PHS band director has members enthused by changes in program

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

The new director of the Pampa High School, Bruce Collins, has presided over PHS band practices for only a few days, but the youthful and smiling educator is already drawing rave reviews.

"He's the best thing that ever happened to the (PHS) band program," gushed sophomore Kim McDonald, 15, who practiced the marimba in the band hall on Tuesday.

McDonald said she had not registered for the band program at PHS after her freshman year because of dissatisfaction with the band program, but changed her mind this summer after learning that Collins would be the band director for the 1993-94 school year.

As with approximately 95 percent of the students expected to participate in the PHS band program during the 1993-94 school year, McDonald previously studied under Collins at Pampa Middle School.

About 110 students in grades 9 through 12 will be participating in the band program at PHS this school year, Collins said.

Collins, 37, who served most recently as director of the Pampa Middle School band for seven years, was appointed last month by the Pampa school board to serve as band director at PHS for the 1993-94 school year. Collins is replacing Charles Johnson, who served as PHS band director from the fall of 1982 until his resignation this summer.

Jim Juengerman, assistant director of both the PHS and PMS bands, noted that Collins "is a very, very positive influence on every aspect of this program. He generates a lot of enthusiasm in our students and he's open to opinions. He's very creative. His experience almost guarantees us a really great year this year."

PHS sophomore McDonald praised Collins by saying, "Mr. Collins wants us to be great, but he wants us to have fun while we're doing it."

In an early display of his humor and wit before PHS band students, Collins on Tuesday told them that he planned to talk about the "freshmen role." The new band director added that he wasn't referring to rolling freshmen down a hill – a joke that delighted his students.

It seems clear that the harmony during band classes at PHS this school year will not just be of the musical variety. "I'm excited about it, because he's got a lot of new ideas," said senior and band historian April Gomez, who plays symbols and a clarinet. "He wants to take us in a new direction."

Sophomore PHS band member Sherie Minyard, who previously studied under Collins at PMS, also cast a vote of approval for the new band director. "Everybody knows him," said Minyard, who plays percussion instruments. "He's real serious, but he makes it fun."

Informed about the enthusiasm toward him that is already apparent among his students, Collins responded modestly. "That's nice to know ... I hope that it holds up (throughout the school year)."

Collins explained his philosophy of band education by saying, "What you want to do is to develop (in them at an early age an) absolute love for music and for practice with an ensemble like this."

Through the band program, Collins said, he wants to help PHS students become good musicians. Collins estimated that more than one-half of the PHS band students will achieve excellence with their instruments by the end of this school year.

Collins also cited the goal of helping PHS band members become good citizens. "You just cannot be in the band and not be a good citizen," he commented, noting the public visibility of the PHS band. Collins also noted that "the personal discipline to master an instrument transfers over to other areas of school and career work."

In an interview at the PHS band hall on Tuesday, Collins praised Johnson for the effectiveness of his instructional leadership. "There has never been a teacher at Pampa who cared more for students or gave more of himself to his students," Collins said.

Collins made it clear, however, that he listens to the beat of a slightly different drummer than Johnson when it comes to band leadership. Collins mentioned, for example, that he plans to require less of the after-school band practice than did Johnson during his tenure.

City to begin street seal coating project

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Once again, it's time for the city to begin its annual seal coating program and it is asking for help from the residents of Pampa.

Beginning Thursday and continuing through the next two weeks, weather permitting, a road crew will be applying asphalt and rock to the city's streets as part of the seal coating program.

To make the project go smoother, the city is asking people not to park vehicles on the street which are being coated.

"People should keep their cars off the street because that sort of puts us at a standstill because we have to try to find the owner and try to get him to move it," said Steve Lemons, an engineering technician and draftsman for the city. "If that doesn't work, the contractor has to get the car towed and that doesn't cause anything but hard feelings and we'd like to try to avoid that."

Streets scheduled to be seal coated starting Aug. 5 and continuing through Aug. 13 include:

- The area from Barnes Street west to Farley Street and from McCullough Avenue north to U.S. 60.

From Aug. 16 to Aug. 20, the following streets are also scheduled to be seal coated:

- Sumner Street from Somerville Street north to Randy Matson Avenue.
- Russell Street from Charles Street north to 23rd Avenue.
- Evergreen Street from Harvester Avenue north to 23rd Avenue.
- 18th Avenue from Hobart Street west to Davis Street.
- Randy Matson Avenue from Duncan Street west to Hobart.
- 23rd Avenue from Evergreen west to Duncan.
- Somerville from Kingsmill Avenue to Hobart.

The seal coating program the city operates is done to help maintain and prolong the use of the streets, according to Lemons. In the past, the city was divided into five areas with one area being treated each year on a rotating basis.

In the past few years, seal coating certain sections of Pampa had been delayed because of budgetary problems, according to Lemons. One of the things the city is hoping to accomplish in the next two weeks, however, is to catch up with the necessary work.

"The rotation has been off, but right now, what we are trying to do is catch up and get the areas that have been the longest without it," Lemons said.

Another aspect of the seal coating project this year is to get some of the surrounding streets ready for the construction of part of Texas 70 (Hobart) as well as other construction throughout town.

From the intersection of Texas 152 and Hobart to the intersection of 21st Avenue and Hobart, sections of the thoroughfare will be under construction for the next two years and many of the side streets, like 23rd Avenue, 18th Avenue and Randy Matson Avenue, will experience heavy traffic in the near future as the Texas Department of Transportation begins work.

G.W. James Inc. of Pampa was awarded the bid for the project from the city.

Clinton gains four votes; new concession on taxes

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Clinton picked up four House converts for his deficit reduction bill in a visit to Capitol Hill today, and administration officials disclosed a fresh concession designed to blunt the impact on high wage-earners.

Clinton maneuvered to line up support for his plan as a key swing vote in the Senate, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, said he remained undecided. Votes are scheduled for later this week on the measure, which Clinton says will trim deficits by $496 billion over five years.

"The choice is whether we do this or do nothing and flail around another 60 or 90 days," Clinton told reporters after a closed-door session with House Democrats on the morning after a televised appeal from the Oval Office.

The concession, disclosed by a senior Treasury Department official, would give high-income Americans an extra 24 months to pay a tax increase in the legislation that would be retroactive to Jan. 1. Republican critics had said that attempting to squeeze a full year's higher taxes out of less than six months' withholding would cause severe harm to small businesses and others.

Clinton paid an early morning visit to the Capitol to meet with House Democrats. He emerged with four who said they would support the measure in contrast to their opposition when it passed the House in a different form earlier in the year – Reps. Charles Wilson of Texas; Carolyn Maloney of New York; Paul McHale of Pennsylvania, and Tim Johnson of South Dakota.

Clinton administration officials and congressional leaders have said the Senate shapes up as a tougher obstacle to passage than the House, but Clinton expressed optimism.

"But I don't think the Senate will let the plan go down," Clinton said. "I don't think they would do that to the country."

The Senate approved the plan earlier in the year on a 50-49 vote, with Vice President Al Gore casting the tie-breaking vote. Since then, one of the supporters, Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., has announced his opposition, sending the White House searching for an offsetting "yes" vote.

One target of White House lobbying, DeConcini, said today he was still leaning against the package even after the president praised him during his Oval Office speech Tuesday night.

"I haven't made up my mind .... the leaning is against it because I voted against it before," Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., told CBS radio.

Clinton was scheduled to sign an exective order later in the day to require that all taxes raised by the measure flow into a deficit reduction trust fund – a step DeConcini has attempted to enact into law. The senator was invited to attend the ceremony.

Republicans are expected to vote unanimously against the plan, largely out of opposition to tax hikes. Clinton referred sarcastically to the GOP criticism, saying he felt just a little like he did in one of his very first jobs, as a filling station attendant.

"I've had to clean the dirt off the windshield so the American people could see out of that windshield again," he said.

"All the evidence is that the more facts we get out, the better we do," he said.

He called Dole's television rebuttal "a smokescreen to cover the intransigent Republican position."

In his TV address to the nation Tuesday night, Clinton spoke little of the months of deal-making and compromising that produced a bill claiming $496 billion in deficit reduction.

Instead, he told voters Congress' decision was simple: "Now there are only two choices. Our plan or no plan."

Vice President Al Gore today refused to say whether the administration had assurances of enough votes in the Senate.

"I don't know whether I'll get to cast another tie-breaking vote or not, but one way or another this plan will pass," Gore told CBS.

House Speaker Tom Foley told NBC today the measure would pass his chamber with a vote "at least what it was before." The House passed an initial version of the plan by six votes.

FBI arrests two on espionage charges

WASHINGTON (AP) – A State Department secretary is charged with delivering classified defense secrets to a West African journalist, who was accused of unlawfully keeping the material, the FBI said today.

Geneva Jones, 47, a secretary employed at the State Department's Bureau of Politico-Military Affairs since 1989, was arrested Tuesday by FBI agents, the bureau said.

Dominic Ntube was charged under the same espionage provision with receiving and keeping the national defense secrets.

A citizen of Cameroon, Ntube publishes a newsletter called The Continent and heads an organization that promotes African culture in the nation's capital.

The office where Jones worked deals with such issues as the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, the safe dismantling of nuclear weapons, nuclear testing and nuclear weapons in the former Soviet Union, said a State Department official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But the charge against Jones states that she did not have authorized access to the classified information.

Jones was arrested at 5:15 p.m. Tuesday as she left work at the State Department, Scafidi said. Ntube was arrested two hours later at his apartment in the city, the FBI said. Both spent the night in jail, Scafidi said.

Besides the newsletter that he puts out, Ntube heads The African Cultural Organization, which seeks to promote African culture and puts on an annual festival in Washington, the government official said.

Jones was charged under a provision of the espionage statute that bars the transmission of documents containing classified defense secrets by a person unauthorized to have access to the material to someone else who is "not entitled to receive it."

Ntube is also charged under the same section, accused of willfully keeping the information and failing to return it to a U.S. official.

Fiber optics line

Heath Johnmeyer, of Rolla, Mo., and co-worker Byron Robertson, of Dumas, work to install new, high-tech fiber optic cable for Dobson Cellular Systems last week. The installation began near I-40, traveled up Texas 70 and will end east of Pampa at the cable tower, according to H.E. Johnmeyer, president of Johnmeyer Construction Services. One benefit of the new cable is the increased phone traffic it can handle. The fiber optic cable being installed consists of six light fibers which takes the place of an old cable of 3,600 copper wires, according to Johnmeyer.

One injury, minor damage caused by pipeline explosion

An explosion at a gas processing plant west of Pampa was under investigation today.

An explosion and fire at the American Pipeline Company plant near Kingsmill about five miles west of Pampa shortly before 1 p.m. Tuesday injured one and caused minor damage, according to a company spokesman.

Two men performing routine maintenance at the plant Tuesday noticed a gas leak shortly before 1 p.m. from a nearby one-inch pipe, according to Pierce Norton, American Pipeline operations manager for the northern area of the Panhandle.

"They evacuated the area and activated the alarm system that begins shutting things down," he said.

The leaking gas from the cracked pipe ignited but the fire appeared to be confined to the ruptured pipeline, officials said.

One of the men suffered minor injuries to the right leg, apparently from debris thrown out by the explosion, emergency workers said. He was examined at Coronado Hospital and released.

Company officials did not release the name of the injured man. He was back at the plant by 4 p.m.

Norton reported that the plant manager had shut down additional pipelines into the facility by 2 p.m.

The plant personnel activated the emergency equipment, depressuring the plant. The first was extinguished and normal plant operations resumed by 2 p.m., with minimal business interruption, plant officials said.

Three units of the Pampa fire department answered the call while units from Gray and Hutchinson Counties stood by as a precautionary measure.

Women senators score abortion rights victory

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Senate's five Democratic women, in their biggest show of force of the year, won a narrow abortion rights victory that effectively overturns a 10-year ban on abortion coverage in federal workers' health plans if allowed to stand.

"I think you can see the Democratic women did their homework," said Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., who employed a parliamentary tactic Tuesday as the Senate voted, 51-48, to refuse to consider an amendment prohibiting abortions from being included in federal workers' health plans.

"It's pretty historic. We never used to win these," said Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif.

Abortion opponents have succeeded in attaching the ban to major pieces of legislation since 1984. But this year, Mikulski, previously the Senate's only female Democrat, was bolstered by the addition of four women who gained seats in the 1992 elections: Boxer, Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, Sen. Patty Murray of Washington and Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun of Illinois.

The five women plotted strategy for weeks in preparation for Tuesday's showdown. And when it came time to vote, the women congregated at the front of the chamber and corralled their male colleagues as they walked onto the floor.

After House women were outmaneuvered on a Medicaid abortions vote several weeks ago, the Senate women shifted into gear.

Led by Mikulski, they got the Senate Appropriations Committee to drop a plan by Sen. Christopher Bond, D-Mo., to prohibit abortions in federal workers' health plans, except when the woman's life was at stake or in cases of rape or incest. Then the female senators were ready when Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., tried to introduce such an amendment on the floor.

The vote came on whether the amendment was "germane" to the House-passed bill at issue, a $22.3 billion spending bill to fund the Treasury Department and the Postal Service. The overall bill later passed easily.

By focusing on the parliamentary question of whether the amendment was germane, Mikulski was able to pick up the votes of some senators who are sticklers about Senate rules, but aren't necessarily rock-solid on abortion rights issues, such as Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.

For that reason, Mikulski declined to call it a test vote on how the Senate would vote in future abortion battles.

Boxer called it a "momentary victory" and said there was work ahead. "It's a step at a time."

Mikulski said afterwards the women "were not trying to use strong-arm tactics" with the parliamentary move. Rather, Mikulski said, she wanted to have hearings and "robust debate" on the abortion question. "There will be other opportunities" to debate the issue, she said.

Band

Collins also said he plans to drop the PHS band's longstanding policy that prohibits a student who dropped out of band from later returning to the program. The new "open-door policy," in addition to the fewer requirements on after-school band practice, is expected to help boost the number of students in the PHS band, he said.

Collins said he would like to see the PHS band program return to the peak enrollment of 160 students that it claimed during the 1970s.

Collins also said he hopes to see an increase in the number of PHS band members who qualify for all-state band. "The better our individual performers are, the better the whole band will be," Collins said. He compared the all-state band members in the PHS band, as well as the first-chair performers in his band, to the captains on a football team.

