Reagan determined to help Contras

■ Nicaraguan government hails defeat of aid package; Related stories — 2A, 4A

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, his bid for $36.2 million in new aid to the Nicaraguan Contras rejected by the House, said today he intends to continue helping the rebels battling the leftist Sandinista government.

The president, leaving the National Prayer Breakfast, was asked what he intended to do for the Contras in the light of the House vote.

"Help 'em," Reagan responded without elaboration.

His spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, did not have any immediate elaboration on Reagan's remark.

Meanwhile, retired Gen. John Singlaub said now that Congress has killed the aid proposal, he will ask for donations and sell "war bonds" to raise money for the Contras. He said he met in Washington with conservative leaders last weekend to discuss fund-raising.

Singlaub said funds to pay for humanitarian aid will be raised in the United States and abroad. Money brought in from "war bond sales", he said, will be placed in banks overseas and used to buy arms and ammunition if needed.

"There are millions of people who feel strongly that we cannot in our own national security interests allow the Soviets to establish the bases that they are developing now in Nicaragua," he said.

The administration has said it would not turn to third or private individuals to aid the Contras.

Despite a lobbying blitz by Reagan, the House rejected further military support for the insurgents by a 219-211 vote Wednesday night. In doing so, it dismissed the president's argument that only the Contras could prevent creation of a communist stronghold in Central America.

House Democrats who handed Reagan the stinging defeat said they would support alternative humanitarian aid for the Contras but would no longer finance warfare in a region that is now seeking peace.

The Senate planned to decide later today whether to take up a similar Reagan aid request, but the House action was legally sufficient to cut off any further assistance past Feb. 29 for the Contra forces seeking to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government in Managua.

The White House expressed disappointment that the House "did not vote to keep pressure on the Sandinistas during the peace process" and said it would begin consultations about the future of the resistance.

Contra leader Adolfo Calero, who watched the vote from a visitors' gallery, said his forces have enough arms to last about two months and enough food for a month. "We will press on with our last breath," he said.

Nicaraguan Ambassador Carlos Tunnerman said the vote could contribute to peace. "We hope that based on this vote we can move ahead with the Central American peace plan, end the war and fulfill in all good faith what the peace plan includes," he said.

But Contra leader Alfonso Robelo said it will weaken the rebels' negotiating position in cease-fire talks scheduled for next week in Guatemala. "Obviously, now that the Sandinistas know of our weakness, they will be ready to settle only for a total defeat, for a surrender of our troops," he said.

Cold front sweeps colder temperatures across Basin

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

With a range in temperatures between 80 and 29 degrees Wednesday and today, a Pacific cold front is playing havoc with the Midland area, according to a forecaster with the National Weather Service at the Midland International Airport.

The weather service meteorological technician, Rick Davis, said that "it's not unusual to have 30 to 40 degrees difference within a few miles of a cold front."

On Monday, the weather system began a southerly march through the Permian Basin, replacing warm air with cold. The front then began moving north Wednesday, replacing cold air with warm and sending Wednesday's high up to 80 degrees. The 80-degree mark tied a high temperature mark for the city set in 1976, Davis said.

However, freezing temperatures are returning today because the front is again moving south and replacing warm air with cold, he said.

A winter storm watch is expected to be issued this afternoon with freezing rain and treacherous icy roads expected, Davis said.

Freezing rain is caused by warm temperatures in clouds creating falling moisture that freezes when it hits earth, where temperatures are in the low 30s, he explained.

The cold weather, with highs reaching only into the 30s, is expected to linger in the Midland area into next week, he said.

Today, forecasters are predicting a 70 percent chance of freezing rain and an overnight low of 20 degrees. Winds will be northwest at 15 to 20 mph.

Last night's overnight low dropped to 29 degrees — 20 degrees warmer than the record low of 9 degrees set in 1956.

Friday there will continue to be a 70 percent chance for freezing rain and sleet, with a high in the 30s. Winds will be northeast at 5 to 15 mph.

STATE

Freezing rain, sleet or snow or a combination of all three are possible tonight and Friday across an area of North Texas and West Texas covered by a winter storm watch, forecasters say.

The winter storm watch covers from the mountains of West Texas to western portions of North Texas. And forecasters say damaging accumulations of ice are possible tonight across southwestern portions of North Texas.

Freezing rain is expected in western portions of North Texas tonight and is expected to change to sleet or snow before ending Friday. In West Texas, freezing rain is forecast from the mountains eastward and freezing rain will be changing to snow tonight and Friday in the Panhandle and South Plains.

The rest of the state will have cloudy skies, cold temperatures and windy conditions through Friday. The exceptions will be in extreme West Texas and in the Lower Rio Grande Valley where temperatures will remain well above freezing.

TV evangelists stamp 'seal of approval'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Religious broadcasters soon will be issuing their own equivalent of a Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval in a bid to restore credibility to an industry shaken by the PTL scandal.

The National Religious Broadcasters voted 324-6 on Wednesday to make compliance with a new financial and fund-raising code of ethics a requirement for membership in the group and use of its seal of accreditation.

The plan is in large part a response to the PTL scandal, which forced Jim Bakker to resign as head of the ministry that supported an extravagant lifestyle for him and his wife, Tammy Faye.

Ben Armstrong, executive director of the religious broadcasters' group, said the ethics code is intended to reassure donors who support broadcast ministries.

"We feel this will cause people to realize that we have nothing to hide and that we are fully disclosing finances and eliminating possible family control of boards and showing to the public we have open books and open policy," Armstrong said.

The association has 1,350 members that produce about three-quarters of all religious programming in the United States.

To be certified, members will have to submit independent audits each year disclosing all sources of income and every expenditure. The requirements are less stringent for smaller ministries.

The ministries also must make all the information, except for salaries, available to the public.

Members also must have a board with at least five directors, the majority of whom are not related to the ministry's executives and not on the ministry staff. Smaller ministries are exempt from the requirement, Armstrong said.

The code requires members to keep fund-raising materials for a year and submit samples upon request to the association's Ethics and Financial Integrity Commission, which administers policy on ethics and financial responsibility.

The commission will draft guidelines that will be used to evaluate ministries for accreditation, including reasonable salary levels, said NRB spokeswoman Audrey Langdon. The basis of the guidelines will be the Internal Revenue Service's requirements for tax exemption and the traditional practices of most ministries, she said.

The NRB's board of directors adopted the code last September, but compliance has been voluntary.

Phone-in tax return could speed up refund

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midlanders may now "reach out and touch" Internal Revenue Serivce tax return processors and get refunds back about three weeks earlier than those who mail the federal income tax documentation to the Austin Service Center.

Using the "Electronic Data Transfer" program, a taxpayer expecting a refund may go to an approved IRS preparer's office and have his tax information transmitted over a telephone computer modem to one of two EDT processing centers in Ogden, Utah, or Cinncinati, Ohio, an official said.

Those wanting to use the service should call 1-800-424-1040 to obtain the name of officially approved preparers in the Midland-Odessa area, said Carol Felber, an IRS official in Dallas.

The lag in getting an IRS refund back is not in preparation time, but rather in the time it takes to open, sort, edit, file and distribute tax returns at the Austin center, Ms. Felber explained.

Preparers transmitting the data take responsibility for mailing a copy of the taxpayers W-2 form to the Ogden, Utah, center where Midlanders' EDT returns will go, Ms. Felber said.

Another feature of the program is that a taxpayer may elect to have his refund deposited directly into his banking or savings account, she said.

This is the third year the program has been in effect in certain areas of the U.S., but the first time it has been in Texas.

Texas comprises three separate IRS districts, Ms. Felber said, and the EDT service is only available in the Northern Texas (Dallas) district which includes the Panhandle, Midland-Odessa and as far east as Texarkana, she said.

The other two Texas districts are not involved in the program yet.

Roughly 2,911,325 individual returns were filed in 1986 in the Northern Texas District last year, Ms. Felber said. About $2.3 million was distributed in refunds last year for the district, as well, she said.

Only those expecting a refund may use the service, she said, adding, "If you owe money, who cares how long it takes for the IRS to process it?"

The service will be available through the April 15, 1988, deadline, Ms. Felber said.

Any person using 1040 forms is eligible for the EDT program and errors are the responsibility of the preparer, she said.

Irish is promoted to publisher of San Antonio Light

NEW YORK — George B. Irish, 43, former publisher of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has been named publisher of the The San Antonio Light, succeeding William C. "Bill" Thomas, 61, who was publisher in Midland from 1979-82.

Irish, current publisher of the Beaumont Enterprise and Texas group publisher with responsibilities supervising Hearst newspapers in Midland, Laredo and Plainview, had served as chief executive of the Reporter-Telegram for three years prior to going to Beaumont.

He succeeds Thomas, who has been appointed senior associate publisher of The Light and will remain a Hearst executive for special assignments in San Antonio and elsewhere.

Both designations are effective March 1 and were announced jointly by Frank A. Bennack Jr., president and chief executive officer of the Hearst Corporation, and Robert J. Danzig, vice president and general manager of newspapers.

In making the announcement, Danzig said, "George Irish has a record of success in every assignment he has had. We have high confidence that his leadership qualities will benefit both the Light and the great city of San Antonio that it serves."

Continuing, Danzig added, "The stewardship of Bill Thomas has produced important strides for the Light. He has been an active citizen for San Antonio and in addition to his availability to the Light we look forward to utilizing him for corporate assignments as they arise."

Irish has been publisher of the Beaumont Enterprise since Hearst's acquisition of the newspaper in 1984.

Prior to that, he was publisher of the Reporter-Telegram. He is currently president of the Texas Daily Newspaper Association.

Federal Home Loan Bank chairman Dan Wall explains the board's 14-region "Southwest Plan" for alleviating problems for the region's ailing savings and loans.

Federal plan will cut third of Texas thrifts

By GREG STEINMETZ
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The number of savings and loans in Texas will be cut by a third under a plan federal regulators unveiled Wednesday to cure the state's ailing thrift industry.

The plan outlined by Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman M. Danny Wall calls for regulators to spend between $6 billion and $7 billion in the next two years to merge insolvent Texas savings and loans into larger institutions.

Regulators will spend another $2 billion a year subsidizing the merged institutions. Texas investors have offered a one-time contribution of $1 billion, and that money will probably be tapped, Wall said.

"Implementation of the plan will begin in a month," he said.

The consolidation, aimed at reduc ing costs and restoring profits, will reduce the number of savings and loans in Texas from 281 to between 100 and 160. The number of branches will drop from 1,900 to 1,400.

Bank Board officials have spoken with 40 Texas thrifts about merging over smaller institutions, and have asked for proposals on specific combinations. Regulators will try to avoid imposing unwanted mergers, Wall said.

But George Barclay, president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas, added that the Bank Board is in control" and will have the ultimate say in choosing which institu tions join with others. He said regulators will favor regional takeovers that make economic sense and minimize customer inconvenience.

NATION

A winter storm that brought snow, sleet and freezing rain to the Great Plains and Midwest moved across the Ohio Valley and Northeast today, and bitter cold followed in its wake.

Snowfall totals in northern Ohio ranged up to 6 inches at Sandusky by late Wednesday, with 5 inches at Cleveland. Up to 8 inches of snow was expected today in northern Ohio, more than 6 inches in southern New York state, up to 6 inches in northwestern Pennsylvania and 2 to 6 inches in eastern Pennsylvania.

Winter storm watches were in effect for much of New England and New York state, and people in Vermont were warned to expect up to 9 inches of snow.

Light snow continued to fall in Michigan today, and from Indiana to Missouri.

Freezing drizzle continued across parts of Arkansas and Texas. Rain and drizzle prevailed from southern Texas to the Carolinas and the middle Atlantic Coast states.

Ice formed by freezing drizzle caused accidents that closed major roads in Louisville this morning.

A flash flood watch was in effect for Shelbyville in north-central Kentucky, where a dam across Clear Creek was in danger of failing because of recent heavy rain. Some residents were evacuated.

While fair weather prevailed across most of the West, light snow fell in parts of western Montana and northern Wyoming today. An advisory for blowing and drifting snow was in effect in northwestern Montana.

Another surge of arctic air was expected to plunge southeastward out of Canada today and Friday, producing wind chill factors as cold as 75 degrees below zero in North Dakota.

In Minnesota, temperatures Friday through Sunday were expected to drop as low as 40 degrees below zero. Highs were forecast to range from 15 below in northern Minnesota to around zero in the south.

Temperatures were already below zero this morning across much of the area from Montana to Minnesota. Subfreezing temperatures extended from the high Plains to New England.

A cold front sagging southward across west-central Texas caused the temperature at Midland to drop from 77 degrees to 34 degrees in just three hours Wednesday evening.

Today's forecast called for snow widespread from New England across New York State and northern Pennsylvania into Indiana and Michigan; a mixture of rain, sleet or snow from eastern Kentucky to New Jersey and Long Island, N.Y.; rain from Virginia, Maryland and Delaware to the central Gulf Coast.

Nicaraguan leaders pleased by defeat

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The pro-government media today hailed U.S. congressional rejection of more Contra aid, but they said the Reagan administration was planning "new forms of aggression."

State-run Radio La Primerisima broadcast a call to the Contras to put down their arms following the rejection of $36.2 million for the Contras, which would have included $3.2 million in military funding.

"It's useless.... It is time to save your life," the radio said.

A six-column banner headline in Barricada, the newspaper of the ruling Sandinistas, read: "Reagan's Request For Funds Defeated." But above that the newspaper said: "The U.S. Administration Will Evaluate New Forms of Aggression Today."

The pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario ran a headline saying: "Peace Gains Points."

Rebel leaders said the 219-211 vote Wednesday by the House of Representatives could lead the leftist Sandinistas to demand that the Contras surrender when the warring sides meet for cease-fire talks next week.

The only immediate government reaction came from Carlos Tunnermann, Nicaragua's ambassador in Washington, who was quoted in Barricada as saying: "This is a congressional blow to the American policies in Central America."

Speaking by telephone to the government's Radio Santino immediately after the vote, Tunnermann said: "We hope that based on this vote we can move ahead with the Central American peace plan, end the war and fulfill in all good faith what the peace plan includes."

The plan, signed last summer by Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, Costa Rica and Honduras, calls for cease-fires, greater democracy and the end to outside aid for insurgencies in the region.

President Daniel Ortega had indicated that approval of aid could prompt the government to reverse steps it has taken to comply with the peace plan.

Tunnermann said the vote means "the House of Representatives gives recognition, a vote of support to the Central American peace plan, a negotiated alternative, the alternative of finding a solution through peaceful and civilized means."

Contra leader Alfonso Robelo, in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from his home in San Jose, Costa Rica, said the vote will weaken the rebels' negotiating position in cease-fire talks next week in Guatemala.

"The cease-fire is supposed to be a means to set the conditions so there will be democracy in Nicaragua," he said. "Obviously, now that the Sandinistas know of our weakness, they will be ready to settle only for a total defeat, for a surrender of our troops."

Robelo is one of six directors of the Contra umbrella organization known as the Nicaraguan Resistance.

"Now we feel that the burden is on the shoulders of (House) Speaker Jim Wright and the 219 representatives that voted against us," Robelo said. "They believed the dictator Ortega, so it is they, who without military pressure, have to make a communist dictator change from that to a democratic leader."

Asked if the Contras could survive long without more aid, Robelo replied: "There are fighters, units inside Nicaragua, that can survive, but obviously the amount of fighting, the degree of military pressure, is going to decrease drastically, especially after Feb. 29," when current aid runs out.

Contra fighters have been heavily resupplied in recent months, and military observers say their reserves could keep the rebels going for a year even without new aid.

Texans divided on aid issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is how Texas' delegation voted in Wednesday's 219-211 roll call by which the House rejected President Reagan's request for $36.2 million in aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

A "yes" vote is to approve the president's plan, a "no" vote is to reject it.

Voting yes were 47 Democrats and 164 Republicans.

Voting no were 207 Democrats and 12 Republicans.

xxx denotes those not voting.

There is one vacancy in the 435-member House.

Democratic leaders were jubilant. "Today's vote is the end of a chapter," said House Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif. "The Contra policy is the past."

Toward the end of 11 hours of emotional floor debate, Speaker Jim Wright of Texas appealed for a "no" vote on Contra aid in favor of support for diplomatic efforts by Central American leaders to arrange their own peace settlement.

"Mr. Reagan did not come to Washington to preside over Central America," Wright said.

House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., drew cheers from outgunned conservative GOP partisans when he declared that "the issue of Nicaragua and Central America will not go away."

"If you vote this package down, you better be prepared to bear the consequences, and who among you is smart enough to predict the path (Nicaraguan President) Daniel Ortega will take you?"

On the final vote, a dozen Republicans joined 207 Democrats in voting against Contra aid, while 164 Republicans and 47 Democrats backed Reagan's request.

The crucial swing votes were cast by moderate Southern Democrats such as Rep. Dan Mica of Florida, who cast his first direct vote against Contra aid after seven years of backing the rebel cause.

"It's time to put the Sandinistas to the test once and for all," Mica said. "Daniel Ortega now is about to be put to the test. If he fails, this Congress will support military aid. I'd say he has maybe two months."

Reagan said his request for $36.2 million through June was mostly for humanitarian aid to the Contras, including food, clothing and medical supplies. Some critics, however, said that was misleading because the so-called humanitarian portion also included money for helicopters, jeeps and military communications equipment.

Of the total, $3.6 million was specifically for lethal military aid — mostly ammunition — which would have been held in escrow until March 31 pending cease-fire negotiations between the Sandinistas and the Contras.

In a bid to win support of wavering House members, Reagan agreed to give Congress a role in deciding whether to release combat aid.

Prosecutors may seek Noriega drug indictment

MIAMI (AP) — The U.S. Attorney General's Office has given prosecutors here permission to seek a drug-trafficking indictment against Panamanian leader Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, and charges are expected to be announced by late Friday, sources said.

The expected indictment, which would culminate months of secret testimony to federal grand jurors, focuses on the role Noriega played in channeling money and drugs through Panama, according to the sources close the probe.

U.S. Attorney Leon Kellner is expected to announce the indictment Friday, sources who spoke on condition of anonymity told The Associated Press on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, The New York Times reported today that Lt. Col. Oliver North schemed with Noriega to ship East-bloc weapons to rebels in El Salvador and then seize them en route, making it look like an interrupted operation of the Nicaraguan government.

The alleged scheme put together by North, then a National Security Council aide, was revealed by Jose I. Blandon, recently dismissed by Noriega as consul general in New York, according to the newspaper.

The arms plot would have given the Reagan administration much-valued "proof" that Nicaragua was trying to export revolution. But before it could be carried out, Noriega seized the weapons in 1986 after a Times article linked him to drug smuggling and other criminal activities, the Times said.

Also today, the Washington Post reported that Blandon said North and Noriega planned secretly in 1985 to train Contra rebels in Panama and that 200 to 250 rebels were trained between July 1985 and May 1986.

Besides Kellner's probe, two U.S. Senate committees and the Tampa office of the U.S. Customs Service are investigating Noriega's alleged role in drug trafficking and schemes to disguise the profits.

The indictment is expected to be largely based on testimony of Blandon and another former Noriega associate: Floyd Carlton, Noriega's former personal pilot, government sources say.

Noriega and his spokesman, Maj. Edgardo Lopez, have denied accusations that the military strongman was paid off to protect drug smugglers. Lopez has accused U.S. "ultra-conservatives" of spreading such lies in efforts to scrap Panama Canal treaties under which the United States must abandon its military bases there by the year 2000.

Carlton, who was convicted of drug trafficking charges, has said he flew more than $1 million in bribes to Noriega from Colombia's violent Medellin cocaine cartel.

THRIFTS

Details of the plan have been coming out for weeks, but Wednesday's announcement before a packed auditorium at the Bank Board's offices here offered the first look at the scope of the agency's goals.

At the end of last year, 104 of the state's 281 savings and loans were insolvent, with another 39 on the brink. The crisis — brought on by deregulation, the collapse of the real estate market and mismanagement — came at a time when the fund that insures depositors' money was run ning low, and regulators were unable to keep pace with the problems.

Wall said he studied a number of solutions and decided the best route was to save money by consolidating institutions and branches. He said merging more than 100 thrifts out of existence and closing branches will slash administrative overlap and staffing, the largest overhead item for a thrift. With subsidies, he said, the program will make ailing thrifts profitable.

The plan accelerates a merger trend already under way, said Wall. "It is not something we are imposing on the market, but something that is already occuring."

Depositors will, in some cases, be transferred to a new location. They will also discover that after the program gathers steam, they won't earn as much on newly purchased certificates of deposit. An important goal of the program is to reduce the high interest rates being paid for deposits statewide, which are pushing many thrifts deeper into the red.

Wall said the program also achieves his other goal of maintaining competition. Reiterating earlier comments, he said no thrift will have offices statewide. He identified 14 regions in the state and said he doubted any savings and loan created under the plan would have a presence in more than five.

U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, has said he feared consolidation would squeeze small savings and loans. But Wall stressed that small thrifts are also invited to submit merger plans. He said he envisions small savings and loans, those with less than $100 million in assets, accounting for a greater per centage of surviving thrifts than they do today.

"Wall gave into the political pressure," said one industry official.

News of the plan won immediate praise from politicians. Although Congress does not have to vote on the plan, lawmaker support is considered critical inenacting the proposal because of its size.

"There is no easy answer to the problems facing the Texas savings and loans," said Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas. "The plan which has been laid out should expedite a resolution of the problem."

"The savings and loan industry is important, and all efforts are helpful," said a spokesman for Gov. Bill Clements. A report from a governor's task force last month endorsed consolidation as the best way to resolve the crisis.

Industry leaders also endorsed the plan.

"I think this is definitely feasible and a necessary step," said Jenard Gross, chairman of Houston's United Savings, the state's largest thrift.

"I think we are all disappointed that there weren't more details," said S. Don Norris, chairman of Commonwealth Savings in Houston, "but they really couldn't do that. It is so large it has to be executed care fully."

Although institutions are asked to submit their own ideas, the mergers will probably follow the example of four Louisiana thrifts that the Bank Board merged before the end of last year, Wall said.

The four institutions were consoli dated into one with the FSLIC contribution capital to the thrift and as suming its bad loans. Although some of the subsidy was cash, most came in the form of a note. The Bank Board intends to use notes — long term debt — to stretch out its with ered insurance fund.

In exchange, the Bank Board will get a share of any profits the thrift makes and will eventually own a minority stake. Management was retained in the Louisiana case de spite the thrifts being insolvent.

Wall said the first Texas transaction will come within 30 days, while Barclay said between 30 and 60 days.

"I think they will be slow in getting out of the gate, but once they get going, the pace will accelerate," Gross said.

Wall first mentioned the Texas Plan, sometimes called the Southwest Plan, in November at a savings and loan convention in New Orleans. He hired veteran banker Ellis "Bud" Gravette to study the problem and come up with recommendations. The results were scheduled to come out in early January.

Industry executives said Wednesday that they don't believe the Bank Board will face much resistance. "We're willing to play along," Norris said.

"If we go to them with 25 thrifts and they come back with five, some of which we like less than others, I think we would still go along," said Paul Yates, president of University Savings in Houston.

Postage-due income tax form adds insult to injury

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A man who was enraged when he received a tax form postage due from the Internal Revenue Service says he's satisfied now that officials have confessed to an error.

Henry Kundert, a retired engineer who spends his winters in Tucson and has his mail forwarded from his home near Milwaukee, said Wednesday that a U.S. Postal Service spokesman promised him a refund of the 39-cent postage.

The estimated tax payment form was mailed bulk rate from the IRS office in Florence, Ky., and arrived last week at the Spanish Trail Inn, where Kundert stays. A desk clerk paid the 39 cents and Kundert reimbursed the motel. But he stewed over the principle.

