The sun starts its trek across the sky Saturday morning, warming the cold, damp pavement at Midland College as two bikers begin their phase of the Tall City Triathlon. The 10-mile bike ride was combined with a run and a swim to determine the top three-member team. The YMCA and Coors sponsored this first Triathlon, which saw women come out on top. Soviet pipeline sanctions end

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan announced Saturday agreement has been reached on new guidelines restricting allied trade with the Soviet Union, permitting him to drop sanctions against industrial nations helping Moscow build its natural gas pipeline.

The action defuses a serious rift between the United States and its allies in Europe and Japan.

"We have agreed not to engage in trade arrangements which contribute to the military or strategic advantage of the U.S.S.R. or serve to preferentially aid the heavily militarized Soviet economy," Reagan said in a nationally broadcast radio address.

"Now that we've achieved an agreement with our allies which provides for stronger and more effective measures, there is no further need for these sanctions, and I am lifting them today," he said.

The agreement did not meet Reagan's original conditions for lifting the sanctions and France said it was "not a party" to any agreement.

The president had said he would not reverse course until martial law had been lifted in Poland, and the military regime there had released all political prisoners and opened a dialogue with the Solidarity trade movement.

"We have agreed not to engage in trade arrangements which contribute to the military or strategic advantage of the U.S.S.R. or serve to preferentially aid the heavily militarized Soviet economy," Reagan said in a nationally broadcast radio address.

"Now that we've achieved an agreement with our allies which provides for stronger and more effective measures, there is no further need for these sanctions, and I am lifting them today," he said.

In a government communique in Paris, France said its views on East-West trade are well known to its allies and "took note" of the fact that Reagan had dropped the embargo.

The French announcement appeared to cast doubt on the assertion by Reagan and senior administration officials that the United States and its major allies had hammered out a common stance on trade with the Soviets.

Britain, Germany and Italy all welcomed the president's announcement. There was no reaction from the Soviet Union.

The French government said last week that it was unwilling to offer the United States any major concessions in return for the halting of the U.S. sanctions against the West European companies helping build the pipeline.

A senior U.S. official, speaking privately, said before the communique was issued that all of the partners in the long negotiating process were in substantial agreement.

The name of the game

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Reagan could not have selected a more eventful week for his 14th press conference. An unprecedented number of news items swirled about his head as he faced the nation and answered questions about almost every problem that concerns our country.

While he was speaking, a search was in progress in the Soviet Union to find a successor to President Leonid I. Brezhnev; the space shuttle Columbia was again in orbit after lifting off at Cape Canaveral, and Philip Habib was packing his briefcase preparatory to another peaceseeking mission to the Middle East.

Hearst

The president commented on all of these developments, plus other momentous matters such as unemployment, the future of Social Security and a multi-billion dollar highway construction program, to be raised by an increase in the gasoline tax. All of this happened on Veteran's Day, commemorating the day the world breathed a sigh of relief on the ending of World War I in 1918.

In my opinion, the president once again handled himself very well. Seldom has one of America's chiefs of state had to field as many queries on as many subjects, and all within about 30 minutes.

The president spoke in statesmanlike tones about the need to be patient, to keep an open mind, even when it comes to dealing with the Russians. Whether it is American politics on Capitol Hill, or international policy at the summit, the name of the game is negotiations — or give and take; or quid pro quo — as you will.

Editor's Report

But the president was not talking like a softie. On the contrary, he made it clear that his thoughts about negotiating applied not alone to the United States but to the Soviet Union. "For ten years," he said, "detente was based on words, from them, and not any deeds to back those words up. But we need some indication that they — it takes two to tango — that they want to tango, also."

Within 48 hours of Brezhnev's death, an emergency session of the powerful Central Committee of the U.S.S.R. unanimously named 68-year old Yuri Andropov, former chief of the KGB, as party secretary-general. It means that Andropov has become NO.1 in total power after having yielded his position as top cop only last May to become chief ideologist as well as a senior member of the 12-man Politburo. He was, we must remember, head

City now has 'renter's market'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

After more than a year of watching apartment rents going out of sight faster than the space shuttle, the situation appears to be in a stable orbit and in some cases rents are coming back to earth.

A random survey of apartment managers of old and new complexes reveals a consensus that the market is "soft" and it has turned 180 degrees in a few months.

Until last summer, Midland was a seller's market when it came to apartment rents. Complexes were full, there was no other housing available and the rents kept going up. Tenants were forced to pay the higher prices because there was no other place to move.

Today, it's a renter's market, analysts agree. But they're keeping their fingers crossed the situation will change by late 1983, if not by the summer.

Some complexes have lowered rents to attract tenants, while some new ones are offering a cut rate the first month. Another is offering a chance at a free vacation. But that doesn't seem to be attracting people, say the managers.

The problem, they agreed, seems to be the "sagging" economy with few new people moving to Midland. Renters at new complexes are not newcomers, the survey shows, but are tenants moving from older apartments.

AND WHILE people were living in tents and cars during the summer of 1981, apartment managers are now complaining there are too many apartments as they watch at least seven new complexes opening up.

Haystack Apartments at 2439 Whitmire has been offering a month's free rent, but Manager Bernice Chaffin said it hasn't helped their 80 percent occupancy rate.

"So many of our tenants have bought homes and condominiums. We ended up with a good clientele when the market was so good; they were making good salaries. Now that the housing market has opened up, they're buying houses."

One month's free rent or a reduction for a month, lower rents and free amenities are part of the apartment game managers are playing in trying to lure tenants to their complexes. As new complexes open up just at the time that Midland's economy is dropping, renters are getting a chance to shop for that little space known as "home."

The slowdown started showing up this fall, she said. "In July, we were running at 100 percent occupancy. It just bottomed out overnight."

Because of the slowdown, Ms. Chaffin said more people are going to a roommate situation.

And the declining occupancy rate is indicative of layoffs. "We had two people in here in the last two days who got laid off. Some of them are going back home," the manager said.

THE MANAGER at Courtyard Apartments said she too has noticed people being laid off from their jobs and leaving Midland. "It started in the latter part of May and it's still going on." Running at an occupancy level between 90 and 95 percent, the manager added, "We're not really hurting that bad."

Statler Terrace also has been offering a month's free rent, but it's not attracting new renters. Pointing out

Is Solidarity leader free, in hiding?

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The martial-law government announced Saturday that Lech Walesa, chief of the outlawed Solidarity trade union, had been freed after 11 months of internment, but he could not be located.

A devout Roman Catholic, he had spoken of serving the church in some capacity, and there was speculation that he might have been spirited away by church officials.

Reliable sources said that at 3 p.m., Walesa boarded a helicopter and left the remote government resort in southeastern Poland where he had been detained, but they did not know his destination.

They said he was released after being interviewed by a reporter for the government television network. The interview originally was scheduled to be broadcast Saturday night, but then was rescheduled for Sunday with no explanation given.

A transcript of the interview was obtained by some Western reporters, and it quoted Walesa as calling for an agreement "not on my knees, but a fair, proper agreement."

He said he felt there was a chance for agreement but "there is something wrong because we are not being able to understand each other. We are talking about the same thing but not in the same way."

Walesa said he was "a man for agreement and I want to do something for all of us, and that is why I agreed to give this interview. No matter how it will come out, I will always say what I am thinking and what I have been thinking, because I have not changed.

"Nobody forced me to do this interview or into this situation and I am just the same as when I walked in here."

There was immediate speculation that Walesa's statements would disappoint many of his most militant supporters.

The government news agency PAP announced Parliament will meet in special session on Dec. 13 — the first anniversary of military rule that began the crackdown on Solidarity. The union was outlawed in October.

PAP claimed Walesa rejoined his family at their home in the northern port of Gdansk, but it later withdrew the report without explanation. Walesa's wife told The Associated Press she had not seen him.

Earlier, about 500 people screaming "long live Solidarity!" and "We want Lech!" ringed Walesa's Gdansk home awaiting his arrival during a daylong vigil.

Walesa's reported release came two days after the Communist government announced it was freeing him because he was no longer considered a political threat.

Interior Ministry officials said Saturday that Walesa left the government resort near the Soviet border where he had spent six months of his 11 months in confinement. But conflicting reports emerged on Walesa's whereabouts after he failed to arrive in Gdansk.

The fact that no word had been received from Walesa by his family suggested he was still in the custody of security officers taking him either to Warsaw or Gdansk, or had been taken in by Catholic church officials.

The influential church had repeatedly asked for Walesa's release, and rumors circulated in Warsaw that he was taken to an undisclosed location by church officials who planned to ease him back into public life in order not to provoke new unrest.

"I believe he is in Warsaw," said the family priest, Father Henryk Jankowski, when pressed by the youthful crowd parading outside Walesa's house. "We have been waiting 11 months so let us wait for a couple hours more. For sure, he will be here tomorrow (Sunday)."

Texas State Society brings Terlingua to Washington

By WILLIAM GARLAND

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Terlingua in Washington?

Or anything vaguely resembling that parched city and its once-yearly madness — the Terlingua World Championship Chili Cook-Off?

Well, they say it will be so. "They" being the folks who regularly stir up a bit of Texas in the capital city as members of Washington's Texas State Society.

Texas, like most states, has a society here for residents in exile, so that they might occasionally get a bit of the home-state flavor.

The group is planning to pack in some 1,100 Texans on Saturday night and generally set off "the biggest bash (for Texans) since the Texas State Society's 1981 inaugural party."

They'll transform the cafeteria in the one congressional building named after a Texan (former House Speaker Sam Rayburn) into an "Old West Saloon" and get Terlingua cook-off founder and chili aficionado Frank X. Tolbert to fix up his best stuff.

The Whiskey River Band will "have your boots scootin' as you two-step the night away," say the Texas society folks, and there'll be homemade tamales, chili con queso, guacamole and other Mexican side dishes that are rarely done properly in the nation's capital.

They're calling it the "Terlingua Two-Step" party.

But for an observer who previously has witnessed a real session of the unforgettable Terlingua wildness, it is hard to avoid a tinge of skepticism.

Judging by the latest issue of Texas Highways, the Terlingua event (which now is actually held at a ranch outside the ghost town) has become somewhat theatrical, and more serious chili-cooking is done at other contests; such as the Taylor Cook-Off, outside Dallas.

It was less so in 1971. Sure, they tried to get a single hot-air balloon (unsuccessfully as it turned out) up into the desert sky, and noted Alpine author H. Allen Smith (one of the first contestants) escorted a show-stopper blonde from Hollywood.

But, in its fifth year, the event was still serious.

You knew it at sunup, driving south out of Alpine with a line of traffic on the normally deserted highway: Anything that would clog the road into the Big Bend had to be serious.

Or at least you knew it by the time you took the cutoff to Lajitas and came upon the site of the "town" that was then a scattering of tumbledown structures breaking the routine of the sometimes stunning mountainsides with their geological volcanic base.

Not only was there a fleet of aircraft parked in an area that, like much of the rest of the terrain, was wide open. There also were apron-bedecked cooks already hunched over simmering pots and throwing in what seemed at the time a questionable assortment of odds and ends into their would-be prize-winners.

Ancient volcanoes in the area were long dead, with many inverted cones jutting from the surrounding plain, but some of the concoctions were hot as lava.

The crowd seemed mostly to consist of jolly college students from relatively close Sul Ross University or of Texans well-off enough to sit in the shade of a camper or around one of the modestly renovated buildings and await the final judgment on whose mixture would be the world's best chili.

For a cup of the stuff, you put down a well-spent $20, and came away with an unusual November sunburn.

It will undoubtedly be interesting to see what kind of ruckus comes from more than a thousand Washington-based Texans enjoying chili, country music and other Texas-oriented delicacies in the normally formal atmosphere of the Rayburn House Office Building on Capitol Hill.

But we'll risk a prediction that Washington's Terlingua will be about as far from the version in the Big Bend as it will be in the geographical sense. There is something to be said for the difference between a congressional cafeteria and the unmatchable expanse in which the original is held.

Video firm files for bankrupty

RICHARDSON (AP) — A video game manufacturer which had predicted 1983 sales of $100 million has asked a federal bankruptcy court for protection from its creditors.

Games by Apollo Inc., a 1-year-old company that had $6.5 million in sales for the first nine months of this year, curtailed operations Friday because of "pressure from a couple of creditors," said company attorney John Diggins.

Apollo makes video game cartridges, including "Space Cavern" and "Space Chase." Two months ago, Apollo President Patrick Roper predicted Apollo would have sales of $100 million in 1983.

Now, however, Apollo spokesman Frank Barth said the firm owes unsecured creditors "several million dollars."

"We've had some problems paying debts to suppliers. We just need time," Diggins said.

Diggins said Apollo "is a very viable organization" and intends to reorganize under Chapter 11 bankruptcy laws.

State Democratic lawmakers seek to block appointments

AUSTIN (AP) — Some state Democratic lawmakers have asked Gov. Bill Clements to leave the naming of a new Texas Supreme Court chief justice to the Democratic governor-elect, or face having any other appointments he makes blocked.

State Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, said fourteen senators have agreed to reject appointments by the lame-duck Republican governor if he is "uncooperative."

"We are committed to take every step necessary to assure this result," said Doggett in a letter to Clements that asked him to leave the chief justice appointment to Mark White, who will be inaugurated in January.

Chief Justice Joe Greenhill stepped down last month.

"The governor's greatest power is appointments. It's unproductive to have a lame-duck governor making appointments," said state Sen.-elect Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville. "We'll take a hard look at whether any (Clements appointments) should be confirmed."

Prison escapee arrested after 12 years

HUFFMAN, Texas (AP) — A man who escaped from a Canadian prison 12 years ago has been arrested, authorities said Saturday.

Paul Allan, who was operating a home remodeling business, was arrested at his home Friday by U.S. marshals, said Montgomery Chief Deputy James Schlecht.

Allan is being held at the Harris County in Houston, about 50 miles south of here, on $100,000 bond, Schlecht said. He will be returned to Canada.

By MIKE COCHRAN

IRVING (AP) — If Ben H. Carpenter has his way, visitors to his Las Colinas project could soon find an IBM executive waterskiing to work, or a General Motors vice president taking a water taxi to the office.

In a state renowned for big ideas, Carpenter's dream is in no danger of being overshadowed. He is turning his family's 12,000-acre ranch between downtown Dallas and the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport into a rolling wonderland of corporate offices, expensive homes, shopping centers, parks and canals.

All it has taken is vision and money, of which the 58-year-old Carpenter has plenty. His father founded Lone Star Steel and played a key role in creating the giant Texas Utilities system.

"Ben took what his father built and quadrupled it," said Lowell Duncan, an admiring colleague.

For nearly half a century, the Carpenter property was known as "El Ranchito de Las Colinas," the little ranch of the hills. The hills are still there, along with country clubs, condominiums and a luxurious equestrian complex.

Ten thousand people already call Las Colinas home, with 50,000 predicted by the end of the century. Homes range from $215,000 condominiums to $625,000 houses; apartments are available for $485 to $940 a month.

The directories in the glass-and-steel office buildings glitter with the names of corporate giants. IBM occupies three buildings and is the major tenant in two others. Other familiar names include General Motors, Xerox, Sony, Magnavox and Polaroid.

LAS COLINAS ATTRACTS the big names because of its central location. It is eight minutes to the Dallas-Fort Worth airport, 15 minutes to downtown Dallas and 25 minutes to Fort Worth. Residents can jog to Texas Stadium, the home of the Dallas Cowboys.

The Dallas-Fort Worth area is now the fourth biggest distribution center in the country, behind New York City, Los Angeles and Chicago.

"Being located right next to D-FW Airport is the biggest single advantage to being in Las Colinas," said George Clark, an executive with Hitachi. "Being right in the heart of the nation puts any spot in the entire country within a three-hour flight to deliver some needed piece of equipment."

Convenience was one of the features Carpenter insisted on when he decided a decade ago to transform his ranch into a small city. Other goals were a sense of prestige and "an air of excitement."

"They're batting a thousand," said Thomas Kraft, an executive at the new Mandalay Four Seasons Hotel, a 27-story structure built on the banks of Lake Carolyn.

The 60-foot-deep, 125-acre lake, carved from the flood plain of the Elm Fork of the Trinity River, feeds a network of waterways that taxi boats will ply. An elevated tramway will circle the downtown area and travel two smaller outlying loops.

Despite the tram and the canals, Las Colinas' developers say they "anticipate that the most popular transportation mode of all will turn out to be walking — the urban center is a joy for the pedestrian."

THE DEVELOPERS HAVE also set aside 3,500 acres for parkland, fishing ponds and gun clubs and trails for jogging, hiking and biking.

Within the project's boundaries are two championship golf courses. Two others are planned. A sports club under construction will include indoor and outdoor swimming pools and tennis courts, men's and women's spas, an indoor jogging track and indoor courts for handball, squash and racquetball. An outdoor terrace will accommodate lawn games such as volleyball and badminton.

Horse lovers have the Las Colinas Equestrian Center, which can board 104 horses in a stable as modern as most hotels.

The community also boasts a computerized security system. From a central communications headquarters, security officers watch over every business and home with electronic sensors alert for break-ins, fires, medical emergencies and even such situations as a refrigerator breaking down in a restaurant.

Security is one feature in a communications system that provides 24-hour news, weather, music, sports, movies, educational programming and other audio and visual services via cable. The service is free to property owners.

Among the more exotic ventures at Las Colinas is a $12 million film and video complex, which some people tout as a symbol of the city's future in Texas' growing role in movie making.

"THERE'S NOTHING in the country that can compare with our facility, and that's not just hype," said Pat Wolfe, general manager of the Dallas Communications Complex.

Similar immodesty gripped Carpenter when he spoke of the still unfinished Towers at Williams Square, which he likened to Trafalgar Square in London and the Great Plaza in Venice — "locations that by themselves create the feeling of really being somewhere when you are there."

Williams Square, he said, "will be a plaza the size of two football fields side by side, paved in Texas pink granite, with the largest equestrian sculpture in the world at its center...nine bronze mustang horses, larger than lifesize, crossing a stream of cascading water."

"I am confident that Las Colinas is becoming a convenient, pleasant, unique, prestigious and exciting place to be in, to live in and to work in," he says. "I do all three, and I am excited about it every day of the year."

Textbook adoption delayed

AUSTIN (AP) — The Board of Education for Texas, the nation's second-largest schoolbook buyer, on Saturday postponed adopting new health and civics textbooks so publishers can make changes.

Health book publishers were asked last week to revise chapters on drug abuse, and civics book publishers were told to include more information about historic documents, such as the Bill of Rights.

The altered texts must be submitted by Dec. 1, and a vote on adoption will come in January.

The hearings are an annual battle between publishers who want to make a sale in a market second only to California and protesters who use the hearings to air grievances about everything from communism to sexism in schoolbooks.

The Lone Star State's purchases can affect schoolbook marketing nationwide. If a publisher must change a book to sell it to Texas, the changes usually will be included in the book wherever it is sold. And if a book doesn't sell here, it might not be published at all.

Even so, the hearings might not have risen to such national prominence had it not been for Norma Gabler, a Longview housewife who, with her husband Mel, has made a career of protesting textbooks that do not uphold what she calls "traditional family values."

This year marked Mrs. Gabler's 21st annual appearance before the Texas Textbook Committee, which makes recommendations to the board.

Texas' textbooks won more attention last month, when publishers of health books were informed by Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum that they should delete all references to venereal disease.

He said classroom discussion of sexually transmitted diseases should be left to the discretion of local school districts. Bynum later withdrew the directive.

Last year, Bynum withdrew an edition of Webster's dictionary from the school shopping list when the publisher refused to delete seven words the U.S. Supreme Court had deemed unfit for broadcast.

The Board of Education voted Saturday to adopt new textbooks for purchase by public schools in 1983-1984 at a cost of $60.5 million.

Mrs. Gabler said after the vote that she would have to wait and see how publishers rewrite the health and civics books before she could say how successful her efforts have been this year.

Mrs. Gabler, 58, testified that the health books put too much emphasis on legal drugs like liquor, coffee and nicotine and not enough emphasis on the illegality and harmful effects of marijuana.

Many of her objections to civics books criticized attention to social protest instead of support for the government. She also criticized deletion of states' rights advocacy.

Cool front dips temperatures into 20s

A low of 28 was recorded Saturday, but that nippy temperature still was 15 degrees off the record for the date set in 1976. The high of 61, meanwhile, was well off the 83 degree mark of 1973.

Continued cool temperatures are expected today and tonight, as the mercury should reach the mid-50s this afternoon before plunging into the upper 20s again tonight.

Fair skies should prevail, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, leaving little chance of rain adding to the yearly precipitation total of 12.64 inches.

Winds should be 15-20 miles per hour and southwesterly this morning, before shifting this afternoon to northerly and gusty.

EDITOR'S REPORT

of the KGB for 15 years and was most recently responsible for an all-out crackdown on dissidents in Russia. As my friend and colleague, Si Friedin, notes, the KGB equals "SOB" to the outside world as well as within the Soviet Union.

In his rise to power, Andropov built up a base of both police and military support. He also shuttled around the country planting pro-Andropov commissars inside the party apparatus. On his way up, it was the late Nikita Khrushchev who appointed him ambassador to Hungary. When Hungary exploded in spontaneous revolt 25 years ago, Andropov wasted no time urging Khrushchev to send in troops to suppress the uprising. Si Freidin saw him and talkd to him several times before and during the revolt. Si tells me that he speaks fluent English, professed even then a taste for Western books and was interested in Western technology.

Andropov is a hardnosed gent, make no mistake about it.... That's the way he forged ahead of his comrades in the system without worrying whose feelings he hurt or what people he stepped on. One of the strange side effects to the Andropov rise to power is the rumor sweeping Poland that imprisoned Solidarity leader Lech Walesa will be released. He has been in jail for 11 months, but at this writing Walesa still remains under house arrest.

If the rumor turns out to be the truth, then President Reagan could have a reason to suspend sanctions against the Soviet pipeline. Our major NATO allies have defied him on doing business with the Soviets over this issue. President Reagan quite rightly, I believe, wants to have the Soviets give a quid for a quo.

Martial law in Poland was clamped down on the hapless nation and Walesa's arrest ordered with the full approval of Brezhnev. That was supposed to keep the Poles in line. It hasn't. But if Walesa's release is in the works, this could be a left-handed way of Andropov signalling President Reagan that he is dropping at least one phase of Brezhnev's policy of the conqueror.

In this eventful press conference, I thought that the president edged pretty close to considering a gasoline tax increase to finance bridge and road repairs. The program would create about 300,000 jobs badly needed in these high unemployment times. It also would, for the first time in 30 years, repair our badly battered highway networks

The Hearst Newspapers were instrumental in launching the Inter-Continental Highway Program to build those highways and bridges nearly three decades ago. With the creative help of friends who saw the need, a bill went through Congress in less than four years when smart alecks said it would take at least ten.

Our highways are in sad shape today and desperately require attention. I have a hunch that President Reagan will back the idea which is largely bipartisan. This is a project that we should all support for the good of the nation.

she hasn't had a problem keeping tenants, the manager said Midland just "has no traffic at all. There are more apartments available than people who need them."

Of the new complexes contacted, most are not renting apartments as fast as anticipated when they were announced about a year ago.

Manor Club is one new complex which hasn't rented as many units as planned even though it's offering a cut of $125 on the first month's rent. "It's the economy slowdown," said the manager, adding another aspect: "So many complexes are going up now. People are looking around and getting just what they want."

Sierra Paseo is trying a $100 reduction on its first month's rent, but leasing is still "a lot slower than we had expected."

The manager noted the tenants are not new residents to Midland. "Most of my leases we are taking from other complexes. No one is walking in and saying they're being transferred here."

And with fewer people coming, she sees the apartment boom putting Midland into an overbuilt situation.

FIGURES FROM the Midland Chamber of Commerce verify the slowdown in new residents. While March saw 113 net new family units moving to Midland and 115 in April, October had dropped to 86. July and August were down to 84 each month.

Windscape Apartments has been offering anyone who looked at their complex a chance at a free vacation in Puerto Vallarta.

"The vacation hasn't helped attract tenants," said the manager, Eve Hardin. "It's a very soft market and I think we're going to be awhile coming out of it. I don't see that giveaways will help for any group."

Mentioning that 2,700 units are coming on line about the same time, the manager sees Midland as a city of "musical residents" while they have the choice of where to live.

Recalling the shortage a year ago, Ms. Hardin remarked that "every builder in Dallas moved out here. They had heard people were living in tents."

Carol Wood, marketing specialist with Lincoln Properties in Dallas, the firm which is putting up Wildflower Apartments, said no one could predict the slowdown.

Lincoln Properties ventured out of Dallas in April 1981 when it purchased a newly-built complex in Odessa. "It was a gold mine out here then," she said. "We did a market study. No one saw the depression coming in Midland."

WILDFLOWER ISN'T renting as fast as hoped. "We wish we could double the number," she said. But she doesn't see rents dropping on any of the new complexes. "We've opened with a pretty healthy rent schedule."

Wildflower is renting at 56.3 cents a square foot. A new Lincoln Properties complex in Dallas is going for 60.1 cents. But a new one in Fort Worth was rented at 54.5 cents a square foot because of a slow rent situation.

"It's three totally separate markets," Ms. Wood noted.

Gene Davidson, district manager of Brentwood Properties, was here when the economy was booming and the rents were going up likewise. With the older complexes of Chaparral and Thornwood apartments under Brentwood's wing as well as the under-construction Quinten's Walk, Davidson can see that leasing is slow, no matter what amenities or new items are offered.

Rents at the two older complexes have been reduced and he expects to see a drop overall in prices throughout Midland. "I look for $75 to $100 a month drop on most units over the next year. They're overbuilding. All the new apartments are coming in at once. I see a price war coming in the next three months as more units come on line. They'll have to drop rents to fill up."

Rents have started dropping in some places. Silverado Apartments reduced its prices about $20 and subsequently almost filled up the empty units, according to Robert Smith, assistant manager.

MIDLAND ELMS has lowered prices on some of its one-bedroom units. For a six-month lease, the price is cut $10. For a year lease, the price goes down $20, said the manager.

And Quail Hollow lowered its rents about three months ago. As a reult, only two units are unoccupied, according to a spokesman for the complex.

A renting agency has noticed the dropping rents. "Everything has slowed up," said Tammy Chessher of Seekers. "In April or May, we never had anything for $300 a month. And the $400 rentals would go in a day or so. Now it takes a week to a week and a half. The higher you go on the price, the slower it gets."

Reiterating the statement that people aren't moving to Midland, Ms. Chessher said, "Our business has dropped off tremendously. Midland is a high place to live and I think people are moving back to where they came from."

Although that building burned and is being rebuilt, the manager said only a couple of tenants left immediately after the crash. "With other leases coming up, we may have some more tenants leaving. But most people used common sense about the crash and realized it was a freak accident."

HELPING THEIR rent situation is the fact that Warwick rents to families, one of the few complexes in town that does so. "We're a family unit and that helps us stay full," she added.

In light of the "soft" market, what has surprised a lot of people is the fact that another apartment complex was permitted last week. At a cost of $3.4 million, it will have 192 units.

Grant Billingsley with the Midland Chamber said, "I'm amazed that anyone would want to put up an apartment project now, no matter what the cost." This project is being constructed with lower-interest revenue bonds.

While several complexes haven't lowered rents, Billingsley said the drops may come about the first of the year. The chamber is in the process of updating its apartment survey.

Although the higher vacancy rate can be attributed to the large number of units coming on the market now and the economic slowdown, Ms. Wood with Lincoln Properties also pointed out that the period from November through March traditionally is a slow time for renting.

"Late spring and summer usually are horrendous. We would have preferred to have opened up (Wildflower) the first of April."

And she's expecting the rental market to pick up this spring, especially since she has heard of some companies planning to transfer employees into Midland then.

"I DON'T THINK the market will get any worse than it is now. It's in a sagging position right now. But it's gotten as bad as it's going to get," she said, adding a word of advice that people thinking of changing apartments should do it before spring.

Looking back a year ago to the problem with rents rocketing upward, some managers don't expect the same thing to happen anytime soon.

Robert Smith of Silverado said if the rents start skyrocketing again renters now would be able to pick up and move elsewhere. "People won't take it; they'll move into another place."

And Ms. Wood added that she hopes the owners and managers have learned a lesson from that episode of unaffordable rents.

"From this experience with the softening in the market, I hope the owners and managers have learned something and won't jack up the rents. Now, they are having to lower their rents and it hurts on the cash flow. Anytime you think of raising the rent, you should proceed with caution, and especially in a market like Midland where the economy is so dependent on one industry."

Otherwise, she said, the owner can wake up one day and find the complex only half full.

Cranston has idea on ending weapons race

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The United States and Soviet Union should engage in Camp David-type negotiations to reach agreement on ending the nuclear arms race, Sen. Alan Cranston said Saturday.

"We've never, never made the sort of an all-out, creative, constructive, absolutely perservering and fair effort to work out this problem with the Soviet Union, to ascertain whether or not we can end this dangerous folly before it ends us," the California senator told a Democratic Party meeting.

"What I envision is something analagous to the Camp David process," in which Israel and Egypt signed a peace agreement in 1979, he said.

Cranston was one of five potential Democratic presidential candidates to appear at a two-day meeting of the Association of State Democratic Chairs

Also addressing the state party leaders Saturday was former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew, who called for a coalition of business, labor and government to deal with economic problems.

Askew also suggested repealing the third year of the income tax cut passed by Congress in 1981 and canceling plans to index tax rates to keep inflation from moving people into higher brackets.

"At some point Ronald Reagan is going to have to realize this is not a movie," Askew said. "In 1984, Ronald Reagan is going to ride off into the sunset."

Most of the potential candidates focused on domestic problems, particularly the economy. Cranston was the only candidate to speak almost exclusively on the arms race.

Sens. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, Gary Hart of Colorado and John Glenn of Ohio made their pitches to the party officials Friday.

Neither Sen. Edward M. Kennedy nor former Vice President Walter F. Mondale attended the meeting, but both were represented by aides who lobbied party officials.

Askew has been in all 50 states since he began traveling more than a year ago to gather support for his presidential bid.

Cranston told party officials that in the past 10 months he has visited 34 states, including five trips to Iowa and seven to New Hampshire — the first two states to choose delegates to the 1984 nominating convention. He said he's spent 118 days, a total of 3,000 hours, on the road.

Cranston said he hopes to have the support of most of California's delegation.

Vietnam veterans parade with pride

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of Vietnam veterans paraded with pride Saturday where anti-war protesters marched a decade earlier, then dedicated a new national monument honoring themselves and their 57,939 missing and fallen comrades.

They marched to the newly lain turf before the gleaming black granite walls of the monument bearing the names of Americans who did not return from Vietnam and — in speech and song and silent reflection — paid homage to the war's victims and the 2.7 million who served and came home to an indifferent welcome from a divided nation.

Some former soldiers were almost overcome by the emotion of the moment. A few wept openly and took comfort from the embrace of their buddies. But it was a joyful occasion for most.

The crowd cheered the marchers and the marchers cheered the crowd.

The day turned cold and windy, and alternately gray and sunstreaked. The mood changed, too: once tearful and somber, a moment later, joyful and triumphant.

U.S. Park Police estimated that 150,000 people watched the parade and attended the monument dedication, but that estimate seemed high to other observers. The crowd along the line of march was sparse and many bleacher seats were empty.

They marched down Constitution Avenue in ragged columns, waving little American flags, and led by white-haired Gen. William C. Westmoreland, wearing a raincoat and carrying two little flags. The old Vietnam commanding general marched with the Alabama contingent at the head of the parade.

One marching ex-GI waved and grinned and shouted, "Thank you, people." And in the crowd, a woman held aloft a sign: "Thanks, yanks."

On the same street in May, 1971, thousands of war protesters fought with police and were felled by teargas in the most violent Washington demonstration of the era. Some carried the yellow and red flag of the National Liberation Front and chanted: "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh; the NLF is going to win."

But the national divisions of hawks and doves were faded memories Saturday.

Veterans walked in state units — hundreds from New York, 20 from Alaska, three legless men in wheelchairs leading Indiana's contingent, men in white shirts and three-piece suits from south Boston, a band from Delaware playing, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again."

At the dedication, the highest government official present was Everett Alvarez Jr., deputy director of the Veterans Administraion and a prisoner in North Vietnam for 8½ years — longer than any other captive.

President Reagan took no part. He visited the Soviet embassy to pay his condolences on the death of Leonid I. Brezhnev, then flew to Chicago for a memorial service for Nancy Reagan's stepfather, Dr. Loyal Davis, who died Aug. 14.

"There was a time long past," he said, "when words would have mattered more. But at this place — for all time — it is our hearts that speak. God bless this nation and those who have honored it with their service."

Jan Scruggs, the former infantryman who conceived the idea for a monument, declared, "Now all Americans can agree that Vietnam veterans deserve recognition and appreciation for their sacrifices."

"When your country called, you came. When your country refused you honor, you remained silent. With time, our nation's wounds have healed. We have finally come to appreciate your sacrifices and to pay you your tribute you so richly deserve."

A few signs of bitterness remained. One fatigue-clad marcher, George Robinson, 35, of Long Island, N.Y., carried a placard that read: "57,000 Killed in Vain. Shame, Horror, Deceit, Treachery." He told a reporter: "We all have children now, and we don't want them to march off like tin soldiers without thinking again."

About 200 members of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, a protest group from the war era, chanted "Hell no, I won't go" and carried banners that read: "We won't be fooled again" and "We want jobs."

The monument was built from $7 million in public contributions. It takes the form of a wide V. The walls are 250 feet long. They are only a few inches high at the edges but descend 10 feet into the ground at the point where they meet.

Over the last few days, thousands of veterans and survivors of those named on the wall have visited the monument. Some placed flowers and lit candles at the base of the walls and some taped newspaper obituaries beside the names of loved ones.

Cable TV officials to go before City Council

Tall City TV Cable will report to Midland City Council on Tuesday its progress on a rebuilding program here.

Representatives of the cable system are scheduled to talk at 5 p.m. in City Hall Council Chambers. About a year ago, Tall City officials announced a building program which would expand service to Midland subscribers.

The rest of the agenda deals primarily with routine items with only a few planning and zoning hearings.

The council will discuss extending a sewer line in exchange for land to be used as a site for a new fire station and also the option of purchasing a site. Voters approved two new substations north of Loop 250 in the April city election.

City-owned vacant tracts near the intersection of Big Spring and North Marienfeld streets will be looked at as to how they can be used.

West Texas Consultants will present a request for a drainage basin. And owners abutting Sinclair Avenue from Midland Drive to Loop 250 will discuss the assessment paving project.

Aviation Department will ask to levy a ramp parking fee for aircraft based at Midland Air Park.

Parks Department should outline what work needs to be done if J.T. Dunkin and Associates is hired to update the Parks System Master Plan.

Other items will deal with raising taxicab rates, awarding a contract for landscaping at the Municipal Court Building, requiring right of way for street drainage improvements along North Big Spring and granting a franchise for a limousine service to Schaler Rolls-Royce.

And the council will consider buying an 85-foot elevating platform with a five-man deluxe cab for the Fire Department.

By MACK SISK

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The FBI used unlimited personnel and millions of dollars to investigate the first assassination of a federal judge in modern times, and the legwork has produced reams of testimony and hundreds of exhibits in the trial of three people accused in the slaying.

The prosecution's case has been spiked with testimony about purported murder contracts, dope dealing, high-stakes gambling, plots to escape from prison, coverups, jealousy, fear, narcotics addiction, and Charles V. Harrelson's extramarital love affairs.

On trial with Harrelson are his wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, 41, who already has been sentenced to three years on a 1981 conviction for using a fictitious name to buy the alleged murder weapon 12 days before Wood's death; and Elizabeth Chagra, 28, who allegedly delivered stacks of $100 bills that prosecutors say was the "payoff."

Prosecutors presented 83 witnesses and introduced 281 exhibits gathered in a three-year-long investigation that was estimated to have cost at least $4.7 million by the time the indictment was returned April 15.

THE FEDERAL MARSHAL'S Service spent another $3 million protecting other federal judges and prosecutors after Wood was gunned down outside his San Antonio townhome on May 29, 1979.

Cost of the trial, expected to last at least nine weeks with the government paying for lawyers and other expenses of two of the defendants, is expected to drive the total to well over $10 million.

Federal authorities have been reluctant to discuss cost of a trial that FBI Director William Webster said should send a signal to the underworld that killing federal judges will not be tolerated.

FBI agents spent $1 million just for secretly taping the telephone and visiting room conversations of convicted narcotics trafficker Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra at the Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary.

Defense attorneys are expected to take up to three weeks countering the massive government case.

Chagra, 39, allegedly paid Harrelson, 44, a $250,000 fee to murder Wood, who was known as "Maximum John" for the long prison terms he meted out to convicted dope dealers.

Chagra's narcotics trial originally had been scheduled to begin in Wood's court the day the 63-year-old judge was shot in the back.

EVEN BEFORE THE current trial began, Chagra and Harrelson had been convicted of other crimes and handed prison sentences long enough that they would be old men by the time they would be eligible for parole.

Chagra was convicted of criminal enterprise and sentenced to 30 years without parole by Chief U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions, who presided two months after Wood was killed. Harrelson was sentenced to 40 years in state penitentiary terms last year for narcotics, weapons, gambling paraphernalia and bond-jumping offenses filed against him while he was still being investigated in the Wood killing.

If the two men are convicted of murder of a federal judge, mandatory life sentences would be tacked onto their current prison terms.

Chagra will be tried separately later because his younger brother refused to testify against him.

El Paso attorney Joseph Chagra, 36, pleaded guilty to murder conspiracy in the case in exchange for a 10-year prison sentence, then appeared as the star government witness, telling the jury that Jimmy Chagra and Harrelson both admitted to him their alleged roles in the murder plot.

TERESA STARR JASPER, 25, said she flew to Las Vegas and picked up a briefcase full of $100 bills that Harrelson told her was "a gambling debt." She also said that her mother became jealous when she engaged in "an affair" with Harrelson, her stepfather.

Joseph Chagra said his brother was "insanely jealous" and said Jimmy Chagra once accused him and Elizabeth Chagra of being sexually promiscuous.

Last week, the government played secret FBI tapes of Harrelson's conversations, showing that he was simultaneously romancing four women, including his wife and stepdaughter, talking to them about escaping and taking them away to a desert isle, while advising them not to talk to the FBI.

Trying to put Harrelson's movements in what they said was chronological order, prosecutors presented a blown-up May 1979 calendar depicting a series of long-distance telephone calls, parking records and allegedly false motel registration forms.

The government charges that Harrelson accepted a murder contract from Jimmy Chagra at Binion's Horseshoe Casino in Las Vegas, then "stalked" Wood 14 days at Midland and San Antonio, and shot the judge about 8:30 a.m. on May 29, 1979.

WHILE THE BULK of the evidence has been against Harrelson, Mrs. Jasper presented the strongest testimony against her mother, telling the jury she delivered the stack of money to the Harrelsons in Corpus Christi on June 25, 1979. She said her mother and Harrelson told her to keep the transaction secret and "take it to my grave."

Mrs. Harrelson, who said she tried to kill herself with a drug overdose since the investigation began, faces the lightest possible sentence of the three defendants. If convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice, she would be subject to a maximum five years imprisonment and $5,000 fine, in addition to the three years she already has received for using a phony name to buy the alleged murder rifle.

Florida man free on bond in Valley embezzlement case

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A Coral Gables, Fla., man is free on bond in an embezzlement case that also involves the owner of the McAllen-based Jefferson Savings and Loan Association and the owner's father.

Padreda was released after he paid $4,000 of his $200,000 bond.

Padreda, savings and loan owner Guillermo Hernandez-Cartaya and Marcelo Hernandez of Brownsville were named in a four-count indictment returned by a federal grand jury last week. The men were accused of conspiracy to embezzle $500,000 from the federally insured savings and loan.

The indictment said the conspiracy took place between Sept. 1, 1977 and about March 1, 1978.

Hernandez-Cartaya, former director of the National Bank of South Florida in Hialeah and former head of the Coral Gables-based World Finance Corp., was released from jail Wednesday after he posted 10 percent of his $500,000 bond. Hernandez, 71, was freed on a $200,000 personal recognizance bond.

The indictment said that in December 1977, Padreda was president of Capri Properties, Inc., a firm listed in the document as having an account at the Biscayne Bank of Miami, Fla.

CRIME STOPPERS

Innocent people killed on Texas roads because it's easy to ignore DWI problem

The Texas Crime Stoppers Advisory Council wants you to know some facts about drunk driving in Texas.

— One half of all traffic accidents involve a driver who has been drinking.

— It is estimated that on any weekday in Texas, one out of 50 drivers has been drinking or is drunk. On weekends, this ratio climbs to one in 10.

— Last year there were 36,774 reported accidents in Texas that were the result of DWI — more than 100 per day.

— 23% of all traffic deaths in 1981 involved drunk driving. The ten year total of DWI related deaths in Texas is 19,000 — more than the population of many Texas cities.

Texans should be outraged at this senseless destruction by drunk drivers. For too long, society has permitted innocent persons to be killed on our highways, because it is easier to ignore the DWI problem than to face it.

People have been led to believe that DWI is not really a crime, and the drunken driver is not really a criminal, but this is not true.

For the month of November, the Texas Crime Stoppers Advisory Council is focusing its statewide "Crime of the Month" on DWI. No reward is offered. Instead, the Council urges you to support local and statewide efforts to reduce the number of drunk drivers on Texas highways.

Every Texan must make a personal committment to help put an end to this tragedy. Together we can prevent the drunk driver from spreading further death and destruction on our highways.

Cancer kills grandfather of boy hero

He was staying overnight with his grandparents in Galveston when a fire caused by a bathroom heater began filling the house with smoke.

Heeding a fire safety tip he learned in school, Nolan helped the elderly couple out of the burning house.

The third grader received a recognition certificate from the Parent Teachers Association at Westlawn Elementary School here for his bravery. He also was honored by the Galveston City Council and the Galveston Fire Department.

Morris Hughes, 72, had been bedridden with cancer.

In the fire, Hughes suffered third-degree burns on his hand and legs and was hospitalized at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston. But hospital officials told the family that the cancer took his life.

Nolan remembers he woke up Nov. 6, coughing and struggling to breathe. He said he first thought he was dreaming.

The boy crawled on the floor to avoid smoke and went into his grandmother's room. He instructed his 69-year-old grandmother, Mary Hughes, to get down on her hands and knees, and they crawled to the flame-engulfed room where his grandfather was sleeping.

The boy and his grandmother were unharmed.

"If it wasn't for Nolan, we all would have died in the fire," Mrs. Hughes said. "He's the one that called the fire department.

Most Seminole citizens welcome hard-working Mennonites

By RANDALL HACKLEY

SEMINOLE (AP) — Some 1,300 Mennonite immigrants now claim this dusty West Texas town as home, double what it was three years ago when a special Congressional act allowed 653 members of the religious sect to be admitted from Mexico and Canada as American citizens.

The black-garbed group has doubled in size since the August peso devaluation halved their Mexican farming colony's income in Chihuahua, forcing about 100 families to trek to this cotton-rich county in hopes of finding work and solace with fellow emigres, says former Seminole mayor Bob Clark.

But while most Seminole citizens welcome the Mennonites, saying they work hard and that "America needs more like them," the greeting has been tempered by acts such as the painting of a garbage can outside one of the sect's schools. It reads: "Go home, Mennonites!"

The graffiti-emblazoned trash bin near one of three Mennonite schools in this community of 6,000 is a crude reminder that sect members are considered foreigners, says teacher John Friesen.

"Some don't like us," Friesen said.

Others who have seen the devout Mennonites work and pray beg to differ.

"THEY'RE AN IMPRESSIVE lot — industrious and good-hearted. America would benefit by having more like them," says motel manager Shari McDade.

As industrious as the sect seems, they started out in Texas three years ago under a cloud of misfortune and financial duress.

The reclusive religious sect, 600,000-strong worldwide, took a colony of members from Chihuahua — 300 miles south of El Paso, Texas — and Winnepeg, Canada, and decided to settle in a newer, more benevolent climate. Some members claimed the Mexican government harassed their dairy and honey bee business ventures. Others professed a weariness of Canadian winters.

Under Bishop Henry Reimer, they settled in the spring of 1979 in the windswept West Texas plains near Seminole. The group pooled their resources and deposited $455,000 as down payment on a $1.7 million, 6,400-acre ranch outside Seminole.

The reason? The Rev. Reimer was told by real estate agents if the Mennonites bought land in Texas, they would be guaranteed permanent American citizenship. The U.S. government told them after the sale, however, that buying land was no guarantee of citizenry.

Further, the group was ordered to leave the country within 60 days because their visas had expired. To deepen the Mennonite's misery, water rights to irrigate their land for a cotton crop belonged to an oil company.

Facing high monthly land payments, coupled with no revenues from land that was useless unless it had water rights, the group's financial reserves ran out.

BY APRIL 1979, the group was bankrupt and the Seven-O Ranch was forfeited. The ranch was later auctioned off.

Internally, the religious group reacted fiercely, deposing Reimer in a drastic move and named four new church leaders.

The matter of pending deportation was eventually brought to the attention of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas. He successfully petitioned Congress to admit 653 members facing imminent deportation.

The group, founded by Menno Simons in Zurich in 1525, maintains conservative religious colonies worldwide, from the Soviet Union to Paraguay and the United States. Here, they appear to have overcome their financial loss in the aborted land deal.

Today, Seminole bustles with busy Mennonites. Some are visible in their traditional black garb. Others are blending in slowly, wearing blue jeans and driving American pickup trucks. In the past, Mennonites avoided all modern amenities.

"Mennonites are going through culture change right now," said Friesen. "The ones who have television watch television and others aren't as strict now on their children as they were on themselves."

ABOUT 150 CHILDREN are in three area Mennonite schools, being taught privately with prayer periods and sternly warned to be "humble, love others, do good deeds and avoid lies, cheating, swearing, laziness and disrespectfulness."

The first Mennonite also graduated from the local public high school this year, Clark adds.

Dallas drive-in movie festival celebrates 'King of the 'B's'

By KATHRYN BAKER

DALLAS (AP) — Generations of Americans have grown up on Roger Corman movies — the staple of the afternoon matinee and the late-night drive-in since the mid-'50s.

Fitting, then, that the First World Drive-in Movie Festival here was held in his honor.

And they were advertised with such tantalizing hyperbole as, "The movie that will make you sick, sick, sick!," "The picture you'll always remember, because you'll never be able to forget it!"

HE IS known among film buffs as the "King of the 'B's.'"

"I have never made a 'B' movie in my life," Corman, 56, huffed in mock insult to a crowd of movie lovers who gathered to hear him expound on his life's work. He said the 'B' movie was a specific Depression-era film that went out in the '40s.

He does not, however, object to being called an "exploitation" filmmaker. "It doesn't bother me in any way. I feel that making movies is exploitation."

His maverick style and independent production gave first breaks to such now famous directors as Martin Scorsese and Francis Ford Coppola.

Corman's early films featured debuts of unknown actors like Robert DeNiro, Jack Nicholson, Ellen Burstyn, Talia Shire, Bruce Dern.

IT IS difficult to connect the soft-spoken, Oxford-educated Corman with films like "Stakeout on Dope Street" and "Machine-Gun Kelly." But he is the undisputed king of the low-budget film.

This year, the average feature film budget has skyrocketed to $9.4 million, so it is almost inconceivable that Corman made his first picture for $18,000. It was a commercial success.

He began his own independent production company in 1954 after a major film studio rejected him as a director with the critique, "He doesn't know how to spend money."

The biggest budget on a Corman film to date was $2 million for "Battle Beyond the Stars." He will break that record soon, though, spending $5 million to produce "Spiderman."

SOME OF his early efforts included risky money-saving techniques a Bergman or Renoir would likely find artistically questionable.

For instance, in the first film he directed, "Five Guns West," Corman could not afford a whole Indian tribe to do battle with his cowboy heroes.

"So I bought a stock shot from Paramount for $50," he said. "And I had one scout break off from the tribe. So I only actually had to hire one Indian."

The first Corman production, "Monster from the Ocean Floor," was filmed in six days in Malibu, Calif. and opened with a wide shot of the coast.

"If you look closely," said Corman, "you can see a little truck driving up the Pacific Coast Highway. Then a voice comes on and says, 'Deep within the uncharted regions of the Yucatan...'"

HE USED the same footage of a burning house in several of his horror films. When he wearied of "that damn house burning time after time," he had it flooded instead.

Corman admitted that he has pulled pictures that bombed out of distribution, re-titled them and shipped them back out to an unsuspecting public. His company picked up a several-year-old Italian film, renamed it "Screamers," and released it this year with an ad campaign that cautioned, "Warning: You will actually see a man turned inside out!"

You will not see a man turned inside out.

Flight director Jay T. Cox, right, along with the other controllers are watching television from space as the Canadian satellite is launched from the cargo bay of shuttle Columbia on Friday.

Astronaut's illness may delay space walk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Mission specialist William Lenoir, suffering from nausea, called in sick on Saturday — prompting flight officials to put off for one day the space walk he was scheduled to take early today with another space shuttle crewmen.

Lenoir became the sixth of NASA's first 12 shuttle astronauts to be struck with motion sickness, the malaise of weightlessness. He and Joseph Allen had already unstowed their equipment for the outdoors exercise when Houston sent word of the postponement.

"We looked at it and said let's give them another day and not push it," said flight director John Cox.

The space walk is the only important flight objective remaining for the crew of Columbia before their return Tuesday. Shuttle communicator Jon McBride told the astronauts that Mission Control was taking advantage of flight "flexibility" in hopes Lenoir would be fully recovered for the strenuous, 3½-hour space walk.

"The report we had was he wasn't up to 100 percent yet," Cox said. "Right now he's on the mend."

The flight director said that, if it became absolutely necessary, Allen might take the space walk alone. "We would like to do it, and do it with two men," he said, "but we would go ahead with one."

Cox said also that extending the flight by a day — or even two — to get in a two-man space walk "is always an option" but no consideration had yet been given to that. Columbia has enough "consumables" aboard for at least two extra days.

On the shuttle's third flight, bad weather at the landing site caused NASA officials to extend the flight by one day.

Lead director Tommy Holloway said the mission agenda provided "no overriding reason" not to delay the space walk — originally scheduled for 7 a.m. CST. "If it becomes prudent, we will wait," he told reporters.

"We're looking forward to the EVA — tomorrow," commander Vance Brand said pointedly on Saturday. Communications with Earth were done for the day before Jon McBride broke the silence to tell Brand the decision to swap today's activities with Monday's.

"That's affirmative," said Brand.

If Lenoir had to be sick, Saturday was a good day for it. So little work was scheduled that the astronauts pressed Houston not once, but twice, for news of home. The headlines hadn't penetrated Mission Control, however, and an official was sent off for an Associated Press summary.

"The biggest news is the new secretary-general of the Communist Party" in the Soviet Union, flight communicator Michael Coats finally told the astronauts. He also read items about Poland's Lech Walesa, the march of Vietnam veterans and the National Football League strike. He ticked off some college games, promising scores later. "Sure appreciate that," said pilot Robert Overmyer. Indianan Joe Allen asked for the Wabash-Depauw score.

Earlier, Overmyer had offered condolences to the Soviet people for Wednesday's death of Leonid Brezhnev.

"There's a little known story that I'll tell you," he told Mission Control, about "how President Brezhnev...wearing my silver astronaut pin." Overmyer was on the Apollo-Soyuz 1975 support crew and made several trips to the Soviet Union. At a Kremlin reception, he recalled, "The Soviet delegation gave the American delegation a number of items. We weren't prepared and I took off my silver astronaut pin" for Brezhnev.

It was Brand, himself a member of the Apollo-Soyuz flight crew, who summoned NASA medical chief Dr. Sam Poole for a midmorning medical conference.

Poole later told reporters that Lenoir and Overmyer both had suffered nausea but that Overmyer recovered on launch day, Thursday. Lenoir, he said, felt well the first day out, became ill Friday and vomited after breakfast Saturday.

Poole said if that should happen while the mission specialist was in his space suit and helmet, "it would be a most aggravating situation," adding, "We're going to be pretty cautious here."

Allen could take the walk alone, but that would bend mission rules which prefer a two-man EVA.

The illness of the two crewmen had no impact, of course, on the shuttle's main mission, which was to deploy two commercial satellites. The satellites, one for an American firm, the other for a Canadian company, were placed into their proper orbit exactly as scheduled, satisfying NASA's first commercial shuttle contract — a $17 million commitment.

Columbia's five-day flight is to end Tuesday at 6:25 a.m. Pacific time on a concrete runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Although all astronauts have been jet pilots — including the mission specialists on this flight and the scientists on Skylab in the early 1970s — many have been hit with motion sickness.

Asked if the walk could go ahead today if Lenoir had any symptoms at all, Poole replied: "We know man can do complicated and delicate things in space even with motion sickness, but they're aggravated by these symptoms. We'll have to make that judgment later after talking with the crew."

It's been nine years since Americans have walked in space.

Columbia's third day in space started inauspicously. The breakfast cook was all thumbs.

"It's unbelievable the amount of eggs we've got floating all over the middeck," said Overmyer, the cook for the day. "I'm getting some of them in my mouth. This has got to be the world's biggest challenge."

He said he had overcooked the eggs and that they had floated loose when he opened the bag. On the food warmer, he reported:

"Every time I open up, everything comes floating out. It's funny as the devil when you watch somebody do it, but it's frustrating when you do it yourself."

'I think I'm that guy today," Overmyer replied.

Astronauts see ghostly glow

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Astronauts Joseph Allen and Robert Overmyer tried Saturday to photograph the ghostly glow that envelops the space shuttle while it is in orbit, but they were unsure if their cameras captured the mysterious light.

The glow, described by a NASA spokesman as "the space version of St. Elmo's fire," was found in photos taken on two earlier space shuttle missions, but cannot be seen by the eye.

"We've got to find out what causes it because it could play hell with some of the experiments (in the future)," said E. L. Michel, the mission manager for experiments at the Johnson Space Center.

The glow has no known effect on the operation of the shuttle, but it could cause future problems when the craft is used as a platform for sensitive astronomy experiments.

Allen and Overmyer focused two film cameras and two video camera on the aft end of the spacecrarft Saturday while it was in darkness.

"According to our (TV) monitors, they're not picking up any glow at all," said Allen. "There's no obvious indication that we're seeing it."

Officials said it was hoped that the film cameras picked up the faint light.

By The Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Both sides stared each other down. None of the heavy hitters flinched. No one blinked.

And, in the end, no one compromised either: they bucked the problem to President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, as perhaps was inevitable.

At first, the much-publicized three-day hearings by the 15-member National Commission on Social Security Reform appeared to have a chance at going beyond the rhetoric that, yes, there was a problem and that it approximated a funding shortfall of between $150 bilion and $200 billion by the end of this decade.

During some of the sessions, the spirited discussions were compared by some to a labor-management bargaining session.

But that was misleading. This was only a warmup for next February's start of House Ways and Means Committee deliberations in which painful and politically unpopular steps must be taken to shore up Social Security.

Despite the presence on the advisory committee of major House and Senate tax-writing leaders and the inclusion of top spokesman from both labor and business, the two most influential persons were missing: Reagan and O'Neill.