In the recent history of the Harvester Band, the band director said, there have never been more than two members of the PHS band in any given school year who were selected for the all-state band.

The PHS band for 1993-94 will include one all-state band member, senior Michael Hunt, who plays the euphonium, Collins noted. Hunt is also president of the band for the 1993-94 school year.

Collins, a native of Lubbock, has a total of 15 years of experience as a band instructor, including two years as assistant director at Robert E. Lee High School in Midland and five years as band director at Alamo Junior High in Midland. Collins was band director for grades 6 through 12 at Gruver Independent School District during the 1985-86 school year.

Collins received a master of arts in music education in 1984 from what was then known as West Texas State University in Canyon. The music educator has training to perform on brass and percussion instruments, with the clarinet being his primary instrument.

Black tar heroin drug suspect held

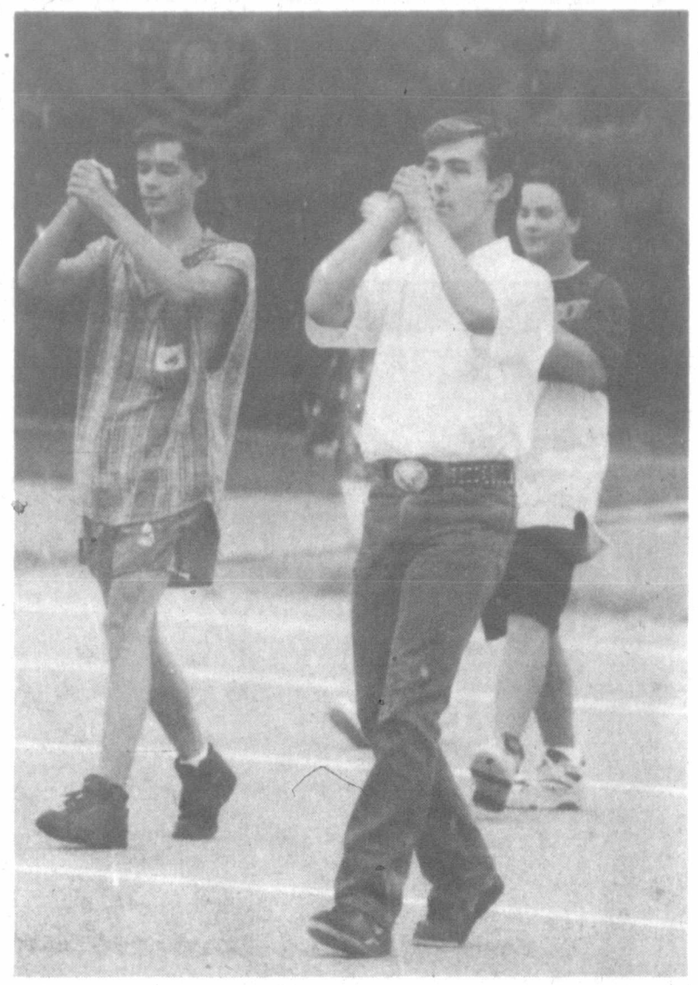

LAREDO (AP) – A suspect has been arrested following the confiscation of black tar heroin worth $1.6 million, officials said.

Jorge Antonio Meza-Ramos, 34, of Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, was held without bond in the Webb County Jail. He was charged with possession of 560 grams of heroin.

Meza-Ramos was arrested Monday in front of a convenience store as part of an undercover drug operation, officials said.

Members of the Laredo Narcotics Task Force also seized 397 grams of black tar heroin in a raid June 29 as part of another investigation.

Shonie Garland, in white shirt, practices marching techniques this morning with other Harvester Band members at Pampa High School. Garland is a sophomore. The band began practices this week under new band director Bruce Collins. As shown above, this morning the band members were developing their marching techniques without the aid of the instruments they will be carrying during regular practices and performances, but they were miming the expected hand positions they will be using.

Police on alert in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) – All available police officers were pressed into service for the sentencing today of the two policemen convicted in the Rodney King beating.

Sgt. Stacey Koon and Officer Lawrence Powell faced a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison for violating King's civil rights during the beating, seared into the national consciousness by a videotape shot by an amateur photographer.

King hadn't decided as of Tuesday night whether to appear at the sentencing in federal court, said his attorney, Milton Grimes. Grimes said that King has been the target death threats and that there were concerns about his safety.

"It's going to be a maximum deployment day," said Officer Don Cox, a department spokesman. "It means that every available person that can be working is going to be working – period."

King was chased for speeding on March 3, 1991. When the cars stopped, police let loose a fusillade of baton blows that left King broken and bloody.

Powell's attorney, Michael Stone, was asking for no more than 10 to 18 months. He described Powell as "scared out of his pants." Defense attorney Ira Salzman was asking for probation for Koon. Prosecutors sought seven to nine years for Powell and nine to 10 years for Koon.

Another racially volatile trial that has become the symbolic counterpoint to the King case heightened the tension.

Jury selection is under way in the attempted-murder trial of two black men accused of beating white truck driver Reginald Denny on live television during the opening moments of the riots that broke out in 1992 after Koon, Powell and two other officers were acquitted on state charges in the King beating.

After the smoke cleared, the four white officers were indicted on the federal charges. In April, a jury convicted Koon and Powell and acquitted Theodore Briseno and Timothy Wind. The city remained peaceful.

"Everybody wants to separate the King case and the Denny case," said Chilton Alphonse, head of an anti-gang program in South Central Los Angeles.

Former overseas 'brats' to descend on Grapevine

By TERRI LANGFORD
Associated Press Writer

GRAPEVINE (AP) – It's hard to imagine retired Army Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, U.S. Rep. Newt Gingrich, The Doors' Jim Morrison and actress Priscilla Presley have anything in common.

But the four are products of overseas schooling, an experience shared by millions of Americans whose military parents were stationed abroad over the past 40-some years.

This weekend at a Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport hotel, more than 1,100 overseas brats – former children of both military and diplomatic families – will attend Grand Reunion '93, the largest reunion ever for all classes and schools in 120 countries.

"What's different for us is that one-third to one-half of those (stateside) live in a 50-mile radius of where they went to school," said Joe Condrill, member of Tehran American School, class of 1973, and founder of Overseas Brats Inc., a San Antonio-based network for former military and diplomatic dependents. "Someone in our situation, that doesn't apply."

The United States – through its state and defense agencies – have operated high schools from Athens to Paris to Zweibruecken, complete with football teams, cheerleaders and letter jackets.

"It's like finding your life that you lost," explained Sunny Taylor Schwentner, a member of Kubasaki High's class of 1962. "When you said goodbye to all those friends, it was like it was a death, because you knew deep in your heart of hearts you wouldn't see them again."

This weekend's event evolved out of smaller reunions organized recently by an almost underground group of overseas school alumni, like Mrs. Schwentner of Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Schwentner, 48, formed the Kubasaki High School students' association in the late 1980s to locate fellow alumni from the Okinawa school.

"We have to rely on ourselves, because we don't have a hometown or a school to walk by and say that's where we went to school," said Wendy Bailey, 35, of Williamsburg, Va., and a member of the eastern England's Lakenheath American High School class of 1975.

In 1988, she had five addresses of former classmates. Through word of mouth and advertisements in military publications, Bailey now has more than 1,000 addresses of former Lakenheath students.

"I did it probably because of my need to reconnect with the people I grew up with and had the same background I had," said Bailey, who also lived in France and Germany with her family . "When we see one another again it's like being reunited with family members, even better than seeing family."

High schools overseas have an American public school curriculum with a few adjustments.

For instance, with only one high school for three bases on Okinawa, Kubasaki's student body was divided in three athletic divisions so the school could have rival teams.

And in overseas schools, foreign languages are not an elective, but a graduation requirement and survival tool. As stateside students studied foreign cultures from textbooks, their counterparts overseas lived it.

"I think that it really opened up my eyes to what it was like to be a minority," said Glenn Greenwood, 38, of Austin and a member of Ramey High School class of 1973, in Puerto Rico. "It's something I've never forgotten, what it's like on the other side of the stick."

The military fell into the education business slowly after World War I, operating a few independent base schools for children of military dependents at installations.

After World War II, the number of schools exploded as the Cold War began and the size of the American military overseas increased. A united school system was put into place in the mid-1950s and the Defense Department was appointed school superintendent.

During the 1992-93 academic year, 108,618 military dependents were enrolled in 224 schools around the globe, according to the Pengaton. Another 5,637 children of diplomatic parents were enrolled in more than 100 countries during the same year.

Among those getting invitations to this weekend's reunion was Schwarzkopf, who went to Frankfurt American High School; Ms. Presley, who attended H.H. Arnold High School in Wiesbaden, Germany, and Star Wars actor Mark Hamill, who was a student at Kinnick High School in Japan, said Bill Gunkel of Reunions Unlimited, the Englewood, Colo. company in charge of Grand Reunion '93.

The schools, like the ever-adaptive military dependent, also have undergone changes as the world emerged from the Cold War.

The Ramey High School Bombers of Puerto Rico mascot in 1973 featured an eagle dropping bombs, Greenwood recalls. Now the mascot for the school – which now houses grades kindergarten through high school – is an eagle wearing a surfer tank top.

For brats, high school was one long lesson in diplomacy, assimilation and foreign affairs. And returning stateside for many was like arriving on another planet.

As Greenwood explains, news about the United States from an American military and foreign country's perspective often left brats ill-prepared upon their return.

"During Vietnam a lot of bad news about Vietnam was not allowed to get to us," Greenwood said.

Bailey remembers the lack of safety once stateside.

"It's a very sheltered environment and coming back into the United States I experienced a total loss of that security," she said.

But Mrs. Schwentner and others like her insist they wouldn't trade the experience.

"I was glad I was a brat." she says.

Nixon trying again to stop tapes release

WASHINGTON (AP) – Former President Nixon has gone to court to stop the National Archives from making the first public release of four hours of White House conversations taped during the summer after the Watergate break-in.

Nixon's lawyers have sought a preliminary injunction to bar the planned release this month of tapes containing segments of 39 conversations recorded in the Nixon White House in July and August of 1972.

Nixon wants to delay their release until the Archives transcribes 4,000 hours of White House tapes and returns personal and private material – a process the government says could take years.

The legal move is the latest in a series of challenges that Nixon's lawyers have mounted against the release of various portions of the former president's papers, tapes and other materials since he left office in 1974.

Nixon has succeeded in preventing the release of much material. Only 63 hours of the 4,000 hours of tape recorded conversations have been released so far by the Archives. The conversations between Nixon and his aides were recorded by a secret system that taped discussions in the Oval Office and elsewhere.

Nixon's attorneys argue that the Archives is violating the terms of its 1979 agreement with the former president to release whole segments of conversations rather than snippets of discussions.

As evidence, Nixon attorneys included an apparently leaked copy of an internal memo in which the acting archivist expressed concern over the May 17 release of three hours of Watergate conversations from May and June of 1972.

"We appear to be unilaterally abrogating the agreement" with Nixon, Acting Archivist Trudy Huskamp Peterson wrote in the May 18 memo. A Nixon lawyer, R. Stan Mortenson, said he received an unsolicited copy of the memo in the mail.

U.S. District Judge Royce C. Lamberth has scheduled an emergency hearing on Aug. 9 to consider Nixon's request to stop the releases, scheduled to take place Aug. 13 and Aug. 26.

The tapes released in May included conversations that Nixon had with aides just before and after the June 17, 1972 break-in at the Democratic National Committee headquarters.

Five burglars wearing surgical gloves were caught red-handed and eventually traced to Nixon's re-election campaign and the White House. Nixon resigned two years later as the House was preparing to vote to impeach him for trying to cover up the scandal.

Nixon's lawyers argued that the continued piecemeal release of conversations will strip them of context so that "the listener could misinterpret the very point of the conversation."

An injunction "will assure the American people complete review of the Watergate-related materials, rather than piecemeal glimpses," Nixon's lawyers said in papers filed last month.

In reply, the Justice Department said "the natural result of an injunction in Mr. Nixon's favor would be a further delay in the release of any Nixon-era White House tapes until many more years have passed."

Peterson's internal memo also voiced the concerns raised by Nixon, saying the release of edited segments "takes the conversations out of the context of the rest of the activities going on at the time period."

"This is not fair to the researcher, who is left to puzzle out what else may have gone on in related conversations that month," she wrote.

Newly-promoted Texas Rangers Cheryl Campbell Steadman, left, and Marrie Reynolds Garcia wait to receive their commissions at a Tuesday ceremony.

Two females join ranks of elite Texas Rangers

AUSTIN (AP) – One of the oldest retired Texas Rangers wished the first two women promoted to the elite law enforcement group luck as they started their new assignments.

Marrie Reynolds Garcia, 39, of San Antonio, and Cheryl Campbell Steadman, 32, of Houston were among nine Texas Department of Public Safety officers promoted Tuesday to Texas Rangers sergeants.

"I wish them luck," said 82-year-old Dudley White of Austin who retired from the Rangers in 1971. "It's not a little child's game. You have to have the lord with you if you're going to make it."

Both women said they worked hard to join the Rangers and didn't want to receive extra draw attention because they are women.

"I'm overwhelmed. It's exciting. The job starts now," said Mrs. Steadman as she held one of her two children following a brief induction ceremony.

Mrs. Garcia said, "I'm very proud. This is something that I've been working on for some time."

The Rangers are an elite state force now numbering 105 that investigates major crimes and tracks fugitives.

Both women on Tuesday were surrounded by proud family and friends.

Mrs. Steadman's husband Steve, a DPS patrolman, said "When you are children playing cops and robbers, you always wanted to be a Texas Ranger. Now my wife is one."

Bob Reynolds, Mrs. Garcia's father, said, "She worked hard for this. She always wanted to be the first woman."

To critics of allowing women in the Rangers, he said, "Watch her shoot. She's tough, she goes by the book."

Also promoted was the first Asian-American to the Rangers, Richard Lindsley Shing of Corsicana.

More than 200 DPS officers competed for the nine Ranger openings. Those who were selected scored the highest on their examinations and then were picked in an interview process.

Col. James Wilson, head of the DPS, said the promotions show the agency was opening up opportunities to women and minorities.

