Beto O'Rourke DWI episode included car crash

■ Senate candidate's case was more serious than previously known

By Kevin Diaz
Houston Chronicle

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke has long owned up to his drunken driving arrest 20 years ago, describing it in a Houston Chronicle/San Antonio Express-News op-ed piece earlier this week as a "serious mistake for which there is no excuse."

Although the arrest has been public knowledge, police reports of the September 1998 incident — when the Democratic Senate candidate had just turned 26 — show that it was a more serious threat to public safety than has previously been reported.

State and local police reports obtained by the Chronicle and Express-News show that O'Rourke was driving drunk at what a witness called "a high rate of speed" in a 75 mph zone on Interstate 10 about a mile from the New Mexico border. He lost control and hit a truck, sending his car careening across the center median into oncoming lanes. The witness, who stopped at the scene, later told police that O'Rourke had tried to drive away from the scene.

O'Rourke recorded a 0.136 and 0.134 on police breathalyzers, well above the legal limit of 0.08 in Texas. He was arrested at the scene and charged with DWI, but completed a court-approved diversion program and had the charges dismissed.

In a statement Thursday, O'Rourke did not address the witness account of his alleged attempt to flee.

"I drove drunk and was arrested for a DWI in 1998," O'Rourke said. "As I've publicly discussed over the last 20 years, I made a serious mistake for which there is no excuse."

That and a separate arrest for jumping a fence at a University of Texas-El Paso facility have long been a matter of record in O'Rourke's public life, both on the El Paso City Council and in Congress. But the unexplained details of the crash and DWI in Anthony, a suburb about 20 miles north of El Paso that borders New Mexico, could now emerge as a potential attack point in his quest to unseat Texas Republican Ted Cruz.

The Cruz campaign declined to comment Thursday on the police report. Recent

Permian gains 1 rig for total of 486; Midland has 58, up 3

From staff reports

The Permian Basin, after gaining a rig, stands at 486 this week, according to oil field services company Baker Hughes. Of that total, Midland County has 58 rigs; up three. Despite losing eight rigs from a week ago, Reeves still leads the Permian with 74.

Texas' total for the week is 528, unchanged; New Mexico's total is 102, down one. The U.S. total is 1,048, an increase of four rigs.

Other double-digit totals in the Permian are: Lea, 51, unchanged; Eddy, 46, down 1; Martin, 35, down one; Loving, 30, up one; Howard, 28, up five; Upton, 24, down one; Ward, 22, up four; Pecos, 21, up one; Reagan, 19, up three; Winkler, 18, down two; and Culberson, 15, unchanged.

US nuke repository eyes 2nd New Mexico waste trucks route

Hobbs News-Sun

HOBBS, N.M. — Officials at the U.S. government's only underground nuclear waste repository are hoping to designate a secondary route for waste trucks in southeastern New Mexico.

The Hobbs News-Sun reports the group that manages the U.S. Department of Energy's Waste Isolation Pilot Plant near Carlsbad, New Mexico, is seeking a new secondary route around Hobbs.

Nuclear Waste Partnership spokesman Bobby St. John says around 90 WIPP employees live in Hobbs.

St. John said officials are trying to avoid state Highway 128 even as a

3 kids among dozens injured in deadly New Mexico bus crash

By Susan Montoya Bryan
Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Three children, including two infants, were among the dozens of passengers seriously injured when the commercial bus they were riding in was hit head-on by a semitruck on a New Mexico highway, killing eight people, hospital officials said Friday.

Officials at University of New Mexico Hospital in Albuquerque said 10 patients are hospitalized there, including three adults who are in intensive care, one of whom is in critical condition.

Some patients were expected to undergo surgery Friday and today. While doctors declined to offer specifics, they said the patients that came in during the hours that followed Thursday's crash on Interstate 40 near the Arizona border had injuries that ranged from head trauma to spine fractures and other broken bones.

"Several of them will have a long road of recovery ahead," said Sonlee West, director of the hospital's trauma unit. "We have been in contact with family members of several of the patients, and several of them have been able to talk to their families."

The crash killed eight people and injured many of the 49 people aboard the Greyhound bus heading to Phoenix from Albuquerque. Several passengers were being treated Friday at hospitals in the Gallup area, about 30 miles from the crash site.

Authorities said Friday they were working on positively identifying those who were killed through fingerprints and other means.

The semitrailer was headed east on the freeway Thursday afternoon when one of its tires blew, sending the rig carrying produce across the median and into oncoming traffic, where it slammed into the bus, New Mexico State Police said.

Passing motorists described a chaotic scene with passengers on the ground and people screaming.

Eric Huff was heading to the Grand Canyon with his girlfriend when they came across the crash. The semi's trailer was upside down and "shredded to pieces," and the front of the bus was smashed, he said, with many of the seats pressed together.

Truck driver Santos Soto III shot video showing the front of the Greyhound sheared off and the semi split open, with its contents strewn across the highway. He saw people sobbing on the side of the road as bystanders tried to comfort them.

"I was really traumatized myself, because I've been driving about two years and I had never seen anything like that before," Soto said.

Officer who pointed gun at kids cleared of wrongdoing

A Texas police officer who was captured on video pointing a firearm at children is back on duty after a disciplinary review board cleared him of wrongdoing.

El Paso Police Chief Greg Allen announced the decision Thursday. Allen says the 13-member board of civilians and police officers found El Paso Officer Jose Rios did not wrongfully draw and point his weapon. He says Rios only pointed his gun at one boy who he thought was a "deadly threat."

A video viewed millions of times online shows Rios pointing the gun at the children then arresting a teenager who was recording the confrontation.

Allen says an accusation that the officer choked a boy at the scene was unfounded.

Houston METRO halts Harvey ads that feature wrong hurricane

Transit officials in Houston have halted a TV commercial praising the agency's response to last year's Harvey flooding because the spot wrongly showed 2005 video from Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans.

The Houston Chronicle reports Metropolitan Transit Authority officials Thursday pulled the commercial made by South Coast Film and Video.

METRO spokesman Jerome Gray says agency officials believe the company used stock footage thought to be from Hurricane Harvey. Gray says METRO officials were informed Thursday of the mistake and stopped airing the ad.

Harvey hit South Texas last August, leading to heavy rain that swamped parts of Houston. The commercial praised METRO employees who contributed to recovery and relief, including driving high water vehicles to help emergency responders enter flooded areas.

Details weren't immediately provided on an updated spot.

Court declines review in cheerleaders banner lawsuit

The Texas Supreme Court has declined to review an appeal of a lower court's decision that said cheerleaders' banners with Bible verses at football games are protected private speech.

The Kountze (koontz) School District had appealed last year's ruling by the 9th Court of Appeals in Beaumont that had said the Bible verses on the banners were not government speech that could be regulated by school officials.

David Starnes, an attorney for the cheerleaders, tells KFDM-TV Friday's ruling means that cheerleaders throughout Texas "can freely express their sincerely held religious beliefs while representing their school."

The cheerleaders filed suit in 2012 after the school district said the banners couldn't be displayed. The district later allowed the banners but said it retained the right to restrict their content.

Rookie Gallup police officer honored for saving suicidal man

GALLUP — A rookie Gallup police officer has received an award for risking his own life to save a suicidal young man from an oncoming train that nearly missed both of them.

Gallup Police Officer Patrick Largo, who became a certified officer in May, received a Life Saving Award on Tuesday for his heroic actions on Aug. 15.

He says that at the time, he didn't think about how dangerous the situation was. He says he simply knew he had to do his job.

The Gallup Independent reports that after Largo got the man to safety, Largo handcuffed the man to prevent him from trying to jump on the tracks again.

The man was eventually taken to Gallup Indian Medical Center for an evaluation.

Trump to stump for one-time rival Cruz in Texas in October

By Will Weissert and Steve Peoples
Associated Press

AUSTIN — President Donald Trump says he'll ride to the rescue of one-time bitter rival Sen. Ted Cruz this fall, the strongest indication yet that the Texas conservative firebrand is getting nervous about his challenger, a liberal darling with a growing national profile.

Trump tweeted Friday that he will headline "a major rally" for Cruz in October and is "picking the biggest stadium in Texas we can find." He added, "Ted has my complete and total Endorsement (sic)," and called Democratic Rep. Beto O'Rourke "a disaster for Texas - weak on Second Amendment, Crime, Borders, Military, and Vets!"

The tweet of support was a long way from Trump's previous assessment of Cruz' record. He once declared the senator "has accomplished absolutely nothing" for Texans. Cruz has labeled Trump "a sniveling coward." But the promise of presidential assistance suggested Cruz — and his party — are feeling the heat. Trump has long planned to travel to bolster Republican candidates before November's midterm elections, but he was not expected to spend valuable time in reliably-red Texas for a race that for months looked like a Cruz cakewalk.

"Either Ted Cruz is in trouble or it's a remarkable waste of the president's resources," said Republican strategist Rick Tyler, who worked for Cruz's presidential campaign.

The Texas Senate seat, Tyler noted, was supposed to be the GOP's "safest seat this cycle."

Trump's announcement was also likely to further intensify the hype around O'Rourke, who has consistently outraised Cruz and has rocketed to national stardom in recent weeks. Video of O'Rourke, who is giving up his El Paso House seat to run, defending NFL players' right to protest the national anthem has been viewed by millions and was praised by NBA star LeBron James.

National magazines have speculated that O'Rourke could be a vice presidential pick in 2020, or perhaps run for the White House — even if he doesn't pull off the upset in Texas, which hasn't elected a Democrat to statewide office since 1994, the nation's longest political losing streak.

Yet Cruz's race appears to be far tighter than the state's history would suggest.

Those close to Cruz's campaign report that internal polling shows O'Rourke trailing by just 5 or 6 percentage points, which is in line with recent public polls.

Republicans across Texas and Washington have become most concerned with the Democrat's prolific fundraising. Cruz has raised more money than any other Republican Senate candidate this cycle so far. And O'Rourke, who reported having raised nearly $24 million through June, could ultimately double Cruz's fundraising, despite shunning support of outside political groups.

Cruz has repeatedly attacked his opponent, doing everything from referring to him by his full name, Robert, to criticizing O'Rourke for voting against a bill offering tax breaks for Harvey victims. So far, little has slowed O'Rourke's rise.

A super PAC aligned with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said Friday it was prepared to help if necessary. That's despite Cruz's charge, two years ago, that McConnell was a "liar."

"We'll be there for Ted Cruz if he needs us. We're team players," said Chris Pack of the McConnell-backed Senate Leadership Fund.

Trump's announcement followed a series of private discussions between the White House and the Cruz campaign about how the Republican president, who handily won Texas in 2016, could be most helpful, according to Republicans with direct knowledge of the discussions but who asked for anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter.

But even in the red state, a Trump visit carries some political risks, particularly in areas with higher concentrations of suburban and minority voters.

Republicans expect Trump to be able to fill a sports stadium, as he suggested on Twitter, although there is some concern that an appearance at a place like Dallas Cowboys stadium in Arlington, which is set between Dallas and Fort Worth, could do more harm than good by energizing O'Rourke's supporters.

Other locations would be more welcome, including Texas A&M's stadium in College Station, which holds more than 100,000 or Texas Tech's in Lubbock which holds roughly 60,000.

A Cruz spokeswoman did not return messages about discussions on scheduling or location for a joint rally with Trump.

Cruz said in recent weeks that he wouldn't be surprised if Trump came to Texas to campaign. But unlike many other Republicans, he hasn't directly appealed for a presidential visit. Asked after a recent rally whether he would need Trump's help, Cruz dodged.

"What we need to win in November is for Texans to show up and vote," he said. "This election is about turnout."

A Trump visit could be the latest in an awkward dance with Cruz that has made the pair one of politics' leading odd couples.

Cruz spent the early months of the 2016 presidential race praising Trump, betting that the reality TV star's supporters would flock to him if their candidate's meteoric rise flamed out. They later clashed bitterly as Cruz finished second for the GOP nomination, with Trump making fun of Cruz's wife's appearance and suggesting that his Cuban-born father had a hand in John F. Kennedy's assassination.

Trump also savaged Cruz on Twitter: "Why would the people of Texas support Ted Cruz when he has accomplished absolutely nothing for them?"

Cruz responded by calling Trump "a sniveling coward," "a pathological liar," and "a serial philanderer." He refused to endorse him during the 2016 Republican National Convention, only to suddenly announce his support barely a month before Election Day 2016.

The relationship has improved since, although resentment lingers among many die-hard Trump supporters.

It's not yet clear whether Trump's kind words on Twitter, and the would-be rally, can heal those wounds.

TxDOT seeks song for 'Don't mess with Texas'

From staff reports

The Texas Department of Transportation is searching for amateur musical talent to write a song for its "Don't mess with Texas" campaign.

The agency is hosting a contest that is open to Texas residents 18 and older to compose a 30-second song incorporating the campaign's anti-litter message, according to a press release from TxDOT.

The entries, submitted via video, will be collected online where the public will have the opportunity to vote on their favorites. Submission deadline is Oct. 10; voting will be Oct. 11-25. Rules for "Don't mess with Texas" Song Search can be found at Dontmesswithtexas.org.

At the end of the public voting period, two songs will be selected — one in English and one in Spanish. The composers will receive a prize package donated by Gibson Brands and iHeart that includes a 2018 Gibson Guitar and the opportunity to appear in a future "Don't mess with Texas" TV spot.

polls have shown the two candidates in an ever-tightening race, with O'Rourke enjoying a large fundraising advantage built on small dollar donations. O'Rourke has also disavowed money from political action committees, giving his longshot bid the aura of a grassroots campaign free of special interest influence.

Neither arrest has factored significantly into O'Rourke's political career, though both were used against him in his successful 2012 campaign against former El Paso Congressman Silvestre Reyes in a predominantly Hispanic district.

O'Rourke has long characterized the incidents as youthful indiscretions in which he showed "poor judgment."

"To some extent, he has sought to leverage them to advantage. After a recent tour of the Harris County Jail with Sheriff Ed Gonzalez, O'Rourke cited his own scrapes with the law as part of a plea for criminal justice reform.

"Those mistakes did not ultimately define me or stop me from what I wanted to do in my life or how I wanted to contribute to the success of my family and my community," he wrote in the op-ed piece, which was published Monday.

The law enforcement reports show two elements of the incident that have been overlooked: that there was a crash involved, and that O'Rourke allegedly attempted to flee.

Though no injuries were reported; an ambulance was called to the scene.

A Texas Department of Public Safety report on the incident was based on a motorist's description of O'Rourke's dark-colored Volvo passing him quickly about 3 a.m. on I-10. The Anthony Police Department and DPS reports differ as to whether O'Rourke was heading east or west on the interstate, but both agree that he struck a truck going in the same direction and crossed a grassy median into the opposite lanes.

Police said O'Rourke then attempted to leave the scene but was stopped by the same motorist he had just passed. The unidentified motorist "then turned on his overhead lights to warn oncoming traffic and to try to get the defendant (O'Rourke) to stop," the report says.

The DPS report described O'Rourke as having "glossy" eyes, slurred speech, smelling of liquor, and almost falling to the ground as he got out of his car.

The accident occurred just as O'Rourke, the son of an El Paso County Judge, had celebrated his 26th birthday the night before. He told police he'd had two beers and had been on cold medication. He later told the El Paso Times that he was driving an intoxicated friend home, though no passenger is mentioned in the police reports.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

Note: Bigar's Stars is based on the degree of your sun at birth. The sign name is simply a label astrologers put on a set of degrees for convenience. For best results, readers should refer to the dates following each sign.*

A baby born today has a Sun in Virgo and a Moon in Taurus.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, Sept. 1, 2018:
This year you might see some of the changes that you've wished for on the horizon. You recognize that there are several paths to your objective. Trust your judgment. If you are single, your tendency to be highly involved in projects could prevent you from meeting The One. Nevertheless, you expand your immediate circle of friends and meet new people. If you are attached, you need to involve your significant other in more segments of your life. A newfound closeness will evolve. TAURUS helps you see the big picture.

ARIES
(March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You could be feeling generous yet cautious. How you deal with this conflict all depends on whom you are dealing with. If you trust someone, you have greater leeway. Be willing to evolve some of your ideas. You often come up with creative solutions. Tonight: Treat a loved one.

TAURUS
(April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You are in your element and could succeed beyond your imagination. To many people, you seem to present optimism and opportunity. Others often tap into your ideas to make their lives easier. You might make a last-minute change of plans. Tonight: Off to a baseball game.

GEMINI
(May 21-June 20)
★★★ Know that you don't need to share everything that's on your mind. A friend might try to get you to speak your thoughts. Observe what is happening around you. When you are not invested, you tend to be more successful. Try to catch up on sleep. Tonight: Be subtle about your plans.

CANCER
(June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Defer to others, and understand where they are coming from. Your ability to identify with people often proves helpful. A loved one will demonstrate his or her caring through a special invitation. With less responsibility, you will have some extra time. Tonight: Out and about!

LEO
(July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ You are a force that can't be stopped, no matter what others do. You might be unusually tuned in to another person or your friends at the moment. You have an opportunity to bring others together. Be prepared for a meeting to turn into a party. Tonight: Try something different.

VIRGO
(Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Some of you might be too distracted to focus on anything except a situation that seems to be consuming your life. Prioritize, and complete what is on your mind first. Later, you will be able to pay more attention on other concerns. Tonight: Accept a spontaneous invitation.

LIBRA
(Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ You feel very close to one person and want to spend time with him or her. What could be upsetting is how many people try to interject themselves into your plans. Look at the situation as positive and as a compliment. You can still say "no." Tonight: Add some spice to the night.

SCORPIO
(Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Others want to be with you, and they exhibit very little patience. Someone tries to merge your plans with his or hers. You know how to set boundaries, so do just that. If someone cuts you off, let it be. This person will move on, especially if you don't react. Tonight: Out on the town.

SAGITTARIUS
(Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Your ability to go with the flow has to do with your willingness to experience life in new ways. You might not always love what happens, but you are likely to be entertained. You probably need to adapt your plans to make room for an event. Tonight: Among the crowds.

CAPRICORN
(Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You cannot help but respond to a very creative idea that a loved one proposes. You will learn much more once you say "yes," and no longer will be so focused on your responsibilities, at least for a while. Relax while enjoying yourself. Tonight: Togetherness is the theme.

AQUARIUS
(Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ If you stay close to home, you will feel a lot better. Invite friends over for a backyard barbecue. Express your fun quirkiness around the people you invite and see what happens. Others enjoy getting to know you better. Tonight: Your get-together could go till the wee hours.

PISCES
(Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ You feel and act more openly, and you express a greater appreciation for your friends and immediate circle. You will do a lot of catching up on news with a sibling, neighbor or loved one. You probably need to get together with this person more often. Tonight: Accept a suggestion.

McCain salute: One of nation's 'bravest souls' in war, peace

By Laurie Kellman and Matthew Daly

Morry Gash/Pool via AP

The late U.S. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., lies in state in the U.S. Capitol Rotunda Friday, Aug. 31, 2018, in Washington.

WASHINGTON — Congressional leaders saluted John McCain Friday as a model of service in war and peace and "one of the bravest souls our nation has ever produced," in a memorial ceremony at the heart of the political battlefield where he fought for more than three decades.

Then thousands of fellow Americans, who had lined up outside the U.S. Capitol in stifling heat, began filing past in the majestic rotunda to say goodbye as he lay in state.

McCain, the Arizona senator who died Saturday at 81, was remembered as a man who inspired other leaders even as he vexed them with a rebellious streak and impish humor. Absent from the event was Donald Trump, invited to stay away by the family of the senator, who had deep disagreements with the president.

McCain's service in Vietnam, and his refusal to be released early as a prisoner of war, made the setting of Friday's service all the more fitting, some said.

"Half a world away, wearing our nation's uniform, John McCain stood up for every value that this Capitol Building represents," Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell told the crowd of McCain's family, friends and aides. "Then, he brought that same patriotism inside its walls -- to advocate for our service members, our veterans and our moral leadership in the world. So it is only right that today, near the end of his long journey, John lies here."

Friday's ceremony and public viewing was the midpoint of McCain's five-day cross-country funeral procession from Arizona, where he and wife Cindy raised their family, through the Capitol where he worked for more than 35 years, to the U.S. Naval Academy cemetery in Annapolis, Maryland — "back where it began," as he wrote in his recent memoir, "The Restless Wave." On Saturday, the procession will pause by the Vietnam Veterans Memorial on the way to a formal funeral service at Washington National Cathedral.

In Trump's absence, Vice President Mike Pence, Defense Secretary James Mattis, White House Chief of Staff John Kelly and other officials represented the administration. Pence at one point said that Trump, who mocked McCain for being captured, "respected his service to the country."

The stop at the Capitol was designed to spotlight McCain's outsized role in an institution bursting with big, willful personalities. Just to the north of the rotunda in the semi-darkened Senate, McCain's desk remained draped in black and topped with a vase of white roses.

After the ceremony, Cindy McCain quietly sat behind her husband's desk, escorted by his seatmate and close friend, Sen. Lindsey Graham. Graham plucked two of the roses from the vase and gave them to her during that private moment, said two people close to McCain and his family.

Of those who spoke at Friday's ceremony, fellow Republican McConnell had perhaps the fullest sense of the McCain experience. The two had served in the Senate together since McCain's 1986 election.

"Depending on the issue, you knew John would either be your staunchest ally or your most stubborn opponent," McConnell recalled. "At any moment, he might be preparing an eloquent reflection on human liberty or a devastating joke, served up with his signature cackle and that John McCain glint in his eye."

But just about anyone who worked in the Capitol over the past 35 years could attest to McCain's iron will and what House Speaker Paul Ryan called his "distinct brand of candor."

"With John, it was never feigned disagreement. The man didn't feign anything," Ryan said. "He just relished the fight."

"This," Ryan added of McCain, "is one of the bravest souls our nation has ever produced."

Pence, himself a former House member, recalled traveling through Iraq with McCain and falling asleep during a dinner with officials. McCain, nearly 23 years older, told him, "'Mike, we've got a few more meetings tonight. But why don't you turn in. You look like you could use some rest.'" Members of McCain's family, seated nearby, smiled.

Cindy McCain was the first to pay respects at her husband's casket. She bowed over it and appeared to pray. The last of the family to file past was his mother, 106-year-old Roberta McCain. Wheeled up to her son's flag-draped casket, she crossed herself and was wheeled out.

Others from McCain's long career paused. Some wept. Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger reached out with both hands to touch the flag. Former Connecticut Sen. Joe Lieberman and actors Warren Beatty and Annette Bening also stopped.

