SENSING THE NEWS

By Thurman Sensing

EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT

Southern States Industrial Council

How to curb inflation without creating a severe recession is the chief economic problem facing the Nixon administration. The problem is especially difficult because there is no immediately available means of inducing self-restraint on the part of elements that contribute to inflation.

Thus far, the administration has sought to cool the economy through tightening of credit and other monetary controls. But this already has produced something of a crisis in the home construction industry. The shortage of loan money is hitting home builders and suppliers. Many savings and loan banks are finding that depositors are withdrawing funds to put their money into federal notes that produce a high, short-term profit.

The cooling also has had hurtful effect on the automotive industry. One of the biggest auto manufacturers has had to order substantial layoffs at a number of plants. The demand for new automobiles appears to be down, with no sign of improvement in sight.

The Nixon administration feels that some success has been achieved in slowing inflation, but the price of making gains is very high. And even the slowdowns and cutbacks in the economy don't seem to have any special effect on the wage spiral.

The country's economic problems may prove insoluble unless restraint is developed with respect to wage demands. One of the reasons many companies are feeling a pinch -- and are reluctant to expand facilities -- is that they have been faced with rapidly mounting wage costs in the last few years. Wages in the United States soared in the 1960s, but productivity did not keep pace. This is an ominous development.

Wage increases are acceptable when there is a rise in real productivity. For a time, productivity was moving upward rapidly, making possible higher wage scales. But the last few years have seen wage concessions obtained which have no sound relation to productivity per employee.

Americans should be deeply concerned about this, for the root cause of Britain's postwar economic deterioration was the gap between wages and productivity. British union members obtained frequent increases, with the support of the Laborite government, but the productivity of British workers was not on a par with the productivity of workers in Germany and Japan, for instance. Thus British goods have frequently failed to penetrate new markets or have lost acceptance in established markets -- all because they are overpriced.

American goods are vulnerable to the same danger, and not simply in overseas markets. The United States has a huge domestic market, but many goods seem to be losing ground in this vital market because they are overpriced through the operation of inflation.

High labor costs are a menace to America's economic future. The U. S. merchant marine is dying because American ship-owners can't afford to operate vessels at the rate of pay demanded by maritime unions. European automobile makers have a substantial part of the American car-buying market, and not because European designs are better -- but because European prices on many vehicles are more in line with what prospective car purchasers can afford. It is noteworthy that the wage scale in the automotive industry is above $5.00 an hour, whereas in West Germany it is $2.20.

Industrial workers in the United States are determined not to drop down to the scale in Germany, let us say. But they also had better start practicing self-restraint and bear in mind the need of withholding new demands at this time. Another round of wage demands in major U. S. industries could bring on a king-size recession in the United States.

The U. S. Public has no taste for government-decreed wage restraints. But the only substitute is voluntary restraint. Industry, of course, is restrained in its profits demands by the realities of the market. Businessmen know that prices can't be hiked because the market won't bear an increase. But this realism hasn't seeped into the minds of union leaders. They are still thinking they can tack on new costs.

The great need, therefore, is a clearer public understanding and stronger, outspoken leadership by office holders with respect to the restraint of labor costs. Unless there is a new measure of discipline in this area, the American economy is headed for serious trouble in the seventies.

New Appliance Reduces Trash

A new appliance may solve the home's never ending collection of boxes, cans, bags and paper that fill garbage cans too full too fast.

One manufacturer has developed an appliance that squeezes a week's accumulation of trash into a specially designed plastic-lined bag, reports Doris Myers, Extension home management specialist at Texas A&M University.

Under 2,000 pounds of pressure, trash such as bottles, tins, cartons and aerosol cans is reduced four and a half times in less than 60 seconds.

The refuse bag is lined with polyethylene plastic for odor, moisture and germ resistance, Mrs. Myers says.

U. S. sanitation departments haul away half a million tons of rubbish a day so the appliance is sure to make a hit in the home and with the trash collector, the specialist notes.

