Damage awards

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Monday it will decide whether skyrocketing punitive-damage awards in personal-injury and other cases can go so high they become unconstitutional.

In a case of enormous importance to American business and consumers, the court agreed to hear arguments in an Alabama insurance-fraud case that yielded a jury award of over $1 million.

Iraqi leader threatens to use nerve gas

■ The admission by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein that his country has binary nerve gas weapons raises fears of an escalating Middle Eastern arms race.

Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein said for the first time Monday that his country has deadly binary nerve gas weapons, and he threatened to use them on Israel if the Jewish state attacks Iraq.

Binary weapons, usually artillery shells or missile warheads, contain two relatively safe compounds that combine to produce toxic nerve gases. They are outlawed under a 1925 treaty.

Iraq is already seen as a front-runner in a Middle East drive to develop arsenals of long-range and surface-to-surface missiles. Its development of chemical weapons, and possibly nuclear arms, has raised fears of an arms race in the volatile region.

In Israel, government officials warned Monday that Israel would retaliate if Hussein used chemical weapons against it.

The U.S. State Department denounced Hussein's chemical weapons threat as "inflammatory, irresponsible and outrageous."

Hussein, in a speech broadcast by Baghdad Radio, denied Iraq has nuclear weapons. Concerns about this were raised last week by the interception in London of 40 Iraqi-bound trigger devices that officials said were designed for nuclear bombs.

"I categorically deny that we have any

Lithuania asks Moscow to send representative

■ President Vytautas Landsbergis of Lithuania is awating word from Moscow on his concialtory effort, involving negotiations that could gradually lead to independence.

Associated Press

MOSCOW — Lithuania's president Monday invited Kremlin officials to Lithuania to discuss the republic's secession drive and struck a conciliatory note by saying Lithuania wants gradual, not immediate, full independence.

While government officials sought a compromise solution to the dispute, 1,000 pro-independence demonstrators rallied at the Lithuanian prosecutor's office to protest its occupation by Soviet soldiers.

Washington deplored Moscow for ordering all 100 foreign journalists in the republic to leave by Monday.

There was no immediate response from Moscow to the invitation from President Vytautas Landsbergis of Lithuania.

Landsbergis told Lithuanian legislators that officials face "political difficulties" in dealing with Lithuania's March 11 declaration of independence.

"Therefore it is essential to look for a way of helping them and ourselves," he said in comments carried on Lithuanian Radio and monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. in London.

And on Monday the business pages will feature an analysis of energy stocks by category including producers and pipeline and service companies.

Further enhancements of the daily stock market report will be announced as these become available through a new Associated Press "Selectstocks" service to be inaugurated later this year.

The newspaper currently publishes four business-related columns: Bill Doyle's popular financial and investment Q. and A.; "Computer Notes," written alternately by Paul Pause', consultant and president of Permian Basin Graduate Center and Dennis Sever, Midland College computer science instructor; and "Business Scene" by Reporter-Telegram staff writer Mella McEwen. These will continue.

Joining them will be two nationally syndicated writers: Jane Bryant Quinn, known by readers as a regular Newsweek columnist, and Scott Burns, who also is staff business columnist for The Dallas Morning News. Quinn's column will be published each Tuesday and Friday while Burns' will appear on Thursdays and Sundays.

Vietnam veterans prepare for retreat

■ Local Vietnam veterans organizing second "Stand Down" — a time to "rest and recreate" — so former comrades at arms may heal, remember and fellowship.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Buster Hill has "been there."

And he probably won't go back, except in spirit, to remember his brothers-in-combat and behind the frontlines during the Vietnam War.

Meanwhile, Hill, who served in Vietnam with the United States Marine Corps as a "grunt" — infantryman — and communications specialist in the late 1960s, is helping to organize Stand Down No. 2 for Vietnam War veterans at Moss Creek Lake east of Big Spring on July 14 and 15.

It's designed as a reprieve from life's frontlines and as a time of remembrance.

"There's a lot of vets who have a lot of trouble coping with society — the way society is," Hill said. "I'm not saying there is anything wrong with society."

Even so, "Sometimes, you need a break from it. It gives the vets a chance to regroup."

The Vietnam veterans will build bonfires, cook out, and fellowship at the second annual Stand Down. "We just kind of hang around and talk to each other."

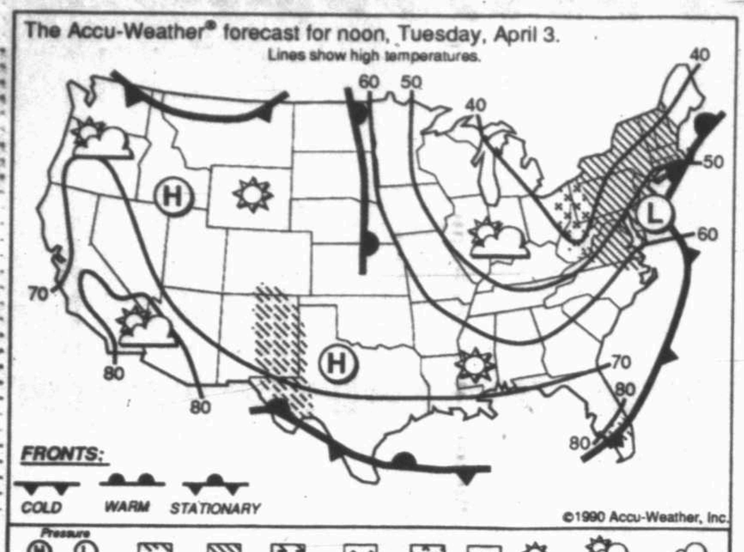

Among the troops, to take a "stand down" was to "rest and recreate." It was a brief relief from combat but not from the "why" of the war.

"That (Stand Down) means they get to go back and clean up and rest and party," said Hill. "It usually is a three-day thing, and (then) you go back into the bush."

Dry weather returning

Staff Report

The rains, for awhile at least, have moved out of the dry West Texas country.

And rainless clouds will be moving over the Midland area today.

The temperature today is to peak out around 70 degrees, according to the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds are to be southeasterly at 10 to 20 mph.

For tonight, the weatherman is calling for clear skies and a low temperature in the mid-40s. The day is to be sunny on Wednesday, when the high temperature is to be around 80 degrees.

The high temperature on Monday was 65 degrees, while the record high for April 2 is 89 degrees in 1978. And the overnight low temperature was 45 degrees. The record low for April 3 is 29 degrees in 1987.

STATE

The skies in Texas took on the colors of the Civil War on Monday — blue in the north and gray in the south.

It was mostly cloudy, with scattered showers and thunderstorms, in South Texas and Southwest Texas. But mostly sunny skies prevailed over North Central Texas and Northwest Texas.

A cold front extended west from just south of Lufkin to South Central Texas near San Antonio, and farther west to the Trans-Pecos.

While there were a few readings near 80 degrees in Southeast Texas, most of the highs Monday afternoon were in the 60s and 70s.

The warm spot at 3 p.m. Monday was Beaumont, where it reached 81 degrees. It only reached 47 at Guadalupe Pass.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms rumbled through much of the South and the East Coast on Monday, and snow kept parts of the northern Midwest frozen.

Snow fell in northern Lower Michigan, Upper Michigan, eastern and northern Wisconsin, and northeast Minnesota. As much as 2 inches of snow fell near La Crosse, Wis.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms fell from the Texas coast to the Florida Panhandle and southern Alabama, and from western Virginia to eastern West Virginia, the Maryland Panhandle, western Pennsylvania and western New York.

Showers spread from central New Mexico to southwest Texas. Rain extended from western Ohio to Indiana and southern lower Michigan.

The low temperature for the Lower 48 states Monday was 15 degrees at both Bemidji and International Falls, Minn.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

RETREAT: July weekend chosen

back together,' so you can go back and regroup ... before you have to go back out again," Hill said. "You just got to pull back for awhile. You didn't have to keep fighting. Some of them were out there (in battle zones) constantly; some of us weren't."

The Vietnam War turned out not to be a "glory war" wherein patriotism and causes overshadowed the fears of death and the unknowns.

"It wasn't meant for us to complete or win," Hill reflected. And the Vietnam warriors who died in the conflict to fight Communist aggression lost their lives "in vain," Hill said. "It was a total waste of lives."

But in the spirit of survival, the warrior found common bonds. But the impact of the war on the disillusioned warriors was heavy.

Last year, Hill visited "The Wall" — the black granite memorial to the 58,000 American men and women who died in that war, which began in 1957 and which ended in 1975, when South Vietnam surrendered to Communist-controlled North Vietnam. United States troop withdrawal from Vietnam was completed following the 1973 cease-fire agreement.

At first at "The Wall" in the nation's capital, Hill experienced hurt, anger, and grief.

'That (Stand Down) means they get to go back and clean up and rest and party. It usually is a three-day thing, and (then) you go back into the bush.'

— Buster Hill, organizer

Then, a sense of camaraderie set in.

"It felt like a place you could belong to," Hill reflected. "It was a comfortable feeling. It was a sad place to be. The names on The Wall pulled you there: 'Here we are again (in Vietnam).' It's a mixed feeling."

"You see names of 58,000 (warriors) who were where you were but who never made it back (home)," Hill said. "It's pretty touching."

And in studying the names of the dead, Hill said it "doesn't seem right," but, "like they say, " 'When it's your time, you are going to go whatever you are doing.' "

But there are arguments against that stance. "I don't know," Hill said.

Hill recalled a fellow warrior who had a premonition about his death, objected to boarding an armed helicopter for a mission, but was ordered to board the aircraft.

"You're going anyway whether you want to or not," he was ordered.

The warrior boarded.

"They never came back — they never came back alive."

Hill, who is a Midland landscaper, wears a dark MIA (Missing In Action) and POW (Prisoners Of War) T-shirt, camouflaged garb, including a bush hat that is decked with a band of hand-grenade pins and pendants that proclaim such sentiments as, "MIA/POW: Their war is not over"; "You are not forgotten"; "Vietnam Remembered," and "I've been there."

When he returned from Vietnam, Hill said, "People over here didn't know whether to believe us, because of what society was telling them" in those years of Vietnam War protests.

"There were people over there who had jobs (involving death and destruction) that weren't so nice," Hill said. "But the government over here was telling us what we had to do. Those were orders that we were given."

Hill was 18 years old in 1968 and out of high school when he decided to join the war effort.

"I was in the Marine Corps and in America, and I wanted to go," Hill recalled. "I thought I was actually doing something good for the government and for the country. That's what I was told."

And once in the war, once disillusioned, and once war had been deglorified in the minds of the soldiers, "We sometimes would stay up all night long, trying to figure out why we were there."

And to survive in war, Hill reflected, "I do what I can do today, and hope I'll wake up tomorrow."

Hill, of course, did wake up "tomorrow."

And when he and other Vietnam veterans do get together these days to reflect on that war of doubt and misgiving, they experience "instant trust right there." The bond — not the war — is complete.

WEAPON: Hussein warns of retaliation

atomic bombs," the president said at a ceremony in Baghdad, where he awarded medals to senior military officers.

Hussein claimed that during the 1980-88 war with Iran, "Iraq was offered enriched uranium and even a complete atomic bomb by people who were either American, British or Zionist agents. But Iraq turned down these offers."

He did not elaborate. Such an offer would not be in accord with Western efforts to block nuclear military technology to developing nations.

Hussein warned the Israelis that if they try to repeat their June 1981 air strike on a French-built nuclear reactor near Baghdad, he will retaliate with chemical weapons.

"I say that if Israel dares to hit even one piece of steel on any industrial site, we will make the fire eat half of Israel," he declared.

"Let them hear, here and now, that we do possess binary chemical weapons which only the United States and Soviet Union have."

In a clear reference to Israel, believed to be the only Middle Eastern power with nuclear weapons, Hussein said: "Those who are threatening us with nuclear bombs: we warn them that we will hit them with this binary chemical weapon."

A statement issued in Jerusalem by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel said Hussein's remarks "reveal once again the basic threat at the root of the situation in the Middle East, which is . .. the continued aspiration to destroy Israel. ... Let there be no doubt, Israel will also know how to defend itself in the future and defeat the evil designs of its enemies."

Shamir spokesman Avi Pazner said, "We have no aggressive intention against anyone, including Iraq."

Asked about a possible preemptive strike, Pazner said: "We don't even want to talk about that kind of thing."

Western intelligence officials have long said Iraq is developing chemical weapons at top-secret research installations.

Only the United States and Soviet Union have officially admitted having binary weapons, although other countries were believed to possess them.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Foreign Ministry Undersecretary Nizar Hamdoon said Iraq developed the weapons during the Iraq-Iran war but did not use them.

Hussein said Britain and the United States should recognize "the rights of nations and peoples to defend themselves."

The Iraqis have told Israel several times the last two years not to launch preemptive strikes against its burgeoning arms industry. Baghdad says it now is capable of producing long-range missiles and rockets capable of putting satellites into space orbit.

In December, Iraq announced it had tested two missiles with a range of up to 1,200 miles, enough to reach Iran's capital and Israeli cities.

Hussein also made his first public comment on U.S. and British allegations that Iraq tried to smuggle in 40 U.S.-made krytrons, or electronic detonators for nuclear bomb detonators.

"These are only condensors which we bought ... and it's not logical that these could be used in atomic bombs," he said.

The Foreign Ministry released photocopies of documents it said proved Iraq's innocence and showed that a person it identified as an FBI agent attempted to lure Iraq into ordering the triggers.

It said "attempts by British and American authorities to portray Iraq as a nuclear power are aimed at blackmailing and pressuring Iraq to prevent Iraq from acquiring scientific and technical know-how."

The ministry said the devices seized at London's Heathrow Airport could be used for nuclear bombs but that Iraq wanted them for use in a university laser system.

Hussein, who has ruled Iraq as undisputed strongman since 1979, said recent criticism against Baghdad over its human rights record and its military ambitions was designed "to threaten and intimidate Iraq" as well as "pave the way for Israel to attack us."

Israel's air force bombed Iraq's Osirak nuclear reactor in 1981 while Iraq was at war with Iran. Israel claimed the plant was developing a nuclear bomb. Iraq denied it.

TALKS: Gradual independence Lithuania's goal

(From 1A)

Gorbachev faces independence movements in several of the Soviet Union's 15 republics. Lithuania and its Baltic neighbors, Estonia and Latvia, were annexed after the Soviets took control of them under the Hitler-Stalin pact of 1940.

The Lithuanian declaration of independence "may seem to some people ... a demand that power be handed over the very next day," Landsbergis said. "We did not expect this and did not count upon it."

Instead, Landsbergis told legislators the republic had stated "how by means of agreements and a gradual takeover of certain functions, we would consolidate our independence."

Gorbachev has said talks on independence can take place only if Lithuania renounces its declaration of March 11. He has pressured the republic to do so by sending Red Army soldiers to take over public buildings in the Lithuanian capital, Vilnius.

Refusal to take back the declaration of independence may result in "grave consequences for all of us," Gorbachev said in a statement to Lithuanians on Saturday.

In a telegram sent to Gorbachev on Monday morning, Landsbergis indicated that legislators would debate a full response, and he invited a Kremlin representative to take part in the discussion to explain Moscow's stand.

Landsbergis also sent a delegation to Moscow in the hopes of starting negotiations in the Soviet capital.

Spokesmen for the Lithuanian Supreme Council said legislator Egidius Bickauskas had gone to Moscow in hopes of meeting with Soviet leaders, and that three other people including Deputy Premier Romualdas Ozolas were following.

Bickauskas has spent much of the past two weeks in Moscow trying without success to begin talks.

About 1,000 pro-independence demonstrators rallied outside the Lithuanian prosecutor's office against the occupation of the building Friday night by Soviet soldiers.

Both a prosecutor appointed by Lithuania's breakaway government and one sent from Moscow were working in the building Monday, employees said. They reported a tense atmosphere but no direct conflicts between the two.

Carla Gruodis, a legislative spokeswoman, also said a member of the minority Communist Party that remained loyal to Moscow had told editors of pro-independence newspapers they could not have their newspapers published at the country's main printing plant.

A handful of soldiers occupied that building early Saturday.

Ms. Gruodis said Juozas Kuolelis, former head of state radio and television in Lithuania, called a meeting at the printing headquarters and told workers he had a decree from the national Communist Party Central Committee and the Soviet Council of Ministers. He said the decree gave the loyalist Communist Party the exclusive right to use the building.

Ms. Gruodis said the plant manager and workers told Kuolelis they were determined to continue printing.

Papers owned by the Lithuanian government that support the independence drive, and publications of the pro-independence Sajudis political movement, are printed at the plant.

Optimism prevails at antiquated Trabant plant

ZWICKAU, East Germany (AP) — Horst Bauernsachs looks at the blackened, prewar factory buildings where outdated Trabant cars are built and says, "It can only get better."

"I may well wind up unemployed for a time, but that's not the end of the world," says the 47-year-old forklift driver, one of 11,500 workers at the plant. "I'll just have to look around. We won't starve."

Optimism prevails at the Sachsenring plant. Even though many of its workers are likely to lose their jobs, they are looking forward to the promise of Western-style prosperity once Germany is united in a free-market economy.

Volkswagen, West Germany's largest car maker, has signed a nearly $3 billion deal to build models for the Western market at the plant, which dates back to 1904 and uses virtually no automation.

Modernization will mean layoffs in a workforce accustomed to making the Trabant, a plastic-body compact of 1957 vintage with a sputtering two-cylinder engine.

At the same time, chassis welding foreman Dieter Blank says approaching capitalism has already raised morale and removed some notorious aspects of the state-planned economy.

"We had considerable problems with discipline in the past, but they've drastically gone down," says Blank, 39.

"Right now, all of us are fighting for our jobs. The workers know that VW will only pick the best."

Trabants became a symbol of freedom last summer when East Germans drove them through Hungary to the West in an exodus that helped trigger last fall's democratic changes. Now the "Trabi" seems more like an inescapable reminder of the past.

Blank says the mood is hopeful after the conservative victory in East Germany's free elections March 18.

The winning three-party alliance, heavily backed by the conservative Bonn government, has promised quick union with rich West Germany.

The conservatives did especially well in East Germany's southern industrial areas of Thuringia and Saxony, where Zwickau is located. West German flags waving from the windows of the city's aging apartment buildings show which way the wind is blowing.

But as West German companies rush to get a foothold in the eastern market, Trabant workers realize their economy's immediate future is uncertain.

"My friends and I expect a dry spell of 2-3 years," says engineer Dieter Hildesheim, 35. "Then things will look up again."

Sales of the little car are plummeting because East Germans are waiting for economic union with West Germany, planned by this summer, so they can buy a car of their choice.

Volkswagen production is expected to reach full steam only in 1994, so Sachsenring hopes its revamped Trabant with a VW engine will sell in Eastern Europe and Canada in the meantime.

It's a far cry from East Germany's closed market last year, which buyers faced waits of 15 years or more for a Trabi and the plant advertised 700 openings.

Trabis now are available for immediate delivery.

Dieter Voigt, chief of the state vehicle building conglomerate IFA, has said up to 70 percent of the workers in the automotive and supply industries — about 100,000 people — could lose their jobs in the switch to a free-market economy.

Guenter Noetzold, an economist at Leipzig University, predicts 2 million East Germans, a quarter of the labor force, will be jobless for a limited period.

But Blank, who has a wife and two children, is convinced East Germans will find enough work in rebuilding their land after decades of neglect.

A train-loan of "Trabis" Trabant cars leave a manufacturing plant in East Germany. About 530 Trabants can leave the assembly lines daily, but production is declining in view of West German cars to be built there in the near future. Volkswagen has signed a deal to build models for the Western market at the plant, which dates back to 1904 and uses virtually no automation.

Mecham again running for governor

PHOENIX (AP) — Two years after he was impeached and removed from office, former Gov. Evan Mecham and his right-wing populist agenda still dominate Arizona's political landscape.

Few believe he could win back the governor's office, but Mecham is running hard for the GOP nomination.

Meanwhile, the state bureaucracy, ruled by three wildly different governors in the last four years, is virtually paralyzed as it awaits yet another master after November's election.

And the Legislature is wrestling with two Mecham legacies — a $250 million deficit and a battle over a holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr.

