Clements says unemployment insurance figures suspect

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — With the Texas Employment Commission projecting a rise of up to 2,000 percent in employer taxes just before the November election, Gov. Bill Clements says he may have the unemployment figures audited.

Clements told reporters he finds the TEC's figures "suspect" and doesn't think the projected rise in employer taxes jibes with what he called a not "all that significant" increase in unemployment in the state.

TEC announced last week that unemployment in the state hit 7.2 percent in June, the state's highest rate since 1970.

But TEC Chairman Nolan Ward said the projected increases in employers' contributions to unemployment insurance are based on "simple arithmetic" and are due to an increasing percentage of layoffs, not the unemployment rate as a whole.

Last month, the commission said that if trends continue, employers who now pay $6 per employee for unemployment insurance — the lowest rate in the nation — could face an increase up to $114 per employee after Oct. 1, when the new rate goes into effect.

"They are suspect," Clements said of the figures. "We are re-evaluating those numbers. Jarvis Miller and the budget planning office are making a very close analysis and we may even go over there and audit those numbers, because I just question them."

Comparing the 7.2 percent unemployment rate with the 6.5 percent figure of June 1981, Clements said the rise in the employers' rates is not warranted.

"I don't think a half of one percent is all that significant," he said. "Under those circumstances, I don't see how or why there should be any drastic change in those rates, and we're going to give it a very close look."

For every $5 million the state unemployment insurance fund drops below a $225 million "floor," employer taxes go up a tenth of a percent. The fund currently stands at $197 million.

"Our computations themselves are simple arithmetic," Ward said, "not a complicated process."

He said the agency was "very pleased" to show its computations to the governor's staff and suggested Clements' threat of an audit is politically motivated.

"Certainly any tax increase, especially one that is coming in October, is not particularly good," Ward said.

U.S. may send troops to Beirut

By The Associated Press

Several hundred American troops may be sent into west Beirut as part of a plan to evacuate guerrillas from the besieged PLO enclave, U.S. officials said today. Israel radio said President Reagan agreed to send 1,600 Marines.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly told the official Middle East News Agency in Cairo that the PLO has agreed to leave west Beirut by sea to "avoid destroying the city and shedding more blood," and that France would help transport the PLO out of Beirut.

But the French Foreign Ministry in Paris dismissed as "speculation and rumors" a report by Israel radio that France has agreed to contribute troops to a joint U.S.-French evacuation of guerrillas from Beirut.

It said any French participation would require the agreement of the Palestine Liberation Organization and the United Nations, "a more general accord by all interested parties and a precise mandate," none of which had been met.

There was no immediate comment from Israeli or PLO officials.

U.S. officials traveling with Reagan in California said the U.S. troops — whose service branches were still under consideration — might escort the guerrillas from west Beirut then take up positions abandoned by the PLO fighters.

But they cautioned that no final agreement has been reached, no request has been made for U.S. troops and that if they did become involved they would number "somewhat less than 1,600, considerably less. Maybe not more than half that number."

The officials, who declined to be identified, said any U.S. involvement in the Lebanese situation would be limited and temporary but acknowledged it was possible a U.S. presence would "become part of a final agreement." The last time U.S. troops were sent to Lebanon was in 1958, when President Eisenhower ordered Marines ashore to prevent the collapse of Lebanon's government.

West Beirut is surrounded by Israeli forces who have besieged the estimated 8,000 PLO guerrillas in the war-shattered Lebanese capital.

Israel radio said U.S. Marines would take over positions abandoned by the guerrillas, presumably to ward off possibly reprisal attacks on the Moslem population by Lebanese Christian militiamen.

Israel Radio said France agreed to contribute troops to the mission. It said the U.S. 6th Fleet would supervise the evacuation of the guerrillas from Beirut, and Washington would pay for the ships needed to take them out.

The radio said the guerrillas would go to several countries, including Algeria, Iraq, Egypt and Syria. It said the guerrillas had refused to go to Libya, despite that country's fervent verbal support for the Palestinian cause.

Minister trying changes on Argentine economy

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The economic minister appointed after the disastrous Falkland Islands war says he will devalue the peso, lower interest rates and restrict imports to stop what he calls Argentina's "state of decay without precedent."

Economy Minister Jose Dagnino Pastore, who took office last week in the new military government of President Reynaldo Bignone, announced the changes in a nationally broadcast address Monday night. The new policies reverse the free-market philosophy the ruling three-man junta has followed for six years.

Dagnino Pastore said the measures were needed because a 10-year high unemployment rate of about 11 percent, foreign debt of more than $35 billion and record numbers of bankruptcies are contributing to what he called "a national emergency."

Argentina's 28 million people have eagerly awaited a change in economic policy promised by Bignone, a retired army general who last Thursday replaced Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri as president. Bignone also has promised to return the country to civilian rule by March 1984.

Galtieri was forced out for his role in Argentina's defeat by Britain in the 74-day Falklands conflict, which critics say aggravated the ailing economy. Although Argentina has not agreed to stop fighting for sovereignty over the South Atlantic British colony, its forces there surrendered June 14.

The new economy minister said he would raise exports through devaluing the peso, Argentina's currency. Devaluations make foreign currencies more valuable, discourage imports and spur a country's exports by effectively lowering their prices on the world market.

Dagnino Pastore said the monetary exchange market would be split into commercial and financial sectors. The commercial exchange rate would affect imports and exports, while the financial rate would apply to other transactions.

The minister did not provide new exchange rates. The central bank said late Monday the commercial rate would be set each busness day. The financial rate would fluctuate according to supply and demand in the financial exchange market, the bank said.

Economic observers predicted the dollar — which last Friday was officially valued at 15,700 pesos — would go to about 22,000 on the commercial market and about 24,000 on the financial market.

The government closed exchange houses Monday, saying it wanted to discourage financial speculation before announcing the new measures.

Dangino Pastore said increased exports will stimulate Argentina's failing industries, which have been sharply hurt by tight credit and heavy imports. He also promised to increase wages to stimulate internal demand, but did not say by how much. The military regime has controlled wages since seizing power from civilian President Isabel Peron in 1976.

The new minister said interest rates — about 80 percent annually — would be lowered through strictly controlling the financial sector. He said this would reduce the number of finance and exchange houses, which government critics claim are the only enterprises making money.

Slimmer federalism program springs from Western talks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After months of public silence on "new federalism," President Reagan is pledging support for a new, slimmer version of his plan to turn federal programs over to the states.

The president was meeting today with 125 legislators and local officials from 13 Western states to reiterate his desire to give responsibility for some social programs to the individual states while the federal government assumes others.

Under the revised plan, negotiated over the last five months between the White House and state officials, about $39 billion in federal programs would be transferred to the states while the federal government assumed most of the expensive Medicaid program that is costing states $18.3 billion this year. Also, the federal government will keep the $11 billion food stamp program, which state and local officials fought taking over as originally proposed.

Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the basic welfare program now shared 50-50, would be assumed entirely by states.

Reagan, accompanied by his wife, Nancy, arrived here by helicopter Monday from his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch, where he has been vacationing since July 1. They spent the night at the Century Plaza Hotel, where their daughter, Patti Davis, joined them for dinner.

Before leaving his ranch, Reagan received a detailed written report on the Lebanese crisis from William Clark, his national security adviser. Then the president sent new instructions to his Mideast negotiator, Philip Habib, "responding in detail to points raised by Habib as he continues his peace mission in Beirut," deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes told reporters.

Speakes said Habib's efforts to mediate between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization have "reached a most sensitive stage. The discussions in Beirut are extremely complex with the many issues and many parties involved."

"The United States has made clear to all parties the imperative of the ceasefire," said Speakes. "It's essential that the fighting stop and negotiations proceed in good faith."

After addressing the state and local officials today, Reagan was visiting a senior citizen's center.

Tonight, the president and his wife were celebrating the first lady's birthday with a private dinner.

Columbia pilots set to answer queries

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Astronauts Thomas K. Mattingly II and Henry Hartsfield Jr. start answering questions today about their week in space while engineers study an apparently poor performance by two solid rocket boosters that put space shuttle Columbia into orbit lower and slower than planned.

Mattingly and Hartsfield returned to Earth and a July 4 celebration on Sunday from a seven-day voyage that completed Columbia's flight tests.

The astronauts relaxed on Monday, their first day off in months, but go back to work today. They will spend hours over the next several weeks answering questions from experts and writing a lengthy pilot's report.

Among the debriefers will be Air Force experts, because the fourth flight of Columbia included operation of a secret military payload.

Officials said the spaceship performed very well and has been cleared to start routine operations in the fall.

Experts examining Columbia at Edwards Air Force Base, where it landed Sunday, said it was in "really, really good shape."

"The vehicle overall is in far better shape than it was on the three previous missions," said Jim Harrington, ground operations manager for Columbia.

Workers found a small oxidizer leak in a small rocket thruster, but officials said there was no major problem.

But there was concern about the solid rocket boosters that on June 27 drilled the winged spacecraft into orbit.

According to Aviation Week and Space Technology, a respected trade publication, the solid rocket boosters provided less thrust than planned.

The magazine emphasized that the less-than-planned performance did not endanger the spacecraft or the crew.

Moon in longest total eclipse of century

By F.N. D'ALESSIO

CHICAGO (AP) — The longest total lunar eclipse of the century blotted out the moon early today, delighting thousands of moongazers, sightseers, merrymakers and scientists who gathered to watch it around the country.

Hundreds gathered to catch the free show at the Adler Planetarium on the Chicago lakefront. It was a celestial finale to the Independence Day weekend.

The eclipse achieved totality at 2:38 a.m. EDT, but the red color predicted by many astronomers in the upper atmosphere failed to materialize in the Chicago area, although witnesses in New York reported an orange color.

It was the longest total lunar eclipse since 1859.

The Earth's penumbra, or lighter area of shadow, began to cover the moon at 12:22 a.m. The moon appeared little different until it moved into the center of the Earth's shadow, or umbra, at 1:33 a.m.

The moon was totally eclipsed until 4:24 a.m., a period of an hour and a half.

As totality ended, the moon's eastern edge brightened first. By 5:29 a.m., the moon appeared normal, but the end of the eclipse was not until about 6:40 a.m., when the moon moved out of the penumbra.

The shadowed moon hung in the southern sky like the ghost of a moldy apricot, in Chicago barely visible through the haze and urban glare.

Earlier, Larry Ciupik, associate astronomer at the Adler Planetarium, said the moon "could appear copper-colored, or orange, or even brick-red." He and other scientists had predicted a more vivid than usual color for this eclipse because of the large amounts of volcanic dust spewed into the upper atmosphere recently by volcanoes such as Mexico's El Chinchonal.

The mood of many along the Chicago waterfront appeared to be one of resigned anticlimax — the show wasn't as spectacular as the weekend fireworks, but it was free, the night was warm and the beer was cold.

It was also an active night for scientists.

Peter Chen of the McDonald Observatory near Fort Davis in southwest Texas said his job was to measure the light of the stars while the moon was in shadow. No moonlight would interfere with the measurements, he said.

At the Fernback Science Center near Atlanta, Dr. Richard Williamson said he was taking pictures of the eclipse to analyze its color.

Several hundred visitors had a chance for close views of the moon through 12½-inch reflecting telescopes set up near the Adler Planetarium dome by the Chicago Astronomical Society.

One reason for the long eclipse, scientists said, was that the moon was near the most distant point it ever reaches in its orbit around the Earth. The farther the moon is from the Earth, the longer it takes to pass through the Earth's shadow.

The length of the eclipse also was caused by the moon's passing through the center of the Earth's shadow. Usually, it passes through a smaller area of shadow above or below the center.

For a total eclipse to occur, the Earth must be between the moon and the sun, with all three bodies in a straight line. A lunar eclipse can occur only when the moon is full because that is the only time the moon is in a position opposite the sun.

One of the most dramatic views of the eclipse was moments before totality, when the right-hand edge of the moon was still shining whitely like a scrap of rind clinging to an overly ripe French cheese. The thin shining crescent heightened the three-dimensional relief of the scene, making it obvious that the moon — like the Earth — is a ball.

Civil Rights Commission members to be replaced

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — As part of a clean sweep of the six-member U.S. Civil Rights Commission, President Reagan has nominated a 32-year-old anti-abortion activist who once called for abolition of the agency.

Congressional sources said close scrutiny will be given by liberal and moderate members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to Robert A. Destro, who just resigned as director of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights in Milwaukee.

Reagan has either replaced or indicated his intention to replace five of the six members of the commission. Sources who asked not to be identified said the current chairman, Clarence Pendleton, has indicated that the president will also name a sixth member to take the place of Jill Ruckelshaus, an active Republican feminist.

The Catholic league Destro headed is a nationwide organization of 20,000 members whose main purpose is to urge reversal of the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing most abortions.

The civil rights commission is prohibited by law from investigating and issuing reports on the impact of abortion law on minorities. It was set up to study and publish reports on the progress or lack of progress by minorities in fighting discrimination.

IN 1978, Destro testified before the same Senate Judiciary Committee and criticized the civil rights commission for failure to look into discrimination against Catholics and white ethnic groups like Poles and Italians.

Destro said the commission has a "pronounced animus toward religion and religious discrimination cases."

He said blacks, women and other "approved minorities" are well represented by organizations like the Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Organization for Women and don't need a federal commission.

Destro said the commission has failed to examine discrimination against Catholics and ethnic groups, and has therefore created a national impression that only blacks, Hispanics, Indians and women suffer from racial or sexual discrimination.

As a result, he said, "If it were to go out of existence today it would not be missed. Its functions...could well be carried out by interest groups such as the NAACP, NOW or any of the other special interest groups."

Asked later if he were urging that federal funds for the commission be cut off, Destro said, "Yes, that is accurate."

ONLY IF the commission were to place heavy emphasis on white ethnic groups and religious discrimination should it be allowed to stay alive, Destro told the committee, which was then considering the commission budget for 1979.

"It has in effect turned into a government lobby for special interest groups," Destro said. "The law is designed for people not for interest groups."

Destro was reported traveling to take a new job as a law professor at Catholic University in Washington and could not be reached for comment.

Last week, Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the 16-member judiciary panel, scheduled Destro and two other civil rights commission nominees for votes without the usual congressional hearings on their nominations.

But objections were raised and Senate sources said when Congress returns next week from a 10-day Fourth of July recess, there will be hearings on his qualifications and possibly those of two others nominated for the commission — Constantine Dombalis, 56, dean of the Saints Constantine and Helen Green Orthodox Cathedral of Virginia in Richmond, Va., and Guadalupe Quintanilla, 44, assistant provost at the University of Houston.

Quintanilla, although nominally filling a Democratic seat on the commission, campaigned actively for President Reagan and Republican Texas Gov. William Clements. The sources, asking not to be identified, said that activity raises questions about political partisanship on the commission.

CONTROVERSY OVER an earlier Reagan nominee to the commission ended last February when the Rev. B. Samuel Hart asked that his nomination be withdrawn, and Reagan agreed.

Hart, 50, aroused the opposition of women's, civil rights and homosexual groups after he told a news conference that he opposed the Equal Rights Amendment, that he was against busing to integrate public schools and that he did not consider that homosexuals had a civil rights cause. Published reports later said Hart was behind in loan payments the White House did not know about and had not registered to vote between 1966 and his nomination.

Destro's 1978 testimony before the Judiciary Committee was on behalf of the Catholic organization he directed.

"We are day-to-day becoming more and more aware that religious discrimination is rampant in this country. It is very, very subtle," he said.

Destro also said, "Those who run the commission are apparently so committed to their notion of who should share the 'good life' that they forget that others who do not share their religious beliefs or lack thereof or ethnic origins may be having a rough go of it."

He said, however, that he did not quarrel with the commission's conclusions about blacks, Hispanics or women, although he found the staff research on minority issues to be "shoddy."

Cocaine use on Capitol Hill probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., says it would have been the "height of hypocrisy" for him to refuse use of his office for an undercover narcotics investigation on Capitol Hill.

CBS reported Monday night that Dornan allowed his office to be used as the base for an investigation on cocaine trafficking. The probe led to the April arrests of former congressional page Douglas Marshal and two others, Robert Finkel and Troy Todd, the network said.

Dornan, who is on the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, said District of Columbia police and investigators for a newspaper columnist asked him in March 1981 if they could use his office.

Dornan said he did not know who narcotics agents were targeting but felt that because of this committee assignment he had to become involved.

"Since I was a member of the narcotics committee it would be the height of hypocrisy for me to be so outraged about narcotics use in the country and then to turn down a legitimate undercover operation that only wanted to credential themselves or headquarter out of my office," he said.

Dornan said that if some of his colleagues are users they should be prosecuted.

"You are the passer of laws," he said. "You must be held to a much, much higher standard. In this case if there is any sweeping under the rug of users it is a disgrace and simply must not happen."

The Associated Press reported last month that Finkel said he supplied cocaine to one assistant Capitol Hill doorkeeper, at least one Senate page and an employee of one congressional office. Sources said Finkel was cooperating with the grand jury and had started to name people he says he supplied with cocaine.

Police said a series of runners delivered drugs to Capitol Hill offices including those of congressmen, CBS reported.

At least five of the suspected runners have been subpoenaed, according to CBS.

The network said the runners have told investigators that they have personally delivered cocaine to the offices of about a dozen congressmen. There is also an allegation of delivery to at least one senator, CBS said.

Police investigate lawnmower theft

The burglary of a lawnmower valued at $375 was being investigated by Midland police this morning.

Dale Forse of 2401 W. Neely told officers the lawnmower was taken from the bed of his pickup while it was parked under the carport at his residence. The theft occurred between 7 p.m. Friday and 10 p.m. Monday while Forse was out of town.

An 18-year-old Midland man remained in Midland Memorial Hospital's post critical care unit this morning in serious condition after he was injured in a Monday afternoon traffic mishap.

Federico A. Malsonado of 4703 Comanche suffered a broken collar bone when the car in which he was riding left the road and struck a pole near the intersection of Mineola and Walnut streets at 4:54 p.m. Monday.

The vehicle was driven by Andres C. Bautista, 22, of 1401 S. McKenzie. He told officers he was reaching in the car's glove compartment for a tape when the accident occurred.

Bautista and a second passenger, 19-year-old Armando Montez of 307 W. New York, were treated and released from Midland Memorial.

Midland firefighters responded to three grass fires Monday that were caused by fireworks, according to fire reports. There was no damage listed as a result of any of the fires.

Snyder man charged in Odessan's death

SNYDER — Charges were filed Sunday afternoon against a Snyder man in connection with the shooting death here of a 28-year-old Odessan.

According to the Scurry County Sheriff's Department, the shooting, which occurred in a south Snyder park, apparently followed a dispute. Lincoln James Hooper, who was struck in the neck by a single bullet fired from a 30/30 caliber gun, was pronounced dead at the scene by Scurry County Peace Justice Dan Callaway about 5 p.m. Sunday, a sheriff's department spokesman said.

Arrested at the scene was Willie Lee Daniels, who was charged with one count of murder Sunday. Bond was set Monday at $10,000 and he was expected to be brought before the Scurry County Grand Jury today.

Wednesday's high will reach lower 90s

Although only a trace of precipitation was recorded overnight, Midlanders may see some rain with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms lingering through Wednesday.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the low tonight will drop into the upper 60s with the high on Wednesday expected to reach into the lower 90s.

Winds will be from the south at 5-10 mph tonight, shifting to north-northeasterly at 5-10 mph late tonight. Winds should remain northeasterly at 5-10 mph Wednesday.

Monday's high of 96 was eight degrees cooler than the record high of 104, set for that date in 1971. The overnight low of 72 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low of 57, set in 1931.

Appeals of air traffic controllers behind schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Appeals by thousands of fired air traffic controllers have fallen more than six months behind schedule and civil service officials say they can't speed up the cases because of budget and staff reductions.

The controllers' fight to regain jobs lost after their illegal strike almost a year ago also has become entangled in a budget squabble between President Reagan and Congress that has forced staff furloughs at the agency that is hearing the appeals.

The 310 employees of the Merit System Protection Board, including hearing officers and lawyers, are working reduced hours beginning this week because Congress and the president have not approved a supplemental budget for this fiscal year.

The board is considering appeals by about 10,900 air traffic controllers as well as appeals by thousands of other government employees who lost their jobs because of recent government cutbacks.

Lawyers for the board, meanwhile, are faced with a federal judge's ruling in California ordering the agency to begin hearings by Aug. 16 on the cases of 61 controllers. Judge Robert Takasugi, of the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, said the controllers are being denied their due process because of the delays.

The judge, in comments from the bench, said the delays have reached "constitutional dimensions" and threaten "irreparable injury" to controllers seeking to have their cases heard.

"We want to get on with it, but it's a matter of trying to be reasonable in this Catch 22 that we're in," declared Richard Redenius, the board's managing director. "We're telling our people they're on furlough and the court is telling us to hear the cases."

Board spokesman Lon Anderson said only a small number of cases have so far reached the point of a hearing. No controller has yet to regain his job through a formal appeal, although a few controllers have been reinstated through separate negotiations between the controllers and the Federal Aviation Administration.

Redenius said in an interview that the Merit System Protection Board has been fighting budget problems ever since the mountain of appeals came their way last September as a result of the strike and subsequent firing of 11,500 controllers by Reagan.

Since the first of the year all travel by hearing officers has been suspended, forcing those appealing a dismissal as well as the government agency involved to travel to regional board offices. The practice of providing free transcripts of hearings to appellants also has been stopped, adding costs to an appeal.

Redenius said the agency last summer had wanted an additional $5 million and an another 80 lawyers and hearing officers in its regional offices to handle the larger workload. Instead, the board's budget was cut from $15 million to $12.5 million and its staff reduced from 380 to 310.

By regulation the board has set a standard of completing an appeal within 120 days of receiving it. Redenius said in the agency's three years of existence the standard had been met 98 percent of the time. Agency rules still require that Congress be informed whenever the deadline is not met.

But then came the controller appeals as well as hundreds of other appeals by government workers who have lost their jobs as the Reagan administration moved to reduce the size of the federal government.

"We've got a good track record," Redenius said. "But in this case the whole thing collapsed. Our staff is dwindling and the work load has descended on us."

Most of the appeals by controllers were filed in September and should have been completed by the end of 1981 if the board's time table had been kept. Without additional money and staff, board officials knew early on that even a summer deadline was optimistic.

Now the official target for completing the controller cases remains the end of the year, but few believe even that is possible.

"Sure we can peck away at it...but the fact is that that date is likely to have to slip again," said Redenius. "We now have this enormous bubble of work that's been here for almost a year."

California Gov. Jerry Brown, a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate, brought several thousand delegates to the National Education Association convention to their feet Monday with a speech in which he accused President Reagan of robbing public schools to build nuclear bombs. The NEA delegates, meeting in Los Angeles, voted Saturday for an immediate, universal freeze on nuclear weapons.

Teachers march protesting Reagan's policies

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Public school teachers, snubbed by a vacationing President Reagan, are taking their protest against his administration's cuts in aid to public schools and support of tax breaks for private education to the streets.

Nearly 7,000 National Education Association delegates were planning to start the last day of their convention today with a one-mile march to dramatize their opposition to Reagan's policies.

The 1.6-million member NEA also was joining forces today with its archrival, the American Federation of Teachers, which is meeting in New York, to adopt a joint resolution attacking Reagan's plan to give tuition tax credits of up to $500 to parents who send a child to private school.

Reagan is making appearances in Los Angeles during a two-day stop on his California vacation, but the teachers' convention was not on his agenda. The teachers' march from Pershing Square to the Convention Center will not take them near Reagan's hotel, the Century Plaza.

The staunchly anti-Reagan NEA invited the president last February to address its 120th annual convention.

The White House, in an April 23rd letter signed by presidential aide Gregory J. Newell, turned the NEA down, saying, "in view of the developments in his schedule, it is certain the president will be unable to add this engagement to his commitments."

NEA leaders, who have spent much of the past five days blasting Reagan's domestic and military policies, were basking in the snub.

A NEA publicity man was dispatched to the president's hotel to invite the White House press corps to cover the march.

Democratic National Committee Chairman Charles Manatt was scheduled to speak to AFT delegates today in New York.

Albert Shanker, who was unopposed, won his fifth five-year term as AFT president on Monday, said AFT's director of public relations, Phyllis Franck.

A weighted vote, in which each delegate votes the number of members he represents, left Shanker with 311,807 ballots. No votes were cast against him, but representatives of 29,714 members did not mark their ballots and ballots representing 312 members were sequestered.

Dissident union members criticized the vote since it was not by secret ballot, but some admitted Shanker would have won big anyway. Franck said today the vote was open so local members would know their wishes had been carried out.

Not all of the 564,000-member AFT's locals are represented at the convention, which runs through Wednesday.

The theme of the NEA's meeting has been "Political Power for Educational Excellence," and in speeches and news conferences the NEA's leaders have made it clear that their political power ws directed against Reagan's tax cuts and military build-up, as well as his education cuts.

The teachers gave California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. a standing ovation Monday after he accused Reagan of robbing public schools to pay for nuclear arms.

"We are being divided, we are being frightened and we are being bamboozled down a black hole of nuclear escalation," declared Brown, a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate.

The NEA called for a new $4 billion federal school aid program patterned after the post-Sputnik drive to upgrade America's schools.

The so-called American Defense Education Act would provide local school districts with roughly $100 per pupil to bolster math, science and foreign language courses and to allow them to tap new computer technology.

The NEA delegates, who earlier endorsed a nuclear weapons freeze, also staged a "peace" rally Monday.