"The more talent we can get, the better the agency will be in the long term," he said. "We like to think of this as business as usual."

The DPS in the past has been accused of discriminating against blacks, Hispanics and women in promotions. The first black lawman to become a Ranger was promoted in 1988.

Started in 1823 by Stephen F. Austin as a mounted militia, the Rangers often have been depicted as a symbol of law and order of the Old West despite occasional criticism for dispensing gun-barrel justice. During the 1800s, they defended the frontier and protected settlers.

Released killer now in Uvalde

AUSTIN (AP) – Convicted child-rapist and killer Raul Meza has been moved to Uvalde, officials say.

Meza, who has been driven out of several cities because of public outcry, will be staying at a relative's rural residence 14 miles outside of Uvalde on State Highway 55, officials said Tuesday.

The Pardons and Paroles Division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice said Meza will be required to attend counseling and may have to wear an electronic monitoring device on his ankle.

Meza was released from prison June 21 after serving 11 years of a 34-year sentence.

He pleaded guilty in 1982 to the rape and murder of an 8-year-old Austin girl. The killing occurred while Meza was on parole from an aggravated robbery in which a convenience store clerk was shot.

He was denied parole seven times, beginning in 1985. But by June, he accumulated enough "good time" in prison to be released. He is to remain under mandatory supervision until 2016.

On Tuesday, he was transferred from a pre-parole facility, Concepts Inc., in Sweetwater to Uvalde. This is the second time he has tried to stay near Uvalde.

"I'm really disappointed they placed him here, and we registered our protests with them and they agreed to move him, and then they slip him back here," said Uvalde Police Chief Bill Dean.

"I really don't understand why they don't send him back to Austin. That's where he committed the crime, where he was incarcerated and tried and all. Why give us Austin's problems?"

The Pardons and Paroles Division said efforts will continue to place Meza in a halfway house out of state. He is being supervised through a district parole office in Del Rio, the division said.

After Meza's presence sparked protests in Uvalde, El Paso, San Antonio, Wichita Falls, Mineral Wells and Sweetwater, the parole agency two weeks ago refused to divulge his location.

Crews dynamite levee in desperate bid

PRAIRIE DU ROCHER, Ill. (AP) – Work crews dynamited one levee and furiously shored up another today in a desperate bid to save this historic town by fighting water with water.

Scores of volunteers formed a human chain to heap sandbags on the levee closest to Prairie du Rocher. Among those answering an urgent plea for help were a half-dozen striking coal miners who came straight from the picket line.

"If we had something like this happen to us, I'd hope somebody would help me. It just seemed like the right thing to do," said Brent Pien, a Marine from nearby Redbud. He was home on emergency leave from Parris Island, S.C., for the funeral of his grandfather and stayed on to join the sandbaggers.

With the town in the path of billions of gallons of muddy Mississippi floodwaters flowing south, the Army Corps of Engineers decided earlier this week to try something it had never been done before: It intentionally broke a levee farther from town and flooded tens of thousands of acres of prime farmland, a dozen or more houses and a restored French fort on Tuesday.

The idea was to create a wall of water that would crash into the encroaching floodwaters and reduce the strain on the levee closest to town.

Early today, National Guardsmen and volunteers tore away more of the outer levee. An explosion echoed through the night as work crews used dynamite to widen the breach.

"They felt that previous measures weren't working, so they decided to knock another hole in the levee," said Corps spokeswoman spokeswoman Sue Janota-Summers in St. Louis. "They used dynamite because they didn't feel they had time to dredge. They felt they needed to take more drastic measures."

The last 25 residents of the town of 600 fled to higher ground late Tuesday when the floodwaters pressing against Prairie du Rocher's last line of defense rose faster than expected.

But National Guardsmen and volunteers worked into the night in on-and-off rain to save this 18th century village, waging what may be one of the last battles of the great Midwestern flood.

"This is our last hope. If it doesn't work, we're going to lose our town," said Ron Ingles, an auxiliary police officer.

Most of the farmers whose land was submerged when the outer levee was reached agreed with the Corps that the area would have been flooded one way or another.

"I don't like it, but what are you going to do?" said Melvin Schicker, whose 100-acre farm was flooded. "You can't whip Mother Nature. We tried it."

But Schicker's own sister, Carol Dufrenne, yelled at authorities at a checkpoint because nobody consulted her before flooding her 120-acre farm.

"We were the sacrificial lambs!" she cried.

The plan appeared at first to be working. The town's levee held and the waters started flowing back into the Mississippi. But by nightfall, the waters were rising faster than was considered safe. With water within inches of the top of the levee, the evacuation siren was sounded.

Even the most stubborn holdouts had to concede to the river. Lisa Durbin, owner of Lisa's Bar and Restaurant, the last business to stay open in the town, closed up shop when she heard the siren. Cases of beer were loaded onto trucks and taken out of town.

Elsewhere, the atmosphere was much calmer.

Rivers in most other areas were dropping and people were assessing the damage from the flood of '93, which contributed to 47 deaths and at least $10 billion in damage in nine Midwestern states.

In St. Louis, which suffered vast damage to its suburbs this weekend, the Mississippi dropped about a foot and then held steady. Nearly all the 30,000-gallon tanks of propane that had been bobbing dangerously in the floodwaters had settled back into their cradles.

Hutchison spends $6.6 million on campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) – Kay Bailey Hutchison's campaign committee spent almost twice as much money as her opponent in last June's U.S. Senate race, according to the latest campaign finance records.

Mrs. Hutchison outraised and outspent rival Bob Krueger, the Democrat she pounded in the June 5 special election, by a ratio of $1 to 54 cents, the report shows.

In all, Hutchison spent about $6.6 million to make her the first Texas woman senator, according to the records made public Tuesday by the Secretary of the Senate.

Since the start of the year, the Texas Republican has raised $7,238,478 and spent $6,519,349.

Hutchison, who faces re-election next year, had $865,814 in cash on hand as of June 30 and $141,215 in debts and obligations.

Krueger's latest campaign finance report shows that since the start of the year, he raised $3,939,098 and spent $4,220,748. His committee reported debts and obligations of $113,110 for the period ending June 30.

The reports don't reflect the $1.4 million that the Democratic and Republican parties each spent on behalf of Krueger and Hutchison. The party money, called coordinated campaign expenditures, can't be funneled directly to the candidates but is spent on their behalf.

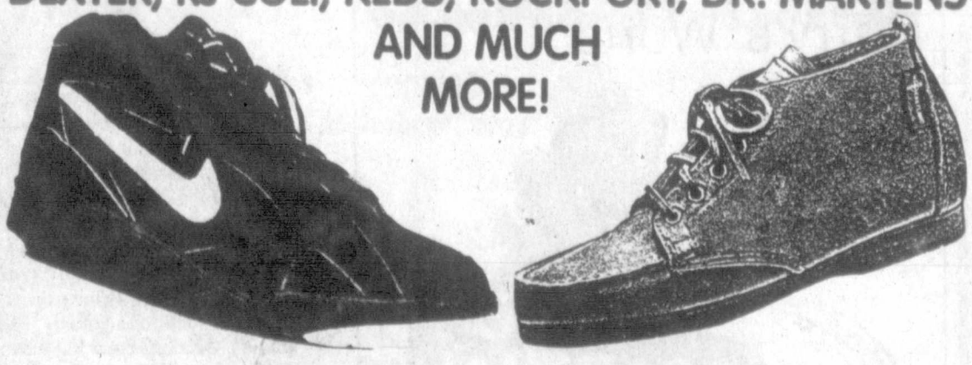

For the most recent filing period, which reflects the period from May 17 to June 30, Hutchison raised $3,184,620 to Krueger's $515,537. She spent $2,849,642 in that period to his $1,178,655.

Of Hutchison's $7.2 million in total contributions since the beginning of the year, $1,114,611 – or 15.3 percent – came from political action committees. Krueger reported 22 percent of his $3,939,098 in contributions, or $882,774, came from PACs.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Higher tax rates' end result is less

No need to worry about higher taxes, the Clinton administration assures us, because "the rich" will be paying most of the tab. On paper, anyway.

But in the real world, the higher rates on rich Americans contained in the Clinton budget plan will mean the rich will in all likelihood pay less to Uncle Sam, ..ot more.

Nearly three years ago, President Bush and the Democratic Congress attempted the same task – to shrink the deficit by raising rates on upper-income Americans – with their famous "budget deal." The early returns on that policy are in, and they don't speak well of the Clinton budget.

Like the Clinton plan today, the budget deal of 1990 raised rates on upper-income Americans. These higher, more "progressive" rates would supposedly bring in billions to the federal treasury, thus lowering the deficit. But, according to preliminary data from the IRS, the higher rates brought in less money, not more.

In 1991, the first full year of the higher rates, the top 850,000 earners in America paid $99.6 billion in federal income taxes. The year before, when its top rate was actually lower, this same income group paid a total of $106.1 billion to the IRS. In other words, even though the rates went up in 1991, it was collecting about 1 percent more from all other taxpayers – $348.6 billion in 1991, compared to $345.3 billion in 1990.

The cause of this phenomenon – rates up, revenues down – is no mystery. When wealthy taxpayers face higher income-tax rates, they often change their behavior to minimize their tax liability. They do this by shifting income to the year before the rates to up, by finding tax shelters or by simply working less.

There's no reason to believe that wealthy Americans will react any differently to the higher rates contained in the Clinton economic package. The end result will be far less revenue for the government than the Clinton administration predicts, possibly even less revenue than would have been collected under the current, lower rates.

(Perhaps knowing that will result is one reason why Clinton has been pushing for energy-use and gasoline taxes, where he could soak more government revenue from nearly everyone, poor, rich, and the ever-large middle class.)

This established failure of higher tax rates to yield more revenue appears to be lost on the ruling Democrats in Washington. But then again, perhaps higher revenue is not their ultimate aim. Maybe their real aim is to punish economic success.

"Get away from me, boy — ya bother me!"

On the docudrama of Teddy

William F. Buckley Jr.

The fusillade aimed at author Joe McGinniss raises interesting points, and proceeds with scant acknowledgment of his unusual literary powers.

It makes sense, before concluding that McGinniss is a dull and lazy mountebank, to remember that he is the author of The Selling of the President and Fatal Vision. If these were the works of a dull-witted writer, then he must have used a ghost.

Some of the criticism bares the motives of the critic. Priscilla Painton of Time Magazine deals with McGinniss as a serial killer and concludes her review: "The book seems obsessed with debunking the Kennedy myth, as if it needed debunking. And nowhere does it explain Ted's fundamental paradox: that a man so self-destructive stuck so willingly to the daily tilling of the legislative field and left such a profound mark on his country."

It is hard to know why the two qualities have difficulty going hand in hand: Richard Nixon was certainly self-destructive, and yet he left a profound mark on his country and indeed the world. The fingerprint of Ted Kennedy on the national scene is uncomplicated: a dogged desire to approve any legislation that increases the public sector and decreases the private sector; and, at a low ideological level, his willingness to slander scholarly dissidents from his world view.

If Joe McGinniss had written a book three times as long, he could not have packed into it more spiteful hyperbole than Kennedy managed against nominee Robert Bork in a single paragraph back in 1987. What it boils down to is that there are people out there who like Kennedy because he is a lefty, and they don't like what McGinniss has done to him.

The formal complaint is understandable and can be dealt with disinterestedly. McGinniss titles his book The Last Brother and tells the reader that he, the author, is there to tell a story. He then proceeds to imagine what Kennedy (and other characters in the book) said, and thought, in given situations.

I have written 10 novels in which I assign words to John F. Kennedy, as also to Dean Acheson, Allen Dulles, Lyndon Johnson, Barry Goldwater, Bill Clinton, Fidel Castro, and indeed Josef Stalin, to name a few. The responsibility of the author is to convince the reader that the ventriloquism is plausibly done. It is no substitute for Hitler's Secret Diaries, assuming that they had been authentic: a hidden recording device at the summer cottage in Chappaquiddick memorializing what Teddy said when he arrived back from the beach would be historically interesting in a sense that no novelist can duplicate.

And it is unquestionably the case that the assignment of words to a person still living (when this is done on television they call it is a "docudrama") presents great temptations for the writer who wants to discharge an animus. The much-discussed lawsuit over the profile that appeared in The New Yorker, in which Janet Malcolm put words in the mouth of psychiatrist Jeffrey Masson, was ruled by the court to be a transgression because the author could not establish that the words had been spoken, represented them as having been spoken, and the subject of the interview vigorously protested that he was given words to say and thoughts to think which he never spoke or thought.

Joe McGinniss self-evidently does not do this. The reader of his book would need to judge whether that much that is known about the Kennedys is consistent with the representations in the book. When a few years ago ABC presented the docudrama on Richard Nixon and Watergate, a venture deeply resented by Nixon, the viewer had to decide whether he thought the treatment fair and a plausible recreation of the great drama it recorded. The Final Days got much attention, and although there was no formal license to put words into the mouths of Nixon, his family, his friends, his staff, the judgment of most informed viewers was that the treatment was a conscientious attempt to depict the thoughts and words of the principal players.

Arthur Hoppe of San Francisco has written an amusing column reproducing excerpts from a "biography" of Billy Graham. It begins, " 'Oh, how I'd love to rip off his clothes, smear his body with raw Easter eggs and fulfill my carnal desires,' thought Billy Graham as President Reagan pinned the Medal of Freedom on his chest. 'Did the Rev. Mr. Graham really think that?' I asked Haberdash. He shrugged, 'No one can prove that he didn't,' he said."

And then, "'I also have police records. Look at this: B. Graham was arrested three years ago in Pocatello, Idaho, for shoplifting six women's Spandex bicycle pants from a lingerie shop.' 'Hold it,' I said. 'It says this B. Graham was a 16-year-old African-American paraplegic female.' Haberdash nodded. 'It shows in runs in the blood,' he said."

Fun and games. And the onus is clearly on McGinniss: Is what he writes congruent with what we know of reality? That is the surviving question.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 4, the 216th day of 1993. There are 149 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Aug. 4, 1892, one of America's most notorious murders took place as Andrew and Abby Borden were axed to death in their home in Fall River, Mass. Andrew Borden's daughter, Lizzie, was subsequently accused of the killings, but was acquitted at trial. The case remains officially unsolved.

