BILL SAM'S DICTIONARY

By J. L. MARTIN
When Bee Little's house burned a few nights ago, the only thing saved was the old family bureau. Bee says that when he saw the bureau sitting out in the yard, he knew that he had a change of underwear left to say the least.
BUREAU: An article of furniture in which your wife hides your clothes, and then fuses at you because you never can find them without scattering her clothing all over the room. Bill Sam's Dictionary, page 186.

NEW HOTEL IS JUNCTION'S BIGGEST ASSET.

While the hotel construction work is now well under way and Junction is assured a first class hotel, there is still much that local people, who have not yet subscribed some stock, can do to help put it over in a big way. As has been stated in these columns before, the originally planned structure had to be reduced in account of some subscription, not coming in, if every citizen of the town would do only a little boosting, and if a large number, who are as able to subscribe as many who have already done so, would take only one or two shares, it would be possible to either build the present proposed structure without the necessity of borrowing a considerable sum of money, or in the event a goodly number of shares were subscribed, it would be possible to complete the structure as originally planned.

A modern tourist hotel will be one of the biggest drawing cards Junction can have. Hundreds of people over the State, who have heard of the new hotel project, are already planning to spend next summer here. It will be a real community asset and every citizen of Junction and the surrounding country will get some benefit from having it here.

We have no criticism for any one who has not or who does not subscribe any stock, but we do feel that there are a hundred or more who are more able to subscribe stock than we ourselves, and we do not think that any one will ever have cause to regret taking a share or two. After a year or two, when the business is established, it will pay a reasonable return on the investment, and there is no chance of losing the investment, and it is not a donation proposition.

If you can't take any stock, do what you can to boost it and encourage others who are able to take some stock.

Chris Schraub is taking his vacation this week and he and his family left Tuesday for a trip through South Texas which will take them to Corpus Christi and probably to the Rio Grande Valley. While away they will also visit relatives in Seguin.

Louis Jetton, who has been with Wiggley's Drug Store since it opened last fall, began work with the First National Bank this week.

A deal was made Saturday whereby E. G. Lockley of Rocksprings, and formerly a business man of Camp Wood, becomes owner of the local picture show business and is to take charge between now and September 15th.

Mr. Lockley was here Friday and Saturday to complete the details of the sale, and in talking with the Eagle reporter Saturday night, stated that he expected to take charge as soon as possible and that he wanted to move his family here before school opened, probably by the first of the month.

For the present the business will be continued in the same location, but the new owner expects to purchase a site on which he will erect a modern building especially adapted to the show business, and hopes to have the proposed new quarters ready before the winter season is over. If patronage justifies, the new owner expects to show three times each week, under the present booking of four months in advance, and at the expiration of this time, he stated that he expected to book a line of screen features that are above the average for a town of this size and that his plan would be to give the show going public just a little more than they expected in the way of comfort, convenience, safety and entertainment, for in a new building, he can incorporate all these details.

Mr. Hankins, who has been part owner and in active charge of the picture show business, will continue his drug business as heretofore, and will be able to give it more attention, since selling the picture business, that has necessarily taken up a considerable part of his time.

Mrs. Annie Murrah is improving nicely in the Secor Hospital at Kerrville, following an operation last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Pierce Hoggett are taking their vacation this week and visiting in Del Rio and Rocksprings.

RAINBOW TROUT PLACED IN THE LLANO RIVERS.

Deputy Game Warden S. O. Durst advises The Eagle that more than a thousand rainbow trout were placed in the streams of this county last week by Mr. French, manager of the Heart of the Hills Hatchery. Mr. Durst wishes to call attention to the fact that there is a closed season on this fish and that all persons catching them should return them to the water at once.

This is the first lot of rainbow trout ever placed in Kimble County streams and as they are a noted game fish, their propagation and growth here will be watched with interest.

The season on these fish is closed until 1930, and all persons are asked to co-operate in helping to stock the streams by observing the law.

ANOTHER WATER TEST

Dr. J. Fred Burt, County Health Officer, Junction, Texas. Junction Tourist Camp Well, Hydrant 3/4 mile from stand pipe, Price's Camp Well, Spring at L. R. Co.

