President Bush

■ Civil rights leaders here and abroad protest that action is too hasty.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush, proclaiming that the "pillars of apartheid" have been destroyed, on Wednesday lifted economic sanctions against South Africa, opening the doors to increased U.S. trade and investments.

Brushing aside appeals from anti-apartheid activists, the administration also prepared a campaign to force states and local communities to follow the president's lead.

Assistant secretary of state for African affairs Herman Cohen said that the Justice Department was considering suing states and cities that continue to enforce some 140 local sanctions against South Africa. Cohen said the federal government would try to block these localities from "carrying out their own foreign policy."

Bush ended the five-year-old U.S. sanctions just before noon and immediately called a news conference in which he declared that South Africa had undergone "a profound transformation" in the past two years. He called for boosting South Africa's troubled economy, that has shrunk by 25 percent in the last five years.

A longtime foe of the sanctions enacted by Congress in 1986, Bush said the legislation had little to do with forcing the repeal of apartheid legislation. He credited South African President F.W. de Klerk for making the reforms.

Bush said that the government had fulfilled all of the requirements set by the 1986 legislation for removal of the sanctions.

Bradley tries to oust LAPD Chief Gates

■ Mayor appeals to Los Angeles business community.

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Mayor Tom Bradley is waging a behind-the-scenes campaign to oust Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl F. Gates, urging downtown business leaders to join him in calling for Gates to step aside in the best interests of the city, officials said.

Publicly, the mayor renewed his call for Gates to leave in response to the Christopher Commission's harsh indictment of racism, bias and brutality in the Los Angeles Police Department and its call for Gates to step down.

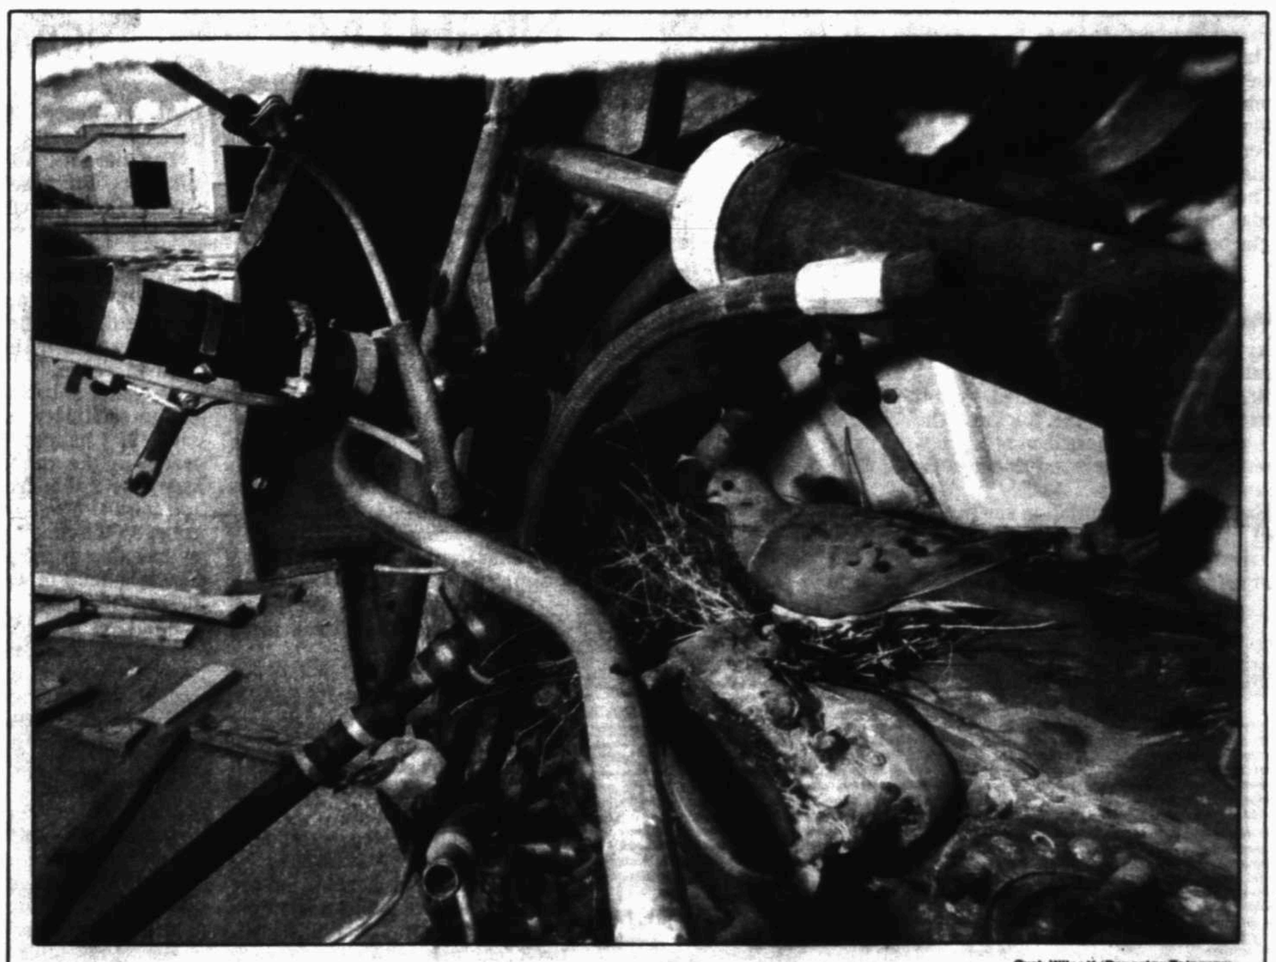

Privately, officials said Wednesday that the mayor was not counting on Gates to leave voluntarily and was enlisting the help of downtown business leaders in his attempts to get the police chief to retire.

"Part of the mayor's strategy has been to appeal to the business community by saying the chief is hurting the city internationally," said one official close to the mayor's office.

The mayor previously has said that the March 3 videotaped police beating of Rodney King in suburban Lake View Terrace has hurt the city's tourist business.

"Obviously, that was unsuccessful earlier, but the Christopher Commission re-

Texans to see bite taken from sun

EL PASO (AP) — West Texas is looking forward to being swathed in shadows during today's solar eclipse.

When the moon moves between the Earth and the sun, El Pasoans will be on their lunch hour, giving eclipse enthusiasts a good chance to observe the celestial wonder.

At the peak of the eclipse as seen from El Paso, 74.2 percent of the sun will be covered. Rick Villareal, a staff member at University of Texas McDonald Observatory in Fort Davis, said much of far West Texas along the U.S.-Mexico border will see 75 to 80 percent of the sun covered. At Brownsville, 80 percent should be covered.

"The phone has been ringing off the hook. People are coming all the way from Sierra Blanca to see this," said John Peterson, El Paso Independent School District planetarium director.

"If you picture the line of the eclipse . . . the closer you get to that line, the better. In the continental United States we're in one of the best sites," Peterson said.

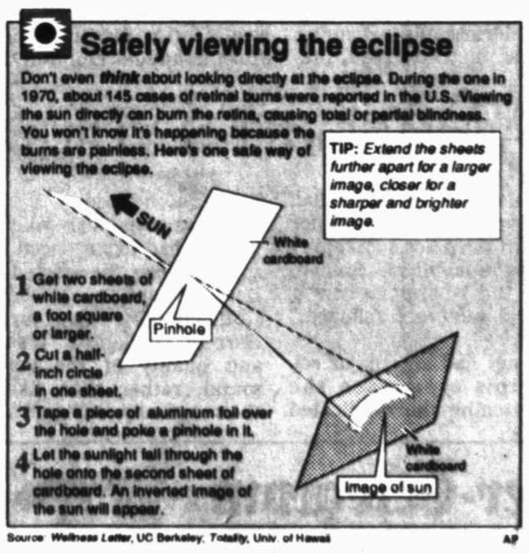

Knowing that this opportunity isn't going to present itself for another 141 years, Peterson and summer-school teacher Mike Gravalas are using the eclipse as an instructional tool in summer-school classes. Students have been training for two weeks to help stage the only public viewing in El Paso of the eclipse.

TV host's voice triggers seizures, doctor says

NEW YORK (AP) — A neurologist reports in a prestigious medical journal that a woman got epileptic seizures by hearing the voice of "Entertainment Tonight" co-host Mary Hart.

Symptoms included an upset feeling in the pit of her stomach, a sense of pressure in her head and mental confusion, said Dr. Venkat Ramani, who reported the case in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"It was very dramatic," said Ramani, who studied the seizures when the woman heard Hart's voice during laboratory testing. She would rub her stomach, hold her head "and then she would look confused and far away, the expression in her eyes, she looked like she was far away and out of it."

The testing confirmed that Hart's voice triggered the abnormal electrical discharges in the brain that mark an epileptic seizure, said Ramani, a professor of neurology at the

Parental nightmare: eco-smart children

In the old days, the children were the sneaky ones — smoking in the bathroom and doing other things they shouldn't.

Now, it's the parents who are afraid of being caught by their environmentally aware, health-conscious and "politically correct" children, some of whom are barely out of kindergarten.

They march around in unbleached cotton T-shirts that proclaim, "When You Buy Ivory Someone Else Pays," "Save the Earth" or "Oceans in Question."

And they carry their sports equipment in tote bags emblazoned with dancing dolphins and the message "Don't Let Their Song Be Silenced."

Notch babies

WASHINGTON — Most members of the House have signed a bill to increase Social Security benefits for millions of retirees known as "notch babies," sponsors announced Wednesday. "The long road to reverse the injustice afflicted on those born between the years of 1917 through 1926 has come to a crossroads," Rep. H. James Saxton, R-N.J., told a news conference. He said 232 House members have signed the legislation. That does not assure passage, however.

Some clouds, 90s ahead

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for brief morning low cloudiness, otherwise partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of late afternoon thunderstorms, a high in the mid-90s and winds south i0-20 mph, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be partly cloudy with a high near 70 and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms.

Friday's forecast is partly cloudy with a high in the low 90s, the NWS said.

Wednesday's high was 97, compared to the record high of 105, set on July 10, 1964.

The record low for today's date is 62, set in 1947.

STATE

An upper level high pressure system and a surface trough of low pressure combined Wednesday to produce sunny, hot and windy conditions across most of Texas.

A few clouds dotted the skies in Northwest and Southeast Texas, and a few thundershowers dampened the western South Plains.

Winds were from the south at 10 to 20 mph with gusts to around 25 mph.

The windy conditions made it feel a little cooler than Tuesday. The upper level high pressure system also contributed by drying out the low levels of the atmosphere a little. This has helped keep the heat index lower than it had been.

Temperatures were mostly in the 90s. Amarillo reported 97 degrees while Marfa and Guadalupe Pass reported the lowest temperature at 83.

The forecast for North Texas was for partly cloudy skies through Friday with widely scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Highs both days in the low to upper 90s. Lows tonight in the low to mid 70s.

NATION

Thunderstorms downed power lines in Kentucky on Wednesday and heavy downpours flooded streets in Missouri as much of the country weathered summertime rain.

Scattered showers extended from the East Coast to New Mexico and northward through the Rockies. The West was mostly sunny.

A morning thunderstorm brought wind damage to Segal and Bowling Green, Ky. Gusting wind downed power lines in Barren and Warren counties.

Early morning rainfall in eastern Missouri ranged from an inch and a half at St. Peters to nearly 8 inches at Kirkwood, a St. Louis suburb.

Local flooding was reported west of Troy, Mo., between New Hartford and Middletown, Mo., as well as in and around St. Louis.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

ECLIPSE: West Texas to be swathed in shadows which is real convenient. It's like this thing was scheduled just for us. I've talked to a lot of people who said they'll be bringing their lunch," Peterson said.

Five telescopes that will project images of the eclipse into shadowed boxes have been set up on the grounds of a local school. Peterson said the students scavenged for a few refrigerator boxes for the project.

"If it clears (of clouds) we will be able to see mountains on the edge of the moon and sun spots. The sun is covered with sun spots right now," Peterson said.

The students also constructed pinhole viewers for the use of eclipse ogglers and will be selling mylar filter glasses for $2 apiece. The revenues will be used for a field trip for the students to Carlsbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico.

"These are low-achieving students who had to go to summer school because they didn't pass their courses and they didn't pass their science classes. This has given them a motivation they probably wouldn't normally have," said Peterson.

McDonald Observatory staffers say the spectacular event involving the nearest star to Earth is a chance to give a pitch for other celestial phenomena.

"It's exciting I guess for everyone when they come out here. They want to know more about the sun and the stars and the program we have here. We like to give everyone the idea that astronomy is not necessarily for astronomers or for people going to college, it's something everyone can enjoy."

