War crime...

Iraq using POWs as shields

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Iraq said today it had scattered its allied prisoners of war at "civilian, economic, education and other targets" — a move that recalled its prewar strategy of using foreign hostages as "human shields."

The United States, Britain, Canada and Italy deplored the Iraqi move.

"It's one more piece of evidence about the nature of Saddam Hussein," Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney told Cable News Network. "This would be a clear-cut violation of the Geneva Convention, in effect a war crime."

Cheney and Britain's chief of staff, Air Chief Marshal Sir David Craig, said the Iraqi tactic would not deflect the allied air assault.

That onslaught continued today with a constant stream of U.S. warplanes roaring off the runways of a huge air base in Saudi Arabia. At a briefing, Air Force Maj. Gen. Burton Moore said 8,100 sorties had been flown since the start of the war, though the allies were "nowhere near" their objective to knock out Iraq's Scud launching ability.

U.S. Patriot missiles, meanwhile, thwarted Iraq's boldest attack of the 5-day-old Persian Gulf war, turning back an early-morning shower of missiles ticketed for Saudi Arabia.

The overnight barrage of Iraqi Scud-type missiles was aimed at the Saudi capital of Riyadh and at Dhahran, site of a huge air base. Moore said eight were destroyed and a ninth fell harmlessly into the Persian Gulf — down from previous indications that there were 10 missiles.

One missile hit Riyadh, damaging a building in a residential neighborhood, but it was unclear whether it was a Scud that was not counted in the military's tally, a Patriot that went awry or some other rocket.

There were no injuries, the Joint Arab Command said today.

Baghdad radio said today it held more than 20 prisoners of war, the highest number yet it had yet claimed. The radio, monitored in Nicosia, today de-

County expands the welfare board; waits on BCD post

Scurry County commissioners this morning postponed filling the vacant position on the Board of County Development, but approved expanding the county welfare board.

The court accepted the resignation of Bill Parker from the BCD, but County Judge Bob Doolittle said a scheduled executive session to discuss filling the remainder of the one-year term would be tabled.

After the meeting Doolittle said a citizen had questioned whether board appointments are covered under exclusions of the open meetings act, and Doolittle said he was attempting to research the question.

Last Monday, commissioners made 23 board appointments — including the BCD. Reappointed was Jack Smartt, and Tim Rigan was named to replace Jack Denman. Parker's letter of resignation was submitted Monday afternoon.

Commissioners unanimously voted to expand the county welfare board to six members.

The court added Place 6 which will expire in 1992 in an effort to have three terms expire each year.

Precinct 4 Commissioner Jerry Gannaway nominated Doug Vineyard to Place 6 on the county welfare board, and his appointment was also approved unanimously.

In other action, commissioners voted to seek bank depository bids for 1991-92. Commissioners are seeking a two-year agreement, and bids will be opened on Feb. 11.

Glen Chauncy, executive director of the Snyder Park Club, met briefly with the court to seek help at the club's building in Winston Park.

Chauncy said the Park Club is (see COUNTY, page 8)

Smith elects to plead guilty

Mitchell Darrell Smith pled guilty this morning in 132nd District Court to a charge of delivery of a controlled substance and was to be sentenced this afternoon by Judge Gene Dulaney.

Sentencing was set for 3 p.m. The plea came before jury selection could be held in the trial, which was to have begun today.

Smith, 32, was charged in connection with a Nov. 30, 1988, incident. He is represented by Lubbock lawyer Richard Wardrup. Prosecutor in the case is District Attorney Ernie Armstrong.

Potential jurors are to report at 9 a.m. Tuesday in a competency hearing for 30-year-old Donny Carroll McClain of 3202 Ave. K, who was indicted by a Scurry County grand jury earlier this month for aggravated assault in connection with the Dec. 10 beating of his 67-year-old father.

Hess takes top honors...

Borden show winners noted

Shayne Hess went home from the Borden County Stock Show a big winner.

Hess, whose entry won the sheep division on Thursday, also entered the grand champion steer in Saturday's competition. Twenty-eight steers made the show in three divisions. Hess' entry also won the heavy weight division.

Amanda Anderson's entry took reserve grand champion.

A goat show for children ages three years to first grade followed the steer show. The grand champion goat belonged to Mikanna Herring, granddaughter of Betty House of Snyder and daughter of Beverly Herring of Gail.

A breakdown of the steer entries had Kurt Hess winning breed champion in the American Cross division. Second was Carrie Hart, followed by Shayne Hess and Kaci Poole.

In the British-British Cross Light Weight Division, Grant Key won first and reserve breed champion. Second was Justin Cox, followed by Amanda Anderson, Grant Key and Carey Cox. Hess' heavy weight British-British Cross won grand champion and breed champion. Second in the division was Will Zant, followed by Carrie Hart.

Hess also won the light weight division of European-European Cross, followed by Will Zant, Amanda Anderson and Corey Cox.

In the medium weight division, Kaci Poole took first place and breed champion. Second was won by Amanda Anderson, followed by Kurt Hess in third and fourth places, and Cody Cox.

Reserve grand champion, breed champion and first place in the division went to Amanda Anderson in the heavy weight division. She also took second place, followed by Sandy Brummett, John Brummett and Corey Cox.

Ten showmanship trophies were awarded to three outstanding exhibitors in each of the three livestock categories. One trophy went to the overall showman. Western Texas College instructor Bob Doty was the showmanship judge.

Showmanship awards went to the following:

Steers: Kaci Poole, elementary; Justin Cox, junior high; and Will Zant, high school.

Barrows: Corey Cox, elementary (see BORDEN, page 8)

Lions convention dates moved a week later now

Lions Club spokesman C.A. McCown said the local club has managed to change the date of the District Lions International Convention here, resolving a conflict that would have left visitors to the city searching for available accommodations.

McCown said the District 2-T-2 Convention has been moved from April 4-6 to April 11-13. It will be held in the county coliseum.

"It was changed in order to allow Snyder to have two major activities," said McCown, who noted that the club will have to find another speaker for the event.

It was discussed in a Jan. 10 tourism and retirement committee meeting that the convention and a spring UIL drama event were scheduled for the same days. At that time, committee chairman reported that the drama competition, a zone competition involving 4A and 5A schools, was expected to fill 75 percent of the available motel rooms in Snyder.

McCown said at the meeting that the Lions convention would require as many as 100 rooms.

According to the chamber, the city has 295 available rooms in eight motels.

The Lions convention date was scheduled in July of 1990.

Q—Was Snyder High School reprimanded for using an ineligible band student last semester?

A—No, a regional committee determined that since Snyder ISD had turned itself in and because there was no apparent intent to violate the rules that no penalty would be imposed.

In Brief

Ex-POWs say:

AUSTIN (AP) — The American pilots who gave statements against the Persian Gulf war over the weekend probably were tortured or threatened by their Iraqi captors, say two former Vietnam War POWs living in Austin.

"Whatever comes out from Iraq, the confirmation that these aviators are alive is the best news. It doesn't matter what comes out of their mouths," said Terry Uyeyama, a retired Air Force officer who spent five years as a prisoner during the Vietnam War.

"There has to be a lot of intimidation, maybe even a lot of physical abuse," he said.

Robinson Risner, a retired Air Force officer who was confined for more than seven years in North Vietnam, agreed.

4 sons, 3 in Gulf, are 'expert tankers'

KILLEEN, Texas (AP) — From their home atop a ridge looking over the expansive Central Texas plain, Robert Porter wonders what the view is like in the desert.

He remembers taking his boys out in his tank to pick up spent ammo on a training ground much like that of nearby Fort Hood. "These kids was raised in the military," said Porter, a retired tank commander who served in Korea and Vietnam.

"My oldest son, from the time he was two years old, that's all he talked about," said Porter's wife.

Connally sees victory in Persian Gulf

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Texas Gov. John Connally, who helped free a planeload of American hostages from Iraqi captors late last year, says he is optimistic that the United States and its allies will defeat Saddam Hussein, but only after "a long struggle."

"Winning the peace will be much more difficult than winning the war," Connally said. "We have divided the Middle East into two camps. And these rifts will not be easily healed."

Connally has strongly opposed military intervention in Iraq and said such a campaign could ruin President Bush much as the Vietnam War helped cause the downfall of Lyndon Johnson.