Financial Facts

By Willis A. Hawkins, Jr.

Do you know what is meant by a "special endorsement?" A special endorsement specifies the name of person to whom check is payable.

There are three types of special endorsements. They are: qualified, restrictive and, conditional.

A qualified endorsement merely assigns the title to a check.

A restrictive endorsement permits payment only within certain limits. As an example, "For deposit only" is a restrictive endorsement.

A conditional endorsement bears some condition. As an example: Payable only if lawn mower operates as well as it did before trouble.

Checks payable to two or more persons must be endorsed by each payee. The exception is where one has authority to endorse for others.

Check endorsers are liable, in order in which endorsements appear. Thus the last endorser is liable.

Drugs a Cause of Crime Increase?

Is the startling increase in drug abuse related to the upward spiral of the crime rate?

"U.S. News and World Report" pointed out in its March 16th issue that crime has increased 10 times as fast as population during the past nine years.

New Element in Crime

The president of the New York City Council said, "The most important new element in crime is the increase in use of narcotics." He pointed out that the number of deaths from overdoses of heroin in New York City is now 10 times as great as it was 10 years ago.

It is at least an interesting coincidence that the increase in heroin addiction — as indicated by the increased death rate from heroin overdoses — is about the same percentage-wise as the increase in the crime rate.

However, while some are warning of the dire peril of the situation, others are pooh-poohing the risks involved in drugs and urging greater leniency.

"Life" magazine recently carried an article which said, "Marijuana, until recently a conspicuous liturgy of the rebellious young, is spreading into the middle class and fast becoming an institution. . . . As illegal marijuana becomes increasingly 'respectable,' ultimately the whole question of legalization will have to be faced."

The question is asked about marijuana, as about alcoholic beverages, "Can you legislate morality?"

Obviously, the answer is, "No."

We have never been able to legislate morality. People are still murdered, in spite of laws against murder. Prostitution continues, although there are laws against it. Robbery has not been stopped by the laws which prohibit it.

It is impossible to legislate morality.

But there is another question which also must be asked: "Should we legalize immorality?"

Nobody is suggesting that laws against murder, robbery, arson, or most other crimes be dropped on the basis that we cannot legislate morality.

Why the inconsistency of suggesting that this principle be applied in the area of dangerous drugs?

Experiment with Drugs?

Young people, particularly, are tempted to experiment with marijuana, LSD, and other drugs on the basis of finding out for themselves what sensations await them.

Should one experiment with these drugs? Is this a way to find fulfillment? Will it produce, as some have claimed, a deeper spiritual awareness?

For the person who considers himself a Christian, the answer is clear. The Bible says, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit? . . . Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Anything which harms the body or the mind should be rejected.

Whether the drug is marijuana, LSD, or some other of the hallucinogenic, psychedelic, narcotic, or mind-warping substances, it is regrettable that so many are seeking happiness where it is not to be found.

A former hippie, who has turned from drugs to Christ, said, "Seeking God through LSD is like trying to turn on your TV set by kicking it."

Accent on Health

If you had diabetes before 1921, you didn't give too much thought to leading a normal life--you worried about death. Then, researchers discovered insulin -- a protein hormone--and a daily shot helped keep you alive.

Although the discovery of insulin was a major scientific discovery, the search continued for an orally active antidiabetic medication. Such a medication has now been found and your doctor or local health department can discuss it with you. Some diabetics are able to control the disease with the new oral medication. Those able to do this are no longer a slave to the needle, which is used when injecting insulin. And, hopefully, those who are treated early enough seem to have fewer complications later in life--problems with sight, kidneys, heart, circulation or nerves.

Diabetes is your body's inability to use food properly--especially sugars and starches. Diabetics have difficulty turning these sugars and starches into energy, which the body must have to operate normally.

Insulin affects the body's use of food by regulating the use of sugar, which in turn supplies the energy that keeps our bodies going.