On the convention center's two huge television screens signs flashed reading, "You Can't Hug Your Kids With Nuclear Arms" and "No Nukes Are Good Nukes."

Judge outraged at woman's early release

DETROIT (AP) — A judge says he is outraged because a woman he sent to prison for cruelty to her daughter is being released for classes during the week.

"Sentences mean nothing to the Department of Corrections. It negates respect for the courts when you put the individual right back into her community. It's an absolute disgrace," said Detroit Recorder's Judge Michael Talbot, who sentenced Carolina Ortiz to prison eight months ago.

However, state corrections officials said the woman had been imprisoned long enough to qualify for a prerelease program designed to help inmates adjust to the community prior to parole or the end of their sentences.

Mrs. Ortiz, 38, pleaded guilty on Sept. 23 to child cruelty involving her 3-year-old daughter, Rafaela, who was found starving and covered with feces in the woman's west side Detroit home.

Rafaela weighed 15 pounds, 5 ounces when she was found in a dark, filth-strewn bedroom of the Ortiz home, authorities said. She was hospitalized, suffering from what doctors said was malnutrition.

The child now is recovered and awaits adoption in a foster care home, said Annette Piper, deputy director of the Wayne County Department of Children and Youth Services.

Hostage escapes from gunmen

BLOOMINGDALE, Ill. (AP) — Police stormed a restaurant where gunmen allegedly had been holding the manager hostage for nearly nine hours, only to find no one there besides the employee.

Police said they believe three or four men had invaded the restaurant, but left without taking anything before officers forced their way into the building.

According to police, the episode began when the restaurant's night manager, Gail Kelly, called the owner at about 3 a.m. Monday to say several men had her bound and blindfolded and were demanding the combination to the restaurant safe.

Owner William Rodriguez, 31, alerted officers, who surrounded the building about 3:25 a.m.

Officers said Miss Kelly escaped about 11:30 a.m., and police stormed the building less than an hour later, using explosives to blow off an armored door and firing tear gas into the building.

Miss Kelly, 30, had fled after loosening the electrical tape with which she had been bound, but first she had locked herself in a basement room for several hours because she was unsure where the intruders were, a police spokesman said.

"We are operating on the assumption that there was a crime," said police Sgt. David Rainey.

Miss Kelly was questioned and released, a police spokesman said.

Rainey said Miss Kelly told officers there were "three or four" intruders, but she was not able to describe them. He said evidence technicians had found some clues, but he said he did not know what the evidence was.

Groups at odds over nuclear plant report

WASHINGTON (AP) — An anti-nuclear group and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission are at odds over how to interpret a recently completed report detailing problems at power plants.

Critical Mass Energy Project charged Monday that the report on 19,400 "events" at nuclear plants over a 11-year period shows that 141 of them could have led to a possible core meltdown.

But the head of the NRC division which commissioned the report, titled "Potential Precursors to Severe Core Damage," called the analysis by the anti-nuclear group "a bit overdrawn."

Critical Mass cited a draft version of the report prepared in January 1981 by Oak Ridge National Laboratory as verifying "that nuclear power plants are riddled with design errors and their operation plagued by equipment failures and human errors."

"These are accidents I would describe as being near misses," said Richard Udell, an analyst for Critical Mass, which is a branch of Ralph Nader's Public Citizen Inc.

"It is only a matter of time before there is a serious accident," Udell said. He called the precursors, or forerunners, listed in the report "141 would-be meltdowns." A meltdown is the most serious of nuclear plant accidents in which the public could be exposed to massive amounts of radiation.

"They've taken the 'precursors' and seem to make them synonymous with full-scale core meltdowns and massive consequences," said Robert Bernero, head of the NRC's Division of Risk Analysis. "He's really leaping way out there."

Bernero said the final report, completed last month but not yet generally available, lists 169 precursors but says only 52 of them were "significant," meaning they had the potential of possibly causing damage to the plant.

And only in one of the events, the Three-Mile Island nuclear plant accident in 1979, was there any actual damage to a reactor core, he said.

The Oak Ridge study was begun at the NRC's request before the Three Mile Island accident, worst in commercial nuclear industry's history.

Of the 19,400 "events" reported to the NRC from 1969 through 1979, 169 were identified by the researchers as being "precursors to potential severe core damage" if additional safety systems had not worked or if certain other mistakes had been made in a particular sequence.

The researchers divided those into four basic categories: loss of main feed water, loss of off-site power, loss of coolant accident and steam line break accident.

Several of the 169 events also occurred when the plant in question was not operating. The analysis in those instances focused on the possibilities of what could have happened if the plant had been operating at the time.

"This is all before we started the big program of TMI (Three Mile Island) fixes," said Bernero. "For example, emergency feed water systems played a significant role in these events (in the report). These fixes are in place or are virtually in place in every plant in the country."

Former teen-age magazine editor's apartment robbed

Enid Haupt

Police said the jewels were taken from the fashionable East Side flat of Enid Haupt, 70, the former publisher of Seventeen magazine, who has given millions of dollars to the arts and medicine. Beneficiaries of her charity have included the Lincoln Center and the Mount Sinai Medical Center.

The burglary was reported when she returned home Monday afternoon following a weekend away, police said.

According to police, a burglar entered the 17th floor apartment by cutting out a glass panel on a balcony door while managing to avoid activating an alarm. Police said the jewels were taken from a safe.

How the burglar reached the balcony remained a mystery. A description of the stolen jewels was not immediately available.

OTTAWA, Ontario (AP) — Princess Anne, on a ceremonial tour through Canada, whirled through a busy day in Ottawa, surveyed some cattle, dined on caribou and then headed for the Yukon.

Before she departed Monday, the 31-year-old princess had met with local organizers of the international children's group she heads, cruised a canal and lunched with the prime minister.

Princess Anne

The princess talked to officials of the Ottawa branch of the Canadian Save the Children Fund, a non-governmental organization that operates self-help programs in about 30 developing countries.

Then came a cruise down the Rideau Canal, where people waved from the canal side. One kayak paddler had to fight to avoid capsizing in the waves caused by the cruise boat.

A tour of the Department of Agriculture's Central Experimental Farm was next. The princess and husband Capt. Mark Phillips have a farm at Gatcombe Park, Gloucestershire.

Pierre Trudeau

She also toured the farm's herd of Aberdeen-Angus, Herefords and Shorthorn cattle before leaving for a lunch featuring caribou hosted by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

In the afternoon, she attended a garden party, then placed the cornerstone of The Princess Anne Door for Use by Handicapped, a new entrance for the disabled, at Government House before leaving Ottawa.

As the princess boarded a plane for a five-hour flight to the Yukon, she told reporters she had had "a marvelous day."

PROVO, Utah (AP) — A former Polish diplomat who defected to the United States says the will for freedom is strong in his home country.

Spaskowski

"Solidarity still lives in the hearts and minds of the people," Romauld Spasowski told about 23,000 people Sunday in a Fourth of July speech.

Spasowski urged his audience to lend both moral and material support to the Polish people, suggesting they donate food, clothing and medicine through private or church-associated relief programs.

In December, Spasowksi resigned as Polish ambassador to the United States and defected after martial law was declared in Poland.

His speech at Brigham Young University's Marriott Center was part of the Provo Freedom Festival program.

Spasowski criticized the Soviet Union and urged Americans to fight what he called Soviet aggression.

"I know the communist and the socialist systems in Poland and in other countries are wrong," he said. "Once I grasped the full meaning of this, I could no longer continue to work for the government."

Enquirer to release Smith interview to police

LANTANA, Fla. (AP) — The editor of the National Enquirer says the tabloid will provide Los Angeles police officers investigating the death of comedian John Belushi with tapes and transcripts of an interview with the woman who last saw Belushi alive.

The Lantana-based paper announced Monday that it would give detectives the tapes in response to an attorney's claim that the woman, Cathy Evelyn Smith, was misrepresented in an Enquirer story titled: "I Killed John Belushi."

The investigation into Belushi's death was re-opened last week after detectives saw the story, in which Ms. Smith was quoted as saying she gave Belushi an injection of illegal drugs the morning he died of an overdose.

Sgt. Frank Reynoso, Los Angeles police watch commander, said a police statement released earlier said that detectives had again interviewed Ms. Smith.

Enquirer editor Iain Calder said the publication decided to "make available" the materials "only in response to statements made by Toronto attorney for Miss Smith in which he claimed that key portions of the Enquirer story were misleading."

Toronto attorney Brian Greenspan said Ms. Smith, who was paid $15,000 by the Enquirer for her interview, planned to bring a libel suit against the tabloid because of alleged misrepresentation.

"That simply isn't true," Calder responded in a prepared statement. "Our story is accurate.

Move over Hulk; It's 'Super Pope'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Move over, Captain America. Step aside, Incredible Hulk. The comic-book rack at your corner drugstore is about to feature the adventures of a new kind of super hero: the Supreme Pontiff.

Marvel Comics Inc., purveyors of Spider Man, the Hulk and similar characters, is producing a comic-book biography of Pope John Paul II, scheduled for publication next month.

And the Vatican approves. In fact, Marvel President James Galton said, the project was originally the pope's idea.

"He suggested it," Galton said.

"IT'S QUITE A good story," he added. "The pope grew up in a very interesting time, with the Nazis invading Poland and then the Russians taking over. And he's a very interesting man. At one point in his life, he was struggling over whether to become an actor or join the clergy. After he became a priest, he still wrote a couple of plays."

"He's not our usual type of character," Galton conceded. "But at least he does wear a cape."

This is not the first time Marvel has tackled a religious subject. Last year, in association with a Roman Catholic publisher, the company produced a comic-book biography of St. Francis of Assisi.

When John Paul II visited Japan in February, 1981, Marvel's representative in Tokyo, a Polish-American named Eugene Pelc, gave him a copy of the St. Francis book. A few hours later the Pope's official biographer, Father Mieczyslaw Malinski, called Pelc to ask whether Marvel was interested in doing a similar dramatization of the pontiff's life.

Marvel was. "I'm always willing to do something that will be commercially successful and give us some good publicity at the same time," Galton said.

Malinski, a longtime friend of the pope who still lives in their native Poland, gave Marvel a basic outline of John Paul's life and dozens of photographs tracing the prelate's career.

GALTON ASSIGNED Marvel writer Steven Grant and artist John Tartaglione, both Roman Catholics, to turn the biography into comic-strip form.

The result is 64 pages — twice the length of a normal super-hero comic book — that tell the story of the Pope's life through the eyes of a newspaperman covering the pontiff's travels.

"It may be the most accurate biography of the pope published in America," Grant said. Malinski approved the text and artwork page by page, he said, and excised several myths that have sprung up about John Paul's life — including an oft-told but apocryphal story that young Karol Wojtyla was commanded to enter the priesthood by a voice he heard after being run down by a Nazi transport truck.

"It's too bad that story wasn't true," Grant said. "It would have made a great comic-book page."

The narrative climaxes with the attempted assassination of the pope in 1981 and ends with John Paul plunging back into activity despite his doctor's warnings. "I was not given this office so that I could rest," the comic-book pontiff tells his physician as a crowd of the faithful waits beneath his window. "I have a duty to them, and I will fulfill that duty...I am not my own man anymore."

But the biography shies away from issues on which the pope has taken controversial positions — his emphasis on the Roman Catholic Church's traditional teachings on sexual morality and birth control and his warnings to the clergy to stay out of politics.

IN ONE PANEL, John Paul is shown telling a group of cardinals, "Families must preserve the fundamental values of the church." But that's about as specific as he gets.

"We don't deal with whether he's a liberal or a conservative," Galton said. "I don't know how you do that in a comic book."

Grant said he intially worried that by producing the biography, Marvel might implicitly invest too much significance and authority in the person of the pope — an issue that has long been debated within the Catholic Church and between Catholics and Protestants.

"But the way I did it, he's not that lionized," Grant said. "He really isn't presented as that saintly a figure, outside of one or two incidents. I tried to emphasize the human aspect."

"I'm not that strong on papal authority myself," he added. "But this guy I find likable...He comes across more like a Santa Claus than a Torquemada." Tomas de Torquemada was the chief prosecutor of the 15th-Century Spanish Inquisition, in which so-called heretics and non-Roman Catholics were executed.

Marvel plans an initial printing of 500,000 copies of "The Life of Pope John Paul II," almost twice the average printing of a super-hero comic book.

Most of the books will be distributed through Catholic schools and religious bookstores by the Paulist Press, the publisher that helped sell about 750,000 copies of the St. Francis of Assisi works. "Obviously," Galton said, "it's not going to be marketed the same way as we market, say, 'Conan the Barbarian.'"

WHAT NEXT? Both Galton and Grant said they doubt that the papal comic-book will touch off a major trend in religious publishing.

"Once you've done the pope," Grant said, "how do you top it? I mean, I think doing the life of Christ in comic-book form would be pushing it just a bit."

But Galton is ruling out nothing.

'Show Off Midland!'

"Show Off Midland!," Midland Chamber of Commerce's community awareness campaign about the impact of the convention and visitors industry on the Tall City's economic life, could not be more timely or appropriate.

The campaign, which began late last week and will continue through July 21, is intended to make Midlanders aware of the impact of the convention business. That's an admirable goal within itself. More than $3 million found its way into Midland last year via 52 conventions along with 14,000 out-of-town delegates. That's quite a lot of money, quite a number of visitors.

But there's another aspect to the convention industry, one that cannot be overlooked in a growing, dynamic city like Midland. That's community spirit and pride. People who are proud of where they live and the future they are helping to shape are not hesitant to promote their community throughout the state and the nation.

"Well," you may say to yourself, "what does Midland have going for it that I might want to talk to others about?" Plenty, if you'll take the time to think about it!

Midland is growing by leaps and bounds, as we all are aware. While it's true the growth rate has slowed somewhat from the heights of 1981, the latest statistics indicate more than 100 family units (estimated at something more than two people per family) come to Midland each month. And that's above and beyond the number that leave Midland in the same period.

The importance of Midland's role in the nation's energy future can't be overemphasized. The oil industry is Midland's lifeblood and, without a doubt, it will be the nation's single most invaluable energy source in the foreseeable future.

While much of the rest of the nation is suffering through the recession, Midland has remained remarkably immune for the most part. Some industries are suffering here, sure, but compare them with the suffering being experienced throughout much of the nation and you'll be glad you call Midland home.

Those factors and others have brought Midland into the national limelight, including the extremely low unemployment rate. There are many other features that make Midland a "beautiful" city in which to live, but it is the people of Midland who truly know and can describe to others what is attractive about the Tall City.

July is the month. Every Midlander should get involved in thinking promotion of the city. Tell all the people you know about Midland's beauty and you may see them in the Tall City next month or next year. Then it will be your chance to "Show Off Midland!"

'Old ways' convention

Democrats held a "national issues" conference or mini-convention in Philadelphia the other day that was "mini" in terms of new national policy alternatives but "maxi" in the way of costs to taxpayers.

The party's main order of business was to trot out prospective presidential candidates for 1984 and write an informal party platform to hold up until the 1984 convention. Except perhaps for California Sen. Alan Cranston's declaration that he's now in third place in the running for 1984, there was little new from the presidential prospects. Both front-runners, Sen. Edward Kennedy and former Vice President Walter Mondale, dismissed the possibility of a new Democratic agenda for the 1980s in their anticipated attacks on Reagan administration budget cuts.

As a result, the top proposals to emerge from the conference included a call for a $7.5 billion public works program to create 500,000 public service jobs, restoration of $30 billion in domestic budget cuts, and a $25 billion tax increase by putting a cap of $700 on the 1982 and 1983 income tax reductions.

The possibility that the economy would be on the rebound by 1984 — aided by the Reagan administration's program of tax cuts — and not in need of a massive and wasteful make-work program was ignored by most of the 1,000 Democratic delegates.

One exception was South Carolina's Sen. Ernest Hollings, who had the courage and intelligence to admonish the convention that the "Democrats in Washington discredit the party by failing to make an effort to control the (budget) deficit," and to warn them that "the Achilles Heel of the Democratic Party is managing the economy." A workshop also adopted a provision that says the party "recognizes that uncontrolled spending and massive deficits are not compatible with a strong national economy," which was incongruously approved by delegates in their haste to wrap up the session.

But for those looking to Philadelphia for new ideas and new leadership, the Democrats' rally cry for 1984 must have been disturbing. It amounted to more spending and more taxes in 1984.

Another View:

Junkie football players

The spreading use of — and dependency on — cocaine among National Football League players and, apparently, among many other professional athletes, poses not only problems for the affected leagues but, more broadly, for a nation whose cynicism toward the things it once ungrudgingly admired is already much too great.

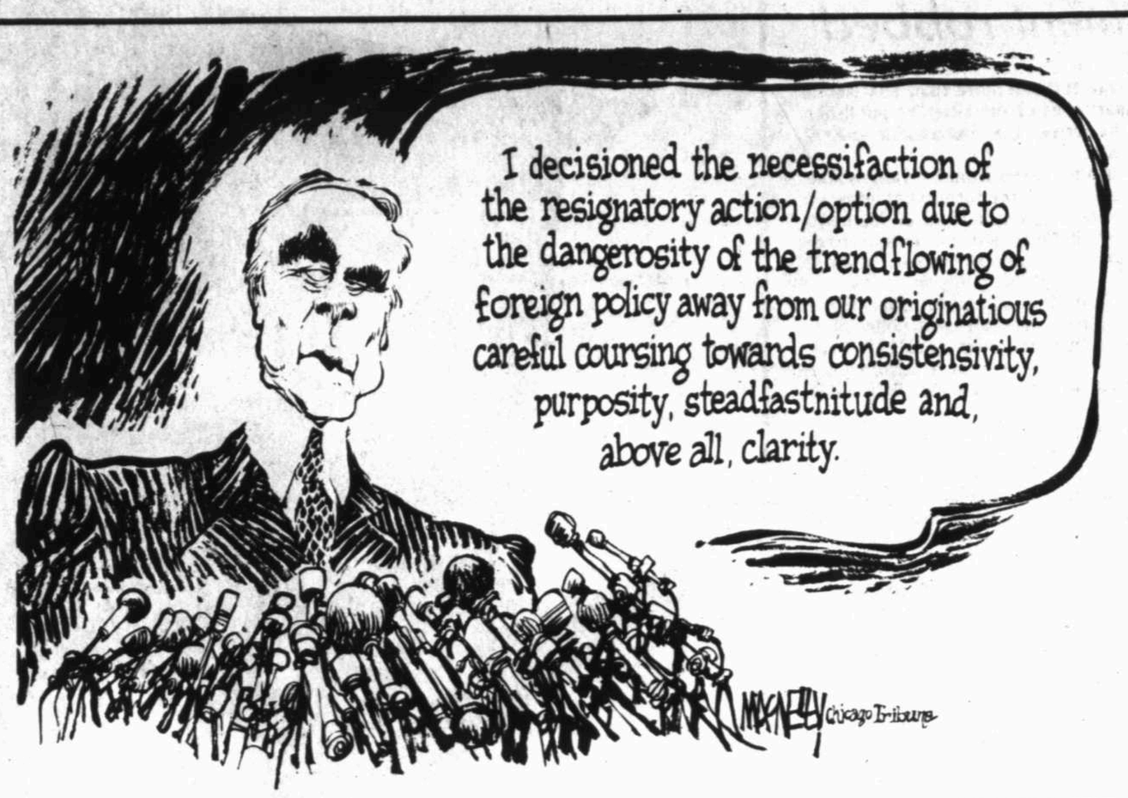

The full extent of the NFL's problems with cocaine is hard to determine. League officials say that while only 17 of the league's 1,500 players have been identified as "chemically dependent" on the drug, "it was quite possible" that there were as many as 50 in that category. In addition, the league's assistant director of security and drug abuse acknowledged that hundreds of NFL players may be using the drug, many of them regularly.

Recently, in an article in Sports Illustrated, a former NFL player charged that cocaine "now controls and corrupts the game." That charge is generally regarded as somewhat exaggerated, but there's no question that the issue, neglected by the league until last year, is now regarded with the utmost seriousness.

For the league, there are two immediate concerns — the general reputation of the game and its players and, more specifically, the possibility that player dependency on this expensive drug can be converted by gamblers into the power to control the outcome of games. There is no evidence yet that any player has been paid — either with drugs or cash — to throw a game, but league officials acknowledge that the longer the problem persists, the greater the chances that it will happen. In the meantime, there's no question that a number of promising careers have been ruined by cocaine use.

Beyond those considerations — considerations primarily for the NFL and the U.S. Justice Department, both of which are now investigating — is the broader concern of a nation that is so deeply involved with professional football and its players. Presumably no one believes any more in the mythology of the morally innocent athlete, though undoubtedly there are such athletes. Yet neither will the nation tolerate a system in which the typical player is regarded as a junkie playing only for his fix.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. remains vulnerable to terrorism

A consequence of Israel's mauling of the PLO is very likely going to be an outbreak of terrorism in the United States.

Charley Reese

The remnants of the PLO will likely blame the United States for Israel's military actions and having been defanged in Lebanon will resort to striking out with acts of terrorism.

If I'm right, we are likely to pay a bloody price for liberal gutting of the FBI and CIA and for the mindless stupidity of our immigration policies which have allowed literally millions of potential terrorists to come into the country.

Let me quote for you a few words from a report by N.C. Livingstone prepared for the Brookings Institution. Please note that the Brookings is a liberal, not a conservative, institution so what you are going to hear is not rightwing alarmism.

"In 1981 alone, six Americans were killed by terrorists in El Salvador, two in Turkey, one in the Phillippines, and one in the West Bank. Ninety-four others were wounded in terrorist attacks. The list of corporations victimized reads like a list of the Fortune 500."

"It is not inconceivable (this was written before the Lebanese invasion)," Livingstone wrote, "the ultra radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine could seek to force a change in U.S. policy by means either of a bloody and protracted terrorist campaign against people and targets in this country or by means of a dramatic ultimatum predicated on a threat to use a fright weapon."

Livingstone continues: "Both the PLO and the PFLP maintain cells in various locations around the U.S. that serve as underground way stations for fugitive terrorists. In addition to engaging in political and fund-raising activities, some of the cells are capable of planning and executing terrorist operations. In the nation's capital, one cell functions in a popular Middle Eastern restaurant, which is often the site of key political strategy meetings. Terrorism threatens the well-being and security of every American, and potentially even the security of the United States."

We are extremely vulnerable to terrorism. Compared to the Israelis, our security people are rank amateurs. The Secret Service, which has nothing to do but guard the president, has frankly done a lousy job.

Since 1960, we have had one president killed, one wounded, one shot at twice, one presidential candidate crippled and one killed. In just the last 22 years, two out of six presidents have been hit by assassins and a third had two narrow escapes. There is no way you can call that a good record for the Secret Service. The rest of the government has even worse protection.

Except for Lee Harvey Oswald, all of these were amateurs. The Palestinian terrorists may be evil, but they are damned good. They are professionals, absolutely without mercy, ready to sacrifice their own lives, and well armed with sophisticated weapons.

When the killing starts, a lot of liberals are going to wish the FBI had twice its budget and 10,000 informants and four million wiretaps. They will learn the hard way that the ultimate violation of civil rights is a bullet in the head or a bomb in the lap. They may even decide the FBI and the CIA are not enemies.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Aunt Juria brings Lebanese battle to halt

WASHINGTON — In the middle of the Lebanese war, the fighting in the Bekaa Valley was brought to a polite halt while an 88-year-old woman decided which side to choose. This is the story of Aunt Juria's odyssey:

Jack Anderson

It began with an outcry from her nephew in America, Sen. James Abdnor, R-S.D., whose parents immigrated to South Dakota from Lebanon. The Israeli invasion of his parents' homeland made Abdnor's Lebanese blood boil.

He confronted Menachem Begin when the Israeli prime minister appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The senator assured Begin that he grieved for the Israeli civilians who had been killed by terrorist attacks from Lebanon during the past 30 years. But, demanded Abdnor, did "those relatively few Israeli casualties justify the killing and wounding of hundreds of thousands of Lebanese and Palestinian women and children?"

Then he added an anguished personal touch: "My 88-year-old aunt lives in a small village in the Bekaa valley, near where your soldiers have attacked the Syrians. I have not heard from her since before your invasion and must fear the worst."

Israel's intelligence chief, who accompanied Begin, took careful notes on Abdnor's problem. As soon as he returned to Israel, he ordered a top aide to locate the old woman.

The senator's aunt, Juria Abdnor, lived in the tiny village of Ayn-Arab in the no-man's-land between the Israeli and Syrian armies. Using intermediaries, the Israelis arranged a temporary truce with the Syrians while they went looking for Aunt Juria.

On about June 24, Israeli officials found the old woman in her village. She was alive and unharmed, if a tad surprised by the attention.

The Israelis asked the senator's aunt what she wanted to do — go to Syria, stay put or what? Then it was the Israelis' turn to be surprised. Aunt Juria said she'd like to go to Israel. The Israelis were delighted to oblige.

The senator, his latest condemnation of Israel still stuck in his throat, told my associate Lucette Lagnado: "I didn't ask them to do this." But he added graciously: "I am grateful to the Israelis. I am grateful she is out of harm."

NEEDY CONGRESSMEN: The U.S. Congress can be a baffling source of mystery and dismay. Its members are men and women of reasonable ability and decorum. Yet the shabbiness in things small and large is so widespread that the majority is resigned to it.

Never mind that our elected representatives have problems producing even the most basic instrument of government — a budget. Never mind that it was ratified by legislators who seldom practice the economy they preach.