The observatory will have guided tours of the dome and solar telescopes set up at the viewers center.

SANCTIONS: President opens door to trade tested that Bush was moving too hastily and reducing the pressure on the Pretoria government before blacks gain full voting and political rights.

Shortly before taking his action, Bush telephoned black South African leader Nelson Mandela, who made a last-minute plea to keep the sanctions in place. The African National Congress, of which Mandela is a top leader, has charged that South Africa continues to hold nearly 1,000 political prisoners, despite the U.S. determination that all prisoners of conscience have now been freed.

In Congress, critics voiced "grave" concerns about the move. "I am disappointed but not surprised," said Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga. "The president never supported sanctions, so he is going by the letter of the law rather than the spirit" in lifting them after South Africa complied with the technical requirements prescribed by the sanctions law.

"It's been a long journey down a very long road toward eliminating" apartheid, said Lewis, adding that he feared progress would now be slowed. Sanctions should have been kept in place until South Africa established a one-person, one-vote government, he said.

The NAACP, meeting at a national convention in Houston, voted to call for reimposition of the sanctions.

And in a blistering attack on Bush's decision, anti-apartheid activist Randall Robinson of Washington, D.C., charged that the president's "rush to lift sanctions signals that he is more eager to seek friendship with the apartheid regime than to put pressure on the white minority government."

Despite vocal objections, opponents saw little hope of reversing Bush's action, which would require new legislation that would almost certainly be vetoed. "At this point, there appears to be very little that we can do," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who doubted that Congress could muster a two-thirds majority needed to override a veto.

In South Africa, government officials were elated by Bush's decision. President de Klerk said in a statement that the removal of sanctions would help in "a revival of our economy" and open the way to "a new era of cooperation with the United States."

Foreign Minister Pik Botha proclaimed his country to be back to "international respectability and acceptability."

Until Bush lifted them, the sanctions barred trade between the United States and South Africa on a broad range of goods such as computer products, gold coins, oil, coal and farm products.

GATES: Mayor issues call to business leaders port couldn't have been any better from the mayor's point of view," said the official, who asked not to be identified.

The report of the Independent Commission on the Los Angeles Police Department, headed by former Deputy U.S. Attorney General Warren Christopher, was released Tuesday and called for Gates to step aside during a transition period in which a new chief would be selected.

The commission, appointed in response to the videotaped beating of King, found that a significant number of LAPD officers repeatedly use excessive force but that these officers are rarely disciplined.

The commission also found hundreds of computer transmitted messages between patrol cars in which officers bragged about beating up citizens and made slurs against women, minorities and homosexuals.

The report found "a significant breakdown in management" and called for limiting the chief of police to two five-year terms. Under the current City Charter, however, Gates can remain police chief for life and can only be removed for good cause, such as misconduct.

Gates said on Tuesday that he had no intention of stepping aside until at least voters decide on a potential charter change limiting the term for chief. On Wednesday, Gates told reporters at Parker Center police headquarters that he intended to remain on the job until the reform process was completed.

Several members of the Christopher Commission said they were dismayed with Gates' decision and hoped he would reconsider once he has had an opportunity to more fully review the report.

One businessman who was contacted by the mayor, and also asked not to be identified, said he was urged to form a committee of business leaders to approach Gates and ask him to consider retiring when he reaches his 65th birthday on Aug. 30.

Ray Remy, head of the Los Angeles Area Chamber of Commerce and a former deputy mayor to Bradley, said he had not been contacted by the mayor's office. But Remy said he would not be surprised at the effort.

"The approach would have to be on their personal and close relationships with the chief," Remy said. "When you have people like Justice (John) Arguelles on the Christopher Commission endorsing this, the chief would have to take a close look at it."

Arguelles, a former California Supreme Court justice, was one of three commission members appointed by Gates.

Richard Riordan, a downtown lawyer with close ties to Bradley and Gates, said the business community would not become involved in the battle until it had confidence in the Police Commission.

"We want a makeup of the Police Commission that all segments of the community can have confidence in their ability to pick the best new chief," Riordan said.

NIGHTMARE: Now, it's parents who are afraid

save water, forget about diet soda, keep away from red meat, abandon fur coats, stop smoking and shut off the lights.

They also insist on paying attention to the new recycling laws, no matter what.

No wonder there is quite a number of parents who, having put their little darlings on the bus to summer camp, are breathing a sigh of relief.

"As soon as the bus left, I immediately went home and put a few bottles into the trash," admitted Cynthia Nachmani, whose 11-year-old son, Jacob, left for camp on June 24. "When he's around, all the cans and bottles — we go through a case of club soda a week — go straight back to the store. But when he's gone, I throw them away.

"I guess now I'm rebelling against Jacob's sterness," continued Ms. Nachmani, an associate museum educator at the Museum of Modern Art who met her husband at a peace march in Washington Square in 1961.

"And Jacob's ecology extends to eating," she said. "So usually he doesn't eat bacon because of the nitrates. But the last weekend before he goes off to camp, he has two breakfasts, with bacon at each of them. That's become a tradition in our family."

Children like Jacob call themselves "eco-smart," and when faced with the cornucopia of ice cream vendors at Fifth Avenue and 59th Street in Manhattan make a beeline for Ben & Jerry's.

"See?" said one 8-year-old recently, ripping open a Rainforest Crunch Peace Pop. "It says '1 Percent for Peace.' The others are just ice cream."

The parents who were peaceniks, or otherwise politically active and socially conscious, in the 60s seem to be on the shortest fuses.

Paula Rubinstein, a New York antiques dealer and self-avowed "sympathizer to the antiwar movement" hates that she cannot take a bath in peace.

"I share a bathroom with my daughter Hillary, who is 17," she said. "If I happen to turn on the water in the tub but happen to step into my bedroom for a minute to take off my watch or get a robe, by the time I get back, Hillary has already turned the tap off. She tells me I'm wasting water. It drives me crazy."

Smoking is a long-running big deal. For years, children as young as 4 have been hiding the ashtrays, crooking their fingers and yelling "Yuck" whenever they are within three feet of a cigarette. Some even start their haranguing at an earlier age.

William Van Carpels showed his displeasure at 5. "Grandma, I didn't know you did drugs," he wailed when he saw his grandmother lighting up on the porch outside his house.

Where does this all come from? Everywhere, one could answer — even from the parents.

Starting in nursery school — and continuing inexorably through high school — children learn the ways and means of environmental politics.

They get into the habit of rounding up soda cans and recycling all sorts of materials into artwork.

As soon as they can read, they sit up in bed at night poring through "Fifty Simple Things Kids Can Do To Save the Earth" (Andrews and McNeel, 1990, $6.95) a popular birthday gift from their peers. And their science projects focus on saving the rain forest, rather than discovering the mysteries of electricity.

"Kids are better informed and instinctively more tied in, more connected," said Randi Hacker, the publisher and editor in chief of P3, which calls itself "the Earth-based magazine for kids," in Montgomery, Vt. In her magazine, children read about fossil fuel, acid rain and leopard jeopardy.

They also read books like "Let's Talk Trash: the Kids' Book About Recycling" (Waterfront Books, $14.95), where they are told to "keep things until they're all used up," and "fix things when they break instead of throwing them out."

Socially conscious children are apt to jump on their soapboxes in a flash. One of Earl Pierce Jr.'s consciousness-raising tactics is to leave environmentally sound literature around his house in Lawnside, N.J.

"I hide some of the books," said the 12-year-old's mother, Joyce Gilchrist-Pierce, a teacher of language arts and social studies. "It just makes me feel too guilty."

Absolutely no plastic is an unwritten law in the household. "If something is in plastic, I have to hide if I want to use it," Ms. Gilchrist-Pierce said.

Nevertheless, she admires her son's zeal. "Earl torments me to do the right thing," she said. "He wants me to have an environment for him and his children that they will be able to live in."

But sometimes, especially when mother and son go grocery shopping, she finds it a bit trying when he puts the kibosh on her buying Styrofoam cups.

"It's hard," she said, "especially when he's giving me a lesson as we walk down the aisle."

And what about aerosol cans, many children's pet peeves? "Don't even mention them," Ms. Gilchrist-Pierce said. "I have to use a pump."

Jane Bevans, a lawyer, said: "It's bad enough when your mother did it to you. Now the kids are on to us."

Her 6-year-old daughter, Maggie Bevans Tauranac, is on the alert when she suspects that diet soda is making an appearance in the family's New York apartment.

"She feels that the worse thing we could do would be to actually drink it," Ms. Bevans said. "She's very persistent."

Maggie also insists that as soon as anyone gets into the family car, that all seat belts should be on and all doors locked. "We've always done the seat belts," Ms. Bevans said. "But I absolutely hate to lock the doors. She drives us crazy."

And the harassment doesn't stop when the children get a little older.

As soon as Sherrill N. Musty's sons, Andrew, 22, and Jamie, 16, are out of the house, she goes straight to the refrigerator, makes two butterscotch sundaes and eats them one after the other.

"I'd never do it in front of them," said Ms. Musty, a publisher in Burlington, Vt. "They'd rag me too much about it.

SEIZURES: It's Mary Hart's voice, doctor says

(From 1A)

Albany Medical College.

In an interview, he said he did not know why Hart's voice triggered the seizures, which lasted 30 seconds to a minute or two.

"I don't think it's psychological. Primarily it's a neurological, or brain-related event," he said.

The unidentified woman had thought Hart's voice set off her seizures, but "even her own family members were skeptical," Ramani said. With the laboratory confirmation, "she was very relieved," he said.

She has not had any major seizures of this type since she stopped watching the syndicated TV show, he said.

It was not clear whether the woman had experienced such seizures before she started hearing Hart, he said.

An epilepsy expert urged that Hart not be blamed. "It's the pitch and quality of the voice as a sound, rather than likely what she's actually saying," said Dr. Marc Dichter of the University of Pennsylvania Medical School.

Susan Bluttman, a spokeswoman for "Entertainment Tonight" producer Paramount Domestic Television, called the report "a serious medical matter."

"All we know is what we read in the New England Journal," she said.

White House: Thomas smoked marijuana in college

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The White House said Wednesday that Judge Clarence Thomas, President Bush's Supreme Court nominee, had smoked marijuana while in college, but that the president had decided that it was "a minor matter" that should not disqualify him.

Judy Smith, a spokeswoman for the White House, said Thomas had smoked marijuana "several times" while he was an undergraduate at the College of the Holy Cross "and perhaps once" when he was at Yale Law School.

"He believes it was a mistake and never repeated it," Ms. Smith said. "He disclosed it when he was nominated to the federal Court of Appeals. We believe this matter is inconsequential."

A senior White House official who insisted on not being identified said: "It's an old story, not new news. "We view it as a minor matter."

The official, confirming an account of Thomas' disclosure that appeared in the Thursday editions of The Washington Post, sought to distinguish Thomas' use of marijuana from that of Judge Douglas H. Ginsburg, who serves in the same circuit as Thomas, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

The disclosure of Ginsburg's use of marijuana while he was a law professor at Harvard Law School in the late 1970s led to his decision in November 1987 to withdraw his name from nomination to the Supreme Court.

Thomas was nominated earlier this month to succeed Justice Thurgood Marshall, the only black ever appointed to the Supreme Court and widely considered one of the most influential civil rights lawyers of the century.

Thomas was heavily criticized by civil rights groups when he headed the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in the Reagan administration.

Some leading women's and abortion's rights groups have said they will oppose his appointment to the high court.

The withdrawal of Judge Ginsburg, and the controversy that preceded it, was an acute embarrassment for the administration of President Ronald Reagan because the judge stepped aside barely two weeks after the Senate had rejected the nomination of Robert H. Bork for the High Court.

At the time of the Ginsburg nomination, the Justice Department under Reagan had sought to disqualify any perspective senior officials who may have experimented with drugs.

But under the Bush administration, officials at several agencies and departments appear to have taken a more lenient approach, assessing drug use on a case by case basis.

For instance, T. Timothy Ryan Jr., the current head of the Office of Thrift Supervision, acknowledged that he had tried cocaine.

The White House official emphasized that Judge Ginsburg had smoked "as an officer of the court," since he was then a lawyer.

"And he had not acknowledged, had not voluntarily revealed it, and so there were connotations of not being candid," the official said, adding that a policy excluding candidates based on experimental drug use "could disqualify a whole generation."

German tourist dies after fall into campfire

DILLINGHAM, Alaska (AP) — A German tourist who fell into a campfire after a night of drinking has died, officials said.

Nikolaus Kozsar, 54, was badly burned over 70 percent of his body, according to Alaska state troopers, who also said he had a bad heart.