The results of bacteriological analyses of water specimens submitted as indicated on the forms attached, gave no evidence of the presence of organisms of the E. Coli group. The sources from which the samples were taken, may therefore be considered as reasonably safe for drinking purposes at the time of collection of specimens.

Kindly remember, however, that one examination is not all way a fair index of the status of a water supply, inasmuch as there is a possibility of intermittent contamination entering the water. It is suggested, therefore, that additional specimens be forwarded from time to time for more definite determinations and a more satisfactory check upon the safety of the supply. We refer you to our printed leaflet of instructions on the Collection and Shipping of Water Specimens for more explicit directions in this procedure.

Very truly yours,
H. O. Sappington, M. D.
State Health Officer.

FAMILY RE-UNION

All living members of the W. L. Roe family spent last week camping together on the Gully Cowser ranch on North Llano.

This was the first time all members of the family had been together in years and the entire week was a most enjoyable one.

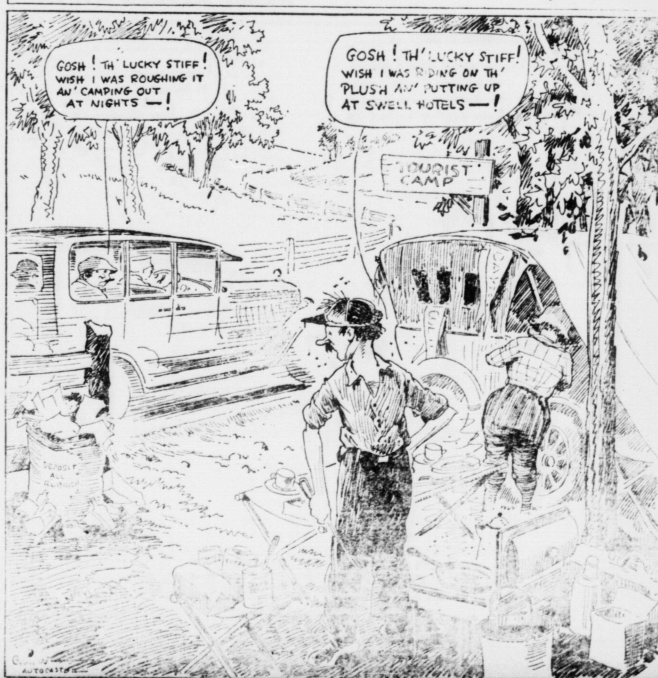

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Roe came to this county about 20 years ago. The sons, and families present were: John, Doc and Sanford of Junction; Bill, of Austin, and George of Utopia. The daughters were Mesdames Edna Williams of San Angelo; Donnie Kosler of Taylor; Jim Smith of Ingram, and Misses Emma of Austin and Sallie of Junction.

Besides the ten children there were 30 grand-children, and 16 great-grand-children.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Latham of Brownwood spent a few days here this week. Mr. Latham owns the local bottling works as well as about a dozen other, over West Texas, and while here combined pleasure with business by camping and fishing on the rivers. Mr. Latham says he takes every opportunity to recommend Junction to prospective vacationists and many have come here at his suggestion that had planned to go elsewhere.

A WOMAN TRANSFORMED BY LOVE

The curtains of the box uarded to admit Barrington Pierce. He entered and reentered himself in the chair directly behind mine. Simultaneously the curtains of the stage were drawn, revealing the third act.

"It's all right," whispered a voice from the shadowy box. It was Barry who spoke and he continued talking with his head bent close to mine, so that the others might not hear. He referred to the interview he had just had behind the scenes with Lemoyne. "She's promised to make up for everything and to do some of very best work. It was a sweet thought of yours, Sallie, and I thank you for making me do the thing I should have done, unprompted, before."

When he spoke of the young singer there was no spirit of conquest in his manner nor was there any trace of braggadocio in his voice. However, he unconsciously betrayed the fact that her love for him was an acknowledged condition as far as their friends were concerned. Then our attention was focused on the brilliant stage. It was a radiant Lemoyne who now played the part of the famous courtesan—she was like a vivid tropical flower in her bouffant gown of the early eighteenth century. Her chic chapeau was audaciously becoming and made a happy background for her chestnut curls that peeped coquishly over her shoulder and softly framed her face.

