Bill Finklea To Range Camp

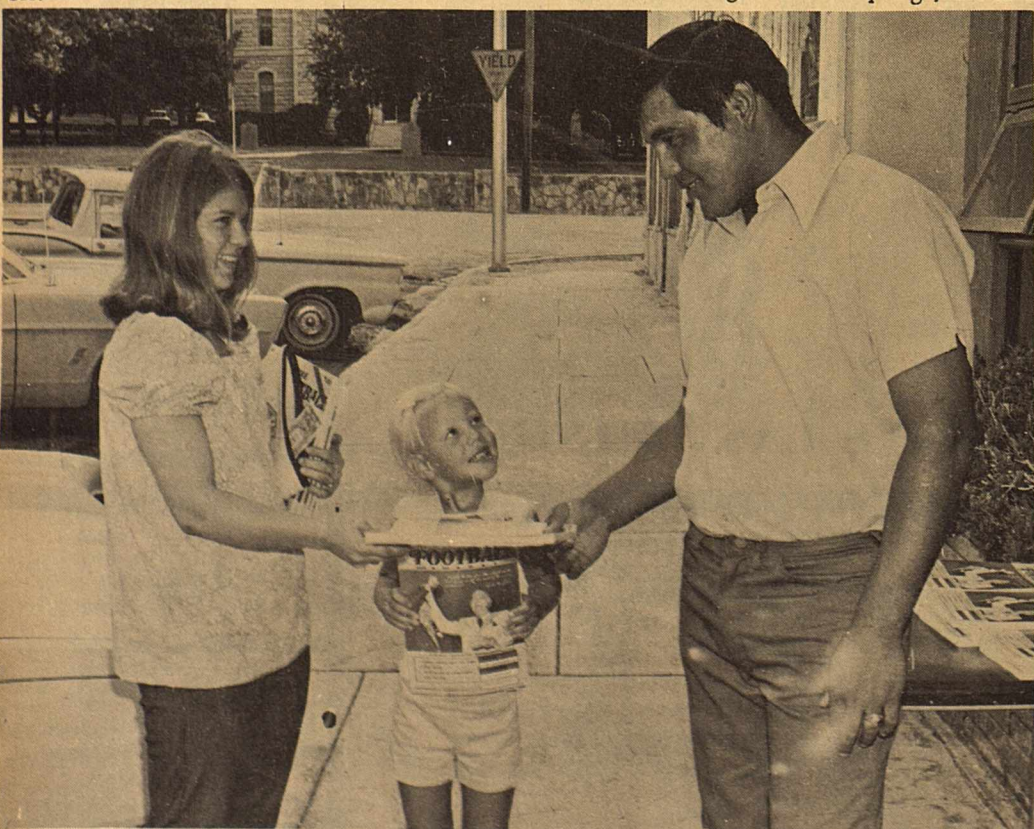

The seventeenth annual Youth Range Camp for outstanding 4-H and FFA boys of Texas opened this week with registration at the Texas A&M Adjunct near Junction.

The camp is sponsored by the Texas Section, Society for Range Management. Bill Finklea is attending the camp from here and is sponsored by Sutton County 4-H. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Finklea was selected on the basis of outstanding 4-H work and interest in range management. Expenses for each of the forty young men attending the camp were granted by local conservation districts, service clubs, banks, farm bureaus, livestock associations, interested individuals and parents.

The weeklong Range Camp is arranged to honor outstanding range and ranch boys and provide them an opportunity for complementary training in range management and leadership skills. The program will include study, judging range conditions, wildlife management, ranch planning and field trips to a Kimble County ranch and the Texas A&M University Research Station here. Recreation and entertainment are planned for the group between instruction sessions.

Range Camp Directors are Dan Rodgers and Gary Donart of College Station, Clifford Carter of Victoria, Russ Pettit of Lubbock, Bill Jacoby of Fort Stockton, Roy Miller of Vernon, Buford Dobie from Falfurrias, Don Barnett from Iraan, Rev. Joe Fasel of Clovis, New Mexico and Sam Coleman of Junction. Others will join the group for individual presentations.

The Range Camp concludes Saturday when Joe Norris, Abilene, president of the Texas Section, Society for Range Management, will present awards to distinguished campers.