Kozsar and two friends were on a fishing trip near the Mulchatna River on Alaska's west coast over the weekend, Trooper A.J. Charlton said.

The friends dozed off early Sunday while Kozsar drank by the fire; they awoke to his screams and saw him running through the woods with his clothes ablaze.

"It was their belief that he ...either tripped into the fire or passed out into the fire," Charlton said.

Kozsar's companions put out the fire and went in a boat to get help.

Kozsar was taken out of the remote wilderness by police helicopter and died Monday.

House puts MFN conditions on China

China's 1992 favorable trade status depends on "significant progress" against slave labor, press restrictions, religious persecution and inhumane prisons.

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The House gave President Bush's China policy a sharp rebuke Wednesday, voting to cut off favorable trade status in 1992 unless the Beijing government improves human rights conditions and curbs weapons proliferation.

By a lopsided 313 to 112 vote, the lawmakers approved Bush's renewal of so-called most favored nation (MFN) trade status to China for another year. But they attached conditions that Beijing must meet in order to have it extended beyond that.

In order to win renewal for 1992, China would have to demonstrate that it has made "significant progress" against slave labor, press restrictions, religious persecution and inhumane prisons. It would also have to release any prisoners still held in connection with the crackdown on the 1989 Tiananmen Square pro-democracy movement, as well as provide assurances that China is not helping countries acquire nuclear weapons or certain types of missiles.

The size of the vote was more than the two-thirds that will be needed to override a certain presidential veto.

The bill now goes to the Senate, where it will be taken up later this month. White House officials have said privately that they expect to lose in the Senate as well as the House. However, their goal in the Senate is to garner the minimum 34 votes needed to sustain a veto.

Bush, a former U.S. envoy to Beijing, argues that cutting off MFN or attaching conditions will anger and isolate the Chinese government. He asserts that China's leaders will retaliate by imposing trade restrictions on U.S. imports and hindering U.S. foreign policy aims.

Critics, led by Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., insist that attaching conditions to MFN renewal is the only way to force China's leaders to improve.

Countries receiving most favored nation status are guaranteed the lowest possible tariffs on imports into the United States. China first received MFN in 1980 and it has been renewed annually ever since.

No one on either side of the issue defended China's human rights record, which an Amnesty International report this week said has grown steadily worse in recent years. But there was sharp disagreement over how to improve the situation.

"Read the Amnesty International report," implored Rep. Sander M. Levin, D-Mich., who voted for attaching conditions. "Torture is rampant. I'm afraid that jawboning isn't sufficient to change things."

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., disagreed, warning that the conditions would reduce dialogue with China and lessen U.S. influence.

"This is not the proper way to send a signal," he said. "Our best hope for influencing China in the coming years is to remain engaged."

Others warned that failure to renew MFN would prompt retaliatory trade measures by the Chinese, restricting U.S. exports and costing American jobs.

Recovery missed 1991 graduates

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — This spring's college graduates have mostly missed out on the economic recovery, as employers grew more conservative and cautious with their job offers, according to a survey by the College Placement Council.

Although Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan declared that the recession bottomed out in the second quarter, the reported rebound was too late to improve recruiting prospects for the new graduates, according to the council.

"Those graduates who didn't find suitable permanent positions can take some solace from Greenspan's recent comments — there is nowhere to go but up, though employment opportunities generally lag behind economic recovery," the council said.

Skittish over the economy, employers earlier this year put hiring plans on hold and reined in salary offers, the survey found.

Two areas showed greater changes: foreign language graduates saw starting salary offers drop more than 8 percent, while petroleum engineering graduates saw theirs jump by more than 10 percent, the survey showed.

U.S.: Iraq's nuclear capability greater than expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — International inspection teams that visited Iraq found that Saddam Hussein has far greater nuclear capability than U.S. officials first thought, administration sources said Wednesday.

Iraq was found to have had enough uranium needed for the production of 20 to 40 nuclear weapons, a senior administration official confirmed.

"The special commission briefing U.N. officials was told that given the amount of enriched uranium of all kinds that the Iraqis have they could eventually make 20 to 40 nuclear weapons — but it would have taken them 10 years of uninterrupted work to do that," the official said.

"That does not say that they, right now, today, could make 20 to 40 bombs," the official added.

Another official, speaking privately, confirmed that the size of the Iraqi program was much larger than U.S. officials had estimated when they prepared potential targets for destruction during the Persian Gulf War.

One of the main goals of the U.S.-led war effort was the destruction of Iraq's nuclear capability.

"Call it a failure of intelligence, we just didn't know he had all this stuff," the second official said.

The second official said Saddam was able to fool military planners by burying nuclear-related materials, but that new target lists have been prepared in the event President Bush would order a new wave of military strikes.

"But we're a long way from that," the second official said. "He (Saddam) moves this stuff around, and we'll establish new targets to try to find it. They refine target lists all the time."

President Bush said Wednesday he suspects Saddam Hussein still has not told the whole truth about his nuclear weapons capacity and warned anew that the United States was deadly serious about eliminating it.

Bush said the admission Baghdad made to the United Nations on Monday about its extensive program to manufacture bomb-grade uranium was a sign of "progress."

"But we will be watching this very carefully," Bush told a White House news conference.

"There's still reason to believe that he is hiding and has not come totally clean," the president said.

Bush said he has begun consulting with other world leaders, including Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, on the need "to keep our eyes wide open" about the Iraqi nuclear threat.

Bush said the international community will not "be lulled by some letter or some very belated offering from Saddam Hussein that he is now willing to do that which should have done a long time ago."

Plane crashes into house, kills at least 13

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A commuter plane crashed into a house and burned during a heavy thunderstorm Wednesday, killing at least 13 people on the plane and injuring four more on the ground, authorities said.

The pilot and one passenger survived, hospital officials said.

There were conflicting reports about the death toll. The Federal Aviation Administration said 14 people on the plane and four on the ground were killed. But the airline said only 15 people had been on the flight, and the city fire chief said he couldn't confirm any deaths on the ground.

Robert Carlisle, who lives across an alley from the crash site, said he heard the plane moments before it went down. "It went dead. The engine sputtered. Then I saw flames," he said.

Kathleen Bergen, an FAA spokeswoman in Atlanta, said the pilot hadn't reported problems before the crash.

Birmingham Police Sgt. Elvis Kennedy said: "It came across one house and hit a second house. The second house went into flames with the plane."

Fire officials searched the burned rubble for any other victims.

L'Express Flight 508 from Mobile to Birmingham had 13 passengers and two crew members, said Carl Tackett, a L'Express vice president at the airline's New Orleans headquarters. He said the plane was a Beechcraft C-99 twin-engine turboprop.

The plane was on final approach to the Birmingham airport when it crashed in a residential area of west Birmingham at 6:12 p.m., said FAA spokesman Fred Farrar in Washington.

Farrar said the crash killed 14 people on the plane and four on the ground. But Birmingham Fire Chief Buddy Wilks said late Wednesday there weren't any confirmed dead on the ground.

The pilot was in critical condition at University Hospital in Birmingham, but his injuries weren't life-threatening, said hospital spokesman Jim Bosarge. He identified the pilot as Francis Fernandez, 40, of Niceville, Fla.

A second survivor was passenger Mabry Rogers, 43, of Birmingham, who was in stable condition in Carraway Hospital in Birmingham with a broken leg and lacerations, said a nursing supervisor who wouldn't give her name.

Three people from one home at the crash site were hospitalized in satisfactory condition at Baptist Medical Center-Princeton.

Landon's death his final lesson

More was lost last week when Michael Landon died than merely a multitalented actor who made his television roles come to life for millions of Americans. That "vast wasteland" known as television will suffer in the absence of Landon's presence and with it, television viewers will suffer.

Over the span of more than three decades, Landon portrayed characters who possessed the moral virtues millions of Americans identify with and seek to emulate. That's all the more remarkable since during those years the moral guideposts Landon was bringing to his roles were under attack by forces that say they're outdated, even prudish.

Critics often harangued Landon's characters both as an actor and producer as "too good to be believable," but obviously there were millions of Americans who kept returning to Little Joe on "Bonanza," Pa Ingalls on "Little House on the Prairie" and Jonathon Smith on "Highway to Heaven" for the value structure they are not receiving in much of the remainder of television fare today.

Landon was no "goody two shoes," although many of his characters may have been perceived that way in our callous society. His life had been torn and tainted by our times as have the lives of millions of others. He had been married three times and was the father of nine children. He was not always the best role-model for a father. Yet in a way that fact made the message he was sending to television viewers more believable and worthwhile.

When the end was close and at 54 years of age Michael Landon was facing inoperable liver and pancreas cancer, he did not withdraw to the shadows to die but faced the realities of his disease with courage, conviction, even humor. In so doing, he gave his last and greatest lesson to the public, particularly those with terminal cancer — how to fight for life and accept death when it comes.

His talent will be missed; the values he stood for are still those embraced by many Americans. His message should never be forgotten.

Governor listened to voters on waste

Gov. Ann Richards listened to the voters during her campaign and is prepared to pass the message along to lawmakers during the special session — first, eliminate government waste and duplication.

Gov. Richards heard right. Texas voters want to make sure their government is trimmed to its optimum level of efficiency.

"They (Texas voters) believe that there is too much fat in government, that government needs to be cut," Richards said when she officially set a special legislative session on the budget for July 15. She said lawmakers will first consider spending cuts and agency consolidations.

The Legislature will be guided by Comptroller John Sharp's audit of Texas government that showed how $5.2 billion could be saved or raised over the next two years primarily by cutting out fat and duplication and consolidating services.

Along those lines, Richards also should be supported in her attempt to seek the power to hire and fire heads of major agencies. She wants more direct and immediate control of agencies to make them more responsive to the will of the public.

The idea of a weak governor has far outlived its original purpose — to foil carpetbagging governors from wielding too much influence. Richards' plan would not affect rate-making bodies such as the Public Utility Commission or the State Board of Insurance. The governor needs the authority to hire agency heads with the advice and consent of the Senate in line with a typical corporate structure.

Harris County 'divorce' might solve its problem

The Louisiana House of Representatives has approved a study of New Orleans seceding from the state. The Crescent City has long been at odds with the rest of Louisiana, and a no-fault divorce may be the solution.

If New Orleans does leave, Houston — or Harris County — might consider following suit. We send to Austin far more money than we get back, the state refuses to pay what it owes the county for housing convicts and state officials criticize us for locking up criminals in the first place.

Fine. We'll just set up toll booths at the county line and charge those who don't live here enough to cover the costs of jails. No non-resident parolees allowed.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, July 11, the 192nd day of 1991. There are 173 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 11, 1804, Vice President Aaron Burr mortally wounded former Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton in a pistol duel near Weehawken, N.J.

Scowcroft wanted business with Iraq

WASHINGTON — Brent Scowcroft, President Bush's national security adviser, was bullish on increasing business ties with pre-war Iraq at the same time his former employer, Henry Kissinger, was pushing for more commerce and more conciliatory relations between the United States and Iraq.

Anderson

Before moving to the White House staff, Scowcroft worked for Kissinger Associates, the high-powered and secretive lobbying firm headed by the former secretary of state. In the early months of the Bush administration, the firm worked with a now-defunct group known as the U.S.-Iraq Business Forum — a group of top corporate executives who wanted to do business with Iraq and lobbied Washington to bestow Iraq with U.S. bank credits.

As one of Bush's closest advisers, Scowcroft argued the case for credits within the administration. The credits were granted but later were discovered to have been diverted to Saddam's military machine, according to White House sources.

At another point, Kissinger Associates also threw its weight behind the U.S.-Iraq Business Forum by sending an emissary along with a delegation of corporate executives to Iraq in 1989 to meet Saddam.

Kissinger's consulting firm has served as a farm system for high-level government positions, and Scowcroft apparently subscribes to many of Kissinger's foreign policy precepts. There is no evidence that Scowcroft acted out of a profit motive, but he may have been too well-trained in the Kissinger agenda. Scowcroft owned thousands of dollars in stock in many of the companies that stood to benefit from certain export sales to Iraq. And many of the companies he owned stock in were involved in the U.S.-Iraq Business Forum. But, he sold his shares in those firms in 1990, according to his financial disclosure report.

The House Banking Committee, chaired by Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-Texas, has been probing the Scowcroft and Kissinger connections to U.S. foreign policy-making. Committee investigators have linked Kissinger to Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, an Italian bank that gave more than $4 billion in unreported loans to Iraq, a portion of which Saddam siphoned for military purposes. Kissinger was a paid member of BNL's consulting board for International Policy during a period when the bank's Atlanta office was lending billions to Iraq. Several of Kissinger's clients were beneficiaries of BNL largesse to Iraq.

