Argentina official says army ready

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The military president told about 300,000 cheering supporters Saturday that the armed forces will go into battle if a British armada tries to retake the Falkland Islands. The throng whistled and booed when he mentioned the United States.

A 200-mile British war zone around the islands goes into effect at 1:01 a.m. Monday local time — 11 p.m. Sunday EST. And President Reagan said in a radio address from his vacation in Barbados, "We'll do all we can to help bring a peaceful resolution to this matter."

The multitude, reminiscent of the crowds drawn to the historic Plaza de Mayo by President Juan Peron and his wife Eva in the 1940s and 50s, waved blue and white national flags and exploded in cheers when President Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri defied Britain to attack Argentine soil.

Galtieri appeared on the balcony of Government House after meeting for 90 minutes with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who arrived from London in an effort to avert war over the tiny British territory — called the Malvinas by Argentina. Haig, who did not speak to reporters, planned to leave the country Sunday morning.

Argentina seized the islands, 250 miles east of the mainland, on April 2.

The Argentine president told the throng gathered below him that Argentina "extends its hand, in peace, to the adversary. But let the world be sure that this (the Argentine) people is firm in its will. If they (the British) want to come, then let them come and we will do battle...

"I am proud, in my discussions with the representative of the U.S. government, to maintain Argentina's dignity and honor, which is not subject to negotiation by anyone. The people are ready to battle anyone who dares touch one square meter of Argentine soil," he said, drawing a thunderous cheer.

Galtieri's mention of the U.S. government brought whistles and boos from the crowd, angry with America's support for a U.N resolution demanding Argentine withdrawal.

Hundreds of banners fluttered over the 10-acre Plaza de Mayo, proclaiming Argentine determination to keep the Falklands. "We Will Not Lose With Ink What We Won With Blood!" read one. Another read: "Sovereignty Shall Not Be Negotiated!"

The islands' newly installed Argentine governor, Gen. Mario Menendez, ordered residents to hand over shortwave radio sets to military authorities and said all shortwave antennas outside the capital of Port Stanley must be taken down because of Britain's intention to blockade the islands.

The conservative Buenos Aires daily La Nacion quoted a high military source as saying any British attempt to land on the islands would be "nearly suicidal" because of the lack of air support.

In Brussels, the Common Market decided to boycott Argentine exports to Europe, valued at $1.7 billion in 1980, the last year for which figures were available.

An Argentine Foreign Ministry communique condemned the boycott, saying it was a violation "of the norms and practices of international law."

A fleet of 40 British warships headed by two aircraft carriers was reported off the West African coast and is expected in waters surrounding the Falklands in about nine days. But at least one British submarine, the nuclear-powered Superb, is believed to already be near the islands.

Britain has promised to sink any Argentine vessel within 200 miles of the disputed islands after 1 a.m. Monday — 11 p.m. EST Sunday. British newspapers say one carrier the armada is carrying anti-submarine nuclear depth charges. The British Defense Ministry refused to comment.

Argentine forces seized the islands and their South Georgia and South Sandwich dependencies April 2. The islands had been administerd by Britain since 1833, when the British navy ousted Argentine authorities.

The gale-swept archipelago is home to some 1,800 people, the great majority of whom are British and want to remain such. Twenty-one Americans also are reported on the islands. British newspapers said many of the islanders want to be evacuated before any shooting starts.

Haig said Friday upon arrival at Buenos Aires' Ezeiza international airport he hoped to help find a diplomatic solution "based on U.N. Security Council resolution 502." The U.S.-supported resolution, passed the day after the Argentine invasion, condemned the aggression and called for an immediate withdrawal of Argentine forces.

Israeli troops said ready to invade

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanon said Saturday that 40,000 Israeli troops are massed near Lebanon's southern border and asked the United States to intervene urgently to head off a possible invasion against the Palestinian guerrillas.

The Palestine Liberation Organization predicted an attack by Monday.

Israel had no direct comment but a government spokesman in Tel Aviv, citing the recent assassination of an Israeli diplomat in Paris and the killing of two Israeli soldiers in Israeli-occupied territory, said the guerrillas have "good reason for their panic."

Lebanese President Elias Sarkis held two meetings with U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon, telling him Israel has massed two armored divisions with 40,000 troops on southern Lebanon's border, poised for an imminent attack.

"The president has conveyed to the U.S. government Lebanon's concern over the Israeli buildup and sought assurances that the United States government will urgently intervene to curb Israel," a Lebanese government spokesman said.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, with President Reagan in Barbados, said, "We renew our appeal for all those involved in the region to show the utmost restraint. This is a time for maximum caution..."

Mixture of strays, domestic animals beneficial, Byerly says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Dogs and cats are more than mere frills in a city. And to pet fanciers who care for their dear furry friends, they are not a bother at all when their annual anti-hydrophobia vaccination comes due.

Dog and cats serve far more beneficial purposes than companionship, suggests Dalton Byerly, Midland's animal control director.

And though rabies is the dreaded disease associated with dogs and cats, canines and felines can pass along far more bite-and-scratch illnesses than just rabies. Healthy and well-cared-for pets within wholesome adoptive families are the prime deterrents to diseases, notes Byerly.

Though one of Byerly's jobs is to ensure that dogs and cats don't run over a city like rats on a wharf, he says that roaming creatures can be a blessing.

"A certain number of free roaming dogs and cats are essential and beneficial to a community," he says and reasons: "Wild animals would take over your community unless you have tame animals that will simply keep them out."

"Stray cats keep the rodent population down," says Byerly, who readily admits that nothing short of confinement and a tether can keep a cat from roaming if the feline so desires. "Everything just sort of balances out.

"CATS IN MY OPINION are not domesticated," he says. "That cat in that room (at home) loves me to death, but if she gets outside, I'm sure not about to catch her."

In addition, he, like the hundreds of cat fanciers in the city, wouldn't put a tether or a leash on a cat. "You can hardly put a cat on a leash," he says.

Dogs, however, are quite leashable as long as the leash and the leash-holder are stronger than the dog or at least have control of the barking breed. And Midland city ordinance drafters, apparently were cognizant of the innate difference between dogs and cats, as the city leash law applies only to dogs.

The leash law requires that an animal be on a leash when it's outside of its lawful territory, the owner's house and yard, unless the dog is in obedience training, is hunting or is in exhibition.

"All animals in the city of Midland must be controlled," Byerly says, "and we only have leash laws for dogs, (but) there are restraints on everything."

There are, for example, restraints on pet owners who, notes Byerly, legally are responsible for the actions of their dogs and cats.

Frieda, who claims the Animal Control Center as her "home," is tagged to indicate that she has had her anti-rabies vaccine. Frieda, a 1½-year-old German shepherd dog, is a former stray.

If a dog trespasses, then, in effect, so does the dog's owner. "There's no dog going to know property lines. That dog is an extended arm (of its master).

"The mother is responsible for the child," Byerly reasons. "The owner of the dog is responsible for the dog, but probably more so if the dogs is off his property."

The city statutes say a person who fails to have his dog or cat properly vaccinated against the mad-dog disease called rabies is subject to punishment: a fine from $25 to $200. Dogs and cats are required to wear identifying tags.

And a dog in heat is required to be confined. "When they're in season, that's when we have a big problem, but if you can't confine the dog or cat, then take it to a hospital."

BYERLY IS CONVINCED that his office and its five animal-control officers serve a vital function even though Midland is not now threatened by rabies and does not now have a stray-dog problem.

"Midland has a loose-dog problem." He explains that this way: "A dog that is owned but is loose is a loose dog," but a stray dog "has an owner in some instances, but he's not cared for."

Byerly maintains records to indicate the effectiveness of his operation. Last month, for example, Animal Control handled 721 dogs, cats and other small animals, including a few dead ones which died on the streets, at home or in veterinary hospitals.

The Animal Control officers "responded to 476 citizen complaints." His officers picked up 303 dogs in March and trapped 56 cats ("We don't pick up cats; we trap cats."); 73 dogs and 31 cats were brought into the Animal Control headquarters by Midlanders, and 50 dogs and 11 cats were handed over to Byerly or his staff by people living in the rural areas.

During March, 48 dogs and 24 cats were adopted, and 201 dogs and only four cats were reclaimed. "Very few cats are reclaimed.

"We're not only getting the dogs out of the streets, we also located their owners," he says. "We did not kill the dogs.

"We're here because of our human attitudes," Byerly says. "If we don't take it (unwanted animal), then they are going to abandon it, and the chance of survival when they're dumped is less than 9 percent.

"THERE'S NO WAY for them to survive" in Midland, which, he dutifully noted, has dumpsters rather than garbage cans, from which dogs and cats could feed relatively easily; properly closed dumpsters cannot serve as a scrap-food bin for animals.

Animals brought into the Animal Control Center have a much better — 28 percent — chance of survival through adoption and repossession than do abandoned dogs and cats. However, dogs and cats which end up homeless undergo euthanasia. "We put a lot of pure-bred dogs to sleep."

Hong Kong reflects oasis of prosperity

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

HONG KONG — With so much bad news this past week, it's a relief to report some really good news to you.

Hearst

The bad news, of course, was China's mounting anger over our arms sales to Taiwan; the brink of war crisis between Britain and Argentina caused by the latter's military conquest of the Falkland Islands; the slow pace of our own economic recovery, and the suffering and damage caused in various parts of our country by tornadoes and floods.

The good news is the fantastic economic success story of this hustling, bustling, exhilarating harbor metropolis with its 5.2 million hard-working, efficient people packed into about 400 square miles of space.

Despite the recession that has afflicted most of the world for nearly a year now, Hong Kong is an oasis of prosperity. It maintained last year an economic growth rate of 10 percent compared with our rate of seven tenths of one percent. In fact, except for the first quarter of last year, our growth rate was negative for the year.

Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor, and I heard more about the economic miracle of Hong Kong from its wise and friendly governor, Sir Murray Maclehose, whom we had last seen during our visit to Asia two years ago. He is retiring at the end of this month after having served as governor for nearly 10 years, the longest term of any chief executive of this Crown Colony — an incredibly healthy and loyal relic of the once globe-circling British Empire.

Sir Murray's administration ended the '81 fiscal year in March with a surplus of $1.4 billion. Our federal deficit for the fiscal year ending Sept.30 is estimated to be over $100 billion and the latest Senate Budget Committee estimate for the fiscal '83 starting Oct.1 is $157.7 billion unless drastic new cuts in federal spending are made. That will give you some idea of how well Hong Kong is managed.

ALTHOUGH SIR MURRAY has been given a lion's share of credit for helping to maintain Hong Kong's economic stability in the global recession, he is quick to point out that the economic circumstances in Hong Kong are quite different from those that exist in the United States and other major industrial nations.

"Our economy is not affected by confrontational politics," he said. "We have a continuity of economic policy — a predictability of policy. Our policy does not change, as yours often does with each new political administration. Furthermore, there is close cooperation among the government, the busi-

Midlanders can expect sunny Easter

With sunny skies, warm temperatures and calm winds, Midlanders can expect a beautiful Easter Day, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The forecast calls for fair skies and warmer afternoons through Monday. The high today should reach into the middle 80s with the low tonight dropping into the lower 50s. Temperatures are expected to climb near 90 Monday.

Winds should be southerly at 5-10 mph this morning, increasing only to 10-15 mph by this afternoon.

Saturday's high temperature of 67 was 28 degrees cooler than the record high of 95, set for that date in 1948. The overnight low of 44 was 14 degrees warmer than the record low of 30, set in 1932.

Police investigate two burglaries

Midland police are investigating two burglaries reported Saturday morning.

According to police reports, a burglary at Commercial Warehouse, Fairgrounds Road and Cloverdale Road, was reported at 8:28 a.m. The burglary took place between 11 p.m. Friday and 7 a.m. Saturday. Taken was an amplifier valued at $1,500. Reports indicated police have a suspect in the incident.

The burglary of a residence at 2012 Cuthbert Ave., was reported by Dr. Francis Arnold Allen, of the same address, at 11:36 a.m. Taken was $200 in cash. According to police reports, the burglary occurred between 5 p.m. Friday and the time of the call. Investigating officers reported that there was no sign of forced entry although the dead bolt on the back door was broken.

Gunshot paralyzes 4-year-old boy

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — A 4-year-old Kalamazoo boy was paralyzed when a coat fell from a rack and a pistol in the pocket went off, severing his spinal cord, officials said Saturday.

Timothy Dinkins was in critical condition after being shot in the abdomen Friday afternoon at his mother's apartment, according to Kay Thomas, nursing supervisor at Bronson Methodist Hospital.

Kalamazoo Police Sgt. Patrick Gilmer said a boyfriend of the child's mother apparently had hung his coat on the rack and was holding another when the first one fell to the floor. A single .38-caliber bullet passed through the coat the man was holding and struck the boy, police said.

"Everything at this point supports that it was an accidental shooting," the officer said.

However, he said police were investigating whether the man, an Ohio resident, was licensed to carry a concealed weapon. Gilmer said he would not release the man's name until the investigation is completed.

The youth's mother, Vivian Dinkins, and a 2-month-old baby in the apartment were not injured, he said.

Man opens fire in pizza restaurant

PORTAGE, Mich. (AP) — A gunman opened fire in the kitchen of a pizza restaurant, killing two women and seriously wounding a male co-worker, police said today.

Police Lt. Michael Jungel said the shooting occurred shortly after 8 p.m. Friday at the Pizza Parlor, a restaurant on the southeast side of this Kalamazoo suburb.

Employees Virginia Hoffman, 34, of Stevensville and Rhonda McPeters, 28 of Kalamazoo, were killed, Jungel said.

William Witters of Portage, 43, was in serious condition at Bronson Methodist Hospital in Kalamazoo after undergoing surgery for gunshot wounds to his abdomen and left shoulder, said hospital nursing supervisor Kay Thomas.

West Virginia town has leak of toxic chlorine

BELLE, W.Va. (AP) — The 1,700 residents of this small town were routed from their homes early Saturday by an "enormously big cloud" of toxic chlorine gas leaking from a nearby chemical plant.

Officials said 11 people were sent to area hospitals complaining of throat irritation before the leak was stopped after 90 minutes, but only one person was admitted.

The leak was reported about 7:15 a.m., when an employee at the Diamond Shamrock Corp.'s Electro Chemical facility noticed a rupture in a pipeline, plant manager W.A. Mitchell said.

The worker, who asked that he not be indentified, said he was startled by a thumping sound that "sounded like a mortar shot."

Arrests made in plot against Khomeini

By FERESHTEH EMAMI

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iranian authorities arrested former Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh and several others for plotting to assassinate Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Radio Tehran reported Saturday.

The state-run radio said Ghotbzadeh and "several others" who were planning to assassinate the Iranian revolutionary patriarch and all members of Iran's Supreme Defense Council are now under arrest. It did not say when the arrests were made.

"The plot was organized by nationalists and power-hungry elements with no aim other than to gain power," the radio said.

It was quoting a statement issued by the special military revolutionary court headed by Mohammadi Reyshahri, a hard-line militant mullah.

The statement said security forces had been following Ghotbzadeh for some time and had made tape recordings of his conversations.

"BY DOING THIS (the assassination), they wanted to open the way for their Western masters including the United States," said the raido, monitored in Beirut.

The statement said others involved in the plot have yet to be arrested and a search for them is underway. But it did not disclose the details of the assassination plan.

Iranian exiles in Paris said Friday that Ghotbzadeh had been arrested within the last two days with a group of about 10 people, mostly relatives.

Ghotbzadeh was one of Khomeini's closest aides before the Islamic revolution overthrew the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in 1979.

Khoemini named him as a member of the powerful Revolutionary Council in the early days of the Islamic revolution and then made him head of Iranian radio and television.

HE BECAME foreign minister several weeks after Iranian militants occupied the American Embassy in Tehran in November 1979.

Ghotbzadeh, who opposed the holding of the 55 American hostages for 444 days, left office last September.

After losing the 1980 presidential race to former President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, Gotbzadeh was said to be starting a newspaper but then vanished from public life. Western correspondents with contacts in Tehran said he had opted for a quiet life, preferring to stay at his north Tehran home with no political activity.

He was arrested in November 1980 after denouncing the Khomeini regime in a television interview, but was released four days later following demonstrations in protest against his arrest in both Tehran and the holy city of Qom south of Tehran.

Also Saturday, the Islamic Republic News Agency — Iran's official news agency formerly known as Pars — said three members of the underground Mujahedeen Khalq were killed when Revolutionary Guards raided their Tehran hideout.

ONE GUARD was also killed, the agency said, but it did not not say when the clashes occurred. It said 11 other guerrillas were arrested during the clash.

The Mujahedeen is one of the most powerful opposition forces to the fundamentalist regime of Khomeini. It has waged a 10-month guerrilla war of bombings and assassinations that the government says has resulted in the deaths of 1,000 top political and religious leaders.

In other developments, Khomeini said in a speech given to a group of devotees at his north Tehran home that opponents to his regime were "silly" and "have lost their minds.

"This is why they devise such childish plots. Anywhere they wish to plot, they will have the people's careful eyes watching them, day and night," he said.

Radio Tehran broadcast a tape of Khomeini's speech during its midday news bulletin monitored in Beirut.

Pulitzer Prizes to be awarded

NEW YORK (AP) — A year later, Fred Knubel can still hear the reporter's question: Had Janet Cooke, winner of a Putlizer Prize for a story called "Jimmy's World," identified herself as a graduate of Vassar?

Yes, said Knubel, spokesman for Columbia University, which presents the annual awards in journalism and the arts.

Unknowingly, he had just unleashed a scandal.

Miss Cooke lied when she claimed to be a magna cum laude graduate of Vassar. Then the Washington Post reporter admitted that Jimmy, the 8-year-old heroin addict she profiled, existed only as a composite.

Knubel recalled the story last week as preparations were made for Monday's presentation of the 1982 Pulitzers.

Could "Jimmy's World" happen again?

"No, I'm not nervous. I really am not," said Knubel, the man who bore the brunt of media inquiries after last year's prizes.

The selection process this year was not so different than in the past, but there have been some changes.

In early March, 12 juries spent three days wading through 1,200 entries. Each jury nominated three stories for the prize in its category. On April 1 and 2, the Pulitzer Prize Board met and chose a winner in each category. The names were submitted to Columbia University President Michael I. Sovern, who presents the awards.

Last year, the board took Miss Cooke's story from one category and named it the winner in another; jurors said they were assured this year that the board would be more careful in overruling their decisions.

Last year, the juries offered two lists of nominees — one in alphabetical order, the other in order of preference. This year, one list was submitted in alphabetical order, accompanied by an analysis of the strengths of each entry.

The board traditionally met for one day. This year, it met for two days, "which gave them a good deal more time for reading but also for reflection and identification of possible problems," said Robert C. Christopher, who replaced the late Richard T. Baker as prize administrator.

And for the first time, jury chairmen were asked to be available during the board's deliberations so they could answer questions. Christopher said he called "three or four" chairmen to ask questions at the direction of the board.

Christopher said board members did not discuss last year's debacle much during deliberations.

But members of the Pulitzer juries said last year's problems were very much on their minds and sometimes in their discussions.

Mixture of animals beneficial, Byerly says

trol officers have killed 1,595 dogs and cats. "Where would they be otherwise?" he asked rhetorically. "They would run rampant" and possibly become diseased and deathly ill. Furthermore, Byerly says, "My method of destroying of animals is not painful; there's no disease."

In 1980, Animal Control killed 3,214 dogs and 1,546 cats by injections and handled 8,067 animals. This year, Animal Control may handle up to 10,000 dogs and cats in a city which may have three times that number of dogs alone.

Unidentified, unclaimed and not-adopted animals may be "put to sleep" on the fourth day after they are brought into the Animal Control Center. Animals which have identifying marks, such as tattoos, are allowed to live a week if they are not homebound.

Byerly says that his officers are assigned to certain sectors of the city so that each officer gets familiar with the pets in the neighorhood and can tell a stray from a loose dog.

"If we catch a dog running loose, we bring him home" to the adults in the household; the officers won't leave the formerly "loose" dog with children or with neighbors. Instead, they will take the animal to the pound, notify the owner if the dog or cat is identifiable by tag, and let the owner pick up the pet.

"If we previously have picked it up, we don't do it (take the animal home) a second time."

OFTENTIMES, THOUGH, a loose animal can be chased home and won't have to go through the trauma of the "dog pound."

"Nearly every animal we can shoo home unless that animal is an outcast," says Byerly.

Those other type of outcasts, the rabid dogs, are a rarity in Midland County. The "furious" or "mad-dog" rabies in an animal is evidenced by pronounced symptoms. "He'll attack anything," Byerly notes of the rabid dog. "He'll eat the bark off of a tree." In "dumb" rabies, "an unfriendly dog may get friendly."

"All animal regulations are basically health laws," says Byerly, who has a ready affinity for dogs and cats. Pet ownership is not an automatic right bestowed on citizens.

"It's a privilege to own a dog, not a right," he said. "It's just like driving a car; you earn the right to qualify."

Holy Week ceremonies proceed despite violence

SUCHITOTO, El Salvador (AP) — Holy Week ceremonies here were once a national attraction. But this year few people dared travel to the war-ravaged city because there was more gunfire and death.

Two-thirds of the estimated 16,000 people of Suchitoto have fled during El Salvador's 29-month-old civil war. They have been replaced by thousands of refugees.

The residents who stayed behind had hoped to make Holy Week a time of home-coming for those who had left the city. They were invited to return, at least for a few days.

Instead, there was still more death and yet another church service accompanied by gunfire at the edge of the city.

The Holy Week processions and ceremonies have proceeded as planned but with smaller crowds. They were scheduled for 10 days, from April 2 to today.

On Good Friday, about 500 people — virtually all of them residents — lined up outside the 125-year-old church for the traditional "Solemn Procession of the Holy Funeral."

Files of women and then men flanked the people carrying flower-decorated statues of Jesus, the Virgin Mary, John the Baptist and Mary Magdalene as the procession moved through the cobbled, nearly empty streets of Suchitoto.

The invitation to the ceremonies went out weeks before Easter.

"You can count the people who have come — perhaps 50," said Hernando, a teen-ager sitting on the plaza.

ness community and the labor unions. I once asked our labor leaders what interested them most — higher wage levels or full employment. They stared at me in silence for a moment, but they understood what was more important for the workers."

Other major factors which Sir Murray attributes to Hong Kong's economic success is the industrious nature of its Chinese work force, very little government interference with the free enterprise system and extraordinary incentives for business expansion, similar, in principle, to what President Reagan is trying to do at home.

For example, the annual depreciation allowance for new equipment investment, now 35 percent, will be increased this fiscal year to 55 percent. There is no minimum wage law, and the maximum standard personal income tax rate is 15 percent. No wonder the economy flourishes.

KUALA LUMPUR — Chapter Two of the good news report comes to you from the capital of a tropical land of lush green jungle: Malaysia. Strategically located between the South China Sea and the Indian Ocean, it dominates the main sea lane between the Indian and Pacific oceans. The Soviet Pacific fleet passes through the Strait of Malacca on its way from Vladivostok to the Indian Ocean, where it poses a potential threat to the West's oil supplies from the Persian Gulf.

One of the earliest sites inhabited by man, the Malaysian peninsula has limestone caves in which were discovered human relics dating back 50,000 years. The coastal areas have been ruled at one time or another by the Chinese, Portuguese, Dutch and British. Arab traders brought Islam in the 15th century, and it remains today the main religion of the Malays.

We found here some more good news — a basically sound economy with one of the fastest growth rates in Southeast Asia. Also, an energetic, quick-learning multiracial people. The Malays represent 53 percent of the 14 million population, Chinese 36 percent and Indians 10 percent.

MALAYSIA IS THE world's largest producer of natural rubber and tin, and an important producer of palm oil, tropical woods, pepper, cocoa, oil and gas. It is America's main supplier of rubber, tin and, a new industry, semiconductors. The British brought rubber seeds to Malaysia from Brazil 115 years ago. Today two-thirds of the land's 128,000 square miles are planted with rubber. It used to be a one-crop country, with rubber representing 80 percent of its exports. Now, because of diversification into other products, rubber represents only 22 percent.

Because it is so dependent on exports, Malaysia has suffered somewhat from the global recession. From an average 8 percent economic growth rate, it dropped last year to 7 percent and the forecast for the current fiscal year is 6 percent. From what in normal times would be a healthy budget surplus, a $3.5 billion deficit is projected for this year. Nevertheless, its abundant natural resources and hardworking, intelligent people seem certain to assure its future prosperity when the world pulls out of its present economic troubles.

The country has a democratic form of government with a constitutional monarchy. The monarch serves for only five years and is elected by a council of hereditary rulers.

Since it gained independence from Britain in 1957, the ruling political party has been the Malay National Front whose pragmatic leader, Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamed, is now running for re-election — considered a foregone conclusion.

There has long been some political tension between the Malays and the Chinese. Although a majority of the population, the Malays were much poorer and less well-educated than the expatriate Chinese who are the clever merchants of most of the Southeast Asian countries. Reluctant to let the Chinese control the wealth of the country, the native Malays voted a constitutional amendment in 1971 which gave them a protected place in higher education and business licenses.

This has led to complaints that unemployment among Chinese youths in some urban areas is disproportionately high, and that university admissions are in the ratio of 75 percent Malay, 20 percent Chinese and 5 percent Indian. Nevertheless, the three races seem to cooperate well in promoting the economic interests of the country, and the prime minister is committed to the achievement of national unity.

This place, like Hong Kong and Singapore, still retains its British culture and flavor. English is the main language. Britain established an efficient administrative structure and trained the natives as civil servants.

In fact, Malaysia epitomizes the best consequences of British colonial rule. Looking back in historical retrospect, Britain had a better record of concern for the natives than any of the other European colonizers. The British left the countries they colonized a damn sight better when they left than when they arrived.

Personally, I always prefer visiting countries where the dominant tourist language is English.

Temple money buys more than politics

TRINITY, Texas (AP) — The robust older man with the cigar rolling around in his mouth was the only person in the Trinity Community Center who was not thrilled that Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple is running for governor.

"I don't know why he wants it, but if he does, I think he can do a great job for the state," said the man in the yellow sport coat and cap.

Moments later, the man in yellow said Temple, "as a general principle, doesn't have a high regard for politicians."

BUDDY TEMPLE IS Arthur Temple III. The man in yellow is Arthur Temple Jr., the candidate's father. Candidate Temple did not know his father, the timber and Time Inc. millionaire, was going to show up here at "event nine" on an East Texas campaign swing this past week.

"It's the only way I get to see him," said father Temple.

Said his son, "He would much prefer I not be in politics. He's pretty thin-skinned. He does not like to see people jumping on his son."

Despite his father's wishes, Buddy Temple is deep in politics. After one unsuccessful year at the University of Texas (his father also went to UT for just one year), Temple joined the Army and then returned to East Texas for a stint on the Diboll school board.

In 1972 he started eight years in the Texas House of Representatives. In 1980, he surprised some by unseating incumbent Railroad Commissioner John Poerner.

Some Texas Democrats are glad that Temple and his family money are in the race to try to wrest the governor's job away from millionaire oilman Gov. Bill Clements, a Republican.

If Clements and the Temples put their money in stacks, the Clements' stack would be higher, according to Temple.

"I'm no Bill Clements. I'm not even in the same league. I imagine he is worth $100 million to $150 million," said the candidate.

"We are a very fortunate family," said Temple. "I don't have to be reminded of that."

As his leased plane knifed through a night wind and headed for Lufkin from Austin, the 40-year-old candidate talked about being a rich candidate.

"Every race I have ever been in ends up with everyone attacking me because my family has been successful. It's very frustrating," he said. "But I've won every race I've been in. This is my seventh."

"When I was growing up (in Lufkin), I was on a 50-cent-a-week allowance like all my friends," he said.

TEMPLE ALSO LIKES to point out that he has made money on his own, buying and selling Holiday Inns and other property and running other businesses.

Temple is the rich candidate again this time. Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong, a Temple opponent, has based his campaign on a theme of elections not being for sale, a not-so-subtle dig at Temple and his family wealth.

Temple wheeled through East Texas this past week to solidify his home-area support. The first day included hours of small towns — which he seemed to enjoy — and small talk — which he hates.

In Wells, the first stop on the road, about 30 people — out of a town of 926 — turned out for the first of the morning's four "coffees." Temple endured 30 minutes of coffee, cookies and small talk among friends before retreating to the van carrying him through the region.

"I am not really good at small talk. Those two-hour deals kill me. The small talk tires me out," Temple said.

In Alto, the crowd inside the Lions Club never exceeded a dozen, including an old woman who complained about a speeding ticket.

The small talk was interrupted by a reporter from the local weekly. "You have any pertinent quotes about what you're going to do for Alto when you're elected?"

Somehow, Temple had an answer.

Throughout the day Temple said Texans are tired of Clements' gruff style. It's a campaign theme that Temple, Armstrong and Attorney General Mark White, the three major Democratic contenders, have repeated.

In Rusk, insuranceman and former Clements supporter Frank Bowden said Democrats are right about Clements. As Temple chatted with others in a bank meeting room, Bowden said he voted for Clements in 1978 because, "I was kind of tired of having nice guys that didn't seem to do much. I wouldn't mind them being my children's grandfather, but I didn't want them as governor."

BUT TOUGH GUY Clements has "embarrassed" Bowden.

"I don't think he's grown up enough to be governor," he said. "From a personal standpoint, I think he lacks the type of class we need in a state as progressive as Texas. Buddy probably has that class."

Temple, live on local radio thanks to station owner and former state Rep. Emmett Whitehead, told Rusk supporters his top priorities are money for teachers and law enforcement.

In the van on the way to Jacksonville, Temple agreed with Bowden that Clements has high "negatives," meaning a lot of Texans have bad feelings about their governor.

"The negatives are hard to overcome. I think he's got a real problem and I think he knows it," said Temple.

As of this past week, Temple is spending thousands of dollars on TV ads aimed at pumping up White's negatives. At several stops, Temple blasted White, his "main opponent" and the candidate Temple thinks he will face in a June runoff.

Earlier in the week, Temple began a series of television ads slamming White for his work as attorney general. The ads end with Temple suggesting that viewers not happy with White's performance call the attorney general.

On the ad, Temple gives viewers the telephone number at White's campaign headquarters.

Temple said the TV spot was a reaction to White's ads alleging that Temple took contributions from utility companies and then voted, as a railroad commissioner, to give the companies higher rates. Temple said he asked White, through intermediaries, to get rid of the personal attack ads.

White refused, so, "I decided to give him a dose of East Texas politics," said Temple.

THE DEMOCRATIC WAR of words, relished by the Republicans, had begun.

"We all pledged we would try to maintain some peace and harmony (in the Democratic race). I am sad to tell you that Mr. White has violated that pledge," Temple told Trinity supporters.

Earlier he said, "I regret very much that (White) did this. I think it's going to accrue to Bill Clements' benefit. But I am not going to sit there and be a punching bag. (White) started all this nonsense and I'm going to respond in kind."

At least one of his Trinity backers was pleased with the new tough talk from Temple. In fact, Wilmuth Wilson, mother of U.S. Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, told Temple he had to get tougher.

"You've got to come on strong and mean and mad," said Mrs. Wilson.

"You haven't seen our new TV spots," Temple responded. "We're busting his butt."

The Trinity stop gave a quick, but telling, glimpse of what the Temples mean to East Texas.

Mayor Sam Barnes introduced candidate Temple and thanked him for "this building, our library and, especially, our hospital." Temple told reporters that the facilities were built with help from the T.L.L. Temple Foundation, which gives away about $2 million a year for such projects.

"We have been very fortunate as a family," said the candidate. "And we have tried to return some of that good luck to you."

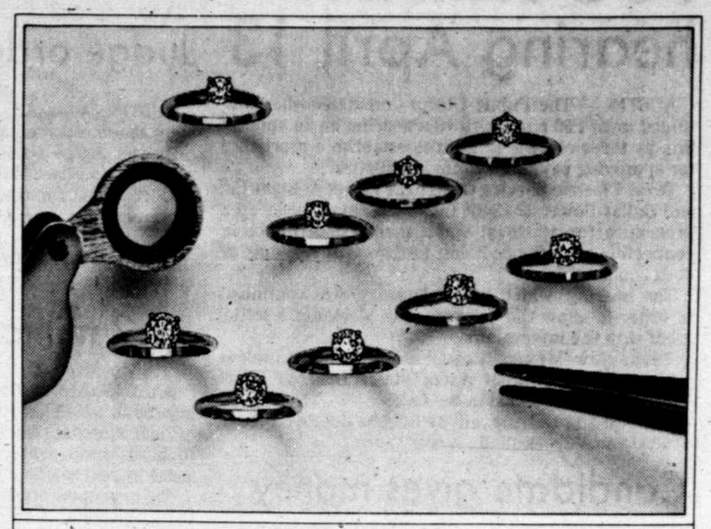

Off to the side, the candidate's father, wary of the press, measured his words in talking to reporters. He recalled an evening years ago when a group asked him to run for governor. "They ask everybody to run at some time," he said.

In the van, his son recalled the elder Temple's one-and-only campaigning effort, a hand-shaking session outside his Pineland mill in support of Wilson's first race for the U.S. House in 1972.

"He handed out cards and shook hands. He felt very uncomfortable doing it," said Buddy Temple.

THE ELDER TEMPLE has not done any public campaigning since then. Nevertheless, Arthur Temple, vice chairman of Time Inc., admits it's hard to avoid getting involved.

"I have always taken an interest in politics. I don't think you can live in East Texas and not be involved," he said.

PUC continues hearing April 13

AUSTIN — The Public Utility Commission has continued until 1:30 p.m. April 13 a hearing on an application by three electric utilities to establish a procedure for approving payments to their affiliates.

Texas Electric Service Co., Texas Power & Light Co. and Dallas Power & Light Co. are seeking to set up a procedure for approval of payments to affiliates in connection with the fuel cost factor tariff schedule of each company.

The hearing, which began Tuesday, was continued in order to allow the companies to work out a settlement with the intervenors.

Texas-New Mexico Power Co., Texas Municipal League and the cities of Waco, Odessa, Dallas and Fort Worth have intervened in the case.

The April 13 hearing will be held at the PUC offices at 7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Austin.

Candidate gives money from fund-raiser to Paris

PARIS, Texas (AP) — Gubernatorial candidate Bob Armstrong raised $3,000 during a campaign appearance here but, saying his conscience would not let him alone, turned the money over to a relief agency in this tornado-ravaged city.

Nine Paris residents have died from an April 2 tornado that also injured more than 200 and did about $50 million damage in the city.

Armstrong, seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, attended a $100-a-plate fund-raising dinner Friday after touring the stricken area.

"I've changed my mind after seeing what happened here...a man could not in good conscience walk out of here with any money," he told the 85 supporters in attandance, who gave him a standing ovation.

Armstrong said he would turn the money over to the inter-faith council, a religious organization helping the city distribute funds to tornado victims.

Soldiers' importance detailed

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Indians dubbed them "buffalo soldiers" as tribute to their fierce prowess in battle, and Patricia Erisman remembers listening as a child to her grandmother recount first-hand tales of their exploits.

There were tales of these doggedly loyal soldiers safeguarding the volatile Mexican border in the last days of the old West, of shielding settlers from marauding Indians, and of blazing trails through rugged, uncharted territory.

"I didn't know in all her stories that the men she was talking about were black men," Mrs. Erisman said. "It didn't matter to her."

But it matters to Burl Washington, a 31-year-old black artist who believes history has short-changed the buffalo soldiers.

"People need to know that blacks did contribute something to the settling of this country. That's what I'm trying to do," he said, gesturing to the paintings that line the walls of his studio in the Fort Worth stockyards.

Washington has started a series of 18 watercolors depicting the dress and daring of the black soldiers who served in the Ninth and 10th Regiments of the U.S Cavalry.

He expects to finish the series in the next two years. He hopes it will serve to peel off the whitewash daubed on the folklore of the frontier.

"People today know mainly what they read or what they see on TV," he said. "John Wayne's riding to the rescue, and you don't see any blacks behind him."

Washington has concentrated the series on capturing the milieu of 1866 to 1901 in intricate detail, from the corncob pipes the blacks fashioned to the Civil War weapons they were furnished.

He has crisscrossed the state the past several years, visiting old army posts and uncovering information. His fact-finding missions have sent him to deserted stretches of West Texas and other states. But, ironically, one of his best finds was right under his nose.

A mutual friend introduced him to Mrs. Erisman, a Fort Worth resident whose great-grandfather — John Sylvanus Loud — was a white officer in the Ninth regiment from about 1868 to 1890.

Judge orders union representation

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A state judge has ordered Mexia State School officials to allow union representation at client abuse hearings.

District Judge Harley Clark issued the temporary restraining order Friday, according to Eliseo Medina of the Texas State Employees Union.

TSEU asked for the court order after school officials refused to allow union representation at an April 2 hearing concerning four employees accused of child abuse.

Clark issued a similar order on March 30 after a request by employees at Rusk State Hospital.

$1.2 million awarded in damages

DALLAS (AP) — The family of a U.S. Army pilot and another man who was injured in a 1978 helicopter crash have been awarded $1.2 million in damages.

Chief Warrant Officer Donald E. Long and the family of Chief Warrant Officer Richard Smith contended in the two-week federal trial that the accident was cause by failure of a ball bearing.

The helicopter crashed nose down into a ravine during a training maneuver on Oahu, Hawaii in March 1978. Smith was killed and Long suffered a shattered right leg and a head injury.

Jurors deliberated about three hours before finding the ball bearing's design and manufacture was defective.

Split Ballbearing was ordered to pay $900,000 to Smith's family and $300,000 to Long.

Texan claims seizure by Argentines

HOUSTON (AP) — A Texan working on a British offshore rig was taken into custody by Argentine authorities who stopped the rig as it headed for Chilean waters, the man's wife said Saturday.

An congressional aide contacted by relatives of Michael Martinez Jr. said he was told that State Department officials sent a cable Saturday to the American embassy in Buenos Aires.

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. is visiting the South American country in an effort to avert a war over Argentina's takeover of the British-ruled Falkland Islands.

"The State Department is sending a very detailed cable and it's now a very frustrating waiting game," said Ivan Sinclair, administrative assistant to U.S. Rep. Jack Hightower, D-Texas. Hightower was contacted by Martinez' mother and brother in Amarillo, Texas.

"Why he was taken we do not know; what they plan to do we do not know," Sinclair said.

Sinclair said State Department officials believed Martinez was the only American escorted from the rig.

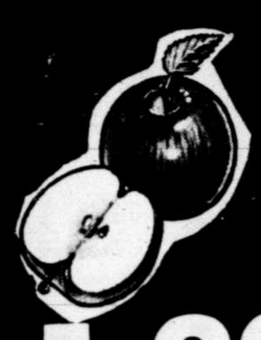

The State Department had no comment.

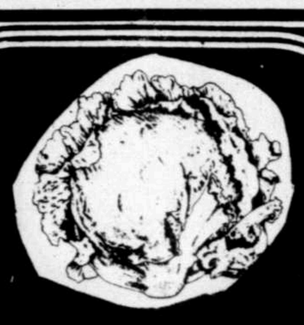

Martinez is a paramedic and safety training instructor for Sonat Exploration Co. of Houston, which leased the InterOcean 2 to Sonat Offshore Drilling Co., a British company. Marion Martinez said her husband told her the Argentine navy boarded the rig 100 miles offshore and escorted workers to the coastal city of Rio Gallagos, which is due west from the Falkland Islands.

Martinez said "they were going to possibly send him to Buenos Aires, put him on a plane and send him to Miami," she said. But he added, "I'll believe it when I get there."

Her husband urged her to call the State Department and said the conversation was being monitored by the Argentines, Mrs. Martinez said.

Deadline for filing tax returns is Thursday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The midnight Thursday deadline for filing federal income tax forms is approaching, but the Internal Revenue Service says more than a third of the returns still have not been filed.

For those who file after the deadline, the interest penalty for late payment has been raised this year to 20 percent from the 12 percent of last year.

There's been a lot of talk in Washington recently about Americans skirting tax laws, some by simply not filing at all. But it's hardly evident from total numbers of filers so far.

The Internal Revenue Service is expecting about 96 million returns this year, up slightly from 1981. At last count, as of April 2, the government had received 57.5 million returns, down about 1.7 percent from the same time a year earlier.

Officials don't make much of that difference, saying millions of taxpayers — especially those who owe additional money — always put off filing until the last day or two.

"You always get your people who file early to get their refunds and the others who owe money wait until the end," said Tony Bombardiere, an IRS public information officer.

This year's recession doesn't appear to have changed that pattern, he said.

Americans' federal income taxes are mostly paid with money withheld from paychecks throughout the year. Tax forms due by April 15 each year merely tote up how much more each taxpayer has to pay or how much he gets back.

Refunds processed for about 38 million tax filers so far this year have averaged about $703, up a bit more than $68 from last year's average at this time, Bombardiere said.

He had no explanation for that increase — other than some impact from inflation — but said IRS accompanies refunds of $200 or more with a note telling taxpayers they don't have to have so much money withheld.

As for cheating, IRS Director Roscoe Egger recently told Congress that the "tax gap" of revenue lost to the government because of non-compliance with tax laws rose from about $29 billion in 1973 to about $87 billion last year.

Titanic survivor reminisces

By YARDENA ARAR

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Seventy years after the sinking of the Titanic, the stinging cold and mercifully calm seas are the clearest memories for a survivor of the sunken luxury liner and a woman who was a passenger aboard a rescue ship.

"I remember how very cold it was," said Edwina MacKenzie, a 97-year-old Hermosa Beach resident who is believed to be the oldest survivor of the Titanic disaster. "I remember the ocean being smooth, which is unusual, you know.

"Very fortunately, I think what saved the survivors, the sea was awfully calm," said Bernice Ellis, who had been aboard the Carpathia, which was headed for Europe when the Titanic went down. The Carpathia brought survivors back to the United States.

The two women, who had never met before, were the featured speakers at the gala 70th anniversary celebration "Titanic Tonight" at the Biltmore Hotel in downtown Los Angeles today and Saturday.

Organized by the nonprofit Oceanic Navigation Research Society Inc., the eighth annual commemoration also included films, a display of memorabilia, a dinner-dance re-creation of the last night in the Titanic's first-class Grand Salon and a memorial service for the 1,503 people who died.

Only 705 people survived when the British ocean liner billed as "unsinkable" rammed an iceberg and sank April 15, 1912, on its maiden voyage.

Mrs. MacKenzie said she was on the voyage from her native England to the United States to visit her sister, who had married an American.

When the ship went down, she said, she spent all night huddled on a tiny lifeboat in freezing weather.

"The exposure was very good for my complexion," she said Friday with a laugh. "People couldn't believe such a rosy-cheeked girl had been on the Titanic."

Mrs. Ellis, who said she was "the only survivor that they know of from the Carpathia," was traveling with her mother from New York to Europe that April.

"We were four days out, early on the morning of the 15th, when I was awakened and disturbed by unusual noise on the deck," the 89-year-old Apple Valley grandmother recalled. "And I was cold.

"A few minutes after that, the constant rhythm of the ship's engines stopped, and the boat was very still, so I knew something was wrong. And I looked out of the porthole and saw several small boats on them with people rowing towards the ship."

Knowing the Titanic was famous as "the biggest ship there was," Mrs. Ellis got dressed and ran on deck.

"We were 60 miles from the ship and the captain said as we got closer we could have thrown an orange at the icebergs and hit them. We ran a terrible risk, but fortunately we were OK."

Mrs. Ellis remembered watching as women were lifted onto the ship in a swing. "Some were fully dressed in furs and hats — hats were fashionable then — some came up in evening dress, and some in night clothes with robes."

She also recalls the embarrassment felt by two men from first-class who were rescued. "They went around apologizing because men weren't supposed to be saved," she said. "They each had a reason."

One man was honeymooning with his bride, Mrs. Ellis said. "He said his life was saved by his wife because she wouldn't leave him."

Mrs. Ellis said the other man told her he had been asked to go aboard to handle the craft.

Grim memories linger, too.

"Four survivors died on board, and we had four burials at sea," Mrs. Ellis said. Two female survivors who shared Mrs. Ellis' stateroom "never talked much. I don't remember their names. I think they were in shock."

After the Carpathia returned the survivors to New York, many of the passengers refused to reboard for the trip to Europe.

"And mother and I said, 'We've gone through that, we'll never experience anything like that again,'" Mrs. Ellis said. "We spent three months in Europe."

Robbery victim put on hold

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A gas station attendant who called police after a robber seriously injured a fellow employee was put on hold because emergency lines were busy.

"I couldn't get through at all," said Hudson Baines, 21, who moved to Los Angeles from Houston seven months ago. "My life was in danger, and this other guy was shot. I tried to get the police a couple of times, and I also tried through the operator. But I couldn't get through."

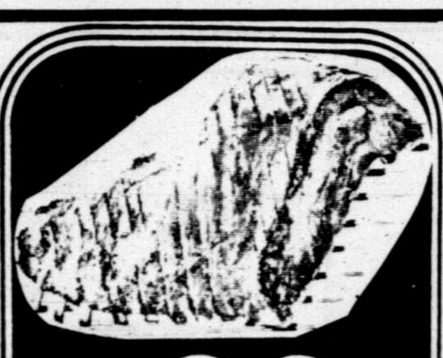

Baines said a robber burst into Arco truck stop where he works early Friday "and just started shooting." The gunman fled with about $235.

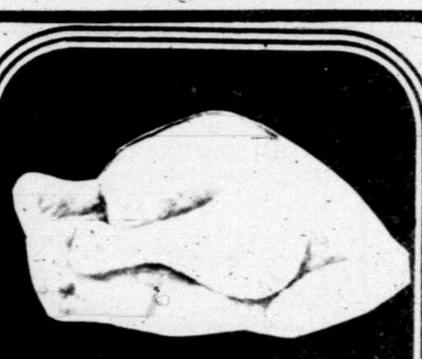

After his calls met only with a tape-recorded message asking him to hold the line, Baines ran upstairs to the office of a trucking company and an employee there managed to reach police.

Cashier Dionysio Jiminez, who has worked at the station for 15 years, was listed in very serious condition after undergoing surgery at Los Angeles County-USC Medical Center.

It was the second time this year Baines has been unable to reach police following a robbery. He encountered the same problem after two armed men raided the truck stop in February, but no one was injured.

Police have acknowledged they are having serious problems handling the flood of emergency calls — some 9,000 per day — and last week Police Chief Daryl Gates ordered the transfer of 37 officers to the communications division.

3-year-old boy needs second liver transplant

By MARCIA DUNN

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A tiny and delicate 3-year-old boy from Portland, Ore., probably will have to undergo a second liver transplant since the first operation was hampered by a missing artery and a damaged spleen, his mother says.

"They (doctors) asked for another donor just in case, so they can be ready," said Sharon Laughlin, whose son, Todd, remained in critical condition today at Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh.

Todd, who weighs only 14 pounds and is jaundiced, went into surgery at 10 p.m. Thursday. The operation lasted until 3:30 p.m. Friday, his mother said.

The second transplant will take place, if necessary, "as soon as they can get a donor," Mrs. Laughlin said. If it's determined Todd doesn't need another liver, which appears unlikely, there are two other children in line for the organ, she said.

Todd suffers from a genetic liver disease, alagille syndrome, which inhibits the absorption of food. Although he's wizened and cannot walk, he's alert, talks and has normal mental abilities.

Todd is "one of the smallest people" to undergo a liver transplant, said Pat Stephens, a nursing supervisor at the hospital. "His size is the significant thing," she said.

The boy and his mother flew to Pittsburgh five weeks ago to await a donor. James Laughlin, 40, a driver-salesman for Portland Fish Co., stayed behind as his wife and child left to be near the hospital.

The life-saving call announcing that a suitable donor had been found came Thursday. Soon afterward, surgery began, led by Dr. Thomas Starzl, the country's only physician with an experienced staff to perform liver transplants.

"It was such a long surgery, with problems developing in the donor liver. It wasn't functioning properly," said Mrs. Laughlin, who was joined by her husband and her parents at the hospital Friday evening.

Doctors told Mrs. Laughlin that Todd's hepatic artery had not developed properly. Twice, surgeons fashioned the artery from veins taken from Todd's thigh.

The physicians then shortened one of Todd's major veins and removed his damaged spleen, allowing the blood to flow more smoothly through the donor liver, Mrs. Laughlin said.

When Todd awoke following surgery, his mother explained to him that everything was fine.

"I just told him that mama was here and that he was going to be OK. And that I love him," said Mrs. Laughlin, 34.

Doctors predicted Todd, an only child, would live just 11 to 18 months when he was born. With a successful transplant operation, physicians expect he has an 80 percent chance of surviving at least another year.

Because of his size, a donor liver was needed from a newborn baby. Only three such donors were available to the hospital all of last year.

The donated liver came quicker than the family expected, according to Mrs. Laughlin.

Thursday, the day the hospital called, marked the Laughlins' fourth wedding anniversary.

"That was our anniversary present," Mrs. Laughlin said. "Now all we can do is wait."

Children get locked in steel safe

DIX HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — Two children spent an hour locked in an 800-pound steel safe in their Long Island home before being freed by a lock expert, police say. The children were not harmed.

During an Easter gathering of family and friends, George Hallock Jr., 17, accidentally shut the door to the safe while his 8-year-old sister, Melissa, and 3-year-old cousin, William Lemon, were playing inside, officials said.

The youth discovered he could not open the heavy door. His parents, Mary and George Hallock Sr., did not know the combination to the old Federal Reserve safe, recently purchased as a decorative item.