Sen. Jack Reed, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee that McCain chaired, crossed himself in front of the casket. Then he waited for retired Sens. Carl Levin, a Democrat, and John Warner, a Republican, both of whom chaired the powerful committee at one time. The three left the rotunda arm-in-arm.

As the service ended, thousands of people were guided into snaking lines along First Street on the border of the Capitol complex to pay respects to McCain.

Among them were more than 100 family members of Vietnamese political prisoners who traveled to Washington to honor McCain for his advocacy for Vietnamese refugees.

Khuc Minh Tho, president of the Families of Vietnamese Political Prisoners Association, said that with McCain's help, almost 800,000 prisoners and their families who were in Vietnam are now in the U.S.

"We respect him and want to wish that he rests in peace," she said.

Sibyl Kalish, 59, traveled with her 89-year-old mother, Beverly, from New York and waited in the blistering heat to file past McCain's coffin. They are from a liberal, military family, Kalish said.

"I respect him for what he gave for this country. He tried his best. I'd like to see more people like him," Beverly Kalish said.

President and stars join in epic farewell to Queen of Soul

By Jeff Karoub
Associated Press

DETROIT — Former presidents and preachers joined a parade of music stars and other speakers Friday in a singing, hip-swaying, piano-pounding farewell to Aretha Franklin, remembering the Queen of Soul as a powerful force for musical and political change and a steadfast friend and family member.

"Aretha's singing challenged the dangling discords of hate and lies and racism and injustice," the pastor William J. Barber II said. "Her singing was revelation and was revolution."

In a send-off both grand and personal, a celebrity lineup of mourners filled the same Detroit church that hosted Rosa Parks' funeral and offered prayers, songs and dozens of tributes. Guests included former President Bill Clinton, former first lady Hillary Clinton, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Stevie Wonder and Smokey Robinson.

Robinson, the Motown great, remembered first hearing Franklin play piano when he was just 8 and remained close to her for the rest of her life. They talked for hours at a time.

"You're so special," he said, before crooning a few lines from his song "Really Gonna Miss You," with the line "really gonna be different without you."

Bill Clinton described himself as an Aretha Franklin "groupie," saying he had loved her since college. He traced her life's journey, praising her as someone who "lived with courage, not without fear, but overcoming her fears."

He remembered attending her last public performance, at Elton John's AIDS Foundation benefit in November in New York. She looked "desperately ill" but managed to greet him by standing and saying, "How you doing, baby?"

Her career, Clinton noted, spanned from vinyl records to cellphones. He held the microphone near his iPhone and played a snippet of Franklin's classic "Think," the audience clapping along.

"It's the key to freedom!" Clinton said.

Lasting more than six hours, the service at Greater Grace Temple encompassed many elements, emotions and regal entrances that were hallmarks of Franklin's more than six decades on sacred and secular stages. She was remembered as the pride of Detroit and a citizen of the world.

Actress Cicely Tyson reworked the Paul Laurence Dunbar poem "When Malindy Sings" to "When Aretha Sings." Music mogul Clive Davis, who helped revive Franklin's career in the 1980s, described her as a loving friend and a dedicated and unpredictable artist, whose passions ranged from soul to ballet. He remembered her turning up at a tribute to him in a tutu.

"There was the Queen of Soul, accompanied by members of the City Center Ballet Company," he recalled, with Franklin "doing well-rehearsed pirouettes and dancing with most impressive agility and dignity. It was wonderful."

Jennifer Hudson, whom Franklin said she wanted to play her in a movie about her life, brought the crowd to its feet with a rousing "Amazing Grace." Ariana Grande sang one of the Queen's biggest hits, "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," and Faith Hill performed "What a Friend We Have In Jesus."

The Aretha Franklin Orchestra opened the funeral with a medley featuring "I Say a Little Prayer," "Angel" and other songs she was known for, along with such gospel numbers as "I Love the Lord" and "Walk in the Light."

A statement from former President George W. Bush that was read to the crowd said Franklin would "continue to bring joy to millions for generations to come." The Rev. Al Sharpton read a statement from former President Barack Obama, who wrote that Franklin's "work reflected the very best of the American story."

Sharpton received loud cheers when he denounced President Donald Trump for saying that the singer "worked for" him as he responded to her death. "She performed for you," Sharpton said of Franklin, who had sung at Trump-owned venues. "She worked for us."

"She gave us pride. She gave us a regal bar to reach. She represented the best in our community," Sharpton said.

Many noted her longtime commitment to civil rights and lasting concern for the poor. The Rev. Jesse Jackson urged attendees to honor her memory and register to vote. Her friend Greg Mathis, the reality show host and retired Michigan judge, recalled his last conversation with her. They talked about the tainted water supply in Flint. "You go up there and sock it to 'em," she urged Mathis, paraphrasing the "sock it to me" refrain from "Respect."

Franklin died Aug. 16 at age 76.

Her body arrived in a 1940 Cadillac LaSalle hearse. She wore a shimmering gold dress, with sequined heels — the fourth outfit Franklin was clothed in during a week of events leading up to her funeral.

The casket was carried to the church that also sent Franklin's father, the renowned minister C.L. Franklin, to his and Parks' final resting place at Woodlawn Cemetery, where the singer will join them. Pink Cadillacs filled the street outside the church, a reference to a Franklin hit from the 1980s, "Freeway of Love."

Program covers showed a young Franklin, with a slight smile and sunglasses perched on her nose, and the caption "A Celebration Fit For The Queen."

Detroit plans to honor one of its most famous residents. Mayor Mike Duggan announced during the service that the city would rename the riverfront amphitheater Chene Park to "Aretha Franklin Park."

Family members, among them granddaughter Victorie Franklin and niece Cristal Franklin, spoke with awe and affection as they remembered a world-famous performer who also loved gossip and kept pictures of loved ones on her piano.

Grandson Jordan directed his remarks directly to Franklin, frequently stopping to fight back tears.

"I'm sad today, because I'm losing my friend. But I know the imprint she left on this world can never be removed. You showed the world God's love, and there's nothing more honorable."

Accountant refuses payment for settling estate

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: For the past 2 1/2 years, my deceased father's friend and accountant has been working on winding up his estate. The bulk of the estate has been disbursed, and it should be clearing sometime soon.

He has refused to take any compensation from the estate for executor's fees. I have told him by email and in person that Dad would want him to be paid for his work, but he refuses to take any payment and insists he wants this to be the last thing he does for my father.

I feel a thank-you gift would be appropriate, but I'm stumped about what to get him. Although I saw him and his family several times in my childhood, I haven't seen him in decades, so I have no idea what hobbies or restaurants he enjoys. I'm guessing his age to be in his late 80s to early 90s, and his wife is still alive. I'm pretty sure people in that age group don't need any more "stuff" for their house, and I know they're financially comfortable.

I have thought about flowers or a gift basket, but the small amount they cost would pale against what he would have been entitled to had he taken his executor's fee. Do you have any suggestions on how I can express my thanks for everything he's done? — THANK YOU, IN CANADA

DEAR THANK YOU: Because he is refusing monetary compensation, I suggest you write him a letter. In it, express how much you appreciate the hard work he has done and the kindness he has shown to your family. Tell him you know what a good friend he was to your father and how much your dad trusted and respected him. Then say thank you, and if he and his wife live close enough, offer to take them to dinner and thank him again in person.

DEAR ABBY: I had a miscarriage two years ago. My ex wasn't emotionally supportive during our grieving process (I understand everyone deals with loss differently). However, suffice it to say, our journeys no longer aligned.

I started dating again a few months ago and now realize I have built up an emotional wall. Also, I'm never sure when — or if — I should bring up my miscarriage. I'm 28 and have a master's degree, and I would like to try again with the right man, the right way (after marriage). How do I start? — DO-OVER IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR DO-OVER: I presume, having lost a baby you wanted and having to face the reality that your ex wasn't the supportive person you thought he was, that you are having trust issues. The time to resolve them is before you start looking for another life partner. Some sessions with a psychologist would help.

Once you feel it's safe to open your heart to someone again, wait until you know where the relationship is going before discussing this chapter of your life. The right man will understand, love you and give you the emotional support you need.

Sex abuse claims raise pressure to reunite migrant families

By Julie Watson and Marcos Aleman
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — The Trump administration is under increasing pressure to speed up the reunification of immigrant families it separated at the Mexican border, following allegations three youngsters were sexually abused while in U.S. custody.

The government of El Salvador said the three, ages 12 to 17, were victimized at shelters in Arizona, and it asked the U.S. to make their return a priority.

"May they leave the shelters as soon as possible, because it is there that they are the most vulnerable," Deputy Foreign Relations Minister Liduvina Magarin said in San Salvador on Thursday.

The U.S. government already is facing heavy criticism over its slow pace in reuniting more than 2,600 children who were separated from their parents last spring before the Trump administration agreed to stop the practice. Most have since been reunited, but hundreds remain apart more than a month after the deadline set by a judge.

Before the Trump administration reversed course, many of the parents had been deported to their home countries while their children remained in shelters in the U.S.

Attorneys for the U.S. government and the immigrant families discussed how to accelerate the process at a hearing Friday in San Diego in front of U.S. District Judge Dana Sabraw, who set the deadline.

Magarin gave few details on the three cases other than to say they involved "sexual violations, sexual abuses." She said her government is ready with lawyers and psychologists to help the families, adding: "The psychological and emotional impact is forever."

"It's unbelievable that children who were fleeing violence here were met in the United States with the worst violence a child could encounter," said Cesar Rios, director of the Salvadoran Migrant Institute.

More information is needed to investigate, the U.S. Department Health and Human Services said in a statement Friday, that adding that "without additional details, we are unable to confirm or deny these allegations took place" at a facility overseen by the Office of Refugee Resettlement. It contracts with nonprofits and other third parties to run shelters for unaccompanied minors arriving at the border.

In trying to reunite families, the Trump administration has put the onus on the American Civil Liberties Union, asking that the organization use its "considerable resources" to find parents in their home countries, mostly Guatemala, El Salvador and Honduras.

The governments of those countries and nonprofit organizations have been trying to locate the families. Those efforts have included posting public notices and putting hotline numbers on billboards in the hope a parent missing a child might see the signs and call.

"Every day that these children are separated and left in government facilities does more damage," said Lee Gelernt, an ACLU attorney representing separated families. "Even if the facilities were palaces, the separation of young children from their parents causes potentially permanent trauma."

The government and ACLU indicated in the hearing Friday that the process should start to speed up.

Gelernt told the judge as many as 200 cases could be resolved in the next week or two. Those include families who want to be reunited in their home countries and those who want to waive their right to reunification and keep their child in the United States to pursue asylum.

The judge also said the administration can expedite cases where families have expressed the desire for the child to be sent back and not worry about it violating a temporary halt on deportations of families seeking asylum.

Justice Department attorney Scott Stewart said the government wants to remove any roadblocks.

"There are a lot of folks that want to move forward with reunification," he told the judge.

More than 300 parents who have been deported are waiting for their sons and daughters to be returned to them in their homelands. Many are growing increasingly anxious.

Among them is Evelin Roxana Meyer, whose 11-year-old son, Eduardo Almendarez Meyer, was told this week that he won't be leaving the U.S. until Nov. 27. He has been held at a government-contracted shelter in Brownsville, Texas, since he was separated from his father in early June.

The boy's mother said her husband was told when he signed his deportation papers that his son would be waiting for him in Honduras.

"Now it'll be six months before we see him? Oh my God," Meyer said Friday, crying during a telephone interview from her hometown of La Union. "I don't know why it's taking so long. My son is worried. He tells me, 'More time here, Mommy? Oh, no. Why?' I don't know what to tell him."

Child psychologist Barbara Van Dahlen, founder of Give an Hour, a network of mental health professions that is offering to counsel the separated families, said the reports of abuse are likely to worsen the immigrant parents' anxieties.

"I can't imagine the stress, the anxiety, the terror, if I was separated from my child, and then the thought that possibly some of these kids are being abused," Van Dahlen said. "It would be so debilitating and destructive that it would be hard for some parents to function."

US ends funding for Palestinian refugees

By Susannah George
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States is ending its decades of funding for the U.N. agency that helps Palestinian refugees, the State Department announced Friday, a week after slashing bilateral U.S. aid for projects in the West Bank and Gaza.

The U.S. supplies nearly 30 percent of the total budget of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency, or UNRWA, and had been demanding reforms in the way it is run. The department said in a written statement that the United States "will no longer commit further funding to this irredeemably flawed operation." The decision cuts nearly $300 million of planned support.

UNRWA released a statement late Friday rejecting "in the strongest possible terms" the Trump administration's criticism of the agency and expressing "deep regret and disappointment."

The U.S. decision comes as President Donald Trump and his Middle East pointmen, Jared Kushner and Jason Greenblatt, prepare for the rollout of a much-vaunted but as yet unclear peace plan for Israel and the Palestinians, and it could intensify Palestinian suspicions that Washington is using the humanitarian funding as leverage.

The Palestinian leadership has been openly hostile to any proposal from the administration, citing what it says is a pro-Israel bias, notably after Trump recognized Jerusalem as Israel's capital in December and moved the U.S. embassy there from Tel Aviv in May. The Palestinian Authority broke off contact with the U.S. after the Jerusalem announcement.

In 2016, the U.S. donated $355 million to the UNRWA, which provides health care, education and social services to Palestinians in the West Bank, Gaza Strip, Jordan, Syria and Lebanon, and it was set to make a similar contribution this year. In January the Trump administration released $60 million in funds but withheld a further $65 million it had been due to provide. The remaining amount — around $290 million had yet to be allocated.

"When we made a U.S. contribution of $60 million in January, we made it clear that the United States was no longer willing to shoulder the very disproportionate share of the burden of UNRWA's costs that we had assumed for many years," the statement said. "Several countries, including Jordan, Egypt, Sweden, Qatar, and the UAE (United Arab Emirates) have shown leadership in addressing this problem, but the overall international response has not been sufficient."

The statement criticized the "fundamental business model and fiscal practices" of UNRWA, and what the department characterized as the "endlessly and exponentially expanding community of entitled beneficiaries."

UNRWA responded by stating that its "programs have a proven track record in creating one of the most successful human development processes ... in the Middle East." UNRWA added that it has been recognized by the World Bank "for running one of the most effective school systems in the region," according to a statement released by the agency late Friday.

"This is a reflection of UNRWA's steadfast commitment to preserving dignity and opportunities," the statement added.

A spokesman for U.N. Secretary General Antonio Guterres' office released a statement late Friday regretting the Trump administration's decision to cut UNRWA funding, saying the U.N. has appreciated years of U.S. support for the agency.

"UNRWA has a strong record of providing high-quality education, health and other essential services, often in extremely difficult circumstances, to Palestine refugees who are in great need," the statement added.

Hundreds of thousands of Palestinians fled or were forced from their homes during the war that led to Israel's establishment in 1948. Today, there are an estimated 5 million refugees and their descendants, mostly scattered across the region — a figure that has become a point of contention. Palestinian leaders assert the right of those refugees to return to land now under Israeli control.

Last Friday, the State Department announced the U.S. was cutting more than $200 million in bilateral aid to the Palestinians, following a review of the funding for projects in the West Bank and Gaza. Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas' spokesman called that U.S. decision an attempt to force the Palestinians to abandon their claim to Jerusalem.

Speaking before the announcement on UNRWA, its representative in Washington, Elizabeth Campbell, said the withdrawal of U.S. funding would leave the agency facing a financial crisis, but noted that Saudi Arabia, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and others have provided more than $200 million in new funding to help cover its budget this year.

In recent days, senior Trump administration officials publicly expressed dissatisfaction with UNRWA but stopped short of saying the U.S. would defund the agency.

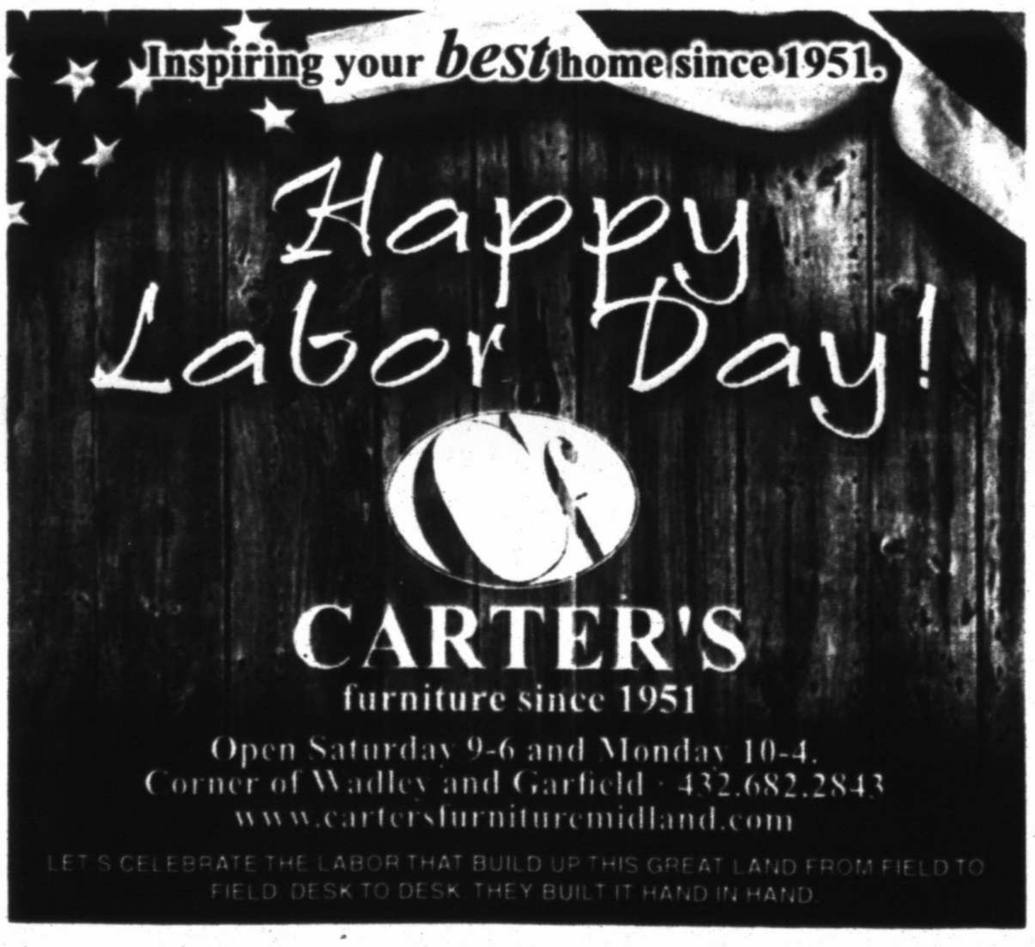

On Tuesday, Nikki Haley, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, complained that "Palestinians continue to bash America" although it's the main donor for UNRWA. Speaking at the Foundation for Defense of Democracies think tank, Haley also said, "we have to look at right of return" of those classified as Palestinian refugees. She called on Middle East nations to increase aid.

There is deepening international concern over deteriorating humanitarian conditions in the West Bank and Gaza, and the U.S. decision to defund provoked strong and polarized reactions in Washington.

Jeremy Ben-Ami, president of J Street, a liberal advocacy group, said Trump's decision "has the potential to harm millions of innocent civilians" and "will ratchet up the risk of greater destabilization and conflict across the Middle East."

But Richard Goldberg, senior adviser at the Foundation for Defense of Democracies, called it "a win for U.S. taxpayers and peace" that would make Palestinians more self-sufficient and prepare them "for a true peace with Israel."

The State Department statement said the U.S. will intensify dialogue with the United Nations, host governments and international stakeholders about new models and new approaches to help Palestinians, especially schoolchildren, which may include direct bilateral assistance from the U.S. and others.

Trump to sign Mexico deal in 90 days; Canada talks to resume

By Luis Alonso Lugo, Paul Wiseman and Rob Gillies

Andrew Harnik/AP

United States Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer arrives at the Office of the United States Trade Representative on Tuesday in Washington, ahead of Canadian Foreign Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland. Canada, America's longtime ally and No. 2 trading partner, was left out of a proposed deal Trump just reached with Mexico and is scrambling to keep its place in the regional free-trade bloc — and fend off the threat of U.S. taxes on its vehicles.

WASHINGTON — Talks to keep Canada in a North American trade bloc broke up Friday and will resume next week with the two longtime allies divided over such issues as Canada's dairy market and U.S. efforts to shield drug companies from generic competition.

President Donald Trump notified Congress on Friday that he plans to sign an agreement in 90 days with Mexico to replace the North American Free Trade Agreement — and hopes Canada can brought on board, too. Congress eventually would have to approve any agreement.

The U.S. and Mexico reached a deal on Monday that excluded Canada. The top Canadian trade envoy, Foreign Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland, then hurried to Washington for talks aimed at preserving Canada's membership in the regional trade agreement.

But Freeland couldn't break an impasse in four days of negotiations with U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer. The U.S.-Canada talks will resume Wednesday.

The negotiations had taken an odd turn for the worse Friday over news that President Donald Trump had told Bloomberg News that he wasn't willing to make any concessions to Canada. Trump said he wanted the remarks to remain off-the-record, otherwise, the president said, "it's going to be so insulting they're not going to be able to make a deal."

The comments were leaked to the Toronto Star, and on Friday afternoon, Trump took to Twitter to angrily confirm the Star's report.

"Wow, I made OFF THE RECORD COMMENTS to Bloomberg concerning Canada, and this powerful understanding was BLATANTLY VIOLATED. Oh well, just more dishonest reporting. I am used to it. At least Canada knows where I stand!"

Freeland tried to brush off the controversy in a news conference. "My negotiating counterparty is Ambassador Lighthizer," she said. "He has brought good faith and good will to the table."

"It is Trump's bluster at best, but obviously he is not going to force anyone into a bad deal," said Jerry Dias, president of the Canadian private-sector union Unifor. "It is clear the U.S. economy is much bigger than ours, but trying to embarrass the Canadian team, trying to insult Canadians, is not going to get him anywhere."

Still, Freeland expressed confidence that Canada could reach a deal with the United States on a revamped trade accord that could please all sides.

"We know a win-win-win agreement is within reach," she said.

Some questioned the Trump administration's hardball approach — cutting a deal with Mexico and pressing Canada to comply or risk being left out.

"The approach the Trump administration has taken — 'my way or the highway' — doesn't seem designed to get to yes," said Michael Camunez, CEO of Monarch Global Strategies who served in President Barack Obama's Commerce Department.

Philip Levy, senior fellow at the Chicago Council on Global Affairs and a White House economist under President George W. Bush,, added, "The president's approach of brinksmanship is so far not very successful in international agreements."