She was the toast of Paris, and indeed, she played the part, singing with sudden and irresistible charm. There was still an undercurrent of dissatisfaction in the audience in spite of the tangible transformation that had taken place. They could not forget at once that the new prima donna had not given them the "Little Table" song as splendidly as Kousne oft was wont to do. I expressed my anxiety to Barry.

"Wait until the next scene at the Seminary," he replied. "watch what I tell you, she'll win them to a man!"

And indeed, he proved to be right, for the scene which followed was one which it will be impossible for Time's energetic fingers to erase. Before us was a vibrant Manon pleading with Chevalier not to take the Holy Orders and be lost forever to her love, but rather to turn his back on the bleak monastic life and respond again to her overwhelming desire. But Chevalier is unmoved. She falls upon the floor, clasping his knees with pleading, dramatic hands. She sings, the words are winged with gentle seduction and artless allure. Gone, the indifferent Manon of the first few scenes, here instead a living creature of flesh and blood singing her way straight into our hearts and each one of the audience putting a personal interpretation on her song.

"Listen!" Barry exclaimed, "she's won them. They're going wild!" The floating note of the aria had become a faint echo of liquid gold.

"Bravo! Bravo! Danielle!" cried the crowd. "Fort bien! Bravo, Danielle!" Over and over again they shouted their lusty praise. So thrilled was I by the magnificent music and by the undeniable triumph of Lemoyne that not until the last note had been sung did I realize that my hand had been clasped and held closely by the young musician at my side. I disengaged my fingers just a moment before the lights flared up. There was no time for analyzing the situation then for the DeWights were preparing to leave, though my cheeks still burned from the indignation I felt towards Barrington Pierce.

He was talking with Mrs. DeWight. "You wait and bring Lemoyne," she said, then turning to me, "you're to come with us, Sallie. We're having a little party to celebrate Lemoyne's success."

I hesitated a moment. There was really no graceful way I could refuse to accept, although I felt that Curtiss would be uneasy if the hour were late when I returned. Still, on the other hand, my thoughts were far from sleep. I was strangely excited, too. Why should I go home and go to bed when it meant missing a good time? Curtiss could have postponed his business engagement, it seemed to me and besides, I wouldn't always be in Paris on such a gala night. In the end I silenced my conscience and deciding to go. From the moment I entered the DeWight's apartment I was conscious of the luxurious atmosphere of the place. Our host was a collector with an innate desire to possess exquisite things and from all over the world he had assembled rare tapestries, old bric-a-brac and inlaid cabinets, which gave the rooms a personality at once compelling and bizarre. There was a faint hint of exotic incense in the air. A long, refectory table of black marble was pleasingly appointed with crystal of jade, green which exactly harmonized with the gown and jewels Mrs. DeWight had chosen for that night.

"She always uses her jewels for the color motif in giving a dinner," explained Andre Moliere who had followed my eyes and caught their approving light. Lemoyne was upstairs removing her wraps. Barry was greeting some guests. Naturally the conversation between Andre Moliere and myself drifted into the main topic of the evening—the ovation Lemoyne had received.

"She was not acting towards the last. It was real drama she played," he announced.

"What do you mean?" I asked. "Just this, that instead of Chevalier she was pleading with Barrington Pierce. She worships him, and I believe she realizes that hers is the greater love."

"Oh, you must be wrong!" I interrupted. "Surely he must adore her. She's altogether lovely."

"So think we all, and Barry, too, for that matter, but me thinks his love has paled before the flame. There was a time," he began, then stopped suddenly as if he had no right to reveal a secret of his friend's. "Man always reverts to type," he concluded, "he must ever be the hunter and tract his game." "You mean that one should never show a beloved one how much they are loved? That's hard and extremely unfair," I retorted. "Perhaps, but true nevertheless. A bit of tactful indifference wins a man quicker than all the proffered caresses of a rose-bud mouth."

Irrepressible Sallie.

The dinner was a brilliant affair. There was a ready flow of wine and wit. Barry, of all the guests, was the only one who wore a quiet mien. Lemoyne was gay. Apparently her brief sojourn with Barry had been most satisfactory and had made her as blithe as one a day in June.

"The wine is really quite good," I said to Barry who was at my side.

"There is only one thing I would be tempted to drink tonight," he answered so quietly that only I could hear his low-pitched voice. "Nepenthe, of the ancients, a subtle drug that banishes sorrow and pain."