"I want to tell the government what a rotten bunch of dummies they are," he said last week.

Robert Turner, communications manager for the postal service in Tucson, said, "There should never have been 39 cents charged to that man. We do not forward any bulk mail postage due."

Turner confirmed that Kundert could have a refund, adding, "I can certainly appreciate his feelings on it. I'm sure I'd feel just about the same way. Like everybody else, I've had my difficulties with Uncle's folks at the IRS. I'm not sure I'd be thrilled about getting a piece of postage-due mail from 'em."

Couple forced to move with pet pigs

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Raymond and Debbie Sattler are taking their pair of 400-pound pet pigs and bidding farewell to neighbors in their exclusive neighborhood who didn't take a shine to swine.

"The neighbors are rubbing our faces in the dirt," said Raymond Sattler, as Amy Lou and Ellie Mae rubbed their snouts against the floor of their bedroom.

"We're really sad," he added. "I'll grant you they are unusual pets, but we wanted to set up a medical practice here."

Sattler, a neurosurgeon whose wife is his nurse, said last week they're selling their house and will return with the pigs to their home on five acres outside of Lumberton. The Sattlers also plan to buy a house on a 10-acre tract outside Fayetteville so he can resume his practice there.

Several of his neighbors launched a campaign to oust the pigs by urging the city council to adopt a new ordinance banning hogs in residential areas.

The Sattlers received national attention in March 1986 when they held a debutante ball for Norma Jean, a 600-pound Duroc who was featured in The Wall Street Journal and on network television shows Norma Jean also met syndicated humor columnist Erma Bombeck.

Amy Lou and Ellie Mae are cleaned every day with shampoo, sprayed with perfume and fed from a 50-pound bag of grain and other nutrients.

'Kimchi' way of life for Koreans

By BARRY RENFREW

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Yoo Sung-ran beamed as she plunged her hands into a bowl brimming with mashed red peppers, garlic and onions while her sisters cut up a mountain of cabbages.

The three women chatted and joked as they worked, their breaths turning to mist in the early winter morning.

It was the time to make kimchi, the pickled cabbage that accompanies almost every meal in Korea, igniting the entire digestive system and setting up a defense against cold winter nights.

"It's an important part of being Korean. It's part of our life," said the 62-year-old Mrs. Yoo as she folded cabbage leaves filled with spices into neat parcels.

She's been making kimchi for 44 years, she said.

Other groups of women were busy nearby in the courtyard of the apartment building, sorting out piles of cabbage that had been soaked overnight in salt water.

"It is the duty of every housewife to make kimchi," Mrs. Yoo explained as she worked.

A housewife greeted her neighbors and joked about being the last to start making kimchi as she returned home followed by two sweating workers pushing a cart stacked with 100 cabbages.

Trucks loaded with cabbage sped past in the street and mounds of cabbage were stacked on almost every street corner.

The beginning of winter is the signal for "kimjang," the season when almost every household in the country is busy making kimchi for the cold months ahead.

At the Garak-dong vegetable market, one of several in the city, officials said they get almost 100,000 people a day buying more than 3 million pounds of cabbage during kimjang.

Mrs. Yoo stuffed a wad of kimchi into her cheek and talked about the pained reaction of unsuspecting foreigners when they first sample kimchi.

"You people can't take it," she chortled to a Westerner.

The busy housewives passed out samples of their kimchi to neighbors and passers-by as the powerful aroma of spices filled the courtyard. Mrs. Yoo and her friends chatted about their own kimchi recipes that had been passed down in their families for generations.

But Mrs. Yoo said she had to admit that the art of kimchi making isn't what it used to be. Real kimchi must be buried in clay pots in the earth for several weeks to ferment, she said.

Many Koreans live in high-rise apartments with no place to bury kimchi. So younger housewives often use specially designed plastic fermentation pots that are put on balconies.

"It's not the same," said Mrs. Yoo. "No question. You want good kimchi, you have to bury it in the ground."

Even more worrying, she added, is the way the tastes of some young Koreans are changing because of Western influence; they prefer hamburgers.

"Kimchi is our main dish," she declared with a wag of her finger. "We have to have it with every meal."

hich'hik'

hitchhike — (verb) In many states, it is illegal to "hitchhike." To "hitchhike" is to obtain free rides from passing vehicles. You've doubtless seen "hitchhikers" — people with an extended thumb standing along roadways. The "hitchhiker" literally "thumbs" a ride to his or her destination. "Hitchhiker" is a compound word joining "hitch," meaning the act or fact of catching hold of something, and "hike," meaning to move, pull or raise. Hitchhiking is often illegal because stopping cars impede traffic flow. Also, some strangers — drivers or hitchhikers — can be dangerous.

CONTACT LENS WEARERS

Do Your Contact Lenses (Or the price you pay) Make You See Red?

Hi, I'm Dr. Darryl Rosson and I have fun designing and fitting contact lenses. I took my doctorate from the University of Houston in 1982 graduating fifth out of a class of 116. I came to Midland with the idea of providing the highest possible quality of eyecare at affordable cost to the patient. The most honest and straight-forward way that I could think of to practice was to charge an affordable fee for my services and to make lenses available to my patients at wholesale costs. For the past year my patients have purchased lenses through my office at wholesale list cost for a modest handling fee of $7.50 per lens.

Such affordable fees as $128.00 for Hydrocurve daily wear or $136.00 for Bausch and Lomb extended wear lenses complete with all my care, have led to some phone calls asking about "the catch." Many satisfied patients can now tell you that the only "catch" is that a doctor is trying to provide the most excellent care of which he is capable in as honest and fair a way as he can.

I'm having fun learning more about eyes and contact lenses every day. The new materials we have now available to work with are great. All contact lenses require a doctor's prescription so give me a call. I'd be happy to call you back in the evening and visit with you about your eye problems

Give me a call today!

Bush won't distance himself from remark; Dole faces questions

NATION

Associated Press

George Bush said today he wouldn't dissociate himself from an aide's accusatory comments that had brought an apology demand from rival presidential candidate Bob Dole.

"These things happen in campaigns," said Bush, who was campaigning in Clinton, Iowa.

Dole, meanwhile, was facing new questions about the activities of a former aide, and the Democratic presidential field was rejoicing at the House rejection of President Reagan's request for aid for the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

"I just hope now this administration will respect this vote and get behind the peace process as it should have from the very beginning," said Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, campaigning in Iowa.

Bush said today he was disappointed in the House vote but still hoped another aid package for the Contras could be assembled and approved.

Asked about remarks made by his Iowa campaign manager George Wittgraf, who accused Dole of "cronyism," Bush said "I don't reject" the comment.

Bush said he didn't endorse Wittgraf's comments but wouldn't dissociate himself from them either. "I have just stood there and taken a pounding from those other campaigns. I'm staying out of all that," he said.

Former television evangelist Pat Robertson appeared poised to score a success heading into Monday's Iowa caucuses. He was expected to emerge the winner in a non-binding GOP straw poll in Hawaii tonight, after his supporters recruited thousands of new party members in the state.

Bush was in Iowa on Wednesday as a House committee disclosed new information in its probe of the activities of former Dole aide John Palmer.

The panel, which had said a day earlier that Dole was apparently not personally involved in helping Palmer's company obtain a government contract, said Wednesday that Dole had called the head of the Small Business Administration in 1983 to ask for help in the matter.

Dole said he did not remember making the call, but added: "It doesn't bother me any. I haven't done anything wrong."

Dole spokesman Walt Riker said Dole's office often helped Kansas constituents seeking help in dealing with government agencies.

Possible wrongdoing in the awarding of the $26 million no-bid contract is being investigated by the SBA and the FBI.

Bush didn't mention Dole by name, but said in a speech that "the spirit of idealism" must guide government officials.

"I believe that public service is a public trust," he told students at Cornell College. "It breaks my heart when I see local officials ripping somebody off...or members of Congress under investigation."

Wittgraf, Bush's Iowa campaign manager, leveled the cronyism charge. In a statement, he also found fault with Dole's disposition, calling the Kansas senator "mean-spirited."

Dole, speaking at Waldorf College in Iowa, responded: "I've got a guy out here smearing me." He said he wanted an apology from the Bush camp.

All the candidates were working hard to put the best possible face on whatever outcome of the Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary, eight days later.

Dukakis, strongly favored among Democrats in New Hampshire but seen as facing a tough three-way fight in Iowa, played down his chances in the precinct caucuses.

"If I came in second I'd be very happy," Dukakis told reporters after a speech at Drake University. "I'm the one guy of the three who doesn't come from next door." Rep. Richard Gephardt is from Missouri and Sen. Paul Simon is from Illinois.

Contra aid vote 'haunted' crucial congressmen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crucial swing voters in the House decision on Contra aid say they were torn and even "haunted" by the prospect that a wrong decision could destroy the fledgling Central American peace process.

The swing voters are the approximately three dozen lawmakers who knew their votes would decide the outcome of President Reagan's $36.2 million aid package.

More importantly, they felt the pressure of a decision that could determine whether the people of Nicaragua will have peace or more war.

"The risk of destroying the peace process by including military aid continued to haunt me," said Rep. H. Martin Lancaster, D-N.C., who gambled that a vote against the aid was the right thing to do.

Although he joined the majority in the 219-211 vote against the Contra assistance, he said he would have voted for a package without lethal aid. Such a package is expected to be presented to the House as a Democratic alternative later this month.

Reagan's package included $3.6 million in "lethal" assistance, primarily ammunition but also anti-aircraft missiles.

Rep. Lindy Boggs, D-La., said she was "torn" while wrestling with her decision, which she said was not made until the moment she cast her vote against the package.

"It was a gamble — what best would keep the feet of the Sandinistas to the fire," she said. "I'd been grappling with it for three or four days."

Mrs. Boggs said she was finally influenced by the appeal from Central American peace negotiators, led by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, for a halt in U.S. aid for the Contras.

Rep. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, saw the same gamble but came to the opposite conclusion.

"I supported the aid package because I believe that it would have provided the leverage necessary to keep the Sandinistas at the bargaining table and for them to abide by their commitment to reforms," she said. "To propose doing nothing, which is what the Democrats offered, is to accept whatever consequences may ensue from the actions of the Sandinistas."

Rep. Elizabeth Patterson, D-S.C., was lobbied by the president, top White House aides and Secretary of State George Shultz. But she said these pep talks are not what persuaded her to support the package.

Rep. Dan Mica, who turned against Contra aid after seven years of supporting it, gambled not only on the peace process but also perhaps on his political future.

The Florida Democrat may be a candidate for the Senate seat that Sen. Lawton Chiles, also a Democrat, is vacating in a state with large numbers of vehement anti-communists from Cuba and Central America.

"It's time to put the Sandinistas to the test once and for all," he said. "If these negotiations are not successful, there will be no roadblocks to voting for aid.

"The president made a strategic mistake bringing this up in the middle of the peace process. (Nicaraguan President) Daniel Ortega now is about to be put to the test. If he fails, this Congress will support military aid. I'd say he has maybe two months."

Gen. Singlaud to solicit donations for Contras

TABERNASH, Colo. (AP) — Retired Gen. John Singlaub said he will ask for donations and sell war bonds to raise money for the Contras, now that Congress has killed President Reagan's military aid proposal for the Nicaraguan rebels.

In a telephone interview at his home in Tabernash, Singlaub said Wednesday the Iran-Contra hearings will make it harder to raise money than before.

"It is going to be very, very difficult because of the embarrassment created by the public hearings of the select committee of Congress last summer, when U.S. donors were called before that committee and publicly humiliated," Singlaub said.

"They, of course, would be reluctant to subject themselves to that type of treatment again."

But he said support for the Contras, who are trying to overthrow the leftist Nicaraguan government, remains strong.

"There are millions of people who feel strongly that we cannot in our own national security interests allow the Soviets to establish the bases that they are developing now in Nicaragua," he said.

In Washington, the House late Wednesday voted 219-211 to cut off U.S. military support for the Contras, rejecting Reagan's aid request, in the hope of spurring peace prospects in Central America.

Despite 'scars,' surrogate mother happy with court's ruling

AP Laserphoto

Mary Beth Whitehead-Gould joins attorney Harold Cassidy at a Red Bank, N.J., news conference after Wednesday's state supreme court ruling.

RED BANK, N.J. (AP) — Hours after the state Supreme Court affirmed her right to visit the child she bore for another couple, surrogate mother Mary Beth Whitehead-Gould said she was glad "the months of uncertainty" have ended.

"There are scars there that will never really heal. But I'm very happy," said Mrs. Whitehead-Gould, who alternately wept and smiled broadly during a news conference after the decision was announced Wednesday.

She said she was "delighted" the court ruled she will be able to visit the child once known as Baby M, but that the long legal battle over custody and the legitimacy of surrogate parenting took its emotional toll.

"It has changed all of our lives," she said.

In February 1985, Mrs. Whitehead-Gould agreed to accept $10,000 to be artificially inseminated with the sperm of William Stern of Tenafly and bear a child for him and his wife, Elizabeth.

When the girl was born 22 months ago, Mrs. Whitehead-Gould changed her mind, refused the money and fled to Florida. Authorities tracked her down after nearly three months and returned the child to the Sterns.

Mrs. Whitehead-Gould, who lives in East Brunswick, thanked the Supreme Court for voiding the surrogacy contract and restoring her parental rights over her daughter, whom she calls Sara but the Sterns have named Melissa.

Meanwhile, operators of surrogacy centers say the court's landmark ruling in the Baby M case won't put them out of business, but opponents hailed it as a major blow to the practice of paying women to bear children.

Politicians, legal scholars and an attorney in the case said Wednesday's decision, which equated surrogacy for profit with illegal baby-selling, shows that state statutes don't apply to the practice.

"It puts the burden back to the legislatures" to regulate it, said Lori Andrews, a researcher with the American Bar Association. "In the meantime, it continues to leave hundreds of people participating in these arrangements in a legal vacuum."

"If I were running a surrogate-mother agency, I'd find something else to do in a hurry," said Angela R. Holder, a professor of pediatrics law at the Yale University Medical School.

Steven C. Litz, director of Surrogate Mothers Inc. in Indiana, said, "I've always told and still tell my clients that the contracts are probably unenforceable, and the New Jersey Supreme Court's decision confirms that.

"But whether the contracts are enforceable or not just isn't that important because first of all, in 99 percent of the cases everything works fine," he said.

However, Ms. Holder said that if other state courts follow the lead of the New Jersey court, the first state supreme court to rule on a broken surrogacy contract, lawyers who arrange such contracts would be unable to obtain malpractice insurance.

The court's 7-0 decision overruled all but the custody decision of a lower court judge in invalidating the $10,000 contract between Ms. Whitehead-Gould and the Sterns.

"This is the sale of a child, or, at the very least, the sale of a mother's right to her child, the only mitigating factor being that one of the purchasers is the father," Chief Justice Robert N. Wilentz wrote in the decision.

"It guarantees the separation of a child from its mother; it looks to adoption regardless of suitability; it totally ignores the child; it takes the child from the mother regardless of her wishes and her maternal fitness; and it does all of this, it accomplishes all of its goals, through the use of money," said the court.

The judges did not, however, rule out voluntary surrogacy.

Abandoned girl gets artificial 'training' legs

CHICAGO (AP) — Darlwin Carlisle, the 9-year-old Gary, Ind., girl whose frostbitten legs were amputated below the knee after she was found in the locked attic of an abandoned home, was fitted Wednesday for artificial legs.

"She won't be up on them today as we had hoped. It will probably be Friday now before she starts to take her first steps," said Kris Bangert, spokeswoman at La Rabida Children's Hospital and Research Center.

"It was a beautiful thing. Her prosthetist had her help him smooth the molding on her legs. It helps her deal with reality."

The temporary artificial limbs, or training legs, consist of a metal pipe and plastic foot. Darlwin will be fitted with permanent, detailed artificial legs within six weeks.

"The training legs are not attractive, but they are very functional," Bangert said. "They are similar to training wheels on a bike. Her first day on them will be to experience bearing weight and regaining her sense of balance."

The girl was found in a Gary attic Jan. 17. Doctors believe she had been locked inside for several days. Her lower legs were amputated Jan. 21.

Her mother, Darlwin Britt, 24, remains in jail on $50,000 bail on felony charges of child neglect. Police said Ms. Britt locked her daughter in the attic.

North linked to Noriega

NEW YORK (AP) — Lt. Col. Oliver North schemed with Panamanian leader Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega to ship East-bloc weapons to rebels in El Salvador and then seize them en route, making it look like an interrupted operation of the Nicaraguan government, a newspaper reported today.

The alleged scheme put together by North, then a National Security Council aide, was revealed by Jose I. Blandon, recently dismissed by Noriega as consul general in New York, according to The New York Times.

Also today, the Washington Post reported that Blandon said the two men planned secretly in 1985 to train Contra rebels in Panama and that 200 to 250 rebels were trained between July 1985 and May 1986.

Both papers said that in return for help against Nicaragua's government at a time when the administration was legally barred from extending military aid to the rebels, Panama got U.S. support for loans to help relieve its debt.

Lawyers for North, who is under investigation for possible criminal activities, refused to comment on the case. The State Department would not comment on any links between Panama and the Contras.

Defector paid $800,000

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former Nicaraguan official whose defection was described by President Daniel Ortega as "the most important betrayal" of the Sandinista regime will receive $800,000 in compensation from the United States, according to a published report today.

The payment to Roger Miranda Bengoechea, 35, compares with the $300,000 to $400,000 the CIA generally pays high-level defectors, apparently reflecting the administration's appreciation of Miranda's defection and his performance since then, The Washington Post said. The newspaper cited unidentified congressional sources for the information.

Miranda had been a top aide to Nicaraguan Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, the president's brother.

Since his defection last Oct. 25, Miranda has denounced Nicaragua's leftist government in dozens of interviews and news conferences, alleging that the Sandinistas plan to use the Central American peace plan as a cover to consolidate power and defeat the Contra rebels.

The newspaper said an administration official confirmed the general outlines of the payment to Miranda but said the agreement was tentative and could change slightly.

Would-be robber kills self

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (AP) — A 27-year-old man distraught over money problems fatally shot himself in the head after being thwarted during a bank robbery and briefly holding six hostages inside the vault, authorities said.

Gary Joseph Killeen shot himself Wednesday after a six-hour standoff with police, said Police Chief Neil Nightingale.

Killeen had spent time in jail in Florida for a burglary and was upset at the prospect of returning to prison and about his financial troubles, Nightingale said.

Revolutionary War lessons valid today

Historians have noted that one of the best advantages American colonists wielded over British forces in the Revolutionary War was their unconventional fighting tactics.

The British marched in formation, knelt and fired in the typical, formal style of that era. The colonists, on the other hand, didn't march in formation much, instead preferring to hide behind ground cover such as rocks and trees, and delighting in catching the British unaware.

The warfare tactic was unconventional and highly effective. It was a tactic the colonists learned from native Indians. And more than a few historians have credited that style of warfare as one of the major reasons the colonists were able to defeat the British.

Now it appears that American allies in Latin America are falling victim to the same unconventional mode of fighting that defeated the British more than 200 years ago.

U.S. military officers and civilian experts say insurgencies in that region of the world pose a serious threat to U.S. national security interests because they are poorly understood by the bureaucrats within the military establishment.

"We're not used to acting with these long, ugly, socially unacceptable wars that don't fit in with our perceptions of conventional warfare," noted Col. Ed Smith, who heads a group called SWORD operating under the U.S. Southern Command.

Another observer, Col. John Waghelstein, a former U.S. Military Group commander in El Salvador, noted: "Wars like this go against our culture. We want short, violent wars with a clear middle, end, and a victory parade. Patience is not our strong suit."

They're right, of course. But, unfortunately, it seems that — beginning with the Korean War — those protracted, unpredictable wars have been the kind this country has been facing. And likely will continue facing in the future.

It looks as though we were unwise to forget the lessons learned more than 200 years ago in our own Revoluntionary War. We seem to be the ones marching in formation today.

Here's plan for IRS

I've got the perfect plan to erase our federal deficit without raising taxes, user fees, or any of the so-called revenue enhancement plans referred to by our politicians. Let's have the IRS steal it! Here's the scenario:

First, find an independent small businessman in the oil industry (he's so busy trying to make an honest living with the price of oil crashing that he won't have the time or money to fight the IRS).

Second, have the IRS send him completed tax forms prepared by them showing that he had employees that he never had, therefore owing taxes that he never paid plus penalties for not filing and late charges. It's a good plan because how is he going to prove he didn't have these employees. He can send all the letters he wants with all the documentation to back him up, trying to prove he had no employees. But the IRS is so big they can't lose. How can a small businessman fight them?

Third, go to the independent businessman's bank and show them a piece of paper showing he didn't pay his taxes and the bank will write the IRS a cashier's check debiting the businessman's account and the businessman won't even know about it. Oh sure, he'll find out that the money was withdrawn when he gets his bank statement, but that will be days later and the IRS can stall the repayment for who knows how long.

Fourth, be ready to be attacked. The businessman will be outraged and he may call the IRS to complain. If so, the IRS can shuffle him around for a few days, realizing he is having to spend otherwise productive hours away from his business while trying to get his money back. If he mails information to the IRS they can claim that it got lost in the mail and they never received anything and delay it even further. If the businessman persists and can prove he didn't have any employees, the IRS can admit they made a mistake and they will try and get the money back. The IRS can keep the money for at least three months and maybe a few years and earn the interest on the money for the time period they do keep it. What else can that poor businessman do to get his money back?

It is a perfect plan. The businessman is too small and too busy to fight the IRS and they win by default. There are lots of businessmen that fit this mold and I suggest we implement this plan immediately. Who knows, in a year or two the deficit will be gone.

I know this plan will work because it is happening to me. In the time it took me to write this letter, the IRS did it again, but the amount they stole was 10 times greater.

ABC deceiving public

It is deceiving that ABC television promotes for its viewing audience a Woman of the Week who is the spokesman for an organization called Center For Constitutional Rights, which is a subsidiary of the parent organization Lawyers Guild. Lawyers Guild has been named as a Communist front. The person's name is Margaret Ratner.

It is unfortunate that ABC does not give the background of these people in order that they do not mislead their viewers.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Feb. 4, the 35th day of 1988. There are 331 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 4, 1783, Britain declared a formal cessation of hostilities with its former colony, the United States of America.

On this date:

In 1789, presidential electors unanimously chose George Washington to be the first chief executive of the United States.

In 1801, John Marshall was sworn in as chief justice of the United States.

In 1861, delegates from six southern states met in Montgomery, Ala., to form the Confederate States of America.

In 1932, New York Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt opened the Winter Olympic Games at Lake Placid.

In 1938, Thornton Wilder's play "Our Town" opened on Broadway.

In 1941, the United Service Organization, better known as the USO, was founded.

In 1945, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Soviet leader Josef Stalin began a wartime conference at Yalta.

In 1975, more than 22,000 people died when a severe earthquake struck Guatemala and Honduras.

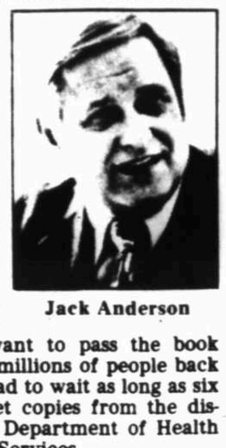
Officials delay candid AIDS book

WASHINGTON — If education is our best bet to stop the spread of AIDS, why is the government trying to shelve its most candid and informative booklet on the subject?



Jack Anderson

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's detailed booklet on the disease has won much praise since he published it a year ago. Yet, members of Congress who want to pass the book along to the millions of people back home have had to wait as long as six months to get copies from the distributor, the Department of Health and Human Services.

