The Texas Employment Commission will open its Youth Employment Service Office Monday, May 23, with high hopes of placing a large number of Lubbock youth in summer jobs. The office will operate until August 19, 1977. Bert Darden, TEC manager, has asked employers who need summer workers to call the YES office at 763-2949.

Darden stated the YES office will be working primarily with youth 16 to 22 years old. He reported that job openings will be needed in all categories because many young people registering will have experience in clerical, construction, food service, yard work, sales and other fields. It is expected that approximately 2300 youth will register for work.

Additional information can be obtained at the TEC Office, 1602-16th Street.

UNCF Speaker Dr. Hayes

The Lubbock executive committee for the United Negro College Fund hosted a corporate luncheon at the Coppercreek Mine Restaurant in Monterey Shopping Center last Wednesday.

Community leaders and heads of major corporations were present to hear Dr. Robert Hayes, president of Wiley College, Marshall, Texas, talk about the 41-member college organization and the role they can play in financial development for the six Texas UNCF institutions.

"We'll forever need the predominately black colleges, because we need a black depository," said Dr. Hayes.

Dr. Hayes is best known for his role in "The Right Man," a documentary on him and his college which won the Peabody Award.

Tommie Stevens, president, Texas Commerce Bank, serves as regional development chairman for Texas Association of Developing Colleges, the Texas arm of the United Negro College Fund. He, too, encouraged those persons in attendance last week to support this effort.

T.J. Patterson, general chairman of the local effort, served as master of ceremonies at this function.

TADC/UNCF has set $1.3 million as its 1977 goal. Colleges benefitting will be Bishop (Dallas); Huston-Tillotson (Austin); Jarvis Christian (Hawkins); Texas (Tyler); Paul Quinn (Waco); and Wiley (Marshall).

A goal of $25,000 has been set for the Lubbock area.

EDITORIALS

You Can Make It, Seniors ...

Those of you who are graduating this week from high school should be congratulated for this great accomplishment. Many young people started out with you twelve years ago, but many stopped along the way because of many problems. You didn't stop ... you held on and now you will be rewarded with a diploma which will help you in life.

All of you are someone special because you didn't spend the past years blaming everyone for what was happening to you. You didn't give up because of the many obstacles which were placed in your path ... You wanted to make it and you are doing just that this week.

As we've said in the past to graduating classes ahead of you, there are so many opportunities awaiting for the asking. As young Americans, each of you has something to contribute to life, and we hope you will begin now to think about what you would like to do with your life.

All of you will not attend an institution of higher learning at some college or university. Regardless of what you decide to do with your life, remember it's up to you to want to do something. The world owes you nothing!! So you must go out with an open mind and positive with anything you'll get involved.

One writer wrote years ago: "A person's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for." You, too, can accomplish a great deal with that kind of a philosophy. In doing so, you must keep in mind that nobody is going to give you anything. It'll be tuff, but with the will to hold on, boy, you can accomplish so much.

Each of you is distinctively different, with varying tastes and attitudes. We can't be individually held responsible for the mistakes of others, though you may suffer to some extent because of it. Keep in mind that the brunt of the responsibility rests with each individual. Each person must decide for himself which course he or she will travel.

Young people, with twenty-four hours in a day, you have the opportunity to take advantage of every precious minute. You'll have to know how to make the right decision. We know you can make it, Seniors, if you just hold your head up always—never down.

We are very proud of what you have done. Become turned on with what you have accomplished. You've come a mighty long ways. There were parents, teachers and friends who believed in you ... Today, you've crossed those burning sands of secondary education. You're somebody, and don't you ever forget it.

Good luck, Seniors, Class of 1977 ... We think you're great and should make a lot of things happen for yourself, community, state and nation.

Hang loose and take care of yourself ... You can make it.

As I See It . . .

by T.J. Patterson

It does one good to visit back into the community in which you grew up as a young person. This is what this writer did last Saturday. It was refreshing for me to walk where I once walked in the city of Wichita Falls, Texas. For six hours, I spent the time visiting with former teachers, classmates and friends whom I knew.

This time included me walking down the same alley in which I traveled to one of my first jobs as a dishwasher. In those days, it was my chore to walk nearly ten blocks to my all night dishwashing job. This job was the beginning of what I am today. My contributions to this effort served as a foundation for me to want to contribute something in life.

What I'm saying is that we should never forget from where we come from, and last Saturday it was quite an experience to have an opportunity to walk where I once walked ...

The local effort for the United Negro College Fund (UNCF) is off to a good start. A UNCF Mini-Telethon is scheduled for Saturday, August 13, from 7 to 10 tentatively over KMCC, TV, Channel 28.

This writer would encourage all of us to get involved and help this effort which has helped so many people in the minority community. Approximately 80 percent of all blacks in Lubbock who attained a degree from college began with a UNCF institution. For one, this writer got his start at Bishop College, an institution I will never forget.

If you can help this effort, then get involved and do what you can.

Quote of the Week: "A person who uses their hands is a laborer; a person who uses their hands and mind is a craftsperson, but a person who uses their hands, mind and heart is an artist." Dr. Robert Hayes, president of Wiley College at Marshall, Texas, last week while speaking to businesspersons about UNCF.

