Celanese harvests its first crop from waste irrigation

By DAVID GOODE
Staff Writer

Hoechst Celanese Pampa Plant's new environmental program has kicked into gear this summer as the plant is using its waste water to irrigate agricultural crops grown for sale in local markets.

The Pampa plant is adding a new meaning to "waste water." Instead of filling large ponds with the water, it is recycling the water for use on the golf course and property just southeast of the plant, said Jim Chervenka, environment section leader.

The water that comes out of the plant has various chemicals, including acetic acid, dissolved in it, he said.

The water, after leaving the plant, is transported to Area 21, the waste water treatment section of the plant. In Area 21, the water goes through four different stages.

First, it is stored in the collection tank. It leaves the collection tank and goes through the patented Celobac system which was first put to use at the Pampa plant in 1980. The process is an anaerobic process in which bacteria consume the chemicals in the water in the absence of air, said Chervenka.

A byproduct of the bacterial consumption is natural gas. The plant burns this natural gas in its boiler facilities.

Then the water is piped into the activated sludge pit where it goes through an aerobic process. Bacteria continue to consume the remaining chemicals in the water in the presence of air, he said. The pit is constantly aerated.

The sludge pit has a thick layer of foam on top created by biological reactions. It looks far from what comes out of the tap but is actually in the final stages of processing. The anaerobic process is much more efficient than the aerobic process because it consumes more concentrated chemicals, he said.

The water is allowed to settle in a clarifier. As it does, the bacteria begin to settle to the bottom of the tank and the water on top is sent to the company farm.

The bacteria on the bottom of the clarifier are recycled back to the activated sludge pit.

The treated water is 95 percent pure water but not fit for human consumption. However, it is safe for irrigation of livestock feed crops, Chervenka said.

An average of one million gallons of waste water is fed through the system every day.

It takes several days to complete the process, he said.

The procedure, from beginning to end, is controlled from a "state of the art" touch screen system, said Chervenka.

The operator in Area 21 can monitor any part of the system by simply touching the part on the screen of the monitor. Several monitors illustrate the flow of the water in a diagram form. If a system malfunction occurs, the computer automatically sets off an alarm warning the operator of the problem.

The operator also makes rounds through Area 21 to make sure everything is running smoothly and efficiently, he added.

The water is transported out of the plant into Area 155, known as

Report allows taxpayers look at how school funds are spent

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

A new statewide report from the Texas Research League is allowing taxpayers an up-close look at how money is spent in their local school districts.

Bench Marks: 1988-89 School District Budgets in Texas is a comprehensive study regarding how many dollars per student the 1,100 public school districts spend on areas ranging from administration to payroll to student services and building maintenance.

Several area school officials warned the study should not be used to compare districts of differing sizes since it costs more per student to run a smaller district.

However, looking at each district, taxpayers are allowed to see how much money goes to administrative payrolls versus the amount of money actually spent on classroom supplies. The TRL does not draw any conclusions regarding which districts in the state may be "top heavy," but allows the report to speak for itself.

Examining the 15 school districts in The Pampa News reading area, a wide variety of spending patterns can be observed.

The Alareed district, with 28 students, spends $2,551.75 per student on administration. Meanwhile, the Grandview-Hopkins district, which has two less students, spends $1,621.33 more per student for administrative costs.

That equates to Grandview-Hopkins spending $37,051 more in actual dollars than Alareed for administrative salaries, staff, fiscal services, security, computer services, tax services and in-service training.

Chuck Steele, new superintendent in Grandview-Hopkins, said looking at numbers without knowing the difference in the two district's operations make an evaluation of the $37,051 difference close to impossible.

The TRL report defines instructional services, the second column in the accompanying chart, as being teacher salaries, equipment in the classroom essential to the subject being taught and furniture and supplies directly related to instruction.

Journalist named new Polish prime minister

By DEBORAH G. SEWARD
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — President Wojciech Jaruzelski has chosen Solidarity activist Tadeusz Mazowiecki to be the new prime minister and lead the East bloc's first non-communist government, a government source said today.

"I can expect such an offer. I am ready to accept it," Mazowiecki told reporters after meeting with Jaruzelski this morning.

A highly placed state official said that during the meeting, Jaruzelski chose Mazowiecki from three Solidarity-backed candidates and would offer him the prime minister's post.

The Sejm, or parliament, where a Solidarity-backed alliance has a firm majority, must approve Jaruzelski's choice.

Mazowiecki, 62, is a journalist who spent time in jail for his anti-government activities. He refused to give details of his meeting with the president, saying only that it concerned "all important topics."

"There are huge troubles, huge problems. It won't be easy," Mazowiecki said of the prime minister's post. "I am afraid of many things, but if I were only afraid, I would be a total pessimist. Somebody has to try it."

The new government will be the first non-communist government in Poland in 45 years and inherits an economy wracked by inflation, shortages and a $39 billion foreign debt.

The government official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said a formal announcement on Jaruzelski's choice would be made Saturday. The Communist Party Central Committee also is scheduled to meet Saturday.

Mazowiecki

Mazowiecki is editor of the Solidarity weekly newspaper Tygodnik Solidarnosc.

The other candidates recommended by Solidarity were Jacek Kuron, a Solidarity lawmaker, and Bronislaw Geremek, Solidarity's parliamentary leader.

The once inconceivable idea of a government without a Communist Party member at the helm became possible after Solidarity leader Lech Walesa persuaded two small parties that hold the balance of power in the Sejm to join Solidarity in a coalition.

That resulted in the communist alliance losing its majority in the Sejm.

On Thursday, the Communist prime minister, Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, resigned after trying two weeks to form a government.

The same day, Jaruzelski met with Walesa, reportedly agreed to the coalition idea and agreed to pick a member of the trade union he once outlawed to lead it.

Solidarity lawmaker Jacek Kuron said Jaruzelski on Thursday accepted Walesa's proposal to allow a Solidarity member to form a government led by non-communists, a move unprecedented in the Soviet bloc.

Jaruzelski then agreed Thursday to name one of three recommended Solidarity members prime minister, said Kuron, who was one of the candidates.

Walesa, who in April realized his goal of reviving Solidarity after a seven-year ban, had said he did not want the job.

Even in a government led by Solidarity, Jaruzelski will remain president, controlling the army and foreign affairs; local governments will still be in the hands of the Communist Party; and party members will control the courts.

In addition, tens of thousands of Poland's bureaucrats owe their jobs to the party, and 75 percent of management jobs — ranging from shop managers to factory heads — are held by party members.

The Bush administration hailed the "history-making" decision clearing the way for the new government, and State Department spokesman Richard Boucher issued a statement clearly designed to warn the Kremlin not to interfere.

"We emphasize that this continues to be a matter for the Polish people to decide," he said.

The Soviet Union has said it was concerned about recent developments in Poland but would not get involved in the country's internal affairs.

Entertainer to speak at PAAF reunion

World War II entertainer Jean Jordan is to culminate Pampa Army Air Field's annual reunion at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Starlight Room of the Coronado Inn.

Presently director of public relations for the Albuquerque International Balloon Fiesta, Jordan presents a one-woman show about rationing, romance, politics, propaganda, music, morale and her travels with the USO during World War II.

Jordan says she created the program for the New Mexico Endowment for the Humanities, at first reluctantly admitting that it is based on her own experiences during World War II.

But now the show, with its music, nostalgia and humor, has become an integral part of her life.

"Jolene is me," she says. "Why shouldn't I be proud of it? I am!"

Jordan's most extraordinary, and most memorable years of her life were spent first as a riveter on B-24s and B-25s at the North American Aviation plant in Grand Prairie and later as a USO entertainer traveling throughout the world.

She confesses she matured a lot during those years, experiencing pathos, drama, unforgettable tragedy, but also profound humor.

In the past three years, Jordan has performed "Here's Jolene" almost 300 times. Her bookings have included small campfire settings in national parks, senior citizens retirement centers, libraries, community groups, VA hospitals, WW II reunions of all kinds, universities and more.

local system with a debt service of $1,393.73 per each of their 823 students last year. That comes to over $1.1 million.

Superintendent Jim Pollard said a comprehensive building program was responsible for the high debt.

"We've been in a building program since 1968 and we made our final payment this summer," Pollard said. "We were making a $1,100,000 bond payment each year. Next year that will go to zero. We rebuilt our school plant and chose to repay it over a very short time."

"The good news is we are debt free and able to drop our tax rate this year."

Pollard said the tax rate will drop from 91½ cents per $100 evaluation to only 79 cents.

"It's a nice cut," he remarked.

The superintendent suggested that interested taxpayers could use the TRL book to compare their district with others of similar wealth and size around the state to get a better picture of the school's financial health.

"It takes a lot of work," Pollard said, "but there is a wealth of information in there."

Copies of the 62-page TRL publication are available for $5.39 each, tax included, by writing Texas Research League, P.O. Box 12456, Austin, Texas, 78711.

ATZ effective in some AIDS cases

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Highly successful trials of the antiviral drug AZT suggest that AIDS may soon become "a treatable disease" instead of a hopeless infection, federal officials say.

The announcement is "a major turning point in the AIDS epidemic," said Jean McGuire, director of the AIDS Action Council, an advocacy group for AIDS patients.

Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan announced Thursday that trials of AZT on patients who are only mildly infected with AIDS proved that the drug can halt progression of the infection.

"We are indeed entering the Swimming pools to close Sunday

Summer is rapidly winding down and school is just around the corner.

College students are leaving daily in preparation for going back to school, causing the staffing of the swimming pools to decrease rapidly, city Recreation Supervisor Jackie Harper said.

As a result, both municipal swimming pools will be closing as of 6 p.m. Sunday, she said.

M.K. Brown Municipal Pool and Marcus Sanders Municipal Pool will be open for regular hours today through Sunday to take care of those wanting to get in some end of summer swimming before the closing, she said.

period when AIDS may become a treatable disease," Sullivan said at a news conference where the AZT drug trial results were announced.

However, he cautioned: "AZT is not a cure and, indeed, even those who are under AZT treatment remain capable of transmitting the disease."

Findings of the drug trials on mildly infected patients who show no symptoms prompted federal officials to stop the trials so that all participants can receive AZT. The drug trial had required one-third of the 1,300 in the study to receive placebo, or sugar pill.

AZT, also known as zidovudine, is marketed by Burroughs Wellcome Co. under the brand name Retrovir. It formally was known by the name azidothymidine, which was shortened in popular use to AZT.