The children screamed at first but then calmed down, and talked with relatives through air holes in the door of the 3-foot-square safe, police said.

Rudy Vignola, a neighbor who was an employee of the DeVoe Safe Company, called a co-worker, John Hiney, 27, of Bohemia, N.Y., and the pair cracked the safe and freed the frightened children.

"I didn't know how I was going to get them out of there — I knew we couldn't use a torch, because it would have burned the kids," said George Hallock Sr.

Potheads and such can make the force

By ROBERT B. CULLEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — American police departments are finding they can't recruit new officers without overlooking some drug use in their pasts.

An Associated Press survey found that from the FBI on down, major police forces have relaxed their standards. Where once an applicant would be disqualified for any drug use, most departments now will take recruits who acknowledge having used marijuana and, in some cases, harder drugs.

None of the departments surveyed said it would accept current users.

"Ninety-three per cent of everybody who went to Vietnam smoked marijuana...My understanding is that 80 per cent of college students have used it. Should that keep them from ever getting a job?" said Denver police chief Art Dill.

Even the FBI, the elite of U.S. law enforcement agencies, has changed its standards, according to Roger Young, director of public affairs. The change came after the death of J. Edgar Hoover in 1974, he said.

"We found we were losing a lot of good applicants because they acknowledged having used drugs," Young said.

Now, the FBI will take a qualified applicant who admits having used marijuana on an "experimental" or "occasional social" basis, Young said. Once an applicant is admitted, he is forbidden to use any drugs, a policy adhered to by city police departments as well.

The FBI and local police often find out about applicants' drug use by administering lie detector tests.

"Without the polygraph, nobody would be (admitting) using drugs and we'd hire everyone. Most applicants say, no, they haven't used drugs, on their applications. Prior to the polygraph test, they'll usually admit more," said Lt. Bruce White, who investigates applicants for the Seattle police. White said such last-minute confessions do not in themselves disqualify candidates.

In San Francisco, even an applicant with a misdemeanor conviction for drug use is not disqualified from police work, according to Officer Linda Morris. She said San Francisco uses psychological tests, but not lie detectors, to screen applicants.

Philadelphia has a six-month cutoff. "We feel that if anyone is clean in the last six months, we can find that acceptable," said spokesman Don Fair.

Man pleads insanity in slaying his son as sacrifice to God

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Prosecutors say they will accept an insanity plea from a man accused of slaying his son because he believed God commanded the sacrifice, according to the judge in the case.

Rodney Lundberg, 26, was to have gone on trial in 1st District Court Monday on a charge of second-degree murder in the Nov. 23 stabbing death of his 11-month-old son, Justin.

But the prosecution called off the trial and requested a hearing, set for Monday morning.

A witness at Lundberg's preliminary hearing Jan. 27 said the defendant claimed the Holy Spirit had told him he should be willing to sacrifice his son and himself "to show his faith in God," as Abraham was with Isaac in the Old Testament.

Judge VeNoy Christofferson said prosecutors, in requesting the hearing, said that "in view of medical and psychiatric reports they would not resist the defense plea of innocent by reason of insanity."

If the court agrees to the prosecution motion, Lundberg will be sent to the Utah State Hospital in Provo for further examination, Christofferson said.

Lundberg's wife, LeeAnn, 25, was charged with obstruction of justice for allegedly concealing or altering physical evidence. Her preliminary hearing was delayed pending outcome of Lundberg's case.

Brent Allen, who lived in an apartment under the Lundbergs, said he and his wife were summoned by Mrs. Lundberg and saw blood on the clothing of Lundberg and his son.

The child was alive but appeared ill and had cuts on his neck and abdomen, Allen said.

Lundberg, who was studying to be a Mormon seminary teacher, kept insisting they pray the baby be brought back to life, Allen said.

"It did not sound like Rodney speaking," said Allen, adding he thought his neighbor was possessed by an evil spirit.

"I said a prayer commanding the evil spirit to leave him," Allen said.

John Wheeler of Nelson's Funeral Home testified the mortuary was led to believe the baby had died of Infant Death Syndrome, in which a child dies of uncertain causes while sleeping.

Berrigan, Ellsberg arrested in separate demonstrations

By The Associated Press

Two peace activists from the 1970s, Daniel Berrigan and Daniel Ellsberg, were arrested in separate demonstrations thousands of miles apart as hundreds of protesters marched in opposition to nuclear weapons.

Berrigan and 14 others were arrested Friday in New York after protesters threw lamb blood at the Riverside Research Center, a private research organization with some defense department contracts. Police spokesman Joe McConville said the charges included disorderly conduct and menacing.

Berrigan, who was active in protests against the Vietnam War, said the march and protest was held on Good Friday because "we believe nuclear weapons represent the second crucifixion. The arms race will lead to the crucifixion of humanity."

About 40 demonstrators, carrying an eight-foot wooden cross, an upside-down American flag and signs bearing Biblical verses, were met by dozens of police after their march from Columbia University. Most of the participants remained across the street from the center and read Bible verses as the arrests were made.

At the Nevada Test Site 70 miles northwest of Las Vegas, Ellsberg, who released secret documents on the Vietnam War, was arrested with 18 other protesters for trespassing after they entered the government property.

In Bangor, Wash., more than 400 anti-nuclear protesters turned out to march the first six miles with a dozen pilgrims on a 6,500-mile journey to Bethlehem in the Middle East. The trip started at the ammunition gate of the Navy's Trident submarine base. The pilgrims were blessed by Archbishop Raymond G. Hunthausen of Seattle.

"Nuclear weapons are in place around our earth, waiting like silent demons, to blow us back into the dark chaos unknown since the beginning of creation," he said.

Hunthausen asked that the pilgrims be blessed on their way across America, the Atlantic, through Europe and on to Bethlehem.

In the Upper Penninsula of Michigan, four clergy members and four others were arrested for trespassing when they carried a large wooden cross though the gates of K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base to protest the nuclear arms race, a spokeswoman for the demonstrators said.

The eight were part of a group of 40 people, calling themselves the Lenten Peace Community, that held a Good Friday prayer vigil outside the base's gate, said spokeswoman Mary Girard. They were arrested around noon Friday when they carried in the cross, she said.

In Westboro, Mass., six of about 40 people protesting spending for MX missiles were arrested for trespassing and five refused to post $15 bail each, police said.

The demonstration was held outside the GTE building, and the protesters, members of a group calling itself The Mustard Seed, said the company was involved in the manufacture of the missiles.

Man severs hand at wrist to save his life

BOSTON (AP) — Alone and bleeding profusely, Erwin Tarr struggled to free his mangled hand from a wood-splitter. Finally, in an act of desperation doctors say may have saved his life, he turned on the machine and cut off his left hand at the wrist.

"His quick thinking in severing the wrist may have saved him," said Dr. James W. May Jr., who led a Massachusetts General Hospital surgical team that reattached the hand of the 31-year-old Maine woodsman.

"If you cut partly into an artery the size of the radial or ulnar (two main arteries in the forearm) it will bleed profusely," said May. "But if you cut completely through the artery it will often go into a spasm and stop bleeding on its own."

Tarr lost the hand in a March 29 accident at Leeds, Maine, while operating a mechanical device for splitting wood. He left the hospital on Friday, and hospital officials released information on the incident Saturday.

Tarr, a father of four, said he was splitting wood on the 600-pound gas-powered machine for the Royal Community Action Ministry in Leeds, an organization that helps the needy, "when I suddenly felt this awful pain."

"At first it sounded like a crunch in my ears then I felt the pain in the wrist," he said. "I automatically let up on the handle which controlled the wood splitter, but I couldn't release my arm, even though I beat on it several times. I was bleeding terribly.

"I didn't know how deeply I had cut into the wrist, but I knew that the cut was deep enough so that I had to do something. I put the machine back into gear and finished cutting off the rest of the wrist.

"It was either cut the hand off to free myself...or just stand there and bleed to death."

May said Tarr's decision was the right one. "Mr. Tarr's wrist did stop bleeding because of the completion of the cut," he said.

Tarr ran to a nearby church, where a secretary applied a tourniquet and drove him to the Russell Medical Center in Leeds. A doctor at the center went back to the accident site and retrieved the hand.

Tarr was treated at the Central Maine Medical Center in Lewiston and rushed to Boston by ambulance. Five hours after the accident, he was in the MGH operating room, where a team of doctors reattached the hand in a 12-hour operation.

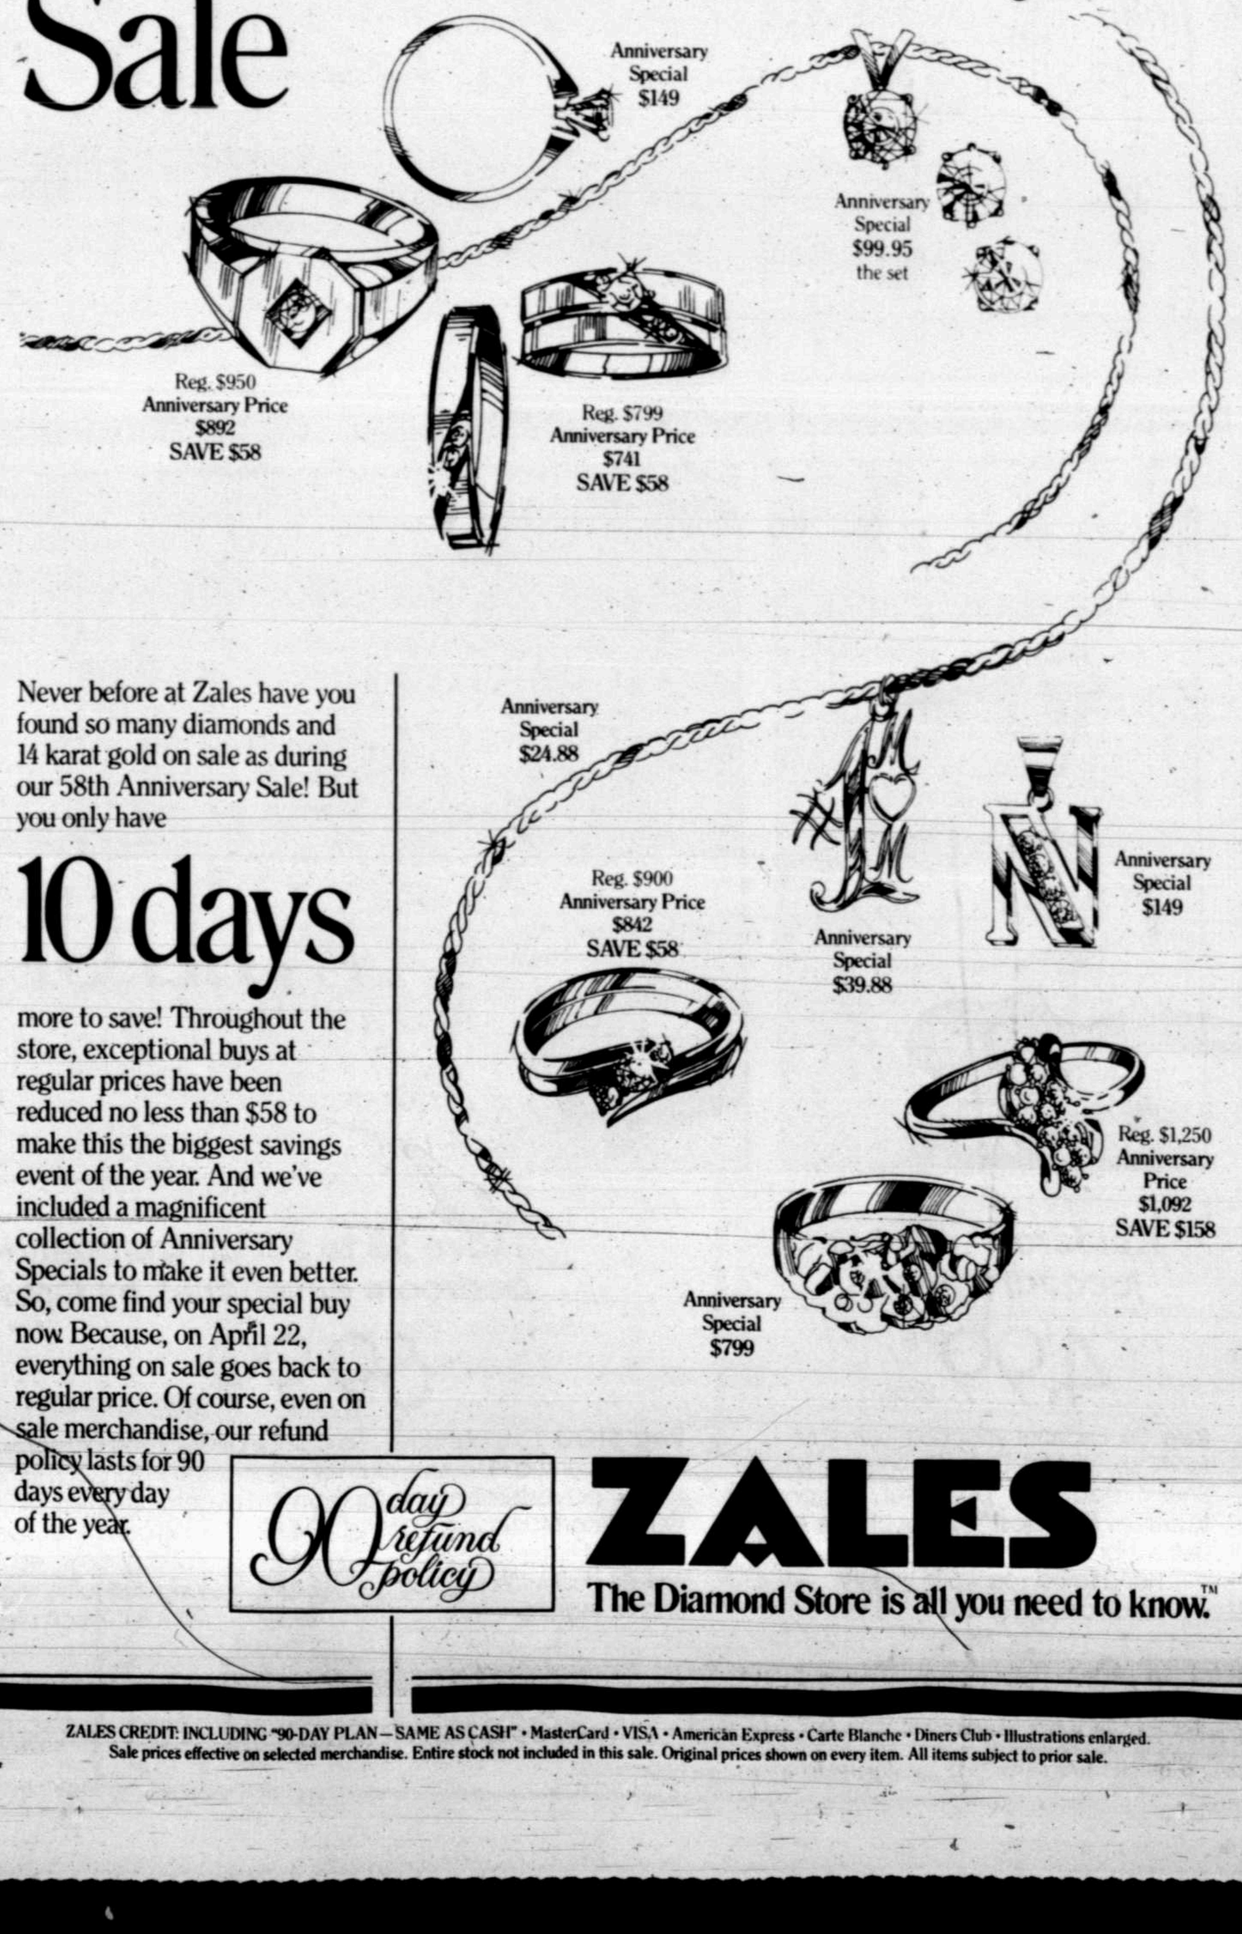

Throughout the ordeal, Tarr said he fought to remain conscious, telling himself, "Don't close your eyes. Don't lie down."

Doctors said they will not know for several months how much use Tarr will have of the hand. But Tarr was full of praise for his doctors.

"What can you say about someone who has given you your hand back," he said.

Most European press' pro-Britain

LONDON (AP) — Most major newspapers in Europe are backing Britain in the Falkland Islands crisis and calling Argentina the aggressor.

The exceptions are in Spain, which claims the British territory Gibraltar, and the Soviet Union, which has close economic ties to Argentina.

The independent French newspaper Le Monde warned the Argentines to "look reality in the face. Argentina is gravely isolated. The abstention in the Security Council of the Soviet Union, with whom Argentina has excellent economic relations, disappointed the Buenos Aires leaders, who expected to get all the Communist and non-aligned bloc votes.

"Their pretensions to put into effect their 'historic rights' to the Falklands are undoubtedly respectable. Their unilateral armed action has been almost universally condemned."

THE CONSERVATIVE FRENCH daily Le Figaro said the loss of the Falklands to Argentina could encourage a domino effect on all European possessions, including the French Mediterranean island of Corsica, where an independence movement is active.

"The hour has come to put into order our ideas and concepts of a world balance which is ceaselessly at the mercy of the initiatives of those who have no law but force," Le Figaro said.

"The red warning light of the Falklands has lit up in the glacial atmosphere of the Antarctic. Have no doubt that Washington and above all, Moscow, will find the means to blow hot and cold there, and if possible, to take advantage of the situation."

Italy's major conservative daily, Il Tempo of Rome, warned that "the crisis facilitates Soviet penetration of South America."

But the Soviet news agency Tass announced: "It is clear that Britain is responsible for the consequences of this reckless policy" in seeking to recapture the islands by force.

Spain's extreme rightist daily El Alcazar said, "It has been said that Argentina invaded the Falklands. There was no such invasion. The quick action carried out by Argentina has been nothing but rectification of an unbearable usurpation already lasting 149 years."

Spain's leading newspaper, the liberal El Pais, said "The United Kingdom must accept it is no longer the world power it was.

"Britons still think the arrival of some warships flying (Her Majesty's) flag will be enough to put the invader to flight. But that is not so likely, no matter what international pressure is put on Argentina."

WEST GERMANY'S INDEPENDENT Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung advised the Argentine government "not to overdo it."

"It is difficult to see who still has a chance to withdraw which leaves him — or when thinking about Mrs. (Prime Minister Margaret) Thatcher, her — without fatal loss of face when getting out of the deadlock," it noted.

In London, The Financial Times said "The financial markets may yet have the last word. Already this week they have demonstrated the vulnerability of the whole of the (British) government's economic policies to the Argentinian imbroglio...The confidence of the financial markets can be an ally as powerful as any navy. But confidence, like warships, can be torpedoed."

In Africa, the Daily Nation of Nairobi, Kenya's leading independent newspaper, also looked at the economic aspects of the crisis.

"It is probably the prospect of oil reserves, reported(ly) more than there is in the North Sea, that precipitated the Argentine invasion — a move that has met with worldwide criticism. The consensus appears to be that the dispute should be resolved through diplomatic means.

"That would probably have been a wise course for Argentina to follow. As the matter stands, Britain is now not likely to settle for anything less than total withdrawal of Argentine troops, a loss of face that President (Leopoldo) Galtieri cannot afford any more than he can afford a British victory."

In newly independent Zimbabwe, the government-controlled Salisbury Herald said, "The colonialist intentions of both Argentina and Britain and the weakness of their prey must not be allowed to cloud the right of the Falkland islanders to choose which master to serve — if they do not desire immediate independence.

"It is to be hoped that diplomacy will prevail over militarism in this sad affair."

British say they won't use nuclear weapons

LONDON (AP) — A controversy over nuclear depth charges and the potential of civilian casualties erupted as Britain's armada steamed toward the Falkland Islands to back up a war zone declaration effective midnight Sunday.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was working against the deadline in talks in Buenos Aires, where an estimated 300,000 people demonstrated in favor of Argentina's seizure of the Falklands — a tiny British colony in the South Atlantic some 250 miles east of Argentina's southern tip.

British press reports said helicopters aboard the armada's lead carrier Invincible were armed with anti-submarine nuclear depth charges, a new type of weapon about which little was known. But the Daily Mirror said "the Cabinet has no intention to allow commanders to use these weapons off the Falklands."

The Mirror's defense correspondent, Ellis Plaice, said the Invincible "carries the weapons because she is kept ready for action should a much wider conflict break out." But he reported that there would not be an actual nuclear detonation if the Invincible was attacked by the Argentines. He said, "even if the nuclear weapons are blown up or sunk, they could not explode because they have to be armed first."

THE BRITISH DEFENSE Ministry refused to comment on the possible presence of nuclear weapons aboard any of the vessels in the 40-ship British armada, now reported somewhere off the West African coast. Prince Andrew, 22-year-old son of Queen Elizabeth II, is a helicopter pilot aboard the Invincible.

There also were conflicting reports as to whether the 1,800 islanders — mostly British but also reported to include 21 Americans — would welcome the British military force. The Foreign Office confirmed it was studying a letter signed by the islands' top civil servants that urges civilians be evacuated before any shooting starts.

The conservative Daily Mail reported the letter had "deeply embarrassed" Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government. Other newspapers carried telephone interviews with islanders who expressed fears that residents would suffer most from any invasion.

However, one message to the British armada urged: "Onward Christian Soldiers," according to Paul Frow, the islanders' spokesman here. He said the message was sent from an islander and relayed to the armada commander, Rear Adm. John Woodward, aboard the aircraft carrier Hermes.

In Brussels, the Common Market decided to boycott Argentine goods because of the Falklands' seizure. Argentina's exports to the 10 Common Market nations were close to $1.6 billion in 1980, the latest year for which figures were available.

MOST OF THE BRITISH ships were nine days away from the Falklands. But at least one British hunter-killer submarine was believed in the area, ready to enforce Defense Secretary John Nott's proclamation of a 200-mile war zone in the islands beginning midnight Sunday — 11 p.m. EST.

Nott said Britain would fire first at any Argentine vessel within the "Maritime Exclusion Zone," rather than let them resupply the force with which Argentina seized the British-ruled islands April 2.

Nicaragua seems willing to deal, if Mexico included

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Although Nicaragua has made no formal response to a new U.S. plan to normalize relations, there are indications that the Sandinistas are willing to negotiate if Mexico plays a key role in the talks.

"The important thing is to seek peace and stability, even if it means direct talks," junta member Sergio Ramirez Mercadoat told The Associated Press last week before the U.S. plan was revealed Thursday. "But we want to do everything within the Mexican framework for peace."

THE EIGHT-POINT plan was presented in Managua by U.S. Ambassador Anthony Quainton as part of a months-long U.S. effort to get a dialogue going between the two estranged governments.

According to sources here, the United States wants direct talks with the ruling Sandinista government. But Ramirez, one of three junta members, made it clear that Nicaragua wants to use Mexico as a "communicator."

Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo has been a staunch friend of the leftist government. He earlier proposed a non-aggression pact between the United States and Nicaragua and offered to host any negotiations.

"We are willing to discuss all issues," said Ramirez. "But our main concern is the safety of our borders and a U.S. commitment that it will not sponsor any attacks against us."

A State Department official, who released the plan in Washington on Thursday and who asked not to be named, said the plan goes further toward addressing Nicaragua's "stated fears" that the United States might intervene militarily.

No one expects the talks to produce immediate results, said a diplomatic source, who asked not to be named. "But once you begin to talk, you are identifying troublesome areas and you may make some moves to seek solutions."

The source said the two countries are "as far apart as they have ever been. The talks will be long and difficult."

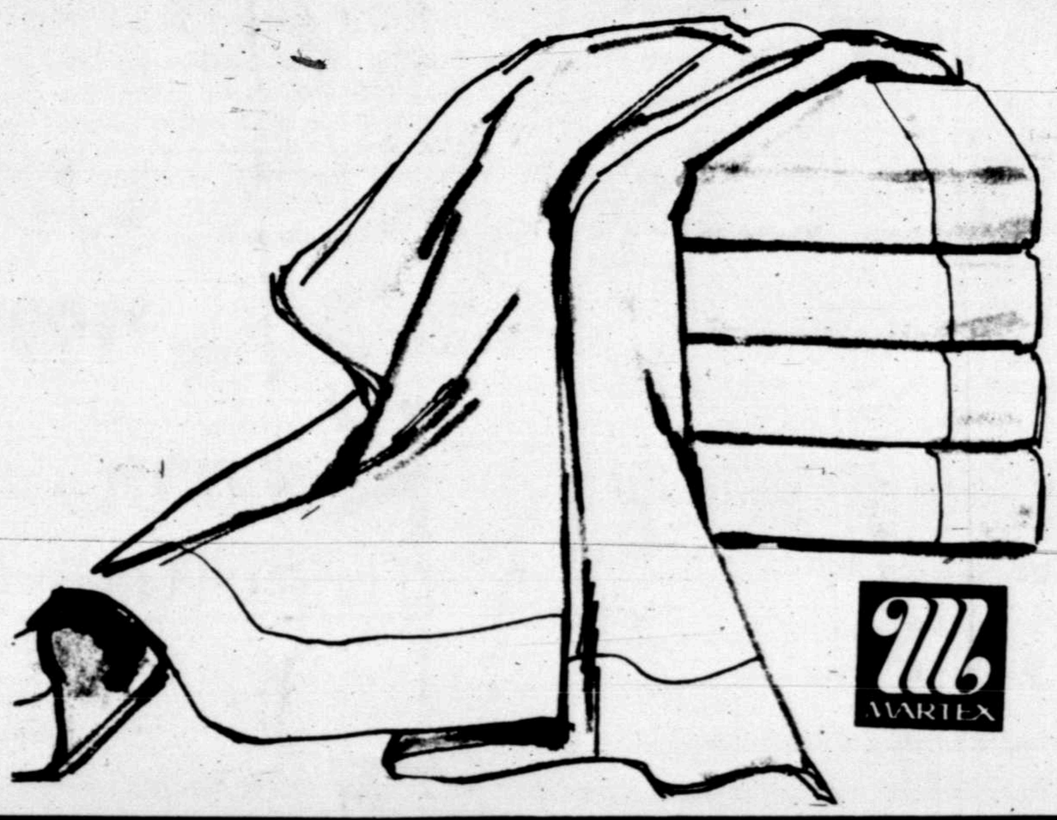

The U.S. proposal included the possible resumption of economic aid to Nicaragua by the United States and, as a source put it, "the possibility of doing something about the Florida camps," where opponents of the Nicaraguan regime train guerrilla groups.

Before U.S. economic assistance was cut off at the beginning of the Reagan administration, Congress had approved a $75 million aid package.

world in brief

Pope announces Hungarian changes

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday named four new Hungarian bishops and promoted a fifth to Archbishop, Vatican officials reported.

No reason was given for the shake-up in Hungary's Roman Catholic Church hierarchy. The appointments followed a week-long visit to Budapest by Archbishop Luigi Possi, the Polish-born pope's envoy for Eastern Europe.

In Budapest, the Communist Hungarian government announced "preliminary approval" of the five appointments and the retirement of one bishop.

China requests softball venue change

PEKING (AP) — China demanded Saturday that the Women's World Softball Tournament be moved from Taiwan because the Nationalist Chinese government on the island insists on flying its flag and playing its anthem.

The Communist leadership on the mainland claims Taiwan as an integral part of China answerable to Peking.

The official Xinhua news agency said the China Softball Association called for the change of venue in a message sent Saturday to Don Porter, secretary-general of the International Softball Association in Oklahoma City, Okla. The tournament is scheduled for July.

Counterfeit ring members arrested

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Police arrested six alleged members of a counterfeit currency ring and confiscated the equivalent of $8.3 million in fake bank notes, authorities said Saturday.

The arrests were made in Johore Bahru, 155 miles south of the Malaysian capital, they said. Johore police chief S. Kulasingham told reporters the counterfeit operation was discovered in a printing factory that had been closed since April 7.

Fighting students sentenced to jail

HYDERABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A Pakistan court sentenced four university students to a year's imprisonment and five lashes apiece on charges of attacking members of a rival student group, the government announced Saturday.

Police sources said the four defendants belonged to a leftist student federation that was quarreling with the fundamentalist Islamic students organization. An armed clash between the two groups on Hyderabad University campus last March left several of the fundamentalists injured.

Communist party heads talk policy

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — President Nicole Ceausescu conferred Saturday with Spain's Communist Party chief, Santiago Carillo, the state news agency Agerpres reported.

Ceausescu, who also heads Romania's Communist Party, is the only Soviet bloc leader maintaining good relations with Carillo's "Eurocommunists," who pursue policies independent of Kremlin direction.

Agerpres said the two leaders expressed their "full satisfaction" with their parties' "close friendship and cooperation" and called for resuming the world "course of detente." It also said they voiced concern about the "policy of force and dictate, of domination and oppression, of maintaining and developing of spheres of influence."

Over 1,000 Ugandan civilians arrested

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Ugandan security forces arrested about 1,000 civilians Saturday around Kampala and wounded some, witnesses in the Ugandan capital said.

It was the third mass detention in a month ordered by President Milton Obote in an effort to quell anti-government guerrillas.

Ugandan sources reached by telephone from Nairobi said there was shooting in the suburb of Bwaise near Mulago Hospital between 5 a.m. and 8:30 a.m.

A few hours later, trucks loaded with an estimated 1,000 civilians, many of them bleeding and apparently beaten, were seen heading along the road to Entebbe, they said.

In mid-March, Ugandan authorities detained thousands of civilians — mostly men between the ages of 15 and 35 — in the wake of a mortar attack Feb. 23 on Kampala's Malire Barracks. The government claimed 67 guerrillas and five soldiers were killed in the attack.

Possible attack worries Lebanon, PLO

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese government today urged the United States to pressure Israel into dropping possible plans to invade Lebanon, and Palestinian guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat predicted an Israeli attack within 48 hours.

In Israel, a government spokesman said the guerrillas "have good reason for their panic and hysteria." White House spokesman Larry Speakes, with President Reagan on his Caribbean vacations, said the U.S. government was appealing to all sides "for the utmost restraint."

Lebanese President Elias Sarkis summoned U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon to request American "assurances and guarantees" that Israel would not invade, a government spokesman said. Sarkis met separately with Soviet Ambassador Alexander Soldatov.

Soldatov said afterward, "The president called me to exchange views about the very grave situation in southern Lebanon arising from warlike statements made in public recently by Israeli leaders, which we vehemently condemn."

THE LEBANESE GOVERNMENT spokesman, who declined to be named in accordance with government policy, said Dillon was told Israel has massed two armored divisions with 40,000 troops on southern Lebanon's border, poised for an imminent attack.

"The president has conveyed to the U.S. government Lebanon's concern over the Israeli buildup and sought assurances that the United States government will urgently intervene to curb Israel," the spokesman said.

Dillon, asked by a reporter whether the situation was dangerous, said: "Yes it's dangerous, but as I said we are doing our best to see that the cease-fire is maintained." He said the Reagan administration was in constant touch with Israel and other states in the area to save the truce.

In Bridgetown, Barbados, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said, "We renew our appeal for all those involved in the region to show the utmost restraint. This is a time for maximum caution..." President Reagan was on vacation in the Caribbean and Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was in Buenos Aires trying to defuse the Falklands crisis between Argentina and Britain.

In Tel Aviv, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's spokesman said that Palestinian guerrillas "have good reason for their panic and hysteria" over the threat of an Israeli raid into Lebanon.

However, spokesman Uri Porat declined to comment directly on claims by the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Lebanese government — plus fears voiced by U.S. officials — that Israel was about to mount an invasion.

Porat told The Associated Press that "if they (the PLO) are panicking, they have good reason."

Asked to elaborate, he listed a series of incidents which he believed gave the PLO grounds for fearing Israeli retaliation: the murder of an Israeli diplomat in Paris a week ago, a bomb in a kindergarten near Tel Aviv that was disarmed just before it was to explode, the killing of two Israeli soldiers during a spate of Palestinian violence in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip last month, a guerrilla infiltration from Jordan two months ago and another attempted infiltration from Lebanon March 24.

He said all these actions were perpetrated by the PLO.

LEBANON'S STATE radio said the government received reports from southern Lebanon that an Israeli submarine and warship, with an escort of gunboats, were patrolling the southern Lebanese Mediterranean coast along a 25-mile stretch between the ports of Sidon and Tyre.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said the PLO had distributed arms to all able-bodied men in the area. "Even vegetable peddlers in Tyre and adjacent villages are carrying submachine guns as they go about their business," the radio said.

Palestine Liberation Organization sources at Arafat's headquarters here confirmed newspaper reports that the guerrilla chief warned Israel would invade southern Lebanon and bomb Beirut within 48 hours in an attempt to crush the PLO.

Lebanese take attack possibility in stride

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The war-hardened residents of Lebanon are so used to senseless bloodshed that they barely took notice of reports Saturday that Israel was poised to invade.

"If they attack, what can we do?" asked Maria Jahel, a homemaker, as she shopped on a crowded streed in Moslem-controlled West Beirut. "It is Easter. Have fun. Go to the beach."

Asked if he feared Israeli jets, shoe store owner Ali Mustapha replied, "I'll worry about it when they get here."

Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat claimed Israel was planning to attack by Monday in an attempt to wipe out the estimated 15,000 PLO guerrillas in Lebanon.

The Lebanese government in Beirut said Israel had moved about 40,000 troops to its northern border with Lebanon.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's spokesman said PLO guerrillas have "good reason for their panic and hysteria" over a possible Israeli attack.

An Israeli attack would end a truce negotiated last July after two weeks of heavy fighting between the PLO and Israel, including an Israeli bombing of Beirut that killed an estimated 300 people.

Brutal violence has become so common here since the 1975-76 civil war that the Lebanese prepared for a possible air raid Saturday the way citizens in other nations might calmly dig in for a spell of nasty weather.

Smartly dressed matrons added "extra candles" to the shopping lists they handed to their servants. Homeowners stocked up on flashlight batteries, canned foods, bread and water, whiskey and beer, and even home video cassettes.

At one videotape club, the manager gave customers extra films at no additional charge, saying, "You might have to stay at home for a few days."

Motorists all over the country lined up to top off their gasoline tanks and fill up cans of spare fuel. Israeli air attacks last summer damaged Lebanon's two small oil refineries, creating widespread gasoline shortages.

Key staffers at the American Embassy missed their usual weekend break and worked Saturday despite the Easter holiday.

American Ambassador Robert S. Dillon held two meetings with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis, who reportedly urged the United States to rein in the Israelis.

Almost every adult male near the PLO's headquarters in southern Beirut was armed with a submachine gun or automatic pistol Saturday.

Elsewhere in the capital, however, courting couples strolled hand-in-hand, youths raced their motorcycles through the streets and amateur fishermen cast off lines into the sunlit sea, oblivious to the attack warning.

Greece hit by quake

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A strong earthquake measuring 5.5 on the Richter scale of motion rocked northeastern Greece Saturday, but there were no immediate reports of damage or casualties.

The Athens Seismological Institute said the tremor occurred at 7:51 a.m. local time (11:51 p.m. EST Friday) and was centered 187 miles northeast of the capital. The quake was felt in the town of Kavala and the Aegean island of Thassos, the institute said.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. A reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage, 4 moderate damage, 5 considerable damage, 6 severe damage.

Electric, gas bills may take a hike

The cooling relief offered by an air conditioner in the hot summer months can be a blow to your finances. The costs of cooling your residence are increasing each year because, according to utility companies, the price of fuel used to produce energy is increasing.

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The last rate increase by Energas Co. came in December 1981.

The last rate increase by Texas Electric Service Co. (TESCO) was October 1980.

Yet even though their rates have not increased, the price of fuel used to produce energy has.

During the coming warm-weather months, Midland customers can look forward to higher electric and gas bills than they have had in past summers.

Energas customers may pay 20 to 22 percent more this summer for the same amount of gas they used last year. TESCO customers may pay anywhere from $5 to $14 more on their monthly bills for the same amount of kilowatt hours run through their electric meters. Unless customers cut back on the amount of gas and electricity they use, the bills will increase.

"It's the increase in the cost of fuel that has made the bills higher," Sara St. Clair, of the TESCO customer service department, said. "We're paying more to make electricity. We're paying for all the fuel increases and that is really the basic reason the bills are increasing."

PRESENTLY THE cost of fuel is about half of a customer's electric bill. Aboutone-fifth of a customer's bill consisted of fuel cost two years ago.

According to Mrs. St. Clair, TESCO had been purchasing natural gas, one of the major fuels used to generate power to produce electricity, through long-term contracts until the last major contract expired Jan. 1, 1982.

"In 1975, we were sitting in Midland with still fairly low electric bills compared to other parts of Texas and the reason that was true was because we had those long-term contracts," she explained. "So we were able to put off the higher fuel cost for a longer time."

The price of natural gas has increased 30 percent since 1949. In 1975, the cost of natural gas was 40 cents per million British thermal units (Btu), which is a measure of heat produced when burning fuel to generate electricity. In 1981, natural gas cost $2.46 per million Btu.

"IF THE AVERAGE was 40 cents, then that was a lot lower than people were paying for natural gas in the market," she said. "But when we had these 20-year contracts that ran out we were suddenly buying a large portion of our gas at a high price."

Mrs. St. Clair said efforts were made to move away from the dependency on natural gas to the less expensive lignite coal while under the long-term contracts.

"The first year lignite coal was used (by TESCO) was in 1971, and that year the cost of lignite ran about 22 cents per Btu (British thermal unit)," she said. "So along with natural gas prices, the lignite prices are going up — but they're not quite as extreme."

By 1978, the cost of lignite had increased to 49 cents per Btu. By the end of 1981, the price was up to 81 cents per Btu.

"It's just gradually escalating and this is due to several factors along with the cost of inflation, the cost of getting the lignite and obtaining the leaes for the lignite," she explained. "Also, a good bit of the lignite is deeper that we're mining now. In the beginning, in 1971, when we started our first lignite mine, we used the lignite that was the easiest to mine, the closest to the plant, the easiest to get to, the larger seams."

TODAY, 50 PERCENT of the fuel used by TESCO is lignite, but it won't always be that way.

"By 1985, we'll have our nuclear plant. And when the nuclear plant comes in use, we'll be talking about fuel called uranium which will be even cheaper than lignite."

The projected cost for uranium by 1986 is about 65 cents per Btu.

But electricity customers are not billed by the Btu; they are billed by the kilowatt hour. And if a customer uses the same amount of kilowatt hours this summer as he did last summer, his electricity bill is going to be higher.

The price per kilowatt hours was less than one cent at the end of 1980. This month, the price is 2.68 cents. Mrs. St. Clair said the price is expected to reach 3 cents per kilowatt hour over the next three months.

According to Mrs. St. Clair, if a person uses 500 kilowatt hours, he can expect an increase of $5. If a person uses 750 kilowatt hours, his bill will increase $7.50; 1,000 kilowatt hours, $10; 1,200 kilowatt hours, $12.50; and 1,400 kilowatt hours, $14.

ENERGAS CUSTOMERS are not billed by kilowatt hours. According to Lavon Pagett, division marketing manager, cost is measured per thousand cubic feet of gas, (MCF).

Pagett said the cost of fuel or the "cost of gas adjustment," which is the terminology used by Energas, fluctuates. "The way it is figured at Energas is the extra amount over the base rate that it costs us to get the fuel," he explained.

Domestic gas cost: customers $3.30 per MCF one year ago. The current cost is $4.03 per MCF.

"Gas costs the same for any sized unit," Pagett said. "But customers have different sized units.

"If they use the same number of MCF's this summer, then they'll be paying 20 to 22 percent more for the gas they use," he said, adding that the average amount of "hours of operation" is 1,600.

Pagett said that a fair projected increase would be approximately three cents per MCF per month. "And that will probably be true for the next six months," he said.

ONE OF THE ways to cut down on the cost of operating air conditioners mentioned by both Mrs. St. Clair and Pagett is to raise the thermostat to 78 degrees or higher.

Mrs. St. Clair said that every degree the thermostat is turned down from the suggested 78 degrees causes the unit to use about 5 percent more energy. Pagett cited an 8 percent increase in operating cost when the thermostat is lowered to 77 degrees.

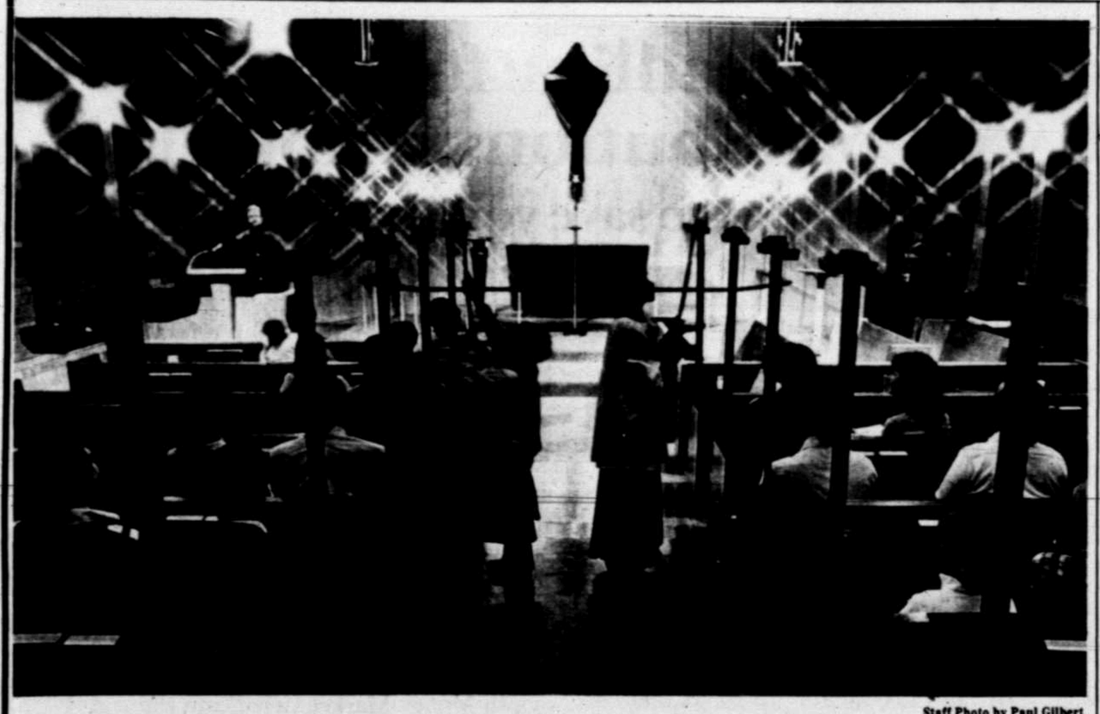

Using a fan will help cut costs only if the thermostat is raised, Mrs. St. Clair said.

"If you just run the fan with your air conditioning, it won't make it run any less," she said. "You should raise the thermostat on your air conditioner and let the fan compensate for that."

Other ways to fight the increase include turning the unit off when no one is at home, making sure windows and doors are closed, keeping the filters and other parts of the unit clean, and adding insulation to the house.

"If people will practice some of these no-cost practices that are of no expense to them, it will help them fight these higher costs of fuel," Pagett said.

"You're going to pay for everything that goes through that meter," Mrs. St. Clair agreed. "And if you can do something to get more out of what goes through it, you'll save."

Acolytes stand before the candles of the Tenebrae, a Good Friday service held at Hope Lutheran Church which symbolically re-created the drama and horror of the day of the crucifixion.

'Tenebrae' recreates drama

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

But for a single candle left to flicker at the altar, the worshippers are plunged into darkness as utter and complete as that which must have consumed the followers of Jesus when they saw their Lord crucified on a hill they believed Him to have created.

It is the service of tenebrae, a symbolic re-creation of the drama the first Good Friday must have held for those who shared it. From the Latin word for "darkness," tenebrae originated in the Fourth Century A.D. as a communion service to impress upon believers the magnitude of Christ's ultimate sacrifice for humanity's self-imposed separateness from God. And for the members and guests of Hope Lutheran Church Friday evening, that most esoteric and supernatural of events came alive in readings, choral singing, crashing cymbals and the extinguishing of a series of candles.

Through the aisle of the sanctuary the large flaming candle with a cross the color of blood emblazoned thereon is ushered toward the altar as the fires of 18 smaller candles loom on either side like a gauntlet of raised swords. Beneath the veiled crucifix capped by a crown of thorns it finds rest, and quietly the choir begins its reverent plea to the Almighty.

"Oh Christ, thou Lamb of God, that takest away the sin of the world, have mercy upon us...Grant us thy peace."

THE VOICES dim to a hush; the people kneel; pastor David Baker prays: "Send Your Holy Spirit to enlighten us, to lead us to see and to remember always that Jesus was on the cross in our place, that He suffered so that we would not have to die for our sins."

The congregation rises, and an old Negro spiritual booms out.

"Were you there
when they crucified my Lord?
Were you there
when they crucified my Lord?
Sometimes it causes me to tremble, tremble, tremble.
Were you there
when they crucified my Lord?"

From one side of the altar, The Rev. Baker's voice reflects quietly. "Just suppose you did not know the story of Jesus Christ and were to see a picture of Him hanging on the cross between two criminals. You would probably wonder, Was Jesus such a wicked man? The people must really have hated Him! Otherwise, why would they want Him to die in this shameful way, by brutal crucifixion on a cross?"

And he blasts the religious leaders of the day who indeed held animosity toward this obscure carpenter from Nazareth. "They hated Him because His goodness made their own wickedness and sin appear so much blacker," he says. "So Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was swept up by their web of treachery and sin and was directed toward His ultimate death upon a cross."

A READER FROM the choir amplifies his words, and recalls the symbolism of the Last Supper in the upper room. "Just as the Passover lamb was sacrificed, so He, Jesus, would likewise give His very own life," she quotes. "His blood would save the world from eternal death. And so that the disciples would never forget this, Jesus gave them bread to eat and said, 'This is My body.' He also gave them wine to drink and said, 'This is My blood.'"

Jesus of Nazareth, she says, was now ready to begin His greatest work. He and His disciples left the upper room, crossed the trickling stream of Kidron outside the city gates, and moved up the gentle rise to the Garden of Gethsemene.

The song which follows examines the betrayal of Jesus, questions

Midland's 'Pet Nanny' turning love of pets into money-making business

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The slow-moving basset hound which greeted the doorbell-ringer with several loud thump-thumps of his tail was the first indication that his owner is a pet lover.

Then in strolled Clara, the Manx cat.

To their "mother," this household has always included at least one cat and one dog.

But it typifies the woman who decided to turn her love of pets into a sideline business, known as "Pet Nanny." It also shows on her brochures which instruct interested persons to call 685-1914 "for additional information and references (both human and four-footed)."

Ann O'Leary, an energetic woman with a sparkling smile, has initiated a "one of a kind" business that lets her utilize her free time as she pleases and yet allows her to make some money while doing something she enjoys.

She moved to Midland two years ago from Winter Park, Fla., with her banker-husband and four children, of which the two youngest boys are twins. The oldest youngster is in college and the next in line is a senior in high school and preparing for college.

Mrs. O'Leary explained that the household of dogs and cats began soon after she was married. A few years ago, the family had to put to sleep its 14-year-old dog, who was suffering from severe heart problems. And an 18½-year-old cat, who was the dog's partner until his death, died last May. In fact, noted Mrs. O'Leary, after the dog died the cat snubbed the family for having its "playmate" since kittenhood put to sleep. The loss of its friend hastened its death, she surmised.

THE BUSINESS "all stems out of these old animals. You can't put these old animals in a kennel" when the family needs to leave town. "You hate to ask a neighbor to take care of them. We felt we were imposing on them (neighbors) if it was for more than two to three days," Mrs. O'Leary said.

Explaining further, she noted that older animals "don't do well away from a home environment."

"I love animals and have always had a good rapport with them," she said, interrupting her thoughts to give a warning look to Pax, the basset hound who was eyeing a chair as his next resting place. "Forget it, Charlie," she said in an icy voice, and Pax dropped slowly onto the carpet for his nap.

Before kicking off her business, Mrs. O'Leary discussed the idea with many of the veterinarians in Midland, and "they were delighted," she recalled.

The business began last fall, and she calls it "Midland's personalized pet care service that visits your pet at home while you're away."

BASIC DAILY FEE schedule is $9 a day and that covers one visit per day with all basic services provided.

"Basic services" vary with each household and its pets, she said.

In addition to feeding and watering the pet, it may include exercising it, taking it a treat, giving it necessary medication, watering plants, picking up the mail and newspaper and turning off or on the lights. "Whatever basic services you want, I'll do it," she said.

"I spend about 30 minutes in a home, unless there's more than one animal. It takes at least 20 minutes to give them the proper care," she said.

Mrs. O'Leary reserves the right to refuse any client. "I make an initial visit on every new client to make sure I can get along with the animal. I do turn down clients if we don't hit it off."

If the animal is vicious that first time and fails to calm down, she said, the animal probably won't be any better toward her with the owner absent.

While Clara the cat watches, Pax the basset hound gets his daily dose of food and love from Ann O'Leary who started the business of Pet Nanny in Midland last fall. She gives personal service to the pets whose "parents" are out of town.

Also during that first visit, Mrs. O'Leary picks up the animal's routine — what kind of food, does it take water or milk on the food, how much food, what medication and when it should be given and veterinarian's name and phone number in case of an emergency."

There is a "slight additional charge" for extra visits, for exercising more than one dog or for the caring of three or more pets. And special arrangements are available for engagements in excess of 10 days.