Mecham, campaigning as an outsider battling the "power brokers" of state politics, has staked his career on opposition to taxes and government meddling.

He won the governorship on his fifth try in a three-way race in 1986 but soon got into trouble by rescinding the state's King holiday and by making remarks that offended blacks, Asians, Hispanics, women and homosexuals.

Thirteen months after he took office, the state Senate convicted him on impeachment charges of misusing $80,000 and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat. He was removed on April 4, 1988.

The Senate, however, declined to pass a Dracula clause that would have barred him from running again, and he has risen from his political coffin.

"When the public decides we've had enough even communist dictators are overthrown," Mecham said last week during an interview between campaign stops. "The Mecham Militia is stronger than ever."

Political analysts say Mecham could win the Sept. 11 primary, given the crowded field. No polls have been taken in more than a month. But in any case, some say, polls have been ineffective in showing Mecham's level of support.

"Evan Mecham has a hard core of supporters that is unidentified in most polls," says Rick DeGraw, a Democratic strategist. "Evan Mecham's voters are not average. Everyone that hates anyone feels comfortable with Evan Mecham. It doesn't matter if they hate trees ... or old people, or lawyers. They'll feel comfortable."

Mecham has his own woes. The federal government is trying to foreclose on his office building, and a state judge assessed him more than $35,000 in penalties and fees over the allegedly misused funds.

But Mecham said of his problems, "We have it all in hand." He added that he has already collected more than $100,000 in campaign funds.

The others in the five-way GOP field are millionaire developer Fife Symington, former congressman and Mecham aide Sam Steiger, former Maricopa County Supervisor Fred Koory and former Mecham aide Bob Barnes, a part-time teacher.

The Implant Alternative.

If you've been disappointed in conventional solutions to your missing teeth, you should know about an important new alternative: dental implants.

Dental implant, actual size.

A dental implant is a tiny cylinder which is surgically implanted in your jaw to replace the root of the tooth. Once in place, your natural jawbone bonds to the implant, making it a stable foundation for replacement teeth, a permanent bridge, or anchored, removable dentures. Dental implants are fixed so securely, in fact, they can actually restore the feeling you had with your own natural teeth. As well as your ability to eat just about anything you want — confidently.

Call to learn more about dental implants. They'll help restore the feeling, and the freedom of your own natural teeth.

U.S. ends didn't justify means, Noriega's attorneys argue

MIAMI (AP) — Manuel Antonio Noriega's defense put a former U.S. attorney general on the witness stand Monday and claimed the invasion of Panama was bloodier and more destructive than the government has admitted.

The testimony, which included videotapes of invasion violence and the arrest of the deposed Panamanian leader, was aimed at convincing U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler that Noriega should be freed to demonstrate that the government's executive branch is subject to the rule of law.

"Nothing General Noriega is accused of is equivalent to what happened, to the force that was used to bring him to the United States," defense attorney Jon May said. "We have to recognize that the methods we use sometimes make us worse than the people we are trying to arrest."

The prosecution avoided discussions of United States conduct during the Dec. 20 invasion, with Deputy Solicitor General William Bryson calling the issue "legally irrelevant." He said there was ample legal precedent showing the court could maintain jurisdiction over Noriega whether or not the government violated his rights.

For the defense, former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who served under presidents Kennedy and Johnson in the 1960s, was put on the stand as a representative of an ad hoc group called the Independent Commission of Inquiry on the U.S. Invasion of Panama.

Clark, who toured Panama in January, is one of the most prominent members of the private group, which also includes author Graham Greene.

Clark was questioned about the number of civilian deaths in Panama, which the Defense Department has put at between 200 and 300.

"I heard of estimates ranging as high as 7,000," Clark told the judge. "I still believe it will be at least a thousand, and probably several thousand — you never will know the absolute number."

Before Clark's testimony, defense attorney Frank Rubino presented videotape of invasion coverage from the major networks and Panamanian television, much of it aimed at showing the widespread destruction and homelessness caused by the invasion.

Throughout the tape Noriega sat impassively in his general's uniform at the defense table, except for a twitch once when the film showed him in captivity aboard a U.S.-bound military transport plane.

Noriega faces 145 years in prison if convicted of a variety of drug counts in a February 1988 indictment that accused him of accepting bribes from Colombia's Medellin drug cartel to turn Panama into a way station for U.S.-bound cocaine. The judge on Monday again insisted that the trial will go ahead as scheduled on Jan. 28, 1991.

Court blocks California execution

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday refused to allow California to carry out its first execution in 23 years, letting stand an order blocking Robert Alton Harris' trip to the state gas chamber.

Harris, 37, who in 1978 kidnapped and murdered two San Diego teen-agers to use their car in a $3,000 bank robbery, had been scheduled to die in the gas chamber at 1 a.m. CDT Tuesday.

However, a federal appeals court judge imposed the stay Friday, and the nation's highest court voted 6-3 Monday to reject an emergency request from prosecutors who wanted to execute Harris on schedule.

"There is no legal or moral reason why the execution ... should not proceed as scheduled," state Attorney General John Van de Kamp said in papers filed with the court. "There has never been a question Robert Alton Harris killed the two helpless victims in cold blood."

The request went to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who referred it to the full court. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy voted to set aside the stay of execution and let Harris die. Voting in the majority were Justices O'Connor, Thurgood Marshall, William Brennan, John Paul Stevens, Byron White and Harry Blackmun.

In Los Angeles, a group of six first and second cousins of victim John Mayesky held a news conference to protest the delay in Harris' execution.

Harris would be the nation's 122nd convicted killer put to death since the Supreme Court's 1976 decision that allowed executions to resume. Since January 1977, 13 states — mostly in the South — have executed prisoners. Trend-setting California would be the most populous state to carry out a death sentence.

Confession hangs over S&L nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole predicted Monday that T. Timothy Ryan Jr. will be approved by the Senate despite Ryan's acknowledgement that he used marijuana and cocaine in the 1970s.

"In my view, the nominee will be confirmed," the Kansas senator said as Republicans pushed for a quick Senate floor vote. "The question will be on whether he has the experience."

Dole asked for a vote this week on the nomination of Ryan, a former solicitor in the Labor Department who is President Bush's choice to head the Treasury Department's Office of Thrift Supervision.

Dole and Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady huddled over the weekend on how to minimize the damage from the disclosure Friday that Ryan had acknowledged to the FBI and Bush administration officials that in the 1970s he had used marijuana occasionally and had tried cocaine "once, perhaps twice."

Ryan, 44, survived a 11-10 confirmation vote in the Senate Banking Committee Thursday. That vote came after he acknowledged during hearings that he has little experience with banking or thrifts.

On Monday night, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., rose on the floor of the Senate to defend Ryan, saying he had known the lawyer for several years and had confidence in Ryan's integrity.

"I don't think there's any question of the man's honesty or of his effectiveness," Warner said, noting that Ryan brought the past drug use to the attention of investigators conducting a background check on him.

"Mr. Ryan, when approached by the president's staff, disclosed certain facts, which now have been brought out in the press," Warner said. He said the nominee "was up front, and in an honest way he gave all that information to the FBI."

Warner said Ryan made a mistake in trying drugs, but his error should be placed in the context of the Vietnam War generation.

"No matter how serious the mistake was, it seems to me that that generation was subjected to a most unusual period of history," Warner said. Each person should be judged individually, Warner said, adding that Ryan was never tempted to use drugs after "that limited experience."

The White House also defended Ryan, with spokesman Marlin Fitzwater saying, "We knew about it beforehand; we felt it was not relevant."

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., had said last Friday, "Mr. Ryan clearly lacks the necessary professional qualifications for what is the single most complex and important financial job in our country today. Hundreds of billions of dollars are at stake."

Poindexter awaits verdict

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jurors began deliberating the fate of John Poindexter on Monday after the judge directed them to focus only on his guilt or innocence and ignore the "underlying political controversy" of the Iran-Contra affair.

In nearly an hour of instructions, U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene also said the jury should not "draw any inference of guilt" from Poindexter's decision not to take the witness stand.

Consider "specific charges rather than broad policy disputes" between the Reagan administration and the Democrat-controlled Congress, Greene told the jury of eight women and four men.

The jurors selected as their foreman Wayne M. Mitchell, a 25-year-old customer service agent for a company that handles medical insurance claims. He has two years of college education, including courses in paralegal studies.

The jurors sent out a note asking for the exhibits from the trial, which numbered between 50 and 100.

After about four hours of deliberations, the jury adjourned for the night and would resume on Tuesday.

Poindexter, who was Reagan's national security adviser, is charged with conspiracy, two counts of obstructing Congress and two counts of making false statements.

He is accused of concealing aide Oliver North's secret military assistance to the Contras and U.S. knowledge of a November 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran.

The jurors, the judge cautioned, should ignore the question of whether the president's approach to Iran "was wise or unwise policy" and whether his effort to help the Contras was "the best policy for the United States."

North now plying bullet-proof wares

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North and Joseph Fernandez, comrades-in-arms in the Iran-Contra affair, are back in business again. They're manufacturing and selling body armor — commonly known as bullet-proof vests — that North says he wears himself.

"I rely every day on the security of a GTI vest," says a blurb on the company's brochure, signed by Oliver L. North, chairman. "The comfort is unequalled, and most importantly, it provides the ultimate in body armor."

The pair, fired from their government jobs, are the sole proprietors of Guardian Technologies International. "There is no other partner," said Fernandez. "It's our idea, our money and our effort. Ollie North is the chairman and I'm the president of the company."

North, a former Marine lieutenant colonel, was convicted last year of three felony counts growing out of his role as a White House aide helping the Nicaraguan Contras. Fernandez, once CIA station chief in Costa Rica, had been charged with obstructing inquiries into the Iran-Contra affair by the CIA inspector general and the Tower Commission, but the indictment was dismissed after Attorney General Dick Thornburgh refused to release classified information.

The eight-page brochure shows vests worn under shirts, over shirts, as safari jackets and rain coats and the outfits worn by swat teams. One of the models was North's body guard during his trial last year and on his speechmaking trips around the country.

Fuel spill threatens Pittsburgh's water supply

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh braced Monday for a long-term water crisis as a slow-moving fuel spill snaked down the Allegheny River, threatening supplies to as many as 1 million people.

"I think it's very possible the worst of this is yet to come," said the city's public safety director, Glenn Cannon. "There's no end to it."

A hospital served meals on paper plates, supermarkets sold out of bottled water, schools closed and a steel plant trucked in water to flush its toilets.

A landslide late Friday severed an underground 10-inch-wide pipeline near Freeport, 35 miles north of Pittsburgh. The pipe spilled between 75,000 and 300,000 gallons of gasoline, diesel fuel and kerosene into the river.

Like tumbling dominoes, water companies along the Allegheny were forced to close the intakes of their water treatment plants one by one as the 20-mile-long spill oozed toward Pittsburgh, reaching the city early Monday evening. Some were able to reopen Monday as the spill became more diluted and the water could be treated with filters.

The Pittsburgh Water Department, which serves 450,000 people, still was drawing water from the river and boosting its reservoirs Monday afternoon.

If the spill "should move suddenly, we'll have to shut the plant," said Mayor Sophie Masloff.

Up to 20,000 residents served by the Harrison Township Water Authority have been without water since Saturday and depended on National Guard portable water tanks set up to provide drinking and cooking water.

Supreme Court to have last word on suit awards

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Monday it will decide whether skyrocketing punitive-damage awards in personal-injury and other cases can go so high they become unconstitutional.

In a case of enormous importance to American business and consumers, the court agreed to hear arguments in an Alabama insurance-fraud case that yielded a jury award of over $1 million.

The court must decide whether punitive damages aimed at punishing wrongdoers and deterring similar misconduct may be so large in some cases that they are fundamentally unfair. A ruling is expected sometime in 1991.

The court last year ruled that huge awards in civil lawsuits, often millions of dollars, do not violate the Constitution's ban on excessive fines. But the justices left open the possibility that such awards may be so disproportionate to the actual harm suffered that they violate due-process rights.

The Constitution says states may not deprive anyone of property without due process of law. Those seeking to limit awards say due process prohibits unlimited discretion by judges and juries.

Business leaders for years have clashed with lawyers and consumer groups over the legitimacy of huge judgments in civil cases.

Those who oppose the big-money awards say they squelch American competitiveness and development of new products, particularly new forms of medical treatment, by discouraging risk-taking.

They say juries capriciously penalize the wealthy to help those who have suffered serious injuries, particularly if the wrongdoer is a giant corporation.

On the other side, consumer activists and trial lawyers say punitive damages are a powerful deterrent to corporate greed that can threaten public safety and well-being. They say smaller compensatory awards may be viewed by larger corporations as an acceptable cost of doing business.

Recent studies show the size of punitive damages has climbed dramatically in recent years.

Some state legislatures, reacting to soaring insurance rates, have put caps on how much money can be recovered in personal-injury cases. Those laws are not at issue directly in the case acted on Monday.

The justices will hear an appeal by Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., found by a jury to have been responsible for fraud by one of its agents, Lemmie Ruffin. The company denied it had sanctioned Ruffin's conduct.

Lower court records said employees of Roosevelt City, Ala., paid health insurance premiums to Ruffin, which he pocketed.

Cleopatra Haslip, a city worker who had been paying premiums, learned her insurance had lapsed after she incurred $2,500 in hospital and medical bills in 1982.

The hospital demanded $600 before agreeing to discharge her, and her doctor eventually turned her case over to a collection agency. Her credit also suffered from her inability to pay the bills.

Mrs. Haslip and other members of the insurance plan sued Pacific Mutual and Ruffin. A jury in 1987 awarded her $1,040,000. Three other Roosevelt City employees were awarded a total of $38,000.

The Alabama Supreme Court upheld the awards last year, saying, "Jury verdicts are presumed correct, and that presumption is strengthened when the presiding judge refuses to grant a new trial.",

Pacific Mutual said its constitutional rights were violated because the jury was allowed to award damages "as a matter of moral discretion without adequate standards as to the amount necessary to punish and deter."

'Courting' society hurts health care

It should be obvious that doctors shouldn't have to compromise their medical judgment by concerns about being sued. But some specialists are now saying that not all Americans may be getting the best care, for that very reason.

New clot-dissolving medicines can stop a heart attack if given promptly. But a relatively rare side effect — a stroke — and the possibility of being sued have caused many doctors to shy away from using the drugs, according to Dr. Robert Califf of Duke University. He raised the issue at a recent meeting of the American College of Cardiology and some of his colleagues said they agreed with his view.

Specialists said that the new drugs clearly save lives, when all goes well. In some studies, the treatment has cut the heart-attack death rate in half. Strokes occur in one out of every 200 or 300 people who receive the drugs. About 25 percent of heart-attack victims are considered good candidates for the drugs; about 5 percent actually receive the treatment.

Califf said doctors have told him they are reluctant to offer the drugs because they fear lawsuits.

This is what can happen when a society goes lawsuit-happy. Legitimate life-saving treatment goes unused while patients die needlessly. The world isn't perfect. Doctors aren't infallible. Medicine will never be risk-free, but too many lawyers and plaintiffs behave as though they believe it already is.

When a doctor applies his or her skill honestly, without making foolish errors, how can any reasonable person expect more? People die not because of some plot or malicious neglect on the part of doctors but because patients and illnesses are different. They don't always respond the same way to the treatment.

Doctors can make mistakes and errors can occur in medications, treatment or care. In those instances, insurance settlements or lawsuits may be appropriate. But every bad outcome doesn't meant that a doctor has erred.

Obviously, doctors should treat patients in the best, most effective manner available. If that isn't being done, a variety of people, including doctors, lawyers and litigious patients, should share the blame.

Sandinistas find way around embargo

WASHINGTON — The outgoing Sandinista government in Nicaragua has blamed a U.S. trade embargo, in part, for Nicaragua's poverty. But the Sandinistas flaunted that trade embargo for five years by using front companies in Panama and witting or unwitting trading partners in the United States.

Anderson

The result was that American goods were always available in Nicaragua, despite the embargo.

In a document classified higher than "Top Secret," the Central Intelligence Agency has compiled a list of more than a dozen Sandinista front companies operating in Panama. U.S. goods were sold to those companies and then shipped to Panama. The CIA report does not make clear whether the American companies knew they were dealing with the Sandinistas.

The Reagan administration imposed the trade embargo in 1985 in an attempt to bring the Sandinista government to its knees. President Bush lifted the embargo on March 13 after Nicaraguans voted the Sandinistas out of power.

The embargo did damage the Nicaraguan economy, but the Sandinistas did more damage by their own bungling. In 1984, the year before the embargo, only 17 percent of Nicaragua's foreign commerce was with the United States. The Sandinistas achieved quintuple-digit inflation — 36,000 percent in 1988 — primarily through their own mismanagement.

The embargo added to that hyper-inflation, but was never successful in keeping all U.S. goods off the shelves in Nicaragua or keeping Nicaraguan goods off the shelves in America.

Here's a typical loophole: The United States is the largest market in the Western Hemisphere for shrimp and lobster, one of Nicaragua's primary exports. When the Sandinistas could no longer sell directly to the United States, they sold monthly lobster licenses for $15,000 and shrimp licenses for $8,000 to let Hondurans fish in Nicaraguan waters. One Honduran lawyer representing boat owners paid $7 million in 1987 for licenses.

Honduran shellfish exports to the United States more than tripled during the embargo.

The front companies in Panama were another way around the embargo. The CIA list of 19 includes some rather common company names, and there may be more than one company doing business under that name in Panama. The report does not include corporate officers or other identifying information to distinguish the companies from others of the same name.

According to the CIA, two Panamanian companies — Blue Marlin Shipping and Pesca del Pacifico — were involved in selling Nicaraguan seafood to the United States.

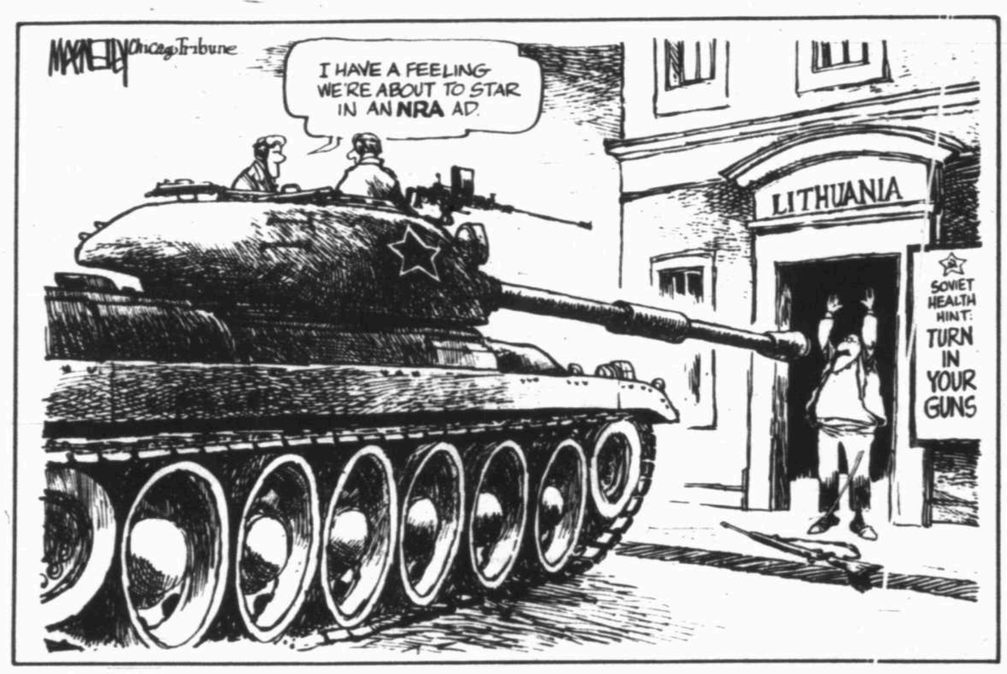

Five Panamanian companies did both import and export business with the United States — J&M Trading Corp., Lempa, IMEPSA, Moderna Internacional and Midland Corp. Three of the front companies concentrated on imports — Empresas, Consorcio Mercantile and Suplidora de Negocios.

Several Sandinista front companies in Panama specialized in the Sandinistas particular shopping needs. For example, the CIA report says that Servicios y Asesura Aeronauticas imported aircraft parts, and two companies — CIMEXPA and UNICASA — imported military supplies.