True, the Gray Panthers' Maggie Kuhn and the various retired citizens power blocs both picketed and passed out lobbying positions. True, the political temperature climbed more than once while tax-or-cut options were debated.

But there was no real political pressure equivalent to the midnight hours before a contract expires as in a labor-management bargaining session.

One influential factor that lessened even what pressure there was came in the form of a "turf" letter from Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, ostensibly aimed not at the 15 commission members but at the full House membership.

"I am writing to urge you to 'keep your powder dry' until we can analyze and bring into perspective options presented by the commission and others," Rostenkowski said.

"After 18 months of partisan bickering, we all bear responsibility for restoring national confidence in the durability of social security, and, more critically, to assure the elderly that their benefits are secure. That means putting to rest the notions that we either don't have to do anything to shore up the system, or that we have to make radical alterations in the benefit and tax formulas," he wrote.

That was enough to get the commission members off the hook, as well.

"I think there is a lot of validity to that," Senate Finance Chairman Bob Dole said as he contemplated the commission's likely recess with no concrete recommendations.

"I'll be a member of the (tax-writing House-Senate conference commmittee which will reconcile the two final proposals). I sort of hate to lock myself out of options down the line," Dole said.

In addition, he said, the 81 new members of Congress should have their own say-so after being sworn in.

Why weren't votes taken on such issues as cutting Social Security benefits or raising payroll taxes?

"We don't want to further polarize it," Dole said.

Fire destroys Boston landmark building

BOSTON (AP) — A nine-alarm fire that officials believe was set jumped from a vacant building early Saturday and destroyed a large octagonal brick building that had been designated a landmark.

Recent fires previously had damaged both buildings in Eliot Square and both were vacant, leading Fire Commissioner George Paul to believe the fire was set.

The fire, the second major blaze in the Roxbury area in less than two days, started in a vacant, four-story brick building on Bartlett Street, and was spread by high winds to the octagonal Cox building.

Churches can't be used as sanctuaries

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A plan to use Roman Catholic churches as sanctuaries for illegal Central American refugees won't stop the government from taking action, immigration officials say.

"Sanctuaries in churches went out in the Middle Ages, so there is no such thing," James Rink of the Milwaukee office of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service said Friday.

Archbishop Rembert Weakland announced Thursday his approval of the program at St. John Cathedral and St. Benedict the Moor parishes in downtown Milwaukee and Cristo Rey parish in Racine.

Judge blocks surgical removal of bullet

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal judge has blocked the surgical removal of a bullet from a crime suspect's shoulder because it would violate the man's constitutional rights.

Prosecutors want the bullet for evidence in the trial of Rudolph Lee Jr., scheduled for Wednesday. He is charged with attempting to rob and shooting a market owner July 18.

U.S. District Judge Robert Merhige Jr. said Friday he was "appalled" at the prospect of doctors "rendering a person unconscious, cutting him open, and probing around inside his body for evidence which might, or indeed might not, aid them in convicting him of a crime."

Trapper released on $100,000 bond

CALDWELL, Idaho (AP) — A Nevada trapper convicted last month of voluntary manslaughter in the slaying of two Idaho game wardens has been released from jail under $100,000 bond.

Claude Dallas, who was released Friday, will remain free until Dec. 1, the tentative sentencing date set by District Judge Edward Lodge.

Dallas had been prosecuted on first-degree murder charges for the January 1981 shooting deaths of game wardens Conley Elms and William Pogue, but following a four-week trial, a jury convicted the bearded Virginia native on two counts of voluntary manslaughter instead.

Deported baby will be returned to family

DENVER (AP) — An American-born baby who was deported to Mexico during a raid by federal immigration agents will be returned to his family in Colorado, authorities say.

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service said Friday that 19-month-old Jaime Lovato would be brought back to Colorado by his maternal aunt, who now is caring for him in Mexico.

The child, the son of two illegal aliens fighting to gain American citizenship from their home in Craig, is himself a U.S. citizen by virtue of his birth in this country.

Woman awarded $1 million in rape case

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 20-year-old woman has been awarded $1.05 million by a jury that found the managers of an apartment complex liable for the woman's rape and stabbing because a sliding-glass door lock was improperly repaired.

The Fort Worth jury Friday agreed that the apartment management was negligent when it covered a small hole in the door with a metal plate. Police said the woman's attacker, who was convicted of aggravated rape, pried the metal covering off the door with a screwdriver and gained access to the lock.

VA director's office nailed shut by vets

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The doors to the office of Gerald Moore, director of the Veterans Administration regional office here, were nailed shut by four Vietnam veterans.

Moore said the men told him the action Friday was a "personal statement" about veterans' needs for jobs, and treatment for problems caused by war-releated stress and exposure to the Agent Orange defoliant.

Plans to beef up embassy security behind schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plans to improve security at U.S. embassies, made after the hostage-taking in Teheran, are falling far behind schedule, according to a report by the General Accounting Office.

"State Department officials overestimated the number of posts they could improve each year," the GAO report said. "Inadequate planning, coordination, and property management caused delays in the implementation of security improvements."

The State Department first told Congress it would upgrade security at 25 posts a year for five years, according to the report by Congress' investigative arm.

That would take care of about half of all U.S. diplomatic stations overseas. Two years later, the GAO found that work had been completed at only four posts, with a fifth almost done.

AT THE time the report was written this past summer, major construction was under way at nine posts with work due to start at four more by the end of this year, the report said.

Names of particular posts were censored, but the GAO report drew a picture of disorganization at several of them.

The agency's report said it had made use of at least one report from the State Department's own inspector general, which described conditions at a post called "the most vulnerable U.S. facility in that country" in October 1981.

The inspector general was quoted as saying:

"...With the threat potential remaining high, very little has been done to decrease the vulnerability of U.S. diplomatic personnel and facilities... Support from the Department has been inadequate ...For example, inquiries directed to the Department from the posts were largely ignored or inadequately answered."

ESTIMATES OF THE total cost have risen to some $300 million from the original $192 million estimate, the GAO said, with less protection for 55 posts foreseen than originally planned. It suggested that as much as 10 years will be needed to do the job, and that it is unlikely 70 posts will be completed in the first five years, that is, by Sept. 30, 1984.

The State Department recently issued new guidelines to its people, including 12,000 to 15,000 overseas, on what to do if they are taken hostage. The guidelines point out that their captors may want to exploit them. They warn against signing anti-American statements or talking about classified information.

According to State Department figures, acts of international terrorism rose from 142 in 1968 to 709 last year, and a third of the latest targets were Americans.

"Personnel at posts already surveyed were becoming uneasy because of the time elapsed between surveys and implementation," the GAO report said.

The report was submitted Sept. 30 to Secretary of State George P. Shultz, and made reference to a statment Shultz had made that a report about actions to beef up security must be submitted to two Congressional committees by the end of this month.

JOSEPH REAP, a State Department spokesman, said Friday the report will be ready on time and that he will have no further comment until it is submitted.

The State Department, in a reply partly incorporated in the GAO report, said it could not accept a general statement that the program had met with delays. It noted that some high-risk posts have been closed and some construction had been completed.

But the GAO replied that delays have occurred due to "inadequate planning, coordination and problems with delivering material..."

Vessey: Cutting defense budget not good idea

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the U.S. joint chiefs of staff Friday said "I don't know whether we'd win or not" in a war with the Soviet Union.

In his first on-the-record meeting with reporters since he became the United States' top military officer last July 1, Gen. John W. Vessey Jr. told a questioner that this was not a good time to reduce the defense budget as a gesture of goodwill to the new leadership in the Kremlin.

President Leonid Brezhnev, who was general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, the most powerful post in the USSR, died Wednesday. Friday it was announced that Yuri Andropov, former longtime head of the KGB state security/secret police apparatus, would succeed to the top party post.

Vessey noted that Brezhnev had pushed defense spending up to 12 to 14 percent of the Soviet gross national product.

"I don't think we'll see any changes," he said. "Those programs are on the road."

In further explanation of why a cut in the U.S. defense budget would, in his opinion, be untimely, he said this country had "neglected" its defenses for a decade and now has to rebuild them.

As for possible changes in Soviet policy and attitude toward the rest of the world, the first indication could come in Afghanistan where 100,000 Soviet troops are now trying to crush anti-government rebels, he said.

Suggesting that the Soviets had not read the long and painful history of British efforts to subdue Afghanistan, Vessey offered the Kremlin this advice:

"The smartest thing they could do would be to declare themselves the victors and march out."

The Soviets invaded Afghanistan in December 1979 with approximately 50,000 troops. Even with a doubling of their forces, they have been unable to restore order and make the puppet regime in Kabul able to stand on its own feet.

When asked about a possible U.S.-Soviet conflict, Vessey replied at length.

"I don't think we should march out and start one, because we have great confidence we'd win," he said. "I am confident our forces would do very well.

"I would not go into a war with the Soviet Union comfortably. We have things we need to do to strengthen our forces. We only want forces to deter.

"I don't know whether we'd win or not. We don't want a war."

Because of the change in the Kremlin leadership, Vessey said he does not expect rapid progress in the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START) or in the negotiations on theater nuclear forces in Europe. Progress, however, could come in the meeting next spring, he said.

Asked about Andropov, the general said the new Soviet party chief "has been a detente man" as well as head of the KGB for 15 years. He noted, too, that Andropov was ambassador to Hungary when Soviet troops invaded that country to crush an anti-Soviet revolt.

On other subjects in the news, Vessey made these observations:

— He doesn't see China and the USSR becoming great friends, but reduced tensions between the two would be good for world peace.

— Iran has suffered "grievous losses" in its war with Iraq, although it has regained most of the territory it lost in the early days of the fighting.

— It "doesn't bother me" that there is a higher percentage of blacks in the armed services than there is in the general population.

Owen Bieber

DETROIT (AP) — Owen Bieber, chosen to replace Douglas Fraser as head of the United Auto Workers, takes on a union whose ranks have been ravaged by layoffs and demoralized by a 3½-year domestic car sales slump and plant closings.

Bieber, a vice president of the union since 1980, was chosen Friday from among three candidates by the 26-member UAW executive board. The choice was approved by the 346-member steering committee, composed of union members from the United States and Canada.

The 52-year-old head of the UAW's General Motors Corp. department said the top issues of his presidency include unemployment, especially in the auto industry; the union's dwindling membership; future contract talks at GM and Ford Motor Co.; and the 1984 U.S. presidential election.

The UAW, once second in the nation in membership behind the Teamsters, has slipped to third behind the Food and Commercial Workers union.

There are slightly more than 1.1 million UAW members, down from 1.5 million in the late 1970s, and more declines are expected.

Last week, some 252,000 UAW members employed by the five major domestic automakers were reported on layoff with no date for returning to work. Thousands more already have been dropped from the lists because they have no chance of being called back.

The problem is domestic car sales, which have plunged from 8.31 million in 1979 to 6.2 million last year and total just 4.7 million so far this year. The uncertain U.S. economy and competition from imports, particularly the Japanese, are blamed.

The Big Three carmakers — GM, Ford and Chrysler Corp. — have suffered billions of dollars in losses in the past three years and even GM and Ford received contracts earlier this year that contained concessions from the UAW.

Autoworkers used to the prosperous 1960s and 1970s, when they received hefty boosts in benefits and wages in each contract, grumbled about the need for givebacks. The contract Bieber negotiated at GM in March almost was defeated, with only a slim 52 percent of the workers approving it.

GM and Ford workers will expect to get back those concessions in new contract talks set for September 1984.

Chrysler is another story. Near bankruptcy before federal loan guarantees, supplier and bank aid and worker concessions bailed it out in 1980 and 1981, Chrysler is being struck by Canadian UAW members.

Moose runs through window

LACONIA, N.H. (AP) — A cobbler working in a shoe store was interrupted Saturday by a young moose which crashed through the glass rear door and then escaped through a window.

The moose did surprisingly little damage, considering it spent about an hour inside Melnick's Shoe Store in the Laconia Mall, store owner Kevin Sullivan said.

At one point, it saw its reflection in a mirror and panicked, but only the mirror, the door and the 4-by-8-foot display window were broken, Sullivan said.

Begin seeks support from U.S. Jewish community in California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin sought support from the American Jewish community here Saturday before his first meeting with President Reagan since Israel sent troops into Lebanon.

But he faced strong anti-Israeli sentiment over the Lebanon crisis, and authorities were braced for clashes between Palestinian supporters and militant Jewish groups.

The Committee to Oppose the Begin Visit, a coalition supporting Palestinians, said an end to U.S. aid for Israel would be a key demand of its protest Saturday night outside the Bonaventure Hotel, where Begin was to address 3,000 delegates to the Jewish Federation Council's annual meeting.

Committee spokeswoman Phyllis Bennis said her group also was calling for Palestinian self-determination and complete Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon.

Mordechai Levy of the militant Jewish Defense Organization said he expected about 400 counter-demonstrators to "confront" the pro-Palestinians.

Despite the protests, a top Israeli official said Friday that Begin encountered "not the slightest hint" of erosion of Jewish-American support in a New York meeting with Julius Berman, president of the Conference of Major Jewish Organizations, and several other Jewish leaders.

The official, who asked not to be named, said that immediately after the massacre of Palestinians in two refugees camps outside Beirut in mid-September, there was "unease, concern" among American Jews.

But he said there was "no real wavering in the general support of Israel by the American Jewish community."

Lebanese Christian militiamen allied with Israel are said to have been responsible for the massacre.

Begin, who arrived from New York on Friday amid heavy security, said his main purpose here was to meet with the Jewish community.

He said his White House talks later this week would focus on "bilateral relations and the international situation."

Relations between Jerusalem and Washington have been strained by Israel's continuing refusal to abandon Jewish settlements along the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

Tylenol will be reintroduced, says Johnson & Johnson chairman

By The Hearst Feature Service

Only six weeks after their product was linked to seven cyanide-poisoning deaths in Chicago, the makers of Tylenol announced Thursday that they will begin putting the pain-killer back on store shelves in tamper-proof boxes.

James E. Burke

The deaths have "introduced us to a new form of terrorism, and brought the potential for new fears and concerns closer to our homes," said James E. Burke, chairman of Johnson & Johnson, the parent firm of the makers of Tylenol. Burke spoke at a New York press conference televised over closed circuits to 30 cities.

"We consider it a moral imperative, as well as good business, to restore Tylenol to its pre-eminent position in the market place."

Marketing studies conducted by Johnson & Johnson have led Burke and his associates to believe it is worthwhile for the company to reintroduce the product using the same name.

Johnson & Johnson removed 22 million bottles of Tylenol capsules from store shelves shortly after the seven people died of cyanide poisoning after taking extra-strength Tylenol. The estimated cost of the recall was $100 million, Burke said.

Before the Chicago poisonings, Tylenol controlled an estimated 37 percent of the market. Preliminary results show that figure has already climbed back to 18 percent, Burke said.

The company, Burke announced, will replace all Tylenol capsules thrown away by consumers after the Chicago cyanide poisonings. Consumers wishing to have their capsules replaced may call a special toll-free telephone number set up by the company: (800) 232-2222. He said he had no idea how much the replacement program would cost his company, since it is "totally unprecedented."

The bottles are enclosed in boxes that are sealed at both ends and must be torn open. The cap and neck of the bottle are covered with a tight plastic seal that must be torn away in order to open the cap.

A strong foil seal that covers the mouth of the bottle must be broken in order to remove the capsules.

Dive felt like 'hell' in small place, student says

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A Duke University anesthesiology resident who spent 37 days on a simulated deep-sea dive says it was like "hell in a very small place."

Gary Latson was one of three participants in the last of four "dives" at Duke examining the impact of rates of compression and gas mixtures breathed by divers on their abilities to work at extreme depths.

The last dive at Duke's F.G. Hall Laboratory was aborted at the equivalent of 2,132 feet after Latson experienced severe high pressure nervous syndrome. Officials had hoped to tie the lab's early world-record dive to a simulated depth of 2,250 feet.

"The stresses ganged up on me," said Latson, 26. "I don't want to feel the kinds of things I felt — racing thoughts, delirium, tremors. It wasn't pleasant."

Latson and Steve Porter, a professional diver, and Cmdr. Paul Barry, a Navy doctor, lived 28 days in a metal sphere 90 inches in diameter before transferring to an 18- by 10-foot chamber to complete the dive on Nov. 4.

Barry compared the living quarters with sharing a queen-sized mattress with two other people.

Barry also was sick for a day with dyspnea, or shortness of breath.

"The sensation was there was not enough air in the world to satisfy your desire to breathe," he said. "It feels like your every breath is your last one. I would compare it to drowning."

Barry said it would take some good arguments to convince him to make another dive.

In contrast, Porter said it was his best dive. With three lab descents, including the record-breaking dive Feb. 3, Porter is believed to be the world's most experienced deep diver.

"While he (Latson) was going through this I was having the finest ride of my life — with the exception of Gary," Porter said.

"The impressions of three young men like this ...on a very difficult dive should not prevent further research," said Dr. Peter Bennett, director of the lab.

Bennett emphasized that the high pressure nervous syndrome experienced by Latson was not life-threatening, and said he would work to improve screening procedures to eliminate potential victims.

Draft resisters can still get aid

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Yale University students who lose their federal financial aid because they do not register for the draft will remain eligible for help from the university, school officials say.

But Yale president A. Bartlett Giamatti said Friday that the school aid will cost $3,000 to $4,000 more than the federal help because of higher interest rates. The current rates for federal student loans range from 9 percent to 12 percent.

Effective next July 1, young men who fail to register for the draft will be ineligible for student loans or other financial education assistance offered by the federal government.

But Giamatti said in a statement that Yale will continue its policy of offering loans to needy students who are ineligible for federal assistance.

New drug may eliminate recurring herpes sores

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — An experimental treatment of drugs and mild electrical current shows promise for curbing the recurrence of the painful sores suffered by herpes patients, a researcher says.

The process uses concentrated doses of new antiviral drugs applied directly on the sores, combined with application of a painless electrical current, said Dr. Louis Gangarosa, a professor of oral biology at the Medical College of Georgia.

"I don't know if it will eliminate it (herpes) completly," Gangarosa said. "But I think it may reduce it to the point that it's not that big of a problem."

The incurable disease is characterized by the appearance of painful skin sores that can recur at any time or might never reappear.

Typical treatments for the lesions have included ointments or creams or the use of drugs that cannot be localized on the sores and may have side effects, he said.

The experimental treatment has been used primarily on patients with one of the two types of herpes virus — Type 1, which is associated with cold sores. Tests are planned by the end of the year on Type 2 herpes, which generally is associated with genital sores, although it can infect the mouth.

The approaching holidays make a grim statistic necessary to repeat. The drinking driver is the single major cause of highway deaths and injury. Alcohol is a factor in about half of all fatal motor vehicle crashes. If the holidays present an opportunity to drink socially more often than ordinarily, remember that even a small amount of alcohol causes driving performance to deteriorate. If you have to be given a sobriety test by the side of the highway, it will have already been too late. Before leaving a party, ask yourself if you are in control. Andropov may change foreign, domestic policies

By STEVEN R. HURST

MOSCOW (AP) — Yuri V. Andropov, the new Soviet Communist Party leader, may change his country's foreign and domestic policies despite vows to follow the course set by the late Leonid I. Brezhnev during his 18 years in power.

Experts believe the Soviet economy is in such poor condition that the 68-year-old former KGB secret-police chief may have little choice but to try experiments in free enterprise and decentralization which Brezhnev resisted.

As for foreign policy, Andropov may prove more willing to compromise — but only if the United States signals it is ready to match any concessions.

If Andropov is looking for any conciliatory signal from Washington, he could find it in the announcement Saturday by President Reagan that the United States is lifting sanctions on the Soviet natural-gas pipeline to Western Europe. Reagan imposed the sanctions in response to Moscow's support for martial law in Poland.

WHEN ANDROPOV first was chosen to succeed Brezhnev as head of the ruling party, he showed no sign of dropping the Kremlin's position that it must continue building military strength.

"We know well that the imperialists will never meet one's pleas for peace," he said in his first speech two days after Brezhnev's death Wednesday. "It can only be defended by relying on the invincible might of the Soviet armed forces."

The Friday address to the Communist Party Central Committee dropped all references to Brezhnev's policy of East-West detente and stressed Brezhnev's practice of "ensuring that the country's defense capability meets present day requirements."

But a top Western diplomat on Saturday warned not to place too much significance in Andropov's first foreign policy pronouncements.

"It's too early to think in terms of specific policy changes," said the diplomat, who asked not to be further identified.

ON DOMESTIC policy, Andropov said Friday, "it is our prime duty to accomplish" policies set under Brezhnev's leadership.

One area in which no one expects change is internal dissent. Andropov ran the KGB for 15 years, when virtually all vocal dissidents were jailed, exiled or expelled.

But with the economy expected to show the worst performance since World War II and the nation suffering its fourth consecutive poor grain harvest, Andropov may see the need to at least alter Brezhnev's economic policy.

Diplomatic observers say the system has been plagued by stagnation in decision-making for months because of political uncertainties first raised by Brezhnev's poor health. Many economic managers are said to be disillusioned by the nation's slow industrial growth, forecast this year to be 2.7 percent.

Soviet sources portray Andropov as more flexible than Brezhnev. If so, decentralizing the economy might come easier for him.

WESTERN ECONOMIC analysts think the first step any Soviet leader must take to revive the economy is to give local managers more power. They also say laborers lack incentive, and that some kind of modified capitalism is needed.

Andropov's expertise in Hungary, where he was ambassador during the 1956 uprising, and his subsequent dealings with Eastern European nations may convince him that successful economic reforms adopted there could be useful in the Soviet Union. Hungaria's economic system, which allows some free enterprise, is the healthiest in Eastern Europe.

Foreign policy presents more difficult choices.

The Soviets have no obvious face-saving way out of Afghanistan, where they have sent an estimated 100,000 troops since 1979 to help the Moscow-backed government crush a Moslem uprising.

AS FOR POLAND, Soviet ideology cannot tolerate the Polish Solidarity union, which the Warsaw government suspended under martial law last Dec. 13 and formally outlawed Oct. 8. Solidarity was the only trade union free of government control in the Soviet bloc.

Clues to Brezhnev's death dropped by Soviet media

MOSCOW (AP) — With guesswork and intuition, a Soviet citizen might have figured out that Leonid I. Brezhnev was dead before the official announcement was made — but only if he was watching television and had a stack of old copies of Pravda at his side.

Otherwise, he would have been in the dark like the rest of his countrymen and the world.

As it was, Brezhnev succumbed to a fatal heart attack at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday. But government-controlled media didn't give the word until 11 a.m. the following day.

During the 26-plus hours in between, as far the average Soviet citizen knew, Brezhnev was still leading the country as he had for the past 18 years.

It was yet another example of how information in the Soviet Union is a privilege, not a right, and how it is made available to the man in the street only when the leadership decides the time is right.

Typical of the news reporting in the 26½-hour period between the time of Brezhnev's death and the official announcement was the Wednesday evening edition of Izvestia, the official government newspaper.

A front-page item noted the exchange of telegrams between Brezhnev and Turkish leader Gen. Kenan Evren on Turkey's national day; a front-page editorial on labor achievements cited Brezhnev's exhortation to farmers to work better, and the back page published the text of 14 messages addressed to Brezhnev and Prime Minister Nikolai A. Tikhonov congratulating them on the 65th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

The only thing unusual about all this was that Brezhnev had already been dead for eight hours before people started buying the paper at newstands around the country.

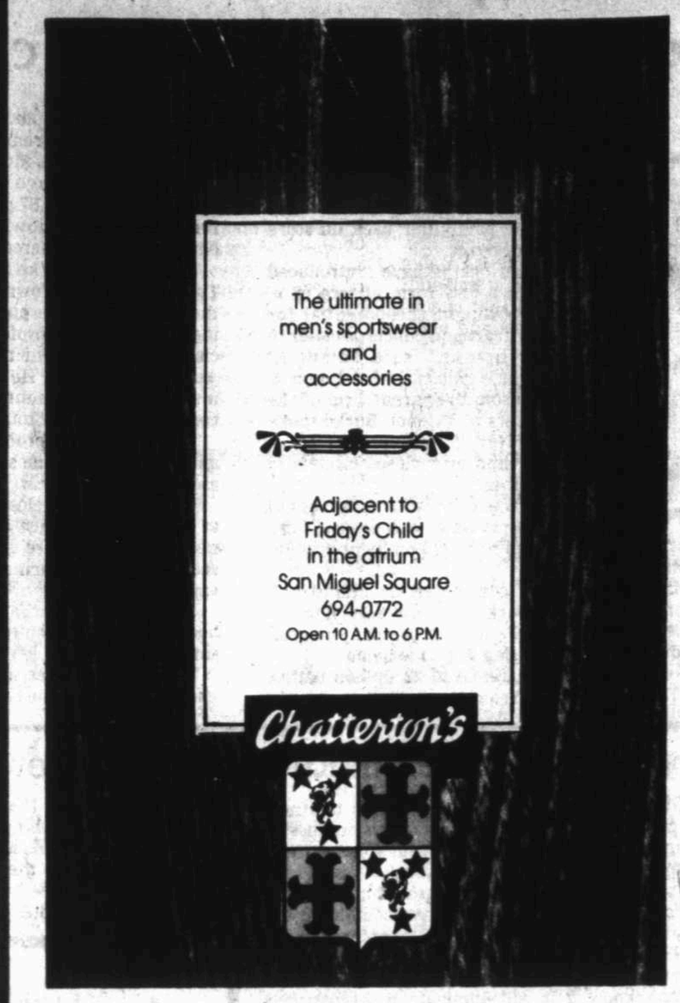

A few hours later, the first clues that something was amiss surfaced.

Rumors began flying that there had been a death in the Kremlin leadership. Most of the guessing centered on Andrei Kirilenko, a long-time member of the ruling Politburo who had been missing from public view for some time and was thought to have retired or to have been ousted.

Next, Soviet television suddenly, and without explanation, canceled a gala concert scheduled for 7:30 p.m. and substituted an old movie about the founder of the Soviet state, Vladimir I. Lenin. Soviet radio started playing funereal music intermittently, fueling the rumors.

Early Thursday morning, the focus of speculation switched from Kirilenko to Brezhnev with publication of the Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda.

Seventy-five Israelis killed in explosion

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel suffered 75 dead in the explosion that leveled its military headquarters in southern Lebanon — the worst disaster in the Jewish state's history — the military command said Saturday.

Fifteen Arabs also were killed in the blast.

Israel set a national day of mourning for Monday and the Israeli state radio said acting Prime Minister Simcha Ehrlich would suggest at Sunday's Cabinet session that flags be flown at half-staff around the country and that special prayers be said at schools and army bases.

The broadcast said Ehrlich had spoken by telepnone with Prime Minister Menachem Begin who was in Los Angeles. When Begin arrived in New York on Thursday to begin a visit to several U.S. cities, he called the blast "a new outrage perpetrated by the enemies of mankind."

The blast Thursday reduced the eight-story building in the southern Lebanese port of Tyre to a mass of rubble, trapping scores of people in the mass of twisted steel and concrete. The town is 15 miles north of Israel.

The frantic search for survivors had been hampered by the amount of debris and rescue workers gave up Saturday afternnon after being satisfied there were no more survivors.

Rescuers found several Israeli survivors who spent more than 24 hours underground suffering from frostbite and exposure. The spokesman said 19 remained hospitalized, six in serious condition.

The latest figures raise the total number of Israelis killed since their June 6 invasion of Lebanon to more than 400.

The worst previous disaster occurred in 1968 when the Israeli submarine Dakar vanished in the Mediterranean Sea with 69 crew members aboard. The cause of the sinking never was determined.

Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, the military chief of staff, told Israel army radio the cause of the Tyre explosion was undetermined and he was waiting for the findings of an inquiry commission set up by the Defense Ministry.

Defense Minister Ariel Sharon had asked for results within a week, but Eytan, who visited the site with Sharon, told army radio the inquiry may take longer than expected. He was to present the Cabinet with the inquiry's preliminary findings Sunday.

Speculation about the cause of the blast included the possibility of a Palestinian guerrilla bomb, an accidental explosion of cooking gas cylinders or the detonation of ammunition stores.

The radio said rescue workers have dug to the ground floor of the building and might soon begin finding clues to the explosion's cause.

PLO chief Yasser Arafat said in an interview broadcast Friday night by the Paris-based Radio Monte Carlo that the Tyre blast was the work of Palestinian guerrillas and their leftist allies still operating behind Israeli lines in Lebanon.

Thousands of PLO fighters were evacuated from Moslem west Beirut under the threat of the Israeli military, but many managed to elude the military and remain in the country.

But Sharon disputed claims by Palestinian and Lebanese groups who said they planted bombs in or near the building.

He told the army radio that "claims like that have been heard after every event even if they didn't have anything to do with terrorist activity. We don't know the reasons yet."

Sharon has come under heavy criticism from opposition newspapers and political parties because of the disaster. A verdict of accidental mishap is likely to absolve him of the charge that the war in Lebanon has only changed the form of terrorism against Israel.

A verdict of security negligence, if signs of a terrorist bomb are discovered, could severely damage Sharon, already under a cloud for failing to prevent the September massacre of hundreds of Palestinians at two refugees camps in Beirut.

Friction growing between Jews, Arabs of Hebron

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Because they believe their common forefather Abraham is buried here, Jews and Moslems alike revere this city in the Judaean Hills.

But new frictions have grown between them because of Arab suspicions that hundreds of Jewish settlers living on a nearby hill are about to move into the heart of Hebron.

The Arab fears were reinforced recently as the settlers buildozed three vacant Arab buildings in what was once Hebron's Jewish quarter and is now a semi-abandoned slum.

Jewish settlers already occupy three buildings in Hebron, and they have rebuilt the synagogue in the Jewish quarter.

Hebron's Arab acting mayor, Mustafa Natshe, says he is convinced that the construction work marks the beginning of a major influx of settlers into the town.

"They are pushing the government and every day they confiscate more and more land," he said in an interview.

Last month rocks thrown at an Israeli car outside Bethlehem, north of Hebron, injured two children of an Israeli settlement leader.

Later, two Arab boys playing on a soccer field came across a cache of grenades under a rock. One exploded, wounding them.

Hebron Arabs say they are convinced the explosion was a Jewish vengeance attack for the stoning of the Israeli car.

The settlers deny any connection with the explosion, and maintain it was the work of Palestinian nationalists opposed to a pro-Israeli Arab organization which has its office across the road from the soccer field.

The potential for violence is always high in Hebron.

Its hilltop Jewish suburb of Kiryat Arba, built after Israel captured the West Bank of the Jordan River in 1967, houses 4,000 Jews. They include a group of extremists associated with Rabbi Meir Kahane, the American-born founder of the militant Jewish Defense League.

Hebron's Moslems have been among the most militant in the West Bank. In 1929 they wiped out the city's flourishing Jewish community; 63 Jews died and hundreds fled. For centuries, Jews were barred by Moslem guards from approaching Abraham's tomb.

In May 1980 Palestinian gunmen ambushed and killed six Jews on their way back to Kiryat Arba from prayers at Abraham's tomb. Israel retaliated by legalizing the presence in Hebron's Jewish quarter of those settlers who had moved in without previous authorization. Hebron's elected mayor Fahd Qawasmeh was expelled to Jordan.

A month later bombs exploded in the cars of the West Bank's two leading mayors, Bassam Shakaa of Nablus and Kerim Khalaf of Ramallah, crippling them for life.

Begin's wife dies in Israel

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin cut short his 10-day visit to the United States late Saturday after learning that his wife, Aliza, had died in Israel, officials said.

Begin learned of the death of his 62-year-old wife about 6 p.m., and planned to return to Israel during the night, said Naomi Levi, a secretary at the Israeli consulate in Los Angeles.

The 10-day tour was to have included Begin's first meeting with President Reagan since Israel sent troops into Lebanon in June.

Mrs. Begin died Saturday in Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital, where she had been admitted in October to the intensive care unit with serious respiratory and circulatory troubles, said Mattityahu Shmuelevitz, director of Begin's office. She had a history of asthma problems.

Begin had postponed a planned visit to Zaire because of his wife's illness. The prime minister said on Oct. 19 that he was considering cutting short his term of office, due to end in 1985, because of her condition, according to a report in the daily newspaper Maariv.

Maariv also reported that Begin had considered canceling his United States' visit.

When asked how the 69-year-old Begin was responding to the news of his wife's death, Yoram Ben-Zeev, a press officer for Israeli consulate in Los Angeles, said, "He is a strong man, but it is his wife ... this is his personal grief. He is now with himself."

Car bombs explode near Beirut airport

SHWEIFAT, Lebanon (AP) — Two cars packed with explosives blew up Saturday near the international airport guarded by U.S. Marines, and police said eight Arabs were killed and 16 wounded, most of them in this Israeli-occupied town.

The blasts came as the Tel Aviv command announced that 75 Israelis were killed in the explosion Thursday that flattened the Israeli military headquarters in the southern Lebanese city of Tyre. It was the worst disaster in Israel's history, and Israel declared Monday a day of mourning.

An Israeli military command spokesman in Tel Aviv said altogether 90 people died in the Tyre explosion, including 15 Arabs. Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, the miltiary chief of staff, said the cause remained undetermined.

Most of the casualties in Saturday's blasts came when a car-bomb shattered a cluster of shops near a Lebanese police station and a pinball arcade in this Israeli-occupied town five miles south of Beirut's center.

Police said seven Lebanese civilians were killed and 13 wounded in the Shweifat explosion.

The Marines, encamped about one mile west of the explosion site, were unruffled as they patroled the airport's perimeter. There were no reports of U.S. injuries.

"It was a car-bomb outside our territory, so there's not much we can react to," said Marine spokesman Lt. Col. Jon Abel of Dumfries, Va.

Asked whether the 1,200 Marines guarding the airport had beefed up their security after the blast, Abel said, "We do not beef up with more people. These (car-bombings) have happened before. We occasionally hear firefights, too. We just maintain our normal watches."

The charred remains of a small brown car, which police said was laden with about 130 pounds of explosives, lay opposite a devastated pinball machine recreation center where most of the casualties occurred in the blast at 1:55 p.m. (6:55 a.m. EST).

A barber shop and a cassette recording shop on both sides of the recreation center also were demolished in the town surrounded by Israeli armored personnel carriers. There were no Israelis in sight at the blast scene.

"It was something you are lucky you didn't see," said Ala Rahal, 22, a student who rushed out from his house when the blast occurred at the nearby shops. "The body of one kid was plastered to the car tire. I helped extricate the body."

Police had no immediate motive for the blast at Shweifat, which overlooks the airport, and no group claimed responsibility.

About two hours earlier, a bomb destroyed a two-story sewing workshop near a Shiite Moslem mosque in the Palestinian refugee camp of Bourj el-Barajneh, two miles north of Shweifat, killing the Syrian owner and wounding three Lebanese sisters employed there.

Police said that blast appeared to be related to a rent dispute between the Lebanese landlord and the Syrian workshop proprietor.

Car-bombings have been a common practice in Beirut and elsewhere in Lebanon since the nation's 1975-76 civil war between rightist Christians and an alliance of leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas.

There was a marked decrease in such incidents in the capital since Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas were evacuated from Beirut last August and September in the wake of Israel's June 6 invasion of Lebanon.

Afghan government still maintains silence about Salang Tunnel disaster

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW DELHI — The Soviet-backed Afghan government continued to maintain secrecy Saturday on the reported tunnel disaster between the Soviet border and Kabul, despite new and conflicting accounts of the cause and extent of it.

Afghan exile sources here, monitoring Kabul radio, said that government broadcasts had stopped mentioning funeral arrangements for victims of the disaster, in which hundreds of Soviet soldiers and Afghan civilians are believed to have been asphyxiated following the collision of a fuel tanker truck and the lead vehicle of a Soviet army convoy. Kabul has been described by Western diplomats there as "a city in mourning."

Neither the Marxist government nor the Soviet military command has even acknowledged that a disaster in the Salang Tunnel, 60 miles north of Kabul, occurred — leading Afghan exiles and Western diplomatic analysts to conclude that casualties could be as high as originally feared. Otherwise, the government would be expected to issue strident denials, as it usually does following erroneous or exaggerated accounts of casualties or damage inflicted upon state security forces.

The initial reports that emerged Tuesday from one Western diplomatic mission in Kabul said that 700 Soviet soldiers and 400 Afghan civilians perished in an explosion and fire in the 1.7-mile-long tunnel. The diplomatic sources cited "unconfirmed rumors" that the civilian deaths could be as high as 2,000.

HOWEVER, DIPLOMATIC sources in another Western embassy here, who did not even mention the Salang Pass incident to reporters during a regular briefing on Afghanistan Tuesday, now say that 50 Soviet soldiers and between 500 and 1,000 Afghan civilians apparently died in the tunnel disaster, which is said to have occurred Nov. 2 or 3.

Recently arrived travelers from Kabul told Afghan exiles here that 400 bodies had been brought from the tunnel to Kabul.

"It is obvious that something big happened in that tunnel, but we don't know exactly what," a Western diplomat said. An Afghan exile here, who is usually well informed about events in his country, said Saturday, "It is all very confusing. I toned down my estimate to 400 dead, but now I just don't know what the figure should be."

Afghans claiming to have witnessed the disaster gave reporters in the Pakistani border city of Peshawar widely varying casualty estimates. Some said they saw six trucks loaded with bodies leave the scene, and others said there were only three trucks.

There were also many unanswered questions about the cause of the diaster, although most versions agreed that the victims suffocated in toxic fumes after Soviet security forces, apparently believing a guerrilla attack had taken place, were said to have blocked both entrances of the tunnel and prevented vehicles from leaving.

REBELS IN PESHAWAR at first denied any involvement in the disaster, saying their guerrillas could have launched an attack against the tunnel anytime, but never did because of the obvious risk of civilian casualties.

But one rebel group, the Gulbiddin Hekmetyar faction of the Islamic Party, Friday claimed in Peshawar that it had mined the tunnel and its approaches. "We killed 600 to 700 Russians. Unfortunately, there were some civilian casualties," spokesman Mangal Hussein said, according to news agency reports from Pakistan.

Agency Afghan Press, a Rawalpindi-based organization that monitors the insurgency in Afghanistan, said it interviewed the guerrilla commander who set the explosive charges. The agency said the tunnel had collapsed in three places.

However, other guerrilla sources in Peshawar were quoted as saying a Soviet convoy turned back to the Salang tunnel after being ambushed in the Panjsher Valley. Mohammed Yaqub Sharafat of the rival Yunis Khalis guerrilla organization told reporters in Peshawar that the lead vehicle then collided with a fuel tanker.

Some Afghan nationalists in exile expressed skepticism concerning the sabotage claims by the Gulbiddin Hekmetyar, noting that it is distrusted by many other guerrilla groups. They said Hekmetyar, who has lived in Pakistan since his release from an Afghan prison in 1973, is suspected of kidnapping rival guerrillas opposed to his rigid fundamentalist leadership.

APPARENTLY EMBELLISHED accounts of the disaster, laced with vivid descriptions of daring exploits, continue to sweep through the Afghan exile community, reinforcing a reputation for legend making. One prominent exile here spoke emotionally of a "well-planned suicide mission," and then admitted that his account was conjecture.

Western diplomatic analysts said that while it appears certain that a disaster occurred in the tunnel, it may be weeks before a comprehensive picture emerges, unless the Afghan government decides to disclose the details.

Police find body of kidnap victim

COSENZA, Italy (AP) — Police said Saturday that they had found the stabbed body of a 16-year-old boy kidnapped five days earlier and were holding a school teacher in connection with the killing.

The boy, Edoardo Annichiarico, son of a jeweler, was abducted on Tuesday by unidentified men as he walked home from school in Castrovillari, near this city in southern Italy.

His parents received an anonymous call demanding the equivalent of $210,000 and 44 pounds of gold, they said. But they had not received any other news about the boy until late Friday, when police told them they had found his body at the bottom of a cliff. Forensic sources said an autopsy showed the boy died of a knife wound to the stomach.

Police said Giacomo Cardello, 25, a teacher at Annichiarico's school, was detained after they discovered blood stains on the seat of his car. Laboratory tests showed it was the same type of blood as the victim's, police sources said.

The boy was the 35th victim of Italian kidnappers in 1982 and the second found murdered. Another 15 are still missing.

Philippines wants more U.S. money

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The government will not demand more economic aid from the United States in exchange for its military bases in the country but is "making it plain that we are not getting paid enough," a high-ranking official said Saturday.

Solicitor General Estelito Mendoza, guest at a luncheon meeting of the Foreign Correspondents Association of the Philippines, made the statement in reply to a question on whether the Philippines would ask for increased rentals when an agreement allowing continued use of U.S. bases here comes up for review next April.

Mendoza did not say, however, what amount of aid the Philippines considers enough in exchange for use by U.S. forces of Clark air base and Subic naval base north of Manila.

The current 25-year agreement, which runs out in 1991 but is subject to review every five years, provides for $100 million in U.S. economic and military aid to the Philippines every year.

"We are not asking for money, but we are making it plain that we are not getting paid enough," Mendoza said.

Red Brigades members arrested

ROME (AP) — Nine suspected Red Brigades members were arrested and one was killed in a major anti-terrorist drive in northern Italy, police reported Saturday.

An unidentified suspect who tried to escape a raid Thursday night in Cinisello Balsamo, near Milan, slipped on a fire escape and plunged to his death from the seventh floor of an apartment building, authorities said. Three others were seized in that raid.

Six were arrested in the Frabosa Soprana area, near Turin, after carabinieri, paramilitary police, stormed into two separate hideouts. Investigators said they also seized arms, ammunition and documents.

KGB traces its origins to Bolshevik secret police

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

MOSCOW (AP) — For the 15 years before he succeeded Leonid I. Brezhnev as head of the Soviet Communist Party, Yuri V. Andropov ran the KGB, the secret police organization that runs a worldwide spy network and enforces Soviet order at home.

With headquarters in two unmarked buildings on Dzerzhinsky Square, a few blocks from the Kremlin, the KGB performs a domestic function similar to the Russian secret police of czarist times, and an international role closer to that of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

At home it runs the Soviet Customs Service, a corps of 200,000 uniformed border guards, the elite troops which guard the Kremlin and its leaders, a plainclothes police force of unknown dimensions and a network of informers saturating the national population of 266 million.

Its work supplements that of the independent Ministry of Internal Affairs, which commands 200,000 uniformed troops and a vast police force.

OVERSEAS, THE KGB runs a worldwide intelligence network, reportedly permeating the Soviet diplomatic corps. It is supplemented by the numerous agents of the military intelligence organization known as the GRU.

American author John Barron, describing the KGB, wrote that it has four main directorates. He said the first runs foreign espionage, the second keeps tabs on Soviet citizens and foreigners in the Soviet Union, a third guards the borders and a fourth, and the most secretive, is said to carry out assassinations and other violent tasks.

Andropov is the first former KGB chief to head the Communist Party. He retired from the KGB in May in a maneuver Soviet sources portrayed as an attempt to improve his image and political standing.

From May to the present day, the same Soviet sources, in conversations with Western correspondents and diplomats, have portrayed Andropov as an intelligent man of refined tastes. They say he ran the KGB with cool professional dispatch, executing the instructions of the ruling Communist Party Politburo of which he has been a member since 1973.

ANDROPOV'S TRUE role in shaping the KGB, its intelligence operations abroad, its repressive policies at home, is cloudy at best. The organization is highly secretive, appearing at times to operate above the law.

Soviet citizens treat it with fear and respect. The vast majority seem to regard it as a necessary fixture of Soviet power, rooting out opponents at home and countering the forces of imperialism abroad. Veteran observers regard it as an institution deeply rooted in the Russian traditions of secrecy and mistrust of foreigners.

The KGB, formally the Committee for State Security, traces its history back to the Cheka, the secret police the Bolsheviks formed to fight class enemies after the 1917 revolution.

The Chekists, as Soviet secret policemen are still called, had the power to try and execute opponents during the 1917-21 civil war. The name and organizational structure of the Cheka changed repeatedly over the last 65 years, but its function did not change, to protect the Soviet Union, especially its ruling Communist Party, from enemies at home and abroad.

IT REACHED THE peak of its power under dictator Josef Stalin, who used it to enforce his bloody collectivization and purges of the 1930s, and to impose pro-Soviet regimes in Eastern Europe after World War II.

Stalin's successor, Nikta S. Khrushchev, ended Stalin's terror tactics and freed millions of people Stalin imprisoned.

Brezhnev, who replaced Khrushchev in 1964, reportedly kept a tight rein on the KGB, placing Andropov in charge in 1967. Andropov had earlier worked with the secret police in consolidating Finnish terrorities taken in World War II and in crushing the 1956 Hungarian uprising while serving as ambassador there.

However, he is not viewed as a career policeman.

Soviet leaders regularly praise the work of the KGB, but disclose little about its operations. KGB activities have come to the attention of the Western public when its operatives are expelled from foreign countries, or it increases pressure against political dissidents at home.

Mexican economy remains stagnant

Copley News Service

It is a dismal picture and by all accounts it is going to get worse before it gets better.

In Mexico, inflation will hit 90 percent this year, 60 percent next year. From a robust 8 percent growth rate last year, Mexico at best will end up next year with a stagnant economy. There will be no new jobs in a country that requires the creation of 400,000 jobs each year just to keep up with youths entering the employment market.

Half the country is either out of work or underemployed.

"If this happened in a developed country, it would probably cause a tremendous amount of social instability," said Clint Smith, deputy coordinator of the program in U.S.-Mexico relations at Stanford University.

"You would see tremendous demands on the part of the voters to have a New Deal. It would be like (President Herbert C.) Hoover in '32," he said.

"There is a climate of social tension," said Heberto Castillo, head of the leftist Mexican Workers Party and an outspoken critic of the government. "Workers have lost 30 percent of the value of their salaries just in the last three months."

Economists say that workers' buying power has declined for the last four years and next year will be the same.

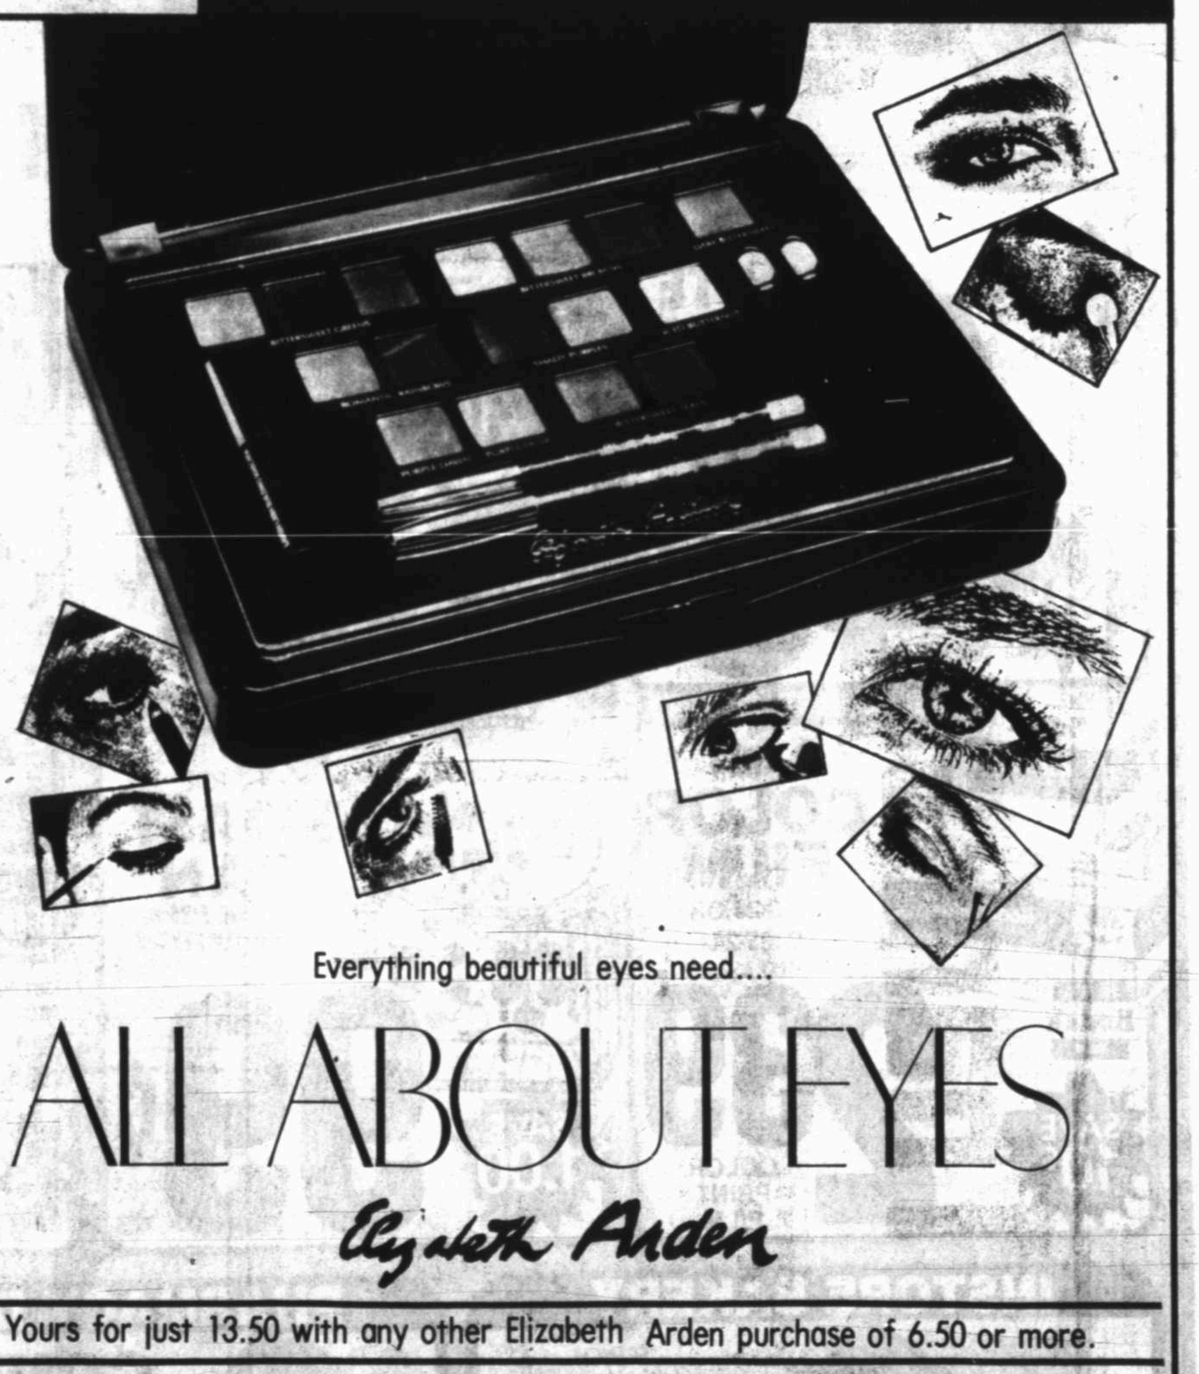

While inflation is supposed to be reduced to 60 percent, at best workers can hope for is a 45 percent increase in wages, said Juan Lara, an economist with Philadelphia's Wharton School of Econometrics.

Mexico faced these realities — the flat growth rate, increasing unemployment, hyperinflation — as it signed a letter of intent with the International Monetary Fund Wednesday agreeing to reduce government spending in order to obtain a $3.8 billion loan.

In the letter, Mexico said it would reduce its budget deficit from 16 percent of the gross national product this year to 3.5 percent of the GNP by 1985.

The letter mentions cutting government subsidies and is expected to result in increases in the price of electricity, telephone service and gasoline — provided by government-owned companies — as well as tortillas, bread, milk and eggs, which receive subsidies.

The prices of many basic goods increased in August when the government reduced its subsidies.

Jails fight fire with fiery policies

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Ask people what they fear most when jail doors clank shut on them, and you'll likely get a one-word answer: Fire.

While jail blazes are few and far between, Monday's fire that claimed the lives of 27 inmates at the Harrison County Jail in Biloxi, Miss., is a reminder that regulations governing jail operations may not be as harsh as they might seem at first blush.

"We've had a lot of inmate complaints and even some lawsuits over our no-smoking rule," said Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith. "But I'd much rather explain the no-smoking rule than try to explain why some prisoner lost his life in the jail because of a fire."

The Biloxi tragedy is believed to have been caused by a mentally disturbed inmate who used smuggled matches or a cigarette to set his padded cell on fire. The 27 inmates who lost their lives died of toxic fumes from padding used to line the cell.

In addition to the no-smoking rule — which applies to the entire fifth-floor of the courthouse and covers inmates, jail personnel and visitors alike — the Midland County jail hosts a variety of other fire safety features. They include:

Air packs, fire hoses and extinguishers, an evacuation plan, extra sets of keys placed at strategic locations, a sprinkler system in the kitchen and laundry areas, electrically operated cell doors, periodic fire drills for jailers, smoke alarms, two emergency exits, fire-retardant material in the padded cell and six, high-volume, diesel-driven exhaust fans designed to kick in automatically when electrical power is lost.

THE DIESEL POWER plant is also geared to provide electricity for lights and cell doors in the event of routine or fire-caused power failures.

"We actually ran some tests with smoke bombs to see how well the exhaust fans worked," said Smith. "They indeed do their job."

Smith also bars newspapers in the jail — not only as a fire precaution, but to prevent them from being used to plug up commodes, which is one way inmates have been known to harass their keepers. Prisoners are given access to television sets for news and entertainment.

Many of the jail's fire prevention guidelines derive from a study that employed the use of national fire safety data compiled by the fire department and in some cases, according to Smith, the measures exceed requirements established by the state jail standards commission and the national fire code.

"They protect not only the inmates, but also our employees," said Smith, adding that although he didn't have an estimate as to how much fire safety costs the county, an important fringe benefit is diminished liability for taxpayers who ultimately have to foot the bill for lawsuits.

THE CITY IS equally cognizant of its responsibilities to prisoners housed in the municipal lockup and employs many of the procedures and devices in use at the county jail, according to Capt. Roger Meurer, veteran member of the police department and supervisor of jail operations.

"As pointed out by the Biloxi fire," said Meurer, "the biggest hazard is fumes from paint and from polyurethane materials used in mattresses. We've been using fire-retardant (mattress) covers for years, but they're not fireproof."

Among the safety precautions taken by the city are strategically placed fire hoses and extinguishers, emergency evacuation plans that jail personnel are required to review monthly, and a mechanical device for automatically unlocking cell doors.

"Our jail is designed so cells can be opened from a central location where a fire isn't likely to be," said Meurer. "You don't have to physically open each cell."

WHILE THERE ARE no exhaust fans on the roof to pull smoke from the jail area of the police station, the reason is simple: Hallways would serve as conduits to windows that can be opened by force if need be.

"They could be broken from the outside if we couldn't get to them from the inside," said Meurer, noting that since the jail is constructed largely of concrete and steel, there's little danger of fanning flames by opening windows. "There's not a stick of wood in that sucker."

A major philosophical difference between Smith and Meurer when it comes to jail policy is on the question of smoking, which, except for juveniles, city inmates are permitted to do.