She also has become the Midland-Odessa agent for Air Animal, which is based in Florida and can ship animals throughout the world.

But Mrs. O'Leary doesn't abide by her own rules on a strict basis. "If I feel an animal needs a little something extra, like if it's extra lonely or needs to go outside more, I'll go back and do it."

RECALLING THE TIME she watched over a Labrador Retriever when his "parents" were gone, she added with a whether the burden of blame should be assigned Judas, Peter, the disciples who deserted, or every man who has trodden the world:

"'Who was the guilty?
Who brought this upon Thee?
Alas, my treason, Jesus, hath undone Thee.
'Twas I, Lord Jesus.
It was who denied thee;
I crucified thee."

Within Gethsemene, continues the reader, Jesus asked His disciples to remain awake and devote themselves to fervent prayer. They did not. Sleep was more inviting, their physical needs easier to succumb to than the words of their Master.

"JESUS KNELT to pray," says the reader. "He needed to pray. He knew that doing the work His father in Heaven intended for Him would be very hard. He knew it would hurt terribly. He could almost feel the pain already — the pain of the whip, the thorns, the nails. But that did not bother Jesus nearly so much as feeling the punishment for sin. This was awful — to be torn apart from His father in Heaven while suffering for our sins.

"Having said His 'Amen,' and 'Father, Thy will be done,' Jesus concluded His prayer. Now he stood alone, the sinless son of God, ready to face those who hated him."

From out of the shadows of the night, says the reader, Judas emerged with a mob at his heels, and betrayed his Lord with a kiss.

"But Judas was not the only disciple who had forsaken the Master," she cries. "You and I have likewise often betrayed our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. None of us is one bit better than any of these disciples, yes, even including Judas the traitor."

And again the words of a hymn pierce soul and conscience:

"How art Thou pale with anguish, with sore abuse and scorn;
How does that visage languish which once was bright as morn!
Thy grief and bitter passion were all for sinners' gain;
Mine, mine was the transgression,
but Thine the deadly pain."

THE READER details the trials of Jesus: before Caiaphas, Annas, Pilate; the torture by scourging; the mockery by the crowning of Him with thorns. "When the soldiers finally brought Jesus out onto the porch," she quotes, "Pilate felt sure the people would be satisfied. He pointed to Jesus and said, 'Behold the man!' But Jesus' enemies were not satisfied. They shouted in a chorus, 'Away with Him! Crucify Him!'"

And, says the Rev. Baker, the Roman soldiers fastened Jesus to His cross by driving sharp nails through His hands and feet.

The first words of Jesus as he looked out over the throng which had crucified Him emerge from the shadows of the sanctuary:

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Cymbals clash, and a reader reflects on the statement. "Even while we are His enemies, He loves us and wants us to have forgiveness."

A bell tolls quietly three times — and darkness creeps slowly toward the altar, the acolytes snuffing out the flames, leaving three points of blackness on each side of the aisle where once light had reigned.

THE READER continues. "One of the criminals had joined in with the mockers and made fun of Jesus," she says. "But the other scolded him for it. Then he turned to Jesus and said, 'Lord, remember me when You come into Your kingdom.'"

Again the shadows of the sanctuary explode with Jesus' words: "Today you shall be with Me in Paradise."

Cymbals thunder. The bell tolls. The acoyltes extinguish six more candles, and the darkness begins to rule.

Woman, Mother, behold thy son!" quotes a voice from the shadows. "And to John, Behold thy mother!"

The sanctuary dims; the candles growing more faint before the onslaught of Stygian night.

And the mood is one that those at the Crucifixion must have felt as a mysterious and inexplicable darkness swept over the countryside from noon until three that afternoon. And like that most fearful and metaphysical cry that echoed from the cross, the blackness of the sanctuary suddenly yields the words: "My God, my God, why have You forsaken me?"

"HE WAS ALONE with our sin, with all the world's sin," says the reader. But she goes on to explain that because He bore mankind's sins, we no longer need feel forsaken by God. "Even in the darkness of death when we seem to be all alone, separated from the people who love us — even then we are not alone. God is with us. Jesus is at our side."

And like death overwhelming a person's being, the darkness creeps closer to the altar.

"I thirst," quotes a voice.

"It is finished!" comes the cry.

"Father, into Your hand I commit My spirit," echoes the prayer.

Cymbals boom; the bell tolls; the candles fade into darkness thick and swirling like the bowels of a tomb. Silence reigns. Eyes become fixed on the altar's single candle; it remains steadfast, never dimming, refusing to yield to the powers of the night. The crimson cross on its face flares, grows brighter, stronger before the blackness which surrounds.

And as an acolyte ushers it up the aisle, through the double doors and into the world, the believers arise and follow its light through the darkness.

POSITIVE THINKING

Successful person able to rebound from disaster

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

What is success? Who is a successful person? Is it still okay to become successful in America? Or is it the "in" thing to spend your life "finding yourself?"

The traditional Horatio Alger saga was an American "rags to riches" story. Later on the success emphasis was to be a V.I.P. or get your name in the paper, or perhaps to be sought after for autographs.

Well, it is not for me to pose as an authority on this subject but I see nothing reprehensible in making some money when done honestly, hurting no one in the process. It makes for self respect and lends a creative factor in the community. It is certainly no sin to have money unless perhaps money has you, which is something else again.

Nor is there anything bad about acquiring a reputation provided it is a decent one. But if one gets to feeding on adulation, he or she can become what is generally referred to as a pain-in-the-neck. But when an outgoing, sincere person achieves something well deserving of applause and is motivated by public service then, of course, fame and honor are just rewards and success is fairly earned.

I think of my life long friend, Sammy Kaufman. The Kaufmans and one other were the only Jewish families in the small town of Bellefontaine, Ohio, a community of mostly Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists. But in those good old American days of the early 20th century no one thought about such distinctions, at least not in Bellefontaine. Sammy and I went to school and high school together, always inseperable companions. When I heard of his death the other day it brought long thoughts to mind.

Well anyway, Sammy became one of the great business leaders of a big Midwest city. He made money. He manufactured a quality product. He was an honorable and upright man always. He worked for community development. He was a constructive influence. He lived out his life, never seeking acclaim, but earned the love of all who knew him. He was a great American, a great success. I shall love him forever. And he deserves love and honor for what he was.

Indeed such a man epitomizes success for that designation is properly applied to those men and women who become successful as persons. To be normal, healthy minded, caring, loving and constructive, is truly to be successful. I had a letter from a couple pushing fifty, who have gone from one thing to another, never doing very well, always looking for something else, never quite out of infantilism. In their Christmas letter, they said, "We are still trying to find ourselves, still trying to discover who we are." How pathetic can you get? Maturity is to know yourself, who and what you are and to invest yourself with definite goals for the good of your fellow men and yourself.

In a word, to be a success as a person is to release your full potential. To be the best you have it in you to be is perhaps another way of saying it. Whatever one becomes in the way of position or wealth is not of the chief importance but what one does with what he has or has not is the primary question.

And, of course, the successful person is certainly one who is able to rebound from disaster, who can build again regardless of destruction that is apparently hopeless.

Recently, I read a great book, "Strong At The Broken Places," by the Honorable Max Cleland, former head of the Veterans Administration. Life had always gone well for Max Cleland, he was a "winner," until in his 20s an exploding grenade tore off his two legs and his right arm at the elbow. When finally he was rehabilitated he had no legs and only one good arm. But nothing had destroyed his spirit, nor his ability to think straight. He had the inner strength to turn despair into courage and tragedy into triumph. He rode a wheel chair to success because he was a success in his thoughts and a man of deep faith.

No situation need be hopeless when one is a positive thinker.

laugh. "To a lot of people, their animals are human. Animals are like kids — I'm that dog's mother," she said of Pax.

"Animals have their own personalities. You can tell a well-cared for, well-loved animal almost instantly."

She stresses love in her job, and hands out plenty to the animals she watches. "Each time I go, they're a little friendlier."

But Mrs. O'Leary also sweetens her visits by taking a treat with her. "I always take a treat, like a cookie, to the animals. But I always check with the owner first because some animals shouldn't have treat. I have to have the parents' permission," she said.

The business, Mrs. O'Leary noted, "is something I thought of myself. And it gives me something to do."

—THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT— Midland City Council

Midland City Council apparently isn't going to drag its feet after getting five bond issues passed April 3 for improvements and additions to municipal buildings. On Tuesday, the council will consider selecting architects for the addition to City Hall and for the remodeling of the police station.

The meeting will start at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

Estimated cost of expanding City Hall is $1 million while the Public Safety Building should take $500,000 to utilize extra space left by the departing Fire Department and Municipal Court.

The council also will turn to the problem of treated effluent and its plan to dispose of the burgeoning wastes. The agenda lists one item to pay Black & Veatch engineering firm for professional services in connection with the effluent disposal project and another item to authorize the firm to secure aerial and topographic mapping services for the project.

In addition, the council will consider possible acquisition of the land, which will be used for farming by using the primary treated effluent for irrigation.

Part of the land in question is owned by J. "Timber" Floyd and is located southeast of the city near Glasscock County. The project would involve piping the effluent from the city's sewage treatment plant down to the land where it would be kept in a holding pond until used for irrigation.

The council will consider approving a settlement in a court case involving a Texas Electric Service Co. rate increase and an appeal of a Utilities Commission decision.

Zone change requests for major subdivions comprise a large segment of the items under planning and zoning.

Myers-Denton Development, a Canadian firm, will present its plans for the land northeast of Green Tree Blvd. and Midland Drive in a public hearing at 2:10 p.m. This tract recently was annexed by the city upon request of the developer. Plans call for 1F-1, 1F-2, 2F, TH, MF-1, LR-1 local retail and PD planned district for a housing development and office center.

Lawrence Hahn will present plans at 2:25 p.m. for rezoning the southeast corner of Thomason Drive and Loop 250 West. Plans call for PD, planned district for an office center and shopping center; TH, townhouse; 2F, two family district; MF-1, multiple family district; and NS, neigborhood service district on the 48.75 acres.

The council will look at a proposed land use plan and layout for Mockingbird Meadows, which is 655.014 acres on the northeast corner of North Fairgrounds Road and Mockingbird Lane. This tract is being proposed for annexation.

And going through the first part of annexation will be a 93.34-acres tract of land east of Lamesa Road and south of Garden City Highway. It will be considered for annexation on a first reading basis.

The panel will look at additional information concerning a denial of a specific use permit for a nightclub on West Wall Street. And claims filed against the city by Walter Sowell and Ezequiel Laing Sr. will be reviewed.

To be considered under the public works category are a discussion of traffic control at the Industrial Avenue, Bankhead Highway and Midkiff Road intersection; an ordinance to prohibit parking along certain streets and an ordinance to install stop signs in relation to one-way streets.

County Commissioners Court

The status of the Midland County Courthouse expansion and the current state of the Monahans Draw controversy will be reported Monday, when the Midland County Commissioners' Court meets in regular session at 9 a.m. on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

Architect Walter Pate is to apprise the court of his proposals for courthouse expansion to meet the needs of a burgeoning judiciary and county government.

Attorney Ted Kerr is to update the court on any possible Midland-Odessa litigation or action stemming from Odessa's dumping of sewage effluent into Monahans Draw, which flows eastwardly through Midland County and which merges with Midland Draw east of Greenwood.

In other business, the court is to:

—Listen to Sheriff Dallas Smith outline federal Criminal Justice grant for a sheriff's department communications systems.

—Consider a resolution recognizing April as Fair Housing Month in Midland County.

—Consider amending an order appointing an elections administrator. The court has authorized the position at a salary not to exceed $25,000 a year.

—Consider bids for asphalt for the county's road and bridge department.

—Consider day care for foster children.

—Consider Fred Wagner's request for renting the Midland County Exhibit Building on May 21.

—Consider a request by Bobby Trimble, coordinator of the Christmas in April program to help improve housing for the poor and needy in Midland, for use of a county dump trunk on April 24.

—Consider approval of a plat of Country View Estates.

—Consider approval of a preliminary plat of Pecan Wood Estates.

—Consider approval of a plat for Southern Meadows Addition.

—Consider accepting dedication deed of Skyview Properties.

—Consider authorizing County Auditor Johnnie Thompson to advertise for bids for fuel, tires and tubes and to repair the ceiling in Culver Youth Home.

—Consider Mobil Pipe Line Co. pipeline adjustment.

—Discuss old county warehouse off Front Avenue.

—Listen to County Agent Sharon Hillis propose a word-processor for the Midland County Agricultural Extension Service.

—Consider approval of emergency ambulance contract with the city of Midland.

MISD Board of Trustees

New members of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will be administered the oath of office and the valedictorians and salutatorians for the senior high schools will be announced Tuesday during the regular meeting of the MISD school board. The session starts at 1:30 p.m. in the MISD administration office, 702 N. "N" St.

Trustees are expected to take action on a summer program for the Visual and Performing Arts and a revision of the Vocational Office Education Program.

Gubernatorial race expected to bring voters in

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County voters casting absentee ballots in the Democratic Party and Republican Party primary elections May 1 will be selecting from 91 candidates seeking 51 offices. Twenty-three of the offices are being contested.

Absentee voting begins Monday in the County Clerk's Office on the first floor of the downtown Midland County Courthouse and closes April 27, according to County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

Though it's an "off year" — no presidential elections — Ms. Cherry predicts that the Texas gubernatorial race will attract voters to the polls on that first Saturday in May.

"That's what's going to pull them in," the county clerk speculated.

The Democratic Party ballot will be offering 59 candidates seeking 28 nominations for offices from the governor to the county chairmen of the two major political parties. The Republican ballot is carrying names of 32 candidates seeking 23 nominations for comparable offices.

In addition, the Grand Old Party ballot will be carrying five referendums seeking a consensus on legalizing parimutuel betting, abolishing mandatory jail time for repeat drunken drivers; expanding the political power of referendums, banning handguns and abolishing the Sunday so-called Blue Laws.

In the GOP election, only two out of eight local offices are being contested. Those are for district clerk and Precinct 2 commissioner; both of those offices currently are held by Democrats.

None of eight Democrats for local offices has opponents in the primary election. And only two of them — Commissioner Charlie Welch and District Clerk Madge Wallis — will be challenged by Republicans in the Nov. 2 general election.

At the state level, Republican Gov. William P. "Bill" Clements Jr. is being challenged by one opponent in the primary election, but six Democrats are bidding for their party's nomination for governor.

In the last — 1978 — gubernatorial primary elections here, 5,484 Democrats and 6,293 Republicans voted at the polls. That year, the general election attracted 18,939 voters.

To date, approximately 38,000 Midland Countians are registered to vote in the primary elections. And those who are not registered to vote will not be able to "quick register" and cast ballots, as state law requires a 30-day waiting period between date of registration and voting time.

However, those not registered to vote but who anticipate a desire to vote in the November general election may register to vote by contacting Voter Registrar Janeice Builta in the eastside basement of the Midland County Courthouse.

Absentee balloting will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays in the courthouse.

A TRIBUTE TO WENDELL J. STEWART

We, the family of Wendell J. Stewart, feel compelled to write a few words commemorating the life of our beloved husband and father who passed away recently. His accomplishments were many.

Wendell Stewart was a well known geologists throughout West Texas and the world. Most of his professional career was spent with Texaco, Inc., where he specialized in the fields of paleontology and stratigraphy. His area of expertise was fusulinids, tiny fossils found in Pennsylvanian and Permain rocks throughout the world. He published numerous papers in this field, the first in 1958, followed by contributions in 1963, 1966 and 1968. One of Stewart's most important publications, completed in 1970 with the collaboration of Frank Kottlowshi, covered the geology and paleontology of the Joyita Hills, Socorro County, New Mexico. Another paper was published in a Russian journal.

While at Texaco, Stewart developed and taught numerous courses in the carbonate field both in the U.S. and abroad. In 1976 the Permian Basin SEPM honored Stewart with an Honorary life membership for his many contributions to Permian Basin geology. He conducted many field trips, served on committees and wrote several papers for field trip guidebooks.

Stewart was also a man who loved God with all his heart and served as a preacher in several churches in the West Texas area. He was the organizer of Wesly United Methodist Church in Andrews, pastored Clark United Methodist Church in Lamesa and was instrumental in organizing Northridge United Methodist Church of Lamesa before leaving to serve the Patricia United Methodist Church for 2½ years. He was also the interim pastor of Asbury United Methodist Church of Midland and was active as a Lay Witness Mission Coordinator for 8 years. He preached and taught Sunday School in many different denominations and held several revivals in the area.

In 1979, Stewart retired from Texaco to become a consulting geologists and continued teaching his carbonate courses, which were in constant demand the world over. He also pursued his interests as a talented musician, expert photographer and highly-skilled woodworker. Being an unselfish man, he was always willing to share himself and his talents with others. Someone recently said: "When you came in contact with Wendell, whether you agreed with him or not, your life was changed."

If any one word could possibly suffice to describe the life of Wendell J. Stewart, it is also the word that describes the legacy that he left us, and that word is LOVE!

High cotton supplies indicate off year

COLLEGE STATION — Cotton farmers face a tough year ahead, as hugh cotton supplies likely will keep the cotton market suppressed.

The overflow supply of cotton stems from last year's bumper crop in the United States and abroad and from a sharp drop in American consumption of the fiber, says Dr. Carl Anderson, an economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"Global cotton production last year is estimated at a record 71 million bales, about 5 million more than the 1980 season," he says. "The U.S. crop totaled 15.7 million bales, up from 11.1 million the previous season."

"It will take a big drop in '82 production and an economic recovery in the second half of this year for the cotton market to turn around," he said. "Foreign demand and the state of the economy will be important factors in determining domestic mill use in 1982.

World carry-over stocks are expected to increase about 4 million bales by end of the 1981 marketing season this May 31. And low prices are expected to cause farmers to reduce their plantings.

Texas farmers expected to cut back

COLLEGE STATION — Texas farmers intend to plant at least half a million fewer acres in crops this year due to their money worries.

"Farmers are cutting back because of current financial troubles and to be eligible for farm program beneifts," according to Dr. Carl Anderson, a Texas Agricultural Extension Service economist.

"They face poor income prospects due to low farm prices and continued high interest rates," said Anderson. "Final plantings may be even lower, as farmers make last-minute decisions regarding participation in the '82 acreage reduction program."

Cotton plantings will likely be down more than a million acres to 6.3 million. High costs of growing cotton and depressed market prices have combined to discourage planting cotton, Anderson said.

Plantings of barley, oats and rice are expected to be down only slightly.

However, farmers may increase grain sorghum planting to 5 million acres, up from 4.8 million acres in 1982. But final plantings may be less if enough farmers comply with the 10 percent reduced acreage program for feed grains.

New ruling protects farmers' bases

LUBBOCK — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has reversed itself on a ruling which would have required producers to plant at least one acre of a given crop in 1982 in order to protect their acreage base for that crop in 1983.

Now, due to effort by the Agricultural Council of Arkansas (ACA), the USDA has agreed that it will be possible for farmers to protect their bases for cotton, feed grains and wheat without planting in 1982. All that is required is that the zero planting be "properly reported" to the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office in each county. And, as before, 1983 crop bases will be protected if a farmer plants only a part of his 1982 base provided he devotes the required acreage to conservation uses and complies with other program provisions.

The change is the way zero plantings will be treated came as a result of complaints from producers in the ArkansasDelta. Producer objections to being required a single acre were relayed to Washington, D.C., along with a request for relief by ACA Executive Vice President Cecil Williams Jr.

On Texas' Plains, the thing to do is for producers to sign up to participate in the acreage reduction program before the mid-April deadline.

Livestock symposium to be in El Paso

COLLEGE STATION — The second International Livestock Symposium will be staged in El Paso's Civil Center May 20-21.

The symposium is designed to emphasize the economical production of livestock snd efficient use of natural resources in arid lands, according to Dr. Nelson J. Adams, Texas Agricultural Extension Service livestock specialist.

Theme of the symposium's beef section will be "Meeting Nutritional Needs of Range Cattle." Other beef talk will be on developing replacement heifers, nutrition and bull productivity, management, grazing, weed and brush control and drought.

The horse section will deal with nutrition, horse health, feeding the broodmare and show mare, and foaling the mare.

The section on dairy cattle will deal with developments in computerized dairy records, feeding dairy cattle and automation of estrus detection.

A&M center research director named

COLLEGE STATION — Dr. Howard L. Malstrom, an agricultural scientist who has coordinated a nationwide tree nut research program for the U.S. Department of Agriculture and who has imparted leadership in pecan research, has been named resident director of research at the Texas A&M University's Agricultural Research and Extension Center at El Paso.

Malstrom, who has served as acting director of the A&M Center since August 1981, will be replacing Dr. Dan Hanna, who returned to the A&M campus last summer to continue research and teaching duties.

Crime rate decrease actually an increase

AUSTIN — Although the total number of crimes reported in Texas during 1981 was up from those reported in 1980, the per capita crime rate registered a slight decrease due to an expanding population, according to figures released by the Department of Public Safety.

"This rate, which is based on the number of crimes per 100,000 population, declined 1.5 percent in 1981," said DPS Director Col. Jim Adams. "This is the first decrease recorded in the crime rate since 1977."

The rate for 1981 was 6,042.4 major crimes per 100,000 population, compared to 6,135.7 crimes per 100,000 population the year before. An estimated 891,549 major offenses were committed in Texas during 1981. The 1980 figure stood at 869,439.

The statistics were prepared by the DPS Uniform Crime Reporting Bureau and were based on reports submitted by 737 Texas law enforcement agencies representing more than 97 percent of the state population.

Violent crime, which increased 14.8 percent by volume during 1980, was up less than 1 percent last year. Robbery ceses declined by 3.4 percent in 1981, while the remaining categories of violent crime — murder, rape and aggravated assault — registered respective increases of 2, 1.8 and 3.6 percent.

Property crime — burglary, theft and motor vehicle theft — rose 2.7 percent over the 1980 figures. Burglary and vehicle theft each increased slightly more than 5 percent compared to 1980. Theft rose less than 1 percent.

"The estimated value of property stolen during the commission of all major crimes in 1980 totaled (more than) $945 million," said Adams. "Approximately $188.4 million worth of property was reccvered by law enforcement agencies last year."

The clearance rate of major crimes in 1981 was 21 percent. Excluding traffic violations, total arrests for all offenses stood at 829,042 — a 3.7 percent hike over 1980. There were 52,485 drug arrests last year, which amounts to a 16.7 percent rise from the 1980 figure.

Nine Texas police officers were killed in the line of duty during 1981, down one from 1980. Of the nine, five died as the result felonious action.

Property loss resulting from arson in 1981 amounted to an estimated $94.4 million. Arson cases reported to the DPS during 1981 totaled 8,424 in 1981. The 1980 figure was 9,602.

Alton paper loses appeal

MOUNT VERNON, Ill. (AP) — An appeal of a $9.2 million libel judgment against the Alton Telegraph should be heard in federal bankruptcy court, an Illinois appellate court said in dismissing the case.

A federal bankruptcy judge previously had ruled that he did not have jurisdiction and that the appeal should be heard in appellate court. But builder James Green's motion to dismiss the appeal was granted this week in an opinion written by Justice Charles Jones of the 5th District Appellate Court in Mount Vernon.

"It's up to the bankruptcy court now to decide what to do because the state of Illinois has said it was dismissed," Rex Carr, Green's attorney, said Friday.

"We are disappointed with the court's decision," said Telegraph editor Steve Cousley. "We felt the $9.2 million Green libel judgment should be heard by the 5th District Appellate Court."

Attorneys for the newspaper and Green are to be in federal bankruptcy court in East St. Louis on Tuesday to seek confirmation of reorganization plans. The Telegraph filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy to protect the newspaper's assets during the appeals process because the newspaper was unable to raise an appeal bond.

The Telegraph reorganization plan would maintain present management and ownership of the newspaper, while Green's plan would install a new board of directors and management.

Buying diamonds for investment risky

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

Most people have dreams of making a major investment that will produce enough money to allow early retirement. Because the return on familiar investments is no high, many people consider spending their extra cash on unusual items that will appreciate in value. In the past, investing in diamonds has been promoted as a quick means to make a windfall, but, as with most investments, buying diamonds for investment purposes can be risky.

According to Jim Williams, owner of Williams Jewelry, diamond prices are largely determined by supply and demand. Several years ago prices for investment quality diamonds were very high, but because of less demand, new diamond discoveries, and other market conditions, prices have been forced down. While a flawless one-carat round cut diamond cost approximately $70,000 over a year ago, today's price is only $21,000.

Although there are reputable and legitimate firms that sell diamonds for investment and a number of dependable retail jewelers who make "investment" sales on a one-to-one basis, over the years there has been an influx of companies attempting to sell diamonds through nationwide telephone solicitations. Before you are swayed by a smooth-talking salesman, consider the following:

—What is the quality of the diamond? Carat, Clarity, Color and Cut are the identifying characteristics of the stone which, basically, will determine the market value. Carat refers to diamond weight (one carat equals 100 points). Always remember that large diamonds are much rarer than small ones. The larger the stone, the greater the price per carat.

Clarity supersedes carat is assessing value. The gem's clarity depends upon the specks or flecks left there when it was crystallized by nature millions of years ago. Almost all diamonds have internal marks and surface blemishes, also those having fewer and less noticeable marks are rarer and command higher prices. A flawless diamond must contain no flaws, cracks, carbon spots, clouds or other blemishes when viewed by a trained professional under 10-power magnification in proper lighting.

Color is also important in determining value. Ice-white diamonds are extremely rare and expensive. Diamonds available to the general trade usually have a trace of yellowish or brownish body color. The amount of color affects the price. Cut refers to the shape of the gem (round, emerald, pear, heart, oval or marquise) and the arrangement of the diamond's facets, or tiny planes.

Cutting, the only factor subject to human control, affects the diamond's capacity to reflect and refract light and to disperse the light into a rainbow of colors. With the other three factors equal, depending on the demand one cut may cost more than the others.

—Who has appraised the diamond? Exercise caution if the company selling you a diamond provides an appraised valuation of the stone. Appraisal comes from the market of potential purchasers, not the company that is attempting to sell you the stone.

Williams states anyone interested in an investment quality diamond should obtain a report on the diamond's physical characteristics from the Gemological Institute of America. GIA, the leading educational organization of the jewelry industry, will grade the stone allowing you to determine the diamond's worth at the present market value.

—What is markup? Ask how much the salesman and the company are making by selling the diamond. The illusion fostered by some firms that they sell the stones at wholesale is just that — an illusion. The higher the markup, the longer it takes the investor to recover that amount if the diamond becomes more valuable.

—What is the resale market? If the merchant volunteers provisional buyback at purchase cost, find out what his commission will be. Note than companies generally do not guarantee resale at a specified price or within a certain time frame.

—Can you afford the risk? The market is impossible to predict. You may have to hold onto your investment for years in order to get the original price back.

Diamonds are beautiful and fun to wear, but extremely risky investments. The advise of most jewelers is to buy diamonds for pleasure and not investment purposes. But if you are determined then follow the golden rule of any investment, "Don't spend the money unless you can afford to lose it."

Freight permits required

The police department is now taking applications for the new freight loading zone permits that will be required after May 3.

"The permits will be issued to commercial vehicles only," said Lt. Herman Wicker, who heads up the department's traffic division. "The vehicle must bear the company name in letters at least two inches tall.

"The lettering must be in contrasting colors from the vehicle and must be permanently affixed — either by paint or decal. No magnetic signs will be allowed."

The loading zone permits are non-transferrable stickers that will be issued to a specific commercial vehicle. The city ordinance defines such vehicles as "any motor vehicle (other than a motorcycle or passenger car) designed and used primarily for the transportation of property, and which is being used primarily for delivery purposes."

Permits will be good for one calendar year and the cost is $25 for one, $50 for two and $100 for three. "Any commercial enterprise which desires more than three...permits shall apply to the City Council for the additional permits," states the ordinance.

Permits issued to one vehicle but found on another will be revoked. Application forms are available at the police department.

Weeds can ruin garden

STANTON — Crabgrass and dandelions are two common early-spring weeds which can ruin your garden, but, says entomologist David G. Foster, with a little know-how and proper care, the gardener can stop these common weeds and enjoy a beautiful lawn all summer long.

Crabgrass is an annual, bunch-type grassy weed. It sprouts in early spring and is killed by the first frost of fall. Yet, crabgrass is a very vigorous plant, and if it was in your lawn last year, you can be sure it will be back, as the crabgrass leaves thousands of seeds, said Foster, who is attached to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Fortunately, crabgrass is an annual plant; it dies each fall. Subsequently, spring if the "best time" to control the pesty grass. A pre-emergence herbicide kills crabgrass seeds before they have a chance to sprout. A post-emergence herbicide may be used after the crabgrass has begun to sprout, Foster said.

Dandelions, which are broadleaf perennial plants, pose different problems to homeowners. The dandelions do not die from year to year but only seem to die when they become dormant. Most live through the harshest of winters and pop up in the first warm spell of spring. Dandelions, which develop deep tap roots, are virtually impossible to get rid of by pulling or digging. Even if you cut a root below the ground leaves, you still probably won't eliminate the weed, Foster said.

Hearings scheduled on teacher shortage

AUSTIN — A projected shortage of teachers in Texas public schools and possible solutions to the problem will be the subject of two public hearing sessions planned by the Subcommittee on Educational Personnel in Lubbock April 15.

The subcommittee is part of the Select Committee on Public Education, chaired by Lt. Gov. William P. Hobby.

Subcommittee member E.R. "Bob" Gregg, also a member of the State Board of Education, will preside over the two sessions. The hearings will be held from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 4 to 6 p.m. Both sessions will be held at the Region XVII Education Service Center, 4000 22nd Place in Lubbock.

Other Select Committee members serving on the hearing panel are Jimmy Elrod, State Board of Education from Congressional District 21; Dr. Charles Benson, superintendent of the Ysleta Independent School District; Edwin Irons, Lubbock Independent School District superintendent; Dr. Thomas Kim, McMurry College president; and Dr. William Myers, professor in the special education department at the University of Texas at Austin.

Presenters are being asked to limit their remarks to recruitment, employment and retention of teachers and other certified school personnel. The Lubbock public hearing is the first of four being held throughout the state this spring.

The Select Committee on Public Education is made up of state senators, members of the House of Representatives, members of the State Board of Education and the Governor's Education Advisory Committee. It is charged with studying issues and concerns which will affect the Texas public school system over the next decade.

29 West Texas teachers to participate in seminar

Registration will begin at 9 a.m. in the Houston Harte University Center. Interviews are scheduled at 10 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Activities will end at 3:30 p.m.

Placement Director Jim Glossbrenner has asked all interested persons to contact the Placement Office before April 16 so credentials can be prepared. The office is located in the University Center, room 123. Interested persons may also call (915) 942-2255.

Schools which will be interviewing participants include Anson, Eden, Eola, Greenwood, Lamesa, Merkel, Pecos, Roby, Rocksprings, San Angelo, Sanderson, Snyder, Sterling City and Tahoka.

Other schools who will be represented are Big Lake, Brownfield, Clyde, Coahoma, Del Rio, Eldorado, Fort Stockton, Garden City, Kerrville, Lenorah, Monahans, Odessa, Ozona, Seagraves and Seminole.

Glossbrenner said persons may interview with as many as eight schools during the session.

"Those interviewing prospective teachers will be in a definite hiring posture," he said. "Other schools represented will be able to answer questions concerning future employment opportunities.

MMH applies for extension

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland Memorial Hospital has applied to the Texas Health Facilities Commission for an extension on the completion deadline for relocating several of its departmemts.

The hospital wants to move its blood bank to an unused portion of the basement, convert the present location of the blood bank on the first floor to a combination patient waiting area and student classroom-instructor office and turn the current classroom space into a bacteriology and reception-waiting area.

MMH has already received approval for the proposals and now wants to extend the deadline for completing the work.

Memorial Hospital in Kermit also has applied to the THFC for permission to extend the deadline for construction and renovation work on a radiology department, emrgency room and support area.

Anyone wishing to protest the applications may do so by contacting the THFC and filing as formal parties in the matter. If protests are received, a public hearing will be scheduled on the applications.

If no protests are received, the applications may be referred to the THFC voting sessions without hearings.

Hispanic night Wednesday

ODESSA — The Hispanic Organization of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will host Hispanic Night in the Devonian Room at 7 p.m. Wednesday. The Honorable H. "Tati" Santiesteban, state senator from El Paso, will speak on "Hispanics in Texas Politics."

U.S. Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., times his remarks at radio station WXYZ just before air time Saturday. Levin presented the Democratic response to Pres. Reagan's five-minute broadcast earlier in the day. Levin said the administration was ignoring facts about student aid proposals.

Reagan interrupts vacation for speech

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — President Reagan interrupted his vacation for five minutes Saturday to tell a radio audience in the Caribbean and in the United States that "a lot of people have simply been misled" about his proposed cutbacks in federal aid for college students.

"We haven't cut loans," Reagan said. "We've cut the cost to taxpayers of making these loans available."

The president, in a surfside chat beamed back to the United States, also made his first public comment in two days on the Falkland Islands dispute between Great Britain and Argentina. "We'll do all we can to help bring a peaceful resolution to this matter," he said.

Deputy White House press secetary Larry Speakes said Reagan spoke briefly with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who stopped in Buenos Aires after a trip to London to seek a solution to "a complex disagreement" between "two of our friends."

After the speech, which concentrated on what Reagan called the "great misconception" about his program of aid to college students, the president flew by helicopter to the beach villa of actress Claudette Colbert.

On many campuses, he said, "the students are being told they might not be able to return to school next year. In some instances, they've even been incited to stage protest demonstrations against what have been called Draconian cuts in student aid."

"WELL, A LOT OF people have simply been misled," Reagan said, acknowledging, however, that guaranteed student loans would drop from $2.7 billion this year to $2.4 billion in the fiscal year that begins on Oct. 1.

"But not one dime of the money being cut has ever gone directly for loans to students," Reagan said, adding that the actual loans are made by private banks.

But one administration official, who asked not to be indentified, said "the prospects of getting any of these changes (sought by Reagan) are almost neglible."

Democrats, meanwhile, asserted that Reagan was ignoring facts about his student aid propoals. In a broadcast response to the president's speech, Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., noted that Reagan's proposal would "aid 1.9 million students less in academic year 1983-84 than are being helped now."

"And that's just direct aid to students seeking a college education," he said. "Overall the president proposes we cut federal aid to education by about 35 percent. And you can't build a strong country without a strong citizenry."

In Washington, Edwin Dale, spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, said that while the total volume of student loans in 1983 will be at a record high, the number of undergraduates taking part will fall from 2.9 million to 2.8 million next year.

Reagan said that under his program, 44 percent of the nation's undergraduates "would be eligible for a veritable laundry list of help," including up to $1,600 in grants, $2,500 in guaranteed loans and work-study support averaging $700 annually.

But Reagan did not mention that under his proposals:

—Many students from families with more than $30,000 annual income for the first time would have to demonstrate need to become eligible for aid.

—The fee charged when a loan is first granted would double from 5 percent to 10 percent.

—THE MAXIMUM $1,600 grant available to undergraduates represents a $200 reduction from current figures.

—As many as 700,000 graduate students would be barred from the guaranteed student loan program.

As an alternative to the 9 percent loans, on which students pay no interest until after graduation, Reagan wants graduate students to borrow under an auxiliary loan program that would charge them 14 percent interest from the start.

While a graduate student's total indebtedness could increase from the current $25,000 to $40,000, the change in the program could mean monthly interest payments alone of $466.

Asked why Reagan spoke about student aid in a speech from the Caribbean, Speakes said: "He wanted to talk about student loans so he did."

The subject also is likely to come up Monday, when the president delivers a speech in Chicago to Roman Catholic educators.

Speakes said the money allocated in the federal budget for the aid program goes for interest subsidies and payment on defaulted loans.

In the current fiscal year, he said, banks made $8.5 billion in student loans and that its expected to increase next year to $10.1 billion.

"We anticipate getting our savings by having institutions work to reduce costs by tightening eligibility requirements" and through lower interest rates, Speakes said.

Virginia state song called racist

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The Virginia State Travel Service has been ordered to destroy travel brochures containing the official state song, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia," because of complaints that the song is racially offensive.

The brochure, which is distributed to schoolchildren, is being reprinted without the song but with a brief history of Virginia.

Frederick W. Walker, director of the Department of Conservation and Economic Development, ordered the destruction and ordered that distribution of the brochures be halted.

He said he had received several complaints about the song over the years and, with a reprint scheduled soon, he decided to eliminate it from the brochure.

Although Walker said he didn't find the song offensive — "I must have sung it hundreds of times" — he said he could see that some people would.

"We're trying to encourage people to come to Virginia and not stay away," he said.

The front of the brochure depicts the state bird, the cardinal; the state tree and state flower, the dogwood; the state flag; the state seal; and the state dog, a foxhound.

The back of the sheet contains the words to "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia," written in the 19th century by a black man, James Bland, who never lived in Virginia.

The lyrics, written in dialect, say in part:

"There's where the old darkey's heart am long'd to go.

"There's where I labor'd so hard for old Massa."

George Stoddart, Gov. Charles S. Robb's press secretary, said Robb knew nothing about the directive to remove the sheet.

Stanton approves ethyl alcohol plant

STANTON — The Stanton City Council has given tentative approval for the building of a commercial ethyl alcohol plant near the city's sanitary landfill.

Proposing the plant was Stanton contractor Sam Baker, who said that trash from the landfill would be used to fire the boiler in making the alcohol.

Similar plants, costing about $3 million each, are at Gatesville and Palestine.

"I want to make his clear," Baker was quoted in The Stanton Reporter. "This is not drinkable alcohol; it is commercial alcohol used for fuel and chemicals."

The plant would be operated under guidelines set by the Texas State Department of Health and would meet standards set by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Lions camp for handicapped

The Downtown Midland Lions Club is looking for crippled children and those with diabetes to attend the group's summer camps for handicapped children this summer.

Four two-week sessions for crippled children are scheduled throughout the summer, beginning June 20. Campers range in age from 7 through 16.

Eligible campers include the blind or visually impaired; the deaf or hearing impaired; and children who suffer physical handicaps affecting one or more limbs.

A child's IQ must be 70 or above to qualify. Normal bowel and kidney control and some degree of self-help skills in eating and dressing are also assignment guidelines.

Campers are supervised by college-age counselors. Activities include swimming, crafts, nature study and modified athletics. A variety of night programs also entertain the children. A highlight of each session will be Awards Night, when every camper is recognized.

There is no charge to parents and two-way transportation can be arranged by the Lions Club. More than 20,000 handicapped children have enjoyed the summer camp during the past 29 years.

Two, two-week sessions are scheduled for diabetic children this summer: June 7-18 in Kerrville, and Aug. 2-13 at Camp Rio Vista in Hunt.

The camps accept children ages 6 through 16 who are insulin-dependent. Priority is given those who have never attended diabetic camp before and who need guidance in health care and control.

In addition to a variety of recreational activities, medical education is supervised by a medical team from The University of Texas Medical Branch, Galveston.

Campers gain experience in urine and blood sugar analysis, injections and diet and exercise management. A parents' program on the last Friday of each session assists the family in gaining up-to-date information about diabetes.

The diabetic camp is also free. Insulin, syringes and testing kits will be provided. This summer will mark the 12th year the Lions are sponsoring diabetic camps.

Applications or more information on both summer camp programs can be obtained by calling Doyle Snow at 682-9775 or 684-5799. Any member of the Downtown Lions Club can also offer assistance.

Hydrated lime helps shin oak poisoning

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension
Agent — Agriculture

Toxic poisoning from shin oak could cause problems in livestock this year. Blossoms and buds have already appeared in many areas of West Texas. Conditions of drought leading to a shortage of feed may cause livestock to seek out the tender buds, flowers and small leaves of the shin oak that are the only source of green material available. This plant materials is palatable and poisonous.

Cattle, sheep and goats have been poisoned by oak. Some of the signs of poisoning include a blood stained diarrhea or constipation. Animals may exhibit a rough hair coat, dry nose, lack of appetite, and become thin and drawn. The tannin in the shin oak is the toxic principal and causes an upset in the digestive tract and kidneys of the affected animals.

Poisoning from shin oak can cause severe losses. If pastures are available without infestations of shin oak, livestock should be removed from the infested areas for several weeks.

If rotation is not possible, feed supplements may reduce loses, but with shin oak a feed containing calcium hydroxide (hydrated lime) in a palatable formula has proven to be a more effective andidote than the supplement alone. The concentration of the calcium hydroxide in the feed must be high enough to counteract the oak tannins but also low enough to be palatable to the livestock.

One feed formula that is palatable and economically feasible is as follows: Ground alfalfa, 600 pounds, cottonseed meal, 1,080 pounds, vegetable oil, 120 pounds, and calcium hydroxide (hydrated lime), 200 pounds. This is an open formula and can be mixed by the producer or any experienced commercial feed producer.

For best results calves should be creep fed and cattle should be fed at the rate of four pounds of the formula daily, starting about a week before the flowers and buds appear on the oak.

Lots of homeowners have been concerned about dead terminals and yellowing leaves on evergreen plants such as pittosporum, fatshedra, ligustrum, oleander, roses and others. Sometimes this is a symptom of plant stress brought on by soil problems or one of the weed-and-feed fertilizers containing the herbicide atrazine. This year it may also be cold weather damage due to the January freeze.

The mild weather experienced in December and early January resulted in plants that were not properly hardened and resulted in more susceptibility to the near zero weather in late January.

If the discoloration and leaf drop is due to the cold weather the uninjured portion of the plant should be developing new growth. As soon as this happens you can remove the injured wood by pruning it out. You may have to remove some of the uninjured wood in order to properly shape the plants as you prune. An application of fertilizer high in nitrogen is also beneficial. Use about 1 to 1½ pounds of ammonium sulfate (21-0-0) per 100 square feet of shrub bed and water thoroughly.

Some early season yellowing is due to a deficiency of one of the trace elements, especially iron. Many of these plants will respond to a foliar spray. Use three level tablespoons per gallon of water of copperas (iron sulfate) and wet the plants thoroughly. Iron chelate materials may vary in the amount used, but you generally mix one tablespoon per gallon for most ornamental plants.

Iron is primarily needed in the spring so don't wait until mid-summer to put it on. In addition to not doing a great deal of good, except on plants that are severely chlorotic, there's a greater danger of burning plants with foliar applications of iron during hot weather.

Another minor nutrient that is being realized as increasingly important is zinc. We've known for years it was essential for good growth in pecans, but in the last few years zinc has been found to be beneficial on some shrubs and shade trees. One new material called NZN can be used as a foliar spray to supply zinc on a number of plants. If yellowing is accompanied by small leaves, shortened stems and even die-back on shrubs such as yaupon, chances are you have a zinc problem.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Steroids should be used with caution for rheumatoid arthritis

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you explain why my doctor refuses to prescribe steroids for my rheumatoid arthritis? I've had other people tell me that these drugs work like miracles. I'd have switched to another doctor by now if he hadn't been so helpful for so long. — Dave, Reno, Nev.

Dear Dave: From the little you've written, it would appear that your physician is following sound medical practice. Corticosteroids should be used with extreme caution in patients with rheumatoid arthritis; once they are begun, it is very difficult to discontinue them or even to lower the dose.

I will grant you that steroids often work rapidly, but they also produce serious side effects. Alleviating a disease at the expense of causing adverse side effects would not be a very smart move.

You can always go to another doctor for a second opinion, but I would not rate a doctor high just because of a readiness to prescribe steroids.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I can understand that drugs have to be tested on animals rather than on people, but an animal is not a person. Isn't it possible that what is learned about rats does not apply to humans? — Vince, Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Vince: Researchers are well aware that the results of animal experiments cannot necessarily be applied to humans; but, as you note, potentially dangerous drugs cannot initially be tested on people.

Dr. David A. Blake, of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, says that most drugs will cause birth defects in at least some animals, but very few drugs have the potential for doing so in humans. Aspirin, for example, has been shown to cause defects in at least one species of animal, but does not have a similar effect in humans.

Thalidomide is the only drug that is known to produce serious birth defects in humans even when given to pregnant women at nontoxic dose levels.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My sister is being treated for Hodgkin's disease and she seems to be doing okay considering that she has a serious illness. But lately she seems very depressed. Do all patients with Hodgkin's disease get depressed? I'm wondering if she should see a psychiatrist. — Sue, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Sue: It is often difficult to differentiate between the kind of depression that may accompany any chronic illness from that caused by drugs being used to treat illness. Sometimes the distinction can be made on the basis of the patient's prior history. For example, did your sister have psychiatric problems before she became ill with Hodgkin's disease? Did she have a problem with alcohol?

I would suggest that your sister check with the physician who is treating her for the Hodgkin's disease. He may be able to pinpoint the reasons for her apparent depression, or may suggest a psychiatric referral.

(If you hae a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Woman says daughter in excellent health until became ill with TSS

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — Patricia Kehm always had been in excellent health until she became violently ill and died of toxic shock syndrome at the age of 25, four days after she began using Rely tampons, her mother, Jean Robinson, testified.

Mrs. Kehm's husband, Michael, is suing the maker of Rely, Procter & Gamble Co., for an unspecified amount, claiming the company did not adequately test Rely and failed to warn women about its association with TSS.

Kehm is expected to take the stand in U.S. District Court next week as one of the prosecution's final witnesses, said Kehm's attorney, Tom Riley of Cedar Rapids.

Mrs. Kehm's sister, Colleen Jones, testified that she had recommended Rely tampons to her sister.

Stadler escapes ambush to command Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Craig Stadler, ambushed by a double bogey earlier, birdied his last three holes for a 5-under-par 67 and took a 3-stroke command Saturday in the third round of the 46th Masters golf tournament.

Stadler, nicknamed "The Walrus," completed three trips over the flowered hills of the Augusta National Golf Club course with a 211 total, 5 under par.

And his closing burst — a 2, 3, 3 finish over some of golf's most demanding holes — put him in solid control.

"Well," said Jack Nicklaus, who watched on television as Stadler holed his last two birdie putts, "it looks as if his day has come.

"He's got the lead. Either he has to give it away or somebody has to take it away. I sure like his position better than anybody else's. He's got the momentum."

But there's still 18 to go, and, heading into Sunday's final round, some of the game's most honored names remained within striking distance. Included in that group were Jerry Pate, Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Tom Weiskopf, Ray Floyd, Tom Watson and Nicklaus.

Nicklaus finished with three consecutive 3's, but in the time it took him to get from the 18th green to the press building, the deficit grew from 3 shots to 6.

Also, there's Jodie Mudd, a 21-year-old amateur from Louisville, Ky., who insists he has a chance to become the first non-pro to win perhaps the most revered of all the world's golf titles.

Ballesteros, the young Spaniard who won this title in 1980, and Pate, the happy-go-lucky guy who has a habit of leaping into lakes following his triumphs, shared second at 214, three off the pace.

Ballesteros, Europe's finest player and a former British Open champion, was conceding nothing.

"There's a lot of pressure on the leader," he said. "I think it's easier to come from behind than to win from in front."

Pate, winner of the prestigious Tournament Players Championship last month, had a 67 in the mild, overcast weather and said, if he won here, he'd forego his aquatic act.

Weiskopf, a four-time runner-up but not a winner of the Masters, and Floyd, a 39-year-old veteran who owns two major professional titles, were at 215, four behind. Weiskopf had a 68, Floyd 69.

Watson, the defending title-holder seeking a return to his position as the game's dominant figure, had a hard-won 70 that tied him with Bob Gilder at par 216. Gilder closed with a 66, the best round of the tournament.

Long-hitting Dan Pohl, Curtis Strange and Nicklaus were next at 217. Pohl included consecutive eagles — a 3 on No. 13 and a 2 on No. 14—in his round of 67. "I don't know if that's a record, but I'll take it," he said of the pair.

Strange, who shared the second-round lead with Stadler, slipped to 73. Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major professional titles and, at 42, seeking a sixth Masters crown, had to birdie the last two holes for a 71.

"I'm kind of disappointed not to get the ball in the hole when everybody else was doing it," Nicklaus said. "I played well. I just couldn't get the ball in the hole."

Mudd was in the group at 218, 2 over par.

Before Stadler's closing burst, while he was still close to the top, before Stadler pulled away, Mudd insisted he had a chance.

"I know an amateur has never won the Masters and probably never will. But it can happen. I've played in some tour events and before lots of people before. Yes, I'm in contention to win the golf tournament."

But that comment was made some two hours before Stadler finished.

The 28-year-old Stadler, who has dropped some 20 pounds but still remains a portly figure, may have taken it out of reach.

And he had to do it the hard way, fighting his way back from the discouraging effects of a double bogey-7 on the second hole.

That dropped him out of the lead and back into a multiple-man struggle for control. Strange, Pate, Ballesteros and Weiskopf all led or shared the lead at one time until Stadler exerted his authority over the final nine holes.

Stadler played in 31, a 5-under-par effort made more remakable in that he failed to birdie either of the par-5 holes, the 13th and 15th.

He got himself in trouble on the second hole when he drove into the woods, took 4 shots to reach the green then 3-putted.

But he hit irons inside of 2 feet on both the fifth and ninth and tapped in for the birdies that got him back to even for the day, and back in the fight.

He holed a sand shot for birdie on the tough 10th, scored a deuce on the 12th, let the two long holes escape, then put on the closing streak.

He made it from 15 feet on the 16th, taking the lead alone for the first time.

His approach got away from him just a little on the 17th, coming up some 40 feet from the hole. He made the putt, and that made it a 2-shot margin.