Thursday's announcement marks the third time that formal trials of AZT have been modified after the drug demonstrated its effectiveness against AIDS in selected patient groups.

Two weeks ago, a trial was stopped among patients with a stage of the disease called AIDS-related complex, or ARC. Earlier, the government halted trials among profoundly infected AIDS patients. In both cases the trials were stopped so that those participants getting placebo could start receiving the drug.

An AZT trial continues among AIDS patients whose blood immune system is still healthy but who test positive for infection by the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which causes AIDS. This group would be at an even earlier stage of the disease.

The HHS secretary said he is ordering that Medicare patients receiving AZT be reimbursed for the cost of the drug. AZT, which must be taken six times daily, costs $7,000 to $8,000 a year per patient.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, the lead federal clinical agency in fighting AIDS, said that with Thursday's announcement about 400,000 more patients may be prescribed AZT. Even though the drug is not approved by the Food and Drug Administration for use among mildly infected patients, it could be prescribed for such patients at doctors' discretion, he said.

The earlier trials opened use of the drug to about 200,000 patients, making a total of 600,000 who may now take AZT, Fauci said.

In the study concluded Thursday, one-third of the patients received 1,500 milligrams daily of AZT, a third took 500 mg daily and a third got sugar pills. The study was conducted at 32 centers in 16 states and the District of Columbia.

Fauci said the results showed that among those taking the placebo, 38 patients developed symptoms of AIDS or of ARC. Among those on high doses of AZT, 19 developed the disease symptoms, and among those on the low doses, 17 developed symptoms.

the farm, where it is used in the farm application program.

It is also transported to the golf course where it is pumped into the ponds and used for irrigation.

Hoechst Celanese owns one section of land southeast of the plant. The water, stored in a large 13-acre pond on the property, is pumped out of the pond to the three center-pivot irrigation systems located on the farm.

This year the company has planted 150 acres of Jose tall wheat grass, a cool season plant, and 120 acres of alfalfa hay, a warm season plant, he said.

Cool-season plants require more water during the spring and fall whereas warm-season plant require more water in the summer.

Thirty-five acres of hay grazer have been planted and are irrigated by a ridge-end furrow system where water runs down the rows, he said.

Workers contracted by Hoechst Celanese are currently harvesting the alfalfa for the second time this summer and the company is selling the crop at local markets.

Any agricultural crop grown on the farm is tested in an agricultural service lab for trace metals and feed value. If the tests show the crop to be safe for consumption, it is sold on the market.

This year is the first year the company has sold its crop on a large scale.

Chervinka said that strict records must be kept for the Texas Water Commission on how the water is being applied to the land.

He said the project is not unique in the United States. However, he did state that a semi-arid area was required for the operation.

Plant maintenance crews are responsible for maintenance repairs on the farm.

Hoechst Celanese contracts local people for work on the farm which helps the local economy, he commented.

"We're not running a profit center," Chervinka said, adding that Hoechst Celanese is only interested in disposing its waste in a way that is efficient and safe to the environment.

Lawsuit filed over alleged child abuse at day care center

By JOEL WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

EDINBURG (AP) — Sexual and physical abuse allegedly committed against 28 pre-school children at a city-operated day care center in Laredo continued even after parents complained about their children's injuries, according to a lawsuit filed against the city and 12 people indicted in the case.

The children, all 5 or younger, attended the state-funded Santo Nino Day Care Center for children of low-income families. Laredo city officials closed the center in June, following a police investigation.

Former Santo Nino employees Juanita Morales, Eduardo Serna, Griselda Rodriguez, Ana Garcia and Leticia Menchaca subsequently were indicted on charges of aggravated sexual assault and indecency with a child.

Seven Department of Human Services employees, including former Commissioner Marlin Johnston, also were indicted allegedly for overlooking abuses at the center that caused injury to the children.

The lawsuit filed Thursday in state district court in Hidalgo County seeks unspecified compensation for "grievous emotional distress" the children and families allegedly suffered, as well as exemplary damages for each plaintiff.

"What we're doing, we're doing for our children, so this will not happen to other children, so other children will not have to go through what our children are going through," plaintiff Sandra Salinas said Thursday after the lawsuit was filed.

Ms. Salinas alleges her 5-year-old daughter was sexually abused at the day care center.

"A lot of these children are too young to talk, and because they can't talk, the nature of the extent of the damage they suffered will have to be evaluated and the only way to evaluate that is through psychological counseling," said Gayle Caldarola of San Antonio, who filed the suit with attorneys

Ramon Garcia of Edinburg and George M. Kirk of Houston.

Investigators have said they believe as many as 40 children were abused at the center. Ms. Caldarola cited the children's bruises and "behavioral patterns" as evidence of abuse.

The suit alleges that: "Children have been victimized and neglected. Some have been made the victims of sexual abuse and molestation. They have been treated cruelly and have suffered direct, foreseeable and consequential injury to their health, safety and well-being as well as to their physical, emotional, social and mental growth."

Parents last fall began reporting suspicions that their children had been molested at Santo Nino, but state and city officials did not respond, the lawsuit alleges.

The DHS and city of Laredo were sued because of alleged negligence and failure to stop abuses taking place at a center under their authority.

The five day care center employees under indictment are among the defendants in the civil suit filed Thursday.

Indicted DHS officials named in the lawsuit are Johnston; Chris Ross Dukler, assistant commissioner for licensing; Terry Trimble, deputy commissioner for field management; Manuel Arredondo, regional administrator; Irma Bermea, assistant regional administrator; Jose Diaz DeLeon, licensing officer; and agency employee Erasmo Cano.

Those not under indictment, but named in Thursday's lawsuit are DHS Commissioner Ron Lindsey and Isabel Valdez, director of Laredo's Department of Community Development.

Caldarola said the suit was filed in Hidalgo County because some of the DHS employees are based in Edinburg, and because "this is a very explosive issue in Laredo." The border city of Laredo is in Webb County.

Second Lower Valley colonias home now has running water

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

SOCORRO, Texas (AP) — The giant metal barrel and plastic buckets that Maria Luisa Cisneros depended on for her family's survival have been set aside.

Mrs. Cisneros became the second lower valley colonia resident to receive running water since the Lower Valley Water District Authority agreed in January to purchase city-owned water lines in an effort to get water flowing to the substandard rural subdivisions of El Paso.

Water was hooked up to Mrs. Cisneros' mobile home Wednesday afternoon.

"We bathed," Mrs. Cisneros said Thursday.

A third house began receiving running water Thursday afternoon and a home that is under construction is scheduled to be hooked up today.

Mrs. Cisneros and her husband, Carlos, borrowed the $1,200 needed to start the service from a friend. Cisneros repairs cars for a living and has been unable to work full time because of his poor health. Mrs. Cisneros works in an El Paso factory.

Before Wednesday, the Cisneros family either caught rain water with a huge metal barrel or filled the barrel with water from a neighbor's spigot. Mrs. Cisneros said she paid her neighbor $10 to $20 a month, depending on the heat.

"There are 300 or 400 families here who are eligible for running water, but they can't get it because no one can pay," she said.

Members of the El Paso Inter-religious Sponsoring Organization said in a news conference last week that colonias' residents should not be required to pay connection fees in lump sums.

"We want to see those hookups done. We're glad to see them moving again," said Sister Maribeth Larkin, EPISO director. "We still have serious concerns about the requirements that all the money be paid up front. That continues to be restrictive."

After the water authority agreed to purchase water lines, they announced that 600 homes and businesses a year could be hooked up.

The first home was hooked up June 17, but no other hookups followed.

Dale Jones, spokeswoman for the water authority, said the delays are partly due to complex paper work.

"In most communities what they do is a subdivider comes in and puts in all that infrastructure," she said. "But in this situation, the property owner is having to do these things that a developer normally does."

"There are 300 or 400 families here who are eligible for running water, but they can't get it because no one can pay," she said.

Complicating the procedure is the fact that property deeds do not transfer from the owner to the buyer until the plot is paid for. "So usually we have to deal with a third party who is off somewhere else, which you can imagine can be a problem for us," she said.

EPISO invited area water agencies as well as officials from the Texas Water Development

Board to a water summit on Thursday. The group said last week the intent of the summit is for the agencies to come up with a regional water plan for the area so the agencies can take advantage of newly available funding.

But Ms. Jones said she was unsure if the summit will produce any results.

"All of those invited already work together very well. We're in contact constantly," she said.

Mrs. Cisneros said she moved to the subdivision because the street had existing water lines and it would be easier to get running water there than at her previous home.

"My uncle lives in Juarez and he tells me it is ridiculous that we live in the United States and don't have running water and he lives in Juarez and has water," she said.

The Cisneros family has lived in the United States since 1979, when the city of El Paso adopted a policy not to expand water service outside the city limits in an effort to curb rapid growth in El Paso County.

Company claims insurers manipulating market

AUSTIN (AP) — Workers' compensation — the issue that state officials could not resolve in regular and special legislative sessions — has crept back to the forefront.

An interim Senate committee today begins looking at how workers' comp insurance rates are set.

And on Thursday, a Dallas insurer accused a group of large insurance companies of manipulating the market to drive up employer-paid workers' comp premiums.

Those charges came two days after the insurance industry warned that the state workers' comp system was on the verge of collapse and asked for a 34.9 percent increase in premium rates.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, chairman of the committee studying comp rates, said when he first heard of the proposed 34.9 percent increase, "that almost caused me a coronary." He described the proposal as excessive.

Montford said he wasn't familiar with the charge by Standard Financial Indemnity Corp. — that large insurers were behind skyrocketing costs — but added, "We'd love to hear from them."

Gerald Dorsey, general counsel for Standard Financial Indemnity, said the large insurers have run the Texas Workers' Compensation Assigned Risk Pool into a record deficit.

Dorsey termed the risk pool "a cesspool" for employers who cannot purchase policies on the open market.

He said the primary causes of the Texas workers' compensation insurance mess are "gross irresponsibility" in the workers' compensation system, combined with "monopolistic conspiracy among the insurance companies servicing the assigned risk pool policyholders."

Richard Geiger, Texas attorney for the National Council on Compensation Insurance, which is composed of carriers writing workers' comp policies, rejected Dorsey's argument.

"You have to take Mr. Dorsey's comments in light of the fact that he is a litigant in a lawsuit that claims the carriers have conspired to keep him out of the market," Geiger said.