Speaking of baseball for young people in east Lubbock, well, the season officially got underway last week. The Eastern Little League is off and running to another good start.

It would be nice, however, if there was an opportunity for those boys who leave the league, because of age, had a pony league in east Lubbock. The land is there for them, but there is no pony league.

With a lot of hard work, this could become a reality by next season. There's just not any interest for these young fellows when they become of age to leave the Eastern Little League and transfer across town. Nothing wrong with going across town, but what about having something for the fellows in their own neighborhood ...

What's wrong with calling this league ... the Eastern Pony League?

If we keep on reminding the Parks and Recreation Department of the City of Lubbock, one day we will have some permanent toilets at the Eastern Little League ball park. People are tired of seeing and using those portable toilets.

With permanent toilets, they would be usable during the entire year at Mae Simmons Park. If my memory is correct, a city politician said this park would have some permanent toilets. They're not there yet!!

Since there is no representation on the city council from the lower socio economic communities, it would be worth thinking about having a liason person working in these areas to communicate what the city council is doing.

Let us not get this person confused with the present executive director of the Human Relations Commission. This writer is talking about someone who could get down to the "nitty gritty" about what is going on at City Hall and carrying their input back to the mayor and councilpersons.

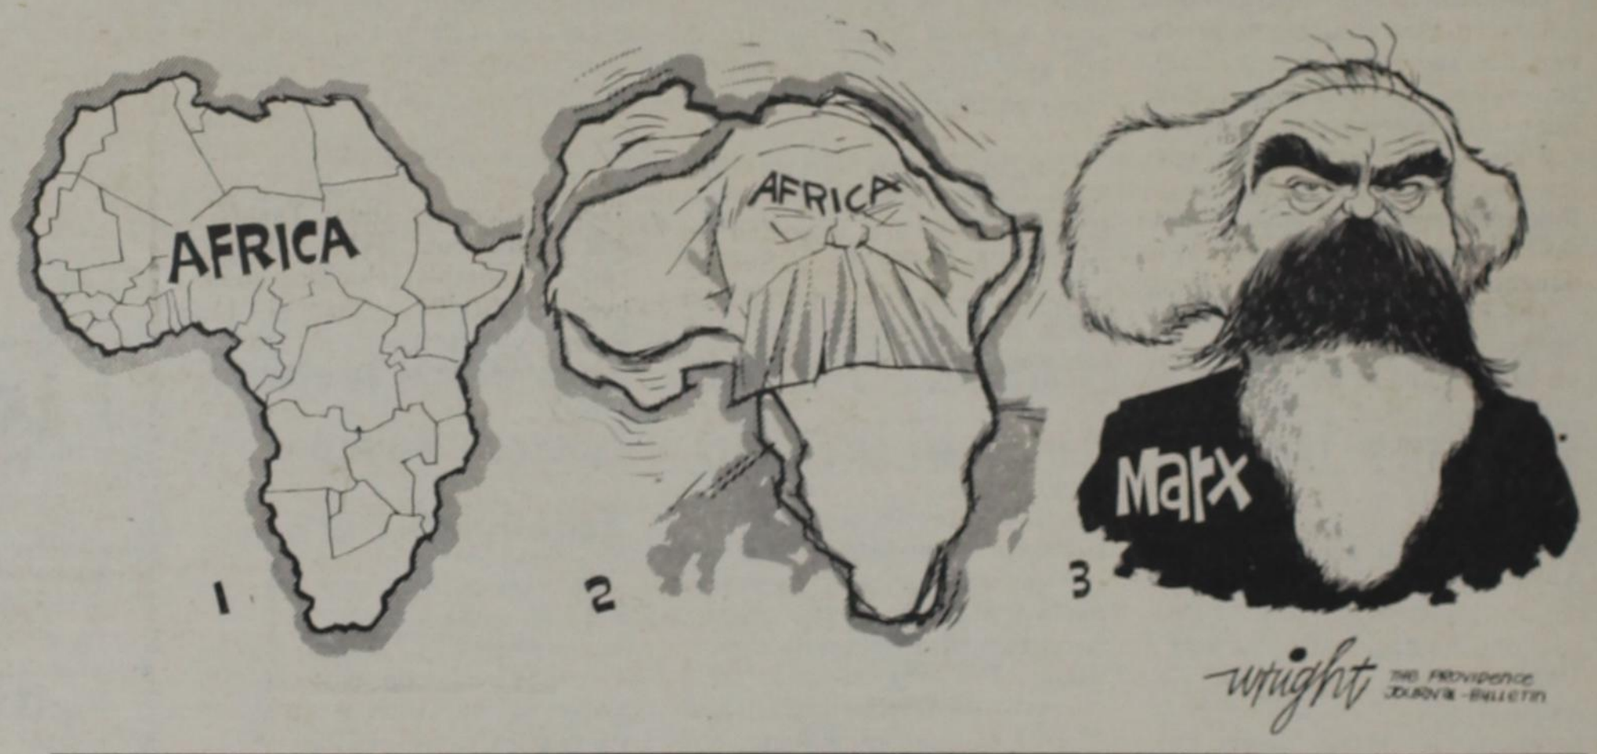

At the same time, this writer hopes there will be a political representation from these areas in the future. Perhaps the pending suit, initiated by Gene Gaines, president of the NAACP and local attorney, will prove to be positive and this will become a reality.