Democratic Congresswoman Barbara Boxer, who represents part of the San Francisco Bay area, first asked for copies of Koop's book last July. She got them in December. Other representatives have complained of similar delays.

Boxer thinks the holdup is the fault of White House conservatives and Health and Human Services officials who consider Koop's book too candid. "They do not like that booklet. It is too explicit and too direct," said Boxer. "We only have one vaccine for AIDS and that vaccine is education."

Boxer has asked the General Accounting Office to look into the situation.

Our associate Stewart Harris asked the Department of Health and Human Services about the delays. A spokesman said the biggest problem was with contractors who handle printing for the Government Printing Office. Only about 250,000 copies can be printed in a week, according to Health and Human Services.

But we found that the glitch is not in the printing. Rather, the printing office did not receive a single order from Health and Human Services during June and the first three weeks of July. When the printers finally did get orders, they turned them around in as little as three days. The longest the printing office took to deliver Koop's 36-page book after receiving an order was 30 days. Sometimes the printing office expedited the delivery by sending out partial orders while the remainder was still being printed.

To date, the Department of Health and Human Services has made 14 different orders for the pamphlet. Last spring and early summer, as the requests from Congress were piling up, Health and Human Services had ordered just a little more than 3 million copies.

It was not until Aug. 8, 1987 — well after most representatives had asked for copies — that the printing office received its biggest order — a request for 6.7 million copies of Koop's report.

The first copies rolled off the presses three days later, and all of them had been printed by the end of September. It seems the presses run more smoothly than Health and Human Services will admit.

Unfortunately for Koop's pamphlet, the political wheel of fortune has never turned as easily. Right-wing opposition to the report is widespread. Many conservatives don't like Koop's frank, commonsense approach to AIDS prevention. He openly advocates the use of condoms.

Secretary of Education William Bennett, one of the most conservative members of President Reagan's cabinet, has gone so far as to put out his own booklet, which urges minors to abstain from sex. Bennett's pamphlet advocates "sexuality in the context of marriage."

The Center for Disease Control, which is under the Department of Health and Human Services, has hinted that it doesn't like Koop's report either. When the CDC was deciding whether to mail AIDS information to every American household, a July 28 memo from the CDC to Health and Human Services noted that one disadvantage of not doing the mailing would be that it "might further stimulate congressional distribution of the Surgeon General's report."

Assistant Health Secretary Robert E. Windom announced last week that the nationwide mailing will begin this summer. Other officials indicated the booklet is still being drafted and will stress the importance of abstinence before marriage and faithfulness after. Individuals who cannot restrict their sexual activity within the context of marriage will be advised to use condoms.

There has been no suggestion that Koop's booklet might be used.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The State Department recently established diplomatic ties with Mongolia, but those diplomats didn't just fall off the turnip truck. They decided the ambassador to Mongolia won't actually have to live in Mongolia. The chosen ambassador will work out of Washington. After all, there is nothing to do in Mongolia except drink fermented milk and fight frostbite. The State Department may be on to something here. Why not save money by keeping all our diplomats in Washington? We can see only one drawback. Who would carry the suitcases when members of Congress go abroad? We would suggest the Mongolia experiment as a test of whether the lawmakers can carry their own luggage, but we suspect most of them will continue their on-site inspections of such international hot spots as London, Paris and Rome.

GEORGE F. WILL

Study of extinctions showing survivability

HOUSTON — In the old mansion that houses the Lunar and Planetary Institute, next door to NASA, Buck Sharpton, a scientist in a tweed jacket and blue jeans, spreads a map of the world marked with 116 small circles. It tells a story of past excitements and denotes a current controversy.

George F. Will

The hotly disputed hypothesis is that the evolution of life on Earth has been marked by radical disjunctions, particularly one 65 million years ago, because of collisions of Earth with comets or other extraterrestrial material. What is not disputed is that 65 million years ago there were mass extinctions that included dinosaurs.

It is unclear how abrupt the disappearance of the dinosaurs was and, in any case, they were cumbersome and not numerous, so they were inherently vulnerable. However, there are at least five models of how the extinctions could have occurred.

The impact might have churned up dust sufficient to block sunlight, impede photosynthesis and thus cause starvation of many creatures. Or the dust might have caused a glacial episode by screening sunlight. Or perhaps the opposite occurred: Dust and water vapor caused a "greenhouse effect," holding in heat and cooking much life out of the planet. Or the entering entity might have heated the atmosphere around it enough to generate nitric acid, and worldwide acid rain. (However, it would have been traveling up to 90 kilometers a second, so it might not have spent enough time in the atmosphere to alter the atmosphere.) Or the entity could have carried a toxic agent. (Cyanide, for example, is common in comets.)

Tantalizing evidence abounds. In a geological formation in Italy, there is a knife-edge-thin layer of clay between large slices of gray limestone that may be a residue of a catastrophe. It contains 30 times the normal amount of iridium, an element abundant in meteorites. Similar formations have been found in Spain, New Zealand and Denmark. Furthermore, there is a suggestive distribution of 65-million-year-old "shock crystals" that could have been formed and scattered by a collision.

An impact by a body at least 10 kilometers in diameter, creating a crater 200 kilometers in diameter, would be necessary to create the iridium anomaly. But if that happened, where? Geological analysis has ruled out Hudson's Bay, the mouth of the St. Lawrence and the curved western shore of the Gulf of Mexico as impact structures.

Anyway, gravitational stresses (gravity distorts the moon's shape) probably would break up something that size as it approached Earth. So scientists are interested in "paired" craters, such as several pairs that exist in the Soviet Union. When the two Soviet pairs are plotted in relation with something interesting in Iowa, the five phenomena fall within 12 degrees of an arc across the arctic, perhaps the path of impacts from a disintegrating body.

Iowa is, of course, the lever that moves the political world. It also once was the site of an event even more earthshaking than the nominating caucuses: an impact that produced the "Manson structure," about 25 miles in diameter near Manson.

The water under most of Iowa is hard because of the limestone through which it is filtered. The water within the Manson structure is soft because (so the theory goes) the limestone was blasted away by the impact and replaced by other material churned up from a great depth.

Craters become buried or otherwise obscured, planed off by erosion and filled in by sedimentation as a result of wind, rain and other surface activities (including, in Iowa, the heavy tread of herds of candidates). The Manson structure is not visible even from high overhead.

Some scientists argue, vehemently, that there are no known events in the natural history of the Earth that can not be explained in terms of the Earth's own activities, such as volcanoes. Furthermore, there recently has been a discovery of many dinosaur fossils at high altitudes along Alaska's North Slope. Temperatures there were milder in the dinosaurs' days than today, but the fossils prove that dinosaurs lived in a place where there was the total darkness of a polar winter for months at a stretch, longer (it is surmised) than the screen of sunlight caused by any comet's impact.

The scientific inquiry into catastrophes and extinctions is of no immediately practical application, is in large measure your tax dollars at work, and should be pleasing to you.

From the inquiry, we will learn much about the evolution of the universe, and already it is intimating two interesting, even moving, ideas.

One is that Earth is not just a cinder in a void: There is considerable interaction among entities in our solar system. And the fact that life of any sort has survived the Earth's episodes of violence is a stirring testimony to the imperative of life.

Super Bowl talk calms 'beast' — sometimes!

Now that the Super Bowl is history I would like to have the last word on what it all means. Although some people (with inferior teams) have mixed feelings about the game, it does serve a purpose. It allows those who would otherwise be normal American men and women an opportunity to let off just enough steam so they won't kill each other. Football is the great leveler in all our lives — possibly the only thing that separates us from four-legged animals.

Art Buchwald

Let me give you an example of why I believe pro football, with all its faults, should not be abolished.

Last Monday I arrived at National Airport and was placed by a dispatcher in a beat-up taxi cab, driven by a giant of a man with deep black eyes, a beard and two gold front teeth. For those who do not have opportunities to take our taxis at National Airport, the majority of drivers are shipped to Washington by camel dealers from the Third World. The cabbies are not only unable to find an address in Washington, they can't find one in the Third World. Because they don't know where they're going, they turn around and stare at you while they drive very fast.

When I gave Attila my address he spat out the window, cursed in what I thought was a Khomeini accent, and headed into the highway traffic at 70 miles an hour.

I knew to save my life I had to do something fast. "How did you like Doug Williams' passing at the Super Bowl?" I asked him.

He spat out the window again, "We killed them. The Denver defense couldn't cover Sanders and Clark at the same time."

"You can say that again," I said, noticing him thaw in front of my eyes. He had even slowed down to 60. "Dexter Manley earned his keep."

"You can say that again," the driver said. "But the real credit has to go to Joe Gibbs."

By the time we got to the special teams you would have thought we had shared the same locker at Forest Hills High School. My driver turned into a teddy bear and even stopped for a red light. Here we were, two strangers from two different cultures, one from the first world and the other from the Third World, and the only thing that could have brought us together was the Super Bowl. It was a miracle.

Football does not only bring taxi drivers and their fares together. It also stops strife in the family. There is a male cousin in our family whom I find it hard to spend more than 10 minutes with. If it weren't for football I'm not sure what would happen at family gatherings.

"They stopped Elway," Tyrone shouted at me before I got my coat off.

"They also stopped the Three Amigos," I told him.

"Darryl Green stopped the Amigos," he said. Tyrone was exaggerating his knowledge of the game, but when it comes to football a man is entitled to his opinion, particularly if he's a blood relative.

"You're probably right," I told him. From then on I lost my urge to kick him in the stomach.

Family, friends, cops — there isn't anyone who can't be tamed by asking his opinion of the NFL and the Super Bowl. Everyone is an expert at football and willing to prove it to you, and you don't have to be Jimmy the Greek to say how the players are bred.

If anyone has doubts that football is a civilizing influence on the American people, all he or she has to do is watch the fans in the stadium on television. When you see them trying to claw the camera, you have to conclude that these people are dangerous and should not be trusted with a nuclear bomb. But as long as you give them Super Bowls the chances of them committing homicide are no more than three to two.

The downside of football is now that the football season is over there is nothing to talk about. That's why I have a deathly fear that Attila will kill me the next time he takes me home from National Airport.

Mecham may be closer to impeachment, legislative leader says

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham's admission that he may have told an official not to cooperate in an investigation of an alleged death threat moves the governor closer to impeachment, a legislative leader says.

The Republican governor, who spent 5½ hours testifying Wednesday before a House impeachment committee, contended that committee Chairman Jim Skelly was "reaching" in questioning whether Mecham has obstructed justice.

"I don't think I've broken any law" or obstructed justice," Mecham said. "Mr. Skelly, your case is weak...I have said the truth today. Every word I have said has been true."

The panel is investigating a $350,000 campaign loan, and allegations that Mecham diverted $80,000 in state funds to his auto dealership, and tried to block investigation of an alleged death threat against a former aide.

Skelly, a Republican, said he considered Mecham's testimony "very damaging," and the House could decide by the end of the week whether to impeach Mecham.

The first-term governor also faces a May 17 recall election and a March 9 criminal trial on felony charges of concealing the $350,000 loan. He was expected to conclude his testimony today. No other witnesses are scheduled.

Skelly said he did not know if there were enough votes to impeach Mecham but added, "I suspect if there's no great refutation of the testimony we've gotten thus far, that the votes are there."

It takes 31 votes to impeach in the 60-member House and 20 votes to convict in the 30-member Senate.

"I think the votes are here," Republican Rep. Jim Hartdegen said after hearing Mecham testify. "Thirty-five plus."

Other lawmakers' predictions ranged from 33 to 50 votes, and some said much would depend on whether the Legislature formed a single impeachment resolution or broke it down into individual issues.

A three-part approach would allow lawmakers from districts where voters are divided to split their votes and say they sided with the governor on some issues while opposing him on others.

Wednesday morning, Mecham denied the testimony of Public Safety Director Ralph Milstead, who said the governor told him not to cooperate with Attorney General Bob Corbin's investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official against Donna Carlson, a former legislative liaison.

Taboos limiting AIDS' spread in Africa, report says

BOSTON (AP) — Cultural taboos against sexual promiscuity probably have helped prevent the rapid spread of AIDS in rural parts of Africa where the disease may have existed for hundreds of years, experts say.

Their report published today says the rapid growth of cities and social upheaval are likely to be important factors in the explosive spread of AIDS in central Africa.

The researchers found that in one remote region of Zaire, less than 1 percent of the population was infected with the AIDS virus in the mid-1970s, before AIDS was recognized as a disease, and that figure has not changed.

"I think this study gives us one of the best indications we've had that the disease is not necessarily going to be rampant in any population it goes into. It should give some hope for the rural part of Africa," said Dr. Joseph B. McCormick, a co-author of the study at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control.

Iowa town rallies around boy exposed to AIDS virus

MOVILLE, Iowa (AP) — The parents of a 7-year-old hemophiliac boy exposed to AIDS say he's being treated with compassion by his friends and that the deadly disease hasn't changed his outlook on life.

"He's a holy terror — to the max. But he's a normal little boy," Debbie Rahn says of her son, Derek. "His friends still play with him. Nobody's ignored him."

The Rahns said their son has as much of a chance of dying from hemophilia as he does from AIDS, and he understands his condition.

"How do you explain death to a 7-year-old?" asked Dan Rahn, a 39-year-old truck driver. "He does know that what he's got could be fatal. But he just shucks it off and keeps on trucking."

The Rahns say they have heard few negative comments and, instead, have received support from people in and around their northwestern Iowa town of 1,200 residents.

"People are coming to grips with this pretty good," Ms. Rahn said Wednesday. "I didn't know how they would react. I'm very proud of them, proud of them as a whole because they stuck together."

The town became aware of her son's exposure after she notified school authorities that he had tested positive for AIDS antibodies. The school responded with meetings for Moville's 570 students and its teachers to inform them about AIDS.

"We've had a lot of nice phone calls. I even got flowers from someone in Le Mars, which is about 50 miles north of here," said Ms. Rahn, 30.

Evidence of the support for Derek was evident at a community forum Tuesday night attended by about 600 people.

A Des Moines man was ejected after refusing to let the program begin. The man, Ron Bettag, said he was with the presidential campaign of Lyndon LaRouche, a political extremist who has advocated quarantine of AIDS patients.

Exhibit shows how dinosaur art changed

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A hundred years ago, dinosaurs were depicted as dull-witted, lumbering giants. Now, they're pictured as sleeker, quicker and capable of banding together for protection or to prey on other creatures.

The long-extinct dinosaurs didn't change. But man's perception of them did.

Today's paleontologists see dinosaurs as intriguing creatures of many forms, probably many colors and different behaviors. As paleontologists' views of dinosaurs change, so does the art that depicts the "terrible lizards."

"It hasn't always been known what an Allosaurus looked like, what a Stegosaurus looked like," said Caren Walt of the New Mexico Museum of Natural History, which is bringing in a major exhibit on the changing concept of dinosaurs.

"Dinosaurs Past and Present" will give New Mexicans the chance to see different ways the fascinating beasts have been portrayed by artists in the last 130 years as scientists made discoveries and changed theories.

"The concept of dinosaurs has changed as paleontological evidence has shown large differences in the way we look at dinosaurs," said Ms. Walt, the museum's chief of exhibits.

"It looks like locomotion was more advanced than previously thought. Some were actually pretty graceful. Some moved in herds. There's speculation there was parental care," she said.

From the earliest days, artists and paleontologists worked together to reconstruct the physical appearance of the animals, she said.

Dinosaurs began to show up in art around the 1850s in the infancy of paleontology. Early artists had little evidence to work from, and some depictions show "some very bizarre-looking creatures," Ms. Walt said.

Portraits of dinosaurs done today show animals that are more anatomically correct and more varied, Ms. Walt said.

For example, paintings by Waterhouse Hawkins, an early artist of dinosaurs, drew the Megalosaurus as lumbering and bear-like. Later renditions of the same kind of animal show a thinner, more upright creature.

Information on the exhibit, which runs through April 30, says recent dramatic advances in the understanding of the behavior and interaction of modern animals have prompted scientists to rethink how dinosaurs lived.

Circumstantial evidence indicates at least some lived in herds. Quantities of fossils in western North America suggest entire herds may have been wiped out by flash floods or volcanic ash.

Fossil evidence also points to the possibility that predatory dinosaurs may have hunted in packs.

A painting by Mark Hallett shows a herd of Triceratops — three-horned dinosaurs — fending off two predatory Tyrannosaurus. The Triceratops stand with babies surrounded by adults aiming their horns out as the Tyrannosaurus circle. Exhibit organizers say such a scene could have occurred 70 million years ago in western Montana.

A work by William Stout shows a nest of sleepy Protoceratops settling down for the night in Mongolia, 80 million years ago.

A painting of Dryptosaurus by Charles R. Knight shows two dinosaurs fighting, one leaping upon the other as it lies on the ground. Knight, who worked with paleontologist Henry Fairfield Osborn from the turn of the century through the early 1930s, was ahead of modern theories of dinosaur behavior in his depiction.

A part of the exhibit anticipates the future that might have been had dinosaurs not become extinct.

Artist Ron Seguin and paleontologist Dale Russell speculated on what the descendants of survivors of the mass extinction of dinosaurs 65 million years ago might have looked like.

The result is a sculpture of a very human-looking upright three-fingered and three-toed dinosauroid, based on the small meat-eating Stenonychosaurus, also shown in sculpture.

The approximately 150 paintings, drawings, sculptures and models that make up "Dinosaurs Past and Present" arrived at the museum in early January. The Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County, organized the show with the help of guest curator Sylvia Czerkas.

New Mexico Museum of Natural History Director Jon Callender said he hopes 100,000 people — a third of them schoolchildren — will visit the museum during the exhibit's run.

An eight-member crew at the museum spent weeks building walls on which to hang paintings and platforms on which to set models and sculptures, rearranging museum collections to fit in the exhibit and unhinging and unpacking dozens of wooden crates that held the displays.

The exhibit is arranged chronologically and by artist, Ms. Walt said.

A large life-size gray-brown sculpture of a sharp-toothed Allosaurus — which looks something like a Tyrannosaurus — stands in the museum's first-floor atrium.

The museum is acquiring for its own collection a life-size sculpture of a Mosasaurus, which will be shown with the exhibit when it arrives sometime in February. Such sea creatures lived in what is now New Mexico during the Cretaceous times, when the area was covered with water.

The exhibit's oil paintings, pastels, pencil drawings and lithographs hang throughout the museum. Sculptures and models are placed in various areas, allowing visitors to compare the three-dimensional sculptures with the two-dimensional drawings.

Backers urge lobbying for SSC

Gramm: Congress 'underfunds future'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supporters of the $4.4 billion "super collider" are urging potential contractors to help lobby a skeptical Congress for the giant scientific instrument.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, was among the lawmakers warning that projects like the super collider often end up competing against other scientific investments.

Instead of long-term investments, Congress in recent years "has consistently leaned toward short time-fused funding of big-constituency projects and has underfunded the future," Gramm said Wednesday. "We need your help in making the case that an investment in science is an investment in the future of America."

He noted that President Reagan's budget requests for space activities had been cut three years in a row.

"It is not that Congress cut the president's space budget to reduce the deficit," said Gramm, one of the authors of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law. "They have cut the president's space budget to spend in other areas that have more defined constituencies."

Gramm's home state is one of seven bidding to be host to the collider, a 53-mile-around tunnel in which counter-rotating beams of protons will be smashed into each other to probe the secrets of matter. The other states are North Carolina, Michigan, Illinois, Arizona, Colorado and Tennessee.

In an appeal similar to Gramm's, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., noted that all senators from North Carolina, Colorado and Tennessee, and one from Michigan, were not sponsoring a bill backed by 20 members to give the Energy Department explicit authorization to build the collider.

"I urge you to do a little bit of lobbying," DeConcini said.

Predicting that the project will not pass until the financing question is settled, DeConcini urged exploration of such avenues as leasing the installation from a builder with an option to buy at the end of the lease, a financing method sometimes used for purchases of office buildings and Navy cargo vessels.

The administration's estimate of $4.4 billion for the machine is the entire cost through 1996. For the current fiscal year, the project has been appropriated only $25 million; for the next year the administration will ask for $363 million.

Asked about talk that Congress might only approve a smaller sum like $100 million for next year, Ben Cooper, a member of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee staff, said he thought the administration was taking credit for proposing the super collider but doing little to secure funding.

"I don't think the Energy Department has lobbied very seriously for this program or thought very seriously about a plan that has fallbacks like you suggest," he said.

The department's spokesman on the collider was out all day, his office said.

The contractor group, formed in December, had 40 members at last count but is "growing all the time," said Jerry Staub of General Dynamics Corp., a major manufacturer of the kind of magnets the collider will need.

Bentsen: State delegation powerful enough to get SSC project funded

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas leaders, who have joined in a show of solidarity for the "super collider," say getting the project funded is going to be difficult but the state's delegation is powerful enough to do it.

"We're going to be in a real budget crunch trying to finance this thing, and of all the states that are in the competition, this delegation is without a question the largest and most powerful," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Wednesday.

"And (the Energy Department is) going to know that in this budget crunch it's going to be tough to fund this. But they're going to have the total commitment and dedication of the most powerful delegation in Congress."

Texas is one of seven states bidding to be host to the collider, a 53-miles-around tunnel in which counter-rotating beams of protons will be smashed into each other to probe the secrets of matter. The other states are North Carolina, Michigan, Illinois, Arizona, Colorado and Tennessee.

Texas leaders met on Capitol Hill Wednesday, declaring their unceasing bipartisan support for the $4.4 billion atom smasher.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said that by showing solidarity the delegation and state officials are telling the Energy Department that Texas has the strength to win the tough funding battles ahead.

"The question the Department of Energy has to answer is which congressional delegation do you want to do the heavy lifting in making this site a reality," Gramm said.

"I believe that when you get down to the bottom line, that Texans in the past have proven they have the ability to do the heavy lifting when the objective was an important one for Texas and America," he said.

Gov. Bill Clements said the support shown by the state's leaders is the second most important part of the Texas presentation, behind geographic location.

County officials, law enforcers to be insured

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

County elected officials and law enforcement personnel across the state will be able to cover their losses in the event of personal injury lawsuits as the result of a novel insurance policy being offered by the Texas Association of Counties.

"Counties will be given the opportunity to apply for liability coverage for elected and appointed officials. Also, we will be able to have law enforcement liability coverage for the first time in a long time," Midland County Commissioner Win Brown confirmed today after a meeting of the association last week at Texas A&M University in College Station.

Brown said the coverage — underwritten by a London firm — will be offered in two separate packages — one for elected and appointed officials and another for law enforcement authorities.

The announcement put to rest the long and sometimes frustrating struggle by the association to obtain insurance coverage for its members.

The association formed a risk management pool over a year ago to study the liability problem, said Brown, who served as vice president of the subcommittee.

The commissioner said the board was able to work with insurers to design and write its own policy to eliminate any unnecessary loopholes.

"We're real tickled to get it," he said. "Now we are able to offer five services to counties, including group health insurance, worker's compensation, general liability coverage, auto liability, unemployment compensation and elected officials and law enforcement liablity.

Brown said the association distributed application forms to each county member and is expecting above average response from its participants.

"For this group plan to work we have to have about 30 percent entering into the pool. So far, we expect to have in excess of 50 percent participation within a matter of a couple of months," he added.

Although the policy rates have yet to be determined, the commissioner said he has been assured that they will be reasonable and affordable.

Brown said the coverage extends only to salaried officials and not to appointed members who voluntarily serve on non-profit county boards.

FOP endorses Taylor for state district judge

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The Midland Lodge of the Fraternal Order of Police this morning announced its endorsement of the candidacy of Nick Taylor for 142nd State District Judge.