In a suit pending in Hidalgo County, Dorsey's firm alleges the 10 companies writing policies for employers in the risk pool are guilty of anti-trust violations.

State lawmakers have wrestled all year with the workers' comp system, which has been criticized for expensive premiums and inadequate benefits.

Gov. Bill Clements said he will call the Legislature back into another special legislative session this fall to reform the workers' comp system.

Clements on Thursday did not comment on Dorsey's claim, but said, "I think that all of these various news releases by the interested parties on all the sides of this particular complicated issue will be very helpful when we have that special session in November."

Dorsey said the dramatic misfortunes of the risk pool show that the large carriers have forced more employers to pay higher premiums while squeezing out smaller insurers.

The governing board of the risk pool announced earlier this week a record deficit of nearly $400 million. When the risk pool runs a deficit, all insurance companies in Texas are assessed to make it up. Meanwhile, the 10 large insurers are pocketing nearly 30 percent of risk pool premiums as a servicing commission, Dorsey said.

"The higher the claims paid, the higher the rates they could charge and the higher assigned risk pool assessments would be, which has driven all meaningful competition out of the open market for workers' compensation insurance," he said.

Groups call for more toxic waste reduction

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The state should fight toxic waste at its source rather than waiting to deal with the problem after production, a coalition of Texans said.

The network of citizen groups Thursday also called on Gov. Bill Clements and state water officials to schedule public hearing on a long-term waste disposal plan.

"We're here today to say no more poisoning of our community... We want pollution prevention and waste reduction, not more waste disposal sites," Lana Nelson, president of Texans United, said at a rally on the Capitol steps.

Election judges appointed for precincts

Gray County commissioners this week accepted the appointment of election judges and agreed to consolidate a number of the city's precincts for the constitutional amendment election in November.

Precincts 2, 3 and 10 were consolidated to Lovett Memorial Library in Pampa. Precincts 7 and 12 are to vote at Horace Mann Elementary School. Laketon's Precinct 6 will join Precincts 11 and 14 in voting at M.K. Brown Auditorium and Precincts 8 and 9 will go to Austin Elementary School.

By combining the precincts for the constitutional amendment election, Carter said the county saves on election expenses. Having a box at each of the precincts is generally not necessary when there is not a general election, she said.

Following are the election

judges accepted by the commission Tuesday:

Precinct 1 - Lefors Community Center — Phondia Sierman, presiding judge, and Mike Shedeck, assistant.

Precinct 2 - Baker School — Helen Ann Cook, presiding judge, and Marilyn Miller, assistant.

Precinct 3 - Grandview Hopkins School — Linda Babcock, presiding judge, and Sue Wills, assistant.

Precinct 4 - Alanreed School — Jeannie Adams, presiding judge, and Lena Carter, assistant.

Precinct 5 - Lovett Library, McLean — Bill Graham Jr., presiding judge, and Rush (R.J.) Turner, assistant.

Precinct 6 - Howard's Store, Laketon — Carol Gordon, presiding judge, and Gwen McClure, assistant.

Precinct 7 - Horace Mann School — Conner B. Hicks, presiding judge, and Floyd Baxter, Bill Colbert said development of the plan is separate from the agency's commitment to waste reduction. The commission has had a program for about a year to facilitate waste recycling, he said.

"Reduction is important, and it is being addressed," Colbert said. The commission generally is receptive to suggestions of public hearings, he added.

Clements said he agrees that a strong toxic waste reduction program is needed.

"It's incumbent upon all of us to have a keen awareness of this problem... and through a personal sense of obligation to society, be sure that we do not abuse our environment and that we cooperate and fully participate in the various programs to reduce the kind of toxic contamination that we all are keenly aware of," he said.

Representatives of the coalition planned to meet with staff members from the commission and Clements' office.

"Governor, water commissioners, show us you want to build Texas, instead of continuing to bury us under tons of industrial poison," Mike Haga, executive director of Texas Citizen Action, said.

Haga called on state officials to declare a 5-year moratorium on construction of hazardous waste land disposal and incinerator facilities.

Castro appearing more as a buffoon

Cuba's communist caudillo, Fidel Castro, thinks of himself as a giant strutting across the world stage, sending troops to prop up communist regimes in Ethiopia and Angola, supporting the Sandinista communist junta in Nicaragua, and in general being a thorn in the side of the Yanqui imperialists to the north. But more and more he appears to the world as a buffoon.

Before Castro's 1959 putsch against dictator Fulgencio Batista, Cuba had the highest standard of living in Latin America. But today it has near the lowest in the hemisphere. Even Cuban Havana cigars, long known as Cuba's best export, have declined abysmally in quality.

Impervious to this reality, Castro eschews even the halting market reforms made by other communist regimes, including his mentors in Moscow. No Cuban-rolled perestroika for Fidel. To emphasize the point, Castro recently gave another of his stemwinding speeches. He branded free-market countries "a society of beasts, a zoo where the lions run free and the powerful devour the weak."

He boasted of Cuba's free medical care, education, child care and schools for the handicapped. More objective reports paint a contrary picture. Cuba's literacy rate stands at between 90 and 93 percent, up from a rate of 76 percent in 1953.

But things already were improving in those days, and today many of Cuba's Latino neighbors, once below it, have higher literacy rates.

As to health care, in 1987 a survey conducted by Castro's own Communist Party found that 87.6 percent of residents in one province thought health care inadequate. And U.S. National Academy of Sciences demographer Kenneth Hill, using Cuba's own statistics, has shown that the country's infant mortality rate may be on the rise.

But Castro adamantly ignored such facts, stating in his speech, "Which of those dehumanized [capitalist] cities have those services? Imperialism thinks socialism is in decline, but what is declining is imperialism and capitalism." Fidel's rhetoric seems to be caught in a time-warp. If he were ousted from power, he wouldn't even feel at home in Moscow or Beijing, and would be welcomed only in some American university faculty lounges where leftism remains in its pristine state, sealed off from reality.

When Castro first seized power he posted signs warning: "Counterrevolutionary jokes are forbidden here." Nevertheless, such jokes have flourished. One goes like this:

Little Pepito sits in class. His teacher asks what Cuba's economy was like before the 1959 revolution. He replies, "Before the revolution the government took this country to the brink of an economic abyss." The teacher then asks, "And after the revolution?" Pepito replies, "Now our country has taken a step forward."

Berry's World

Something to keep in mind

WASHINGTON - The State of Puerto Rico? The independent Republic of Puerto Rico? A more autonomous Commonwealth of Puerto Rico? Under a bill that moved out of the Senate Energy Committee this month, these are the options that would be offered to Puerto Rican voters in a referendum in 1991. They demand critical examination.

Just about everyone agrees on one proposition: The people of Puerto Rico should have an opportunity to decide their own political future. The islands became a U.S. territory following the war with Spain in 1898. They attained commonwealth status in 1952. Since then every president has recommended a plebiscite of some kind. Democrats and Republicans have endorsed the idea in their party platforms. This past February George Bush asked for legislative action.

Now we are seeing some legislative action, and some of what we see is disturbing. The major vehicle is S. 712, sponsored chiefly by Bennett Johnston of Louisiana, James A. McClure of Idaho and Paul Simon of Illinois. As originally drafted the bill is fatally flawed. None of the three options looks good.

In a statement before the committee, Simon made out a basic case in favor of change. Puerto Ricans are citizens of the United States, but they are second-class citizens. They have no vote in either House or Senate. They cannot vote in presidential elections. They serve in wars: 65,000 Puerto Rican troops fought in World War II, 61,000 in Korea.

True, Puerto Ricans pay no federal income taxes and they benefit from certain tax incentives that attract American corporations, but on key issues of public policy they are on the outside looking in. After nearly a century in political limbo, they deserve a chance to vote for something different.

What about statehood? The Constitution says with admirable brevity that "new states may be admitted by the Congress into this union." The matter is not so simple. The Constitution also says that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," and from this and other provisions we derive the principle that all states are equal.

The trouble is that in some respects, the pending bill would make Puerto Rico more equal than others. For one example, the option of statehood would give Puerto Rico an exclusive right to all seabed and natural resources within a 200-mile zone around the islands. No other state enjoys any such domain. Neither Alaska nor Hawaii gained special maritime rights with statehood.

Puerto Rico suffers from high unemployment and low per capita income. If statehood is granted, some transitional benefits would have to be granted, just as Alaska gained access to oil revenues from federal lands. The bill goes further. It requires Congress to pass legislation ensuring that Puerto Ricans will have "equal social and economic opportunities," but the language is murky. No such guarantee can be given.

An estimated 60 percent of the Puerto Rican people speak little or no English. One special privilege would apply to federal courts in the new state: At the request of any party in any litigation, all the proceedings would have to be conducted in Spanish. The provision would create intolerable problems for litigants, lawyers and judges alike.

The option of independence suffers from serious drawbacks. Under the bill, "The Republic of Puerto Rico shall be closed to any and all military forces of foreign nations." The language clearly would shut out U.S. forces, but it would be folly to abandon our naval base in Roosevelt Roads and our vital radar installations. In any event, it is difficult to understand how a U.S. Congress could legislate in perpetuity for a truly independent and sovereign Puerto Rico.

Suppose the voters opt for an expanded status of commonwealth. Under the bill, the Puerto Rican governor would be granted appointive powers that belong solely to the president. The commonwealth could forge its own foreign policy in certain areas. One provision would prohibit U.S. tariffs on any goods imported "from" Puerto Rico, thus opening a door to transshipments from around the world. No way, Jose.

Many of these objections doubtless will be resolved as the plebiscite bill moves along. One question cannot easily be brushed aside. Suppose the option of statehood carries by a mere handful of votes? What then? There could be no turning back, for statehood is irrevocable. Southerners learned that in 1865. It's something to keep in mind.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, Aug. 18, the 230th day of 1989. There are 135 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:
On Aug. 18, 1587, Virginia Dare became the first child of English parents to be born on American soil, on what is now Roanoke Island, N.C.

On this date:
In 1227, the Mongol conqueror Genghis Khan died.

In 1838, the first marine expedition sponsored by the U.S. government set sail from Hampton Roads, Va. The expedition traveled the Pacific Ocean and South Seas, gathering information to help promote U.S. commerce.

In 1846, U.S. forces led by Gen. Stephen W. Kearney captured Santa Fe, N.M.