One Panamanian company, MEDCOM, imported computers, according to the report, and Comveinsa imported transportation parts.

One of the most interesting names on the list was Alfa Comercial, specializing in building supplies. In 1985 we reported that this company was the Sandinista government's purchasing agent and that President Daniel Ortega was personally enriched by the business it did.

Lithuania situation poses challenge

Lithuania's declaration of independence and its refusal to submit to Soviet intimidation poses a serious challenge both to Mikhail Gorbachev and George Bush, committed as they are to improving East-West relations and reducing armaments in a changing Europe. How they act in the days ahead could have important effects on bilateral relations and, of course, on the future of Lithuania itself.

Gorbachev's professed devotion to democracy is being called into question as never before, notwithstanding his assurance to visiting Americans that the government has renounced "Cold War methods and a reliance on force ..." and supports the "right of peoples to choose and to equal security." As he said that, Soviet armored units were rumbling through the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius as troops occupied public buildings, and began rounding up young Lithuanians who had refused to report back to their posts in the Soviet army, which they now regarded as a foreign army. Witnesses said some of the young men were beaten.

Such roughhouse tactics apparently don't fall within the Soviet president's definition of force. Perhaps only tanks firing at unarmed civilians qualifies as "Cold War methods." As the confrontation between Gorbachev and Lithuanian leaders hardens, one can't be sure that that won't happen: Soviet authorities have orchestrated anti-independence demonstrations in Vilnius by ethnic Russians, a time-tested means of stirring up violent clashes that might provide the pretext for stronger measures.

For Bush, the problem is no less challenging. Having finally embraced Gorbachev and his "new thinking," the president is trying, so far with some success, to support Lithuanian self-determination while not appearing to meddle in Soviet internal affairs, a tightrope act complicated by the facts that no U.S. administration has ever recognized Soviet sovereignty in Lithuania. What will Bush say or do if Gorbachev uses military force to suppress the autonomy he has vaguely supported in the past?

So far, Bush has not had to face that dilemma, and if cool heads prevail in Moscow and Vilnius, he may not have to. What's deeply troubling, however, is that neither Gorbachev nor Lithuanian leaders have left much room for flexibility. Both could have moderated their positions; instead both have adopted policies from which to back down would entail a serious loss of face, if not worse. By defying Moscow in absolute terms, Lithuanians may provoke it into overreaction. But by doing that, Gorbachev would imperil the crumbling Soviet empire even more than he would have done by offering its minority peoples the local autonomy that, at the very least, they deserve. Anything Bush can do to remind Gorbachev of that fact might help.

CHARLEY REESE

Soviets' use of WWII spies began Cold War

In the great anti-anti-communist campaign that followed the folly of Sen. Joe McCarthy, a frequent taunt used by the left was that anti-communists see a communist under every bed.

Reese

Actually there were, at least, under the beds in Washington during the war and afterwards. This comes, not from American rightwingers, but from the autobiography of a senior British intelligence agent, "Spycatcher," by Peter Wright (published in 1987).

Wright reveals that the Soviet Union, even as America was fighting as its ally against Nazi Germany, had over 800 agents in the U.S. Only a small number — the Rosenbergs and few others — were ever identified.

The information came from what the British called the Venona project. During the war, the U.S. intercepted and recorded coded messages going back and forth between the U.S. and Moscow.

These codes, using the one pad system, are usually impossible to break. Basically, the agent has a pad and the contact has a pad. Coded numbers are sent which are decoded using one page of the pad. Then that page is destroyed and never used again. As an aside, if you are a shortwave radio buff like me, you can today hear number codes being broadcast on shortwave frequencies, presumably to spies and other agents.

Under the pressure of the war, however, the Soviets began to use duplicates — the same pages of the same pads, for example, might be used by diplomatic channels and the KGB or by a trade channel and the GRU (Soviet military intelligence).

Meredith Gardner, a brilliant American cryptoanalyst, working with part of a pad recovered from a Finnish battlefield, attempted after the war to decipher some of the stored messages. This later became a massive effort by both the Americans and the British, and the British referred to it as the Venona traffic.

It really was, as Wright says, the beginning of the Cold War because it gave America and Britain proof positive that the Soviets were totally treacherous, running these spies against its wartime allies.

Fourteen of the 800-plus American traitors were in or close to the Office of Strategic Services, the forerunner of the CIA. These have never been identified. Five had access to the White House. One chain of agents were in the atomic bomb project and another chain of agents had access to almost every document which passed between Britain and the U.S., including telegrams sent by Winston Churchill to Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman.

It was this discovery of wartime treachery and treason which led to the first, legitimate probe of communists in the American government.

You would certainly think from the current crop of Orwellian docudramas and the rewriting of history, that it all began with McCarthy, that there were no communists or Soviet agents, and that it was all a witch hunt that did nothing but harm innocent people who were just liberals.

The big revelations had already been made before McCarthy took up the issue. The people caught were not innocent liberals but active agents for the Soviet Union betraying their own country.

Whittaker Chambers, a former communist, who first identified numerous Soviet agents, refused to have anything to do with McCarthy. Chambers told his close friend, Bill Buckley, that while McCarthy's intentions were good, that while there were agents still un-found, that McCarthy's emotional approach would backfire and that the communists would outmaneuver him.

This proved true. McCarthy was discredited and used to discredit the whole idea of anti-communism. Communism used McCarthyism to make itself immune from serious investigation.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, April 3, the 93rd day of 1990. There are 272 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 3, 1860, the legendary Pony Express began service between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento, Calif. The service lasted only 1½ years before giving way to the transcontinental telegraph.

On this date:

In 1776, George Washington received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Harvard College.

In 1783, Washington Irving, author of "Rip Van Winkle" and "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," was born in New York City.

In 1865, Union forces occupied the Confederate capital of Richmond, Va., during the Civil War.

In 1882, the notorious outlaw Jesse James was shot to death in St. Joseph, Mo., by Robert Ford, a member of his own gang.

In 1936, Bruno Hauptmann was electrocuted in Trenton, N.J., for the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh infant.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Gorbachev's power depends on reputation

WASHINGTON — The long night of repression is falling on Vilnius. American diplomats have been ejected and Western newsmen are being packed on trains to Moscow. Any impressments, arrests and beatings will take place in the dark.

Safire

If Mikhail Gorbachev is determined to use his new power to teach the freedom-seeking Lithuanians the meaning of obedience to central authority, the rest of the world cannot stop him. But we can make known the consequences of crackdown, and to the extent his power at home is dependent on his reputation abroad, we might deter his action.

As if in slow motion, we are playing out one of the great moral moments in modern history. Few of us remember Haile Selassie pleading Ethiopia's case against Mussolini's aggression, or the betrayed expression on Czech faces at Munich, or the impassive face of Andrei Gromyko as his lies about Cuban missiles were exploded by pictures at the U.N.

We are not at the brink of war; we are at the moment of decision about right and wrong done among nations. How we conduct ourselves under such pressure will be measured by historians to define our integrity as individuals and our values as nations.

No moral choice is black and white; in arguing now what is the right course for the United States, let's first do away with strawmen of wimps and warmongers. It is not the coldly pragmatic geopoliticians who want to sell out the Lithuanian patriots versus the hotly idealistic jingoes who want to dispatch ambassadors and encourage violence.

George Bush and those around him who choose to put the salvation of Gorbachev ahead of the immediate freedom of the Baltic peoples are not to be scorned as born appeasers.

These well-intentioned leaders have concluded that the long-range best interests of the United States and of disarmament lie with the continuation of the Gorbachev regime — and that as it gains strength he will ultimately free the captive nations. We must not challenge his pride, goes this argument, because it might cause his downfall and the emergence of the old crowd.

Those of us on both right and left who want to put Gorbachev to the test on this issue of independence for the nations seized by Stalin and Hitler are not eager for a return of the era of superpower confrontation.

We should prevail on our president to stop sending inconsistent signals, one day having a spokesman wag a finger, the next sending a letter to Moscow pretending both sides bear equal responsibility for violence.

For 50 years, we have stood for Baltic independence; now that it looms, Bush should state publicly that we do not waver, that we will never "understand" a war on a nonviolent movement, and that the rumble of tanks through Vilnius is a provocation to violence and a threat to international peace.

Also, Congress should drop its two-facedness. With one face, congressional leaders get briefed on secret diplomacy and come out to say the president knows best; with another, Sen. Ted Kennedy is dispatched to Moscow and makes fools of us all: he announces that Gorbachev promises no use of force "unless to suppress violence," a new qualification on the previous no-force pledge that Lithuanians properly saw as fresh intimidation.

Third, our diplomats should not be so easily hornswoggled. Pressing for a referendum delegitimizes the acts of a Lithuanian government that needs support of its legitimacy, and drives a wedge between Baltic states: Latvia has been heavily Russified and could thus be occupied out of independence.

Finally, let's hear from the other voices of conscience. Maggie Thatcher is with Neville Chamberlain on this, and Helmut Kohl is expectedly silent, but where is Lech Walesa and Vaclav Havel? What happened to the pope? And why do the world media react so meekly to being shut out of the end of glasnost?

Japan's trade plan encourages Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — American negotiators reported significant progress Monday following a day of talks with Japan aimed at reducing trade frictions between the two economic superpowers.

The Japanese came to the bargaining table with new suggestions aimed at meeting American demands that they remove broad barriers erected to prevent the sale of American products and services in Japan, officials said.

"It is clear that we have made considerable progress," said a senior administration official who briefed reporters late Monday on condition of anonymity. "But we are not finished."

The talks were to continue on Tuesday with both sides working to have an interim report ready, perhaps as early as Wednesday.

Even before the talks resumed, President Bush told reporters that he was optimistic about the outcome, based on an early morning telephone call he received Monday from Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu.

"I had a very fruitful conversation with the prime minister of Japan this morning and we will see. But I must say I am encouraged by recent progress," Bush told reporters in Atlanta.

The Bush administration last July launched the talks, known as the Structural Impediments Initiative, aimed at addressing broad barriers that Japan has erected to prevent the sale of American products and services in Japan.

George Bush

The discussions are intended to address the economic shortcomings, in the United States as well as Japan, that are seen as primary reasons for America's huge $49 billion trade deficit with the Japanese, almost half of last year's total deficit.

The administration has argued that the proposed scrapping of exclusionary business practices and opening of Japan to more foreign competition would not only benefit Americans by lowering the trade deficit but would also benefit the Japanese, who pay some of the highest prices in the world for consumer goods.

NATION IN BRIEF

Conoco settles for $23 million

PONCA CITY, Okla. (AP) — Conoco Inc. on Monday proposed a $23 million settlement that would involve buying nearly 400 houses where residents say the groundwater was tainted with hydrocarbons.

Conoco lawyer Mark Zehler said he believed the agreement is one of the largest relocation settlements ever in the country.

"Conoco agreed to the settlement because it is the right thing to do — for these residents, for Ponca City and for Conoco," said the oil refinery's manager, Dennis Parker.

The proposal, which must be approved by a federal judge in Oklahoma City, calls for Conoco to buy almost 400 houses and residential lots and to establish a $5 million settlement fund.

Homeowners in southwest Ponca City had complained since 1987 that groundwater laced with hydrocarbons seeped into their basements and threatened their health.

Abuse reports up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reports of child abuse and neglect rose 9 percent last year, the largest increase since 1985, according to a survey released Monday by the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse.

The survey found that in 1989 a total of 2.4 million reports of child abuse and neglect were recorded by state child welfare agencies, including at least 1,237 child abuse-abuse related deaths.

Ann Cohn, executive director of the abuse prevention committee, said the growing problem of drug and alcohol abuse figures prominently the increase, though persistence of social problems such as poverty and homelessness and lack of prevention services also are to blame.

"The situation is more than troubling," she said. "We're looking at a crisis."

Ban defended

WASHINGTON (AP) — Assistant Secretary for Health Dr. James O. Mason defended the Bush administration ban on fetal tissue research Monday, saying the research would encourage some women to have abortions in an effort to contribute to scientific advancement.

Mason said that for a woman agonizing over whether to have an abortion, the research provides "additional rationalization" of helping medical science and "cannot help but tilt some already vulnerable women toward a decision to have an abortion."

The ban prohibits federal funding to research the implantation of fetal cells into humans.

Driver improving

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A bus driver wounded in a sniper attack on a bus operated on a Greyhound route was improving Monday as Greyhound and striking drivers sparred over the incident's effect on stalled contract talks.

On Monday, union president Edward Strait accused Greyhound of using the violence as a pretense for calling off the talks and suggested the company could stop the attacks by negotiating with the union.

Greyhound drivers have been on strike for the past month.

Atwater in hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Party chairman Lee Atwater entered a New York hospital Monday for intense radiation treatment of a type of brain tumor that experts say is persistent and dangerous.

The tumor was diagnosed last month after Atwater collapsed during a speech.

The treatment is under the direction of Dr. Paul L. Kornblith, chairman of neurological surgery at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine.

Another East German out following new allegations

EAST BERLIN (AP) — The man once considered the likely premier of East Germany's first democracy stepped down as leader of the Social Democrats on Monday amid allegations he had ties to the hated secret police.

Ibrahim Boehme became the second major political figure in East Germany to quit because of reputed involvement with the security apparatus of the former Stalinist regime.

Thousands of people demonstrated in Dresden and Magdeburg on Monday to protest the purported connections between new lawmakers and the former secret police and to demand a full investigation of Parliament, the government news service ADN reported.

Fifteen prominent East German social leaders and intellectuals, including writer Christa Wolf, issued a statement also demanding a probe.

Boehme, who twice lost jobs because he spoke out against the former Communist government, on Friday inspected the files kept on him by the feared network known as the Stasi. He fainted and was hospitalized after seeing the files, the party said.

Boehme decided to resign after realizing that clearing his name will require "lengthy investigations" and make it more difficult to form East Germany's first democratic government, said August Kamilli, a high-ranking Social Democrat.

Boehme, 46, also cited health problems, including heart troubles and an inner ear infection, said Markus Meckel, the party's deputy chairman and Boehme's likely successor.

The party denied a television report that Boehme tried to kill himself after reading the Stasi files. He was released from the hospital after an examination and was reported staying with friends. He has not been seen in public since he waved to reporters after leaving Stasi headquarters Friday.

East Germany has been thrown into a political crisis by charges that many of the newly elected members of the 400-seat Parliament had links to the Stasi.

Lothar de Maiziere, leader of the Christian Democrat-led coalition that won the most Parliament seats March 18, has been accused of being a Stasi informant. He denied the allegations.

The charges have overshadowed efforts by de Maiziere's group to forge a governing coalition with the Social Democrats and clear the way for reunification with West Germany.

Meckel said the Stasi network was so vast that "only with international help can the country be free of the Stasi's influence."

Last week, Boehme examined the voluminous dossiers of the Stasi, which are under control of a government-appointed group working to disband the network.

Just before the March 18 election, politician Wolfgang Schnur admitted former ties to the secret police and resigned as head of Democratic Awakening, part of the alliance that won the balloting.

De Maiziere is likely to be East Germany's new premier and is a close ally of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Manfred Stolpe, administrator of East Berlin's Lutheran Church, last week examined secret police files kept on de Maiziere and reported he saw nothing incriminating.

Richard Schroeder, head of the Social Democrats' parliamentary delegation, recommended that every new lawmaker be required to fill out a questionnaire detailing their contact with the Stasi.

Less than 100 still loose in prison

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — Nearly 100 rioting inmates ran loose Monday in devastated Strangeways Prison, but guards regained control of much of the prison and officials were in contact with inmates still inside, authorities said.

Some prisoners hung up a flag saying "No Dead," but the government said deaths could not be ruled out in one of Britain's worst prison riots.

Authorities said 37 inmates and 12 prison guards had been injured since riots began Sunday at Strangeways, one of the most crowded jails in Britain. News media reported unconfirmed accounts of up to 12 deaths.

Prison staff regained control of four cell blocks and the kitchen Monday after scores of inmates surrendered. Rioters still held five blocks, said the Home Office, which is in charge of prisons.

The Home Office said 99 prisoners were still loose, but Ivor Serle, chairman of the Strangeways Prison Officers' Association, put the number at 80 to 90 after more men surrendered in the evening.

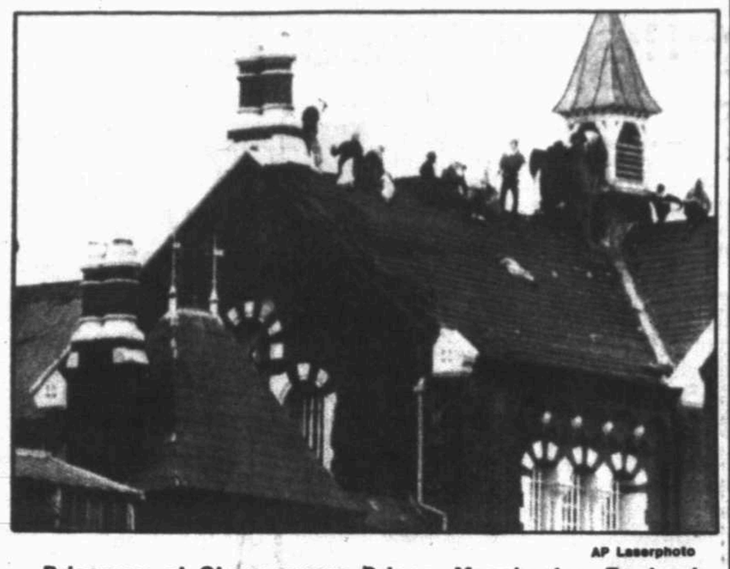

"They're sneaking out because they're frightened of each other," he said.

Serle said he was in three wings of the prison and saw no bodies.

About a dozen masked inmates remained on the steep roofs in the night cold, waving and shouting.

Home Secretary David Waddington said some surrendering prisoners claimed a number of inmates were dead, but no bodies were found.

"But the possibility that fatalities have occurred cannot be ruled out," he added.

INTRODUCING ...

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Brent Wetendorf, a senior at Midland High, spends his weekends in the wild blue yonder, as a parachute "drop pilot" for Westex SkySports in Stanton.

MHS senior sky-high about how he spends his weekends

By George Wolf
Staff Writer

As a young boy, Brent Wetendorf — like most children his age — would plaster his face against the window at the airport terminal gazing with wonderment at the planes as they zoomed into the sky.

Even then, he knew he wanted to fly.

Now a 17-year-old senior at Midland High School, Brent says he doesn't waste his time daydreaming about cars and girls — well, maybe girls. Instead his thoughts are filled with flying.

He's already seen the movie "Top Gun" so many times that he has all the scenes memorized. Now, all he needs to do is live the movie, which he is well on his way to doing.

Brent took his first solo flight on his 16th birthday and he got his pilot's license in the fall of 1989.

"Flying is pure serenity," Brent said. "I love it. You're in control. You look out at the clouds and the sun and it's peaceful. After all the stress during the week I look forward to the weekend when I can fly. It's the best kind of therapy."

Not only does Brent fly on weekends, he is employed as a pilot. Every Saturday and Sunday, weather permitting, Brent takes skydivers up in groups of four or five jumpers as part of his duties for Westex SkySports in Stanton.

"I never thought I'd get a job flying until I was thirty-something, so I was really excited about it," Brent said.

He is not the only one excited about it. His boss, Brent Berry, co-owner of Westex SkySports, thinks his young pilot is outstanding.

"We've had a lot of pilots with more experience than Brent, but he is exceptional," Berry said. "He is an excellent jump pilot. He's a natural. He listens to what you say, takes care of the plane and flies the patterns. It's amazing to see so young a pilot be so proficient."

Unfortunately for Brent, he does not have a commercial license, therefore he cannot be paid for his duties.

"I don't care about the money, though, as long as I get to fly. Flying means that much to me," Brent said.

While flying most certainly dominates the spirit of this teen-ager, he does have other interests. He is the editor of the MHS newspaper, a staff photographer for the yearbook, a member of the tennis team, vice president of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and president of the French Club.

His future holds a stop at Texas A&M where he plans to major in either, not surprisingly, aerospace engineering or have a double major in business management and journalism. He is aiming for a life as a commercial pilot.