Both the Reagan and Bush administrations have had a blind spot in dealing with Iraq. They ignored warnings from the U.S. Export-Import Bank that Saddam was a poor credit risk and could be using the financial assistance to boost his military. White House officials and business leaders claimed that forging business ties with Iraq would improve relations and moderate Iraqi behavior.

White House sources told us that Scowcroft and Lawrence Eagleburger, a top State Department official who formerly worked for Kissinger, argued within the administration for a more appeasing policy toward Saddam before his invasion of Kuwait last summer. Even afterward, Scowcroft argued internally against helping the Kurdish rebels overthrow Saddam. Scowcroft claimed that the breakup of Iraq would spread instability throughout the Persian Gulf.

GEORGE WILL

Thomas has non-liberal black experience

WASHINGTON — Liberalism's moral ostentation, which is proportional to and related to liberalism's recent impotence, was on display the other day when Derrick Bell, a fervidly liberal professor of law at Harvard, said he hoped that when Clarence Thomas is on the Supreme Court he will come to realize "that this is not the 19th century."

Will

Bell's limp insult reeks of condescension and demonstrates the banality of contemporary liberalism even in its invective. But there is a 19th-century aspect of Thomas. He could have stepped from the pages of those novels 19th-century readers loved, novels of astonishing upward mobility by strivers who succeed by pluck and luck.

That is why contemporary liberalism is doubly distressed by Thomas. He will make the Supreme Court still less hospitable to liberals trying to use it as a surrogate legislature. And his national prominence will vivify an alternative to the liberal model of black experience and politics.

If Thomas becomes a paradigm of the proper black stance toward the challenges of American life, the intellectual and political foundations of contemporary liberalism will be threatened.

Liberalism's intellectual core is now victimology, the doctrine that minority groups, victimized by America's refusal to recognize various "rights," comprise an American majority. Liberalism's agenda is the multiplication of "rights," by legislation if convenient, by litigation if necessary or expeditious. This liberalism represents a third and degenerate stage in the defining of freedom in America.

At the time of America's founding, freedom was understood as freedom from government. The Civil War gave birth to a more complex conception of freedom, one suited to the exigencies of an industrial society: Freedom can sometimes be enhanced by exercises of government power. But today's liberalism defines freedom as the result of aggrieved, irritable, elbow-throwing groups getting government to create for them group rights — enforceable entitlements for social space, and claims against the community.

Politically, this doctrine makes the liberal party, the Democrats, the dispenser of group entitlements to clients of government. In presidential politics, Democrats are now particularly dependent on the loyalty of two large blocs, blacks and government workers. (At the 1976 Convention that nominated Carter, approximately one quarter of all delegates and alternates were employed in public education. Guess which president created the Education Department?)

Democrats are understandably alarmed by the prospect that two related expansions–of the black middle class and of conservatism in the black community–might drive the Democratic share of the black vote down to say, 70 percent. Even that would make the Democrats' path to power significantly steeper. Hence the fury directed against blacks who stray, ideologically, from the liberal plantation.

The Thomas nomination elicits fake hysteria from liberals who are happiest when unhappy--when pretending that tyranny is descending. Kate Michelman, a pro-abortion campaigner, says that if Thomas helps overturn Roe v. Wade, he will "set this country back 150, 200 years." Or 18.

Actually, not even that. Even before the 1973 abortion ruling, 16 states with 41 percent of the nation's population had liberalized abortion laws. Laws follow culture. Abortion is now one of the most common surgical procedures. Pro-abortion forces might consider trusting the persuasive processes of democracy.

A significant portion of the nation's political and media elites, who have seen enough evidence to know better, nevertheless believe there is a leftward-moving ratchet in history: history moves only to the left, never back.

But it does move rightward. Here is how it happens in the judiciary.

The day Justice Marshall resigned, the court ruled, 6-3 (with Marshall dissenting), that "victim impact evidence" can be presented to juries at the sentencing stage of capital cases. That is, the Constitution cannot be properly read to forbid telling juries about the character of the murder victim and the suffering of the victim's family.

In 1987 the court ruled 5-4 to read the Constitution the way the court in 1991 considers improper. But 11 days after that 1987 decision, Justice Powell resigned. The day after that, in Tennessee, a murder occurred that in four years became the case that the court, with a two-ninths different composition, used in June 1991 to reverse the 1987 decision.

Since 1987, Powell and Brennan have been replaced by Kennedy and Souter. Thus, a 5-4 ruling in one direction became a 6-3 ruling in the opposite direction.

From Marla to Yugoslavia, the news fits

On the island of Martha's Vineyard we always wait for someone to come over from the mainland to give us the news about what's happening in the world. Starved for information, I hugged the ferry slip and stopped a station wagon with four bicycles on the roof rack and five children in the back seats.

Buchwald

"Anything going on that we people with our heads in the sand should worry about?"

The driver answered, "Donald Trump has left Carla for Marla."

"I thought he had left Marla for Carla."

"He did, but he didn't. If you recall, at the beginning he told the New York Post that he was leaving Ivana for Marla. Then he informed the New York Daily News that he was tiring of Marla, and he was attracted to Carla, an Italian model whose father had more money than Trump. Everybody was willing to accept this when Trump told Newsday that he had given Marla a ring and Carla a 'Get Well' card — that's the biggest news of the month."

"Where is Carla now?"

"She could be in Yugoslavia for all Marla cares. The Yugoslavs have a breakup problem of their own. The Croats want out and so do the Slovenes. Moscow is worried because if the two gain independence it will give ideas to Armenia and Estonia."

"What is the latest on the Middle East?"

"Saddam Hussein is building an atomic bomb."

"I thought he wasn't supposed to."

"He wasn't, but Saddam likes to break the rules. While our Desert Storm troops were marching down the streets and boulevards of this great country, Saddam was up in the mountains cooking uranium with marshmallows over a bonfire."

"That's bad news."

"The good news is that Gen. Schwarzkopf received $5 million for his book."

"That's more than most baseball players get," I said. "What's the latest on Sununu?"

"He apologized to the President for embarrassing him over his transportation arrangements. Then when the President forgave him, Sununu asked Bush if he could borrow his golf cart to go to a garage sale in Kansas City."

"Don't go," I pleaded with the driver, "this is the first news I've had in weeks."

He told me, "We now have a Supreme Court nominee named Clarence Thomas. He doesn't think like Thurgood Marshall, which Bush says is the reason that he picked him. The President announced that when it comes to the court, he's colorblind. Those who were reading Bush's lips reported that what the President really said was, 'They thought I was going to pick Marla or Carla, but I fooled them.' "

The kids started to act up in the back of the wagon, but I wanted to make sure I hadn't missed anything.

"Any banks go bust while I've been away?"

"As many as you want. Things are rocky in the banking world. Even Donald Trump is having trouble getting the lending institutions to carry him."

"Is that why Carla left him?"

"No. She left him when she read in People magazine that Donald had used up all his suntan oil on Marla."

"Well, it seems to have been an even bigger week than I had expected. I thank you for the briefing."

"Are you going to act on any of it?"

"The only one I can solve is the Yugoslavian problem."

Finance minister cuts pay in Japan's stock scandal

TOKYO (AP) — Seeking to squelch a deeply embarassing brokerage scandal, Finance Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said Wednesday he would take a pay cut and discipline subordinates for failing to adequately police the stock market.

Hashimoto's announcement came as the "Big Four" brokerages caught in the scandal — Nomura, Nikko, Daiwa and Yamaichi — began restricting activities for four days as a penalty for improper dealings. Some brokerage employees attended self-criticism sessions and lectures on ethics.

Hashimoto acknowledged the ministry had not fully enforced administrative measures to prevent brokerages from compensating major customers for investment losses. Such reimbursement is not illegal unless promised in advance, but the preferential treatment angered smaller investors who weren't compensated.

Over the last two days, the market has gained back 945.13 of the 1,932.59 points it lost in the previous five trading days as the scandal discouraged investors.

Hashimoto said he would return 10 percent of his salary for July through September. The cut would amount to $3,000.

Four other ministry officials will be reprimanded for weak supervision of the securities industry, and two also will take a 10 percent pay cut.

The Japan Broadcasting Corp. said Wednesday a Finance Ministry official, whom it did not identify, had acknowledged that the ministry knew brokerages were compensating large clients after a December 1989 administrative directive against the practice, but did nothing to stop them.

The four major brokerages said Tuesday they had paid big investors nearly $863 million to compensate them for their stock market losses.

Earlier, the ministry had blamed the securities industry for the scandal. The presidents of Nomura, the world's biggest brokerage, and Nikko resigned to take responsibility and all four firms adopted internal penalties.

All four brokerages stopped soliciting new business from corporate customers for four days beginning Wednesday.

Slovenia accepts EC peace proposal

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia (AP) — A European-brokered plan to avert civil war in Yugoslavia received a major boost Wednesday when Slovenia's parliament voted overwhelmingly to suspend its independence drive.

Deputies approved the plan, drafted last week by the European Community, despite misgivings by some legislators that it offered no guarantees federal tanks and warplanes would not attack again. Slovenian and federal military officials exchanged threats of violence later in the day.

"Let us not forget we are in the Balkans, where lies and deceit are the highest moral values," deputy Viktor Zakelj warned the parliament.

Violence was reported Wednesday in an entirely different area of the patchwork nation, along its southern border. Yugoslav and Albanian border guards traded fire in the Serbian province of Kosovo, which is populated mainly by ethnic Albanians, Belgrade television said. The reason for the clash was not immediately known, and there were no reports of casualties.

Ethnic Albanian militants seeking greater autonomy for the region have fought Serbia, which stripped the area of much of its independence in 1989.

Yugoslavia's Tanjug news agency said that the Albanians further increased the combat readiness of their army following the incident.

Slovenia's strong endorsement of the peace plan — by a vote of 189-11 with seven abstentions — was significant because the republic had pushed further toward full secession than neighboring Croatia and has been the center of battles against federal forces.

The accord already has been approved by Croatia, which like Slovenia declared independence June 25, and by Federal Premier Ante Markovic and his Cabinet. However, Yugoslavia's eight-member presidency still must accept the plan.

The presidency, which represents the six republics and two semi-autonomous provinces of Serbia, scheduled a meeting for Friday to discuss the plan.

Some army troops and Slovenian militiamen remained in the field late Wednesday despite the pact's call for full withdrawal. Both sides traded threats on possible military action.

Before the vote, Slovenia's president, Milan Kucan, told lawmakers their choice was "war or peace."

He said the agreement was "one of the steps on the long road to Slovenian independence."

The pact calls for army units to return to their barracks and the Slovenian militia to be demobilized, with Slovenia and Croatia suspending independence moves for three months to permit negotiations with the central government.

Two days after Slovenia declared independence, federal troops stormed into the republic, resulting in fighting that left at least 62 dead.

The federal government claims that Slovenia has not yet released all army prisoners captured during the fighting, as the agreement stipulates.

The Slovenians claim the army has flown hundreds of reinforcements into the republic.

"We have information that the Yugoslav Army is preparing an attack," Slovenian Information Minister Jelko Kacin said Wednesday. "Whether this is against Slovenia or Croatia is a question that must be answered in Belgrade."

There were no reports of clashes in Slovenia on Wednesday.

Chinese army fights flooding

BEIJING (AP) — Some 2.5 million soldiers have been mobilized to fight China's worst flooding in decades and the government released grain reserves Wednesday to feed hundreds of thousands of homeless.

At least 978 people have been reported dead in six eastern and southern provinces since heavy rains began in May.

The People's Liberation Army has sent more than 500,000 regular soldiers and 2 million reservists to aid relief, the state-run Xinhua News Agency said. Millions of civilians also have been mobilized, the report said.

Xinhua said the troops had rescued or evacuated about 500,000 people in the flooded areas.

Official television news showed cities and farms in eastern China covered by several feet of water, and residents and soldiers carrying baskets of earth to reinforce dikes. In other places, dams were blown up to allow water in reservoirs to run into the sea more quickly.

Yeltsin takes office amid trumpet fanfare, prayer

MOSCOW (NYT) — With a fanfare of trumpets, a patriarchal blessing and a dollop of politics, Boris N. Yeltsin was inaugurated Wednesday as the first freely elected president of the vast Russian federated republic.

"Great Russia is rising from its knees," Yeltsin said after taking the oath of office before a Kremlin assembly in the cavernous Palace of Congresses that included Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, leaders of his government and the Russian Orthodox patriarch. "We shall surely transform it into a prosperous, law-based, democratic, peaceful and sovereign state."