In 1914, President Woodrow Wilson issued his Proclamation of Neutrality, which was aimed at keeping the United States out of World War I.

Re-creating a new experience

Flowers for the living:

Paul Poberzny is an uncommon man.

You will recall my having mentioned him as president of the Experimental Aircraft Assn. — host of the annual Oshkosh, Wis., fly-in. Paul is so much more than that. And more.

How future generations might benefit from the shirt-sleeve wisdom of this man, if only there were a Boswell to travel alongside him and record every utterance.

Paul was a high school dropout. Before World War II he lacked the academic credentials to be an Air Force cadet. So he taught himself enough of everything — including how to fly — that he went into service as a commissioned captain and became the only American ever to earn all seven of our nation's military wings.

Now he gives himself with equal purposefulness to the causes of civil aviation, specifically to preserving, protecting and defending the rights of private airmen to pursue happiness.

Paul's devotion to our country is a consuming passion.

I've enjoyed Paul's company flying second seat in a P-51 or just hangar-flying (sitting around the hangar talking) on down days.

Paul Harvey

Poberzny observations don't sound profound — at first. VFR: "Flying over towns I look down at schools where the only old cars in the parking lot belong to the teachers and that's backward."

Of his world class EAA Aviation Museum, the assembly and auditorium facilities of which are available to the home community, Paul explained: "You don't build a church and then lock the door."

Paul's home is a museum where every wall, every nook, cranny and table displays mementoes of his flying.

His loving wife, Audrey, notes that one prominent lighted cabinet which Paul re-examines most often is filled with "broken airplane parts" — a fused cylinder, a fractured cable pulley, a failed nut or bolt or circuit breaker that at some time in his half-century of flying "let him down."

This preoccupation with "what broke" reflects a persistent dedication to improvement.

When Paul built a replica of the Spirit of St. Louis and flew it around our country for the now generation to see, 9-year-olds would stare with awe at the fragile bird. They knew about Lindy — though most could not name even one astronaut.

Paul traces our rise and fall: "As kids on scooters we emulated heroes and heroines — then we adventured in sequence with cars and girls, wife and family and we lived happily ever after."

"Today," Paul says, "everything happens at once and life's wonderful new experiences have all been used up before we're old enough to vote." With his EAA he is trying to re-create a new experience that can last a lifetime.

Military spending isn't such a bonanza

By ROBERT WALTERS

KANKAKEE, Ill. (NEA) — Nobody will ever confuse GNB Inc. with Lockheed or Raytheon, but the producer of heavy-duty batteries for cars, trucks and industry is this community's leading military contractor.

Operating from a nondescript manufacturing complex across the street from a soybean field on the western edge of Kankakee, GNB Inc. holds a modest Defense Department contract to make batteries for Navy submarines.

Indeed, very little economic activity in Illinois' 15th Congressional District is attributable to the federal government's military budget. E. Jane Dadds, an aide to Rep. Edward R. Madigan, who is serving his ninth term as the district's representative, characterizes the military presence as "very minimal."

Moreover, according to a non-profit economic consulting firm in Lansing, Mich., the pattern here is duplicated in many congressional districts throughout the country.

In a recent report entitled "Bankrupting America," Employment Research Associates concluded that for almost three-fourths (321 of 435) of the nation's congressional districts, "the military budget takes more out of them in taxes than it returns to them in military contracts and salaries."

Although that imbalance can be justified in terms of shared sacrifice to provide national security, in recent years officials of the Defense Department and its contractors have sought to portray military spending as an economic bonanza for everyone.

When Congress threatens to halt funding for a weapons system, for example, representatives of the firms holding the project's contracts and subcontracts often bustle about Capitol Hill with studies, maps and charts purporting to show that jobs almost everywhere in the country depend upon it.

The "Bankrupting America" study, authored by Dr. James R. Anderson, is flawed because comprehensive and reliable data is available only for prime contractors, even though much Defense Department work is done by subcontractors and their sub-subcontractors.

But the principal point it makes is not only valid but also devastating: "The Pentagon is draining tax resources from 321 congressional districts and channeling them into only 114 districts. Military spending is thus a principal source of drastic imbalance in the federal tax burden and budget allocation."

The detailed analysis in "Bankrupting America" identifies Virginia's 10th Congressional District as the leading beneficiary of Defense Department spending. Not surprisingly, it encompasses the Washington, D.C. suburbs where the Pentagon is located.

Other "winners" include the two Hampton Roads, Va., districts where the Navy's Atlantic Fleet is based and the two Missouri districts in the St. Louis area where McDonnell Douglas has its headquarters and manufacturing facilities.

"Losers" include all of the 22 districts in Illinois and all of the 18 districts in Michigan, as well as 29 of 34 New York districts, 22 of 23 Pennsylvania districts, 17 of 21 Ohio districts and even 26 of 45 districts in California, a state widely presumed to benefit handsomely from defense spending.

The 15th Congressional District in rural Illinois, about 60 miles south of Chicago, has two military facilities — an Army ammunition depot outside Joliet at the northern end of the district and Chanute Air Force Base near Rantoul at the southern end.

But congressional aide Dadds says the Joliet arsenal already is "in caretaker status," while the Pentagon commission studying base-closing possibilities has called for the abandonment of Chanute.

Adds Dadds: "Everything I have seen is that we get little or no return for the money the district's taxpayers pour into the Pentagon budget. Moreover, taxpayers elsewhere generally fare no better in their relationship with the Defense Department."

Indian coalition wants ancestors' remains back in graves

By RICHARD BENKE
Associated Press Writer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Leaders of an American Indian coalition say they're haunted by the image of their ancestors' remains stored in boxes in museums and universities. They want them returned for burial.

"We're asking that they bring them back to their lands, their natural resting place. That's what they deserve," says Delfino Begay, governor of Laguna Pueblo in New Mexico.

The National Congress of American Indians, meeting in Albuquerque this week, estimates the bones of 2.5 million Indians are held in public and private collections nationwide. Museum spokesmen dispute the figure, estimating institutions hold the remains of 100,000 to 250,000.

One of the largest collections is at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., which says it has 18,600 such remains, stacked in boxes in a hallway closed to the public.

The Smithsonian, along with a number of other museums and universities, is studying the bones to learn more about the bone structure, diseases and lifestyles of American Indians of more than a century ago.

The Indian leaders, representing about 20 tribes at conference, want the remains returned now, or at the very least, when the studies are completed. Some say they have nightmares about the unburied dead.

"You really don't get the feeling of the Smithsonian... until you get there and see the boxes upon boxes in the hallway," said Lawrence Kenmill, a member of the Salish-Kootenay Tribal Council from Pablo, Mont.

"You get all kinds of feelings put together. You're sad, you're hurt, you're angry. You get them all at once when you're looking at it."

The delegates agreed the situation has improved in the past 10 years, with new laws protecting disposition of newly unearthed remains. Some institutions also have returned bones.

Last week, for instance, about 1,200 pounds of prehistoric remains of members of the Seminole Tribe were reburied at Wounded Knee, S.D., after being stored at the University of South Dakota for the past three years.

The remains had been unearthed at a construction site near Tampa, Fla. Their new gravesite will become part of the National Indian Cemetery.

But the Indian leaders point out the returned remains are a small fraction of what is being held. They are particularly concerned with older bones, including skulls taken for cranial studies by the U.S. Army Medical Corps during the Civil War and wars with Indians.

Smithsonian spokeswoman Madeleine Jacobs said comparative studies are still being done on the skulls. She also said the Smithsonian was evaluating its policy of holding onto the remains.

"Our goal is to come to an accommodation with them," she said of discussions with Indian groups. "I think we all feel there is a solution." Other large collections are at the Field Museum in Chicago, the Peabody at Harvard University, the University of California and the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Harold Voris, the Field's vice president of collections and research, said DNA fingerprinting has revealed a wealth of information from the bones.

"It may help find the kinds of illness people were prone to," he said. Ms. Jacobs said researchers have learned that rheumatoid arthritis is more prevalent in Indians than in the general population.

And Dr. Jefferson Chapman, curator of archaeology at the McClung Museum in Knoxville, Tenn., said the University of Tennessee's 5,500 remains are now being used for research of spina bifida, a defect characterized by imperfect closure of part of the spine.

Scientists: Earth safe from asteroid collision

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For the third time this year, scientists discovered an asteroid will fly relatively close to Earth, and while there is no threat of collision, experts say such a disaster is likely sometime in the future.

"While the new asteroid poses no immediate danger, in astronomical terms it will be making a very close pass" when it comes within 2 1/2 million miles of Earth about 10 p.m. CDT next Thursday night, said planetary scientist Eleanor Helin, who discovered the mile-wide hunk of rock.

At 2 1/2 million miles — about 10 times the distance between the Earth and the moon — the asteroid designated 1989 PB "will be one of the very closest larger objects to pass the Earth this century," said Helin, a planetary scientist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena.

"It's not going to hit us. Certainly there's no danger," astronomer Brian Marsden said by telephone from Cambridge, Mass., where he directs the International Astronomical Union's Central Bureau for Astronomical Telegrams, an astronomy reporting agency.

"One doesn't want to worry people, but anything that's crossing the orbit of the Earth stands a chance of hitting the Earth, but it's much more likely to be later than sooner. I'm talking millions of years," Marsden said Thursday.

Marsden said amateur astronomers may be able to see asteroid 1989 PB through telescopes by looking in the constellation Cassiopeia at the time of its closest approach to Earth.

In March, asteroid 1989 FC — no more than a half-mile in diameter — passed within a half million miles of Earth, but wasn't discovered by astronomers until April. In June, a 2-mile-wide asteroid passed about 8 million miles from Earth.

Scientists have said that if 1989 FC had hit Earth, it would have done so with the power of about 40 billion tons of TNT, or about 40,000 hydrogen bombs, enough to wipe out entire cities. Asteroid 1989 PB is about twice as large.

Helin said the discovery of asteroids passing near Earth is ominous because "if we are finding two or three a year this close to the Earth... there is strong evidence of a sizable population of these objects that can be devastating. It's the one we don't see that's going to kill us."

She discovered asteroid 1989 PB on Aug. 9 in film taken on the 18-inch Schmidt telescope at Palomar Observatory northeast of San Diego. Astronomers were quickly notified, but it wasn't until Thursday that word of the discovery was made public by the South Pasadena-based World Space Foundation, which helps finance searches for near-Earth asteroids.

