make friends

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — The daredevil West German teen-ager who piloted a plane from Scandinavia to Moscow's Red Square told Soviet police he just wanted to make friends with Russians, a newspaper report said Saturday.

The Hamburg-based, mass-circulation newspaper Bild said Mathias Rust, 19, handed out peace leaflets to Red Square passers-by and signed autographs for two hours late Thursday before Soviet police hustled him away.

The wild and wonderful story of Rust's 420-mile odyssey from Scandinavia to Moscow in a Cessna 172 aircraft delighted the West German population and news media.

Rust's derring-do was not so cheerfully received in the Soviet Union, where Defense Minister Sergei L. Sokolov and Chief Marshal Alexander Koldunov, head of Soviet air defenses, were removed Saturday after the Politburo lashed the military for letting Rust pass through hundreds of miles of Soviet airspace unimpeded.

Most major West German newspapers featured Rust's exploits on page one. Bild ran a huge photograph of the Cessna plane "landing" in Red Square, noting only in passing that it was a photo montage.

An opinion survey by the Wickert Institute asked 2,055 Germans of voting age to describe their initial reaction to news of the sensational Red Square landing.

"Laughing, joy," said 79 percent of respondents, according to Wickert.

In a front-page report, Bild quoted a Soviet reporter, Anthony Louis, as saying a Soviet policeman used hand signals to guide Rust to his landing next to the Kremlin wall.

Bild said Rust waved enthusiastically to astounded Muscovites as he climbed down from the Cessna. He signed autographs, distributed peace leaflets and shook hands with Moscow children, it said.

Soviet authorities did not move in at first because they thought Rust was part of a film or publicity stunt, Bild said. After two hours passed, Rust finally was arrested, the paper reported.

In a police interrogation, the youth was asked why he had flown to Moscow, Bild said. "I just wanted to talk with Russians," it quoted Rust as replying.

Bild, whose Moscow sources are considered good, said Rust then was asked why he flew to the Soviet capital secretly and outside internationally approved flight corridors.

"If I had asked for a regular flight path, I wouldn't have had enough gas to reach Moscow," Bild quoted Rust as saying.

He flew to Moscow from Helsinki, Finland. He supposedly was going to fly from Helsinki to Stockholm, Sweden.

In Bonn, the Foreign Ministry said Saturday the government was still trying to get information from Soviet officials on Rust's fate, a day and a half after he was detained.

Rust piloted a U.S.-built Cessna 172 owned by the Hamburg Aeroclub, a private flying club to which he belonged.

Helmut Gass, vice president of the club, said Saturday that Rust must have flown to Moscow on purpose. The day before Gass said he thought Rust had "gotten lost."

"If someone who's supposed to be flying from Helsinki to Stockholm wheels around after 20 minutes and flies so far in the other direction, that can hardly be a mistake," Gass said in a telephone interview.

Gass said he was enchanted by Rust's "bold stroke," but that the young man would probably lose his flying license.

"We all like Mathias Rust so much, but sport aviation these days is falling into some disrepute (in West Germany), and what he did could add to the negative echo," Gass said.

He said private pilots repeatedly strayed into Communist East German airspace by mistake in recent years.

Bild quoted Rust's parents as saying the young man's sole passion was flying.

New president to 'spruce up' SMU's image

Pye

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — The new president of Southern Methodist University said Saturday he expects to be a catalyst for reforms that will spruce up the school's image.

A. Kenneth Pye, a Duke University law professor, was chosen Friday by the SMU Board of Trustees to replace L. Donald Shields as the Southwest Conference university's ninth president.

Pye said he won't have much time to prepare for the task because of a previous teaching commitment that will last through July.

"What I'm going to do is sit down and indicate some things that I want to have ready so I can hit the deck running," he said in an interview Saturday.

Those preparations include analyses from the school's deans about strengths and weaknesses in their departments as well as a report from administration officials about their concerns.

Shields resigned as president Nov. 21 after growing allegations of illicit payoffs to athletes. The scandal eventually cost SMU its 1987 football season, led to the voluntary cancellation of the 1988 season and stretched all the way to the governor's mansion.

Pye, 55, said he looks forward to the challenge of taking charge, despite the turmoil.

"It's an attractive prospect because I can have an impact here," he said.

When his appointment was formally announced, Pye made it clear that in a contest between academics and athletics, the former would be victorious.

"I like football. I don't like to lose in football. It's a question of balance," he said Saturday.

Colleagues praised Pye, terming him the Lee Iacocca of athletics. But he brushed aside the acclaim.

"Those are my colleagues in the law school. One can never be sure they're not glad to get rid of me," he joked.

Pye, who twice served as chancellor at Duke, said the public perception of SMU's troubles is exaggerated.

"Somehow or other people have confused what happens in football with what happens at the SMU Perkins School of Theology," he said.

"What it requires is for us first to get out and improve our admissions profile and then set about making this a much better university and telling our story."

A turnaround depends on students, faculty and administration, he said.

"The best that a president can be in this situation is a catalyst," he said.

He described his management style as direct.

"I've been accused of in some regards of being decisive by others of shooting from the hip. I'd like to have a few months for you to observe me before you decide."

Pye was selected from among the more than 225 candidates reviewed by the presidential search committee headed by Dallas oilman Ray Hunt, acting chairman of the board of trustees.

Pye was acting president for one year at the Durham, N.C., university. He was twice law school dean and served as chancellor at Duke from 1970-71 and from 1976-82.

Pye known for 'shaking up' Duke

DALLAS (AP) — The new Southern Methodist University president is credited with shaking up Duke University when he was at the helm of the North Carolina school.

Friends and colleagues of A. Kenneth Pye say it was that bull-by-the horns attitude that propelled Duke into a first-class private university. And they say more of the same can be expected at SMU.

Pye, 55, a law professor and two-time chancellor at Duke, was named president of SMU Friday and has the task ahead of restoring the reputation and spirit of the scandal-plagued university.

"Ken will be an absolutely outstanding president at SMU," said Duke president H. Keith H. Brodie. "He brings to the SMU presidency exactly the right skills: integrity, commitment to academic excellence and a sense of the right-balance between athletics and the academic mission for the university."

"The trustees have made a splendid choice. Kenneth Pye will provide the strong leadership that will advance SMU in every respect," said U.S. Sen. Terry Sanford, who was president of Duke from 1969 to 1985.

Faculty members who met Pye Thursday night were equally impressed.

"He has one of the best analytical minds I've ever seen," said SMU English professor Marshall Terry, a 30-year SMU veteran and former presidential assistant.

"One of his great abilities was leading Duke through a very difficult period," said Andrew Bryant, SMU admissions director who was associate admissions director at Duke when Pye was chancellor.

Bryant was referring to what Duke officials call the period of retrenchment, when Pye, as chancellor, eliminated the undergraduate schools of education and nursing and cut staff.

He also added the Institute of Policy Studies, a public affairs school, and strengthened the graduate business school.

"He generally shook the place up," said Bryant. "He developed a plan for the university and developed a mission for the university. And do you know what happened to Duke? It just took off."

Pye is known for helping create an atmosphere in which education and athletes' graduation became a priority.

The graduation rate for football and basketball players at Duke is now more than 90 percent, compared with a 20 percent average in the Southwest Conference, said John Weistart, a Duke law professor and long-time colleague of Pye's who is writing an article on the subject.

"It is clear that Ken Pye deserves most of the credit for that," he said. "It goes all the way back to admissions decisions."

In his seven years as chancellor, 1970-71 and 1976-82, and one year as acting president, Pye raised admission standards for athletes. That hasn't necessarily hurt the athletic program, though the Blue Devils, the Duke basketball team, made it to the NCAA championship game in 1986.

"Ken's friendly toward athletics. He knows a lot about it and cares about it and has a strong sense of what is proper and what isn't," said John Blackburn, provost at Duke while Pye was chancellor.

During the administration of President Jimmy Carter, Pye was recommended for appointment to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pye is known as a candid, tough administrator.

Birth control pill suit 'settled out of court'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An $83 million civil trial against a birth control pill maker has been settled out of court for an undisclosed sum, officials said.

Jurors in the case were informed of the settlement and then dismissed before the day's proceedings began Friday in the trial of G.D. Searle & Co., which was being sued by 32-year-old Cathy Toepperwein and her parents.

Attorneys for the family claimed that Ms. Toepperwein was left almost totally paralyzed after suffering a stroke in November 1981 that they say was caused by use of the pill, Demulen-28.

Under conditions of the settlement, approved by State District Judge David Peeples, details of the agreement could not be released. But Ms. Toepperwein's parents — who declined comment — and attorneys seemed pleased with the result.

"We feel very good about it, very good," said Tom Brown, one of Toepperwein's attorneys. "I can tell you she will be very well taken care of."

The trial had lasted nearly fours weeks, and Brown said it probably would not have been until Tuesday before final arguments would have taken place in the case.

"They (Searle attorneys) approached us with another offer yesterday morning (Thursday) and then another one last night," Brown said. "And then we reached a settlement this morning."

Bill Richmond, one of the attorneys representing G.D. Searle, declined comment on the settlement.

Attorneys for the Toepperweins had offered evidence such as reports and studies they said showed the risk of stroke was greater among women who took oral contraceptives.

And although evidence indicated Ms. Toepperwein had been given information by a physician regarding the pills' possible side effects, her attorneys contended that information was inadequate.

But Searle attorneys countered with their own set of medical experts and studies, which they claimed showed there was no conclusive proof that use of the pill increased the risk of stroke.

It also was revealed during the trial that Ms. Toepperwein twice had been pregnant, with one pregnancy ending in miscarriage and the other an abortion. Evidence was introduced showing that abortion and having a baby proved a greater risk than taking the pill.

Despite the mounds of evidence, Brown said he could not determine why Searle proposed the settlement when it did.

At least two jurors, however, said afterward they wished the trial had not ended prematurely.

"I was kind of let down," one of the jurors, who asked not to be named, told the San Antonio Light.

Father of girl says Davis apologized

FORT WORTH (AP) — Testimony in the second day of the Cullen Davis wrongful death suit centered on an apology he made to the father of a girl killed in a 1976 shootout at the Davis mansion.

But Jack Wilborn, the father of 12-year-old Andrea Wilborn, acknowledged Friday that Davis didn't say why he was apologizing.

Wilborn and Priscilla Davis filed a civil suit against the Fort Worth industrialist in connection with the slaying of their daughter. Davis was acquitted of criminal charges in the shooting and has denied he was the killer.

Mrs. Davis, 45, who previously was married to Wilborn and was divorcing Davis at the time of the shooting, contends Davis killed her daughter.

Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, Stan Farr, 30, also was killed and a friend, Bubba Gavrel, was wounded. Mrs. Davis is seeking $6 million in damages. Testimony in the case resumes Monday.

Wilborn testified Friday that Davis apologized to him last year at the Word of Faith Church in Farmers Branch and asked for his forgiveness. Wilborn said the exchange went like this:

"He said, 'Hi Jack, how are you?' "

"I said, 'Just fine.' "

"He said, 'Can you ever forgive me for what I did?' "

"I said, 'Cullen, I forgave you a long time ago.' "

Wilborn said his wife, Betty, was standing nearby and began to cry. He testified that he and Davis embraced, and "it was a very emotional experience."

Under cross-examination, however, Wilborn acknowledged that Davis didn't say exactly why he was apologizing.

On Thursday, prosecutors introduced a photograph of Davis wearing a black turtleneck sweater, which they said Davis had denied owning.

Mrs. Davis' lawyer, Bob Gibbins of Austin, showed jurors the photograph. Witnesses of the shooting at the Davis mansion have said the gunman was wearing black.

Earlier Thursday, Wilborn broke down on the witness stand. His voice cracked and his lips quivered as he attempted to talk about his daughter.

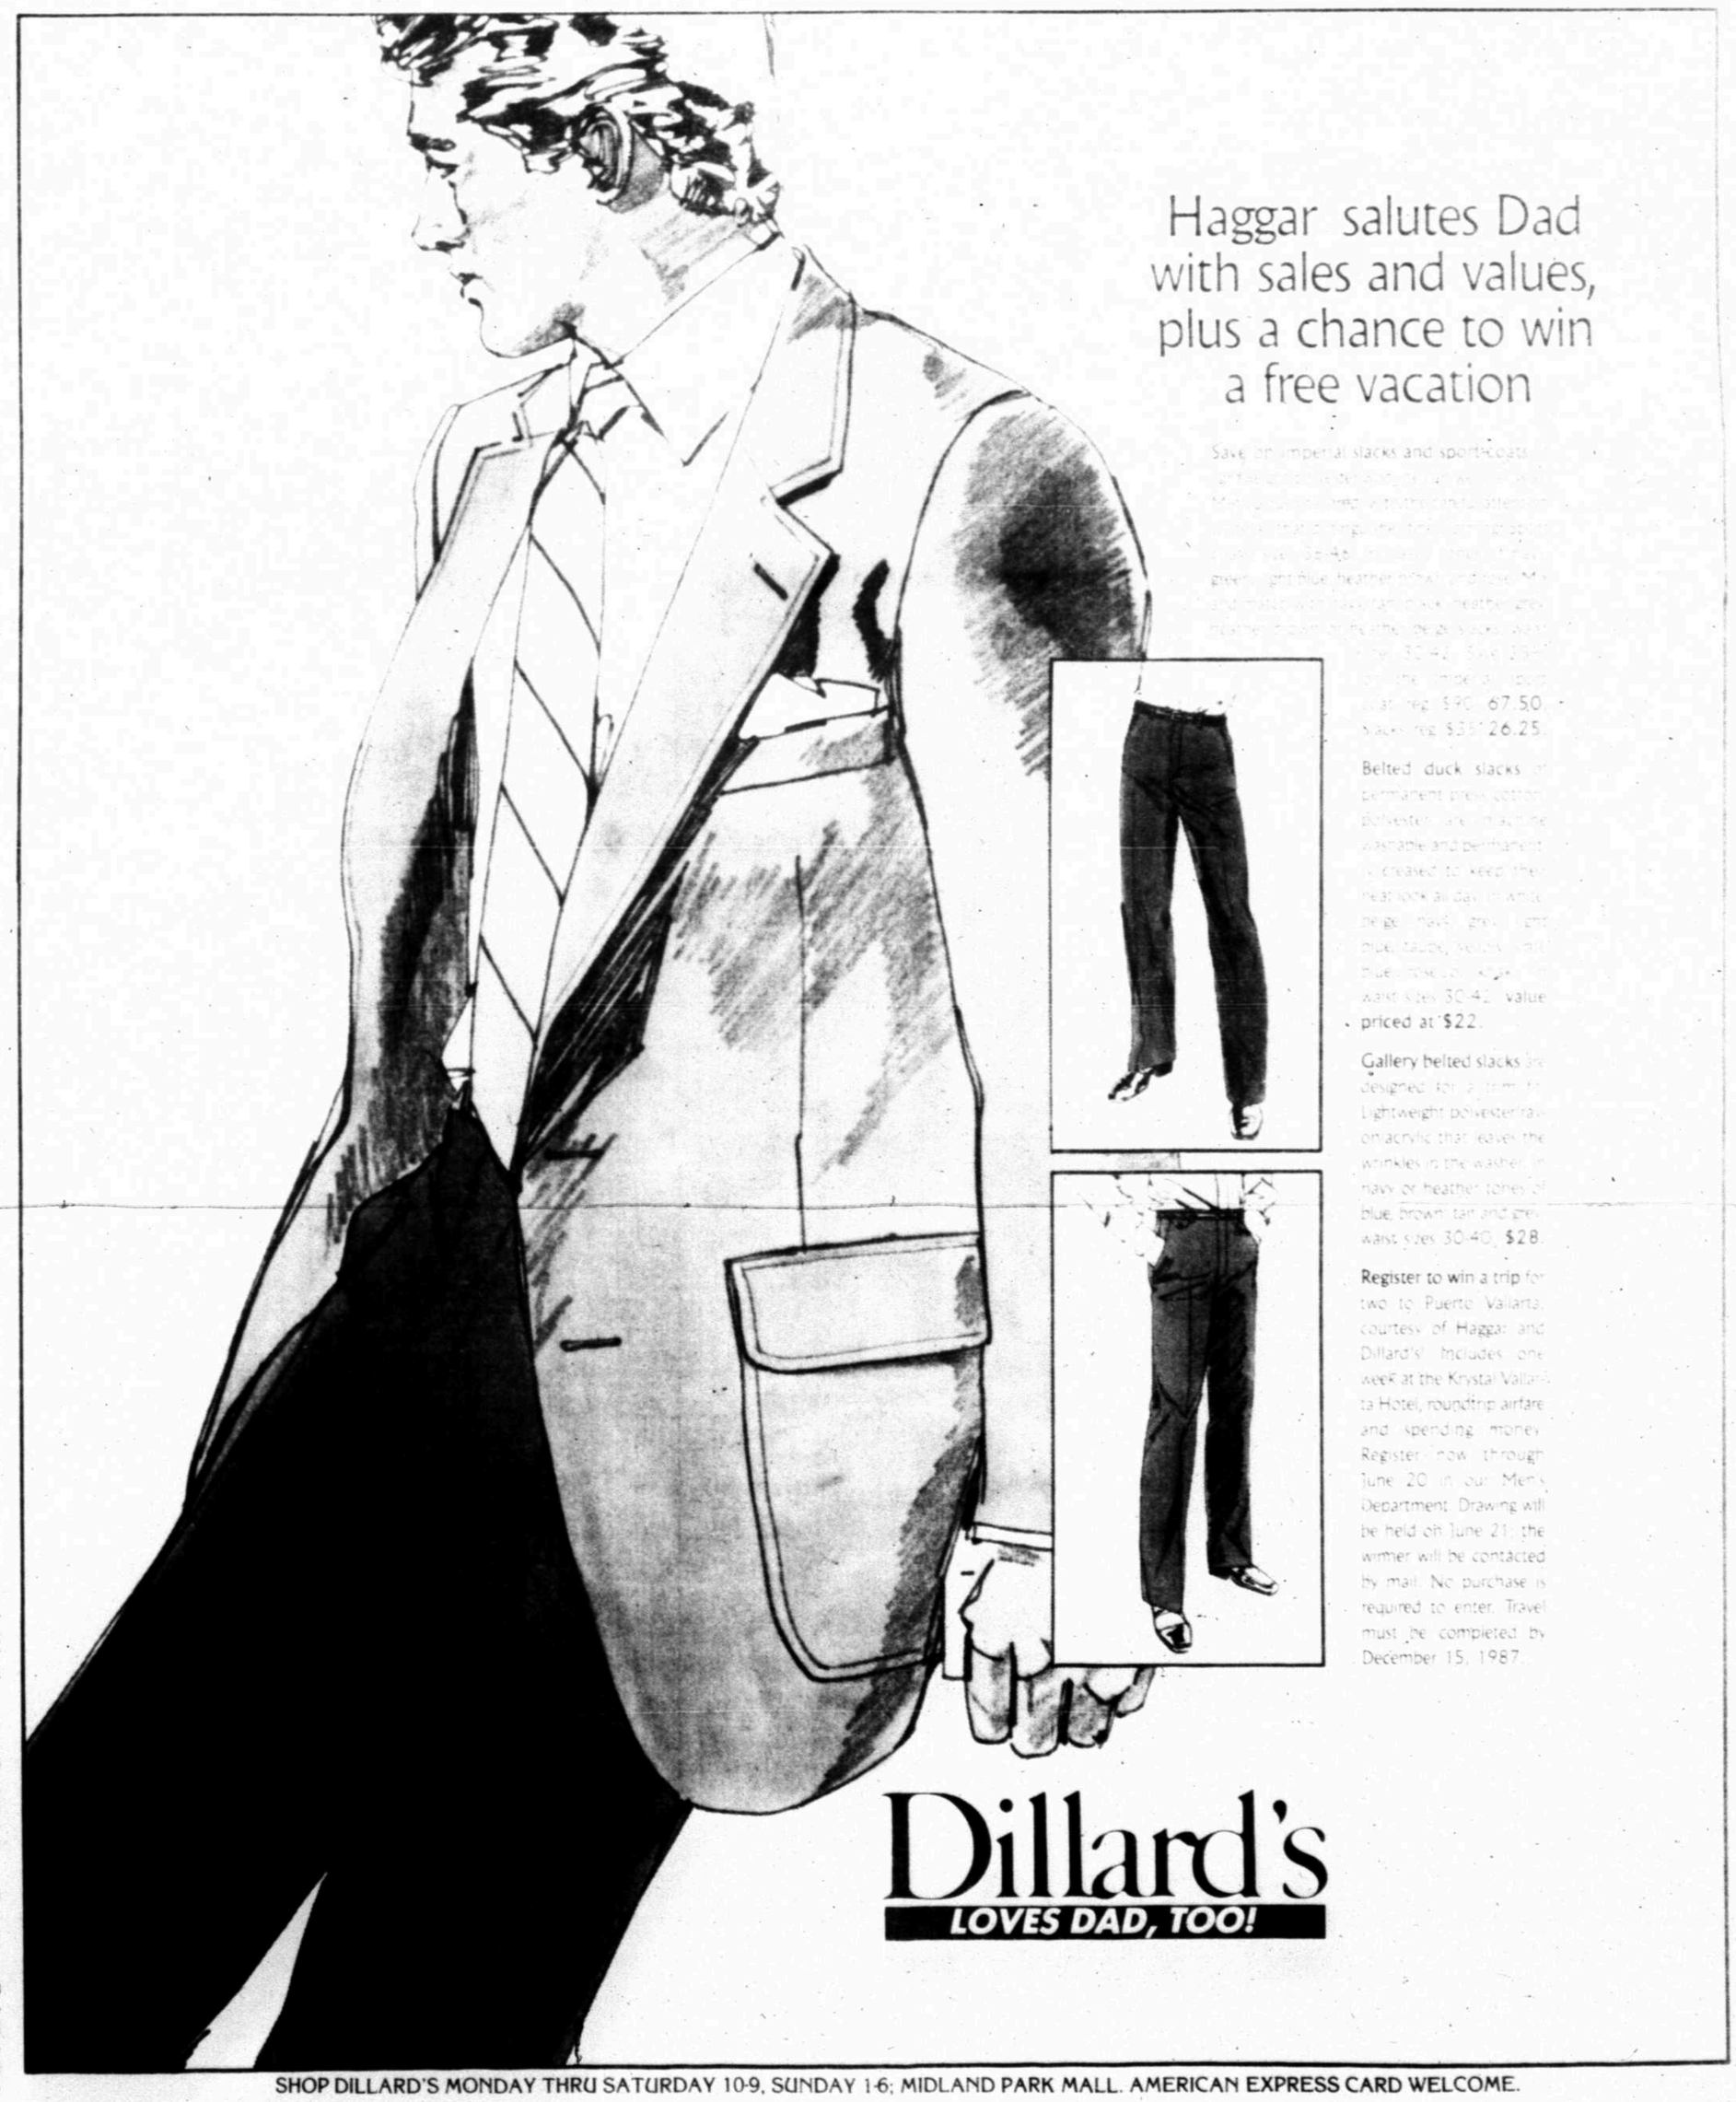

"Her favorite song...her favorite song..." was as far as he got. The trial recessed about 15 minutes early when Wilborn lost his composure.

Gibbins told jurors Davis personally owed $14 million and was being sued by his brother, Bill Davis, over a family business disagreement at the time of the shootings.

Then, on Aug. 2, 1976, his divorce court judge ordered him to double his alimony, paying Mrs. Davis $5,000 a month, the lawyer said. That night, Davis abruptly broke a dinner date with his girlfriend and an appointment with another friend, Gibbins said.

Davis has contended he went to dinner and a movie, then returned to his girlfriend's home on the night of the killings.

Davis says his financial worth has dwindled so that he no longer considers himself a millionaire. He had successfully challenged previous attempts to reveal his indebtedness at the time of the shootings, court records show.

Wichita Falls falls make comeback in 'big turn on'

By MIKE COCHRAN

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Can you imagine Muleshoe without a mule or Turkey without a gobbler? What if Smiley frowned and Happy cried and there was no point to Wills Point?

What if Sourlake was sweet and Sweetwater was sour and Shallowater overflowed?

What if Mount Pleasant was surly and Point Comfort was miserable? Suppose Mount Calm was uneasy and Round Rock was square?

Or there were no forts in Fort Worth, Fort Davis, Fort Hancock and Fort Stockton?

How about Big Lake with no lake, Big Spring with no spring, Big Wells with no wells or Little River with no river?

That's Wichita Falls without the falls, a sad legacy dating back 101 years to a man-made dam that collapsed and washed away the falls on the Wichita River at the western edge of this city of 100,000-plus.

A lyrical historian named Jonnie Morgan wrote in 1931 that the ill-fated falls once "roared their musical prophecy of the city to the accompaniment of the cries of the coyote and the yells of the Indians in pursuit of the buffalo."

Ms. Morgan noted that the loss of the falls not only wiped away a natural scenic view — though only four to five feet high — it also destroyed the town's namesake.

But not to worry.

They're putting the falls back in Wichita Falls next Friday and calling the occasion "The Biggest Turn-On in Texas."

It just may be.

They've invited everybody from the White House to the Out House for a FallsFest gala but will settle, fittingly enough, for Michael O'Laughlin, the mayor of Niagara Falls.

But this is not a cosmetic Chamber of Commerce promotion or a better than average reason to throw an early summertime party.

"It's a symbol of excellence and of the caring that is a part of this community," says James Lonergan, president and publisher of the Wichita Falls Times and Record News.

"In a special sense, the falls will help Wichita Falls demonstrate to the world how far it has traveled in the eight years since April 1979, when a devastating tornado destroyed a fifth of the city."

Plans call for the "Big Turn-On" around 2:45 p.m. Friday to send 3,500 gallons of water cascading down 54 feet of largely native rock and into a pool near a park on the Wichita River, a feisty little stream with a checkered past, a funny color and a tendency to overflow from time to time.

"The river never gets any media coverage unless it's at flood stage and then it's a thick red," observed Roby Christie, president of a city beautification group that raised money for the falls.

"Normally the low flow period is pretty clear," he said.

Like Lonergan, Christie believes the artificial falls will be more than an eye-pleasing gimmick to improve the view along U.S. 287, one of the busiest east-west corridors in Texas.

"One way or another this city has got to grow, in size or quality, and it would not grow without city involvement," Christie said.

"We're good, we know we're good and we want to show the world we're good. We can't do that if we don't take a positive approach and develop our resources, and the falls is going to be the first step toward doing that."

He said the city's location and population don't provide the political clout in Austin or Washington to generate the kind of outside help needed to upgrade the city's appearance and recreational facilities.

So the city formed Streams & Valleys Inc., the group Christie heads, to develop parks, green spaces, natural resources and its image.

"We selected the Wichita River project as a starter because it was a very visible part of the community," he said. "We see it as an evolutionary thing. We're going to show the private sector what our river can look like and what an asset it can be to the community."

That in turn, Christie and others say, will provide a lure for private development along the river and remove the burden from taxpayers.

City fathers take no small pride in the fact that the $400,000 falls project has been financed largely by small donations, mostly at $2 a pop.

"We wanted to keep it a grass-roots-type operation — something the whole community can show its support in and get involved," said Gail Thompson of KTLT radio and chairwoman of Streams & Valleys.

"I don't think there's ever been a project that more people have contributed to," Christie said. "And that's the way we wanted it."

An entertainer named Cinnamon wrote and recorded a song that stands as the battle cry for the campaign, appropriately entitled, "Put the Falls Back in Wichita Falls."

The tune and its lyrics caught the fancy of the national media, including the Voice of America, and helped generate donations from Massachusetts to California.

Bank burglar ordered to 'do one more'

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who admitted breaking into 12 automatic bank machines and stealing nearly $340,000 has been ordered by a judge to commit one more break-in, this time to demonstrate his crafty ways to baffled bank officials.

When Travis Loofbourrow breaks into his 13th machine, he will do it under the watchful eyes of Houston police and a video camera as restitution for the crimes.

"It seems as though you have confused the banking establishment," State District Judge Ted Poe, who is known for his creative sentences, told Loofbourrow Friday. "They haven't been able to figure out how you broke into the Teller 2 machines."

As ordered by the judge, Loofbourrow will be escorted from jail to a teller machine within the next 30 days for the supervised burglary. Videotapes will be provided to the banks victimized by Loofbourrow so they can improve their security, Poe said.

"Think you can break into one of those machines?" Poe asked.

"I don't think that will be any problem," the Texas A&M University engineering graduate answered, prompting laughter from those in the courtroom.

Loofbourrow admitted breaking into 12 machines in 1986 and 1987, but said he took money from only eight of them.

STATE in brief

Afternoon paper merges with its morning edition

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The last edition of the 76-year-old Corpus Christi Times rolled off the presses Friday.

The afternoon paper will be combined with its sister morning publication, the Corpus Christi Caller, on Monday. The new newspaper will be known as the Corpus Christi Caller-Times, as are the present weekend combined editions.

The move follows a formal announcement of the change on April 3, and Caller-Times Publisher Edward H. Harte said seven of 425 employees would be laid off in the transition, including one from the newsroom.

Circulation of the Times had dropped from 37,443 in 1970 to an unofficial 20,468 last week — less than a third of the daily circulation of the Caller. Circulation of the combined Sunday edition approaches 95,000 in unofficial tallies.

The newspapers are the largest in the Harte-Hanks Communications chain headquartered in San Antonio.

Drug arrests being made

EL PASO (AP) — Classes almost are over for students here, and authorities are finishing up the school year by rounding up scores of suspected drug dealers.

A nine-month undercover operation has netted 65 of 106 people sought on warrants alleging distribution of drugs during the school year, police Sgt. Paul Irwin said Friday.

Irwin said the arrests, a combined effort of El Paso police, sheriff's deputies and the Texas Department of Public Safety, began Friday morning and involved 203 indictments, warrants or referrals to juvenile authorities.

It was the culmination of an operation begun last fall involving undercover officers young enough to mix with students, he said. The operation was targeted at suspected drug dealers in and around El Paso school campuses, he said.

Officers hope to arrest most of the suspects this weekend, Irwin said.

Fire engulfs fire station

RICHWOOD (AP) — The fire that raged through a volunteer fire station Friday would have done far more damage if a short-circuit hadn't prompted the building to set off its own alarm, officials said.

The siren roused residents who live near the station, and 12 of the city's 14 volunteer firefighters made it to the scene in time to get the other trucks out of the building before putting out the fire, Fire Chief Rick Cary said.

Fire Marshal Glenn Patton ruled that an arsonist had set the blaze before 4 a.m. that damaged the Richwood Volunteer Fire Department Station.

Saragosa to get help

BARNEVELD, Wis. (AP) — Residents of a Wisconsin village destroyed by a tornado nearly three years ago say they will take church collections and send other funds to help a small Texas community struck by a tornado.

Village of Barneveld residents say collections will be taken during services at three churches June 7 and sent to church officials in Saragosa, Texas.

Village Clerk Pat Messinger also said the village board will meet in June to appropriate some of its disaster funds for Saragosa.

A tornado heavily damaged Saragosa on May 22, killing 29 people and injuring scores of others.

Barneveld was the victim of a June 8, 1984 tornado that killed nine people and injured several others.

PRISON LIFE...

"This year, we have had no walkaways," McMillan said. "Knock on wood."

"They know if they walk away or escape, they will receive a sentence for that which is probably more than their original sentence."

McMillan said most inmates who escape do so between 9 p.m. and midnight. And, he said, sometimes escapees get a head start.

"Of course we have no fences, no armed guards," he said, surveying the grounds. "We have no mechanism that is going to notify us (of an escape) immediately."

The 650 inmates at the camp are housed in barracks built before Webb was closed. The barracks, built to house Iranian Air Force officers sent here for training, now hold four men to a room.

The average inmate at Big Spring is in his mid-30s, white, a first-time offender; almost all are high school graduates, and many are college graduates.

Twenty-five percent of the inmates are Hispanic, and 15 percent are black, according to records.

Fifty percent of the inmates are married, 25 percent are divorced, and 25 percent are single.

Fifty percent of the inmates are here because of a drug law violation; 18 percent are serving time for some type of fraud, such as mail or insurance fraud. The average sentence is 2½-5 years, and the typical stay is about nine months.

"This is a very relaxed atmosphere," McMillan said. "The typical inmate wants to maintain a low profile...and at some point hopefully not too far down the road get back to (his) family and loved ones.

"When you bring a person into this type of facility, you are talking about someone who is not a threat to society."

Every inmate at the Big Spring camp is required to work. The Federal Prison Industries program, also known as Unicor, employs 60 percent of the inmates. Others work in clerical, janitorial or food service jobs.

In a typical month, an inmate can make $130-140, McMillan said. Workers have four pay grades, from 44 cents per hour to $1 an hour. Performance pay, from 11 cents to 36 cents per hour, also can be paid.

Inside the textile factory, bundles of black and green camouflage are stacked and rolled on tables. All camouflage made here is committed to U.S. government contracts.

One inmate works near that factory in an office, and he sends home $600 a month working overtime.

"It helped me from losing the family," he said, matter-of-factly.

Unicor was funded by Congress in 1933, and since that time, as much as $80 million has been returned to federal coffers in one year, according to Wayne Marlow, superintendent of industries at the camp.

Marlow said sales for Unicor totaled $250 million in 1986, from 26 different industries in the 47 units.

"Any item Unicor builds, the end product has to be re-sold back to the government," Marlow said. "We cannot build anything that goes back to the private sector and stays there."

Eighty percent of the goods is sold to the military, and the other 20 percent is sold to other agencies, such as the U.S. Postal Service and Veterans' Administration.

Burl Graham, the camp chaplain, is pleased when a visitor cannot distinguish between the inmates and camp employees. Inmates are required to wear khaki pants or personal clothing, if approved.

"I'm glad to hear that," he said. "Good self-esteem is held in high value here," he said.

Graham said the camp has extensive educational and recreation programs. Inmates can take advantage of grade-school-through college-level programs, including subjects so diverse as English as a second language, landscape technology, and contract interpretation and compliance.

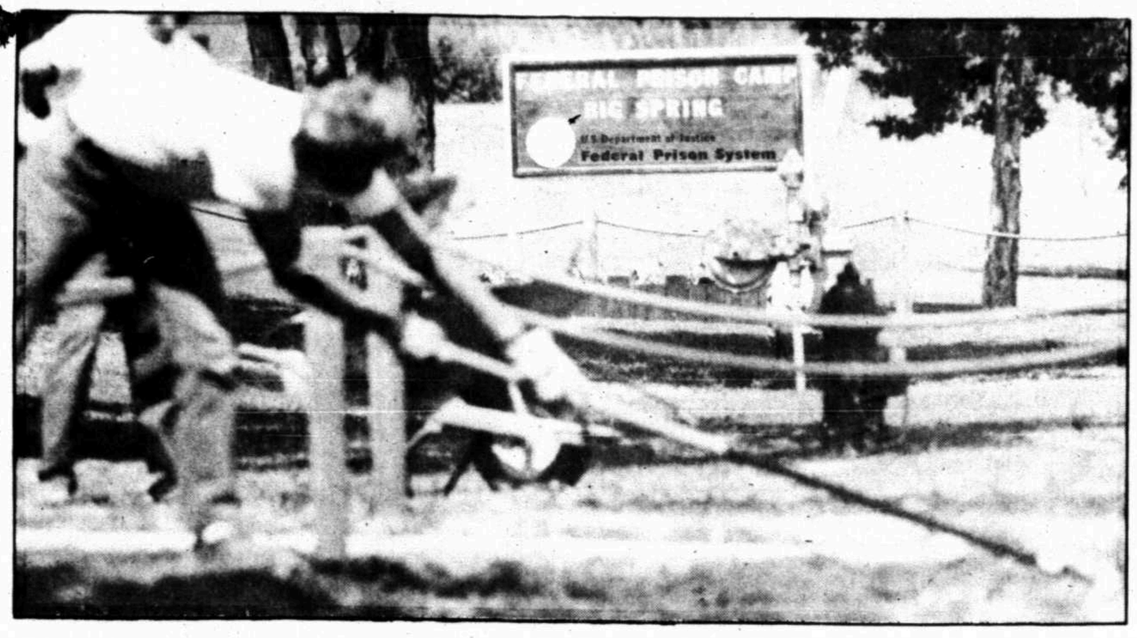

Graham and McMillan bristle when the oft-used moniker "country club" is used to describe the Big Spring camp.

"We don't put anybody in any circumstance that we wouldn't put ourselves in," Graham said. "We try to provide the best treatment we can without it being ridiculous."

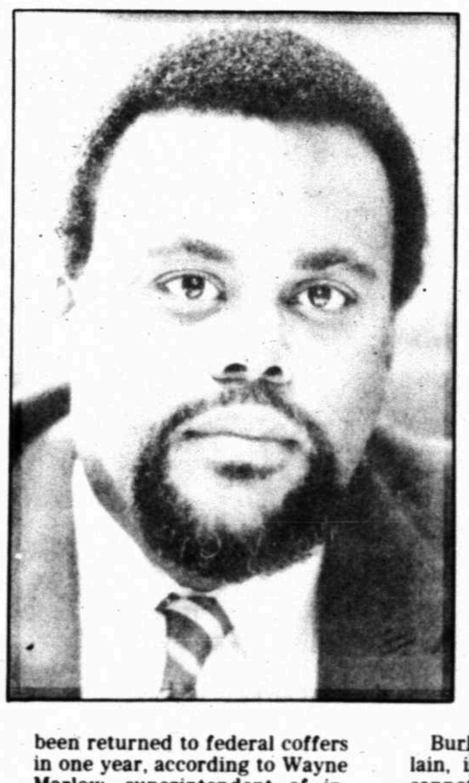

McMillan agreed.

"I chuckle when I hear that," he said. "If you noticed when you came up here, we don't have a line (waiting) outside.

"We are charged with providing a safe, humane place. If you can incarcerate someone without fences, patrol guards, etc., you would be stupid not to."

Once the site of the 1,200-acre Webb Air Force Base, the facility was turned into a minimum security prison. According to administrators, the prison population is 650 inmates but is expected to increase here and throughout the system.

"This is a very relaxed atmosphere. The typical inmate wants to maintain a low profile...and at some point hopefully not too far down the road get back to (his) family and loved ones."

...'like military

Like many inmates at Big Spring, Bruce "Bud" Oaster had never received as much as a traffic ticket until the day of his arrest. The 52-year-old used to spend his working hours flying a Boeing 747 for Pan Am.

But in March 1985, Oaster was grounded after he pleaded nolo contendere to mail fraud. He received a five-year sentence, and now talks about the pilot school he is running at the camp.

Terrance Bonds, a 32-year-old Dallasite, came to Big Spring eight months ago after he was convicted of forging a $2,000 U.S. Treasury check. He received a two-year sentence.

Bonds, a licensed private investigator, said he lives to get back to his wife and children, and away from the prejudice he said exists at the camp.

Joe Vincent's most vivid recollection of his arrest was the sight of 30 Drug Enforcement Administration agents, and a .45 caliber pistol "right between my eyes." Vincent, 50, a systems analyst who founded his own company after he left IBM, received a five-year sentence for cocaine trafficking and conspiracy.

After his scheduled release in April 1989, he might move his family to Spain, Vincent said.

Houston truck driver John Cutsinger, 31, was sentenced to two years in prison after he stole a tractor-trailer load of microwave ovens.

When asked about the camp, he says simply "I try not to think about it."

Cutsinger, a father of five, said he wants to go back to trucking, and also might start an auctioneering business. He wants to leave Texas, he said.

Frank Palmer, 39, has been at Big Spring for nearly two years. Before his conviction for conspiracy to distribute cocaine, he was a Miami-based contractor.

"This will be my one and only time," he said of his conviction. "I always said I would do it until I got caught."

Palmer said he sold drugs for 12 years before time finally caught up with him.

Oaster

Bud Oaster says life at the camp is much like the military life he knew at Abilene's Dyess Air Force Base years earlier. His biggest complaint is the food.

"It's great (here) you know, it's how you treat it. It's your attitude. I grew up on a North Dakota ranch, and that is a hard life," he said.

"It's just like being back in the Air Force. The food is the same, not much better."

Oaster said his first trip through the criminal justice system was harrowing, and led him to San Francisco's city jail, then, in leg irons, to the Sacramento County Jail.

The camp has a $50,000 Piper Navajo twin-engine instrument simulator which is programmed with 800 airports. Oaster said that while teaching the school, he came up with a unique way to make even students who have never flown proficient in a fraction of the time required by conventional methods.

His method, which he says has already grabbed the attention of aviation experts, will be as successful in the free world, he hopes.

"I'm going to take what I'm doing here and do it on the outside," he said.

Oaster, president of the camp's 50-member Toastmaster's Club, offers a parting remark at the camp food.

"I prefer to eat out of the machines, the vending machines," he said.

Bonds

Terrance Bonds described the camp as "nice" compared to some of the alternatives, such as state prison. But he does grumble about the number of unannounced searches at the camp; he described the relationship between inmates and employees in the dormitories as "not that good."

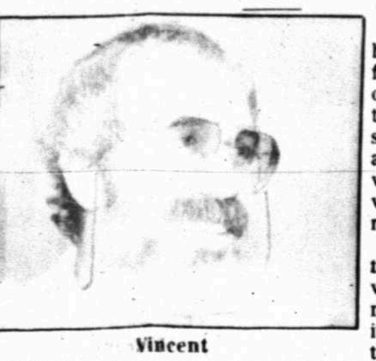

"And they never do find anything when they do (search)," he said.

Bonds feels Big Spring is a "gentlemen's camp," and said the experience here shouldn't be described as "hard time."

"No, it takes a man with a very weak constitution to not be able to make it," he said.

Bonds said there is prejudice in the camp "like everywhere else you go. If you are in here, you can see it.

"I mean, you've got some guys in here from Alabama."

Vincent

"I got talked into helping a so-called friend with a large cocaine transaction," Joe Vincent said when asked about his crime. "It was an experience I wouldn't want to repeat."

Vincent said thought Big Spring would be a nightmare — he thought it would live up to the stereotype.

"It's been a surprise and a relief," he said. "I was under the impression that I was going to be doing some hard time.

"It is a good type of institution that fits my type; it gives you time to think about some of the consequences if I do it again."

Vincent, married and the father of six, has his house in Kendall, south of Miami, on the block for $110,000. His thoughts are on that and an eventual move to Spain, where he has friends.

His days at the camp are spent working out computer programs for the camp and carving finely detailed chess pieces. He, like a lot of the inmates, compares Big Spring to military life, and other things.

"It is a whole lot like being in the Army here. And at least one person I heard referred to it as a Boy Scout camp," he said.

"I wouldn't call it a country club — we are restricted to the area, they keep a pretty close eye on you. From the standpoint of freedom, I don't think we have much at all."

Cutsinger

"Escape From Alcatraz" was shown recently at the camp, John Cutsinger said, and R-rated films are shown frequently. Playboy magazine is available to the inmates, so they seem to enjoy all the trappings of popular culture.

"But to me, it's not like a country club," he said. Smiling, he added "but of course, I've never been a member of a country club."

Cutsinger, who operates a sewing machine in the camp's textile factory, described the relationship between the employees and inmates as "surviving with each other."

Like other inmates, Cutsinger worries that at any time, a prison staffer will give him a "shot," or demerit.

"You can get a 'shot' for anything," he said. "I haven't had any, and don't plan on getting any."

Cutsinger also doesn't worry about winding up in prison again.

"I'm not going to worry about it too much, because I'm not going to be involved in anything like that."

Palmer

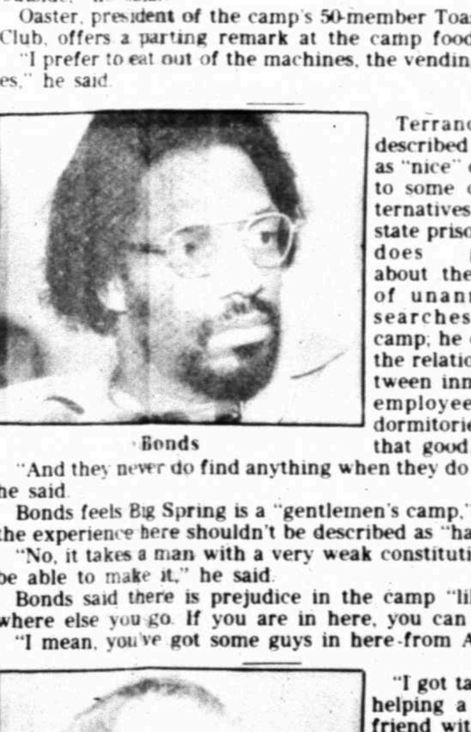

Frank Palmer spends time on the expansive grounds of the Veterans' Administration complex, mowing and landscaping — and thinking that his time here is about what he expected.

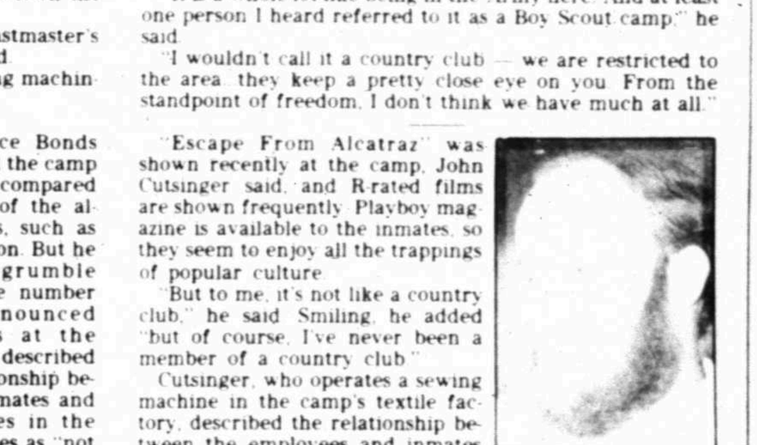

"If I've got to be someplace, this is where I'd just as soon be."

Palmer, with a bit of a smile, said he knew what to expect because he "knew several people that were in federal prison."

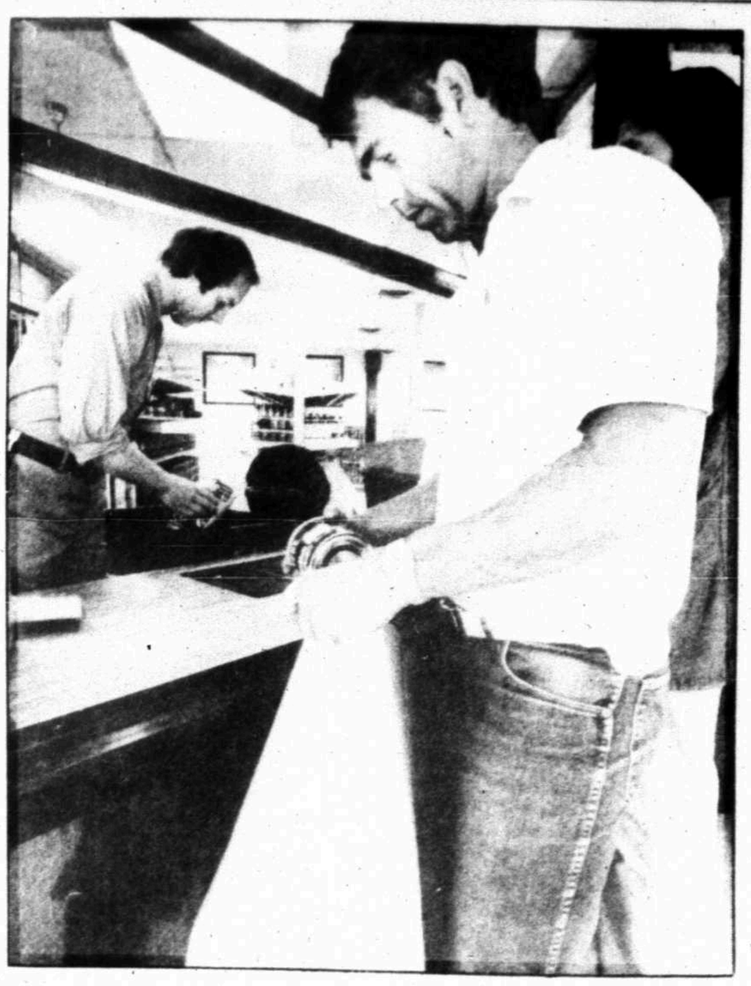

Palmer said he gets a furlough every 90 days, which has helped him get through his sentence. He said he has been told he will not be paroled early.

"It's not too bad, but you miss your family and friends," he said, and when asked about the "country club" image, says "ask them if they want to come here."

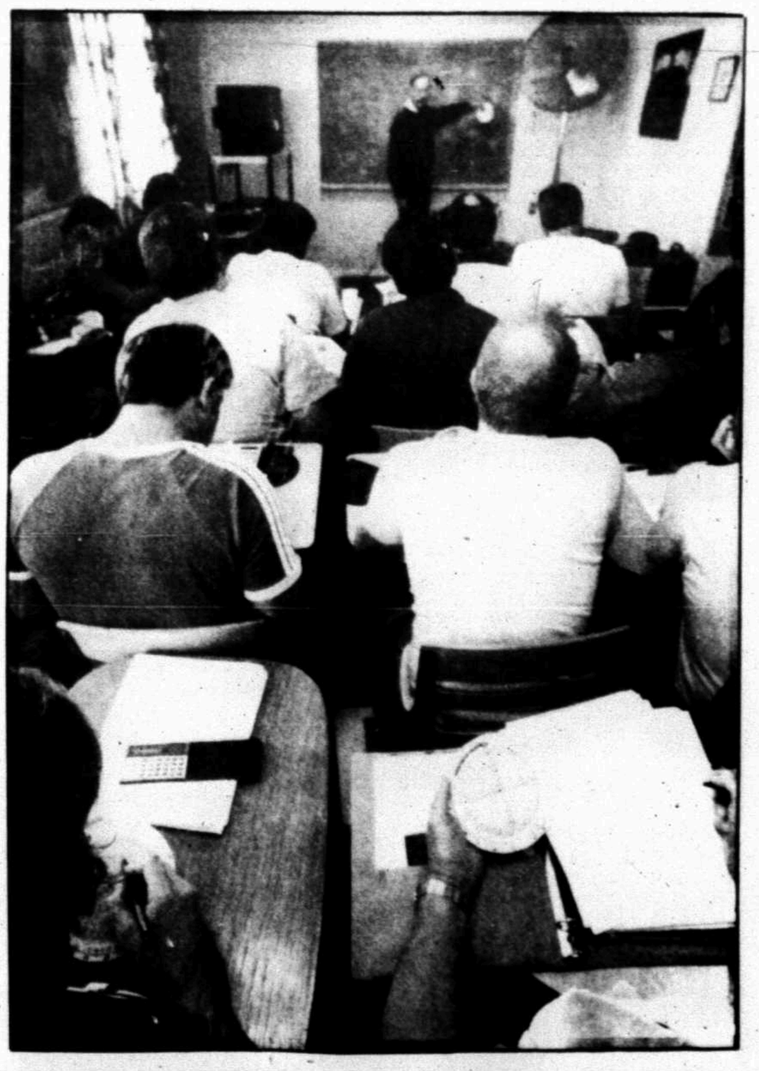

Inmates, left, head toward lunch after a morning at work at Unicor, also known as Federal Prison Industries. Luis Mendez, above left, and Luiz Da-Silva relax over lunch. At least one inmate interviewed said the food at the camp reminded him too much of military life. He said he preferred the vending machines.

After lunch, Gary Ward, Don Sikes, and Allan Baty share cigarettes and conversation in front of the "sunrise" dormitory, at left. Prison employee Mark Studivant (background, photo at right) checks out items from the camp commissary for inmate Larry Hicks. Inmates Phil Kashning, at left in photo below, and Kinn Moursund, center, confer with instructor Gary Tabor at the camp's greenhouse. According to Tabor, inmates are screened carefully for the horticulture program, which includes research projects for government agencies and universities.

Seizure of illegal drugs to be stepped up in reorganized effort

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan announced plans Saturday for a reorganization of federal drug-fighting efforts that he said would enable U.S. agencies to step up seizures of illegal drugs and send more smugglers to prison.

"We need to keep up the pressure to prevent drug use," Reagan said. "We want no new users and we want those who are using drugs to stop."

The president announced the broad outlines of the plan in his weekly radio address, delivered from the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., and Attorney General Edwin Meese spelled out some of the details in a separate statement.

Meese said the Customs Service would be the top federal agency on drug interdiction, a move designed to end friction between customs agents and the Coast Guard as both fight the war against narcotics smugglers.

Meese, chairman of the National Drug Policy Board that was created by the president in March, said the Customs Service and Coast Guard have signed a memorandum pledging to "work closely with each other in the national interest."

He said the Customs Service will be the lead agency in battling drug smuggling on land and the Coast Guard will combat smuggling on the seas. The two agencies would share activities for air interdiction, he said.

Meese said Customs would be the lead agency overall for intercepting drug smugglers, with the Coast Guard acting as principal deputy.

But Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., sponsor of a congressional measure that he said prompted the president's announcement, issued a statement on Saturday criticizing Reagan for not designating one single lead agency for all drug interdiction. Nunn said he was not sure the president's action complied with the law.

In his radio address, Reagan said the administration was "continuing to make tremendous progress in seizing drugs crossing our borders."

"With the Customs Service and the Coast Guard working more closely together, we'll seize even more. We'll arrest drug traffickers and send them to prison."

The Customs Service and the Coast Guard each have claimed greater authority in the air and sea war against drug trafficking.

Adm. Paul A. Yost, commandant of the Coast Guard, said in congressional testimony in March that his agency should have command of the drug interdiction effort in all areas "over, on and under seas," while the Customs Service's authority should begin at the shoreline. Yost said Customs Service air interdiction efforts should be under Coast Guard command.

However, Customs Commissioner William von Raab said at the time his agency had primary authority in air and sea interdiction within three miles of U.S. shores and that it shared responsibility with the Coast Guard in a zone reaching up to 12 miles from shore.

In addition to announcing plans for closer cooperation between the Customs Service and the Coast Guard, Reagan said the plan would "designate a lead agency for each category of anti-drug abuse authority. This means that one federal agency will be the focal point for asssuring that all other federal agencies are doing everything they can to stop illegal drug use."

For instance, he said, the Department of Health and Human Services would lead on treatment and rehabilitation and the Department of Education on school programs.

"This approach is simple, straightforward and avoids the temptation to add another level of bureaucracy," he said.

"With the Drug Enforcement Administration, FBI and U.S. attorneys working more closely together, we will be even tougher on those who traffic in drugs," he said.

Defector feared Castro was 'ruining' Cuba

del Pino Diaz

WASHINGTON (AP) — Brig. Gen. Rafael del Pino Diaz, once a trusted servant of Fidel Castro, became disillusioned and decided to defect to the United States because of a "deep conviction that Castro was ruining Cuba," according to administration officials.

Del Pino, 48, gave that explanation to U.S. interrogators after his high-risk escape with his wife and three children last Thursday from Cuba to Florida aboard a Cessna 402, the officials said.

The officials provided that brief insight into del Pino's motives for defecting and are now seeking his expertise on a number of political, military and economic issues issues about which U.S. knowledge is scant because much of what happens in Cuba is kept secret.

As an example, the Cuban government has never disclosed the number of casualties its forces have suffered in Angola. Del Pino will be asked about that issue, based on the access he had as a one-star general and as a veteran of the Angola conflict.

The officials, insisting on anonymity, disclosed that del Pino was commander of Cuban Air Force personnel in Angola in the mid-1970's. The Cuban force there now is believed to number about 35,000.

After a 23-hour stay at Key West Naval Air Station, del Pino was flown to a secret location — The Washington Post reported it was the Washington area — for what is expected to be a prolonged period of debriefing, normally three months.

The usual pattern is for defectors to be given a job and a new identity after the interrogation is completed.

Unless he decides otherwise, he may never tell his story beyond the secret safe house where the debriefing sessions will take place. Defectors generally choose to live anonymously because of the personal risk involved in maintaining a high profile.

The Cuban news agency Prensa Latina reported Saturday that del Pino's former wife, Carmen Lopez, is demanding their teen-age son be returned to Cuba. The news agency said she had custody of 15-year-old Rafael del Pino Lopez and that del Pino had tricked the boy into accompanying him on the trip to Florida.

"My son is in an enemy country, surrounded by enemies," Ms. Lopez said in a letter to the official Communist Party newspaper Granma quoted by Prensa Latina. The news agency said she has asked the Cuban government to seek her son's return.

Officials acquainted with del Pino's preliminary statements said he made clear his disenchantment with Cuba's revolution after 28 years, a reference to the economic decline that Castro himself has acknowledged in numerous public statements.

According to the officials, del Pino's interrogators will question him about the degree of public dissatisfaction with the state of the economy and about Soviet attitudes towards Cuba's economic policies. The Soviets provide Cuba with more than $4 billion in assistance each year and are said to be eager for an economic upturn on the island.

The Soviets have been opening up their economy at a time when Castro has been reinforcing socialism as a guiding principal of the revolution. Castro seems more steadfast than ever in his opposition to capitalism, abandoning an experiment in privately-operated food markets a year ago.

The officials said del Pino will be asked about the degree of military dissatisfaction with Castro's leadership and with the continued presence of large numbers of Cubans in Angola and Nicaragua. The Cuban military has long been viewed as a major pillar of support for Castro.

The Cuban Revolutionary Armed Forces Ministry moved quickly to discredit del Pino, suggesting publicly shortly after his defection that his career was in decline because of "psychic stress."

Congress 'wants more' on Persian Gulf plan

By PEGGY ROBERSON

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Congressional indignation over being lied to by the CIA and administration officials during and after the secret sale of weapons to Iran is in part responsible for resistance to the president's plan to increase American military presence in the Persian Gulf.

"You must accept the cost of having deceived the Congress," said Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., speaking to a State Department witness at a Friday hearing on escalating tensions in the Persian Gulf.

The administration scrambled Thursday and Friday to brief congressional leaders after encountering a wall of opposition to placing American flags on 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers.

Speaker of the House Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, said political tensions would be eased by a vote next Tuesday on a bill, with strong bipartisan backing, that would require the Secretary of Defense to report within seven days on the plan to escort tankers through the Persian Gulf, where the frigate USS Stark was accidentally attacked by Iraq almost two weeks ago. In the meantime, Congress would permit reflagging to proceed.

It was clear at the end of the week that a skeptical Congress, fearful of becoming involved in a shooting war that would be difficult to explain to voters, will insist on more answers about the administration's plan.

Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., said it appears that the administration is headed toward "deeper and more perilous" involvement in the Middle East "without a realistic and informed plan."

"The United States should not be drawn into a shooting war in the Gulf,...nor do we want to be a party to the Iran-Iraq conflict, which already has cost more than a million lives."

Before an Iraqi pilot aimed a missile at the Stark, killing 37 American sailors, Congress had paid little attention to Navy ships plying the waters of the Persian Gulf.

It was only then that many members learned of the plan to fly the American flag on Kuwait's ships as a deterrent against attack by Iran. Kuwait is an ally of Iraq, thus an enemy of Iran. And members also learned that Kuwait also had approached the Soviet Union with a proposal to borrow Soviet tankers to keep the oil flowing through he Gulf.

Asked why Kuwait had invited the Soviets to protect its oil, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy said "it is not coincidental" that the invitation came in November, 1986, at the time the world learned of the U.S. sale of arms to Iran.

That arms sale could turn out to be "the largest geopolitical loss of the entire Iran-contra operation," Moynihan answered.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., former chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, interviewed Friday night on the McNeill-Leherer News Hour, emphasized that the administration's plan "needs to be finalized before we get in harm's way."

Lugar said the administration's policy is aimed at keeping the shipping lanes open, ending the Iran-Iraq war and preventing the Soviets from gaining in the region.

Will movie set risks rise in wake of acquittals?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The acquittals of director John Landis and four others in the "Twilight Zone" involuntary manslaughter trial closed a grisly chapter in Hollywood history, but the question remains: How safe are movie sets today?