"I thought there were more moves that we could have made from a diplomatic point of view that might have precluded an all-out invasion," he said. "But you can't rewrite history."

Now that war has begun, Connally said he supports the troops and commended the precision of the early air strikes. But he said if the fighting is drawn out it could result in heavy casualties.

Connally served as U.S. Treasury Secretary under Johnson and was wounded as he traveled in a motorcade alongside President John F. Kennedy when the president was assassinated in Dallas in 1963.

Connally flew to Baghdad with Houston businessman Oscar Wyatt in early December to meet with Saddam and negotiate the release of a planeload of American hostages.

Many of the hostages had been held as "human shields" at strategic locations in Iraq. Days after the Houston pair were told they could take some hostages home, Saddam agreed to free all remaining foreigners.

Shirley. "He was going to be like his dad in a tank."

Now, Bob Porter, 33, his brother Larry, 32, and their sister's husband, Ronald Searls, 36, are driving tanks toward the Kuwaiti-Saudi Arabian border. The Porters' third son, David, 28, is stationed in Korea but could join his brothers.

"You couldn't scare them with a cannon," Porter said.

But he and his wife have some worries. They know the likelihood of American casualties increases if the war with Iraq involves ground forces.

"I don't know if either one of us could handle it if something happened to one of our kids," Porter said.

Mrs. Porter said she's no different from mothers whose children are police officers. "You take one day at a time," she said. "I know the boys are well-trained. I feel confident they'll all get home OK."

All four of them became tank commanders because of Porter, who received a medical discharge from the Army in 1966 when he suffered a heart attack. Bob, Larry and David enlisted after high school. Searls joined the Army 2½ years after marrying the Porters' daughter, Gwen.

The four enjoyed a spirited rivalry as they moved up in rank and skill. "They all think those tanks were the greatest things that were ever invented," Mrs. Porter said.

All graduated from a master gunner school at Fort Knox, Ky., considered the toughest tank

Hispanic dropout rate increase worries educators

WASHINGTON (AP) — An increase in the dropout rate among Hispanic high school students over five years has education leaders worried that a new underclass in the U.S. economy may be in the making.

"The long-term costs of a failure to adequately educate large numbers of Hispanics in this country is enormous," the American Council on Education said Sunday in its ninth annual report on the status of minorities in education.

Hispanics, despite their rapid growth in the U.S. population, "are grossly under-represented at every rung of the educational ladder," the report said.

High school completion rates for Hispanics ages 18 to 24 dropped from 62.9 percent in 1985 to 55.9 percent in 1989, it said. And just 78.7 percent of 16- and 17-year-olds are in school, compared with 91.6 percent of the total population, it said.

"Without immediate intervention to educate and train not only those in school now, but those who already have left school, (Hispanics) may face serious obstacles to full participation in the national economy," the report said.

Among Hispanic subgroups, Mexican Americans had the highest school dropout rate in 1989, 57.3 percent.

training in the Army.

All attained the rank of sergeant first class and are platoon sergeants. In addition to commanding their own four-man tanks, the sons are second in command to the lieutenant who leads a platoon of five or six tanks.

"They're definitely expert tankers," Porter said.

The four command the Army's most advanced armored weapon, the M1A1 Abrams. The 60-ton tank, which has a 120mm main cannon and reaches a top speed of 45 mph, has been modified with special ventilators for protection from chemical weapons.

"You can shoot on the move and hit your target," Porter said.

In the days when he was a tanker, "We had to stop."

The Porters' sons have not had an easy day since they deployed. One son wrote that his unit had moved so far from a military base that the troops did laundry by digging a hole in the sand, lining it with a trash bag, filling the bag with water and jumping in to wring out the clothes.

But Porter said he worried more about his children when they were in high school. He recalled staying up nights until they returned from dates or dances.

"I haven't lost any sleep on them since they've been in the Army," Porter said. He confessed, though, to getting up every few hours to get an update from television during the first nights of the war.

The sons are with different units in Saudi Arabia and haven't seen each other. Gwen told her parents that Ron had called Friday and said he knew where Bob and Larry were and that they were OK.

One of Mrs. Porter's biggest fears is how her sons will be affected if they have to kill a civilian.

"If they take an innocent life, that would really bother them," her husband said. "That happens in combat."

Amendment's defeat won't deter abortion opponents

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Abortion opponents say the defeat of an amendment to the city charter declaring "human life begins at conception," means nothing.

In fact, the defeat will serve as a "laboratory test" for the pro-life movement, said Bill Price, president of the 100,000-member Texans United for Life, the state's largest anti-abortion organization.

Price said municipal law changes are "the next frontier of the pro-life movement."

Voters in this heavily Roman Catholic city Saturday resoundingly rejected the charter change, with 62 percent, or 18,487 voters, opposed to the amendment. There were 10,775 votes in favor of the amendment.

"I think it was a good learning experience for us," Price said. "It's the first time that we had a question like this on the ballot, I believe, in the state of Texas."

Price said anti-abortion forces overreached and asked the voters to approve "the absolutist pro-life position" when in fact they should have asked for a lesser measure, such as a parental consent law.

Similar bids may be made within the coming year or two, perhaps in El Paso or Tyler, Price said.

"I think we're going also to see it come down to the municipalities as groups like ours become frustrated with attempts to pass legislation on a statewide basis," said Price, adding that Gov. Ann Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock do not favor restrictions.

Previously, abortion opponents focused their attention on the congressional and state legislative levels.

Kim Gandy, national secretary-treasurer for the National Organization for Women, said the Corpus Christi election is just the latest in a long line of attempts by pro-lifers to legislate their beliefs.

"The anti-abortion forces are trying everything," she said. "Every time they think of something new, they try it out somewhere. I think people are getting tired of it."

Kathie Roberts, executive director of the Texas Right to Life Committee, called the defeat a "minor" setback.

"We'll just keep on truckin', the same thing we've been doing since 1970, when we saw it (the legalization of abortion) coming," Ms. Roberts said.

The defeat in Corpus Christi does not mean that similar efforts in other cities would not pass, Ms. Roberts said.

But abortion rights supporters disagree.

They say the vote shows Americans don't want City Hall interfering with their personal beliefs.

"I think it's a very strong message to these people that they've got to stop trying to cram their religious beliefs down our throats via government," said Nan Pillinger, president of Corpus Christi's League of Women Voters and a vocal opponent of the amendment.

Abortion battles have consumed this Gulf Coast city of nearly 300,000 for the last year. The city's name is Latin for "body of Christ."

Mild lupus should be monitored

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My doctor says I have borderline lupus. He didn't tell me what to do for it, and I'm very worried. Can you fill me in?

DEAR READER: Lupus is one of several autoimmune diseases, when, for unknown reasons, people become allergic to their own normal tissues. This causes inflammation in various body organs, including joints, lungs, lymph glands and kidneys.

Like any other disease, lupus can be mild or severe. In the former, there are few if any symptoms. However, blood tests show anti-nucleus antibodies, proteins that indicate the immune system is forming compounds against the body's cells. Severe cases of lupus, on the other hand, are marked by painful arthritis, rash and chest pain, shortness-of-breath, swollen glands and renal malfunction. In its most advanced form, lupus is fatal.

I conclude from your question that you probably have had a positive blood test for lupus, without any symptoms. This situation is quite common and requires no treatment. However, your health should be monitored regularly (with blood tests for worsening kidney function) because your mild form could, in time, progress to a more serious disorder that would require therapy, such as cortisone.

Mild lupus usually remains relatively inactive for years; it can become progressive, however, under three circumstances: pregnancy, infection or reactions to drugs — especially antibiotics. Therefore, pregnant women with mild lupus must have particularly close medical supervision (with cortisone treatment if the condition worsens), and infections must be vigorously treated with care because of the possibility of an allergic reaction to the drugs used.

Your doctor probably failed to inform you more fully of the disease because nothing needs to be done for it at this time. Nevertheless, I think you should return to him (or her) for a more complete explanation of lupus; this information would remove much of the apprehension you are experiencing.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Lupus: The Great Imitator." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 with their names and addresses to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My husband has been told he is suffering from Brown-Sequard's syndrome. He still has numbness on one side, walks with a limp and is in a great deal of pain after four months. What should we expect regarding possible recovery?

DEAR READER: Brown-Sequard's syndrome is a permanent neurological abnormality that follows injury to the spinal cord, during which part of the cord is severed. The condition is marked by paralysis and pain on the same side as the injury, coupled with numbness and loss of temperature sensation on the other side. The syndrome is untreatable.