"We feel comfortable with the very low probability of any serious impact during our lifetime, but there always remains that slight possibility," said Robert Staehle, foundation president.

Staehle said that in 30 to 50 years, humans may be able to land spacecraft on any asteroid heading toward Earth and "either put some sort of explosives on it or perhaps deflect it using a solar sail or some other propulsion technique."

Craters around the globe provide little doubt that asteroids smacked into Earth in prehistoric times.

Depression more disabling than many diseases

CHICAGO (AP) — Depression robs people of the ability to function more often than arthritis, ulcers, diabetes or high blood pressure, according to researchers who say depression is taken much too lightly.

"We've greatly underestimated up until now how disabling depression is, related to other chronic medical conditions," said John E. Ware Jr., principal investigator in a study that questioned 11,242 outpatients in three cities.

Depression proved at least as bad as emphysema or back problems at limiting people in their physical functioning or causing them to stay in bed, said the study, published in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The only two worse chronic conditions were heart pain and advanced coronary artery disease, in terms of limiting activities such as walking, dressing, bathing, climbing stairs or participating in sports, the study found.

"The findings are very important," said Dr. Martin B. Keller, a depression researcher and director of psychiatric research at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Four percent of the U.S. population, or 9.9 million people, suffer from major depression at some point in any given year, he said.

Millions more may have some depressive symptoms and may be "highly treatable" with antidepressant medications, said Dr. John Zuke, clinical director of psychiatric treatment research at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

Depressed people sometimes give up jobs and lose spouses while bouncing from doctor to doctor for years before being correctly diagnosed and effectively treated, he said.

Consumer prices up slightly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer inflation rose a modest 0.2 percent in July, held down by the sharpest drop in gasoline prices in nearly three years, the government said today.

The increase in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index last month matched the gain in June. Together, the two reports showed the mildest two-month inflation picture since July-August 1986 and marked a sharp contrast to surging prices in the first five months of the year.

Even with the recent slowdown, prices for the first seven months of 1989 rose at a 5.5 percent annual rate, more than a full percentage point higher than the 4.4 percent increases in both 1988 and 1987.

The Labor Department said the most recent dampening of cost pressures reflected drops in prices of gasoline and apparel, particularly women's clothing, and a modest rise in food costs.

Gasoline prices, after shooting up 21.2 percent in the first five months of the year, fell in June and dropped an additional 2.2 percent in July, the sharpest decline since October 1986.

However, fuel oil costs rose 1.5 percent last month, reversing June's decline of 1.2 percent, and natural gas was up 0.5 percent.

Food and beverage costs rose a moderate 0.3 percent in July following a 0.2 percent June gain. That was a marked moderation from the first five months of the year, when the lingering effects of last year's drought sent food prices up at a 9.3 percent annual rate.

Cereal products, beverages and sweets all rose substantially.

Attitude... OF PRAYER

"Give ear to my words, O Lord, consider my meditation. Harken unto the voice of my cry, my King, and my God: for unto thee will I pray."
Psalms 5:1-2

God hears and answers prayers, but not everyone knows how to pray. Even the Lord's disciples asked that he teach them how to pray.

Attitude of the individual is important in prayer. Prayer is the opportunity that we have to tell God of our blessings and give thanks. It is an opportunity to petition for help, but above all, our hearts should be willing that God's will be done.

Prayer should be offered individually and in groups.

ATTEND CHURCH AND
PRAY WITH OTHERS

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

The Continentals to be at Lefors church tonight

LEFORS — The Continentals, an internationally recognized Christian musical group, will present an exciting concert of inspirational and traditional Christian music at First Baptist Church in Lefors at 7 p.m. today.

Featuring 24 vocalists and a 10-piece orchestra, the Continentals' two-part program will focus on themes of inspiration and worship, integrating a variety of popular Christian songs, hymn medleys and gospel music arrangements.

Cam Floria, Continentals' president and producer of the program, promises that it is a concert that will appeal to audiences of all ages "in both music and content."

Theme for 1989 is "Let The Whole World Sing."

"We've divided the program into two parts," Floria explains. "The first follows the positive concept of praise and inspiration, and our songs are arranged to encourage people to join in, work together and believe God for joy in their lives."

The second part of the Continentals' program will concentrate on the fact that what we are really singing about is that Jesus is alive.

"We must renew our sense of awe of being in the presence of God," he said.

To that end, Floria has compiled a selection of hymns and contemporary inspirational songs that explore praise and worship in a concert setting. "And this year more than ever, we will give our audiences an opportunity to participate in our musical program."

For those interested in touring with the Continentals as vocalists, instrumentalists or technicians, auditions will be held after the concert.

Pastor Lewis Ellis said there is no charge for the concert. He said the public is invited to attend the special concert in Lefors.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Peace I leave with you; my peace I give you. I do not give to you as the world gives. Do not let your hearts be troubled and do not be afraid. (John 14:27 NIV)

Read the magazine covers at any news stands and you'll find the majority of the magazines carry at least one article concerning stress.

Stress has become an excuse for everything from bad manners to murder. "Stressed out" is the new vernacular for a condition of the human spirit which is as old as Adam and Eve. It all began with them in the Garden of Eden, and has remained the price paid by our species for rebellion against the Creator.

Stress is unavoidable, but I've found the antidote. I confess! I'm addicted to tranquilizers! They don't come in pill form and they don't require a prescription. They are free, and I may take them in as varied form and large amounts as I can manage to absorb.

What's more tranquil than: a soft summer rain enjoyed from a covered porch? a pre-dawn drive as lights come on in homes? the night songs of crickets and the morning songs of birds? a dancing fireplace on a cold winter night? silver-laced clouds on a balmy night sky? the twinkling lights of a Christmas tree? a drive down a tree-lined street under a canopy of shade? All of these work for me.

I must admit my heavy use of such tranquilizers has led to a stronger addiction. I'm hopelessly dependent on my bed. I like to lie down to read. I like to lie down to think (sometimes my thoughts become so profound I don't wake up till two hours later). I like to escape to my bed when the people and noise level at my house surges past 8 on the Richter Scale. I'd take my bed intravenously if I could!

Although all these tranquilizers are packaged attractively, they would be ineffective if their active ingredient were absent. Jesus Christ is the "tiny, time pills" encapsulated in a peaceful heart. His serenity is everlastingly time-released!

Pyramid-shaped church symbolizes distinctive theology

By CECILE HOLMES WHITE
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) — Deep in the heart of southwest Houston stands a pyramid-shaped church with a theology as distinctive as its architecture. The mystical and the practical meld at Unity Church of Christianity on Unity Drive, into a theology of metaphysical positivism. But to many outsiders, Unity remains an enigma.

Many are familiar with Daily Word, unity's popular devotional monthly, published in nine languages, and with the 96-year-old Wee Wisdom, its children's magazine. But as national and local Unity centers celebrate the movement's centennial this month, deciphering Unity's teachings remains complex.

Some confuse it with Unitarianism, a Christian denomination that emphasizes the unified nature of God. Others mix it up with the Unification Church, a 20th-century alternative religion founded by Korean minister Sun Myung Moon.

In basic theory, unity is similar to the well-known "power of positive thinking" philosophy expounded by mainline church leader Norman Vincent Peale. Peale has said Unity's teachings inspired him. Both he and Unity preach the powerful role one's outlook playing in how one's life turns out.

"We are closely allied through the fact that Unity has always taught that your mind is your link to God," said the Rev. Howard Caesar, senior minister of the local Unity Church. "Either we close our mind off the God or we open our mind to seek God."

In Unity, the teaching is that "all thought goes back to God who is 'Principle, Law, Being, Spirit ... Creator, Father, Cause and Source of all that is,'" according to the Handbook of Denominations in the United States (Abingdon Press, $10.95).

Humanity and God meet in the attribute of "Mind," the Handbook says. "Unity has a Trinity: The Father is Principle, the Son is that Principle revealed in a creative plan. The Holy Spirit is the Executive power of both Father and Son carrying out the creative plan." But the teaching is a "trinitarian principle," not a traditional belief in the Trinitarian God, said J. Gordon Melton, director of the Institute for the Study of American Religion in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Unity has no creed or dogma but encourages people to open their minds to seek good in all religions. It teaches that people are God's children, filled with "Christ consciousness," the Handbook says. "It is through Christ, or the Christ consciousness, that the human gains eternal life and salvation, both terms having meanings different from those in orthodox Christianity."

But Caesar's church, Unity Church of Christianity, offers answers to so many that it is the nation's second largest Unity congregation. (The largest is in New York City.)

Sunday mornings, its parking lot is packed as a total of 2,000 flock to three morning worship services. Mayor Kathy Whitmire, whose mother has attended for many years, sometimes worships there.

In Houston, the church swirls into the melting pot of a metropolitan area where religious experience ranges from the sin-and-salvation theology of Protestant fundamentalism to the mystical, meditative emphasis of Zen Buddhism.

In the spectrum of American Christianity, Unity still falls left of mainstream, with even some secular scholars locating it on the fringes of mainline American religion.

"I tend to look at American religion as mandala (a Buddhist or Hindu graphic symbol of the universe)," Melton said, "with the Protestants and the Catholics in the center, and all around the edges are these groups that are diverse. Out on the edge is New Thought and Unity is right where New Thought and Christianity meet. Of the New Thought groups, Unity is the most like the mainline (Christianity)."

Unity's teachings date to the late 19th century when two movements emerged in the United States. Both stressed the importance "Mind" played in health and the healing of the body. One grew to be the Christian Science church, the other developed into a varied, splintered network of groups classified as "New Thought," according to The Encyclopedia of American Religions (Gale Research Co., $165), written by Melton.

Though some recent books have lumped Unity in with New Age religion, both Caesar and Melton see major differences, including Unity's disassociation from such New Age practices such as channeling and healing with crystals.

As Caesar said: "New Age has a lot of far-out dimensions to it that we are not at all interested in being associated with. New Thought's main emphasis would be a new and higher thought about oneself, life and the relationship with God."

Headquartered at the Unity School of Christianity in Unity Village, near Kansas City, Mo., Unity was founded in 1889 by

Rev. Howard Caesar and his wife Diane stand in front of the Unity Church in Houston.

Myrtle and Charles Fillmore, a cousin of 13th U.S. president, Millard Fillmore.

