Abortion rights activists lobbying

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abortion rights activists lobbied on Capitol Hill today as their leaders predicted that the massive turnout for their march will leave a strong impression on the Supreme Court.

"Nobody in public office isn't affected by a huge outpouring," said Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women.

Hundreds of activists who took part in Sunday's march got some quick lessons in congressional lobbying and then made their way to the offices of their local representative or senator to press their case.

Wearing buttons with the words, "Be a Voice for Choice" or "Catholics for a Free Choice," activists thanked the 140 lawmakers who had signed a friend-of-the-court brief in the Missouri case now pending before the Supreme Court and urged others to support abortion-rights legislation.

"The notion is for as many people as possible to see senators or congressmen," Bill Hamilton, a Washington, D.C., lobbyist for Planned Parenthood, told activists from New York and Rhode Island.

Although the matter is up to the court, Yard defended the congressional lobbying effort, noting that members of Congress and the Bush administration speak to the nine justices on the court.

The "March for Women's Equality, Women's Lives" attracted hundreds of thousands of men and women, Democrats and Republicans, Hollywood stars and everyday people who converged on the Capitol for speeches, songs and declarations that women will never again return to the days of illegal abortions in back alleys.

While law enforcement authorities estimated the rally crowd at 300,000, Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority, said the turnout was more than 600,000.

Either way, the turnout was higher than the 90,000 people who gathered for a March 1986 abortion rights rally in Washington and the numbers that the rally's organizers had predicted.

"It's a turning point. It's a totally new ball game," Smeal said. "It's given us the confidence that we are the majority."

Claiming newfound political clout, abortion rights activists are meeting today with members of Congress to lobby aggressively for support of the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision.

Their main focus, however, is the Supreme Court, which will hear arguments April 26 in a Missouri case that pro-choice and anti-abortion forces agree could significantly alter the ruling that gave women the right to an abortion.

Life Flight chopper crashes

HOUSTON (AP) — As federal investigators continued their probe today into the crash of a Life Flight helicopter that seriously injured three crew members, co-workers at Hermann Hospital were waiting for answers and struggling to cope with the accident.

"It's a very emotional experience. It's something that we at Hermann never thought we'd have to live through," said Sandy Gates, nurse manager for Hermann Life Flight. "You hear about it (elsewhere) and it's something that's very touching, but it really doesn't come that close to home until it happens to you."

The helicopter crashed on takeoff from a hospital parking lot Sunday morning, plunging an estimated 100 feet to the pavement.

At least one witness reported a loud crash before seeing the helicopter spinning to the ground, and a police officer said he saw the craft drifting backward toward an eight-story parking garage, prompting speculation the tail rotor may have smashed into the structure.

However, a Life Flight official said the pilot told him after the 6:50 a.m. crash that the German-made helicopter malfunctioned on takeoff, and a structural engineer who examined the garage said there was no sign of damage.

The injured crew members were identified as Jeffrey Gardner, 40, a 20-year veteran pilot and instructor who previously worked for the helicopter's manufacturer, MBB Helicopter Corp.; flight nurse Roseann Waindel, 42; and paramedic Patricia Haley-Crain, 26.

Gardner today remained in serious condition, but had stabilized and regained some feeling in his legs, said hospital spokeswoman Christine LeLaurin. Ms. Haley-Crain and Ms. Waindel both have improved from serious to fair condition, she said.

All of the victims suffered spinal damage and were being examined for further internal injuries, said Dr. Kenneth Wells. The pilot also had a broken arm and facial injuries after striking the controls on impact.

While doctors were responding to the physical needs of the victims, others were working to repair the emotional damage of the crash, said Donald Stutes, chief operating officer at Hermann.

"We have a number of support programs...and we have an extremely active chaplaincy group here, many of whom are specialists in dealing with the grieving process, and they are already on the scene," Stutes said. "Most of the people involved knew each other quite well, so the process has already begun."

It was the second crash this year in Texas of a BK-117 helicopter involving a medical crew.

100-plus cars pile up on icy Colorado road

Associated Press

An April snowstorm dumped nearly a foot of snow in Kansas, and ice in Colorado tripped a 100-plus car pileup. Cooler weather also eased flooding in the Red River Valley and brought the promise of relief from a record heat wave in California.

In Denver, snow Sunday night resulted in two-hour flight delays at Stapleton International Airport, said deputy aviation director Richard Boulware.

The storm caused highway tieups throughout southern Colorado, but the worst was on Interstate 25 near Colorado Springs where up to 200 cars slid into each other in a chain reaction on the icy road, police said.

There were no immediate reports of serious injuries, police said.

In northern California, an end was in sight to record temperatures that blasted the region for the fifth day Sunday, filling beaches, seaside boardwalks and inland waterways.

San Francisco logged a high of 91, tying its all-time streak of four consecutive days in which the temperature reached 90 degrees. Similar stretches were recorded in September 1904 and September 1939.

"It's like a summer day. It's not typical of this time of the year at all," said Jamie Bolt at the Bethel Island harbor, about 50 miles east of San Francisco.

A high pressure system was moving into the Pacific Northwest today, the National Weather Service said, adding that temperatures could drop by 10 degrees.

Parched Southern California got a breath of fresh air when coastal breezes sent temperatures plunging more than 15 degrees in many areas, ending the hottest April week on record.

In Moorhead, Minn., weary homeowners in the Red River Valley got a reprieve from flooding that for days had them building dikes, buying pumps and putting sandbags in place.

The river, which forms the boundary between Minnesota and North Dakota, crested at 35.15 feet Sunday night, a foot lower and a day earlier than had been expected.

"The river seems to be slowing down, and that's good news," Col. Roger Baldwin of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said during a tour of the flood-ravaged area with Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich. The governor later said he would ask for federal disaster relief.

In dry Kansas, the snow brought some much-needed precipitation.

"It's not really a problem," said Karyla Campbell, a police officer in Goodland, where 11 inches fell Sunday. "The roads were icy earlier this morning but since it's warmed up it's beginning to melt...

"We're glad for the moisture."

Temperatures dip in wake of cold front

From Staff Reports

A Canadian cold front that blew into West Texas over the weekend continued to plague the area with unseasonably low temperatures.

Temperatures Sunday night dipped to 38 in Midland and weren't expected to climb out of the mid-40s today. The low tonight is expected to dip to 35.

Moist air from the Gulf of Mexico is responsible for the 30 percent chance of precipitation today, though snow is not expected, said Eddie Brite, a National Weather Service forecaster.

Snow flurries, however, did whip through Panhandle cities early this morning. No accumulations were recorded, Brite said.

The unseasonably chilly weather is "strange," but not unheard of, Brite explained. Traditionally, chances for spring freezes exist until late April.

Watch sold for $2.74 million timepiece worth watching

GENEVA (AP) — The world's most complicated timepiece, which took nine years to make, was sold at auction after 78 seconds of bidding to a private collector from South America for a world record price of $2.74 million.

The anonymous buyer outbid four other people Sunday for the mechanical, 18-carat gold watch which packs 1,728 parts, including 68 springs and 168 jewels. His actual outlay, including taxes and 10 percent commission, is $3.17 million.

The highest price for a timepiece at auction had been $1.2 million in 1984 for a clock from the mid-17th century.

"Kuma", as it will be futurely named after the Japanese goddess and at the request of the buyer, was the top lot among 291 watches that fetched a total of $15.2 million Sunday in the biggest watch sale ever.

Completed early this year by Patek Philippe, the world's oldest family-owned watchmaker, to mark the company's 150th anniversary, it has various unique features.

The makers' pride is a "perpetual secular calendar" in which one wheel takes a century to complete a single revolution and a lever moves once every 400 years so that it will not skip a leap year date.

That takes into account that under the Gregorian calendar, introduced in 1582, the Feb. 29 date is dropped at the turn of most centuries except on century years divisible by 400, like the year 2000 and 2400.

It also is the first watch in the world that determines the date of Easter, a movable feast, on the previous New Year's Eve. And it features a disc of sapphire crystal showing the Milky Way and 2,800 distinct stars in five sizes.

It needs rewinding at least every 30 hours and its accuracy, within one minute a month, does not match a cheap quartz watch. "But precision is not the most important thing," said Philippe Stern, Patek Philippe's managing director. "The tradition of watchmaking is."

When the watch was unveiled in February, Osvaldo Patrizzi, who led the sale for the Geneva auction house of Habsburg, Feldman, estimated it might fetch as much ast $6 million.

Soldiers called in to break up rally in Soviet Georgia

MOSCOW (AP) — Soldiers today fired into the air to break up an rally at a university in Soviet Georgia, witnesses said, one day after a battle between troops and pro-independence protesters claimed a reported 18 lives.

A general strike shut down some stores, factories and mass transit, and residents of the southern republic donned black ribbons in a sign of mourning and protest, residents said.

Protests went on despite official calls for calm, a ban on public gatherings, the imposition of a curfew and patrols by soldiers and tanks in the Georgian capital of Tbilisi.

The ruling Politburo sent Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, a Georgian who once was Communist Party leader in the republic, and party personnel chief Georgy P. Razumvosky to Tbilisi to oversee efforts to restore calm, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said.

About 1,000 people ignored the ban on public gatherings and met at Tbilisi State University at midday to "to inform each other about what was going on and decide what to do next," Zurab Zhankarashvili, a member of the Helsinki Watch group, said by telephone.

"The military stood there with their tanks and frightened the people off. They shot in the air," said Zhankarashvili, who was at the gathering.

He said soldiers beat two university students.

Sergei Dandurov, an activist who also attended the meeting, confirmed that troops fired into the air and said the gathering lasted about 30 minutes.

On Sunday, club-swinging troops charged a crowd of about 10,000 people that jammed Lenin Square and protesters used flagpoles, stones and other objects to defend themselves, witnesses said.

Official reports said 16 were killed and more than 100 injured Sunday. Nurse Nana Byelovami of the Central Republic Hospital today reported two more deaths: A 23-year-old pregnant woman who was beaten and a 50-year-old woman who inhaled tear gas.

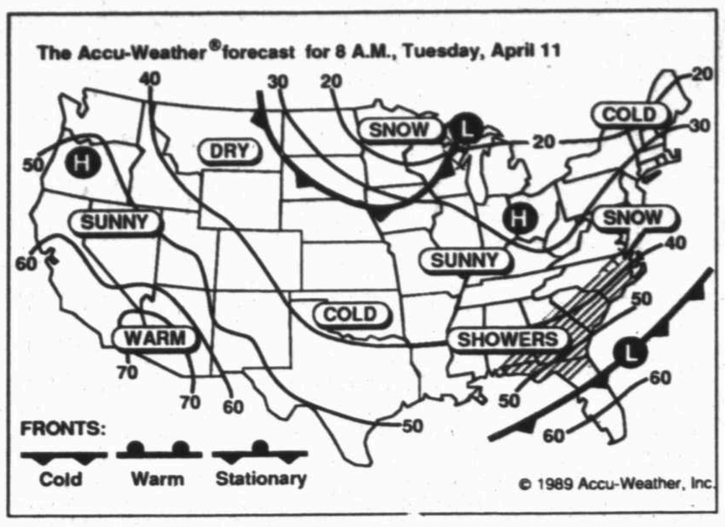
WEATHER SUMMARY



COLD

The air mass should make its way out of the Permian Basin by early Tuesday, the forecaster predicted. Temperatures Tuesday were expected to return to the mid-60s.

The state's lowest temperature was recorded in Dalhart this morning where the mercury dipped to 24.

Tonight's forecast is for cloudy skies and cold temperatures with a 30 percent chance of light rain and the slight possibility of rain mixed with snow, according to the NWS.

The low will be in the middle 30s and winds will be east-southeast at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday is expected to be mostly cloudy, windy and warmer with the chance of showers decreasing to 20 percent. The high will be in the middle 60s and winds will be out of the southeast 15-25 mph and gusty.

Sunday's high of 67 was 26 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 93 set for that date in 1939. The overnight low of 38 was eight degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 30 set for this date in 1952.

STATE

A Canadian cold front kept temperatures today below seasonal normals across Texas, with a snow advisory posted for the Panhandle and flurries expected in northwestern sections of the state.

Early-morning temperatures hovered in the 20s over most of the Panhandle, with light snow falling, the National Weather Service said. Accumulations of two to three inches were possible, forecasters said.

Just south of the cold front, winds were southeasterly at 5 mph at Brownsville, with northerly to northeasterly breezes elsewhere at 15 to 25 mph. Gusts were clocked up to 35 mph in parts of the Concho Valley and North Texas.

Early-morning extremes ranged from 24 degrees at Dalhart to 74 at Brownsville.

The weather service said conditions should remain windy and cool over the most of the state through Tuesday, with a chance of rain or light drizzle and occasional snow in Northwest Texas. Western sections also could receive light rain, with rainfall and drizzle ending in South Texas.

NATION

A cold air mass produced more than a score of record low temperatures from Wyoming to Ohio this morning and dumped snow on the Plains to the Great Lakes.

Snow fell in parts of the Great Lakes. Northern Ohio received up to five inches, and the Cleveland area had about four inches.

At least 22 cities in the Plains and Great Lakes regions set or tied record lows for the date, including Laramie, Wyo., with a reading of 2 degrees below zero.

Further south, the snow turned to rain from the lower Mississippi Valley to the southern Atlantic Coast. The heaviest rain occurred in Mississippi, Alabama, northern Georgia and South Carolina, and thunderstorms accompanied the rain in Mississippi and southern Alabama.

Today's forecast called for scattered rain from the Southern Plains across parts of the Gulf Coast to the southern Atlantic Coast states; wet snow in northern Oklahoma, northern Arkansas, eastern Tennessee, northwest North Carolina and southern Virginia; and snow over the central and northern Appalachians and the Great Lakes.

RALLY

"I don't think they can miss this huge outpouring," Yard said of the court.

College students by the busloads, mothers with babies in tow, members of Congress and even activists from as far away as Australia marched down Constitution Avenue, chanting "Choice, Choice, Choice," or "Not the church, not the state, women must decide our fate."

They carried purple, white and yellow banners — colors of the women's suffrage movement — that said "Members of Congress for Choice," "Brooklyn Women's Political Caucus," and the names of various other groups in attendance.

Emerging from anonymity was Norma McCorvey, better known as the Jane Roe of the Roe vs. Wade decision. The Texas woman, who only recently has given speeches to small audiences and was visibly shaken by reporters' questions, said she attended the rally because "our law's in jeopardy."

Some of the marchers wore coat hangers on their clothing or their heads, a reference to the often deadly self-abortion technique used before the procedure was legalized.

"We said people would turn out if they thought anything could happen to Roe vs. Wade. And they did," Yard said.

At the start of the march, the abortion rights activists exchanged taunts with about 200 to 300 anti-abortion demonstrators along the march route. The group was held back by police on horseback.

The anti-abortion activists set up a symbolic "Cemetery of the Innocents" on the Washington Mall containing 4,400 white wooden crosses and Stars of David. According to organizers, the number represents the unborn children killed daily since the Supreme Court legalized abortion.

Participants in the abortion rights rally said they were there because they fear a reversal of Roe vs. Wade.

"We're scared," said Ellen Davidson, a Yale University junior from Hewlett, N.Y., because "we're coming to the realization that the thing we've taken for granted can be taken away."

Gloria Steinem, a pioneer in the women's rights movement, likened the "fundamental question of reproductive freedom" to freedom of speech.

"If we go back before where we were in 1973, it's exactly like saying freedom of speech is up to state legislatures," Steinem said.

Edge of oil spill retreating, official says

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — The leading edge of the giant, gloppy Exxon Valdez oil spill was breaking up and retreating. But the nation's richest fishing port prepared for the worst by stringing logs across bays.

On Sunday, U.S. military jets flew skimmers, booms and beach landing craft into Alaska, and commanders issued a Pacific-wide call for more equipment to fight the nation's worst oil spill.

Fishermen in Kodiak covered logs with fish net and spread them across vital fishing areas as the slick stayed on a southwesterly course for the island. Oil was still at least 60 miles from Kodiak, where officials even used television to display boom-making techniques.

"The leading edge has retreated a little bit," and oil is beginning to break into tar balls and sink, said Bill Lamoreaux, the state's on-scene coordinator. "That's good news."

The bad news was that gale-force winds were expected from the northeast. Experts said that would push oil closer to Kodiak, but also could help break it up by churning the sea.

Herring boats and Coast Guard cutters were dispatched to speed the breakup of the spill before it reaches Kodiak, whose $166 million catch last year was the nation's most lucrative. At Seward, on the edge of a still-threatened national park, a skimmer stood ready to protect inner bays and fish hatcheries.

Also Sunday:

■ Exxon said it was beginning to reimburse Cordova fishermen for losses from the cancellation of the $12 million herring season, and had paid $250,000 to cover expenses for fishing boats attacking the spill on their own.

■ The state said the tanker, anchored in a remote cove for repairs, continues to leak oil, which escapes containment booms because currents keep shifting the barrier around, snagging it on the tanker's bow.

The tanker could be seen sitting dead calm with a half-dozen smaller boats around it. Steam drifted from its stack, a radar arm rotating and a helicopter on its deck. Long streamers of congealed oil the color of chocolate milk drifted off for miles.

■ Cleanup crews planned to resume shoreline work on an experimental basis, testing different pressurized washing systems.

■ Plans to allow a small trawler to harvest shrimp in Prince William Sound were canceled.

A 40-foot gray whale was found dead in an oil area Sunday, but an autopsy revealed that it died long before the oil spill occurred, said Alaska Department of Fish and Game spokeswoman Sheila Nickerson.

Biologists planned to investigate a report of a dead seal south of Latouche Island to determine what may have killed it, said Karen Gleason, a spokeswoman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Wildlife experts say spring is a time when many animals are found dead in Prince William Sound.

On Friday, President Bush said he would send troops to help the cleanup, and put the federal government virtually in control of the effort. Exxon will continue to pay for materials and manpower.

Air Force Lt. Gen. Thomas McInerney, chief of the Alaskan Air Command, asked "bases around the Pacific to find out what was available and what the ETA (estimated time of arrival) would be for Valdez," Coast Guard spokesman Rick Meidt said.

FLIGHT

Three people were killed on Valentine's Day when a helicopter crashed in a wooded area while attempting to return to Mother Frances Hospital in Tyler during foggy weather.

Despite gusty, overcast conditions at Hermann Hospital Sunday morning officials said there was no indication that weather was a factor in the crash.

The bright red and white helicopter fell flat on its belly in the parking lot about 150 feet from a landing pad that was unused due to renovation. Hospital officials said the parking lot, which was blocked from traffic, was a routine alternate landing site.

"I talked to the pilot in the emergency room and his only recollection of the accident is that he was in the process of taking off and experienced a malfunction of some sort," said Reid Griffin, aviation services manager for Hermann Life Flight.

Griffin said Gardner could not recount further details, but did say that he "did not feel there had been any contact (with the garage)."

Structural engineer Walter Moore said his examination of the parking garage shortly after the crash offered no signs of impact.

The BK-117 helicopter, assembled by the MBB Helicopter subsidiary of Messerschmitt-Bolkow-Blohm GmbH, was less than two years old and had no history of problems, Griffin said. The $2 million craft "appears to be a total loss," he said.

MBB Helicopter spokeswoman Lynda Kate said the company sent a team from its U.S. headquarters in West Chester, Pa., to assist federal investigators.

Since the Tyler accident, she said, another BK-117 crashed on Easter Sunday in North Carolina after striking a telephone tower. The Tyler accident involved a cable strike, she said.

"Prior to these accidents in North Carolina and in Tyler, there had not been an accident in the United States in which a helicopter went down since the BK-117 first came out in 1983," Ms. Kate said. "There is not a relationship being drawn between any of these accidents."

Gardner, who has worked at Hermann for two years, had just started a 12-hour shift when the crash occurred, chief pilot Eric Von Wenckstern said.

Hermann officials said their Life Flight program has flown more than 35,000 patient missions with only one previous accident since it began service in 1976. It employs five mechanics and owns three helicopters.

STRIKE

Gerasimov said today 16 civilians — 10 women and six men — were killed, and that all had been trampled. Tuesday was declared an official day of mourning, he said.

However, Zhankarashvili said 50 people were killed on Sunday and 560 injured. His report could not be confirmed independently.

Tension has been building in Georgia since Tuesday, when thousands of hunger strikers and protesters began pressing demands for independence. Georgian nationalists contend the Russian-dominated Kremlin has encroached on their culture, language, politics and economy.

Others rallied to protest calls by some residents of a region in Georgia, Abkhazia, to secede from the republic because of alleged discrimination by Georgians against ethnic Abkhazians.

Taking advantage of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of openness, several of the country's more than 100 ethnic groups are venting pent-up complaints of discrimination and official insensitivity to local needs.

In an attempt to prevent future unrest, the central government on Saturday issued a decree making insulting or discrediting the government punishable by up to three years and fines.