FOOTBALL FEVER IN SONORA got off to an early start last week as Sonora High School cheerleaders sold football magazines containing interesting information about the game and some of the people here where state championships have been won three times. Cheerleader June Alexander, assisted by Lora Lea Kordzik, sells a magazine to Erasmo Lumberas, former SHS gridiron great. Lora Lea, whose mother, Gwen Kordzik sponsors the cheerleaders, has learned young to be a football fan and usually accompanies the cheerleaders and her mother to all the games.

Busy Signal Not Unusual At Local Veterinary Clinic

Horse owners in the Sutton County area should contact the Sonora Veterinary Clinic to schedule the vaccination of their horses against Venezuelan Equine Encephalomyelitis. The telephone rings constantly at the local clinic, and Monday morning even Mrs. Joe David Ross was pressed into service to run errands while Mrs. Coleen Robbins kept close to the telephone. Pressure mounted as area ranchmen anxiously sought to have horses vaccinated after the wide publicity given to the importance of vaccination in an effort to stop the dread disease. The vaccine must be administered by a veterinarian.

Local veterinarians, Drs. Joe David Ross and Wayne Herrmann, have made plans to vaccinate all horses that need to be moved and horses that are required for operating ranches first. Both veterinarians have been working long hours in order to get the vaccine out as quickly as possible. They are not only serving this county, but in many instances, Schleicher, Edwards, Crockett and Reagan Counties also. Monday morning the two veterinarians had vaccinated over 700 horses. Eventually thousands of horses will receive the vaccine in this area, but the veterinarians emphasized that they are trying to take care of the ones essential to the working ranches first, and also those closest to the outbreak.

There are no known cases in the immediate area, but due to the rapid spread of the disease and the seriousness of an epidemic particularly in the ranching area where horses are vital in the working of stock, ranchmen are concerned with getting horses vaccinated as quickly as the two can work up the vaccine.

Transmission of the disease occurs primarily through the bite of mosquitoes. A 50 percent liquid malathion spray, mixed at the rate of 12 table-spoons of malathion in 5 gallons of water is a recommended spray for horses, stalls, etc., said County Agent D.C. Langford. If a larger amount is needed one gallon of 50 percent malathion may be used in 100 gallons of water, he added. Langford said there are a number of sprays available for control of mosquitoes, but this one mixture is particularly recommended as being safe to horses.

City manager, Jimmy H. Harris, said no spraying within the city limits has been planned at this time since the prevailing dry weather has contributed to fewer mosquitoes than might normally be found. Harris said it has been determined that most home owners can do a better job of ridding the premises of mosquitoes than city-wide spraying, by checking to see that all containers, such as, cans, old tires, or other rubbish is cleared from the area in order to eliminate areas that might provide breeding grounds for mosquitoes.

All home owners as well as horse owners in the area, are urged to help control mosquitoes and other biting insects on their premises. Langford cautions that each person should be sure to apply insecticides used in the control of the insects as the recommended rate on the container. He also added that insecticides used on horses should be cleared for use on horses.

Federal interstate regulations require that all equine originating in Texas must be accompanied by a certificate showing vaccination for VEE with TC-83 vaccine. The certificate must show the vaccine has been administered at least 14 days prior to movement. Several bordering states have notified the Texas Animal Health Commission that their borders are closed to equine animals from Texas.

The virus has progressed northward from South America within the past three years. Although approximately two million doses of VEE vaccine were used in Mexico, statistical data has not been available to provide a clear cut basis for authorities in the United States to license this vaccine for commercial production.

Vaccine is supplied to veterinarians for use on owner's premises. The vaccine here is transmitted from San Angelo direct to the local clinic. There will be no charge to horse owners for the vaccine. A service call by the veterinarian will be the only expense to persons having animals vaccinated.

The Quarantine Order issued by Joe B. Finley, Jr., chairman of Texas Animal Health Commission is as follows: WHEREAS, extensive investigations confirm that Venezuelan Equine Encephalomyelitis (VEE) constitutes a serious threat to both horses and humans throughout the State of Texas, and

WHEREAS, movement of equines contributes to the rapid spread of this disease, and WHEREAS, it is vitally necessary that the Texas Animal Health Commission take emergency measures to stop the spread of this disease,

NOW THEREFORE, pursuant to the authority vested in me by law there is hereby imposed a quarantine on all movements or transportation of horses, mules, jacks, jennets and other equine animals within the State of Texas.

The only exception to this restriction will be individually identified horses, mules, jacks, jennets, or other equine animals accompanied by a certificate of vaccination showing that such animals have been vaccinated for VEE with "TC-83" Vaccine at least fourteen (14) days prior to movement.

This quarantine will remain in effect until further notice.