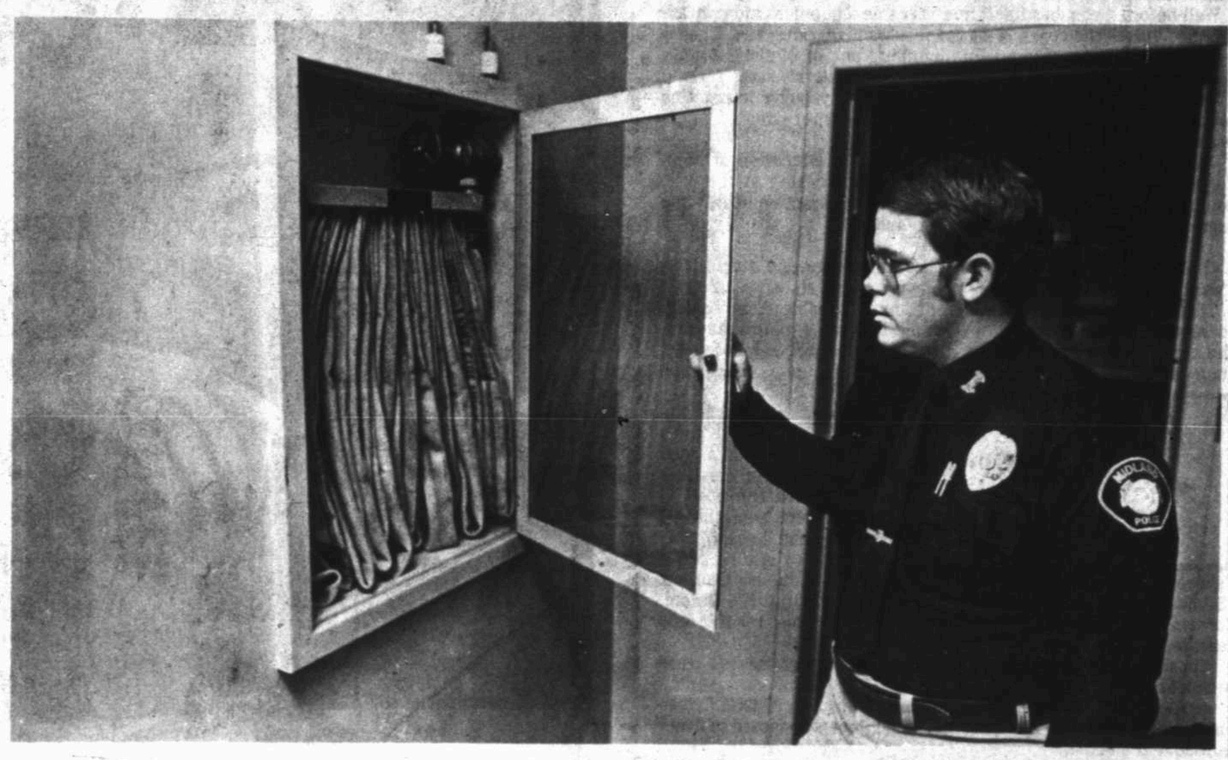

"I'm not taking issue with him," said Meurer. "It's just our feeling that if a smoker is confined in jail, nerves and the lack of anything else to do are going to make him crave smoking more than he would on the outside.

"MAKE A PERSON stop smoking, and you're gonna increase the potential for violence against other prisoners, violence against jail property, along with violence and abuse against jail officers."

Noting a relatively minor storage room fire four or five years ago that was started by a juvenile inmate, Meurer added: "It points out that even though you prohibit a person from smoking, in some way and in some time a prisoner could acquire cigarettes or matches anyway.

"It's strictly my opinion, but you have more problems in a jail with prisoners not being allowed to smoke than you do by allowing it."

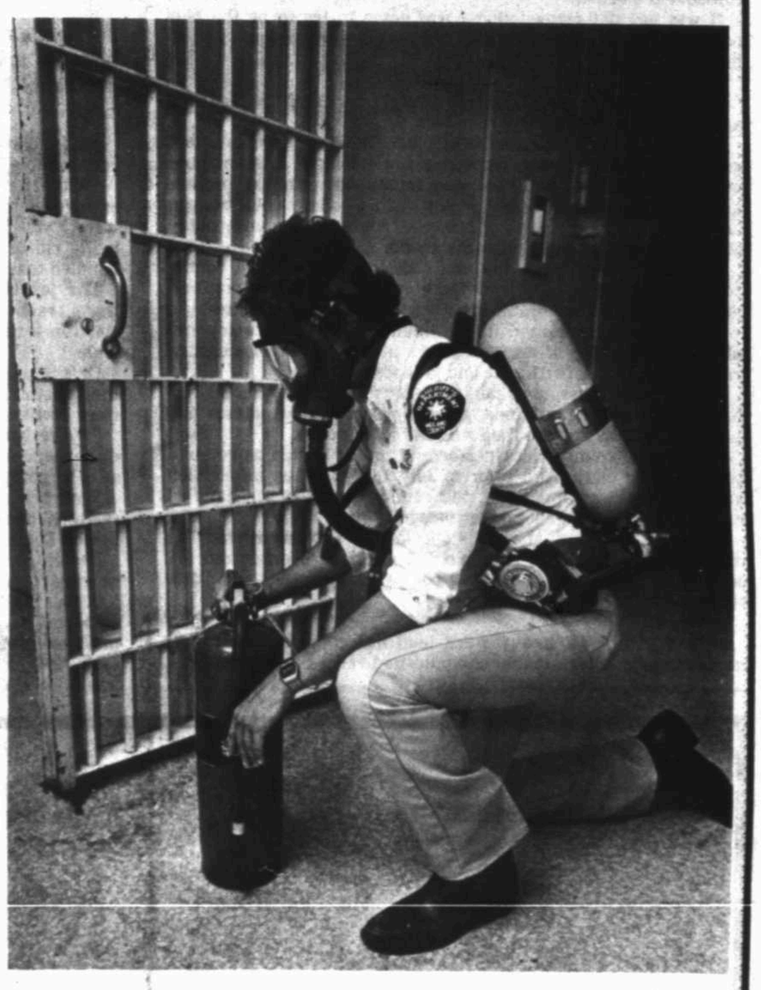

The city jail also passes fire code regulations, and while what took place in Biloxi could conceivably take place anywhere, Meurer said: "It would be hard for it to happen here."

Fighting fire

City patrolman Michael C. McLain, above, checks a 75-foot fire hose at the city jail, and Lt. Ken Scheer of the Midland County Sheriff's Department demonstrates two pieces of equipment at the county jail to prevent fires like the one that took the lives of 27 inmates at the county jail in Biloxi, Miss., last week. Four or five years ago, the city jail was the scene of a reltively minor fire set by a juvenile in storage room.

Million-gallon tank has 'checkered' past

As though in the Roman Coliseum, a person is dwarfed by the immensity of the million barrel tank on the outskirts of Monahans. The structure also has known life as a water sports arena, motorcycle activities center and square dance floor.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

MONAHANS — Fill the Astrodome to a depth of 35 feet with black gold and you have some idea of the magnitude of the "million-barrel tank" that now lies an abandoned gladiator-like arena on the eastern outskirts of this city.

Its been known through the years as one of the world's largest oil tanks, the site of an ill-fated man-made lake, a motorcycle enduro coliseum and the most expansive square dance floor in the cosmos.

Today, the sands of time have left it but a curiosity to those passing by on nearby U.S. Highway 80.

Turn the clock back and consider 1928-era Ward County. The Hendrick field, unencumbered by proration, was producing enormous amounts of oil. The black substance was selling cheaply — 10 cents a barrel. Enough railway tankers were not available to ship it to Oklahoma refineries. Storage space was of paramount importance.

Those are the factors which spawned the million-barreler, a behemoth that was carved from the earth and lined with concrete in only 90 days' time at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars.

"It was built by a Dutch engineer for the Shell Oil Company who had as an assistant a Chinese engineer (Dana Young of California), who did all the calculations on an abacus," noted local historian J. Conrad Dunagan.

Although the petroleum it was to hold later would fuel the most technologically advanced machinery ever known to man, the million barrel tank's genesis came at the hands of mules-kinners, fresnos and wagons which were on the site around the clock. The then-small town of Monahans was not prepared to house such a great influx of workers and a tent city soon rose on the eastern side of the community, a sure sign that the oil boom was in full gear.

Sand and soil was hauled to the site and packed into immense earthen walls, which, along with the floor, were covered by wire mesh-reinforced concrete. Creosoted timbers supported a gargantuan domed roof of wood, tarpapered for waterproofing.

When completed, the structure which had a twin sister in McCamey was 522 feet long, 425 feet wide, with 45-degree walls rising to a vertical height of 35 feet. The area of the bottom was greater than that of four football fields, and 1,084,000 barrels of oil could be retained within.

But despite the presence of such a voluminous storehouse, production in the Hendricks field declined and the million barreler was filled but once. Even worse, a basic flaw in the design of the tank soon became apparent — the engineers had not taken into consideration the awesome effect oil would have on the caulking between joints of cement.

It leaked.

It was this excessive seepage, as well as the decline of the Hendricks oil field, which resulted in the abandonment of the structure within but months.

"It was a good idea that just didn't work out," said Dunagan.

In the early 1930s the roof was removed, though tragedy resulted: one man was killed and another received a broken leg in the procedure. The wood later was to be used in the construction of several area homes, and legend has it that years later oil still seeped from persons' living room walls.

But the million barreler's story was far from finished. On June 24, 1950, some 1,500 persons made it the world's largest dance floor in a square dance festival that attracted persons from throughout the country. "As I remember, we kind of had to wax the floor a little — it was so rough for any square dancing," recalled Dunagan.

Wayne Long purchased the great tank and, in the late 1950s, conceived an ambitious project: He would make the structure into a lake and water amusements arena. During the $64,000 process, he encountered some unusual difficulties.

"He patched all the cracks in the bottom and (when he tried to) fill it with water, his...wells began pumping oil," said Dunagan. "The oil had leaked out and was lying on top of the water."

During its brief existence as a lake, the million barrel tank sported motor boats, a pier and fish which struck at fishermen's lures in its depths.

But Long encountered the same basic difficulty as had the oilmen three decades before — the tank would not hold.

He next sought to make it into a motorcycle enduro arena, and for a brief while the race of small engines echoed from its concrete walls.

Today, guarded by the forever-shifting sands which sometimes claim the vehicles of unwary visitors, the million barrel tank stands in mute testimony to the ofttimes failure of even the best-laid plans of men.

Rosenelle Cherry has grown with her position's demands

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Before the notion of women elbowing their way through the work-a-day world became popular, Rosenelle Cherry was jawboning with cantankerous county officials.

Well before "women's liberation" became a popular catch phrase splashed across the cover of national news magazines, Mrs. Cherry was raising two daughters while handling one of Midland county governent's most demanding tasks, the county clerk's post.

Much of the paperwork that makes county government tick eventually winds up in the clerk's office, where for 31 years Rosenelle, 56, has been a vivacious mainspring.

With two years of business administration education at John Tarleton College in Stephenville, and after working at the Midland Air Force Base and later with a local abstract company, she came to work as a deputy county clerk in 1948.

Midlander in Profile

"I HAD HOPED to go ahead and get my degree, but I just felt I wanted to go ahead and make my own money," she said.

Three years later, when Midland County became large enough to require an auditor, the district clerk became county auditor, the county clerk assumed the district clerk's job and Rosenelle, then 24, won appointment to county clerk over two other candidates.

"I loved the work in the county clerk's office and I felt that I could do a good job," she said of her decision to seek the post. "I knew it was something I could do and do well."

Although she lacked a "sheepskin," she compensated with a flurry of on-the-job training. "I had good training from my former employer (Lucille Bezoni, former county clerk). I spent a lot of overtime just reading and learning."

As required by statute, Rosenelle ran for election in 1952, defeating her opponent by a 3-to-1 margin. She's gone unopposed in every subsequent election.

"I was just determined that I was going to try to be the best county clerk that I possibly could. I took it very seriously. I felt my responsibility."

The county clerk's office serves juvenile court, county court and county court at law, recording and storing a huge number of legal documents and preserving minutes of criminal, probate and civil legal actions. Also, the clerk's office collects court costs in civil and probate cases for the sheriff, county judge and county attorney, and levies fines on misdemeanor convictions.

Midland's county clerk fills the dual role of local and county registrar, recording birth and death certificates and issuing burial transit permits, honorable discharges and marriage licenses.

As Rosenelle explained it, the county clerk's office touches almost every phase of an individual's life; birth certificate, marriage license, death certificate and probate proceedings.

Cattle brands, assumed name certificates, condominium records, bonds and deputations, grazing permits, land patents and plats of additions are also filed with the county clerk.

Finally, the county clerk performs a vital function as commissioner's court clerk. And prior to July 1, 1982, when an election administrator was appointed, the county clerk's office handled all bond, special and general elections in Midland county.

Rosenelle can view Midland's spectacular growth in statistics that cross her desk. For example, 373 marriage licenses and 517 criminal cases were filed in 1953, compared with 1,502 and 1,528, respectively, in 1981.

BUT WITH THE heavy work load has come technological improvements, most notably computerized recording systems and electric typewriters, she said.

"You have a really good feeling of helping people, because most everybody who comes to this office has a problem."

— Rosenelle Cherry

And she said her staff of deputies has grown from three to 13 very capable, dependable workers.

"With 13 deputies and myself, there is a total of 135 years of experience in the county clerk's office," she said.

But "you don't have much room for leisure," she said. "Now, being rid of elections, we can handle the rest. We could have handled that too, but it's gotten to be a terribly big job."

The job has its lighter moments, she said. Like the couple that's taken to delivering their own babies and polling the office staff on a name while somebody weighs the tot on a courthouse scale.

Or the agitated father-of-the-bride who hustled her down to the courthouse late one Saturday night to secure a belated marriage certificate for his daughter and her disorganized groom.

"We've had some who have come to get a license, gotten in a disagreement right there and called the whole thing off," she said, laughing.

Despite her lengthy term of service, she has no intentions of retiring from her neatly organized, plant-packed office.

"I like the job just as much today as the day I came into office. And you have a really good feeling of helping people, because most everybody who comes to this office has a problem," she said. "It's just, I think, the most interesting office in the courthouse."

Sandhills Park observes anniversary

MONAHANS — Monahans Sandhills State Park will celebrate its 25th anniversary today with a 3 p.m. ceremony in the Interpretative Center.

Regional Director George Shake and former superintendent Ken Benad of Fort Davis will represent the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

Members of the Wednesday Study Club will co-host the affair as it was Mrs. Conrad Dunagan's club book review of Dr. Rioy Bedichek's "Adventures with a Texas Naturalist" in 1947 which inspired the creation of the park that officially opened Nov. 23, 1957.

Park employee Edith W. Grissom will offer reflections on the sandhills, while Shake will discuss "horizons of growth."

Refreshments will be served by Wednesday Study Club at 3:30 p.m.

Wet-dry balloting set for Dec. 4

LAMESA — On Dec. 4 voters will cast ballots in a wet-dry issue in the newly organized town of Los Ybanez.

A petition of 41 names, 12 more than needed, was presented to Dawson County commissioners recently by town mayor Israel Ybanez. The commissioners unanimously approved the petition for election.

The vote would decide whether to allow the sale of beer in Los Ybanez for off-premise consumption.

A similar petition in October was rejected by commissioners because it called for an election which possibly included voters from outside the Los Ybanez area.

Dawson County has been dry for 75 years.

A graduate of New York Medical College, Dr. George served residencies at the University of Pennsylvania and Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital in New York City.

Dr. George hopes to add intraocular lens surgery to ophthalmological procedures at Malone-Hogan in the near future. In this surgery, an artificial lens is inserted in the eyes of patients who have undergone cataract surgery. Prime candidates for such a procedure are elderly patients with sensory or motor problems which prevent their successful use of special glasses or contact lenses to correct deficiencies left by removal of their own cataract-clouded lens.

Revival to be held

The Rev. W.G. Gillespie of Dallas will be conducting a revival at Macedonia Baptist Church, 201 S. Carver St., beginning Monday.

Services will be held nightly at 7:30 p.m. through Friday. The Rev. O.J. Archie, pastor, invites the public to attend.

Nursing home probe requested

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — The director of a national reform group has asked the U.S. Justice Department to investigate the handling of a murder case against one of the nation's largest nursing home chains.

Elma Griessel, executive director of the National Citizens Coalition for Nursing Home Reform in Washington, said the handling of the case has been a "legal atrocity."

Ms. Griessel said the state has failed to financially support efforts to prosecute Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and eight past and current employees indicted in the deaths of eight elderly patients at a Texas City nursing home. The indictment alleged the eight patients died in 1978-79 from neglect and abuse.

Autumn Hills, based in Houston, owns 17 nursing homes in Texas.

Ms. Griessel said organizations involved in the case believe an agreement that would allow the defendants to plead guilty to a lesser offense may be in the offing.

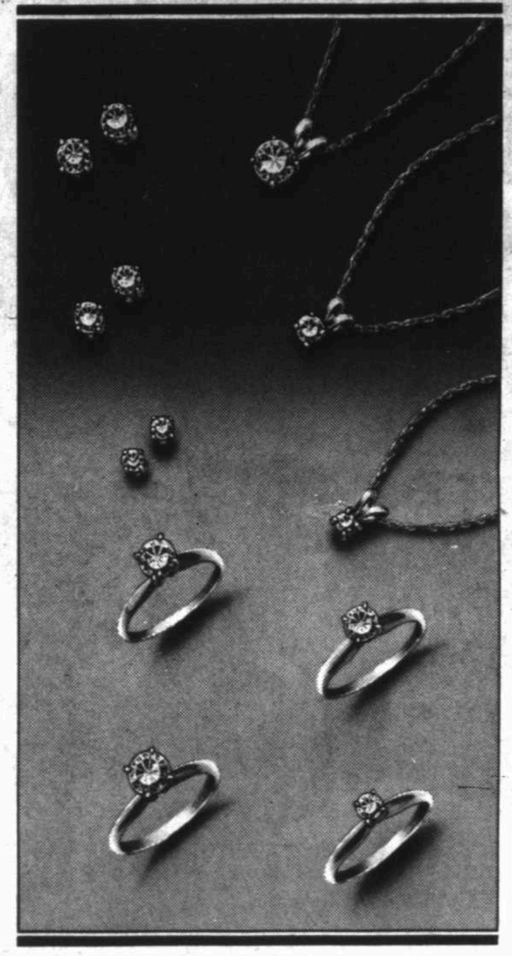

"If the case can be swept under the rug, it's pretty indicative of what we might expect in different parts of the country. Why has this case been treated so shabbily by the criminal justice system?" she asked.

Ms. Griessel said an administrator working on the case has not been paid in two months, and other staff members have pooled their own money to continue with the case.

Citing the millions of dollars spent in the investigation of the 1979 assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. of San Antonio, Ms. Griessel said the state's lack of funding in the Autumn Hills case is a form of discrimination "due to the powerlessness of the elderly victims and their families."

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A bikini-clad woman basking in the summer rays or under a sunlamp and a patient exposed to a chest X-ray have something in common. Radiation.

However, radiation received from the sun is a greater dose than from the X-ray, according to Ray Meyers, Midland Memorial Hospital's technical director of the radiation department.

"A sunburn is a radiation burn," he said. "Radiation from the sun far exceeds that of the chest X-ray."

Because of public concern about the amount of radiation patients receive, MMH hires only radiologic technologists, Myers said.

MMH personnel are concerned with the care of patients receiving X-rays and are aware of radiation hazards and the protective policies and procedures established to reduce these hazards.

Since radiation cannot be seen or felt, it is extremely important to observe all rules outlined in the hospital's safety program.

The degree of exposure to radiation depends on three factors: Distance between the source of radiation and the individual, amount of time an individual is exposed to radiation and type of shielding provided.

"We produce the best detailed diagnostic image with the lowest exposure of radiation," Myers said, adding that the 12 radiologic technologists employed at MMH are "concerned and aware of radiation exposure."

Last week, MMH recognized its technologists during Radiologic Techologists Week.

And Saturday, the Permian Basin Society of Radiologic Technologists, in conjunction with the Texas Society of Clinical Radiologic Technologists, held a seminar at Midland Center. The fifth annual seminar is part of continuing education for West Texas technologists.

To insure MMH's technologists have up-to-date knowledge, Myers said, he tries to have each technologist go to at least one educational seminar a year.

"The hospital is very supportive in continuing education," he said. "I have a very good education traveling budget."

When a patient comes in for an X-ray, the technologist does more than position the patient on the table and push a button — his job is a science and an art.

"Basically, radiology is the eyes of medicine," Meyers said. "Technologists perform radiological examinations requested by the physician and under the supervison of the radiologist who is a medical doctor.

"They must know anatomy, physiology, physics, basic electronics and have the capability of performing this science in an accurate, artful manner.

"For instance, MMH uses three combinations of film and screens for the X-ray," he added. "If a pregnant woman comes in for an X-ray of the fetal position, we use the fastest film to reduce the radiation to the fetus. On the other hand, fractures are X-rayed at a slower film speed to provide a fine-detail level."

The registered radiologic technologist must pass the examination administered by the American Registry for Radiologic Technologists. Programs of study may vary from one year to 18 months and may be located in vocational-technical schools or in hospitals.

Myers explained that MMH technologists have gained their knowledge from a two-year hospital-based certificate program, a two year junior or community college associate of arts degree or a four-year bachelor's degree program.

All three programs are approved by the American Medical Association and the Joint Review Committee of American College of Radiology.

Meyers said the technology boom in radiology has brought the most sophisticated, state-of-the-art equipment to the field.

"About 30 percent of the technologist's work is performing chest, fractures and GI (gastrointestinal) X-rays," he said. "The remaining work involves diagnostic X-rays."

Meyers said MMH's radiology department should be renamed the department of imaging, explaining that "technologists are involved with diagnostic X-rays; nuclear medicine studies, both diagnostic and therapeutic; ultra sonography; computer tomography and zero radiography."

If you're planning to install a new heating or cooling system, consider a high-efficiency heat pump. It's an energy-saving, year-round alternative.

The heat pump provides year-round heating and cooling, using only electricity. During the winter, it extracts heat from the outside air (even very cold air contains heat) and brings that heat inside where it's needed. In the summer, the heat pump is a regular air conditioner, removing unwanted heat from the inside air.

The heat pump is the most efficient combination heating and cooling system that can be installed in your home today.

To learn more about the heat pump, call your air conditioning contractor. And when you call, ask about the year-round heat pump that qualifies for a bonus check from Texas Electric.

Although publishers have known it for quite some time, the public remains largely unaware of the big market for children's books.

When the term "children's literature" is used, some think of nursery rhymes while many automatically think of old favorites, passed down through relatives from the older generation of one-room, all-level classes held in little red school houses. Others immediately think of controversial books squashed by members of the state textbook committee and which often receive blaring headlines and descriptive copy.

National Children's Book Week begins Monday in an effort to focus on the new children's books which are on the market. Sponsored by the Children's Book Council, a non-profit trade association of children's book publishers, the theme this year is "Get Lost in a Book."

"There are books done years ago, what you call the 'old standards of children's literature,' that are going to live on and on," Allene Kleweno, librarian at The Hillander School, said. "If a book is good, it doesn't matter if it was published in 1940 or 1980, it's going to be read for now on."

However, she added, books published today are exceeding those published some time ago in some features such as beautiful graphics, illustrations and artwork.

And the number of children's books published per year far exceeds figures from the past, she said.

"WHEN YOU TAKE 2,000 to 3,000 books being published a year, there are going to be a lot of mediocres," Mrs. Kleweno admitted. "But there are many, many good authors and illustrators today."

One of those talented authors was brought in by Mrs. Kleweno when she was a children's librarian for over seven years at the public library in Albuquerque, N.M., she said.

Since stories by Beverly Cleary, a popular writer for children in third grades and up, had been well-received by students, Mrs. Kleweno thought it would be interesting to have her come and talk with students and their parents.

The 1,400 children and parents who attended the author's lecture gained insight about how an author decides on topics and how the ideas are developed into a plot. Also, she added, it's fun for the children to be able to put a face and personality with the name that appears on so many of their favorite books.

Although Ms. Cleary has never received a Newbery Award, which has been given for what is judged to be the most outstanding children's book published every year since 1922, Mrs. Kleweno said Hillander is trying to obtain Newbery Award winners, as well as books which receive the Caldecott Award, a designation as the best picture book for that year. Many of the books currently in the library were chosen because they were listed as good selections by the Horn Book, which reviews children's books, and the American Library Association and the Library of Congress, she said.

At Hillander, children enjoy reading books that won top awards and those that were designated as runners-up in order to compare them.

CONDUCTING THEIR own contest for National Children's Book Week, students at Hillander are voting for their favorite books. Other plans for increasing reading fun at Hillander include a Laura Ingalls Wilder study in February, Mrs. Wilder's birthday month. According to Mrs. Kleweno, books in the Little House series will be discussed and songs mentioned in the books will be sung.

"They are all just different ways of sharing books and literature with children," she said.

"A library can't have everything," she pointed out, referring to limited budgets. "(The improved graphics and illustrations) have led to children's books being more costly these days. It's nothing for a children's book to cost $10-12."

While many funds for books are obtained through private donations at Hillander, selections are the responsibility of Mrs. Kleweno, she added.

"I think there are many fine books for children," she said. "But I also think that children and parents need guidance to some of these good ones in trying to get the right book for the right child.

"The influence of teachers and librarians can't be overlooked," she added. "Teachers are very much encouraged to read aloud to their children. And whatever the teacher is reading, the child always wants that book.

"FAMILIES SHOULD be encouraged to read books aloud in the home," she continued. She pointed out that parents should be just as selective about what their children read and how much time they spend doing it as they are about selecting television shows.

"I'm not against television, except when it involves this inane sitting in front of the screen," she said. "The children sometimes may watch something that leads them to read something else."

Monthly story-telling sessions help increase students' enjoyment of reading, says Hillander School librarian Allene Kleweno. But with up to 3,000 new children's books published a year, selecting stories to tell and books to stock in the library can be difficult choices.

Three cheers!

It's a team effort, not only for the football players on the field, but also for the other students who schedule many exhausting hours of practice and performance there. Whether on the dry brittle grass burning under August's wilting rays or the sharp, cold autumn nights spent under the bright lights, the activities of these youngsters are all part of the West Texas zeal for high school athletics.

The cheers and the music all add to the overall spirit of Midland's two freshman and two high schools, which continue through the basketball season and spring sporting tournaments and competitions.

From the tuba players to the flag corps captains to the head cheerleaders, efforts of all involved push the morale of the entire student body, and community, up to the status of pride and competition.

The parents of those involved watch the progress of their children from stadium seats — those in the football pads, under the band majors' hats and behind the colorful pompons.

Parents' influence on behavior of adolescents to be subject of UTPB lecture

ODESSA — How parents affect the behavior of adolescents will be the topic of a public lecture at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the student lounge on the University of Texas of the Permian Basin campus.

Sponsored by Psi Chi, UTPB's student psychology club, the lecture will feature Harold Dennis Grotevant, assistant professor of home economics at UT Austin's Division of Child Development and Family Relationships. The event is free and open to the public.

Dr. Alan Marks, assistant professor of psychology at UTPB, said the lecture will include the findings of recent research concerning how families affect adolescent decisions.

Marks noted the topic will be of interest to parents as well as to students. "Dr. Grotevant will be talking about research, but with a real-world application," Marks said.

Grotevant, who has been on the UT-Austin faculty since 1977, has also taught at the Univeristy of Minnesota Institute of Child Development. He has written numerous publications and conducted seminars and lectures on child development, adolescence, parenting and the family process.

He has been a consultant for the UT Police Children's Crime Prevention Unit, as well as for the Family Health Center in Austin and the Texas State School for the Blind.

His recent research, funded by grants from various institutes at both the state and national levels, has been centered around adolescents, their development and their interaction with the family.

The exercise class, which Mrs. Stout started in her living room with one student a year ago, now has about 100 women who work out to rock-and-roll gospel music in local churches.

Mrs. Stout said she began "Believercise" because she was upset by the lyrics she heard at exercise spas.

"The music started to affect my mind. I started to get wild, crazy thoughts, thought patterns I had never had before," Ms. Stout said. "The words (in rock songs) suggest so much. I'm a pro-family person, and a lot of things were getting away from pro-family, husband-wife relationships."

She put her dance and exercise training to work and made up dance steps to go with swinging gospel music. She has copyrighted the routines and recorded an album.

"Believercise" is spreading, she said. Classes are beginning in California and Oregon.

"Some of the Christian songs have a strong beat nowadays,' Mrs. Stout said. "We dance to B.J. Thomas and Leon Patillo, who used to be with the rock group Santana. It's all contemporary."

"The music's so uplifting," said Connie Nicholson, 23. "You feel better inside and out."

Minutes later, Ms. Nicholson and eight other women (no men allowed) were dancing to a rhythm-and-blues beat while belting out, "I'm gonna keep on shouting 'til the world knows Jesus saves."

After 55 minutes of grunts, groans and sweat, the women lay down and listen to a soft song called "El-Shaddai" — "The Almighty." Then they towel off and head home.

Man injured in accident

ODESSA — A 58-year-old Monahans man was in guarded condition in Odessa Medical Center late Saturday after sustaining head injuries in a traffic accident 4.9 miles west of Odessa at 4:55 p.m. Saturday.

Identification was being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

The man was the lone occupant of a pickup, westbound on Interstate 20, that crossed to the eastbound lane, hit a dirt embankment and then overturned 1⅛ times after striking railroad tracks.

The accident was investigated by Department of Public Safety Trooper Andy Cedillos of Odessa.

. Why pay more now when you can pay less later?

With a Midland National Individual Retirement Account (IRA), you can set aside tax-deductible funds now to use for your retirement years later, when your taxes should be much lower.

As an individual wage earner, you can make a tax-deductible IRA contribution of up to $2,000 a year, $2,250 if your non-working spouse is included, or $4,000 when both spouses work and file a joint return. Deposits made during 1982 are deductible on your 1982 return. And the tax will be deferred on the interest earned as long as it's reinvested in your IRA.

What's more, unlike arrangements with brokerage firms or regular money market funds, your Midland National IRA is insured up to $100,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. This is in addition to the insurance you may have on other deposits.

So what it all boils down to is this: You can continue to pay the IRS more in taxes right now. Or you can save now, earn a higher interest rate, and pay a lot less later on. All you need is an Individual Retirement Account from Midland National Bank.

Call Venita Gaston at 685-5292 or come visit with Venita in our personal banking lobby in Midland National Center.

Family flies to Moscow

DALLAS (AP) — Two Dallas girls were flown this weekend to Moscow, where their parents hope doctors can successfully treat their rare eye disease.

Ben and Marlene Syc got the idea after Mrs. Syc saw a television news story a year ago about a Georgia boy who went to the Soviet Union for treatment that saved his remaining sight.

"A year ago, I didn't know where to start. Now, a year later, I have a great feeling of accomplishment," Mrs. Syc said as she and her husband waited at Dallas-Fort Worth Airport Friday with their daughters, Ginger, 9, and Sherry, 7.

The sisters were diagnosed four years ago as having retinitis pigmentosa. Ginger cannot see in the dark, and Sherry has been declared legally blind. Both sisters are curly haired blondes with amber-colored glasses.

The Sycs tried several American doctors without success.

"American doctors told me there was nothing they could do. They said there is no way to cure RP. The Russians don't claim to cure it, just to stop it," Mrs. Syc told the Dallas Morning News.

The treatment — done in four stages over two to three years — has a 70 percent success rate, the Sycs were told.

"I just hope they don't fall into the 30 percent block. But I have to look at it both ways," Mrs. Syc said.

Doctors cannot restore the vision the girls already have lost, but the injections of the drug Enclad might stop the deterioration of the retina that reduces their vision "like a closing circle," Mrs. Syc said.

The girls are too young to know they're going to Russia, but know they're going to see an eye doctor. When told that shots would be involved, both said "no."

The Sycs have been trying for several months to raise the money for the shots, the trip to Moscow, and the cost of living there for the duration of the treatment.

American Airlines, for whom Syc has worked for 16 years, said it would provide them free round-trip air passage to Moscow. American Airline employees held car washes and jewelry sales to pay other expenses, and co-workers, friends and civic organizations raised about $12,000 — enough to pay for the first trip and part of a later trip.

After her daughters have finished their treatment, Mrs. Syc says, she hopes to write a book about the fight against retinitis pigmentosa and set up a foundation to help others with the disease.

Policemen aid woman

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The officers at Tucson's Adam 1 police substation take the cake as far as Lorraine Childs is concerned.

Officers Ray Valenzuela and Larry Harris responded to a report of a woman in an electric wheelchair needing help last week.

After learning she was almost blind, suffered from multiple sclerosis and lived on a Social Security pension, the officers put up $100 of their own money, found spare parts and got the wheelchair running.

Then they kicked in another $120 for new tires.

"I would have been a bed patient without that chair," Ms. Childs said Friday, recalling her fears that repairs would take four to six weeks and that her guide dog would miss his exercise. "I thought my world was ending."

All the substation's employees were invited over for cake she baked Friday as a thank-you.

Derailed train cars catch fire

NAVAJO, Ariz. (AP) — Fourteen cars of a Santa Fe Railroad train derailed near this northeastern Arizona town Saturday, and several caught fire, police and railroad officials said.

A Santa Fe official who declined to give his name said the fire was contained by late afternoon but had not cooled off and "is still a problem."

The official, who gave his title as chief dispatcher for the railroad's Winslow office, said he did not expect the track to be reopened before daybreak Sunday.

The freight train's cargo was believed to include "ammunition, fuel oil, corrosives and automobile passive-restraint propellant cannisters," said Chris Mueller, chief duty officer for the state Department of Public Safety in Phoenix.

At least one firefighter was overcome by smoke, Mueller and Apache County Sheriff's dispatcher Debbie Sherwood said.

Mrs. Sherwood said that some of the derailed cars contained crude oil, and that deputies found "a little metal box with 'radioactive service' on it." A hazardous materials specialist was called in.

However, Mueller said the box "evidently did not contain radioactive material." He said he believed the concern stemmed from an address label giving the box's destination as a lab handling radioactive materials.

The dispatcher in Winslow said he did not believe any of the cars contained hazardous materials.

"As near as we can find out, no hazardous materials are involved," he said.

Mueller said that the propellant cannisters were classified as "Class B explosives." He said he did not know if the ammunition was for military or civilian use.

The tracks run parallel to and about a mile from Interstate 40, and traffic on the Interstate was reported moving slowly as motorists tried to see what had happened.

Freight train jumps rails

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A freight train nearly a mile long derailed Saturday in a desert north of the Imperial Valley, scattering railroad cars and injuring one person, officials said Saturday.

It was the second derailment in Southern California in as many days. A Santa Fe freight train jumped tracks warped by recent storms in Tustin on Friday, but there were no injuries, police said.

The train which derailed about 2 a.m. Saturday threw 20 piggyback railroad cars off the tracks. The train was carrying mostly new cars, and no hazardous materials, said Southern Pacific spokesman Tony Adams.

Jesus Valencia, in his 30s, who was riding the train, was taken to Pioneers Memorial Hospital in Brawley and treated for minor injuries. Valencia, who was believed to be an illegal alien, was released to the Border Patrol, officials said.

The train was bound from Chicago to Los Angeles when it toppled midway between Indio and Yuma, 150 miles southeast of Los Angeles, Southern Pacific Transportation spokesman Gene Hardyman said.

Service on the main line was expected to be stalled for more than 20 hours as emergency crews worked with cranes to clear up the mess.

Rail officials at the site speculated the derailment might have been caused by a broken rail. But Adams said the cause could include the effects on the tracks of extreme desert heat and cold.

In Tustin, five boxcars loaded with grain and nonhazardous materials skipped tracks at Edinger Avenue, said police Lt. Steve Foster. The track's wooden parts had apparently swelled from rain earlier in the week, pushing the steel ties outward, he said.

Bell asks Oklahoma rate hike

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — It'll cost Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. customers two bits to make calls from pay telephones if proposed rate increases are OK'd.

Southwestern Bell, seeking an extra $138.5 million a year, has asked the state Corporation Commission to approve a rate increase that would yield $65.6 in net income, a return of 18.5 percent, a Bell news release said.

The rate increase would affect calls from pay telephones, monthly phone service rates and other services.

The company proposed increasing the charge for calls from pay phones from 15 cents to 25 cents, charging for directory assistance, and increases in service connection charges and some long distance rates.

The proposal would also add as much as $6.60 to the monthly rate for one-party residential service and as much as $16.85 for one-party business service.

Monthly rates for residential service in Oklahoma City would be increased from the present $6.55 to $13.15, and in Tulsa from $5.90 to $12.10.

Monthly business rates in Oklahoma City would go from $19.50 to $36.35 and in Tulsa from $17.10 to $32.85.

If approved, the increase would be the first in basic monthly rates since 1977, the company said.

The Corporation Commission approved a $58.6 million increase in Bell rates in July 1981, but it affected only special and auxiliary services.

The phone company also asked the commission to approve two optional plans for local service designed to provide savings to customers who don't make many calls.

MACON, Ga. (AP) — Neil Lamberth is searching for a customer who paid for a meal and tip with a $500 check and helped boost Lamberth's restaurant out of a financial slump.

"I'm doing better now, and I'd like to pay him back," Lamberth said.

But he's had no luck finding the customer who ate at the Yamato Japanese restaurant on New Year's Day 1981, when Lamberth was waist-deep in medical bills and the top waitress had threatened to walk out.

The man, accompanied by a woman, drove up in a Lincoln Continental. They were having car trouble and decided to stop in for dinner, Lamberth said.

After the meal, Lamberth said he chatted with the men.

"I thought he was going to give me a check for the amount, but I looked at it as he was leaving and I couldn't believe it," said Lamberth.

"I told him I couldn't take it. It was too much," Lamberth said. "He told me I seemed like a nice guy who needed some help."

Lamberth said he was skeptical about cashing the check, because he thought it was a "joke." But he said the check was good and it helped pay some bills.

"I came close to breaking down and crying that night. Nobody had ever done that for me before," Lamberth said.

Things have improved at the restaurant since then, Lamberth said, noting that he and his wife, Akiko, moved their business from the small cafe to a spacious building with air conditioning, carpeting and a new menu.

Lamberth said the man's name is James Mock, but the check showed no address or phone number.

Mock told him he was from Swainsboro and owned four steak houses. But Lamberth said he checked the restaurants with no luck, and banks won't give information about depositors.

"I've never seen anybody who'd do that for a total stranger," Lamberth said. "I'd just like to show my appreciation."

Pecan Harvest Festival slated at mall

By WILLIE STUMBERG
Midland County
Extension Agent — Agriculture

The third annual Midland County Pecan Harvest Festival is set for November 29-30 at Midland Park Mall. This will be the sixth county pecan show. The event was expanded to include a pecan foods section and queen's pageant in 1980. The Harvest Festival is sponsored by the Midland County Pecan Growers Assciation, with the assistance of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The festival is an outgrowth of the interest in, and economic importance of, pecans grown throughout the county. Pecans are being planted with increasing frequency in the Midland area, with an estimated 37,000 trees now established in orchards of 100 trees or more. In addition, there are an estimated 7,800 trees in home yards within the city.

The pecan show is open to everyone, whether you have one tree or one hundred. To enter, simply select 40 nuts of each variety. The sample should represent the variety and be uniform in size and shell color. Nuts should be free of insect or disease damage and free of dust, dirt and shuck remnants.

Participants are limited to one entry of each named variety that grows. The grower may enter as many seedlings (trees grown from a seed), known hybrids or natives, as they wish.

Each sample selected for entry should be placed in a brown paper bag and labeled with the name and address of the grower, with variety name, if known. If the variety is not known, they will be classified by the show judges.

Entries must be received by 5 p.m. Saturday, November 27. Collection points for entries are as follows: County Extension Office, 218 W. Illinois; Village Barber Shop. 2-B Meta Drive; Sandyland Pecans, Rankin Highway (3½ miles south of I-20); and Marge Shaw, 40 Lavera Drive, Ridge Heights Addition. The entries will be processed Sunday, November 28, and judged beginning at 9:30 a.m., November 29.

The Grand Champion pecan will receive a rosette ribbon and pecan wood plaque. Ribbons will be awarded for places one through three in each of the variety categories.

All pecans become the property of the Midland County Pecan Show. Winners in the county will advance to the regional competition, which will be in Wichita Falls December 9-11.

In the pecan foods department there are divisions for both adult and youth. Categories include: Quick Breads; Yeast Breads; Cakes; Pies; Cookies; Candies and Appetizers (sweet and non-sweet). Food entry forms are available at the County Extension Office and must be completed and returned by 5 p.m. Tuesday, November 23. The food entries will be accepted only between 7:30 and 9 a.m. Monday at the mall.

Eleven of Midland's loveliest young ladies are entered in this year's queen's pageant. Cathy Harris of the Pecan Association is working with this group. The queen's pageant features competition in five categories: talent, evening gown, pecan interest, beauty and poise and personality.

The pageant will begin at 7:30 p.m. November 27 in the Midland Community Theatre. The winner will represent Midland County Pecan Growers at the regional show in Wichita Falls and at the Texas Pecan Growers' annual meeting and state pecan show next July.

We urge you to participate and support the Midland County Pecan Harvest Festival by entering any, or all, the show divisions. Additional information can be obtained by calling the Extension Office.

California crop service lists big grape harvest

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — California, which produces 70 percent of all wine sold in the United States, has just harvested a record grape crop despite severe storms that lashed the vines and sent shudders through the state wine industry.

Even more thrilling to wine lovers is the possibility — according to a renowned enologist — that the 1982 vintage includes some white wines which may be classified "of very great elegance."

Kelly Krug, statistician with the California Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, said the total of all grapes harvested in the state exceeds 3 million tons. He said that if it hadn't been for the storms, the figure would probably be 3.5 million tons. The 1981 harvest was 2.4 million tons.

Cattle losses could rise

BROOKVILLE, Kan. (AP) — Cattle losses from a grass fire that burned 75 square miles of central Kansas probably will rise because many cows suffered life-threatening burns, Saline County officials predicted Saturday.

"This is such an unusual type of thing that at first we were only looking at how many cattle may have been killed outright," said Elmer Kern, executive director of the Agriculture and Stabilization Service's county office. "But an awful lot that survived will have to be slaughtered because of burns."

He said burned cattle are highly susceptible to infection and, because their hide is damaged, unable to endure cold.

Kern said the burned area contained about 15,000 head of cattle. He said it was not yet known how many died or would have to be slaughtered, but predicted it would be hundreds.

"The losses are going to be severe, but just how severe is yet to be seen," said Don Rectenwald, head of emergency preparedness for Saline County.

Total damage won't be known until at least Monday, Kern said. Damage reports are being compiled by the ASCS to be used to determine what government aid may be available, he said.

About 1,000 people fought the wind-driven blaze with fire trucks, wet gunny sacks, and barrels of water.

One person died when he tried to run through a wall of flames and 11 people were injured.

Firefighters saved every house endangered by the blaze. It started about 2:30 p.m. Thursday when a branch blown by wind up to 45 mph snapped a power line that ignited dry grass near Brookville, about 180 miles west of Kansas City.

Amendment proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has proposed amendments to federal regulations designed to prevent the spread of pseudorabies, a highly contagious livestock disease.

Officials said the proposed changes "would clarify existing regulations, revise definitions, establish alternate means for swine herds to regain health status and provide for improved interstate shipping."

Walker rides again as SMU escapes Tech, 34-27

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Out of the chill late afternoon shadows of Jones Stadium, Doak Walker rode again as Southern Methodist University rescued its unbeaten, untied season with a kickoff return pulled out of Coach Bobby Collins' hat.

Texas Tech had just raced the clock 71 yards in 14 plays to tie the No. 2-ranked Mustangs at 27 on Ricky Gann's 28-yard field goal with only 17 seconds left in the game.

As Blane Smith, a free safety from Houston Yates, jogged to the sidelines he thought disconately, "Tech tied us. We can't go undefeated."

That's when Collins called him over and said, "We're going to run the throw back."

The trick play worked for 91 yards and a kickoff return touchdown as SMU preserved perfection and thwarted Tech's gallant upset bid, 34-27, before 45,954 speechless fans Saturday.

BOBBY LEACH played the Doak Walker role in this remake of the 1947 TCU game, only the legendary Doak never had 9.2 speed in the 100 meters.

Smith was the trigger man on the trick play that almost backfired. Blane returned kickoffs last year, but this year had to play free safety.

When Collins called for the Throw Back, a play SMU works on once a week, Smith knew what to do.

He received the kickoff on the 15, but his fumble wasn't in the script. "I'm supposed to run up to the 20 and pass back to Leach on the sidelines."

Leach saw the impending disaster and ran back to the 10. A former second string high school quarterback, Smith looked up and found his man and threw immediately. "I think the fumble may have helped the play," he said. "It drew Tech inside and we had our wall set up along the sideline."

ALTHOUGH COLLINS had employed the play a half dozen times in his Southern Mississippi coaching days, this was the first time it went all the way.

"After Tech tied the game with the field goal, I knew it was time to call the play," Collins said. "They were so ecstatic, I knew their coaches would have trouble getting their attention, and I thought we could get Smith in unnoticed."

It was a day in which the ball bounced SMU's way. Eric Dickerson scored with 2:25 left in the half when an errant pitchout bounced right up into his hands. "It wasn't a bad pitch. The wind, the way it was blowing, just blew it up into my shoulder. But I was chasing it and it bounced up into my hands," he said of his 14-yard run that gave SMU a 14-10 lead and wiped out Tech's only lead of the game.

Dickerson, who gained 115 yards in 21 carries, also scored the game's first TD, a 28-yard run that came with ridiculous ease at the end of a laborious 80-yard drive. With fourth and one and the Tech defense pinched in, quarterback Lance McIlhenny pitched out to the senior I-back who had gone wide and somehow unattended. Eric was so wide open, he was in his homerun trot at the 25, not a soul in site.

Red Raider Kerry Tecklenburg (on ground) missed the tackle and teammate Clay Renfroe (right) finally forced James out of bounds. The Mustangs needed a trick play in the final seconds of the game to claim the Southwest Conference victory, 34-27.

Texas survives TCU uprising

Bears hand Owls 11th straight loss, 35-13

By The Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas -Texas survived a furious Texas Christian uprising Saturday and rode Darryl Clark's two second-half touchdowns to a 38-21 Southwest Conference verdict that fanned the flames of a TCU coaching upheaval.

With Coach F.A. Dry's job in jeopardy, the Horned Frogs struck for 18 rapid-fire points and a 21-17 halftime lead that collapsed under a flurry of second-half miscues.

Texas, ranked 20th and still a SWC title contender, drove 72 yards in the third period and Clark bolted the final seven steps for the decisive touchdown.

Texas linebacker Tony Edwards pounced on a TCU fumble in the final quarter and Clark wrapped up a 44-yard scoring drive by bursting in from the 2.

The Steers, 6-2 and 4-1, used Robert Brewer's 31-yard scoring pass to Herkie Walls and Mike Buchannan's blocked punt and subsequent 12-yard touchdown run to mount a 14-3 first quarter lead.

That jumped to 17-3 on Raul Allegre's 42-yard field goal early in the second period and the Steers seemed destined for a lopsided triumph.

He winged a 70-yarder to James Maness and a 12-yarder to Dwayne May while Ken Ozee started and ended the rally with field goals of 37 and 52 yards.

The Frogs had several scoring opportunities in the second half but two fumbles, a pass interception and a dropped touchdown pass added up to their seventh loss against three triumphs.

Baylor 35, Rice 13

HOUSTON — Baylor quarterback Mike Brannan hit 10 of 11 first-half passes, including a 24-yard touchdown shot to Bruce Davis, as the Bears held off a mild third-quarter Rice rally Saturday en route to a 35-13 Southwest Conference football victory.

The Owls have lost 11 straight games since defeating Baylor 17-14 last season and could complete their first all-losing season in 71 years of football Saturday against crosstown rival Houston. Rice finished 0-9-1 in 1968.

Brannan completed his first seven passes of the game and finished the first half with 157 yards as the Bears' took a 21-6 intermission lead.

Rice fought back in the third quarter when quarterback Doug Johnson hit three key passes and ran 2 yards for a touchdown on a quarterback keeper.

The Bears tacked on a 7-yard touchdown run by Allen Rice with 5:08 to play and sophomore Broderick Sargent ran 24 yards with 1:45 to go to end any Owl victory hopes.

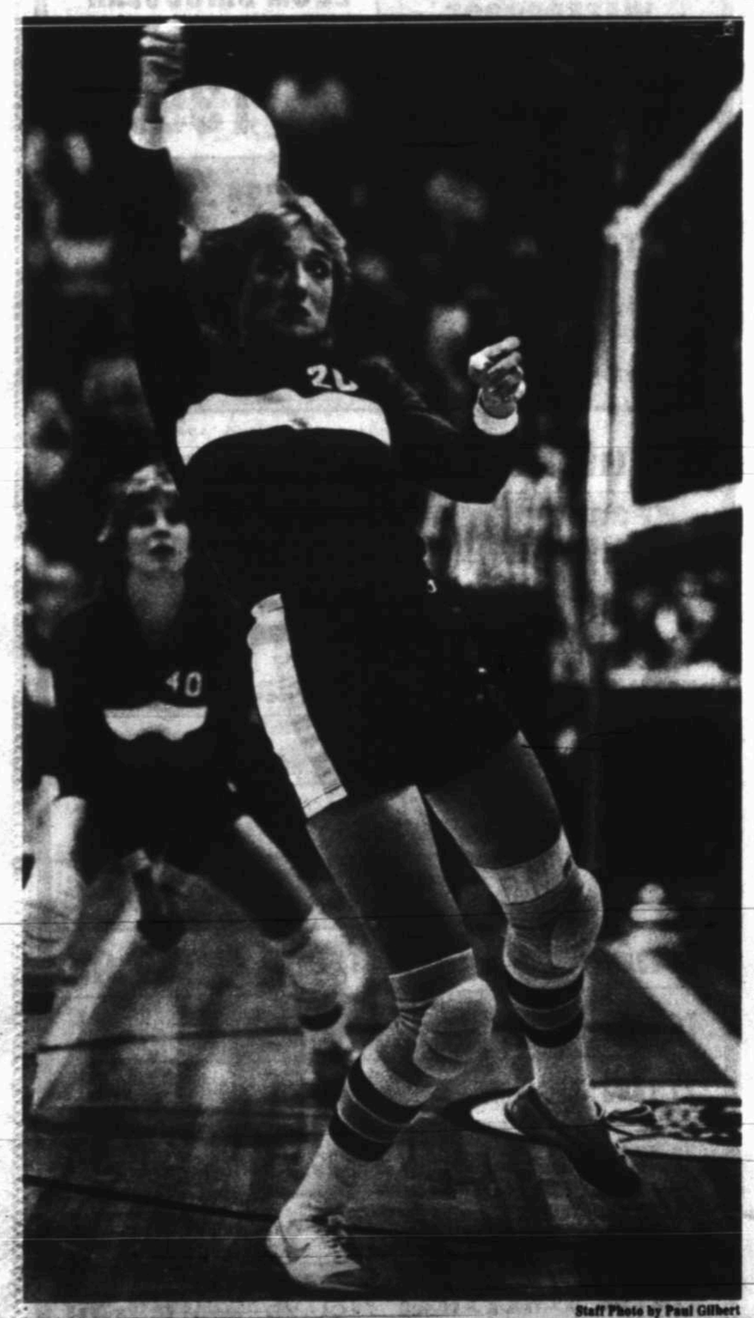

The Owls got on the scoreboard first with the first of two field goals by Joel Baxter, a 53-yarder in the first quarter. It was only the third time this season Rice had led in a game, and came after defensive tackle Clenzie Pierson recovered a fumble by Baylor's Allen Rice at the Bear 26.

Warriors end Bulldogs' volleyball season

Arlington beats SGP to gain State berth

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

For the Midland High Bulldogs, the 1982 volleyball season came to an abrupt end Saturday morning when they suffered a 15-6, 15-6 defeat at the hands of South Grand Prairie's Warriors in Region I Volleyball Tournanament play at Midland Lee Gym.

The Arlington Colts, 15-13, 15-11 winners over El Paso Burges Saturday morning, posted a 15-13, 14-16, 15-13 victory over South Grand Prairie in the tournament's championship game to gain a berth as the Region I representative in the State Tournament next week in Austin.

By winning the tournament, Arlington High improved its record to 32-3 on the season while South Grand Prairie fell to 29-5; Midland High to 26-7 and El Paso Burges to 24-6.

NOT SINCE the playoffs began, and probably not all year, has Midland High faced a team as strong as South Grand Prairie, or rather, a player as strong as SGP's Lisa Smith, a 6-foot-0 junior front-line player who dominated the net with her height advantage and jumping ability.

There was little disguise in the SGP game plan, nor little need for any. Once the ball came into their court, the Warriors would relay, set to Smith and she'd smash it home, more times than not a winner.

"She was awesome," said MHS coach Linda Jolly. "When you have a player that's that tall and will jump, well... My little girls couldn't stop her. We did get to her in the early part of the second game. We blocked her, but it didn't last."

MIDLAND HIGH seemed to be puzzled, both on offense and defense, by the power of Smith's spikes and by her blocking ability on defense. Everything the Bulldogs tried to do to get around her or stop her was in vain. She was, if the term can be used in a team sport, a one-girl wrecking crew.

"I hate to say it wasn't the best game we've played, but it wasn't," said Jolly. "We weren't very aggressive. When we couldn't stop No. 5 (Smith), the girls became confused, they were asking themselves 'what do we do to stop her.' It's not that we played so bad, it's just that they played so well."

"That's been kind of our game plan all year long," said SGP coach Kathy Stanfield. "We start with our two biggest people (Smith and Regina Griggs) together on the front line and they go up together. When we have them on the front line and they go up together, it's like hitting into a brick wall. It's more of an offense really. We try and get them to make mistakes early to get a psychological edge. Volleyball is a very emotional game. Emotion can change with one point in volleyball whereas it can take longer in other sports."

And about her tall star, Stanfield said, "She's a player who handles pressure very well. Some people thrive on pressure and she can handle it. If it gets too much for her, she can always fall back on her ability."

Arlington was able to find an answer for stopping Smith and the Warrior attack in the championship game to gain the state berth.

IN BOTH games of the match, Midland High and South Grand Prairie were tied early. The Bulldogs rallied to knot the first game 5-5 and then 6-6 before the Warriors were able to get going to score nine unanswered points for the win.

In the second game, it was the Bulldogs the forged the quick lead as they went up 5-1 before SGP could come back and knot it at five. From that point on, MHS was only able to come up with one more point as the Warriors rolled on to the victory.

The loss ended a Midland High season that saw a 26-7 record, District 4-5A, Bi-District and Area championships. It was also the final game for seven of Coach Jolly's nine varisty players, girls who have been with her since the start of her tenure as head coach at Midland High.

Graduating from Midland High's team this year are Sheila Christian, Lisa Coldeway, Penny Griffin, Theresa Haney, Jency Johnson, Melinda Raschke and Laura Sherman. One girl, Maggie Marmolejo has another year to go while another, Denise Lanz, will be back for two more seasons.