The couple attended a New Thought lecture in 1886. Myrtle Fillmore, who had tuberculosis, believed the teachings of Dr. E.B.

Weeks and learned that she was a child of God and not "and inheritor of sickness."

After following the teachings for two years, she was completely well. Her husband, a cripple who had tuberculosis of the hip, also adopted the teachings and lived to be an octogenarian. In 1889, he started the magazine Modern Thought, a precursor of Unity magazine.

Across the nation, there are 525 Unity centers and 215 study groups. Unity Village, a tranquil place of fountains and gardens, serves as a retreat for about 2,000 people each year. Others attend continuing education sessions at the school's headquarters. Unity ministers, teachers and others are trained at Unity School for Religious Studies.

In Houston, Caesar's church functions similarly to other local congregations with adult classes, youth education, nurseries and study groups on Sundays and weekdays.

The church sponsors a non-denominational Easter sunrise service and a total health program, which includes counseling for people facing illnesses. It has a community action committee, helps with disaster relief work and has sponsored award-winning cleanup projects in the Buffalo Bayou park area.

Members come from all sorts of religious backgrounds — and none. Some need to overcome fear and guilt associated with previous religious training, Caesar said. Others like the idea of being part of a religious community where their right to accept or reject "spiritual truth" as presented by Unity is respected.

Kurt Neubek, a 28-year-old architect, found a way of understanding God in Unity that made more sense to him than Catholicism's approach or that of other faith traditions he tried.

"It has given me a tremendous belief that everything will work out for the best if you really believe it and listen to the voice inside of you," he said.

For Nancy Knighten, a former Baptist and former Roman Catholic, Unity has provided a "confidence, peace and joy" she always sought.

She began to feel that way the first time she visited Caesar's church.

"It was a feeling I had there that I was where I was supposed to be. I've learned from going and from studying that there is a presence and a power within me. That's what I felt there. A presence that is all-knowing, all-caring, all-loving and all-powerful. There is now within me unity between the inner world of spirit and the outer world of form."

Even Caesar, who grew up a Lutheran, stresses that sense of God's presence.

"Out of my questions and seeking, I came upon Unity," he said. "That seemed to answer all of my questions and put a practicality to Christianity that made it an everyday experience."

"It brought God down out of the skies ... No longer was he something distant and separate, but I discovered he lived inside of all of us, and every person had available to them a firsthand experience of the presence of God."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Ineffective emotional motivation could cause you to react today to people or situations in ways that are counterproductive. Let your logic, not your feelings, prevail.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) There is a hard way and an easy way to do things today. You'll be aware of the difference, yet you might use methods and tactics that make things tough on yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) If you're not in a position to conclude a business deal today, don't fret over it. Relax and enjoy yourself and let the economic olives ripen on the vine in their own time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Socializing in strange places with unfamiliar people could turn out to be an expensive activity today, because you'll feel obligated to spend more than you should.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Don't turn your house into a military academy for your spouse or your children today. You can get the jobs done by making games of them so they are fun instead of chores.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Restrictions that tend to bind you today could be the fault of your own attitude. Try not to make things difficult on yourself through negative thinking.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Honestly analyze your present desires for material things and, perhaps, you'll discover you've been wanting something for the wrong reasons and you might lose interest if you obtained it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) While you may be truly grateful to those who assist you today, don't be surprised if you can't express your gratitude in ways your benefactors feel are adequate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Use your reasoning faculties for resolving problems instead of for finding alibis. Making excuses to hide a poor performance serves no purpose.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Avoid involvements with an acquaintance who you know from experience does not always operate openly. Don't let this individual draw you into something complicated.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It looks like you might try to dodge an issue today because a difficult decision will be required. The easy answer you're seeking isn't there.

Kovels Antiques & Collecting

The most loveable teddy bears

This teddy bear is about 85 years old. Notice the large feet and mohair covering.

Almost every teddy bear is loved, but collectors cherish the older ones above all. Her's how to determine the age of a worn teddy bear.

First examine the overall shape of the bear. Old bears have long arms and very large feet. The best bears are covered with mohair. Learn to recognize the fabric by asking teddy bear dealers or collectors to let you feel the different fabrics used for bear skins.

If the bear has a split seam the stuffing may show. Look for straw, excelsior, or sawdust; these were the favored stuffings for old bears. Early bears were also stuffed with kapok, woodwool or cotton.

Old-style eyes were made on long pins. Many eyes were removed and replaced with buttons because the long pin eye was not safe for children.

Because teddy bears are often found in worn condition, collectors tolerate certain repairs. "Replaced foot pads or eyes or lovingly stitched patches are not a problem. but new arms, legs or ears lower the value. Worn mohair is expected. Dirty bears can usually be gently washed. The most expensive teddy bears are over 70 years old, in near-original condition, and with a tag identifying the maker.

Q. How can I tell an old French paperweight from a recent copy. I have been told I own a "Chinese" paperweight.

A: The French paperweights of the 19th century with colorful flowers or bits of glass inside are expensive. Weights made by Baccarat, St. Louis, Clichy, and the Pantin factories began to fetch high prices from collectors in the 1930'. The Chinese weights were made with bright red, yellow, orange and green glass that is very different from the old French colored glass. The clear weight was slightly yellow in color and sometimes had bubbles or other imperfections in the glass. To understand old and new paperweights and the differences you must see originals. Many museums have exhibits that include French weights. It will help to read "The Art of the Paperweight" by Lawrence H. Selman. The book is filled with pictures of paperweight manufacturing, color pictures of weights, and the history of most types of glass paperweights. It also lists museum collections and modern paperweight makers.

TIP: Put a silver spoon in a glass before pouring in hot water. It will keep the glass from cracking.

Lone diner applauds custom of sharing tables

DEAR ABBY: There are a lot of lonely people in the world. Maybe you can help us.

I am a widow with grown children and I eat out frequently — usually alone. When I look around and see other diners alone, I am tempted to ask one to join me, or ask if I may join them, but of course I never do for fear of being misunderstood.

When I traveled in Europe, I noticed that the person who seated the patrons in most restaurants asked solitary diners if they cared to share a table. No one seemed to object; in fact, they were delighted with the idea of having company.

I wonder why this isn't done in the United States. The lone diners would have companionship, and the restaurant would have more available space. The diner would have the privilege of declining if he or she preferred to eat alone.

Run this up the flagpole, Abby, and see if anybody salutes.

PARTY OF ONE IN TENNESSEE

DEAR PARTY OF ONE: I ran it up the flagpole a year and a half ago, and a small army of readers saluted. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago, I wandered into a small cafe in Santa Fe, N.M. I was asked if I was alone. I was. I was then asked if I wanted to sit at the "maverick table."

I didn't know what it was, so they explained. It was a large table where those who came in alone could sit, and perhaps visit with others who were also alone.

Abby, I sat there and met some of the nicest people — and I didn't have to eat alone.

I think this is such a wonderful idea, but I've never seen it done at any other restaurant. Since so many people are alone and lonely these days, perhaps if you printed this, some cafe owners would consider it.

M.E. SKIPWORTH,
WICHITA, KAN.

DEAR M.E.: Great idea! Of course some people prefer to eat alone, but with the "maverick

Dear Abby

table," at least they'll have a choice.

DEAR ABBY: Here's a cute one for your column: Years ago, our young grandson asked an elderly visitor, "How old are you?"

She smiled, gave the boy a little pat on the head, and replied, "I'm plenty-nine!"

I thought that was a great answer, and I've reached the age now when I can use it.

Cowboys tackle Raiders

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have had their share of quarterback controversies in their 30-year history, from Roger Staubach-Craig Morton to Danny White-Gary Hogeboom.

Such debates sell tickets, jam the lines on radio talk shows and spark the occasional fist fight.

New Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson wants all such discussions on the relative merits of rookie quarterbacks Troy Aikman and Steve Walsh to remain in barrooms and barber shops.

As the Cowboys prepare for their second exhibition game, Saturday night against the Los Angeles Raiders at the Los Angeles Coliseum, Johnson chooses his words carefully when quizzed about the quarterback situation.

Johnson says it is a "competition," not a "controversy."

And, Johnson insists his mind is open, despite Aikman's impressive debut in last Sunday's exhibition opener, a 20-3 victory over the San Diego Chargers.

"Without question there is competition," Johnson said. "One hundred percent. No doubt. Sincerely and honestly. Nothing's been determined and nothing will be determined until after the third exhibition game."

Aikman played the entire first half against the Chargers, going 8-for-11 with a touchdown for a 118.4 quarterback rating.

Walsh played the third quarter and struggled, completing only 2-of-8 for 22 yards and a rating of 39.6.

Those numbers have fanned the fires, forcing Johnson to answer the questions repeatedly. Johnson has been patient until the last few days, when he has had an edge in his voice.

Johnson is not accustomed to quarterback controversies. At the University of Miami, there always was a clear number one.

"There are no assumptions being made, okay?" Johnson said.

Questions about Walsh's arm strength continue. Each time, Johnson points out that Walsh, his quarterback last year at the University of Miami, is a proven winner with a 23-1 record as a starter for the Hurricanes.

Walsh will start Saturday against the Raiders, blasted by the defending Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers in their exhibition opener, 37-7. More will be expected of Walsh because he'll be working with the first unit.

The Cubs' Ryne Sandberg is caught in a rundown.

Cubs extend NL East lead

Chicago sweeps Cincinnati for first time since 1978

By The Associated Press
This was one of those games Chicago will remember if it goes on to win the National League East.

The Cubs were trailing 2-1, with none on and two out in the ninth inning Thursday night. Then Cincinnati relief ace John Franco walked pinch-hitter Curtis Wilkerson. Shawon Dunston singled. Pinch-hitter Lloyd McClendon walked.

Jerome Walton then grounded the second pitch he saw from Franco into left field, driving in two runs for a 3-2 Cubs victory and their first sweep at Cincinnati since 1978.

"This is unbelievable," Chicago's Mark Grace said.

"What happened tonight is the difference between a first-place team and a fifth-place team," said Cincinnati's Eric Davis, who gave the Reds the lead with a two-run homer in the eighth.

First-place Chicago extended its lead in the National League East to 4½ games over the New York Mets.

"Two outs, nobody on ... these guys are awesome," said Mitch Williams, who finished for his 31st save.

"I thought we had it wrapped up," Reds manager Pete Rose said.