Those who run the film industry's professional guilds and trade associations expressed relief that the five were absolved of blame in the deaths of actor Vic Morrow and two children and insisted safety is better now than ever.

"The tragedy of the accident prompted a lot of safety improvements," said Mark Locher of the Screen Actors Guild. "I don't think the acquittals will allow the industry to relax its safety standards at all."

But a lawyer who represents half a dozen people injured while making films expressed concern that future risks will rise in the wake of Friday's verdicts in the first criminal prosecution of moviemakers for deaths on a set.

"What this case really shows is that as Hollywood continues to try for more elaborate tricks and stunts that the chance for injuries and even deaths rises considerably," said attorney Jerry Kroll.

Landis and his co-defendants maintained from the start that conditions on the location of "Twilight Zone: The Movie," were safe. They said it was only unforeseeable events which caused a helicopter to crash on July 23, 1982, in the midst of fiery explosions for a Vietnam war scene.

The craft fell on Morrow, 53, Myca Dinh Le, 7, and Renee Chen, 6, killing them instantly in Hollywood's worst movie set disaster.

The five defendants still face $200 million in civil lawsuits by the children's parents. And Landis must face Directors Guild disciplinary and safety committees.

Associate producer George Folsey Jr., acquitted along with Landis, production manager Dan Allingham, special effects coordinator Paul Stewart and helicopter pilot Dorcey Wingo, was asked after the verdicts if the case would change the way movies are made.

"I don't believe so because nothing was done on the set that would have required changing," said Folsey. "What happened was an industrial accident."

"It is our current state of mind," said jury forewoman Lois Rogers, "that this was all an unforeseeable accident, and you don't prosecute people for unforeseeable accidents."

But a Directors Guild executive said, "Nobody can believe that nobody was responsible."

"I'm afraid it's an accident that is all going to happen again," said Richard Brooks, director of "Elmer Gantry" and "Looking for Mr. Goodbar" and a member of the Directors Guild's 18-member safety committee.

"I don't think this case showed that Hollywood is reckless at all," said Landis' attorney, James Neal of Nashville. "And they never really have been."

NATION IN BRIEF

W-4 forms due Monday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Monday is your last chance to file a 1987 federal tax-withholding form and be assured of avoiding any penalty for having too little taken out of your paychecks this year.

If you have no concern about making an error on the W-4 or W-4A form, the law gives you until Oct. 1 to file. But the Internal Revenue Service has volunteered to waive underpayment penalties for wage-earners who make mistakes but file before midnight Monday.

"If the bulk of your income is from wages — not interest or dividends — and you make a good-faith effort to arrive at the proper number of withholding allowances, we will not impose the underpayment penalty for this year if a W-4 is filed" by midnight Monday, said IRS spokesman Wilson Fadely.

The new forms are necessary because the new tax law cut tax rates, almost doubled personal exemptions, raised the standard deductions and wiped out or reduced several itemized deductions. As a result, the W-4 forms that workers filed before this year probably bear little relation to their tax liability for 1987.

Man denies ties to killings

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A man questioned in connection with the serial killings of three American Indian women denied any involvement in the murders and said the person who did it must be "sick."

"Well, I didn't do it," Jesse Coulter told a WCCO-TV reporter in Albuquerque, N.M., on Friday. "No, I did not do it."

Two Minneapolis homicide detectives who flew to Albuquerque on Thursday to question Coulter were to return to Minneapolis today, WCCO said.

Coulter, 43, provided the officers with samples of his blood and hair, the station said.

Coulter was arrested in New Mexico on a drunken-driving charge on Sunday. Albuquerque police contacted Minneapolis authorities after learning that he was among suspects Minnesota officers were trying to locate for questioning in the serial killings.

Based on a police bulletin, Albuquerque police obtained a warrant Tuesday to search Coulter's truck and recovered a blood-stained shirt, knife, bloody night stick and a crowbar with several strands of hair on it.

Gunman finally in custody

MILROY, Pa. (AP) — A man armed with a high-powered rifle was arrested early today and charged with murdering a firefighter and seriously wounding a state policeman and another firefighter.

After a nine-hour manhunt, Randall Scott Himes, 25, was arrested without incident when he returned to his home about 3:10 a.m., a state police spokeswoman said. Himes was carrying a 30-30 lever action rifle, police said.

Police were first called to the Himes home Friday evening when David Himes, the father of the suspect, called police and said his son had assaulted him at home.

As police responded, an explosion and fire were reported at the Himes home, and firefighters were dispatched.

Thursday, May 31, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The temperature rose markedly from the morning's 69, and there was an afternoon thundershower.

Nancy Shippen Livingston, living at home to escape an intolerable marriage, had a party.

As described by her father: "Mrs. (Robert) Morris, Mrs. (Mathew) Ridley, formerly Miss K. Livingston, Mrs. Bingham, Mrs. (Rufus) King, Mrs. (Charles C.) Pinckney (Miss Stead), Mrs. Moore and their husbands — P. (British consul Phineas) Bond and his three sisters, Messrs. G.Harrison, Rutledge, F. Corbin, the two Franks, John Livingston and Mr. Reinagle were the party. General Washington, the Chews and the Coxes were invited but engaged. Nancy made a great exertion at the nobility and acquitted herself to a charm as you know she can when everything is to her mind".

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Only the same four states and Mr. Dane appeared in Congress, and Dane was getting restless. He wrote today to Rufus King:

"There are only five states represented in Congress. I hear that Clark is chosen a member of the Convention. If so I think we cannot expect N. Jersey, at present, to attend Congress very steadily. I have heard nothing of Dr. Holten. I have therefore suggested to the Governor that I shall conceive it proper for me, in a few days to return to Massa. etc. unless I hear of Dr. Holten's recovering his Health, and that he will probably soon attend Congress."

North Carolina delegate Robert Burton was even more restless. He wrote John Gray Blount from Philadelphia where he was stopping over on his way back to North Carolina. He noted that "the Convention sitting here are so private that there is no telling what bussiness they are on."

CONVENTION TODAY

William Pierce, of Georgia, took his seat. The Convention resolved itself into committee of the whole and (1) decided on a bicameral legislature; (2) agreed on election of first house by the people; (3) agreed not to have second house elected by first house; (4) agreed that either house could initiate legislation.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson did business and received many visits until 2 p.m., when he took the ferry over to Powles Hook and caught the stage there for Elizabeth, N.J., where he called on Mr. Boudinot, former President of Congress.

George Washington dined at Tench Francis' and drank tea with Mrs. Meredith, whose husband Samuel was a member of Congress and an old friend of the general's. Washington also wrote a note to Henry Knox expressing pleasure that "Miss Lucey's eye" was better, and that he expected to see the general and Mrs. Knox in Philadelphia soon.

Gov. William Livingston was still in Burlington, N.J., from whence he transmitted an ordinance of Congress to the New Jersey Legislature.

Gov. James Bowdoin wrote from Boston to Elbridge Gerry, enclosing a new commission as a Convention delegate.

William Burroughs wrote from Boston to John Langdon in Portsmouth that he was shipping Langdon two barrels of pork on the sloop Sally, Jonathon Shapley, master, at a cost of 7 pounds 10 shillings.

LOOKING BACK
Today's Debates

Having yesterday attempted to bypass detailed discussion of the Virginia plan in order to get an agreement in principle on proportionate representation, and been thwarted by Read and the Delaware delegation, the committee of the whole went back to the Virginia plan. Madison noted that the third resolution calling for a bicameral (two house) legislature "was agreed to without debate or dissent, except that of Pennsylvania, given probably from complaisance to Docr. Franklin who was understood to be partial to a single House of Legislation."

The fourth proposal, popular election of the members of the first house, was more controversial. Two staunch New England Whigs, Gerry and Sherman, opposed the provision. "The evils we experience flow from an excess of democracy," and "the people should have, immediately, as little to do as may be about the Government," they said. Pierce Butler simply argued that popular election was impractical. Mason, Wilson and Madison supported popular election. The proposition was approved by six states, with New Jersey and South Carolina opposed and Connecticut and Delaware divided.

Paroled rapist now on San Quentin grounds

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A paroled rapist forced from town after town by public protests has been placed on the grounds of San Quentin Prison under the 24-hour supervision of parole agents, Gov. George Deukmejian said Saturday.

Lawrence Singleton, 59, released last month after serving eight years for raping a 15-year-old runaway and hacking off her forearms, will live within the walls of the prison in the staff area, possibly in a trailer, said Deukmejian press aide Donna Lucas.

In his weekly radio talk, Deukmejian said, "While he will not be incarcerated in the prison itself, Singleton will be under the 24-hour supervision of parole agents."

"Wherever he goes, he will be accompanied by these agents. With the placement of Singleton on the site of a state correctional facility, a safe distance from other communities, and with around the clock parole supervision, we will provide maximum public protection under the law," he said.

Singleton was convicted in the 1978 kidnap, rape and attempted murder of Mary Vincent. He picked the girl up in Berkeley, drove her to an isolated area in the San Joaquin Valley near Modesto and hacked off her forearms with an ax after raping her, leaving her for dead in a culvert. She survived the attack.

Originally sentenced to 14 years in prison, the maximum allowed at the time of his 1979 trial, Singleton was released early by accruing time off for good behavior, work credits and time already served prior to sentencing.

Following his parole on April 25, authorities unsuccessfully attempted to place Singleton in a half dozen northern California communities over the opposition of local officials. Each time, the state was forced to move him as townspeople learned of his presence, sometimes staging angry demonstrations.

"Understandably, no community wants Singleton, and yet he must be placed somewhere," Deukmejian said. "I call upon all public officers and law-abiding citizens to understand that they must set a good example and that mob rule has no place in our society."

Deukmejian said he had tried to rescind the parole of another convicted felon, Archie Fain, in 1983, but the courts ruled he did not have the power.

He is advocating a state constitutional amendment giving the governor authority to rescind paroles of prisoners who "pose an unreasonable threat to public safety."

The proposal was defeated in the Legislature, but a new measure is pending.

In addition, Deukmejian offered his support for a bill creating a new crime of aggravated mayhem to be punished by life in prison with possibility of parole.

On Thursday, Singleton was moved from Concord, in Contra Costa County, after about 100 people gathered Wednesday night outside a motel on hearing a rumor that he was there.

Bald eagles found dead in dump

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — The remains of an estimated 19 to 30 bald eagles have been found at a logging camp garbage dump, where they apparently were shot while perching in trees, says a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agent.

"The place is littered with eagle feathers and bones," agent Jerry Cegelske said Friday after returning from the LaBouchere Bay camp on Prince of Wales Island, about 75 miles northwest of Ketchikan.

Thirteen dead eagles were found in 1983 at the same site.

Bald eagles are protected by federal law. Killing one is a crime punishable by up to a $5,000 fine and one year in jail for a first offense, and up to $10,000 and two years in jail for subsequent offenses. In cases where less evidence is available, the Fish and Wildlife Service can seek a civil penalty of $5,000.

Bald eagles are considered endangered or threatened in every state but Alaska, which has an estimated eagle population of 30,000.

Cegelske said the killings discovered last week are the worst he can recall being reported anywhere, and the worst he has seen during nine years as Fish and Wildlife special agent for southeastern Alaska.

Aladdin House Says...

The best way to judge a mattress is with a razor blade.

Let's face it. A mattress is a blind item.

All the important things that make a mattress good or bad are buried under the fancy cover, where you can't see them.

So what does the usual store salesman tell you to do to judge the quality of a mattress?

Sit on it. Which makes about as much sense as kicking an automobile tire to gauge the quality of a car.

What do you think will happen when you sit on the mattress? Will it explode? Will it cave in? Will it collapse, or pop a spring& Ofcourse not. It's still new. The real test will come in a couple of years. And then it's too late, even when it comes with a "warranty"

Let us tell you something about mattress warranties.

You buy the mattress on sale for 50% off. (When was the last time you ever heard of anyone paying full retail price for a mattress?) Then six years pass, and the mattress poops out. You take the warranty into the store and they give you 50% credit on the FULL PRICE OF THE NEW MATTRESS. Which is the same as buying a new mattress on sale.

Some warranty!

Our EASTMAN HOUSE ROYAL CROWN Sleep Sets have a Non Prorated Warranty for 20 years– AMERICA'S BEST WARRANTY.

At our store we take a razor blade to the Sealy, Simmons, and Serta top-of-the-line mattresses...And to our own EASTMAN HOUSE ROYAL CROWN. So you can see what's going on inside. Our mattresses give you Coil-on-Coil support for balanced comfort.

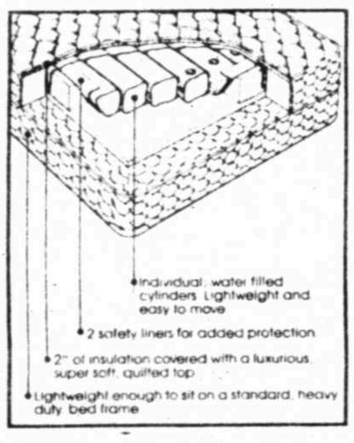

We give you more than 100 layers of rich, non-allergenic cotton cushioning. And the Royal Crown construction offers extra support through the center one third where your body needs it most.

Sealy doesn't give you this. Simmons doesn't. Serta doesn't.

Once you've seen the comparison, you'll see that there is no comparison.

We'll give you a better product, a better warranty, and a better value. So the next time you see a sale ad on mattresses, bring it in to us. WE'LL PROVE TO YOU THAT THE BEST WAY to judge a mattress set is with a razor blade!

The Mattress: A Somma Controlled Flotation System

It's Called Controlled Flotation Sleep. And it's quickly replacing the innerspring mattress.

QUEEN SIZE SETS START AT $499

A Somma looks like a conventional mattress. It's lightweight and easy to move. It required no troublesome heater. It comes in conventional mattress sizes. It uses standard bedding. It sits on a standard, heavy duty, bed frame. And the comfort level is unequalled by any other form of mattress available today.

A Somma's unique, patented, design of individual water filled cylinders nearly assures a leak proof bed while completely eliminating wave motion. By filling the individual cylinders to an appropriate level one side of the bed can be firmer than the other. The quilted top, with two inches of insulation, provides a luxurious sleeping surface. Your body is supported without any "hard" spots; a wonderful, relaxed, tension-free sleep is easily achieved.

Don't just look at a Somma Controlled Flotation System, lie down on one. You'll discover it's just like a bed, only better.

Physicians assemble in Moscow, call for nuclear arms ban

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG

MOSCOW (AP) — Wooed by the leaders of both superpowers, 2,500 physicians from 60 countries assembled in a flag-draped sports arena in Moscow on Saturday to call for the elimination of nuclear weapons.

"We're not talking about reduction or halfway measures," said Dr. Bernard Lown, a Boston cardiologist who is vice president of International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War. "We are total abolitionists."

The 170,000-member group, which won the 1985 Nobel Peace Prize, is holding its first congress in the Soviet capital.

Communist Party Secretary Anatoly F. Dobrynin read aloud a message of greetings from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev calling for an end to the "nuclear madness."

"The Soviet Union is prepared to go its part of the road in good faith," Gorbachev said in the message. He said his government "fully endorses the primary prescription" made by the doctors group — an end to nuclear testing.

At its 1986 congress in Cologne, West Germany, more than 3,000 members of the group called for a moratorium on testing as the first step toward nuclear disarmament. The group says it is independent of all governments.

The Soviet Union ended a 19-month halt in testing in February, after the United States, citing security concerns, declined to make the test freeze mutual.

The U.S. ambassador to Moscow, Jack F. Matlock, read a message Saturday from President Reagan that said progress had been made on arms control during the past year, but the Soviets needed to do more to reduce tensions.

"I have urged the Soviet Union to set a date this year for the prompt and complete withdrawal of its forces from Afghanistan," Reagan said in the message.

Nor can we overlook other issues, such as abuse of fundamental rights and freedoms of individual human beings, and "misperceptions that arise from isolation of societies from each other."

The Reagan statement also said the United States and its allies would continue to rely on nuclear deterrence to keep the peace.

U.S. industrialist Armand Hammer, who holds a medical doctorate, predicted the two superpower leaders would hold a summit meeting in Washington before year's end and conclude an agreement banning medium-range missiles in Europe.

The superpowers are discussing a plan to eliminate from Europe all medium-range missiles, which have a range of 600 to 3,000 miles, and keeping 100 medium-range missiles each on their own territories.

Hammer, 89, long active in encouraging U.S.-Soviet trade ties, received a humanitarian award from the doctors group. He spearheaded international relief efforts for the Chernobyl disaster, in which 31 people died.

The four-day conference in the Soviet capital also attracted the attention of three Democrats seeking to succeed Reagan in the White House when his term expires in 1989.

Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee attended in person, delivering a speech in which he said cuts in conventional arms must be considered along with nuclear disarmament.

Gore also denounced the Soviets' use of psychiatry for political ends and quoted dissident Andrei D. Sakharov as saying, "The preservation of peace is indissolubly linked to the openness of society and the observance of human rights."

Two other Democratic presidential hopefuls, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis of Massachusetts and Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware, sent telegrams of support that were read from the speaker's dais.

Also attending the conference was the Soviet cofounder of the doctors group, cardiologist Yevgeny Chazov, who was named Soviet health minister in February.

In a statement of beliefs, the group's governing body, the International Council, renewed calls for a freeze on nuclear testing and said military spending was now costing the nations of the world $2 billion a day.

"Those who argue that nuclear deterrence promotes peace ignore the mathematical certainty that nuclear deterrence inevitably impels a nuclear catastrophe," the council said. "We believe, therefore, in the abolition of nuclear weapons."

The newspaper of the Soviet Ministry of Health, Meditsinskaya Gazeta (Medical Gazette), waxed poetic about the congress, printing excerpts on its front page from a work by Yevgeny Yevtushenko.

Musing on what would remain of the earth after a nuclear war, the poet from Siberia wrote:

"What if an icy desert lies there.
And there are not even any widows left.
And the entire earth itself becomes a widow."

Duarte isolating himself in light of war, economy

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — President Jose Napoleon Duarte, who begins his fourth year in power Monday, has become increasingly isolated from friends and advisers as he confronts a grinding civil war and a failing economy.

Sources close to Duarte say he has turned from trusted friends and close advisers who criticize his government. They also say he is not listening to members of his Christian Democratic Party, which has been torn by political infighting as people jockey for position for the 1989 presidential election.

"He's determined but stubborn. He doesn't want to hear any more because everyone is fighting him," said a close presidential adviser, speaking on condition he not be further identified.

Opposition to Duarte comes from right-wing political parties and leftist labor unions, private enterprise and the Marxist-led rebels who have been fighting the U.S.-backed government since 1979.

In an anniversary speech Monday, the 61-year-old president is expected to announce the release of some political prisoners, the final step of an agrarian reform program and measures to bolster the economy.

In 1984, Duarte began his five-year term promising to end a war that to date has claimed 63,000 lives, most of them civilians. He also promised to promote democracy and revive the battered economy.

Despite yearly infusions of more than $100 million in U.S. military aid, however, the Salvadoran military has not defeated the guerrillas, grouped in the umbrella Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

Three attempts at peace talks have failed. Duarte last week rejected a rebel plan to ease the war's effects on civilians and the economy through a set of rules for combat.

"They (the guerrillas) make pacts to continue the war," Duarte said. "My responsibility as president is to end the war."

The rejection said one rebel leader, Jorge Villacorta, leaves Duarte "still more isolated and will increase his erosion and loss of prestige."

Nevertheless, Duarte has made some progress in improving Salvadorans' lot.

Torture and kidnapping by military and security forces have been dramatically curbed. The right-wing death squads that operated freely in the early 1970s have been all but put out of business.

Duarte attempted to treat the root cause of the war — a wide gap between a small landed class and the dirt-poor majority.

The president also has managed to wrest some political control from the far right, but his party holds only a three-seat margin in the 60-seat National Assembly.

That margin allows him to push through most legislation, but a legislative boycott by rightists earlier this year meant Duarte was unable to reenact a state of seige in effect through most of the war. Such an action requires a two-thirds majority.

The military remains the strongest single institution, but is aware that continued U.S. aid is conditioned on the existence of a democratically ruled government.

But Duarte's popularity, as measured by his own party's polls, has fallen to an all-time low.

The right wing accuses Duarte of instituting socialism, and frequently demands his resignation. Conservative lawmakers criticize his initiatives on elections and the economy.

Peruvian capital besieged by violence

EDITOR'S NOTE — Lima, one of South America's leading cities, is beset these days by terror bombings and other actions of a mysterious guerrilla group founded in the Andean highlands seven years ago by a former philosophy professor who espouses the ideas of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung of China.

By MONTE HAYES

LIMA, Peru (AP) — When a rare tropical storm struck this desert capital one recent day, people in the nearby port of Callao mistook the thunder for guerrilla bombs and rushed terrified into the darkened streets.

The lightning and thunder hit the city during 10 straight days of guerrilla attacks that included as many as 18 banks bombed in a single night, the attempted assassination of Peru's attorney general and a failed mortar attack on the government palace.

The panic reflected the tension prevailing in Lima since the Shining Path guerrilla movement began an urban military and political offensive four months ago.

The offensive includes an attempt for the first time to infiltrate labor unions and neighborhood associations in the slums.

In another major departure from previous strategy that has officials alarmed, the Shining Path, which once scorned other leftist groups, is explaining and defending its brand of violence in publicly distributed documents. The documents are seen as an effort to win support from the more radical elements of the Marxist-led United Left alliance, Peru's second largest political grouping.

Founded and led by Abimael Guzman, a former professor of philosophy, the Shining Path began its Maoist insurgency May 17, 1980, by burning ballot boxes in a remote highland hamlet. It followed with attacks on power pylons high in the Andes, causing blackouts in Lima and other coastal cities hundreds of miles away.

In the beginning the conservative government then in power blamed the sabotage on bandits and scoffed at reports of a Maoist guerrilla movement.

AP Laserphoto

A woman makes a call from a pay phone next to the bombed out hulk of a car. Car bombs have become a part of daily life in Lima since leftist guerrillas began expanding terrorist attacks in the city.

Seven years and 10,000 lives later, the Shining Path has brought its war to the crowded streets of Lima, and officials have long ceased to scoff.

It is not like a bad tooth that one can locate and extract," President Alan Garcia said recently in a meeting with foreign correspondents. "It is a virus that attacks the whole body."

The whereabouts of founder Guzman are unknown. Some reports have him still in the mountains, others say he has had plastic surgery and is living in a Lima shantytown or that he is abroad.

The Shining Path began intensifying its attacks in the capital two years ago, after Garcia, a 38-year-old social reformer took office at the head of a center-left government.

In February 1986, in an attempt to control the expanding wave of guerrilla bombings and sabotage, Garcia imposed a state of emergency in Lima and gave the military responsibility for fighting the guerrillas. A 1 a.m. to 5 a.m. curfew was imposed.

But terrorist attacks have increased, jumping from 378 in 1985 to 462 in 1986, according to one intelligence agency.

Through the first four months of this year, attacks in Lima reached nearly 200, including raids by a much smaller and less violent urban-guerrilla group, the pro-Cuba Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement, which has been active since 1984.

"It is a war that we are not winning, and we may be losing it," Manuel d'Ornellas, a widely respected newspaper columnist, wrote recently.

Those attacks increasingly are concentrated in Lima and Callao, which contain nearly one-third of the country's 19 million inhabitants and 70 percent of its industries.

A 1982 public opinion poll indicated that only 8 percent of "Limenos" viewed terrorism as the country's leading problem, placing it far behind inflation, unemployment and other economic problems. In a similar poll this past December, the percentage had jumped to 42 percent, moving terrorism to the top of the list.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soldiers stand next to what remained of an S-26 Sikorsky helicopter belonging to the Philippine military and on loan to a U.S. movie crew which crashed in the water off Manila Bay Saturday, killing four persons and injuring five others.

'Loaned' chopper for U.S. movie crew crashes, four die

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A Philippine air force helicopter on loan to a U.S. movie crew crashed into Manila Bay on Saturday, killing four people and injuring five. Except for an injured West German, all aboard were Filipinos.

A Philippine air force statement said the S-26 Sikorsky aircraft was bound for Puerto Azul, a resort about 50 miles southwest of Manila, when it plunged into the bay off the town of Naic.

Fishermen rescued the survivors, who were taken to a hospital in Manila.

All on board were Philippine military personnel, except for film crew member Max Motchmann, the air force said.

A nurse on duty at Manila's Makati Medical Center said Motchmann underwent surgery late Saturday, and she had no information on his condition.

The statement said the reason for the crash was undetermined. Filming for the movie "Missing In Action, Part III," starring American actor Chuck Norris, was under way in Puerto Azul.

Air force spokesman Col. Pablo Gonzales said the helicopter took off around dawn Saturday from Villamor Air Base, adjacent to Manila International Airport, and was airborne for about an hour before it crashed.

Solidarity activists 'warned'

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Police held seven Solidarity activists in Wroclaw, southern Poland, and warned them against organizing anti-government demonstrations during Pope John Paul II's seven-day visit to Poland, one activist said Saturday.

The Polish-born pontiff arrives in Warsaw June 8.

Jozef Pinior said police Friday night detained him and three other former leaders of the banned Solidarity free trade union's underground structure in Wroclaw. Also detained were three Solidarity sympathizers there, he said in a telephone interview after his release from police custody.

Pinior said the police "warned us against taking up union activities before and during the pope's visit to Poland."

"We were told that because our union Solidarity is illegal such activity may result in penal consequences," he said.

Defamation indictments issued

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Two dissident journalists were indicted Saturday on charges of defaming the armed forces in a story published last year, and one was sent to jail, a spokesman for their newspaper said.

Gilberto Palacios, a reporter for the leftist daily Fortin Mapocho, was indicted and ordered jailed by military judge Cmdr. Enrique Olivares, said Deputy Editor Ismael Llona. He said the judge issued the indictment after questioning Palacios for about an hour.

Felipe Pozo, the newspaper's executive editor, was indicted in abstentia. He was in Peru attending a journalism conference, Llona said.

The army sued the newspaper after it printed a story by Palacios last April describing living conditions among Chilean draftees. The army said the story defamed the military.

The journalists could be sentenced to up to three years in jail if convicted.

Barbie 'threat' on hunger strike

LYON, France (AP) — A man who allegedly planned to kill former Lyon Gestapo chief Klaus Barbie says he has gone on a hunger strike to protest his arrest, a French news agency reported Saturday.

In a letter from Montluc prison to Agence-France Press, 43-year-old Christian Didier said he had not eaten since his May 19 arrest.

On that day, Didier appeared at St. Joseph prison where Barbie is being held, saying he was a urologist and needed to examine Barbie. He was arrested after security guards discovered he was carrying a .44-caliber revolver.

Barbie is on trial for crimes against humanity during World War II.

"I don't feel in any way guilty, and I refuse in consequence to stay in prison," the news agency quoted Didier as saying in his letter.

Boat sinks in collision, one lost

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese fishing boat sank after colliding with a Maltese freighter Saturday northeast of Tokyo, and one fisherman was missing, a maritime official said.

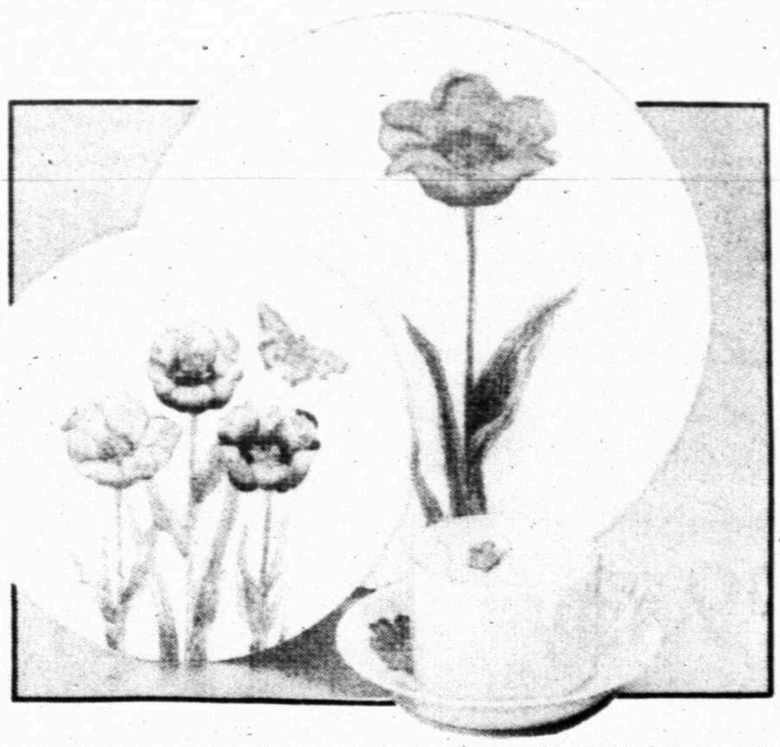

Seven other crewmen aboard the fishing boat No. 18 Koyo Maru were rescued by another fishing vessel, according to an official at the Onahama branch of the Maritime Safety Agency.

WEATHER SUMMARY.

Storm front lingering

From Staff and Wire Reports

A chance of thunderstorms lingers for the Permian Basin throughout today and the first part of the week, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Today will be mostly cloudy, with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high will be in the mid-80s, with the winds from the southeast at 5 to 15 mph. Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, and a low in the mid 50s.

Monday skies will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, and a high expected in the mid-80s.

The record high for Saturday was 101 in 1985, 25 degrees hotter than the of 76. The record low of 45, set in 1937, was less than 20 degrees cooler than Saturday's low, of 63.

STATE

Golf-ball size hail, gusty winds and heavy rains pounded South Texas for another day Saturday, uprooting some trees and flooding sections of roads and a business, authorities said.

The National Weather Service confirmed that a funnel cloud was sighted northwest of Sweeney Switch near Mathis. A separate storm system moved across areas west of Corpus Christi, also dropping heavy rains.

But other than a flooded store — Sweeney Switch Genral Store in the tiny town of Dinero -- no property damage was reported in Live Oak County, which bore the brunt of the storm, officials said.

"It got pretty loud ... We had about 3 inches of rain in about 25 minutes right here at the intersection, and down the street they had about 5 inches and several trees down," store clerk Judy Demmel said.

Water flooded under the doors, she said.

"I'm still mopping up water. We had about 2 inches of water in the store," she said.

The Duval County Sheriff's Office reported golf-ball size hail near Rosita. Heavy rains and traffic accidents forced authorities to close sections of Interstate 37 briefly, said Bruce Parsons of the Live Oak County Sheriff's office.

Elsewhere around Texas, scattered showers and thunderstorms ranged across the Edwards Plateau and South and Southeast Texas Saturday.

A flash flood watch was in effect for much of South Texas Saturday night and Sunday.

In North Texas, partly cloudy Sunday and Sunday night with a chance of thunderstorms. Partly cloudy Monday. A slight chance of thunderstorms east Monday. Lows through Sunday night in the mid to upper 60s. Highs Sunday and Monday in the mid to upper 80s.

In South Texas, flash flood watch in effect through Sunday for northwest sections of South Texas. Scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms through Sunday with heavy rain and flash flooding possible northwest sections.

In West Texas, mostly cloudy through Sunday morning and partly cloudy sunday afternoon through Monday. Scattered thunderstorms all sections, some severe. Widely scattered mainly late afternoon and evening thunderstorms Sunday. Lows through Sunday night mid 50s.

Pastors agree Bakker shouldn't regain PTL

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Disgraced television evangelist Jim Bakker and his wife, Tammy Faye, should not be allowed to return to their multimillion-dollar PTL empire, agree pastors of several fundamentalist churches locally.

"I think it would be a shame if that happened, even though I definitely think they could do it," said the Rev. Frank Johnson, pastor of Kelview Heights Baptist Church.

"He (Bakker) certainly is a man with charisma," Johnson said.

Bakker, who appeared Wednesday on ABC News' "Nightline" program, said if the Rev. Jerry Falwell won't let him return to PTL, he may start a new ministry in California.

Bakker handed his PTL network and Heritage USA theme park over to Falwell in March after admitting to a sexual encounter in 1980 with then-church secretary Jessica Hahn.

PTL is an acronymn for Praise the Lord or People That Love.

Johnson, a Falwell supporter, didn't know of another story that affected the religious community or created as much interest among the news media as the Bakker scandal, he said.

"Probably, all television ministries will have a tremendous drop in support as the result of this," he said. "It shows us that people expect more of Christians."

At the Christian Life Center, Assistant Pastor Steve Bell said Bakker's "lack of leadership" is reason enough why he should not be allowed to return to PTL.

"I'm not concerned so much about some of the allegations as I am about the mismanagement of funds," said Bell.

"It sure is a sad affair," he said. "It's pitiful."

Bell contended that there is a general feeling among most denominations that charges of Bakker's alleged improprieties, including homosexuality and bisexuality, have adversely affected some people's faith.

"Some (Christians) have a faith that is rooted so deeply. Others are what we call borderline. They don't know what they believe and what they don't believe," he said.

It's the borderline Christian who has been "hurt most" by the scandal, he said.

Bell said the scandal has served to underscore the importance of local churches and that congregations should count on one another, not television, for support.

"Television is not something we can truly rely on," he said.

Bell said he didn't know what religious leaders must do to restore whatever trust has been lost in the electronic church. But he added that PTL may have a chance to recover under Falwell's leadership.

While some local ministers were matter-of-fact in their statements about Bakker's desire to return to the helm of PTL, others refused or were hesitant to comment.

Departing area chamber official outlines needs

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — This Friday, Chuck Bernhard reluctantly ends his three year tenure as director of the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce Economic Development Division.

Looking back, Bernhard notes about 10 new businesses have come to the area, but hastens to add it wasn't due entirely to his efforts — though interested businesses have been offered as much help and encouragement as possible.

Asked what he sees as the real need in the realm of economic development as he leaves the area to become director of development in Carlsbad, N.M., Bernhard said, "I think the number one need is for the area to sharpen its focus on exactly what it wants to do in the way of economic development."

A good way to sharpen that focus would be development of a strategic plan that would provide a blueprint detailing future goals, he said. "This should be a combined effort involving Midland and Odessa."

The departing Odessa economic development director believes the two cities should hire "a facilitator — not to tell you what your goals should be, but to draw it out and develop a consensus from community input so there would be a set of goals and objectives.

"I think it is critical that this be done," he said.

"Companies look very favorably upon areas that have put together a vision for themselves, a plan for themselves," he said. "They are reluctant when they don't see this."

Bernhard also believes "there's a lot that has to be overcome still in the Midland-Odessa relationship."

"I feel like there's been progress," he said, "but there's still some fundamental differences in the way the two communities look at each other."

"Ideally, what you should have," he said, "is each city would come up with its own strategic plan and just acknowledge that — Hey, we are different, but here is where we can work together and get the forces to join in areas where a joint effort can be implemented, such as UTPB and the airport."

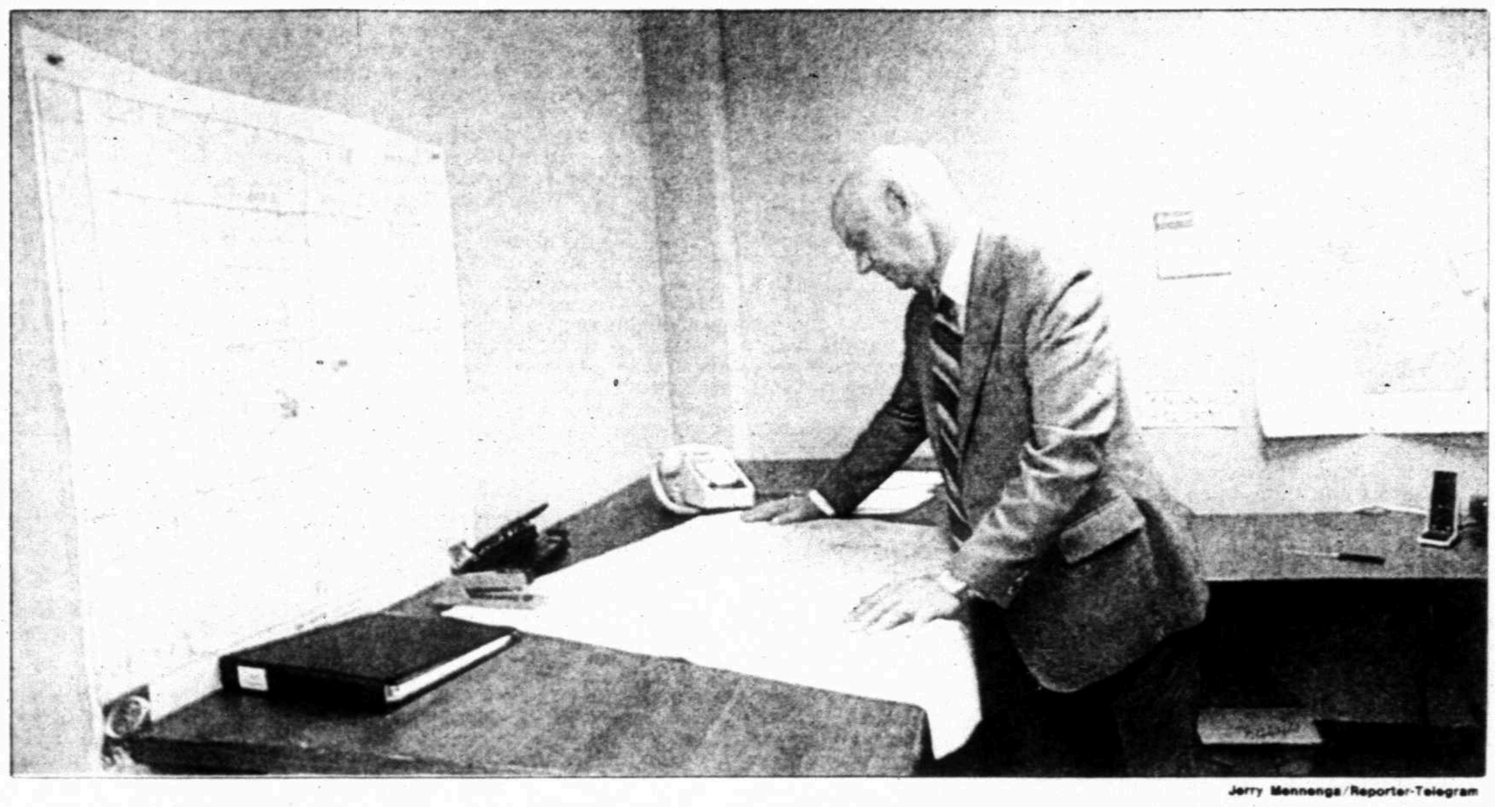

As to the concept of regionalism, Bernhard said, "I think regionalism is definitely a good thing in economic development to the extent that you can combine resources that might not be available in one community, but would be available in another to help in an overall push," he stated.

How does he see the efforts of Midland and Odessa in creating incentives to induce new businesses to come to the area? "I think that's something that we haven't reckoned with even yet," Bernhard said.

While Bernhard's first priority is development of a stragtegic plan, "My second biggest priority for this area would be small business development," he said.

"This would include greater efforts aimed at educating people on how to start a new business or how to keep a business going, along with establishment of some kind of fund to capitalize new business development," he said.

City Manager Fred Poe looks over a map of Midland in the communications room at the city's Emergency Operations Center. The center is activated in the event of disaster or potential disasters like the siting Wednesday night of what some residents believed was a tornado heading toward the city.

City gets glimpse of emergency plan

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

When Midlanders heard a city fire department dispatcher speak to them directly in a cable television audio broadcast Wednesday evening, they got a taste of city preparedness in the event of disaster.

The dispatcher picked up a telephone in the city Emergency Operations Center and dialed a special number designed to override the audio of all Midland cable television channels.

A tornado had been spotted south of the city limits and was heading for Midland, she told viewers. She advised them to take cover.

Fortunately, the spotting proved to be inaccurate. The supposed tornado siting was relayed by three members of the public to the National Weather Service, who in turn contacted city officials, City Manager Fred Poe said.

With all the spotters that were out, we pretty well determined that we had a false alarm," said Poe.

Trained weather spotters verified that the siting consisted only of low-lying clouds, and the emergency was called off, he said.

But not before Poe and one or two other officials had activated the city's Emergency Operations Center in the City Hall basement to prepare for a disaster.

"Supposedly this basement would protect us (during most disasters)," Poe said Thursday, adding "nuclear attack is something else entirely."

Other officials who were preparing to come to the EOC were informed of the false alarm and told their presence was unnecessary, Poe said.

Touring the EOC with Fire Chief James Roberts Thursday, Poe said the center consists of two rooms — one equipped with two-way radio communications for dispatchers and another "situation room" for top officials to determine policy.

A wall-sized map of the city with magnetized markers hangs in one corner of the second room — normally used for city employee training — to help officials visualize the disaster.

Officials activate the EOC not only in the event of tornadoes, Poe said. Other disasters which warrant central city planning on a moment's notice run the gamut from chemical spills to nuclear war, Roberts said.

Drills twice a year test preparedness in the center, Poe said.

Among officials called to the center in the event of disaster are those from city police, fire and public works departments, area utilities like Energas and Texas Utilities, the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army, Roberts said.

School district officials also take part in the effort, helping designate evacuation centers if needed, Roberts said.

Most of those officials come to the center accompanied by a dispatcher, a worker to relay field information on the disaster from the radio room to the policy-making group, Roberts said.

Plan of action grows, changes to fit area's developing needs

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Development of the plan that governs official action in time of emergency is an ongoing process, the city's emergency management coordinator, R.G. Edgerton, said Saturday.

Federal guidelines hold that the plan, as yet incomplete, should be totally "up to snuff" by the end of the 1988 Fiscal Year, he said.

While the actions to occur in the city Emergency Operations Center have been finalized in the plan, the overall document will when complete assign responsibility for 20 other areas of emergency management, he said.

Those areas include communications operations, shelter coordination, evacuation, health and medical operations, damage assessment, human services operations, transportation and legal services.

Directions for many of those areas — such as for fire and rescue operations — have yet to be drafted, Edgerton said.

Man stabbed in robbery to receive unusual award

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 33-year-old man who was stabbed twice after he chased two men from a convenience store robbery in March will be saluted for bravery Tuesday by the local police officers' association.

But police acknowldeged Jackie Dale Perkins of Midland did what they advise other citizens not to do.

Perkins

Perkins will receive a plaque at a Midland Police Officers' Association banquet, the first time that group has given such an award to a citizen.

"Now, we aren't suggesting that people go out and try to stop armed robberies," said Jerry Cowin, MPOA president. "We don't sanction that."

Cpl. Jim White, police spokesman, agreed with Cowin.

"We're not asking people to take direct action that might get them in a situation where they might get hurt," White said.

"But, at the same time, we can't stifle someone who is trying to do his civic duty."

According to police reports, officers were dispatched to the 7-Eleven store, 1112 S. Midland Dr., about midnight March 29. Pauline Ray, 31, the on-duty clerk, told police that boyfriend Perkins and she were in the store when two men walked in.

Perkins said he was in the store that night because he worries about the late hours often worked by Ms. Ray.

"You don't know what kind of people are going to come in there," Perkins said.

The men walked around one aisle, then snatched two 12-packs of beer and ran out the door, police reports said.

Ms. Ray yelled to Perkins, who took off after the men. The men dropped beer cans as they ran, Perkins said.

The chase continued north on Midland Drive, then west on Anetta Drive, until the two men approached a gray Ford Thunderbird, Perkins said.

"I saw him go into his coat pocket but I didn't know what it was," Perkins said. "He swung at me — I kicked him in the chest, and when I grabbed him by the arm, that's when he stabbed me the first time.

"I didn't even know he had stabbed me at first."

The night was cold and blustery, Perkins recalled. He wore a pair of insulated overalls which made him appear, in the dark, larger than his five feet 10 inches.

After he was stabbed, one of the men remarked "He's not going to fall — let's get the hell out of here," Perkins said.

Prairie dog eradication, tick testing unrelated

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Contrary to earlier reports, a recent prairie dog eradication in Ector County had nothing to do with a positive indication of Rocky Mountain spotted fever at the Ector County Animal Shelter.

Nonetheless, a tick — one of a 17-tick sample from two dogs at the shelter — did test positive for the disease this month, said a Texas Department of Health official in El Paso.

Ticks from Midland Animal Control tested negatively, Zoonosis Control Specialist Guy Moore said.

Midland County has not had positive Rocky Mountain spotted fever ticks since 1983 and 1979, he added.

On the heels of the Ector County finding is a possible Rocky Mountain spotted fever infection in a San Antonio youth, reported Friday, said Moore.

That would be the first case of a human infection in Texas this year, reports said.

Dangers of the disease spreading may be worse this spring and summer because the wet weather promises a bumper crop of ticks, said U.S. Department of Agriculture researcher John George at the Livestock Insects Laboratory in Kerrville.

Moore, who collected the ticks in Ector and Midland counties May 12, said the incidence of ticks arises in the warmer seasons.

"There is nothing to scare people about. We let them know what we have found so we can make sure the public is aware," Moore said.

West Texas dogs or other animals primarily haven't had the disease themselves in the past years, but can always carry the infected ticks, Moore said.

Humans contract the disease when they are bitten by a sick tick — for example, when trying to extract one from their pet.

Instead, one should use tweezers or wear gloves when ridding an animal of ticks, Moore said, or take the pet to the veterinarian and have him do it.

Humans cannot transmit the disease to humans, the specialist said.

A common symptom of the disease is a rash, chills, fever, severe headache, muscle pain and mental confusion, Moore said.

Treatment is usually through antibiotics and prevention vaccinations come afterwards.

"It can be fatal, but normally through treatment, it's usually cured."

A most important factor to remember is to report to the physician one may have been bitten by a tick if the symptoms arise, Moore said.

It's nice to have a day you can do anything...or nothing

Ott

It is now 11 a.m. on Saturday and, other than writing this column, I have absolutely nothing pressing on my personal agenda for the remainder of the day.

That is a good feeling. There is something to be said for a lazy day when you are free to do anything you want. Or nothing, if that is your desire.

The beauty is that it is your day and though there are chores that need to be done, they can wait. After all, they have for months now and the world hasn't ended. One more day won't hurt anything.

Already my morning has possessed a certain charm. For example, I:

— slept late;

— sipped three cups of coffee and nibbled on a cinnamon roll while browsing through the morning paper, concentrating my efforts on the sports section;

— clipped my toenails, which had become lethal weapons;

— enjoyed a leisurely shower;

— took a ride in the country, listening to country-western music on the car radio; and

— moseyed into the office shortly after 10 a.m., when a brief discussion ensued as to which employee had the most interesting previous night. For the record, I finished a distant third.

Still, with mornings like that life ain't half bad.

At this very moment I'm attempting to figure out what I'm going to do with myself for the rest of today. The possibilities, of course, are endless.

I could:

1) Mow the lawn. No, wait a minute. I can't do that. It's too wet. Besides, I don't have a lawn. I live in an apartment. I could mow the front porch, I suppose.

2) Wash my car. That sounds impressive, but unfortunately it would be dumber than mowing the concrete. Apparently it is going to rain everyday between now and Christmas and I would look sillier than a TV preacher if I chose today to hose down the old Renault.

3) Visit a nursing home and talk with all the lonely, old people who don't have anyone to share their lives and thoughts with. That certainly would be a decent gesture on my part. God would probably even give me some bonus points. Still, I won't do it. I'm not good at that sort of thing. My mother could pull it off, but I can't.

4) Do something that involves heavy lifting or another form of strenuous physical activity. What? Yeah, you're right. Scratch that idea altogether.

The more I think about today the less appealing it becomes. My possibilities are not particularly attractive. In fact, they are downright appalling.

That's our problem. When we finally get a free day we don't know what to do with it. We are so attuned to our routine, regimented lifestyles that we forget how to be creative with our leisure time. So we waste it.

This is a pity because much can be accomplished in our spare time, something we all have regardless how busy we tell ourselves we are. But it takes effort. We might even have to use our minds a bit. We have to take the initiative.

But I fear we have forgotten how to do those things. Or, maybe we're just afraid to do them. Who knows? But for whatever reason, it's easier to do nothing.

We need to change. Improve. Enhance our lives. Make them more well-rounded. And we can. All we have to do is try, and I, for one, am going to start today.

Yes, right now I'm going to start being a fulfilled person. My spare time will be jammed with useful endeavors. No more wasted time here.

And I shall begin by taking a nap.

DEATHS

Denver 'Ike' Eichler

VICTORIA — Denver "Ike" Eichler, 72, of Alice died Friday at a local hospital following a lengthy illness.

Funeral services were to be Saturday at Martin Luther Lutheran Church of Coletoville, with the Revs. Bruce Billstein and Elroy Haverlah officiating. Burial was to follow Coletoville Cemetery under the direction of Colonial Funeral Home of Victoria.

He was born July 15, 1914, in Roundtop. He was a retired toolpusher for Marine Drilling Co. He was a member of Emmanuel Lutheran Church of Alice.

Survivors include his wife, Sadie Eichler of Alice; two daughters, Delphine Bowie of Midland and Linda Millhouse of Corpus Chrisit; two sons, Denver Dale Eichler of Victoria and Dennis Eichler of Baytown; a sister, Doris Lindstedder of Bryan; two brothers, Woodrow Eichler of Dime Box and Oliver Eichler of Giddings; 12 grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

Clara L. Duncan

Funeral services for Clara L. Duncan of Midland will be 3:30 p.m. Monday at the First Assembly of God Church, with the Rev. Raymond Schaeffer officiating and the Rev. Homer Goodwin, associate pastor, assisting. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Duncan died Saturday at a local hospital.

She was born Aug. 28, 1900, in New Port, Indian Territory, and spent the early part of her life in what is now Oklahoma. In 1917 she married Claude E. Duncan. The couple lived in Oklahoma until 1926, when they moved to Pecos. They moved to Midland in 1967. Her husband preceeded her in death in 1972.

Survivors include two sons, Jerry J. Duncan of Midland and Don I. Duncan of Casa Grande, Ariz.; a brother, H.O. Ligon of Grand Prairie; six grandchildren; and 13 great-grandchildren.

Jack Osborne

Graveside services for Jack Osborne of Midland will be 11 a.m. Monday at Resthaven mausoleum with the Rev. Ray Riddle officiating. Service are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Osborne died Thursday at a local hospital.

He was born Aug. 15, 1917, in Blue Creek, W.Va. He moved to Oklahoma at a young age and lived there until 1970, when he moved to Midland. He worked for Exxon Oil Co. for 34 years, retiring in 1983. He married Jeanette K. Morris in March 4, 1948, in Okmulgee, Okla. He was a member of Grace Presbyterian Church.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; a son, Terry Osborne of Midland; a daughter, Gaila Phillips of Midland; a brother, James Osborne of Baton Rouge, La.; a sister, Edith O. Smith of Friendswood; and three grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland Inc.

Bryan Biechler

Bryan Biechler, 6, of Midland, died Friday at a San Antonio hospital. Funeral services are pending at Ellis Funeral Home.

He is survived by his parents, Thomas and Mary Jane Whiles of Midland and Dwight Biechler of Saudi Arabia.

Bernhard noted that Midland has already been "victimized" and probably will lose a company because of a more aggressive effort in another state.

"The specifics are," Bernhard said, "Galesburg, Ill., which made an attractive offer to a company that's a high tech, research and development type company located in Midland."

He said the company wants to stay here, "however, they're finding a lack of receptivity among banks and investors to their idea about what they want to do, in spite of the fact the company could have a potentially significant economic impact on this area," Bernhard stated.

The company manufactures gallium arsenite chips, a product that likely will replace part of the market for electrical componant and computer silicon chips, he said.

Bernhard cited this particular situation during testimony before the House Committee on Science and Technology concerning raiders from other states, he said.

The man who runs the departing company has a Harvard University masters degree in business administration and likes West Texas, Bernhard said.

But he told the chamber of commerce official that he has "got to go where this business can work."

"Now, we can say we have a high quality of life and we can say this is a great place to live and raise kids and all that," Bernhard stated, "but the hard reality of economic development is that you've got to have some incentives."

Part of the problem, according to Bernhard, is that community leaders have drafted no real guidelines as to what can be offered to companies interested in the area. "We do everything on a case-by-case basis," he stated.

Some communities offer free land, free utility hookups, tax breaks and other inducements, he said.

"That needs to happen aound here. There needs to be a policy on exactly what the carrots are," Bernhard stated.

"I think one thing — and I'm not a liberal, I'm very conservative politically and economically — we've got to look at the big picture, the consequences of unemployment," he said.

"And I guess I'll preach this to my dying day: that unemployment has a severe social and economic cost on society and a local community," he said.

Effects of unemployment include "increased crime rates, increased child abuse and increased social problems, such as divorce, that grow out of severe economic conditions," he said. "If you don't pay now for a little incentive (in economic development efforts)," Bernhard stated, "You're going to pay later. I think we need to be more sensitive to those consequences from an economic standpoint."

As to offering incentives to local businesses, Bernhard said he's all for that "during these times," especially for companies that demonstrate they are well-managed and financially sound. "I think you have to give them a little room because of the times," he said.

Part of the solution, Bernhard said, could be found in the Permian Basin Bid Center, which helps businesses apply for government contracts.

"When we originally started the Bid Center," he said, "we were worried that there wouldn't be enough outreach to recruit clients to use the services of the center. What has happened, in fact, is that people have been banging down the door on the basis of just a little information."

Bernhard noted that more than 440 businesses interested in bidding on government contracts have contacted center Director Dave Thayer.

However, Bernhard believes the push for direct contracts between various federal agencies and Bid Center clients may not be the most expeditious road to travel. He believes area manufacturers might fare better if they sought subcontracts with defense contractors, such as General Dynamics, Boeing, McDonnell-Douglas or other prime contractors.

"Our economic structure is more suited to subcontractor relationships," he said, and because of high unemployment rates, "it behooves us even more to foster relationships with prime contractors."

Asked why this push has failed to become a major part of the Bid Center program, Bernhard said, "It hasn't come about because the resources (funds) haven't been dedicated to that end."

Bernhard noted his budget for economic development last year was cut in spite of bad economic times. Efforts to obtain Ector County community development funds to help the Bid Center ran into a snag, because some people questioned the propriety of such a use. The Texas Attorney General has yet to rule on the question.

Asked if if the Odessa-Midland areas have the proper climates, relating to low land costs, moderate labor costs and low taxes, needed to attract new businesses, Bernhard said, "Oh absolutely. That's why we've been able to attract a few."

Bernhard considers the location of Capitol Trencher Co. a major accomplishment and attributes the company's decision to relocate here from California to "a low cost facility, reasonably priced labor and the availability of industrial support."

"Odessa's going to be proud of that for years to come," Bernhard stated.

Contending this is "a real example of diversification," he said, "Odessa needs to continue to market a success story like Capitol Trencher to show other companies that they can do it too."

Bernhard cited other examples that also could play a part in the marketing campaign.

Asked if he feels the leadership of Odessa-Midland really understands the magnitude of the problems facing the area, Bernhard said, "No. That's a simple answer. I don't think they do yet."

Citing an industrial prospecting trip a few years ago, Bernhard said, a Midland leader on the trip was asked by the representative of a company, "What are you doing in Midland to prepare for you economic future?"

Bernhard said the Midlander replied, "Waiting for the next boom."

However, Bernhard said he believes that recently "the awareness level has increased, and people are reconciled that the next boom is far away, if there's ever even going to be another boom, which most economists don't think — just a slow return."

Burglaries of furniture, tool box investigated by police

From Staff Reports

Following what Midland Police called an unusually quiet night, lawmen are investigating several burglaries, including one that netted perpetrators furniture valued at more than $300.

According to police reports, a sofa and loveseat valued at $225, a table with four chairs valued at $45, a dresser valued at $45, and a bed frame, mattress and box spring set valued totally at $75 were stolen Saturday from a residence in the 2900 block of Loma Drive.

Police also are investigating the burglary of a local business. A tool box containing ratchet and socket sets valued at $40 was reported stolen from Davis Garden Center and Landscaping, 5000 N. Midkiff Rd. The burglary occurred between 5:45 p.m. Friday and 8:10 a.m. Saturday, police said.

In other reports, a radar detector valued at $245 was reported stolen from a vehicle parked in the 2400 block of Stanolind Avenue. Police said the burglary occurred between 10 p.m. Saturday and 6:30 a.m. Saturday.

Woman's condition still critical

From Staff Reports

A 22-year-old Odessa woman remained in extremely critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital Saturday night after she was injured in a one-car accident Friday.

Jami Leverett, 5915 Montana in Odessa, suffered "multiple trauma," according to the nursing supervisor at MMH. She required emergency surgery late Friday and was receiving care on a respirator late Saturday, the supervisor said.

According to police, Ms. Leverett was alone in her vehicle and traveling westbound on Loop 250 just after 8 p.m., when the vehicle jumped a curb, slammed into three vehicles parked at the Chili's Restaurant, and came to rest upside down.

Ms. Leverett was not wearing a safety belt, and was thrown from the vehicle, an officer at the scene said.

Police said excessive speed and rain-slickened roads were contributing factors in the accident.

Job searching seminar scheduled

From Staff Reports

A seminar on "Job Search and Interviewing Skills" will be held Saturday, June 6, in the downtown Midland Center under sponsorship of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc.

The seminar, which is free of cost and open to the public, will be held from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the center's Room No. 1. Registration will be from 9:30 a.m. to 10 a.m.

Four areas will be covered in the seminar:

— Preparing — education, resume preparation, job search.

— Interviewing — interview process, appearance, communication.

— Post interviewing — follow-up correspondence, indoctrination, job maintenance.

— Advancing: job protocol, professional development, financial assistance.

The seminar will be conducted by four area personnel directors and Job Training Partnership Program (JTPP) staff.

High school and college students and recent graduates and those unemployed and searching for jobs are invited to participate in the seminar.

Robbyne Hocker Fuller is founding president and chief executive officer of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc.

AWARD

"I guess they thought they had hurt me so bad that I was going to fall down, and I didn't," he said.

The two men jumped in the car and sped off. They are still at large, and no new leads have developed in the case, police said.

Though bleeding, Perkins was able to walk back to the store.

Perkins was stabbed once just above the right kneecap and once in the abdomen. He was hospitalized for two days, but now is fully recovered and works regularly landscaping yards.

But the stabbing could have been much worse, he said. The knife entered his abdomen only 2½ inches from his heart and stomach.

Perkins, an Indiana native who has lived in Midland since 1967, hesitated when he was asked why he chased the men.

"I don't know. I've got a habit of chasing people like that," he said. "My daddy told me that everybody ought to go out and work for a living. These guys just thought they'd come in and take what they wanted."

Perkins' actions caught the attention of officers right away, said Cowin, and a long-dormant idea to honor a citizen finally was alive again.

"We've never done it before, no. It (the award) is something new for us," he said.

"Why are we doing it? Because of the times we live in. Right now (police) are needing more support than ever."

Cpl. Lewis Britton, who drafted the resolution honoring Perkins, said the award is deserved "because he got hurt, for one thing. And it's just not something that's expected."

Perkins said he wants no attention for his action — and until now, has received little, except for his hospital bill, which was paid by Crime Stoppers.

PTL

The Rev. T.H. Chapman, pastor of the First United Pentecostal Church, said he's tired of reading about the Bakker scandal, but added that the former Assemblies of God pastor should give up.

"He disqualified himself as a minister," Chapman said. "I'm not unforgiving, but I come down pretty hard on adultery."

The Rev. Gayle Reeves, pastor of Calvary Assembly of God Church, would not talk about the matter at all, adding, "it's time to drop it."

Another minister, Russ Austin of the Word of Life church, declined to come to the phone when contacted by the Reporter-Telegram.

Austin's receptionist said the pastor had not seen or read the latest reports and preferred not to comment.

At the Church of God in Christ, the Rev. C.S. Johnson said media coverage of the PTL scandal is "one of the most disgraceful things I have ever heard of in my life.

"It's already been overexposed," he said. "I don't want to comment on it at all."