Until then, however, let's start thinking about this kind of a position ... It makes a lot of sense.

Our support is needed for the upcoming Freedom Fund Banquet, sponsored by the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). This event will be held on Friday, June 17, at 7:30 at the University Center's Ballroom on the campus of Texas Tech University.

This writer would encourage the citizens of Lubbock to come out and hear the speaker of the evening State Representative Mickey Leland of Houston.

JACK ANDERSON'S
WEEKLY SPECIAL

No Carter-O'Neill Friction

By Jack Anderson
With Joe Spear

(Copyright, 1977, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, D-Mass., has defended President Carter in public, but behind closed White House doors, the Speaker has assailed the president.

The story of the relationship between the president and the speaker is important, because the Carter program will depend heavily upon their cooperation. Therefore, we sent two reporters to question O'Neill at length.

First, it should be understood that their political styles are different. O'Neill is a back-slapping backroom Boston politician. He can become aggressive, even abrasive, in political discussions.

Carter comes from the more gentlemanly southern school of politics. He is soft-spoken and heavy on the molasses.

A few weeks ago, O'Neill led a liberal attack on some of Carter's policies behind closed White House doors. By southern standards, O'Neill's language was harsh. But by Boston standards, the Speaker was merely making a few points.

The strain between the two was aggravated when O'Neill turned down several invitations to dine with Carter at the White House. The Speaker told our reporters that he didn't intend to offend Carter.

But some White House aides were offended at O'Neill for rejecting the president's dinner invitations. Apparently, they dropped some remarks which reporters picked up. This led to the stories that relations between Carter and O'Neill had soured.

As nearly as we can determine, the two men have developed a good working relationship. Both are strong personalities; both have natural leadership qualities, but they are bound to clash occasionally.

But both men are political pros. They are in the same boat and will sink or sail together with the Democratic party.

Cigarette Squabbles: For 15 years, the tobacco lobbyists have been sparring with federal officials. Now it looks as if they will wind up in court.

The story is worth telling from the beginning. It goes back to the Surgeon General's warning that smoking could cause cancer. The tobacco tycoons were worried that people would stop buying cigarettes. So the tobacco lobby joined forces, believe it or not, with the doctor's lobby.

This must have been the strangest alliance in the history of lobbying. In those days, the doctors were worried about Medicare, which they thought would jeopardize their fees. In other words, they were more concerned about the threat to their fees than the threat to the nation's lungs.

So those who abetted and those who cured cancer laid down together in millennial bliss. The tobacco lobby helped the doctors fight Medicare. In return, the American Medical Association sided with the tobacco lobby.

The medical association actually wrote a letter to the Federal Trade Commission, contending that cigarettes should not be labeled as a health hazard. The letter sounded almost as if it had been written by tobacco men instead of medical men.

In the long run, the commission prevailed. The cigarette companies were ordered to print a health warning on each pack. They were also required to furnish basic information about their sales and research. The commission, in turn, made this information available to Congress.

But the cigarette makers held back all but the bare bones. So last May, the commission demanded more details on cigarette sales, practices and research results.

But the six largest cigarette companies rebelled. They complained that their reports weren't given proper protection from publicity. They claimed they had provided information which was used against them.

The commission rejected the complaint. The cigarette companies were given 30 days to come up with the requested information. They ignored the order.

So the commission is now trying to bring the tobacco tycoons to court. The commission has also issued a set of subpoenas for additional information. In the months ahead, the cigarette manufacturers will be blowing more smoke here in Washington than we've seen since the Surgeon General's report.

Pilot Study: The recent air disasters worry the National Transportation Safety Board. So last month the board dispatched a crew of inspectors not only to fly but also to live with airline pilots for 30 days. The purpose was to find out whether their personal habits affected their flying ability.

Federal inspectors stayed with the pilots in hotels, visited with their families, accompanied them on shopping trips. According to our sources, some inspectors even talked with pilots about their married lives.

The inspectors also kept a close watch on the pilots' technical skills. On one freight flight, for example, a pilot was flying a load of pigs to Japan. The flight engineer was so conscientious that he would check on the pigs regularly to make sure the temperature was comfortable.

The inspectors found the pilots to be highly competent. There was just one problem: The pretty stewardesses tended to wander into the cockpits too often.

Continuing Need For Black Colleges

AUSTIN — Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall says there are "compelling justifications for largely black colleges today."

In a commencement address at the Huston-Tillotson College, Marshall, an expert on the problems of blacks in employment, noted that black colleges were founded as a response to segregation.

"Fortunately," he said, "much of that need has eroded in the past decade or so. But today there are other compelling justifications for largely black colleges.

"We all know that we have not fully eradicated segregation from our schools, our housing patterns or our social structures," Marshall said.

He added the because of "lingering forms of segregation," many talented black students need a "supportive environment" in which to learn what they can accomplish.

"This is a role that black colleges have always played. And this is a role that blacks colleges need to continue to fill today," Marshall said.

Marshall urged the Huston-Tillotson graduates "not to lose confidence in yourself and your potential."

