Space shuttle launch halted

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The launch of space shuttle Columbia on its first flight in two years was aborted on the launch pad just 14 seconds before the planned liftoff today because of trouble with a booster rocket steering system.

"We have an unexpected shutdown," reported launch control commentator Jim Ball as the countdown clock halted suddenly, stopped by a computer that detected the problem.

Columbia's seven-man crew, including a Florida congressman and the first Hispanic-American astronaut, sat in the shuttle's cabin atop half a million gallons of volatile fuel, monitoring gauges to make sure all systems were safe.

With the vehicle declared safe, the astronauts left the cockpit half an hour after the abort and returned to their crew quarters to await another attempt to fly a mission in which they are to deploy a communications satellite, photograph Halley's comet and other celestial objects and conduct medical, materials processing and other experiments.

As they exited there was disappointment on their faces, but all soon were smiling as they talked with launch technicians.

No new launch date was set immediately.

Ball said a ground computer that probes every shuttle system detected a problem with an auxiliary power unit in one of the two solid fuel rockets intended to help boost the shuttle into orbit. The unit controls the hydraulic system that moves the rocket exhaust bell.

"An instrument that reads the turbine speed indicated the turbine speed exceeded the red-line limits," Ball said.

Tax reform, oversights could hurt water plan

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Federal tax reform proposals and an apparent legislative oversight could jeopardize implementation of the recently enacted $1.43 billion statewide water plan, state officials warned Wednesday.

The U.S. House of Representatives Tuesday approved an overhaul of the nation's tax system, and Texas officials are worried that the action could severely threaten efforts to solve Texas' water problems. The U.S. Senate is expected to take up the measure early next year.

Even more troublesome, however, is a snag in state financing that could leave a new program to help Texas farmers buy water conservation equipment high and dry.

As part of the comprehensive water plan approved last spring, lawmakers created an agricultural trust fund to assist the state's beleaguered farmers. A central component of that trust fund is a $5 million pilot program to provide low-interest loans to Texas farmers and ranchers.

If lawmakers deem the pilot program a success, they could come back in 1987 and authorize up to $200 million in bonds for more low-interest loans.

But as members of the House Agriculture and Livestock Committee found out Wednesday, legislators failed to formally appropriate the $5 million.

"The money was transferred OK, but there is no appropriation language anywhere," said Tony Proffitt, spokesman for State Comproller Bob Bullock. "This is probably a legislative oversight."

Special nursery opened

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Monday's opening of a critical care nursery at Medical Center Hospital is "just the beginning," according to medical director Dr. Alfred Karickhoff.

"We spent $120,000 on the two beds we have in the 'Special Care Nursery,'" said Karickhoff. "Later, we will spend close to $8 million to create a perinatal unit that will include high-risk obstetrics and an expanded special care nursery."

Karickhoff said the projected unit would "take up the entire seventh floor and would be in place "within two years."

The unit, to be called the Regional Perinatal Center, will offer all levels of care for newborn babies in the Permian Basin.

"With the creation of the Special Care Nursery (SCN), Medical Center can care for most Permian Basin critically-ill infants, avoiding the risk and expense of transferring the infants to out-of-town hospitals," he said. "The new unit can care for infants such as those who need help breathing, have pneumonia or collapsed lungs or are born with physical abnormalities. Newborns requiring heart surgery will still be transferred."

The SCN is the first of four phases, said Karickhoff.

"Others include a system for transporting mothers and newborns more safely and efficiently to Medical Center from outlying community hospitals," he said. Transport would be ground/air and manned by highly trained personnel.

"The third phase of the program is an outreach educational program for medical professionals in outlying community hospitals using the teaching expertise of Medical Center's unit," he said. "With the outreach program, we want to encourage and allow community hospitals to have the capability to provide the level of care they are capable of and to stabilize babies for transport."

Karickhoff added that the program would "allow community hospitals to do their best and be able to prepare infants for transport if necessary."

"An outreach program is very cost effective," he said. "Every dollar spent on outreach saves $3 in costs for providing care for infants."

The final phase, said Karickhoff, is a follow-up program for "graduates" of the SCN.

Retired Midland attorney accepts temporary justice of peace post

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Retired attorney Leonard Howell agreed this morning to serve as a temporary replacement for Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry, who took a leave of absence last month after being indicted for attempted sexual assault and other alleged offenses.

Howell, 68, will begin his duties "as soon as I take my oath of office and sign my bond," he said this morning.

"I'll do my best," the former Midland County Attorney said, but he sees his appointment by County Judge William B. Ahders as strictly temporary — "The shorter, the better."

Blair announces judicial candidacy

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Matthew Blair, a 30-year-old Midland lawyer, today focused on bolstering the leadership role in county government in announcing his candidacy for Midland County judge.

He will be seeking to unseat County Judge Bill Ahders, 69, in his campaign for the Republican nomination.

"Good government doesn't just happen. It takes leadership," Blair said in making his formal entrance into the race. "The quality of that leadership determines the quality of government."

Blair said he can bring direction into a county government which, he said, is lacking quality leadership — the source of the county's problems.

"The quality of leadership in the government of Midland County is not what it should be nor can be. It lacks energy. It lacks decisiveness. It doesn't communicate. It does not respond to the needs of the citizens of Midland County."

Blair, who is completing two years as a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) lawyer, said the issues facing county government are rooted in ineffective leadership.

County issues, including resolving the jail problems, providing adequate road maintenance, expanding the courthouse and addressing library needs, are not the problems, he said.

Chalcydon assembly united church

EDITOR'S NOTE: This fourth installment of a five-part Christmas series on the early formulation of doctrine about Jesus deals with Rome's Bishop Leo and the historic church council that affirmed Christ's full humanity.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

At the climax of a meeting in a towering cathedral on a hilltop overlooking the Golden Horn, the assembled bishops, clergy and lay dignitaries broke into loud applause. Delighted exclamations surged among them.

"This is the faith of the fathers! This is the faith of the apostles! So we all believe! Anathema to him who believes otherwise! Through Leo, Peter has spoken. So did Cyril teach! That is the true faith."

The wave of elated unanimity came in one of the most doctrinally pivotal assemblies in church history — the fourth ecumenical council of Chalcydon in October 451.

Birth of Christian Doctrine

A five-part series

"It is a lighthouse," writes church historian Philip Schaff, safeguarding the Christian ship from foundering on the reefs of "Scylla and Charybdis" on either side — one solely divinizing Jesus, the other simply humanizing him.

The foundational, fifth-century council met in Chalcydon, just across the Bosporus Sea's sun-tinted harbor from the Roman Empire's capital of Constantinople, allowing the imperial court and senate to attend personally so as to deter potential violence.

Results of that council are credited with balancing out a one-sided impression of Jesus as primarily divine and defining more equitably, so far as words might do it, his fuller, mystifying identity, including his genuine humanity, that he is "truly man."

That aspect had been omitted in earlier church formulations of the faith and the lack of it reverberated in rising new deviations.

"Heresies," the council called them.

About 600 bishops attended, far exceeding any previous council, all of them from the East except two Africans and three papal delegates. Rome's bishop Leo I wasn't there, but his influence had a decisive impact.

Historian Schaff says the meeting "in doctrinal importance is second only to the Council of Nicaea," which more than a century earlier had specified Christ's divinity, but had not asserted his manhood, swinging the pendulum away from that essential.

The new council faced a rash of slants about Christ, largely concentrating on his divinity, sometimes to the point of considering that his only significant quality. It tended to remove him from the human sphere.

Such issues may seem pedantic and esoteric to many modern Christians, mere nitpicking incidentals. Yet those early councils, directly or indirectly, have formed the way most all believers think about Christ.

The doctrinal constructions not only resound in current liturgies of worship, Roman Catholic, Protestant and Eastern Orthodox, but in present-day church assemblies, debates and evaluation of iconoclastic clergy, although the word "heresy" is rarely used any more.

At the time of Chalcydon, several controversial theses circulated, namely:

Apollinarianism: Apollinaris, a cultured, scholarly Syrian bishop, attributed to Christ a human body and soul but not a human spirit-mind, classing it as divine, thus making Christ a dual being, two parts human and one part divine, but not fully either.

Congress pushes to holiday break

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress planned to tie up some fiscal loose ends and head home for the holidays, but it may leave unfinished the deficit-reduction package sought in a year-long struggle over the budget.

Completion of the farm bill Wednesday left an omnibus $368 billion spending bill for the Pentagon and other federal agencies as the tallest hurdle standing in the way of adjournment. The House and Senate are scheduled to vote on the measure today.

The $52 billion farm bill was approved in the House 325-96 and then by the Senate, 55-38. Congressional leaders said they expected President Reagan would sign the farm measure, even though it was more expensive than the administration wanted.

Congress also sent to the White House on Wednesday a separate rescue package for the $70 billion Farm Credit System, the 37-bank network that is the nation's largest farm lender. Reagan is expected to sign that bill also.

A compromise on the catch-all spending bill was reached Wednesday night, when a House-Senate conference committee agreed on an updated version of a measure defeated earlier this week in the House.

Liberal Democrats opposed it because of a large increase in Pentagon spending. Others objected to a $7,510 hike in the amount senators can earn making speeches and a provision making it more difficult to block an expected congressional pay raise in 1987.

The conferees agreed to reduce the Pentagon funding by $1.3 billion to a total of $281.2 billion, still an increase from $275.4 billion in the 1985 fiscal year.

Another $6.3 billion would be available from money approved during previous years but those funds would be restricted to use for pay, retirement benefits and readiness. The restrictions would make the military more vulnerable to budget cuts expected early next year.

The negotiators also agreed to a House-passed proposal for cost-saving in military procurement practices, a provision that would limit the types of costs for which companies may bill the government.

But the language letting lawmakers make more money remained intact.

Congress must pass the bill before going home because it provides the money to keep the Pentagon and several other federal departments operating through the fiscal year ending Sept. 30. A temporary spending bill to keep the government running while Congress works on the catch-all bill expires tonight at midnight.

The compromise catch-all bill includes language allowing resumed production of nerve gas weapons in 1987, even though it would ban further testing in the administration's anti-satellite weapons program. There would be $2.75 billion provided for Reagan's "Star Wars" missile defense system.

The catch-all spending package is needed because Congress has approved only six of 13 regular money bills for the year.

Filipino court allows election

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Supreme Court today voted 7-5 to reject petitions seeking to halt February's special election, clearing the way for the opposition to challenge President Ferdinand E. Marcos at the polls.

"Now the people can begin counting the last few days of the Marcos regime," the opposition's vice presidential candidate, Salvador H. Laurel, said in a statement shortly after the ruling was announced.

The court "cannot stand in the way of letting the people decide through their ballots, either to give incumbent president a new mandate or to elect a new president," Justice Claudio Teehankee said in a comment attached to the decision.

The justices rejected 10 petitions filed against the special election, which Marcos called to show critics at home and abroad that his 20-year-old regime still has popular support.

The court, which had held hearings on the issue Tuesday and Wednesday, announced the decision in a brief resolution that did not include the justices' reasons. The 13th member of the court was on leave and did not take part in the voting.

"The election goes on," Justice Hermogenes Concepcion told The Associated Press as he left the room where the court voted.

If the vote had gone the other way, the court would have issued an injunction against the balloting, scheduled more than 13 months before Marcos' current six-year term expires.

Various civic, political and legal groups filed petitions with the Supreme Court questioning the election on grounds that Marcos has not yet vacated the presidency.

The constitution provides that a special election may be held before Marcos' mandate expires in 1987 only if the presidency becomes vacant through death, permanent incapacity, impeachment or resignation.

Marcos tendered his resignation last month, effective only after the winner is sworn in. He has said he expects to win.

Laurel was campaigning south of Manila with opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino when the decision came. His statement was phoned by an aide to his Manila office.

Marcos was attending the funeral of former Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo.

Opposition leaders had said they thought the court's decision might be delayed so Marcos could sway the court to halt the election if he thought he was doing poorly and allow it to go ahead if he thought he would win.

All of the justices were appointed by Marcos, but they do not always agree with him.

After the ruling, some opposition leaders said Marcos still has several options to call off the election if he fears he will lose. He could declare martial law or claim that domestic disorder would prevent a free vote, they said.

Marcos also could question the qualification of Mrs. Aquino on grounds of residency, opponents said.

WATER

Charles Nemir, executive administrator for the Texas Water Development Board, said the snafu could "seriously jeopardize" the water conservation program.

"The $5 million is there," he said. "But our authority to use it is in question."

The Water Development Board administers the low-interest loan program.

Proffitt said the comptroller's office would be willing to authorize appropriation of the money if "someone told us that was the legislative intent."

"We want them to spend the money," he said, "but it's just not in the law."

Proffitt said he would need an attorney general's opinion or some action from the Legislature — which is not scheduled to meet again until January 1987 — before he could release the money.

Lubbock Sen. John Montford, a primary architect of the water package, said Wednesday he was unaware of the problem. "I hadn't heard of that," he said. "I'll have to look into that".

In Washington, D.C., action — rather than a lack of it — could hamper implementation of Texas' water plan even more seriously.

Herb Grubb, director of planning for the Water Development Board, said a tax reform proposal the U.S. House approved Tuesday could threaten a series of water bonds voters approved in a constitutional election Nov. 5.

If the Senate agrees to the tax reforms, Grubb said, many of the water project bonds — including those for reservoirs, flood protection and water and waste water treatment plants — may no longer be tax-exempt. The resulting higher interest rates could make the water bonds just as expensive as traditional loans, he added.

BLAIR

"The real problem is the absence of leadership."

Blair said he can provide that leadership.

"Effective communication is an integral part of my training and my business," he said. "Through my participation in many community endeavors, including the Jaycees and Boy Scouts, I have carefully listened to what people have to say about county government."

Blair said he has "a feeling" for what the public has "come to expect" in government.

"I have a desire to serve and to see the government of Midland County functioning effectively. I enjoy working with people, and, as a young man, I care about the future of Midland." Blair said he has the "energy, the creativity and the fiscal conservatism necessary to do the job" through planning, execution, follow-through and leadership.

"It is time for a change," he said. "A change in style. A change in philosophy. A change in leadership."

He compared county government to a business.

The government "should be accountable to its 'shareholders'" — the citizens of Midland County — and should be operated in a "business-like manner" and "should exercise fiscal responsibility."

"It should not spend money on solutions without first fully understanding the problems," Blair said. "It should use its resources efficiently and coordinate that use with the other agencies of government in the Midland community."

"Let's get bang for our bucks," he said.

Blair said his entry into the campaign was timely.

"There's a need for younger leadership to take reign."

The county judge is the presiding officer of the five-member Midland County Commissioners' Court and is the county's chief administrator and budgetary officer.

Ahders, a retired Federal Bureau of Investigation special agent and former Midland Municipal Court judge, was elected in 1978. His 1986 salary is pegged at $49,236.

In announcing his campaign for re-election, Ahders zeroed in on the growing "workload of the judiciary" and said he was "proud of the efficiency and the fairness of our court system."

Blair, who received his law degree in 1979 from Texas Tech University, holds a bachelor's degree in government from The University of Texas. He is admitted to practice in federal court.

He is a graduate of Leadership Midland.

Blair was a member of the Midland Centennial Commission and is on the Texas Sesquicentennial Commission, serves as secretary of the Midland Centennial Plaza Association, is a Scoutmaster and a leader in the Midland Jaycees.

Prior to entering private law practice three years ago, Blair was a landman for Texas American Oil Corp. and Exxon Company U.S.A.

JUSTICE

Sprayberry is due to be tried Jan. 13 in 238th District Court for the alleged attempted sexual assault of a Justice Court clerk. He also faces two counts of harassment and three of barratry, or improperly soliciting cases for a lawyer, but these alleged offenses are misdemeanors and will be tried at the county-court level after the alleged assault, a third-degree felony, is disposed of.

Ahders chose Howell after Robert H. Pine, the other JP, requested someone to help carry the load at the Justice Court.

"Mr. Howell called me and asked me what I thought, and I said, 'I'd be tickled to death to have you down here,'" Pine said this morning. "He's pretty much familiar with the workings of this office."

Pine had previously said he used to handle about 75 percent of the Justice Court caseload, but taking all the cases was too much of a burden. He was also concerned about having to be on call as county coroner every night. According to Ahders, Pine and Howell would decide how the workload will be divided.

"When he (Howell) comes down here, we'll work something out," Pine said. "He'll be paid what Charlie was being paid."

Howell had been solicited by Ahders for the job despite the fact that at least eight people had formally applied for the job, including Robbie Rucker and Dewey Lee, who were defeated by Sprayberry in the 1984 Republican primary.

"I do not feel that a choice for an appointment of a temporary judge should be made from among any possible political candidates for the office," Ahders said in a press release issued this morning. "I feel that this choice will best serve the needs of the community without prejudice to the rights of the present office holder (Sprayberry) or to any potential candidate for that office."

Former Sheriff's Lt. Bennie Cureton, fired by Sheriff Gary Painter in October for allegedly lying about a tape which was leaked from the Sheriff's Office to former Sheriff Dallas Smith, had also been under consideration for the temporary position.

Howell, who retired from private practice last year, served as county attorney from 1957 to 1961.

"Mr. Howell has been an active and outstanding private attorney in West Texas," Ahders said. "I know that the legal community and the entire citizenry of Midland County will be thankful that a man of Mr. Howell's reputation and character will be willing to serve them until pending matters are disposed of."

NURSERY

"Most graduates and families of the SCN have special problems," he said. "These problems may be chronic lung disease, brain damage or vision impairment. In follow-up clinics, we will make sure these special problems are dealt with."

Karickhoff said the Regional Perinatal Center will meet all criteria "as established by the American Academy of Pediatrics" to be a level III facility.

"It must have the transportation available, the outreach and follow-up programs, an ICU nursery and must be a regional center," he said.

Future developments could include outnumbering Lubbock in the number of level III beds.

"Five or seven years down the road, we could be talking 18 to 20 beds," he said. "This is a very expensive project."

Karickhoff works with others as part of a neonatal "team" in the center, including Dr. Anthony Talbert (a neonatologist) and Donna Reid, director of nursing in the ICU area.

Training for the SCN staff began in June, according to Ms. Reid.

"We've utilized resources, both within and outside the hospital, to train them as critical care nurses for neonates," she said. "The kinds of problems that would be encountered here are much the same as in any ICU setting. It's very high stress, demanding, quick-paced and requires quick judgment."

The patient's age creates special problems, she said.

"In the neonatal ICU, you have no warning. You may have five minutes notice," she said. "There's just not the lead time as other ICU units.

"They require one-on-one nursing care and the nurse must work closely with the parents to keep them updated," she continued. "This program also provides our nurses with special training that they might not normally have gotten."

Karickhoff said MCH would work closely with Midland Memorial Hospital's intermediate care neonatal nursery.

"We've already had one referral from a doctor in Midland," he said. "My idea is to use all the local facilities to their maximum abilities. It (MMH) fits into the regional plan."

MMH officials, however, said they had received no formal notification of MCH's opening of their SCN and had no comment on further developments.

Thirty held hostage in French courtroom

NANTES, France (AP) — Four defendants in a robbery trial and an armed accomplice took about 30 people hostage today in a courtroom, witnesses and police said.

Police said the accomplice disarmed a police officer and entered the courtroom with a gun and a grenade during the trial of the other four.

They said the four defendants then quickly disarmed other officers in the courtroom. The five reportedly were demanding to make a statement on television, and police said a crew from a local television station entered the courtroom at about noon, an hour after the standoff began.

One witness said three shots were fired, apparently as warnings, but no one appeared to have been hit.

Police said the hostages included Judge Dominique Bailhache, 45; lawyers, witnesses and a group of law students observing the trial in the western French city.

The courthouse was ringed with police wearing bullet-proof jackets, and a crisis center was set up at the local prefect's office.

The four defendants were identified as three men, Georges Courtois, 38, Patrick Thiolet, 24, Yannick Brevet, 31, and a woman, Christelle Dislar, 27.

All four were charged with armed robbery, criminal association and possession of stolen goods.

Progress reports will be mailed only to parents of secondary school students.

SHUTTLE

Clouds that hovered over the area throughout the night had earlier threatened to postpone the scheduled 7 a.m. launch, but with a forecast of improving conditions, launch director Gene Thomas ordered an indefinite hold in the countdown at the nine-minute mark. Thomas hoped for a break in the clouds during a 48-minute launch period that was extended to 80 minutes as the time passed.

The break came and the count was resumed, aiming for a liftoff that would have been 54 minutes late.

The flight earlier was postponed one day because workers fell behind the countdown timeline.

The astronauts had boarded the shuttle shortly after 5 a.m. with a reminder of Christmas from technicians who wore Santa Claus caps and affixed felt antlers to the helmets of each crew member.

Christmas 'unmistakable' in quake-torn Mexico City

AP Laserphoto

Young survivors of Mexico City's September 19 earthquake decorate a Christmas tree in their downtown tent village. The spirit of the holiday is evident, even among the homeless.

By DANA FIELDS
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — It's unmistakably Christmastime in downtown Mexico City, where giant illuminated ornaments draw families to the main plaza and dozens of enthroned Santa Clauses hear children's petitions in Alameda Park.

The scene is far less cheerful a mile away at the ancient Plaza of the Three Cultures where a lone silver tree, gift of a benefactor, stands on a platform amid tents occupied by 48 homeless families.

Tens of thousands of city residents are homeless this Christmás, victims of a powerful earthquake that struck the city Sept. 19 and destroyed or damaged thousands of buildings. At least 7,000 people died in the quake.

Government agencies regularly report success in relocating the homeless, of whom about 15,000 remain in government shelters. Critics in turn say life in the shelters is intolerably regimented and that robbery, including theft of foreign donations by the shelter administrators, is rampant.

Less is said about those who, for a wide range of reasons, remain outdoors in tents or shacks erected on sidewalks, median strips, parking lots or wherever they find room. At least 20,000, perhaps more, still live this way three months after the earthquake, according to advocates who organize the homeless in protest marches demanding government attention.

"If they told us in September that we'd still be out here, we would never have believed it," Javier Gonzalez, a 32-year-old taxi driver, said Tuesday in a conversation outside a relative's tent in the Plaza of the Three Cultures.

The plaza, a maze of raised walkways among small lawns, was the seat of the Aztecs' magnificent Tlaltelolco commercial center. Tourists regularly visit the plaza to see the church built by Spanish invaders who conquered the Aztecs.

"The government wants to get us out of here because they don't want you foreigners to see us," said Gonzalez' father-in-law, a white-bearded retiree named Augusto Nava Perea. He won't leave, he said, until he is paid back his equity in a condominium in the nearby Tlaltelolco housing complex.

Many of Nava Perea's 11 children and their families live in neighboring tents. They want to stay together, they said, and would probably have to separate if they moved into a government shelter.

But winter is approaching. While daytime temperatures reach the 70s, the mercury falls into the low 40s overnight and "the kids are getting sick," said Gonzalez' wife, Laura. She and her husband sent their year-old daughter to stay in the "already packed" home of Gonzalez' mother.

Some of the tents consist of blankets and plastic slung over rescued furniture, while others, donated by the Soviet Union, are of khaki canvas. As a patriarch, Nava Perea lives with his wife in one of the best, a neatly kept nylon field tent decorated inside with Christmas lights and plastic holly.

"Look at what they've got for toys now — rocks!" said Nava Perea, gesturing toward some toddlers playing near the cardboard lid to a latrine. "And look, they put their mouths right over the pipe where they get the water for watering the grass."

If there are toys for Christmas, the family said, they will probably come from the same local man who donated the silver tree.

"But we'll enjoy Christmas, sure, because everyone here will contribute," said Nava Perea's son, Miguel, a hospital worker and garage mechanic. "We're Mexican, we have that Mexican optimism."

At another encampment, situated on one side of a busy traffic circle, questions about Christmas prompted chuckles from five women seated on a curb, knitting and chatting.

"What are we going to do for Christmas?" answered one. "Better to ask, what are we going to do for money?"

The women made light of their hardships and talked freely about their lives in windowless shacks, recently reinforced with wood and plastic.

"My husband tells the kids it's a penthouse, what do they know?" one woman said. "And that's a shower," she added, pointing to a hose someone had placed over a spigot.

But the women would not give their names because, as one said, "We've got kids, and what if our diplomats abroad read this and tell the government here? We might not get anything then."

All five formerly lived in a colonial-style apartment building around a courtyard, and still await government documents stating they were left homeless by the quake and, as former property owners, are entitled to housing. If they left, they said, the apartments might be repaired and rented to someone else.

"A month, a year, we hear all kinds of things about how long we're going to be here," one woman said. "The only sure thing here is, that we don't know anything for sure."

Monophysitism: This was a resurgent form of an older "docetism" that spiritualized Christ, subsuming his humanity as only an appearance that disguised his divinity.

The view was promoted by an aged monk, Eutyches, head of a cloister in Constantinople. He maintained Jesus' human nature had been deified, including his body, making him solely divine.

The tilted view, ascribed until recent times to the Coptic churches of Egypt and Ethiopia, was decreed initially by Dioscurus, who had become bishop of the powerful church of Alexandria in 444 on the death of the learned, even-handed Cyril, who had upheld Christ's divine-human unity.

"He is one and the same Son...complete in his deity and complete in his humanity," Cyril maintained. He said Christ is indeed "God with us," but completely as an ordinary human being.

But Cyril had been condemned posthumously about a year before the Chalcydon council, along with several others including Rome's Leo I, by a lesser synod in Ephesus.

It was a rambunctious, iron-handed affair, dominated by the ambitious monophysite Dioscurus and his wily monk-ally, Eutyches.

A "synod of robbers," Leo denounced it from Rome.

The meeting flung anathemas at Constantinople's Bishop Flavian, Rome's Pope Leo and the late Cyril, condemning and excommunicating them, so flagrantly abusing Flavian that he collapsed and died.

It was against this explosive background that the church's full, ecumenical council was summoned in Chalcydon at Leo's urging by the temporizing emperor Theodosius II, who was killed in a fall from his horse shortly before the council opened Oct. 8, 451.

A quickly installed successor, Marcion, an army general and senator, issued the edict for the council.

One of the first strong, intellectually astute and masterly bishops of Rome, Leo was elected by the city's clergy, senate and people in 440. He held that office for 21 years and exercised it vigorously to assert its primacy over the entire church as pope, a title that sometimes had been used by heads of other major, ancient sees.

Tensions over Rome's prerogatives threaded throughout that early period, eventually splitting the Western church from the East in 1054, and causing the 16th-century Protestant break from Rome.

However, Leo, titled "the Great" because of his theological acumen and the immense influence and respect he evoked, threw his weight on the side of affirming Christ's true, full humanity.

"The Lord of the universe took on the form of a servant," Leo wrote. "The impassible God became a suffering man; the Immortal One submitted himself to the dominion of death; Majesty assumed into itself lowliness; Strength, weakness; Eternity, mortality."

That true humanity was pointed up by the Chalcydon council, although emotional outbursts and tumult marked its outset. Initially, censure and imprecations billowed from both sides.

At length, however, the 24-day meeting settled down into a studious examination of the record, with statements and letters on the issue by various churchmen read aloud and discussed, particularly the letters of Cyril and Leo. It was these presentations that stirred the wave of acclamations.

The council repudiated actions of the "robber synod," vindicated the martyr Flavian and anathematized Dioscursus and advocates of monophysitism or other depreciators of Christ's humanity, deposing them.

The council adopted this formula of belief about Christ, largely based on documents of Leo and Cyril:

He is "complete as to his Godhead and complete as to his manhood, truly God and truly man, of a rational soúl and human flesh, consubstantial also with us as to his manhood, like unto us in all respects, yet without sin, begotten of the Father before all time according to the Godhead, in these latter days, for us and our salvation, born of the virgin Mary, the mother of God according to the manhood, one and the same Christ, Son, Lord, only-begotten, in two natures, inconfusedly, immutably, indivisibly, inseparately, the distinction of natures being by no means taken away by the union, but rather the peculiarity of each nature being preserved and concurring in one person...the same Son and only-begotten divine Word, the Lord Jesus Christ."

After the public reading came a chorus of approval. "This is the faith of the fathers! This is the faith of the apostles! To this we all agree."

That definition has set the doctrinal standard about Christ for churches ever since, both Roman Catholicism and Eastern Orthodoxy, passing into Protestantism like the ancient Apostles' Creed, Nicene Creed and nominally termed Athanasian Creed, a sixth-century summary based on Athanasius' earlier teaching.

However, the council rubbed a sensitive nerve in the developing power rivalry between Rome and Constantinople.

The council's 28th canon put the two ancient sees on equal footing, saying Constaninople had the "same prerogatives" and was "equally elevated" with Rome. Delegates of Leo I strongly protested.

However, imperial commissioners ratified the council's action, saying it stood despite Leo's protest. But neither Leo nor his successors gave up their insistence on the preeminent authority of Rome, seat of the apostle Peter.

Eastern Orthodoxy similarly has stood firm on its position about the ancient see of the apostle Andrew in Constantinople, repeating the old Latin phrase that Rome is only "primus inter pares" — "first among equals," disallowing Rome's claim to jurisdictional supremacy.

Such vying aside, however, the creedal affirmations of those early councils remain the lasting, universal Christian legacy.

In sum, they projected that richly complex image of God called the "trinity," a God who is not just a monolithic abstraction, but a vital, capacious God expressed in manifold ways, as creator, redeemer and sanctifying spirit.

Various illustrations have sought to clarify that abstruse idea of the "trinity," such as a mountain with three sides; the threefold unity of love itself, the lover and the beloved; of water, vapor and ice; of mind, body and soul; of flower, beauty and scent; of the sun, heat and light; of root, stem and fruit — in each case, all one being, yet different aspects of it.

Despite such analogies, however, the "trinity" remains an incalculable mystery not to be captured in human terms or dimensions, which by their own limits fall short of God's infinitude. "Man can perceive only the hem of the garment of the triune God," said that paladin of the Nicene Creed, Athanasius.

Nevertheless, by the church's struggle to comprehend, that veiled, unfathomable trinity became the challenging lens through which the world's Christians view the Ultimate. Underlying it was a compendium that the crusty scholar, Jerome, first put together for the West, the Bible.

Cowboys herd cattle off the Osage County, Okla., prairie in the annual ritual of the Osage, where ranchers are being asked to give way to a prairie preserve.

Tallgrass preserve debate waves on Oklahoma prairie

PAWHUSKA, Okla. (AP) — Rancher Lee Holcombe was reared in the Osage, close to the round-shouldered flint hills, with the bluestem grass belly-high to his horse.

Initially, he scoffed at a proposal to establish a tallgrass prairie national preserve in northern Oklahoma's Osage County. But after wrestling with the proposal for about two months, he said, his thinking shifted by "about 180 degrees."

"We have a unique ecosystem here. It's the only kind in the world," said Holcombe, 49. "A portion of it should be preserved."

His new outlook chafes many of his rancher friends, who believe their roots in the land go deeper than those of the fragile grasses settlers found undulating across the country's midsection 150 years ago.

Great herds of buffalo once surged across the prairie northward into the Dakotas. Eventually, most of the tallgrass prairie went the way of the buffalo. But in Osage County, the bluestem, Indian grass and cordgrass still reign.

The cowboy and his cattle have hardly changed the face of the land. Fences are rare and the distance between roads far. Buffalo wallows are discernible among the low hills. And prairie chickens barely bend the tallgrass as they scurry along.

Although Holcombe is a former president of the Osage County Cattlemen's Association, the association is backing the efforts of Dick Surber, another rancher who founded a group called Stop The Osage Prairie Park.

The Osage Indians, who own the lucrative mineral rights under Oklahoma's largest county, believe the preserve will be "an interference in the mineral estate," said Ralph Adkisson, a Tulsa attorney and a member of the Osage Tribal Council.

Twice, the council has voted 7-1 against the prairie preserve.

"It's the cowboys and the Indians who are against this thing," Adkisson said. "We're working together."

Pawhuska civic leaders believe the proposed preserve would attract tourists and their dollars, invigorating an economy that has lagged since oil and gas activity fell off three years ago.

"This area...is suffering from unemployment, business closings and a depressed market for our homes," said Bransford Hunt Shoemake, leader of a group advocating the preserve.

He said the preserve could attract 1 million people a year to Pawhuska, population 4,800.

Environmentalists say the Osage is their last best hope to preserve prairie unscarred by the plow or condominiums.

"It is one of the few remaining significant systems in this country that is not represented in the park system. And it should be," said Duncan Morrow, a spokesman for the National Parks Service in Washington. Parks service rangers would administer such a preserve, a designation that means less development for an area than a national park.

For 20 years or more, the parks service has been committed to the idea of a prairie preserve. Earlier attempts to establish a preserve in Kansas failed.

The Oklahoma Wildlife Federation, the Audubon Society and the Nature Conservancy have been active proponents of the prairie preserve.

Women call Spain's abortion law a complicated tangle of red tape

MADRID, Spain (AP) — An abortion law that went into effect in July was hailed as a breakthrough by Spanish women's groups, despite its limitations. But women now complain the law is a tangle of red tape that sometimes prevents them from getting abortions even if they qualify.

The law, a Socialist-sponsored revision of part of Spain's penal code, permits abortion only in cases of rape or incest, the detection of a deformed fetus or a danger to the mother's life. Before that, abortions were not allowed for any reason.

Under the new law, two doctors must certify that the woman's case meets those conditions. The law sets the time limit for performing abortions at 22 weeks of pregnancy. In cases of rape, the limit is 12 weeks.

The conservative opposition in Parliament opposed the law and the Roman Catholic Episcopal Conference has announced it will excommunicate women and doctors involved in abortions.

Public health spokesmen, abortion rights activists and the Women's Institute of the Ministry of Culture all have complained that the way the law is being implemented has made it an obstacle course for women who meet the requirements for an abortion.

"IF HEALTH authorities don't take steps to make sure the law is properly applied in the public sector," said Consuelo Ruiz-Jaraba of the Public Health Defense Association, "it will be clear that it is nothing more than a fraud."

In a four-page report Dec. 1, the independent newspaper El Pais said a network of clandestine but medically sound clinics was springing up throughout Spain to satisfy the demand from women who "could or would not cope with the system."

Spanish women with money have always been able to go abroad for abortions.

Under the new legislation, Spain's national health program covers the cost of an abortion. Many women cannot afford the cost of safe but illegal abortions performed locally or a legal one abroad.

A pregnant woman seeking a legal abortion in Spain must first go to a government-run birth control clinic, where a report on her case is prepared. She is then referred to an accredited hospital, although many of the clinics claim the Health Ministry has never furnished them with a list of state-sanctioned hospitals.

After the woman finds a hospital, she presents her case to a five-member evaluation commission. Abortion rights activists and women who have gone through the process claim that some commissions take so long to rule on individual cases that many women, although legally qualified, are unable to get an abortion because the stipulated time limit of her pregnancy has passed.

A CONSCIENTIOUS objection clause in the law allows doctors in social security hospitals to refuse to perform abortions. Critics charge, however, that some objecting doctors perform abortions in private clinics where they can set their own fees.

The first legal abortion since Spain's 1931-39 Second Republic was performed in August on a 22-year-old married woman and mother of two mentally retarded children. Six doctors turned her down before she found one who would perform the operation and then only on condition of anonymity.

In October, a woman doctor who performed the first legal abortion in the province of Navarre was subject to a smear campaign in the city of Pamplona; she was called a murderer and torturer.

Health Ministry officials refuse to release figures on the number of abortions performed in Spain since the law went into effect. Representatives of the government-funded Women's Institute say even they can't obtain them.

Abortion rights activists say 12 legal abortions were performed during August in a country where the rate of illegal abortions has been estimated at more than 100,000 a year.

Empar Pineda of the Madrid Abortion Rights Collective says the example of the four-province autonomous region of Catalonia is illustrative of the problem as a whole.

Pope plot trial goes Bulgaria to probe Soviet involvement

ROME (AP) — The trial of three Bulgarians and three Turks accused of trying to kill Pope John Paul II is moving to Bulgaria at the unprecedented invitation of the government to probe allegations the plot was hatched in the Soviet bloc country.

Judge Severino Santiapichi, deputy Judge Fernando Attolico and prosecutor Antonio Marini fly today to the Bulgarian capital of Sofia, and are scheduled to begin hearing testimony Friday, court officials said.

Convicted papal assailant Mehmet Ali Agca, a Turk, said the alleged plot was hatched and financed in Bulgaria.

The Bulgarian government, which prosecutors claim masterminded the assassination attempt, says it agreed to the unprecedented visit of a Western court to a Soviet bloc nation in order to ensure that the court learns the truth. It has denied involvement in the shooting.

The trip marks the final phase of the prosecution's case in the trial that began last May, court officials said. More than three dozen witnesses already have testified.

Italian newspapers once dubbed the case "the trial of the century" because of its potential implications for East-West relations.

Agca, who shot and seriously wounded the Polish-born pontiff on May 13, 1981, has testified that he was offered $1.2 million for the assassination by a Soviet official in Bulgaria. He has said the plot was carried out with the aid of fellow Turks and Bulgarian agents.

Prosecutors said Bulgaria instigated the alleged plot, possibly with Soviet support, apparently to stop the pope's support for the Solidarity trade federation in his native Poland. The independent federation, the first in the Soviet bloc, was banned after martial law was imposed in Poland in December 1981.

Among those to be questioned in Sofia are two Bulgarian defendants, both former Bulgarian Embassy employees in Rome — Todor Aivazov, a cashier, and Lt. Col. Zhelyo Kolev Vassilev, an aide to the military attache.