Still, other ministers spoke candidly about PTL's problems and the events that brought Bakker to his knees.

The Rev. James Holman, pastor of the evangelical St. Paul United Methodist Church, doubted whether Bakker would be able to reachieve the state of spirtual grace churches expect of ministers if the charges leveled against him are true.

Holman said people have become "skeptical" of television ministries as the result of the PTL scandal that has dominated media attention over the past two months.

"It's a rather distasteful subject...," he said, but added, "...not all television ministries should be discontinued.

"I'm a positive thinker and an optimist. I believe in the resurrection; that God can resurrect the truth and his church.

"Absolutely nothing can be destroyed if it is good and true," Holman said.

The Rev. Richard Olsen, pastor of the Permian Basin Church of the Nazarene, said the Bakkers have lost the integrity and credibility required of those called into the ministry and, for that reason, "I don't think they ought to return."

Olsen said the only way to restore faith in the electronic church and avoid future scandals is institution of greater accountability.

"TV ministers ought to open all their accounts and books so people can see where their money is going," he said.

"Accountability is the first thing TV ministries ought to have."

EOC

According to the emergency operations plan drawn up to direct efforts, the city manager acts as coordinator of those officials' rescue and damage control efforts.

The city manager in turn acts under the direction of the mayor, who is advised by city attorneys as to the breadth of his powers, Poe said.

In the immediate wake of disaster, efforts by officials gathered are aimed at assisting efforts in the field, said the city manager. "Emergency people in the field take the brunt of action," he said.

"The immediate thing of course is rescue, first aid and emergency medical attention," he said.

Evacuations in the event of gas leaks or other hazardous material spills also would be at the forefront of efforts, he said.

Calls for help to other jurisdictions — much like calls for ambulances logged by Reeves County officials in the wake of the Saragosa tornado — also come into play at that time, he said.

The center also coordinates efforts with Midland Memorial Hospital, which would have put into effect its own disaster plan, Roberts said.

"After the immediate things are taken care of, then you start the search for survivors," he said.

Although Wednesday's severe weather yielded no tornadoes, Poe was concerned about the public's response on being asked to take cover.

Several residents called the city's 911 emergency telephone number to request further instructions, he said.

Because those calls tied up the emergency line, Poe requested that people only use the number if they have an actual emergency to report.

PLAN

He added that a degree of flexibility must be built into many of the emergency operations.

For example, plans for emergency shelters must take into account that prime shelter locations — like Lee or Midland high schools — may be damaged or in danger in an emergency, he said.

"You can't designate shelters because you can't anticipate what you're going to have left," he said.

According to the plan itself, its purpose is to "define in a straightforward manner who does what, when, where and how in order to mitigate, prepare for, respond to, and recover from the effects of war, natural disaster, technological accidents and other major incidents."

Water bills, lien program explained

By LYN MILLER

In November 1986, the city of Midland adopted Ordinance No. 6712 enacting a lien program to encourage prompt payments on delinquent accounts involving water, sewer and garbage bills.

Municipalities have been given power by the state of Texas to place liens against property for delinquent water bills for water used at that property. Approximately 25 additional states also have been granted this power by their governments.

Since property would be uninhabitable without it, water is considered an essential service and improvement. Liens placed on property are similar to a mechanic's lien. For example, if a repairman does some work on a piece of property and is not paid for it, he may attached a lien to that property for his work.

In much the same way, since the city has supplied an improvement to the property, and has not been paid for it, a lien may be attached.

Because water is in scarce supply in West Texas, the city and Legislature want to be sure that all water provided is paid for. The city can then continue to provide the much-needed water to its citizens.

Those people who move without paying their water bill, leave the city without adequate recourse to collect the delinquent water bill.

Even if the whereabouts of a person is known by the city, often the filing of a suit to collect the bill is impractical due to monetary considerations. Land, on the other hand, remains fixed and can always be used to satisfy the indebtedness.

A lien is a claim against a property by the person filing that lien. As stated in the Midland City Code, Section 3-1-26, when a water bill remains unpaid and the customer service department has cut off the water, or, when a final bill for water is not paid, the director of customer service is authorized to file a lien or liens against the property served in the amount of the water, sewer and garbage collection services rendered to that property.

Within 15 days of the filing of the lien, a notice is sent by the city secretary's office to the account holder and to the owner of the property.

The party receiving the notice has 30 days in which to appeal, to the city manager, the decision to impose the lien. This office may be reached by calling 683-4281, Ext. 203, and scheduling an appointment to be heard.

If cause can be shown that no lien should been filed, or if the customer service department cannot show that it should have been filed, the lien will be released at city expense.

Otherwise, the lien will remain and can be removed only by a court.

Liens are filed before notices are sent for the purpose of informing potential buyers of a claim against said property. Should the property be purchased without first having the lien removed, the purchaser accepts it subject to the lien.

The purchaser may then sue to have the lien invalidated, or, in the case of city water liens, the city must sue to foreclose on the lien.

No property will ever be seized for a water lien without a full adjudication of rights before a court of competent jurisdiction.

A landlord may file a Declaration of Rental Property with the customer service department if the water account is in the name of a tenant living on the property. The declaration, subject to certain conditions, will be effective to the tenant. Conditions include:

1) If the tenant was living, and still is, at the property and holding a water account on May 6, 1987, or

2) If the tenant did not live there and have a water account on May 6, 1987, the declaration must be filed prior to the time the tenant establishes water service. A deposit equivalent to three month's average bill at the property will be collected from the tenant, or

3) If the tenant did not live there and have a water account at the property on May 6, 1987, but is already on the property, if the landlord wishes to file a declaration to keep a lien from being filed on the property, a deposit must be supplied to the city equivalent to three month's average bill before the declaration will become effective.

While Midland is apparently the only city in Texas utilizing the water lien provision, some major cities across the nation using the procedure are Atlanta, Ga.; Clearwater, Fla.; Albuquerque, N.M.; Charlotte, N.C.; Chicago, Ill.; Grand Rapids, Mich.; Los Angeles, Calif., and Denver, Colo.

It was learned during an examination of the Albuquerque Water Department's collections, that Albuquerque bills twice the dollar amount of water billed by Midland.

During the same preceding four years, the city of Albuquerque had to write off as uncollectible $2,000 in water bills, while the city of Midland had to write off more than $600. The only discernible difference is that the city of Albuquerque had been using the water lien procedure all of those years.

For additional information concerning the water lien procedure, the Department of Customer Services may be contacted at 683-4281, Ext. 238.

'We the people' a timeless guide

Alexander Hamilton, who in 1787 attended the Constitutional Convention as an outspoken advocate for a strong national government, had definite ideas about what provisions a constitution should contain.

"Constitutions," said Hamilton, "should consist only of general provisions; the reason is that they must necessarily be permanent, and that they cannot calculate for the possible change of things."

Now, 200 years after Hamilton's cautionary remarks, the American people have launched a celebration to honor the document that Hamilton helped to develop. The truth in his warning is as vivid today as it was to those attending the convention, for the same Constitution guides — and protects — the lives and property of Americans. The Constitution remains a timeless guide.

But the remarkable blend of statesmen who kept the conventioneers on course toward a truly renowned document in the annals of mankind's design of governments tells even more of the story of forging the nation's future.

Thomas Jefferson, serving as Minister to France during the 1787 convention, wasn't present, but was sent a draft copy of the Constitution by James Madison, who would become known as "the Father of the Constitution. Jefferson sent back strong objections because of the lack of a bill of rights. As a result of Jefferson's objections, Madison introduced the 10 amendments known today as the Bill of Rights.

Madison's genius also shines brilliantly in the Constitution. He planned the system of checks and balances that regulate the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government, and provided a crucial mediating force in the often bitter arguments that rocked the convention. He resisted Hamilton's desire to strengthen the federal government at the expense of the states, a move that likely would have led to overbearing centralization, and softened Jefferson's zeal for states' rights, ensuring for the federal level the cohesive power needed to prevent fragmentization of the new nation.

The result of the convention, of course, is a living Constitution, one that meets the needs of today as well as yesterday and is the type of document Hamilton envisioned 200 years ago. It remains timeless because the freedoms it expresses for the people and the restrictions it imposes on the government ensure that this government will continue to serve man rather than becoming a ruler over him, leading to the tyranny that sparked the American Revolution and served as the basis for forming a new government.

Earlier this week, former Chief Justice Warren Burger, who stepped down from the Supreme Court to head the Constitution's bicentennial observance, helped launch what will be a summer-long celebration of the Constitution's creation and adoption.

"We the people," 200 years later, should recognize and salute the import of that event.

Reforming farming

A new international report says it plainly: The industrial countries currently waste $100 billion a year on farm subsidies. Three-quarters of the benefits go to a prosperous top quarter of farmers. These numbers won't shock anyone familiar with farm issues. What's surprising is that the governments of Japan and West Germany, previously unwilling to brook criticism of their farm lobbies, endorse that analysis.

These governments might now begin to challenge the powerful agricultural interests. That would save consumers and taxpayers billions of dollars, and make a significant dent in trade imbalances.

Crops vary, but the forces driving farm policies are depressingly similar in most industrialized economies. Rapid technological change has sharply cut the demand for unskilled rural labor and given the edge to wealthier family farmers with access to capital. Meanwhile, cheap international transportation and the growth of commercial agriculture in poor countries has left all farmers vulnerable to new sources of competition.

Well-off farmers protect their interests by lobbying their governments for subsidies and import barriers. They often cast their appeal in high moral tones — the need to help small farmers or to defend rural values. But benefits are almost always proportional to crop sales or to the amount of land farmed, and the real winners are the largest producers.

Efficient agricultural producers, including America, play this subsidy game. But the worst offenders are Japan and Western Europe, where agriculture is inherently uncompetitive. Japan remains self-sufficient in rice only by paying its farmers five or six times the world price and by denying the use of crop land for desperately needed housing. The Common Market is dumping surplus sugar on the world market at just one-fourth of production costs, impoverishing producers in the Caribbean, Central America and the Philippines.

Happily, the power of the farm lobbies seems on the wane. In Europe, subsidies to maintain the "butter mountain" have become so expensive that taxpayers are becoming restless. In America, farmers are themselves divided. Sugar and dairy lobbies cling to protection; grain producers see the greater risk in losing exports. In Japan, city dwellers are coming to understand that farm protection is both a drain on living standards and a threat to ability to export cars and computers.

That explains why the major economic powers have agreed to reassert their commitment to farm reform at the Venice summit conference in June, and then give the reforms first priority in ongoing global trade negotiations. Washington wants to cap everyone's supports at current levels, and cut them by 10 percent annually after 1988.

Five years ago that would have been unthinkable. Today, the folly of farm supports is so obvious that the unthinkable has become plausible. That's not success — but it's a start.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 31, the 151st day of 1987. There are 214 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Twenty-five years ago, on May 31, 1962, World War II Gestapo official Adolf Eichmann was hanged in Israel for his role in the Nazi Holocaust. His body was cremated, and the ashes were scattered in the Mediterranean the following day.

On this date:

In 1809, composer Franz Josef Hayden died in Vienna, Austria.

In 1819, poet Walt Whitman was born in West Hills, N.Y.

In 1889, more than 2,000 people perished when a dam break sent water rushing through Johnstown, Pa.

In 1910, the Union of South Africa was founded.

In 1913, the 17th amendment to the Constitution, which provides for the popular election of U.S. senators, was declared in effect.

In 1916, during World War I, British and German fleets fought the Battle of Jutland off Denmark.

Feds weave big bank 'security net'

WASHINGTON — Is a mushroom-shaped cloud about to mark the obliteration of the American banking system? Consider this recent observation by William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.:

Jack Anderson

"The financial area is, like nuclear war, the kind of area that can get out of control, and once out of control cannot be contained and will probably do more to upset the civilized world than about anything you can think of.

Seidman's gloomy prediction 10 days ago that 200 U.S. banks will fail this year, following close on Citibank's announcement of a minimum $2.5 billion loss on its foreign loans, may have led some Nervous Nellies to conclude that the nation's biggest bank is on the verge of collapse. Perish the thought.

Before Citibank's depositors start a run on the bank, they should realize one all-important fact: The federal government will never permit the collapse of Citibank — or any of the nation's top 10 banking institutions. Seidman's nuclear holocaust analogy is particularly apt here. The reason the government won't let a big bank fail is the same reason no national leader has permitted the use of nuclear weapons since World War II: The consequences are simply too awful to accept.

In fact, senior Treasury, Federal Reserve Board and FDIC officials contemplated just such a financial holocaust five years ago in a series of intense debates behind closed doors. The scenario they discussed was a hair-raising one indeed: the collapse, more or less simultaneously, of Citibank, Chase Manhattan and Bank of America, the nation's three biggest financial institutions.

The scenario was not all that hard to imagine in 1982 and 1983, at the height of the foreign debt crisis. Nor is it so hard to imagine today — if the federal government stood by and let it happen.

But when the officials followed the hypothetical script to its logical conclusion, what they saw was "Son of Great Depression," an economic horror that no one in his right mind would let happen if it could be prevented. They realized that the collapse of even one of the top 10 would create a real crash, not just a recession with higher interest and unemployment rates.

The attitudes the participants brought to these secret discussions of 1982-83 were interesting in their variety. Some officials were incredulous that the debate was even taking place, as if it had just been discovered that the big banks were perched on a gigantic financial fault line that no one had detected before. Some were afraid the discussion would leak to the press, shake public confidence and become a self-fulfilling prophecy of doom. And some were simply annoyed at being distracted from their growing workloads of actual problems to engage in theoretical thumbsucking.

The solution worked out by the conferees was probably inevitable, even for a conservative Republican administration ideologically dedicated to free enterprise and deregulation: The government, with its bottomless pockets, was the only institution capable of guaranteeing against the failure of one or more of the big banks. So the federal government would have to be prepared to bail them out, whatever the cost.

Banking is essentially a game of confidence, with the perception of stability almost as important as actual stability. Most banks that fail run out of depositor confidence long before they run out of money. To adapt a phrase from the bankers' old sparring partner, "that man in the White House" Franklin Roosevelt, the main thing the banks have to fear is fear itself.

So the word was spread — quietly, but where it would do the most good — that Uncle Sam stood ready to protect any big bank that found itself in serious difficulty. The top 10 or 15 were effectively declared fail-safe.

It wasn't quite fair, of course. The assurance of government protection meant the big banks could take plunges that smaller, expendable banks couldn't.

Subject to further revision, the contingency plans call for the Federal Reserve Banks to rush currency to a big bank in the throes of a run.

Preventive detention must be balancing act

WASHINGTON — It was the first day of spring, 1986, but Anthony "Fat Tony" Salerno's heart was not light. He was feeling hard-used by the government, which was indicting him on 29 counts of mail and wire fraud, extortion, conspiracy to commit murder, various gambling violations and violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), and was charging him with being "boss" of the Genovese crime family.

George F. Will

Furthermore, the government, using the Bail Reform Act of 1984, was trying to keep Salerno indoors, holding him without bail in preventive detention prior to trial. Salerno said this violated the Fifth Amendment due-process guarantee, and he got an appeals court to agree.

But now the Supreme Court has ruled against him, 6-3. So Salerno fell short of repeating the victory he won when an appeals court held that pretrial detention on the grounds of future dangerous behavior is "facially" unconstitutional as violative of due process. A facial challenge holds that no circumstances exist under which the Act could be valid.

The Act allows a federal court to detain an arrestee if, after an adversary hearing in which the arrestee is protected by a panoply of rights, the government presents convincing evidence that no condition of release will reasonably assure the safety of individuals or the community.

The appeals court sided with Salerno, saying that it is a basic principle of justice that a person's liberty may be restricted only for past actions, not anticipated future actions. But that principle is more problematic and porous than the appeals court suggests.

The appeals court acknowledged that pre-trial detention is permissible after certain kinds of probability judgments, as when a defendant is found to be likely to jeopardize the trial process by intimidating witnesses or fleeing from trial. Such findings involve anticipations of behavior, predictive judgments not different in principle or complexity from the judgment to detain someone like Salerno on the grounds of future dangerousness.

The government moved to detain Salerno after he was indicted. An indictment involves the language of probability: There is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed and that the indicted person committed it. And it is crucial to the use of the 1984 Act in this case that Salerno was indicted not just for committing a crime, or even a lot of crimes, but for being an important participant in a complicated criminal organization with a peculiar momentum that makes certain anticipations reasonable.

When the district court sided with the government against Salerno, it noted that "the activities of a criminal organization such as the Genovese family do not cease with the arrest of its principals....When business as usual involves threats, beatings and murder, the present danger such people pose in the community is self-evident." So in Salerno's case there was no capriciousness or claim of clairvoyance involved in the expectation that a member of a criminal organization will continue to further its activities.

Still, in the Supreme Court, Justices Marshall, Brennan and Stevens dissented. Marshall, joined by Brennan, argued that the 1984 Act is analogous to a hypothetical law imposing a dusk-to-dawn curfew on unemployed people because much violent crime occurs after dark and much of it is perpetrated by unemployed people. But the 1984 Act involves a narrow, rigorously regulated kind of prediction that is particularly relevant to people like Salerno (who, since this case began, has been convicted and sentenced to 100 years in prison for mob activities).

Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by White, Blackmun, Powell, O'Connor and Scalia, conceded the "general rule" that government cannot detain a person prior to a judgment of guilt in a criminal trial. But Rehnquist cites numerous exceptions when the requirements of community safety outweigh an individual's interest in liberty. These exceptions involve the exigencies of war or insurrection, certain kinds of juveniles, some aliens facing deportation proceedings, some mentally unstable individuals and, to repeat, arrestees thought likely to jeopardize the trial process.

Marshall rightly notes that there is something at least problematic about the 1984 Act's assertion that the Act shall not be "construed as modifying or limiting the presumption of innocence." But there is nothing novel about legal provisions (e.g., requirements for posting bail) that clearly proclaim that the presumption of innocence is compatible with changes in the rights of individuals as a result of arrest and indictment. That presumption must be balanced against probability judgments relevant to the community's interest in safety.

RUSSELL BAKER

Dear Diary, Nicaragua isn't on my mind!

Dear Diary: I only thought of Nicaragua 63 times today. That's pretty good, considering that just last week I was thinking of Nicaragua 100 times a day. Doc was right about my Nicaragua habit. "If Nicaragua was a cigarette," he said, "you'd have a five-pack-a-day habit."

Russell Baker

Did I mention that Doc reminds me of Thomas Mitchell, who played the doctor in "Stagecoach" who had to deliver a baby while John Wayne was being pursued by Nicaraguans?

Doc was right about Nicaragua withdrawal symptoms. Concentrating on not thinking about Nicaragua all through breakfast left me so edgy I hardly slept a wink all during the Cabinet meeting.

Question: does it make any sense having a secretary of education when we don't even have a secretary of Nicaragua? I asked Nancy about this after my afternoon nap, and she said, "There's more to life than Nicaragua, darling."

I expect that attitude toward Nicaragua from lefties and Congress, but coming from Nancy, it surprised me. Come to think of it, Nancy's name and Nicaragua both start with the same letter. But, heck, that can't mean she's less than 100 percent on Nicaragua, because look at American, which ends with the same letter Nicaragua starts with.

Phoned Howard Baker today, told him I hadn't said Nicaragua for an hour and needed somebody to say Nicaragua to, so why didn't he step into the Oval Office and join me in a song.

"What shall we sing?" he asked, entering the office like a decent freedom-loving American instead of wearing sleazy designer sunglasses like that Nicaraguan President Ortega.

I said we'd sing that wonderful old song, "Managua, Nicaragua," which was made famous, wasn't it, by the Andrew Sisters in World War II?

Howard said he didn't know the lyrics after the opening bit about the coffee and bananas and the temperature being hot in Managua, Nicaragua. So call the Andrews Sisters and ask them to refresh us on the lyric, I told him, pointing out that what was the use of being president if we couldn't ask a little favor now and then on this Nicaragua problem.

Howard reminded me I was under orders to cut back on Nicaragua and said we could talk about the Soviet Union instead, which got Nicaragua off my mind long enough for me to doze off into my afternoon nap.

Phoned Nancy after waking up and said, "Guess what: I haven't thought about Nicaragua for three hours."

She said that was because I had just taken what was known in Nicaragua as a siesta. I told her that was impossible as I will never do anything that can be accused of being Nicaraguan until the present government surrenders to the freedom fighters and accepts a new government approved by the CIA.

It turns out, according to Nancy, that a lot of Hispanic people, including Nicaraguans, take an afternoon nap but call it a siesta. No wonder Nicaragua can't turn out anything but bananas and fruitcakes like the Sandinistas.

What can you expect of people who spend the afternoon sleeping?

Notice, dear Diary, that I did not mention Nicaragua in that last sentence. It proves Doc was right when he said if I really worked at it, there'd come a time when, even when I was awake, I could go long periods without thinking of Nicaragua, and there in that sentence I did it, and it makes me feel wonderful and free and — .

Nicaragua.

No, I don't have to think Nicaragua. But even if I do think it once, that doesn't mean I'm enslaved to the habit. I can think Nicaragua whenever I want to, and then go on to think about other subjects like — .

Nicaragua.

And what if I do think Nicaragua more than some people do. It's natural for a president to think about the great problems, problems like nuclear war, global famine....

Nicaragua. Nicaragua.

... problems like America becoming a debtor nation....

Nicaragua Nicaragua Nicaragua.

Enough for tonight, dear Diario, as they probably call you in Nicaragua. Watched "Brother Rat" in an excellent print that was a gift from the Sultan of Brunei whose millions have been generously given for freedom against the Nicaraguans. My performance not bad, but that was probably because I made "Brother Rat" in 1938 before Nicaragua was discovered, so I had nothing to look worried about.

And so to Nicaragua Nicaragua Nicaragua Nicaragua....

Second-guessing military decision a risky endeavor

Modisett

Second-guessing a military decision is a risky endeavor at best. Doing it from the relative safety of a government office, where the next minute or two may not bring flaming death, can be downright asinine. That isn't, as they say, comparing apples to apples. It's more like comparing apples to boomerangs.

There's nothing wrong at all with investigating the Iraqi attack on the USS Stark in the interest of learning what happened and why. That's the surest way to prevent a recurrence of a tragic event — by pinpointing what went wrong and what caused the incident so that corrections can be made.

But anyone questioning Capt. Glenn Brindel's actions had better keep in mind that it was Brindel who was in charge of the Stark that night in the Persian Gulf, and was facing the possibility of instant death at every turn. Worse, history has shown that in the Gulf area torn by hostility, it can be difficult to distinguish friend from foe.

In a news conference Brindel noted that the Stark's sophisticated Phalanx anti-missile battery was on manual that night instead of automatic. Had it been on automatic, it would have fired on its own to knock down the incoming Exocet missiles. But the system was on manual to avoid shooting down the wrong target.

One might question Brindel's judgment for leaving the Phalanx system on manual, but it's obvious he made that decision in a compassionate gesture for the lives of any pilots that might be flying in his vicinity. After all, the United States isn't directly involved in the war there and he didn't plan on being the target of an attack. But in a war zone to not do so is to flirt with the type of disaster that occurred. There's little doubt that had other attacks been staged on American ships in the days before the attack on Brindel's ship, the system would have been left on automatic and the attack on the Stark would have turned out much differently.

That wasn't the scenario, though, and the question then became one of did Brindel react appropriately or not under the circumstances. I believe he did. Here's what happened, in his own words, when asked about the attack.

"I don't know all the facts. I feel grief and a lot of sorrow. I don't know if it's my fault...an operator's fault, or an act of God."

When he received word from a spotter that the ship was under attack, did he take proper action? Said Brindel:

"It was only a matter of a couple of seconds, as we started to take action, that the missile actually hit the ship."

Think about it. A couple of seconds doesn't leave a lot of leeway for pondering what to do. Brindel might have had time to mutter a brief prayer, but that's about all.

That's called war and even if you're not a willing party to it you can end up as a target, just as Brindel, the Stark and all the sailors on it did. Second-guessing Brindel's actions won't change anything. As any responsible person involved in a hostile action, he'll have to live with the consequences of his actions and the deaths of the sailors killed in the attack. That's an incomparably cruel judgement.

It's one I don't think Brindel deserves, considering the circumstances. What he actually deserves is the admiration of his countrymen for doing the best job possible in an unbelievably perilous situation.

• • •

This week started a celebration of the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution, that fabulous document that gives Americans their rights and freedoms, and restricts the federal government as to what it can do.

Government is important, but I think it's a little overdone in our society. Government service isn't service any longer. When it became a career, it lost a large amount of what the people attending the Constitutional Convention in 1787 intended.

Thomas Jefferson, who was not present for the convention because he was serving as Minister to France, had a notable thought on political service. He said:

"I had rather be shut up in a very modest cottage, with my books, my family and a few old friends, dining on simple bacon, and letting the world roll on as it liked than to occupy the most splendid post which any human power can give."

Personally, I think we ought to try to recapture Jefferson's spirit in regard to government service in this bicentennial year of the Constitution. It probably would mean better public and private sectors.

Arias' plan might call Sandinistas' bluff

Flora Lewis

The way things have been going, Arias points out, the Nicaraguan leaders have been getting the benefit of the doubt and the United States the onus for backing a guerrilla war. If they accept the Arias plan and refuse to apply it as promised, "it would expose them to Mexico, Argentina, Peru and all the others. Because of their ambiguity, they've been getting support all the way from the extreme left to the extreme right."

PARIS — President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica is touring European capitals with his plan to stop the war in Nicaragua. There will probably be a strong endorsement from the European Community in the next week or so, and the West German chancellor, Helmut Kohl, intends to bring it up at the seven-nation Venice summit meeting.

The timing couldn't be better, as the Iran-Contra hearings unravel the record of U.S. involvement. If President Reagan is willing to seek peace, as he has often claimed, it is just possible that the whole situation can be changed by the time Congress is due to consider aid to the Contras again in September.

There is considerable support for the Arias plan in Congress, including some Republicans. The five presidents of Central America are to meet in Guatemala in a month. There it will be seen whether Nicaragua is ready to accept the proposal "to strengthen democracy and thereby establish a firm and lasting peace in Central America," signed by the other four presidents in Costa Rica in February.

The beauty of the Arias plan is that it will clarify the issues so badly muddled by shifting U.S. policy statements and covert actions.

The main provisions are a general amnesty and "an extensive dialogue with all unarmed internal opposition groups" in all five countries within 60 days of signature of the agreement, cease-fire and an end of all military action, initiation of a "genuine pluralist democratic process" within six months in the five countries, with "complete liberty of television, radio and press" and "free, pluralistic and honest elections" on a single day in the first half of 1988, suspension of all outside military aid and a ban on using the territory of any one of the states to attack any other, negotiations on control and reduction of armaments, international supervision.

An important difference from the proposal to which Washington has given lip service as a way out of the conflict is that the Arias plan calls for a simultaneous cease-fire and start of dialogues. The United States has said that the cease-fire should only come as a result of political bargains.

Washington won't be directly involved in the Central American negotiations. But Arias is worried that the administration may try to block the plan by getting Salvador or Honduras to demand unworkable changes. That would be a shame, and it would brand the White House as clearly as anything in the hearings as the determined proponent of keeping the war going. It would also be self-defeating, not only to Washington's position in the world but to the United States' effort to show up the Sandinistas' objectives. It isn't really likely that the Nicaraguan leaders will put themselves in risk of being voted out of power. But if they do, U.S. aims to prevent consolidation of a Communist state will be achieved.

If they don't, the Sandinistas would bear full responsiblity for refusing an opportunity for peace. "We have to call their bluff," Arias said in an interview. "This is a way of telling them we want to see if you've been telling the truth for eight years about accepting real democracy. "We have to show the world where the Sandinistas stand and stop the ambiguity."

The way things have been going, Arias points out, the Nicaraguan leaders have been getting the benefit of the doubt and the United States the onus for backing a guerrilla war. If they accept the Arias plan and refuse to apply it as promised, "it would expose them to Mexico, Argentina, Peru and all the others. Because of their ambiguity, they've been getting support all the way from the extreme left to the extreme right."

Failure of the plan due to Sandinista actions would then justify "an international quarantine" policy." Arias feels convinced that it would swing the many countries that are critical of U.S. policy to the other side. But if it fails because Washington deliberately subverts it, that would let the Sandinistas off the hook and provide them with a political victory.

This is an important crossroads for Reagan internationally as well as domestically. Whatever the Iran-Contra hearings reveal about the unsavory past, it is a chance to make a constructive decision for the future. If he goes to Venice ready to tell Kohl and the others that he too supports the Arias plan, it will be a big step toward resolving the bloody Central American impasse.

Parents need to have active role in education

Your Austin correspondent, Steve Levine, sounds generous as he editorialized (Apr. 26) on the shortcomings of state politicians for reneging on their commitments to oppose a ban on state income taxes. If tax estimates are true, the average taxpayer works through April to fulfill his federal tax obligations. Levine's concern is akin to your editorial (May 3) about "...one of the most important elements of community life, the education of our young people." I agree, but education for what? Making whoopee?

The cadre of hierarchical educators who recently swarmed Austin to lobby for more tax monies make ambiguous statements, and our teachers' unions openly advocate a state income tax to pay higher salaries in their thankless task of teaching is a system financed by body count — just like our wars.

If parents are important in this increasing educational bureaucracy, our State Legislature just sent a message by voting our of committee a bill restricting post-viable abortions that eliminate parental consent for minors.

Our chairman of the Division of Cultural Studies at Midland College can set students straight on rights once declared UNalienable to every individual under our Constitutional system, when he wrote (MRT Mar. 8) that "...the precise meaning of life, liberty and property as applied to individual cases evolves through the debate of living persons."

Should the student have religious scruples, our trained political scientist at Midland College — decrying obscurantism, gently suggests (MRT Mar. 11), with an authoritarianism increasingly claimed by the state, that "...it seems more appropriate to teach religious matters at church and home, reserving the classroom for what scientists know how to teach."

Ah, science! It's adherents entice our passions with taxation while our Creator only demands love of him and obedience of His laws.

Readers' views on: Ham radio operators

Ham radio operators heroes during disasters

Every now and again, some extraordinary tragedy or event proves the resourcefulness and reliability of one small group of individuals — ham radio operators. It was proved in Lubbock, Wichita Falls, Denver City, Sweetwater, Mexico City and a thousand other places around the world where disaster struck without warning.

For 36 hours this weekend, West Texas again witnessed first-hand another example of the incalculable value of this communications service. The first word, the extent of the devastation, indeed all early information from the disaster in Saragosa, came via ham radio. More significantly, the extraordinary relief calls for ambulances, wreckers, volunteers, the Red Cross, emergency generators, jaws-of-life, even towels and blankets came through and were coordinated by a network of more than 100 loosely organized but highly disciplined ham radio operators. In fact, until well after midnight, almost four hours after the Saragosa disaster, command and control consisted not of a well-organized and specially equipped disaster team but of ham radio operators who knew what had to be done and used common sense to get it done!

Thousands of friends and relatives learned the good news, or the bad, about their loved ones in Saragosa through an ingenious interconnection of home-built ham radio equipment. The Department of Public Safety, Red Cross, news media, ambulances and hospitals all used ham radio operators for critical communications. The ham radio network worked flawlessly — in a place where public service networks couldn't.

The "heroes" of this weekend are too numerous to mention. However, a special well-done to George Toone, one of the first hams on the scene. What we all "saw" from the scene in those first hours through his "ham radio eyes" were the clearest, most accurate pictures of human tragedy and total destruction.

George — is blind.

Ham radio is considered a "hobby" and most of the time it is. But on those occasions when the chips are down, the discipline, common sense and ability to perform in an emergency makes ham radio more a natural resource than a hobby.

73 (Best regards) and well done.

Courageous 'hams' deserve our thanks

As threatening as the weather has been over the past week, we have listened closely to the weather band on our home radio.

We have been listening to all of the ham radio operators reporting in as they drive into the various areas of possible disaster. They are deliberately putting themselves and their vehicles into the paths of these severe circumstances so as to keep the general public alerted. They do it to give all of us the earliest possible warning, to tell it like it is, so to speak.

We don't know any of these courageous people. Some of them had been up all the night before working down in the Saragosa disaster area and were exhausted.

We're grateful to these wonderful people. We would like to express our thanks to them and the thanks of all of the other folks who, if they knew what these people were doing, would want to join us.

U.S. will be sailing fine line between war, peace

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — We face a fateful situation in the Persian Gulf. In the wake of the purportedly mistaken Iraqi missile attack that killed 37 American seamen on the little U.S. frigate Stark, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said: "We are not at war, but we are not at peace."

Now that we are about to place 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers under U.S. registry, flying the Stars and Stripes from their mastheads, and put them under command of American captains with our naval forces under presidential orders to shoot if fired on, we will be sailing a fine line between peace and warlike hostilities in the most dangerous trouble spot in the world.

The White House professes confidence Iran will not dare attack the American-protected Kuwait tankers because of fear of what the Pentagon has warned would be heavy retaliation.

After Washington announced the Kuwaiti tankers would sail under the American flag, Iran Parliament Speaker Rafsanjani promised one of those flags would be captured and brought to Tehran. So whether we become involved in war in the Persian Gulf may depend on whether sanity prevails in Khomeini's fanatically irrational regime.

Assistant Secretary of State Richard W. Murphy told a news conference last week that if Iran attacks ships flying the American flag there will be a "risk" of war between the U.S. and Iran. President Reagan reserved judgment and said he did not believe Iran would attack. So we have a difference of judgment between the White House and the State Department on whether an attack on American-protected Kuwaiti tankers could lead to war with Iran.

Frankly, I am not keen about the American flag flying on these Kuwaiti ships, even if they have been placed under U.S. registry and captained by an American. Iran might still consider them Kuwaiti ships. I would prefer that we protect them with our own warships and air coverage. That is what we will be doing in any case. If our naval and air forces are not capable of intercepting an Iran missile before it hits the camouflaged Kuwait tanker, at least it will not be American seaman killed thus precipitating retaliation that could lead to war with Iran.

I do understand the need for American naval presence in the Persian Gulf and for allied protection of Kuwait and other friendly nations' tankers. This is especially imperative since our apparent bungling enabled the Soviets to be the first to make a deal with Kuwait to escort some of its tankers.

According to John Wallach, our foreign affairs editor, the Kuwait government approached both Moscow and Washington last year about protecting its tankers, many of which have been sunk or hit by Iranian attacks. We dallied and it was only after Washington learned the Soviets had made a ship protection deal with Kuwait that we decided to do likewise.

If we pulled out of the Persian Gulf or refused to protect Kuwait tankers, the Soviet Union would soon become the dominant power in the Gulf, capable of controlling the flow of oil to Western Europe and Japan. Averting that danger has led every American president since Dwight Eisenhower to declare the Persian Gulf of vital strategic importance to our security.

What does strike me as outrageous is the unwillingness of our European allies to cooperate more effectively in protecting freedom of navigation in the Persian Gulf. Britain maintains two or three warships on patrol there and the French maintain about 12 warships in the Indian Ocean. But when Secretary Weinberger appealed to the NATO allies Tuesday for any assistance they could give to help us protect the movement of oil tankers in the Gulf, The New York Times reported the reaction was cool.

Western Europe gets 35 percent of its oil supplies from the Persian Gulf. We get less than 5 percent. Japan gets nearly 60 percent. However, at our insistence, the Japanese Constitution prohibits Japan's defense forces from being militarily active beyond a certain range, which includes the Persian Gulf. Nevertheless, Japan could help by buying less oil from Iran.

As for the European NATO allies, they might be more disposed to help us protect the Persian Gulf if we warned that otherwise we would have to transfer some of our forces protecting Europe to help us keep the oil supply route open and prevent the Persian Gulf from becoming, in effect, a Soviet Sea.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Video production preserves local black, Hispanic history

By H. A. TUCK

Several Midland College departments have completed a two-year project preserving the memories of Hispanic and black residents in Midland.

Tuck

What began as an oral history of several residents turned into a full-blown, 30-minute video production.

Dr. Will Morris, chairman of the Cultural Studies Division, was asked to help record some of the oldtimers who frequent Casa de Amigos by his wife, Judy, who works at Casa.

Morris then asked history instructor Jack Scannell to assist. After recording hundreds of hours of recollections, they asked the Media Center to help with photographing the subjects and editing the tapes.

Then four employees — Charlotte Kellogg, Lula Lee, James Fuller and Ricardo Saldana — were enlisted to speak the words of the pioneers, since the original recordings weren't always of good quality.

Next came narration by Mike McLaren to tie all the interviews together and a masterful editing job by Charlotte Kellogg.

The video now is available for presentation to local clubs and organizations. Booking will be handled by Casa de Amigos. The complete original tapes are in the MC archives.

Partial funding for the project was provided by Community National Bank and the Texas Historical Commission.

Classes for the first summer session begin Monday, along with one week of late registration. Those who didn't register Thursday should come to the Student Services Office in the Administration Building this week.

Hours are 7 a.m.-8 p.m. through Thursday. The first summer session ends on July 7.

EDUCATION

Quinn Carroll, director of the Radiography program, has been elected Second Vice President of the Texas Society of Radiologic Technologists.

Carroll was elected at the TSRT annual convention in Houston, where he also presented a lecture on "Back to Basics in Skull Radiography."

Monday is the final day for students seeking federal financial aid or grants for the fall semester to make application. This includes students seeking Pell Grants or College Work-Study assistance.

The Pell Grant is a direct payment for students from low-income families. The Work-Study program, also for low-income students, provides payments from the federal government and local funds for students who work on campus. They are allowed to work up to 15 hours per week. There are quite a number of work-study jobs available at MC.

Those interested should visit with Bill Burns in the Student Services Office, Administration Building.

• • •

MC's chapter of SIFE (Students In Free Enterprise) won "Rookie of the Year" honors for its division at SIFE's annual meeting recently in Memphis, Tenn. There were 159 college and university SIFE chapters represented. MC attended the convention as the Texas state champion. Some 50 business executives served as judges for the competition, which was based on overall chapter performance.

Students attending were Alisa Johnson, Gilley Estes, William F. Blake and George Galindo. Their chapter advisors are Janice Hastings, business instructor, and Dr. Jerry Jones, chairman of the Business Studies Division.

• • •

There were lots of smiles last week when several long-time MC employees received invitations to the hooding ceremonies at the Texas Tech Medical Center for new physicians. Among those receiving their hoods will be Arnulfo (Nuffie) Carrasco, MD, of Kermit. Nuffie came to MC on a Top Five Percent Scholarship and was a trainer for the basketball team. He then went to Tech on a Fasken Scholarship.

Nuffie has completed his residency in obstetrics/gynecology, so we might have to start calling him "Doctor Nuffie!" An older brother, Arnaldo (Bear), and two sisters, Arleen and Arcilia, also have been at MC and two more brothers are scheduled to arrive here this fall.

• • •

Continuing Education courses starting this week include: Aerobic Dancing, Judo, Photographic Safari, Pottery I, and Study Skills Clinic. You also can enroll either for credit or without credit in Calculating Machines, Introduction to Business, and Beginning Typing.

Visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday to register.

Additional information is available by calling 685-4518.

• • •

A free seminar on "Long Term Nursing Home Care — Who Pays the Bills?" is scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday in the college's Health Sciences Building lecture hall. Conducting the seminar will be John and Shirley Hanson. Sponsors are MC, Midland/Odessa Health Retirement Endeavor and Midland Presbyterian Homes.

FOCUS to meet Tuesday

From Staff Reports

A community-wide meeting of Midlanders who are "very concerned about the quality of education" of youths will be held at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday under the sponsorship of the education committee of Federated Organizations of Concerned Citizens United to Service (FOCUS).

Midland Independent School District board members and MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi are to participate in the meeting in the Midland Federation of Black Women's Club Building at 1700 E. Wall Ave., according to James Fuller, president of the Midland Branch of the NAACP and FOCUS board member.

"The primary objective of FOCUS is to address issues that impact east Midland," said Fuller.

Midland's east side is predominantly minority — black and Mexican-American.

"The citizens of east Midland, to put it candidly, are very concerned about the quality of education of their young people now as well as in the future," said Fuller, who is a Midland College instructor. "And their concern is shared with the remainder of Midland."

In part, the meeting is to explore the controversial court-ordered single-member-district method of electing board members, Fuller said. In addition, the meeting is to seek out and explore "explanations of long-range goals" of the school system and how the MISD board is confronting problems in education.

In a letter to the MISD board, FOCUS Interim Chairman Rev. J.L. Williams said that FOCUS is "looking forward to sitting down with you to explore common interests and concerns about education and educating the young."

Williams is pastor of the Greater New Hope Baptist Church in Midland.

FOCUS membership includes The Midland Federation of Black Women's Clubs, which is made up of more than 15 organizations; the NAACP; fraternities and sororities; the Black Advisory Council, the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, the Black Coalition of Texas Democrats, and the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc.

NEW NON-SURGICAL TREATMENT CAN ELIMINATE UNSIGHTLY LEG VEINS

Until recently, the only alternatives available to men and women suffering from unsightly varicose veins or spider veins has been surgery or to keep their legs forever covered with slacks or heavy stockings.

Now, a new technique has been developed that can eliminate varicose and spider vein problems within a few weeks. And, no surgery is required.

Originally perfected in Europe, compression scleral therapy is currently available on a very limited basis in the Southwest.

Basically, the procedure consists of a series of injections around the problem areas. Once injected, you will be required to wear compression wraps for three weeks. And, for this same period, your wraps will be changed and your progress will be monitored during weekly office visits.

No time off work is required, no interruption of your daily routine, other than wearing the wraps and adhering to a mild exercise program.

According to European and Canadian medical specialists, the new procedure is actually the preferred treatment for varicosities because surgery removes possible donor-veins that may be needed for future cardiac by-pass procedures.

If you are self-conscious about unsightly leg vein blemishes, a consultation with a board-certified plastic surgeon who offers compression scleral therapy is the first step you should take in eliminating this problem from your life.

Free Fitness Fair planned at Martin County facility

STANTON — A Fitness Fair will be held 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at the Martin County Community Center in Stanton.

The fair is free and open to the public. The Jaycees will be raising money by sponsoring a six—mile walk beginning at 8 a.m. and the Grady Young Homemakers will be selling burritos and other items to help fund local projects. A blood drive sponsored by Martin County Hospital will be held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Free health testing will include:

- Allison Cancer Center — risk screening for cancer
- Audio Acoustics — hearing test
- Martin County Emergency Medical Service — blood pressure/cardiovascular
- Sheets Eye Clinic — glaucoma testing

For women interested in mammogram testing, Women's and Children's Hospital in Odessa will have their van in Stanton to do this test at a cost of $50.

Informational booths will cover the following areas of interest: diabetes, heart diease, air ambulances, alcohol and drug abuse, height and weight, well baby checks, diet and nutrition, mental health, health careers, dental health, kidney disease, the Lions Club Eye Bank, exercise equipment, Alzheimers disease, safety/first-aid and flexibility.

Flea market, barbecue to be held

McCAMEY — The Annual McCamey Chamber of Commerce Flea Market and Barbecue will be held Saturday at Santa Fe Park in McCamey. The flea market will be held from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Booths rentals are $10 each, with the chamber furnishing large tables for booths. Space can be reserved by calling the chamber office at 652-8202.

The barbecue will be cooked and served by the Chamber of Commerce. Entertainment and activities during the day will include music, Kim Porter's Twirling and Dancing group, horse-shoe pitching, and volleyball.

Participants should bring chairs and folding tables, if staying for lunch. Booths will be assembled between 7:30 a.m. and 8 a.m., and selling will begin at 9 a.m.

STORY TIME

A two-story addition makes a lot of sense for a homeowner who needs to add more than one room to his home. First, a two-story addition will cost a bit less than a one-story addition with the same amount of floor space. By going up instead of out, there are savings on foundations, outside walls, and even the roof. This can add up to saving money on materials and labor. Another advantage to a two-story addition is that it takes up less land. This can be an important consideration for building on a small lot or one with zoning restrictions. Lastly, a two-story addition need not be discarded simply because it is to be added to a one-story home. Many outstanding additions consist of a living room on the first floor, and a master bedroom suite on the second.

If you're planning on an addition, it's also a perfect time to redo the rest of the house with reliable Alside steel siding. Alside has a lifetime warranty. The first step in adding on to a home is a trip to the local building inspector to be sure that enough land is available on the lot.

Texas motorist killed

GILMER (AP) — An intense manhunt was under way Saturday night in East Texas after a hitchhiker shot and killed a motorist who stopped to pick him up, police said.

David Ryan, 29, of Pittsburg was shot about 10 a.m. Saturday by a man he had picked up on Texas Highway 300 during a drive from Pittsburg to Longview, Upshur County Sheriff Dale Jewkes said.

The shooting occurred about a quarter of a mile after Ryan and his 25-year-old brother Billy picked the man up, Jewkes said.

Non-legislator wins columnist's vote for 'worst lawmakers' list

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Levine

AUSTIN — Rumor has it around here that Texas Monthly is going to break with tradition and place a non-legislator — specifically Gov. Bill Clements — on its list of the 10 worst lawmakers in the 70th Legislature.

Even using TM's selection standards, I couldn't think of a better choice to top the list.

Unlike some capitol columnists, TM ignores philosophy when it picks its 10 best and 10 worst list every two years. Power — it's use and abuse — earns legislators a spot on the TM parade.

Now I don't know if the Clements rumor is true. It doesn't matter. It should be. No one has blundered more than the governor who was supposed to "hit the ground running," rub out the "status quo" and lead Texas out of her economic doldrums. Those few successes he can claim come on issues where others — notably House Speaker Gib Lewis — has taken the lead. Clements' own legislative program is in shambles. And it's not because the Democrat-controlled Legislature rebuffed his proposals on a partisan basis. Clements' plans just couldn't stand up on their own.

Take, for example, the budget. From the day he introduced his $36.9 billion spending plan for 1988-1989, the governor has insisted "the budget is up." He ran around the state crying "87 times two plus 2 percent."

But the numbers didn't add up. The financing plan Clements proposed fell $1.3 billion short of the spending he advocated. He refused to admit that lawmakers had used nearly half a billion dollars they would never have again when they wrote the 1987 budget.

"Truth-squad" senators used the analogy of the family that sells its TV to pay its April rent and obviously doesn't have the TV around again to raise the dough for May's payments. That simple logic never made it through Clements' obstinant skull.

Instead, the governor practiced management by denial. Confronted with the fact that his education proposals fell $100 million short of meeting expected increases in enrollment, Clements said they don't. Told that his child welfare budget would kick thousands off the rolls or reduce the already stingy state grants to Scrooge-like depths, Clements said it wouldn't.

If the governor really wanted to set spending at those levels he should have owned up to the consequences and justified them. "Sure, we're going to raise local property taxes 5 to 6 percent, but the Texas economy can't afford anymore state taxes," he could have said. "Of course we're going to decimate human services, but we don't have any money for poor folks," he could have said.

Even when he had done his arithmetic, he hadn't done his homework. GOP Rep. Gerald Geistweidt of Mason, probably the most fiscally conservative member of the Legislature, presented Clements' plan on changing bank taxes to the House Ways and Means Committee. Aware that it was going to get laughed off the planet, Geistweidt snuck away from the room before the committee killed the bill on a 7-1 vote.

Then there were Clements' education plans: cut the no-pass, no-play "penalty" from six weeks to three; scrap the teacher career ladder plan; improve vocational education by slashing it's funding. So far, lawmakers have proposed a study of no-pass, no-play, beefed up the career ladder and maintained vo-ed spending.

Of course, we've got the governor's vaunted, business-honed leadership skills. Six weeks ago he seemed finally ready to acknowledge reality and lead the way toward a tax reform plan that would bring equity to one of the most unfair state tax systems in the country and raise at least some of the necessary revenues.

By the time Clements cratered to partisan Republican pressure three days later — with a lame "we don't have enough time" excuse — the governor had taken all of the wind out of any legislative attempt to balance the budget.

And let's not forget his creativity. Clements surprised legislators, the public and his own staff last week by announcing that his budget has enough money in it to give state employees a 2-percent pay raise. "He keeps forgetting to say, 'If there's enough money,'" one disgruntled gubernatorial staffer said.

Matter of fact, Clements can be the 10 worst all by himself.

HOW THEY VOTED

Senators vote to dealy sanctions on employers

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Votes of Texas senators on a key issue during the week ending May 29.

No key votes were taken in the House last week.

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate votes to delay employers' sanctions. The Senate May 28 approved, 47-43, a four-month delay in the enforcement of sanctions against employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens. The employers' penalties were part of a sweeping immigration reform law enacted last year.

The four-month delay will postpone enforcement of penalties against employers hiring illegal aliens until Oct. 1, giving the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) more time to educate employers about the new law. The employer-sanctions section of the immigration act was slated to begin June 1. INS, however, said it didn't plan to begin issuing citations until July 1.

The provision was tacked onto a $9.4 billion supplemental appropriations bill, which the Senate is expected to complete work on this week. Once the Senate's spending bill is passed, it will go to a House-Senate conference, where the future of the employer-sanctions delay section is uncertain. The House on April 23 passed a $9 billion supplemental spending bill without a similar provision.)

Administration officials have strongly opposed any delay in implementation of the immigration reform law.

Supporters of the delay in employer sanctions claimed that INS needs more time to promote its nationwide campaign to inform employers about the requirements of the new law. "INS is not prepared," said Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., chief supporter of the delay. "Is it not good common sense and good government to extend this four months?"

Opponents argued that a delay would create disruptions in enforcement of the immigration law's provisions and would send the wrong signal to employers and employees. "That signal will be, 'Keep coming illegally because we really are not serious about control, because we have set back employer sanctions,'" said Sen. Alan K. Simpson, chief sponsor of the new immigration law.

Voting for the employer-sanctions delay: Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Voting against: Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Cheerleading clinics planned

From Staff Reports

The city of Midland Recreation Division and Dawn Fortner, owner of Top of Texas Fitness Center of Lubbock, will offer two six-week cheerleading clinics for junior high and high school boys and girls.

There will be one-hour classes offered each Thursday from 10 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. at the Parks and Recreation Gym.

Classes will be grouped by age and limited to 20 per class.

The first session will run June 11 through July 16. The second session runs from July 23 to August 27.

Fee is $30 per session. For additional information, call the Parks and Recreation Department at 683-4281, Ext. 317.

Book drive to begin at Delwood

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Friends of the Library semi-annual book drive will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday at Delwood Mall.

Donations may be dropped off at site, located behind the Kelly-Moore Paint Store.

Mary Mann, who's heading up the semi-annual drive, said the Friends already have collected about 10,000 books since last December.

But that doesn't come close the numbers donated for last year's book sale, she said.

Ms. Mann said a variety of literature is needed, including paperbacks, hard-cover fiction, biographies, mysteries, children's books, westerns, science-fiction and encyclopedias.

Gardening, cookbooks, records, puzzles and tapes also are in demand.

The annual book sale will be Oct. 8-11 at the Midland County Exhibit Building.

All proceeds will go to benefit the Midland County Library.

Bednarski runs to easy Tall Town 10,000 victory

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Just when former University of Texas-El Paso standout John Bednarski is rounding back into form, it looks as if he'll be leaving the Permian Basin.

But before Bednarski makes the inevitable move to Albuquerque, he may have a few more races to win.

Saturday, at the 7th Annual Tall Town 10,000, Bednarski ran away with the overall title in an age-group record 32:42, but more than half a minute off therecord pace of 32:06 set last year by Ralph Edwards.

An Odessan, Bednarski, 38, was nearly a minute faster than the next quickest runner, visiting Thom Trimble of Lafayette, Calif. Brian Bonner, the next closest area runner was 2:50 back at 35:32.

"With Ralph gone, there really isn't much competition here anymore," said Bednarski, who ran most of the race by himself. "Probably the best runner around is David Felice and he's a fireman and can't always come out to run as much."

With Bednarski's Tall Town win coupled with a win in the Run for the Arts earlier this month, he could make a sweep of the area's top road races — if he were to stay here long enough.

But he talked Saturday of "moving to Albuquerque soon. I don't know exactly when, but it looks like it will happen soon."

Without the London native, that could leave the field in future Tall City road races wide open.

IT WAS a pair of out-of-towners that dominated the women's 10,000 meter run, also on Saturday. Helen O'Sullivan of San Angelo's Goodfellow Air Force Base, captured the overall women's title in 39:06.

O'Sullivan was born in Chicago but raised in Ireland and only returned to the States to join the Air Force.

"I've only run a little cross country when I was in school. We just run on our off time around the base," O'Sullivan said.

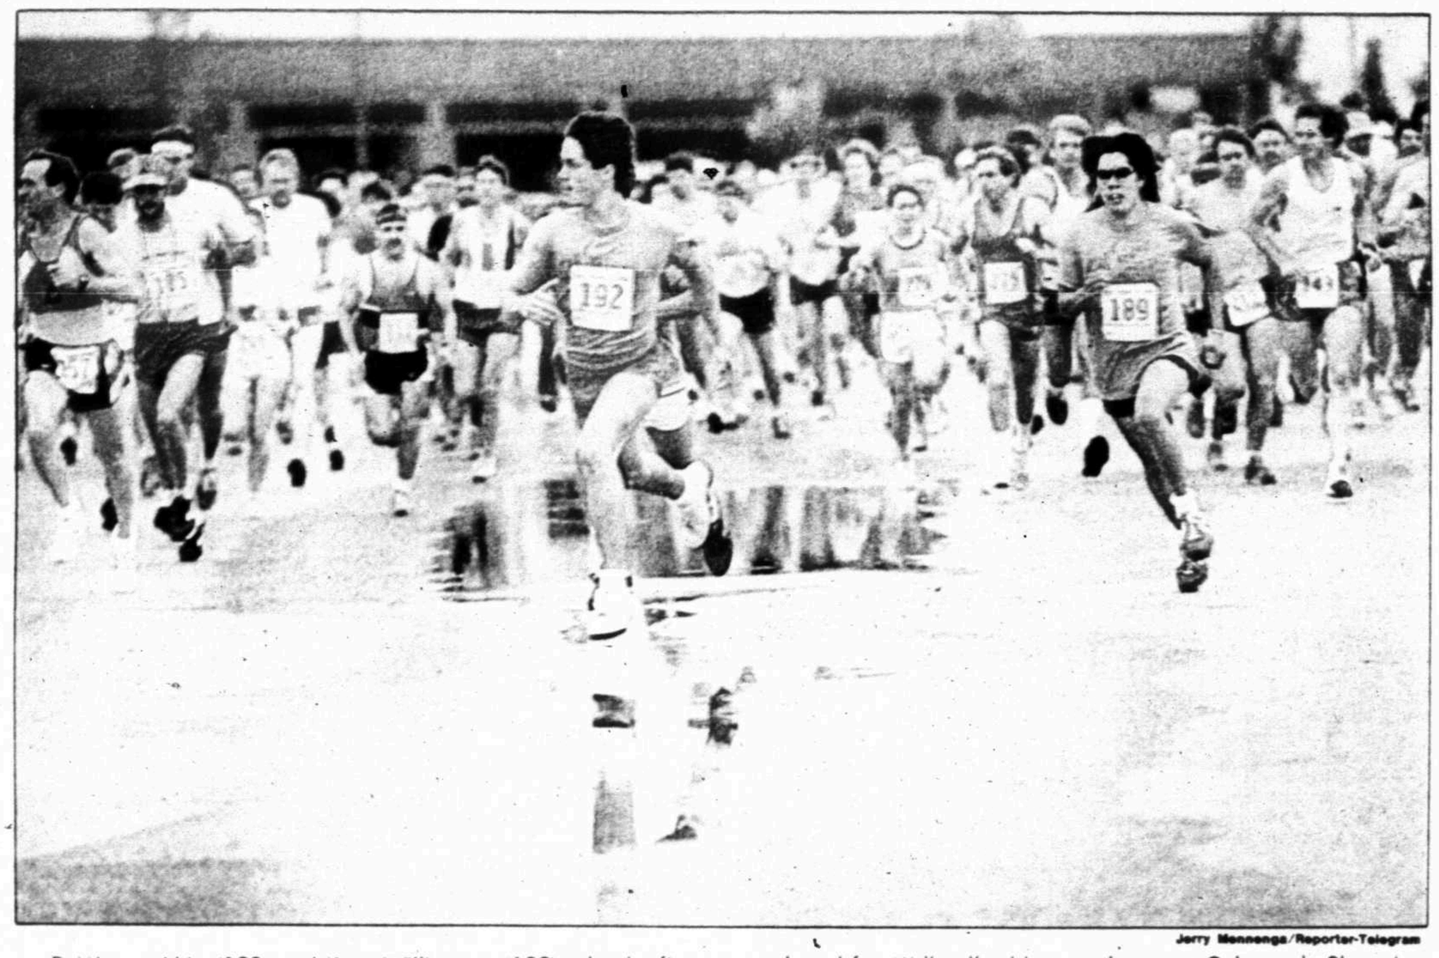

And with a victory in her first 10K attempt, she expects to compete in quite a few more races this season.

ALSO MAKING news in the women's division, was 14-year-old Mandy Malouf of Levelland, who shattered the 19 and under Tall Town record with a 42:15. Malouf ran track and cross country in junior high and can look forward to an outstanding high school career.

In the two-mile Tall Town run, Midland finally came away with a winner. Bob Jones, director of the Central YMCA, said he was just testing the waters in a shorter race "to see what would happen." What happened was Jones was first across the tape in 10:03, just seven seconds off the race record 9:56, but good enough for an age group mark.

Seven age group records and two overall records fell in the combined two-mile and 10K

Please see 10K, Page 5C

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

DeWayne Altis, (192) and Kory Williamson (189) take the first curve in Saturday's Tall Town 10,000. More than 300 runners gathered for Midland's oldest road race at Colonnade Shopping Center. Odessa's John Bednarski won the race in 32:42.

Brady's single caps Angel rally in ninth

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Left-handed hitting Brian Brady punched a single through the left side to drive home the winning run with one out in the bottom of the ninth as the Midland Angels scored a 4-3 come-from-behind win over San Antonio in the opener of their Texas League series Saturday night.

Some 1,606 fans showed up at Angels Stadium, not bad for a bleak night that could have served as a setting for a Frankenstein or vampire movie. They were rewarded for their dogged loyalty as Brady's hit plated John Hotchkiss, who had opened the ninth with a single, and moved to second on Edwin Marquez' bunt single.

"He (Jack Savage, the Dodgers' ace reliever) had two strikes on me and I was looking for a fastball low and away," said Brady, "and that's what I got."

MIDLAND, BEHIND 3-1 since the second inning, tied it on Stan Holmes' two-run single in the eighth. Holmes greeted Savage, who had relieved starter Mike Schweighoffer with two out after a single by Doug Jennings and walk to Ty VanBurkleo, with a liner into the left field corner. However, he was an easy out going for two as leftfielder Alonso Tellez rifled the ball to Juan Bustadad at second.

"I was just looking for something I could hit," Holmes said of the blow that gave him 36 RBI for the season.

Neither starter was around at the end for a decision in this pitching duel.

Savage, 3-3, took the loss and Miquel Garcia notched his first win of the season with 2⅔ innings of hitless relief.

Detroit's Isiah Thomas (11) grabs the arm of Boston's Kevin McHale as they go after a rebound in the seventh game of their Eastern Conference Final Saturday in Boston Garden.

Celtics face heat of seventh game

BOSTON (AP) — Seventh-game pressure and sweltering heat could not wilt the Boston Celtics Saturday.

The Celtics, who have lost only twice in 15 seventh-game playoff appearances at home, shook off the effects of temperatures in the upper 80s in Boston Garden and beat the Detroit Pistons 117-114 in the NBA's Eastern Conference finals.

"Yes, it was very hot out there," said Larry Bird, who, playing the entire game, had 37 points, nine rebounds and nine assists for the Celtics. "I wish this was the end, but it's just another step."

"We had the luxury of a lot of TV timeouts," Celtics Coach K.C. Jones said. "The heat took its toll, but we were still fresh."