However, your husband can be helped by an intense program of rehabilitation, including physical therapy, psychological counseling and pain control (with analgesics or from a pain clinic).

Your Birthday

Jan. 22, 1991

Objectives that were important to you last year should not be written off, even if they didn't provide you with the results you had desired. Things should improve in the times ahead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your possibilities for success will be substantially enhanced if you anticipate the outcome of events positively instead of negatively today. Don't worry about things that may never happen. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be on guard today so that you're not pressured into making a loan to someone who never returns what is borrowed. If you are firm now, you won't feel stupid later.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It won't enhance your reputation today if others perceive you as too self-serving. You can chalk up points, however, if you're as truly concerned about those with whom you're involved as you are about yourself.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try not to be a victim of your own faulty memory today by repeating a prior mistake which caused you complications. Learn from the past; don't relive it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be selective in regard to your social involvements today. If you have to associate with people who make you feel uncomfortable, it could cast a shadow over an entire event.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) This is one of those days when you might not leave well enough alone in your commercial affairs. Don't turn a good deal into a bummer by making unnecessary changes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't let the trappings of power or outward appearances intimidate you today. When you confront the things you fear, you'll find they are nothing but figments of your imagination.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Disappointments are likely today if you attempt to manipulate others into serving your purposes. They are apt to do the opposite of what you desire.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Fixity of purpose is an admirable intention, but sheer stubbornness has no redeeming value at all. If you are unable to distinguish between the two, a great deal of effort might be expended in vain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Responsibilities that require attention might be neglected in favor of pleasurable pursuits today. Agenda shifts of this nature now will mean a heavier workload later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You're likely to be an impulse buyer and this is well and good, provided you're able to recognize a true bargain. In your case, these insights might be blurred today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your perspective will determine whether you think this is a good day or a bad day. If social endeavors aren't important, but material things are, you should be pleased with the trend of events.

Man killed after high-speed chase

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A Fort Worth man was shot to death during a scuffle with a police officer at the conclusion of a high-speed chase, police said.

Douglas Wyatt, 20, died early Sunday after he was shot once by Officer John Marsh, according to Fort Worth police Lt. Alvin Alcon.

Officers said Wyatt attempted to grab the officer's weapon during a fight at the end of a chase. Officer Marsh had answered a report about a stolen vehicle and saw a stolen pickup truck cross the median and speed away.

Witnesses said Wyatt and another man jumped from the truck before it jumped a curb and struck an embankment. Officer Marsh then chased the driver into an apartment complex where two security guards joined the chase.

"Apparently the officer managed to get one cuff on the suspect, then the suspect apparently made a lunge for the officer's gun," Lt. Alcon said. "The officer said that's when he fired one time."

Arlington police spokesman Dee Anderson said Fort Worth police investigated the shooting and Arlington internal affairs officers will review the case later.

Founder of taping for blind dies

HOUSTON (AP) — Robert G. Levy, a Houston businessman who founded the national program Taping for the Blind, has died. He was 91.

Levy died Friday of an undisclosed illness.

A pioneer in suburban fashion merchandising and the owner of two Houston clothing stores, Levy gained national recognition from a project he began as a volunteer.

In 1967, Levy was reading for a blind student at the University of Houston when it occurred to him it might be possible to extend such a service nationally.

Levy persuaded officials at the Library of Congress to advise him on starting a local program to produce tape-recorded materials for blind people.

In 1968, Levy founded Taping for the Blind, funding it with a personal, no-interest, $500 loan. The organization now is described as the largest producer in the nation of talking books.

A native of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Levy had lived in Houston since 1939. He was a veteran of World Wars I and II.

Vets watch war with mixed emotions

DALLAS (AP) — Painful memories of some Vietnam veterans have been rekindled by war in the Persian Gulf, with some saying the United States could be falling into a trap similar to that in which they found themselves.

But other Vietnam veterans said they wish they were on front lines of Operation Desert Storm.

"Twenty years later, I still don't know why I was there," said James Fowler, who was in the Army's 198th Infantry. "I feel like this is another political war like Vietnam."

The 42-year-old Dallas collections manager said he was heartened by the military strategy in Iraq. But Fowler, who is black, said he believes this war will cut deeply into the minority community.

Curtailments in federal education grants in recent years encouraged many poor youngsters to volunteer for the armed forces, he said.

After the first bombs dropped on Baghdad, Fowler gathered with other Vietnam veterans.

"They were saying, 'My son's not going. My son's not going,'" he said. "They better build more prisons, because our sons AREN'T going."

Many veterans said they were concerned with the nation's early reactions and some feared that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein would use chemical warfare and send terrorists to America's shores.

A 29-year veteran of the Marine Corps, Waco resident Cliff Fagen, said he thinks Iraq made a mistake by attacking Israel.

"I really think Israel will attack or retaliate," said Fagen, adding he would approve of an Israeli attack on Saddam.

A Dallas school board member and Vietnam veteran smiled from his bed at the Veterans Administration Medical Center as news of war-blared from television.

"I'm proud of the way the country's approaching this. They're going in to win," said Ed Grant, who had checked in for cardiac tests.

"I'm not a fan of war. But I'm so very pleased that the participants of this event have the united support of the country behind them."

"We didn't have that," said Grant, 46.

An Amarillo resident who was a door gunner on helicopter gunships during Vietnam said he could be called back up to duty.

"I could get called myself," said Gene Velasquez, a Vietnam veteran who is now in the Army Reserves.

"It's not possible to say exactly what your reaction is going to be under fire," Velasquez, 43, said. "Some people handle it better than others. It's a difficult situation when you're under those conditions."

Dallas lawyer Bob Murrill, 45, watched the war's beginnings, like many veterans. He said he was encouraged by this declaration from President Bush: "This will not be another Vietnam. Our troops will have the best possible support in the entire world. And they will not be asked to fight with one hand tied behind their back."

Murrill served two tours of Vietnam starting in January 1968. That's when he said he learned about political malingering during the infamous North Vietnamese Tet offensive.

"One thing that's refreshing to me is that the senior leadership in this country is proceeding in a manner that's really going to protect more lives," said Murrill, a former rifle platoon leader and company commander with the 82nd Airborne in Vietnam.

Lee Moore, 41, said he wished he could still serve.

X-rays are easier

By James Jacoby

X-ray vision would simplify the defense of four hearts. West would lead ace and a spade, ruffed by East. East would play ace and a club, and West would win the club king and give East another ruff. Down two.

Since West could not look through the backs of the cards, he made the normal lead of the diamond jack. Proper signaling from that point still enabled the defense to prevail.

East played a discouraging three of diamonds on the opening lead. Declarer won the ace, played a heart to dummy's 10 and cashed the king of hearts. East following with the deuce and then the seven. In the defensive methods used by East, he would have high-low in trumps if he had held three of them. Declarer now led a spade back to his king. West held off but won the next spade as East discarded the diamond four.

It was now apparent that East held the club ace. (Without it, East would have thrown a low club to let West know there was no future there.) But a special defense was still required. If West led a low club, declarer would play low from dummy and East would have to take the ace, eventually making the queen of clubs in dummy a winner.

Instead West switched to the club jack. South was now helpless; if he covered with dummy's queen, East would take the ace and lead back through declarer's 10-7 to score three tricks in clubs. If he ducked in dummy, East would play low also, and the defenders would continue clubs with the same result.

James Jacoby's books "Jacoby on Bridge" and "Jacoby on Card Games" (written with his father, the late Oswald Jacoby) are now available at bookstores. Both are published by Pharos Books.

Board puts off decision

AUSTIN (AP) — Nomination of a new Texas education commissioner has been postponed for another week, with state education officials saying they need to gather more information about the candidates.

Members of the State Board of Education on Sunday concluded interviews with each of the seven finalists for the position.

But members said they will meet again to continue the process next Sunday, when some said they hope to select a commissioner to oversee the $14 billion per year public school system.

"We haven't narrowed it down at all," Monte Hasie, chairman of the school board, said Sunday.

The board's nomination will be submitted to Gov. Ann Richards, who will appoint the commissioner. The Senate then will consider whether to confirm her appointment.

The post is being vacated by Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby, who is retiring after nearly six years as commissioner.