That was all there was time for then and it was not until later that I saw him alone. I was standing in a small room apart from the others, examining an amazing reproduction of Mona Lisa, in an intricate Florentine frame.

"Are you trying to get behind the smile? You might as well concern yourself with the riddle of the sphinx."

It was Barry who had come quietly up and was standing by my side.

"I was just thinking how I'd hate to live in the same house with that smile. She completely disturbs my poise. She says to me, 'I know all about your innermost thoughts and what do you know about anything, and least of all, about me?'"

"You're very analytical. N'est-ce pas?" he observed.

"I'm more often thought of as a Mayfly, I'm afraid, but there are a lot of things I'd like to know."

"For instance?"

I had resolved not to mention the subject at all, but an impulse of devilment, an echo of the old Sallie, prodded me on.

"Why did you hold my hand?" I asked. The moment the question had been asked I would have given much to have taken it back. A discussion of personalities was bound to ensue.

Don't miss next week's installment.

Great Personages of the Bible

REV. LEONARD A. BARRETT

The Brother Who Stayed at Home

THERE lived upon a little farm in the central part of Ohio a man who, not content with the very modest income which his farm yielded, sought a fortune in oil wells of the Far West. Being poor and short of money he was persuaded to mortgage his little farm in order to secure the necessary funds with which to make his investment. He was persuaded by others who, like himself participated in the investment, that the oil wells in the Far West country would someday make him rich. He left the care of his farm to others and for several years lived a life of sacrifice denying himself even the ordinary comforts of life in order that he might live near the scene of his invested funds. Daily he went to see the big drills make deep holes in the earth. The noise of the drills seemed like music to his ear. Were they not going to make him rich? Would they not bring him wealth for his old age? He was confident that before long his money would come in and he could pay back the mortgage and live a care-free life the remainder of his days. So, daily, for long hours he sat near the oil wells patiently waiting for the oil to flow. But, no oil came from the deep-sunken wells. They said the drilling was done at the wrong place. The drills were removed to some other field, the workmen went away, and all the old man had as an evidence of his investment was an empty hole in the ground. Discouraged and sick at heart he came home only to find that a more pathetic condition awaited him, for the bank which loaned him the money was about to demand payment of the mortgage. This meant that his little farm was about to be sold in order to pay back the borrowed funds. Now, this farmer had two sons. They lived near the old homestead, and even though they had financial obligations of their own, were successful in raising sufficient money with which to pay the mortgage, and the old homestead was saved.

During the months which passed by, there came to the little farm one day, a strange visitor. He was the representative of a large and successful oil company. He did not ask the little old man to borrow money with which to make an investment, he asked only for the privilege of leasing the little farm for the purpose of drilling for oil. He offered the farmer a percent upon all oil which should flow from his farm. The offer was reluctantly accepted, and the wells were dug. One day as the farmer was walking among the oil wells he was surprised to discover that all the men at work were greatly excited. They talked loud and long and seemed very much elated. They slapped one another on the back, shouting, "We got it, we got it." The farmer came near and, lo! he saw crude oil flowing in abundance from his farm. He could hardly believe it was true. He called together his sons and neighbors to witness the strange sight. They all agreed in proclaiming him an independent man. They congratulated him, and that night there was a big party in the old farmhouse to celebrate the wonderful event of the day. During the evening when they were celebrating and having a good time, the little old man would frequently repeat the words, "I did not know that the farm I mortgaged in order to find oil in the Far West, had oil flowing in abundance within its own soil. 'Think of it,' he would say, 'oil was flowing in the very soil I mortgaged.'"

This experience of the little old man not only made him rich but it also teaches an important life lesson, that the richest blessings in life are to be found just where we are. What we are looking for the most is so near us that we fail to see it.

Once upon a time a father had two sons. One became a prodigal. He spent all his money in speculation for pleasure, and when his money gave out, and he had nowhere to go, he went home. This prodigal had a brother who stayed at home. Truly this brother did not show a very Christian spirit when his prodigal brother returned home, but, notwithstanding that, he exercised the part of wisdom by remaining at home. He found the joy and happiness he desired near him, and did not speculate for pleasure in a far country. The moral lesson has its application in all walks of life and its various experiences of the human lot. The best things in life, and those most worth having, are most likely to be found nearest to us.