The official Tass news agency said the decree also prohibits appeals to kindling ethnic tensions and racial hostility and appeals to commit treason.

Georgia is the third southern Soviet republic where authorities have in the past year used troops to quell ethnic disturbances. In November, troops and tanks were sent to Armenia and Azerbaijan, where more than 90 people had died in ethnic violence.

Independence activists called a general strike today to protest Sunday's killings, but it was unclear if there was full compliance in Tbilisi, a city of 1.2 million people about 1,100 miles southeast of Moscow.

"No one is going to work," said Nokri Dzhangarashvili, a student.

"Everyone but doctors and breadmakers are on strike," said a visitor at the central hospital who refused to give his name. "There is no transport. All stores are closed except food stores. Factories are closed."

Gerasimov said most businesses were working but that some opened late because young people disrupted public transport and delayed people going to work. He confirmed that colleges were closed because of the strike.

Police arrested at least six prominent Georgian activists during the weekend and had a list of 30 others they were seeking, said Nanuli Gogua, whose daughter Irina Sarishvili was among those taken into custody by the KGB.

Virginia gun boutiques offer citizens latest in trendy weaponry

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Commando-style grease guns tipped with silencers, high-powered Uzi carbines and even a Capone-era round-drummed submachine gun — it all seems strange amid the boutiques and quaint restaurants of this shoppers' haven a few miles down the Potomac from the nation's capital.

But hunters, collectors, target shooters and crime-wary homeowners are making a beeline to the gun shops of Virginia, a state with few curbs on firearms.

Just about everything imaginable in the way of small arms is available.

Demand for military-style assault rifles, prized by cocaine smugglers and legitimate collectors alike, is skyrocketing even as demands for curbs grow in Congress. An AKS, fresh out of the crate from China, brought $400 or so last summer. Now the few used models still available fetch upwards of $1,000.

A new model Uzi assault rifle that has just arrived sells for $1,395.

"Mostly it's doctors and lawyers and other people with money," says Robb Roudabush, the 35-year-old entrepreneur whose Old Town Armory is a familiar haunt of Washington-area firearms enthusiasts.

For all the colonial trappings and flickering gas lights of his neighbors establishments in this suburb's Old Town shopping district, Roudabush's place remains one variant of a stubbornly persistent institution: gun shop, U.S.A.

Wares range from .22-caliber pistols going for about $225 to fully automatic submachine guns.

Roudabush tries to steer homeowners away from assault rifles as a means of repelling intruders, saying pistols are more maneuverable and shotguns more effective. But exotic weapons have a special attraction.

"They can buy what they want," says Roudabush.

FBI and Treasury Department background checks plus fingerprinting, photographing and local police permission are required for buyers of fully automatic models. But the red tape has not stopped buyers.

In his private cache, Roudabush keeps what collectors call a masterpiece: A round-drummed Thompson submachine gun whose lethal bark punctuated the gang wars of the Prohibition era.

The showroom walls are lined with the sinister-looking assault weapons that have become a hallmark of the invasion of some communities by gangs warring over markets for cocaine and crack.

Roudabush and his customers say the problem in the Capone era was crime and Prohibition, not the Thompson. Likewise, the Uzis and AK models that are under attack now are not to blame for gang violence, they maintain.

"I've never seen a gun get out of a box and pull its own trigger," says Roudabush. He believes the problem will be solved "if we enforce the laws that are already on the books and put criminals in jail where they belong."

His view echoes tons of mail to members of Congress generated by the National Rifle Association. Indeed, NRA membership applications are available on the counter at the Armory, although many shoppers there already are NRA members.

"As a matter of fact I am a member of the NRA," declares Alan Schweser, 35, a registered nurse. "The portrayal of NRA members in most of the press as vicious, depraved halfwits I think is disgusting."

Although he works in an operating room of a Washington hospital and often assists surgeons operating on gunshot victims, Schweser remains firmly opposed to further curbs on firearms sales.

Reputed Mexican drug lord, police force arrested

WORLD

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The reputed mastermind of Mexico's vast drug pipeline to the United States was in custody today after a huge sweep that included the arrest of his hometown's entire police force, authorities said.

Felix Gallardo

Miguel Angel Felix Gallardo, thought to head a ring that shipped up to two tons of cocaine monthly into the United States, had been sought for years but was protected by corrupt Mexican officials, according to U.S. drug agents.

Authorities believe Felix Gallardo may have been involved in the 1985 slaying of U.S. drug agent Enrique Camarena Salazar.

Felix Gallardo was arrested Saturday night in Guadalajara.

"It was clean work, without a single gunshot," said Rene Hernandez, a spokesman for the federal attorney general. He said the reputed drug lord was being questioned in Mexico city.

In a statement, the attorney general's office said the raid by Federal Judicial Police agents was the result of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari's vow to clean up drug dealing and corruption in Mexico.

U.S. authorities welcomed the news of Felix Gallardo's arrest."We're delighted to hear that. This is most interesting," William Graves, a U.S. embassy spokesman, said Sunday night.

While Felix Gallardo was being seized in the western state of Jalisco, Mexican army troops were used to swoop down on his hometown of Culiacan, the capital of the northwestern state of Sinaloa, and arrested every the entire police force.

All but six of about 80 officers were released, but those still held included the police chief and the chief of the Sinaloa state police, a federal official said.

"We regret that people who have a responsibility to society have become involved in these events," said Sinaloa Gov. Francisco Labastida Ochoa.

Truckloads of soldiers patrolled Culiacan's streets all day Sunday.

An unidentified Honduran woman who was with Felix Gallardo also was arrested, as were several other suspects. All had been or would be flown to Mexico City, Hernandez said. A number of high-powered weapons also were seized.

Felix Gallardo, 43, was thought to run one of the largest cocaine trafficking operations in the world.

He was known as the godfather and czar of Mexico's drug trade because he reputedly pioneered an alliance with Colombian druglords of the notorious Medellin cartel to move cocaine through Mexico to the United States.

American officials investigating killing of Camarena, who had been kidnapped outside the U.S. consulate in Guadalajara, said Felix Gallardo was able to build up an immense operation with protection from high Mexican officials, including a state governor.

The flow of drugs has long been a matter of intense dispute between the United States and Mexico, and the raids come as the Congress faces a late April deadline for certifying that Mexico is doing its best to combat drug trafficking and so deserves continued U.S. aid.

Some U.S. congressmen, including Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., have accused Mexico of widespread official corruption and maintain that aid should be denied.

Felix Gallardo had such good official connections that U.S. drug agents said Mexican agents were afraid to find him, according to the recently published book "Desperados" by Elaine Shannon.

DEA agents suspected Felix Gallardo of involvement in the Camarena slaying, but were unable to locate him, the book said.

Camarena was investigating the drug smuggling empire of reputed kingpin Rafael Caro Quintero, one of Felix Gallardo's associates, when the agent and his Mexican pilot were kidnapped, tortured and killed in March 1985.

Drug agents say Caro Quintero is thought to have ordered the killing in revenge for the burning of 5,000 tons of marijuana at a plantation he owned.

Caro Quintero was never convicted in the Camarena case, but he was eventually tracked down in Costa Rica and sentenced to 34 years in prison on other charges. The former Federal Judicial Police commander in Guadalajara served 36 months in prison for helping Caro Quintero escape.

Hernandez said the three-month investigation that finally led to Felix Gallardo's arrest was an entirely Mexican operation.

Tass reports sub weapons were nuclear

MOSCOW (AP) — Two torpedoes armed with nuclear warheads were aboard the Soviet nuclear-powered submarine that sank in the Norwegian Sea but there is no threat of radiation contamination, Tass reported.

The official Soviet news agency also disclosed Sunday that 42 of the 69 sailors aboard the vessel were killed when it caught fire and sank on Friday. It said the vessel's reactor was shut down during the accident.

The Soviet navy today questioned survivors about the accident, Tass said. It also said that the captain of the unidentified submarine, E. Vanin, was among the dead.

Norwegian officials said the vessel did not release radiation before or after it sank more than 4,500 feet in international waters about 310 miles west of Tromsoe on Norway's northern coast.

Norwegian scientists gathered deep-water samples Sunday and placed equipment near the submarine that will monitor radiation levels for years.

Tass said the design of the nuclear warheads on the torpedoes "completely rules out" the threat of radiation leaks even under the great pressure of deep water.

"To ensure radiation safety, the nuclear-powered engine was stopped and the power unit was effectively" turned off during the accident, the agency added in a dispatch from the Soviet Northern Fleet headquarters in Murmansk.

President Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" that there was no indication of radiation contamination.

U.S. officials have said the vessel, one of the Soviets' most advanced, was capable of carrying more than a dozen long-range missiles in addition to the torpedoes.

The submarine was on its way home from a long voyage when fire broke out in a compartment, the military newspaper Red Star reported Sunday.

Tass said Soviet investigators found no fault with the effort to extinguish the submarine fire.

"According to the opinion of the government commission created to investigate this tragic event, the crew of the submarine acted bravely and intelligently," Tass said.

"The sailors fought for the life of the ship until the last minute, and when the end came they managed to shut down the reactor and guarantee full radioactive safety," it said.

The closest rescue ship was the fishing vessel Alexei Khlobystov, which "picked up rafts with frozen, but still living submariners. On board, they were given initial medical help. Then they were transferred to a military ship, which took them to the hospital," Tass said.

Members of the government commission have been allowed to see the survivors in their Murmansk hospital beds, Tass said.

The Soviets officially informed Norway of the accident nearly nine hours after the vessel went down. The Norwegian news agency NTB claimed Norwegian rescue helicopters could have reached the ship several hours before Soviet fishing vessels if the Soviets had promptly asked for help.

In Oslo, Norway, Defense Ministry spokesman Erik Senstad told a news conference the Soviets declined help from helicopters at a Norwegian rescue base 370 miles away. He refused to say if more sailors could have been saved had the Soviets accepted the offer.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Survey shows Australians don't care leader unfaithful

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Most Australians do not care that Prime Minister Bob Hawke has been unfaithful to his wife and he gained no political advantage from the tearful confession on television, according to a poll published today.

The survey, published in the Sydney Morning Herald newspaper, was the first major poll on the matter.

Some critics had suggested that Hawke's teary-eyed admission during an interview on national television on March 21 was a calculated ploy to win votes for his governing Australian Labor Party.

But 70 percent of those questioned in a random national telephone survey of 1,000 people were indifferent. One in four thought less of Hawke after the confession, and 5 percent thought more of him, according to the survey.

The poll was conducted by Irving Saulwick & Associates from April 3-5 and has a 3 percent margin of error.

During the TV interview, Hawke said his wife, Hazel, had understood his infidelity and that he still loved her.

The couple celebrated their 33rd wedding anniversary two weeks before the interview, in which Hawke also spoke of his past drinking habits.

Commenting on the poll results, the Herald said: "Do Australians put their leaders on a pedestal of morality? It would seem not."

Students buy WWI ammo

RAMSGATE, England (AP) — A group of British schoolchildren returned home from a visit to Belgium with two World War I shells and two fragmentation grenades purchased from a stall near a museum in Ypres.

The weapons, which had traveled on a ferry Sunday with 550 passengers, were handed over by a teacher who took them from two boys aged 13 and 14.

The shells weighed 18 pounds each.

Police said the shells had been fired but had not exploded, while the grenades' pins were so corroded they could have broken at any time.

One girl said of the stalls at Ypres: "The grenades were selling for about 50 Belgian francs ($1.28) and some of the larger shells for about 130 francs."

Ammunition from the World War I battlefields in Belgium and France is regularly turned up by farmers who leave them by roadsides for collection by bomb disposal squads.

Military parade canceled

ROME (AP) — In a cost-cutting move, Defense Minister Valerio Zanone has decided to cancel the annual military parade on Italy's Constitution Day.

Zanone said he believed a ceremony at the recently reopened Altar of the Nation, which is also known as the Victor Emmanuel Monument, would be a more appropriate way to mark the June 4 holiday.

He said Saturday that the decision was prompted by the need to cut spending in anticipation of cuts in the defense budget. The government is trying to cut spending to deal with a projected 1989 budget deficit of $89.6 billion.

Instead of a military parade, this year's holiday will be marked by wreath placing ceremony at the Altar of the Nation by President Francesco Cossiga, historical and military exhibits and band concerts.

Vaccinations halt fighting

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas and government soldiers halted fighting Sunday to permit the vaccination of tens of thousands of children and pregnant women.

The "National Vaccination Day" was the second this year and the 13th since the program began in 1985. The campaign is carried out by the Health Ministry, the International Red Cross, UNICEF, Rotary International and thousands of local volunteers staffing 2,000 vaccination posts.

Children and pregnant women receive shots to protect against polio, measles, diphtheria, tetanus and whooping cough.

Health Minister Benjamin Valdez on Friday called on both sides in the nation's 9-year-old civil war to respect an unofficial truce as they have on previous vaccination days.

There were no reports of fighting Sunday.

Newsweek copies seized

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — The government seized copies of the April 3 issue of Newsweek and banned its entry and publication in the country for publishing a visual image of the prophet Mohammed, authorities said Sunday.

Ninety percent of Bangladesh's population is Moslem, and the faith forbids any visual portrayal of Mohammed.

According to senior officials at the Home Ministry, the government banned the issue Saturday. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity.

In New York, Newsweek spokesman Peter Hultberg said no one from the magazine would be available for comment until today.

In December, Bangladesh banned Salman Rushdie's novel "The Satanic Verses" for allegedly insulting Islam.

Italian woman canonized

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Sunday elevated to sainthood a 19th century woman from Bologna who founded a religious order dedicated to helping the sick and poor.

Several thousand people attended the canonization ceremony in St. Peter's Basilica for Clelia Barbieri, who died at the age of 23 in 1870.

Ms. Barbieri founded the order Suore Minime dell'Addolorata, which is based in Bologna and today counts followers in Italy, India and Africa. She was beatified in 1968 by Pope Paul VI.

During the ceremony, John Paul praised her work "in times not easy for the church" and held her up as an example for today's youth.

Quake jolts Canada

SALMON ARM, British Columbia (AP) — The interior of British Columbia was jolted early Sunday morning by a mild earthquake. There were no injuries or damage reported.

The quake registered only 3.5 on the Richter scale, but shook people awake when it struck.

"The Tremor was strong enough to be noticed but not strong enough to be of concern," said Bob Horner of the Pacific Geoscience Center. "This is just one of the normal kinds of events we see in this area from time to time.

Salmon Arm, where the quake was centered, is about 200 miles northeast of Vancouver, and about 100 miles north of the U.S.-Canada border.

Family mourns man who set himself on fire

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Friends and family paid homage today to a student who died after setting himself on fire and shouting "Yankees go home!" to protest the U.S. presence in South Korea.

About 800 classmates humming a funeral dirge and wearing black ribbons followed the grieving family of Nam Tae-hyun in a funeral cadence across the campus of Seoul National Teacher's College in southern Seoul.

As the family sobbed, eight student pallbearers carried the coffin to a lecture room for a ceremony in advance of Wednesday's funeral.

Nam, a 24-year-old senior majoring in ethics, died Saturday from burns after he doused himself with paint thinner and gasoline.

Choe Song-ho, 24, said he was on his way to a student rally when he heard a voice shouting from a classsroom "Yankee go home!" "Drive out U.S. imperialists!" and "Peaceful unification!"

He said he found Nam in flames. The student died at a hospital a few hours later.

Students who accompanied him to the hospital said they asked why he burned himself and he replied, "For independence of the fatherland. For peace. For unification (with North Korea)."

"Let's inherit the patriot's will," said a statement released at a rally today. "He took his own life to protest suppression of democracy and the desire by the masses for unification. Drive out the Yankees!"

Anti-American sentiment is high among students and dissidents who claim the 43,000 U.S. troops stationed in South Korea under a mutual defense pact hamper talks on unifying the peninsula, divided since 1945.

Police said Nam left a suicide note that said "Fellow students, rise up for independence, democracy and unification of the fatherland."

Of about three dozen student and dissident suicides since 1980, about half have been by self-immolation. Radicals also sometimes commit suicide by taking poison or jumping from buildings.

The Seoul Student Federation, a radical group, says three students committed suicide last year, one by self-immolation.

Ruling reaffirms laws of the land

This is a nation — a society — governed by laws and without adherence of the people to those laws, chaos would reign.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reaffirmed that principle again recently when it said that those persons, however well-intentioned, who willfully break the nation's laws are obliged to accept the punitive consequences for their actions. The court upheld the conviction of eight Arizona activists in the church-based Sanctuary movement for helping Central American refugees enter the United States illegally.

In its 3-0 decision, the 9th Circuit held that "the government's overriding interest in policing its borders" took precedence over the religious beliefs of the defendants. The judges also said that, inasmuch as there are legal alternatives to change the laws regarding refugees, private citizens are not entitled to establish "religious boards of review to determine asylum status."

The court's ruling undercuts the self-righteous contention of the Sanctuary movement that it is answerable only to a higher law. Movement members routinely insist that the United States has a moral obligation to provide refuge to Central Americans who are fleeing a perilous situation created in part by U.S. policies. Yet, Judge Cynthia Holcomb Hall made clear that it was the defendants — not the Reagan administration's foreign policy — who were on trial.

By making that crucial distinction, the court has encouraged further prosecutions of others who deliberately defy the law by smuggling Central American refugees into the United States.

This is not to say that Sanctuary activists will go to prison. To the contrary, the Arizona Eight, including five members of the clergy, are currently on probation for their crimes. Nevertheless, it is incumbent upon the government to enforce the laws of the land. To do otherwise, would invite anarchy and threaten the very fabric of American society.

Another View:

A proper request

The United States has made a proper request of the Palestine Liberation Organization that should be repeated in even stronger terms than our diplomats used in presenting it in Tunis. There, at the first formal meeting under the Bush administration between U.S. officials and the PLO, that organization was asked to curb Arab rioting in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in order to move toward realistic peacemaking.

This should be stated as part of the overall requirement upon which Washington will decide, eventually, whether or not to keep talking to the PLO. A main part of that requirement is that the organization refrain from its long reliance on terrorism. Varied sorts of violence come into question, and the point arises as to whether it is helping to organize the rioting by Palestinians in those two sectors occupied by Israel since the 1967 war. People are being killed as they stage street assaults. Israeli troops are, after all, responding to attacks by people hurling rocks and firebombs. And Israel is unlikely to assent to negotiation with the PLO as long as that organization is basing its drive upon the exploitation of televised civil violence in the disputed territories.

Nor is serious negotiation for Palestinian autonomy in those areas likely unless moderate Palestinians, not committed to violent means, are allowed to participate in future talks. PLO threats — like the one to kill Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij if he did not stop proposing moderate solutions — prevent the sort of free dialogue that is necessary. And they raise a pointed question: Is this the way the PLO would run the small independent Palestinian nation whose creation it demands in the West Bank and Gaza? With repression of independent ideas by the threat of a bullet? With unquestioned rule by a hierarchy that grew out of terrorism?

Truly, there is pent-up desperation and anger in the uprising in those Israeli-occupied lands. But there also seems to be a strategy on the PLO's part to keep the violence going as its main stepping stone to victory through the winning of world opinion. The apparent intent is to use what appear as spontaneous demonstrations to gradually force an outside settlement upon Israel, for establishment of a small Palestinian nation that juts into its midst. But the PLO is no more entitled to exploit civilian casualties as an implement for its ends than would Israel be entitled to do so.

The signs indicate that PLO leader Yasser Arafat will not hear of trying to tone down the rioting until Israel accedes. He should be told that his deceleration of it is awaited as a critical sign of good faith in the processes of negotiation, as against the processes of violence. His so-called "peace offensive" suffers from reliance on riots.

Khomeini 'heir' resigned over atrocity

WASHINGTON — The fanatical followers of Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini, tortured nearly to death, their own ambassador to the United Nations. That was the last straw that drove Khomeini's designated successor to resign last month, according to a highly sensitive Central Intelligence Agency report.

Jack Anderson

The report details the secret struggle between Khomeini and the Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, who was designated in 1985 as Khomeini's heir. According to the CIA, Montazeri was furious over the arrest of Mohammed Mahallati, Iran's ambassador to the United Nations. The Pasdaran, Khomeini's Revolutionary Guard Corps, claimed that Mahallati was not faithful to the revolution. They arrested him in Tehran and tortured him until he had a heart attack. He was rushed to the hospital in critical condition.

It was too much for Montazeri, who had long been disgusted with Khomeini's abuse of civil rights in his country. The resignation doesn't make Montazeri a saint. Even at his most charitable, he is by no means a nice guy. It was Montazeri who called for attacking Americans anywhere in the World after the U.S. warship Vincennes accidentally shot down an Iranian airliner last summer. For years, Montazeri has supported terrorism against Americans.