The "needs" they demand for themselves must seem bizarre indeed to truly needy Americans who have seen their food stamps or disability pensions cut off.

When the lawmakers make out their "wish lists" of merchandise they'd like the taxpayers to buy for them, they sometimes act like kids in a toy store or rural housewives leafing through the mail-order catalog.

Here are some examples culled by my associates Tony Capaccio and Jack Mitchell from files of the House Administration Committee, which controls requests for office supplies:

— Rep. Larry McDonald, D-Ga., an arch-conservative who purports to see communists behind every potted plant, requested $780 for a fancy Destroyit Security Paper Shredder for his Marietta, Ga., office. He apparently didn't want Kremlin agents piecing together old press releases and interoffice memos that had been fed through an ordinary shredder. The committee nixed his request.

— Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., requested $1,015 worth of camera equipment, "because the local press likes to have pictures of my activities in Washington." Gingrich was also turned down.

— Rep. Norman Mineta, D-Calif., asked the committee to reimburse him for a rented radio-paging gadget that his staff had lost. The committee refused, and Mineta was told to cancel the rental because it wasn't authorized. But Mineta managed to persuade committee chairman Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., that a pager is a "very valuable asset," and the $249.46 payment for the lost beeper was finally approved.

— Rep. Jim Hansen, R-Utah, wanted $200 for a microwave oven for his staff, and a $50 lamp for his own office. The committee said no on both accounts.

— Rep. William Ratchford, D-Conn., wanted $200 for an electronic filter to combat "stagnant air." Nothing doing.

— Rep. Gus Savage, D-Ill., requested $9.75 a month to rent a water cooler. Sorry, said the committee.

In fact, the Administration Committee regularly plays the Grinch role when wishful congressmen hang up their stockings.

Take that matter of the House photographers. The General Accounting Office found that in 1981 the Democratic members' photog had produced about 100,000 prints, while the Republicans' snapper had cranked out 220,000 for his less numerous clientele. Individual Republicans, the GAO found, had asked for anywhere from three copies of a snapshot to 10,000 — all free, of course — while Democrats' requests ranged from five copies to 2,000.

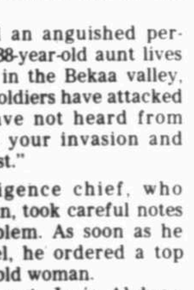

At the prodding of Rep. Joe Minish, D-N.J., the House Administration Committee limited the number of copies to five per month.

INSIDE REPORT:

George Shultz facing first important test

WASHINGTON — A preview of the course to be taken by George Shultz as secretary of state may come soon when he decides whether to accept White House recommendations to name J. William Middendorf, a veteran conservative Republican activist, to the long-unfilled vacancy as under secretary for economic affairs.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Alexander Haig as secretary resisted national security adviser William P. Clark's recommendation of Middendorf, currently U.S. ambassador to the Organization of American States. The White House in turn blocked Haig's choice of Assistant Secretary Robert Hormats, a career holdover from the Ford and Carter administrations, who is now about to leave government.

If Shultz goes along with Middendorf, there will be two unavoidable interpretations: 1) that he will pursue a more conservative international economic policy than was followed by Haig and Hormats; 2) that he is more amenable to White House wishes than was Haig.

GLENN'S SALVATION

Sen. John Glenn may have to swallow his test pilot's pride and ask former Democratic national chairman Robert S. Strauss for help in order to get some momentum behind him for the 1984 presidential nomination.

Although Strauss often has been whispered into Glenn's corner, the truth is he has neither offered nor been asked for his support. Strauss is closer personally to former vice president Walter Mondale than to Glenn. Nevertheless, friends think Strauss could well say yes if asked by Glenn.

Strauss, the supreme insider of the Democratic Party today, might be able to deliver to Glenn some governors and other key Democrats who are alarmed by Sen. Edward Kennedy as the potential nominee. Considering his lackluster performance at the Democratic mid-term conference in Philadelphia, Glenn needs just such help.

SLOWING THE FREEZE

Senate conservatives will try to slow down the nuclear freeze movement by sending the Senate version to a most inhospitable home: the Senate Armed Services Committee, headed by anti-freeze senator John Tower.

The resolution approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was a Republican version sponsored by the committee chairman, Sen. Charles H. Percy, rather than Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's original. Nevertheless, conservatives oppose it, mainly because it endorses the never-ratified SALT II treaty.

A footnote: Percy has turned down administration requests to amend the resolution to say the U.S. "should" (not "shall" as in his resolution) obey the terms of SALT II. Percy argues that the resolution only echoes what President Reagan himself said at Arlington National Cemetery on Memorial Day.

WHITE HOUSE CAUTION

The White House strategy to put President Reagan's prestige squarely behind the campaign to defeat Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. for the Senate in California this year has one highly-influential dissenter: Michael K. Deaver, member of the White House staff big three.

Despite polls showing Brown trailing the Republican nominee, Mayor Pete Wilson of San Diego, Californian Deaver is suspicious. He has expressed doubts inside the White House whether Wilson could really beat Brown. Considering Deaver's control over presidential schedules, that puts a cloud over active Reagan intervention in the Senate race.

A footnote: Deaver, taking a more vigorous stance on political matters, has been consulting with conservative pollster Arthur Finkelstein.

SPLIT JEWISH GIVERS

The Connectcut Senate race is splitting Jewish contributors down the middle with political consultant Morris Amitay leading a campaign against Democrat Toby Moffett on grounds of alleged Arab sympathies.

Amitay, a highly-influential figure in the American Jewish community, is backing Republican senator Lowell Weicker. Amitay is attacking the American-Lebanese Moffett's record on Israel, pointing to the congressman's meeting with the PLO's Yasir Arafat and other Palestinian Arabs. But Mark Siegel, who led the successful campaign for Democratic endorsement at the Philadelphia conference of Israel's Lebanese invasion, is backing Moffett as solidly pro-Israel.

A footnote: Should Prescott Bush Jr. (the vice president's older brother) defeat Weicker in the September Republican primary, the split would disappear. Moffett would have overwhelming Jewish support against Bush.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, July 6, the 187th day of 1982. There are 178 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 6, 1923, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was formed.

Also on this date:

In 1535, Sir Thomas Moore was executed in England for treason.

In 1699, pirate captain William Kidd was taken into custody in Boston. He was later hanged in England.

In 1945, Nicaragua became the first nation to formally accept the United Nations charter.

In 1979, Nicaraguan president Anastasio Somoza sent 1,000 soldiers to the city of Masaya, held by rebels determined to oust him.

Ten years ago: A U.S. district judge enjoined photographer Ronald Galella from approaching Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis or her children to take their photographs. The judge ruled that Galella had "relentlessly invaded" the former first lady's right to privacy.

Five years ago: President Jimmy Carter reassured leaders of American Jewish organizations that Arab states should establish full diplomatic relations with Israel as part of an overall Middle East settlement.

Today's birthdays: Television talk show host Merv Griffin is 57. Actress Janet Leigh is 55. Actor-producer Sylvester Stallone is 36.

Thought for today: Wit is the salt of conversation, not the food. — William Hazlitt, English writer (1778-1830).

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Navy Airman Apprentice Glenn W. Roberson, son of Lola Rodriguez of Crane, Texas, has completed the Basic Avionics "aviation electronics" Technician Course.

During the self-paced course at the Naval Air Technical Training Center, Millington, Tenn., the students received instruction on the fundamentals of electronic circuitry and were introduced to the wide variety of electronic equipment items currently installed aboard Navy and Marine Corps Aircraft. They studied airborne radar, communication and computer equipment, plus the technical manuals, safety precautions and troubleshooting procedures used for maintaining each.

Navy Airman Recruit Mark F. Edens, son of Patsy Edens of 1011 W. Storey, Midland, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, Orlando, Fla.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in physical education and hygiene.

Navy Fire Control Technician 3rd Class Thomas M. Thompson, son of Doris O. Thompson of Andrews, recently completed refresher training off the coast of southern California.

Thompson is a crew member aboard the guided missile cruiser USS Bainbridge, homeported in San Diego.

Refresher training is designed to place the ship and its crew in a simulated combat environment to test and prepare them for future operations and to increase the ship's combat readiness. The training included testing combat systems in anti-air, anti-submarine and anti-surface ship warfare.

Navy Airman Recruit Bryan K. Warner, whose wife, Rochelle, is the daughter of William Walters of Midland, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, San Diego.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid.

Marine Lance Cpl. George A. Stanley, son of Reese and Barbara Summerlin of Midland, has departed on a deployment to Okinawa.

Stanley is a member of 3rd Battalion, 2nd Marines, Camp Lejeune, N.C. The battalion will spend six months overseas as part of the Marine Corps' unit deployment program.

During the deployment, his battalion will conduct training exercises with the 3rd Marine Division and the U.S. 7th Fleet.

Marine Lance Cpl. Gilbert Mendoza, son of Maximo and Corina Munoz of 1406 S. Loraine, Midland, has reported for duty with 3rd Battalion, 12th Marines, on Okinawa.

Marine Sgt. Juan M. Carrillo, whose wife, Ila, is the daughter of Bonifacio and Ila Hernandez of 1108 W. Dakota, Midland, has been awarded a Meritorious Mast while serving with Headquarters and Maintenance Squadron 36, Marine Corps Air Station, Futenma, on Okinawa.

A Meritorious Mast is official recognition from a Marine's commanding officer for superior individual performance. It is issued in the form of a bulletin published throughout the command, and a copy is entered in the Marine's permanent service records.

Marine Pfc. Joseph C. Weaver III, son of Donna and Joseph Weaver Jr. of 1505 McDonald St., Midland, has completed the small arms repair course.

The six-week course was conducted at the U.S. Army Ordnance Center, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. Students received instruction on the operation, inspection, maintenance, and repair of rifles, pistols, shotguns, submachineguns, grenade launchers, mortars and other automatic weapons. They also studied the preparation of weapons for shipment and storage and related safety precautions.

Uninspected elevators pose threat to Texans

DALLAS (AP) — A state housing official says a "calamity potential" exists for the thousands of people who ride elevators in Texas skyscrapers because most of the state's elevators are not subject to government inspection.

"Imagine your risk in a major building in Dallas," said Roy Fewell, code and standards specialist for the Texas Community Affairs Housing Division.

"You could have an elevator collapse that was filled with people. You could have a lot of people killed or injured," he said.

Texas, one of the few states that does not require elevator inspections, has left it to cities to set up their own standards and inspection programs.

But few have, according to Walter G. Martin, state director of occupational safety.

Houston is the only major Texas city with an elevator inspection program, Martin said.

"Anybody can put up anything they want to in the state of Texas as far as an elevator is concerned," Martin said. "We have elevators in the state that have probably been in operation for 50 years that have probably never had a safety inspection."

An average of 15 people die each year and 400 others are injured in elevator accidents in the United States and Canada, according to officials of the Otis Elevator Co.

Officials say accidents involving Dallas' 2,500 elevators are rare. In 1976, a Dallas man fell to his death when he stepped out of an elevator that had stopped between floors.

Neither the city nor the state keeps records of elevator accidents.

Meanwhile, the state relies mostly on the industry to police itself — a situation that some industry experts believe dangerous.

"It's not the kind of thing that's going to kill a lot of people right now," said Robert Lauer, engineering vice president of Schindler Haughton Elevator Corp of Toledo, Ohio. "But it'll make its mark in time."

The state made one attempt to regulate elevator safety, but abandoned the program under the mistaken belief the federal government supervised such programs, officials said.

In 1967, the Texas Legislature created the Texas Occupational Safety Board to draft rules to prevent elevator hazards. The board proposed regulations in 1973 that would have required building owners to have their elevators inspected annually by qualified mechanics.

The Legislature cut off funding for the program in 1974.

New drug used in heart transplant

HOUSTON (AP) — The first patient to receive a new anti-rejection drug here during a heart transplant operation was in good condition today, hospital officials said.

A team of surgeons, headed by heart transplant pioneer Denton Cooley, performed the surgery Monday at Texas Heart Institute on a patient identified only as a 43-year-old man.

Cindy Katz, a spokeswoman for the hospital, said late Monday the man was in stable, good condition after the surgery involving Cyclosporin A, an immuno-suppressant drug used to prevent rejection of the transplanted heart.

Ms. Katz said the drug has prevented rejection of a donor heart in 24 of 27 transplants during tests at Stanford University.

In separate tests, Dr. Barry Kaham, who worked with Cooley in Monday's surgery, has used Cyclosporin A in more than 80 patients undergoing kidney transplants, she said.

The hospital spokesman said the kidneys were "functioning after a year in more than 80 percent of patients." Kaham is director of the division of organ transplants at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

Cyclosporin A "has shown an encouraging ability over previously used drugs to interfere with the body's natural rejection system," Ms. Katz said. Doctors hope the drug will "solve many of the infection-related problems that have hindered some of the heart transplants in the past," she said.

Ms. Katz said researchers are unable to explain exactly how Cyclosporin A works, but she said it appears the drug prevents a part of the body's immune system from reacting against a foreign organ such as a donor heart.

"It's shown minimal toxic side effects for the patients," she said.

Sandoz Inc., a Swiss company, manufactures the drug. Kaham recently received permission from the Food and Drug Administration to use it in heart transplants, Ms. Katz said.

Ms. Katz said the hospital hopes to try the drug on 34 more heart transplant patients.

DEATHS

Lon Cole

ROBERT LEE — Services for Lon Cole, 20, of Robert Lee, brother of Kay Duerksen of Midland, were to be at 2 p.m. today in Robert Lee Baptist Church with the Rev. Roy Epperson officiating. Burial was to follow in Robert Lee Cemetery under the direction of Shaffer Funeral Home.

Cole died Saturday from injuries suffered in an automobile accident at Lake Spence.

He was born Oct. 20, 1961, in Freona. He moved to Robert Lee at an early age and lived there until the age of 12. He then returned to Freona where he lived until moving back to Robert Lee a year ago. He had worked for Gideon's Sheet Metal and Air Conditioning.

Other survivors include his father, his mother, his step-mother, three brothers, three sisters, his paternal grandparents and his maternal grandmother.

Joseph M. Isbell

Services for Joseph M. "Joe" Isbell, 62, of 3111 Golf Course Road, were to be at 10 a.m. today in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. G.A. Magee, minister of the Bellview Baptist Church, officiating. Burial was to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Isbell died Sunday morning at his home.

Survivors include his wife, Jo Isbell of Midland; a son, James H. "Rocky" Isbell, of Midland; three brothers, Truman Isbell of Anthony, Clyde Isbell of Baynard, N.M., and James A. Isbell of Haskell; three sisters, Bessie Evans and Henretta Sego, both of Haskell, and Betty Bednary of Denver City; two grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers were to be Steve Harris, J.D. Thomson, Jerome Rochl and Bob Creech, all of Odessa, Harry Gunn and Royce Makey. Honorary pallbearers were to be A.P. Brown and Johnny Fowler, both of Odessa, and Charlie Palmer.

James Lonidier

BIG SPRING — Services for James Lonidier, 53, of Big Spring, will be at 4 p.m. Wednesday in the Nalley-Pickle Rosewood Chapel with Carroll Kohl, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Big Spring, officiating. Burial will follow at Trinity Memorial Park.

Lonidier died Tuesday morning in a Big Spring hospital following a brief illness.

He was born Jan. 30, 1929, in LouAnn, Ark. He married Louise Parker March 8, 1954, in Greenville, Miss. He moved to Big Spring in 1962 where he was a self-employed mechanic. He served in the Army Air Force during World War II. He was a member of the Masonic Lodge in Arkansas and a Baptist.

Soviet jet crashes; No details available

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet Aeroflot jet carrying passengers to western Africa crashed on takeoff early today near Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport, the government news agency Tass reported.

Tass said there were victims in the crash, but Soviet officials refused to give details about the number of victims or their nationalities. Two Western airline sources said the plane was believed to have been carrying about 90 passengers. One said there were no survivors; another said there were rumors that one woman survived.

The airliner, Flight 411, was en route from Moscow to Dakar, Senegal and Freetown, Sierra Leone, an airport spokeswoman said.

An official at the Sierre Leone Embassy in Moscow said about 22 people from that country were aboard the plane, including a diplomat, representatives of a youth group, and students. All were believed killed, the official said.

"The Soviet foreign ministry and the Ministry of Civil Aviation, when contacted by us, did not give us any details, but promised to give us more information tomorrow," the official said.

An official at the Senegal Embassy said he had no details, but that embassy staff members were trying to get them from Soviet authorities.

According to Aeroflot, the takeoff was scheduled for 12:10 a.m. local time (4:10 p.m. EDT Monday). A Western source said the crash occurred about six miles from the airport, and that one of the plane's four engines was ablaze.

The Ministry of Civil Aviation said a special commission is investigating the cause of the crash.

"The Ministry of Civil Aviation expresses deep condolences to the relatives of the victims of the crash," the Tass report said.

Aeroflot's official schedule lists the aircraft for the flight as an Ilyushin-62, but it was not known whether it was the 186-passenger version or the 168-passenger version.

All sides cheer already-known election outcome

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government says its triumphant presidential candidate, Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, won by three-fourths of the vote, calling the results a show of confidence in a political system dominated by one party.

The 47-year-old Harvard-trained economist's victory over six rivals was the least lopsided in 30 years for the Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has won every national election since its creation in 1929 after the Mexican Revolution.

Both the government and opposition on Monday hailed the result as a welcome outcome of a 1978 political reform law designed to reduce disenchantment with electoral politics. President Jose Lopez Portillo, elected unopposed in 1976, enacted the law to give voters a wide choice of candidates.

The latest official returns of the election, announced Monday night, gave de la Madrid 14.25 million votes, 74.4 percent of the 19.931 million counted.

After delaying first official returns of Sunday's vote for 24 hours, Interior Minister Enrique Olivares Santana announced that 73 percent of the precincts had reported and 77 percent of voters registered in them cast ballots. The turnout was 51 percent in 1979 congressional elections and as low as 10 percent in some governor's races since then.

"This is a clear and indisputable triumph by the Mexican people over abstentionism," the minister said.

De la Madrid, whose aides had said they were hoping for a 75 percent turnout, told thousands of cheering supporters earlier: "The overwhelming majority of voters demonstrated their decision to fortify democracy. Mexico won; the Mexican Revolution has won; the PRI has won."

Alpine man honored for outstanding service

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bill Haas of Alpine was honored Monday by Gov. Bill Clements for outstanding service in training and hiring the economically disadvantaged.

Haas, owner of Haas Motor Co., was one of four employers to receive the Second Annual Governor's Business Circle Award. The awards were presented during ceremonies at the State Capitol.

All four of the honorees participated in the Private Sector Initiative Program of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

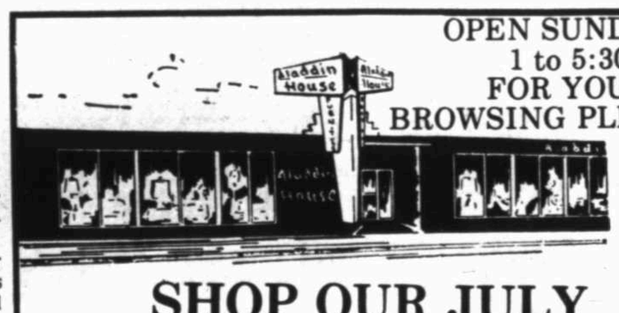

Miners' protests continue

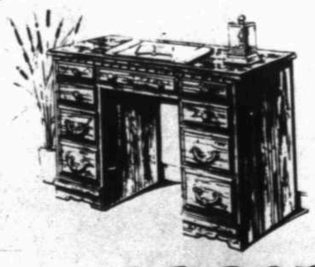

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Violence broke out again in South African mines today as black miners protested against pay scales that give them one-fifth the wages of white miners.

According to reports by police and mine owners, about 2,000 black miners rioted at a platinum mines owned by the General Mining Union Corp. northwest of Johannesburg in Bophuthatswana. About 50 were reported injured when police used tear gas to disperse them.

Bophuthatswana is a territory given limited autonomy and declared independent by South Africa. Other nations have refused to recognize its government and consider it part of South Africa.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Keep spices out of heat

DEAR HELOISE:

I have three shelves above my stove that are too narrow for dishes, so I've been storing spices and seasonings there.

I was recently told that spices shouldn't be placed there because heat destroys their flavor. Is this true? If so, what food items may be safely stored on shelves above a stove? — New Bride

+++

You heard right — spices and most canned and packaged food should be stored in a cool, dry place.

Heat rises, so those shelves are pretty warm when the stove is in use, and if it's a gas stove and has a pilot light, the heat will be constant.

I'd suggest you store things above your stove that aren't used too often, such as special dishes, appliances, pans, etc. — not food. Put them in plastic bags to keep them clean, since not only does heat rise, but so do grease and grime.

Just be very, very careful in reaching for them while you have something cooking on the range. — Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: My wife died when our children were very young.

As they grew older and entered school, and I continued with my job, we would come and go at various times of the day and evening.

I put up a blackboard over their study desk between the dining and living rooms, so we could let each other know where we had gone, if it was necessary to go someplace when the others weren't home.

Worked great! And it saved something worth more than time, effort or worry — mutual trust. — Leo Kehl

CERAMIC STOVE TOP

Dear Heloise: I have one of those ceramic-top cook stoves and I love it.

Many do not because they have such a hard time keeping the top clean. When I purchased mine over four years ago, the instructions said never wipe the surface clean with a dishcloth, but use a paper towel instead.

Dishcloths can have residue from wiping grease and grime off dishes and cabinets, so when you wipe the top of the stove, a film of grease is left on the surface.

When the stove is turned on, this thin layer is cooked on, thus making it harder to remove. By using a clean paper towel and the recommended cleanser, you end up with a clean surface.

Perhaps this could be the reason so many homemakers are dissatisfied with their "easy clean" ceramic-top stoves. — Linda Talley

+++

BATH TIME

Dear Heloise: My newborn would scream through the entire bath and would not stop until she was dressed and safe in my arms. I thought she hated water, but discovered I'd just been following those baby-care manuals too closely!

Washing her face and hair would enrage her and set a bad tone for the whole affair. Plus, an empty stomach made for a catastrophe!

Try putting your baby in the water after he or she is fed, happy and calm. Don't wash his or her hair the first time you try this, and save the face and ears for later.

My little one loves her bath now and will accept a face washing, though reluctantly, and even tolerates a shampoo. — Vicki

+++

DEFOSTING DILEMMA

Dear Heloise: The worst part of defrosting my refrigerator was the scooping up and mopping up of the icy water from the bottom of the fridge. My hands ached!

In trying for a solution, I spied my newly purchased dustpan. Perfect! Not only did it easily scoop up the ice and water, but I also used it to help dislodge the ice remaining on the sides, back and top. — Penny Styles

She reads her mail very carefully, picking out the goodies to use in her column. She'd just love to answer individual letters but can't because the volume is tremendous.

DEAR ABBY

Foundation is ready to help

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My speech is slurred, I can't walk straight, my coordination is off, and it's hard for me to swallow. Worse yet, most people think I'm drunk.

I am a victim of ataxia — a hereditary disease that is often incorrectly diagnosed as multiple sclerosis. An estimated 15 million Americans are aflicted with hereditary diseases. Approximately 250,000 are victims of some form of ataxia. It affects people of all ages and races, and it cannot be diagnosed before the symptoms appear. It is a tragic and deadly disorder, yet surprisingly few people know it exists. (It is not contagious and it is not a mental disease.)

There are ataxia clinics throughout the United States that stand ready to offer genetic counseling, neurological testings, financial assistance and reliable information concerning insurance, legal rights, where to find home services and nursing homes.

The National Ataxia Foundation is eager to locate victims and their families in order to help them. Please help spread the word, Abby. — MILDRED S. IN WOODLAND HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR MILDRED: I have checked out the organization and found it to be a legitimate, sincere, non-profit organization that welcomes all inquiries and will respond (free of charge) to those who write. The address: The National Ataxia Foundation, 6681 Country Club Drive, Minneapolis, Minn. 55427. Phone: 1-612-546-6220. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DEAR ABBY: I just wanted to share something nice. (I read your column in The Day in New London, Conn.)

On June 8 an ad appeared directly under your column. It featured a sketch of a single rose with the following message:

"Nancy, may the next 25 years be just as joy filled. — Dick"

I have no idea who Nancy and Dick are, but apparently Dick bought an ad in that newspaper requesting that it be placed where Nancy wouldn't miss it, so I assume she's a faithful reader. Imagine her thrilled double-take when she saw it!

How terrific to see evidence of a good marriage out there. And what fun to be married to a man so thoughtful, loving and imaginative! Neat? — BETH IN MYSTIC, CONN.

DEAR BETH: Neat, indeed! I'll bet Dick's ad plants that unique idea in the minds of other lovers.

DEAR ABBY: A woman who was married in a Catholic church in 1958 said her husband took a ride one Sunday afternoon and never came back. She asked if she was still married, or did she need a divorce if she wanted to start life over as a single woman.

You advised her to see a priest about an annulment.

Regardless of what the priest or the church says, she had better consult an attorney. The only legal dissolution that can be had must come from a court. — HOUSTON LAWYER

DEAR LAWYER: I assumed the priest would tell her not only how she stood with the church, but how she stood with the law. Wrong! (That's like assuming that a lawyer would feel obligated to tell his clients how they stood with the church.) Mea culpa.

(Problems? Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

AT WIT'S END

Commercials and dogs

By ERMA BOMBECK

My husband came into the kitchen the other night, dipped his spoon into a bowl and said, "Ummm. Tastes terrific! What is it?"