INFORMATION ON CONTROL OF LEAF WORM.

(By R. R. Reppert, Entomologist, Extension Service, A. and M. College.)

The supply of calcium arsenate, Paris green, and lead arsenate as recommended by the Entomologist, for the control of leaf worms, is apparently exhausted and farmers are in need of another poison.

Mixtures of white arsenic and soda compounds, unless very carefully used, will result in injury to cotton, and are ordinarily not recommended. However, in the present emergency, it probably means either use of these materials with injury in some cases or the total loss of the crop by the attack of the insects, and we are giving below formulae which farmers have themselves used.

Boil together 5 pounds white arsenic with 5 pounds sal soda in 5 gallons of water until all the arsenic is dissolved. Ordinarily this will be accomplished in about 15 minutes. If sal soda is not available, use instead, 5 cans of concentrated lye such as may be obtained from grocery stores for soap making. These five cans will be equal to about 4 pounds.

After boiling until the arsenic is dissolved, some water will have been lost by evaporation; more should then be added to make up exactly 5 gallons of the stock solution.

Two quarts of this stock solution should be added to 50 gallons of water for immediate application to the cotton. Large drops of this dilute mixture or excessive amounts of the liquid on the leaves will burn, consequently a machine should be used that breaks the liquid up into a very fine mist and so the foliage is merely moistened without running or dripping from the leaves. Farmers have reported using one quart of stock dip in 50 gallons of water with success, spraying in the same manner.

Experience on the part of farmers has indicated that if a gallon of slack lime and 3 or 4 gallons of black strap molasses are added to 50 gallons of water, along with the stock solution, the danger of injury will be reduced.

In handling these mixtures the danger to the cotton foliage as well as to men and animals is so great that we decline to accept any responsibility for any injurious results.

Several companies in Texas handling arsenical poisons are preparing and have for sale, the mixtures as given above. These may not be in the concentration that we have named, and in diluting, persons should be guided by the directions given by each company for their own product.

LONDON-RED CREEK NEWS

(Too late for last week).

The meeting at the Reese School House was attended by large crowds and Brother D. F. Draper proved his great ability as a teacher of Bible truths. The people of the Reese community lent their best efforts toward making this meeting a great success. Brother Carr of Abilene had charge of the singing.

Mrs. Willie Stewart and daughter, Rubin Moore, and others of Cross Plains were visitors with relatives at London and Red Creek this week. After having visited, and fished for a while on the Llano, they continued their journey to San Antonio. They expect to be away from home about two weeks.

Some of our farmers have already purchased poison to combat the leaf worm on the cotton. A few worms are appearing, but not enough yet to damage the cotton to a great extent.

John Eastman and family who reside near Hext, were over Sunday for church.

Feed cutting is the order of the day down here. Most feed crops are fine and the farmers will have plenty of feed for their livestock this winter.

These August afternoons remind us of summer time; however, the heat has not been so intense this summer as is the case when we have hot winds.

The Eagle management is very appreciative of the splendid advertising patronage received during the past three months—patronage which did not drop to a negligible quantity, as some who might control or intimidate the paper and its management, had prophesied. As a matter of fact, the advertising patronage has increased during these past few months and the paper each week is evidence of the fact that we have carried more than our usual run of advertising, and we have done this without having to go out of town for any business—which we could do, and materially increase our advertising space, but we are for the home merchants first, last and all the time, and we are for those who advertise; and our readers will find that our advertisers will give them better prices and better service.

Our earth is only among the six principal satellites of our sun. All the fixed stars are suns, one sees how small a place among visible things our earth take up, since it is only a satellite of one among them. Now all these suns may be inhabited by none but happy creatures; and nothing obliges us to believe that the number of damned persons is very great; for a very few instances and samples suffice for the utility which good draws from evil. Moreover, since there is no reason to suppose that there are stars everywhere, may there not be a great space beyond the region of the stars? And this immense space, surrounding all this region . . . may be replete with happiness and glory . . .

What now becomes of the consideration of our Earth and of its denizens? Does it not dwindle to something incomparably less than a physical point, since our Earth is but a point compared with the distance of the fixed stars? Thus the part of the Universe which we know, being almost lost in nothingness compared with that which is unknown to us, but which we are yet obliged to admit; and all the evils that we know lying in this almost-nothing in comparison with the goods that the Universe contains.—Liebnitz.