Taylor, a Republican who is facing incumbent Pat Baskin in the March GOP primary, told a group of 30 friends and supporters the endorsement was "extremely significant."

"This endorsement comes from people who deal directly with the courts on a daily basis," Taylor said.

Leonard Hendon, a Midland police officer who heads the 51-member local lodge, said the move was a direct result of the members' concern over what they perceive as favorable treatment of accused criminals by the courts.

"In our judicial system, rights and protections for both the accused and victims must remain in balance," Hendon said. "Without this balance, efforts to reduce or control the crime in our community are hopeless...so much of the time, the scales of justice seem to be tipped in favor of the accused."

Taylor said he had met with FOP members, including police officers, sheriff's deputies, FBI agents, and U.S. Marshals, and discussed their concerns.

Hendon declined to answer specific questions about the endorsement, citing legal advice from FOP counsel.

Baskin responded quickly to the announcement, and said he had not been asked to meet with FOP members.

"It is my understanding that the FOP represents a very small percentage of the law officers in our community," Baskin said. "My opponent has been invited to attend their meetings.

Family caring focus of School of Christian Living seminar

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Love's road holds potholes even during the best of weather.

The dynamics of a healthy family, including the stages of love, tools to work through the pitfalls and the how-tos of effective parenting form the nucleus of one of the workshops being presented during the annual School of Christian Living, scheduled for Friday evening and Saturday at Memorial Christian Church, 1001 Andrews Highway.

The Rev. Norman Godfrey will speak on "Family: The Birthplace of Caring." Godfrey, an ordained Presbyterian minister, is executive director of the Samaritan Counseling Center of West Texas Inc., at Midland International Airport. This ecumenical, nonprofit organization was established in 1973 to provide counseling and psychological services within a Christian perspective.

"Basically mine's going to be not necessarily a theological or biblical kind of workshop," Godfrey said. "Mine's going to be mostly a very practical workshop which talks about the characteristics of a healthy family and the importance of marriage to the whole family.

"Some of the information will deal with the stages of love relationships, the pitfalls people get into and the ways of working through those. The other part of my workshop is going to be talking about characteristics of effective parenting."

GODFREY HOLDS a master of divinity degree from Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., a master of theology degree from Duke University Divinity School, Durham, N.C., and is working on a doctor's of ministry in marriage and family from Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Philadelphia. He has presented more than 35 workshops in the Permian Basin area on family, marriage and parenting.

During his presentation, which begins at 7:30 p.m. Friday along with three other workshops, Godfrey said he plans to focus more on "the experiential and practical areas of day-to-day living."

"Caring: The Heart of the Christian Message" is the theme of this year's School of Christian Living, sponsored annually by the Midland Association of Churches. The SCL provides an opportunity for the people of West Texas to strengthen their Christian faith and understanding.

"When I came to Midland, what impressed me about the School of Christian Living was that it was an effort to unite the memberships of churches and not just the church staff," said Sister Regina Decker, pastoral associate at St. Ann's Catholic Church and director of Christian Education for the Midland Association of Churches.

"We have made an effort to include under the main topic a variety of sub-topics that would be interesting to a wide range of people," Sister Decker said of the SCL. "We decided to do some old and some new. It's the original format, but in a different time frame. This year marks the first time the school has been held on a weekend and not during the week."

Friday's session runs from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. and Saturday's sessions run from 9 to 11 a.m., 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. and 3 to 5 p.m.

Man stranded in icy Red River

DENISON (AP) — A man jumped about 50 feet into the icy Red River to escape from an oncoming car and then clung to a railroad bridge for two hours before he was rescued.

Nalton Sensat's clothes almost froze Wednesday in the 24-degree weather as the 20-year-old waited for rescuers.

Authorities said ice on a bridge spanning the river caused a car accident involving Sensat's vehicle.

When he got out of the car to check the damage, another vehicle went into a skid and began sliding toward him.

To avoid being crushed between the bridge railing and the sliding car, Sensat jumped over the side of the bridge and attempted to hold on to the railing, according to Malcomb Gage, director of the Colbert Emergency Service.

But the Beaumont man lost his grip because of ice and fell about 50 feet into the icy waters of the river.

He was quickly swept downstream, but managed to grab on to a piling at a railroad bridge and pulled himself up to a precarious footing, Gage said.

The Army Corps of Engineers stopped generating water at Lake Texoma to slow the current and provide Sensat with a more firm footing, officials said.

Railroad officers were notified to halt trains over the span until Sensalt was rescued, and the Oklahoma Water Patrol was asked to send a boat.

A motorist at the scene dropped Sensat a coat and blanket as he waited for help in 24-degree weather.

Pollution can be anything out of harmony with universe

Todd

Pollution takes many forms.

I know, for I am one who has, in a sense, polluted to the hilt.

But I cast stones anyway.

Pollution takes the form of smoke, litter, chatter, noise, mire — just about anything out of place, such as a superfluous note, and out of harmony with the universe.

For many years, our oceans, waterways, land masses, and the envelope of air covering Earth have been crying for reprieve. "Just let us be!" the great elements plea, "and we will serve you well."

But what do we do?

We dump garbage into our own backyards and, eventually, onto our own laps. And then we, covered in trash and slowly suffocating from our own filth, greed, blindness, addictions, crassness and callousness, cry, "Why doesn't somebody do something?"

Dummkopf!

It makes no sense.

Here we are, consummately mortal beings on this wondrous planet of delicate balances and amazing resilience, and we treat the Earth and its lower heavens as if they were disposable.

Sad, indeed.

Back in the 1960s, interest in cleaning up our oceans, waterways and arresting the spoiling of our great wilderness areas was soaring. And then, the Salvation Train ran out of fuel and off the tracks. Granted, some progress has been made, such as allowing our Great Lakes naturally to revitalize themselves.

It seems mankind's greed and obsession with gaining material things now and coveting elusive security — whatever that is — to the grave have become priorities.

Do we give no thought for tomorrow?

We are making cesspools out of the Earth's former havens and wondering why our gardens will not grow lovely and bountiful flowers.

It has something to do with the sowing-reaping cycle.

Now, for a little stone-throwing exercise, which may turn into a boomerang.

Smoke, smoke, smoke that cigarette. Puff yourself and others to death sooner than life's journey should end.

Tobacco smoking, once deemed chic, romantic, sophisticated, macho, suave, cool, and smart, is an abomination. It's a polluter, a killer, an addiction. If the smoker, in smoking harms no one else but himself, that's one hurt too many. But smoking is not a closet act.

If die-hard smokers follow the lead of three enterprising Dallas businessmen who organized the Great American Smoker's Club for smoke-filled airline flights, then enterprising tobacconists and smokers probably will set up private dens exclusively for smokers. If they want to hail smoking as something for the elite and associate smoking with freedom, independence and art, then they surely will find ways to continue comfortably and hackingly in their habit.

I prefer not to share in their fancy.

Brandley prays he will be granted new trial

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Death row inmate Clarence Brandley says he prays that each new day will bring news of a favorable ruling from a state appeals court that could result in his release.

Four months after a judge recommended he should get a new trial, Brandley remains behind bars on a capital murder conviction.

"It's kind of hard to accept but you have to realize it takes time for the legal process to move along," the 37-year-old inmate said Wednesday in his first interview since the judge issued his recommendation.

Brandley, who is black, was convicted of capital murder in the death of a white girl who was attacked Aug. 23, 1980, at Conroe High School where he worked as a janitor. Last Oct. 9, a judge recommended to a state appeals court that he be granted a new trial.

In the 47-page recommendation to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, State District Judge Perry Pickett said Brandley's conviction and death sentence were marred by racial prejudice, perjured testimony, intimidated witnesses and a biased investigation. Pickett had presided over a nine-day evidentiary hearing in Galveston.

"I still have a lot of faith in the system, and more so now," Brandley said Wednesday. "Before that, my faith was really down.

"The only thing I can say is I feel real good since the judge made the recommendation. But I don't think anyone would appreciate being locked up when it's something that is clear...I didn't commit any crime. Eight years is really what I've lost from my life."

Pickett's written report was delivered to the appeals court in November. Court spokesman Thomas Lowe said Wednesday the case was pending. The court does not routinely announce when a case will be decided.

"I'm hoping it doesn't go too long," Brandley said. "If it does, I just have to accept it. It is frustrating but I have no control over it.

"I wake up each morning, hoping and praying this will be the day I hear from the court."

Brandley's attorney, Mike DeGeurin, said he has no idea when a ruling will be issued.

"I don't push it," he said. "I'm sure the court is being as careful as it can. It's a large case."

Both he and Brandley denied the death row interview was an attempt to pressure the court.

"I just felt it was time to come down," Brandley said.

DeGeurin said if Brandley is approved for a new trial, he will ask that his client be freed on bond.

Brandley's first trial ended with a hung jury favoring conviction 11-1. At a second trial in 1981, he was convicted by an all-white jury and sentenced to death for the slaying of Cheryl Fergeson. He has since had two execution dates.

Construction halted because of endangered species

AUSTIN (AP) — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has ordered developers of the Steiner Ranch to halt construction near two streams on the 4,500-acre tract because of concerns about possible harm to an endangered species of bird.

The Corps of Engineers has requested a formal report from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on the impacts of the construction on the black-capped vireo before deciding whether to issue a permit for the work.

Officials of the Steiner development said they already have taken steps to protect the bird and are confident they will get the necessary permit.

The Austin area, including parts of the Steiner Ranch, has one of the largest remaining populations of the tiny rare vireo, which was placed on the federal endangered species list in November.

The Army's order, issued late last week, applies to construction of Steiner Ranch Boulevard and related work near two streams on the tract, Panther Hollow and Bear Creek.

The order does not halt construction of the road in other parts of the development. The streams, which are tributaries of the Colorado River, are within the Army's jurisdiction because they are designated "waters of the U.S."

The Corps of Engineers has asked the Fish and Wildlife Service to prepare a "biological opinion" on the possible effects of the construction on the bird before making a decision on the permit.

Soviet immigrant charged

DALLAS (AP) — A Soviet immigrant who authorities believe ran one of Dallas' largest escort services has been charged with promoting prostitution, authorities said.

Boris Shapiro, 27, who contends he operates a legitimate escort service and said he would be open for business tonight, was charged Wednesday with aggravated promotion of prostitution, police Lt. A.J. D'Alessandro said. Shapiro was released on $2,500 bond, officials said.

Shapiro, a resident of Dallas for three years after coming to the United States in 1979, said he would plead innocence.

"In Russia, I would have to prove my innocence," he said. "Here, thank God, they have to prove my guilt."

Shapiro was arrested Tuesday after a 3½-month investigation of 20 escort services he operated from his apartment, D'Allesandro said. Police and the Internal Revenue Service also confiscated employee printouts, computer disks and bank records from Shapiro's apartment, D'Allesandro said.

Credit card records were used to compile a list of people who had hired an escort from Shapiro over the past three years, D'Alessandro said, noting that a grand jury will decide if the customers will be prosecuted.

Joining Clements in standing with the congressional delegation were Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, the mayors of Dallas and Fort Worth and several state and industry leaders from Texas.

Earlier, at a meeting of potential contractors for the $4.4 billion super collider, Gramm joined Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, in warning that no matter how worthy the project, the congressional budget process forces it to compete against other scientific investments.

"Politically we think the project is in good shape," Barton said. "While the president did not mention it in his State of the Union message, in the resource materials that were put out in addition to the State of the Union address did mention the project, in fact highlined the project.

"Our concern is that because of budgetary considerations the Congress may decide not to look at any new projects this year. Those of you in the business community and the lobbying community who have contacts with legislators can help," Barton said.

No decisions have been made on which companies will get the contracts, but that is expected to happen shortly, according to Barton, who said he has been talking to potential contract winners about how Texas could help them with funds from two super collider bond issues worth $1 billion.

David Anderson of Denison heard police reports on a scanner in his car and went to the scene, because he had rope and tackle in his car, Gage said.

Officers and an ambulance crew were waiting for a boat to rescue Sensat. But after Anderson arrived with a rope harness, Sensat was pulled to safety.

The man was taken to Texoma Medical Center and was treated and released, officials said.

LIVING

Presentors will repeat the same workshop they gave Friday night and Saturday morning during Saturday afternoon's sessions, thus each participant will be able to attend full workshops given by two different presenters.

ANOTHER SUBJECT being discussed during the school will be "Caring for the World's Hungry." This workshop will be presented by Sister Theresa Billeaud, CDP, director of Camino a la Paz, a Roman Catholic inter-congregational justice and peace office in San Antonio, and Dr. Denise Doyle, editor of Camino's newsletter and a liaison between Camino and Oxfam America.

When contacted in San Antonio, Sister Billeaud said their workshop will look at the scriptural basis for Christian concern for hunger, at how Christians traditionally have responded to people who are hungry and how Christians can respond today. The workshop will first look at the causes of hunger.

"Why are people hungry?" said Sister Billeaud, who has a master's degree in theology and ministry from the Jesuit School of Theology in Chicago. Ms. Doyle, the co-presenter, has a doctorate degree in canon law from St. Paul University, Ottawa, Canada.

"We will look at some commonly held myths about why people are hungry," Sister Billeaud said. She added that the workshop will include as many specific cases as possible.

The famine in Ethiopia will be covered "for sure" and "depending on time and amount of interaction we will also look at Honduras and the Philippines.

"What we'd like to do is parallel the situations in the Third World with what is going on in the United States. Obviously, we have hungry people in the United States as well."

THE PURPOSE of the workshop is to come to an understanding of the causes of hunger so that people will be able "to respond to alleviate hunger both here in the United States and throughout the world."

Also presenting at the SCL will be the Rev. Dr. William J.A. Power, an ordained Episcopal priest who has been a guest at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church and has participated in past years as a presenter at the SCL. A professor of Old Testament at Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Power will speak on "Caring: Some Biblical Images."

Of his workshop, Power said, when contacted in Dallas, "A good bit of the Old Testament was written by a group of people when they were refugees. I want to look at how they describe their own needs as refugees and how they went about addressing those needs. Going on half of the Old Testament was produced while they were faced with the problems of being dispossessed so they had a whole lot of time to think about the needs of the stranger and the dispossessed — it became a real lively problem."

A member since 1961 of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, Power, whose doctoral degree is in Hebrew from the University of Toronto, has studied contemporary Israeli archeology at the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem and conducted an archaeological survey of sites in the desert south of Amman, Jordan. Also, he has studied at the Carl Jung Institute in Zurich, Switzerland.

Power also plans to address the interior need that the Old Testament describes — the human problem — alienation.

"I also want to talk about humans as alienated from one another and from God and in a state of interior chaos because they are uncertain about the meaning of their lives," he said. "I want to talk about how the Scripture addresses those needs, too."

THE REV. Dr Howard W. Stone, an ordained Lutheran minister and a professor of Pastoral Care and Psychology at Brite Divinity School at Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, is also presenting a workshop at SCL. Stone has received numerous grants for research and direct service counseling and published several books, not only in the United States, but also in the Netherlands, Taiwan, Argentina and Japan. He will speak on "Lay Pastoral Care Ministry."

"I will discuss lay ministry on the church and especially a lay person's participation in the pastoral care part of ministry," said Stone when contacted in Fort Worth.

"I will be talking about the place of lay persons in pastoral care ministry and will use a number of exercises and demonstrations to help people understand how lay pastoral care relationships are established and maintained."

Stone has edited or been a member of the editorial board for several journals in the area of pastoral counseling. His most current books are "The Caring Church" and "Crisis Counseling." His doctoral degree is in pastoral counseling from the School of Theology at Claremont-McKenna College, Claremont, Calif., with post-doctoral work from Arizona State University, Tempe.

"In addition, I will use grief as an example of one of the types of situations where pastoral care ministry is often required," Stone said. "I will discuss the dynamics of grief and, as a class, we will talk about ways in which we can respond to those who've lost a loved one."

Registration will be held in the foyer of Memorial Christian Church from 6 to 7 p.m. Friday and again before each workshop Saturday. Tuition is $10 per person for each complete workshop (part A and B), or $15 for two workshops or four sessions.

Woman found not guilty of sexual assault

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 358th District Court jury deliberated less than two hours Wednesday to find a former ECISD 26-year-old substitute teacher not guilty of the sexual assault of a now 17-year-old girl.

Elizabeth Paredes, who had been a substitute teacher from 1982 until she was arrested on the sexual assault charge in June 1987, was accused of having a lesbian sexual encounter with a then 16-year-old girl the night of March 27, 1987.

Ms. Paredes' attorney, Michael McLeaish, told the jury of eight women and four men in his opening statement he would show the girl had actively pursued a relationship with Ms. Paredes and that her sexual experience was "extensive."

The girl testified she had gone to a westside apartment the night of the alleged incident and became intoxicated while playing a drinking game. She stated she had a sexual encounter with Ms. Paredes while she was "pretty intoxicated."

She testified she had had at least two previous sexual encounters with a girlfriend.

Assistant District Attorney Roger Jones informed jurors that, under Texas law, a teen-ager cannot give consent to a sexual encounter and that consent is not a defense.

Conviction on the sexual assault of a child charge would have subjected the former substitute teacher to a maximum of 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Inmates continue to copy some records

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — The practice of using prison inmates to microfilm records of former prisoners has stopped, but prisoners continue to copy other records, including those of juvenile offenders and probationers.

Agency officials say they will review whether any personal or sensitive information is being compromised by the microfilming, The Austin American-Statesman reported today.

The director of the Harris County adult probation office began an inquiry this week into whether its use of the Texas Department of Corrections microfilming center violates a federal court order prohibiting inmates from having access to sensitive information on other inmates.

Lawrence Coleman said he would take the matter to the committee of judges that oversees the office.

The office has a contract with the corrections department to microfilm the files of all offenders discharged from probation, about 20,000 people a year.

Coleman said having prisoners copy the files of revoked probationers who are serving prison terms might violate the court order.

"This is an area we'll definitely look into," Coleman said. "We'll have to do a total review."

Several hundred inmates at four prison units work on various microfilming and data-entry projects. Prison officials said they have more than 40 contracts with state agencies and city and county governments.

The microfilming industry at the prisons is thought to be one of the largest in the nation.

Ron Jackson, director of the Texas Youth Commission, said he will ask the agency's board to review the practice of having all files on discharged youths copied by inmates.

About 2,000 juveniles are committed to the Youth Commission each year, and about the same number are discharged. But, Jackson said, many end up in adult prisons in a few years. The files contain social histories, psychological information and school records.

"Those inmates are capable of doing anything," Jackson said. "Some of them are pretty smart. I assume inmates are smart enough to isolate a particular name and reuse it."

The criminal records of juveniles are confidential by law, and "in essence, we're losing confidentiality with inmates having access to them," Jackson said.

Brackenridge Hospital has sent the medical records of about 12,000 former patients to the prison system for microfilming in the past six months, said spokeswoman Marsha Walker.

Walker said the files are copied after a patient is "inactive" at the hospital for at least two years. She said the medical records include substance abuse and psychiatric information.

J. Kirk Brown, general counsel of the corrections department, said Wednesday he believes the court order is concerned only with internal prison records but said he would see if probation records are considered sensitive.

Chemist says police tampered with Intoxilyzer

HOUSTON (AP) — A county judge says he was shocked to hear testimony that police officers increased readings on a breath test machine by plugging its exhaust hoses.

County Court-At-Law Judge Alfred Leal threw out breath test results used in a driving-while-intoxicated case after hearing testimony concerning the Intoxilyzer machine.

"I'm shocked and somewhat stunned by the testimony about the breath-test program," said Leal, who became the second judge in a week to suppress such tests.

In the case, a 24-year-old woman stopped by police last June 3 was charged with DWI. The Tuesday ruling came after defense attorney George Tyson coaxed Houston police chemist Pauline Louie into admitting officers had plugged a machine's exhaust vents to boost readings.

Ms. Louie said she became aware of the alleged tampering between 1983 and 1985.

"There is no way I could have determined who did the tampering," she said Monday, noting that she did not notify higher authorities in the department of the problem.

The machines were recertified as accurate in 1985 by the Texas Department of Public Safety, she said, adding that she believed the Intoxilyzers worked properly.

January 22, 1988

The members of the Fraternal Order of Police - Midland Regional Lodge #11 are concerned about the quality of law enforcement in Midland County.

As law enforcement officers, we believe in and support the Constitution of the United States which we have sworn to uphold. We agree and believe that an accused person has guaranteed rights and protections under the Constitution. We also agree and believe that the same Constitution has guaranteed rights and protections to persons who are not accused of crimes - but instead have become victims.

In our Judicial System, these rights and protections (for both the accused and the victims) must remain in balance. Without this balance, efforts to reduce or control the crime in our community are hopeless.

As citizens of Midland County, we are concerned about our Judicial System. So much of the time, the scales of justice seem to be tipped in favor of the accused. These scales need to be returned to a "balanced" state.

Therefore, let it be known that the Fraternal Order of Police - Midland Regional Lodge #11 is supporting Nick Taylor for District Judge in the Republican Primary on March 8, 1988.

Sincerely,
Leonard D. Hendon, Jr.

Chemical fumes injure jet travelers

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A toxic chemical stored improperly aboard an American Airlines jet heated up the floor and spread fumes through the cabin, injuring at least 12 people, officials said.

The 119 passengers and six crew members on the Dallas-to-Nashville flight evacuated the MD-80 jet by emergency chutes upon landing Wednesday, said American spokeswoman Susan Robbins.

Twelve people were treated at Donelson Hospital for smoke inhalation, and four were admitted, two in serious condition, said Gloria Keel, a hospital spokeswoman.

"The cause of the problem was a toxic chemical that was improperly labeled in the cargo hold. It was labeled as laundry equipment and it turned out it was a chemical that should not have been on the plane," Ms. Robbins said.

She said the substance, stored in a cardboard container weighing 104 pounds, underwent a chemical reaction.

"It wasn't a fire, but it caused a pungent odor and feelings of heat. It caused the floor of the cabin to get warm, and the flight attendants noticed it as they were coming in for a landing," Ms. Robbins said.

However, Capt. Harry White of the Metro Nashville Fire Department, said there was a small fire that burned some cardboard containers in the cargo hold and caused some structural damage to the plane.

White said he did not know if the fire was caused by the chemical reaction.

"It was in a contained area and likely consumed all the oxygen, so there were probably not the orange flames you'd typically associate with a fire," he said.

The fire was extinguished by the Metro Nashville Airport Authority's firefighting team, White said.

Passengers also said there was smoke in the cabin. Firefighters had to chop a hole in the plane floor to douse the chemical with water and cool it off.

Ms. Robbins would not identify the chemical and said she did not know the extent of its danger.

The airline, the National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Aviation Administration are investigating how the chemical got in the hold, and will talk with those who shipped it and those to whom it was addressed, she said.

"It's a restricted article, it was not supposed to be on the airplane. The container was sent from Austin, Texas, to Nashville," she said.

Ms. Keel said Nelma and Charles Alexander, both age 35, both of Ft. Campbell, Ky., were both in serious, but stable condition and were admitted to Donelson Hospital. She said Michael Jackson, 28, of LaVergne, and John Duncan, 40, of Old Hickory, were both in good condition. Airport spokesman Fred Tucker said Jackson and Duncan are airport firefighters.

Ms. Keel said Mrs. Mary Muth, 74, of Santa Ana, Calif., Lindsey Lyon, age unknown, of LaGrange, Ill., Kathy K. Melson, age unknown, of Chicago, Lisa Wilson, 23, of Washington D.C., and Jeana Mays, 28, of Gary, Ind., were treated for smoke inhalation and released.