Half the people who have diabetes don't know it. They need to find out. Here are some of the symptoms which may mean you have diabetes:

Excessive thirst, frequent urination, excessive hunger, weight loss, failing eyesight, intense itching, pain in fingers and toes, weakness, tiredness and drowsiness.

Six Persons Injured In 9 Accidents

The Texas Highway Patrol investigated nine accidents on rural highways in Castro County during the month of February, according to Sergeant Vernon Cawthon, Highway Patrol Supervisor of this area.

These crashes resulted in six persons injured and an estimated property damage of $6,815.00.

The rural accident summary for this county during the first two months of 1970 shows a total of 20 accidents resulting in no persons killed, nine persons injured, and an estimated property damage of $10,965.00.

In an all-out effort to stem the rising toll of traffic accidents in Texas, the Department of Public Safety is increasing the ranks of its uniform services.

One hundred and twenty men between the ages of 20 and 35 are needed to start training for the position of patrolman on May 5, 1970.

All interested young men should contact any DPS office or patrolman for an application. Those who work Monday through Friday may contact the Lubbock, Amarillo, and Wichita Falls offices on Saturday mornings for processing.

VISITS PARENTS

Mrs. Calvin Alexander visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Phillips in Littlefield Thursday.

Not all these symptoms are present in every diabetic. Some diabetics have only one or two symptoms. Others don't have any apparent symptoms and are called "hidden" diabetics.

Periodic blood tests can uncover hidden diabetics. In addition, Texas and other states participate periodically in diabetic detection programs, whereby the local health department and migrant health program personnel screen what is known as "high risk groups." In Texas these groups include: close blood relatives, at 45 years of age and older, of diabetics; persons 45 years of age or over, particularly; obese persons, 45 years of age or older; and parents of large babies (nine pounds or more at birth) when the parent is 45 years of age or older.

The Texas State Department of Health stresses the importance of finding hidden diabetics for three reasons: one, the earlier diabetes is detected, the easier you can control it; two, the more healthy you can stay; and three, the more normal life you can lead.

GAMES THROUGH THE AGES

Playing a family game of bridge may not seem very unusual, until you remember that Englishmen were kicking their partners under the table in the London coffeehouses of the 17th century.

Rolling a pair of dice in a game of backgammon takes on added significance when you realize that the Romans did it--with animal knucklebones!

The leading American in the game game was Milton Bradley, a former lithographer, who was responsible for the oldest game in American history--the Checkered Game of Life, which he introduced in 1860. Now called simply the Game of Life, it is played by participants aged 10 to adult. A comparison of the two reflects major changes in American values. The modern pastime reveals a more materialist age: today a player may try for a million dollars, while the players of the original--actually played on 84 red and white squares--sought only to achieve a happy old age.

New to some of today's oldsters and old to many youngsters, the card game of Old Maid goes back to the same man, possibly the greatest game-inventor in history, who helped popularize it in America after it had been played in Europe for centuries.

Bradley believed in making learning fun. The company bearing his name has continued gamely to influence American pastimes through the years. In the 1940s, it introduced Candy Land. Other board games brought forward in the 1930s were Battleship, Easy Money and Go to the Head of the Class.

Today it produces board, card, and skill and action games; puzzles and arts and activities.

Baseball existed in crude form 4,000 years before Abner Doubleday invented the American version we all know. An Egyptian artist sculptured figures throwing and catching balls 40 centuries ago, and a leather-covered ball was used in the games on the Nile. The Greek and Roman baths had special compartments for ball-playing. Ball tossing was seen as a sign of nature's rebirth at spring, and ancient clergymen used to throw a ball to symbolize the Resurrection.

Games have had a long and exciting history. Next time you make your move on a checkerboard, achieve a grand slam, or watch a pitcher whistle a fast curve past an opposing batter--remember our inventive ancestors who made it possible!