Reflecting a political truce that has changed their bitter feud into a cautious partnership, Gorbachev, who just four months earlier had argued that the Russian republic has no need for its own president, congratulated Yeltsin and declared his inauguration important "for the entire multinational fatherland."

The day before, Yeltsin, who four months earlier had called on Gorbachev to resign, said he would support Gorbachev in an election for the Soviet presidency.

Wednesday, Gorbachev was alone in cutting through the pomp of the occasion. "Some might ask, what's so special about one more president in the country?" he said at the outset of his comments, quickly adding that this was not a view he shared.

The 40-minute ceremony was technically a regular session of the fourth congress of Russian People's Deputies, the highest legislative authority in the Russian Federation.

But the rich overlay of ceremony, ranging from a full choir performing the triumphant "Glory" chorus from Glinka's "Life for the Czar" to invocations of Russia's prerevolutionary heritage, seemed designed to give Yeltsin's new presidency the mantle of Russian heritage and legitimacy.

Sitting in the front row of the auditorium were Patriarch Aleksy II of the Russian Orthodox Church alongside Roman Catholic, Buddhist, Muslim and Jewish leaders, and leaders of the various national regions that make up the Russian Federation.

Communism took an active bashing in the proceedings, in keeping with Yeltsin's declared intention to pry the Communists from all Russian offices.

Instead of the Soviet anthem, a new Russian anthem was performed. The usual picture of Lenin was replaced by an outline of the Russian federated republic over its flag. The dominant theme in comments by Oleg Basilashvili, an actor speaking for the legislators and the patriarch, was the revival of Russia from communism.

Aleksy, facing Yeltsin across an open stage, said it was his duty to inform the republic's new president that he was assuming reponsibility "for a country that is gravely ill."

Ex-inmate testifies he saw camp commander shoot rabbi

STUTTGART, Germany (AP) — A former concentration camp inmate testified Wednesday that he saw Josef Schwammberger shoot and kill a rabbi on the Jewish holy day of Yom Kippur.

Schwammberger, a former SS lieutenant who commanded forced labor camps in World War II Poland, is on trial in Stuttgart Regional Court, accused of murdering at least 43 people and taking part in the deaths of 3,374 others. Most of those killed were Jewish.

Court files allege Schwammberger shot the rabbi for refusing to work on the Jewish holy day.

Max Millner, a native of Poland who now lives in Israel, told the court that at 16 he was sent with other Jewish youths to the Rozwadow labor camp near Krakow, Poland, in September 1942.

Millner, now 65, said when they arrived there was a table set up with containers in which prisoners were told to place their money and jewelry.

Schwammberger, who met the arrivals at the camp entrance, told them they would be shot if they kept any valuables, Millner said.

The labor camp commander quickly set an example and "shot a young boy before my eyes," Millner said.

Millner also described how on Yom Kippur in 1942, Schwammberger killed the rabbi before a group of prisoners.

The witness said Schwammberger shouted: "Mr. Rabbi Fraenkel, step forward."

When the prisoner moved to the front, Schwammberger said, "You, Rabbi Fraenkel, will be shot dead for sabotage," Millner testified.

He said the rabbi pleaded for his life and began praying, at which point Schwammberger fired two shots into him.

Schwammberger then ordered "away with the pile of dirt," Millner said. He said he and several others carried the rabbi away and buried him.

Chief Judge Herbert Luippold asked Millner whether he was certain that Schwammberger shot Fraenkel.

"Yes, yes, for sure," the witness replied.

Throughout Wednesday's two-hour court session, the 79-year-old Schwammberger listened impassively and said nothing. He has admitted running labor camps, but has denied killing anyone.

Schwammberger was arrested in his native Austria in 1945 and escaped to Argentina in 1948.

Jesse Jackson to meet lawsuit plaintiffs

■ Civil-rights leader, group to gather outside Dynagen plant today.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Jesse Jackson, civil-rights leader and two-time presidential candidate, will be placing himself amid a political and environmental controversy in Odessa at 4 p.m. today.

That's when he is scheduled to gather with plaintiffs in a class-action lawsuit against Dynagen just outside the Dynagen petrochemical plant off South Grandview Avenue just outside the Odessa city limits.

Several hundred people who live near the Dynagen plant have complained that the plant's waste by-products have polluted the air and caused them to suffer health problems.

Jackson

Dynagen officials and workers are to join in the gathering.

"Nobody will be marching, but he (Jackson) will speak," said Gene Collins, an Odessa insurance executive who is president of the Odessa chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

"He's a great negotiator," Collins said of Jackson. "Everybody respects him from all sides. And I think that will help get things back to normal around here. That's all we really want."

Collins and K.T. McLeaish, vice chairman of the Texans for Jackson's 1988 campaign for the Democratic Party nomination for U.S. president, persuaded Jackson to visit Odessa.

Jackson, founder of the Rainbow coaliation, is in Texas to meet with NAACP and Rainbow Coalition leaders and followers in "drumming up support" for the 1992 Democratic Party presidential nominee "whoever that may be," said Ms. McLeaish.

The Dynagen suit stemmed from citizens' complaints about obnoxious odors coming from the Dynagen plant. Subsequently, the Texas Air Control Board repeatedly cited Dynagen for violating the Texas Clean Air Act and TACB rules and regulations.

The Texas Water Commission, which, like the TACB, monitors Dynagen, had planned to join TACB in the 1989 lawsuit but withdrew from the case.

Dynagen produces synthetic rubber for General Tire & Rubber Co., which is the world's fourth largest tire maker.

Tim Gorman, Dynagen plant manager, earlier said that he expects the outdoor session with the 49-year-old Jackson to be "very, very professional.

"I'm looking forward to meeting him."

Gorman took over as Dynagen's plant manager last year to help rebuild the plant's image and to get the company moving in correcting air-pollution problems often tied to the plant's use of water in making synthetic rubber.

"We're not the bad, bad, bad guys we've been made out to be," Gorman protested.

Gorman said he is eager for Jackson to listen to "both sides of the story, because to every story, there are two sides. And we are a good employer."

Visiting nurses group reorganized to better care for older patients

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A change in the Visiting Nurse Service of the Permian Basin is expected to better accommodate the fastest growing segment of the population — the elderly.

Richardson

VNS, currently under the auspices of the Community and Senior Services (CSS), will fall into the hands of the Visiting Nurse Association (VNA) of Texas on Aug. 1, VNA and CSS officials announced Wednesday.

"It will better meet the needs of the community as we see those needs growing every day," said Royce Mitchell, president of CSS' board of directors.

The move will allow VNS to expand its client services of home-based health care and CSS to concentrate on nutritional and social service programs.

Although the nursing service will operate under the statewide organization, CSS will continue to work with the local program. In addition, the CSS board will act as an advisory committee to the VNA and at least two CSS board members are expected to serve on the VNA board.

"There will be no name or staff change, and no change in the quality of services although there will be an increase in service," Mitchell said.

Don Richardson, vice-president of human services for VNA, said that the state association will be able to provide additional dollars to the local nurse service for increased home health care in the area.

VNA and CSS are both non-profit organizations.

VNA, headquartered in Dallas, serves 30 counties in Texas. The association has served the state for 57 years.

By taking in the local nurse service, the VNA will help build a recognition of home health care and strive toward uniform services thoughout the state.

The Midland visiting nurses program was established in 1985 and covers 17 counties in the Permian Basin. The Medicare-certified program is expected to make approximately 26,000 home health care visits in 1991.

In addition to a variety of nurses, the VNS offers the service of other health care professionals including physical, occupational and speech therapists; medical social workers and home health aides.

Playwright Bryan Williams' comedy "Flyaway Home," winner of the McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Competition, will be produced Friday and Saturday at Theatre Midland as a readers' theater.

Playwright feels important

■ Winner of McLaren competition is enjoying the treatment Midlanders are showing him.

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

New Yorker Bryan Williams is enjoying his first taste of West Texas hospitality.

"I really like it. Of course, everyone is treating me like I'm somebody important as opposed to New York where I'm treated as one more New Yorker, which is to say very badly and rudely.

"But even more than that, it is great to get out of the city. I love the air. I love the climate. Everyone says you're not supposed to walk in the middle of the day here, but I love doing that," said Williams.

For Midland theatergoers, this soft-spoken Yankee seemingly miscast as a resident of the country's largest city, is someone important. His play, "Flyaway Home," was selected from 113 scripts submitted by playwrights from 26 states, as this year's winner in Midland Community Theatre's McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Competition.

The prize includes a cash stipend of $400 and a readers' theater production which will be presented at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Friday and Saturday. Williams will be honored at a public reception from 7 to 8 p.m. Friday and will be at both performances.

Council discusses CAF road

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

The city is hoping to work with the state to build a new road and make access to the Confederate Air Force a little easier.

The half-mile thoroughfare would connect Farm to Market Road 1788 to Wright Drive, which borders the southeastern side of the 85-acres of CAF property.

Councilmen discussed the road this week, with the city expected to present the proposal to CAF and Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation officials.

The proposal is an alteration of a plan already approved by the highway department in late May.

If the state approves funding the $480,000 road, it would be built in early 1992 and completed within six months, said Harvey Hansen, city traffic and engineering director.

Negotiations for right of way would begin soon after funding is approved, Hansen said.

Hearing scheduled in lawsuit filed by former firefighter

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A 142nd District Court Judge is scheduled to conduct a hearing Monday on a motion for a summary judgment in a former Midland firefighter's wrongful termination lawsuit against the city.

The motion, filed by the city last month, calls for the dismissal of claims by former firefighter Mark Wallace that city officials are unlawfully withholding workers' compensation benefits from him. The city claims that it is immune from such litigation because it is a governmental entity.

The city's motion apparently does not apply to sections of Wallace's lawsuit in which he claims he was wrongfully discharged from the fire department.

Attorney Terry Rhoads, who is representing the city in the lawsuit, could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

Wallace, 35, filed the lawsuit in September 1990, claiming he was dismissed in October 1989 because he told supervisors he'd been injured on the job and could no longer fight fires.

According to the lawsuit, Wallace was injured while fighting fires in May and August 1989.

He filed claims under the Texas Workers' Compensation Act after both incidents, the lawsuit states. Although the state Industrial Accident Board approved $15,000 in workers' compensation benefits following the August injury, the city has "delayed, denied, refused and failed to pay" the claim, the lawsuit states.

According to the lawsuit, Wallace obtained a doctor's letter after filing for workers' compensation that said he could no longer "work in places where there is smoke and dust present."

After seeing the letter, fire department officials "wrongfully discharged" Wallace, the lawsuit states.

The lawsuit implies that Wallace was willing to accept a

PBRPC favors Head Start grants

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Directors of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission (PBRPC) on Wednesday offered their "favorable comment" on $1.47 million in Head Start program grants for the Midland Independent School District, West Texas Opportunities, and Greater Opportunities of the Permian Basin.

The bulk of the grant applications — $1.26 million — was by the Greater Opportunities of the Permian Basin for Head Start programs in Odessa and Big Spring.

West Texas Opportunities is applying for $125,750 for programs in Andrews, Dawson, Martin, Gaines and Upton counties.

And MISD is seeking $80,000 for increasing the Head Start program to 175 from 170 school days, for expanding the Head Start program at West Early Childhood Center, and for serving two handicapped children.

The PBRPC acts as a clearinghouse for state and federal grant applications within the PBRPC's 17-county area.

Of the MISD request, $30,000 is for building renovations and start-up equipment costs at West Early Children Center. $10,303 is for increasing the Head Start school days by five. $2,615 is to serve two handicapped children, and $37,082 is to support a new classroom for 19 4-year-old children at the West center.

In Midland, 190 3- and 4-year-olds are served by the Head Start program. Of those, 152 are at Bunche Early Childhood Center, noted Jerry Tschauner, the PBRPC's director of planning, and 38 are at West. The addition of 19 4-year-old children would bring the count to 209.

Head Start was established in 1965 federal program for economically disadvantaged children and their families.

In Midland, the majority of Head Start children are Hispanic, "primarily because of the language problem,"

Rednecks firm in their beliefs and convictions

You know, it may turn out that rednecks are not a bad lot after all.

Todd

They do speak their mind, and, right or wrong, they are pretty clear about where they stand on just about any issue. Most often, it seems, they view life in definites: black or white. They don't vacillate.

Rednecks are proud to be rednecks just like some other folks, including some rich people, are mighty proud to be aligned with "oil-field trash." There's class at all levels. All.

There's bound to be a few things to learn from rednecks, who, generally, are Southern and rural in spirit if not in fact.

Rednecks don't waffle.