Troglin, Kelley set pace for Permian victory, 29-6

Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Running back Mike Troglin and quarterback Brent Kelley scored a pair of touchdowns each as Odessa Permian defeated Lubbock Monterey, as expected, 29-6 at Jones Stadium Saturday night.

The unbeaten Panthers, 11-0, thus advance to the second round of the 5A playoffs against El Paso Irvin, winner on penetrations over El Paso Eastwood after a 14-14 tie Friday. The date, site and time for that game is still to be determined.

It was supposed to be a home game for Monterey, but 17,000 of the 21,000 fans on hand sat on the Permian side of the field and spent most of the night creating an unseemly din as Mojo sent the Plainsmen out of the playoff hunt with an 8-2 record.

Permian drove 44 and 78 yards on its first two possessions of the game for a 14-0 lead. Troglin scored with 7:11 left in the first period on a five-yard run and Bobby Knott kicked his first of three conversions.

Troglin broke an 18-yard run off a power sweep right less than two minutes deep into the second period to wrap up the drive and give Permian a 14-0 lead.

Monterey, with a 30-mile and hour wind at its back, reached the Permian 27 and 44 yard lines, but came away empty.

The Panthers received unexpected help in the second half when two bad center snaps by Monterey led to 15 points. A low snap and a punt attempt on the run, good for no yards set; up a 31-yard touchdown push with Kelley sneaking in from the one on the sixth play.

With fourth and five at the Monterey 38, Permian gambled and it backfired. The Plainsmen took over on downs and in two plays had their only touchdown of the game when Jay Douglas sprinted 69 yards up Permian's surprised middle.

A 70-yard punt rocked Monterey back to its one and led to a safety when a high center snap on the punt attempt went through the end zone.

Permian then took the ensuing free kick 54 yards for a touchdown with Kelley going in from the two on the 11th play with 7:33 left in the game.

Douglas was the leading rusher in the game with 129 yards on 21 carries while Troglin's 80 yards on 15 tries led Permian.

Kelley opened up the Monterey defense early, hitting four straight completions and going six for 11 on the night. Monterey's David Haygood completed seven of 13, but for only 25 yards.

Arkansas crushes Texas A&M, 35-0

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Quarterback Tom Jones, benched last week, accounted for three touchdowns and set up another with a fourth-down pass completion as 10th-ranked Arkansas crushed Texas A&M 35-0 Saturday night.

The victory set up a Southwest Conference showdown next week in Dallas between the Razorbacks and second-ranked Southern Methodist. The Mustangs are 10-0 and 7-0 in the conference. Arkansas is 8-1 and 5-1 in league play.

The Aggies did not make their second first down until the final play of the third quarter. When Arkansas took a 28-0 lead five minutes deep in the third quarter on Jones' 1-yard run, the Aggies had run 26 plays and netted 36 yards. In the second quarter, when Arkansas scored 14 points, A&M ran nine plays — including two pass interceptions — and netted 1 yard.

The Razorbacks first touchdown followed a fumble recovery by Ron Faurot at the A&M 43. On fourth-and-eight from the 27, Jones backed up and threw down the middle for Mark Mistler, who hung on at the 10 despite a vicious hit by Billy Cannon. On a dive play over left tackle, Gary Anderson scored on first down.

After Milton Fields deflected a John Elkins pass, Danny Walters intercepted at the Arkansas 43 but a clipping penalty moved the ball to the Razorbacks 27. Ten plays later, Jones dropped back and found Anderson down the middle of the field, several yards behind A&M linebackers Jerry Bullitt and Bobby Strogen. Anderson trotted the last 15 yards to complete a 40-yard scoring pass.

Three plays later, Keith Burns outfought Jimmy Teal for a pass interception and returned it five yards to the A&M 35. Jones ran through three defenders for 18 yards and a first down at the 5. Jessie Clark scored three plays later. That made it 21-0 with 3:53 left in the half.

Sophomore Brad Taylor started in place of Jones, a fifth-year senior, last week when Baylor handed Arkansas its first loss of the year. Jones played one series in that game. Arkansas led 14-0 before running backs Anderson and Clark were injured in the third quarter. Baylor won 24-17.

Blackledge passes Lions past Notre Dame, 24-14

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Todd Blackledge's 48-yard touchdown pass to Curt Warner early in the fourth quarter lifted 5th-ranked Penn State to a 24-14 victory over Notre Dame Saturday and virtually clinched a major bowl bid for the Nittany Lions.

The victory was the ninth against one loss for Penn State, which is idle next week when the bowl bids come out. The Lions close their regular season against Pitt Nov. 26.

Freshman Allen Pinkett's 93-yard kickoff return late in the second quarter gave the Irish a 14-13 lead at the half, but Notre Dame, having lost quarterback Blair Kiel early in the game, was unable to muster a meaningful attack in the second half.

The 13th-ranked Irish took the opening kickoff and marched 76 yards in 15 plays for a touchdown and a 7-0 lead.

Kiel, who has a sore right arm from a late hit in the Pitt game a week earlier, started the game but left during the drive in favor of Ken Karcher who fired an 8-yard touchdown pass to Chris Smith to cap the drive. Kiel did not throw all week in practice and threw one pass, which was incomplete before the leaving the game.

Early in the second quarter the Nittany Lions tied it on a 59-yard drive capped by Blackledge's one-yard touchdwon dive.

Two fumbles, charged to Karcher, were converted into field goals of 41 and 29 yards by Nick Gancitano to put Penn State ahead 13-7.

Women's team posts best Tall City Triathlon time

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The first annual Tall City Triathlon, co-sponsored by the YMCA and Coors, had an unusual ending in that the women gave the men an endurance lesson.

Carrie Mayes (swimming), Rebekah Durham (bike) and Carol Gephart (running) stole the show by posting the best combined scores of swimming, bicycling and running. The three-woman team was officially declared the winners of the Women's Open Division, but their combined score of 75 minutes, 63.98 seconds was the best team time posted by all entrants. Women's endurance liberation has hit the Tall City.

The Mayes-Durham-Gephart team proved to be a good one. Mayes was a standout high school and City of Midland Swim team swimmer while Gephart recently won the women's 10-K Lite run in Midland. Durham also proved her worth in the bike competition by beating everyone.

THE OPEN Men's title went to Rick Cook (swimming), Bill DeGrave (bike) and Michael Bonin (running), but their time was 81:11.02 and four other teams had better marks, unusual since most of the Men's Open Division winners in triathlons own the best times.

The three-event, three-member teams included competition of a ½-mile swim, a 10-mile bike ride and a 5-mile run with team member competing in a different event. The total time of the three events marked the team score.

Barry Zinz (swimming), Michael Ysas (bike) and Rick Ricketts (running) won the Men's 30-39 competition with a fine 77:07.28 while John Jordan (swimming), Bob Jackson (bike) and Ralph Arrell (running) took the Men's 40 and Over Division with a 78:10.25. Both of those teams beat the Men's Open time.

IN THE Open Mixed Division, Rene Ulmschneider, Paul Kemp and Emily Hoffman took top honors with an 84:02.73.

Cook proved to be the top ½-mile swimmer, wiping out all competitors with a 10:39.02. Durham was the top biker with a 33:13, again the top prize going to the lady, and John Carmony's 28.02 paced all runners over the five-mile course.

The swimming and running was held at the Mabee Memorial Swim Center while the bike race was held at Midland College.

Cold weather and a severe wind hampered all entrants in the first Midland triathlon, but promoters say that this event will be held in early October next year. There are also plans being made for a late March or early June triathlon, but it will have a different twist. Plans call for a solo division as well as a team event and that could produce the Permian Basin's top athlete with a swimming-bike-running triple.

Florida leads women's golf tourney, Texas Christian four back in second

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The University of Florida took first place in both the individual and team standings Saturday in the Second Women's University Golf Tournament here.

The five-member Florida team shot a total of 881 after 54 holes, trailed by Texas Christian University at 885 and Tulsa at 902. Texas A&M took fourth place at 914.

Deb Richard of Florida took first place honors in individual standings with a card showing 216 after three rounds on Monterrey's Club Campestre course. Her best day round came Friday when she finished the 18 holes in one under par.

Marci Bozarth of Texas Christian University was second at 217, followed by teamate Jenny Lidbal at 218. Cathy Hanlon of Southern Methodist, whose three-under-par round was Saturday's best, finished fourth with 220.

GOODWELL, Okla. (AP) — Senior quarterback Kenny Hughes overcame 40 mph winds and a stubborn McMurry College defense Saturday to lead the Aggies to a 30-8 win that opened the way for a possible bowl bid.

Hughes hit wide receiver Melvin Ray twice for touchdown passes of 9 and 59 yards and completed 19 of 31 passes for 193 yards.

The win gives Panhandle a chance to be invited to the NAIA Sunflower Bowl in Winfield, Kan., next Saturday.

The Aggies rolled up 299 yards of offense and the defense, ranked second nationally, held the Abilene, Texas team to 90 yards. This year Panhandle has yielded an average of 177 yards per game to its opponents.

Buffaloes tear up Shorthorns, 44-7

FORT STOCKTON — The Stanton Buffaloes, making thier first playoff appearance in 32 years, used an armada of running backs to demolish the Marfa Shorthorns 44-7 here Saturday night in a Class AA bi-district playoff game.

Stanton's awesome attack rolled out 354 yards rushing and 34 first half points to sprint to the victory. The Buffs, the champions of District 7-AA, got touchdowns from four different backs and a 30-yard field goal from Scott Church. To show just how many backs Stanton employed, Bobby Barnhill led all rushers with only 68 yards and he didn't score.

Stanton now moves to the Area playoffs at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Brownfield against the 10-1 Shallowater Mustangs, the winners of District 6-AA.

The Marfa offense did little against Stanton also. The Shorthorns didn't make a first down until the last play of the third quarter and finally scored in the fourth period on a 55-yard pass from Martin Quintanas to George Colomo.

Marfa was held to a mere 30 yards rushing, but did have 113 yards in the air, 55 of which came on the TD toss.

"It was just one of those nights when everything went right for us," said an elated Stanton coach Steve Park following the Buff victory. "The offensive line play was tremendous and we just did what we've been doing all year."

Stanton jumped to a 14-0 lead in the first period when Rocky Barnes scored from 13 yards out and Mark Helms on a 10-yard run, but the Buffs were just starting their first half explosion.

The Buffaloes erupted for 20 more points in the second period. Barnes got things rolling again with a 20-yard TD romp and Koy Blocker scored on a four-yard scamper. Robby Barnes scored on a one-yard plunge before the half to make it 34-0.

Church's 30-yard field goal in the third period was the only Stanton score of the period, but that made it 37-0.

Marfa finally got one pass down against the Stanton defense when Colomo did his thing, but the Buffs answered with an eight-yard TD from Tony Ramos for the final score of the night. Church was good on all five extra point attempts, but Stanton did misfire on one two-point conversion try in the first half.

So Stanton is off on the right foot in the new enviorment of the state playoffs, but they should get a good test against powerful Shallowater next Friday in the Brownfield meeting.

Georgia rallies to beat Auburn, 19-14

By The Associated Press

AUBURN, Ala. — All-American Herschel Walker, soaring past the 5,000-yard career mark, raced for 177 yards and two touchdowns as top-ranked Georgia trimmed Auburn 19-14 Saturday to capture its third consecutive Southeastern Conference football championship and a berth in the Sugar Bowl.

Walker smashed over from the three with 8:42 remaining to erase a 14-13 lead Auburn had taken five minutes earlier when 170-pound scatback Lionel James streaked 87 yards for a score.

Auburn threatened after Walker's go-ahead score, reaching the Georgia 14 before being set back by a penalty and two defensive losses, and turned the ball back on a fourth-down incompletion.

Southern Miss 38, Alabama 29

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Reggie Collier scored three touchdowns and Sam DeJarnette got two and rambled for 152 yards to lead Southern Mississippi to a 38-29 upset Saturday over 17th-ranked Alabama and hand the Crimson Tide its first loss at home since 1963.

Seventeenth-ranked Alabama, which had won 57 games in a row in Bryant-Denny Stadium, fought back to within six points early in the fourth period, but Steve Clark added a field goal and Southern held off the Tide for the upset.

Florida, back in 1963, was the last team to defeat Alabama in Tuscaloosa, 10-6.

Mississippi St. 27, LSU 24

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Dana Moore kicked a 45-yard field goal in the fading seconds Saturday to lift the Mississippi State Bulldogs to a 27-24 upset of unbeaten and sixth-ranked Louisiana State in a frantic finish to a regionally televised football game.

Moore kicked the winning points with 20 seconds left, breaking the Bulldogs' six-game losing streak after it appeared Louisiana State had rescued a 24-24 tie on fullback Mike Montz' 35-yard touchdown run with 4:52 left.

Montz had scored shortly after Mississippi State went ahead 24-17 when quarterback John Bond and end Danny Knight teamed on a 64-yard pass-run touchdown play with 10:34 left in the fourth quarter.

Tennessee 30, Mississippi 17

JACKSON, Miss. — Tailback Chuck Coleman scored two touchdowns and Tennessee capitalized on two early fumble recoveries Saturday as the Volunteers rolled to a 30-17 Southeastern Conference football victory over Mississippi.

Scouts from the Liberty, Hall of Fame, Independence and Peach bowls were on hand to see Tennessee win its fifth against three losses and a tie. The Ole Miss record dropped to 4-6.

Florida 39, Kentucky 13

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Neal Anderson ran for three touchdowns, including a 63-yard score in the fourth quarter, as Florida routed winless Kentucky 39-13 in a Southeastern Conference football game Saturday.

Anderson, a freshman getting his first start, finished with 197 yards in 33 carries in helping Florida improve its record to 6-3 overall and 3-3 in the SEC.

Kentucky, which fell to 0-9-1 overall and 0-5 in the conference, took a 7-3 lead on George Adams' 14-yard run with 1:14 left in the first quarter.

Clemson defeats Terps

By The Associated Press

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Reggie Pleasant's fumble recovery with 3:48 left blunted Maryland's fourth quarter comeback and ensured a 24-22 victory for 11th-ranked Clemson over 18th-ranked Maryland Saturday.

Clemson, 7-1-1 after winning its seventh straight, assured itself of at least a tie for the Atlantic Coast Conference championship with a 5-0 mark. Maryland is 4-1 in league play, and each team has one game left.

Maryland, 7-3, scored on a 37-yard pass from Boomer Esiason to Greg Hill and on Rick Badanjek's second one-yard TD of the game in the fourth quarter, and added a two-point conversion.

N. Carolina 27, Virginia 14

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Kelvin Bryant rushed for 150 yards on 34 carries and scored twice Saturday as North Carolina stopped stubborn Virginia 27-14 in Atlantic Coast Conference football.

Bryant's performance was witnessed by scouts from the Peach and Hall of Fame bowls. He increased his season total to 755 yards rushing and, with two games remaining, needs 245 yards for his second consecutive 1,000-yard season and the third of his career.

Bruins defeat Cardinals in wild scoring duel, 38-35

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — UCLA's Tom Ramsey fired two touchdown passes and ran for another score in winning a quarterback duel from Stanford's John Elway Saturday as the 12th-ranked Bruins topped the Cardinal 38-35 in a wild Pacific-10 Conference football game at the Rose Bowl.

A crowd of 78,452 watched Ramsey, who leads the nation in passing efficiency, complete his first eight passes and finish with 19 completions in 27 attempts for 314 yards without an interception. Both of his scoring throws went to Jojo Townsell on plays of 9 and 4 yards.

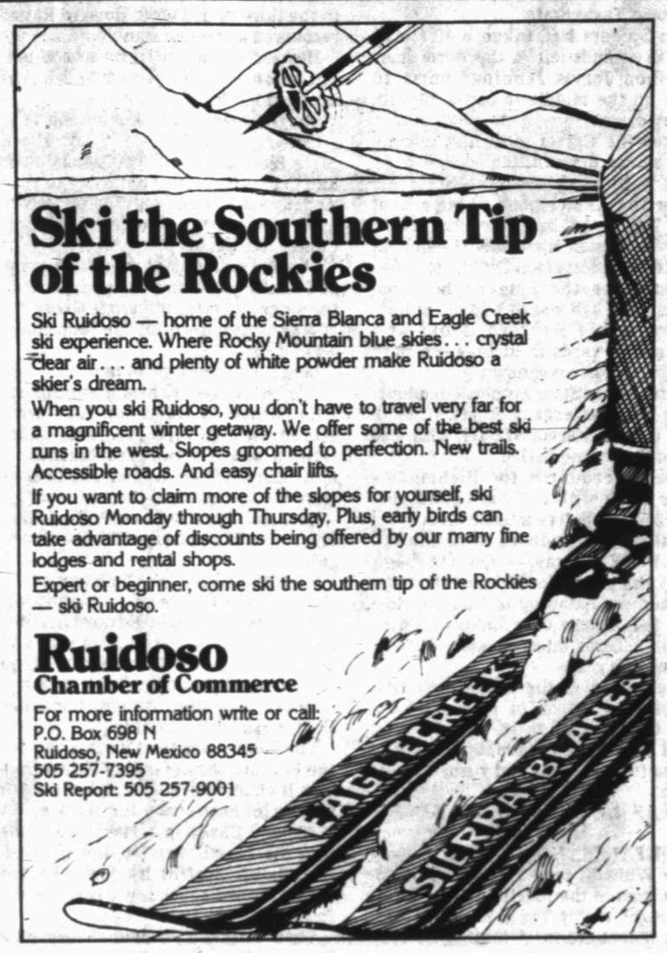

Elway, the NCAA career leader in completions, connected on 29 of his 39 passing attempts for 352 yards and completed 10 in a row at one stage late in the game. He was intercepted once.

Elway threw two touchdown passes — a 47-yarder to Emile Harry with 51 seconds remaining in the first half and an 11-yarder to Vincent White with 3:52 left in the game. It was the 19th straight game in which Elway has thrown at least one TD aerial.

The Bruins, 4-1-1 in Pac-10 play and 8-1-1 overall, drove 91 and 80 yards for touchdowns on their first two possessions to go ahead for good. Scoring were Frank Cephous on an 11-yard run and Danny Andrews on a 7-yard dash.

Stanford, 3-4 in league play and 5-5 overall, drew to within four points at 31-27 on a 1-yard scoring run by Mike Dotterer with 7:25 remaining in the game but the Bruins came right back to march 76 yards for their final touchdown, which came on a 5-yard keeper by Ramsey with 4:49 left.

NTSU posts 22-13 win over Richmond

By The Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. — North Texas State's Mean Green scored a pair of fourth-quarter touchdowns — on Greg Carter's pass to Dennis Kuithe and Lonnie Burgess' short run — as they came from behind to post a 22-13 college football victory over Richmond's winless Spiders Saturday.

The victory left North Texas State 2-8, Richmond 0-9.

Carter's 5-yard scoring pass Kuithe with 9:14 remaining put the Mean Green in front for good and Burgess' 5-yard run with 1:18 to go and his reception of a pass from Carter for a 2-point conversion secured the victory for North Texas State.

The Spiders had taken a 10-7 lead with 45 seconds left in the third quarter when Jarvis Jennings burst 10 yards up the middle to cap a 72-yard, 11-play drive.

After the Carter-to-Kuithe scoring pass, senior John Roach kicked a 44-yard field goal, the longest of his career, to pull Richmond within a point with 7:41 to go. But defensive tackle Mike Thompson blindsided Richmond quarterback Napoleon DuBois to cause a fumble on the Spiders' last possession. The ball was picked off in mid-air by tackle Rayford Cooks and returned 18 yards to Richmond's 10 to set up Burgess' touchdown.

Sul Ross 49, Lubbock Christian 7

ALPINE, Texas — Quarterback Larry Hill passed for 284 yards and two touchdowns Saturday to lead Sul Ross to a 49-7 victory over Lubbock Christian in a Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association game.

The win gives the Lobos their first undefeated season in 18 years. Lubbock Christian fell to 0-8.

TEXAS LUTHERAN 14, E NEW MEXICO 10

PORTALES, N.M. — Quarterback Jesse Williams tossed a 19-yard touchdown pass in the fourth quarter Saturday night to lift Texas Lutheran to a 14-10 non-conference football victory over Eastern New Mexico.

Both teams closed the season with 4-6 records.

Eastern New Mexico jumped out to a 10-0 lead when quarterback Jack Turner scored a touchdown on a 6-yard jaunt in the first quarter and Rosli Hussein drilled a 47-yard field goal in the second quarter.

However, Texas Lutheran started chipping away at the Eastern New Mexico lead with 33 seconds remaining in the second quarter as running back Eric Brown scampered for a touchdown from 1 yard out.

Howard Payne 24, Texas A&I 8

BROWNWOOD, Texas — Mark Salmans rushed for two touchdowns as Howard Payne capitalized on Texas A&I mistakes to whip the Javelinas 24-8 in Lone Star Conference play Saturday.

Salmans scored from one yard out in the first quarter after the Yellow Jackets recovered a blocked punt at the A&I one-yard line. Randy Cregar intercepted a Javelina pass 57 seconds later and returned it for a touchdown.

Salmans scored from eight yards out in the third period after Howard Payne recovered a Javelina fumble.

Howard Payne raised its season record to 3-6 and LSC record to 2-4. A&I dropped to 5-5 and 2-4.

Angelo State 44, Sam Houston 14

SAN ANGELO, Texas — Quarterback Slade Sherrod ran for two touchdowns and passed for a third Saturday to pace Angelo State to an easy 44-14 victory over Sam Houston State in a Lone Star Conference game.

Sherrod scored on third-quarter runs of 6 and 33 yards and passed 8 yards in the second quarter to Dennis Green for another touchdown for the Rams, now 5-4 and 4-2.

Sam Houston fell to 3-7 and 1-5.

Angelo State's Ernest Pennington, who rushed 16 times for 102 yards, scored on a 12-yard run, and Eddie O'Brien added a two-yard touchdown run. Cornerback Kevin Alexander recovered a fumble in the end zone.

SWTS 14, Abilene Christian 13

SAN MARCOS, Texas — Linebacker Tim Staskus stopped Edward Garner on a two-point conversion run with 1:25 left as Southwest Texas State edged Abilene Christian University 14-13 and clinched their third straight Lone Star Conference championship.

The victory was the 13th in a row for the Bobcats, the defending NCAA Division II champion. It was also the 100th victory for head coach Jim Wacker.

Abilene Christian trailed 14-0 going into the fourth quarter, but quarterback Loyal Proffitt hit Steve Parker with a 3-yard touchdown pass on the first play of the final period.

Then Reginald Bridges recovered a SWT fumble on the Abilene Christian 27 with less than five minutes left in the game, and Proffitt took the Wildcats 73 yards, hitting Kelly West with a 13-yard touchdown pass that closed the margin to one point.

SWT had built its lead on Eric Cobble's 21-yard scoring run in the first quarter and cornerback Ken Huewitt's 21-yard interception return in the third quarter.

SWT finished with 206 yards and ACU with 186 in the defensive battle. Proffitt completed 14 of 35 for 153 yards. ACU fell to 5-4-1 for the year.

Washington upsets Arizona State

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Seventh-ranked Washington converted two fumble recoveries into touchdowns and Chuck Nelson tied an NCAA record with his 23rd field goal of the season as the Huskies held on to upset third-ranked Arizona State 17-13 Saturday night in a Pacific 10 Conference football showdown.

With the win, Washington moved back into position to claim its third straight Pac-10 title and accompanying trip to the Rose Bowl while essentially eliminating the Sun Devils from contention.

The Huskies, now 9-1 overall and 6-1 in league play, can wrap up the championship next week at winless Washington State.

Arizona State (9-1, 5-1) is idle until Nov. 27, when the Sun Devils end regular-season play at Arizona.

With his team ahead 10-3, Washington's Vince Albritton recovered an Arizona State fumble on the second-half kickoff at the Sun Devil 25-yard line. Four plays later, Husky tailback Jacque Robinson bulled over from the four-yard line for a 17-3 lead.

A 50-yard touchdown run by freshman tailback Darryl Clack with 9:49 left in the third quarter cut the Sun Devil deficit to 17-10 and Arizona State's Luis Zendejas kicked a 47-yard field goal with 10:15 to go in the game to make it 17-13.

The Huskies, however, controlled the ball from then on and hung on for the victory before a record Sun Devil stadium crowd of 72,021.

Washington opened the scoring on a 20-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Tim Cowan to split end Aaron Williams four seconds into the second quarter. It was set up by Scot Faussett's recovery of a fumbled punt reception with 18 seconds remaining in the first period.

USC 48, Arizona 41

TUCSON, Ariz. — Southern California and Arizona both pulled out all their offfensive stops Saturday night and the Trojans, behind three scoring interceptions and three Scott Tinsley touchdown passes, withstood a furious Arizona comeback effort to beat the Wildcats 48-41 in Pacific 10 Conference football.

Southern Cal led 41-20 in the third quarter, after a quick 17 points, and seemed headed for a blowout, but the Wildcats drew new life after recovering a fumbled punt on the Trojan six-yard line and tailback Neon Edwards scampered in on a two-yard run.

Arizona pulled within one touchdown at 41-34, on a Tom Tunnicliffe to Mark Gobel three-yard pass with 9:22 remaining, but the Trojans came up with the defensive play that made the difference, as cornerback Darrel Hopper stripped the ball from tailback Vance Johnson and ran it 59 yards to put the Trojans ahead 48-34, with 5:35 left in the game.

Utah defeats UTEP, 45-30

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Senior tailback Carl Monroe rushed for a career-high 215 yards and sophomore quarterback Kenny Vierra threw three touchdowns as Utah defeated Texas-El Paso 45-30 Saturday in a wild Western Athletic Conference contest.

UTEP, which has now lost 10 straight against an opening season win, gave up 594 yards total offense against the visiting Utes. now 5-5 on the season and 3-3 in WAC play.

The 5-9, 170 pound Monroe — ranked eighth nationally in rushing entering the game — shredded the UTEP defense for 215 yards on 45 carries.

UTEP, held scoreless the first half, came back with 30 second-half points on four touchdowns, including a 77-yard third-quarter keeper by quarterback Kevin Ward.

Fisher runs over Clint to lead Owls to 47-13 victory

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

PECOS — Reagan County's Gregg Fisher rushed for 339 yards and scored five touchdowns here Saturday afternoon, leading his Owls to a 47-13 Class AA bi-district football championship over the Clint Lions.

Fisher, who missed the first two games of the season with injuries, had 1,173 yards rushing in eight games heading into this bi-district clash, but now has 1,512 yards after his career rushing best of 339 yards on 22 carries. He did it all in three quarters also, carrying only once in the fourth period.

"Last week against Wall, I had my best game with 262 yards, but this is the best ever," said Fisher after scoring on runs of 72, 79 and 67 yards to go along with a three-yard TD and a 25-yard touchdown pass from Bobby Gunnels.

"I didn't see anything in particular about the Clint defense except they were playing tight inside and my fullback (Howard Williams) laid a couple of blocks down that opened up the long runs," noted Fisher.

The victory vaults the 5-5-1 Owls into the Class AA Area tilt against New Deal. That game will be held at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Snyder. New Deal was the runnerup of District 5-AA and defeated Farwell, 26-0, Friday night.

The Owls never looked back in this one, scoring the first three touchdowns of the game and led by a 28-7 margin at the half. Fisher scored three TDs in the first half. The first was the 25-yard pass from Gunnels. Williams got the second TD on a seven-yard run and Fisher added TDs of 72 and three yards before the half.

In the third period, Fisher ripped off TDs of 79 and 67 yards before calling it a day and Williams had a four-yard TD to add to the Reagan County attack. Clint got a 62-yard TD from Tony Burton in the second period and another one-yard Burton touchdown in the third period. Burton had 131 yards rushing on 19 carries, but was overshadowed by the Fisher onslaught.

The victory marked a successful playoff beginning for the Owls, who are making their first post-season appearance since 1973. A Big Lake fan made sure Reagan County coach Richard Davis didn't miss the importance of the victory. Immediately after the game, a fan gave Davis a T-shirt that read, "Reagan County — Bi-District Champion."

"When you have this kind of day rushing, you know that your line has done a good job," noted the pleased Davis. "Our district (7-AA) is so tough that if you get out of it, you have a good football team. I just don't think they (Clint) play the same kind of competition we do."

But Fisher seemed to have an even better reason for the lop-sided score and you can credit Davis for that. "I think we were in better shape than Clint," mused Fisher. "This was our first afternoon game this year and it was hot out there in the first half, but we trained hard all week by running sprints."

Both teams have been maligned somewhat this week since both got to the playoffs with losing records. Clint falls from the playoffs with a 4-6 record. The Owls came into the game with a 4-5-1 mark. Now the Owls have a chance to prove that their record was misleading at best and Fisher answered the critics five times here Saturday.

South Korea's Kim near death after Mancini KO punches

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — South Korean lightweight Duk Koo Kim was described as "just about dead" Saturday night by a neurologist who operated on him after he was knocked unconscious in a fight with World Boxing Association lightweight champion Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini.

"There are no signs of any brain function," Dr. Lonnie Hammargren said after the nearly three-hour surgery. "There are no reflexes, no movement, nothing."

Hammargren said there was no hope for Kim's survival.

"What little there is left (of brain function) will stop working after a short while," he said. "The pressure in his head will go up and up and that will be it."

Hammargren said there was a large blood clot on the right side of Kim's brain. He said he did not know whether the blood clot was caused by a culmination of blows or by two vicious shots to the head that knocked the South Korean out at the beginning of the 14th round.

Hammargren said Kim was being kept alive by life support machines.

A POWERFUL left-right combination by Mancini to open the 14th round sent the top-ranked challenger sprawling on the canvas beneath the ropes in the nationally televised fight. He staggered to his feet, but fell again and was unconscious as referee Richard Green moved in to stop the fight at 19 seconds of the round.

The knockout came after a bruising 13 rounds that saw Kim take a beating from the champion but refuse to go down.

The challenger won only a few rounds early in the fight and was well behind on the scorecards of the three ringside judges. But his southpaw, clinching style kept Mancini off-balance.

Kim landed several hard overhand lefts to Mancini's head during the bout and attempted to follow up on them with brief flurries. Mancini, however, never seemed hurt during the fight and took the best that Kim had to offer.

Kim, 134¼, hit Mancini with several apparent low blows and had a point taken away on the judges' scorecards by referee Green in the 10th round.

Razorbacks sweep District 6 cross country

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — Arkansas' Anthony Leonard raced over the 10,000-meter course in 29:15 to take first place and lead the Razorbacks to a sweep of the NCAA District 6 cross country championships here Saturday.

The Arkansas women's team upset the Longhorn women, 46-53, for the women's district crown. Texas' Lori Nelson won the individual honors, covering the 5,000-meter course in a record 17:20. She was 25 seconds under her winning time in the Nov. 1 conference championship.

The Razorback men made a perfect team score of 15 and took the top six individual places, easily out-distancing second-place winner Texas A&M, which had 98 points, and third-place Texas, which came in with 102 points. The win gave Arkansas and A&M berths in the NCAA national meet set for Nov. 22 at Indiana University.

Ronald Carroll placed second in the meet, finishing one second behind Leonard. Roland Reina was third in 30:01, David Swain fourth at 30:11 and Thomas Maloney fifth, also in 30:11, and Randolph Reina was sixth in 30:34.

Texas' Sam Sitonek took seventh place, with Rice's William Moore and Texas' John Helmick eighth and ninth. The three men are the individual qualifiers for the national NCAA meet.

In the women's race, Arkansas' Sharon Little was second in 17:27, and UT's Tracey Wong was third in 17:31. The Arkansas women automatically qualify for the national meet. Nelson, Wong and fourth-place finisher Cindy Anzalone of Houston, who finished in 17:35, are the individual women's national qualifiers.

Tech's second half rally falls short

"It's the first time we used that play this year and when Craig cut the cornerback, I was home free," Dickerson said.

BUT TECH, which fumbled away one opportunity at the SMU 23 in the first period on a Jim Hart to Troy Smith pass which was completed inside the 15, jarred loose and recovered by Russell Carter at the SMU one, finally got a 37-yard field goal out of Gann with 6:48 left in the half to cut the margin to 7-3.

Free safety Stan David intercepted a McIlhenny pass and returned 24 yards to the SMU 25. Six plays later quarterback Hart snook over from the one with 3:35 left in the half for a 10-7 lead.

SMU retaliated quickly with a five-play, 77-yard drive on which Dickerson made his famous dribble into the end zone from the 14. Then with 49 seconds left in the half, Jeff Harrell hit a wind aided 39-yard field goal after linebacker Gary Moten intercepted Hart at midfield. McIlhenny set it up with a 27-yard pass to split end Gary Smith.

It looked like the expected rout was on in the third quarter when middle guard Darrin Boone blocked a Dennis Vance punt and Craig James took it in on the first play at the 16 for a 24-10 SMU lead with 3:53 left in the third period.

BUT TECH was far from through. Before the third quarter was out, the Raiders marched 69 yards to score on a 16-yard pass as Hart escaped SMU's blitz to find tight end Buzz Tatom in the end zone.

Tech tied it with 10:04 left in the game when Anthony Hutchinson, who rushed for 206 yards, went 72 yards into the 30-mile wind for a touchdown.

That set up Tech's final drive, beginning at its own 20. "Their off tackle slants and sweeps were working and they threw a few out patterns," said SMU's Smith. "But all through that last drive, I thought we would get a turnover. Then I thought they would miss the field goal and they almost did. It was about a foot inside when it went over the bar."

"I saw us dropping to 9-0-1 and sixth or seventh in the polls," said Dickerson. "I hadn't lost total hope, but I was beginning to wonder."

James, who watched the big return from the sideline, recalled, "I got my hardest hit of the day when I ran down to the end zone to congratulate Leach. My helmet got knocked off, I lost my chin strap and I got hit in the mouth."

Over in the other lockerroom, Coach Jerry Moore was as stunned as the Tech stands after the sudden, dramatic turnabout. "This is one of the hardest experiences I've had to go through. Our mistakes in our kicking game, the fumbled punt, the blocked punt and the last kickoff return really hurt us...I'm really proud of those guys for never giving up. They never thought they were going to lose that game today."

Baylor improved its record to 4-5-1 for the season and 3-3-1 in SWC games. The Owls now are 0-10, and 0-7.

Brannan completed 16 of 22 passes for the game for 206 yards and had no interceptions.

After Rice got its third-quarter touchdown, Johnson threw interceptions to Baylor's Bo Scott Metcalf and Kevin Hancock to kill Rice's scoring drives.

Hancock's theft set up Rice's 7-yard touchdown run.

Baylor fumbled on its first offensive play of the game when Rice dropped the ball and Pierson pounced on it at the Bear 26. The Owls retreated 10 yards on three plays before Baxter kicked his school record 53 yarder.

Brannan hit wide receiver Gerald McNeil on passes of 21, 18 and 11 yards to key Baylor's first touchdown drive, a 1-yard leap by Anderson.

Brannan went to Ates for 20 yards and Davis for five and 16 yards to keep the streak alive in the second touchdown drive, capped when Brannan faked to Anderson in the line and pitched back to Ates who trotted into the end zone standing.

Davis skidded into the corner of the end zone as he hauled in Brannan's pass with 1:43 to go in the first half.

Fishing majestic Lake Powell on the Arizona-Utah border might be the absent spot in your outdoor mind since many of Texas' hunting seasons have opened. but you need another look at visiting Lake Powell this winter.

Not only will you find the 180-mile man-made reservoir uncrowded, but Powell is experiencing its best fishing months. Lodging, houseboat and powerboat rentals are also discounted at more reasonable rates, effective Nov. 1.

"In addition to discounting houseboats 20 percent, we are providing a pull-along powerboat free of charge. This offer is in effect at all Lake Powell marinas. Compared to seasonal rates, savings on the discount package can range as high as $697 a week," says Al Earley, executive vice president of Del E. Webb Recreational Properties.

"At Wahweap Lodge, rooms are one-third off seasonal prices. Effective Jan. 1, boat tours will be discounted 20 percent. Families can enjoy long weekends and holidays while fishing the lake's growing striped bass population."

While boat tours are not in effect until Jan. 1, beginning Nov. 15 guests at Wahweap Lodge will be receiving two room nights and an all-day guided tour to Rainbow Bridge for $72.

Visitation at Lake Powell is up about five percent over 1981 and an expected 70,000 will take Wahweap boat tours this year. A combined 418 houseboats and powerboats are available at Wahweap, Bullfrog, Hall's Crossing and Hite resorts/marinas.

Still, fishing is the main attraction with fine largemouth bass and crappie. And striped bass is now drawing anglers from across the United States.

Last year at this time fishermen were chasing shad in the middle of Powell's broad bays, landing stripers in the process. This year the action is in the back of the canyons, early and late in the day. You rarely see shad, but four to eight pound stripers are being caught on surface and shallow crank baits.

In addition to surface lures, stripers are going for jigs, from four to 80 feet deep, a technique which is producing a healthy number of walleye in the two to three pound range.

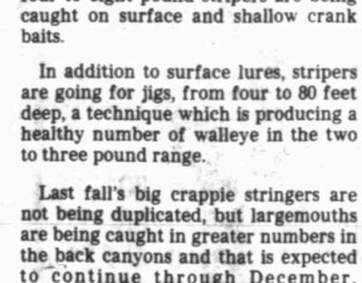

Last fall's big crappie stringers are not being duplicated, but largemouths are being caught in greater numbers in the back canyons and that is expected to continue through December. Another new striper pattern emerged this year as fishermen used anchovies with great success, first near the dam and then further uplake.

There's no place in the world like Lake Powell. West Texans can reach the lake in a hard 10-hour drive. If you choose to fly, you can hop a commuter out of Las Vegas to Page, Ariz.

For reservations and information on boat rentals, lodging, etc., you may call toll free, 1-800-528-6154.

Eighth-ranked Panthers have easy time against Army, 24-6

By The Associated Press

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Dan Marino threw three short touchdown passes while Pittsburgh's defense shackled Army as the eighth-ranked Panthers methodically marched to a 24-6 victory Saturday in college football.

With scouts from the Sugar, Gator and Fiesta bowls in attendance, Pitt had no trouble rebounding from last week's 31-16 loss to Notre Dame — which knocked the Panthers out of the No. spot — in running its record to 8-1.

Joe McCall rushed for 129 yards and Dwight Collins caught touchdown passes of 6 and 4 yards from Marino, who was not particularly impressive. The senior quarterback completed 9 of 19 passes for only 71 yards and suffered three interceptions.

Florida State 49, Louisville 14

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Tailback Greg Allen ran for 173 yards and four touchdowns as ninth-ranked Florida State crushed Louisville 49-14 in a nationally televised game Saturday night.

Allen increaed his national scoring leadership to 120 points, a 13-point-per-game clip, and broke Florida State's season scoring record of 104 points set by kicker Bill Capece in 1980.

The Seminoles raised their record to 8-1, while the Cardinals fell to 4-6 before 51,233 fans at Doak Campbell Stadium and a cable-TV audience.

Allen, a sophomore from Milton, Fla., scored on runs of 1 yard in the second quarter, 1 and 7 yards in the third period and 4 yards in the fourth quarter.

Allen gained his rushing yardage on 25 carries while alternating at tailback with Ricky Williams, who had 140 yards on 10 carries.

Also scoring for the Seminoles were quarterback Kelly Lowrey on a 2-yard run, defensive back Gary Henry on a 42-yard return of a blocked punt in the first quarter, and fullback Tony Smith on a 4-yard run in the second quarter.

Boston College 20, Syracuse 13

NEWTON, Mass. — Sophomore quarterback Doug Flutie, rallying from a frustrating performance, passed 29 yards to Gerard Phelan in the end zone with 58 seconds remaining Saturday as Boston College kept alive post-season bowl hopes with a 20-13 football victory over Syracuse.

Flutie, who completed only four of his first 20 passes, came alive after Syracuse's Russ Carpentieri just missed on a 46-yard field goal attempt with 2:42 to play.

Getting a last chance, Flutie took command after BC picked up a first down at its 35 on an illegal use of hands penalty.

Flutie lost a yard to the 34 and then hit on three passes in a row to salvage the victory and boost the Eagles' record to 7-2-1. He passed 21 yards to Paul Zdanek and then 16 more to Bob Biestek for a first down at the Syracuse 29.

Phelan, a sophomore speedster, then took off down the right side and was all alone in the end zone as he grabbed Flutie's pass.

The loss was a heart-breaker for Syracuse, 2-8. The Orangemen led 13-10 until the sixth minute of the fourth period when Kevin Snow booted a 27-yard field goal for a 13-13 tie.

South Carolina 17, Navy 14

COLUMBIA, S.C. — South Carolina running back Thomas Dendy streaked for 155 yards and scored on a 70-yard touchdown run to lead the Gamecocks to a 17-14 win over Navy in college football Saturday.

Dendy broke the freshman season rushing record of 623 yards set by former Gamecock star George Rogers by increasing his season total to 742 yards. Fellow Gamecock rusher Todd Berry gained 129 yards on 25 carries.

Holy Cross 21, Maine 7

WORCESTER, Mass. — Quarterback Pete Muldoon mixed a balanced passing and running game as Holy Cross rolled up a 21-7 football victory over Maine on rain-slippery turf Saturday afternoon.

The Crusaders, boosting their record to 8-2, stormed 48, 56 and 48 yards for its touchdowns — one each in the last three periods.

E. Carolina 31, Willm & Mary27

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Quarterback Kevin Ingram scored three touchdowns, including the go-ahead tally in the fourth quarter, as East Carolina's Pirates outlasted William & Mary's Indians 31-27 in college football Saturday.

The touchdown that put the Pirates ahead for good was a 1-yard run by Ingram with 4:18 left in the game at the end of a 56-yard march. His other scores came on first-quarter runs of 1 and 4 yards as East Carolina upped its record to 6-4.

Penn gains share of Ivy crown by beating Harvard

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — University of Pennsylvania quarterback Gary Vura, down by one point with less than two minutes remaining, marched 69 yards allowing junior Dave Shulman to kick a 27-yard field goal as the game ended to give the Quakers a 23-21 victory over Harvard and a share of the Ivy League title in college football Saturday.

With a throng of 34,746 looking at Franklin Field, Harvard's Don Allard fired two last-quarter desperation strikes and capped a 56-yard drive by hitting fullback Mike Granger on a 3-yard pitch for a touchdown with 1:32 remaining to tie.

Yale 37, Princeton 19

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Bill Moore kicked three field goals, including the longest in Yale history, Saturday as Yale defeated Princeton, 37-19, in Ivy League football.

Michigan clinches Rose Bowl berth

By The Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Michigan tailback Lawrence Ricks ran the ball 31 times for 196 yards and two touchdowns as the Wolverines clinched the Big Ten football championship and a Rose Bowl berth with a 52-21 victory over Purdue Saturday.

The Wolverines, 8-0 in the conference and 8-2 overall, will represent the Big Ten against the Pac-10 Conference champion in the Rose Bowl game on Jan. 1 regardless of how they fare in their final regular season game against Ohio State next week. Purdue fell to 3-5 and 3-7.

Ricks, who gained 156 yards in the first half alone, scored on touchdown runs of 4 and 1 yards.

Michigan quarterback Steve Smith, passing sparingly, teamed up with All-American flanker Anthony Carter on TD pass plays of 48 and 62 yards and scored once himself on a 1-yard sneak.

Kerry Smith scored on a 1-yard plunge, Eddie Garrett had a 6-yard TD run and Ali Haji-Sheikh booted a 26-yard field goal for Michigan.

Ohio State 40, Northwestern 28

EVANSTON, Ill. — Tailback Tim Spencer carried 26 times for 190 yards, including a 16-yard touchdown burst on Ohio State's final scoring drive Saturday, to lift the Buckeyes to a 40-28 win over Northwestern.

Five different Ohio State players scored touchdowns, but the Buckeyes needed all of them to offset a brilliant passing performance by Northwestern's freshman quarterback Sandy Schwab.

Schwab connected on 27 of 43 attempts for 393 yards and three touchdowns, breaking two NCAA freshman marks held by Mark Herrmann for total offense and passing yardage in a single season.

Iowa 28, Wisconsin 14

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Tailback Owen Gill ran for 157 yards and two touchdowns as Iowa, aided by a school-record six interceptions, defeated Wisconsin 28-14 in Big Ten college football Saturday.

The victory pushed the Hawkeyes to 6-4 overall and 5-2 in the league, guaran teeing them their second straight winning season heading into next week's finale at Michigan State. Wisconsin dropped to 5-5 and 4-4 with a home game against Minnesota coming up Saturday.

Gill scored on runs of 1 and 44 yards, and quarterback Chuck Long had two 1-yard scores for Iowa.

Illinois 48, Indiana 7

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Quarterback Tony Eason threw for 200 yards, including three touchdowns passes during a three-minute burst in the first quarter that launched Illinois to a 48-7 Big Ten Conference football victory over Indiana.

Mitchell Brookins also scored three times, including once on a 14-yard pass from Eason and twice on 1-yard dives, as the Illini finished their season with a 6-3 Big Ten record and a 7-4 overall mark.

Huskers trounce Cyclones, 48-10

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Junior quarterback Turner Gill ran for one touchdown and threw for another as No.4-ranked Nebraska trounced Iowa State 48-10 in a Big Eight Conference football game Saturday.

Gill scored on a 22-yard run with 11:58 left in the first half to erase a 7-7 tie. Following Doug Wilkening's 9-yard touchdown run with 5:42 to play in the first quarter, ISU quarterback Dave Archer evened the score with a 3-yard run with three seconds left in the period.

Junior I-back Mike Rozier, the nation's fifth leading rusher, scored on the Huskers' opening drive of the second half with a 5-yard run, capping an 83-yard drive in 11 plays. Rozier, who had 103 yards in 19 carries, left the game in the third quarter with an ankle injury.

Senior I-back Roger Craig, the Huskers' leading rusher last season, scored with 40 seconds left in the third peiod with a 1-yard leap after the Huskers had driven 22 yards in seven plays.

The Huskers added scores with a 7-yard run by split end Tom Vergith and a 1-yard plunge by I-back Jeff Smith. Kevin Seibel failed on the last point after attempt, ending a streak of 68 consecutive conversions.

Nebraska is 9-1 overall, and 6-0 in the league, while the Cyclone record fell to 4-5-1 and 1-4-1 in the league.

Oklahoma 41, Missouri 14

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Kelly Phelps threw Oklahoma's first touchdown pass of the season and scored on a 38-yard run as the Sooners beat Missouri, 41-14, Saturday en route to a Big Eight title showdown with Nebraska.

Oklahoma became the last of the 97 football teams in its division to score with the pass while backs Marcus Dupree, Stanley Wilson and Steve Sewell rushed for touchdowns.

Dupree, the big-play tailback who broke the school's freshman rushing record Saturday, sprinted 70 yards to give 15th-ranked Oklahoma a 35-14 fourth-quarter lead. He added his second shortly afterward with a 7-yard run.

Oklahoma State 24, Kansas State 16

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Ernest Anderson, the NCAA rushing leader, galloped 175 yards and scored two touchdowns Saturday to lead Oklahoma State to a hard-fought 24-16 Big Eight victory over Kansas State and crushing the Wildcats' hopes for their first bowl bid in their 86-year football history.

Kansas State, 5-4-1 overall, drove 80 yards to score in the fourth period, with Darrell Dickey tossing a 5-yard scoring pass to Eric Bailey to make it 17-16 with 3:37 left. But Dickey's pass to Eric Mack for a two-point conversion was incomplete.

BYU rips SDSU, 58-8

By The Associated Press

PROVO, Utah — As if smelling a fifth straight Holiday Bowl trip, Brigham Young crushed San Diego State 58-8 as quarterback Steve Young ran for two touchdowns and passed for two more in Western Athletic Conference football action Saturday.

The victory boosted league-leading BYU to within one victory of its seventh consecutive WAC championship and an automatic bowl berth. The Cougars, 7-3 overall and 6-1 in the league, visit Utah in their final game next Saturday.

The regionally televised contest turned sour for San Diego State on the first play from scrimmage as the Aztecs fumbled.

Young, who rolled up 378 yards of total offense in three quarters, quicky took advantage and scored on a 9-yard run.

Things steadily got worse for the Aztecs and quarterback Mark McKay, who one week earlier had thrown for 513 yards in a victory over Hawaii. McKay managed only a 15-yard touchdown pass to Darius Durham late in the third quarter.

BYU quickly built a 35-0 halftime margin on a 15-yard run by Casey Tiumalu, a 25-yard run by Waymon Hamilton and a 2-yard run by Scott Pettis.

Young also struck from the air with a 10-yard pass to tight end Gordon Hudson.

Young, who played just over three quarters, connected on 22 of 35 passes for 284 yards. The 6-foot-2 junior also rushed for 94 yards on 13 carries.

New Mexico 29, CSU 24

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Sophomore linebacker Johnny Jackson forced two Colorado State turnovers that ignited a 21-point New Mexico explosion that carried the Lobos to a 29-24 Western Athletic Conference football victory over the Rams Saturday.

Jackson, the leader of New Mexico's gambling defensive unit set up a New Mexico interception and forced a fumble as New Mexico scored three times in less than two minutes to keep alive its hopes for a conference title.

The victory gives New Mexico a 5-1 record in the WAC and 9-1 record overall. CSU dropped to 3-4 in the WAC and 4-6 overall.

New Mexico trailed 17-8 going into the final quarter. The Lobo rally started with a 92-yard drive that was culminated by a 5-yard scoring pass from quarterback David Osborn to tight end John Lane with 11:23 left.

On the ensuing CSU drive, Jackson tipped a pass by Ram quarterback Terry Nugent. Junior reserve safety Steve Sauter picked off the stray pass and returned it 29 yards for a TD.

New Mexico struck again when Jackson nailed Nugent and forced a fumble near the CSU goal line. On the next play, Osborn scampered to the end zone.

Colorado State did most of its damage through the air. Nugent threw touchdown passes of 54 and 65 yards to flanker Jeff Raikes and an 8-yard scoring strike to Mark Brehm. Ram kicker Jon Poole also connected on a 50-yard field goal.

Wyoming 24, Wichita St. 20

LARAMIE, Wyo. — Wyoming's Cowboys, led by quarterbacks Craig Johnson and Brad Baumberger, upset Missouri Valley Conference heavyweight Wichita State 24-20 here Saturday in non-conference college football.

The Cowboys fought off a fourth-qyarter rally triggered by Wichita State quarterback Prince McJunkins, in which the Shockers cut their deficit from 14 to 4 points.

Wyoming, now 5-6 and still with a chance for .500 season, will meet Texas-El Paso next weekend.

Reeve tries to portray characters with attributes he wish he possessed

By The Hearst Feature Service

Reeve is an imposing figure. Clean-cut, square-jawed, over six feet tall and sturdy: the image of the all-American male. His modest manner and ready grin come as a disarming bonus. Reeve, 29, is a surprisingly down-to-earth, comfortable presence.

In "Monsignor," his latest movie, Reeve portrays a passionate young American priest who gets involved with the Mafia in a well-meaning effort to keep the Vatican financially afloat during and after World War II.

"I think it's really my best work, particularly because it took a lot of courage to make the part less flashy," he says. "I could have had a lot more highs and lows, more rages, more contrast, but I took great care to keep him understated. If you'll notice, his face is often a mask.

"I think I'm an optimist of some kind," he says. "I didn't want Superman to be just a brick, and I tried to play Clifford ("Deathtrap") as a victim of contemporary life. You often give a character things that you wish you had, the way you really want to be; it's the same reason so many comedians are actually terribly unhappy people, they're acting out the light side of themselves.

"Warmth, humor, humanity, generosity, friendliness — all the things I aspire to — I try to bring to my work. I'm definitely freer on screen than I am in real life because I take more risks. If a part called for me to swing from the chandelier, I'd probably do it in a minute, but you wouldn't catch me doing it at parties."

Reeve, not quite midway through shooting the third Superman movie, has made six movies thus far and has appeared in numerous plays, including Lanford Wilson's "Fifth of July" on Broadway. He admits he owes his meteoric career entirely to the man in the blue suit and bright red cape. When the first "Superman" crashed through box office records, Reeve's career took a definite leap. "Otherwise, it would have taken me 10 years to get this far, going step by step."

But the third time around he balked about going back into the cape. "This time was particularly hard. I put off reading the script, which came to me quite early, because I didn't want to deal with it. I was shifting gears from 'Monsignor,' and I simply didn't want to go back again," he says.

Part of Reeve's reluctance is caused by his feelings about film. "Once the film is completed, it's like assisting at the delivery, and then you let it go. It's much more satisfying to be a real father when you can actively help to bring up the baby. With film, once the baby's born, he becomes an orphan. You have to walk away from it.

"That's the phase I like the least, bringing the film out and having to share it with the media and the public, letting them examine it, shake it, turn it upside down and decide what to do with it. I hated giving up Superman to the public. I hated giving up everything I've done, good, bad or indifferent. It's always a painful, awkward moment."

There will be no "Superman 4," he says. "I think we'll be out of ideas by then, anyway. Having said that, if someone comes up with a fantastic idea, then we'll do it. I'm not in this for money. I really care about the movies I do."

"This may sound smug, but I'm concerned about my reputation as an actor, not my image as a film star. I sometimes think the public should never learn a thing about us, so they won't be disappointed, though it's easier today to be an actor than it was back in the '40s or '50s, when you had to try and hoodwink the people into thinking your public and private selves were the same. Today we can wear sneakers, drive a Volkswagen, have problems, raise our families and generally drop out when we're not working. That's a lot healthier than it used to be.

"Life has to be more important than a movie. I play the role right down the line, then I go home and I'm on my own. That's fair, I think.

Caesar's fight with alcohol includes writing book

NEW YORK (AP) — Sid Caesar was in the audience watching himself play a drunk. As celluloid Sid frolicked, live Sid squirmed and sighed.

"When I saw myself playing the drunk, I wished it could be solved as quickly," Caesar said. "Unfortunately, that's not life. Life is not a rehearsal."

Caesar, who says he was a drunk and a pill addict for most of his adult life, is winning his never-ending battle. "I wanted to get better," he said.

Part of his therapy was his newly published biography: "Where Have I Been?" Another aspect was gathering material for the eight-week exhibition of his voluminous television career. The retrospective at New York's Museum of Broadcasting runs through Dec. 31. It includes his work on "Your Show of Shows" (1950-54) and "Caesar's Hour" (1954-57).

Caesar's genius was in creating comedy sketches with humor and feeling. With a face seemingly made of Silly Putty, he could tell a tale with a mere movement of his mouth or an arch of an eyebrow. "I don't remember jokes," he said. "It's the story that interests people."

Caesar opened the exhibition, and it was no coincidence that the first skit he introduced was "A Drunk There Was!" a hilariously bittersweet spoof of silent films.

The hero-father of the piece (Caesar) was torn between two loves: scotch and rye. His entire life became obsessed with alcohol. At work, his booze was hidden in desk legs, typewriter rollers and pens. Like much of Caesar's work, the sketch was trimmed in black.

"I was trying to say 'Somebody help me, please!'" he said, explaining one motivation for the routine. He said nobody on the show, which included comedy writers Woody Allen, Mel Brooks, Larry Gelbart and Neil Simon, could help.

"They knew I drank after the show," he said. "They didn't know the problems I had."