On the 18th, his 6-iron was some 30 feet from the flag, and he dropped that one. Another birdie, the third in a row, and it stretched his lead to a commanding 3 shots.

Here's Mudd in your eye

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — A father's dream came true when young Jodie Mudd qualified for the Masters Golf Tournament and emerged Saturday as a rare amateur threat for the title.

The 21-year-old Louisville youngster, a member of the U.S. Walker Cup team, subdued Augusta's awesome Amen Corner with a blast of birdies and fired a 5-under-par 67 for a score of 218 with one round to play.

"My dad was a public links golfer like myself and I used to caddy for him," Mudd said. "He dreamed that one his sons would some day play in the Masters.

"He passed away in July but it was after I had already been selected for the Walker Cup team so he knew I would be in the Masters."

Mudd didn't say how heavily this memory weighed on him Saturday but he shot the best round ever by a first year amateur and joined a cordon of well-known pros in contention for the prestigious title.

In the 46 years of the Masters, a tournament founded by the most famous amateur of them all — Bob Jones — no amateur has ever won here.

Three — Frank Stranahan, 1947; Ken Venturi, 1956; and Charles Coe, 1961 — finished second or tied for second while a fourth, Billy Joe Patton, came in third in 1954 behind Sam Snead and Ben Hogan, who tied and engaged in a playoff which Snead won.

Mudd, a clean-cut, boyish youngster who is is 5-foot-11 and 150 pounds, said he was aware that no amateur ever had won here but acknowledged that he had no such aspirations when he teed up his ball for the opening round in Thursday's bone-chilling rain and wind paired with Jack Nicklaus.

"I was just hoping to make the cut," he said. "My second goal was to finish in the top 24. But the this has been a weird tournament and the scores have been unusually high."

He said he was not intimidated by being in the presence of Nicklaus and the other great pros.

"I have played in tour events — I had a 66 a couple of weeks ago in the Heritage," he said. "No, I don't feel intimidated."

College cheaters offer $200,000?

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico Coach Gary Colson says cheating in major college basketball is mind-boggling, illustrating his charge with the story of one player he contends was offered $200,000.

"One coach, a friend, told me a kid visited his campus and told him, 'Look, I want to come to school here. But you've got to match another (school's) offer.'

"Later, the coach called me to say the kid told him he wasn't coming, that the kid had $200,000 in escrow from another school. Two-hundred thousand dollars, just think," said Colson, who, himself, was hired by New Mexico in the wake a recruiting scandal that led to the firing of former Coach Norm Ellenberger and the school being placed on probation by the NCAA.

"What went on here under Norm is chicken feed, I mean chicken feed, compared to what's going on around the country," Colson said in an interview last week with the Albuquerque Tribune.

"You have no idea, absolutely no idea at all, how much and how extensive it (the cheating) is. It would boggle your mind."

Colson, like Notre Dame's Digger Phelps, who recently went public with charges that he knew of schools that were cheating, refused to name any names.

"I've never blown the whistle on anybody. And I won't," Colson said.

He added, "And I don't know why. Honor among thieves, so to speak."

He cited two main excuses coaches use to rationalize their cheating.

One is the pressure on a coach to win in order to keep his job, the other ego on the part of a coach who "flat goes and buys players just so he can be named coach of the year," Colson said.

He also said there are two primary methods used by coaches so they don't become directly involved in the cheating. One, he said, is where the coach has thousands of dollars to dispense and uses a close but obscure friend to dispense the money. The other, he said, is through community effort where wealthy businessmen are assigned to each star to cater to the player's every need.

Colson, whose clubs have posted 11-15 and 14-14 records in his two years here, acknowledged the pressure for a winner is starting to build and admitted he has been tempted to cheat.

He said he could have provided the rabid Lobo basketball fans who throng to the 17,121-seat New Mexico Arena with an instant winner and no one would have known about it.

"I could have bought two players out of my own pocket," Colson said. "I could have taken $5,000 of my own salary as an investment toward a future $10,000 raise and had an 18-game winner right off."

But he said he has not and will not cheat.

"You know, eight of 10 (coaches) say it can't be done, that we can't rebuild New Mexico's program without cheating," he said. "But I'm stubborn enough to try. I know I can live with myself because I know I'm doing it right."

Dodgers nip Midland again

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio's Scotti Madison was more than the Midland Cubs could handle in the late going Saturday night as he blasted a home run over the right-center fence to tie the game at 3-3 in the eighth inning and then connected for a bases loaded single in the bottom of the ninth to give the Dodgers a 4-3 Texas League victory.

It was the second straight loss for the Cubs at the hands of the Dodgers, and like the first defeat Friday night, they lost after holding an early lead.

The Cubs scored a pair of runs in the first inning when Henry Catto walked, went to second on a single by Mike Kelly, to third on a fielders choice and home on a Carmello Martinez single. Carlos Lezcano, who reached first on the fielders choice, went to third on the hit and came home on Fritz Connally's sacrifice fly.

San Antonio got its first run of the night in the third inning when Mark Sheehy scored from second on a single by Tony Brewer.

The third and final Midland run came when Connally belted his first home run of the season, a 390-footer over right-center on the first pitch of the inning.

The Dodgers made it 3-2 in the bottom of the fourth when Dann Bilardello scored on German Rivera's single.

The Cubs, now 0-2, used four pitchers in the game with Jim Gerlock suffering the loss. Butch Wickensheimer posted the victory for the 2-0 Dodgers, gaining his first decision of the year, relieving Tom Klawitter in the eighth.

Connally was the only Cub to have more than one hit with his single and homer. The Cubs were limited to only six hits, giving Midland only 14 hits in two games to open the season. Hitting was supposed to be one of the Cubs strengths this year, but it looks like San Antonio pitching may be a league strength also.

In the other Texas League West game Saturday night, El Paso nipped Amarillo 13-11 to square that series at one game apiece. Amarillo won a 5-4 decision over El Paso in the season opener Friday.

The Cubs and Dodgers will play game three of the current series today. Midland's first home game is Wednesday against Amarillo at 7:30 p.m.

Yanks get Smalley for Davis

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Minnesota Twins traded shortstop Roy Smalley to the New York Yankees Saturday for relief pitcher Ron Davis and two minor leaguers.

"I was stunned," Smalley said. "I'm emotion-filled right now. I'm not sad to be going to the Yankees, but I am sad to leave Minnesota. I'm not sad about playing in the middle of the Yankee lineup, but I am sad about leaving this one.

"The feelings I'm having now are contradictory. I kind of feel like a rookie. I'm going to the Bronx Zoo, for God's sake. Playing for the Yankees is a dream of every kid."

Smalley, who has a .259 lifetime batting average, came to the Twins in 1976 in a trade with Texas. He negotiated a four-year, $2.5 million contract last season.

Davis, 26, who combined with Rich Gossage to give the Yankees a strong bullpen, has a 27-10 career record, 22 saves and a 2.94 earned run average.

Davis went to the Yankees in 1978 from the Chicago Cubs in a trade for Ken Holtzman. His best year was 1979 when he was 14-2 with nine saves and a 2.86 ERA. He was 9-3 with seven saves and a 2.95 ERA last season, but was hit hard in the World Series loss to Los Angeles, yielding six earned runs in 21-3 innings.

The Twins also obtained right-handed pitcher Paul Boris. Minnesota had drafted Boris from the Yankees last fall, but returned him after spring training. He will report to Minnesota's Toledo farm club in the Class AAA International League.

The Twins also obtained 20-year-old shortstop Greg Gagne in the deal. Gagne, who has three years of minor league experience, will report to the Twins' Class AA Southern League team in Orlando, Fla.

Taking over for Smalley at shortstop for the Twins is Lenny Faedo, who replaced Smalley last season when he was out with an injured back.

Smalley said he spoke with Yankee Manager Bob Lemon on the phone.

"He said he wasn't as smart as my uncle but he tries," Smalley said, referring to Angels Manager Gene Mauch.

Twins Manager Billy Gardner said: "The feeling was we needed help in the bullpen and we got who we wanted. We feel like Faedo will do a good job for us (at shortstop).

"This really strengthens our pitching staff. It gives us the type of game we need to play — a good defensive pitching game. I hate to lose Roy, but that's baseball."

In New York, Davis said he had a feeling his days with the Yankees were numbered since his World Series failure. Earlier this spring, the Yankees tried to trade him to Toronto for pitcher Dave Stieb.

"They made the trade and I'm going," Davis said. "That's part of baseball. I might not win another game or save another game, but I'll have fun over there."

"I knew they were going to get rid of me. I've been expecting it since Oct. 28 or 29. No matter what you do, if you don't do it right, they'll get rid of you. They just wanted to get rid of me. Being traded doesn't bug me. It was fun being here. Now I've got to go somewhere else. I don't know how long I'll be there."

Davis became expendable when the Yankees acquired relief specialist Shane Rawley from Seattle last week.

Lemon said Smalley "can play third base and shortstop and he's a switch hitter. He has two positions and one of our players at those positions is a right-handed hitter (shortstop Bucky Dent) and one is left-handed (third baseman Graig Nettles). We can use him both ways. He gives us more depth than we had. We were short of infielders."

Lee places third in South Plains Invite

LEVELLAND — Darren Williams was a key performer for Midland Lee as he finished first and second in individual events and anchored a relay to victory to lead the Rebels to a third place finish in the South Plains Invitational Track Meet here Saturday.
District 5-5A was well represented among the upper echelon schools in the meet standings as three league teams finished in the top four with Abilene High winning top honors, scoring 97 points followed by Lubbock Monterey second with 87, Lee third, 86, and San Angelo fourth, 84.
Williams, competing in the 200-meter dash for the first time this year, won the event with a 22.2 time while teammate Carlton Johnson placed second at 22.3. Williams' 10.7 time in the 100-meter dash was the second fastest in the meet and it was only the second time he failed to win the event this season.
Lee's mile relay team consisting of Sam Morney, Johnson, Troy Barber and Williams set a meet record, covering the four laps in a season best time of 3:18.9. Lee's 1979 quarter-milers combined for the old record at 3:19.3.
IN OTHER top performances, Roosevelt Fort won the long jump with a leap of 22-5½ while Darrell Fennell finished fifth going 20-8. Fort was also a member of the third place 400-meter relay team along with Clarence Smith, Johnson and Barber. Their time was 43.4.
Dwayne Mooney cleared 11-0 in the pole vault to finish second; Jeff Motley went 6-0 in the high jump to gain a three-way tie for third and Tommy Pollard placed fifth in the mile.
"I was real pleased with our mile relay team, it was a real good time for us," said Lee coach Sam Volpe. "They're coming along according to schedule.
"We're going to have to improve quite a bit (the overall Lee team) to be in the thick of the race for the district title," he continued. "I realize we only have two weeks, but we feel we'll be able to improve quite a bit in that time. We'll take next weekend off and work out this week and next to get ready."
Volpe feels the competition in the district meet, scheduled for Friday, April 23, will be tough and he picks Odessa Permian as the team to beat, but feels Abilene High, Lee and San Angelo will be contenders for the title.

Cock clocks 62.036

Making the best of a strong tailwind, a homing pigeon owned by Ron Brown, Midland, dashed home at an average speed of 62.036 mph to win the Midland Racing Pigeon Club's 200 mile race from Hereford Saturday.
The race was the fourth of nine old bird races the club has scheduled for the spring. The club represents racing pigeon fanciers in the Midland, Midkiff and Big Spring area.
Brown's dark check (a slate-gray and black color pattern) cock led a flock of 226 birds back to Midland. Last fall, during the young bird racing season, the checker had been the first Midland bird home during the Permian Basin Futurity, a 300 mile race for specially seclected youngsters.
The racers were released near Hereford at 7 a.m. Sautrday. Brown's bird came home at 10:08 a.m. Its speed averaged at 1,810.710 yards per minute.
The second and third place finishers were flown by Howard Abernathy, Midland.
Second place went to a four-year-old blue barred (another slate-gray and black color pattern) cock that winged home at an average speed of 1,798.914 yards per minute, or 61.327 mph.
The third bird back was another four-year-old cock, a black (dark) check, that arrived at Abernathy's loft with a speed of 1,767.825 yards per minute, or 60.267 mph.
John Cox took fourth place with an average speed of 1,742.108 yards per minute; fifth and sixth went to Russell and Janet Hall, 1,739.864 and 1,719.242 ypm; seventh and eighth went to Gary Baker, 1,694.616 and 1,684.782 ypm; and ninth and thenth places went to Calvin Sanders, at 1,611.944 and 1,551.673 ypm. All are from Midland.

DON HARVEY, REALTORS

DON'T LET THE SPREAD WIDEN
It's been said time and again: "Inflation is our deadliest enemy." And one of the best devices to help you personally fight inflation is the purchase of a home. Here are some inflation facts to think about:
In the last ten years, the median price of a home has risen by 124%. A home purchased for $28,000 ten years ago would be worth roughly $63,000 on todays market. If inflation continues, the same home ten years from now could be priced at $141,000.
Also, there's little likelihood that salaries will keep pace with housing increases. Family incomes rose 83% in the 1970's compared with the home price increase of 124%. This has a serious implication for those who prefer to wait until they earn more money to buy the home they dream about. If your are having trouble qualifing for a mortgage loan on today's income, the chances are better than even that the financial gap will widen rather than close in the future.
The simple fact is that housing prices are not going to wait for you to catch up. Put your money to work as soon as possible: invest in a home now!

John Ross rules

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Top-seeded John Ross of Gainesville powered his way to a straight set victory Saturday and the 18-and-under singles title of the Olympus Easter Bowl tennis tournament at Laver's International Tennis Resort.

In the girl's 18-and-unders, No. 2 seed Beth Herr of Dayton, Ohio, won her first major national singles title with a 6-4, 1-6, 6-2 victory over top-seeded Gretchen Rush of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Bell homers twice; Atlanta still rolling

By The Associated Press

Fernando Valenzuela made a successful 1982 pitching debut Saturday, blanking San Diego for six innings as the Los Angeles Dodgers took a 6-0 victory over the Padres.

Valenzuela, late reporting to spring training because of a contract dispute, allowed five scattered hits, walked one and struck out four before giving way to a pinch-hitter. Dave Stewart and Dave Goltz finished up for the Dodgers, completing a seven-hitter.

DUSTY BAKER provided two of the Dodger runs with a solo homer in the opening inning off loser Juan Eichelberger and a run-scoring single in the seventh. The start of the nationally-televised game was delayed by an hour and 11 minutes because of rain.

The National League's 1981 Cy Young Award Winner and Rookie of the Year with a 13-7 record, Valenzuela worked just five innings this spring. He reported to camp March 23, after the Dodgers unilaterally renewed his contract for a reported $350,000, some $500,000 below what he was asking.

The American League schedule was highlighted by the Texas Rangers as Buddy Bell homered twice and singled to drive in three runs and George Wright made his major league debut with a single, double and homer and three RBI as the Rangers beat the Cleveland Indians 8-3 in the storm-delayed season opener for both clubs. Charlie Hough went the distance to get the win despite giving up two runs in the first inning, but gave up only two hits over the last five frames.

ELSEWHERE IN the National League, Pat Zachry hurled a no-hitter for 7 1-3 innings and Dave Kingman drove in five runs with a homer and single as the New York Mets took a 9-5 decision over the Chicago Cubs.

Reliever Mark Littell's throwing error sent home the winning run in the seventh inning, helping the Pittsburgh Pirates win their season opener by downing the St. Louis Cardinals 11-7.

Joe Morgan's bases-loaded two-run single in the 10th inning lifted the San Francisco Giants to their first victory of the season, a 7-5 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds.

In the American League, California's Doug DeCinces sparked a four-run fifth inning with a double as the Angels whipped the Minnesota Twins 8-1.

Dennis Eckersley hurled a six-hitter and Jim Rice drove in both runs as the Boston Red Sox opened their season by defeating the Baltimore Orioles 2-0 in the first game of a doubleheader.

THE ORIOLES earned a split with a 5-3 victory in the second game as Eddie Murray drove in three runs with two doubles and a grounder.

Barry Bonnell, going 5-for-5 in his first appearance of the season, drilled a two-out 10th-mnning single to score Damaso Garcia from third base and give the Toronto Blue Jays a 3-2 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Oakland-Seattle game was postponed by rain.

IN NIGHT GAMES, rookie Brett Butler stroked a pair of hits, drove in two runs and scored three times to trigger Atlanta to an 8-6 victory over the Houston Astros, giving the Braves their best start in 13 years. The four consecutive wins equaled the Braves' 4-0 start in 1969, the last time the Braves captured the West Division pennant in the National League. Glenn Hubbard, Rafael Ramirez and Bruce Benedict each also had two hits in the 12-hit Atlanta attack.

In the only AL night game Dennis Leonard pitched a perfect game through five innings but needed relief help from Grant Jackson and Dan Quisenberry as the Kansas City Royals beat the Detroit Tigers 5-2. Leonard retired the first 15 Tigers but walked Lou Whitaker on four straight pitches leading off the sixth. Bill Fahey reached on a fielder's choice, and with two out, Leonard walked Ed Miller and Enos Cabell to load the bases, and Kirk Gibson delivered a two-run single.

Rangers nip Flyers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Cam Connor scored from just outside the left post with 1:09 left in the game Saturday to give the New York Rangers a 4-3 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers and a 2-1 lead in the best-of-five National Hockey League Stanley Cup first-round playoff.

The Rangers get a chance to close out the series Sunday night when the fourth game will be played here.

Should the Flyers survive that, the deciding game would be played in New York Tuesday night.

Connor, who was recalled from Springfield of the American Hockey League just before the playoffs, rebounded the winning goal after a shot by Mike Rogers bounced off the pads of Philadelphia goalie Pete Peeters.

Connor's goal in the final period capped a Rangers' rally from a first period 3-0 deficit.

The Flyers won the first game in New York Wednesday night 4-1, but the Rangers deadlocked the series with a 7-3 triumph Thursday night on their home ice.

Rogers, who led the Rangers in scoring during the regular season with 103 points, started the New York comeback when he scored his first goal of the playoff at 5:44 of the second period. He took a pass from Tom Laidlaw and rapped a 20-foot backhand shot that got by Peeters in the far corner of the net.

New York reduced its deficit to 3-2 at 8:43 when Reijo Ruotsalainen scored a power-play goal. He took a pass about 35 feet in the slot and ripped one between Peeters' pads. There were just 11 seconds remaining on a penalty to the Flyers' Kenny Linseman at the time.

The Rangers tied it at 19:06 when Rogers and Don Maloney scored off a two-on-one break against Flyers' defenseman Fred Arthur. Rogers passed from the right wing to Maloney on the left wing and Maloney hit a backhand 10 feet high into the corner of the net on Peeters' stick side.

Sabres stay alive

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Yvon Lambert, Craig Ramsay and Mike Foligno scored in the second period to give Buffalo a three-goal lead and the Sabres went on to beat the Boston Bruins 5-2 Saturday and stay alive in the best-of-five National Hockey League playoffs opening round.

Boston leads the series 2-1. Game four is Sunday night in Buffalo.

Brent Peterson opened the scoring for the Sabres on a power play in the first period when he slapped the puck over the shoulder of Boston's rookie goalie, Mike Moffat.

Steve Kasper evened the score early in the second period when he slipped the puck under Sabres' goalie Don Edwards after a faceoff in Buffalo's zone and a scramble in front of the net.

Kasper also scored on a power-play goal later that period.

The Sabres, trying to avoid being swept from the playoffs in three straight in the opening round, played desperate hockey.

They outshot the Bruins, contested every loose puck, forechecked relentlessly and pressured Boston even while playing a man down. The Sabres power play, which was 1-8 in first two games, began to click.

Midland helping build new tradition

TED BATTLES

BATTLE SCENE

It wasn't a subject Brian Murphy particularly wanted to get into, the new Cubs and the old Cubs, but it's a matter uppermost in everyone's mind, from Chicago to Bradenton, every where a team wears the "Cubs" logo.

"I wasn't that close to the organization," says the new Midland Cubs manager, but with other organizations, "I had a chance to observe the operation in the past and, to me as an outsider, it always seemed as though they needed something."

MURPHY, WHO comes to the "New Tradition"-building Cubs from the Kansas City Royals organization, sensed a new enthusiasm and anticipation this spring that perhaps wasn't there before.

"We had more personal type of instruction this spring in Mesa and I think that there's a feeling that the Cubs will no longer be a laughing stock. I can tell there is a difference this year in talking with some players who have been with the organization in the past."

One gets the same impression in talking with some of the players returning from previous years.

SOMEHOW the usual rebellion at being "sent down" isn't readily evident among the players who are coming off the kind of years that seemed to warrant promotions to AAA. Most realize the extensive player trades taking place at the upper level, that the Chicago brass hopes will make the Cubs competitive in the National League in a hurry, don't leave much room for advancement. They also are aware that many of things going on in Chicago are stopgap measures and the future is in the minors.

So instead of rebellion in the ranks, disgruntled remarks about being shortchanged, overlooked and unappreciated, the Cubs, maybe impatiently are accepting their lot, but are more concerned with making something happen wherever they are.

FRITZ CONNALLY is good example of what has happened. In fact, for the Baylor product it's almost a case of deja vu.

A year ago in Mesa, Fritz had the Midland club made. Then manager Roy Hartsfield was counting on him the season's opening. Then, on the last day of spring training, Fritz was sent out to A ball. It wasn't long before he was back in Midland, but the demotion was a shock.

This year, again he was a last minute casualty, just when it seemed he had the Iowa job locked up. Chicago farmed out Pat Tabler and Fritz wound up back in Midland. But, after a winter season in Puerto Rico, he is a more seasoned player than when he finished the Texas League season with a .308 average in 94 games.

For some, there is new tomorrow. Outfielder Brian Rosinski, pitcher Henry Mack and pitcher Mike Wright were released outright in Mesa. Rosinski had good seasons in Midland and Wichita prior to last year's bad season at Iowa.

For others, there's still hope even in exile, at least the Cubs made arrangements for them to play and will keep an eye on them. First baseman Joe Hicks, catcher Ted Trevino and pitchers Bill Earley and Norm Churchill, all former Midland Cubs, have been to the AAA Mexican League to play for Tabasco, a fate that at least isn't death.

Still, first baseman Gary Krug, now with Iowa, spent a half season there two years ago and came back promising, "I'll never complain again. Just leave me in Midland. I don't care if it is AA ball."

WBC heavyweight champion Larry Holmes promised his bout with Jerry Cooney June 11 wouldn't go over seven rounds, claiming he'll knockout the contender within seven rounds June 11 or leave the ring in humiliation. "If it's still going then, I'll walk out... Gerry Cooney might be — might be — a good fighter in about 10 years. He hasn't beaten anybody. All he's got is a left hook. So what? I've fought a lot better fighters...I don't hate nobody. I have a job to do. I have to knock out Gerry. Earnie Shavers was my friend, and everybody I've fought is my friend. Death takes Barrios at 28

CHICAGO (AP) — Former Chicago White Sox pitcher Francisco Barrios has died of a heart attack at the age of 28.

Death came Friday at his parents' home in his native Hermosillo, Mexico.

Barrios reportedly was preparing to sign a contract with the Milwaukee Brewers after having a good winter season with the Hermosillo Orange-Pickers of the Mexican League.

The White Sox let him go after the 1981 season when he was involved in a fight with teammates and was arrested with several grams of an unspecified drug in his possession. He was later released and became involved in a drug and alcohol rehabilitation program. He recently injured his shoulder.

Sox General Manager Roland Hemond, who signed Barrios when the right-hander was 19, said he had planned to phone him the last few days.

"I could kick myself now for not calling," Hemond said. "I wanted to find out how he was coming along and, as an encouragement thing, to have him come up if he thought his arm was better.

"Maybe he could have addressed the players in our organization," Hemond said. "He had made tremendous progress in his treatment. He had handled it so well. After he was out of the (drug-alcohol) center, he came up to the office and thanked everyone for being so kind to him."

Barrios began his major league career with the White Sox in 1974 and compiled a lifetime record of 28-31 in eight seasons.

In his last six outings with the Orange-Pickers, Barrios pitched five shutouts.

"(Pitching coach) Ron Schueler saw him pitch for Hermosillo this winter," Hemond said. "He was glad to see Ron. Each inning, he'd look up to where Ron was sitting and wave, letting him know he was all right.

"This is a lesson for all of us. People get involved in situations, sometimes with sad consequences."

Sox outfielder Jerry Hairston was Barrios' teammate at Hermosillo this winter.

Lendl, Vilas to do battle for Monte Carlo crown

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia will face Argentina's Guillermo Vilas, the No. 2 seed, for the title in the 300,000 Monte Carlo Grand Prix tennis tournament today after both survived close semifinal matches.

Vilas needed 2 hours, 50 minutes Saturday to eliminate his countryman Jose-Luis Clerc 7-6, 7-5. Vilas saved seven set points in the first set and rallied to win the second-set tiebreaker 8-6 from Clerc, seeded third.

Lendl, ranked second in the world, served six aces in a 6-1, 1-6, 6-1 semifinal victory over No. 6 seed Yannick Noah of France. It was the first time Lendl had lost a set in this clay court tournament.

Vilas, the 1976 champion whose triumph Saturday put him into the final for the third consecutive year, has yet to lose a set in the tourney.

The 22-year-old Lendl has won his last eight matches against the 29-year-old Vilas, the oldest player among the world's top 10. The Argentine has beaten Lendl only three times in 11 matches, the last time in 1980.

The title match carries a winner's purse of $60,000. The runner-up will get $30,000. Clerc and Noah each earned $14,600 as losing semifinalists.

Vilas' victory was his ninth victory over Clerc in 12 matches.

Clerc, 23, attributed his loss to poor concentration.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

A trophy is all in the eyes of the fisherman, says Don Steinbach, Texas Agricultural Extension Service Fisheries specialist. The first bass caught, whether a half pound or 10 pounds, is a trophy.

But fishing is like all sports. Someone has to catch the biggest or most. Factors effecting size include age, breeding and food, in the case of largemouth bass.

Food is critical to growth. Age alone will not make him a trophy. Bluegill, threadfin shad and other forage must be present in sufficient numbers and size to make the bass grow. This can be effective in private lakes and ponds, but not in public waters.

Bass grow to eight to 10 pounds with age and the right food. If bigger bass are desired, the answer is probably the Northern X Florida cross super bass. Genetics produce bigger fish, but food and age remain important factors.

WHETHER Fising in the farm pond or lage lake, safety should be practiced at all times. Precautions can prevent a tragic accident.

While in a boat, children should wear life jackets at all times. Cushions are not adequate for children or non-swimmers. Cushion type preservers are acceptable for fair to good swimmers, if used properly. Cushions should never be worn on the back with arms through the straps. This has the effect of floating the person face down. The cushion preserver should be worn either across the chest or with one leg and the opposite through the straps.

Don't overload the boat. If in doubt, don't go out. Balance the load in the boat with more weight in or toward the stern. If the boat overturns, stay with it. It is usually farther to shore than it appears.

Around the pond or near fishing docks, a safety station should be established. It can be if everyone is familiar with the use of equipment.

A post set 15 feet from the water and near the dock serves as a place to hang a rope, doughnut life preserver, innertube, pole or board. A 12-15 foot long fishing pole is very effective for rescuing someone who falls in the water near the shore.

For rescuing someone slightly farther from shore, a rope that can be easily thrown works best. Tie a very large knot in the end of the rope to make it throw better and to serve as a hand hold for the person being rescued.

A DOUGHNUT life preserver can be thrown 30 to 40 feet by most people. An inflated innertube can also be used, but is difficult to throw long distances. As an emergency measure, a dry wood board about six to eight inches wide and six feet long can be scooted across the surface for someone to hold onto until help arrives.

WEST TEXAS OUTDOORS

April tournament held in March

The High Sky Bass Club's April Tournament was held at Lake Brownwood the last weekend in March. Although conflicting schedules made it necessary, most of the anglers would have just as soon it had been held in April. It was cold, wet and windy and Jackie Wilkes said, "The fish must have gone south for the winter."

"They were not where we though they should have been."

Out of 45 fishing members, 29 bass caught weighed 47 pounds, nine ounces.

Says Jackie, "Eleven women signed up to fish, but I don't think all of them actually went out and fished."

Jack Daniels, who else in weather like this, won the men's division with eight pounds, three ounces. John Wilkes was second at 5-4 and John Nobles third with 4-3.

Melba Erck won the women's divsion with 1-3 and Jerry Tarpley took the youth competition with 1-15...

The High Sky Club's Invitational tournament will be May 1-2 at Lake Amistad and headquarters will be the Anglers Lodge on Highway 90 west of Del Rio. Entry fees are $30 for men and women and $20 for teen (not more than 17 years of age on May 1, 1982).

THE BUCHANAN Club is holding its invitational at Lake Buchanan April 17-18.

A few HSBC members traveled to Lake Twin Buttes April 3 for the Castle Gap Bass Invitational and came back praising it.

The winning stringer of three bass went a little over 13 pounds and the big bass was 8 pounds, nine ounces.

The hot spots these days seem to Lake Spence, Colorado City Lake and San Angelo area lakes.

The HSBC top ten are: 1. Charles Erck, 344 points. 2.T.E. Armstrong, 281. 3. Jackie Wilkes, 270. 4. Jack Daniels, 182. 5. Eddie Elliott, 157. 6. Edd Armstrong, 156. 7. Paul Anderson, 148. 8. Melba Erck, 144. 9. Clark Franklin, 138. 10. R.L.Spencer, 132.

BASS FISHING continued to be good at both Spence and J.B. Thomas with good catches of blacks and whites reported. At Thomas, anglers were getting excellent bass results on artificial lure and minnows while crappie were being caught on jigs and minnows at all depths. Channel catfishing was good to fair.

Dusty Stout and Doug Lusk, Lamesa, took ain impressive crappie string from a half to 2¼ pounds. Ronnie Howard had seven blacks to 4½ at Spence and Steve Teichmann, took 15 white bass on slabs.

Taos gets approval for ski expansion

BY HERR ENG BOEN

Despite good snow at many ski resorts, the season is coming to an end. Taos is a typical example of why certain areas close in mid-April, although there may be 80 to 90 inches on the slopes.

The ski slope area is leased and so are the lift facilities for a specified period of time and when that time arrives, the season is over, even if there are still long lift lines.

And at Taos, which prides itself on its exclusivity, and short lift lines (Ernie Blake, the Austrian developer of the Ski Valley, is known to serve martinis when lift lines and waits are longer than most skiers like) they were long, so long that in February there were weekends when skiing was by reservation only.

FOR BETTER or for worse, Taos will be able to accommodate more people in the future and even those associated with the operation aren't sure what that means and are consequently apprehensive.

The U.S. Forest Service, after two years of study, has approved the Taos Ski Valley's master development plan, which will begin this summer.

The plan calls for four new lifts, new trails, a restaurant on the mountain and other up-mountain additions. The parking lot would be doubled to accommodate 1,065 cars and 15 buses.

Most of the new development reportedly will come in the Kuchina Basin where few trees would have to be felled.

WITH TEXANS swarming to northern New Mexico in mindless numbers until the very end, the spring skier, for future reference, will find his best package bargains at less-excessible Colorado resorts.

For example, at Steamboat, one ranch offers lodging for $19 per night, including lift ticket and free shuttle service. It's based on four persons, four nights and doesn't not include meals or ski rental. Another spot offers a steak dinner with the purchase of a lift ticket. Some places offer accommodations at half price.

Early, late and in January when skiers are broke from Christmas, seem to be bargain time for skiers.

Chaps finish in second

ROSWELL—Midland College shot a one-over par 285 team total to finish two strokes behind Odessa College in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference tournament at the New Mexico Military Institute course.

David Wasdak and Bobby Tuttle each shot 70s and Bruce Carroll had a 71 in leading the Chaparrals. For Wasdak, it was his best round of the year.

Ramon Sanchez and Ray Garcia led the OC Wranglers with one-under 69s to take medalist honors for the day.

South Plains shot a 288 for third and Western Texas College, still leading in the overall standings, had a 292. Midland's showing left the Chaps in third place behind second place OC. New Mexico Junior College, South Plains and NMMI follow.

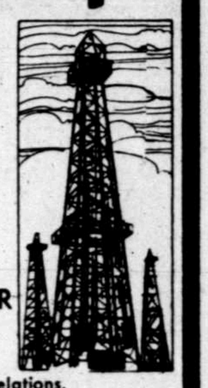

The men's WJCC skirmishing shifts to Hobbs, N.M., next Saturday with a practice-round Friday while the MC women play in a tournament at Oklahoma State Tuesday through Thursday.

Team—Odessa College 283, Midland College 285, South PLAINS 288, Western Texas College 292, New Mexico Junior College 292, NMMI 298.

Midland College—David Wasdak 70, Bobby Tuttle 70, Bruce Carroll 71, Steve Goetzmann 74, Mike Petersen 74, Rick Brown 78.

Medalist—1. Ramon Sanchez and Tom Garcia, Odessa College, 69s.

Mitchell played for own satisfaction

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

His childhood fascination with watching his dad play the piano grew into the desire to learn how to play himself. He didn't enjoy lessons, so he taught himself how to play the piano and the guitar.

He never took it seriously. He never considered a career as a musician. At least, not until now.

"I was just fascinated watching Dad play. He played in a college band, and the music was so upbeat. I liked that beat," said David Mitchell. The dad he was speaking of is Midlander Bascom Mitchell.

Although his first public performance came during his high school years, David said of that time, "I really played just to entertain myself; I was never really a performer. I never played for others; I played for my own satisfaction."

This performance, as well as the other member of the duo, was to have future effects on his life. The gig was for Fort Worth's Mayfest, and the other member of the twosome was another Midland youth, Marc Gist.

Marc and David were "repeated associates" who kept running into each other in classes but weren't really close friends. During their Fort Worth date, they used the name Love Me Avenue, "taken from lyrics by David Bowie in a short introduction for one of his songs."

The name became more than a one-night stand.

They formed a band at College Station during their days there as students at Texas A&M University. It was then that David "started meeting musicians and got hooked."

"Marc was always intent upon being in music, whereas I didn't think it would be a viable career, so I majored in chemistry," David said.

Laughing, more to himself than to anyone else, he explained that following his May graduation from A&M, he went to Austin to help the rock-n-roll group Secret Science cut an album. The group's leader and guiding light is his longtime "repeated associate," Marc, who sings and plays the guitar.

Finally last November, group members said to David, "Why don't you play with us?"

"That's what I had been waiting for. I like the music a lot and I'm fascinated with the (recording) process," he said.

Area rock fans will have a chance to hear how they like the music Saturday when Secret Science performs at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado St. The doors open at 8 p.m. with performance time running from 9:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The group has received favorable reviews in Austin for their performances there. Their album, "Pound Out," Ballyfungs Production, was rated 11th in the Austin Chronicle's 1982 Music Poll Winners.

Today, David says, "Science has always been a passion of mine, but I derive more instantaneous satisfaction from music." Of his chemistry degree, he says, "I have something to fall back on." And on the subject of music he says, "I'm in it now. I suppose I would like to think I could support myself as a musician." Pausing, he says, with a slow smile, "I'm looking for work as a part-time chemist."

David Mitchell talks about how he got into a music career, while playing Secret Science's latest album, "Pound Out," on the stereo. David and another former Midlander, Marc Gist, are members of the rock-n-roll group. Secret Science will perform at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado St.; Saturday from 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Doors open at 8 p.m. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

Theater Midland presents 'Sly Fox'

"Sly Fox," the modern adaptation of Ben Johnson's comedy classic "Volpone," will open Friday for a nine performance run in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Larry Gelbart's reworking of Johnson's satire comedy is true to the original script and is intended for mature audiences. Johnson wrote his play during the early 1600s when the English stage was filled with a broad and bawdy style of comedy. This style has been recaptured by Gelbart 370 years later in a zesty, funny, Americanized farce. The subject matter and language may be objectionable to some.

In updating Johnson's play, Gelbart has changed the locale from 16th century Venice to San Francisco gold rush days in the 1890s. The setting is the elegantly appointed bedroom of Foxwell J. Sly, confidence man par excellence. At the foot of his bed is a trunk busting with gold gifts acquired from greedy cronies who are led to believe each will be the sole heir upon Sly's supposed imminent demise.

Midland Community Theatre's cast includes Leonard Caryl as Sly; Tim Feltch as Able, Sly's indentured servant and accomplice; John Phillips as Crouch; Mike Trost as Truckle; Corby Considine as Craven; Toni Botary as Mrs. Truckle; Trudie Thomason as Miss Fancy; Bill Shaner as the hanging judge; Bill Salt as the officer of the law; and Joe Craig as the navy captain. Others appearing in the production are Mark Wilkins, John L. Fox, Jason Lyons, Ann Perkins, Beau Poteet and Jay Scheumack.

The production is directed and designed by Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director, and is partially funded by a grant from Magcobar and Dresser Titan.

Actual production dates are Friday, Saturday, April 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30 and May 1. Reservations may be made by calling the theater's box office at 682-4111.

Making Hollywood look like New York

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — It's supposed to be near Broadway and 42nd Street, but it's really near Hollywood and Vine. On the set of "Fame," that creates a few problems.

"Faster, faster. Make them walk faster," the producer whispers to his director. "This is supposed to be New York."

"Hill Street Blues," has a similar problem. Cops in an Eastern or Midwestern inner city shouldn't be chasing bandits around palm trees and swimming pools.

"We look for locations where the trees won't get in the way," said executive producer Steven Bochco.

About 3,000 miles separate New York and Hollywood, but the New York lifestyle often is millions of miles from the California lifestyle. Yet some of the shows with the heaviest New York accents — including "Fame" and "Taxi" — are filmed under the California sun.

If television is doing its job right, you shouldn't be seeing and feeling Hollywood when you're supposed to be seeing and feeling New York. That concern was so important to Tony Randall on NBC's "Love, Sidney" that he insisted the production be done in New York, despite objections by the network.

"Love, Sidney," however, is the exception. Nearly every other network program is filmed in California.

ABC's "Taxi," for example, is ostensibly about New York cabbies. But it has little New York flavor. The laughs come from oddball characters and weird happenings, not from New York situations and, rarely, from the cabbies' professional experiences.

Except for the stock opening, there are no tall buildings, no street scenes — and little on-the-job driving. It's a studio show, and the garage could just as easily be in Peoria. The zanies could easily walk into ABC's canceled sitcom, "Open All Night," about an all-night store in Los Angeles.

On the other hand, NBC's "Fame," a dramatic series about students at the New York School for the Performing Arts, works much harder at having a Big Apple peel and core. The cast and dancers are virtually all New Yorkers. Erica Gimpel, who plays Coco, actually was a student at the School for the Performing Arts.

"We couldn't cast some of the parts with California people," said executive producer William Blinn. "New Yorkers have a different emotional stance. The kids go home on vacation, then return with new energy and ideas."

"Fame's" school sets look authentic, but that's the easy part. Outdoor shooting requires more vigilance. Blinn says some streets in downtown Los Angeles have the look of midtown Manhattan. Attention is paid to creating street and subway signs that resemble the real thing.

But the camera won't linger, for fear that the discriminating eye would catch the artificial New York. And it will rarely look skyward, for fear that palm trees, not skyscrapers, will be found.

"Shooting in New York would be 50 percent more difficult and even more expensive," Blinn said.

NBC's "Hill Street" is filmed mostly in Los Angeles, yet it captures the grime and crime of less sunny climes. "LA has a lot of tough places," said Bochco. "A lot of homework goes into our location shooting because we don't want to be trapped by palm or Eucalyptus trees."

"Hill Street" does some minor shooting in Chicago for external authenticity. But the producers wanted to avoid any strong affiliation.

In MGM's fantasy-adventure film, "Clash of the Titans," Calibos (Neil McCarthy) is banished from his kingdom and hideously transformed. But he still loves the beautiful princess Andromeda (Judi Bowker), and devises a plan to thwart all her suitors.

'Titans' at mercy of special effects

A Review

If you thrilled, as a child, to such special effects films as "The 7th Voyage of Sinbad," and "Jason and the Argonauts," then Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Clash of the Titans" is guaranteed to take you happily down memory lane. All three films were produced and created by Charles Schneer and Ray Harryhausen, who developed the process used in the films called Dynarama — the blend of live action and visual effects.

"Clash of the Titans" is based, very loosely, on the Greek legend of Perseus and Andromeda, two mortals who live at the capricious whims of the Gods of Mount Olympus. Perseus (Harry Hamlin), the son of Zeus, falls in love with Andromeda (Judi Bowker) and with the aid of a winged horse, mechanical owl (that is too much like R2-D2 in "Star Wars" for comfort), and supernatural combat gear, succeeds in overcoming great obstacles to rescue Andromeda from certain death.

In doing so, Perseus outwits the three Stygian witches, who share one eye, does battle with a gigantic two-headed dog, decapitates the Gorgon Medusa and petrifies Kraken the monstrous sea creature.

Most of the special effects in "Clash of the Titans" are not special or new. An exception is Calibos, son of goddess Thetis, who is turned into a hideous devil-like beast by Zeus. This dynamated creature speaks and combines live and animated action of the body. Even covered by the facial mask of Calibos, Neil McCarthy effectively conveys what pathos is present in the film and all but steals the show with his searing eyes and tortured voice.

Harry Hamlin (who plays the homosexual writer in the 20th Century Fox release "Making Love") and Judi Bowker as the young lovers seem barely interested in each other or the plot and play in the highly stylized manner of previous Schneer-Harryhausen classics.

But the biggest letdown is high up — on the Olympic heights. Shrouded in dry-ice mist to disguise the artificial lackluster sets, or aging movie greats, Laurence Olivier, Maggie Smith, Claire Bloom and Ursula Andress, are present in body only — never given the chance to display the talents for which they are rightly known.

Clearly, the players and the plot are at the mercy of the special effects — in fact, exist only as they further the opportunity to show off the dynamated creations. But then that is what "Clash of the Titans" is all about.

On that level alone, "Clash of the Titans" offers an imaginative moment when the Gorgon Medusa appears. Always among the most intriguing of legendary ladies, Medusa slithers, somewhat clumsily, but comes closer than previous film attempts at the stupefying presence we have been led to expect, complete with a tail rattle, scaly skin, hair that could use some taming and radiant green eyes.

"Clash of the Titans" labors so in interweaving plot and special effects that only a child could stay captivated for two hours. Unfortunately, some children will not even see this film since its rated PG. Two gratuitous and totally unnecessary scenes involving partial nudity are included, presumably for adult audiences and there are violent battles that are traditional fare in fantasy film.

Filmed in England with location shots in Spain, Italy and Malta, there are too few, but nonetheless beautiful scenes by photographer Ted Moore, and the London Symphony Orchestra — as background music — gets watered down to an annoying buzz.

"Clash of the Titans" pulls a few new tricks out of the old dynamation bag but the overall effort is disappointing and perhaps only special effects buffs will be able to endure what plot goes in between.

When you've arrived... Meadowpark

Patio homes are now being built

What is Meadowpark?

Meadowpark, a project of Citizens Savings & Loan Association, is a Planned Unit Development of attractive patio home and townhouse clusters. Meadowpark will consist of up to 200 attached and detached patio homes and attached townhomes on nearly 60 acres in north Midland. The development is inside the city of Midland and receives all municipal services, including police and fire protection, and water and sewer service.

Meadowpark Owners' Association

Common recreation facilities and park areas are managed by the Meadowpark Owners' Association. Purchasing or building a patio home on your own lot automatically makes you a member of the Meadowpark Owners Association. The Association provides management and maintenance of the common park areas, playgrounds, tennis courts, and swimming pool with deck area. Homeowners are assessed a monthly maintenance fee.

A low density development

The cluster arrangement of Meadowpark restricts traffic flow on residential streets.

On-street parking is prohibited, so that streets become areas for family activities.

Patio Homes and Townhomes

Lot sizes in Meadowpark will accomodate patio homes in size from 2,000 square feet up to four-bedroom patio home with 3,600 square feet livable. Several homes are now available in one and two story designs, or a buyer may employ his own architect/builder. See "Participating Builders" below.

As a Meadowpark homeowner, you own the lot on which your home is located, all of the improvements on the lot, and an interest in common areas and facilities. Meadowpark homes offer two or more enclosed patios, landscaping, whirlpool-hot tubs, etc. affording a relaxed, suburban lifestyle. General Landscaping includes attractive entrances off of FM 868 (Loop 250) and North "A" Street, berms for noise and visual barriers, trees, ground cover and grass. Clusters of live oaks and red oaks are used at various locations. Each Meadowpark residence is designed as an energy efficient home.

What does it cost?

Patio homes and townhomes range from $160,000 to $235,000. Of course you may request additional features in planning with your builder which may affect the final sales price.

Citizens Savings & Loan Association serves as both developer and permanent lender, and you may wish to visit with one of our loan officers about interim financing and permanent mortgage for your Meadowpark home.

Where is Meadowpark?

Meadowpark is located on 59.91 acres northeast of the intersection of North "A" Street and FM 868 (Loop 250). Nearby are newly developed shopping centers and a regional mall, Midland College, schools and Midland Air Park. Country clubs are by as well.

*The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 12 5% for 90% loan to value. Interest will be charged at the most recent six-month Treasury Bill rate plus 3 5% rounded to the highest 1/8 of 1%, but not to exceed the maximum rate allowed by law. Payments on GPAM mortgages are graduated so as to increase 7 50% each year for the remaining four years. At the end of the first five year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 3 5. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13 25% ON 90% LOANS.

Living the Young Life

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Young Life is alive and well in Midland!

"Young Life is a non-denominational Christian organization — an evangelistic outreach to high school students who are not normally involved in a local church, and to those who are involved in a church but have friends who aren't, whom they can bring with them," said Steve Partlow, area director of Young Life in Midland.

High school students from all three Midland high schools — Lee High, Midland High and Permian Basin High — participate in the club meetings and activities.

"In the spring we average about 120 kids a week at the meeting, and in the fall the average is about 180-200 kids a week," Partlow said.

"Our purpose is to be friends with kids and give them an intelligent look at the Christian faith, in terms they can relate to comfortably," he said.

Young Life was founded 41 years ago in Dallas by Jim Rayburn, and now has clubs in approximately 300 communities in North America and seven foreign countries, Partlow said. "Young Life is open to anyone in high school. There are no dues or fees."

"A Young Life club is an informal meeting held weekly, in a home of one of the kids or a neighborhood center," he said. "The Midland club meets from 8-9 p.m. on Wednesday nights during the school year, at the Girl Scout Program Center, 901 W. Dengar." He said that with a weekly attendance of between 120-200 students, the meetings in Midland are too large to fit in a private home.

But Young Life is more than club meetings. "We have weekend camping trips about four times a semester," Partlow said. "The trips vary with rappelling or rock climbing or backpacking trips, etc. And we have a week-long summer camp. We take the kids to one of seven camping resorts in the United States and Canada or to one of three ranches. Thirty kids from Midland will participate in a week of camp at Young Life's Frontier in Colorado this summer."

"One reason we do so much camping is that kids sometimes just need to get away from peer pressure so they can get a chance to think and make some decisions on their own" he said.

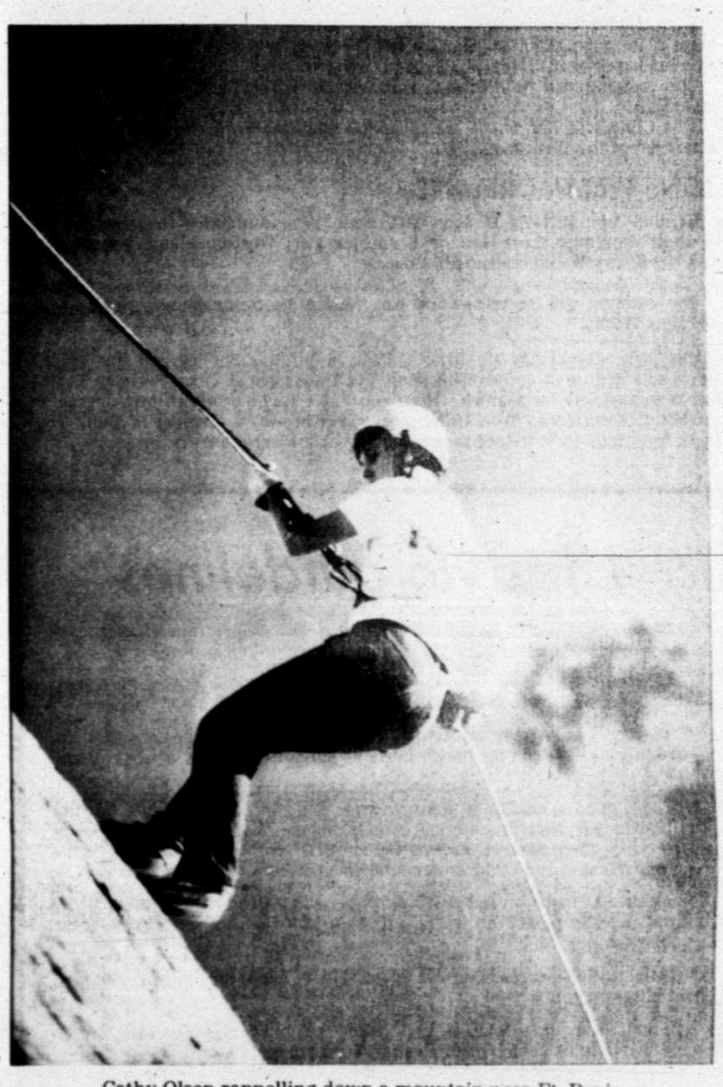

In addition to Partlow, several adults in Midland work with Young Life. "We have 12 volunteers who are professional people in town who help the kids sort through problems in life," Partlow said.