The two men left Italy in 1982 shortly before police arrested the third Bulgarian defendant, Sergei Ivanov Antonov, former Rome station chief of the Bulgarian state airlines Balkan Air. They have refused to return, claiming diplomatic immunity, and have been tried in absentia.

All three, charged with helping Agca plan the attack in St. Peter's Square, say they are innocent.

In a government announcement last week, Bulgaria said it always has been willing to cooperate with Italian authorities and that it allowed Italian investigators to question suspects in the case before the indictments were issued.

Bulgaria in the past has called the charges a Western invention aimed at discrediting the Soviet bloc.

The Italian court officials are expected to return to Rome on Monday.

Marini, the prosecutor, told reporters he does not plan to call other witnesses when the trial resumes in Rome on Jan. 10 after a Christmas break, but will begin his final arguments.

After Marini finishes, the defense lawyers will make their final arguments.

Giuseppe Consolo, an Italian lawyer who represents Antonov and who also will travel to Bulgaria, said he expects the case to go to the jury of two judges and six citizens by the middle of February. If convicted, all the defendants could receive life sentences.

The three defendants in custody — Omer Bagci and Musa Serdar Celebi, both Turkish, and Antonov — already have testified. None of them or Agca will travel with the court.

The third Turkish defendant, Oral Celik, is being tried in absentia. His whereabouts are unknown.

A seventh defendant, Bekir Celenk, died in October.

Afrikaners will rise up, white warns at funeral

TZANEEN, South Africa (AP) — About 600 white South Africans filled a Dutch Reformed Church today for the funeral of a young mother and her two small children who were among six whites killed by a land mine planted by black guerrillas.

After the service, Dick van Eck, whose wife and children were killed in the explosion on Sunday, said he hoped "these murderers will realize that if they tangle with Afrikaners, then they are tangling with people who will hurt them."

Van Eck, speaking in Afrikaans, the language of 60 percent of South Africa's whites who descended from Dutch settlers, said: "As I looked into the grave, I was stunned that there are still people who talk of negotiating with the ANC (African National Congress guerrilla movement)."

"And I have this to say to (ANC leader) Oliver Tambo: you must not awaken the tiger in the Afrikaner," van Eck said.

The van Eck victims — Jacoba, 34, Nelmari, 8, and Ignatius, 2 — and a grandmother and two small children from another family who are to be buried Friday, were killed while viewing game on a farm near the Zimbabwe border when their pickup truck hit a land mine.

The death toll was the highest number of whites killed in the African National Congress guerrilla war against white rule since a car bomb in Pretoria in May 1983 killed 20 people.

The few blacks who were shopping in Tzaneen either ignored the funeral procession or stared silently at the passing cars. Tzaneen is about 90 miles south of Messina at the Zimbabwe border near the site of the blast.

The ANC claimed responsibility for the explosion, but denied South African accusations that its guerrillas slipped into the country from black-governed Zimbabwe to plant the mine. The ANC said the unit responsible was based in South Africa.

The outlawed ANC is the main black guerrilla organization fighting apartheid, the system of legal racial segregation under which 5 million white South Africans deny the vote and other rights to 24 million blacks.

Van Eck, 36, held his sole surviving child, 18-month-old Erik, during the hour-long funeral.

Hundreds of mourners sobbed as van Eck, his four brothers and another relative carried the coffin of Mrs. van Eck to the hearse.

Israel begins to renew ties with African nations

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel and the Ivory Coast said Wednesday they plan to restore diplomatic relations broken after the 1973 Mideast War, and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said he expects more African nations to renew ties with the Jewish state.

"This is an important achievement in the process of renewal of relations between Israel and all those states on the African continent that had excellent relations with us before the Yom Kippur War and in fact broke them after it," Shamir told Israel Radio.

"We have always known that if the president of the Ivory Coast, who is one of most important statesmen in Africa, decides on this step it will also convince other leaders of African states to do as he has done," he added.

Shamir said the announcement in Geneva that the two countries would restore relations followed several years of unofficial ties through an Israeli "interest officer" stationed in the Ivory Coast.

"We have some information" that other nations where Israel has similar representation would follow the Ivory Coast's example, he said.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres told a news conference in Geneva, shortly after a secret meeting with Ivory Coast President Felix Houphouet-Boigny, that he hoped Israel would restore ties soon with two other African nations. He refused to identify them.

Peres flew to Geneva in an executive jet late Tuesday night, and his office announced he was visiting an army base somewhere in Israel.

There was no official comment Wednesday from Abidjan on the announcement. Houphouet-Boigny told a news conference in October that he intended to re-establish formal ties with Israel. Benad Avital, head of the African division of the Israeli Foreign ministry, was in Abidjan at the time.

Justice of putting teens on death row questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — It took less than an hour last September for a jury in Marion, Ark., to decide that a teen-ager should die for killing two elderly women and a 12-year-old boy.

The judge, who later said he had not expected the jury to return such a harsh punishment, set an April 12 execution date. Relatives and even some jurors were in tears as seventh-grader Ronald Ward was sent off to death row.

Ward, 15, joins 1,590 others waiting to die in the nation's prisons, and has become a member of a smaller, more select fraternity: One of 36 inmates facing death for crimes they committed while under the age of 18.

Some experts argue that young people, more than other criminals, are amenable to rehabilitation; others, including the Reagan administration's leading expert on the subject, says the age of a convicted murderer should not excuse him from the punishment provided by law.

The debate probably dates back to the first such executions in colonial America during the 1600s. It flared up anew in September with the execution of Charles Raumbaugh in Texas.

Raumbaugh, 28, was put to death by poison injection for murdering a jeweler, a crime he committed at the age of 17.

"He was awfully young and he had some tough breaks in life," said Tom Curtis, the former district attorney who prosecuted him. "But Chuckie is very violent, a really hardened killer and society has to protect itself."

According to David Bruck, a South Carolina attorney who specializes in capital cases, the youngest person to be put to death this century was a black youth, George Junius Stinney, who was 14 on June 16, 1944, when he was electrocuted less than two months after being convicted of the murder of an 11-year-old white girl in Clarendon County, S.C.

Of the approximately 13,000 legal executions in the nation's history, more than 200 involved offenders younger than 18.

More than two-thirds of those youths were black, and only one-fourth were white, according to the American Bar Association. In 1983, the ABA went on record against capital punishment for minors.

Of the 35 states that permit capital punishment, 14 have no age restrictions.

"I'm against the death penalty for anybody. I'm especially against it for juveniles," said Bruck. "I think it's a sorry commentary that society can't think of anything to do with their children (other) than killing them."

Richard Brody, director of a capital punishment project of the Legal Defense Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, agrees with Bruck.

Since the 1960s, the NAACP has argued against capital punishment, contending blacks are disproportionately represented on Death Row. In the Arkansas case, Ronald Ward is black; the jury which convicted him was all white.

Brody, citing studies on capital punishment over the last 40 years, said that the threat of death does not deter juveniles. The death penalty, he says, is used only for "retribution and public safety."

"People just want to feel safe in their home. The escalation of crime during the 1970s has made people more concerned. Since then there is a greater acceptance of violence in terms of the death penalty," he said.

The ABA said sentencing a youth who has 50 to 60 years yet to live is unnecessary since the prospect of life imprisonment would provide the government with whatever leverage it needed in prosecuting young criminals.

Death penalty controversy plays weighty election role

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Nearly 200 convicted murderers on San Quentin's Death Row may be dominant figures in California's 1986 elections, when voters pass judgment on one of the nation's most liberal courts.

So far, the races for governor and the U.S. Senate — and even a long list of prospective ballot propositions — have been overshadowed by the fight over a court that has overturned more than 90 percent of the death penalty convictions brought before it over the past eight years.

The court election may be the last big political battle left over from the eight tumultuous years of former Gov. Jerry Brown, as conservatives are campaigning to remove three Brown appointees from the bench.

The California ballot will also include a second bid by Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley to be the nation's first elected black governor, and prospective ballot propositions include an anti-abortion measure and far-reaching limits on court liability judgments.

Bradley lost to Republican George Deukmejian in 1982 in the closest California gubernatorial election in this century — by 92,345 votes among 8 million ballots — and both are unopposed in their primaries.

Six of the seven Supreme Court justices face confirmation votes, but most barbs have been hurled at Chief Justice Rose Bird and Associate Justices Cruz Reynoso and Joseph Grodin, all appointed by Brown.

Two conservative Deukmejian appointees and a moderate-to-liberal 1964 appointee of former Gov. Pat Brown are also on the ballot.

The yes-no confirmation votes on gubernatorial appointees are officially non-partisan, but Republicans from Deukmejian down to local candidates are challenging their Democratic opponents to either endorse or repudiate "the Jerry Brown court."

Democrats divide into three groups — some endorsing the justices, fewer publicly opposing them, and the majority remaining publicly neutral while condemning Republicans for "politicizing" the court.

The principal issue is the death penalty, which California reinstated in 1976, and the criticism is two-pronged — that the court is dragging its feet in its mandatory review of capital cases, and that when it finally take up cases, it finds "judicial error" to overturn even the strongest cases.

Court records show 225 death penalty convictions in California since 1976. Only 40 have been reviewed by the court, and 37 of those have been overturned. The three sentences upheld by the Supreme Court are now under appeal in other courts, and the remaining 186 convicts wait on San Quentin's overcrowded Death Row for Supreme Court hearings.

"Since I authored California's death penalty law in 1976, juries have imposed this penalty over 200 times, and yet not a single murderer has paid the ultimate price," Deukmejian says in almost every speech.

Similarly, Republican opponents of Sen. Alan Cranston, who will be going for a fourth term, are spending more time campaigning against his refusal to take a stand on the court than on the Democrat's Senate record.

The leading Republican in that race, former Los Angeles Police Chief Ed Davis, aired his first television commercials challenging Cranston to take a stand on the court more than a year before the November 1986 general election.

While no California Supreme Court justice has ever been ousted by voters, polls show Ms. Bird trailing by 9 to 20 percentage points, with most voters undecided on the other justices. Those same polls also report Californians favoring the death penalty by margins as great as 4-1.

Britain's Fleet Street rocked by sale of last family-owned newspaper

LONDON (AP) — In the latest of a series of shocks rocking London's newspaper row, Britain's last national newspaper-owning family has lost control of its 130-year-old Daily Telegraph to a Canadian millionaire.

Last week, Lord Hartwell, 73, relinquished his family's cherished but debt-ridden Daily Telegraph to industrialist Conrad Black, while a flamboyant rival, Robert Maxwell, announced he'd struck a "historic deal" with unions to lay off one-third of his Mirror Newspaper Group's 6,000 staff.

Fleet Street has long attracted rich men, Britons and foreigners. They have paid dearly for owning famous newspapers while unions fought to preserve antiquated printing methods and inflated payrolls.

Finally, however, technological change has caught up with Fleet Street, even if two decades late, giving newspaper owners a chance to force the powerful print unions into retreat.

Today, most of the country's 17 national newspapers plan to move to computerized plants in a new industrial zone four miles from Fleet Street and geographically beyond the reach of the industry's entrenched restrictive practices, including print union control of hiring and firing.

A major spur to technological change is the impending launching of two new computer-printed newspapers in the spring — one by British entrepreneur Eddie Shah and another by Australian-born publisher Rupert Murdoch.

Shah, who says he can cut his costs to a fifth of Fleet Street's, has challenged the traditional economics of the British newspaper industry. For established newspapers he represents both the threat of competition unhampered by huge costs, and the hope of a trail blazer.

Hartwell forfeited the Daily Telegraph and Sunday Telegraph, owned by his family for 57 years, because his expensive ($157.3 million), high-risk borrowing last June to finance new plants and printers' layoff payments failed to meet bankers' targets.

Lord Hartwell

Lord Hartwell forfeited the Daily Telegraph and Sunday Telegraph, owned by his family for 57 years, because his expensive ($157.3 million), high-risk borrowing last June to finance new plants and printers' layoff payments failed to meet bankers' targets.

"He took a massive gamble and lost — the brave, if foolhardy, way out," commented Telegraph associate editor Peregrine Worsthorne, writing in London's Spectator weekly news magazine.

Black, who acquired a 14 percent stake in June for $14.3 million and a first option if Hartwell sold more shares, boosted his stake to 50.1 percent for $28.6 million more.

Mirror publisher Maxwell extracted his concessions from the unions with dire threats. At one point he said that until his new plant is ready in 1987, he would suspend publication of his two Sunday national tabloids and the 3.1-million circulation left-wing Daily Mirror.

Murdoch is also on the offensive. He owns four British national papers, the profitable tabloids the Sun and the News of the World, along with The Times and The Sunday Times.

In October Murdoch gave the unions a year-end deadline to agree to terms for his new computer-set paper, the London Post. It is to be printed at Murdoch's new plant.

The two major print unions and the National Union of Journalists are balking at his demands for a no-strike deal, use of computer technology and full labor flexibility.

But the moderate electricians' union has indicated it will make a deal.

Sogat 82, the largest print union in the Western world, acknowledges it must concede to computerized typesetting and the use by journalists of video terminals. The argument is over terms.

"It is going to come into the British industry with or without our approval...quite frankly, the union has got to come to terms and accept we are going to have a much smaller workforce," says the union's Fleet Street negotiator, Bill Miles.

Also looking for tough payroll cutbacks is another newcomer to Fleet Street, United Newspapers.

Reagan will stick by unratified SALT II after Dec. 31 expiration

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite new allegations of Soviet violations, President Reagan will decide to continue to abide by the unratified SALT II treaty beyond its scheduled expiration on Dec. 31 — at least until next spring, several administration officials predict.

One official said Dec. 31 had become an artificial deadline for a decision on extending U.S. compliance with the treaty. But other officials say the date has no significance since the treaty was never ratified.

According to these officials, Reagan apparently hasn't made up his mind on the matter, but his advisers — except for Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger — agree it would be counterproductive to undercut the accord for the time being.

The officials, who spoke only on the condition they not be identified, predicted Reagan will put off any action to curb the treaty until next May when sea trials are scheduled for a new Trident missile-firing submarine, the Nevada, that would exceed weapons limits set by SALT II.

To stay within the treaty, Reagan would have to decide to dismantle an existing submarine missile system. When confronted with a similar choice last June, he decided to dismantle a Poseidon sub.

Plans for a second Reagan summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in June and the next round of arms control talks in Geneva on Jan. 16 are factors in the decision to continue the treaty, the officials say. Undercutting the agreement could dampen hopes for progress at these major meetings.

In addition, the nation's major Western European allies are virtually unanimous in wanting the administration to continue to respect the agreement, they add.

Most officials did not want to predict how Reagan would decide when the issue comes up again in May, but one official said that with the summit imminent, Reagan probably would seek some solution that would keep the agreement in force.

In his decision last June, Reagan said he would continue U.S. compliance with SALT II "provided that the Soviet Union exercise comparable restraint, and provided that the Soviet Union actively pursue arms reduction agreements...in Geneva."

Weinberger has strongly recommended that the administration take measures to counter what he contends are serious Soviet violations. A report from the Pentagon to the White House on options is due soon, but is not expected to have much impact.

Two officials said the spending constraints in the just-passed Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction bill have derailed the Pentagon strategy of recommending a supplemental budget appropriation for new spending on missiles as an American response to Soviet violations.

Reagan had said during his campaign for election in 1980 that the SALT II treaty, which was negotiated by President Jimmy Carter with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev in 1979, was "fatally flawed." But after taking office, he agreed to respect it as long as the Soviets did the same.

The agreement puts limitations on long-range bombers, submarines and land-based missiles.

Congress ups military death benefits for widows, children of Gander fatalities

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress plans to provide temporary housing assistance and increased death benefits to dependents of the 248 Army personnel killed in the crash last week of a chartered jetliner in Gander, Newfoundland.

The aid package would give victims' dependents 90 days of free or subsidized housing and increase the current maximum life insurance death benefit from $35,000 to $50,000.

The House and Senate unanimously approved separate versions of the package on Wednesday, and the Senate approved a compromise bill by voice vote. The House was expected to give final congressional approval today, sending the bill to President Reagan.

The death benefit boost had been scheduled to take effect Jan. 1, but the legislation would apply it retroactively to include the Army's 101st Airborne Division victims, who were killed Dec. 12 while returning from peacekeeping duty in the Middle East.

The temporary housing aid also would be retroactive, and additionally would apply to dependents of military personnel who die in the future while on active duty.

Currently, housing aid ceases when a service person dies, but the military has discretion to allow dependents living on base to remain there for up to 60 days — provided they begin paying rent. Those currently living off base must pay their rent without the benefit of an allowance.

Juvenile justice programs frozen

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Justice Department officials, in one of the first concrete responses to the new balanced-budget law, have frozen funding for juvenile justice programs ranging from drug-treatment clinics to aid for runaways.

The department's Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, headed by Alfred S. Regnery, has notified local governments, universities and nonprofit groups that most of its $70 million budget for fiscal 1986 is being put on ice pending a formal request to Congress to rescind the money.

Department spokesman Patrick S. Korten said there has been no formal announcement of a freeze and that only grants awaiting final approval are affected. But he said this involves the bulk of the juvenile justice budget.

Justice Department officials, like those at other agencies, have been studying how to cope with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, which requires a balanced federal budget by 1991 and mandates the first round of cutbacks for March 1. Since the department's law-enforcement functions are considered sacrosanct, most of the cuts are expected to fall on grant programs.

"There's going to be a whole lot of pulling up short while we wait to see what Gramm-Rudman requires," Korten said. He said the department is still negotiating over proposed cuts with the Office of Management and Budget.

Another department official, Katie Boyle, said that an additional $70 million in criminal justice grants to state and local governments is "under review."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on juvenile justice, said he has been "deluged by calls" from angry grant recipients. He called the move "a slap in the face to Congress, which repeatedly has rejected every single attempt by the administration to limit or eliminate the funding" for the juvenile justice office.

Specter, who voted for the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill, said that Regnery's office has refused to spend part of the money already appropriated for the 11-year-old program.

Don Mathis, cochairman of the Ad Hoc Coalition for Juvenile Justice, which represents such groups as the YMCA, Girl Scouts and Children's Defense Fund, said Regnery announced plans to seek a recision at a public meeting Tuesday. Mathis said that "this is the beginning of dissolving the federal involvement in juvenile justice."

"We're talking about layoffs of people immediately," he said. "We're talking about immediate impoundment of funds. The Justice Department can't even wait until March 1, when Gramm-Rudman takes effect."

Professor Marvin Wolfgang of the University of Pennsylvania said that his behavioral study of thousands of boys has been funded for years by Regnery's office. He said he was awaiting a pro forma approval for a $500,000 follow-up grant, to begin Jan. 1, when Justice officials called to say the money was frozen.

Gander tragedy

Enough cannot be said to ease the grief of the families of the 246 U.S. servicemen who were killed last week when their jetliner crashed in Gander, Newfoundland.

It was a shattering tragedy only compounded by the fact that the servicemen aboard were members of a 101st Airborne Division peacekeeping force on the way back to the United States to enjoy Christmas with their families.

Shortly after the crash, a number of terrorist groups claimed responsibility. But cause of the crash still had not been pinpointed. In fact, the chief investigator looking into the crash said earlier this week it may take up to a year to determine the cause since a large portion of the plane was consumed by fire.

Earlier this week, an irate reader called the Reporter-Telegram to lament the deaths of the servicemen and to complain about members of Congress flying about the country and the world in safety and comfort while servicemen, like those who died in the crash, are transported in aircraft that may not be airworthy.

Whether such a concern is valid undoubtedly will become obvious as the investigation of the crash progresses. Certainly, our military personnel deserve to be transported as safely and comfortably as our elected representatives.

We, too, lament the deaths and grieve with the families of these proud, young guardians of peace who died in Newfoundland. We also are appalled and repulsed by the actions of terrorist organizations that, whether responsible or not, take every opportunity to glory in the deaths of Americans.

That's yet another reason for Americans to hold high the torch of liberty and knowledge. There are so many forces in this world that want to drag down those values and to blame all their failings and shortcomings on this nation and its people.

Eventually, the cause of the crash will become evident and when it does, every effort must be made to respond to any terrorists responsible, if any, or to seek ways to make the transport of military personnel safer. We cannot allow those responsible for our safety and freedom to die in vain.

Combest hurting farmers

Well, Congressman Larry Combest was at it again in October. This time he sent out two separate mass mailings moaning about Texas Rural Legal Aid in Hereford and vowing to close the office. While certainly a popular stance in some right wing circles, it seems the taxpayers are ill-served when they have to foot the bill for Ol' Larry's attack against the lawyers who represent farmworkers; but then, election year is coming up and Larry is a politician. Perhaps he isn't counting on the migrant farmworker vote.

What is really going on here? Record numbers of family farmers are facing foreclosure and bankruptcy in Larry's district and all Larry wants to talk about is getting rid of TRLA. Does Larry really think that hurting farmworkers will help farmers? We need a strong pro-farmer policy, not the corporate agri-business policy of Larry and the Republicans.

When you see Larry campaigning this year ask him about his big business farm policy. Ask him for the names of the thousands of family farmers that have been destroyed by Republican agri-business policy decisions. Ask him how in the world destroying TRLA in Hereford is going to help bankrupt farmers in Lamesa or Iowa. Also, ask him if any of the thousands of farmworkers assisted by TRLA are requesting the office be closed.

Is it possible that TRLA has simply been very successful in carrying out its duty to Congress to represent poor farmworkers in the courts and all of this posturing and bluster is really prompted by those who have been on the losing end of lawsuits filed by TRLA to force the guilty to obey federal and state laws? Is it possible the constant attack against TRLA is simply losers manipulating poor Larry in an attempt to return things back to the good ol' pre-TRLA days? If this is the case, should farmworkers be deprived of competent and hardworking lawyers simply because they have no political clout with Larry?

It is morally wrong to deny the poorest people in this state access to the legal system. If that is what Larry is trying to do, someone would take a switch to him out behind the barn.

Midland not safe now

My letter regards the violent attacks that have recently been happening to persons in Midland, including assaults upon two members of my family.

The attacks first started at schools — then someone's home — and now I understand that just this past Friday (Dec. 6), there were two additional attacks.

It scares me to death to know that the criminals of the world are so much smarter than our law enforcement officials. I was born and raised in Midland. I now reside at Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, D.C., where my husband is in the Air Force. I have two children of my own and you couldn't pay me enough to move back to Midland. I have quite a few relatives living there and nothing would please me more than to see them all move to other cities. As far as I am concerned, there is no law and order in Midland County. I realize that Midland is no longer the small city it used to be but as the city has grown, the police force should have grown also. Obviously it has not!

This criminal has outsmarted the police now for several months. Midland is not a safe place to live. Women are carrying guns, people are having to spend thousands of dollars to install burglar alarms in their homes. I sincerely believe that something could be done to catch the perpetrator. If the present police force can't do it then I am inclined to believe that we have the wrong men/women on the force.

The time for action by the municipal government is now before more lives are destroyed by the criminal elements at large.

Sandra Lewis
Washington, D.C.

Teamsters boss cheered on violence

WASHINGTON — Teamsters President Jackie Presser applauded the type of violence that has become all too common in some labor unions. This is the conclusion of the President's Commission on Organized Crime, which will publish its findings in a forthcoming report on labor racketeering.

Jack Anderson

The report will cite Presser's praise for Teamsters officials who tried to break up a convention of union reformers two years ago. "We should be doing more of that," Presser is quoted as saying two weeks after the raid on the reformers' convention.

The incident occurred on Oct. 15, 1983, at the Hilton Hotel in Romulus, Mich., near Detroit, where the reform group was holding its annual convention.

According to files of the National Labor Relations Board and the crime commission, about 200 members of a rival group were brought to Romulus by bus from cities in Michigan, and from Ohio as far away as Youngstown. They "coercively interfered" with the convention by mass picketing and "forcibly entering" the meeting area.

Among the invaders were 20 Teamsters officials, including two trustees and five business representatives of Teamsters Local 20, five business reps from Local 337, two from Local 299 and the presidents of Locals 52, 164 and 247.

The commission report, according to our sources, will quote Presser as singling out a Teamsters official, Bill Evans, for his participation in the Romulus raid.

"Bill, I want to tell you, you're a helluva guy to take it on yourself," Presser said, according to the report. "I would have been there, but I'm not you."

Noting that Evans had earlier suffered two heart attacks, Presser continued: "I wouldn't have let him go there in a hundred years. I really got upset because I saw Bill there. His value is too great ...."

The NLRB filed a complaint against a joint council headed by Presser and six Teamsters locals for the convention raid. But the case was settled without a hearing.

The settlement, termed "highly favorable" by a Teamsters attorney, Sorrell Logothetis, required the posting on union bulletin boards of a notice pledging that reformers' meetings would not be interfered with again. An attorney for the reformers told our associate Tony Capaccio there has been no repetition of the 1983 raid.

In his remarks, as quoted in the upcoming commission report, Presser said: "I must have gotten a hundred calls. I know exactly what happened (in Romulus). I was pleased to see that there are Teamsters that want to stop all that (dissident) crap."

Presser said Evans "was screaming and fighting and shoving and pushing and swinging like the rest of them," and added, according to the report: "We should be doing more of that. ... I'm not going to let up on these people."

According to Logothetis, the labor board did not view Presser's remarks two weeks after the incident as authorization for the raid "but rather as ratification for it." He pointed out that none of the Teamsters defendants had to admit to any violations, and said one reason for the settlement was "the lack of a history of this type of activity" directed against the reform group. Presser's remarks were not an issue in the settlement negotiations, Logothetis said.

Getting Oil giving Los Angeles a little culture

MALIBU, Calif. — It is pleasing that from something as primitive as oil — decayed prehistoric organic matter — there now arises something as refined as a superb art collection. The Getty oil fortune has produced a jewel of a museum here and soon will produce another on a 742-acre hilltop in the Brentwood section of Los Angeles. In the process it is creating a fascinating exercise of statesmanship in the service of connoisseurship.

George F. Will

It is an exercise which, if performed imprudently, could convulse the art world and provoke "cultural protectionism." Performed judiciously, it will result in an art institution unrivaled anywhere.

J. Paul Getty had a lifelong passion for antiquities. As an American at Oxford in 1912, and later, he studied the classics in Latin and Greek and was an amateur but serious archaeologist. When he died in 1976 he stunned the art world by allocating to his avocation — the collection of art treasures — the fortune amassed in his vocation.

Harvard's endowment is $1.7 billion. The Getty Trust's is $2.4 billion, 10 times the endowment of New York's Metropolitan Museum. Federal law requires that such trusts spend a certain small percentage of their worth annually. The Getty's small percentage is approximately $100 million. Think of it: about $2 million a week. Last year, Washington's National Gallery spent $3.8 million on acquisitions, the Metropolitan $7 million.

The Getty can buy anything put up for sale. Because it can buy what it wants, it must be careful to want what it ought to want. Were it to throw its full weight around, it would skew the art market in two ways. Prices of art from prior to 1900 (the Getty's limit) would be distorted. And government would become even more active in producing art purchases, in the name of preventing the "pillaging" of national patrimonies.

The market for fine art is necessarily peculiar. The value of the objects has nothing to do with the costs of labor and material. The supply is small and fixed. Demand is a function of such and often non-rational factors as fear of inflation, conspicuous consumption, institutional competition, a true passion for art and, increasingly, defensive nationalism.

At a recent Sotheby's sale of Impressionists there were an estimated 40 people each worth more than $100 million. In 1985, 35 paintings and drawings were auctioned for more than $1 million each. Three of the top four went to private collectors. Getty paid the top price, $9.6 million, for an Italian renaissance masterpiece. It has stayed in Britain while British sources try to match the price, as British law allows.

Britain is exceptionally liberal in allowing the export of art. Cultural nationalism is understandable and, up to a point, admirable. But at some point it collides with the raison d'etre of museums, which exist to share and nurture the civilization that unifies the civilized nations.

The Getty Museum's director, John Walsh, is by choice a scholar and of necessity a diplomat. Last year his museum bought the Ludwig collection of 144 illuminated manuscripts and that single purchase made its collection one of the top three, behind the Morgan Library's and even with the Walters' Art Gallery in Baltimore.

Photography is the one (and deplorable) exception to the Getty's concentration on art from before 1900. It recently began its photography collection by buying nine of the most desirable private collections.

But in 1983 the Getty, although eager to acquire the 12th-century Gospel of Henry the Lion, backed away in favor of German interests who considered the item a national treasure.

Last year in Britain, Getty purchased six Old Masters drawings for $9 million. The Getty was interested in three dozen of the 70 drawings for sale and seriously desired 12, but decided the price — in money and goodwill — was too high in most cases.

Fortunately, the Getty is not required to spend the $100 million on art objects. Museums exist not only to collect but to conserve, exhibit and elucidate. The Getty has ambitious plans in all four areas. It has the fastest growing library — 50,000 volumes a year — in the world. It will stress the neglected science of art conservation and restoration. It will support serious art curricula for primary and secondary schools where philistine conservatism has dismissed art as a frill dispensable because unrelated to economic growth.

RUSSELL BAKER

After interface, quills will be for the birds!

On an island so electronically innocent that it has but one television station and less than 20 hours of programming per week, I am assembling my own word-processing system.

Russell Baker

It will make writing far, far simpler than it is with the quill-pen-and-parchment system that has burdened me these 30 years past.

The man who supplies my quills said I was mad. I replied:

"Mad, you say? Mad? They said Caesar was mad, they said Genghis Khan was mad. And Napoleon was surely the maddest of them all."

"That's Eduardo Ciannelli's great speech in the 1939 'Gunga Din,'" said the quill retailer, "and it doesn't apply in the present case because Ciannelli merely intended to wipe out the British Empire while you intend to assemble your own word-processing system with no help except the manufacturers' manuals, which are written in Japanese or, worse, in American engineers' English. Against the British, Ciannelli had a chance. You, on the other hand, are mad."

That windy insult did not send me stalking from the quill shop announcing I would never return. And so I have not had to grovel each time I've been back for fresh quills these past five months.

Yes, of course the toil required to make writing so simple is very, very complicated. Still I make a little progress every month. Late yesterday, for example, after six weeks of nearly round-the-clock despair, I achieved interface with my daisy-wheel printer, an extremely subtle machine which prints C.P.S.

My quill merchant had never heard of C.P.S. Imagine that. I had to explain that it was a Japanese term meaning "characters per second." The poor boob. With his quill pens he was really in another century.

"Why do you want to write characters per second?" he asked. "I thought you wanted to write hack journalism, not huge novels packed with characters like Dickens did."

These island rustics must have their little joke. "How many characters could Dickens write per second if he lived today and wrote on your machine?"

"Hundreds," I said, because to tell the truth I keep forgetting my printer's C.P.S. capacity. The number 7,800 keeps wanting to bounce off my tongue, but that may be the number of bauds in my modem.

I haven't tried for interface with the modem yet, but a glance at the manual told me it was absolutely packed with bauds. No, that glance didn't tell me what a baud is, but I sure know what a modem is: achieve interface with your modem and you can automatically phone publishers all over the world and pour your great novels into their printers.

Unfortunately the modem manual opens with a warning:

"Before plunging into the baffling electronic nightmare involved in getting this modem to work, notify your telephone company what you are doing, as your work may result in destroying your local phone system, thus requiring the phone company to recover massive repair costs by hauling you through the courts."

That cooled my modem zeal temporarily. It's there in the corner under that stack of parchment, patiently restraining its zillions of eager little bauds.

And what's the hurry? When the system is finished, writing will be so simple that I can take a year off to recover, then have the printer use its copious C.P.S. capacity to knock off a Dickensian best seller in a week or two.

The printer may be working by late summer. The interface achieved yesterday, alas, was not the triumph it seemed when I called in the quill dealer for celebratory champagne.

"It refuses to write anything except 'The quick brown fox jumped over the engineer's incomprehensible English sentences,' " the quill merchant correctly observed. "Make it write 'It was the best of times, it was the worst of times.' "

He knows how to twist the knife, that quill salesman. Achieving interface, I had to tell him, was not the same thing as configuring. For the past several midnights I have been deep in the manuals on the art of configuring. All begin with the line, "First apply to a good Japanese school of engineering."

Hah! If that quill peddler caught me doing that, he'd never stop laughing. I shall go it alone, even though when defining special printer modes I may be required to enter non-printing ASCII characters as part of the printer code, and to master entering the nonprinting characters by depressing the ALT KEY and typing the three-digit ASCII decimal code for that character.

How simple writing will be, eventually.

Falling steel girders kill three at site

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A construction worker at a downtown office tower says "it sounded like the whole building was coming down" when a stack of five-ton steel girders crashed through five floors, crushing three ironworkers to death.

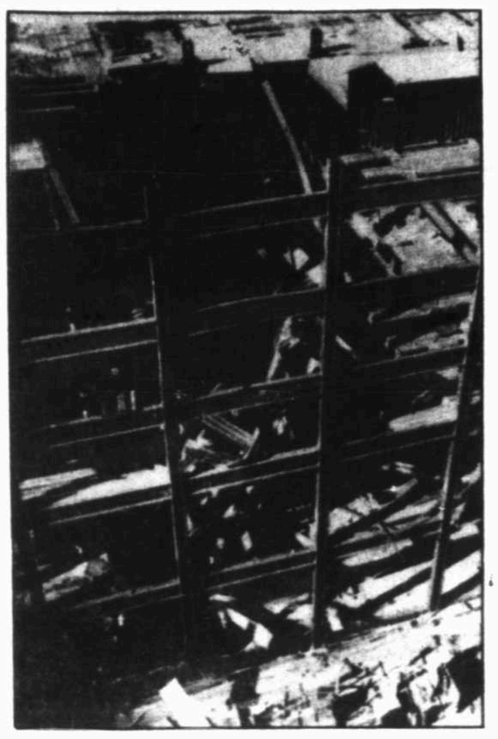
Six other workers were hurt Wednesday by the beams, which were being hoisted one at a time by crane and stacked on the fifth floor of the building being built on Wilshire Boulevard, next to the Los Angeles Hilton, officials said.

The beams punched 30-foot-wide holes through sheet metal flooring as they plummeted through five floors above ground and six below ground, fire Capt. Anthony DiDomenico said.

"The three victims rode the steel all the way down from the fifth floor," he said.

Fire Department Deputy Chief Don Anthony said the stack of beams dropped when an ironworker pulled a pin to release a crane's sling. Bystanders said that as many as three dozen girders may have fallen.

The names of the dead were not immediately released. Four workers were treated at the scene and two, whose injuries were described as minor, were taken to Good Samaritan Hospital.



Rubble from the collapse of five floors of a building under construction in downtown Los Angeles fell to the floors below Wednesday, killing three at the site.

NATION IN BRIEF

DuPont chemist held in synthetic heroin case

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — A Du Pont Co. chemist charged with making a synthetic drug so potent that an ounce has the same effect as 62 pounds of pure heroin was ordered held without bail Wednesday by a federal magistrate here.

Michael Hovey, 33, was ordered held at Gander Hill Prison after U.S. Magistrate N. Richard Powers agreed with the government's suggestion that bail be denied.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard J. McMahon said earlier this week that Hovey had been arrested Sunday morning as he picked up $260,000 in fake money left by federal agents near the Pennsylvania border.

The payment was part of a deal for the purchase of 3-methyl-fentanyl, a "designer drug" made by altering the structure of a standard drug to enhance its effect, McMahon said.

PLO smuggling suspected

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An Egyptian was arrested Wednesday on charges of conspiring to smuggle 150 pounds of a sophisticated explosive to a member of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Israel, a customs agent said.

Sultan Ibrahim El Gawli, 47, was arrested in Jersey City by U.S. Customs agents and will be arraigned in federal court Thursday on charges of murder for hire, dealing in explosives without a license, exportation without a licence and conspiracy, said spokesman Michael Kaufman.

The arrest capped a two-month investigation and was the third major smuggling ring broken up by customs agents in the past month, Kaufman said.

Two Turkish nationals and a Canadian businessman were arrested Dec. 2 and charged with trying to smuggle sophisticated radar equipment to Iran, while a plan to smuggle arms to an rebel group in Ghana was thwarted last week with the arrest of three Ghanian nationals.

Sultan Gawli, a naturalized U.S. citizen living in Jersey City, allegedly tried to purchase 150 pounds of C-4 explosives.

Man 'trying to survive'

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A welfare recipient who died when an abandoned building collapsed on him as he pulled out bricks to sell was just trying to "get money enough to survive," his stepsister says.

"I had told him it was dangerous to do that," Hattie Mace, stepsister of Columbus Bridges, said Wednesday. "He said, 'I'll be all right.'"

Bridges, 41, was inside a three-story tenement in an area targeted for redevelopment when the back half of the structure collapsed about 12:20 p.m. Tuesday, Police Detective Jack Eutsey said. The building was owned by the Newark Housing Authority.

Gander tragedy

Enough cannot be said to ease the grief of the families of the 246 U.S. servicemen who were killed last week when their jetliner crashed in Gander, Newfoundland.

It was a shattering tragedy only compounded by the fact that the servicemen aboard were members of a 101st Airborne Division peacekeeping force on the way back to the United States to enjoy Christmas with their families.

Shortly after the crash, a number of terrorist groups claimed responsibility. But cause of the crash still had not been pinpointed. In fact, the chief investigator looking into the crash said earlier this week it may take up to a year to determine the cause since a large portion of the plane was consumed by fire.