I said, "Chicken, bacon bits, onions and kidneys."

"What do you call it?"

"The dog's dinner. We're having beans and franks. Go wash up."

"Do I want to know what's in this bottle filled with brown fluid?"

"It's a new beverage for dogs who are 'sick of drinking just water.' It's flavored with beef."

"That's quite a jump for someone who drinks from a toilet," he said. "Besides, how do you know our dog is sick of drinking just water? Does he say, 'Yuuuck,' and spit it out?"

My husband had a point. We've never had a dog who sang, talked, wrote notes or communicated with us in any way.

"We just have to trust someone," I said.

And trust we have. During the last five or ten years, I've seen the selection of dog food grow from a couple bags of nuggets by the grass seed near the door to an entire aisle of options. On blind faith, I've lugged in cheese and beef pellets, dry food that turns sensuous in its own gravy, jerky snacks, liver-flavored cookies, bones that whiten their teeth and cans of gourmet dog food to combat boredom.

"Let me ask you a question," said my husband. "Has this dog ever gotten excited about any dog products touted on television?"

"You know the only time he reacts to anything on TV is when he goes to bed during PBS pledge week."

Collecting memorabilia of Tarzan man's lifelong hobby

By GRACE O'CONNOR
Hearst Feature Service

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. — There are 64 books on the adventures of Tarzan, says Thomas Martin, who has 63 first editions in an apartment decorated in what his wife calls "early Edgar Rice Burroughs."

At age 10, Martin picked up his first copy of Tarzan and proceeded to "really get into Burroughs' books." Initially, he bought reprints, but later began to buy first editions. He now lacks only one: "Tarzan the Magnificent."

Martin estimates that he has $10,000 to $12,000 invested in his passion. The Martins' living room wall is adorned with lobby cards and movie posters of Tarzan, Jane and Boy. Among the memorabilia is a complete run of 300 Tarzan comics he started collecting as a kid.

He also has Tarzan comics from France, Belgium, Spain and Italy, as well as tapes of the 1950 Tarzan radio series, 8-millimeter abbreviated versions of the movies, Tarzan-related toys, games, comics, books and puzzles, many of them released by the company Burroughs formed and incorporated in the 1930s to publish his own books.

Above the couch is a huge Edgar Rice Burroughs map of the planet Mars. The author, Martin explained, was a science fiction writer before Tarzan ever gave his first yell.

"He had been a total flop at everything he tried until he was 35," Martin said of Burroughs. "Then he began to make up stories for his children. After reading some of the pulps from the early 1900s, decided he could do better. The first story published under his name was the 'Princess of Mars.' "

Dennis Madden, executive director of Art Center and Theater of Schenectady, leans against a donated Steinway on the stage of Proctor's. The 2,700 seat theater built for $1.5 million in 1926 by F. F. Proctor was taken over by the city of Schenectady for delinquent taxes and set for demolition.

Vaudeville house renovated

By JOHN STRACHAN
AP Writer

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — To such comic greats as George Burns, Schenectady was a joke. He loved to regale television audiences with stories about how he had "died" in the upstate New York town.

But Schenectady was no laughing matter to F.F. Proctor, a former vaudeville acrobat with a flair for the business end of show business. When he added this city to his vaudeville circuit of 50 theaters, he did it with a showman's flair. He also gave comics a hot topic for a fast laugh.

PROCTOR SPENT $1.5 million in 1926 to build a 2,700-seat marble monument to vaudeville. Designed by theater architect Thomas Lamb, it was a showcase for a pre-Depression audience that was already shifting its tastes from vaudeville to films.

But after surviving the death of vaudeville, the "Golden Age" of Hollywood films and the passing of the big bands that once entertained on its stage, Proctor's fell into disrepair and was all but abandoned in the 1970s.

Today, with help from the city and federal governments and a boost from a group of civic leaders who formed the Art Center and Theater of Schenectady (ACT), entertainment has come full circle at Proctor's.

ACTOR HAL HOLBROOK, who booked into Proctor's last year for his one-man show Mark Twain show, was so taken by the theater and its restoration that he pledged $1,000 to the project if five local donors would do likewise. They did.

Holbrook returned six months later, donating a day of his time to tape two television commercials to help "sell" the renovation of Proctor's, which has been added to the National Register of Historic Places.

Actor Vincent Price, who brought his portrayal of Oscar Wilde to the Proctor's stage earlier this year, underwrote the restoration of a pair of the theater's worn and tattered seats.

THE CROWDS THAT queued up for tickets to the stage version of "Annie" last year reminded some longtime Schenectadians of the week in 1933 when around-the-block lines preceded each performance of "King Kong."

"I wanted to make it the best there was," Proctor told the opening night crowd of 3,000 who had paid 50 cents each for ochestra seats to see the film comedy "Stranded in Paris" on one of the largest threater screens in the East.

Chandeliers reflect the ornately tapestried walls and detailed plaster work on the ceiling. A genuine Louis XV marble fireplace graces the mezzanine. Each of the 18 dressing rooms has its own shower.

FLANKING THE THEATER for the depth of a city block is a two-story arcade containing 40 shops and offices.

But second-run films and the occasional touring show couldn't support the musty white elephant whose antiquated heating system was burning up 5,000 gallons of fuel oil every 12 days.

By 1977, when the city finally foreclosed on the theater's owners for nonpayment of more than $200,000 in back taxes, the once-grand theater was threatened with demolition. The arcade, meanwhile, had become a home for derelicts.

The city invested more than $500,000 — most of it in federal Community Development funds — in a new roof, new heating system and scattered interior renovations for Proctor's.

In 1979, city officials deeded the property over to the non-profit group of civic leaders who formed ACT, to operate it as a regional performing arts center.

THE OFFERINGS RANGE from national touring company productions of Broadway hits, to dance, opera and classical music concerts.

"We couldn't do it without volunteers," said ACT Executive Director Dennis Madden, one of the organization's few fulltime employees among the 400 volunteers who do everything from taking tickets to staffing the concession stand.

But the restoration is far from complete. The organ loft remains empty, while Madden ponders how to finance — or even to find — an instrument to match the $50,000 organ that Proctor had installed.

MARINATED SARDINES

Easy, unusual and good.

Juice of ½ of a medium lemon (about 1½ tablespoons)

¼ cup dry white wine

¼ teaspoon crushed dried thyme

½ of a small onion, thinly sliced and separated into rings

3¾-ounce can brisling sardines in olive oil

Minced parsley

In a shallow rectangular serving dish (we used one with sloping sides and about 8 by 4 inches across the top), stir together the lemon juice, wine and thyme. Arrange the onion rings at each narrow end of the dish. With a small metal spatula, lift the sardines from the oil and arrange them between the onion rings. Cover tightly with saran and refrigerate for three to 12 hours, spooning the marinade over the onion and sardines several times. Before serving, sprinkle generously with the parsley. Makes four servings.

Firefighters sift through the remains of a fire that killed three people in Waterbury, Conn., early Monday. A Waterbury man was charged with arson.

Search abandoned for boy

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — About 100 volunteers have ended a six-day hunt without finding a 12-year-old Illinois boy, missing in rugged, pine-studded Rocky Mountain National Park.

The volunteers, aided by tracking dogs and two helicopters, narrowed their focus Monday to a small area on Flat Top Mountain. But they abandoned the effort at dusk, said park spokesman Glen Kaye.

"We can't go on forever," Kaye said of the search which, at a cost of $114,000, is one of the most expensive ever at the park. "We've combed the ice fields and rock ledges yard by yard. We've searched out the crevices."

He added: "The entire search area has received close scrutiny, enough so that if he was in the area, the probability is high that he would have been found."

Kaye said searchers positioned themselves Monday in a narrow band about a half mile wide and covered an area from the 11,000-foot elevation to about 9,000 feet, approximating the route that the boy, Robert Baldeshwiler of Lansing, Ill., may have taken down Flat Top Mountain when he disappeared last Tuesday.

His family, which has been camping out in a trailer behind park headquarters, was expected to leave the area today, according to park officials.

Kaye said signs would be posted at trailheads advising hikers that the child might be in the area. In addition, he added, some volunteers have said they will continue the search on an individual basis.

At its peak, the search involved some 250 volunteers spread over a 50-square-mile area. On Sunday, about 200 searchers spaced between 15 to 100 feet apart combed a seven-square-mile area in rugged terrain near Bear Lake, concentrating on a two-mile radius of where the boy was last seen on Tuesday. Searchers found no trace of the boy.

Kaye said the boy, who was running up a trail ahead of his family during a hiking outing when he became lost, was heading into a storm, leading officials to speculate he may have sought shelter at lower elevations. "It's also more common for young kids to go downhill," Kaye said.

Night temperatures at the park have dropped to the low 40s in forested areas and into the 30s on the mountain, and the boy was wearing only a T-shirt, jeans and sneakers when he disappeared. He had no food or extra clothing with him, Kaye said.

Three people die in apartment fire

By JOHN W. REID

WATERBURY, Conn. (AP) — A man who police say torched a sofa at his niece's apartment during a fit of rage was charged with igniting a fire an hour later that left at least three people dead and 12 missing.

"You did it. Why did you do it?" the niece was screaming at the suspect when police arrived, officials said.

More than 120 people were homeless today after the fire swept through two downtown apartment buildings Monday. Police said some of the missing may have been at holiday gatherings away from home.

"Flames were crashing all around," tenant Richard Chute said, describing his family's escape.

As fire and thick, black smoke shot above the twin, five-story brick buildings, several tenants clung to ledges until firefighters could raise ladders and rescue them.

Police Lt. Valentine Bochicchio said today there were three confirmed deaths, with 12 people unaccounted for. He said an earlier police report of six deaths came from an officer who had not confirmed the information.

"IF WE HADN'T happened to be there, probably another 60 people would have died," said patrolman Michael Dimaria.

Firefighters still were soaking the smoldering rubble early today as rescue workers searched for more possible victims.

"The bodies are badly burned. They're taking out parts of bodies. It's going to take quite some time," said Ken Borowski of the Waterbury Red Cross, which set up shelters for the homeless.

Police said they did not know how many of those unaccounted for actually were in the buildings when the fire broke out.

"The building superintendent says some people were away for the holiday," said Janet O'Donnell of the Red Cross.

As many as 165 people may have lived in the buildings, according to the Red Cross.

Borowski said it was difficult to ascertain exactly how many people lived in the buildings, because the buildings housed mainly low-income people, frequently had transients staying in them. The Red Cross estimated as many as 65 people may hav lived there.

WATERBURY MAYOR Edward D. Bergin said, "This is the worst fire, to my knowledge, in the city's history."

One tenant said she and her two children barely escaped.

"I almost died. I almost got killed. When I saw the fire I started screaming. I thought we'd never make it. I was ready to jump out the window with my two kids," said the young woman, who would not give her name, as she sat in a Red Cross shelter in a church basement.

The woman and her two young children, one a month-old baby, fled down a back stairway and onto a porch.

Patrolman Dimaria said that when he arrived, one apartment was on fire. "Within a few minutes, the whole building was engulfed in flames — it all went up," he said.

It took the Waterbury Fire Department, which called in men and equipment from neighboring towns, four hours to bring the general alarm fire under control.

Police charged Israel Flores, 29, who also goes by the name of Israel Madera, with three counts of murder-arson and one count of first-degree arson.

HE WAS HELD in lieu of $500,000 bond, and was scheduled to appear in court today, said Waterbury Police Sgt. Joseph Cass.

Police said Flores had been visiting his niece, Lydia Madera, in one of the apartments. During an argument, he set fire to a couch, but the fire was extinquished quickly, they said, and Flores left.

The building fire was discovered about an hour later, at 2:08 a.m. Monday, police said.

Dimaria said that as the officers arrived, Flores was running away from the building and Miss Madera was shouting after him, "You did it. Why did you do it?"

While Dimaria's partner ran up a fire escape to rouse tenants, Dimaria said he chased Flores to a nearby garage.

Cass said the arson charge stemmed from the couch fire and was filed to hold Flores while police conducted an investigation. The murder-arson charges were added several hours later.

Police would not discuss other details of the charges, other than to say that the couch fire in Miss Madera's apartment definitely was not the fire that caused the buildings to burn.

Children hurt in bus accident

WALSENBURG, Colo. (AP) — Four children were hurt when a church bus from Texas carrying 44 passengers — most of them youngsters — overturned on a highway near here and burst into flames.

The Colorado State Patrol said the bus was transporting youngsters from a Baptist Church in Fort Worth to a summer camp near Castle Rock, Colo., when the accident occured Monday morning about 13 miles north of this southern Colorado city on Interstate 25.

Children die while under care of babysitter

BLOUNTSTOWN, Fla. (AP) — A teen-age babysitter who has cared for five children who later died says the deaths are "an awful weird coincidence," and she'll continue to babysit if given the chance.

"I know it sounds funny. It's an awful weird coincidence that it always happens to me, but there's really not too much I can do or say about it," said Christine Fallings, 19, in an article in today's edition of the Tampa Tribune.

"I'm not scared to babysit," she said. "Nobody knows if a young 'un is going to die. You can babysit for a young 'un who has never been sick a day in her life and they'll just drop dead on you."

The latest in a string of tragedies involving Miss Fallings was the death of 2-month-old Travis D. Coleman. The infant's body was found Saturday on a small mattress in the kitchen-dining area of the trailer Miss Fallings shares with a man named Robert Johnson. It was Johnson who discovered the body, authorities said.

The baby's 17-year-old mother, fully aware of Miss Fallings' link with four other children's deaths, had asked her to keep the infant overnight while she went out.

"Yes, I knew about Christine and the other babies," the mother, Lisa Coleman, said Sunday. "I just didn't believe it."

Miss Fallings had been the regular babysitter of four other young children, ranging in age from 4 years to 8 months, who later died from mycarditis, inflamation of the tissues around the heart, or encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain. Three others became ill, but survived.

Miss Fallings, a heavy-set, junior high school dropout, who suffers from epilepsy and asthma, sees the deaths as just bad luck. "Sometimes I wonder if I don't have some kind of spell over me when I get around young 'uns," she said.

Police investigations into the first four cases have ruled out foul play — the latest is still under investigation.

"She comes from an impoverished background. It's just a very tragic coincidence," said Dr. Fred Boedy, a physician who once treated Miss Fallings. "When you consider the circumstances, it's not so unusual. These are poor people who have a lot of illnesses.

Shoppers worrying more about rising unemployment than rising grocery prices

AP Laserphoto

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Supermarket shoppers are more worried about rising unemployment than they are about rising prices, but they still say it is harder than ever to make ends meet and many are gloomy about the future, according to a recent industry survey.

The survey was conducted by Louis Harris and Associates Inc., for the Food Marketing Institute, a trade association whose members account for about half of all grocery store sales. It was one of a series of annual studies commissioned by the institute beginning in 1974 to measure public attitudes about the economy and the grocery business.

Almost two-thirds of those questioned in the latest survey — 63 percent — said that if they had to choose between higher unemployment and rising prices, they would select joblessness as the more serious problem; 24 percent said inflation was more serious. In a similar survey last year, 50 percent said unemployment was more serious and 37 percent said rising prices were a more severe threat. (The remainder of the survey participants in both cases said they were not sure whether unemployment or inflation was worse.)

Sixty percent of the shoppers surveyed said they were finding it harder to make ends meet and 34 percent said there was no change in their personal financial situation. Only 6 percent said it was easier to make ends meet today.

The number of people who believe that prices are rising faster than they were a year ago declined from 1981 to 1982, but a substantial segment of the public still worries about the increases.

Forty-five percent of those questioned in the latest survey said prices were rising more rapidly today, compared to 72 percent of those polled a year ago.

Twenty-nine percent said, however, that prices were rising as rapidly as they had been, indicating that three-fourths of those questioned — 75 percent — do not think that inflation has eased.

Asked about their personal economic futures, 28 percent said they expected their financial situation to improve in the coming year. Almost as many — 25 percent — said they expected a worsening of personal finances; 43 percent predicted no change and 4 percent said they were not sure what would happen.

The latest survey was based on telephone interviews during January 1982 with a representative nationwide sample of 1,003 men and women shoppers. Among other findings:

—Utility costs and supermarket prices are the areas of greatest concern for shoppers. Fifty-seven percent of those questioned said they expect sharp increases in utility bills and 30 percent said they anticipated big boosts at the supermarket.

—When asked "Whom do you blame most for high food prices today — or don't you blame anyone," the biggest chunk of respondents — 44 percent — replied, "No one." Fourteen percent blamed the government, 10 percent singled out middlemen, 5 percent cited the economy in general and 4 percent said unions were responsible. The remaining survey participants were split among supermarkets, the public itself, farmers, the weather, oil companies, wholesalers, manufacturers and others.

—Consumers are worried about food safety. Eighty percent said they were concerned that some ingredients added to processed foods may be harmful or unsafe to eat; 94 percent said products should carry warning labels about allegedly unsafe ingredients; and 84 percent said supermarkets should refuse to carry allegedly unsafe products. At the same time, however, 89 percent said they agreed with the statement that "The food in supermarkets in safe to eat."

—At least seven people in 10 said they were trying to economize by buying more store or lower-price brands, using more coupons, stocking up when they spotted a bargain and doing more with leftovers. Half of those questioned said they look in the newspaper for specials almost every time they shop, 15 percent check the paper fairly often and 21 percent scan it occasionally.

Chrysler Corp. to open new zone sales offices

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. will seek to capitalize on sales opportunities in the "high potential" cities of New Orleans and Houston by opening new zone sales offices in those cities by the fall, the automaker said.

The new offices will stem from a restructuring of current offices in the area that "are a little farther away (from the dealerships) than we desire," Tom Pappert, vice president-sales, said in a recent statement.

The new Houston zone office will represent 78 dealerships in southern Texas, the No. 3 U.S. carmaker said.

The New Orleans office will represent 99 dealerships in Louisiana, southern Mississippi and Alabama, and the western half of the Florida panhandle, the company said.

Cuba opening up to foreign investors

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — Cuba is opening its doors to foreign investors, offering a wide range of business deals that some officials say could lead to the first foreign-owned companies here since Fidel Castro took power in 1959.

With a minimum of publicity, Cuba recently adopted a joint ventures law aimed at attracting capital and technology needed to inject new blood into the country's troubled economy.

Jorge E. Garcia, director of international relations for the Cuban Chamber of Commerce, claims communist Cuba can offer private foreign investors much more than any capitalist country in the region.

"There is no country in the region as politically stable as Cuba," he said in a recent interview.

"We have no strikes, social unrest or threat of revolution, because we've already had our own revolution here. The workers own everything. There's no reason for them to strike."

Other incentives, Garcia maintained, would be the high educational level of the workforce and the relatively low wages paid to Cuban workers.

Cuba is credited with having one of the highest literacy rates in Latin America.

"Wages here play a less important role than in capitalist countries because the state takes care of many needs," Garcia added.

"Since health care, education and many other services are free, and workers don't pay more than 10 percent of their income in housing, the actual wages are comparatively lower than in capitalist countries."

Most Cuban workers make the equivalent of $150 to $250 a month.

Garcia said his office gets about 150 letters a month from Americans interested in doing business with Cuba, despite the U.S. trade embargo imposed shortly after Castro's 1959 revolution.

"We would like to meet with them and discuss joint ventures, but the Reagan administration is enforcing the embargo and making any U.S.-Cuban business deals impossible," Garcia added.

"Under these circumstances, it would be a waste of time to invite U.S. businessmen to come here for talks."

However, Garcia said unofficial contacts with American businessmen are kept through the World Trade Center Association, a New York-based international trade organization which Cuba joined last year as part of its effort to lure foreign investments.

Cuba has been hit by a sharp decline in world prices for sugar, which accounts for more than 70 percent of its exports. Prices have fallen from 65 cents a pound in 1977 to about 7 cents a pound now.

"We need hard currencies to make up for the decline in sugar prices," said Garcia. "We are also trying to use foreign capital and expertise to revitalize some 60 companies that are working beneath full capacity."

Cuba is most interested in getting foreign investment in the tourism and citrus industries, and in production of candy and some finished goods, such as car batteries.

Garcia said Cuba needs Western technology in some areas in which it can't get help from Soviet-bloc countries, such as the citrus industry.

"We want to become the top world exporters of citrus," he said. "The socialist countries don't have any expertise in tropical agriculture."

Under the plan, foreigners could lease Cuban companies for a period of up to 10 years, buy parts of existing enterprises or build new ones in association with the state.

"We are very flexible," Garcia added. "We are ready to consider many options."

The joint ventures law, which was made public in February and is known here as Decree 50, allows foreign investors to send home profits in full and to avoid paying taxes on gross income.

It also allows foreign investors to bring in their own executives and technicians.

"The average deal will allow foreigners to buy up to 49 percent of a company," Garcia said. "But the law would permit them in some cases, especially in the tourism industry, to buy 50 percent or 51 percent of a company."

Garcia said the new law was not announced with great fanfare because "although we want foreign investment, we are not desperate to get it."

Trade delegations of Britain, Spain, France, Canada and Mexico, among others, have visited Cuba recently to find out about the new investment conditions, officials said. They said 17 foreign trade delegations visited here between the beginning of the year and May 7, up from 9 during the same period last year.

Garcia rejected speculation that Cuba may be seeking to diversify its trade relations in order to reduce its dependence on the Soviet Union.

About 70 percent of Cuba's trade is with Soviet bloc countries, and the other 30 percent with Canada, Spain, Japan and other Western nations.

Some Western economists say the Soviet Union may have to reduce its estimated $3 billion a year in subsidies to Cuba because of its own economic problems.

But Garcia said, "The Soviet Union is our most reliable trading partner, and we don't have any reason to doubt that it will continue being so.

"Besides, it would be very dangerous for us to start relying on Western countries for, say, our oil. They could cut off their supplies under American pressure at any moment..."

Sakowitz to open San Antonio store

SAN ANTONIO — Robert T. Sakowitz, chairman of the board and president of Sakowitz, Inc., formally announced plans for construction of a 68,000 square foot store to be located in Sakowitz Village at Exposition Plaza on Highway 110 and Huebner Road in San Antonio. It is scheduled to open in the fall of 1984.

"We think this an appropriate time to properly express our continuing confidence in the Texas economy in general and the San Antonio area in particular," Sakowitz stated.

The exterior structural design of the 68,000 square foot store will utilize three different textures of natural stone. The interior design will be patterned after a unique concept similar to the Louis Kahn Museum in Fort Worth. Natural woods, marbles, and textiles will be used in the store and all fixtures, wall coverings, and floor coverings will be custom made to Sakowitz specifications.

No. 7C-78,492 — To consider an application by Gulf Oil Corp. for an exception to RRC Statewide Rule 69 and Section 52.293 of Title 2, Chapter 2, Subchapter H of the Texas Natural Resources Code, for various state lands in the Farmer (San Andres) Field, Crockett and Reagan counties, to allow for sale of casinghead gas for ultimate use outside Texas. Hearing July 23.

No. 7C—78,491 — To consider an application by Gulf Oil Corp. for an exception to Statewide Rule 69 for state lands in the Irion 163 (Ellenburger) Field, Irion County, to allow for the sale of casinghead gas for ultimate use outside of Texas. Hearing July 23.

No. 8-78,540 — To consider an application by Graham Production Co. for the adoption of field rules governing drilling and production in the F.A. Hogg (Penn Detrital) Field, Winkler County, concerning proration unit size, well spacing and surface casing. Hearing July 23.

Penn Square Bank to be opened under new name by liquidators

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The Penn Square Bank failed in part because of "a significant number of loans for energy-related purposes," according to comptroller of the currency, C.T. Conover.

Federal officials will reopen the Penn Square Bank today under a new name to liquidate it.

Conover shut down Penn Square Monday night, declaring it insolvent. He turned it over to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. as receivers.

Penn Square had heavy investments in the oil and gas industries.

"Losses centered on these energy-related loans, together with funding difficulties resulted in the bank's insolvency," Conover said. He made his announcement at 7:05 p.m.

Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the FDIC, said the new bank, the Deposit Insurance National Bank, will open at 9 a.m. today "and will remain open each day as late as is necessary to serve depositors."

Federal officials, including FDIC Chairman William Isaac, flew to Oklahoma City overnight and scheduled a news conference for 7:30 a.m. to explain the failure and their plans for liquidating the bank.

"Our objective is that customers of the bank are reassured that the bank is protected," Whitney said.

Penn Square founder and chairman Bill P. Jennings could not be reached. A woman who identified herself as Jennings' daughter said he was not expected to be home all night. The bank telephone was not answered.

Asked earlier about the bank's solvency, Jennings said on Friday: "Despite the rumors that have been rampant, it's not all that tough here. Penn Square Bank is open and will be open for business Saturday and Tuesday."

Depositers with accounts of less than $100,000 will be assured of getting all their money back while larger deposits will be considered claims against the failed bank, Whitney said.

The bank had 28,000 accounts and total deposits of $465 million in deposits, he said. Its total assets were estimated at $525 million.

It becomes the 21st bank to fail in the United States this year, Whitney said. While larger banks have gone into receivership this year "there's no question it's a large institution," he said.

The new bank will be managed by FDIC employee G. Michael Newton. Whitney said the aim of the federal staffers will be the orderly processing of the bank's accounts until they can close the institution.

Continental announces developments crucial to recovery plan

By BILL SING
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Ailing Continental Airlines Monday announced two major developments that it said are crucial to its recovery plan.