"I'll probably go the military route so that I can get some jet training and that way I'll let the taxpayers pay for it," Brent said.

Still, passengers are taken by surprise by a teen-aged face in the cockpit.

One day a group of jumpers who had never met Brent were preparing to get airborne. As Brent recalls, "I would hear them asking my boss, 'How old is this guy? ... He's a senior ... in high school!?' It took me awhile to gain their confidence."

But not too long.

Andrews' Jim Gray, a skydiver with about 250 jumps under his belt, didn't mince words when describing the young flyer.

"Skydivers are really picky about their pilots," Gray said, "and he's the best."

Nuclear plant workers prepare for reaction

■ The Nuclear Regulatory Commission will be standing by until Comanche Peak is at full operation.

GLEN ROSE (AP) — Fifteen years after the start of construction and 10 years behind schedule, workers prepared Monday to begin the first sustained nuclear reaction at the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant.

But an advocacy group hoping to block the plant's start-up said it will ask the U.S. Supreme Court to reopen licensing hearings to allow a full investigation of Comanche Peak.

TU Electric received a license Feb. 9 which allows the utility to test one of its two reactors at up to 5 percent of power.

There have been no problems with any of the pre-operational tests, a plant spokesman said, although the utility on March 12 declared an "unusual event," the lowest form of an emergency, when an electrical defect triggered an injection of cooling water into the reactor's core.

"We're working toward starting it up somewhere late this evening or early tomorrow morning," Mark Manroe said Monday. "Of course, once again that's with the proviso that if we run into something that we need to deal with, we'll deal with it.

"We're not going to rush into anything."

The plant will remain under the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's close supervision, said Joe Gilliland, a spokesman for the NRC.

"We've got four or five people on site now, as we've had all along," Gilliland said. "We're going to be monitoring their actions as they proceed toward their chain reaction."

NRC inspectors will begin an around-the-clock vigil at the plant once the chain reaction actually starts, Gilliland said.

"Even after we start the sustained nuclear reaction it'll be several months before the plant will be at full operation," Manroe said. "We're going to inch up gradually."

Efforts to block the nuclear reaction were set back Friday when Supreme Court justice Byron R. White denied the request by Citizens for Fair Utility Regulation to delay the start of nuclear reaction.

The group contends the plant is unsafe.

"I'm terribly disappointed in Justice White's decision," said Betty Brink, after hearing the ruling. Ms. Brink is a board member of Citizens for Fair Utility Regulation, which is pressing for a full Supreme Court review on the plant's licensing.

TU Electric officials predict that the first of the facility's two units will reach full power later this year.

Construction of Comanche Peak, which is located about 40 miles south of Fort Worth, began in 1975. Original estimates put the total cost at $779 million. The facility's price is now $9.1 billion.

TU Electric has asked the Public Utility Commission for a $442 million, 10.5 percent rate increase to pay for the cost of building Unit 1.

The only other nuclear power plant in the state is the South Texas Project near Bay City, which has been operating since March 1988. The plant is managed by Houston Lighting & Power and supplies electricity to Houston, Austin, San Antonio and Corpus Christi.

TU Electric serves 5 million customers in 85 other counties in Texas, including the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Governor's race source of ridicule for worldwide media

■ Texas' gubernatorial race is topic of more conversations than the events in Eastern Europe.

By Alan Bernstein
Hearst News Service

Across the nation and in Europe, the Texas governor's race has become a source of ridicule, laughter and indigestion.

The television show "Saturday Night Live" lampooned Republican Clayton Williams' cowboy get-up and his Democratic foes' tough talk on the death penalty.

Conservative William Bennett, the hardline White House drug policy coordinator, joked after returning to Washington from Austin that he was soft on capital punishment compared to Texans.

The British magazine The Economist archly noted that Jim Mattox's political weakness seems to be an absence of Wild West styling, and stateside columnist Edwin Yoder, a Pulitzer Prize winner, observed that the candidates spent $23 million "advertising Mickey Mouse sadism" to the Lone Star electorate.

The reason for the retching and rollicking is that the race has set new standards for sleaze and superficiality, according to Geoffrey Garin, president of Garin-Hart Strategic Research Group, a Washington-based Democratic consulting firm.

"The election in Texas has become a caricature and a symbol for everything that is wrong with American politics today," Garin said.

"On the one hand you have an enormous amount of negative campaigning (by Democrats), and I think this comes across as a race that sets new highs or new lows in attacks, depending on your perspective," he continued. "On the other side of it, you have a Republican candidate who is colorful but simplistic in his approach, who's really shown what you can do in politics when you have enough money."

Fred Meyer, chairman of the Texas Republican Party, agrees the race has generated scoffing by the national media, but he differs with Garin on the reasons for it.

The media and East Coast opinion makers are jealous that Texas has provided more than its share of presidents and other federal power brokers, Meyer said.

But Garin, Meyer and other consultants, party officials and pundits agree on several factors contributing to the race's high profile and low ratings:

For one thing, this year's gubernatorial contests in the heavily populated states of Texas, Florida and California are testing Republicans' claims of growing strength

Absentee voting light on first day

By Brenda Masengill
Staff Writer

Voter turnout on the first day of absentee balloting in the April 10 Democratic and Republican runoff elections was generally light, Midland County Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert said Monday.

However, residents still have until 5 p.m. Friday to get to the absentee poll at 709 W. Washington, said Ms. Calvert. The election office opens at 8 a.m.

Absentee voting proved to be popular during the March 13 primary when 29 percent of the eligible Midland County Republicans and 19 percent of the Democrats voted absentee, said Ms. Calvert.

New rules regarding absentee voting took effect in September 1989. Prior to that, voters had to have a reason, such as being out of town, in order to qualify for an absentee ballot. Now, to vote an absentee ballot in person, no excuse is needed, said Ms. Calvert. However, she added, there are still restrictions to vote absentee by mail.

In the meantime, voting at polls throughout Midland will get under way April 10 at 7 a.m. Balloting will continue until 7 p.m.

Democrats Ann W. Richards and Jim Mattox likely will draw the greatest voter interest in

Lawmakers return for second session on finance issue

■ Lawmakers will be considering a lottery and an increase in sales and other taxes as a solution to the school finance crisis.

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Starting a new special session on school finance woes Monday, lawmakers were contemplating a Chinese menu of budget cuts, taxes and other measures with the apparent intention of getting down to business.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said fashioning a new finance system without relying on additional taxes will be "very, very difficult." Neither was Lewis optimistic that members would escape without diverting money from other state programs.

"But we're certainly going to try," he said.

Proposals under consideration include a lottery and increases in sales, franchise, excise, and severance taxes, said Rep. James Hury, D-Galveston and chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee.

Committee members today are scheduled to begin hearings on tax issues, while lottery-related matters should receive a hearing next week, he said.

The Supreme Court ruled this past October that the state's school finance system is unconstitutional and discriminatory against students in districts with poorer tax bases.

The court set a May 1 deadline for the Legislature to develop a solution.

The new session represents lawmakers' second stab at the problem and fourth special session of the current two-year budget cycle.

Action on the school finance issue during a session that ended this past Wednesday climaxed with House failure to endorse a $511 million program that had won the approval of the House Public Education Committee.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said senators "in the absense of a clear signal from the House" likely will approve with no changes the same $1.2 billion program they considered last session.

That legislation on Monday received an 11-3 endorsement from a select Senate committee that Parker co-chairs. It should come up for Senate floor debate today, he said.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo and Midland's representative in the state's upper chamber, said he voted against the bill in committee because it cost too much.

Should the Senate approve the bill, Parker said he plans to be "flexible" during negotiations with House representatives, provided the House is able to approve a bill.

Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice and chairman of the House Public Education Committee, said she will file that chamber's school finance measure in the next day or two.

The bill will be far different from the one turned down by the chamber last session, she said. It will

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale announced Monday it will give a special performance in the Eugene McDermott Concert Hall at the new Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center in Dallas.

"We intend that our performance will demonstrate the high performance level which exists in many of our orchestras serving smaller American cities in the 1990s and the commitment on the part of the citizens of those communities toward creating a cultural climate of significance," said Don Th. Jeager, music director and conductor of the MOSC.

"This is demonstrated so aptly in Midland and Odessa," Jaeger said. "What makes Midland and Odessa even more unique is the cooperation between the two cities in building the orchestra."

keep a first-year price tag in the $450 million range, she said, but its dollar allocation formula should be more similar to the Senate version.

Parker spoke with frustration at failing to receive adequate support from Gov. Bill Clements and other Republicans after including many requested efficiency measures in the Senate bill.

"As far as I'm concerned in conference, if I don't see some clear signals that the governor is trying to help us carry the load, I don't plan to defend" the measures, said Parker.

Among those are efficiency and accountability provisions freeing "exemplary" schools from regulation.

The governor has said he will veto any solution that calls for new taxes and has estimated that the state budget holds about $300 million that could be diverted to education.

He has promised to release a list of specific agency cuts to support his contention.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said more than $160 million earmarked during the last regular session for renovation of the state Capitol building may be in danger if lawmakers are in a budget-cutting mood.

Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont and a Ways and Means Committee member, predicted that the House ultimately will bow to Clements' wishes. "That will be the plan because the votes are not here to override" a Clements veto, he said.

But Rep. Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville and a member of the powerful House Appropriations Committee, predicted that the chamber "will quickly get a bill to the governor for a veto."

"That will get the monkey off our back," he said.

With an increase in prospects for a higher sales tax came new life for a proposed state lottery, an idea that Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, has fostered for the past six years.

Wilson said he already has filed legislation that would enable lawmakers to consider the lottery, which he estimated would bring in about $450 million yearly.

To tide the state's education system over until the game starts generating revenues, Wilson suggests a temporary one-half-cent sales tax increase.

Overseeing the new state game would be a commission with two members each appointed by the governor, lieutenant governor and House speaker.

Wilson said he would like a statutory restriction applying lottery-generated money solely to education needs, but Hury said he opposed that idea.

Park sues over roller coaster

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A Pennsylvania amusement park is going to great lengths, and heights, to prove it has the tallest wooden roller coaster in the country.

Dorney Park is trying to stop Six Flags Over Texas from claiming that honor and went to federal court to stop the boastful Texans.

"They wouldn't do it voluntarily," Dorney Park attorney Richard Stevens said Monday.

The suit, filed last week in in Philadelphia, seeks a preliminary injunction against Six Flags to stop advertisements claiming the Texas Giant coaster is highest — 143 feet, compared with 95 feet for Dorney's Hercules coaster.

Dorney Park's calculations: Hercules 157 feet, Texas Giant 137 feet.

"I can't believe these guys," said Bob Bennett, president and general manager of Six Flags. "It's ridiculous. If you talk to anybody in this business they measure a ride from the ground to the top of the lift."

Wrong, Stevens said. You measure the length of the drop, not the height of the lift.

"It doesn't make any difference how long it takes to go up, it matters how long it is coming down," Stevens said. "We built our roller coaster over a cliff."

While they wait for an impartial judge to be assigned, there is this diplomatic statement from Randy Geisler, president of the American Coaster Enthusiasts: "It all depends where you stand, literally. As enthusiasts, we're happy that both rides exist."

This dispute is not the height of folly, Dorney says. Six Flags' claim is "reckless, malicious libel," the suit says.

At stake, Dorney says, is valuable advertising clout, which is why the Pennsylvania park is asking for $50,000 in damages and asking for a new ad campaign from Six Flags to correct their alleged mistake.

"When you can say a park in Allentown, Pa., has attributes that are world class, we become very identifiable nationally," said Harris Weinstein, chairman of Dorney Park, which he said spent millions in advertising telling everyone Hercules is highest.

"There's a certain magnetism or certain fraternity of people who ride roller coasters, and if you can say you have the highest or the fastest, it's going to make a difference," said Richard Kinzel, president of Cedar Point Amusement Park in Sandusky, Ohio — home of the tallest roller coaster of any kind, the 201-foot XL-200.

The $6 million Hercules opened in May 1989. The $5.5 million Texas Giant opened last month in Arlington.

At issue is how to measure a coaster. "We start measuring at the bottom and go to the top," Stevens said.

Six Flags' Bennett says the parks don't compete for customers and shouldn't compete in court.

"It's never been done, never, never," he said.

Hercules' heroic plunge sends riders over a cliff and into a swooping turn over water, "one of the single most dramatic moments on any roller coaster anywhere," said Geisler.

VOTING: Deadline is Friday their race for the gubernatorial nomination. Other Democratic runoff races include state Treasurer, Supreme Court justice, and Court of Criminal Appeals judge.

Republicans face only two races on the ballot, including Commissioner of the General Land Office and Commissioner of Agriculture.

Winners of the April 10 runoff will advance to the November general election where either Ms. Richards or Mattox will vie with Republican oilman Clayton Williams of Midland.

Whether voting absentee this week or at the polls next week, Ms. Calvert said certain rules apply. If a voter participated in the March 13 primary election, he or she must stick with the same political party in the runoff election, according to Ms. Calvert. "It is a criminal offense to vote in the runoff of one party after having voted in the March primary of the other party," she said.

If a resident did not vote in the March 13 primary, he or she may vote in either the Democratic or Republican runoff.

There are no write-ins in a runoff election, Ms. Calvert said.

For more information regarding the runoff election, call Ms. Calvert's office at 688-1222.

in the Sunbelt. These states will gain extra congressional seats when the 1990 census is tabulated, and the new governors will be able to influence how the new congressional districts are drawn.

Also, Williams' cowboy clothes, informal manner and money make him a catchy personality that fits Texas stereotypes. A color photograph of Williams and his wife Modesta, wearing cowboy hats and standing in front of his jet, recently ran on the cover of USA Today.

Williams also fanned the publicity flames last week by jokingly comparing rape to bad weather, advising that "If it's inevitable, relax and enjoy it." The remark and his subsequent apology were reported nationwide.

The question of possible drug use by Ann Richards, considered a national political figure, and her personal attacks against former Gov. Mark White and Mattox were seen outside the state as tacky and cheap.

Mattox's one-upmanship with White over support of the death penalty shocked many political observers. Time magazine and other national publications have reproduced a scene from White's commercial showing him walking past larger-than-life images of inmates executed while he was governor.

"Watching these commercials, ... it is hard to believe that even Texans, tough as they like to be thought, are sadists who cannot distinguish between sternness in law enforcement and mere cruelty," said Yoder, the columnist.

Drug czar Bennett, after addressing the Texas Legislature, said, "I found myself one of the kinder, one of the more gentler speakers on this issue ... I made only one reference to the death penalty."

What people see in Texas now is a rougher, dirtier version of the brass-knuckles tactics used more than 40 years ago, said John C. White, a Washington consultant from Texas who once served as national chairman of the Democratic Party.

Political gossips in Washington are talking more about the Texas Democrats' personal attacks than about the political evolution in Eastern Europe, White said.

Inmates to address students

Staff Report

"I got hooked on drugs and alcohol as a young teen-ager, and the habit finally controlled my life. I eventually stole to support my habit, and burglary put me in prison for a five year sentence. The excitement and adventure of experimenting with drugs and booze is not worth the price I am paying today, and I would say to you, 'Stop now and don't sell your very soul for a temporary high or escape that will bring you and your family nothing but grief."

Those were the words of a 19-year-old Texas Department of Corrections (TDC) inmate who was addressing an assembly of high school students as part of the "Community Education Program."

The next local Community Education Program presentation will be at Scharbauer Elementary, 2115 Hereford Blvd., Thursday, at 7 p.m.

The Community Education Program (CEP) was developed in an effort to educate, warn, and inform the public, specifically teenagers, about the dangers and consequences involved in the illicit use of drugs.

A panel of three to four Texas Department of Corrections inmates (first offenders between the ages of 17 and 21) travels throughout the state delivering their message to young people in an effort to stem drug abuse and juvenile crime.

Evacuated residents allowed to return

BURNET (AP) — About 100 residents of two Burnet subdivisions returned to their homes Monday after being evacuated when a tanker-truck carrying an explosive chemical to Odessa crashed into a dry streambed.

"It went about as smoothly as it could," said Burnet County emergency management coordinator Ed Schaefer.

"The evacuation was a precautionary thing. Nobody was really in danger of getting a severe dose of that stuff. There was no danger of a bunch of people getting killed by an explosion," Schaefer said.

The residents, who were allowed to return home about 7:15 a.m., were evacuated after the truck, carrying some 6,200 gallons of the chemical vinyl acetate crashed about 5:30 p.m. Sunday.

The crash killed driver David Ferguson, 36, of Texas City, said the Department of Public Safety office at Lampassas.

The subdivisions border Texas Highway 29, about five miles west of Burnet. Both were downwind of the crash site and authorities feared the toxic fumes emitted from the tanker's cargo would drift to the homes.

Temporary shelters were set up and the residents were evacuated around 9:15 p.m., Schaefer said. A section of the highway near the crash was closed, he said.

Authorities said the investigation remained under investigation Monday.

The tanker had been hauling the chemical from a Union Carbide plant at Texas City to Odessa, Schaefer said.

A passing motorist, who pulled the driver from the truck and tried to resuscitate him, was treated at a local hospital after breathing chemical fumes from the wreck, Schaefer said.

A fire that consumed the truck's cab did not spread to the cargo, which is explosive, he said.

"A considerable amount of product was spilled," he said. "This was bad stuff. It had some pretty harmful toxic effects." He said vinyl acetate is used in the manufacture of plastics, paint and adhesives.

Emergency response teams were sent by Union Carbide and the trucking company and transferred the chemical to other trucks. The Texas Water Commission and Environmental Protection Agency dispatched teams to the scene, authorities said.

Schaefer said authorities were taking steps to avoid having any of the vinyl acetate contaminate nearby water supplies.

The crash occurred at the confluence of two creeks, Schaefer said. Although dry now, the creeks feed into Inks Lake, which empties into the Colorado River.

Police probing weekend shootings

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police Monday were still trying to unravel a bizarre chain of bloody weekend events that left four people dead and one — a boy playing Russian Roulette — hospitalized with irreversible brain damage.

So far, no arrests have been made in any of the violent incidents, said Doug Clarke, a spokesman for the Fort Worth Police Department.

It started at about 12:40 a.m. with a report that a 15-year-old boy had committed suicide by shooting himself in his far southwest Fort Worth home. His name was not released.

Forty-five minutes later, at 1:25 a.m., police rushed to a party where a group of teen-agers said a 16-year-old boy shot himself in the head with a .357 Magnum revolver while playing Russian roulette.

At 1:53 a.m., while making a routine traffic stop in north Fort Worth, police stumbled onto the double homicide of an 18-year-old youth and a 19-year-old youth that police said appeared gang-related.

And less than two hours later, at 3:40 a.m., three shots were fired outside a pizza restaurant known as a hangout for youth gangs. An 18-year-old youth was gunned down before a crowd of about 100 people.

Finally, at about 3 p.m., workers mowing the yard of an abandoned house found the lower half of a decomposed body in a garage.

Police have tentatively identified the remains as those of a 30-year-old man who had been missing for six weeks.

"It's been stressful, but it's part of the job," Sgt. Mark Krey said late Sunday.

Felipe Rivera, 16, described by neighbors and family as a good student with an infectious smile, remained on life-support systems Monday at John Peter Smith Hospital, a hospital spokesman said.

Witnesses said the youth often came to teen parties and played Russian roulette with a .357 Magnum. He would empty most of the bullets from the gun, twirl the chamber and pull the trigger as he pointed the gun at his head, they said.

Police were told that Rivera shot himself on his third click as 15 boys and girls danced in the upstairs bedroom of a home.

The first of three suspected gang-related shootings was discovered after a patrol officer pulled over a car for speeding. When he discovered one of the occupants had a gunshot wound, the officer called for an ambulance that took Carlos Hernandez to a hospital.

The 19-year-old youth was pronounced dead on arrival.

The other occupants of the car told police they stopped to take Hernandez to a hospital after seeing him lying in the street. Another member of their group, Jesus Reyes, 18, was shot in the head while trying to help Hernandez into the vehicle, they said.

The witnesses told police they were able to get Hernandez into the car, but were unable to reach Reyes because of the gunfire. Other officers later discovered Reyes lying dead in the street.

Police said the death of Pedro Onteveros, 18, from a gunshot wound to the abdomen a short time later at a pizza restaurant in the same general vicinity may have been related to the two other shootings.