Vicious Dog

Taking a short cut through an unfenced back yard, Ed was attacked and bitten by the property owner's dog. In due course, he retaliated with a suit for damages. At the trial, the defendant admitted that his dog was vicious.

"That is precisely why I keep him, to attack trespassers," he told the court. "I keep him chained, but the chain is long enough for him to protect my property. The plaintiff was bitten only because he went where he did not belong."

However, the court threw out this defense and granted Ed's claim. "The safety of human life," said the judge, "may not be unnecessarily endangered in the protection of property."

Generally speaking, the law considers the keeping of a vicious dog similar to the keeping of a dangerous weapon. The dog, like the weapon, must be handled with extreme care. Against a trespasser who is innocent, embodying no personal menace to anyone, the property owner has no more right to use a vicious dog than to use a gun.

In fact, some courts impose liability on the owner even if he tried his best to prevent bites. One home owner kept his vicious dog locked in an enclosure beneath the front steps. A visiting neighbor was climbing the steps one day when his foot slipped through a loose board. The dog, seeing the foot come into range, lost no time in taking a bite.

Here, the court held the owner liable even though he had tried to avoid accidents. The court said this was the penalty for keeping such a dog on the premises in the first place.

On the other hand, the owner is usually not responsible if the victim plays an active role in bringing on his own trouble. Take this case.

A man went to pick up his car at a repair shop, which had already closed for the day. He knew the proprietor kept a vicious watchdog, but "took a chance" and went in anyhow. Unfortunately, the dog did bite him severely.

Could the man collect damages? In these circumstances, the court said no.

"He fully appreciated the danger," said the court, "and voluntarily incurred the risk."

FUN WITH FIGURES

Pi, the Greek-letter symbol that represents a circle's ratio of circumference to diameter, is an odd number that won't come out even. The ancient Greeks reckoned its value at our familiar $3\frac{1}{7}$ —or about 3.1416. Electronic calculators now have carried the figure out to 2,000 digits beyond the decimal point—still without coming to the end of the "interminable fraction."

The ancient Maya Indians' 365-day calendar consisted of 19 months: 18 of 20 days each and a closing "month" of 5 days.

Most bankruptcies result from management incompetence rather than flood, fire or other disasters. That's the finding of Dun & Bradstreet, since 1920 the only organization reporting on and analyzing bankruptcies. Over 400,000 concerns have been started annually in recent years, between 350,000 and 400,000 have been discontinued and slightly more than this number have transferred ownership or control.

If $1/25$ th of an inch of sediment had formed every 1,000 years on the bottom of the oceans during their 3 billion years of existence, the silt layer would be 10,000 feet thick.

CUERO, TEXAS, RECORD:
"With each passing day we become more and more convinced the only way to get a large segment of the American population to go to work is to drastically reduce the poverty programs and doles that support them. There is no logical reason, we feel, why business and industrial firms and their employees who work day by day for a livelihood should have their earnings taxed to the extent that sufficient federal and state funds are available to take care of the needs of several million Americans who do not choose to work. It is our feeling this condition will continue to exist and to expand until the federal and state governments drastically cut down on their doles and free food handouts and sensibly amend the rules and regulations which qualify hundreds of thousands for the relief rolls, food handouts and unemployment compensation who do not deserve it."

The Great Man Came

The crowd had been gathering for hours. From every corner of the town they came—from tall white houses on the hill and cramped row houses by the mill. There were bankers and housewives, students and salesmen, grandmas and grocers, all drawn by a common hunger to hear the word of God.

And then the great man came. He stood before a microphone, and his words spread over the gathering like a benediction.

Suddenly, the shadow of a bygone day spread massively from another crowd, another place, to those gathered here. A thousand differences were reconciled, as the congregation found a common bond under the spell of Good Friday, when God gave His Son in a wondrous gift of love.

So, in these troubled times, as crowds gather all over the world—sometimes with hate in their hearts—let us pledge our time and talents to our churches as they teach the brotherhood of men through the fatherhood of God.