Montazeri's faction leaked the story of the U.S. arms-for-hostages deal to a Lebanese magazine in November 1986. Montazeri had hoped that the exposure would cripple the chief backer of the deal, Iranian Speaker of the Parliament Hashemi Rafsanjani.

Instead of being mad at Rafsanjani, Khomeini turned on Montazeri and had at least 200 of Montazeri's followers arrested, including his son, son-in-law and brother-in-law. The brother-in-law, Mehdi Hashemi, was tried for various "crimes" and executed in September 1987.

Montazeri wisely kept a low profile after that episode, but would occasionally object to Khomeini's repressive domestic policies.

Last summer, when Khomeini's regime hit rock bottom and had to accept a cease fire in its long and bloody war with Iraq, Montazeri was emboldened. He wrote at least two secret letters of protest to Khomeini about the torture, imprisonment and executions of political opponents.

Thousands of dissidents, many of them members of the anti-Khomeini People's Mojahedin, have been imprisoned without trial and tortured to make them admit the error of their ways or cough up the names of their compatriots. Khomeini ordered wholesale executions of his opponents after the cease-fire. He feared that without the distraction of a war, his internal enemies could foment rebellion.

"Violence and executions have so far given us nothing," Montazeri complained in a letter to Khomeini on July 31. "But they have provoked media propaganda against us and given credit to ... counterrevolutionaries."

Montazeri wrote another secret letter Aug. 15 to the three-member prosecuting tribunal and asked it to stop "this genocide of prisoners, without trial." He continued with a notion that is foreign to Khomeini: "Combating ideas by means of terror is a mistake."

Montazeri's objections festered for months. Khomeini became increasingly angry with the man who was once his student, whom he called "the light of my life."

With Montazeri's final protest over the torture of the U.N. ambassador, Khomeini demanded his resignation. Khomeini said it was clear Montazeri didn't have the stuff to succeed him to this "very grave responsibility that requires endurance more than your capacity."

The unprincipled bloodletting that has become a hallmark of the Khomeini regime was OK with Montazeri when it was turned against the Iraqis or Americans, but it came too close to home when Khomeini began the wholesale slaughter of his own people.

ANOTHER GIPPER — George Bush has been quietly consulting a former president for advice. But Bush's secret mentor is not Ronald Reagan. It's Gerald Ford. It was Ford who recommended that Bush appoint Dick Cheney to be secretary of defense. Ford has also been advising Bush on the deficit and has urged him to cut expenditures to the bone and then raise whatever revenues are still necessary to wipe out the deficit.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Last week, University of Michigan researchers reported that students in Catholic schools do better in math and sciences than do students in public schools. Predictably, the defenders of the status quo fell all over themselves to make excuses for the public school system, saying that children in private schools are the cream of the crop and have attentive parents. That may be true, but we would have been more encouraged had public school teachers seen the survey as an opportunity to learn from their more successful counterparts.

Lawrence's courage needed to beat drugs

Lee Arthur Lawrence. Remember that name. Honor it. He was, before he was murdered, the kind of American citizen we all should be. He cared about his community. He used his freedom to speak out for what is right and against what is wrong. Most of all, he had courage.

Charley Reese

Lawrence, a black man, owned a small grocery store in Miami. He stood against the drug dealers who were destroying his community. For five years, he ran them out of his parking lot, turned them in to the police, spoke out against them in schools and in public forums.

Twice he had been shot at and once his store was firebombed. Threats were almost daily. But he never wavered. He never backed down one inch. On the night of March 20, in the doorway of his store, he was cut down by two men no doubt working for drug dealers.

Where were the police? Where were the community residents for whom he died?

One of Lawrence's children said to a New York Times reporter, "My father tried to help this community and this is what he got for it. He always said God would look out for him. But one person can't carry a whole community. He never got the support he needed. They don't give a damn."

Perhaps, when the demise of the United States requires that someone write an epitaph, that would be appropriate: They didn't give a damn.

Indeed, many Americans don't. Lawyers, many of whom gain their expertise as prosecutors, who decide it's more lucrative to defend the drug dealers certainly don't give a damn.

Bankers and business people who accept or sell or deal in large transactions involving cash don't give a damn.

Editors and publishers and broadcast executives who treat the drug war as a casual sort of thing that provides occasionally good, juicy stories don't give a damn.

And the customers — the so-called respectable people whose purchases are the foundation on which the rotten empire rests — they don't give a damn.

Just recently in Washington, D.C., the businessmen who had been ardent supporters of the city administration have begun to rebel — but why? Because they are concerned about the hundreds of lives that are destroyed by drugs, by the official corruption it breeds?

Oh, no. As long as people suffered and died quietly, they didn't complain. Only when the murder rate begins to frighten off business, do they react. They don't care how many people are shot down as long as they are shot down without a lot of publicity. It is the negative publicity, not the lost lives, they worry about.

It's a hard thing to say but freedom is wasted on some people. Since they only wish to pursue their own little material interests and don't give a damn about anything else, they would be just as well off under a dictatorship. They wouldn't rebel against it. As long as they themselves were not too inconvenienced, they wouldn't care what kind of government ruled them or what it did to someone else.

No real progress will ever be made against the drug lords until drug use is a universally condemned practice in America — when employers will absolutely not tolerate it in their employees; when schools automatically expel drug users or pushers; when penalties are actually levied against users; when pushers who are convicted disappear forever behind bars or into the grave.

Progress will not be made until heroes like Lee Arthur Lawrence no longer have to stand bravely alone against greedy psychopaths.

Why didn't the president attend Lawrence's funeral? Where were the politicians who love to run off at the mouth about their commitment to fight drugs?

Until we can find the courage to imitate Lee Arthur Lawrence, no progress will be made.

Nor will any be deserved.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Study says Atlanta is your crime of town

In an effort to improve its suffering image, Washington, D.C., officials did a study which pointed out that Atlanta, not Washington, was the Number One-ranked crime city in the nation. A large number of Atlantans were upset by the Washington report. Atlanta's city officials, such as the police chief, refuted the statistics and said, "Blah, blah, blah," which is what a city official says when he really means, "I'm into it up to my ears this time."

Lewis Grizzard

As for me, however, I took some measure of pride in finding out I live in the top-ranked crime city.

Residents in other cities celebrate winning Super Bowls and World Series. But Atlantans gave up on such things happening to them years ago.

We have the Falcons, the joke of the National Football League. We have the Braves, annually one of the worse teams in major league baseball.

The Falcons are so bad that when the owner threatened to move the team to Jacksonville, there were bumper stickers around that read, "Goodbye, Falcons — and Take the Braves with You."

We have the Hawks, who again look like an early casualty in the National Basketball Association playoffs.

They did show some improvement last season, and this was to be their year. At this writing, they are next-to-last in their division.

But crime?

Want to get murdered, raped or held up? Atlanta, according to the statistics, is the place to be.

What we must do with all this in Atlanta is to look on the bright side. What does it say when Atlanta is called the crime capital of the country?

It says we have a great climate. Do you know why Chicago doesn't have Atlanta's percentage of muggers? Because it's too cold in Chicago about half the year to be out on the streets.

It says we have a healthy economy. If nobody had any money in Atlanta, there wouldn't be anybody out there trying to steal it.

It says we're not a sleepy little Southern city anymore, which is probably what people in places like New York still think we are.

They are wrong. You can't be sleepy in a place where people are murdering other people at such a rate. Keep alert, pal, and be prepared to duck.

It says we can get away with doing a lot of things people in other cities can't. We can jaywalk, litter the streets and ignore no parking signs. The cops are too busy chasing down murderers, rapists and thieves to bother with such relatively minor violations.

It says we have intelligent leadership. The City Council has mostly ignored the crime thing while deciding how much of a raise it wants to give itself. That's plenty smart. Who's got time for crime when there's a real issue that must be dealt with?

It says we deserve a television show. There's "Miami Vice" and "L.A. Law." Why not "Atlanta Crime" or "Peachtree Pursesnatchers" or "Dead Designing Women"?

It also says we need a new slogan to replace the frayed "Atlanta: The City Too Busy to Hate." How about "Atlanta: You Have the Right to Remain Silent ... "

I have seen my civic duty and now I have done it.

Lewis Grizzard is a columnist for Cowles Syndicate.

Environmentalists say Bush not living up to promises

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists who just a few months ago had high hopes of finding an ally in President Bush are beginning to complain that his pro-environment promises contained more rhetoric than substance.

"The honeymoon isn't over, but I think we're in a shaky period," Jack Lorenz, president of the Isaak Walton League, said last week as the leaders of nine environmental groups held a news conference to chastise Bush for several personnel appointments and the government's response to the Alaska oil spill.

"Clearly we've got problems on our hands. And it looks like a long siege is at hand," said Michael McCloskey, chairman of the Sierra Club. Other environmental leaders said that aside from the appointment of William Reilly, a lifelong conservationist, as head of the Environmental Protection Agency, they have had little to cheer about.

Environmentalists concede there have been some pluses other than the Reilly appointment: a decision contrary to the Reagan administration to work aggressively for revisions in federal clean air laws including provisions to combat acid rain; a decision to push internationally for 100 percent elimination of chlorofluorocarbons, blamed for depleting high-altitude ozone; Reilly's intervention in building the Two Forks dam in Colorado; and a promise to review three offshore drilling plans near California and the Florida Everglades.

But the complaints have been loud over several critical sub-Cabinet nominations by Bush involving posts close to environmentalists' hearts; the administration's continued overall support of new oil exploration, particularly in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge; and the response to the oil tanker accident in Alaska's Prince William Sound.

They complained that Bush hasn't moved quickly enough to take control of the oil spill cleanup away from the Exxon Corp., whose tanker ran aground and tore open March 24, spilling more than 10 million gallons of crude.

George Frampton, president of the Wilderness Society, noted that three national parks are in the oil's path. "It is the federal government's responsibility to prevent this damage," he said.

"Mr. President, this is your Boston Harbor," declared Roger McManus, president of the Center for Marine Conservation. Pollution in Boston Harbor became a campaign issue last year as Bush sought to gain an edge on environmental issues over Democrat Michael Dukakis, the governor of Massachusetts.

The president acknowledged last Friday that Exxon's efforts were inadequate and said the U.S. Coast Guard would take increased control of the cleanup, but critics suggested that assessment was far too slow in coming from the White House.

But the controversy over the oil spill is not all that has widened the gulf between the president and the environmentalists.

The major environmental and conservation groups had hoped Bush would reverse the Reagan administration conclusion that oil development should — with congressional approval — proceed in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge. The president has refused to do so and declares that he sees no link to drilling in the refuge and the Alaska spill.

Personnel decisions also have riled environmental groups, most notably the nomination of James Cason as an assistant secretary of agriculture overseeing the U.S. Forest Service.

As a senior Interior Department official in the Reagan administration, Cason was accused of consistently taking a pro-development stand on public lands issues and being the architect of various efforts in recent years favoring mining and oil interests.

Cason, as well as several other officials already nominated or about to be nominated to senior posts at Interior, once worked for Interior Secretary James Watt, who was broadly attacked as being insensitive to environmental concerns.

Shamir urges two-stage peace pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir is urging a two-year "test period" of self-rule for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip before commencing negotiations on the future of the territories.

Shamir said that while "I personally believe it's possible" to someday resolve sovereignty over the disputed land taken by Israel in the six-day war of 1967, the Jewish state remains disinclined to return to its pre-war boundaries.

The 73-year-old Likud Party leader refused to be drawn into an argument with the Bush administration, which advocates Israel giving up land for peace, insisting that "the parties will have to negotiate and come to an agreement."

Shamir appeared on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" on the eve of a private tour of the United States following his talks here last week with President Bush, Secretary of State James A. Baker III and congressional leaders.

The prime minister renewed his proposal for elections among Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza aimed at selecting representatives to negotiate a form of self-rule for the Palestinians under continued Israeli authority in the territories.

He said he wanted to "solve, once and for all" the problem of Arab refugees living under "impossible conditions" and said "I think we have to give them housing."

The Palestine Liberation Organization today rejected Shamir's proposal, saying it was a warmed-over version of the Camp David Accords.

In its first reaction to Shamir's plan, the PLO said any elections in the territories should be held after Israeli withdrawal and under international supervision, according to the PLO news agency, Wafa.

On the broader question of ending the wave of violence in the territories, Shamir said he envisions negotiations in two stages with the Palestinians.

The first talks, he said, would be designed to achieve "an interim arrangement of self-rule for the Palestinians living in these territories, for a few years."

"This will be a transitional period, a test period, in which we will see if we can live together, walk together, cooperate," he said. "And then after this period, on the third year, we will start a process of negotiations about the permanent status of these territories."

Benjamin Netanyahu, Israel's deputy foreign minister, charged today that the PLO is backing Palestinian demonstrations on the West Bank "to try and obstruct the kind of positive step that we're talking about."

"The PLO is not interested in a real resolution of the problem," Netanyahu said in an interview on "CBS This Morning."

"What it wants is the dissolution of Israel," he said. "If they have to push kids, young children, in front of the camera throwing rocks, Molotov cocktails, they don't care if people are killed...I think that what we have to do is to say, 'Let's stop this violence'."

North defends taking 'freebie'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North, depicting himself as a pawn in a deadly chess game, says he accepted a home security system free of charge because he feared for his family's safety.

Lawyers defending the former National Security Council staffer showed jurors a videotaped news broadcast of a 1986 terrorist threat aimed at North by name, a week and a half after a U.S. bombing raid on Libya.

North asked the government for protection but "the bottom line of the discussion was that 'there isn't a lot we can do for you; you are too junior.'" North said Friday on his second day on the witness stand. He returns today for more testimony.

North lawyer Brendan Sullivan asked if national security adviser John Poindexter got government-paid protection for his home.

"I wouldn't put it that way, but he did get a security system," replied North.

County police went to North's house and offered to be helpful, but a private company said it couldn't survey North's needs until June, spring being a busy time for the security business.

North turned to Richard Secord, whom North had enlisted to run arms to the Contras. Secord ended up footing the bill for a $13,800 security gate at North's home and now North is charged with accepting an illegal gratuity.

Security adviser wary

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States should pursue a cautious strategy toward the Soviet Union, tempering new initiatives with skepticism about President Mikhail Gorbachev's intentions, President Bush's national security adviser says.

Brent Scowcroft maintained on Sunday that the Western strategy of projecting "strength and determination" in dealings with the Kremlin has been successful. He cited Gorbachev's withdrawal from Afghanistan and indications the Soviet economic system is in trouble.

At the same time, both Scowcroft and Secretary of State James A. Baker III acknowledged in national television interviews that Bush administration officials remain immersed in a substantial interagency review of East-West relations.

Scowcroft labeled as "premature" published reports saying Bush already had been advised by a policy task force to pursue a basically status-quo policy toward the Soviets.

"We have initial results from the study by the bureaucratic interagency process," he said on NBC-TV's "Meet The Press."

Woman arrested at fair

EUSTIS, Fla. (AP) — An animal rights activist ran up a 30-foot ramp in an attempt to stop a diving mule act but was arrested and the show went on.

"There comes a time in every person's life when they have to take a risk for what they believe in," said 58-year-old Noelle Valentine. "I believe in the rights of animals very deeply."

Valentine charged up the ramp as the performance was scheduled to start Friday. She shouted anti-cruelty slogans and some spectators jeered.

"Jump!" some of them yelled.

A police officer and the Lake County Fair's operator accompanied Valentine back to the ground, and she was charged with trespassing and resisting arrest without violence.

Earlier Friday, county animal control officer Frankie Thorp watched a 15-year-old mule named Kit dive into the pool of water and determined the act was not cruel.

The Leesburg and Lake County humane societies, however, insisted the act was cruel.

Thefts, burglaries jump

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government survey of crime has shown its second straight annual increase, going up by 1.8 percent in 1988, after five straight years of decline.

Car thefts and burglaries jumped at least 9 percent last year to lead the increase in crimes reported by victims ot the National Crime Survey, the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics said Sunday.

Overall, the number of crimes reported to the survey increased from 35.3 million in 1987 to 35.9 million, according to the preliminary results for 1988.

"The increase reverses a declining trend that began in 1981," said Joseph Besette, acting director of the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, which conducts the survey.

Group warns of control

WASHINGTON (AP) — A public interest group is warning that the country's biggest intelligence agency could exert excessive control over a program to bolster the security of computer systems throughout the federal government.

The group, Computer Professionals for Social Responsibility, has called on Congress to focus "particularly close scrutiny" on the National Security Agency's role in implementing legislation to safeguard sensitive but unclassified information in federal computers.

"There is a constant risk that federal agencies, under the guise of enhancing computer security, may find their programs — to the extent that they rely upon computer systems — increasingly under the supervision of the largest and most secretive intelligence organization in the country," it said.

No fatalities reported in gas explosion at hotel

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — An explosion apparently caused by natural gas ripped a 40-foot section from a motel on Sunday. Thirty-one people were injured, but no one was killed and only two people were hospitalized.

"We have witnessed a miracle," Fire Department Capt. Marvin Jochems said after searchers accounted for the last occupant of the Super 8 Motel.

"Everybody is accounted for," Jochems said. "We don't expect to find any fatalities in the rubble."

Thirty-one people were taken to the city's two major hospitals, but 29 were released after treatment, spokeswomen for the hospitals said.

Firefighters aided by a long-armed excavating machine continued to pick cautiously through the rubble, but Jochems said fire officials expected to turn the site back to control of the owners by the end of the day.

The blast occurred four minutes after someone phoned Montana-Dakota Utilities at 1:07 a.m. and reported a strong smell of natural gas, said Dick Blee, the acting Billings fire chief. Firefighters controlled the blaze by 4 a.m.

"The center of the building is gone, and then there's fire damage both ways," said Charlie Allen, acting battalion chief.

The explosion appeared to be in a central laundry area with natural-gas lines, Blee said. Individual rooms in the motel have electric heat.

"We couldn't get upstairs or anything, but there were people jumping out of windows when they heard the explosion," said Jan Hardy, motel night clerk.

"I thought somebody was trying to break in the room," said one guest, William Kartsonis of Denver. "You think it's just a prank, and then you look out and see the smoke. It's a scary feeling."

One couple said the floor of their room seemed to give way, but the carpet remained fastened around the edges, so they could walk to the door.

One man said people who fled all put on some kind of clothing, but almost none remembered shoes.

"We just woke up and threw our clothes on, grabbed a suitcase and headed down the hall," said Jan Hagstrom of Cody. "The smoke was really close to the ground already, below our knees."

Super 8 officials would have no comment until the motel's owners arrived from Aberdeen, S.D., a spokeswoman said.

Minimum wage showdown, Wright ethics debate on tap in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress appears headed for its first domestic policy showdown with President Bush this week and is setting aside time for an issue likely to cause some lawmakers discomfort at home.

This also could be the last week of deliberations in the House ethics committee's review of allegations that Speaker Jim Wright broke House rules. And one of Wright's allies plans to file ethical charges against the speaker's chief accuser, newly elected House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia.

Senate Democrats are moving towards confrontation with Bush with legislation they hope to pass midweek to raise the base wage to $4.55 an hour by late 1991 despite repeated vows by the president to veto any measure boosting the hourly minimum above $4.25.

In the House, members will spend 10 hours debating a plan that calls for closing 86 military facilities and curtailing operations at an additional 59.

As for the minimum wage, final congressional passage of the plan being pushed by the Democratic leadership would all but certainly result in a veto from Bush, who made it clear last week he will stand his ground despite concerns by some in the GOP that Democrats could gain a political issue.

"I have no intention of budging one inch on this," the president said Friday.

Bush has proposed three annual 30-cent increases in the minimum wage, which has been $3.35 an hour since 1981. He also wants to allow employers to be allowed to pay all newly hired workers the current minimum wage their first six months on the job.

Democrats have balked at the president's "training wage" proposal and say his $4.25 an hour final target is too low. Their plan, already approved by the House, would bring the minimum wage to $4.55 an hour by October 1991 and allow a subminimum for only two months.

Democrats paint the issue as one of fairness, contrasting their support for a raise for the nation's poorest workers with Bush's call for an expansion in capital gains tax breaks.

"The president wants to give a tax cut of $30,000 a year to the richest 1 percent of Americans but he's against 30 cents an hour more for the millions of poor working Americans at the bottom end of the income scale," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell. "That's wrong and unfair."

A final Senate vote on the minimum wage bill is due Tuesday or Wednesday and could go immediately to the White House if it matches the House version.

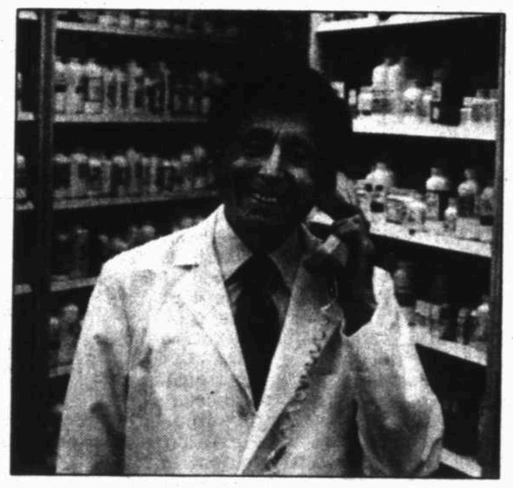
Pharmacist Answers Questions About...