Noting the concern of many graduates about finding jobs, he said:

"I wish I could assuage your fears, but while the economy is improving, it will be a long while before jobs are again plentiful."

Marshall added:

"The important thing to remember is not to lose confidence in yourself and your potential. Unemployment is not something to be ashamed of. Many successful people, both black and white, had to endure long periods of hunting for the right job. Don't lose hope. Even in the worst economies there are some jobs. It just takes a tremendous amount of determination and self-confidence to find them and to land them."

New Law On Taxability of Tips

AUSTIN — State Comptroller Bob Bullock urged Texans Wednesday to take a close look when paying the tab at their favorite restaurant or club.

If the establishment has automatically added a tip to the check and then charged the sales tax on the tip, the customer has been overcharged, Bullock said.

"Send that check back and tell them to figure it again," Bullock urged.

The Comptroller said a bill recently passed by the Legislature exempts mandatory gratuities from the sales tax. He urged restaurant and club owners—and their customers—to familiarize themselves with the new law.

Bullock said the law will eliminate the past confusion over the taxability of tips.

In the past, a tip was subject to the sales tax if it was automatically added to the bill by the management. Voluntary tips or gratuities, however, were exempt from the tax.

The new law, which became effective April 25, excludes from the sales tax "reasonable" mandatory gratuities which do not exceed 20 percent of the price of the meal or drinks.

The law requires, however, that the gratuity be identified as such on the check and the full amount to be distributed to the employees who provide the service, such as waiters, waitresses and bartenders.

None of the gratuity can be kept by the employer or shared with the janitors, chefs, cashiers and dishwashers.

Bullock warned restaurant and club owners that they must maintain accurate records of how mandatory gratuities are disbursed in order to qualify for the tax exemption.

He urged restaurant and club owners to contact the nearest Comptroller's Field office or call toll-free, 1-800-252-5555 if they have questions about the new law.

This weekend, call both families for practically the price of one.

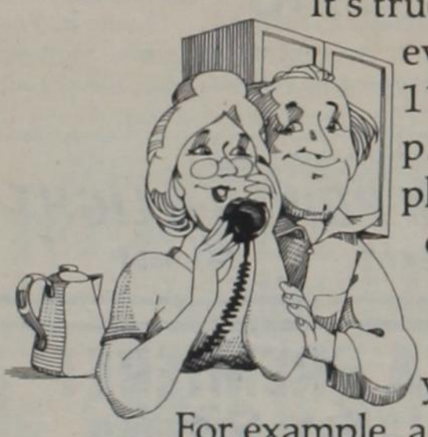

It's true! This weekend—and every weekend between 11 p.m. Friday and 5 p.m. Sunday—you can place two Long Distance calls for practically the price of one weekday evening call, when you dial the 1+ way.

For example, a 10-minute call to someone a thousand miles away weekday evenings (5 p.m. to 11 p.m., Sunday-Friday) would cost you $2.44, plus tax. Which, you'll admit, isn't bad.

But for practically the same price, you could make two eight-minute calls over the same distance... any weekend.

It's almost like getting one call free!

So this weekend, enjoy a couple of Long Distance calls. And make three families happy!

Long Distance.
What else is so nice for the price?

Texas Gross Sales Over $43.3 Billion

State Comptroller Bob Bullock reported Friday that gross sales in Texas for the last three months of 1976 exceeded $43.3 billion, raising the total for the year to $142.4 billion.

This is $27.5 billion more than the total for calendar 1975, an increase of 23.9 percent, Bullock noted.

The computer analyses released by Bullock break down reported gross sales by county and by Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (SMSA).

The totals for the state's 25 SMSA's are further divided into 21 different classes of sales, such as agricultural, mining, manufacturing and retail.

Harris County, the state's most populous, again led the state with gross sales totaling $11.2 billion. Dallas County recorded sales of $7 billion, Tarrant $2.5 billion and Bexar $1.9 billion.

The figures are based on reports from 287,672 business outlets holding sales and use tax permits.

Although Alex Haley is the best known black working on his genealogy, there are a number of others, such as Lucille Clifton, who has also written a book on her family. GENERATIONS concerns her father's family, the Sayleses, beginning with Caroline who came from Dahomey (Benin) in 1830. The actor, James Earl Jones, is researching his family tree. Nikki Giovanni, the poetess, has been working on her genealogy for a number of years, tracing African, American Indian, and Italian forebearers.

But you need not be famous to be interested in your lineage. The Journal of Genealogy for January, 1977, contains an article on Helen Louise Lawrence Burnett, a librarian in Chicago. She has been quite successful in tracing her Lawrence and Exum slave ancestors in North and South Carolina. The Vaughan family of Camden, S.C., is traced in the February, 1975 issue of Ebony. The story of this family begins with Scipio who was shipped from Africa to South Carolina about 1805. Tribal marks on his face identified him as a member of the Egba group of the Yoruba tribe of Nigeria. Two of his sons returned to settle in Nigeria, beginning a trans-Atlantic communication between the African and American branches of the family that has continued for over 100 years. Some of Scipio's American descendants married into Cherokee and Scottish families.