The 24-year-old NAFTA tore down most trade barriers dividing the United States, Mexico and Canada. Trade between the three countries surged. But many manufacturers responded to the agreement by moving factories south of the border to take advantage of low Mexican wages, then shipping goods north to the United States and Canada.

Trump has charged that the deal wiped out American factory jobs. He has vowed to negotiate a better deal — or withdraw from NAFTA altogether. Talks on a new trade deal started a year ago but bogged down over U.S. demands, including some meant to return manufacturing to the United States.

A few weeks ago, the United States began negotiating with Mexico, leaving Canada on the sidelines. Outgoing Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto wanted to sign a deal before he left office Dec. 1. The deal announced Monday would, among many other things, require that 40 percent to 45 percent of a car be made in a North American country where auto workers made at least $16 an hour — that is, not in Mexico — before qualifying for duty-free status.

Canada doesn't have much of an objection to the auto provisions of the U.S.-Mexican deal, which would benefit Canadian workers too. Ottawa does have other complaints. Neither U.S. nor Canadian negotiators are talking publicly about the issues that divide them.

But Daniel Ujczo, a trade attorney of the law firm Dickinson Wright in Columbus, Ohio, and others say the flashpoints include trade barriers that protect Canadian dairy farmers and Ottawa's insistence on keeping NAFTA provisions for resolving disputes.

Also nettlesome is a provision in the U.S.-Mexico deal that shields U.S. makers of biologics — ultra-expensive drugs produced in living cells — from generic competition for 10 years instead of the eight Canada is willing to live with. The Canadians fear the protection will drive up drug prices and make their government health care system more costly.

The Trump administration had insisted that it wanted a deal by Friday, beginning a 90-day countdown that would let Mexico's Nieto sign the pact before leaving office.

But under U.S. trade rules, the U.S. team doesn't have to make public the text of the revamped agreement for 30 additional days, buying more time to reach a deal with the Canadians.

Denise Bode, a partner at the Michael Best Strategies law firm, downplayed the importance of deadlines. "If they're making progress, they'll continue to work until they get a resolution or realize they can't reach a resolution," she said.

Freeland likewise shrugged off the time constraints. "For Canada, the focus is on getting a good deal," she said, "and once we get a good deal for Canada, we will be done."

Lighthizer's statement Friday said Trump intends to sign a new trade deal with Mexico, whether or not Canada is part of it. But it might not be that easy.

When the Trump administration notified Congress last year that it intended to renegotiate NAFTA, critics note that it said it would enter talks with both Canada and Mexico. It's unclear whether the Trump team even has authority to reach a pact with just one of those countries. And Congress, which has to approve any NAFTA rewrite, might refuse to endorse a deal that excludes Canada.

"There is no NAFTA without Canada," said John Bozzella, president of Global Automakers, a trade group. "Auto rules included in the understanding reached between the United States and Mexico are predicated on Canada's participation."

Even while gripped in negotiations with Mexico and now Canada over a new North American trade pact, the administration has been fighting major trading partners on other fronts. The president has imposed wide-ranging tariffs that, he argues, will help protect American workers and force U.S. trading partners to stop exploiting trade deals that are unfair to the United States.

Since March, for example, Trump's team has applied new tariffs of up to 25 percent on nearly $85 billion worth of steel and aluminum on the grounds that these imports pose a threat to America's national security.

CA lawmakers send net neutrality proposal to governor

By Jazmine Ulloa
Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Nearly nine months after federal regulators voted to do away with net neutrality rules instituted under the Obama administration, state lawmakers are on the verge of bringing them back to California.

The state Senate on Friday sent a broad proposal to Gov. Jerry Brown that would prevent broadband and wireless companies from favoring some web sites over others by charging for faster speeds and from blocking, throttling or otherwise hindering access to content.

On the state Senate floor Friday, bill author Sen. Scott Wiener, a Democrat, argued that without the regulations, internet providers could "inhibit us or manipulate us away from our favorite web sites."

"Fundamentally, net neutrality is that we as individuals get to decide where to go on the internet as opposed to being told," he said.

The legislation moved out with a 27-12 vote and little debate, capping months of aggressive feuding between tech advocates and telecom industry lobbyists.

Legislators clashed on the Assembly floor a day earlier over whether the state should step in to fill a role some said was best left to the federal government. To opponents, the rules represented burdensome, harsh regulations on companies; for proponents, they were strong and necessary protections for consumers.

On Friday, proponents hailed the passage as a landmark move toward fair and free access to the internet, saying other states were sure to follow.

"When California acts, the world pays attention," said Stanford law professor Barbara van Schewick, who has researched net neutrality for more than a decade and testified multiple times in favor of the legislation.

Telecom industry groups and lobbyists warned the bill would be challenged in federal court.

"Governor Brown should use his veto pen on this legislation, and Congress should step in to legislate and provide consumer protections that will resolve this issue once and for all," said Jonathan Spalter, president and chief executive of USTelecom, a Washington-based lobby group.

California is one of 29 states to consider net neutrality protections since the Federal Communications Commission voted late last year to reverse the Obama-era internet regulations. FCC Chairman Ajit Pai, who was appointed by President Donald Trump, and Republicans have called for an end to the utility-like oversight of internet service providers.

The rules, enacted in February 2015 and ended in June, barred broadband and wireless companies such as AT&T Inc. and Verizon from selling faster delivery of some data, slowing speeds for certain content or favoring selected web sites over others.

Senate Bill 822 reinstates the same regulations. But it also goes further by restricting some zero-rated data plans, or package deals that allow companies such as Verizon or Comcast to exempt some calls, texts or other content from counting against a customer's data plan.

The legislation primarily prohibits plans that exempt the same type of content from some companies over others — video streamed on YouTube but not Hulu, for example. The bill also tasks the state attorney general with evaluating potential evasion of the net neutrality rules on a case-by-case basis.

An additional proposal, Senate Bill 460, by Democratic Sen. Kevin de Leon is close to being shelved in the state Assembly. It would have denied public contracts to companies that fail to follow the new state internet rules, but it sunk amid opposition over last-minute amendments.

Judge denies Alex Jones effort to dismiss Sandy Hook lawsuit

AUSTIN — A judge has denied conspiracy theorist Alex Jones' request to dismiss a lawsuit surrounding the 2012 Sandy Hook Elementary School massacre that he has called a hoax.

The Infowars host is being sued for defamation in Texas by the parents of a 6-year-old who was among the 20 children and six adults killed in the Newtown, Connecticut, attack. State District Judge Scott Jenkins on Wednesday ruled the case can proceed.

Jenkins also refused to dismiss a similar lawsuit brought by a man who was falsely identified on the Infowars website as the gunman who killed 17 people at a Florida high school in February.

Jones has since admitted that the Sandy Hook killings occurred. His attorneys defended his speech in court as "rhetorical hyperbole," but denied it was defamation.

TEXAS

Man who believes he is a deity threatens to kill president

SAN ANTONIO — A man who believes he is the reincarnation of Jesus Christ is charged with threatening to kill President Donald Trump.

The Secret Service arrested Steven Joseph Christopher on Aug. 8 in San Antonio on charges levied in an indictment accusing the man of knowingly and willfully threatening to take the life of Donald John Trump, President of the United States of America.

Court documents do not provide insight into the nature of the threat, which was allegedly made by Christopher on June 19.

A San Antonio federal magistrate judge ordered Christopher held without bond pending transfer to Brownsville, where there was a warrant for his arrest based on the indictment.

Christopher made his first appearance in Brownsville on Monday and was ordered held without bond.

The man's attorney has filed a motion seeking an examination for mental competency, which states that Christopher appears to have a psychological illness and appears to be suffering from a mental disease and is unable to understand the proceedings against him.

"More specifically, defendant appears delusional and paranoid to the extent that he cannot effectively communicate with his attorney," the motion states. "Defendant claims to be the reincarnation of Jesus Christ."

2 more men charged in slaying of Indianapolis doctor

INDIANAPOLIS — Prosecutors say two more men have been formally charged in the fatal shooting of an Indiana University doctor and educator last year.

They said Friday that 18-year-old Nehemiah Merriweather is charged with felony murder and two counts of burglary and Devon Seats is charged with murder, felony murder and two counts of burglary. Seats' age wasn't provided.

A probable cause affidavit says four people entered the home of Dr. Kevin Rodgers on Indianapolis' northwest side on Nov. 20, 2017, and he was shot and killed. Two other people, including a juvenile, previously were charged.

Prosecutors say Merriweather and Seats are being held without bond.

The 61-year-old Rodgers was the program director emeritus of the emergency medicine residency at the Indiana University School of Medicine.

Judge tosses lawsuit on medical marijuana measure

JEFFERSON CITY — A Missouri judge has tossed out a court challenge that sought to remove a medical marijuana initiative from the November ballot.

Cole County Judge Patricia Joyce in a Friday ruling dismissed the lawsuit. It was filed by another medical marijuana initiative organizer who is trying to remove two other competing proposals from the ballot.

Springfield doctor and attorney Brad Bradshaw had argued that New Approach Missouri unlawfully obtained signatures to get that measure on the ballot.

But Joyce wrote that now the secretary of state has certified that there were enough signatures to get it on the ballot, the only relevant issue is whether those signatures are from registered voters.

An attorney for Bradshaw didn't immediately respond to a request for comment Friday.

Former producer criticized NBC on Weinstein story

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ronan Farrow's former producer at NBC News says his old network breached its journalistic duty by failing to stick with the story of Hollywood mogul Harvey Weinstein's sexual misconduct.

Farrow instead took the story to the New Yorker, where he shared a Pulitzer Prize with the New York Times for the story that launched the #MeToo movement.

"As a journalist for 16 years I do know that when you have an explosive story you never let it walk out the door," said Rich McHugh, who just left NBC as an investigative producer, and issued a statement through lawyer Ari Wilkenfeld. "You keep digging for more so you can publish at your network."

McHugh's statement and interview with The New York Times ripped open a scab at NBC News. The network has said that it released Farrow to take the story elsewhere following a disagreement over whether he had enough material to go with it. Farrow, who was a freelancer when working on the story with NBC, is writing his own book about the issue.

McHugh said that when he and Farrow were about to interview a woman with a credible allegation of rape against Weinstein, "I was told not to do the interview and ordered to stand down, thus effectively killing the story. Those orders came to me from the highest levels of NBC. That was unethical, and a massive breach of journalistic integrity."

McHugh did not say who at NBC ordered him to stand down, and Wilkenfeld did not return a message asking for clarification.

NBC said that Farrow and McHugh asked for an NBC camera crew for the interview after it had already been decided that Farrow was taking the story elsewhere.

NBC said in a statement that when Farrow believed he had a story ready to go on the air, he did not have a single victim of misconduct by Weinstein, or witness, who was willing to be identified.

"Two months later, he published a strong piece that cited the following victims by name: Asia Argento, Mira Sorvino, Rosanna Arquette, Lucia Evans, Emma de Caunes, Jessica Barth and Sophie Dix," NBC said. "Not one of these seven women was included in the reporting Farrow presented while at NBC News."

NBC said it was an "outright lie" that it tried to kill the Weinstein story while Farrow was working on it.

Avenatti talks Trump immigration policy, midterms in NV

By Michelle L. Price
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Michael Avenatti, the attorney representing adult film actress Stormy Daniels, railed against President Donald Trump's immigration policies and urged a group of progressives in Las Vegas on Friday to turn out voters in the midterm elections.

"There is an enormous amount at stake. We are talking about a critical time in our nation's history," Avenatti told about 30 people gathered at the offices of a Nevada progressive group.

The visit continues Avenatti's tour of states that will vote early in the 2020 primary and play a decisive role thinning the field of presidential contenders. He's been making stops in other states to help Democrats raise money for the midterm elections.

Avenatti, who visited Democratic events in Iowa and New Hampshire in August, says he's weighing a bid for president as a Democrat but says he will drop out if Republicans Trump and Vice President Mike Pence decide not to run in 2020. He denied that his appearances are a publicity tour.

"For anybody that has been paying attention for the last five to six months, they know that I don't need any more notoriety or publicity. If I wasn't serious about this, I wouldn't be standing here right now," he said.

Avenatti told reporters Friday that he intends to return to Nevada and fundraise for several candidates, but he declined to name them. He said he's not currently raising money for his own potential campaign.

The Los Angeles-based lawyer has become a frequent cable news guest and rising star on the left while advocating for Daniels.

The actress has said she had sex with Trump in 2006, when he was married. Trump has denied it. Days before the 2016 presidential election, she was paid $130,000 to stay silent about the affair.

Avenatti has also been criticizing Trump over the separation of migrant families at the Mexico border and has represented several immigrant families. He said the Trump administration and Republicans in Congress failed to fix the issue, noting there are children still separated from their parents.

"This is a disgrace and we need to be doing everything in our power to make sure that it ends immediately," he said.

DeVos says she won't take action on funding to arm teachers

By Maria Danilova
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Education Secretary Betsy DeVos said Friday that she has "no intention of taking any action" regarding any possible use of federal funds to arm teachers or provide them with firearms training.

DeVos' comments came after a top official in her department, asked about arming teachers, said states and local jurisdictions always "had the flexibility" to decide how to use federal education funds.

Frank Brogan, assistant secretary of elementary and secondary education, said arming educators "is a good example of a profoundly personal decision on the part of a school or a school district or even a state." President Donald Trump and DeVos have said that schools may benefit from having armed teachers and should have that option.

DeVos said Friday that "Congress did not authorize me or the Department to make those decisions" about arming teachers or training them on the use of firearms.

Her comments were in a letter to Virginia Rep. Bobby Scott, the top Democrat on the House committee overseeing education, and were posted by the department on Twitter.

"I will not take any action that would expand or restrict the responsibilities and flexibilities granted to state and local education agencies by Congress," DeVos wrote.

Democrats and education groups have argued, however, that the funds are intended for academics, not guns.

DeVos heads a federal commission on school safety that was formed after the deadly Valentine's Day shooting at a Florida high school.

An early draft of the commission's report recommends that states and communities determine "based on the unique circumstances of each school" whether to arm its security personnel and teachers to be able to respond to violence. The draft's section on training school personnel was reviewed by AP.

That approach, the draft says, "can be particularly helpful" in rural districts where the nearest police unit may be far away. Other recommendations included employing school resource officers and ensuring they worked closely with the rest of the school staff.

In an interview with The Associated Press Thursday, Brogan cited the "school marshal" program in Texas where school employees can volunteer to carry weapons on campuses after undergoing training. Educators from some remote rural schools also told the panel that they rely on armed school personnel because the police may take too long to arrive. Others, however, argued that arming teachers is dangerous and could make schools feel like prisons.

Brogan said the Every Student Succeeds Act, a bipartisan law that shifts education authority to states, provides about $1 billion in annual funding for various school needs, including 20 percent specifically set aside for school safety.

"The people at the local level who've been there for years could make the decisions about what services to purchase, what equipment to buy to fulfill the general broad obligations laid out in that law," he said.

It would be up to Congress, not the U.S. Department of Education, to place any restrictions or barriers to use those funds for purposes not currently in the law, a department spokeswoman said.

The debate arose earlier this month after a small rural school district in Oklahoma and the state of Texas asked the department to clarify what the funds can be used for.

"The position is: You have the language ... the language was written specifically to and always interpreted to mean 'this is your money,'" Brogan said.

Democratic lawmakers and teachers blasted the idea, accusing the Trump administration of acting in the interests of the National Rifle Association, and several congressmen called for legislation that would prohibit the use of those funds for guns.

Senator Patty Murray, the top Democrat on the Senate commission overseeing education, said on Twitter that she was "extremely disappointed that (DeVos) is moving forward with this awful plan to allow federal funds to be used to arm teachers."

"I hope she reconsiders and we need to keep pressure on her until she does," Murray added.

Brogan also clarified that the commission will tackle gun control as instructed by the White House. DeVos had told a Senate hearing in June that the panel will not look at guns "per se," causing confusion. Brogan said the commission will consider age restrictions for gun purchases, as well as whether people with mental health problems who are likely to harm themselves and others can possess weapons.

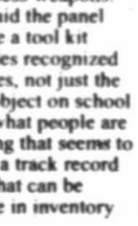

Brogan said the panel will produce a tool kit "that provides recognized best practices, not just the shiny new object on school safety, but what people are already doing that seems to be showing a track record of success that can be put out there in inventory fashion."

"You cannot do that with a uniform approach to this thing because the country is so very different, place to place, school to school, state to state," Brogan said. "There is no one way to make schools safe."

Besides recommendations on arming and training school staff, the research and best practices identified by the panel will include suggestions on equipping schools with magnetometers and other safety tools, character development programs and the impact of video games and movies on violent behavior. The report will be issued in "very late fall or by the end of the year," Brogan said.

The commission was created by President Donald Trump in March after 17 people were killed in the shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. The panel is chaired by DeVos and also consists of the heads of the departments of Justice, Health and Human Services and Homeland Security.

AP sources: Lawyer was told Russia had 'Trump over a barrel'

By Eric Tucker and Chad Day
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A senior Justice Department lawyer says a former British spy told him at a breakfast meeting two years ago that Russian intelligence believed it had Donald Trump "over a barrel," according to multiple people familiar with the encounter.

The lawyer, Bruce Ohr, also says he learned that a Trump campaign aide had met with higher-level Russian officials than the aide had acknowledged, the people said.

The previously unreported details of the July 30, 2016, breakfast with Christopher Steele, which Ohr described to lawmakers this week in a private interview, reveal an exchange of potentially explosive information about Trump between two men the president has relentlessly sought to discredit.

They add to the public understanding of those pivotal summer months as the FBI and intelligence community scrambled to untangle possible connections between the Trump campaign and Russia. And they reflect the concern of Steele, a longtime FBI informant whose Democratic-funded research into Trump ties to Russia was compiled into a dossier, that the Republican presidential candidate was possibly compromised and his urgent efforts to convey that anxiety to contacts at the FBI and Justice Department.

The people who discussed Ohr's interview were not authorized to publicly discuss details of the closed session and spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

Among the things Ohr said he learned from Steele during the breakfast was that an unnamed former Russian intelligence official had communicated that Russian intelligence believed "they had Trump over a barrel," according to people familiar with the meeting.

It was not clear from Ohr's interview whether Steele was directly told that or had picked that up through his contacts, but the broader sentiment is echoed in Steele's dossier.

Steele and Ohr, at the time of the election a senior official in the deputy attorney general's office, had first met a decade earlier and bonded over a shared interest in international organized crime. They met several times during the presidential campaign, a relationship that has exposed both men and federal law enforcement more generally to partisan criticism, including from Trump.

Republicans contend the FBI relied excessively on the dossier during its investigation and to obtain a secret wiretap application on Trump campaign aide Carter Page. They also say Ohr went outside his job description and chain of command by meeting with Steele, including after his termination as a FBI source, and then relaying information to the FBI.

Trump this month proposed stripping Ohr, who until this year had been largely anonymous during his decades-long Justice Department career, of his security clearance and has asked "how the hell" he remains employed. He has called the Russia investigation a "witch hunt" and denied any collusion between his campaign and Moscow.

The president and some of his supporters in Congress have also accused the FBI of launching the entire Russia counterintelligence investigation based on the dossier. But memos authored by Republicans and Democrats and declassified this year show the probe was triggered by information the U.S. government earlier received about the Russian contacts of then-Trump campaign adviser, George Papadopoulos.

The FBI's investigation was already under way by the time it received Steele's dossier. The investigation's lead agent, Peter Strzok, told lawmakers last month that "it was not Mr. Ohr who provided the initial documents that I became aware of in mid-September."

Ohr described his relationship with Steele during a House interview Tuesday.

One of the meetings he recounted was a Washington breakfast attended by Steele, a Steele associate and Ohr. Ohr's wife, Nellie, who worked for Fusion GPS, the political research firm that hired Steele, attended at least part of it.

Beside the "over a barrel" remark, Ohr also told Congress that Steele told him that Page, a Trump campaign aide who traveled to Moscow that same month and whose ties to Russia attracted FBI scrutiny, had met with more-senior Russian officials than he had acknowledged.

The breakfast took place amid ongoing FBI concerns about Russian election interference and possible communication with Trump associates.

By that point, Russian hackers had penetrated Democratic email accounts, including that of the Clinton campaign chairman, and Papadopoulos, the Trump campaign associate, was said to have revealed that Russians had "dirt" on Democrat Hillary Clinton in the form of emails, court papers say.

That revelation prompted the FBI to open the counterintelligence investigation on July 31, 2016, one day after the breakfast but based on entirely different information.

Ohr told lawmakers he could not vouch for the accuracy of Steele's information but has said he considered him a reliable FBI informant who delivered credible and actionable intelligence, including about corruption at FIFA, soccer's global governing body.

In the interview, Ohr acknowledged that he had not told superiors in his office, including Deputy Attorney General Sally Yates, about his meetings with Steele because he considered the information inflammatory raw source material.

He also provided new details about the department's move to reassign him once his Steele ties were brought to light.

Ohr said he met in late 2017 with two senior Justice Department officials, Scott Schools and James Crowell, who told him they were unhappy he had not proactively disclosed his meetings with Steele. They said he was being stripped of his associate deputy attorney post as part of an internal reorganization that would have occurred anyway, people familiar with Ohr's account say.

He met again soon after with one of the officials, who told him Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein didn't believe he could remain in his current position as director of a law enforcement grant-distribution initiative known as the Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Forces program because the position entailed White House meetings and interactions.

A Justice Department spokeswoman declined comment.

Man faces charges he threatened journalists to defend Trump

By Alanna Durkin Richer and Brian Melley
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A Los Angeles man who authorities said kept a small arsenal in his home was charged with making a series of phone calls threatening to kill journalists at The Boston Globe for what he allegedly called "treasonous" attacks on President Donald Trump.

Robert Chain, 68, was arrested Thursday at his home in the Encino neighborhood. A neighbor said more than 30 heavily armed agents showed up and took him away in his boxer shorts.

Chain later appeared in federal court, where prosecutors unsuccessfully asked a judge to detain him, in part because more than 20 guns and hundreds of rounds of ammunition were seized from his house, Assistant U.S. Attorney Matt Rosenbaum said.

Magistrate Judge Paul Abrams said Chain could be freed after he, and his wife, who is a lawyer, signed papers guaranteeing to pay $50,000 if he violates any terms of his release, which include surrendering his passport and any other guns.

"I don't think it's appropriate to keep him in custody for a night," Abrams said.

Chain, who repeatedly pulled at his long, dark hair that was dyed magenta at the ends, thanked the judge in a deep, gravelly voice.