The victory kept alive Boston's hopes of a repeat title, a feat that hasn't been accomplished in the NBA since the Celtics did it in 1969. They will meet the Los Angeles Lakers, who completed a four-game sweep of the Seattle SuperSonics last Monday in the Western Conference finals, in the first game of the championship series Tuesday night at Inglewood, Calif.

With their heart-stopping victory the Celtics ran their record to 13-2 in seventh games at home, with the only losses coming in 1973 against the New York Knicks and 1982 against Philadelphia, both times in Eastern Conference finals.

Boston is also 84-2 in its last 86 games at Boston Garden, but the latest win over the Pistons, who have lost 18 straight games at Boston Garden since Dec. 19, 1982, did not come easily.

THE GAME was tied 99-99 after Joe Dumars, who scored a career-high 35 points, hit a basket with 4:18 remaining. The Celtics then took five straight shots on their next possession, but got the rebound each time.

NBA Playoffs

Danny Ainge, who scored nine points in the final 3:05 and finished with 18, then hit a 3-pointer to put the Celtics ahead to stay.

"Danny's 3-pointer set it off," Jones said. "Then the fans started to hoot and really got us going. Some teams would see a missed shot and drop back on defense. None of our guys stopped going after the ball."

"It was the most dramatic moment of the game," Detroit Coach Chuck Daly said. "Our plan was not to give up second shots."

"We went after every rebound and got some lucky bounces, but we were hustling out there," Bird said of the sequence that ended with Ainge's 3-pointer. "After three or four misses, you always think the next shot is going in."

Detroit, which won all three of its home games in the series, was trying to become the first team ever to beat the Celtics after falling behind them 2-0. The Celtics are now 27-0 after winning the first two games of a best-of-seven playoff.

Despite losing Adrian Dantley, their leading scorer in the series, to a concussion late in the third period, the Pistons battled Boston closely all the way.

"It was a big play," Bird said of Dantley's collision with teammate Vinnie Johnson. "They lost one of their big scorers. That really hurt them."

AFTER BOSTON'S five offensive rebounds, the teams traded baskets until the final minute, when Ainge hit another long jumper for a 108-105 margin with 25 seconds remaining. Detroit then desperately after Dant-

Pre-race prediction: Alysheba 'Crowned'

Williamson

In less than a week at the Belmont Stakes, Alysheba, owned by Midland's Dorothy Scharbauer and daughter Pamela, will become the first Triple Crown winner since Affirmed turned the trick in 1978.

At least someone is on record of making that prediction. No matter what Alysheba does, his critics seem to mount with every race.

To be quite frank, Alysheba isn't exactly loved by the national press. "He's too slow to be a great champion." "He isn't in the class with Affirmed." "Alysheba doesn't have the test of time behind him." Those are some of the things we've been reading over the past weeks.

It all started before the Kentucky Derby. Alysheba had few critics before that race. He hadn't won enough (twice) to even be considered a major threat.

However, the Derby was Alysheba's second start since he underwent surgery March 24 to correct a breathing problem. In his first race after the operation he finished first in the Blue Grass Stakes April 23 at Keeneland, but was disqualified and placed third for interfering with Leo Castelli.

The Derby victory proved that Alysheba's problems were of a physical nature, but those problems had been corrected through surgery.

But Alysheba's critics increased after the Derby, saying that the slow-starting horse couldn't win at a shorter distance, which the Preakness presented.

The national horns sounded for Bet Twice in the Preakness. Most writers felt that Bet Twice was particularly well suited to the distances of the Preakness, which ran at a mile and three-sixteenths instead of the mile and a quarter of the Derby.

Alysheba, however, passed that test too. He won as he did in the Derby — by coming from behind and scaring us all.

Well, he scared us all except Clarence Scharbauer Jr., who said, "I wasn't concerned when he got behind early because he is a horse that comes off the pace. He has a lot of heart. This horse is a champion."

And now with two-thirds of the Triple Crown in his hip pocket, Alysheba still has his critics.

Alysheba raced in the Derby and Preakness on Lasix, a diuretic given to horses who bleed, and Butazolodin, an anti-inflammatory medication.

Alysheba qualified for the Maryland Lasix Program at the Preakness because he had a California Bleeder's Certificate dated March 15 and signed by the official veterinarian for the California Horse Racing Board.

Horses can not race on any medication in New York, the site of the June 6 Belmont Stakes, the final race in the Triple Crown.

But Alysheba trainer Jack Van Berg says that the horse was put on the medication only as a precautionary measure. He contends that the Lasix is used to help Alysheba keep his bladder empty.

"It's hard to race with a full bladder," said Van Berg. "But saying he can't run without it is pure crap."

Other writers have even had enough gall to take shots at jockey Chris McCarron, saying that he is "injured goods and may have trouble with his reflexes in tight situations."

McCarron explained that he didn't even expect to be involved in the Triple Crown series after breaking his left leg in a five-horse spill at Santa Anita last Oct. 16.

He didn't return to action until March 12, and he still rides with a metal plate in his leg, attached with 11 screws.

He thanked the Scharbauers and Van Berg for giving him the mount, "not knowing I would be 100 percent when the Kentucky Derby was run."

And if anyone has proven his ability, it's McCarron.

Jimmy Croll, trainer of Bet Twice admitted that if his horse had won the Kentucky Derby, he would have been disqualified after contact between Bet Twice and Alysheba occurred in what has become known as the "Demolition Derby."

Bet Twice lugged out into Alysheba's path during the stretch run, and Alysheba clipped his heels and almost fell. McCarron said he thought he was going to go over the colt's head.

Somehow Alysheba recovered and, after being checked twice more by Bet Twice, won by three-quarters of a length. McCarron was a master after that race.

Clarence Scharbauer Jr. said, "McCarron has done everything you could hope for in a jockey. He's a great young Christian man and we're happy that he's the one that has a chance to bring us the Triple Crown. What more could you ask of a person."

Despite the critics, the owners, trainer, jockey and Alysheba have done what it takes to be a Triple Crown winner. And it won't be a second rate title as some have suggested. We have a group with history in its grasp.

And it doesn't hurt anything to have a little luck along the way — and that's where Clarence Scharbauer III comes in.

Clarence saw his first Kentucky Derby when he was eight years old when his grandfather Fred Turner Jr. won the title in 1959 with Tomy Lee. He saw his second Derby this year when his mother and sister won with Alysheba. He's seen only one Preakness race and Alysheba won. Now he makes his first trip to the Belmont Stakes as the family's good luck charm. Not even Jimmy "The Greek" would bet against those odds.

Bednarski runs to easy Tall Town 10,000 victory

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Just when former University of Texas-El Paso standout John Bednarski is rounding back into form, it looks as if he'll be leaving the Permian Basin.

But before Bednarski makes the inevitable move to Albuquerque, he may have a few more races to win.

Saturday, at the 7th Annual Tall Town 10,000, Bednarski ran away with the overall title in an age-group record 32:42, but more than half a minute off therecord pace of 32:06 set last year by Ralph Edwards.

An Odessan, Bednarski, 38, was nearly a minute faster than the next quickest runner, visiting Thom Trimble of Lafayette, Calif. Brian Bonner, the next closest area runner was 2:50 back at 35:32.

"With Ralph gone, there really isn't much competition here anymore," said Bednarski, who ran most of the race by himself. "Probably the best runner around is David Felice and he's a fireman and can't always come out to run as much."

With Bednarski's Tall Town win coupled with a win in the Run for the Arts earlier this month, he could make a sweep of the area's top road races — if he were to stay here long enough.

But he talked Saturday of "moving to Albuquerque soon. I don't know exactly when, but it looks like it will happen soon."

Without the London native, that could leave the field in future Tall City road races wide open.

IT WAS a pair of out-of-towners that dominated the women's 10,000 meter run, also on Saturday. Helen O'Sullivan of San Angelo's Goodfellow Air Force Base, captured the overall women's title in 39:06.

O'Sullivan was born in Chicago but raised in Ireland and only returned to the States to join the Air Force.

"I've only run a little cross country when I was in school. We just run on our off time around the base," O'Sullivan said.

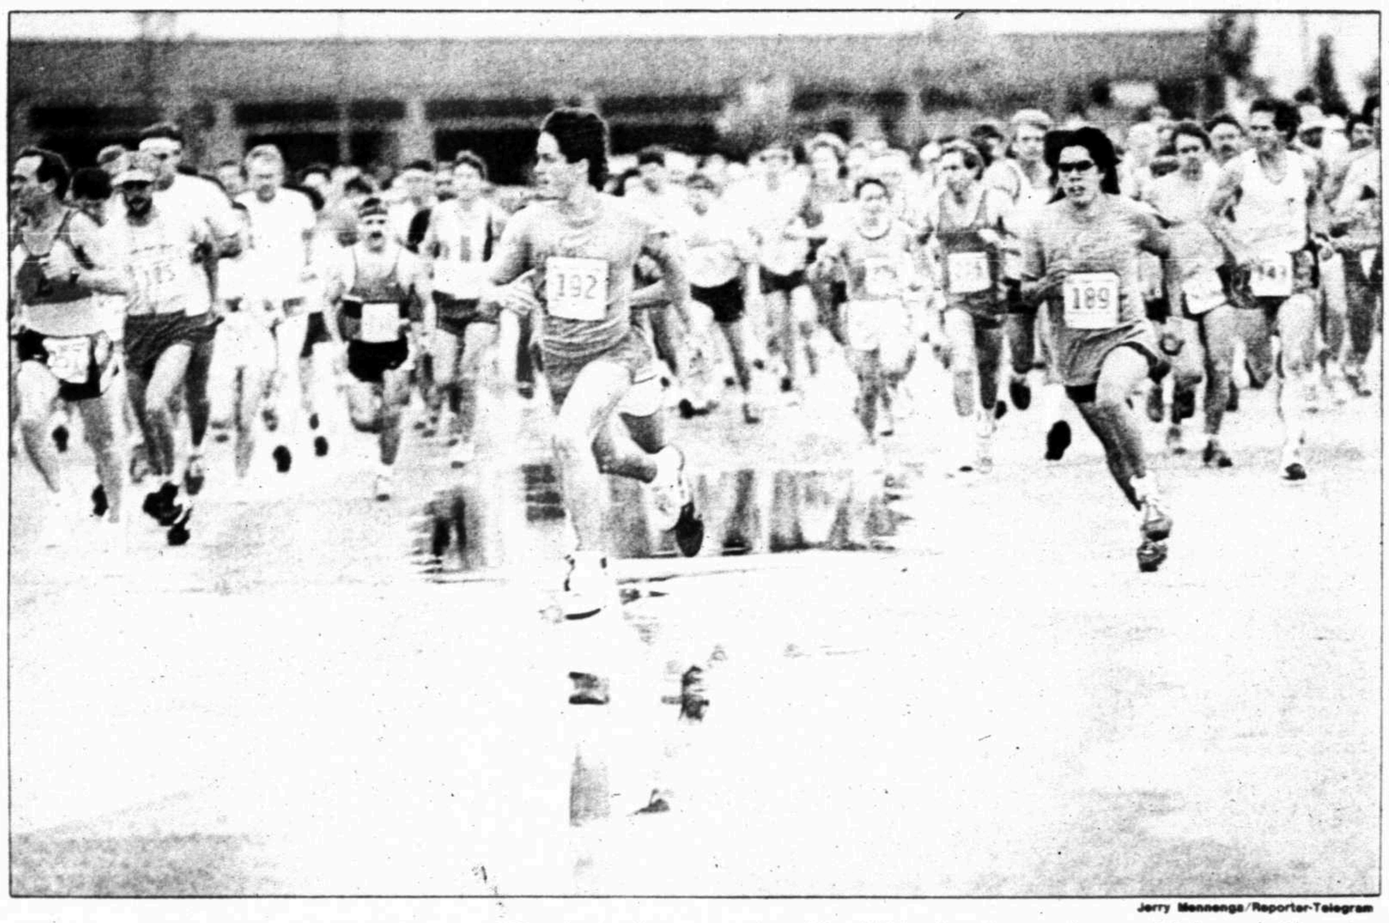

And with a victory in her first 10K attempt, she expects to compete in quite a few more races this season.

ALSO MAKING news in the women's division, was 14-year-old Mandy Malouf of Levelland, who shattered the 19 and under Tall Town record with a 42:15. Malouf ran track and cross country in junior high and can look forward to an outstanding high school career.

In the two-mile Tall Town run, Midland finally came away with a winner. Bob Jones, director of the Central YMCA, said he was just testing the waters in a shorter race "to see what would happen." What happened was Jones was first across the tape in 10:03, just seven seconds off the race record 9:56, but good enough for an age group mark.

Seven age group records and two overall records fell in the combined two-mile and 10K

DeWayne Altis, (192) and Kory Williamson (189) take the first curve in Saturday's Tall Town 10,000. More than 300 runners gathered for Midland's oldest road race at Colonnade Shopping Center. Odessa's John Bednarski won the race in 32:42.

Brady's single caps Angel rally in ninth

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Left-handed hitting Brian Brady punched a single through the left side to drive home the winning run with one out in the bottom of the ninth as the Midland Angels scored a 4-3 come-from-behind win over San Antonio in the opener of their Texas League series Saturday night.

Some 1,606 fans showed up at Angels Stadium, not bad for a bleak night that could have served as a setting for a Frankenstein or vampire movie. They were rewarded for their dogged loyalty as Brady's hit plated John Hotchkiss, who had opened the ninth with a single, and moved to second on Edwin Marquez' bunt single.

"He (Jack Savage, the Dodgers' ace reliever) had two strikes on me and I was looking for a fastball low and away," said Brady, "and that's what I got."

MIDLAND, BEHIND 3-1 since the second inning, tied it on Stan Holmes' two-run single in the eighth. Holmes greeted Savage, who had relieved starter Mike Schweighoffer with two out after a single by Doug Jennings and walk to Ty VanBurkleo, with a liner into the left field corner. However, he was an easy out going for two as leftfielder Alonso Tellez rifled the ball to Juan Bustadad at second.

"I was just looking for something I could hit," Holmes said of the blow that gave him 36 RBI for the season.

Neither starter was around at the end for a decision in this pitching duel.

Savage, 3-3, took the loss and Miquel Garcia notched his first win of the season with 2⅔ innings of hitless relief.

Celtics face heat of seventh game

BOSTON (AP) — Seventh-game pressure and sweltering heat could not wilt the Boston Celtics Saturday.

The Celtics, who have lost only twice in 15 seventh-game playoff appearances at home, shook off the effects of temperatures in the upper 80s in Boston Garden and beat the Detroit Pistons 117-114 in the NBA's Eastern Conference finals.

"Yes, it was very hot out there," said Larry Bird, who, playing the entire game, had 37 points, nine rebounds and nine assists for the Celtics. "I wish this was the end, but it's just another step."

"We had the luxury of a lot of TV timeouts," Celtics Coach K.C. Jones said. "The heat took its toll, but we were still fresh."

The victory kept alive Boston's hopes of a repeat title, a feat that hasn't been accomplished in the NBA since the Celtics did it in 1969. They will meet the Los Angeles Lakers, who completed a four-game sweep of the Seattle SuperSonics last Monday in the Western Conference finals, in the first game of the championship series Tuesday night at Inglewood, Calif.

With their heart-stopping victory the Celtics ran their record to 13-2 in seventh games at home, with the only losses coming in 1973 against the New York Knicks and 1982 against Philadelphia, both times in Eastern Conference finals.

Boston is also 84-2 in its last 86 games at Boston Garden, but the latest win over the Pistons, who have lost 18 straight games at Boston Garden since Dec. 19, 1982, did not come easily.

THE GAME was tied 99-99 after Joe Dumars, who scored a career-high 35 points, hit a basket with 4:18 remaining. The Celtics then took five straight shots on their next possession, but got the rebound each time.

NBA Playoffs

Danny Ainge, who scored nine points in the final 3:05 and finished with 18, then hit a 3-pointer to put the Celtics ahead to stay.

"Danny's 3-pointer set it off," Jones said. "Then the fans started to hoot and really got us going. Some teams would see a missed shot and drop back on defense. None of our guys stopped going after the ball."

"It was the most dramatic moment of the game," Detroit Coach Chuck Daly said. "Our plan was not to give up second shots."

"We went after every rebound and got some lucky bounces, but we were hustling out there," Bird said of the sequence that ended with Ainge's 3-pointer. "After three or four misses, you always think the next shot is going in."

Detroit, which won all three of its home games in the series, was trying to become the first team ever to beat the Celtics after falling behind them 2-0. The Celtics are now 27-0 after winning the first two games of a best-of-seven playoff.

Despite losing Adrian Dantley, their leading scorer in the series, to a concussion late in the third period, the Pistons battled Boston closely all the way.

"It was a big play," Bird said of Dantley's collision with teammate Vinnie Johnson. "They lost one of their big scorers. That really hurt them."

AFTER BOSTON'S five offensive rebounds, the teams traded baskets until the final minute, when Ainge hit another long jumper for a 108-105 margin with 25 seconds remaining. Detroit then desperately after Dant-

Pre-race prediction: Alysheba 'Crowned'

Williamson

In less than a week at the Belmont Stakes, Alysheba, owned by Midland's Dorothy Scharbauer and daughter Pamela, will become the first Triple Crown winner since Affirmed turned the trick in 1978.

At least someone is on record of making that prediction. No matter what Alysheba does, his critics seem to mount with every race.

To be quite frank, Alysheba isn't exactly loved by the national press. "He's too slow to be a great champion." "He isn't in the class with Affirmed." "Alysheba doesn't have the test of time behind him." Those are some of the things we've been reading over the past weeks.

The Derby victory proved that Alysheba's problems were of a physical nature, but those problems had been corrected through surgery.

But Alysheba's critics increased after the Derby, saying that the slow-starting horse couldn't win at a shorter distance, which the Preakness presented.

The national horns sounded for Bet Twice in the Preakness. Most writers felt that Bet Twice was particularly well suited to the distances of the Preakness, which ran at a mile and three-sixteenths instead of the mile and a quarter of the Derby.

And now with two-thirds of the Triple Crown in his hip pocket, Alysheba still has his critics.

Alysheba raced in the Derby and Preakness on Lasix, a diuretic given to horses who bleed, and Butazolodin, an anti-inflammatory medication.

Alysheba qualified for the Maryland Lasix Program at the Preakness because he had a California Bleeder's Certificate dated March 15 and signed by the official veterinarian for the California Horse Racing Board.

Horses can not race on any medication in New York, the site of the June 6 Belmont Stakes, the final race in the Triple Crown.

But Alysheba trainer Jack Van Berg says that the horse was put on the medication only as a precautionary measure. He contends that the Lasix is used to help Alysheba keep his bladder empty.

"It's hard to race with a full bladder," said Van Berg. "But saying he can't run without it is pure crap."

Other writers have even had enough gall to take shots at jockey Chris McCarron, saying that he is "injured goods and may have trouble with his reflexes in tight situations."

McCarron explained that he didn't even expect to be involved in the Triple Crown series after breaking his left leg in a five-horse spill at Santa Anita last Oct. 16.

He didn't return to action until March 12, and he still rides with a metal plate in his leg, attached with 11 screws.

He thanked the Scharbauers and Van Berg for giving him the mount, "not knowing I would be 100 percent when the Kentucky Derby was run."

And if anyone has proven his ability, it's McCarron.

Jimmy Croll, trainer of Bet Twice admitted that if his horse had won the Kentucky Derby, he would have been disqualified after contact between Bet Twice and Alysheba occurred in what has become known as the "Demolition Derby."

Bet Twice lugged out into Alysheba's path during the stretch run, and Alysheba clipped his heels and almost fell. McCarron said he thought he was going to go over the colt's head.

Somehow Alysheba recovered and, after being checked twice more by Bet Twice, won by three-quarters of a length. McCarron was a master after that race.

Clarence Scharbauer Jr. said, "McCarron has done everything you could hope for in a jockey. He's a great young Christian man and we're happy that he's the one that has a chance to bring us the Triple Crown. What more could you ask of a person."

Despite the critics, the owners, trainer, jockey and Alysheba have done what it takes to be a Triple Crown winner. And it won't be a second rate title as some have suggested. We have a group with history in its grasp.

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — No. 1-ranked Texas had faced No. 4 Arkansas five times prior to the College World Series and any of those were prettier games than the one the two teams played Saturday, said Texas Coach Cliff Gustafson.

"Today's game didn't impress anyone on the strength of the Southwest Conference," he said. Texas outbattled Arkansas for the conference baseball title this season.

The Longhorns used a two-run double by Brian Johnson, a two-run triple by Lenny Bell and 13 walks to beat the Raorbacks 13-6 in the first round of the NCAA baseball championship.

"I thought it was a strange game," said Gustafson, whose team beat Arkansas four times earlier this season. "We didn't expect to score 13 runs. It was not the game I anticipated."

Mark Petkovsek, 14-2, came on in relief of starter Kevin Garner in the second inning and allowed Arkansas just two more runs as he scattered seven hits the rest of the way.

Garner had given up four runs in the first inning and two-thirds after Texas had taken a 4-1 lead. Jim Kremers doubled with the bases loaded to drive in three runs in the second and added a two-run triple in the fourth off Petkovsek.

"When we lost the 4-1 lead and the 5-4 lead I thought we were in trouble," Gustafson said.

Johnson's two-run double in the fifth inning sparked a four-run Texas rally and put the 59-9 Longhorns on top to stay.

Bell added a two-run triple in a four-run sixth as Texas advanced to the second round Tuesday against the winner of Saturday night's Stanford-Georgia contest.

Scott Bryant had three hits, and Brian Cisarik, Rusty Crockett and Johnson added two each in a 13-hit Texas attack.

Arkansas used five pitchers with Tim Peters, 5-4, taking the loss.

"Nobody on the staff could find the plate," said Arkansas Coach Norm DeBriyn. "I talked to the catcher about the strike zone and it was tight but consistent."

The Razorbacks wasted a five-RBI night by Jim Kremers in dropping to 50-15-1 on the season. Arkansas meets the Stanford-Georgia loser in an elimination game Sunday night.

Stanford 3, Georgia 1

OMAHA, Neb. — A severe thunderstorm forced the suspension of the second CWS game of the night with Stanford leading Georgia 3-1 after 6½ innings.

The game will be resumed today at noon.

A severe thunderstorm warning and the sound of tornado warning sirens nearby sent the 13,561 spectators scurring for shelter beneath the stadium grandstands when play was called after five innings. Most of the fans didn't return when play resumed for 20 minutes between heavy showers, before being halted again.

The Stanford-Georgia loser will play at 7:10 p.m. today against Arkansas, a 13-6 loser to Texas in Saturday's first game. That game follows Arizona State and Florida State in an elimination double-header.

The Stanford-Georgia winner meets No. 1-ranked Texas in a winners bracket semifinal Tuesday at 7:10 p.m.

Arkansas shortstop Mike Sisco waits to make the tag on Texas' Elanis Westbrooks on a stolen base attempt Saturday.

Stanford took a 2-0 lead in the top of the second inning on a Ron Witmeyer single, a stolen base and a single by David Esquer. Esquer's hit squirted by Georgia left fielder Scott Bohlke and Esquer advanced to third. He scored on a balk by Georgia pitcher Derek Lilliquist.

The second-ranked Cardinal, 48-16, added another run in the fourth when Ed Sprague led off with a triple and scored on Paul Carey's ground out.

Georgia, ranked eighth at 42-19, broke up Jack McDowell's shutout bid when two infield errors set up Donn Perno's RBI single in the bottom of the fifth.

Akers still hurting over UT situation

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — Fred Akers was in a familiar setting but you could tell he was just a tad uneasy.

There he was in the press box at Memorial Stadium, making small talk with writers at the University Interscholastic League track meet.

His smile came easily until someone mentioned he appeared to have overcome the hurt he suffered when he was fired after a decade as the University of Texas football coach.

Akers glanced down at the field where he had coached his last Texas game, a 1986 Thanksgiving night loss to Texas A&M.

"That's on the outside," Akers said. "I'm still hurting bad on the inside about the way it happened. A few money bags are controlling things here at Texas. They had been trying to get me for 10 years and they finally did.

"I was shocked and I still am."

Akers replaced the popular and successful Darrell Royal, who had handpicked Mike Campbell to succeed him. Royal's choice was overruled. The Texas camp was immediately split into two factions.

The pro-Royalists recently replaced the departed Akers with David McWilliams, who is very close to Royal.

When McWilliams was hired by Texas Tech over a year ago, Royal said, "(He) looks good anyway you turn him."

"The ways things are going at Texas now where you have maybe three guys deciding policy it's probably for the best I'm not here," Akers said. "It's not like this at Purdue."

Akers won 75 percent of his games at Texas.

Asked what would happen if he gave Purdue a 9-3 season, Akers laughed and said, "They would be so giddy I could come check on my cows at my Texas ranch anytime I wanted to in a private jet."

It's going to be awhile before Akers posts any nine-victory seasons.

The talent pool is low for the Boilermakers.

"I almost fainted when I saw what we had the first few days of spring training," Akers said. "But the more work we did, the better things started to look. There are some good players at Purdue. There just aren't enough of them."

Akers, who has a five-year contract, said it would probably take him three years to make the Boilermakers a title threat in the Big Ten Conference.

"We need several back-to-back recruiting years," Akers said. "I was surprised how low the talent pool was at Purdue."

Which is what brought him to Texas this late May weekend: to check on his cows and some Texas high school football beef.

Akers had three Texans running in the UIL meet who had signed Purdue scholarships. He was looking for more.

"I've still got a lot of friends in Texas and they keep me informed," he said. "I'll always recruit in Texas. There are a lot of good players here and some of them get overlooked."

Akers said he loves the enthusiasm at Purdue.

"They average 64,000 fans at their home games," Akers said. "They're fired up everywhere I go.

"They have a lot of tradition. Did you know Purdue has defeated Notre Dame more than any other school?"

Akers even tried to explain that a boilermaker isn't a shot of whiskey in a beer. It has something to do with Purdue's engineering school making boilerplates during the railroad era, he said.

"Our mascot's a train," Akers said. "And I thought if you got run over by Bevo (Texas' Longhorn mascot) it was tough.

"I miss Texas, but I'm being treated well," Akers said. "And we've got two golf courses on campus. The green fees are $2. The electric carts are free. Come on down. You can't beat that."

Unser guaranteed three more rides this year

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Indianapolis 500 winner Al Unser will have a ride for at least three more races this season according to an announcement Saturday by Roger Penske, president of Penske Racing.

He said Unser will have a ride in a third Penske car at both of the remaining 500-mile races this season, as well as the Marlboro Challenge, a special $730,000 invitational race during the final weekend of the season at Miami, Fla.

The Marlboro 500 at Michigan International Speedway is scheduled Aug. 2, while the Quaker State 500 at Pocono International Raceway will be on Aug. 16.

Unser, 48, earned a record-tying fourth Indy 500 win last Sunday while filling in for the injured Danny Ongais in a Penske team car.

The Albuquerque, N.M., driver started May with no ride and was called on by Penske, his former boss, during the week prior to the second and final weekend of qualifications at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Penske, whose full-time drivers are Rick Mears and Danny Sullivan, said the logistics of running a three-car team made it impossible to hire Unser for the rest of the 15-race Indy-car series.

"We're delighted that Al has agreed to drive for our team in the two remaining 500-mile races this season," said Penske, whose team is in Milwaukee for Sunday's Miller American 500. "We want to help Al go after the Triple Crown this year."

Madden trades rails for ride on fancy bus

DALLAS (AP) — CBS football commentator John Madden, who once promoted Amtrak with the slogan "America is getting into train-ing," is going to Go Greyhound.

"The way I'm going to go now is by bus," said Madden, whose distaste for flying made him the nation's best-known rail passenger. "I'm excited about it."

It was reported earlier this year that Madden and Dallas-based Greyhound Lines struck a three-year agreement.

The deal will outfit the former Oakland Raiders coach with a custom-tailored bus complete with a shower, kitchen, queen-size bed, dinette, two televisions, cellular telephone, two videotape players and stereo system.

The bus, dubbed the Maddencruiser, will have 6 inches of extra headroom. It was designed by Custom Coach Co. of Columbus, Ohio, at a cost industry sources estimate at $400,000 to $500,000.

While Madden says he was not paid to endorse Amtrak and had no contract, he spoke openly about how much he disliked flying and mentioned Amtrak often in his broadcasts. Madden said he won't miss Amtrak because his bus will give him more flexibility and allow him to have all his "stuff" around when he wants it.

"We'll be able to drive it right up to the stadium and park it right next to the TV cameras," the 6-foot-4-inch, 270-pound Madden told the Dallas Times Herald in a copyright story. "I won't have people to sit around to talk to, but I'm going to stake out my favorite truck stops along the way and make up for lost conversation there."

No cash changed hands in the deal, sources said. The company will provide drivers, maintenance and fuel over the three years as Madden travels to games. Then, Greyhound will give him the bus, the sources told the newspaper.

In return, Madden will appear at functions for Greyhound employees, retirees, agents and their families to boost spirits in an era when the image of bus travel has slipped.

Greyhound Lines and Madden said the agreement's emphasis is on Madden's corporate help and few public appearances are planned. Madden's contract with CBS is valued at more than $1 million a year. He also endorses Miller Lite, Ramada Inns, Canon Cameras and Exxon Motor Oil.

Madden will test his new wheels Tuesday when he will make a 3,000-mile trip from San Francisco, where he has an office, to New York, where he lives during the football season. Greyhound says the trip will take 56 hours and 45 minutes. Two drivers will take turns, stopping only for fuel.

TED BATTLES

Senators back in D.C. and boy is Steinbrenner hot

Battles

It's a city teeming with international intrigue, mystery, covert transactions completed in opium, or at least, smoke-filled dens. You've read about Shanghai, Singapore, Calcutta...only this happens to be Washington, D.C.

While Contra-Gate, or whatever they are labeling this one, is being exposed in public hearings, most of the nation is still unaware of one of Washington's best kept secrets.

Only weekly communiques placed by mistake in my Swiss message box in Zurich revealed this one. My box is number 0066 and the message is marked for 8899. Obviously, the courier is a victim of a new pair of bi or trifocals.

The crux of the revelation is that Washington's Senators are again in the major leagues and Washington Post writer Tony Kornheiser, who must have just finished Phillip Roth's The Great American Novel, has been assigned to make weekly reports on the new Senators.

THE TEAM is owned by a Taiwan business man and the laundered profits from the club are said to be financing the promulgation of Tawiwan's continued world Little League baseball superiority.

The Senators, according to Kornheiser's report, quickly aroused the ire of Yankee owner George Steinbrenner by sweeping a series in New York.

What really hurt was the way Gabeen Mfoom scored the winning run in the 11th inning of the first game, coming all the way around from first-sliding into each successive base, leaping to his feet and pursuing the next base on a 420-foot single to deepest center by Stun Gun Ginzburg.

"Steinbrenner was unnerved by Mfoom's singular base-running style, and after the game blustered that he intended to call the Immigration and Naturalization Service to check the validity of Mfoom's work permit," relates Kornheiser.

Steinbrenner explained, "Don't misunderstand, I respect Ethiopians. They're fine people. But with Mfoom, wouldn't it have been enough to give him a few good meals and send him home? His being on the field is an insult to every American. You shouldn't mock the game like that."

STEINBRENNER WAS even more upset when Cuban refugee Ossie Garcia and former prisoner Warren (Bad Dude) Harding hit back-to-back homers in the top of the ninth off Dave Righetti to win another game.

Then to add insult to injury, Bhloo, the pride of old Tehran, and Walid Sadir relieved in the ninth and wiped out Dave Winfield and Don Mattingly.

As a result of the sweep, Steinbrenner fined Manager Lou Piniella $15,000, fired pitching coach Mark Connor and told Righetti to pack his bags for Columbus while raving "Who the hell did we let in this league, the U.N?

"They've got a Taiwanese owner, an Ethopian, a Cuban third baseman who entered this country illegally and two Iranian relievers."

IN THE Senators home opener before 47,178 in RFK, the Senators beat the Orioles, 8-6, as five pitchers, including the father-son tandem of Sonny and Pappy Doyle, combined on a 19-walk no-hitter. Owner Tang Ye-lin declared it was the greatest victory in the history of the two-week old franchise and shouted, "Yugos for everyone."

Influential in the team's success is the Born Agains of the Holy Trinity infield, Moe Don Dorcas, whose wife Tammy Jaye is just out of the hospital after being treated for Maybelline abuse; at first, Orlando Jones, whose wife is Tammy Raye, at second; Tito Mantequilla, from the liberal Latin faction of the Born Again movement, who has twin live-in girlfriends, Tammy Jose and Tammy Cafe-Ole, at short.

OF COURSE, Washington has had its "Senators-of-old" moments, like losing three straight at Texas, including a breakfast-dinner doubleheader at Arlington Stadium. The stadium was unavailable to the Rangers between noon and 6 p.m. "because it was booked for the annual auction of high school football players to Southwest Conference schools," writes Kornheiser.

Also, the Senators' catcher Shaky Faloon, who suffers from agorphobia, and was picked up from the Braves, who had given up on him. As Ted Turner explained it, "When we drew more than 15,000, Shaky became disoriented. More than 30,000 and he broke out in hives. More than 45,000, he fainted."

Faloon's affliction is explained by the fact that he attended high school and college in Alaska, "where a big baseball crowd is 30 eskimos and a herd of wild moose."

Who knows, Fox network may be after Senator manager Major Banks, GM Elliot Suskind or one of the Holy Trinity as fill-in hosts for Joan Rivers and Jim Bakker.

I can't wait to check my Swiss message box. I just hope the courier doesn't find out about his bifocals in the meantime.

Tyson drops Thomas to retain crowns

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Unbeaten Mike Tyson knocked out Pinklon Thomas with a flurry of power punches to the head in the sixth round Saturday night and retained the WBC and WBA heavyweight championships.

The fight outdoors at the Las Vegas Hilton was halted by referee Carlos Padilla after Thomas' cornerman, Angelo Dundee, jumped into the ring as the referee was about to count 10. There was no way Thomas, a former WBC champion, would have beaten the count.

The time was 2:00 of the sixth round.

Tyson's 30th victory and 27th knockout will send him into a showdown for hte undisputed heavyweight championship against Tony Tucker Aug. 1 here. In an earlier fight, Tucker won the vacant IBF title by stopping James "Buster" Douglas at 1:36 of the 10th round.

Tyson came out for the first round of the scheduled 12-round bout with an eye on finishing it, scoring with both hands to hte head, especially with his left hook. Thomas tried to keep Tyson off with a left jab but was unable to.

Through the next four rounds, the bout was marred by a lot of clinching, holding and mauling. It was reminiscent of Tyson's disappointing 15-round decision over James "Bonecrusher Smith last March 7 for the WBA title.

Although the 29-year-old Thomas never appeared on the verge of going down in the first five rounds, he was marked under the right eye and cut under and over the left eye. The cut over the eye was caused by a head butt in the third round.

In the rest period between the fifth and sixth round, Dundee signaled that the attached thumb on Thomas' left glove had come loose. The glove was replaced, making the minute-rest period a ttoal of 2:38.

The rest did not help Thomas get through the sixth round.

About midway through the sixth, while the two men were fighting in cloe, the 20-year-old cut loose with a tremendous right uppercut. A moment later, he landed a crushing left and Thomas reeled backward. Tyson was all over the befuddled challenger, raining lefts and rights to the head. Finally, after a right and another blasting hook, Thomas crashed to the floor on his back.

It was clear he was a beaten man.

Before the fight, Thomas had said, "What does Mike have to beat me with?. That's the question. I am ready to go to war."

What Tyson had was too much artillery.

In complaining about his victory over Smith, Tyson had said, "It takes two to tango."

Thomas did try to make a fight of it.

Douglas was more than holding his own against the unbeaten Tucker in their scheduled 15-round IBF title fight before a crowd of about 12,000 people.

Two judges had the fight even after nine rounds and a third had Douglas ahead by a point.

The AP card had Douglas leading 87-83.

Then, at 1:05 of the 10th, Tucker hurt Douglas with a right hand that sent him reeling to the rope. Tucker threw about another 20 lefts and rights and when the dazed Douglas did not return the fire, referee Mills Lane stopped the bout.

Tucker, a 4-1 favorite, surely will be an underdog against Tyson, who was a 5-1 favorite to beat Thomas.

Tyson, the youngest man ever to become a heavuweight champion — he will 21 on June 30 — weighed 218¾ pounds, one pound more than Thomas, who now is 29-2-1 with 24 knockouts. The defeat probably ended Thomas' career as a leading heavyweight. He won the WBC title on a 12-round decision over Tim Witherspoon here Aug. 31, 1984 and lost it on a 12-round decision here to Trevor Berbick March 22, 1986.

Tyson, who made $2.5 million to $650,000 for Thomas, won the WBC title on a second round knockout of Berbick here last Nov. 22.

Tucker, 28, who weighed 222¼, now is 35-0 with 30 knockouts. Douglas, 27, who weighed 227¼, is 23-4-1 with 15 knockouts.

Tucker earned $360,000, while Douglas made $175,000.

The IBF title became vacant when Michael Spinks was stripped for refusing to a mandatory defense against the top-ranked Tucker.

Spinks is fighting a 15-round fight June 15 against Gerry Cooney in Atlantic City.

Fans don't like decision for Page

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Greg Page, a former World Boxing Association heavyweight champion, got out of deep trouble in the sixth round and survived a knockdown in the 10th Saturday night to win an unpopular majority decision over James Broad.

In another 10-round bout, Tony Tubbs, another former WBA heavyweight champion scored a unanimous decision over Wimpy Halstead.

Both fights were on a heavyweight championship doubleheader outdoors at the Las Vegas Hilton.

Tony Tucker and James "Buster" Douglas fought for the International Boxing Federation title and Mike Tyson defended the World Boxing Council and WBA titles against Pinklon Thomas.

Page was trapped in a netural corner for the last 30 seconds of the 10th round and went down from a right hand and left hook to the head. He got up with three seconds left and the bell rang.

California places Moore on DL

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — California Angels right-handed pitcher Donnie Moore, 2-2, who suffered from soreness in his right rib cage throughout spring training, has been placed on the 15-day disabled list, the American League baseball club said.

"Donnie was placed on the 15-day disabled list effective Friday," team spokesman Tom Seeberg said Saturday. "He's receiving treatment on his ribs."

It also was announced Friday that left-handed pitcher John Candelaria, 4-1, would be added to the roster, Seeberg said.

"Candelaria rejoined the club Saturday and may pitch Sunday," the spokesman said.

ANGELS

Starter Chris Collins felt something go in his elbow with one out in the seventh. He had been pitching pitching brilliantly after San Antonio's three-run second.

"The elbow has been sore for a couple of weeks and I just didn't loosen up and I haven't had good velocity the last couple of times out," the right-hander from Mercer University said. "Tonight I was just trying to keep us in the game."

Midland scored in the first on a walk to Damon Farmar, Jennings' blooper to left, his first of three singles, and Van Burkleo's RBI hit to right.

San Antonio got three in the second when Jon Pequinot hit an opposite field homer over the left field fence following a walk to former Midland Angel Jeff Schaefer. Wayne Kirby then tripled over Farmar's head in center and scored on an error.

"Until the ball gets above the stands, it's hard to pick up," said Farmar, "and it was hit harder than I thought."

That was it for the Dodgers, who got just two hits the rest of the way and were held to three runs or less for the 11th time in the last 12 games.

THE WAY. Schweighoffer was pitching, it looked like that would be enough. "He doesn't throw real hard, but he has a good slider and change-up and tonight did a good job of spotting the ball," said Midland Manager Max Oliveras. "He kept us off balance."

"He just got in front of the batters with that slider and then the change and sinker and kept us off balance," echoed Brady, who had pinch hit into a double play in the seventh before his game winning hit.

A relief pitcher with a 7-3 record at AAA Albuquerque last year, Schweighoffer is 4-1 as a starter this season in AA ball.

HALO HOOPS. Jennings and Hotchkiss, back in action after a cracked rib that sidelined him for the road trip, each had three hits. Marquez had two bunt singles, third and first base line. The one in the ninth hugged the foul line almost to first, but never strayed foul. Mike Romanovsky, 3-3, will start in tonight's 6 p.m. game against the Dodgers. Midland is 6-3 for the season against San Antonio in the AA version of the Freeway Series.

Collins doesn't expect to miss a turn in the rotation, although a more thorough exam of the ailing elbow will be conducted today.

With only a couple of workouts on the road, Oliveras is anxious to make use of Angels Stadium for much needed pregame work.

Strangely, Midland won without an extra base hit. San Antonio had a double by Jon Debus in addition to the homer and triple.

Hall of Fame ball on Lake Ontario bottom

OSWEGO, N.Y. (AP) — Somewhere on the bottom of Lake Ontario near Toronto there's a baseball signed by Babe Ruth and the entire 1925 Cleveland Indians team.

The Canadian Baseball Hall of Fame in Toronto would like to get it back — a task that so far is proving to be like finding a needle in a ball park.

The ball was on display at the Hall of Fame until last Saturday night, when two youngsters broke into a display case and stole it. They also took a more recent ball dating to 1985.

Once out of the museum with their loot in hand, the boys, for reasons unknow, decided to throw one of the balls away. They dropped it somewhere in Ontario Place, which is an enterntainment and cultural complex on the waters of Lake Ontario.

"If you are 12 year-old and if you have a choice between an old ball and a new ball, which one would you choose?" museum spokesman Bruce Prentice said Saturday.

The ball was signed in 1925, Prentice said, after the New York Yankees beat the Indians in Cleveland. While the Indians were in their locker room, Ruth showed up. "As he was known to do, he poked his head and heckled the Indians," Prentice said.

A meeting eventually produced a baseball signed by the Indians and Ruth. "He signed it huge," Prentice said of Ruth's signature.

Prentice noted the baseball is shellacked and wouldn't get soggy for awhile. For several days this past week, the museum hired the service of divers to look for the ball.

However, the youngsters kept changing their account of where they threw the ball.

"We got to the point where we don't know what to do anymore," Prentice said.

Friday night, the museum called off the search. "I don't know what else we can do," the spokesman said. "If anybody has any suggestions, I'd like to hear them."

The ball has special significance for Canadian baseball fans, Prentice noted, because Ruth hit his first professional home run in Canada while playing with the old Baltimore Orioles of the International league.

Indians send Camacho to AAA

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians sent right handed relief pitcher Ernie Camacho to their Class AAA Buffalo farm club Saturday and called up right hander Mike Armstrong.

Camacho, 31, who had 20 saves last year and a club-record 23 in 1984, was 0-1 with one save and a 9.22 ERA in 15 appearances this year.

"We're going to try to get him back right," said Manager Pat Corrales. "He needs some confidence. You guys (reporters) haven't helped. People get all over him after you guys blast him and that just makes it worse, and this is a guy who saved more games for us than anybody we've got."

Camacho was replaced on the roster by Armstrong, 33, who previously pitched in the majors with San Diego, Kansas City and the New York Yankees.

Armstrong was 2-4 with three saves and a 3.12 ERA in 13 relief appearances at Buffalo this season.

He has an 18-17 record and 5.56 ERA in 183 major-league appearances.

Three Chaparrals win national tennis titles

From Staff Reports

TYLER — With hopes of their national title all but gone, Midland College buckled down and grabbed a pair of national crowns to go with a third place team finish in the National Junior College Athletic Association men's tennis tournament Saturday.

Freshman Giles Ameline won the Chaparrals only singles crown with a straight-set, 6-3, 6-4 victory over Arturo Gomez of North Greenville, S.C. In doubles play, Johan Dysholm and Herve Rousseau teamed to defeat Jenkins-Harden of Anderson, S.C. for the No. 2 doubles title.

But the team honors went to the two South Carolina schools, North Greenville and Anderson, as they tied with 38 points each. Midland finished with 33.

The only other chance MC had in the finals Saturday was the No. 3 doubles duo of Ameline and Lars Nordmark who fell to the team of Solano and Alvarez from North Greenville.

The Chaparrals bettered their fifth place finish of a year ago, and can welcome back a pair of national titlists in Ameline and Dysholm next year as sophomores.

Team Totals: 1. (tie) North Greenville, S.C., 38; Anderson, S.C., 38. 3. Midland College, 33. 4. Tyler, Tex., 27. 5. McLennan, Tex., 25. 6. Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College, 22. Ga.

ley, who left the game with 18 points late in the third quarter after colliding with teammate Vinny Johnson and suffering a concussion.

Dantley was removed from the court by stretcher.

In the final 20 seconds, the Celtics hit nine free throws without a miss, four by Ainge, three by Dennis Johnson and two by Kevin McHale.

Dumars, whose previous career high in the playoffs and the regular season was 24, hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer for the final margin.

McHale finished with 22 points, Johnson 18 and Robert Parish 16 for the Celtics. Parish missed Game 6 when he was suspended for punching Bill Laimbeer in the fifth game. He also came back from an injured ankle and came up limping at least four times Saturday after falling to the floor.

The Pistons, who have made one other seventh-game appearance in the playoffs, losing to Chicago in 1974 in an early round, got 25 points from Isiah Thomas, 12 of them in the fourth period.

The Celtics appeared ready to take control late in the third quarter, which had nine lead changes and seven ties.

Bird hit three straight baskets, keying a 14-5 spurt that turned a 67-65 Detroit lead into a 79-72 Boston advantage with 2:24 left.

But the Pistons folowed with an 8-0 run for an 80-79 lead and had possession when Dantley and Vinnie Johnson bumped heads when diving for a loose ball with eight seconds left. After John Salley missed two free throws, Sam Vincent's two foul shots with two seconds to go gave the Celtics an 81-80 edge.

Walt Zembriski (left), and Bruce Crampton share the seniors lead after two rounds of play.

Crampton sizzles, moves into tie for Seniors lead

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. (AP) — Bruce Crampton blistered the TPC-Plum Creek layout with a course-record 8-under-par 64 Saturday and moved into a share of the lead with Walt Zembriski after two rounds of the $250,000 Denver Champions of Golf seniors tournament.

Crampton, who teamed with Orville Moody to win the Legends of Golf but who owns no individual titles this year after winning seven times a year ago, vaulted from six strokes off the pace to earn a share of the lead.

Crampton, a standout on the regular PGA Tour in the early 1970s, had a 36-hole total of 7-under 137, a figure that was equalled by Zembriski, who shot a bogey-free 4-under 68.

One stroke back was left-hander Bob Charles, a three-time winner this season. Charles fired a 68 and was at 138. Dale Douglass, with a second-round 69, was at 139, and defending champion Gary Player and former NFL quarterback John Brodie were next at 140.

First-round leader Ben Smith ballooned to an 80, taking a 9 on the par-4 18th hole, and was at 147.

Crampton, 51, had nine birdies and a single bogey. His iron play was superb, leaving him birdie putts of as little as 15 inches, five feet and eight feet.

"Any time you can make nine birdies on any course is a tremendous day, let alone a Pete Dye (designed) course," said Crampton, a native Australian who lives in Dallas. "It was a fun round. The greens were holding from the overnight rain, and the ball rolled true.

"I birdied two of the first three holes, and when you do that you can get on the offensive and play positively. You just trust your swing and attack the course."

Crampton bettered the previous course and tournament record of 66 set in 1986 by Roberto DeVicenzo.

Zembriski, two shots off the pace entering the second round, had four birdies in Saturday's round and in two days has had only one bogey.

"If things go tomorrow (Sunday) the way they went today, I think I have a shot at winning," said the New Jersey native who now plays out of Orlando, Fla. "I feel I'm due. This is the first time I've been in contention entering the final round this year."

Charles also played bogey-free golf.

"I like my position," he said. "I'll probably be a little more relaxed being 1 shot back instead of being in front."

Charles said the outcome on Sunday will hinge on the final three holes — perhaps the toughest stretch on the Senior Tour.

Rain halts Memorial play

Weather forecast isn't promising

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Third-round play in the Memorial Tournament was suspended Saturday, leaving 59 of the 77 players stranded on the course.

They were due to return at 7 a.m. today to complete third-round play with the final 18 holes to be played later in the day — weather permitting. The forecast called for continued showers and thundershowers Sunday afternoon.

Scott Hoch, continuing his record scoring pace, held a 4-shot lead when play was held up at 1:20 p.m., EDT, by the first of a series of thunderstorms that swept over the Muirfield Village Golf Club course in the northern suburbs of Columbus, Ohio.

Play eventually was declared over for the day at 4:45 p.m., EDT. Only 18 players had completed their rounds when play was suspended.

South African Denis Watson was the leader of that small group at 206, 10 shots under par.

Watson, one of the first men off the tee in hot, humid weather, had a third-round 66, 6 under par, and added to the long list of tournament records that have been broken or tied on the PGA Tour the last four weeks.

His 131 total — 13 under par — for the second and third rounds tied the tournament record for consecutive rounds, a mark set by Hoch over the first two days of this tournament.

Hoch continued to batter par with a string of three consecutive birdies beginning on the seventh hole. They came on putts of 15, 15 and 10 feet.

He reached the turn in 33, parred the next two holes and was 16 under par for the tournament with seven holes to go in the third round.

Hoch, now through 47 holes, has not made a bogey in the tournament — another tournament record, breaking the string of 43 set by Hale Irwin in 1985.

"I've hit every green so far (in the third round), so there hasn't been much opportunity to make bogey," Hoch said.

Don Pooley, who had a string of five consecutive birdies before the rains came, and Curt Byrum were tied for second at 12 under, each through 11 holes. Pooley was 5-under for the round, Byrum 3-under.

Scott Simpson was next at 11 under par, five shots behind Hoch. He, too, was through 11 holes. Simpson was 3-under for the day when play was stopped.

John Mahaffey, who scored an eagle-3 on the 15th, was 10-under through 16 holes. He was 6-under for the round.

Tom Watson, five shots off the pace through 36 holes and hoping to break his three-year non-winning string, lost one stroke to par and was nine shots back through 11 holes.

Jack Nicklaus, the host and founder of this event, suffered a recurrance of chronic back problems on his last practice swing.

He was treated three times by a chiropractor and took medication.

Nicklaus, though obviously in pain, matched par through his first 11 holes and was 2-over for the tournament.

Coe owns one-shot Corning edge

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Canadian Dawn Coe fired a 5-under-67 Saturday to take a one-stroke lead over Kathryn Young after three rounds of the $275,000 LPGA Corning Classic.

Coe, a four-year tour veteran from Lake Cowichan, B.C., picked up four birdies on the back nine Saturday and finished at 13-under-203 after 54 holes.

Young, the leader after the first round and co-leader after two rounds, recovered from a slow start on the front nine to shoot a 3-under-69. She was at 204.

Jane Geddes, the tour's top money-winner this year, and Laurie Rinker, the defending champio, were two strokes behind Coe at 205.

Betsy King, who made a hole-in-one on the 125-yard 15th hole and shot a 65, was tied with Robin Walton and Rosie Jones at 206.

"I've never been in this position so I don't know what to expect," said Coe of her front-runner's status.

Playing with second-round co-leaders Young and Pat Bradley, Coe said she was "extremely nervous, and it took me a while to settle down out there."

Coe, who has never finished better than a tie for fourth in an LPGA event, said, "it's been a long, long time" since she led a tournament. "You've got to go back to my amateur days to find me in that position."

Young matched par through her first eight holes before picking up four birdies on her last 10 holes, against a lone bogey.

"I didn't seem to get it going real early in the round," said the Portland, Ore. native, who is seeking her first tour victory. "I feel there's a lot of birdie holes early and I wasn't able to capitalize. Thank goodness it came around for me later."

Geddes and Rinker had different complaints after they each fired 4-under-68s.

"I'm going to go out to the driving range and see if I can start hitting them straight" said Rinker, while Geddes said, "I'm kind of waiting to have a good putting day."

King's 65 was the best round of the day. She birdied the first three holes on the back nine and then picked up the hole-in-one with an 8-iron on the par 3, 125-yard 15th hole.

"Obviously it came at the right time," she said. "I told my caddy (after the front nine) I'd like to get to 10 under and I think I'll be in good shape and that's the way it worked out."

Bradley fell back into the pack after shooting a 1-over-73.

Cougars carry 4-5A banner to quarterfinals

From Staff Reports

District 4-5A champion Abilene Cooper continued its march in the state Class 5A playoffs Saturday, taking a 6-4 decision over Denton to win the best-of-three playoff series in two games.

Sophomore Scotty Pugh opened the sixth inning with a solo home run off Chris Wheeler to break a 4-4 deadlock and put the Cougars on top to stay. David Tollison picked up the win in relief to raise his record to 9-0.

Cooper, ranked No. 2 in the state, has now won 24 games in a row and is ranked fifth in the nation according to USA Today. The Cougars are 29-2. Denton finishes the season 21-11.

In other 5A playoff action Saturday, Lubbock Monterey was ousted in by Duncanville 6-2 in a one-game playoff in Abilene. The Panthers scored five runs in the top of the seventh inning off Randy Robbins, 14-2.

Unranked Duncanville, 24-9, will play Cooper in a best of three series starting Tuesday at an undetermined site.

Football players killed in crash

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Two Mississippi State football players were killed Saturday when the car driven by one collided head-on with another car on U.S. 45 south of West Point, the Mississippi Highway Patrol reported.

Trooper Doug Hamilton said Willie Monroe and Hal O. Williams, both 19 and of Starkville, were pronounced dead after the 4:31 p.m. CDT accident, north of the U.S. 82 intersection.

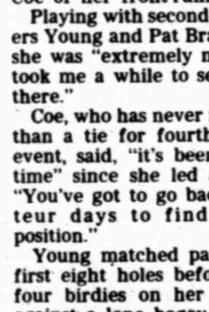

Hamilton said Monroe was driving the car at the time.

Mississippi State University officials confirmed the deaths.

Monroe was a sophomore linebacker for the Bulldogs and Williams was a walk-on defensive back, said head athletic trainer Straton Karatassos.

Karatassos said Head Football Coach Rockey Felker was returning early from a College Football Association convention in Dallas to meet with families of the victims.

Hamilton said two others were injured in the accident.

Saberhagen notches ninth win, beats Rangers 12-7

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Thad Bosley and Kevin Seitzer drove in three runs apiece pacing an 18-hit attack and Bret Saberhagen became the major league's first nine-game winner Saturday night, leading the Kansas City Royals over the Texas Rangers 12-7.

Saberhagen, 9-1, allowed 10 hits over five innings and striking out six before Steve Farr allowed one hit and struck out seven over the final four innings for his first save.

The 23-year-old right-hander was leading 7-0 in the third when Texas scored four runs. They scored two more in the fourth and one more in the fifth before Farr releived him.

Kansas City took a 3-0 lead off Jose Guzman, 2-5, in the first when Seitzer singled, Danny Tartabull walked and Bosley and White hit RBI singles. One out later Steve Balboni's added another RBI single.

The Royals scored four more in the third.

Tartabull hit into a double-play grounder with the bases-loaded to score one run and Bosley drove in another with a single. After a fielding error by third baseman Steve Buechele, Jackson hit a two-run double to make it 7-0.

Buechele led off the Ranger third with his fourth home run, then Jerry Browne, Scott Fletcher and and Sierra singled, with Browne scoring. Saberhagen's wild pitch put Fletcher at third and Sierra at second, and then Larry Parrish knocked a two-run single into right.

The Royals countered with three more runs in the bottom of the third on RBI singles by Seitzer, Bosley and White.

Geno Petralli doubled leading off the Texas fourth and went to third on a ground out. After Browne doubled Petralli home, Sierra singled to score Browne with the Rangers' sixth run.

O'Brien homered leading off the Rangers' fifth to cut the margin to 10-7 and tie a Ranger record with a home run in four consecutive games. O'Brien's ninth May home run also bested his own team record.

Seitzer singled home Quirk and Salazar with the Royals' last two runs in the sixth.

American League

Brewers 6, Indians 5

CLEVELAND — B.J. Surhoff singled home Cecil Cooper in the 10th inning as Milwaukee broke a six-game losing streak with a victory over Cleveland.

It was on the third victory for Milwaukee in its last 21 games.

Cooper led off the 10th with a double up the left-center field gap off loser Mark Huismann, 0-3. After Huismann struck out Rob Deer, Scott Bailes came on to face Surhoff, who singled through the right side of the infield.

Mark Clear pitched two innings of one-hit relief to raise his record to 4-1, while Dan Plesac pitched the 10th inning to gain his 11th save.

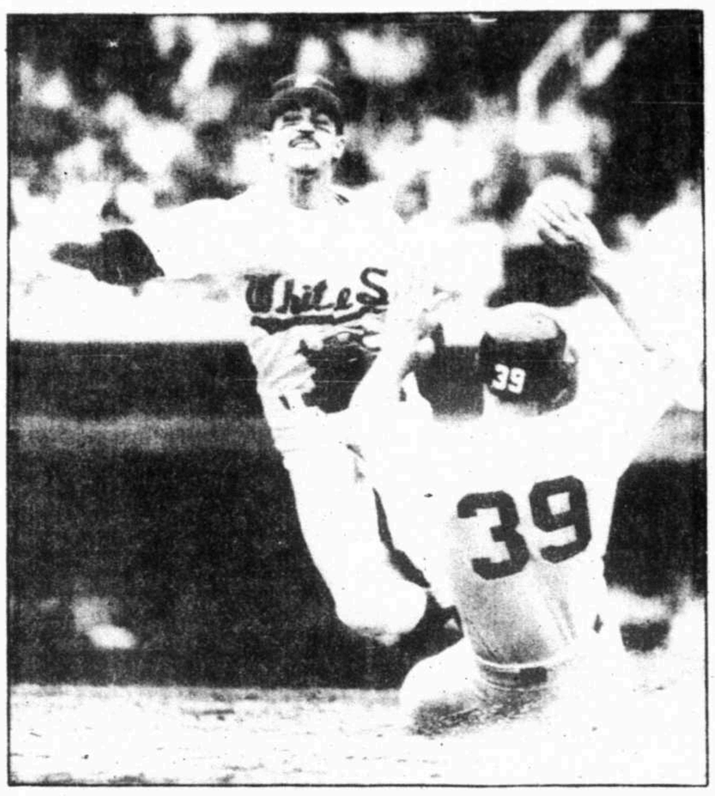

The Brewers trailed 5-3 after seven innings, but tied the game with single runs in the eighth and ninth innings. In the eighth, Cooper and Deer both singled and moved up on a sacrifice bunt. Cooper scored on a sacrifice fly by pinch-hitter Robin Yount.

In the ninth, pinch-hitter Rick Manning drove a one-out triple to center. One out later, Paul Molitor scored Manning with a chopped infield single.

Blue Jays 4, Angels 3

TORONTO — California reliever Gary Lucas walked Rob Ducey with the bases loaded in the bottom of the 10th inning to force in the winning run and give Toronto a victory over California.

Ernie Whitt snapped an 0-for-10 slump by lining a double into the right field corner to lead off the inning. Kelly Gruber followed with a single and went to second on the relay to the infield.

Chicago shortstop Ozzie Guillen steps on the bag and throws over Boston's Mike Greenwell (39) to complete a double play Saturday.

Lucas then relieved California starter Jack Lazorko, 0-2, and intentionally walked pinch-hitter Cecil Fielder to load the bases. The Angels went to a five-man infield and a grounder by Tony Fernandez forced Whitt at the plate. A grounder in front of the plate by Lloyd Moseby got Gruber at home for the second out, setting the stage for Ducey's game-winning walk.

Mark Eichhorn, 6-2, got the victory with two perfect innings of relief, striking out three.

Toronto starter Jimmy Key had a no-hitter until the the seventh. He hit Wally Joyner to lead off the inning and Brian Downing followed by hitting his 13th homer of the season. Doug DeCinces then hit his fourth home run of the year, tying the game 3-3.

White Sox 3, Red Sox 2

CHICAGO — Harold Baines' run-scoring double with two outs in the 10th inning Saturday gave Chicago a victory over Boston.

With one out in the 10th, Jerry Royster, who had homered in the first inning, drew a walk off loser Wes Gardner, 0-2. Gary Redus struck out and Baines followed with his double off the left field wall, scoring Redus from first.