Earlier this week, an irate reader called the Reporter-Telegram to lament the deaths of the servicemen and to complain about members of Congress flying about the country and the world in safety and comfort while servicemen, like those who died in the crash, are transported in aircraft that may not be airworthy.

Whether such a concern is valid undoubtedly will become obvious as the investigation of the crash progresses. Certainly, our military personnel deserve to be transported as safely and comfortably as our elected representatives.

We, too, lament the deaths and grieve with the families of these proud, young guardians of peace who died in Newfoundland. We also are appalled and repulsed by the actions of terrorist organizations that, whether responsible or not, take every opportunity to glory in the deaths of Americans.

That's yet another reason for Americans to hold high the torch of liberty and knowledge. There are so many forces in this world that want to drag down those values and to blame all their failings and shortcomings on this nation and its people.

Eventually, the cause of the crash will become evident and when it does, every effort must be made to respond to any terrorists responsible, if any, or to seek ways to make the transport of military personnel safer. We cannot allow those responsible for our safety and freedom to die in vain.

LETTERS

Combest hurting farmers

Well, Congressman Larry Combest was at it again in October. This time he sent out two separate mass mailings moaning about Texas Rural Legal Aid in Hereford and vowing to close the office. While certainly a popular stance in some right wing circles, it seems the taxpayers are ill-served when they have to foot the bill for Ol' Larry's attack against the lawyers who represent farmworkers; but then, election year is coming up and Larry is a politician. Perhaps he isn't counting on the migrant farmworker vote.

What is really going on here? Record numbers of family farmers are facing foreclosure and bankruptcy in Larry's district and all Larry wants to talk about is getting rid of TRLA. Does Larry really think that hurting farmworkers will help farmers? We need a strong pro-farmer policy, not the corporate agri-business policy of Larry and the Republicans.

When you see Larry campaigning this year ask him about his big business farm policy. Ask him for the names of the thousands of family farmers that have been destroyed by Republican agri-business policy decisions. Ask him how in the world destroying TRLA in Hereford is going to help bankrupt farmers in Lamesa or Iowa. Also, ask him if any of the thousands of farmworkers assisted by TRLA are requesting the office be closed.

Is it possible that TRLA has simply been very successful in carrying out its duty to Congress to represent poor farmworkers in the courts and all of this posturing and bluster is really prompted by those who have been on the losing end of lawsuits filed by TRLA to force the guilty to obey federal and state laws? Is it possible the constant attack against TRLA is simply losers manipulating poor Larry in an attempt to return things back to the good ol' pre-TRLA days? If this is the case, should farmworkers be deprived of competent and hardworking lawyers simply because they have no political clout with Larry?

It is morally wrong to deny the poorest people in this state access to the legal system. If that is what Larry is trying to do, someone would take a switch to him out behind the barn.

Midland not safe now

My letter regards the violent attacks that have recently been happening to persons in Midland, including assaults upon two members of my family.

The attacks first started at schools — then someone's home — and now I understand that just this past Friday (Dec. 6), there were two additional attacks.

It scares me to death to know that the criminals of the world are so much smarter than our law enforcement officials. I was born and raised in Midland. I now reside at Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, D.C., where my husband is in the Air Force. I have two children of my own and you couldn't pay me enough to move back to Midland. I have quite a few relatives living there and nothing would please me more than to see them all move to other cities. As far as I am concerned, there is no law and order in Midland County. I realize that Midland is no longer the small city it used to be but as the city has grown, the police force should have grown also. Obviously it has not!

This criminal has outsmarted the police now for several months. Midland is not a safe place to live. Women are carrying guns, people are having to spend thousands of dollars to install burglar alarms in their homes. I sincerely believe that something could be done to catch the perpetrator. If the present police force can't do it then I am inclined to believe that we have the wrong men/women on the force.

The time for action by the municipal government is now before more lives are destroyed by the criminal elements at large.

Sandra Lewis
Washington, D.C.

JACK ANDERSON

Teamsters boss cheered on violence

WASHINGTON — Teamsters President Jackie Presser applauded the type of violence that has become all too common in some labor unions. This is the conclusion of the President's Commission on Organized Crime, which will publish its findings in a forthcoming report on labor racketeering.

Jack Anderson

The report will cite Presser's praise for Teamsters officials who tried to break up a convention of union reformers two years ago. "We should be doing more of that," Presser is quoted as saying two weeks after the raid on the reformers' convention.

The incident occurred on Oct. 15, 1983, at the Hilton Hotel in Romulus, Mich., near Detroit, where the reform group was holding its annual convention.

According to files of the National Labor Relations Board and the crime commission, about 200 members of a rival group were brought to Romulus by bus from cities in Michigan, and from Ohio as far away as Youngstown. They "coercively interfered" with the convention by mass picketing and "forcibly entering" the meeting area.

Among the invaders were 20 Teamsters officials, including two trustees and five business representatives of Teamsters Local 20, five business reps from Local 337, two from Local 299 and the presidents of Locals 52, 164 and 247.

The commission report, according to our sources, will quote Presser as singling out a Teamsters official, Bill Evans, for his participation in the Romulus raid.

"Bill, I want to tell you, you're a helluva guy to take it on yourself," Presser said, according to the report. "I would have been there, but I'm not you."

Noting that Evans had earlier suffered two heart attacks, Presser continued: "I wouldn't have let him go there in a hundred years. I really got upset because I saw Bill there. His value is too great ...."

The NLRB filed a complaint against a joint council headed by Presser and six Teamsters locals for the convention raid. But the case was settled without a hearing.

The settlement, termed "highly favorable" by a Teamsters attorney, Sorrell Logothetis, required the posting on union bulletin boards of a notice pledging that reformers' meetings would not be interfered with again. An attorney for the reformers told our associate Tony Capaccio there has been no repetition of the 1983 raid.

In his remarks, as quoted in the upcoming commission report, Presser said: "I must have gotten a hundred calls. I know exactly what happened (in Romulus). I was pleased to see that there are Teamsters that want to stop all that (dissident) crap."

Presser said Evans "was screaming and fighting and shoving and pushing and swinging like the rest of them," and added, according to the report: "We should be doing more of that. ... I'm not going to let up on these people."

According to Logothetis, the labor board did not view Presser's remarks two weeks after the incident as authorization for the raid "but rather as ratification for it." He pointed out that none of the Teamsters defendants had to admit to any violations, and said one reason for the settlement was "the lack of a history of this type of activity" directed against the reform group. Presser's remarks were not an issue in the settlement negotiations, Logothetis said.

Getting Oil giving Los Angeles a little culture

MALIBU, Calif. — It is pleasing that from something as primitive as oil — decayed prehistoric organic matter — there now arises something as refined as a superb art collection. The Getty oil fortune has produced a jewel of a museum here and soon will produce another on a 742-acre hilltop in the Brentwood section of Los Angeles. In the process it is creating a fascinating exercise of statesmanship in the service of connoisseurship.

George F. Will

It is an exercise which, if performed imprudently, could convulse the art world and provoke "cultural protectionism." Performed judiciously, it will result in an art institution unrivaled anywhere.

J. Paul Getty had a lifelong passion for antiquities. As an American at Oxford in 1912, and later, he studied the classics in Latin and Greek and was an amateur but serious archaeologist. When he died in 1976 he stunned the art world by allocating to his avocation — the collection of art treasures — the fortune amassed in his vocation.

Harvard's endowment is $1.7 billion. The Getty Trust's is $2.4 billion, 10 times the endowment of New York's Metropolitan Museum. Federal law requires that such trusts spend a certain small percentage of their worth annually. The Getty's small percentage is approximately $100 million. Think of it: about $2 million a week. Last year, Washington's National Gallery spent $3.8 million on acquisitions, the Metropolitan $7 million.

The Getty can buy anything put up for sale. Because it can buy what it wants, it must be careful to want what it ought to want. Were it to throw its full weight around, it would skew the art market in two ways. Prices of art from prior to 1900 (the Getty's limit) would be distorted. And government would become even more active in producing art purchases, in the name of preventing the "pillaging" of national patrimonies.

The market for fine art is necessarily peculiar. The value of the objects has nothing to do with the costs of labor and material. The supply is small and fixed. Demand is a function of such and often non-rational factors as fear of inflation, conspicuous consumption, institutional competition, a true passion for art and, increasingly, defensive nationalism.

At a recent Sotheby's sale of Impressionists there were an estimated 40 people each worth more than $100 million. In 1985, 35 paintings and drawings were auctioned for more than $1 million each. Three of the top four went to private collectors. Getty paid the top price, $9.6 million, for an Italian renaissance masterpiece. It has stayed in Britain while British sources try to match the price, as British law allows.

Britain is exceptionally liberal in allowing the export of art. Cultural nationalism is understandable and, up to a point, admirable. But at some point it collides with the raison d'etre of museums, which exist to share and nurture the civilization that unifies the civilized nations.

The Getty Museum's director, John Walsh, is by choice a scholar and of necessity a diplomat. Last year his museum bought the Ludwig collection of 144 illuminated manuscripts and that single purchase made its collection one of the top three, behind the Morgan Library's and even with the Walters' Art Gallery in Baltimore.

Photography is the one (and deplorable) exception to the Getty's concentration on art from before 1900. It recently began its photography collection by buying nine of the most desirable private collections.

But in 1983 the Getty, although eager to acquire the 12th-century Gospel of Henry the Lion, backed away in favor of German interests who considered the item a national treasure.

Last year in Britain, Getty purchased six Old Masters drawings for $9 million. The Getty was interested in three dozen of the 70 drawings for sale and seriously desired 12, but decided the price — in money and goodwill — was too high in most cases.

Fortunately, the Getty is not required to spend the $100 million on art objects. Museums exist not only to collect but to conserve, exhibit and elucidate. The Getty has ambitious plans in all four areas. It has the fastest growing library — 50,000 volumes a year — in the world. It will stress the neglected science of art conservation and restoration. It will support serious art curricula for primary and secondary schools where philistine conservatism has dismissed art as a frill dispensable because unrelated to economic growth.

RUSSELL BAKER

After interface, quills will be for the birds!

On an island so electronically innocent that it has but one television station and less than 20 hours of programming per week, I am assembling my own word-processing system.

Russell Baker

It will make writing far, far simpler than it is with the quill-pen-and-parchment system that has burdened me these 30 years past.

The man who supplies my quills said I was mad. I replied:

"Mad, you say? Mad? They said Caesar was mad, they said Genghis Khan was mad. And Napoleon was surely the maddest of them all."

"That's Eduardo Ciannelli's great speech in the 1939 'Gunga Din,'" said the quill retailer, "and it doesn't apply in the present case because Ciannelli merely intended to wipe out the British Empire while you intend to assemble your own word-processing system with no help except the manufacturers' manuals, which are written in Japanese or, worse, in American engineers' English. Against the British, Ciannelli had a chance. You, on the other hand, are mad."

That windy insult did not send me stalking from the quill shop announcing I would never return. And so I have not had to grovel each time I've been back for fresh quills these past five months.

Yes, of course the toil required to make writing so simple is very, very complicated. Still I make a little progress every month. Late yesterday, for example, after six weeks of nearly round-the-clock despair, I achieved interface with my daisy-wheel printer, an extremely subtle machine which prints C.P.S.

My quill merchant had never heard of C.P.S. Imagine that. I had to explain that it was a Japanese term meaning "characters per second." The poor boob. With his quill pens he was really in another century.

"Why do you want to write characters per second?" he asked. "I thought you wanted to write hack journalism, not huge novels packed with characters like Dickens did."

These island rustics must have their little joke. "How many characters could Dickens write per second if he lived today and wrote on your machine?"

"Hundreds," I said, because to tell the truth I keep forgetting my printer's C.P.S. capacity. The number 7,800 keeps wanting to bounce off my tongue, but that may be the number of bauds in my modem.

I haven't tried for interface with the modem yet, but a glance at the manual told me it was absolutely packed with bauds. No, that glance didn't tell me what a baud is, but I sure know what a modem is: achieve interface with your modem and you can automatically phone publishers all over the world and pour your great novels into their printers.

Unfortunately the modem manual opens with a warning:

"Before plunging into the baffling electronic nightmare involved in getting this modem to work, notify your telephone company what you are doing, as your work may result in destroying your local phone system, thus requiring the phone company to recover massive repair costs by hauling you through the courts."

That cooled my modem zeal temporarily. It's there in the corner under that stack of parchment, patiently restraining its zillions of eager little bauds.

And what's the hurry? When the system is finished, writing will be so simple that I can take a year off to recover, then have the printer use its copious C.P.S. capacity to knock off a Dickensian best seller in a week or two.

The printer may be working by late summer. The interface achieved yesterday, alas, was not the triumph it seemed when I called in the quill dealer for celebratory champagne.

"It refuses to write anything except 'The quick brown fox jumped over the engineer's incomprehensible English sentences,' " the quill merchant correctly observed. "Make it write 'It was the best of times, it was the worst of times.' "

He knows how to twist the knife, that quill salesman. Achieving interface, I had to tell him, was not the same thing as configuring. For the past several midnights I have been deep in the manuals on the art of configuring. All begin with the line, "First apply to a good Japanese school of engineering."

Hah! If that quill peddler caught me doing that, he'd never stop laughing. I shall go it alone, even though when defining special printer modes I may be required to enter non-printing ASCII characters as part of the printer code, and to master entering the nonprinting characters by depressing the ALT KEY and typing the three-digit ASCII decimal code for that character.

How simple writing will be, eventually.

Falling steel girders kill three at site

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A construction worker at a downtown office tower says "it sounded like the whole building was coming down" when a stack of five-ton steel girders crashed through five floors, crushing three ironworkers to death.

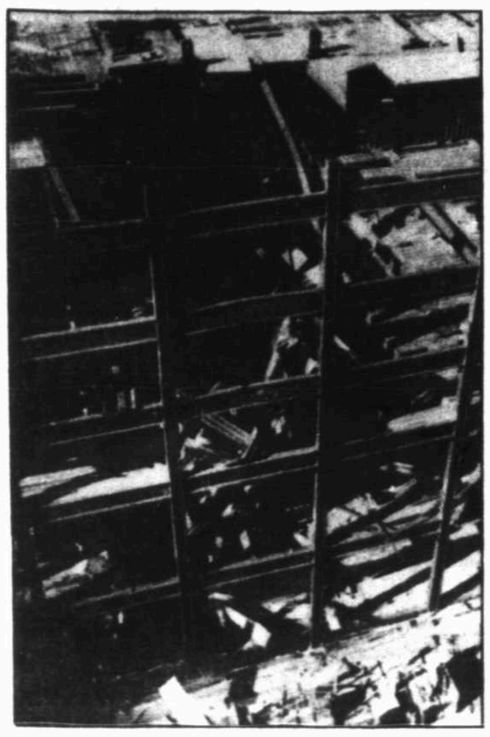
Six other workers were hurt Wednesday by the beams, which were being hoisted one at a time by crane and stacked on the fifth floor of the building being built on Wilshire Boulevard, next to the Los Angeles Hilton, officials said.

The beams punched 30-foot-wide holes through sheet metal flooring as they plummeted through five floors above ground and six below ground, fire Capt. Anthony DiDomenico said.

"The three victims rode the steel all the way down from the fifth floor," he said.

Fire Department Deputy Chief Don Anthony said the stack of beams dropped when an ironworker pulled a pin to release a crane's sling. Bystanders said that as many as three dozen girders may have fallen.

The names of the dead were not immediately released. Four workers were treated at the scene and two, whose injuries were described as minor, were taken to Good Samaritan Hospital.



Rubble from the collapse of five floors of a building under construction in downtown Los Angeles fell to the floors below Wednesday, killing three at the site.

NATION IN BRIEF

DuPont chemist held in synthetic heroin case

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — A Du Pont Co. chemist charged with making a synthetic drug so potent that an ounce has the same effect as 62 pounds of pure heroin was ordered held without bail Wednesday by a federal magistrate here.

Michael Hovey, 33, was ordered held at Gander Hill Prison after U.S. Magistrate N. Richard Powers agreed with the government's suggestion that bail be denied.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard J. McMahon said earlier this week that Hovey had been arrested Sunday morning as he picked up $260,000 in fake money left by federal agents near the Pennsylvania border.

The payment was part of a deal for the purchase of 3-methyl-fentanyl, a "designer drug" made by altering the structure of a standard drug to enhance its effect, McMahon said.

PLO smuggling suspected

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An Egyptian was arrested Wednesday on charges of conspiring to smuggle 150 pounds of a sophisticated explosive to a member of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Israel, a customs agent said.

Sultan Ibrahim El Gawli, 47, was arrested in Jersey City by U.S. Customs agents and will be arraigned in federal court Thursday on charges of murder for hire, dealing in explosives without a license, exportation without a licence and conspiracy, said spokesman Michael Kaufman.

The arrest capped a two-month investigation and was the third major smuggling ring broken up by customs agents in the past month, Kaufman said.

Two Turkish nationals and a Canadian businessman were arrested Dec. 2 and charged with trying to smuggle sophisticated radar equipment to Iran, while a plan to smuggle arms to an rebel group in Ghana was thwarted last week with the arrest of three Ghanian nationals.

Sultan Gawli, a naturalized U.S. citizen living in Jersey City, allegedly tried to purchase 150 pounds of C-4 explosives.

Man 'trying to survive'

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A welfare recipient who died when an abandoned building collapsed on him as he pulled out bricks to sell was just trying to "get money enough to survive," his stepsister says.

"I had told him it was dangerous to do that," Hattie Mace, stepsister of Columbus Bridges, said Wednesday. "He said, 'I'll be all right.'"

Bridges, 41, was inside a three-story tenement in an area targeted for redevelopment when the back half of the structure collapsed about 12:20 p.m. Tuesday, Police Detective Jack Eutsey said. The building was owned by the Newark Housing Authority.

WEATHER SUMMARY

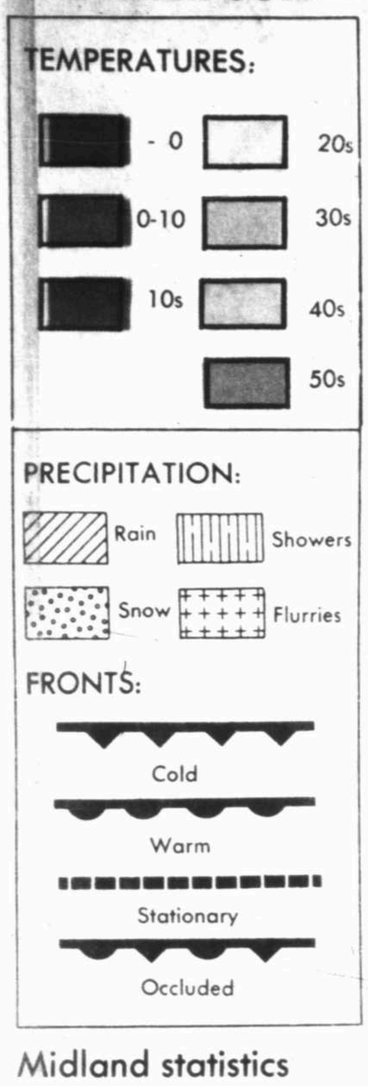
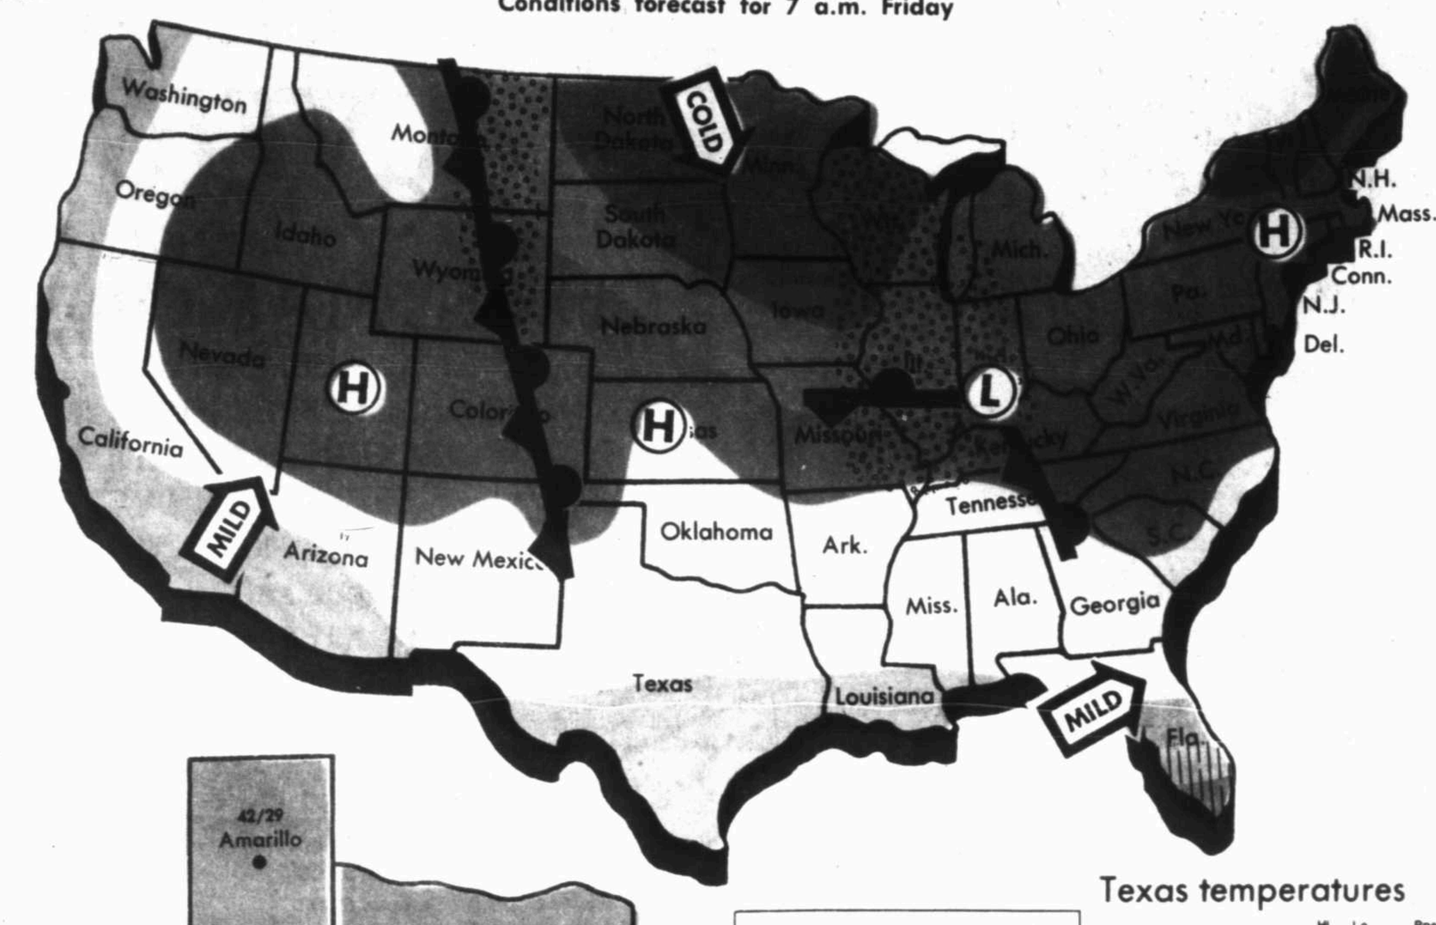
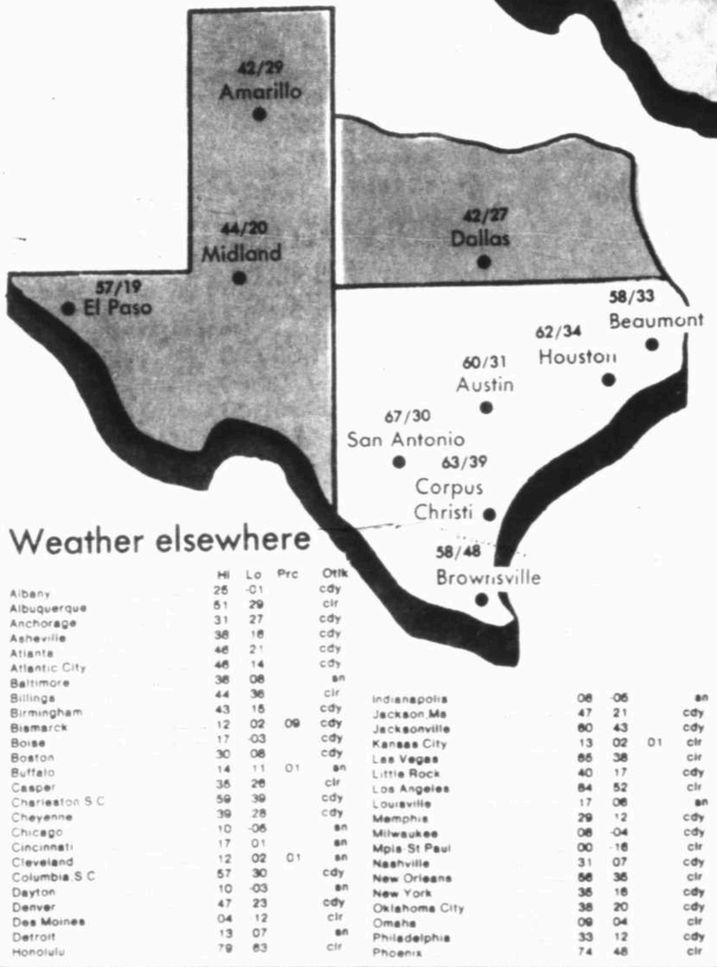
Conditions forecast for 7 a.m. Friday







In North Texas, generally fair with cool days. Cold at night. Highs 50s. Lows upper 20s to mid 30s.

In West Texas, mostly fair days and clear cold nights throughout the period. A little warmer Saturday. A little cooler north Sunday and Monday. Highs 50s except low to mid 60s Permian Basin, Concho Valley and Big Bend. Lows 20s and 30s.

In South Texas, partly cloudy with a slow warming trend Saturday and Sunday becoming fair and cooler Monday. Highs Saturday and Sunday in the low 80s to low 70s and in the upper 50s to upper 60s Monday. Lows Saturday mid 30s north to the upper 40s south.

Warmer days due

From Staff Reports

Warmer temperatures are predicted for the Permian Basin Friday as the high is expected to reach near 50, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Forecasters are calling for fair skies and a low in the upper 20s, warming Friday to the upper 40s. Winds will be light and variable tonight, becoming southeasterly Friday.

Wednesday's high was 43 degrees below the record set in 1939 of 78. The overnight low of 20 was 5 degrees above the record set in 1983.

Storm sweeping toward Gulf

Associated Press

The "Alberta Clipper" sailed toward the Gulf Coast today, keeping the Northeast and Midwest in the icebox after dumping up to 18 inches of snow near Lake Erie, stranding truckers with 5-foot drifts in Ohio and Pennsylvania and sending the homeless to shelters in Chicago, Boston and New York.

The giant arctic air mass sweeping south set low temperature records in at least 13 cities Wednesday, including a minus-30 reading in Huron, S.D., that lopped 5 degrees off a 101-year-old mark.

Police began moving street people into shelters in Chicago, Boston and New York City on Wednesday under regulations ordering the homeless moved indoors, against their will if necessary, when temperatures drop below 32 degrees.

The wind-chill factor Wednesday reached 40 below zero in Chicago, a "dangerously cold" level. Exposed flesh can freeze in temperatures below minus 30, the National Weather Service said.

The weather service predicted similar temperatures today.

Winds gusting to 46 mph in northwestern Pennsylvania and western New York state piled snowdrifts 3 to 5 feet high, the weather service said. In northern New York, Jefferson County at the eastern end of Lake Ontario had 50 inches of snow since Friday.

The cold snap that sent temperatures diving across much of the Midwest and the Northeast is known as an Alberta Clipper, a rapidly moving surface low pressure area that originates in the western Canadian province.

Mojo vs. Yates: Expect the unexpected

Defending champ Panthers unwilling to share 1985 title

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — A year ago Odessa Permian was undefeated, untied and ranked No. 1 in every state Class 5A poll. The Panthers were expected to easily handle Beaumont French in the championship.

However, the game was anything but "as expected." At one point the Panthers trailed by a 21-7 count and ended up coming back for a 21-21 tie and one-half share of the state crown.

Co-champion was a term that didn't sit well with the Panthers or their fans a year ago. It's an honor they don't want this year. They want it all, the whole pie.

The only team standing in Permian's way is No. 1 ranked and unbeaten Houston Yates, a team some say has as many as 17 major college prospects. A formidable foe to say the least.

"I don't know if they have that many (major college prospects) or not but they have at least 10," said Permian head coach John Wilkins. "They've got great talent, great skill people. They're big, strong and fast."

ON SATURDAY, the two teams will take the field to prove who is best. Kickoff is scheduled for 12:30 p.m. at Irving's Texas Stadium and the game will be televised live on KTPX, Channel 9.

Yates is making its first appearance in the championship game since 1981 and the Panthers are making their second straight appearance, a feat no team has accomplished since Austin Reagan won back-to-back titles in 1967 and 1968. Ironically, both years were against District 4-5 opponents with Abilene Cooper losing 20-19 and Permian losing 17-11.

WILKINS BELIEVES Yates is the toughest opponent Permian has faced all year, offensively as well as defensively and that hoped for state crown could be beyond their grasp.

"They like to mix it up," said Wilkins. "On offense, they do both things well. They average 180 yards a game passing and 213 yards a game rushing. They run out of a Houston veer set. Their quarterback, Charles Price, has a great arm and he's got three great receivers to throw to. He's passed for something like 2,200 yards and 23 or 24 touchdowns.

"They've scored more points than any 5A team in the state ever has but their defense is as impressive as anything," continued Wilkins. "They've only given up 77 points in 15 games including eight shutouts. They've scored 622 points and that broke our record of 565 from last year."

A great offense, a great defense and no weaknesses, at least none that any team has found yet. If Wilkins and is staff have spotted any, they aren't saying.

It's going to be tough for us," said Wilkins. "The thing we've got to do is try not to give up the big play on defense, bend but don't break. On offense, no mistakes is the real key for us."

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Odessa Permian head football coach John Wilkins watches the blocking techniques of two of his players during a workout this week in preperation for Saturday's State Championship game in Texas Stadium against Houston Yates.

BECAUSE OF the Lions' size, hitting the pass is going to be the key to Permian's offensive attack. And, that means All-State candidate Greg Anderson could see a busy day, as well as the rest of the Panther receiving corps.

"We're going to have to throw the football and catch it," said Wilkins. "We're not going to be able to consistently run against them. They're just too good up front to think we're going to consistently block them.

"I think Greg Anderson is going to be a key along with Nolan Watson (tight end), Brian Lauterbach (flanker) and the rest of our backs. We've got to spread the ball around.

"The main thing we have to do is find a way to keep it close and then find a way win it in the fourth quarter. If they jump out on us early it will be hard to come back and win. We've got to hope they don't play as well as they can because we've never played a team with as much potential as Yates.

"I don't know what's going to happen Saturday," continued Wilkins. "We may get thoroughly beaten. It's hard to carve a spot in Permian history because we have so much tradition. But, we might get lucky and win the game."

LUCK COULD be the biggest weapon the Panthers have. How many times in how many games have the Panthers snatched victory from defeat? Every team in the district has a horror story to tell about losing to Permian.

Those teams call it magic, from which Permian gains a second nickname: Mojo. It's a magic that really exists. It comes from hard work, a sound development system and a winning tradition. Panthers don't go onto the field thinking they're going to win. They know they're going to win.

It's a magic that's carried them to four state championships (including last year's tie) and to Saturday's eighth title game since the school opened in 1959.

"We're just happy to be back there again," said Wilkins. "We're extremely pleased to have a chance to play for it all again."

And, after this game is won or lost, Permian can look forward to another state title game. Afterall, they do say history repeats itself.

Suspensions cloud Baylor's cage future

WACO (AP) — Baylor University has accepted penalties invoked by the NCAA committee on infractions for violations uncovered in the school's basketball program, and Baylor officials sought a quick ruling Wednesday that would settle the eligibility status of eight suspended players, the Waco Tribune-Herald reported.

Those eight players have been suspended indefinitely because of their involvement in various rules violations, one source told the Tribune-Herald Wednesday.

The exact nature of the infractions could not be confirmed.

Baylor appealed Wednesday to the NCAA eligibility committee to have those suspensions lifted in time for the players to participate in games Friday and Saturday as Coach Gene Iba's team takes part in the Volunteer Classic in Knoxville, Tenn.

The Bears leave for Knoxville Thursday at 10 a.m. Baylor plays North Carolina-Wilmington at 5 p.m. Friday in the first game of the Classic.

IBA SAID Wednesday he could not comment about which players were eligible and which were not, or about which players would be permitted to make the trip.

"All I can tell you is we're leaving at 10 o'clock Thursday. If it comes down to it, just me and my wife will go," he said.

While the investigation and punishment phase of the Baylor case was under the auspices of the NCAA's committee on infractions, Baylor's appeal concerning the players' immediate eligibility was directed to the eligibility committee.

While acknowledging "the ball now is in our court," NCAA director of enforcement David Berst said Wednesday an official announcement providing details of Baylor's violations and punishment still could be a week or more away.

"But even after the school has responded to our official letter, accepting the findings and the penalties," he said, "it can take a week or two before we are ready to make an announcement to the media.

"We have to write the text of the announcement and then we advise the school what that text says. Only then do we give it to the wire services and other news outlets."

BUT BERST said he hoped to have "a better reading" by Thursday on what timetable the NCAA might follow in making the announcement.

That announcement will mark the culmination of a case which was set in motion early last February when school president Herbert Reynolds was first informed of possible irregularities in the Baylor basketball program which at the time was in the hands of coach Jim Haller.

Reynolds immediately ordered an in-house investigation of the program and informed the Southwest Conference of his actions.

White, Cosbie, Walls go to Pro Bowl

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Eight members of the Chicago Bears, who have lost only one game and clinched a division title earlier than any team in history, have been voted to the National Football Conference team for the Pro Bowl game.

The Chicago contingent, five of them starters, was led by inside linebacker Mike Singletary, one of two unanimous choices in voting by conference players and coaches. Outside linebacker Lawrence Taylor of the New York Giants, selected for the fifth time in five National Football League seasons, was the only other unanimous selection.

Three members of the Dallas Cowboys were selected to the starting team — tight end Doug Cosbie, defensive tackle Randy White and cornerback Everson Walls. Wide receiver Tony Hill was chosen as a reserve.

There were seven Los Angeles Rams selected, two as starters, and five players from the Giants, three as starters. The running backs are starters Walter Payton of the Bears, who will be playing in his eighth Pro Bowl, and Roger Craig of San Francisco 49ers, plus reserves Gerald Riggs of Atlanta and Joe Morris of the Giants.

In addition to Singletary and Payton, others from the Central Division champion Bears picked as starters were defensive end Richard Dent, offensive tackle Jimbo Covert and center Jay Hilgenberg.

Other NFC starters are Mike Quick of Philadelphia and Art Monk of Washington at wide receiver; Jackie Slater of the Rams at tackle; Kent Hill of the Rams and Russ Grimm of Washington at guard; Joe Montana of the 49ers at quarterback, and Craig.

Defensive starters include defensive end Leonard Marshall of the Giants; White of Dallas, selected as a nose tackle; linebackers Rickey Jackson of New Orleans and Harry Carson of the Giants; cornerbacks Eric Wright of San Francisco and Walls.

SWC hoop takes backseat

It could be a long cold winter of college basketball in the "Lone Star" state, at least in the Southwest Conference.

The "No Star" state may be more fitting as far as big time collegiate roundball is concerned as the state's big time powers have shown an inability to win big games in non conference play.

Traditional SWC powers Houston and Arkansas put forth the best arguments year in and year out that, yes, Virginia, they really do play basketball in the Southwest Conference. Just ask any Santa Claus you meet.

This season, even the most unquestioning believers like Virginia may be hard pressed to prove that point.

Quick, name one player off each SWC team. Too tough? Name one player from just four teams. OK. Name just one player off any conference team. Well, maybe that one's a little too easy.

But it looks again as if the SWC will take a backseat to the "elite three," the Atlantic Coast, Big Ten and Big East in national prominence this season. Whatever happened to "Phi Slamma Jamma?"

LAST YEAR was a down one from a national standpoint in the SWC. Houston, a Final Four participant for three straight years, didn't even make it to the national version of "March Madness," the NCAA tournament. Arkansas and conference champion Texas Tech both met with early exits while the rest of the league watched the big show on TV.

In 1985, Coach Gerald Myers and Texas Tech surprised the "Big Two" with its first SWC title and first NCAA tourney appearance since 1976. A fine senior mix, good coaching and most of all, Bubba Jennings, gave Red Raider faithful a chill usually only felt when the wind creeps in under the door in basketball season.

Alas, Jennings is gone and the Raiders have already suffered unsettling defeats at Cal-Fullerton by 13, Kansas State by 23, Indiana by 15 and to Memphis State at home by, gulp, 25.

There appear to be few miracles left over from 1985 to carry Tech into the SWC title chase again.

BUT THEN again, what else is there? Let's run down the conference and see what we have to look forward to this winter.

Houston, one of the early pre-season favorites, suffered its worst loss of the season before the high-tops were ever laced up in fall practice. The loss of Tito Horford not only stripped the Cougars of a dominator in the middle, it stripped the conference of a legitimate drawing card on the road.