Chain is charged with making 14 calls to the Globe newsroom between Aug. 10 and Aug. 22. They started after the Globe appealed to newspapers across the country to condemn what it called a "dirty war against the free press," prosecutors said.

On Aug. 16, the day scores of editorials were published Chain told a Globe staffer that he was going to shoot employees in the head at 4 o'clock, according to court documents. That threat from a blocked phone number prompted a police response and increased security at the newspaper's offices.

Chain said he would continue threatening the Globe until it stops its "treasonous and seditious" attacks on Trump, according to a court complaint.

Several times, he called Globe employees the "enemy of the people," a characterization of journalists that Trump has used repeatedly, including in a tweet on Thursday before the charges were announced.

Chain, who is retired from the international sales and trade business, has no criminal record and Rosenbaum acknowledged there was no evidence that he had planned to go to Boston.

Chain is slated to appear in a federal court in Boston on Sept. 24 to face a single charge of making a threatening communication in interstate commerce. He faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Newsrooms have received threats for years and rarely do they result in charges. However, sensitivity has been heightened since a gunman with a long-running grudge against the Capital Gazette newspaper in Annapolis, Maryland, killed five employees there in June.

Federal officials pledged to continue to go after anyone who puts others in fear of their lives.

"In a time of increasing political polarization, and amid the increasing incidence of mass shootings, members of the public must police their own political rhetoric. Or we will," Massachusetts U.S. Attorney Andrew Lelling said.

MHS ground game helps Bulldogs win over Randall

By Christopher Hadorn
chadorn@mrt.com

Establishing the run was the key for Midland High in its second half playoff push in 2017.

In Friday's season opener, the Bulldogs got their rushing game going when they needed it the most when trailing in the second half to visiting Canyon Randall.

MHS established its ground attack in the second half to pull off a 24-17 victory over the Raiders in a non-district game at Grande Communications Stadium.

The Bulldogs (1-0) amassed 224 yards on the ground and relied on the three-headed backfield group of running backs DQ Harris (91 rush yards) and Scott Pham (81 rush yards), and quarterback Suddin Sapien (57 rush yards).

MHS took its first lead when Sapien rolled right and scored on a 4-yard touchdown run, pushing the Dawgs to a 21-17 advantage with 6:52 left in the third quarter. Sapien's rushing TD, his second of the game, capped off a 15-play, 75-yard drive to start the second half.

"I'm really proud of how the kids responded at halftime," Anuszkiewicz said. "In all honesty, we didn't change a lot of our game plan. We just kind of came in and hit the reset button. I told our kids, 'We're going to have to play lower and more physical.'"

Leading 24-17 with 2:55 left, the Bulldogs needed to gain about a yard and a half on a fourth down situation at the Raiders' 43-yard line.

MHS opted to go for it and Sapien rushed up the middle for a 9-yard gain and a first down.

Pham followed with runs for 11 and 10 yards, and the Bulldogs were able to kill the clock by moving the ball down to the Randall 8-yard line.

"We took the gamble, we rolled the dice," Sapien said of the fourth down situation. "It was two yards, I felt like we could have got it. I told coach, 'Let me get it. I got you, Coach.' I took the ball and I got it."

Bulldogs junior kicker Ivan Campos had a big hand in the win, making four field goals.

Sapien called Campos the game's MVP after the game.

"I give credit to my snapper Josh Ramos, my holder Suddin Sapien and my o-line of course," Campos said. "I don't hear anything. I just focus. It's me, the ball and the field goal."

Randall (0-1) dominated the line of scrimmage in the first half, as junior running back Jasean Barrow broke loose on a 50-yard scoring run, and added another 51-yard rush that led to another TD.

Barrow rushed 19 times for 177 yards and two touchdowns, helping the Raiders go into halftime with a 17-15 advantage.

"I thought Randall did a great job of coming out," Anuszkiewicz said. "They were really physical the first half and we didn't answer the call."

However, the Bulldogs limited Barrow to only 19 rushing yards in the second half.

With MHS leading 21-17 in the third quarter, Randall drove the ball down to the Bulldog 2-yard line with a first-and-goal situation, but came up empty.

Bulldogs defensive end Karlo Urias got a key sack on third down and Raiders quarterback Landen Nix made an incomplete pass on a rollout on fourth-and-goal.

"The way our kids came out in the second half, our defense got a shutout," Anuszkiewicz said. "The offense moved the chains, got first downs in the second half. I think we burned about six minutes off the clock on the first drive in the second half and scored a touchdown. We controlled the clock. We controlled the time of possession and that gave us an opportunity to win the game."

MHS rushed for 146 yards in the second half.

"We definitely know when to step up," Sapien said. "We're definitely a really

Lee holds on in road win over Smithson Valley

By Adam Zuvanich
MRT Correspondent

SPRING BRANCH — The 2017 season represented a resurgence for Lee, which reached the third round of the playoffs for the first time in 16 years.

If the Rebels' 2018 opener was any indication, they won't have to wait nearly that long before making another remarkable run.

The Rebels showed their mettle, and their versatility, by traveling more than 300 miles and roughing up a more recent statewide stalwart on its home turf. Lee outlasted Smithson Valley, which received votes in the preseason Associated Press poll for Class 6A, for a 24-23 win Friday night at Ranger Stadium.

Taylor

"I think it's a huge win for our team," Lee defensive back Karl Taylor said. "I think we'll earn a lot of respect from all the people around Texas. People thought we were going to lose, but we believed that we were going to win."

Taylor provided one of several significant plays for the Rebels (1-0), returning a kickoff 96 yards for a touchdown after the Rangers (0-1) tied it 10-10 midway through the second quarter. Lee made heroic plays offensively and defensively as well.

Portillo

The Rebels' defense, led by defensive linemen Tracy Mackey and Jaiven White, pressured Rangers quarterback Levi Williams into a 10-of-33 performance in the passing game. The University of Houston pledge threw for 125 yards and ran for two second-half touchdowns for Smithson Valley, which was shut out in the first half while gaining a

Mustangs earn hard-fought win against Huskies

By Oscar LeRoy

El Paso Chapin was the kind of test Midland Christian thought it was going to be Friday night.

The Huskies had size, depth and athleticism.

But if the Mustangs are going to be successful this season, they know they will have to play physical and run the ball effectively to overcome any odds they might face.

Ben Gibbs rushed for 154 yards and two touchdowns, while the Mustang defense came up with some key stops, including a late stop on fourth down, to secure a hard-fought 20-16 victory at Gordon Awtry Field.

Midland Christian coach Greg McClendon said he was proud of his team for the win against the UIL Class 5A Huskies, but added that this game also showed what the Mustangs need to work on going forward.

"I don't feel we played anywhere close to our best

Serena matches her easiest win over Venus in US Open

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

Adam Hunger/Associated Press

Serena Williams returns a shot to Venus Williams during the third round of the U.S. Open tennis tournament Friday in New York.

NEW YORK — Serena Williams equaled her most-lopsided victory ever in 30 professional meetings with sister Venus, beating her 6-1, 6-2 on Friday night in the third round of the U.S. Open.

Serena shook off an early ankle injury to win seven straight games and seize control in perhaps her most dominant performance since giving birth to her daughter a year ago Saturday.

The sisters' earliest meeting in a Grand Slam tournament in 20 years was over early, with Venus unable to do anything to blunt Serena's power, even after the crowd tried desperately to get behind her early in the second set.

"It's not easy," Serena said, despite how easy it looked in a match that lasted just 1 hour, 12 minutes.

"She's my best friend. She means the world to me. Every time she loses, I feel like I do. It's not very easy, but it's a tournament. We know there's more to life than just playing each other and playing tennis."

They hadn't played this early in a Grand Slam since Venus won in the second round of the 1998 Australian Open in their first meeting as pros, and only once over the next two decades had either won so decisively. Serena won by the same score in a semifinal victory in Charleston, South Carolina, in 2013.

"I think it's the best match she's ever played against me," Venus said. "I don't think I did a lot wrong. But she just did everything right."

Serena, the No. 17 seed, will face Kaia Kanepi of Estonia, who knocked out top-ranked Simona Halep in the first round.

Serena, who turns 37 next month, leads the series 18-12 with her sister, 11-5 in Grand Slam tournaments. But this one wasn't expected to be so easy, not with Serena still working her way back into form after returning to the tour in the spring.

But this was the type of tennis that has brought her to 23 Grand Slam singles titles, the ability to pound balls all over the court and chase down the rare shots that looked like they might get past her.

"This was my best match since I returned," he said. "I worked for it. I worked really hard these last three or four months. That's life, you have to keep working hard no matter ups or downs you have. That's what I've been doing."

She pounded 10 aces to just one for Venus, the No. 16 seed who was perhaps a little drained after two tough matches to begin the tournament, including a three-setter against 2004 U.S. Open champion Svetlana Kuznetsova in her opener.

Serena had an easier time in the first two rounds, though that was expected to change Friday under the lights in Arthur Ashe Stadium. They had combined for eight titles in Flushing Meadows, six by Serena, and each had beaten the other in a U.S. Open final.

But there was no beating Serena on this night, and the discouraged look on Venus' face across much of the match indicated she seemed to realize it.

"I mean, she played so well, I never got to really even touch any balls," said Venus, a semifinalist at the U.S. Open last year. "When your opponent plays like that, it's not really anything to be upset about."

It looked as if Serena could have trouble when, in the second game of the match, her right ankle turned awkwardly when Venus hit behind her on a shot. Serena stood near the baseline with her back to the court for quite a few seconds, then motioned to the chair umpire that she wanted to the see the trainer at the next changeover.

Serena had the ankle treated with a 2-1 lead, then broke in the next game, helped when Venus missed an easy swinging volley wide. She would break again for a 5-1 lead, then pound two aces in the next service game to wrap up the first set in 31 minutes.

DESOTO 38, PERMIAN 28

ODESSA — Shun'Darion Ward threw for 357 yards and three scores as the DeSoto Eagles racked up more than 500 total yards and handed Permian a 38-28 season-opening loss at Ratliff Stadium.

The game was the first at Permian for transfer quarterback Peyton Powell, showed some of the big plays many at Midland Christian would remember. However, he also turned the ball over twice in the second half on drives Permian needed, down 28-20. Permian did run for 293 yards, including 122 yards from Ed Williams and 65 from Powell.

LUBBOCK COOPER 52 ANDREWS 50

ANDREWS – Lubbock Cooper kicked a last second field goal to beat Andrews in a non-district matchup on Friday night, at the Mustang Bowl.

With two seconds left on the clock, Lubbock Cooper kicker Brock Thompson brought the Pirates back from a one point deficit.

Lubbock Cooper scored first with a 93-yard interception return from Rilee King and went into halftime with a 21-14 lead.

Andrews responded in the second half, regaining the lead in the fourth quarter on a 23-yard touchdown pass from Brett Leach to Markeese Lawrence. Leach threw four touchdown passes and 492 yards, and Lawrence finished with 168 yards receiving, but it wasn't enough to put the Mustangs past Lubbock Cooper.

Up next for the Mustangs is Monahans, next week.

TRINITY 45, COMPASS ACADEMY 0

Trinity got its first win of the season in non-district contest at Coombes Field on Friday night.

This was the kind of early-season confidence boost the Chargers needed after going 0-8 last year in their first season back in 11-man football.

Trinity next hosts Kermit at 7 p.m. Sept. 14.

No other details were available at press time.

NO. 3 GARDEN CITY 64 SAN JACINTO 16

GREENWOOD 21 BIG SPRING 12

BIG SPRING – Greenwood open its season with a win on Friday night against Big Spring in a non- district matchup at Memorial Stadium.

The Rangers (1-0) pounded the football on the ground all night tallying 419 yards on 40 carries. Ryan Snodgrass led the way with 14 carries for 80 yards, while Trey Cross added 50 yards on 11 carries.

Greenwood jumped out to a 14-0 lead in the first quarter behind touchdown runs by Weston Wilber and Trey Cross. Wilber was playing quarterback in place of Jake Somers, who broke the thumb on his throwing hand in an intra-squad scrimmage and is out indefinitely.

Big Spring (0-1) came close to within 14-6 at the half on a 60-yard pass from Ethan Cortez to DJ Molina.

Greenwood made it 21-6 in the fourth quarter when Wilber threw a 16-yard TD pass to Brody Ray.

The Steers rounded out the scoring when Jeremiah Cooley hauled in a 12-yard TD pass.

El Paso Chapin's Christian McKeever gets taken down Friday by Midland Christian's Rhett Clark, and Luke Thomason at Gordon Awtry Field football," he said. "We can fix and do so many better things better offensively and defensively. Hopefully when I watch the video, I hope some of those penalties will be there because if not, I'll lose my mind. If we did them, then we've got to cut those out.

"But our kids battled, and I thought our kids made some big plays. We battled for four quarters, and I thought we were in a little better shape than them. We just need to get more consistent, cut the mistakes on offense and keep our defense off the field a little more."

The Huskies were driving for the potential go-ahead with less than a minute left when they were stopped just short of a first down at the MCS 41 while going for it on fourth-and-6.

"We have a lot of people playing both ways, but we knew we had it in us," said Gibbs, who also plays linebacker. "We stepped up when it mattered and made the plays. Chapin is a good team with a high-powered offense and a good defense, but we did what we needed to do to stop them. Coach had a great game plan and we just executed."

This was a defensive battle from the get-go as Chapin held on to a 13-0 lead until Gibbs scored on a 5-yard run midway through the second quarter to cut it to 13-6.

Gibbs then electrified the crowd when he saw a huge hole open up in the middle of the line and raced 81 yards for the touchdown to give MCS (1-0) its first lead of the night, 14-13.

"I ran the draw play, and I had perfect blocks and found the hole on the left side," Gibbs said. "I saw daylight. I have to give credit to the offensive line; they set up a perfect blocking scheme, and I just followed their butts."

Chapin retook the lead, 16-14, early in the fourth when Axel Castaneda drilled a 30-yard field goal.

The Mustangs were able to respond with 4:27 left when Rhett Clark scored on a 3-yard run out of the Wildcat formation.

The Mustang defense did the rest.

mere 35 total yards.

Despite allowing 20 points in fourth quarter, Lee's defense made a winning play when it mattered most. Right after Chris Rivera hauled in a 30-yard pass from Williams on fourth down with less than one minute remaining, the Rebels' Mykai Pertile made a jarring hit to cause a fumble that was recovered by fellow defensive back Bruce Franco.

"We really did fantastic," Pertile said. "I'm really proud of our defense."

Lee's offense sputtered like Smithson Valley's for most of the game, with John Thompson's 23-yard field goal in the first quarter providing the only points of the opening half. Senior running back Josh Traylor, who topped 1,000 rushing yards each of the last two years, was held to 74 yards and one touchdown on 21 carries.

Senior quarterback Felix Hinojosa, who started the game by completing five of his first six passes, was briefly benched for sophomore Mikey Serrano after misfiring on five of his next six attempts. But Hinojosa returned after the opening possession of the second half and finished off the game, completing 11 of 19 passes for 106 yards while matching Traylor with a game-high 74 rushing yards.

Hinojosa provided what proved to be the winning points when he broke free for a 49-yard touchdown run that gave Lee a 24-10 lead with 4 minutes, 23 seconds remaining.

"We were in the red zone a couple times and we missed a couple of times and we really needed to get it in," Hinojosa said. "I had to keep the team composed. We were ready and fired up to go get in. We kept chipping away and chipping away and we finally came through."

The Rebels still had to hold off the Rangers, who scored two touchdowns during the final two minutes and recovered a muffed kickoff return in between. Lee caught a break when Smithson Valley's Mason Reid missed the extra-point attempt after the last touchdown, leaving the Rebels with a one-point lead.

They made their own break when Pertile popped Rivera and forced the game's only turnover, which ended up sealing the game.

"They've got a really good football team," Smithson Valley coach Larry Hill said. "We knew that before the game started."

INDIANS 3, RAYS 0

CLEVELAND — Corey Kluber pitched seven sparkling innings, Edwin Encarnacion homered and the Cleveland Indians beat the Tampa Bay Rays 3-0 on Friday night.

Kluber (17-7) allowed two singles, struck out eight and walked two in Cleveland's AL-best 14th shutout this season. Cody Allen worked a perfect eighth and Brad Hand finished the two-hitter for his 31st save.

Kluber, making a bid for a second straight AL Cy Young Award, matched Yankees ace Luis Severino for the major league lead in wins and moved into first place in the AL with 186 2/3 innings.

Encarnacion snapped a scoreless tie with a solo drive to center off Tyler Glasnow (1-4) in the seventh. The Indians added two more in the ninth when Greg Allen scored on a wild pitch and Michael Brantley singled home Francisco Lindor.

Glasnow struck out six in a career-high seven innings. He was working on a no-hitter before Melky Cabrera singled with two out in the fifth.

AL Central-leading Cleveland won for the fourth time in five games amid speculation it was closing in on a trade for Toronto slugger Josh Donaldson.

Joey Wendle hit a leadoff single in the first and Tommy Pham singled in the fourth for Tampa Bay's only hits. The Rays are 9-2 since Aug. 19, matching their best 11-game run in four years.

It was Glasnow's sixth start since being acquired in a July 31 trade with Pittsburgh for pitcher Chris Archer. His only win of the season occurred in relief against the White Sox on May 8.

YANKEES 7, TIGERS 5

NEW YORK — Gleyber Torres drove in the go-ahead run one batter after a contested check swing loaded the bases for New York in the eighth inning, and the Yankees beat the Detroit Tigers 7-5 on Friday night as they await the arrival of 2013 NL MVP Andrew McCutchen.

Yankees manager Aaron Boone fired up the crowd — and got himself ejected — for impersonating a catcher to show plate umpire Nic Lentz what he was missing in the fifth. Brett Gardner, Aaron Hicks and Miguel Andujar then homered in the sixth to end Jordan Zimmermann's bid for a second career no-hitter.

Boone gave the Bronx a jolt with his third ejection of his rookie season. After Torres complained to Lentz during an at-bat, Boone was tossed a moment later for shouting from the dugout. Boone then came to home plate, put a finger in Lentz's face and squatted behind the plate and pretended to catch a pitch.

New York trailed 5-4 when it loaded the bases against Joe Jimenez (4-4) on a double by Gardner and walks by Hicks and Luke Voit. Voit was ruled to have checked his swing on a 3-2, two-out pitch. Tigers manager Ron Gardenhire was ejected for arguing that Voit went around.

Torres then lined an 0-1 pitch from Alex Wilson to left field for a single, and the ball ricocheted off the head of diving left fielder Mikie Mahtook, allowing two runs to score for a 6-5 Yankees lead. After an intentional walk to Neil Walker, Austin Romine brought in another run with an infield single.

David Robertson struck out Nicholas Castellanos and Victor Reyes with two on in the ninth for his fifth save.

New York had to rally after blowing a late lead for the second straight game. A night after Dellin Betances gave up two homers in the ninth of an 8-7 loss to Detroit — Boone called that one "a kick in the stomach" — Zach Britton (2-0) allowed a tying single to Mahtook in the seventh and a go-ahead, bases-loaded sacrifice fly to Ronny Rodriguez in the eighth that made it 5-4.

The banged-up Yankee lineup will get a boost Saturday. McCutchen is expected to join the team following a trade Friday from San Francisco, and catcher Gary Sanchez is set to return from the DL.

Zimmermann carried a 3-0 lead and a no-hitter into the sixth behind a solo homer from Niko Goodrum and a two-run triple by Jim Adduci.

After Romine reached via error, Gardner hit Zimmermann's 2-0 pitch over the right-field wall. Hicks added a no-doubt solo shot two batters later to tie it at 3, and Andujar made it 4-3 with a solo shot in the next at-bat.

New York starter Luis Severino was pulled in line for his major league-leading 18th victory, but instead took a no-decision after pitching three-run ball for six innings. He struck out 10.

ROYALS 9, ORIOLES 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Ryan O'Hearn homered among his three hits and drove in four runs, Whit Merrifield scored three runs and the Kansas City Royals beat the Baltimore Orioles 9-2 Friday night in a matchup of the two teams with the worst records in the majors.

Hunter Dozier and Cam Gallagher also went deep to help the Royals win for the fifth time in six games on their current homestand.

Brad Keller gave up a home run to the first batter of the game — Cedric Mullins — but quickly settled in to pitch eight strong innings. Keller (7-5) gave up two runs and four hits with two walks and four strikeouts to improve to 3-0 with a 2.16 ERA in his last four starts.

With the score tied 1-1 in the fourth, Andrew Cashner (4-13) gave up a sacrifice fly to Merrifield after loading the bases on two walks and a single. Dozier led off the fifth inning with a 423-foot home run to left field to make it 3-1.

The Orioles pulled within a run in the sixth when Mullins led off with a double just beyond the reach of Dozier at third, advanced to third on a fly ball and scored on Trey Mancini's sacrifice fly to the wall in right.

The Royals answered in the bottom of the inning as Gallagher hit his first home run of the season, ending Cashner's night.

Cashner, who has given up a career-high 21 homers, allowed four runs and nine hits in 5 1/3 innings. He walked three and struck out one.

O'Hearn added a two-run single off Yefry Ramirez later in the sixth to push Kansas City's lead to 6-2. Dozier's RBI single in the eighth drove in Merrifield for his third run scored of the game, and O'Hearn added a two-run homer off Ryan Meisinger later in the inning to cap the scoring.

Mullins put Baltimore up 1-0 when he knocked Keller's second pitch of the game 412 feet into the fountains in right-center.

The Royals tied it in the bottom of the first as Merrifield scored on Dozier's double-play grounder.

National League

BREWERS 4, NATIONALS 1

WASHINGTON — Jhoulys Chacin pitched effectively into the seventh inning, Travis Shaw hit a two-run homer and the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Washington Nationals 4-1 on Friday night.

During the game, the teams reportedly worked out a trade that will send pitcher Gio Gonzalez from the Nationals to the Brewers. The left-handed starter, who has struggled in 2018, will be a free agent in the offseason.

The Brewers also got home runs from Jesus Aguilar, his 31st, and Erik Kratz in winning their third straight game. Milwaukee holds the second NL wild card spot.

Chacin (14-5) allowed a run on six hits while striking out six and walking two in 6 1/3 innings.

Jeremy Jeffress pitched the ninth for his eighth save in 13 opportunities. With a hard rain falling, the Nationals loaded the bases with one out, but Jeffress struck out Bryce Harper and got Anthony Rendon on a fielder's choice.

Trea Turner had three hits for Washington, which went 1 for 15 with runners in scoring position.

Tanner Roark (8-14) allowed four runs on six hits over six innings. Roark came in 5-1 with a 1.61 ERA in his past seven starts, but the Brewers homered in each of the first three innings against him.