Board member Bob Aikin of Commerce said a consulting firm hired by the board will gather more background information on the candidates this week. Then, he said, the board probably will hold additional interviews.

Aikin said the board also may have to increase the commissioner's salary from its current level of about $116,590.

"We may very well have to work out an improved compensation package," he said. "The truth of the matter is, we have underpaid the commissioner for quite some time."

The remaining candidates are Thomas Anderson Jr. of Austin; David Hornbeck of Baltimore; Lionel Meno of Albany, N.Y.; Blandina Ramirez of Washington; Victor Rodriguez of San Antonio; J. Theodore Sanders of Washington; and Michael Say of Humble.

Edberg, Lendl win quarterfinal berths

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — When you have power, finesse and confidence, such as Stefan Edberg possesses, you can beat even the biggest hitters and avoid beating yourself. The top seed needed every little touch — and overcame a little tightness in the throat — to beat American Jim Courier at the Australian Open.

The two-time champion reached the quarterfinals for the seventh consecutive year with a 4-6, 6-0, 6-4, 5-7, 6-2 victory Monday in a center court meeting that sometimes more resembled a shootout than a tennis match.

Both these guys are slammers, with Courier perhaps the hardest hitter in the game. But Edberg, last year's runner-up here and champion at Wimbledon, had more to his game when it counted to oust the 16th seeded despite mammoth errors on the final points of Courier's two winning sets.

"I think I'm a much better tennis player than I was a few years ago and playing in a fifth set is a matter of experience," Edberg said. "Today I was able to bring out that advantage in the fifth set. It is a matter of confidence."

Edberg raised his five-set record to 18-10. Courier now is 1-5, with the only victory a 7-6, 3-6, 2-6, 6-0, 7-5 win over Edberg in the final of the 1989 Swiss Indoors.

Breezing into the quarters for the sixth year in a row was defending-champion Ivan Lendl.

The third seed took command, winning seven games in a row at the end of the first set and the beginning of the second, losing just seven points in that span, and beating 13th-seeded American Aaron Krickstein 6-2, 6-2, 6-1.

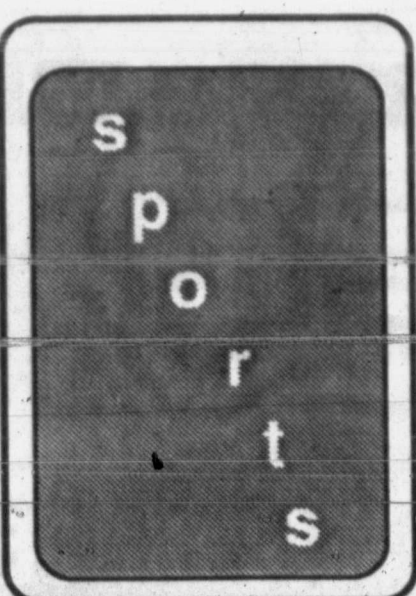

Edberg will go in Wednesday's quarterfinals against Jamie Yzaga of Peru, who eliminated three-time champion Mats Wilander in another five-setter, 7-5, 2-6, 6-1, 3-6, 6-1.

Wilander, now 47th in the world after taking some time off from tennis, made too many errors and Yzaga took advantage with a devastating forehand.

In another fourth-round match between unseeded players, Yugoslavia's Goran Prpic beat Jan Siemerink of the Netherlands 7-6, 6-7, 6-0, 7-6. It was played on Court 1 but just as well could have taken place in a hospital ward.

Prpic has a badly damaged knee and has been told that one wrong move could end his career. He also was suffering with a fever and planned to go to the doctor just in case. Siemerink, meanwhile, was playing with a sore shoulder that required massaging from the trainer on changeovers.

Prpic meets Lendl next.

Bahr's five field goals help put NY Giants in Super Bowl

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For once, a team other than the San Francisco 49ers and a quarterback other than Joe Montana made the critical big plays at the end of the game.

That team was the New York Giants and the quarterback was career backup Jeff Hostetler, who beat the 49ers 15-13 Sunday, ending San Francisco's dream of a third straight Super Bowl title.

"A disaster," said San Francisco linebacker Mike Walter.

Added New York nose tackle Erik Howard, another of the game's big play makers:

"It was our obligation to keep them from making history. Let some other team make history, not the 49ers."

There were heroes other than Hostetler.

Bills blast LA for title

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — The no-huddle showed no mercy.

And when it came to stopping Buffalo's hurry-up attack, the Los Angeles Raiders had no clue.

From the very first drive, the Bills marched all over the Raiders and toward Tampa for their first Super Bowl.

"I think we surprised a lot of people," Jim Kelly said after guiding the non-stop attack to a record-setting 51-3 victory for the Bills first championship since winning the AFL crown in 1965. "We knew we had it and we just surprised Los Angeles a little bit. They didn't think we were going to be that tough."

And, Kelly promised, the Bills will be just as tough in the Super Bowl against the Giants.

He's bringing along Thurman Thomas, the NFL's total offense leader the last two seasons, who destroyed the Raiders. And James Lofton, cut by Los Angeles in 1989 but now revitalized at 34. And Andre Reed, the most dangerous receiver in the AFC.

"I have so many weapons," Kelly said after going 17-for-23 for 300 yards with two TDs. "I feel comfortable calling on any of them."

Thomas, of course, was the main weapon in a 502-yard attack. He had 138 yards rushing, including a touchdown, and 61 yards receiving. He ran inside and out through massive holes opened by an outstanding line, caught passes on circle patterns, screens and flares, and devastated the Raiders (12-5), who had the AFC's No. 2 defense.

"I don't think you really dream about putting that many points up on the scoreboard," Thomas said after his team set a playoff record with its 41 first-half points and tied the AFC Championship game mark with 51. "I think what you dream about is just winning the game, no matter if it is 3-0 or 24-7."

Things got ugly for the Raiders early and never improved. They needed to call timeout after just five plays, which produced 46 yards, to figure how to deal with the no-huddle that Kelly runs so devastatingly well.

"I don't know how they did it," linebacker Jerry Robinson said. "It was like clockwork; everything they did was just like clockwork. They were marching down the field. It didn't take a genius to figure out they were going to score."

The Raiders had no defensive geniuses this day, however. Kelly hit Lofton for a 13-yard touchdown on a broken play after the quarterback dropped the snap in the shotgun.

After the Raiders got their only score, a 41-yard field goal by Jeff Jaeger, Buffalo struck again. And again. And again.

"I heard a lot of their defensive players say it was overrated," Lofton said of the no-huddle. "It might be... but the thing that we do with the no-huddle is execute so well."

"Jim has a great feel for the passing game," added Lofton, who also had an 8-yard score in his five receptions for 113 yards.

Among those running plays were three short ones for scores by Kenneth Davis, tying an AFC Championship record. The best run of the day was by linebacker Darryl Talley, who scampered 27 yards with one of five interceptions of Jay Schroeder, equaling yet another AFC record.