In other games, San Diego beat New York 6-2, San Francisco beat Montreal 10-5, Los Angeles beat Philadelphia 10-4 and Houston beat Pittsburgh 5-3.

Walton, who extended his hitting streak to 27 games with a first-inning single, was happy to face Franco, 3-6, with the game on the line.

"I was real comfortable," he said. "I had no chills or nothing. I was real relaxed."

Rick Sutcliffe, 13-9, allowed five hits in eight innings.

Padres 6, Mets 2

Bruce Hurst, 12-4, pitched his National League-leading eighth complete game and visiting San Diego scored four runs in the first inning.

Frank Viola, 1-2, gave up hits to the first four batters in the first. San Diego scored on run-scoring singles by Tony Gwynn and Luis Salazar, Chris James' RBI double and Carmelo Martinez's run-scoring groundout.

Hurst allowed nine hits, struck out three and walked two.

Giants 10, Expos 5

Will Clark and Kevin Mitchell hit consecutive homers in a five-run sixth inning.

With the score tied 5-5, the Giants went ahead when Jose Uribe singled, took second on catcher Nelson Santovenia's throwing error, third on Brett Butler's sacrifice and scored on second baseman Tom Foley's fielding error.

One out later, Clark hit a three-run homer, his 19th, and Mitchell followed with his league-leading 39th homer.

Bob Knepper, 5-11, pitched five innings of shutout relief. Joe Hesketh, 5-4, was the loser, allowing seven hits and five runs.

Dodgers 10, Phillies 4

Fernando Valenzuela, 8-11, won his third straight start and drove in two runs. Valenzuela, who has won seven straight decisions at Philadelphia, allowed nine hits in six innings before Alejandro Pena finished for his fourth save.

Ken Howell, 9-9, gave up six hits and three runs in five innings before leaving with a bruise on his pitching hand.

With the score tied 2-2 in the fifth, the Dodgers went ahead on consecutive singles.

Three new faces lead SWC teams

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Three new head coaches step into the Southwest Conference football scene with Texas A&M's R.C. Slocum having an easy task compared with the jobs facing Forrest Gregg at Southern Methodist and Fred Goldsmith at Rice.

Slocum inherited much first-rate talent when Jackie Sherrill resigned last December, including All-American running back Darren Lewis, who was second on Oklahoma State's Barry Sanders in rushing last year. Slocum also has linebacker Aaron Wallace, rated as one of the best in the nation.

"We have a chance to be good if we can get some solid quarterbacking and Lance Pavlas looked good in spring training," Slocum said. "We open with a tough game against LSU and play Washington on the road. We should be a contender for the title."

Gregg has only three players who have played a college game, as the Mustangs return from the NCAA death penalty, a two-year absence of silent autumn.

Gregg, an SMU alumnus, came from the Green Bay Packers, who were noted for their toughness. SMU's 25 incoming scholarship players will have to be tough, facing a schedule that includes defending national champion Notre Dame.

"We'll have to be in better shape than the other teams we play," Gregg said. "Conditioning will be a big factor."

Goldsmith, a former defensive coordinator at Arkansas, replaces Jerry Berndt at Rice. The Owls were 0-11 last year and own an 18-game losing streak.

"I believe Rice can build a winner or I wouldn't be here," Goldsmith said. "I believe we can eventually be competitive."

SMU, which was placed on probation after being found guilty of nurturing an alumni slush fund, opens the season Sept. 2 against Rice in refurbished Ownby Stadium, which seats only about 24,000.

It's much smaller than 65,000-seat Texas Stadium, where the Mustangs used to prance in the days of Eric Dickerson and Craig James.

"It will be an advantage for us playing on campus in Ownby," Gregg said. "The fans can get involved."

Arkansas is the defending champion and has the talent to get to the Cotton Bowl again.

Arkansas was 10-2 last year, undefeated in the conference with losses by two points to Miami, Fla. and 17-3 to UCLA in the Cotton Bowl. Ken Hatfield's Razorbacks lost eight defensive starters but could have a powerful offense led by quarterback Quinn Grovey and outstanding newcomer E.D. Jackson, a red-shirt running back.

"Our defense kept us in every game last year, including the two we lost," Hatfield said. "We lost some outstanding seniors."

"Our offense and the confidence we gained last year are our two biggest pluses. We have more quality depth on offense than at any time since I've been at Arkansas."

Baylor could be a big surprise if it can survive a difficult early schedule, including Oklahoma and Georgia, and get some solid play from the offensive line.

The Bears will be bolstered by freshman Robert Strait of Conroe, Texas, considered one of the best schoolboy running backs in the nation last year.

"Last year we were close to being a bowl team, but we lost 32 of 44 players from the two-deep with injuries," Baylor coach Grant Teaff said. "We have the quality it takes to have a great defense, and James Francis at linebacker and Robert Blackmon at strong safety are as good as anybody in the country at their positions."

Another key for the Bears is quarterback Brad Goebel, who had an excellent spring.

In addition, the Bears could have a big surprise in Lincoln Coleman, a swift running back transfer from Notre Dame.

Although Houston isn't eligible to win the title, the Cougars could be tough.

Coach Jack Pardee's team was 9-3 and went to the Aloha Bowl last year, losing to Washington State.

Quarterback Andre Ware threw a conference-record 25 touchdown passes in 1988 and 2,507 yards passing in Houston's run-and-shoot offense.

Losing middle linebacker Lamar Lathon, who was injured in a recent automobile accident, will hurt the Cougars' defense.

"Even though we're not playing for the title, I think we'll have a very good season," Pardee said.

Texas will have new offensive and defensive coordinators, Lynn Amedee and Leon Fuller, under head coach David McWilliams.

Amadee was Sherrill's offensive coordinator for three years at Texas A&M.

"We have a new offense and more depth on defense," McWilliams said.

Rangers bow to White Sox

CHICAGO (AP) — Harold Baines got a lot of applause on his homecoming to Comiskey Park, but rookie Greg Hibbard spoiled his return by pitching a four-hitter for the Chicago White Sox.

Hibbard pitched the White Sox to a 6-1 victory over Texas Rangers Thursday for his first major league complete game.

It was the first meeting between the two teams since the big trade three weeks ago in which the White Sox sent Baines to the Rangers for Scott Fletcher and minor leaguers Sam Sosa and Wilson Alvarez.

Baines had three of the hits but they all turned out to be harmless. Each time Baines singled, Pete Incaviglia followed by hitting into a double play. Each time Fletcher was the pivot man.

The only other hit off Hibbard, 3-4, was an infield single by Ruben Sierra in the first inning. It was Hibbard's first complete game in 15 starts.

But he had to share the spotlight with Baines who received lengthy ovations each time he came to bat.

"I didn't know what to expect," said Baines. "I know the fans always treated me well here and I didn't expect anything negative."

Baines said the only thing he didn't expect was getting an ovation each time he came to bat.

Hibbard knew what to expect from Baines.

"The only at bat I pitched him tough was the first one when I went to 3-and-2 on him," said Hibbard.

Equipment checkout

Equipment checkout for Pampa middle school football prospects will be held next week.

Eighth graders can check out equipment from 1 to 4 p.m. Tuesday at the middle school.

Seventh graders can check out equipment from 1 to 4 p.m. Wednesday at the middle school.

If more information is needed, call 665-6758 or 669-6722.

bard. "The second time I threw him a fast ball on the first pitch which he hit and the last time I hung a slider which he could have hit out of the park. You can't make a mistake on Harold Baines."

The only thing that came close to going out of the park was a drive by Sierra in the third inning that got hung up by the wind and was caught by left-fielder Lance Johnson.

"I felt good," said Hibbard. "I also felt good in my last four outings but I lost my concentration in the late innings."

"It was nice to have a five-run lead and I concentrated on keeping the ball down," said Hibbard.

"We needed a game like that," said Manager Jeff Torborg of Hibbard's effort. "Our bullpen was tired out."

Ivan Calderon, Carlton Fisk, Carlos Martinez and Johnson led Chicago's 11-hit attack against starter Kevin Brown, 11-7.

Calderon had three hits including a double and triple. He drove in two runs and scored twice. Fisk had two hits and drove in two runs to extend his hitting streak to nine games. Martinez and Johnson had two hits each and both drove in a run.

Fletcher wouldn't admit getting added pleasure in beating his former teammates but he also had an outstanding game. He walked twice, singled in a three-run third inning, was the pivot man on three double plays and robbed Rafael Palmeiro of a hit to open the ninth.

White Sox second baseman Scott Fletcher completes a double play over a sliding Harold Baines of the Rangers. The White Sox won 6-1 as Rookie Greg Hibbard threw a 4-hitter at the Rangers.

Wilander claims third-round win in ATP Championship

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Mats Wilander says that he and countryman Stefan Edberg have an advantage when they play a fellow Swede.

"Maybe we're a little stronger mentally than the other guys," Wilander said. "I've lost to a lot of Swedes. But when it comes down to important matches, it always seems like Stefan beats the Swedes and I usually beat the Swedes. I think it's psychological."

Whatever it is, it worked again on Thursday as the third-seeded Wilander beat Sweden's Niclas Kroon 6-3, 6-2 in the third round of the ATP Championship.

Edberg gets his chance today when he plays another Swede, 10th-seeded Jonas Svensson, in the fourth round at the Jack Nicklaus Sports Center.

Top-seeded Boris Becker,

No. 4 Michael Chang and No. 5 Brad Gilbert won third-round matches on Thursday, while No. 6 Aaron Krickstein was eliminated by No. 12 Andres Gomez 3-6, 6-4, 7-5.

"I've got quite a big advantage because I'm more experienced and I've been around a little more," Wilander said of his match against Kroon. "I think players like him from Sweden, I think they feel if they play me or Stefan, they have to overcome that."

Wilander meets Gomez, his doubles partner, in the fourth round.

Miami, Florida State remain South powers

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Southern football in 1989 will look a lot like summer television: reruns. The power structure this season will be identical to last year's.

Miami, which has lost only two games the last three seasons, and Florida State, losers only to Miami the last two years, will be the class of the independents and the teams most likely to represent the region near the top of The Associated Press poll.

Auburn and Louisiana State shared the Southeastern Conference championship a year ago. It won't be a surprise if they did that again.

Clemson, despite losing 13 starters and 37 lettermen, is favored to win an unprecedented fourth consecutive Atlantic Coast Conference title.

There will be considerable attention focused on the Ericksons at Miami.