Shaw connected for a two-run shot with two outs in the first. Kratz hit a solo home run in the second and Aguilar connected with nobody on in the third.

Nationals catcher Matt Wieters was ejected in the sixth inning for arguing balls and strikes.

PHILLIES 2, CUBS 1

PHILADELPHIA — Asdrubal Cabrera hit a solo home run with one out in the 10th to lift the Philadelphia Phillies to a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs on Friday night in a game played through steady rain.

Cabrera connected off Steve Cishek (4-2), driving an opposite-field shot to left-center to help the Phillies pull within two games of Atlanta in the NL East. The Braves lost 3-2 to Pittsburgh.

Javier Baez hit his 29th homer for the NL Central-leading Cubs.

Pat Neshek (2-1) earned the win with a scoreless inning.

Baez hit a liner out to left off Nick Pivetta for his NL-leading 98th RBI to give the Cubs a 1-0 lead in the fifth.

Philadelphia tied it at 1 on Cesar Hernandez's RBI single off Jose Quintana in the sixth. The speedy Roman Quinn hit a double and scored on the hit to left.

Phillies reliever Adam Morgan escaped a jam in the seventh when Baez hit a hard liner to right with two runners on, but Phillies newcomer Jose Bautista reached out to make the catch and doubled Tommy La Stella off second to end the inning.

Seranthony Dominguez struck out Cubs pinch-hitter Victor Caratini to leave the bases loaded in the eighth.

Pivetta pitched out of a bases-loaded, one-out situation in the third by striking out Anthony Rizzo and retiring Ben Zobrist on a grounder to shortstop.

PIRATES 3, BRAVES 2

ATLANTA — Gregory Polanco's eighth-inning single drove in Adam Frazier with the tiebreaking run, and the Pittsburgh Pirates recovered after blowing a two-run lead to beat the Atlanta Braves 3-2 on Friday night.

The first-place Braves, who have lost five of their last seven, saw their NL East lead shrink to two games over Philadelphia.

Jameson Taillon (11-9) gave up two runs on five hits in seven innings, his 17th consecutive start allowing no more than three earned runs.

Felipe Vazquez pitched out of trouble in the ninth for his 29th save in 33 opportunities. Camargo hit a one-out single up the middle, past a diving Josh Harrison, and advanced to second on Kurt Suzuki's single to right. Camargo was forced out at third on a fielder's choice before Vazquez struck out Dansby Swanson to end the game.

The Pirates led 2-0 after five innings before Taillon gave up homers in back-to-back innings.

Rookie Ronald Acuna Jr. led off the sixth with a drive into the right-field seats, his 22nd. Johan Camargo led off the seventh with another homer to right.

Frazier, pinch-hitting for Taillon, led off the eighth with a walk from Brad Brach (2-4) and moved to second when second baseman Ozzie Albies bobbled Starling Marte's grounder for an error. Frazier scored the unearned run on Polanco's single up the middle.

Corey Dickerson led off the second with a double down the right-field line and scored on a single up the middle by Elias Diaz. Anibal Sanchez ended the second with three straight strikeouts to begin a stretch of retiring 12 consecutive batters.

Sanchez allowed two runs, one earned, on five hits in 5 1/3 innings.

Braves center fielder Ender Inciarte made a leaping catch of a drive hit by David Freese to end the first inning. Watching the catch from the mound, Sanchez pumped his right fist in approval.

Interleague

BLUE JAYS 6, MARLINS 5

MIAMI — Justin Smoak connected for a pinch-hit grand slam in the ninth inning, sending the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-5 victory over the Miami Marlins on Friday night.

Toronto trailed 5-1 heading into the ninth. The Blue Jays loaded the bases on Danny Jansen's one-out infield single before the Marlins replaced Kyle Barraclough with Drew Steckenrider (4-4).

Aledmys Diaz then struck out looking, but Devon Travis forced in a run with a walk and Smoak drove Steckenrider's 0-2 pitch over the wall in right for his 22nd homer.

Joe Biagini (3-7) pitched a scoreless eighth for the win and Ken Giles worked a shaky ninth for his 19th save. Miami put two runners on before Austin Dean fouled out and Magneuris Sierra lined to left, ending the game.

Keegan Bradley picks up the pieces in Boston

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

NORTON, Mass. — Keegan Bradley managed to forget about the way he played last week and started a new FedEx Cup playoff event Friday with high hopes.

Tiger Woods switched putters and stayed in the middle of the pack.

Bradley opened the Dell Technologies Championship with a 4-under 67 on Friday, good enough in breezy conditions at the TPC Boston to share the early lead with Chris Kirk and Beau Hossler.

Depending on how the late starters fared, it would be the highest 18-hole score to lead at the TPC Boston since the tournament began in 2003.

Five days ago, Bradley played in the final group at The Northern Trust and closed with a 78. What made it sting even more is that Bradley hasn't won in six years, and another Ryder Cup is approaching with his name not even being mentioned.

At least he didn't have to wait long to fix whatever went wrong.

"I'm right back up there again," Bradley said. "To be honest, I was really bummed out, and then just a couple of days went by and I didn't care anymore. It was tough, because I felt like that was my day to kind of tell everybody that maybe I was back and I was here to stay. And I may have put too much pressure on myself. But it's nice to come right back out and play quickly. So I didn't have to wait a week or two weeks. And that was great."

Stew Milne/Associated Press

Keegan Bradley hits his second shot on the ninth hole during the first round of the Dell Technologies Championship golf tournament at TPC Boston on Friday in Norton, Mass.

Bradley opened with four birdies in eight holes and then held his own on the back nine as the wind began to gust.

Woods had a far less auspicious start by changing clubs on the 10th tee to start his round, though it wasn't indecision.

His caddie accidentally switched the head covers on the 3-wood and 5-wood while they were on the range.

No matter. Woods sent his preferred club, the 3-wood, into the bushes on the left and made bogey. He was 3 over for the round until he started pecking away, including a tough par save on his penultimate hole.

Woods switched to a new putter that resembles the one with which he won all but one of his majors.

It wasn't a reaction to finishing in a tie for 40th at Ridgewood Country Club, saying instead that TaylorMade had been working on this model the last few months.

Even so, it remains a struggle to get all components of his game working.

The putting kept his score from being worse. Woods instead struggled with his irons, though the wind had a lot to do with that, and failed to break par in the opening round for the 10th time in his last 11 tournaments.

"I putted beautifully today, I really did," Woods said. "I hit a lot of good putts, and just have to give myself more looks out of them. I didn't hit the ball close enough."

Dustin Johnson also started poorly, but the world's No. 1 player turned it around.

Starting on No. 10, he ran off three straight birdies around the turn, had his momentum stall by missing a short par putt, added two birdies late and shot 68.

Johnson was one shot behind, alone with Xander Schauffele and Webb Simpson. It's a big week for Schauffele as the final tournament before U.S. Ryder Cup captain Jim Furyk announces three of his four picks. Schauffele finished 12th in the standings.

He played alongside Jordan Spieth, who also could use a big week. Spieth already is on the Ryder Cup team.

The 25-year-old Texan is running out of tournaments to avoid a winless year for the first time since 2014. He also, and more urgently, wants to be at East Lake for the Tour Championship.

Spieth started the postseason at No. 43 and moved up 10 spots. He has two weeks to crack the top 30, and would love nothing more than to not have that hanging over him at the BMW Championship next week.

"Ideally this week, play well, have a chance to win and not worry about the rest of that," he said.

Darlington's question: Are you in the playoffs?

By Pete Iacobelli
Associated Press

DARLINGTON, S.C. — Austin Dillon loves his position entering the Southern 500 — planning for NASCAR's playoffs rather than trying to qualify for the postseason.

Dillon was the first to lock up a spot in the 16-team playoffs with his win at the Daytona 500 in February.

He's largely felt pressure-free ever since, something he expects will change as the Monster Energy NASCAR Cup Series wraps up its final two regular-season races here at Darlington and then Indianapolis next week.

"In two weeks from now we are going to be thinking about points again," said Dillon, 19th in the point standings. "So you've got to race these last two races like the playoffs have started."

Twelve drivers have clinched berths in the playoffs, and most of the other spots could be wrapped up after Sunday night's race.

Denny Hamlin needs eight points in the race to make the field for the 12th time in 13 years. Aric Almirola and Jimmie Johnson could get in if one of NASCAR's nine drivers with victories crosses the line in first.

For many drivers, they'll need a great run if they're to race for a title.

Ricky Stenhouse Jr. is 16th in points, but on the outside looking in because of Dillon's victory at Daytona.

Stenhouse stands 79 points behind Alex Bowman, who is on the bubble as the final driver for the playoff.

Stenhouse's approach this weekend is clear — win and you're in.

"We've got to go out and do our job and get to victory lane," he said.

Stenhouse, the Roush Fenway Racing driver who qualified for the playoffs for the first time a year ago, acknowledged that strategies change and more risks are taken when it comes to making the playoffs.

Stenhouse said crew chief Brian Pattie might try an unconventional setup or tinker with their race plan to get the No. 17 car on top.

"It's like that for a lot of us," Stenhouse said.

Kyle Larson secured his playoff spot in the series' last race at Bristol with a runner-up finish two weeks ago.

The Chip Ganassi Racing driver never really concerned himself with his positioning, feeling his consistency (13 top 10s in 24 events) and performance was better than several other playoff contenders.

"I felt like for the last three or four months, our team was solidly in the playoffs until you're not mathematically set until the last race," Larson said. "Our mindset isn't any different, especially these next two."

Hamlin, the defending Southern 500 champion, has struggled in recent weeks to find the form that's made him a regular playoff participant since 2006.

"Winning is the only thing I care about," Hamlin said Friday. "Running better is very, very important to us at this point, so we're doing everything we can to work hard and get to that level we want to be at."

Matt Kenseth returned the Roush Fenway Racing's No. 6 in midseason after retiring as a full-time driver last year.

He's run just eight races with his best finish a 13th in the first Pocono event in June.

Kenseth, the 2013 Southern 500 winner, is not racing for points or planning for playoffs, simply trying to improve the team as best he can.

He's learned, though, that despite NASCAR's emphasis on wins, staying consistent is key.

In Kenseth's run to the 2003 championship he won just once while Ryan Newman won eight races yet finished in sixth, more than 300 points behind the champion.

The uproar over Kenseth's steadiness led NASCAR to start the playoffs the next season.

"All you hear on TV is about points, points points," Kenseth said. "So I don't want to hear it."

Canelo intends to start 'new chapter' in GGG rematch

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Canelo Alvarez is getting his hands wrapped for training when he cocks his head and makes a kissing noise. In a stroller across the gym, his baby daughter's face positively lights up at the sound.

Alvarez is deep in the final weeks of work before he meets Gennady Golovkin on Sept. 15 in a middleweight title rematch. It's the most compelling fight of the year and the possible culmination of a sports rivalry that has turned into a bitter personal grudge.

Alvarez's suspension for failing two drug tests earlier this year is the primary source of this animus. It's the reason the fight was postponed four months, costing both fighters untold millions, and it's the reason the Mexican champion has been out of the ring for the longest stretch in his 13-year professional boxing career.

But in the tranquility of Alvarez's training gym in an office park set on the gently rolling hills of suburban San Diego, with only his smiling daughter and his retinue for an audience, Alvarez doesn't fixate on the caustic words thrown his way constantly by Golovkin's camp, or ponder the loss of any fans whose faith in him waned.

"This is my biggest fight, and this is starting a new chapter, a second chapter in my career," Alvarez said. "It's going to be a big victory for me, and I'm going to come out of it with a new energy."

Alvarez goes through a workout both crisp and familiar, with trainer Eddy Reynoso monitoring each move.

Chepo Reynoso, Eddy's father and the veteran boxing trainer who now manages Alvarez's career, smiles at the familial vibe, along with the loving interplay between the fighter and his daughter.

"When so many (bad) things happen, you become immune," Reynoso said. "Venom doesn't kill you. It fortifies you."

After making what he insists was an inadvertent mistake by eating tainted meat in Mexico, Alvarez is determined to reassert his supremacy, and to reclaim his reputation. He acknowledges the correctness of his punishment, but he's also eager to reach a point when he isn't talking about it every day.

Suspensions end, and fights must go on. The redheaded former teenage prodigy who grew to become a father and a champion is moving forward.

"The negativity doesn't get through to me," Alvarez said. "I always focus on what I'm doing. I have to think about the fight. If (Golovkin) is thinking about me all the time, he's not thinking about the fight."

Alvarez and Golovkin fought to a split draw last year in that rarest of boxing matchups: A showdown between two elite fighters near the peak of their powers. Golovkin, who felt he had won, still reached an apex of his late-blooming career after lobbying for years to get a fight with the Mexican superstar.

Alvarez knew the fight was close, but he clearly benefited from having a true rival and equal in the ring. The rematch, set for May 5, was a natural for both — but then Alvarez tested positive for clenbuterol in February.

Alvarez withdrew from the bout, which was only rescheduled after months of negotiations and a reconfiguring of the financial terms. All the while, Golovkin and his trainer, Abel Sanchez, lobbed increasingly vicious verbal assaults at Canelo's camp, believing Alvarez had knowingly cheated.

Two fighters who once trained together in Big Bear are no longer friendly enough to stand together on stage at their public workout in Los Angeles last weekend. Alvarez is fed up with the criticism, feeling it goes beyond normal fight promotion theatrics.

When asked at the public workout if he would shake Golovkin's hand in sportsmanship after their bout, Alvarez said: "For me, it's very difficult, especially after all the things that have been said, all the offensive claims. That's going to be very hard for me. I don't know."

In a separate interview a few minutes later, Golovkin said Alvarez is "not a champion" and "a liar."

But while the fight promotion is dominated by bad feelings and verbal fireworks, Alvarez is studiously training in San Diego. Eddy Reynoso wants his fighter to throw more punches in the rematch while still avoiding a slugfest that could make both fighters vulnerable to a knockout.

"We're going to keep the defense, but be more active," Reynoso said. "He's going to throw better combinations, and he's going to think about counterpunching much better. We've been working on it every day. When Golovkin throws punches and misses, that's when Canelo needs to stop him."

American racer Ferrucci trying to salvage career in IndyCar

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Santino Ferrucci has spent most of his life trying to be the next American driver in Formula One. His journey took him from go-karting in Connecticut to European junior racing in Italy and a development deal with the Haas F1 team.

Then Ferrucci torpedoed his career in spectacular fashion.

The 20-year-old in July purposely crashed into his teammate at the end of an F2 race, refused to appear before race stewards to discuss his actions and was later reprimanded for driving with a gloveless hand holding a cellphone. He was fined almost $80,000, suspended for four races and dropped by his team, which sided with Ferrucci's teammate for the "unsportsmanlike and above all uncivilized behavior that he was forced to endure ... by Santino Ferrucci and father, who accompanied him."

Haas has not dropped Ferrucci from its development program, but the driver is essentially persona non grata in European racing circles right now.

So Ferrucci has been back in the U.S. the last month, roaming the IndyCar paddock. He raced the doubleheader in Detroit in June and liked IndyCar, so that's where he returned after his F2 debacle.

Ferrucci has scraped together a deal for the remaining two races of the season with Dale Coyne Racing, and he'll be in the field Sunday in IndyCar's return to Portland International Raceway.

It could be argued that IndyCar is Ferrucci's only option right now and that unless he completely rebuilds his reputation, he may never get another chance to race in Europe again. But if he's settling, Ferrucci is saying all the right things in an effort to show IndyCar is where he wants to race.

"This is where I want to be," Ferrucci said of IndyCar. "This atmosphere, this series, this is where my focus is now. I've reprioritized where I'm trying to be and this is it now."

He talks about the welcoming paddock in IndyCar and competitors who want to help each other learn. Ferrucci noted IndyCar became a viable route first when Alexander Rossi abandoned his climb through F1 — Rossi is now an Indianapolis 500 winner and in the thick of IndyCar's championship race — and Robert Wickens, who chose IndyCar this season when he left touring cars in Germany. Wickens is currently hospitalized with a spinal injury suffered in an Aug. 19 crash.

Ferrucci is also embedded with the Coyne team, giving him access to studying craft with Sebastien Bourdais, a four-time series champion and former F1 driver. Bourdais is blunt, sugarcoats nothing, and has no time or tolerance for arrogant young drivers.

Ferrucci over the last month has figured out how to work with the French champion.

"Seb is very direct. When you ask him a question, there's a good chance you won't like the answer," Ferrucci said. "I've worked on learning to like his answers."

Ferrucci said he's worked on many things since his meltdown at Silverstone in July, including how to handle his emotions and learning not to erupt when he's frustrated or angry. He maintains he crashed into his teammate out of anger and dismisses a sponsorship flap with his F2 team as an "internal team matter that should not have been made public." Ferrucci tried to run a "Make America Great Again" sticker on his car but the FIA rejected the request because political slogans or symbols are banned.

Ferrucci is vague on the MAGA incident. But he notes that he's not from a wealthy family and needed outside backers to continue his career through his teenage years. In exchange for funding, Ferrucci runs decals and branding that are dictated by his sponsors.

Texas Tech defensive coordinator David Gibbs talks to his players during the team's practice March 27 in Lubbock. Gibbs is going into his fourth season as defensive coordinator, making him the first in two decades to stay in the job that long at Texas Tech.

Different tone of talk about Texas Tech's defense

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

Kliff Kingsbury knows all about players wanting to go to Texas Tech to be part of a big-play, high-scoring offense. He was one, a quarterback who passed for a lot of yards and touchdowns as a three-year starter long before becoming the Red Raiders coach.

Kingsbury certainly doesn't expect that mode to change, not for the Red Raiders or any other of the potent offenses in the Big 12.

But there is a lot more talk these days in Lubbock about the defense. And the tone has turned positive, as opposed to the worries in the past of just how many points Texas Tech would give up to opposing teams.

"Just a lot of guys bought into what the coaches were selling, and it made it easy for these young guys to get in here, and just go," said senior safety Jah'Shawn Johnson, who has 37 career starts. "When I was a freshman, people weren't taking the next step."

David Gibbs is going into his fourth season as defensive coordinator, making him the first in two decades to stay in the job that long at Texas Tech. He was the seventh DC in seven seasons when he was hired in 2015.

"Just the experience coming back, a lot of those guys played as true freshmen, true sophomores, they've learned growing up in coach Gibbs' scheme," Kingsbury said. "Going on Year 4, (Gibbs) has been able to develop a culture, a consistency on that side of the ball which we haven't had at Texas Tech for long, long time."

TCU led the league in total defense (331.4 ypg) and scoring defense (19.0 ppg) last season, and has a 51-27

Kingsbury keeping Texas Tech QB starter close to vest

You have to give Texas Tech football Kliff Kingsbury a lot of credit. He keeps secrets better than most who work for the federal government.

Kingsbury has been mum on who his starting quarterback is going to be in today's 11 a.m. season opener against Ole Miss at Houston's NRG Stadium.

People have tried to ask the coach, but they've gotten the same old response: "We'll see."

"He'll jog out there and we'll go with him and start there, and then see where it goes," Kingsbury said during Tuesday's press conference.

"I've said all along, all three could end up playing. You'd like to just have one that just takes it and runs with it, but I'm open to whatever's best for the team."

Those three competing for the job are junior McLane Carter, sophomore Jett Duffey and true freshman Alan Bowman, although all signs are pointing to having Carter start against the Rebels.

The early frontrunner, Duffey, should have probably won the job outright early considering the high expectations the staff had on him. But he can't seem to take care of the football, which is a point of emphasis Kingsbury has made in picking a starting quarterback.

We could still see Duffey trot out there with the first team, but since Kingsbury likes to be coy about it, I guess we'll just have to speculate for the time being.

Keeping that a secret makes very little sense to many.

UTPB defense looks to get past Texas Southern

By Jaydon Hart
MRT Correspondent

Entering the program's third season, UTPB found itself in familiar territory starting fall camp with a quarterback competition.

Head coach Justin Carrigan announced on Monday that Kameron Mathis would be leading the Falcons in their first matchup of the year against Division I opponent Texas Southern, at 7 p.m. today at BBVA Stadium in Houston.

"I think the familiarity was most important," Carrigan said when announcing Mathis would get the start. "Having three years working with us and my presence, I think it gave him (Mathis) a little bit extra of understanding what I'm comfortable with."

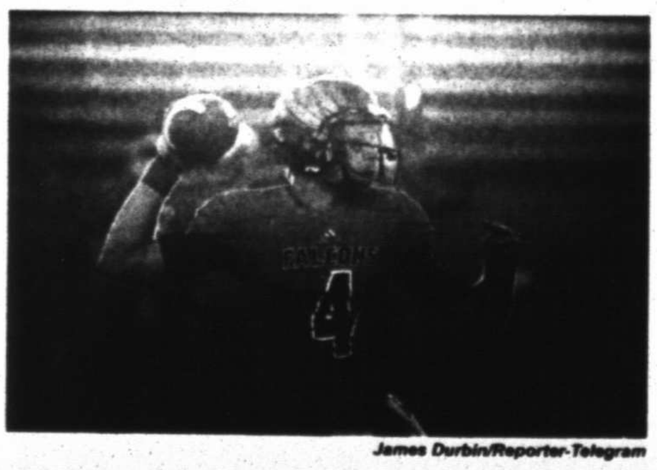

Mathis is a familiar face for the Falcons, the junior quarterback has played in 21 of the Falcons' 22 games over the past two seasons and is no stranger to facing a quarterback battle going into a season.

"Having to compete for a job day in and day out for the last three years has taught me how to fight for something I want. It has sharpened me and pushed me to where I am now," Mathis said.

Carrigan gave all four healthy quarterbacks on the team's roster an equal chance to compete for the job entering the fall.

Mathis beat out junior transfer Sam Allen from San Jose State, sophomore Mike Myers, and freshman Taylor Null, who won two state championships as the starting quarterback at Artesia (N.M.).

"Each other's biggest competitors, each other's biggest supporters," said Mathis about the motto for the quarterbacks at UTPB.

UTPB quarterback Kameron Mathis (4) throws against Midwestern State on Oct. 28, 2017, at Grande Communications Stadium.

He added: "Myself, as well as the entire team, have come a long way over the last year. We have grown up from being young freshmen to being mature, experienced upperclassmen."

While it might be Mathis' third season as the Falcons quarterback, he has been learning an entirely new offense this offseason from his head coach.

Carrigan has taken over the play-calling duties from former offensive coordinator Scott Preston. Over the past two seasons, the Falcons averaged 349 yards and 342 yards per game respectably.

"Previously being an offensive coordinator I felt like that was one place I could come in and make an impact," Carrigan said.