WRINKLES



Robert Heldfond, internationally famous pharmacist helps clear up confusion in minds of millions about wrinkle creams. Here are the questions he is most frequently asked.

Q: My wrinkles make me look old. What can I do about it?
A: Three things . . . a face lift, drugs, or cosmetics. The first requires surgery. The second, drugs like Retin A, need a doctor's prescription. Cosmetics help the skin appear younger without surgery or prescriptions. I chose the cosmetic approach when I developed my EB5 Wrinkle Cream.

Q: Why is your EB5 Wrinkle Cream different from other creams on the market?
A: EB5, as a cosmetic, helps facial lines appear smoother and my special formula works like 5 creams in one jar. . . a wrinkle cream, moisturizer, day cream, night cream, and makeup base . . . all in one.

Q: How do I know EB5 will work for me?
A: Millions of satisfied customers have learned that my EB5 Wrinkle Cream is an effective cream to help their skin look and feel younger. This is due to its M L P action, which is: Moisturization, Lubrication and Protection.

Q: Is EB5 expensive?
A: Absolutely not. One jar lasts for many months and you need to use no other creams along with it. Also, EB5 carries a money-back guarantee of satisfaction.

Q: How may I learn more about EB5 Wrinkle Cream?
A: Hear directly from Pharmacist Heldfond. Just dial 1-800-356-4798 (THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR THE CALL) and learn more about this exciting wrinkle cream, EB5, and how you may have younger-looking skin.

Nancy Holt cuts the hair of a scowling Clayton Baker, 6, of Stanton at the Clip Joint.

Story by Ed Todd

STANTON — Mitch Holt talks like an old-time cowboy who has spent plenty of time working cattle and chewing the fat about the campfire.

But the West Texan is far from being old and neither is he a whippersnapper.

He has cowboyed, rode wild rodeo bulls, carved out a niche for himself in making cowboy boots and Western sculptures, and has learned enough about life to philosophize.

"God gave us all a lot of talent," Holt said. "All we've got to do is look for it and develop it."

Well now, Holt, at a mere 26, has looked around and done a few things — from courting and spooning to riding bulls and cowboying.

Please see DUO, Page 2B

DUO

In his courting, he latched onto a pretty, green-eyed Midland lady, Nancy, who cuts hair in the Clip Joint barber shop just around the corner from Holt's Boot Shop.

For now, Holt has settled down to making custom boots, cowboy chaps and an occasional saddle, and does some fancy "whittling" — sculpturing Western art.

"I took those in on trade," he said, as he glanced at a pair of old leather chaps which Alpine cowboy Steve Creech used to ride in. "Built him a new pair," Holt said. "Took those and some money for a new pair."

"I'm not against trading at all," he said. "I'll do a little trading with anybody."

In fact, before the day was out, Holt had talked Stanton rancher Jack Berry into buying the old chaps for $35. "He had to take a bottle of shoe polish, too, at the regular price." Holt seemed pleased in his dealing.

"He likes to trade," said Holt, who earlier had made Berry a pair of ostrich boots and a matching belt. "When you buy something in here, everybody wins."

Next to Holt's boot shop is Phil Whisnand's veterinary clinic. And around the corner and across from the drug store, bank and newspaper office is the Clip Joint, where Holt's wife works afternoons cutting hair and rarely giving a shave.

"I have (given shaves with a straight razor) but never to the same person twice," said Mrs. Holt, who is not keen on nicks. "They have to sign my release form before I can give them a shave."

But she got rid of the razor.

"I gave it to Mitch," Mrs. Holt said. "I was pretty dangerous with it."

She charges from $4 to $7 for a haircut.

The shorter the hair and older the customer, the cheaper the price.

Stanley Reid, who has been cutting hair in Stanton since 1937 when haircuts were 35 cents a head, pointed out the $4-haircut bargain.

"They have got to be older than I am" to get the $4 haircut, said the 74-year-old Reid, who takes the morning shift at the shop. Mrs. Holt takes the afternoon tour.

"I don't know what I would do without her," said Reid, who cuts mostly short hair. He took the name "Clip Joint" for the shop many years ago after a friend jokingly told him that Reid "clipped a guy two or three different ways" in the barber shop.

Mrs. Holt styles and gives regular haircuts. "She is real fast and does about twice as much as I do. She is really a good barber and real dependable," Reid said.

Children, teen-agers and older folks "flock" to her, Reid said.

But that wasn't always the case.

"It took some of them a little while" to accept a lady barber in the Clip Joint, Mrs. Holt said. "A lot of them walked in, looked at me, and walked out."

When Reid wasn't barbering, "I was kind of their only choice unless they wanted to go to Midland or Big Spring," Mrs. Holt said.

Some people travel a good distance to get a haircut.

Houston traveling salesman Berwyn Tate, 62, happened into the Clip Joint when he returned to West Texas to visit his brother, Newell, and his parents, Alvah and Jessie Tate, at nearby Tarzan.

"I prefer it (a lady barber), especially when she's pretty," Tate said.

Rancher Sam Houston, 71, said Mrs. Holt is "a good barber" who "gets involved in lots of community activities. She's a nice person."

Six-year-old Clayton Baker didn't appear particularly happy in the barber's chair.

"That's just his normal look," teased his mother, Elaine Baker. "When he was born, he had a scowl on his face."

But before Mrs. Holt was finished cutting his hair, Clayton couldn't help but smile. Meanwhile, Brandi, Mitch and Nancy Holt's daughter who will be 3 years old in mid-May, was not misbehaving. "I want to be a cowgirl," she said.

Down the block, boot-maker-sculptor Holt was working in his boot shop, where he is proud to display a bronze sculpture of an old, weathered Texas Ranger who appears to have been on horseback on the dusty West Texas plains for many seasons in trailing outlaws and rustlers.

Holt also sculptures cowboys, wildlife, bull riders and carved out a "Saturday-night lady taking a bath — 'Ritual in a Whiskey Barrel.'"

"It's kind of neat to take an abstract idea from the mind and see it come to life," Holt said of sculpturing. Don Turner over at Grady had suggested that Holt try sculpturing after seeing some of his sketches.

Holt got into boot-making and fatherhood after he had rodeoed and cowboyed for awhile in and out of college. He and Nancy Leath married on New Year's Eve of 1983 and then came along daughter Brandi.

"A good pair of hand-made boots are built on a last that shows respect for the foot," said Holt.

He got into boot-making by hanging around Bill Baker's old boot shop in Stanton. "He let me work on some of my own (footwear)," said Holt, who wanted to be independent.

"I don't like working for other people," he said. "Oh, working for the public, I guess I'm working for more people than I was before."

And Mitch Holt learned the art of boot-making the way he learned bull-riding, cowboying and sculpturing — by doing and learning from the masters.

"I started tearing an old pair of hand-made boots apart and seeing what they did and duplicated that," he said.

Holt sought advice from Harold "Butch" Norris, a veteran Midland boot-maker who "learned from some of the old-timers."

"After I got rocking along, I'd go over and ask him about this and that," Holt said, "and he'd help."

Holt said Norris is about five years behind on boot orders. "He sends some my way. I couldn't get any better endorsement."

Custom-made boots are a study in precision.

"Everything is done by measurement," Holt said. "I had to learn a lot about the human foot for boot-making. In factory-made boots, you'll have to buy a pair that fits closest to you." And the leather — calf, bull or exotic hide — in custom-made boots usually is far superior to that of store-bought boots.

"Consider this, if you buy a pair of store-bought boots for $100, it has changed hands several times," he said. And in making a pair of relatively-inexpensive boots from calf leather, Holt may tie up $100 just in leather. Custom-made calf boots may run about $350 a pair, while boots made of bull leather will be priced at about $400. Ostrich boots run about $750, and alligator boots, about $1,800 a pair.

Holt doesn't seem to back off on a challenge — whether it is branding cattle, making a trade with a customer who is as head-strong as he, or riding a bull.

And learning the art and technique of bull-riding early on taught Holt some lessons in life and living.

After he was graduated from high school in Stanton in 1980, Holt enrolled in a bull-riding school taught by Gary Leffew, the 1970 world champion bull-rider, on an Indian reservation.

"I've never known anyone anywhere who had a better mental attitude than that guy," Holt said. "If the world gave him a lemon, he'd make lemonade out of it. He thought everybody ought to be able to do the same thing.

"If old Gary tells you it's going to rain tomorrow, you had better set your rain barrels out."

A bull-riding poster in Holt's Boot Shop and signed by Leffew proclaims: "Whatever you vividly imagine, ardently desire, sincerely believe in, enthusiastically act upon, must inevitably come to pass."

Holt is proud of that.

And he is also delighted in Leffew's personal words to him: "Always remember — You become what you think about. Think positive. Get Hot!"

"Bullriding puts you in touch with yourself," Holt said. "If everything is not right in your own mind, you can't get a 2,000-pound bull rode without having everything just right.

"Everybody ought to ride bulls for six months," he said, "because it is good training for anything else that you might want to do."

Woman's body found near Lavon Lake

MCKINNEY, Texas (AP) — Sheriff's officers have identified a body found in a pond near Lavon Lake as that of a 16-year-old Longview woman missing since March 21.

The body of Debra Plunkett, found Tuesday by two Farmersville men, was identified by a Collin County medical examiner using dental records, a sheriff's officer said Saturday.

The victim was found fully clothed and partially submerged in a pond off Farm-to-Market Road 982, about 35 miles northeast of Dallas, said Lt. Owen Pulliam.

He said a cord was wrapped around the victim's neck. Authorities said they have no suspects or motive in her slaying.

The precise time Ms. Plunkett was killed could range from two weeks to two days, said Pulliam.

Texas A&M scientists confirm Utah nuclear fusion experiment

STATE

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University researchers were preparing today to step forward with results duplicating a controversial University of Utah experiment that claims to have achieved nuclear fusion through a simple process, school officials said.

A press conference was scheduled for 9 a.m. at Texas A&M to announce the findings of a team led by thermal dynamics researchers Bruce Gammon and Kenneth Marsh and associate chemistry professor Charles Martin.

"Other labs around the country have been trying to duplicate this, but nobody else has been able to get satisfactory results," said Ed Wairaven, a spokesman for Texas A&M.

"Our people are convinced that they've got it, so as a gesture to the researchers in Utah, we wanted to announce it as soon as possible."

Researchers in Utah announced March 23 that they had achieved nuclear fusion at room temperature. Their claim has been met with widespread skepticism among colleagues.

Texas A&M spokesman Gene Charleton said the research team's experiments had yielded significantly more energy, in the form of heat, than they were putting into it in the form of electric current.

Scientists have long sought the secrets of nuclear fusion, considered a possible replacement for conventional energy sources because it would be clean, inexpensive and virtually inexhaustable.

Charleton said Martin, an electrochemist, found the initial test results "indicate it will be worth pursuing electrolysis of heavy water as an energy source."

Heavy water resembles ordinary water but is made of one part oxygen and two parts deuterium, a stable isotope of hydrogen found in sea water. Electrolysis is the passage of an electric current through a solution to produce chemical reactions.

University sources said the three research team leaders were being secluded until the news conference so they could complete work on a scientific paper that will be mailed to the Journal of Electroanalytical Chemistry in Norway.

Other researchers complained that they tried without success to replicate the experiment of Stanley Pons of the University of Utah and his British colleague, Martin Fleischmann of the University of Southhampton.

Pons has said he wasn't surprised at his colleagues' difficulties because the experiment is more complicated than press reports have made it out to be, and only recently have technical details reached the scientific community.

Steven Jones of Brigham Young University in Utah said recently that he had achieved fusion in a similar experiment, but obtained far less energy than Pons and Fleischmann said they obtained.

Kenneth Hall, a thermodynamic chemist and the assistant director of the Texas Engineering Experiment Station at Texas A&M, has followed the work of Martin, Marsh and Gammon.

Hall told the Austin American-Statesman the results were exciting but that more work will have to be done before practical uses are found for the process.

"What it means is that after several more years of development and engineering studies, we may have some really significant results for practical use," Hall said.

"Right now, it's just the exciting discovery of a new phenomenon. If it's fusion as (the Utah researchers) say it is, it could be an enormous energy source. If it's something else, it would still be interesting."

Pons and Fleischmann had said their process, involving electrodes made of the metals platinum and palladium and immersed in the heavy water, created four times as much energy as they put into it.

"Our indication are that the discovery will be relatively easy to make into a usable technology for generating heat and power," Fleischmann was quoted earlier by the Utah university as saying.

Pons is scheduled to make a presentation on the process Wednesday in Dallas before thousands of his chemist peers at the annual meeting of the American Chemical Society.

Many fusion experts have been highly critical of the Utah claims. For 35 years, government and private researchers have spent millions of dollars trying to achieve fushion.

Hall said the Texas A&M researchers were not confirming the creation of fusion in a test tube.

"The important thing they've seen," Hall said, "is more energy comes out of this reaction than you put into it. They're running the identical experiment Pons and Fleischmann did and they've bracketed it.

Artie Travis of Kirbyville spends a moment sorting his produce for placement along Highway 96. His vegetables will sit all day in the back of an old pickup by the road. Customers help themselves and drop a few cents into a bucket.

Vendor relies on honesty to sell his garden produce

KIRBYVILLE (AP) — Artis Travis knows his customers well enough that he doesn't waste time tending the roadside vegetable stand in front of his neat yellow farmhouse.

Anytime you might see him sitting out by the road in a blue metal lawn chair, he's resting from the planting, picking or plowing that fill his days. Still, he's more than willing to visit with any of the folks who stop, many of whom have been his customers for the past dozen years or so.

He trusts his customers to pay for what they take, putting their money in a small metal bucket that hangs from the roof of a camper that protects the pickup bed and keeps the vegetables cool.

The vegetables hold down wrinkled brown paper sacks that have produce prices scrawled on them.

"They're honest folks," Travis said of his customers, taking off the white straw beekeeper's hat he wears in the garden and wiping his forehead. "Fact o'business, I believe they do better with me gone."

One day recently, a man pulled up in his driveway and Travis looked outside. The man explained that earlier he'd bought two bunches of greens priced at 75 cents each but he had had only a dollar at the time.

"He was coming to bring me the 50 cents he owed me," Travis said.

Other times, customers will leave IOUs or notes explaining they'll pay him on payday, he said. And they always come back.

The way Travis figures it, he's where he's supposed to be and doing what he's supposed to do.

He was in his early 20s and heading toward his job at a papermill on the day he first saw the land he now tills.

While driving his '37 pickup along U.S. 96, two miles south of Kirbyville, "I looked out across the land and the pond and said, 'I sure would like to have that,' " he said. "Then I got to thinking I probably couldn't sprout a pea on it."

He kept thinking about the land, and as a devout Christian, he began to think more and more that God wanted him to buy it.

Five years passed, but the land was still for sale when Travis returned. He bought it and built the house where he and his wife, Josie Mae, live, a house that has a tire on its roof to keep a loose piece of tin from flapping in the wind.

Travis kept dairy cattle until 1975, but now, at age 76, he works full time in his garden, which stretches behind his house almost to the horizon. He's growing something in almost every square inch of it.

"I planted cucumbers yesterday and squash the day before," he says.

He has to remember to drive the black pickup that serves as his vegetable stand so it will continue running well, he says. Most days, he drives it only to the road in the early morning and back to the house "somewhere in between Dan Rather and Wheel of Fortune."

Biaggi begins serving sentence for bribery

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi has arrived here to begin serving a 2½-year prison sentence for accepting bribes.

Biaggi, 71, arrived at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport late Sunday, but did not indicate what time he would report to the U.S. Correctional Facility today to begin serving his sentence.

As Biaggi left the plane, he declined to comment because he had held a news conference before boarding a plane in Newark, N.J.

The 10-term Democratic congressman was convicted of bribery charges in federal court in New York City in September 1987 for accepting a Florida spa vacation from former New York City Democratic boss Meade Esposito.

He was later convicted in the Wedtech scandal and sentenced to eight years.

At the New Jersey airport, Biaggi said he had served his constituents well and would return "to pick up where we left off."

Flanked by family members, he told reporters he went to church earlier in the day. He also said he visited his wife, Marie Wassil Biaggi, who is hospitalized with Hodgkin's disease.

"I have loving grandchildren and loving children," he said. "They'll be here when I get back."

The former congressman maintained he accepted the Florida vacation as a friend of Esposito.

"I find myself going to a federal facility today because a friend of some 35 years was generous to me," said Biaggi.

About 30 friends gathered at a posh New York City restaurant Saturday for a combination farewell party for him and birthday party for the daughter of a long-time friend.

"They gave me a great honor," said Biaggi. "I believe I served them well. I tried with all of my might. I'm leaving, but I'll be back and we'll pick it up where we left off."

AIDS activist trys to clear name in bank robbery case

DALLAS (AP) — Friends and colleagues of an AIDS activist accused of robbing an area bank say a police investigation offers no physical proof of his involvement in the crime, adding that they worry the stress is likely to adversely affect his already crippled health.

Mike Richards, a nationally known activist and co-founder of the Dallas AIDS Resource Center, was arrested Feb. 15 outside his Hawaii apartment in connection with the robbery of a suburban Grand Prairie bank.

"This justice in limbo is killing him," said William Waybourn, president of the Dallas Gay Alliance, which operated the AIDS Resource Center. "We have begged the investigators to prosecute him or set him free. We think they're waiting until he dies so they can quietly drop the case."

The Tarrant County district attorney's office, which would present the case to a grand jury, says it will not proceed in the investigation because of concern for Richards' health, The Dallas Morning News reported in its Sunday editions. Richards is suffering from an advanced stage of AIDS.

Extradition proceedings were terminated on Feb. 21 because Richards was hospitalized and his doctor said the trip to Dallas would shorten his life.

Aspiring writers flock to workshop

Men's, women's thoughts turn to romance

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

ODESSA — In spring, a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. The same can be said about a young woman's thoughts, if the crowd at Odessa College's romance workshop — 9 a.m.-12:30 p.m. Saturday — is an indication of romantic thoughts.

Fifty aspiring writers (48 women and two men) gathered to learn "the tricks of the trade" from successful romance novelist Parris Afton Bonds.

Carla Wells, director of community service programs at OC, said, "We just don't have this kind of response for writing workshops scheduled during the winter. There is something about the spring which gets a good response."

And Ms. Weels' theory seems to be true, since there wasn't a single seat left in the OC Annex Building when Ms. Bonds walked to the front of the room to begin workshop.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Romance novelist Parris Afton Bonds explains her writing techniques to 50 participates in Odessa College's romance workshop 9 a.m.-12:30 p.m. Saturday. Ms. Bonds, a resident of Hobbs, N.M., has her 25th novel in publication.

MS. BONDS resides in Hobbs, N.M., and is the mother of five sons, doesn't exactly have the kind of background which evokes windswept fantasies. But that hasn't stopped her from churning out novels filled with lush settings, adventure, action, romance and wit. In fact, Ms. Bonds, who was recently named one of the three best-selling romance authors in America by ABC's "Nightline," has her 25th novel in publication.

Like the characters in her novels, the successful author is "an ordinary person in an extraordinary situation." The author, who has taught classes and seminars in New Mexico colleges, also is an experienced speaker.

During her workshop, she spoke on the techniques and methods of plot, structure, characterization and dialogue. She also offered tips on marketing manuscripts and screenplays.

BUT MS. BONDS dispelled the aura of glamour surrounding her occupation by describing the discipline and attention to detail needed to succeed in her craft.

"There are two things a writer really needs. The first thing is to believe in yourself; the second is persistence," she said.

Ms. Bonds also relies heavily on structure, and plot methods taught by Dwight V. Swain, author of "Techniques of the Selling Writer." She said attention to method is necessary, quoting the adage: "The man who knows how will always have a job, but the man who knows why, will always be the boss."

Ms. Bonds also said that characters reactions should flow in the order of feeling, action and then speech. "Although Einstein proved that time is relative," Ms. Bonds said, "people still think upon linear lines. They still expect cause to precede effect."

Ms. Bonds advocates using specific, concrete nouns in writing. "Just like Mark Twain said, 'The difference between the right word and the almost right word is as the difference between lightning and the lightning bug,'" she said.

DESPITE TECHNIQUES and ability, Ms. Bonds said "a certain amount of luck" got her started in the romance genre.

"My husband was employed with an international food chain, called Frito-Lay at the time, when he was transferred to Mexico. I had a maid and free time on my hands to start writing," she said.

Ms. Bonds submitted her first manuscript in 1977 when the field began booming with the success of romance authors like Rosemary Rogers and Kathleen Woodiwiss.