County contends state violated order by redesigning waste dump

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso County officials said Monday that a state agency trying to build a nuclear waste dump site in West Texas may have broken the rules of a court injunction by redesigning the dump.

El Paso County officials are asking a judge to find the state in contempt of court. A hearing was scheduled before State District Judge Bill Moody for today.

The claim comes just two weeks before the April 16 trial of El Paso and Hudspeth counties' lawsuit to stop the state from building a low-level radioactive waste site near Fort Hancock, about 50 miles south of El Paso.

The lawsuit was filed more than two years ago saying the proposed site resides in a 100-year flood plain and fault zone, and that it poses a threat to ground water.

Under the terms of a court order three months ago, the county was to stop filing minor motions in the lawsuit and the state would not hold public hearings or publish a final selection site.

Gayle Garner, first assistant county attorney, told commissioners Monday the state violated that order when the board of the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Authority met Feb. 15.

"The action they took was to dramatically change their design of the facility ... That constituted finalizing that report and that's a violation of the injunction," he said.

Garner said the county is asking for a continuance of the trial.

But Rick Jacobi, general manager of the state waste disposal authority, disagreed.

"The fact is it was not a violation of the agreed order, he said. It was an intermediate step in a very preliminary part of the process. It's very clearly allowed," Jacobi said.

Jacobi said the order prevents the authority from completing any studies on the site or the design of the building and that any design has not been completed.

Judgment OK'd against meat processor

AUSTIN (AP) — State Attorney General Jim Mattox on Monday obtained an agreed final judgment against a meat processor who he said sold thousands of pounds of substandard meat to Houston-area school districts.

The lawsuit and judgment were filed simultaneously in state district court in Harris County against Diezi's Wholesale Meat Co. Inc., Mattox said.

The judgment prohibits the company from misrepresenting its meat and requires it to pay the state $5,000 in costs and fees, he said.

Mattox alleged in the lawsuit that Diezi's represented its meats to be no more than 20 percent fat and to contain only skeletal meat.

But he said that tests at Texas A&M University showed the meat's fat content to be as high as 30 percent.

Vietnamese refurbish Continental Hotel

By Denis D. Gray

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam (AP) — It may have been the best-known 500 square yards of the Vietnam War: the Continental Hotel terrace, where spies, soldiers and journalists met at sunset to swap tales and numb the horror with drink.

After years as a military headquarters and extensive remodeling, the Continental and its "Shelf," as the terrace was called, are open again and catering to the business crowd.

The Continental was built between 1910 and 1915, in the French era, and initially welcomed a colonial cast of rubber planters and Foreign Legionnaires.

Then the Americans came to fight, and to spend their dollars on the Shelf. Every night, they were ambushed by prostitutes, crippled beggars, pickpockets and the doe-eyed urchins selling flowers, whom hardly any could resist.

That era ended in April 1975, when North Vietnamese tanks rolled into Saigon.

Saigon became Ho Chi Minh City. The French-owned Continental was summarily nationalized, as was the Rex a block down the street, where American officers lived and played.

Vietnamese military officers occupied the Continental for 13 years while communist authorities tried to impose their will on the free-wheeling southerners, with less than gratifying success.

Six months ago, the Continental began its fourth life. After two years of renovations, the hotel opened its 72 rooms to tourists and the foreign businessmen who are flocking to economically liberalized Vietnam.

War and its traditional intrigues are gone from the Shelf. The talk on the terrace these days is of investment opportunities, cheap labor, bureaucratic snags and how to get around orthodox communist functionaries.

Military green and safari jackets are the stuff of ghosts, replaced by the once-scorned jacket and tie.

The rooms on the three floors above are occupied by company executives and deal makers. They come from Taiwan, Japan, Hong Kong, Thailand, Western Europe and from the United States, although Americans are barred by their government from doing business in Vietnam.

Old-timers notice other changes, sometimes with regret. The Shelf has been glassed in, air-conditioned, adorned with neo-Grecian columns and crystal chandeliers.

"What I remember most about the Continental is the open terrace, the ceiling fans, the colonial atmosphere," George Belcher said. "Now that's all gone."

Belcher, back on a visit, spent four years in Vietnam with the U.S. aid mission.

Dao Huu Loan, the manager, said the Continental's history and architecture were of prime concern in the renovation.

"These days, around the world, there is a tendency to pull everything down, destroy tradition and the beauty of the past," he said. "We have made some changes, but the basic structure is the same."

Rooms cost an average of $70 a night, payable in U.S. dollars, and Loan said the occupancy rate was 85 percent so far this year. He hopes the Vietnam Year of Tourism proclaimed by the government will attract more non-business travelers.

"The most important thing is to improve the service every day," the manager said. He told an interviewer the 120 hotel employees receive above-average salaries, plus bonuses for good performance.

"We were recently contracted by a customer who had received five estimates," said Letkeman. "Using the same exact materials as the other contractors, we gave this homeowner an estimate which was several hundred dollars lower than the lowest bid."

If you own a brick home, Letkeman said, you may not be aware that you, too, can benefit from steel or vinyl siding. If you have any places on your home's exterior which require painting, such as eaves and overhangs, siding is the answer for you.

In fact, with maintenance-free siding, you'll never have to paint again!

During April, you can take advantage of 20 percent savings on siding, eaves and overhang improvements.

All siding products come with a lifetime warranty system. You can also have insulation installed under your new siding.

The ranks of our friends and fellow bridge experts are growing ever thinner. We were saddened to learn of the death of Jeremy Flint, one of Britain's great player-writers. Fortunately for British bridge, a number of young players are on the threshold of greatness. Foremost among them is 26-year-old Andrew Robson who, in partnership with Tony Forrester, recently won two major tournaments.

On this hand from the Staten Bank tournament in Holland, Robson, South, was opposed by two of Brazil's world champions, Gabriel Chagas, West, and Marcello Branco. Against four hearts Chagas led the singleton spade, taken by the ace. A club to the king provided the entry to the closed hand for declarer to cash the ace-king of trumps and continue with a third round.

West won the eight and queen and, realizing that if he cashed the ace of diamonds, East would be squeezed in the black suits, found the spectacular defense of returning the queen of diamonds to the king! Now it would not help declarer to ruff a diamond and run his trumps, since East would be able to hold on to a winner in each black suit for down one.

Robson found a brilliant counter. He returned a diamond, discarding a club from hand, and the defenders had no recourse. East was forced to win and continue a diamond. Declarer ruffed and ran his trumps, coming down to a spade and a club in hand with an ace and another club on the board. East was forced to release his guard in one of the black suits, presenting declarer with the fulfilling trick in whichever suit was discarded.

Teen-age AIDS victim White said near death

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Ryan White, whose battle with AIDS brought him scorn in his hometown but support from across the world, was hospitalized with internal bleeding Monday and was not expected to live, authorities said.

White

Doctors said Monday afternoon that White, 18, probably would not survive the day, said Carrie Van Dyke, director of health promotion for the State Board of Health.

It was later disclosed, however, that White was on a life-support system, a ventilator, that could prolong his life.

White's chief physician, Dr. Martin B. Kleiman, declined to speculate on White's prognosis.

White put a youthful face on the AIDS plight. He increased public awareness of the deadly disease and helped reinforce the message that AIDS cannot be spread through casual contact. His struggle was the subject of numerous accounts, including a People magazine cover story and a televison movie.

"He is presently in the intensive care unit and he is in critical condition," Kleiman told an afternoon news conference. "He is heavily sedated and we feel that he is experiencing no discomfort."

Van Dyke said his mother, Jeanne, and his sister, Andrea, were among the relatives at his bedside at Riley Hospital for Children. Jeanne and Ryan White's father, Wayne, are divorced.

White's hemophilia, the disorder that initially exposed him to the deadly AIDS virus, prevented doctors from operating, said Van Dyke. She said she was told about White's condition by his mother at lunchtime.

"This is it. He's not expected to come out of it," Van Dyke said. "He's not responding."

Van Dyke voiced a small hope White would recover, saying, "He's surprised us before."

Kleiman, White's physician since he was diagnosed as having AIDS in 1984, said White was admitted to the hospital Thursday suffering from a respiratory infection, which occurred as a complication of AIDS.

White's battle with acquired immune deficiency syndrome sent him to Washington to testify before Congress and to California for star-studded fund-raisers.

TEMPLE, Texas (AP) — Rocky Hernandez, vocalist for the popular Tejano band Little Joe Y La Familia, suffered a brain aneurysm and was undergoing surgery at Scott and White Memorial Hospital Monday afternoon.

The 40-year-old singer became weak and dizzy while performing with the band in Dallas last week; said J.J. Jimenez, a spokesman for the group.

Jimenez said weekend tests showed revealed internal bleeding, but doctors weren't sure of the source. Hernandez was discharged, but felt ill again Monday and was admitted for surgery.

Hernandez is the brother of the group's founder and namesake, Little Joe Hernandez.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — About 800 actors, dancers and comedians attended a luncheon to honor Sammy Davis Jr. for his contribution to the world of dance.

Davis, 64, who was diagnosed with throat cancer in September 1989, was unable to attend and is recuperating at home.

His wife, Altovise, on Sunday accepted the annual Gypsy Award from the Professional Dancers Society on his behalf.

"I'm still a gypsy at heart and of all the tributes that Sammy has received this is the one he would have really liked to be at," said Altovise, a former dancer.

Among those attending were Patrick Swayze, Debbie Allen, Milton Berle, Janet Leigh, Nancy Sinatra Jr., Ken Berry and the Nicholas Brothers.

The event featured footage of Davis' career from vaudeville to the Las Vegas stage to Hollywood films.

NEW YORK (AP) — A state judge says convicted murderer Jean Harris may keep the $35,000 she earned from a magazine excerpt of her book because it deals with her life in prison, not her crime.

The judge ruled that the state Crime Victims Board erred in applying the state's "Son of Sam Law."

The law, named after a 1970s serial killer, was aimed at preventing criminals from profiting from their crimes by writing books, television or film scripts. It requires the criminal to turn over to the victims board any proceeds earned.

Ms. Harris, a former headmistress at the Madeira School, was convicted in 1981 of killing diet doctor Herman Tarnower, her lover for 10 years. She is serving 15 years to life at a prison in Bedford Hills.

She contracted with Macmillan Inc. in 1985 to write an autobiography, "Stranger in Two Worlds." Good Housekeeping magazine paid $35,000 for exclusive serial rights in 1986.

In a decision issued Friday, Justice Leonard N. Cohen noted that the 5,000-word excerpt contained only one paragraph that mentioned her crime.

"The core of the article is solely about her life and experiences in prison after her conviction," he said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Mother allegedly stabs daughters

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman allegedly attacked her two young daughters with a butcher knife Monday and may have tried to force them to take some medication, police said.

The girls suffered multiple stab wounds and were taken to Ben Taub Hospital where they were in stable condition Monday afternoon, officials said.

The oldest girl, who is 8, suffered four stab wounds. Her 5-year-old sister, who was stabbed nine times, underwent surgery earlier Monday.

Hospital spokesman Roger Widmeyer said the 30-year-old mother was under observation at Ben Taub. She had some minor wrist cuts that apparently were self-inflicted, he said.

Police Sgt. J.C. Mosier said no charges had been filed yet against the woman.

Mosier said the woman also might have forced the girls to take some type of medication before they were stabbed. The girls' stomachs were pumped, but it had not yet been determined if there were any medications in their systems.

Summit plans progress

HOUSTON (AP) — Plans for the 1990 Economic Summit are progressing as officials make efforts to accommodate visiting dignitaries as well as thousands of media who will be covering the session.

The cost of hosting the July 9-11 summit will be about $2.5 million to $3 million, said co-chairman George Strake.

Numerous social events are being planned, including a rodeo, for before and after the summit, said Liz Ghrist, who is heading the special events committee. About 15 other events are being planned, but have not been confirmed by the White House, she said.

The estimated 3,000 to 6,000 media members coming to Houston will be feted to a party in the museum district on July 7, she said.

Asbestos being removed

AUSTIN (AP) — The former General Land Office — the oldest state government office building in Texas — is under wraps to remove asbestos from the outside walls and roof.

The 133-year-old building located on the State Capitol grounds east of the Capitol was covered Monday with a black polyethylene shroud as workers began the removal process.

The cover was necessary "so there's no danger of any fibers blowing around," said Capitol Architect Allen McCree.

McCree said the building's stucco exterior was given an undercoat of paint in the 1960s that contained 2 percent to 5 percent asbestos. The roof shingles also contain asbestos, he said.

Work to remove the asbestos will cost approximately $143,000 and take about one month, he said. The building, which housed the General Land Office until 1911, is scheduled for a $3.6 million renovation as part of the $154.5 million restoration of the Capitol.

Transit funds OK'd

AUSTIN (AP) — State highway officials have approved $700,000 for 13 rural areas to enhance local transportation systems.

Gov. Bill Clements said Monday the money from Texas' oil overcharge funds will be used to seek federal matching grants that could add another $2 million to the amount.

The transit systems will use the money to replace or refurbish buses, build facilities or expand fleets in rural areas surrounding the following cities.

AHA will discontinue food labeling

DALLAS (AP) — The American Heart Association plans to discontinue its controversial HeartGuide food labeling program but will continue to work for better food labeling regulations, the association's president said Monday.

HeartGuide, under development since 1987 and introduced this year, was an attempt by the heart association to put a comprehensive label — a red heart with a checkmark on it — on products considered best for preventing heart disease.

Food companies, at a fee ranging from $15,000 to $600,000, could submit their products for testing for cholesterol, sodium and saturated fat contents. Products which met heart association guidelines would get the HeartGuide seal of approval for their packaging.

Under pressure from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), however, the association said Monday it would drop the labeling portion of the program and concentrate on nutrition education and clearer federal labeling standards.

"The FDA has made it clear it is against third-party endorsements," Howard Lewis, director of health and science news for the heart association, said.

"We're pleased they responded to our concerns," said FDA spokesman Jeff Nesbit.

The FDA sent a letter to the association Friday saying it could not support the HeartGuide labeling program. That followed a warning letter in February threatening regulatory action. The program was launched in January.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture also refused to let the seal appear on any of the food it regulates, which included meat, poultry and frozen dinners.

Heart association president Myron L. Weisfeldt of Baltimore said the association would announce a revamped HeartGuide program this summer, focusing on education, "with added emphasis on legislative and regulatory actions," for clearer food labeling.

Consumer groups such as the Center for Science in the Public Interest (CSPI) said they were concerned that the HeartGuide labeling would lull consumers into thinking that foods with the HeartGuide seal were good for all disease prevention, not just for heart disease.

It's believed food low in saturated fat, sodium and cholesterol are best for reducing the risk of heart disease.

"The seal of approval was somewhat narrow," said Bonnie Liebman, director of nutrition for CSPI. "It looked only at whether the food was good for your heart. Foods like vegetable oils, margarines and some oils, they're low in saturated fat and sodium, but we've been urged to cut back on all fats, not just saturated fats, to reduce the risk of cancer."

Consumer groups also complained about the fairness of the ratings given the price tag for participating. There was concern that an approved product, made by a company that paid to participate in the HeartGuide program, would be preferred by shoppers over an identical product that was not entered for a seal.

The fees were to be used for a toll-free hotline and nutrition awareness programs, which will continue, the association said.

Weisfeldt said the heart association was encouraged that the FDA plans to overhaul the government's labeling program.

"HeartGuide was developed in response to repeated appeals by consumers for more nutrition information," Weisfeldt said in a statement. "We will be watching developments closely to ensure the FDA moves quickly to meet American consumers' needs."

Ms. Liebman was skeptical. "The FDA has actually said that it plans to improve food labels, but that could take another decade or two," she said.

Nonetheless, she called HeartGuide a "noble attempt" to clarify food labeling and that the "FDA pulled the rug out from under the heart association."

Jordan tops list

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Jordan, who averaged 48.3 points a game last week in leading Chicago to a 4-0 record, on Monday was named the NBA's player of the week.

Jordan

Jordan also averaged 12 rebounds, 5.5 assists and 4.5 steals. He scored 69 points and had 18 rebounds in a 117-113 overtime win at Cleveland, the ninth-highest regular season scoring total in league history.

Other nominees included Houston's Akeem Olajuwon and Otis Thorpe, Minnesota's Tony Campbell, Philadelphia's Charles Barkley and Washington's Darrell Walker.

Cavalier Danny

The Cleveland Cavaliers would have no objections to letting Danny Ferry play in the basketball World Championships this summer if he decides to play in the NBA next season, General Manager Wayne Embry said.

Ferry

Ferry, a Duke graduate and No. 1 pick by the Cavs in the 1989 draft, played this season in Italy.

'Stros fall to KC

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — Danny Tartabull, Willie Wilson and Rey Palacios singled home runs in the eighth inning as the Kansas City Royals rallied to defeat the Houston Astros 4-2 Monday in an exhibition game.

Tartabull's single scored Gerald Perry, who reached first on Ken Caminiti's error to start the inning. Wilson then singled to right, scoring George Brett to tie the score. With one out and the bases loaded, Bill Pecota's suicide squeeze bunt scored Gary Thurman, who was running for Tartabull, to put the Royals up 3-2. Palacios' single scored Wilson for the final run.

Loser Jim Clancy, the third Astros' pitcher, gave up all the runs. Mark Davis, the Royals' third pitcher, picked up the victory, while Larry McWilliams earned his first save.

Ruben Sierra and Pete Incaviglia emerged from early spring slumps and three Texas pitchers combined for a 5-hitter to lead the Rangers to an 8-1 romp of the Chicago White Sox on Monday night.

JAWS '90: Tarks' Sharks cruise

■ Anderson Hunt's 29 points leads UNLV to largest margin of victory, most points ever in NCAA Championship game.

By Jim O'Connell
AP Basketball Writer

DENVER — The NCAA's ultimate Rebel won its biggest prize.

UNLV ended the tournament of thrills and close finishes with the largest margin of victory in a championship game, a 103-73 win over Duke on Monday night.

Jerry Tarkanian, the coach who fought the NCAA in the courts for the past 15 years, guided UNLV to its first national title and Duke continued as the school with the most frustrating of postseason records.

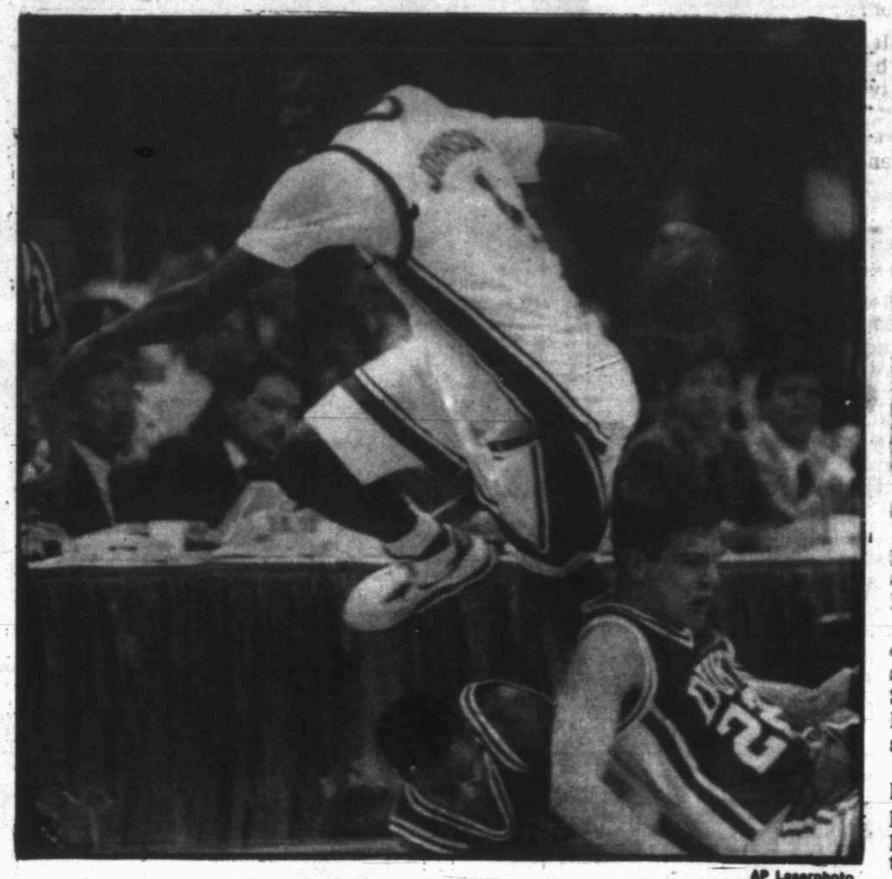

The Runnin' Rebels became the first team to score more than 100 points in the championship game. They are also the first preseason No. 1 to win the title since North Carolina in 1982 and the first Western team since UCLA won in 1975.