Notice is hereby given that under Texas law any person, firm, partnership, or corporation who shall violate any quarantine provisions established by the Chairman of the Commission shall be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable in accordance with Article 1525b, Vernon's Penal Code. (Signed) Joe B. Finley, Jr.

DR. WAYNE HERRMANN examines vaccine for use in the fight against VEE. The vaccine is being received here at the veterinary clinic and is being administered by Dr. Herrmann and Dr. Joe David Ross to horses in the area. The vaccine, a live virus, is effective for only 12 hours after mixing, consequently the veterinarians must work rapidly to avoid deterioration. The sleeping sickness disease which is carried by mosquitoes, has struck hundreds of horses in parts of Texas. The vaccine, TC83, is a preventive measure being administered by veterinarians throughout Texas in order to curb the spread of the disease. U.S. health officials say an infected horse has a 50 to 80 percent chance of dying. No outbreak has occurred in this area.

DR. JOE DAVID ROSS and DR. WAYNE HERRMANN, local veterinarians, mapped plans Monday morning and settled down for several days of hard work in administering VEE vaccine to horses in this county, as well as several of the surrounding counties. Rules and regulations concerning the movement of horses along with other pertinent information released by the Texas Animal Health Commission, has changed so rapidly ranchmen are advised it is best to contact the veterinary clinic to obtain latest notification of changes.

Presidential Proclamation - Farm Safety Week

Primitive man's first discoveries about cultivating the land came by chance, and for thousands of years thereafter agriculture progressed only slowly out of the realm of guesswork. Even in the early days of this Nation, when we were a people of farmers and planters, the process of coaxing life out of the earth remained far more an art than a science. But today American agriculture has become a fully realized technology largely subject to human planning and control—a bountiful producer of food, clothing, and the makings of the good life for America and the world.

Thus there is sharp irony in the fact that this great industry, so accomplished in the scientific nature of plant and animal life, remains among the industries in which human life is most precarious and accident rates are highest.

The farm and ranch environment abounds in potential hazards—powerful machinery, exposed working conditions, physically demanding jobs—but experience has shown that caution, common sense, and protective equipment can do much to counter them and keep accidents and injuries to a minimum.

All who live and work on America's farms and ranches owe it to themselves, their families, and the nation that depends on them, to put safety first. Let us set the goal of eliminating chance from rural life just as we have learned to exclude it from agricultural production.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, RICHARD NIXON, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate the week of July 25, 1971, as National Farm Safety Week. I urge farm families and all in the rural community to make every effort to reduce accidents occurring at work, home, in recreation and on the highway.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this 7th day of April in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred seventy-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred ninety-fifth.

—RICHARD NIXON

VEE Questions And Answers Given

Dr. James Armstrong, Extension veterinarian, and Dr. F. D. Maurer, associate dean of Texas A&M Veterinary College, have prepared a series of questions and answers concerning VEE. Questions submitted to them and the replies are as follows:

Will the vaccine currently used in the U.S. to protect against VEE and EEE protect against VEE?

No, these three diseases are caused by immunologically different viruses so that a separate vaccine must be used for each disease.

Is there a safe and effective vaccine available against VEE?

Yes, there is a safe and effective vaccine available in Texas which will protect against this disease providing horses are vaccinated at least 10 days before exposure to the virus. This is an experimental attenuated virus vaccine developed by the U.S. Army for human use, but it has been used with excellent success in some 2 million horses of South and Central America. As soon as current tests are completed, it is expected that it will no longer need to be classified as experimental.

Since this is a live virus vaccine, do horses show any adverse reactions from it?

Reports on the reactions following the vaccination of some 14,000 horses in southern Texas have shown less than 2% to have mild reactions.

How soon will horses be protected after vaccination?

Significant protection will have developed after 7 to 10 days. Horses are known to be fully protected after 14 days.

Is it safe to vaccinate pregnant mares?

The vaccination of pregnant mares is not without some risk to the foal; but we know that if the mare becomes infected with the natural disease, there is a 30 to 50% chance that both she and her foal will be lost. So that both the mare and the foal in an infected area are relatively safer with the vaccine than without it. Many pregnant mares have been vaccinated with no ill effects to the mare or foal.

Is it safe to vaccinate foals? Foals as young as 3 weeks of age have been vaccinated with no ill effects.

What can the horse owner do to protect his horses until the vaccine becomes available in his area?

1) Each horse owner should keep his horses at home to avoid contact with other horses and stop horse movement.