Black genealogists are scattered throughout the country. Cheryl Chisholm of New York City has done much research in New England records. Among other things, she found that her great grandfather had been a crony of W.E.B. Dubois. Carole Merritt of Atlanta, Ga. has successfully traced her lineage back to the 1700's in Clarke Co., Ga. One of her family lines was scattered over three plantations. Because of this, she had to research the three white planter's families. After contacting a descendant of one of these families, Ms. Merritt found that she had information that had been lost to the white family. By trading information, both were able to add considerably to their own lines.

A number of family histories were published in the 1940's and 50's in the Negro Historical Bulletin. Some of these included the North Carolina families of Harris and Richardson; William Roscoe Davis of Norfolk, Va., and his descendants; and the Gray family of Gray, Ga.

Not all blacks have been this successful, however. Dr. Kenneth Goode of Berkeley, Calif. has not been able to make much progress on his family tree, but this problem is not unique to black genealogists. Perhaps one of the biggest drawbacks has been the lack of publication of items pertaining to black genealogy. Since the showing of "Roots," much of this has changed. For example, a book scheduled for publication later this summer contains the registration of blacks who had been freed from slavery in Fairfax County, Va. Many of the surnames mentioned are still familiar in that area today. Although all counties and towns in Virginia were required to keep such registers, this is the first to be indexed and published.

Lillian D'Aguilar, archivist in the genealogical collection of the Municipal Archives for New York City, reports that the archives do not now have much material pertaining to blacks, but plan to build up this collection in the near future. Rebecca B. Colesar, archivist at the New Jersey State Library, writes that they have received many inquiries about black genealogy. This library has been collecting materials relating to black history, for some years, including genealogies. Just recently, the Georgia Educational Television Network broadcasted a series on how to begin black genealogy. As more people become interested and more books are published, the task of tracing black families will certainly become easier.

Send queries about your family to Marleta Childs, 2308 21st St., Lubbock 79411.

KELLY'S HEROES

by Joe Kelly

One of our many bleeding hearts trumpeted on the radio the other day the tired old line about the need for greater gun control. He cited statistics to prove how many people were killed as the result of firearms, generally the hand-held variety.

Well, bully for him. Let's do away with all types of firearms, legally. Let's close down the gun and pistol factories. Let's take firearms away from law enforcement personnel.

In short, let's wipe out firearms completely. Let's go back to bow and arrow, tomahawk, lance, spear, dagger, hunting knife, rocks. Let's not eliminate ropes of any description, either, because they are lethal weapons.

Soon, only the criminals would have firearms and the rest of us would be resorting to killing each other with the more unglamorous "old" weapons. That probably would please everyone except the hunter.

The argument against firearms, among other things, is that they are used to kill defenseless animals. That they are, just as animals were killed long before there were firearms, and not in as humane a fashion, either.

The conservationists rant about the senseless slaughter of animals, particularly deer, when actually controlled hunting is the best method of controlling the wildlife population.

It's perfectly true that there are people who take to the woods and fields with no sense of decency or common sense. They care little for laws, something that any realistic and honest outdoorsman hates. The confirmed outdoorsman stays within the rules.

The poacher and the people who hunt and fish out of season, do not observe legal limits and consistently break the law are like the criminal on city streets. It's the same thing.

Africa is having a problem with poachers, not the licensed guides, who take hunting parties on safaris and control the type and amount of game taken. The poacher is interested only in money.

We have game wardens in this country, men dedicated to upholding the law and maintaining order. They are understaffed and overworked, which is too bad. It's too bad, in fact, that we must have wardens, but then, we have policemen, too, don't we?

In short, the argument always has been trite to me that we needed gun control. If someone is going to commit murder, that person is going to do it with some weapon, no matter what it is.

The gun control lobby is active and, while it is well intentioned, it is typical of conditions today. Common sense and reason has, to a large degree, left us. We rush to the front with all sorts of laws and regulations without any thought to what they would do.

Before legislation is passed to confiscate all privately owned firearms and before firearms are outlawed, consider the consequences. The law abiding citizens would be without firearms; the criminals would still be able to obtain them.

If a person is mad enough to murder with a handgun, that citizen, deprived of firearms, would manage to kill if he or she was mad enough. It might be messier, but so what. No firearms were involved.

I once had a neighbor who had, through the reserves, become a high ranking officer. He told me that he had no firearms in his home and didn't believe that people should have them.

"Why, when I went overseas in World War II," he bragged, "the first thing I did was turn in my sidearms."

Fortunately there were a few million souls who had an idea that maybe, just maybe, they were at war and they had been issued firearms for a reason. And some of them were known to use them.

The other day, with a few minutes on my hands, I dropped by the sports store operated by Milton Ham in Snyder. Milton is a former Snyder athlete, coached by Tech's John Conley, and an out-end at TCU.

We talked briefly about the new regime at TCU and Milton said that he had heard glowing reports on F.A. Dry, the new football coach.

"I've heard that he was a strong disciplinarian," Milton said, "and that's what has been needed for a long time."

Also in the store was Bunny Fraser, and I'm not sure of the spelling. Mike Higgins, the insurance magnate, probably would know for sure because they were both tackles at Texas.

Bunny, now a sporting goods salesman, and I talked about teams going back to the early 50s when he was there under Blair Cherry and Ed Price.