"The activities are one thing, but the real value comes with having an adult they can go to and talk to," he said.

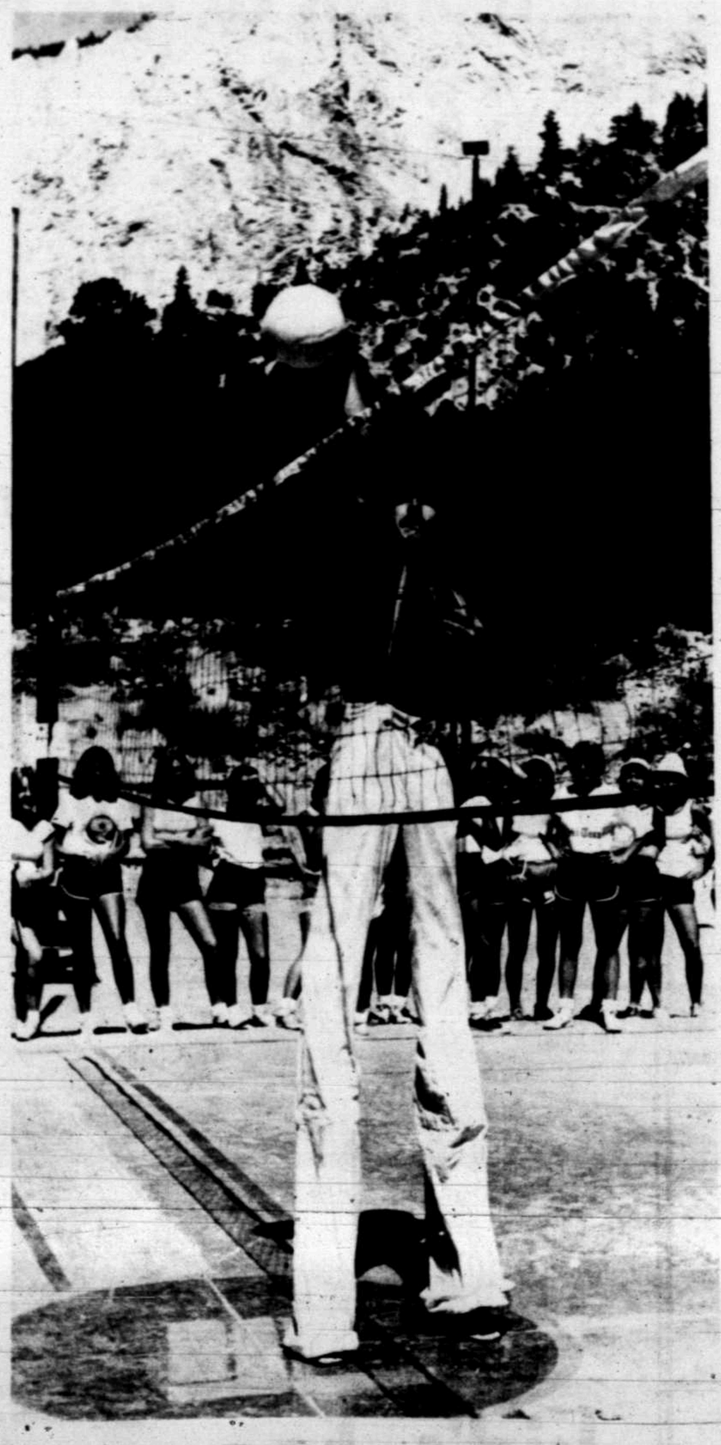

Young Life is a non-profit organization that is funded by donations from individuals, companies and foundations. To find out more about Young Life, call 684-4052.

Christmas In April is repairing home

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

For Christmas, Mrs. Ethel Thompson is getting major repair work done to her home. For Mrs. Thompson, Christmas is in April this year, and it's free.

Mrs. Thompson, 304 S. Lincoln, is one of many recipients of Christmas In April, a community project in Midland for which members of the community join together and volunteer their time and abilities to repair the homes of some of Midland's residents. These are persons unable to get their homes repaired themselves.

Mrs. Thompson has lived in Midland for almost 15 years. "My husband moved this house here from Crane," she said, "but he didn't live to finish it."

After her husband died, Mrs. Thompson worked for years as a cook-housekeeper. She said she had the roof of her home repaired, because "every time it came a rain, I had a house full of water." She couldn't continue with the repairs, however, because she needed her money to exist. "After I put the top on, I gave up. There was no way I could work and make all the repairs."

Some of the repairs done to Mrs. Thompson's home by Christmas In April include installing new windows, putting up sheetrock on the inside of the house, applying stucco to the outside, and repairing the plumbing.

"I applied (to Christmas In April) last year," said Mrs. Thompson. "By then I was 65. I let it go for four years before I tried. I'm glad I got into it. I don't know why I waited so long. I thank the good Lord for Christmas In April. They work so hard!"

Christmas In April is installing insulation in Mrs. Thompson's home. She said she had been putting double curtains on all the windows during the winter to help keep out the cold wind. "For 15 years I hadn't been able to raise but one window — the one over the sink — because they were down so tight for the winter that I just left them down in the summer."

She said her family helped her as much as possible, but they had to meet their own living expenses. "The good Lord helped me make it," she added.

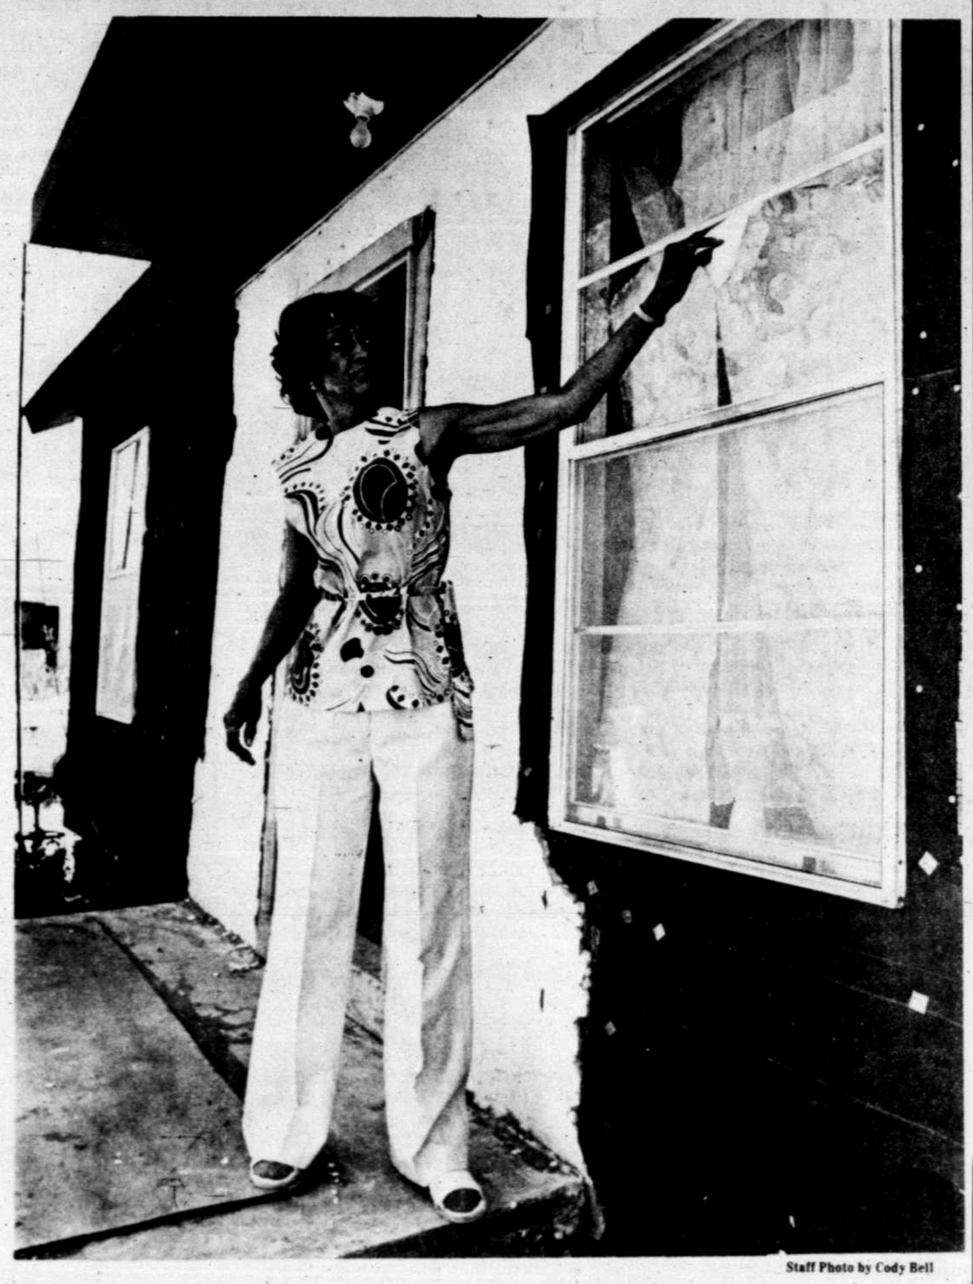

Mrs. Thompson said she had heard about Christmas In April for several years before she applied for assistance. "I was trying to do it myself and finally decided I couldn't," she said. "I finally decided there's not but one way to get it done, and that was to slow down and ask for help. I'm so glad I did. Besides my family and my life, Christmas In April is the next best thing in my life."

Christmas In April volunteers began working on Mrs. Thompson's home last weekend. "They started Saturday about 8 a.m. and finished about 7 p.m.," she said. "There were so many here. And they worked! It might take them four more Saturdays to finish up. They have to do some more inside and finish up on the outside."

"I'm going to tell them every little thing that needs fixing, and what they can do they will," Mrs. Thompson said.

The idea of "people helping people and something for nothing" is sometimes difficult to imagine. "Way back I wouldn't have thought it, but seeing is believing," said Mrs. Thompson. "And the change is wonderful. Christmas In April is wonderful, it really is."

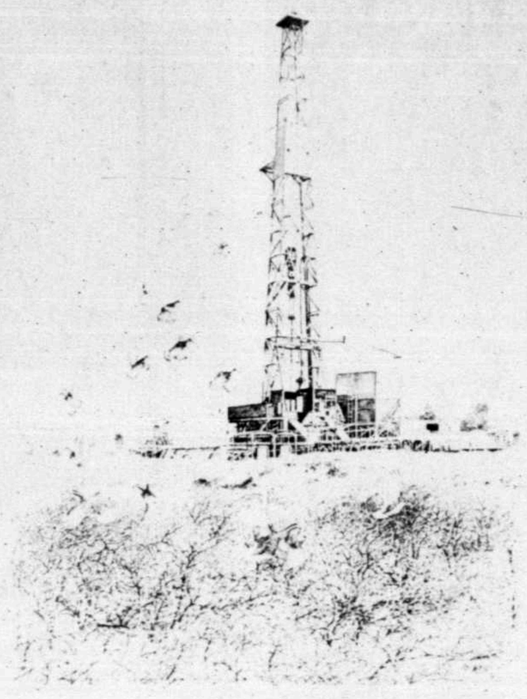

The goal for Christmas In April this year is to repair 150 homes on April 24. Anyone interested in becoming a volunteer for Christmas In April or learning more about the community project can call 694-4907. Tax deductible contributions can be sent to: Christmas In April, Inc., P.O. Box 3744, Midland, Tx. 79702.

Do all people gain weight when they quit smoking?

So you want to quit smoking, but you are afraid if you do you will gain weight.

If you are of average weight, you would have to gain 60 to 100 pounds to do the same damage to your body done by one pack of cigarettes a day.

However, if you really want to quit smoking and are really worried about gaining weight, we have several ideas that will help you eliminate your habit and stay trim, if not trimmer than you already are.

First, you must realize that it is not necessarily true that everyone who stops smoking gains weight. Actually, one-quarter of the people who stop smoking lose weight. However, many times the ex-smoker's appetite is no longer dulled by nicotine and he usually gains some weight. It is often sudden, but only a few pounds.

Many people who have tried to kick the habit, make the mistake of assuming they will continue to gain weight, so they light up again.

People oftentimes do not give their body metabolism enough time to stabilize--it's panic and resume smoking.

In desperation others attempt crash diets which makes the habit even more difficult to beat.

We have helped hundreds of people in West Texas kick the smoking habit and we have also helped them do it without gaining weight.

What we suggest is a moderate change in eating habits along with a simple plan of exercise.

When a transition smoker first comes to us for advise about his fear of becoming overweight, we suggest: 1) Eat slowly. Take time to enjoy the flavor you have been missing.

2) Drink more water! Not only is it good for your system, it also curbs your appetite.

3) Get regular, moderate exercise. A simple walk in the afternoon helps reduce tension.

Always remember that everyone needs portions of the basic food groups everyday. These include protien from meats, fish, poultry or dairy products--along with vegetables, fruits, breads and cereal.

There are simple ways to cut calories. Always bake or broil--never fry!

Remember that 8 ounces of skim milk has 85 less calories than 8 ounces of whole milk. Dry toast has 50 less calories than one slice of buttered bread. A cup of sherbert has 80 less calories than a cup of ice cream.

And, diet soda has 158 less calories than a regular 12 ounce can drink.

There are other ways to cut calories by using artificial sweeteners. However, the simplest program is to reduce the portions of food during the initial days of your stop smoking campaign.

We understand that the smoking habit is possibly the hardest to eliminate.

But, if you want to stop smoking and you are having trouble doing it on your own, we have helped hundreds of people beat the habit through simple hypnosis.

Comparing eggs is a good thing to do while standing in line, waiting your turn at the Easter egg dye.

Dyeing Easter eggs can be as much fun as hunting Easter eggs, as these students at a Midland pre-school found out this week. The children, who are three and four years old, held an egg-dyeing at their school on Monday in preparation for the Easter egg hunt and party later in the week. Each child brought two hard-boiled eggs from home to dye any color he or she wanted.

Ruffle is the thing

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

The ruffle is the thing! On blouses, dresses and — most of all — skirts. Wide, narrow, one row, two rows, the gathered skirt has a ruffle.

Ruffling takes time, agreed, but it can be made a little easier with these tips.

Do not change the width of the ruffle if you must alter the length of the skirt. Take the length from the body of the skirt. The ruffle width is part of the design and should remain the same.

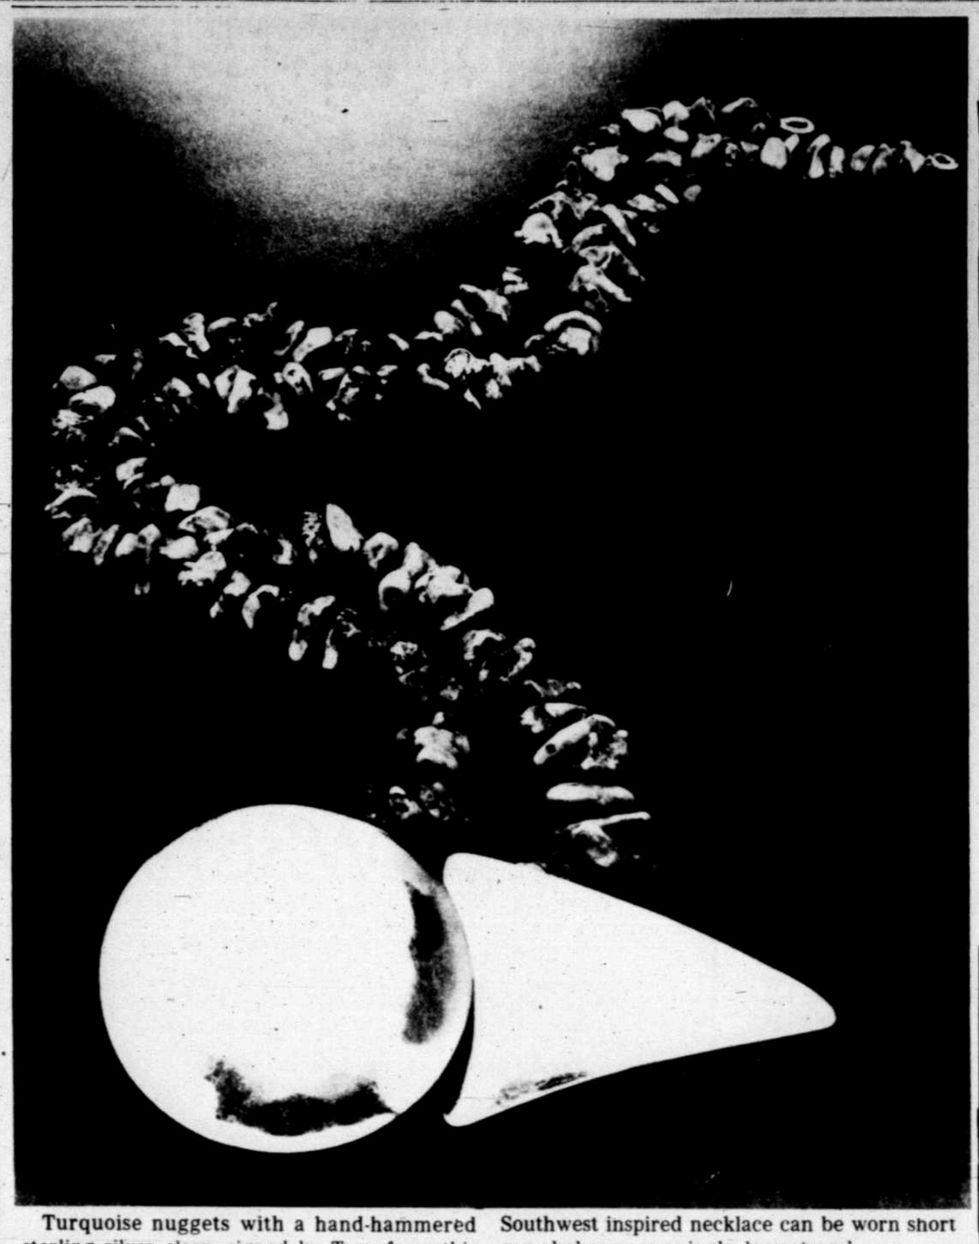

After all pieces for the ruffle have been sewn together, do the hemming. It is so much easier to hem a flat, straight piece than one that has already been ruffled.

To gather the top of the ruffle, divide it into sections and work with each section separately. Place a length of cording (carpet thread, pearl cotton, etc.) just inside the seamline. Zigzag over the cording, being very careful not to stitch through it. Draw up cord to gather. Works great.

Pin ruffle to skirt edge at seams, notches, dots, etc. Working with small sections at a time, adjust gathers. Stitch. Stitch again ⅜ inch from first stitching. Trim close to second stitching.

If the seam allowance is a little cantankerous and doesn't want to stay "pressed up," top stitch through skirt and seam allowances near seam.

To shorten a skirt that is already made, work from the waistband. Much easier than redoing the ruffle.

Turquoise nuggets with a hand-hammered sterling silver clasp, signed by Tess, form this "The Moon and the Mountain" design. This Southwest inspired necklace can be worn short as a choker or as a single, long strand.

Sterling silver line begun

NEW YORK, N.Y. — After years of creating sterling silver jewelry for herself and for friends, Tess Sholom of Tess Designs has gone public with a line of sterling silver jewelry. The line includes some of Tess's most popular designs, worked for the first time in precious metal: The Nefertiti necklace, the graceful V-shaped collar that makes every woman look as elegantly swan-necked as the fabled queen; the Force of Gravity belt buckle, and other earrings, cuffs and belt buckles.

"I've always believed in creating designs that last," says Tess. "Now I've decided it's time to give my pieces greater intrinsic value, too. By making jewelry in sterling silver I give women the opportunity to buy affordable high fashion that's valuable and a good investment, too."

Tess believes silver is particularly right just now.

"Silver is a natural evolution of the metallics trend. It's cool-looking for spring and summer, and looks wonderful against a tan and with the brights that are so important this spring and summer."

Among the new designs appearing exclusively in the sterling line is a necklace of turquoise nuggets with a large, abstract, hand-worked silver clasp. Evocative of Indian designs, yet totally modern, it is called "The Moon and the Mountain."

Retailers in the Southwest have been among the first to buy it, placing good orders almost immediately. "The Moon and the Mountain" and other designs from the sterling line are available through the Tess Designs showroom and will be in stores this spring.

Finding right clothing for elderly

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Finding clothes they like that fit is one of the biggest problems older men and women have, says Carolyn Flowers.

An assistant professor in home economics at Oklahoma State University, she is doing research on clothing and the elderly for her doctoral study.

After interviewing persons 65 and older in Minnesota and Oklahoma to find what they like and want in clothing, she feels myths about what the old can't do or wear need to be debunked.

"The elderly are not different than anyone else the moment they hit the magic age of 65," she says. "They don't suddenly become cripples. Many of them do things 100 percent better than I can and they still want attractive, comfortable clothing."

Because of her study, and action by older persons themselves, Mrs. Flowers hopes clothing manufacturers will create pleasing clothes that fit men and women whose figures change as they age.

She explains that effects of gravity over the years cause figures to compress — making people shorter and their waists bigger.

"For women who stay slim and trim all their lives, finding suitable clothing is usually a problem unless they are willing to shop in the Children's or Junior Misses departments," Mrs. Flowers says.

Older women's necks tend to become crepe-like but designers are making dresses and blouses with no collars — only notches that don't flatter aging necks, she says.

"As men age, their waists tend to thicken and they develop pot bellies, creating the need for jackets that cover up these figure changes," Mrs. Flowers points out.

"Older men also need, but can't often find, pants with an extra-long crotch to accommodate their larger abdomens," she explains.

Mrs. Flowers finds that older persons prefer bright colors — not the ugly grays, black, navy, brown and other dark colors generally considered the preference of senior citizens.

Savor the delights of a European vacation

By BILL FREDDE
(Special To The Reporter-Telegram)

Going to Europe this year?

Whether it's your first visit or a return to renew old acquaintances, don't just dash through Europe visiting seven countries in seven days. Broaden your travel horizons, get out of the capital cities as alluring as they may be, and savor the delights of Europe the way Europeans have been savoring it for centuries — take a Rhine cruise into the heart of Europe.

The unique experience of a luxurious river cruise on the Rhine can satisfy any of your travel desires. No river has determined the course of European history more than the Rhine. It can provide the stuff of dreams; glamour, grandeur, pageantry, antiquity, spectacular mountains and pastoral scenes. Flowing through the heart of the continent from the Alps to the North Sea, it passes through Switzerland, France, Germany and Holland. Along its banks, for you to savor, are magnificent monuments and historic sophisticated and legendary cities, tranquil villages, secluded valleys and lofty peaks, the infinite variety of European cultures, cuisine and customs and above all her people.

But, perhaps the greatest attraction of a Rhine cruise is that it allows you to savor Europe the same way you would a fine wine — slowly. The scenery drifts slowly by and from early morning until late evening there is a constant succession of new and hitherto unknown things to be seen. Far away from the incessant din of modern traffic you travel at a leisurely pace from city to city and from one place of interest to another. Your ship will make numerous stops along the way so you will have plenty of time and opportunity to go on memorable sightseeing tours and excursions.

The KD German Rhine Line has the oldest tradition of any shipping company operating on the Rhine. Its eight ships, the Deutschland, Britannia, France, Nederland, Helvetia, Austria, Italia and Europa, are luxurious floating hotels. Each features spacious, comfortably furnished outside cabins, elegant lounges, dining rooms with large windows offering an uninterrupted view of both banks, a glass-enclosed observation lounge, large sundeck, reading room and many other amenities.

In 1982, KD German Rhine Line is operating more than 350 sailings from early April to mid-October. Four-country deluxe cruises aboard four ships — the Brittania, Deutschland, France and Nederland — are priced from $565 to $675 for the four-day downstream trip from Basel through France and Germany to Holland and from $595 to $705 for the five-day upstream trip from Rotterdam or Amsterdam to Basel. Three- and four-day sectional voyages between a Dutch port and Strasbough or between Dusseldorf and Basel range from $424 to $565.

During your cruise on the Rhine you will traverse the entire navigable part of the Rhine, some 520 miles from the North Sea to the Alps. You can begin your cruise in either Rotterdam or Amsterdam and travel upstream to Basel, or vice versa. The upstream cruises take five days and downstream takes four.

All of the cruises take you through the Rhine delta and its typical Dutch scenery of windmills, sea breezes and intense shipping activity. If cruising upstream soon after Nijmegen your ship will enter the Rhine where shortly afterwards the German border will begin. You will continue along the Lower Rhine past the impressive industrial complexes of the Ruhr and the elegant metropolis of Dusseldorf.

Continuing on to the beautiful old Swiss town of Basel, you will get to know Cologne and its magnificent Gothic cathedral; Bonn, the Federal German capital and birthplace of Beethoven; the famed Seven Mountains and Drachenfels; the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein; the castles and vineyards of the Rhine Valley; the foothills of the Black Forest and the Gothic cathedral and delightful Old Town of the Alsace metropolis of Strasbough; the French Rhine Canal and its nine impressive lock systems and the medieval town of Breisach.

Whether cruising upstream or downstream, passengers very quickly begin to understand why the classic beauty of the Rhine has been sung for),000 years. The valley of the Middle Rhine is my favorite part of the river. Here the Rhine is narrow and winding and the scenery alternates between majestic old castles and steep vineyard — quilted slopes. Just south of Koblenzs, the Marksburg Castle, the only fully preserved castle on the Rhine, overlooks the town of Braubach. It has been a mining town since pre-Roman days, and the medieval turrets of Marksburg provide an incongruous contrast to the town's modern three mine smokestacks.

Two bends of the Rhine from Braubach is Boppard, a lovely little spa dominated by the 12th century Marienburg convent. Here passengers can take a chair-lift to a point of unusual interest, the View of the Four Lakes — not lakes at all, but four sections of the Rhine that seem separate and create the illusion of lakes. Across the way stand two castles — Serrenberg and Liebenstein. The story goes that two brothers who lived in Sterrenberg became such deadly enemies that a double sentry wall was built to protect one from the other. But sentries can be bribed, and one brother died by the other's hand. The second castle, Leibenstein, came to stand for the victim and even today the two castles are known as the "hostile brothers."

Three more famous castles command the next stretch of the river, where the famed St. Goar's and St. Goarshausen vineyards face each other on either bank. Count Katzeneinbogen of St. Goar was a punster who named his majestic home Burg Katz — because, he said, he would one day devour the smaller castle of Thurnburg to the north as a cat would a mouse. So Thornburg is nicknamed Burg Maus (the "mouse" castle). But the structure that overshadows both is Burg Rheinfels, once the mightiest castle on the Rhine. It took more than 300 years to complete but just a few days of the French Revolution to destroy. Yet its ruins still project its mighty grandeur.

In the narrow gorge just south of Burg Katz, voyagers will see the legendary Lorelei Rock. Legend has it that boatmen who plyed the river a millenium ago were lured to their deaths on the treacherous reefs at the base of the massive crag by the singing of a beautiful woman dressed in white.

From Lorelei Rock the Rhine glides past wine villages and castles in almost swift succession. Oberwesel, a picture of the 14th century, the Schonburg castle. The historic toll house castle, Pfaiz, Bacharach, with Stahleck castle, Niederheimbach, Heimburg castle, Sooneck castle, Trechtingshausen, Burg Rheinstein and Burg Reichenstein. The Mauseturm castle, opposite Assmannshausen, Rudesheim and the Ehrenfels ruin. Bingen and Burg Klopp Vineyard and castle, castle and village, village and vineyard, as far as the eye can see in any direction, a graceful analgam of what use to be and what is.

ON DECK — "For me, the very best hours are those on deck—watching an infinity of inlets and bays and small islands—wishing for enough time in life to explore them all closer to hand..."

Alaska: What is available this year

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

Alaska's amazingly diverse regions beckon to both the explorer wishing to stick close to nature and the sophisticated traveler looking for a comfortable adventure. One of the 49th state's characteristics is that it's well equipped to satisfy both.

For a comprehensive list of attractions and facilities, write for a copy of the 131-page "Worlds of Alaska and Canada's Yukon" guide. It's available free from the Alaska State Division of Tourism, Pouch E, Juneau, Alaska 99811.

What follows is a brief roundup of some of the options available this year.

Spring and fall are the value seasons for cruising and touring Alaska, according to Westours, one of the top cruise and tour companies specializing in Alaska. The "off-season" traveler (in May, early June and September) can save up to 20 percent on cruise tours alone, and more than 10 percent on cruises.

While value is an important consideration, there are other reasons to consider a visit north in the spring and fall. U.S. Weather Bureau statistics point out that rainfall in May and June is generally less than in the peak tourist months of July and August. And the temperature varies surprisingly little in Alaska during the five months of Westours' cruise and tour season.

SPRING AND FALL are also the prime times for spotting and photographing wildlife, game and wild flowers, some of Alaska's most remarkable attractions. Sightings of mountain sheep, moose, grizzly bears, bald eagles and other wildlife are a frequent and rewarding experience. And Alaska in the off season is a shutterbug's dream.

NATURE EXPEDITIONS International has scheduled three departures of an Alaskan Inland Passage Expedition that will be offered for the first time this summer. This 10-day wildlife and cultural journey — departing June 27, July 25 and Aug. 8 — concentrates on the history and Indian culture of Sitka, the wildlife of Admiralty Island, and the glaciers and fjords of Tracey Arm Inlet. The price of $1,590 includes hotel and ship accommodations as well as most meals. Led by a professional naturalist, each trip will be limited to 10 members.

Traveling abroad the 50-foot motor-yacht M.V. Chaik, participants will have a rare opportunity to discover the history, culture and lifestyle of the Tlingit Indians in Sitka and the remote village of Angoon. The expedition then explores Admiralty Island National Monument, known for the largest bald eagle population in the world and one of the largest brown bear concentrations in Alaska. The final highlight includes a cruise through Tracey Arm Inlet to observe humpback whales, glaciers and deep fjords that rival Glacier Bay for beauty and scenic wilderness.

In addition, NEI will continue to offer its 17-day Alaska Wildlife Expedition. This year's departures will be June 11, July 9, Aug. 6 and Aug. 20. The emphasis on these trips centers on the wildlife and natural history of Glacier Bay, Katmai and Denali National Parks. The $2,290 cost covers accommodations, most meals, guides and local transportation.

For additional details contact Nature Expeditions International, P.O. Box 182, 599 College Ave., Palo Alto, Calif. 94306.

NATURE GAVE SOUTHEAST Alaska a landscape which man has found difficult to conquer. The rugged, forested mountains dropping steeply into the waters of the Inside Passage; long, narrow fjords winding inland, and innumerable islands dotting the coastline have prevented the construction of highways linking the many waterfront communities in this region.

Unable to transport people and vehicles by land, the state of Alaska in 1963 built instead a marine highway using ferry-liners to provide the vital link between the coastal towns.

The primary route of the Alaska Marine Highway System runs from either Seattle or Prince Rupert, British Columbia, to Skagway, at the northern end of the Panhandle (as the southeast corner of Alaska is known), with stops at Ketchikan, Wrangell, Petersburg, Sitka, Juneau and Haines. This route is served by the ferryboats Columbia, Malaspina, Matanuska and Taku — all comfortable and modern vessels that range in length from 352 feet to 418 feet. Each has cabins with complete facilities, as well as space for vehicles, dining areas, cocktail lounge, gift shop, solarium and spacious observation lounges.

For further details or brochures contact a travel agent or write to Leisure Tours, 3436 Tongass Ave., Ketchikan, Alaska, 99901.

Just as Alaska isn't all snow and ice, neither must travelers fly or cruise to every destination. The 49th state has a modern highway system served by a regularly scheduled bus line between late April and early October.

TRAVEL

In all, Westours will offer 46 seven-day cruises of the Inside Passage and 25 different tours, including 17 independent cruise tours and adventure cruise tours featuring backpacking and white-water rafting. First departure is May 20, the last Sept. 26.

Westours offers nearly half of all seven- and eight-day cruise ship berths from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Alaska. Voyages are aboard Holland America's Statendam, Cunard's Cunard Princess and Carnival Cruise Lines' Tropicale, the world's newest cruise liner. Sailings depart Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Additional information is available in Westours' new 88-page brochure. To obtain a copy, contact a travel agent or write Westours Inc., 300 Elliott Ave. West, Seattle, Wash. 98119.

UTPB to offer trip

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin will again offer a travel course. The four previous trips have included as destinations Mexico City twice, Merida once and, most recently, Spain in April.

This summer's course will again feature a visit to Mexico City, as well as a series of lectures on the history and the literature of Mexico.

Course will be History and Spanish 489.1, "The Panorama of Mexico." Students may enroll for three hours of credit in either discipline.

Trip dates will be June 18 through June 21. Cost is about $450, which includes round trip airfare from Midland via Braniff; three nights' accommodations (double occupancy) at the Geneve Hotel in the heart of the "Zona Rosa"; all-day tour June 19 starting at 9 a.m.; transfers between airport and hotel; luggage tips at airport and hotel in Mexico; and hotel tax.

The course will meet for three weeks from June 1-18 on Monday and Wednesday from 5:30 p.m. to 8:15 p.m., and will be available to students for undergraduate or graduate credit, or encore (audit). Students who participated in the trips to Merida or to Spain are eligible to take this course for credit, since the subject matter is different.

For more information, contact Frank Samponaro, Ph.D., at 367-2116, or Genaro J. Perez, Ph.D., at 367-2249.

USS Universe 'Thinkers' ship offers new vistas

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

Imagine lifting a college dormitory from its foundations, attaching a student union, library, cafeteria and classrooms, then sailing it around the world for a 100-day semester.

What you would have is the S.S. Universe, a floating campus operated by the Institute for Shipboard Education.

For 105 days a year World Explorer Cruises takes over and the campus turns into a playground for adults who sail to the Caribbean in winter and along the coast of Alaska in summer.

The campus isn't transformed into a castle for its passenger-cruise days. The accommodations are Spartan, by luxury cruise standards. But so are the prices, as little as $100 a day.

There are glitches. Most of the Chinese dining room crew, accustomed to serving students cafeteria-style, seemed confused by the long menus and tableside service in the dining room, and the cuisine, while ample, definitely is not haute.

Upper bunks that are an easy vault for an agile collegian proved a challenge for some of the older passengers.

Venerable bartender Whiskey Wong, more accustomed to the beer and wine set, can make a mean martini, which made up in part for the lack of ingredients to whip up Ramos Fizzes, Pina Coladas and other luscious libations popular in the Caribbean and Gulf.

But there are benefits in this campus-to-cruise changeover, chief among them a library packed with books on the culture and history of the various ports of call. It's a gold mine for the passenger who wants to stretch out on a deck chair and devour a week's worth of reading.

You might call this the thinking passenger's cruise.

"We emphasize history, culture, geology, education and anthropology," said Ronald A. Williams, general manager of World Explorer Cruises. To that end, Dr. Max H. Brandt gave several lectures on Caribbean music and folklore, and Bruce Taszarek lectured on the Mayan culture and Mexico. Persons who registered for the lectures earned a unit of college credit.

The talks gave a broadened dimension to land tours that included Coba, an enormous Mayan city still being excavated; Tulum, a cliff-top collection of temples; and Chichen-Itza, the magnificent Mayan-Toltec site with its towering temples.

After a week-long trip that included stops in Playa del Carmen in Yucatan's Gulf of Campeche; the island of Cozumel; and Ocho Rios, Jamaica, the Universe returned to Port Everglades for three weeks' dry dock.

The ship would complete two 14-day trans-canal cruises from Port Everglades to Acapulco and back, then be readied for a change back to campus status. The spring semester begins March 4, ending with Seattle as final port of call, June 13.

While most of the passengers during the semester are students, there are a limited number of adults who take the cruises for pleasure. The around-the-world student cruise costs upwards of $7,000, Brandt said, and non-student passengers have to be "flexible" about noise, but it's a bargain by any standard.

If ships have personalities, the Universe's is certainly split into two, as it shifts back again to purely passenger status for five 14-day cruises along the inland passage in Alaska. They commence June 27, departing from Vancouver and stretching north to Ketchikan, Glacier Bay, Juneau, Valdez, Columbia Glacier, the artist's colony of Homer and Anchorage, where optional tours fly over Mt. McKinley on the way to Kotzebue and Fairbanks.

World Explorer has been organizing the Alaskan cruises since 1978, Williams said.

While they're the same "no-frills" cruises as the Caribbean trips, the ship has its fans. Many of the passengers we encountered were veterans of the Alaska runs.

For them, a journey on this campus-turned-cruise ship was a homecoming celebration.

Orient opens up to American

Dignity of Japan stands tall

By BUD POLIQUIN
Copley News Service

Naoto Aoyama listened to the questions, one after the other. The ones about his countrymen's apparent rampant honesty and respect. The ones about the geography of his land. The ones about the days of warlords.

And with each question came a polite response. Calculated, thorough, and submitted with great patience.

But finally, Aoyama, ever so dignified in his role as a host to a handful of American journalists on tour of Japan, shrugged and smiled.

"What we take for granted," he said, "seems very strange to foreign people."

But there is a reason.

To see hundreds of unlocked bicycles parked on curbs, to see train stations with no graffiti, to see milk bottles lined intact along a sidewalk next to an apartment building on a busy downtown strip is to see things not seen in America.

TO SEE 20TH-CENTURY people walking the streets in clothes from another time, to see raw fish staring back at you from your plate, to see rickshaws being pulled beneath skyscrapers is to see things that can not possibly be taken for granted. Especially by someone whose only previous exposure to Japan could have been captured on the back of a postage stamp.

Indeed, if one chooses to allow it to be so, Japan can be a giant box of Crackerjacks, but one with prize after prize on the inside, not just one. There are places to go, there are things to see, there are things to file in one's memory forever. ...

KUMAMOTO — One, two, three, four, five ... 73, 74 75, 76, 77 ... 122, 123, 124, 125, 126 ... 155, 156, 157, 158, 159 steps. Straight up, around and around the staircase, to the top of Kumamoto Castle. Finally. It, gasp, had better be worth it.

And it is, because once you drag yourself to the top, once you look out over the hills and mountains that surround this grand fortress that has seen 375 winters, once you feel the ghosts of the yelping warriors, you quickly forget about your panting breath.

This is history. This is one of the three great castles erected in Japan, the others being those located in Osaka and Nagoya. This is the stoned mass of power — 5.3 kilometers in circumference and with 49 turrets and 29 gates — built over a six-year period (1601-1607) by Kiyomasa Kato.

So when one hits the last of those 159 steps and looks below at the field that hosted such encounters as the bloody Battle of Seinan-No-Eki in 1877, he looks beyond the tennis courts, the parked Toyotas and the camera-clickers. He looks to the past. And he understands that the huffing and puffing was not too high a price to pay.

IBUSKI - A fighter plane, pock-marked by the years it spent at the bottom of the sea, sits on the balcony. A statue of a teen-ager in flight gear stands out front in the rain, a half-dozen oranges — that day's offering — at its feet. Inside, the recorded sounds of whistling bullets, wounded planes and shrieking pilots attack the ears.

The site is the shrine/museum of those 600-odd kamikazee pilots who died during their missions in World War II. With pictures of the dead on the walls and their personal effects in glass cases, it is, perhaps, a tribute to insanity.

The Kamikazee Corps numbered 1,015 according to a notice on display, and most of them were 16 or 17 year of age. It seems their duty was rather clear: In the name of patriotism, they were to volunteer to commit suicide by crashing their planes into the enemy.

"I know of one man who lives in shame to this day," Aoyama said. "On the day his classmates were taken from their school to become kamikazee pilots, he was sick and at home. He was not chosen and his friends went on to die. He feels shame even now that he did not die with them."

A postscript to this is that kamikazee translates to mean "God's Wind." A curious perception of God, indeed.

KYOTO — The paths, flanked on the sides by occasional aged and deserted living quarters, are nice enough, winding through bamboo gardens over here and past a waterfall over there. And the lush greenery, so thick that it blots out any sky overhead, forms a leak-proof, botanical ceiling.

But then a corner is rounded and the dazzle is seen. If the sun ever became a building it would become Kinkakuji Temple. It would become Golden Pavilion.

Built in 1397 by Yoshimitsu Ashikaga, the three-level temple of gold sits on the Lake of the Mirror, which of course makes the structure look as if it is comprised of six levels. The point is, Ashikaga knew how to spend his, er, golden years, as they are called in the states.

Yoshimitsu Ashikaga built this three-level temple of gold in 1397 on the Lake of the Mirror. Only serenity prevails in this sun structure, where Yoshimitsu spent his retired life in Zen meditation, tea ceremonies and poem writing.

'A la Francaise' vacations launched in catalogue

From Paris to Papeete, Grenoble to Guadeloupe, French-speaking destinations have always had a special appeal for American travelers. Now a selection of tours called "Jet Vacatins a la Francaise" has been launched in the U.S. devoted exclusively to France and other French-oriented countries.

Poor man's Kyoto

That's Fukuoka

By JOHN PINKERMAN
Copley News Service

FUKUOKA — This city of a million people is Japan's ninth largest. It is the center of politics, industry and commerce in Kyushu, the southernmost of four main islands.

That means bedlam, right?

Wrong. Fukuoka is a marvelous escape from Tokyo, if rubbing elbows with 14 million Japanese in the capital city bothers you (it doesn't bother me). Fukuoka is more. It has a stirring history, with some evidence remaining from the 13th century. It is a religious center. Its food is superb, especially its seafood, although you might be cautious regarding globefish, sometimes called puffer. All in all, Fukuoka's pace and charm might remind you of Kyoto. It could be called a "poor man's Kyoto" and there is no intention here to offend anyone.

There are dozens of parks, most of them just a few minutes from the downtown shopping area. There is the Naka River, which in effect separates Hakata from Fukuoka because while the whole area takes the name of Fukuoka it is really two cities, as Buda and Pest are in Hungary.

One park you should enjoy is Ohori Park. There you might stretch your legs, enjoy the friendly smiles of young and old, observe a flock of gulls resting, one on a fence post, as the fence extends across the lake that is part of the park. Also, there is the chance to take a walk of little more than a mile around the lake.

At another seaside vantage point you can see the remains of a 13th century seawall built by the Japanese to ward off attack by armadas of the Mongols in 1274 and 1281. Legend or history, be my guest, but the story is that the Mongols made it ashore once, went back to their ships at night — at which time the ranking Buddhist priest of the time, one Nichiren, called on the gods and they responded with kamikaze winds, devil suicide winds that destroyed the invaders' fleet. A statue of enormous size honors Nichiren for his miracle.

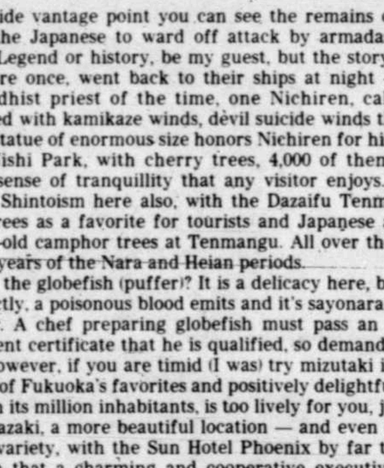

There also is Nishi Park, with cherry trees, 4,000 of them, azaleas by the thousands and a sense of tranquillity that any visitor enjoys. There is a good representation of Shintoism here also, with the Dazaifu Tenmangu Shrine and its 3,000 apricot trees as a favorite for tourists and Japanese alike. There even are two 2,000-year-old camphor trees at Tenmangu. All over the city is evidence of the flourishing years of the Nara and Heian periods.

But, what about the globefish (puffer)? It is a delicacy here, but beware. If it is not cleaned correctly, a poisonous blood emits and it's sayonara (goodbye) for the enthusiastic diner. A chef preparing globefish must pass an examination and obtain a government certificate that he is qualified, so demand to see his papers when ordering. However, if you are timid (I was) try mizutaki instead. It's a rich chicken stew, one of Fukuoka's favorites and positively delightful.

If Fukuoka, with its million inhabitants, is too lively for you, jump a plane, ride 40 minutes to Miyazaki, a more beautiful location — and even quieter. Its hotels are of the resort variety, with the Sun Hotel Phoenix by far the best, if for no other reason than that a charming and cooperative executive named Kazuko Nishimura will greet you on arrival — and she will make certain your stay is a pleasant one.

The hotel complex includes a magnificent 18-hole golf course, with many wooded areas wherein you can search for that elusive little white ball. There also are parks and shrines and temples by the dozens. One monument you should see. It is in Heiwadi Park and it is a "peace" monument built of stone and rock collected from most nations in the world. The ironic part of the story is that the United States sent a beautiful piece of marble for this dedication to peace, which was finished late in 1940, just one year before the Japanese attack on America's Pearl Harbor.

Aoshima is a small island and a beautiful one, and claimed by elderly Japanese to be a favorite of newly married couples, praying for a happy life and lots of children. However, on this visit there were mostly the elderly, and one young single Japanese man remarked, "Young Japanese couples aren't so anxious to have children these days, especially at first, so lots of them avoid this place." The same thinking holds true for the Udo Shrine, at a Pacific Ocean seaside area; lots of older Japanese but not many young honeymooners.

Professional color analyst to give AAUW program

"The Hue For You," or how to choose those colors which enhance you personally, will be explained by Robin Rainbolt, professional color analyst, to members of the Midland branch of the American Association of University Women.

The luncheon meeting will be held at Trinity Presbyterian Church Thursday beginning at 10:15 a.m., with election and installation of officers scheduled.

"Personal colorization has become a pleasant way to eliminate all those 'impulse buying mistakes' which prove costly because they are not within the range of colors most flattering to the wearer," explains Ms.Rainbolt.

Using 100 color swatches draped about the individual being analyzed, the two basic complexion undertones of blue or yellow balanced with the natural hair color reveal a surprising relationship with the four seasons. Women having had colorization now say they are a summer, fall, spring or winter person, compatible with the dominant colors of nature's own progression of time.

Members may make reservations by calling 682-1283 or 694-8212 after 5 p.m.

Single-family homes are shrinking in size

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

Prepare for a tight squeeze when you move into your future new home. Newly constructed houses are getting smaller and include fewer amenities.

On the other hand, new apartment units are increasing in size, and included more amenities. But the numbers of units being produced are way down.

As for single-family homes, the long-standing trend toward larger living space and more amenities has finally been reversed, according to a report from the U.S. Census Bureau. The spacious, luxurious home is definitely shrinking and becoming more "basic."

The median-sized home built last year included 1,595 square feet of living areas — 50 feet less than the median-sized home built during the previous year.

In 1979, about 74 percent of new homes included two or more bathrooms. That proportion is now down to about 72 percent.

In 1978, over 62 percent of new homes had one or more fireplaces. That appealing amenity is now offered in only about 55 percent of new homes. Other nonessential features and built-in components are being eliminated in an increasing number of new home plans.

It's all in the interests of planning and producing homes that are acceptable and affordable for a significant segment of the home-buying market. That's quite a challenge in today's cross-winds climate of inflation and recession.

People want a home of their own today as much as ever before. To obtain it, they are generally less inclined to demand spaciousness and luxury features in that home.

The most rapidly growing phase of new housing production is seen in the condominium market. Condos accounted for 13 percent of all housing construction starts last year, and a bit over a third of all multifamily housing starts.

The number of owner-occupied condos in the United States has nearly doubled since 1975.

On the other side of the coin, the number of rental apartment units is decreasing. Builders, developers and investors are backing off from planning and producing new rental units.

This lack of interest and motivation to develop new rental units is primarily pegged to high costs of land and construction, high cost of financing, limited potential rental income, rent controls or the threat of rent control.

The rental units that are being produced tend to be larger and more luxurious than those produced in past years — keyed to the market of affluent renters.

Rental vacancy rates are now generally around the 5 percent mark, but that factor varies greatly from city to city. In Los Angeles and Miami, for example, the vacancy rate is less than 1 percent. In Phoenix it's about 15 percent.

Q. How are current real estate market problems affecting the relocation of corporate transferees?

A. The number of transferees has remained surprisingly high, even though the cost of each inter-city relocation is increasing substantially. More corporations are actively assisting their transferred employees in selling one home and purchasing another in the destination city — or contracting with a relocation organization to provide the services.

Surgery helpful for noisy dog

By H.P. JANS
D.V.M.

Q. I have a shorthaired pointer, 5 months old, but am afraid I will have to get rid of her because the neighbors will start to complain. She barks continuously day and night, no matter what I do.

I have tied her poor mouth with a silk stocking but am afraid it will ruin her disposition. She is lovable and good otherwise. Will tying her mouth make her more nervous?

I was told to have her vocal chords removed, but how can she let me know if strangers enter my yard if she has no vocal chords?

Please let me know what I can do for her, if anything. I also have two small poodles, but they are house dogs and only bark if someone comes to the door.

A. I would recommend surgery on the voice box. This has a relatively short post-surgery recovery period and permits the dog to do what it wants without being chastized by harsh words or cruel gadgets.

A dog barks by instinct or impulse — not to hear its "lovely voice," so there is no frustration on the dog's part after the surgery.

This surgery does not render the dog completely silent. When he barks a sound is heard — but rather gentle, not the annoying regular bark.

Q. I would like to know if cats are rare when they have round pupils. My cats eyes are not slanted like other black cats I have seen. His eyes are round, about the size of a penny, and are black. — T.B., Gulfport, Miss.

A. It would appear that you have an unusual feature in your cat. The important factor to be aware of is whether or not the pupils remain dilated, that is large and round, all the time.