As his time as an offensive coordinator, Carrigan led Tarleton State's offense to 485 total yards per game and played a major role in the team's 2013 Lone Star Conference championship.

"Everything that goes on in this program I'll carry the weight of," Carrigan said. "This is one area that I thought I could at least come in and try to get this ship going in the right direction."

On the other side of the ball, the Falcons' defense is returning several upperclassmen and key players. Highlighting their

No. 23 Texas seeks revenge against Maryland

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. — A year ago, Texas didn't really know what to expect before playing its first game under coach Tom Herman.

"There was an incredible amount of instability when we got here," Herman recalled. "You're talking about three head coaches in four years, four athletic directors in 4 ½ years and two presidents."

In their debut under Herman, the Longhorns were upset by Maryland 51-41. Texas came in ranked No. 23 and never got back in the Top 25.

In the rematch Saturday, the Terrapins will be the ones coping with radical changes.

Head coach DJ Durkin is on administrative leave following the death of offensive lineman Jordan McNair, who collapsed on the field May 29 and died on June 13 of heatstroke. The circumstances surrounding the medical treatment administered to McNair on the scene, as well as charges of bullying by the coaching staff, are under investigation by two separate commissions.

Matt Canada will serve as interim coach and offensive coordinator in the opener of a season dedicated to McNair.

"Obviously it's a challenging situation, but ultimately it's still about Jordan," said Canada, who will make his head coaching debut. "That's why we're here and all of these things have occurred."

No. 23 Texas, on the other hand, enters with an entirely different mindset than a year ago.

"We know what we are doing now," sophomore quarterback Sam Ehlinger said. "Everything was new to us. We were out there getting our feet wet, but we are more comfortable. We've got an idea of who we are playing with, knowing the plays and the coaching staff."

Ready or not

There's no telling how the Terrapins will react to the loss of McNair and with Canada as their leader after a very unusual training camp. It's been tough for Canada, too.

"When someone's having a tough day we try to help each other out," said Canada, in his first year at Maryland after serving as offensive coordinator at LSU.

"Everything that they've dealt with, they've done the best job they could possibly do," he noted. "I think we're as ready as we could be given the situation that we're in. I feel very good about that."

QB duels

Ehlinger won the starter's job over junior Shane Buechele. Ehlinger last year became the first Texas QB to lead the team in yards passing and rushing since Colt McCoy in 2008, but his freshman season was marred by a concussion and a series of late turnovers that figured prominently in three losses.

"To be named the guy means they have confidence in me and how I play the game," Ehlinger said.

This summer, Tyrrell Pigrome and Kasim Hill dueled for the Maryland starting job. Canada would not reveal this week which one will start Saturday.

Running wild

Maryland senior Ty Johnson probably can't wait to get started. In his three previous season openers, Johnson had a rushing touchdown in each game and averaged 9.4 yards per carry. Against Texas last year, he ran for 132 yards on just 12 carries and scored on a 40-yard sprint to anchor a rushing attack that amassed 263 yards. He's been pretty good over the rest of the season, too. For his career, Johnson averages 7.5 yards per attempt.

Texas defense

The Longhorns were riddled with injuries at linebacker in training camp, and starter Anthony Wheeler will sit out the first half against Maryland because of a targeting penalty in the 2017 Texas Bowl. Several of last season's top playmakers are gone, but Texas still starts eight seniors on defense, including three across the front line. The ability of senior rush ends Breckyn Hager and Charles Omenihu to squeeze Maryland's quarterback could be pivotal.

Look at me now

Herman understands how Texas fans could look at last year's record and deem the program to be mediocre. He only asks that they judge him on what transpires this season.

"Do I feel confident in the fact that we've improved and developed our kids, our players, our coaches?" he said. "Do the people in that building feel confident that we have developed? Absolutely."

defensive unit are linebackers Chris Hoad, Keegan Gray, and John O'Kelly, who accumulated 256 total tackles of the 847 tackles made by the team last season.

O'Kelly was named Lone Star Conference Freshman of the Year, finishing the season with a team-high 5.5 sacks and four blocked kicks.

"I don't really like to focus on awards. All I care about is winning and whatever I can do to help us win is what I expect out of myself," said O'Kelly about entering the season after the honor.

"The defense did a great job flying around last year and tried to get as many hats on the ball as we could each play, but I feel like this year we a lot more assignment sound and bigger than we were last year. We have a ton of skill and are excited to show that this season."

This isn't the first season UTPB has kicked off the season with a D-I opponent. Last year the Falcons traveled to Beaumont to face Lamar, failing 72-6. But the Falcons are hoping for a different outcome this season with 41 upperclassmen returning from last season's team.

Texas Southern finished 2-9 last season and has gone 6-16 under third-year coach Michael Haywood. The Tigers finished 107th in the FCS in points per game and 88th in points allowed on defense.

They too entered the season with a quarterback competition and also brought in several new transfers, so this should be a very competitive game.

"I think it's going to be a great measuring stick, it's an unfamiliar opponent, them being division one they're going to have a lot more scholarships and I love that challenge, Carrigan said. "It gives us an opportunity to go down there and see where we're at and to make a name for ourselves" overall record since moving to the Big 12 in 2012.

A big reason for that success is the consistent Horned Frogs defense under Gary Patterson, going into his 18th season as head coach and still making defensive calls like he did as their coordinator for three years before getting the top job.

Iowa State is coming off an 8-5 record, its best season since 2000. The defensively improved Cyclones allowed only 21 points a game and had wins over both Oklahoma and TCU, the teams that played in the Big 12 championship game.

Oklahoma State has a new defensive coordinator in veteran coach Jim Knowles, and is switching to an attacking 4-2-5 scheme similar to what TCU uses.

"I think everyone on the defense likes the new defense. I think we're going to have a lot of fun with it," Cowboys defensive end Jordan Brailford said.

While some Big 12 defenses are clearly getting better, they will still be mostly overshadowed by the offenses they have to try to stop each week when league play starts.

TCU ranked 19th in total defense among the 129 Division I teams last season. That was below five teams from each the SEC and Big 10, and multiple teams from the Pac 12 and ACC, the other Power Five leagues.

Four Big 12 teams ranked in the bottom 26, including the Red Raiders.

"We still have to take big steps," Kingsbury said. "We weren't anywhere near where we need to be last year. But we were improved and if we can take another step, hopefully we'll be right there."

Texas Tech returns 10 players who started on defense last year, and nine others coming back were two-deep players.

The Red Raiders didn't allow 50 points in a game last season, significant after losing four times the previous two years when their offense scored at least 52 points.

In 2016, they led the nation with 565 total yards a game while averaging 43.7 points; they gave up 43.5 points per game and finished 5-7.

\Tech allowed only 32.2 points per game last season while making more progress with another season under Gibbs.

"Your knowledge of the defense is high at all times because you don't have to worry about changing defenses and what I'm doing, and this and that. It's been very huge for sure," Johnson said.

"I feel like when I was here before I left, a lot of the guys on defense weren't really, I guess, committed to coach Gibbs' scheme all the way," said senior linebacker Dakota Allen, the second-leading tackler as a freshman in 2015 before a one-season detour at "Last Chance U" in East Mississippi. "When I returned, it was like a whole different locker room, a whole different mindset. Everybody's grinding, and everybody really trusted coach Gibbs' scheme for our defense."

Notable programs such as Texas and Texas A&M announced their starting quarterbacks ahead of time, why can't Kingsbury?

The players might know, but they're keeping that as close to the vest as Kingsbury is.

"We'll see. Everybody would like to know, wouldn't they," said senior receiver Zach Austin. "All three quarterbacks have been playing well. I'll be excited to see who it is too come game day."

The Red Raiders hope that whoever is chosen, they can do their part in keeping the team competitive against a typical SEC defense and an explosive offense. Kingsbury has said that he thinks there are enough complementary parts that the quarterback won't be forced to do too much. Kingsbury hopes that five returning starters on the offensive line will be a big plus.

"I'd like to see how much we've improved bringing everybody back," Kingsbury said. "You hope that the offseason workout, the rigors of last season, the lessons learned, could carry over and improve that group as a whole. From what I've seen in camp, they are better, but this is a talented defensive line, one of the better ones that we will have gone against over the last couple years, so they will have their hands full."

The Texas Tech defense will have to come up with a couple of turnovers or this could be a tough start for the Red Raiders. My pick: Ole Miss 42, Texas Tech 31.

Here are my Big 12 power rankings

1. Oklahoma – Until somebody finally knocks off the Sooners, they are still the team to beat. OU opens against Florida Atlantic at 11 a.m. today.

2. West Virginia – I put a lot of stock on a team with a good experienced quarterback and Will Grier is one of the best as he threw for 3,490 yards and 34 TDs before a finger injury cost him to miss the late part of last season. The Mountaineers will be tested in the season opener when they travel to face Tennessee at 2:30 p.m.

3. Texas – The Longhorns have the talent, so what's new? How much success they have this season will depend on the quarterback play, which could still be a revolving door with Sam Ehlinger and Shane Buechele. How UT does against Maryland at 11 a.m. today will quite telling.

4. Oklahoma State (1-0) – The Cowboys kicked off their season with a 58-17 thrashing of Missouri State on Thursday. Sure, the Cowboys lost stud quarterback Mason Rudolph, but Mike "The Mullet" Gundy has got a QB factory going on in Stillwater that Taylor Cornelius stepped in and threw for 295 yards and five TDs against the Bears.

5. TCU – The Horned Frogs lost some talent but as long as Gary Patterson is the head coach, TCU shouldn't have much of a dropoff. Look for TCU to start off strong against Southern at 11 a.m. today.

6. Iowa State – Matt Campbell has the Cyclones playing with the kind of confidence and swagger others dream about. With 13 starters back from last year's 8-5 season, they will continue to be a scary bunch. ISU kicks off its season by hosting South Dakota State at 7 p.m.

7. Kansas State – Bill Snyder, the dean of the Big 12 coaches, knows how to coach 'em up better than anybody in the business as he takes mediocre recruiting classes and turns them into winners by stressing strong defense and special teams. This year KSU doesn't start off with its usual cupcake as the Wildcats host Mississippi State at 11 a.m.

8. Texas Tech – Could this finally be the make or break season for Kingsbury?

9. Baylor – A lot of people think the Bears will be a lot better than last year. I still think they're at least a couple of years away, but beating up on Abilene Christian at 7 p.m. should be a nice start.

10. Kansas – Oh Kansas, when will the misery ever end? Hey, at least the Jayhawks have a good shot at kicking off the 2018 season with a win when they host Nicholls State at 6 p.m.

Council votes on reasonably priced workforce housing assessment contract

By Tori Aldana
valdana@hearstnp.com

A new study may provide solutions for the need for reasonably priced housing in Odessa.

Community Development Strategy of Houston has been awarded a contract for a reasonably priced workforce housing assessment with the city. City Council voted to approve the Odessa Development Corp. board's recommendation at its meeting Tuesday.

Two proposals were received, and ODC board members rated the proposals and recommended for the award.

The city is looking to develop a comprehensive survey that will give insight on what is needed to provide reasonably priced workforce housing in the area, according to a previous 191 News article.

Interim Assistant City Manager Cindy Muncy said the survey was recommended to update previous information with the changing economy.

Mayor David R. Turner and council members Dewey Bryant, Barbara Graff, Michael Gardner and Filiberto Gonzales were present. Councilman Malcolm Hamilton was absent.

During the meeting, Graff thanked the ODC board members for working together to find affordable housing.

The contract fee for CDS was $73,060, which includes all associated travel expenses for the kickoff and research trips. Landers stated that it fits the use of sales tax.

The motion to award the housing assessment contract to CDS was approved by unanimous vote.

Also on Tuesday, there was a:

- motion to amend Article 3-13 of the city of Odessa Code of Ordinance, Titled "Mobile Homes and Manufactured Homes," by amending Section 3-13-62(9), entitled "Minimum Development Standards: Tie-Down and Foundation

COMMUNITY

Nonprofit provides women with professional attire

By Tori Aldana
valdana@hearstnp.com

A new boutique is giving more than clothing to its clients. Dress for Success Permian Basin is equipping local women with confidence and resources for the workplace. The nonprofit provides professional suiting for women in need.

Clients are referred to Dress for Success Permian Basin by other nonprofits, government agencies and religious organizations. Once referred, a woman is given interview attire. If she gets the job, she can come back for a weeks' worth of clothing. If after 30 days she is still employed, she can come back for other separates. If after that she still wants clothing, she will need to attend a professional women's group for networking opportunities and mentoring.

Emily Weinberg, who serves as executive director, decided a year ago, to apply to open a Dress for Success affiliate in the Permian Basin. After preapproval, she had to fill out paperwork – including a business plan, budget and referrals. She received approval in December to open the affiliate.

At the time, Weinberg was working full time at the Small Business Development Center and resigned at the end of May. Since June 1, she has been working to get Dress for Success Permian Basin up and running. This includes spreading word of the organization to folding brochures.

Weinberg said she wants to eventually expand services to include mentors and life coaches who can provide clients with information on how to be successful in the workforce. This will include a resource center equipped with computers so clients can complete training, work on resumes and hone interview skills.

Once there is a large enough client base, Weinberg said the women's group will be formed. Dress for Success Permian Basin has already served three clients.

Weinberg said area organizations noticed the need for equipping women with professional attire.

"Before, when I was applying, I had talked to people who run other nonprofits and I was saying 'hey, I'm interested in bringing Dress for Success to this community, do you think this is a needed

GROWTH

Petroleum index continues to climb

■ Price fallout from pipeline constraints beginning to undercut growth

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@hearstnp.com

The three main legs of the Permian Basin regional oil and gas economy — crude prices, rig count and drilling permits — remain well below their highs reached in 2014-2015. But they remain strong enough to propel the Texas Permian Basin Petroleum Index sharply higher.

Karr Ingham, the Amarillo economist who prepares the index, says it jumped 5 percentage points from May to June and is 27 percent higher than the June 2017 index. Still, he said that the index remains about 60 points below its peak set in November 2014 as crude prices were beginning to fall.

Even with the index and its three primary drivers well below their highs, crude production volumes soared 23.1 percent in June above June 2017 levels, and volumes in the first half of the year climbed 24 percent over the first half of 2017.

Natural gas production volumes, often associated with crude production in the Permian Basin, followed a similar trend, up 21.8 percent in June over last June and up 21.7 percent to date this year over a year earlier.

Crude prices were up sharply over 2017 levels, with the June average of $63.75 a 52.8 percent gain over the $41.71 averaged in June 2017. Prices in the first half of 2018 are averaging $61.86, up 33.3 percent from $46.42 in the same period last year.

The rig count averaged 384 in June, up 24.3 percent from 309 last June and is averaging 358 so far in 2018, up 30.6 percent from 274 a year ago.

There was a slight dip in the number of drilling permits issued in June, with the 747 issued by the Railroad Commission down three from the 750 the commission issued in June 2017. The commission has issued 4,248 so far in 2018, up 15.3 percent from the 3,685 issued last year.

Oil and gas employment continued to rise, with June employment averaging 39,640, up 28.1 percent from 30,955 last June and averaging 37,714 so far in 2018, up 28.6 percent from 29,335 a year ago.

Even so, Ingham said he sees cracks beginning to appear in the Permian Basin's armor, and pipeline constraints are serving as the chisel. He said the regional rig count, primarily in Railroad Commission District 8, was peaking and beginning to decline in June, a trend he said continued into July.

"That's almost certainly tied to growing production relative to takeaway capacity, and the resulting discounts for Permian-produced crude oil and natural gas," Ingham said. "The first casualty of lower prices is the rig count."

He said that crude oil discounts remain at $15 a barrel or higher in some locations. Natural gas prices are off by as much as a third, or more than $1, compared to other pricing locations, he said. June natural gas prices averaged $1.97 per Mcf, down 25.9 percent from $2.66 last June. Prices are averaging $2.29 so far this year, a drop of 17.6 percent from $2.77 last year.

"Rising natural gas production is something producers can't do anything with: They can't market it, they can't get it on the pipeline, they've reached flaring limits. (Their option is) shutting in crude wells," he said.

Ingham said the pipeline constraints and widening price differentials are signals from the markets to producers "to bring us less of that." But there is little evidence so far activity levels have been affected, he said.

Indeed, producers reported 521 oil completions in June, up 71.9 percent from 303 the previous June, and have completed 2,905 oil wells so far in 2018, up 63.3 percent from 1,779 last year. Producers completed 31 natural gas wells in June, up 106.7 percent from 15 last June and have completed 236 gas wells so far this year, up 174.4 percent from 86 in the first half of 2017.

"However, lower prices were almost certain to bring out some observable decline in activity, and it appears as though June is the time in which that became noticeable," Ingham said.

The good news is that the constraints have prompted additional pipeline development that is expected to come online beginning in 2019, Ingham said.

But there are still concerns as pipeline companies rush to expand takeaway capacity, and those are based on the impact of steel tariffs, he said.

"Our concern is on steel tariffs dramatically raising the price of the projects. It may very well change the economics of the pipelines once they're in place. What the pipeline companies would have to recover from producers goes way up. That's the No. 1 leg of concern: the cost to producers. The second leg is retaliation and the potential impact on exports of crude and natural gas. And third, the potential impact on midstream development and development budgets," he said.

Odessa's jobless rate among the lowest 50 in US

From staff reports

Odessa's unemployment rate dropped below 3 percent during the month of July, and according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, that was good enough to put the metropolitan statistical area among the lowest 50 rates in the nation.

Odessa's rate has been on the decline — from 4.0 in July 2017 and 3.2 in June of this year. Last month, the Texas Workforce Commission reported Odessa tied for the second lowest unemployment rate in the state.

In the blistering hot economy across the nation, there is still room to go. The BLS reported this week that the number of MSAs with a jobless rate at 2.5 percent or below went from nine to 17 and there were 50 areas with unemployment rates below 2.9 percent.

Ames, Iowa, posted the lowest rate in the nation (1.8 percent). Rounding out the top five were Honolulu, Hawaii (2.0), Kahului-Wailuku-Lahaina, Hawaii (2.1), Iowa City, Iowa (2.1) and Sioux Falls, South Dakota (2.1).

Midland tied for sixth and again led the nation in year-over-year percentage gain in employment (10.1 percent), according to the BLS.

The BLS shows Odessa with a civilian labor force of 80,502 in July, an increase of more than 300 compared to June and nearly 1,600 more than July 2017.

The BLS also reports 323 of 388 MSAs across the nation did post lower rates in June compared to one year earlier.

The lowest unemployment rates in July, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

PHS' viral video

Students in a Permian High School English class were filmed Thursday sitting on buckets around folding tables.

ECISD enrollment is up; district has more than teacher vacancies

ECISD enrollment topped 33,000 during the second week of school.

ECISD reported on Friday morning that its Thursday enrollment was 33,186, which is an increase from the first week (32,681). The district started the year off with an increase of more than 1,000 students than during the first week of the 2017-18 school year.

Also this week, ECISD reported the number of teacher vacancies was 243 (100 in secondary schools and 143 in elementary schools).

Viral video shows Permian students sitting on buckets

A social media post showing Permian High School students sitting on buckets around folding tables has earned nearly 4,000 shares this week.

A Permian High student claimed in the post that her English teacher, Madison Bolton, did not have enough desks and chairs for her nearly 40 students and decided to do something about it.

"We don't have enough seats/desk (sic) in my english (sic) class so my teacher was willing to go buy white tables and buckets for all of us to have a place to sit, thankfully Home Depot was willing to donate them to her," the post read.

The post claims Permian High principal Robert Gex said there was no money to purchase desks and chairs. However, Ector County ISD Public Information Officer Mike Adkins said there is money in the budget to buy more desks and resources but the district did not know of the situation. Adkins said Gex was made aware of the lack of seating before school started, but Bolton did not inform him or the district before going to Home Depot as to not be "a bother to anyone."

The student commented on the original post Friday to show the buckets have been replaced with metal folding chairs.

Heavy truck traffic passes through Pecos on July 31.

Economic growth brings challenges, benefits to Pecos

By Simone Jasper
sjasper@hearstnp.com

PECOS — Ted and Murlene Godfrey nearly tripled the size of their RV park, and people are still clamoring to live there. As oil-field-related jobs draw people to Reeves County, the Godfreys receive up to 30 inquiries per day.

"It is a big problem to find housing here," Murlene Godfrey said. "It's either extremely expensive, or mostly it's just not available."

The Godfreys started Duval Road RV Park in 2013, a time when they said few spaces for the vehicles existed in the area. What started as a way for the pair to earn income became a venture that continued to expand.

"By the time we got it finished — each segment of it — it was all rented," Ted Godfrey said. "It's been that way all the time. Even now, we could put in another 50 (spaces) ... and rent them out before we get them done because there's a big demand for it."

The Godfreys' RV park is about 4 miles outside the city limits of Pecos, where people have also turned to temporary living options. As government leaders address housing and other impacts of population growth, they say the change also brings increased sales tax.

'Retail will not come without rooftops'

For 33 years, Kenneth Winkles Jr. has witnessed ups and downs in the Pecos economy. But recently, the growth hasn't slowed down.

"That's what everybody's been waiting on for the last five, six, seven years — is for this boom to go away," he said.

Winkles, executive director of the Pecos Economic Development Corp. (PEDC), said sales tax collection in 2018 is double what it was in 2016. He credits increased oil activity with allowing the city to generate more money for infrastructure projects.

Reeves County as of Friday had 74 active drilling rigs, leading the Permian Basin, according to Baker Hughes. The industry has brought well-paying jobs and other opportunities to Pecos, according to Mayor Venetta Seals.

"For our local people that have gotten some of these jobs, they're now able to do a lot of improvements to their homes, where before they just didn't have the income to do that," she said.

Traditionally a small town, Pecos is now welcoming several new businesses, including Tractor Supply Co., Dickey's Barbecue Pit and Domino's. But with few places for employees to live, attracting additional retailers has been difficult.

"As most people will tell you, retail will not come without rooftops," Winkles said. "So, if you don't solve your housing issues, you have an extremely hard time really looking at the national franchises."

To recruit businesses, the PEDC has entered a three-year agreement with the company Retail Strategies. In terms of housing, the corporation has been involved with creating a 16-home subdivision. Apartment complexes and a larger home project are being planned.

For now, Seals said some people live in temporary housing, such as RVs, travel trailers, hotels and man camps.

Pecos can't count those transient residents as a part of its overall population, which stands at nearly 9,000, according to Seals. She thinks at least twice that many people are in her city, and that discrepancy makes it challenging to attract housing builders to the area.