There just isn't a player in the league with the electricity to pull people away from their cozy living rooms.

Horford-less, the Cougars have already been dealt three losses on the season by some bullies from the Atlantic Coast Conference, the Big Ten and someone who goes by the name of Joey Meyer.

Well Sooeee! What about those 'Hogs?

Eddie Sutton architect of five conference crowns in 11 years, took the high road all the way to Kentucky, king pin of yet another behemoth loop, the Southeastern Conference. In his absence, Razorback fans will enjoy the run-and-gun style of Nolan Richardson, the Western Texas-ex.

RICHARDSON HAS woven the most impressive pre-conference record to date, going a stellar 1-1 against Big Ten competition. Of course, Arkansas' 79-70 overtime win over Ohio State required the total disappearance by a team that led by nine points with 1:43 to play. Let's wait at least until the Hogs tip off with Kansas Saturday for further judgement.

Still, in Fayetteville lies the SWC's best hope for a basketball rejuvenation with Richardson at the wheel. But the Hogs have a major flaw that folks around here refuse to overlook, they're from Arkansas. They're also a year away from their true potential with just one senior on the squad.

Texas A&M is trying, but early season losses to Alabama-Birmingham, Tennessee and Lamar don't bode well for the Aggies. Everytime A&M faces a good team, they seem to fade. Wins over Alcorn State and Prairie View just don't get you ready on the big boys. But a returning-starting five can only get better from a wobbly early season.

THE "KILLER Frogs" of Jim Killingsworth have also been less than lethal in preconference action. Don't anybody mention the words, North Texas State in TCU's locker room.

Close losses to Oklahoma and Louisiana State may have some Longhorn backers harboring hope for the upcoming season, but John Brownlee can't do it all. Texas boosters are hoping fourth-year coach Bob Weltlich can live up to some promises with his second winning season.

Baylor's Gene Iba walked into a rat's nest in Waco when he took over at Baylor, and losses to Vanderbilt and Drake haven't helped ease the pain. Just courting a team the rest of the season could be considered an accomplishment with eight of his players looking at indefinite suspensions from the NCAA.

SMU's Dave Bliss is looking for replacements for 7-footer Jon Koncak and "Where is he now" Carl Wright. The pall that hangs over the university's athletic program because of numerous football improprieties could easily creep into Moody Coliseum and destroy the "Bliss" remaining from a trio of fine seasons.

AN UNBLEMISHED record to date has impressed at least one voter in the AP poll. Somehow wins over Morgan State and Central Michigan haven't converted me. The Mustangs will get their first test of the year this weekend at the Kentucky Invite.

Rice? What can I say, any whose tallest player is a 6-9 center from Reykjavik, Iceland, can't be all bad, can it?

So there they are. Not dogs by any means. Nor national powers.

It should be a close race, an exciting race. A neck-and-neck finish perhaps. But in the national picture, will anyone even notice?

Wagner snaps funk, Hoosiers pay

Associated Press

College Roundup

After a long period of depression, Milt Wagner is finally getting the right bounces again.

"I knew it would come sooner or later," Wagner said after scoring 22 points Wednesday night to lead 16th-ranked Louisville to a 65-63 victory over No. 17 Indiana. "You can't bring something back too quick, and I'd tried to come back too much."

The 6-foot-5 senior guard missed last season because of a broken foot and struggled in Louisville's previous games this season before he asserted the leadership and clutch play Wednesday night that the Cardinals had come to expect from him.

"I had a couple of jumpers in a row and I knew I couldn't miss," Wagner said after scoring Louisville's final 10 points. "After a while, Coach (Denny) Crum started running plays for me, and it helped me get the easy jumpers and I got fouled a lot."

With neither team able to keep a lead midway through the second half, Wagner took charge and had six points in an 8-0 Louisville run that put the Cardinals up for good at 52-47 with 7:03 left.

"I've been saying since the first of November that Milt was going to have one of those nights he's capable of having," Crum said. "He's going to hit a couple and they might all go in."

"They really had a great last 10-minute effort out of Wagner," Indiana Coach Bob Knight said. "He made the difference in the ballgame, scoring and hitting those free throws down the stretch."

Three Indiana starters, center Daryl Thomas, forward Andre Harris and guard Rick Calloway, played sparingly in the second half because of foul trouble. Steve Alford carried Indiana, scoring 27 points, 16 in the second half.

Top Twenty

Mark Alarie scored 13 points and freshman Danny Ferry added 12 and Duke took advantage of 16 second-half turnovers to beat Davidson, 69-52.

The Blue Devils built a 16-point lead in the opening half at 24-8 and looked as if they would blow the game open on a basket by Ferry with 7:05 left, but the Wildcats cut the margin to 33-25 at intermission. The Blue Devils then outscored Davidson 20-9 in the first nine minutes of the second half to grab a 19-point cushion.

Duke's tough man-to-man defense held the Wildcats to 38.9 percent shooting for the contest. Davidson stayed close by hitting 10 of 11 foul shots.

DAVID WINGATE scored 14 points and Michael Jackson, Reggie Williams and Horace Broadnax added 12 apiece as Georgetown buried crosstown rival American, 83-59.

The Hoyas took command of the game in the second half as they outscored the Eagles 20-2, over a 6½-minute span to widen a 39-36 lead to 59-38 with 11:10 to play. Broadnax scored eight points and Wingate had six to lead the Georgetown surge.

"That's the way they play," said American Coach Ed Tapscott. "They are big, strong and talented and they pressure you until you fold."

IN OTHER games involving Southwest Conference teams, led by junior forward William Mills' 24 points, Arkansas defeated Alabama State 87-69 in Little Rock. Arkansas is now 7-1 in non conference play.

In Houston, the Cougars returned to the win column with a 92-82 decision over Brigham Young-Hawaii. Six-nine junior Greg Anderson scored a career-high 36 points and snared 20 rebounds to lead the 4-3 Cougars. Senior guard Alvin Franklin also tossed in 18 points for Houston.

Homer king Maris buried in Fargo

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — Former baseball teammates gathered to bury home run hitter Roger Maris, the "plain, basic" Midwesterner who lost a two-year battle with cancer.

Funeral services for Maris, who grew up in Fargo, were set for noon today at St. Mary's Cathedral with the Rev. John E. Moore delivering the homily. Burial was planned for later in the day at Holy Cross Cemetery.

Some 500 people braved below-zero temperatures Wednesday night to attend a prayer service for Maris. There, mourners remembered the former New York Yankee as more than an outstanding athlete.

"I remember Roger as a great family man and a great athlete," said former Yankee teammate Clete Boyer, his voice cracking with emotion. "I (was) proud to know him."

"He was a plain, basic North Dakotan," said Don Gooselaw of Fargo, who knew Maris from childhood. "He was a friend of everyone."

Maris was best known for the 61 home runs he hit as a Yankee in 1961, eclipsing the mark of 60 held by the legendary Babe Ruth.

But Sid Cichy reminded the congregation Wednesday night that Maris was an all-around athlete at Fargo Shanley High School, excelling at football, basketball and track.

In an October 1951 football game at Devils Lake, Maris set what is believed to be a national high school record when he returned four kickoffs for touchdowns, Cichy said.

"Yes, Roger had a faculty for doing things with a flair," Cichy said.

"We're very proud that Roger chose to be buried in Fargo," said Jim McLaughlin of the Fargo American Legion, which has named a garden after Maris at the local baseball field.

Among those in attendance Wednesday night were former Yankee teammates Mickey Mantle, Whitey Ford and Bill "Moose" Skowron.

St. Louis Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog and Mike Shannon, a former teammate during Maris' two years with the Cardinals, also were in the congregation. All five were named as pallbearers for today's funeral.

Maris died Saturday in Houston at the age of 51. Born in Hibbing, Minn., Maris was reared in Fargo and considered it his hometown.

Barkley, Malone trim Rockets' Twin Towers

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

Charles Barkley and Moses Malone, the shortest power forward-center combo in the National Basketball Association, chopped the Houston Rockets' Twin Towers down to size.

The 6-foot-6 Barkley and the 6-10 Malone combined for 55 points and 31 rebounds and completely outclassed 7-4 Ralph Sampson and 7-0 Akeem Olajuwon as the Philadelphia 76ers defeated the Rockets 126-108 Wednesday night. Both Sampson and Olajuwon fouled out after totaling 31 points and 10 rebounds.

"We knew that they were the league's best rebounding team, so it was important for us to be aggressive on the boards," 76ers Coach Matt Guokas said. "I was suprised by the dominant effort of our club. We attacked them before they could come after us."

Barkley was 12-for-16 from the field and scored 31 points for Philadelphia, and he led the 76ers' 52-32 rebounding advantage with 19.

Lakers 107, Bucks 105

Los Angeles improved its league-best record to 22-3 as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 31 points in a narrow victory over Central Division-leading Milwaukee.

The Lakers trailed 70-59 with 7:14 left in the third quarter, but they got back into the game with a 15-6 spurt that cut the deficit to two. Los Angeles finally took its first lead, 98-96, with 3:50 left on two free throws by Worthy, who scored 22 points.

Celtics 137, Mavericks 117

Larry Bird scored 17 of his 35 points in an 8½-minute span of the fourth quarter as Boston improved its record against Dallas to 11-0 since the Mavericks entered the NBA in 1980.

The Celtics led by 20 points in the third quarter, but the Mavericks cut the margin to 93-86 with 11:15 left in the game. Bird then led a 35-20 spurt with 17 points as Boston rebuilt its advantage to 128-106 with 2:30 remaining.

Kevin McHale scored 28 points and Danny Ainge had 20 points and 13 assists as Boston set a team record with 46 assists. Rolando Blackman had 21 points and Detlef Schrempf 20 for Dallas.

Clippers 103, Warriors 99

Cedric Maxwell scored six points in the last minute of play as Los Angeles defused a furious fourth-quarter rally by Golden State.

The Warriors trailed 89-69 with 9:47 left, but they outscored the Clippers 28-8 over the next 8:09 to tie the score 97-97.

Nets 113, Jazz 98

Otis Birdsong scored 24 points and Micheal Ray Richardson added 21 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists for New Jersey against Utah.

After the Nets rolled to an 86-60 lead in the third quarter, the Jazz came back as Adrian Dantley and Rickey Green had 10 points each in the fourth period. But when Utah cut the deficit to 101-94, Darryl Dawkins scored nine of his 18 points in the final 2:26 to secure the victory for New Jersey.

Broncos hope playoffs not 'mission impossible'

NFL Preview
Associated Press

The mission for the Denver Broncos Friday night is simple — survive.

The Broncos, who led the NFC West for most of the season until their loss to the Los Angeles Raiders two weeks ago, visit Seattle for their final game knowing that only a victory will keep them alive in the race for an AFC wild-card spot.

But even if the Broncos win, they will have to depend either on the Cleveland Browns to beat the New York Jets and knock them out or the Cincinnati Bengals to knock out the New England Patriots. Both those games are Sunday.

"We're still alive, and that's the nice thing about it," says Coach Dan Reeves of the Broncos. "There are not that many teams which can say that going into the final week of the regular season."

A look at the matchups for Friday and Saturday's National Football League games:

Saturday, Dec. 21
PITTSBURGH (7-8) AT NEW YORK GIANTS (9-6)
11:30 p.m., NBC

The Giants can clinch a wild-card spot with a win but also can gain the playoffs if they lose and Washington or San Francisco lose. The Steelers were eliminated in spite of their 30-24 win over Buffalo last week ... The Giants have not beaten the Steelers since 1969 but hold a 40-26-3 series lead ... Both teams rely on overpowering defenses. The Steelers are the AFC's top-ranked defense (286 yards allowed per game), while the Giants are second in the NFC (274) ... The Steelers' receiving tandem of John Stallworth and Lipps has combined for 129 catches, 1,998 yards and 16 TDs ... Reserve QB Scott Campbell engineered the club's biggest comeback ever when he rallied the team from a 21-0 deficit against the Bills ... Meanwhile, the Giants held a 14-7 second-period lead before giving up two TDs in a 43-second span that helped lift Dallas to a 28-21 victory ... RB Joe Morris raised his season TD total to 18 (of the team's 21 rushing TDs) with a 1-yard run for the Giants' final TD ... The Giants have outscored opponents 118-27 in the third period ... QB Phil Simms leads the NFC in passing attempts (479) and yards (3,723) ... The defensive front has accounted for 65 sacks, seven short of the league record set by Chicago last year.

WASHINGTON (9-6) AT ST. LOUIS (5-10)
3 p.m., CBS

The Redskins can clinch a wild-card berth if they win and San Francisco loses or if they win, the 49ers win and the Giants lose ... Washington won the first meeting 27-10, building their series lead to 48-32-2 ...

The Redskins have won four of their last five since splitting their first 10 games ... Washington recovered from a 24-7 deficit to overtake the Bengals 27-24 last week as George Rogers ran 34 yards for a TD with less than eight minutes remaining in the game ... WR Art Monk garnered NFC Offensive Player of the Week honors with a 13-catch, 230-yard, one TD performance ... DEs Charles Mann, with 13¼ sacks, and Dexter Manley, with 13, are close to Coy Bacon's club record of 15 set in 1979 ... Cardinals' RB Stump Mitchell has rushed for 877 yards and is trying to become the fourth player in club history to hit the 1,000-yard mark ... The Cards surrendered 425 yards total offense in being routed by the Rams 46-14 last week ... St. Louis is third-from-last in the NFC in turnover ratio at minus 7.

Gerry Faust at press conference naming him the new head coach of the Akron Zips football program.

It's official: Faust's an Akron Zip

By CHUCK MELVIN
AP Sports Writer

AKRON, Ohio — Gerry Faust, the former Notre Dame coach who first built his reputation as an Ohio high school football coach, returned to the state Wednesday, taking over the University of Akron's developing football program.

Akron President William Muse said that Faust received a five-year contract, worth at least $70,000 per year. Benefits could boost the contract's total into six figures annually, Muse said.

"I was born as a Buckeye, raised as a Buckeye, lived most of my life as a Buckeye, and it's great to be back here," Faust told a news conference.

Faust replaced Jim Dennison, the Akron Zips' winningest football coach, who posted a record of 80-62-2 in 13 seasons as coach of the Ohio Valley Conference team. Dennison, 47, was appointed an associate athletic director at the school.

"I am very, very proud, and I stand here with a sense of accomplishment," said Dennison, who was warmly applauded at the news conference. "I think we are leaving Gerry Faust with a potential championship team with 28 fine seniors."

"I think Jim's done an excellent job in building a winning football team," Faust said. "I have a tough act to follow, and I thought about that a little bit when I was making the decision."

FAUST SAID he expects to feel a lot of pressure in the Akron job.

"Whether you're coaching at junior high, high school, major college or a Division III college, you are under pressure," he said.

Faust said he had received inquiries from 13 colleges and tentative offers from nine.

He said he chose Akron because the university's football program was expected to move from NCAA Division I-AA to I-A in about a year.

He said he especially liked returning to Ohio, saying the state has a strong high school football tradition that could aid his recruiting.

Faust, 50, resigned Nov. 26, four days before the final game of the season, and posted a 30-26-1 record at Notre Dame. The Irish lost 58-7 to Miami, Fla. in Faust's final game as head coach.

"Someone like Faust can put us on the map," John Steinhauer, chairman of the university board of trustees, told The (Akron) Beacon Journal. "We're going to get national publicity.

"I'll tell you why he picked Akron. He picked Akron because of the fact he wants to prove to people nationwide that he's a winner. He's very, very interested in that, and he picked what he thought was the best place for him to show that."

FAUST, HOWEVER, said he hoped it was his ability and not his former school that got him the job.

"I hope I was picked as a person and not because of where I came from," Faust said. "I don't think I have to prove anything to anybody. I'm not in it for that reason."

Akron, which has applied for membership in the Mid-American Conference, was 8-3 this season and reached the Division I-AA playoffs, before losing to Rhode Island 35-27 in the first round. The Zips hope to fill the vacancy created by Northern Illinois' withdrawal from the MAC.

Faust was one of the country's best-known high school coaches, compiling an 18-year record of 174-17-2 at Moeller, north of Cincinnati. That mark gave him the chance to coach at Notre Dame, his lifelong ambition.

"I'm delighted for him," Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan said Wednesday. "I think it's wonderful. He talked to me about it yesterday. It sounded to me like it was a perfect situation for him."

Faust built the program at Moeller from scratch during the early 1960s and fashioned a high school dynasty with unbeaten teams in 1975, '76, '77, '79 and '80. He won Class AAA (big school) state championships in five of his last six years there.

THREE OF Moeller's championship games under Faust were played at the 35,482-seat Akron Rubber Bowl, the university's home field.

"I'm happy to get back into the Rubber Bowl. I had a lot of good memories there. I can't say the same for the Notre Dame stadium. But the Rubber Bowl is great," Faust said.

Faust said he would make fewer changes immediately in the Zips' style of play than he tried to do when he first arrived at Notre Dame.

"I won't make that mistake again," he said.

Faust's best years at Notre Dame were in 1983 and '84 when the Irish posted 7-5 records and received bowl invitations. The '83 team beat Boston College 19-18 in the Liberty Bowl, and the '84 team lost to Southern Methodist 27-20 in the Aloha Bowl.

No. 1 Wayland Baptist looking for new coach

PLAINVIEW (AP) — Officials at Wayland Baptist University have begun an immediate search for a new women's basketball coach, following the resignation of Dave Ketterman for unspecified personal reasons.

"My reasons are personal and I would appreciate being relieved from my current contract and pursue a course I feel would be in the best interests of my family and myself," Ketterman said in the statement the school released Tuesday.

WBU Athletic Director Sylvia Nadler said the resignation was accepted and that the top ranked NAIA team, which last played Saturday and won't play again until Jan. 10, has been informed of it.

"I hope to have the position filled by the time the girls come back on Jan. 3," Ms. Nadler said. "They (the girls) were shocked by the announcement."

Assistant coach Laina McDonald will serve as interim coach until a successor is named.

Heavyweight deWit moves to 8-0-1

From Staff Reports

Midland-backed Willie deWit scored his eighth professional victory last Friday nailing down a unanimous decision over previously unbeaten Scott Wheaton in a heavyweight bout in Calgary, Alberta.

DeWit's first 10-round fight was a tremendous success as he returned to his home land for the first time since his professional debut. Now fighting out of Burnet, deWit knocked Wheaton down in both the eighth and 10 rounds before earning an overwhelming decision. Wheaton is now 12-1-1, while deWit's record moves to 8-0-1.

Ben Tamney, Midland's connection to the former Canadian Amateur champion and silver medalist in the Los Angeles Olympic Games, called deWit's latest win "his most impressive ever."

"He looked as fresh after 10 rounds as he did after one," Tamney said. "We'll probably keep him in 10-rounders until late summer or early in the fall then move him up to 12 rounds. We're not going to push him, though."

The fight was broadcast nationally in Canada, where deWit is something of a folk hero, but is not scheduled to be aired on U.S. television. Tamney is now trying to work out a deal for deWit's next fight, perhaps on the undercard of next year's Marvin Hagler-John Mugabi fight in Las Vegas.

Hogs rely on quarterback quorum

By Hank Wesch
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — A football team with two quarterbacks of close-to-equal talent is one that frequently produces a quarterback controversy at least or outright conflict at worst.

But at the University of Arkansas, two quarterbacks merely constitute a quorum.

"In our offense, we always believe we have to play two quarterbacks," said Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield. The coach reasons that since the flexbone attack he prefers to use results in the quarterback being hit on nearly every play having a capable reserve on hand is critical.

THIS YEAR, sophomore Greg Thomas started all but one game of a 9-2 regular season. But senior Mark Calcagni won Southwest Conference offensive player of the week honors in his lone start, a 30-15 triumph over Rice in the eighth game, and alternated with Thomas in the season finale against Southern Methodist.

So what is expected to happen Sunday afternoon when the Razorbacks line up against Arizona State in the Holiday Bowl? Calcagni will start. Thomas will assuredly see action.

"Mark is a senior, he's been around the program for five years, and the coaches felt he deserved the chance to start a bowl game," said Thomas. "It's coach Hatfield's decision and I don't feel bad. It wouldn't do any good for me get all upset about it anyway."

REGARDLESS of what transpires Sunday, it has already been a season of significance for Thomas, a 5-11, 185-pounder from San Angelo, Texas.

Emerging from preseason drills as the No. 1 after Calcagni suffered a shoulder injury, Thomas made history as the first black to start at quarterback in Arkansas. The scene for his debut was Jackson, Miss., against Ole Miss.

"It kind of had me worried," Thomas said. "The first black quarterback to start for Arkansas and playing in Mississippi. It was publicized a lot, it seemed to me the media made a big issue of it. It was something I felt like running away from, but there was no place to hide."

Thomas ran for 115 yards in 24 carries, his best rushing game of the year, as Arkansas prevailed 24-19.

CONSIDERED AN inconsistent passer prior to this season, Thomas worked on that aspect of his game last summer. The Razorbacks averaged just over 10 passes per game, and Thomas completed 33 of 72 attempts for 554 yards and four touchdowns while being intercepted twice.

Thomas' 50-yard pass to tight end Luther Franklin provided the winning touchdown against Baylor, and he had 125-yard passing games against New Mexico State and Texas Christian in back-to-back weeks.

When Thomas went out with an injury on the Razorback's second play against Houston in the seventh game of the year, however, Calcagni stepped in to throw for 167 yards and rush for 95 in a 57-27 route. It was the most points ever for Arkansas in a Southwest Conference game.

A WEEK later, Calcagni ran for 160 yards against Rice.

Calcagni, whose brother Ron was an All-SWC quarterback for the Razorbacks in 1977, played split end in 1984 after seeing limited action at quarterback as a sophomore. Calcagni finished the year with 27 completions in 47 attempts for 561 yards and three touchdowns.

"We're close friends, and I was happy for Mark," said Thomas. "This team has a lot of talent and if one person was injured there was always somebody to take over and do the job if it was at running back, receiver, quarterback or wherever."

Responsibility for a season in which only a 15-13 loss to Texas and 10-6 defeat to Texas A & M kept Arkansas from the SWC championship and Cotton Bowl berth is also shared.

"It hurt real bad, everybody was down for a while," Thomas said. "But now we're looking forward to the Holiday Bowl."

It's the craftsman that learns to win with dogs

Anybody can train Man o' War.

Anybody can win with the 1927 Yankees.

Anyone can play four aces. Anyone can win with Koufax's curve, Tilden's serve, Ali's jab or Nicklaus' tee shots.

It's no trick to get the girl when you look like Robert Redford.

It's what you do when life deals you a busted 8-high straight that separates the craftsmen from the charity cases. It's what you do when the count is 0 and 2 and your bat's broken.

Anybody can get rich in Texas. It's getting rich in Bulgaria that stamps a man as worthy of a bow. I could win with Sam Snead's swing. Making do with the one I got requires a lot more ingenuity.

You should see the stock Mel has had to put up with in his career. You wouldn't get on some of those nags to get out of a forest fire. You wouldn'tknow whether to ride 'em or milk 'em. Bridle path rejects.

One thing they all had in common: consistency. They all quit at the eighth pole.

What happens to you, though, when you get bad horses to condition all your life is, you get to recognize a good one when he comes into view.

But, not always right away. In 1975, Mel had a dish-legged colt out of a mare, Countess Mary, who had broken down at Santa Anita and by a sire, Bold Combatant, who was so undistinguished he was sold to Japan.

BALLPLAYERS who can't hit the good curve anymore go to Japan and so do studs who can't produce anything that can win anywhere but fairgrounds bull rings.

Stute put the foal of these race track rejects into a sale with instructions to unload if the bid reached $4,000. It never did.

So, he took the horse out of the auction and telephoned the movie producer, Howard Koch, instead. "Either lend me $6,000 or buy this horse," he proposed.

Koch hesitated. "I'll get back to you," he said and then telephoned actor Walter Matthau to see if he wanted half the horse. Walter, who could read a Racing Form, passed.

Koch then telephoned actor Telly Savalas. Telly, who didn't know what a gelding was, thought it would be a gas.

AND THAT'S how Mel Stute got his most famous horse, Telly's Pop, to train. Telly's Pop became a winter book favorite for the 1976 Kentucky Derby, no less.

He won the Del Mar Futurity, the California Derby, and actually looked like the second coming of Secretariat before he became unsound and had to drop out of the classics picture.

"He became Hollywood's favorite horse," recalled Stute, laughing. "We broke all records for people in the winner's circle photo. I think we had 200 there at Bay Meadows, not including me and the jockey."

As if things weren't tough enough, Mel had gotten into racing only as a brother to the established trainer, Warren Stute, with whom he is still confused.

"I rubbed horses for him, walked hots," Mel said of his brother. "When I went out on my own, I learned everything there was to learn about bad horses. I didn't have a one that didn't have something wrong with him. I specialized in cheap horses."

EVEN HIS very first winner, an $800 claimer named Egg Nog, who he won with at Longacres in Seattle, was a rogue who had been ruled off the tracks in California for bolting.

The horses Stute got, you couldn't just tie a yellow ribbon on them and put them in the paddock parade.

First of all, you had to cajole stable space for them. Then, you had to find a spot on the card where they wouldn't get run over by the next race.

The major tracks didn't often write races whose conditions fitted Stute's stable. They just didn't write races for horses who are nonwinners – ever – and odds-on to remain that way, or for maiden 8-year-olds.

But, like a guy learning to win with a hanging curve or a loop in his backswing, Mel Stute learned to condition a horse the way only a guy who is trying to make the rent and the income finish in a dead heat can.

"I would go 8 to 10 years between good horses," he said. "Where a Wayne Lukas would spend millions at a sale for one or two horses, I would spend, say, $104,000 for 12."

MOST HORSEMEN insist that the only way to tell a good horse is by clock or by breeding, but Stute would haunt the claim box in search of the horse who didn't know he came, so to speak, from the wrong side of the track. Snobbery has limited appeal to horses.

"Horses, like humans, exceed themselves," Stute advises.

The good horses come with greater frequency now. Back in the old days, there would be a lot of flag drops between the eras of Great Circle, his first good horse, on whom Jockey Bill Shoemaker won his first $100,000 race in 1950; First Balcony, who won the 1961 Californian, and Telly's Pop. In between, Stute had horses who had to be tubbed in ice, fired in the ankles or wrapped like King Tut just to be able to make the post parade without a cane.

BUT LAST Sunday, Melvin Frederick Stute got to know what it must have felt like for Casey Stengel to go into a World Series with Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Yogi Berra and Allie Reynolds, or for Knute Rockne to look down the bench and see George Gipp or the Four Horsemen suited up and ready.

Stute went into the million-dollar Hollywood Futurity at Hollywood Park with aces full for a change, a hand where he could say, "I'll play these," instead of "Check to the raise and I'll take four cards."

Stute has the best 2-year-old this year that he's ever had, at least since Telly's Pop, and maybe the best anyone has.

Snow Chief is a hard runner who has beaten his company consistently all year, and won Sunday by six and a half lengths.

HE HAD TO send Snow Chief to Mexico to get blistered for bucked shins but Stute is an old hand at that and hopes to send both Snow Chief, and stable mate Darby Fair, back to next year's Kentucky Derby.

In any case, it'll be nice to be in the position for a change of the manager who can say to his cleanup hitter, "Go on up and hit a home run," and not, "Let's see. Who've I got who can hit this pitcher?" Or who can put an all-star lineup on the field in the Super Bowl and say "Try not to run up the score."

He just hopes he doesn't get soft.

Glouchkov getting 'American education'

By SCOTT BORDOW
Cox News Service

PHOENIX, Ariz. — It took only seven days for Georgi Nikolov Glouchkov to get a taste of America.

While the Suns were in Atlanta for a game Nov. 6 — just a week after he arrived in the U.S. — Glouchkov decided to take a walk around the southern city by himself. Lesson one of his Western education cruised by on the street.

"A couple of girls drove up and asked me where I was staying," Glouchkov said through interpreter Rumen Kocankov, who defected from Bulgaria 13 years ago. "I told them.

"They were very forward. I told them I don't speak any English. They said it didn't matter."

Glouchkov may be a newcomer to America, but he knew a prostitutes' podai (pass) when he heard one. All he said was ne (no).

Welcome to the U.S.A.

GLOUCHKOV AND fellow rookie Ed Pinckney are ready to begin filming their promotional spot for TV. The cameraman counts down: "Four, three, two, one, you're on."

Pinckney: "Georgi, how do you say Merry Christmas in Bulgarian?"

Glouchkov: "Chestita kholeda."

Glouchkov: "Yes. Happy Christmas and a Happy New Year."

Cut. Print it.

Another reel canned in the documentary "Georgi does America," or "How a 6-foot-8 Bulgarian who speaks little English adapts to life in the West."

It's been two months since the Bulgarian Federation gave its approval for Suns general manager Jerry Colangelo to sign Glouchkov to a two-year, $375,000 contract, making the 25-year-old the first Iron Curtain NBA player.

Seventeen days after the agreement, Glouchkov left his family in the Bulgarian seaport of Varna (pop. 257,731) for a city he couldn't spell or pronounce correctly.

The only English he knew was what his teammates had taught him during his two-day stint in preseason camp at Prescott: "Soul food," "pretty girl," and "vodka, Coke, no ice."

TALK ABOUT your culture shock. You think moving from the East Coast to Arizona is a hard, emotional experience. Try packing up every possession you own and traveling halfway around the world to a country whose language you don't understand.

Depression, homesickness, here you come.

For most everybody but Glouchkov, that is. Two months after leaving Bulgaria, he drives a 1984 Lincoln Continental Mark VII the Suns lease for him, lives in a middle-class apartment the club found, films television commercials, goes out on double-dates and entertains the media from coast to coast.

America has been "bery, bery good" to Georgi Glouchkov (pronounced YOUR-GEY GLOOSH-KOFF), indeed.

As the best player in Bulgaria, he often was held responsible for his team's success or failure.

"In order for our team to play well, I had to play well," Glouchkov says. "There was a lot of pressure and strain. That's why I was always so uptight."

Glouchkov's new-found peace goes well beyond the basketball court, however. He's thoroughly enjoying his adventure in a strange new world. He's like an oversized kid discovering a candy store for the first time.

"People here are much friendlier than I thought they'd be," Glouchkov said. "Because of the way they've accepted me, I'm having a great time."

Glouchkov's enthusiasm to learn American culture has endeared himself to everybody he has met. Suns fans have adopted him as the hometown favorite. Whenever he enters a game, a huge roar erupts from the crowd. They cheer his every move, whether it be an offensive rebound or a bucket. He received a standing ovation one game when he was whistled for an offensive foul.

AND GLOUCHKOV'S dry sense of humor has disarmed anyone who thought he's the stereotypical East European — intense, serious, rarely smiling. His one-liners — let's call them Glouchkovisms — have filled reporters' notebooks.

On the difference between driving in the United States and Bulgaria: "Here, you hardly ever get stopped by the police."

Pitt coach to resign

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Roy Chipman, weary of denying reports that the University of Pittsburgh recruited players improperly, resigned as basketball coach Wednesday effective at the end of the season.

Chipman, 46, told a hastily called news conference that he will "never coach basketball another day after this season ends" because "it's just not that important, because I want to do something else with my life."

"I made my decision because — and don't laugh because it's not funny — my 9-year-old son, Geoffrey, came home and asked me if I was going to go to jail because of illegal recruiting," Chipman said.

"I said, 'Damn,' and then said to myself, 'It's not that important,' " he said.

There have been frequent allegations that Pitt has improperly recruited players, and former assistant coach Seth Greenburg was forced to resign two years ago for furnishing transportation for recruit Marlon Ferguson.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association is investigating a charge by Villanova University freshman forward Doug West of Altoona, Pa. that he was offered $10,000 by an Altoona dentist to attend Pitt.

"It would be foolish of me to say and naive of you to believe that all of the innuendoes (didn't affect the decision) ... I happen to be a person with a great deal of pride," Chipman said.

Pitt is 5-2, with two consecutive losses, after being one of the preseason favorites in the Big East Conference. The Panthers are 82-64 in six seasons under Chipman and have played in the NCAA tournament three times.

Chipman has a 319-144 lifetime record in 19 seasons at Pitt, Lafayette and Hartwick with only one losing team.

Dollar, gold up

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rose against all other leading investment currencies except the British pound in early trading today. Gold bullion gained about $3 an ounce.

Most of the dollar's rise occurred late Wednesday in New York amid uncertainty over U.S. interest rates, according to traders in Frankfurt, West Germany.

They described today's market as quiet, and said they did not expect much activity until the U.S. government issues reports Friday on estimated growth in the gross national product for the fourth quarter and the inflation rate in November.

Selected midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Wednesday:

—2.521 West German marks, up from 2.5145

—2.1185 Swiss francs, up from 2.11275

—7.7325 French francs, up from 7.7065

—2.8415 Dutch guilders, up from 2.837

—1,722 Italian lire, up from 1,718.125

—1.3962[illegible] Canadian dollars, up from 1.394[illegible].

The British pound rose to $1.4235 from 1.421.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 202.90 yen, up from 201.65 yen. Later in London, the dollar was quoted at 202.85 yen.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $323.40 a troy ounce, up from $320.30 late Wednesday.

Gold was quoted at $323.50 in Zurich, up from $320.25.

Earlier in Hong Kong, the metal was quoted a closing bid of $324.01, up from $320.89.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid of $5.82, up from $5.72.

Executives plan to reduce expansion spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a decision that could spell bad news for economic growth, U.S. business executives plan to spend less money for expansion and modernization next year, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that, based on a survey conducted in late October and November, businesses plan to cut spending by 1 percent in 1986, after taking out the effects of inflation.

That compares to an expected increase this year, when all the numbers are in, of 5.6 percent.

The Reagan administration has been counting on growth in business investment to provide new life for the economy.

However, if current business plans hold up, it would mean that the economy will not get any momentum from investment spending next year.

With consumer spending also expected to be weak, this would increase dangers of a recession.

The 1 percent decline in spending projected for next year would be the first drop since a 0.8 percent decline in 1983 which had followed a 5.3 percent fall in 1982.

In 1982, the country was mired in a steep recession with widespread plant closings and layoffs. While the current recovery was underway by 1983, the nation's factories were still operating far below capacity, so there was little push by businesses to expand.

But in 1984, business investment soared by 15.3 percent, the biggest increase in two decades as the overall economy was growing rapidly.

The Reagan administration has often claimed credit for this huge expansion, contending it was due in large part to the effects of Reagan-sponsored business tax breaks.

However, the big surge in spending tapered off this year to the now-estimated 5.6 percent growth.

A year ago, business spending plans called for growth at a stronger 6.7 percent rate but those plans have been gradually cut back over the year as the economy has been sluggish.

Domestic manufacturers have been battered by foreign competition, losing sales at home and abroad.

Other details of the new report indicate:

— Spending before taking out the effects of inflation is projected to hit $384.2 billion this year, an increase of 8.4 percent over 1984. For 1986, businesses plan spending of $393.5 billion, up 2.4 percent before inflation is taken into account.

— The adjustments for inflation are based on assumptions that prices for items going into expansion and modernization are rising at a 2.7 percent rate for this year and will rise at a slightly faster 3.4 percent rate in 1986. Capital equipment prices increased just 0.9 percent in 1984.

— By quarter, the report estimates that spending after discounting for inflation declined at an annual rate of 0.9 percent in the third quarter this year and will drop at a 0.8 percent annual rate in the current quarter. Spending had increased at a 4.4 percent rate in the second quarter.

— The report said that manufacturing industries will have a 6.7 percent increase in investment spending this year, after adjusting for inflation, but plan a 4 percent drop in investment during 1986.

— For other industries, the increase this year is projected to be 4.8 percent, with investment plans for next year calling for a 0.9 percent rise.

The figures above indicate that approximately 64 percent of the U.S. population — or 154 million people — has never eaten Mexican food. The largest area for potential growth is in the east.

Mexican food piping hot in nation

By DEANNA NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Mexican food is sweeping the country, and according to recent surveys conducted by the Mexican Food & Beverage Board, it is now the fastest growing ethnic food in the United States.

According to the Board, a food conscious public, suffering from "hamburger fatigue" and "fried chicken overkill", is looking for something different and exciting which offers quality at an affordable price. Many consumers believe they have found this in Mexican food.

Currently ranked third, behind Italian and Chinese, Mexican food is experiencing great advances in popularity, growing from a regional, ethnic food to a national culinary phenomenon within a decade. In 1980, only 9 percent of the population in the northeastern U.S. had eaten Mexican food, but today, that figure is approximately 19 percent. Still, approximately 64 percent of the U.S. population — or 154 million people — have never eaten Mexican food.

This indicates sufficient room for growth and expansion in the industry, according to food industry observers.

In spite of recent fluctuations in the nation's economy, Mexican restaurants seem to be an instant success. Mexican restaurant chains have been growing consistently at a rate of roughly 20 percent a year, compared to a growth rate of about 15 percent of all other chains combined.

One of the reasons for this fast-paced growth, according to Jeff Shariff, general manager of El Chicos in Midland, is that consumers perceive Mexican food as offering quality, quantity, variety and nutrition at an affordable price. "Consumers are becoming more and more knowledgable and are expecting more and more from the restaurant industry. Our chain has been able to meet the challenge and has been expanding every year," states Shariff.