If they do not constrict (become smaller) in the presence of direct light, there may be a medical problem that should be checked by your veterinarian.

Master Work

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

In 1916, he took his first photograph. He was 14 years old. The scene was a familiar one to him — Yosemite Valley.

Little did anyone know he had begun a career which was to span over five decades, one which would reflect a profound respect for and deep love of nature. A career in which he would create photographs that did more than merely record a scene; making prints, which he spent painstaking hours producing, that used the subject matter to communicate other feelings, thus enabling many of those who view them to see in a new way that which they might otherwise have taken for granted.

Born in 1902 in San Francisco, Ansel Adams spent his early years caught between two possible futures — photography or music. He began playing the piano at age 12, performing as a concert pianist at 18. Both loves brought him to another lifetime love — Virginia Cassie Best, the daughter of landscape painter Harry Cassie Best.

Miss Best's father had a house with a studio at Yosemite. Within this home was the only piano in the park. A mutual friend, Ansel Hall, introduced the two by saying, "I've got a namesake here, Ansel Adams, and he wants to use your piano." The two were married in 1928.

Although Adams had been leaning toward a career in photography, he was still undecided until, at the age of 28, he met Paul Strand during a trip to Santa Fe.

"I knew then that there was nothing photography could not do," Adams said in a 1979 Esquire article. His talent might match his drive in photography, as he had come to realize it would not in music.

"I would have been very good, but not a soloist. I would have become an excellent accompanist," Adams told Esquire.

Some of the results of his choice can be seen at Midland College's McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, through April 30. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday. The show is free.

This 40-piece traveling exhibit, "Ansel Adams: A Survey," was organized by the Center for Creative Photography, at the University of Arizona at Tucson, where Adams' archives are kept.

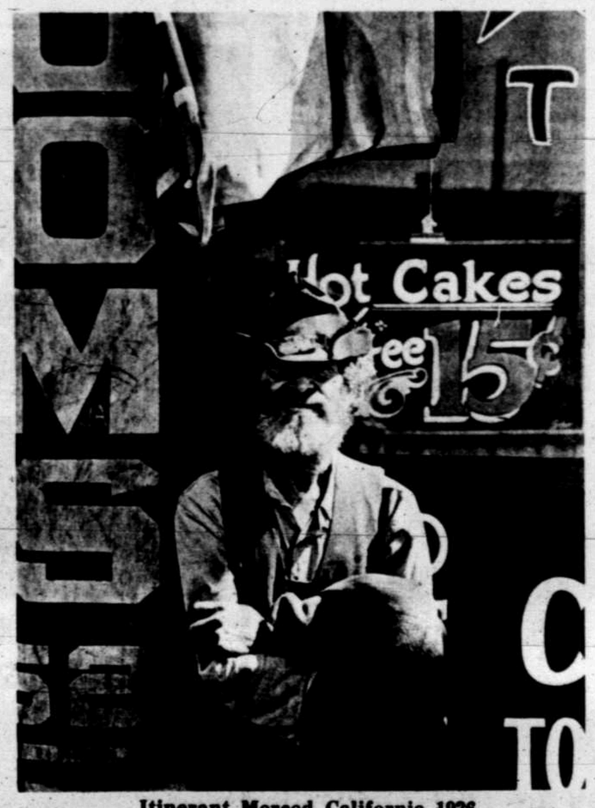

The earliest work featured in the show is the 1926 photograph, "Monolith, The Face of Half Dome, Yosemite National Park, California." It was this work which Adams described to Esquire as his first "visualization. I took a conventional exposure, but it didn't look anything like what I felt about it. I knew I wanted a brooding black sky; I could almost see the image." Adams succeeded in achieving the desired effect with his second and last exposure.

His statement in Esquire about the experience perhaps sums up Adams' approach to his work. "I wanted to repeat that perfection."

Although many feel he has captured perfection in a number of his works through the years, at 80, Adams is still searching for the perfect picture.

The unicorn lives again

Horning in on ancient myth

By NOEL OSMENT
Copley News Service

About the only place unicorns have yet to appear is on tennis shirts.

They can be found on calendars, stationery and greeting cards — unicorn cards were big-sellers at Christmas, according to the Hallmark people — fashioned into charms and pendants, rubber stamps and figurines as well as into stuffed toys, some three feet tall.

For years, Spring Valley, Calif., artist, Mother Kimbrough has incorporated unicorns into her primitive paintings of rural scenes. And late next year an animated film, "The Last Unicorn," about a lady unicorn on a quest for her lost race, will be released. Among those supplying voices will be Mia Farrow, Tammy Grimes and Alan Arkin.

And Harold Darling of Green Tiger Press says that the publishing company's "A Book of Unicorns," brought out in 1978, has been its all-time best seller.

"I certainly hope we're not going to have unicorn pollution," wails Marty Proctor of New York City, whose fascination with the mythical, horselike creature bearing a single horn led him to found a Greenwich Village shop, Unicorn City, about seven years ago which he calls a "total unicorn environment."

He likes to claim credit for publishing the first unicorn greeting card and now laments. "There are quadzillion unicorn greeting cards — I'm afraid it's becoming a chop suey."

Nevertheless, he does a brisk business in all types of unicorn paraphernalia, including jade pendants he began commissioning in China about four years ago, and porcelain and pewter miniatures in limited editions.

The truth is, however, unicorn lore and artistic depictions of unicorns have been prevalent since ancient times.

Julius Caesar believed in unicorns. So did Pliny and Aristotle and the 70 or so Hebrews who translated the Old Testament into Greek, a version known as the Septuagint, in the second or third century B.C.

However, the perception of the unicorn of early times was not the fanciful, gentle animal as it appears now, but of some kind of powerful, elusive beast, based on sightings of a variety of animals in the deserts and mountains of North Africa, the Middle East and India.

Two of the animals who gave rise to the stories of a unicorn, the Indian rhinoceros and the Arabian oryx, reside at the San Diego Wild Animal Park in California.

On a recent afternoon at the park, it was difficult to imagine that Japeuri, one of the park's four Indian rhinos, could have had any connection with the graceful unicorn of today.

The huge animal, all 8,000 pounds of him, ambled up and pushed tightly against the field-keeper's battered pickup truck, attracted by the tub of carrots and yams in the back. Drooling, he opened his two-foot-long jaws, waiting for someone to carefully place an enormous carrot on his tongue, just behind two yellowed lower fangs. His jaws closed and a rumbling, crunching sound seemed to come from deep inside. He opened his mouth again for another carrot.

The field-keeper warned visitors traveling with him not to get between the animal and the truck for it could could crush them.

That, it appears, is about the only dangerous quality exhibited by Japeuri, raised among people since his birth in 1961 in a zoo in Switzerland. Japeuri's single horn may have seen battle at some time, for it was cracked and eroded, a rather dingy pyramid atop the beast's nose. It certainly did not seem to be "a cubit-long horn with a white base, black middle and red top," as a single-horned animal was described by the Greek physician Ctesias in about 400 B.C.

But then Ctesias, who also described his unicorn as an "Indian wild ass with a white body, purple head ... fleet and fierce," had not actually seen one. It is considered possible that he was attributing qualities such as fleetness found in wild asses, which he may have seen, to Indian rhinos, which he had learned about from travelers to India. They may have seen cups, decorated in colors, made from the rhino horn. For even then, mystical qualities of health and power were attributed to the animal, and it was believed the horn, ground into a powder, had strong medicinal qualities, or that liquid drunk from the horn was purified.

These mystic qualities persisted as the concept of a unicorn persisted, its shape and nature varying, over the centuries. With the introduction of Christianity, the unicorn became part of the symbolism, even becoming an allegory for Christ, beginning with early Christian writings in Alexandria.

By then the notion had spread that the unicorn could be tamed only by a virgin, in whose lap it would lay its head. Thus, it could be captured by hunters. In some early writings the virgin became the Virgin Mary and the huntsman the Holy Spirit, leading, thus, to the incarnation of Christ.

As the unicorn left the real animal realm for the allegorical, its depiction changed from that of a fierce beast to the animal we think of as the unicorn — delicate and gentle, although strong in battle, feral and mysterious. It began appearing solitary and mysterious in sylvan glades or in flower-bedecked settings.

It is found in abundance in medieval tapestries and ultimately appeared — and still appears — on the British Royal Coat of Arms along with the lion, its frequent competitor in mythological battle.

More like the later concept of the unicorns are the Arabian oryxes, slender-legged creatures with long, straight, tapered horns. They seem nervous and wary as visitors enter their enclosure at the Wild Animal Park and were particularly protective on a recent day, since a three-day-old baby oryx needed protection. Every now and then, one would stand motionless, its head visible in profile, momentarily looking like the classical unicorn.

The Indian rhinos and the Arabian oryxes are endangered species, and the San Diego Zoo counts its four Indian rhinos among its most valuable animals, since they had become so rare in the wild. It was the reputation of the mystical powers of their horns that nearly caused their extinction, for up until the present day they were hunted for the horn. Belief in its curative powers persisted through the centuries and Queen Elizabeth I was said to have drunk from a cup made of one of the horns.

The rhinoceros horn also was recognized as a powerful curative in China, but it was never confused there with the Ki-lin, the much-revered Chinese unicorn, considered the king of animals. The appearance of a Ki-lin was always considered a propitious sign, and the legend is that one appeared to Confucius' mother on the eve of his birth. Thus, according to Odell Shepard, author of "The Lore of the Unicorn," pictures of the Ki-lin were traditionally pinned up in the women's quarters of Chinese homes in hopes that the women would bear great men.

DEAR ABBY

Would-be bride trips, stumbles, falls

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: How do you get a man to propose marriage? I've tried every approach I can think of.

I've played hard to get. When that didn't work, I let him know he could have whatever he wanted. I've told him I didn't mind if he wanted to date others. No reaction. Then I acted jealous and possessive when he as much as looked at another woman. Still no reaction.

I've tried pursuing him shamelessly. He said he didn't like to be pressured, so I quit calling him and waited for him to call me.

I've tried being vivacious, exuberant and extroverted. That didn't work, so I toned down and came on more laid-back, subdued and ladylike. Abby, nothing seems to work, and I am desperate to marry this man.

What is wrong with me? — OPEN FOR SUGGESTIONS

DEAR OPEN: You ask what is wrong with you. Which you? The woman who's hard to get, or the woman who's easy? The liberal, broadminded woman who's willing to share him? Or the jealous, possessive one? The aggressive huntress or the shy, retiring maiden who waits to be pursued?

Be yourself and quit acting. He may find the real you refreshingly appealing. And if that doesn't work, you haven't lost anything because so far you've batted zero.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for agreeing with "Bothered and Bewildered," the bride's mother who resented having to cart home her daughter's wedding gifts from the reception hall.

I thought I was the only person in the world who resented the thoughtlessness of those who hand-carried wedding gifts to a reception. I am from a foreign country where gifts were always delivered to the home of the bride or bridegroom, whichever was most convenient.

I am with you 100 percent. — CORPUS CHRISTI

DEAR CORPUS: So far, my mail is running 10-to-1 against us. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I strongly disagree with your answer to "Bothered and Bewildered." There are at least three good reasons why carrying wedding gifts to the reception is practical:

1. Most stores charge a delivery fee for gifts under $50.

2. Deliveries left at the door are not "safe" these days. (Many couples arrange their own wedding and both work during the day. Parents may live elsewhere.)

3. Hand-delivering gifts eliminates the uncertainty as to whether:

a. The store sent the gift.

b. The gift was actually received.

c. The bride is a slowpoke with her "thank-you" notes.

I agree that it is a burden imposed on the bride's family, but it's still the safest way to handle the gift. The bride and groom are not obligated to open any gifts at the reception. Every reception that I have ever attended has had a table available for gifts -- which is in itself a subtle reminder to those guests who still haven't bought a gift.

You say that hand-carrying a wedding gift to the reception is not an acceptable practice. I say it is a practical solution, and no one should look a gift horse in the mouth. - JANE IN SAN JOSE

DEAR ABBY: Well, excuuuuse me! I never knew it wasn't proper etiquette to bring a gift to the reception. I would think a person would be glad to get a gift no matter how it got there. — NEWS TO ME IN HARRISBURG

Secretaries to celebrate week

Plans for the local observance of Professional Secretaries Week April 18-24 have been announced by the Permian Chapter of Professional Secretaries International, the official sponsoring organization.

Sharon Taylor, president of the Permian Chapter, said that the words of President Ronald Reagan have been cited as reflective of how secretaries should be perceived. He wrote:

"Secretaries Week provides a special opportunity to recognize the invaluable contributions of the nation's secretaries to American business and government. Within any office, they provide the cohesive force that allows the engine of commerce to fulfill its goals. They are the 'ombudsmen' of daily business life in the United States—organizing, communicating and facilitating the work of our technological society.

"In addition to their traditional duties, they are being called upon to learn a variety of new and advanced skills necessary to meet the needs of our ever-changing technology. The modern secretary is essential to the flow of information in our society."

Ms. Taylor has appointed the committee for Secretaries Week. They include Joyce Lovett, chairman; Faye Hawkins, CPS, vice chairman; Ms. Lovett, Boss of the Year award chairman; Ms. Taylor, decorations; Mary Williford, representative of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association; Ms. Lovett, program; Anita Perry, publicity; Caroline Bellew, CPS, and Nelda Timberlake, CPS, registration; and Willie Mae Armstrong, CPS, and Anne Breeding, welcoming committee.

National Secretaries Day has been designated as April 20 and will be celebrated with a barbeque luncheon at the Midlan Center at noon.

Persons planning to attend should make reservations by calling Ms. Bellew at 682-9779, or Ms. Timberlake at 682-1657. Deadline for reservations is Thursday.

Royal jewels to be auctioned

NEW YORK, N.Y. — "Magnificent Jewels," including a 31.20 carat diamond ring from the estate of the legendary heiress Marjorie Merriweather Post, an unusually luminous diamond that orginally was owned by Emperor Maximilian of Mexico and a sapphire and diamond necklace once owned by Queen Cristina of Spain, will be auctioned at Christie's, 502 Park Avenue, New York City, on April 20.

The sale, organized by Francois Curiel, Christie's specialist for jewelry, includes emeralds, pink and yellow diamonds, rubies, art deco jewelry and a Cartier mystery clock. Among the 37 pieces from the estate of Marjorie Merriweather Post, who became the owner of the Postum Cereal Co. when she was only 27, is a diamond tiara, signed by Cartier, that may bring more than $60,000, an art deco ruby and diamond bracelet estimated to bring between $20,000 and $25,000, a fancy yellow diamond ring weighing almost 37 carats that may bring more than $150,000, and an antique ruby and diamond bird brooch that may bring up to $8,000. The sapphire and diamond necklace once owned by a Spanish queen may bring more than $220,000.

The Emperor Maximilian Diamond, weighing more than 41 carats, which may bring more than quarter of a million dollars, is notable for its history and for its unusually strong blue fluorescence. Although fluorescence is not an uncommon characteristic in diamonds, few stones exhibit the phenomenon as strongly as this stone.

The diamond was acquired by Maximilian, brother of Franz Joseph, on a trip to Brazil before he was named Emperor of Mexico in 1863 at the urging of Napoleon III. His brief and troubled reign ended in 1867 when he was court-martialed and executed. Legend holds that he was wearing the diamond in a satchel around his neck when he faced the firing squad. His body and the diamond were returned to Vienna. The diamond was subsequently sold to help pay medical bills by his widow Carlotta. In 1919, The Emperor Maximilian Diamond was purchased by a Chicago gem dealer who kept it until his death in 1946. It was subsequently acquired by a private collector and was consigned to Christie's by her trustees who were unaware of the history of the stone, now mounted by Cartier as a ring, until Christie's specialist Mary Murphy re-traced its story.

Another very important piece in the sale is a ruby and diamond necklace signed by Van Cleef & Arpels. A highly important fancy pink diamond ring, 7.13 carats, mounted in platinum, may bring more than $400,000, while another fancy pink diamond ring weighing 6.54 carats may bring more than $200,000. A ruby and diamond ring set with a cushion cut ruby weighing approximately 6.02 carats may bring more than $160,000. An unmounted square cut emerald, weighing approximately 10.45 carats, is estimated to bring between $80,000 and $100,000. A cultured pearl necklace may bring more than $38,000. A highly important Art Deco mystery clock by Cartier, made about 1925, is expected to bring between $120,000 and $150,000.

Doctor urges look at vitamin megadoses

By MARK SAUER
Copley News Service

Megavitamins. Miracle vitamins. Vitamin deficiency. Natural vs. synthetic vitamins. Vitamin levels in hair. Vitamins to cure anything from cancer to the common cold.

Everyone is talking about vitamins and health food — especially in California.

But most of the talk is nonsense, according to Dr. Victor Herbert of New York City. So Herbert decided to do something about it.

He wrote a book (with Dr. Stephen Barrett), "Vitamins & 'Health' Foods: The Great American Hustle."

And since it was published in December, Herbert has been crisscrossing the country lambasting the health-food industry which he says is ripping off American consumers to the tune of $6 billion annually.

A physician and nutrition expert who has researched the topic for 25 years, Herbert insists that vitamins have become the modern-day snake oil and that the "health gurus" pushing them and other health foods are the P.T. Barnums of science.

Herbert is chief of the Hematology and Nutrition Laboratory at the VA Medical Center in the Bronx; a former professor at several major medical schools; author of more than 500 research papers on nutrition; a member of dozens of medical societies; and a writer and editor for several medical publications.

So Herbert figures he's a more bona fide authority on the subject than most of what he calls the "dubious doctors" involved in health-food sales — to whom he devotes an entire chapter.

Herbertshakes his finger at the health-food entrepreneurs, accusing them of being image makers who use the media to promote myths about the miracles of all substances natural or organic.

"I estimate that more than 85 percent of the information the public is getting about vitamins and health food is misinformation," Herbert said.

"It's legal to lie about nutrition in the United States everywhere but on the label. So at the health-food store you'll find the pills on different shelves than the irresponsible books, magazines and literature advertising them. That's one way the hucksters get around the law."

Herbert said he discussed the essence of what should be understood about vitamins and their importance to health in a chapter of his book.

"People do not need to take vitamin supplements. We can get all the vitamins we need from our food," said Herbert, who was part of the committee that established the federal government's Recommended Daily Allowance standard for vitamins.

"At the end of the day we should be able to look back and say we have had the following:

— "Fruits and-or vegetables and-or fruit juices: four servings at least one of which is fresh or fresh-frozen and uncooked.

— "Grains and-or grain products, including cereals, breads, rice, macaroni, etc.: four servings.

— "Meats and-or meat products, fish and-or poultry and-or eggs: two servings. Proteins, iron and niacin are leader nutrients in this group so it also includes nuts and dried beans (legumes).

— "Milk and-or milk products: two to four servings (less needed as one gets older)."

Known as the four basics, these groups are easy to remember, Herbert said, by thinking of a cheeseburger with lettuce and tomato. "It has them all — grain, meat, dairy product and vegetable. In fact, there is nothing wrong with fast food — contrary to what the health-food people would have you believe.

"The only problem is that fast-food burgers contain an abundance of fats and those overweight to begin with do not need more fats," he said.

"However fats and oils do provide essential fatty acids — essential means needed in the diet because the body cannot make it in adequate amounts."

Earl Mindell of Torrance, Calif., author of "The Vitamin Bible" published in 1980 and founder of the Great Earth chain of vitamin stores, vehemently disagreed during an interview.

Mindell said that Herbert and all doctors have a financial stake in "promoting the status quo" of America's poor nutrition habits.

"People are no longer believing the propaganda that doctors like Herbert are spewing out," said Mindell. "It's time for America to wake up to the fact that we must eat foods which are good for us, not junk foods.

"The fact is that the health of the American public is not so hot compared to what it could be," Mindell continued.

"To have someone like Herbert going around the country saying go ahead with all the unhealthful things you've been doing, that you can get all the vitamins you need from the four basic food groups, means we're all in for trouble.

"We must get back to natural foods. Vitamin supplements are absolutely needed. We cannot get the vitamins we need from all the processed food we eat," said Mindell.

Herbert said any "rational person with a minimum of education" can avoid being ripped off by "health-food hucksters" by remembering that the basis of sound nutrition is moderation and variety.

"If it's sensational about nutrition, it's not true, and if it's true about nutrition, it's not sensational," Herbert said.

Herbert comes down particularly hard on those promoting "megavitamins" — vitamins in massive doses.

"Excess of anything is harmful and megadoses of vitamins are harmful — megadoses of some vitamins can even kill — people have to understand that," he said. "For example, megadoses of vitamin A can damage the liver.

"In 1976, the estate of Adele Davis (the late author of popular health-food books) paid $150,000 to settle out of court a suit brought by Mrs. Katharine Young of Maine on behalf of her daughter, Eliza," said Herbert.

"The child had been given 'generous amounts of vitamin A' during her first year of life as recommended in Davis' book 'Let's Have Healthy Children.' The result was a permanent stunting of her growth." His book cites other lawsuits resulting from vitamin abuse.

How to anchor those pegboard hooks

By AL CARRELL

Having pegboard on a shop wall is a super way to store tools where they can be in plain sight, yet out of the way. However, how many times have you had the pegboard hook come out of the hole as you removed a tool? It either falls behind the workbench and slithers into a pile of sawdust or lands on the bench and mingles with a mess of spare parts. D.G. finally had enough of this foolishness. He uses a wire paper clip and a small rubber band to anchor each hook. The rubber hand goes over the wall hook. Then the paper clip is formed into a sort of small "S" hook. One end of the "S" goes through the rubber band, and the other end goes into a pegboard hole directly below the wall hook. There must be some tension on the rubber band. Now the hook can be held firmly in place, but can easily be moved when you wish to rearrange.

Dear Al: I liked your recent feature on kits and soldering. Maybe you'll like my trick for unsoldering, which many of us have to do because we didn't get it right the first time. When you melt the solder, you can use a small plastic squeeze bottle with a tapered spout to suck up the molten solder before it hardens again. Just be sure the tip of the solder iron doesn't touch the plastic tip. You may have to reheat more than once to get all the old solder. — D.F.K.

Dear Al: One of the handiest oilers for a tool box is an old nose drop bottle with the dropper. You can dispense the oil quickly and easily with the dropper. It is particularly good when you need an exact number of drops because you have better control than with an oiler. It also is less messy because it's dripless and tightly sealed. Mine is a glass bottle, so I wrapped a few rounds of masking tape around the bottle to prevent its getting broken. However, I kept it in the top tray where it gets no contact with heavy tools. — B.B.

A SUPER HINT — Reclaiming used lumber makes more sense all the time because of the price rise in lumber costs. It's also a good idea because it recycles something. However, too many times as you're sawing through a piece of old lumber you run into a nail. This is bad on most saw blades and many dispositions. A quick pass with a magnetic stud finder along the line to be cut will let you know if there are any hidden nails in your path. I also use this device when I'm drilling into a hollow wall to be sure there aren't wires or pipes waiting inside.

Dear Al: A long time ago you gave instructions for making a walk or patio from wafers a couple of inches thick that were cut from logs with a chain saw. I liked the idea and made a patio this way. We have moved to a new home, and I made another, but with an improvement. The wafers again were set on a bed of sand, but I remembered that in the first patio they shifted some. For the new patio, I stapled strips of chicken wire to the backs of the wafers, tying them together in groups of four or more. Each adjacent group is wired to the groups around it. This seems to hold the entire patio together much better. — W.B.

SHOP TALK — At the recent National Home Center Show in Chicago, I saw a lot of new tools and materials. The one tool I knew I had to have was called the EZ Twister. It's actually 21 tools in one. It has a racheting mechanism for driving 6 different screwdriver tips, as well as several sockets in both metric and SAE sizes. The rachet mechanism can be set for forward, reverse or lock. The sockets for the nut driver are held together by a unique spillproof device. The new style handle on the EZ Twister looks sort of like a space vehicle, and gives out-of-this-world turning power. It's new from Thorsen Tool, so look for it soon in your hardware store or home center.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Remove deposits

DEAR HELOISE:

My mother lives in an area where the water is very alkaline and leaves an unsightly deposit around the water faucets that seems impossible to remove. Her neighbors have the same problem.

Any suggestions? — Mrs. Williard Oien

To remove the alkaline (lime) deposits already accumulated, place paper towels or wads of cotton on the lime, then soak them with undiluted vinegar. Repeat until the lime is softened and can be removed.

To avoid a recurrence of the problem, wipe the faucet, especially the base, after each use. A bit bothersome perhaps, but it's the only way to keep lime from building up. To my way of thinking, it's not as bothersome as trying to get the lime off once it's on. — Heloise

THRIFTY HINT

Dear Heloise: I always keep a roll of bathroom tissue on my son's changing table. It's handy for clean-ups, goes through the sewer system better and is also more economical.

The roll lasts a long time and cuts down on the number of pre-moistened towelettes I have to use, thus cuts expenses. Nancy Porambo

LONG-LASTING CANDLES

Dear Heloise: To keep candles burning evenly and nicely, rub a little liquid dishwashing detergent on them with a paper towel.

No more chilling in the fridge for me! — Lucile Stageberg

COFFEE CUE

Dear Heloise: This hint is a favorite of mine since I still use the old-fashioned percolator for making coffee.

You know how awful the first cup of coffee can taste after you've returned from vacation because the pot hasn't been used for awhile?

Just wipe it dry before leaving, then put one teaspoon of coffee into the basket. Upon your return home, throw out the coffee and rinse the pot. The coffee will not have an "off" taste.

I don't know why this works but it has for me for years. — Mrs. E.L.K.

CAKE DECORATING TIP

Dear Heloise: When decorating a cake with a face I needed brown icing to make the hair. Didn't have any but did happen to have a jar of very creamy peanut butter.

I put it into my decorating bag and it worked very well. I even wrote "Happy Birthday" with it! — Mrs. Hilda Harman

NEEDLE THREADING

Dear Heloise: When threading a needle, spray hairspray on your finger and rub over the end of the thread.

Since the spray will stiffen the thread slightly, you can easily poke it through the eye of the needle. — Betty Landers

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: Retired and trying to help my wife. I've learned not to put dishwashing liquid in the sink, then turn on the water. The result will just be a lot of foam.

Instead I fill the sink with water, then add the detergent. The resulting suds will not be so foamy. Then, when I drain the sink, I turn on the cold water and the remaining suds dissolve more quickly. — G. H. P.

Heloise would love to have some great tips from you to feature in Hints from Him so, guys, drop her a note at P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she'll use the best tips received in an upcoming column.

Dallas throws a 'Rodeo Drive' benefit

By ELIZABETH MEHREN
Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — If Rodeo Drive were to pack up and stash itself in the back of a Bekins van, there would be only one place for it to move: Dallas.

Which is essentially what happened here Friday night as about 600 wealthy Texans window-shopped along a facsimile of the most famous commercial street in Beverly Hills at this city's first "Rodeo Drive Block Party."

"To be quite frank with you," said Sharron Sadacca, organizer of the benefit for the National Kidney Foundation of Texas, "everyone is just sick to death of all this Western stuff — you know, the checked tablecloths, cowboy hats, boots, all that stuff that goes with the Western theme."

Nevertheless, Sadacca and her group were bound to a Western theme — of sorts. Much of the funding for the Kidney Foundation's major social event is provided by the Country and Western Music Association, Sadacca said, "and they like to have a quote Western-type flair unquote."

Legendary for its lavishness, the Texas gala-circuit is known also for its fiercely competitive nature. "People spend months and months trying to come up with new ideas," said Mary Shiroma, owner of a public relations firm here that handles many such events. "There are just so many of these galas — why, I'd say two to three a week in Dallas alone — that it gets to be very, very competitive."

SO SADACCA WRACKED her brain for a theme for her $250-per-couple party that would be "Western, but at the same time, absolutely chic," something that would be novel without all those checked table-cloths and cowboy hats. Long active in arts charities, Sadacca was chairing her first kidney party: "My first effort," she said, "on behalf of one of the diseases."

Then quite late one night, Sadacca was seized by inspiration.

"Well, I just thought about Rodeo Drive, and I realized that if you pronounced it the other way, it came out rodeo." (In Texas, the accent's on the first syllable.)

With its horses and dust and cowboys and cattle, rodeo might be the ultimate metaphor for much that is Texas, Sadacca reasoned. Meanwhile, what could be more representative of the wild and exotic West known as Beverly Hills than the gold-and-Rolls-Royce-jammed street called Rodeo Drive?

The coincidence was enough to convince Sadacca. Immediately, she persuaded Texas-based Mary Kay Cosmetics to authentically re-create the facade of 15 landmark Rodeo Drive shopping establishments for her party in the Grand Hall of the Dallas Apparel Mart.

It also seemed further proof of what many power-watchers see as a ever-growing California-Texas axis. Until arriviste Alaska was admitted into the Union not so very long ago, for example, Texas and California nudged each other forever in friendly competition as No. 1 and 2 among the states in both geographical size and grandiose thinking. Texas was the Lone Star State; California thrived briefly as the Bear Flag Republic — both symbols of the independence Westerners like to think of as synonymous with their life style.

The similarities that strengthen a bond between the two states continue. Texans are known to drive a lot of big cars; Californians drive a lot. Both states regard oil wells as a backyard crop. And, as Dallas opens more and more fancy new facilities for the film industry, and stages its "U.S.A. Film Festival" this week, one civic booster crowed, "We're really becoming a kind of mini-Hollywood." Added another Dallas devotee: "We're being called the Third Coast."

DALLAS, MOREOVER, SHARES another distinction with its cousin in the far-out Far West. Along with much of Los Angeles, large portions of Dallas were built, if not yesterday — well, certainly the day before yesterday. An antique store on busy Commerce Street in downtown Dallas, for instance, earns the right to call itself an old establishment, because it dates from 1958.

But growth, Dallas-style, does not only mean new. It also means big. Buildings that spring up overnight in the Big D look like they might house an entire empire, albeit, a relatively modest one. Maybe Sadacca chose to hold her Rodeo Drive Block Party in the Dallas Apparel Mart for that very reason: because the building is very nearly a block long. As for the Mart's Great Hall, where the Rodeo Drive shopfronts were actually set up, a sign stated its capacity as 4,571.

"But really," catering chief Jim Shane said, "it's more like 5,000."

Shane gestured around the four-story atrium that forms the Great Hall. In its vastness Friday night, the 600 guests seemed almost afloat in wisps of formal attire.

"Oh well," Shane said cheerily. "Last week we had an elephant, this week it's Rodeo Drive."

Mingling around a table devoted to a silent auction, guests could bid among Texas-style merchandise that included the breeding services of two champion thoroughbreds (retail, $1,000 to $3,000; minimum bid, $300 to $600) and the services of two Dallas cosmetic surgeons (retail value, $1,500 to $2,000; minimum bid, $500).

"Yeah," said one guest, "but what kind of plastic surgery can you get for $1,500?"

"Half a nose," said his wife, adding her name to the list.

SAFELY ENCASED IN GLASS was the evening's prize-auction item, the now-famous 24-karat gold and steel designer gun by Bijan of Beverly Hills. "The traditional gentleman's gun," an accompanying flyer described the .38-Colt automatic pistol, "the kind of gun a proud man owns."

For his part, Bijan himself (a man so rich and successful that he no longer bothers to use his last name (Pakzad), said he designed the gun at the behest of a client, "the ruler of a small country, I can't say which one." Bijan was urged to design something highly personal, highly distinctive — yet also immensely functional.

"Let's face it," Bijan said, discussing the issue of arms and the modern person, "in this day and age...."

The designer, accompanied Friday evening by his daughter Daniella, was less pleased, however, by the canvas recreation of his Rodeo Drive storefront.

"Tacky," sniffed Bijan. "Very much so. It doesn't look a bit like the front of my store."

Indeed, across the great hall, the mock exterior of Rodeo Drive's Lina Lee shop had problems of its own. All night long, the "end" kept falling off the sign.

Strolling through the canvas storefronts, Dallas restaurateur Dan Parrott lamented that he and his fiancee, Nancy Grieser, had forgotten to bring the Rodeo Drive matchbooks they picked up on a recent visit to Beverly Hills. Among the black-tie crowd, Parrott himself stood out as the sole 10-gallon-hat-wearing Texan.

"Ten gallon's the term, darling," Parrott said, and explained that his taupe-tone Resistol chapeau was probably closer to the one-gallon variety.

"I think that what you have here is a lot of people who probably would wear one under other circumstances," Parrott said. "But a lot of people don't wear them out so much anymore.

"TEXAS CHIC HAS GOTTEN so big everywhere else, that they've started to tone it down here. I think it's because people here don't want to look like a tourist or something."

When does Parrott remove his own hat?

"In...", began Grieser, and Parrott interrupted: "Oh, never mind."

Not far away, Dr. Honor Franklin was adjusting the Canadian Mounties' hat worn by her dentist husband, former University of Texas football star Dr. Bob Mitchell. While the other guests whirled about in conventional formal attire, Franklin and Mitchell opted for Plan B of the Rodeo Drive Block Party, which invited guests to come as the celebrity of their choice.

"We're Nelson Eddy and Jeanette MacDonald," Franklin explained. "They're our favorites."

Find a target you'd love to loathe on hate week

By JOHN FARINA
Copley News Service

In George Orwell's novel "1984," the authoritarian government of Oceania — battling the forces of freedom and love — regularly scheduled two-minute hate sessions, culminating eventually with a Hate Week.

This is Hate Week, says Chases' Calendar of Annual Events.

Perhaps, like Orwell's Winston Smith, you could start a diary by writing in bold, capital letters, "DOWN WITH BIG BROTHER."

Or maybe you could simply think momentarily about a few things which make you irritated, perturbed, miffed, peeved or downright angry, just to be in the spirit of Hate Week.

Maybe you could express your loathing for taxes, the weather, or your gas-and-electric bill.

Psychologists say it's not always good to repress anger.

So hate, in a non-destructive way.

Think about it. You must hate something.

Maybe you hate healthy people who park in zones reserved for the handicapped, or speeding tickets or being broke.

Now's the week to vent your frustrations: Call something a name, sneer at an object of disgust, tell somebody off.

Social Security field representative Don Sorahan has decided to take advantage of Hate Week. He hates it when people see only "the negative aspects of Social Security."

"There never is any mention of the millions of people who are still getting their checks regularly," he says.

Fireman Ken Guyer hates false alarms, and the public attitude that fire safety comes cheaply.

Internal Revenue Service representative Laura Myers hates people who forget to sign their tax returns, or who mail them late.

"Or who fail to enclose their checks if they owe something. Boy, I hate that."

Sometimes it's good to get angry, if it's a constructive anger, says Dr. Gordon Clanton, a sociologist, who gets constructively angry at people who get destructively angry.

Anger is a short-term emotion, says Clanton, and hatred is "anger fanned."

"Anger, when legitimate, is a call for justice, usually arising when the issue is too small or too big to be settled satisfactorily," he says.

And little issues inspire hate as readily as larger ones.

Clanton offers an example: "If I'm late for work and am held up by traffic, there might be a tendency to get angry at the motorists in front of me.

"But they're all in the same predicament. What good does it do to get mad?"

I don't know.

Sometimes it helps.

Safety checks

WARWICK, N.Y. (AP) — Checks are printed on safety paper that has been treated with dye and chemicals.

Checks account for $9 of every $10 spent in the United States.

It is difficult to erase or apply ink eradicator to checks without leaving a very obvious mark, says Robert O'Connor of Georgia-Pacific's La Monte Division.

Gardening tools — often painted brown or green — will not be so hard to find on the lawn or in the garden if the handles are painted bright yellow or fluorescent orange.

Antique or junque: Silver-plated ware

By JAMES G.McCOLLAM
Member, Antique Appraisers Assoc. of America
Copley News Service

Dear Mr. McCollam: What can you tell me about this sugar bowl and water pitcher?

They are marked "Manufactured and plated by Reed and Barton." They are both in excellent condition — J.D., Windsor, Conn.

Dear J.D.: Reed and Barton, founded in 1835, in Taunton, Mass., first made silver-plated ware in 1848. This bowl and pitcher were made in the late 1800s and would be worth $75 and $100 respectively.

Antique silver plate is not priced very high. The risk of the plating wearing off deters many collectors.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This vase has been in our family for a very long time. On the bottom, it is marked "Empire Works, Stoke-on-Trent, England."

Can you please identify this item and tell me the vintage and value? — H.R., Cocoa, Fla.

Dear H.R.: This is English Art Pottery made around 1900 and worth about $100 to $150. It would also be classified as Staffordshire.

BOOK REVIEW: "Developing Your Doll Collection" by Lorette Holz, Crown Publishers Inc., One Park Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016, $16.95, plus $1.50 postage or at your local bookstore.

In 1958, Barbie dolls sold for $3; today they are bringing $100 to $300 depending on their condition. A genuine antique French doll might sell for $5,000 or as much as $10,000.

This book examines dolls as an investment with attention given to appraising and pricing a collection, selling to various markets and doll shows. It is illustrated with 125 photographs. It is a must for anyone starting a doll collection, selling one or simply wondering about that old doll in the attic.

Send your questions about antiques with picture(s), a detailed description, stamped, self-addressed envelope, and $1 per item to James G. McCollam, P.O. Box 687, Dunedin, Fla. 33528. All questions will be answered but published pictures cannot be returned. As a special service, information is also available on how and where to sell your antiques.

Snap solutions to decorating in home

By HOLT CONFER
Copley News Service

During a recent trip to New York City, I had lunch with Laurie Peck. Now before you ask the next logical question, I'm going to tell you who Laurie Peck is. She works for a large public relations firm — Hill and Knowlton.

Laurie's responsibility is Kodak — so now you understand my connection. Kodak is a very aggressive marketing company and one of Laurie's responsibilities is to make available to media people good sound ideas for using Kodak products. She's also a good person to know when I have a question about a Kodak product or if there is something new coming out on the market that I should sample in order to tell you about, from a firsthand viewpoint.

Recently she gave me some ideas for using an instant camera if you're planning to redecorate your home. it's something I probably would not have thought of, and in case you haven't thought of it either, I'd like to pass some of her ideas along to you.

How often do you find yourself in a store looking for carpet, drapes or furniture and struggle to describe fabric textures or colors to a salesperson?

You've probably also had a problem describing the shape of a room or the furniture already in place that you want to complement with whatever you're trying to purchase.

You can solve these problems with an instant camera - of course, you can use another type of camera, too — providing you don't object to waiting a few days for the results.

First of all, take some generalized shots — photograph your room or rooms from different angles so you and the store's designer-salesperson can have a ready reference to the floor plan.

Then, photograph the specifics, — individual furniture arrangements, color schemes, fabric patterns, window shapes and drapes, wall hangings, floor coverings and lighting arrangements.

Pictures let the person helping you with your selection make an objective appraisal of what you're working with — something that may be difficult for you to do, since you were responsible for the original purchase.

You can also, Laurie says, photograph problems. For instance, if there's a lamp you're trying to replace, carry, a photo with you when you go shopping so you don't inadvertently make the same mistake.

If you have a particularly attractive accent piece — like a handmade afghan, carry a photo of it so its colors and patterns are always available to settle any mental confusion that may arise.

And if you wonder how different wall arrangements might look, the secret is to lay out the pictures or wall hangings on the floor and take a picture of them. Then change the arrangement and take another picture. When you've exhausted all your ideas, you can sit back and compare the arrangements, select the one you like best, and know exactly what you did that looked so good.

Now I realize that redecorating your house is not an everyday occurrence, but if your place is like mine, there's always some little thing you'd like to change and when the opportunity arises, you can never really remember if the color was a true blue or something just a bit on the turquoise side; or if you decided the lamp had to be at least 24 inches tall (a yardstick in your picture would help you remember) to look just right.

Laurie Peck, a young lady with a background in interior design, just gave you some good ideas — for her, it's all in a days work.

'Twice-baked'

Everyone knows that sour cream is good on baked potatoes, but few realize it may also be whipped with potatoes to make them "twice baked." This delicacy is made by baking the potatoes until done. Then, cut them in half, scoop out the insides, whip with enough sour cream to make fluffy, season to taste with butter, salt, pepper. Refill shells and reheat in oven to serving temperature

Easiest snack

What's the easiest snack you can make? A slice or square of sharp Cheddar cheese on a rye or whole wheat cracker. Dress it up, if you like, with a slice of pickle, whole cocktail onion or a slice of pimiento-stuffed olive.

Prairie Romance

There's a new romance awakening. Inspired by the old frontier. And the new yearning for feminine flounces. Like winsome ruffles. Gliding around innocent blouses. Dancing around the hem of a swingy skirt. Following your romantic inclinations. With captivating results. Cotton denim skirt by Chequers. Poly/cotton blouses by Stitches. For junior sizes. Each $26

A formula for romance books

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — They had come from as far away as Tucson, Ariz., more than 150 of them, with as much passion for their work as the heroines they wrote about or hoped to write about.

Never mind that a drizzling rain had turned the freeway leading here into an oil slick. Never mind that it was a holiday or that tonight's episode of "Brideshead Revisited" would be on and off the tube before this gathering dispersed.

No, these were people who had ordered their priorities, and for this evening, romance was No. 1.

"I'm not interested in serious sex, not intercourse, but rather foreplay and afterplay," Vivian Stephens was telling them. "I've bought books with no sex in them at all, but they were sensual and sensitive."

Her audience nodded sensitively.

Stephens is senior New York editor for Harlequin Publishing Corp., the world's leading publisher of romance fiction. With four other company bigwigs and with the blessing of Romance Writers of America, she was here in North Hollywood to talk about the genre that has, in its own vernacular, sent prickles down the spines of millions of readers:

"He had a glass in his hand. He raised it slightly in a silent, unsmiling toast and she felt a curious electric prickle flash down her spine.

The 150-plus, for their part, were here to find out how to get their similar, oh, so similar, words into print.

"There's a formula for this stuff," writer Betty Headapohl explained before the meeting began, "and I want to find out exactly what the editors are looking for."

What she found out was what she already knew, having read a romance novel or two: Editors want what readers want: Woman (age 18-25) meets man (30 or older); the two fall in love; obstacles arise; obstacles are overcome; man and woman marry and live happily ever after. Sigh.

The story, of course, must be told from the heroine's point of view. There must be a minimum of sexual activity and certainly no graphic descriptions.

"We think sex without love is pornographic," said Jacqui Bianchi of Mills and Boon Ltd., a London company whose romances Harlequin reprints. "We won't touch pornography."

"Basically, you have to know the line between hard porn and soft porn," chuckled Headapohl, a former El Cajon, Calif., newspaper reporter. "You become familiar with terms like, 'She felt his firm manhood rising.' Now we all know what that means, but it isn't hard porn. It's soft porn, and that's what this is."

Whatever it is, romance fiction has swept the country, even the world, with its thick lashes and quivering lips and lean, muscled bodies:

"The lean, muscled body was immovable and her fingers curled impotently into his shirt."

Harlequin romances alone — and there is plenty of competition — are available in 90 countries, from Ethiopia to Zanzibar. The company claims more than 16 million readers are devoted to romance novels.

But those readers cannot be categorized, executives say.

"There's no such animal," Bianchi answered when a would-be writer asked for a profile of her would-be readers. "They're as young as 12 and as old as 80, from all sorts of social levels and financial levels and intellectual levels.

"They are housewives who read for enjoyment, students who read to relax. These books seem to strike a universal chord in all women."

"I don't care why they buy them," added smiling Josh Gastero, president of Harlequin North American. "Just so they buy them."

Frank Schulte who had escorted his wife to the meeting, opined that most readers are "women who have to get their fantasies out of books."

His wife, Elaine, is a well-respected writer whose short stories and articles have appeared in leading magazines for the past 11 years. She also wrote "Zack and the Magic Factory," which was made into a TV movie starring Jane Withers.

Now Elaine Schulte is writing romance novels. Her first, "Whither the Wind Bloweth," was printed last fall by Avon Books.

"I'm not embarrassed to be writing romance," she said. "And I think the romance novel will be around for a long time. This fills a need for a lot of people.

"I used to want to be a great writer, to write the great American novel. But not anymore. I just want to give some joy or love to people."

Nevertheless, for Schulte the bottom line admittedly is not altruistic. It's financial.

"The fact is," she said, leaning in closer, "I want to write romance to pay for my son's college education."

She just may be able to do that. Harlequin editors aren't eager to talk about money, but they say a book that sells well can bring its writer $50,000 over a period of three or four years.

An average advance reportedly runs $3,000 to $5,000; the rest depends on sales.

Better treatment predicted for cancer patients through use of computers, home video screens

Hearst Feature Service

Within a year, the wizardry of computers will allow physicians and patients to instantaneously obtain the latest information on the treatment of cancer by asking for it on a home video screen.

After indicating the type of cancer, sex and age of the patient, an inquirer will get information from the National Cancer Institute on where to go for consultations, research on a particular stage of cancer and current methods of treatment, with survival rates.

First installations of the service should begin within six months at a cost of $5 to $10 a month, NCI officials said at an American Cancer Society seminar.

The system, called "protocol data query," will complement another program that will let community physicians throughout the country contribute research and latest treatment methods.

The program is expected to involve about 50 patients at each of nearly 200 community hospitals in projects under the direction of comprehensive cancer centers such as the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. It will cost $10 million a year.

"We want to link community physicians into the research effort so they will be a part of it," said NCI director Dr. Vincent T. De Vita Jr. "This way, everybody's care is upgraded simultaneously."

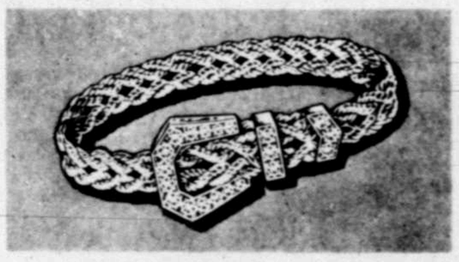

The program was devised from similar test projects in major U.S. cities over the last decade. NCI officials hope to improve their data base on specific treatments by gathering and analyzing information from doctors who treat patients according to accepted methods but who are not now enrolled in formal studies.

Group concerned federal law may be threatening Texas' natural gas supply

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Railroad commissioner Jim Nugent's refrain about how federal law threatens Texas' vital natural gas supply has attracted a small Washington chorus.

"I'm glad they've joined in so I don't have to sing alone," quipped Nugent.

Texas' natural gas problems, however, seem to be just starting.

"What we're facing" — higher prices and less gas — "is not good," said Nugent, chairman of the agency that regulates Texas' natural resources.

Nugent has crossed the Potomac with a message that "something is sadly awry" when Texas, which produces one-third of the nation's gas supply, must go begging for gas while other states have more than they can use.

ACCORDING TO FEDERAL government figures, interstate gas pipelines that serve the Northeast and Midwest had a surplus of 90 billion cubic feet in February, just three weeks after gas curtailments in Texas had forced many schools to close.

Nugent blamed price controls in the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act — NGPA — and the act's congressional supporters for this "imbalance."

"I think the act as it applies today, particularly to Texas and Texans, needs a total indictment," Nugent said in an interview.

He cited U.S. Department of Energy studies that showed "old" interstate gas — or that produced from wells completed before 1977 — sold for 93 cents per cubic foot in 1978, and old intrastate gas was $1.11. The DOE projects that by 1985 old interstate gas will sell for $1.01, old intrastate for $3.29.

"Welcome sucker," said Nugent.

"A few years ago, we were shipping 30 percent to 33 percent of the gas produced in Texas out of state," he said.

"This year we'll ship over 40 percent out of state. So, we have a squeeze coming on — less gas every year with a higher percentage being shipped out of state."

ONE APPARENT reason for Texas getting shortchanged is that the interstate pipelines, with a large base of low-cost gas, are able to outbid their intrastate competitors for new gas supplies.

Nugent said he got an "excellent reception" from the U.S. Senate Energy Committee in November. "We showed our problem to them, and they were interested enough to inquire about additional facts, which we furnished," he said.

However, Nugent points to this statement in a later speech to the Texas Energy Forum in Washington as a threat:

"If the NGPA is to remain in place, the producing states may find themselves forced to look at their own laws and regulations to protect their energy supplies. We cannot sit idly by if we see the future developing as I fear it will."

Recent remarks by the head of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, former Texas lawyer C.M. Butler III, qualify him as a member of the Nugent "chorus." Butler told the Senate Energy Committee evidence indicates "additional and more severe (gas) shortages in both Louisiana and Texas."

BUTLER WARNED that gas-producing states might try to limit out-of-state sales, and he said there may be a legal basis for such action.

"I am glad to see Butler and others at a national level now coming on stream saying the same thing I was saying a year ago," Nugent said.

"It's such a serious problem, and it's going to have such a dramatic effect on Texas that I can't understand why more people aren't up on their hind legs yelling and screaming," he said. "It's all coming right down the road, and it's going to kick us in the rear so good."

What can the Legislature or Railroad Commission do?

Nugent noted that Texas law requires commission approval before gas produced on state-owned lands can be sold to an interstate pipeline. This is significant in that more than 10 percent of the gas produced in Texas comes from wells on state land.

NUGENT STRESSED that the commission has not used the law much in the past to restrict interstate sales, but can if it chooses.

Also, he mentioned that some other states prohibit producers from abandoning an intrastate pipeline to sell to an interstate market once the producers are connected to the intrastate line.

"There are other things I want to consider that I don't want to talk about publicly yet," Nugent said.

"Generally speaking," he said, "when you have a program that is this unfair — if enough people know about it — you'll find a solution."