"When they look at our demographics, it says we aren't growing," Seals said. "But we know we're growing because of the lack of housing that's here."

'A lot of different vehicles in a small area'

When Tameka McKay heads into Reeves County, she tries to leave early or late to beat traffic. It's an adjustment she has made as she sees clogged roads in the Pecos area.

"Even our bosses tell us to avoid certain highways, to go around just to make sure we make it home and back every day," said McKay, who has lived in the region on and off since 2014.

Many in Pecos pointed toward traffic on U.S. Highway 285 as an indicator of the area's recent growth. The highway — one of the city's main arteries and a northern route to Carlsbad, New Mexico — is sometimes dubbed "dead man's road" because of vehicle fatalities.

The two-lane highway was sufficient until oilfield traffic increased in the area, according to Seals. She said the situation has created concern for those who have long traveled on the road.

"You'd be lucky if you'd see three, four vehicles maybe," Seals said. "Now, it's a very heavily traveled highway."

Between Pecos and the state line, seven fatalities occurred on Highway 285 through the end of July, according to Gene Powell, public information officer for the Odessa District of the Texas Department of Transportation. That volume of fatalities equals the total for all of 2017.

TxDOT has started work on about $100 million in projects on the highway. Plans include adding passing lanes north of Pecos so that drivers can move around slower vehicles.

"I think it will improve the situation, but the real key to improving the situation is driver behavior," Powell said via phone.

While driving a different route to his Pecos job, William Steverson estimates that he sees one wreck daily. As a former paramedic, he said that volume of vehicle crashes stands out. Steverson has also noticed the toll commercial vehicles put on the region's roads.

"I drive in from Midland every day, so the construction has definitely not helped," he said. "But it's got to be done because the roads are in bad shape because of all of the big trucks."

Within city limits, the Pecos Police Department does what it can to enforce commercial vehicle permits and maintain traffic safety.

The department this year received 922 traffic accident calls as of July 30. The figure represents an increase from 2014, when the department received 524 of those calls the entire year, according to data provided to the Reporter-Telegram.

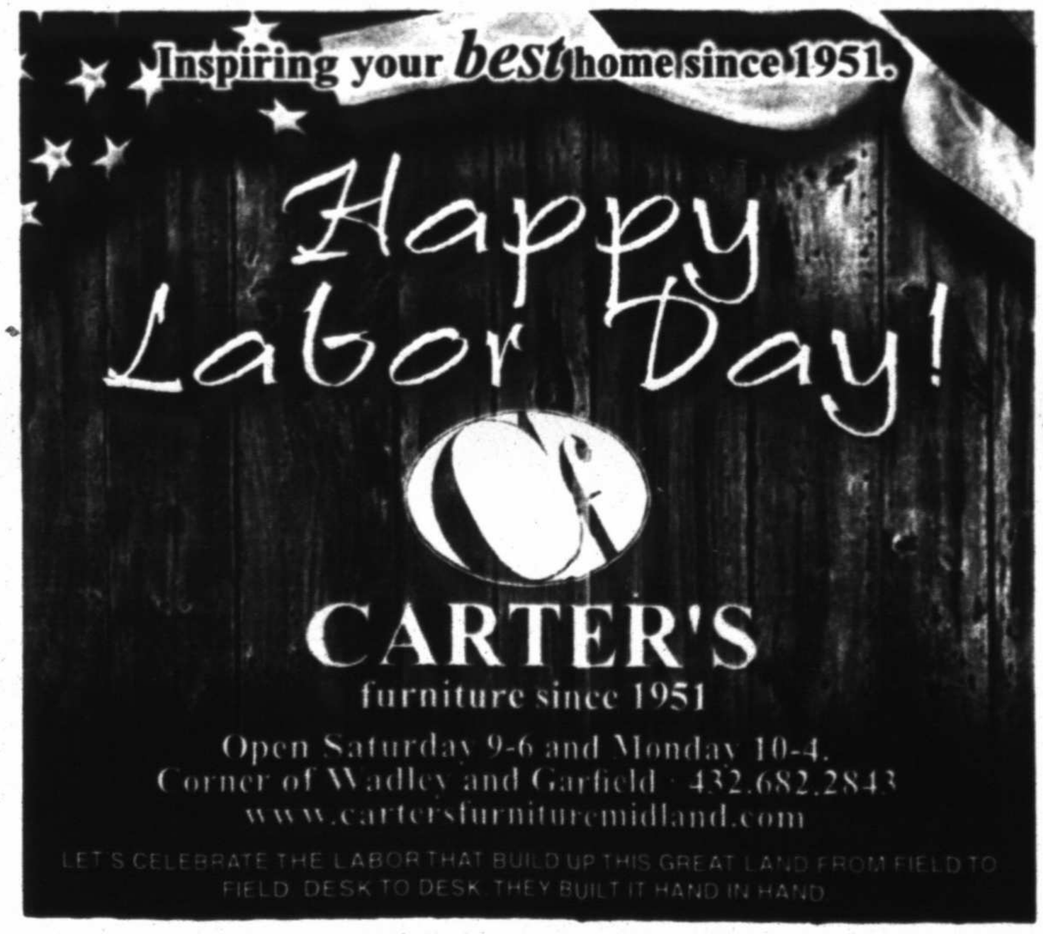

Lisa Tarango, interim police chief, thinks traffic volume and driving speeds contribute to the spike in accidents.

"We have a lot of different vehicles in a small area," Tarango said. "Everyone's trying to get somewhere a lot faster than traffic should allow."

In response to the increased volumes, Pecos Police Department has hired additional personnel to handle calls and law enforcement duties. Tarango said recent pay increases have helped the department to meet the demand.

"What the city was having trouble with was finding ... quality candidates," she said. "We wouldn't have a lot of people in our application pool."

'A blessing and a curse'

Margie Pena was raised in the food service industry, but she never remembers working as hard as she does now. She dedicates time toward continuing her grandparents' traditions at the increasingly busy Old Mill Restaurant.

"It's been very frustrating for locals that are used to coming in and sitting down and eating and getting their food promptly," said Pena, manager at the Pecos restaurant. "Where it used to be a few customers, now we're overwhelmed."

Pena enjoys welcoming newcomers to Old Mill, which she said is known for its customer service and fresh-made tortillas. As the economy grows, the business has raised wages and offered other incentives to keep workers on board.

A few years ago, Old Mill operated with about 20 employees. The staff has since doubled in size and could still use extra help. Pena said the restaurant can't afford to lose its current employees, even those who don't work their shifts consistently.

"When they pick and choose their hours, our attitude is: Well, at least they showed up today," she said. "It's just so frustrating because this is a hard job."

As a Pecos native, John Venegas has watched people fill restaurants and retail stores. He said the trend has been going on for about two years.

"I'd call it a surprise," he said. "I don't think we saw this amount of people coming into town and just changing everything the way it's changed."

In addition to the crowding, Venegas said some people in the area are confronting another issue related to economic growth: increased cost-of-living.

At Duval Road RV Park, monthly prices have increased up to $100 since the business first opened. McKay, who lives at the site, said she can't complain about the spike but expressed concern for people in the community who don't have lucrative oil industry jobs.

"I hate it because they're jacking the prices on not only the housing, but the gas and the food for the local people," said McKay, who is originally from Louisiana. "You're not hurting us. But you're hurting the local people."

To expand affordable living options, the PEDC plans to use some of its land for sites that are in the starter-home price range, Winkles said.

Limited housing in Pecos has put a strain on the ability to draw health care and education sector workers, according to City Manager Seth Sorensen. He said some people travel on weekends to visit their families and estimates retail leakage is 85 to 95 percent. The city leader hopes more people call Pecos their home in the future.

"We want to have a permanent tax base inside the city," Sorensen said. "RVs are meeting the temporary need, but they don't do anything for our property values."

Sorensen said the city is using money from record-setting sales tax collections to address infrastructure needs. He expects the oil-related activity will continue to drive economic growth.

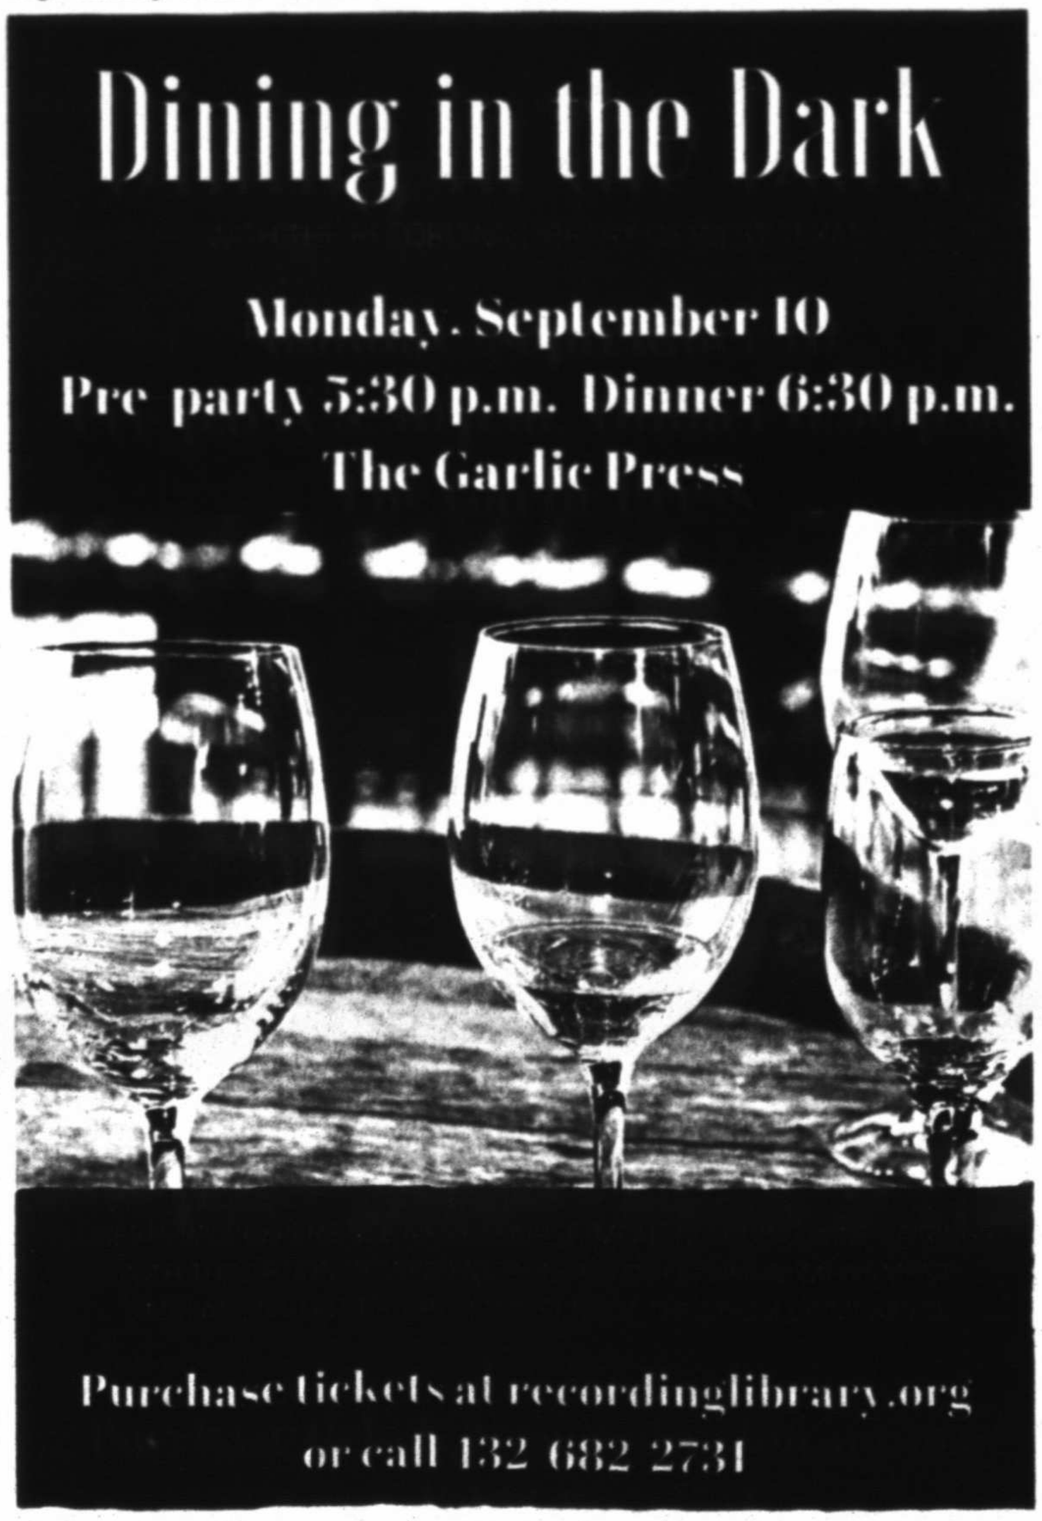

"It's a blessing and a curse — a blessing that it's bringing us so many opportunities but a curse that we can't move fast enough to keep up with everything," Sorensen said.

Odessa restaurant among winners in nationwide burger contest

■ James Beard Foundation selects Curb Side Bistro for chef Alejandro Barrientos' entry in Blended Burger Project

By Rich Lopez
jrlopez@hearstnp.com

One West Texas burger is now a pretty big deal. The James Beard Foundation announced last week the winners of its fourth annual Blended Burger Project. Odessa's Curb Side Bistro's El Tejano Borracho (The Drunken Texan) created by chef Alejandro Barrientos was among the five winners.

"It's truly an honor to get this from the James Beard Foundation," Barrientos said. "Our crew was in shock and we're still relatively new in Odessa. Our brick and mortar isn't even a year old."

The rules were simple. Chefs had to develop their take on a mushroom-and-meat blended burger. Customers voted for their favorite burgers through July 31 which narrowed down 350 restaurants to the top 20 with the most votes.

Barrientos used his get-togethers with family and friends as inspiration.

"The thing I always notice is when you start off at a party, people are a little reserved. They may get a small plate of food so nobody will judge," he said. "After the drinks flow and people loosen up, people grab their real plates with everything on it. I thought, 'What would that look like as a burger?'"

Or in his case, a slider. Curb Side's menu is built on slider burgers over regular sized ones.

The panel of judges included James Beard Award-winning TV personality Andrew Zimmern, "Good Housekeeping" culinary director Susan Westmoreland and StarChefs editor Antoinette Bruno. The three reviewed the 20 burgers to determine this year's five winners.

The winners will cook their blended burgers at the historic James Beard House in New York City on Oct. 18.

"We were thrilled at the wide array of creative recipes and types of eateries that took part in this year's competition," Kris Moon, chief operating officer of the James Beard Foundation, said in a press release. "Adding fresh, chopped mushrooms to the burger patty makes the traditional burger much more flavorful and sustainable — a change James Beard Foundation stands behind. We congratulate the winners and are grateful for all restaurants and chefs that took part."

Although the slider burger isn't currently on the menu as it was during the voting process, Barrientos expects it to return soon.

"We took it off when the competition was over, but I want it back on now as a sort of thank you. We had such great support from the community and for the food. I think it's a West Texas pride thing," he said.

That the JBF is behind this makes this a special honor for Barrientos. The foundation's mission, per their website, is to celebrate, nurture and honor chefs and other leaders making America's food culture more delicious, diverse and sustainable for everyone. Its annual awards are like the Oscars of the culinary arts and highlight excellence in cuisine, culinary writing and culinary education.

"We're just a small restaurant sticking to our original concept and working our butts off," Barrientos said. "We've received so many blessings and stay true to what we know."

The winning restaurants are:

■ Curb Side Bistro, Odessa

"El Tejano Borracho" (The Drunken Texan) is a 70/30 blend of ground beef and mushrooms, including shiitake, white button and portabella, topped with pulled pork, tangy barbecue sauce, jalapeno and mushroom corn fritter, cilantro ranch, pickled red onions and a mushroom white queso cheese sauce all sandwiched between toasted brioche buns.

■ The Bearded Chef, Palm Bay, Florida

The "Thai My-Shroom" is a umami bomb Thai burger made from Florida-grown Monterey mushrooms blended with beef and pork, spiked with ginger, lemongrass, cilantro and birds eye chili, with a spicy Thai ketchup, pickled enoki mayo with mushroom-cured egg yolks and smoked maitake bacon on a toasted mushroom dusted brioche.

■ Burgh'ers Restaurant, Pittsburgh

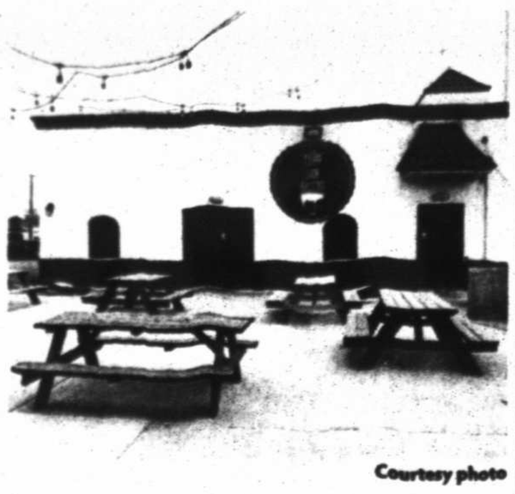

The "Fox Chapel" blended burger consists of a 75/25 blend of local grass-fed beef to local roasted mixed mushrooms topped with goat cheese, pickled red onion, avocado, spring mix and a balsamic glaze.

■ Courtyard Cafe at Raymond James, St. Petersburg, Florida

"Smokey Mushroom Venison Blended Burger" blends farm-raised New Zealand venison, angus beef and hen-of-the-woods mushrooms – chargrilled, seasoned with Alder-smoked sea salt, cracked pepper and porcini mushroom powder placed on a sourdough pretzel roll with beet ketchup and topped with melted smoked Tilamook cheddar and wild ramp béarnaise.

■ Toltec Brewing, Albuquerque, New Mexico

"The Royale" features New Mexico brisket and roasted crimini patty topped with aged white cheddar, Young Guns New Mexico green chile, herb and ancho mayo, applewood bacon, local fried egg, heirloom tomato on a jalapeno brioche bun.

Café opens inside Sewell dealership

By Lauren Eckert
191 News

Sewell Ford at Parks Legado offers something that most vehicle dealerships don't.

Inside Sewell is Press Café, which sells everything from a latte and a pastry to brick oven pizza.

The café's menu includes coffee — listed as "eye openers" — pastries, soups, sandwiches, salads, burgers and burritos. Everything is made in-house, and all pastries are made fresh daily, said Andrea Russell, who manages the restaurant with Renee Elfret.

Press Café also has twice-weekly specials, Russell said.

"Two days out of the week we have a special. We try to do something different, especially for the people that work here on the campus," she said. "I'm sure you don't want to cook and eat the same thing every day, or be offered the same thing every day, so we try to spruce it up on Tuesdays and Thursdays and have a special."

Russell, who has an associate degree in culinary arts from Odessa College and worked previously at Cork & Pig and Red Oak Kitchen, said the Loaded Chicken Salad Sandwich is one of her favorite menu items.

Renne Elfret, who also serves as assistant to Collin Sewell, and Russell both highlighted the pizza when listing their menu recommendations.

"I am real proud of our wood-burning oven, our pizzas," Elfret said. "We make our dough every morning and pull it, and we have awesome pizzas from the outdoor stove and fire grill."

The Press Café is not exclusive to Sewell customers. Elfret said the majority of their patrons are not Sewell customers or team members. She said the café has a children's play area, indoor and outdoor seating and a putting green.

"I think the best thing here is the atmosphere of the place," Russell said. "To the community, we provide a place that you can come and hang out and enjoy someone's company, have a latte in front of the fireplace in the morning before your day starts, or come and enjoy breakfast on the inside, and get to just relax."

The café has been open since the end of May but has been on the minds of Sewell and Elfret for many years.

"We've always had the Press Café as something we'd like to do. … We had thought of different scenarios that we could do it and when (Sewell) decided to build the new dealership, well, we decided this is the perfect place to start it out," Elfret said.

Elfret has been Sewell's assistant for almost 14 years but has a long history with cooking.

She said her cooking philosophy is, "If you mess up, you can always turn it into something else."

"I started cooking on the kitchen counter of my grandmother's kitchen, and she was just an old-fashioned home cook, and I used to go to her house and stay a lot in the summers, and cook with her, and that is just something I've always done. I think through that, being with her, I was never afraid of cooking and mixing things," she said.

Elfret is from the Midland/Odessa area, but moved to New Mexico when she was in high school and attended the University of New Mexico for two years. She owned two food operations, Look Who's Cooking and Look Who's Catering, and served meals at the bed and breakfast she operated with her mother.

Elfret said she met Sewell when he hired her for the cook staff at a learning retreat where team members go several times a year.

"Collin is an awesome, awesome person to work for," she said. "He's one of those type of people that cares very deeply for his team members, and those that are around him. We have a great working relationship. We can listen to each other and talk about things that we want, and we have a lot of common desires when it comes to cooking and the future of our restaurant."

According to Elfret, Sewell is hands-on and ready to help with anything. Russell said that in the first two weeks of business, Sewell was in the back, helping her cook fries.

"He is full 100 percent committed in helping us, and if we ever need anything, he is here. He doesn't mind picking up trash off the floor, or wiping down a table, or washing dishes, or doing any of the dirty work," Russell said. "He is 100 percent committed. It is not one of those things where they come in once a week and check on it. He is here every day, if he is not on a business trip."

Elfret said Press Café has evolved from the original concept.

"At one time we were going to do the name Press Café, because you press coffee beans and you press grapes for wine," she said. "We were going to do a small stand-alone type thing, where there's probably not a whole lot of food, but more charcuterie type things and a little wine, but then it developed into more of this."

She said wine could be on the menu in the future.

"We eventually plan to get our beer and wine license, where in the evening, you know, someone could come by and have a glass of wine, or they could have a mimosa on a Saturday morning, and that type of thing," Elfret said.

"I had a customer come in from Midland that said, 'It's just a breath of fresh air,'" she said. "I just think (Press Café) offers something new and refreshing to our community. It's bright and cheerful and just a fun, new place to come."

U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz speaks at a town hall event Aug. 25, at the South Forty Banquet Hall in Odessa.

For Cruz, re-election depends on turnout

By Stewart Doreen
sdoreen@hearstnp.com

COMMENTARY

Sen. Ted Cruz's kind of people packed the house the night of Aug. 25 at the Barn Door's South 40 banquet hall. There were conservatives from wall to wall, waiting patiently to hear Texas' junior senator speak the political gospel. For weeks, people in West Texas have heard about the phenomenon that is Democrat Beto O'Rourke — the man many have pegged to knock off the establishment in Texas (read Republicans here). A Democrat hasn't won a statewide race since 1994, and O'Rourke represents the best shot in decades and probably is the only realistic shot this election cycle.