On this date:

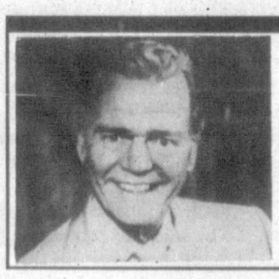

In 1735, a jury acquitted John Peter Zenger of the New York Weekly Journal of a charge of seditious libel.

In 1790, the Coast Guard had its beginnings as the Revenue Cutter Service was formed.

In 1830, plans for Chicago were laid out.

In 1914, Britain declared war on Germany while the United States proclaimed its neutrality in World War I.

U.S. joins with gang-bangers

Paul Harvey

No Houston schoolboy would ever even think of raping or murdering young girl classmates, but when several of them formed "a gang," called themselves the Blacks and Whites, after a few drinks, it was easy.

Very few impromptu street crimes are committed by loners; mostly, our cities are held hostage by "gangs."

Psychologists call it "shared responsibility," this willingness of humans to do things in concert that they would never do individually.

Seldom is a pedestrian splashed with curb-side water by a car occupied by fewer than two.

I cannot imagine the United States doing what it's doing in places like Somalia without the complicity of the United Nations.

There, we have been gang-banging the capital city!

In one span of hours, our tanks rumbled through the port area, fire-bombed the home and headquarters of some faction leaders. Our Specter planes pounded the city for hours, leaving parts of human bodies dangling from trees and branches and phone lines.

While President Clinton in every public utterance – as did President Bush before him – is careful to pass the buck to the United Nations.

Somalians in Somalia know who the invaders are. They are in the streets of their bombed-out city, shouting, "Down with America," "Americans go home!"

In half a hundred countries of the world, United States forces claim U.N. affiliation as justification for gang-banging anybody.

Most of the United Nations nations have morals, mores and standards entirely foreign to our traditional ones.

But their diseases, their deportment and their distorted values are rubbing off on us.

The United Nations, because it is nobody in particular, can continue rubbing Saddam Hussein's nose in his eviction from Kuwait until most of the Arab world closes ranks against us.

That's us, U.S. For if we are deceived about where the responsibility rests for all this intervention, nobody else is.

U.S. firepower is not camouflaged by a mongrel flag; the Arab world knows it if we the United States of America are 6,000 miles offsides.

Uncle Sam is running with a gang cunning enough to fan fires and then step back and let Yankee Doodle spend whatever it costs to preserve, protect and defend the reputation of "our gang."

When George Washington admonished us to "avoid foreign entanglements," he charted a course that made our country a lighthouse for the world.

For 150 years, every other nation – England, France, Mexico, Central America, South America – watching our example, initiated sweeping democratic reforms.

We sent them no guns, no butter, no money and no troops ... and the world loved and imitated us.

But we've seen fallen in with a bad gang, and we are judged by it.

TV really is chewing gum for the eyes

Joseph Spear

They told me in journalism school that I shouldn't write about things I know nothing about, but today I'm going to violate that rule. I'm going to write about television violence, and I don't know a cursed thing about it.

What I mean to say is I have no first-hand knowledge. I've read a lot about it, and I've talked to people about it, but I haven't seen much of it myself because I don't watch television.

Well, that's not really true, either. There are some redeeming things on the tube that warrant periodic attention. Namely, baseball and basketball games. Or a big breaking news story that's visually interesting. Or a presidential speech, an occasional public TV program, a sporadic National Geographic special, old black-and-white movies or a Suzy Bogguss video if I trip over the Nashville Network while searching for ESPN.

As far as the rest of it is concerned, I'm from the Frank Lloyd Wright school of thought: TV is chewing gum for the eyes.

Does that mean I'm some sort of a television snob? Maybe, but it's more likely I was simply trained right. My paternal grandfather, in whose home I was raised, steadfastly refused to have a TV set in the house while I was still in high school. Homework and Hit Parade didn't mix, this very wise man said.

So now I'm all grown up and I'm TV-free. I have never had the pleasure of seeing even one episode of Beverly Hills 90210. Or Harlan & Merleen, whatever that is. Or Danger Theater or Top Cops or Johnny Bago, whatever they are.

Still, I know that some of this stuff is violent because I read about an American Psychological Association report that estimates the average American child will have seen 8,000 murders and 100,000 acts of violence by the time he or she finishes elementary school.

I also read in the newspaper where the heads of the four major networks recently appeared before Congress and were shocked, shocked to learn, after 40 years and 3,000 studies, that violence on television abets violence in the real world. They're going to fix things by posting warning labels on violent shows and by developing technology that will allow parents to block out shows they don't want their children to see.

They can develop all the technology they want, but they'll never get me to look at that tube until they come up with something that will also block out Roseanne Barr, Pat Robertson, Rush Limbaugh and that magnet for the brain-dead, the home shopping channel (which for the longest time I thought was the Zircon Channel because the only thing I've ever seen on it while searching for ESPN is a hand wearing a fake diamond).

While I was thinking about TV violence, I thought up five other reasons why you should just turn the damn thing off:

1. It rots the brain. This is literally true. A Canadian team studied a small town in British Columbia before and after it got television for the first time and found that both adults and children suffered a 20 percent loss of creativity.

2. It robs children of their fantasies. Indeed, educational psychologist Jane Jealy, author of Endangered Minds, Why Our Children Don't Think, believes it may actually be reversing the evolution of the human brain.

3. It filters out homely and squeaky-voiced political candidates (Ross Perot being a possible exception). It is a sad fact of the electronic age: You gotta be pretty to win.

4. It discriminates against newspapers and books, because every hour spent watching the tube is an hour spent not reading. And that means you're discriminating against me, podna.

5. It's only going to get worse. Five-hundred channel systems are just around the corner. I can't imagine what it will be like when have to flip through half-a-thousand channels to find ESPN. At the rate of 5 seconds per channel, it'll take almost 42 minutes.

They'll be in the third inning before I get there.

Koslow trial jurors follow transcripts saga

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

WICHITA FALLS (AP) – It was a chilling account of blood and money, even by Texas courtroom standards.

Trembling, the young defendant buried his head in his arms and wept. His family and fiance looked on in grim silence. Jurors followed the saga via typewritten transcripts.

Across the aisle, glaring at the accused, sat the target of a bizarre murder-for-hire scheme purportedly engineered by his own adopted daughter.

And adding to the Hollywood scenario was a cowboy cop and a camera crew from Court TV, quietly taping the drama for delayed showing to a national audience.

Such was the scene Tuesday in the capital murder trial of Jeffrey Dillingham, 20, a bright, polite honor student accused of bludgeoning and slashing a wealthy Fort Worth couple.

All were riveted on a 37-minute tape-recorded horror story.

It was Dillingham's account, delivered in a soft monotone, of the bloody assault on Jack and Caren Koslow in the early morning hours of March 12, 1992.

"I hit Mr. Koslow in the back of the head, on the neck, with a pry bar," Dillingham says early on. "... Mrs. Koslow started screaming, and then I hit Mrs. Koslow some more. ...

"I saw him slit Mrs. Koslow's throat, but I turned around and I didn't see exactly what he did to Mr. Koslow."

Mrs. Koslow, 40, a member of a prominent Texas oil family, was killed. Her husband, 49, an ex-banker, was severely beaten and slashed. But he survived.

The state maintains the Koslows were targets in a plot conceived by Jack Koslow's 18-year-old daughter Kristi and carried out by Dillingham and a longtime friend, Brian Salter, also 20.

Trial dates for Miss Koslow and Salter, her boyfriend, have not been set.

Tuesday's dramatics focused on the statement Dillingham gave Curt Brannan, a silver-haired, mustachioed homicide detective who showed up in court wearing Western boots, hat and suit.

"Brian did the alarm code while I ran upstairs and kicked in the door," Dillingham said in the statement taken nearly two weeks after the fatal attack. "Mrs. Koslow was lying in bed. Mr. Koslow was going for the closet."

Dillingham told how he ordered them to lie face down on the floor but did nothing until instructed by Salter.

"Do it," he quoted Salter as saying.

"Brian handed me the pry bar and I walked over there and I hit Mr. Koslow and I hit Mrs. Koslow."

Medical examiners said Mrs. Koslow was struck 27 times and that it was a blow to the larynx that killed her. Only an accidental gunshot saved Koslow, police theorize.

"What happened when you hit her ... in the throat," Brannan asked.

"She just, like, quit screaming. She was awake and everything, but she like quit doing, you know, resisting and fighting and stuff. She just kinda laid down. ..."

At the counsel table, Dillingham buried his head on his arms, his body wracked several times by sobs. Tears splashed on the lens of his glasses.

And the tape rolled on.

"Brian found Mr. Koslow's buck knife in the closet ... I don't remember if the gun went off before Brian cut their throats or afterwards ... It had to been afterward, 'cause when the gun went off by accident, I freaked out."

Dillingham revealed that the attack on the Koslows was supposed to have occurred two weeks earlier but that it kept getting postponed.

"Kristi was burned," he said, and nagging Salter.

"Get it done. Get it over with," Dillingham quoted Kristi as telling Salter.

He said Salter told him Kristi expected to inherit as much as $12 million after her parents' death, and that, "I was supposed to get $1 million from the deal."

Although Kristi would have benefited from the Koslows' death, her father testified previously her inheritance was nowhere near that figure.

Secretary of State Christopher visits Damascus during Mid East initiative

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Diplomatic Writer

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) – Secretary of State Warren Christopher arrived in Syria early today amid speculation President Hafez Assad's cooperation in ending the recent fighting in southern Lebanon may win him concessions in the Middle East peace negotiations.

Christopher was to meet with Assad and Foreign Minister Farouk Sharaa today during a day-long visit to the Syrian capital on the third day of a trip designed to breathe new life into the peace process.

The secretary of state had frequent telephone conversations with Sharaa during the two weeks as the Clinton administration played a mediator's role to broker a cease-fire in Lebanon.

Now the question is whether Christopher can get Israel and its Arab neighbors to move beyond the emotions of Lebanon and get them back to the negotiating table.

"We certainly are a long ways away from making real substantive progress, but at least the discussions are now focused again on the core substantive issues," said a State Department official who briefed reporters on condition he not be identified.

The official said the discussions are not yet at the point of setting a date for another round of negotiations in Washington.

He said that U.S. officials were relieved that their early fears that "events in Lebanon would have derailed the peace process and set the whole process back substantially" appeared exaggerated. "Our concern was that there would be anger and frustration on all sides."

Syria's role in ending the fighting in Lebanon was to use its influence to get the Iranian-backed Hezbollah guerillas to agree to halt firing Katyusha rockets at Israeli settlements.

The U.S. official declined to discuss whether Assad might now feel that his country is owed something by the United States and Israel.

What Syria wants most is return of the Golan Heights, the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since the 1967 Six-Day War.

Israel is demanding a peace commitment from Syria before it returns any part of the Golan Heights.

Christopher met with top Israeli officials and with a Palestinian delegation on Tuesday and the Palestinians voiced anger at the fighting in Lebanon and some anxiety over the prospects that Syria might move onto a faster negotiating track.

The U.S. briefer said the Palestinians used the session to "vent a little steam" over Israeli shelling of Lebanon.

Christopher pressed the Palestinians to give favorable consideration to the so-called early empowerment proposal that would give them greater self-government in Gaza and the West Bank.

But the area covered would be limited to Gaza and the West Bank area around Jericho.

After the meeting with Christopher, Palestinian spokeswoman Hannan Ashrawi said her delegation prefers a confederation with Jordan to the concept of autonomy.

"I think confederation is a much better approach," she said.

"If we talk about early empowerment it means you are already fragmenting the peace process," she said.

Ginsburg to help decide sex-equality case

WASHINGTON (AP) – Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a longtime advocate of women's rights, will help decide the first major case on that score to come before the Supreme Court in years – whether jurors can be excluded solely on the basis of gender.

Ginsburg is to be sworn in next Tuesday, a week after the Senate overwhelmingly confirmed her as the high court's 107th justice. She becomes the second woman to serve on the court, joining Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who was chosen by President Reagan in 1981.

President Clinton predicted she will move the court "not left or right but forward." Ginsburg, a 60-year-old federal appellate judge, promised, "I'll do the very best I can in this job."

In replacing retired Justice Byron R. White, she will become the first justice named by a Democratic president since President Lyndon Johnson nominated Thurgood Marshall in 1967.

Ginsburg won several significant Supreme Court rulings during the 1970s as the leader of the American Civil Liberties Union Women's Rights Project.

As a justice, she will face a new case involving equal protection of the sexes this fall. The court has agreed to decide during the 1993-94 term whether it is just as unconstitutional to exclude people from juries because of their gender as it is to disqualify them because of their race.

The case is "one of the first major equal-protection challenges (involving women) to reach the court in almost a decade," said Marcia Greenberger of the National Women's Law Center.

It involves an Alabama man who says his rights were violated when an all-female jury ruled against him in a paternity suit. The man argues that excluding men from the jury denied his right to equal protection under the Constitution's 14th Amendment.

Ginsburg would be on familiar ground in considering the equal-protection argument – although on the opposite side of the bench.

As a lawyer during the 1970s, she won many of her women's rights victories before the Supreme Court by using male plaintiffs to attack sex-based stereotypes.

During her confirmation hearing she said she still backs ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment as a "clarion call" that women and men are equal under the law.

"It was always my view that distinctions on the basis of gender should be treated most skeptically" because laws that limited women's opportunities often were cast as benefits to women, she told the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sex discrimination hurts both men and women, she told senators.

The Supreme Court has ruled on a number of sex-bias cases in recent years. But the most recent major equal-protection case came in 1982, when the justices narrowly ruled unconstitutional a state-supported nursing school's ban on male students.

Before that, the high court's most important sex-discrimination ruling based on the Constitution's equal-protection guarantee was its 1976 decision throwing out an Oklahoma law that allowed "near beer" to be sold to 18-to-20-year-old women, but not to men that age.

The court has 43 cases already slated for decision during the term that opens in October and could add 60 to 70 more cases to its docket.

Israel to hold Demjanjuk pending hearing

JERUSALEM (AP) – Despite a U.S. court ruling entitling John Demjanjuk to return to the United States, Israel plans to keep him in jail pending a hearing here on whether he can be tried for other war crimes.