They are firm in their beliefs and convictions.

And if those stances are clouded with bias and prejudice, they will readily admit that. They don't seem too keen on the bright or dark sides of diplomacy. The dark side is the fine art of deceit, buttering up your neighbor before you string him up the old hanging tree and then take his wallet and pocket change.

The true-blue redneck confronts his adversary straightaway and tells him exactly how he sees the situation. He may or may not listen to any reply or retort.

The bright side of diplomacy is being obviously sugar-sweet and speaking in the hyperbole with the intent to flatter for personal gain.

Rednecks drive pickup trucks or, if not, plan on getting one, preferably with a stick shift.

They expect their spouses (some plain-speaking women are rednecks, too) to share their viewpoints or, if not, to keep quiet. Otherwise, one will ignore the other.

Rednecks, not too long on pontificating and debating the "what-ifs" and "could-bes," reckon that the Gospel is gospel and the Bible means exactly what it says. And, regardless of doctrine, when you die, you are going straightaway to Heaven or to Hell depending on your attitude at just about any given time.

Rednecks know where they stand. They'll tell you in a New York minute. But there's a flip side. If they get ticked off, they may not tell you a dog-gone thing. But you can tell what they are thinking by the look in their eyes, by the way they mutter, and by the way they walk off. That's as good of a mouthy answer. You know where they stand.

A redneck may not be too interested in "self-examination" — a hot thing among the self-improvement and how-to-get-rich city slickers. If the redneck changes too radically, he may lose his local-color flair — that quaint regionalism associated with the hard-core rednecks and not those imitation rednecks who act like they are something they're not.

The charm about the real rednecks is that they are who they are. No pretense.

There's something to say about that.

She was born March 5, 1919 in Cherokee County. She was a longtime Midland resident.

Survivors include her sister, Laura Jackson.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Mistrial

Staff Reports

Midland 238th District Court Judge John Hyde declared a mistrial in the case of a man who was accused of dragging a girl about two blocks with a car he was stealing from her, court officials said.

Edward Ray Johnson, age unavailable, faced robbery charges in connection with the incident. Jurors in 238th District Court failed to reach agreement on a verdict after about three and a half hours of deliberation Wednesday afternoon.

Johnson's trial began Monday.

According to investigators, a man fitting Johnson's description attempted to steal a 1977 Pontiac Firebird from the parking lot of the Chevron service station at 4401 W. Wadley Ave. around 9:25 p.m. last Oct. 31.

The car's owner, a 17-year-old girl, was inside the service station when she noticed a man getting into her car, in which she had left the keys, according to police reports.

When the girl tried to stop the man by reaching through the car window, the man rolled the window up and pinned her hands, reports said. The thief then drove two blocks down Wadley Avenue before the girl fell to the pavement.

The girl was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital, where she was treated and released.

Attempted assault

A 28-year-old woman was the victim of an attempted sexual assault while jogging Wednesday morning, police said.

According to police reports, the woman was jogging in the 5200 block of Preston Drive about 6:05 a.m. when a man in a car forced her into the vehicle at gunpoint.

The woman told police the man drove to North Loop 250 and proceeded east on Wadley Avenue.

After the man ordered the woman to remove her shirt, she jumped from the moving car injuring her knee. The woman then sought the help of a passing motorist.

The man was described as white, in his 20s, about 6 feet tall, 180 pounds with brown hair. He was wearing a ski mask and work clothes.

He was driving an older model green four-door car, police reports said.

Accident

Two men involved in a two-car accident five miles west of Midland Wednesday morning remained in Midland Memorial Hospital, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Larry Hummel, 29, of Monahans was in good condition with head injuries and Bobby Cunningham, 52, of Midland was in fair condition with a broken leg and arm.

According to reports, Cunningham, driving a 1985 Dodge pickup, was south on Farm to Market Road 1788 at about 7:10 a.m.

Hummel, driving a 1988 Ford pickup, proceeded from the stop sign at the intersection of Highway 191 into the path of Cunningham's pickup.

Judge calls inmates 'a bunch of queers'

BEAUMONT (AP) — A federal judge presiding over a civil rights trial involving overcrowding at the Jefferson County jail called homosexual inmates "a bunch of queers" from the bench Tuesday and later said he does not like homosexuals.

U.S. District Judge Sam B. Hall Jr. made the comments while questioning a witness who was testifying about segregating homosexual inmates from other prisoners in the jail.

Hall, a former U.S. Congressman who began serving on the federal bench in 1985, is presiding over the trial because U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher is on vacation. Hall presides in Marshall and Texarkana.

Hall made several comments about homosexuals when Jefferson County Sheriff's Lt. John Cassio testified in the trial of a lawsuit filed by David Todd Mayes, 19.

Mayes, a former Jefferson County jail inmate, is suing Jefferson County Sheriff Carl Griffith and two jail officials, alleging that his right to due process was violated because he awaited trial in an overcrowded jail.

Mayes is now serving two 10-year prison terms on drug-related convictions.

He said his Jefferson County jail cell was dirty, rat-infested and the plumbing sometimes didn't work. He also said he was placed in a cell where inmates engaged in homosexual activity.

Cassio testified that jail officials can segregate inmates according to their sexual preferences only if they request so.

Hall then asked Cassio whether an inmate would be placed with "all that other bunch of queers in that tank?"

"Just a whole bunch of partying going on (in the cell)?" Hall said to Cassio.

Hall later referred to homosexuals as "their kind." His comments were made before a jury of three women and four men.

Asked after court recessed whether he believed it was appropriate to make the comments about homosexuals, Hall said, "I don't like them."

He added he will instruct the jury to disregard all statements he made, which is a routine admonishment given by federal judges to jurors in any trial. He would not comment further.

Mayes' court-appointed attorney, David Starnes, also declined to comment.

State District Judge Jack Hampton of Dallas was censured in November 1989 for similar remarks.

Hampton was reprimanded by the State Commission on Judicial Conduct for saying he gave a lighter sentence to a convicted killer because the victims were "queers."

Records show Hampton said, "I don't care much for queers cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys. I've got a teen-age boy."

non-firefighting assignment but was terminated nevertheless.

In the lawsuit, Wallace claims that the fire department's actions caused him to "lose his truck, his home, and required him to pawn almost all of his worldly possessions in an effort to survive."

Wallace said this week that he now works as a boot shiner in a local night club.

His attorney, A.J. Pope of Midland, could not be reached for comment on Wednesday.

City officials, for their part, maintain that Wallace quit and was not fired.

A trial date for the lawsuit has not been set. A visiting judge is expected to conduct Monday's scheduled hearing because 142nd District Court Judge Pat Baskin is recovering from heart bypass surgery.

Tschauner said. Among other goals, Head Start is to help the children learn English preparatory to their entering school.

In Head Start's educational realm, the idea is to prepare the school so that they will be "on the same footing" with the majority of children.

To further enhance Head Start's educational role, noted Tschauner, a "big emphasis" has been placed on parental involvement with the Head Start program.

Head Start's "concerted effort" for family involvement helps the parents to understand the benefits and needs for good nutrition for health and education and encourages the parents to become Head Start aides.

Vote saves SSC funding

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Senate has defeated a move to kill the superconducting super collider, but the debate revealed hairline cracks in support for the huge science project in Texas.

In an important test of Senate sentiment, the chamber voted 62-37 on Wednesday to table a measure to cut funding for the $8.25 billion atom smasher. Senators instead approved $509 million to continue construction on the collider 35 miles southeast of Fort Worth in Ellis County.

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., who led the charge to kill it, said the nation can't afford an expensive new science project when it's grappling with a huge budget deficit.

He said support for the collider is rooted in pork-barrel politics as the Energy Department continues to parcel out lucrative collider-related research and construction grants in 43 states.

The vote, the first major test of Senate support, was a somewhat tepid victory for collider supporters in the Texas congressional delegation, who've seen their winning margins dwindle this year as more members of Congress question its cost.

CAF: City's proposal differs from highway agency's plan

(From 1B)

McGregor said the road, which would be built about 1,500 feet north of Sloan Field Boulevard, is needed to prevent traffic jams during CAF activities.

"We're trying to improve traffic access to the CAF," McGregor said.

Without the road, huge traffic jams could result when tens of thousands of people attend CAF air shows, he said.

Hansen said the right of way owners, SBC Corp., felt that moving the proposed road farther west would be better for future development of the surrounding area. SBC is formerly Scharbauer Brothers Co.

Charles Webb, assistant district engineer with the highway department, said the state likely would approve the city's newest proposal.

"We want to get the road finished as soon as we can," Webb said.

However, Mayor Carroll Thomas pointed out that the proposed road would pass by an unsightly dumping ground filled with concrete, wood and other construction debris.

Thomas suggested that the city beautify the 15-acre site before the road opens.

Hansen said cleaning the dumping ground, which contains debris from airport construction dating back to World War II, would be an extensive job.

"Who knows what's under there?" Hansen said.

Two locomotives derail, diesel fuel spills

WACO (AP) — Two of three locomotives pulling a Union Pacific freight train derailed Wednesday, spilling up to 3,000 gallons of diesel fuel, authorities said.

No injuries were reported from the derailment near downtown Waco.

The engines were pulling 106 cars from San Antonio to Fort Worth when the derailment took place.

"It happened at a switch," Tice said. "It's possible, given that, there was a problem with the switch."

Firefighters from the Waco Fire Department stayed at the scene until the locomotives were put back on the track. The diesel fuel leaked into the ground, fire officials said.

Food allergies may be cause of chronic ear infections in infants, children, study says

Children with chronic ear infections (otitis media) may be eating the wrong things. In fact, their infections may disappear when certain foods are slashed from their diets. That's a startling new finding by a Georgetown University allergy team, headed by Dr. Talal M. Nsouli.

Carper

Such chronic ear infections are relatively common among infants and children, can cause irreversible hearing loss and are often treated by surgery to drain fluid from the infected ear.

But in a breakthrough discovery, Dr. Nsouli has found that the real cause may be a food allergy.

When he tested 104 children with chronic ear infections, he found that 78 percent were sensitive to various foods, notably milk, wheat, eggs, peanuts and soy products.

Most important, the ear infections cleared up in 86 percent of the allergic children when they avoided such foods for 16 weeks. Eating the foods again brought back ear infections in nearly all the youngsters.

Dr. Nsouli urges that all children with ear infections and a hearing loss be checked by a food allergist. The results may rescue your child from expensive antibiotics, surgery and a life-long hearing handicap, he says.

Smoking away vitamin C

If you smoke, you probably need more vitamin C.

That's because smoking depletes so much vitamin C that smokers must consume more than 200 milligrams of the vitamin per day to stay even with non-smokers who get only 60 milligrams. Thus, about 57 percent of non-smokers get enough vitamin C but only 9 percent of smokers do.

So concludes Dr. Gordon Schectman at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, after comparing the diets and vitamin C blood levels of 11,582 adults. In a previous study, Dr. Schectman found that more than one-fourth of U.S. smokers suffer marginal deficiencies of vitamin C.

Recently, the recommended dietary allowance (RDA) for vitamin C was raised from the 60 mg recommended for the general population to 100 mg for smokers. But Dr. Schectman's new findings suggest this new RDA fails to protect smokers as well as the RDA protects non-smokers, and that many smokers may need supplements of vitamin C.

Too little fat?

It may seem like a perverse question when most people are trying to cut down on fatty foods. But some scientists are asking: Can you eat too little fat? Are there certain unknown dangers in extremely low-fat diets?

Maybe. A recent study by Dr. Moshe Shike, of New York's Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center, came up with a surprise finding when he put six hospital patients on a radically low-fat diet (1 percent of calories from fat), fed through a stomach tube. The low-fat diet caused two important measurements of colon cancer risk to actually increase instead of decline.

Indeed, cancer-risk markers were significantly higher on the 1 percent fat diet than on a typical American 36-percent-of calories-from-fat diet. "We had expected the opposite," said Dr. Shike, according to The Medical Tribune. "Going too long on a low-fat diet may be as bad as too long on a high-fat one."

However, nobody knows how much is too low. Dr. Shike guesses it's "below the 20 percent fat point." It should be noted that eating a regular diet of only 1 percent fat is virtually impossible. Even cutting back to 10 percent to 20 percent is extremely difficult for most Americans. Thus, the danger for most people may be largely theoretical.

Work burnout increases in U.S.

As benefits and staffs shrink with the economy, job stress grows

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

Do you come home from work physically or emotionally drained with little energy or enthusiasm left for dealing with family or personal matters?

Do you find it hard to get out of bed in the morning knowing what you face at work that day?

Do you often suffer from headaches, backaches, digestive upsets or insomnia that you trace to distress at work?