The Los Angeles-based carrier said it and its sister carrier, Texas International Airlines, have reached verbal agreement with all but one of their major lenders to restructure a total of $295 million in long-term debt.

When completed, the restructuring will stretch out the payment schedules and will eliminate the need for Continental to continue to seek monthly amendments on its loan agreements to avoid technical default, the airline said. The threat of such a default on required debt-to-equity ratios and other financial ratios, which loss-plagued Continental has been operating under since December, forced the airline's outside auditors earlier this year to question Continental's ability to survive.

Meanwhile, Continental said it has reached a preliminary agreement to sell its 15-story office building in El Segundo, Calif., which will allow it to pay off a $25 million short-term loan it took out in February. The sale, along with a recent sale of gate positions at Houston Intercontinental Airport, will result in an after-tax profit of $26.5 million, Continental said. A spokesman declined to name the buyer of the building.

Separately, it was learned that Continental resumed negotiations last week with its unionized pilots on productivity and benefit concessions that it hopes could save as much as $60 million in annual labor costs. Talks with the unit of the Air Line Pilots Assocation had broken off indefinitely in early June.

However, talks with the Union of Flight Attendants, representing Continental's 1,800 flight attendants, have not resumed, sources said. Talks with the attendants broke off about the same time as those with the pilots. The attendants and the company have said they will not agree to specific concessions until they see what concessions the pilots accept.

News of the loan restructuring and the office-building sale was disclosed in a supplemental proxy statement mailed to shareholders voting on the proposed financial merger between Continental and Houston-based Texas Air Corp., which owns 50.8 percent of Continental and 100 percent of Texas International.

Preliminary tallies of proxies already voted show that shareholders will approve the combination, which will make Continental a wholly owned unit of Texas Air. The combination, which does not entail merging operations, is scheduled to be officially approved in shareholder meetings July 13 in Los Angeles.

A Continental spokesman said the airline's share of the $295 million to be restructured is $199 million, while Texas International's is $96 million. The agreement will mean that Continental's existing bank credit agreements, including a four-year, $125-million revolving credit agreement that expired in December, will be restructured into a seven-year term loan.

"This is a strong vote of confidence for both companies and for our proposed financial consolidation," Francisco A. (Frank) Lorenzo, chairman of Continental and president of Texas Air, said in a statement. "The agreement is an important part of our plan to return both companies to long-term profitability."

Continental has been coordinating routes and schedules with Texas International in an attempt to reverse losses, which totaled $23.1 million in the first quarter and $60.4 million last year. Texas International also has been losing money, but parent Texas Air has refused to break out specific figures.

This year's phenomenon is the flat-rate income tax

By JOHN M. BERRY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In 1980 and 1981, supply-side economics swept through the land. This year's phenomenon is the flat-rate income tax.

As was the case with supply-side economics, there is no precise definition of what a tax scheme must include to carry the flat-rate label. A wide range of proposals has emerged this year under that rubric. The proposals are as varied as their supporters, who cover most of the political spectrum and include both Republicans and Democrats.

In its purest form, a flat-rate income tax includes a comprehensive definition of income and no deductions whatsoever, except perhaps an allowance so that very low-income individuals do not pay tax. All income would be taxed at the same rate rather than at a rising rate as income went up, as is the case with the present progressive income tax.

The broadest proposal for change, from Robert Hall and Alvin Rabushka of the Hoover Institute, would apply the same approach to income of businesses. Hall and Rabushka would tax both personal and business incomes at a flat 19 percent rate, except that capital gains and payments of dividends and interest by business to individuals would not be taxed at all.

Why should such a radical proposal attract so much attention? After all, it scraps entirely the principle of ability-to-pay that has been a part of the nation's income tax structure for the nearly 70 years it has been in existence. Not only would tax rates not rise along with incomes, but also deductions, such as for unusually large medical expenses or uninsured casualty losses — which were justified originally on the grounds they affected a taxpayer's ability to pay — would also be dropped.

The answer is complex, but it seems to boil down to a growing feeling among the American public that the present income tax system is unfair and too complex, and that wealthy individuals routinely escape paying what they should because of loopholes that riddle the system. Moreover, most backers of a flat tax approach argue it would greatly enhance economic growth by eliminating the influence of tax consequences on investment decisions and by lowering marginal tax rates. In the latter regard, the flat tax is the ultimate extension of the key to supply-side 3conomics: lower marginal rates.

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, an Arizona Democrat, introduced a sweeping flat-rate bill in March, and declared, "We must return to the basic principles upon which a sound tax system must stand: equity, efficiency and simplicity. We must get rid of all the complexities — the personal tax preferences, the special deductions and credits, the exclusions from income. These only lead to contempt for our tax system, endless pressures to create loopholes for some privileged group, and use of the tax code to further some ill-conceived project in social engineering."

Equity, efficiency and simplicity. Those were also the watch words of the tax reform movement of the 1960s and early 1970s, which ground ignominiously to a halt in 1978 when Congress gave short shrift to a set of Carter administration recommendations for reform.

Most of the tax reform efforts of those decades sought to simplify the tax system by eliminating many special provisions, particularly those used mostly by people in the upper income brackets.

But a major goal of most reformers was to eliminate the distinction between capital gains — the increase in the value of an asset, such as corporate stock or a home — half of which was not taxed (now 60 percent is not taxed), and other types of income that were taxed fully.

Like their counterparts today, those reformers also believed in lowering tax rates. That goal did not necessarily conflict with that of achieving more progressive tax rates, a point that is, in the view of some tax experts, getting lost as this year's debate proceeds.

It would be perfectly possible, for instance, to take Hall and Rabushka's proposal and use a set of progressive rates. Such a scheme would be only slightly less simple than one with flat rates, but would involve a different notion of what tax experts call "vertical equity."

"Vertical equity" is a matter of how tax burdens vary among different income groups. In a progressive tax structure, tax burdens rise as incomes go up. But the burden may rise rapidly or slowly, depending on how progressive the rate structure is. With flat rates, the burden would be the same for all income levels.

Naturally, "vertical equity" is contrasted with "horizontal equity," which is a matter of how tax burdens vary among individuals within the same income group. For instance, people who rent a house or an apartment have no opportunity to claim a deduction for payment of mortgage interest and property taxes. Someone who owns the home or apartment in which he lives can claim such a deduction. As a result, two taxpayers with identical incomes can end up with substantially different tax burdens.

Hall and Rabushka, and DeConcini, believe a single tax rate should apply to all income, but they would allow a single $5,000 personal exemption for a married couple filing jointly and $3,000 for a single individual. Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., on the other hand, has proposed using a $600 allowance for each dependent, levying no tax at all until income reached $17,500, and an 18 percent tax on incomes up to $50,000 and a 25 percent rate thereafter.

Like Hall and Rabushka, DeConcini would not tax capital gains, interest and dividend income, while Quayle would. A failure to tax capital gains — with today's exclusion of 60 percent of a gain coupled with the 50 percent top marginal tax rate means a maximum 20 percent tax on a gain — would mean retention of the complex portions of the tax code defining a capital gain and ordinary income.

Still another approach to sweeping income tax revision has been thrown into the flat-rate debate as a "discussion vehicle" by Democrats Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey and Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri. Their plan was endorsed for study purposes by the Democrats' National Party Conference last month.

Bradley and Gephardt would allow single taxpayers a $2,300 "zero bracket amount" — a sort of standard deduction — as at present, while raising the personal exemption to $1,500 from the current $1,000. The ZBA for married taxpayers would be raised from $3,400 to $4,600 and they would have two personal exemptions worth $3,000.

Housing and Community Development Program Midland County

On or about August 1, 1982, Midland County will be submitting an application for $535,000 in 1982 Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) funds to be provided by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The tentative budget established by the County is as follows:

Street Improvments	$135,000
Clearance Activities:	$ 9,000
Housing Rehabilitation:	$ 99,00
Water & Sewer Facilities:	$198,000
Administration & contingencies:	$ 94,000
Total:	$535,000

All CDBG activities will carried out in a designated low/moderate income County "Window pane" Target Area in Southeast Midland. A map delineating the boundaries of this Target Area is available for public inspection in the office of the County Judge, County Courthouse, 200 W. Wall, Midland, during normal business hours.

As a result of a thorough assessment of conditions in this low/moderate income neighborhood, Midland County has determined that the above activities appear most appropriate to meeting the critical needs of Target Area residents. Under this program, the following will be accomplished:

--dirt streets will be paved, curbed and guttered;
--vacant, dilapidated structures will be demolished and cleared and accumulations of junk, debris, etc., will be cleared;
--substandard houses will be rehabilitated up to minimum housing quality standards;
--new water and sewer lines will be installed.

A public hearing will be held on the County's proposed 1982 CDBG application to HUD at 5:30 P.M., Tuesday, July 20, 1982, at the South Memorial Baptist Church, 1700 N. Carter. A second public hearing will be held at 1:30 P.M., Monday, July 26, 1982, in the Midland County Courthouse, 200 W. Wall.

These two public hearings have been scheduled to give the citizens the opportunity to review the planned activities, ask questions about CDBG program implementation, evaluate the impact of the 1982 CDBG program, and provide input on the County's assisted housing needs.

Interested citizens and citizen groups are encouraged to attend these important public hearings and present their views and comments on the County proposed CDBG program. Written proposals and comments from citizens will be accepted and considered by the County up until the time of the second public hearing.

Handicapped individuals who may have difficulty in attending this public hearing should contact the Midland County Judge's Office to arrange for special assistance. A copy of the County's approved pre-application is available for public inspection upon request at the Midland County Courthouse during normal business hours. Written materials explaining the CDBG program will be available to the public at these two public hearings.

A copy of the County's application will be available on or about August 1, 1982, for inspection and copying, upon request, in the office of the Midland County Judge, Midland County Courthouse, 200 W. Wall.

For further information, contact William B Ahders, Midland County Judge, at 682-9481, ext. 329.

Sleep centers may help insomniacs

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father has not slept well for the past two months, ever since a close friend died suddenly from a heart attack. He is only 44 years old so he is definitely not an old man. His doctor has tried helping him, but he still doesn't seem to be sleeping any better, and this is affecting his work. I would like to help him but I don't know where to turn. What would you advise? — Anna, Bryan, Texas

Dear Anna: Dr. Richard M. Coleman of the Stanford University School of Medicine Sleep Research Center suggests a referral to a sleep study center for anyone suffering from insomnia that has lasted for at least four weeks. Your father might at least discuss this possibility with his doctor. It would seem that two months is a reasonable period of time to have waited for the condition to improve, and that additional steps to remedy the situation are now indicated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know you have written about the possible side effects of lithium on the kidneys. But my father has a different problem. He's taking lithium for depression, and his skin has been breaking out just like a teenager's. His doctor says that that's no reason to stop the medicine, but I'd like your opinion. — Mike, Modesto, Cal.

Dear Mike: As I've mentioned on several occasions, the value of any drug has to be weighed against any adverse side effects that may occur. There are some skin conditions for which lithium treatment might have to be stopped — for example, if a patient's psoriasis is aggravated. But the value of lithium usually outweighs most of the skin conditions that it might cause.

I assume that your father's doctor is keeping track of the situation and is prepared to discontinue the lithium should this be indicated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am so upset. I don't know what to believe. My roommate just had a stroke. He looks awful. In the hospital, after the doctor examined him, he prescribed exercises for him to begin immediately, the day after he had the stroke. Well, I told that doctor how incompetent I thought he was. Anyone knows that you have to let the patient recover before beginning therapy. Am I not right? — Mildred, Miami, Fla.

Dear Mildred: You are, understandably, very upset at the moment. Sit down and talk (not to, but) with the doctor. He will explain that rehabilitation must begin as soon after a stroke as possible. The doctor is only looking out for your roommate's most complete recovery.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208.)

Ghotbzadeh to stand trial

TEHRAN, Iran (AFP) — Former Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh will stand trial Saturday, accused of plotting to kill Iran's spiritual leader Ayatoll$h Ruhollah Khomeini, the newspaper Keyhan reported Monday.

The paper quoted the official in charge of the Ghotbzadeh trial, Hojatoleslam Rey Shari, chairman of army revolutionary courts, as saying: "If God wills, next Saturday we will witness the judgment of Ghotbzadeh by military court."

The former foreign minister, who was arrested April 10, is accused of taking part in a plot to kill Khomeini and primary leaders of the Islamic republic in order to seize power.

In a televised confession, Ghotbzadeh admitted participating in the plot and implicated one of the country's most prominent religious leaders, Ayatolah Kazem Shariat-Madari. Shariat-Madari has been under house arrest at the holy city of Qom, 90 miles south of here.

Falklands prisoners all gone

LONDON (AP) — The last group of 600 Argentine prisoners has left the Falkland Islands, and British newspapers say they may be headed for Britain to stay until Argentina agrees to end hostilities in the South Atlantic.

Britain's Defense Ministry said the captives' Monday departure leaves 35 Argentine prisoners on the islands following the fighting, which has never been formally declared a war. The ministry said the 35 were helping clear minefields laid by the Argentines during their 74-day occupation.

The Geneva Convention governing war conduct forbids prisoners being forced to clear minefields. But a ministry spokesman said since the 35 captives "are volunteers there is no breach of the convention."

He said no decision had been taken about the final destination of the 600 prisoners, who left aboard the requisitioned British ship St. Edmund from Ajax Bay in East Falkland.

But the London Times and other newspapers speculated they may be on their way to Britain via Ascension Island, Britain's mid-Atlantic staging post in the Falklands conflict.

Argentine forces on the Falklands surrendered June 14. Most of the 11,800 captives were repatriated, but Argentina has not announced formal agreement to end hostilities. There has been no further fighting but British forces remain on full alert.

The 600 prisoners shipped out Monday are mostly officers, the Defense Ministry said. They are believed to include the commander of the Argentine forces on the Falklands, Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez, who surrendered the garrison to the British.

Britain has said it intends to hold several hundred prisoners under the supervision of the International Red Cross until Argentina declares all hostilities over.

The military government in Buenos Aires has said it still intends to gain sovereignty over the Falklands, which Argentina claims Britain seized illegally in 1833.

No decision has been made on what to do with the tons of Argentine weapons and military equipment captured by the British.

Streaking Yankees run aground in Seattle again

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Seattle may be a nice place to live, but the New York Yankees certainly don't like to visit there.

On the other hand, anywhere Baltimore's Scott McGregor happens to run into the California Angels is paradise.

The Yankees, who have struggled most of the season, had won four in a row when they hit Seattle Monday night. Seattle hit right back. The surprising Mariners rallied for two runs in the seventh inning to knock off the Yankees 5-4 and move into third place in the American League West.

"I hate this ballpark," New York's Lou Piniella said of the Seattle Kingdome, where the Yankees have dropped 20 of 31 games.

Meanwhile, two-run homers by Rick Dempsey, Eddie Murray and Floyd Rayford powered the Baltimore Orioles to an 8-5 victory over California as McGregor recorded his 12th consecutive victory over the Angels.

"After a while it becomes a mental thing and I'm real relaxed when I face them," McGregor said. "This game is best played when you're relaxed."

Orioles 8, Angels 5

The homers by Dempsey, Murray and Rayford helped McGregor boost his career mark against California to 12-2, including the final game of the 1979 AL Championship Series. He scattered 10 hits in 8 1/3 innings but held the Angels to one run until the ninth. Doug DeCinces, Reggie Jackson and Fred Lynn homered for the Angels.

Red Sox 4-3, Royals 3-4

Frank White drove in three runs and scored twice for Kansas City in the nightcap, after Jim Rice's 11th-inning sacrifice fly gave Boston a 4-3 triumph in the opener in a battle between the AL division leaders. The split enabled the Royals to take a one-game lead over California in the AL West, while Boston's lead over Milwaukee in the AL East was sliced to one-half game.

Brewers 10, White Sox 4

Robin Yount belted a two-run homer and Roy Howell hit a solo shot and three singles to lead Milwaukee over the bumbling White Sox, who committed three errors. Yount singled and scored in a three-run first inning and hit his 13th home run of the season in the second after Marshall Edwards singled. Howell singled a run home in the first inning, singled to set up a run in the third, singled and scored in the fifth and led off the seventh with his third home run as the Brewers pounded Lamarr Hoyt, Steve Trout and Kevin Hickey for 15 hits. Winner Jim Slaton blanked the Sox on three hits over the final 6 1/3 innings.

A's 2, Indians 0

Dan Meyer hit a solo home run in the third inning and Mike Heath rapped a run-scoring single in the sixth to back the seven-hit pitching of Tom Underwood and Dave Beard as Oakland handed Cleveland its fourth consecutive setback.

Twins 5, Tigers 3

Kent Hrbek hit his 17th homer and John Castino drove in a pair of runs with a double, backing the eight-hit pitching of Bobby Castillo and Ron Davis. The Tigers, who have lost 17 of their last 21 games, committed three errors that led to three unearned Minnesota runs.

Larry Herndon hit a two-run homer for Detroit.

Rangers 3, Blue Jays 2

Billy Sample extended his hitting streak to 17 games with a third-inning single which drove in the first run in a three-run burst. Texas' Jon Matlack and Danny Darwin outdueled Toronto's Luis Leal, who yielded only six hits. In the Texas third inning, Larry Parrish was hit by a pitch and forced by Don Werner, who went to third on a single by Mark Wagner and scored on Sample's single. Wagner scored on a single by Doug Flynn and Sample scored as Buddy Bell grounded into a force play.

Cubs eclipsed at San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO—Midland Cubs were eclipsed by the San Antonio Dodgers, 5-1, here Monday night as the Los Angeles farmhands took a 2-1 lead in the current series and continued to make life in the Mission City miserable for prowling Bruins.

Monday's loss marked the Cubs' seventh loss in eight games here this season and dropped Midland three full games behind the Texas League West Division leaders in the second half race.

LEFTHANDER Mike King, 5-8, was a victim of a lack of support here. After Midland nicked San Antonio starter Steve Perry, 2-2, for a first-inning run, that was it for the night.

The lone Cub run came when Carmelo Martinez singled off the glove of third baseman German Rivera to drive Mike Diaz home from second base. Rocky had reached first on a fielder's choice and stolen second.

Diaz was to single in the eighth to stretch his consecutive game hitting streak to 10 games and raise his batting average to .308.

But the Dodgers tied the score in the third when Mark Sheehy tripled and Todd Gauntlett doubled.

The Dodgers inched ahead 2-1 in the seventh on Tony Brewer's double, scoring Sheehy, who had singled. Left fielder Mike Kelley lost Brewer's ball in the wind.

THE DODGERS nailed it down in the eighth with three runs after two were out. Sid Bream was on second with a double when Rivera greeted reliever Carlos Gil with an rbi single. Lemmie Miller, the one-time Arizona State flash, then drilled his seventh homer over the left field fence.

The series resumes tonight and continues through Thursday and Midland returns home Saturday night to open a 10-game homestand against Shreveport and Jackson of the East Division.

Compounding the Cubs miseries was the fact that Midland twice had runners thrown out at the plate. In the eighth, when it was still 2-1, Cotto singled, went to second on a grounder and tried to score when Diaz singled to center, only to be cut down on a throw by Ed Amelung.

What's real meaning behind those cliches?

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Some years ago, in a burst of inspired prose, the humorist, Frank Sullivan, laid the sports cliche to rest in one of the game's funniest pieces. I thought today we might update the late Mr. Sullivan's splendid work by again calling on his expert, Mr. Arbuthnot.

Q- Mr. Arbuthnot, you are familiar with the procedure begun by the late Frank Sullivan. The court will stipulate you are a cliche expert and have been duly sworn in. Now, will you enlighten this jury as to what a player says when he has been signed or brought up to a club in mid-season, particularly, a player in whom no other club has expressed much interest?

A - He says, "I think I can help this club."

Q - And what, sir, does that mean?

A - What he really means, what he is really thinking is "I think this club can help me. I mean, what am I, going back to truck driving? Running my uncle's dry cleaning business?"

Q — IN GOLF, sometimes, late in the tournament, a player knocks a 7-iron 229 yards. What do we say to that?

A - We say, "He has the adrenalin flowing. We say he's 'pumped up.'"

Q - Is that what does it?

A - Heavens, no! He just bladed the ball in the belly. It's a half-top. One of our shots. When you find his ball, you'll see he has this little cut in it. Then, he'll get the adrenalin flowing! He may THROW the 7-iron 229 yards."

Q - We frequently hear football coaches say they're in "a building year." Can you tell us exactly what that means?

A - Usually, that their alumni offered smaller Cadillacs to all-state players. Or, maybe they offered them uglier girls. That can put you in a building program quicker than the NCAA.

Q — SPEAKING of the NCAA, how do they check school violations?

A - The easy way is to look down the roster of the Green Bay Packers. If one school has more than a dozen on it you give them two-to-four. Another way is to see if the backfield can read an eye chart. Not see it, read it.

Q - But, sometimes they say a player has a "learning disability." What is that?

A - Stupidity, mostly. Believe me, that's some disability.

Q - Do these inspirational or pep-up messages in the clubhouse do any good? What does a guy think when he reads "You can't make the club in the tub?"

A - He thinks 'I can't strike out with the bases loaded in the tub, either.' Hardly anything bad can happen to you in a tub. Unless someone drops a phone in it.

Q— WHAT do they mean in basketball when they say a guy is "an unselfish player?"

A — Cold shooting night.

Q — Who makes the most money in pro football today?

A — I don't know, but I would have to guess it's some dealer in New Orleans. Or Miami.

Weiskopf gives media a lecture

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Take it from Western Open winner Tom Weiskopf: the media and public don't know or understand most of the players on the American golf tour.

Weiskopf's contentions came to light when a sports writer asked him what had happened to his infamous temper.

"I don't think I ever had one. Does that discomfort you? If it does, I'll throw this microphone at you, if you want," replied a smiling Weiskopf.

"I'M JUST ONE of the cast of characters out here. We all have our adjectives," he said.

Weikopf does not hide the fact he has been one of the game's stormier characters.

"It's important to be yourself. I feel like everything I've done, right or wrong, is spontaneous. If I want to throw a club at the bag, I do. I don't want to end up in the loony house. I've got to let it out. I really don't care."

With that, Weiskopf gave his listeners some public relations advice with tour players.

"IF THEY (the media) like a player, he's always the favorite, no matter what he does. He always gets good ink.

"There's a lot of misunderstood people out here. Their personalities are not the same in here (the press room) as when they take off their spikes in the clubhouse.

"They may be intimidated by you guys. Some of them are hysterically funny, like Ed Sneed. But he gets on the course, he's so conservative he's looked over."

Weiskopf also listed Hale Irwin and Peter Jacobsen in the same category.

HE THEN shifted directions and talked about Billy Casper, a winner 51 times on the tour but often described as bland.

Baseball Today...

Tuesday, July 6

On this date in baseball in 1933:

Babe Ruth of the New York Yankees hit a two-run, third-inning homer off St.Louis' Wild Bill Hallahan to lead the American League to a 4-2 victory in baseball's first All-Star Game.

Cardinals second baseman Frankie Frisch hit a home run for the National League, which couldn't overcome the combined eight-hit pitching of winning pitcher Lefty Gomez of the Yankees, Alvin Crowder of Washington and Lefty Grove of Philadelphia.

The game, brainchild of Chicago Tribune sports editor Arch Ward, was witnessed by a packed house of 47,595 at Chicago's Comiskey Park.

Today's Birthdays

Pittsburgh Pirates first baseman Jason Thompson is 28. New York Yankees second baseman Willie Randolph is also 28.

Brazil victimized in soccer stunner

By ROBERT BARR

MADRID, Spain (AP) — In a tournament which has had no shortage of upsets, Italy turned in the biggest of them all when it blew favorite Brazil out of the World Cup soccer championships.

Paulo Rossi, who resumed playing only two months ago after a two-year suspension for his involvement in a bribery scandal, scored all three goals for Italy in Monday's 3-2 shocker that put the Italians into the semifinals.

Both coaches agreed after the spine-tingling thriller that Brazil's hunger for its fifth straight victory had been its undoing. Playing desperately for a victory when a tie would have beenlenough, the South Americans spent too much time surrounding the Italian goal and let the slippery Rossi roam free.

Spain, meanwhile, made peace with its fans by battling England to a scoreless tie — a result which meant nothing for Spain in the standings, but which sent England home and gave West Germany a place among the Final Four.

Poland on Sunday fought the Soviet Union to a 0-0 tie to nail down a semifinal berth, while a surprisingly powerful French team swamped Northern Ireland 4-1 to advance.

THAT SET up the first all-European semifinals since 1966, and gave the Europeans bragging rights in the eternal debate over the merits of European and South American soccer.

The semifinals on Thursday will match Poland and Italy in Barcelona — a rematch of their 0-0 first-round meeting — and France vs. West Germany in Seville. The losers play for third place Saturday in Alicante then the winners go at it for the Cup Sunday in Madrid.

None of those matches figures to top the drama or the shock of the Italian victory in Barcelona.

Italy began with three ties, then beat defending champion Argentina 2-1. Brazil had four straight victories in this tournament, had not lost a World Cup match since 1974 and had not missed the Cup semifinals since 1966. It was generally conceded before start of the tournament that Brazil's talent and innovation put it above the other 23 teams in the tournament.

ROSSI scored in the fifth, 25th and 75th minutes. Brazil's Socrates matched the first goal in the 12th minute, Roberto Falcao tied the score again in the 67th minute, but a furious Brazilian assault on the goal was unable to equal Rossi's third goal.