Prison Services spokesman Dubi Ben-Ami said today that Demjanjuk, a retired Ohio autoworker, would remain in custody pending the Aug. 11 Supreme Court hearing. He is being held at Ayalon prison near Tel Aviv.

"The state of Israel is sovereign. At this stage, we work by Israeli court decisions," Ben-Ami said in a telephone interview.

Demjanjuk's attorney, Yoram Sheftel, charged his client was being held illegally and that Israel was perpetrating a "blatant violation of his rights."

Still, he expected his client would be back in Cleveland by late next week, after the Israeli court ruling, Sheftel told Army radio. "Indeed the gates (to the U.S.) have been opened and won't be shut again," he said.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati ruled Tuesday that Demjanjuk could return to the United States since he had been extradited to Israel in 1986 solely to be tried on charges of being "Ivan the Terrible."

Demjanjuk was acquitted Thursday by Israel's Supreme Court of his 1988 conviction of being the brutal Nazi guard "Ivan the Terrible," who operated gas chambers at Treblinka death camp in Poland, where 850,000 Jews perished.

Israel promptly issued a deportation order, but a lower Supreme Court panel issued a 10-day restraining order hours before Demjanjuk was to take off Sunday for Kiev in his native Ukraine.

Responding to appeals from right-wing extremists and a Holocaust survivor, justices gave prosecutors until Aug. 11 to consider trying Demjanjuk for alleged crimes at the Nazis' Sobibor death camp in Poland.

U.N. blocking aid to Liberian rebels

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) – Relief groups are complaining that the United Nations could be endangering the lives of tens of thousands of Liberians by halting shipments of food to rebel-held territory.

U.N. special envoy to Liberia Trevor Gordon-Somers asked the government of Ivory Coast on Monday to stop private relief agencies from traveling from that country into Liberian territory controlled by rebel leader Charles Taylor.

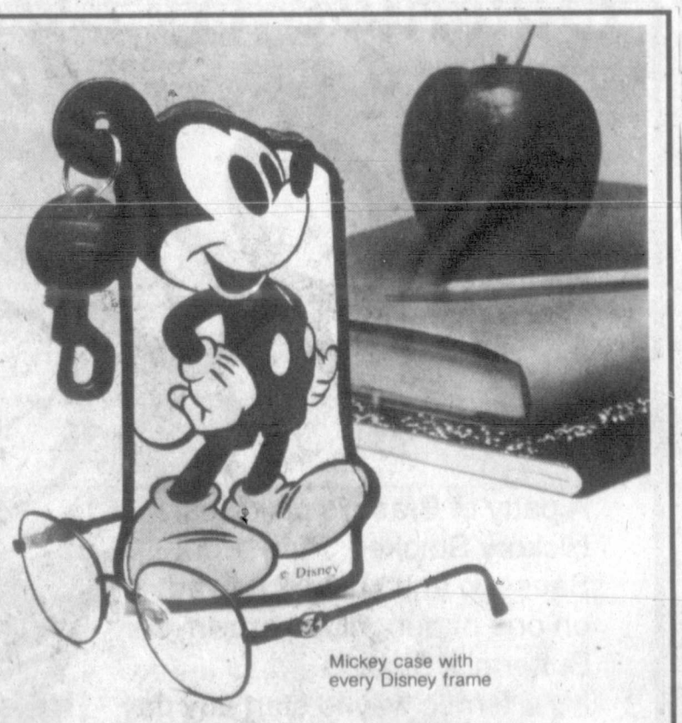

A copy of the letter obtained by The Associated Press on Tuesday said the aid shipments would endanger the precarious peace agreement signed a week ago by the warring factions in Liberia's civil war.

The factions have accused humanitarian groups of taking sides in the war and have sometimes shot at aid trucks or disguised their own troop movements as relief convoys.

Gordon-Somers' New York office said he was on vacation and no one was authorized to speak on his behalf.

Relief groups said the move threatens more than 220,000 refugees living in the rain forest between the front lines of Taylor's rebels and their enemies: a Nigerian-led West African coalition army and two other Liberian factions.

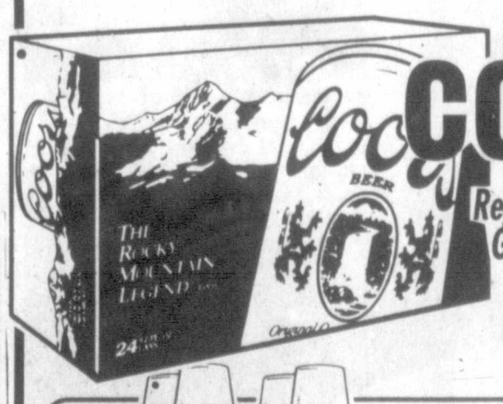

"There are 25,000 children suffering from malnutrition in this area," said the Rev. Kenneth Vavrina, head of U.S. Catholic Relief Services in Liberia.

Food

Family enjoys sweet success despite bitter split

By MARY FOSTER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — There's the elegance of Commander's Palace, amid the ancient oaks and Garden District mansions. The informal chic of the Palacè Cafe on busy Canal Street. Breakfast at Brennan's. And Bacco, where Italian dishes get a Creole twist.

These very different restaurants have a lot in common, including the guiding hand of one or more Brennan.

"Everyone of us grew up with the restaurant business," said Ella Brennan. "We have worked in every area and we know food. In fact anytime you get the family together, that's what we talk about — breakfast, lunch and dinner — the subject is always food."

Of course, this is a family that doesn't eat or talk together — at least, not all of it. Since 1973, when three of Ella's nephews split off from the rest of the family to run the original Brennan's in the French Quarter, this family has been split by a feud.

Ella Brennan won't discuss the fabled breakup anymore, classifying it as "ancient history." Brennan's is publishing a new cookbook, however, and it will carry the brothers' version of the split.

One thing both sides agree on is that both sides of the success story began with Owen Sr. — Ella's older brother and the father of Ted, Owen Jr., known as Pip, and Jimmy.

It was Owen Sr. who, in 1935, opened the original Brennan's on Bourbon Street, where the family developed their distinctive Creole dishes, their famous dessert "Bananas Foster," and of course, "Breakfast at Brennan."

"It was after Frances Parkinson Keyes' 'Dinner at Antoine's' was published," Ted said. "My father thought it was such a great concept so why not 'Breakfast at Brennan's?'"

The restaurant was an enormous success; after a lease dispute Owen decided to move to the present location on Royal Street. The opening was scheduled for spring 1956, but Owen Brennan died of a heart attack on Nov. 4, 1955.

Owen's widow had not been involved in operating the restaurant and his three sons were still in school at the time of his death. Ella, then 30, took over as the manager of the new Brennan's.

Older sister Adelaide ran the office, brother Dick supervised the kitchen and younger sister Dottie greeted customers and handled reservations.

"We all grew up in the restaurant business," Ella said. "We learned it early and worked hard at it. I've never had another job."

As the restaurant won awards and its fame grew, the family expanded its empire — a restaurant on the Mississippi Gulf Coast, a new Brennan's in Houston and another in Dallas, Commander's Palace, a family styled restaurant in a New Orleans' suburb called Chez Francais.

"We became very concerned about the rapid expansion my aunt was committed to," Ted said. "We felt the product was suffering. There can only be one Brennan's and it is in the French Quarter."

At a family meeting in 1973, Pip, Jimmy and Ted expressed their concerns.

"Surprisingly, Ella's panacea was, as she put it, 'to split up the corporations and not the family,'" the history compiled by Owen's sons says. "This may have been possible had everyone agreed to Ella's terms."

The three sons informed Ella that along with their mother they controlled the stock in Brennan's and considered it their father's legacy. The brothers said they would assume sole control of the original Brennan's and that Ella and her brothers and sisters could have the other restaurants.

The once close-knit family, which had celebrated holidays together in one of the dining rooms at Brennan's, lived within blocks of each other, and had worked together since Owen's sons were children, was bitterly split.

"It's sad that we have lost part of our family," Ted Brennan said. "But it was either that or lose our father's legacy to us."

Ted, Pip and Jimmy have restored Brennan's to its original greatness. The gracious dining rooms, flower bedecked courtyard and bright galleries that seat 550 people are constantly crowded. A three-course breakfast costs $40.

Most of the original expansion restaurants are gone; only Brennan's in Houston and the elegant Commander's Palace remain from that group. The family's empire has not shrunk, however.

Mr. B's is the creation of brother and sister Cindy and Ralph Brennan — the children of Ella's brother John. They also operate Bacco. Palace Cafe is under the auspices of Dick Jr.; Ella's daughter, Ti Martin; and Dotty's son, Brad Bridgeman.

Commander's Palace, where siblings Ella, Dick, Dotty and John Brennan hold sway, remains a mecca.

On weekend and summer mornings, little girls in hair ribbons and crinolines and boys in blazers show up with their parents to celebrate birthdays. Couples linger over their coffee listening to jazz and enjoying brunch. At night, limousines deposit celebrities.

Every employee, from the full-time painter, four carpenters and hundreds of waiters, bartenders, busboys, cooks and kitchen helpers, knows there is always one or another of the Brennan watching.

"We refer to it as B.O.D. — Brennan on Duty," Ella said. "We feel that by always having someone here it gives the staff a sense of our very strong commitment. They know we want everything to be as good as possible.'

Two of Brennan's many famous dishes

LYONNAISE FISH WITH POTATO CRUST

8 fresh fish fillets (trout, snapper, sheepshead or catfish)
6 potatoes
1 pound. flour

Egg Wash

2 eggs
1 pint milk

Lemon Butter Sauce

4 fresh lemons, peeled
3/4 pound. unsalted butter
1 cup white wine

To make lemon butter sauce: Squeeze juice from lemons and mash the pulp on a 2-quart saucepan. Heat juice, pulp and white wine and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to almost dry. Add butter, little by little, whisking after each addition. When all butter has been added, remove from heat, strain and hold at room temperature until time to serve. Garnish with capers, carmelized onions and tomatoes.

To cook fish: Dust fish filets with flour than put in light egg wash. Coat fish fillets with freshly shredded shoestring potatoes, patting on both sides of filet. Saute at medium heat in clarified butter about 3 1/2 minutes on each side. Turn constantly so both sides are crisp and brown. Season to taste.

Serve fish over sauce and garnish with chopped parsley.

BANANAS FOSTER

4 tablespoons butter
1 cup brown sugar, well packed
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
4 tablespoons banana liqueur
4 bananas, cut in half lengthwise, then halved
1/4 cup rum
4 scoops vanilla ice cream

Melt butter over an alcohol burner or stove in a flambe pan. Add brown sugar, cinnamon and banana liqueur; stir to mix. Heat a few minutes, then place halved bananas in the sauce and saute until soft and slightly browned. Add rum. Allow it to heat well, then tip pan so the flame from the burner causes the sauce to light. Allow the sauce to flame until it dies out, tipping the pan with a circular motion to prolong the flaming.

Serve over vanilla ice cream, then spoon the hot sauce from the pan over the top. Serves 4.

Chef advocates simple approach to food preparation

FOOD

MARIALISA CALTA

"If you have good ingredients, stay out of their way," says Benjamin Cevelo, a chef-instructor at the New England Culinary Institute in Essex, Vt. "Skip the song and dances. Let the tastes and textures shine through."

For those of you who don't expect such plain talk from a guy in chef's whites, meet "Chef Benjamin" (as he is known to his students), a chef who described his approach to food a "pretty commonsensical."

"In most cases, simple means more," he says.

For more than a year now, Cevelo and a revolving crew of students have been creating recipes, and styling food, for this column. The job means extra work, and no glory. I have found Chef Benjamin to be tireless, cheerful, creative and not a it of the egomaniac that one might (at least in the old days) associate with the title "chef." He always, for example, credits his students before himself. So this seemed to be a good time to introduce Chef Benjamin, and showcase some of his favorite recipes.

Cevelo, who is 32, began his culinary training at an early age, doing odd jobs at Rosie's, a restaurant serving home-style Italian food which his parents ran in his home town of Martin's Ferry, Ohio. Cevelo learned early to wash dishes, sweep the floor, to cook and — most importantly — to love good food.

He professional training began right after high school with an apprenticeship at a four-star restaurant in Ohio. He has since worked at such prestigious establishments as Washington, D.C.'s Willard Intercontinental and Boston's Four Seasons. He came to the culinary institute four years ago, and finds it a "privilege" to train the next generation of chefs.

His personal preference — when cooking at home, for his wife, Jamie (who is a manager at the culinary school), or just for himself — is "bistro food": light, simple fare that might include pasta or a chicken dish.

"Who wants to spend all day in the kitchen?" he says. "Then you just have to clean up."

This is a culinary sentiment I can endorse, along with the recipes that follow, which are two from Cevelo's repertoire. I reprint them here with a heartfelt "thank you" for all his time, effort and good will.

STUFFED BAGUETTE SANDWICHES WITH ARTICHOKE SALAD

Salad:

1 head of broccoli, florets only
1 small jar marinated artichoke hearts, drained
1 small red onion, thinly sliced
1 cup Calamata olives, pitted salt and pepper to taste
1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese

Sauce:

10 plum tomatoes
20 fresh bail leaves
3 tablespoon olive oil
salt and pepper
pinch dried oregano
1/2 teaspoon balsamic vinegar

Sandwiches:

.1 long, thin loaf of French bread (baguette)
3 chicken breasts, grilled or broiled until done to taste, thinly sliced
9 pieces provolone cheese, sliced

Make the salad: In a large saucepan fitted with a vegetable steamer, steam the bròccoli until tender. Drain.

In a large bowl, toss together the broccoli, artichoke hearts, onion and olives. Season with salt and pepper to taste and sprinkle with cheese. Set aside.

Make the sauce: Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Slice the tomatoes lengthwise, and stick a basil leaf in each half. Place cut side down on a baking sheet. Drizzle oil over tomatoes. Bake until tender, bout 20 minutes. Take tomatoes out, slip off skins, and put in a bowl. Mash with a fork (they should still be chunky). Season with salt and pepper, oregano and vinegar, to taste. Set aside.