TEXAS AND TEXANS.

Crops May Secure More Roads

Lon A. Smith, of the Texas Railroad Commission, who has been on a tour of Northwest Texas, is of the opinion that the immense grain crop just harvested and that is being marketed with great difficulty because of lack of railroad facilities, will be the means of opening the eyes and minds of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the need for more railroads in that part of the State. No autocratic bureau or commission should have the power to retard a country's development. Railroad corporations usually are able to protect themselves and seldom extend their lines into unprofitable territory. The people who develop a country have a right to adequate transportation facilities. Where the railroads stand ready to furnish this, no commission should have the power to prohibit or delay the action.

Perryton's Big Grain Crop

Perryton—it's in Ochiltree County, in the extreme northern tier of Texas counties—has marketed 1,595,000 bushels of wheat at last report, and the total to be shipped from there is estimated at 3,000,000 bushels, with between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 bushels estimated for the town's trade territory. Figure for yourself what that means to the country with wheat selling at $1.25 a bushel. Texas has at least 100 counties where wheat can probably be grown as successfully as in Ochiltree county. Ochiltree has just had the pluck to go ahead and sow wheat and is now rolling in wealth.

Texas Harvesting Rice

Bay City, in Matagorda County, reports the rice harvest well under way, with rice selling at satisfactory prices. Thousands of acres in Southeast Texas are producing good rice and making money for their owners. There are people living in Texas who do not know that any rice is grown in the State, and who think that all the rice eaten in Texas comes from China or Japan. Texans need to know their own State. Texas has the combination of soil, water and climate to produce the best rice grown.

Comanch Completes Big Lake

Comanch has grown tired of being classed as a "windmill" town, and at a cost of $120,000 has built a lake that covers 90 acres of land. The town had an official celebration to which neighboring towns were invited. It was a worthwhile event, of which Comanch may well be proud. No town can prosper as it should without an ample supply of pure, wholesome water. There are some town officials in Texas who should visit Comanch to study what has been accomplished there and how it was done.

Farmers' Short Course

If any Texan, man or woman, boy or girl, failed to get information and inspiration in excess of the cost of the trip and the stay at the A. & M. College the week of August 2, there is something lacking in that person's make-up. There were about 3,000 there, 80 per cent of whom were boys and girls, and the programs contained much of help to everyone. There was so much doing that it was impossible to take it all in, but each visitor could select the programs most suited to his needs. It was good to see how eager most of the girls and boys were to profit by their study and observations.

Farm and Home Demonstration Agents

Nearly every group of boys and girls attending the short course was in charge of a farm agent or a home demonstration agent, or both, who made it their business to see that the group in their charge heard the lectures and saw the things in which that group would likely be most interested. These agents were in evidence everywhere doing a splendid work. The attendance at the lectures was made up almost altogether from those counties that have agents engaged. If the Commissioners' Courts in those counties that do not have such agents could have been at this short course and have seen for themselves the kind of work being done and the results that were obtained, they would have become active advocates of the employment of both farm agents and home demonstration agents.

Travel Makes for Progress

County Agent Ross, of Shelby County, two years ago took a group of nearly 300 boys and girls on a trip over a part of Texas, the itinerary of 1,000 miles, including Austin and San Antonio, and a week's stay at the A. & M. Short Course. It was a great educational trip for those boys and girls and a big advertisement for Shelby County. Last year those boys and girls went to Shreveport as the guests of the Louisiana State Fair, and there was another great trip. County Agent Scurlock, who has succeeded Mr. Ross in Shelby County, this year took 200 boys and girls, largely of the original touring party, to Houston and Galveston. These boys and girls have secured a broader vision of life from these trips. They will be better citizens as a result, and Shelby County will be many times repaid in a more progressive citizenship.

Good Publicity Stunts

Shelby County's home demonstration agents, whose names I cannot now recall, are entitled to a full share of the credits of those trips, along with the farm agents. They were on all the trips in charge of the girls and the tours would not have been possible without their help. At Houston 20,000 were served Shelby County watermelons by the boys and girls and as many more were turned away when the melons were all gone. On the first trip, meals prepared entirely with Shelby County products were served visitors wherever the tourists camped overnight. Those boys and girls, under the leadership of their farm and home agents, have made Shelby County famous for its good things to eat. Good publicity is this.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT WARNS PUBLIC AGAINST WATER CONTAMINATION.