Three men came to the hospital several hours after the other patients, Ms. Keel said. She said Kevin Knott, 33, of Franklin; Anthony F. Matson, 43, of Mount Juliet and Anthony D. Insardi, 30 of Hendersonville, were treated and released, but she did not know what injuries they suffered.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, left, laughs with Wendy Gramm of Texas during a session Wednesday of the Senate Agriculture Committee on her nomination to be chairperson of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Wendy Gramm being considered to chair futures trading panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wendy Lee Gramm, President Reagan's nominee to head the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, says she would exercise her judgment independently from her husband, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas.

"I believe my husband has said at some point in time he's never been able to control me in 18 years...By the same token, I don't take responsibility for his comments or actions either," she said at a confirmation hearing Wednesday.

Her husband is a Republican member of the Banking Committee, which has jurisdiction over matters affecting financial markets.

Ms. Gramm, 42, rejected a suggestion that the CFTC give jurisdiction over stock index futures to the Securities and Exchange Commission, which already regulates the stock and options markets.

The SEC is pushing to expand its authority over futures markets, while a presidential task force investigating the stock crash wants the Federal Reserve Board to coordinate financial policy.

Ms. Gramm, who has held senior positions with the Office of Management and Budget and the Federal Trade Commission, said the futures markets and the stock markets are quite different and their regulation should remain separate.

"The president did not ask me to become a senior member of the SEC, or the Federal Reserve, for that matter," she told the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, who introduced Ms. Gramm to the committee, said she would be the first Asian woman to head a major federal agency. Her grandparents emigrated from Korea to work in Hawaii's sugar cane fields.

The CFTC is assuming an increasingly important role as Congress and the administration investigate the causes of the Oct. 19 stock market nosedive...Some studies of the crash have found that computer strategies for trading on the futures markets either triggered the crash or made it worse.

The Agriculture Committee plans to vote on the nomination in two weeks. The full Senate must also act.

She was nominated in December to succeed Susan M. Philips, who resigned in July. Her term would run until April 1990. Commissioner Kalo A. Hineman has been serving as acting chairman of the five-member panel.

Railey, psychologist reportedly rent apartment in San Francisco

DALLAS (AP) — A former minister accused in a civil lawsuit of an attack on his wife that left her comatose, has leased a San Francisco apartment with a woman linked romantically to him, the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

In a copyright story, the Times Herald said that Walker Railey and Dallas psychologist Lucy Papillon signed a one-year lease on apartment in a Victorian home not far from San Francisco Bay.

Meanwhile, a church official said North Texas Methodists will be asked in May to extend health care benefits for Margaret "Peggy" Railey, who has been in a coma since she was nearly choked to death in April. The official said benefits totaling more than $100,000 have already been paid by the church for her care.

Mrs. Railey's family filed a lawsuit this week against Railey, accusing him of the attack and seeking unspecified damages.

Ms. Papillon reportedly told a grand jury investigating the near-strangling that she and Railey, former senior pastor of First United Methodist Church of Dallas, traveled together without Mrs. Railey's knowledge. Sources also said Ms. Papillon told grand jurors that she and Railey had discussed marriage before the attack.

The psychologist, 45, is the daughter of a Methodist bishop who preceded Railey as senior pastor of the 6,000-member church, one of the largest in Dallas.

Mrs. Railey's mother and legal guardian, Billie Jo Nicolai of Tyler, filed the civil lawsuit Tuesday against Railey, accusing him of maliciously and brutally trying to strangle the 39-year-old woman with a cord.

Bill Arnold, a lawyer who represents Mrs. Nicolai, said he was pleased with the church's move to extend Mrs. Railey's insurance benefits but it doesn't change the purpose of the lawsuit.

The Times Herald said Railey had been seen moving some possessions into the San Francisco apartment earlier this week. The apartment is an area where rents range from $1,400 to $2,500 per month.

The former minister, who quit his post at the downtown church and eventually surrendered his credentials as a minister, gave up guardianship of his wife and awarded temporary custody of his two children to a family friend.

Railey has been identified by his lawyer as Dallas police's only suspect in the attack. He appeared before the same grand jury as Ms. Papillon, but reportedly refused to testify, citing his Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

RESPONDING TO HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

For a young adult the average blood-pressure reading is 120/80. Depending upon how much a patient's numbers exceed this average the physician will alter his response to the problem of high blood pressure. The first steps usually do not involve drugs. The doctor will urge a patient to lose weight, stop smoking, and restrict his intake of salt. If these dietary and lestyle changes do not bring results the physician will often prescribe a diuretic. The resultant reduction of body fluid will often control a mild elevation of blood pressure. Failing this a beta-blocker may be instituted. These drugs block nerve impulses which increase blood pressure. The next step may involve the prescription of a vasodilator which dilates blood vessels. A more potent beta-blocker or a calcium channel blocker may be added. Then if these steps have not brought the blood pressure under control, a diuretic may be added to the regimen. Many times a combination of drugs will be prescribed in a single tablet. Some of the more commonly prescribed drugs are:

WHERE THERE'S SMOKE

Tobacco smoke is the most serious carcinogenic agent we are exposed to on a regular basis. Thirty percent of all cancers probably come from tobacco use. As if smoking were not bad enough, people who smoke and drink are at even greater risk of cancer. People with these two habits experience a marked increase in the incidence of cancers of the esophagus, stomach, and pancrease. Those at greatest risk drink and smoke at the same time, holding the alcohol and cigarette smoke in their mouths for a brief moment before swallowing. Research indicates when people drink and smoke at the same time a mutagentic chemical called ethyl nitrite appears in their breath. This chemical is probably a powerful carcinogen and is not formed by smoking or drinking by themselves.

Most people know that smoking is not healthy. Unfortunately few of them understand the magnitude or the specifics of its impact. The most effective step anyone can take in preventing premature death is to stop smoking. If you or someone you know smokes and finds it difficult to, but seek professional help. AN EMOTIONAL RESPONSE

Anxiety, hyperactivity, and tension have reached epidemic proportions in this country. The major psuedo-solution often has been the use of many drugs that can promote dependency. In light of this problem, the potential of chiropractic treatment should not be ignored as an alternative. Nerve impairments can produce localized stress of psychological syndromes such as depression or hyperactivity. Chiropractic works to maintain the integrity of the nervous system. This in turn helps us adapt better to daily stress. Chiropractic can be an effective form of preventive mental health care. Although extensive comparative research needs to continue, pilot studies have indicated that regular chiropractic care can have a positive effect on people with emotional problems.

Researchers not surprised by continuing AIDS information

ATLANTA (AP) — Researchers say they aren't surprised by a nationwide survey that says one in four Americans still believe incorrectly that they can get AIDS from giving blood.

The survey also reports unfounded public fears of shaking hands with AIDS patients, working with them or eating in restaurants where they work.

"There continues to be a great deal of uncertainty about the causes of AIDS," the National Center for Health Statistics said in a report released this week by its parent agency, the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control.

"We weren't too surprised" by the misinformation, said Dr. Deborah Dawson, an NCHS researcher who worked on the survey report. "The reason, we think, is that there's been so much conflicting information in the press."

Twenty-six percent said it was somewhat or very likely that someone would contract AIDS from donating blood. That is a misconception the American Red Cross and other agencies have fought hard to defeat, pointing out that sterile equipment is used in blood donations and that a donor comes in contact only with his own blood.

The report details responses to a survey conducted among 3,097 Americans in September.

Knowledge of the existence of acquired immune deficiency syndrome was more than 99 percent. However, the survey found some respondents who said they never had heard of the disease which has, according to the latest CDC count, struck more than 51,000 Americans and killed more than 28,000.

Eighty-six percent of the respondents knew "definitely" that there is no cure for AIDS, 78 percent knew for certain that anyone with the virus can transmit it through sexual intercourse, and 73 percent knew for sure that an infected, pregnant woman can infect her baby.

Each of those responses was 3 to 4 points higher than an earlier survey conducted in August.

"There are signs that the U.S. public's knowledge about AIDS increased slightly," the report said.

"For the most part," it said, "the lowest levels of general knowledge are found among adults 50 years of age and over."

Ninety-four percent of the respondents said it was "very likely" that a person will get AIDS through sex with an infected person, and 93 percent said it was "very likely" that a person would get it through sharing drug needles with an infected person. Those are the two chief modes of transmission.

"The level of misinformation about (other) modes of transmission, particularly from casual contact, continues to be high," the NCHS reported.

Thirty-six percent of the respondents thought it very or somewhat likely that a person would get AIDS from eating at a restaurant where the cook had AIDS, 18 percent believed working near an AIDS patient is a threat and 69 percent said kissing with saliva exchanged is likely to transmit the disease.

AIDS experts say the disease simply is not spread through casual contact, and while transmission during "French kissing" is theoretically possible, it never has been reported.

Thirty-five percent in the survey said the disease is likely transmitted by mosquitoes or other insects — again, an assertion that government AIDS experts do not agree with.

But numerous reports surfaced in the news media last year concerning the possibility of mosquito transmission, possibly confusing people, Ms. Dawson noted.

In a more personal question, 7 percent said they have known a person with AIDS.

CDC estimates that 1 million to 1.5 million Americans have been infected with the AIDS virus, and of that total, 20 percent to 30 percent will develop AIDS by the end of 1991.

The disease, caused by a virus that destroys the immune system, has struck in the United States most often among homosexual males and abusers of injectable drugs.

Viruses could be allies rather than enemies, expert says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Viruses, which usually bring death, disease and suffering, could be turned into medical allies that bring health, according to a California researcher.

In an article published last week in the journal Science, Dr. Michael B. A. Oldstone of the Research Institute of Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, Calif., said he demonstrated a possible new therapeutic technique by using a virus to keep a type of laboratory mouse from developing diabetes.

The technique currently promises no cure for diabetes, said Oldstone, but it does show that viruses, that ancient enemy of humanity, could be turned into disease-fighting friends if they are altered in the laboratory and used appropriately.

"I don't think many people have thought about utilizing virus in that way (to benefit people) but this study shows that it could be possible," said Oldstone.

Dr. Andrew Monjan, a National Institutes of Health official familiar with the work, said Oldstone's findings offer new concepts in the use of viruses and in the understanding of diabetes. He called the work "interesting and exciting."

"He used a virus to turn off the autoimmune action of a lymphocyte," said Monjan. "That's an exciting concept."

In his experiment, Oldstone used a special laboratory animal called the non-obese diabetic mouse. This mouse is considered an animal model for the study of diabetes because it always develops the disease within six to nine months after birth.

It has been demonstrated that the mouse diabetes develops when lymphocyte T-helper cells, a type of immunity cell, attack and kill certain cells in the rodent pancreas. When these attacked cells die, the pancreas can produce no insulin and the mice become diabetic.

Oldstone injected a group of these mice shortly after birth with a laboratory strain called the lymphocytic choriomeningitis virus. This virus attacks only the T-helper lymphocyte.

The result, said the scientists, is that the lymphocytes did not damage the pancreas and the mice did not develop diabetes.

Between the two of us, we've been playing bridge for nigh on 100 years. In all that time, we've never come across a smoother play, although many of our contemporaries swear they've seen the position crop up at the table. This, in theory, is the situation we're referring to.

After the artificial two-club opening bid and the semi-negative two-diamond response, the auction proceeded normally. North's raise to three spades promised some values, and South's jump over game inquired about his partner's trump holding. Holding a top trump honor, North did his duty by continuing on to slam.

After winning the opening lead in hand with the king, the fate of the contract appears to hinge on the trump finesse, since a club loser is inevitable. However, when East shows out on the second trump, declarer needs a minor miracle to land his slam.

Declarer cashes all his winners and uses the queen of hearts as a dummy entry to ruff a diamond. He then exits with his club loser, which East must win. This is the position:

East must lead a red card, and declarer ruffs. Whether West ruffs low or overruffs, he cannot score a trump trick. Try it.

(This column is by way of an apology. When we ran it last year, we had an incorrect layout and the slam could have been defeated.)

Ronstadt feels American culture robbed her of Spanish heritage

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Linda Ronstadt, who begins her first Spanish-language concert tour Friday, wishes she could speak Spanish instead of just singing it.

Ms. Ronstadt, who has recorded a variety of English songs the past 20 years, begins her 16-city concert tour Friday, showcasing her new album "Canciones de mi Padre" or "Songs of My Father."

The 42-year-old Ms. Ronstadt, who grew up in Tucson, Ariz., had to memorize the songs because she cannot speak Spanish, something she blamed on society.

"Spanish was spoken in our home. My grandfather was bilingual and so was my father and my brothers are too. I was too slow," she said. "I was, unfortunately, a victim of the times right after World War II when they really discouraged speaking Spanish in the schools.

"I can remember my best little girlfriend...had her little hands spanked on the playground for speaking Spanish. It's not fair and there's a couple of generations of kids who absolutely didn't get to have it," she said Wednesday.

Ms. Ronstadt is not bitter about her inability to speak the language and, in fact, joked about it when a reporter for a Spanish-language television requested a interview.

"I can't speak it. I can only sing it," she said in Spanish.

But Ms. Ronstadt, whose paternal grandfather migrated from Mexico, also realizes that many Hispanic families want their children to blend into the American mainstream.

"There's a lot of pressure on a lot of families that migrate up here that want to be assimilated. They want their children to be assimilated and to learn English," she said.

Ms. Ronstadt said her father and grandfather taught her most of the Spanish songs at a young age.

NEW YORK (AP) — For actor Patrick Swayze, the success of the surprise hit movie "Dirty Dancing" has created some new pressures, says his wife of 11 years.

Swayze

"A lot of girls started fantasizing about him, and sometimes I feel like it's almost better for him to make appearances alone — it puts a little damper on it to have his wife standing by," said actress-dancer Lisa Niemi.

Swayze, 35, and Miss Niemi, who live on a small California ranch, say they're not ready to move to Beverly Hills.

"We hardly ever go into town," Swayze said in an interview in the Feb. 22 issue of Us magazine. "Life (there) is about your next deal. We're careful not to let ourselves get sucked into that."

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Columnist Mike Royko says he is more than grateful that a Wisconsin legislator tried to get him a break on state fishing license fees.

Royko

"I don't know if the word is touched. Maybe aghast would be better," Royko said Wednesday on the plan to give resident rates to nonresident Pulitzer and Nobel prize winners who own real estate in Wisconsin.

Royko said he pays taxes on his southern Wisconsin summer home and on an apartment building in the Milwaukee area he owns with his brother.

"I send their children to school, I'm paying for all their socialist programs, and the only thing I do up there is occasionally eat a bratwurst and catch a bullhead," Royko said.

"I don't even keep the fish I catch. I put them back. That's a further argument in my favor," the Pulitzer-winning writer said in a telephone interview from his Chicago Tribune office.

The Legislature's Joint Finance Committee apparently disagreed, voting down the proposal Sen. Gary George tried to attach to a bill allowing taxpayers to give $1 toward lake research on their state income tax returns.

Royko said he has done some of his own lake research and reached a remarkable conclusion. "There is no such thing as a muskie. The only muskies there are are plastic," he said. "They're made in some place like Taiwan."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — British artist David Hockney says he's looking forward to his retrospective at the Los Angeles Museum of Art because he's had little chance to see many of his works in recent years.

"I thought I might study (the retrospective) and learn from it," Hockney said Wednesday. The show opening today includes set designs, 150 paintings, 60 drawings and 30 photos.

Hockney won critical raves last year for his set designs and computerized lighting of a production of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" here. The retrospective is part of a three-month festival of British art and culture.

Prince Andrew and his wife, Sarah, the Duchess of York, will be featured guests Feb. 26-March 6 during the "UK-LA" festival.

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) — Filming of a movie starring Jane Fonda will go on in this mill city even through the Board of Aldermen voted to snub her when she comes to town this summer, her spokesman said.

"The studio is the one that makes the decision about where to film and they've made the decision," spokesman Stephen M. Rivers said Wednesday.

Aldermen voted 11-4 on Tuesday to regard the actress as "a persona non grata," when she arrives to film "Union Street" with Robert DeNiro. She plays a woman who teaches an illiterate millworker to read.

"She talked to the communists. You don't forget those things," said Alderman Peter Stathis, who waved a 1972 photograph of the actress in Hanoi.

Rivers said the anti-Fonda campaign was engineered by a handful of local World War II veterans and politicians "doing some grandstanding."

The resolution will not block any permits to MGM Studios, which plans to shoot a few scenes at canals in Holyoke and nearby Chicopee. Most filming will be done at Waterbury, Conn., where veterans also have vowed to protest.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rudolph Nureyev is bringing his Paris Opera Ballet company to the United States for a three-city summer tour.

The troupe will appear at New York City's Metropolitan Opera House June 21- July 9, performing "Swan Lake," "The Nutcracker" and "The Martyrdom of Saint Sebastien" by Robert Wilson, composer of "Einstein on the Beach."

The Paris Ballet also will dance at the Orange County Performing Arts Center in Costa Mesa, Calif., from June 14-19; and at Wolf Trap Farm Park near Washington from July 12-17, Nureyev announced Wednesday.

Neiman shoe salesman keeps tabs on regular customers

By TOM BOONE

Fagin

DALLAS (AP) — There's nothing halfway about Sam Fagin, even though he works only three days a week now. There's still fire in his eyes and a deep sincerity in his manner, and he is proud to be of service.

He's 69 and jumpy with nervous energy, eager each day for the chance to meet new people or to serve his old, established clients, who often call him from the far reaches of the country seeking guidance.

For more than 46 years, Fagin has sold women's shoes at the downtown Dallas Neiman-Marcus store. And, yes, he says, the women call for him by name, and he responds as he always has by sending them what they want, whether a pair of simple Ferragamo flats for a mere $245 or a pair of red-and-black alligator Walter Steigers for $645.

At a time when more and more men are opting for early retirement to escape business pressures, Fagin goes against the crowd, thriving on his job as much now as he did when he was suddenly handed it in 1941.

And full retirement is not in sight, he says, though some of his fellow shoe salesmen might wish for it so they could get their hands on his list of clients.

"This is an entire career," he says, referring to three loose-leaf notebooks, each about 3 inches thick, in which he records the names, addresses, phone numbers and shoe sizes of his regular customers. Each page represents a single client, and Fagin records every sale. He guards the books zealously, lest they fall into a competitor's hands.

"Here, now, where is it?" he says, thumbing through the third of the alphabetized books. "Here." He holds the book open in the "W" section, as in "Windsor, Duchess of."

He recorded his first sale to the duchess (size 6B) in 1968.

"We were briefed on how to act," he recalls. "We couldn't turn our backs on her. I was lucky enough to get to wait on her, but when I went to the stockroom, I had to walk backward."

He has sold shoes to singer Sophie Tucker and actress Ginger Rogers, too, as well as to countless members of Dallas society. But, he says, 75 percent to 80 percent of his clients live out of town, either visiting periodically or buying from him by phone — he is forever mailing out shoes for his clients to consider.

Indeed, his penchant for such dealings recently prompted Neiman's Chairman Emeritus Stanley Marcus to joke that Fagin single-handedly has kept railroads and mail services in business.

Fagin frequently uses the words "service" and "serve" to describe what he does — though he once turned down an offer to manage a store in Houston, partly because he could make more money selling shoes — and he decries the lack of professionalism in the so-called helping businesses.

He remembers the names of each of his regulars, and if for a moment a familiar face does not ring the name in his mind, one look at the woman's shoe size always does.

Pride in his work came early in his Neiman-Marcus career, he says, when he wandered in off the street one day in 1936 and landed a job as a messenger. That led to promotions to cashier and stock boy and, finally, to salesman.

"We had $5 shoe days on Mondays then," Fagin recalls. "The (store's) buyer walked up to me one Friday and said, 'You're going to start selling women's shoes on Monday, so go home and practice on your sister and your mother.'"

Fagin nervously awaited Monday morning and his first customer, a woman who bought 10 pairs of shoes. Fagin has scarcely slowed down since, and sometimes today will sell 10 pairs at a time to a single client. The difference is that what cost $50 in 1941 runs closer to $3,000 now.

"I probably realized at the age of 12, when my father died, that my destiny would be in my own hands. I didn't have the benefit of a college education. So if I was going to continue selling in the women's shoe salon, I decided I wanted to be the very best," he says.

His determination has paid rewards, allowing him to buy his clothes — with help from his employee discount — at Neiman-Marcus.

Today, Fagin and his wife, Freda, make their home in north Dallas. Their son, Milton, is a lawyer in San Antonio. But the downtown Neiman's store remains Fagin's second home.

"The Marcus family has been good to me," he says. "At times I feel like I'm one of the family."

Woman builds castle kingdom for her garden

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Building castles in the air isn't Kay Johns' style — she builds them in her dining room.

Last summer she decided she wanted her own "kingdom," and, although she had no crafting or construction experience, she set about building her first castle tower.

"I had a spot in my garden that was just right for some sort of sculpture, but I wanted something different," she explained. "I remembered about 20 years ago when several of us were at Galveston Beach and we built a sand castle. Someone came along and asked us if we were entering the sand sculpture contest, which was the first we'd heard about it.

"Since we already had the castle started, we finished it and entered the contest. We won," she said.

Armed with the memory of a long-ago sand castle and a lot of reference books on medieval architecture, Ms. Johns gathered gravel, mortar, hail screen, concrete and aluminum tubing and began to construct a crenalated tower.

"The foundation is very difficult," said Ms. Johns. "My brothers helped me with that."

The foundation, she explained, is a center rod welded onto a steel plate. She pours about 3 inches of foundation concrete onto the plate where she anchors an 8-inch tube of hail screen. This forms the base on which she mortars pieces of gravel. Once the outer wall of the tower is finished, Ms. Johns fills the interior with a mixture of vermiculite and concrete. "It isn't quite as heavy with the vermiculite in it, but it's still strong," she said.

"The crenelated tower is to go up on top of a big, gray rock," Ms. Johns said. "I have it pictured in my mind, but unfortunately, I haven't found a big, gray rock. There are plenty of red ones around here, but I just don't want red. I'll find a gray one one of these days."

Her kingdom "just keeps on growing. I thought I could stop at three pieces, but that's not a kingdom. Now I plan to have five pieces: a castle proper, a watch tower, a residence with a low gabled roof, a gatehouse and a rock castle."

Having finished the crenelated tower, Ms. Johns has started her second piece, the main castle. This piece is hexagonal and has tiny windows encircling the top, beneath which she wants to build a ledge. "I haven't quite figured out how to do the ledge," she said. "But by the time I've built up to it, I'll know."

The top of the main castle will have a tower at every other roof angle. "I made the molds for the pointed roofs on the towers out of pointed plastic cups," she said. "I thought paper Dixie cups would be ideal, but the paper isn't strong enough to hold the concrete firm while it sets up, and the paper also sticks to the concrete."

Ms. Johns said she learns to use different materials as she goes along. "Right now, I have an idea for a shaped roof made from L'eggs eggs. Somewhere I've seen a roof like that on a castle or fortress, but I wish I had a picture so I could get it just right," she said.

She plans to move the castle buildings out into her garden next summer, and after she has them all placed, she's going to construct a wall around an inner courtyard.

Ms. Johns also wants to build a moat and a castle path, complete with drawbridge. "I'd like it all to be fairly authentic, at least outwardly," she said.

Arkansas' Larry Marks (42) puts pressure on Texas Tech's Greg Crowe during Wednesday's SWC game in Fayetteville where Arkansas maintained its league lead.

Hogs bury Red Raiders

Longhorns snap Baylor's win streak

Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Ron Huery had 16 points and Mario Credit added 13 to help Arkansas hold the Southwest Conference basketball lead with a 69-48 victory over Texas Tech on Wednesday.

The Razorbacks' fourth straight victory gave them a season record of 16-3 and an SWC mark of 7-1. Tech dropped to 8-11, 3-5.