Make the sandwich: Preheat oven to 250 degrees. Cut baguette in half lengthwise and hollow out middle, leaving about 1/2 inch of bread around the crust. Save the inner bread, rip it up and toss in a bowl with the sliced chicken and cheese. Poor the tomato sauce over the chicken mixture. Stuff mixture back into bread, put top half back on, and place on a baking sheet. Bake for 15 minutes, or until sandwich is heated through. Slice baguette into thirds. Serve with artichoke salad.

Yield: 3 servings.

JAPANESE PASTA WITH FRESH VEGETABLE AND SESAME DRESSING

Dressing:

3 shallots, peeled and minced
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
5 ounces honey
juice of 1 lemon 1/2 cup rice wine vinegar
1/2 Oriental sesame oil (made with toasted sesame seeds)
4 tablespoons toasted sesame seeds.

Pasta:

1 pond angel hair pasta
2 heads broccoli, florets only
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 green pepper, seeded and sliced in thin strips
1 red pepper, seeded and sliced in thin strips
1/2 pound snow peas, halve
salt and pepper to taste

Make dressing: In a skillet, saute shallots in vegetables oil until softened. Whisk in mustard. Add honey and warm until smooth. Remove from heat, add all other ingredients and mix. Store, covered, in refrigerator.

In a large pot of boiling, salted water, cook pasta according to package directions. Drain and toss with a bit of the reserved dressing, to keep it from clumping. Chill. In another large pot of boiling water, blanch broccoli florets by plunging into water for 2 minutes. Remove and immediately refresh under cold, running water to stop cooking. Set aside.

In a skillet, heat the tablespoon of oil and saute the peppers over high heat, about 3 minutes. Add the blanched broccoli and cook 1 more minute. Add snow peas, salt and pepper. Cook approximately 2 more minutes. Cover and remove from heat. Chill.

When ready to serve: Combine pasta and vegetables in a large bowl. Drizzle with sesame dressing to taste.

Yield: 6-8 servings as an appetizer, 3-4 as main course.

The recipe this week is from Phyllis Sierman of Pampa. In her letter, she said she did not know the history of the recipe but said her mother used it for many years.

MOTHER'S PUMPKIN PIE

1 large can of pumpkin
1 cup of milk
1/4 pound of Oleo (soft)
4 tablespoons of pumpkin pie spice
3 eggs

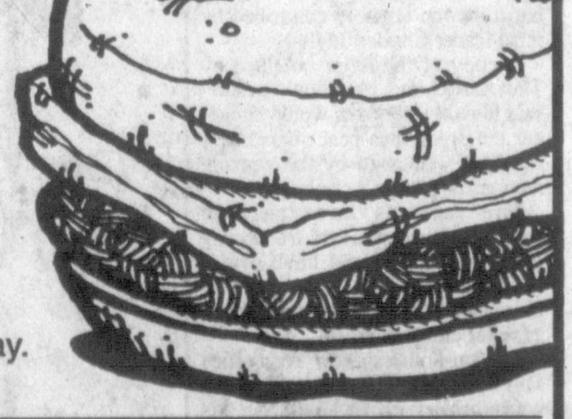

Mix all of the ingredients together thoroughly. This is enough for two pies.

Bake in unbaked pie shell until firm. Preheat oven to 425 degrees and bake for 15 minutes, then lower oven to 350 degrees and bake for an additional 45 minutes.

It's full speed ahead for Chautauqua

By DARLENE BIRKES
Guest Writer

Aqua ducks and bouncing balls, barbecue on a bun and lemonade, a Mariachi Band and Elvis impersonations, orators and sign language impressions are to be a part of the 12th annual Chautauqua sponsored by Pampa Fine Arts Association on Labor Day in Pampa's Central Park.

The full day of activities will begin at 7 a.m. with a pancake and sausage breakfast, followed by the one mile and 5K runs sponsored by Coronado Hospital. The free stage will open at 9 a.m. with the invocation by Mayor Richard Peet. Master and mistress of ceremonies at the stage will be Lee Cornelison and Wanetta Hill.

The all day festival is a throwback to the first Chautauqua which began in 1874 when the Methodist Church began a camp for Sunday School teachers at Lake Chautauqua in southwest New York. The movement became stronger as the resort became a place for recreation and education as well as religious inspiration. It was such a success that similar resorts sprang up in the United States.

Traveling tent Chautauquas began later and they featured famous orators as Theodore Roosevelt and William Jennings Bryan. These shows were educational as well as entertaining. The shows came through Pampa between 1912 and 1915, and the Schneider Band helped with the promotions.

Now 119 years later the New York resort is still in operation and Chautauquas are being revamped in several areas. Through a grant, the Missouri Humanities Council has funnelled $178,000 into the operation and modeled the program on the Great Plains Chautauqua Societies activities of Midwestern States, according to an article in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, June 27, of this year. The tent shows stay in a community for six days and present a religious-educational show titled "Varieties of American Religious Experience," which includes dialogues on mainstream religious and outsider sects, Native American religions, and women's issues. Orators assume roles of various characters in history as they impart their researched wisdom. The night shows are the subject of discussion groups held during the day.

Chautauqua is an Indian name that has been used to name towns and streets in the U.S. Some say it means two bags tied in the middle, which describes the shape of Lake Chautauqua in New York.

The purpose of the Pampa event is to introduce new trends in the arts with the presentation of a free stage and exhibits. The program is planned for all ages. People can spend the day and bring a sack lunch or feast at some of the 20 food booths.

This year's Chautauqua is headed by Berinda Turcotte, 665-9369. Co-chairman and entertainment director is Dee Barker. Exhibits and displays are headed by Carolyn Smith, and Ila Miller is in charge of the children booths and arts and crafts.

Artists and craftsmen wishing to sell should mail the $15 booth fee to the Chautauqua Committee, Pampa Fine Arts, P.O. Box 818, Pampa, 79066-0818. Deadline is August 10. They will be asked to donate an item to the PFAA raffle held from the stage. For those wishing to demonstrate an art skill only, the booth fee is waived. Children's arts and educational booths that charge must pay the booth fee of $15 and pre-register, by August 10, also. There is no fee for the special educational exhibits.

Austin families experiment with year-round schooling

By TIM LOTT
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN (AP) — Ed Leo has everything but the numbers — the data he could turn into a colorful brochure, take to school board meetings, wave about and say, "See?"

What the principal has so far, as Sanchez Elementary School looks back on its first year of a three-year experiment on year-round education, are some good reviews.

Teachers and parents say that, with the exception of day-care planning, things have gone smoothly. They also say the students seem to be learning faster.

"The kids have gotten a whole lot further academically this year," kindergarten teacher Ninfa Gonzales said.

Most students say they are comfortable going to school on a 60/20 schedule — 60 days in school and 20 days out, as opposed to the traditional nine months of school with the summer off.

Ultimately though, the public and the school will use data, rather than anecdotes, to judge Sanchez. In 1991-92, when the school was still on the traditional calendar, 58 percent of Sanchez third-graders, including special education students, passed all sections of the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills. Last fall, early in the first year of year-round education, 67 percent passed. Stay tuned for the 1993-94 scores.

"We're in a fishbowl, and I realize that," Leo said. "That's OK. We will see the gains."

While most district students finished the 1992-93 school year May 28, Sanchez students finished at the end of June. They begin the 1993-94 year Aug. 3.

Gonzales, a bilingual teacher, says the short, but frequent, breaks make learning "a lifelong process. It's not like school and 'regular life.' It's all integrated."

That was the theory in March 1992 when the Austin school board approved Sanchez's application to switch to the year-round calendar. Educators say that when students have the whole summer off — a tradition that dates to the time when many children worked on farms — they forget a lot, and teachers must spend several weeks each year reviewing the previous year's material.

The board approved the program for three years, with periodic reviews to see how effective it is in improving student achievement.

After several schools considered a year-round calendar, Sanchez was the only one that followed through.

Under the 60/20 calendar, Sanchez students begin their school year in August, then attend class during September and October before taking November off. They attend class in December — taking a Christmas break — and January and February, then have most of March off. They are in school for most of April and all of May and June before taking July off. And that's the summer break.

The breaks are called intersessions. But just because school is out, it doesn't mean the building is empty. During each intersession is a 10-day Sanchez Aztec Academy for students falling behind.

In the academy, learning is thematic. Reading, writing and arithmetic, for example, are all tied to a theme such as outer space, caves or the environment. Teachers say students welcome this break from the norm.

Gonzales said that, under the traditional calendar, Spanish-speaking students who were learning English would have the entire summer off and speak Spanish to their family members, slowing their progress in English.

"With one month off, it's not like that," she said.

Bonnie Lesley, assistant superintendent over curriculum for the Austin Independent School District, said a different calendar probably isn't enough to improve student achievement. But Lesley said Sanchez's approach probably will be effective because of the activities during the intersessions.

"You get improvement in changing the teaching methods along with the calendar," she said.

But not everyone is sold on the new schedule.

Ruben Cantu, a 10-year-old fourth-grader, said it can be frustrating to be in school when other children are out playing. "There are advantages and disadvantages," he said.

His father, Fred Cantu, said the shorter breaks reduce boredom. "When they don't go to year-round school — when they have the whole summer off — they get bored and complain more," said Cantu, a utility worker at the University of Texas.

Teachers said the schedule provides them with sanity breaks. They also said "spring fever" and the accompanying work slowdowns by students and teachers have been reduced.

"After having March off, I was fresh," said Carolyn Crouchet, a teacher at the school for 17 years.

However, the calendar has caused problems for some parents who have, for example, one child in Sanchez and another on a traditional schedule.

Mary Cadena, who works all day at the Texas Employment Commission, fits the description. This year, she had three students in Sanchez and two at Martin Junior High School. Cadena said the different schedules make it hard to coordinate day care. When her younger children are out of school and her older ones are in, the older ones obviously can't watch the younger ones during the day.

"As if I didn't have enough to do already," she said. "It's hard. If it's good for the kids, I don't mind the struggle."

Although the school, in cooperation with Extend-A-Care and the city's Parks and Recreation Department, has provided day care to many students, Leo estimates that only a third of the 500 students have some kind of day care. It's a problem he is always working on.

Schedule conflicts may have contributed to the apparent lack of interest by other schools in switching to year-round education. No Austin schools are scheduled to make the switch next year.

However, Lesley said the school finance crisis may be partially responsible. Many school districts were worried that they wouldn't be funded in time to open in the fall, much less in the summer, when year-round school would start. She said other schools may switch to year-round education for the 1994-95 school year.

The number of U.S. students enrolled in year-round schools has increased five times in the past 10 years to more than 1.5 million, according to the National Association for Year-Round Education in San Diego. Although Sanchez is the only school in the Austin area to use a year-round calendar, some 2,000 nationwide do, the association said. The Waco Independent School District is the nearest district that uses year-round education, according to Texas Education Agency spokesman Joey Lozano.

Increasingly, Leo is asked to speak at education conferences and to principals in places that want to duplicate what Sanchez has done. To these meetings, Leo takes a synopsis of the program and its successes.

Thank you notes should flow both ways

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I promised myself that if I read one more letter in your column about children who fail to write thank-you notes, I would write in their defense.

Generally, my children and the children of my friends send thank-you notes. However, none of them has ever received one from the older generation. Often Grandma, or Great Aunt Louise, will mention in a telephone conversation to me, "Oh, please tell the kids I enjoyed their drawings" — or the scarf, or book, or whatever. But never once a thank-you note from the grandparent generation to the grandchildren.

Perhaps they never received such notes from their grandparents, and therefore feel that it is not something grandparents do. I suppose that attitude will be passed on, and such letters will grace your column forever!

The whole issue is not a big deal to me or my children, or to my friends and their children; I mention it only because I am tired of seeing "ungrateful" children get bashed in your column because they don't write thank-you notes.

If you ever use this thought in your column, please don't use my full name — I don't want to embarrass my mom!

TERESA IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR TERESA: All right — what's fair for one is fair for all. All you parents who nag your children to write those thank-you notes to the grandparents and Great Aunt Louise, please remind the grandparents and Great Aunt Louise to acknowledge the gifts they receive from their grandchildren. It's important that the older generation set a good example for the younger ones.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I have to disagree with your answer concerning the number of thank-you notes required when six adult children received individual invitations to a formal church wedding. (They all accepted and enjoyed themselves.) It was noted that they had all chipped in for one gift, and asked you how many thank-you notes should be sent by the bride and groom for the two-slice toaster they had received.

Your response: One thank-you note addressed to all of them would be appropriate.

Recently we had two formal weddings in our family. For each wedding, my three siblings and I sent a gift of crystal. After the first wedding, we each received a thank-you note. After the second, we received one thank-you note that stated, "Please pass this on."

Although we laughed it off, we felt that we each should have received a thank-you note. After all, it's the thought that counts, not the value of the gift.

If you use my letter, please don't print my name or town. We don't want to embarrass anyone.

PASSED IT ON

DEAR PASSED: Your answer was better than mine. Thank you for calling it to my attention.

DEAR ABBY: I noticed the unusual names in your column, so I am enclosing one that I know will take first place.

It is: "Wiwat Yingkaittaveesuk Parsons." It appeared in the Pittsburg Morning Sun.

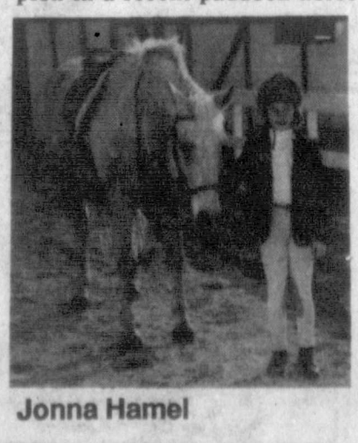

CHARLES BENELLI,
PITTSBURG, KAN.

DEAR CHARLES BENELLI: You win! Thank you for sending it.

White Sox bats, Thomas pound Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Chicago White Sox lost Monday's game against Texas with their arms. They won Tuesday's game with their bats.

The White Sox jumped on two Texas pitchers for nine runs in the first two innings en route to an 11-6 victory, their seventh win in the last eight games.

Frank Thomas hit his 28th homer, a three-run shot highlighting a seven-run second, as Chicago pounded out 18 hits. The hit total matched a season high and the White Sox beat the Rangers for the sixth time in eight meetings this season.

The AL West-leading White Sox increased their lead over the third-place Rangers to 6 1-2 games.

When the White Sox lost Monday night on a ninth-inning wild pitch, Chicago pitchers also walked six and hit three batters.