"The publishing houses were desperate for manuscripts or they wouldn't have bought mine," Ms. Bonds said. In fact, she said that her first work was so amateurish, that she tries to buy up all the copies of it herself. However, writing is a craft that often improves with experience, and Ms. Bonds has widened her range of writing to include western and science fiction stories.

She also has novels in the works which are branching out into the new age genre, which she cited as the marketing trend of the future.

No matter which genre she writes in, Ms. Bonds says she often draws her characters from the Southwest. "The Southwest has so much to offer," she said, "especially historically speaking. We have settings as rough as the wild frontier to the modern conveniences of the Industrial Age. Also, characters from the Southwest tend to be stronger," she said.

EVEN THOUGH Ms. Bonds lives in Hobbs, a far cry from some of the lush tropical settings of her novels, she said, "New Mexico is rich with cultural material, and there is a spirit out here that causes one to go inward, unlike in the metropolitan cities."

The author admitted that the romance market is currently flooded, but added that publishers are still looking for well-written works. "The romance genre still encompasses 30 percent of the books being published," she said. "But breaking into the market is still a gamble."

Ms. Bonds said that the romance genre has been marketed toward an audience with a short attention span "just like news and newspapers stories have emphasized brevity." But Ms. Bonds said she thinks that the trend will swing back to a resurgence of longer stories.

Ms. Wells, the OC community service director who scheduled the workshop last April, said she was surprised at the number of people participating in the romance workshop for the first time. "We mailed flyers to everyone who participated in last year's workshop which featured Constance O'Banyon and Emma Merritt. But out of the 50 attending this workshop, only seven had been to the previous workshop."

ALTHOUGH MS. WELLS is not a closet fiction writer, she said she enjoys the romance workshops. "How people get their inspiration to create is fascinating to me," Ms. Wells said. "Parris has five sons, and some of our other authors (who have spoken at OC) have had to work under adverse circumstances, such as writing while a critically ill spouse was in the hospital. Those people who always wait for the perfect circumstances to write will always be waiting. It's people like Parris, who grab the moment, who succeed."

The cost of the 3½ hour workshop was $20. It was hosted by OC's Continuing Education department. Participants will receive certificates for attending.

Ms. Bonds most recent novel is "Blue Moon." Some of her other novels include "Lavender Blue," "Windsong," "Flash of the Firefly," "Deep Purple," "Mood Indigo," "Stardust," "Sweet Golden Sun" and "Dust Devil."

Parris Afton Bonds will present a workshop for Texas Press Women 2 p.m. Saturday at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium. The program is open to the public. For fees and information call 684-6122.

DEAR ABBY

Memory of beloved dog inspires prayer for care

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I cannot tell you how thrilled I was when I read your column in The Desert Sun (Palm Springs, Calif.) and saw the piece titled "In Memory of Beau." It must have been sent to you by one of your readers without the name of the author — me! Abby, I wrote that piece in 1948. The story behind it:

I held my beloved pet in my arms while the vet gave her a merciful needle. I made an awful fool of myself in the vet's office, but it was the last service I could provide a pet so dear to my heart. I had picked her up at a sad time in my life during a Reno snowstorm in 1935. For the next 13 years she was my constant companion, until she became so sick and feeble I could not bear to see her suffer for another day.

After she was put to sleep, the dog's prayer almost wrote itself. And in the show business tradition, God gave me the strength to do my Sunday evening TV show on NBC.

By the way, my dog's name was Skippy, but somewhere along the way, someone titled my piece "In Memory of Beau." I purposely did not use Skippy's name because I wanted this to be a dog's prayer — anybody's dog. And whether I receive credit or not doesn't matter; it gives me more satisfaction than I can express to imagine how many readers of your column may be helped by my words.

The version you published is quite good — I have no complaints — but I am enclosing the original piece, just for you, Abby, exactly as I wrote it. — BETH HARRIS, PALM SPRINGS, CALIF.

DEAR BETH: I was delighted to receive your letter, and very much appreciated receiving the original version of your piece. But it's not just for me. It deserves to be published for everyone, exactly as you wrote it. And here it is:

A DOG'S PRAYER
by Beth Norman Harris

Treat me kindly, my beloved master, for no heart in all the world is more grateful for kindness than the loving heart of me.

Do not break my spirit with a stick, for though I should lick your hand between the blows, your patience and understanding will more quickly teach me the things you would have me do.

Speak to me often, for your voice is the world's sweetest music, as you must know by the fierce wagging of my tail when your footstep falls upon my waiting ear.

When it is cold and wet, please take me inside ... for I am now a domesticated animal, no longer used to bitter elements ... and I ask no greater glory than the privilege of sitting at your feet beside the hearth ... though had you no home, I would rather follow you through ice and snow than rest upon the softest pillow in the warmest home in all the land ... for you are my god ... and I am your devoted worshiper.

Keep my pan filled with fresh water, for although I should not reproach you were it dry, I cannot tell you when I suffer thirst. Feed me clean food, that I may stay well, to romp and play and do your bidding, to walk by your side, and stand ready, willing and able to protect you with my life, should your life be in danger.

And, beloved master, should the Great Master see fit to deprive me of my health or sight, do not turn me away from you. Rather hold me gently in your arms as skilled hands grant me the merciful boon of eternal rest ... and I will leave you knowing with the last breath I drew, my fate was ever safest in your hands.

DEAR READERS: Apropos placing one's severely retarded child in a "home," read "Rough Road Home" by Melissa Mather. (The book, published in paperback, is available for $9.95, plus $1 for postage and handling, from Paul S. Ericksson, Middlebury, Vt. 05753.) It's a true and truly moving story of one woman's courage under adversity. I read it twice and loved it.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

Grid season still far off, but war over seating rages on

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's Rebels won't play a football game for another five months, but ancient Memorial Stadium is still the site of a major raging war that the Midland school board will soon have to address.

The war is over seating for Lee home games and the combatants are Lee season ticket holders and the Lee band. The winners and losers are still to be decided.

The problem was created prior to the 1988 season when the decision was made to purchase end zone bleachers for a price tag of $19,500 for the purpose of housing the bands in the north and south end zones. This allowed the school district to sell 528 additional season tickets for the Lee home games.

Since 1984 Lee has virtually sold out all of its available season tickets and a waiting list quickly formed. The above decision took some of the season ticket pressure off, even though there is still a waiting list for fans who would like to purchase season tickets.

The bleacher situation also gave an additional 1,000 seats to sellout games such as Lee vs. Permian when played at the cramped confines of the small 10,000-plus seat stadium since bands from both schools would be placed in the end zone bleachers.

However, the Lee band was not satisfied with the bleacher arrangement and were moved back into the student section in the west stands. The Lee band would now like to have back the original section where the additional 528 season tickets were sold.

"After what happened last year, we knew there would have to be adjustments made. What was done last year was a short term decision," said Midland athletic director Gil Bartosh. "There or four or five ways we can go, but I don't want to discuss those options since they haven't been presented to the school board. The board will have to make the final decision.

"A committee has reviewed the problem and has given some options to Dr. (Joesph) Baressi (Midland superintendent), who will inform the board of those options. I know one thing. The bleachers are out of the end zone and something has to be done."

Should 528 season ticket holders lose their options, the school district will lose close to $13,000 in revenues for the six Lee home games in 1989 and that doesn't count yearly losses to come in the future. It also doesn't count the 500-plus tickets that could have been sold for possible sellouts and Permian is coming to town this year.

Close to $20,000 apparently has already been lost on the bleacher purchase. Some of the bleachers have been moved to Zachery Field for baseball, but since Midland High now plays its home games at Angel Stadium, they aren't being used much.

Lost revenues, however, are just the tip of this iceberg since many Lee fans feel they could lose a broad base of local support from those who would be frustrated from losing season tickets and not able to get into some games at all.

The Lee band also feels short changed at having been placed in the end zone in the first place.

It is the feeling of some band members and parents that the Lee band is a major part of the school and deserve to be in the stands on the home side of the field and not stuck in the end zone where they can't see the game well. The band has also complained that it is dangerous during extra point and field goal situations when the ball is kicked into the bleacher section.

The school board meets Tuesday night, but this issue isn't on the agenda. No final decision is expected to come Tuesday. However, the board will probably be informed of committee options.

Another major problem that must be considered is the fact that approximately 300 long time season ticket holders opted to move from Section E, which is near the junior high section, to Section B, where the band once sat. Some even moved from the more desirable C and D sections in order to get an extra seat or two in their party.

No solution, outside the building of a new stadium, appears to be perfect for all concerned. And its a problem this new school board has inherited and must address in the coming weeks.

CBS denies report

NEW YORK — CBS denied a report Sunday that the network plans to air a piece alleging that a former major league umpire helped fix baseball games. The New York Daily News, citing a source close to CBS News, reported that the network "is planning to air a segment within a few days on gambling by umpires, including 'proof' that former major league ump Satch Davidson actually helped fix baseball games."

CBS spokesman Tom Goodman called the report "irresponsible and untrue."

NEW YORK — Joe Kleine of the Boston Celtics and Mark Bryant of the Portland Trail Blazers were suspended for one game and fined $2,500 by the NBA Sunday for fighting in a game Friday night.

Perfect Game

DURHAM, N.C. — Rright-hander Dennis Burlingame, 19, Braves farmhand, used a fastball and knuckle curve to toss a season-opening perfect game as Durham swept a Carolina League Class A doubleheader from Frederick 4-0 and 1-0.

Burlingame, of Mullica Hills, N.J., in his second year of pro ball, recorded five strikeouts and 11 groundouts in his seven-inning gem. He went to a 3-2 count on one batter before recording one of his strikeouts.

Angels make it 3-0

Martinez' arm survives test

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

What's going on here? One year Midland came back from an opening series in San Antonio 0-6. But they were Cubs, then. This year the Midland Angels are 3-0, but still....

Sunday was the night they were supposed to lose. They had a pitcher going who hadn't thrown in a "live" game in a year and a half. What's worse, the weather was like an escapee from an oil spill in Alaska.

Yet the Haloed Ones, in virtual solitude, beat the Missions, 5-2, when Reed Peters broke up a 1-1 tie with a two-run bases loaded double in the fifth and David Martinez' arm took him through 7 2/3 unexpected innings. And as Manager Max Oliveras described it, "When I came out to get him, he begged me not to take him out."

GARY BUCKELS finished up for his second save in three games.

And, of Martinez, performance, pitching coach Gary Rubey said, "We had him programmed for 82 or 83 pitches. He threw 91. He's healthy."

Catcher Mike Knapp, who banged out a couple of singles, said the wintery blast actually helped. "Nobody was going to drive the ball in this wind."

Despite Instructional and Cactus League work, Martinez still was apprehensive about the whole thing and it showed the first couple of innings.

Wayne Kirby opened the game with a double and Martinez issued a one out walk to Dave Hansen, but escaped unscathed. A lead off single in the second and then real trouble loomed when Luis Lopez and Adam Brown hit one out singles in the fourth.

"I had first inning jitters and early I was trying to aim the ball." Then, after Rubey went to the mound and told him to "calm down or you'll have a stroke", the Austin native figured "I'll throw strikes and let the defense do the rest.

"Actually, I went two innings more than I expected to."

OLIVERAS called a pickoff play (Martinez to shortstop Gary DiSarcina) a key play, easing the pressure in the fourth.

San Antonio used a Mike White single, infield hit by Manny Francois and a grounder to first by Kirby to tie it in the fifth.

Midland came back in the home fifth when a walk to Bob Rose, a single up the middle by Knapp and an infield hit by DiSarcina loaded the bases for Peters.

"I got behind 0-2 (against Mission starter Chris Nichting) and I was just hoping to score a run with a fly," Peters explained. "Then the count reached 3-2 and I knew he had to come in with the fast ball."

Peters' liner kicked up chalk down the left field line and chased two runs home. That gave the Angels the lead for good.

Rose doubled, went to third on Knapp's second single and scored on a wild pitch in the sixth and in the eighth Midland added a run when Mark Doran walked and came around without the aid of a hit.

BUT THE game's story was Martinez, who came into the season a very iffy factor. He passed with flying colors.

"He was getting them out with his fastball in and location. He kept the ball down," Knapp described. "Then he went to his slider and breaking pitch when they began looking for the fastball. For a couple of innings he was shaky, but once he settled in he was tough."

HALO HOOPS— Midland again came up with strong defense, but Mission third baseman Dave Hansen made the play of the game in robbing Chris Cron with a full length dive toward second in the fourth....And Kirby bailed Nichting out of serious difficulties in the two-run fourth when he took Tom Alfredson's fly in center and cut down DiScarcina trying to score from third after the catch. Midland had three runs and three hits that inning, but managed just two runs.....Game No. 4 is scheduled for 7 p.m. tonight. Bring a coat....Angel outfielder Dan Grunhard went out of the game with a jammed thumb on a first inning slide into second in an attempt to break up a double play.

Faldo in-the-dark birdie wins Masters

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Nick Faldo of England won the 53rd Masters Sunday by rolling in a 25-foot birdie putt on the second hole of sudden death with Scott Hoch when it was almost impossible to see 25 feet at Augusta National Golf Club because of darkness.

Hoch failed to win the title when he missed an 18-inch par putt on the first playoff hole as this Masters ended in near impossible conditions of darkness and gathering fog after heavy rain.

IT WAS 7:40 p.m. when Faldo became the second successive British golfer to get the green jacket as Masters champion. Sandy Lyle, the Scot, won last year.

Faldo birdied two of the last three holes to cap a spectacular seven-under-par 65 and Hoch bogeyed the 17th and parred the 18th. Faldo started the final round five shots back of the third-round leader, Ben Crenshaw, with eight men ahead of him. Hoch, who shot 69, began a stroke back of Crenshaw.

Faldo, 31, who won the British Open in 1987, finished at five-under 283 and then had to wait 55 minutes as one after another of the golfers near the top faltered in their bids to tie or beat him.

Only Hoch, who lost the outright lead on the 17th, managed to survive those treacherous finishing holes to force the playoff.

HOCH, 33, a native of North Carolina now living in Orlando, Fla., took the lead by himself when he birdied the par-5 15th. But a poor drive way right at the par-4 17th was costly.

His approach from what became a blind shot sent his ball bounding way over the back of the green. He had a good chip back that almost went in the hole. But then he missed the 3-foot par putt.

Faldo holed a 30-foot birdie putt at 17 and then almost holed his approach putt at 18 so he finished with a par 4.

It appeared that Faldo would lose the playoff on the 10th hole — the first playoff hole — after he hit into a bunker and then missed a 15-foot par putt.

Hoch, who reached the green in two, got within 18 inches on his first putt. Then he lipped that second little putt out and had to regroup before stroking an even longer third putt in to halve the hole with bogey and continue the playoff.

Crenshaw, who birdied 16 and 17 to get a tie for the lead, sent his approach at 18 into the left front bunker. He failed to get up and down in two and dropped to a tie with Greg Norman for third place at 284. Norman also bogeyed 18 earlier to miss his chance at the Masters title again.

Seve Ballesteros, winner of two Masters titles, took a double-bogey 5 on the 16th when he hit his tee shot in the water. He finished fourth at 285 by that margin of two shots from the double bogey.

Mike Reid, who surprisingly held the lead at one stage of the back nine, faltered by also going into water and finished at 286 for fifth place, with Joddie Mudd at 287.

The playoff and last few holes of regulation were played under conditions of near darkness. It was also raining heavily over the last few holes before the playoff when the rain let up.

NBA okay for Olympics may be risky business

Battles

The catamaran became part of the United States' greed for an Olympic basketball Gold, in the true spirit of the Olympic Games.

NBA players will be permitted to represent the U.S. in future games.

Well, at least, it's better than steroids. Yet, somehow, for traditionalists who perhaps can still remember the original premise of the Olympics, whether or not they were any more than the figment of some the idealist's imagination, the last vestige of the amateur concept evaporated.

One thing about it, all those Olympic training camps for which donations are so avidly solicited, presumably will no longer be necessary.

Actually, allowing NBA players to play in the Games isn't all that a big a deal.

No where in the world, regardless of the millions poured into the development of Olympic class athletes by other nations, does anyone have a preparation system that can buy the high school and college programs which develop U.S. athletes, especially the basketball players.

And, really, no other country can match the high grade ore found on this nation's hardwoods, or asphalt city playgrounds.

THE GAMES long ago became the made-for-tv extravaganza, Super-Power vs. Super-Power for world supremacy, according to the Gold Standard.

The competition became so cut-throat that the slogan became "Better Athletes through Better Chemistry," although "better" might be debatable.

How far back do you go to apply asterisks to records established in the Games? It's impossible to do more than suspect when it began to get nasty. Some nations were using a hypodermic needle for that extra edge before others caught on.

To be safe, let's just qualify every record since the bamboo went out of the pole vault.

Pros in other sports already participate in the Games, so opening the door to the NBA, perhaps, was inevitable.

BUT ADDING a few more pros to the Olympics isn't the principle on which the objection is lodged.

You'll notice NHL players already participate in the Games, and how much good has it done Canada or that country's once unchallenged reputation as the class of the world in ice hockey?

It could happen to the U. S., where its world supremacy in basketball is undisputed.

The college players of this country are better than those of any other nation. Americans know that. If the team loses, the coach can always be blamed for picking the wrong players, one which didn't have the right "chemistry", as they say in the Games.

So what happens if we send a team of NBA players and they get beat? I mean, where's our "Yea, but the Russians are all pros" alibi then?

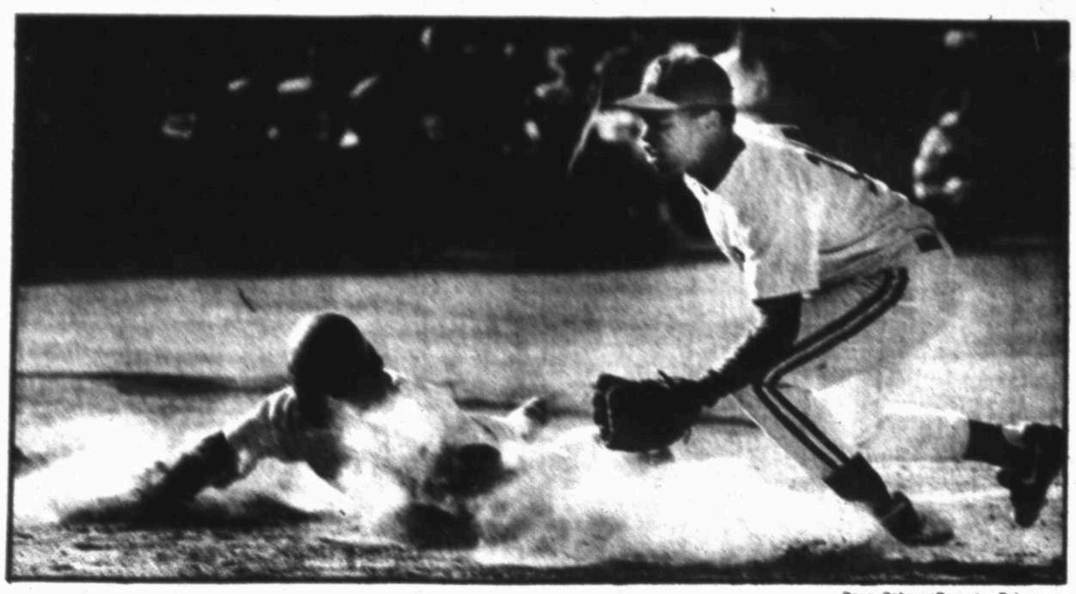
MHS backed into a corner after loss

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer



Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Lee's Ty Chambers, left, makes it 4-4 as Midland's Kevin Rychel covers plate.

If you want to learn the true meaning of backing yourself into a corner, you only have to look as far as the Midland High Bulldog baseball team.

The 'Dogs were poised atop the District 4-5A standings going into the weekend, looking at what seemed to be an almost sure showdown for first place Tuesday against the Odessa Permian Panthers.

But, along comes those fiesty ol' Midland Lee Rebels, and Whammo! No more first place showdown Tuesday with the Odessa Permian Panthers.

The Bulldogs lost to the Rebs, 5-4, Saturday, and go into Tuesday's game merely trying to play catchup again — something they have been trying to do almost all season long.

The Midland High-Permian game will begin 30 minutes later than normal — at 4:30 p.m. — as Odessa athletic director John Wilkins is anticipating heavy traffic for the game and is hoping to avoid any snarls. Meanwhile, Lee hosts the Odessa High Broncos at the normal 4 p.m. start time at Rebel Field.

Snarls may be what Wilkins was hoping to avoid. But that may be what he gets, as the Bulldog — famous for snarls even when in good moods — will surely not be wearing a smile come tip-off time in Odessa.

"(Saturday's loss) makes Tuesday's game very important," MHS head coach Tim Whalen said. "More important than if we would have won (Saturday)."