2) He should spray his horses and premises with a mosquito repellent to protect his horses from being bitten.

3) He should notify his local veterinarian of the need to have his horses vaccinated as soon as the vaccine becomes available to his veterinarian.

When will the vaccine become available?

Vaccine was provided for statewide use in Texas July 14.

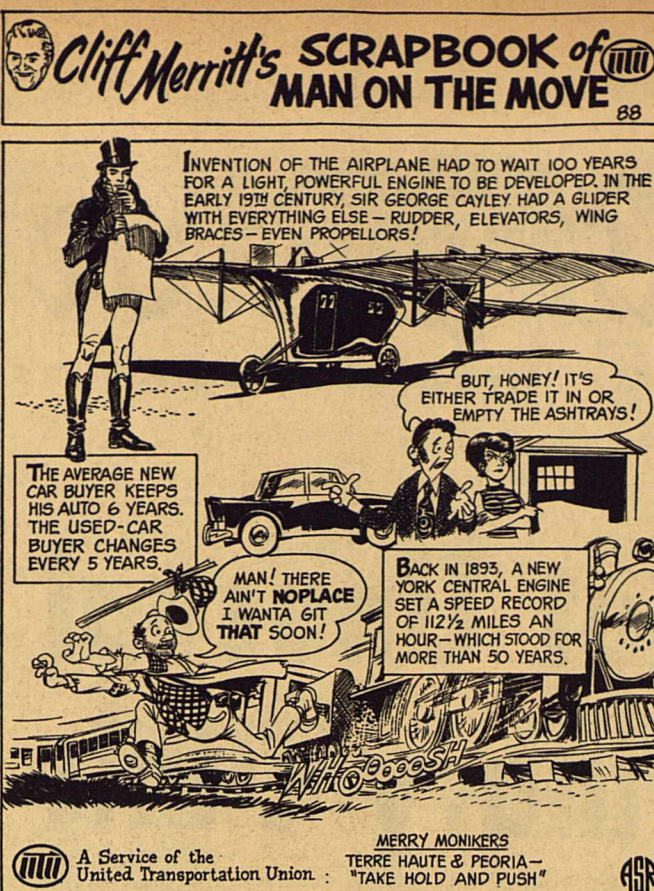

Is the vaccine available to horse owners or only to veterinarians?

The vaccine will only be available to accredited veterinarians for several reasons.

It is still an experimental vaccine which requires that it be administered by a veterinarian who can determine the condition of the horse before and after use. The vaccine must be used promptly after reconstitution and kept cold as well as administered in an aseptic manner with fresh sterile equipment for every horse. Official records must be maintained by the veterinarian who also must get a release signed by the owner.

How is VEE transmitted?

Transmission occurs primarily through the bite of infected mosquitoes. Essentially all types of mosquitoes and some biting flies are capable of transmitting the disease. Although infrequent, transmission can also occur from contact with fluids from infected horses at the height of temperature when the concentration of virus is usually highest.

He Has Some Sage Advice For The New Crop of 18-Year-Old Voters

Editor's note: The Dry Devil's Philosopher on his bitterweed ranch on Dry Devil's River seems unaltered over the new Amendment to the Constitution. Dear editor:

As everybody knows, the U. S. Constitution now says 18-year-olds can vote in any election in the country and newspaper columnists have been working hard predicting what the results will be.

One columnist, pointing out that most Presidential elections for example are won by very small majorities, sometimes by less than a million votes, says the 11 million new young voters could swing the balance anyway they choose.

Another said the youngsters who, he claimed, aren't very interested in material things, will have a widespread effect in sweeping out the old-line politicians and established institutions and heading this country in a new direction.

"They have the balance of power and can turn this country around," he said.

I don't know about such things—18-year-olds may not be any more effective in changing things than women did when they got the vote, but if they all do unite and come out swinging and vote as a bloc and turn this country around, my advice to them is to keep quiet about it. Don't take too much credit for it out loud. I mean, ten or fifteen years after they reorganize the country and look up from their job of trying to raise a family and pay their taxes and discover there's a new crop of 18-year-olds telling them they've made a batch of things and it's time to turn the country around again, it's going to be embarrassing if they can't put the blame on the generation ahead of them, which means you and me.

If they're smart, they'll just turn the country around and not say anything about it. If they let it get in the newspapers, and 15 years from now the new crop digs through the back issues and puts the responsibility on them for the mess the country may be in, they'll wish they'd thought up some way to classify the papers as Top Secret. They need to be in a position to say "We didn't make this mess, we inherited it." Most of the time, when a country is turned around, most people wind up with the same problems they had before, but nobody expects 18-year-olds to know that.