"I told the guys last night we weren't going to be down about it," Thomas said. "We're relaxed in this locker room. We're in front and we've answered those who have criticized us for not running away with it."

Thomas had his third four-hit game of the season and Robin Ventura went 3-for-5 with two doubles to extend his hitting streak to 10 games.

Over his last 11 games Thomas is hitting .463 (19-for-41) with six homers and 18 RBIs, but took an 0-for-10 slump into Tuesday's game.

"We've been getting a lot of guys on base," said Thomas, who increased his RBI total to 90, tying him with Detroit's Cecil Fielder for the league lead. "I've had more than my share of chances. I could have hit 170 guys in by now."

The White Sox chased Texas starter Charlie Leibrandt (9-8) with one out in the second, handing him his fourth consecutive defeat in his shortest outing of the season.

Craig Grebeck started the second with a single and went to third when Leibrandt threw wildly to first on Steve Sax's infield single. Joey Cora drove in Grebeck with a single, then Thomas hit his 28th homer off the top of the wall in left-center.

Chicago continued hitting against reliever Jeff Bronkey, getting a run-scoring double from Ventura and a two-run single from Lance Johnson. The White Sox sent 11 men to the plate in the biggest inning against the Rangers this season.

"This being in our division, we can't downplay it," Chicago manager Gene Lamont said. "We don't have a whole lot of games against them so each of them is a big game."

Prior to the four-game series, Rangers manager Kevin Kennedy said his team needed to win three to remain in the race. Splitting the first two games made that task more difficult.

"We still have the opportunity to do that," Kennedy said. "We'd like to have played better after last night. Nobody wants to look bad or embarrass themselves but we did all those tonight."

Kirk McCaskill (3-7), who took a 6.78 ERA into the game, shut the Rangers down on three hits over the first five innings before Texas broke through with a four-run sixth.

Julio Franco had a two-run double and Rafael Palmeiro and Dean Palmer added RBI singles in the inning.

McCaskill allowed eight hits over 5 2-3 innings with one walk and a season-high five strikeouts to post his first victory since April 28.

"The way I've been going, I just wanted to get ahead of the hitters," McCaskill said. "I was just happy to make a contribution. At times it doesn't feel like you're part of the team when you're going bad."

The White Sox took a 2-0 lead in the first on Ellis Burks' RBI single and Ventura's run-scoring double.

Burks' RBI single in the sixth and Ron Karkovice's 13th homer in the seventh accounted for Chicago's last two runs.

Palmeiro hit his career-high 27th homer, a solo shot, and Franco scored on Thomas' error in the eighth for Texas' final two runs.

Notes: Palmeiro's 27 homers is the most ever by a Rangers lefthanded batter. Juan Gonzalez and Palmeiro have hit the Rangers' last 12 home runs and 17 of the last 19. They've combined for 59, the most by any duo in the majors. ... Gonzalez left the game after five innings with a sore left shoulder. ... Bo Jackson's home run Monday night gave the White Sox 110, matching last year's total. ... Entering Tuesday night the Rangers' team ERA was 4.48, the second-highest in club history after 105 games. ... Leibrandt is 1-6 at Arlington Stadium this year and hasn't won there since April 12. ... Chicago's 18 hits tied a season-high, previously achieved on April 27 against Baltimore.

Baylor names Ellis AD

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

WACO Texas (AP) — Richard P. "Dick" Ellis was named athletic director at Baylor University on Tuesday and said he had two immediate goals: a winning Bears sports program and financial solvency.

"There are troubled waters ahead in athletics and I accept the challenge," said Ellis who succeeded Grant Teaff.

Teaff resigned effective Aug. 31 to become executive director of the American Football Coaches Association.

Ellis, 48, will move from deputy athletic director into his new position on Sept. 1.

Ellis said "I want to make Baylor athletics the best in the world. Rightly or wrongly our window to the nation is through our athletic program."

Ellis noted that Baylor was the largest Baptist university in the nation and oldest in Texas and said "I think we can mix religion, education and athletics. I think we can have a positive impact on people's lives."

Ellis, who was associate athletic director, was brought to Baylor when Teaff accepted the athletic directorship in 1992.

"I believe Dr. Ellis will help us receive excellence in athletics while helping us maintain integrity, ethics and good sportsmanship," Baylor President Herbert Reynolds said.

"He shares the commitment of our players, coaches and fans to field winning teams within the Southwest Conference and the NCAA."

Ellis joined Baylor in 1992 and is a native of Sherman, Texas. He also has worked at the Air Force Academy, Clemson, Arkansas and Texas A&M.

He graduated from the Air Force Academy in 1968 after being an All-State football player for Sherman. He was a combat pilot in Vietnam.

He worked as a football graduate assistant under Emory Bellard. Ellis returned to the Air Force and was there until he joined Ken Hatfield at Arkansas and Clemson.

Ellis said "we need to cut expenses but we're just about down to a bare bones budget now. We need to increase revenue in all our sports and it's a very difficult time to increase revenue when the economy is down."

Reynolds said Baylor hoped to raise some $3 million per year through the Bear Club to cover what he said was a $500,000 loss in football and an overall loss of $2.3 million in the athletic department last year.

"We have to find ways to stop these deficits and that will be part of Dr. Ellis' job," Reynolds said. "The timetable is as soon as possible. We would like to eliminate the deficit in at least the next two or three years."

Portugal, at home in dome, wins tenth

HOUSTON (AP) — Mark Portugal's record in the Astrodome has been exceptional, and after the passing of the July 31 trading deadline, it looks like he will continue to work in the building for a while.

"I'm glad he's still on our side. He's a quality pitcher and I don't see why he can't have the same success on the road," Houston manager Art Howe said after Portugal won his fourth straight home game, pitching Houston to a 6-1 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers on Tuesday night.

Portugal (10-4) was rumored to be trade material.

"I told him that if he ever leaves, I hope it's not to another National League team," Houston catcher Eddie Taubensee said.

Portugal is 7-1 in the Astrodome this season and has a 27-9 record there since joining the team in 1989. He is 44-30 overall with Houston.

He allowed one run on four hits while striking out three and walking five in 6 2-3 innings. Xavier Hernandez worked the final 2 1-3 innings to complete the five-hitter and earn his sixth save.

Portugal credits the characteristics of the park with his success.

"It's a pitcher's park. Everyone's numbers are better here. The ball doesn't carry that well, so you can afford to make a mistake and it doesn't go out of the park," Portugal said.

Taubensee believes that Portugal's pitching style contributes to his success in the Astrodome.

"What he throws, he throws for strikes and he keeps hitters off balance, and that causes them to hit a lot of fly balls. That's perfect for this park," Taubensee said.

Los Angeles center fielder Brett Butler agreed.

"I don't know how Portugal ever loses. He has four good pitches and he's always tough on us," Butler said.

"He must have pitched a good game, because we only had two or three hits against him most of the way," Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda added. "We're just not hitting the ball. I'm hoping to make a couple of changes that will help us out."

Kevin Gross (7-10) allowed four runs on eight hits in six innings. He struck out five and walked three.

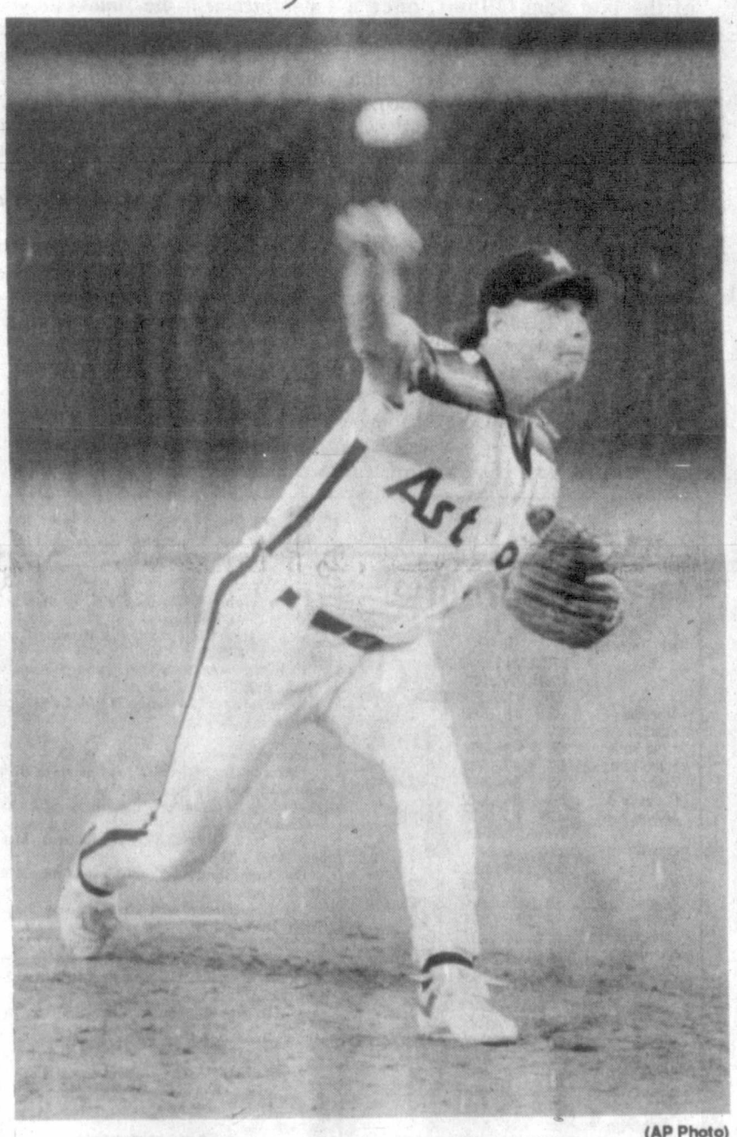

Houston took a 1-0 lead in the second after Luis Gonzalez led off with the first of his club record-tying three doubles. Following a walk to Andujar Cedeno, Gonzalez moved to third on a grounder and scored when Portugal grounded out to third.

The Astros increased their lead to 4-0 in the sixth, scoring three runs with two outs. Gonzalez doubled and scored on a single by Cedeno. Taubensee then hit his seventh homer of the season.

Los Angeles cut the lead to 4-1 in the seventh when pinch-hitter Lenny Harris singled, moved to third on a double by Butler and scored on Jose Offerman's sacrifice fly.

Gonzalez's third double in the seventh made it 5-1 and Craig Biggio's sacrifice fly in the eighth scored the final run.

Notes: Houston is 1-6 in extra innings and 11-17 in one-run decisions. ... Biggio was 0-for-18 before getting a sixth-inning single Tuesday night. ... Gonzalez has hit safely in 33 of his last 39 games, a span during which he is 50-for-132 (.379) with 13 doubles, five homers and 19 RBIs. ... The Dodgers have used five starters this season, all righthanders (Orel Hershiser, Gross, Tom Candiotti, Pedro Astacio and Ramon Martinez). They have a streak of 114 consecutive starts by a righthander, a team record.

Basketball

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Player-of-the-year Sheryl Swoopes has signed a contract to play one year for an Italian basketball team, her agent says.

Swoopes, who led Texas Tech to the 1993 NCAA championship, will leave this weekend for Bari, Italy, agent Jill Jeffrey said.

Jeffrey declined to disclose the financial details. Swoopes was in Portland, Ore., and unavailable for comment.

"As far as I know, Sheryl is the highest paid player coming out of school so far (this year)," Jeffrey told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal on Tuesday.

Stich advances in Volvo play

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Second-seeded Michael Stich overpowered Mikael Pernfors 6-2, 6-4 Tuesday in the first round of the $300,000 Volvo Tennis-Los Angeles men's tournament just two days after Pernfors won the Canadian Open.

Stich needed just 67 minutes to eliminate Pernfors, who beat Jim Courier, Alexander Volkov and Petr Korda en route to winning the Canadian Open.

In other first-round action Tuesday, fourth-seeded Richard Krajicek of The Netherlands eliminated Gianluca Pozzi of Italy 7-6, 6-3; the fifth-seeded Volkov of Russia beat Brian MacPhie 6-2, 6-3; Aaron Krickstein upset No. 6 Wayne Ferreira of South Africa 4-6, 6-0, 6-3; No. 8 Brad Gilbert rallied for a 3-6, 7-6, 6-2 victory over Luiz Mattar of Brazil; Jason Stoltenberg of Australia outlasted Byron Black of Zimbabwe 4-6, 6-3, 6-4; and Mauricio Hadad of Colombia defeated Derrick Rostagno 6-1, 3-6, 6-4.

Two singles matches were scheduled Tuesday night — top-seeded Pete Sampras, the reigning Wimbledon champion, was to meet Andrew Sznajder of Canada, and Patrick McEnroe was to face Jacco Eltingh of The Netherlands.

Stich, of Germany, ranked sixth in the world, had 11 aces in his convincing victory.

Pernfors, ranked 37th in the world, took the defeat calmly.

Suit alleges abuse by coach

The lawsuit, filed in Morgan Superior Court, claims that while Harmon was on the team "he was physically hit, punched, kicked and shoved with regularity as a method of coaching by Jim Colletto."

He also was called a variety of vulgar names by the coach, the suit claims.

Because of the treatment, "Harmon experienced thoughts of suicide, abuse of alcohol, deterioration of social relationships and adverse effects on his academic endeavors and depression," the suit claims.

Harmon's parents, Robert and Donna Harmon, claim they were deceived and that the university perpetrated a fraud that induced their son to attend Purdue.

Colletto was out of town Tuesday and was not immediately available for comment.

Athletic director Morgan Burke said the university had conducted an extensive investigation into Harmon's complaints and "not a single person supported or in any way confirmed the allegations against coach Colletto."

Coleman faces felony charges, leaves team

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecutors decided to level a felony charge against New York Mets outfielder Vince Coleman because of the explosive power of a large firecracker he tossed outside Dodger Stadium.

Coleman on Tuesday was charged with unlawful possession of an explosive device, a felony carrying a maximum penalty of three years in state prison. He is expected to surrender next week.

Three people were injured July 24 when the explosive was thrown from a jeep as autograph-seekers waited outside the players' parking lot after a game.