Have you noticed that you are drinking too much alcohol, smoking too many cigarettes, or becoming dependent on drugs that pep you up or help you sleep?

You may be among tens of millions of American workers who are suffering from job-related stress, a problem far more common than either workers or their employers realize.

At a time when many people are suffering the effects of unemployment, it may seem inappropriate to talk about stress on the job.

But as a recent national survey revealed, cutbacks in personnel and shrinking employee benefits are major contributors to what the survey researchers called a national epidemic of job stress.

Among a random sample of 600 full-time American workers in all types of jobs, 72 percent said they suffered from three or more stress-related conditions very often or somewhat often.

These include exhaustion, anger or anxiety, muscle pain, headaches, insomnia and gastrointestinal disorders. Some workers were often beset by as many as eight or more stress-related ailments.

Scott Knowlton, disability manager for Northwestern National Life Insurance Co., the Minneapolis-based company that sponsored the survey, said, "We are seeing twice the incidence of stress disabilities in our caseloads over just 10 years."

The growing problem of job stress also exacts a toll on employers by increasing job turnover and absenteeism and decreasing productivity.

Seven of 10 workers surveyed said that excessive job stress was cutting into their productivity, and nearly one in five said they missed one or more days of work last year because of workplace stress.

Fully one-third seriously considered quitting last year to reduce their stress, and 14 percent actually did quit or change jobs within the past two years because of workplace stress. Furthermore, 35 percent of new employees said they had left their previous jobs because of stress. Many of the stressed-out employees who stayed on the job presumably functioned at less than an ideal level.

A report on the survey quoted several people's expressions of concern. "I feel run down all the time," said a blue-collar worker from Wisconsin. "I can't concentrate. I make more mistakes on the job."

A professional from the same state said, "The only thing I can do is hang on where I am and suffer through it."

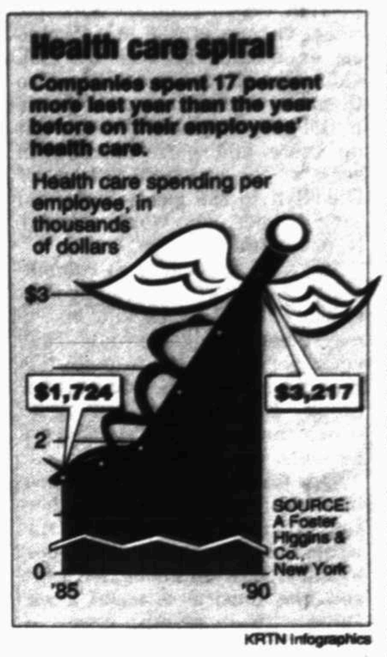

A business executive from California was even more blunt: "Burnout makes me feel tired, angry and fed up. I am less productive, and I have no job loyalty."

A dozen major causes of job stress were identified through the survey, which was conducted for the insurance company last January and February by N.K. Friedrichs & Associates, an independent research company in Minneapolis.

The surveyors interviewed a representative sample of 600 American full-time adult workers who are not self-employed. The survey had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus four percentage points.

The researchers said they were surprised to discover that a hiring freeze and forced time off without pay, common in the recession, did not significantly increase worker burnout.

But three of the four leading factors related to burnout involved changes typical of current economic conditions: a substantial reduction in employee benefits; merger, acquisition or a change of company ownership, and a reduction in the size of the work force or elimination of positions at the company.

KRTN Infographics

The leading identified cause of burnout — "little personal control allowed" in doing one's job — is prevalent at all times, irrespective of the economy.

Other factors associated with burnout and an increased likelihood of suffering stress-related illnesses included major departmental reorganizations and frequent requirements for overtime work.

More than half the workers suffering burnout said their employer did not have supportive work and family policies and did not have effective lines of communication with manangement.

Forty-nine percent of burned-out workers said their employer did not provide health insurance coverage for mental illness and chemical dependency and 39 percent complained of inflexible work schedules.

On a more personal level, more than half the workers rated as most stressful either having too much work to do or having to work with the public. Blue-collar workers were more likely than white-collar workers to cite their bosses as a major source of job stress.

The survey findings suggest some important messages to both employers and employees.

As many people have realized in rearing children, there are often situations in which parents, instead of dictating a course of action, could offer children a choice and an opportunity to decide for themselves.

This gives children an emerging sense of power and control over the course of their lives. Similar circumstances often prevail in the workplace, even for highly stereotyped jobs like assembly-line work. Workers can be permitted to at least participate in decisions that affect the quality of their work lives. They should know that management listens to them and takes them seriously.

The strong link between cuts in employee benefits and the occurrence of stress-related illness and burnout among workers suggests a need for a more humanitarian approach to employment. Nine of 10 workers said that health plans should cover treatment of stress-related illnesses, including emotional disorders and chemical dependency.

Indeed, based on 3,896 disability cases, the Northwestern National Life researchers calculated that the average cost of rehabilitating an employee disabled because of stress was $1,925.

If they are not rehabilitated, experience has shown, companies will need to hold in reserve an average of $73,270 or more to cover disability payments for employees disabled by job-related stress.

Workers in the stress survey also indicated a strong need for more consideration of family and personal needs in establishing work schedules and policies.

Especially now with both parents working outside the home in so many families, workers want more flexibility in their hours, paid or unpaid time off to help out at home, company assistance in child care and the opportunity to share jobs.

The survey showed that employers who offer stress-reduction or exercise programs have more employees with healthful habits.

Furthermore, those with more healthful habits reported higher productivity, lower turnover and less absenteeism.

Test tallies producers and reducers of stress in the workplace

N.Y. Times News Service

Northwestern National Life Insurance Co. developed this stress test to survey work-related stress levels.

Stress Producers (three points each):

1. Company has recently been purchased by another company.
2. Reductions in workforce or layoffs have occurred in the last year.
3. Department or employer has had a major reorganization.
4. Employees expect that the company will be sold or relocated.
5. Employee benefits were significantly cut recently.
6. Mandatory overtime is frequently required.
7. Employees have little control over how they do their work.
8. Consequences of making a mistake on the job are severe.
9. Workloads vary greatly.
10. Most work is machine paced or fast paced.
11. Employees must react quickly and accurately to changing conditions.
12. Personal conflicts on the job are commonplace.

(Two points each):

13. Few opportunities for advancement are available.
14. Employees deal with lots of red tape to get things done.
15. Staffing, money or technology is inadequate.
16. Pay is below the going rate.
17. Sick and vacation benefits are below the norm.
18. Employees are rotated between shifts.
19. New machines or ways of working have been introduced.
20. Noise or vibration levels are high or temperatures keep changing.
21. Employees are generally isolated from one another.
22. Performance of work units is generally below average.

(One point each)

23. There are few or no windows or natural lighting.
24. Employees have little or no privacy.
25. Meal breaks are unpredictable.
26. Work is either sedentary or physically exhausting.

Stress Reducers (minus three points each):

1. Management takes significant action to reduce stress.
2. Mental health benefits are provided.
3. Employer has formal employee communications program.
4. Employees are regularly given information on coping with stress.
5. Employees have current and clear job descriptions.
6. Management and employees talk openly with each other.
7. Employees are free to talk with one another.
8. Employer offers exercise and other stress-reduction classes.
9. Employees are recognized and rewarded for their contributions.

(Minus two points each):

10. Work rules are published and are the same for everyone.
11. Child care programs are available.
12. Employees can work flexible hours.
13. Perquisites are granted fairly based on level in the organization.
14. Employees have access to the technology they need.
15. Employees and management are trained in resolving conflicts.
16. Employees receive training when assigned new tasks.
17. Employer encourages work and personal support groups.
18. Employees have a place and time to relax during the workday.

(Minus one point each):

19. An employee assistance program is available.
20. Each employee's work space is not crowded.
21. Employees can put up personal items in their work areas.
22. Management appreciates humor in the workplace.
23. Programs for care of the elderly are available.

Scoring — Subtract total points for stress reducers from total points for stress producers. The result may range from minus 50 points for no stress to 60 points for extremely high stress.

WILLIAMS: Winning comedy is 'Flyaway Home'

(From 1B)

Midlanders "much more sophisticated" than he expected. "It seems like it would be a very civilized place to live."

The playwright has been spending his evenings watching the local cast rehearse his play.

"It's a very ambitious thing that they are doing," Williams said of the rehearsals. "I've discovered that there's a lot of physical and visual humor in the play, which is a real challenge when people have scripts in hand.

"In a limited rehearsal time, I hope that's not going to be a problem. I don't think it will. The actors and the director seem to be on the right track, and they seem to know how to make it work."

"Flyaway Home" is Williams' first comedy. In the past, he has written "rather serious plays" which have "lots of comedy because I love the sound of laughter in the theater, but essentially I'm a serious person."

The comedy centers around a middle-aged couple who have seen their kids successfully graduate from college and have decided it's safe to have a civilized adult divorce so they can "get on with their lives," Williams said. "But their plans for divorce are complicated when the kids decide to move back home."

A Juilliard-trained musician, Williams has written book, music and or lyrics for numerous shows, including "Occupation: Troubadour," a holiday musical originally commissioned by the New York Shakespeare Festival.

"It's now called 'Christmas Troubadour,' and it's a little urban fable for Christmastime about a young man with a guitar and a Santa suit who visits the lonely inhabitants of a diner Christmas Eve and he brings out the music in their lives. He discovers the song in each of them."

He also set Shakespeare's words to music in a musical adaptation of "Love's Labour Lost" for the Folger Theatre in Washington, D.C. He collaborated on this project with David Vando. Director for the production was Pat Bakman.

"It was ahead of its time because it was much more music than was usual for a musical in those days. It was a very ambitious project, and I think we did a very good job on it."

Among his fondest memories are those he acquired while writing three rock scores for the Everyman Company which played the Brooklyn Academy of Music, New York's Heckscher Theatre, the Lincoln Center Out-of-Doors Festival and the streets and avenues of Brooklyn.

"That was a wonderful life experience for me as well as a theatrical experience because we took kids right off the street. We gave them the discipline and the belief in the project that they would get up there and perform right in some of the roughest sections of Brooklyn to the gangs there and their friends, who would originally make fun of them.

"Because they were so committed to the project, eventually they recruited a lot of the kids on the way down into the group. They could very well have wound up in jail instead of in our theater group. It was very exciting to watch them develop real concern for each other."

This fall Players Press will publish a children's musical, "Albert the Machine," which Williams wrote in collaboration with Robert Kenney. Written about five years ago, the musical is about a machine with an identity crisis.

"In the era of computers, it seems to intrigue people. The cast is flexible — anywhere from 3 characters to 35, so we think it will have a wide market."

In addition, Williams is the author of "In This Fallen City," produced off-Broadway by Circle Repertory Company after being developed at the O'Neill National Playwrights Conference.

The play was made into a TV movie called "Night of Courage," starring Barnard Hughes, Geraldine Fitzgerald and Daniel Hugh Kelly.

Recently, his one-character play, "Playing Combs," was a John Gassner Competition winner and was shown at the 1990 New England Theatre Conference.

"Icarus Variations," which tells the story of a '60s fugitive who re-emerges from the underground, was developed as a joint venture by Circle Repertory and the Play Company and won the 1989 Nesburn Award, which is second prize in the Julie Harris Competition.

"That's a play I'm trying to sell right now. Of all the plays I have written, it is the one I'm most desperate to see on stage. It's had several readings and a wonderful stage reading."

Through the years, Williams has been the musical director for a number of shows.

"I began as a musician," said Williams, who studied music for 16 to 17 years. "Also I went to Juilliard at the same time I went to high school. I still have nightmares about going into my lesson and not having practiced."

Area man says police beat him

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A police investigation was launched Wednesday into a city custodian's allegation that he was beaten by officers after being arrested last week on an aggravated assault charge.

Roger Brown, 48, alleges he sustained two broken ribs plus injuries to his eyes and legs while being arrested July 1 in the shooting of his brother.

"He (an officer) said, 'Put your hands up,' " Brown told KGKL radio. "So I raised it up and they thought I was trying to fight so one hit me with the stick.

"After they was handcuffing me they still was hitting me with the sticks," he added.

Brown said he was hit repeatedly with a police nightstick and knocked into a bush, where he was poked in the eyes by branches.

Sgt. Russell Smith, a police spokesman, said Wednesday that two internal affairs investigators had been assigned to look into Brown's allegations.

"We've never received a formal complaint," Smith said. "We are just responding to this."

Smith said offense reports filed by the arresting officers did not indicate excessive force was used.

Officer Amy Willeke wrote that Brown began to swing at officers after one hand was cuffed.