The victory, the 10th in the last 14 games for the White Sox, went to reliever Bob James, 2-2.

Chicago's Jerry Royster led off the first inning with his second homer of the season, a drive into the upper-deck in left field off starter Bruce Hurst.

Boston went ahead with two runs in the fourth. Wade Boggs and Jim Rice both singled and Dwight Evans drew Jose DeLeon's first walk to fill the bases. Mike Greenwell singled to right, scoring Boggs and Rice.

Athletics 4, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Tony Phillips' two-run double capped a three-run rally in the sixth inning and the Oakland Athletics won their fourth straight game, beating New York to deny the Niekros the all-time major league victory record for brothers.

Mike Davis' leadoff homer sparked the sixth-inning comeback and Terry Steinbach also homered, helping injury-troubled Joaquin Andujar win his first decision of the season.

Joe Niekro, 3-4, took the loss, leaving him and his brother Phil at 529 combined victories, tied with Gaylord and Jim Perry. With Phil on leave from the Cleveland Indians and in attendance, the Yankees scored three runs in the first inning, but Joe Niekro was unable to hold the lead.

Steinbach, who went 4-for-4, connected for a two-out homer in the fourth inning, making it 3-1.

In the sixth, Davis led off with his 11th homer before Niekro retired the next two batters. But Reggie Jackson walked, Steinbach singled and Phillips doubled to right-center, putting Oakland ahead and knocking out Niekro.

The next attempt at breaking the brothers record will come Monday night when Phil pitches for Cleveland against Detroit.

Mariners 12, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE — Mike Morgan pitched a seven-hitter, and Dave Valle and Jim Presley hit consecutive fourth-inning home runs as the Seattle Mariners routed the Baltimore Orioles 12-0 Saturday night.

It was the highest run total for Seattle this season.

Morgan, 5-5, pitched his first shutout of the season and his second in 46 major league starts. He struck out four and walked none.

The Mariners staked Morgan, who has won five of his last seven starts, to a 2-0 lead in the fourth on consecutive homers by Valle and Presley off Orioles starter Eric Bell, 5-2. Valle, who drove in three runs, hit his fifth homer of the year with one out. Three pitches later, Presley followed with his eighth homer, his first of two in the game.

Seattle added an unearned run in the fifth when Valle drew a two-out walk, moved to third on a single by Presley and scored on an error by third baseman Ray Knight on a pick-off throw to third.

The Mariners scored four more runs in the sixth. Rey Quinones chased Bell with a one-out RBI single, bringing on left-hander Jack O'Connor. The Mariners then loaded the bases before Phil Bradley scored one run with a sacrifice fly and Valle singled in two more.

Baltimore's Memorial Stadium launching pad of '87

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Forget the Kingdome, Wrigley Field and Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. The place to hit home runs these days is the friendly confines of Baltimore's Memorial Stadium. Since the start of the 1985 season — when a giant scoreboard was built in center field and helped block the wind from blowing in — there have been more homers hit there than any other ballpark. There have been almost 3½ home runs per game in Baltimore this year, the highest rate in the big leagues, and Thursday night the Orioles set a major-league record with their 56th homer this month. The "scoreboard up-homers up" effect was also seen a few years ago at Texas' Arlington Stadium, when a new scoreboard cut off the wind currents that used to blow in from center field. Next to Baltimore, the top home run palaces since 1985 are Tiger Stadium and the Metrodome in Minnesota, mainly because of homer-hitting lineups and pitching staffs that give up the longball.

Rickey Henderson of the New York Yankees began the season with 23 straight successful stolen base tries, but has been caught in his last three attempts ... St. Louis third baseman Terry Pendleton is bringing back memories of a young Dave Concepcion when playing on artificial turf. Pendleton has taken to bouncing his throws across the diamond to first base, the way Concepcion used to do from the hole at shortstop in his earlier years with the Reds.

Baseball Notes

The Los Angeles Dodgers continue to wonder about Mike Marshall. The power-hitting outfielder has been hampered by injuries for two years and does not seem to be rushing to get back into the lineup. Marshall stayed in Los Angeles recently during the Dodgers' East Coast trip — with the understanding he would attend daily rehabilitation treatments for an injured left index finger, yet missed several of the workouts because he said he had the flu ... The New York Mets, who have seen their pitching staff decimated by injuries, are in San Diego this weekend and the likeliness of a trade with the Padres grows. The Mets have shown some interest in Storm Davis, and Dave Dravecky and Eric Show are also in the trade picture.

The Yankees always knew Ron Guidry would return. They never removed his locker, nicknamed "Gator's Corner" and kept his favorite set of drums stored at Yankee Stadium. Guidry likes to play the drums to relax before games. ... Rookie pitcher Jose Nunez is creating a small rift between the Toronto Blue Jays and Kansas City Royals. Toronto drafted Nunez from the Royals for $50,000 in December and must keep him on the major-league roster for at least a year. If not, the Blue Jays must offer him back to Kansas City at half the price or work out a deal with the Royals. The Blue Jays want to retain the seldom-used Nunez but would prefer to send him to the minors for more seasoning. The Royals are said to be asking for either Rob Ducey, Sil Campusano or Todd Stottlemyre, all top prospects, in exchange for letting Toronto send Nunez to the minors.

Elsewhere: Brad Komminsk, the one-time "can't-miss" outfielder whom Atlanta traded in the off-season, is batting .306 with 10 home runs and 29 RBI for Milwaukee's Triple-A Denver team. ... Chris Pittaro, who once had such a good spring that Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson wanted to move All Star second baseman Lou Whitaker to third, is hitting .284 with no homers and 17 RBI for Class AAA Portland (Minnesota).

The Atlanta Braves might be better off keeping Charlie Puleo as a starter, rather than using him in relief. Puleo has a 2.45 ERA in three starts this year, but a 12.19 ERA as a reliever. ...

Is it Lakers' turn, again

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Sometimes the Los Angeles Lakers are beatable in the NBA playoffs, like last year.

"But not this year," Doug Moe said. "This year, they are playing to the maximum. This is their year.

"Everything is popping right for them. Everything is flowing their way," said Moe, who coaches the Lakers' Western Conference rivals, the Denver Nuggets. "They've had no injuries, no problems. They've come together. It's just one of those years. A dream year."

Every year seems to be a dream year for either the Lakers or the Boston Celtics. One or the other, often both, show up in the NBA finals with remarkable regularity.

"Winning breeds winning," said Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Phoenix Suns.

This is the fifth time in the last six years Los Angeles has played for the NBA title and the 11th time the Lakers have been in the finals since the league had a repeat champion — Boston, 1968 and '69. LA has reached the final round 15 times since 1962. No team — and that includes the Celtics, winners of a record 16 titles — has played for the championship more frequently during that period.

Last year, Moe knew the NBA's defending champions were ripe to be beaten in the playoffs.

"Last year, I knew they were not as good as their standard," he said. "I thought somebody would get them. I figured it would be the winner of our series against Houston. I told people that."

He was right.

THE ROCKETS beat the Nuggets last spring and then eliminated the Lakers to advance to the NBA finals. It may have been the worst thing to happen to the rest of the league.

"That loss put the Lakers on a mission," said Mike Schuler, coach of the Portland Trail Blazers. "It made them all the more determined this year. They are great competitors with tremendous pride."

The Blazers finished a respectable 49-33 in the Pacific Division. It was good enough for second place behind the Lakers, 16 games behind.

"They are a great team that had a great season," Schuler said. "They are the best team in the NBA. They're very good defensively with great quickness and outstanding defenders. They're the best fast break team in the NBA with very talented athletes, probably the best athletes in the NBA."

The Lakers have the league's most valuable player in Magic Johnson and the league's best defensive player in Michael Cooper. They have the league's all-time leading scorer in Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and a maturing James Worthy, who may be the league's best power forward.

Colangelo is amazed at how well Abdul-Jabbar is still playing at age 40. "He has been fighting the clock and Father Time, but you have to reach to say he's slowed down," he said. "He is such a dominant factor by his mere presence on the court that it defies logic.

"Then there is Magic. He makes everyone on that team so much better. He's the glue, the leader. He's raised himself to another level this year. That's why he's the MVP."

Johnson led the Lakers in scoring with 23.9 points per game this season — the first time since 1976-77, when he joined the team, that Abdul-Jabbar has not been the top scorer.

"They took the wraps off Magic," Portland's Schuler said. "He's so good offensively. He plays with a great deal of confidence and he makes the other guys better with his passing ability."

ABDUL-JABBAR was the Lakers' No. 3 scorer, but that hardly suggested a falloff in his production. In fact, as LA waited for the NBA finals to begin, the team made it clear it would like him back for two more seasons.

"He's still got good basketball left in him," Schuler said. "They use him so well."

Coach Pat Riley starts Johnson and Byron Scott at guard with Worthy and A.C. Green at forward, and Abdul-Jabbar at center. Cooper comes off the bench along with Mychal Thompson, acquired late in the season from San Antonio.

"That's three players — Johnson, Worthy and Abdul-Jabbar — who were No. 1 draft choices," Colangelo said. "That's a lot of talent. Riley is a guy who doesn't get the credit he deserves. He's a fine coach. You need a certain personality to keep all those egos in sync."

The lineup, though, is not that much different from the one that washed out against Houston a year ago, when it seemed the Rockets might be ready to replace LA as the best in the west. Yet the Lakers produced a 65-17 regular- season record — second best in their history — and are 11-1 in the playoffs, with the same players.

"It has nothing to do with the players," Denver's Moe said. "It's an attitude. It's not just talent. It is awesome talent and it is playing up to the potential. Sometimes teams do and sometimes teams don't. This Laker team does. They are totally awesome, just too good."

'Woo-Woo' returns to Wrigley

By MARIO FOX

CHICAGO (AP) — After missing all 21 Chicago Cubs home games this season, Ronnie "Woo-Woo!" Wickers promises he'll be back in the Wrigley Field's bleachers Monday. And, like a star slugger coming off the 21-day disabled list, he likely will be greeted heartily by other Bleacher Bums.

Wickers hadn't missed a Cubs' home game for 17 years. So, when the 45-year-old street person who often told people the Cubs were his whole life, didn't show up at a single game this spring, people thought he might be dead.

"I'm alive. I'm not beaten up," Wickers said Thursday night when finally located by friends and reporters. "It's nice to know people are concerned."

When Wickers was in the stands, it was difficult not to notice him because of his relentless chanting through the lineup: "Cubs, Woo! Sandberg, Woo! Davis, Woo! Cubs, Woo!"

Jerry Pritikin, another Bleacher Bum, described Wickers' voice as a woodpecker crying in an echo chamber.

With an infectious smile and vivacious personality, Wickers roamed the bleachers.

His voice carried for blocks around the ballpark, and Cubs announcer Harry Caray often mentioned him on the air, once saying "I wish I had the pipes on that guy."

So, the absence of the likeable Wickers prompted speculation that he had left town, had been banned from Wrigley Field by Cubs management, or even that he may have been killed in an alley.

"I heard he was beaten to death," Cubs outfielder Gary Matthews said. "The players were all talking about it. He's a celebrity."

The Cubs had denied he had been banned from the park.

Unmarried, Wickers was difficult to find. He had been a drifter, staying at different friends' homes, panhandling drinks in North Side bars and using extra Wrigley Field tickets from Cubs players to get food.

He talked Cubs, Cubs, Cubs to anybody who would listen.

Wickers, Pritikin and a dozen or so others — immortalized by "Bleacher Bums," a popular play of the 1970's, are the only ones left of the regulars who have graced the stands beyond the outfield's ivy-covered wall since that zany season in 1969 when the usually inept Cubs almost won the National League pennant.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC AUCTION

A number of abandoned motor vehicles now being held in custody by the Chief of Police, City of Midland, Texas, will be offered for sale at public auction to the highest bidder for each piece of property separately, and all sales shall be for cash.

The right is reserved to accept or reject all or part of any offer and to accept the offer most advantageous to the City of Midland, Texas. All offers to buy must be "as is, where is". Two weeks will be allowed for removal of these vehicles. Any vehicle not removed during this time will be subject to storage at the rate of $6.00 per day from the date of the sale.

All buyers will remain at the auction site at the end of the sale to pay for any vehicle purchased. Buyers will be issued a cash receipt at the time of purchase. Auction sales receipts will be mailed to the buyer within two weeks of the sale. Buyers may obtain "Certificate of Title" from the State of Texas with the auction sales receipt.

This public auction will be conducted June 13, 1987 at 10-00a.m. Place: Motor Vehicle Impound Lot, 1603 Orchard Lane, Midland, Texas. The impound lot will be open for inspection of the vehicles at 8-00a.m., June 13, 1987.

For further details covering this sale, contact the Midland Police Department Traffic Department, P. O. Box 1152, Telephone, 915/683-4281, Ext. 381.

In the good old

Summertime

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

With the school year almost over and summer vacation looming on the horizon, Midland parents are already bracing themselves for the onslaught of their children's "summer boredom syndrome." After the first flush of freedom wears off, it seems that most children start whining about having "nothing to do." Some children are even desperate enough to follow their mothers' suggestions of cleaning their rooms — but not many.

So, in place of children spending countless hours in front of the television, numerous businesses and organizations are sponsoring summer activities to keep the youngters' boredome to a minimum.

In the interest of summer sanity and peace in the home, the following is list of a few organized activities planned for children to get the summer started:

PETRO-PLAINS COUNCIL OF CAMP FIRE INC.

Petro-Plains Council of Camp Fire Inc. will offer several programs, including:

- Swimming lessons will begin June 8-12 at a private pool in Midland. Beginners' lessons will be at noon; advanced beginners at 1 p.m. and intermediate swimmers at 2 p.m. Class size will be small, and a qualified instructor will teach. Fee will be $6, and participants can register through June 4. Children kindergarten age and up are invited to participate.
- Soccer Skill Camp for beginners through advanced players will be 6-8 p.m. June 9-11. Midland Soccer Association referees will teach soccer skills to children kindergarten age and older. Fee will be $1. Registration will be through June 8.
- Students 11 years old and older are invited to attend a Babysitting Course 9:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m. June 16 at the Camp Fire office, 1024 B Andrews Highway. Class fee will be $5; registrations will be accepted through June 15.
- Microwave and Manners Class presented 11 a.m.-1 p.m. June 17 at the Camp Fire office will help children kindergarten age and older learn to cook and eat lunch without trouble. Class fee will be $3. Registrations accepted through June 15.
- June 23-24, students first grade and older are invited to travel to Abilene for a picnic, a visit to the zoo and a tour of Dyees Air Force Base. Participants will leave Midland at 9 a.m. June 23, stay overnight on the base and return to Midland 1 p.m. June 24. Fee will be $7. Registration will be through June 12.
- Trip to Carlsbad Caverns' New Cave will leave Midland 8 a.m. June 30. Fourth graders and older are invited to participate. Trip fee will be $8; registrations accepted through June 26.

Activities are open to both members of Camp Fire and non-members. A one-time fee of $6 allows non-members to participate in all Camp Fire summer events. For more information or to register call the Camp Fire office, 694-7704.

MUSEUM OF THE SOUTHWEST

A summerful of classes, movies and family events have been planned at Museum of the Southwest.

- Movies for children will be presented 2 p.m. alternate Wednesdays at the museum throughout the summer, beginning with "The Care Bears Movie" June 10. Other movies scheduled include "The Incredible Journey," June 24; "Bedknobs and Broomsticks," July 9; "Night Crossing," July 22; and "The Bears and I," Aug. 5.

Admission will be $1.50 (and proof of membership) for members and $2 for non-members. Children younger than 6 years old must be accompanied by parent.

- The museum's Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum will be open through June 21 at Midland Park Mall. Hours are 1-9 p.m. Thursdays-Fridays; 10 a.m.-9 p.m. Saturdays; and 1-6 p.m. Sundays. Children must be accompanied by adults. Mondays and Wednesdays can be reserved for groups wishing to visit the children's museum. For reservations call 683-2882.

The Museum of the Southwest also will offer a variety of classes in its "Museum School" this summer, such as:

- Creative Dramatics for children ages 4-6 with their parents, 9-10 a.m. June 8-12. Children and parents will make puppets and create their own puppet shows.
- Blowin' in the Wind for children 7-9 years old, 9-10 a.m. June 15-19. Students will learn about wind and make "wind art" such as kites, pinwheels and windsocks.
- Clay, Clay and More Clay for 10-12 year olds, 9-10:30 a.m. June 15-19. Students will learn teachniques needed to make clay creations.
- Learning from Architecture for 10-12 year olds, 9-10:30 a.m. June 15-17. Architect of the new children's museum will discuss concepts in architecture.
- Animal Hunt, Sketch and Paint for students aged 10-12, 9-10:30 a.m. June 22-26. Students will "hunt" for animals shown in the museum's permanent collection, sketch the animals and paint from their sketches.
- The Great Critter Hunt I for 5-7 year olds, June 29-July 3. Children will study West Texas wildlife to learn which are harmful and which are not, and see some friendly animals on the nature trail.
- All About Watercolors I for students ages 8-11, 9-10:15 a.m. July 6-10.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Last weekend's torrential rains may have caused some changes in plans, but they did not cancel the many social events already scheduled nor dampen the spirits of those attending.

Midland Country Club's big 60th anniversary bash was held Saturday. However, the golf and tennis tournaments and swim races scheduled earlier in the day had to be postponed until Memorial Day. But members and their families began converging on the club in festive spirits around six o'clock that evening in anticipation of the celebration. Reservations surpassed the 600 mark at last count.

Festivities began with a hamburger cookout on the patio, with the party-goers seated in every nook and cranny of the clubhouse for dining. A 10-foot, chocolate birthday cake was later served to the crowd.

Tim Thompson served as master of ceremonies. Following the welcoming remarks, he outlined the club's history.

A highlight of the affair was the awarding of the $1,500 West Texas Crude Tuesday pot to Bill Simmons. Special recognition went to Madeline and Bill Pomeroy for holding the longest membership in the club and to Rebecca and Dana Engelstad, the newest members.

The popular band, "Night Life," provided music for dancing.

It was appropriate that the Ladies Association would have the 60th reigning Miss America, Kellye Cash, as their guest for their May luncheon meeting, which kicked off the club's 60th birthday activities.

A special guest with Kellye was her traveling companion and road manager, June Graves of Hurst. June is the cousin of Midlander Joanne (Mrs. Leland) Franz.

Jan and Bob Fitting hosted a cocktail party in their home to honor Kellye. Guests included the club's board of directors and their wives and the Ladies Association board members and their husbands.

Special guests were Warren Tammel, who helped with arrangements for Miss America's appearance here; club manager J Stepp and his wife, Phyllis, and assistant manager Steve Elrod.

FIVE MIDLAND BRIDE-ELECTS and their fiances were honored with a dance last weekend, but the Big Rain forced the party to be moved to the American Legion Hall. It was originally to be held outdoors at the home of Pat and Dan Black.

The honorees were Shelley Jowell and Chip Smith of Clovis, N.M., Tricia Jowell and Joe Cobb of Paris, Jill Leifeste and Brent Bays of Fort Worth, Deborah Mashburn and Lance Armstrong of Midland and Heather Trotter and Nicholas Nemeth of Ottawa, Ontario, Canada.

Co-hosting the party with the Blacks were Shirley and Budge McDonnold.

The rock band, "Michael Michael," of San Antonio provided the music. A clever touch was the enlarged photos of the honored couples placed by each of the brides' books.

MORGAN KENNEDY and her fiance, Brad Moody of Washington, D.C., were honored here last weekend at several festive events.

To announce the couple's engagement and approaching marriage on Sept. 5, Morgan's parents, Mary and Bill Kennedy, entertained with a cocktail buffet at their home on Friday evening.

Saturday's best laid plans for a street dance on Hanover Drive had to be revamped when the rains came. The party was moved indoors to the site of the former Caludio's Restaurant.

Guests enjoyed dancing and dining on hamburgers, hot dogs and burritos. The host couples were Dyan and Frank Agar, Johnna and Sid Curle, Marty and Jim Conine, Andree and Bill Hickey, Joanie and Bobby Holt and Betty and Pom Smith.

A luncheon was held last Sunday noon at the home of Betty and Charlie Dean, with Mary Anne Lindley as co-hostess.

That evening, Morgan's friends entertained with a party at the home of Roz and Arden Grover to honor the pair. The theme was inspired by Morgan's position with the foreign service in Montreal, Canada. The invitation, which had to be decoded, listed dress for the evening as "Incognito." The party cups were printed with the couple's Social Security Numbers in lieu of their names. At the bridal book, guests not only signed in with their names, but with their thumbprints.

Co-hosts were Rosson and Eric Killingstad, Peggy and David Eckley, Lisa Smith, Sigrid Martin, Mary Lively, Mary Jane Davis, Mary and Scott Thompson, Dinah and Tom Zapatka, Cliffy and B.J. Beal, Chandler Lindsley and Susan and John Nichols.

Brad's parents, former Midlanders Ann and Rush Moody of Chevy Chase, Md. and his brothers and sisters, Tom, Stephen and Sara Moody and Catherine Eshelman, came in for the festivities.

THE RAINS temporarily ceased the evening of May 23 to allow host couples, Maxine and Willie Good, Dilly and Shorty Nance, Jackie and Bob Luvisi and Phyllis and Bob Stine, to proceed with an "indoor-outdoor" patio party honoring Judy Wecker Berger and George Blakeman, both of Fort Worth.

Judy and George plan to marry on June 9 in Fort Worth's Botannical Gardens.

The party, held at the Goods' home, served to introduce the couple to friends of Judy's parents, Vera and Paul Wecker, and as an opportunity for Judy to renew friendships made when she lived in Midland.

TEN MIDLANDERS TRAVELED to Fort Worth last weekend for the 45th reunion of Arlington Heights High School's Class of '42.

Those going from here were Phyllis and John Grimland, Angie and Carroll Grafa, Frank Bass, Mary Frances Beverley, Betty and Robert Gaines and Zuma and Charles Renaud. They enjoyed a visit with Kirk Cansler of Austin and formerly of Midland.

Festivities included a casual get-together on Friday night and a dinner-dance on Saturday evening at Shady Oaks Country Club.

TIM BROWER, a senior at Lee High School and son of Julie and Pat Brower, has been honored at two recent graduation parties.

A "Sneakers and Shades" party was held at the home of Hermine (Mrs. Gene) Erwin. Cohostesses were Hermine's daugher Lynn (Mrs. Don) Dawkins of Oklahoma City and Dottie (Mrs. Norm) Barker.

Guests enjoyed swimming and a "build your own" taco supper.

A sign on the gate read "Sneak on in," with orange footprints leading to the party area. Decorations included sneakers, sunglasses and balloons and an orange and white color scheme for UT-Austin, which Tim plans to attend.

A "Pig-out Pizza Party" was held at the home of Tim's sister and her husband, Suzanne and Doug Laufer. Co-hosting were Betty and Don Trott.

The party decor featured a red and white color scheme and a collection of pigs in various media belonging to Betsy (Mrs. Carl) Shepherd.

Air show celebrates women's role in aviation, space

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Stephanie Wells overcame the doubts of her parents to become a pilot for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Jeana Yeager parlayed a childhood fascination with helicopters into a career that includes her around the world non-stop flight with Dick Rutan in the experimental Voyager.

Patty Wagstaff, a barnstorming pilot from Anchorage, Alaska, went from listening to aviation stories on the lap of her airline pilot father to the cockpit of stunt plane.

Wagstaff, Wells and Yeager were among participants at the first International Women's Air Show, which concluded its three-day run at San Diego's Brown Field on Memorial Day. "I like the idea of a women's air show because it makes people aware that women can do the same spectacular things that men can," said Wells, who staffed the NASA display with astronaut Kathryn Sullivan, the first American woman to walk in space.

Thousands turned out during the three days to see aerobatic performances of Wagstaff and two-time women's aerobatic champion Betty Stewart.

"When I was a girl, I had posters of airplanes in my room. Flying came naturally to me. Everything else seems hard," said Wagstaff.

Event organizer Nancy Callahan, who thought of the show two years ago, said she hopes it will open more doors for women in what traditionally has been a male-dominated profession.

Wells was among the second group of women selected for pilot training by the Air Force after the service opened military flying to women in 1976.

"Everyone told me I couldn't do it especially my parents," Wells said. "That's why I did it. My parents didn't think it was practical for a young lady. They're proud of me now, and I don't remind them too much of what they told me before."

Fireflies join fight against disease

Copley News Service

The magic of fireflies is being used to detect harmful bacteria in drinking water.

Researchers at the University of California at San Diego say what they've learned about fireflies will also help stop urinary infections and aid the fight against other basic bacteriological disease.

It seems the good doctors at UCSD have simply discovered a way to copy the luciferase enzyme, which normally converts light energy to chemical energy in fireflies, and have inserted it into harmful bacteria.

Once that's done, they just turn out the lights and look for the disease.

Programs are for children 4 years old and older. Three-year-olds may attend if accompanied by adults. Preregistration and tickets are not required.

MIDLAND YMCA

Midland's YMCAs — Central, Alamo, Washington Community Services and Town West — will offer a variety of summer programs designed for children and teenagers.

■ Day Camp for children aged 5 and older will be available in 12 sessions, each a week long, June 8-Aug. 28.

■ Wellness Camp at Central YMCA will emphasize health, nutrition and aerobics for children aged 5-12. Weekly sessions will be presented June 8-Aug. 28.

■ Summer Recreation, featuring music, tennis and aerobics, for children 6-12 will be available at Alamo and Washington YMCAs June 8-Aug. 28.

■ Kinder Kamp at Alamo for children aged 4-6 will be presented in week-long sessions, June 8-Aug. 28.

■ Swimming, both recreational and lessons, for persons from 3 months old to adult will be available June 8-Aug. 28, as will Gymnastics for students aged 12 months to 18 years.

■ Leadership Programs for teenagers 13-18 will be presented at Central, Alamo and Community Services.

■ Karate for students age 6 and older is an on-going program at Central and Town West YMCAs which will also be available this summer.

■ Tri-Sports Clinic at Town West will teach racquetball, wallyball and swimming to students aged 8-18.

■ Racquetball lessons and leagues will be available for children 7 years old and older at Town West.

■ Summer Sports Academy at the Washington YMCA will begin June 8 for athletes age 6 and older.

For more information on the area YMCA summer programs, call Janet Mellard's YMCA.

PETROLEUM MUSEUM

Petroleum Museum summer classes for children will include:

■ Hello, June for 4-6 year olds, 9-10 a.m. June 8-11. Children will be introduced to the world of dinosaurs.

■ Dinosaur Ways for 6-8 year olds, 10-11 a.m. June 8-11. Students will compare features and names, dig for fossils and create dino-art.

■ Dinosaur Days for 9-12 year olds, 9:30-11:30 a.m. June 15-18. Time concepts, discoveries, research and modeling fun will be taught.

■ Let's Play Indian for 5-7 year olds, 9-10 a.m. June 22-25. Children will learn about tipis, wickiup and Indian tools, as well as dances and crafts.

■ Indian Artists for 8-12 year olds, 10-11 a.m. June 22-25. Arts, crafts, models, lifestyles and exploration will be taught.

■ Creature Creations for 9-12 year olds, 9:30-11:30 a.m. July 6-9. Students will study and model ancient sea life using wax, plaster and latex.

■ Under the Microscope for children 6-8 years old, 9-10 a.m. July 13-16. Children will discover the hidden world revealed by microscopes.

■ Micro Glow for 9-12 year old students, 10-11 a.m. July 13-16. A chance for the older students to work with the microscopes.

■ Rocks & Stuff for 4-5 year old children, 9-10 a.m. July 20-23. Children will be introduced to rocks and minerals.

■ Rocky Road for 6-8 year olds, 10-11 a.m. July 20-23. Children will identify rocks, experiment with minerals and collect.

■ GeOlogy for students aged 9-12, 11 a.m.-noon July 20-23. Students will learn about earth science and discover oil.

For more information about summer programs at the Petroleum Museum, call 683-4403.

Because of space limitations, the above could only be a partial list of scheduled summer activities for Midland's younger population. The list, in actual fact, literally goes on and on.

There's also parks to play in, pools and private pools for swimming, rinks skateboards and skates to ride, lanes bowling, alleys, skating rinks and miniature golf courses. And for good clean fun, there's the Permian Basin's own Water Wonderland.

If all else fails, clean your room.

Baseball cards collectors avid

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A 1952 cardboard image of Mickey Mantle in mint condition, is a $3,000 investment for the serious baseball card collector. Nostalgia buffs could pay $400 for Jackie Robinson's first card, and twice that amount for a Willie Mays image.

Less affluent collectors could begin with younger rookies, like Don Mattingly, Ricky Henderson, Eric Davis and Cory Snyder, whose cards have doubled in value since they first joined the major leagues.

"People hear stories about finding a '52 Mantle in their garage," said Loren Scafford, owner of one of Albuquerque's oldest and largest sports collectibles shops.

It took more than 15 years for Scafford to build up his impressive collection of baseball memorabilia. Now his Baseball Nostalgia is stocked with nearly 2 million cards, 15,000 autographs, jackets, caps, pennants, bats, books, magazines and collectors' supplies of all kinds.

Like many collectors-turned-dealers, New Mexico's baseball card salesmen say they started out small. They traded and bought from childhood friends who hadn't yet parted with their cards. Gradually they sold off the duplicates and earned enough to advertise.

Scafford advertises in Albuquerque Dukes programs that he is the only dealer in town, even though others in the city sell cards full time.

"I sell nothing but sports collectibles," he said.

SCAFFORD SAID he has it all — cards of early '50s vintage and beyond, complete sets from each of the three major card companies, rare old cards once made by tobacco companies, Hall of Fame plaques and autographs galore.

Another dealer, Robert Wood, said his Albuquerque antique shop was saved from bankruptcy when collectors discovered his baseball card stock.

CNS Photo

In fact, the card business at Blue Parrot Antiques is so brisk, Wood plans to abandon antiques and sell nothing but baseball collectibles.

"I wasn't surviving at all waiting to sell a rare, $700 tin toy," Wood said. "But I can easily sell 100 $7 baseball cards in a week."

Baseball card sales account for nearly 75 percent of Wood's business, he said.

Wood said the competition is stiff, but said he's finally found what people are looking for.

Loyal card consumers responsible for the soaring baseball card market range in age from the very young to the old-timers from an earlier era, said Ken Klein, manager of another shop frequented by baseball card collectors.

KLEIN SAID 7- to 15-year-olds are the steadiest baseball card buyers, but middle-aged collectors spend the most at one time.

And it's possible more people could take up the hobby when the Brooklyn-based Topps Co., known for the cards it packages with bubble gum, makes 4.5 million shares of its stock available to U.S. investors.

One Albuquerque businessman and collector, who asked that his name not be used, said baseball cards are the hottest investment in the country.

The businessman said he doesn't want his family or his employer to find out how seriously he's taking the hobby.

"I've gone middle-age crazy," said the 43-year-old collector. "My family thinks I'm happy as a traveling salesman. But when I find a place to lease, I'm going to quit my job and open a baseball card shop."

The future shop-owner, who moonlights as a card dealer at a weekend flea market, said he's confident about opening a business because New Mexico still is in the minor leagues when it comes to baseball cards.

"Every time I go to a city anywhere in America, there are a few more baseball card shops," he said.

The dealers agree today's booming card market may indicate a bandwagon phenomenon, but none fear a bottoming out of the popular collectible.

Scafford said he'd rather sell one card at a time to regular customers than large quantities to speculators he doesn't know.

"BUT BUSINESS is business, and I've got to make a living," he said.

Wood said speculators cause some card prices to soar at unjustified rates. He said he doubted investors will ruin the market, but he warned the market could dip if speculators begin to lose interest.

The dealers said demand for cards is at an all-time high. And collectors predict the number of promising players in the major leagues today will make 1987 the best year ever.

"I never worry," said Klein. "There will always be baseball card collectors."

Expert: Birthdays special to children

Associated Press

Dr. Benjamin Spock believes birthdays are very important to children — and Spock, celebrating his 84th birthday, still remembers fondly the presents and parties of his childhood.

Not only does the birthday child enjoy being the center of attention, Spock wrote in the May issue of Redbook, but even more the child enjoys getting presents.

"Children are materialistic — even more so than adults are," Spock wrote. "They love to own a possession for its own sake, especially if another child already has the same thing."

He said children also view presents as a sign of love from parents — and when siblings suspiciously compare each other's gifts it is part of their rivalry for their parents' love.

Parties were another source of fun in his family, Spock wrote. "I learned when I had a family of my own that such festivities can be difficult times for parents."

It helps to have parents of guests and the birthday child's father on hand to help with emergencies.

Most embarrassing is when the birthday child acts up, fighting or demanding a gift from a child who didn't bring one.

"The hostess feels like spanking her child, but this would only increase the turmoil."

Instead the parent should apologize to the guest and smooth over any hurt feelings. She can lecture her child on better manners after the guests have gone.

"But I advise parents to try to hold down the number of invited guests to six if they can," Spock wrote. "A small group is much easier to handle and is less likely to get overexcited."

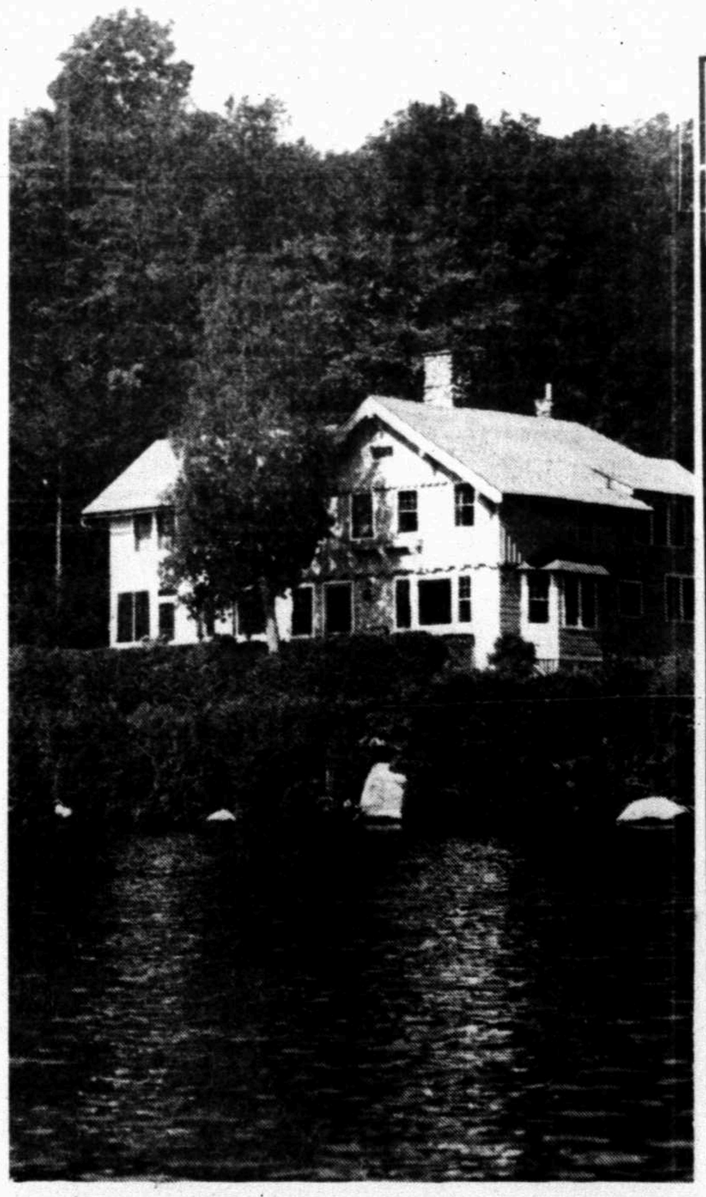

"The activities you plan for the party will make a big difference in the ease with which you can keep things under control," Spock wrote.

He warned that hide-and-seek, musical chairs, hunting for pennies, tug-of-war, blind man's bluff and similar games tend to get boys in the 6- to 10-year-old age group wildly excited.

Reminiscing about his own childhood, Spock wrote in Redbook that he used to judge presents by weight — which worked well when he was given a complete camping outfit, less so when the weighty gift was an unappreciated set of encyclopedias.

Ad man designs creative billboard as marriage proposal

By JEFF GOTTLIEB
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — There is the traditional marriage proposal — candlelight, soft music and bended knee.

Then there is the Don Potter marriage proposal: In big black letters, on a billboard 30 to 40 feet in the air on Encino's Ventura Boulevard, a spot 40,000 cars pass daily.

The billboard went up at 8 a.m. Monday, across the street from Fromin's Restaurant and Delicatessen.

The location was key. The object of the billboard's attention, Sue Mendelsohn, 39, is one of Fromin's owners.

The message was direct: "Sue, Like Bagels and Lox, We Belong Together. So Marry Me, Already! Love, Don."

The couple have been going together for nine months, and living together with his two daughters and her son for the past two months.

"Sue said, 'If you ever propose to me, it had better be creative, Mr. Ad Man,'" said Potter, who is president of Potter & Mack, Inc., an advertising agency. "I said if I ever do it will be."

Potter, 50, delayed his proposal for a couple of months, not because he had his eye on someone else, but because the billboard was occupied.

Sue spotted the message as she walked from her office into the restaurant. "My heart started pounding," she said. "I got very emotional."

She called Potter. "I said, 'Now that's a proposal,'" he recalled. "And she said, 'OK.' I said, 'OK what?' She said, 'Yes.'"

The couple met for lunch that day, and Potter slipped the solitaire diamond engagement ring on Mendelsohn's finger.

The sign came down Friday. The wedding is expected late in the year.

Linen symbolizes purity of brides

Copley News Service

There's a long tradition behind the custom of a bride taking linen articles to her new home. Linen — spun from fibers of the flax plant — is the oldest fabric known to man, prized for its strength, absorbency, soft luster and smoothness.

To the ancient Egyptians, linen symbolized purity and was the only fiber worn by the pharaoh's royal court and by priests and worshipers in the temple. In ancient Greece, a bride arriving at her new husband's home wound flax around the doorpost. Then, holding her spindle and distaff to symbolize her industry and thrift, she was carried over the threshold by her groom.

The first known matrimonial advertisement appeared in John Houghton's "Collection for the Improvement of Husbandry and Trade" July 19, 1695:

"A gentleman about 30 years of age that says he has a very good estate would willingly match himself to some young gentlewoman that has a fortune of 3,000 pounds or thereabouts. And he will make settlement to content."

Wedding gift buying often a challenge

By KEN FRANCKLING

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — Unusual times, and close friendships, can result in unusual wedding gifts for the modern bride and groom.

Many guests have trouble finding the right gift these days because some couples already have everything they need to set up house. This is especially true in an age when more people marry later in life, tie the knot after years of a live-in relationship or wed for the second time.

Instead of viewing the gift selection as a dilemma, consider it a challenge to find something unique and special for the lovebirds. A gift — or a memory — that they will always cherish is something that is limited only by your imagination.

The better you know the couple, the better you can tailor the gift.

If they have their fill of silver, pewter, china and crystal — or loathe anything that needs polishing — consider an artsy book for the coffee table. Preferably, it should be on a subject that interests them.

Tickets to an upcoming play or concert can provide them with a memorable evening, especially if the show has a romantic theme or if one of their favorite performers or road companies is coming to town.

Do they like to dine out? Many restaurants offer gift certificates or make custom arrangements for special meals. Consider dinner for two at a posh restaurant they have not yet discovered.

If money is no object, or you want to pool funds with other guests for a group gift, there are many other possibilities the couple will never forget.

■ Picking up the tab for a romantic weekend away at a resort or favorite spot. Many hotels in the mountains, at the beaches and in major cities offer getaway weekend specials. If you are especially generous, you could also volunteer to look after the pets and the plants while they are gone.

■ A hot air balloon ride (which can run $125 to $200 per person for a one-hour flight).

"It's definitely a popular gift item from either individuals or groups of people. It's good for second marriages, or 40th birthdays or 20th anniversaries," says Paul Stumpf, a Providence-based hot-air balloonist who has been arranging gift rides for the past 7 years.

"We've done everything from wedding gifts to actually holding a wedding in the balloon," Stumpf said. "Up went the clergyman, the bride and groom, the best man and maid of honor. (But) we tend to discourage actual weddings because with ballooning, the weather is very critical. You've got to be flexible."

■ Arranging for a romantic candlelight dinner at a favorite sentimental location — in a meadow, beneath the stars, by the sea. Who needs a restaurant when an imaginative caterer is around?

"We've done lots of small private dinners, not always in association with a wedding gift," says Michael Moskwa, owner of Michael's Personalized Catering in Providence. "Some have been in the privacy of the home, like a catered breakfast in bed, or stocking a specialty picnic lunch for a canoe trip."

Through Michael's, a classic breakfast-in-bed gift for two runs about $150. The service person will bring all of the utensils, fresh flowers, a favorite newspaper and a three-course breakfast likely to include fresh squeezed juices, croissants or rolls, a bottle of "upscale" champagne, eggs Benedict and a sweet dessert like chocolate truffles or raspberry crepes. Service takes about 90 minutes.

"Special requests are not unusual at all," Moskwa said. "Many times, people arrange for gift certificates allowing the recipient to enjoy a catered meal at the time and location of their choice."

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be pulished within one month of the anniverary date.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-adressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Summer camps offer everything from computers to sailing

By KAREN CALDWELL
Copley News Service

Most summer camps promise kids fun-filled days packed with such familiar activities as marshmallow roasts around the campfire, nature hikes and crafts. But this summer, you can pack your little ones off to practice the saxophone or hobnob with sports pros as well.

There now are more than 11,000 camps in America, and such specialized camps for computer or water-ski instruction are a far cry from the simple two-week outing that Frederick William Gunn led in August 1861. He took the students at the Gunnery School for Boys in Connecticut on a camping trip to Long Island Sound, and was credited with initiating the first organized camp in the United States.

Making the decision to let a child go to camp, especially for the first time, can be traumatic enough for a parent. But choosing a camp from among the myriad possibilities — one you likely haven't visited before — can be a task almost equal to choosing a college.

To narrow the field, consider factors such as a camp's location, says an article in Working Mother magazine. If Junior is only 7 or so, he might sleep better (and stay at camp) if he knows Mom and Dad are only a car trip away.

ALSO TO be considered are length of stay and cost. Traditional private resident camps usually have seven- or eight-week sessions at a cost of $2,000 to $3,000. Nonprofit and specialty camps tend to schedule shorter sessions — oftentimes at lower prices. Day camps often are ideal for younger children.

Foremost, though, is the decision to send your child to a traditional camp filled with sports, swimming and songs, or a specialty camp that would further a fledgling interest in computers, basketball or fine arts.

Sports camps: If you have an aspiring Magic Johnson or Mary Decker Slaney, a sports camp might be just the ticket to boost your child's athletic ability. Often offered by university athletic programs, sports camps can provide training in dozens of areas such as swimming, track-and-field events, golf, tennis, gymnastics, volleyball, softball, basketball, baseball, football and wrestling.

Many sports camps concentrate almost all available time on their designated activities, so they are more like clinics than summer camps.

FOR RECREATION, there are dozens of camps that offer instruction in activities such as scuba diving, horseback riding, rock climbing, canoeing, mountaineering, surfing, sailing, waterskiing and archery.

Arts programs: Many camp programs are designed to instill a lifelong appreciation of the arts and to encourage the development of artistic talent in areas such as drama, fine arts, music and dance. Children usually devote part of their days to instruction and practice, and spend free time on more conventional camping activities such as hiking, playing volleyball or swimming.

Weight loss: At weight-loss camps, kids can learn behavior modification techniques side-by-side with their peers in a friendly, relaxed atmosphere that includes traditional camping activities as well as diet supervision.

The methods a child learns are structured so he can apply them in the real world once camp is over.

Adventure camps: Youngsters can learn as much about themselves as they do about nature in adventure camps. Experiencing the wild swish of whitewater in a raft, getting a bird's-eye view from a mountain peak or learning to live off the land during a survival expedition are just a few of the many options.

ALONG WITH adventure, children usually learn first-aid and search-and-rescue techniques.

Academic camps: A child can become computer literate, learn a foreign language or speed-reading, or simply become more motivated through the many academic camps available. The camp setting can be a great place for a child to brush up on his math, learn about marine biology, astronomy or log some hours on the computer. Kids mix scholarly studies with swimming, horseback riding and talent shows.

Some camps provide instruction in more recreational and social areas, such as etiquette and photography.

Family camps: Some camps are camps for families such as those offered by the National Wildlife Federation and Sierra Club. Mom and Dad can come along and take part in courses such as wildlife photography, plant identification and canoeing trips. Accommodations vary from private rooms in lodges to college dorm rooms.

ONCE YOU'VE narrowed the field, you can begin a focused search for that promising camp. Visit camp fairs and search through camp directories such as the 1987 "Parent's Guide to Accredited Camps" (American Camping Association). Also, check advertisements and community organizations such as the Boy and Girl Scout Councils or YMCA for references, suggests the Working Woman article. Your child's schoolteacher and parents of other children also can be valuable resources.

When you've targeted a camp, Ken Baker of Gold Arrow Camp in the High Sierras suggests this checklist for evaluating it:

Ask about the staff and the equipment. Are there enough horses, enough sailboats?

What is the basic philosophy? There are non-competitive teaching camps; others are sports team-oriented.

CHECK THAT the camp is accredited by the American Camping Association or the Western Association of Independent Camps. A camp must have an excellent safety record to be listed by either organization, he says.

The ACA also will supply parents with a list of questions to ask a camp director, such as:

What are your qualifications as a director and are you involved in the daily operation of the camp?

Do you carry liability insurance?

What does the camp do to maintain a safe environment (in fire and emergency drills, good first aid and medical procedures, etc.)?

Can you supply references of families who have attended camp?

What is the ratio of campers to counselors?

Your little camper, of course, will give the final evaluation through firsthand experience. If the "Hello Mudder" letters give the programs and activities good reviews, and your child starts talking about "next year" toward the end of camp, you can be confident your research and planning led to the right choice.

Safely surf, swim, sail through summer

By PAUL TAUBLIEB
Copley News Service

CNS Photo

Don't be a drip and stay dry. The water awaits. And there's water, water everywhere — offering a cornucopia of aqua adventures to suit the tastes of everyone.

There's only one caveat, and one that should be taken seriously. Before getting in over your head, learn to swim. Besides being one of the most effective cardiovascular activities in the world, swimming is fun. And knowing how to swim is a prerequisite for safely enjoying the multitude of water sports available. It could save your life.

Perhaps the best place to learn to swim is at your local YMCA, where courses are offered for all ages and levels of proficiency. Unfortunately, not enough people do learn to swim. In California, drowning is the No. 1 cause of death of accident victims under the age of 5.

Now, once you've mastered the rudiments of staying afloat, a wide world of wet and wild options awaits.

Remember how the Beach Boys sang "Catch a wave and you're sittin' on top of the world"? They were talking about surfing, one of the most exciting water sports you can find. These days, you don't even need an ocean to enjoy the art and sport of riding waves. There are wave pools at numerous water parks throughout the country, such as Big Surf in Tempe, Ariz., inside the West Edmonton Mall in Alberta, Canada, and at Dorney Park in Allentown, Pa.

And, while California is the heartland of surfing, there are plenty of good waves on both the East and Gulf coasts as well.

WHEREVER YOU surf, the first rule is never to go alone. Actually, this rule applies for any water activities. The "buddy system" may be something you first heard of when you went to camp, but it's one system that hasn't become obsolete.

If, like most people, you learn to surf at the ocean, make sure your first days are spent in small waves. Boards can be rented at shops that dot the coasts, and the shops also are excellent places to pick up information on conditions and the best spots.

If the ocean looks like a washing machine for Godzilla, sit it out. When you do hit it, stay away from the crowds; head down the beach and practice getting the hang of paddling, understanding the way the waves are breaking and slowly work on standing up. Before long, you may well be screaming that old surfer's cry of joy: Cowabunga!

Now, you don't have to stand up on a board to enjoy the fun of frolicking in the surf. One of the fastest growing water sports is bodyboarding. And it's easy. Bodyboards are sort of like short, soft surfboards that you ride on your stomach. Unlike a surfboard, they can't konk you on the head, and they're easy to use. Just swim out and ride in on the first wave you see.

Bodyboards (sometimes called boogie-boards) also are great for riding rivers and just playing with at the lake.

Another piece of aquatic equipment that does double duty on the ocean and in inland waters is the sailboard. Sailboards are expensive — as much as $1,000 — so the best thing to do is rent one at a shop where you'll also be able to arrange for lessons. Don't be macho about thinking you can just take the board out and start gliding across the water. No, it's not that sailboarding is hard, it's just that there are a few tricks to getting the hang of it, and the investment in lessons will be worth the hours of frustration you'll avoid.

Sailboarding is ideal for lakes and rivers, especially where there's a constant source of wind. On most days, by the way, the wind will come up in the afternoon, which makes this one sport that's perfect for those who like to snooze through the morning.

ONCE YOU'VE gotten the hang of it on flat water, you can move up to the ultimate challenge of sailboarding — wave-riding. This is serious stuff, only the experienced need apply. But if you can handle it, you'll find it's about as thrilling an experience as you can find.

Actually, you don't have to get wet to enjoy the water. You can find challenge, fun and feel the sea breeze blowing through your hair by boating. And there's something to suit virtually every pocketbook, from a rubber dingy to a lavish yacht.

But no matter the size of your craft, safety rules. Unfortunately, that's not always the case. According to Rear Admiral Thomas T. Matteson, chief of the Coast Guard's Office of Boating, Public and Consumer Affairs, less than 15 percent of recreational boaters, or only one in six, has completed a recognized boating course. And they pay for it.

"Statistics tell us that those who take a course for a couple of hours one night a week over a period of several weeks are far less apt to be involved in an accident," says Matteson. The U.S. Coast Guard offers courses in boating safety throughout the country.

"The Small Boat Journal" recently selected six great summer getaways for inland cruising for the small-boat owner. Heading the list was a tour of the scenic and historic Rideau Canal in Canada. Their fantasy itinerary also suggested a trip through the bayous of Ocala National Forest in Florida — a perfect vacation for the canoeist.

Canoeing actually is an easy, fun sport for people of all ages. With a little practice, you'll quickly learn that the canoe really is quite stable and depending on your energy and enthusiasm, paddling can either be a relaxing endeavor or full-blown workout. A lot of people don't realize that a canoe can be the ideal small boat for fishing. Canoes can get to a lot of secluded spots that power boats can't, and there are no noisy engines to scare off the fish.

If, however, the idea of languidly sliding through the water seems a bit too sedate, there's plenty you can do when you slap an engine on a boat.

Many lakes, rivers and bays are the perfect locale for waterskiing. Yes, there's the old two-ski, and no doubt, there's plenty of fun in that. But to up the thrill ratio, drop one ski and slalom. It's not as hard as it looks, and experts say the trick to getting the hang of it is the right equipment.

WHEN YOU want to go "solo," pick a ski that's extra wide around the tail. That configuration provides slightly more resistance to the power of the boat and offers more stability.

Of course, if you want to get totally involved in water sports, then forget about skimming over the water. Grab a mask, fins, snorkel and tank and go underneath. Scuba diving and skin diving are sports that take you into the realm of another world — peace, tranquillity, beauty and excitement.

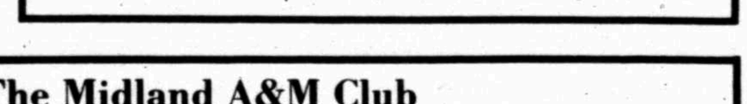

Skin diving (without the tank) is easy to learn. Once you get the hang of breathing through the snorkel, you'll find that looking through the mask will open up an exotic, undersea landscape. Scuba requires you to take a course, which you'll find offered at many diving centers and most YMCAs.

Over the water or in the water, it doesn't matter. Just get wet. Your only regret will be that you'll have so much fun this summer, you'll never want it to end.

HEALTH WATCH

Swimming popular exercise for Americans

More than 75 million Americans swim regularly. Here are some of the benefits of swimming for exercise.

Heart and blood circulation: Heart pumps 5 to 10 percent more blood through the body when immersed in water.

Exercise: Water 18 to 20 degrees cooler than body temperature helps prevent overheating during exercise, helping to reduce fatigue.

Burning calories: Swimming burns calories. Swimming 25 yards per minute for 1 hour burns 275 calories; 50 yards per minute will burn about 500 calories in an hour.

Husband's habits frustrate wife

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a "night person." He gets up at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and goes to sleep at 6 a.m. He won't even boil water for a pot of tea for himself, so I have to live according to his upside-down schedule, which I hate.

I get my room and board and $10 a month — and that's it. He honestly believes that's all I need — or deserve. (He pays all the bills.) He's far from poor. In a few years his investments will net him over a quarter of a million dollars, but he acts like we're headed for the poorhouse.

He will spend hours — all night if necessary — "balancing his books" until every penny is accounted for. He insists on knowing the menu for every day, and goes with me to buy groceries for the week to make sure I don't buy more than we need.

Is he crazy or am I? He retired three years ago and I haven't had a minute to myself ever since. I can't even go to the library without him. Abby, I've actually found myself wishing he would die. I've seen a counselor to help me vent some of my anger. I've tried to get him into counseling, but he refuses. He's not mean or abusive, he's never raised his voice to me. He'd cut off his arm before he'd strike me, but I feel as though I'm being nibbled to death by a velvet mouse. — NIBBLED

DEAR NIBBLED: You're worse than "nibbled", you're emotionally battered. Your husband is a possessive, selfish, controlling man who is obsessed with money and concerned only with his own needs. You need further counseling to either learn how to live with this miserable miser, or gather the gumption to leave him. Yours is no life for a free woman, an — you are a prisoner as surely as if you were behind bars. Yes, he is a little "crazy," and if you continue to live with this penny pinching tyrant, you're as crazy as he is.

DEAR ABBY: My brother's wife wrote to our children, inviting them to visit her, saying the plane tickets would be her treat. This entails a 900-mile flight. The children are 4½ and 11 years old.

My husband and I are furious because we weren't asked how we felt about having our children make that kind of trip alone. Now they have been invited, and if we say they can't go, Mom and Dad are the "bad guys."

How should this be handled, Abby? — STEAMED

DEAR STEAMED: Write (or call) your brother's wife and tell her that when your children are of legal age they can accept or reject all invitations, but until that time, they do not make those decisions — their parents do.

DEAR ABBY: My wife is older than I am. This was of no concern to her when we were married in our '30s, but as we are getting older, she is beginning to worry that I may seek a younger woman. How do I reassure her? She is almost 91, and I am 88. — RETIRED REAR ADMIRAL IN MARYLAND

DEAR WORRIED: Promise not to step out with a woman under 70. To paraphrase Benjamin Franklin in his advice to a young man to take an older mistress: "They don't tell, they won't swell, and they're grateful as h—."

DEAR ABBY: Are pantyhose considered undergarments? I work for a company that requires its female employees to wear pantyhose under their dresses. Abby, does an employer have the right to insist on it? I personally think it's degrading for a woman to be told what to wear under her dress. Your opinion, please. — ARIZONA WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: I would say that pantyhose qualify as undergarments. And I think an employer has the right to require the female employees to wear hosiery as opposed to appearing bare-legged. But the employer wouldn't have a leg to stand on to insist on pantyhose specifically.

Taxpayers spend billions in aid to teen-age mothers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taxpayers spent nearly $18 billion last year on food stamps, medical care and cash assistance for all families begun as a result of a teen-ager giving birth, the Center for Population Options said in a report.

The center, which seeks prevention of adolescent pregancies, said its projections are conservative because they do not include expenditures for public housing, special education, child care, foster care, child protective services and other social services.

The nation spent $17.9 billion last year, a $1.3 billion increase from 1985, in direct and administrative costs for food stamps, Medicaid and Aid to Families with Dependent Children for families begun by a teen-age mother, the center said.

The group estimates that babies born to teens last year will cost the nation a total of $5.5 billion over the next 20 years, including housing and social services.

By 2006 U.S. taxpayers will have spent an average of $14,852 per child born to a teen-ager in 1986, the group said.

Actual costs are much higher, the center said. Since two out of three teen-age mothers do not receive welfare, the average cost of a single birth to a teen who does receive public assistance is closer to $37,500.

The group said federal family planning programs could save $3 for every $1 spent on serving teen-agers. The group, which advocates better access to information about sexuality and family planning for adolescents, works with schools, youth agencies, corporations and churches to develop teen pregnancy prevention strategies.

'Medi-gap' policies sometimes helpful

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Due to gaps in Medicare coverage, many Medicare participants choose to purchase private insurance to fill all their health care needs. These supplemental policies, often referred to as "Medi-Gap," basically pay for some or all of the Medicare deductibles and co-payments. However, these policies usually do not pay for health services denied by Medicare as being not reasonable and necessary. In working with a number of Medicare participants, one concern that keeps surfacing involves which supplemental policies or policy to purchase.

With so many insurance companies involved in this area of coverage, the policy possibilities are numerous and often confusing. Due to the high degree of apprehension among Medicare participants concerning Medi-Gap policies, the following check list may be useful in comparing supplemental insurance policies:

■ Does the policy pay $130 per day not covered by Medicare if your hospital stay lasts from 61 to 90 days? NOTE: Statistics show the average hospital stay to be only seven or eight days. Medicare pays full or partial costs for stays of three months and is thus usually sufficient hospital coverage.

■ Does the policy pay the $260 per day that Medicare does not cover if you have to stay in the hospital for more than 90 days and must use some of your "lifetime reserve" days?

■ Does the policy help you when, in rare cases, that your hospital stay extends to 150 days and can no longer receive any Medicare?

■ Does the policy help you if need more than the 190 days in a lifetime for which Medicare will cover psychiatric care?

■ Does the policy pay the $65 a day not covered by Medicare if you stay in a skilled nursing facility for more than 20 days? NOTE: Statistics show the average nursing home stay to be only 20 days. In addition, Medicare denies coverage in almost all cases of longer stays not "medically necessary." For these reasons it may not be helpful to buy insurance to pay the $50 per day skilled nursing facility co-payment unless you are prepared to appeal the Medicare denial.

■ Does the policy help out if you have been in a skilled nursing facility for 100 days and can no longer receive any Medicare for your stay? NOTE: Long term custodial care can be the most costly expenditure in connection with a serious injury. However, Medicare doesn't cover it at all. It just covers skilled nursing services for a short time. Very few private insurance policies cover custodial care either. In fact, many policies tend to be very vague on the entire subject of nursing home care.

■ Does the policy pay 20 percent of allowed "reasonable charges" (doctor's bills, outpatient services, etc.) not covered by Medicare Part B?

■ Does the policy pay the excess of doctor's bills above the Medicare allowed "reasonable charge" when the doctor won't take the assignment?

■ Does the policy help pay for other costs not covered by Medicare, such as private nurses, long term custodial care in nursing homes, prescription drugs outside the hospital, eyeglasses, hearing aids, dentures, routine dental care or regular check-ups with your doctor?

■ Does the policy cover charges or portions of charges that Medicare may not consider to be "reasonable and necessary?"

For more information on Medicare, Medicare gaps and supplemental insurance, contact the Social Security office for a copy of "Your Medicare Handbook" or the National Association of Insurance commissioners and the Department of Health and Human Services for a copy of "A Guide to Health Insurance for People with Medicare."

Mothers' art of guilt-spreading dying

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

This may be the most frightening revelation you will read all year. The passing of guilt from parent to child is a dying art. That's right. The "gift that keeps giving" has tapered off because working mothers feel sorry for their children and don't want to burden them with more pressure.

This has been the most depressing news to me since I was 12 and refused to eat my lima beans and made my mother sick. We're talking about an American tradition here that is as old as dirt. Guilt should never be considered a curse that is passed on, but rather a bonus for having children of your own where the power shifts and you have your day in the sun. It's the evolution of Motherhood as it was meant to be.

One mother recently confessed to me that she had never spread guilt in her entire life. She didn't know how. And she calls herself a mother!