By the way, speaking of Classified Top Secrets, how did Attorney General Mitchell think he could suppress a whole string of newspapers when he's got his hands full trying to suppress Martha?

Yours faithfully,
I. A.

Taking a chance

That's a high fence for a young man to walk, but take a good look at his face, and you'll see that he's not only determined to do it, but confident that he can.

Chances are, with this attitude, he won't slip. At least, he'll have far less chance of slipping than if he approached "fence-walking" plagued by self-doubt.

So many of us approach tasks, challenges, opportunities, with a nagging conviction of our own failure, even before we begin. We need more faith in ourselves. Self-faith comes only from a far greater faith! Faith in God.

Face up to your own "fence-walking." In the course of life, we all have to do quite a bit of it. Find the courage to start by listening to what your church has to say to you.

AN OLD PORTRAIT BY JOHN AUDUBON in the music room at Rosedown Plantation and gardens in St. Francisville, La., is one of Eliza Pirrie, the little girl at Oakley Plantation who was tutored by the famous artist-naturalist when he first came to Louisiana's Feliciana in 1827. For many years an elephant edition of Audubon's "Birds of America" was part of the Rosedown library as the Turnbulls, original builders of Rosedown, were among the planters who subscribed to Audubon's great works long before it was published by Havell in England. Nature lovers still trek to the Felicianas every year to follow woodland trails which Audubon enjoyed in the "supernaturally beautiful land".

The Name Of John Audubon Is Forever Linked With Louisiana

In Louisiana are two historic areas which will be forever associated with the names of John James Audubon, the great naturalist-artist—New Orleans, where he starved, and West Feliciana parish, where he feasted on the beauty of mystical woodlands and songbirds. His years in Feliciana were the most significant in the life of Audubon, for here he roamed the woods, studied the birds which thronged them, sketched their portraits and recorded in his diary many secrets he learned from nature. His painting thereafter reflected a maturity which eventually led to his world-wide renown. In Feliciana several women shaped his destiny. It was here that his wife, Lucy Bakewell, was able to establish a school for children of the planters and thereby earn sufficient income to send her talented husband to Europe and fame through the publication of his "Birds of America."

Several other ladies of Feliciana were instrumental in catapulting Audubon to greatness also. Lucy Alston Pirrie, who in 1827 sought a tutor for her fifteen year-old daughter, Eliza, discovered Audubon in New Orleans when he was despondent and about to give up his great dream to publish "Birds of Louisiana." Although he had wanted to move on to Florida, he accepted the responsibility of providing culture and art instruction for young Eliza Pirrie, because it would give him time for his work.

Audubon was unprepared for the beauty of the land in which he was to reside. When he and John Mason, his pupil assistant, bade adieu to their fellow-passengers at the landing at the mouth of Bayou Sara and climbed the hill to St. Francisville, Audubon was spellbound. Later, in his journal, he wrote:

"The aspect of the country was entirely new to me and distracted my mind from those objects which are the occupation of my life. The rich magnolias covered with fragrant blossoms, the holly, the beech, the tall yellow poplar, the hilly ground and even the red clay, all excited my admiration. Such an entire change in the face of nature in so short a time seems almost supernatural; and surrounded once more by numberless warblers and thrushes, I enjoyed the scene. The five miles we walked appeared short, and we arrived and met Mr. Pirrie at his house. . . we were received kindly."

Under his arrangement with Mrs. Pirrie, Audubon would devote half of his time to teaching art to Eliza, allowing him the balance of the day to roam the woods working on his paintings. His compensation was to be sixty dollars a month. Both board and lodging were provided for Audubon and Mason in Oakley House.

The countryside around Oakley became Audubon's ornithological mecca. The deep magnolia woods which sheltered birds by the thousands flooded the man with inspiration. He lost no time searching out the many species, all of which were busy with their nesting duties. Each day he penetrated the woods with gun, paper, pencil and colors. He worked with fanatical energy on the project which, earlier, he had given up as impossible. Although he and Mason remained at Oakley only four months, he completed here more than 32 of the paintings which comprise his "Birds of America."