For nearly a decade, Caesar and his troupe, including Carl Reiner, Howard Morris and Imogene Coca, assembled 39 live shows a year. Each Saturday night program lasted 90 minutes.

Today, network series run for about 22 shows, and the only live entertainment program is "Saturday Night Live." Caesar does not blame the hectic schedule for his disease. ("It's a disease; I was ill at ease with myself.") He said it stemmed from nagging self-doubts.

Now, through the inspirational story of his book, and the comedy inspiration of his displayed work at the museum, Caesar feels he's offering guidance to others.

"My main purpose in telling my story," he wrote in the book's prologue, "is to give hope to all those people with such vast personal problems that living has become suffering — as it did for me."

Movie 'Time Bandits' rich in image, often imaginative, rarely funny

"Time Bandits" is a melange of midgets and madness from the merry men of Monty Python. Directed by Terry Gilliam, with the screenplay by Michael Palin and Gilliam and a cameo appearance by John Cleese as Robin Hood, "Time Bandits" reunites three of the original British comedy ensemble who became popular in the 60's and 70's on television. Then with "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" and "The Life of Brian" they achieved critical success in film.

Like previous efforts, "Time Bandits" is often imaginative, sometimes nonsense, and this time out, rarely funny. Actually, it is reminiscent of the kinds of dreams that follow a night binging on pizza and pistachio ice cream and has about as much justification.

The time bandits are a group of midgets who used to work for "The Supreme Being" as gardeners. But because of job dissatisfaction, they steal the map of the universe and use "the warps of the fabric of the world" to go to different times — to the Napoleonic wars, to Greece in the time of king Agamemnon, to the ill-fated day of the Titanic and elsewhere, and finally to the "Fortress of Ultimate Darkness," where Evil (David Warner) lives.

Ever in search of gold, the little people happen into the room of a British youngster (or is this all his dream?) and they take him along on their adventures. It is a complicated, detailed plot with moralistic overtones that, in this PG rated movie, are probably designed for children. Themes of evil, good, greed and innocence (where they meet and where they don't) are explored, but the answers to the greater questions of life are often glossed over. In fact, when "The Supreme Being" is asked why there is evil, he says it has "something to do with free choice."

Nevertheless, "Time Bandits" is rich in image. Knights in armor, damsels in distress, duels to the death by sword, lance and ax, the weak of limb and the weak of mind, the vanquished and the invincible. For all that and sometimes because of all that, "Time Bandits" is a loose tale that seems never ending.

There are appearances by a host of movie greats including Sir Ralph Richardson as "The Supreme Being," Sean Connery as Agamemnon, Ian Holm as Napoleon, Shelley Duvall as Pansy, Michael Palin as Vincent, and Peter Vaughan and Katherine Helmond as Mr. and Mrs. Ogre. They all make the most of what they are given but are as caught up in the mayhem of "Time Bandits" as the little boy who creates it, Kevin.

Either the figment of his own imagination or the unresolved stream of someone else's consciousness, Kevin travels time as a curious seeker of experience.

A Review

He is the product of a mentally malnourished family, dependent on high tech products of the home for leisure and stimulation and he rebels through his fanciful daydreams.

Music for "Time Bandits" is courtesy of former Beatle George Harrison and it is like his style of the past decade — whimsical and mystical. The movie itself is produced by Harrison and Denis O'Brien and shows some ingenuity in the costumes and sets, but it is the screenplay that lacks definition.

At the end, Kevin awakens to a burning house and is carried outside by a fireman who resembles King Agamemnon. As he tries to collect himself, Kevin watches his parents get disintegrated for touching a "chunk" of evil which has followed Kevin from another time. What does it all mean? That is difficult to say, but then people who are Python proponents don't often claim to understand why they like their brand of humor, they just do.

Leslie Nielsen to play lead role in 'Deathtrap' in Big Spring

BIG SPRING — Emmy nominee Leslie Nielsen will make his first appearance in Big Spring at the Municipal Theatre in the lead role of the Broadway comedy mystery "Deathtrap," by Ira Levin.

Presented by Renwood Inc., as a benefit for the Big Spring Symphony Guild, "Deathtrap" will be onstage Friday. The production is being staged by the Paramount Theatre for the Performing Arts touring company.

The guild has planned a gala evening which includes complimentary champagne at the play's intermission and a post theater party honoring Nielsen and the cast. Tickets purchased for $25 (center section) will entitle the patron to the post production party, as will an additional contribution to the guild benefit for those patrons unable to acquire the limited center section seating. The remaining seats run $10, with all seats reserved.

The symphony guild's box office in the Big Spring Mall will be open daily from 4 to 9 p.m. and all day Saturday. Phone orders will be processed by calling 1-263-7641 in Big Spring or 697-7863.

Nielsen's credits include over 50 feature films, including "The Poseidon Adventure," "Kill," "Day of the Animals," "Kill Him in Amsterdam" and "Airplane!" He has also starred in four television series, including ABC-TV's 1982 comedy "Police Squad," for which he received an Emmy nomination.

Price to play Oscar Wilde

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Vincent Price, who's spent much of his career scaring the pants off people, says that when he was asked to play Oscar Wilde, his wife told him it might be his last chance to do a play.

When the play first arrived, his wife, actress Coral Browne, read it first and told him, "You'd better do it. It's the last challenge you're likely to get, you old goat. Go stick your neck out."

Price is best known for such horror films as "The Pit and the Pendulum," "Tales of Terror" and "Theatre of Blood."

"I'm sure if I'd done other things in my career, I could have been more distinguished," he says. "On the other hand, I could also have been starving to death."

Not to disappoint his horror fans, Price will soon be seen in "The House of the Long Shadows" with Christopher Lee, Peter Cushing and John Carradine.

Rostal, Schaefer play piano with finesse

Music created by two grand pianos filled Midland High School Auditorium Wednesday when Rostal & Schaefer performed for the second concert in Midland Community Concerts' current season.

The evening's entertainment was filled with light banter between the two

as well as musical selections ranging from classical renditions to modern selections done in classical style. For those there who enjoy hearing pianos played with finesse and technical expertise, this performance was certainly enjoyable.

As Peter Rostal said during his introductory comments, "One of the advantages of working as a team is, if one of us makes a mistake, the audience is never quite sure who played the wrong note."

When the audience quit laughing, he said, "And the chances are those who think they know, are not sure which is which anyway." Pausing he added, "Just to show you how confident I am, I'm Peter Rostal and he's Paul Schaefer. If one of us makes a mistake, it's him. If we both mess up, he's Ferrante and I'm Teicher."

THAT TYPE of lighthearted poking at one another continued throughout the performance. It was all done in good taste; after all, these two are British. The timing was good in their delivery, thus each of their gentle stabs met with laughter.

The duo opened with the overture to Rossini's "The Barber of Seville," and played a two-hour program which included Ernesto Lecuona's "Malaguena," Richard Addinsell's "Warsaw Concerto," a concert rendition of Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," the duo's own variations on Scott Joplin's "The Entertainer," "Lara's Theme" from "Dr. Zhivago" by Maurice Jarre and "Amazing Grace."

All were competently done, with the two clearly demonstrating their technical ability; however, the performance lacked a certain dynamism.

Both attended Juilliard School on scholarships. They have been performing together for over 10 years. A well established duo in England, the team has played for the British royal family, been on numerous television and radio shows in the United Kingdom and Europe and has performed in concert with several symphony orchestras.

OF THE performance before the royal family, Rostal said he remembered being "petrified" until he saw someone out of the corner of his eyes who had on a diamond tiara and a sapphire necklace. Rostal then said, "It wasn't the queen."

"It was Liberace," Schaefer interjected.

When the laughter died down, Rostal said, "Actually it was the queen mother and she told us we had played her favorite."

And then they played this same number for the audience. It was...

No, it wouldn't be fair to tell. To know, you had to have been there.

Moviegoers can buy tickets over phone

The new service, the brainchild of Frank and Emily Curcio, allows patrons to call 783-RSVP, charge their tickets on a Visa or MasterCard credit card, select a showtime, and get their tickets from a special window at the theater.

So far RSVP, which stands for Request Seating Via Phone, is available only at the Bruin Theater in Westwood. Curcio said he hopes to extend the service all over the city by January.

Day of the Dead exhibit on display

The Day of the Dead exhibit is currently on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

An annual celebration in Mexico, the Day of the Dead melds Pre-Columbian Indian religious tradition with the rituals of the Catholic church associated with All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day. During the celebration, the dead are honored and the living are endowed with a better understanding of death and a clearer perspective of life.

Through the assistance of Hector Garza, exhibit consultant from Austin, the museum will be filled with marigolds, authentic folk art and a complete altar. The objects exhibited are samples of the items created annually to celebrate this religious holiday.

The show is free and open to the public. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Special docent tours of the museum are provided at 3 p.m. Sundays during the exhibit.

Thouvenel String Quartet to perform

The Thouvenel String Quartet's second concert of the season will be at 3 p.m. today at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The quartet will perform Brahms' String Quartet in A-minor, Op. 2, and Haydn's String Quartet in D-Major, Op. 20.

Sheik's pocketbook always open to those who kow-tow

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mohammed al-Fassi returned suddenly to Saudi Arabia two weeks ago, his four children in tow, violating a judge's order and adding a new controversy to his life. An aide says the sheik will be back, "at the right time." Shortly before Fassi's departure, AP writer Randall Hackley spent a day at the Fassi residence.

By RANDALL HACKLEY

Christmas-tree lights draped on bushes along the sheik's long brick driveway illuminate a cream-colored hand-made Excalibur, a half-dozen Lincoln Continental limousines in sober blue and black, a $200,000 barnacle-encrusted racing boat and 20 other luxury cars.

Inside, the sheik, cloaked in a white Arabian djellaba, sits barefooted in his mirrored living room. Sheika Aptisam, his third wife, sits silently as Fassi pores over a sheaf of clippings reporting his antics all over the world.

"Money talks," the young sheik said. Fassi's pocketbook is seldom at a loss for words.

THE FASSI story is one of apparent contradictions. He tells an Arab version of Richie Rich, the comics' "poor little rich kid" whose good intentions were always misunderstood. Others tell stories of child-like egotism run amok, financed by untold wealth.

Fassi, generally reported to be 27 while admitting to 25, delights charitable groups with hefty donations, then infuriates officials by forcing them to kow-tow to his royal whims.

He donates up to $3 million monthly because "it is my religion," but much of his dole seems measured by the amount of publicity he can reap.

He says he is worth billions, but he was arrested for bouncing checks.

He spent months planning a $15 million pleasure pavilion on Star Island, but construction ceased last summer when Fassi suddenly stopped paying bills, claiming contractors were overcharging him.

He delighted residents of Midland, Pa., a mill town suffering in the recession, with a $35,000 donation, then offended many the next day by offering $3 million if all townspeople agreed to vote against Ronald Reagan.

He boasts of being Saudi royalty — "I am al-Fassi, a member of the royal family!" he shouted — without clarifying that his link is through his sister's marriage to a prince.

"WITH EACH al-Fassi escapade, scrape with the law, and all the unfavorable publicity, they (the Fassi clan) are not especially popular (in Saudi Arabia)," commented Peter Iseman, author of "The Arabians."

Fassi admits he has angered the 5,000-member Saudi royal family. But he says it's because he has donated to groups other than Moslems, including Jews.

"I do this only in the face of God. This is the way I am," he said.

But he doesn't understand why he is criticized in the United States.

"I help children, I help people. I help charities. I am good to everybody. You would think people would love me, talk in my favor," he lamented.

In the Miami Beach home he shares with his father, Shamsuddin Abdullah al-Fassi, the sheik held forth about the sheik, clearly a favorite topic, in conversations sandwiched between business calls and chanted prayers.

INTO A gold-plated phone, Fassi barked an order in Arabic. A servant hustled in bearing mineral water on a silver tray; the sheik doesn't drink alcohol or smoke.

"If I want something, I want it just like that," Fassi said, snapping his fingers. "I hate the wait."

In rapid-fire English, Fassi then announced, "I plan to sue the City of Los Angeles $500 billion." He is still bitter about the investigation into the arson that destroyed his Beverly Hills mansion more than two years ago.

That mansion was America's introduction to the sheik's flamboyant ways.

At first, the 38-room, $2.3 million white house overlooking Sunset Drive didn't quite reflect Fassi's tastes. Soon, it was painted bright green, with a copper roof. The genitals on the sculptures of nudes at the front of the mansion were painted bright red, with pubic hair daubed black.

On New Year's Day 1980, the house burned to the ground. Some neighbors chanted: "Burn, baby, burn!" An ex-chauffeur was later charged with setting the fire to conceal artwork thefts. Fassi believes others were involved, hence the suit.

FASSI SUBSEQUENTLY spent almost two years traveling with his first wife, Dena, his sister, Princess Hend, and brother-in-law, Prince Turki bin Abdul Aziz.

"Very quiet. No trouble like in Los Angeles," he decided.

He moved his entourage into two floors of the posh oceanfront Diplomat Hotel. Cost: $2 million a month.

For months, Fassi surfaced publicly only for such oddities as hiring the children of city officials to serve as "friends" at a birthday party for his son, Turki, aboard a yacht. He handed guests $100 bills.

In October 1981, he threw a $24 million party in London to celebrate his third marriage, to an 18-year-old second cousin, Aptisam. (His religion, Islam, allows four wives, but Fassi said he wouldn't exercise his option for No. 4. I'm happy. Three is enough," he said.)

In July, police swept into the Diplomat to arrest him on a charge of defrauding an innkeeper. The Diplomat claimed the sheik owed $1.4 million.

FASSI PAID up and moved in with his father. But he also filed a $1 trillion damage suit against Hollywood and its police, claiming false arrest.

"They embarrassed me," he said. "They make me look like I cannot pay my bills. They say the sheik is out of money. I laugh about that."

He donates up to $3 million monthly because "it is my religion..." He says he is worth billions, but he was arrested for bouncing checks... He delighted residents of Midland, Pa., a mill town suffering in the recession, with a $35,000 donation, then offended many the next day by offering $3 million if all townspeople agreed to vote against Ronald Reagan.

The embarrassment seemed to spur Fassi's philanthropy. Donations, and announced plans for donations, came nearly daily.

Charities and community programs in southern Florida have received at least $400,000. Fassi has given twice that to cities scattered around the country.

He has keys to cities, and parks are named for him. "Days" have been held in his honor. Midland, Pa., gave him a rare submachine gun.

But sometimes, prospective recipients are disappointed.

He pledged $500,000 to the Papanicolaou Cancer Research Institute in Miami but arrived, in a 30-car motorcade, with a check for only $20,000. He was upset the institute didn't give him a police escort.

IN SEPTEMBER, he withheld a $200,000 donation from New York City because Mayor Edward Koch didn't greet him.

"It is not a matter of sirens — I have security," he explained. "It is a matter of protocol. I should be treated in a royal way."

But observing the sheik's sense of protocol was not enough for the City of Orlando. Mayor Bill Frederick waited at the airport three hours, holding a gold key to the city in anticipation of a $50,000 donation.

Fassi never showed, and Orlando was stuck with an $11,000 tab for motorcycle escorts and chauffeured limousines.

Despite such snubs, the sheik says he receives 2,000 letters a day. He said he has some employees who do nothing but read and sort mail, and he spends five hours daily deciding who should get money.

It's unclear how much money he has actually doled out. "I have enough money to help all of the poor," he has said.

Observers say the family fortune has mushroomed since the 1977 marriage of Hend al-Fassi, the sheik's sister, to Prince Turki, one of 40 sons of the founder of modern Saudi Arabia.

THE FASSIS' international trading company has exclusive rights to sell medical equipment and supplies in Saudi Arabia, has made oil sales, dabbles in gold and precious metals and owns $900 million in property — $200 million in Florida, a financial aide said.

Fassi is "very, very rich," Talaat Reafat, the aide, said.

Fassi is also very wary of ripoffs. When he thought he was being overcharged for his new mansion, which features silk walls, a monorail, two bowling alleys and talking clocks that give the time in three languages, he stopped payments.

His employees' tenures are often short. "Some try to suck from me whatever they can," he said. One press aide, Ali Laggoune, was sacked after telling reporters the sheik had a fetish about washing his hands.

"I cannot have a spy in my house," Fassi said, while conceding that he showered before and after every meal.

Former employees say Fassi frequently throws temper tantrums and won't tolerate being questioned.

His first wife, Belgian-born Sheika Dena, who is seeking custody of their four children and half of the Fassi fortune in a divorce suit, said money had changed the charming, fun-loving Fassi she married seven years ago.

"In French we say: 'L'argent pourrit les gens,'" she told The Miami Herald, which is translated: "Money makes people rot."

Army tries to oust gay soldier

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Fourteen years ago, draftee Perry Watkins told an Army psychiatrist that he was homosexual. The Army signed him on anyway.

Now, Staff Sgt. Perry Watkins waits for the Army's next move in its so far unsuccessful court campaign to oust him.

"Who knows what they'll do? They've already caused me a lot of emotional grief and tried to destroy me professionally," Watkins, 34, said in an interview last week.

Perry Watkins

"I didn't lie to the Army. I told the truth all these years that I'm homosexual. I didn't beat the Army. They beat themselves," he said.

He noted that he danced in women's clothes at Army shows in South Korea and West Germany and is scheduled to perform in drag with a dance troupe Dec. 19 at Nelson Recreation Center at Fort Lewis near Tacoma, where he is stationed.

THE ARMY is still deciding whether to appeal rulings last month in Watkins' favor by U.S. District Judge Barbara Rothstein in Seattle.

She ruled the Army could not bar Watkins from the service as an avowed homosexual because the Army knew for years he was homosexual and took no action.

Being an admitted homosexual violates Army regulations and normally is grounds for discharge or denial of enlistment.

Maj. Larry Collings, a Fort Lewis spokesman, declined comment on the case or Watkins' statements, as did Margaret Thackley, an Army spokeswoman in Washington. Army officials declined to let other people on the base be interviewed about their thoughts on the case.

The Army career of the Joplin, Mo., native began in 1968 after he informed a psychiatrist at a pre-induction examination that he was homosexual. The psychiatrist noted Watkins' remark in the record but ruled Watkins suitable for military service, court records show.

Watkins was honorably discharged in 1970 and re-enlisted the next year without trouble, though the psychiatrist's report remains in his records to this day. He re-enlisted again in 1974 and 1979.

"I ALWAYS made a point of informing the units where I'm assigned that I'm homosexual," he said. "My commanding officers always knew it."

The Army and Watkins went public last year. The Army, for reasons not disclosed, revoked his security clearance. Watkins sued in federal court to reverse the decision and the Army changed its tack, declaring he would be discharged instead.

Watkins, who has been personnel administration center supervisor for nearly three years, sued to prevent the discharge and the Army again changed direction. Army lawyers said he would not be discharged, but would be denied re-enlistment when his hitch ended in October.

Watkins' lawyer, James Lobsenz of the American Civil Liberties Union in Seattle, successfully argued that that government knew of Watkins' homosexuality for 14 years and did nothing. Therefore, Lobsenz said, it would be unfair, "after giving the impression that it did not care," for the Army to turn around and oust Watkins.

In a ruling Oct. 5, Ms. Rothstein agreed with Lobsenz. She said the Army practically ignored Watkins' homosexuality until last year and Army claims that its officers were unaware of it were "patently absurd."

SHE EMPHASIZED the court did not advocate that Watkins had a right to commit illegal acts or that the Army cannot use homosexuality to bar the re-enlistment of other soldiers.

The ruling is not a Bill of Rights for homosexuals, Lobsenz said.

"It means, though, that if the Army has ignored its own regulations for a number of years and a soldier relied on the Army's representation that it doesn't care, it would be injurious to the soldier to be booted out," Lobsenz said.

After the Oct. 5 ruling, an Army board asked Watkins to answer such questions about his past and future sexual behavior as, "Have you ever engaged in homosexual acts or acts of sodomy?"

His refusal to answer was grounds, Army lawyers contended, to deny him re-enlistment. Ms. Rothstein again ruled against them.

Watkins re-enlisted in ceremonies at the commander's office of the 268th Attack Helicopter Battalion on Nov. 1. But life has not been easy.

A PROFICIENCY report issued last month gave him high marks but noted, for the first time in his career, that Watkins "should not be promoted in light of the fact that he is an admitted homosexual. Although his previous performance suggests some potential for promotion, his character deficiency would inevitability prove detrimental to the U.S. Army."

Watkins said co-workers generally treat him well, adding "rarely do I have hassles."

But last week, he told a gay rights group in Tacoma that "the more I win, the worse they (officers) treat me." He said he thinks lower-level officers have been coerced into doing things that would set him up for discharge or disciplinary action, "but I smile a lot and I take everything to my lawyer."

Looking ahead, he said, "If I work with people with backbones who are willing to judge me as an individual and a soldier, then it won't be so difficult. If I have to work with people who bow to their superiors and put things on documents detrimental to me, then it's going to be very difficult."

Watkins said the Army could have bought him off quietly by offering him a 20-year pension and other military benefits before he went to court.

Now he says, "I have 14 years invested and I'm not going to throw it away. I have a price, but after what the Army has done to me, it's going to be a lot more than they'd be willing to pay."

Hertz Used Car Sales

YOU DON'T BUILD LONGEVITY INTO A CAR OVERNIGHT.

Now that people are demanding cars that last longer, car makers are in a rush to oblige.

But, ironically, making a car that lasts a long time takes a long time.

It's a task Volvo engineers have devoted themselves to for decades. With some success.

Of course, this is hardly news. Volvos have long had a reputation for durability. As well as performance, handling, safety and comfort.

After all, when it comes to building cars with a great future, Volvo has just what it takes.

VOLVO
A car you can believe in.

Pumping Performance Versus Promises: When it comes to artificial lift systems, you can't afford phoney performance claims and you can't afford to wait for the actual performance to begin. Those are the facts of oil field production. And those are the facts that guided the engineering that makes the Petro/Lift series of hydraulic pumping systems the most oil-producing, money-saving pumping units you can buy or lease. And that's a claim based on patch proven performance.

Mobility and Versatility At less than half the weight of a conventional walking beam unit and easily towed to the wellsite by a 3/4-ton pickup, Petro/Lift pumping units get there first and produce on arrival. While speed of operation is a decided benefit, at the core of the patented unit is a hydraulic system that allows the pump to be completely and easily adjusted to the natural harmonics of a well. These Petro/Lift design features increase your well's production without increasing your production budget.

Easy to Adjust Unlike most oil field equipment, the only tools required to make the control adjustments and do most of the minor maintenance on the pumping unit can literally fit in your back pocket. This is clearly an advantage when you consider that to change the stroke length alone on most conventional units, a gin-pole truck and a tool box as big as the back of a flat-bed truck would be required.

The Bottom Line The unique features of a Petro/Lift pumping system all add up to one thing: increased profitability, through pumping power and revolutionary portability. The more you use a Petro/Lift system, the more valuable it becomes. And that's not an idle promise, that's a patch proven, oil field fact.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 83/8%. loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 123/8% for first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interval will be charged at the most recent Monthly Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7.5% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 80%. At each 5 year anniversary date the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%

and PAUL GILBERT

For over 33 years the Junior League of Midland Inc. has placed volunteers in health and welfare areas of the community. They have helped initiate numerous programs through funding and many volunteer hours. These are some of the areas in which the League is currently involved:

AUDIO VISUAL SCREENING

The Junior League of Midland Inc. offers audio visual screening to children who do not receive it from the Midland Independent School District Program. "The League owns, operates and maintains a Maico 19 Audiometer which is used to test the hearing of children in kindergarten, new first graders, third graders, fifth graders and seventh graders at private schools in Midland," said Susie Evans, chairman of the League volunteers who do the screening. "Vision screening tests pre-school and kindergarten children for amblyopia or 'lazy eye,' a condition which detected by age 6 is easily correctable, but allowed to continue will result in serious eye problems and loss of vision in later years."

Mrs. Joanne Patton, executive director of the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness, trained the League volunteers to do the visual screening.

"The visual screening will be done at private schools in Midland in the late fall," said Mrs. Evans. "Audio screening will be done sometime after the first hard freeze."

In addition to Mrs. Evans, other League volunteers who work with Audio Visual Screening are Mrs. James K. Gleitman and Mrs. Donald Pope.

PERINATAL CLINIC

In 1978, the Junior League of Midland Inc. established the Perinatal Clinic for the purpose of improving the quality of parenting by giving emotional support, health care instruction and parenting education to pregnant women who are unable to afford conventional prenatal care. The Prenatal classes are offered on Thursdays from 9:30 a.m. — 12 noon at the City/County Health Department, 501 Andrews Highway.

"One of the things we do at the clinic is that we pay a counselor from Family Sevices of Midland to be there every Thursday to counsel with the girls and do a follow-up visit after delivery," said Eleanor Morse, chairman of Perinatal Clinic committee. "They might need counseling for many different reasons, such as prior to wanting a tubal, or due to physical reasons may be very depressed during pregnancy. Some are not married and need counseling on being a single parent."

"Perinatal" means everything to do with birth, both before and after, Mrs. Morse explained. The Perinatal Clinic teaches "eight separate units, dealing from Day One of pregnancy all the way through to bringing baby home," she said. "We have made a lot of inroads. We've had more and more practice birth control after the baby comes. I think they're eating better. They're having healthier babies."

The curriculum consists of physical and emotional changes during pregnanay; fetal development; nutrition and meal planning; effects of drugs on the fetus; care for children, including infant care and feeding; poison and accident prevention and medical treatment; and hospital procedures, which includes a tour of the labor and postpartum wings of the hospital.

The League Clinic is entirely staffed by volunteers. The prenatal volunteers spend two hours each Thursday at the City/County Health Department Clinic. The postpartum volunteers spend one hour each week on three different days, in the Postpartum wing of Midland Memorial Hospital answering questions about methods of infant care, mother care following birth and birth control. The patients are given a layette, with items supplied mainly through Church Women United.

A new aspect of the postpartum program requires volunteers to deliver an informative packet to patients at the hospital who have lost a baby through miscarriage, stillbirth or neo-natal death. The group CARING, which meets on the first Tuesday of each month in the parlor of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity at 7 p.m. is a support group formed for and of these parents. The League employs a social worker to lead this support group.

"This (Perinatal Clinic) is one of the best things the League does — teaches mothers to be better mothers, better pregnant ladies, to have healthier babies," Mrs. Morse said.

Other Perinatal Clinic volunteers are Mrs. J. Coley Cowden, assistant chairman; Mrs. Sally Hurta, Mrs. Thomas Ortloff, Mrs. Wm. Allen White, Mrs. H.N. Hensley, Mrs. Steve Melzer, Mrs. Charles O. Semple, Mrs. Lee Majors, Mrs. Steve Baumgardner, Mrs. Bert Johnson, Mrs. Guy Hall and Mrs. Gene Drummond.

TAPE LENDING LIBRARY VOLUNTEERS

The Midland Tape Lending Library, 202 North C Street, a United Way Agency, is a recording unit for the Texas State Library, Division for the Blind and Physically Handicapped. The Library provides materials recorded on cassettes for local users. A library user is anyone who must READ BY LISTENING. A visual or physical handicap, including learning disabilities, qualifies an individual for free use of library materials.

The Junior League of Midland Inc. places five volunteers in the Tape Lending Library who narrate, monitor and review the recordings. Working in soundproof booths, volunteer readers under the direction of a monitor who operates the recording equipment, produce reel-to-reel master tapes to be sent to the Texas State Library for transfer to cassettes and distribution to users in Midland and throughout the state.

"This is the first time since 1977 the Junior League has been active in the Tape Lending Library," said Jan O'Neill, Junior League coordinator at the Tape Lending Library.

"We have a training program of three to six months on use of equipment as a moderator. Then we can audition to be narrator or we can go on to be a reviewer who checks the tape for errors, etc. It's an individual thing, not difficult," she said.

Midland's Tape Lending Library provides readings of Texas Monthly magazine every month to the state tape library, which are then distributed to local users.

Betty Flores, director of the Tape Lending Library in Midland, said, "We have two half-time paid employees. All the rest of our about 20 people are volunteers. We have a lot of volunteers to our credit."

Midland Tape Lending Library has a general collection of 500 — 1000 titles on hand. Mrs. O'Neill said qualifications for membership include: 1. Texas residency; 2. permanent or temporary physical disability such as legal blindness, visual handicap, physical handicap or learning disability; 3. resident of U.S. or American citizen living abroad; 4. must have medical authority certify handicap.

Since there are 10 hours of production time required for each hour of reading time, volunteers are always welcomed at Midland's Tape Lending Library. "Last year 20 volunteers worked 3429 hours," Mrs. O'Neill said.

THE CHILDREN'S DENTAL CLINIC

The Children's Dental Clinic, now in its 27th year of operation, is providing dental care and dental hygiene for children who would not otherwise receive it. The clinic is located in the Mast Clinic at 2203 W. Illinois, with the entrance on the south side of the building. The Clinic is open from 8:30 a.m. — 12 noon every Wednesday of the school year exept for school holidays.

Children are referred to the Dental Clinic by their public school nurses and pay a fee of $1 per visit. This year Dr. Philip Warlick, D.D.S, is the Clinic's sponsor.

"We had approximately 275 patient visits last year involving 143 children," said Lana Booth, chairman of the Dental Clinic. "The clinic operates 1/2-day a week, which means we saw seven to nine kids every Wednesday morning last year."

The Clinic does "comprehensive dental work on children," said Warlick. "We don't replace missing teeth or do crowns — it's comprehensive restorative dentistry and relief of pain."

"Our first goal is to get the child on medication and get the pain gone so we can do dental work," he said.

The Junior League is attempting to teach good dental habits to children and parents, said Mrs. Booth. The Clinic is entirely staffed by volunteers. All the equipment used by the dentists and volunteers has been donated to the Clinic.

"The school nurses screen the kids. We don't set up an appointment until a child has been screened buy the school nurse," Mrs. Booth said. All the patients seen at the Children's Dental Clinic are school children, most of them elementary school age.

"We teach the reasons they need to brush and floss," said Mrs. Booth. "We give the kids a toothbrush when they come in, hoping when they leave they will brush. They don't understand the need of brushing."

"On the first visit the dentist checks the teeth and if the child is in pain tries to get him or her out of pain," said Warlick. "The first visit is an exam. This is not set up to be a dental checkup every six months — the manpower would be impossible. We don't do cleaning of the full mouth, we don't have that kind of time. But if a child brushes his or her teeth well, it's almost the same as if the dentist polishes them because kids don't have the buildup of calculus and tartar that adults do."

"All we can do is try to teach the parents, too. A lot of times the parent can't or won't bring the child in," said Mrs. Booth.

Warlick said 23 Midland dentists volunteer their time to the Children's Dental Clinic — "that includes all the younger general dentists and two children's dentists."

"Our goal is basically to try to provide professional dental care to underprivileged children and to educate the children and parents or guardians in dental hygiene," said Mrs. Booth. "Most parents that we see really can't afford to see the dentist. If mom and dad don't (brush their teeth), the kids won't either."

ADULT BASIC EDUCATION AIDES

The Adult Basic Education programs have been established to provide effective education and training for adults and out of school youth whose needs are not met by any other public educational programs. Adult Basic Education provides assistance to students preparing to take the General Educational Development test (G.E.D.) and those studying English as a second language.

The Junior League of Midland Inc. provides volunteers who work as aides to the staff personnel and with the implementation of instructional activities for each student. The Adult Basic Education classes are held Monday through Thursday from 8:30 a.m. — 12:30 p.m. and from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. during the regular school session. The League volunteers are Mrs. John C. Braun, chairman; Mrs. Bob Koen, Mrs. George Patterson, Dorothy June Strong and Mrs. Jerry Hudgeons.

CARDIOPULMONARY RESUSCITATION (C.P.R.)

The Junior League of Midland Inc. provides trainers in Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation. Five volunteers in the League are currently teaching C.P.R. to community groups. Courses are scheduled on request. Each course requires eight hours of instruction and can be taught in one, two or three sessions. Any Midland business, church or organization that is interested in receiving C.P.R. training for its members should call the office of the Junior League of Midland Inc. or Sandy Moore at 697-1726. C.P.R. is taught so that an individual may respond effectively to any emergency where normal breathing and circulation have stopped. The League C.P.R. trainers are Sandy Moore, chairman; Judy Thornton, Jennie House, Nancy Weir and Pam Williams.

The book, which is thought to be the first community diary ever published, began with an unusual "tell-us" project in the fall of 1981.

Hundreds of helium-filled balloons were released over Kansas City carrying messages that invited residents to submit stories or poems about personal experiences. The balloons, plus radio and television public service announcements and stories in local newspapers, brought in hundreds of contributions. Editors selected more than 200 to appear in the 256-page book.

"People opened what could have remained private chapters in their lives," said Jo Ann Field, founder of Concern Counts, a community mental health organization that sponsored the all-volunteer project.

The stories and poems in the book are attributed in some cases to the authors' real names, and others use pseudonyms, initials or are anonymous.

Authors span all age groups and segments of society, from the successful businessman to the outcast pregnant teen-ager. And the experiences they describe include everything from the death of a friend to the joy of watching a child mature.

"Although the book's authors are all from Kansas City, the experiences they describe are universal," Mrs. Field notes. "They put their feelings on paper to help others with similar problems.

"'Above the Thunder' is a hopeful title," she adds. It admits we all have these intense experiences in our lives, but that there's always clear sky above the storm. We can aim for the opening above the clouds. The stories in the book are written by people who've experienced the storm and who have emerged above it with the ability to look back on what they've been through with a calm perspective of understanding."

Buying blood profitable business for all

By GORDON DILLOW
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Eddie is no wino or junkie. He's just a guy living in downtown Los Angeles with a lot of other unemployed down-and-out guys.

A lot of people are interested in Eddie. Those interested parties work in the antiseptic offices of international corporations in the United States, Europe and Japan — far from the filthy city blocks Eddie calls home — and they're interested in Eddie because Eddie has something those people want.

"I guess they give it to hospitals," Eddie said, after a visit to a commercial blood plasma center where he sold a pint or so of blood plasma for $8. Like a lot of other people who sell their blood plasma — the honey-colored fluid that makes up about 65 percent of human blood — Eddie has the vague impression that when he sells a pint of plasma, he is dealing with the Red Cross or some other non-profit agency.

The people who bought Eddie's plasma are part of the $500 million-a-year U.S. blood plasma industry. The plasma drained out of Eddie probably will be turned into expensive commercial pharmaceutical products, about a third of which are exported to countries such as West Germany and Japan, where the system of voluntary blood donations is strongly entrenched and it's considered bad form to try to buy blood or blood products from people. Consequently, those countries turn to the United States for their commercial blood products.

"IT'S ALMOST LIKE reverse exploitation," says a source familiar with the commercial blood plasma industry. Another source puts it more simply: "The European and Japanese blood products markets are milking these people for their blood."

This is not to say that commercial collection of blood plasma is not a necessary and valuable part of the world health picture: pharmaceutical products derived from commercially-collected blood plasma have helped millions of people, from hemophiliacs to pregnant mothers who need measles vaccinations.

Nor does it mean that Eddie and his colleagues are being endangered, physically. The federal government has strict regulations concerning plasma collection facilities, and no one has suggested that an occasional plasma "donation" is physically harmful to the donor.

But why do pharmaceutical companies and independent plasma collection companies have to turn to guys like Eddie when they need plasma? The answer is: Eddie and others like him will sell their blood plasma more cheaply than anyone else.

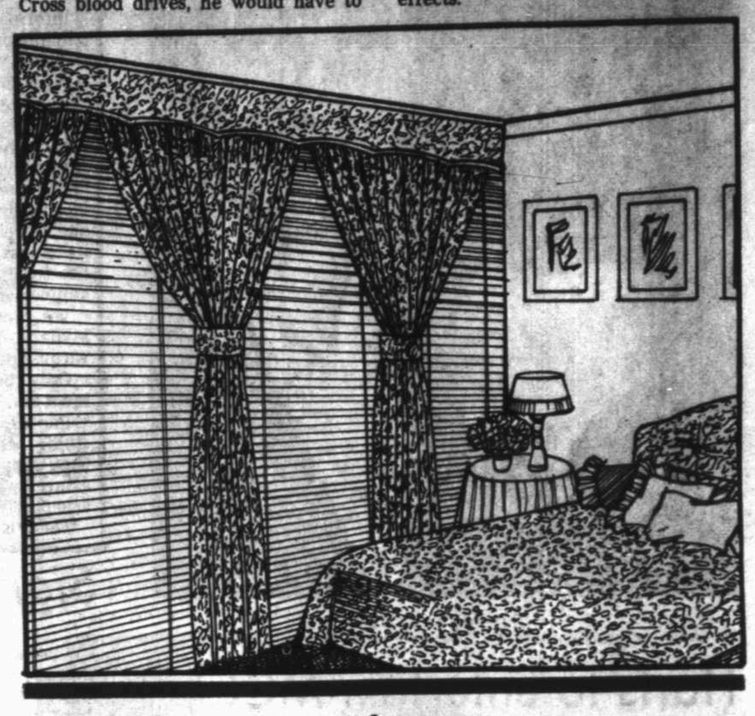

While blood plasma is abundandant-in underdeveloped nations like Honduras and Chad, the high disease rate in those countries makes their blood commercially worthless. The bottom line is that because the United States has both the technical capability to process blood plasma and a large population of chronically unemployed, relatively healthy people who are willing to provide the raw material at a relatively low price, it has become the world's primary supplier of blood plasma derivatives.

THE SYSTEM WORKS like this:

About twice a week, Eddie goes to the plasma center — one of more than 350 in the United States — and gets blood and urinalysis tests to see if he's drunk, on drugs or is suffering from disease. New customers also get a complete physical and a tetanus shot, as well as a booklet, entitled "EARN CA$H" that explains the plasma extraction process in detail.

Eddie is in relatively good shape, so he signs a consent form and lies down on a bed. A licensed nurse sticks a needle in his arm and draws out a pint of whole blood. While Eddie lies there, the blood is taken to a centrifuge machine, where blood plasma is separated from red blood cells. The red blood cells are then mixed with a saline solution and returned to Eddie through the same needle, and the process — called pheresis — is repeated once more.

In all, Eddie donates about 600 milliliters of plasma — a little over a pint. And because his red blood cells were returned to him, Eddie will be ready to donate another pint in a couple of days. If he had donated "whole blood," including red cells, as is the case in Red Cross blood drives, he would have to wait about two months before his red blood cells were replaced. In a good year, Eddie can donate plasma up to 104 times without any apparent ill effects.

Clay and Sally Hart

Harts to entertain MCC Ladies Association Friday

The Midland Country Club Ladies Association will hold its monthly meeting on Friday. Social hour begins at 11:30 a.m., followed by an hour of entertainment by the Clay and Sally Hart Show. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4378.

Clay and Sally Hart spent over five years performing for some 30 million people each week on "The Lawrence Welk Show."

Clay filled the country music slot vacated by Lynn Anderson when she left the show. His first record, "Spring," won him a Grammy nomination for best country male vocalist of the year. He has been featured on the Grand Ole Opry and on several national television commercials.

Sally came to "The Lawrence Welk Show" with her singing partner, Sandi. They won the place left vacant when the Lennon Sisters ventured out on their own. Since that time, Sally has appeared on several national television commercials and shows, and has recently released her first chart record, "Takin What I Can Get."

With their band, "Rounders," Clay and Sally have blended their individual talents into a show that is contempory and country. A few recent appearances include opening for Red Skelton at the Nugget in Reno, Nev.; opening act for Alan King; appearances on the Dinah Show; headliners at the Oregon State Fair, Iowa State Fair, California State Fair, Montana State Fair, Eastern States Exposition, L.A. County Fair; appearances on the Jim Nabors Show; opening act for the Juliet Prowse Show; convention appearances for major U.S. corporations; and many others.

Signet rings have history

Hearst Feature Service

What is it that Prince Charles and his dashing younger brother, Andrew, and Frank Sinatra and actor George Hamilton, and members of European royalty and probably you, you and you, do alike? Right! You all wear signet rings.

Why do you wear a signet ring? Because you like to wear a signet ring, of course. But there's more to it than that, right? And you know some of the answers but not all, right? Well, all of the answers and oodles of fascinating information about signet rings are spelled out in November issue of Town & Country.

Like this: "Count Carimati's ring is made of steel, lined in gold to keep his finger from turning green." And this (wow!): "Since the middle of the 12th Century, signet rings have routinely adorned the pinkies of European landed gentry. Wearing and using a signet ring began as a legal alternative to a signature in the days when most landowners couldn't write.

"Sealing rings were used to impress coats of arms on titled deeds and wills. The rings were worn upside down on the small or little finger because the wax impression had to appear upright on the document, and it was simpler to make the impress when a minimum of hand-swiveling was involved."

And this: "The signet began to acquire special meanings as the centuries passed. Rings symbolized the importance of the wearer, his office or rank, and summoned up special feelings of affiliation or reverence."

Some wearers today, Town & Country says, see in a signet ring a direct connection with the romance of a castle, or a marble-halled palazzo, through which a long line of ancestors have passed. And:

"Since custom still dictates that sealing rings be handed on to the next generation at the time of majority, the tradition seems to have a wild fascination for young girls, who see it as one of those mysterious indicators of adulthood."

Since we live in a democracy, one doesn't have to be of royal descent to wear a signet ring, and, besides, almost all of us can read and write and are able to sign our names to checks and deeds and things like that. So if we want to wear a signet ring, that's our business, right? Reports Town & Country:

Making Midland A Better Hometown

HIPPOPOTOMUS SYNDROME

If you are purchasing a home, your first con-sideration should be (even before price) whether it will be a comfortable, enjoyable, rational place for your family to live. I'm not talking about investment properties - I'm referring to a home where you are going to LIVE.

No matter how great a bargain a house may be - it is not the right house if your family will be unhappy or uncomfortable there. If you have no car, why buy a house where there is no public transportation nearby? Why buy a house where there are not enough bedrooms for the size of your flock or a yard for the size of your family dog, or downstairs bedroom for the family member who can't climb stairs.

Buying an unsuitable house at any price is like buying a hippopotomus at a bargain price. What are you going to do after you own it - build a swimming pool for it and post a sign saying: "But the price was great!" Buying the WRONG house is like buying a hippopotomus.

This trio of orphaned year-old squirrels named Lights, Camera and Action (from left) take a spin in the backyard pool of Chuck Best, who is teaching the furry little creatures to water ski behind a remote-controlled 31-inch boat. Their eight-inch-long skis are mounted on a piece of plastic so they won't sink, but that doesn't stop the novices from taking their share of spills. With some coaxing from the coach, they climb aboard again and hang on — where it's dry.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Last year my husband, our child and I received Christmas gifts from my husband's sister who lives in another state. She sent nothing for our two other children who are mine from a previous marriage. These children (I'll call them Sally and Bob) are teen-agers who are very fond of this stepaunt and would be hurt if they had known about this. I hid the gifts until Sally and Bob left to visit their father for the Christmas holidays.

Abby, most stepchildren have a hard enough "row to hoe" without being slighted by the step-family. Their need for tangible proof of affection and acceptance by the step-family may be even greater than that of the natural children due to their awkward status.

My purpose in writing this is not to chastise, but to plead with step-families to remember these children along with the natural children of the family when it comes to gift giving and other acts of kindness. I'm sure it will make them happier, and I know of at least one parent who would very much appreciate it. I'm certain that there are countless other parents who would feel the same way. — HURTING FOR THE CHILDREN

DEAR HURTING: Your letter is both timely and worthwhile. Thank you for a suggestion that will surely make Christmas a lot merrier for many stepchildren.

DEAR ABBY: I chuckled at the letter from "Upset," the 25-year-old woman whose mother ("divorced and living alone") asked Daughter to phone before dropping in on her.

Daughter would be truly upset were she to drop in unannounced to find Mother in the arms of her lover. Most kids (even at 25) assume that their parents have no interest in sex, much less a sex life. This is simply untrue.

"Upset's" mother is most likely trying to ensure her deserved privacy in order to delicately balance her need for intimacy with her desire to protect her daughter's illusion of Mom's "purity." It's a sticky situation, in which we often find ourselves in this 1982 morality.

Most 25-year-old daughters living alone would not appreciate an unannounced visit from Mom for the same reason. — DIVORCED MOTHER, LIVING ALONE

DEAR MOTHER: Right on. Unannounced visits are rarely appreciated — even in families with open minds and closed eyes.

DEAR ABBY: "Katie in Anchorage" submitted that immigrants who arrived at Ellis Island "without papers" were tagged "WOP." If that were so, we would have to assume that our immigration inspectors discriminated against Italians. No, I am told that the guardians of our gates at Ellis Island disliked all foreigners equally. So, why weren't other immigrants called "wop"?

Simply, the expression predated the immigration to America, and is Italian-Spanish in its derivation. In the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies, the expression "guappo" had reference to handsome young men who affected a sense of bravado. In Naples, "guappo" sounded like "wop."

From its true meaning — ruggedly handsome — the term began to decline in its meaning as it was applied to tough gang members, hence the pejorative "wop." — LEONARD MOSS, WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY

FABRIC SECRETS

By Betty Martin

When working with silk or other lightweight fabric, try to steer clear of overly fitted styles. This way, you can avoid subjecting the fabric to unusual stress. An easy, fluid look is preferable. Use a well-tested pattern or make a sample of a new pattern in a similar weight muslin. Try to avoid refitting during sewing, as the needle marks may show. To be sure that your silk fabric will not shrink, cut a perfect with-the-grain 10" square of fabric. Steam it well with the wool setting of your iron. Do not iron or stretch. Check the fabric's ability to withstand shrinkage and heat.

At LEGGETTS FABRICS, 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No. 9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101, you will find a magnificent array of fabrics ranging from fine silks to muslins. You will always find our staff very helpful so feel free at any time to ask our advice about your latest sewing project. open: Mon.-Sat. 10-6.

Mr. and Mrs. David F. Madrid, 2406 Rankin Highway, celebrated their 35th anniversary with a reception at St. Ann's Hall Nov. 6. The party was hosted by the couple's children.

David Madrid and Maria Franco were married Nov. 1, 1947, at Nuestro Padre Jesus Catholic Church in Ojinaga, Chih., Mexico. The couple has four children — Mrs. Albert C. Terrazas, Mrs. George O. Sosa, Mrs. Marcelino Armendariz Jr. and Norma Madrid, all of Midland — and five grandchildren. They are members of the Catholic church.

The U.S. Army Reserve, when organized as America's first federal reserve force in 1908, consisted of only 364 medical officers. These individuals could be called to active duty by the Secretary of War in emergencies.

In the past 75 years, the Army Reserve has increased nearly 850 times its original number.

The Galapagos Islands west of Ecuador were named for the galapago, Spanish for "tortoise," because of the 200-pound tortoises found there that could carry the weight of a man.

Florida town home of spiritualists, psychics

By JOHN PLATERO
AP Writer

CASSADEGA, Fla. (AP) — The winding two-lane road leading to this isolated village is lined with thick, tall trees, whose branches intertwine to cast an almost eternal shadow over the street below.

As the road approaches Cassadega, it splits the town into two communities — spiritualists on one side and "regular people" on the other.

To the unbeliever, Cassadega could be an ideal location for a horror movie. But for the psychics, mediums and mind readers who live there, it's a quiet, restful setting where they can practice their special talents.

Visitors from around the world visit Cassadega throughout the year to have their fortunes told or to be counseled by those who claim an ability to read other people's thoughts and predict their future.

"Many of us have been persecuted and made fun of all our lives," says Laurie Smith, a Hartford, Conn., native who moved to Cassadega with her two daughters several months ago.

The spiritualist side of the unincorporated village, which was founded in 1883, measures 30 acres. Almost every house has a small shingle or sign to let visitors know the occupant offers a "reading" or "consultation."

To live on this side, one must be a stockholder in the Southern Cassadega Spiritualist Camp Meeting Association, which owns the land. Most residents belong to the Colby Memorial Church, the only church in the camp. Others are affiliated with independent small spiritualist churches in the area and elsewhere.

"The land is leased to them," she says. "That way, no other businesses can destroy the tranquillity."

Mrs. Page is considered by her peers to be one of the most knowledgeable mediums in Cassadega.

"I'm accepted here and hope to learn more from people like Mrs. Page," says the 42-year-old Mrs. Smith. A reverend of the Mini-Universal Life Church, she offers readings at the Cassadega Hotel, built in 1927 and the only hostelry in town. Her readings cost $10-$20.

True psychics, Mrs. Smith says, do not require a glass ball or tea leaves or any other device to "read" someone.

"Those are simply objects to focus psychic abilities on," she says. "The reading is done with the mind."

Such powers, she adds, are born with certain people and honed through practice and study."I was born this way, but it took time to realize I had this power," she said.

Mrs. Smith's "visions" are similar to what most people "see" when they close their eyes and recall something from the past.

Spiritualism was officially recognized by the U.S. government in 1893. The following year, the association was founded and, in 1898, the National Spiritualism Association was created.

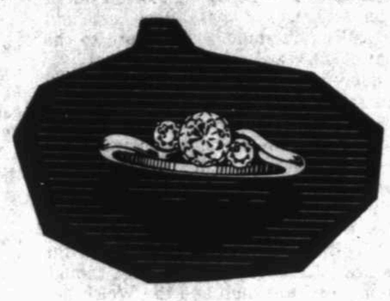

Mrs. Page received her psychic education from her husband, the Rev. E.B. Page, a spiritualist leader, teacher and reader until he died in 1953.

In order to be a good psychic, she says, "One must have an objective mind to be receptive to vibrations from others."

Wales: Country of castles, music and fairy tales

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

Traveling in Wales is much like seeing two countries at once. There is the Wales with castles posted like sentries on the hills, reminders of the many battles fought and lost and fought again. But, just as evident, there is a softer Wales, a country of poetry and music and fairy tales.

Investigating the castles, I found that Wales was invaded for centuries, both by land and by sea until they were finally brought under English rule in 1282. While some of the older castles dating back to the 11th and 12th centuries were built for Welsh protection, the newer ones were built in the 13th century to insure Welsh subjugation.

Amid crumbling Roman walls, ancient Druid burial grounds and other evidences of civilizations come and gone, over 200 castles still stand as a tribute to the fierce attachment of the Welsh to their homeland.

Not easily conquered in a naturally defensive land of rocky cliffs cut through with rivers, lakes and estuaries, the Welsh only completely surrendered to foreign rule after Edward I of England built a string of mighty fortresses in order to quell constant Welsh insurrections during the 13th century.

With the birth of Edward's son, the first English prince of Wales, and the subsequent ascension of Welsh-born Henry Tudor to the English throne, the Welsh finally tolerated a sovereign peaceably, though even today nationalism runs high and the Welsh language and customs are carefully nurtured.

NOW, LOYALTIES ARE no longer divided and have been especially consolidated since the present prince of Wales brought his popular princess to Caernarfon Castle to introduce her to her Welsh subjects immediately after his marriage last year.

In the wake of ~~that event~~, the Welsh are ready to recognize the historical worth of the castles built to keep them under English rule and the Wales Tourist Board has designated 1983 as the "Year of the Castle." IIn January of 1983, many of the castles built by the final conquerors of the Welsh will celebrate their seven hundredth year.

Although the older Welsh castles are included in the festivities for the "Year of the Castle" which will include open-air singing, dancing, medieval feasts and yacht races and mock battles, they lie mostly in ruins. However, the sites are quite beautiful and the remaining walls and tower are rich in stories of Welsh supremacy.

TRAVEL

One of the best preserved of the pre-Edward I Welsh castles is Castell Dinas Bran, soaring above steep drops overlooking the Dee Valley, but only fragmentary remains are left to tell visitors about the role of constantly bombarded Dolforwayn Castle near the Welsh borders where Llywelyn the Last organized futile efforts against Edward I.

The struggle that was begun by the grandfathers of the two leaders ended in 1282 when one of Edward's soldiers ran Llywelyn through with a lance and killed him without realizing the identity of his victim or knowing that his own name, Stephen de Frankton, would go down infamously in Welsh history to be repeated in ceremonies at Cilmeri where the Welsh gather each September to pay tribute to Llywelyn.

THE EVIDENCE OF military strength and the architectural grandeur of Wales is revealed in the 14 castles that Edward ordered constructed with conscripted labor after that final battle with Llywelyn.

Perhaps the most significant are the castles Conwy, Caernarfon and Harlech, which stand as monuments to Edward's determination that there would be no more English blood spilled in Wales.

Eight-towered Conwy was built not only as a fortress but as a residence. The king's and queen's chambers and various halls for entertainment and an unusual internal chapel tower are evidence that Conwy provided not only arrow loops and spy holes designed for defense but also spacious provisions for everyday living.

Conwy's protective walls extend to encompass the town and it is possible for visitors to walk the wall that runs from the castle around the well-preserved medieval village down to Conwy Bay.

While Conwy is rounded and symetrical, Caernarfon is squared off as if for battle. Built on the site of an early Norman castle, Caernarfon is probably the most steeped in history of all the English built castles. It was here that Edward II was born and the present prince of Wales invested in 1969. The castle contains the robing room furnished as it was for HRH Prince Charles' investiture and the Regimental Museum of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers which includes uniforms, medals, flags, paintings and memorabilia as well as the burial plate of the regimental goat, Billy.

IF YOU PLAN TO see Caernarfon, try to spend a Tuesday night in the city so that you can visit a rehearsal of the Caernarfon Male Voice Choir at the Conservative Club. Rehearsals are open to the public and one session will convince you that angels are indeed male.

Stay for a drink in the downstairs pub where the harmonizing continues and members will gladly share with you what singing has meant to the Welsh since the early days when song was their sole entertainment and a cheerful melody was an antidote to long hours in the mines. Nearly all cities and villages in Wales boast a male choir.

Farther down the coast from Caernarfon on the south side of Llyn Peninsula lies Harlech Castle. If ever there was a kingdom by the sea, Harlech should hold that romantic title. It does live in romantic legend as the home of Branwen, daughter of Llyr, king of the Isle of Wales.

Set high on a rocky promontory that sweeps down to Tremadog Bay and out to the Irish Sea, Harlech offers an almost physical impact to the viewer who is simultaneously awed by Snowdon's peak in the distance.

That well-known battle song, "Men of Harlech" sun during the Wars of the Roses, can be easily imagined while climbing the 143 steps to the top of the gatehouse and traversing the wall walks that enclose Harlech and its stormy history.

NOT IN ACCORDANCE with Edward's plans, Harlech was once captured by the Welsh led by Owain Glyndwr and became the site of a Welsh parliament in 1404. Stone cannonballs heaped on the floor of the gatehouse were piled there after Harlech was retaken by the English after a long siege in 1409.

The siege of 1409 was the first of many, and Harlech, the last castle to be lost during the civil war that ended in 1647, is still known as the castle of lost causes. After the wars, the Welsh turned themselves towards beauty and by the early eighteen hundreds had built many Victorian towns with riches gained from sheep raising and slate and coal mining.