They did it with the style they have made famous — tenacious man-to-man defense — as they rattled Duke, a team known for its savvy and poise.

The Rebels literally stole the title from Duke, which was making its eighth Final Four appearance. The Blue Devils went home again without a trophy, extending the longest streak of national semifinal futility.

UNLV broke the tournament record for steals in a game with 16, eclipsing the mark set by Duke in the 1986 championship game and matched by Oklahoma in the 1988 title game.

The Runnin' Rebels also set a record for most points scored in a tournament with 571, just better than their regular-season average of 92.3.

Until Monday night, the largest margin of victory in a championship game was 23 points, when UCLA beat North Carolina 78-55 in 1968.

For Tarkanian, the man who sits on the bench looking as though it pains him to watch his team win, getting the trophy capped a long battle with the NCAA, which ordered the school to suspend him for violations. He went to court for an injunction and the case eventually reached the Supreme Court, which ruled in favor of the NCAA.

But no court could stop the Runnin' Rebels on Monday night.

UNLV managed a 10-point lead just 7:26 into the game as the Rebels forced Duke into turnover after turnover, mostly by simply stealing the ball.

They scored the first points of the game, and never trailed.

Duke, which averaged 17.2 turnovers per game this season, had 14 at halftime and 10 of those were on steals by the Rebels.

The first 10-point lead came on a sequence of four UNLV steals in four consecutive possessions — the last was by Stacey Augmon, who took the ball from Phil Henderson near midcourt and sailed in for a dunk. That made it 21-11.

The lead extended to 41-25 with 3:46 left in the half as UNLV contested every pass made by Duke. The Rebels had 16 points off turnovers in the first half as they took a 47-35 halftime lead.

Duke got within 10 points, 57-47, with 16:24 to play, but the larcenous crew from just off The Strip went to it again.

The Rebels went on an 18-0 run to put the game away and it was Augmon and

Musburger parts CBS at odds

■ Two sides begin dispute as to what actually transpired in negotiations.

Associated Press

DENVER — Brent Musburger's brother said Monday that CBS' version of the sportscaster's departure from the network is "far from the truth."

"I'm concerned about some of the information they're putting out," said Todd Musburger, who represented his brother in contract negotiations.

"I don't want to get into the details right now, but maybe after the game the gloves will come off."

The game — Monday night's NCAA basketball championship between UNLV and Duke — will be Brent Musburger's final broadcast on CBS. The network announced Sunday that it wouldn't renew his $2 million per year contract after it expires June 30.

The main issues apparently were money and high-profile assignments. Musburger, the network's most prominent sportscaster, wanted more of both than the network was willing to give him.

The dispute came to a head Saturday night during a meeting in Denver between Todd Musburger and Neal Pilson, president of CBS Sports.

Pilson said the agent demanded an immediate decision on his brother's status with the network. After Todd was informed of CBS' decision, Pilson said, both sides agreed that an announcement should be made the following day.

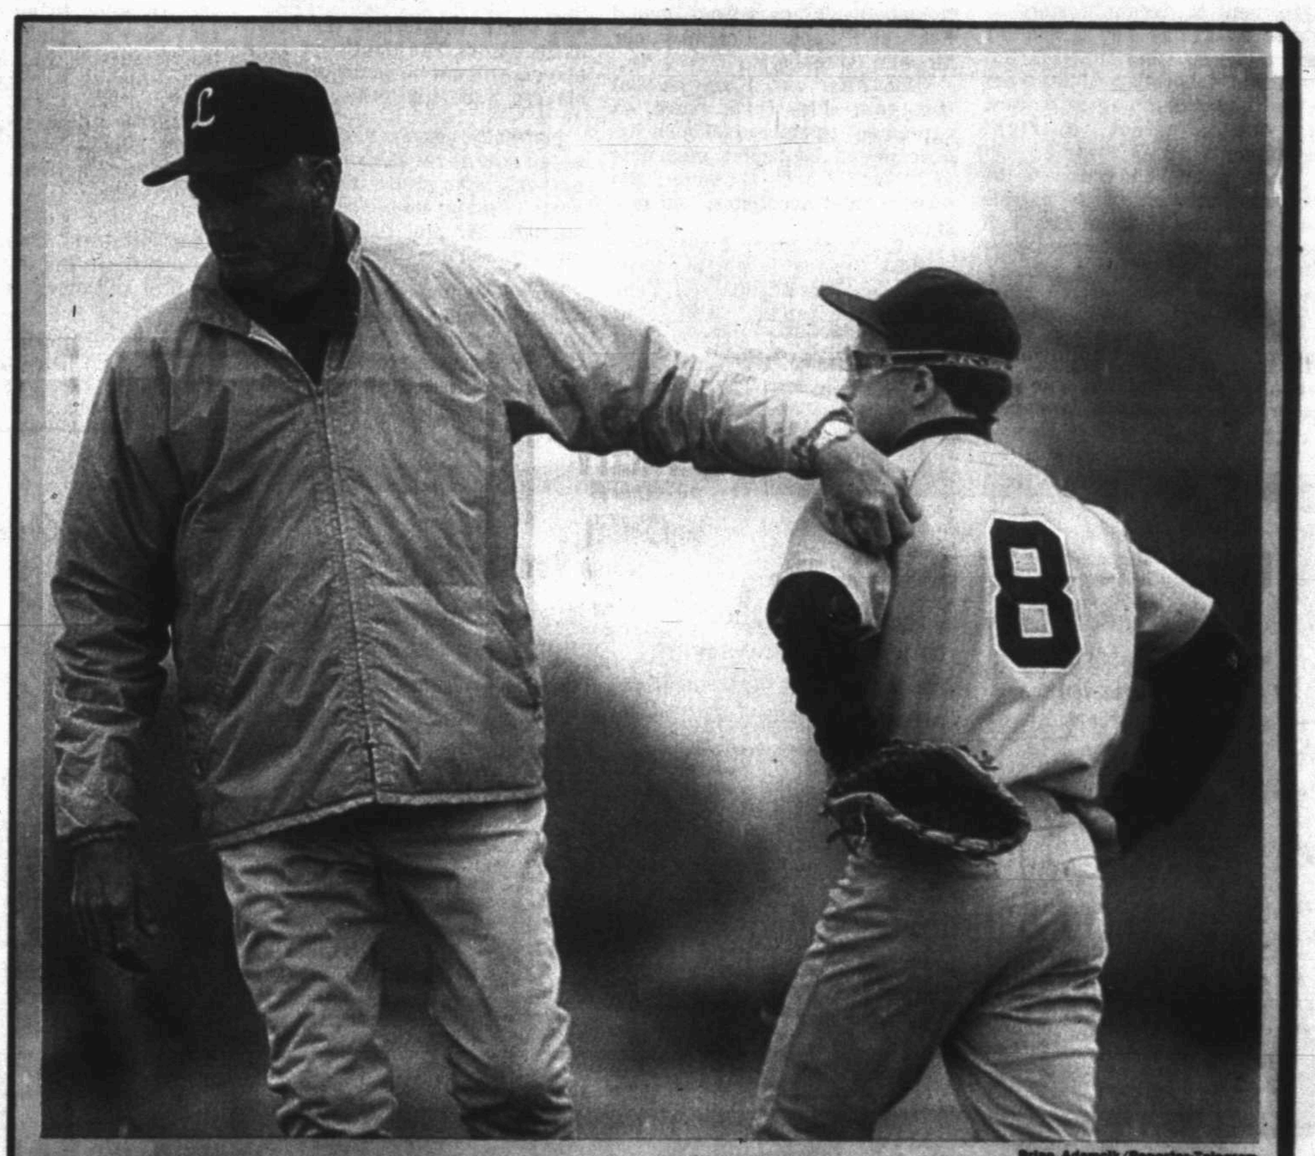

"We were concerned about a (news) leak," Pilson said. "We wanted to stop the rumors before they got started."

However, Todd Musburger said he was upset by the timing of the release.

"(Pilson) told us he was going to prepare a release, but we didn't know he was going to send it out the day before the championship game," he said.

"It was not a mutual decision; it was a unilateral decision. We in no way urged them to do it."

Musburger admitted that money and assignments were primary issues in the negotiations.

4-5A baseball race tightens

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

A cloudy playoff picture could become a little clearer today when Midland Lee visits Abilene Cooper and Midland High hosts Abilene High in District 4-5A baseball games.

Or, maybe not.

Lee, Midland High and Cooper each boast 3-2 records and sit in second place behind league-leading Odessa Permian (4-1). That means either Lee or Cooper must fall off the pace. They are scheduled to meet at 4:30 p.m.

The Rebels will enter the game on the heels of their 8-2 upset triumph over Permian last Saturday in which Jeff Johnson held the Panthers to just four hits, and Lee dispatched Mojo starter Blake Tucker in the first inning.

Cooper, on the other hand, may still be feeling the sting of a 10-run rule loss to Permian early last week. It

Plan B signees number same as last year

■ With 16, Cowboys sign more Plan B players than any other team while the Colts fail to secure a single free agent.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A total of 184 players changed teams under Plan B, making Year 2 of the NFL's limited free agency plan much like Year 1 — with 37 percent of the players eligible to switch teams doing so.

The overall effect is liable to be the same, too. Many of the 1989 transfers were special teams players with their old teams and remained special teams players with their new ones.

"We need to find some way to improve our kickoff-coverage team," Kansas City general manager Carl Peterson said after signing Bjorn Nittmo, a placekicker who can kick off deep but for whom every extra point is an adventure.

"We were down near the bottom last year, and that certainly starts with the ability to kick the ball deep with hang time and or distance."

Plan B took effect last year as a way for the league to demonstrate that it was allowing freedom of movement. It allows each team to protect 37 players, with the rest becoming free agents for two months — from Feb. 1 to April 1.

When the counting concluded Monday, 184 of the 490 eligible players had changed teams. Last year, it was 229 of 619, when more players were available because this year's roster rules were more restrictive.

But money was up — salaries increased an estimated $12 million, or 70 percent more than last year. Non-refundable signing bonuses averaged $65,000 (according to the union), $53,000 (according to the management). Last year's average was about $35,000.

A lot of that came from big bucks paid to big names.

The Cleveland Browns, for example, paid $1.8 million over two years to 35-year-old cornerback Raymond Clayborn, several times an All-Pro for New England. It included a $700,000 a year salary for the two years, plus a $400,000 signing bonus, which Clayborn keeps even if he doesn't make the team.

"I don't consider it giving him a big raise," said Browns owner Art Modell.

REBELS: Finally, Tark gets his ring

(From 1C)

Anderson Hunt, the game's Most Outstanding Player, who took turns putting the Blue Devils away.

Hunt started the run with a side jumper and Larry Johnson scored on a drive for a 61-47 lead. Augmon stole the ball on three straight possessions and he found Hunt each time to end the break.

Augmon whipped a cross-court pass to Hunt for a 3-pointer. He found Hunt again with a pass for a layup and then fed Hunt again after taking the ball from Henderson at his own foul line.

Hunt ended it with a 3-pointer to make it 75-47 with 13:18 to play.

Hunt led UNLV with 29 points on 12-of-16 shooting, while Johnson, the Rebels' leading scorer and rebounder this season, finished with 22 and 11.

Henderson led Duke with 21 points.

It seemed there was little Duke could do against the pressure. Even when UNLV went into a 1-1-3 zone, the Blue Devils continued to have trouble getting the ball inside to Christian Laettner and Alaa Abdelnaby, the big men who carried them to their third straight Final Four and fourth in five seasons.

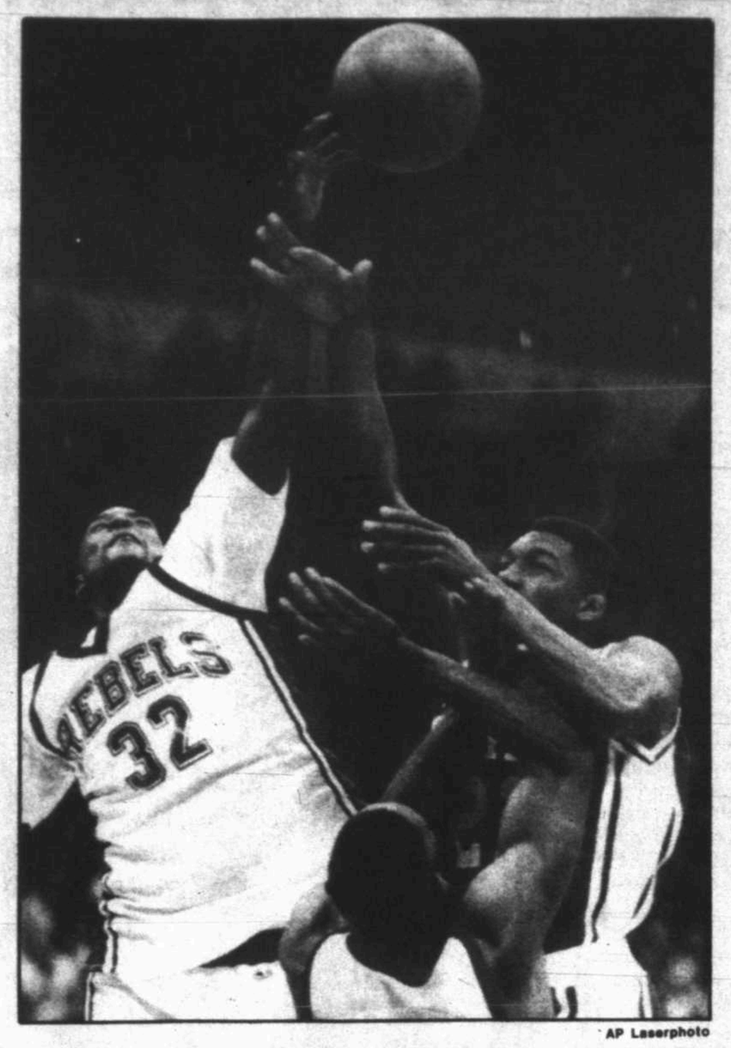

UNLV, meanwhile, was scoring down low, rarely needing the 3-point field goal which is such an important part of its offense.

The Runnin' Rebels scored 22 of their points in the first half in the paint, while Duke managed just 14 from in close — but that was all on 11 shots.

UNLV, which beat Georgia Tech 90-81 in the semifinals, was never really challenged on the run to the title, winning its six NCAA games by an average of 18.8

Brewers feeling strain of injuries

Associated Press

Spring Training

Baseball's on-again, off-again 27-player limit was back on again Monday following agreement between the Player Relations Committee and Major League Players Association to temporarily expand rosters.

Teams can carry up to 27 players until April 30, giving managers a little more flexibility following the lockout-shortened spring training.

Paul Molitor won't be one of Milwaukee's 27. A broken right thumb, injured while sliding during an exhibition game Sunday, will sideline him for the first three or four weeks of the season. A year ago, Molitor suffered a dislocated finger in the final week of training camp and opened the season on the disabled list.

The Brewers also placed second baseman Jim Gantner, recovering from knee surgery, on the disabled list and will be without shortstop Gary Sheffield for up to a week because of a sprained ligament in his right wrist.

Rangers 8, White Sox 1

Ruben Sierra and Pete Incaviglia emerged from early spring slumps and three Texas pitchers combined for a 5-hitter to lead the Rangers to an 8-1 romp of the Chicago White Sox on Monday night.

Incaviglia was 2-for-2 with three RBIs and Sierra went 3-for-4 with a solo homer.

Royals 4, Astros 2

At Haines City, Fla., Kansas City scored four runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to beat Houston. Danny Tartabull, Willie Wilson and Rey Palacios singled home runs to rally the Royals.

Reds 7-6, Red Sox 6-5

At Winter Haven, Fla., Kevin Lockhart's two-out pop fly single in the ninth inning scored Hal Morris and gave Cincinnati a split squad victory over Boston. The run was the first allowed in four appearances by reliever Jeff Reardon.

At Plant City, Fla., Cincinnati won the other split squad game as Chris Sabo and Eric Davis had three hits apiece. Tim Naehring hit his second and third home runs of the spring for Boston.

Indecisive baseballers decide on 27 man rosters

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball teams and players reversed course again Monday and decided to expand rosters to 27 players for the first three weeks of the season.

The sides reached a verbal agreement to expand rosters on March 19, the day they agreed to a new four-year labor contract. But the roster deal collapsed last week when they couldn't agree on how it would affect outright assignments.

Teams will have to reduce to the normal minimum of 24 players and maximum of 25 on May 1. A proposed change that would have lowered the five-inning requirement for starters to get a victory was dropped.

"This is going to take a big load off, not just the pitchers, but the whole team. I'm extremely happy," Dodgers reliever Jim Gott said.

"I think we should have left it at 27 in the first place," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "It's going to help the nameless three."

Michael Weiner, a lawyer for the union, said the outline for the agreement was made over the weekend in telephone conversations between union head Donald Fehr and Deputy Commissioner Stephen Greenberg.

"Don Fehr and I are pleased that both sides could reach an agreement on an issue of such significance to the players, managers and fans," Chuck O'Connor, the owners chief negotiator, said in a statement.

"Just look at it as the aftermatch of a long negotiation," Fehr said of the tangled talks, "but thankfully it was straightened out reasonably quickly."

"This is the best way to do it," Dodgers infielder Mickey Hatcher said. "We were looking at a situation where the risk of injury would be very serious. This takes a lot of the pressure off. We can save a lot of wear and tear on the pitching staff."

Teams will designate up to three additional players to management's Player Relations Committee, which will inform the union of the names. The identity of those players will not be made known to players, agents or other teams.

Normally, players sent outright to the minors for a second time, or players with more than three years of major league service sent outright for the first time, can elect to become free agents.

Under Monday's agreement, the union will allow teams to request advance waivers through Sunday and ask additional players to agree to waive their right to free agency if they are sent to the minors outright.

"If this is the first outright, it still counts as the first outright," Weiner said. "The theory is that extra players designated as additional players should be no better or worse off than they would have been at the end of spring training, except for the obvious fact that they're going to be better off in that they're going to get major league service and major league salary for this expansion period."

Fehr was disappointed the proposed change about innings for starting pitchers was dropped.

"That's too bad. It was meant to keep pitchers from trying too hard early in the season to go any kind of distance," he said.

4-5A: Lee throws interesting wrench into baseball picture was only the second run rule loss for Cooper in the last eight years.

The Bulldogs, meanwhile, will be trying to make it three wins in a row when they meet the Eagles in Angels Stadium at 4:30. MHS 10-runned San Angelo 15-1 last Friday on James Madrid's two hitter, then shut out Odessa High on Saturday, 6-0, behind the 12-strikeout performance of Gabriel Salazar.

MHS is batting a healthy .325 as a team. Salazar, who hit two homers against Odessa High, leads the team with a .538 average. Keith Gilbreath at .455 and Brian Conaway's .417 average add to the formidible attack.

Abilene High moved its record to an even 2-2 Monday with a 5-4 win over Odessa High in a makeup game. The Eagles could jump into the playoff run with a win over MHS.

John Moreno, the Eagles' No. 4 pitcher, went the distance against OHS Monday and had a key two-run single in the fifth inning to pace the victory.

However, the Eagles ended the game with bad news as AHS lost one of the best players in 4-5A when Russell Haynes injured a knee while running the bases. It is not known if Haynes will miss the rest of the season, but he will not be making the trip to Midland today.

On top of that, AHS still has a makeup game to get in. They will play San Angelo Thursday for three games in four days.