The arrangement with the Pirries did not last long. Following a misunderstanding about compensation, Audubon set sail on the Rampano for New Orleans. After bitter experiences in New Orleans, Natchez and other regions of America as a perambulating portrait painter and a frustrated seeker of a publisher, Audubon later returned to Feliciana to join his wife who was there, and his son. In his journal he wrote, "Numerous pupils desired lessons in music, French and drawing. . . the dancing speculation fetched two thousand dollars, and with this capital and my wife's savings I was now able to foresee a successful issue to my great ornithological work."

While they could not understand a man who roamed the woods constantly and did not work, the planters of Feliciana were kind and understanding of the lanky, talented birdman. For a year and a half Audubon and his family lived at Beech Woods, the plantation home of the Percys. He taught art to some of the young ladies in his wife's classes, and he gave French and violin lessons to others. When the sons of Judge Peter Randolph—John Hamden Sidney and Peter—wanted to become adept in fencing, Audubon made weekly journeys to the Randolph plantation near Woodville, Mississippi to train the young men in the art of the "code Duello".

The planters' families enjoyed him most on Saturday night soirees, when the cotton gin-house was not in use at Beech Woods. After sweeping the floor, Audubon gave dancing lessons to the beaux and belles. The sight of a gin-house filled to capacity with a long-haired Frenchman prancing up and down the floor playing his violin as he danced the cotillon, became a familiar sight in the Felicianas. From it Audubon gained prestige and a flattering reputation. Later he established a dancing school in Woodville, Mississippi.

The turkey cock which Audubon painted at Beech Woods was his favorite painting. He displayed it on every possible occasion, and selected it for the first engraving in his book. It is possible that he painted it in the Sleepy Hollow Woods which are a few miles north of the Percy plantation, as this was a favorite turkey hunting country at the time.

Many of the Feliciana planters purchased subscriptions to the Havell edition of Audubon's "Birds of America." One of these elephant editions was displayed proudly in the library at Rosedown Plantation at St. Francisville until the 1950s.

The June introduction to the Feliciana woods prompted Audubon in later years, after he had achieved fame and recognition as the foremost bird naturalist of his time, to recall Louisiana as his favorite section of America. In these words he had found many birds which he had known before, others that he had heard or seen in Alexander Wilson's works, and still others which he called "nondescripts", species which had not yet been described in ornithological literature.

Among his best Feliciana drawings are the wild turkey cock, the yellow-throated vireo, the summer tanager, American redbird, the mourning doves, the assemblage of Louisiana paroquets, the ivory-billed woodpeckers, cerulean warbler, wood stork, roseate spoonbill, and the Baltimore orioles.

Visitors to Feliciana who trek the five miles from Bayou Sarah to Oakley along the same road traveled by the American Woods man in 1821 find that the region has remained as fresh and green as it was when Audubon first visited the parish. The magnolia trees still bloom prolifically, and the slim yellow poplars thrive in the red clay. On every side warblers and thrushes create a delightful chorus.

While Feliciana is still a warbler's paradise, many of the birds which Audubon studied and sketched have passed on, among them the flocks of paroquets, the ivory-billed woodpeckers and the swallow-tailed kites.

The yellow-billed cuckoo still calls from the pawpaws, the kingfisher rattles along water course, the pileated woodpecker probes for grubs along a dead tree, and the mourning dove voices its plaintive coo-o-o. The snowy heron thrives in the Feliciana swamps. Mockingbirds and cardinals still sing the sweetest songs in the gardens of neighboring plantations.

Oakley itself has changed little in the last century. Moss-hung oaks and blossoming magnolias, towering poplars, and giant wisteria still frame the charming two-story house which stands as solid as it did when Audubon arrived on June eighteenth, 1821. Today, travelers from over the nation visit the house and the Audubon State Park around it to enjoy the nostalgic beauty of the plantation land which inspired the Great American Woodsman.

Oakley, which is just five miles south of Rosedown Plantation and Gardens in St. Francisville, Louisiana is open daily. The plantation and Audubon Memorial State Park are located on State Highway 965. Highway markers lead traffic off of U.S. Highway 61 into the park by this road.

You are more than an electric consumer in this town... You are one of the people who own this consumer-owned electric utility.

Most of the people in the U.S. buy their electricity from private power companies owned by investors who usually live outside the community served.

Here, you and your neighbors own the local electric utility. You are the "stockholders", and you get the dividends.

Among those dividends from public ownership are: Local control, with people here making the decisions and operating the system... Low rates, with electricity sold to you without a profit to outside owners, and with all the benefits going to local consumers... Better service, with your interest and needs coming first... And responsiveness to local needs.