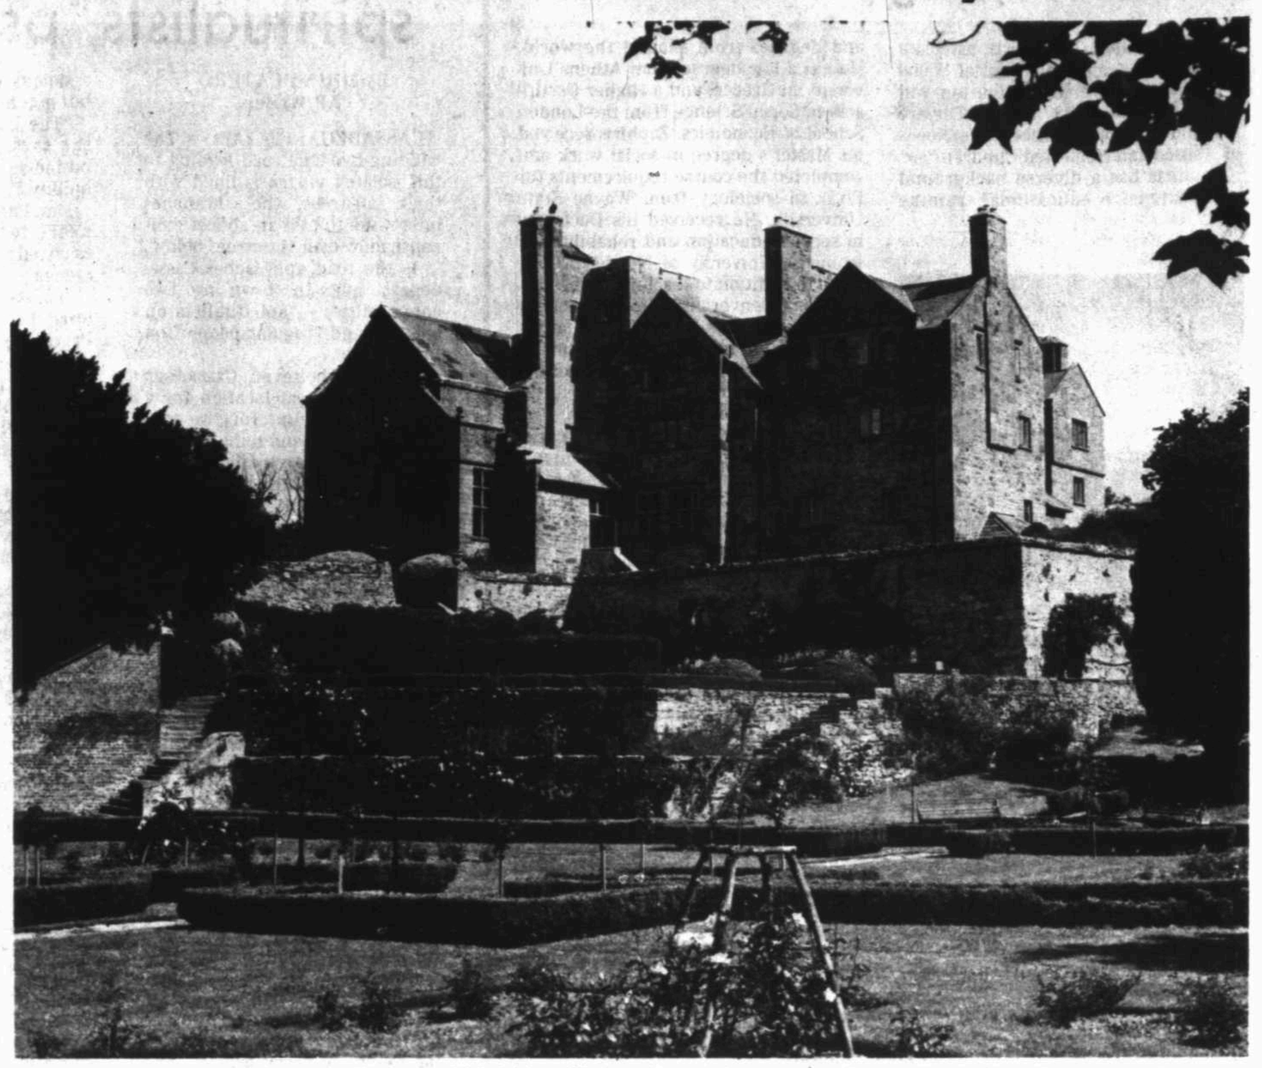

One of the most pleasing of the Victorian towns is Llandudno, a seaside resort whose beaches are closely fronted by peaked Victorian homes and hostelries set between rocky promontories called Great Ormes Head and Little Ormes Head. In Llandudno, I stayed at the Marine Hotel where rates are moderate and some of the guests had been summering for thirty years.

One woman still alternates her weeks all year between her home in Chester and the hotel. Why? "Memories," she said, and hearing the waves lap on those quiet shores as I took tea by the window in the lounge, I developed some of my own. For reservations call (0492) 77521 or your nearest Trust House Forte hotel.

After renting a car from the local Godfrey Davis agency close to the hotel, I drove about three miles up into the hills to Bodyscallon Hall, a 17th Century twenty-room house which began functioning this year as a first-class hotel in an area which boasts few luxurious amenities in establishments that accept guests.

I approached Bodyscallon after a storm which had split and felled giant oak trees and muddied the road considerably, but all was welcome at the faithfull restored house complete with superb candlelit dining, roaring fireplaces and walled gardens.

AN ANCIENT LOOKOUT tower attached to the house that one served to warn Conwy Castle of advancing troops now offers a spectacular view of the countryside and Conwy Bay. Bodyscallon is a project of Historic Hotels Ltd. whose booking office can be reached by telephone at 01-588-2567. Rates are from 25 pounds.

Conwy Castle was the most expensive of the fortresses built by the English at a cost of 15,000 pounds, and remains one of the outstanding achievements of medieval architecture in Europe.

Just as desirable, but in a simple, country way, was Highgate Farm at Newtown, a 15th century half-timbered farmhouse where the Whitticase family takes travelers not only into their homes but into their lives as well.

Linda Whitticase's cooking will make you beg for one of the area cookbooks to which she was a contributor and if you are interested in the out-of-doors, little Andrew will take you down to the pond to search for duck eggs and the Whitticase girls will include you in pony trekking. There are also walking tours of the hill country available through a group in Newtown called Earthwalk.

If you have time, Gwyn Whitticase will put one of his Welsh sheepdogs through his paces rounding up and directing sheep right or left by whistled command. Unfortunately, the farm is open to guests only from May through September. Rates are from 11 pounds for bed, breakfast and evening meal. The Whitticase's address is Highgate Farm, Newtown, Powys, Wales and their telephone is (0686) 25981.

Perhaps one of the loveliest settings I visited also boasted one of the best bargains. Bargain breaker rates at Bontddu Hall Hotel at Bontddu begin Sept. 27 and are effective through Nov. 8 when the hotel closes for the season. It then opens at slightly high rates the Monday after Easter. Bargain rates are 8 pounds fifty pence per person which includes breakfast.

THE HOTEL IS SET high above the Mawddach Estuary below the crags of Caden Idris and suites with a view are offered during bargain breaker time at the same price as a double room. William Hall, who owns the establishment, also has two brothers in the area who own hotels and townspeople say the George II across the estuary or the Golden Lion at Dolgellau are equally well run. It is an easy trip from the Bontddu-Dolgellau area to the castles of Aberystwyth and Harlech.

I drove into the heart of Mid-Wales before leaving for the southern coast. There are narrow gauge railways that crisscross the 137 by 116 mile country that is slightly larger than the state of New Jersey but I found that an automobile was necessary for most of the places I wanted to visit.

I stoped in Myddfai for a well prepared ploughman's lunch which consisted of homemade bread, cheese and cucumber soup — hot. The owner of the Plough Inn at Myddfai shared with me his copy of the local fairy tale that explans the wondrous healing powers of the physicians of Mid-Wales and lists all of the local herbs and their curative effects.

The legend goes that a fairy maiden rose out of Lake Lyn-y-fan-fach and captured the heart of a local farmboy whom she told, "I will marry you if you promise never to strike me." Inadvertantly, over the years the husband tapped her on the shoulder, and the third time he placed his hand on her shoulder, she disappeared into the lake to return only to visit her sons and give them the secrets of medicine.

The sons became the forebears of the doctors of Wales and many of her secret cures like sage for insanity and dittany for pain are used today, not only in Wales but throughout the world, the legend says.

MORE STRUCTURED BUT quite as romantic are the poems and stories and plays by the late Welsh author Dylan Thomas. His former boathouse stands on the southern coast at Laugharne.

Overlooking the Laugharne Estuary, the view that inspired Thomas is still powerfully felt, and his house and the shed where he did much of his writing until his death in 1953 are faithfully preserved down to the crumpled pieces of paper that are discarded on the floor.

A gallery with paintings dedicated to Thomas and his works is available for guests to visit on the top floor of the boat house and visitors can have tea overlooking the estuary and purchase single bound copies of his stories, "The Outing" and "The Followers" from the tiny bookstore in the house.

The Tourist Board of Wales invites all Thomases and others of Welsh extraction, and even those who are not, to special events in 1983 which will include meals with local families and participation in events like "storm the castle."

So, if you have Welsh blood, or even if you do not, beginning in January, escalating in the spring and getting into full swing in the summer, 1983 is the year to introduce yourself to Wales. What other country could produce the legendary King Arthur and the equally legendary but very real Richard Burton? Where else will you be welcomed with song and given an intimate look at such dark history tempered with a lightness of heart that invites each visitor to search for his own Camelot.

Particulars about the "Year of the Castle" may be obtained from the Wales Tourist Board, Marketing Department, Brunel House, 2 Fitzalan Road, Cardiff CF2 1UY, Wales or telephone (0222) 499909; telex, 497269.

New cases of bacterial disease are reported

ATLANTA (AP) — Eight new cases of a bacterial disease linked to eating ground beef have been reported, but a federal health official says the disease probably is not a national health problem.

These cases occurred sporadically since August in Minnesota, Ohio, Massachusetts, California, Illinois and Alabama, Dr. Mitchell Cohen, an epidemiologist with the national Centers for Disease Control here, said Thursday, raising the total reported cases to 81 this year.

TIPS ON TRIPS

If you're bringing along a camera overseas, put a haze filter over the lens and leave it on. It won't interfere with the photography and may keep an expensive lens from being damaged while traveling. Carry a spare set of batteries for the camera. They are not always available abroad and often cost three times as much as batteries purchased in the United States.

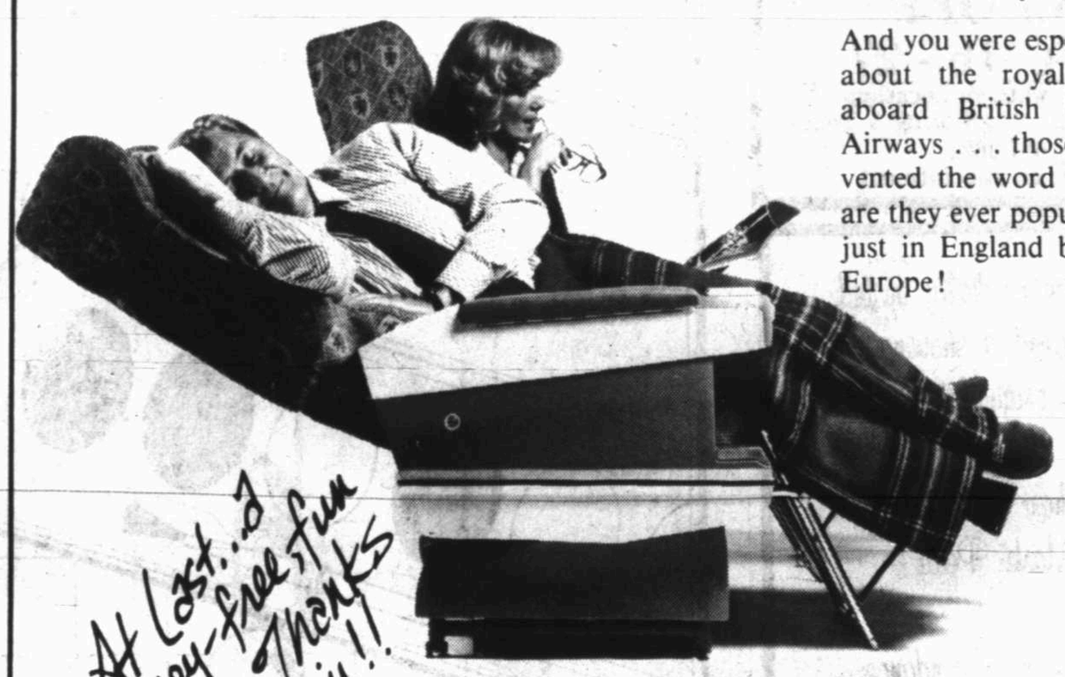

Take a time converter, a small magnifying glass for reading maps, an extra set of luggage keys, extra passport photos, plastic bags for soiled laundry and a sewing kit.

Bologna: Life under porticoes

By JOHN FARINA
Copley News Service

That's because you can get from here to there in Bologna from under 23 miles of arched porticoes — an amenity not to be sneezed at because Bologna is a city that must be seen on foot if it's to be seen at all.

From under the porticoes, you can shop for fine wares, admire the University of Bologna, watch the pigeons in the Piazza Maggiore, see the double-decker green buses dash by, or watch the busy Bolognese hustling along.

Or you can mingle with the Bolognese on their way, marvel at the unfinished church of San Petronio, or stop for a Northern Italian gourmet lunch at a sidewalk table, all from under the porticoes — Bologna's trademark.

ONE OF THEM, 666 arches long, wends its way from the city up to the 17th century Church of the Madonna San Luca on Cole della Guardia. The porticoes' purpose is to protect pilgrims as they carry along an image of the Holy Mother during religious rites.

However, Emilia-Romagna's capital city, once a Roman colony named Bononia, has more than its porticoes to delight visitors.

Equally famous are the twins that dominate the city's center, the towers of Garisenda and Asinelli, two of 200 that once sprouted skyward.

Such towers still poke up in several Italian towns, built centuries ago as fortresses and competing symbols of power: the higher they were, the greater the prestige.

ONE STANDS NEARLY intact, the other truncated. Both were built in the 12th century, the smaller reduced in height 250 years later for safety reasons.

But Bologna is a city of several trademarks, including the statue of Neptune by Giambologna, a work of art called the "giant" because it stands high over the thousands of pedestrians criss-crossing the piazza.

But so much for surface appearances.

Into the University of Bologna's 15th century anatomical theater, into the spacious Church of San Petronio, into the Church of Santa Maria della Vita, into the archaeological museum, and into the Palazzo d'Accursio, seat of the Town Hall.

The Bolognese are especially proud of San Petronio, named after the city's patron saint, even though it stands uncompleted. The marble facade covers only half of the church's front, but that merely adds to its charm.

San Petronio is not merely a tourist attraction, of course. It is first a place of worship, where the pious venerate religious representations in several chapels in their search for a better life and a heavenly goal.

There are other churches in Bologna, of course, and to some, it is worth visiting the city if only to see the masterfully emotional terra-cotta sculpture of the dead Christ mourned by his Mother and disciples. Created by Nicolo dell'Arca, any church would be pleased to have it, but it's in the Church of Santa Maria della Vita.

Meanwhile, other treasures fill other churches. In the Church of San Domenico is the body of the Spanish founder of the monastic order of Dominicans. He died in the city in the 13th century, and his tomb is a masterpiece of Italian sculpture. The tomb of Luigi Galvani, who experimented with animal electricity, is in the Church of Corpus Domini.

ON A LESS-SOMBRE note, sumptuous palaces in Bologna await discovery by lucky visitors who want to learn more of the city's medieval history.

There are ample opportunities for learning more about the past.

Bologna's archeological museum in the hospital of St. Mary of the Dead is known to relatively few who come here, but is filled with Etruscan, Roman, Greek and Egyptian artifacts — among them a sandstone funerary stele, devotees in bronze, miniature statues of foot soldiers with spears, bronze helmets, gold tiaras, and other artful renderings of the ancients.

In the wood-sculpted, ornate anatomical theater, where Bolognese surgeons once carved up cadavers, there is a raised platform from where the supervising physician pontificated to medical students on the importance of poking scalpels into the inner recesses of the dead to learn how to care for the living.

Dig deeper yet and the visitor will discover imperishable works of art by Giacomo da Vignola and Giovanni da Bologna. The Bolognese school of painting was led by such immortals as Guido Reni and Il Domenichino.

But back to the street — twin towers.

Imposing enough from the ground, the 318-foot Asinelli beckons to the strong and curious to climb it from the inside, and some do. But it's a long, tiring step-by-upward-step jaunt. For those who make it, an inspiring view of the city and the province beyond awaits. The climber, however, should enjoy it while he can. The trek down is made on tired legs already stretched to the limit.

There are easier ways of seeing Bologna, of course. One of them is to tour the Palazzo d'Accursio on the piazza, where art collections are equal to those in other great world museums.

You will know the palace when you see it. On the facade is a statue of Pope Gregory XIII, and near it a madonna by Dell'Arca. The palace also features the 13th century clock of Gondolfi tower, but it's a tower not really meant to be climbed.

Only to be enjoyed, while sitting on the steps of San Petronio, feeding the pigeons.

Gateway to spectacular recreational opportunities, Sat Lake City offers a unique combination of cosmopolitan living, western tradition and historic ambience, blended into a serene mountain environment.

Riviera more than jet-set playground

By DON MERWIN
Copley News Service

Mention the French Riviera and what comes to mind? A playground for the jet set where the high rollers relieve their boredom.

It is that, and much more. Monaco, the tiny principality nestled between the warm Mediterranean and the barren Alps, offers a combination of Old World elegance and modern opulence. Familiar landmarks and new hotels and condominiums share space in this country of 500 acres and 30,000 residents, where France is to the north and Italy to the east.

The Hotel de Paris that opened in 1864 and the Hotel Hermitage that opened in 1906; the palace that is the residence of Prince Rainier; the Opera and the Casino remain centers of activity. But they share their grandeur with such ultramodern buildings as the Monte Carlo Convention Center, Loews Monte Carlo Hotel and the Monte Carlo Sporting Club. From the balconies at Loews, which extend over the shoreline, you can see Corsica on a clear day.

As a tourist destination (it is easily accessible, for Air France alone has 12 flights a day from Paris to the Nice airport), Monaco has history, glamour, exciting nightlife and a year-round playground. Although winter has always been the smart season here, it is now a year-round vacation spot as a concerted effort to expand tourism is under way.

No longer do just the wealthy and the jet set play in Monte Carlo. Visitors have a choice of accommodations ranging from the 39-room Motel LeSiecle, a two-star, to the largest, Loews Monte Carlo, a four-star with 636 rooms, five restaurants, a swimming pool and a casino that is right out of Las Vegas . In fact, Loews sent its Monegasque croupiers to Las Vegas for eight-week training sessions to fine-tune their techniques.

A wide range of restaurants and food prices also graces Monte Carlo. Excellent seafood is available everywhere and a recommendation is loup, a sea bass from the Mediterranean (different than the sea bass of the Atlantic), poached and served with a mousseline sauce, or rougette, a small red fish that can be prepared a number of ways. Both are special taste treats.

Sightseeing is exceptional. The visitor can see the ground of the palace and, about noon, watch the changing of the guard. If the banner is flying, Prince Rainier is in residence. If there is no banner, the public may visit the chapel, throne room and ballrooms of the palace.

Nearby are exotic gardens that feature an extraordinary collection of cacti and succulents. The National Musuem, the Oceanographic Museum and Anthropological Museum offer hours of browsing.

Monaco has four towns, the ancient community of Monaco on a jutting rock that has the palace, aquarium and cathedral; LaCondamine where most Monegasques live and is the business community; Monte Carlo, the playground and Fontveille, an industrial area being built on land reclaimed from the sea.

History takes wing at space museum

By THANE MCINTOSH
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The newest and most dazzling of this city's many museums stands out because it offers an unmatched personal experience.

At the National Air and Space Museum on the Mall, visitors can touch, feel, play with and otherwise get involved with a host of displays and devices clamoring for one's attention throughout the three-block-long structure.

The museum's vast collection of more than 300 aircraft, rockets and space hardware items could have turned it into a cluttered and cold place. In fact, the opposite is true.

A warm feeling wraps visitors the moment they enter — from the sun shining down through the glass roof to the carpets and color scheme. One quickly feels welcome in this impressive building ingeniously designed to mix a large number of people and exhibits. This is an historical mecca filled with fun.

A MOON ROCK can be touched. The first Mercury capsule to orbit the earth sits at eye level, with a life-size John Glenn dummy at the controls, allowing a glimpse into our tiny first space explorer. Overhead hangs the Kitty Hawk Flyer and off to the right the Bell X-1, the first supersonic aircraft. A Gemini capsule rests beside the Mercury spacecraft, complete with an astronaut figure hovering outside.

Also in this first gallery, a variety of displays trace the history of our pioneer space efforts. Rear-screen projections, early photos and other displays prepare the visitor for the rich lode of aviation history which packs the rest of the museum.

The original Spirit of St. Louis, the national treasure in which Charles Lindbergh flew across the Atlantic, hangs over the main gallery. The best view of this aircraft is from the upper level.

The "Spirit" is tarnished and the fabric reflects the wear of the Atlantic skies and the toll of years. The famous cowling with its burnished design and flags of many countries is far from gleaming. But with its two-level design, the museum offers an entrancing view of this precious airplane.

Step into the naval aviation exhibit and you'll find yourself in the hangar deck of an aircraft carrier. Gray and cavernous, this display offers three airplanes steeped in history — a Dauntless Dive-bomber and Grumman Helicat from World War II days and a more recent Skyhawk jet fighter.

CONTINUE UP TO the second deck for personal involvement and a little sea duty. Here kids of every age can play sailor on a ship's bridge complete with wheel and other controls. A few steps away through the windows of a carrier's "island" or bridge, a cleverly projected film of jets being launched runs continuously accompanied by a realistic sound track.

A spectacular mural of a B-17 "Flying Fortress" bomber in formation over Europe looms high over a gallery devoted to World War II aircraft; brilliantly detailed, it shows the famous craft under attack from German fighters. The product of extensive research, the detailed painting depicts an actual raid. So vivid is the display that as you walk among the other war planes in the room — Spitfires, P-51 Mustangs, German fighters — the majestic bomber thunders down on you and overpowers the room.

At the east end of the museum stands a complete lunar module. No television image or newspaper picture can give a hint as to the size of our moon exploration vehicle. When you stand at the bottom of the giant lander legs (complete with an "astronaut" about to make that "giant step for mankind") and consider the effort required to put that much equipment 250,000 miles away, you gain added appreciation of what our space program achieved. Off in the distance out the window rises the Capitol Dome, where on May 25, 1961, John F. Kennedy announced to the world that the United States was going to the moon.

No doubt the National Air and Space Museum's best display is that devoted to space and moon exploration artifacts. In addition to the lunar module, another gallery houses a detailed layout of activities our space explorers have carried out on the moon's surface. A mock-up of the moonscape strewn with scientific experiments left by the Apollo astronauts is enhanced by a tape recording which fills the room with the sounds of their conversations while going about their tasks; a rear-screened movie of lunar rover treks and life-size astronaut suits are also featured.

WITH MANY MORE fabulous static as well as moving displays spread over nearly 30 galleries, this museum obviously requires more than a few hours to really explore its wonders. Depending on one's interests, a full day to an entire week could be devoted to it. There are tours, films and programs offered and probably the most extensive collection of publications for sale dealing with all aspects of flying and space activities.

FACTS & FIGURES

A freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases could cut the benefits of the average retired worker by more than $325 a year. For the average retired couple, the figure would be about $475.

Such cuts could result in a poverty rate spurt of as much as 25 percent among the elderly. The AFL-CIO has called on the President and Congress to protect the elderly from their particular vulnerability to inflation.

Social Security experts with the AFL-CIO predict that the Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance programs under Social Security will build large surpluses in the 25 years before 2015. They suggest that shortfalls between now and 1990 be handled by borrowing from trust funds and general revenues. This could then be paid back from the surpluses. And it can help America pay back the efforts of our elderly to make America great.

AT WORK

Don't be conventional!

By DR. ADELE SCHEELE

I was on the plane, on my way to a college speaking engagement. I could hear the young man sitting behind me chatting with his seatmate, a woman, in that slightly awkward, self-conscious way that so often plagues us when we're talking to strangers. The conversation started off blandly enough, but he grew heated as he explained his destination — a convention.

His voice carried as he tried to explain his exasperation. "Conventions are the worst torture invented by man! Next to cocktail parties, at least!" he said. "You sit forever listening to boring papers, then you stand at a reception like a jerk until someone comes over to introduce himself, pumping information with your handshake, while all the time looking over your shoulder to see who is better to meet. In two days' time, I don't think I ever get to finish two sentences in a row to someone who is listening and gives a darn."

I thought about his complaint. It does seem that there are more and more conventions, growing more ornate, bigger and duller in scope. Maybe it's the fault of planners who insist on the same old format of speaker, speaker, lunch, panel and discussion, then dinner speaker. For sure, things could be livelier.

Wouldn't it be more interesting to present a case and have several panelists show how they would attack the problem, reveal their strategies, and thereby establish in front of everyone a "lore" of how things get done by the experts? Or wouldn't it be terrific to have some experts admit what they learned from something that went wrong?

We would give anything to know how others turn their failures into new understandings and even profit. Every professional athlete knows that winning is a supreme high but, in cold sober fact, the only time they learn anything is after they've lost.

I keep going back to that young man on the plane complaining about what was not being done — no interesting meetings, no interesting conferees. I guess all of us wish that life could be arranged better for us, but that's just not the case. It's up to us to make opportunities from a convention, like anything else. Here are some steps he — and you — could try:

1. Don't wait, like a child, until you're spoken to. Start conversations with others — without the usual complaint of "ain't it awful" that falls out of human mouths upon connection with another's sympathetic ear.

2. Use the question-answer period of any panel to stand and compliment a speaker, ask a non-threatening question about the issue or experiences of the presenters. The point is twofold: If you get involved, the conference is at least less boring, and if you are a visible question-asker, others will seek you out.

3. Come with a hidden agenda to pursue some aspect of your business, no matter if it is finding alternative customers, products or union negotiators and find others to meet with. Announce your own plans at a break before lunch or at a small discussion group. You might not get anyone interested, but then again you just might.

4. Don't spend evenings in your hotel room with a room-service dinner and a TV movie. Think of the social eating times as a dance card. Go and find others to join you for lunches, dinners, evening activities.

5. Consider what was planned well and congratulate the program committee head. If you want to be involved in next year's program, ask to join some committee.

6. Write a note to the speakers whose work or presentations caught your attention — you could start a powerful network of peers and mentors. That's the real meaning of conventions.

By ED SCHAFER
AP Writer

POTOSI, Mo. (AP) — "I've lived a lot of lives in my 50 years," says Tom Clark, a former business executive and motorcycle racing champion who is now recognized as one of the nation's speediest woodchoppers.

"Chopping wood and working in my blacksmith shop are my two great loves," says Clark, who can split a cord of wood in 45 minutes. "I don't consider it to be work."

At one time or another, Clark has owned his own motorcycle shop, been a highly successful regional manager for Yamaha on the East Coast and won two national racing championships.

Whenever he became too successful, however, he always dropped out and returned to the woods.

"That's just not the kind of person I am," he says. "I couldn't get used to finishing up a day's work and having to be in another city halfway across the country by bedtime.

"Sure this is hard work and at the end of the day I'm tired. But it's a good kind of tired."

Clark cuts and splits an average of 200 cords of wood each year for customers in St. Louis. He is recognized as one of the fastest in the country and is in demand for demonstrations at fairs and at meetings of such organizations as the Wood Heating Alliance.

"I'm not bragging. I've proven that I can split wood with my ax faster than two men can do it with a mechanical splitter," the muscular Clark says with a smile. "I rediscovered an old trick the woodchoppers used to use and I can actually pop the wood apart rather than having to cut it."

Clark maintains that he can split any log with no more than four blows from his trusty ax, Buster. After the initial split, he gets one piece of fireplace-sized wood with every swing.

Meanwhile, he has patented his specially made ax and is in the process of negotiating to have it mass produced and marketed.

Watching Clark work, it's not difficult to understand why he has been a success at most things he's tried — he puts every ounce of himself into the business at hand.

"When I was training racing teams for motorcycle manufacturers, some of the guys used to say I made it look too easy," he says. "I don't believe that's true, but I suppose there's a rhythm to everything, whether it's racing a motorcycle or splitting wood, and once you find it you can sail along."

Have MUD will travel

ODESSA — It was just good, clean fun. Hold the clean.

In a circus-like atmosphere — complete with clowns, glittering skimpy costumes and cotton candy — more than 1,000 spectators gathered Tuesday evening for what was billed as "the nation's most popular sport...World Class Girls Mud Wrestling."

All types showed up at Ector County Coliseum in Odessa, from the very young to the young at heart, from the curious to the skeptical to the eager. Apparently, many area people had developed a taste for mud-slinging during the recent election campaigns.

The performance, courtesy of Miss Dale Collins Productions of Las Vegas, included professional and amateur mud wrestling matches (it was difficult to tell which was which), a magic show, a performance by an illusionist and an alligator wrestling act.

Before the show, the crowd seemed more well-behaved than one might expect (perhaps because many of them were a bit embarrassed to be found here?). But people began loosening up and enjoying themselves during the magic and illusionist acts — typical performances with doves, ropes, scarves and rings.

Then the lights went out. A drum roll resounded through the coliseum and a spotlight danced over the crowd, searching for...what?

After several suspense-filled minutes, Miss Collins reappeared in a glittering green bikini and cape. She swallowed flames, breathed fire, lit torches with her breath, blew flame rings and threw fireballs. The entertainment was getting better and the crowd becoming more enthusiastic, eager for the main attraction.

In the center of the coliseum was what looked like a padded sandbox. But instead of sand it was filled with mud and chunks of foam (that and the spongy mat base made for soft landings). But this wasn't your average West Texas run-of-the-mill mud, oh no. This was imported French mud ("We pour Perrier water in it," the announcer confided.).

Then out came the mud wrestlers — two rather hefty young women — one dressed in black and trying to look nasty and one in blue.

"You'll have to be more specific," someone replied. Specifics weren't really necessary — after a few minutes in the mud it was impossible to tell which was which.

"We want a good, clean fight," the emcee announced. The crowd was yelling and cheering wildly. The two women jumped in and wallowed in the slime, looking as if they weren't sure what to do next. They rolled in the mud, more resembling two children playing in a puddle than wrestlers. Disappointed and restless, the onlookers started to boo.

Perhaps to appease the spectators, the women began throwing mud — at each other, the referee, their coaches and anyone else who ventured too close. The crowd was yelling for action, so they pulled the female referee into the mud and yanked off her shirt and pants to reveal a swimsuit.

As the first two wrestlers were hauled off in wheelbarrows, the "ref" and her challenger, another slender young woman, began their match — much in the same way their predecessors had.

Then Miss Collins walked onto the scene.

"Come on now, kick (impolite three-letter word for derriere)!" Her command was met with cheers and applause. The wrestlers began to show more spirit.

Next, two swimsuit-clad men, whose ticket numbers had been called out, were given the opportunity to wrestle with the two good-looking young women. They began rather timidly, perhaps because they were gentlemen or mayber because they just didn't want to get dirty. After a few minutes of this, Big Nancy entered the arena.

Weighing in at perhaps 250 pounds, Nancy was met by wild applause from the crowd and apprehensive looks by the men in the ring. She jumped into the ring with the two suddenly-not-so-enthusiastic wrestlers while their female counterparts were carried off in wheelbarrows.

Taking on two men is probably more than most women could handle. Epecially when they're covered with mud and difficult to pin down.

Following the match, probably the best-enjoyed entertainment of the evening, came alligator wrestling. A U-Haul was pulled onto the floor and the crowd made to stand back. The doors swung open and Miss Collins pulled out a silver chain, on the other end of which was a full-grown alligator.

Its mouth taped shut, she dragged it by the chain onto a mat and spent the better part of 15 minutes trying to pull, poke, drag and tease it into action. She couldn't get it to do much more than take a few half-hearted swipes with its tail.

"Let's make some boots outa him!" someone yelled.

"You'd probably get more action," came another jeer. The crowd seem to feel sympathy for the animal more than anything else, except perhaps disappointment at what has turned out to be a rather amateurish production.

Latest spring collections delight the eye

By EILEEN PUTMAN
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Whether it was Halston's shimmering Greek goddesses or John Anthony's queenly gangsters, last week's spring collections were welcome relief to the grim notes some designers had sounded earlier.

When Anne Klein opened the season two weeks ago with unrelieved black and sophisticated but confining skinny suits, it looked as though spring was fated to be draped in mourning.

But along came Blass with his sequins and gaily colored silks — not within the means of most consumers but fun to look at. A plantation style pink gingham organza ball gown was sheer pleasure.

FIANDACA, THE USUALLY staid Boston designer, also broke spring out of the doldrums and offered for evening a playful yellow taffeta gown with balloon style maracas sleeves that could stop traffic anywhere.

For daywear, there was John Anthony's sizzling Al Capone suit in broad stripes and his linen and damask pinstripes that covered diaphanous chiffon and net blouses.

Evan Picone offered feminine but practical dresses for the working woman, and Halston presented clean-lined suits with piping along hemlines and jacket edges. He also offered a shimmering iridescent silk organza fabric for evening in colors of a spring bouquet.

"Fit" is still a must for spring, with waists emphasized by wide belts and cummerbunds. But the feeling unveiled last week was looser, more glamorous, more romantic and more colorful than the early dreary openers had promised.

NFL strike curse

By ERMA BOMBECK

No one will ever convince me that the occurrence of the NFL football strike and Halley's comet within the same decade is a coincidence.

It's God's way of getting men to their feet again.

And frankly, I'm not sure I want my husband on his feet again. Since televised pro football came to a halt, the man has driven me crazy.

Oh sure, I used to kid a lot about his infatuation with the game. The nightgown out of Astroturf, knotting the cord in his I.V., and dressing his mother up in a Minnesota Viking uniform for Mother's Day. It was a joke! Actually, I thought it was a challenge.

Now that he's out of the chair and entering the mainstream of life, he's a different person. I don't know him anymore.

He said one day, "What do you have to do to get a meal around here?"

"On Monday?" I asked. "Just sit quietly in a chair and I throw it up in the air and you snatch it before it hits the floor."

"That's disgusting," he said. "And speaking of disgust, this place is a dump. We ought to move."

"We did," I said. "A week before the Super Bowl."

"Why wasn't I told of this?"

"You've never wanted to know before."

"Well, tomorrow I'm going to make some changes around here. You'll see a difference come . . . what's it called again?"

"Tuesday," I said dryly.

"Wednesday, Thursday and Friday."

"We're going to go out into the fresh air with the babies and have picnics and play a little volleyball and throw sticks for the dog to chase."

"The babies are living in Los Angeles."

"With a sitter?"

"I don't ask."

"We're going to get back to basics. I know I've neglected a few things since the games have been on. We've got a lot of catching up to do, but we'll start by fixing up the house, rotating the tires, fertilizing the lawn and spending more time with the family and doing things that don't cost a lot of money. Incidentally, where is that nightgown you made out of Astroturf?"

"I sent it out to be mowed."

"Look at that!" he said excitedly. "Is that Halley's comet arriving early?"

Please God, let it be Terry Bradshaw going to work.

Fitness a must for spring

BY EILEEN PUTMAN
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Thin is in and and fit is a must for tiny waists that are the focal point for spring fashion '83. But there is room to hide under the '40s capes and swirling '50s circle skirts that are being offered as companions.

Slim and sexy was the theme in new collections unveiled last week by some of the nation's top designers, including Anne Klein, who offered body-hugging skirts, and Perry Ellis, who encircled waists with wide big-buckled belts.

Skirts are long, and tops — whether they appear as a fitted bolero jacket or a snug double-breasted vest — are short.

Black is still very much the color that's a must for all collections, and some designers like Anne Klein used it almost exclusively.

But others, like Diane Von Furstenberg, who offered a smashing collection despite the theft of some of her favorite numbers, used a rainbow of colors that seemed more appropriate for spring than dreary black.

—PERRY ELLIS: Spanish inspiration...high waists cinched by extra-wide belts with big buckles...bolero jackets..."box pockets" set in skirts...primary colors but no pastels...espadrilles lacing up the leg.

—ANNE KLEIN: somber but sleek city sophisticates in black and ivory...padded shoulders for jackets...slim skirts that hugged the hips and finished in a sedate back kick-pleat.

—CALVIN KLEIN: sophisticated, close to the body...flippy peplums make sure the hips are noticed...buttoned sailor closings on pants and skirts.

—RALPH LAUREN: straight bodies and bold, clean necklines on dresses... classic suits with straight skirts and one-button jackets...all in black and white...a few soft blouses and pants in floral stripes lifted from antique wallpaper prints.

—RONALD KOLODZIE: tiny red thumbtacks on hemlines...tucked silks for a three-dimensional effect...men's collars on narrow sheath dresses...handkerchief linen embroidered with furry leaves...skinny skirts in red, black and white.

—DIANE VON FURSTENBERG: harem pants from the Middle East.. .togas and tunics reminiscent of Greek goddesses and Roman slaves...chemises in lime greens, parrot yellow and brilliant turquoise.

—KOOS VAN DEN AKKER: multi-colored plaids, prints and stripes in a single garment for a collage look...full-skirted suits and bolero style jackets...a jagged lightning bolt of color in unexpected places.

—BETTY HANSON: pleating and tucks...traditional sportswear mainly in white linen...vests or three-quarter length coats over blouses...knee- or calf-length skirts...beads for evening.

Fire Chief Raymond Lewis dumps out a pack of cigarettes in preparation for the American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout to be held this year on Nov. 18. Diane Crow, chairman of the Great American Smokeout, Midland County, looks on. In celebration of the Smokeout, Midland's fire department will participate in a Fire Truck Parade down Wall Street, to be held Nov. 18.

Cancer Society plans festivities in conjunction with Smokeout

Giving up cigarettes is cause for celebration. Every year the American Cancer Society offers smokers a chance to have fun while they are trying to quit. The occasion is the Great American Smokeout, a day smokers around the nation try to go a full 24 hours without cigarettes. This year, smokers are invited to put aside their habit, with pleasure, on Nov. 18.

To inspire and amuse smokers, festivities including a booth at Midland Park Mall manned by Society volunteers and students from Midland High School, Lee High School and Midland College, Cold Turkey Day at Midland Memorial Hospital and a parade down Wall Street with Midland Fire Department trucks. In addition, students at Midland College, Lee and Midland High Schools are joining in to invite smokers on their campuses to kick the habit for the day. Information has been distributed to many Midland restaurants by the Respiratory Therapy Club of Midland College.

Larry Hagman, the villainous J.R. Ewing of TV's "Dallas," returns for an encore as national Great American Smokeout chairman. Hagman, a reformed smoker, again will invite smokers to follow his example and quit. He'll offer details about obtaining the official "Larry Hagman Stop Smokin' Wrist Snappin' Red Rubber Band," a must-have for smokers determined not to light up on Nov. 18 and long after.

Joining Hagman as state Smokeout chairman for Texas is the famous oil fire fighter, Red Adair. He'll be inviting Texans in particular to stamp out fire of another kind — their cigarettes.

This year the Great American Smokeout will celebrate its sixth anniversary and all indications are for another immensely popular day. During last year's Smokeout three out of 10 cigarette smokers either cut down or cut out smoking for the day, according to a Gallup study. Close to five million actually quit for the day.

Although 54 million Americans continue to smoke, the number of people who have quit has increased over the years. Currently, there are 33.3 million ex-smokers. Reasons to join this group are abundant. Topping the list — smoking causes lung cancer. Presently lung cancer is the number one cancer killer of men, and may soon be the leading cancer killer of women. Cigarette smoking has been implicated in cancers of the mouth, esophagus, larynx, pharynx, bladder, kidney and pancreas.

CHICAGO (AP) — Cervical cancer may be related to a microorganism associated with a sexually transmitted disease, a new study says.

The study, in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, said researchers at the University of California-San Francisco found excessive levels of antibodies to chlamydia trachomatis among 383 women with cervical tumors.

It said that is one of the most common findings in women seeking treatment for gynecological or sexually transmitted diseases.

The levels of chlamydia antibody among the women studied were higher than for the antibody to genital herpes, now considered one of the major microbial causes of cervical cancer, the study said.

No need to baste a roasting chicken if you drape it with slices of bacon. It'll do the job itself in a very flavorful manner.

Couple celebrates anniversary

Thames and Florence Zoziarski were married Nov. 16, 1957, at the Church of the Immaculate Conception in Chicago. They lived in Chicago until this year, when they moved to Midland with their three children: Sandra, 19; John, 18; and Gerald, 16. Thames is employed by Roger's Ford. The family belongs to St. Anne's Parish.

Those who read nature's signs to forecast winter weather are alarmed by the number of brunette wooly bear caterpillars they see, in addition to the frenzy of squirrels in their quest for the perfect spot to bury their crunchy treasures. The signs aren't good, so it's time to get cars in shape for winter.

Procrastination might save a few dollars now, but that $25 towing bill may only be the first twinge of a repair bill headache. If your car overheats, you might wind up with a cracked engine block, and a new 8-cylinder engine can run $1,500 to $1,800. A used one from a totaled car in a junk yard will cost $800 to $1,200.

All repairs won't necessarily be that drastic or expensive, but beyond the obvious safety considerations of driving a car not prepared for winter rigors, it's simply cheaper to find and replace a bulging radiator hose before it ruptures than be stranded on the road watching the fluid pour out, being towed to a service center and missing half-a-day's work.

Automobile experts agree the place to start is with a general tune up, oil change and lubrication. At the same time, check all drive belts for frays, cracks and proper tension. The timing should also be checked and reset to conform with the specifications listed in your owner's manual.

Faulty batteries, damaged wires, cracked distributor caps and worn spark plugs can cause starting problems and sudden breakdowns, and should be checked periodically. Auto experts advise replacing your in-line filter, which filters out water from fuel. And if you're not using multi-viscosity motor oil, put in winter-weight oil and change the filter.

Batteries take a beating in cold weather. At zero degrees F., a battery produces about half as much power as one at 80 degrees. The AAA recommends that owners have a service station check the charge and fluid level. Some batteries are self-contained; for others, add distilled water. Battery terminals, posts and cable clamps should be clean and tight. Here's a home remedy: use a toothbrush and make a paste of baking soda and water to clean the terminals.

Advice varies on the right time to change anti-freeze. Some say to change it if it's rusty or more than a year old. Some experts advise owners to flush out radiators and put in new anti-freeze if it's more than two years old, since chemicals deteriorate. Unleaded fuel, which tends to run much hotter than leaded, causes moe rapid chemical break-down in the battery.

Reduced visibility in snow and rain, coupled with salt spray, makes new windshield wiper blades essential. If your blades streak the windshield, it's time to replace them. The washer reservoir should be flushed with clean water and filled with new washing solution that is freeze-resistant.

One system too often overlooked is the exhaust and heating system. Have a mechanic check for leaks to prevent carbon monoxide from getting into the passenger compartment. And motorists who are stuck in snow and running the engine should open the window, get out of the car and clear the exhaust pipe. Also check the heater and defrosters.

Midlander to present doll show

Mary Bess, former teacher and mother of two, has in recent years become an artist in the field of soft-sculpture dolls. On Nov. 20 she will present her First Annual "Real Children" Soft Sculpture Christmas Fantasy Doll Show at Dellwood Mall from 10 a.m. — 6 p.m.

Mall merchants will be joining in the show by designing displays, many using items from their stores.

Some of the scenes the dolls will be shown in include: "Babies," "First Birthday Party," "Indoor Play," "On a Trip," "Outdoor Play," "When I Grow Up...," "Every Girl's Dream," "Classroom," "Night Before Christmas," and "The Wedding."

"I have been asked many times, would I have made dolls if I was still teaching," Mrs. Bess said. "'No' was my answer, because as a teacher you almost devote 24-hours of your time (per day to teaching). But in life we never know when changes must be made."

Mrs. Bess gave up teaching when she became deaf. "Changing careers hasn't been easy," she said. "I've had to work a little extra harder to keep up with the other artists. When I became deaf it was a geat shock to me because I enjoyed working with the children at school and hated to give it up. Yet I kept praying for some way to be around kids indirectly. I've always enjoyed and loved dolls, but never knew the changes of life would lead to doll making."

"To adapt someone else's methods of sculpturing is somewhat difficult," Mrs. Bess said. "I'm not an artist, but I use my own imagination of what I want and how I want a smile on my dolls' faces. Common sense, good judgement is necessary. If you have a good idea stay with it."

"The purpose of the doll show is to share my fantasy and imagination and spread a little love in my soft sculpture dolls. There's a great and special feeling of sharing and giving a part of yourself to others through the making of dolls. Surprisingly, many adults are really like kids and enjoy the baby dolls in a fun way, too," she said.

Each doll is crafted by Mrs. Bess with care and skill, and a great amount of love. The dolls life-sized, and are dressed in regular baby clothes.

American chef given French award

By KENNETH GROSS
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — In the amazing kitchen that rose — poof! — like a souffle on the floor of the New York Coliseum, nothing coarse was permitted. The master chef was braising sweetbreads for les papillotes de foie gras aux truffes. He used only the finest ingredients: fresh butter and choice carrots and truffles flown in from France at supersonic speed.

A few days ago this same space on the fourth floor of the Coliseum was vacant, but now it bristled with state-of-the-art cooking hardware. There were high-heat ovens and full-length refrigerators and stainless-steel sinks, in addition to endless counter space. Young assistant chefs scurried back and forth like surgical nurses, slapping saucepans and spatulas into the hands of the master chef.

NO EXPENSE was spared for the occasion. The occasion being Chef Clark's demonstration of culinary skill. He was making his specialty, which translates to braised sweetbreads in the classic manner.

The sweetbreads would be the piece de resistance in Chef Patrick Clark's young career. Clark, 27, of Far Rockaway, was about to receive an award from the French government. He and four other American chefs were about to be named "ambassadeurs de l'art culinaire francais" — it was the first such award and Chef Clark was understandably tense.

"Cooking," said Clark modestly, "is my life."

Clark is the executive chef at The Odeon Restaurant on Lower Broadway. The award and the title are singular achievements for someone so young. But then Patrick Clark was born to cook. He is a second generation chef. His father was a chef before him.

"I think that I had the bug since I was a child," he said.

WHEN HE was 10, he would slip downstairs in his Canarsie home and, before anyone else was awake, he would cook breakfast. It was usually something typically American, like pancakes, he recalls. Or waffles. He made things that he liked to eat. Clark is not a tall man — a little over 5-feet-7, but he always had a big appetite.

In college, he recalls, he was a linebacker. He was more than 200 pounds and built like a linebacker. Today he is bigger. Today he weighs 250 pounds.

"It's the food," he explained. "You don't stop eating. When you cook, you don't sit down and have a meal, but you are always tasting and eating."

Clark is a graduate of the Hotel and Restaurant Department of New York City Technical College. It is where he met his wife. "She cooks at home. She makes roasts and chicken. She is not a cooking chef."

Of the five chefs honored by the French, all were men.

THERE IS, according to Clark, a logical reason why more women have not emerged as important chefs in the restaurant field.

"It is very hard work," he says. "There is a lot of heavy lifting. It's not an easy job."

But, he says, it is changing. Women now represent 40 percent of the class at the New York Technical College. Prejudice is not an alien topic to Clark. Clark is sensitive to the prejudices of people in the gourmet cooking field.

"As a black I have had to endure some of it, you know. When they hear that I speak French, they assume that I am from one of the islands. Although, as you can hear, I am from Brooklyn. Native born."

But in cooking, the proof, as they say, is in the pudding. The fact that he has talent makes all other considerations irrelevant. "This is not a field where people care a great deal about such things as prejudice," he says. "Not after they get to know you. They only care if you can produce. And I work very hard at what I do."

THERE ARE advantages in the total immersion in cooking. For one thing, Clark believes that he has demonstrated his talent and has therefor risen above any other categorical label. He is, he believes, a talented chef and will one day be recognized — as he says in the typical gourmet-style measurement — as the greatest chef in America.

"First, you need a great repertoire," he says. "You must keep learning and growing. You are totally dedicated and obsessive. Look at me. I spend 60 to 70 hours a week in my kitchen. So you must have variety and you must have the dedication and you must also have the recognition. I suppose that means publicity."

The days are long in the kitchen of The Odeon. Others have time for meals, but Clark has to plan menus and cost out meals and instruct the buyers. He has to prepare the sauces. "I make all the sauces," he says. "And the sauces take time."

DURING the long days, he will sometimes do something that may seem a bit odd. He may bring in a package of McDonald's hamburgers and milkshakes. This has several beneficial effects. First it amuses the assistant chefs.

"And," says Clark, "I like it."

Americans are, after all, accustomed to fast food.

On the day of his award by the French government, Ciark was slicing and sauteeing; he was wrapping and blending. And the subtle odor of what he was doing at the newly installed stove rose over the temporary walls of the demonstration kitchen. It met the incoming smell of hot dogs cooking on the grill just outside.

And the customers at the snack bar wondered what that funny odor was coming from the demonstration kitchen.

CRUNCH COOKIES

¾ cup all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon baking soda
1½ cups quick oats
½ of a ¼-pound stick (⅛ cup) butter, at room temperature or cut into thin pats
½ cup granulated sugar
½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
¼ cup super chunk peanut butter
1 large egg

On wax paper or in a bowl thoroughly stir together flour and soda; stir in oats. In a medium bowl with an electric beater, cream butter, sugars and vanilla; beat in peanut butter, then egg until blended. With a wooden spoon, gradually stir in flour mixture. Drop by level tablespoonfuls, 2 inches apart, onto ungreased cookie sheets; flatten with fork tines to 2½ inches in diameter; round edges with your fingers. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until browned — 12 to 14 minutes. With a wide metal spatula remove to a wire rack to cool. Store in a tightly covered container. Makes about 2 dozen.

Emotions Anonymous: Help for people in need

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Where do you go when you have an emotional problem you can't shake? What happens when you can't seem to get over a relationship breaking up? Or problems with other family members? Where can you find help dealing with loneliness or fear or anxiety? Emotions Anonymous might be the answer.

Emotions Anonymous is a 12-step program, based on the 12 suggested steps of Alcoholics Anonymous, that have been adapted for use by people with emotional problems. The program is a way of helping to achieve and maintain emotional health. In Midland, Emotions Anonymous meets each Tuesday evening at 7 p.m. at Hope Lutheran Church.

Because EA is an anonymous program, those attending go by first names only.

HAROLD HAS BEEN attending EA for a little over three years. "I went to Emotions Anonymous because I lost my wife on March 29, 1979. We had been married a little less than two years. I missed her terribly and was very resentful that she was taken from me," he said.

"It wasn't until I went to EA that I was able to switch the thing from negative to positive. I started being thankful for what I had. It isn't a matter of forgetting loved ones, it's a matter of acceptance — that that's the way it's going to be," Harold said.

Acceptace is a large part of EA, according to Harold. "The ones in EA who have the most problems are the ones who can't accept and face the fact that it's God's will."

Even though EA is not a religious program, it is a spiritual program, based on trust in a "Power greater than ourselves," which participants may or may not choose to call God. "There are some people who pride themselves on being not religious all their lives, then something happens and they get in a bind, and all they have to fall back on is themselves," Harold said. "We're not that good at 'physician, heal thyself.' I think everybody has the right to worship in their own way. I don't think we ever really realize how religion permeates life until we come to a crisis like death. Then if we don't have anything to fall back on we are in trouble."

ALTHOUGH HAROLD has recovered from his initial grief, he continues to attend EA meetings. "I've stayed because not so much that I'm in need of the group's help, but maybe my experience will help somebody else," he said.

The meetings are basically conducted as "rap sessions" in which everyone gets a chance to talk. "It's a very relaxed thing," Harold said. "We sit around and talk. We also have the 12 steps and we do study them. I have found the book (EA's publication) comes in handy to study in the early morning because that's when doubts come out."

EA is "mainly a support group," he added. "It's main value is it lets you realize you're not the only one in the world who's depressed or feels bad about certain things."

Harold's grief at his wife's sudden, unexpected death was extremely difficult for him to bear. "When I lost my wife, I felt like the world had come to an end," he said. Approximately one month after she died, he found EA.

"With EA, as I see it, a whole lot of it is nobody can really help you, you have to do it yourself," Harold said.

PEOPLE DEALING with loss of various kinds can be helped by EA, he said — "loss of a partner through divorce or death, lack of communication in a divorce situation — if we'd talk things over in a reasonably intelligent fashion, we could solve problems. I think everyone in there suffered loss, and all wonder 'How much of this is my fault?'"

EA is based on a 12-step program of help and recovery, but the program is more than that. "I think as far as I can see, EA is more of an empathy group," said Harold. "It gives you someplace to go and unload your problems to people who understand what you're going through. We never attempt to advise people, just tell them what happened in our case."

"I very much believe in self-help, that also helps other people," he said. "Anytime you can help someone else, that helps you. If I can help just one person, it's worth the time."

PHIL IS ANOTHER member of Emotions anonymous, and has been attending meetings for about three years.

"I have real defensive habits," he said. "I would keep people away and then would get lonely. I've improved quite a bit. The 12 steps are the key. The program helps anyone who Step One applies to — those who are powerless over emotions. Marital problems and death have been the biggest ones."

The 12 steps of EA have been adapted for use by those with emotional problems from the 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous, with the permission of AA. Step One is "We admitted we were powerless over our emotions — that our lives had become unmanageable."

Phil described the EA program as "awfully flexible." He said, "It boils down to when you are making the same mistake for so long that the alternatives start looking more ominous than the mistakes, that you get ready to change."

"Our worse problems are our own defenses," he said. "Your attitude will cause you problems. Most people...are not willing to come until they are convinced every other avenue is impossible. It's not more difficult than going on the way they had been most of the time. Most people are pretty ready for something to be different, even if it does have to be them."

Changing yourself can be difficult at times, even though it might be necessary. "We often have more trouble changing ourselves if we're not in an emergency state," Phil said. "We (in EA) have the care of the people in the group coming constantly and steadily the whole time. I can't imagine a time in my life when this would not have been of help to me. It's not something that has to be a lifestyle, but a lot of people choose it to be that way."

PHIL STRESSED the benefits of group interaction: "It's more beneficial to the wallet. And you can get more feedback (from a group of people who understand what yore going through.) You can't call up someone to take care of your problems — you've got to be capable of taking care of it yourself. It's your life and it shouldn't be so far beyond you that you have to bring in specialists — you are your own specialist. If I had $65 an hour or so I might enjoy going to a one-on-one situation, but it doesn't seem quite as practical. Whatever works is what somebody needs, but the group is helpful."

He described the group as a "network — finding people with the same problems and using their experiences."

To those who might have difficulty relating to the spiritualness of the program, Phil said, "I have problems relating to Christianity, but that hasn't stopped me from getting help from the program. People who reach that point are ready for some kind of spiritual value. It's hard to put a meaning to what they mean by 'spiritual' because it emcompasses such a lot of beliefs. Some might say it's not spiritual because it (the program) is awfully elastic in some ways."

"Often people don't know much about the program when they come in," Phil said, "and the first couple of things they hear are real practical, and that makes as much an impression as the spiritual part."