Midland High and Abilene Cooper have identical records in district play, which is not so strange. What is strange is that the Coogs and Dogs are not tied for first, but both are trying to overcome the Panthers, who have suddenly begun to hit this season.

The Panthers downed Odessa High, 7-1, Saturday and now stand proud of their 11-2 overall record and 6-1 district mark.

Despite the loss to Lee, Midland High raised its team batting average from .313 to .323; With the win, Lee lowered its team mark from .280 to .254.

Kevin Rychel (3-1), who suffered his first loss of the season against the Rebels, is expected to start for MHS.

Lee will face a downtrodden Odessa High team. The Bronchos can't find any combination that works for them, with an 0-7 district mark, 2-12 overall.

Kyle Greeley, 1-1, 2.81 ERA, should get the nod for the Rebels against the Bronchos.

With a win, Lee can even it's district mark at 4-4. Currently, the Rebels are 8-8 overall.

"This is a must win situation for us," Whalen said of the Bulldogs' meeting with the Panthers. "We have got to get ourselves back together and play."

Cards, Guerrero bury Phils, 15-3

From Wire Reports

Pedro Guerrero batted .286 last season. With runners in scoring position, he hit .371.

"I just seem to hit better in that situation. I guess I like the pressure," he said Sunday after he homered and drove in four runs to lead the St. Louis Cardinal past the Philadelphia Phillies 15-3.

Guerrero has 10 RBIs in four games. He said he couldn't recall a better start in his nine-year career.

"I guess I'm just hitting at the right time," said Guerrero, who is 5-for-17.

Jose Oquendo had three hits and drove in four runs. St. Louis batters had eight extra-base hits, including seven doubles, and 19 hits in all. Terry Pendleton and Vince Coleman also had three hits each.

Mets 2, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Kevin Elster doubled home the tie-breaking run with one out in the ninth inning and Dwight Gooden allowed three hits over eight.

Andy McGaffigan, 1-1, who had just entered the game in relief of Dennis Martinez, walked Gary Carter to open the ninth. Len Dykstra, pinch running for Carter, was sacrificed to second by Dave Magadan. Elster then scored Dykstra with a drive into center field.

Giants 9, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Matt Williams hit a grand slam for his first hit of the season, snapping an 0-for-14 slump.

Will Clark singled with two outs in the first. Kevin Mitchell hit an apparent inning-ending fly to left-center field, but outfielders Eric Davis and Kal Daniels let the ball fall between them. It bounced over the wall for a ground-rule double, with Clark stopping at third.

Candy Maldonado was walked intentionally and Kirt Manwaring walked to force in a run, bringing up Williams, who began the game 4-for-41 against the Reds.

Rick Reuschel, 2-0, allowed four hits and one run in six innings.

Cubs 8, Pirates 3

CHICAGO — Rick Sutcliffe pitched a seven-hitter and struck out 11 as Chicago completed a three-game sweep.

The game was played in a 33-degree temperature and the wind-chill made it feel as if it were eight degrees. It snowed two hours before the game and the stadium ramps had to be salted down to accommodate the crowd of 11,387.

Padres 5, Astros 4

HOUSTON — Tony Gwynn drove in two runs, including the game-winner, and Jack Clark added a two-run single.

San Diego accomplished the sixth triple play in club history and their first since July 31, 1983, in the eighth inning.

Dodgers 4, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Pinch-hitter Mickey Hatcher and Willie Randolph each hit a sacrifice fly in the 12th inning.

Twins' Viola off to rocky hill start

Associated Press

Frank Viola was 14-2 in the Metrodome last year. This season, he's 0-2.

"I thought I threw the ball good today," Viola said Sunday after the Baltimore Orioles beat the Minnesota Twins 8-1. "All in all, I have to be pleased except for five runs and a loss. I guarantee you this, this isn't the end of the season. I will be back."

Randy Milligan a three-run homer off Viola in the first and Cal Ripken broke an 0-for-14 slump with a two-run homer in the sixth for a 5-0 lead.

Viola, last year's American League Cy Young Award winner, earlier this week rejected a three-year $7.9 million contract extension, asking for $8.1 million and threatening to become a free agent after the season. He was greeted warmly when introduced before the game but was booed after allowing the home runs.

He allowed five hits, struck out seven and walked one in six innings.

Jeff Ballard pitched a seven-hitter for Baltimore in his first appearance of the season, striking out one and walking none.

"It was nice to have a 5-0 lead before they scored," Ballard said.

Baltimore ended an eight-game road losing streak dating back to a 2-0 victory over Detroit last Sept. 19 and snapped Minnesota's four-game winning streak.

Indians 4, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Tom Candiotti allowed four hits in seven innings and Pete O'Brien hit his first homer of the season as Cleveland swept its first three-game series at Yankee Stadium since May 1988.

The Yankees have lost five straight after beating Minnesota on opening day and have scored only 13 runs in six games this season.

Red Sox 8, Royals 6

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Ellis Burks tripled in three runs in six-run seventh inning and Wade Boggs had four hits as Boston won for the first time this season after four losses.

Rangers 3, Blue Jays 2

ARLINGTON, Texas — Reuben Sierra hit a two-run homer off Tom Henke with one out in the ninth inning.

Rafael Palmeiro doubled with one out off rookie Tony Castillo, who had relieved John Cerutti in the eighth. Henke, 0-1, came in and Sierra hit his 1-2 pitch into the right-field seats.

Kenny Rogers, 1-0, pitched one inning of one-hit relief in his first second major-league appearance.

Texas had taken a 2-1 lead in the seventh. Pat Borders reached on a two-out dropped third strike and snapped a 1-1 tie when Kevin Brown walked Kelly Gruber with the bases loaded.

Athletics 4, White Sox 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Stewart struck out nine and increased his April record to 8-0 and Mark McGwire drove in two runs.

Angels 13, Mariners 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Tony Armas and Dante Bichette each hit two-run homers in the first inning and the Angels scored two runs in the second and seven in the third.

The 13 runs exceeded California's total of 12 in its first five games this season.

Bichette, in addition to his first major-league homer, also had two singles in a 15-hit attack behind Mike Witt, 1-1, who allowed seven hits and struck out five.

No membership in country club for cage coach

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Athletic Director Doug Dickey says Tennessee basketball coach Wade Houston, who broke racial barriers when he was named as the school's first black head coach, will not be offered a membership in an all-white country club.

The UT athletic department has provided the $15,000 memberships to the exclusive Cherokee Country Club to Houston's predecessors, Ray Mears and Don DeVoe. Vols football coach Johnny Majors and Dickey also are members.

"Obviously, Cherokee Country Club does not have black members and that is not an option (for Houston)," Dickey said.

Dickey and Houston discussed the matter before he was hired last week, Dickey said.

"We just have memberships we retain at the athletic department and it's our decision to do what we want to do with it."

Houston said Saturday he had no intention of fighting the decision.

"It's their decision. It's their club," Houston said.

But Houston said he and his family were members of a country club in Louisville, Ky., and said there would be advantages for UT if he belonged to the club in Knoxville.

"There are tremendous advantages for a college basketball coach with a program of the magnitude of the University of Tennessee's to have a place to take high school coaches who come in and want to play golf, if you can legally do those things.

Penquins, Habs sweep

Associated Press

Pittsburgh and Montreal completed four-game sweeps Sunday night in their best-of-seven NHL playoff series. It just took the Canadiens a little longer to do it.

The Penguins beat the Rangers 4-3 at Madison Square Garden to wrap up their Patrick Division series and Montreal beat Hartford 4-3 in overtime to advance to the Adams Division finals.

Patrick Division
Penguins 4, Rangers 3

NEW YORK — Phil Bourque scored two of Pittsburgh's three first-period goals against goalie Mike Richter, making his NHL debut.

In winning their first playoff series since 1979, the Penguins advanced to the division finals against the winner of the Washington-Philadelphia series.

It was the first time the Rangers were swept in a playoff series since a 4-0 wipeout by the New York Islanders in the league semifinals in 1980-81.

Flyers 5, Capitals 2

PHILADELPHIA — Tim Kerr and Dave Poulin scored goals off crazy bounces in a four-goal second period that evened the best-of-seven Patrick Division semifinal series at two games apiece.

Adams Division
Canadiens 4, Whalers 3

HARTFORD, Conn. — Russ Courtnall scored at 15:12 of overtime to give Montreal its victory over Hartford.

Bruins 3, Sabres 2

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Cam Neely scored the winning goal for the second game in a row as Boston took a 3-1 lead in their best-of-seven Adams Division semifinal playoff series.

Neely scored his fourth goal of the series from Craig Janney at 15:32 of the second period to snap a 2-2 tie and give the Bruins a chance to take the series with a victory Tuesday night in Boston. The Bruins have won three straight after dropping the opener 6-0 and trailing 3-0 in Game 2.

Norris Division
North Stars 5, Blues 4

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — Rookie Don Barber scored his first NHL playoff goal on a breakaway with seven seconds left in regulation as Minnesota averted a first-round sweep.

The Blues had a seven-game winning streak snapped but still take a 3-1 lead back to St. Louis for the resumption of the best-of-seven series Tuesday night.

Blackhawks 3, Red Wings 2

CHICAGO — Duane Sutter slipped the puck under Detroit goalie Greg Stefan at 10:03 of the third period to put the Blackhawks within a game of upsetting the Norris Division champions.

Smythe Division
Oilers 4, Kings 3

EDMONTON, Alberta — Defenseman Steve Smith tapped in a rebound with 26 seconds left in regulation to give Edmonton a 3-1 lead in their best-of-seven Smythe Division semifinal playoff series.

MASTERS

Masters officials could have started the final round as much as an hour earlier than they did. Instead they sent golfers off so late that the final twosome of Hoch and Crenshaw finished 20 minutes later than when third-round play was halted because of darkness Saturday.

Ballesteros played the front nine in six-under 30 and needed only 10 putts doing it. But he began having trouble at 11 when he hit a drive way left into woods for the third time Sunday.

This resulted in a bogey 5 that cost him the lead. Then, when he failed to get a birdie at the par-5 13th and hit into water at the 16th, the Spaniard was eliminated. He finished at 70 for his 288.

When Ballesteros missed his birdie putt on 15, Norman made his biggest stroke to that point just a few feet away on the 16th green midway through a three-birdie stretch for the Australian. Norman rolled in a 25-foot birdie putt.

It was his second successive birdie after he had got 4 at 15 by getting up and down from the greenside bunker in two shots. Norman hit his second shot at 15 into that sand.

On the 17th hole, Norman hit his approach to 8 feet and sank the birdie putt to tie Hoch and Faldo for the lead. Moments before, Faldo had rolled in a much longer birdie putt on the 17th.

Then Norman once again failed to win a green jacket as he bogeyed the final hole. His approach barely reached the front of the green and sucked back off.

His chip was way short and he missed the 10-foot par putt so he knew, no matter who was to be the eventual winner, he would once again be an also ran in this tournament where he has finished second twice and third once in the past eight years.

Reid had taken the lead temporarily at the middle of Amen Corner when he chipped in from 40 feet and off the back of the 12th green.

But the slim Utah golfer three-putted the 14th green and hit into the water at 15, that hole where Curtis Strange and Ballesteros lost Masters titles by hitting into the water in the past.

The day started gray and early for the 14 golfers who were still on the course when the Masters officials called play because of darkness and heavy rain Saturday.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK762 ♡93 ◇854 ♣1043
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ♣	?

What action do you take?
A.—There's nothing you can do for the moment. A bid of two spades would be forcing, and could propel the auction to too high a level on a hand where you might have neither the strength nor the fit for a three-level contract. Pass.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q76 ♡Q103 ◇Q873 ♣Q52
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?
A.—In theory, with 8-9 points opposite partner's no trump opening, you should invite game by raising. However, we have remarked before that queens are overvalued in the point count, and here you have neither a long suit nor good intermediates to compensate. Pass.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ652 ♡J62 ◇72 ♣865
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—No doubt you are sorry you ever said a word, but the one thing you can't do is pass. Your only option in this awkward situation is to take a false preference to three diamonds. If partner's jump shift is based on spade support, he will show it at his next turn and you will be able to bail out at four spades.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠762 ♡Q10954 ◇AK8 ♣63
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dbl	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With the equivalent of 10 points, you should jump in your best suit when responding to a takeout double. Here, therefore, you should bid three hearts. That action is invitational, not forcing. If you bid only two hearts, re-read the chapter on responding to takeout doubles. You might have been forced to make that bid without a single point in your hand!

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8 ♡1065 ◇832 ♣AQ10943
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Dbl	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Even if you play that jumps after a takeout double are preemptive, you should bid only two clubs with this holding. Your ace-queen of clubs behind the doubler is a significant defensive asset, and a preemptive bid tends to deny that much in the way of defense. A typical hand for a jump to three clubs would be six to the K Q J and out.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡AQJ6 ◇AK85 ♣AQ102
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♠	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Don't try to guess what suit partner has. He could have no more than length in spades. The correct action is to double. Since partner has not bid, that is for takeout, but he has the right to convert to penalties if he deems that action to be correct (highly unlikely here because of your powerhouse).

'Golden Girls' celebrate show's 100th episode at black-tie gala

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was "The Golden Girls'" big night out and the now-closed Coconut Grove nightclub was returned to its one-time splendor for a black-tie gala to celebrate the popular NBC-TV comedy's 100th episode.

The show's stars, Bea Arthur, Estelle Getty, Rue McClanahan and Betty White, joined Walt Disney Studio's chief Michael Eisner, NBC President Brandon Tartikoff and several hundred staff members and associates Saturday night in toasting the Emmy award-winning program.

"It's not only a show that has the four best actresses on television, it truly is the best program in television in the last decade or two," said Eisner, whose company distributes the series.

"Thank you for this wonderful celebration. We deserve it," said Miss Getty, who plays the feisty Sophia. "It's been a wonderful four years and I look forward to four more."

Tartikoff credited the show for helping boost NBC to the top of the ratings during the last four years.

"In the fall of 1985 was when NBC went into first place, and in the fall of 1985, 'The Golden Girls' premiered — I don't think its a coincidence," Tartikoff said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Kevin Costner counts "The Big Chill" as the film that made him a better person — even if his part ended up on the cutting room floor.

In an interview in May's Vanity Fair, Costner says getting his part cut initially made him think that Hollywood would pass him by.

"But I had confidence that my career wasn't dependent on 'The Big Chill.' And I knew what a real American hero would feel: Look I'm not in the movie, I don't want to get mileage out of that. Two years from now, if I emerge, it will be an interesting story."

And emerge he did with starring or co-starring roles in "No Way Out," "The Untouchables," and last year's surprise hit, "Bull Durham."

NEW YORK (AP) — Former model Joe Lara says he always knew he had what it takes to be Tarzan.

"I just knew that inherently I had Tarzan's qualities," Lara says in this week's People magazine. "I had his ferocity, his sensitivity, I wanted to make Tarzan a special guy — a sensitive, feeling guy."

Lara, a former blue jeans model and Southern California volleyball ace, will become the 17th actor to portray the jungle hero when CBS broadcasts "Tarzan in Manhattan" on Sunday.

Lara says his desire to become the next ape man was not enough to make him do the legendary Tarzan yell for casting directors.

"I didn't want to make an ass out of myself," he said.

The movie pits Tarzan against some chimpnappers who have taken Cheetah to New York City.

LONDON (AP) — Singers Phil Collins and Eartha Kitt were among the entertainers to help raise money for British comedian Terry-Thomas, whose Parkinson's disease has left him severely in need.

Sunday's five-hour show at the 2,600-seat Theatre Royal raised more than $100,000, with about half going to Terry-Thomas, said Jack Douglas, the British actor who helped organize the sold-out event.

The rest of the proceeds will be divided between the London-based Parkinson's Disease Society and the Entertainment Artist's Benevolent Fund, Douglas said.

"Never in my history in show business has there been anything as big as this," said Douglas, who began to organize the gala three months ago.

"When I looked at Terry in his very bare apartment, his food paid for by the Entertainment Artist's Benevolent Fund, I thought, 'There but for the grace of God go any of us.' "

In addition to performances from Collins and Kitt, the audience heard tape-recorded tributes from Dudley Moore, Mickey Rooney and Lynn Redgrave.

The 77-year-old comedian, who was born Thomas Terry Hoar Stevens and is famous for his gap-toothed smile, has suffered from the degenerative disease for a decade.

He was too ill to attend and was represented by his children, Tiger and Cushan.

Terry-Thomas' 40 films include "I'm All Right, Jack," "It's A Mad Mad Mad Mad World" and "Those Magnificent Men In Their Flying Machines."

CHICAGO (AP) — Dr. Benjamin Spock, the 86-year-old patriarch of child-care advice, says parents should relax so their kids can.

"Children respond to the tensions in parents, not the tensions in society," the white-bearded physician and child psychiatrist said Saturday. "We've got to take the pressure off kids."

Spock was in Chicago to open a Field Museum of Natural History exhibition on families.

He told parents they should teach their children the spirit of cooperation.

Parents also should work toward eliminating grades in school and try to turn politicians' attention to issues like funding for day care, schools and health care, said Spock, whose book "Baby and Child Care" has sold 32 million copies since 1945 and has been translated into 31 languages.

NEW YORK (AP) — After treading lightly on the campaign trail, Tiny Tim has decided to drop his short-lived bid for mayor and back Rudolph Giuliani.

The entertainer had planned to run on the New Age Party line but decided to drop out of the race after only five weeks, the Daily News reported today.

"My campaign fizzled as flat as this beer," he told a News reporter over a few brews.

The campaign had been his manager's idea, Tim told the News, "and I just went along with it. But it never seemed to catch fire."

Giuliani, a Republican who has yet to formally announce his candidacy, "appears to be a very honest man, with good intentions," said Tim, who gained notoriety with his high-pitched voice, a ukulele, and song "Tiptoe Through the Tulips."

Tim said his endorsement for the former U.S. attorney comes without strings, such as an appointment as parks commissioner.

"Goodness, no," he said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Rock guitar whiz Charlie Sexton says he is surprised fans and the media see him as a sex symbol.

At age 20, Sexton has a hit video with the single "Don't Look Back" and has played for such luminaries as The Clash, Keith Richards, Ron Wood, Don Henley and Bob Dylan.

The plain-spoken Texan says he was surprised that such publications as "The Los Angeles Times" and "Creem" have proclaimed him the next big sex symbol in rock.

"I really don't pay much attention to all that. I was a bit surprised by it all. I always thought I looked ordinary to tell you the truth," he said in a recent interview with The (Nashville) Tennessean.

Gas prices take unprecedented leap

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices jumped more than 10 cents in the wake of the nation's worst oil spill, an analyst said.

"It can be said it was the quickest as well as the greatest wholesale price hike in the history of the U.S. gasoline market," said Trilby Lundberg, who surveys prices at 17,000 U.S. gasoline stations.

"Without factoring in inflation, this also was the fastest and greatest rise for retail."

She did not say what the greatest price hike was.

For the 22 days that ended Friday, the average retail price of a gallon of gasoline rose to $1.1063, up from $1.0037, Ms. Lundberg said Sunday.

The hike in wholesale prices was a tenth of a cent greater than the retail increase.

The average price includes all taxes, grades of gasoline and self-service and full-service pump prices.

The price surge followed the brief shutoff of crude oil shipments after the crash of an Exxon tanker in Alaska's Prince William Sound. The ensuing spill temporarily closed the Port of Valdez. It has since reopened, and Lundberg said prices already were beginning to fall by Sunday.

However, some distributors who sell to retailers accused independent refineries of taking advantage of the spill, which briefly cut off 40 percent of California's crude supply, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday.

"When the news got out, the refiners were all of a sudden saying they're out of gasoline," said Bill Wright, owner of Wright Oil Co. of Santee. "They raised prices as high as they could to stop the demand for their gasoline, because every gallon they sold that day was a gallon they wouldn't be able to sell the next week for a lot more money."

Lundberg said the refineries' price rises were justified.

"It was a price response ... stemming from actual cutbacks in crude oil and refined product, and a preventive mechanism by which the refiners did not want to run out," she said.

She said refiners faced a dilemma during the past three weeks.

"You have your choice of supplying to whoever comes quick and takes all you've got," she said. "Or you raise your price and make sure all your accounts get some, and you don't have panic buying among accounts and consumers. The refiners, at large, chose that tactic."

While no data have been gathered, Lundberg said recent informal reports indicated that "prices are already slipping back, both for wholesale and on the street."

Lundberg also cautioned that prices had been rising before the March 24 spill.

The Lundberg Survey prices for April 7 were issued three weeks after its last report.

The prices for self-service gasoline stations, which now make up 80 percent of the domestic market, were: regular unleaded $1.0096, up from 90.09 cents; premium unleaded, $1.1580, up from $1.0624; regular leaded, $1.0056, up from 87.72 cents.