Lightweight title unified

CINCINNATI (AP) — The fight between Aaron Pryor and Alexis Arguello will come off despite a contractural problem that almost prevented it.

Pryor, who is putting his crown on the line, will receive a guaranteed $1.6 million and Arguello, the World Boxing Council lightweight champion, will get at least $1.5 million.

Leg injury sidelines Coe

By The Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — British track team officials were uncertain how long mile record-holder Sebastian Coe will be sidelined with a leg injury.

The injury forced Coe to withdraw from a scheduled 3,000-meter race against archrival Steve Ovett on July 17 at the Crystal Palace. Coe has also withdrawn from next week's meet against a Swedish team at Karlstadt.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, July 7, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Filmkaker George Cukor, fashion designer Pierre Cardin, Ringo Starr and "The Tonight Show's" "Doc" Severinson celebrate birthdays today. The financial picture looks much brighter in the months ahead. Do what you can to reduce your indebtedness. Set new business goals and pursue them aggressively. An artistic talent can help you earn extra cash. Property investments provide security for years to come. Count on a romantic relationship to grow more and more rewarding. You will be happiest with a spouse who shares your wide-ranging intellectual interests. A life in the academic world will always hold a special appeal for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Influential person is mildly encouraging. Some confusion persists regarding a romantic relationship. Watch what you say. Avoid going overboard when shopping.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Trust your instincts over the experts' advice. Domestic life can be turbulent if you are neglectful. A small token of affection works wonders with the object of your affections.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Expert advice is essential in financial situations. Check and recheck facts, figures. Patience, tolerance serve you well in difficult moments. Loved one is unusually supportive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your work is fulfilling. A creative idea brings new profits. Be careful not to overindulge in food, drink. A solid personal relationship changes in important ways.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You need to pace yourself better to accomplish more. Creative work and travel are intertwined. Keep in touch with a former romantic partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Spend more time alone working on complex projects. A partnership is helpful for expanding a business. You gain a fresh perspective.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take stock of your financial situation and do everything possible to get the greatest return from your assets. Avoid making hasty personal decisions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An intellectual, analytical approach will help you win new acceptance from an authority figure. Reappraise your goals.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Table your financial plans until you can study them further. You should not ask others to assume risks that you yourself are unwilling to take.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A speculative venture returns a quick profit. Plunge your gains into more traditional ways of making money. Some hard work you did in the past begins to pay off.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A gift arrives without a card. Working alone is difficult but it will bring the largest financial rewards. Consider child's needs when making your decision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get a chance to speak on a subject that you care about deeply. Family obligations must be met on time. Artistic efforts are well received.

Opening lead: Six of ♠.

When you spot a line of play that offers a 3-to-1 chance of success, you tend to think that that is good enough. But there may be a better line available.

The auction was straightforward. After South rebid his hearts, North felt that his excellent trump support and outside aces merited a raise. South was full value for his push to game.

West led a club and declarer won the ace in dummy. He come to hand with a club ruff and led the jack of trumps, covered by the king and won by the ace. Declarer returned to his hand with the ten of trumps and ran the jack of diamonds. West won and exited with a spade.

The long and short of it is that declarer lost two tricks in spades and diamonds for down one. He felt hard done by, since it was better than a 75 percent chance that West held one of the diamond honors. To improve the odds even further, declarer would still have made the contract after the spade shift if East had one of the spade honors.

The hand would have been written off as merely unlucky had there not been a kibitzer present. He suggested that declarer could have made the contract by ruffing out the last club and then playing ace of spades and another, setting up the fourth spade for a diamond discard. The players felt that that would not succeed on some other distributions.

The kibitzer was right, but for the wrong reasons. Once the heart king appears, declarer should ruff dummy's last club, draw trumps and then play ace of spades and another. Let's suppose that East has the worst possible holding for declarer: K-Q-9-x in the suit. He can capture the ten with the queen, cash the king, then exit with the nine. But declarer ruffs and runs the jack of diamonds. If an honor appears from West, declarer loses only one diamond. If West plays low and East wins the trick, he is end played. A diamond is into declarer's combined tenace; any other return allows declarer to ruff in one hand while getting rid of his diamond loser from the other.

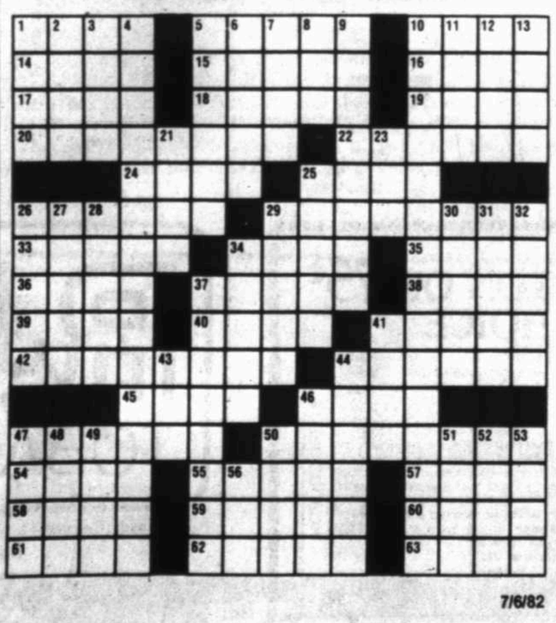

Thus we see that the play of ace and another spade guarantees the contract regardless of the distribution. Try it for yourself.

Astronauts not 'jacks-of-all-trades'

By PAUL RECER

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The jack-of-all-trades era of the astronaut ended when Columbia flew home from its fourth orbital mission. The age of the new breed, "astronaut specialist," begins with flight number five.

Crews for each of the next four shuttle flights include two pilot-astronauts and two mission specialists, or non-pilot astronauts.

The ninth flight, set for September 1983, will include six men: Two pilots, two mission specialists and two payload specialists, including one astronaut from either the Netherlands, West Germany or Switzerland.

This represents a fundamental change in space travel for the United States.

From the beginning of America's space program, astronauts were trained for every job in space that might be needed. And each astronaut was trained for a specific mission.

Every man aboard each of the Apollo flights could do the job of every other crewman. Each astronaut, even those who started out as scientists, was a highly trained pilot. And the pilot-astronauts became highly trained science technicians.

Test-pilot astronauts who landed on the moon spent months before their missions training as geologists. One expert who reviewed their work said the men of Apollo were all "competent field geologists."

Scientist-astronauts selected by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration spent their first year learning to fly high-performance jets. They were all able to take the controls of the spacecraft.

On Skylab, which involved missions lasting for weeks, the pilot-astronauts became experts on instruments studying the Earth and the sun. They also were trained for medical emergencies and each could perform minor procedures, such as pulling teeth, stitching wounds, giving shots and drawing blood.

The space shuttle is changing the need for such extensive cross-training.

"With the shuttle," Johnson Space Center Director Christopher Kraft said once, "anybody can fly into space."

Astronauts are split into distinct groups based on the jobs they will have in space.

Pilot-astronauts will fly the craft. Unlike Ken Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield on Columbia's fourth flight, the pilot-astronauts will not perform experiments or operate instruments in the payload.

Their job, said Charles Lewis, a flight director, will be "flying the vehicle to to satisfy the payload users."

Mission specialists will be responsible for the basic goal of the mission, and for the general operation of the experiments or the payloads. They will operate the robot arm that manuevers cargo packages.

Payload specialists will concentrate on the specific cargo. They will be the in-space agents of customers paying to fly the payload. Some payload specialist in the future may not even be employed by NASA, but, rather, by the customer. A manufacturer, for instance, could fly a company engineer whose only job would be to concentrate on his firm's payload.

The changes will ripple throughout the manned spaceflight system, dramatically reshaping the operation of Mission Control, that earthbound big brother that has guided all operations on earlier spaceflights.

In the fourth shuttle flight, the first separate control center was put into operation. Mattingly and Hartsfield, operating a secret military experiment package, communicated directly with an Air Force controller in Sunnyvale, Calif., who was known only as "paycom." He directed operation of the secret experiment. It was the first time a flying astronaut talked directly with a paying customer instead of NASA controllers.

In the future, there will be several separate control centers. They are already being developed at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California and at the Goddard Spaceflight Center in Maryland. Eventually, even private companies or universities could have control centers for operation of specific payloads.

Mission Control, says Lewis, will become less important in the operation of the shuttle, a spacecraft designed to cut some of the bonds with Earth.

Engineers designed the craft with this in mind. On board is the most sophisticated computer system ever flown. It's capable of closely monitoring the spacecraft systems with the vigilance once provided only by Mission Control, with three shifts daily of some 300 experts.

"I think we'll gradually work our way into ... sort of a small Mission Control team," said Lewis. Experts would be on standby, if needed, he said, but the number working full time on flight control will be pared back. Some positions already have been combined or eliminated.

Columbia and its sister craft eventually will be like ships at sea. The captain controls the craft, his crew specialists do their jobs and the home port, the experts on the ground, will be consulted only when there are problems.

Shuttle astronauts to undergo debriefing

By PAUL RECER

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Astronauts Ken Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield start answering questions today about their week in space, while engineers study the apparently poor performance of two solid rocket boosters that put spaceship Columbia into orbit lower and slower than planned.

Mattingly and Hartsfield returned to Earth Sunday from a seven-day space voyage that completed the flight tests of Columbia.

The astronauts relaxed on Monday, their first day off in months, but started work today on the massive postflight report and a series of debriefings.

The pair will spend hours over the next several weeks answering questions from experts and in writing a lengthy pilot's report.

Among the debriefers will be Air Force experts. The fourth flight of Columbia included operation of a secret military payload and the astronauts will be questioned on operation of that equipment.

Officials said the spaceship performed very well and has been cleared to start routine operations in the fall.

Experts examining Columbia at Edwards Air Force Base, where the spaceship landed Sunday, said it was in "really, really good shape."

"The vehicle overall is in far better shape than it was on the three previous missions," said Jim Harrington, ground operations manager for Columbia.

Workers found a small oxidizer leak in a small rocket thruster, but officials said there was no major problem.

But there was concern about the solid rocket boosters that on June 27 drilled the winged spacecraft into an orbit.

According to Aviation Week and Space Technology, a respected trade publication, the solid rocket boosters provided less thrust than planned.

The magazine emphasized that the less-than-planned performance did not endanger the spacecraft or the crew, but is of concern to engineers because Columbia and other space shuttles using the solid rockets will carry heavier payloads in the future.

According to the magazine, officials said the rocket boosters did not contribute the speed and altitude that was planned for the launch.

Monday was observed as a holiday at the Johnson Space Center and officials were not available to confirm the magazine story.

The space shuttle is launched by the joint action of the solid rocket boosters and two main engines, fueled by liquid propellants, on the orbiter itself.

As the craft sped toward space, the magazine said, Mission Control engineers noticed it was not traveling at the speed expected or gaining the altitude planned at the expected times. Orbit was achieved, but only because the main engines burned about two seconds longer than planned and burned an extra ton of fuel.

The solid rocket boosters, which are designed to be recovered, refurbished and used again, were lost during the launch when their parachutes failed.

Officials said the boosters hit the Atlantic Ocean at more than 300 miles an hour and sank in 3,000 feet of water. Failure of the parachutes, however, was not related to the lowered thrust performance, engineers believe.

Poor performance of the rocket boosters did not seriously affect the flight of the Columbia. Later rocket burns by the main engines and by small rocket thrusters on the craft raised its orbit to the planned 203 miles.

Officials said the voyage made by Mattingly and Hartsfield completed virtually all of the planned tests of the spacecraft and that the Columbia now is cleared to start carrying commercial payloads. Its first operational flight is set for this fall.

The spacecraft remained at Edwards Air Force Base in California, where the astronauts made a pinpoint landing on Sunday while President Reagan and more than 500,000 Independence Day spectactors watched.

Harrington said workers are preparing to mount the craft atop a special 747 transport for a ferry trip across the country on July 15.

Columbia will be delivered to the Kennedy Space Center for refitting to prepare it for a fifth flight, now set for Nov. 11. The mission will include the launch of two satellites.

Meanwhile, a second space shuttle, the Challenger, was safely delivered by the 747 to the Kennedy Space Center. Challenger will be prepared for a space mission now scheduled for early next year.

Professor's disappearance remains mystery

By S.J. GUFFEY

MAZATLAN, Mexico (AP) — A man who confessed to killing a University of Colorado professor who has been missing for five weeks has retracted the claim, according to the professor's wife.

The wife of economics professor Nicholas Schrock on Monday visited the desolate, parched foothills near the western coast of Mexico where authorities had discovered a truck belonging to her husband.

Before leaving for her home in Boulder, Colo., later that day, Ruth Schrock expressed doubts that her husband will ever turn up safe.

"At one point we thought he had confessed," she said of the suspect, Genaro Juarez, who was expected to lead Mexican authorities to Schrock's body. "At one time, he confessed he had stabbed Nick. Now he denies that. He maintains he's innocent."

Neither Mexican nor American authorities have any explanation for what happened to Schrock, an economics professor who has been missing since May 30 when he departed in his truck for a summer teaching job in Guadalajara.

The truck reappeared last week and officials accompanied by members of Schrock's family on Monday revisited the site where it was found. Juarez, a gas station attendant from neighboring Coyotitan believed to be in his late teens or early 20s, also went with the group, his hands bound with a piece of cloth.

What led authorities to Juarez in the first place still is not clear. Mexican authorities would say only that an empty wine bottle reported to have belonged to Schrock was found with Juarez and that he told them he had sold a flashlight found in Schrock's car.

"There were some things that we think (have led to) the person responsible for the crime," said Police Detective Roberto Robles, who is in charge of the investigation. "But I have very little confidence that he is telling us the truth because we haven't found the body."

Last week, Juarez reportedly told State of Sinaloa officials that he and another man had buried Schrock's body in a shallow grave somewhere in the parched hills near San Ignacio, where the truck was found.

Schrock's wife arrived in Mazatlan on Saturday, expecting to identify a body. But repeated searches — including Monday's efforts — have turned up no body and no grave.

Subsequently, Mrs. Schrock learned the suspect, the subject of intense interrogation by Mexican police, was no longer confessing and wasn't leading anyone to a body.

"I have fantasies of many different scenarios," Mrs. Schrock said as she sat looking at the Pacific from her hotel room. "The nicest would be if he was found alive and well. The evidence points against that. I am not optimistic."

Mrs. Schrock left Mexico on Monday for her Boulder, Colo. home, leaving only one family member — brother-in-law Wayne Wilhelm of Canton, Ohio — at the scene.

"I sure wouldn't want to live here," said Wilhelm of the sun-baked area where Shrock's vehicle was found. "And I wouldn't particularly want to die out here."

Wilhelm described his in-law as "a regular guy, very unpretentious, courteous and soft-spoken," and said he doubted he would purposefully disappear.

Wilhelm also paid a visit Monday to San Ignacio Mayor Francisco Palacios, who reportedly had used Schrock's truck for political campaigning before reporting it to American officials. Palacios has admitted using the vehicle "to keep the battery up."

Sipping coffee in the mayor's small, air-conditioned office, Wilhelm quizzed Palacios about the suspect through an interpreter. Palacios, obviously discomfited by the visit, said only that Juarez has a history of being involved in robberies and that his nickname, "Parajo" or "Bird," indicated a person with fingers like those of a predator's talons.

American authorities say they are convinced Mexican officials want the case solved quickly.

Expensive camping gear was still packed in the truck when officials discovered it on a dirt road near Route 15. Some $5,000 in travelers checks was missing, but cash and other checks were still in the truck — casting doubt on whether robbery was actually involved.

"We don't know if it was supposed to be a robbery but if it was, they sure botched it," said one U.S. official.

Farmer turns up remains of Civil War steamer in field

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A farmer clearing his field with a bulldozer turned up a piece of metal that researchers say may belong to a steamer that sank in the Mississippi River in 1865, killing up to 1,500 people in one of history's worst ship disasters.

Officials of the National Underwater and Marine Agency, a private, Washington-based firm, have not decided whether to try recovering the sunken Civil War steamer Sultana and the $18,000 in gold believed aboard, one of the researchers, Janita Potter of Memphis, said Monday.

She said researchers are still digging in the area for more evidence that the steamer is buried there.

The recovered piece was found in a field about a mile from the present riverbed, in an area exposed when the meandering Mississippi changed course in the 115 years since the disaster.

The field, now planted in soybeans, is northwest of Mound City, Ark., just across the Mississippi River from Memphis, the agency said. But officials would not disclose the exact location, fearing that the curious would trample the farmer's crop.

Mrs. Potter, who describes herself as a history buff, said she and her husband, Jerry Potter, became involved in the project through their friendship with Clive Cussler, who wrote "Raise the Titanic" and other books about maritime research and founded the National Underwater and Marine Agency.

"The people who own the property found something first and from then on it kind of built up," she said.

She said the landowner turned up a piece of metal while clearing his field with a bulldozer, but she declined to say when the discovery was made.

"It was a long time back," Mrs. Potter said. "The research itself has been going to for several years."

The Sultana — homeport Cincinnati, Ohio — exploded and sank April 27, 1865, on a trip from Vicksburg, Miss., to Cairo, Ill. On board were more than 2,200 passengers, most of them homeward bound Union soldiers who had been Confederate prisoners during the war.

The 1,000-ton steamer was about nine miles upsteam from Memphis — at what is now Mound City, Ark. — when three of its four boilers blew.

The United States Custom Service at Memphis lists the death toll at 1,547, which would make it a disaster worse than either the 1912 sinking of the Titanic, in which 1,517 people died, or the sinking of the Lusitania, which involved the loss of 1,198 lives and helped bring the United States into World War I.

$673.30 Per Month

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivas lent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage bases upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%

Clements says unemployment insurance figures suspect

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — With the Texas Employment Commission projecting a rise of up to 2,000 percent in employer taxes just before the November election, Gov. Bill Clements says he may have the unemployment figures audited.

Clements told reporters he finds the TEC's figures "suspect" and doesn't think the projected rise in employer taxes jibes with what he called a not "all that significant" increase in unemployment in the state.

TEC announced last week that unemployment in the state hit 7.2 percent in June, the state's highest rate since 1970.

But TEC Chairman Nolan Ward said the projected increases in employers' contributions to unemployment insurance are based on "simple arithmetic" and are due to an increasing percentage of layoffs, not the unemployment rate as a whole.

Last month, the commission said that if trends continue, employers who now pay $6 per employee for unemployment insurance — the lowest rate in the nation — could face an increase up to $114 per employee after Oct. 1, when the new rate goes into effect.

"They are suspect," Clements said of the figures. "We are re-evaluating those numbers. Jarvis Miller and the budget planning office are making a very close analysis and we may even go over there and audit those numbers, because I just question them."

Comparing the 7.2 percent unemployment rate with the 6.5 percent figure of June 1981, Clements said the rise in the employers' rates is not warranted.

"I don't think a half of one percent is all that significant," he said. "Under those circumstances, I don't see how or why there should be any drastic change in those rates, and we're going to give it a very close look."

For every $5 million the state unemployment insurance fund drops below a $225 million "floor," employer taxes go up a tenth of a percent. The fund currently stands at $197 million.

"Our computations themselves are simple arithmetic," Ward said, "not a complicated process."

He said the agency was "very pleased" to show its computations to the governor's staff and suggested Clements' threat of an audit is politically motivated.

"Certainly any tax increase, especially one that is coming in October, is not particularly good," Ward said.

PLO says Israel blocks supplies

By The Associated Press

The Israeli siege of west Beirut is choking off water, power and food supplies for the 8,000 guerrillas and nearly 500,000 civilians believed trapped in the Moslem-held sector, and Lebanese and Palestinian leaders have accused Israel of trying to starve out the remnants of the PLO.

An Israeli official denied the charges, which have further complicated already slow-moving peace efforts led by U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib.

The Middle East trouble-shooter put together another in a series of Israeli-Palestinian cease-fires at sundown Monday to halt day-long exchanges of artillery, rocket and mortar fire that marked the heaviest fighting around Beirut since Habib's previous cease-fire was announced June 25.

There were no reports early today of any new fighting between Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization and the Israeli forces that invaded Lebanon on June 6 to crush the guerrilla army.

The Palestinian news agency WAFA claimed joint PLO and Lebanese leftist forces "completely wiped out" a company of Israeli infantry that it said tried to break through Palestinian defenses and advance toward the airport compound Monday.

Israeli forces made no effort to move into west Beirut, but used tanks and artillery units to shell Palestinian enclaves near the airport and the Fakhani neighborhood on the southern edge of Beirut, where the PLO's command center is located.

Palestinian guerrillas fired back with Katyusha rockets and mortars, and in Tel Aviv, the Israeli military command reported three soldiers were wounded in the barrages.

Two Palestinian shells struck the parking lot of the presidential palace in Baabda, an Israeli-held suburb east of Beirut, according to a palace spokesman. The shells destroyed the limousine of Foreign Minister Fuad Butros, who was conferring with President Elias Sarkis, and wounded his driver, the spokesman said.

Lebanese state radio reported that Habib relayed word to Lebanese officials that Israel would stop its shelling at about 4 p.m., and correspondents at the battlefront said the firing stopped from both sides around nightfall.

When the sun went down, the lights failed to come on in nearly all of west Beirut.

Minister trying changes on Argentine economy

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The economic minister appointed after the disastrous Falkland Islands war says he will devalue the peso, lower interest rates and restrict imports to stop what he calls Argentina's "state of decay without precedent."

Economy Minister Jose Dagnino Pastore, who took office last week in the new military government of President Reynaldo Bignone, announced the changes in a nationally broadcast address Monday night. The new policies reverse the free-market philosophy the ruling three-man junta has followed for six years.

Dagnino Pastore said the measures were needed because a 10-year high unemployment rate of about 11 percent, foreign debt of more than $35 billion and record numbers of bankruptcies are contributing to what he called "a national emergency."

Argentina's 28 million people have eagerly awaited a change in economic policy promised by Bignone, a retired army general who last Thursday replaced Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri as president. Bignone also has promised to return the country to civilian rule by March 1984.

Galtieri was forced out for his role in Argentina's defeat by Britain in the 74-day Falklands conflict, which critics say aggravated the ailing economy. Although Argentina has not agreed to stop fighting for sovereignty over the South Atlantic British colony, its forces there surrendered June 14.

The new economy minister said he would raise exports through devaluing the peso, Argentina's currency. Devaluations make foreign currencies more valuable, discourage imports and spur a country's exports by effectively lowering their prices on the world market.

Dagnino Pastore said the monetary exchange market would be split into commercial and financial sectors. The commercial exchange rate would affect imports and exports, while the financial rate would apply to other transactions.

The minister did not provide new exchange rates. The central bank said late Monday the commercial rate would be set each busness day. The financial rate would fluctuate according to supply and demand in the financial exchange market, the bank said.

Economic observers predicted the dollar — which last Friday was officially valued at 15,700 pesos — would go to about 22,000 on the commercial market and about 24,000 on the financial market.

The government closed exchange houses Monday, saying it wanted to discourage financial speculation before announcing the new measures.

Dangino Pastore said increased exports will stimulate Argentina's failing industries, which have been sharply hurt by tight credit and heavy imports. He also promised to increase wages to stimulate internal demand, but did not say by how much. The military regime has controlled wages since seizing power from civilian President Isabel Peron in 1976.

The new minister said interest rates — about 80 percent annually — would be lowered through strictly controlling the financial sector. He said this would reduce the number of finance and exchange houses, which government critics claim are the only enterprises making money.

Slimmer federalism program springs from Western talks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After months of public silence on "new federalism," President Reagan is pledging support for a new, slimmer version of his plan to turn federal programs over to the states.

The president was meeting today with 125 legislators and local officials from 13 Western states to reiterate his desire to give responsibility for some social programs to the individual states while the federal government assumes others.

Under the revised plan, negotiated over the last five months between the White House and state officials, about $39 billion in federal programs would be transferred to the states while the federal government assumed most of the expensive Medicaid program that is costing states $18.3 billion this year. Also, the federal government will keep the $11 billion food stamp program, which state and local officials fought taking over as originally proposed.

Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the basic welfare program now shared 50-50, would be assumed entirely by states.

Reagan, accompanied by his wife, Nancy, arrived here by helicopter Monday from his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch, where he has been vacationing since July 1. They spent the night at the Century Plaza Hotel, where their daughter, Patti Davis, joined them for dinner.

Before leaving his ranch, Reagan received a detailed written report on the Lebanese crisis from William Clark, his national security adviser. Then the president sent new instructions to his Mideast negotiator, Philip Habib, "responding in detail to points raised by Habib as he continues his peace mission in Beirut," deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes told reporters.

Speakes said Habib's efforts to mediate between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization have "reached a most sensitive stage. The discussions in Beirut are extremely complex with the many issues and many parties involved."

"The United States has made clear to all parties the imperative of the cease-fire," said Speakes. "It's essential that the fighting stop and negotiations proceed in good faith."

After addressing the state and local officials today, Reagan was visiting a senior citizen's center.

Tonight, the president and his wife were celebrating the first lady's birthday with a private dinner.

Columbia pilots set to answer queries

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Astronauts Thomas K. Mattingly II and Henry Hartsfield Jr. start answering questions today about their week in space while engineers study an apparently poor performance by two solid rocket boosters that put space shuttle Columbia into orbit lower and slower than planned.

Mattingly and Hartsfield returned to Earth and a July 4 celebration on Sunday from a seven-day voyage that completed Columbia's flight tests.

The astronauts relaxed on Monday, their first day off in months, but go back to work today. They will spend hours over the next several weeks answering questions from experts and writing a lengthy pilot's report.