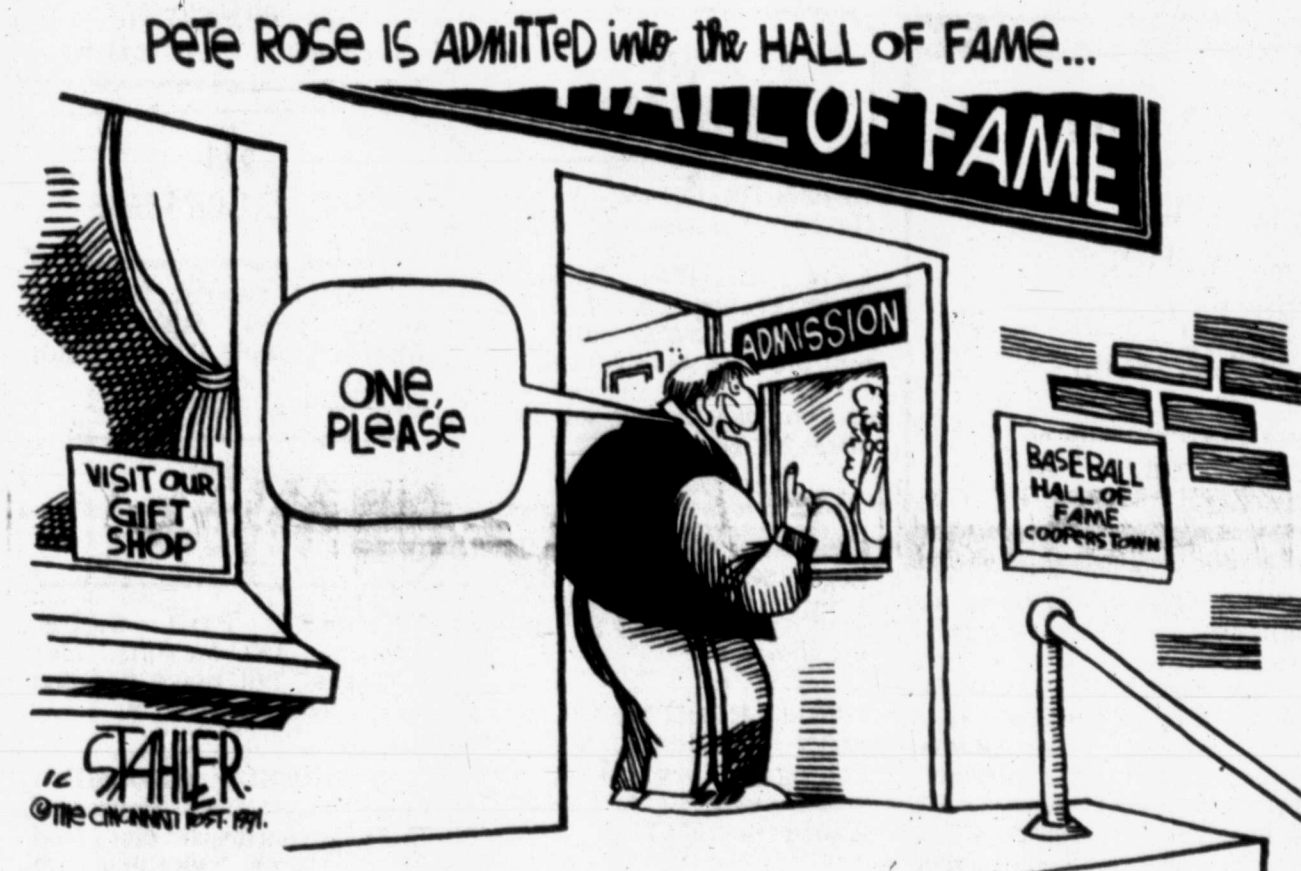

"If they play like they did today," the Raiders' Howie Long said, "there's nobody who's going to beat them, plain and simple."

The Raiders certainly weren't going to with Marcus Allen gaining just 26 yards going solo at tailback because Bo Jackson was out with a hip injury. Los Angeles had no chance because Schroeder, who has a history of collapsing in pressure situations, came unglued, going 13-for-31 for 150 yards.

Clemens arrested in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens maintains a weekend fracas with Houston police was the result of "an unfortunate misunderstanding," his agent said.

Clemens, 28, was arrested with his brother, Gary, 39, at the Bayou Mama's nightclub on Houston's westside early Saturday after the two allegedly became involved in a shouting match with other patrons.

Alan Hendricks, one of the two-time Cy Young Award winner's agents, said he believed the matter would be cleared up soon.

"Roger has always been a law-abiding citizen with a number of close friends who happen to be police officers. In fact, he had a number of calls from officers on the Houston police force Saturday, all of whom rallied behind him," Hendricks said in a prepared statement over the weekend.

Houston police spokesman Dan Turner said when off-duty Officer L. Oviedo, who was working as a club security guard, attempted to break up the fighting group starting with Roger Clemens, the brothers allegedly got into a wrestling match with the officer.

Turner said Gary Clemens allegedly shoved the officer and when Oviedo tried to arrest him, Roger Clemens jumped on the officer's back and started choking him.

Both men were arrested for aggravated assault on a police officer and released on $2,000 bond about 1 p.m. Saturday after an 11-hour stay in jail.

"There's no question Roger's denying that he was involved in any chokehold of an officer," Hendricks said. "What I heard was when the officer was scuffling with Roger's brother, Roger patted him on the back and tried to resolve it that way, to try to get the officer to resist this confrontation."

"It was all an unfortunate misunderstanding."

Stress of war takes toll on military parents

By The Associated Press

ship discharge.

When Tennessee authorities found them, the three kids were alone in a wreck of a house, scared and dirty and almost as hungry as the starving dog tethered to the tree outside.

Their dad had shipped out for Saudi Arabia a week earlier, but not before tacking a note to the wall telling them how to get money from the bank machine with his automatic teller card.

An uncommon tale, but a cautionary one, say family advocates who worry that some military kids may be falling through the cracks of a system never put to a wartime test and already weakened by the strain.

Problems include abuse and neglect at the hands of caregivers or spouses made single by a gulf deployment, failure of the best-laid child-care plans and disastrous disintegration of arrangements made in haste.

"Child abuse has been a problem in military families for years, and the military is very much aware of this," said Nancy Peterson of the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse in Chicago. "Caring for kids, and finding adequate care under these circumstances, causes a lot of stress on parents."

Some military family advocacy programs that deal with child and spouse abuse, set up on every military installation, have been gutted by deployment as social workers are shipped out along with everyone else.

"What we don't want to do is say, 'Hey, we've left everybody in the lurch' — but we have," said a family advocacy official at the Pentagon who asked not to be identified. "We've still got lots of people who are scrambling to do what we need to do. But we've got new problems we didn't know we had."

Reserve and guard families are of special concern, since they might not have access to a base where they could get help.

The Defense Department spokesman said there are 55,000 single parents in the U.S. armed forces who must designate a legal guardian for their children in the event of active duty.

Military couples shipped out together face similar problems; for Michelle and Rodney Lawrence, the choice they made turned into a parent's nightmare.

The Lawrences, both stationed at Fort Hood, Texas, left Tony, 4, Brandon, 2, and 5-month-old Rodney in Fairdale, W.Va., with a friend's mother when they were unable to find care in Texas.

The babysitter, Demerise Ann Smith, 39, was arrested Thursday at her home on a murder charge in connection with the July 1989 drowning death of her disabled husband.

Pfc. Michelle Lawrence was reunited with her children Friday in Beckley, W.Va., and said she would ask the Army for a hard-

Gulf War jargon

By The Associated Press

AWACS — Airborne warning and control system.

chaf — Metal foil dispensed by warplanes to confuse enemy radar.

collateral damage — Military jargon for civilian deaths and injuries.

ECM — Electronic countermeasures designed to blind radar and other battlefield sensors. Also, ECCM electronic counter-countermeasures.

Exocet — French-made anti-ship missile. Also known as a "fire-and-forget" weapon because it guides itself to the target.

Frogfoot — Iraq has about 60 of these SU-25 attack planes (range 470-780 miles) similar to the upwards of 100 American A-10 Thunderbolts deployed by the Allies. The A-10 is a slow (449 mph) and low-flying tank-killer.

golden BB — Soviet doctrine the Iraqis are said to emulate in air defenses: if enough projectiles fill the sky in an air raid, a few will hit the target.

LANTIRN — Low altitude navigation and targeting in infrared for night. One model of the F-16 fighter, called the "Night Falcon" for its advanced night-flying capability, has "pods" underneath that hold LANTIRN systems.

Mig — From Mikoyan-Gurevich, one of the main Soviet jet fighter factories named after two of its plane designers.

Mirage — The F-1 French combat jet from which Iraq fired an Exocet missile that hit the USS Stark and killed 37 of its crew in May 1987. Iraq has about 90 of these one-seaters with a range of 260 to 860 miles.

Scud — Soviet-made SS-1, a liquid-fueled, surface-to-surface ballistic missile, whose code name is a NATO designation.

sebkha — Arabic word for underground river. Sebkhahs that turn the ground into quagmires impossible to cross with tanks lie near the Saudi border and south of Kuwait City.

stealth — Term applied to aircraft designed to elude enemy radar. Unofficial nicknames include Frisbee (for the F-19) and wobbler-bobbin.

SAM — Surface-to-air missile. Iraq has about 10 different types, including Soviet-built SA-6s, shoulder-fired SA-7s, French-German-made Rolands and American-made modernized Hawks captured in Kuwait.

wadi — Arabic word for dry ravine or valley. The Iraqis have set up a defense line behind the wadi that runs along Kuwait's border with Iraq.