The Razorbacks led 38-30 at halftime and limited Tech to 33 percent from the field for the second half. Tech shot 37 percent for the game. The Razorbacks are second in the nation in field-goal defense.

Tech stayed within eight points for the first three minutes of the seoncd half, but Arkansas steadily built its lead to as much as 23 with a series of dunks. A Huery slam off a Chris Brunt feed put Arkansas up 44-30 but Tech closed within 10 on Sean Gay's 19-footer.

Andrew Lang put Arkansas ahead 47-34 with a pivot and dunk, but Tech cut that to 47-38 on a 19-footer by Todd Duncan. The Red Raiders got no closer, as two straight slams by Lang and Huery put Arkansas back up by 13.

Lang finished with 11 and led the Razorbacks with nine rebounds.

Tech was led by Wes Lowe and Duncan with 11 each.

"For a 15-minute period, Lang played better than he has all year," said Razorback Coach Nolan Richardson of Lang's second-half performance. "He was an enforcer. I guess he made up his mind to go to work."

Lang had three points and one rebound at halftime.

SWC Basketball

"Every game is getting tougher," Richardson said. "We have to win them all at home. If we split on the road, we have a chance to win the championship or be co-champions."

"Arkansas kept the pressure on and their defense converted some key baskets," said Gerald Myers, Tech coach. "Their constant pressure paid off for them and they got enough defensive baskets to turn the game around. We were shooting 3-pointers to catch up, but it really put us farther behind. I don't think any one of their guys made a difference on defense. It was just good overall team defense."

Texas 76, Baylor 56

AUSTIN — Jose Nassar and Travis Mays combined for 35 points as Texas snapped Baylor's three-game winning streak.

Nassar, had 18 points and Mays had 17 points, although both players had only two points each in the first half.

The win evened Texas' record at 10-10 on the year and 4-4 in the Southwest Conference.

The Bears dropped to 13-8 and 4-4.

The game was tied eight times and the lead changed hands seven times in the second half before the Longhorns took the lead for good on a Mays' 3-pointer from the left side with 7:54 remaining to make it 49-46.

It's 'Face-Off IV' tonight

Chaps have major test against Wranglers

From Staff Reports

It's "Face-Off IV" when Midland College visits Odessa College at 8 p.m. tonight for their fourth confrontation of the season. OC leads the conference with a 8-0 mark and just two losses all season while MC is 17-5 and 5-3.

With their strongest team in several years, the Wranglers were edged by the Chaps 68-64 when they met in the finals of the Chaparral Classic. But Odessa beat the Chaps 92-81 in the finals of the OC Thanksgiving Tournament, then did it two weeks later in a convincing 93-75 win at Chap Center in conference action.

Midland struggled to a 64-58 win over NMMI at Roswell, N.M., Monday to keep pace with South Plains. New Mexico Junior College edged South Plains 77-74 at Hobbs, N.M., to hold onto second place. South Plains and Midland now are tied for third place with three losses each and two games behind NMJC.

"We didn't shoot well and we didn't play well, but we won and that's all you can ask for in Roswell," said MC coach Reggie Franklin, who played for the Cadets two years and had visited there five times as MC's assistant coach.

The Chaps hit just 35 percent of their field goal attempts, but netted a respectable 73.3 percent from the line.

"Odessa has a lot of weapons," Franklin pointed out. "Everyone fears Larry Johnson, because he can do so many things. But Riley Smith, Rodney Samuel, and Troy Bell have been deadly against us."

Franklin noted the last meeting between the two saw Billy Ray Smith hobbled with a bad ankle and David Martin break his wrist early in the game.

"We have got to have good, consistent games from everyone against Odessa," Franklin said. "They are big, strong, muscle you inside, and can hit from outside. We don't have the size to match-up with them, so we'll have to rely more on our outside shooting and quickness."

Tickets for the game may be hard to obtain, since the OC Sports Complex gym holds only about 1,200 spectators. Midland College acquired just 150 tickets, which went on sale Tuesday at Chaparral Center and at Bill Williams Tire Center.

KCRS radio will carry the game.

Washington hails 'Skins

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A throng of 600,000 screaming, shoving Redskins fans lined a downtown parade route Wednesday to give a hero's welcome to Washington's Super Bowl champions and their idolized quarterback, Doug Williams.

At the White House, President Reagan joined the tribute, telling Williams that his record-setting game on Sunday against the Denver Broncos in Super Bowl XXII was "one of the most inspiring performances displayed by any quarterback in football history."

With the president's exhortation of "Way to go, Doug!" and buoyed by the higher decibels and the bone-wrenching crush that developed at Washington's city hall, it was especially and exquisitely Williams's day.

"I consider myself a real, real lucky person," Williams, the first black quarterback to play in a Super Bowl, told a largely unhearing crush of fans who were invited by the police to break through crowd control barricades and move nearer a platform on which the players were standing. The sudden surge created a swaying mass of people in which many found it impossible to raise their arms, and others lost shoes.

Requests from the podium to "take it easy, don't push or somebody's going to get hurt" were ignored. The police said 12 people were arrested, most charged with disorderly conduct.

Drowned out by chants of "We want Doug, we want Doug," Williams said, "Three years ago, there was only one football team that gave me an opportunity to play and that was the Washington Redskins."

He said the most valuable player award given him after the Super Bowl game "could have been given to a lot of people." Picked up by the Redskins as a free agent before the 1986 season to be a backup to Jay Schroeder, Williams set a Super Bowl passing record of 340 yards.

Camacho arrested on two charges

CLEWISTON, Fla. (AP) — Former World Boxing Council lightweight champion Hector "Macho" Camacho was arrested on cocaine and assault charges after allegedly pulling a gun on a juvenile who made an obscene gesture at his companion, police said.

Camacho, 25, was arrested Tuesday night and released on $20,000 bond, according to police reports.

Camacho was charged in an incident last week at Clewiston High School in which the fighter allegedly pulled a gun on a youth who made an obscene gesture. According to police, the gesture had been intended for a teen-age boy who accompanied Camacho, and wasn't aimed at the fighter.

Camacho pulled a gun and threatened to kill the boy who made the gesture, police said.

The boy, whose name police cannot release because of Florida laws concerning juveniles, filed the charges against Camacho following the incident. Clewiston police didn't explain the time gap between the filing of charges last week and Camacho's arrest.

Police said the cocaine charge was brought against Camacho after he was taken into custody and booked into the Hendry County Jail.

Police said an officer watching Camacho on a monitor observed him remove a small bag from his wallet and place it in his underwear. Police said a drug test on the substance inside the bag showed it was cocaine and police charged the fighter with possession of a controlled substance.

Both charges are third-degree felonies which, upon conviction, carry a maximum penalty of five years in prison. Police said Camacho was not licensed to carry the handgun he allegedly brandished but was not charged for a weapon violation because that charge is included in the assault charge.

Assistant State Attorney Robert Ford said using a firearem during the commission of a felony could result in three more years in prison upon conviction.

Camacho's promoter, Dennis Rappaport, said he spoke with Camacho about the incident.

"There was a group of Mexican kids heckling him and he got out of his car and put his foot on the fender and just stared at them," Rappaport said.

Camacho's New York lawyer, Jim Levien, released a statement saying Camacho is a "target" in this small town.

Infante takes 'last coaching job'

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Lindy Infante's formal introduction as coach of the Green Bay Packers was barely an hour old when he announced that he'd taken his last football coaching job.

"If I can't get it done here, then quite frankly it's probably time for me to get into something else," the 47-year-old Infante said.

"This job, to me, is the ultimate," Infante said. "I don't intend to do anything else but this for the rest of my coaching career unless somebody sees fit for me not to be here for some other reason."

INFANTE, REGARDED as one of the NFL's most innovative offensive coordinators, helped the Cleveland Browns reach the AFC championship game the past two seasons.

And, as he told a packed news conference Wednesday, he plans to keep winning in Green Bay.

"I can't see in the future, but I think this team is not nearly as far away as people think," he said. "There is a good groundwork placed down there for me.

"Obviously I have great faith and confidence in myself. I didn't take job to be here two or three years and go out a loser.

"If I didn't think Green Bay could win ... That's the only thing that makes football fun, just go talk to Denver. It's disastrous when you lose."

Infante, credited with the rapid development of Browns quarterback Bernie Kosar, said he planned to install a diversifed offense with the Packers, whose offense sputtered last season during a 5-9-1 season.

DESCRIBING HIMSELF as a "hands-on" offensive coach, Infante said he planned to call his own plays next season.

"We'll get a system installed and then we'll find out how the players will respond. We'll go as far as they'll let us go."

Infante was the Packers' second choice to replace Forrest Gregg, who resigned last month to become coach at Southern Methodist.

Michigan State Coach George Perles, the Packers' top choice, turned down an offer of a five-year contract for a reported $2.25 million last week. Infante also signed a five-year contract but Packers President Robert Parins would not comment on the figures.

"It was not one of those hard negotiating situations," Infante said. "Had the Judge (Parins) offered me room and board, I'd have probably taken it."

Infante said he wasn't worried about being the second choice. In fact, he opened the news conference by thanking Perles for giving him the opportunity to be a head coach in the NFL. Infante had been a head coach previously with Jacksonville of the United States Football League.

"I've been the second choice before in other jobs, but it's not going to have any effect in any shape or form in my dedication to the job at hand," Infante said. " It didn't make me feel second best to anybody. I know what I can do and what I want to get done. I'm just glad I wasn't the third or fourth choice."

Packers vice president Tom Braatz said the choice between Perles and Infante was an agonizing one but he initially picked Perles because of what he had accomplished at Michigan State. The Spartans won the Big Ten title and the Rose Bowl last season.

"There was less risk there because you could see what he (Perles) had done," Braatz said. "That was the difference between the two. He's current. You could see the productivity."

INFANTE HAD a 15-21 record with Jacksonville in 1984 and 1985 before joining the Browns in 1986.

"I had a lot of opportunity to really ponder it," Braatz said. "The reason was he (Perles) had been a head coach longer, had success and it was fresh."

But Braatz said he was totally comfortable with the selection of Infante, adding that "over the last four or five years, he's been highly regarded as one of the best offensive coordinators in the NFL."

Infante's coaching background at both the professional and collegiate levels is extensive.

He was named the Cincinnati Bengals' offensive coordinator in 1982 after two years as the team's quarterbacks and receivers coach.

During his second year at Cincinnati, with Gregg as head coach, Infante changed the Bengals offense and the team went to the Super Bowl with a 12-4 record.

Dallas slide continues as Adams finds 3-point range

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

Michael Adams staged his own 3-point shooting contest, and the Dallas Mavericks came out the losers.

Adams wasn't invited to Saturday's NBA long-distance shooting contest in Chicago, but the 5-foot-11 Denver point guard hit five of seven 3-point attempts Wednesday night, leading the Nuggets to a 115-105 victory over the Mavericks.

"He's got the confidence and the freedom to shoot it and he doesn't take very many bad ones," Denver Coach Doug Moe said. "He got our pace going and we were able to get a lot of points off the fast break."

Adams, who played 41 minutes and had nine assists to go with his 21 points, said he was able to get open against Dallas because the Mavericks were concentrating on more dangerous Denver players.

"They know I can shoot it, but I think they were concentrating on stopping some of the other guys on our team," Adams said.

Alex English had 26 points, Jay Vincent 20 and Lafayette Lever 16 for the Nuggets, who are now three games behind the first-place Mavericks in the NBA Central Division.

"Beating Dallas certainly is nice and we've had a terrific homestand," said Moe, referring to recent home wins over the Los Angeles Lakers and Atlanta, two other division leaders. "But Dallas is going to be hard to catch the rest of the way."

Dallas, which has lost three straight, was led by Mark Aguirre with 27 points and Roy Tarpley with 21. James Donaldson had 15 rebounds for the Mavericks.

Celtics 118, Pacers 103

Boston beat Indiana for the 23rd consecutive time at Boston Garden and won its 66th straight regular-season game at home against Eastern Conference opponents.

Kevin McHale scored 27 points and Larry Bird and Danny Ainge 21 apiece for the Celtics, who haven't lost to Indiana in Boston Garden sinced 1978.

The Pacers, down 66-58 at the half after trailing by as many as 15 points, closed the deficit to 76-74 with less than four minutes to go in the third quarter. Ainge then triggered a 9-0 run with an 18-foot jumper and a 3-pointer, and Boston led by at least seven points the rest of the way.

Jazz 123, Kings 91

Utah won its third straight game for the first time this season as Rickey Green scored 16 of his 18 points in the first half and Karl Malone finished with 25 points and 10 rebounds against Sacramento, which is 2-16 on the road.

Thurl Bailey added 22 points for the Jazz, while Reggie Theus led the Kings with 21.

Green came off the bench in the second period and hit his first eight shots, including five in the second quarter, as the Jazz pulled away to a 56-45 halftime lead.

Cavaliers 107, Bullets 106

Cleveland won its fifth straight when Mark Price, hitting 90 percent of his free throws, missed his first attempt from the line with five seconds left, then made the second, lifting the Cavaliers over Washington.

After Price broke the tie, Tyrone Bogues took the Bullets' inbounds pass and raced the length of the court, but had his shot blocked by Craig Ehlo.

Ehlo's block was a team-record 16th by the Cavaliers, including nine by Hot Rod Williams, who also led the Cavaliers with 23 points. Brad Daugherty added 20 points, 10 rebounds and 11 assists for Cleveland.

Jeff Malone had 27 points to lead the Bullets, who have lost three in a row. Moses Malone added 23.

76ers 96, Warriors 84

Philadelphia handed Golden State its 21st road loss in 22 games as Charles Barkley scored 17 of his 21 points in the second half.

Barkley, returning after missing two games with a sprained ankle, helped the 76ers win for only the second time in the last eight games.

Mike Giminski had 15 points and 13 rebounds for the 76ers, while Maurice Cheeks added 14 points and 11 assists. Ralph Sampson's 16 points led the Warriors.

Soccer teams hit hard times

By PAUL BREITZMAN
MRT Correspondent

Hard times continued for both Tall City high school soccer teams as each recently lost a second straight match.

On Saturday, Midland High traveled to San Angelo with hopes of avenging a 4-0 loss to the Bobcats last week. But just as the week before, San Angelo took an early lead, scoring on a cross to the back post at the three-minute mark and cruised to a 4-1 victory.

The Bulldogs did play much better the rest of the match, conceding frequent but long range shots to the Bobcats while marking tightly to control the middle of the field.

At the 33 minute mark, San Angelo paid the price for pushing too many players forward when Toni DaDalt's pass gave Joe Dominguez a one-on-one opportunity with the Bobcat goalkeeper.

DOMINQUEZ' GOAL left the Bulldogs in a 1-1 halftime tie, but it would not last long.

Three Bulldog keeper miscues resulted in three goals for San Angelo, a lead MHS could not make up. Despite the one-sided final score, the Bulldogs did play their best defensive game of the season, never yielding close-in shots except for the goal keeper errors.

It was Lee's turn to take on San Angelo Tuesday, but the Rebels found the home field edge to be of little help in a 5-1 Bobcat win.

San Angelo took the lead early with two goals in the firdt 20 minutes. Lee's Clint Hamilton then converted a penalty kick to cut the margin to 2-1, 33 minutes into the half. But relentless offensive pressure by San Angelo proved the difference.

The Rebels did not lack for effort, if anything, Lee played with too much intensity. Rebel forwards time and time again broke full speed at the San Angelo goal, but rarely were able to maintain possession as they outran their supporting players.

Lee's midfield, in a hurry to catch up with their forward line, was often out of position to prevent quick Bobcat counter-attacks. The fast pace of the game clearly suited San Angelo, a UIL team that has played twice as many games this season and was more experienced in up-tempo play.

Both teams return to action this Sunday, with the Rebels traveling to San Angelo for a rematch while MHS hosts the Permian Basin Soccer Association at 2 p.m. at the Windlands.

Michigan nails Iowa 120-103 in Top 20 pointfest

Associated Press

No one could be blamed for figuring that the showdown between 11th-ranked Michigan and No. 13 Iowa would be one of the best games of the year in the Big Ten. But Gary Grant spoiled all that logical thinking.

With Iowa expected to employ a press to keep Michigan at bay offensively, Grant got the green light from Coach Bill Frieder. Grant, hitting four 3-point shots among seven baskets, scored 18 of his 29 points in the first half Wednesday night as Michigan built a 61-36 lead en route to a record-setting 120-103 victory at Ann Arbor.

"Grant is just so terrific," Iowa Coach Tom Davis said. "He's a key, no matter who he's up against."

And Michigan, the conference co-leader, gave its talented guard considerable support. Glen Rice scored 35 points while Terry Mills and Rumeal Robinson added 18 each as the Wolverines, 7-1 in the conference and 18-3 overall, beat the Hawkeyes for the seventh straight time at Crisler Arena.

The Hawkeyes, whose five-game winning streak was snapped, dropped to 5-3 in the conference and 15-6 overall.

Davis was extremely impressed with Michigan.

"I thought what you saw tonight was a very, very good Michigan ballclub, he said. "I can't think of anything tonight they didn't do better than we did."

Its final total was 16 more points than Michigan had ever scored against the Hawkeyes in their 67-year rivalry. It was the most points ever given up by an Iowa team, topping the 113 by Wisconsin against the Hawkeyes in 1974.

The 223 combined points was the most by two teams in a Michigan game, topping the total in Michigan's 115-107 victory over Bradley in 1986.

No. 4 Duke 78, Georgia Tech 65

Duke lost twice to Georgia Tech last season, and the Blue Devils vowed that would be a one-year proposition.

"That really hurt us last year," said Danny Ferry, who scored 22 points. "We talked about it a whole lot before the game, how we weren't going to let that happen."

Kevin Strickland added 16 points as the Blue Devils improved to 15-2 overall and 5-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Duane Ferrell had 18 points and Tom Hammonds 15 for Georgia Tech, 14-6 and 2-4.

No. 6 Purdue 86, Wisconsin 62

Todd Mitchell scored 14 of his 17 points and Troy Lewis all of his 16 in the first half for Purdue, which remained tied for first place in the Big Ten.

It was the Boilermakers' 21st consecutive victory over the Badgers, who have lost 16 straight games at Mackey Arena. Purdue is 7-1 in the Big Ten and 18-2 overall.

Danny Jones topped Wisconsin with 23 points and Trent Jackson added 16 for the Badgers, who fell to 3-5 and 9-9.

No. 7. Oklahoma 73, Kansas 65

Former Midland College star Ricky Grace scored 19 points, including 16 in the second half, and Stacy King added 19 points to lead Oklahoma in the Big Eight.

"I'm proud of the way our guys played," Coach Billy Tubbs said of the Sooners, 19-2 overall and 5-1 in the Big Eight. Kansas, which fell to 12-8 and 1-4, was led by Danny Manning with 28 points.

No. 9 Pittsburgh 88, No. 20 St. John's 71

Demetreus Gore scored 19 points and Charles Smith had 18 as Pitt stayed atop the Big East Conference at 6-1 after its first victory ever at St. John's in six appearances.

The Panthers improved to 16-2 overall as they outrebounded the Redmen 33-17 while the bench outscored St. John's 20-0.

Michael Porter scored 18 points and Shelton Jones added 17 for the Redmen, who lost at home for just the third time in 42 games. St. John's fell to 5-3 in the Big East and 14-4 overall.

No. 10 Kentucky 94, Mississippi 65

Rex Chapman scored five of his 15 points in a 15-0 run midway through the second half as Kentucky raised its record to 15-3 overall and 7-3 in the Southeastern Conference.

Rod Barnes topped Ole Miss, 2-7 and 8-10, with 17 points.

No. 15 Vanderbilt 82, Mississippi State 66

Will Perdue scored 23 points as the Commodores outscored the Bulldogs 19-7 in the final 5:30 in their Southeastern Conference game.

The victory was the seventh in a row for Vanderbilt, now 14-4 overall and 7-3 in the SEC. Mississippi State, which fell to 11-8 and 3-6, got 19 points from Doug Hartsfield.

Kansas State 79, No. 16 Iowa State 68

Fred McCoy scored 25 points, including 10 in overtime, and Mitch Richmond added 24 points for Big Eight Conference leader Kansas State.

Kansas State, 13-4 overall and leading the conference at 5-0, broke a 66-66 deadlock in overtime with a 9-0 spurt.

Iowa State's fourth straight loss dropped the Cyclones to 16-6 and 2-4. They were led by Lafester Rhodes with 18 points.

No. 19 Florida 74, Alabama 64

Florida's Vernon Maxwell made 10 straight free throws in the closing minutes and Dwayne Schintzius had 18 points as the Gators maintained their Southeastern Conference lead.

Maxwell finished with 16 points, Pat Lawrence had 15 and Ronnie Montgomery added 13 for the Gators, now 16-5 overall and 7-2 in the SEC. Alvin Lee led Alabama with 17 points as the Crimson Tide fell to 10-11 and 2-7.

Signings dwindle baseball's arbitration list

NEW YORK (AP) — Tim Laudner of the Minnesota Twins, Jim Winn of the Chicago White Sox and Jim Pankovits of the Houston Astros agreed to one-year contracts Wednesday, reducing the number of players in salary arbitration to 55.

Laudner, a free agent who agreed to the Twins' offer of arbitration, will get $295,000 plus an additional $12,500 if he plays 95 games or more. Laudner had asked for $350,000 while the Twins had offered $245,000. He batted .191 in 1987 with 16 homers and 43 runs batted in last season and made $245,000.

Winn, who was 4-6 last season with six saves and a 4.79 earned-run average, had been scheduled to have his case heard Tuesday. He will get $165,000 and has the opportunity to earn $207,500 more in incentive bonuses. Winn had asked for $275,000 while the White Sox submitted $140,000. He made $162,500 in 1987.

Pankovits had asked for $150,000 while Houston offered $135,000. He made $100,000 in 1987, when he batted .230 with one homer and 8 RBI in 61 at-bats.

In late signings Tuesday, Julio Franco agreed to a two-year $2.2 million contract with the Cleveland Indians, Jeff Robinson agreed to a one-year $475,000 contract with the Pittsburgh Pirates and Frank DiPino agreed to a one-year $465,000 contract with the Chicago Cubs.

Franco, who batted .319 last season in 128 games, will make $975,000 in 1988 and $1,225,000 in 1989. The Indians have an option for 1990 at $1,250,000. Franco, who can earn an additonal $100,000 each year in incentives, had asked for $1,125,000 while the Indians offered $900,000. He made $775,000 last year.

Robinson, who made $180,000 last season, can earned an additonal $125,000 in incentive bonuses. He was 8-9 last year with 14 saves and a 2.85 ERA. He had asked for $540,000 while the Pirates offered $375,000.

DiPino had asked for $525,000 while the Cubs offered $425,000. He made $300,000 last year when he was 3-3 with four saves and a 3.12 ERA.

No decision was announced Wednesday in the case of Jose Oquendo of the St. Louis Cardinals, whose case was heard Tuesday. No cases were heard Wednesday and none are scheduled for Thursday.

Sabbath stands between Correa, Valentine

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas Rangers pitcher Edwin Correa says his desire to stay with the team may waver if he's not allowed to observe his religion's Sabbath.

Rangers manager Bobby Valentine excused Correa, a devout Seventh Day Adventist, from 5 p.m. Friday to 5 p.m. Saturday last season in respect for Correa's religious beliefs.

But Valentine may ask Correa to agree to a compromise in the arrangement during the 1988 season, his third in professional baseball. Valentine would like Correa to be available at least for the six Friday nights and Saturdays that he is scheduled to start, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Correa said he is distressed by the idea.

"That's not negotiable," Correa said. "It's something they gave me, and it would look awful if they took it away from me. That's not money. You can't take 20 percent off. It's in me."