Among the debriefers will be Air Force experts, because the fourth flight of Columbia included operation of a secret military payload.

Officials said the spaceship performed very well and has been cleared to start routine operations in the fall.

Experts examining Columbia at Edwards Air Force Base, where it landed Sunday, said it was in "really, really good shape."

"The vehicle overall is in far better shape than it was on the three previous missions," said Jim Harrington, ground operations manager for Columbia.

Workers found a small oxidizer leak in a small rocket thruster, but officials said there was no major problem.

But there was concern about the solid rocket boosters that on June 27 drilled the winged spacecraft into orbit.

According to Aviation Week and Space Technology, a respected trade publication, the solid rocket boosters provided less thrust than planned.

The magazine emphasized that the less-than-planned performance did not endanger the spacecraft or the crew.

Moon in longest total eclipse of century

By F.N. D'ALESSIO

CHICAGO (AP) — The longest total lunar eclipse of the century blotted out the moon early today, delighting thousands of moongazers, sightseers, merrymakers and scientists who gathered to watch it around the country.

Hundreds gathered to catch the free show at the Adler Planetarium on the Chicago lakefront. It was a celestial finale to the Independence Day weekend.

The eclipse achieved totality at 2:38 a.m. EDT, but the red color predicted by many astronomers in the upper atmosphere failed to materialize in the Chicago area, although witnesses in New York reported an orange color.

It was the longest total lunar eclipse since 1859.

The Earth's penumbra, or lighter area of shadow, began to cover the moon at 12:22 a.m. The moon appeared little different until it moved into the center of the Earth's shadow, or umbra, at 1:33 a.m.

The moon was totally eclipsed until 4:24 a.m., a period of an hour and a half.

As totality ended, the moon's eastern edge brightened first. By 5:29 a.m., the moon appeared normal, but the end of the eclipse was not until about 6:40 a.m., when the moon moved out of the penumbra.

The shadowed moon hung in the southern sky like the ghost of a moldy apricot, in Chicago barely visible through the haze and urban glare.

Earlier, Larry Ciupik, associate astronomer at the Adler Planetarium, said the moon "could appear copper-colored, or orange, or even brick-red." He and other scientists had predicted a more vivid than usual color for this eclipse because of the large amounts of volcanic dust spewed into the upper atmosphere recently by volcanoes such as Mexico's El Chinchonal.

The mood of many along the Chicago waterfront appeared to be one of resigned anticlimax — the show wasn't as spectacular as the weekend fireworks, but it was free, the night was warm and the beer was cold.

It was also an active night for scientists.

Peter Chen of the McDonald Observatory near Fort Davis in southwest Texas said his job was to measure the light of the stars while the moon was in shadow. No moonlight would interfere with the measurements, he said.

At the Fernback Science Center near Atlanta, Dr. Richard Williamson said he was taking pictures of the eclipse to analyze its color.

Several hundred visitors had a chance for close views of the moon through 12½-inch reflecting telescopes set up near the Adler Planetarium dome by the Chicago Astronomical Society.

One reason for the long eclipse, scientists said, was that the moon was near the most distant point it ever reaches in its orbit around the Earth. The farther the moon is from the Earth, the longer it takes to pass through the Earth's shadow.

The length of the eclipse also was caused by the moon's passing through the center of the Earth's shadow. Usually, it passes through a smaller area of shadow above or below the center.

For a total eclipse to occur, the Earth must be between the moon and the sun, with all three bodies in a straight line. A lunar eclipse can occur only when the moon is full because that is the only time the moon is in a position opposite the sun.

One of the most dramatic views of the eclipse was moments before totality, when the right-hand edge of the moon was still shining whitely like a scrap of rind clinging to an overly ripe French cheese. The thin shining crescent heightened the three-dimensional relief of the scene, making it obvious that the moon — like the Earth — is a ball.

Civil Rights Commission members to be replaced

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — As part of a clean sweep of the six-member U.S. Civil Rights Commission, President Reagan has nominated a 32-year-old anti-abortion activist who once called for abolition of the agency.

Congressional sources said close scrutiny will be given by liberal and moderate members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to Robert A. Destro, who just resigned as director of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights in Milwaukee.

Reagan has either replaced or indicated his intention to replace five of the six members of the commission. Sources who asked not to be identified said the current chairman, Clarence Pendleton, has indicated that the president will also name a sixth member to take the place of Jill Ruckelshaus, an active Republican feminist.

The Catholic league Destro headed is a nationwide organization of 20,000 members whose main purpose is to urge reversal of the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing most abortions.

The civil rights commission is prohibited by law from investigating and issuing reports on the impact of abortion law on minorities. It was set up to study and publish reports on the progress or lack of progress by minorities in fighting discrimination.

IN 1978, Destro testified before the same Senate Judiciary Committee and criticized the civil rights commission for failure to look into discrimination against Catholics and white ethnic groups like Poles and Italians.

Destro said the commission has a "pronounced animus toward religion and religious discrimination cases."

He said blacks, women and other "approved minorities" are well represented by organizations like the Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Organization for Women and don't need a federal commission.

Destro said the commission has failed to examine discrimination against Catholics and ethnic groups, and has therefore created a national impression that only blacks, Hispanics, Indians and women suffer from racial or sexual discrimination.

As a result, he said, "If it were to go out of existence today it would not be missed. Its functions...could well be carried out by interest groups such as the NAACP, NOW or any of the other special interest groups."

Asked later if he were urging that federal funds for the commission be cut off, Destro said, "Yes, that is accurate."

ONLY IF the commission were to place heavy emphasis on white ethnic groups and religious discrimination should it be allowed to stay alive, Destro told the committee, which was then considering the commission budget for 1979.

"It has in effect turned into a government lobby for special interest groups," Destro said. "The law is designed for people not for interest groups."

Destro was reported traveling to take a new job as a law professor at Catholic University in Washington and could not be reached for comment.

Last week, Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the 16-member judiciary panel, scheduled Destro and two other civil rights commission nominees for votes without the usual congressional hearings on their nominations.

But objections were raised and Senate sources said when Congress returns next week from a 10-day Fourth of July recess, there will be hearings on his qualifications and possibly those of two others nominated for the commission — Constantine Dombalis, 56, dean of the Saints Constantine and Helen Green Orthodox Cathedral of Virginia in Richmond, Va., and Guadalupe Quintanilla, 44, assistant provost at the University of Houston.

Quintanilla, although nominally filling a Democratic seat on the commission, campaigned actively for President Reagan and Republican Texas Gov. William Clements. The sources, asking not to be identified, said that activity raises questions about political partisanship on the commission.

CONTROVERSY OVER an earlier Reagan nominee to the commission ended last February when the Rev. B. Samuel Hart asked that his nomination be withdrawn, and Reagan agreed.

Hart, 50, aroused the opposition of women's, civil rights and homosexual groups after he told a news conference that he opposed the Equal Rights Amendment, that he was against busing to integrate public schools and that he did not consider that homosexuals had a civil rights cause. Published reports later said Hart was behind in loan payments the White House did not know about and had not registered to vote between 1966 and his nomination.

Destro's 1978 testimony before the Judiciary Committee was on behalf of the Catholic organization he directed.

"We are day-to-day becoming more and more aware that religious discrimination is rampant in this country. It is very, very subtle," he said.

Destro also said, "Those who run the commission are apparently so committed to their notion of who should share the 'good life' that they forget that others who do not share their religious beliefs or lack thereof or ethnic origins may be having a rough go of it."

He said, however, that he did not quarrel with the commission's conclusions about blacks, Hispanics or women, although he found the staff research on minority issues to be "shoddy."

Cocaine use on Capitol Hill probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., says it would have been the "height of hypocrisy" for him to refuse use of his office for an undercover narcotics investigation on Capitol Hill.

CBS reported Monday night that Dornan allowed his office to be used as the base for an investigation on cocaine trafficking. The probe led to the April arrests of former congressional page Douglas Marshal and two others, Robert Finkel and Troy Todd, the network said.

Dornan, who is on the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, said District of Columbia police and investigators for a newspaper columnist asked him in March 1981 if they could use his office.

Dornan said he did not know who narcotics agents were targeting but felt that because of this committee assignment he had to become involved.

"Since I was a member of the narcotics committee it would be the height of hypocrisy for me to be so outraged about narcotics use in the country and then to turn down a legitimate undercover operation that only wanted to credential themselves or headquarter out of my office," he said.

Dornan said that if some of his colleagues are users they should be prosecuted.

"You are the passer of laws," he said. "You must be held to a much, much higher standard. In this case if there is any sweeping under the rug of users it is a disgrace and simply must not happen."

The Associated Press reported last month that Finkel said he supplied cocaine to one assistant Capitol Hill doorkeeper, at least one Senate page and an employee of one congressional office. Sources said Finkel was cooperating with the grand jury and had started to name people he says he supplied with cocaine.

Police said a series of runners delivered drugs to Capitol Hill offices including those of congressmen, CBS reported.

At least five of the suspected runners have been subpoenaed, according to CBS.

The network said the runners have told investigators that they have personally delivered cocaine to the offices of about a dozen congressmen. There is also an allegation of delivery to at least one senator, CBS said.

Police investigate lawnmower theft

The burglary of a lawnmower valued at $375 was being investigated by Midland police this morning.

Dale Forse of 2401 W. Neely told officers the lawnmower was taken from the bed of his pickup while it was parked under the carport at his residence. The theft occurred between 7 p.m. Friday and 10 p.m. Monday while Forse was out of town.

An 18-year-old Midland man remained in Midland Memorial Hospital's post critical care unit this morning in serious condition after he was injured in a Monday afternoon traffic mishap.

Federico A. Malsonado of 4703 Comanche suffered a broken collar bone when the car in which he was riding left the road and struck a pole near the intersection of Mineola and Walnut streets at 4:54 p.m. Monday.

The vehicle was driven by Andres C. Bautista, 22, of 1401 S. McKenzie. He told officers he was reaching in the car's glove compartment for a tape when the accident occurred.

Bautista and a second passenger, 19-year-old Armando Montez of 307 W. New York, were treated and released from Midland Memorial.

Midland firefighters responded to three grass fires Monday that were caused by fireworks, according to fire reports. There was no damage listed as a result of any of the fires.

Snyder man charged in Odessan's death

SNYDER — Charges were filed Sunday afternoon against a Snyder man in connection with the shooting death here of a 28-year-old Odessan.

According to the Scurry County Sheriff's Department, the shooting, which occurred in a south Snyder park, apparently followed a dispute. Lincoln James Hooper, who was struck in the neck by a single bullet fired from a 30/30 caliber gun, was pronounced dead at the scene by Scurry County Peace Justice Dan Callaway about 5 p.m. Sunday, a sheriff's department spokesman said.

Arrested at the scene was Willie Lee Daniels, who was charged with one count of murder Sunday. Bond was set Monday at $10,000 and he was expected to be brought before the Scurry County Grand Jury today.

Wednesday's high will reach lower 90s

Although only a trace of precipitation was recorded overnight, Midlanders may see some rain with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms lingering through Wednesday.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the low tonight will drop into the upper 60s with the high on Wednesday expected to reach into the lower 90s.

Winds will be from the south at 5-10 mph tonight, shifting to north-northeasterly at 5-10 mph late tonight. Winds should remain northeasterly at 5-10 mph Wednesday.

Monday's high of 96 was eight degrees cooler than the record high of 104, set for that date in 1971. The overnight low of 72 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low of 57, set in 1931.

A mechanic, left, and a passerby survey the scene where a police car opened a cavity and slipped in at a downtown Omaha, Neb., intersection Monday. Detective Donald Stepanek's car opened the hole at the same corner where a water main broke Saturday night and covered the street with more than a foot of water.

Appeals of air traffic controllers behind schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Appeals by thousands of fired air traffic controllers have fallen more than six months behind schedule and civil service officials say they can't speed up the cases because of budget and staff reductions.

The controllers' fight to regain jobs lost after their illegal strike almost a year ago also has become entangled in a budget squabble between President Reagan and Congress that has forced staff furloughs at the agency that is hearing the appeals.

The 310 employees of the Merit System Protection Board, including hearing officers and lawyers, are working reduced hours beginning this week because Congress and the president have not approved a supplemental budget for this fiscal year.

The board is considering appeals by about 10,900 air traffic controllers as well as appeals by thousands of other government employees who lost their jobs because of recent government cutbacks.

Lawyers for the board, meanwhile, are faced with a federal judge's ruling in California ordering the agency to begin hearings by Aug. 16 on the cases of 61 controllers. Judge Robert Takasugi, of the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, said the controllers are being denied their due process because of the delays.

The judge, in comments from the bench, said the delays have reached "constitutional dimensions" and threaten "irreparable injury" to controllers seeking to have their cases heard.

"We want to get on with it, but it's a matter of trying to be reasonable in this Catch 22 that we're in," declared Richard Redenius, the board's managing director. "We're telling our people they're on furlough and the court is telling us to hear the cases."

Board spokesman Lon Anderson said only a small number of cases have so far reached the point of a hearing. No controller has yet to regain his job through a formal appeal, although a few controllers have been reinstated through separate negotiations between the controllers and the Federal Aviation Administration.

Redenius said in an interview that the Merit System Protection Board has been fighting budget problems ever since the mountain of appeals came their way last September as a result of the strike and subsequent firing of 11,500 controllers by Reagan.

Since the first of the year all travel by hearing officers has been suspended, forcing those appealing a dismissal as well as the government agency involved to travel to regional board offices. The practice of providing free transcripts of hearings to appellants also has been stopped, adding costs to an appeal.

Redenius said the agency last summer had wanted an additional $5 million and an another 80 lawyers and hearing officers in its regional offices to handle the larger workload. Instead, the board's budget was cut from $15 million to $12.5 million and its staff reduced from 380 to 310.

By regulation the board has set a standard of completing an appeal within 120 days of receiving it. Redenius said in the agency's three years of existence the standard had been met 98 percent of the time. Agency rules still require that Congress be informed whenever the deadline is not met.

But then came the controller appeals as well as hundreds of other appeals by government workers who have lost their jobs as the Reagan administration moved to reduce the size of the federal government.

"We've got a good track record," Redenius said. "But in this case the whole thing collapsed. Our staff is dwindling and the work load has descended on us."

Most of the appeals by controllers were filed in September and should have been completed by the end of 1981 if the board's time table had been kept. Without additional money and staff, board officials knew early on that even a summer deadline was optimistic.

Now the official target for completing the controller cases remains the end of the year, but few believe even that is possible.

"Sure we can peck away at it...but the fact is that that date is likely to have to slip again," said Redenius. "We now have this enormous bubble of work that's been here for almost a year."

Navy airman finishes avionics course

Navy Airman Apprentice Glenn W. Roberson, son of Lola Rodriguez of Crane, Texas, has completed the Basic Avionics "aviation electronics" Technician Course.

During the self-paced course at the Naval Air Technical Training Center, Memphington, Tenn., the students received instruction on the fundamentals of electronic circuitry and were introduced to the wide variety of electronic equipment items currently installed aboard Navy and Marine Corps Aircraft. They studied airborne radar, communication and computer equipment, plus the technical manuals, safety precautions and troubleshooting procedures used for maintaining each.

Navy Airman Recruit Mark F. Edens, son of Patsy Edens of 1011 W. Storey, Midland, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, Orlando, Fla.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in physical education and hygiene.

Navy Fire Control Technician 3rd Class Thomas M. Thompson, son of Doris O. Thompson of Andrews, recently completed refresher training off the coast of southern California.

Thompson is a crew member aboard the guided missile cruiser USS Bainbridge, homeported in San Diego.

Refresher training is designed to place the ship and its crew in a simulated combat environment to test and prepare them for future operations and to increase the ship's combat readiness. The training included testing combat systems in anti-air, anti-submarine and anti-surface ship warfare.

Navy Airman Recruit Bryan K. Warner, whose wife, Rochelle, is the daughter of William Walters of Midland, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, San Diego.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid.

Marine Lance Cpl. George A. Stanley, son of Reese and Barbara Summerlin of Midland, has departed on a deployment to Okinawa.

Stanley is a member of 3rd Battalion, 2nd Marines, Camp Lejeune, N.C. The battalion will spend six months overseas as part of the Marine Corps' unit deployment program.

During the deployment, his battalion will conduct training exercises with the 3rd Marine Division and the U.S. 7th Fleet.

Marine Lance Cpl. Gilbert Mendoza, son of Maximo and Corina Munoz of 1406 S. Loraine, Midland, has reported for duty with 3rd Battalion, 12th Marines, on Okinawa.

Marine Sgt. Juan M. Carrillo, whose wife, Ila, is the daughter of Bonifacio and Ila Hernandez of 1108 W. Dakota, Midland, has been awarded a Meritorious Mast while serving with Headquarters and Maintenance Squadron 36, Marine Corps Air Station, Futenma, on Okinawa.

A Meritorious Mast is official recognition from a Marine's commanding officer for superior individual performance. It is issued in the form of a bulletin published throughout the command, and a copy is entered in the Marine's permanent service records.

Marine Pfc. Joseph C. Weaver III, son of Donna and Joseph Weaver Jr. of 1505 McDonald St., Midland, has completed the small arms repair course.

The six-week course was conducted at the U.S. Army Ordnance Center, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. Students received instruction on the operation, inspection, maintenance, and repair of rifles, pistols, shotguns, submachineguns, grenade launchers, mortars and other automatic weapons. They also studied the preparation of weapons for shipment and storage and related safety precautions.

Uninspected elevators pose threat to Texans

DALLAS (AP) — A state housing official says a "calamity potential" exists for the thousands of people who ride elevators in Texas skyscrapers because most of the state's elevators are not subject to government inspection.

"Imagine your risk in a major building in Dallas," said Roy Fewell, code and standards specialist for the Texas Community Affairs Housing Division.

"You could have an elevator collapse that was filled with people. You could have a lot of people killed or injured," he said.

Texas, one of the few states that does not require elevator inspections, has left it to cities to set up their own standards and inspection programs.

But few have, according to Walter G. Martin, state director of occupational safety.

Houston is the only major Texas city with an elevator inspection program, Martin said.

"Anybody can put up anything they want to in the state of Texas as far as an elevator is concerned," Martin said. "We have elevators in the state that have probably been in operation for 50 years that have probably never had a safety inspection."

An average of 15 people die each year and 400 others are injured in elevator accidents in the United States and Canada, according to officials of the Otis Elevator Co.

Officials say accidents involving Dallas' 2,500 elevators are rare. In 1976, a Dallas man fell to his death when he stepped out of an elevator that had stopped between floors.

Neither the city nor the state keeps records of elevator accidents.

Meanwhile, the state relies mostly on the industry to police itself — a situation that some industry experts believe dangerous.

"It's not the kind of thing that's going to kill a lot of people right now," said Robert Lauer, engineering vice president of Schindler Haughton Elevator Corp of Toledo, Ohio. "But it'll make its mark in time."

The state made one attempt to regulate elevator safety, but abandoned the program under the mistaken belief the federal government supervised such programs, officials said.

In 1967, the Texas Legislature created the Texas Occupational Safety Board to draft rules to prevent elevator hazards. The board proposed regulations in 1973 that would have required building owners to have their elevators inspected annually by qualified mechanics.

The Legislature cut off funding for the program in 1974.

New drug used in heart transplant

HOUSTON (AP) — The first patient to receive a new anti-rejection drug here during a heart transplant operation was in good condition today, hospital officials said.

A team of surgeons, headed by heart transplant pioneer Denton Cooley, performed the surgery Monday at Texas Heart Institute on a patient identified only as a 43-year-old man.

Cindy Katz, a spokeswoman for the hospital, said late Monday the man was in stable, good condition after the surgery involving Cyclosporin A, an immuno-suppressant drug used to prevent rejection of the transplanted heart.

Ms. Katz said the drug has prevented rejection of a donor heart in 24 of 27 transplants during tests at Stanford University.

In separate tests, Dr. Barry Kaham, who worked with Cooley in Monday's surgery, has used Cyclosporin A in more than 80 patients undergoing kidney transplants, she said.

The hospital spokesman said the kidneys were "functioning after a year in more than 80 percent of patients." Kaham is director of the division of organ transplants at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

Cyclosporin A "has shown an encouraging ability over previously used drugs to interfere with the body's natural rejection system," Ms. Katz said. Doctors hope the drug will "solve many of the infection-related problems that have hindered some of the heart transplants in the past," she said.

Ms. Katz said researchers are unable to explain exactly how Cyclosporin A works, but she said it appears the drug prevents a part of the body's immune system from reacting against a foreign organ such as a donor heart.

"It's shown minimal toxic side effects for the patients," she said.

Sandoz Inc., a Swiss company, manufactures the drug. Kaham recently received permission from the Food and Drug Administration to use it in heart transplants, Ms. Katz said.

Ms. Katz said the hospital hopes to try the drug on 34 more heart transplant patients.

DEATHS

Lon Cole

ROBERT LEE — Services for Lon Cole, 20, of Robert Lee, brother of Kay Duerksen of Midland, were to be at 2 p.m. today in Robert Lee Baptist Church with the Rev. Roy Epperson officiating. Burial was to follow in Robert Lee Cemetery under the direction of Shaffer Funeral Home.

Cole died Saturday from injuries suffered in an automobile accident at Lake Spence.

He was born Oct. 20, 1961, in Freona. He moved to Robert Lee at an early age and lived there until the age of 12. He then returned to Freona where he lived until moving back to Robert Lee a year ago. He had worked for Gideon's Sheet Metal and Air Conditioning.

Other survivors include his father, his mother, his step-mother, three brothers, three sisters, his paternal grandparents and his maternal grandmother.

Israel says U.S., France to send troops to Beirut

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel radio said today that President Reagan has agreed to send 1,600 Marines into west Beirut to occupy positions abandoned by withdrawing Palestinian guerrillas.

It said France also had agreed to contribute troops to the mission.

The radio said the U.S. 6th Fleet, based in the Mediterranean, would supervise the evacuation of the Palestine Liberation Organization from Beirut, and Washington would pay the cost of the ships needed to take them out.

Israeli spokesmen were not available for comment.

The U.S. Embassy also had no comment. In Washington, Alan Romberg, deputy State Department spokesman, said, "I have no comment on it at this point."

The radio said the guerrillas would go to several countries, including Algeria, Iraq, Egypt and Syria. It said the guerrillas had refused to go to Lybia, despite that country's fervent verbal support for the Palestinian cause.

Western European countries had also pressured Washington to keep them away from Tripoli, lest they enhance Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy's trouble-making potential, the radio said.

It said Reagan's position was "a dramatic revolution" in U.S. policy, and that Reagan was taking "a great risk upon himself personally" by committing American troops to the unstable Lebanese arena.

Midland College short courses to be offered

Four short courses offered by the Midland College Department of Community Services are scheduled to begin next week.

Problems of the Working Woman will be discussed in a four-day workshop beginning Monday from 7-9 p.m. The workshop will consist of five major areas, including the Double-Bind Syndrome, Careers, Sexual-Harrassment, Equal Pay for Equal Work and Whether or Not a Career is Enough for the Woman of Today. Marilyn Pennon is the instructor and the fee for the course is $14.

Doris Muehlbrad will teach Cake Decorating II on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. for three weeks. The class will consist of methods for intricate flowers, coler-flow method, garlands, roping and setting up wedding cakes. Cake Decorating I is a prerequisite and the fee for the course is $18.

Aerobic Dancing I will be taught on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7:30 to 9 for four weeks. The course is geared toward increasing cardiovascular endurance, decreasing body fat, increasing stamina and improving body tone. The dance and exercise movements will be accompanied by disco, ballroom and ballet music. Sue Holmes is the instructor and the fee for the course is $18. Class is limited to 60 students.

Jennifer Cochran will teach Microwave Cooking I on Thursday evenings from 7 to 10. The course will offer current information on microwave ovens and various features on the many different models. Sample foods will be prepared during the evening. The class is limited to 35 students and the fee is $8.

Britons learning to cope with rail strike

LONDON (AP) — British commuters shared cars, jammed buses and sloshed through rain puddles on bicycles today, their third morning without trains. But many said they are adapting well to the national rail strike.

Resistance to the latest strike among the nation's train engineers appeared to be growing but there was no immediate end to the walkout in view.

"What is becoming clear...is that as strikes and interrupted services become more frequent the public are increasingly managing to cope," the London Times said. It characterized Britons as surviving with "triumphant ease."

London, Britain's largest city with a population of 6.6 million, has been hardest hit by the strike that began Sunday. But many firms reported 100 percent attendance, with only a few workers arriving up to 30 minutes late.

Many workplaces were operating staggered hours for staff, releasing people who could be spared from the office to work at home and hiring cars and buses to transport others.

Commuters flocked to the London subway, crowded onto buses, shared cars with neighbors and hopped on bicycles or motorbikes. A heavy morning rain soaked them.

As on Monday, automobile clubs reported a sharp decline in the number of cars on highways. Despite traffic tie-ups and filled parking lots, congestion was less severe than last week when a two-day walkout shut down the rails and a separate dispute idled the subways.

Latest figures from government-run British Rail said the 11,500-mile network ran 1,250 passenger trains Monday out of a national weekday total of 15,100, plus at least 50 freight trains.

British Rail said despite the walkout, 550 engineers worked Monday out of the estimated 16,000 scheduled. It said about half the 550 were members of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, the 27,000-member union that called the strike to protest the introduction of new flexible work schedules. The union is composed exclusively of train engineers.