THE REV. DAVID BAKER, pastor of Hope Lutheran Church, serves as the facilitator of Emotions Anonymous in Midland. The Rev. Elmer Burrall, pastor of Hope Lutheran before Rev. Baker, originally began EA in Midland, but the group disbanded when he left. Rev. Baker organized the present EA group about six years ago.

He said the average size group at meetings is about 12. "This is a small-group-type program. It provides support, and opportunity to talk is now facilitated when one is in a small group."

"The group serves people with relational kinds of emotional problems — grief, dealing with incomplete relationships with their folks, unhappy marriages, divorce, etc. I see it as a group of fellow supporters. It is a self-help group of persons seeking emotional stability through a 12-step program of recovery, mutual sharing and discussion, filmstrips and other teaching devices, all within the framework of a supporting, caring group of fellow sufferers," said Rev. Baker.

Emotions Anonymous is available free of charge, "although we do have a voluntary offering at the end of the meetings," he said.

Rev. Baker, who is in a Ph.D. program at Texas Tech University and has had experience in counseling in Houston before coming to Midland, said, "I thought the group would be a neat oppportunity to minister to a group of people." He described himself as the group's "participant-leader."

"Many people who come to the group are dealing with interpersonal problems — relationships or a lack of relationships," Rev. Baker said. "The program is designed to be an on-going program. I think a few of the people need an on-going program; the majority of people come to the sessions, get over a crisis in their lives, and find they no longer need the weekly support. Most come and benefit. After a period of time they move past the pain and have no more need of the group."

"THE BIGGEST PART of the program is the emotional support the group gives. The group tends to be more generous than it needs to be," he said, adding that advice given by the group is a "gesture of love."

Rev. Baker is very enthusiastic about EA and the program in Midland. "We've got a real neat group," he said. "It's an exciting kind of ministry for me to see people grow."

He does, however, stress that EA would probably not be very helpful to those with acute emotional illnesses. "It's not really designed to handle acute things, as a support in the months that follow, because maybe the members are also very fragile, hurting people, and may not be able to cope with it (severe problems)."

"The strengths of the members vary from month to month as to what they can handle. It is not a confrontational program," Rev. Baker said. "(The program) gives people an opportunity to move slowly, to get some support, to cope with pain. It provides a place where people can just be and get some support without needing to change rapidly or gain rapid growth — a place where they can be, and be accepted and loved as they are. Acceptance of the group is about 80 percent of the program."

Rev. Baker is very proud of the fact that EA is "one of the long-standing ministries in the congregation." He is also very proud of the fact that a Midland chapter of Narcotics Anonymous is being organized and will also be holding its meetings at Hope Lutheran Church.

Emotions Anonymous may be the answer for many people who are hurting and need some support in overcoming their pain.

Poison risk from inhaling powder

CHICAGO (AP) — Researchers say diaper changing can sometimes present the risk of accidental poisoning for infants, particularly from inhaling or swallowing powder.

A study in today's Jornal of the American Medical Association showed that 138 — or 2.1 percent — of 6,750 poison exposures in children three years or younger occurred during diaper changing.

The study, conducted at the Massachusetts Poison Control System, said almost half of the poisonings involved powders, and ointments and creams were related to more than 25 percent of the others.

None of the poisoned children had to be hospitalized, researchers said. Symptoms include coughing, wheezing, choking, vomiting and shortness of breath.

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Entrepreneur I. David Porras: some say the "I" stands for incredible, or for "I am." But it can just as easily stand for intelligence and intestinal fortitude.

"We operate on gut feelings. Behold the turtle — he never moves unless he sticks his neck out," says Porras. "Or, if you want, 'no guts, no glory.'"

He says he might as well get involved with many major projects because it's no fun being dull.

The man has helped change the landscape of north Midland, and the concept of where office buildings should be, with eight black and white office buildings at One Petroleum Center, at the corner of Wadley and North "A" Street. He recently sold the entire complex to Integrated Resources, a New York real estate investment firm, for $62 million.

"I had no intention of selling it at all, but they made me an offer I couldn't refuse," he says with a hearty laugh.

Still, his new six-story office building is under construction on the northern edge of the complex, with two other similar buildings planned in 1983. In addition, two are nearing completion in Odessa.

PORRAS IS NOW IN the middle of work on his biggest project ever.First Energy Square, a 37-story office tower, 12-story parking garage, and possible adjoining hotel, will occupy three blocks downtown, starting at the corner of Big Spring and Missouri Streets and extending south to Front Street.

Not content with just major commercial developments, Porras is looking forward to the day he can retire on an East Texas ranch and "take it easy" — managing his three-year old business, Pyramid Land & Cattle Company. He has one of the premier Brangus herds in the state and a new embryo transplant center where two full-time veterinarians serve other breeders as well.

And, he still dabbles from time to time in one of his first loves, interior design and space planning for private homes and commercial space, along with four wholesale antique businesses in Dallas.

Porras surrounds himself with European paintings, sculpture, bronzes and Ming Dynasty vases from the 14th century. He says he hates the oriental look in decorating, per se, but loves individual pieces used with other types of art and furniture.

All Porras does reflects his love for art — he even designed the first drafts for advertising for One Petroleum Center and his Brangus operation. It's an interest he comes by naturally.

"I WAS ALWAYS INTERESTED in art and antiques. My mother was a decorator, and some of my other relatives are in the decorating business. I guess I just fell into it, so to speak."

He attended private schools in his native Dallas, and elsewhere, and attended Texas Tech University as an art major. He also studied in Spain.

Porras started in Midland about 20 years ago by working at Los Patios, a landscape company, as a salesman. He followed that with four months at Sears on the store's interior decorating staff.

"I decided I didn't like that much. At the time, there were about 8,000 empty houses in Midland that had been repossessed by the FHA, and it was costing them $1,000 a month in vandalism. It had gotten to the point that people were stealing the copper tubing from the plumbing systems, the water heaters and the fixtures. So, the government put the houses up for sale."

Porras saw an opportunity and started buying houses, one by one. He fixed the yards and painted the houses, furnished them, and rented them for $125 to $150 a month.

That was back in the good ole' days when interest rates were at 6 1/2 percent, he says with a laugh.

"I BOUGHT ONE FOR $3,500, a 30-year loan, $78 down, and monthly payments of $28," Porras recalled.

Within three years, Porras had 51 rent houses, most located in the neighborhoods around the Museum of the Southwest. Someone asked him to decorate their home, and by word of mouth, his decorating business grew.

He started selling the rent houses in the 1970s, because the decorating business didn't leave him much time to oversee their upkeep.

"I got into the building business by driving around, and it dawned on me that we needed some office space north of town because of the parking problem downtown. It's been very challenging, but enjoyable. It's gratifying to me to be able to have built these eight buildings at One Petroleum Center.

"You know, people said I wouldn't build two; that I was just 'that dumb decorator.' But we have eight."

Porras says First Energy Square is about three months behind schedule due to zoning problems and on-going negotiations with the city concerning vacated alleys, and other factors, but the project is moving forward. Completion is set for late 1984.

HE SAYS FINANCING for the $97 million project is no problem, but getting financing with terms he is comfortable with is tricky.

"With a project of this size, and with the money we already have invested in it, we have to build the building. It's either build it or go wash dishes. There's no inbetween."

He says he has been offered a great deal of money for the site, but doesn't intend to sell.

There are a lot of loose ends to tie up, however. "Ninety-nine percent of all the utilities that serve south Midland run down the alley, north to south." The main sewer, power and water lines, and the major telephone cable for area code 915 service, all happen to run between two of the blocks.

In the interim, Porras is temporarily solving the downtown parking problem. He paved the block where the Sheraton Inn used to be, making space for 635 cars.

"We ran the numbers on it and we determined it would pay for itself in three months. Rather than let the land sit idle, we decided it would be to our advantage to have it paved and striped. We're only leasing it on a month-to-month basis."

OF 620,000 SQUARE FEET in the proposed building, 385,000 is already pre-leased, Porras says. He prefers a mix of large and small tenants, rather than putting all his eggs into one basket.

Porras believes Midland's next boom will start in mid-1983 and continue through 1986, peaking in late 1984. He bases that on information from banks, insurance company studies, and his own gut feelings.

Three years ago, Porras determined that when he retires, he wants to live on a ranch, much as he did as a child. His grandfather owned a ranch north of Dallas. He is excited about the possibilities for his Brangus operation in East Texas and the future of embryonic transplants.

"We are going to sell and implant embryoes. We have an extensive laboratory facility. We have made contacts in Europe, Africa, the Middle and Far East, to sell to third world countries. We want to implant their present stock and upgrade their beef production."

PORRAS' RANCHING GROUP has purchased interests in most of the major champion bulls in the country, and now boasts one of the top breeding facilities. The 685-head herd lives on a special diet in a controlled environment.

He doesn't pursue oil and gas, since he wants to stick to what he knows best, although he admits with a grin that there are two "respectable" gas wells on the ranch.

Porras has accomplished a lot, and admits to ambition. "There are so many things to buy, and I see so much I want. What motivates me is trying to do something a little bit better than it has been done before. But, I'm not a perfectionist.

"I am a very organized person; I don't like loose ends. I want to know what everybody is doing and where everything is."

He says he has no real personal life; everything is tied to business. "I used to regret that, but I've gotten used to it."

Porras says "99 percent of the people are richer than I am. I'm just the poor new kid on the block. I'm doing the best I can to try to make a living."

Federal judge refuses to allow Yates project to resume

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A federal judge refused to allow Yates Petroleum Corp. to resume drilling a natural gas well in the Salt Creek Wilderness Friday — a decision the company says could cost it up to $10,000 a day.

U.S. District Judge Juan Burciaga denied a company request to lift the order he issued earlier this week to stop the drilling and set a hearing for Nov. 18 to determine whether the drilling ban would be made permanent.

He said he wasn't insensitive to the hardship his ruling placed on the Artesia firm, but said the risks had been "willingly accepted" and the losses were "self-induced" because the firm began drilling without federal permission.

"By applying, the defendant acknowledged they had to have permits," Burciaga said. "They were explicitly informed the application ... would not be processed. They nonetheless undertook to go into the area."

The federal government owns the surface in the wilderness area near Roswell, but the state holds the mineral rights. Yates Petroleum has a state lease and state permission to drill for oil and gas on the land.

Attorney Chad Dickerson of Artesia, representing the petroleum company, said Yates had done its best to comply with federal and state regulations but had gone ahead with the drilling because it was faced with the loss of a potentially valuable oil and gas lease.

Dickerson said the controversy over the drilling has been surrounded by an air of hysteria and misstatements by the media and Friday was the company's first opportunity to present its case.

The drilling has been the subject of protests by two environmental groups. Members of a group called Earth First blockaded the road to the well only hours before the restraining order was issued Wednesday.

On Friday, about 20 protesters picketed outside the courthouse, saying they would return to the wilderness area if Burciaga allowed the drilling to resume.

Michael Slater, operations manager for Yates Petroleum, said the company had planned to drill a hole 4,100 feet deep and had reached a depth of 2,783 when Burciaga issued the temporary restraining order Wednesday.

He said Yates has spent nearly $100,000 on the project so far, and said it would cost the company up to $10,000 a day until the question is resolved on Nov. 18.

Slater also said a partially completed well hole deteriorates, and said his drillers might have to start over if the company receives permission to resume drilling later.

He said the company would be able to limit its losses if allowed to finish and cap the hole and then wait for a resolution of the state-federal legal dispute.

Kathy Colbert, who acquires leases and oversees compliance with lease terms for the company, said she began seeking state and federal permits for access and drilling last summer.

Under terms of the 10-year lease, Yates would have lost its rights had it not begun drilling by midnight Nov. 1. The company received a state drilling permit in September.

The company had applied for a federal permit as well, but a letter from government attorneys on Oct. 25 said permit applications were not being processed because of a temporary congressional appropriations act.

The letter said, however, that the government had "no legal objection" to the drilling.

Ms. Colbert said that because the drilling permit was delayed, federal permits for access to the site also were withheld by the Fish and Wildlife Service and Bureau of Land Management.

Yates built a road and began drilling because it was faced with losing the lease and because "there was nothing to indicate the applications wouldn't be approved," she said.

"All indications were that they were being processed and that there would be no problem."

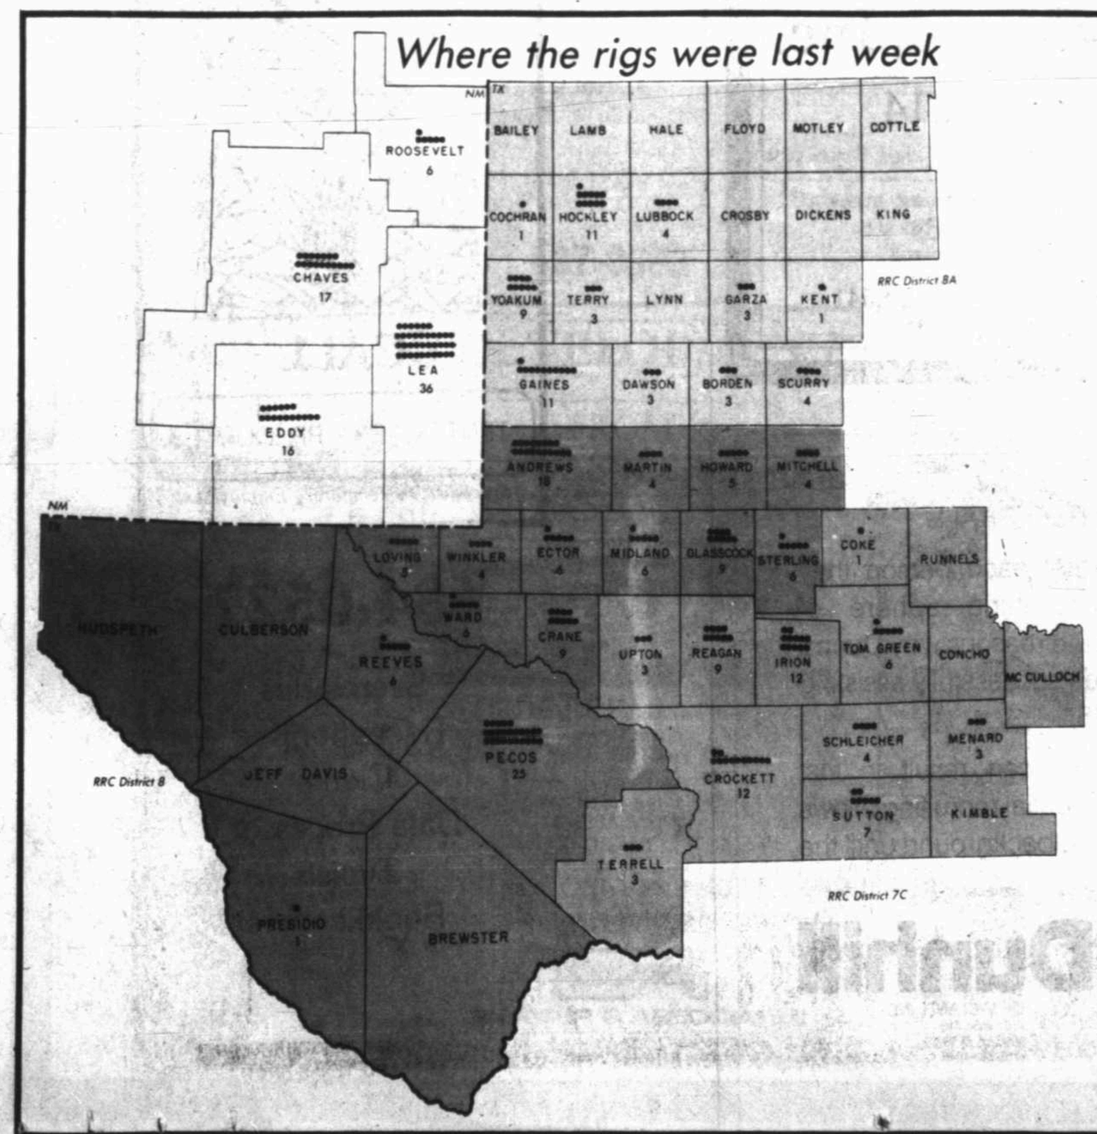

When asked whether he would appeal, Dickerson said he had no comment.

U.S. Attorney William Lutz pointed out Yates had made no move to begin exploration until the last two months of the ten-year lease.

But Director Ray Graham of the state Oil and Gas Division said that was common in the industry.

Slater said another firm had sunk a productive well less than one mile away, but outside the wilderness, and said that prompted Yates to proceed.

Where the rigs were last week

Rig count tops 300

The Permian Basin rig count has climbed from the trough this week and broken the magical 300 barrier for the first time since mid-June. The count is up to 302 for the counties shown on our map, as reported by Reed Rock Bit Company.

A week ago it was 286; a month ago it was also 286. Last year at this time, thec count was 484.

Roosevelt County gained five additional rigs in the past week. Three more rigs moved into Mitchell County. Chaves, Garza, Irion, Schleicher, and Tom Green gained two each.

The Texas rig count is also up, from 817 reported Nov. 1, to 845 reported by Nov. 8, according to the International Association of Drilling Contractors. It gets its weekly data from Hughes Tool Company. A year ago the Lone Star State had 1,433 rigs making hole.

Other states showed gains this week, too. Louisiana gained one rig, up to 276. Wyoming rose from 106 to 115. In New Mexico, there were 84 rigs, up from 78 last week.

The count in Alaska, Arkansas, and Michigan remained the same. The count in Oklahoma has rested at 336 for the last two weeks.

The total United States tally was 2,456, compared to 2,413 a week ago, and 2,418 a month ago. Last year at this time, the count was 4,437.

Hearst Feature Service

The colossal 4,800-mile Canadian natural gas pipeline is ready to be built. But it is not the environmentalists who are holding up the engineers. This time it's the bankers.

If financial obstacles now delaying the project can be overcome, an estimated two billion cubic feet of gas will flow into the underground pipeline each day, enough to replace 400,000 barrels of imported oil.

But a special report in the December issue of Science Digest reveals that the pipeline's fate lies in the hands of bankers and other investors who are now judging whether the project is a financial risk worth taking. Even environmentalists are satisfied the project would not cause unreasonable harm.

Known as the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation System, the line will run from Alaska's northern Prudhoe Bay to Fairbanks and then to Calgary, Alberta, near the U.S. border. From there the pipeline splits one leg to San Francisco, the other to Chicago.

It is a grandiose plan with an equally grandiose price tag -- $50 million by some estimates. The financing is being arranged by a partnership of oil giants such as Exxon, ARCO and Sohio, along with American and Canadian pipeline companies.

Congress -- with aggressive energy industry lobbying -- approved resolutions that permit the partners to bill consumers of natural gas in about 36 states for some construction even before the project is completed. And the law added that if the project is abandoned, the partnership won't have to repay consumers.

"The companies say that since the public will benefit from the reduction in oil imports the Alaskan gas will bring, it should shoulder some of the risk of building the line," reports Science Digest.

Consumer activists -- who lost battles on Capitol Hill on the issue -- called the project an enormous financial boondoggle.

But even with the help of Congress, the partnership is having trouble raising money to finance construction. High interest rates and the 1981-82 oil glut have already postponed construction of the toughest and costliest segments of the system until 1984. Nevertheless, pipeline officials remain confident of the project's eventual completion.

People leasing helps solve personnel and tax problems

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Business people have long recognized the tax and administrative advantages of leasing equipment rather than expending capital for it.

A service fairly new in the country, and unique in the Permian Basin, is now offering a new wrinkle on the theme — leasing employees.

"It sounds harsh, but it's not," said Bill Short, manager of People Management Company, which opened here four weeks ago. "It's a new concept, and the public's initial reaction is that they want an awareness of it."

People Management Company provides long term, permanent contract employees to small businesses, primarily to professionals such as doctors, lawyers, accountants and small independent oil and gas offices which employ perhaps a dozen people or less.

In essence, PMC becomes the personnel/payroll/accounting department for a business subscriber, relieving him of that time-consuming task.

PMC assumes all duties and responsibilities of managing employees for the business which suscribes to its services — payroll, federal payroll tax deposits, labor law compliance and employee counseling.

For employees, PMC provides a complete medical and life insurance package and retirement plan, which an employee is eligible for immediately, with a 100 percent vested interest.

"We get employees by getting subscribers," Short explained. "We can go in, and where one day an employee is working for a doctor, for example, the next day he is working for us. It's a paper transfer." He compared the arrangement to a triangle between PMC, an employee and a subscriber. PMC hires and pays the employee, who then works for the subscriber, who pays a fee to PMC.

The employee remains under day-to-day direction of the subscriber. "While I may have a great deal of interchange with some subscribers, I may have none with another," he added.

Short is quick to point out that PMC is not a personnel placement agency or temporary help service, and is not in competition with those type firms.

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA), passed in August, paved the way for the new concept by providing certain tax incentives to small businesses which lease their employees.

TEFRA also cleared up some tax questions regarding leased employees, according to Alan B. Shouse, public accountant and PMC's tax consultant.

"Anybody who was leasing employees before this had a cloud walking around over their head, because at any time, the IRS could get them. That was why you didn't see long term employee leasing."

The act also affects pension plans offered to employees. Pension benefits are one of the services PMC provides its subscribers. Before the act, pension planners could get around providing some benefits to their employees, Shouse added.

"Now, Congress has said you have to provide the same benefits to your employees that you do for yourself, so the likelihood of discrimination is less."

This is good news for nurses, secretaries and others who would like better benefits and pensions, but who don't want to jump ship and seek employment in a larger company to get them.

But, it can be a headache for an employer to find cost-effective group insurance and pension plans for only two or three people.

"Large offices have a broad range of benefit plans," Short said. "Ours is quite useful to the small office, where we can offer group life insurance, for example, at a reasonable cost.

When handling the benefit package is shifted to PMC, the subscriber company becomes more flexible in planning retirement benefits for the owner and his key employees. Other benefits, such as medical reimbursement plans, are also more feasible.

PMC will be able to get good rates because Short hopes to eventually employ hundreds, maybe thousands, of people. He said more than 70 percent of the businesses in Midland have five employees or less, "so it's really impractical for them to provide all the benefits."

A similar people leasing company in a California town of 25,000 has 700 employees today. "We're talking about the biggest employer in town," he said. "He has 50 or 60 subscribers since he began operations." The manager of that operation is consulting with PMC, he added.

When leasing employees, it's an arm's length arrangement where the subscriber doesn't own an interest in PMC, but merely pays a monthly fee to cover the costs of the employees.

PMC will interview, hire and fire employees, and mediate inter-office disputes or personality conflicts if the subscriber desires, Short said.

If the subscriber should retire or quit business, PMC will place his employees in another of its subscriber companies.

"On paper, these people are employees of PMC," Short explained, "but in reality, they are still under the control of the subscriber (as far as working hours and duties are concerned)."

Long-distance phone services cut costs

By S.J. DIAMOND and
NANCY YOSHIHARA
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post
News Service

A Minneapolis company with $15,000 a month in telephone bills found it could cut its bills 48 percent to $7,800 by getting two direct-access lines to Chicago, three MCI lines and three Bell WATS lines. A Cleveland family with regular $150 a month telephone bills from calling their children at college in Ann Arbor, Mich., could switch to Combined Network's ALLNET and save 49 percent or $74 a month.

MCI? ALLNET? Who are those masked men?

Well, they are two of a growing number of long-distance phone service competitors of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the firm known to most of us as "The Telephone Company."

For a long time AT&T operated "without competition,"according to its ads, therefore offering nothing more exotic than basic, "dependable service." But that was a different day and a different market.

When AT&T was alone in the field, it could be kind of "loose in marketing," says Lynn Coker, AT&T's brand manager for telemarketing. In the last few years, however, he says, AT&T has "had to sell the socks off" its products and services — WATS lines, 800 numbers, 900 numbers, and all kinds of equipment — because there are now new companies out there selling the socks off their telephone services.

Nowhere is this new competition more evident than in long-distance services, of which there are many now, much to the delight and utter confusion of the nation's consumers. Some of the long-distance service companies are so new it's almost impossible to keep up with them, and weighing their relative merits is not easy.

"They may charge by the minute, or by the mile, or maybe by the call, whatever the time or mileage," says Alexander Auerbach, publisher of Hollywood-based Box Office magazine, which this year cut its monthly telephone costs by 30 percent to 50 percent using these services.

Using alternative long-distance telephone services can be as complex as choosing them, says Robert Self, an economist in New York whose own effort to find the best system or combination of systems for his office led him to write "Long Distance For less,"(Telecom Library) a reference book on the new industry for businesses wanting to cut costs.

"In some cases," he says, "you dial a local number as your access code, then their computer gives you a second dial tone and you dial the five-or eight-digit code that identifies your account, then finally you dial the 10-digit long distance number."

Long distance was not always like this. When AT&T had 100 percent of the business (instead of its current 96 percnet or 97 percent), long distance was a simple thing, rates were set by time of day and amount of operator assistance.

Starting in the mid-1970s, however, AT&T's defacto monopoly on telephone services began to unravel.

MCI Communications Corp. was largely responsible for precipitating the change. In 1969, the Washington D.C.-based company received approval from the Federal Communications Commission to build a microwave communications system between St. Louis and Chicago to transmit long-distance telephone calls.

Thereafter, other common carriers similar to MCI — principally Sprint, ITT and Western Union — fueled competition by building their own networks using microwave and satellite systems.

Subsequent court decisions providing access to AT&T lines has given rise to yet a third category of operators who buy services from both AT&T and other common carriers, such as Sprint, and sell them to businesses and consumers. These providers are know as resellers.

"Resellers are your home town long distance companies, the K marts of long distance," Self says. "They take other people's circuits and sell them as their own house brands."

David A. Castillo, president of the two-year-old Association of Long Distance Telephone Companies, estimates that about 150 of the 250 resellers licensed by the FCC are now in operation. The government agency, however, no longer requires resellers to be licensed, so it is unclear how many more are operating.

In 1981, MCI, Sprint and their ilk had taken about 2 percent of the long-distance market. Along with the resellers, of which U.S. Telephone Communications of Dallas is the largest, alternative long-distance services are expected to at least double that share to 4 percent of the approximate $40 billion spent on long-distance telephone calls this year. With the long-distance market pegged to grow at a 10 percent annual rate, competition is expected to heat up even more.

Revenues in the third quarter of 1982, ended Sept. 30, declined 30 percent from the same period a year ago, and 16 percent from the second quarter of this year, after holding firm in the first six months of the year. Reduced drilling rig utilization and lower contract rates, together with a decline in oilfield equipment sales, accounted for the sharp drop. This resulted in a net loss of $304,445, or 7 cents a share for the quarter.

For the nine months through Sept. 30, the company earned $1,599,369, or 34 cents a share on consolidated revenues of $33,119,946.

Contract drilling revenues were down 42 percent in the quarter. Industrial equipment sales were down by 30 percent in the quarter from last year's levels. Oil and gas sales are ahead by 17 percent for the nine months compared to the 9-month period a year ago.

The company has rescinded its preliminary agreement to purchase Merit Drilling in order to more closely concentrate on its existing contract drilling base.

The redirection of the company's resources from real estate activities to oil and gas generated incremental profit in the quarter through sale of a 20 percent interest in the Haystack Apartments in Midland.

ADOBE OIL & GAS CORP.
(AMEX: AOI)

The company has announced record revenues, net earnings and earnings per share for the nine month period ended Sept. 30, 1982, when compared to the same period a year ago. Total net earnings for the nine months were $35,297,000, or $2.19 a share, including extraordinary earnings of $17,807,000, or $1.12 a share, as a gain on the sale of the company's North Sea interests. Total operating revenues for the period were $154,944,000, compared with $133,317,000 for the same nine months a year ago.

Third quarter net earnings were $5,761,000 or 35 cents a share, versus $6,060,000 or 37 cents a share in the like 1981 period. Operating revenues for the quarter were $51,302,000 compared to $48,213,000 in the 1981 quarter.

The company has reported its reserve figures for its producing properties. Recoverable reserves were put at 355,560 barrels of oil having an undiscounted value of $7.1 million, calculated at today's oil prices.

The company's producing properties consist of interests in 10 wells — six in Hockley County, two in Yoakum, and two in Lea County, New Mexico.

Joe M. L. Melton, president, said the company has participated in the drilling of 11 wells so far in 1982. Nine were deemed productive.

The company is currently drilling a 7,800-foot exploratory well, the Ellwood No. 1, on a 6,548-acre farmout from Amoco production Company in Mitchell County, to test the Ellenburger formation.

Melton Drilling & Exploration will have a 12.5 percent working interest, carried to the casing point. The company will have the right of first refusal on all future contract drilling on the farmout.

Complexity, variety of pension plans growing

By THOMAS W. LIPPMAN
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The number of American workers who can expect to receive pensions from their employers when they retire is rising dramatically, and the overall financial status of the nation's elderly is also improving, according to recent studies of retirement benefits.

But the complexity and variety of pension plans and retirement programs is also increasing, requiring many of today's workers to make difficult and sometimes risky choices that will determine their resources 20 or 30 years into the future.

A combination of new laws, tax rules, inflation and recessionary pressures on business is leading many corporations — large and small — to revise their pension programs, often transferring the long-term risk from themselves to the workers. As a result, pension experts are urging workers to begin their retirement planning early, and to acquire a thorough understanding of the options they have and the resources they can expect to command when they reach retirement age.

"A happy and satisfying retirement requires an adjustment period that is greatly aided by thoughtful, effective planning in earlier working years," the Employee Benefit Research Institute (EBRI) said. "Ideally, one should begin planning for retirement between age 30 and 40," a time when many workers find their resources fully obligated by the costs of raising children and buying a house, and when retirement seems remote.

In 1940, only 4.1 million workers (14.6 percent of the private, non-farm work force) were covered by pension plans. In 1980, 35.8 million (48.1 percent of the private work force) were covered. According to a new study conducted by ICF Inc. of Washington for the American Council on Life Insurance, about 85 percent of all married couples of retirement age and 66 percent of all married individuals can expect to receive some employer-paid retirement benefits by the year 2004.

Many of those benefits are insured, up to about $16,000 a year, by the federally chartered Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., which protects pensions the way the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. protects bank accounts.

Furthermore, according to EBRI, despite fears about the future of the Social Security program, "during the last 20 years, the elderly's financial status has improved substantially. Today those who are over age 65 receive income from more sources and have greater financial independence than previous generations. Expansion of public and private retirement income and benefit programs has increased the proportion of those receiving retirement benefits as well as the average benefit amount."

Dallas Salisbury, executive director of EBRI, said the overall resources available at retirement now include more than monthly cash income and that these resources should be considered in assessing retirement prospects. Widespread price discounts and tax breaks for the elderly, mortgage-free home ownership, increased personal assets, and supplemental post-retirement health insurance should all be included in calculating retirement resources, he said.

The lingering recession has induced many corporations, especially smaller ones, to terminate their pension plans, leaving their workers substantially dependent on Social Security and personal savings upon retirement.

But the most dramatic change in the retirement income structure taking place today, pension experts say, is a growing trend among corporations to shift from what is known as a defined-benefit pension program to a defined-contribution plan. This means the employer, instead of being committed to paying a fixed benefit to future retirees, such as $12 a month per year of service, is committed only to making contributions of an unspecified amount to a retirement fund each month..

She said the defined benefit system would not immediately replace the majority of the fixed-benefit plans now in place at large corporations, but probably would command an increasing share of new employer contributions, both in existing plans and in new ones. Several major corporations, including GAF Corp., A&P, Triangle Industries, and Harper & Row Inc., have already switched over or announced plans to switch over to defined-contribution programs.

According to Koralik, Salisbury and other experts, individual workers need to be aware that this is a fundamental shift in their retirement benefits, not just an exercise in corporate accounting. It can have advantages and disadvantages for both employer and worker, they said.

For the corporation, it may reduce costs and eliminates any problem of unfunded pension liability on the balance sheet because by definition the contributions to the fund are equal to the liability. But it may also discourage older workers from retiring because of the uncertainty about benefit levels.

For the worker, defined-contribution plans usually offer earlier vesting and increased portability, making them attractive for those who expect to change jobs often. Also, the employee doesn't have to worry about losing his pension money if his company goes bankrupt because the contribution made to his account is in his name and beyond the reach of corporate creditors. At the bankrupt Braniff International Airlines, for example, the pensions of most rank and file workers are protected by federal insurance. But senior executives have had cut off that portion of their pensions exceeding $16,000 a year.

But the employee cannot know, until retirement, how much his fund is worth, especially if it is invested in stocks and valued according to market. And if the employee withdraws the pension money when changing jobs, careful decisions must be made about where to reinvest it.

The changeover at GAF appears to be typical of the way this pension plan shift works. GAF is planning to terminate a defined-benefit plan covering about 2,500 workers, whose benefits were vested after 10 years of service.

The workers will have the option of taking their accrued benefits in a lump sum, purchasing a retirement annuity or rolling the funds over into a new defined-contribution plan. Here again, the workers face new and difficult choices.

Under the new plan, in which all workers are immediately vested, GAF will make a profit-sharing contribution equivalent to 3 percent of a worker's salary and will contribute additional amounts based on the proportion of salary a worker chooses to put into the retirement plan — an inducement to save that also requires the worker to make a choice.

The 1982 tax law sharply decreased the amount of pension money that corporations may earmark for senior executives. According to Koralik, this is the result of growing "egalitarian" sentiment in Congress, which wants to broaden the benefit structure of the private pension system substantially subsidized by the government.

Corporate contributions to retirement programs are tax deductible as a business expense.

By GARY R. WILLIS

Borrowing money, even when necessary for business or personal reasons, is not usually a pleasurable event. Fortunately, there is one favorable consequence of incurring debt. Individual taxpayers generally can deduct, for income tax purposes, the associated interest expense.

When an individual cash basis taxpayer incurs debt for personal or investment purposes, the associated interest expense paid each year is deductible, subject to possible limitation, as an itemized deduction.

Business interest expense is deducted on the appropriate schedule which includes the other business expenses. In determining whether interest is a business or a personal expense, it is the use to which the borrowed money is put, not the security behind the obligation which governs.

The year of the payment of the interest expense is not always the year of deduction. Taxpayers who pre-pay interest are not allowed to deduct the interest that applies to a year later than the year of payment. Rather, they must capitalize the prepaid interest, and allocate it to the tax year or years in which the interest represents a cost of using borrowed money. The interest can generally be deducted in the year to which it is allocated.

There are two other special rules which may affect the timing of a cash basis taxpayer's interest deduction.

The construction period interest rule requires the individual taxpayer to capitalize interest expense paid on indebtedness incurred during the construction period to construct an income producing asset. The capitalized interest is then allocated ratably to the current and future years in accordance with a statutory table, generally ten years.

Interest expense paid on indebtedness incurred to purchase property held for investment is "investment interest." The individual taxpayer may only deduct investment interest to the extent of $10,000 per year plus net investment income (interest, dividends, rents, royalties, and short-term capital gains). If investment interest exceeds the limitation, the portion not currently deductible is not lost, but carried over and deducted in the following year or years provided the limitations are not exceeded in those years.

As the end of the year 1982 approaches, it is an appropriate time to determine how interest payments fit into your overall tax planning for this and succeeding years.

— If maximizing current deductions appears beneficial, pay January loan payments (which include December interest) on December 31. Consider paying interest accrued through December 31 on loans and notes on which payments are not otherwise due until 1983 or later. Remember prepayment of 1983 interest does not create an allowable deduction.

— If deferral of deductions is desired, postpone interest payments until next year (as long as this is satisfactory to the lender). Consider adding interest due to outstanding notes or borrowing funds from the original lender to pay interest (if necessary to satisfy the lender) since the IRS does not consider such actions representative of "payment" for deduction purposes.

— If the investment interest limitation poses problems, consider deferral of expense payments and the acceleration of investment income. If amounts are to be expended for both personal and investment purposes, and funds must be borrowed for only one, secure the personal assets (e.g., home improvement, auto, etc.) with borrowings and pay cash for the investment property. This will minimize investment interest expense.

Reducing or eliminating interest deductions is mentioned frequently in discussions of tax reform. It is possible that Congress may someday place a ceiling on the personal mortgage interest deduction and disallow most other types of personal interest expense deductions. The 1982 tax act changed the definition of deductible interest for alternative minimum tax purposes (discussed in a previous article). Taxpayers should be aware that future interest expense deductions may be affected by even more law changes.

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Increased efforts to curb oilfield theft — which is producing losses estimated at $200 million to $6 billion annually nationwide — have been recommended by the House Committee on Energy Resources in its interim report to the 1983 Legislature.

The panel, chaired by Rep. Joe Hanna, D-Breckenridge, notes that oilfield theft "is big business in Texas and the nation," although the concern over such crimes "is relatively new and was not widespread until crude oil prices went up as a result of deregulation of domestic oil."

Since deregulation, the report comments, many areas with previously little or no production "have been targeted by the industry as profitable. This has led not only to increased speculation by the oil industry, but by potential oilfield thieves as well."

While the problem is difficult to document, losses in Texas are estimated at $100 million annually according to testimony presented to the House Intergovernmental Affairs Committee.

But the Permian Basin Petroleum Association has told the Energy Resources Committee the figure for Texas producers and royalty owners could be 10 times that amount - as much as $1 billion annually.

The thefts, the report comments, involve not only crude oil, but also "valuable oilfield equipment that is essential to the timely and orderly develpoent of our energy resources."

Industry officials report that over the past year, equipment thefts have decreased "because the demand for drilling rigs is down" - but theft of crude oil itself is on the increase.

Lack of knowledge and experience in investigating oilfield thefts has been a problem, the report acknowledges, "because all oil looks the same, (and) the oil thief in almost all cases must be caught in the act."

Prosecution has also presented problems. The fact that an estimated 85-90 of all the thefts are committed internally, by industry employees, also had made the problem difficult to control.

San Antonio energy executive John Poerner, a former Railroad Commissioner, has recommended the Railroad Commission reinstitute a manifest system requiring each hauler of liquid hydrocarbons to have a document showing the origin and destination of the material being transported.

The committee's report suggests that if the Railroad Commission reinstitutes the manifest system, legislation should be drafted to make it a criminal offense to transport crude oil without the proper documentation.

"Included in this legislation should be provisions making it a criminal offense to manufacture a false document or to alter information on a document of this type," the report says.

The report also recommends having the Attorney General's office "more actively involved" in oilfield theft cases.

"A possibility," it says, "is to appoint a special prosecutor from the Attorney General's office to handle only oil-related crimes."

Another suggestion is to use the Southwest Regional Energy council — which includes representatives from Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana — to obtain suggestions on controlling stolen oil entering interstate commerce, giving the Railroad Commission additional personnel to deal with oilfield theft, and providing increased penalties for tampering with identification numbers on oilfield equipment.

The Air Control Board plans to make a decision on its proposed permit fee system — which it has been considering in one form or another for over a year — at its Dec. 3 meeting, having held another public hearing this month on the fees.

Most of the testimony, as at past hearings, came from industry officials opposed to the plan.

Main arguments were that the fees aren't required in order to get approval of the Texas State Implementation Plan for controlling air pollution from the Environmental Protection Agency, that the fees could become a "disguised tax" or revenue raising measure, and that it's the public, and not industry, which benefits from ACB regulation — so that the public should bear the cost of regulation.

Wall Street eyebrows raised by proposed stock exchange

AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Signal Cos.' proposed acquisition of Wheelabrator-Frye Inc. through a stock swap raised some eyebrows on Wall Street and generated suggestions that a new breed of takeover might be emerging.

At least two merger specialists think not, but for different reasons.

In announcing the $946 million agreement this past week, Wheelabrator and Signal said their combination calls for an exchange of two Signal shares for each share of Wheelabrator.

The proposal was unusual, and caused a few grumbles, because the market value of two shares of Signal was $48 when the tentative pact was announced and one share of Wheelabrator was worth $50.75. Thus, not only were the companies not offering Wheelabrator shareholders a premium for their shares, as is usual in acquisition plans, they were offering them $2.75 a share less than the market value.

Wheelabrator and Signal were well aware of this, of course. They said investors would realize the benefits of merging two companies with complementary engineering expertise, and the market would bid up the price of Signal's stock by the time shareholders voted on the proposal in February. And, by Friday, the value of two Signal shares had climbed slightly above the value of one Wheelabrator share as Signal's price rose slightly and Wheelabrator's fell.

In many cases, the acquiring company begins by offering a hefty premium for a target company's shares. In this way they provide current holders of the target company with incentive to either tender or vote their shares in favor of the merger.

Also, it often gives risk arbitragers — the Wall Street traders that specialize in profiting from takeover situations — an incentive to aggressively buy shares of the target company with the knowledge that those shares could be bid up to match the price being paid by the suitor.

The price of the suitor's stock, meanwhile, often stabilizes or drops, in part because investors may believe the suitor's short-term earnings will be damaged by the costs needed to make the purchase.

The exact opposite is expected in the Signal-Wheelabrator proposal. There the market is expected to look long term at the merger's benefits and to bid up the price of Signal's shares.

"I am skeptical that this is going to be the wave of the future," says Frank Richardson, the chief mergers and acquisitions executive for the investment firm Bear, Stearns & Co.

"It makes good business sense, but whether or not the shareholders will vote for it, I don't know," he says. "If the deal is below market (value), you have lost the traditional insurance policy that it will get done, namely the premium offered to the shareholders to vote 'yes' (in favor of the merger)."

Jeffrey Beck, managing director of Oppenheimer Co.'s mergers and acquisitions group, says the philosophy behind the Signal-Wheelabrator proposal is "not a new trend; it's something that's been happening for years."

He says mergers valued under $100 million — which account for most transactions yet get less publicity than those costing much more — "are for the most part very well considered" and executed under the philosophy that the marriage makes good business sense.

In the first nine months of this year, there were 1,772 mergers and acquisitions, down from 1,807 a year earlier, reports W.T. Grimm & Co., a Chicago-based merger research firm. The number of deals that exceeded a value of $100 million also fell, to 88 from 94, it says. Signal's offer now is worth about $950 million.

Beck says that "unfortunately, the good merger transactions have been overshadowed by the theater of big deals," the expensive and well-publicized battles in which more than one suitor might be involved and premiums are bid higher and higher to decide a winner.

"It is unfortunate that a few transactions have perhaps colored the basic efficiencies and creation of wealth and creation of employment that very good mergers produce," he says.

So while the Signal-Wheelabrator proposal may not indicate a new trend in merger mechanics, it may point up a growing concern among directors for long-term, sound business judgment in deciding the effectiveness of a merger, even if it is an expensive one, both specialists say.

"Especially in the larger transactions," Beck says, "the boards have got to really consider what makes business sense versus perhaps winning."

In other news this past week:

—Retail sales climbed a modest 0.6 percent in October, the Commerce Department said. The slim gain confirmed retailers' reports last week that sales were weak, extending a sluggish trend since June, and economists said consumers will remain cautious about spending through year's end.

—Consumers took on $1.09 billion more in installment debt than they paid off in September, the Federal Reserve Board said. The expansion reflected, in part, a large increase in auto lending. Consumer debt rose at a 2 percent annual rate in the third quarter, compared with a 4.75 percent expansion in the second quarter, the Fed reported.

—Assets of the nation's money-market mutual funds fell $309 million in the week ended last Tuesday, to $230.9 billion, the Investment Company Institute said. And Donoghue's Money Fund Report, an industry newsletter, said the average 30-day yield on the funds fell in the week ended Wednesday to 8.90 percent from 9.07 percent the previous week.

—Business failures rose in the week ended Nov. 4, compared with a decline the previous week, Dun & Bradstreet said. Failures rose to 689 in the latest week from 543 a week earlier. The total neared the 50-year peak of 696 failures set in the week ended last Aug. 26, it said.

—Indefinite layoffs among U.S. autoworkers rose to 252,199 from 251,490 a week earlier, the five major automakers said. Car production, meanwhile, fell 19.3 percent to to 88,730 cars from 98,652 the previous week, said the trade journal Automotive News.

—Business inventories edged up 0.1 percent in September to a seasonally adjusted $515.3 billion, the Commerce Department said. The slim September gain was the fourth straight monthly rise and followed a revised 0.2 percent gain in August. Business sales, meanwhile, fell 0.3 percent for the fourth straight monthly decline as the economy's sluggishness persisted.

Professor, nuclear reactor fight crime

IRVINE, Calif.(AP) — Most of the time, Dr. Vincent P. Guinn teaches chemistry at a local university. But he has also investigated some of the country's most notorious crimes, all with the help of a nuclear reactor.

Guinn, who gave expert testimony in the assassination of John F. Kennedy and the Juan Corona mass murders, uses a technique called neutron activation analysis, which he pioneered in the early 1960s.

He bombards evidence samples with neutrons so they become radioactive, then places them in a gamma ray detection device that shows what elements, including impurities, are present. Such impurities — including silver, arsenic, copper and tin — vary between batches of ammunition so that they essentially serve as fingerprints.

"You can analyze and compare known samples recovered from a suspect's gun and can tell whether a bullet used in a crime was made from the same melt of lead," said Guinn, a professor at University of California at Irvine.

In the case of Juan Corona, a farm labor contractor recently re-convicted of the murders of 25 migrant farm workers in Northern California, Guinn examined a bullet taken from the only victim who was not stabbed, as well as a hair sample thought to be Corona's that was taken from a shovel.

During the retrial, Guinn took the witness stand and disputed testimony from the first trial linking the evidence to Corona, saying the previous analysis had been bungled.

"I have no way of telling whether Juan Corona is guilty or innocent," he said. "But what I did was present a lot of evidence in the record and I didn't encounter any evidence that proved his guilt."

Guinn has testified at more than 80 trials, some as far away as Canada and South Korea, during the past 13 years.

"The Ivory Tower (of university life) tends to shield you from reality," he said. "If you're going to do research in forensic chemistry you must get involved in criminal cases."

Perhaps the best-known case he's worked on is the Nov. 22, 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Guinn was asked to examine the bullets that killed the president and injured then-Texas Gov. John Connelly and to testify before a special committee of the U.S. House of Representatives when it held hearings into the matter in 1977.

Guinn told the committee that the bullets from Lee Harvey Oswald's rifle were the only ones that hit the presidential motorcade moving through downtown Dallas.

"All I can say is the only one who hit anybody was Oswald," Guinn said, referring to theories that there was more than one gunman. "There may have been 50 people shooting. But what is clear is if there were other people shooting, they didn't hit anybody or anything in the car."

Guinn has also testified that Symbionese Liberation Army leader Donald DeFreeze did not put a bullet through his own head during a shootout with Los Angeles police in 1974 after the Patty Hearst kidnapping. And he took the stand to say that a Riverside County deputy sheriff slain during a shootout after a 1980 Norco bank robbery was not killed by a fellow officer's gun.

Union Oil wells could be first drilled in sanctuary

By RONALD B. TAYLOR

News Service

CHANNEL ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — As the patrol boat Pacific Ranger beat through the waves toward Anacapa Island, a formation of brown pelicans banked gracefully across the sky, riding the wind toward Arch Rock.

If the California Coastal Commission approves Union Oil's application at a public hearing Nov. 16 in Los Angeles, these wells will become the first drilled in the sanctuary, a precedent the commission's staff opposes.

The drilling is permitted under terms of the company's federal lease and is provided for in the law setting up the sanctuary. But the Coastal Commission has veto power if it decides the drilling is incompatible with the state's coastal management plan.

An oil blowout or spill at the proposed drilling site 5.2 miles off Anacapa could not only have a "disastrous" impact on the only California brown pelican rookery in the nation, but it could also endanger creatures in the marine environment, concerned government experts say.

OIL INDUSTRY officials argue that modern technology has greatly reduced the chances of a spill or blowout since the 1969 blowout on Union Oil's Platform A, six miles off Santa Barbara, Calif.

In 1980 the association opposed creation of the 650,000-acre marine sanctuary that surrounds Channel Islands National Park and its lawyers recently filed suit in federal court to abolish the preserve, arguing that 100 million barrels of oil may be there.

Park Superintendent William Ehorn, standing on the Pacific Ranger's rolling deck, said the National Park Service — administrator of the park and the sanctuary — is officially "concerned" about Union Oil's proposed wells, but can do nothing to prevent the drilling.

While oil well drilling is generally prohibited within the sanctuary, Union Oil's 1968 federal lease on Tract 203 was one of several "grandfather clauses" included in the sancturary legislation, giving Union Oil the right to explore and develop production, Ehorn said.

THE HEAVY SWELLS surged against the cliffs, thundering through caves and blowholes as a small open boat took Ehorn and his party to the tiny landing platform bolted to the cliffside. A metal stairway leads up to the grassy plain atop the windswept island.

Anacapa, once a narrow crescent of land jutting up out of the sea off Oxnard and Port Hueneme, has been battered by the sea over the centuries into East, Middle and West islands.

There are no beaches and the rocky coves and tide pools below the cliffs are approachable only by boat. Because of the pelican rookery, West Anacapa is closed to the public.

The cliffs and windy plains of Anacapa are the home of a variety of small birds and mammals and unique plants like the Giant Coreopsis, the tree sunflower.

FROM THE CLIFFTOPS the sounds of barking elephant seals can be heard. The intertidal zones and marine environment are rich with life and attract thousands of visitors who come by boat to explore and dive in the underwater forests of giant kelp.

While title to the islands, the intertidal zones and deep water is held by a mix of state and federal agencies and private individuals, the park service is the primary administrator.

Anacapa Light marks the southern entrance to the channel and its narrowest point. The U.S. Coast Guard reports an average of 25 merchant ships and tankers sail through this 10.5-mile passage daily.

Union Oil wants to drill its two wells 5.2 miles northeast of Anacapa's Arch Rock, well within the six-mile sanctuary boundary and in the "buffer" strip between the northbound and southbound shipping lanes.

Michael Fischer, the state Coastal Commission's executive director, said Union Oil's proposal violates three policies of the state's coastal management plan:

—Drilling must be kept outside the six-mile limit in any "sensitive area" like the pelican rookery.

WHEN THE COMMISSION meets in Los Angeles this month, the staff will recommend against the application, as it did in 1980 when Chevron USA proposed drilling in a nearby tract. The commission rejected Chevron's application.

If the commission rejects Union Oil's application for Tract 203, the oil company can appeal the decision.

The U.S. Coast Guard is not opposing the Union Oil proposal to explore for oil in the buffer zone, but Lt. Cmdr. Jan TerVeen said "there may be problems" if Union Oil wants to construct a platform between the traffic lanes.

The Coast Guard is considering moving the traffic lanes south, closer to Anacapa, to facilitate oil production in the channel, TerVeen said, adding, "Ships' captains tell us there's good water within a quarter mile of Anacapa."

Although TerVeen said there is no thought of moving the lanes that close to the island, the idea sends shudders through officials charged with managing and protecting the Channel Islands environment.

Southbound tankers heading for Southern California refineries now pass between Union Oil's proposed drill sites and Anacapa Light, they point out.

According to Carol Pillsbury, park service manager of the sanctuary, if a spill did occur, it would take clean-up crews eight hours to get to the site.

PELICAN EXPERT Frank Gress, a research biologist at the University of California, Davis, said a major spill 5.2 miles off Anacapa would have a "devastating" effect on nesting pelicans and fledglings who gather at the water's edge.

"I've seen 200 and 300 of the young birds roosting on the rocks next to the water or bathing and cleaning their pouches," Gress said. "In a spill they would get oiled."

Years of exposure to the pesticide DDT through their food chain had all but wiped out the California brown pelicans in the late 1960s. The pesticide caused a thinning of the egg shells and nesting birds crushed the eggs before they could hatch.

The birds are still on the endangered species list, but since the banning of DDT they have made a comeback on West Anacapa Island. It it estimated that 2,000 pair nest there now, laying an average of three eggs a pair.

During the nesting season, from December through early spring, the monogamous pairs take turns protecting the nests. When nest relief comes, the adult birds fly to the water and bathe and clean their pouches, Gress said, and that is when they are most vulnerable to "oiling."

Arthur Spaulding, Western Oil and Gass Association general manager, responded, "The record of the petroleum industry is virtually unblemished. Our protection of the environment for the last 10 years is unsurpassed."

Unsold goods stock up, sales down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The stock of unsold goods held by American companies inched 0.1 percent higher in September as total business sales declined 0.3 percent, the government reported Friday. It was the fourth straight month in a pattern of rising inventories and falling sales.

The poor sales record shown in the Commerce Department report, the last major economic indicator the department compiles for September, added to many earlier signs that the economy was still mired in its 15th month of recession during that month.

However, the newly reported sales decline wasn't nearly as bad as the 1.5 percent drop recorded for August. And the small increase in the value of inventories was slightly under the 0.4 percent increase for August.

The inventory growth in September could turn into a decline when recalculated to take inflation into account.

In a statement distributed by aides, Commerce Undersecretary Robert Dederick said, "Judging from figures for retail trade and manufacturing, total business sales probably were sluggish in October as well."

"Although business sales remain soft, the plunge in interest rates since mid-year should begin to have a salutary effect before yearend," he said. "A solid sales gain during 1983, however, may well require further declines in interest rates."

That level, still too high for companies who have to borrow money to carry their inventories, is just a bit below January's recession peak of 1.54.

Deregulation started rush, Edwards says

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — Deregulation of oil prices spurred a new wave of domestic production and lessened the chances that America would be hurt by another foreign oil embargo, former Energy Secretary James B. Edwards said.

"When we deregulated oil, it started a real oil rush in the oil pastures which probably compared only to the Gold Rush," Edwards said Friday.

Edwards, who addressed the 48th convention of the Associated Press Managing Editors here, ended his term as energy secretary last week. He has since become president of the Medical University of South Carolina. Donald Hodel on Monday succeeded Edwards as energy secretary.

When Edwards accepted the cabinet post 21 months ago, he said his goal was to work himself out of a job.

"I still believe we have no need for a Department of Energy," Edwards said. "It's just a commodity, just like steel and textiles."

He said there was a place for energy issues in government, however, and suggested that the Commerce Department assume that role.

According to Edwards, "96 percent of all the conservation that has taken place in America has been driven by the price" of oil.

"Detroit has geared up to produce gas-conserving autos," he said. "Every year 1 million of the 10 million gas-guzzlers out there will be replaced by a gas-conserving car."

Edwards said the federal government should take steps to aid the development of synthetic fuels because it costs seven times as much to start a synthetic fuel operation than it would to develop a facility producing conventional fuels.

Edwards also said nuclear energy is the cleanest and safest form of energy available and blamed the news media for for saddling the industry with a bad image.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 212 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01746 decreased $362.0 million to $227.8 billion for the week ending November 10, 1982. The funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 8.65% from 8.81%. The funds' 30-day average yield dropped to 8.90% from 9.07%.

The funds' average maturity figure increased one day to 40 days after five weeks at 39 days.

Publisher William E. Donoghue says, "Assets of consumer money funds increased $1 billion this week, split evenly between taxable and tax-free money funds. The continuing interest in tax-free money funds reflects the growing sophistication of individual investors in the 40% and higher tax-brackets who have realized they can earn additional dividends by investing in tax-free money funds."

The Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists (SIPES) will hold its monthly luncheon meeting at the Midland Country Club on Wednesday, November 17. Lunch begins at 11:30. Program begins at 12:30 p.m.