"I have never veered in my respect and belief in Edwin's convictions," Valentine said. "No one has. I am no less aware of his beliefs this year than I was last year. But (the situation) is less comfortable than I thought it would be."

Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said options have been discussed, but that any change in Correa's schedule would come from Valentine.

"It seems premature to talk about it when Eddie and I haven't discussed it," Valentine told The Associated Press. "I don't even think it's much of a concern other than four or five dates a year."

Valentine was occasionally forced to juggle the pitching lineup to accommodate Correa, before a stress fracture shoulder injury ended his 1987 season in July after 15 starts.

Correa was 3-5 in 1987 with a 7.59 ERA.

Correa's religion calls for strict observance of the Ten Commandments, including the third, which involves honoring the Sabbath with rest, not work.

Correa, 21, said he worries that some people, including his teammates, might view his Saturday absences as a way to get out of work.

"Probably people think because I ask for the Sabbath all I do is go home and go to sleep," Correa said. "We have to get this clear. All I do is for the church."

This winter, while doing the necessary rehabilitation for his shoulder, Correa has been working for his church. He organized a choral group to help raise funds for the construction of a sanctuary and will travel next week to California to speak to other young Adventists.

Carroll adjusting to new Rocket scheme

HOUSTON (AP) — It's been a season of adjustment for the Houston Rockets' Joe Barry Carroll.

Carroll started the first 14 games of the NBA season with the Golden State Warriors, where he was booed and carried the uncomplimentary nickname of "Joe Barely Cares."

Since coming to the Rockets Dec. 12 with Sleepy Floyd in exchange for Ralph Sampson, Carroll has shown that his stoic demeanor on the court doesn't reflect his desire.

Carroll's latest gem was Tuesday night when he scored 21 points, grabbed 12 rebounds and blocked five shots in Houston's 109-99 victory over Phoenix.

Carroll has had to adjust to his new role as a bench player and as a Rocket, and he must face the basket more in relief of Jim Petersen.

"When I came in (to Houston) I had to accept that I would be facing the basket more and playing against smaller guys," Carroll said. "It takes me out of my offense a little more because I have to shoot from different places."

But Carroll is learning.

He scored 16 points and got six rebounds in Friday's 108-92 victory over Midwest division-leading Dallas.

Texas A&M 72, Texas Christian 67

COLLEGE STATION — Darryl McDonald scored 22 points and had 10 assists and four steals in leading Texas A&M over Texas Christian.

Donald Thompson added 16 points and Keron Graves 11 as the Aggies upped their season record to 13-9 and their conference record to 5-3. Rod Jacques had a game-high 25 points and 13 rebounds for the Horned Frogs who dropped to 7-12 overall and 1-7 in the SWC.

John Lewis added 13 points and Jeff Boutelle 10 for TCU.

The Aggies held a 30-26 lead at the half. TCU never led but did draw even four times, the last at 50-50, at which point A&M went on a 10-1 run to break the contest open.

The closest the Horned Frogs came after that was 66-63 when Jacques hit two consecutive 3-point shots.

A&M made 29 of 51 field goal attempts for a 56.9 shooting percentage, while the Horned Frogs hit only 25 of 59 for 42.4.

But the shorter Horned Frogs controlled the backboards grabbing 34 rebounds to 26 for A&M.

Houston 84, Rice 67

HOUSTON — Houston's Richard Hollis scored 27 points and hit five of his team's nine 3-point baskets over Rice's tight zone defense.

The Owls tried to overcome Houston's size advantage with their zone defense but Hollis and Horace Chaney, who scored 14 points and had four 3-pointers, spoiled the strategy.

The Cougars, 4-4 in SWC and 9-8 for the season, led 38-33 at halftime and never trailed in the game.

Houston hit four 3-point baskets in a five-basket charge to put the game out of reach at 68-48 with five minutes to play.

Freshman David Willie led the Owls with 15 points but he was held scoreless in the second half until the closing minute.

Ruder: SEC should have final say

Testimony advises agency should regulate index trade

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Chicago futures exchanges today rejected proposals to place the stock in futures markets under the control of a single federal agency.

Meanwhile, the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission said his agency should have the last word when there are disagreements with other federal regulators in overseeing the nation's stock and futures exchanges.

Leo Melamed, chairman of the executive committee of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, said the exchanges can correct flaws in the system by cooperating among themselves.

"The expertise necessary to achieve the cooperation exists within the exchanges themselves. Our suggested approach is through the private sector," Melamed said.

Karsten Mahlmann, chairman of the Chicago Board of Trade, said, "In our judgment, such a system of coordination would be more effective than the creation of a super agency structure."

Melamed and Mahlmann testified at the third day of Senate Banking Committee hearings into the Oct. 19 stock market plunge.

The SEC, in testimony Wednesday, had staked out a claim to be the dominant regulator of the nation's financial markets. SEC Chairman David S. Ruder wants his agency to have tie-breaking power in disputes with the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Ruder, whose agency oversees the stock markets, said on NBC-TV's "Today" show that he'd like to see leaders of stock and futures exchanges "get together to tell us what kinds of measures they think are important" to improve the functioning of financial markets.

Speaking of the current division in authority over stocks and futures markets, he said: "It's my opinion that the Securities and Exchange Commission should have what I think of as a tie-breaking function when we can't reach agreement with the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the commission that regulates the futures industry."

A day earlier, Ruder told the Senate Banking Committee that stock and futures markets are so closely linked it makes sense for stock index futures to be regulated by the SEC rather than by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

He rejected the notion — advanced by the presidential task force appointed to study the October stock market crash — that the Federal Reserve Board should coordinate financial market policy.

"The Federal Reserve lacks the necessary expertise regarding both equity and futures markets," Ruder said Wednesday during the second of four hearings by the committee on the Oct. 19 stock market plunge.

Securities & Exchange Commission Chairman David Ruder presented findings of an SEC study to the Senate Banking Committee on Wednesday.

The heads of the major stock and futures exchanges, except for New York Stock Exchange Chairman John Phelan, are testifying today. Phelan is scheduled to appear Friday.

The SEC is blaming computer strategies based on futures trading for getting the crash started and making it worse.

At a news conference, Ruder conceded that the political chances of stripping the CFTC of some of its jurisdiction are slight. He said an interim plan, which would give the SEC "tie-breaking" authority when it disagrees with the CFTC, may have a better chance.

Connally 'ad'vises Texans to save

HOUSTON (AP) — A week after his possessions were auctioned off to help pay creditors, former Gov. John Connally is advising fellow Texans to save in a television commercial for a savings and loan.

"Nellie and I worked hard all our lives to make sure our future would be financially secure," Connally, 70, says in the 30-second segment for University Savings Association.

"Well, the future is here and things haven't quite worked out like we'd planned. But that's all right, because there's no better place than Texas to start over and to save a little something — because you never know what the future might bring," he says.

Last week, Connally and his wife, Nellie, completed the sale of hundreds of items, many of them collected during his years of public service as governor of Texas from 1963 to 1969, Navy Secretary under President John F. Kennedy and Treasury Secretary under President Richard Nixon.

The four-day auction in Houston brought in nearly $2.7 million, but the money only puts a dent in what Connally owes his creditors. He filed for bankruptcy protection in July and owes from $41 million to $128 million in unsecured debts.

"We wanted 'savings stories' to be told by famous Texans who have faced some kind of adversity and yet are more committed than ever to Texas and to building a bright future here," said Dick Smith, executive vice president and creative director for Taylor, Brown & Barnhill, who is handling the $3 million campaign.

Connally at first declined to do the commercials, but agreed after meeting with advertising executives.

"The whole idea (for the commercial) was for impact, to get a Texan who has faced some kind of adversity," said Dia Blair, account executive for the advertising agency.

"He was a little wary at first (about doing the commercial)," Ms. Blair said Wednesday. "But once he read the script he agreed with what it said and pretty much considered it a public service announcement."

"He wanted people to know to prepare themselves financially for the future because you never know what can happen," she said.

Ex-Gov. Connally on the importance of saving

The trio of television commercials, which began airing during Sunday's Super Bowl, also features former Houston Oilers Coach Bum Phillips and Houston restaurateur Ninfa Laurenzo. The TV commercials will appear throughout the year in Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Austin, along with magazine and full-page newspaper advertisements.

Arco agrees to buy British independent

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — ARCO said Wednesday that it had reached an agreement to acquire Tricentrol P.L.C., an independent British oil and gas company, in a deal that values Tricentrol at more than $330 million.

ARCO's bid topped an earlier hostile offer by Societe Nationale Elf Aquitaine, France's state-owned oil company.

ARCO said it would pay 2.0 pounds, or about $3.55, a share for all of the Tricentrol's shares it does not own. Elf's offer had been 1.60 pounds, or $2.85, a share.

ARCO owns about 14.6 percent of Tricentrol, with most of it being purchased last month at prices up to 1.80 pounds a share. Reports had circulated that the company had purchased another 20 percent Wednesday. ARCO will assume Tricentrol's debt of $280 million.

In Tricentrol, ARCO will acquire reserves of 73 million barrels of oil and 587 billion cubic feet of natural gas, based on 1986 figures. The acquisition would be a significant step in ARCO's efforts to add international reserves.

Tricentrol, based in London, has major operations in southern England and in the British sector of the North Sea.

About 90 percent of ARCO's oil and natural gas holdings, which total the equivalent of 4 billion barrels of crude oil, are in the United States, primarily in Alaska.

The Tricentrol deal comes two weeks after ARCO lost a bid for Britoil P.L.C. to the British Petroleum Co.

NATURAL GAS

Some state cars switch to compressed natural gas

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Converting a dozen state vehicles to run on compressed natural gas could lead the way for a cleaner, cheaper fuel and promote the gas industry, state officials said this morning.

Organized by Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, the conversion project will include vehicles from the General Land Office, the Railroad Commission and the Department of Mental Health-Mental Retardation. Three natural gas companies have donated $10,000 each to pay for the conversion.

"We want to run a small-scale experiment with state fleet vehicles to prove that you can save real money by using compressed natural gas as a primary fuel and help create new markets for natural gas," Mauro said.

CNG costs the equivalent of about 38.5 cents per gallon of gasoline, and mileage figures are comparable, he said. Because the vehicles can cover only 150 miles per tank, the project only works for fleets in urban areas that would be close to refueling stations.

Mauro said if only 10 percent of the 5,700 state vehicles based in Austin were converted to CNG it would save the state $500,000 a year in operating expenses. "We can reduce the cost of government, while creating new markets for a major Texas product. It's wonderful," he said.

Mauro

The American Gas Association estimates that the conversion of 20 percent of the 16 million fleet vehicles in this country could increase the natural gas market 2 percent or $1 billion a year.

"If the technology can come on line fast enough, this could be a savior for the natural gas industry in Texas and the United States," said Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance.

BP makes bid for Lear

CLEVELAND (AP) — BP America Inc. has offered to buy Lear Petroleum Corp. for more than $250 million in cash and run the Dallas-based company as a wholly owned subsidiary.

Lear Petroleum gathers, processes and transmits natural gas in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. The company said it would study the offer along with a recapitalization plan presented to the company by an investor group last month.

The BP America offer would pay Lear Petroleum stockholders $2.65 per share in cash for common stock. At completion of the merger, preferred stock would be redeemed at $6 a share.

The merger would also be conditioned upon BP America's acquisition of some $100 million of Lear's outstanding indebtedness.

Lear Petroleum's full-year results for 1987 are not yet available. Through the first nine months of last year, the company had revenue of $164.5 million and a loss of $16.5 million.

Workers walk out on Mobil

By DENNIS ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

More than 1,800 Mobil Corp. workers in California, Texas and Washington walked out on strike, contending the company wants to dilute the power of the collective bargaining unit, Union officials said.

Hundreds of members of the Chemical & Atomic Workers International Union in Torrance, Calif., and Ferndale, Wash., launched their job action late Wednesday night, and were joined early today by union members in Beaumont, Texas.

The strike was called because of Mobil's plans to use managers in jobs the union believes are within its jurisdiction, said Bob Wages, vice president of OCAW International in Denver.

"Any time a company wants to run a plant with supervisory employees, it is either trying to bust a union or trying to minimize its importance so it has no power," Wages said.

"We could be out for a long time," said Bo Redmerski, vice president of Local 1-547 in Torrance.

Telephone requests for comment to Mobil's New York headquarters went unanswered early today.

About 450 refinery workers are represented by the union in Torrance. Another 180 went on strike in Ferndale, and 1,200 union members work at the Mobil plant in Beaumont, Texas.

More than a dozen pickets emerged at the Torrance refinery at 10 p.m. Wednesday, complaining that the company was attempting to exclude workers from its contract.

"Mobil made their offer contingent on ripping jobs out of the collective bargaining agreement," said Steve Sullivan, president of the Los Angeles area local.

Trader optimism boosts oil price

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices moved solidly higher Wednesday, bolstered by a report indicating generally tighter supplies, rumors of a nuclear accident in the Soviet Union and technical factors, analysts said.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for March delivery of West Texas Intermediate, closed at $17.14 per barrel, up 20 cents from Tuesday.

Trading opened on a positive note after prices rose overnight in Europe on the basis of the American Petroleum Institute's weekly report on U.S. production and supplies.

The report, released late Tuesday by the Washington-based trade organization, showed a smaller-than-expected rise in gasoline supplies, diminished stocks of heating oil, and an unexpected shrinkage in crude supplies, said James Steel, an analyst at Refco Inc. Commodities.

After this gave the market an upward push, the momentum picked up on word of a possible nuclear accident in the Soviet Union.

"The rationale was that, because of the accident, the Soviets would curtail their nuclear programs, and therefore would consume more oil and export less," Steel said.

The rumor was later said to be false.

Earlier, Ed Ryan, a trader at the securities firm Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., said traders were also encouraged by a growing market sentiment that the price of crude had reached a temporary floor at about $16.75 a barrel.

After numerous failures to dip below that level over the last week or so, the crude contract was ready to move the other way — above $17, attracting new buyers and bringing in short-covering as well," he said.

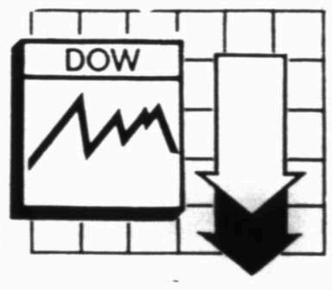
Selling wave swamps blue chips



NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market came under renewed pressure Wednesday in an afternoon wave of selling that hit blue chips hardest.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down about 40 points at its lowest levels of the day, closed with a 28.35 loss at 1,924.57.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by nearly 3 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 646 up, 942 down and 393 unchanged. Big Board volume totaled 237.27 million shares, against 164.92 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $27.65 billion, or 1.10 percent, in value.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

January auto sales climb 27.2 percent

DETROIT (NYT) — January sales of passenger vehicles were up 27.2 percent from the comparable period a year earlier, when the market was unusually weak.

Increasingly deep discounts on many domestic cars and light trucks also contributed to the increase. The current incentive programs were begun by the Chrysler Corp. in mid-November and matched by the General Motors Corp. and the Ford Motor Co. On Tuesday, Chrysler added new models to its program and increased some of the discounts to as much as $2,500.

Cars, domestic and foreign, sold at a daily rate of 30,394 in January, up 26.7 percent from the 23,991 rate of January 1987. The month had 25 selling days this year and 26 last year.

Domestic car sales ran at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 7.3 million, compared with 5.7 million a year ago; sales of imported cars ran at a 3 million rate, up from 2.4 million. January 1987 was weak because the impending elimination of sales tax deductions had led to a buying spree in December.

Big Three Auto Sales

There were nine selling days in the period this year and 10 in the period last year.

Penney opens Texas relocation center

DALLAS (AP) — J.C. Penney Co. opened a relocation center to help hundreds of its headquarters employees adjust to life in North Texas and officials said the company will move from New York to Plano without a substantial loss of talent.

The center, which was dedicated Tuesday at Penney's temporary offices in a Dallas office complex, will help ease the move of approximately 1,500 employees, who are expected to transfer in April and May.

Company officials say the move is giving J.C. Penney an opportunity to streamline its operation and bring in some new people.

J.C. Penney has received 8,000 applications for several hundred jobs at the new Plano headquarters.

Chief financial officer Robert Northam said the merchandising and marketing operations would promote hundreds of field office employees to posts vacated by New Yorkers who choose to leave their job rather than their city.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Where there's a will ...

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I was planning to have a will drawn up, naming my wife as my sole heir. Then, I learned that the stocks and other things I leave would be tied up in expensive probate. I'm told probate can take at least nine months and can cost 5 percent of the value of my estate. Is there some way around this?

Doyle

A. Sure. For openers, not everything you leave will be subject to probate.

The death benefits of insurance policies on your life will not go through probate, unless you own those policies or have retained "incidents of ownership." If your wife owns the policies and is the beneficiary, she will collect the death benefits without any probate expense or delay.

Stocks and other property owned as "joint tenants, with right of survivorship" will not go through probate and will become the property of the surviving tenant. The same thing applies to joint property owned as "tenants by the entirety," a form of registration that can be used only by a husband and wife. Joint bank accounts, including certificates of deposit, often are registered in either of these ways.

Bank accounts in beneficiary form — "payable on death to" — escape probate, as do accounts in trust form — "in trust for." So do U.S. Savings Bonds in beneficiary or co-ownership form.

You can set up a living trust, put anything or everything you own into it and keep it out of probate. As the term implies, a living trust must be established before you breathe your last. Trusts can be complicated. Most folks need guidance from good attorneys before going that route.

Don't get the idea that removing what you leave from the probate process automatically eliminates federal estate taxes and state inheritance and/or estate taxes. Everything you own when you die will be included in your estate for the purpose of "death tax" calculation. Fortunately, most estates and heirs escape those levies.

Q. My father has named me executor in his will. He's not rich, but he owns a home, two cars and $20,000 worth of mutual fund shares. What are my responsibilities as executor? Should I hire a lawyer?

A. As executor, your duties will be to have your father's will probated, collect all his assets, pay all his debts and taxes and distribute the estate in accordance with the terms of the will, as quickly as possible.

You will present the will for probate in a court, called "Probate Court" or "Surrogate Court," depending on your state. The judge will issue you papers, called "Letters of Administration" or "Letters Testamentary," again depending on the state, as evidence of your legal authority to represent the estate.

From that point on, the probate process can be complicated and time-consuming. Although some people might be able to handle this as a do-it-yourself project, you'll probably need a lawyer.

Q. In explaining what happens when an estate sells property, you wrote, "The estate will be required to pay the capital gains tax when the executor files an income tax return for the estate." That is correct. But you erred when you added, "The basis on the property sold will be the basis at which it was held by the dead person."

Section 1014 of the Internal Revenue Code says the basis of property held in an estate "steps up" to either the market value on the date of death or on an alternate valuation date. Hadn't you better print a correction.

A. Yes. Here it is. I was wrong and heard from you, as well as many other attorneys. The basis steps up on property in an estate, just as it steps up on property distributed to heirs.

Basis is important, of course, because the difference between basis and the proceeds of a sale is either a capital gain or capital loss.

CNG

"This is the cleanest fuel that there is. This would do more to solve the smog problem than anything."

Environmental Protection Agency analyses show CNG-powered vehicles produce 50 percent less carbon monoxide and 40 percent fewer reactive hydrocarbon than vehicles with gasoline-powered engines. Mauro said the U.S. Congress could give an additional boost to the program when it rewrites the Clean Air Act this year.

Entex Gas Co., one of the three underwriters, has already converted 80 of its own vehicles to CNG, said Dallas Ford, Entex vice president for marketing. "We think this seal of approval the state's going to give us on CNG is going to help us a whole lot," Ford said.

The Land Office will present the results of the experiment to the governor and the Legislature next year in an attempt to secure funding to convert more of the 5,700-vehicle state fleet. Converting 10 percent of the fleet, Mauro said, would save about $500,000 in operating costs per year.

SAVE

The amount paid Connally and the others was not disclosed, Ms. Blair said.

The Connally commercials have brought varied responses to the thrift, said Doug Valdetero, executive vice president and chief savings officer for University Savings, the state's fourth-largest thrift with 90 branches.

"Some have been negative but most are positive, " he said, "I got a call this morning from someone who wants a copy of our print ad suitable for framing."

"The message we wanted to get across is two-fold," Valdetero said. "One is the importance of saving your money and getting back to basics and putting a little aside for a rainy day or the future.

"Second is there's been a lot of misfortunes in Texas with the oil and financial industry, but we've got a can-do attitude that we can start over."

Remembered best for being wounded by the gunfire that killed Kennedy in 1963, Connally and his partner, former Texas Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes, started their real estate and development ventures at the peak of the oil boom.

When the boom went bust, it took Connally, Barnes and others in tow. Barnes also has filed for bankruptcy protection.

Under bankruptcy laws, Connally is selling all properties except his house and 200 of the 3,400 acres at Picosa Ranch, his homestead in Floresville south of San Antonio. The law allows him to keep $30,000 in personal possessions.

During the auction, Connally said he wasn't sure of his plans, except that: "I'll never run for public office again."

Experts give opinions on flavored popcorns

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Orville Redenbacher has come through again. You know all those flavored popcorns you can get at malls — 31 flavors (even root beer) or something like that? Well, Uncle Orville's company has introduced four flavored popcorns you can make at home in the microwave.

Available in Cheddar cheese, sour cream and onion, nacho and caramel, the popcorns are packaged two or three packs per box, and serve several hungry journalists as well as numerous ravenous children.

According to information sent by the company, Cheddar cheese and sour cream and onion flavored popcorns are already in supermarkets, but caramel and nacho will not be introduced for a while. The company also claims that the popcorns are "the first nationally distributed microwave popping corn flavors," are competitively priced to other microwave popcorns (without flavors, of course), offer variety, individual seasoning (well...), can be prepared in all sizes of microwave ovens and are easy to prepare. Oh, and "They taste great!"

Of course, reporters can't resist the in-depth research involved in a story, so in the interest of good investigative journalism, office popcorn lovers sampled all four flavors (even the two that are supposed to be introduced "this winter") for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

Cheddar, nacho and sour cream and onion flavored popcorn are marketed in boxes of three pouches and three "flavor packets foil-sealed for freshness." These basically are powdered flavorings you sprinkle on the popcorn after it has been popped — and which also get all over your fingers when you reach in the bag for a handful of popcorn. Caramel popcorn comes in two-pouch boxes, and its flavor packets are actually hunks of soft caramel — almost like an big, flat piece of caramel candy.

Price suggested by the company, according to its information, is between $1.99 and $2.19, about as much as Orville's other microwave popcorns, but of course that will vary by location.

In the taste-test, all the tasters agreed that the popcorns did offer variety, just like the company claimed. They also decided that the caramel was better after it had cooled off, but was still not very good (and certainly not as good as "the recipe that my mother gave me" as one writer put it); that the cheddar and the nacho were messy and not as good as the tasters thought they would be; and that the sour cream and onion was the surprising favorite, even though it too was slightly messy. (The powdered flavorings get all over your hands, your desk and if you're not careful, your new white wool skirt.)

Are they worth trying? Probably, if you have a microwave oven, like popcorn and don't mind orange powder all over your fingers. But nothing tops popcorn like butter.

BETTER BUSINESS

When you wish upon a star, check claim validity

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Recently, there have been many radio commercials that say, "People ask, 'Can you really name a star after someone?' The answer is yes ... you can honor anyone you choose by naming a real star after them."

The company making this claim is International Star Registry (Name A Star Promotion). Their printed promotional material also claims, "Registration. Star names are filed permanently in the International Star Registry vaults in Geneva, Switzerland. They are then recorded in the astronomical compendium, Your Place in The Cosmos, Volume II, and registered in the Copyright Office of the United States of America."