Full service: regular unleaded for $1.268, up from $1.1872; premium unleaded for $1.3807 cents, up from $1.3008, and $1.2422 for regular leaded, up from $1.1513.

Oil prices continue Friday's rally

From Staff and Wire Reports

Friday's rally in oil prices continued, with contracts for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate gaining 16 cents to stand at $20.18 at midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

At the same time, local buyers who had dropped their posted prices to $18.75 raised them 25 cents to $19 per barrel.

Prices had risen in light trading Friday in what analysts called a technical recovery from a decline in the previous session. WTI rose 22 cents to end the week at $20.02.

Refined products traded on the exchange also rose. Unleaded gasoline for May delivery closed .40 cent higher at 64.95 cents a gallon and May heating oil settled up .38 cent at 51.60 cents. Other contract months mostly were higher.

Energy brokers attributed Friday's gains mostly to technical factors, but said the market got a lift from news that Exxon Corp. and British Petroleum Inc. would not curtail crude shipments to the West Coast because of the oil spill off the Alaskan coast.

In addition, British Petroleum announced the shutdown of an oil platform in the North Sea for repairs.

"That takes production out of the market and impacts prices," said Richard Kane, energy broker with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Crude prices also continue to gain strength from investor confidence that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is serious about reducing production.

The International Energy Agency in its monthly oil market report on Friday estimated OPEC production for March at 19.6 million barrels a day, 200,000 barrels less than in February. The cartel has cut its production by about 3 million barrels since last December in an effort to strengthen world oil prices.

Dollar stable in quiet session

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was stable in quiet European trading late this morning and foreign currency dealers said most attention had shifted to cross-trading activity. Gold prices were little changed.

Traders said that following Friday's mixed U.S. unemployment report for March, the dollar was left stuck in its recent trading range.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.45 yen to a closing 132.53. Later, in London, it was quoted at 132.70 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

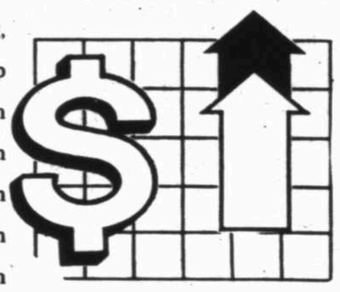
—1.6545 Swiss francs, up from 1.6500

—6.3385 French francs, up from 6.3340

—2.1171 Dutch guilders, up from 2.1110

—1,377.20 Italian lire, up from 1,373.50

—1.1910 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1928



In London, one British pound cost $1.6943, slightly cheaper for buyers than late Friday's $1.6975.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $382.50 a troy ounce, up from $381.75 bid late Friday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $381.60.

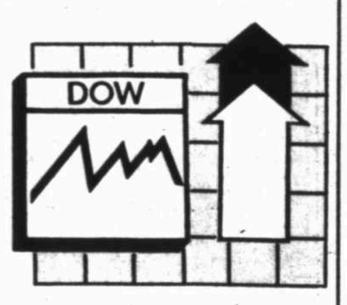
Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.75 a troy ounce, little changed from Friday's $5.76.

Stocks end week with gain

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a mild rally Friday following what analysts described as an ambiguous report on employment.

Technology issues led the advance in a session of moderate activity.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 12.83 to 2,304.80, closing out the week with a net gain of 11.18 points.



Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 8 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 881 up, 546 down and 525 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 156.95 million shares, against 146.53 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 184.23 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $15.68 billion, or 0.54 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks added .91 to 166.93.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose 2.41 to 342.30, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 1.87 at 297.16.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market gained 2.51 to 410.71. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 330.59, up .51.

Texas urged to improve spill plans

AUSTIN (AP) — Several state agencies still claim responsibility in the event of a major oil spill, even though proposals were made four years ago to consolidate the function, Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said.

The two biggest spills of the past 10 years, the 1979 Ixtoc well blowout and a 1984 spill by the tanker Alvenus, convinced many Texans the state needs a well-planned and well-coordinated response effort, said Mauro.

"I would hope that with the problems we've seen with the Valdez, we'd put these things on the front burner," Mauro said of the recent spill from the Exxon Valdez tanker that fouled the Alaskan coastline.

"The only problem now is before the state can intervene, they have to get permission from the feds. We've seen what's happened in Alaska, everybody waiting for someone else to begin the work," he said.

Ueberroth, unions make deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unions at Eastern Airlines and a management group headed by former baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth have reached tentative agreements that would remove a major obstacle to the sale of the strikebound carrier, a labor source said today.

The source, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said a formal announcement would be made later today before a bankruptcy judge in New York.

Ueberroth and his group have been seeking more than $200 million in concessions from three unions and Eastern's non-contract employees, but there was no immediate word on what, if any, givebacks were contained in the tentative accords.

The source declined to discuss the agreements further.

The tentative agreement followed a weekend of secret talks in Washington between the unions and representatives of Ueberroth, who last week reached agreement to buy Eastern from Texas Air Corp. for $464 million. Ueberroth could have called off the deal if agreements were not reached with the unions by midnight Tuesday.

The unions involved are the International Association of Machinists, the Air Line Pilots Association and the Transport Workers Union.

The IAM struck Eastern on March 4 after refusing to accept more than $120 million in wage and other concessions demanded by Texas Air, Eastern's parent company. The other unions have accepted concessions in the past, but honored IAM's picket lines.

The weekend talks were held under the guidance of attorney David Shapiro, who is serving as court-appointed examiner of the airline under an order issued by the federal bankruptcy court in New York.

While union officials said they believed they could come to terms with the Ueberroth group, they expressed concerns about its plans for the carrier.

Union officials also questioned statements by Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo that Eastern could be operating within 24 hours of completion of the sale to Ueberroth.

Eastern has been flying a skeleton schedule since the International Association of Machinists struck the airline March 4, with pilots and flight attendants honoring IAM pickets.

Officials from two of the unions, noting that the majority of Eastern's planes have been grounded for more than a month, said it would take some time to inspect them.

They also said it would be foolish and costly to restore a full schedule immediately because Eastern, already carrying a heavy debt, would have few passengers in the days immediately following resumption of service.

In a related matter, Texas Air said it filed suit Friday against Trans World Airlines Inc., charging that the rival carrier and its owner, takeover expert Carl Icahn, had interfered illegally in the talks between Ueberroth and the unions.

TWA and Icahn responded in a statement Sunday that the suit was "frivolous."

"The contacts I had with Eastern unions were initiated by their request that I become involved," Icahn said. "I did not realize that I needed permission from (Texas Air Chairman) Frank Lorenzo to take phone calls from people I consider my friends."

Icahn also said he did not make any competing offer to the unions or a creditors committee, which must approve any sale of the airline, and that he would not do so unless Ueberroth's offer falls through.

Credit analysts don't expect rate declines

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Despite a growing conviction that the pace of economic growth is slowing, credit market analysts see little reason to expect interest rates to fall anytime soon.

Indeed, most say that further increases in the current quarter appear likely.

Current conditions are different from last August, when a spate of soft data led some analysts to the erroneous conclusion that the economy was losing steam.

Since last summer the Federal Reserve Board has maintained a restrictive monetary policy that has held money supply growth in check and has pushed up short-term interest rates by three percentage points.

And the economy's current expansion, already the longest since World War II, is now well over six years old.

The first signs of softness appeared in the February statistics, which were largely discounted by economists because of harsh weather. But weakness in automobile sales, housing and other important areas continued in March, raising a few eyebrows.

"I think this will continue," said David Wyss, chief financial economist at Data Resources Inc., the economic consulting and forecasting firm.

"The slowdown looks a lot more pervasive now than it did then. The Fed has been trying to slow the economy for the last year, and we are finally getting some evidence that it is occurring."

Although the credit markets' reaction to last Friday's employment data was cautious, the March report contained additional signs that the economy is moderating.

Aside from a rise of 180,000 in payroll employment — a lower figure than credit market analysts had anticipated — a number of economists were impressed that the average workweek at the nation's factories declined slightly last month.

"We have confirming evidence that the industrial sector is continuing to slow," said Donald J. Fine, chief market analyst at the Chase Manhattan Bank.

Product announcements set for computer show

New York Times News Service

Sun Microsystems Inc. this week will introduce several work stations, including a long-awaited machine that will sell for less than $10,000 and will pose a challenge not only to other work station companies but to some manufacturers of expensive personal computers.

The Sun announcement will highlight a week of product announcements, some of them tied to the Comdex personal computer trade show that starts in Chicago on Monday.

The Intel Corp. on Monday will introduce its 80486 microprocessor, the most advanced member of the family of microprocessors used in IBM-compatible personal computers. The Digital Equipment Corp. will announce major revisions and upgrades for its VAX family of minicomputers.

Sun, based in Mountain View, Calif., is expected on Wednesday to introduce two new work stations using the Sparc microprocessor, a chip it designed based on the principles of reduced instruction set computing, or RISC, which allows for great increases in computer speed. Analysts say the least expensive of the machines, known as the Sparcstation, might sell for as little as $7,000 without a disk drive. The machine is expected to offer speeds of almost 13 million instructions per second.

"It is going to be Sun making it extremely clear they are the price-performance leader in work stations," said Robert G. Herwick, an analyst with Hambrecht & Quist.

Sun will also introduce its first two machines based on the Motorola Inc. 68030 microprocessor, the most advanced model in Motorola's 68000 family. One of those machines is expected to sell for as little as $6,000 but will be less powerful than the Sparcstation.

The low-priced Sun work stations are said to be strikingly small, with all of their computer circuitry in an enclosure that will fit inside a briefcase. The computers will also have significantly improved graphics and sound capabilities. The Sparc-based computer is composed of fewer than 50 chips, according to one Sun executive, far fewer than most machines of this class.

With the new machines, Sun is establishing a presence in the market for machines selling for $5,000 to $10,000. That price range is becoming a collision point for makers of personal computers and low-end work stations, which have traditionally been more expensive and used for engineering tasks.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Western unit moving to The Woodlands

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — The Western Company of North America plans to move the research and development department of its petroleum services division to a new 25,000-square-foot facility in The Woodlands Research Forest, officials said.

Fort Worth-based Western, which reorganized under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code, will employ about 20 employees at the site, where a number of research buildings have been built in the last three years.

SPR site in Northeast contemplated

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Energy Department says expanding the nation's strategic petroleum reserve might involve building a major storage plant close to refining centers in northern New Jersey or southeastern Pennsylvania.

The department said in a statement Friday summarizing a report requested by Congress that its "preferred choice" would be to build any additional plants along the Gulf Coast, where 565 million barrels of crude oil were placed in salt caverns in the mid-1970s.

But the department said its study found that if a decision was made to expand the reserve beyond the 750 million barrels currently approved and if it was thought desirable to store oil in another region, the Northeast would be a likely site because it receives large amounts of imported oil.

Gulf & Western changing name

NEW YORK (AP) — Gulf & Western Inc. said it would sell its financial services operations and change its name as it launches a plan to concentrate on the entertainment and publishing industries, where it already has a strong presence.

The company, the parent of Paramount Pictures, said Sunday it would change its name to Paramount Communications Inc. after selling The Associates, its consumer and commercial financial unit. No target price was disclosed.

Like Lorenzo, Ueberroth has high profile

NEW YORK (AP) — Peter V. Ueberroth brings to Eastern Airlines a reputation as a no-nonsense manager and financial wizard responsible for turning around ailing enterprises and honing his public image in the process.

That track record explains why the 1984 Olympics organizer and former baseball commissioner agreed Thursday to buy a seemingly hopeless airline beset by years of labor strife and $3.2 billion in debt.

"It's certainly going to rank up there in attractiveness in Peter's goals and aspirations, which is to take on a challenge," said Barry Rona, who heads the negotiating team for baseball's owners. "You can count on one thing, Peter will make money for everyone."

Eastern's last profitable quarter was in 1985during an industrywide boom. Eastern since then has been hampered by labor problems, its tarnished image and a corporate streamlining, analysts said.

"We are not miracle workers at all in any way, shape or form," Ueberroth, 51, said at a news conference announcing the $464 million deal. "I think most people will bet against us."

Ueberroth, who stepped down as baseball commissioner Saturday, was vice president of Trans International Airlines for two years before he founded a travel agency in Southern California in 1963, First Travel Corp.

Peter Ueberroth, shown talking with Frank Lorenzo, brings a no-nonsense reputation to Eastern Airlines

Ueberroth and his brother sold First Travel in 1979 to Carlson Cos. of Minneapolis for $10.1 million. John Ueberroth ran it as president of Carlson Travel Group, building it into the largest travel agency operation in North America with $3.2 billion a year in revenue.

Ueberroth generated $230 million in profit as organizer of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics and turned baseball's fortunes around from a $67 million loss in 1983 to $100 million profit in 1988.

During his term as commissioner, Ueberroth was the darling of most of baseball's 26 owners, but less liked by players' union officials, who claim he took credit for reviving the national pastime where it wasn't necessarily due.

"He's an eyeball-to-eyeball guy. Everybody respected him, considered him to be a great leader, thought of him as being intelligent," said Avron Fogelman, co-owner of the Kansas City Royals. "He was a step ahead of us all.

"And he did it very simply and did it without a lot of adjectives. He used the most direct approach in dealing with baseball owners as imaginable."

Marvin Miller, who served as executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association for 17 years, accused Ueberroth of flipping sides during 1984-85 in collective bargaining negotiations — a sign of his take-credit style.

"It's a public relations technique that says 'When I started in this job things were terrible,'" Miller said. "Whether or not that's true, you just say so. Then after a short while you say everybody's making money. You don't have to add, 'I turned it around.'"

ANALYSTS

"But no one that I know thinks the economy is growing at a rate of less than 2 percent, and most are like me, who view growth at between 2½ percent and 3 percent. That sort of growth will keep inflation high."

The likelihood that inflation will continue to rise over at least the next few months is the major reason analysts see little chance of falling interest rates.

"There may be some moderation of growth, but a much, much more dramatic slowdown will be necessary to cool inflation," said Norman Robertson, chief economist at the Mellon Bank in Pittsburgh.

"I think inflation is running at a 6 percent to 6.5 percent rate and that the Fed may be forced to tighten another notch, although possibly not for another month or more."

The chances that the Fed might tighten even earlier would increase strikingly if upcoming reports on inflation, starting with Friday's release of March producer price data, continue to show big increases.

Analysts contend that a third straight 1 percent increase in the producer price index is highly unlikely, and most are forecasting a rise of one-half of a percent.

Fine and others suggest, however, that relief over a lower producer price number will be replaced with fear when the consumer price figures are released April 18.

He said that consumer prices probably rose by six-tenths of a point in March, largely because of higher gasoline and food prices.

"The Fed might like the producer price number, but they won't like the consumer price figures," Fine predicted.

Concern about the producer price figures is likely to keep interest rates in a narrow trading range for much of this week. On Friday, the Treasury's 8⅞ percent bonds that mature in 2019 were offered at a price to yield just under 9.11 percent.

Meanwhile, three-month Treasury bills, which moved sharply lower early in the week only to rise again later on, were offered on a bond-equivalent basis at 9.11 percent.

A new unpublished paper by professors at the Harvard Business School shows that default rates on "junk bonds" are far higher than previous studies have shown.

In the paper, Professor Paul Asquith and two colleagues — David W. Mullins Jr., who is at the Treasury Department and on leave from his professorship at Harvard Business School, and Eric D. Wolff, who worked on the study while a student at Harvard and is now at the Department of Justice — analyzed the performance of 741 high-yield bonds issued between Jan. 1, 1977, and Dec. 31, 1986.

The new study looked at the performance of the bonds over a longer time period than previous studies had examined. Based on the data, the authors conclude that the longer that high-yield issues are held, the riskier they become.

"A buy-and-hold investor who purchased a portfolio of all high-yield bonds issued in 1977 and 1978 would, by Nov. 1, 1988, experience a default rate of more than 34 percent," the study said.

That rate is cumulative. Of the bonds issued in the years 1979 through 1983, 19 to 26 percent had defaulted by Nov. 1, 1988. And default rates for bonds issued between 1984 and 1986 ranged from 4 to 9 percent.

Earlier studies conducted for Morgan Stanley & Co. and others, by contrast, showed an average default rate of 1.5 percent a year on bonds issued between 1978 and 1986.

"The illusion of low default rates can be sustained only as long as explosive growth in new issues continues," the authors of the new study wrote.

"Once growth slows, as it inevitably must, the overall market will no longer be dominated by recently issued bonds with lower default rates. Instead, as the overall high-yield bond market ages and the average age of outstanding bonds increases, the true higher default rates will become visible."

PLANS

"In White's committee recommendations was that the responsibility and the authority be given to one person or group to make absolutely certain the proper action will be taken in the appropriate time," Mauro said.

Not enough oil cleanup equipment is available in the state, said Coast Guard Capt. Robert W. Mason, who runs the Marine Safety office in Galveston.

"The State of Texas personnel is well-prepared and qualified to handle an oil spill cleanup," he said.

"However, Texas, like the federal government, is in a very tight fiscal situation and must depend on individual oil companies to provide the necessary cleanup equipment."

The Exxon Valdez has spilled more than 10 million gallons of oil.

"There's enough equipment available for the maximum spill that we plan for (60,000 gallons), but if we had a complete vessel dump its load in the water we'd be in the same situation as in Alaska, and you'd have to ask for equipment from other parts of the Gulf and East Coast," the captain said.

"Our advantage in that situation is travel distance, travel time and the weather are in our favor."

Joint "spill drills" between federal officials and their state counterparts have not taken place, despite recommendations of White's committee after the 1984 tanker spill in Louisiana waters blackened Galveston beaches. State officials say they don't have the money.

Marine officials say Texas law does not require a harbor pilot to guide a foreign ship into a state port, which invites disaster.

Texas law does not require oil companies to provide oil spill contingency plans, nor does it require them to have safety equipment on hand. State officials say they don't have the money to hire the staff to review cleanup plans even if they were required.

Coast Guard cleanup funds have been seriously depleted and Congress has not replaced the money, officials said.

SUN

Still, Sun is being cautious in its move toward the personal computer arena. Sun has pulled back from plans to go charging into retail distribution. And while some analysts had been expecting Sun machines for less than $5,000, those are not likely to arrive for another year.

Some analysts say the real significance of the Sun announcements, even of the low-end machines, will be to combat other work station vendors, like Digital Equipment, which recently announced machines based on a RISC chip designed by MIPS Computer Systems, as well as the Hewlett-Packard Co. and the International Business Machines Corp., which is expected to revamp its work station line shortly.

Intel's new 80486 microprocessor is expected to operate at least twice as fast as the 80386 chip now used in advanced personal computers. The chip will contain more than 1 million transistors, more than three times as many as on the 386. That will allow the 486 to include a processor for high-speed arithmetic as well as a cache memory.

Also on Monday, Tektronix Inc., based in Wilsonville, Ore., will introduce a family of graphics work stations based on Motorola's 88000 RISC chip. Prices will range from $25,000 to $35,000.

Separately, Digital Equipment will announce four models designed to strengthen the low end of its VAX computer line, several industry sources said.

Carmakers more cautious with loans

By MIREYA NAVARRO
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — U.S. carmakers are screening auto loan applicants more carefully and steering them toward shorter-term debt as they try to spur lagging sales with the lowest interest rates offered since 1987.

What that means for buyers is a potpourri of attractive financing options, not all of them the bargains they seem to be. And people at the bottom of the credit ladder may have a harder time borrowing money this time around.

Chrysler Corp. last week announced interest-free financing on two-year loans for new cars and some trucks. Both Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. are already offering new car buyers 2.9 percent financing for the same type of loan.

The three companies also lowered rates for three-year loans to 5.9 percent, and to 6.9 percent for four years, significantly less than what banks and credits unions charge. As an alternative to the low-cost financing, the carmakers are offering cash rebates of $300 to $4,000.

But the latest round of incentives — aimed at reducing inventory as 1989 sales fall 12 percent behind last year's pace — comes as some manufacturers report a higher rate of loan defaults and repossessions. The problem is blamed in part on incentive programs within the last three years that relaxed credit requirements for young and first-time car buyers.

GM officials downplay the 23 percent increase in the number of vehicles the company repossessed last year, saying the current 2 percent repo rate is satisfactory and not unlike that experienced by the company a decade ago.

However, John Andrews, a spokesman for GM, says the company is encouraging larger downpayments and "we're looking at (applicants) more closely than we had."

So is Ford, whose 1988 profit fell 17 percent from the previous year partly because of a higher number of repossessions. Don Cook, executive vice president of Ford Motor Credit Co., Ford's financing operation, says the company has hired more personnel to crack down on loan delinquencies and now takes "a little bit more time with the applicant to check them out a little bit more." The result, he says, may "require some people to come up with a bigger downpayment or go to a lower-priced car," he says.