"That Blair, now he was just great," Bunny exclaimed. "He had eyes in the back of his head. And he knew what every player did on every play. He didn't need to look at the films. If you didn't do what you were supposed to do, he let you know, right then and there. And smart? He could beat you by knowing the right thing to do. I have great admiration for him and always will."

At the Fire

by Ted Houghton

It was one of those routine calls the fire department makes every day, but to the residents of the house, it meant everything. As the fire truck imposes on their day, and the firemen alight, the neighbors begin to gather while the apprehensive residents look on. When student photographers from Texas Tech arrive to take in the scene, one young girl takes time to wave to the cameras.

Youth Writes

This is the last Youth Writes page of 1976-77 school year. The editors of the West Texas Times have enjoyed the many entries from Lubbock school children, and will select a representative from each grade to be pictured along with his or her teacher during the summer months.

Look for the return of Youth Writes in September.

The Life of a Time

Sunlight filtered through the glistening drops of dew which clung motionless on the silken threads of a small web. A warmed breeze played among the threads, stroking them like a harp. The spider, fixed about the heart of the web, busied herself with the taffeta-like threads. Its jointed limbs worked meticulously, weaving the torn threads together where an earlier melee between an intruder had happened. As the sun rose higher, and the air grew warmer, an unwary butterfly was snared in the arachnid's trap. The spider, elated at the butterfly's struggles, slunk towards it a quickened pace ...

Night came, bringing with it moonlight and stars. Each ray of light reverberated through-out, making the web shine resplendantly. And as the darkness grew heavier, the weaver sat upon her filar carousel, waiting as time passed. Time—a word of little meaning to her; only another sunrise or jovial meal—for time and life were one in the same. The coming of a new day was now at hand, for the sky, bright with morning colors was full with the light of the sun. For time goes on , even though members of the clock may fall and wither away.

April

April is a month of spring,
When birds hatch out of their eggs and start to sing.
In April I never stay out an hour,
Or else, I will have to take a real late shower.
And if I stay out and get muddy
My mother's name won't be buddy.
I stay in the house and eat Cheetos,
While my brothers sits and eats Fritos.
I love this month of April,
When the lumberjacks cut down the maples.
Spring is a time for everyone to see
If they don't theyll get stung by a honey bee.

Mothers and Daughters

Sally: Moms are mean, they're not kind,
They're just old grouches in my mind.
Jane: But have you thought, what your mom has done
For you, your family and everyone.
Sally: But my mom is mean, there's always a fight,
Says I'm wrong and she's always right.
Jane: That means she loves ya, in her own special way
To keep ya out of trouble and out of dismay.
Sally: I guess your right and I'm all wrong,
I'm her little ape and she's my King Kong.

Successful Bass Fishing

Although fresh water bass fishing is one of the most popular and exciting water sports, your success is greatly determined by your knowledge of the fish and how you deceive it.

The two types of bass vary in characteristics from lake to lake but basically follow the same life styles. The most popular in game fishing is the big mouth bass. The second type of bass, which is harder to catch, is the small mouth. Both prefer a warm environment and live off smaller fish and insects.

The technique you use in fishing for bass can play an important role in your success as a bass fisherman. Since all bass love to put up a fight, it is good to try different ways of catching them. In this way, you can find the technique with which you have best control. Trolling behind a boat is an effective way of catching bass, but if you prefer to fish in the water, wading about waist deep will often bring good results. A trot-line is used very often in catching larger quantities of fish at one time.

Bass are very cautious and not easy to fool;therefore, the correct bait is important. Live bait is good to use in shallow water areas because they won't get snagged as easily as a lure. Since bass are pretty finicky, a good live bait to use would be minnow, worms, or grasshoppers. Man made lures are good to use early in the morning and late afternoon when the bass are hungry and have a tremendous amount of energy. Lures are better used in deeper water where they aren't inclined to get caught in the reeds, rocks, and branches.

Another important factor in successful bass fishing is being in the right place at the right time. In the cooler seasons like spring, bass are found in warm shallow places in the morning and late evening. When it grows hot in the summer, bass usually move on to deeper water and shady areas by mid-afternoon. Bass are very fond of rocky areas.

If you are to be a successful bass fisherman, you must think like a fish, know something about the fish's life style, and most important, outsmart that fish!

The Three Little Piggies (by Wolf)

Once upon a time, I was cooking chicken noodles outdoors by my house on top of Strawberry Hill. (Strawberry Hill is the land I had bought the year before). Anyway, while I was cooking chicken noodles I saw three little piggies trespassing through my private property. I thought it was disgusting for some stupid little pigs to do this to me I decided to pay them back another time, however I soon forgave them.

One day I decided to pay them a visit to see how they were doing, because they all lived alone in separate houses. I gently knocked on the door of the first little piggy's house and asked nicely if I could come in. He yelled and said, "Not by the hair of my chinny-chin-chin," and suddenly I had to sneeze. I sneezed so loud that his house made of straw fell down. The little pig started running away, so I pursued him to apologize and to tell him that I would pay for the damage done.

He ran to the second little piggies house. He knocked and the second little piggy opened the door, and the first little piggy ran in and locked the door behind him. I knocked on the door gently for the second time and asked nicely if I could come in to repay the first little piggy for the damage done. They yelled and said in a loud voice, "Not by the hair of our chinny-chin-chins." Then I accidently sneezed and their house made of sticks crumbled down; they ran for no reason at all.