Wild Weasel — The twin-seat F-4G fighter whose main mission is electronic countermeasures that can blind enemy radar. The allies have two dozen of these jets with a 500-mile range and air-to-ground missiles. Speed is just 570 mph.

zulu — Greenwich Mean Time or GMT. When it's 0000 zulu (or midnight GMT) it's 7 p.m. on the U.S. East Coast and 3 a.m. in Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. The military uses zulu as its time reference worldwide.

George Burns has 95th birthday

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Comedian George Burns, who just turned 95, says he got in the habit of dating 18-year-olds because "there are no women my age."

A group of celebrities surprised Burns on stage Friday night by rolling out an 8-foot-tall birthday cake. Burns turned 95 Sunday.

Burns told the audience, "There isn't anything I can't do now that I did at 18 — which shows you how pathetic I was at 18."

Gulf War plays
on Sunday TV

NEW YORK (AP) — On Sunday we rested, but it was anything but quiet on TV.

The usual morning news shows led into the much-awaited National Football League semifinal games, but before day's end came Scud missile attacks on Saudi Arabia and audiotape of allied prisoners' voices from Iraq.

NBC and CBS cut away from the football games to update with the latest news from Saudi Arabia.

NBC, covering the American Football Conference and what would be the Buffalo Bills' 51-3 blowout of the Oakland Raiders, cut away four times before halftime, when it made its first detailed report of the attack.

NBC even beat the other two networks to war news. CBS, covering the later New York Giants' 15-13 victory over San Francisco in the National Football Conference, twice interrupted the first half and gave a full halftime report.

"Showdown in the gulf — halftime," said CBS anchor Dan Rather. Later, when he was narrating footage of the missile attack, Rather said: "Boom. A Scud goes down."

CNN's Peter Arnett, reporting by telephone Sunday night from Baghdad, where he is under Iraqi censorship, said he'd seen the POWs on the evening news show. They were in uniforms and were interviewed sitting against a white wall.

nounced the allied bombing as "devoid of the minimum human standards" and said: "Because of this rocketing, it was decided to disperse the more than 20 prisoners of war to civilian, economic, education and other targets."

The radio said the airmen had been sent to the undisclosed sites Sunday and today.

The United States says its bombing has targeted strategic sites and has tried to avoid civilian buildings.

Today's Iraqi move to scatter the POWs at target sites came a day after it displayed seven POWs — three Americans, two Britons, an Italian and a Kuwaiti — on Baghdad television.

Answering questions put to them, the prisoners spoke stiffly and haltingly, some echoing phrases often used by the Iraqi government.

"I think our leaders and our people have wrongly attacked the peaceful people of Iraq," said one of the captured fliers, who identified himself as Navy Lt. Jeffrey N. Zaun, 28.

It could not be determined what kind of duress the POWs were under, but to those who knew them, the words uttered in wooden voices did not ring true.

"It doesn't sound like Jeff," said Zaun's father, Calvin Zaun of Cherry Hill, N.J.

Jerry Dale Ward

SWEETWATER — Services for Jerry Dale Ward, 36, of Sweetwater are set for 2 p.m. Tuesday at Cate, Spencer and Gallagher Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. William Mayo officiating. Burial will follow in Longworth Cemetery.

Mr. Ward died Saturday. He was born Jan. 30, 1954, in Brownfield and was a veteran of the U.S. Navy. At the time of his death, he was employed as a test-truck operator for Buddy's Testers.

He is survived by his wife, Sandy; a brother, Billy Allen Ward; two sisters, Cheryl Ann Brazelton and Karen Renee Galven, all of Sweetwater, and his father, Tom Ward of Mobile Ala.

"The manner of all the men was subdued. One's conversation was barely audible. One man had a bandaged hand, and two others had bruised faces," Arnett said. The questions and answers were in English, translated into Arabic.

CNN later aired the audio tape. There was no video of the Americans.

"I think our leaders have wrongly attacked the peaceful people of Iraq," said one aviator. "I condemn the aggression against peaceful Iraq," said another.

Their spontaneity was suspect and ABC declined to air the audio.

Harsher reality comes home during first weekend of war

by The Associated Press
The U.S.-led campaign against Iraq today wore the look of reality.

The gloss of video bombardment gave way Sunday to something a lot messier than the movies: the voices of captive pilots and the distant flicker of Saddam Hussein's missile attack on Saudi Arabia.

It was war's meaner face. "Hearing fear in the voice of an American fighting man in the hands of the enemy, one begins to sense what can happen in war," said former Marine Sgt. Michael Norman, who traced his Vietnam experience in "These Good Men." "This has been a clean war so far," Norman said. "(But) I think that one little voice, the echo of fear you could hear in that flier's voice, is a portent of what could come."

Around the nation, a weekend that began in raucous protest ended in prayer for Americans lost or captured in Operation Desert Storm. Church services were crowded, discussion about the war somber. And everywhere were people looking for a little routine, a momentary break from news bulletins.

"People were here because they needed it," said Michael Billups, who manages Mickey Mantle's sports bar and its rabid New York Giants fans. "War's not a good thing, so they needed the thrill of victory."

The crowd got what it wanted in the 49ers' last-minute defeat, but the nation's bigger battle remained. As President Bush repeatedly has warned, driving combat-hardened Iraqi troops from Kuwait could be long and costly.

the site of meetings for alcohol and drug self-help groups. He said a chain-line fence needs to be extended about 50 feet for security and that some minor dirt work needs to be done. The building is leased from the county.

Precinct 3 Commissioner C.D. Gray Jr. asked for a work session starting at 8 a.m. Friday. Purpose of the meeting will be to discuss precinct equipment and operations.

Present for the meeting in addition to Doolittle, Gannaway and Gray were Precinct 2 Commissioner Roy Idom and Precinct 1 Commissioner Duane Davis.

Houston cat is stowaway on flight to New York

HOUSTON (AP) — A frisky feline named Bobby, apparently in the throes of a strong urge to travel, caught a 30-mile ride to the airport and hopped a DC-10 to New York.

"I just can't figure out how he got there," said the cat's owner, Elaine Nolan, who missed the voyage to the Big Apple. "I think it's crazy. But I'm just glad he's home."

Ms. Nolan thought Bobby was lost somewhere in her New Caney neighborhood, which is about 30 miles from Houston's Intercontinental Airport.

But the feline was later found in the wheel well of a Pan American jet in New York, "greasy and dirty" from the two-hour flight but in good health.

Ms. Nolan speculates that Bobby got to the airport Friday by jumping into a car. Or maybe he was stolen, she said.

The feline stowaway managed to snuggle up to the landing gear and settled in for his 1,600-mile flight 31,000 feet up, at 46 degrees below, in an unpressurized, unheated compartment.

After the plane landed, a mechanic heard loud meowing and found Bobby.

"I thought, 'Holy cow, this guy's still alive,'" said mechanic Gary Hickman. "He was absolutely a perfect gentleman, Calvin and Marjorie Zaun were spared war's most devastating cost Sunday when they heard the voice of their 28-year-old son, Navy Lt. Jeffrey N. Zaun, for the first time since he was shot down behind enemy lines last week.

"Thank God he's still alive," Mrs. Zaun said after a man who identified himself as her son spoke in a brief Baghdad television interview broadcast in the United States.

"I think our leaders and our people have wrongly attacked the peaceful people of Iraq," Zaun said in a voice his family described as "high-pitched and tense."

Wild elks like to be fed hay

NACHES, Wash. (AP) — She was wild, but hungry. That's why the four-legged free-loader didn't seem to care while a crowd watched it eat a pile of hay provided by the state.

It's a matter of survival for hundreds of elk from the Yakima herd, whose winter range was fenced off in the 1940s to protect orchards and lawns.

A few months ago these same elk, which can weigh up to 1,500 pounds and are North America's largest deerlike animals, were eluding hunters in meadows high in the Cascades.

Every winter, the elk come to a fenced-off area in central Washington where they can still chew hay, prance, punch with their hooves and, occasionally, lock horns in battles for supremacy.

Every winter, 80,000 tourists come to watch and take photographs.

"This is about as close as you can get," said Henry Morse of Naches, who brought one of his 19 grandchildren to view elk less than 20 feet from their car.

beat up, but a perfect gentleman."

Hickman removed the cat from the tire well, administered oxygen and milk, and gave Bobby to a Pan Am pilot he'd met at a cat show.