No one would deliberately and with foresight poison his own and his family's drinking water while in his right mind, yet this is just what many people are doing unconsciously, according to the State Health Department which will make a health survey of Kerrville next week.

The old insanitary "open-back" privy is all too frequently the cause of serious epidemics of typhoid fever, dysentery, and similar maladies. These privies are themselves a nuisance, and in addition they frequently drain during a heavy rainfall into the well or spring which furnishes the water of many homes, especially in the rural and small town districts.

Nothing is simpler than for a privy located some ten or twenty yards from the well to drain into this well when it is not properly curbed or concreted, provided there is a slight slope from the privy to the well. Springs are even easier polluted, for they seldom have an adequate curbing and they readily become contaminated from surface drainage from the privy or outhouses.

The open-back, insanitary privy should go, and a modern sanitary pit privy should be constructed in its place where sewer connection is not possible. Furthermore, no toilet should be constructed near a well or spring or where the water might drain into them.

All wells should likewise be concreted to prevent any surface drainage, and springs should be similarly safeguarded if they are meant to furnish water for drinking or domestic use.—Mountain Sun.

J. S. Nethery, with his wife, son and daughter, of Waco, have been camping on the W. H. Nethery place for the past few days. They left Wednesday for their home.

That persistent advertising goes right out and brings in customers. It will aid you to sell more than you ever sold before.

That there is no opportunity to increase sales that compares with continuous advertising.

That continuous advertising not only creates immediate sale, but assures future sales; it creates a steady and growing demand.

That continuous advertising will put ne wife in any business and keep it alive.

That continuous advertising is business-getting ammunition. Use plenty of that kind of ammunition.

ONE CHEVROLET CAR MAKES 260,000 MILES.

A thirteen-year-old Chevrolet has been driven more than 260,000 miles by A. R. M. Stone, stationery broker of 6135 Wagner Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri who believes his machine is the oldest Chevrolet still in active service. The mileage represents more than 10 trips around the world, according to information received by Leon Powell, local Chevrolet representative.

Mr. Stone is a former locomotive engineer, purchased the car in 1913, the first year of Chevrolet production. The loss of a leg had incapacitated him for railroad work. In order to operate both the clutch and the brake pedals withone foot, he connected them with a cross bar. This enabled him to throw out the clutch and apply the brake in one operation. He drives from 60 to 70 miles daily within a radius of 40 miles of St. Louis.

Mr. Stone says he has replaced the car top and in addition has spent only $4 for replacement of parts. The Chevrolet has averaged 25 miles per gallon, he says. The car thus far has burned about 10,400 gallons of gasoline, or approximately the capacity of two railroad tank cars.

LOOT!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

III. Captain Kidd's Fatal Mistake

THE die had been cast and Capt. William Kidd, whom King William had sent out to catch pirates, had decided to be a pirate himself and had announced his intention of ballasting his ship with gold and silver from the Mocha fleet. So to the port of Bah's Key where the Mocha fleet was loading its cargo, Captain Kidd's ship, the Adventure, sailed. And then the Mocha fleet one night stole out of the harbor, outwitted the would-be pirate and got clean away! But Captain Kidd was soon in hot pursuit and, catching up with it, this daredevil English seaman pushed his little galley into the midst of the big merchantmen and opened the battle. But alas for the crew's dream of rich loot! The Adventure was roundly peppered by the merchantmen's guns and forced to fall back while the fleet continued on to India.

Captain Kidd tried in vain to recoup his fortunes. But the few captures which he made after the escape of the Mocha fleet were unimportant. The climax came in a battle with the Portuguese ship, the Loyal Captain. For five hours the two ships banged at each other. Then the Portuguese sailed away and all the pirates had to show for their work was ten badly wounded men. The grumbling among the crew increased.

It came to a head in the person of Gunner Moore, who made so bold as to say that he could have shown Captain Kidd a way to have taken the Loyal Captain and that "without any risk." There was a sting in those three words with their insinuation of cowardice on the captain's part.