I told her, "There's nothing to it. For starters, when you arrive home from work tonight, drag tiredly into the living room where the kids are watching their favorite game show and say, 'Would you bring in the groceries from the car?' Give them three seconds to respond. NOT ONE MINUTE LONGER. Then suck in your breath and with dead, vacant eyes turn and say, 'Never mind, I'll do it myself.' It will make them feel positively rotten. If you can manage to turn your ankle lugging in the groceries, or get a concussion when the door slams on you, it's all the better. They won't be able to live with themselves."

"It sounds cruel," she said.

"Nonsense, that's how they stockpile guilt for their own children. That line will be perpetuated for years to come."

Answering machines are a great catalyst for guilt. At the sound of the beep, say, 'I know you're lying in bed listening to me and I'm glad you're getting your rest. Don't bother to call me back. You're busy. I just wanted to tell you I hardly hurt at all today.' Then when he calls back right away, don't answer it.

It's distressing to me that mothers no longer take the egg with the broken yolk, grab the fork with the bent prongs or are silent for a week, saying only, "You know what you've done." I never had such a good time as I did the year I had "WELCOME" written across my chest and went to a Halloween party as a doormat.

My friend shook her head and said, "Are you saying that children should be a part of our suffering?"

"Sweetie," I smiled, "they are the REASON for our suffering."

Lamesa Patches Up the Past

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a three-part series on West Texas landmarks.

Despite difficult economic times, a small West Texas community of about 11,800 — which relies on two of the hardest hit industries in the area, oil and farming — has managed to raise $250,000 to restore the town's pride and joy — downtown Lamesa.

The downtown area features inlaid brick streets lined by brick-fronted stores that circle a grassy town square. The scene appears to be from another time and place. Like a well-kept movie set, it conjures up phantoms of gunfights, horse-drawn carriages and stagecoaches riding out of town.

Please see LAMESA, Page 2F

LAMESA

Take away the automobiles and signs, turn the stop lights back into hitching posts and, with a little imagination the Old West could surely live again in this town. And the fortitude that allowed ranchers in 1876 (when the first land sale was recorded) to carve a niche out of the vast West Texas prairie land still seems to exist in Dawson's county seat today.

The same dedication to Lamesa exhibited by its forebears is felt by the townspeople today, according to Wayne Smith, chairman of the Dawson County Historical Commission, president of the Lamesa Chamber of Commerce and superintendent of public schools. A man of many hats, Smith admits he can't "be involved enough" in Lamesa. Of course, he has a certain loyalty to the town where he was born and raised.

SO WHEN the Historical Commission decided to revamp the downtown area and restore the Dal-Paso Hotel, built in 1926, and to add a museum on the second floor, Smith got the word out to newspapers. "Soon, the Mabee Foundation in Midland offered us a challenge," Smith said. "If we could raise $100,000, then they would give us $150,000."

"Donations poured in from Texans, despite the economy," Smith said. "Though there were many $5 and $10 donations, surprisingly enough, we raised the $100,000 and with the Mabee Foundation's $150,000, we have $250,000 to work with to remodel the hotel and museum."

Lamesans were bent on preserving their heritage, according to Smith. "History is not dates and names to us. It's not where or when somebody was born that matters," he said. "It's that they did things they didn't have to do to help the community. People are not remembered just because they lived long ago. It's what they did to add to the quality of life that matters."

SMITH ADMIRES the spunk of earlier Lamesans. "Especially the handful of ranchers who helped organize the county," he said.

According to records, in 1905, cowboys on the Barto Ranch wanted to establish a post office in the corner of their ranch, so they got together and wrote an actual wagonload of letters in order to impress postal authorities and secure the county seat. Pleased with their output, the men suggested their city be named Chicago.

"Somebody had a sense of humor," Smith said. "There couldn't have been more than 15 residents in Chicago at the time. But they had to name the city something in order to receive mail."

INSTEAD, GOVERNMENT authorities gave the nearby tableland, two miles from Chicago the Spanish name "La Mesa," which later became "Lamesa." Even worse for the Chicago-hopefuls, officials designated the county seat in Lamesa. Undaunted, "The men picked up the town of Chicago one day — their building and horses — and moved it to Lamesa," Smith said.

"I guess it's the sense of isolation out here that makes us stick together. When the sand is blowing out on a farm, it's a pretty lonely feeling. But more than that, being a rancher or an oil field worker keeps us in touch with the land. We develop a close feeling to our land and the history of those who worked it before us. That's what keeps us tied to Lamesa."

— Wayne Smith

Aside from preserving the oral and written history of Lamesa, Smith is working to preserve the physical history. The city plans to move an existing museum to the Dal-Paso Hotel. "So named because it was supposed to be one of the best places to stay between Dallas and El Paso at the time it was built," Smith said.

SECTIONS OF the hotel have already been restored and the Chamber of Commerce has relocated to a downstairs area. Despite the remodeling, Smith said, "We intend to try and keep the hotel the way it was. For instance, we are restoring the pressed tin ceiling."

Lamesa also boasts two medallion homes, Hardy Morgan Homestead, 12 miles south of Lamesa but still in the city limits and the Lindsey House in town. One of the first ranch homes in the area, the Hardy Morgan Homestead is a house fashioned from rocks, built in 1905.

The Lindsey House, built by M.C. Lindsey in 1909, was among the first homes in the area. "The Lindsey's were so gracious, that when the county was incorporated, the Lindseys allowed their front room to be used as a funeral parlor," Smith said. "There just wasn't any other place in town for a funeral parlor."

"Lindsey was the first judge of Dawson County. He and his wife probably did more for Lamesa than anyone," Smith added. "They put all their money back into the city."

LINDSEY ARRIVED in Lamesa in 1903. He and his father surveyed the town site. Later, Lindsey set up a fund for the First Baptist Church (one of the most impressive ivy-covered edifices in Lamesa) and donated land for a park. In 1956, his wife, Tommie, published a book on the history of Lamesa. "She did it the hard way," Smith said. "She didn't have a computer. She hit the road, talked to people and took notes."

Smith feels the same need the Lindseys had to collect the history of Dawson County. He is compiling an annotated bibliography for researchers. Smith, who has a bachelor of arts degree in in English from Baylor University, a master's degree in English from Texas Tech University and is working on his doctorate in administration in education, is doing his master thesis on Dawson County. He also has allowed his home to become a storage place for old tin types and photos.

"My house is full of photos and stuff left by people, some who have died. My wife complains every time she sees another box coming in," he said, laughing.

SMITH SAID he isn't alone in his vigil to preserve local history.

"Every year we have a Pioneer Reunion for residents and former residents. Anyone who has been in Lamesa for 20 years is a pioneer."

Once every five years, Lamesa has a Tornado Jubilee. "Between 8,000 and 10,000 people come back for that reunion," Smith said.

So, what is the attraction that has residents clamoring to restore the downtown area built in the early 1900s, and keeps former residents of Lamesa coming back?

"I guess it's the sense of isolation out here that makes us stick together. When the sand is blowing out on a farm, it's a pretty lonely feeling," Smith said. "But more than that, being a rancher or an oil field worker keeps us in touch with the land. We develop a close feeling to our land and the history of those who worked it before us. That's what keeps us tied to Lamesa."

---

Lamesa is located 55 miles north of Midland on Highway 349. The Lindsey Medallion Home is located on 602 South Bryan in Lamesa. The Morgan Hardy Homestead is located 12 miles south of Lamesa on SH 137 and the Dal-Paso Hotel is located on the corner of South First Street and Main in downtown Lamesa.

Fundraiser benefits three organizations

From Staff Reports

Junior Woman's Club raised $7,992 profit from the ticket sales from the May 3 Parade of Homes fund-raiser.

Four homes opened to the public for viewing were 3200 Lockheed, residence of Mr. and Mrs. Gaddy; 4602 Island Drive, residence of Mr. and Mrs. Cristobal Engleman; 4904 Island Drive, residence of Mr. and Mrs. Greg Frazier; and 3400 Millbrook, residence of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Cox.

The proceeds were given to the Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, and Special Care Infants.

'Hog' not animal

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — In the forest products industry, a portable hog isn't a traveling farmer's companion.

According to Georgia-Pacific Corp., a wood products company, a "portable hog" is a movable machine that once was used at logging sites to grind wood or bark into chips for fuel. The wood was usually waste unsuitable for lumber or other uses.

Pioneers recall oil boom

Associated Press

BORGER, Texas — E.D. "Don" Baker can remember horses pulling wagons along the muddy streets the day when he came to Borger.

It was April, just a month after A.P. "Ace" Borger established the town.

"It was full of life," Baker said. "And I fell in love with it right off the bat."

That was 61 years ago. Baker was a young man, 23 or so, and selling insurance. He soon became fast friends with three other young men — J.D. Williams, W.T. Harrell and Fritz Thompson.

Three of the four gathered recently in Baker's office on the second floor of the First National Bank to recall the early days of Borger — and set straight the record: "Bawdy Borger" wasn't so bad in the '20s and it was filled with "good, clean people who wanted a great town," they say.

If Williams had made the trip to the bank that day, the four would have comprised about 244 total years of living in one city — a town they helped to build and make its history.

Williams ran a cafe here for years and had been a barker in a carnival before landing in Borger in 1926, coming from Hamilton.

Baker came from Drumright, Okla., near Tulsa, selling insurance and seeking a fortune in the oil boom of the time.

Thompson arrived in 1928, joining his two brothers in a hardware store which was located along Main at the old Heard and Jones Drug Store site.

Harrell says he first came with a different plan.

"I came through Borger enroute to California. From Drumright and Three Sands, Okla. I figured to stay a few weeks, make a little money cutting hair and go on to California," he recalled. "And I'm still here."

Harrell, better known as "Slim" these days, can't say how many haircuts and shaves he has given the past 61 years, but he recalls the day that Hutchinson County District Attorney Johnny Holmes came in the six-chair, five-bath shop he ran on Main Street.

"Johnny climbed into the chair and about that time, Texas Ranger J.W. McCormack came through the door," Harrell said. "'Slim, I need to talk with Johnny,' he said. I backed off, but could hear him 'Johnny, if you don't get straight and stop playing around here they're going to kill you,' he said. Then he walked out."

Holmes got his hair cut and left.

That night, about 9 o'clock, Harrell was at his Phillips camp residence when he heard gunshots across the alley where Holmes lived.

"I looked outside just in time to see this man run down the alley. He had blue jeans and a dark shirt on," Harrell said.

Holmes died that night. A grand jury indicted the man that Harrell believes he saw — Jim Hodges, who ran the American Boilerworks among other things — but Harrell says, "They never could convict him."

Hodges left for Oklahoma and died there. Harrell kept right on cutting hair in Borger, but the haircut for Johnny Holmes that day may still be his No. 1 act of business.

"But it wasn't all bad — no, far from it," Baker said. "Oh, we had three dance halls — Nattie Castleberry had the most popular. You could buy a dance ticket for 10 cents — 10 for a dollar — and dance around the floor with a girl. It was fun. Most of the girls were OK, they were just trying to make a living."

Besides Nattie's, there were Pop's Dance Hall, operated by Pop Murphy on 10th Street and a third such establishment, the name of which the three men could not recall.

But dancing and having fun weren't the main things in life those days.

"No, people came to make a town," Thompson said. "Folks like former Mayor J.A. Robinson, and there was Fritz Ostrom, who ran a grocery for years around here — and a place in Phillips for a long time. They wanted a good town and lots of people pitched in to help."

Borger stayed because of the good people who cared and the vision they had of a great city, Thompson said.

Would Thompson, Baker, Williams and Harrell do it over?

"Yes," Harrell said. "It was worth it and still is."

There's no place like Homeplace

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

The shackled oxen grunt and snort as they bend their burly backs to the yoke, dragging the wooden plow through the dense Tennessee soil.

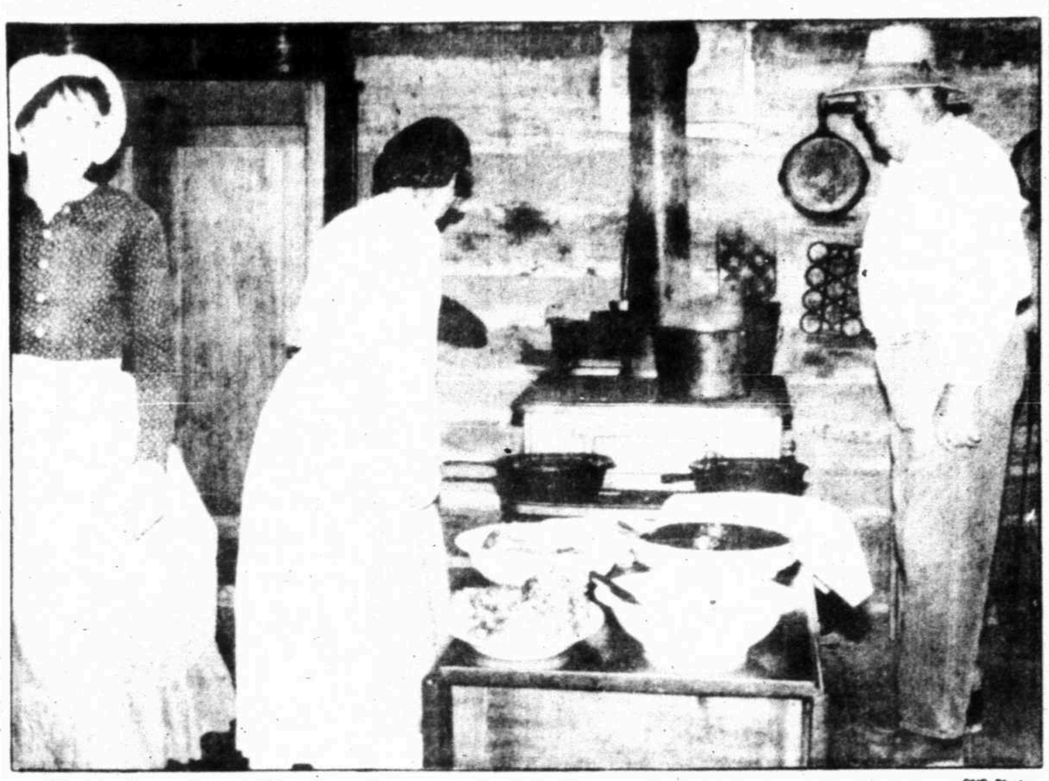

The farmer, in his homespun shirt and tattered big overalls, cusses out the stubborn beasts as he urges them on. "Move, you dad-burned animals, you. I got another 2 acres t' plow 'fore dinner!"

Back at the log farmhouse, a shriek pierces the air from the kitchen. "Lordy sakes! My muffins is a burnin'," the frazzled housewife exclaims.

Welcome to The Homeplace.

Ma and Pa Pryor are pioneers. They settled their 40 acres of land between the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers around 1850, and they are trying to eke out a living from the wilderness soil.

The Pryors, along with their sons, daughters and helping hands, are residents of the Land Between the Lakes, a recreation area in Kentucky and Tennessee administered by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

CNS Photo

Ma Pryor keeps a farmhand at bay in the kitchen when he tries to snatch some of the goodies being prepared over the open fire for an evening feast.

THE TVA has reconstructed a pioneer farmstead in the wooded Tennessee hills to show modern-day visitors what it was like to live in the area in the last century.

Visitors walk down a dusty road from the interpretive center to the son's dogtrot house. It is a fine, long building — much bigger than Ma and Pa's little cabin just down the road.

A delicious aroma wafts through the air as Ma and the son's wife cook up a feast. Tonight, the family is celebrating.

Katie Pryor just announced she is getting married. Ma and Pa are as proud as peacocks that their eldest daughter is gettin' hitched.

The ceremony will be held right on the porch of the son's house, as soon as the harvest is in and the circuit preacher comes along.

The womenfolk, in their long dresses and starched white aprons, are cooking up a storm. The table is heaped with pickled onions and fresh cabbage slaw. Split pea soup with smoked ham chunks bubbles in an iron pot over the wood fire in the hearth.

Ma breads the freshly butchered fowl for her famed fried chicken. Fresh-churned butter awaits the homemade biscuits baking in a dutch oven buried in the hot coals. And a special treat tonight will be fresh spring greens, a welcome change from the dried, smoked and pickled foods that sustained the family through the winter.

COOKING ALWAYS is taking place at the cabin, but what's on the menu depends on the season of the year and on what has been planted in the vegetable garden behind the barn. But the other activities going on in the fields, barns and workshops depend on the season.

In the spring, the fields must be plowed and the sheep sheared. In summer, the crops must be hoed and weeded, fences must be mended and the livestock tended. In fall, it's harvest time. Corn must be brought in and stored in the corn cribs, tobacco must be cured in the shed, hogs have to be butchered and smoked, and the bounty of the gardens must be pickled, canned or dried.

In all, there are 16 buildings gathered from throughout the area at The Homeplace. Besides Ma and Pa's square, one-room log cabin and the son's two-room dogtrot house, there are several barns, a smokehouse, workshop and a springhouse, everything needed to be self-sufficient in the wilderness. The family also has an orchard, vegetable garden and fields, which they tend daily, when not chatting with 20th century visitors.

To make the transition from modern times to the past, visitors pass through an earth-sheltered reception center, where they see a seven-minute slide show on what they are about to experience. There also is a small museum displaying farm tools, kitchen utensils and other relics of the pioneer era. There is no charge for the slide show and museum, although there is a small admission for going back to the past. The Homeplace is open from March to November.

About 20 miles farther north, a farm of a different era beckons. The Empire Farm, also operated by the TVA in the Kentucky part of the Land Between the Lakes, is a modern version of the self-sufficient farm. While some aspects are high-tech, such as the solar cells and solar hot water heaters for the house, other aspects beckon back to the past.

Food is still grown on the farm, and canned and preserved in the old ways, but they may be heated up in a microwave oven. Wool sheared from the sheep out back may be spun into yarn and woven by hand, but garments are sewn on a modern machine.

UNLIKE THE Homeplace, the people at Empire Farm are thoroughly modern. They are using the best of modern technology with the commonsense ways of the past to become self-sufficient. Visitors can wander the farmhouse, outbuildings and livestock pens at will, or they can attend a seminar or workshop on a variety of homemaking and energy-related topics in the main building.

The TVA has preserved several other relics of the past in the LBL area as well. The area was once a prosperous iron-producing area. Huge stone blast furnaces were built in the woods and fed by iron ore and limestone mined nearby.

One of these ancient iron furnaces has been reconstructed and sits just outside The Homeplace.

Just a few steps away from Empire Farm is the Woodland Nature Center, which reflects another mission of the TVA: to preserve the LBL area in its natural state. A snake slithers around the neck of a naturalist as a turtle splashes around in an aquarium. Nearby, a child clicks away on a computerized nature game, while others wander among the displays on geology and botany. Nature talks and walks are scheduled.

Berlin's birthday celebrated

Copley News Service

Two small settlements on the River Spree united and became the great city that is now Berlin. That was back in 1237.

Today, 750 years later, Berlin is celebrating an anniversary in a manner truly characteristic of the city — bold, lively and culture-oriented.

The celebration, which will continue through fall, will focus on art, architecture, sports, science and industry, and music.

For example, an architectural exhibit of Berlin's past, present and future continues through Sept. 13, and artifacts and film document historical forms of travel to and from Berlin through Nov. 1. Berlin in the Middle Ages is featured in a display through Nov. 1.

Sports fans will want to take in the German Gymnastics Festival in Olympic Stadium through June 7, with 60,000 German gymnasts competing. This will be followed July 1 by the Tour de France when cycling competition will be held throughout the streets of the city.

Also planned through June 30 is a retrospective of Berlin's importance as a film center from the 1920s to the present, and a science and industry exhibit June 12 through Nov. 1.

Artists and scholars will present work focusing on Berlin's urban dimension June 13 through Sept. 20. Prince Carl of Prussia's collection of ancient, Byzantine and medieval art will be shown Aug. 1 through Oct. 31, an exhibit of Berlin history and culture spanning 750 years will be displayed Aug. 15 through Nov. 22, and three centuries of Berlin history in painting will be on exhibit Sept. 19 through Nov. 1.

Musical events will include a rock salute to Berlin on Aug. 1 and a celebration by the Berlin Philharmonic of works of composers forced to leave Germany under the Nazi regime Sept. 1 through Oct. 4.

Travel by rail done with 'style, romance'

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

The mystique of old-fashioned railway travel through the Canadian Rockies is being celebrated with the "Rocky Mountain Daylight," a restored train designed in the style and romance of the Roaring '20s.

The nine-car one-class train has been lovingly restored with varnished woods and burnished brass fixtures. The carriages, whose windows open at every seat, are fitted with cushioned seating, compartments for smoking, and vestibules with dutch doors for individual, stand-up viewing. The front car has baggage doors for "taking the air" and the rear observation car has a brass trimmed observation veranda reminiscent of the "California Limited" and the "Overland."

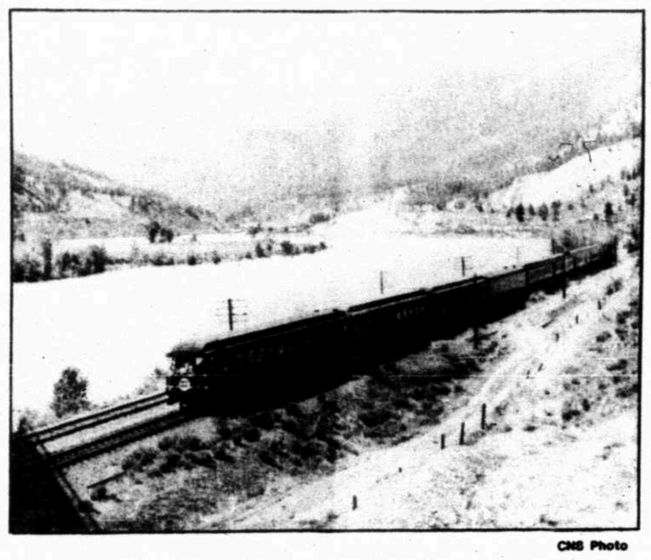

Snowy tablecloths and attractive china are an integral part of the restaurant. All of the meals are created on board under the supervision of six chefs. Features include morning champagne eye openers, fresh croissants and muffins, coffee and tea served buffet style in every car. An extra-fare full course breakfast is available in the dining car. Afternoon hors d'ouvres are served buffet style in each car with an optional "high tea" available in the diner.

Between today and Aug. 30, the "Daylight" will depart every Sunday from Vancouver, British Columbia, on a 500-mile journey to the Canadian Rockies. From lush farmlands to the rugged river canyons, the train will follow the Gold Rush routings of the 1850s. An overnight stop is made in Kamloops where passengers enjoy modern hotel accommodations.

The route to Jasper, deep in the Rockies, follows the gentle river grades with lakeside vistas including Mount Robson, the highest mountain in Canada.

At Jasper, accommodation has been arranged for one or two nights with tours on to Barkerville retracing the Gold Rush, or the West Edmonton Mall, noted for its all-season entertainment complex. Optional extensions include Banff via the spectacular Glacier Parkway.

Another option is a weeklong rail journey round trip from Vancouver called "Across the Rockies By Vintage Train" that is priced at $1,295 per person, double occupancy, including overnight accommodations along the way and transfers.

COPPER CANYON

The train known as the "California Zephyr" in the 1940s, when it ran between San Francisco and Chicago, has begun a new journey: refurbished and renamed the "Copper Canyon Express," it is now in operation between Los Mochis and Chihuahua taking visitors through Mexico's most famous natural wonder.

The train consists of five passenger cars, two diners and a dome car called the "Silver Planet." The railroad itself is an engineering feat which took more than a century to build, climbing 8,000 feet, crossing 37 bridges and meandering through 86 tunnels carved out of sheer rock face. The scenery changes dramatically at every twist and turn of the tracks, from tropical canyon depths to rugged cliffs and towering pine-covered mountains.

At Cuauhtemoc travelers meet the German-speaking Mennonite community, whose lifestyle has changed little since they settled the area in the 19th century.

Rustic mountain lodges conveniently located along the way close to the train stops are used as bases from which to explore on foot or on horseback. Accommodations are simple but comfortable, service is friendly and helpful and the home-style meals are surprisingly good. Rates are from $279 per person, plus air fare, based on double occupancy, for a five-day independent train journey.

For further information, contact your travel agent or Baja Adventures, 16000 Ventura Blvd., Encino, Calif. 91436; toll-free phone (800) 345-252 in California, (800) 543-2252 from elsewhere in the United States.

KIWI TRACKS

The New Zealand Tourist and Publicity Office will operate the fifth in its popular series of "Rail Fans Tours" of New Zealand in November.

Rail buffs on this 16-day holiday will have the opportunity to ride aboard the country's narrow gauge railways and visit New Zealand's transport museums, natural, cultural and historic attractions.

Included in this year's tour is a rare day trip on the North Island's main line behind a beautifully preserved 4-8-2 steam locomotive, one of the country's last steam engines.

Travelers have the opportunity to visit six of the country's railway museums and ride the "Southerner," "Silver Fern" and "Kingston Flyer" trains. Other highlights include rides behind the Plains Railway K Class 2-4-2 built in 1879 and restored to working order, and on the Ocean Beach Railway, where small tank engines reign supreme.

The tour will visit Christchurch, Timaru, Invercargill, famous Milford Sound, Dunedin, Queenstown, Te Anau, Wellington, Rotorua and Auckland.

The journey starts in Christchurch Nov. 21 and ends in Auckland on Dec. 5. The rate of $1,235 per person, double occupancy, includes accommodations, airport transfers, breakfasts, two dinners, all transportation in New Zealand by train, bus and ferry, sightseeing per itinerary, railways and museum visits, and taxes. International air fare is additional.

For additional information and a brochure on the "Rail Fans Tour," contact the New Zealand Tourist and Publicity Office, 10960 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1530, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024; phone (213) 477-8241.

FRENCH BULLETS

The French National Railroads in cooperation with Road 'n' Rail Tours will offer again this year a series of seven sightseeing tours out of Paris, designed especially for English-speaking visitors to France. Promoted as "The Franceshrinkers," the program operates daily on weekdays through Oct. 16.

Every Monday, for instance, "Franceshrinkers" provides a one-day visit to Mont St. Michel — the only excursion to this sight to return to Paris the same day in time for dinner.

The tour includes train travel to Rennes and lunch at one of the restaurants serving the famous "Poulard" omelettes.

Every Wednesday, there are two excursions to choose from — a one-day trip to Versailles and the restored home of Claude Monet in Giverny, or a two-day tour to Switzerland by TGV, France's "bullet" trains, with visits along Lake Geneva and overnight in a four-star hotel in Lausanne.

Rates range from $53 for the one-day excursion to Chartres and Versailles to $380 for the two-day tour of Switzerland. Railpass holders (Eurailpass or France Railpass) get a discount on the cost of the tour.

These tours must be booked at least 12 days in advance and before leaving home. For further information, contact your travel agent or the French National Railroads, 610 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10020; phone 212-582-2110.

Ski resort popular all year

By ROBIN and PATRICIA HARRIS
Hearst News Service

COPPER MOUNTAIN, Colo. — In the late 1920s, the gold, silver and copper deposits which had made this area a prospector's mecca for half a century were exhausted. A hopeless gloom settled over this scenically overwhelming region of the high Rockies, but little did the worried natives realize what miraculous good fortune was about to befall them.

The very snows which had long been an implacable curse to miners, often closing the rugged roads with 30-foot drifts, would eventually make the Colorado mountains the country's most popular ski center.

In 1972 the Federal Forest Service, after a long and thorough survey of the country, announced that "Copper Mountain and its surrounding terrain are the most nearly perfect ski areas in the United States."

Thus was Copper Mountain born. At the time, there was almost nothing here for skiers beyond the awesome 12,360 foot mountain, a few T-Bar lifts and some small lodging houses. But there was enough snow to make everyone forget the vanished minerals and realize that riches were to come from the 255 inches of average snow fall every winter and not from the ground.

Today the complex, which has thus far cost more than $40 million, covers 75 mountain skiing trails with 20 high-speed lifts, and the once empty valley below is crammed with luxurious accommodations, fine restaurants and shops, a magnificent $5 million dollar athletic club, a swimming pool, eight tennis courts, a medical building and its own TV station.

But like all ski resorts, it has a serious problem. What do you do during the approximately six months when there is no snow on the ground? Some ski centers practically close down, while others remain open with skeleton staffs and no skiing.

Copper Mountain stays open until mid-November as a complete resort with all facilities operating. The cost, excepting for shops and restaurants, is about half the winter tariffs, and there is plenty of comfort and activity to keep visitors busy all summer. Both of the big tourist advisories, the Mobil Guide and the American Automobile Association, give it their highest awards for summer visits.

Many of the ski lifts run at no charge in summer, and the views are unforgettable. Summit County has a free summer bus service which takes visitors to the neighboring towns.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 wome die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammgram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland on the Old Gibsons parking lot on Cuthbert St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. THose guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age-One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age-A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over-An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under years of age with signifiant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancdr.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who i highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Approved by the American Cancer Society.

Population boom brings worldly tastes to Tucson

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

It wasn't too long ago when visitors to Tucson — one of the oldest continuously inhabited areas in North America — were greeted with cowboy bars, small family-operated Mexican restaurants, a few steak houses and assorted college hangouts on the University of Arizona campus.

Within the last decade, the city's population has exploded, bringing in new citizens with more worldly tastes in cuisine. Concommitantly, the advent of an indigenous Southwestern cuisine with a particular Arizona stamp on it has given Tucson a new gastronomic glamour. Based on our just having returned from a trek to the burgeoning metropolis in the Sonoran Desert, we are suggesting the following places for an incomparable taste of Tucson.

CAFE TERRA COTTA — (602) 577-8100. This new restaurant is setting the standard for indigenous Arizona food. Book a table in the outdoor garden patio overlooking St. Philip's Plaza and start your meal with jalapeno-studded corn cakes served with creme fraiche or the baked goat cheese with pasilla pepper sauce. We tried the game and chili pizza, as well as an unusual black bean chili made with tender sirloin. Desserts include prickly pear tarts made from real cactus fruit and chocolate truffles made in heaven. For the adventurous, there are some pleasant Arizona wines to sample; we particularly liked the dry Chenin Blanc.

JANOS — (602) 884-9426. In what must be Tucson's most beautiful interiors for dining, owner-chef Janos Wilder has created an extraordinary restaurant behind Tucson's Museum of Art in the old historical district.

Janos trained in some of the finest kitchens in France, and we're knocked out by his French-accented Arizona cuisine. Start with his subtle ceviche composed of shrimp and scallops in a cilantro vinaigrette. He combines hot medallions of lobster with warm papaya in a champagne sauce — and it works perfectly. Also recommended are the slices of milk-fed veal in a pink peppercorn sauce garnished with two kinds of caviar. An intelligently selected list of wines and a tantalizing dessert cart round out some of the best meals in the Southwest.

THE TACK ROOK — (602) 722-2800. Amidst an ambience of an old adobe hacienda that's nearly 50 years old, this place has been winning awards since 1946. The food is very well prepared, but the menu seems to have gotten stuck in a time warp going back to the '60s. So, if you have a longing for Beef Wellington (which is served in a super-puff pastry), rack of lamb crowned with vegetables, and flaming desserts, this is the place to rekindle those edible memories.

EL PARADOR — (602) 881-2808. There are so many good Mexican restaurants in this town (which is an hour from the border), but our vote for the most romantic place is this lush, flower-filled patio with live classical guitar music nightly. We liked the Carne Seca — a Mexican version of air-dired beef and the sinfully rich Pollo Fundido — chicken and cream cheese rolled in flour tortillas, fried, and topped with a jalapeno cheese sauce. Icy Corona beer with a squeeze of fresh lime goes best with the piquant flavors of this food.

CNS Graphic

LA VILLA (WESTIN LA PALOMA) — (602) 742-6000. This extraordinarily beautiful resort serves some of Tucson's best hotel food in four different dining areas, and our favorite is La Villa, which has a gorgeous view overlooking the golf course and the Santa Catalina Mountains. We enjoyed the tortilla salad composed of blue corn tortilla strips, scallops, shrimp and avocado in a brandy-based dressing. Among the best entrees were pork tenderloin medallions in wild juniper berry sauce, and mesquite-grilled swordfish in a chili-spiked sauce. The fabulous wine list makes you look forward to uncorking a bottle or two.

JEROME'S — (602) 721-0311. While the atmosphere is elegant Western, the food is regional Western with an emphasis on Cajun-Creole. We don't mean to sound blase, but we are tiring of blackened-anything although chef Jerry Soldevery does a fine job with the blackened redfish. Skip the Louisiana specials and stick to the Arizona items, such as succulent barbecued duck glazed in a tangy prickly pear/wild orange sauce and wonderful side dishes like jalapeno wild rice.

Tucson cactus capital of U.S.

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Although we have traveled a great deal throughout the American Southwest, we always are drawn to Tucson because of those magnificent Saguaro cactuses that loom all over the horizon. There doesn't seem to be another member of the plant world that is more manlike than these giants with upstretched arms. A resident naturalist told us that the average height of these beauties is 20 feet, and the first arm never appears until the cactus is 50 years old. They reach maturity at the age of 300 years. These mangificent specimens of our indigenous flora only grow in the Sonoran Desert, which extends into southern Arizona and a tiny portion of Southern California.

If only man could adapt as efficiently to his environment as the Saguaro has. The cactus can store up to 2 tons of water after a desert storm and can survive up to a year without any additional water. Woodpeckers often peck giant holes in the cactus for nesting purposes, and the marvelous plant merely forms a hard scar tissue around the opening, which gives it additional water-collecting stations.

IN ALL honesty, when we first sited the huge plants with holes inside, we just assumed some of the local gentry were out doing a great deal of target practice.

Aside from this stupendous vegetation, Tucson has other blessings of nature, including an altitude of nearly 2,400 feet above sea level, which cools the desert heat at night and three gorgeous ranges of mountains that nearly encircle the city. The Santa Catalinas are majestic, while the Rincons are spiny; our favorites are the Tucson Mountains, which have strange shapes that speak of other worlds.

May and June happen to be two of the best months to visit Tucson. The entire Sonoran desert is in bloom at that time, and after a few days, you'll become an authority on cactus blooms — from the waxy white flowers of the regal Saguaros to the bright yellow crowns atop the plump barrel cactus to the scarlet and pink blossoms of the cholla (or teddy-bear) cactus. Some of the charming desert birds seem particularly active in the late spring.

Our favorite hostelry in this magnificent environment is The Westin La Paloma, which is nestled in the Santa Catalina foothills overlooking the city. Having been there when it opened a year ago, we were so delighted to return and find that it's even better than before: New guest rooms, a lush Jack Nicklaus-designed golf course (watered by an enlightened management with recycled effluent water) and cuisine in three restaurants that has reached the gourmet level.

Among the many activities offered at La Paloma, don't miss the jeep ride into the desert where knowledgeable guides will demonstrate how you can live off the land. There are also are horses for hire, which offers another kind of desert riding experience.

The other must-see stop is the Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum. You must allow at least four hours for your visit and a full day still doesn't do the place justice.

ZOOLOGISTS FROM all over the world have come to Tucson to study this incredible museum to the desert. It is spread out into so many areas that one must use a map to make sure that you haven't missed some of the star attractions. Every creature is presented frolicking in its natural habitat. We saw mountain lions sleeping snuggled up to one another in their own cave, bighorn sheep bounding off of boulders, funny little prairie dogs sticking their heads out of their gopherlike holes, otters and beavers in a natural oasis and even a desert jaguar.

Reporter offers stress-free travel tips

Hearst News Service

Cindy Piccoli, fashion reporter for the "Today" show and "Good Morning America," offers tips to uncomplicate travel and have stress-free vacations:

- Change roles on vacation. If you are a desk-bound business person, take a vacation that stresses physical activity. If you are a housewife, choose a holiday that frees you from cooking.
- If you have young children who will not be accompanying you, leave a recording of your voice with a supportive message at home. It will go a long way in reassuring your little ones when they miss you. (From Dr. Joyce Brothers)
- Leave your itinerary, passport and travelers check numbers with a family member or friend.
- Take vacation-watch turns with a neighbor who will pick up your mail and check your house daily. Also, mail and newspaper delivery can be suspended for the time you are gone.
- Put valuables in a lock box or safe deposit box.
- Arrange for someone to feed your animals or water your plants. Perhaps pay a neighborhood youngster.
- Obtain, if possible, advance information, including a street or transportation map of the area you plan to visit.
- Loosen schedule constraints by avoiding restaurants that demand reservations; eat when you're hungry and what you want at the moment.

HOW THIS RAKE CAN SAVE YOUR LIFE.

This simple garden tool is a firefighter. It can help you clear away brush and leaves that act like kindling around your home. And you.

So if you live near the forest, do a little raking. And that's not all. Landscape your home with a fire retardant plant like ivy. Use spark arrester screens on your chimney and vents. And put fire retardant material on your roof and underneath your house where it is exposed.

Because a forest fire burns more than trees.

Remember.
Only you can prevent forest fires.

Andrew Wyeth's mysterious pictures of Helga on display

ROBERT M. ANDREWS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Artist Andrew Wyeth's long-hidden pictures of mystery model Helga went on display a week ago for the first time at the National Gallery of Art in an exhibition described as "sweet enough to please and salty enough to tease."

The story of the Wyeth's relationship with the flaxen-haired, blue-eyed neighbor who posed secretly for the artist for 15 years is provocative enough, said John Wilmerding, the gallery's deputy director, "and I hope the art will be provocative, too."

The gallery has braced for huge crowds. Between 800,000 and 1 million people are expected to see the Helga show during its four-month engagement here, before it embarks on a cross-country tour of six cities until September 1989.

To help ease the crush, the gallery is handing out 10,000 free passes reserving a specific time and date for each visitor. Walk-in tickets are available for those willing to spend long hours waiting in line.

Although the show also includes 80 drawings and watercolors by 20th century American artists from the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York, public interest is focusing on 125 of Wyeth's pencil drawings, temperas and drybrush watercolors of Helga Testorf, a German woman who lived on a neighboring farm at Chadds Ford, Pa.

The pictures are drawn from a collection of 240 Helga pictures that Leonard E.B. Andrews of Newtown, Pa., a millionaire publisher and art collector, bought from Wyeth last year. The vast size of the Helga collection was kept a secret from everyone — including Wyeth's wife Betsy — until early last year.

The reclusive Wyeth refuses to discuss his relationship with Helga, who posed for him year after year, from 1970 to 1985, without receiving a penny in modeling fees.

His intensely intimate pictures show Helga both nude and clothed, night and day, in every season, lying in a pile of autumn leaves or standing pensively in a wintry orchard, napping in a farmhouse bed or gazing out a sun-filled window.

Wyeth, 69, made his only public appearance as guest of honor at a pre-opening, black-tie dinner given at the National Gallery by Du Pont, the exhibition sponsor.

Wyeth was toasted by Secretary of State George Shultz, Chief Justice William Rehnquist, members of Congress and other dignitaries but true to form, the artist made no speeches and refused to submit to interviews.

Andrews, who is reported to have paid as much as $10 million for the collection, says he never asked Wyeth about Helga.

"I consider the relationship between any model and artist to be a professional one of their own making and important to the finished work of art, and I respect that," Andrews says.

He adds that Wyeth had made clear that he wanted the Helga pictures shown to the public "in a respectful and dignified manner."

From an artistic point of view, gallery director J. Carter Brown said the exhibition "really takes you into the presence of an artist and lets you peek over his should as he struggles."

Wilmerding said "there is plenty here that is sweet enough to please and salty enough to tease." He said the show is "full of surprises" for Wyeth's admirers and critics alike.

There is a "roughness and crudeness...an intensity of mood, a great simplicity and real feeling" in some of the Helga pictures that will surprise those who are familiar with the high polish of Wyeth's finished work, he said.

Andrew Wyeth stands next to one of his long-hidden pictures of mystery model Helga, at the National Gallery of Art in Washington. The works are now on display for the first time to the public.

Have you heard? Gossip 'vital part' of U.S. democracy

BOSTON (AP) — Gossip has changed in recent decades from Hollywood tidbits to an integral part of the American political system, as shown by the demise of Gary Hart, say two sociologists studying the age-old form of communication.

"It's a vital part of democracy," said Arnold Arluke, a Northeastern University professor and co-author of "Gossip: The Inside Scoop."

Arluke and his co-author and Northeastern University colleague, Jack Levin, argue that gossip has grown in importance because of increasing concern about politicians' character during the post-Watergate era.

"In a democratic society, gossip actually is a way of constraining the behavior of our public figures," said Levin. "Gossip is a way of making sure that our politicians do what we expect them to do. It's one of the few ways we have."

In Hart's case, the authors said, it was not simply one weekend's evidence of possible philandering that led to his dropout as a presidential candidate. That evidence combined with a history of gossip about the former senator's personal life.

"The public is willing to put up with imperfection, even prefers it," said Levin. "We don't want robots running the government. We want people, and people make mistakes. They blunder. If they're competent to begin with, if they have a good reputation, gossip will not hurt. But there is a threshold point."

The book, soon to be released by Plenum Press, is an in-depth study of gossip, the authors said.

"Just because it's trivial by definition doesn't mean the study of it is trivial, but people confuse the two," Levin said. "People see it as trivial and therefore unworthy of investigation."

Arluke said, "I really feel like we've rediscovered something right in front of our face, that no one has really recognized its importance or its existence."

The authors said gossip has gotten a mostly undeserved bad reputation over the years, but it's not predominantly petty or vicious.

Reviewing the work of 34 syndicated gossip columnists over 30 years, Levin said they found "very little dirt. We found the overwhelming majority of what's printed in national columns is very flattering information."

In fact, Arluke said, they discovered a code of ethics among gossip columnists that included not writing about homosexuality and drug use.

The authors also looked at gossip in everyday conversations, and there too they found the stereotypes did not hold up.

"People say just as many nice things about others as they say nasty; it's just that we don't even bother to call that gossip," Levin said.

Norma Nathan, who has written "The Ear" column for the Boston Herald for 10 years, agrees with many of the authors' conclusions.

Contras make inroads in Nicaragua with renewed American aid

EDITOR'S NOTE -- While the Iran-Contra hearings hold the spotlight in Washington, the war in Nicaragua's northern hills is heating up. Here is a comprehensive status report on the Sandinista-Contra conflict by a reporter who recently visited the remote war zone.

By REID G. MILLER

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Nicaraguan rebels, largely confined to their camps in Honduras for almost two years, are back in their homeland in force in a rapidly escalating fight against the leftist Sandinista government.

"It's going better day by day," says Enrique Bermudez, the commander of the main rebel army. "We're putting heavy pressure on the Sandinistas."

That claim is generally supported by many foreign diplomats, reporters and other observers with first-hand knowledge of Nicaragua. And the Sandinista government itself, while playing down rebel claims of success, has acknowledged its concern.

Still, no one is predicting victory for the insurgents, known as Contras, without additional large infusions of U.S. aid.

Contra leaders, who know their outnumbered forces cannot take on the Sandinista army in a stand-up battle, say victory could come no earlier than 1988 or 1989, and then only with the help and support of a large segment of the Nicaraguan population that so far has not rallied to the rebel cause. To do that, the Contras must end chronic infighting in their movement and change their negative image as human-rights abusers.

The new Contra aggressiveness has grown out of $100 million in fresh aid the U.S. Congress narrowly approved for the rebels last September. For two years, official American assistance had been cut off, and the insurgents spent much of their time on hold in their Honduras camps.

The new money will run out this fall and President Reagan is considering asking for $150 million more, to be spread out over 18 months to avoid another vote on the controversial issue before the 1988 presidential election.

To win more aid, however, the Contras and Reagan will have to overcome the fallout from the current investigations in Washington into the U.S. administration's secret sale of arms to Iran and the reported diversion of profits to the Contras.

The battle claims of the Contras and Sandinistas are difficult to verify independently. Both have been guilty of exaggerating successes and minimizing failures. But even the Sandinista Defense Ministry, in its periodic combat summaries, acknowledges that the number of armed engagements is up sharply from last year — 426 in one recent one-month period.

Bermudez, in an interview, said his Contras last year were involved in about 60 engagements a month, "but now we're engaging them (the Sandinistas) about 60 times a week, and you're going to see an even greater increase in the weeks to come."

A knowledgable Western diplomat in the region said the step-up in the war puts the Sandinistas "in a bit of a spot, because 1985 was supposed to be the 'year of total victory' and last year (President Daniel) Ortega was saying the Contras had been handed a 'strategic defeat.'

"But now the Contras are back stronger than ever and the Sandinistas either have to stay mum or swallow their words. It seems they've chosen to stay mum." The diplomat spoke on condition of anonymity.

American reporters who cover Nicaragua regularly — and who agree with the diplomat's assessment — note that the Sandinista government has begun limiting journalists' access to some parts of the country, and Managua's two state-controlled newspapers are offering significantly less war coverage.

In contrast, the Contras have recently begun allowing reporters to visit their camps in northern Nicaragua and accompany units operating deep inside the country, trips granted to only a few, generally sympathetic, free-lance writers and photographers when the rebels' fortunes were on the wane in 1985 and 1986.

Red Cross trains Nicaraguans to make limbs

By ANDREW SELSKY

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Seven months after losing his legs in the explosion of an anti-tank mine, Isaias Guerrero was standing again.

As four ceiling fans lazily stirred the sultry air in a hospital physical-therapy room, Guerrero took hesitant steps on his new artificial limbs, using two crutches for support.

"How am I doing?" he asked a visitor.

A sheen of sweat broke out over his face as he worked to move one foot ahead of the other. A half-dozen other amputees and a physical therapist looked on, while rock music played from a stereo cassette player.

Down the hall in the Aldo Chavarria Rehabilitation Hospital, workers were building dozens more artificial limbs, laid out in rows in various states of construction in Nicaragua's only prosthetics manufacturing operation.

Guerrero, who was serving in the Sandinista People's Army when he was wounded by the mine, presumably laid by U.S.-backed Contra rebels, is just one of hundreds of soldiers and civilians who have lost their limbs in Nicaragua's 5-year-old civil war.

To meet the increased demand, International Red Cross technicians, in cooperation with the Sandinista government's Health Ministry, began one year ago to teach Nicaraguans how to make prosthetic devices.

The program is turning out to be a success, says administrator Michel Lerroy, one of five Red Cross officials working on the project.

Before 1982, when the war began in earnest, the only company that manufactured prosthetic devices in Nicaragua was small and did not meet the nation's demand, even in peacetime, said Lerroy, a Frenchman.

Components for artificial devices were imported from the United States, but Washington imposed a trade embargo on Managua's leftist government in 1985, forcing Nicaragua to become self-sufficient in producing the parts.

Lerroy said the Red Cross technicians and their 14 Nicaraguan trainees are beginning to meet the wartime demand.

"Our production of prosthetic devices is going to jump from the 86 that were made here last year to 250 that we expect to make this year," Lerroy said in an interview in his office in the hospital.

The supply has yet to meet demand — 200 amputees are on the waiting list to receive limbs from the Red Cross center. But the gap is closing, and soon the government will not have to send patients to East Germany, Bulgaria and other Soviet-bloc nations to get fitted with prosthetic devices, Lerroy said.

The components of the artificial legs and feet, made of wood and steel covered with flesh-colored fiberglass, are made in the prosthetics shop of the Aldo Chavarria Hospital, said Esteban Barrona, the shop's assistant technical director.

Only some components for artificial arms are imported, he said, adding that he expected all the parts to be made locally within a year or two.

The trainees work in the mornings, making the prosthetic devices under the direction of the Red Cross technicians, and study their trade in the afternoon. The course takes three years to complete.

"The demand for our work is high," commented trainee Luis Velasquez.

Nicaraguan officials said they could not estimate the number of soldiers and civilians who have lost limbs in the war. Barrona noted that most of those receiving artificial devices at the Aldo Chavarria center are soldiers who were wounded in action.

REAL ESTATE

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

To rent or buy is a question that takes serious consideration, with each option having its benefits and drawbacks.

RENT? or BUY?

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Rent or buy? That question is one that almost everyone has debated at some time or another, and with implementation of the 1987 tax code, the decision to rent or buy a home becomes even more complex.

Apartment owners say apartment dwellers can claim substantial savings, but realtors are quick to point out special benefits for homeowners.

According to 1987 Texas Apartment Association president Lan Bentsen, the 'correct' decision is the one that gives the consumer the greatest after-tax wealth and equity.

In order to determine the amount spent in each case, the TAA conducted a study: "We developed a model family, gathered information and ran the figures through tax, insurance and interest formulas," Bentsen said.

Plugging in Midland figures to Bentsen's formula, we came up with an after-tax equity figure for an average renter and an average homeowner in the Tall City. The average home price used was taken from the Multiple Listing Service survey of average residential sales prices. Average rent figures are from the Midland Chamber of Commerce apartment association conducted in April. Taxes are based on the 1987 tax code.

The standards established for the study were: a married couple, both working with a combined income of $40,000, with two children, the couple would place a 5 percent down payment when purchasing a home and the loan would be a 30-year mortgage at 10.5 percent interest, property taxes were 1.5 percent and insurance was .5 percent of the purchase price.

In the renting scenario, the couple opened a savings account with the money that was not spent on the down payment. They received 6.5 percent interest on their savings account. Insurance for renters was set at $200 per year. They also deposited the difference between their rent and their proposed mortgage into the savings account each month. The apartment is a two-bedroom, one-and-a-half bath, of approximately 950 sq. ft. in an established neighborhood.

If the couple chooses the 'buy a home' scenario, the home price (average for Midland) is $68,850. After a down payment of $3,400, the loan balance is $65,450. Principle payments will total $599. Property taxes will cost the couple $1,033, while insurance will run them $6,872. Maintenance costs are figured at $345. With a gross income of $40,000 and itemized deductions totaling $7,905 (for interest and property taxes) and four exemptions totaling $7,600, the couple's taxable income is $24,495. This leaves them with a tax liability of $3,554. In this situation, disposable income for the family will total $27,536 ($40,000 less $7,188 in mortgage payments, $3,554 in tax liability, $1,033 in property taxes, $344 in in-

Foreign firms raise stake in domestic oil operations

By JUDITH CROWN
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) — Since last year's oil price plunge, several foreign companies have snapped up U.S. oil and gas reserves at bargain prices, seeing the United States as a safe harbor for investment.

Others are said to be looking for buys.

At the same time, Japanese firms have formed joint ventures with U.S. operators, and British Petroleum is buying the remaining 45 percent of Standard Oil Co. that it doesn't already own.

Overseas companies are investing in the United States at a time when low oil prices have caused most domestic operators to retrench. Foreign interest has been spurred by the weaker dollar, the low prices for reserves and the relative political stability of the United States.

"The first reason is the political climate," says Mark Young, vice president of finance for American Cometra.

American Cometra, owned by Belgium-based Cometra Oil Co., has made four acquisitions since 1984, including the $150 million purchase of the oil and gas reserves of Williams Cos. last year in joint venture with Fina Oil & Chemical Co.

Before those purchases, American Cometra had mostly passive oil and gas investments in the United States. Fina, its joint venture partner, owned by Petrofina of Belgium, has been here longer, operating refineries and petrochemical plants.

Foreign buyers "see the U.S. having a stable government and a reasonable tax structure," said Charles Williams, senior vice president of exploration for Wintershall Oil & Gas Co. The company, owned by the West German chemical firm BASF, last year bought the oil and gas reserves of International Minerals & Chemical Corp.

"People bitch a lot here, but it (the tax structure) looks good compared to other places," said Williams.

Outside the United States, production is more heavily taxed and usually shared with the national oil company, said David Ahl, assistant manager for energy at Brown Brothers, Harriman & Co. in New York.

In Norway, the marginal tax rate approaches 90 percent. The tax wasn't so bad when prices were higher, but it has become less attractive as they've retreated, Ahl said.

Among Third World producers, there is the risk that the government will change, spurring an abrupt change in tax rates and oil policy. With a more radical regime, there is a risk that the properties will be nationalized. When a producer has had his assets expropriated three times in a row, he may be inclined to seek calmer waters, Ahl said.

Total Compagnie Francaise des Petroles decided to make a push in the United States to diversify its holdings, said Pierre Vaillaud, executive vice president of exploration and production.

Total Minatome, the company's U.S. subsidiary set up two years ago to buy producing properties, last year purchased the exploration and production assets of Lear Petroleum Partners of Dallas for $115 million. In March, the firm added the domestic oil and gas reserves of Texas Inter-

Long-term outlook brightening for statewide economic growth

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Economists say a "fragile recovery" is underway for the statewide economy, and short-term forecasts envision an anemic continuation of the same. But a new 20-year study conducted for the state comptroller's office indicates slow and steady growth is "just around the corner."

Job growth predictions for the next two decades prepared by the office of Bob Bullock, Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts, point toward non-oil and gas diversification that will cause the Texas economy to perform more on a par with the U.S. economy than it has in the past.

Economic performance will be slow by Texas' historic standards, but Bullock expects the state to outperform the national economy between now and the year 2005.

In the next 20 years, Texas' gross state product will increase 3.5 percent a year. That growth would be slower than the average 3.9 percent experienced from 1970 through 1985 and the 4.5 percent enjoyed during the energy boom of 1973 to 1981, but faster than the projected 2.7 percent national rate.

To reach Bullock's projected 20-year average, rapid improvements will be needed in gross state product during the 1990s to compensate for virtually non-existent growth through the end of next year, according to Ray Perryman.

Perryman, who is president of Baylor University Forecasting Service and publishes Texas Economic Forecast, says that overall growth in the Texas economy will average about 1.6 percent this year and in 1988.

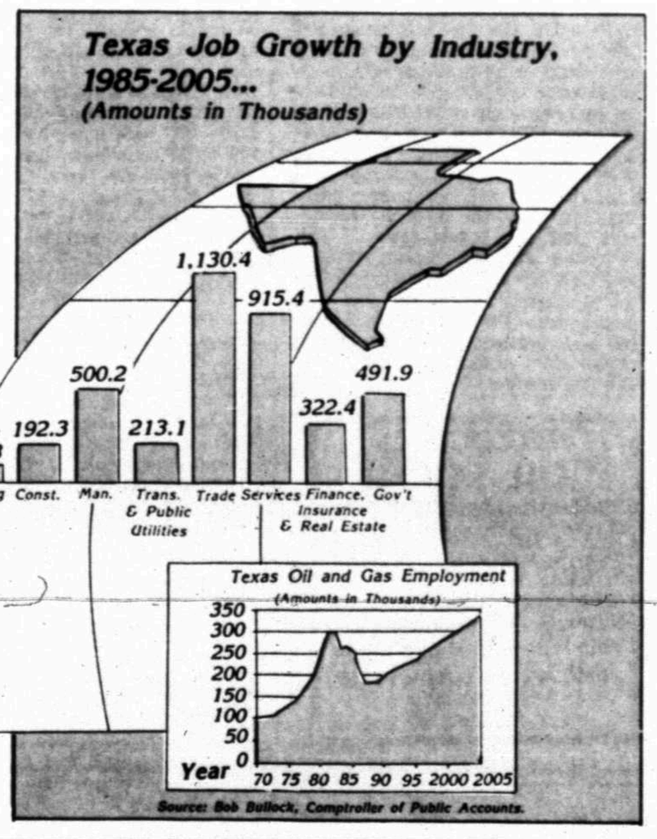

"Three out of four new Texas jobs will be created by service-producing companies," Bullock said. This diversification away from oil and gas industries will mean that future booms and busts will be more moderate than in the past.

A less-explosive economy will attract fewer people to Texas than in the past, but population gains will exceed the U.S. average.

Bullock expects the state's population to increase from 16.4 million in 1985 to 20.6 million in the year 2000 and 21.6 million in 2005.

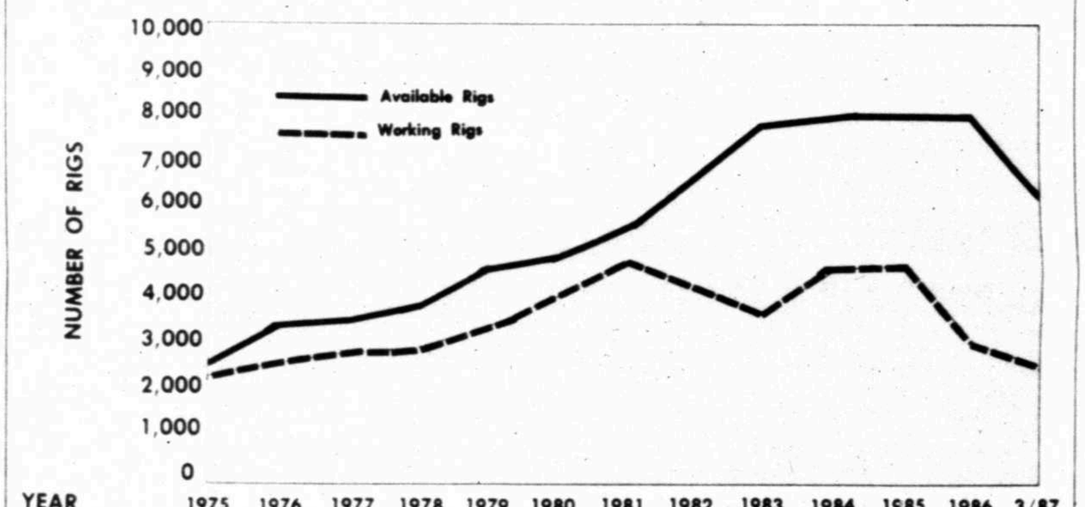

The shift toward service-oriented industries opens a "window of opportunity for creating a new sector of the state economy — research, science and technology transfer," says Dr. Tom Stauffer, vice chairman of the Texas Science & Technology Council and president of the University of Houston at Clear Lake.

The state council is pushing for creation of a public entity, the Texas Corporation for Science & Technology. This public corporation would be the focal point for coordinating and facilitating private sector and government cooperation in elevating the state's research and development efforts.

The gap between working and available rigs continues a problem for the well servicing industry.

Well service rig fleet shrinking

Little immediate impact seen

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Over 620 well service rigs have disappeared from the market and another 1,061 have been placed on the unavailable — not ready for work in 48 hours — list, according to the 1987 census of well service rigs completed by the Guiberson Division of Dresser Industries.

The survey, completed in cooperation with the Association of Oilwell Servicing Contractors and published in the association's trade magazine Well Servicing is the first official rig census since November 1982, and reveals a still excessive but shrinking inventory of rigs, as the industry tries to adjust to continuing lower levels of activity.

The inventory reduction is interpreted by AOSC officials as a positive sign for surviving operators, because "fewer rigs are now chasing a few more jobs," says AOSC executive vice president John Haggin. But he predicts more rigs will drop out of the market before the gap between rigs and jobs is mended.

"It would take lots of activity to put all the rigs back to work, and I don't think we are going to have any more booms in the near term," said Haggin.

The present excess began developing in 1976 as increased activity, spurred by higher prices and the OPEC threat, generated rig demand and is reflected in a 13-year review of available and working rigs.

According to the survey 2,558 rigs were working in the first quarter of 1987, but 6,227 were available for work. This represented a utilization rate of 41 percent — only slightly better than the record low of 38 percent recorded in 1986, and a far cry from 1975, one of the busiest years in

JOHN PAUL PITTS

It doesn't make sense to wrestle with mad dogs

Pitts

Uncle Red was unbearably mean — a vile, vicious man, with not an ounce of human kindness about him. He always packed a loaded pistol, and once on a fishing trip — just for kicks — he shot at the feet of an old woman until she jumped in the Mississippi River.

At the drop of a hat, this big red-headed man, with a short, violent temper, would use his club-like fists to batter family and foe alike — sometimes even before the drop of a hat.

The consummate bully was hated, feared and avoided by the entire county. All agreed that someday someone would have to shoot him, and on more than one occasion that option was seriously discussed. Someone (not family) finally did shoot him, but until he met his just reward everyone learned to stay away from him.

The point is: Uncle Red was a lot like Iran. He was a mean, depraved man; Iran is a evil, demented nation. This mad dog nation has no respect for human life — theirs or ours — and cannot be mollified by reason or threat. Until someone is willing to shoot it, the only option is to stay away from it.