The El Chico chain, which now has 82 stores in ten states, is building approximately 13 new stores each year in order to keep up with customer demand. The chain is becoming popular on the East Coast and parts of the deep south.

Another advantage sited by Shariff is that Mexican food is easy to prepare, which in turn allows the operator to offer lower food and beverage costs, while enjoying higher than average profits.

In spite of predictions that the market will become "over-saturated", the number of Mexican restaurants continue to grow. Today there are some 23,000 units in the U.S. — half of which are chain or franchise operated — representing about 5 percent of the $160 billion foodservice industry.

And there seems to be no end in sight, as growth projections over the next 5, 10, and 20 years are excellent. Much of the rapid expansion has come from fast food chains such as Taco Bell and Taco Villa.

"Taco Villa is expanding across the nation and our chain now has stores on the Southeast Coast," states Bob Barnes, Regional vice president over the Texas and New Mexico stores.

"Marketing of our product will be the key to future success," continued Barnes, "and how customers perceive Mexican food will play an important role. We are educating people about the nutritional value of Mexican food. People used to feel that it was a greasy food with no nutritional value. But the taco, for example, is basically a frito with ground beef lettuce and tomatoe. It is a good meal for a good price."

One concept in Taco Villa's marketing scheme is the Nacho Bar, an answer to the popular salad bars. "It has been a success thus far, and we have introduced it in all of our West Texas stores. Another popular item that is spreading to other restaurants is the Taco Salad. Many restaurants have begun offering these and their popularity is rising."

Federal court awards temporary restraining order to Texaco, Inc.

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc. has won a temporary federal court order blocking Pennzoil Co. from attaching liens on Texaco assets before settlement of issues surrounding the $11.1 billion damage judgment Pennzoil won against Texaco.

In a Wednesday statement from its Houston headquarters, Pennzoil called the temporary restraining order "without merit and an impediment to settlement discussions."

U.S. District Judge Charles Brieant issued the order Tuesday night in White Plains, N.Y. enjoining Pennzoil "from taking any action of any kind whatsoever to enforce or attempt to enforce" the damage judgment entered last week by a Texas state court judge.

The order enjoins Pennzoil "from taking any action of any kind whatsoever to enforce or attempt to enforce" the damage judgment entered last week by a Texas state court judge.

Brieant scheduled a hearing for Friday to hear arguments on Texaco's request for a preliminary injunction against Pennzoil.

A Houston jury ruled Nov. 19 that Texaco had wrongly interfered with a merger agreement between Pennzoil and Getty Oil Co. and then acquired Getty itself. The jury awarded Pennzoil $10.53 billion in damages.

Texas state Judge Solomon Casseb Jr. affirmed the award Dec. 10, added $600 million in interest and said more interest would accumulate at the rate of 10 percent annually.

Casseb also temporarily waived a requirement, based on Texas state law, that Texaco post a $12 billion bond, after the two companies agreed that Texaco could continue operating for up to 90 days without paying the bond while pending a decision on whether to appeal.

Texaco also agreed not to file for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, while Pennzoil agreed not to attach any liens to Texaco property.

Texaco has said that it could not afford to post such a huge bond and thus be denied the right to appeal the Texas verdict.

Pennzoil has said it is willing to negotiate a settlement of the case, but Texaco has not responded to the offer.

Texaco said today the federal lawsuit is intended to enable it to appeal the damage award without the threat of attachment of its properties or the need to post the $12 billion bond.

Texaco emphasized that the suit was directed solely against Pennzoil and not against the Texas court proceedings.

In a memorandum submitted to Brieant, Texaco said that terms of Casseb's order designed to afford protection from the Texas lien and bond provisions did not provide Texaco with enough protection to enable it to conduct its business in an orderly manner.

OCAW warns of possible strikes against oil industry

DENVER (AP) — The Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union warned on Wednesday of possible strike action in early January against the U.S. oil industry because of stalemates in negotiations for new contracts.

Most of the OCAW's 265 contracts covering about 46,500 workers expire on Jan. 8.

"The oil industry has failed to respond to our proposals for improvements in wages, medical insurance and job security," said OCAW President Joseph Misbrener. "We regard the current state of bargaining as a conscious attempt by the industry to provoke a national strike at the termination of the labor agreements."

The contracts cover workers in oil refineries, petrochemical plants, on pipelines, in the production of crude oil and in the marketing of petroleum products.

"The OCAW bargaining policy committee has reaffirmed its position that workers in the capital intensive petroleum industry deserve and expect fair economic treatment from companies that still are the richest and most powerful in the world," Misbrener said.

The OCAW has asked for a substantial wage increase in each year of a two-year agreement, additional company contribution toward health care insurance premiums and more protection for workers in the event of layoffs and plant closures.

"Our bargaining issues are still on the table and we're still very serious about them," Misbrener said.

OCAW oil workers average $14.16 an hour, not including overtime and shift differential. Shift workers average 50 cents per hour more.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Texas, Japan make pact to increase trade

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Economic Development Commission said Wednesday it has completed an agreement with Tokai Bank Ltd. of Japan to promote industrial development and trade between Texas and Japan.

The agreement is the commission's fifth with a Japanese bank this year.

No major changes expected in Senate tax plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate tax-writers say it is unlikely they will make major changes in the massive tax-overhaul plan passed by the House.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., who will manage the legislation, said Wednesday there is little chance the Senate will repeal the deduction for state and local taxes.

Most changes probably would take effect Jan. 1, 1987.

The bill, passed by the House Tuesday night, would provide a tax cut averaging 9 percent for most Americans while raising taxes on corporations by more than $140 billion over five years.

Trans World reportedly up for sale again

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines reportedly is again for sale, and American Airlines, Northwest Airlines and Resorts International Inc. have been asked to submit bids.

TWA made the request because investor Carl C. Icahn, who owns a controlling stake in the airline, is struggling to arrange the financing required under his proposal to buy the remaining shares, the Wall Street Journal said Wednesday, quoting unidentified sources.

Lawyers ask judge to tear down merger blocks

NEW YORK (AP) — Lawyers for GAF Corp. have urged a federal judge to knock down the barriers that Union Carbide has placed in front of GAF's $68-a-share hostile takeover bid.

Union Carbide lawyers and officials countered Wednesday that the Danbury, Conn.-based chemical giant is simply trying to ensure that its shareholders get a fair price in the event they opt to sell out.

Snag found in Turner-MGM deal

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Another effort by Ted Turner to raise funds for the purchase of the MGM-UA Entertainment Co. apparently fell through Wednesday, with Turner's company announcing that it was not able to agree on the sale of certain assets to Viacom International Inc.

But the Turner Broadcasting System said it would continue with the acquisition of MGM-UA, which has run into numerous stumbling blocks since the $1.5 billion deal was announced in August.

Industry analysts said that while the latest snag might slow down the already delayed takeover, it did not appear to be a serious obstacle.

"The whole deal has been a struggle from the beginning," said Harold Vogel, an entertainment analyst at Merrill Lynch in New York. "This is a continuation of that."

"If it isn't Viacom picking up the pieces, it'll be somebody else," Vogel added.

Lee S. Isgur, an analyst at Paine Webber, said Turner was in effect advertising for new buyers, and he said that they were likely to come forward soon.

In another sign that the financial community did not see the announcement as a major stumbling block, the price of MGM-UA stock fell only 25 cents a share on the New York Stock Exchange, closing at $24.25.

Nonetheless, the stock price continues to lag behind what Turner is offering for MGM. Analysts value the offer, in cash and stock, at about $28 a share, a dollar less than the original offer. After that initial offer, the stock price peaked at $27.

Turner, the broadcast entrepreneur who started the Cable News Network, has been looking for ways to raise money to pay for MGM-UA. One way, selling a stake in the news network to the RCA Corp.'s National Broadcasting Co., recently fell through when NBC demanded editorial control of the network.

The Viacom deal would have involved the sale of 50 percent of MGM assets such as the production facility in Culver City, Calif.; the home video unit; and a movie distribution company.

Wednesday's brief announcement from Turner Broadcasting headquarters in Atlanta said that the company would "pursue the possible sale of all or part of MGM's motion picture and television production, distribution and laboratory businesses, including real estate and the home video operations."

The announcement said, however, that Turner Broadcasting would retain the MGM film library. That library, which contains such titles as "Gone With the Wind" and "Wizard of Oz," was a principal reason for the acquisition of MGM. The library would be a source of programming for Turner's Atlanta superstation, WTBS-TV.

RRC looks at gas supplies

AUSTIN — Looking ahead to colder winter weather, the Texas Railroad Commission has activated its advisory natural gas Voluntary Allocation Committee and urged Texas natural gas pipelines to work closely with each other to overcome bottlenecks or other difficulties which could interfere with moving available supplies of natural gas to area where curtailments might occur.

Approving a motion by Commissioner Mack Wallace, the Commission asked intrastate gas pipelines to review their ability to move gas supplies around the state and advise the Commission of any potential problems by Dec. 15.

Wallace's motion also asked the Voluntary Allocation Committee "to maximize communication and cooperation among intrastate pipelines, and to advise the Commission of the strengths and weaknesses of the intrastate system's ability to respond in time of shortages." He suggested the committee make contact with interstate pipelines as in previous years and encourage their cooperation.

The Commission's senior member said he had been advised that gas curtailments could occur with a normally cold winter. "It is my belief that human needs customers need not worry about the availability of their gas supply," Wallace said, "and it is unlikely that electric utilities without alternate fuel capability need worry about their supply; but as a whole, common sense tell us that the state must again prepare for any alternative."

The Commission also directed its Gas Utilities Division to review pipelines' gas curtailment plans periodically through the winter to make sure that any time gas is curtailed, hardships and dislocations are minimized.

"The cooperation of the pipelines in our system has worked to guarantee service to human needs customers and to protect the public interest in general in times of shortage," Wallace said. "I expect no departure from that high standard of service to the public during this or any future heating season."

The Railroad Commission first appointed its Voluntary Allocation Committee on Sept. 3, 1980 to propose and consider solutions to problems associated with voluntary allocations of natural gas among intrastate pipelines during periods of shortage. The committee has assisted the Commission during winter heating seasons since that time.

Current members of the committee, which is chaired by W.J. Murray of Austin, are M.T. Belvin, Jr., United Texas Transmission Co.; Walter Bohls, Valero Transmission Co.; Ira Farris, Westar Gas Co.; T.E. Lohman, Delhi Gas Pipeline Corp.; Mel R. Sweatman, Houston Pipeline Co.; Max Tanner, Texas Utilities Fuel Co.; Jim Walzel of Houston; and Douglas W. Williams, Lone Star Gas Co.

Exxon pulls out of North Dakota

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Representatives of Exxon Corp. notified Gov. George Sinner that the oil company would shut off its flow of fuel to North Dakota next summer, officials said.

In a letter delivered Tuesday by two Exxon officials, spokeswoman Jan Cool of Denver and Robert McGihon of Seattle, the company said changes in supply arrangements caused increased operating costs, forcing it to hault distribution of Exxon motor fuel to the state.

Sixty-six North Dakota stations that pumped Exxon gasoline and diesel supplied by 21 wholesale distibutors are affected by the pullout, the letter said.

The stations will be forced to find other suppliers and the "Exxon name will no longer be used," said Charles Fleming, Sinner's chief of staff.

"We're hopeful that the stations will find other suppliers," Fleming said.

Exxon does not entend to leave the stations "high and dry" and promised to work with the stations to find other suppliers, he said.

Phillips, Pecten sign second offshore contract with China

BARTLESVILLE, OK, (SWN) Subsidiaries of Phillips Petroleum Co. and Pecten International Co. signed a second contract with the China National Offshore Oil Corporation (CNOOC) for petroleum exploration and development off the coast of The People's Republic of China.

The new contract is for Block 15/22, located in the Pearl River Mouth Basin on the South China Sea, 95 miles southeast of Hong Kong. The contract area is approximately 1,100,000 acres in size and water depths range from 200 to 650 feet.

The new block is immediately south of Block 15/11, which was awarded to Phillips and Pecten two years ago. The companies recently announced an oil discovery on Block 15/11.

Phillips is operator and has a 50 percent interest in both blocks. CNOOC has the option to participate up to a 51 percent interest in any field development by paying its proportionate share of development costs.

Phillips commences exploration drilling in Danish North Sea

BARTLESVILLE (SWN) Phillips Petroleum International Corp. Denmark has received approval from the Danish Government to allow the commencement of exploration drilling on the Danish Continental Shelf.

As operator for a four-company group, Phillips Petroleum is planning to spud-in its first Danish well later this month on the Diamant Prospect. The selected location is in Block 5603/32 in the extreme western portion of the Danish North Sea. Drilling is expected to take two to three months.

The well will be drilled by the jack-up rig "Glomar Labrador I." Phillips Petroleum has entered into a short-term renewable contract with C. Breinholt A/S to use port facilities at ESBJERG as a shore base to support the offshore drilling.

In all, the group for which Phillips Petroleum is operator (with a 26-2/3 percent interest) holds licenses for four blocks offshore in the Danish Sector of the North Sea and four blocks on land and includes AGIP Danmark Olie-Og Gasefterforskning Aps (26-2/3 percent), Fina Exploration Denmark S.A. (26-2/3 percent) and Dansk Olie-Og Gasproduktion A/S (D.O.P.A.S., 20 percent).

Western Union merger topic of speculation

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A few weeks ago the band of speculators who prowl Wall Street thought they had the troubled Western Union Corp. figured out. Here was a company that has struggled for more than a year to get a stable line of credit, and was doing a good job of cutting its expenses in hopes of improving its profit levels.

More important to them was the gossip in financial circles that the 135-year-old communications concern would like to merge with another company. Most often mentioned was General Motors, but other companies, the rumors said, were also longing for the instant prowess in the communictions field that Western Union could offer.

Wednesday, Wall Street felt that the Federal Express Corp. might be a good candidate to go after Western Union. That rumor caused a sharp 2⅛-point jump in Western Union's stock, to 14⅞ a share. But in answer to an inquiry, Federal Express said the rumor was baseless.

While these rumors have bubbled, however, the Curtiss-Wright Corp., holder of 16 percent of Western Union's stock, confused the matter when it said last week that it wanted to sell its stake, and has offered to discuss the matter with anyone.

That disclosure came in a filing made with the Securities and Exchange Commission. In the filing, Curtiss-Wright said it was rescinding a standstill agreement under which it was to give 45 days' notice of a stock sale. Left unanswered in the move were a number of questions, not the least of which was whether it left Western Union more likely, or less, to be involved in a merger.

"I don't know what in the world Curtiss-Wright's motivation is; I can't figure them out," said James Mason McCabe of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Inc. Others shared his view. "It's kind of odd," said John S. Bain at Shearson Lehman Brothers. "Somebody must know what the heck is going on."

There are many theories, few facts. Curtiss-Wright officials have declined comment beyond what it told the SEC last week. In the filing, the company said its three board members had been denied access to key executives of Western Union.

Glenn Pafumi of Dean Witter Reynolds thinks Curtiss-Wright simply wants to get the Western Union investment off its books. In 1984 Curtiss-Wright was forced to write down the value of that investment.

Western Union's stock has shown new signs of life in the last few weeks, but analysts attribute that to the takeover speculation. The stock has sold as high as high as 15⅛ during the last 52 weeks and as low as 5¾, but most recently it has been at the higher end of the range.

Analysts say that while new management has helped Western Union this year, the company still has major problems. Not the least of these is that the company still does not have a firm line of credit, and has been living with loan deadlines that have been extended for the last year. The next deadline, according to the company, is Jan. 15.

In addition, the company faces big competition in its telex business, which is also affected by the growth of the personal computers that duplicate much of Western Union's transmission services.

The company, however, also has some things working in its favor, analysts believe. "The story here always has been that Western Union has a lot of value that doesn't appear on the balance sheet," said Shearson's Bain. For one thing, the company has a large customer base. It also has 10,000 miles of microwave transmission routes in place at a time when regulatory approval of such services is becoming harder to get. The company also has four Westar satellites in orbit, with another scheduled to go up next summer.

Survey says third of families live in luxury

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly a third of U.S. households have enough money to pay for luxuries over and above what is considered sufficient to pay for a comfortable standard of living, according to a government-business report.

As the American standard of living has risen steadily over the last three to four decades, more Americans are living in a degree of luxury, said Fabian Linden, executive director of the Consumer Research Center at the Conference Board, a New York-based business group.

Now, about 26.5 million U.S. household have money left over for optional purchases after paying enough for a comfortable life, Linden said Monday at a news conference called to release the new publication, "A Marketer's Guide to Discretionary Income."

Produced by the U.S. Census Bureau and the Conference Board, the guide analyzes that part of society with excess income available. The analysis is prepared with funding from the Conference Board, primarily as a marketing guide for the business community.

Gordon W. Green Jr. of the Census Bureau's population division explained that his agency used figures from the March 1983 Current Population Survey, updated to 1984 dollars, to calculate household and per capita income and expenses.

The economists calculated the normal costs of living, added an additional 30 percent to allow for what they considered a comfortable lifestyle, and then labeled any income above that as discretionary.

About 26.5 million households were calculated to have discretionary income, or slightly less than 32 percent of all households. That was up from just under 31 percent two years ago, when such calculations were made for the first time.

Thanks to having spent more time in jobs, rising to higher salaries and skill levels, householders aged 40 to 65 have a substantially higher-than-average level of discretionary income, the study found. While these people represented 40 percent of all homes, they collected more than half of all discretionary income.

Contrary to perceptions of impoverished elderly, the over-65 segment was also found to have substantial discretionary spending power.

"One of the most dramatic findings is the affluence of the new old. The generation of people retiring now," who have held jobs in more affluent times and been able to acculumate savings and income sources, Linden said.

"The whole ambiance of the elderly has changed dramatically," he said, and they will be followed by a younger generation of "new inheritors."

Cogeneration plant takes first step toward contract

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Gulf States Utilities and Applied Energy Services Tuesday took the first step toward signing the long-term contract for cogenerating energy approved by the Public Service commission in October.

Applied Energy has proposed cogenerating 130 megawatts of power which will be sold to Gulf States for 30 years. The plant will be built on the site of the Uniroyal Chemical Plant at Geismar and Uniroyal will buy the steam, which is another product of the cogeneration process.

Robert Shapiro, of Washington D.C., Applied Energy's attorney, said the two parties had "initialed the contract" because Gulf States officials said they could not sign a contract until it had veen approved by the utility's senior management and board of directors. The Gulf States board is scheduled to meet Jan.8.

Applied energy will cogenerate using natural gas and will be paid the fuel cost that Gulf Sttes avoids, which, he said, would amount ot approximately three cents per kilowatt hour, based on current natural gas prices of $2.00 to $2.50 per thousand cubic feet. Applied Energy does not currently have a contract for purchasing the 30 million cubic feet of gas it will need to operate the plant on a daily basis.

Cogeneration is the simultaneous production of power and steam from a single fuel source.

Gulf States will pass the cogeneration payments on to its ratepayers in the form of reduced fuel adjustment charges.

This is the first long-term contract approved by the state PSC, although Gulf Sttes has several other cogeneration contracts including Dow Chemical at Plaquemines for 200 megawatts and the Agrilectric plant at Lake Charles for 10 megawatts.

Texas Medical Center purchases Shamrock Hilton

HOUSTON (AP) — The Texas Medical Center announced Tuesday it has purchased the landmark Shamrock Hilton Hotel and 22.6 adjoining acres of land as part of a billion-dollar, five-year expansion project.

The acquisition, valued at $46 million, brings to 525 the total acres owned by the Texas Medical Center and its 37 institutions.

The Texas Medical Center paid $14.9 million to Hilton Hotels Corp. The remaining $31.1 million in property is a gift from the hotel corporation.

"By now transferring the Shamrock to the Texas Medical Center we are reaffirming our faith in this community and hope we are helping the Texas Medical Center become an even more significant factor in the city's economy and future," said Eric Hilton, senior vice president of the corporation.

Richard E. Wainerdi, president of the Texas Medical Center, said the Hilton corporation will continue to operate the hotel under a lease-back agreement until June 30. The medical center will take possession of the property the following day.

The corporation and the medical center will try to relocate as many Shamrock Hilton employees as possible, officials said.

An estimated $1 billion will be spent in the next five years to expand or replace facilities at the medical center, established in 1945.

"The Texas Medical Center and its member institutions are continuing to grow and the new land will enable us to meet current expansion plans," said Richard J.V. Johnson, board chairman of the Texas Medical Center.

The Texas Medical Center, which includes some of the nation's leading hospital, medical schools and reserach center, has about 47,000 employees, 10,000 faculty members, 10,000 medical students and more than 7,000 volunteer workers.

The Shamrock Hilton, a 735-room hotel, was opened its doors in 1949. The value of the property at that time was estimated at more than $21 million. The Hilton corporation has been the sole owner since 1955.

Soft drinks recalled from Florida shelves for contamination

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A Coca-Cola bottler has withdrawn about 10,000 cans of soft drinks from store shelves due to contamination with a non-toxic lubricant, a health official said Tuesday.

The 10 products were produced between Nov. 21 and Dec. 2 at the Orlando Coca-Cola Bottling Co. plant and distributed only in the Orlando metropolitan area, said Dr. John McGarry, Orange County health director.

"There haven't been any cases of illness associated with this that I'm aware of," he said.

McGarry said the assembly-line lubricant was a mineral-oil based substance that posed "no danger to the health of individuals." He said county health officials were given a can of Diet Coke for testing.

The federal Food and Drug Administration contacted the Orange County health department about the tainted products, McGarry said.

The products withdrawn are cans of Cherry Coke, Mellow Yellow, Lipton Iced Tea, Tab, Sprite, Diet Sprite, Fanta Root Beer, Welch's Grape, Mr. Pibb and caffeine-free Diet Coke, Ray Mayhall, a spokesman for the bottler, said in an interview with WCPX-TV.

Lot numbers for the products are D-5 1121, D-5 1122, D-5 1125, D-5 1126, D-5 1127, and D-5 1202.

"The information we have is that this is a non-toxic substance that may cause a change in the taste of the Coke product, and because of that my understanding is that Coke is withdrawing a certain batch of Coke products," McGarry said.

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, December 20, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Love cannot be rushed. Let a new relationship develop at its own pace. You will not get the financial results you want by pushing. Back off a bit. "Friends" who make you feel negative about yourself are best forgotten. Turn over a new leaf and think positive! Self-improvement activities enjoy highly favorable influences. Others admire your creativity. Even if you are not interested in amassing great wealth, insist on fair compensation. Families can be expensive! CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actress Irene Dunne, director George Roy Hill, Milwaukee's Cecil Cooper, Pittsburgh Pirate Jose Deleon, San Francisco's Bill Laskey, baseball great Branch Rickey.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Little can be accomplished at work today. Co-workers and associates are caught up in holiday merriment. Be on your best behavior at an office party.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Creative ideas flow fast and furious. Get them down on paper before you forget the details. Let that special someone know your intentions. Family and friends approve your romantic choice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be skeptical if a job offer sounds too good to be true. You might do better to stay put. A raise or promotion is possible. Be tactful when dealing with subordinates.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): New social contacts could help your career. A good friend provides information that helps solve a nagging problem. Show your gratitude in a tangible way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep in touch with a former employer. He or she could be a source of valuable job or business leads. A visitor who drops in brings welcome news. Be especially careful if driving today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An outstanding day for launching a pet project! Someone influential offers financial backing. See if there are any strings attached. Luxury purchases are best postponed. Devise a budget.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Adopt a wait-and-see attitude today. You will have to be patient to get the results you want. Write to someone you won't be able to see. A first impression is misleading.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A great day for a united effort. Tact will help you mend some emotional fences. Keep abreast of the latest developments in your field if seeking new employment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An excellent day for completing old business. Put domestic matters aside and concentrate on work. Loved ones will be understanding. Keep a low profile around a difficult individual. Romance is topsy-turvy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Extra personal effort will lead to higher earnings. Postpone starting a new project. It is essential that you bring correspondence up to date. Investigate stock tips.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Unforeseen events could upset your well-laid plans. Roll with the punches. Travel is best postponed. Your presence will be required on the home front.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Put finishing touches on holiday preparations. Ask loved ones to pitch in and help. Include someone who lives alone in your plans. Friendship thrives on consideration.

International Popular Bridge Monthly (available through The Bridge World, 39 West 94th Street, New York, N.Y. 10025, $21 annually) tries hard to live up to its name. It features articles by a number of international writers, covers tournaments in Europe and the U.S., and its problems run from the relatively simple to the rather exotic. In its latest issue it makes a passionate plea for Forcing Pass and other strange, artificial systems, without convincing your columnist that they do anything to enhance the game.

Here is one of the simpler of their single dummy problems. Cover up the East and West hands with your thumbs and decide how you would play four spades after West leads the ten of hearts and East wins the jack, cashes the king and then continues with the ace.

You might try to ruff in the hope that East has the king of spades for his opening bid. If that fails, you can still try to guess who has the queen of clubs. A more reliable method is simply to claim your contract.

If the opponents ask you how you intend playing the hand, tell them that you are going to ruff the third heart with the ace of trumps, cash the ace of diamonds, and then trump the jack of diamonds. Now you would simply exit with a trump.

You do not care which defender wins the king of trumps, because whoever is on lead has a choice of losing options. That defender must either solve your problem in clubs for you by leading the suit, or else lead a red suit and allow you to discard a club from one hand and ruff in the other. In either event, you lose only the king of spades and two hearts.

Zeffirelli, nine crew members ill

ROME (AP) — Director Franco Zeffirelli and nine members of his production crew came down with viral pneumonia while filming the opera "Otello" on Crete, his publicity agent said Wednesday.

Zeffirelli was expected to be released from a Rome hospital in about two days, said publicity agent Gene Rizzo. The 62-year-old director was admitted to the hospital on Sunday after returning from five weeks of filming on the Mediterranean island.

The film version of Giuseppe Verdi's opera stars Placido Domingo, Katia Ricciarelli and Justino Diaz. The producers plan a premiere by September, Rizzo said.

Filming is expected to resume Dec. 27, he said. Scenes are to be shot in Venice, the hill town of Orvieto and studios in Rome.

Zeffirelli's other films include "La Traviata" and "Romeo and Juliet."

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Wednesday received a 35-pound Christmas turkey from the British Turkey Federation, and plans to cook it herself, an aide said.

Mrs. Thatcher normally buys several birds at yuletime to give away to friends or constituents, said a spokesman at her official 10 Downing St. residence. This year, one turkey will be given to a family that cares for foster children in her north London constituency of Finchley, he said.

BOSTON (AP) — Former Mayor Kevin White has yet to pay or appeal a $50 speeding ticket six months after police issued a warrant for his arrest, a state police captain said Wednesday.

White, 56, was stopped in Norwell last May by a trooper who alleged White was driving 72 mph in a 55 mph zone. The arrest warrant was issued a month later when White failed to pay or appeal.

The warrant was still outstanding as of Wednesday morning, said State Police Capt. Paul Lambolot of the Norwell barracks.

No one answered White's home phones in Boston or Bourne, his summer residence on Cape Cod. A spokesman at Boston University, where White teaches a political science course, said the former mayor was out of town.

"We're not aware of this," White's 18-year-old son, Chris, told The Boston Herald. "We'll check into it as soon as possible."

Lambolot said police would not go after the mayor, just as they don't seek most alleged speeding offenders. But he said White could be arrested if police stop him for a road violation and check for outstanding warrants.

GOODLETTSVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Bluegrass legend Bill Monroe said he fears for his safety and is considering hiring a bodyguard after vandals struck his home and thieves hit his touring bus.

"I think there is more than one person involved in this, and I hope the law catches them and they end up serving some time," the 74-year-old Grand Ole Opry regular said Tuesday.

Monroe, known as the "Father of Bluegrass Music, is credited with bringing the bluegrass sound out of the Appalachian Mountains and onto the stage.

A 200-pound safe was taken from his touring bus parked in Sumner County last week, he said. Inside were treasured photographs, a ring shaped like a mandolin, $300 in cash and $10,000 worth of jewelry.

Last month, vandals broke into his home in this Nashville suburb and destroyed two mandolins. Monroe developed the bluegrass style on one of the instruments.

In October, his Bluegrass Hall of Fame and Musuem was robbed of a day's receipts and "bad words" were spray painted on his car in September, said Monroe.

WILBRAHAM, Mass. (AP) — When he was 9 years old, Alexander Gorodisher's parents realized their son had academic potential. Now the Soviet emigre, all of 14, has been accepted into Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It's always been my dream school, ever since my brother got in," said the Holyoke boy.

Alex, as he likes to be called, said he planned to major in math when he begins at MIT next fall and would like to become a research scientist. His 22-year-old brother, Ilya, graduated last year from MIT.

When he was 5, his parents, Vladimir and Raisa, left Leningrad to come to the United States because as Russian Jews opportunities for them and their sons were limited.

"It was really a big risk for my parents, though. They had a pretty stable lifestyle, but they knew we'd have the opportunity for education and freedom. For them, that was enough," Alex said Tuesday.

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) — A disc jockey who played the song "Grandma Got Run Over By A Reindeer" 27 times in less than 3½ hours will be back on the job Friday after promising to behave himself, officials at the radio station said Wednesday.

The decision to reinstate Jack Daniels came after WLLR received hundreds of calls — some from England and Ireland — on his behalf, said Ray Randall, program director.

Daniels was placed on indefinite suspension Tuesday after he had continued to play the song in defiance of Randall's orders, said station manager Larry Rosmilso.

Daniels said he decided to play the song to get himself and his listeners in the Christmas spirit.

Randall said Daniels will be on probation for 90 days and has received a reprimand in addition to the two-day suspension.

BOSTON (AP) — Yelena Bonner, the wife of banished Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, won't need surgery to correct her heart problems and the tumor removed from her lip last week shows no malignancy, her doctors said Wednesday.

Mrs. Bonner underwent a test known as a coronary catheterization at Massachusetts General Hospital, and "it went very smoothly," said her cardiologist, Dr. Adolph Hutter.

She returned to her daughter's home later, said the daughter, Tatiana Yankelevich.

Another doctor, meanwhile, said tests of the tumor removed from Mrs. Bonner's lip last week showed no evidence of malignancy. "That should be the end of the problem as far as her lip is concerned," said oral surgeon Dr. Norman Nathanson.

Hutter said Mrs. Bonner, who lives with her husband in internal exile in the Russian city of Gorky, was not a candidate for surgery at this time. He would prescribe drugs to help relax her heart while at the same time increasing her pulse. He said he also told her to stop smoking and to get regular exercise.

She would be treated as an outpatient for several weeks.

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — A Salisbury, Md., television station has won a court battle to force a new Wilmington station to change its call letters to avoid confusion.

Vice Chancellor Jack B. Jacobs ruled Tuesday that Salisbury's WBOC, Channel 16, would be harmed if Channel 61 in Wilmington is called WBOT when it begins airing in January.

In his ruling, Jacobs said cable television companies may assign a station to any available channel and, as a result, the channel number is not a reliable indentification as WBOT officials had argued.

Daniel Slape, WBOT general manager, said no new call letters had been chosen for the station which will compete with WBOC in central Delaware.

Charles Atchison prepares some aluminum edging for a rooftop of the new homes being built along Osage Avenue in west Philadelphia, where 236 persons were promised new homes by Christmas after they lost their homes in May's MOVE confrontation.

MOVE neighbors won't be home for Christmas

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Some residents of the neighborhood that was burned down in the May 13 confrontation between police and the radical group MOVE say they don't mind that their new houses aren't ready for Christmas as promised — they want the job done right.

The day after the debacle, which left 11 dead, 61 homes destroyed and 236 residents displaced, Mayor W. Wilson Goode said he hoped to have the people into their new homes by Christmas.

Now the only definite promise is that they'll be back by the one-year anniversary of the tragedy. Some may be able to move in within the next two months, city officials said.

All but 21 of the displaced residents have been living in a furnished apartment complex near Philadelphia International Airport.

"I want to get out of this apartment," said Bunice Burch, 76, whose house of 24 years on Pine Street was burned down.

"It's too far away from the old neighborhood, and a lot of the friends we have down there, and the transportation from where I'm at is also inconvenient, especially for my age."

But she doesn't want to rush things.

"I think most everybody feels the same way. We want the new house to be done right — quality, not speed," said Mrs. Burch, who lives with her son, Philip, a Coast Guard veteran.

She's resigned to not being back in her old neighborhood at Christmas.

"I am not disappointed although I realize that it is something that Mayor Goode wanted for us," she said.

"He cared enough to want us to get back quickly. It is a family time, but I didn't think they could possibly do it. It would have been a miracle, even though it was the city's goal."

Attorney Anthony Jackson, who represents most of the displaced families, said he wants the new houses guaranteed from defects for at least 10 years.

"That Christmas deadline was never ours," he said. "We want everything to be in order before people move back in."

LaVon Bracy, executive assistant to the city's housing director, said rentals at the apartment complex, including utilities, average $575 a month and are paid by the city.

"Nobody will be back for Christmas," Ms. Bracy said.

The cost to build each of the new homes is about $110,000. Before the fire, houses in the neighborhood were selling for about $40,000.

"I haven't heard any person who is dissappointed about not moving back before Christmas," Ms. Bracy said. "In fact, they didn't want to move back just a few days before. They want the houses finished correctly and completely and were more concerned about what they would have to do about the interior, about furniture.

"They didn't want to move into an empty, incomplete house. Who would?"

Squinting comet-seekers dialing recorded hotlines

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Would-be Halley's comet watchers are flooding 17 telephone hotlines, seeking recorded information on how to spot the comet during its dimmest flight past Earth in 2,000 years, an astronomy group says.

"Never have more people been alive to see it, never have more people been interested in seeing it, and never has it been more difficult to see," said Andrew Fraknoi, executive officer of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific.

A hotline operated by the society, the nation's oldest astronomy organization, normally gets 150 calls per week, but "this past week we received something like 1,400 calls," Fraknoi said Tuesday during a telephone interview from San Francisco.

"All of the other institutions report the same thing," he said. "This is clearly the result of interest in the comet....All of these are taped hotlines. You don't talk to a person at all."

The comet, as viewed from Earth, is the dimmest it has been since its first documented trip around the sun in 240 B.C., so people are calling the hotlines to obtain viewing instructions, he said.

Moonlight is starting to obscure views of the comet this week, and the next good viewing period for Northern Hemisphere observers will be Dec. 30 through Jan. 10, with the comet in southwest skies above Jupiter. Observers hould travel far from city lights.

"About 1½ hours after sunset, Jupiter will be low toward the southwest," he said. "It will the brightest thing in the southwest. If you take your binoculars and you scan the skies directly above Jupiter, you should see a fuzzy object with a tail, and that's Halley's comet."

Fraknoi said Dec. 30-Jan. 10 is not a good observing period for people in the Southern Hemisphere. They will have their best views of the comet in March and April, when views are poor from the Northern Hemisphere.

Here is a list of 17 hotlines providing recorded information on Halley's comet. Other hotlines are expected to start soon. Long-distance charges apply to long-distance calls to numbers with regular area codes. The charge for those with a special 900 area code is 50 cents for the first minute and 35 cents for each additional minute:

Renovations already begun on hospital

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Patients and visitors at the newly named Physicians and Surgeons Hospital (formerly Parkview) may "expect a change in appearance," according to spokesman Dr. Tulsi Singh.

"We'll be spending in the neighborhood of $600,000 to $800,000 in giving the hospital a face lift," he said. "We also have started working on a cardiac catherization lab and will be done with that by the end of January."

Other services "down the road" will include a burn unit.

Singh's comments on the hospital came the day before ClayDesta Regional Medical Plaza Development Corporation — a corporation comprised of a group of Midland physicians and ClayDesta Corporation — close on the purchase of Parkview from its current owners, Hospital Corporation of America of Nashville, Tenn. The proceedings will take place in Dallas at MBank.

CRMPDC paid $2.75 million for Parkview.

Singh is chairman of the board for CRMPDC. The physicians' group owns 70 percent of the corporation and ClayDesta Corporation, the real estate development and property management arm of the Clayton W. Williams Jr. Companies, owns the other 30 percent.

Friday's closure will end the physicians' nearly year-long search for a hospital of their own — a search, indicated Clayton Williams, that began out of dissatisfaction with outside ownership of Midland's only private hospital.

"THE PHYSICIANS were not happy with the prospect of yet another chain hospital company purchasing Parkview," said Williams in an Aug. 13 interview. "They said they would like to leave Parkview because of the company that owned it at the time — that they were having some problems that they didn't like. The physicians particularly wanted to have a home-owned, private hospital. They're very sensitive to chains."

The sale of Parkview to CRMPDC hinged on approval by the Federal Trade Commission, which was granted Monday, said a report from the group. The FTC has been examining HCA's holdings and acquisitions, finding that it had a possible monopoly on health care in the Permian Basin.

HCA purchased Parkview earlier this year, but was ordered to divest itself of the property in July. The company had already negotiated with Summit Health Ltd., a California firm, who stepped in with an offer to purchase Parkview after the FTC ruling, when CRMPDC made their offer.

The group's purchase of the 21-year-old facility is the first phase in a master plan to construct a larger $22-$23 million hospital in the ClayDesta Plaza area.

"Parkview was available in this window of time," Williams said. "It will be a stepping stone, financially, toward the construction of the main hospital, which still remains the objective."

Until the construction begins on the hospital — estimated to open in 1988 — the group will be renovating Parkview and adding new services, including the catherization lab. According to a report, the corporation plans to convert Physicians and Surgeons into a rehabilitation hospital or support facility when the new hospital opens.