The program will be a presentation by W. Terry Lehman titled "Remote Sensing and Its Application to Exploration". His discussion will review remotely detectable phenomena, the electromanetic spectrum, and the spatial and temporal variations in remote sensing; data integration of landsat and radar, and landsat with gravity. He will also explain image enhancement and computer classification.

Museum has new display

A shrunken mummy's hand sets the theme for a new and fascinating special exhibit at the Permian Basin Petrolum Muesum, Midland. Titled "Mummies and Mudbaths", the exhibit tells strange and little-known facts about man's first uses for petroleum.

The mummy's hand, borrowed from another Texas museum, illustrates the value placed on "mummy powder" by Europeans centuries ago. Believing mummies were embalmed with pitch, they sought a ground-up mixture of the two substances as a medicine and aphrodisiac.

The display reveals that Babylonians mixed bitumen, or asphalt, with mud bricks to build their city's walls, and the Assyrians did the same on flood control embankments along the Tigris River.

The earliest known medical text from the Asian country of Sumer gave this medicine recipe about 2,500 B.C.: "Pour strong beer over resin...combine with bitumen and let the sick man drink it." The text gives no disease nor result of the cure.

The exhibit notes that asphalt sold for about $30 a ton in 2,000 B. C. at Abraham's home town of Ur. This is a bit higher than present prices. And in 1808, when Pennsylvanian oil was being scooped from seeps and sold as a medicine, its price was $16 a gallon or $672 a barrel - a price that would cause the modern oil man to swoon with delight.

The exhibit was created by Ed Rowland of the museum's staff. Early in the research for the exhibit, he and Homer T. Fort, another staff member, sought to borrow a complete Egyptian mummy from other museums. It was found that the museum might well experience difficulty in moving a "dead body" across state lines without a proper death certificate. Subsequent checking showed that pitch wasn't used in the embalming process as was first thought, so the idea of showing a complete mummy was abandoned.

The "Mummies and Mudbaths" exhibit will be on view in the museum's West Wing through January, 1983.

A Vietnam memorial

Phuoc Binh, Da Nang, Bien Hoa, My Lai, Saigon. The names are emblazoned on the minds of thousands of Americans who cannot forget — never should forget — a war a half a world away that divided a people in Southeast Asia, millions of American families and a nation on this side of the world. It was the Vietnam War and, regrettably, it's as alive for millions of Americans today as it was during the years of bloodshed.

The other day a Vietnam Veterans Memorial was dedicated in Washington, D.C. Ironically, perhaps somewhat fittingly, the memorial has been as steeped in controversy as was the war. The memorial is a V-shaped wall bearing the names of American servicemen who died in the war.

The memorial, they say, is not beautiful or inspiring. It is stark and haunting. Probably for that reason and a number of others the memorial has suffered controversy. But the war was controversial, too, probably the most controversial of any in this nation's recent history. It remains so today because veterans of a number of wars have mixed emotions about the memorial and what they feel it signifies.

There is no disputing the fact that American servicemen were put into a situation in Vietnam that, under the circumstances, they were not allowed to win. Nearly 58,000 of them were killed and 155,419 were wounded. Moreover, it's safe to say that a majority of Americans did not want American men dying in that war and loudly protested, providing the psychological illusion of stripping the Americans of their support back home.

That was shameful. But the shame does not lie with those who fought in Vietnam. It lies with the people who prolonged the war and those who could not bring themselves to support the losing cause.

This Veterans Day was dedicated to the men who served in Vietnam. They should rightfully be honored — without forgetting that such honor should be extended to all American servicemen from all wars. When asked to sacrifice for their country, they have complied, many with their lives. Twenty-two Midlanders gave their lives in that unpopular war.

That is the test of patriotism. It's not a test of right or wrong or of popularity. It is the ultimate test of love of country. In that sense the Vietnam Veterans Memorial is justified and appropriate because it honors those who were willing to make that sacrifice.

Marines in Beirut

Inevitably, the responsibility of the Marines is being expanded in Beirut. The expansion is likely to continue. The question is whether the Marines' role can be expanded enough and prolonged enough to leave a stable government in place when the Marines leave Lebanon.

Originally, the Marines were emplaced around the Beirut airport, as a buffer between the Israeli army and west Beirut and in order to restore Lebanese control over the airport, which had been seized by the Israelis.

Now President Reagan has announced that the Marine mission will be expanded to include patrols in east Beirut. Presumably, this will strengthen Lebanese government forces in an area that has been totally dominated by the private army of the Christian Phalangist militia.

The Moslems of west Beirut have been disarmed, first by the Israeli army and then by the Lebanese government forces. The Lebanese government said it would move into the east Beirut section later and disarm the Christians but has not done so. Disarming the Phalangists would be difficult. They are better organized than the government forces and more heavily armed. And their leader, Amin Gemayel, is president of the Lebanese government.

There can be no real stability in Lebanon until all foreign military forces withdraw from the country. That includes the Israelis, the Syrians and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

But, even then, the government would be unstable if it lacks the armed force to contend with the private army of the Phalange. Building up the government forces is a task that will take months and years. Disarming the Phalange will not be accomplished in a matter of days or weeks. The war has greatly increased the power of the Phalange.

Although many Americans undoubtedly are opposed to keeping troops on foreign soil, the precarious situation in the Middle East means the United States must be prepared to keep the Marines there as long as they are needed. Otherwise, little of lasting value will be accomplished.

Another View:

The radical right loses

Generally, the 1982 election was one of the more equivocal ones. There were, to be sure, Democratic gains in the U.S. House, and even stronger ones among the array of governors across the nation. But there was no sweeping sea-change in the complexion of the American political establishment or electorate. There was, however, one virtually unequivocal phenomenon: The highly organized radical right took a drubbing, nationally:

— The 15 House members "targeted" by the National Conservative Political Action Committee, the "new right" group, to be purged for their liberalism all were re-elected.

— Eight of the nine U.S. senators similarly targeted, with at least $50,000 in NCPAC advertising assaults against each, were re-elected.

— The four U.S. senators targeted for defeat by the Life Amendment Political Action Committee were returned to office.

There were other examples. The only NCPAC-targeted Senate candidate to be defeated was Sen. Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev. In 1980, four of the five targeted members of the Senate lost their seats. Not only did the new right efforts largely fail in 1982, but in some cases they clearly backfired. In Maryland, NCPAC spent $662,000 in advertising to defeat Sen. Paul S. Sarbanes. He ended up carrying 63 percent of the vote, a stronger finish, many believe, than if NCPAC had stayed out.

Leaders of the movement, including NCPAC chief John T. Dolan and Richard Viguerie, the mail-order mogul, have blamed the Reagan administration, among other forces, for their showing — while Dolan claims, very vaguely, 70 percent victories. If only the president had put more stress on the new right's most inflammatory issues — abortion, school prayer, opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment, and so forth — they would have done better, they claim. That is strong contrast to Dolan after the 1980 election: "If I were a liberal politician running for re-election in 1982, I would be quaking in my boots."

Well, a lot of liberals and moderates ran, and a good many prospered — none more than those most vigorously opposed by the demagogues of vindictiveness that comprise the Dolan-Viguerie faction of the political spectrum. And that is good news, of course, for everyone who sees the healthiest of American traditions in the sound and solid center, resisting radicalism of both left and right.

ART BUCHWALD

Political lessons are expensive!

One of the richest men I know is Tarbaum. Therefore I was surprised to see him handing the clerk in the supermarket food stamps last Wednesday.

Art Buchwald

"What happened, Tarbaum?" I asked.

"I lost the election for the school board last week."

"I know that, but why are you on food stamps?"

"I spent $6 million of my own money. I got wiped out."

"I don't believe it. Why would you spend $6 million to be elected to the school board?"

"I didn't intend to. When I decided to run the most I was going to spend was $4 million. But I didn't realize it would turn into such a dirty campaign. My opponent took the low road. He said I thought the Head Start program was a claiming race at the Laurel Race Track. I had no choice but to buy television time and say he believed Remedial English was what Prince Andrew did on shore leave."

"I saw that commercial. It was quite effective."

"It should have been. It cost me a half a million bucks. When I started the race the polls had me leading by 14 points. I hired one of the best professional campaign directors in the country. He told me the only way to win a school board election was to promise to do away with the football team and put more money in textbooks. I bought time on all four TV stations to announce my plan, and the next day my opponent was leading me by 26 points."

"So you had to play catch-up," I said.

"It cost me $2 million to deny I had said it. Then my campaign speechwriter suggested I hit hard on the prayers-in-school issue."

"I came out on the same side as the Supreme Court, and even printed their decision in the newspapers."

"That was a stupid thing to do."

"Don't I know it. The Prayer in School Political Action Committee decided to spend a million dollars in my district to defeat me. My campaign manager said we had to match them dollar for dollar or we'd lose the election."

"Did you ever think of bowing out of the race when it started costing you so much money?"

"Yes. But my wife wouldn't hear of it. She had invited all our friends and people who worked in my campaign to a victory party at our estate, and she said she'd be humiliated with the caterer if she had to cancel it. Besides, I found I loved campaigning and shaking hands with people, and handing out bumper stickers to strangers. Once politics gets in your blood you don't think about what it's going to cost you."

"So you just kept plowing ahead?"

"I fired my campaign manager and brought in two guys from New York who worked on Mayor Koch's campaign for governor. We redid all our television commercials and started with a fresh conservative slant. In the first TV spot I promised if I was elected to the school board I would fire 20 percent of the teachers to balance the budget. The Teachers Political Action Committee sent in a half million dollars to defeat me. They plastered the town with billboards saying I was trying to buy the election."

"That must have hurt."

"Not as much as my second commercial when I reversed myself and said if I was elected I would hire 20 percent more teachers, and raise their salaries to the national level."

"So that took the teachers off your back?"

"Yes, but it brought in the Political Action Committee Against Paying Teachers a Living Wage, and they decided to get me for caving in to the union."

"When was that?"

"I think it was about the time I had to sell my house to stay in the race."

"You sold your house?"

"And the boat and the car and my wife's diamond engagement ring. You know I only lost by 1,500 votes."

"I saw the results election night. I'm sorry you didn't make it, Tarbaum. You certainly put your money where your mouth was. At least $6 million of it."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Soviet dissent continues despite repression

WASHINGTON — We in America do not have, nor need we rely upon, moral giants to defend human rights. In our historic good fortune, we have evolved a government of the people to undertake the mission that in a tyranny falls to the lonely heroes.

Jack Anderson

A few such heroes stepped forward in the Soviet Union six years ago to monitor the human-rights accords that the Kremlin signed in Helsinki. What happened to them is all too typical of the status of human rights in the Soviet Union.

Depressing stories have filtered back about men like Yuri Orlov, a physicist, who dared to stand up in a country where most other knees are bent. He organized the "Public Group to Promote the Fulfillment of the Helsinki Accords in the USSR."

Two days later, he was summoned to a session with police, who delivered a stern warning on the "inadmissibility of his illegal actions." The KGB wasn't kidding: Orlov is now in a detention camp, suffering from pelvic, kidney and bladder disorders and the effects of a head injury.

Orlov's group was broken up. It disbanded, with a brave but despairing explanation that its purpose had been made impossible because of official persecution. Of its 17 original members, only three were around to make the announcement. Ten are incarcerated, and four were forced to emigrate.

It's the lucky ones who are expelled from the counry. Most of the human-rights advocates are in prison camps or mental hospitals. My reporter Andrea Siegel has reviewed the human stories, all of them unpublished, which have reached the U.S. Helsinki Commission. The stories are all too similar: The Kremlin cracked down viciously on group after group that tried to monitor the human-rights accords. Here are the distressing details:

— Of the 87 known individuals who appointed themselves monitors of the Helsinki Accords throughout the Soviet Union, 51 are now in prison. Nearly all of the courageous 87 have been jailed, abused in the official press or physically attacked.

— Most of those who were subjected to legal action were sentenced for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" or "anti-Soviet slander."

— Merely joining a Helsinki monitor group can be sufficient grounds for prosecution. Forty-four monitors were sentenced for that specific reason.

— Soviet authorities are almost paranoid in their fear of the Helsinki monitors. Those who are imprisoned are virtually cut off from contact with their families, let alone the outside world. The fears are partially justified by the fact that several individuals are known to have joined monitor groups while they were actually in detention.

— Only three of the 29 members of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic's Helsinki monitors are still at liberty. Twenty-two are in prison, one is in a forced-labor brigade and six were forced to emigrate.

— In Lithuania, only two of the eight monitors remain at large. Five are imprisoned; one emigrated. One of the original monitors died of natural causes in 1979, but the Catholic priest who took his place in the group was killed last year when he was shoved into the path of a truck. The incident occurred less than a week after the official press accused him of criticizing the country's educational system. There had been two previous attempts on his life.

— In the Armenian province, four of the six monitors are currently free in their homeland, but two of these have already served prison terms for joining the Helsinki group. One of the six is still in prison and another emigrated.

— In the Georgian province, seven monitors are now at liberty — three of them after serving prison terms for joining the group. The eighth original member is in prison.

— The Working Commission on Psychiatric Abuse has been shut down entirely. All six of its members — some of whom are monitors in other groups as well — are in custody.

— The only layman on the six-member Catholic Committee is in prison. But the committee remains among the most active of the monitor groups, particularly in predominantly Catholic Lithuania.

— The Helsinki monitors are incarcerated in prison camps, labor camps, "regimen" camps and psychiatric wards. Others are merely sentenced to internal exile. Nearly all the prisoners suffer from ailments related to malnutrition, torture, poor medical care and harsh living conditions.

— The few monitors not arrested on anti-Soviet charges were convicted of criminal activities, notably narcotics possession or attempted rape — both offenses notoriously easy to rig in the Soviet Union. The trumped-up charges were followed by kangaroo-court trials.

According to a member of the U.S. Helsinki Commission, one reason for arranging criminal convictions of the human-rights monitors is the Kremlin's belief that this produces less outcry in the West.

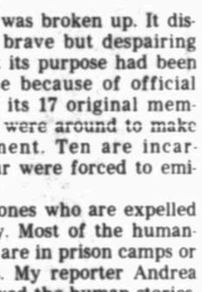

Despite the draconian repression, dissent survives in the Soviet Union. There are more than 15 underground journals in existence, as well as dissidents who continue to give hope to the oppressed and to offer a stimulus to resistance.

GEORGE F. WILL

Surgeon general says violence 'treatable'

WASHINGTON — With his beard and armor-piercing gaze, Dr. C. Everett Koop resembles an Old Testament prophet who has discovered his neighbors making graven images. Actually, he is not fierce, but is determined to be heard, which is good because that is his job. He is surgeon general of the United States.

George F. Will

The surgeon general's job includes monitoring the health of the American people, publicizing significant findings, and using information to change behavior, as has been done with several reports on smoking. Having saved millions of lives and billions of dollars, the surgeon general's office has done more good per dollar spent than any other federal office.

Recently Koop expanded slightly the scope of his office's monitoring. Speaking to the American Academy of Pediatrics, Koop, a pediatrician, urged physicians generally but pediatricians especially to consider violence as a treatable public-health problem. Statistics show that there are periods when there are striking changes in the incidence of violence. We now are in one, which began in the late 1960s. Koop thinks it unlikely that mortality rates from violent acts will return to the levels of the early 1960s.

For example, for 15 to 24 year olds, the homicide rate went from 5.9 per 100,000 in 1960 to 11.7 in 1970 to 13.2 in 1978. For black males, the rates were 46.4 in 1960, 102.5 in 1970, 72.5 in 1978.

Among all 15 to 24 year olds, the suicide rate rose from 5.2 per 100,000 in 1960 to 12.4 in 1978. For white males, that rate went from 8.2 to 20.8.

We have neither the historical distance nor, perhaps, the analytic capability to say what has happened to cause the increased violence. But Koop believes that violence is "treatable" in this sense: We know enough about the symptoms of violent personality in children and parents to make diagnostic, predictive and preventative decisions.

Clues include the fact that homicidal children tend to have histories of attempted suicides and of psychomotor seizures. Many have seen or been victims of family violence. Many have mothers who have had inpatient psychiatric care. High-risk families tend to be socially isolated, lacking strong friendships and subject to stress from even such common social transactions as shopping and using public transportation.

Koop wants physicians to be sensitive to the signals of personal and family stress, and to master the growing literature about the predisposition to violence. He believes there should be "the same kind of counseling or referral service as if the patient showed a predisposition to cardiovascular disease, obesity or diabetes." Physicians, he notes, do not hesitate to counsel patients with hypertension to avoid salt or certain sugars. "Similarly, if we have a patient with a predisposition for violent behavior, especially against family members, I think we need to advise that patient to get some professional counseling and also suggest that he or she monitor their entertainment 'menu' and avoid the kinds of television or motion-picture fare that stimulates and contributes to the violence in their personalities."

There is controversy about "desensitization" — about what is known or knowable about the effect of entertainment that depicts violence short of murder as a common, semi-acceptable response to frustration, insult or injury. Koop believes the evidence "strongly suggests that physicians ought to recognize that a diet of violent entertainment for the violence-prone individual is as unhealthy as a diet of sugar and starch is for the obesity-prone individual."

But it is one thing for a doctor practicing physical medicine to diagnose and treat a proneness that is, say, metabolic; it is quite different and more problematic for him even just to diagnose a predisposition that is part of the patient's disposition. Such dispositions may reflect metabolic or other physical disorders, but our understanding is currently slight.

Violence is, unquestionably, a health problem, and there is much more to enhancing health than practicing medicine. But many physicians are inclined, by temperament and training, to confine themselves to administering medicine. They understandably resist being pulled into the periphery of social problems. But Koop understandably wants to expand somewhat the physicians' sense of what the practice of medicine should encompass.

He argues that medicine and the social services have similar ethical imperatives, and that pediatricians, especially, have special relationships with, and insights about, the irreducible social units that shape citizens — families. He may have a misplaced confidence in research about the causes — biological, psychological, social — of violence. But a surgeon general, like an Old Testament prophet, can not do his job without starting an occasional argument.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 14, 1970, a cyclone devastated the southern coast of East Pakistan and islands in the Bay of Bengal, killing an estimated 300,000 people.

On this date:

In 1973, Britain's Princess Anne married Capt. Mark Phillips, a commoner.

1983 Legislature to have new look, old issues

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Signs of the times: Christmas candy has appeared in the stores and legislators are prefiling bills in the House and Senate.

So while the 1983 Legislature won't officially convene until Jan. 11, 1983, there already are plenty of indications that if Santa Claus is coming, the Legislature can't be far behind.

Quite a lot of folks are wondering what to expect both from Santa and from the Legislature.

In the House there will be at least 44 members in 1983 who weren't there in 1981 (some of that 44 have been members in years past, however).

Senate-side, there will be 10 new members (several of them having crossed over from the House) among the 31 senators.

For the House, the biggest change has to be that Speaker Bill Clayton, having become the first man in Texas history to become speaker for four terms, won't be presiding.

Instead, Rep. Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, should be speaker — barring any unforeseen calamities.

Lewis announced 141 of the 150 members for 1983 are supporting his bid for speaker, and Rep. Carlyle Smith, D-Grand Prairie, the only public opponent to Lewis' bid, has all but conceded the battle.

But neither the House nor the Senate is likely to see any radical changes in the coming year.

Lewis is a legislator out of the mainline Texas Democratic tradition, with a strong business background, and most of the top leadership positions are likely to remain under the control of that sort of traditional, conservative lawmaker, because that sort of lawmaker remains typical of the House membership.

As in the past, the Senate appears slightly less conservative (which isn't the same as saying more liberal) than the House.

And as in the past, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby appears to be firmly in control.

In fact, Hobby appears to be in a position to exert even more control than in past sessions, having easily won re-election, with a wider margin of victory than Attorney General Mark White, who will be in the governor's mansion for the first time.

For White, the 1983 session must be, to some extent, a learning experience.

Compared to the governor's office, the attorney general's office is a fairly simple, straightforward sort of operation, with one man in charge of a hierarchical structure in which the power flows along identifiable channels.

The governor must depend on the Legislature to enact most of his programs, and the governor depends on his power to persuade, bully and bluff lawmakers much more than the attorney general.

And in depending on the Legislature, the governor also must depend on the speaker and lieutenant governor.

Lewis, despite his experience, also will have some on-the-job learning ahead, although it appears likely he will be able to settle into his new role quickly.

For Hobby, however, it will be pretty much business as usual, as he resumes a familiar role.

During his tenure as lieutenant governor, Hobby has made few political mistakes, at least publicly.

For the most part, the Senate has operated smoothly (with the exception of the famous "Killer Bees" incident) with Hobby generally watching with the sort of benign wariness usually associated with junior high school teachers observing students who are behaving at the moment, but who may get into trouble if not closely supervised.

In 1983, Hobby will have his political future secured for two sessions, at least in the sense of not having to be campaigning, so that if he's interested in moving on to any other office, he's in a position to begin doing that.

Thus far, most of the legislation being prefiled indicates that the 1983 session will be looking at mostly the same sorts of issues as the 1981 session, although some items, such as driving while intoxicated, will be getting more attention than in years past.

For White, there are likely to be some frustrations, since lawmakers aren't likely to give a Democratic governor whatever he wants simply because he's a Democrat anymore than they were opposed to giving Gov. Bill Clements anything because he is a Republican.

But the overall picture for the 1983 legislative session is one of continuity, despite changes for a number of the folks who will be occupying key positions.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

SPEAKING OUT

Four-year school not necessarily better

By DR. JESS H. PARRISH

Dr. Jess H. Parrish has served as president of Midland College since August 1981. Previously he was associated with Texas Tech, Angelo State and Memphis State universities. He served as founding president of Shelby State Community College in Memphis prior to moving to Midland.

A recent glaring headline in this column stated, "UTPB deserves to have four-year status." Somehow we were to believe that four-year status is the ultimate, or at least superior to, the upper-division concept. Who says so? Who says the opportunities are greater or that educational programs are of a higher level when all four years are taken in a single building or on a single campus? What course or series of courses could be offered that would not be available through a cooperative effort with Midland College and Odessa College? Why would it be better to spend millions (or hundreds of millions) over a period of time to duplicate what is now available from quality, accredited institutions with outstanding faculty and relevant educational programs? Why is it desirable for local students to take the courses at a cost of $174 for a full schedule when the same education is available for $110 at Midland College? Are we really considering the parents who want comprehensive, low-cost education available to their children? What is there in our history, our demography, our geography or our state's higher education system which would lead us to believe that UTPB would be a "major" four-year university? I think the evidence would at best indicate a regional university. On the other hand, I feel we can and will have a major upper-division institution recognized for quality, innovation, and national leadership.

The previous article further stated that community colleges could offer no valid reasons for their opposition to four-year status and that they "ignore facts and figures showing that junior colleges actually thrive and prosper near four-year universities." That statement can be justified only if the single criterion for "thriving and prospering" is based on numbers. The writer's complete ignorance of the role and mission of the comprehensive community college was evident when he stated that their main function was the "vocational and technical programs serving a community." Over 65 percent of the students enrolled at Midland College are enrolled in transfer programs. Community Colleges in Texas are authorized and directed by law to provide educational programs in seven areas including arts and sciences, adult education for cultural upgrading, compensatory education for disadvantaged students, and vocational and technical programs leading to degrees and certificates.

There is ample evidence that community colleges in other than large urban areas tend to lose their comprehensiveness when they are forced to further divide academic students among other institutions. This would tend to relegate quality comprehensive institutions to the role of remedial and occupational technical schools. This was not the intent of the citizens of Midland or Odessa when their fine community colleges were founded, nor was it their intent when they voted millions in bonded indebtedness to house these colleges. The Midland College catalog specifically mentions university parallel, occupational technical, general education, community services and student developmental services in the Statement of Purpose approved by the Board of Trustees.

Midland College and Odessa College have gone on record as being supportive of an outstanding upper division UTPB. They are at this time deeply involved with UTPB in various committees and on-campus activities which can bring the concept to fruition. There is every evidence that a strong upper division institution would enhance and embellish the existing community colleges. This makes evident the fact that the two-year colleges have been "standing in the wings" awaiting the opportunity to assist in this effort.

While I would not wish to get into a statistical battle with the previous article's writer, I will point out a few facts which present a different picture concerning the potential number of transfer students from Texas community colleges. The article stated that UTPB would have to enroll all eligible transferees in the entire state to meet minimum enrollment needs. In the Fall of 1982, Texas public community colleges enrolled 291,810 students in college credit courses, which represented 42 percent of all students in Texas public higher education. Each of these must be considered a potential transfer student. In addition, over 17,000 students graduated from 47 Texas public junior colleges in 1982 and each of these students would have the necessary hours for transfer to UTPB. During the 1981-1982 school year alone, 2,179 Midland College students or former students requested that transcripts be sent to 179 colleges and universities in the United States. The only plausible reason for this request was the student's desire to transfer to a baccalaureate degree granting institution. Admittedly, while exact figures are not known as to the number actually transferring, it can be assumed that each was a potential UTPB enrollee. Each of these students could have easily met the entry requirements for an upper division institution. In addition, of all students enrolling in Texas community colleges in 1976, approximately 30 percent transferred to senior institutions. Can we assume that any greater percentage would choose to enroll in a rather isolated four-year college for the freshman year? Students with a real desire to enroll in UTPB have no difficulty in obtaining the necessary 60 hours for transfer. Also, many of the students will choose to participate in dual enrollment opportunities which will be available as the newfound spirit of cooperation progresses. This will give UTPB the potential for many new programs and degrees to meet the needs of local business and industry, as well as programs to enrich the quality of life in the Basin.

I would be remiss if I didn't comment briefly on the positions of respected individuals and educational entities concerning the status of UTPB. The University of Texas Board of Regents has neither endorsed nor recommended the four-year status for UTPB. I can assume that this body is in an excellent position to know the needs and potential for the institution due to the wealth of information available to them from staff, administration and historical background. The coordinating board for higher education has gone on record in opposition to four-year status. This opposition is based on enrollment projections, cost and area need. We cannot assume that this board has any built-in bias against Odessa, Midland or the Permian Basin. The Citizen's Advisory Committee which is made up of citizens of Odessa, Midland, Big Spring and outlying areas of the Permian Basin has been studying the situation for a year. This group does not recommend four-year status. In fact, the U.T. Board of Regents is diligently following the recommendations of the advisory committee in order to bring about a revitalized upper division UTPB which will meet the high education needs of the local citizens.

In conclusion, I noted that the previous article stated that the Permian Basin should be "rewarded" with four-year status for UTPB. After careful consideration, I feel that rather than being rewarded, the onus would be on us. In the final analysis, we might discover that those who support a strong upper-division university are the real friends of UTPB.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Successful event

To The Editor:

The Midland County March of Dimes recently held its fourth annual Monte Carlo Night party. Thanks to the countless hours of hard work by more than 100 volunteers, the event was a great success.

I, along with party chairmen Jeri McCaslin and David T. Clark would like to personally thank everyone who contributed to the event.

Volunteers designed invitations, cleaned up the Midland Center on Sunday morning after the party and did almost everything else in between. Generous Midland merchants donated exciting gifts for our silent and live auctions; even our dealers and auctioneers volunteered their services in a concerted effort to prevent birth defects.

To date, the March of Dimes has netted over $75,000 from this event and Midlanders are still sending in donations in conjunction with Monte Carlo Night.

March of Dimes is active in the community in many areas. We recently donated $36,000 to Midland Memorial Hospital to help them improve their neonatal nursery. Our chapter also provides speakers for the Carver Center for pregnant teens and to other classes in local schools. We have provided the Midland College School of Nursing with modules for education and we support the Junior League Perinatal Clinic and Childbirth With Preparation.

The only way we can stay so active in these and many more areas is through the world of volunteers and through the generous donations from Midlanders who care about the health of future generations. Our chapter is truly fortunate to be in a city with so many people who can and are willing to donate their time and efforts toward the prevention of birth defects.

Again, a big thank you to everyone who helped work on our Monte Carlo Night and to the 600-plus people who attended and enjoyed the evening while betting on a common goal... healthy children for tomorrow.

Midland monster

To The Editor:

The recent article, "Hospitals' Bed Battle Continues," caused me a great deal of consternation. It's almost incomprehensible that in Midland, Texas, the bastion of conservatism, free enterprise and the Republican Party, we are being represented in Austin by the Midland Memorial Hospital president and attorney whose current crusade is to apparently thwart the efforts of American Medical Corporation.

I know absolutely nothing about the AMC or its personnel, but if anybody has the entrepreneurial bent to establish a 110-bed, full service, private hospital in Midland they should have the full support and encouragement of all citizens.

This entire expenditure of time, effort and money by the MMH adds more proof to the political axiom "any governmental body or agency will expand continuously and its sole function becomes one of increasing power." It appears that we in Midland created a monster when we established the Midland Hospital District.

Joe Gassie

Committed to MC

To.The Editor:

The author of your "Speaking Out" column last Sunday does not stay with the facts. Those of us who have been closely associated with Midland College since its founding are very much opposed to a four-year status for UTPB, and it has absolutely nothing to do with any sort of "anti-Odessa" feeling. In fact, it is rooted in our deep desire to see both Midland College and Odessa College continue to progress, which neither will do if UTPB becomes a four-year university.

The author seems to believe that Midland College and Odessa College will survive as technical schools, and the report commissioned by the "Friends of UTPB," and which contains many inaccuracies, forecasts that same result. I do not believe the people of these cities want their fine community colleges to go backward to no more than technical-vocational status. We have worked hard and spent millions of tax dollars to build an outstanding community college here, and much "blood, sweat and tears" has gone into the effort.

Four-year status will not solve UTPB's problems. What will solve the problem is for UTPB leadership to really get behind and pursue what the school was established for in the first place: to work with the area community colleges to establish a cooperative, outstanding curriculum with the first two years being made available by the existing, functioning, great area community colleges, and the last two being furnished by UTPB. Until recently, UTPB has never made any movement in that direction which, more than any other single factor, accounts for its problems. I know that Midland College is ready to cooperate, has always been, and is doing so, now that the Board of Regents has mandated that UTPB do it.

Adding two more years to UTPB's curriculum will not solve UTPB's problems, but will be disastrous to Midland College as we know it.

Band ratings

To The Editor:

Last Saturday my wife and I attended the regional high marching band contest. Having had both a son and a daughter in these contests for a total of eight years now, we have become quite familiar with the various school bands and the ratings usually assigned to these schools.

Midland High School, our daughter's school, received a 1 rating last week and most of us were happy with the achievement. Permian also received a 1 and Big Spring received a 2. It is these ratings, Permian and Big Spring, that I feel are open to question. Permian and Lee were chosen to advance and represent the district. No problem with Lee. They looked and sounded great. Not so with Permian. This year's Permian band was not up to the standards of past Permian bands. I believe they were chosen on past reputation, not current performance.

I believe that Big Spring was a victim of a similar blind spot with the judges. Up until three or four year ago, Big Spring bands were terrible. Since then they have improved dramatically and this year's band certainly looked as good as the other area bands. They should have also received a 1 rating. They were given the lower ranking, I believe, because of their past reputation, not their current performance.

Caring Midlanders

To The Editor:

Once again this year, Midlanders have responded in their uniquely warm-hearted, generous manner to the United Way's annual campaign.

From our vantage point, we saw and heard many examples of the negative effects of this year's economy. Yet we saw, too, individuals who cared enough about serious needs in our community to reach a little deeper into their pockets in order to help.

Many employee groups increased their giving significantly over last year. Individuals who had never contributed before came forward to help. Those who could help did so, and the result, an achievement of $1,612,925 which we reported last Wednesday, proved that, indeed, each pledge was vital in helping to raise the funds participating agencies will need to operate United Way supported programs and services in 1983.

For the support the United Way received from all parts of the community, especially The Reporter-Telegram, and for the opportunity we were given to help, we want to say "Thank you."

Joe Kloesel, Chairman
Campaign for 1983

Jack Steele, President
United Way

Puzzled about vets

To The Editor:

I have seen a lot, and I have heard a lot. But there is one thing that puzzles me. I hope that someone will enlighten me on this issue. The issue is Veteran's Day.

For the past week I have been hearing about Vietnam veterans on Veteran's Day. I have heard a lot of reports and I would be grateful if someone could enlighten me on this matter. Is it only Vietnam veterans that are considered or do they take into account World War I and World War II veterans?

The reports from the TV and radio are nebulous and puzzling. I would like someone to shed some light on this quandary.

Grateful parents

To The Editor:

On behalf of all the parents whose boys were able to participate in the Midland City Recreation Department flag football program this year, I wish to thank Mr. and Mrs. Darrell Bolton who spent countless hours keeping this fine program alive and thriving in Midland.

The initial publicity, finding coaches and officials, organizing teams, and developing a schedule was accomplished with true volunteer spirit. The Bolton's efforts and dedication to our youth in Midland is to be commended.

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

Polls indicate that more women than men are Democrats and more men than women are Republicans. This information can make politics a lot simpler, especially if we segregate the parties like restrooms.

* * *

With the parties re-labeled "Men" and "Women" our very bodies will eliminate the need for campaign buttons.

* * *

If a woman wants to be a Republican or a man wants to be a Democrat, they may do so providing they understand that they cannot enter the party headquarters without knocking.

* * *

The Men's Party must nominate a man for president and the Women's Party must nominate a woman. Since women outnumber men, we will finally have a woman president, and her husband will be First Man.

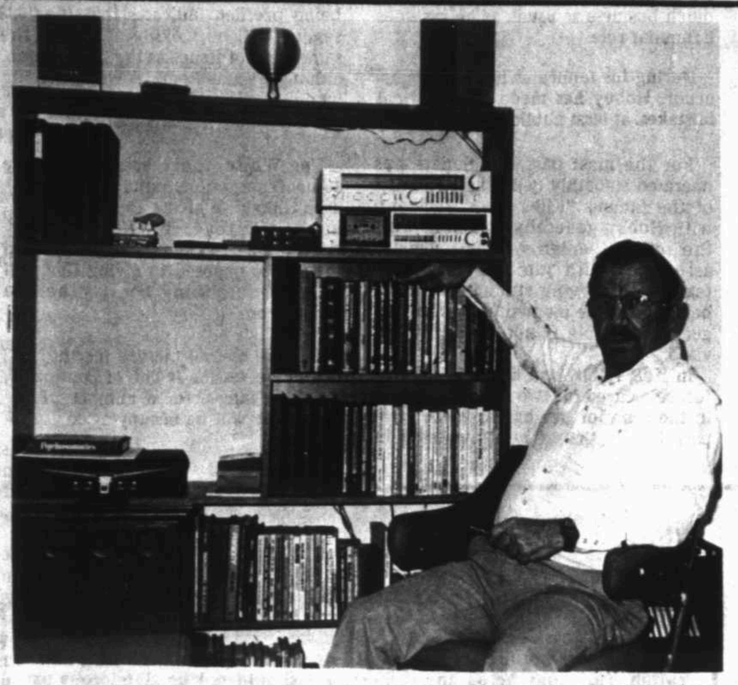

* * *

The First Man will have a favorite cause, a new Equal Rights Amendment which will guarantee the end of the sexual harassment of Republicans.

Frank Mcfarlin can help you to stop that habit that you have been trying unsuccesfully to stop for so long. Hypnosis is wonderful, relaxing, and excellent for training your mind for many different things. For a free consultation or more information, call Frank McFarlin at 694-5485.

You can kick the habit with hypnotherapy

Everyone has a bad habit he/she would like to change! Some of the most common include smoking, drinking, and overeating. Once you really get into the habit, it seems almost impossible for you to change it, even though you may really hate it. Even though you really want to stop, you just can't seem to do it. You have tried everything possible, but you just can't! Well, you can!! When everything seems to have failed and you just can't quit and it seems that the habit will follow you around the rest of your life, call on Frank McFarlin. Clinical hypnotherapy could just be your answer.

Hypnosis is widely misconceived by the public today. Because of its gross misuse early in its history, hypnosis has been looked upon as something bad, some sort of witchcraft, and has been shunned. But when properly used as it is today, hypnotherapy can control weight, smoking,and drinking, improve memory, concentration, study habits, social life, business life, and marital life, eliminate frustrations, anxieties, tensions, and stress,... the list goes on and on. Anything that you really want to do, hypnosis can help you to "train" your mind.

Everything you do is controlled by your sub-conscious mind. All actions, reactions, speech, etc. comes from your sub-conscious mind. That's why even though you may consciously want to quit smoking, it is so hard to actually quit. Your sub-conscious is so used to the habit that you have to make a conscious effort over and over and over again until you "train" your mind to reject that next cigarette. Hypnotism allows the sub-conscious to come through and be open to suggestion from the hypnotist, who communicates directly with it. But the hypnotist cannot make you do anything you do not want to do! Your mind can and will reject any unfavorable suggestions. You must really want to change your habit so that your mind will not reject that suggestion. The direct communication with your sub-conscious allows you to "kick the habit" in only a matter of three or four sessions, not a period of months or even years that it may take you to do it consciously.

The state of hypnosis is something that is also grossly misconceived. A hypnotic trance is merely a state of relaxation, very extreme and yet very natural. While in a hypnotic trance, you are not "asleep" and unaware, instead you are conscious and aware. If anything, your senses are more acutely aware than normal. The feeling is one of tremendous relaxation, but total awareness. Everyone goes through several hypnotic trances every day, both right before you go to sleep, and right as you wake up.

A hypnotherapist is merely a coach to help you to train your mind to react in the desired manner at any given circumstance. He helps your mind to control emotions, pain, habits, memory, etc. Hypnotism is safe, easy, and effective, and is finding widespread acceptance in modern times as people realize that the myths associated with hypnotism are merely exaggerated tales. Hypnotism is a wonderful treatment for many people, as long as they really want to be helped. If you would like more information on hypnotherapy, call Frank McFarlin for a free 30-minute consultation at 694-5485.Hypnotherapy could be the cure that you have been hunting for, but gave up on!

Cattleman's Steak is a special dining pleasure

Everyone deserves a treat every now and then! No matter what you do or who you are, you deserve to be treated at times. If you enjoy eating, it sometimes seems a hopeless case to find a place that you really consider a treat without feeling that the place is feasting on your pocketbook. Good food at an affordable price is often hard to find. Or is it? If you just can't seem to find the right place to eat, with delicious food at a moderate price, you just haven't looked in the right places. Tonight, treat your family, as well as yourself, to a pleasant evening meal at Cattleman's Steak House.

One trip to Cattleman's and you'll love what owners Bill and Pat Henkle have done to serve you. The pleasant, relaxed atmosphere and the friendly, efficient staff will make you see what a treat eating really can be!

Appetizers at Cattleman's range from an extra large or regular size mountain of onion rings, to shrimp cocktail, fried zucchini, or fried mushrooms. Maybe a hot bowl of homemade soup, steaming chili, or frito pie would better suit your tastes. The salad bar at Cattleman's is truly a work of art.

To complement your dinner, Bill and Pat have included a good selection of wines, champagnes, and sherry, ranging from inexpensive to exquisite. They serve only the premium beers, those generally considered to be the best.

Now comes the steak, cooked to perfection just the way you love steak. Dinner steak, club steak, or ribeye would be the perfect way to fill even the hungriest tummy. Sirloins come in all sizes, from sirloin for one up to sirloin for eight. T-Bone steak is an old favorite at Cattleman's, and comes in three sizes to satisfy even the hungriest appetite. Prime rib is a prime choice of many hungry diners (when available).

For those of you who are not quite so hungry, Bill and Pat provide the all-American favorite hamburger and cheeseburger, each available in two sizes. If you really want to spice it up, try their jalapeno burgers. Grilled cheese, ham and cheese, steak sandwiches, and a delightful turkey, ham and cheese sandwich are waiting for you there if you only have a light appetite.

Kids are welcome at Cattleman's, too. Special child's plates are available for the little ones. Beverages include tea, milk, soft drinks, and coffee. And the dessert is heavenly, if you have any room left after the steak. Top it all off with scrumptious cherry or blueberry cheesecake or delicious pecan pie. Hours at Cattleman's Steak House are from 10:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 9:30, Monday through Friday, and 5:00 to 10:00 on Saturdays. Cattleman's is closed on Sundays. And if the parking lot is full when you get there, go on and stop. It almost always is, and you very rarely have to wait more than five minutes to be seated.

Cattleman's Steak House, at 3300 N. Big Spring in Midland, is the best thing to happen to Midland since... well, oil! Treat yourself to an evening meal at Cattleman's tonight and see for yourself why it is so special.

Dream vacations every year with Adventure

Although it is usually a very enjoyable experience, travel can also present a few problems. It seems that no matter how meticulous you are in your planning, you always leave a few details undone. There is so much to do to prepare for a trip now, something will invariably be left out. You need help! That's where the friendly staff at Adventure Travel comes in. They help thousands of people plan their dream vacation each and every year. They are experienced, reliable, friendly, and efficient. For the perfect vacation, step into the world of Adventure Travel.

Whether it be a trip to Hawaii or a Caribbean cruise, most people see their dream vacation as, just that, a dream. They see it as a luxury to dream about that is far out of reach. That is totally untrue! You will be surprised at the cost of your dream vacation. It will more than likely be less than you expected. All you have to do is to put back just a small amount each and every week in your own little "travel fund," and you could be dancing and dining on a luxury liner, or looking out of the airplane at the blue sky and ocean at this time next year instead of sitting at home reading the newspaper!

There's no vacation quite like a Norwegian Line Caribbean Cruise. If you don't already have a dream vacation, this would be the one to take. This is the big travel trend of the 80's. And no wonder! Where else can you escape to year-round sun and be waited on around-the-clock as you enjoy the fantastic experience of being at sea? Chooses any of five great ships and six imaginative itineraries from NCL. Favorite destinations include St. Thomas, Nassau, and San Juan. Effective immediately, NCL will offer FREE ROUND TRIP AIR FARE to Miami from over 100 cities in conjunction with NCL's 7-night Caribbean cruises sailing from Miami until January 16,1983! See the professional staff at Adventure Travel; it costs no more for us to book your vacation than if you made the reservations directly with NCL. And we can also help you select your cabin and take care of most of the details. This is just one more way that the friendly staff at Adventure Travel stands out fron the rest.

If you are ready to take that vacation that you have always dreamed of but never thought you would get to take, cal on your friendly neighbors at Adventure Travel. And if you want to take a trip for the Christmas holidays, or even give a trip as a gift to someone you really love, NOW IS THE TIME!! Owner Patsy Welmaker urges you to stop by and see the world of difference Adventure Travel can make to you.

Wall Street uncages Tigers

By MARTIN BARON

NEW YORK — Perhaps it was only appropriate that, when "Cats" was slated to become the smash hit of Broadway, the showmen of Wall Street rolled out their own flashy felines.

It all started in late August when Merrill Lynch issued its Treasury Investment Growth Receipts, an appellation that was purposely compressed into the aggressive acronym "Tigers."

Then came Salomon Brothers, with its Certificates of Accrual on Treasury Securities (or "Cats"), and Lehman Brothers with its Lehman Investment Opportunity Notes (or "Lions"). By the time E.F. Hutton offered this new investment device felinity had happily run its course, and the brokerage settled for the simple name, Treasury Bond Receipts.

The investment houses' headlong rush to replicate Merrill Lynch's offering may have proved that Wall Street's favorite animal is neither the bull nor the bear, but the copycat. It also gave individuals an innovative investment product that is especially attractive if the nation is truly entering a sustained period of moderating interest rates.

Considering that the big investment firms have put more than $8 billion of these products on the market, they can be expected to wax enthusiastic. But there's more to this than stockbroker's hyperbole.

In many cases, these new devices "make a great deal of sense," argues Tom Hynes, vice president of Ayco Corp., a financial planning firm based in Albany, N.Y.

To understand these new products — becoming known as "zero-coupon Treasury securities" — think back to the summer when interest rates were still at historically high levels. At the time, many investment advisers were suggesting the purchase of bonds to lock in high interest rates.

There's a problem with your standard bond, however, if you want to lock in the high rates. When a corporation pays interest on the bond every six months, what do you do with the money? If interest rates are sliding, you will be re-investing the payments at a continuously lower rate. For small investors, sometimes the interest payment is so small there is not much of anything you can do with it.

So the trick is to find something that automatically reinvests the interest you receive at the initial high rate. Companies and investment bankers had already invented such a device in 1981 with zero-coupon corporate bonds. With these, individuals were required to put up a small dollar amount, say $300, for a bond that paid na lump sum, say $1,000, on maturity. No regular semi-annual interest payments would be sent to the investor. The interest payments would be incorporated into the final lump sum payment.

While the corporate zero-coupons were attractive, many investors really wanted to invest in bonds backed by the U.S. government — secure in the knowledge that this issuer would still be around in 20 years to make the final lump-sum payment.

The U.S. Treasury, however, does not issue zero-coupon bonds. So the wise men of Merrill Lynch set about this summer to package Treasury bonds in a way that they hadf the same effect. And then, the rest of Wall Street followed.

Here, in simplified form, is how they did it. Imagine a $100,000 Treasury bond yielding 10 percent annual interest by paying investors $5,000 twice a year for 20 years. Thus, we have a bond with the following features: 40 semi-annual coupons, with maturities ranging from six months to 20 years; and one $100,000 principal payment with a maturity in 20 years.

An investor thus can purchase a receipt to a specific $5,000 interest payment coming due at six-month intervals during the next 20 years. Today's price for that receipt, of course, would be a discount from $5,000. And an investor would pay less for a receipt for coupons with longer maturities.

For example, in a Merrill Lynch offering in August, investors would have paid $376 in order to receive a $1,275 coupon payment on Nov. 15, 1992. That investor would have received a yield to maturity of 12.375 percent. Someone with a shorter time horizon would have paid $1,124 for a $1,275 coupon payment on Nov. 15, 1983. That investor would have received a yield to maturity of 11.125 percent.

After buying hundreds of millions of dollars in Treasury bonds, the brokerages place them with a major bank which acts as custodian. Then the brokerages sell receipts entitling investors to specific coupon payments (or part of those payments).

"All he did was take the bond and sell it out in pieces," says O'Neil. Investors are willing to pay extra for a bond guaranteeing that interest is reinvested automatically. By repackaging the Treasury bonds, the brokerages receive more from investors than the brokers pay for the government securities — giving them their profit.

Most of the zero-coupons so far have been sold to institutional investors such as bank trust departments and pension funds. But individuals can buy them from retail brokerages such as Merrill Lynch, E.F. Hutton and Prudential-Bache Securities (which sells those that were issued by Salomon Bros.).

For individuals, the advantages are several and significant. The automatic reinvestment of interest inherent in these bonds "can make a very substantial difference over a period of time" if short-term rates are declining, Ayco's Hynes notes.

Another plus is that individuals who cannot afford to ante up $10,000 for a standard Treasury bond now can get into long-term U.S. government securities with small minimum investments.

With zero-coupon Treasuries, investors also known precisely how much their investment will grow. Someone who estimates a need for $25,000 in May 1990 could have bought $11,704 in E.F. Hutton's Treasury Bond Receipts when they were issued in September.

The final lump sum payment is "waiting out there, kind of like an oasis," says Hutton's Muratore. "You can say, 'I have a goal, and I can pinpoint the timing down to twice a year,'"

As with most investments, there is a catch or two. Of course, any device that locks in a fixed yield will be a bad investment if market interest rates escalate. Beyond that, the zero-coupon Treasuries can pose special tax difficulties.

Although investors do not receive regular interest payments, they are taxed as if they do. Unlike investors in regular bonds, Zero-coupon purchasers cannot pay the taxes out of the semi-annual interest payments.

As a result, zero-coupons should be used in ways that their interest is taxed only slightly or not at all. The zero-coupon Treasuries, from example, can be used in Individual Retirement Accounts or Keogh accounts, which are sheltered from taxation until money is withdrawn. They can also be used in custodian accounts for young children where taxes would be minimal because of their low income level.

Ayco's Hynes also says the zero-coupons may be useful in estate planning. Although recent estate tax law allows an unlimited deduction for bequests to spouses, some people resist passing property onto their spouses for fear that their children may never see any of the money. Some people also resist using the so-called "Qualified Terminable Interest Property Trust" because the money does not pass to the children until the surviving spouse dies.

Instead, Hynes notes, parents may give their children zero-coupon bonds either outright or in trust. Parents together can give each child up to $20,000 a year without gift tax. Such a technique assures that the children will get the money, and it means parents can ascertain in advance precisely how much their children will have on a certain date.

There is always the chance that investors will want or need to sell their zero-coupon Treasuries before they reach maturity. The brokerages maintain a market in their own issues, and many of the issues may end up being traded like any other bond. The CATs issued by Salomon Bros. (and also sold through Prudential-Bache Securities) were listed last week on the New York Stock Exchange.

Most do not care about market

SAN FRANCISCO — Many of the more than 32 million Americans who own stock in U.S. corporations have seen their worth skyrocket as the value of shares traded in the stock market has climbed about $400 billion — or 39 percent — in less than three months.

But others are saying, "So what?"

Many of this nation's 226 million residents don't own stock and haven't shared in the boom. Nor, in the view of many analysts, do they gain indirect benefits, despite arguments that the stock market surge is signalling an economic recovery and thus serves to buoy consumer confidence.

"Most people couldn't care less about the market," said Fabian Linden, head of consumer research for the Conference Board, a non-profit research organization. "They only look at things that directly affect their lives."

Others may not disagree, but they do argue that market booms serve a psychological purpose in raising public spirits, especially in sickly economic periods such as this one. What's more, some say, the stock market has successfully forecast recoveries well in advance of each of the seven official U.S. recessions occurring since 1948.

"To see those paper values increase the way they have been makes people feel their own net worth is higher," said Arthur Levitt, chairman of the American Stock Exchange. "It generally makes people feel better."

"Investment professionals are betting large sums of money that the economy is going to turn around," said Ted Gibson, senior economist at Crocker Bank here. He noted heavy participation by mutual funds, bank trust departments and others in the recent market binge. "They're betting on rising profits in the years ahead, and that should restore confidence."

But does it?

"It's difficult to answer," said Gibson. "What's happened in the market since the middle of August certainly wants to make you believe that an economic recovery is in the incubator."

That is a matter of debate. Although the housing market and factory activity seem improved, auto sales remain weak and industrial production hasn't picked up.

Although the value of shares has in many cases doubled virtually overnight, corporations have not gained directly from the market explosion. But, according to a number of corporate executives, related benefits can result.

If it chooses, a corporation needing additional revenue can use the increased stock value to sell additional shares to the public. The approach is not widely popular, however, since it dilutes existing shareowner holdings.

For Safeway, a company that has enjoyed both sharply higher profits and a recent 49 percent surge in its stock price, chief financial officer Harry D. Sunderland said conditions under which the company could raise funds by borrowing in the credit markets have improved substantially.

Collagen, a medical technology concern, has risen in price from $16 a share to about $23 since the rally began in August. David Douglass, vice president for finance, viewed the increase as a boost to employee morale. A company profit-sharing plan is linked to the value of Collagen stock, he said.

The securities industry, like the investor it serves, has gained immensely from the run of stock and bond prices. Merrill Lynch, the nation's largest broker, recently reported that profits for the third quarter nearly tripled over a year ago, in large part because of increased commissions.

"This bull market is still young," said Bill Rothrum, a broker in the San Francisco office of Shearson/American Express. "There's still a lot of money on the sidelines."

Ford recalls defective '82, '83 model trucks

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. is recalling about 80,000 1982-and 1983-model E- and F-series light trucks for repair of defects involving the rear axle and hood, the company announced Friday.

Ford is notifying the owners of 79,362 of the trucks that a lock wedge in the rear axle could shift, allowing the axle bearing-adjustment nut to loosen, said Robert H. Transou, Ford parts and service engineering manager.

The loose nut could allow the left-side axle shaft to move outward, which "could result in loss of rear-wheel braking or, in the extreme, separation of the left rear wheel assembly," Transou said in a statement.

Ford said it has had no reports of accidents or injuries related to the defect.

The recall represents about 14 percent of the E- and F-series light truck production for the 1982 model year and "a very small percentage of the 1983s because we caught them fairly early," said Ford spokesman Mike Davis.

The defect was discovered by a Ford dealer and was the result of an unauthorized change by a supplier, Davis said. He said it is company policy not to identify suppliers involved in a recall.

Another 667 1983-model F-series trucks equipped with diesel engines are being recalled for replacement of a hood hinge lift assembly which could allow the hood to close suddenly, Transou said in the statement.

Only about 100 of those trucks have been sold, with the remainder still on dealers' lots, Davis said.

About 75,000 of the recalled trucks are in the United States, 3,200 in Canada and 1,700 in export locations, the company said.

Analysts say declining inflation may be key to stock rally

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Among all the ingredients that have gone into the stock market's rally of the last three months, Wall Street analysts say the decline of inflation may be the most important.

Falling interest rates have received a large share of the credit for the spectacular rise in stock prices, creating as they have the hope of a recovery from the recession in the months ahead.

But many observers say progress in the battle against inflation — and the belief that it will continue — has had some powerful effects of its own on the choices investors make.

Compared to the double-digit rates that prevailed at the end of the 1970s, many economists are now estimating inflation rates for the next year or two at 5 percent or 6 percent, or even less.

That changes important variables in every financial equation, many economists believe. It encourages saving and investment, while discouraging the borrow-and-spend philosophy that prevailed among consumers until recently.

It makes all the inflation hedges that compete with stocks and bonds — real estate, precious metals, commodities, collectibles — appear less attractive, and financial assets more appealing.

"This new preference by individuals for financial assets is the reason we believe that we are only at the beginning of a major bull market in bonds and stocks," declared Arnold Moscowitz, economist at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., in a recent commentary.

The road ahead for the economy and the markets will be "bumpy" at times, he said, but "the age of inflation is over."

Bumpy was about the perfect word for the course of stock prices in the past week, with day-by-day readings for the Dow Jones industrial average of down 14, up 22, down 15, up 10, and down 14.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index fell 1.14 to 80.69, but the American Stock Exchange market value index gained 2.24 to 339.90.

Even analysts who believe a decisive victory has been scored in the battle against inflation concede that there remain some formidable obstacles in the stock market's path.

The financial problems of such countries as Argentina, Mexico and Poland still give many Wall Streeters pause. Should they provoke a crisis, fears persist that U.S. authorities will have no choice but to pump a new, inflationary supply of dollars into the world financial system.

At the same time, the problems of high unemployment and gaping budget deficits persist in this country.

"While we are constructive on the long-term inflation outlook, several risks make it difficult to feel completely comfortable," said Carol Brock Kenney, senior economist at Shearson-American Express.

"To address the financial distress and high unemployment both at home and abroad, we wonder if the Federal Reserve and other major central banks can successfully fine tune policies to promote recovery and prevent a financial crisis, without also reheating inflationary pressures.

"Experience shows," she added, "that sustained growth accompanied by price stability can only be achieved if we tackle the structural deficit problem. No system has ever moved successfully from inflation to disinflation without first bringing its budget into balance."

At the moment, the economy has still shown little or no evidence of recovery from the recession that dates back to the middle of 1981. However, some observers argue, stock prices can continue rising without a substantial lift in corporate profits, because lower inflation encourages higher price-earnings ratios for stocks.

"The real story for bullishness does not depend on a strong economy or strong profits," contends Greg Smith, director of research at Prudential-Bache Securities. "Stocks will do well because inflation is moderating and (price-earnings) multiples are going to continue to expand."