Oil prices jump

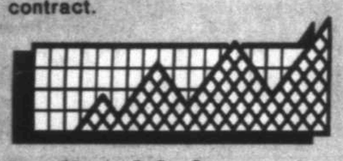

The contract for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate advanced 20 cents to $20.48 per 42-gallon barrel Monday, adding to Friday's gain of 25 cents. Later contract months rose by similar to slightly larger amounts. Posted price hangs on to the $19.25 mark.

Other energy futures prices rose Monday amid strong buying of oil products.

Richard Redoglia, a vice president at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures, said there weren't any new fundamental developments to account for the buying.

He said there was still speculation in the market that future reports will show substantial drawdowns in gasoline stocks, indicated rising demand.

Market analysts said activity was light to moderate on the New York Mercantile Exchange with much of the buying interest focused on contracts for delivery later than May, the near-month contract.

Dollar higher

The dollar ended mostly higher Monday against other major foreign currencies despite a wave of profit-taking.

Gold prices declined here and abroad. On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $369.80 a troy ounce, off 40 cents from late Friday. Republic National Bank in New York quoted a late bid for gold at $370.25 an ounce, unchanged.

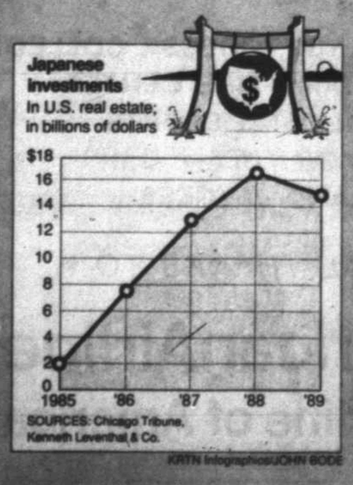

Eastern says, no liquidation!

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines blasted rumors that the carrier faces liquidation as it tries to overcome growing skepticism about its ability to survive.

"Liquidation is not in the best interests of any group involved in the bankruptcy," spokesman Robin Matell said Friday. "The unsecured creditors would wind up with little at best and maybe nothing in liquidation."

Eastern, which last year promised to repay creditors 100 percent and then slashed that by half, said this past week it wanted to cut the 50 cents-per-dollar payback plan even further. Immediately afterward, unsecured creditors discussed a potential call for Eastern's liquidation.

Broad energy strategy sought

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States must develop a national energy strategy that uses all forms of energy and considers scientific, economic and environmental issues, Energy Secretary James D. Watkins said Monday.

"Until we put environment, energy, science and economics all in proper balance, we're not sure of what we're doing," Watkins said in releasing an interim report on his department's development of the strategy.

Protecting the environment is a priority, Watkins said.

But he cautioned against being "bamboozled by those who would hype in certain risk areas that simply are overplayed and overdone."

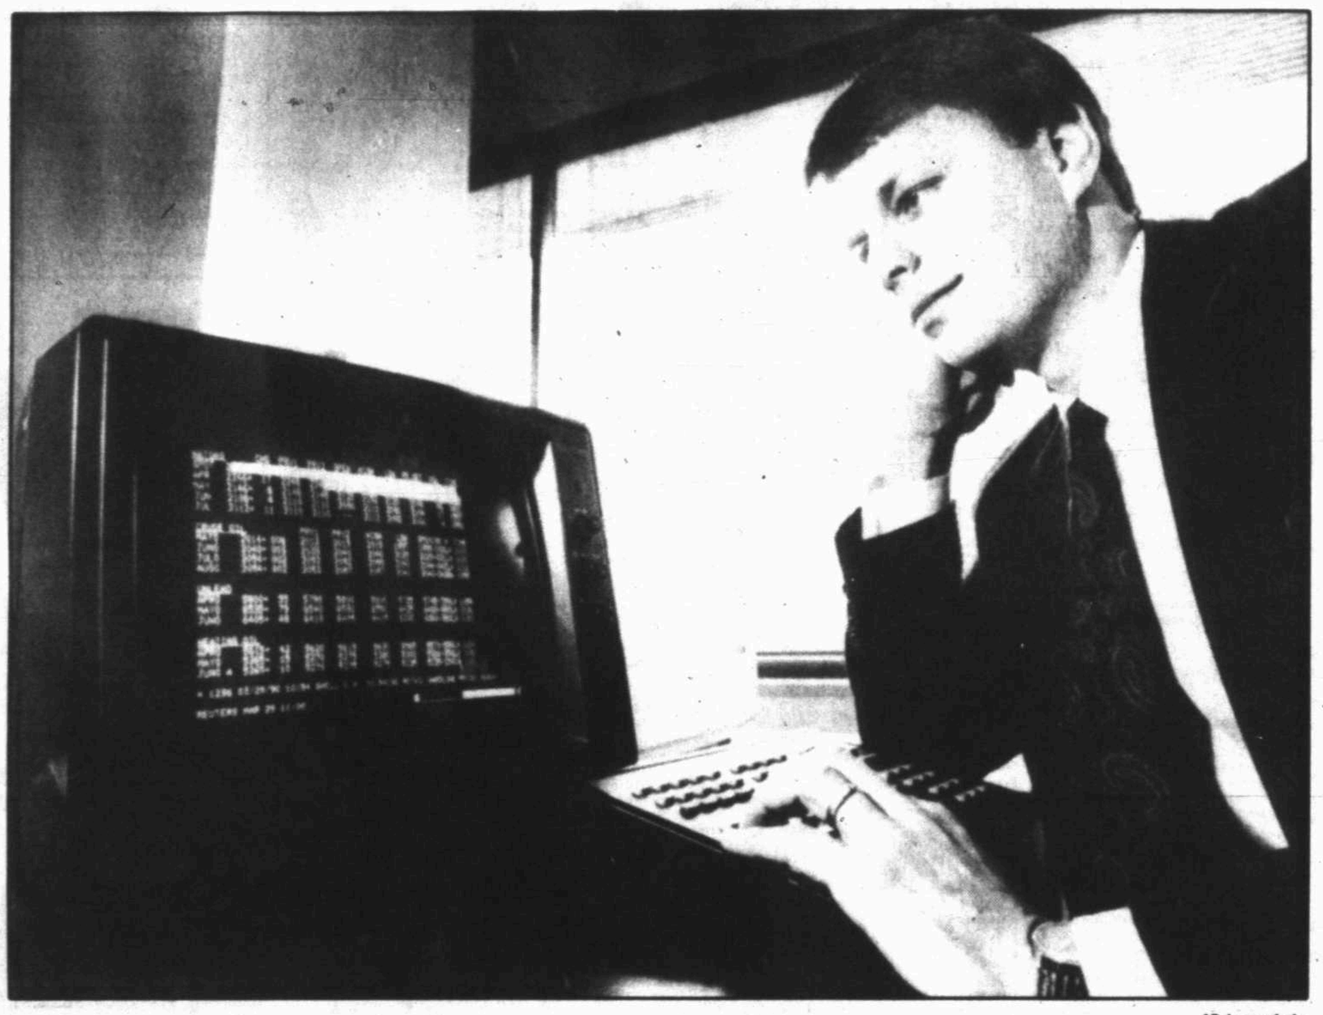

For instance, Watkins said, despite the risks of acid rain and global warming, "we're not going to throw (coal) away lightly as a national resource. Coal-fired plants give us over 50 percent of our power generation in the country today."

Watkins said the Bush administration's proposals for reducing acid rain — essentially the same as those expected to be approved in the Senate on Tuesday — provide an example of the proper approach.

He warned against rapid action on fears that pollution is causing global warming, because "the degree of unknowns, the degree of uncertainties are so high."

Watkins is to present his proposals to President Bush by the end of this year. Bush is scheduled to endorse a national strategy early in 1991.

The interim report that Watkins released Monday is essentially a summary of public testimony the department received in 15 hearings and more than 1,000 written submissions since August.

Gary Morsches, director of energy futures trading for Access Energy Corp., watches the price of natural gas futures, which begins trading today for the first time ever on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Bayou town ready for gas trading

■ When natural gas begins trading today for the first time on the New York Mercantile Exchange, much of the focus will be on the tiny Cajun town of Erath, Louisiana which becomes a major delivery point for Texas, Louisiana and offshore gas.

Associated Press

When natural gas futures begin trading for the first time ever on Tuesday, the focus will be on the trading pit at the New York Mercantile Exchange but the ceremony will be in the Cajun prairie town of Erath.

Nymex chose Sabine Pipe Line Company's gas interchange center south of Lafayette in the Louisiana bayous as the designated delivery site for all futures contracts.

The first contract was to be delivered to Sabine's facility in the town of 2,100 during Tuesday ceremonies attended by officials of Nymex and Sabine, a subsidiary of Texaco.

The Erath facility is a pipeline that transports gas from Louisiana, Texas and the Outer Continental Shelf in the Gulf of Mexico.

Louisiana is the leading natural gas producer in the continental United States and a majority of the state's large pipelines pass through the jungle of pipes at Erath.

"The selection of Louisiana as the futures delivery point affirms Louisiana's role as a leader in the natural gas field," said Gov. Buddy Roemer.

Natural gas producers hope the move will have the same kind of effect on the industry as oil futures trading did once it began in 1978. Since then, Nymex trading largely has fixed the price of oil, even in the face of price-setting strategies by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"The oil industry has benefited from futures trading and the gas people are hoping for the same thing," said Ron Gomez, secretary of the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources.

Construction spending up 2.6 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending rose 2.6 percent in February, the government said today, as unusually warm weather continued across much of the nation.

The Commerce Department said residential, non-residential and government construction spending totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $436.5 billion.

That compared with a revised 2.5 percent gain the previous month, the warmest January on record. January spending was first reported last month to have rise 1.8 percent.

Spending in December, the fourth coldest since the government began keeping records 96 years ago, had slipped 0.3 percent.

All three major areas of spending advanced, with residential construction up 1.7 percent to $198.5 billion after gaining 2.9 percent in January.

Single-family spending rose 3.9 percent to $123.0 billion after a 2.8 percent increase the previous month. Apartment construction advanced 3.4 percent to $21.0 billion after falling 0.5 percent in January.

Non-residential spending rose 5.5 percent to $106.4 billion after a 6.1 percent jump in January. Industrial, office and other commercial building led the advance.

The volatile government sector advanced 2.1 percent to $93.8 billion after falling 2.0 percent a month earlier. Schools and other public buildings as well as highways and streets were the biggest gainers.

The total construction spending figure was up 4.8 percent from the level of building a year ago.

Parents pay college planners to help them look poorer

By Jane Bryant Quinn

Quinn

NEW YORK — A growing number of parents are tying their finances into knots, in order to qualify for college aid. They are paying "college planners" for advice on using legal loopholes, that will make the parents look poorer than they really are.

For example, the standard aid form requires you to report the money you keep in certificates of deposit and mutual funds. But it doesn't count money in life-insurance policies, tax-exempt annuities and 401(k) retirement plans. So parents are advised to shift into these vehicles. The lower your net worth, the more aid you're likely to get.

"We don't go the extra mile, searching for assets," agrees Donald Routh, Yale University's director of financial aid. "We don't look at 401(k)s or retirement plans."

Yale's most immediate concern, he says, is families who are advised by planners to commit fraud–by misstating the value of the assets they're supposed to report, or sweeping them entirely under the rug.

For example, the family of one Yale student on aid turned out to own an undisclosed business in New York City, with $1 million in receivables. Routh found it by checking the tax return. The family said the planner told them not to report it because it wasn't worth anything. Yale is investigating.

Michael Molitor of Janet's College Tuition Aid Counseling Service in Massapequa Park, N.Y., tells of a competing planner who tells parents–with a broad wink–to claim that they bought their house in 1967 for $30,000, even if that isn't true. That lowballs the value of their home equity.

Other aid applicants may misreport the number of children they have in college.

Colleges that examine tax returns may catch some of these frauds, but they're not equipped for total audits. New York University, for one, reviews its 23,000 aid applications largely by machine, and doesn't require tax returns for every student.

For protection, the government requires a school to verify 30 percent of all of its aid applications. The ones chosen for audit generally contain inconsistencies that suggest something might be amiss.

Manufacturing firm to locate in industrial park

Staff Report

Details of the move will be announced today at a 10 a.m. press conference.

Questions persist on wage law

■ The minimum wage law was increased recently, but many questions remain unanswered about who is qualifed and who is not.

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

April Fool's Day brought a higher minimum wage, and workers are hoping it's no joke.

"We've gotten a lot of calls from employers complaining (about the increase)," acknowledged Mary Scott Nabers, Commissioner with the Texas Employment Commission in Austin.

"The ones that are calling are, by and large, fast food restaurants and who hire younger workers. Some have said they won't be hiring as many extra workers, and many have said they'll pass the cost on to consumers."

As to whether the higher minimum wage could lead to permanent job losses, Nabers said only time would tell.

"It's hard to predict, because there's not a lot of historical data. It's been 10 years since we've had a change, and everything today is different from what it was 10 years ago."

The new law raises the minimum wage from $3.35 to $3.80 an hour, and also provides for a training wage of $3.35 an hour. There are, however restrictions on the new training wage.

First, it is for those under 20 years of age, and is in effect for only 90 days after a person is hired. The training wage also does not apply to seasonal or migrant workers, or to non-immigrant agricultural workers. Nor does it apply to public agencies, schools or hospitals. It will expire March 31, 1993.

To use the training wage, employers must provide "job-specific skills" training and personal skills instruction. The Department of Labor interprets the training wage as principally for new hires.

The new wage law also exempts companies with annual gross sales of $500,000 or under.

However, cautioned Burt Clyde, compliance officer with the DOL's Wage and Hour Division in Albuquerque, N.M., those small businesses shouldn't think they're off the hook yet.

"A business with sales of $500,000 or less may be exempt from the enterprise rules, but they're still covered under individual rules," he said, such as employees involved in interstate commerce.

He cited as an example, someone working in the circulation department who sends out newspapers and handles credit cards. Because he's dealing with interstate commerce, he's entitled to the full minimum wage.

Because federal laws regarding wages and wage categories are so complicated, each case should be evaluated individually.

Rather than risk paying the wrong wage and becoming liable for fines and back wages, Clyde recommends businesses contact the Labor Department's Wage and Hour division.

"There's no sense taking changes," he said. "Ignorance of the law is no excuse."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Spousal IRA, maximum contribution is $2,250

By Bill Doyle

Q. My husband and I will turn 63 this year. He put $2,500 in an individual retirement account, one-half in his name and one-half in my name. The money is in a certificate due to mature very soon. What do we do when the maturity date rolls around?

Doyle

A. Let's back up a bit and get some things clarified.

We'll assume you're talking about a "spousal IRA." That type of IRA can be set up when one spouse is working and the other is unemployed.

If all the money went into a spousal IRA the same year, the maximum contribution was $2,250. Actually, with a spousal IRA, there are two accounts, one for the husband and one for the wife. No more than $2,000 can go into either spouse's account annually. You two split the contribution evenly, so that is no problem — unless the total annual contribution exceeded $2,250.

In that event, an excess contribution was made and the excess — the amount over $2,250, or $250 in your case — should have been withdrawn by the date your federal income tax return was due for the year in which the excess contribution was made.

Here's the bad news. You are required to pay a 6 percent excise tax for each year an excess amount remains in your IRA. Let's hope your letter misstated the amount that went into the spousal IRA.

The "certificate" you mention, no doubt is a certificate of deposit or other "term" account with a specified maturity date. And there are two certificates involved, one is your IRA and one in your husband's account.

When they mature, they can be renewed or moved to other IRA investments, such as stocks, bonds and mutual funds. But CDs are sensible IRA vehicles, especially for folks who have little investment experience.

Unless you are strapped for cash, renewing your IRA CDs would be wise. Leave the money in the two IRAs until you reach age 70 1/2 and federal regulations force you to start withdrawing it.

Q. I have a CD at 7.4 percent simple interest. I receive the interest every six months. As a result, my CD stays at $70,000. Not many banks around here compound interest. How much am I losing by not getting compound interest?

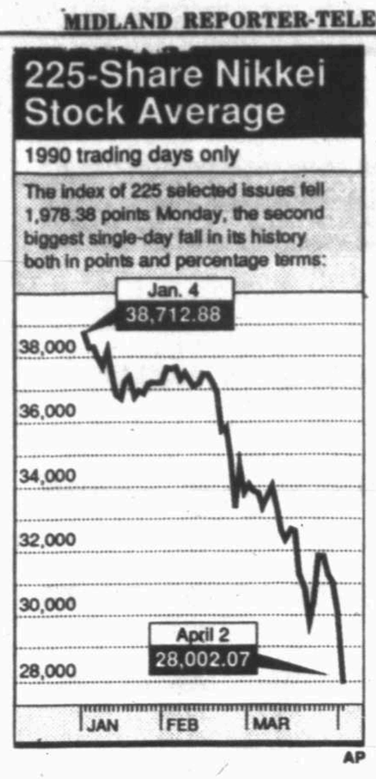

A. At the most, $196 a year. That's not to be sneezed at, so why not look hard for banks that compound interest.

At 7.4 percent simple interest, your $70,000 is earning $5,180 a year. If the 7.4 percent interest was compounded daily, the annual effective yield would be 7.68 percent. At 7.68 percent, your $70,000 would earn $5,376 annually.

Daily compounding, of course, is the most frequent. Compounding 7.4 percent interest less frequently — monthly, quarterly or semiannually — would result in annual effective yields lower than 7.68 percent.

Nikkei has biggest drop since 1987

TOKYO — Stocks plunged 6.6 percent Monday in their worst day since the global crash of October, 1987.

The closely-watched Nikkei index of 225 selected issues took its second worst drubbing in history, falling 1978.38 points in thin trading to close at 28,002.07 yen.

Monday's debacle washed out 32 trillion yen ($200 billion) from the Tokyo Stock Exchange, which has lost 28 percent of its value since the first of the year. By comparison, the Nikkei fell 22 percent during the global crash of 1987, before rising to a new peak of 38,915.87 last Dec. 29.

Driving the current tailspin have been surging interest rates, inflation concerns and a free-falling yen, which hit a three-year low against the dollar Monday.

The greenback closed at 159.95 yen, up 2.3 yen for the day, despite efforts by the central Bank of Japan to prop up the Japanese currency by selling hundreds of millions of dollars to buy yen.

Some analysts predicted continuing losses on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, with pessimists saying the Nikkei could fall several thousand more points before hitting bottom.

"The market's searching for a new bottom, and it's a lot lower than we're at now," said Paul Summerville, economist at Jardine Fleming Securities Ltd.

"It's pretty frightening, actually," said Kurt Hahn, market analyst for the Tokyo offices of UBS Phillips & Drew International Ltd., a Swiss investment firm. "Depending on how the yen fares overnight in New York and London, we could very well go down another 500 or 1000 points again tomorrow (Tuesday)."

Monday was the first day of Japan's new fiscal year. Institutional investors registered their pessimism by staying on the sidelines while individuals dumped shares to raise cash.

Buyers were scarce or nonexistent as prices plunged on a newspaper report that institutional investors were planning to jettison shares.

The nation's most influential financial daily, the "Nihon Keizai Shimbun," reported that many of Japan's largest life insurance companies plan to start off the new fiscal year by shedding hundreds of billions of yen worth of stocks from their portfolios.

The article named such giants as Dai Ichi Mutual Life, Sumitomo Mutual Life and Nippon Life among a long list of institutional investors that, the paper reported, plan to cut their losses by dumping stocks onto the bear market.

Later Monday, some large institutional investors denied the reports.

Texas cotton farmers will up acreage

Associated Press

Cotton farmers across the state anticipate a 20 percent increase in acreage this year, meaning they will plant about 45 percent of the nation's crop.

Texas will go from 4.6 million acres last year to 5.5 million acres of cotton this year. Nationwide, cotton acreage will be up 17 percent to a total of 12.4 million acres, according to results of a federal prospective plantings survey.

Strong demand for cotton in the United States and worldwide and a gradual uptrend in prices are behind the optimism of Texas growers, said David Oefinger of Victoria, executive director of the South Texas Cotton and Grain Association.

Some are planting outside the federal farm program, which provides the backup of government supports and price guarantees, "so you know they are hoping it will be pretty good," Oefinger said.

The acreage of high-value Pima cotton, which has extra-long fibers, will stay the same in Texas — about 80,000 acres. Nationally, there is a 27 percent decline in Pima planting.