SINGH SAID plans for construction would begin "as soon as we move into the hospital."

The group contends that additional hospital beds are needed in Midland, stating that "29.5 percent of Midlanders currently go out of town for health care." The statistic came from preliminary findings of a feasibility study commissioned by the physicians earlier this year.

According to Singh, the study's final results should be available soon.

"Price Waterhouse, who is doing the study, was in Midland this week contacting the physicians about the feasibility study," he said. "We have been told that we'll have the study by the end of December, although I have my doubts."

Not all local physicians agree the additional beds are necessary, however.

Dr. Walter Parks, who serves on the Midland Memorial Hospital board of directors, said in an Aug. 17 interview: "As an individual, I do not feel that Midland needs another hospital. There are empty beds at both Midland Memorial Hospital and Parkview. There is just not a need for any more."

Parks also said the 77-bed expansion nearing completion at MMH was "actually more beds than needed."

Even the physicians' general counsel, Jack Ladd, suggested that of the two facilities the group was considering, a 75-bed and 120-bed hospital, the smaller "would likely be the winning option."

"THE MONEY difference is not that great," said Ladd of the $2 million dollar difference, "but there is a question as to whether there's a need for the extra beds." Ladd made the statement also on Aug. 17, before any preliminary findings were available from the feasibility study.

Occupancy rates have not been predictable in recent years, according to one Midland physician.

"The occupancy rate has been erratic — so erratic that's it's been hard to find a trend to it," said Dr. James Humphreys Jr., in an Aug. 17 interview. "Right now, I think it is on a decline."

MMH provided statistics in August that also indicated the decline. The MMH rates showed a steady decline over the last two years from 78.8 percent in 1984 to 74 percent as of June. A spokesman said at the time that "the statistics were a matter of public record and do not suggest that MMH is drawing any conclusions regarding the need for a new hospital."

According to Singh, however, there may be some pressure from MMH on physicians who participate at Physicians and Surgeons.

"I had at one time heard that the doctors who will be practicing at the new hospital would be limited in their practice at MMH, but I have not heard of any one incident of pressure," he said.

MMH had no comment.

In a release from CRMPDC, however, Singh emphasized the board's desire to work with existing hospitals in providing complementary services so that none is adversely affected.

"By offering the residents of Midland and surrounding communities a choice in where they would like to be admitted for hospital care, the board believes this choice will stimulate healthy competition and increase incentives for improving quality of care," he said.

Members of the hospital's board of directors and corporate officers include Singh, chairman; Richard C. Liley, president; Bob Smith, vice president; Terry Tubb, vice president; Paul Latham, secretary; Louis Barkley, treasurer; P.V. Patel, Jerry Cochran and Bill Sandlin.

Financing for the purchase of the hospital is being provided through the sale of Health Facilities Development Revenue Bonds issued by the City of Midland's Health Facilities Development Corporation and approved by the City Council Tuesday. The bonds have been purchased by MBank of Dallas.

Students PUSH for end to drug abuse

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

In the Midland secondary school circles, students are fighting to stop drug and alcohol use before it becomes a problem.

How?

They push.

PUSH (Prevention Using Student Help) is a local student support group dedicated to stopping teen drug and alcohol problems before they begin, says co-director Seree Whitlow.

Members are engaged in chemical free, fun activities and education that serve as a positive peer pressure group for teens of all ages. Members also set an example by staying drug and alcohol free throughout their high school career.

PUSH is an affiliate of Texas Youth in Action — an arm of Texans' War on Drugs — a drug abuse prevention and education organization. TYIA is comprised of individual groups of youth across the state who are active in fighting drug and alcohol abuse in the schools.

Founded in August by Midland High School student Tyrone Oliver, PUSH began with only five active members and has since grown to a membership of more than 400.

Oliver attributed the group's success to its name.

"The name is what I like about it," he says.

Amy Croxton, TYIA youth coordinator, says the philosophy of TYIA and PUSH lies in an integrated approach to drug abuse prevention. The multifaceted approach includes:

- Education about drugs and its dangers;
- Creation of alternative activities to alleviate the pressure to use drugs;
- Development of self-esteem, leadership and decision-making skills; and
- Development of community support for youth who say "no" to drug use (including parents, educators, health professionals, law enforcement officials, business and civic leaders).

In short, TYIA wishes to create reverse peer pressure — an environment where children can say "no" to drugs and feel "cool" about it, Ms. Croxton says.

TYIA are students who help other students. The group has student officers, a president and two vice presidents, who serve as spokesmen and advisers to the organizations' developers.

Representatives also are selected from each TWOD region across the state to provide further networking ability for TYIA headquarters.

The organization was conceived and advised throughout its development by a group of students and student input will continue to guide it, Ms. Croxton says.

TYIA promotes the development of youth against drugs groups in communities across the state and encourages such groups to create their own names and logos. Other organizations like STAND (Students of Texas Against Narcotics and Drinking) are active in Eastland and Fort Bend counties. HOSS (High on Sober Students) in Mertzon and Drugbusters in Corpus Christi are fighting the war against drugs with T-shirts, buttons, bumper stickers and other items.

UTPB professors earn less than state average

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Despite a 6.2-percent raise for professors last year, University of Texas of the Permian Basin faculty still earn less than the state average.

UTPB professors' salaries rose an average of $1,846 for 1985-86, but still are nearly $3,000 less than the state average. Professor salaries are up 4.9 percent statewide.

The faculty as a whole averages $30,546, or $1,867 more than the state average, but professors average $31,193, or $2,999 less than average.

The top four ranks — full, associate and assistant professors and instructors — at UTPB earn an average of $30,909, or $2,221 less than average.

The Texas College and University System Coordinating Board released salary figures Wednesday showing UTPB near the median in pay, with 15 state universities having higher average salaries and 19 lower.

Of the 35 state schools, UTPB ranks 7th in overall faculty pay, but the school's salaries rank 29th in full professors, 32nd in associate professors and 11th in assistant professors.

In the seven-school University of Texas System, only UT-San Antonio posted a lower average professor salary than UTPB. UT-Austin had the state's highest, with an average salary of $39,186.

The UT System Board of Regents agreed in principle this month to build a state-of-the-art energy management and research center at UTPB, which faced extinction last spring when legislators tried to close the school.

They insist they are not flexing their political muscles.

Instead, they are assisting Texas legislators in understanding elderly needs, says a volunteer group that will be running local elections for the first Silver-Haired Texas Legislature.

"It will not be a militant group like the Gray Panthers," said steering committee member Ruth Wenck.

The first Silver-Haired Texas Legislature, to be held from Sept. 28 to Oct. 1, will identify five key issues affecting the elderly and formulate them into bills. The bills will then be considered by the 1987 Legislature.

The nine-member Midland steering committee will run the May election for candidates wanting to represent the elderly at the conference. Statewide 116 representatives will attend the meeting in Austin.

Four representatives from the Permian Basin area, including one from Midland County, will be elected May 30 to attend the legislature. The Silver-Haired Legislature was created by a resolution at the last legislative session. Texas is the 23rd state to create a legislative body for the elderly.

We don't always have the faith to sense the unseen

The aura and power of the unseen world always abound.

But the spiritual world is not always evident, for we don't always have the faith, imagination and sensibility to sense the realness of the unseen. Still, isn't it uncanny the blind faith we have in physics, electricity and gravity — unseen forces at work? We can behold the results of those forces.

The very nature of this amazing planet called Earth revolving in a minute niche in the universe and the marvels performed by the mind and body of man are overwhelming evidence of something marvelous happening in this world.

The holiday season, the time of giving and sharing, affords a touch of a wondrous mystery if we don't get flustered by and bogged down by cynicism with the commercialism tied into the Yuletide. The "wondrous mystery" is the good feeling felt in the free-will giving of self and gifts of love, concern, care, appreciation and hope.

The season expresses a fantasy, full of truths, enlarged upon in 1897 by Frank P. Church in his editorial, "Yes, Virginia, There Is A Santa Claus," in the old New York Sun.

It goes thusly:

"Dear Virginia,

"Your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except what they see. They think that nothing can be that is not comprehensible to their little minds.

"All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours, man is a mere insect, an ant in his intellect as compared with the boundless world about him as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole truth and knowledge.

"Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist. And you know they abound and give your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! How dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus. It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias.

"There would be no childlike faith, no poetry, no romance to make tolerable this existence. We would have no enjoyment except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world world be extinguished.

"Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus.

"The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders that there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

"You can tear apart the baby's rattle to see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived could tear apart.

"Only faith, fancy, poetry, love and romance can push aside the curtain and picture the supreme beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

"No Santa Claus! Thank God he lives, and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood."

SBOE has disappointed lawmakers, Hobby says

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The revamped State Board of Education has disappointed lawmakers who charged it with putting in place the massive school reforms of 1984, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Wednesday.

With a stern look on his face, Hobby lectured board Chairman Jon Brumley and grilled Vice Chairwoman Rebecca Canning during a legislative review committee's discussion of new exams for teachers and students. Hobby reminded Brumley that the fight to replace the old, elected, 27-member board with a 15-member body appointed by the governor "caused a great deal of pain."

"The hope that those who supported that decision had was that an appointed board could bring about very rapid improvement in a disastrous system," Hobby said. "You've made great strides, but we think more can be made."

The battle over the structure of the board created some of the most heated debate and intense lobbying of the 1984 special legislative session on education reform. At several points, intransigence over the issue threatened to scuttle the entire reform effort.

"The illness was far more serious than I had perceived, and therefore needed more radical treatment," Hobby told Brumley. "You don't cure an illness of several generations in one year. How about two?"

An obviously rattled Brumley said later he wasn't certain he had heard Hobby properly. "I'm not sure I understand that marching order," he said.

Hobby joined Dallas lawmaker Bill Hammond in questioning the value of October's first administration of a new graduation exam to high school juniors. Of the 191,556 eleventh graders who took the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills exit test, 91 percent passed the English language arts section and 88 percent passed the mathematics segment.

"The TEAMS test is a hoax," Hammond told reporters. "The test is simply not difficult enough."

The Legislature created the test — which students must pass to receive a diploma — as part of the 1984 public school reforms. Lawmakers intended the exam to ensure that graduates possess minimum basic math and English skills.

Following legislative orders, the SBOE this summer ruled that incorrect answers on 28 of the 144 test questions would not count against students because they measured objectives included in a new statewide curriculum that not all students have had an opportunity to learn. To pass, students had to correctly answer 70 percent of the remaining questions.

Hammond distributed packets showing that the Dallas Independent School District teaches some of those deleted objectives — such as determining the area or circumference of a rectangle — to sixth-grade students. "This is proof that this test was not a 12th-grade-level test," he said, calling the exam "an insult to (the students') intelligence."

Hobby similarly questioned the rigor of the exam. "If the state of Texas administers a test and a student passes that test and is awarded a diploma and it's a sixth-grade test, the state of Texas has perpetrated a fraud on that student," he said.

Brumley promised to boost the passing standards for the students who failed the exam in October and must retake it next spring. He said the board could count some of the deleted questions now that students "have had the opportunity to learn the answers to those test questions."

Hobby also questioned Canning about the "vigor" of the basic literacy exam all certified teachers will take — and must pass to retain their certificates — in March. That exam includes a multiple choice reading-and-writing test plus a 150-word essay. The board has not yet established the standards for passing.

Brumley and Canning said about 4 percent of the teachers could receive a marginal grade on the essay by making "a few" capitalization, punctuation and grammar mistakes but still pass the overall exam on the strength of their answers on the multiple choice section. Hammond said he wouldn't want his children in a classroom with one of those teachers.

"If there are several errors in capitalization, punctuation, organization and grammar in one 150-word writing sample, then that would indicate we have a problem teacher," he said. "It sounds to me like a teacher who lacks basic skills."

About $3 million raised for Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — About $3 million in cash and in-kind contributions has been raised to pay for Capitol restoration projects, a fund-raiser told the State Preservation Board Wednesday.

George Bristol of Austin said the goal is $5 million, which would pay for work on various portions of the Capitol.

Publicity surrounding the removal and restoration of the Goddess of Liberty statue from atop the Capitol has helped the fund-raising effort, according to Bristol.

"The Goddess is something that appeals to children with 10 cents and quarters right on up to corporate sponsors. She is a symbol," Bristol said. "She caught on."

A "major industrial corporation" is planning to donate up to $200,000 to pay for the casting of a duplicate statue to replace the damaged Goddess, he said.

The board, which includes Gov. Mark White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Gib Lewis, also heard a brief report on the Capitol tree situation. Young live oaks are being removed from the building's south walk.

Sycamores initially were picked as the replacement, but Capitol Architect Roy Graham said a recently discovered disease makes the sycamores a less attractive option.

PUSH

In July 1986, TYIA anticipates more than 300 youths will gather at Southwestern University at Georgetown for a conference. The purpose of the event, says Ms. Croxton, is to show that TYIA members are making a difference and having fun doing it.

In addition to seminars and workshops, TYIA provides resources on drug abuse research and education materials including brochures booklets and audio-visual presentations. The organization seeks to fully equip students to make a difference in their schools and communities.

MHS student David Malone says PUSH and TYIA is "like a snowball going down a hill. You're going to be picked up by the mass. The attitude of the group as a whole is to try to show kids how to solve their problems without drugs or alcohol. It's just more fun."

PANEL

"It was seen as a method in which the legislature in both houses could receive input from this age group," said W.E. "Bill" Smith, assistant executive director of the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging.

"It will help identify what the needs are for senior citizens," said Sue Craig of the Andrews Senior Citizens Center and co-chairman of the Silver-Haired State Steering Committee.

"Health care and housing are the greatest needs at this point in time," Ms. Craig said.

Nursing home reforms, protecting stable property taxes for the elderly and keeping utility bills to a minimum are other issues to be discussed at the Silver-Haired Legislature, she said.

The Silver-Haired Legislature will not lobby the regular session, she noted.

"They (the elderly) are growing in numbers and they have a very good voting record. But I hope they won't look at this as a way to flex their political muscle," Ms. Craig said.

Candidates, who will serve for two-year terms, must be 60 or older by Jan. 1 to participate in the May 30 election. Candidate forms will be accepted from Jan. 1 to Feb. 28 at the Agency on Aging, 2514 Pliska Drive, at Midland Regional Airport and at local senior citizens' centers. All candidates are responsible for raising their own campaign funds and money to attend the legislature.

The Midland Silver-Haired Steering Committee members include Gene Abbott, Bill Collyns, David Norton, James Ramsoure, Ciro Sanchez, Bill Shaner, Ruth and August Wenck and Chairman Roger Robles.

Odessa police seek robbers of liquor, convenience stores

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police today continued to seek robbers who held up a liquor store and a 7-Eleven store at different times Wednesday night.

According to police spokesman Rusty Baker, a man described as being in his late 20s to early 30s entered Wyatt's Liquor Store, 1121 E. 52nd St., about 7:10 p.m., produced a folding-type pocket knife, demanded the 48-year-old clerk give him money, then picked up two 1-liter bottles of Seagram's Crown Royal whiskey and left the store.

The clerk said she gave the man about $176 in bills.

She described the man as being about 6 feet tall, weighing about 165 pounds, wearing a dirty blue, long-sleeved shirt and blue jeans.

According to Baker, the man is believed to be the same one who robbed the same store, located at East 52nd St. and North Dixie Blvd., last week.

In that robbery, a man, whose description closely matches the suspect in the latest robbery, also used a knife to rob a clerk of about $400 in bills and also took a bottle of Crown Royal whiskey as he fled the store.

A gunman described as being about 5-feet-3 and weighing about 140 pounds robbed the 7-Eleven store, 801 Harless, and fled with an undetermined amount of money, a pizza, carton of cigarettes and a 2-litre bottle of Pepsi.

The clerk on duty told investigating officers the man, who appeared to be 20 to 21, was armed with a .22-caliber pistol, wore a white welder's cap, a blue jean jacket and blue jeans and white tennis shoes. The man left the store and walked in a southwesterly direction, according to the clerk.

West Texans form new crime prevention group

Staff Writer

Acting on the presumption that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, law-enforcement officers from all over West Texas gathered in Midland Wednesday to organize the Permian Basin Crime Prevention Association.

"This is a real step forward for the Permian Basin," said Officer Ron Benton of the Midland Police Department's crime-prevention unit, who was elected president of the new organization.

"It's going to do crime prevention a lot of good out in this area," he said.

The PBCPA was formed to promote on a regional basis the efforts of various crime-prevention units and the programs they offer the public.

"I don't think the public is quite aware of all the services that are available to them at no cost," said Midland Sheriff's Deputy Keith Turner, who hosted the meeting.

And smaller law-enforcement agencies which don't have crime-prevention units can benefit from the association's programs, Turner said.

The public is invited not merely to use the association's services, but to be part of the organization, according to Turner.

"Our membership is not limited to law-enforcement officers," he said.

Other officers elected included Gary Gould of the Plainview Police Department, first vice president; Kathy Choate of the Texas Crime Prevention Association, second vice president; Dave Watts of the Monahans Police Department, secretary; and Tommy Jones of the Crane County Sheriff's Office (and formerly of the Midland County Sheriff's Office), treasurer. Joining these officers on the association's advisory board were Brenda Akell of the Texas Tech campus police, and Troy Martin of the Scurry County Sheriff's Office.

Law-enforcement agencies in Midland, Odessa, Lubbock, San Angelo, Grapevine, Crane, Snyder, Monahans, Plainview, Big Spring and Kermit were represented at Wednesday's meeting.

"We're real happy with the turnout," Benton said. "You're going to hear from us."

Hazardous material spilled on highway in truck mishap

From Staff Reports

A truck accident Wednesday spilled about 2,400 gallons of a hazardous material on U.S. Highway 67 just west of Rankin, but there were no injuries and the material has been cleaned up, a Department of Public Safety spokesman said this morning.

The truck driven by Russell Johnson of Phoenix was westbound on U.S. 67 about 10:15 a.m. when it moved partly onto the shoulder to let a wide-load vehicle pass. The trailer fell off the narrow shoulder, and 2,400 gallons of sodium-hydrosulfide corrosive material were spilled on the road and into a bar ditch, the DPS spokesman said. The truck was owned by Whitfield Truck Lines of Phoenix.

In other reports, a fire was set early this morning in a mattress in the vacant Park Place Apartments, 1500 E. Front. The fire, reported at 2:56 a.m., was extinguished with about 100 gallons, and there was no damage to the structure, according to fire reports.

Lanny Gene Rogers, 1706 Country Club, reported the loss of a $1,200 shotgun from his 1984 Chevrolet Silverado pickup. Also taken was a $400 rifle in the Wednesday burglary, which occurred while the pickup was parked at 117 E. Wall.

Linda Fay Davidson, 1307 College, reported the loss of several items in a Wednesday burglary of her 1982 Ford Granada.

Taken were a purse valued at $205, including its contents, a $140 coat, a $40 coat and a $40 purse. The car was parked at 1008 S. Midkiff when the burglary occurred, reports said.

Austin probing alleged charges

AUSTIN (AP) — Mayor Frank Cooksey says officials are investigating charges made in an anonymous letter that city employees and elected officials have taken illegal gifts from companies seeking city contracts.

Cooksey said Wednesday he wanted the investigation made public because the City Council planned to award a $32.9 million contract today for natural gas, which was the subject of the anonymous letter.

At a news conference Wednesday, Cooksey said he also wants the author of the anonymous letter to come forward with any evidence to aid the investigation.

Meanwhile, City Manager Jorge Carrasco said he has instructed the police and an internal auditor to investigate the charges, and the matter also has been referred to Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle.

The anonymous letter was sent to Cooksey, with copies to Purchasing Officer Solon Bennett and two other officials involved in the gas contract, on Dec. 11.

Army officer shot while jogging in south Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — An Army officer was shot while jogging in south Austin, police said.

Lt. Stephen Barron was taken to Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio and underwent surgery Wednesday for a gunshot wound in his knee.

Barron told police he was jogging late Tuesday when he heard a voice from a parked car shout, "Shoot him," before he was shot in the leg. Barron was able to hobble home, said Bob Barron, 29, the victim's brother and roommate.

Police said they had no suspects.

The victim told police a person in the car fired three shots at him from a an open window of the car. He said the gun appeared to be a .22-caliber rifle, police said.

FAA: Near collision was nobody's fault

By BEVERLY POTTER

DALLAS (AP) — The way the Federal Aviation Administration figures, it was nobody's fault that Larry Halbert's single-engine Bonanza almost flew into a Southwest Airlines 737 near Corpus Christi.

For his part, Halbert says he still shudders when he remembers that 120-plus-seat jetliner zooming by just a few yards away.

Southwest pilot Don Morris and his company don't want to talk about it, and the FAA inspector who filled out the paper work on the incident says, simply, that pilots of both planes knew the other was up there, and nobody did anything wrong.

Except almost crash into one another.

That "near-miss" was just one of 589 documented by the FAA in the United States last year. Through Nov. 18 of this year, there had already been 688 near-misses.

It was clear May day in 1984 when Halbert, alone in his single-engine six-seater, left Corpus Christi International Airport en route to New Orleans, his lunch-time stop before heading on to business engagements in northern Florida.

Halbert leveled off at 7,500 feet and reported his altitude to a Corpus Christi controller. He switched on the automatic pilot and leaned back to enjoy another commute to Jacksonville, unconcerned that the Southwest plane was seven nautical miles dead ahead at 12 o'clock.

Halbert didn't think much about it because the jet was reported to be at an altitude of 12,000 feet, some 4,500 feet above him. He was not aware that the Southwest pilot had been cleared by the tower to begin descending to 5,000 feet on approach to Corpus Christi International.

At three nautical miles apart, the controller again told the two pilots a plane was headed their way, but neither pilot reported seeing the other plane, according to the controller, to maintain visual separation between the planes.

Halbert said he doesn't remember now exactly when he saw the 737 — just that it was descending and was "awful close."

"Here I am, flying along at the 7,500 feet level with me under radar surveillance and all of a sudden there's a jet (about to) hit me," he said. "Scared the hell out of me. I mean if he'd been 50 feet higher and a little more to the left, he'd have blown me out of the sky."

At the jet's traveling speed of 287 mph, and the private plane's reported 184 mph — heading toward each other — the pilots would have had about 26 seconds to react at a distance of three nautical miles.

"I mean, that's a hell of a closing speed," said Halbert. "That just goes by and it's nothing, when a few (degrees) to the left or right would have eliminated it. That leaves very little time for a snap decision.

"I jammed the right rudder and turned my airplane, and he went by me 50 to 100 feet off my left wing. I was close enough (to) see the people in their windows.

"I'm sweating and shaking again," Halbert said, as he recalled the incident. "It was the most terrifying experience I have ever been in."

After the two planes passed, "I couldn't say anything for a long time," Halbert said. "I mean, I just couldn't say anything. I mean, I couldn't even key the mike. I couldn't do anything. I was dumbfounded.

"I just kind of sat there for a while and didn't do anything. I couldn't talk. And then I called the controller. I can't remember exactly what I said to him. It wasn't nice. He just acted like it was nothing."

Although Halbert blames the controller for the near-collision, the FAA investigation reported no errors on the part of either pilot or the controller.

"The controller did everything he could do," said Bryan Carpenter, the FAA investigator in San Antonio who looked into the incident. It was up to both pilots to "see and avoid" each other, he said.

Bob Hazlett, supervisor of the operations unit of the FAA's flight standards district office in San Antonio, said planes daily appear to be on a collision course on controllers' radar screens. But, depending on the aircraft and its flight plan, the controller may not have known the altitude of one plane. And, he said, controllers cannot constantly be advising pilots to change their headings.

Magistrate to decide on alleged bomber's bail

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal magistrate who is deciding whether to grant bail has heard sharply different descriptions of a San Marcos man accused of stashing a bomb on an airliner carrying his wife and three children.

Arguing against granting bail for Albert Lee Thielman, a prosecutor Wednesday described him as a cold-blooded plotter intent on killing his family and 150 innocent people to collect more than $2 million in life insurance benefits.

"He has shown his willingness to kill people...not only his family but innocent bystanders. Apparently, life doesn't mean a whole lot to the defendant," assistant U.S. Attorney Jim DeAtley told a bond hearing.

But Thielman's lawyer, Rip Collins, argued that Thielman should be granted bail because he was "a model citizen on the face of this earth for the first 34 years of his life."

And a longtime friend said Thielman is so nonviolent, "I bet he's never had a fist fight in his life."

U.S. Magistrate Philip Sanders said he would await results of a psychiatric examination before ruling on the request to set bond at no more than $150,000. He indicated a decision could be made today.

Thielman, 34, is accused of putting a bomb in his wife's luggage before an Oct. 30 American Airlines flight from Austin to Dallas. The bomb exploded after the plane landed, and there were no injuries among the 154 people aboard.

Longtime friend Drake Bellomy of San Antonio said he would provide money for Thielman's bail and assure his return to court to face the charge, which carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Thielman has been held without bond since his arrest in Las Vegas on Dec. 7..

After FBI agent James R. Echols described Thielman as burdened by debts from gambling, drugs and infidelity, DeAtley told the judge, "Thielman owes allegiance to no one, your honor. Absolutely no one."

DeAtley said prosecutors believe that if released from the federal prison at Bastrop, he would flee. DeAtley also voiced fears that releasing Thielman might endanger Mrs. Thielman, a key prosecution witness.

"The defendant poses a serious risk that he will obstruct justice. He could potentially threaten and intimidate witnesses...his own family," DeAtley said. "The government is just absolutely convinced that if this defendant is out — then he's gone."

Thielman's lawyer countered that Thielman had a return ticket to Austin when arrested at the Las Vegas airport. He was planning to return voluntarily, Collins said.

Bellomy, a San Antonio homebuilder who said he has known Thielman for more than 11 years and is willing to post his bond, said his friend has never been violent.

Bellomy said the two had been business partners and friends since 1974. Although they once used cocaine, Bellomy said he hasn't used drugs since becoming a Christian in 1975.

Controller doesn't trust system in stormy weather

DALLAS (AP) — Ralph Parker checks the weather before flying somewhere, and if thunderstorms are along the route, he won't get on the plane.

Parker, who doesn't trust the aviation community to get him through a storm, is not an average citizen spooked by sensational headlines of airplane crashes.

He's an air traffic controller.

He knows firsthand about increasingly crowded skies and the need for weather forecasters to get information quickly to controllers in the tower, and believes that the current system doesn't get the job done, the Dallas Times Herald reported today in a week-long series of articles on air safety.

Parker is among a growing number of disgruntled controllers — still suffering the effects of a debilitating strike in 1981 — who now handle more airline traffic than ever before.

The strain is showing, the Times Herald said.

After years of apparent improvement in safety in the skies, near collisions are becoming more frequent. The built-in margins of safety are compromised more often, and a system designed to minimize the fallibility of its human operators now has come to rely on their skill and commitment to make it work, the newspaper said.

Yet that work force is not trained as well as it used to be and is far less experienced. Many controllers list luck as the cornerstone of a system in which mistakes are always potentially measurable in human lives, the Times Herald said.

The pressures of a resurgent air travel industry are concentrated at busy centers like Chicago, Atlanta and Dallas-Fort Worth, but the rest of the system is not immune.

Nationwide, incidents of near-collisions are up a third over last year, and official numbers show standards for distances between planes are violated an average of four times daily.

"I won't fly today," said Robert P. Cogar, 52, a controller who retired from the center at Cleveland Ogden Airport in August after 29 years. "I know what's happening out there, and I don't want to have anything to do with it."

Parker, meanwhile, says the tardy relay of weather information is a major problem, especially considering that in fully half of all air carrier accidents weather is a factor, the Times Herald said.

A controller for 12 years who works in the Federal Aviation Administration's Huntsville, Ala., tower, Parker said, "thunderstorms come and go. It's going to be several minutes by the time I get it (information about one). There's a 15-30 minute delay at least, and that's old."

Punishment phase begins in second capital murder trial

DALLAS (AP) — The punishment phase began Wednesday in the trial of a man convicted for a second time in the 1975 slaying of a Texas Tech student.

In July 1975, a Dallas jury sentenced Ronald Curtis Chambers to death for the murder of Michael McMahan in the Trinity River bottoms. But the decision was reversed last year when The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that a psychiatrist failed to inform Chambers of his right to consult a lawyer before an interview.

The psychiatrist testified against Chambers during the first trial's punishment phase.

The U.S. Supreme Court declined review of the reversal earlier this year.

But when the Dallas County district attorney's office retried the case, a jury of seven women and five men took less than two hours on Tuesday to find Chambers guilty of capital murder.

Irish teens visit 'bogeymen' to ease North-South prejudice

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Timothy Wilson, a 16-year-old Northern Ireland Protestant, wrote after a visit to the Irish Republic: "I have learned that Southerners are not mysterious bogeymen who talk funnily. They are people like us."

Lorraine Kennedy, 13, a Roman Catholic from Limerick in southern Ireland, wrote after visiting Belfast: "I learned that you don't have to be all the one religion to have fun together."

While the British and Irish governments have embarked on a new attempt to pacify Northern Ireland, an organization of Irish business people has been quietly bringing together children from each side of the Irish border hoping to erase mistrust, prejudice and ignorance.

A Chamber of Commerce organization in Belfast and Dublin has been arranging student exchange visits for the past three years. So far, about 2,000 schoolchildren have taken part in the program, called Cooperation North.

"A lot of kids thought people down south speak Irish (Gaelic)," said Angela Connolly, a Belfast bank official on loan to Cooperation North. "They didn't realize that people speak English in the south. They had never crossed the border and they didn't realize that kids down south listen to pop music, wear ordinary clothes.

"The northern kids in some cases were afraid that the southerners would all be pro-IRA, for a united Ireland, that sort of thing. They were very surprised to find that southerners are absolutely against violence."

The southern children, she added, "were very apprehensive about coming north. They thought life in Northern Ireland couldn't possibly be normal. They expected bombs to be going off all the time. They were very surprised to find that it's not all bad, that life goes on."

Reports written by some of the students indicated a sharp change of their own impressions after an exchange visit.

Eoin Sullivan, 17, of Dublin, wrote: "Before this trip I had never been in Belfast, and I have not known many Northerners. The picture in my mind of Northerners (because of the television) used to be one of mean, perhaps vicious people. But now I have seen that Northerners are very kind and generous people."

Keith Gallagher, 13, from Northern Ireland, wrote: "I have changed my thoughts on the Southerners....I learned that they follow the same music, sports, etc., which I didn't know before. I learned that Protestants and Catholics can be friends."

"One of the boys said they thought we would be like nuns, wearing veils all the time and always praying," wrote Mary Vacley, 17 of Drogheda, Ireland, whose school was host to a group of Northern Ireland Protestant children.

Anne Doody, 15, from Ballinglass in the south, wrote after visiting Northern Ireland: "I thought that there would be a lot of political unrest and fighting in the streets. I also thought that there would be some places restricted to the different religions, whereas there was peace and freedom for all religions."

Cooperation North's Mrs. Connolly said 60 Irish and 50 Northern Ireland schools — about one-tenth of the total — have taken part, involving children aged 11 to 17.

Family probably OK'd Castellano's murder

NEW YORK (AP) — The reputed head of the nation's most powerful crime family probably wouldn't have been assassinated without the approval of members of his own family and the leaders of other Mafia clans, the state's top fighter of organized crime says.

For that reason, according to Ronald Goldstock, head of the state Organized Crime Task Force, a gangland war is unlikely to result from the street shooting Monday of Paul Castellano.

"My theory is that he was killed because a lot of different people had a lot of different reasons," Goldstock said earlier this week. "But everyone agreed they were better off with him dead than they were with him alive."

Law enforcers agreed Castellano's successor would not immediately be chosen, but speculation centered on John Gotti, 45, a reputed captain in the Gambino network, the family Castellano reputedly headed.

Witnesses said Castellano and his bodyguard, Thomas Bilotti, were shot to death by two or three men in light trenchcoats who ran from the scene and sped off in a waiting car.

"For something this big, there had to be an across-the-board consensus," agreed Howard Abadinsky, a criminologist and founder of the Association for the Study of Organized Crime. "There's been nothing this big since Albert Anastasia was hit in 1957."

Anastasia, head of the crime network later known as the Gambino family, was killed in a barber's chair in a Manhattan hotel. Carlo Gambino succeeded him, and after Gambino's death in 1976 Castellano allegedly succeeded him.

But law enforcement sources said a rift remained between Castellano's supporters and a faction close to family underboss and former Anastasia protege Aniello Dellacroce. Dellacroce died earlier this month of natural causes.

A law enforcement source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said members of the Dellacroce faction seemed concerned that Castellano would increasingly favor his own supporters.

Gotti was one of 10 alleged Gambino members and associates, including Dellacroce, indicted last March for racketeering. He was accused of heading a crew in loansharking, gambling, hijacking and murder.

The indictment charges Gotti with engaging in "a pattern of racketeering activity" over nearly 20 years that included the May 1973 murder of a hoodlum named John McBratney.

McBratney reportedly was killed in retaliation for the 1972 kidnapping and murder of Emmanuel "Manny" Gambino, nephew of Carlo Gambino.

Gotti pleaded guilty to manslaughter in 1975 and was sentenced to four years in prison. He was paroled in 1977.

Castellano had been on trial on federal racketeering charges, and he was slated for trial next year for his alleged role on a commission that supposedly regulated Mafia affairs in New York.

This week, U.S. District Judge Kevin T. Duffy said he would decide next year whether to declare a mistrial for Castellano's co-defendants following the slayings. All 12 jurors in the case said they heard news reports about the killings.

Ironically, Castellano's shooting followed several damaging admissions from prosecution witnesses in the trial.

In addition to the ongoing cases, Goldstock said, Castellano would have been indicted by a state grand jury and a federal grand jury on racketeering charges.

"He would have been tied up for years — emotionally, physically, financially," Goldstock said. "He was sure to be convicted sooner or later, he would have faced criminal and civil forfeiture proceedings, and he would have been under intense pressure (by prosecutors) to cooperate.

"No boss has ever been in that difficult a position before. People had to be worried that he could give up not only his own family, but the heads of the other families as well."

An underworld shootout for control of the Gambino family would damage the group's rackets, said U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani. "The net result of this kind of warfare is to diminish their power. Most more farsighted mob figures have understood that: That they flourish when they're at peace with each other, not when they are at war with each other."

It will take some time, Giuliani said, before authorities have an idea whether the deaths of Castellano and Dellacroce will have an impact on the family business.

Mafia boss' slaying may put Spark's Steak House on map

NEW YORK (AP) — New York magazine says Spark's Steak House has the best sirloins in New York City, but the East Side eatery may be remembered instead for the slaying of reputed Mafia boss Paul Castellano outside its front door.

"He did eat here," acknowledged a somewhat irritated Pat Cetta, co-owner of the restaurant on 46th Street off Third Avenue, the day after the slaying. "I wouldn't say he was a regular."

After the shooting, reporters and television crews milled outside the restaurant interviewing people drawn by curiosity to the scene of the slaying.

The restaurant was praised in this week's issue of New York by restaurant critic Gael Greene, who wrote, "The best sirloin around is the deliciously aged beauty at Spark's, where the roster of great American wines is an aristocratic homage to the beef."

The comments were accompanied by a picture of a succulent piece of steak. In newspapers, photos showed Spark's awning in the background as Castellano, 73, and alleged associate Thomas Billoti lay dead in the street outside.

The slaying of Castellano, reputed boss of the nation's largest and most powerful crime family, did little to affect business at Spark's, according to one bartender, who declined to give his name. The bar was filled with the regular crowd of people waiting to get a table 24 hours after the slaying, but the shooting was one of the main topics of conversation.

"I didn't see anything, but I heard the shots and figured it wasn't anything good," said the bartender. "But I wasn't going anywhere. I went right down behind the bar."

Organized crime families leaders in New York City

NEW YORK (AP) — Here are thumbnail sketches of the five organized crime families operating in New York City, as described in a U.S. Senate committee report of hearings in 1983 into organized crime:

GAMBINO: In 1957 family boss Albert Anastasia was killed and Carlo Gambino became heir to his crime group. When Gambino died of natural causes in 1976, Paul Castellano succeeded him, running the group until his slaying this week, the report said. The Gambino family is considered the largest, most powerful crime family in New York, with operations in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Florida and Nevada. The Gambinos are involved in illicit gambling, narcotics and loansharking and have legitimate businesses in the food, entertainment and jewelry fields.

GENOVESE: Named for one-time leader Vito Genovese, the Genovese organization is now led by Anthony Salerno, 74, of Rhinebeck, according to the report. It is involved in gambling, narcotics, loansharking, extortion and pornography throughout the New York metropolitan area. The Genovese family also has used "legitimate" frontmen to exert control over portions of the local entertainment industry.

COLOMBO: Joseph Colombo inherited one of the original New York crime families in 1963 and ran it until he was shot and incapacitated in 1971. The acting head of the Colombo family is now Gennaro Langella, 46, of Brooklyn, who took over when Carmine Persico was sentenced to prison, the report said. The Colombos operate primarily in the boroughs of Brooklyn and Staten Island, and have a wide range of illicit and legal business pursuits, including funeral homes, real estate agencies, restaurants and union racketeering.