The pilot, Paul Scholz, immediately brought the unticketed passenger on board to enjoy full in-flight service. Bobby traveled first class on his free trip home — on a bundle of blankets in the cockpit and partaking of poached salmon.

"He probably received better treatment than the president does when he flies," Hickman said.

Scholz said it's a miracle the cat survived the landing without falling out when the gear was lowered.

Hickman was able to contact Ms. Nolan because of information on the cat's rabies identification collar.

The Nolans picked up the weary traveler about 10 p.m. Friday night, and since then the battered feline has done nothing but sleep. A local veterinarian said the cat suffered no injuries.

Ms. Nolan said she still can't believe what Bobby has been through.

"We just assumed he strolled off like most boy cats do," she said. "We laughed all the way to the airport."

Appeal said to try to weaken Texas' death penalty law

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Attorneys for a death row inmate who was 17 when he allegedly gunned down an Arizona man during a Houston robbery hope to convince a federal appeals court to spare their client from execution in yet another attempt to chip away at the Texas capital punishment law.

Arguments were set for Tuesday before the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans in the case of Gary Graham, convicted of the 1981 robbery and shooting death of Bobby Lambert of Tucson, Ariz.

The appeal is the latest effort by capital punishment opponents to undo a law that has put 337 men and women on Texas death row while sending 37 convicted killers to the death chamber. Both figures are tops in the nation among states with the death penalty.

The appeal also is linked to similar cases which complain that jurors should have been allowed to consider mitigating evidence in this case, Graham's age — before condemning a convicted killer.

ing of a Livingston housewife. And jurors, given special instructions that noted his mental problems, still convicted him a second time and sentenced him to death.

A similar case is pending now before the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court. In that matter, attorneys for condemned prisoner John Henry Selva contend jurors in his 1979 murder case in Houston should have been allowed to consider mitigating evidence that could have resulted in life sentences even though his trial attorneys did not ask the judge to allow introduction of such evidence.

The U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments in the Selva case a year ago, then sent it back to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

The legal maneuvering effectively has halted executions in the state and raised hopes of inmates like Graham that one day they could be freed.

"I think the majority of cases on death row should be thrown out," Graham said. "No question, about that."

"I think the best I can hope for really is to take the case back to trial and have the charge dismissed. I think it's a great possibility. If we can get a retrial on the evidence and the evidence we've obtained over the year, we can win a retrial."

Graham was identified by an eyewitness as the gunman who approached 53-year-old Bobby Lambert outside a Houston Safeway store May 13, 1981, reached into Lambert's pockets and shot him as they scuffled. Lambert was carrying $6,000 in $100 bills but was robbed only of the change from a $100 bill he had used for a purchase in the market.

Testimony also showed Graham had been charged in 10 separate robberies and was a suspect in two shootings, 10 car thefts and eight other robberies in Houston.

"It's going to take years for it to be decided," says Graham, now 27. "It's going to be quite some time, just because of the complicated nature of the criminal justice system."

"The main question deals with the mitigating evidence, the charges to the jury, the jury instructions. We had a lot of evidence that was not brought in to trial that we felt should have been brought in ... definitely, my being 17 at the time."

Already, the federal appeals courts have ruled that jurors should be given special instructions to accused killers considered mentally retarded.

The victory in that case, however, may have been short lived. Johnny Penry, whose conviction and death sentence was the basis for the appeal, was retried last year for the 1979 slay-

Way out of Saudi Arabia expensive

HOUSTON (AP) — About 400 American civilians have accepted an offer for a costly U.S. military airlift out of Saudi Arabia despite the prospect of losing their jobs in the Saudi oilfields and becoming trapped in Europe without a way home.

Officials said the civilians have called the U.S. consul general to accept the offer, even though the flights will cost about $4,500.

Some employees of Saudi Arabian Oil Co., known as Saudi Aramco, expressed anger that the Saudi government does not think the crisis merits evacuation of civilians.

"Can you imagine spending six hours in your bathroom with your gas mask on and they're saying no danger?" one worker, who said he would be fired if he was identified, told the Houston Chronicle.

"People are very upset over the fact that Aramco is telling our families that everything is OK when we're sitting here with missiles aimed right at us," the newspaper's Sunday edition quoted the worker as saying.

The airlift will cost 50 percent more than a commercial flight and those taking the flight must promise to pay the State Department within 60 days for getting them out of the Middle East.

Those evacuated will be taken to Europe and will have to make their own arrangements from there.

There are about 7,000 Americans, mostly oil workers and their families, in the area.

The U.S. Embassy in Bahrain said Saturday it also was preparing a military airlift for any of the estimated 600 Americans there wishing to leave. No date has been set for the evacuation.

The Saudi Aramco workers said they are sleeping in shifts to monitor war coverage on television. They grew more jittery after a U.S. Patriot missile intercepted and destroyed an incoming Iraqi Scud missile over Dhahran, 200 miles from the Kuwaiti border.

Rob Arndt, spokesman for Aramco Services Company, the Houston-based U.S. subsidiary of Saudi Aramco, said the company is prepared to provide airlifts if the consulate recommends it.

Aramco flew about 1,500 dependents of its employees to the U.S. after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in August. But about 75 percent have voluntarily returned at company expense, Arndt said, and Aramco now estimates about 3,000 dependents are in Arabia.

The company's 2,500 American workers were to return to their jobs today after a long weekend.

"The employees still, as always, are expected to be at their jobs unless they have vacation time or have made other arrangements," Arndt said. "We foresee no need for an evacuation because we expect hostilities to be confined to the border areas."

Aramco's continued operation is important to the U.S. and its Persian Gulf allies because the company is producing "an appreciable percentage of what is fueling Operation Desert Storm," Arndt said.

The State Department emphasized that the U.S. was not recommending people leave, only providing a means to do so.

Trading oil continues through avalanche of news, rumors

NEW YORK (AP) — The Pentagon has its war room and Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. has its energy desk in downtown Manhattan.

The two operations have shared a great deal in common since U.S.-led forces began the war on Iraq: sleep-starved staff members tracking events in Iraq by telephone, computer and television with an intensity that borders on obsession.

Lehman's energy brokers have the maddening job of sifting through the avalanche of wild rumors and false starts about the war, many of which have a dramatic effect on the price of oil.

Before the Jan. 16 attack, oil's largest price movement in history was a $5.41 per barrel drop, which came Oct. 22 following reports Saddam Hussein had a vision in which the prophet Mohammed told him his missiles were pointed the wrong way. Oil traders took that as a sign the crisis might be resolved peacefully.

In the trading session after the attack, crude oil set a new record, falling $10.56 per barrel at the New York Mercantile Exchange on perceptions that the war could be quick, with no threats to Mideast oil supplies.

The stakes for accurate information are huge in the oil futures market, where players buy and sell contracts for the future exchange of barrels of oil or gallons of gasoline and home heating oil.

In many instances, companies agree to buy or sell oil at fixed prices in an attempt to hedge against their potential losses in the event of unpredictable price swings in the volatile energy markets. Traders who deal in futures on the Mercantile Exchange can make or lose millions of dollars almost instantly if they miscalculate a futures deal.

Lehman is the largest global energy brokerage in the world, with some of the largest oil companies among its clients.

During a reporter's visit Friday afternoon, brokers were advising clients on dealing with futures contracts based on spurious reports about the assassination of Saddam Hussein and missile attacks on Tel Aviv that never materialized.

"The whole thing is a trade-off of expectations and realities," said Stephen P. Piasio, a vice president in Lehman's international energy department.

Program designed by women to help women

HOUSTON (AP) — Now that women have made it into the business world, it is time for them to set up a "Good Ol' Girl" money network that helps their impoverished sisters survive, a Houston businesswoman says.

Businesswomen Bonnie Foxworth, Deborah Rose and Thelma Marlowe helped found the Greater Houston Women's Foundation 18 months ago to break a cycle of poverty among women and children by setting up a program for women to help women.

"Women are just not in the habit of giving that much money," said Ms. Marlowe, an editor with Petroleum Management and the foundation's education chairwoman. "They are the least likely to give to political causes, for instance. A woman's husband might give $10,000 to his alumni group, but if she was approached for $500, she might think it was too much."

"I think all of us, maybe in the back of our minds, have this subconscious fear that we will end up as bag ladies. We see women who are divorced or widowed, and we fear it may happen to us," she said.