British Rail said the other engineers who defied the strike belonged to the rival National Union of Railwaymen, which has 177,000 members including some locomotive engineers but mostly other rail workers. It has not joined the larger union's strike but has pledged members will not cross picket lines.

Clifford Rose, British Rail board member responsible for personnel, said Monday's train services were "modestly encouraging." Another board member, James Urquhart, said: "We hope that more and more drivers will respond as some of their colleagues are doing in many areas."

Union leaders denied the board's figures, saying only a few members worked.

The strike is over a change of work schedules from eight-hour shifts to seven-hour and nine-hour turns of duty that British Rail claims are more efficient. Workers have worked eight-hour shifts since 1919.

British Rail linked its offer of a 5 percent pay increase to the work schedule and other plans to boost productivity, prompting a walkout that closed the national network last Monday and Tuesday.

The National Union of Railwaymen ended its strike when it agreed to arbitration, but the larger union called its members out indefinitely.

British Rail, which is losing $240 million a year, claims the productivity plans are essential to make the railroad solvent. It has threatened to dismiss the drivers unless their walkout ends.

Strikers are backed by Britain's 257,000 coal miners, who have been refusing to allow coal normally carried by rail to be transported by truck.

All sides cheer Mexican election outcome

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government says its triumphant presidential candidate, Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, won by three-fourths of the vote, calling the results a show of confidence in a political system dominated by one party.

The 47-year-old Harvard-trained economist's victory over six rivals was the least lopsided in 30 years for the Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has won every national election since its creation in 1929 after the Mexican Revolution.

Both the government and opposition on Monday hailed the result as a welcome outcome of a 1978 political reform law designed to reduce disenchantment with electoral politics. President Jose Lopez Portillo, elected unopposed in 1976, enacted the law to give voters a wide choice of candidates.

The latest official returns of the election, announced Monday night, gave de la Madrid 14.25 million votes, 74.4 percent of the 19.931 million counted.

After delaying first official returns of Sunday's vote for 24 hours, Interior Minister Enrique Olivares Santana announced that 73 percent of the precincts had reported and 77 percent of voters registered in them cast ballots. The turnout was 51 percent in 1979 congressional elections and as low as 10 percent in some governor's races since then.

"This is a clear and indisputable triumph by the Mexican people over abstentionism," the minister said.

De la Madrid, whose aides had said they were hoping for a 75 percent turnout, told thousands of cheering supporters earlier: "The overwhelming majority of voters demonstrated their decision to fortify democracy. Mexico won; the Mexican Revolution has won; the PRI has won."

The conservative National Action Party made the strongest showing of its 42-year history to continue as the biggest opposition group. Its candidate, Pablo Emilio Madero, polled 2.7 million votes to 1.1 million cast for Arnoldo Martinez Verdugo of the new communist-led Socialist Party coalition.

Rosario Ibarra de Piedra of the Revolutionary Workers Party, the first woman to run for president in Mexico, got 388,000 votes. She was followed by the Mexican Democratic Party's Ignacio Gonzalez Gollaz with 321,000 votes, the Socialist Workers' Candido Diaz Cerecedo with 304,000 and the Social Democrats' Manuel Moreno Sanchez with 59,000.

There were no returns available late Monday on parliamentary races for 400 seats in the Chamber of Deputies and 64 in the Senate.

Opposition leaders complained of isolated ballot-stuffing and scattered violence, including the alleged kidnapping of four poll watchers and the shooting of another.

Hondurans in dark after explosions

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Leftist guerrillas who posed as workmen and dynamited two power plants are forcing the capital's 500,000 residents to light candles, walk to work and buy bottled water for at least a week, officials say.

About 85 percent of Tegucigalpa's businesses were closed Monday and public transportation shut down at night. Drinking water was running out and gasoline being rationed because the city's water purification system and half its filling stations use electrically powered pumps.

The explosions Sunday night reportedly killed six workers at each power station. It also resulted in deaths of 10 hospital patients in surgery or under intensive treatment when the citywide blackout started.

A group using the name Froylan Turcios, a Honduran leftist writer of the early 1900s, claimed responsibility for the attacks and said they were to protest the Honduran army's involvement in El Salvador's civil war. Salvadoran officials said last week that Honduran troops had crossed the border to help the Salvadoran army fight leftist guerrillas.

The blackout heightened concern that poor but relatively peaceful Honduras was being dragged into the guerrilla conflicts affecting its Central American neighbors.

"Honduras is not to blame for what is happening in El Salvador," said Emilio Larach, who was working by candlelight in his hardware store and selling thousands of candles and flashlights.

Shoppers worrying more about rising unemployment than rising grocery prices

AP Laserphoto

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Supermarket shoppers are more worried about rising unemployment than they are about rising prices, but they still say it is harder than ever to make ends meet and many are gloomy about the future, according to a recent industry survey.

The survey was conducted by Louis Harris and Associates Inc., for the Food Marketing Institute, a trade association whose members account for about half of all grocery store sales. It was one of a series of annual studies commissioned by the institute beginning in 1974 to measure public attitudes about the economy and the grocery business.

Almost two-thirds of those questioned in the latest survey — 63 percent — said that if they had to choose between higher unemployment and rising prices, they would select joblessness as the more serious problem; 24 percent said inflation was more serious. In a similar survey last year, 50 percent said unemployment was more serious and 37 percent said rising prices were a more severe threat. (The remainder of the survey participants in both cases said they were not sure whether unemployment or inflation was worse.)

Sixty percent of the shoppers surveyed said they were finding it harder to make ends meet and 34 percent said there was no change in their personal financial situation. Only 6 percent said it was easier to make ends meet today.

The number of people who believe that prices are rising faster than they were a year ago declined from 1981 to 1982, but a substantial segment of the public still worries about the increases.

Forty-five percent of those questioned in the latest survey said prices were rising more rapidly today, compared to 72 percent of those polled a year ago.

Twenty-nine percent said, however, that prices were rising as rapidly as they had been, indicating that three-fourths of those questioned — 75 percent — do not think that inflation has eased.

Asked about their personal economic futures, 28 percent said they expected their financial situation to improve in the coming year. Almost as many — 25 percent — said they expected a worsening of personal finances; 43 percent predicted no change and 4 percent said they were not sure what would happen.

The latest survey was based on telephone interviews during January 1982 with a representative nationwide sample of 1,003 men and women shoppers. Among other findings:

—Utility costs and supermarket prices are the areas of greatest concern for shoppers. Fifty-seven percent of those questioned said they expect sharp increases in utility bills and 30 percent said they anticipated big boosts at the supermarket.

—When asked "Whom do you blame most for high food prices today — or don't you blame anyone," the biggest chunk of respondents — 44 percent — replied, "No one." Fourteen percent blamed the government, 10 percent singled out middlemen, 5 percent cited the economy in general and 4 percent said unions were responsible. The remaining survey participants were split among supermarkets, the public itself, farmers, the weather, oil companies, wholesalers, manufacturers and others.

—Consumers are worried about food safety. Eighty percent said they were concerned that some ingredients added to processed foods may be harmful or unsafe to eat; 94 percent said products should carry warning labels about allegedly unsafe ingredients; and 84 percent said supermarkets should refuse to carry allegedly unsafe products. At the same time, however, 89 percent said they agreed with the statement that "The food in supermarkets in safe to eat."

—At least seven people in 10 said they were trying to economize by buying more store or lower-price brands, using more coupons, stocking up when they spotted a bargain and doing more with leftovers. Half of those questioned said they look in the newspaper for specials almost every time they shop, 15 percent check the paper fairly often and 21 percent scan it occasionally.

Chrysler Corp. to open new zone sales offices

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. will seek to capitalize on sales opportunities in the "high potential" cities of New Orleans and Houston by opening new zone sales offices in those cities by the fall, the automaker said.

The new offices will stem from a restructuring of current offices in the area that "are a little farther away (from the dealerships) than we desire," Tom Pappert, vice president-sales, said in a recent statement.

The new Houston zone office will represent 78 dealerships in southern Texas, the No. 3 U.S. carmaker said.

The New Orleans office will represent 99 dealerships in Louisiana, southern Mississippi and Alabama, and the western half of the Florida panhandle, the company said.

Cuba opening up to foreign investors

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — Cuba is opening its doors to foreign investors, offering a wide range of business deals that some officials say could lead to the first foreign-owned companies here since Fidel Castro took power in 1959.

With a minimum of publicity, Cuba recently adopted a joint ventures law aimed at attracting capital and technology needed to inject new blood into the country's troubled economy.

Jorge E. Garcia, director of international relations for the Cuban Chamber of Commerce, claims communist Cuba can offer private foreign investors much more than any capitalist country in the region.

"There is no country in the region as politically stable as Cuba," he said in a recent interview.

"We have no strikes, social unrest or threat of revolution, because we've already had our own revolution here. The workers own everything. There's no reason for them to strike."

Other incentives, Garcia maintained, would be the high educational level of the workforce and the relatively low wages paid to Cuban workers.

Cuba is credited with having one of the highest literacy rates in Latin America.

"Wages here play a less important role than in capitalist countries because the state takes care of many needs," Garcia added.

"Since health care, education and many other services are free, and workers don't pay more than 10 percent of their income in housing, the actual wages are comparatively lower than in capitalist countries."

Most Cuban workers make the equivalent of $150 to $250 a month.

Garcia said his office gets about 150 letters a month from Americans interested in doing business with Cuba, despite the U.S. trade embargo imposed shortly after Castro's 1959 revolution.

"We would like to meet with them and discuss joint ventures, but the Reagan administration is enforcing the embargo and making any U.S.-Cuban business deals impossible," Garcia added.

"Under these circumstances, it would be a waste of time to invite U.S. businessmen to come here for talks."

However, Garcia said unofficial contacts with American businessmen are kept through the World Trade Center Association, a New York-based international trade organization which Cuba joined last year as part of its effort to lure foreign investments.

Cuba has been hit by a sharp decline in world prices for sugar, which accounts for more than 70 percent of its exports. Prices have fallen from 65 cents a pound in 1977 to about 7 cents a pound now.

"We need hard currencies to make up for the decline in sugar prices," said Garcia. "We are also trying to use foreign capital and expertise to revitalize some 60 companies that are working beneath full capacity."

Cuba is most interested in getting foreign investment in the tourism and citrus industries, and in production of candy and some finished goods, such as car batteries.

Garcia said Cuba needs Western technology in some areas in which it can't get help from Soviet-bloc countries, such as the citrus industry.

"We want to become the top world exporters of citrus," he said. "The socialist countries don't have any expertise in tropical agriculture."

Under the plan, foreigners could lease Cuban companies for a period of up to 10 years, buy parts of existing enterprises or build new ones in association with the state.

"We are very flexible," Garcia added. "We are ready to consider many options."

The joint ventures law, which was made public in February and is known here as Decree 50, allows foreign investors to send home profits in full and to avoid paying taxes on gross income.

It also allows foreign investors to bring in their own executives and technicians.

"The average deal will allow foreigners to buy up to 49 percent of a company," Garcia said. "But the law would permit them in some cases, especially in the tourism industry, to buy 50 percent or 51 percent of a company."

Garcia said the new law was not announced with great fanfare because "although we want foreign investment, we are not desperate to get it."

Trade delegations of Britain, Spain, France, Canada and Mexico, among others, have visited Cuba recently to find out about the new investment conditions, officials said. They said 17 foreign trade delegations visited here between the beginning of the year and May 7, up from 9 during the same period last year.

Garcia rejected speculation that Cuba may be seeking to diversify its trade relations in order to reduce its dependence on the Soviet Union.

About 70 percent of Cuba's trade is with Soviet bloc countries, and the other 30 percent with Canada, Spain, Japan and other Western nations.

Some Western economists say the Soviet Union may have to reduce its estimated $3 billion a year in subsidies to Cuba because of its own economic problems.

But Garcia said, "The Soviet Union is our most reliable trading partner, and we don't have any reason to doubt that it will continue being so.

"Besides, it would be very dangerous for us to start relying on Western countries for, say, our oil. They could cut off their supplies under American pressure at any moment..."

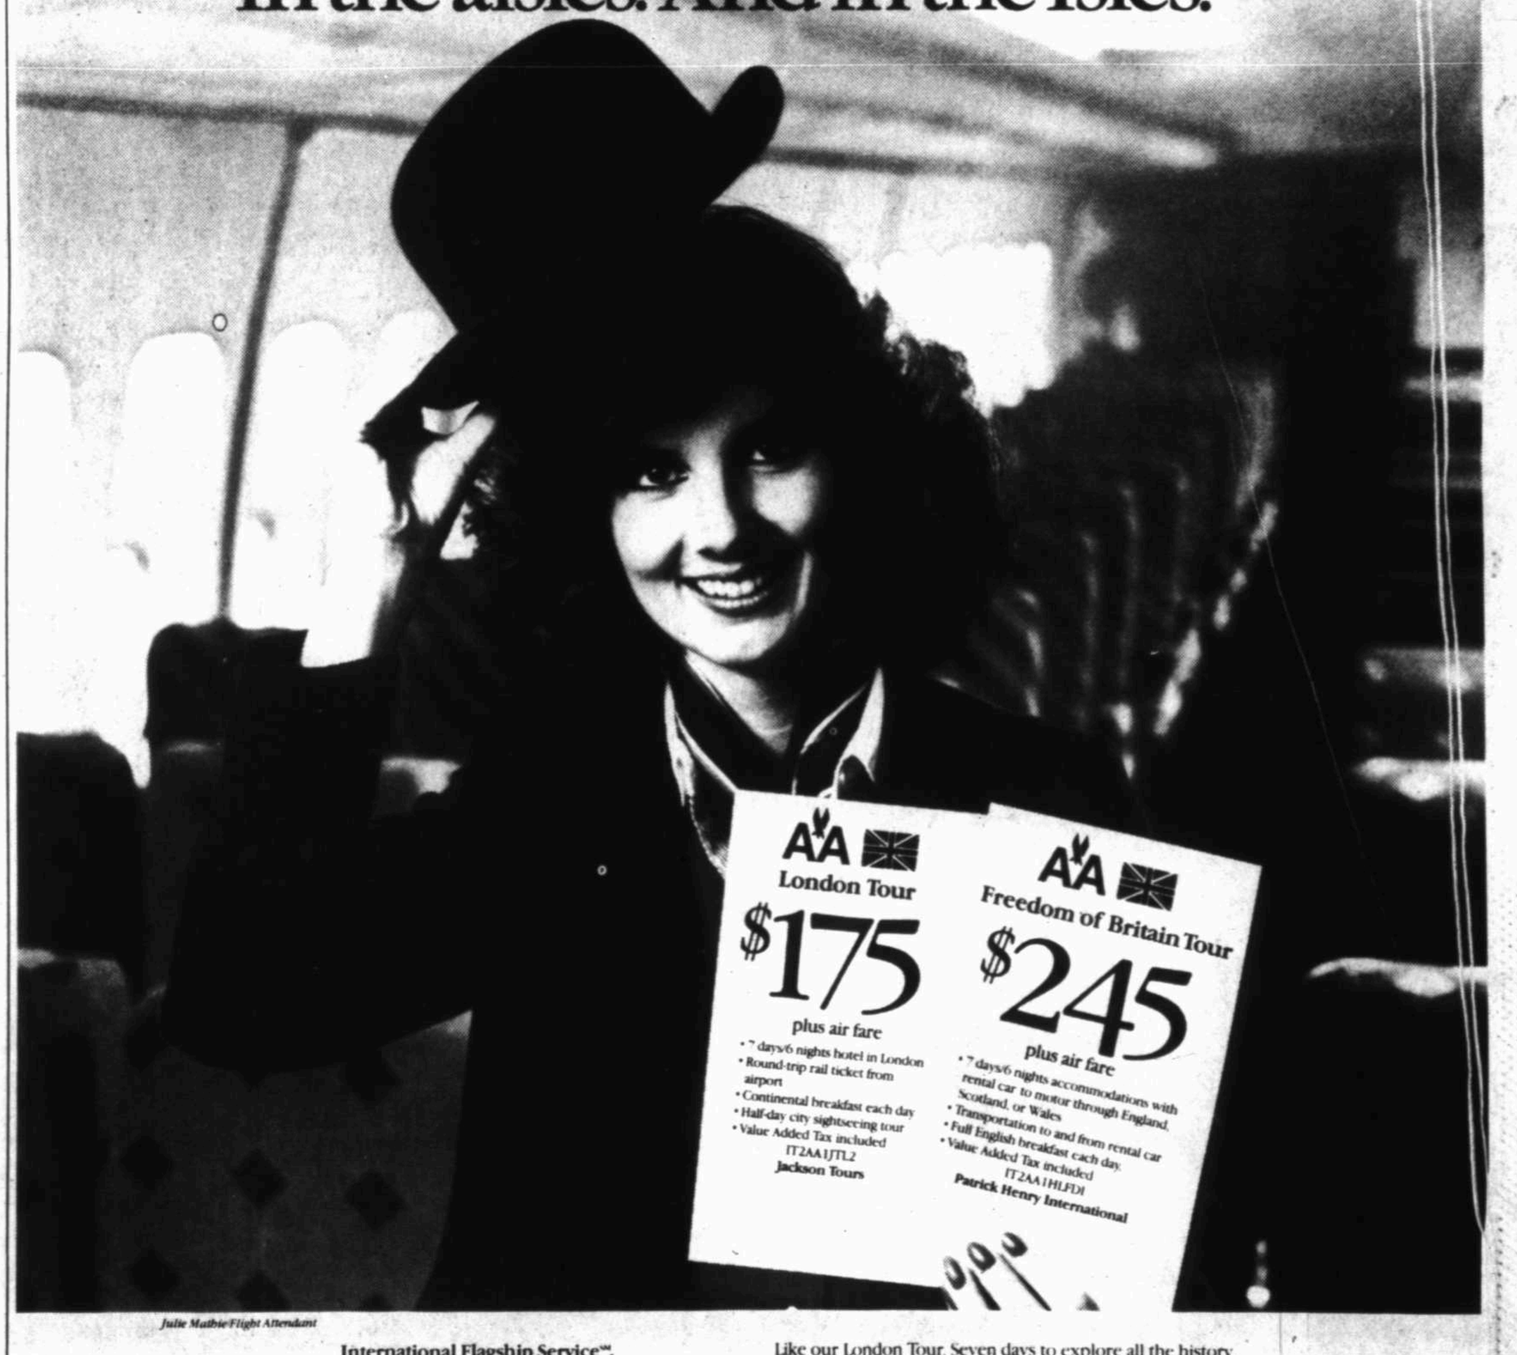

Sakowitz to open San Antonio store

SAN ANTONIO — Robert T. Sakowitz, chairman of the board and president of Sakowitz, Inc., formally announced plans for construction of a 68,000 square foot store to be located in Sakowitz Village at Exposition Plaza on Highway 110 and Huebner Road in San Antonio. It is scheduled to open in the fall of 1984.

"We think this an appropriate time to properly express our continuing confidence in the Texas economy in general and the San Antonio area in particular," Sakowitz stated.

The exterior structural design of the 68,000 square foot store will utilize three different textures of natural stone. The interior design will be patterned after a unique concept similar to the Louis Kahn Museum in Fort Worth. Natural woods, marbles, and textiles will be used in the store and all fixtures, wall coverings, and floor coverings will be custom made to Sakowitz specifications.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Limit orders' cancelled at end of trading day

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I placed an order with a broker to sell 100 shares of stock at $11.50. That was on a Monday and the stock was trading slightly below that price. The newspapers showed it reached $11.50 on the following Wednesday and Thursday. But my stock was not sold.

When I asked why, I was told that, because the stock had not reached my asking price, they destroyed my order Tuesday evening. I was also told my order could have been been kept open, if I had left the stock certificate with the brokerage firm. No such request was made when I placed the order.

I never heard of an order being good for only two days. Is this a common way to do business?

Bill Doyle

A. An order to buy or sell stock can be good for one day, two days, any other specified time or "good till canceled." But it's up to you to tell the broker how long you want the order to stay open.

Yours was a "limit order" meaning you would sell the stock only at $11.50 or higher. All limit orders are treated as "day orders" and are canceled if they are not executed by the end of the trading day, unless they are clearly marked for a longer period of time.

Your mistake was not telling the broker you wanted that order to stay open for longer than a day. You could have specified that your order was good till canceled — "GTC," as it's called.

But, as you tell the story and unless that brokerage house has some rules of its own, your limit order should have been canceled at the close of business that Monday — not Tuesday. And I never heard of any requirement that a customer must leave the stock certificate with the broker, in order to have a GTC order. That could, however, be a "house" rule of that brokerage firm, if you're not a steady customer.

Q. I have been buying stocks though the local office of a discount brokerage firm. By and large, the service has been good. But there is one serious flaw.

It often happens that, two or three weeks after I pay for stock I bought, I get a Mailgram from the New York brokerage firm that executes the buy order for the local firm threatening to sell my stock unless I pay my bill by such and such a date. I take this up with the local brokerage office and they say they will call New York and correct the situation.

I've finally figured out what happens. I pay by two checks. One I write on my money market mutual fund made out to the New York firm. The other I draw from my account at a savings and loan association. That second check is drawn to my name. I endorse it and give both checks to the discount broker.

It is evident the discount broker is using the money from my S&L check for its own purposes, letting my bill to the New York broker go unpaid. I believe this is very unethical. What do you think?

A. It's possible that your suspicions are correct. Almost everyone likes to hang on to money as long as possible. It's evident you do, by paying for the stock with a money market mutual fund check. That way the amount of the check earns dividends until the check clears. You're getting the use of the "float."

More likely, however, the local broker can't settle up with the New York broker, until it gets the money from the S&L check. The local broker has to deposit that check and wait till it clears.

Here's a suggestion. Next time you buy stock pay with just one check from your money fund account, payable to the local broker. Then if you get a Mailgram from the New York broker you'll know the local brokerage is doing what you suspect.

Yankees find Louisiana not paved with gold

HOUMA, La. (AP) — The jobless still flock to south Louisiana with visions of ready jobs for high pay, apparently unaware of the tarnish a shrinking job market has put on the oil-rich "Gold Coast."

Many have wound up in welfare lines and charity centers like the ones they vowed to leave behind when they fled the hard-hit factory towns of the North, officials say.

"It's been unreal — the number of people from Michigan alone," said Celeste Gaudet, manager of the state welfare office here, about 60 miles southwest of New Orleans.

One out of every 10 people who enter her office seeking food stamps or shelter has recently arrived from out of state — lured by the hope of work in the lucrative drilling industry, she said.

"They think this will be their dream, that they'll walk the streets of gold," she said. "When they get here, they're flabbergasted."

The recession has made a rude sweep along Louisiana's Gulf coast, producing cutbacks and layoffs in a region that had reveled in an oil and gas boom for many years.

But word of the slump hasn't reached the migrants — whose notions of south Louisiana wages and living costs often weren't realistic to begin with.

"Many of them are coming from factories where they made $10 or $12 an hour," said Linda Carroll, a placement official for the state Department of Labor in Lafayette.

"They're expecting more than a company here will offer them — $4 or $5 an hour for unskilled labor."

The only available figures on the state's jobless migrants come from the Louisiana Department of Labor. In the past two years, there's been a doubling of the number of people who at any given time are collecting unemployment benefits transferred from other states — from about 3,350 to 6,700.

Ten years ago, the figure was 1,200.

That does not include the many more whose unemployment benefits have run out, or who weren't collecting any to begin with.

The number of Louisiana residents collecting unemployment has risen to 68,000, an increase of 25,000 over two years. During that time, state unemployment has risen from about 6 percent to nearly 10 percent.

Victor Bussié, president of the state AFL-CIO, predicted the figure would reach 12 percent by the end of the year.

A spokesman for the labor department said the state has no program to discourage migrants from coming to Louisiana — despite the tightening situation.

Meanwhile, housing and other living costs continue to reflect the steep increases that occurred when oilfield workers flooded this bayou region, transforming sleepy fishing villages into boom towns.

Ms. Gaudet said the average monthly rent for a two-bedroom apartment is about $350. With a security deposit, it means an initial investment of at least $700.

Most of the migrants don't have that kind of stake, she said.

"Sometimes they will have four of five little ones packed in the car with everything they own," Ms. Gaudet said. "They've used all their money to get here, and they have nothing to feed their families with.

"A lot of them just live in their cars."

Many eventually pack up their frustrations and move on, disappearing as quietly and as quickly as they arrived, on foot or crammed in battered automobiles.

Some are resolved to put down roots here anyway, saying the situation in south Louisiana is still better than their former homes in the industrial North.

"You can't believe the lines up there — for welfare, for jobs. It's just crazy," said Earl Waggoner of Blissville, Mich.

U.S. dollar stronger against all major foreign currencies

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar strengthened against major foreign currencies in lackluster trading early today. Gold and silver bullion prices declined.

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar gained on the Japanese yen for the second consecutive day to close at 257 yen, up 0.70 yen.

The British pound slipped to $1.7270 from Monday's $1.7293.

Other dollar rates compared with Monday's late rate included:

2.4825 West German marks, up from 2.4740

2.1165 Swiss francs, up from 2.1050

6.8890 French francs, up from 6.8585

2.7465 Dutch guilders, up from 2.7355

1,394.50 Italian lire, up from 1,388.40

1.2925 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2855

London's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended morning gold price of $313.10 a Troy ounce, down $2.15. In Zurich, the metal traded in a median range of $313.75, a loss of $2.35.

Earlier in Hong Kong gold lost $1.80 to close at $317.39.

Silver was quoted in London at $5.90 a Troy ounce, down 7 cents.