No pressure, senator, although if there was pressure he's wasn't showing it last Saturday night in Odessa. While not the Republican bastion that Midland is, it's not that far away, and as Republican stalwart Rhonda Lacy of Midland told the Reporter-Telegram, people made their way from as far away as Big Spring, Lubbock and Amarillo to the center of Odessa to hear Cruz, someone who already knows what it is to knock off the establishment. Cruz defeated then-Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst to earn his ticket to Washington, so he's been there and done that.

This town hall, however, wasn't as much about O'Rourke's meteoric rise or even President Donald Trump. Cruz got back to basics, hitting on his "priorities" straight out of a West Texas conservative's handbook – tax cuts, regulation reforms, Obamacare repeals and judicial appointments. They are topics, along with life, religious freedom and the Second Amendment, that seem to have disappeared from the news cycle as of late. He pointed to the success of Republicans in Washington over the last year and a half. Cruz added that there is more work to do. Personally, he said, he'd like everyone in America to be able to do their taxes on a postcard and he'd like see the Internal Revenue Service abolished – a point that brought one of the loudest applauses of the night.

"Thank you for becoming a haven for freedom-emboldening values that make Texas extraordinary," Cruz said.

He did his best to convince the audience that Texas hadn't turned a shade of purple but was still "bright red." He said with about 75 days left before the general election, the far left has its poster boy and is willing to spend millions of dollars to create a record turnout for O'Rourke – the most liberal of all Senate candidates.

The senator didn't speak too long; he spent most of the time answering questions related to education (it's better left at the state and local levels, he said), the Veterans Administration (veterans should be allowed to see any doctor they want, even those down the street) and immigration (families shouldn't be split up; catch and release is not good policy; the wall should be built; sanctuary cities are unAmerican; and his father is an example legal immigration works).

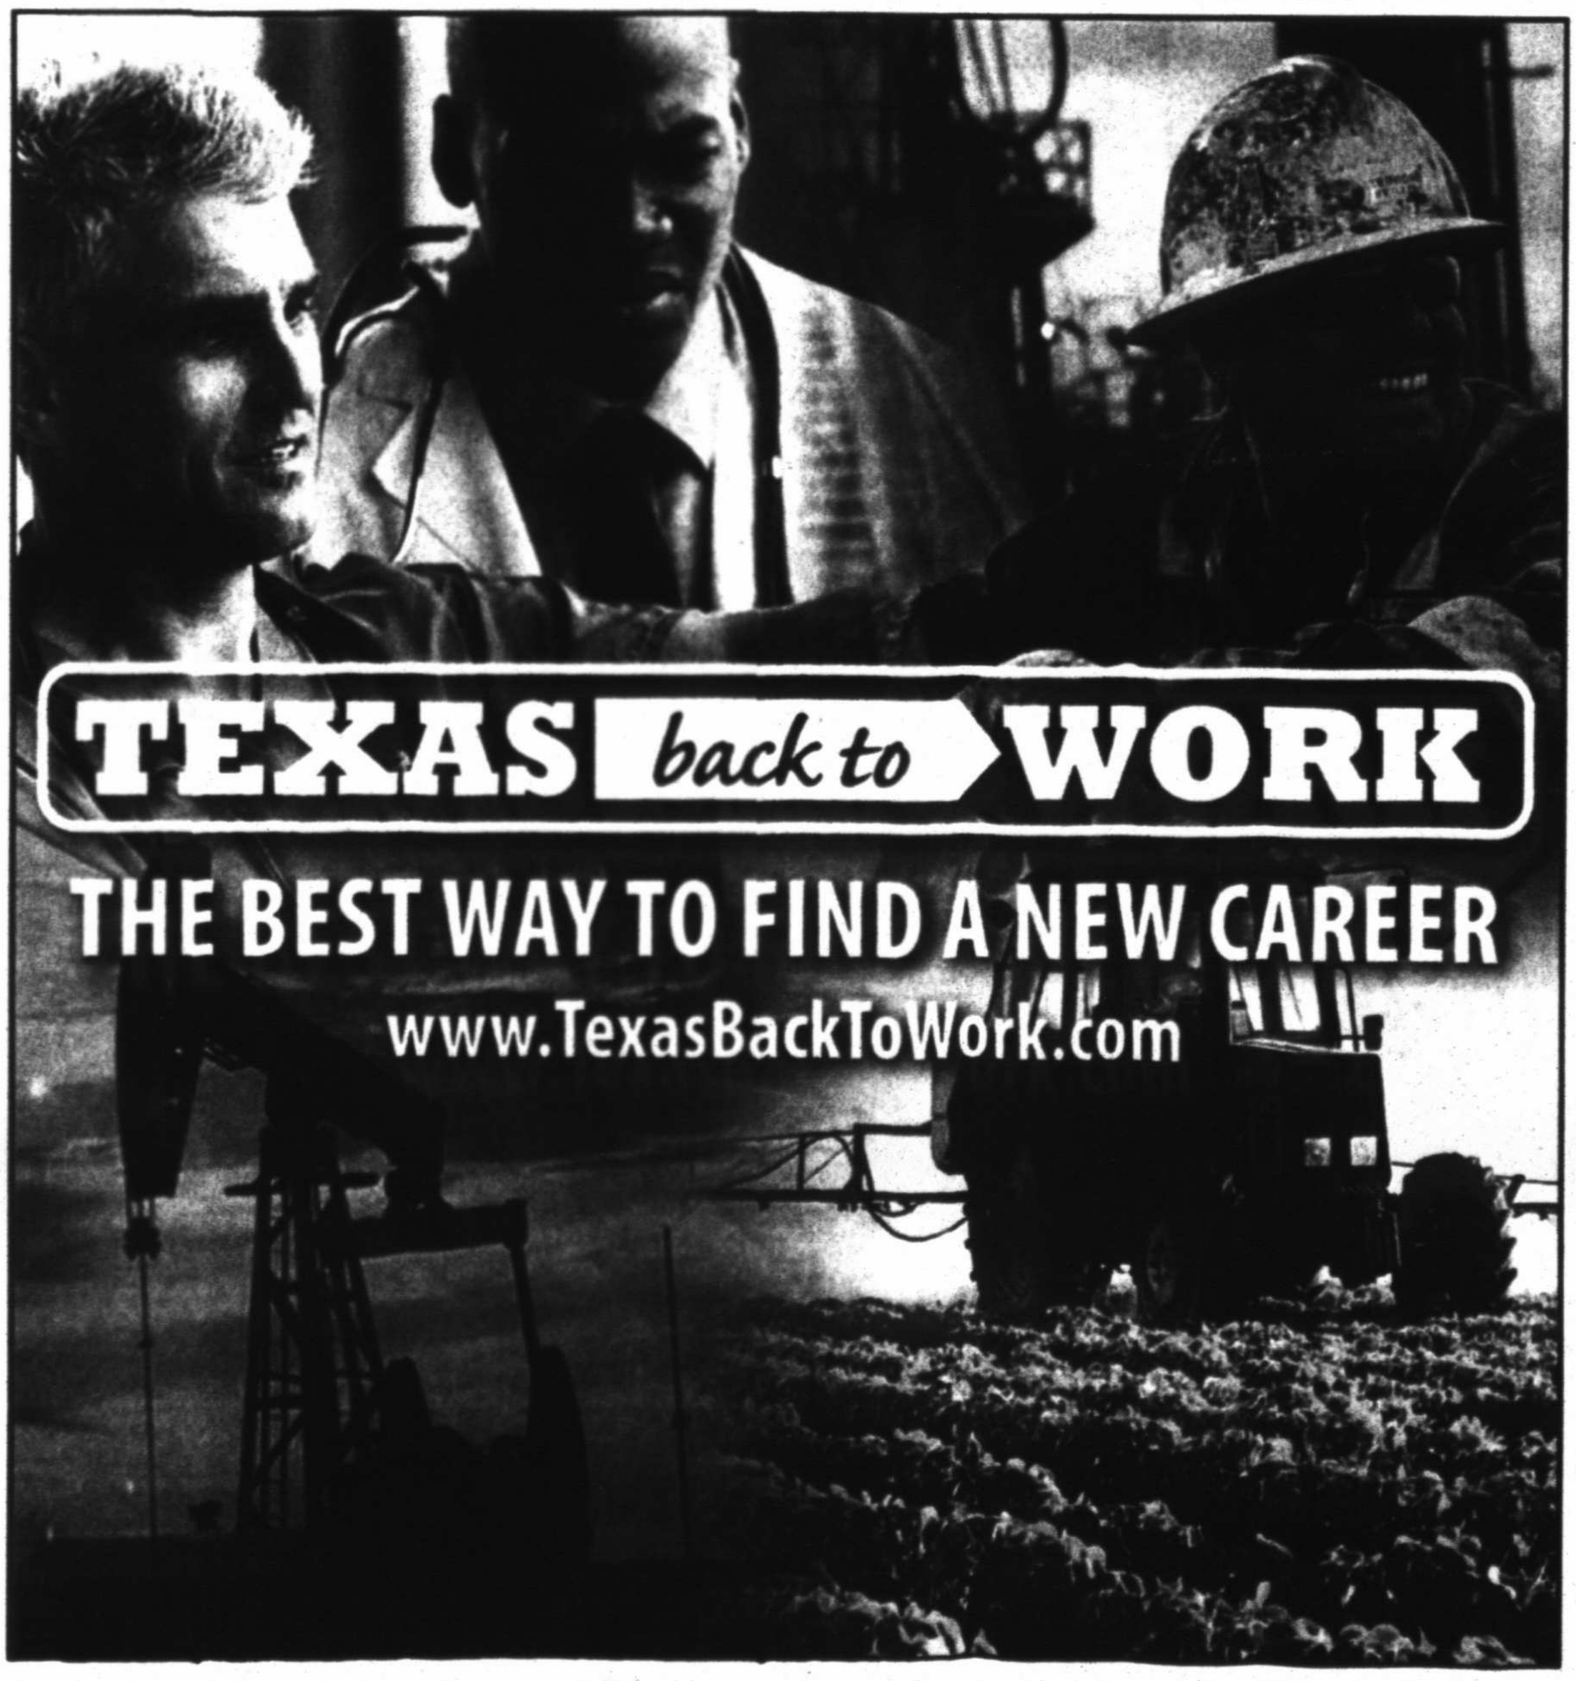

There really weren't many mentions of the current president. The first mention came after a question was asked about his working with the president. Cruz said that he and President Trump have had "an up-and- down relationship" but that he has worked with the White House to advance priorities established not long after Trump was elected in 2016 (tax cuts, regulatory reform, repealing parts of Obamacare and judicial appointments).

"I told the president that this is a historic opportunity and we can't blow this," Cruz said. "I told him 'Mr. President, I want to lead the fight in the Senate to deliver on the promises we made to the American people.'"

When Cruz spoke of O'Rourke, there wasn't talk of a Texas Democrat wanting to appeal to moderates to win statewide. Cruz painted the El Paso congressman as "the No. 1 Democratic fundraiser in the country." He spoke of O'Rourke as a candidate who "tweeted out that he has an 'F' rating from the NRA," is the only Democratic Senate candidate for impeaching Trump today and is so "anti-Israel" that his views are more extreme than Nancy Pelosi's. Cruz said the contrast between him and his Democratic opponent is greatest on immigration, where he said O'Rourke is "radical and extreme." Cruz told those in attendance that O'Rourke has said he no longer considers it a crime to cross the border illegally, he wants to abolish Immigration and Customs Enforcement and the Department of Homeland Security, and he wants some already-built walls along the border to be torn down.

And in an unusual moment, Cruz made some frank comments that almost made the senator come across as the underdog. He said that while he raised $4.6 million the last quarter, O'Rourke raised more than $10 million, and while he was busy doing the people's business in the Senate in August, O'Rourke was busy barnstorming around Texas because the House was in recess. Cruz was attempting to tap into that grassroots appeal that helped him rise from a candidate attracting 1 and 2 percent support in the primary to the man who took Dewhurst in a GOP runoff in 2012.

"Here is the good news," Cruz said. "This is Texas, and there are a lot more conservatives in Texas than liberals. Our job is simple. This election comes down to turnout."

Big plays lift DeSoto over Permian

Eagles offense total more than 500 yards

By Stewart Doreen
sdoreen@hearstnp.com

The head coaching debut for Permian coach Jeff Ellison didn't turn out like he would have liked, just like the season debut for the Permian football team left something to be desired — a victory.

DeSoto made the big plays and survived a game Permian team that really wasn't clicking on all cylinders Friday night at Ratliff Stadium. The score read 38-28 at the end, but the game was close all night long, and Ellison's team showed the sparks that have many optimistic about this 2018 campaign.

Ellison said afterward the DeSoto team was a talented bunch, and the Eagles showed it striking early and often with three scoring plays of 48 yards or more, four total plays of 48 or longer. In each case a quick strike through the air or on the ground resulted or set up a DeSoto touchdown. Quarterback Shun'Darion Ward averaged more than 20 yards a completion, totaled 357 yards through the air and tossed three touchdowns.

Ward threw for 283 yards in the first half alone, connecting on pass plays of 50, 93 and 65 yards on DeSoto's three scoring plays, including a pair of quick strike touchdowns (93 yards to Kenneth Salter and 65 yards to Lawrence Arnold Jr.).

Permian ran, ran and ran the ball, being physical with an athletic DeSoto squad. Sometimes that worked to the Panthers' advantage. In the first half, a 67-yard Permian scoring drive featured runs of 10 yards or more by four different players (Peyton Powell, Justin Hammond, Kaden Horrell and Ed Williams, who capped the drive with a 20-yard scamper through the left side of the line).

In the second half, a more well-rounded attack helped Permian move the ball 75 yards to make the score 21-20. That's when DeSoto put together its best drive of the night — a 13-play drive with two third-down conversations. The drive ended with Ward hitting Vontae Shenault for 8 yards. The drive put pressure on Permian, and the Panthers responded with a pair of second-half turnovers.

The first was a fumble by Powell with Permian driving in DeSoto territory. The second — an interception — also took away any momentum for the Panthers. DeSoto kicked a field goal on its ensuing possession to stretch the lead 31-20.

Permian showed resiliency as Justin Hammond provided a spark with a 47-yard kick return. Later in the drive, Powell connected with Hammond for 22 yards on fourth down to extend the drive. Powell connected with Mason Sellers for 10 yards and a score. The ensuing 2-point conversation made the score 31-28.

DeSoto put the game away on its next possession. Ward and Shenault connected on a critical third-down play with just more than 2 minutes to play. Then, Terrance Shaw rumbled 42 yards for the final score of the contest.

Permian can take a lot of positives from this, including that Panthers went toe to toe with one of the best in the Metroplex even as they didn't play their best game.

First, two turnovers shut down scoring opportunities. Second, penalties did the same, especially in the first half when Permian couldn't find that consistency Ellison was hoping for. Third, Permian went 0-for-13 on third down. To be fair, Ellison team converted on fourth down four times.

The Panthers also rushed for nearly 293 yards, led by Ed Williams' 117 yards and a score. Hammond added another 78 yards — a total that easily could have been more as he had more than 50 yards in runs called back due to penalties.

"We cannot make mistakes," Ellison said. "Unfortunately, we did that tonight."

DeSoto was a good football team Friday and had 506 total yards to show for its efforts. But Permian has its opportunities to make a pair of debuts that much better.

Golfers raise money for Harmony Home

By Jacy Lewis
jacy.lewis@hearstnp.com

Harmony Home hosted its 13th annual Tee Up Fore Kids on Thursday at Ratliff Ranch Golf Links. The golf tournament reached capacity five days before teeing off with 128 players on 32 teams.

Harmony Home is a children's advocacy center based in Odessa.

"We do forensic interviewing, therapy and family advocacy for children who have been physically or sexually abused," said Carrie Bronaugh, executive director.

Harmony Home serves Ector and Ward counties and will be in Reeves County later this month, she said.

Harmony Home tries to make the tournament fun for everyone with novelty holes and prizes, said Johnny Guerrero, a member of the nonprofit's board of directors.

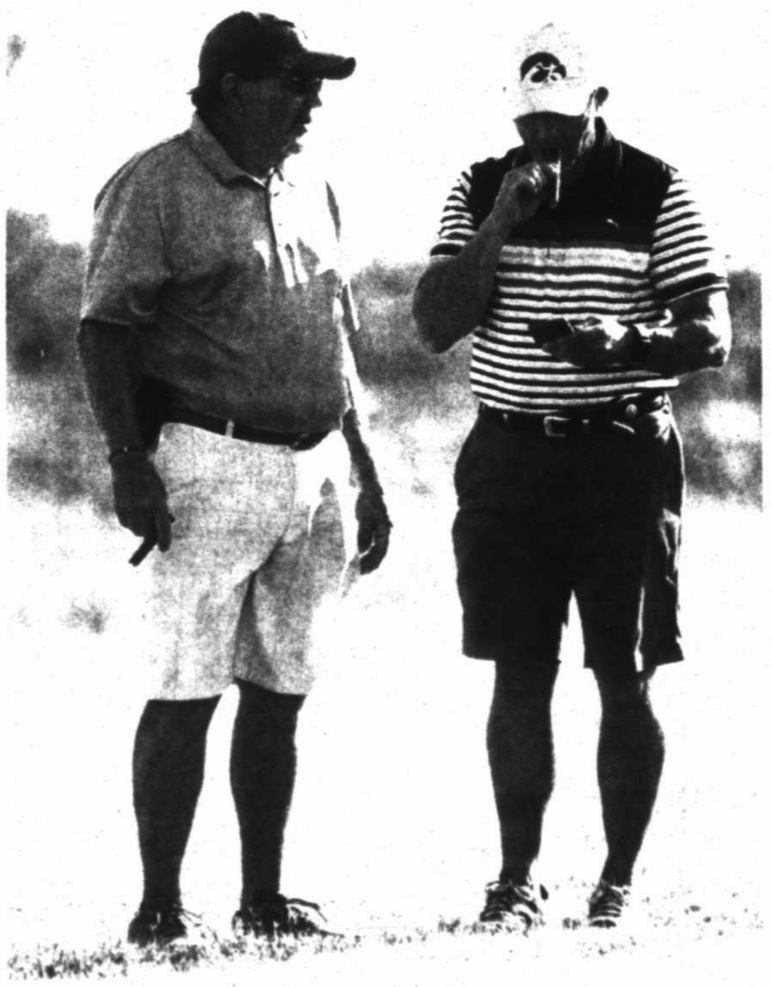

The tournament raised about $35,000, he said via email. He hopes next year there will be more teams and that Harmony Home can host morning and afternoon flights instead of only a morning flight.

The nonprofit hosted its inaugural Bingo and Bubbly in April, which is National Child Abuse Prevention month.

There are a lot of opportunities for volunteering, Bronaugh said. Harmony Home needs support on the board and there is also an internship available for therapists who want to focus on child trauma.

"We are not able to do what we do as a children's advocacy center without our community," Bronaugh said. "We are very thankful for everyone who not only supports Harmony Home but also know about us and talks about us. We have been able to be a children's advocacy center since 1993 and we've been able to help 12,000 kids."

ARTS

ARTPOCALYPSE BEGINS

Jacy Lewis/191 News

The woodlblock print show will start Sept. 6 at Nancy Fyfe Cardozier Gallery at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Artists who will be featured include: Daiken Asakawa, Danielle Collins, Justine Delatour, Christopher Golden, College High School, Elliot Lunson, Mario Kiran and Sandra Vega.

Odessa Arts starts events

From staff reports

A series of arts events will work to engage West Texans with local arts through museums, music and a book club.

The ArtPocalypse is an arts collaborative spearheaded by Odessa Arts that's centered on the novel "Station Eleven," by Emily St. John Mandel. The program is designed to encourage reading in the community, invite conversation about the role of the arts in a community and showcase the Permian Basin's cultural offerings.

Five-hundred copies of "Station Eleven" and the juvenile companion "The Giver" will be distributed for free to the community.

The program will kick off with a concert by Midland Odessa Symphony and Chorale's principal cellist Amy Huzjak at the historic Rose Building at noon on Sept. 11 as part of the Second Tuesday Salon series.

Participants will be given a Cultural Passport that will include a schedule of events, a reader's guide and information about the program. Passports will be stamped by each entity as people attend events. Passports can then be redeemed for items such as posters and T-shirts.

Participants who attend every event can redeem their passport to be entered in a drawing for a trip for two to New York City.

SCHEDULE OF EVENTS

5 p.m.T Sept. 6 | ArtPoclaypse woodblock print show at Nancy Fyfe Cardozier Gallery

Noon Sept. 11 | Kickoff event in The Rose Building with the city proclamation, a performance by Huzjak, the book selection announcement with distribution of the title and the Cultural Passport. Copies of the book, cultural passport, city proclamation.

Blocking Standards" was unanimously approved.

■ public hearing to consider approval of the request of the city of Odessa to rezone from General Residential and Mobile Home to Single Family-Three. The stated purpose was to provide for single family-three dwellings, preserve neighborhood integrity, promote residential homes, and revitalize the neighborhoods. No one came forward and the public hearing was closed. The ordinance was approved by unanimous on second and final approval.

■ first public hearing on the proposed tax rate and to consider levying the tax for the 2018 annual budget was held. Muncy stated that the proposed tax rate of 47.6601 cents would increase total property tax revenues by 9.62 percent over the preceding year. The second public hearing will be at the Sept. 11 council meeting. No one came forward to speak.

■ public hearing for fiscal Year 2018-19 annual budget was held. Muncy proposed the budget with $223 million in revenues and $216 million in expenditures. The budget included a 3 percent salary increase and funds for a salary survey and compensation. There was an increase in revenues with sales tax and property tax. The expenditures were greater than last year. No one came forward to speak.

resource?' and everybody that I did speak to said, 'yes,'" Weinberg said.

She said women in the community were going to interviews underdressed and Weinberg wanted to provide either the necessary clothes or teach them how to dress for an interview.

Dress for Success Permian Basin has a board of five directors from Midland and Odessa. While Weinberg said there are a few volunteers, she would like to expand the volunteer base. People are needed to help sort clothing and consult with clients to find the right look for them.

Those interested in volunteering may email permianbasin@dressforsuccess.org or call or text 432-770-8907.

Dress for Success Permian Basin is located at 505 E. University Blvd. Ste. 7 and the office phone number is 432-614-4073.