Ms. Foundation for Women, set up in 1973 with profits from Ms.

magazine, is credited with beginning the women's charity trend. Over the years, the Ms. Foundation has donated about $3 million and has built a $4 million endowment fund. But it wasn't until the 1980s, when statistics regarding poverty and women worsened, that similar foundations began and now number about 60 nationwide.

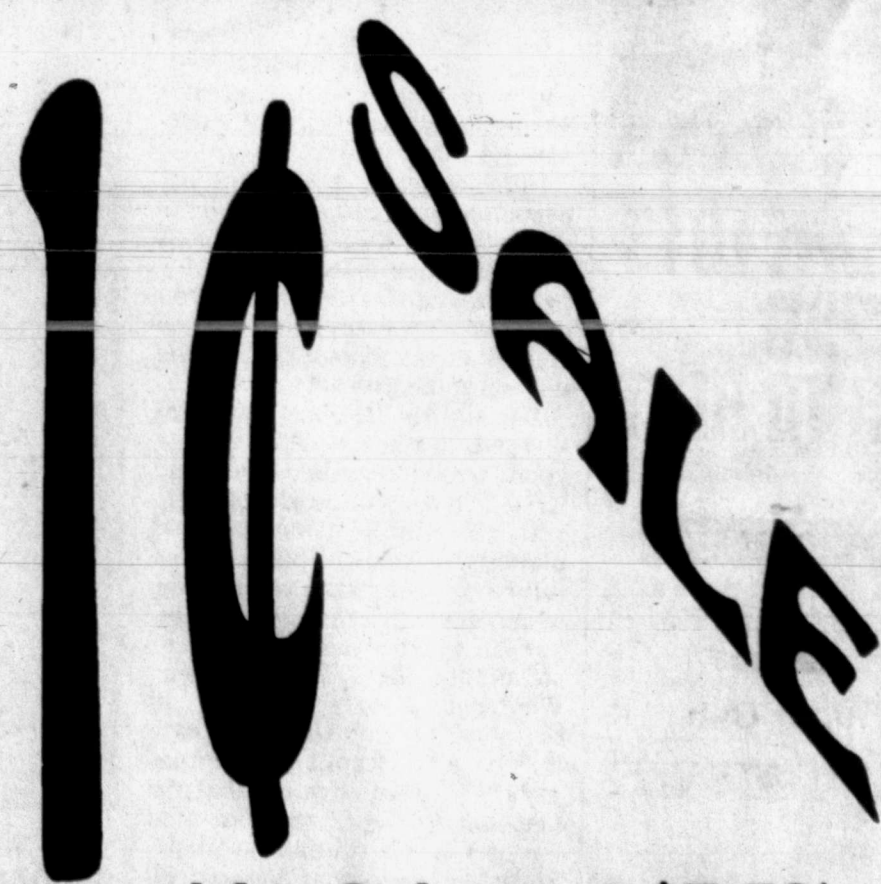

"It was the kind of thing where we found out that Dallas had started a fund five years ago, and we said, 'If Dallas can do it, why can't Houston?'" said Ms. Foxworth, president of Speakers Unlimited and of the non-profit Houston foundation. "The group has come very far, very fast, but that is true around the country."

The Houston organization has 250 members who have paid between $45 and $1,000 to support the foundation.

The fund also aims to encourage professional and wealthy women to increase their charitable giving. Even women who have money are often reluctant to take control of it.

"We keep emphasizing to people that is a fund-raising effort, not a networking group. We're interested in money," Ms. Foxworth said.

The Great American Bargain

Washington today...

Security officers push for enclosing Capitol grounds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional security officers are using the war in the Persian Gulf to revive a $13 million plan to turn the Capitol grounds into a fenced off compound.

The 127-acre area has long been a park open to all, an anchor of the Washington Mall. On spring days, bicycles swoop past brown-baggers admiring the extraordinary foliage and gawking at the incredibly fat pigeons.

But ever since the early 1980s, when rumors of Libyan hit squads reached Washington, the people responsible for the protection of senators and representatives have been pushing to clamp down on such easy access.

The security plan drafted in 1987 would encircle the Capitol with a protective barrier with security checkpoints at the perimeter, similar to the system used at the White House.

Congress gave itself permission to spend the money, but so far only interim steps have been taken.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and other leaders have resisted taking the so-called "people's branch" of government another step away from the people.

They've also been reluctant to take away from themselves, their staffs and from journalists their cherished parking spots on the compound.

In the interim, additional metal-detectors have been installed at the entrances to the Capitol. Giant concrete flower pots have been placed at the roadway entrances along with steel barriers that can be lowered to let cars through.

Of course, many lawmakers still drive around with vanity license plates proclaiming their titles. They might as well paint bulls-eyes on their cars.

Suggestions they give them-up have not been widely heeded.

So the $13 million has remained unspent. But maybe not for long.

"What better time to review" the situation, said Jeff Biggs, Foley's spokesman.

Foley "would have to be persuaded that the security situation required it," Biggs said. The speaker also is very aware that he's one of the people responsible for the safety of his colleagues, the spokesman said.

Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., chairman of the House subcommittee that oversees such matters, says the plan now being pitched to House members is an aesthetic improvement over the original version.

Girl's 1,000-letter first name gets her Guinness book entry HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston woman said she spent years planning her daughter's name and it make take that long before the girl can say it.

The 6-year-old girl, who goes by the nickname "Jameshauwnnel," has more than 1,000 letters in her first name, earning her a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records.

"I wanted to get away from those old, plain names we've been using for so many years," said her mother, CoSandra

Williams, 29, who started making up the name in the 10th grade.

The name, which is a compilation of more than 100 shorter first names, includes monikers of many of the girl's relatives, as well as the names of several countries, cities, two kinds of cars, terms such as "friend" and "love," and the titles of a couple of movies.

Jameshauwnnel, called "Jamie" by most of her friends, can't write or even say most of her given name, but she says she likes it.

"Most places don't think it's real," Mrs. Williams said.

Her given name is:

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1990 Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I met a man I liked very much two years ago. My children are grown and I had been a widow for seven years. In the beginning, we decided we didn't need to be married, so he moved into my house. I own this home and am financially secure. He is not. He's been divorced for a long time and his kids have very little to do with him.

I see no advantage for me — and all the advantages for him — if we were to marry, but I told him I might consider it if he would sign a prenuptial agreement. He refused. I just wanted to protect myself against having him assume he's my common-law husband and ending up with community property — mostly all mine.

To tell you the truth, Abby, I am fed up with him. He is a gambler (my money), and he has taken to drinking so much that he's not good for anything anymore, if you know what I mean. I'm 57 years old and he's only 55, but looks old enough to be my father. He's taken money out of my purse and I don't trust him anymore. If you were in my place, what would you do?

TIERED OF HIM

DEAR TIERED: I would immediately call my lawyer, explain the situation and find out if I had any legal obligations to this man. (Don't be surprised if you have to pay a little something to get rid of him.)

Then I'd give him three hours to get out of my house — and I'd help him pack.

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to the person who wrote to you some time ago about the busboy who turned in an envelope containing $465 in cash. The owner was finally tracked down, hurried to the restaurant to pick up the money, and didn't give the busboy a penny. Well, you ain't heard nuthin' yet.

Several years ago, I found a Gucci purse containing $6,000 in $50 and $100 bills! There was also a five-carat emerald-cut diamond ring in the purse. Since there was an identification card in the purse, I immediately got in touch with the owner, who wasted no time in coming to my home to retrieve her purse. She was so overcome with joy, she cried.

Guess what kind of reward I got? She said, "Thank you for saving my marriage. If I had lost all that stuff, my husband would have divorced me!" Then she left.

Abby, I think the good Lord sometimes sets us up in order to test us. Oh well, my conscience is clear.

SLEEPING WELL IN TACOMA

DEAR SLEEPING WELL: Virtue is its own (and sometimes its only) reward. And a clear conscience isn't a bad finder's fee. Pleasant dreams.

DEAR READERS: Today we pay tribute to a great American, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. His words of wisdom are even more meaningful today than they were 24 years ago, when he said: "One day, somebody should remind us that even though there may be political and ideological differences between us, the Vietnamese are our brothers, the Russians are our brothers, the Chinese are our brothers; and one day we've got to sit down together at the table of brotherhood."

God bless America. And may we Americans, by our conduct, be worthy of God's blessings.