"Which way could you have put me in a way to take that ship without risk?" he demanded. The gunner sought refuge in a lie. "Sir," he protested, "I never spoke such a word nor ever thought such a thing." "You lousy dog!" roared the captain. "If I am a lousy dog, you have made me so," cried Moore desperately. "You have brought me to ruin and many more—this last a subtle appeal for the support of his mates. "Have I then ruined you, ye dog?" cried the infuriated pirate. "Then take that!"

Captain Kidd seized a heavy wooden basket bound with iron hoops and struck the gunner a crushing blow upon the head. Gunner Moore died. His words and actions had been ineluctable mutiny and as such his captain was justified by the harsh rule of the sea in punishing it thus. But that one blow proved to be Captain Kidd's fatal mistake. For it he paid in Execution dock.

THE PUBLIC SPEAKER NO. 2

(By Wesley Peacock, Ph. B.)

At no other time have the duties of citizenship imposed upon young business men so great a necessity to be able to present a case, to defend a cause or to debate a resolution. There was a time when only lawyers were considered competent to speak in public.

Learning to speak in public is like learning to drive a car. It is important (1) to learn to start, and (2) to learn to stop. The first of these is difficult, but oh, how different is the latter! preparation, confidence, and composure will insure a favorable start. If the speaker shows embarrassment he is discounted by his audience. He should never make excuse for lack of preparation, or for any other thing. If he must apologize, let him apologize at the close of his speech. A bid for sympathy never gets it.

He may open with a funny story or a joke; but it must be a joke on himself. This relieves him of self-consciousness and puts the audience in a receptive mood. An ancient rule was to "begin slow, talk low, strike fire, rise higher, then retire."

Public speaking is a fine art because it is done without seeming effort. Effort distracts attention from the speech to the speaker, which is fatal. Don't try to be eloquent. If you try, you fail. The feats of genius are always effortless.

And don't be in a hurry. Forget yourself. Remember that public speaking is more deliberate than private conversation. Organize your material from premises to conclusion and present it connectedly. Make your sentences short and convincing. Speak positively and confidently. Do not ask question. Avoid platitudes and affectation. Be sincere. Be earnest. Don't repeat. Don't ramble. If you have five points, make only one. The more you say the less is remembered. Don't use a blunder-bus; use a rifle.

In debate always attack. Waste no time in defending yourself. State; don't argue. Don't be afraid of appearing egotistic. You will be thought egotistic anyhow. You may be funny; but don't try to be funny. Keep your face in one direction, and don't try to sprinkle the audience like a pot of flowers. If you turn about you confuse your audience and render yourself awkward. Maintain your poise. A successful speaker will have good terminal facilities. Don't peter out by saying, "I will now close," or "Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you." Prepare and memorize your closing sentences in clear and forcible language, and then close with a wallop.

SWIMMING PARTY.

Miss Tottie Martin entertained a host of friends last Wednesday afternoon with a swimming party at Price's Camp, honoring Mesdames French Murphey and Lee J. Corkill.

Numerous games and contests were enjoyed by the bathers.

Those who were awarded prizes in the contests were: Misses Eloise Hardeman, Rachel McDonald and Annie Mae Estes; Mesdames M. Wilkinson, R. H. P. Wright, H. E. Luehrs and Henry Hamer. The honorees were also presented with pretty gifts.

The table was most attractive with its cover of lavender and colored xenias gracing the center. A most delicious two course lunch was served to the many guests that were present.

A DANCE

Miss Eloise Hardeman honored Misses Louise Dunaway and Elizabeth Roberts and Mr. John Oakley of Waxahachie, with a dance at her parents' ranch home on South Llano Tuesday night.

The large living and dining rooms were attractively decorated in the lavender crepe paper colored xenias. The dining table was covered with a alce cover and was centered by a large bouquet of tinted xenias which made a pretty setting for the merry-makers.

Sandwiches tied with lavender ribbon, potato chips and iced coco topped with whipped cream, was served to the dancers.

"Here's to the Chigger,
The bug that's no bigger
Than the point of a pin.
But the point that he raises,
Sure itches like blazes,
And that's where the rub comes in."

This refrain has been sent to Texas State Highway Department from Maine, with the information that it is not needed in Maine, but is passed on to Texas.