BONANNO: Family founder Joseph Bonanno is believed to have retired in 1964 and now lives in Tuscon, Ariz. The report said the organization is headed by Philip Rastelli, 67, of Brooklyn, and concentrates its activities in New York and Arizona, with strong ties in Italy, Canada and South America. The Bonanno group is particularly involved in narcotics, and runs pizza parlors and espresso cafes throughout New York.

LUCHESE: Thomas Luchese headed this group from 1953 until his death by natural causes in 1967. Since 1978, said the report, it has been led by Anthony "Tony Ducks" Corallo, 72, of South Oyster Bay Cove. The Luchese organization is involved in narcotics, gambling and loansharking, as well as legitimate businesses such as construction, the garment industry and garbage removal.

Donations slump leaves Salvation Army needy

Associated Press

The Salvation Army in Cleveland had to stop taking requests from poor people seeking Christmas aid and Army branches across the country are facing similar situations as donations drop and the ranks of the needy swell.

"We have a definite lag in donations right now," said Capt. Donald MacMurdo, spokesman for the Army in the Cleveland area. "We're well behind last year. We've been saying all along that people are still hungry the day after Christmas."

The Salvation Army in Cleveland stopped taking applications for Christmas food baskets as of late Monday, MacMurdo said. The group had hoped to help 12,000 families but cut off applications at 10,500.

Detroit was experiencing similar problems, said division commander Lt. Col. William Himes.

"We do have more people we're taking care of this year than last year," Himes said. "We were also about $100,000 below the same period this time last year in contributions...When the economy is doing good, contributions go down. When people are hurting, there is a willingness to share blessings with others."

MacMurdo said he was optimistic that contributions would increase because Ford Motor Co. officials told him this week that retired and unemployed workers at its three Brook Park plants had been soliciting contributions from those on the job and had raised at least $9,400.

In Boston, officials saw a similar surge in contributions after they said Monday they might have to stop accepting applications for holiday aid. Their comments brought enough donations on Tuesday to keep that from happening.

"We haven't had to turn anyone away," spokesman Steve Capoccia said. "It came down to the wire. We don't like to alarm people. We just didn't have anything else to give away."

After Monday's plea for aid, Zayre Corp. gave $6,000, a store gave 2,000 children's hats, and thousands of people across the state donated food, money and winter clothing, Capoccia said.

Lt. Col. Leon Ferraez, the Salvation Army's national communications director, said Tuesday from headquarters in Verona, N.J., that the number of people seeking shelter jumped from 1.9 million in 1983 to 2.45 million in 1984, counting both transients and resident homeless. "We think we have an even larger percentage of increase in 1985," he said.

He didn't have any precise figures on requests for aid other than housing, but estimated that it was up about 10 percent this year.

The Salvation Army, a religious group that is organized like a military unit, has about 1,000 centers to aid the needy and homeless, plus 9,000 smaller offices that can refer people to the larger centers, Ferraez said.

Money put in kettles staffed by Salvation Army bell-ringers "seems to be a little bit up, but the general income is down," he said. Spot checks of the first week of the Christmas season showed mail donations were down about 8 percent, he estimated.

In some cities, even the kettle donations are down.

Rochester, N.Y., Salvation Army officials have lowered their kettle collection goal from $80,000 to $70,000 because of slumping contributions, said Lt. Andrew Murray. Last year, $78,000 was collected.

Some officials, such as Maj. Herbert Bergen, commanding officer of the Salvation Army in Knoxville, Tenn., said that one reason for a decline in donations this year is a shorter-than-usual Christmas shopping season.

"Part of the problem is that we've had five less days to ring our bells on the street this year," he said. "That has really cut into our income."

Maj. Ted Morris, director of t. Salvation Army in Dallas, said th applications for holiday aid — chic ly for holiday toys and food — a.. expected to total 18 percent higher this year than last.

"We operate on faith" that the last-minute giving will cover the expenses incurred, which include the distribution so far of 9,100 Christmas checks, he said. Last year, some 8,600 checks were given out.

One city in which the Salvation Army was holding its own was New York. Craig Evans, spokesman for the Army's Greater New York Division, predicted that the agency would serve 5 percent more people this season than the 160,000 served last year.

"Traditionally, we've had excellent resources, and this year is no exception," Evans said. "People have been very generous."

SERRV giftware catalog offers aid to Third World

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW WINDSOR, Md. — The slick-paper, colorfully illustrated catalogue of the giftware business headquartered here resembles the dozens of others that have flooded the mails this holiday season, except for one thing.

The SERRV catalog is more sermon than sales pitch, pointing out that purchasing any of the 1,500 handcrafted items advertised is a contribution to world peace.

Contributing to world peace was never more alluring than browsing through the catalogue or the attractive retail shop set up in a rambling basement room of what used to be Blue Ridge College here.

There are teak chests of every size, camphor-lined and intricately carved in Hong Kong. There are dainty baby garments, hand smocked and hand embroidered, from Haiti, Pakistan, Jamaica.

There are little water buffalo carved in teak by Thai lepers ostracized by society; Alpaca sweaters, scarves and gloves knitted by Bolivian artisans who have formed their own marketing cooperative; wooly sheepskin slippers from Lesotho; hammered brass trays burnished to a soft glow in India; mother-of-pearl jewelry from Jordan; carpets hand woven in traditional Tibetan motifs by refugees at a self-help center in India.

The basic idea behind the nonprofit SERRV is to help artisans and crafts people in the Third World by importing their handiwork for resale in this country with the lowest possible overhead.

"We make the markup just enough to cover our overhead," said Ginny Grossnickle, who is associate director for customer services. "We want to be certain (the crafts people) get their equitable share, which usually runs about 50 percent" of the retail price.

SERRV IS A project of the Church of the Brethren, a historic peace church with a strong commitment to putting Christian beliefs to work for the betterment of humankind.

It was called the Sales Exchange for Refugee Rehabilitation and Vocation, understandably abbreviated to SERRV, and although the original name is no longer relevant, the acronym has survived.

The enterprise developed out of the post-World War II Displaced Persons camps in Germany. American church workers discovered that some of the refugees were skilled artisans who produced pottery, embroidered blouses or hand-wrought jewelery in designs reminiscent of their homelands.

The Americans brought home samples of the handicrafts and some items were put on sale at the Church of the Brethren's Service Center here, where they found a ready market. The idea of an international handicraft cooperative linking Third World producers with American consumers was born.

Since the service center here serves many ecumenically oriented Protestant denominations, word of the SERRV idea spread rapidly through missionaries and service workers throughout the Third World, opening up an international network of crafts producers.

SOME OF THE products, like the wooden animals hand-carved by lepers at the McKean Rehabilitation Insitute in Thailand, are the fruits of long range efforts of missionaries to provide some dignity — and some income — to lepers and others who are shunned by their cultures.

Island columnist still going strong

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press

KEY WEST, Fla. — One of the best informed sources on what has occurred this century in this southernmost U.S. city is a tireless journalist who, at 82, has no intention of working anything less than full time.

The author of two weekly columns in the Key West Citizen, Earl R. Adams began his working career with a newspaper here and returned to full-time journalism following his retirement as clerk of the circuit court in 1973.

"For a man of his age, Earl has a lot of pep and never gets tired," says Manuel Jimenez, publisher of the daily newspaper. "Everybody knows him and everybody looks for his columns."

"Do You Know" is a front-page fixture in the Citizen's Sunday edition and consists of capsulized news items of years gone by.

In one column, for example, Adams writes of an announcement in March 1889 that a local market offered fresh meats from Cuba; an election in 1834; the city's first brochure in 1908; and some dredging in the early 1940s to provide landing and takeoff areas for U.S. Navy seaplanes at the naval air station here.

Adams' second column, also published on Sunday, deals with real estate transactions in Monroe County. Properties that pertain to this island city are visited by Adams and explained in detail in his column.

"Key West of today is not the Key West of old. It was more neighborly then. People would even exchange meals over a fence."

— Earl R. Adams, columnist

Adams was born here Dec. 29, 1902. "I was supposed to be a Christmas special, but the stork died," the witty newsman adds.

At 13, he was a substitute newspaper delivery boy for the Key West Morning Journal, which no longer exists.

A year later, he was a cub reporter for the Journal. "I would go down to the train station and ask people where they were going or where they had been."

He later worked for the Citizen here before serving as sports and city editor of the Valdosta (Ga.) Sun. Adams also worked for the defunct International News Service in Atlanta, the Morning Call in Key West and Daily Tab in Miami. He then became Key West bureau chief of the Miami Herald, a position he held until Dec. 31, 1948. He became clerk of the circuit court in January 1949.

He began writing a column for the Citizen in 1962 while serving as clerk of the court.

A careful journalist, Adams remains objective about Key West and begs off answering any pointed questions.

He does admit, "Key West of today is not the Key West of old."

When asked to elaborate, he says only, "It was more neighborly then. People would even exchange meals over a fence."

Besides writing his columns, Adams still puts in two hours a day at the tax collector's office keeping track of employees' sick leave, time cards and other accounting.

"When I retired from the court, it got on my nerves doing nothing," he explains.

In his spare time, Adams compiles statistics for local high school football games and works on word puzzles.

Aquino's plan to try Marcos causes uneasiness in both election camps

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MANILA, Philippines — Warnings by opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino that she would put Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos on trial if she wins an election set for February are causing alarm both in the Marcos camp and among her own supporters.

Aquino first made the statement last week as she was trying to unify an opposition ticket, and she has repeated it since then to the growing consternation of Marcos.

Aquino has said repeatedly that she seeks justice, not vengeance, in the case of her late husband, Benigno S. Aquino Jr., who was assassinated at the Manila International Airport in August 1983 in the custody of military guards.

While sympathizing with Aquino's feelings, opposition figures expressed concern earlier this week that her remarks about putting Marcos on trial were injecting a potentially dangerous element into the campaign and might prompt Marcos to scuttle the election.

In an interview last week with a regional news magazine, Asiaweek, Aquino said that if she wins the election, Marcos "will be given justice. I guess that means a trial."

Marcos reacted sharply when he opened his campaign last week in Batangas province. Speaking at the Fernando air force base, he suggested that military men and government officials also could face action against them and urged them to rally behind his candidacy.

IN OTHER STATEMENTS, Marcos also has repeatedly raised the prospect that a move to put him on trial for the murder of Benigno S. Aquino Jr. could trigger fighting between his supporters and Aquino's.

In a speech before a youth group at his Malacanang presidential palace Monday, Marcos asked what would happen to Filipinos in the event of an opposition victory.

"Are we going to have another Vietnam, another Kampuchea, another Iran, Nicaragua, El Salvador?" he asked. "Are we going to end up with a civil war? I say no, we are not going to."

Marcos also questioned whether the entire platform of Aquino was to send him to jail. He then implied that he would resist, wondering aloud whether troops could be sent to arrest him if he returned to his home region in the northern Philippines.

Marcos reacted again Tuesday during a campaign visit to his home province of Ilocos Norte when he raised Aquino's latest statement in a New York Times interview Sunday that she would file charges against Marcos if she won the presidency.

Addressing a crowd in the provincial capital of Laoag, Marcos accused Aquino of seeking the presidency only for personal vengeance and of having no program of government.

In a statement to counter accusations of vindictiveness, Aquino said through a spokeswoman: "I must emphasize again that in seeking justice, there must be no vengeance or ill feelings towards anyone. The law must be applied equally to all, then let mercy and compassion, as dictated by god-like tenets, take care of the rest."

A COURT THIS month acquitted 25 military men and one civilian charged with involvement in her husband's murder and a subsequent cover-up. The verdict has been widely condemned here and abroad as a travesty of justice that proves the Philippine judicial system under Marcos is no longer independent.

"Many of us in the opposition feel Cory (Aquino's nickname) should not put it that way," said one member of parliament, referring to her remarks. "People are advising Cory not to be hasty and make unnecessary remarks like that."

Aquino's statements are "very ill-advised," said Raul Gonzalez, a lawyer who sides with the opposition. "They are statements that will harden Marcos."

Gonzalez made the comments at the Supreme Court following a hearing on the constitutionality of the Feb. 7 election. Marcos, 68, who has been in power for 20 years, called the early election more than a year before his term is scheduled to end in a bid for a "new mandate from the people." Opposition petitioners have challenged the early poll on grounds that, according to the constitution, Marcos must resign before such an election can be held. Instead, Marcos has submitted a post-dated letter of resignation effective after the voting.

Taiwanese government struggles with nation's official name

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — The Nationalist Chinese government once again is wrestling with the problem of the official name it seeks to maintain for Taiwan — Republic of China.

This time the problem involves the Asian Development Bank, which is based in Manila and is the last major international organization that formally recognizes the name.

But the rival People's Republic of China on the mainland has decided to join the bank and wants the Nationalists' name changed on the bank's books. The Communist government in Peking maintains that the bank's continued recognition of Taiwan as the Republic of China — ROC for short — would legalize the Nationalists' long-held claim that they are China's only legitimate government.

Mainland China would become the bank's 46th member and its third ranking member in terms of voting power behind the United States and Japan, which hold $2.36 billion each in voting shares.

The Republic of China is the name by which the Nationalists like to be known and the one they have been using in the bank, a regional monetary organization commonly known in Asia as the ADB, since they helped found it in 1966. The Nationalists also have used the name ever since they came to Taiwan after their defeat by the Communists on the mainland in 1949.

Taiwan's Foreign Ministry has voiced its opposition to any change in its name, status or other interests in the ADB, but it has given no indication how it would react if it is forced to make any changes when China's membership is approved, possibly in February or March.

Some scholars and newspapers here, however, believe the Nationalists should accept a name change to retain Taiwan's seat in the bank and avoid further international isolation.

"If we leave, Communist China will harvest everything because it would mean a complete victory to force us out of the international arena," Thomas Lee, dean of the graduate school at Tamkang University, said in an interview. "There is no immediate gain from withdrawing from the ADB."

The China News, a pro-government English-language newspaper, commented in an editorial: "To stick to stiff rules may eventually fall into the Communist China trap of isolating the ROC from the world."

Taiwan maintains diplomatic relations with 24 nations, most of them in Latin America.

Since 1971, when the Nationalists lost their seat in the United Nations to China, Taiwan has bowed to other demands for a name change in order to retain membership in international organizations. "Chinese Taipei" has been the name most frequently chosen.

The charter of the ADB, a nonpolitical organization, stipulates that members can be expelled only if they default on loans.

Sweden considers restructuring high inheritance tax

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — With multimillionaires moving their families to other countries, Swedes are reconsidering the structure of inheritance taxes which can run as high as 70 percent.

An announcement by the 34-year-old billionaire industrialist Fredrik Lundberg that he was moving to Switzerland set off debate in the country about the tax on inheritances.

"It's my and my family's wish to secure the control of the company within the family in case I die," Lundberg was quoted as saying in a newspaper interview.

When the inheritance tax and the capital gains tax are combined, the result sometimes can be a 100 percent tax for the heirs of the owner of a large company.

A survey taken after Lundberg's announcement by the private polling institute Sifo indicated that three out of four Swedes felt inheritance taxes should be cut to 25 or 30 percent.

Of the 1,029 Swedes surveyed, 74 percent felt Sweden's inheritance taxes were unreasonably higher than other countries. Eleven percent found the rates reasonable and 14 percent said they had no opinion.

"If you ask people if they want lower taxes, of course they answer 'yes,'" Claes Ljungh, an official at the Ministry of Finance, said in an interview with The Associated Press.

"When you discuss taxes in Sweden, I think you must consider the whole system. Actually our corporate taxes are very industry-friendly and it is highly possible to become very rich in Sweden in just a short period."

A government panel, however, is investigating possible changes in inheritance taxation.

When a Swede leaves an inheritance of 6 million kronor ($770,000) or more, taxation goes as high as 70 percent.

If the heirs sell stocks left to them to pay inheritance taxes, they then have to pay an additional 24 percent capital gains tax on the returns from the sale.

For inheritance purposes, the stocks are valued according to their price on the stock market the day their owner died. But since share prices generally fall when large blocks are sold, the heirs of big shareholders can find themselves with stock worth less in the market than it is on the tax books.

In some cases, this system has driven inherited estates into bankruptcy.

Ljungh of the Finance Ministry says the government panel will propose a change in the capital gains tax on stocks sold to pay inheritance taxes, but no details have been disclosed.

In the debate following Lundberg's decision to leave Sweden, some non-socialist politicians discussed a lowering of Sweden's inheritance taxes to the level of other Nordic countries.

In Denmark, the maximum tax is 32 percent, in Norway 25 percent and in Finland 14 percent.

Other prominent businessmen who have left Sweden because of the inheritance taxes are Ingvar Kamprad, owner of the European-wide furnishings company Ikea, who moved to Denmark in 1973, and the Rausing family, owner of the packing company Tetra Pak, who went to Italy two years earlier.

Bjorn Borg, the former international tennis champion, established a residence in Monaco at the height of his athletic career to avoid taxes on his income. He has since moved back to Sweden, saying he would "take all consequences."

Indulgences may be granted through TV

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Roman Catholic bishops may grant plenary indulgences, or pardon the temporal punishment for sin, through radio and television, the Vatican announced Thursday.

The decree authorizing the broadcast indulgence, to be used only three times a year by people who can't get to a church, was issued by Cardinal Luigi Dadaglio, the Grand Penitentiary of the Holy See, and approved by Pope John Paul II, the Vatican said.

Blind Swedish official champions handicapped

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Bengt Lindqvist, Sweden's new deputy minister of health and social affairs, has been blind since he was 15 years old but says he has taken the Cabinet post to show that the handicapped can get the job done.

"Someone told me early on that it is in fact easier for a blind man to be in a top post than to be a hotel busboy," Lindqvist said.

He uses electronic equipment that turns written documents into synthesized speech or into Braille.

"Some things simply take longer for me than for others, but I cope," Lindqvist recently told reporters.

He was appointed by Prime Minister Olof Palme in October as part of a Cabinet shuffle following the Social Democratic government's narrow election victory.

The appointment came as a surprise because the 49-year-old Lindqvist, a long-time spokesman in Parliament for the handicapped, had been a harsh critic of government policy.

"I was taken aback when asked by Palme, but I did not hesitate long before accepting this challenge," Lindqvist said. "It means a breakthrough for us handicapped that one of us receives such trust."

But Lindqvist feels that he should not be held up as the "shining exception to the rule that the handicapped are second-class citizens."

"Only four out of 10 handicapped in Sweden are employed and my chief concern is to get more and better jobs for them," he said.

Lindqvist, who became chairman of the National Association for the Handicapped in 1977 and was elected Sweden's first blind member of Parliament in 1982, said he prefers to be known as a government minister rather than a blind minister.

"It is not easy to overcome a handicap like blindness. It is a great strain, but in a few years and with adequate support it is possible to live a worthwhile life.

"There is a tendency to put too much emphasis on the handicap and too little on the personality.

Banner of labor unions frays as white collars replace blue

EDITOR'S NOTE: From the coal mines to the friendly skies, the banner of union solidarity is fraying. As one leader of the International Labor Organization says, "The traditional role of trade unions doesn't work well in modern society." So organized labor around the world is retrenching to rebuild its position in new-look economies.

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press

GENEVA — The world labor movement that marched arm in brotherly arm out of the foundries and sweatshops of the Industrial Revolution is falling out of step in the computer age.

In West Germany's Ruhr and the American Midwest, in France's Lorraine and the English north, a changing world economy has shut down mills, mines and factories by the hundreds, and is weakening the old political and bargaining muscle of the trade unions.

The chief of the International Labor Organization, an agency affiliated with the United Nations, with headquarters in this Swiss city, says labor today faces "unprecedented challenges."

"We see plants being closed, firms merged, workers retrenched, real wages and social benefits reduced," Director General Francis Blanchard observes in his 1985 annual report. "We are experiencing an era of pronounced structural change, perhaps as never before."

Many of labor's gains are secure. Union-based political parties are well-established in Europe, for example, and labor delegates will remain on many corporate boards. And strong unions can still show muscle. West Germany's automobile workers broke down a major psychological barrier, the 40-hour work week, with a strike last year that won a 38½-hour week.

But defeats outnumber victories today.

From the $150-a-week British coal miner to the $90,000-a-year U.S. airline pilot, union members are giving up old privileges, giving back old wage increases, furling the old banner of "solidarity" and raising the white flag of surrender.

Technological progress, which spawned the 19th-century workers' brotherhoods in the first place, is now leaving them behind. In economies relying less on smokestacks and more on computer chips, service industries are outgrowing basic manufacturing. The blue collar is giving way to the white.

"A NEW LABOR force has grown up around us and the trade union share of it has dropped," the top American labor leader, Lane Kirkland, told an AFL-CIO convention in October.

Some see a historic shift away from unionization, a blurring of lines between workers and managers. British labor historian Eric Hobsbawm writes of a decline of working-class "separateness" in his traditionally class-conscious country.

But Kirkland and others say unions can make a comeback.

"The traditional role of trade unions doesn't work well in modern society," Blanchard's ILO deputy, Bertil Bolin, acknowledged in a Geneva interview. But, he added, "The unions must adapt to the new situation."

Lost jobs meant lost clout for labor.

American union membership by 1984 plunged to 17.3 million, from 20.1 million in 1980. The Trades Union Congress, Britain's umbrella labor organization, went from 12.2 million to 9.6 million members. Even the formidable IG Metall, the West German autoworkers' union, lost 7 percent of its 2.7 million members.

TROUBLED COMPANIES, OFTEN pressed by cheaper foreign competition, demanded wage and work-rule concessions from their unionized employees. Management's ultimate weapon: pools of jobless eager for work whatever the terms.

The auto industry led the way in 1980. In Detroit, Chrysler Corp. won $600 million in concessions from the United Auto Workers. In Italy, a strike to block Fiat's plan to lay off 23,000 workers ended in defeat.

New conservative governments accelerated the trend. President Reagan fired 11,500 striking U.S. air controllers, destroying their union.

Year by year, union setbacks mounted.

— In the Netherlands in late 1982, the government brushed aside a nationwide strike and steamrolled through pay cuts for public employees.

— In the United States, Continental Airlines, wielding bankruptcy laws, fired its unionized pilots and flight attendants in 1983, tore up its labor contracts and launched a new operation with strikebreakers working for half-scale pay.

— In Britain, coal miners walked out on a make-or-break strike in 1984 to stop government plans to close money-losing mines. But Thatcher did not budge and "solidarity" crumbled — many miners kept working, and other unions offered scant support. The strike collapsed in a humiliating rout.

— In Denmark, at least 100,000 people marched on the Parliament building last April to demand more than the 2-percent wage hike offered a half-million public and private workers by Prime Minister Poul Schlueter's government.

But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. The interest earned is still exempt from state and local income taxes. Still cost as little as $25. And can be purchased at almost any financial institution. Or easier yet, through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

Two brothers from Kerrville, Ronald Bell, 31, left, and Allen Bell, 33, right, were arrested Wednesday in San Antonio and charged in connection with the kidnapping of Gay Haufler, 28, the wife of a San Antonio bank vice president.

Bankers increase security after kidnappings

AUSTIN (AP) — In the past three months three Texas bankers' wives have been abducted for ransom, including one who was killed in San Antonio, and bankers are increasing efforts to help possible extortion targets.

The Texas Banking Association always has held seminars to advise bank employees, executives and their families on security precautions, said Chris Williston, the association's vice president.

"We're trying to get out and do more and more seminars and get out more information," Williston said Wednesday, the day two Kerrville brothers were arraigned in the latest hostage effort.

"We try to get them to use good common sense," he said. "The statistics show they are indeed a target for these types of extortion attempts. We try to make them more aware of their surroundings, to use extreme caution in all dealings with the general public."

Authorities theorize the recent extortion attempts may have been "copycat" crimes mimicking earlier bids.

"It's the kind of crime that breeds on itself, unfortunately," said Williston. "It's one of those situations where people will follow to the letter news reports on how someone else tried to initiate or carry through the crime."

Mrs. Haufler, who is seven months pregnant, wasn't harmed.

After making the ransom demand, a ski-masked abductor took Mrs. Haufler but left the couple's 4-year-old daughter in the house. FBI agents found her hiding under the bed.

"You had one in Austin. We had one here in San Antonio, which was a tragedy because the lady got killed. And we had this one in Kerrville. It's a possibility (they are connected), but there's nothing to indicate it," FBI agent Pat Cowley said in a telephone interview from San Antonio.

In Austin, Police Sgt. Jim Andrist said officers would look for possible links to the Kerrville kidnapping.

"Whether there is or not, we don't know," he said. "They could be three separate incidents — copycats who've seen the publicity in the paper and decided to give it a try."

On Dec. 9, Kay Lane, wife of Inter-First Bank chairman Robert Lane, was tied up in her home by a gunman who forced his way in after posing as a flower deliveryman.

The gunman called Lane at the bank and demanded $200,000, but never showed up at the drop site. After the gunman left, Mrs. Lane managed to free herself, called her husband and told him not to pay the ransom.

No arrest has been made, Andrist said, although Austin police continue to track leads.

In San Antonio on Sept. 18, Rebecca Jo Patton, 42, wife of Castle Hills National Bank president Frank Patton Jr., was shot to death in her home by gunmen who had demanded what police called "a large amount of money" from her husband's bank. The men in this incident also posed as flower salesmen.

Brothers await bond hearing in separate jails

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two Kerrville brothers charged with attempted extortion in the abduction of a pregnant banker's wife have been sent to separate jails awaiting a bond hearing.

U.S. Magistrate Jamie Boyd Wednesday ordered the men to appear for a bond hearing Monday.

They are charged with attempted extortion in the Tuesday abduction of Gay Haufler, who escaped unharmed.

The abductors never showed up to collect a demanded $100,000 in ransom money at a drop site at a scenic overview near Interstate 10, the FBI said.

Charged in the case are Ronald Bell, 31, and Allen Bell, 33. They could face up to 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine if convicted.

Kerrville attorney Joe Mike Egan Jr., a former Kerr County District Attorney, was hired by the brothers' father to represent the defendants.

Federal officials said Ronald Bell was sent to the Comal County Jail in New Braunfels and his brother was sent to the federal prison at Bastrop.

Boyd also set a preliminary hearing for Dec. 27.

An FBI complaint filed Wednesday in federal court said her husband, Mark Haufler received a telephone call at his office early Tuesday.

Haufler said the call was from his wife, who appeared upset and apparently was reading some instructions to him.

Haufler told the FBI his wife told him the call "was not a joke and that he was being watched at the bank," the complaint said.

Combest to testify about legal aid group's work

EL PASO (AP) — U.S. Rep. Larry Combest is expected to testify Thursday in El Paso about Texas Rural Legal Aid Inc.'s handling of programs aimed at providing legal services for the poor.

Texas Rural Legal Aid receives federal funds from the Legal Services Corp., whose national board is meeting in El Paso.

Combest, R-Lubbock, is expected to testify about complaints involving Texas Rural Legal Aid cases in its Hereford office, Combest's press secretary Trudi Lewis said Wednesday. "He will request that these be looked at by the board and that they clear up any kinds of problems," she said.

She declined to release in advance any specific portions of Combest's testimony.

A Texas Rural Legal Aid official contends that Combest wants to reduce or cut federal funding for legal aid because the Hereford office, which is in his district, has been "the subject of numerous complaints from growers and politicians."

David Hall, executive director of Texas Rural Legal Aid, said his agency has compiled a successful litigation record, having won 98 percent of its cases since 1978. And Texas Rural Legal Aid has won 66 percent of more than 40 cases it has argued in the U.S. Courts of Appeals, Hall said.

"In the Hereford office, where the winning record is the most exemplary, the complaints from losing opponents and their counsel have proliferated in recent years," Hall said.

Can electronic 'leashes' take bite out of state spending?

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials are looking over some electronic devices that other states have used to cut down prison populations and keep a close watch on probationers.

The Criminal Justice Policy Council voted unanimously Wednesday to investigate the radio beam sensors that some call "electronic jails" or "leashes."

The council, headed by Gov. Mark White, also approved a study to determine if money spent on crime prevention could cut down on prison construction.

"We want this study to show if it is better to spend $500 million to prevent crime in the state's four major cities than it is to build a new four-unit prison," said White.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said he felt the use of electronic monitoring could accomplish such results.

Rep. Tom Waldrop, D-Corsicana, made a motion to look into the "electronic leash" to avoid the expense of building prisons for non-violent prisoners. The report will be made to the 1987 Legislature.

Instead of sending some offenders to jail, they would be sent home — fitted with a wristwatch-like bracelet or a device the size of a cigarette package strapped to an ankle. The device sends out a continuous radio signal that is picked up at the wearer's home. Periodically, the home receiver would be contacted by a central computer.

Any absences of the probationer from home, work or school would be recorded by the computer.

"This has been used successfully in Utah and other states," Ken Couples of a Dallas consulting company told the council.

The devices have also been used in Florida, Oregon and Michigan, he said.

Relaxation of fluoride standards protested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas and South Carolina are protesting a planned relaxation of the federal standard for fluoride in drinking water, saying the change still will cost too much.

Dental authorities from the two states told a hearing panel at the Environmental Protection Agency Wednesday that the agency had not figured in the cost of getting rid of excess fluoride removed from drinking water.

Only 282 water systems out of more than 50,000 nationwide will contain fluoride in concentrations above the proposed 4 parts per million limit. The current rarely enforced limit of 1.4 ppm to 2.4 ppm, depending on temperature, affects about 5 percent of all water systems.

Fluoride in small concentrations protects against cavities in children, and it is often added to water supplies to yield the optimum 1 ppm concentration.

But it also causes discolored, mottled teeth for as many as 3 percent of the children drinking water at 1 ppm. The EPA has estimated that up to 40 percent of children drinking water at the proposed new limit would show some degree of tooth discoloration.

Leigh Ann Geoffroy of Williamsburg, Va., a student at William and Mary College, opposed any relaxation in the standard, telling the panel, "I am a living, breathing example of an adverse health effect."

She said her parents had paid $4,000 to $5,000 for crowns, bridges and caps for her teeth that were seriously marred by drinking water with 4 ppm fluoride.

"When you're a 14-year-old girl and the young man you're infatuated with calls you 'Hey Brown Tooth,' I tend to think that has a psychological effect," said Miss Geoffroy, 21. "Why set a four parts per million standard if 40 percent of the children are going to have to go through the garbage I went through?"

The EPA estimated its relaxation would raise some water bills by a maximum of 25 percent, or about $95 a year at most, and that in a small system serving about 500 people.

Dr. Max Batavia, director of the Water Supply Division of the South Carolina Department of Health and Environmental Control, disagreed with that estimate. He told the panel, "We feel a more realistic figure would be 75 percent to 125 percent, not 25 percent."

He said the regulation would mean "an unnecessary expenditure of local dollars that would almost double local water rates."

Like Texas, South Carolina would like to see no mandatory standard at all, or if one is required, that it be set at 6 ppm.

Dr. Carlos Lozano, chief of the dental health bureau in the Texas Department of Health, told the panel 66 small towns in his state would have to spend up to $10 million on treatment equipment and increase bills by $2 million a year if the proposed standard were left unchanged. "This does not take into account problems associated with reject water treatment and disposal," he said.

South Carolina has 20 communities that would have to comply with a 4 ppm standard and Texas has 66, but only two have concentrations above 6 ppm, the two dentists said.

Some types of jewelry actually radioactive

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Today I heard that a group being conducted through a nuclear power plant was told that the Chinese use an enamel containing uranium in manufacturing cloisonne jewelry. Also, one could receive more radiation from wearing a pair of cloisonne earrings for 10 hours than from living close to a nuclear power plant for a year. Please advise. Virginia Weston, Linwood, N.J.

A. Dade Moeller, a Ph.D. with the Harvard School of Public Health, showed me an announcement from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission stating that yes, indeed, this jewelry is radioactive.

Cloisonne-style jewelry is painted with a glass glaze containing small amounts of uranium. The radiation dosage one would receive from this jewelry would depend on whether or not it's touching the skin, and for how long a period it is worn.

If you wore, say, earrings 10 hours a week every week of the year, you would be subjected to two to four rem a year. If one million people were similarly exposed, we would expect two to four cases of cancer as a result.

On the other hand, if you wore a pendant with the enameled surface touching the skin for 100 hours a week every week of the year, the dosage would be 20 to 40 rem per year. The corresponding risk levels are two to four cases of cancer per 100,000 people per year.

Q. I would like to obtain a chart showing the average or approximate amount of trimming waste that should be expected on all the various cuts of beef. Mrs. Robert Fuxa, Modesto, Calif.

A. I am sending you a chart sent to me by Donald Houston, administrator of the Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service. The chart was prepared by the National Live Stock and Meat Board and simply shows the normal fat covering for various retail cuts of beef.

Houston explained, however, that the amount of fat left on retail cuts of meat is not regulated by the government in any way but depends on industry practice — that is, what your butcher wants to leave on the meat.

If you want more information from the Meat Board, their address is 444 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60611.

If you want more information on industry practice regarding trimmable fat, you may also contact the American Meat Institute, P.O. Box 3556, Washington, D.C. 20007.

Q. I read your response in this column to another reader of the dangers of powdered non-dairy creamers but wondered if the same is true of liquid non-dairy creamers. We use Rich's non-dairy cream. Col. John Weeks, Pensacola, Fla.

A. In a previous column about non-dairy creamers I didn't intend to give the impression that they were dangerous. I meant to point out that, although they did not contain cholesterol as the labels imply, they did contain certain oil such as coconut and palm oils, which tend to stimulate one's own production of cholesterol in the body.

In addition, powdered creamers contain aluminum, an anti-caking ingredient, and of the six hypotheses that have been proposed for the cause of Alzheimer's disease, an environmental toxin such as an excess of aluminum is one of these being investigated.

Rich's Coffee Rich does not contain aluminum but does contain the following ingredients: water, corn syrup, partially hydrogenated soy bean oil, hydrogenated coconut oil, mono- and diglycerides, soy protein, sodium steroyl lactylate, polysorbate 60, dipotassium phosphate, sodium acid pyrophosphate and artificial color.

If you don't mind pouring this conglomeration into your coffee every morning, then go right ahead.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

Holiday traditions questioned

By LINDA ANDERSON

This will probably turn out to be a "Bah! Humbug!" column, but some seasonal questions have come to mind. Did you ever wonder:

• Why yo never find red M&Ms anymore — except at Christmas, when the candies are colored red and green and marketed in special Christmas wrappings with holly, ivy wreaths and other seasonal symbols?

It is my understanding that the company stopped making red M&Ms several years ago when it was discovered that the food coloring used to make the red ones was not as safe as it should be. Why, then, are red M&Ms sold at Christmas?

Does this mean the manufacturer has found a safer red coloring? If so, why can't they make red M&Ms all year?

Or does it mean they are allowed to use the less safe red coloring they previously used, but only at Christmastime? If so, what a way to celebrate this season of joy and new birth — with a food additive that is considered unsafe the rest of the year.

A spokesperson for M&Ms in the Hackettstown, N.J., office, said the company voluntarily removed red M&Ms from the product in 1976 because there was a controversy at that time about certain red dyes possibly being carcinogenic.

The red M&Ms marketed at Christmastime are made with a different red food coloring, one that has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration, she added. "All ingredients of our products are approved by the FDA."

If this new red food coloring has been found safe, what are the possibilities of having red M&Ms all year? "That is under consideration by our marketing department," the spokesperson said. "That will be a marketing decision."

The only specific food coloring listed on the candy's label is Yellow No. 5, she added, because some people are allergic to it. All other food colorings are listed simply as "artificial colors."

• Why Christmas, for many of us, when it finally gets here, turns out to be such a letdown? Maybe, just maybe (and I know this is high treason in this consumer-oriented society) it has to do with the way the season is presented.

Pre-Christmas sales and hints about the coming season can begin as early as August and September. Christmas displays appear in all the stores sometime around Nov. 1, completely eliminating Thanksgiving from the calendar.

Perhaps by the time Dec. 25 arrives some of us are sick of hearing the sounds and seeing the sights of this most festive of celebrations. And that's a shame because we need all the joyful times we can muster.

After all, too much of a good thing is still too much. Who can like steak after eating it every day? Let's start refusing to even think about Christmas until Dec. 1. Maybe then we won't get so burned out on something so special.

• Why does the festive holiday season have to be burdened with something as socially useless as fruitcake? Know anyone who actually eats that stuff?

The person who invented candied fruits is not high on my list of favorite people. Sure, it looks nice, but the holidays deserve better.

Erma Bombeck has a theory that there are only two fruitcakes in existence. During the year they live in someone's freezer, and at Christmastime they get passed from friend to friend to friend until they find a freezer to live in until the next Christmas. I tend to believe her because I have only known two people in my life — my grandparents — who actually liked fruitcake.

Give me chocolate cake anytime.

Now that I have my holiday gripes off my mind, I really do want to wish everyone the happiest of Christmas seasons, filled with year-round red M&Ms, Christmas shopping of reasonable proportions and no fruitcake at all.

But how important are externals, anyway? Christmas is the season of promise, of rebirth and of better things to come. Isn't that what it's all about?

Food poisoning spoils holidays

By MARIAN FARR

Holiday meals are leisurely affairs, with family and friends sitting around eating, visiting and enjoying themselves. At the same time, the food is "sitting" around with them — left on the table or even put in the oven to "stay warm for supper."

That's one reason why food poisoning is common during the holiday season. Food left out at room temperature is an ideal breeding ground for harmful bacteria.

Many of the virus or flu-like symptoms people experience during the holiday season are actually from food-borne illness. Improper food handling or inadequate storage and refrigeration are common causes of food-borne illness.