Another factor boosting cotton is better weather so far this year. The Coastal Bend and Lower Rio Grande Valley, which were extremely dry last year, had sufficient moisture for planting this spring.

Planting has progressed northward to the extent that it is beginning in Central Texas, Oefinger said.

The cotton acreage increase in Texas is coming out of acres idled by government programs and acres that in previous years were planted in other crops. As a result, grain sorghum will be down 11 percent in Texas this year, from 3.5 million acres to 3.1 million acres.

Soybean acreage in Texas will drop by 20 percent, from 500,000 acres last year to about 400,000 this year.

Rice, however, will increase 7 percent.

GAS: Gas futures trade set to begin today

(From 4C)

A futures contract is an obligation to buy or sell a prescribed quantity of goods to be delivered at a future date at a price agreed upon in advance.

Both producers and consumers use futures as a hedge against fluctuating prices, buying or selling them to lock in the prices at which they buy or sell raw goods, eliminating some of their financial risk.

"It can work the same way for gas," said Vic Tompkins of the Louisiana Mineral Resources Division. "But, remember, the futures market involves a lot of gambling. The pit can be like a casino."

In addition to those wanting to hedge against price fluctuations, futures attract speculators who buy contracts essentially to gamble on future price movements.

The trading of natural gas futures, which first was proposed to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission in 1984, reflects the enormous growth in the spot market for natural gas as federal price controls have been lifted.

Deregulation of the natural gas market began in 1978, and remaining price controls will be lifted by 1993.

Nachamah Jacobovits of Nymex said the exchange doesn't expect as much speculative dealing in gas as there is in oil. That's why Sabine is excited about its Henry Hub center in Erath.

The contract with Nymex "will assist Sabine in achieving its goal of making the Henry Hub the premier location for trading natural gas in the United States," said Jagjit S. Yadav of Houston, president of the pipeline company.

"We believe that futures contract trading will encourage the development of a more efficient natural gas market and be of benefit to the natural gas industry and its customers," he said.

QUINN: Going to college the cheapest way possible

(From 4C)

Sometimes, a planner's games simply leave you poorer. For example, you might buy an annuity to lower your reported net worth, then find that the college will not give you the extra aid you expected. If this happens, the planner might return your $300 or $400 fee. But he or she might have earned $1,000 or more in commissions by selling you the annuity, which you can't dump without paying an exit fee.

"It's a big hype for selling annuities and insurance," Molitor says. "Any extra aid you get isn't worth tying your money up." Shifting $10,000 from a CD into an annuity might–might–earn you an extra $500 in college aid.

But some weasel ideas work. For example, take the independent-student ploy. About 15 to 20 well-to-do families with students at Kansas State University recently amended their tax returns for 1987 and 1988, removing their children as tax dependents, reports Larry Viterna, KSU's director of financial aid.

That, plus a few other steps, let the students qualify as self-supporting "independents." They then applied for federally funded Pell Grants based entirely on their own incomes, rather than on the incomes of their parents. Previously, they were ineligible for aid. But as independents, they got up to $2,300 each.

"Most of these families are doing this because a consultant is telling them how," Viterna says.

In the past, college-aid officers could reject these manipulative claims. But two years ago, Congress took away their right to independent judgment about Pell Grants, so now the money has to be given. "To level the playing field," Viterna says, he has put together a three-page document about how to qualify as an independent. "We don't think that people should have to pay planners for this information."

There's much talk in college-aid circles about how to fight back against these abuses.

AT WIT'S END

Candles burn at both ends on birthday cakes

By Erma Bombeck

I had an aunt and uncle who had eight kids. Since money was tight, the kids' birthdays were limited to a cake. That was it. I was at their house one night when my aunt jumped up and said, "What time is it?" I said, "It's 10 o'clock."

Bombeck

She rushed to the kitchen, whipped out a boxed cake mix, dumped it in a pan, baked it, slapped on the icing hot, shook the kid out of a sound sleep at 11:30 and shouted in his ear, "Happy birthday! Eat!"

I remember this story only because of an item I read in the paper the other day describing how the mothers of today observe their children's birthdays. They've gone beyond a cake, balloons, and a few clothespins to drop in a mayonnaise jar. They've outgrown the magicians and clowns at the house. They've found that bowling parties, miniature golf, pizza parlors and hayrides are lacking. Celebrations now are $3 short of a wedding.

What does it take to hold the attention of a birthday child these days? In Florida, for $50 per child your little girl and her friends can be picked up in a limousine and transported to a beauty salon where each will have a hairstyle and a manicure, along with party decorations, food, favors, a balloon bouquet, and a corsage for the birthday girl.

It gives rise to the question, Where will all this end? Will Lisa's mother fly the gang to San Diego to ride Shamu? Will Sara's mother give every little guest $100 each and send them to a stockbroker to play Wall Street? Will Debbie's mom pick up the phone and say to her secretary, "Saturday is Debbie's birthday. Get me David Wolper. Tell him I want a show — something like he did for the Olympics."

Turning a simple celebration into a major moment in history is a trend that is getting out of control. I expect any day to see a senior class on prom night board a space shuttle and visit another planet. Adults are no exception. A nice little anniversary card is now topped by renting a billboard for your message. The late Malcolm Forbes took his birthday on the road ... to Morocco. And the practice of surprising the guest with a candlelit cake has now turned into a personal appearance by a male stripper.

Me? It's a good day if my candles don't set off the smoke alarm.

Non-stick baking spray performs under fire

By Linda Anderson

Baking at home is a tricky job — not only do you have to follow directions, mixing the right amounts of ingredients at the right time, but you have to use the right oven temperature (allowing, of course, for differences in individual ovens) and the right pans. And before you do anything else, you have to prepare the pan properly so your creation will look as good coming out of the pan as it did going in. Nothing is quite as frustrating to a home baker as having the half of the cake come out of the pan, while the other half stays stuck firmly in.

Anderson

Baker's Joy, from Alberto-Culver USA Inc., was designed to help in just this situation. It's supposed to combine vegetable oil and flour in a baking spray, so customers can be assured that the whole cake will come out of the pan at one time.

So confident, in fact, is the company about its product that they sent us a can of Baker's Joy to the office. I, of course, got the honor of taking it home and checking it out for advertising accuracy and price. (It's supposed to be tasteless.)

Information from the company claims that "Baker's Joy is the only baking spray that combines enriched flour and pure vegetable oil for no-fuss, no-mess baking and easy clean-up. In one easy step, Baker's Joy greases and flours baking sheets and pans completely, reaching even the most difficult corners. There is no wasted flour, no greasy mess and no sticking. The product is cholesterol and sodium free and adds no odor or taste to baked goods.

"Baker's Joy is specially developed for everything that is baked, including cakes, cookies, breads, brownies, muffins, pancakes, pizza, cupcakes and casseroles. It may be used with any boxed mix or scratch recipe.

"Baker's Joy is particularly effective for pans that are difficult to grease and flour, including bundt, spring form, quiche and unusually-shaped pans, as well as for decorative molds."

The price suggested by the company is $2.19 for a 4-ounce aerosol can. That's probably close to what prices are here locally.

For the actual test, we decided baking pans were too easy — we sprayed the the frying pan and made scrambled eggs. One of my young taste-testers is learning to cook, and scrambled eggs is her specialty, so she was the chief cook in this experiment.

We followed directions for spraying — hold the can about six inches away from the pan and spray lightly — but it came out heavier on some parts of the pan than others, so the result was kind of globby. The product seemed more greasy than floury, although it was white. I had to get a paper towel and rub it around the pan to make it more evenly distributed. And of course the young cook was pointing out, "it said 'spray lightly,' Mom!"

Well, we did find out that yes, Baker's Joy does make clean-up easier. The eggs came out of the pan without strain, what was left washed out easily, and the product added no taste of its own to the dish.

But I can't help wondering — after all we've heard over the past few years about aerosal cans and holes in the ozone, is anything in a spray can completely safe? Maybe I'll just stick to butter, flour and possibly broken cakes and eggs stuck in the frying pan.

Shopping experts compile list of 'dos and don'ts' for consumers

Associated Press

Two of New York's top shoppers, consumer reporter Sharon King Hoge and fashion stylist Vanessa Boren, were recently handed $300 each for a shopping spree.

Their whirlwind excursion, underwritten by Ladies' Home Journal, provides an informative list of "dos and don'ts" for millions of Americans who love to shop.

Hoge, who gives people advice on how to spend their money wisely, says savvy shoppers should splurge on black or gray basics and add color with less-expensive items.

Boren, who regularly scouts the market for advertising and editorial fashion photography, suggests that impulse buyers make a list of what is really needed before going shopping.

More advice:

- Carry small fabric swatches from the inside seams of items to be matched.
- Always check the sale rack first, not last.
- Go for quality over quantity.

DEAR ABBY

Holiday birthday babies feel forgotten, unloved

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In response to "A Capricorn," who felt sorry for herself because she had a birthday so close to Christmas:

Van Buren

How would you like to have a Jan. 1 birthday? Almost everyone stays out late on New Year's Eve, and they're either too tired or hung over to remember your birthday. Besides, they're all broke from Christmas shopping.

I'm 70 years old and didn't even have a birthday cake until I was 50, when my daughter surprised me. I came from a large farm family. My mother did a lot of holiday baking, and she couldn't afford to make a special birthday cake for me. Gifts? Forget it.

When my children were old enough to get an allowance, they saved up and bought me a birthday present. I could tell you more, but I think I've made my point. — DOROTHY IN SACRAMENTO

DEAR DOROTHY: You think you were slighted on your birthday? Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I was born in December. So was my husband, same day, so every year we receive one birthday card for the two of us from one of his relatives. The all-time classic was received this year in our Christmas card. It contained the usual printed jargon, was signed by "Harry and Mabel" — and included a P.S. wishing us both a happy birthday! Talk about economizing! Two Christmas greetings plus two birthday greetings — all in one.

I am tempted to send one joint card to Harry and Mabel on Harry's birthday, and include Mabel in the P.S. (Their birthdays are three months apart.) Think they'll get the hint? — SLIGHTED

DEAR ABBY: I just had to write about my late husband's Dec. 12 birthday. One year my sister forgot his birthday completely, but at Christmastime she arrived with a rather large suit box. Half of it was wrapped in birthday wrapping paper and the other half was wrapped in Christmas paper.

Inside the box was a pair of pajamas — the tops were for his birthday and the bottoms were for Christmas! — R.E.W. IN OHIO

DEAR ABBY: My father was born on Dec. 25. When he and I went to Europe for a vacation last summer, as we were going through customs, a cheerful young woman looked at his passport and exclaimed, "Oh — a Christmas baby!" Dad was 88 years old. — GERALDINE IN HARTFORD

DEAR ABBY: I am utterly disgusted with people who whine because they were born in the month of December when people sometimes combine their birthday gift with their Christmas gift.

I have my own theory about birthday gifts: I think everyone should send his mother a gift on his OWN birthday. After all, who but his mother gave him the most precious gift of all — life?

And as far as Christmas gifts are concerned, that has turned into a gigantic commercial circus. If Christians want to celebrate the birth of Christ, let them make a donation to their church.

No name, please. I have to live in this town. — HATES GIFT-GIVING

DEAR ABBY: The letters you have received (and the heat which they have generated) regarding the etiquette of an invited guest bringing a "date" or an escort to a wedding is happily irrelevant in the Episcopal Church, where the distinction between the wedding and the reception is essential.

The reception is a private party, and as such can be anything the newly married couple wants it to be — catered, black-tie, open buffet or a public dance on the town green.

The wedding, on the other hand, is a religious service — a solemn and public covenant in the presence of God. As such, questioning the appropriateness of bringing a guest is itself inappropriate; church services, whether the Sunday Eucharist, a baptism, funeral, or in this case, a wedding, are — by definition and theological necessity — open and public.

If the single woman wishes to bring a friend, a date or an entire Cub Scout troop to the wedding, she's welcome. If she wishes to bring someone to the reception, she should wait for the express invitation of those hosting, and paying for, the affair. — FATHER FRANCIS C. ZANGER, ST. JAMES EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ARLINGTON, VT.

Freedom call

Lithuanians carry posters calling for freedom and independence at a rally in Vilnius Monday. Lithuania invited Soviet officials to visit Vilnius on Monday and sent a delegation to Moscow in hopes of beginning talks toward resolving a tense standoff over the Baltic republic's declaration of independence.

Contra commander reportedly agrees to demobilize forces

MONTELIMAR, Nicaragua (AP) — President Rafael Leonardo Callejas of Honduras said Monday the top military commander of the Contra rebels has agreed to disband his forces.

In an accord March 23, a lower-ranking Contra commander agreed to demobilize. But deep divisions remain in the rebel ranks, with many rank-and-file fighters saying they won't lay down their arms by the time the new Nicaraguan government takes office on April 25.

Callejas made his announcement when he arrived in Nicaragua for a two-day summit with four other Central American presidents in Montelimar, a new beach resort 40 miles from the capital, Managua.

The top item on the agenda was demobilizing the U.S.-backed Contras, who have waged a 10-year war against Nicaragua's leftist government.

Callejas said top rebel commander Israel Galeano, also known as Commander Franklyn, had assured him the Contras would disband by the time President-elect Violeta Barrios de Chamorro is sworn in.

The Honduran president spoke with reporters after meetings with Mrs. Chamorro and Roman Catholic Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo in Managua. The cardinal witnessed the March accord in Honduras between Contras representatives and those of Mrs. Chamorro.

There have been doubts about the viability of the accord because Galeano did not sign it and thousands of Contras have since returned to Nicaragua with their guns.

The accord said the rebels in Honduran base camps would demobilize by April 20, but it did not set a deadline for those on Nicaraguan territory. In addition, many of the rebels who were in Honduras have reportedly slipped back into Nicaragua.

But Callejas said Monday that Galeano has assured him his forces will disband by April 25.

President Oscar Arias of Costra Rica spoke enthusiastically of peace prospects when he arrived in Managua on Monday.

He said Callejas "has brought me the good news that the Contras and Commander Franklyn are in total agreement on complete demobilization."

Arias said that "never before in the last 3½ years have we felt as optimistic as now."

Arias won the Nobel Peace prize in 1987 for working out the first of a series of Central American peace accords aimed at ending civil wars in the region.

He said he was certain the region's presidents would reach an agreement that would encourage the Contras to hand over their guns to a U.N. demobilization force.

As for the civil war in El Salvador, Arias said he expected "substantive" agreements on a dialogue between the U.S.-backed rightist government and the leftist guerrillas.

Also attending the summit are Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani, Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo and outgoing Sandinista President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Truck bomb kills six in El Salvador attack

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A pickup truck crammed with explosives blew up near the National Police Academy on Monday while cadets were doing their morning exercises, killing six people and injuring 27, the military said.

The armed forces blamed the attack on urban commandos of the leftist Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, which has been at war with a series of U.S.-backed governments for a decade.

One police officer, four cadets and a civilian died in the 6:30 a.m. blast, the armed forces said. It said 24 cadets and three civilians were wounded.

Witnesses said the explosion shattered the pickup, pelted nearby homes with shrapnel and sent the iron door of a warehouse flying several yards.

The bombing was the worst urban attack since a huge rebel offensive in the capital launched in November. The FMLN blamed that bombing on the military. There was no claim of responsibility for the attack Monday.

Bombs rock Athens facilities

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Bombs rocked two ministries and the buildings housing the nation's industrialist and labor unions early Tuesday in downtown Athens, police said. There were no immediate reports of injuries.

A police spokesman said the 2:20 a.m. explosions ripped through the National Economy and Transport ministries, the Federation of Greek Industrialists and the General Confederation of Greek Trade Unions.

The officer said an anonymous caller to a newspaper claimed the Popular Armed Struggle urban guerrilla group had planted the bombs. The group has called for voters to boycott Sunday's national elections.

The group has been involved in bombing targets of a mainly economic nature since 1974 but none of its attacks have ever caused fatalities.

Row flares over airman

UTRECHT, Netherlands (AP) — The U.S. Embassy on Monday denied allegations it tried to kidnap from jail an Air Force sergeant convicted of killing his wife.

U.S. military efforts to gain custody of the man have angered Dutch officials.

The controversy stems from an incident Friday night, when eight U.S. enlisted men and officers came to the Utrecht jail where Staff Sgt. Charles D. Short is housed. The Dutch High Court was to rule on his extradition the same day.

The court later ruled against the U.S. extradition request because Short, 34, of Highwood, Ill., could face the death penalty in the United States for the 1988 slaying.

The episode made front-page news in several major Dutch newspapers. The nation's most reputable newspaper, NRC Handelsblad, described it as a "kidnapping" attempt in its headline.

Mandela asks for peace

IMBALI, South Africa (AP) — Nelson Mandela stood on a muddy hilltop Monday in Natal province's "Valley of Death" and pleaded for peace, while members of warring Zulu factions glared at each other from opposite ridges.

"This violence must end," said Mandela, vice president of the anti-apartheid African National Congress. He was speaking to about 200 ANC supporters in Imbali, a township where rival blacks have battled since 1983.

The main combatants are ANC supporters and backers of the Inkatha party, which is headed by Zulu homeland leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi.

Since heavy fighting began in 1986, more than 4,000 blacks have died in southeastern Natal Province. The battles have intensified the past week, with at least 53 killed, hundreds injured and thousands made homeless.

When the sun sets after soaking autumn rains on the grassy hills of Edendale Valley, the night brings the sound of gunshots, screams and the explosion of gasoline bombs.

Tougher security slated

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk said Monday he would send police and military reinforcements to a troubled province where hundreds of blacks have died in a virtual civil war between rival factions.

De Klerk also said he would meet African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela on Thursday, and he proposed an amnesty for politically motivated criminal acts.

"It is difficult to understand why an organization saying it is interested in peace refuses to come and talk about that very issue," de Klerk told Parliament in Cape Town.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your energy will serve you well if you harness it wisely. A younger person will play a large role in your future this summer; concentrate on setting a good example. Change and variety will be especially attractive in September. Be careful not to overdo it. Spend more of your leisure time in examination of life's mysteries. Travel and romance will be strongly linked in December. You could find a kindred soul!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: superstar Eddie Murphy, singer Doris Day, entertainer Wayne Newton, actress Marsha Mason.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Finances require careful handling. Back an emotional decision with logical arguments. Spending more time with family members will bring you the affection and sympathy you seek.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are entering a period of big changes. Grab every interesting opportunity that comes your way. New professional alliances are indicated. Patience will help reduce stress in a personal relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Happily, your energy level is highest in late morning. Schedule interviews and auditions accordingly. Mull over your long-term goals. Realize that, to truly forgive, you have to forget.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Heed your intuitive feeling about a monetary matter. Unusual ideas arouse the interest of important people. A promotion or pay raise is in the offing. Be very careful who you share confidences with.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A great day for career and business matters. Avoid haste. An influential higher-up is impressed by your conservative approach. You meet someone new in the most unlikely place! Finances should be looking good.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An aggressive manner pays off in business, but not in romance. Consideration and understanding are your greatest allies in affairs of the heart. Play your cards carefully. Loved one may be testing you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get out and about today. Make the most of influential social contacts. The support of a prominent associate convinces you that you are on the right track at last. Look ahead with confidence.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be wary of too many coincidences where a financial matter is concerned. Make a special effort to repay a past favor. A friend who discusses personal problems really wants sympathy, not advice!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A financial question must be resolved without delay. A creative project could boost your income. Get in touch with influential friends who might help you. A relationship needs overhauling.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A no-nonsense attitude will sit well with those who matter most right now. Give top priority to insurance and tax matters. A new friend pays you a well-deserved compliment. Accept it gracefully.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A work project should get top priority today. Curb an urge to rest on your laurels and daydream. A change of plans may irritate mate or partner. Explain the urgency of the situation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A conversation with a warmhearted relative cheers you. Someone who cares will urge you to be more adventuresome. Think about it. Inspiration could come from an unusual experience. Romance is thrilling.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are dynamic, spontaneous and courageous. Independence and the freedom to discover things for themselves are vital to these Aries. Making their own mistakes seems to be the only way they learn about life. These Rams find it difficult to save money; they live for "now." They find it difficult to concentrate on one project for a long time. Encourage them to break large jobs down into several small steps. These Aries will need to learn diplomacy to find happy romance.