Asked why a solution was so long in coming, Nugent replied, "If you had your hand inside a glass jar that had a whole handful of suckers, would you keep it or turn them loose? The longer they (other regions) hang on to this, the cheaper their regional energy cost is, and the better grasp they've got on the future."

NUGENT REFERRED to the fuel adjustment charge, which reflects the rising cost of gas on Texans' monthly bills, as the "Yankee equalizer."

"Congress hasn't changed much since the Civil War, if you look at it economcally," he said, and added:

"It may come to a regional struggle over energy before it gets straightened out. I say that's not good for the state or country but if their greed and selfishness is such that they're going to continue to do it that way, then we're going to have to take care of ourselves," he said.

"I intend to take care of Texas interests."

Keller 'earns' millions

David Keller, geologist for Gulf Oil Corp., won the second game of the 1982 World Series of Exploration. He increased his $1,000,000 in make believe money to $5,940,000 by the end of this five week period. He drilled two wildcat discoveries, both of which later turned out to be in the same field, and he drilled ten productive and two dry development wells.

In second place was Pat Stanton with Stanton Exploration, third was Barbara McBride, geophysicist with Exxon ; fourth was Eddie Pearson, geophysicist with Getty; fifth was Lonnie Nichols, agent for Southwestern Crop Assoc.; and sixth was Sandy Wilson, geologist for Mitchell Energy.

The remainder of the registrants lost money.

Eddie Pearson now has the highest standing of all the contestants at the end of this second game, but any one of about ten contestants can still win the $1,000 and the J. W. Williamson trophy for first place.

Saudis prepared to cut oil output

HOUSTON — Saudi Arabia is prepared to make another cut in oil output in order to firm up the market, reports Petroleum Information International in a recent issue.

"There is no immediate need for another production cut to below 7 million barrels a day," a leading Saudi Oil Official told PI International, "but we obviously want to keep the door open."

Nigeria, regarded as key factor, is seen by Riyadh as ready and able to hold off realigning its prices with current North Sea levels at least until the next OPEC ministerial meeting to be held May 20 in Quito, Educador.

This projection buttresses the fact that Saudi short-term policy, despite some high-level wavering prior to the mid-March meeting of nine key OPEC ministers in Doha, Qatar., is still firmly behind maintaining the present price structure based on a $34 marker.

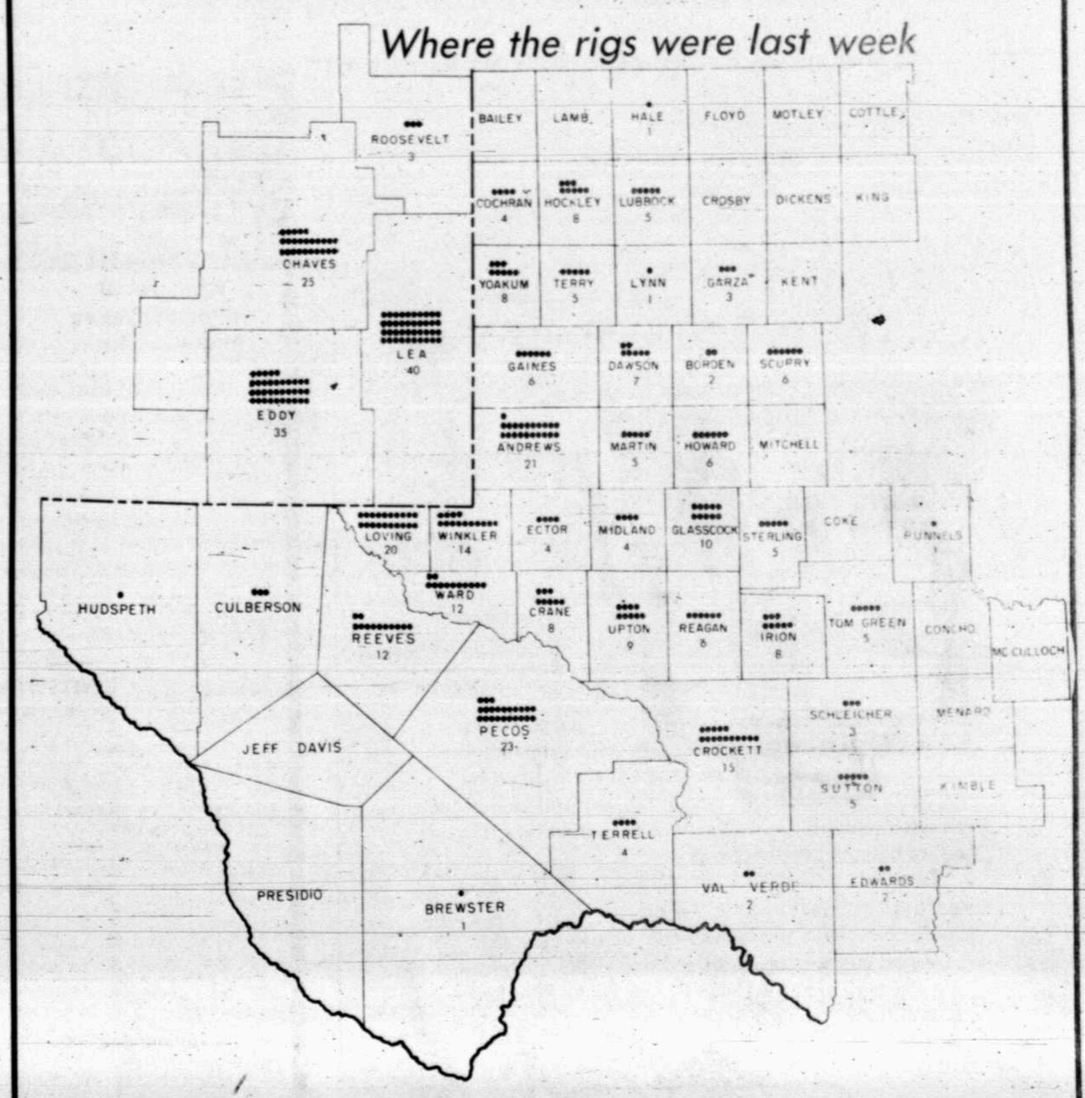

According to PI International, if anything is influencing Saudi oil policy at present, it is, without doubt, the very deep degree of uncertainty prevailing in Riyadh over oil supply and demand for 1982.

A source close to the Saudi oil ministry stated, "Right now, they are really groping for figures, expecially on the demand side. They are not going to act until all of the numbers are in."

This continuing reassessment of the market within the Saudi oil ministry could well change some of the basic assumptions, including the conviction that inventory destocking will end nearly in the third quarter, thereby increasing the upward pressure on demand.

But one top Saudi oil official, Dr. Abdul Hady Taher, govenor of Petromin, told PI International in an interview last week that his "expectation" is that a turnaround in the market won't begin before September."

Basin area rig count down

The Permian Basin area rig count continued a backward slide last week, according to figures provided by Reed Rock Bit Co. The bit maker's count for RRC districts 8, 8A, 7C, Edwards and Val Verde counties in Texas and the four southeastern counties of New Mexico was 368. That's 22 fewer than the previous week's count. It is the lowest tally since January 1981.

One year ago Reed spotted 409 rigs working the area covered by the map.

National rig count figures had not been received at press time.

Soviets lagging on nuclear plant plans

By ROBERT GILLETTE
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union is lagging badly on its ambitious plans to increase nuclear power plants over the next few years, and Kremlin leaders appear worried that the country's basic economic strategy for the 1980s will be undermined.

Government planners have counted on nuclear power to reduce the domestic use of oil and to satisfy all increased demand for electricity through 1985 in the industrial heartland west of the Ural Mountains.

To accomplish this, the current five-year economic plan calls for tripling nuclear power generating capacity from the 12,500 megawatts operating at the end of 1980 to 37,500 megawatts by the end of 1985. By Soviet estimates, this would save 1.5 million barrels of oil a day, about 12 percent of current Soviet production and an amount roughly equal to the oil the Soviet Union now exports to the West.

At the current pace of construction, however, the Soviets are likely to finish only half the planned 25,000-megawatt buildup, leaving them about one-third short of the 1985 target. "There is no way they're going to meet their goal," one Western technical analyst said.

As of last October, the Soviet Union produced about 15,000 megawatts of electricity with 36 reactors, the world's fourth-highest production of nuclear energy. The United States was first, with 59,584 megawatts from 78 reactors, according to the U.S. Department of Energy, followed by France, Japan, the Soviet Union, West Germany and Britain.

Soviet ministries responsible for building nuclear power plants have failed three years in a row to meet their annual targets for new generating capacity. Worse, the average amount of new nuclear capacity put into operation over the past two years actually has declined slightly, rather than doubling as planned.

As an indication of leadership concern, the Communist Party's Central Committee has convened two special conferences on the problems of nuclear plant construction in the past eight months, in July and again in February, with the participation of Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov and Andrei P. Kirilenko, the Politburo member in charge of industrial management.

More recently, the Soviet Union's two leading newspapers, Pravda and Izvestia, have rebuked the Ministry of Power and Electrification, as well as individual nuclear construction sites, in front-page commentaries.

One of Soviet nuclear power's numerous problems, but not one of those aired in the press, was an untimely decision two years ago to contract for help from Poland in building at least three large nuclear power stations. Two of these stations —at Kursk, south of Moscow, and at Smolensk, west of the capital —are now behind schedule and have been particular targets of official criticism.

According to East European news reports, Poland was to supply 1,300 to 1,600 workers to Soviet nuclear sites in 1980, coincidentally the year that labor unrest gave rise to Poland's independent Solidarity trade union movement. Between 1982 and 1983, the number of Polish workers was to have risen to 4,500.

In addition, under a 1979 agreement, Poland was to have supplied about $560 million worth of labor, electrical equipment, instrumentation and rolled metal for the Khmelnitsky nuclear plant, a 4,000-megawatt station that Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the Soviet Union are building cooperatively in the western Ukraine.

The station is scheduled to begin generating electricity for the four partners in 1984.

Some Polish workers are known to have appeared at Soviet nuclear projects, but the current status of Polish cooperation is uncertain. Considering the debilitated state of Poland's economy and the travel restrictions of martial law, some Western analysts think it unlikely that Poland is helping much these days.

But Poland is by no means the source of Soviet nuclear power's most serious problems, which include most of the afflictions that dog Soviet civilian industry in general.

Pravda, for instance, has complained of "shortages of construction materials, metal and various assemblies" at nuclear plant sites and has demanded an end to diversions of scarce materials from nuclear projects to other construction sites.

Construction of nuclear plants, Pravda said, often begins "without necessary engineering training" of work crews. Furthermore, shortages of housing, schools, stores and other amenities have contributed to a rapid turnover of workers and have made it difficult to establish a stable work force in the nuclear industry.

Press reports have also underscored problems of "labor discipline" at nuclear construction sites, a Soviet term that usually means malingering, drinking during working hours and absenteeism.

Design institutes are said to be slow to produce blueprints, and when they do they often demand costly changes in parts of nuclear plants that site managers thought were already finished.

Newspapers have also warned against substituting different construction materials for those in short supply and have called repeatedly for "bolder" efforts to improve "quality control of work," factors that affect not only the pace of construction but the safety of the finished product.

The Silver-Reed is not just another "me too - follow the leader" single element typewriter. Its microprocessor makes Silver-Reed one of the most advanced office typewriters being sold today.

Faster typing speed, greater accuracy and more precise impressions are just a few of the many advantages you can expect from the Silver-Reed. The ribbons are interchangeable with IBM and the elements are interchangeable with the IBM Selectric.II (an advantage that even the Selectric.III doesn't offer). Two other clear-cut advantages are the pricing and availability.

The sheikh is no longer chic in fashionable Wall Street circles

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

In fashionable Wall Street circles, the sheikh is no longer chic. It's downright mulish to be bullish on U.S. oil stocks.

And that mentality among the Street's Beautiful People presents a wonderful opportunity for the little guy. That is to say, the small investor should start nibbling on certain major oil stocks.

Because the big institutions (pension and mutual funds, bank trust departments and such) have to report and defend their performance quarterly, they tend to behave like sheep — or lemmings. Since the Middle East situation is so chaotic, the consensus among analysts is for OPEC to come asunder, oil prices to continue falling and domestic and international oil stocks to continue under pressure.

However, most analysts also say that the oil stocks — having been battered severely since late 1980 — are cheap on fundamentals. Also, the Wall Street pros all have an escape hatch handy: "If there is something to upset the supply in the Middle East, these stocks will take off on the upside like a rocket," said James Balog of Wall Street's Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Verily, few analysts could disagree with that. Nor would many disagree with Balog's general assessment of the Middle East situation.

Thus, in certain oil stocks — such as Exxon, Royal Dutch, Shell and Mobil — the small investor can obtain high yields, a good measure of safety and the possibility of the stocks zooming if there is chaos in the lands of the sheikhs.

As with any stocks, there are risks. The big one is that oil prices will plummet severely — say, to $20 a barrel. Most analysts agree with Balog that "the worst is over as far as the oils' stock market collapse goes. From now on, unless there is some interruption of supply, the stocks will move with the general market. However, if prices do come down sharply, the oils will come under some pressure."

Look at it this way: Even if the worst happened for the sheikhs — (and it could be the best thing that could happen to the U.S. economy) — and the price of oil fell to, say, $15, OPEC still wouldn't be in the poorhouse. After all, over the past 11 years, the price of a barrel of oil rose from about $2 to $34. If it were cut in half tomorrow, OPEC would still be well ahead of inflation, although it would obviously have to grapple with severe short-term shocks.

It's similar for the big U.S. oil companies. They have made huge capital investments based on forecasts of $50 (and more) oil per barrel. Their refining and marketing operations would be hurt badly by a big drop in price. But still, in recent years, they have enjoyed unprecedented prosperity: Before OPEC, the oils were making a so-so 12 or 13 percent on equity. Now they're bringing in about 20 percent.

In fact, according to Standard & Poor's, the major oil companies during 1981 — a relatively poor year for them — had the following returns on equity: Union 20.2; Texaco 17.2; Standard of California 19.3; Standard of Ohio a rousing 34.6; Standard of Indiana 18.3; Atlantic Richfield 20.1; Exxon 19.9, and Mobil 17. The only ho-hummers were Gulf at 12.3; Cities Service at 11.9; Quaker State at 11.5, and Kerr-McGee at 14.6.

And even those merely passable returns were envied by other kinds of U.S. enterprises, which had a poorer 1981.

The most likely thing is for prices to drop a little bit from the $34 peak — indeed, as economist Irwin L. Kellner of New York's Manufacturers Hanover said, they already have: "The average spot price for the OPEC 'market' crude oil (Saudi Arabian light) was $29.50 during the last week of February, down 13.6 percent from Jan. 1."

"The stock market seems to be betting on a $28 dollar-a-barrel price," said Sanford L. "Sandy" Margoshes of Wall Street's Bache Halsey Stuart Shields. "I think it will end up closer to $34 than to $28," he added — and he is quite bullish on many of the domestic and international oil stocks, defying the consensus among his brethren.

He further pointed out, as did other analysts, that "if there are drops of $1, $2 or $3 a barrel, the biggest effect will be on governments, because of taxes. Such declines would have a small effect on the large companies' earnings."

Agreed Todd L. Bergman of Wall Street's Goldman, Sachs, "Oil prices will play a surprisingly small part in the earnings growth outlook due to extremely high marginal tax rates in most countries, which effectively dilute leverage of all but the largest price swings. The well-positioned companies should show annual growth on the order of 13 to 15 percent."

What's happening today is that analysts are shaving their 1982 earnings forecasts for many big oil companies.

However, if you look closely, you see that analysts still expect a respectable earnings gain. For example, Bruce E. Lazier of Wall Street's Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins reduced his earnings forecasts for the internationals (Exxon, Gulf, Mobil, Royal Dutch, Standard of California, Standard of Indiana and Texaco) an average of 9 percent for 1982 and 14 percent for 1983. He lowered his forecasts for the domestics (Amerada Hess, Arco, Cities Service, Getty, Marathon, Natomas, Phillips, Shell, Sohio, Sun and Union) by an average of 12 percent for 1982 and 16 percent for 1983.

Still, he has Royal Dutch shooting up 31 percent this year and 25 next year, and Amerada Hess going up 58 this year and 38 next year. Lazier has most earnings flat this year, but up around 20 percent in 1983 despite the cuts.

Lazier has dropped his recommendation from "buy" to "hold" for Amerada Hess, Arco, Getty, Mobil, Occidental, Shell, Standard of Cal, Standard of Indiana and Sohio.

However, he said, "The longer term basis for investing in energy stocks remains valid: U.S. oil imports will remain at 4 million to 7 million barrels a day over the 1980s despite oil conservation and more use of coal and alternate fuels, and producers of U.S. oil, gas, coal and geothermal can make quite profitable investments and sell into a guaranteed U.S. market."

In short, if you want to make a fast buck, hold off. But if you're investing for the long pull — as the small investor should — it could be a very good time to buy stocks that Wall Street is ignoring.

Workers 'play hookey' to step out of their regular routine

By CAROL KRUCOFF
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The business world generally sanctions two kinds of leave: "sick" and "annual." But there is a third kind almost everyone takes at one time or another.

At some companies it's called "sick-and-tired" leave. At others, "mental-health day," a "sanity break," or simply "playing hookey." But while the title may vary, the process is often the same.

"For personal reasons, often related to stress," says Atlanta corporate psychologist Neil P. Lewis, "a person has a strong need to step out of the regular work routine. They don't want to use up their vacation time, and they either can't, or won't, approach their boss for a little extra time off. So they take the easiest route and call in sick."

The incidence of "corporate hookey" is impossible to calculate, says Lewis, since there's no way to tell if a person is really sick or just faking. "But I think playing hookey once in a while is a basic human need. Everyone's got to have time to unwind and relax — that's why we have weekends and vacations."

In a fast-paced, economically crunched society, people may find that a week or two of vacation each year "just doesn't make it."

"From a psychological standpoint," says Lewis, "it can be good for employees to be able to take a little extra time off at their discretion, to recharge their batteries, if it's done at a time that's not disrupting the organizational machine."

These breaks also can be good for the company, claims Benjamin Schneider, professor of organizational behavior at Michigan State University. "People need to have some autonomy over their own time. Company policies that recognize this can improve morale, cut down on unexcused absenteeism and reduce employe turnover."

Increasing numbers of companies are developing strategies for improving the quality of worklife, says Schneider, and are evolving policies to deal with the employee's occasional need for a break. One popular method is to sanction a limited number of such absences by granting "personal leave" at the supervisor's discretion, or by allowing a few yearly "floating holidays" employees can take whenever they choose.

Young and Rubicam advertising agency in New York started giving employees floating holidays about 10 years ago, says a company spokesperson, "to enable people to take off on Martin Luther King's birthday if they wanted to. This year we've decided to stay open on Good Friday, so employees are getting three floating holidays."

Company guidelines encourage employees "to use the holiday for an observance of their choice," even if it means celebrating National Pamper Yourself Day.

"Humans being what they are," she says, "there's nothing to keep someone from observing spring by spending a day in the country. That's probably what I'll do."

Special seasonal breaks can be particularly valuable, says Washington creativity instructor David Oldfield. "Human beings are life forms, who need and want to be in touch with nature's cycles. Taking a short break to get a breath of warm spring air can be very reaffirming.

"It's an interruption to routine, an acknowledgement that we are more than what we do in the 9 to 5. It's a time to fill your tanks, so you can return to routine with a new receptivity-which is the raw stuff creativity is made of."

In deference to human nature and the weather, many European companies shut down for the month of August. An American version is the "summer schedule" policy at American Can Co., in Greenwich, Conn. Administrative and sales employees work longer hours Monday through Thursday and leave mid-day on Friday.

"Productivity seems to increase on Friday," says human resources administrator Bob Bogart. "Meetings are shorter and people work faster to get a full day's work done in four hours."

Tandem Computers throws parties Fridays at 4 p.m. throughout the year-complete with beer, soft drinks and snacks.

"The idea is to get people from all levels and groups to meet and talk," says spokesperson Pat Becker. (The California-based firm also gives all 3,200 employees an annual floating holiday, flextime, a six-week sabbatical every four years and maintains a swimming pool for employee use.)

"We have a very rigid recruitment and hiring procedure," says Becker, "to select people who are inner-driven and excited about work. Our turnover rate is 6.7 percent compared to the electronics industry average of 26 percent, and our per employee productivity rate is double the industry average."

A medical center that instituted "no-fault" sick leave reduced sick days by more than 30 percent and overtime hours by 54 percent, according to an article in Personnel Administrator. Designed to foil "Parkinson's Law of Sick Leave" (workers' absences tend to expand to fill the number of sick days allotted) the plan converted five of the annual 12 "sick days" into "paid leave" days. Employees could take them at their discretion or convert the days, unused, into cash. "Sick days" could be used only after all "paid leave" had been taken.

Giving employees the day off on birthdays "is becoming fairly common in manufacturing plants," says organizational psychologist Lewis. "It's written into some union contracts that employees get off on the first day of fishing season."

"The Cree Indians take a day off work to go hunting when goose season opens," says anthropologist Elliot Liebow, head of the Center for the study of Work and Mental Health at the National Institute of Mental Health. "Taking a few hours out to smell the flowers on the first warm day of spring may be the bureaucratic counterpart of that Indian ritual."

One of the best ways for managers to deal with spring-feverish employees, says Connecticut organizational psychologist Virginia Schein, is flextime. "When it's a beautiful day, you can take your three-mile jog in the early morning and work from 10 to 6, or get in your afternoon tennis game by working 7 to 3.

"That way, you meet your need to be outdoors, so when you're at work the company gets your full energy. ..."

Many current management trends acknowledge the human desire to have some control over work time, says Fred Pryor, president of the Human Productivity Institute. "In contrast with the old style of 'We want to watch you work hard,' more companies today want their employees to work smart and achieve intended objectives."

This kind of intentional goofing off on the job cost the American economy $120 billion in 1981, according to an annual "time theft" study by Robert Half International, Inc., a New York recruitment firm. Half says employees "steal" an average of 4 hours and 18 minutes from their employers each week. Mental-health breaks could contribute to this "time theft" or cure it, conjectures Pryor, "depending on the individual's personality. Some people find time off replenishes them and makes them more effective at work. For others, it could set in motion or perpetuate a habit of lack of achievement."

Those likely to abuse the breaks, he says, "are people with a low self-image who have no anticipation of achievement. They've lost hope for anything other than self-indulgence and will grab any opportunity to take off.

OTC expert offers lesson in history

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

If history is a guide, the coming stock market upsweep will be paced by the big, high quality blue chips — and the little over-the-counter stocks will get pummeled.

No doubt over-pummeled. At the least, over-ignored.

And that suggests an investment game plan: Look for the high quality over-the-counter stocks which get swept downstream with the cats and dogs.

This is the view of Robert J. Flaherty, editor of the Jenkintown, Pa.-based magazine, OTC Review, which covers the over-the-counter market. Flaherty took command of the publication 14 months ago — not long before the over-the-counter market took a terrible licking.

In many respects, it was long overdue. When the smaller, lesser-capitalized over-the-counter and American Stock Exchange stocks are outperforming the blue chips on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE), it's a certain sign of excessive speculation.

Economically, hyperspeculation was logical: After all, during the 1970s, the government was debauching the currency. It was hardly surprising that the lightly capitalized, eminently squeezable over-the-counter stocks were enjoying a seven-year bull market — while the cumbersome, well-capitalized, hard-to-manipulate Big Board blue chips were in a bear market.

Nor was it illogical that in the middle of last year — after the Reagan administration and the Federal Reserve had proved they meant to fight inflation — that the over-the-counter market started unraveling.

The Denver-centered penny stock market led the descent to the depths: "The penny stocks are down 60 percent," said Flaherty, recalling one incredible trip. "First Midwest Utah came out at 3 cents a share, rose 1,200 percent in 1980, then came down 92 percent in 1981. Now it's back at 3 cents. What a rollercoaster."

The new issues market has come apart completely: Only one-third as many new issues are going on NASDAQ (the over-the-counter market) each month than during the hot days of yore, Flaherty said.

New York's new issues-pumping house, John Muir — a house of ill fame if there ever was one — collapsed, and as government and NASDAQ investors probe the wreckage around Muir and Denver, Flaherty can smile: He warned his readers (and readers of this column, too) that these collapses were coming.

Despite the calamity in the overall over-the-counter market, the OTC Review's circulation has soared from 5,000 to 13,000.

Flaherty has a word of advice on new issues — in a hot market or a cold one: "I don't advise people to get into new issues until they have been public for a year. In my studies, over half the new issues sell under the market price during the first 12 months, and some of them sell as low as 50 percent of the new issue price."

One very positive thing is that NASDAQ's leadership has raised standards. For example, a stock now must sell for at least $3 a share to get national media coverage for one-day activity.

"When the cutoff line was $1, they used to manipulate the stocks to get them above a buck a share. It's a helluva lot harder to manipulate it up to $3 than $1," said Flaherty.

"These and other moves made the issues which were attracting the heaviest speculation almost invisible around the nation," he said.

Here are the mournful numbers: Last year, the first bear market for over-the-counter stocks in eight years, some 160 stocks declined by 80 percent or more — versus 10 in 1980. More than 2,130 NASDAQ stocks fell while 1,370 rose.

Thus far this year, NASDAQ trading volume is down — but not down as much as trading on the American Stock Exchange, which is loaded with speculative energy issues — most of which are boiling in today's glut of oil.

The composite NASDAQ index opened the year at 195 and is now down around 179. It was as high as 223 in 1981, so it has come down a lot, said Flaherty.

And it could conceivably come down more. And that's where bargains might be found — rather like 1974, when some quality OTC stocks sold at two or three times earnings.

"Some of the old pros such as T. Rowe Price, John Marks Templeton and the late Benjamin Graham found bargains on over-the-counter — Graham got one-third of his stocks there. He would just wait," said Flaherty.

What does Flaherty like? "A company called Energy Reserve has proven reserves at $14 a share. It got as high as $22, then dropped to $5 and is now back around $8, but could be liquidated at $14," he said.

"There are good regional bank stocks selling for less than five times earnings. Wilmington Trust is yielding more than 10 percent," noted Flaherty.

And there are some quality regional banks which are held in the portfolio of the legendary John Marks Templeton, among other pros. They include Ancorp Bancshares, Bancohio Corp., Dominion Bankshares, Fidelcor Inc., Key Banks, Maryland National, Mercantile Bankshares, Northern Trust and Shawmut Corp.

They all sell below 81 percent of book walue and have a price-earnings multiple of less than 5.

One thing which has hurt the big blue chips is that the big institutions swap them back and forth, and the price doesn't move much. By contrast, having less float, OTC stocks are ignored by many big institutions, and have a sound base of small investors, explained Richard Coleman, president of the National Association of OTC Companies.

The coming upturn probably will be led by blue chips, "but the OTC stocks are in the early phases of their growth cycles," and should eventually pass up the biggies, said Coleman.

That's one reason "so many of our members tell us they don't want an exchange listing — why go from 14 loyal market makers to one uninterested floor broker?" he said.

"If the Big Board recovers, NASDAQ will recover, too, but for NASDAQ to do really well, confidence has to recover. NASDAQ is still stuck with a speculative image. But the quality OTC issues should come back more — they've been more battered," said Flaherty.

Agency considering gas price proposal

By WILLIAM J. EATON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Confronted with rising congressional opposition, a federal agency delayed consideration of a proposal that could lead to sharply higher prices for consumers of natural gas.

But Charles M. But m chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), defied his congressional critics and said the proposal would be on the agenda at the commission's next meeting April 28.

At issue is whether the agency should take the first step toward lifting controls on the price of gas discovered before 1977 sooner than the law now provides. Present law calls for an end to controls in 1985.

Postponement of the FERC's move toward decontrolling so-called "old gas" came after John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, announced that 223 of the 435 members of the House had sponsored a resolution opposing any such action.

While passage of this resolution would not be binding on the independent agency, it may deter the commission from acting on deregulation through the administrative process. Twenty-nine senators already have indicated their opposition to what they termed a "back-door" move to take controls off natural gas prices through the FERC rather than through revision of the decontrol timetable now written into law.

President Reagan recently decided against asking Congress to lift controls on gas prices when his congressional advisers told him it would not pass unless it was accompanied by a tax on expanded gas company profits.

In a press release announcing that a majority of the members of the House had signed the resolution against decontrol, Dingell said such a step could double or triple gas prices, adding tens of billions of dollars to consumers' heating costs.

When the FERC met, Chairman Butler announced that it had dropped from its agenda a proposed notice of inquiry into whether prices of "old gas" were too low.

The postponement was made at the request of FERC Commissioners Georgiana Sheldon and David Hughes. While Hughes, a Democrat, has not disclosed his views on the issue, Sheldon, a Republican, said, "I have some real reservations over what we should do, particularly in this economy."

Butler, a supporter of the inquiry, said it was essentially a fact-finding effort to see if the decontrol law benefits some consumers at the expense of other consumers.

"For those who think that the chairman of this commission is going to be dissuaded by political pressures from pursuing his public responsibility, there is only one message: they're wrong," he said in a statement. "The matter will be on the agenda for the next commission meeting."

Meantime, the leaders of Citizen Labor Energy Coalition claimed that its year-long 25-state drive against immediate natural gas decontrol had led to the FERC postponement of action.

The coalition, a union-sponsored organization, said it had helped drum up majority support in the House for the resolution opposing any deregulation move.

"If FERC does not heed this message, we expect Congress to stop this arrogant agency," said William w. Winpisinger, president of the coalition and the International Association of Machinists.

Syndication — the one area that's doing well

By JANE HADLEY
Hearst Feature Service

There's one area of real estate that is doing well during these otherwise trying times for the industry — syndication — according to Kenneth J. Gain, the national president of the Real Estate Securities and Syndication Institute.

A syndication is a group of two or more people who join together to make or operate an investment. The most common type of syndication today, said Gain, is the limited partnership.

A limited partnership consists of a "general partner," who manages the investment and "limited partners," who put up money and have no say in the management of the entity. The limited partners also have no liability.

An advantage of limited partnership is that, unlike a corporation, income is taxed only at the individual level — not at the partnership level.

Depending on the number of limited partners in the partnership, most must be registered either with the federal or state government. Nationally registered public syndications, said Gain, have increased from $900 million in 1979 to almost $2 billion in 1980 and to $3.6 billion last year. Those figures don't include unregistered offerings, which might quadruple the figures, said Gain.

The main reason syndications are growing, he said, is that mortgage money is so scarce and expensive that there is pressure to pool more investors' capital to make larger down payments on property.

In the mid-1970s most syndication investors were doctors and dentists looking for tax benefits. Now, said Gain, it's two-income couples looking for long-term capital appreciation.

What do real estate limited partnerships have to offer the individual investor?

Real estate usually claims to offer investors tax benefits from depreciation. Real estate properties traditionally have held their value versus inflation, and investors can "leverage" their investments.

An investor leverages his investment when he borrows part of the money for a purchase, hoping to get a return not only on his invested funds but also on the borrowed funds. Leveraging or borrowing becomes less attractive the higher interest rates are in relation to inflation.

Using a limited partnership to invest in real estate provides investors two major advantages, said Gain.

Most real estate investments require a huge sum of money for a down payment — more than the typical individual can come up with. Gain said a person with $25,000 cash, "couldn't buy much. I might be able to get them a duplex."

By pooling the money of investors together, the "syndicator" can offer the investors a much broader selection of real estate investments, Gain said.

These are the advantages. There are some cautions to be noted.

REAL ESTATE ITSELF — and particularly a limited partnership — is not a liquid investment. It is not easy to get money out of an investment until it has "terminated."

By law, interest in the investment is not readily transferrable the way a share in a corporation is.

A CENTRAL FEATURE of limited partnerships is that the limited partners are strictly investors and have no control of the general partner. "You're looking at general partners to produce the profit, so the general partners are probably the most important thing," said Gain. So it's important to check out the track record of the general partner.

THE HEART of securities regulations is disclosure. If investors don't pay attention to what is disclosed to them, they're taking a risk. Gain said investors should read the documents registered syndications are required to provide, giving the track record of the general partner. However, these documents can run as long as 100 pages and are loaded with legalese.

So he advises concentrating on the summaries, which run typically about two pages. He said investors should pay special attention to the investment objectives and information about where income from the investment goes.

STICK WITH registered syndications unless you are an expert or know the general partner well enough to trust him completely.

GAIN SAID the smallest real estate limited partnership investment is $2,000 and the "average" investment is about $10,000.

Sample Lab offers computerized data

The Permian Basin Sample Laboratory has announced the availability of a computerized data base of oil well lithology for wells in the Permian Basin. This information is now available through Choyce and Associates, an Arlington, Texas based consulting company.

This computerized information contains the lithology of over 7,000 Permian Basin wells, representing over 4.8 million rock samples. The lithological file is expanding at the rate of 500 wells per year, and will contain over 24,000 wells when the file is completed. This information is unique in that it is the only commercial source of computerized lithology for the Permian Basin.

The information is being made available through Choyce and Associated for incorporation with corporate proprietary computer files, as well as a service for use in the analysis of well data by those interested in Permian Basin exploration.

W.W. West, a well-known businessman in Midland, was responsible for producing the computer information over the past 14 years. Bill Wright, a nationally recognized Midland geologist, has provided the technical evaluation of the data to insure the quality of the lithologic descriptions.

Labor Department plans to revise laws

DALLAS — The Department of Labor has proposed revising its reporting and disclosure rules to postpone the date on which employee benefit plans must furnish an updated summary plan description to participants and beneficiaries.

This regulation is part of the department's program to reduce and simplify paperwork and other requirements under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act while maintaining all necessary protections for participants and beneficiaries.

Deferring the filing date for the updated summary plan descriptions will reduce burdens for private pension and welfare plans without adversely effecting the interests of participants and beneficiaries. Also, as part of its deregulation program to further reduce the paperwork requirements for plans, the department is considering alternatives for plans to comply with the statutory five-year updated summary plan description requirement.

The proposed regulation would, upon adoption, permit a plan administrator to defer distribution of updated summary plan descriptions until five years after the summary plan description (or update) was last furnished or until November 16, 1982, whichever is later. If no material amendments have been made to the plan, distribution of a revised summary plan description may be deferred until 10 years after the document was last furnished or until November 16, 1987, whichever is later.

Written comments on the regulations are invited. They should be addressed to the Division of Reporting and Disclosure, Pension and Welfare Benefit Programs, Room N4508, U. S. Department of Labor, 200 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20216, Attention: "Updated SPD Regulation". The regulation was published in the March 26, 1982, Federal Register.

R. O. (Jack) Major, president and chief executive officer of MGF Oil Corporation, announced year-end 1981 financial and operational results.

Revenues in 1981 increased to $115,848,000 from $73,639,000 in 1980 due principally to a 140 percent increase in oil and gas revenues and a 38 percent increase in contract drilling revenues. Oil and gas revenues in 1981 totaleed $36,347,000 up from $15,160,000 in the previous year. Contract drilling revenues increased to $70,508,000 from $51,277,000.

Net earnings increased to $9,930,000 in 1981, 75 cents per primary share, from $6,988,000 in 1980, 57 cents per primary share. Earnings per share for 1981, fully diluted, were 73 cents per share up from 56 cents per share in 1980. Working capital provided by operations in 1981 was $35,703,000, an increase of 88 percent, compared to $18,991,000 in 1980. The increase in net earnings was due primarily to higher profit margins and continued high utilization rates for contract drilling operations. In 1981 the gross profit margin from contract drilling operations was 39 percent, up from 31 percent in 1980 and the rig utilization rate was 95 percent compared to 96 percent in 1980.

In 1981, MGF's daily oil production average was 1,631 barrels per day, up 66 percent from 1980's average of 983 barrels per day. Daily gas production increased 190 percent to 17.1 million cubic feet per day compared to 5.9 million cubic feet per day in 1980. The average sales price for oil in 1981 increased to $36.55 per barrel from $29.77 in 1980, while the natural gas sales price averaged $2.33 per MCF for 1981, compared to $2.07 per MCF in 1980.

For the three months ended December 31, 1981, net earnings were $2,691,000, 19 cents per primary share, on revenues of $33,481,000 compared to $2,285,000, 18 cents per primary share, on revenues of $20,439,000 for the three months ended December 31, 1980. Fully diluted earnings per share for the fourth quarter was 18 cents in 1981 compared to 18 cents in 1980. Working capital provided by operations for the three months ended December 31, 1981, was $11,243,000, an increase of 113 percent compared to $5,272,000 in 1980.

The Board of Directors of MGF Oil Corporation declared a 3-1/2 cents per common share cash dividend for the first quarter, which is a 17 percent increase over the three cents for the 1981 first quarter.

The dividend will be paid on May 10, 1982 to shareholders of record on April 19, 1982. The amounts of future quarterly cash dividends will be determined by the Board in each quarter.

MGF paid 12 cents per share cash dividend in 1981, up from 10 cents per share in 1980.

FORT WORTH (SWN) — Dick Lowe, president of American Quasar, announced that 1981 has proven to be the most successful year in the company's 12-year history.

Record revenues of $58,475,000 for the year compare to $44,935,000 for 1980. This 30 percent increase was the result of both increased domestic production and higher prices for oil and gas.

Net income increased from $4,263,000 in 1980 to $22,047,000 in 1981; however, nonrecurring items included in the 1981 results relate to the Company's divestiture of its Canadian subsidiary, the subsidiary's substantial operating loss, and provision for estimated losses of affiliated limited partnerships' Canadian activities. Excluding the impact of the Company's decision to phase out of its Canadian operations, net income from U.S. operations for 1981 would be $10,632,000, an increase of 36 percent over 1980 net income of $7,846,000 (also excluding Canadian losses).

Working capital provided by operations for 1981 came to $22,414,000 ($28,024,000 for U.S. operations), an eight percent increase over the figure of $20,676,000 for the same period in 1980 and another record high for the period.

As of December 31, 1981, the company's net U.S. hydrocarbon reserves (stated in equivalent billion cubic feet of gas, with oil converted to natural gas on the basis of a barrel of oil being equal to 6,000 cubic feet of gas) totaled 72 billion cubic feet. This represents an increase of 15 billion cubic feet (26 percent) after production of 12 billion cubic feet during 1981.

As of December 31, 1981, the company's U.S. undeveloped acreage inventory included 4.6 million gross and nearly 2.5 million net acres. This together with the recently announced agreement for an exploration pact with Sohio Petroleum Company — a wholly owned subsidiary of The Standard Oil Company (Ohio) — will provide the impetus to continue the company's efforts to first replace, and moreover to increase hydrocarbon reserves at the lowest possible finding cost.

Melton Drilling & Exploration Company has reported earnings of $1,009,935, equal to 1.6 cents per share, for 1981.

Revenues for the year totaled $3,913,566, most of which was from contract drilling operations.

Melton Drilling & Exploration was formed in July 1980. For five months in which it operated that year, the company had earnings of $39,206, or less than 1 cent per share on revenues of $598,207. Besides its contract drilling operations, the company has been participating in drilling ventures as a working-interest owner since becoming publicly owned in 1981. So far, the company has participated in the drilling of nine wells — all in West Texas Texas and southeastern New Mexico. Five of these wells have been put on production and three are currently being completed. One wellwas a dry hole.

Bell Petroleum Services Inc. has reported consolidated new revenues for the third quarter ended 1982 totaled $5,522,000 and net income was $404,000 or 18 cents per share.

These results represent an increase of 56 percent from sales of $3,532,000 a year ago and a decline of 9 percent from earnings of $442,000 or 25 cents per share, for the same period a year earlier.

Third quarter performance was influenced, in part, by increased expenses due to plant and personnel expansion. During the third quarter, the company acquired Pioneer Machine and Tool Company in Athens which will expand the machine shop division of Bell Rubber Company. While expansion and acquisition costs have had a negative impact on near term interim performance they represent an investment in people and productive resources that should contribute siginicantly to profitablility in the future, said E.E. Runyan, chairman.

Midland Southwest Corporation has reported record revenues and earnings for the fourth quarter and twelve-month periods ended December 31, 1981.

Total revenues for the twelve months ended December 31, 1981, were $40.96 million, compared to $17.94 million reported for the twelve months ended December 31, 1980. Net earnings reached $4.78 million, or $1.05 per share, compared to $2.26 million or $.60 per share earned a year ago. Revenues and net income for 1981 represented record levels for the Company.

Fourth quarter revenues totalled $13.63 million, compared to $5.09 million reported for the 1980 fourth quarter. Net income in the quarter was $32,494 or $.01 a share, compared to $915,335 or $.24 a share earned in the comparable 1980 quarter.

G. Arthur Donnelly III, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, noted that contract drilling revenues for 1981 increased 106 percent over the previous year, to $26.78 million, while operating income from contact drilling increased 185 percent, to $9.96 million.

Oilman drills in neighborhood

By JAMES R. KING
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The gas well that was drilled in the vacant lot between Max Swindosky's house and the Safeway supermarket would not have seemed so out of place 50 years ago.

Back then, it was considered quite a distance to town — nearly eight miles — and the only people who lived around here were farmers.

Today, it costs a fortune to buy a house only eight miles from downtown Houston, and even at that, not many buyers would think to ask if the selling price includes underground mineral rights.

But the issue was raised among several hundred homeowners two years ago when independent oilman John E. McFarlane decided to drill a well near a grocery store, a church, and 250 feet behind Swindosky's house on tree-lined Foxwood Road.

Gas drillers must lease an entire section of land — 640 acres — before they can penetrate the ground, and because McFarlane chose a densely populated residential site for the Edgar E. Lackner No. 1 well, he had to contact about 2,000 different property owners who did indeed have mineral rights.

But most of them were not carried away with dreams of imitating the "Beverly Hillbillies."

"No one on this street had any grand ideas about getting rich," said Swindosky, 74, whose backyard lies next to the 55-acre vacant lot where the well was drilled.

"We got $500 for the nuisance" of drilling the well, and he said McFarlane gave him another $100 recently to renew the lease. Actual royalties — money from the well once production is under way — are expected to amount to only about $1.75 per month per leaseholder.

But the well itself was considered a success. McFarlane struck gas at 7,901 feet with a tested yield of 1.5 million cubic feet a day. Entex Inc., Houston's gas utility, expects to take only about 500,000 cubic feet a day once the well is hooked up to its pipeline, which is expected to be finished by June.

Since it is located in a residential neighborhood and not a rice paddy, operators cannot "flare" the well — test it by igniting it and letting it shoot flames into the air — and it must be able to contain 100 percent of the vapors produced. Rural wells are allowed to let 1 percent escape into the atmosphere.

Extra valves and regulators were ordered installed to increase the safety factor, and there were other special restrictions. McFarlane said all this made it a much more expensive well than normal, with $2 million spent so far and another $500,000 in expected costs.

"First, he satisfied us it would be safe. Second, I felt like if there was oil there, we should let them do it. I was getting fed up with those Arabs," she said.

COMMERCIAL WELL — An oil or gas well of sufficient production that could be expected to repay its cost of exploration, drilling and completion and yield a profit in a reasonable time.

COAL GASIFICATION — A process that extracts "natural gas" from coal.

CONTOUR — A line on a map connecting points that have the same elevation above or below sea level.

Hope is renewed today

Today is a new beginning, a rebirth, if you will, and the remainder of our lives stretches out before us.

Everywhere around them Midlanders can see the fresh beginnings of a spring that symbolizes, in a larger context, what today's religious observance is all about. Take a few moments to cast off the pressures of modern-day life and to see the promise laid out before us all. Trees and lawns are bursting with full life; birds are chirping in the trees; the sun's warming rays are bathing new life all around us.

The beauty and promise of today are so different from the crises that fill our everyday lives. Those crises dominate so many of our waking hours that they tend to shield mankind from the truth around us. In the battle for our minds and our hearts, the crises vie heartily for our attention.

Hatred and war seem to rule the days. In El Salvador, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, in Poland and even in the streets of some of our cities, violence and hatred run rampant. They seem a never-ending tide that will engulf us, pull us down, destroy us. From one year to the next, the violence only increases. A new war begins here while an older war escalates there; violence appears to have spread its grip to every corner of the earth. Man heaps suffering upon his fellow man and injustice and cruelty threaten to become the way of the world.

Social deterioration is in evidence all around us; morality and the family structure are seemingly on the verge of collapse. Last year's problems and crises are overshadowed by this year's.

In this landscape of despair, there may appear to be no bright shining light at the end of the tunnel. But upon closer observation, Christians will find that there is a message in the Easter observation that transcends the gloom and despair of this world. The faith and moral fiber of Christians — of all people — is tested time and again. But the Easter message is that nothing is as bleak and as hopeless as it may first appear.

In His rebirth on the cross, Jesus Christ reaffirmed for the world the fullness of His love and the victory in His death. Life everlasting was promised and, in His rising, was fulfilled. There is a new beginning for mankind today, a new beginning in which each of us should strive to live each day as it was intended. The trials of this world will test us, but there always will be another spring, another unfolding of Christ's victory for mankind. Hope is renewed.

Happy Easter.

New ways to fight crime

Latest news from the crime front is that the rate has gone down, just a bit. Robberies went up a notch in the past year but, outside of that, the picture is brighter. One of the reasons is the continuing emphasis the nation is giving to preventing crime and punishing criminals.

Literally scores of bills have been introduced in Congress so far this year. Many of the measures would give police, judges and juries sharper weapons to use in performance of their duties.

Also among the many proposals in Congress are new ways to protect the public. For instance:

— New York's Rep. Mario Biaggo would like to see federal firearms laws applied to bulletproof vests. The purpose of his legislation is to prevent criminals from using such vests.

— Believing that publicity is one of crime's worst enemies, Alabama's Senator Howell Heflin introduced a bill to provide more funds for publicizing punishments meted to criminals.

— Senator Charles Percy of Illinois thinks he would discourage car thefts by requiring manufacturers to put identification numbers on all key parts, and hide one or two in unexpected places.

— Old folks, so often sitting ducks for criminals, are not being forgotten. Legislation dropped in the hopper by Rep. Marilyn Bouguard of Tennessee would give federal assistance to police departments for the purpose of escorting the aged who want to go about their business in safety in high-crime areas.

This flood of proposed legislation lets the nation know Congress is fully aware of the dangers from the criminal element, and is moving to subdue it.

Another View:

Moving toward secrecy

President Reagan's new executive order on classifying national security information is good news for people in the rubber stamp and ink business. It is bad news for people who believe that the flow of information is essential to the health of a democracy. Reagan has in effect reversed a 25-year presumption that the public interest lies in maximum disclosure. His order shifts the presumption a long way toward secrecy. This is truly regrettable, not least because the president's counselor, Edwin Meese III, had assured anxious critics that the restrictive early drafts were the handiwork of "overzealous bureaucrats."

The final draft, published a few days ago, does show a few welcome second thoughts. It restores the requirement of the Jimmy Carter order to mark the portions of documents meant to be kept secret. It restores, too, the Carter prohibition against classifying basic scientific research not clearly related to national security. It drops a proposal to create a new classification of peripheral "restricted" information — this could have forced universities that won't do classified work out of certain types of research they conduct now.

In its main components, however, the Reagan order is bad. It eliminates the need for an official opposing declassification to identify the damage he claims would be done by disclosure — a unanimous Senate Intelligence Committee opposed this change. It wipes out the requirement that, in disclosure decisions, the government balance benefit against harm. It lets the government reclassify information sought under the Freedom of Information Act, even after the information has been released. It instructs classifiers, when in doubt, to apply the higher rather than the lower level of secrecy.

Reagan believes his order strikes a "proper balance" between secrecy and disclosure. Few in Congress appear to agree, and some are already planning to do something about it. Up to this point, it has been left to the president to decide what is secret and what is not. The Freedom of Information Act, for instance, defers to the president in the national security area. Now Sen. David F. Durenberger, R-Minn., a member of the Intelligence Committee, says he will introduce legislation to remove the FOIA from exclusive presidential hands. Durenberger is no firebrand. He simply believes the president has gone too far. He is right.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, April 11, the 101st day of 1982. There are 264 days left in the year.

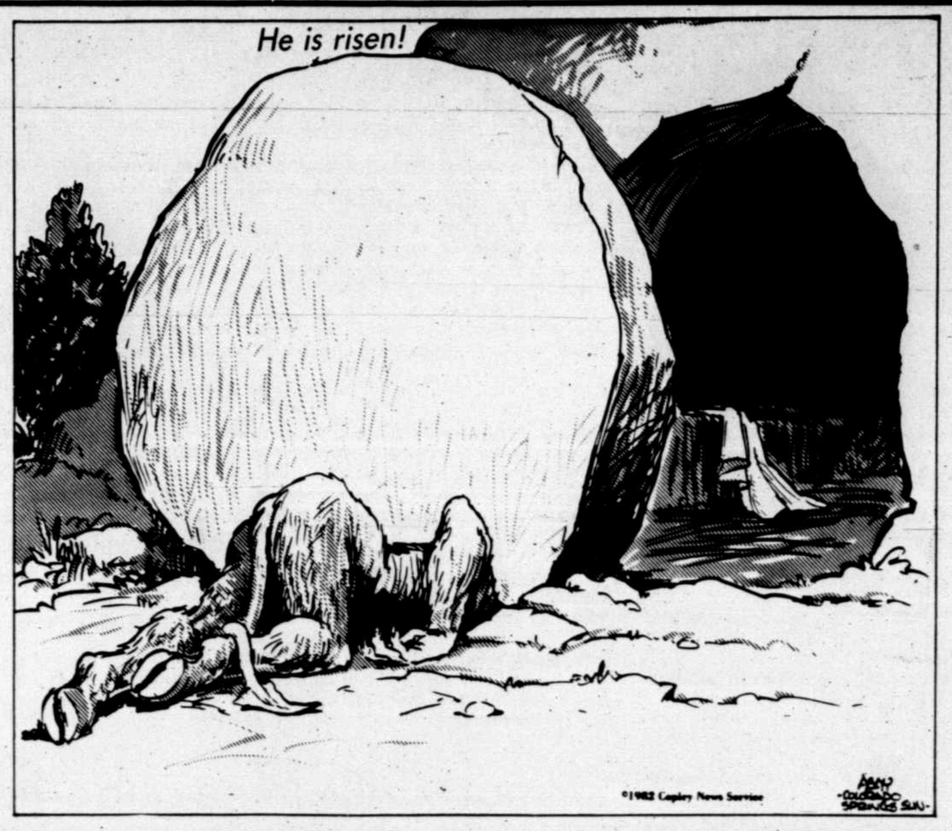

Today's highlight in history:

On April 11, 1951, President Harry S. Truman relieved Gen. Douglas MacArthur of his command in the Far East.