Coach Dennis Erickson inherits a program that thrived for the last four years under Jimmy Johnson, who left the Hurricanes to join the NFL as coach of the Dallas Cowboys.

Craig Erickson inherits the starting quarterback position from Steve Walsh, the 1988 All-American who bypassed his final year of eligibility and signed a contract with Johnson's Cowboys.

"We want to maintain the program at the level that it's at right now," Erickson said after leaving Washington State to take the Miami job. "At the University of Miami, your goal is to compete for the national championship every year. That's what we're going to continue to do."

The Hurricanes won the national title under Johnson two years ago and also claimed the title in 1983 under Howard Schnellenberger, who currently coaches at Louisville.

Miami has 12 starters returning and Florida State has 10 starters back.

The two teams will settle regional independent supremacy when they meet at FSU on Oct. 28. Miami also has a Nov. 25 date with defending national champion Notre Dame and FSU faces a rugged schedule that also includes Clemson, Auburn and LSU.

"If we go 11 and 1 this time around, we've got to be one heck of a team," FSU coach Bobby Bowden said.

Peter Tom Willis will inherit the quarterback job vacated by Chip Ferguson, and he'll have some outstanding receivers as targets, including Terry Anthony and Ronald Lewis.

Schnellenberger steered Louisville to an 8-3 record last year and the Cardinals should approach that again with 17 starters returning.

There will be new coaches at three other independents — Bill Lewis at East Carolina, Chuck Stobart at Memphis State and Spark Woods at South Carolina.

Both Auburn and LSU figure to have outstanding offenses.

All-SEC quarterback Reggie Slack returns to direct an attack that features a pair of good tailbacks, Stacy Danley and James Joseph.

"Who you play has a lot to do with your record," Auburn coach Pat Dye said, quickly pointing out that his Tigers and Kentucky are the only teams in the league playing those teams that figure to be in the chase for a first-division finish.

LSU counters with Tommy Hodson, a two-time all-conference quarterback who could rewrite conference passing records in his senior season. The Bengals also have all-conference receiver Tony Moss and tailback Harvey Williams, a 1,000-yard rusher in 1988 who missed last year with a knee injury.

"The SEC is so competitive you've got to stay healthy and you've got to get some breaks," LSU Coach Mike Archer said.

Alabama figures to have the SEC's best defense, one led by linebacker Keith McCants and nose guard Willie Wyatt. Kentucky is the league darkhorse, returning such standouts as tailback Alfred Rawls, linebacker Randy Holleran and defensive tackle Oliver Barnett from last year's 5-6 team.

Two of the SEC's top individual performers are tailbacks Emmitt Smith of Florida and Rodney Hampton of Georgia. Those two teams and Tennessee will be battling for a first-division finish. Mississippi, Mississippi State and Vanderbilt each expect better teams this fall, but none is likely to escape the last three positions in the conference race.

Despite its losses, Clemson will have some of the ACC's top talent, especially tailback Terry Allen and free safety James Lott.

"Last year we were favored in every game but one and we went in to some games playing not to lose," Clemson coach Danny Ford said. "It will be a different attitude this year and it will be interesting to see how we respond."

If Clemson stumbles in its effort to be the first ACC team to win four titles in succession, North Carolina State and Virginia are waiting to move into the throne room. No other ACC teams figure to challenge those three.

Coach Dick Sheridan has 10 starters back from last year's 8-3 team at State, including quarterback Shane Montgomery, and Coach George Welsh returns 16 starters at Virginia, including quarterback Shawn Moore.

The ACC will feature one of the nation's top receivers in Clarkston Hines of Duke, who caught 68 passes for 1,067 yards and 10 touchdowns last year.

Fans grab up tickets to watch Ryan's bid for strikeout mark

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Rangers fans weren't about to miss what could be baseball history Tuesday night against the Oakland Athletics, when Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan tries to surpass 5,000 career strikeouts.

In five hours Thursday, fans grabbed 10,200 tickets, selling out the game by 2 p.m., said Rangers' spokesman John Blake.

The capacity crowd of 42,431 will set a single-season record for the Rangers and will be the eighth home sellout this season. Until this year, the team had never sold out more than three home games in one season, Blake said.

Ryan struck out eight in a game Wednesday at Seattle, increasing his career total to 4,994, including a major league-leading 219 this season. He is the all-time major league career strikeout leader, with four near no-hitters this season.

"We think the interest is great," Blake said. "I don't think it's a surprise. We've had great fan support all year."

The Rangers' last sellout came on July 22 against the New York Yankees.

McMahon traded

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Quarterback Jim McMahon, who led the Chicago Bears to the 1986 Super Bowl championship, has been traded to the San Diego Chargers.

The Bears made the announcement this morning, on the eve of Saturday night's exhibition game between two teams.

The Bears will receive draft choices in return for McMahon, depending on how well and often he plays for the Chargers.

McMahon, who will turn 30 on Monday, has had only two injury-free seasons — his first two following his selection in first round of the NFL draft out of Brigham Young in 1982.

Checking up on doctor: Credentials usually hard to verify

By LESLIE DREYFOUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Consumers looking for a reputable physician often turn to the Yellow Pages, but researchers say verifying the credentials advertised can be all but impossible.

Confirming a doctor's education, specialty training, certification and other background is frequently beyond the average citizen's grasp, according to an article published Thursday in The New England Journal of Medicine.

"It's very difficult in most communities in this country for patients to get important facts about physicians they'd like to consult," said Dr. Arnold S. Relman, the journal's editor in chief.

The problem is that no straightforward directory is available to the public and those who consult professional listings often find them indecipherable. "While trying to ascertain how physicians' credentials corresponded to those they listed ... we encountered a veritable obstacle course of inconsistent and illogical policies that effectively deny information to the consumer," wrote Drs. Julia M. Reade and Richard M. Ratzan, who conducted the informal survey.

"In conclusion, obtaining access to complete, up-to-date, and verified information about physicians is all but impossible."

Like many consumers, Reade and Ratzan started their research by thumbing through the Yellow Pages.

They found Southern New England Telephone Co.'s listings were not routinely corroborated and included a warning suggesting additional consultation with a local medical association.

The Hartford (Conn.) County Medical Association, which receives about 20,000 similar inquiries annually, answered many of the researchers' questions.

But the process is rarely that simple, they reported.

"Many medical associations are too small, or are unwilling, to commit the time and manpower needed to provide rigorous verification, and they accept at face value whatever information the physician supplies," according to the researchers.

Reade is a psychiatrist at Massachusetts General Hospital, Ratzan an associate professor at the University of Connecticut School of Medicine.

Because physicians supply much of their own background information, Relman said, patients may face medical fraud. Doctors who need periodic re-certification in their specialties may skip the exams or, if they fail to pass, not report the results, he said.

To protect consumers "organized medicine must ... take the initiative and see that standardized directories about physicians be provided and readily accessible to the public," said Relman, who for more than a decade has pushed for an accessible consumer directory.

"If I were sick and needed an operation I would want to know a lot about the surgeon who was going to operate on me," Relman said. "But if you're a lay person and don't have access to professional sources of information it's rather difficult."

Tenacious consumers can track down the American Medical Association's directory, but the guide uses complicated numerical and letter codes in verifying information about a physician's year and state of licensure, medical school and specialty-board certification.

Beyond that, no information is provided on advanced training.

Court overturns jury's judgment against magazine

By JEFF AWALT
Associated Press Writer
HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys for Soldier of Fortune magazine said an appeals court ruling overturning a $9.4 million judgment against the magazine was a First Amendment victory.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans overturned a Houston jury's 1988 award to relatives of a woman murdered by a mercenary who was hired through a classified ad in Soldier of Fortune.

The court ruled Thursday that the jury had imposed too high a standard on the magazine, adding that publishers could be discouraged from running other ambiguously worded ads if the award were upheld.

Robert Black was convicted of hiring hit man John Wayne Hearn to kill his wife, Sandra Black, in February 1985 through an ad that read: "Ex Marines. '67-69 vets. Ex-DI, weapons specialist — jungle warfare. Pilot. ME. High-risk assignments. U.S. or overseas."

Robert Black is now on Texas' death row and Hearn is in Florida serving three life sentences for Mrs. Black's murder and two others.

Soldier of Fortune's lawyers argued in a June hearing that the magazine's publishers had no way of knowing the cryptic ad offering a Vietnam Veteran's services for "high risk assignments" was actually a solicitation for murder. The ad appeared in a 1984 issue.

John Roberson, representing Mrs. Black's son Gary, 19, and mother, Marjorie Eimann, 65, said during the hearing that "high risk assignment" clearly meant "gun for hire" in the lingo of the magazine.

However, Judge W. Eugene Davis disagreed when writing on behalf of the three-judge panel.

"The burden on a publisher to avoid liability from suits of this type is too great," Davis wrote.

"Without a more specific indication of illegal intent than Hearn's ad or its context provided, we conclude that Soldier of Fortune did not violate the standard of conduct by publishing an ad that later played a role in criminal activity," he wrote.

Although the magazine said the judgment against it had been a violation of press freedoms under the First Amendment, Davis said the court didn't need to address First Amendment arguments. He wrote that, under Texas liability law, the magazine had no duty to refrain from publishing an ambiguously worded ad.

Roberson and Ronald Franklin, Mrs. Eimann's attorney, were out of town Thursday and could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press.

Larry Thompson, who represented Soldier of Fortune in the jury trial, said the appeals court decision should settle the case with no further appeals.

"We had expected to lose the case once it went before a jury and to win on appeal. This is just not the kind of case you can expect a jury to try ... and set aside all the emotions involved and just look at the issues," Thompson said.

"My gut reaction without having read the opinion is that if the court is addressing the Texas no-duty concept that the Supreme Court would refuse a writ on it," he said. "It's not a constitutional issue."

E. Barrett Prettyman Jr., an appeals attorney for Soldier of Fortune, said Thursday that publisher Robert Brown was ecstatic over the ruling.

"The kind of duty the plaintiffs were attempting to impose here would not only have put this magazine out of business, but would have had an extraordinarily harmful effect on magazines and publishers of all kinds," Prettyman said.

"It should be a great relief for all those protected by the First Amendment," Prettyman said.

"One of the examples we used was a car ad where they go from zero to 60 mph in so many seconds," Prettyman said. "Such a publisher, not the advertiser, could have been held liable if a car actually did that and it caused harm."