We should have learned from Viet Nam that it's just not wise to jump in a mad dog's back yard with wrestling on one's mind, lest one be ripped apart before he can holler "negotiate." Apparently we didn't, because we seem poised to commit the same mistake.

Not many months ago, I wrote in this column that a Mideast military conflict involving U.S. forces was inevitable — not a matter of "if" but "when." It appears "when" is "now."

The attack on the USS Stark, albeit accidental, sets the stage for the event. But when the Stars and Stripes begins to fly over Kuwaiti tankers next week or the week after, the line will have been drawn. Kuwait is an ally of Iraq and their tankers will be flying our flag.

Does anyone really think a U.S. flag will scare off Iran or even make it pause for reason? Hardly anyone. Iran has already warned that if they decide to target a Kuwaiti tanker it won't matter whose flag it's flying.

Does anyone think we have taken the first step to placing this nation into another badly thought-out, no-win war like Viet Nam? Nearly everyone.

"We're being sucked into a violent, savage war," says Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn. Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said called the act as dangerous as sending our troops to Beirut.

Henry Schuler, a researcher at Georgetown Institute for Strategic Studies, called the plan "misplaced priorities." He said we should not ask young Americans to "bite the bullet" to defend energy in an indefensible part of the world, when we in this country are not ready to "bite the bullet" for an energy policy that would develop energy resources in this country.

We have clearly jumped into the mad dog's back yard, and one can only pray that the administration doesn't have wrestling on its mind. But don't count on it.

Congress has asked to see some kind of plan that would assure the safety of our troops in the Persian Gulf, but Reagan has been reluctant to do so, saying he doesn't want to tip his hand to Iran.

At the same time, he said no incident would be interpreted as an act of war and hinted that any kind of retaliation might only involve the destruction of missile batteries onshore. When an administration official announced last week that an attack on the American flag would be considered an act of war, he was promptly called in and a public correction was issued. Does that sound like wrestling?

If a vessel with an American flag is sunk, surely America must declare war and retaliate with full force to totally neutralize the enemy as quickly as possible. That is the pre-Viet Nam policy that most of us remember, but it doesn't apply anymore. We would not turn the military loose in Viet Nam. We did not retaliate when the American embassy in Teheran was attacked, American hostages seized and held captive for over a year. We did not retaliate when 241 Americans were killed in Beirut, even though enemy targets were in abundance in the hills around the city. So, chances are when American lives are taken in hostile action in the Persian Gulf, it will be met with only token retaliation.

ECONOMY

Among the recommendations outlined by the 28-member council in its Strategies for a New Texas Economy is an MCC-like consortium of energy producers which "would provide the critical mass and the private sector leadership to improve the competitive position of the domestic industry and make feasible production of the two-thirds of the state's discovered reserves which are unrecoverable.

The eventual recovery of the energy industry will contribute to the long-term growth prospects of the state. Although Comptroller Bullock expects state oil and gas employment to decline through next year, rising oil prices will boost it from 260,000 jobs in 1985 to 337,000 in 2005, slightly more than the historical peak of 303,000 workers in 1982.

Bullock predicts that oil prices will trend upward between now and 2005 to an average of $38 a barrel. That level will likely sustain worldwide oil and gas exploration.

However, it will not halt the decline of production in Texas. Between now and 2005, state oil production will fall 48 percent and gas will decline by 54 percent, Bullock estimates.

Nevertheless, Texas will gain oil and gas jobs over the period because of the state's continued position as a world energy center. While actual energy exploration and development will take place around the county and world, a great deal of the brain power and financial power that will drive that activity will emanate from Houston and other Texas cities.

In addition, Texas will remain an important center for oil and gas services and the manufacture of drilling equipment and other oil field machinery.

After recovering from a severely depressed 1987 base, oil patch manufacturers are expected to grow 5.3 percent annually through the mid-'90s.

Overall state manufacturing job growth will recover at nearly double the national rate, Bullock says. From 1987 to 2005, Texas manufacturing jobs will grow an average of 2.5 percent yearly, versus 1.3 percent for the nation. High technology will lead the way for manufacturing recovery along with the oil field sector.

Texas' technological industries — computers, electronics, instruments and aerospace equipment makers — will grow an average 3.8 percent a year, producing 310,000 new jobs from 1985 to 2005. The fastest growing, aerospace equipment manufactures, will provide more than 50,000 jobs over the next 20 years — an annual growth rate of 7.0 percent.

Other fast-growing industries the next 20 years will likely include printing and publishing and lumber and wood products, which will grow about 3 percent per year and generate 58,000 and 32,000 jobs, respectively.

The great construction boom of the past 15 years is not likely to be repeated in the next two decades. Building will grow only modestly during the next 20 years, much more slowly than in the 1970 to 1985 heyday.

Construction will continue to suffer in the short term because of economic slowdown, slower population growth and over-built markets across the state. Business and industrial construction will not turn around before 1988 as absorption of excess inventories is slowed, according to Edward McClelland, economist for First RepublicBank Corp. in Dallas.

Bullock looks for nonresidential construction to increase by 1.6 percent per year through 2005, a mere fraction of the 4.9 percent annual gain seen since 1970.

Total construction employment will increase only 1.8 percent a year for the next 20 years, compared to 4.3 percent gains during the last 15 years.

Service sector jobs — including transportation, public utilities, finance, insurance, real estate, trade, government and other services — will create about 3 million jobs over the next 20 years, 76.5 percent of all new jobs in the state over that period. That growth figure represents 2.6 percent annual growth.

Service sector growth reliance is even more noticeable in national projections — 96.3 percent of total job growth at a rate of 1.7 percent per annum.

Wholesale and retail trade jobs are expected to generate the greatest growth in the state, 2.8 percent a year. Miscellaneous services, which encompass such things as business support services and health services, will create more than 915,000 jobs by 2005 — growth of 2.6 percent annually.

surance and $345 in maintenance). The home equity is $3,716 ($3,400 down payment and $316 paid off portion of the loan).

If the couple chooses to rent, their average rent payment will be $369. The down payment ($3400) placed in a savings account will earn them $221. The difference between rent and mortgage payment each month would total $230. Interest on the difference would net the couple an additional $99, to make their adjusted gross income $40,320. Their taxable income would be $28,960 ($40,320 less $7,600 for four exemptions and $3,760 which is the standard deduction. The couple's tax liability in this situation would be $4,438. The family's disposable income is now $31,024 ($40,000 less a tax liability of $4,348, rent of $4,428 and $200 insurance). The renting couple's equity is $6,480 ($3,621 down payment plus $2,859, the difference between rent and the proposed mortgage payment).

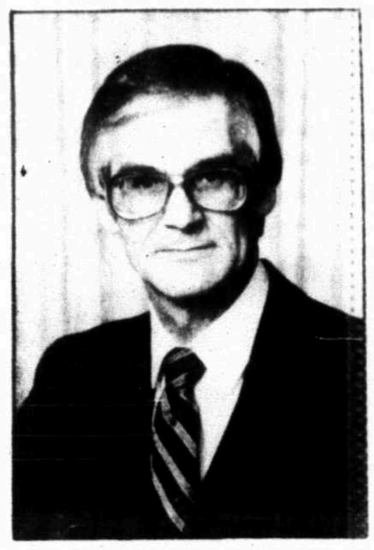

In this case, the renting couple had greater after-tax equity, but Midland Board of Realtors president Anita Noles says there are other considerations. "A homebuyer can deduct some of the initial costs at closing which are not accounted for."

Noles says a recent University of Michigan study indicates that homeowners have 50 percent more savings than renters. "The reports says by the time a homeowner is 65, he will have amassed net assets of $21,600, compared to $100 for the renter.

In addition, home buying is building equity, while renters may or may not save the additional money in the scenario described above. "Many people are poor savers. Home ownership forces you to build equity, while it takes a lot of discipline to put an additional $300-400 in a savings account every month."

Says Darryl McDonald of Century 21 in Midland: "A home mortgage is one of the few remaining tax deductions for consumers after Tax Reform 1986. Automobile loan interest and other things formerly deductible are not under the new law. For folks who need some deductions, home ownership is the only way to go."

MEETINGS

Oshner

Desk & Derrick to hear natural gas talk

John D. Ochsner, western district manager of Lone Star Gas Co. in Midland, will speak to the Midland Desk & Derrick Club at its June meeting.

A graduate of Texas Tech University in petroleum engineering, Oshner joined Lone Star Producing (now Enserch Exploration) in 1956 in Dallas. He joined Lone Star Gas Co. as West Texas district manager of gas purchases and sales in 1970, before becoming western district manager.

Oshner will speak on the various stages involved in bringing natural gas from the field to the market, including: treating, processing, and sales. He will also include a brief history of pipelines and current market problems.

Desk & Derrick will meet June 11, at 7 p.m. at Midland Petroleum Club.

Permian remodelers set annual meeting

The Permian Basin Chapter of the National Association of the Remodeling Industry has set its annual dinner meeting for 7 p.m., Thursday, at the Best Western Airport Hotel, formerly Executel.

Founded in 1986, the professional group aims to foster high standards in the remodeling industry. Membership is open all segments of the remodeling industry including: contractors, material wholesalers, manufacturers, lending institutions and consumer publications.

Bell Petroleum files reorganization plan

From Staff Reports

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. announced Friday that it has filed its reorganization plan and disclosure statement with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Texas, Midland-Odessa Division.

Bell has been operating as a debtor-in-possession under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code since late last year.

The reorganization plan can be confirmed by the court only after it approves the disclosure statement. A hearing date of July 23, has been set for the disclosure statement action, at the federal courthouse in Midland.

If confirmed by the court, the plan calls for all creditors of Bell to be paid in full.

Additionally, under the proposed plan, 1.1780596 shares of common stock of Houston-based Regal International, Inc. will be issued for each of the 2,970,987 outstanding and issued shares of Bell common stock. Bell will become a wholly owned subsidiary of Regal, and Regal will assist in funding the plan to the extent necessary to pay creditors. The acquisition of Bell common stock by Regal in exchange for its own common stock is subject to approval by Regal's stockholders.

Bell also announced that its stockholders re-elected all existing member of the board of directors during the annual meeting held Thursday in Midland.

national for $120 million. Executives say they are looking for an even bigger purchase.

At a press briefing in Houston last month, Vaillaud said most major oil companies derive 70 percent or more of their cash flow from holdings in North America and the North Sea. For Total Minatome, that figure is 40 percent to 46 percent.

"We want better balanced upstream operations," he said. Total Minatome's production comes primarily from the North Sea, the Middle East and Indonesia.

Many in the domestic oil industry bemoan that the large U.S. oil reserves already have been found and suggest that the best prospects are overseas, particularly in the Arctic and in deep water. Although major oil companies are mostly interested in big finds, analysts say the economics of a smaller discovery may work fine for an overseas investor with a more modest appetite.

"You can afford to find less if you're allowed to keep more," said Williams of Wintershall.

Ahl agrees. "Chances are you can make more with a 10-million-barrel discovery here than with a 100 million-barrel discovery elsewhere," he said.

Foreign interest in domestic reserves picked up last year after prices plunged below $10 a barrel, and it became evident that there were going to be some real bargains. Many domestic operators put reserves on the market to raise cash to pay their debts. In other cases, diversified companies became disillusioned with the returns they were receiving on producing properties and decided to pull out of the oil and gas business.

Reserve purchases slowed in the middle of last year during the oil price plunge, when it was difficult to place a value on them. Activity picked up in the second half of the year, when prices rebounded.

The average price paid for a barrel of oil equivalent rose from a low of $5 in the second quarter to $6.45 in the fourth quarter, according to Strevig and Associates, a Hoston investment banking firm that tracks reserve purchases. The average price fell back in the first quarter to $5.88. In the first quarter of 1984, the average was $9 a barrel.

"If there are lower prices for a commodity that you believe is going to be scarce, this is the time to buy," said Young of American Cometra.

Analysts say the influx of foreign investment has provided some badly needed capital that wouldn't have been available otherwise. Many banks are gun-shy about energy lending, and other sources of financing for exploration have dried up.

Because of the foreign investment. "You may have a few more wells being drilled and a few more people employed," Ahl said.

It was partly the tightness of exploration dollars that spurred Conoco last year to form a $134 million joint venture with Japan's Nippon Mining. The partnership plans to drill 20 exploratory wells on Conoco properties in five states and the Gulf of Mexico.

In a similar arrangement, Japan's Nippon Oil formed a partnership with Texaco to drill up to 50 wells in six states.

While the reserve purchases appear to be motivated mostly on their merits as business deals, the Japanese ventures may be spurred by that nation's preoccupation with lining up long-term, secure sources of supply.

While there's a ban on U.S. exports of crude oil, the Japanese could get their share of crude oil though swaps with Texaco and Conoco overseas properties, most probably in Indonesia and the Far East.

Japan has viturally no oil reserves and must import all its oil. Because it appears so vulnerable, it has been knocked around hard in the energy market, often having to pay premiums compared to other consuming countries, Ahl said.

In buying U.S. reserves, analysts say the Japanese and other foreign companies have been able to take a longer term view of investments than can U.S. firms that are under pressure to show improved quarter-to-quarter financial results.

PITTS

Somewhere along the way, this country has lost its resolve to protect its interests with decisive military action. Perhaps, that's why many are calling Reagan's plan to fly the American flag on Kuwaiti tankers unwise. Why fight unless we're prepared to win?

But there are also other reasons the plan is unwise say critics.

Not only Congress, but many Americans want to know: Why make the supreme sacrifice for nations that will sacrifice nothing? How many British, Germans, French and Japanese are prepared to die to keep oil flowing out of the Gulf? The U.S. gets only seven percent of its oil from the Gulf, while Japan imports 54 percent and western Europe 30 percent of their crude oil from the Middle East.

Dallas oilman, Frank Pitts, calls our presence in the Gulf, "a subsidy to our major trading partners and OPEC." Pitts (no relation) said it cost the United States the equivalent of $140 a barrel to maintain a presence in the Persian Gulf to insure delivery of OPEC oil to our trading competitors.

Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said we must keep the oil flowing because our allies and trading partners, in the event of a Middle East shut off, would go after our oil supplies in Mexico and elsewhere and drive oil prices up.

All those Texans in favor of wrestling with mad dogs to keeping oil prices down for our prime competitors please stand up.

recent history when 85 percent of the rigs were working. That year, however, there were only 2,664 rigs available for work.

The big build-up of rigs began in 1976 as a response to higher activity caused by higher oil prices and the OPEC embargo of 1973. Within two years the number of working rigs exceeded the entire rig fleet of 1976 and rig manufacturing became big business. By 1985, the rig fleet was almost tripled at 8,007.

"At one time there were as many as 12 manufacturers cranking out new rigs," said Haggin. "Now there are less than a handful and no new rigs have been built in the last two years." He said the two largest manufacturers have merged and scaled down operations, some have gone out of business and others are still fabricating other products — but not rigs.

With no new rigs are not coming into the market, the association executive thinks the rig inventory can be reduced to acceptable levels by attrition: "We normally lose about 600 rigs per year as a result of wear-out, burn-out and damage," he said. It is uncertain, however, just how many rigs are permanently out of the market. He says an undetermined number are in the hands of lending institutions as a result of bankruptcies and others are in various stages of readiness and could be made ready quckly but not within the two day criteria of the survey.

One factor affecting utilization and of concern to Haggin is the lack of qualified crews. "We could probably field more rigs right now if we had the crews." He said sporadic work and lower wages have caused many qualified crew members to leave the well service industry, but he thinks they will return when oil companies allow contractors higher rates.

"We have small companies now working rigs for $75 an hour when they should be getting $120," Haggin said.

As the rig inventory dwindles and activity returns, Haggin thinks the industry can once again experience what he calls "livable" utilization rates — 60 percent or more.

He is encouraged that some areas, such as the Permian Basin, are already edging toward a 60 percent utilization rate. He said utilization in the Basin was 46 percent in March and 52 percent in April.

"I think we can live with 60 percent utilization, but at what price? A 100 percent utilization rate yielding only a dollar-an-hour profit would still be intolerable."

Business planning topic at workshop

The last two sessions of a planned three-day workshop on developing a business plan are scheduled for June 2 and 9 at Casa de Amigos from 6:30 p.m. to 9:45 p.m.

The workshop, sponsored by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Midland College, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Service Corps of Retired Executives/Active Corps of Executives, Small Business Council of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Students in Free Enterprise, and the Small Business Development Center, costs $5 per night, or $15 for all three nights.

Topics covered include a description of the business, market, competition and location of business, and financial data such as sources and application of funding, capital equipment list, breakeven analysis, income projections, and historical financial reports for an existing business.

Registration can be made through the Continuing Education Department at Midland College.

PBGC offers DOS course for beginners

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer "PC (MS) Dos — Beginning DOS" on Wednesday, from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m. The class is intended for IBM or compatible computer owners with little or no previous computer experience and will give the student an understanding of the disk operating system (DOS) which is fundamental to basic computer operations. DOS is the set of programs that control virtually all computer operations, directing the flow of information and the interaction of the computer with the printer, monitor and disk drive. Paul Pause, consulting geologist, will instruct the student in basic DOS commands. Fee is $40 and registration is limited. For registration or further information call the Graduate Center at 683-2832.

U.S. rig count climbs, Basin slides

The number of working oil and gas rigs in the United States this week totaled 762, an increase of 18 from the previous week, Baker Hughes Inc. officials said. The Houston-based toolmaker reported a drop of nine rigs to 104 in the Permian Basin area.

The nationwide count was 744 last week, while the Basin recorded 113 working rigs last week.

The rig count, considered to be the yardstick of drilling activity, reached 729 at this time last year, nationally and 81 in the Permian Basin.

Hughes Tool Co., which recently merged with Orange, Calif.-based Baker International Corp., has kept track of the number of working oil rigs since 1940.

Last July, the count fell to 663 — the lowest since Hughes began compiling figures — as oil prices plunged to less than $10 per 42-gallon barrel.

The rig count reached a peak in December 1981, the height of the oil boom, when 4,500 oil rigs were active.

Gas production declines

The Texas Railroad Commission reports that Texas oil and gas wells produced 435,553,877 Mcf of gas in February, compared to the January gas production total of 490,120,845 Mcf. February 1987 production was down 7.03 percent compared to February 1986.

Marketed gas production in February totaled 354,571,074 Mcf and reflected a 12.86 percent decrease from the January volume. In February 1986 the state produced 388,170,177 Mcf of gas in this category.

Exports of Texas produced gas in February totaled 196,806,638 Mcf and reflected a 1.67% percent increase from January. February 1986 exports of Texas produced gas totaled 144,792,989 Mcf.

Texas gas production in February came from 193,418 oil wells and 47,946 gas wells.

IOCC convention set in Idaho

U.S. Congressman Beau Boulter R-Texas and Congressman Larry Craig R-Idaho and Senator Steve Symms R-North Dakota are scheduled to address the opening session of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission's 41st annual meeting at Sun Valley, Idaho, May 31 through June 3. Governors and other representatives of the governments of 30 oil and gas producing states are expected to attend the gathering of IOCC oil and gas officials concerned with conservation and waste prevention of oil and gas.

Topics of discussion will include the Environmental Protection Agency's studies on drilling muds, enhanced oil recovery and the impacts of depressed oil prices on the oil producing states and the nation as a whole, said IOCC executive director W. Timothy Dowd.

Henry Schuler, chairman of the Energy Security Council, will address the general session on May 31. Mr. Schuler is a senior vice president of public affairs for Texaco USA, Houston, and will speak on "Compliance: If EPA Plays Hardball, Waters Under RCRA."

Rep. Boulter will speak to the Legal Committee meeting at 11:30 a.m. He will provide an update on future energy policies highlighting the Department of Energy's energy security report and President Reagan's policy recommendations. He will also talk about the imminent need to expand America's oil reserves through the use of EOR technology.

A panel discussion will highlight the meeting of the Energy Resources Committee. The topic, "Energy Security as Impacted by Increasing Reliance on Imported Oil from a State and National Perspective," will be addressed by Commissioner Richard A. Silas, California Conservation and Development Commission; Leonard G. Bower, director of policy analysis, American Petroleum Institute, Washington, D.C. and Parker D. Mathusa, Energy Research and Development Authority, Albany, N.Y.

Damage Case Assessment of the Environmental Protection Agency will be the topic of a panel discussion at the 2:30 p.m. meeting of the Environmental Affairs Committee.

RRC continues allowable at 100 percent

The Texas Railroad Commission has continued the state's oil production rate for June 1987 at 100 percent of market demand.

Commissioners continued the top production allowable after reviewing oil companies' nominations to buy a total of 2,062,772 barrels of Texas oil per day. The June purchaser nominations indicates market demand. June 1986 nominations totaled 2,232,793 barrels daily.

The Commission first went to the ceiling level for oil production in April 1972. It applies to all fields in the state except those that are assigned lower legal rates of production so that reservoir pressures will not be depleted before the maximum amount of oil has been recovered.

June nominations for the purchase of Texas gas totaled 21,213,412 Mcfd. May nominations totaled 19,800,083 Mcfd. June 1986 nominations amounted to 21,572,951 Mcfd.

Major purchasers filed these June nominations:

- Amoco — 184,000 (down 1,000)
- Conoco — 74,500 (up 400)
- Exxon — 224,000 (up 5,400)
- Mobil — 150,000 (unchanged)

Significant changes in June nominations, compared to May totals, were filed by these companies:

- Chevron — 139,000 (up 2,100)
- Citgo — 32,265 (up 2,820)
- Koch — 165,000 (up 2,999)
- Tesoro — 29,525 (up 2,127)
- Texaco — 111,100 (up 3,670)

Nuclear-generated electricity increases, while oil declines

The U.S. nuclear power plants generated 251 billion kilowatt hours (kwh) of electricity in 1986, a 6% increase over 1985, the Edison Electric Institute has reported. America's 74 electricity companies produced 1,246 billion kwh in 1986, a record high. Lower prices encouraged a slight comeback in the 1986 total of oil-generated electricity were produced.

Federal judge steps aside in $13.8 billion Hunt case

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has removed himself from the Dallas Hunt brothers' $13.8 billion lawsuit against their bank creditors, saying an impending bank merger could create a conflict of interest for him.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders had repeatedly refused defense attorney's requests to hand the case over to another judge because he owns up to $250,000 worth of stock in Allied Bancshares Inc. of Houston.

But because of a merger agreement hammered out last week that would merge Allied with a California bank that is seeking money from the Hunts' Placid Oil Co. and Penrod Drilling Co., Sanders said Wednesday he was stepping aside.

Allied is not one of the Hunt brothers' creditors, but the bank with which it is joining — Los Angeles-based First Interstate Bancorp — is.

U.S. District Judge A. Joe Fish was appointed to take over the case after his name was drawn from a random pool of federal judges, Sanders' office said.

Attorneys for the Hunt brothers — Lamar, Nelson Bunker and William Herbert — first asked Sept. 4, 1986, for Sanders to step down from the case because Texas' new interstate banking laws made Allied Bancshares a ripe takeover target.

"We had asked him to disqualify himself because of his investments of up to $250,000 in Allied Bancshares," Burton said. "It was his single largest investment in 1986. Our extreme concern was that Allied, at any point, could be a target of takeover, and that could create a conflict."

Sanders steadfastly refused to step aside, saying he could be fair and objective, and that refusal was later backed by two appellate courts.

But he relented Wednesday after determining Allied Bancshares would likely merge with First Interstate, and he wanted to avoid any appearance of impropriety, he said in an opinion.

"If I do not disqualify and sell my Allied stock at any point prior to final approval of the acquisition, there might be a perception that I was going out of my way to keep this litigation," Sanders said in his memorandum filed with the Dallas court.

The Hunts owe 23 banks more than $1.5 billion, and Placid Oil filed for bankruptcy protection last August after the creditor banks sought to foreclose on assets.

The Hunts also are suing the banks for a total $13.8 billion, claiming the lenders committed fraud in a conspiracy to wreck Placid Oil and conspired to create a world price-fixing monopoly in the offshore drilling contract industry.

The banks have denied those claims.

Sanders' recusal is not expected to pose any significant delays to the Hunts' bankruptcy case.

Legislation would close 'loopholes' for raiders

By NATHANIEL C. NASH
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Federal Trade Commission and the Justice Department on Wednesday announced a new regulation that effectively closes a legal loophole that has permitted corporate raiders to hide their takeover activities for up to several weeks.

Under the new regulation, effective July 3, any partnership controlled by an investor that buys more than $15 million of a company's stock must file a notice with the government and receive advance clearance for any takeover it might propose.

Currently, under what is called the "partnership loophole," partnerships were not required by antitrust regulators to provide advance notification of proposed acquisitions.

Though the action does not affect the administration's enforcement of antitrust policies, which critics have described as lax, experts said it would make hostile takeovers more difficult by requiring raiders to disclose their buying activities much sooner. Prominent raiders such as Sir James Goldsmith, T. Boone Pickens and Carl C. Icahn have frequently used partnerships to start hostile takeovers, thereby avoiding requirements to file notices that must be made available to the target company.

"This has really little impact on antitrust policy," said Donald I. Baker, an antitrust attorney for the law firm Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan. "But it does play a role in the hostile takeover game, especially where the timing of a takeover is important."

Under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act of 1976, investors other than partnerships that buy more than $15 million of a company's stock must file written notice with the FTC or the Justice Department of its purchases before acting on any takeover, as well as state that the target company's management has been notified of the actions. Then, under the law, the investors must wait at least 30 days to give federal agencies time to decide whether a merger would be anti-competitive.

In friendly mergers, Hart-Scott-Rodino filings are of little strategic consequence, considered more an exercise in paperwork. But in hostile takeovers, raiders prefer that incumbent managements not know of their activities until late in the game, when it is more difficult to mount a takeover defense or find a friendly suitor. Hart-Scott-Rodino filings give away a raider's intentions very early in the game.

Under Securities and Exchange Commission regulations, raiders must file a public report after their holdings exceed 5 percent of a company's stock — generally an amount far higher than the $15 million threshold for Hart-Scott-Rodino filings. And even then, they have 10 days to make the filing — time in which they can acquire even larger amounts of a company's stock on the open market before the price may be driven up by takeover speculation and before the company can ready a defense.

One of the most celebrated recent uses of the partnership loophole to mount a hostile takeover attempt involved Sir James's unsuccessful effort last fall to acquire the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. Goodyear management complained bitterly in congressional hearings that the British financier had not filed notice, which would have allowed more time to prepare a defense.

Antitrust experts here said that the move by the FTC and the Justice Department's antitrust division was also an attempt to head off much broader, more restrictive anti-takeover legislation in Congress.

"There's a lot going on in Congress in the name of antitrust that has nothing to do with antitrust, but is rather aimed at stopping the takeover game," one lawyer said. "I think the administration felt they could take care of this loophole and make a show that they are concerned about takeover abuses" without shutting down all hostile takeovers.

It was the second time in six months that the FTC has taken steps that affect hostile takeovers. Last December, it announced that six major Wall Street firms were under investigation for possible illegal accumulations of stock for clients planning hostile takeovers. The FTC suspected that the investors had directed the firms to buy large blocks of stock the investors would effectively control without filing notices.

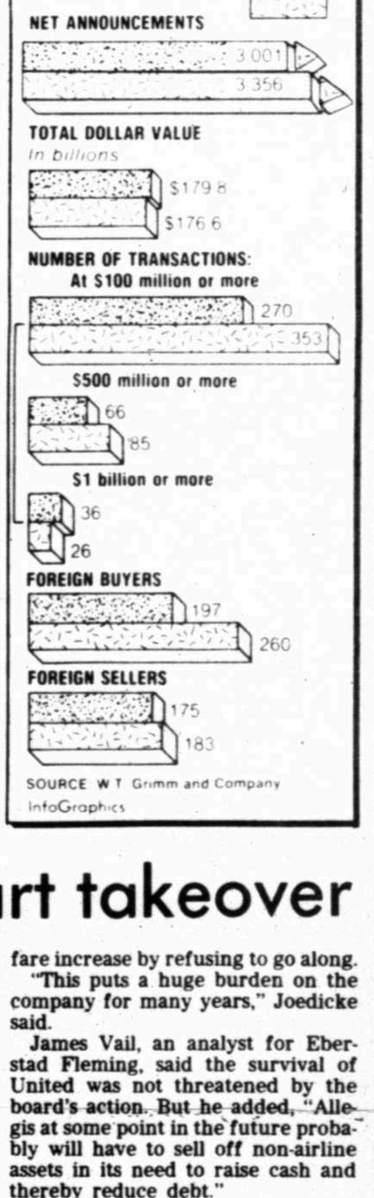

The six firms are still being investigated, according to James W. Mullinex, associate director of mergers in the FTC's Bureau of Competition.

Under the new rules, any investor who receives 50 percent or more of a partnership's profits, or upon dissolution of the partnership will receive 50 percent or more of its assets, will be considered to control the entity and be required to file a "pre-merger notice" if investments by the partnership in one company exceed $15 million.

"What we're doing is treating partnerships now like corporations," Mullinex said. "If an investor has a controlling interest in a corporation that is making a takeover bid, he has always had to file. The same now applies to partnerships."

1986 mergers and acquisitions

Data from W.T. Grimm & Co. shows a record level of mergers and acquisitions in the U.S. in 1986. Acquisitions stood at 3,356, up 12 percent from 1985. Foreign acquisitions were up 32 percent, at 260, the highest level since 1972. There was also a record number of transactions with a price tag of $100 million or more — 353 in 1986, compared to 270 in 1985.

Allegis takes 'drastic' move to thwart takeover

By AGIS SALPUKAS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Allegis Corp., which owns United Airlines, the Hertz car rental agency and major hotel chains, took a drastic step this week to avoid being taken over or broken up.

In one of the most dramatic uses ever made of an increasingly popular defense against hostile takeovers, the Allegis board of directors decided to pay the company's stockholders $60 a share in cash, totaling about $3.5 billion, while letting them keep their stock. Earlier this week, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc. announced a similar plan that would pay its stockholders $40 for each share held.

Such recapitalization plans are regarded as a way to protect a besieged company because its increased debt load discourages corporate raiders, who can often sell their stake at a profit.

But financial experts are growing concerned that such plans may be risky for shareholders, who could face losses in an economic downturn and possible legal actions, depending on how the deals are set up. And the company in such a deal, the experts say, could find its competitiveness weakened.

In the case of Allegis, the company will add about $3 billion of debt. This could become a severe drag on its ability to keep its subsidiaries competitive in the travel industry, which is undergoing a major change under deregulation.

The effect could be particularly severe on United Airlines, the nation's second-largest carrier, which is busily expanding and modernizing its fleet of aircraft and building up new hubs, including one in Washington.

Robert Joedicke, the airline analyst for Shearson Lehman Brothers, estimated that the new debt load would add nearly $300 million in annual interest costs for Allegis, which could make it difficult for the subsidiaries to have high earnings for years to come.

ALLEGIS

This, in turn, would put United Airlines at a disadvantage in buying new planes and in its ability to withstand pressure from such lower-cost carriers as Continental, which recently forced United to pull back a fare increase by refusing to go along.

"This puts a huge burden on the company for many years," Joedicke said.

James Vail, an analyst for Eberstad Fleming, said the survival of United was not threatened by the board's action. But he added, "Allegis at some point in the future probably will have to sell off non-airline assets in its need to raise cash and thereby reduce debt."

The step by Allegis, until recently known as UAL Inc., was approved by the company's board

When confronted with a mental illness, families experience a wide range of emotional responses. From outrage to shame and denial. They often blame victims for causing worry, embarrassment, family strife. And they often blame themselves.

But mental illness is no one's fault. Least of all those afflicted. It's a serious medical illness that affects one in four families—afflicting 35 million Americans from all walks of life.

Recognizing the warning signs and seeking treatment for your loved one can be the first steps to reducing family fears and confusion. And to actually healing the sickness. Today, mental illness need not be hopeless.

Little threat seen from Persian Gulf oil cutoff

By LEE A. DANIELS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Despite their substantial reliance on oil from countries bordering the Persian Gulf, the world's industrial powers would probably not immediately experience serious supply problems if ships were suddenly unable to carry crude oil through the gulf, experts on the energy industry said Wednesday.

An increasing amount of the oil exported from the region is shipped through pipelines to the Red and Mediterranean seas, the experts pointed out.

In addition, Saudi Arabia, the largest of the Persian Gulf producers, has stockpiled millions of barrels of crude oil in floating storage around the world. It could draw on these stocks to meet short-term demand if a disruption of gulf supplies occurred. Last winter, the Saudis were said to have about 60 million barrels in floating storage.

The experts said, however, that significant military activity in gulf waters could threaten the region's normal flow of oil if it led to military strikes inside the area's key oil producers: Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates.

An official of a leading U.S. oil company, who asked not to be identified, said the seven-year Iran-Iraq war had been watched by oil experts chiefly because of the fear that it could spread to these key countries and disrupt their oil production.

John H. Lichtblau, president of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, an oil industry group, agreed. He added that "absent any major military activity in the gulf, oil coming out of the gulf won't be threatened" merely by increased tensions in the area.

Lichtblau said crude oil supplies from the Persian Gulf had been "fully adequate" throughout the Iran-Iraq conflict.

In fact, he continued, the reason crude oil prices plunged from nearly $30 a barrel to less than $10 last year was that the problem of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries "became just the opposite." He said, "There's been too much oil coming out of the gulf in recent years."

The increased use of pipelines has also muted concern about a cutoff of shipping. Although virtually all of Iran's exports are shipped through the Persian Gulf, Iraq sends nearly all of its 1.7 million barrels a day through a pipeline to the Red Sea at Yanbu, Saudi Arabia, and through another to the Mediterranean at Dortyol, Turkey.

Meanwhile, the amount of oil shipped from gulf countries through the Strait of Hormuz has fallen from about 7 million barrels a day in 1984 to considerably less than 4 million barrels.

Nonetheless, Lichtblau and others interviewed said the threat of a military flare-up in the Persian Gulf was a continual source of concern.

Countries in the gulf supplied Japan with 56 percent, or about 2.5 million barrels a day, of its crude-oil imports last year. And Western Europe's imports from the region amounted to 27 percent of the region's total imports, or about 3.2 million barrels a day.

In addition to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates, each of whose official production quotas range from 900,000 barrels to 4.3 million barrels a day, Iran and Iraq are leading producers.

However, several recent studies on the condition of the U.S. oil industry, including one by the federal government, said that last year's lower crude oil prices were driving domestic oil drillers out of business and increasing the country's dependence on imports to a worrisome degree.

The federal study warned that even under a "best-case" outlook, the country's level of imports was likely to reach 48 percent by 1995, about 10 percentage points higher than during the 1979 oil shock.

For February, the latest data available, 16.1 percent of the 5.9 million barrels a day of petroleum imports into the United States came from the Persian Gulf. In February 1986, the gulf countries provided 13.5 percent of the nation's total petroleum imports of 4.9 million barrels a day.

Bank debt reserve moves no cause for panic

Third World already braced

By SOLL SUSSMAN
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Citicorp's decision to protect itself against bad foreign loans set off no immediate shock waves in Latin America, where governments and businesses already are braced to handle difficult debt situations.

"We think it's a good move for Citibank. We don't see anything harmful for us," said a key official at the central Bank of Mexico, who agreed to be interviewed only on condition of anonymity.

Citicorp, the biggest U.S. bank holding company, last week announced it planned to set aside $3 billion to cover possible losses on foreign loans. The move will give it a $2.5 billion second quarter loss, the biggest in U.S. banking history.

The action has been well received by U.S. investors, who see it as a move to strengthen Citicorp against earnings shocks from shaky foreign loans.

Chase Manhattan Corp. of New York and Norwest Corp. of Minneapolis this week announced they would follow Citicorp's lead and make additions to their loan loss reserves of $1.6 billion and $250 million respectively.

The largest debtor nations in the Third World are Brazil, with a $108 billion foreign debt, Mexico, $107 billion, and Argentina, with a foreign debt of $52 billion.

Citicorp holds nearly $15 billion in loans to developing nations, including $4.58 billion to Brazil, $2.93 billion to Mexico and $1.52 billion to Argentina.

"It (the reserve) is simply facing up to reality," the Bank of Mexico official said. "European and Japanese banks have been recognizing reality faster than the American banks."

Indeed, a non-American foreign banker based here said he expected the biggest impact of Citicorp's move to be on other U.S. banks, which now must decide whether they should take similar positions.

"Personally, I think it's a wise move. It recognizes the real position in Latin America," the foreign banker said, also speaking on condition of anonymity.

The banker said his institution already had adopted measures to protect itself against the Third World debt situation and he did not expect Citicorp's move to make future debt negotiations any tenser than they were already.

"I can't think of many banks that are lending voluntarily to Latin American countries at the moment," he said.

The Bank of Mexico official said Citicorp sent advance word here of its decision. He said government officials don't expect that the amount of future available credit would drop because of it.

If Mexico comes up with a sound project and presents it to Citibank, the official predicted, "They will go for it."

In Argentina, local Citibank head Richard Handley said the bank had no intention of pulling out of that country. He noted the bank was involved in a new Mexican-Argentine project to build a natural gas line from Neuquen in southwestern Argentina to Buenos Aires.

Mexico, which currently is only making interest payments on its debt, is not expected to return to the negotiating table for a fresh financing agreement before late 1988 at the earliest. It recently obtained $7.7 billion in new loans as part of a $14.4 billion financial rescue package.

Third World countries in debt

Brazil — the Third World country with the biggest external debt at $108 billion — is not paying interest on most of its debt. Instead, the country is trying to persuade creditors to lend it an additional $4 billion a year. Mexico, Argentina, Venezuela and Chile, with a joint foreign debt totaling $210 billion, have recently rescheduled their repayments to many of their U.S. creditors.

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT AND AMOUNT OWED TO U.S. BANKS, 1987

By country, in billions of dollars

The left-leaning newspaper Uno Mas Uno said in an editorial that Citicorp's decision tacitly recognized that "the nominal value of credits to the developing world is greater than its real value, and that is the criterion the creditors should use for collecting and accounting."

Latin American nations as a whole owe about $380 billion to creditors worldwide, including some $68 billion to American banks.

Citicorp stressed it was not hardening its bargaining position in debt negotiations and said it would attempt to sell some of its foreign loans or convert them into equity investments in Latin America.

Brazil suspended interest payments three months ago on $67 billion it owes to foreign commercial banks, in order to preserve its foreign reserves in the face of a shrinking trade surplus. Brazil has not made principal payments since 1982.

Argentina threatened to follow Brazil in suspending interest payments but last month renegotiated about $32.8 billion of its foreign debt, and got $2.15 billion in immediate funds.

Study: Social Security trust funds a myth

DALLAS (SWN) — American workers are losing thousands of dollars as a result of paying more in Social Security taxes than they ever will receive in benefits, according to a new study by the National Center for Policy Analysis.

—Among young workers, a single male earning the median income can expect to lose as much as $57,669.

—A working couple, both earning average incomes, can expect to lose $82,814.

—A professional couple, both earning high incomes, can expect to lose more than $200,000.

The study said most people would be far better off were they able to invest their savings privately. While the real rate of return in the stock market has averaged seven percent since World War II, Social Security's rate of return for most people under the age of 50 will be less than three percent.

"In order to pay the benefits that have been promised to today's young people, as much as 38 percent of workers' incomes will have to be collected in payroll taxes during the next century," said John Goodman, president of the NCPA. Goodman said the prediction is based on official projections by the Social Security Administration.

Goodman said there will be a dwindling supply of workers to support Social Security's benficiaries in the next century. According to the study:

—In 1950 there were 48 million workers and only three million retirees — a ratio of 16 to one.

—By 1979 the ratio of workers to benficiaries was three to one.

—Sometime in the next century the ratio will fall to two to one, or lower.

The study says that the Social Security trust fund earmarked to pay retirement benefits has enough money to pay only three months of benefits. Consequently, if we stopped collecting Social Security taxes, the system would survive only three months.

"Social Security's so-called 'trust funds' are a myth," said Goodman. "The tax dollars that go into the system are immediately spent to pay the benefits to current retirees. The only assets that the trust funds hold are U.S. government debt – IOUs that the government writes to itself."

Robot accidents kill 10 in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Ten Japanese have been killed in the past nine years in accidents involving industrial robots that malfunctioned or were operated incorrectly, Labor Ministry officials say.

An official said six people died when robots made unexpected movements — such as turning left instead of right — and crushed workers.

In some cases, workers were trying to fix the machines when they were killed, he said. One worker, trying to repair a robot's arm, was killed when the arm shot upward and struck him.

At least five or six injuries involving robots are reported each year, he said.

J.C. Penney moves nearer Middle American roots

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Eighty-five years after J.C. Penney Co. got its start as a small storefront in Wyoming, the retailing giant is again heading west.

In April, Penney announced it was leaving its midtown Manhattan headquarters to relocate in the Dallas area, where it will take its place as the city's largest corporation.

"This is the right move at the right time to the right city," said Penney Chairman William R. Howell. "Picking up and moving is what America is all about."

Howell described the relocation as the final step in a repositioning plan that began in 1974 when the company set out to become a "moderately priced, fashion-oriented, national department store."

Analysts don't expect the move to drastically alter the operations or performance of a company that has spent the last dozen years fine-tuning its market position. Instead, they say, Penney will reap benefits from reduced operating costs.

"The economics (of moving) were so overpowering they couldn't afford to turn it down," said Ira Hersch, president of Fourteen Research Corp. in New York.

Penney estimates the move, which should be completed by mid-1988, will result in long-term savings of $60 million to $70 million a year.

Howell says the move from New York's bustling Avenue of the Americas to what likely will be a suburban Dallas spot ties the retailer more closely to the middle America customers that are its bread and butter.

"The move will enhance our image with the American consumer and the financial community that watches our company very closely," said Howell. "How long can you justify an address as a key ingredient to your business when you are J.C. Penney?"

What was to become the giant retailing chain with 1,400 stores nationwide began in 1902 as a store called the Golden Rule. Just 12 years after James Cash Penney set up shop in Kemmerer, Wyo., the chain was big enough to move its headquarters to New York, where it has been ever since.

Part of the Penney's strategy in recent years called for more upscale, fashionable clothing lines that were affordable to the cost-conscious customer.

So, Penney entered the designer market with a line of apparel by Halston.

"We're looking for the middle America customer who is shopping in the malls," said Penney spokesman Duncan Muir. 'Our customer wants more fashionable clothing."

In keeping with its trendy new face, a 1985 promotion of British fashions was highlighted by a visit to a Virginia store by the Prince Charles and Princess Diana.

"One of the keys to J.C. Penney's future success will be a flexible focus on consumers and their ever changing wants and needs," Howell told reporters at a Penney's facility in this Dallas suburb recently. "We have to be able to manage change.

"For us, the move to Dallas is the logical next step in that dynamic, ongoing process."

Penney chairman William Howell estimates that the company's move to Texas, which should be completed by mid-1988, will result in long-term savings of $60 million to $70 million a year, adding that moving from New York's bustling Avenue of the Americas to suburban Dallas ties the retailer more closely to the middle America customers that are its bread and butter.

The company cited lower labor costs, savings on rent and overhead, reduced travel expenses and closer proximity to its regional centers and stores as among the benefits of relocating.

"A lower operating cost enhances your bottom line and improves the rate of profitability," said Jeffrey Edelman, a retail analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York.

In 1983, the company phased out its automotive, paint, hardware and major appliances business and launched a $1.6 billion plan to modernize its stores. More emphasis was placed on catalog operations.

But company officials stress Penney's ties with its past, saying its basic business hasn't changed.

The stores still sell clothing for men, women and children, though the prices of today's designer clothing hardly resemble the cost of cotton and silk in the 1920s that sold for $1.79.

Penney brings to Dallas a financially sound and well-positioned company, analysts say.

In 1986, Penney's overall sales of $14.7 billion, up more than 7 percent from the previous year. Catalog sales improved 16 percent to $2.3 billion.

Penney's revenues easily outdistance Dallas' current largest corporation, Southland Corp., with sales of $8.62 billion in 1986.

The retailer's new address is the subject of eager speculation among the beleaguered Dallas real estate community, which hails the relocation of as many as 3,700 of its employees as a much needed boost to the area's sluggish economy.

Penney officials say they don't yet know how many jobs for Texans will be available. They also are keeping quiet about precisely where they will put either temporary or permanent offices, although the Dallas suburb of Plano was mentioned early by city officials here as a likely site.

The headquarters will require about 200 acres, and brokers are scrutinizing existing office buildings and undeveloped sites all around the city's perimeter and in surrounding communities.

Lumber firm, developer files Chapter 11

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The 82-year-old Rounds & Porter Lumber Supply, which sells lumber supplies to dealers in Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri, Kansas and Colorado, has filed for Chapter 11 reorganization under federal bankruptcy laws.

Rounds & Porter filed the petition just before the Memorial Day weekend in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, saying it needs time to reorganize its debts.

The company employs about 80 people in Wichita.

Rounds & Porter was first incorporated in 1905. Until last year, it also operated in Iowa.

The company was one of the early developers of the Breckenridge resort area in Colorado, but sold its interests in 1970.

In addition to the lumber supply business, Rounds & Porter has maintained investments in other resort properties in Colorado and formerly maintained a quarter horse operation on a 250-acre tract in east Wichita.

Rounds & Porter's largest creditors listed in court papers include Tamko Asphalt Products of Kansas City, Mo., $488,264; Skotty Aluminum Products of Dallas, $216,389; Owens Corning Fiberglass of Kansas City, $251,000; Masonite Corp. Hardboard Group, Dallas, $273,707; and Caddo Door & Veneer Co. Shreveport, La., $175,916.

Pool designer makes splash with extravagant design

By DAVE CARPENTER
AP Business Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — You can call him "wacko" or you can call his work bizarre — he does. But don't, pleads self-proclaimed water swami Howard Fields, call his spewing volcanos, spitting turtles or galloping marble horses boring.

Fields, a 39-year-old former biochemist and fruit rancher, dove into the full-time design of exotic swimming pools and ponds 2½ years ago. He has come up a million-dollar-a-year winner.

"We're doing some monster water extravaganzas," he said proudly in a recent interview, explaining the function of his 14-employee Sausalito, Calif., company — Howard Fields & Associates.

In other words, Fields is a leading creator of water fantasies, mostly for major hotels and resorts.

His company has headed the architecture and engineering work for about 200 projects, ranging in cost from $20,000 to several million dollars. They run the gamut from city fountains to a six-block-long "river" and a lake featuring 100-foot waterfalls, live fish and a glass island topped by a piano.

"Everything we do is oriented toward making places for people to have pleasure, whether it's an exquisite Japanese garden or a water slide that makes them scream," he said.

The Venice, Calif.-born entrepreneur gathers ideas on people's unfulfilled aquatic fantasies while traveling the world to arrange his own. A typical 10-day trip takes him to places like Bali, Venezuela, Hawaii and the East Coast. His company also has projects in Tahiti and the Caribbean.

Fields himself doesn't even like getting wet, he confesses. A wide-ranging work background shows he's what he wants his employees to be — a bit of a Renaissance man.

After attending graduate schools of medicine at UCLA, Southern California and the University of California-Berkeley, he bought a Sonoma County ranch featuring prunes, apples, cherries, pigs and sheep.

Needing a more lucrative venture, he founded Fields Construction Co. and began building restaurants and homes. A request from a small town for a municipal swimming pool led to similar jobs in other cities in California and Nevada.

Self-proclaimed water swami Howard Fields, but 'boring'. Spitting turtles, spewing volcanos and marble horses galloping around pools and ponds seem to ensure that he won't be.

By 1981, Fields felt burdened by a staff that had grown to 50 employees, and he bought a sailboat to travel around the world. But at one of his last planned jobs, a large hotel pool, a Hyatt executive liked his work so much he "sent me off to look at a problem, and that was the beginning."

Howard Fields & Associates, founded in late 1984, has done water projects for 40 Hyatts, numerous other hotels, IBM ski resorts, the McDonald's chain's "Hamburger University," and millionaires in California, Hawaii and Texas.

Instead of traveling in his sailboat, Fields has settled for living on it while pulling in revenues he says totaled well over $1 million last year.

His team of design engineers and architects currently is scheming and "getting wet" over about 50 projects in the company's offices and in-house water laboratory on the Sausalito waterfront.

One Fields project under way at a hotel on the Hawaiian island of Kauai, he says, will consist of a 90,000-square-foot reflecting pool embellished with a herd of galloping marble horses, 14 figurines spitting water and 12 live matched white swans with a 60-foot water volcano erupting in the middle.

Alongside three sets of stairs will be 12-foot-high marble fish spewing water, a pair of 15-foot-high marble dragons and an island containing three trees, four peacocks, two swans and 42 spitting turtles.

In construction at a hotel on Maui is a pool project containing locks that "flush" swimmers out at a higher level than where they entered. Japanese and Hawaiian gardens, and a "wild" pool Fields describes as "kind of a cross between Hearst Castle and the Taj Mahal."

Fields says he particularly left his own imprint on a project at a hotel in Scottsdale, Ariz., in which a water slide built as a clock tower dumps people onto a sandy beach next to a pool.

But his favorite project, at a Puerto Rican resort, is a $3.5 million, six-block-long pool he says is the world's longest. The project took less than nine months from conception to completion, he says.

"It used to be that a person would have to go to Africa, South America or maybe the Colorado River to have a river experience or see an unusual water feature," he said.

"We've tried to create artistic ambience and fun at areas where major airlines land, and at the same time making it so it's not an artistic nightmare for the owner."

TI, Shearson turn loss to advantage

By THOMAS C. HAYES
New York Times News Service

DALLAS (NYT) — Texas Instruments, the giant semiconductor manufacturer, lost money in 1985 and 1985 and was barely profitable last year. Ordinarily, a record like that means a company would have to pay a lot more than would a more robust enterprise to raise money in the capital markets. But with the help of Shearson Lehman Brothers, Texas Instruments found a way to turn its recent losses to advantage and entice money from other corporations at rates far lower than if it had borrowed by conventional methods.

The company chose to raise money by selling preferred shares. Normally companies prefer to borrow outright — because interest paid is deductible while dividends are not, but because of tax loss carry-forwards, Texas Instruments pays little income tax, if any. And to an investor company, dividends are more valuable than interest income, because they are taxed at a very low rate.

As a second element, Texas Instruments decided to raise money by issuing a preferred that was convertible into common shares. In doing so, it offered corporate investors a big gamble: If Texas Instruments' common shares soared, they had the prospect of making a killing in the stock market, but that possibility came at the price of accepting a low return on their money compared with normal money market rates.

In another wrinkle, the dividend on the shares was tied to money market rates by a periodic auction. Every 49 days, Texas Instruments accepts bids to determine how much investors are demanding to continue to hold the preferred. Obviously, their willingness to hold the preferred is affected by the likelihood of making a big profit on the conversion.

The process began last March 10, when the company offered $75 million in the first installment of the convertible auction rate preferred shares. At that point, its common was selling at about $165 a share. The preferred shares, priced at $100,000 apiece, were each convertible into 526 common shares at $190. Thus, if Texas Instruments' common stock had risen to $250 a share, investors could have converted their preferred and immediately sold the common shares for a profit of $10 a share, or $5,260. If that price move took only a few days, that would have represented a hefty return on the original $100,000 investment.

On May 6, an auction was held to determine the new rate that would be paid on the shares. Investors put in bids indicating the lowest yield they would accept to continue holding the Texas Instruments shares. Because the company's common was already 25 cents higher than the $190 conversion price, holders of the preferred were confident that the common would climb still higher. Thus they were willing to continue holding the preferred stock with no dividend at all for the next 49 days. On the day of the auction, it would have cost the company nearly 7 percent to borrow in the commercial paper market.

The next auction for the first series will be held on June 24. In the meantime, the company's stock price has fallen to around $175.

In all, Texas Instruments offered three series of preferred, totaling $225 million. Each had a different conversion price, and not all have done as well as the first. Nevertheless, its average cost of funds currently is only 3.2 percent. And the company's savings could get larger, according to Anthony T. Garcia, a vice president at Shearson Lehman Brothers. If its common shares rise higher, on the other hand, if the common shares plunge, the company's borrowing costs would not go above current money market rates.

"It's proved to be a very cost-efficient product for T.I.," said William A. Aylesworth, the company's chief financial officer and treasurer.

Most preferred stocks have a fixed dividend rate, but a market for "auction rate" preferred stock has existed since 1984. The growing market for this sort of stock amounts to nearly $10 billion. Texas Instruments raised $300 million in it during the past two years. Most auction rate offerings are "conventional" preferreds, but corporate finance specialists at Shearson thought they could stimulate demand, and thereby reduce the yield, on an auction rate preferred if they added the option of convertibility into common shares.

That had a particularly appealing logic at Texas Instruments. Its stock, which traded as low as $102.75 last year, soared to a record high of $203 in the first quarter. Buying patterns have also made its share prices highly volatile, an element that attracts professional traders, Mr. Garcia said.

Frankly, the results have been as good as or better than we expected," Aylesworth said. He estimated that Texas Instruments might save $25 million over time by using the convertible auction rate preferred stock instead of selling a preferred stock not convertible. Its current saving is running at an annual rate of about $4 million.

Other brokerage firms have since contacted some corporate customers about plans to introduce their versions of convertible, auction-rate preferred stock offerings soon, Garcia said. Shearson expects to have more issues in the market later this year, he added.

Former Graceland manager sets 'sites' on Southfork as top tourist attraction

By STEPHEN SOLTIS
Plano Star Courier

PLANO (AP) — Ken Brixey has an ambitious vision for the future of Southfork Ranch, the 200-acre real-life setting for the fictional "Dallas" television series.

As Southfork's president and chief executive officer, Brixey wants to see the complex develop into the leading convention and party facility in the country. It's a goal he matter-of-factly says is "in the realm of possibility."

"I already believe we are becoming the premiere touring attraction for the state," he said. "Our visitorship is at about a half a million people per year. And according to the United States Travel Data Center, these tourists are pumping 44 million direct dollars into the Metroplex economy each year.

"A huge portion of our visitors come from Europe, especially England. We want to develop into being one of the most receptive tour operators in the U.S. By bringing a lot of folks to Southfork, we benefit ourselves and the local area (Plano), as well as the state."

A former church and amusement park musical director, Brixey was also general manager of Elvis Presley's Graceland and marketing director of the estate — a result of a 20-year personal association with Presley.

Brixey, a native of Mountain Grove, Mo., went to Memphis State University on a football scholarship. A shoulder injury led him to give up football for a major in church music, but the football was an entree to meet Presley.

"Elvis was a football fanatic, and on Saturday mornings, he would invite a group of us out to play pickup football games. He got so wrapped up in the games that he would sometimes rent entire high school football stadiums so we could all play. I was always on the other team, playing against Elvis."

Brixey says he never was part of Presley's inner circle. Instead, his musical interests led him to work with churches, eventually as music director at the First Baptist Church in San Marcos and later to another church in Jackson, Tenn.

"But I really got my first big break when I went back to Memphis and became minister of music at Parkway Village Baptist Church," Brixey says.

Memphis in 1965 was marred by civil unrest, which culminated in the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. In order to get involved with the civil rights movement, Brixey says, he started looking for ways to promote and project the image of the church. He developed a church-sponsored youth choir which became internationally-recognized as the Four and Twenty gospel troupe.

"The choir was a tremendous asset for Parkway Village," he said. "In fact we were becoming more famous than the church itself. We eventually became hooked up with the Holiday Inn Corp., whose main headquarters was in Memphis.

"For four years we worked for them and presented gospel-oriented music in 27 different countries. We did it all — television shows, radio programs, conventions and various special events."

Brixey's success with Four and Twenty led to the music directorship of Memphis' Liberty Land in 1975. He wrote, produced and directed seven shows each year for the park. It was during this time that his relationship with Presley began to revive.

"On several occasions, Elvis would rent out the whole park so he could spend the evening with his daughter," Brixey said. "He was always very cordial and gracious. I began to recognize and respect his music even more since I was required to produce shows that reflected the influence he had on rock 'n roll.

"On the night he died in 1977, I was directing one such show, and we were all so moved by his death that we decided to close the park for the remainder of the night. I don't think the impact of his death was felt any harder than right there in Memphis."

In 1982, Brixey received an offer from Graceland officials who wanted to open the famous homestead to the public. During his two years at Graceland, he wrote a book about Elvis' home and helped market a film titled "Elvis Presley's Graceland."

However, when entrepreneur Terry Trippet bought Southfork in 1984, Brixey says he was so impressed with the innovative spirit and vision behind the owner that he found himself having to choose between staying at Graceland or setting his sights on Plano. In August 1985, he was "made a believer," and the result has been what he calls a great two-year experience at Southfork.

"We're doing things here that are both exciting and challenging," he said. "The addition of the $9 million oil well — which is currently under construction at the ranch — is just one example of the aggressive nature of this project. Besides the 20 days each year when Lorimar films 'Dallas' out here, we always seem to have special events going on."

Digital taping technology vexes recording industry

NEW YORK (NYT) — Weighing the lure of a new technology against the political power of the nation's recording industry, Congress will soon decide whether to allow into the country — and under what conditions — a new kind of Japanese high-fidelity tape recorder that may revolutionize the Walkman and do away with the tape deck.

The technology is called digital audio tape, a recording system that matches the crisp sound and of compact disks, and like the disks has no hiss. In the last few months, digital audio tape recorders have begun appearing in electronics stores in Tokyo, meaning that export to the United States and Europe cannot be far away.

It is the remarkable recording capability of the machines — copies of digitally recorded music are virtually indistiguishable from the master recordings — that has sparked a political dispute spanning America, Japan and the European Community.

Whatever Congress does, and experts say it is too early to predict, will have a major influence on the fate of the technology around the world. And as important, it could set a precedent for federal action to inhibit a major technological advance in the interest of preserving a specific industry.

The recording industry has vowed to stunt the growth of the technology unless its ability to record directly from compact disks is crippled; until that time, industry executives agreed at a meeting in London last week, most will refuse to release prerecorded music that can be played on digital audio tape recorders, known in the industry as DAT's.

Giving home-taping enthusiasts the ability to make near-perfect copies of compact disks, the recording industry contends, would cost $1.5 billion a year in lost sales of compact disks. The industry will send the popular singers Emmylou Harris and Mary Travers to testify at House and Senate hearings later this week that Japan's latest home-electronics invention will ultimately deprive artists of their royalties.

The hearings center on legislation written by the the recording industry that would bar from the United States any digital recorder that did not contain a "spoiler chip." Activated by a signal that will be built into future compact-disk recordings, the chip will shut off the digital recorders automatically, foiling home-taping enthusiasts.

But makers of the recording equipment say that opponents of digital recorders are electronic Luddites, fighting an improvement in the technology that will not be stopped. The recording industry, they note, opposed stereo cassette tapes in the 1970s — based on the same fears about "bootleg" copies — and compact disks in the 1980s. Both technologies were later embraced by consumers, and eventually brought riches to both the record companies and the artists whose prerecorded works were sold on ne mediums.

"Never before has Congress restricted a new technology except for health and safety reasons," said Gary Shapiro, the vice president for government and legal affairs of the Electronic Industries Association, which is leading the fight to allow the new equipment. "This is simply a case of an industry trying to protect its profits, no matter what the effect on consumers."

Already, the dispute has taken on overtones of the trade tensions between the United States and Japan. Like video cassette recorders and compact disk players, the digital recorders will carry names like Aiwa, Hitachi, Toshiba, Pioneer and Sony. No one expects American manufacturers to build the hardware. That has built support for the spoiler-chip legislation in Congress.