On this date:

In 1814, Napoleon Bonaparte abdicated unconditionally as Emperor of France and was banished to the island of Elba.

In 1899, the Philippine Islands were transferred from Spain to the United States.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Small business caught in recession tailspin

WASHINGTON — In different words, President Reagan has started to echo Franklin D. Roosevelt's theme that "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself." Even in South Succotash.

Jack Anderson

This reassurance was just given, for example, to the millions of small businessmen who are struggling to survive. In a report on small business, the White House confidently promised: "Our program will pull us out of this slump and put us on the road to prosperity and stable growth by the latter half of this year."

But unhappily, congressional experts have forebodings that the Reagan road to recovery is strewn with fallacies and unwarranted assumptions. The light that the president sees at the end of the tunnel, they fear, may be the headlight of an onrushing express train.

Lying in its path are millions of small, family owned plants, mills and stores which have already been battered by inflation, recession and high interest rates.

An internal study by the staff of the House Small Business Committee disputes the Reagan report and forecasts even more ruinous times ahead. The White House report, according to these congressional experts, "tends to gloss over the very serious condition of the small business sector." Here is a catalog of their worries:

— Business failures and bankruptcies recorded by Dun & Bradstreet have reached the most disastrous level since the Great Depression. Two years ago, the Wall Street financial rating firm listed 11,742 companies that went belly up. Last year, the total jumped to 17,043 — almost a 50 percent increase. And this year, the House committee experts predict, the number will reach nearly 23,000, or roughly twice what it was two years ago.

The congressional analysts noted that the Reagan report put the 1980-81 increase in business failures at only 30 percent, instead of the higher D&B figure. Even D&B eliminated a huge number of small businesses from its gloomy statistics. Using different criteria, the Capitol Hill people warn that as many as 69,000 enterprises may fold this year.

— One-man operations are taking an especially brutal beating, according to the congressional study. It warns: "Net income of both farm and non-farm sole proprietorships has fallen substantially in recent years." Further declines are predicted for 1982."

— Fewer businessmen are starting new ventures, reflecting a serious decline in business confidence at the grass-roots level. An index of net business formation fell 11 percent over an 11-month period ending last November. "The index is a measure of the welfare of business, of the confidence of entrepreneurs in the future and of business viability," the internal congressional study explains. "Its decline reflects a decline in the well-being of business."

— The new Reagan budget, while giving the Small Business Administration less money to hand out in direct loans, claims that the same level of help will be maintained by SBA-guaranteed loans from banks and other private lenders. The trouble here, as the House experts point out, is that "large corporations are crowding small businesses out of short-term credit markets (primarily bank lending) because they do not wish to commit themselves to long-term debt given the current high-interest rates." In other words, the big fish are driving the minnows out of the short-term financing market that is crucial to their survival.

— Even the biggest business tax cut in history doesn't help small businesses invest in buildings and equipment, the House committee study shows. The villain is high interest rates. The cost of borrowing is driving small businesses to the wall. "The real cost of credit — the normal interest rate minus inflation — has risen to historically high levels," the report points out. "Small businesses are paying as much as 10 to 12 percent above the rate of inflation ... far too high for a strong recovery."

All of these economic thunderclouds would be depressing enough if the SBA knew what it was doing. But apparently it doesn't even know enough to come in out of the rain. One congressional insider, noting that the White House budget people had to rewrite the SBA's annual report, explained to my associate Sam Fogg: "That wasn't surprising. SBA has become a political dumping ground for hacks. They're more inept than corrupt."

Of course, David Stockman's rewrite men put on their rose-colored glasses before they went to work on the SBA report. The resulting assurances of these fiscal Pollyannas, the House experts feel, are lulling the public into a false optimism.

A spokesman at the Small Business Administration stoutly insisted that Reaganomics has nothing to do with the harrowing plight of the nation's small businesses.

Statistics on business failures have been skewed by more relaxed federal bankruptcy laws, for one thing, the SBA official explained. And he said it's difficult to pin down precisely the number of actual failures. If a retired corporation executive, for example, decides to give up his second career and live on his pension, it's hardly fair to consider that a business failure.

Minor arguments aside, though, the administration has offered no evidence to refute the House committee's grim conclusion that "small businesses will bear a disproportionately larger share of the recession compared to large businesses."

GEORGE F. WILL

Vaccination cost low compared to benefit

WASHINGTON — Recollected in tranquillity, his tenure as secretary of health, education and welfare seemed to Joe Califano to have been an almost unbroken chain of controversies. But it was not entirely so:

George F. Will

"For every dollar spent on polio vaccine, our society saves $90 in (health care and rehabilitation) costs, the highest cost-benefit ratio of any public health program....There isn't much controversy about even the most aggressive attempts to immunize children against the childhood diseases."

Today, however, there is controversy about almost everything, even about what it is that people are disagreeing about. For example, at his press conference last week President Reagan showed unusual pique when complaining, with obvious sincerity, about accusations that his budget is unfair to the poor. He said:

"...in an editorial in the paper this morning, that struck at us because they said that we were — had less money for vaccinations for children and therefore there was going to be more sickness and perhaps more child death. Well, what they didn't see was that we had — we actually have more money in for that program than we've had for others."

What the editorial (in the New York Times) said was:

"Washington pays to immunize children against dread diseases. In 1981, the total was 6.3 million children. The 1983 budget would vaccinate only 3.8 million."

If the president was asserting that his fiscal 1983 budget calls for more dollars for immunization than the fiscal 1982 budget, he was correct. But the Times was correct enough.

In fiscal 1981, spending for immunization was $30.9 million. That funded immunization of 6.3 million children, about 40 percent of all children immunized that year. In fiscal 1982, funding declined to $28.3 million. The fiscal 1983 budget stipulates $29 million. But at this level, the number of immunizations will be substantially reduced — perhaps halved.

The cost of vaccines is soaring. Only about half the nation's children are immunized by private doctors. And the most expensive publicly funded vaccinations are disproportionately for poor children, who must be tracked down. Thus cutbacks in immunizations will have a regressive policy effect: There is apt to be more sickness, especially among poor children.

The seven infectious diseases include polio (which can result in paralysis), measles (one in 1,000 cases involves encephalitis, which can produce death or brain damage), rubella (German measles, which can produce birth defects when it strikes a pregnant woman), mumps, whooping cough, diptheria and tetanus. Studies demonstrate an inversely proportional relationship between the amount of funding for control of diseases such as polio and measles and the incidence of these diseases.

In 1952, there were 21,000 cases of polio. Last year there were six. Before the development of the measles vaccine, every child had measles by age 15. Because of federally supported immunization there was a 90 percent decrease between 1966 and 1969. Then, because of decreased federal funding, there was a three-fold increase by 1971. Today the disease is 99 percent conquered. New York city has more muggings per day than it has cases of measles per year. For less than the cost of one hour of Social Security ($17 million), measles could be eliminated in America by the end of this year. Instead, the disease may make a comeback.

By requiring immunizations before children enter school, all 50 states acquire a moral obligation to make vaccinations available to the poor. States should increase their spending to compensate for federal insufficiency. But many will not, and communicable diseases do not respect state lines.

Of course parents should not be complacent, or thrifty in ways that jeopardize their children's health. But federal policy should not jeopardize children who were careless when choosing parents.

Immunization is a government program that works, spectacularly well. It is a facet of government's greatest achievement of this century, the public health improvements that have bred complacency about numerous diseases that, until a few generations ago, killed millions and terrified everyone else.

As a result of the last rubella epidemic, there are 30,000 children who will require $2 billion in special care. Conservatives understand that there are occasions when governments must arm in order to disarm; they should understand that sometimes governments must spend in order to restrain future spending. A challenge for conservatives is to prove that government can be hardheaded without being hardhearted.

A niggling attitude about vaccinations does not help. Rather, it helps those who say conservatives think protectable human life begins at conception and ends at birth.

ART BUCHWALD

Wall to wall banks have few people

If there has been any trickle-down effect from Reaganomics, it has been the crocodile tears of bankers and savings and loan managers who claim they are being creamed by high interest rates.

Art Buchwald

What most of them won't admit is that there are too many banks and S&L's in this country in the first place. All you have to do is walk down any main street of America and you'll see one bank next to another, each oblivious to how many banks and savings institutions the traffic can stand.

"The trouble with the banking business," said Dartmouth, a down-and-out banker, "is that during the roaring '50s and '60s everyone and his brother went into it. It was a time when everyone else and his brother also went into the housing and commercial building business, and everyone and his sister became real estate agents.

"The people who didn't know anything about banking made loans to the people who didn't know anything about building, and for awhile everyone considered themselves financial wizards. The word was out on the street that if you wanted to become J.P. Morgan all you had to do was find an empty ground-floor location and open a bank or an S&L. It was easier to get a charter for a bank than it was to get a driver's license, and before you knew it the nation was covered wall to wall with banks.

"Banks and S&L's went all out to attract depositors. First they gave away Green Stamps. Then they offered dishes, heating pads, coffee grinders and electric toasters.

"As the competition got tougher they threw in television sets and trips to Disneyland, and they were happy to give you 5½ percent on your money, which they loaned out for 6½ percent to all of their friends.

"It was the golden age of banking and everyone thought it would last forever.

"Then came inflation, followed by unbelievable government deficits, followed by soaring interest rates, followed by Truesdale."

"Who's Truesdale?" I asked.

"He came up with a brainstorm and started the money fund business. He opened up a tiny office on the 30th floor of the Woolworth Building and began offering people 15 percent on their money instead of five. Except for rent he had no overhead, and no employees. He didn't even have to put in a closed-circuit television system to watch his customers.

"People started taking their money out of banks and S&L's and sending it to Truesdale. The gunslingers on Wall Street followed suit and soon there were as many money funds in the country as there were banks.

"At this moment the government had to go out and start borrowing money from the public to make up its deficits, and they had to pay as much interest as the money funds to make their notes attractive.

"So between the money funds and the U.S. Treasury, the banks and S&L's couldn't compete for anyone's savings."

"That's a sad story," I said.

"What makes it even sadder is that when the interest rates went sky high, and the building industry went belly up, the banks and S&L's were stuck with 6½ percent loans to everyone and his brother. No one could afford to borrow money for new housing, and the banks couldn't carry home owners and developers at the old mortgage rates.

"To make matters worse every stockbroker and his brother are going into the banking business, and soon the department stores will be in it and supermarkets will open branches and eventually a bank will have as much relevance to a town as a railroad station."

"I guess we won't see more banks and S&L's opening in such a climate," I said.

"That's the funny part of it. Even now, every time you see a new building go up, the ground floor is always reserved for another bank."

"Why?" I asked

"Because everyone and his brother still believes what bank robber Willie Sutton said: 'That's where the money is.'"

Legal system often seems to leave unanswered questions

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Perhaps the Capitol promotes curious coincidences and ironic pairings of events.

On one lovely spring morning, Gov. Bill Clements was busily signing a proclamation praising the nation's system of law, while just across the Rotunda, a candidate for the Court of Criminal Appeals was chastising that court for failing to meet its responsibilities.

In proclaiming May 1 as "Law Day" (the 25th such anniversary, by the way), Clements noted that "major historical events" in recent years "have seriously tried the system of law in this country."

There's not likely to be much disagreement on that point.

There is much disagreement, however, on how well the legal system is working in Texas and the nation — and while the debate is hardly new, it has grown more intense lately.

Much has been written and said lately on such topics as prison reform, drunk driving laws, the death penalty, and the treatment of offenders, and their victims, by the courts.

Over and over, politicians — and non-politicians — charge that courts have become too concerned with protecting the rights of the criminal, and ignore the rights of the victim and the rights of society.

The reply has been to the effect that the rights of the criminal and the rights of the victim are the same rights guaranteed to everyone under the United States Constitution.

That is true, of course, but it's not the whole truth.

Judge Learned Hand, one of the nation's great jurists, once defined justice as "the tolerable accommodation of the conflicting interests of society," adding, "I don't believe there is any royal road to attain such accommodations concretely."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

But that person is presumed to be innocent — and therefore entitled to all his or her constitutional rights — until that person is found guilty of a crime by a court.

What often causes problems is that legal guilt isn't the same as actual or moral guilt.

For example, a gunman shoots down the President on a sidewalk.

Millions of people see the event on television.

Is the gunman guilty of a crime? The answer, from a legal standpoint, is that he is not — not until a court says he is.

What concerns — and at times, infuriates — persons watching the courts at work is that a person who may be guilty from an actual or moral standpoint is found to be not guilty from a legal standpoint.

This is where the Court of Criminal Appeals has come in for much criticism recently.

Too often, critics charge, the court has overturned convictions because of a "technicality" — a term which the members of the court don't like, and which lawyers don't seem able to define to anyone's satisfaction.

One person's technicality may be another's constitutional right.

But to a layman — and apparently to many attorneys — the court's reasoning can be baffling at times.

Virtually everyone knows that there is a constitutional prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure.

Presumably everyone would agree that it would be unreasonable for police to pick out a home at random and enter it to see if they could find something which might be evidence of a crime.

But beyond that point, when is a search unreasonable?

The Court of Criminal Appeals recently decided that it was responsible for a policeman to look through the purse of a woman who had been stopped — but not to look into a pill bottle in the purse.

One famous — or infamous — ruling by the same court concerned a decision that many theft indictments were "fundamentally defective" because they didn't allege that the property had been taken "without the effective consent of the owner."

That decision led to the reversal of dozens of cases in which those charged had pleaded guilty.

Last year, it was proposed that the law be changed to require that any objections to an indictment — which is supposed to tell the accused what the charge is — be raised at the time of trial, rather than on appeal.

That didn't sit too well with some lawyers, yet it might be considered as a way to address some of those conflicting interests upon which Judge Hand commented.

Law Day might be a good time to think about that — and about Judge Hand's comment that in a society "so riven that the spirit of moderation is gone, no court can save."

SPEAKING OUT

Early detection aids Tourette sufferers

By EILEEN B. SAPP

The subject I would like to speak out about is a medical one. It concerns a rare neurological disease called "Gilles de la Tourette Syndrome," more commonly referred to as "Tourette Syndrome." The disease affects many more people than was once thought because it is difficult to diagnose. There are no tests for the discovery of Tourette Syndrome, and therefore it is not easily diagnosed. Tourette Syndrome is a neurological disorder thought to be caused by chemical malfunction in the brain. It is thought to be hereditary, maybe being handed down for many generations. Many older people have been afflicted with it for years and have learned to hide their symptoms to avoid embarrassment.

In 1885 Gilles de la Tourette, a French scientist, reviewed the case of a young woman with involuntary muscular tics and jerking movements, and the disease has borne his name ever since. Only in recent years have people stricken with with this debasing disease been treated as neurological patients. They were once thought to be hopelessly insane and were subjected to shock treatments, being locked away in institutions, hypnosis, prolonged sipping of water and behavior modification. The disease affects three times as many boys as girls and can strike between the ages of two and 16. The person stricken with Tourette may show such signs as muscle twitching, arm and leg movements, a barking sound, shaking of the head, sniffing, turning of the head, and, the worst symptom of all, loud and sudden outbursts of cursing (coprolalia), etc. The movements are brief and rapid, but most times continuous. They are uncontrollable."

Dr. Arther K. Shapiro, a professor of psychiatry at Mount Siani School of Medicine in New York City, has done much to help Tourette victims. Some years ago Dr. Shapiro had a patient who entered his office barking, jerking and cursing. She had come in because she thought she was emotionally disturbed. However, upon examination he found her not emotionally disturbed at all. He began to look into a drug that might help, and after checking into over three dozen, tried the drug haloperidol (trade-named Haldol). In the majority of the patients treated with Haldol, over 90 percent of their symptoms disappeared after a year.

There are possible side effects with Haldol, such as tiredness, deep depression and restlessness. However, the Tourette patient welcomes any relief he can obtain even though he may suffer from the side effects.

The most tragic result of Tourette is what the victim has to overcome. They are thought to be crazy and their bizarre behavior is frightening to those around them. They are not tolerated in a classroom situation because of their movements and noises. They are usually miserable. They have difficulty functioning in the "norm" world. They do not have many friends, have difficulty in coping at home, cannot hold employment and most times turn into total recluses.

People afflicted with Tourette are quite bright and talented, but are forced into not using their total capacities because of the misconceived ideas people have about them. They think themselves to be crazy. It is imperative that an early diagnosis be made in order to avoid permanent psychological damage.

I am writing this article in an effort to reach other parents who might have difficult children with this disorder, or even older people who have had the symptoms for years. My son, who is now 18 years of age, has this disease. It was diagnosed in the summer of 1979. He was seen by Dr. William L. McGavran of Midland. Had it not been for his efforts my son's disorder might never have been diagnosed. He recommended that we see Dr. Levingstone, a neurologist out of Dallas, who is affiliated with a neurological clinic familiar with Tourette patients.

My son had demonstrated many tics during childhood, but it was during the onset of puberty that his disorder became intolerable. It is my belief that he has had Tourette Syndrome since the age of two. I have taken him to many doctors over the years, who have contended my son is overactive. He has been subjected to harassment, cruel treatment and forced into being a total recluse because of the misunderstanding of the disease. Even adults not understanding have subjected him to embarrassment and harassment. Even after being told of the problem, in some instances, people have still not understood.

Eileen B. Sapp moved to Midland six years ago from Springfield, Mo. A legal secretary, she attended the University of Mississippi and is a graduate of Draughn Business College in Springfield.

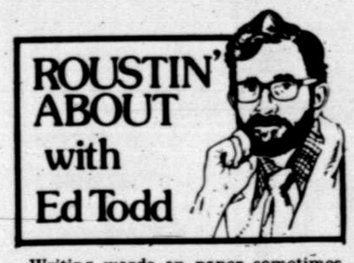

Even though Tourette is a neurologicl disorder, most Tourette patients end up in the psychologist's or psychiatrist's office because of this peer pressure. They simply cannot cope with the world around them. In my son's case, his diagnosis came many years after he contracted the disease. He has suffered irreparable damage because of this. It is my desire to possibly help other persons who might have this disorder, so that they might receive an early diagnosis and obtain help in time.

More information about Tourette Syndrome may be obtained by writing the Tourette Syndrome Association, 40-08 Corp., Kennedy Street, Bayside, New York 11361. Also, information may be obtained by contacting the regional chairman for this area who is Mrs. Sue Sprouls, 6605 Joliet Drive, Lubbock, Texas 79413.

Currently there is no cure for Tourette Syndrome, but efforts are being made daily through interested individuals to try to find a cure for this disease. There is at this time before the House a bill called the "Orphan Drug Bill," which would appropriate funds for the development of orphan drugs and would help pave the way to a cure for Tourette Syndrome.

Ideas don't change world overnight

Writing words on paper sometimes holds as much fascination and frustration as screaming wildly into a canyon on a moonlit night.

The acoustics can be startling, even charming, for awhile; yet, after the air has stilled, nothing has changed.

The essence, it seems, is that ideas, however noble or ignoble, however fluently or crudely phrased, do not bring about a changed world at the instance they appear on paper or are read by the fearless pursuers of knowledge and truth.

No, dear writer, nothing much changes. Your ego may be wounded and your vanity may be ruffled, but obviously you aren't God or even a god.

One man is not changed by another man's words, though they be flaunted and gilded. Solomon told you that.

Everything of man's making is vanity.

Man's ego goes beyond his reach, and writers bear this out. Whatever they write with whatever brilliance, talent, insight and ability they might possess will take up but a brief span of time in the lives of the readers. After that, the message fades from the temporal memory, though it remains in the book after it is closed. Just as gold, once glittering on the horizon, is buried by a quaking of the earth.

Now, all is not black and white, just as the night is not totally dark and the day is not totally light. Sometimes, somewhere, there is an inspirational message which speaks a universal truth; and the reader is awakened and feels enlivened. And if this is so, then the writer is vaunted not; he is humbled. For he, like the reader, has been touched by God.

However fond a man, even a vain wordsmith (of whom there are many who deem themselves latent or undiscovered writers of masterpieces), may be of his "talent," he must not forget this: God is his Maker, and without God, there is nothing. Nothing. Not even a word.

KINGSBURY-SMITH

Anderson leaning toward third party

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor
The Hearst Newspapers

Washington — If President Reagan's economic recovery program fails to pull the country out of the recession by next spring, John B. Anderson will endeavor to form a third political party and run again for President in 1984.

The 59-year-old former ten-term moderate Republican congressman from a small town in Illinois, who polled seven percent of the vote as the independent candidate in the 1980 presidential election, recently disclosed his campaign plan.

Since Anderson sees no indications at the present time that there will be a sustainable turnaround in the economy by the end of this year, he thinks he will probably decide to launch a third party movement next year.

"If the recession continues into next year, I think we will have to have a new approach and more imaginative thinking to get us out of this mess and achieve lasting economic stability," Anderson said.

The tall, trim, white-haired political loner, who during the 22 years he served in Congress won more respect for his keen intellect, articulate talent, and ironic humor than for his sharp tongue, believes the American people are eager for greater confidence in government competency and vision than he thinks either of the traditional Republican and Democratic parties provide.

"I think there is the potential for a great political awakening in the country," he added. "I would not run again, however, as an independent. If you are going to get people to commit themselves to a cause which from the outset would be regarded by the most astute political observers as a very uphill battle, you would have to convince them that they were investing in more than an individual. They would have to be convinced they were investing in a set of policies, domestic and foreign, that would merit support not in just one presidential campaign but would be espoused by other candidates in the future."

Anderson added that the third party he would try to form would be centrist oriented, with the participation, hopefully, of moderates from the two major parties.

Park worth it

To The Editor:

E.R. West's derogatory use of my name in his April 4th Letter to the Editor certainly deserves a reply.

Obviously unbeknownst to Mr. West, there are a great many good people in Midland who do not succumb to greed and who work and contribute constantly to the betterment of the city as a whole. The Wild River Canyon investors were fully aware, as early as October, 1979, that much more money could be made if the land were initially developed as office and apartments, instead of as a park. But they chose unanimously to develop the park concept instead, because of the desperate need for youth recreation in Midland.

Phased development was the original plan, not stampede development which we now face. My offer to the City, was simply to sell the park as a park, for the same price the investors could have received from its sale as an apartment site. Councilman Tom Sloan, (referred to in Mr. West's letter), along with the other councilmen, expressed anguish that the park would be destroyed, but two factors temporarily postponed our deal with the City: (1.) The land which was to be traded for the park could not be released by the airport authority, and (2.) it was too late to get the issue on the April 3rd bond proposal.

An initiative petition is now being circulated by over 100 registered voters (unrelated to any financial involvement in the park) calling for the issue to be voted on this summer.

Wild River Canyon has become "family" for a great many people in Midland. It's more than a place to swim or play for the youngsters, its a whole environment where young and old can play together, where families and friends can gather, away from the hot, dusty city we live in. As one youngster has written, "It's a whole different world down there."

While mon and dad putter along on the miniature golf course, grandmom and grandad can ride a paddle boat to the ice cream pavillion. The youngsters while away the hours on the many rides in the park. Green areas have been left throughout the park, and asphalt has been minimized.

Midland will always have its "aginers" (against everything). Wild River Canyon has its detractors, also. Thank goodness, though, that other fine organizations, such as the Midland Cubs, Midland Symphony, Community Theater, Hogan Park Golf Course, Petroleum Museum and Museum of the Southwest exist because people are willing to give of themselves to make them work.

Wild River Canyon also has a fishing lake. Speaking for myself, Mr. West has my permission to go jump in it.

Thank you

To The Editor:

On behalf of the Municipal Garage personnel we want to thank the people that went into the community and explained our great need for additional space to service and repair the cities' trucks and cars and other equipment.

The individuals that made personal contact and spoke before groups were extremely important and the radio stations, television and newspapers did an excellent job of explaining the needs we face.

Most important of course were the voters that said YES to the bond issue. It is to these people we personally pledge an untireing effort to provide top-notch service as our sincere way of saying thanks for your support in the bond election.

Peaceful Israel

To The Editor:

It seems that Mr. Clark of Eastland is blinded by his anti-semitism or he is duped by PLO propaganda. Are isolated incidents in time or internal turmoil the measure of a nation? I seem to remember American troops killing American students; I seem to remember teargas in the streets during the American electoral process; I seem to remember attempted surpression of dissent in the U.S. throughout the 1960s and 70s. Mr. Clark, surely you agree that the U.S. is a peace-loving country despite constant internal and external violence. As the Camp David agreement proves, Israel and Egypt are nations that long to beat their swords into plowshares. The PLO support of worldwide terrorism (note the PLO supported Red Brigade kidnap of Gen. Dozier) defies the claim that peace will come once Israel recognizes the PLO.

Granted, Israel is not a perfect state. What nation has never had internal dissent and civil rights surpression? Mr. Clark, you are not seeing the forest for the trees are getting in your way. The freely elected government of Israel attests to its democracy; the Camp David Agreements attests to Israel's desire for peace. Worldwide terrorism and the civil war in Lebanon speak for the PLO.

Now Mr. Clark, draw your conclusions.

Eye-opener

To The Editor:

I wonder how many of your readers read the article entitled "Europeans lack some Soviet history facts," by Bernard Kaplan on page 9c of the Friday, March 26 edition? I was appalled to learn that French and other European students, even at the university and graduate levels, knew next to nothing about the atrocities committed by the Soviet Union and its leaders since the 1917 revolution.

Kaplan quoted French historian/educator Bernard Bonilauri: "Much of what is taught from grammar school to university level conforms closely to official Soviet history..."

"Since World War II, successive generations of students have received, overall, a benign image of Soviet history and the communist system. This has fundamentally affected their political attitudes. It has been of immeasurable benefit to Soviet foreign policy. It is greatly helping the Soviets' anti-nuclear 'peace' campaign right now!"

This whole article (of which I have quoted only part) is important to the understanding of events in Europe today.

Motive honored

To The Editor:

Certainly Midland has many people to be proud of, and I agree with Mrs. York (April 4 — Letters To The Editor) that the honor being bestowed on Bobby and Shirley Trimble is most deserved.

And, when "Christmas In April" is mentioned, one quite naturally thinks of all the hard work and faithful involvement of Bobby and the many people who rally to the cause. But, as for me, when "Christmas In April" is mentioned, I recall a news article in The Midland Reporter-Telegram (last year) in which your reporter said he asked Shirley Trimble "why do you do it," and she very simply replied "because we love Jesus."

In my opinion, such precious motive must be included in all the fine and true things said about these two special people!

Rosebery kudos

To The Editor:

This letter is written on behalf of Charlene Rosebery, candidate for position of school board. I have had both civic and professional contact with Ms. Rosebery. As a leader in the League of Women Voters, I found her not only conscientious in her duties, but gifted in her ability to motivate others.

Several years ago, I was a secondary classroom teacher for MISD. Because of her competance and expressed interest in our local educational program, I asked Ms. Rosebery to assist me in the classroom as a volunteer. To her credit, I found her to be a "socially aware person." She was very sensitive to the problems of minority students.

Charlene Rosebery would be a welcome edition to any school board. She is intelligent, aware, assertive and action-oriented. MISD needs someone like Charlene Rosebery.

Pro Wild River

To The Editor:

The large number of phone calls I've received in reference to Mr. West's letter about Wild River Canyon prompts this reply.

Outrage about Mr. West's letter is what I'm hearing! Let's try, one more time to get the facts straight.

First of all let's talk money. The fact is the cost to the "average" owner of a $50,000 home would be approximately $6 per year. Even though this amount is very small, to compensate the taxpayer, Wild River Canyon will honor each valid holder of a 1982 Midland voter registration card with one FREE pass to the park each year (value $7.50 a person or $15 per couple) if the issue passes. 'Nuff said.

Second, in regard to a "bad business investment," with our ever increasing experience and use of our computers, Wild River Canyon should be a profitable asset to the city of Midland.

Third, West states, "we definitely do not need W.R.C." Who is "we"? It's not the many churches who brought groups through; not the YMCA or scout groups who love to come each season; not the schools and summer camps who schedule parties each season; not the grandparents, parents and teachers who call me daily and say PLEASE don't let the park close. Not the one hundred plus people who have called and asked for petitions and said they would do anything to help. And not the 100,000 patrons who have loved the park.

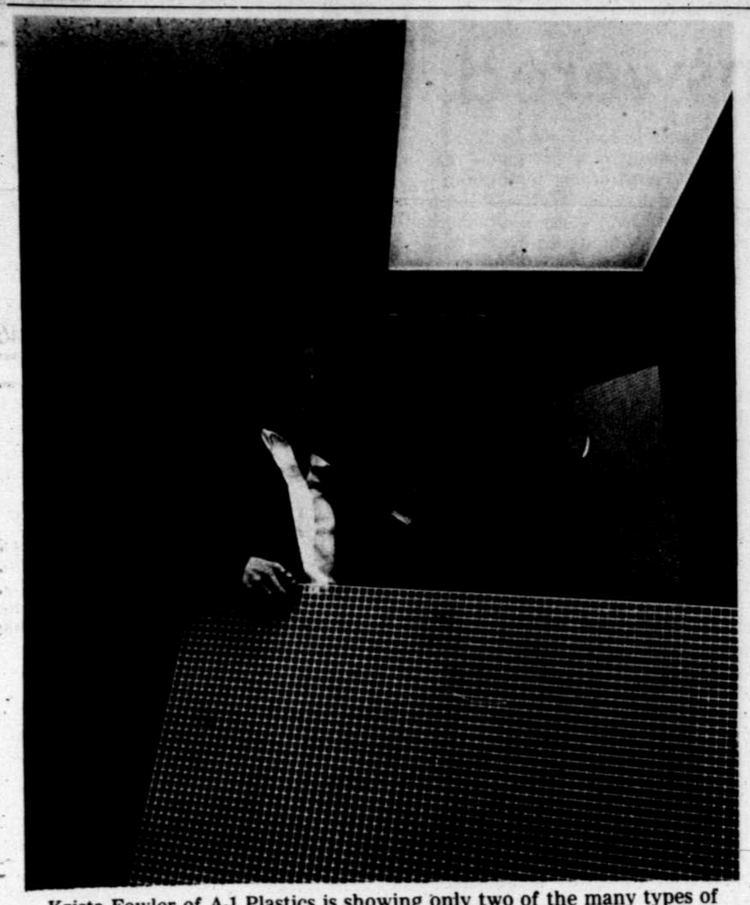

"Someone to tote the load." Yes that is exactly what we want! We the people of Midland can afford $6 or so a year to take care of our own children, in our own park, in our own city, in our own way!

Propane conversion saves maintenance

Ken Peeler, president of Midland "66" Oil Co., points out some of the many distinct advantages propane motor fuel has over gasoline, starting with lower cost per gallon. Propane gas has consistently enjoyed a lower cost per gallon than gasoline in the past, and from all indications, it will continue its price advantage well into the future.

Propane is an unleaded fuel with a naturally occuring high octane rating of 110-120 - without additives. Most regular unleaded gasoline has an octane rating of 86-87. And that means running your vehicle on propane makes it perform better. It burns cleaner than gasoline or diesel. There are no lead, carbon or other sludge-creating properties in LPG engine fuel, which saves you money on over hauls.

Because it is a clean engine fuel, you can save moneuy on oil changes and filters. Oil maintins its lubricating properties five to 10 times longer, resulting in an up to 80 percent savings on lubrication oil costs. LPG generates its own pressure, so the fuel pump is entirely eliminated. This saves on replacement and repair costs. Spark plugs last four or five times longer when you burn propane.

The carburetor required for an LPG engine is a simple piece of equipment with few moving parts. You'll have less carburation expense. Service and repair costs are negligible. Propane gives you more usable power per gallon than any other fuel. And it virtually eliminates spillage, pilferage and evaporation loss. Propane-powered engines can operate more hours of the day, more days of the year, because downtime is drastically reduced.

Propane's exhaust is so clean, forklifts burning the fuel have been safely used indoors for years. Carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions are much lower than those of gasoline.

Propane engine fuel is safe. During the past decade, more than three million LPG carburetors have sold. That number is rapidly rising. Propane motor fuel has anexcellent safety record. In fact, a study performed by a Dutch research center concluded that, when properly installed, "LPG fueled vehicles are safer in crashes than petrol-fueled vehicles."

The key to propane motor fuel safety is proper equipment installation. So don't try to do it yourself. Talk to the experienced hands at Midland "66" Oil Co. about converting your vehicles. They are there to help you Monday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and on Saturday from 7:30 to noon. Start enjoying propane's many advantages.

Rhodessa Development offers new home community

Rhodessa Development Company, a Dallas-based firm with quality residential properties throughout the Southwest, is offering a new home community in Midland: Sagewood Condominiums. And the company is eager to tell the Midland residents about the unique advantages of condominium ownership.

"First, there's the obvious benefit of a lower price than a comparable detached home," said Jack Petrucelli, project manager for the community planned for Midkiff Road and Caldera Boulevard. "At Sagewood, for example, pre-construction prices start at $49,900 on one- and two-bedroom homes featuring distinctive wood-burning fireplaces, French doors, microwave ovens and refrigerators with icemakers."

"Of course, another advantage is that owners will appreciate a fresh, new start in these condominiums, where each home will be finished in buyer's choice of carpeting and wallcoverings from the seller's wide array of shades and patterns."

"Persons who are now renting their homes may find that this increased affordability will allow them to make an investment," Petrucelli added. "Below-market financing offered through the developer will also help persons buy a Sagewood home, which will mean a significant tax break and a hedge against inflation."

"Then, there's the unique, carefree lifestyle of condominiums," reported Petrucelli.

Economists agree industry has seen steady decline

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Most economists agree that U.S. industry has seen a steady decline in productivity and technological innovation in the past decade. They are also in accord that the slump has added to unemployment problems and has hampered a strong economic recovery.

With the federal government doing very little to spur technological innovation, the nation's states have gotten involved in providing incentives to encourage such innovations.

What is being done to stimulate innovation is described in detail in a just-released survey on state activities by the State of California, a study done for the National Governors' Association Task Force on Technological Innovation, a group chaired by Gov. Jerry Brown of California.

The survey found that "states are beginning to fulfill their federalist role as supporters of economically-financed research and development, targeted job training programs, and cooperative forums where business, labor and government guide public policy."

The study cites 88 separate actions underway or proposed by states to stimulate productivity and innovation. Some of the initiatives are relatively recent and modest, but as the survey notes, "the variety of activities . . . clearly indicates that states have taken seriously the potential for technological innovation to promote economic growth and have adopted measures suited to the needs of their own economies."

The survey found programs being implemented or proposed in 12 states that aim to provide a forum for public and private sector discussions of policy to stimulate innovation. In addition, 10 states have programs to promote resource efficiency, 16 states have programs linking university research and development with technological innovation, and 17 provide financing for innovation work.

The newest area of state interest is initiatives to allow workers a stake in innovation, with programs underway in Arkansas, California and Maryland.

Copies of the report can be obtained from the California Commission on Industrial Innovation in Sacramento.

PENSIONS

According to a preliminary Department of Labor study, private uninsured pension-fund assets are at least $100 billion larger than previously estimated by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. The department estimates that in 1977 there were 450,000 private employee pension plans which reported over $282 billion in trust fund assets. It based its estimate on data collected from the annual financial reports of 37,500 pension plans filed with the Internal Revenue Service. If the figures are correct, 1982 estimates would have to be revised as well, bringing the total of private, state and local pension assets to between $750 billion and $825 billion.

IS MONEY IMPORTANT?

Money is not the most important thing to today's employees, according to a survey conducted by Psychology Today magazine.

When asked how important 18 job characteristics were to them, the top five answers listed in order of importance to employees were: (1) doing something that makes them feel good about themselves; (2) accomplishing something that is worthwhile; (3) learning new things; (4) developing skills and abilities; and, (5) having a certain amount of freedom on the job.

IS RECOVERY UNDERWAY?

Although the worst of the recession may be over, there are still few signs of recovery, according to Chase Econometrics analysts. What's in store in the months ahead? The next several months will likely be characterized by several crosscurrents: (a) Consumer spending and housing will remain relatively flat, reflecting stable real incomes and the absence of additional increases in mortgage rates; (b) Inventories will be liquidated at a slower rate; (c) Military spending will continue to rise, while capital spending will decline; (d) Exports will drop further in view of the recent strengthening of the dollar.

JOBS

Commissioner of Labor Statistics Janet I. Norwood feels that the time it takes for the nation to recover from recession will depend on America's ability to do something about its longer-term economic problems, such as declining productivity and chronic unemployment in the auto and other hard-depressed industries as well as finding more jobs for blacks. Currently the unemployment rate among whites is 9 percent and blacks, 18 percent...If you are seeking an answer, you can find a partial response on how job opportunities can be found for disadvantaged groups in a Brookings Institute study, "Creating Jobs: Public Employment Programs and Wage Subsidies." The study, you guessed it, deals mostly, with tax-subsidized public sector jobs...Among groups urging that the private sector become more involved in employment and training programs is the National Association of Manufacturers

BROWN: NOT A HERO TO ACHS

Governor Brown may be heading a national technology innovation task force but he has come under fire from the American Council on Science and Health (ACHS), an educational association promoting "scientifically balanced evaluations of food, chemicals, the environment and health."

The association accuses Brown in the April issue of "ACHS News and Views" of condoning and allowing "his unscientific personal philosophy to influence public policies affecting health, agriculture, and the environment," a policy which has been "costly and harmful to public health."

The article specifically cites Brown's "notorious mismanagment of the Medfly problem, the partial legalization of the ineffective cancer drug Laetrile, pardon of a physician convicted of illegally prescribing Laetrile, appointment of novices to posts requiring scientific expertise, failure to prevent the sale of unpasturized milk."

OLDER WORKERS

A recent study of the 4,000 largest companies in the U.S. on employer attitudes toward older employees by William M. Mercer Inc. found a "new tolerance, appreciation, and understanding" on the part of management toward older workers.

Mercer, an employee benefit and compensation firm, said the overwhelming majority of executives agrees that older workers perform as well on the job as younger employees and that older workers are more committed to company objectives.

The findings suggest a shift in attitude from the late '60s and early '70s, when the conventional wisdom seemed to be that workers "peak" at age 50.

While the performance of older workers was rated as good as that of their younger counterparts, nearly two-thirds of the executives agreed that older workers are generally discriminated against in the employment market and 80 percent foresee a significant increase in age discrimination suits in the future.

AROUND AND ABOUT

A bi-partisan move is afoot in Congress to abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corp. and return its unspent $12 billion to the federal treasury to help cut down the deficit. A formal request will be made after the Easter recess when Sens. Bill Armstrong (R-Colo.) and William Proxmire (D.-Wis.) offer legislation to kill the panel. The charge? It's been ineffective and incompetent. Chances of passage? Anyone's guess. Last year, 8,719 bills were introduced in Congress, with very few enacted into law...Incidentally, Congress has what it calls a legislative hotline which gives you easier access to information about bills currently before it. The number is (800) 424-9047. The person answering the phone will need to know at least one of the following: the name of the congressman sponsoring the bill or the name or number of the bill...Texas Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen wants the Senate to approve his legislation appointing inspectors general to eliminate fraud and waste within the Defense, Justice and Treasury Departments and the Agency for International Development. These agencies were excluded from a 1978 law which established such positions within other government offices. A similar bill was enacted by the House by a 344 to 65 vote in 1981...Smarting from charges that nuclear power generating plants are unsafe, the industry has developed a nuclear plant construction quality evaluation program...Motor vehicle manufacturers recalled more than 9 million vehicles in 1981 — most of them voluntarily — because of safety-related defects, according to the Transportation Department...The Federal Trade Commission is investigating recent acquisitions and mergers in the discount and department store industry...Clinton Marie Wright is the new deputy director of the Labor Department's Womens' Bureau. She holds a doctorate degree in public administration from the University of Southern California...Detailed statistics on the nation's petroleum supplies are now available for the first time on a regular basis — within 60 days after collection from the soon going-out-of-business Energy Department...If you have missed it, we want you to know that the Senate has confirmed the nomination of James C. Sanders of San Jose, Calif. as head of the Small Businss Administration.

Oil recovery conference scheduled

AUSTIN — A conference on oil recovery in the Austin Chalk formation will be held April 28 in College Station.

The Austin Chalk is considered a major reserve of petroleum in Texas. Within the past four years, wells have been drilled throughout the region from south of San Antonio northeast into the College Station area.

The conference will be sponsored by the Texas Petroleum Research Committee, a research unit of the Texas Railroad Commission with offices in the Department of Petroleum Engineering at The University of Texas at Austin and at Texas A&M University. Conference co-chairman are Dr. Myron Dorfman, the H. B. Harkins Professor and chairman of the Department of Petroleum Engineering, and Dr. Ben Caudle, the B. J. Lancaster Professor in petroleum engineering and assistant department chairman, both of UT Austin.

The daylong conference will cover geology, drilling and completion, well performance, log interpretation, reservoir engineering and economics of production in the chalk. Keynote speaker will be James Nugent, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission.

S&L's may be allowed to establish out-of-state branches

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Savings and Loan Department is studying whether state-chartered savings and loan associations may be given the power, by regulation, to establish branch offices outside Texas.

Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff says the study was requested by the Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission, with a report to go to that panel at its May meeting (the date of which hasn't been set as yet).

"We've had some inquiries in connection with this," Vandygriff reports.

The department hasn't drafted any regulation thus far, and any proposal would be circulated to associations around Texas for comment before its enactment.

At present, state-chartered associations must convert to mutual associations under federal regulations in order to branch across state lines, Vandygriff said.

He says the proposal, if it is found within the commission's authority and if it is approved, would help keep state-chartered and federally chargered assocations "in parity."

Vandygriff also reports increased inquiries regarding mergers from associations, which are attempting to bolster their position in the financial community.

"Maybe it's good to look at that (merger)," Vandygriff comments.

Baylor University business professor Dr. Allen Cook urged the Governor's Task Force on Foreign Investment to encourage a more active role by the state in seeking foreign investment in Texas.

Such investment in the form of fixed assets, such as manufacturing plants, can generate jobs and bring new technology into the state, he argued.

Investment in fixed assets, he argued, is better than investment in short-term assets which could be withdrawn quickly.

Many other states — such as Florida, Virginia, Illinois and New York — spend millions of dollars annual to atrract foreign investors, Cook said.

Pointing to Texas' increasing population, Cook said Texas is "going to have to create thousands of new jobs per year, and this is one way to do it."

Texas' positive business climate, favorable tax conditions and "mystique" created by portrayals such as the TV show "Dallas" make the state attractive to foreign businesses, Cook said.

He urged that the legislature appropriate money to finance recruiting of such investiments.

State Fire Marshal Ernest Emerson reports the Texas fire incident reporting system designed to help detect arson and arson trends, is in the process of going "on line," with reports back to participating fire departments expected within a month.

Emerson notes Texas has 1,572 fire departments, with some 300-plus now instructed on using the new reporting system.

Most of the major cities are expected to be participating quickly; San Antonio which adopted the new plan when it implemented its own local data system, is reporting to Emerson now. Houston and Dallas are in the process of doing so.

Emerson says the suystem should help Texas attack arson on a statewide basis, commenting that lack of information has hampered efforts in the past.

"It's a malignant crime," he comments. "We're guess-timating that one-third of all fires are arson, but we can't say for sure ... We do know that it has reached serious proportions."

He is delighted, Emerson adds, that the new system is at last becoming a reality. "It has been a long, drawn out process," he notes.

Texas Air Control Board plans three meetings in May on proposed regulations for permit fees for new facilities requried to obtain ACB construction permits.

First session will be held in Houston May 20 (7 p.m., Bureau of Air Quality Control auditorium, 7411 Park Place Blvd.), with a session in Austin May 25 (7 p.m., ACB auditorium, 6330 US 290 E.) and a third in Odessa May 26 (Chamber of Commerce meeting room, 400 W. 4th, also at 7 p.m.).

ACB officials also are looking over changes being made by the Environment Protection Agency on emissions contorls, involving use of the so-called "bubble policy."

Under that concept, emmissions from a plant are considered as being from one source, instead of taking each emmission source invividually.

The new rules also set out procedures for "emmission trading banks," by which industries which control emmissions to a greater extent than required may sell some of that "surplus" control to another industry.

Critics of that approach have contended it could bait progress in some areas towards cleaning up air pollution problems.

Intransigence on deficit translates into extended rescession

By DAVID W. DEITCH
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — The Reagan intransigence on the budget deficit translates into an extended recession, and there is much fear that the July tax cut will result in even tighter money. Corporate liquidity problems, aggravated by an ailing bond maket, void any basis for an economic rebound.

Sexism anyway? Standard & Poor's notes that "many women have proven that financial expertise has no gender," yet publishes a special "Investment Guide for Women." The advisory firm recommends zero coupon bonds for IRA programs. "Zeros" are bonds that pay no current interest. They sell at deep discounts from face value, rising to par (generally $1,000 per bond) at maturity.

Last week's stock markert rally improved the mood on Wall Street considerably. But analysts warn that the major bear trend still lives. Lower interest rates are a hope, not a reality, and budget compromise talk remains academic.

Bullish sign: institutional cash holdings pile up to a 3 1/4 year peak. Analysts are divided on the market low: Will it hold, or will horrendous quarterly earnings cause one more stock plunge?

Profits are falling, but how much? Ed Yardeni of E.F Hutton looks for a 24 percent plunge in the first quarter after tax net compared to a year ago, and an 18 percent fall in the second quarter. For all of 1982, he figures on a decline of 14 percent.

Merrill Lynch's Dick Farrell, always keen on market psychology, says whether or not the market reaches a sold-out extreme is largely a matter of interpretation. The massive selling which he had expected may not occur. But Farrell still looks for more gloom and doom before the bull awakens.

Super-bear economist Bob Parks of Moore & Schley, Cameron & Co., offers this historical tid-bit: The U.S. economy has never squirmed out of recession unless the money printing presses were run, at least for a while, faster than the rate of price inflation. And this "reflation" isn't happening. There just isn't enough money to finance a nex expansion at the present price levels.

Can 40 million people be wrong? Moody's Investors Service argues that investors don't understand the financial markets in the midst of changed economic fundamentals.

New system receives skeptical reaction

By LINDA GRANT
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Some bankers and banking analysts have reacted skeptically to the announcement here that a group of 26 big banks across the nation had formed a network called Plus System Inc. that will provide customers access to their bank accounts by using credit cards at members' electronic terminals across the United States.

Similar networks are being formed all over the country. The first to be announced, a system called "Cirrus," was put together earlier this year and includes First Interstate Bank of California, Mellon Bank and Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. Several other regional networks have also sprung up recently, and both credit card companies, Visa USA and MasterCharge International, are investigating the formation of national networks linked by automated-teller machines, or ATMs.

The new national Plus System includes Bank of America, Chase Manhattan Bank and Continental Illinois National Bank, three of the nation's banking giants. Measured by assets, they rank Nos. 1, 3 and 7 in size. Its formation means that B of A customers traveling to New York or Chicago will be able to withdraw cash from automated-teller machines at Chase or Continental Illinois branches in those states, and vice versa.

At a press conference here, D. Dale Browning, president of the new corporation and president of the Rocky Mountain Bank Card System owned by Colorado National Bank of Denver — also a Plus System member — said services offered by the system will include cash withdrawal from various accounts, transfers between accounts, cash advances on credit cards. The Plus System is expected to be fully operational in one year, and within two years, Browning predicts over 25 million households will have access to the system.

The growing enthusiasm for ATM networks has been hailed as a signifiant development that lays the groundwork for electronic banking from home and retail point-of-sale terminals. Banking analysts believe that consumers eventually will accept electronic transfers in lieu of paper checks used today.

But some bankers and analysts question whether the new networks meet any real demand and are doubtful that they will hasten the movement toward interstate banking. Banks are currently prohibited from accepting deposits in other states, but Congress is expected to lift that restriction within the next three years.

Lawrence Cohn, analyst with Dean, Witter, Reynolds Inc., said: "I look on these (ATM networks) with real skepticism, because it is not at all clear what the real demand for this service is. The traveling businessman's market is relatively small."

Moreover, Cohn added, "This isn't going to be the playing field on which interstate banking is fought" because the networks cannot accept deposits out of state. "These banks realize they are going to go head-to-head (in competition for deposits) at some point, not form an alliance," he said. "I think this is a lot of marketing smoke."

Lloyd P. Johnson, vice chairman of Security Pacific Corp., said that while his bank is studying ATM networks, they must pass two tests before Security Pacific will participate. "First, is there a demonstrated customer need for this? Our customers are not knocking down our doors asking for something like this," he said.