Manufacturers are also trying to attract better credit risks by tying their lowest-cost financing to shorter-term loans. Ford and GM offer interest rates of 9.9 percent on five-year loans; Chrysler 10.9 percent. All three have four-year loans at 6.9 percent, and three year-loans at 5.9 percent.

Even at Chrysler's zero interest for a two-year loan, a buyer financing $12,000 would have to pay a hefty $500 a month for the car. The person who benefits the most, industry sources say, is the person who would have paid cash for the car to avoid finance charges but now can pay in installments and earn interest by putting that money away.

Carmakers attribute the slump in sales to rising interest rates and consumer concern over the economy, but some acknowledge that the longer-term loans may be affecting the market. The average term of a new car loan was 56.2 months in 1988. The average price of a new car was $14,410.

Most car buyers — 42 percent — get five-year financing. Another 30 percent spread payments over four years. Some lenders offer up to 10 years of financing.

"That's probably causing some problems in the business in general," says Cook. "A person owes 2½ more years on a car, takes that car to a dealership and finds out it's worth less money than he or she owes on it, so they might say I'll just enjoy this car for another year and get to the point where they break even."

Some buyers never get to that point, however. Brian Martinez, 25, of Fremont, Calif., says he can no longer afford the $200 payments on his 1987 Nissan pickup truck and is threatened with repossession. He owes $8,000 and is two months behind in payments.

"What would happen is that they'd (the lender) sell it for the low bluebook value, $4,500 to $6,500 and they're going to leave me paying up the rest," he says. "I'm trying to scrape as much as I can just to keep it and then sell it."

Ron Tonkin, head of the 20,000-member National Automobile Dealers Association, says the automakers' incentives are "phony," confuse customers and should be eliminated.

Tonkin charges that the cost of cash rebates and super-low interest rates is built into car prices. Both manufacturers and dealers would do better, he says, if prices came down permanently because "lower prices would be attractive to more people."

"Someone should have the guts to lower prices substantially," he says. "The price of cars in America is way too high."

Milken pleads innocent to charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Milken, former head of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.'s high-yield junk bond department, pleaded innocent to a wide-ranging federal indictment that charged him with turning the investment banking house into a racketeering enterprise.

The Grandfather Election
Avoiding the 15% Penalty Tax on Large Qualified Plans
The IRS, with the help of Congress, has determined that future pension plans cannot be used to provide above average retirement benefits and has imposed a 15% penalty tax on large qualified plans.
In an effort to protect those nearing retirement, Congress is offering a grandfather election to individuals with existing plans. Taking advantage of this grandfather election puts your pension under a different set of tax rules that can potentially reduce (or increase) your penalty tax.
This seminar is designed to help you analyze the impact of this penalty tax and the grandfather election alternative. Solutions will be presented to avoid the 5% estate tax as well as the 28% income tax and 55% estate tax that can apply to your retirement assets.

Bank seizures disturb investors

New York Times News Service

> "It's a radical departure from the past. It (taking over technically solvent institutions) has very serious implications. At what point does the Federal Home Loan Bank Board step in and take your company away?"
> Lewis Ranieri, partner in newly acquired insolvent Houston savings association.

Federal banking and savings regulators are increasingly finding themselves in a bind.

To reduce the drain on the federal insurance funds, they are moving more aggressively to seize ailing banks and savings institutions before all of their units become insolvent.

But that tactic may discourage investors from buying the stock and bonds of weak institutions, inadvertently hastening their demise.

And it may also make it harder for the troubled industry to attract new financial backing — a central tenet of the Bush administration's rescue plan.

Three recent examples that have disturbed investors involve the First Republicbank Corp. and MCorp, both bank holding companies in Dallas, and the two savings and loan subsidiaries of the Gibraltar Financial Corp. of Beverly Hills, Calif.

Although the specifics of these cases differ, the underlying issue of investors' rights is the same.

"At what point does the regulators' desire to save their insurance fund money conflict with the interest of general creditors?" asked Jay H. Lustig, a bond specialist at Drake Capital Securities in Santa Monica, Calif. Clients of Drake held bonds from all three institutions.

Regulators have usually waited until an institution exhausted all its financial resources before taking it over.

This approach reflected conventional wisdom about the extent of regulators' legal authority and the fact that the insurance funds often lacked the resources to deal with the losses of ailing institutions.

In most cases, a federal takeover means that the investments of stockholders and bondholders are wiped out.

Gradually, however, as Congress and the administration recognized the magnitude of the losses in the financial industry and the resultant drain on the taxpayer, regulators have come under increasing pressure to take over weak institutions at the earliest possible opportunity, even if parts of those organizations are still technically solvent.

"It's a radical departure from the past," said Lewis S. Ranieri, whose investment partnership recently acquired an insolvent savings and loan association in Houston.

"It has very serious implications. At what point does the Federal Home Loan Bank Board step in and take your company away?" Nonetheless, Ranieri thinks the regulators' moves are necessary.

The first indication that investors and regulators were on a collision course came last summer, when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. used some intricate legal maneuvers to declare First Republicbank insolvent, even though several of its subsidiaries still had some net worth.

The move produced an outcry from bondholders, some of whom have taken the FDIC to court contending that the regulators exceeded their authority by depriving the bondholders of a claim on the institution's remaining healthy assets.

"The F.D.I.C., when allowed to proceed unsupervised, will take whatever liberties necessary to benefit their own interests," said Dory Auerbach, a First Republic bondholder.

Then last week, three bondholders of MCorp, anticipating that their securities would become worthless if the regulators pursued a forced sale of the company, made a pre-emptive strike.

They filed to put Mcorp under Chapter 7 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code, with the intention of forcing a liquidiation.

Their hope was that they would be able to stake a claim on MCorp's healthy assets.

MCorp countered by filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, which allows for a voluntary liquidation. The regulators then moved to declare 20 of MCorp's 25 units insolvent and take them over.

Last week's episode with Gibraltar is the starkest case yet. There the regulators seized two institutions that had more than $500 million of regulatory capital left.

The institutions' solvency was more a reflection of byzantine accounting practices than actual net worth, but several investors are nevertheless complaining that the government illegally seized private property on which they had a claim and from which they had hoped to continue receiving interest payments.

The aim of early intervention, as the regulators call it, is to make sure that whatever financial resources remain are liquidated or sold in an orderly fashion.

Such moves are thought likely to limit the drain on the industry's insurance fund, which is used to pay off depositors, and ultimately reduce the amount of taxpayer money needed for bailouts.

Early intervention is also supposed to send a signal to investors that they can no longer buy securities of weak institutions without fear of losing money.

Until recently, regulators often allowed ailing institutions to survive indefinitely, because they lacked the money to shut them down and pay off depositors.

Holders of stock and bonds could hang on to the hope that they would get at least some of their money back if the institution's prospects improved.

Regulators hope that their tough new stance will cause investors to take a closer look at the institutions they invest in.

Thus, the market would exert more discipline on the managers of financial institutions.

If this happens too quickly or on too large a scale, however, the short-term effects could be troublesome.

If investors believe that regulators are likely to move in before insolvency, the investors might decide to sell holdings in other weak financial institutions. That would hasten the demise of those institutions.

If a large bondholder sells and "others start to follow, there could be a potential domino effect," said H. Rodgin Cohen, a New York lawyer specializing in banking at Sullivan & Cromwell.

That would make it especially difficult for weak institutions to raise money in the bond market, he added.

That is the whole point, some people in the securities industry say. "This should have the salubrious effect of forcing people who buy these securities to analyze the credit quality of institutions," said Gerard L. Smith, a managing director in the financial institutions group of Salomon Brothers.

David H. Ellison, an analyst and portfolio manager at Fidelity Investments, said: "The rules are changing in favor of the taxpayer and in favor of healthy thrifts with strong capital positions. That's a positive thing."

Some industry analysts doubt that the repercussions of the regulators' actions will be severe.

They say that the type of investor who puts money in the stock or bonds of these institutions almost certainly knows that the investments are highly risky.

They contend that the large mainstream investors, who could cause some financial turmoil if they all decided to pull out of a certain market, are not the ones holding these bonds.

"Any educated observer could have seen this coming," Ellison said. "If they were in there, it was because they were trying to make a quick buck off a speculative investment. They should have known it was junk."

Not everyone agrees. Some people point out that in the case of First Republic some bonds carried a single-A rating when they were issued in 1987 and were bought not by speculative investors but by insurance companies and individuals.

In any event, bond analysts contend that the regulators, by taking such a tough stance in these cases, risk alienating precisely that pool of investors that represents the best hope of providing fresh money to the industry.

"Bush says he wants to shore up the capital of the industry," Lustig said. "Yet the very people they are slapping in the face are the same ones they want to come up with more money."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Any economy must deal with either unemployment or inflation

By BILL DOYLE

Q. The general impression I have is that every time factory orders, industrial production and other economic indicators pick up unemployment decreases — but does not come close to zero.

The speedup in the economy then raises concern about inflation and the Federal Reserve causes interest rates to rise — slowing the economy. That increases unemployment or, at least, prevents the complete elimination of unemployment.

Does this mean we will always have to choose between inflation and unemployment?

Doyle

A. In a perfect economic scenario, the choice would be "neither of the above," even though some far-out economists contend that a little inflation is a good thing. In actuality, inflation hurts everyone — workers, retirees, savers, investors, corporations and government.

Because we do not now and never have lived in perfect times, we have always had either inflation or unemployment. No one has ever come up with a sure formula for eliminating both. If you were Pete Rose's bookmaker, you could safely lay long odds that one or the other — usually some of each — will remain with us.

The Labor Department's Consumer Price Index rose 0.4 percent in February, when the civilian unemployment rate was 5.1 percent. That CPI inflation measurement is counted as moderate. Some observers call a 5.1 percent jobless rate effectively "full employment," because some people are always out of work. Truth to tell, it's impossible to define full employment.

Through monetary policy, the Federal Reserve tries to fine-tune the nation's economy. The result has been varying degrees of inflation and unemployment. Lately, the Fed has been tightening the credit screws, in an attempt to keep inflation in check.

Q. How does the Federal Reserve influence interest rates in the marketplace?

A. By making it more expensive or less expensive for banks to make loans. The Fed has three basic tools at its disposal.

First, it can raise or lower the "discount rate" — the interest charged banks and thrift institutions for borrowing from district Federal Reserve banks.

Second, it can raise or lower "reserve requirements" — the percentage of deposits each bank and thrift must set aside, either as cash in its own vault or in an account at its district Federal Reserve bank.

Third and most important, through "open market operations" — the purchase and sale of U.S. Treasury securities in the marketplace. When the Fed buys Treasury securities from banks, the banks have more money to lend. When the bank sells Treasuries to banks, the banks have less money available.

Q. Where did you go to school? How could you write that the Federal Reserve Board "is a federal government agency — no ifs, ands or buts?"

The Federal Reserve Bank has always been a privately owned bank since its creation (by act of Congress) in 1913. The only "control" that government exercises over the Fed is that the President "gets to appoint" the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Big deal! The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in U.S. vs. Davis (1984) made it clear that the Federal Reserve Bank is a private corporation.

A. Taking your questions in order, I was graduated from Fairleigh Dickinson College (before it became a university) in 1950; I wrote that line you quote because it is true.

Along with some other folks who have a hang-up on this subject, you have confused the Federal Reserve Board with the 12 district Federal Reserve Banks.

The court ruling you cite said the 12 district banks are "independent, privately owned and locally controlled corporations" and therefore cannot be sued under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Federal Reserve Board is a federal government agency, when the District of Columbia tried to levy real estate taxes on the board's property.

All seven members of the Federal Reserve Board are appointed by the president and confirmed by the U.S. Senate. In the column you gripe about, I called the 12 district banks "quasi-private." Each has a nine-member board of directors — three of whom are appointed by the Federal Reserve Board.

Bank seizures disturb investors

New York Times News Service

> "It's a radical departure from the past. It (taking over technically solvent institutions) has very serious implications. At what point does the Federal Home Loan Bank Board step in and take your company away?"
> Lewis Ranieri, partner in newly acquired insolvent Houston savings association.

Federal banking and savings regulators are increasingly finding themselves in a bind.

To reduce the drain on the federal insurance funds, they are moving more aggressively to seize ailing banks and savings institutions before all of their units become insolvent.

But that tactic may discourage investors from buying the stock and bonds of weak institutions, inadvertently hastening their demise.

And it may also make it harder for the troubled industry to attract new financial backing — a central tenet of the Bush administration's rescue plan.

Three recent examples that have disturbed investors involve the First Republicbank Corp. and MCorp, both bank holding companies in Dallas, and the two savings and loan subsidiaries of the Gibraltar Financial Corp. of Beverly Hills, Calif.

Although the specifics of these cases differ, the underlying issue of investors' rights is the same.

"At what point does the regulators' desire to save their insurance fund money conflict with the interest of general creditors?" asked Jay H. Lustig, a bond specialist at Drake Capital Securities in Santa Monica, Calif. Clients of Drake held bonds from all three institutions.

Regulators have usually waited until an institution exhausted all its financial resources before taking it over.

This approach reflected conventional wisdom about the extent of regulators' legal authority and the fact that the insurance funds often lacked the resources to deal with the losses of ailing institutions.

In most cases, a federal takeover means that the investments of stockholders and bondholders are wiped out.

Gradually, however, as Congress and the administration recognized the magnitude of the losses in the financial industry and the resultant drain on the taxpayer, regulators have come under increasing pressure to take over weak institutions at the earliest possible opportunity, even if parts of those organizations are still technically solvent.

"It's a radical departure from the past," said Lewis S. Ranieri, whose investment partnership recently acquired an insolvent savings and loan association in Houston.

"It has very serious implications. At what point does the Federal Home Loan Bank Board step in and take your company away?" Nonetheless, Ranieri thinks the regulators' moves are necessary.

The first indication that investors and regulators were on a collision course came last summer, when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. used some intricate legal maneuvers to declare First Republicbank insolvent, even though several of its subsidiaries still had some net worth.

The move produced an outcry from bondholders, some of whom have taken the FDIC to court contending that the regulators exceeded their authority by depriving the bondholders of a claim on the institution's remaining healthy assets.

"The F.D.I.C., when allowed to proceed unsupervised, will take whatever liberties necessary to benefit their own interests," said Dory Auerbach, a First Republic bondholder.

Then last week, three bondholders of MCorp, anticipating that their securities would become worthless if the regulators pursued a forced sale of the company, made a pre-emptive strike.

They filed to put Mcorp under Chapter 7 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code, with the intention of forcing a liquidiation.

Their hope was that they would be able to stake a claim on MCorp's healthy assets.

MCorp countered by filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, which allows for a voluntary liquidation. The regulators then moved to declare 20 of MCorp's 25 units insolvent and take them over.

Last week's episode with Gibraltar is the starkest case yet. There the regulators seized two institutions that had more than $500 million of regulatory capital left.

The institutions' solvency was more a reflection of byzantine accounting practices than actual net worth, but several investors are nevertheless complaining that the government illegally seized private property on which they had a claim and from which they had hoped to continue receiving interest payments.

The aim of early intervention, as the regulators call it, is to make sure that whatever financial resources remain are liquidated or sold in an orderly fashion.

Such moves are thought likely to limit the drain on the industry's insurance fund, which is used to pay off depositors, and ultimately reduce the amount of taxpayer money needed for bailouts.

Early intervention is also supposed to send a signal to investors that they can no longer buy securities of weak institutions without fear of losing money.

Until recently, regulators often allowed ailing institutions to survive indefinitely, because they lacked the money to shut them down and pay off depositors.

Holders of stock and bonds could hang on to the hope that they would get at least some of their money back if the institution's prospects improved.

Regulators hope that their tough new stance will cause investors to take a closer look at the institutions they invest in.

Thus, the market would exert more discipline on the managers of financial institutions.

If this happens too quickly or on too large a scale, however, the short-term effects could be troublesome.

If investors believe that regulators are likely to move in before insolvency, the investors might decide to sell holdings in other weak financial institutions. That would hasten the demise of those institutions.

If a large bondholder sells and "others start to follow, there could be a potential domino effect," said H. Rodgin Cohen, a New York lawyer specializing in banking at Sullivan & Cromwell.

That would make it especially difficult for weak institutions to raise money in the bond market, he added.

That is the whole point, some people in the securities industry say. "This should have the salubrious effect of forcing people who buy these securities to analyze the credit quality of institutions," said Gerard L. Smith, a managing director in the financial institutions group of Salomon Brothers.

David H. Ellison, an analyst and portfolio manager at Fidelity Investments, said: "The rules are changing in favor of the taxpayer and in favor of healthy thrifts with strong capital positions. That's a positive thing."

Some industry analysts doubt that the repercussions of the regulators' actions will be severe.

They say that the type of investor who puts money in the stock or bonds of these institutions almost certainly knows that the investments are highly risky.

They contend that the large mainstream investors, who could cause some financial turmoil if they all decided to pull out of a certain market, are not the ones holding these bonds.

"Any educated observer could have seen this coming," Ellison said. "If they were in there, it was because they were trying to make a quick buck off a speculative investment. They should have known it was junk."

Not everyone agrees. Some people point out that in the case of First Republic some bonds carried a single-A rating when they were issued in 1987 and were bought not by speculative investors but by insurance companies and individuals.

In any event, bond analysts contend that the regulators, by taking such a tough stance in these cases, risk alienating precisely that pool of investors that represents the best hope of providing fresh money to the industry.

"Bush says he wants to shore up the capital of the industry," Lustig said. "Yet the very people they are slapping in the face are the same ones they want to come up with more money."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

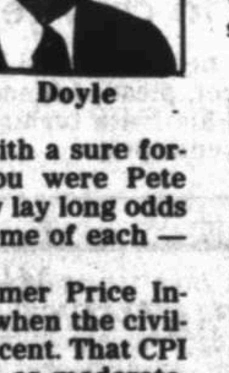
Any economy must deal with either unemployment or inflation

By BILL DOYLE

Q. The general impression I have is that every time factory orders, industrial production and other economic indicators pick up unemployment decreases — but does not come close to zero.

The speedup in the economy then raises concern about inflation and the Federal Reserve causes interest rates to rise — slowing the economy. That increases unemployment or, at least, prevents the complete elimination of unemployment.

Does this mean we will always have to choose between inflation and unemployment?



Doyle

A. In a perfect economic scenario, the choice would be "neither of the above," even though some far-out economists contend that a little inflation is a good thing. In actuality, inflation hurts everyone — workers, retirees, savers, investors, corporations and government.

Because we do not now and never have lived in perfect times, we have always had either inflation or unemployment. No one has ever come up with a sure formula for eliminating both. If you were Pete Rose's bookmaker, you could safely lay long odds that one or the other — usually some of each — will remain with us.

The Labor Department's Consumer Price Index rose 0.4 percent in February, when the civilian unemployment rate was 5.1 percent. That CPI inflation measurement is counted as moderate. Some observers call a 5.1 percent jobless rate effectively "full employment," because some people are always out of work. Truth to tell, it's impossible to define full employment.

Through monetary policy, the Federal Reserve tries to fine-tune the nation's economy. The result has been varying degrees of inflation and unemployment. Lately, the Fed has been tightening the credit screws, in an attempt to keep inflation in check.

Q. How does the Federal Reserve influence interest rates in the marketplace?

A. By making it more expensive or less expensive for banks to make loans. The Fed has three basic tools at its disposal.

First, it can raise or lower the "discount rate" — the interest charged banks and thrift institutions for borrowing from district Federal Reserve banks.

Second, it can raise or lower "reserve requirements" — the percentage of deposits each bank and thrift must set aside, either as cash in its own vault or in an account at its district Federal Reserve bank.

Third and most important, through "open market operations" — the purchase and sale of U.S. Treasury securities in the marketplace. When the Fed buys Treasury securities from banks, the banks have more money to lend. When the bank sells Treasuries to banks, the banks have less money available.

Q. Where did you go to school? How could you write that the Federal Reserve Board "is a federal government agency — no ifs, ands or buts?"

The Federal Reserve Bank has always been a privately owned bank since its creation (by act of Congress) in 1913. The only "control" that government exercises over the Fed is that the President "gets to appoint" the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Big deal! The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in U.S. vs. Davis (1984) made it clear that the Federal Reserve Bank is a private corporation.

A. Taking your questions in order, I was graduated from Fairleigh Dickinson College (before it became a university) in 1950; I wrote that line you quote because it is true.

Along with some other folks who have a hangup on this subject, you have confused the Federal Reserve Board with the 12 district Federal Reserve Banks.

The court ruling you cite said the 12 district banks are "independent, privately owned and locally controlled corporations" and therefore cannot be sued under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Federal Reserve Board is a federal government agency, when the District of Columbia tried to levy real estate taxes on the board's property.

All seven members of the Federal Reserve Board are appointed by the president and confirmed by the U.S. Senate. In the column you gripe about, I called the 12 district banks "quasi-private." Each has a nine-member board of directors — three of whom are appointed by the Federal Reserve Board.