They ran to the third little pig's house knocked on the door and ran in and locked the door behind them. Once again I went to the front door and knocked gently. I asked nicely if I could come in, for I wished to repay the first and second little piggies for all the trouble I had caused. I told them in a nice manner that I would pay for their wrecked homes. I told them generously that I would buy them a better home in which to live. They said madly, "Not by the hair of our chinny-chin-chins." Just then I started sneezing for I had an alergy. I was very happy that their strong house of bricks did not crumble and fall down.

Later I went to the bank where I had all my life's savings and got all my savings to give it to the little piggies. I wanted to make up for all the trouble I had caused. While on my way to their house I thought of a way to get in. I was going to act as Santa Claus and go down their chimney with my bag of money. I went down the chimney and to my surprise the mean little rascals had put a big kettle of hot boiling water in the fireplace. I fell in, and it was so hot that I went straight up the chimney and into the nearest river. Then I went home never to come back for what had happened. I had lost the money on the way, and I dared not go back to find it, for I feared that the little piggies would be waiting for me.

I still live on Strawberry Hill with my wife; we are making it pretty good. I still like to cook on Strawberry Hill, but I try not to think of the little piggies. Whenever I think of them I get a fearful headache; my wife has to hit me with a club so I can go to sleep. I will never forget what those little devils did to me.

The Elephant's Tango

The elephant's feet went bing-o bang-o
As he happily danced to the elephant tango.
The elephant's ears went flop, flip, flop,
And his little tail whirled 'til it couldn't stop.
The elephant's trunk flew 'round and 'round
And his tum-tummy shook 'til it touched the ground.
A little bird sitting on the elephant's back
Said "Stop that stomping or the earth will crack!
Elephants shouldn't dance and run
When there is work that must be done."
A little frog sitting on the edge of a lake
Said "Stop that dancing, for goodness-sake!"
And all the animals watched him prance.
As he did his terrible tangoing dance.
That elephant tangoed night and day
Until he wore himself away!
And the little bird nibbled on an elephant bone
And said, "he really should have known.
You simply can't dance all night and day
You must balance rest with work and play."

A Message From Blacks to Whites

We are number one because Black is beautiful
and no other race
can take our place.
We have love between us; we're sisters and brothers
and no other race
can take our place.
And no one around can shake ground
and no other race
can take our place.
So, whites, when you feel you're the only race that's real, and over all others you're superior but really it's your mind that's inferior no other race
can take our place.

Backyard Glance

In the far back corner of the yard
In a darn shambles,
Stands a dilapidated tree fort, once abode.
To romp, laugh, dream in
To be a child in.
Now it exists only as a momento of carefree days, in a scrapbook.

Feel Like The World Is Coming To An End

Sometimes when traveling on the road and looking up ahead you feel the world is coming to an end ...
When looking at a river flowing swiftly you feel the world is coming to an end ...
When looking at the countles stars you feel the world is coming to an end ...
When traveling in the woods and you look up at a tall, tall gigantic tree you feel the world is coming to an end ...
Next time you don't have anything to do, think! Is the world coming to an end?

In a Forest Glade

The animals came quietly,
From all directions,
Up to the pond to drink.
They lowered their heads,
And as they started to drink, a
Shot fired through the trees.
Instantly they flashed toward the Protective boundaries of the Trees, and stood still, listening,
Listening, listening for any other
Strange sounds. After awhile,
Like an actor on cue, the eldest Buck stepped forward and over
To the pond to drink, and
The other animals followed, and
Acting like nothing had happened
They started again to drink.

Jenny and Penny were twins, but they were kinda different. One liked Strawberry icecream, that was Jenny. But Penny liked chocolate icecream. She said "it taste better."

They were both 11, but Penny liked green better and Jenny liked blue better. Jenny liked brown shoes better, Penny liekd black shoes better.

One morning mother said, "you two don't act like twins at all." They looked at each other. Penny said, "Mom we will try to do better." So the next day they were having a argument over who's going to use the phone. Mother said "Stop it you two I thought you two were going to better."

"Sorry, mom, we forgot our promise."

"If you two can't do better, you just should not be twins. You can start dressing different tomorrow morning." So the next day Jenny put shorts on Penny put on a skirt. They didn't say a word to each other all day long. That night they decided to act like twins again. They never got mad at each other again.

Sheridan's Ride

by Jack Sheridan

In a welter of total trash on the local movie screens there suddenly came a winner and winner it is! It started this past weekend at the South Plains Cinema down at the Mall and if you like funny, adult, sophisticated satire played to the hilt by an all-star cast, then head directly for the Mall and the film called "Nasty Habits."

In this instance the word "Habit" refers to the term applied to the garb worn by the Roman Catholic nuns. Thus, "Nasty Habits" details some high goings-on in an Abbey (convent) set in the heart of the City of Brotherly Love, Philadelphia. The film was adapted from Muriel Spark's novella, "The Abbess of Crewe," and what an adaptation came forth. In transposing the locale from Crewe, England, to Philadelphia, the screen writer made his first triumph. For this story belongs in the eastern "Cradle of Liberty."