Staphylococcus or "staph" poisoning is usually due to contamination of the food by food handlers who carry the bacteria on their hands or hair. Most cases of "staph" food poisoning are related to foods such as custard-filled pastries, cream pies, salads, fish, meat products, sandwiches and creamed dishes. Precooked ham, poultry and poultry products — especially dressing and chicken or turkey salads — are excellent places for this bacteria to grow.

In general, foods that are moist, minced, chopped and handled a great deal are susceptible to "staph" germs.

Salmonella infections are most likely to come from foods such as poultry and eggs, prepared meats, meat pies, sausages, warmed-over foods and cream-filled meringue bakery goods not thoroughly cooked.

Unwashed hands or unsanitary cutting boards, food choppers, knives and cooking equipment can contaminate food with salmonella. Thoroughly wash any cutting board used for raw meat before other foods are placed on it.

To keep food-borne illness from spoiling your holidays, remember to keep hot foods above 140° Fahrenheit and cold foods below 40° F so bacteria don't have a chance to grow.

Mature Americans spend billions on travel

NEW YORK (AP) — Mature Americans — those over 50 years of age — will spend nearly $800 billion this year on domestic and foreign travel, reports Travel Agent magazine.

More than 25 percent of all U.S. passports are now in the hands of the over-50 group, according to the publication, and nearly 28 million Americans are now over age 65 — a 10 percent increase in the past four years.

The magazine notes that by the end of the century this figure is expected to top 30 million.

Waterbeds ride wave of customer approval

CLEVELAND (AP) — The waterbed of today is far removed from its counterculture roots in the late '60s, says Ernest M. Wuliger, a bedding industry official.

"Waterbed design and construction has grown up along with its enthusiasts, and the waterbed is the fastest growing sector of the bedding industry," says Wuliger, chief executive officer of the Ohio Mattress Co. here. "Each year for the past five years sales of waterbeds have increased at the phenomenal rate of 25 percent."

"If your perception of a waterbed is a squishy, leaky blob lying directly on the floor, look again," says Wuliger. "Specialty stores and even traditional furniture and department stores are carrying quality beds with sophisticated trappings. The beds are now available in varying degrees of firmness and movement."

The most surprising growth, according to Wuliger, has been among middle-aged and older people.

Decorate with safety for Christmas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Christmas tree brightens millions of homes in this season, and to get the most use from your tree and make it as safe as possible, shop carefully.

Many artificial trees are fire resistant, so look for a fire safety statement.

A fresh tree lasts longer and is less of a fire danger than a dry one, so look for a tree with green needles that resist being pulled from the branches, the Consumer Product Safety Commission advises. The needles should bend between the fingers, as fresh needles do not break.

The Department of Agriculture urges measuring the spot where you plan to put the tree. Trees look smaller in the woods or on a lot with many others, and can prove surprisingly massive once brought home.

The safety commission says not to rely on chemical sprays to fireproof trees. Place your tree carefully away from heat sources.

Before setting up the tree, cut off about two inches from the bottom of the trunk and then mount it in a stand containing water.

The commission urges checking for the Underwriters Laboratories "UL" safety label on any lights, and says to discard old or damaged sets.

Turn off all decorative lights when leaving the house or going to bed, and do not use lights on metallic trees, the commission warns.

Use only decorating lights specifically marketed for outside use outdoors.

The American Chemical Society warns that some popular decorating plants can be poisonous. Mistletoe, poinsettias and holly berries and yew berries can cause nausea, vomiting and other problems if eaten the society warns.

Outdoor advertising began in ancient Egypt

Outdoor advertising goes back a long, long time. According to the Institute of Outdoor Advertising, it started with the inscription of the names of kings on ancient Egyptian temples.

Roman merchants advertised services with paintings on walls. Much more recently such famous artists as Manet, Beardsley and Toulouse-Lautrec designed advertising posters.

Ounce of prevention improves car's performance

NEW YORK (AP) — Some simple preventive measures taken at home can improve your car's performance as well as add to its fuel efficiency, according to Lyn St. James, a professional race car driver.

With the engine off, remove the air filter. A clean carburetor mixes fuel and air in proper porportions for the well-tuned engine. Engine dirt can affect engine timing and safe passing on the highway.

Bearing up to Christmas rush for Teddy Ruxpin

Copley News Service

If Scrooge's supernatural chauffeur, the Ghost of Christmas Future, could have peered through the mists of time to 1985, this is what he would have seen:

Shoppers frantically seeking a bear with the unlikely name of Teddy Ruxpin.

"It's super hot," said Ted Boyer, owner of Susan's Toy and Hobby Center in San Diego. "It's just not available, basically."

"The only thing that's hot this year is what we don't have — Teddy Ruxpin," said Jane Naisbitt, owner of Thinker Things in Del Mar, Calif.

"The most highly demanded toys right now," said Randy Hogan, manager of Play Co in Chula Vista, Calif., "are the Teddy Ruxpins — which are nowhere to be found."

Advertised as "The World's First Animated Talking Toy," Ruxpin is an unlikely item to top Santa's hit parade. It is new — so new that its parent company, Worlds of Wonder, did not even exist until March. Ruxpin marched into stores in October; most Christmas items begin jockeying for shelf space no later than August.

Bah. Humbug.

"We had an opportunity to buy in June," said Boyer, "could have bought all I wanted. But I just didn't think it was all that great."

Mr. Ruxpin is a talking teddy bear, operated by a cassette tape, who sings, talks, moves his mouth and opens and closes his eyes. You might expect more from "Animagic," the same technique used in Disneyland's "Pirates of the Caribbean" and "Bear Country Jamboree."

And, at $70 on up, this toy is not Play-Doh.

But it is selling. Fast.

And it is the same story everywhere.

"It's available in Los Angeles on a hit-and-miss basis," said Sid Strand, the Teddy Ruxpin salesman for California and Hawaii. "I wouldn't call it a phenomenon yet, but it's certainly selling well."

Not a phenomenon? Worlds of Wonder is shipping 15,000 bears a day — and is falling behind orders. The Fremont, Calif.-based company expects to sell 750,000 of the cuddly toys by Christmas. It has already starred in a two-part ABC special and has been named the "Official Spokesbear" of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

Teddy's sidekicks, an "octopede" named Grubby, and various creatures with names like Gutang and Mudblub, are not yet on the market. But there are 13 different 20-minute tapes available at $15 apiece, and six separate outfits, also priced at $15 each.

Gabby Bear, an imitator, is expected soon. "The mouth moves but the eyes do not," said Boyer. "Not quite Teddy Ruxpin, but then it's about $20 cheaper."

"Most of the things this year are sort of warmed over," he said.

At Thinker Things, games are selling well. For adults, "Scruples" and "Middle Age Crazy" pose ethical dilemmas. "Lifesaver" asks children questions like: "What would you do if separated from your parents in a shopping center?"

"Murder is hot," said Naisbitt, including board games and the "Clue" VCR game.

What's not hot are last Christmas' favorites — the Cabbage Patch dolls and Trivial Pursuit — and hobbies.

"Hobbies are off 50 percent nationally from five years ago — trains, road racing, radio-controlled airplanes, model cars, trucks, airplanes, boats," said Boyer. "Boys, particularly, want instant gratification rather than sitting down for two or three hours with a model."

And next year?

Who knows?

Passing down old language by computer

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — Gaelic, the ancient Celtic language which is still spoken widely in the Scottish Highlands and in Ireland, will be passed on for posterity by using computer technology. The Scottish Development Agency says four educators from the Highland region have designed commercial software which is programmed in Gaelic. This will be used to teach the old language to students in Scottish schools.

DEAR ABBY

Hindsight leads to foresight in couple's plans

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing out of concern for others who may have to go through what I have. I lost both my parents recently in an automobile accident. The shock was hard enough to deal with, but on top of that, I had to take care of all the funeral arrangements. My parents had never discussed the subject with me, and I had absolutely no idea where to start, what kind of arrangements to make or how I was going to pay for it.

I am newly married and the oldest of their children, so the entire responsibility fell on me. Having to handle all this while under so much emotional stress was traumatic. I still wonder if I made the right decisions.

Some good did come out of this, however. After it was over, my husband and I arranged our own funerals by making a prepaid contract with a local mortician. Now we have the peace of mind of knowing that everything will be the way we want it, and that terrible chore will not fall on either one of us or our children.

I hope you put this in your column. It might start people to thinking so they won't continue to put off this unpleasant task. After all, death is natural and comes to all of us. — J.T. IN W.VA.

DEAR J.T.: You were very wise. I hope you were wise enough to have your "prepaid contract" examined by your attorney. Although death is a fact of life, you have no guarantee that you will not move to another state and die there. If you do, what happens to your contract? Also, what happens to your contract if your mortician goes out of business, or sells it to another mortician?

At the risk of sounding like a broken record, I repeat: Never sign any kind of contract without the approval of a lawyer.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle a disagreement between me and my mother. If a friend or relative is being married and I'm invited to both the bridal shower and the wedding, should I buy one gift or two?

Mother says I should buy one nice gift to be given at the bridal shower. I say buy two gifts: a small household item for the shower, and another gift — a more important one — as a wedding gift.

Every time there's a wedding this discussion comes up. We are both loyal readers and agree to let you settle it. If Mother is right, I take her to dinner. And vice versa. — F.C.J. IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR F.C.J.: (1) You are right. (2) A wedding gift is a wedding gift, and a shower gift is a shower gift, and they're not one and the same. (3) Your mother owes you a dinner.

DEAR ABBY: Do you think grounding a 10-year-old boy for six weeks is a just punishment for getting C's on his report card? I could understand this kind of punishment for D's, but I always thought a C was a passing mark.

The boy's parents think he has the potential to do better because his sisters get A's and B's.

What do you think? — INTERESTED PARTY

DEAR INTERESTED: I don't know whether the boy is working up to his potential or not, but I do know that children should never be compared with their siblings.

Praise and encouragement will do more for a 10-year-old than punishment. I think grounding the boy for six weeks is five weeks too long.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Medical 'quackery' warning issued

NEW YORK (AP) — Here's some free medical advice from Dr. Frank M. Young, commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration: "If the cure sounds too good to be true, it likely is."

The FDA and a pharmaceutical trade group have recently unveiled a public service campaign warning consumers against medical quackery, from phony AIDS cures to bogus bust enlargers.

Young said quackery costs Americans about $10 billion a year, including the cost of the products and "the cost of the carnage in the event of medical complications from the use of the products." He termed medical fraud a disease, and said education would "vaccinate" consumers against it.

The campaign, announced by Young and J. Patrick Dugan, president of the Pharmaceutical Advertising Council, includes a 30-second television and 60-second radio spots, a print public service announcement and a brochure with additional information on recognizing quack treatments and products.

They defined quackery as the sale or promotion of an unproven or worthless medical product for profit.

According to Dugan, doctors "say that they have discussions with their patients, which may involve medical fraud, approximately four times during a typical week."

And, he said, more than 30 percent of those physicians said they believed the incidence of such discussions was increasing.

Talking toys have origins back in history

NEW YORK (AP) — Some talking toys may be new this season, but as far back as the days of the ancient Egyptians, moving — and, later, talking — toys existed to delight, challenge and comfort children of all ages, says a toy historian.

"Nearly every culture has created miniature people and animal dolls," says Robert Malone, a robotics expert and consultant on electronic toy design and manufacturing. "These were either ritual objects, used by priests, or more informal toys and playthings."

Most of what was created thousands of years ago has been destroyed, he points out, but some very early evidence remains, and archaeologists have found examples during the last century in remaining primitive cultures.

These have often been articulated — jointed — statues and toys with moving limbs, from India and Nigeria, as well as American and Northwest Indian cultures, Malone says. One of the earliest moving statues was the Saluki toy dog, created nearly 4,000 years ago and attributed to the treasures of Egypt's King Tutankhamun.

"The Greeks were probably able to make moving statues," says Malone, as indicated by the reference to them in Homer. In A.D. 100, Hero of Alexandria is said to have made many steamdriven moving statues. These creations were rediscovered a thousand years later in Persia, and account for the flying horses, brass butterflies and other "miracle" objects of Arabian folklore. Nothing but drawings of these kinds of objects remains.

"The first real evidence of a moving statue is from 1352 in Strasbourg, France," Malone says. "A cathedral statue in the form of a cock was able to crow, flap his wings, stick out his tongue and move his head. It is the oldest working moving statue, and it operates by clock mechanisms."

From this point, Malone observes three distinct periods in Europe, the East, and later America, leading up to the remarkably sophisticated talking toys on the shelves today.

"First was the age of the handcrafted mechanisms," he explains, such as the wind-up and pull toys that were handmade in Europe and Japan from metal, wood and bamboo. They date back to the 16th and 17th centuries.

"In 1730, a Frenchman named Vaucanson created the first talking head, which pronounced words using a mechanical voice box. Less than 50 years later, Pierre Jacquet-Droz fashioned a harpsichord-playing automaton doll, which worked by mechanisms similar to a music box."

The 19th century ushered in the era of the mass-produced toys and dolls, including French and American walking and swimming dolls in 1876, which were spring-wound and used music boxes for sound.

In 1890, Thomas Edison invented a phonographic talking doll that was mass-produced and said, "Mary had a little lamb. Its fleece was white as snow ..." It had a crank handle and was dressed in period clothes.

A mere 30 years ago, the age of mass-produced electrically driven toys and dolls began, Malone notes. Chatty Cathy debuted in the mid-'50s as a modern, conventional doll with a miniature phonograph inside, operated by pulling a string.

She was followed early the next decade by Robert the Robot, a "walking" robot — he rolled on wheels — with a limited talking mechanism and a remote control. In 1977 came the introduction of 2-XL, a cassette-driven talking robot toy to which a child could respond with answers to questions.

This season has seen the appearance of toys such as talking teddy bears, which the toy industry has nicknamed "high-tech cuddlies." The new Gabby Bear, which operates with an internal tape player, tells 15-minute adventure stories, complete with synchronized eye and mouth movements.

What can toy lovers look for in the year 2001? Says Malone, author of several books, including "Rocketship" and "The Robot Book": "Walking, talking, listening dolls with some level of computer intelligence."

Physicians for peace

Co-Chairmen of the International Physicians for Prevention of Nuclear War, Yevgeny Chazov, left, of the Soviet Union, and Bernard Lown of the United States, are greeted by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, right, at the Kremlin Wednesday. Their organization was this year's winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

Ugandan officials killed after signing peace treaty

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Relatives said today that a former member of Parliament and a lawyer were shot and killed by men in army uniforms in separate incidents after the signing of a peace treaty to end Uganda's civil war.

Relatives said Francis Kasuura, a former Democratic Party legislator, and lawyer Joshua Bwanika were killed Wednesday night in Kampala. The relatives and hospital officials said a businessman riding in the car with Bwanika was seriously wounded.

The guerrilla National Resistance Army, which signed the treaty Tuesday with the governing Military Council, frequently has charged the government with failing to halt atrocities by soldiers.

A church-backed newspaper, meanwhile, said residents in the Wakiso area 10 miles northwest of Kampala reported that government soldiers have been robbing townspeople since the peace treaty was signed in Nairobi, Kenya.

The Kampala newspaper Munno, which is supported by the Roman Catholic Church, also said troops killed 30 people last week in the Mpigi district, 30 miles west of the capital, during a rampage of looting, raping and arson.

The treaty declared an immediate cease-fire in the war waged by the National Resistance Army since early 1981. But field commanders were given 48 hours, until this morning, to implement the cease-fire.

One provision of the treaty calls for prosecution of soldiers in all factions who committed human rights violations since the military took power in a coup July 27.

Civilian President Milton Obote, who was ousted in the coup, had been accused by the rebels of sanctioning human rights abuses on a broad scale and using the civil war as an excuse for the repression.

Under terms of the peace treaty, Gen. Tito Okello will remain head of state and chairman of the Military Council, while guerrilla commander Yoweri Museveni will be the council's vice chairman.

The treaty gives the rebels seven seats on the council, which is to be expanded from 12 to 20 members and is to help arrange for parliamentary elections "as soon as practicable."

A new 8,480-man national army is to be formed, with government forces providing 3,700 men, the National Resistance Army providing 3,580 and four smaller guerrilla groups a total of 1,200. Britain, Kenya, Tanzania and Canada were to be invited to supply observers to help create the new army and demobilize fighters not incorporated into it, but Britain said Wednesday it would not take part.

With more than 30,000 fighters bearing arms during the civil war, there has been concern that some of those not included in the new army will keep their weapons and become outlaws.

U.S. requests Malta hold accused Egyptair hijacker

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — The United States has asked Malta to detain the accused hijacker of the Egyptair jetliner in case the man is released by Maltese judicial authorities, a U.S. Embassy official here said Wednesday.

Omar Mohammed Ali Rezaq was charged last week in a Valletta court with responsibility for the deaths of two passengers, an American and an Israeli. Both women were shot in the head and dumped off the plane during a 22-hour standoff at Valletta's airport.

Rezaq was also charged with holding hostage the passengers and crew of the flight, which was hijacked Nov. 23 on a flight from Athens to Cairo and forced to land on this Mediterranean island.

The hijacking ended Nov. 24 when Egyptian commandos stormed the plane at the airport. Sixty people died in the hijacking and storming, which ended in fiery explosions that swept through the cabin.

The embassy official read a statement that had been given Tuesday night in Washington, D.C. by U.S. State Department duty officer Joe Reap.

"The United States has taken the routine legal step of submitting a request for the provisional arrest of the surviving Egyptair hijacker...for purposes of extradtion to the United States. Consistent with our extradition treaty with Malta, we have asked that our request be held in abeyance pending the hijacker's prosecution in Malta and any future extradition and prosecution in Egypt that may follow.

He said, "Our request is formulated so that if the hijacker were to become eligible for release at some future date it would serve as the basis for Malta's detaining the hijacker temporarily, pending receipt and consideration of a formal U.S. extradition request."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Food aid to continue

ROME (AP) — Ten industrialized countries that have donated food for millions of people who fled wars in Ethiopia and Afghanistan will continue the aid next year, a U.N. agency said Wednesday.

Representatives of the donor nations concluded a two-day meeting here Wednesday with delegates from Somalia and Pakistan.

Somalia has given refuge to people fleeing guerrilla wars in Ethiopia, and millions of refugees from the Afghan civil war live in camps in Pakistan. Moslem rebels are fighting government forces and Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

The announcement by the World Food Program, a U.N. agency based in Rome, said the refugees are "totally dependent on international assistance for their food needs."

James Ingram, the executive director, said: "It must be recognized that the continuing food needs of refugees in situations like we find in Somalia and Pakistan are as important to the international community as supplying food to the victims of sudden natural disasters such as droughts and earthquakes."

The donor countries are Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, Norway, Britain and the United States.

Capsizing drowns 200

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Nearly 200 people were missing and feared drowned Wednesday after a ferry boat capsized and sank in the South China Sea, the Philippine News Agency reported.

Only three people were reported rescued after the ferry Asuncion sank off Mindoro Island about 100 miles south of Manila, a Philippine Coast Guard spokesman said.

Seaman Magdaleno Gutierrez, at the Coast Guard's Manila information office, said a search-and-rescue vessel had been dispatched to the area.

Gutierrez said in a telephone interview it was possible other survivors may have been rescued by passing ships. The three known rescued were found by a Coast Guard vessel.

Bolivian rights restored

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — The four-month-old conservative government restored constitutional rights Wednesday night by letting a 90-day state of siege run out and lifting an overnight curfew, Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy said.

Barthelemy said the government's action allows renewal of political and labor activity, including marches and meetings.

The government declared the state of siege 90 days ago after a general strike shut down mines, schools, most public transportation, long-distance communications, many factories and some businesses.

Hundreds of labor leaders were rounded up on Sept. 18 and sent to internment camps in the Bolivian tropics. They were released three weeks later after they agreed to end the general strike.

Rolodex file stores Erma's memories, reporter's sources

SECAUCUS, N.J. (AP) — To humorist Erma Bombeck, it's a treasure trove of memories. To investigative reporters, it's a storehouse of secret sources. To business people, it's a vital tool. To all, it's the ever-present Rolodex file.

With business contacts more important than ever, the Rolodex file (it's an adjective, the company says, not a noun) has grown in value as it has become a retainer of the precious names and phone numbers that can lead to big deals or big stories.

And while Rolodex Corp. is enjoying rising sales, the Secaucus-based company is jealously trying to protect its trademark, much the way Rolodex owners protect their files.

Ms. Bombeck recently took her syndicated newspaper column on a trip through her Rolodex, while drawing up her Christmas card list. She reluctantly pulled the names of friends who had died in the past year, while recounting other events with each flip of the file, she wrote in the column.

"I do stop and reflect on the changes that have occurred," she said in a recent telephone interview. "Someone split from someone, someone died...

"I add the names of kids who are born so I seem really wise."

Her file, though, is not filled with the private numbers of the mighty.

"I don't have William F. Buckley's number or the pope's," she said. "You notice I mention them in the same breath."

Instead, her file is one of friends, favorite restaurants and grocery stores.

"I'm not one of these people who puts it in the safe," she said. "I've heard where one can be very valuable."

Indeed, investigative reporter Dale Van Atta has three Rolodex files, one at home, one at his Washington, D.C., office, and one where no one else can find it. "That's the secret Rolodex," he said.

Van Atta and Joe Spear share bylines with reporter Jack Anderson on his syndicated column.

"Without the Rolodex, I'd be shut down," Van Atta said.

Spear calls his file "one of the most important tools used to develop sources."

"I have one that locks," he added. "I just don't want anyone to know what's in it. I lock it every night."

"I've been here 17 years and if I left, I'd take it with me," he said. "It's a phenomenon that Rolodex has become a very personal thing. It's like an appendage to your body."

The attachment people have for their Rolodex files pleases Rolodex President Robert Burton, who said sales are doing extremely well and have set records in the past three years.

He, however, wouldn't release profit figures for the Insilco Corp. subsidiary that sells more than 70 desk-top products, including 32 different rotary models that range up to a $204.50 version with three-wheels holding 6,000 cards.

"We don't try to direct people on how to use the Rolodex," he said. "Like the company slogan says, 'To the limits of your imagination.' "

A New York artist once used the Rolodex file as the basis for an exhibit showing files of miniature pillows and prints of friends' lips and fingers, he said.

And though sales of personal computers have risen dramatically in recent years, they do not seem to be replacing the Rolodex file in record keeping, he said, claiming that many people keep a file next to their computer keyboards to list computer files and codes.

A Rolodex file is always there, not like a computer that can go blank with a glitch, he said.

The company, which began as American Zephyr Co., manufacturing flat-top list finders in 1939, introduced the famed rotary file in 1950. Insilco took over the company in 1970, changing its subsidiary's name to Rolodex Corp. in 1972.

The name keeps trademark attorneys busy. Gift catalogues sometimes will call any rotary file a Rolodex, Burton said.

But like Xerox, Coke and Kleenex, the brand name of Rolodex is trying to keep from slipping into the generic.

Rolodex is unique, Burton said, to the extent that it's an "international proprietary neologism," meaning it sounds and means the same thing in any language.

Sea of plants

George E. Wolfe III stands among a greenhouse full of poinsettias at the family's Waco floral company. Wolfe Florist provides the traditional plant to buyers in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Lousiana, as well as Texas.

Woman likes helping people who want plants

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — Vera Warren has been in the greenhouse business 48 years, and at an age when many people have been in retirement 20 years she still operates The Pansy Garden at her home.

"I've always loved flowers and growing things," said Miss Vera, who at 87 still gets out every morning by dawn to work in her garden.

Miss Vera said she is motivated because she believes she is helping people who need plants. "I feel like the Lord's leading me, and that I am following his will by growing plants for my customers."

She has seen her business go through many changes over the years. When her family first built their house 60 years ago they lived in the country, where there were no running water, gas or electricity.

The biggest change came when gas lines were established so she could heat her greenhouses.

Back in the 1930s, when Miss Vera was just getting started, she had problems with some cold winters and was not able to keep her plants warm enough.

The severity of the weather caused a loss of many precious plants. This often frustrated her, but Miss Vera said she wouldn't let it get her down.

One winter night almost caused her to decide to quit...She had lost another crop. "I came back in the house, and Poppy asked me what I was going to do about losing my plants. I said 'I'll sell out to you for a nickel.' "

In the early days of her business, she had some elderly friends in Denison who were in the florist business. "They were a lot of help to me; they taught me how to grow plants and things and how to run a greenhouse business," said Miss Vera.

Miss Vera says she tries to keep her prices reasonable. "You can't go up on prices because poor people can't buy them."

She adds that she likes people to get their money's worth.

One of Miss Vera's favorite plants is the pansy, although she says it has become quite expensive for her to grow. "I used to grow the loveliest pansies you ever laid your eyes on for $12 an ounce for seed. Now the seeds are $100 an ounce."

Miss Vera said she is willing to try most any type of plant that she might read about in a magazine. She plans to grow more pansies this year, if the weather permits.

Miss Vera is the oldest of nine children, of which six are still living. She never married, and since she was the first-born in her family, she inherited her house from her parents. She does most of the work by herself, although her bother has one-half interest in the business and helps her when he can.

Miss Vera says she has been a Christian for 71 years, and, "I'm going to keep going as long as the Lord gives me strength, and I pray for strength each day."

Refurbished sailboat caters to people in remote areas

LIHUE, Hawaii (AP) — A rare cargo sailboat, docked at Nawiliwili Harbor, is working the Pacific much as was done in bygone maritime trading days.

The Edna, a 70-year-old, 100-foot ketch, hauls exotic hardwoods and merchandise from one port to another for sale at the dock, usually by word of mouth.

Since 1983, the 120-ton, iron-hulled boat has been hauling Indonesian and Malaysian hardwoods from Singapore to Hawaii and California.

Before that, Edna operated in the Atlantic Ocean, hauling cargo from West Africa to South America, the Caribbean and the East Coast of the United States.

Boat owners Linda Russell and her husband, Brad Ives, have just begun to sell $30,000 of the Indonesian rosewood and puduak, which can be used for home construction.

"Business has been lucrative," said Russell, director of Deep Water Ventures Ltd., located at Hanalei on the island of Kauai's north shore.

She and Ives bought the boat seven years ago in Denmark and spent $100,000 to refurbish it.

The company has been successful because it caters to a "special market," she said. Edna hauls goods to customers in remote areas not served by large container ships.

"People buy from us because they identify with us — the way we haul our cargo and sell it," said Capt. Kevin Campbell. "It is a thing that is coming back as fuel becomes more expensive.

Although the ship has hauled clothing, cobblestones and bricks, Russell said she prefers to haul hardwoods.

"The only way to make money is to speculate (on what will sell)," she said.

She said there have been both good and bad times during her six years in the business.

"We had to learn what could be sold in the tropics and would be sold in cold weather areas," said Russell, who uses agents and custom house brokers to find markets for her goods.

To cut operating costs, the crew unloads the cargo and helps to sell it, Campbell said.

Gilbert Olivarez, part owner and manager of Fry Street Classics, poses in the used book store in Denton, known for the First Friday Poetry Readings, at which featured readers recite their works.

Rock music scrambles with poetry on Fry Street, Denton's hot spot

By TRENT EADES

DENTON (AP) — Down on Fry Street, when the sun goes down, a couple of spots heat up — Fry Street Classics, a used bookstore, and The Connection, a college-crowd bar.

Each spot acts as a nucleus around which rotate two distinct types of people, who are, for the most part, mutually exclusive: Only a few are at ease with both the musician-artist-writer circle of the bookstore and the younger rock 'n' roll headbangers of The Connection.

On some warm nights hundreds of people line the street, either gasping fresh air outside the bar or leaning against a wall or telephone post near the bookstore, where Olivarez or others may be reciting poetry. When the Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity, which sits on a corner of Fry Street and Oak, has a party or band in full swing, the whole street is alive with people, colorful fashions and raucous music.

Fry Street as a street runs for several blocks, up and away from North Texas State University. Fry Street as an event is far shorter, perhaps only slightly longer than a hundred yards, bounded by Hickory and Oak streets.

"It's been like this for a solid five months," Olivarez said one Friday night from inside his bookstore, as a sea of faces flowed past the store's front window. A rickety birdcage possesses an upper corner of the room. A rack of pastcards rests against a section of a wall. Acrylic paintings of faces dominate the bookstore's interior, and, of course, books are everywhere.

"There have alwdys been crowds here sporadically, but not like this. Now, if the bookstore doors are open, the crowds are here."

The bookstore's longest running endeavor has been the First Friday Poetry Readings. Every first Friday of the month, featured readers recite their poetry, followed by readers from the community.

"This Friday we're bringing in Chuck and Pat Ellis Taylor, two poets from Austin. They're also the publishers of Slough Press, which prints poetry and prose. It has a lot of prestige; they're successful enough to keep publishing."

FIRST FRIDAY readers of the past include several faculty members from North Texas State, including Drs. Leslie Palmer, Jim Linbarger and Richard Sale. Other featured readers include Johnny Walker of Oklahoma, Michael Sims of Southern Methodist University and Mario Zunig of Dallas.

Olivarez has published a book of poetry titled "Song of the Children." Copies are available at the bookstore. He said he's going to begin working on another soon. He has read his poetry in Houston, Austin and San Antonio.

Most Sunday nights Olivarez has lined up a band to play in the parking lot behind the bookstore. Bands used to play there Friday and Saturday nights as well, but Olizarez said complaints about the noise led him to schedule bands only on Sunday nights. Of course that doesn't prevent musicians from getting together and jamming when the mood hits them.

Bands that have played at the bookstore include The Cartoons, When Clowns Go Bad, Cots, United Snakes, Wounded Pelicans, Banda Eclipse and the Peacemakers.

Olivarez also sponsors art shows, and the vibrant, colorful portraits of David Bowie, Grace Jones, John Lennon and Yoko Ono and other pop personalities hanging inside the bookstore are the current exhibit. The artist in this case, Amy Grant, works out of Dallas, but Olivarez said he will consider exhibiting almost any art. Any artist interested in having his work displayed may find Olivarez at the bookstore most afternoons and evenings.

Olivarez characterized the bookstore crowd as more sedate, less wild, than the bar crowd.

"The people down here are older than The Connection crowd — we're not into throwing bottles in the street, flashing biceps or screeching tires. Some of the younger people on the street are more wild. Some factions around here are notorious for drawing police."

A FEW doors up, Troy Fontechia, the disc jockey at The Connection and a "possible future owner," leans against the brick wall outside the bar.

"We're not just Top 40, you know. We play a wide variety of music. I stopped playing Madonna long before everyone else did. We've got no format, and we cater to a strictly college crowd," Fontechia said.

The front of the Connection is a wild clash of colors, with giant red lips, The Rolling Stones' logo, painted over the entrance.

"Everyone here is a Stones fan," he said. The interior of The Connection is packed with photographs of The Rolling Stones and lead singer Mick Jagger. Against the north wall stands a Stargate video machine. On the east side of the room is the bar, with four or five stools next to it. On the south side of the room and a step below is the dance floor and the cubby hole in which Fontechia spins records.

Many of the female patrons are wearing dresses reminiscent of the flapper era of the '20s and sporting what could be termed strange haircuts. Most of the male patrons have short, conservative haircuts and wear blue jeans. An occasional earring dangles from an occasional male ear.

Fontechia, a Sammy (member of Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity) and marketing major at North Texas State, said he has worked at a radio station and a record store before his current job, but wouldn't trade either job for spinning discs.

"This bar is undercover. We don't even open on time. All we serve is beer and wine when we open, if we do open. It's all pretty carefree. People come out here because their friends are here and there's nothing else like this in Denton."

Fontechia describes the music he plays as rock 'n' roll red-neck mainstream.

"I GREW up on bands like U2, The Clash, Specials. Anything fun," he said. "That's the philosophy of this bar and this street."

Back down Fry Street, behind the bookstore, three members of the Peacekeepers have begun calmly jamming. Armed with a guitar, harmonica and saxophone, they soon attract about 40 or so listeners.

A stay at the Ramada Hotel is so "suite"

So many times, lodging in a hotel is just that - a place to hang your hat, with very little thought given to your personal needs.

Not so at the Ramada Hotel!

This competent staff has planned for their guests' every need: offering not only luxurious rooms in a plushy art deco style, but remembering the little "extras" that can make staying in a hotel fun.

And part of this service includes complimentary mouthwash, shampoo, shower caps, shoe horn, shoe buffs in every room for guests to enjoy. Each room has a built-in alarm and radio in the television, with cable and Showtime available for viewing.

In the rooms, the soft carpeting compliments the matching floral bedspreads and drapes with soft white sheers. All the furnishings, by Lane, project an aura of luxury, with matching dressers, mirrors, end and game tables. Brass lamps accent every room's style. Each bath is decorated in a chic wallcovering of earth tone hues.

In the single and double-occupancy rooms, a cozy sitting area is nestled in one area of the room, with a beautiful view through the adjacent window or on the 19 inch television.

In the suites, comfort is the order of the day, whether business or pleasure. A spacious parlor can be opened into two separate king size rooms, featuring two comfortable couches with a chair and marble tables to complete a quaint sitting area, perfect for viewing the 25 inch television. A lovely conference/dining table with six captain's chairs adds convenience. Along one wall stands a long sofa table below an oval mirror.

In one corner of this suite is what separates it from any other hotel room in its class. A wet bar with walnut-look counter tops accommodates a Spacemaker coffee maker with accessories and a small refrigerator.

And that's not all. Every registered guest receives, complimentary, a full American Breakfast each morning in The Sidewalk Cafe and cocktail hour from 6-7 p.m., each evening in Harry's Bar & Grill. Free transportation is also available to and from the airport or to business meetings.

A rickety birdcage possesses an upper corner of the room. A rack of pastcards rests against a section of a wall. Acrylic paintings of faces dominate the bookstore's interior, and, of course, books are everywhere.

"There have always been crowds here sporadically, but not like this. Now, if the bookstore doors are open, the crowds are here."

The bookstore's longest running endeavor has been the First Friday Poetry Readings. Every first Friday of the month, featured readers recite their poetry, followed by readers from the community.

"This Friday we're bringing in Chuck and Pat Ellis Taylor, two poets from Austin. They're also the publishers of Slough Press, which prints poetry and prose. It has a lot of prestige; they're successful enough to keep publishing."

FIRST FRIDAY readers of the past include several faculty members from North Texas State, including Drs. Leslie Palmer, Jim Linbarger and Richard Sale. Other featured readers include Johnny Walker of Oklahoma, Michael Sims of Southern Methodist University and Mario Zunig of Dallas.

Olivarez has published a book of poetry titled "Song of the Children." Copies are available at the bookstore. He said he's going to begin working on another soon. He has read his poetry in Houston, Austin and San Antonio.

Most Sunday nights Olivarez has lined up a band to play in the parking lot behind the bookstore. Bands used to play there Friday and Saturday nights as well, but Olizarez said complaints about the noise led him to schedule bands only on Sunday nights. Of course that doesn't prevent musicians from getting together and jamming when the mood hits them.

Bands that have played at the bookstore include The Cartoons, When Clowns Go Bad, Cots, United Snakes, Wounded Pelicans, Banda Eclipse and the Peacemakers.

Olivarez also sponsors art shows, and the vibrant, colorful portraits of David Bowie, Grace Jones, John Lennon and Yoko Ono and other pop personalities hanging inside the bookstore are the current exhibit. The artist in this case, Amy Grant, works out of Dallas, but Olivarez said he will consider exhibiting almost any art. Any artist interested in having his work displayed may find Olivarez at the bookstore most afternoons and evenings.

Olivarez characterized the bookstore crowd as more sedate, less wild, than the bar crowd.

"The people down here are older than The Connection crowd — we're not into throwing bottles in the street, flashing biceps or screeching tires. Some of the younger people on the street are more wild. Some factions around here are notorious for drawing police."

A FEW doors up, Troy Fontechia, the disc jockey at The Connection and a "possible future owner," leans against the brick wall outside the bar.

"We're not just Top 40, you know. We play a wide variety of music. I stopped playing Madonna long before everyone else did. We've got no format, and we cater to a strictly college crowd," Fontechia said.

The front of the Connection is a wild clash of colors, with giant red lips, The Rolling Stones' logo, painted over the entrance.

"Everyone here is a Stones fan," he said. The interior of The Connection is packed with photographs of The Rolling Stones and lead singer Mick Jagger. Against the north wall stands a Stargate video machine. On the east side of the room is the bar, with four or five stools next to it. On the south side of the room and a step below is the dance floor and the cubby hole in which Fontechia spins records.

Many of the female patrons are wearing dresses reminiscent of the flapper era of the '20s and sporting what could be termed strange haircuts. Most of the male patrons have short, conservative haircuts and wear blue jeans. An occasional earring dangles from an occasional male ear.

Fontechia, a Sammy (member of Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity) and marketing major at North Texas State, said he has worked at a radio station and a record store before his current job, but wouldn't trade either job for spinning discs.

"This bar is undercover. We don't even open on time. All we serve is beer and wine when we open, if we do open. It's all pretty carefree. People come out here because their friends are here and there's nothing else like this in Denton."

Fontechia describes the music he plays as rock 'n' roll red-neck mainstream.

"I GREW up on bands like U2, The Clash, Specials. Anything fun," he said. "That's the philosophy of this bar and this street."

Back down Fry Street, behind the bookstore, three members of the Peacekeepers have begun calmly jamming. Armed with a guitar, harmonica and saxophone, they soon attract about 40 or so listeners.