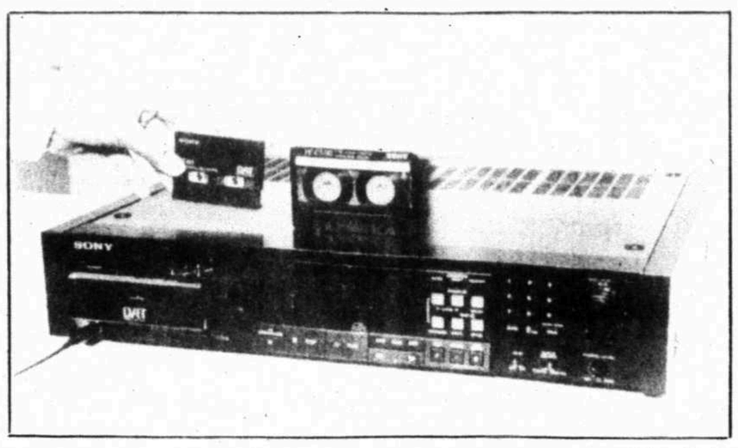

"When one recognizes that the music being copied is primarily American-produced, while the machines and tapes are made in Japan," said Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., "the introduction of DAT machines into the United States market can be seen as another unfair Japanese commercial practice that will further distort another American market." Wilson has co-sponsored some of the legislation with Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn.

Others point out that if the situation were reversed, and Japan were trying to block new technology on the ground of potential copyright violations by home-taping enthusiasts, American politicians would be outraged. "We'd be yelling 'unfair protectionism,'" Shapiro said.

The technology that separates digital audio tape from an ordinary cassette is the same that distinguishes compact disks from records. Ordinary tapes are used for analog recording, where music is recorded in a smooth, continuous pattern of magnetic signals. The sound is reproduced when the "smooth wave" is compared by the recorder to a standard wave. Distortion and tape hiss is unavoidable and quality degrades as the tape is used heavily.

But digital audio tape, like a compact disk or a personal computer, stores sound as a series of "ones" and "zeros," and creates different sounds by combining sequences of these values. An illusion of continuous music is created because chips in the player sample the digital data thousands of times a second, processing it faster than the human ear can hear any separation of sound. Hiss is eliminated, and the quality of sound suffers little from continuous use.

No one in the recording industry seriously questions that DAT is a superior recording technology. "The problem isn't a quality question, it's a copyright question," said Jay Berman, the president of the Recording Industry Association of America, which represents CBS, Warner, Capital, RCA Records, Polygram, and other well-known labels. "People are buying 300 million units of blank audio tape every year," he said. "This will only make illegal taping more attractive."

Sony's digital audio recording deck was the third on the market, following Aiwa and Matsushita in the domestic Japanese electronics market. The DAT cassette (left) is slightly smaller than a conventional tape.

Japanese record industry worried by 'disc and DAT'

By SUSAN CHIRA
New York Times News Service

TOKYO (NYT) — The digital audio tape recorder is off to a slow start in its home market. While the product has not sparked the same level of opposition in Japan as it has in Europe and the United States, the record industry here has also registered protests.

For the moment, the record industry seems to have little to fear. Matsushita, one of the leading manufacturers of digital recorders, reports that since the product's introduction in March, the company has sold fewer than 1,000 tape recorders. "The industry as a whole projected sales of 5,000 DAT's a month for the first 10 months," said Akira Nagano, a Matsushita spokesman. "That was optimistic."

Buyers are hesitating, say shop clerks in Akihabara, Tokyo's electronics discount district, because the price is high and prerecorded tapes nonexistent. Customers can buy only blank tapes for their tape recorders.

Prices for the recorders range from $1,300 to $1,400, with Akihabara stores offering a 15 percent discount — not enough, evidently, to persuade consumers to buy now, rather than wait until prices drop later.

Although consumers do not seem interested yet in buying the digital recorders to tape records or compact disks, Japan's record industry is still worried. The recorders sold in Japan contain "spoiler" circuitry that prevents digital home taping, manufacturers say. While digital recorder owners can tape from their compact disks, the sound will not be digital, Nagano of Matsushita said, but rather will change the digital signal to an analog signal.

But one clerk in Akihabara said that the sound quality was still excellent, and that it was difficult to hear a difference between the digital compact disk and the tape recording made by a digital recorder.

With this in mind, the Japanese recording industry is pressing Japanese manufacturers to pay royalties to copyright holders, according to Kunio Yamashita, the manager of the Japan Phonograph Record Association's copyright department. Japan's copyright laws are being reviewed, and in the interim, recording companies have refused to manufacture any prerecorded tapes for the digital recorders.

"When the manufacturers started to put DAT machines on the market, we protested, because the problem of home taping is not solved in Japan, and DAT will make the problem even more serious," Yamashita said. "We estimate that about 600 million to 700 million records are recorded at home a year, and the industry has been seriously affected."

After three years as artistic director of Ballet Midland and Ballet Midland Academy, Anthony Ferro says goodbye to Midland and Diane Gaddy-DeVargas of Compania Nacional de Danza Clasica of Mexico City says hello.

Ferro proud of Ballet Midland

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Anthony Ferro sat in the audience at the Yucca Theatre. After three years of guiding and directing Ballet Midland, he was experiencing a first. He was an observer rather than an onstage or behind-the-scenes participant.

"It was the best feeling — the Celebration of the Arts performance," Ferro says. "I handed it over to James (Cramer). Everything was taken care of; I didn't have to lift a finger, make one telephone call. I was able to enjoy the production. And I thought, 'Well I'm ready to leave this baby, and let someone else take over, and foster this organization and take it further.' At least I know it's standing on its own now; it's walking."

Ferro, who has been artistic director of Ballet Midland and Ballet Midland Academy, is leaving Midland for New York City. The new artistic director, Diane Gaddy-DeVargas, begins this summer.

"I want to do musical comedy; I want to go Broadway," Ferro says. "I've always wanted to experience that, and I think it's time to do it."

Ferro, who went to New York City when he was 19 and left there when he was 27, says he had a chip on his shoulder then and was defensive against "the city." While in New York City, he danced with, among others, Twayla Tharp Dance Foundation and Metropolitan Opera Ballet. He worked in Atlanta before coming to Midland three years ago.

"When I first came, we were a sponsoring organization who flew in guest artists almost every show, and the dramatic difference between the guest artist and everyone else on stage was so apparent; people would come to see the guest artist and their child. Now the audience isn't just parents. We have choreographers here, performers here, students, who are coming up, are more of a balance. We don't have to fly in people now. I prefer the ballet spending money on who's here and develop who's here. That's the only way to grow."
— Anthony Ferro

"I wanted to leave when I did and explore my own choreography and direct," he says. "I've produced 25 of my own works. I'm more confident now. I was more confident in New York City this time. A friend of mine said, 'You're tired of being the mentor, and you want to be mentored.' "

FERRO FEELS good about the changes he has helped bring forth in the ballet since he's been here.

"When I first came, we were a sponsoring organization who flew in guest artists almost every show, and the dramatic difference between the guest artist and everyone else on stage was so apparent; people would come to see the guest artist and their child," Ferro recalls. "Now the audience isn't just parents. We have choreographers here, performers here, students, who are coming up, are more of a balance. We don't have to fly in people now. I prefer the ballet spending money on who's here and develop who's here. That's the only way to grow."

Ferro was responsible for establishing an adult company here.

"I wanted to keep myself together," he says. "I happened to luck out — a few Midland students had studied professionally and had been in town when I arrived." He mentions Judy Coleman, Brian Taylor, Karen Keaton and Sandra Huxman.

"I started doing a class in rehearsal in the morning, and they wanted to be involved. I pulled on them and instead of being a student recital, all of a sudden, our productions were a little more sophisticated.

"When I first looked at the program, I had a five to 10-year picture — I think it's on course," Ferro says.

HE FELT, when he arrived in Midland, his energies needed to go into establishing a ballet school.

"I suggested to the board that instead of pulling students from different schools for the productions, I really wanted to guide the training, and so we formed Ballet Midland Academy."

The academy started with three levels of instruction, which were taught by Ferro. In the past two years, the academy has grown to include two sections of Little Ballet for 3 to 5 year olds, classes for Level 1 through 5 and an Apprentice Program. The staff has expanded.

"I feel very happy with how the academy has grown," Ferro says. "Some of the old students that are now going off to pursue professional careers, I'm confident they can stand their own against other fine dancers. They will need more training and longer hours."

Ferro cites as examples, Lisa Triplett, who will be an apprentice to Atlanta Ballet, and Shannon Dunbar and Amy Greer, who have been invited to attend summer school at Atlanta Ballet.

"Students who are not pursuing a professional career enjoy the academic focus; it's a discipline for them. Almost all students in Apprentice Program have achieved with honors. I feel very happy with the product, and the students speak for themselves."

The years have brought their share of disappointment. Ferro hoped when he arrived that the ballet and academy would have a permanent home before he left Midland.

Artist enocurages people to follow their intuition

"I think sometimes we get in real trouble when we think."

"Sounds like I'm trying to be funny, and I did hope to get a titter, and I did, but I know a lot of people who think themselves out of almost everything."

Temple

Woody Gwyn, artist, former Midlander who now lives in Santa Fe N.M., was in town this past Sunday to give a talk on art. The above statements made me think.

Whoops. There's that word again.

My mind traveled over the opportunities I've missed due to lack of action. At times I've thought and thought myself right out of what I needed to think myself into. Then on other occasions, I've acted to my regret. The secret seems to lie in what Woody talked about next.

"It's crucial that we are in touch with our intuition — when we follow our instinct, it works out better."

Aha. For so many of us our lives have been spent being told that we're on the wrong track. Think (there's that word again) about it.

For example, when I was in school, I was told that my area of expertise lay in verbal comprehension, that learning foreign languages ought to be easy for me and that math would be difficult. I believed it.

Yet, on my scholastic aptitude test, I scored higher on math than verbal comprehension and studying Spanish and French almost did me in. I also remember having a Spanish teacher who ridiculed mine and others' attempt to pronounce words, and it took me close to 15 years to be able to speak Spanish in Mexico and not feel stupid.

In college, I gave up studying both languages and suspected that if I had had the opportunity to learn them when I was 5 or 6 years old, I would have. I am grateful for the years I spent studying both because I know that if I lived in a country which spoke either, I would learn the language much easier than someone who had not had the training.

Woody said it's vital that we pay attention to our intuition and cited who we have in our lives, what we eat and what we do with our lives as examples of areas where we need to listen carefully to our inner selves.

Think (there's that word again) about the second item. We live in a world where we are, I believe, bombarded with information about what we (I hate to use this word and avoid it when I can, but it's the only one that fits) should and should not eat and drink, when and in how much quantity to partake of either food or beverages and in what combinations.

The government, organizations and individuals want to protect us, I guess, from ourselves. I sometimes get the feeling we are free as long as we think, behave, eat, drink and exercise like those with the loudest voices, the greatest lobbying force.

Another place we have been inundated with the correct responses — explanations of the answers and explanations of the explanations of the answers — is in the area of art. Volumes upon volumes have been written on the subject of modern art, explaining what it is we are looking at, how we feel about it and what its value is to society and the individual.

For those who have stood in front of a contemporary painting and wondered what in the world it was doing hanging on a wall in an art museum, Thomas Wolfe's "The Painted Word" is a must. In it, Wolfe takes a delightful and witty romp through modern art.

He begins by telling of the insight about modern art which hit him in 1974, when he was reading the New York Times. A statement in a Hilton Kramer review of an exhibition at Yale University of "Seven Realists," caused him to experience "a flash known as the Aha! phenomenon."

The statement read: "Realism does not lack its partisans, but it does rather conspicuously lack a persuasive theory. And given the nature of our intellectual commerce with works of art, to lack a persuasive theory is to lack something crucial — the means by which our experience of individual works is joined to our understanding of the values they signify."

Wolfe writes: "Now, at last, on April 28, 1974, I could see. I had gotten it backward all along. Not 'seeing is believing,' you ninny, but 'believing is seeing,' for Modern Art has become completely literary: the paintings and other works exist only to illustrate the text."

Included in Woody's talk was a slide show of photographs of paintings, some of which were his, but most were not. Some of his comments were serious, others were humorous. I appreciated his personable manner, his sharing of his insight about certain works and art in general, his willingness to allow audience members to made their own decisions and to experience their own feelings.

And he made a comment which paused my mind. Woody said he liked to simplify feelings into two expressions — we are either expanding or contracting, open or closed. When we are expanding, he said, we are open to what is being said around us, to what we are seeing and to what we are experiencing. We may not agree, but we are open to evaluate. When we are contracting, we are closed.

He then said, "When we feel the expansive feeling, that's life saying this is the way to go. Faith is having belief in something we have no proof for. I haven't followed it enough, but I'm beginning to see how crucial it is in all our lives."

I don't think I need to think about it — I know.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Film Follies planned

This year the Midland Jaycees will hold its annual Children's Film Follies June 10 through 13 at Midland Park Mall Cinema.

Doors will open at 7:10 a.m. each day and the films will begin at 7:30 a.m. and end at 11 a.m. Films being shown this year include "Bad News Bears in Japan," "Care Bears II," "Muppets Take Manhattan" and "Star Treck 3."

Adult supervision will be provided during the entire time and children will not be allowed to leave the theater before 11 a.m. unless their parents pick them up.

"The film selection committee included a 7½-year-old to enable us to make the best selections," says Scott Haselwood, a Midland Jaycee. "Children will be able to move from movie to move during the showtimes to allow them to view the movie of their choice.

"The extra free time allows Mom and Dad to run errands or do chores around the house. For those who don't have small children, they can make it a special day for an underprivileged child in Midland."

Part of the money raised goes toward allowing children from any child-related charitable organization such as Big Brothers-Big Sisters, High Sky Girl's Ranch and Casa de Amigos to go to the movies free.

The Jaycees will use the remaining proceeds for community projects, Haselwood says.

For ticket information call Brian Scarbrough, 687-3000 at ClayDesta Telecommunications. Contributions may be sent to The Jaycees Children's Film Follies, P.O. Box 9684, Midland, Texas, 79708-2684.

Midlanders win art show

ANDREWS — A first in watercolors, photography and non-oils in the Andrews Art Guild's 15th annual Art Show and Sale went to Midlanders.

Midland winners included Cindy Wolfe, first place and honorable mention in watercolors; Francis Fitzgerald, first in non-oils; Mike Murphy, first and honorable mention in photography; Mavis Murphy, second and honorable mention in watercolor; Doris Spires, third place and honorable mention in pro-oils; Janet Campbell, third in portraits and honorable mention in non-oils; Grace McMillin, honorable mention in watercolors; Julia Chandler, honorable mention in non-oils; Ray Thomas, honorable mention in portraits; Mark Butterym, honorable mention in sculpture; and Gene Spires, honorable mention in photography.

Odessa winners included Anna Cavett, second place in portraits; Jeree Barnett, third place in non-oils; Dale Todd, honorable mention in non-oils; Katheryn Boone, honorable mention in watercolors; Dolores Peterson, honorable mention in pro-oils; Fritzi Heron, honorable mention in graphics; and Don Foster, honorable mention in photography.

Big Spring winners included Jerry Provenza, first place in pro-oils and in graphics; and Sheree Moates, honorable mention in watercolors.

Former Midlander Nancy Klingler, who now lives in Cloudcroft, N.M., received third place in the miniature division.

Best in Show went to Terrell O'Brien of Lamesa. Juror for the show was Paul Milosevich of Lubbock. Doris Faucet of Monahans judged the china-porcelain division.

Bed Race to benefit MDA

The second annual Super Summer Breakout and the first annual Permian Basin Bed Race for the Muscular Dystrophy Association will be held at the new Twin Cities Raceway June 13.

Tickets are on sale at Endless Horizons and Dunkles Convenience Stores, Midland and Odessa; Garfield's, Midland; Dos Amigos, Odessa; and Warfield Truckstop-Restaurant. Tickets are priced at $6.50 for adults in advance and $7.50 at the door. Children, under 12, will be charged $2 at the door.

The new Twin Cities Raceway is located near Terminal at 606 County Road, between Highway 80 and I-20 south of Water Wonderland.

Registration and information forms to enter the Bed Race for MDA are available by contacting Midland Music Companies, Inc., 683-1589.

Fiddler's contest slated

SAN ANGELO — The 1987 Fiesta del Concho Fiddler's Contest will be held June 20 at Santa Fe Park, San Angelo.

The annual contest is held in conjunction with Fiesta del Concho, a three-day river celebration featuring national entertainment, arts and crafts booths, street parade and other special events.

The contest will begin at 11 a.m. and all fiddlers are invited to compete. The competition will be divided into three age groups — children up to 12 years of age; young adults, ages 13 through 21; and adults, 22 and up. Prizes to be awarded include $500 for first place in the adult division, $200 for second and $100 for third. for young adults, $100 will be awarded for first, $75 for second and $50 for third. In the childrens category, $25 will be awarded for first, $15 for second and $10 for third.

Pre-registration forms and contest rules are available by calling 1-655-4136 or by going by the San Angelo Chamber of Commerce, 500 Rio Concho Drive.

Osborn play to be staged

SAN ANGELO — Paul Osborn's comedy "Morning's at Seven" is on stage at Angelo Civic Center, 1936 Sherwood Way, at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday.

This story about family, friends and neighbors, which is set during the time between the end of World War I and the stock market crash of 1929, takes place in the backyards of two small homes in a small midwestern town.

" 'Morning's at Seven' tells the story of four elderly sisters living in a gentler time; a time when the telephone was slightly mistrusted and families really did stay together, sometimes too long and unwillingly," says a press release.

For reservations call 1-949-4400 between noon and 5:30 p.m. Tickets are priced at $7.50 for adults and $5 for students and senior citizens.

Ballet to hold horse show

ODESSA — The West Texas Charity Miniature Horse Show, sponsored by Ballet Midland, will be held Saturday and June 7 at the Ector County Coliseum Arena.

The show starts at 10 a.m. both days and is open free to the public.

"The horse show will feature the unusual miniature horse, the fastest growing breed in the United States, and includes some unusual events such as three costume events, six obstacle courses and driving and trotting competitions, as well as the usual halter competitions," says Cindy Bohannon, contact person for the event.

Horses will be from a nine-state area and will include national champions as well as national champion competitors. For more information call Ms. Bohannon, 687-2029.

Performers rehearse a tap dance number for for the upcoming Dance Concert being presented by Midland Community Theatre and Midland College 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, MC campus.

MC, Theatre Midland will present joint dance program

From Staff Reports

Midland Community Theatre, in conjunction with Midland College, is reinstituting the Dance Concert Series. This year's concert, which features about 100 dancers from Midland, Odessa and Big Spring, is scheduled for 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

"Although there has been a long association between Midland College and Theatre Midland's dance programs, this event marks their first joint dance concert," says a news release from MCT. "This spirit of cooperation has lead those of us involved to lovingly refer to this project as the 'Friends of Theatre Midland and Midland College Dance Concert.' "

The official title of the concert is "One Step," at title based on a routine chosen as both the opening and closing numbers of the show. The opening number will be performed in unison by children from MCT's youth dance program. Adults from MC and MCT will use the same basic dance, performed in parts, for the closing number.

"One Step" will consist not only of conventional tap, jazz and ballet numbers, but also a variety of period and novelty dances. The program includes two 16th century Renaissance dances, three turn of the century tap dances — a Rag, a Waltz Clog and a Soft Shoe — and a 1950s Jitterbug.

Sharyllynn Shaw is artistic director and principal choreographer for the event. Other choreographers include Cherry Jones, Judy Gorlin, Danica Milios and Julianna Palmer.

Admission for the 90-minute performance is $4 for the general public and $2 for MCT members and MC students. Tickets may be purchased at Theatre Midland's box office, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., through the student activities office at MC and by calling 682-4111.

Joseph Bologna finally agrees to do TV series

By SUSAN KING
Hearst News Service

Actor-writer Joseph Bologna admits he was a snob about television. He resisted doing a television series for 15 years, but changed his mind when he was offered NBC's "Rags to Riches."

In "Rags to Riches," Bologna plays a playboy millionaire who becomes the legal guardian to five orphan girls to boost his personal image. He ends up, though, falling in love with the girls.

What sets "Rags to Riches" apart from the run-of-the-mill sitcom is that the show, set in 1961, features musical numbers of songs from that era with new lyrics.

Relaxing at the Beverly Hills home he shares with his wife, writing partner and frequent co-star Renee Taylor, the gregarious actor says he had been offered numerous television series that became hits.

"I was offered the lead in 'Taxi,' " he says. "At that time, I had too much to do with my life. I wanted to write." Instead, he and Ms. Taylor went East for two years to write the two-character play "It Had to Be You." The experience, he says, was "like going to graduate school."

When Bologna read the first script for "Rags," he saw in it the "potential for comedy, drama and music and the potential not to have a show that turned into a boring formula," he explains. "That's one of the things that made me resist doing television. Most shows by the nature of the 22-episodes-a-season year after year, they fall into a formula. The rhythms are the same, the jokes are the same, and I'm talking about the best ones!"

Bologna saw the opportunity to break the formula with "Rags."

"First of all, between this and 'Moonlighting,' maybe they should put the myth of canned laughter to bed forever," he points out. "This show has no canned laughter, and whatever humor is there, people are getting just as well. That's why I don't understand the whole concept of canned laughter. They run comedy movies on television and we laugh at them."

The series, he adds, also has a lot of dramatic elements.

"When you know you have all these directions to go, it's like being in a candy store with a pocket full of nickels," says Bologna. "You know you can go a lot of different ways. You know the audience is not expecting the same Colombo with the raincoat every week because that's the nature of the show. That's why I did it."

Doing a series is a lot of hard work, he says. Nine pages of dialogue is shot a day.

"It's like guerrilla warfare," he explains. "Sometimes it's a glorious day and everything goes right, and then another day you'll say, 'Oh, my God, the lighting is off.' The director will stage something and all of a sudden he'll realize it's better a different way, but he doesn't have time to restage."

Bologna says it's the same way with acting choices. One must make acting choices because television doesn't allow the luxury of having seven takes to rehearse.

"It's maddening," he admits. "I think what you have to say (is) 'It's good enough for episodic television.' "

Being a two-time Oscar-nominated writer ("Lovers and Other Strangers" and "Made for Each Other"), Bologna also has tremendous input in the scripts.

"All the stories are run by me," he says.

Bernie Kukoff, the creator and head writer, he adds, is not threatened by Bologna.

"He knows that I'm a playwright, and when I come to him and say, 'Bernie, this isn't working,' he knows it's not just some dumb actor coming to him. I don't want to sit and write a script because I don't want to get my writer's ego in there. I want to have the overall view of it."

BALLET

"WE STILL don't have our own space," he says. "That's the biggest disappointment. Have a beautiful facility, but don't have staff, and it's not worth much. The facility will come, not only a facility for ballet, but a facility for all organizations. The home we have until then — Allison Fine Arts Auditorium (Midland College) and Theatre Midland — provide a good growing spot."

When Ferro arrived, Ballet Midland was staging two performances a year. Now, he says, the organization is staging three productions annually as well as performing on several occasions for other local events, such as Celebration of the Arts. In addition, the ballet has become involved in Southwest Regional Ballet Association.

"We need a lot more performances...I think I've given these students a greater opportunity to perform."

During his second year, the ballet received two grants from the Texas Commission on the Arts. Those grants provided Ferro with an assistant, James Cramer, and brought former Midlander Susan Clark here for an artist-in-education program. Miss Clark, who is married to Ferro, is currently a principal dancer for Atlanta Ballet.

"Not only is James a qualified assistant to the director, but his design work and own talent as a performer have greatly reshaped the whole look of the ballet," Ferro says.

This past year, the ballet has focused on public relations and informing the community "that the ballet here is a fine product," Ferro says. "Audiences have been growing, which is encouraging under our economic stress. There is a greater interest in the academy."

This coming year, Ferro sees the ballet increasing its staff.

"WE ARE adding a general manager, which the ballet has needed from the beginning, and it's taken three years to realize that position. I think one of the downfalls of the last three years is that we didn't have an office staff. People couldn't call and ask questions about the academy and the productions. It's hard to ask a volunteer president or a volunteer treasurer to spend fulltime in the office. The business end of the ballet will now prosper and go forward."

The ballet will have an artistic director, a production manager and an assistant academy director — Judy Coleman — a general manager and perhaps a part time secretary.

"As I look at the beginning of the fourth year, from just having one person, myself, and a volunteer board, now there's a staff. It's a good feeling."

He has positive feelings about Diane Gaddy-DeVargas, the artistic director who is taking his place.

"What Diane has to offer is her expertise and performance repertoire, which will tie in very well with what's happening here," Ferro says. "I'm anxious to see, two or three years down the line, what's happening. I hope to be asked to guest teach or choreograph, as the budget allows."

The students have reached that place, Ferro says, where they know technique but are still "a little tentative about just letting go and dancing. What I think Diane will do, what I hope she will do, is get them to let go and feel good about their dancing."

MISS GADDY, who began her studies at the age of 8 in Raleigh, N.C., at Walter Stroud's Raleigh School of Dance Arts and Company, was a scholarship student at Virginia Intermont College where she earned double majors in Professional Teaching and Performing and graduated cum laude with a bachelor of arts degree in dance.

Accepted on scholarships at the Joffrey Ballet in New York City, and with William Martin Viscount at Southwest Ballet Center in Fort Worth, in the summers of 1974 and 1975, she taught summer courses in 1976, 1979, and 1986, at Southwest Ballet Center, where she assisted in the mounting of "La Fille Mal Garde."

Ferro's wife, who has also taught at Southwest Ballet Center, introduced Ferro to Miss Gaddy. When he decided to try his luck in New York City, Ferro called her because he knew Miss Gaddy and her husband were interested in moving to Texas.

Miss Gaddy has lived in Mexico City since September 1975, when she was invited by director Felipe Segura to join the National Classical Dance Company of Mexico City as second soloist. In 1980, she was promoted to first soloist; in 1981 to principal; and in 1983, to prima ballerina. She has taught in all levels of the company and as rehearsal coach for role interpretations, in addition to teaching in the local schools in Mexico City.

"I'm real excited," says Miss Gaddy, who was in town recently. "My whole intention was to build something similar to what is going here in San Antonio. I particularly like Texas as a state and wanted to live here. It's also close to Mexico City and (my husband's) family, which make it easier for him to adjust."

Coming to Midland as artistic director offers Miss Gaddy the "opportunity to work with something which is off the ground and not have to go through nursing a newborn. The ballet is well planted in the community and accepted."

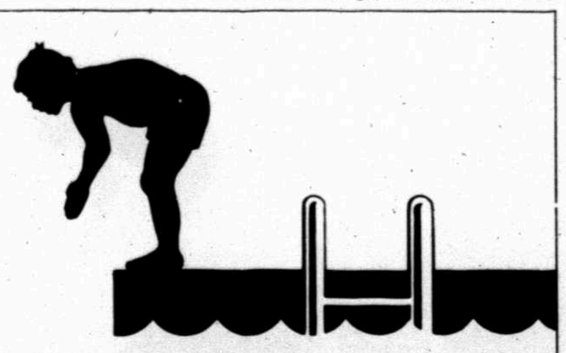

MISS GADDY'S focus and love are traditional ballet. She says she was fortunate to be with the ballet in Mexico City during the "golden years" — 1976-1982 — when the company had enough money and support from the government to have guest artists and companies from all over the world.

"Artistically speaking, it was a priceless experience," she says. "Since the economic decline, and the devaluation of the dollar in Mexico, it's unfortunate I can't continue growing with that kind of guidance. Even though I'm at the height of my career there, it seems to be to the point that there's no relief in sight as far as returning to those years. So, I feel this is a moment in time I need to continue growing, but I'm turning my focus in another direction.

"What excites me most is to be able to give future professionals what I've learned from the geniuses I've been able to touch base with — the artistic part of ballet, not just the technique — to give them something which, hopefully, will be priceless in their careers."

While Miss Gaddy takes over as artistic director of Ballet Midland and Ballet Midland Academy, Ferro will be understudying roles for two men leaving a summer dance drama production being choreographed and directed by Martha Clarke. "The Garden of Earthly Delights," ia based upon the largest and most complex work, a triptych, of artist Hieronymus Bosch (who died in 1516 and whose real name Hieronymus van Aeken).

"It's a summer run. It's a start," Ferro says. "If it's a hit it may go to Broadway, if not, she has other projects. I'm optimistic."

Plot of 'Cop II' not clarified

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

"Beverly Hills Cop II," Paramount's attempt to renew its 1985 gold mine, will have Eddie Murphy fans cheering despite the shallow developments of any other characters. Once again, Murphy delivers the comic setups as Axel Foley, the street-wise cop from Detroit putting the snooty residents of Beverly Hills in their places.

It opens in Detroit with a fast-talking Foley sporting a $2,000 suit and driving a Ferrari, which effectively cuts any tie to reality in the film's first few minutes. Supposedly, the Detroit police department has paid for all of this in an effort to help Axel pass as a plausible high roller. Yet his boss, Inspector Todd (Gil Hill), balks at advancing him expense money.

Soon Foley receives a phone call from Beverly Hills where his buddy, Ronny Cox, has been gunned down by assailants, participants in the "Alphabet Crimes," so called because they leave calling cards — letters with a different letter of the alphabet at the scene of each crime.

Murphy rejoins his buddies, Rosewood (Judge Reinhold) and Taggart (John Ashton) of "Beverly Hills Cop" in hunting down the culprits. Rosewood and Taggart decide to help Foley, but they are hampered at every turn by the police chief, the ultra-obnoxious Allan Garfield, who would rather see them directing traffic than working on a case which has the whole city upset. Speaking of upset, Garfield is in a constant state of agitation himself, for no discernible reason.

Murphy trails his friend's murderers to a Beverly Hills shooting club operated by the sleazy Jurgen Prochnow with his two aides — the long-of-leg murderess, Brigitte Neilsen, and the equally murderous Dean Stockwell. It seems the gang's real enterprise is running munitions to foreign insurgents. Where they are getting these munitions in Beverly Hills is not evident.

However, "Beverly Hills Cop II" does not intend to explain or clarify the plot. Instead it moves along at a fast pace with all the slickness of a well-made music video. It ends before we know anything about the one-dimensional characters and suffices to be a showcase for Murphy.

It's almost as if the actors were given one mood and told to follow it in order to play straight men to Murphy. Neilsen only serves to look beautiful, Garfield enraged, and Prochnow sinister. The big surprise is Rosewood. He becomes the most interesting character next to Murphy. The meek Rosewood, a plant-lover whose apartment resembles a greenhouse amid "Rambo" posters, has managed to assemble an impressive personal arsenal. Any time a weapon is needed, Rosewood proudly produces one with at least twice the power needed to do the job, causing Taggart to exclaim, "We've gotta talk!"

The absurdity of the look of angelic joy that crosses Rosewood's face when he lays hands on a rocket launcher is one of the high points of humor, other than the wit, impudence and sheer bravado exhibited by Murphy.

Producers Don Simpson and Jerry Bruckheimer, director Tony Scott, cameraman Jeff Kimball and editors Billy Webber and Chris Lebenzzon, are all veterans of "Top Gun," and have all brought the same mechanics to "Beverly Hills Cop II." Fast action, quick cuts, a loud rock score, a little nudity and explosions seem made-to-order for the masses.

Unfortunately, just like "Top Gun," the film ends up being a lively visual romp devoid of character. "Beverly Hills Cop II" is funny and entertaining — in a purely mindless way. It has a small amount of its predecessor's appeal, but it can't match the first film's novelty, or recapture the excitement of watching a great comic character like Axel Foley as he first came to life.

It's fun to see the new developments in Reinhold's character. However, despite Reinhold's few moments, the film is Murphy's. He satisfies a wish fulfillment in all of us. Who wouldn't like to crash a Playboy benefit for Earthquake Relief at the Playboy Mansion, walk up to Hugh Hefner and brashly shout "Hey, Hef!" Who wouldn't delight in being able to talk their way out of trouble, or fool all matter of authority figures? And then again, it's also nice to see the familiar sight of working oil wells against the sunset — even if they are in Beverly Hills.

"Beverly Hills Cop II," rated R for language, nudity and some violence, is playing at UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

Varney can't carry 'Ernest Goes to Camp'

Funny-faced Jim Varney, better known from his commercials as Ernest P. Worrell, makes his feature debut in "Ernest Goes to Camp." Varney plays Ernest, a well-meaning, daffy, good-hearted handyman who is promoted to counselor when some juvenile deliquents arrive at Kamp Kikikee. But don't worry, Ernest has had experience. "I had an ant farm once," he brags.

Kamp Kikikee is revealed as the ancient hunting grounds of Indians. The film opens with a tribal ceremony marking the passage of a young brave from boy to man. The ritual requires that a knife, tomahawk and an arrow be thrown at the bound brave. (Ernest equates the ritual with the "paper, rock, scissors" game). If the brave is pure of heart, he will not be touched by the weapons. The analogy of the ritual trying the pure of heart nearly comes full circle at the end, with Ernest replacing the brave.

Despite the clever theme — unusual — in comedies such as this, "Ernest Goes to Camp" mainly focuses on the facial expressions and comedic talents of Varney. He is required to fall down quite a bit, talk to turtles and even makes his singing debut.

A subplot of a mining company trying to weasel Kamp Kikikee and its surrounding lands from its rightful Indian owners specifically from Iron Eyes Cody, (last seen as the tear-streaked Indian in litter commercials) is almost unnecessary.

In fact, the film would have done better to concentrate on developing the delinquents. There would have been plenty of opportunities there. Consider the touching "Stand By Me," or "Bless the Beasts and the Children." Varney interacting with the children had a lot more potential than the subplot of the "good guys against the bad guys." Some of Varney's better moments occur when he is telling the boys stories around a campfire or taking them on a nature hike. The problem is that not a single one of the boys is memorable or recognizable each time he appears on screen. They suffice to serve as a group, not as individuals, and audience identification is totally lost.

Although the film is entertaining, Varney is not strong enough to carry the entire movie. It also slows down in the middle, and takes a long time to get to the big finish. But the last few slapstick moments, including flying food and airborne turtles, is worth the wait.

The biggest flaw of the finale is that the ceremony promised to the campers involving the blade, stone and arrow is never delivered at the end. Just the same, children will enjoy "Ernest Goes to Camp," and it is a good family film, provided you can suffer through similar films like "Pee-Wee Herman's Big Adventure" or "Meatballs," because "Ernest Goes to Camp" is basically more of the same.

"Ernest Goes to Camp," rated PG for mild language, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

Concerto varied in style, pace

By NORMAN NADEL

Most of the time, as a retired music and drama critic, I enjoy the option of keeping my opinions to myself. But, once in a while, the urge to share a good experience outweighs any such reserve. Such is the case with the concert of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale on Tuesday, April 28, when I happened to be visiting briefly in Midland.

It was a fine concert, winding up with a stirring performance of Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom." As a former symphony instrumentalist, I appreciate the crystal clarity, precision and sensitivity of Thomas Hohstadt's conducting, although you don't need me to tell you about that.

What set the occasion apart for me was the world premiere of Lowell Hohstadt's Violin Concerto No. 2, played by the composer with the orchestra. Yes, he received a standing ovation from the audience, but audiences stand for all sorts of reasons these days, and I wasn't sure that everyone realized the importance of the event, and the distinctive excellence of this new composition.

This does not mean that I am putting him up beside Mozart, Brahms, Bartok, Elliott Carter or any well-known name in the music-writing trade, past or present. I'm not bright enough to come up with any such conclusion on the strength of a single hearing of a work. But on the strength of this one hearing, I do believe that working musicians and audiences should pay attention to young Hohstadt.

Seeming at times more like a rhapsody than a conventionally constructed concerto, Hohstadt's new work is notable for its lyricism and bright spontaneity. Often it has the feeling of improvisation — a kind of performance the composer is good at, as he demonstrated — which, of course, is an asset.

The concerto is in most respects a relatively conservative work (in relation, that is, to a lot of the music appearing on the scene today and in recent years), although many in the audience apparently found it disturbingly "modern." As with any new piece of music, listening musicians looked for — and might have found — derivative influences, techniques or constructions which Hohstadt might have absorbed from the study of other and earlier composers. This is hardly unusual, or damaging. New music builds on what has gone before. There was a passage or two that brought to mind the late Howard Hanson, the composer who headed Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y. (where Hohstadt and I used to hang around), although Hohstadt couldn't have known Hanson, who died a few years ago. Maybe I, having known and played under Hanson, was the only one who noticed, and quite possibly I could have been wrong, but I smiled to myself at the moment of recollection.

There is the possibility that the composer might make a few minor alterations in his new concerto, an occasional transition is not as comfortable as it might be. On the other hand, the work is played without pauses, which testifies to how well, on the whole, the transitions between movements do work.

Variety in style and pace is a strong reason, among others, for the high level of interest which the Hohstadt Concerto No. 2 sustains. Hohstadt not only states his musical ideas positively, but he explores, modifies, extends and enjoys them in a charming variety of ways. Also, and not incidentally, he is a fine violinist, the conductor and orchestra were his empathic allies in all respects.

Stevens says evangelist song 'hit nerve'

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Poor Ethel saw a streaker 13 years ago and Ahab the Arab's camel-Clyde is now 25 years old.

Singer Ray Stevens, whose often zany tunes produced those memorable characters, is on the music charts with another whimsical song. Borrowing from the recent controversies involving TV evangelists, he asks in song, "Would Jesus Wear a Rolex?"

Sung with the fervor of an aroused preacher, the song by that title questions whether someone should contribute $20 to a TV evangelist "with 10,000 on his arm."

The song, co-written by famed guitarist Chet Atkins and little-known composer Margaret Archer, also asks whether Jesus would drive a fancy car and wear furs and diamonds.

"It can be taken any way you want to," Stevens said. "I'm not a preacher. It asks a question and I'm not answering it. That's for you to do.

"Jesus chose a lifestyle of poverty, but I don't mean to say you need to live in squalor. I don't remember learning about water slides and parks or glass tabernacles.

"There's nothing wrong with them if they are used for the right reasons," he said. "I have no proof that they are not there for the right reasons. I'm just asking the question. I'm not the district attorney."

The song has one reference to a "second home in Palm Springs." Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker, formerly co-hosts of the PTL Show, have a residence in Palm Springs, Calif. But Stevens said this reference is coincidental because Palm Springs was included in the lyrics long before Bakker resigned as head of PTL after admitting to a sexual encounter with another woman.

"It doesn't point a finger at any one evangelist," Stevens said.

The 48-year-old Stevens is known for amusing novelty songs such as "The Streak," a 1974 hit in which a man ran naked past Ethel. His wacky "Ahab the Arab" in 1962 was about the camel Clyde.

Ray Stevens

He also sang about a rambunctious rodent in "The Mississippi Squirrel Revival" in 1985 and about the frivolity of shriners in "Shriner's Convention" in 1980.

Stevens, who does not regularly attend church, said "Would Jesus Wear a Rolex?" sold about 500,000 copies in the first three weeks of its release.

"I like the song a lot," Stevens said. "It's relevant. It hit a nerve. To be funny, you have to be relevant. It's a relevant question. This song is satirical. It's not all fun or serious. Satire covers a broad range of feeling."

Stevens, who was raised a Southern Baptist, said this song and "The Streak" are similar because they deal with a news item.

The message of "Would Jesus Wear a Rolex?" is couched in the question, he said. "Don't be a lemming and go over the cliff, don't just respond to stimulus without thinking about it. The greatest thing God gave us was a brain."

The record's release was accelerated about a month while news accounts of TV ministers were still in the news.

"When you've got a hot news topic, you increase your sales tremendously," said Stevens, who wears a Rolex himself. "'The Streak' proved that. I did that song before streaking was famous. The song got bigger when streaking became a fad. It's invaluable when you've got the media hyping what you are singing about."

Though the song is another in his litany of novelty tunes, Stevens has displayed a serious, thoughtful side in the past with "Everything Is Beautiful" in 1970 and "Misty" in 1975. Both won Grammy awards.

But for the past few years, he's recorded nothing but comedy-oriented material. "I woke up one morning three years ago and realized that America wants me to sing comedy music," he said. "I go with the flow. I want the people to know me for this music, then I'll slip a serious one in one of these days."

His current song is from his new album, "Crackin' Up." The album cover shows him dressed as an egg and falling off a wall.

"I enjoy doing these nutty songs. I'm one of the few doing them."

Singing group

Razorback plays Dallas Nights June 9 as part of the Miller Genuine Draft Music tour. Razorback hit the Billboard charts this year with its first release, "As Long As I've Been Loving You," and its current single "Making a Living Out of Loving You." The group hails from Arkansas.

Family, friends recall Capra's 'wonderful life'

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Frank Capra, the Sicilian immigrant who portrayed the American Dream better than any other filmmaker, recently celebrated his 90th birthday.

The Oscar winner for "It Happened One Night," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "You Can't Take It With You" has been confined to his La Quinta condominium since suffering a series of strokes two years ago.

"He is very happy, very content and in no physical pain," said his son, Tom Capra, 46, news director of KNBC-TV in Los Angeles. "He's still suffering from the effects of the strokes, and although he is ambulatory, he has trouble moving. He is alert, but he has trouble communicating. I'm sure he knows what's what."

Dad's condo has an open atrium, and he loves to work in the garden. He watches television, and sometimes he looks at his movies. He has tapes of all of them, and he'll make comments about (Claudette) Colbert and (Clark) Gable." They co-starred in the Academy Award-winning "It Happened One Night."

The birthday celebration was a private one with his children Tom, Frank Jr., 53, a film executive, and Lucille Bruch, 49, head of the English department at Findlay College in Ohio. Some of the grandchildren also were there.

"We (had) a big cake and (drank) champagne, the whole works," said Tom. Capra's wife, Lucille, died in 1984 after 52 years of marriage.

The celebrated filmmaker's 90th year evoked a flood of memories from those who worked with him over the years.

James Stewart, who turned 79 on May 20 received his first Oscar nomination for his role in Capra's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington."

"Frank really got me started in pictures," the actor said. "I had been out here for five years without a great deal happening when Frank cast me in 'You Can't Take It With You.' I got to work with Jean Arthur and a lot of fine people; and it was the start of a wonderful association.

"'Mr. Smith Goes to Washington' was a very different kind of picture, and he had it all carefully mapped out. His work and his enthusiasm was a great stimulus for all of us to do the best work we could.

"After the war I was so grateful to Frank for saving my career," Stewart continued. "I was sort of freelance, and I was getting no offers until Frank called me. He gave me a short rundown on 'It's a Wonderful Life,' and I said, 'Let's go.' That really started my career again after four years away in the war."

Walter Lantz, 83, the father of Woody Woodpecker and other cartoon figures, recalled working with Capra in 1926 when both were gag men at the Mack Sennett comedy factory.

"We had to think up gags for Ben Turpin, Mabel Normand and other Sennett stars," Lantz said. "Frank was a terrific idea and story man. He left shortly after that to direct Harry Langdon in 'Tramp, Tramp, Tramp,' which was a big hit. Langdon thought he was the genius behind the film, and he fired Frank. Langdon never did much after that."

"If I had to define Frank Capra in one word it would be 'powerhouse.'"
— Edward Bernds

Edward Bernds, 81, was sound man on every Capra film from "Ladies of Leisure" (1930) to "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" (1939).

"If I had to define Frank Capra in one word it would be 'powerhouse,'" said Bernds.

"He is a little man, and I'm 6 feet 3. Being a foot taller, I instinctively leaned over to talk to him. Finally he told me 'Stand up! You big guys think that you have the advantage. But the little man's got the drive to prove that he's just as good with girls, in business or anything as you big bastards.'

"While he was by no means comparing himself, he said, 'If Napoleon had been a big, handsome lieutenant from Corsica, he never would have conquered Europe.'"

The director's life and work will be the subject of a full-scale biography, "American Madness: the Life of Frank Capra," to be published by Knopf next year. It is the result of three years' labor by film reporter and author Joseph McBride, whose manuscript numbered 1,600 pages. He interviewed 200 people including Katharine Hepburn, Jean Arthur, Barbara Stanwyck and Capra himself.

McBride said his biography will present a Capra much different from his public image.

"Capra's films were hailed as liberal documents, yet he was a right-wing Republican who hated Franklin Roosevelt and voted Republican all his life," he said. "I think he got scared after the war by the backlash against liberalism. Not only were his films under scrutiny, but also his position (against the blacklist) in the Directors Guild and his association with writers who were considered left-wing.

"I think also that he was disillusioned because America didn't turn out the way he thought it should. As a result he made his last good film ('State of the Union') in 1948. The last 39 years have marked the decline of a great American artist."

Whatever historians have to say about Capra the man, his films of the 1930s and '40s are likely to remain immortal, discovered by each new generation of Americans.

Steven Spielberg, who was born in 1948, considers "It's a Wonderful Life" his favorite film. His movies, as well as those of other young filmmakers, bear the recognizable influence of Capra.

No longer is the epithet of "Capracorn" heard. At the American Film Institute tribute to Capra in 1982, Bette Davis, who starred in his "A Pocketful of Miracles," derided the term and said: "If that's what Frank did, let's get more corn back into the movie business."

MacMurry thankful he agreed to make 'Double Indemnity'

MacMurry

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fred MacMurray read the script. Then he told writer-director Billy Wilder he couldn't do the picture.

"I thought it was a wonderful script and would make a wonderful picture," he said. "But I didn't think I could do it. I thought I had the image of a hero. I was the good guy, and I got the girl at the end.

"Billy wanted me to play a part where I kill the husband. I didn't think my fans would like it."

But MacMurray's fans loved it. So did Barbara Stanwyck's. The movie, "Double Indemnity," is a film classic. Many consider this movie about a wife and an insurance agent plotting to kill the husband to collect the insurance as the best film noir of the 1940s.

"Double Indemnity" was one of four movies MacMurray made with Ms. Stanwyck, who was honored in "The American Film Institute Salute to Barbara Stanwyck."

MacMurray, in the living room of his Brentwood home, said that after he turned down the role he ran into Wilder the next day at the Paramount commissary.

"I told him I didn't want to play it because of my image," he said. "The next day he asked me again. I said it would require acting, which I hadn't done much of up to then. Finally, I agreed to do it. And I'm thankful I did."

MacMurray confessed that after nearly 50 years his memory was a little rusty. He was coached by his wife, actress June Haver.

The other three movies he made with Ms. Stanwyck were "Remember the Night" in 1940, "The Moonlighter," a 1953 Western filmed in 3-D, and "There's Always Tomorrow" in 1956.

"So many things have been said about Barbara," he said. "There's very little left to say, except she was probably the most loved of anyone in the industry. From the littlest guy on up. She was just part of the team. Whenever she did a picture, she wasn't just a star."

MacMurray said he had known Ms. Stanwyck from parties given by mutual friends before they made their first film.

"In one picture I was the D.A. and she had stolen a jewel from a shop," he said. "That was 'Remember the Night.' It was Christmas time, and rather than let her spend time in jail, I take her home to meet my mother, Beulah Bondi, and my aunt, Elizabeth Patterson. And I fell in love with her, of course.

"I remember it was at Niagara Falls. No, I didn't push her over the falls. I don't know where that rumor came from. I was in love with her."

What about the other films? MacMurray pondered for a minute.

"This was 50 years ago," he said. "There was one where I didn't kill her husband."

Ms. Haver prompted him, "What was that one you did in Apple Valley and we had just gotten married?"

"That was 'The Moonlighter,'" MacMurray said. "Someone thought if we made it in 3-D it would clean up. We made this Western. Just before it came out, 3-D fell on its face. Nobody would put the glasses on."

He later made another picture with Billy Wilder, "The Apartment" in 1960. MacMurray was a heel who borrowed Jack Lemmon's apartment for an illicit love affair.

"I didn't hesitate to work with Billy," MacMurray said. "Then he later told me he had asked Paul Douglas to play the part, but Douglas had died. But I think I was better for the part."

The last movie he made was "The Swarm" in 1978, but, "We don't talk about that one," he said. MacMurray turned down a role as one of the rambunctious oldsters in "Cocoon" a few years ago.

Another memorable film he starred in was "The Caine Mutiny" in 1954. Later, he starred in a number of films for Walt Disney, and a generation of television viewers knows MacMurray best for "My Three Sons," the popular comedy that ran from 1960-72.

"We've talked about doing a reunion of 'My Three Sons,'" he said, "but I have an aversion to actors doing reunions."

PUZZLE ANSWER

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 1, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Something better is in store for you in the year ahead. Get out your list of priorities and go after them. Your past relationships could be a factor in a current or future one. Get your finances on steadier ground. Clear up a credit matter quickly and build that nest egg! If you improve your relations with your business associates, your income will rise. Forget past grievances. New developments at work will put you in the driver's seat.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may have more invitations than you can accept this week. Choose carefully — with your future in mind. New associations are favored. Join a group that focuses on studies that will help your career.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Nothing will hold you back if you do your homework diligently and use humor to make your point. Someone may try to defraud you. Later on, this person's action work to your advantage.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be more cordial to your associates. You need their goodwill to get ahead. Law, communications are areas where you can excel. The right price makes a useful item even more appealing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Public life brings the thrill of recognition. Look into foreign service opportunities for a partner who enjoys travel and living overseas. Be tactful with a parent who wants to be helpful but isn't.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your leadership abilities become more obvious to top management. Higher-ups respond favorably to your requests and ideas. The way you handle money and develop budgets strengthens your hand. Play a waiting game.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Windfall profits come from playing your cards close to your chest in business. Enjoy the fruits of your labors. You receive a special reward for a suggestion. Let romance develop at its own pace.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The financial outlook is quite rosy today. Someone who has opposed you in the past, takes a different stand on a financial backing. A romantic relationship requires greater patience. Travel is a source of excitement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Changes in your home or work environment prove beneficial. Your ability to concentrate makes a study project easier. Trying to please a parent could inhibit your creativity. Do it for yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your chances for success are better than ever. A furniture-building hobby could turn into a profitable full-time business. A book project occupies your attention. Romance soars to new heights.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your relations with a partner move out of rough waters. An alliance is back on track. Long-distance messages can be translated in several ways. You could receive more invitations than you can handle.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Showcase your versatility and those who count will pay more attention to your talents. The outlook is excellent for any social event you plan. New friends keep you on the run. Pursue new contacts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can take a little-used talent and turn it into a big money-maker. Special satisfaction results from involvement in a community improvement campaign. Romance intensifies. Show your sentimental side.

Opening lead: Eight of ◇

Here's a tip to add to the collection you have gleaned from this column; one which will pay rich dividends. Make the crucial defending hand be the first to commit himself to a play. This hand from a duplicate contest will illustrate what we mean.

We think South was selfish to rebid his hearts. In light of his partner's jump to two no trump, a raise to the no trump game was clear—after all, he was probably bringing his partner six tricks!

West led his top diamond, and declarer decided he would play for overtricks. Since East surely held the ace of clubs, most declarers rated to lose a club trick and either two spades or a diamond and a spade, since one loser would go away on a high club.

After winning the king of diamonds, declarer led a low club from dummy at trick two. Afraid that declarer held the ten, East inserted the jack and forced out the ace of diamonds, but declarer's objective had already been attained.

He led the king of clubs from dummy for a ruffing finesse. East covered and declarer ruffed. After drawing trumps in three rounds, declarer crossed back to the table with the ace of spades and cashed the queen of clubs, on which he sluffed his last diamond When the ten dropped from West, declarer was able to discard one losing spade on the board's nine of clubs and the other on the long club. That brought in two overtricks and absolute top on the board.

'Cats' among Broadway plays to be staged

FORT WORTH — A 13-week schedule of seven Broadway favorites will comprise the 30th annual summer season for Fort Worth's Casa Manana.

Opening the season will be the National Touring Company of "Cats" performing at the Tarrant County Convention Center Theatre June 9 through 14.

Using a facility other than its theater-in-the-round, is a first for Casa.

"First and foremost, the complicated sets used make it literally impossible to present this outstanding musical on an arena stage," said Bud Franks, of Casa Manana.

Other productions this season include "Annie," opening June 15; "Cabaret," opening June 29; "Mame," opening July 13; "West Side Story," opening July 27; "Sound of Music," opening August 10; and "42nd Street," opening Aug. 24. All but "42nd Street" have been staged before in Fort Worth. Each production runs for two weeks (14 performances).

Season tickets for the six regular season productions and not including "Cats" range from $64.80 per ticket for Saturday matinee tickets and $75.60 for Monday night, to $81 for Tuesday through Thursday and $86.40 for Friday and Saturday nights.

"Cats" tickets range in price from $20 each for Rear Balcony to $35 for Front Orchestra seats and are available only with the purchase of season tickets. For more information or to secure tickets call 1-817-332-6221 or write to Casa Manana Ticket Office, P.O. Box 9054, Fort Worth, Texas 76107.

Vaughn: It was hard 'coming clean'

By MARCO R. DELLA CAVA

EL PASO (AP) — Study Stevie Ray Vaughan's face — flattened nose and crooked teeth — and behold a guitarist possessed.

Violent solo riffs, born behind squinting eyes, attack the listener. Thundering chords retime the heart. A soulful voice cries.

Vaughan's handiwork is still inspired, only now his muse "just says no."

The Dallas native was in his teens when he began drinking booze and spitting out the blues. Six months ago, he renounced his artificial fuel. Adjusting to a life without drugs and alcohol, the guitar wizard testified, is tough.

"The clean side is pretty hard to deal with," Vaughan said. "I was confused about a lot of things. I still am. But although there's still some confusion, I feel coming clean has helped out a lot. It's brought me back to the real world."

A rejuvenated Vaughan recently was a guest star in the summer release "Back to the Beach," starring Annette Funicello and Frankie Avalon. He is on a two-month concert tour and has plans for two albums, one with Double Trouble — his duo turned trio — and another with his older brother Jimmie, guitarist for The Fabulous Thunderbirds.

Despite the suffocating grip of drugs, Vaughan's accomplishments were prodigious.

Discovered at the 1982 Montreux (Switzerland) Festival, Vaughan made his vinyl debut one year later with "Texas Flood." It sold nearly half a million copies. Accolades from the readers of Guitar Player Magazine followed, including Best Electric Blues Guitarist. Hits such as "Cold Shot," "Say What?" and a blistering cover of the Jimi Hendrix classic "Voodoo Chile" certified Vaughan a success. Grammy Awards soon sought him out.

But wherever Vaughan went, his vice followed. He explained its origins.

"My father was an alcoholic and I grew up to play that role in the family," he said. "I had no data bank of my own. I didn't get a chance to mature like everyone else. Music was the only thing I really liked."

Besides his brother.

The elder Vaughan had been the first of the two brothers to start strumming a guitar. Jimmie introduced Stevie to the music of B.B. King, Albert King, Kenny Burrell and Ray Charles.

"Jimmie's a big influence on my life," Stevie said. "He's the one who got me started."

When Jimmie moved to music-drenched Austin, Stevie needed little time to pack.

"Austin was a great place because there the clubs let you play what you wanted," the younger Vaughan continued. "I made a lot of friends there. But I suppose I got too caught up in the party scene, which is really big there."

While in Austin (he since has moved back to Dallas), Vaughan polished a blues guitar style that had fans invoking the name of Hendrix. Digital dexterity and a keen mastery of feedback made the parallel inevitable and warranted.

"I was blown out of the tub when I first heard Hendrix," Vaughan said. "I enjoy playing his stuff. But you've got to remember, he got his influences from the same people I did. Blues people. It all comes out of that."

Vaughan said he admires the work of rock guitar innovator Eddie Van Halen, noting that "we all just try to do what we do best." Blues guitarist Robert Cray, who only recently has enjoyed mass exposure, is a particular favorite.

"The blues are becoming more commercial, and by that I don't mean they're bullshit. In my book, Robert Cray is incredible. We used to open up for his band a few years ago. It's been a long time coming for him."

The stringy-haired, soft-spoken Vaughan offered a few words on fame.

"I'm glad my brother finally got it, and I'm glad I didn't get it any sooner than I did. I think I would've wound up in worse shape than I did. I wouldn't have known what to do with it."

King says losers make better stories

By ANDREW MANGAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — He sits at a choice table with his back to the wall in one of Washington's most exclusive restaurants, surveying the elite crowd in somber suits and declaring his loyalty to losers.

"Losers make better stories than winners; there's more drama in losers," says Larry L. King, a former reporter for the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

He should know.

The gray-bearded, 58-year-old humorist, who soared to fame as author of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," was a loser much of his life to alcohol. Unlike his plays, however, the King story appears to have a happy ending. Since quitting drinking four years ago he has been churning out more work than ever.

"If you're not out getting drunk, and waking up with hangovers and having fights with people, there's a lot of time to write," he said in an interview.

Humor is the skeleton of his latest play, "The Night Hank Williams Died," which takes place in the fictitious town of Stanley, an island devoid of oil in a vast sea of oil fields. The villagers watch their town waste away while all around them wealth grows like weeds.

While digesting this sour pill, the people of Stanley busy themselves by carping at each other and meddling in each other's business, which is caught onstage at a beer joint called The Sundowner Recreational Club.

"If the play has a preachment, it is that those who have failed to risk the full adventures of themselves in their own lives can do irreparable damage to the lives of others by manipulating them as their surrogates," he said. "It is about meddling in the lives of others."

The protagonist, Thurmond Stottle, is a 26-year-old former high school football star who has become the local gas station attendant. He dreams of escaping the backbiting and moving to Nashville, Tenn., to pick a guitar like his idol, country music legand Hank Williams.

"If the play ("The Night Hank Williams Died") has a preachment, it is that those who have failed to risk the full adventures of themselves in their own lives can do irreparable damage to the lives of others by manipulating them as their surrogates. It is about meddling in the lives of others."

— Larry L. King

"It's a dark comedy," King said. "Events transpire and conspire to turn it around so that by the time you get to the end of it, it's a downer. It winds up in the death of Thurmond Stottle. The title is symbolic."

Included in the production are several songs by Hank Williams along with three original tunes written by King, who hummed the melodies into a tape recorder for others with more musical savvy to decipher.

After the play made a successful run at Memphis State University in 1985, King said he received an offer from former "Whorehouse" director Peter Masterson to take "Hank Williams" off-Broadway. The plan fizzled when The New York Times wrote about the money losses in the theater business, even with successful plays.

The artistic director of New Playwrights Theater in Washington has plans to produce the play this fall, then take it off-Broadway if it is a hit, King said. But there are no movie deals in the works.

King came to Washington from Midland, Texas, in 1965 as an administrative aide to U.S. Rep. J.T. "Slick" Rutherford of Odessa after a short and uneventful journalism career with the Reporter-Telegram and the Odessa American.

He worked on Capitol Hill for eight years until the congressman lost an election, then joined the staff of another representative for two years. But the wild-spirited, ex-oilfield worker had tired of life as a politician's adviser.

"I began to re-evaluate life after the Kennedy assassination. I thought to myself, that man's 46 years old, rich, handsome — and dead," King said, referring to President John Kennedy.

He quit the political scene, divorced his wife and started writing. Before long he was contributing to Texas Observer, Harpers and New Republic, sending in political stories braised with his West Texas wit.

"I couldn't be serious anytime in my life. My humor's got me in trouble all my life. It finally started serving me when I started writing," he said.

In addition to the Hank Williams play, King is working on a novel about the Korean War slated for publication next year by Viking-Penguin; a children's book inspired by his two of his children, also to be published by Viking-Penguin; and two plays, including "The Golden Shadows Old West Museum," based on an award-winning short story written in graduate school by Fort Worth Star-Telegram Executive Editor Michael Blackman.

Woman wrong number

DECATUR, Ala. (AP) — Anyone who calls Clara Beam has reached a wrong number, and she's got a telephone book to prove it.

The 26-year-old woman said she listed herself as "Wrong Number" in the telephone directory to get rid of unwanted callers.

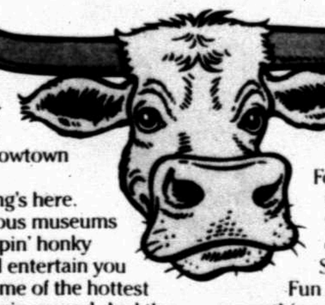

But then she started getting calls for Mr. Wrong or Mr. Number. More often than not, Ms. Beam said, callers dialed out of curiosity.

South Central Bell spokesman Robert Horton said the listing was a company error. "Telephones must be listed in the name of someone at the residence," Horton said.