Briefly, the story concerns the death of an aged Abbess and the power struggle for her successor. The convent, which is to say the least, is a far-out, wild group of women, is torn with two factions. The dominant and older nuns headed by Sister Alexandra determined to secure her role as leader, her henchmen, and the younger, more liberal nuns, sparked by the rebel sister who is busy with a not-so-clandestine relationship with a priest in the fields of the convent.

It won't take you too long to put things together in this wild and racuous tale, for the story you will be seeing is an irrelevant, knowingly funny treatment of the sad Watergate mess. If ever anyone told me I would find anything amusing about Watergate—and particularly at this time when David Frost is leading the ex-president through the vast, sickening mess via the interviews on television—I should have said "No way." But "Nasty Habits" does parallel the whole thing with biting wit and humor and the females call to mind their male counterparts to perfection.

You have it all here in the convent's internal warfare. You have Sister Alexandra aiding, abetting and contributing to everything including electronic bugging—even to the poplar trees in the meditation area, the burning of the books of strategy, the collection of tapes—including one with a missing portion—the break-in by two Jesuit priests who steal a thimble belonging to the rebellious nun—plus a look at her love-letters hidden in her sewing box.

They have Alexandra's "palace guards," the "plumbers," the covert payoffs and the works. And when Sister Winifred makes two forays to effect the payoffs, one to a women's room in a department store and the other, disguised as man with moustache (which alerts a cop to tell his colleague that they have a "gay" on their hands—the newspaper story subsequently headlines "Transvestite Nun" scandal—you're going to break up, I assure you.

Of course all this wouldn't have worked as spectacularly as it does without the unbelievably fine cast that has been assembled. From the dying Abbess (the first scene with Dame Edith Evans in an uncomfortably prophetic bit heralding her own death—this was her final film) to the introduction of Susan Penhaligon as the wayward excommunicated, leaflet distributing "victim," you have nothing but brilliance from this field of women—and the men, too.

For example, as Sister Alexandra, basing her strategy on a book by Machivelli, Glenda Jackson, already a two-time Oscar-winner, has never been more dominant, more delightful and more aware. She's simply terrific.

As her Henry Kissinger, you have Sister Gertrude, flying her missionary trail from China to the North Pole by helicopter, played to the hilt by Oscar-winner Melina Mercouri. As her Haldeman and Erlichmann, she has cigarette-smoking Sister Wallburga, perfect in the hands of Geraldine Page, and Mildred, played cannily by Anne Jackson. Geraldine is in the hands of Anne Meara, while her husband-in-real-life, Jerry Stiller, is P.R. Priest. You'll find Rip Torn and Eli Wallach in the conspiratorial camp and Mike Douglas and Howard K. Smith, playing themselves, give a punch to the whole proceedings.

But the triumph of the casting is Sandy Dennis as the Sister who gets all the dirty work, Winifred. Her performance is tremendous. I've not heretofore been a wild Dennis fan but, believe me, I am now! I want to see it all over again just for the slick and meticulous melding of players and script. It's a joy and a treat!

You don't get one like "Nasty Habits" every day in the week and, when it arrives, get with it. You simply can't miss on this one! It has my personal firework recommendation to any and all. It is adult, in the sense that an adult can recognize and appreciate the finer points of satire and the correlation with the screenplay with the actualities of a tragedy that did take place. The man (or woman) who can successfully mix the two factors and come out with an adroit and stunning finish like "Nasty Habits" deserves some sort of super-Oscar in my book.

(Incidentally, speaking of Glenda Jackson, I wonder why her "Hedda," the dramatization on screen of Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler" and "The Incredible Sarah," her vehicle on the times of Sarah Bernhardt, the famed French actress, have never been seen in this area. Interesting thought.)

I wanted to take a look at Muhammed Ali (Cassius Clay) in his first film, "The Greatest" at the Lindsey but time did not permit. We'll comment later.

Remember Bob Hope is at the Civic Center Friday and that Roger Williams guests with the Lubbock Symphony in the same location on June 10.

To go back for a moment to "Nasty Habits." It turns out that this outstanding film was the first direction effort by a Michael Lindsay-Hogg and he'll be heard from again, I'm more than sure. The superb production as well as the screenplay which I have lauded was the work of Robert Enders. He, too, deserves all the accolades around.

The congregation here honors our youngsters who are graduating from high school. Congratulations to Vickie Brackington, Gaileline Miller and N.L. Simington.

Lyons Chapel Baptist Church

Once again service was very inspirational, with Rev. Jonah Parker, pastor of Carter's Chapel, delivering the sermon for the morning. "Beat up, pass up and pick up" was his text; the scripture was taken from Luke 10:30-35. His message was truly enjoyed by all.

We would like to congratulate all graduating seniors in high school and college. A special acknowledgement goes out to our seniors and they are: Karen Roy, Vicky Brooks (Okla. City), Nedra Perry, Geroge Stevens, Teresa Fulsom, Freddy Fulson, Diedra Harris and Sandra Ross. "May all your endeavors you strive for be successful." Better opportunities are coming your way, continue to prepare yourself for a better future. Put God first, others second, self last and you can't help but succeed. Remember, faith is the substance of things hoped for — the evidence of things unseen. Good luck to all of you.