The Better Business Bureau's National Advertising Division decided to look into this matter recently when they received a complaint from a St. Louis, Mo., physics professor who stated that the "Registry" had no standing among American or International Star Registry, which in turn, provided them with a sample of the kit supplied to purchasers. The kit included a parchment certificate, two sky charts and a booklet written by an astronomer. The certificate records the telescopic coordinates of the assigned star and a computer program is maintained to ensure that each assigned star is unique to the individual.

This program is said to apply to North America and to associated organizations promoting a similar product in Europe.

NAD then contacted the International Astronomical Union, the sole recognized authority for assigning designations and names to celestial bodies and their surface features. The IAU confirmed that stars are not named but given numerical designations.

NAD also reviewed a statement from the Library of Congress cautioning the public that copyright registration does not guarantee the authenticity of the information contained in those works.

In continuing discussions with International Star Registry, the advertiser emphasized that the product is not presented as a serious scientific program but as a sentimental and "fun" gift.

When NAD then queried why there was a total absence of unequivocal qualifying statements in the radio commercials and promotional materials to clarify the symbolic nature of the gift, the advertiser agreed to modify its future advertising to take account of the BBB's concern.

FCL program teaches volunteers community service

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

FCL — Family Community Leadership — is a new program being offered in our county this year by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and the Texas Extension Homemakers Association.

FCL is a program that prepares two volunteers from our county to work with me to teach individuals and groups how to be involved as citizens in shaping policies that affect families and communities. It also teaches people how to develop their leadership potential.

The "Family Community Leadership" program is aimed at the effective participation of family members in resolving important family-related public issues. These public issues could include anything that affects the quality of family life, ranging from the availability of day care to educational opportunities to the adequacy of the water supply in our community. The training program does not tell people what issues to become involved with, but teaches them the leadership skills needed to deal wth any issue of importance in their community. Anyone, regardless of race, creed, national origin, sex, handicap or vereran status, can apply to be one of the two FCL volunteers from our county.

There will be two training sessions — March 1-3 at Camp Butman in Sweetwater and May 10-12 at Circle 6 Ranch Baptist Camp in Stanton. The training sessions will cost $140 for housing and meals. A group you belong to or your employer could sponsor you and pay your fee.

The persons selected to serve on the training team must be able to attend all sessions and to volunteer 96 hours between May 1988 and May 1989 to teach groups, train organization leaders or conduct special workshops using the lessons learned at the workshops. Time used for FCL team planning, preparing for lessons and teaching all counts toward the required hours.

For further FCL information, deadlines and applications, call 687-1351.

New personal grooming products offered

By DEBORAH BLUMENTHAL
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The latest personal care devices join a market that already abounds in products for consumers eager to take health and grooming into their own hands.

The devices include a new brush for the teeth that is intended to attack plaque, a heated sprayer meant to fight the common cold and a hair remover that works like multiple tweezers.

One new entry is called Interplak, an electronic plaque-removing brush. Ten tufts of bristles rotate up to 4,200 times a minute; the bristles change direction every one and a half turns, and they extend as they change direction, according to the manufacturer, the Dental Research Corp. of Tucker, Ga. The company asserts that Interplak is twice as effective as brushing. It also costs a lot more: $99 for the handle with two interchangeable heads.

Interplak has received the American Dental Association's seal of approval and was just selected as one of Fortune magazine's products of the year.

Dentists offer conditional approval of such devices.

"I don't think it does anything unusual," said Dr. Sigmund Stahl, a professor and the chairman of periodontics at the New York University Dental School. "It removes plaque, which can easily be removed by hand if a patient wants to do it." Other dentists recommended Interplak highly for people with braces.

Science has long sought to conquer the common cold and now there is a product that claims to meet the challenge: the Viralizer.

The $35 device is said to work in two ways. To relieve cold symptoms the spray dispenser delivers over-the-counter medications into the nose or throat. In an effort to kill cold viruses, it heats up inhaled air. It consists of a plastic inhaler and two over-the-counter medications, phenylephrine, a decongestant, and hexylresorcinol, an anti-bacterial agent.

But the federal Food and Drug Administration is taking a new look at the Viralizer in response to complaints from consumers and medical groups. When it was approved in 1983, FDA officials said, the company — Viral Response Systems Inc., of Greenwich, Conn. — made no claims implying that it could kill cold viruses. It was approved as a dispenser of nose, throat or mouth spray and a device to heat inhaled air.

It is a company's responsibility to notify the FDA if the claims for a product are significantly changed. When labeling or advertising does not conform to what has been approved, the device is considered misbranded. Officials at the FDA said that "an appropriate compliance action is being prepared."

Invention leads to business

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — Dennis Mitterer couldn't sleep. He tossed in bed, thinking about prying a ring from a woman's swollen finger earlier that day at his job at St. Joseph Hospital.

"I kept thinking there's got to be a better way to do this," said Mitterer, 26, a paramedic at St. Joseph and a business administration student at Elizabethtown College.

The ring had to be cut and stretched from the woman's hand, virtually ruining the family heirloom.

There was no instrument to remove the ring, although the woman's problem is not uncommon — and Mitterer had to use pliers and other clumsy equipment.

That sleepless night led to Mitterer's and partner D. Richard Delgiorno's invention of a product, plus the formation of a business — DMRD Ideas, which was founded in August.

"We just sat down and thought it out," he said.

The product looks similar to pliers but has a small, thin metal head with prongs that slide neatly under the ring, stretch it and slide it off the person's hand.

The process doesn't ruin the ring — it just stretches it — and a jeweler can simply compress it back into place, Mitterer said.

After developing their own product and going through all the stages involved in patenting and marketing it, the pair decided to set up a company to do legwork and research for other inventors.

Manufacturing the product for distribution is a matter of finding a company that can affordably assemble it, Mitterer said, adding that a company that had been interested in the product decided it was too expensive to produce.

But the young entrepreneurs say it's only a matter of time until they are successful in their search.

Vaccine discovered

Copley News Service

The greatest medical contribution of the 18th century was vaccination, discovered by an English country doctor, Edward Jenner. He noted that milkmaids contracted cowpox but never smallpox, which led him to inoculate a boy with pus from a cowpox-infected milkmaid.

DEAR ABBY

Harmony of gift plays a sour note

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Here's a shocker for you. Thirty-six years ago, when my husband and I were newlyweds, the mother of a friend gave us her piano. She was about to move in with her daughter who had a baby grand, and since nobody in her family wanted her big old upright, we took it gladly.

I played the piano and my husband was the choir director at our church, and we didn't have a piano, so we were thrilled with this gift.

The woman who gave us this piano has long passed away, but yesterday we had a telephone call from someone who claimed to be her relative. She told my husband that someone in the family wanted that piano. She gave us her phone number and asked us to call her and tell her when they could pick it up.

Abby, that piano was given to us because the owner didn't want it and didn't know what else to do with it. After 36 years she expects us to just hand it over! We don't even know these people. What should we do? Please answer soon before they pull up in front of our house with a van! — ANGRY AND IN DOUBT

DEAR ANGRY: The caller is out of tune. Call her and tell her that the piano was a gift — not a loan — and if she or other family members have a problem accepting that fact, they should check with the original owner's daughter who was your friend at the time.

No one can come to your home and demand that you hand over anything — unless it's an item that was purchased and not paid for. And if the movers show up and demand the piano, play them a chorus of "You Can't Take That Away From Me." And call the police, if necessary.

DEAR ABBY: I saw the enclosed in a Sunday tabloid:

"A man looks at a portrait on the wall and says, 'Brothers and sisters I have none, but this man's father is my father's son.' At whose portrait is he looking? I was told this little gem more than 50 years ago and am still puzzled as to the answer. — Harold W. Longua, Livingston, N.J.

"The answer: The man is looking at a portrait of his son."

Who is right? — EDWARD E. SULLIVAN, DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.

DEAR MR. SULLIVAN: The tabloid is. To make the riddle more understandable, substitute names from your own family.

DEAR ABBY: Your column reminding people to write the names and dates on the back of all photographs reminded me of the three best pieces of advice I ever got from my wonderful Italian parents, now both deceased.

Mama said, "Never work in the kitchen with the counter drawers open. Always keep a cup of the pasta water in case the pasta is too dry." And Papa said, "Always put a date on everything you write and on every piece of paper that's not going into the trash basket."

All wise advice indeed. Had I only heeded it, I would have been spared many a cleanup job, my pasta al pesto would always have been magnifico, and my tangled affairs would now be in order. — KATHERINE BACCARO, SEOUL, SOUTH KOREA

DEAR KATHERINE: Grazie!

CONFIDENTIAL TO HAPPY HUNTER IN WISCONSIN: "The creatures that want to live a life of their own we call wild. If wild, then no matter how harmless, we treat them as outlaws, and those of us who are especially well brought up shoot them for fun." (Clarence Day)

Costume jewelry may contain radium, pose health hazards

By LINDA GILLAN GRIFFIN
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — New costume jewelry made from old watch faces or hands may contain radium that could pose serious health hazards, says the Texas Department of Health, Bureau of Radiation Control, and anyone who has purchased such jewelry is advised to have it tested.

The jewelry, which includes pendants, brooches, earrings, bracelets and bolas, may be radioactive if made from old watch and clock parts painted with radium to make them glow in the dark.

Bob Free, BRC administrator for incident investigation, said the health risks could run from possible contact dermatitis to increased risk of bone cancer.

"There's a potential for release of the radioactive material from the surface of the watch dial or face through rubbing it or handling it or through other abrasive actions," said Free.

Artisans working with the jewelry are at greater risk than sales people or customers because the craftsmen stand a chance of internal contamination by radium through ingestion or inhalation.

"We've identified over a hundred retail outlets in Texas, maybe 120 150 in other states, from customer lists," said Free, "but as long as the jewelry is sitting in a display case, it's not going to be doing any harm to anyone."

The jewelry designs, popular for about two years, are sold throughout the country, and many are made by individuals or small craft operations, as well as large jewelry companies.

Free said BRC was tipped by its counterpart in Los Angeles County, Calif., which discovered radiation contamination in the home of a young woman who had been working with old watch parts.

BRC learned of the problem only last week and has since been working with other programs and agencies.

"We are advising wholesale distributors and retail outlets handling this type of jewelry to contact the BRC," said Free.

The levels of radiation involved with items containing radium require that persons handling the material meet specific license requirements as outlined in the Texas Regulations for Control of Radiation.

Anyone in Texas who has purchased watch-part jewelry can have it tested at the BRC headquarters in Austin or, beginning Feb. 1, at any of the eight Texas Department of Health regional offices.

The test is free, said Free, and the BRC will accept the jewelry, if found contaminated, for proper disposal at no cost to the owner.

Coalition wants a phone in every home

By BOBBI IGNELZI
Copley News Service

There is a surprising number of people in the United States who would like to "reach out and touch someone," but their budget just won't stretch that far.

Eight percent of U.S. households — roughly 5 million — lack phone service, largely because they can't afford it.

Now, a coalition consisting of the Federal Communications Commission, phone companies, state regulatory authorities and consumer groups has announced "Link Up America," a national program to identify those households and to get them onto the telephone network at subsidized rates.

Consumer groups contend that no one should be denied phone service today, almost as a matter of right. For low-income families, the barrier was long thought to be the monthly cost of service.

But recent studies found that heavy installation fees and deposits, which have risen rapidly since deregulation, were an even greater hurdle for these people.

Israeli troops kill 1 Palestinian, hurt at least 6 others

NABLUS, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israeli troops killed one Palestinian and wounded at least six, and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said curfews would remain in effect in the occupied territories until the violent protests end.

In another development Wednesday, Palestinians staged violent protests in the West Bank city of Tulkarem after Moslem preachers announced through loudspeakers that Israeli vigilantes were rampaging through the town.

The death on Wednesday brought to 43 the confirmed number of Palestinians killed by Israeli gunfire since rioting began in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. The violence began Dec. 8 when rumors spread that a car accident that killed four Palestinians was planned to avenge the slaying of an Israeli.

Nablus and its surroundings, home to about 120,000 Palestinians, looked like a ghost town, under curfew Wednesday for a fourth consecutive day.

Glass fragments from broken signs littered the winding, deserted streets of the Arab bazaar, patrolled by troops who said they were sleeping in an abandoned movie theater. Nablus is 40 miles north of Jerusalem.

Rabin, who toured the area Wednesday, said he will continue to use curfews to prevent Arab rioting in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Asked how long the curfew in Nablus would go on, he replied: "As long as it is required."

"The first priority is to prevent violence initiated by the population. It's easier to cope with violence by curfew than by other means," he said.

The army, Israeli media reported, hoped that a quiet Nablus would mean a quiet West Bank. But on Wednesday, troops were engaged in fresh clashes with Palestinian rioters throughout the territory.

In Tulkarem, Moslem preachers used loudspeakers in their mosques to announce that Israeli settlers had gone on a rampage through the city, 15 miles northeast of Tel Aviv, the army command said. The command said it had no reports to substantiate the preachers' claim and put Tulkarem under curfew.

An Israeli officer shot and killed a 28-year-old Arab who attacked him in Tulkarem, the command said. No identification or details were provided.

The domestic Itim news agency reported that hundreds of Palestinians barricaded themselves in Tulkarem's mosques.

In the Aida refugee camp near Bethlehem, dozens of Arab youths used slingshots to fire marbles and stones at soldiers, who responded with tear gas, rubber bullets and live warning shots before imposing a curfew. One soldier was injured by a stone that struck his nose and broke it, an army medic said.

On Bethlehem's outskirts, two Israeli civilians were hurt when protesters stoned passing cars, the army said. It said Israeli passengers threw stones back at the protesters.

Elsewhere in the West Bank, a civilian and a border policeman were injured.

In the village of Duraa near Hebron, three Arabs suffered slight wounds, the army said. It said three other Arabs were shot in the legs in the village of Silwad near Ramallah.

The clash occurred after several hundred Palestinians rushed to Silwad's high school when rumors spread that Jewish settlers were trying to grab five boys, Mohsin Salah told The Associated Press from his hospital bed in Ramallah.

Salah, 19, said 50 Israelis were at the school, eight in civilian clothes and the rest in army uniform. He said the soldiers opened fire at the advancing Arab crowd, hitting three people.

A 9-year-old boy from the Amari refugee camp near Ramallah, identified only as Khalil, was quoted by the Arab-run Palestine Press Service as saying he was beaten by Israeli soldiers "at least three times...twice as he was walking to the store and once while he was playing with friends who set a tire on fire." Rabbi Yechiel M. Leiter, a settlement leader in Hebron, said Israeli settlers were making "citizens' arrests," by picking up children they thought were throwing stones and dropping them off at the military headquarters.

Israeli media reports quoted Shilo Gal, chairman of the West Bank settlers council, as urging the civilians not take the law into their own hands.

The statement followed that of the West Bank commander, Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, who said in Nablus he would not tolerate vigilantism.

Two Israeli soldiers, one Arab guerrilla killed in morning raid

Three Israeli soldiers look down at the body of a dead Arab guerrilla killed during an early morning raid near Kiryat Yiftah, in northern Israel. Two Israeli soldiers also were killed, and one guerrilla was captured about a mile from the Lebanon border.

KIRYAT SHMONEH, Israel (AP) — Arab guerrillas with anti-tank missiles and automatic rifles infiltrated Israel from Lebanon and fought Israeli troops today, and two soldiers and one guerrilla were killed, an army communique said.

The army said the guerrilla squad had planned to carry out a hostage-taking operation in a civilian settlement along the Lebanon-Israel border.

One of the guerrillas was captured and a third Israeli soldier was injured, the army said.

It was the fourth infiltration attack since late November. Three have been from Lebanon and one from Jordan.

Fatah, the Palestine Liberation Organization's mainstream guerrilla faction, claimed responsibility for the attack.

"The operation was staged by a three-man squad of Fatah's Jerusalem battalion," said a communique distributed in Sidon on the Lebanese coast.

Israeli military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, also said the attackers were Palestinian guerrillas and carried papers identifying themselves as belonging to "Fatah, General Command, Militia Forces."

They said the guerrillas had planned to demand release of Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners held in Israeli jails, the return of four Palestinians activists deported by Israel last month and the withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied territory.

The clash was near Kibbutz Yiftah, a communal farm about a mile from the Lebanon border and 117 miles northeast of Tel Aviv. About 550 Israelis live in the kibbutz.

Boaz Eflal, 46, treasurer of the kibbutz, said residents were awakened about 4 a.m. by the sound of gunfire, which lasted for 20 minutes.

"The siren went off. I got dressed, and the men rushed to the perimiter of the settlement."

'Truth' of clashes in occupied territories in eyes of beholders

By JOHN RICE

ANABTA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Taher Hijazi pointed to a schoolyard gate, then to an adjacent orange grove. There, he said, two young Palestinians died as soldiers shot into their dusty, concrete-rimmed school compound.

But the army said the clash occurred 300 yards away, in an attempt to rescue a convoy of soldiers and civilians trapped by a crowd of young stone throwers on the Nablus-Tulkarem road.

The conflict between army reports and local witnesses about Monday's confrontation at Anabta are typical of the confusion and contradictions surrounding many of the incidents in eight weeks of unrest that have left at least 43 Palestinians dead in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Three deaths at Anabta, a town of 6,000 people 60 miles north of Jerusalem, were the first since Jan. 15, in the continuing wave of riotous protests against Israeli rule that first began Dec. 8.

The army reported that hundreds of protesters barricaded the two-lane Nablus-Tulkarim highway, trapping two civilian cars, a police vehicle and a bus carrying soldiers.

An army spokeswoman said two Israelis got out of the vehicles and fired on the stone throwers, killing two Arabs and wounding one. They said it was unclear if a soldier or civilian had shot the Palestinians. Army reinforcements arrived and wounded two more Arabs in the legs, the spokeswoman said.

Hijazi, the town's council president, said there was no roadblock on the highway, although he said he did not know if youths might have stoned the vehicles as they entered the town.

Hijazi and a municipal employee, Taher Abul-Aloon, said they saw the bus driving along the main road town on Monday at 7:45 a.m., with soldiers walking alongside, periodically firing their weapons in the air.

They said the fatal shootings occurred about two hours later, when army reinforcements arrived and surrounded a girls' and a boys' high school.

Hijazi drove a reporter to the boys' school through streets deserted because of an army curfew following a funeral procession for the third victim.

He pointed to the rocky remnants of a student-built roadblock on the Sahel Road, 100 yards of dirt street away from the main highway. Fifty yards beyond that was the concrete schoolyard wall.

Hijazi pointed to a gate, roughly 50 yards from the Sahel Road. He said 17-year-old Murad Bassam Hamdallah was shot there.

"He was standing behind my son," who was unhurt, Hijazi said.

Abul-Aloon said the other slain youth was in the orange groves even further from the main highway. Both locations appeared to be blocked by buildings and trees from the highway, making a shot from that road impossible.

They said the third fatal shooting occurred in a residential district several hundred yards away, as army reinforcements moved through the town.

The two said Asma Ibrahim Sababeh, 24, was shot in the head while standing beside her house in a crowd of people yelling and throwing stones at soldiers.

About 100 yards from the Sahel Road, 300 yards from the highway, Abul-Aloon pointed to the schoolhouse roof from which he said teen-age boys hurled rocks at soldiers, about 60 yards away.

One soldier "kicked at the rocks with his legs. We shouted at the pupils, 'Away, they will shoot!'" Abul-Aloon said.

Hijazi said he pleaded with an officer at the scene to stop his men from firing, but that soldiers disobeyed three orders by the officer to stop.

Finally, the officer himself opened fire, wounding at least two youths in the legs, the two men said.

Wednesday, several hundred Anabta residents marched through the streets under dismal gray skies to bury Miss Sababeh. Within an hour, Israeli troops reenforced a curfew. The streets emptied, windows were bolted.

Rumors may be linked to nuclear warning system

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Rumors of a Soviet nuclear accident may have been fueled by a test of an early warning system designed to spread news of an accident quickly.

Word of an accident at a nuclear power plant flashed Wednesday from the Swedish news agency Tidningarnas Telegrambyra, which later said its report was based on a rumor.

The Soviet Union denied any of its atomic power stations were malfunctioning. The International Atomic Energy Agency, the Vienna-based watchdog on the nuclear industry, said it had no confirmation of an accident anywhere in the world.

Today, a Soviet official called the report "irresponsible" and acknowledged the Chernobyl disaster may have been part of the reason for the scare.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov told a regular news briefing that the Swedish agency's original brief report "was really able to cause havoc. It was an irresponsible report."

Gerasimov noted, though, that the first reports on the April 1986 disaster at the nuclear power plant in Chernobyl in the Soviet Ukraine had come from Swedish monitors of increased radiation.

"Maybe this is a syndrome of Chernobyl," Gerasimov said.

The rumor triggered a sharp rise in the activity of companies trading in grain on the New York stock exchange, because contaminated Soviet grain could send U.S. grain exports soaring.

The dollar, traditionally a refuge for worried investors, also rose briefly on European markets before the denials brought it down again.

The reports gained credence because Swedish scientists were the first to disclose high radiation levels in April 1986, leading to the discovery of the explosion and fire at the Chernobyl reactor, which caused the deaths of 31 people.

The International Atomic Energy Agency may have inadvertently laid the ground for the false report by testing its own early warning system.

Authorities in Austria, Britain and Norway confirmed telex messages were sent to the World Meteorological Organization in Geneva using bogus information, but clearly marked as a test.

Iraq claims planes hit tanker

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq claimed its warplanes attacked a tanker off Iran overnight, and shipping executives said a freighter damaged in an earlier Iranian attack sank today in the Persian Gulf.

Iraq's High Command said in a communique today that its warplanes hit a "large maritime target near the Iranian coast" Wednesday night. By that, Iraq usually means it attacked a commercial tanker.

The statement, broadcast by Baghdad radio and monitored in Cyprus, said: "Our heroic air force continues to deprive the criminal Iranian regime of the oil supplies whose revenues are used to finance aggression on our country."

Iraq's claim could not be immediately verified.

A 15,241-ton freigther, the Panamanian-flagged Mare, was set ablaze Saturday in an attack by Iranian gunboats in the northern gulf after it discharged its cargo at the Iranian port of Bushehr.

The Iranian gunboats attacked the vessel because it was close to the coast of Saudi Arabia and they believed it was headed there, the executives said.

Duvalier blames AIDS for fall

PARIS (AP) — Jean-Claude Duvalier, the former ruler of Haiti, was quoted as saying in an interview published Wednesday that he never considered himself a dictator and that AIDS was the start of his fall from power.

In a rare interview, Duvalier was quoted as saying he left Haiti of his own accord two years ago to avoid a bloodbath.

"No one forced me to leave. It was I who made the decision," he said, according to the Feb. 12 edition of Paris Match, a weekly photo magazine.

"They had to get Baby Doc," he was quoted as saying, using his nickname. "It took time but they succeeded. Everything started with AIDS."

Duvalier has lived in France since Feb. 7, 1986, when he fled Haiti in the face of popular uprisings. His departure ended 29 years of Duvalier family rule.

Asked to explain his AIDS remark, Duvalier was quoted as saying: "We were the fourth cursed 'H' — homosexuals, heroin (addicts), hemophiliacs and Haitians."

Food slated for southern Sudan

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The first shipment of emergency food is expected to leave by week's end for war-torn southern Sudan, where thousands of people face starvation, officials said Wednesday.

The World Food Program airlift was to begin Monday, but officials experienced delays in licenses to export corn bought in Kenya to the Sudanese town of Juba, said Paul Mitchell, spokesman for the United Nations agency.

He said the first shipment is to leave Saturday.