Arson investigators said Coleman threw something similar to an M-100 — an explosive equivalent to a quarter-stick of dynamite and packed with between 200 and 300 grains of gunpowder. A normal firecracker contains just a few grains of explosive powder.

Bill Hodgman, the district attorney's central operations director, said prosecutors chose to file a felony charge rather than a misdemeanor because of the strength of the explosive and the injuries.

An attorney for Coleman, 31, said the player does not wish to contest the charge and wants to reach a financial settlement with the injured parties.

"I take full responsibility for a very childish act for which I am suffering greatly. It was never my intent to hurt anyone. My main concern is for those injured," Coleman said in a statement released by attorney Robert Shapiro.

In Montreal on Tuesday night, Coleman left the team. Gerry Hunsicer, the Mets vice president of baseball operations, said Coleman would not be back until next week.

"He is very stressed by the situation," Shapiro said. "He hasn't been able to sleep and he is very, very concerned for those who have been hurt and for himself."

Fire battalion chief Dean Cathey said his department carried out the investigation and talked to about 24 witnesses.

Each year, Cathey said, his department spends $500,000 "to discourage people from doing what this person (Coleman) is alleged to have done. This year alone, we've had absolutely zero fire loss and no injuries as a result of the direct use of fireworks — until this."

Shapiro said he had relayed a request by Coleman to speak to each of the alleged victims, and that in each case he was referred to attorneys.

Coleman and teammate Bobby Bonilla were in a Jeep driven by Eric Davis of the Los Angeles Dodgers when the incident happened. Hodgman said the district attorney's office was not pursuing charges against Davis or Bonilla.

The explosion injured Amanda Santos, 2, who suffered second-degree burns to her cheek and damage to an eye and finger. Marshall Savoy, 11, suffered a bruised leg. Cindy Mayhew, 33, of Covina was treated for an ear injury.

Coleman sent an autographed T-shirt to Mayhew, an autographed baseball to Santos and an autographed bat to Savoy, Shapiro said.

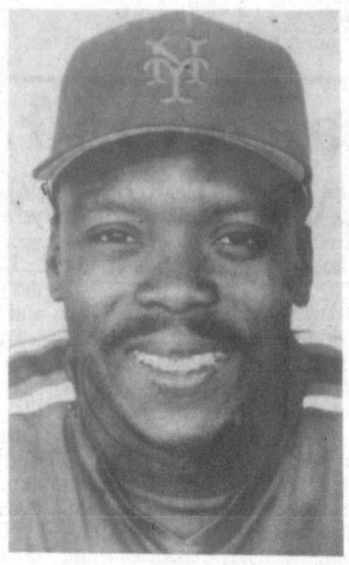

The Savoy family's attorney, James McKiernan, praised the district attorney for its "fortitude" in pursuing this matter.

"This felony count suddenly changes this from simply a firecracker incident to one involving serious risk of harm to individuals," he said.

McKiernan has said he will file a lawsuit behalf of the boy, alleging intentional infliction of emotional harm.

Darrell York, the attorney for the Santos girl, didn't return a phone call Tuesday. York said last week that Amanda's parents plan to file a lawsuit.

Mayhew's attorney, Joe Borges, said the filing "supports our legal plans" that include a possible lawsuit. He said his client was undergoing therapy for partial hearing loss and was too frightened to speak to Coleman.

Letter: Coach feared for his life at UCLA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former UCLA basketball coach Gene Bartow believed his life might have been in danger had the NCAA delved too deeply into the activities of the late Sam Gilbert, once a prominent Bruin booster, according to a published report.

Bartow, who succeeded John Wooden in 1975, acknowledged that he believed to be a life-threatening situation in a letter to an NCAA official, the Los Angeles Times reported in its Wednesday editions.

Wooden coached the Bruins to 10 NCAA championships in a span of 12 years before retiring at the conclusion of the 1974-75 season. Bartow succeeded Wooden and coached UCLA for two years before leaving to start the basketball program at the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

"I want to say 'thank you' for possibly saving my life," Bartow, currently the basketball coach and athletic director at UAB, wrote in a Nov. 1, 1991, letter to David Berst, NCAA assistant executive director for enforcement, the Times said.

Bartow's feelings toward Gilbert were part of a five-page letter in which Bartow called on the NCAA's top enforcement official to investigate the basketball program at Alabama, UAB's chief recruiting rival, the newspaper said.

A copy of the letter was obtained by the Times.

Gilbert, a Los Angeles contractor who died in 1987, reportedly had a long history of providing improper gifts to UCLA basketball players, particularly the stars of the Wooden era.

The letter contradicts public statements made by Bartow, who has said he did not fear Gilbert.

In offering his "thank you" to Berst, Bartow wrote that he had just read "Undue Process," a book that was critical of the NCAA's enforcement practices. He noted that the book indicated that an NCAA investigator had wanted to scrutinize the UCLA program during Bartow's first season at the school, but had been taken off the case.

"I would assume it was you or former NCAA Executive Director Walter Byers who did not let the investigator delve into the UCLA program in 1976," Bartow said in the letter. "At any rate, one of your investigators ... insinuated that he wanted to investigate UCLA's basketball program and was pulled off.

"I believe Sam Gilbert was Mafia-related and was capable of hurting people. I think, had the NCAA come in hard while I was at UCLA, Gilbert and others associated with the program would have felt I had reported them, and I would have been in possible danger.

Anti-abortion movement: New hybrid of civil disobedience

By TED ANTHONY
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – One of America's latest episodes of civil disobedience produced typically compelling visuals: anti-abortion demonstrators blocking a suburban clinic until police took them away.

What the cameras didn't pick up, however, was the leaders of Operation Rescue conferring with police behind the scenes to plan what would happen next.

It seemed a carefully choreographed dance – not surprising, since the group routinely meets with police weeks beforehand to iron out potential conflicts.

Call it Civil Disobedience Lite, an unlikely fusion of Reagan-era values and liberal protest tactics imported from the 1960s.

"It is an interesting paradox, to say the least," said Pat Mahoney, who protested the Vietnam War in the '60s and now coordinates demonstrations for Operation Rescue.

People who break laws to make statements draw on a heritage handed from Henry David Thoreau to Mahatma Gandhi, then to Martin Luther King Jr.

But the anti-abortion movement is helping redefine protest, many say.

"They're using techniques developed in the left wing for the right wing," said Bobby Seale, who in 1966 helped found the Black Panthers, one of the most direct of the civil rights movement's protest groups.

"It's quite different from any other civil disobedience I've ever seen," Seale said.

Operation Rescue, one of the anti-abortion movement's most visible groups, last month ended a 10-day project called "Cities of Refuge," designed to dissuade women in nearly a dozen cities from undergoing abortions.

The group's tactics are nonviolent, albeit confrontational, it says. And, like the civil rights movement, much of its activity starts in the church and ends in the police station.

The group's blockading of abortion clinics has produced more than 70,000 arrests nationwide – all planned, many orchestrated.

Some call its tactics threatening.

"They're using intimidation as a means to change behavior rather than changing laws," said Donald Housley, a social historian at Susquehanna University in Selinsgrove, Pa.

Today's civil disobedience, Housley said, is "more like techniques used by labor organizations rather than the civil rights movement."

Mahoney, with 35 arrests over the years, says Operation Rescue members avidly study Thoreau and King, but communicate with authorities differently.

"In a way, it's almost comical," Mahoney said during the most recent protests. "They're out there to arrest us and they say, 'Can you guys move a little bit to the left, please?'"

During the civil rights era, King and other leaders often notified police of impending demonstrations, but individual protesters could be unpredictable.

The anti-abortion movement, drawing on a cross section of society, requires a fresh approach.

"I think the rank and file have become much more involved," said John Wherry, a professor at Widener University School of Law in Wilmington, Del., who participated in many '60s protests.

"There are different people now and different concerns," Wherry said. "You put the 70-year-old blue-haired woman in jail, she's not going to do as well as the 23-year-old college dropout."

In the 1980s, a resurgence of activism on college campuses evoked memories of protests past and was led by students whose tactics matched their predecessors'.

But a redefinition of strategy came from abroad in 1989 during the Tiananmen Square democracy protests in China and from resistance during the 1991 Soviet coup. Demonstrators used fax machines and other telecommunications to spread their message and garner support.

The anti-abortion movement uses such technology routinely today. During Operation Rescue's latest project, on-scene protesters refused to talk to reporters, referring them instead to a statement faxed en masse to news outlets.

"I think these movements are just beginning to tap into technology," said Roger A. Soenksen, a communications professor at James Madison University.

"If he had the technology we have, King could have focused attention and moved it at a much faster pace," Soenksen said. "The same gains made by African-Americans by 1993 could have been made in, say, the early 1970s had they had the means to marshal their forces so quickly."

Mahoney said abortion-rights and anti-abortion activists share much common ground in their approaches to protest, and part ways only when it comes to their goals.

But Operation Rescue, while using civil disobedience, departs somewhat from Thoreau's tradition, he said.

If a law, Thoreau wrote, "is of such a nature that it requires you to be the agent of such an injustice to another, then, I say, break the law. Let your life be the counterfriction to stop the machines."

To the anti-abortion movement, the injustice lies not in laws or court orders governing their activities, but in the laws that allow doctors to perform abortions.

"Even though we are quote-unquote breaking a law, it is not to show it is unjust but is literally a lifesaving act," Mahoney said. "We are intervening to save a human life."

He compares Operation Rescue with the Underground Railroad, which spirited slaves to freedom.

"They went in, they physically got involved. They got people out," Mahoney said.

Seale, the former Black Panther, said today's protests are orchestrated to the point of being sanctioned by many local authorities.

That collusion, he said, undermines any message.

"We had a lot of spontaneously organized protests," Seale said. "They get away with a hell of a lot more. With us, the power structure orchestrated attacks and repression on civil disobedience. In this case, they're supporting it."

Clinton's Social Security commissioner choice has 'Zoe Baird' problem in past

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Clinton's candidate for Social Security commissioner failed to pay Social Security taxes for a part-time baby sitter from 1969 to 1975, the White House acknowledged Tuesday.

The Social Security Administration's new second-in-command also failed to pay Social Security taxes on his domestic help until recently, a Clinton administration spokesman said.

President Clinton late Tuesday officially announced his intention to nominate Shirley Sears Chater, president of Texas Woman's University in Denton and a nurse by training, as Social Security commissioner.

"Shirley Chater is an accomplished administrator with a strong background in health care issues," Clinton said in a statement. "I am convinced that she will do an outstanding job of running this enormous, and enormously important, agency."

"We don't believe this is an obstacle to her nomination," White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said of Chater's failure to pay Social Security taxes. "This is something that happened nearly 20 years ago and she is current."

The payment issue has been a hot one since Zoe Baird, Clinton's original nominee for attorney general, was doomed by her failure to pay taxes on her domestic help.

A Democratic congressional aide said Chater's failure to pay Social Security taxes could be a problem for someone who seeks to run an agency that will distribute $300 billion in Social Security retirement and disability benefits.

Seniors advocates also said privately that they were distressed by the news that both Chater and new acting Commissioner Lawrence H. Thompson both have "Zoe Baird problems."

But there was no immediate reaction from Capitol Hill. Chater's nomination would go to the Senate Finance Committee, whose chairman, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., has criticized the administration repeatedly this spring and summer about its failure to fill the post.

Myers said that from 1969 to 1975, Chater employed "a number of different domestic help people that would come in (and) did not pay Social Security taxes on them since she had a number of different ones."

Chater, however, only owed Social Security taxes on one of those employees, a part-time baby sitter who later became full time in 1975. Chater began paying Social Security taxes on the employee then, and recently paid back taxes on the employee for her work during the first half of the 1970s.

"That is consistent with the administration's position on the Social Security tax issue, which is that people have to be current, they have to be up to date," Myers said. "Certainly there is precedent for people who have made that mistake and gone on to be confirmed."

Congressional aides, however, say administration officials are concerned enough about Chater's situation that they have contacted members of Congress to discuss it.

Thompson, the agency's acting commissioner and second in command, also only recently paid back Social Security taxes for his domestic help, said Health and Human Services Department spokesman Victor Zonana.

"I do not have the details, but I know that he has paid back taxes and that, as you know, is the new standard in the administration," Zonana said.

Thompson, who did not require Senate confirmation, was appointed to the Social Security post last month. Thompson worked at Social Security from 1979 to 1983, when he joined the General Accounting Office. One of his specialties with the congressional watchdog agency was pension issues.

HHS Secretary Donna E. Shalala, in a July 19 press release announcing Thompson's appointment, said he was recognized "as one of the foremost experts on the Social Security program."

The tax law, on the books since 1951, requires employees to pay Social Security taxes on domestic help earning more than $50 in a three-month period.

The Internal Revenue Service estimates that three-fourths of the nation's 2 million household employers may be ignoring it.

Congressional aides and advocates for the elderly say Shalala pushed hard for Chater's selection, while some administration officials, lawmakers and advocates had favored John White, a former secretary of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare and a former state lawmaker.

Comptroller: Technology broadens access to records

AUSTIN (AP) – Technological advances have allowed state agencies to improve access to public records and provide more valuable data, whetting computer users' appetites, the state comptroller's office said Tuesday.

"Now a technically sophisticated public – armed with PCs and modems – is swelling demand for government data," says the latest edition of the comptroller's publication, Fiscal Notes, released Tuesday.

Agencies increasingly deliver specialized data on diskette to a "huge audience" of personal computer users, it said. Some agencies are going on-line with public data.

The Uniform Commercial Code section of the secretary of state's office since 1989 has offered the public direct access to the computer, with public terminals and dial-up connections. The section is the central registry for security agreements, such as liens.

In another example, vehicle registration records contain data valuable to business, such as insurance agencies. They can get a list of recent car buyers in a given city or zip code, an easy task for a computer.

However, providing direct public access to information can create problems when confidential and public data are mixed in an administrative system, the comptroller's report said.

For example, many businesses must send sales tax payments to the comptroller. Data on individual businesses is confidential, the report said, so the comptroller only releases dollar amount summaries, or names and addresses without dollar amounts.

Dial-up access is allowed to limited data on the agency's electronic bulletin board system, Window on State Government, the report said.

It noted that private businesses have discovered the value of state data.

As the capacity of the telecommunications network grows, and personal computers become more powerful in processing information, the demand for data will grow even more, the report said.