Pickwicks to present 'Li'l Abner'

Staff Report

The musical "Li'l Abner" plays at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., this weekend as the Pickwick Players bring Dogpatch to life.

The musical will be on stage in Davis Theatre One at 1:30 p.m. Thursday through Saturday. In addition, the production will be on stage at 8 p.m. Friday. All performance are being staged by the Pickwick Players, Midland Community Theatre's youth performing troupe.

" 'Li'l Abner' is a little bit different than most of our shows in that it's aimed at the complete family and not just at children," said director Rene Brister Chambers. "It's a show where the parents can enjoy it equally as much as the kids."

In the musical the survival of Dogpatch is in question.

Tickets to "Li'l Abner" are $4, with one adult admitted free with a child aged 12 or under. For reservations call 682-4111.

"That makes it a real entertainment bargain," Ms. Chambers said. "I think everyone will enjoy it. There's a lot of 'Li'l Abner humor the adults will get that the kids won't understand. And, of course, there's a lot that the kids will enjoy, too."

In addition to the musical on stage, the Pickwicks are staging a "Dogpatch Jubilee, Thursday through Saturday from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. The Jubilee will be a carnival with games, activities, food and costumed characters providing spontaneous entertainment.

Increase in sales tax likely

■ Budget writers think raising sales tax by as much as one-half cent will be needed.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Budget-writing legislators said Wednesday a sales tax increase of as much as one-half cent may be needed to bridge a revenue shortfall that is larger than once thought.

Since January, budget experts have reported the state would fall $4.6 billion to $4.8 billion short of revenue to fund the current level of services during the 1992-93 budget period.

But lawmakers preparing for Monday's special legislative session say continuing the current level of services — in which Texas ranks near the bottom — is not enough.

Rep. Jim Rudd, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said the revenue shortfall is more like $6 billion. His committee vice chairman, Ric Williamson, D-Weatherford, said that figure may be closer to $7 billion.

"We always spend more than the current level of services because we choose to put in new programs," said Rudd, D-Brownfield.

For instance, he said, the need for more prisons and a state employee pay raise ups the ante.

To bridge the widening gap, Rudd said, "It wouldn't surprise me if you saw a quarter of a cent, or a half-cent," increase in the sales tax.

Republican Party officials have challenged Democratic leaders to prove the need for a tax increase, but a GOP lawmaker said, "Anyone who says we don't need a tax increase doesn't know what they are talking about."

Rep. Jack Vowell of El Paso, a member of the appropriations panel, added that he believes a state income tax would produce the necessary revenue, but Republican Rep. John Smithee of Amarillo filed a proposed constitutional amendment to ban such a levy.

Rudd said he believes the Legislature will adopt about $3 billion worth of cost-savings recommendations made by Comptroller John Sharp.

Replacing the current business franchise tax with a tax on profits minus deductions for major expenses would produce another $1 billion. Add in the possibility of a state lottery — estimates range it would yield $450 million to $600 million — and lawmakers are still facing more than a billion-dollar hole, Rudd said.

Despite a blue-ribbon task force recommendation to establish a state income tax, legislative leaders concede passage would be political suicide. That leaves a sales tax increase as the likely route.

The current state sales tax levy is 6.25 cents per $1, and the fifth highest in the nation. The sales tax is regarded by many tax experts as one of the most unfair levies because it hits the poor harder than the rich.

Meanwhile, Sharp's proposed shake up of state government continued to get slammed during legislative hearings.

University of Texas officials said the school would have to lay off 500 faculty and staff if Sharp's recommendations on higher education became law.

The comptroller's proposal to merge all state human service agencies was also criticized by a self-styled child protective group.

Phil Strickland, chairman of CARE, questioned whether such an agency would be efficient.

Sharp tried to fend off critics by issuing a news release praising Marc Stanley of Dallas, who as chairman of the Texas Public Finance Authority agreed with Sharp that the panel should be abolished .

"Unlike some other bureaucrats, Marc is not spending time justifying his own existence. He's looking to improve state services," Sharp said.

Men forge Saddam's signature

DALLAS (AP) — Spelling and factual accuracy count, especially when dealing with Federal Reserve authorities.

Early this week, four men tried to dupe the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas into certifying that they were entitled to $33 billion belonging to Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein. On Monday, they presented bank officials an international certificate supposedly drawn on the bank in the name of Saddam, Secret Service officials said.

Bewildered officials faxed a copy of the note to the U.S. Treasury Department and experts examined its authenticity.

The misspelling of Saddam as "Sadam" tipped off authorities that the signature was a fake. Also, the note was dated 1967 and signed by Treasury Secretary James Baker. Baker, now the secretary of state, was treasury secretary from 1985 to 1988.

Three of the men, from Texas and California, were arrested and surrendered to authorities documents that purported to represent $166 trillion in assets belonging to Manuel Noriega, Idi Amin and Fidel Castro, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Melsheimer. The three men were charged with trying to pass a forged security.

The fourth man, from South Carolina, was charged with conspiring to defraud.

The men were identified as Lewis Willburn Driver, 53, of Lamesa, Texas; Tommy Lee Buckley, 44, of Childress, Texas; Leroy Allison Mickey, 27, of Redwood City, Calif.; and Marvin Ray Ruffin, 53, of Columbia, S.C.

STATE IN BRIEF

■ Kidnapped baby found

FORT WORTH — After receiving a tip Wednesday night, FBI agents recovered a baby taken from a hospital earlier in the day from a first-time mother by a woman posing as a photographer.

The baby, who was recovered about 8 p.m. in Arlington, 15 miles east of Fort Worth, appeared to be healthy and in good condition, the FBI said.

The 2-day-old girl, kidnapped at John Peter Smith Hospital in Fort Worth Wednesday morning, was quickly reunited with her mother, officials said.

"Two suspects are being interviewed with anticipated charges by the Tarrant County district attorney expected," an FBI spokesman said Wednesday night.

The mother, 19-year-old Tammy Hagerman, issued a tearful public plea Wednesday afternoon for the safe return of her child, Felicia Nicole.

"I want nothing to happen to her. It's tearing me apart inside. I miss her so much. I wish that lady can find it in her heart to bring my baby back, please," said Ms. Hagerman, who is single and unemployed.

■ Mexican seeks asylum

EL PASO — A former Mexican mayor seeking asylum in the United States testified that his family's terror began after the election of Chihuahua Gov. Fernando Baeza Melendez.

Ernesto Poblano, who walked across the border in January 1989, in testifying in his immigration hearing, said the nightmare began for him and his family immediately after Baeza became governor.

Poblano said a month after Baeza's election 30 armed federal judicial police forced their way into his home and tormented him and his wife for four hours. Poblano said he confessed to dealing in drugs when a police commander threatened to kill his family.

He was imprisoned five months on drug charges that he says were bogus.

Poblano crossed into the United States to seek asylum in 1989.

■ Spill agency gets head

AUSTIN — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro announced that Tim McKinna, a 30-year Coast Guard veteran, has been hired as director of the state's oil-spill prevention and response program.

McKinna for the past year and a half has been program coordinator and training specialist at Texas A&M University's Oil Spill Control School in Galveston.

From 1988 to 1990, he was associate director of the National Spill Control School at Corpus Christi State University.

The state's oil-spill program was created by a 1991 law. The General Land Office was put in charge of the program, which will be directed by McKinna from Austin.

The law also would create a $25 million fund financed by a 2-cent per barrel fee on crude oil moving through Texas waters.

■ Man charged in wreck

AMARILLO — A state district judge set a $1,500 bond Wednesday for an Etter man accused of driving his car across a median and striking a church van head on, injuring 11 people.

Rudy Gonzales, 27, was charged with a felony in connection with the hit-and-run accident Monday on U.S. 287 in Amarillo. Gonzales, who was accused of fleeing the scene, was charged with failure to stop and render aid to those hurt in the accident.

The Dallas van carried 11 people from the Northwest New Bible Church, who were on their way to Creed, Colo., for a backpacking trip. All 11 occupants of the van were taken to a hospital, where four people remained Wednesday in satisfactory condition.

■ Wright picture unveiled

WASHINGTON — Two years after Jim Wright was forced to resign as speaker of the House, he returned to the Capitol Wednesday for the unveiling of his portrait and praise for his leadership.

"I know how that pancake feels when you pour the syrup all over it," Wright said after hearing Speaker Thomas S. Foley, House Minority Leader Bob Michel and Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks describe his career and his commitment to the nation.

"All of us in this city, and in this country, owe him a debt of gratitude for the principals he stood by, for the public service he gave," said Foley, D-Wash.

Wright, a Democrat from Fort Worth who served in Congress for 34 years, was in his second year as speaker when he resigned in 1989 during an ethics investigation of his personal finances.

■ Term limits bill filed

AUSTIN — Sen. David Sibley, R-Waco, has filed a bill that would limit how long Texas politicians could hold offices in the executive branch or Legislature.

Sibley's bill, filed Wednesday in advance of Monday's special session, would limit executive branch officeholders to two terms and House and Senate members to 12 years.

Special session agendas are limited by the governor. Gov. Ann Richards has called the upcoming session to write a state budget.

Sibley, who saw a similar bill die in committee during the regular session, said the public favors term limits.

"Across the state, people are lining up in support of term limitations and it's high time our leaders allowed them to vote on this much-needed reform," he said.

■ Agency head named

AUSTIN — Attorney General Dan Morales said Wednesday he has hired Travis County Tax Assessor-Collector Cecelia Burke as director of Child Support Enforcement, the agency's largest division with 1,400 employees.

Morales pledged that child support collection efforts, which now bring in $20 million to $25 million a month, would be a top agenda item.

Ms. Burke, president of the Tax Assessor-Collector's Association of Texas in 1989-90, has served as chief revenue officer for Travis County since 1985, when she was appointed to the job.

She was elected to a two-year term in 1986 and a four-year term in 1988.

She said she would assume her state position Aug. 5, and county commissioners would appoint her replacement as assessor-collector.

Police officer killed by man who was holding a hostage

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — A police officer was shot to death Wednesday, apparently by a former mental patient who barricaded himself inside a house with an elderly female hostage.

Authorities said Marvin Harris, 40, fatally shot officer Jeff Ginn, 29, after the patrolman responded to a disturbance call in a quiet west Pasadena neighborhood.

During the confrontation, which occurred about 2 p.m., Harris raised a high-powered rifle and fired eight or nine shots, said Scott Tibbetts, who did not see the shots fired at Ginn.

Ginn was hit twice — once in the chest and once in the temple. He was taken by helicopter to Hermann Hospital, where he died about 3 p.m., less than a half hour after his arrival, said hospital spokeswoman Sue Vaughn.

"I heard the boom," said witness Rick Nichols. "I looked to one side, I saw the officer laying there and then he (the gunman) turned the gun on us."

Nichols said two bullets hit his Houston Lighting & Power Co. truck, but he escaped injury.

The standoff continued Wednesday night, as authorities surrounded the house where Harris remained with his hostage, armed with the rifle and the fallen officer's revolver, police said.

Authorities were negotiating with Harris by telephone, trying to talk him out of the house, said officer J.L. Amos.

Police said Harris had requested the FBI on the scene so he could turn himself in to them. Pasadena SWAT team negotiators also were on site.

Authorities said they denied a request by Harris for an unarmed police officer to enter the house.

Tibbetts said after Harris shot the officer near his home, he entered a nearby house, exited with a woman then ran to a third house further down the block, where he remained at 8 p.m. CDT.

The hostage was believed to be in her 70s, Amos said.

"We were moving the boat and we heard like fireworks going off. I looked up and saw a man with a rifle," Tibbetts said.

After he notified authorities of the shooting, Tibbetts said, "It wasn't 20 seconds and this place filled up with officers."

Neighbors said Harris had a history of mental problems and had barricaded himself in his home a year earlier after firing shots in the neighborhood.

"He just shot at the house and the neighborhood and they had to get his mother out there to talk him out," neighbor Lee Glass said of the earlier incident.

Then, as on Wednesday, authorities were called to the scene and tried to talk Harris out of the house.

"Less than an hour later he was back walking into his house as we were driving by and here they had the SWAT team and about 900 cops out there all day before that," Glass said.

Ginn is survived by a wife and two daughters, aged 2 and 5.

"The best comment you can make is that he was a good officer. When an officer hears that ... it means a lot," said Officer Ronnie Johnson.

The last time a Pasadena police officer was killed in the line of duty was while directing traffic in 1943. Pasadena is adjacent to Houston's southeast side.

Murderer convicted of kidnapping

DALLAS (AP) — Convicted killer Genaro Ruiz Camacho and one of his employees have been convicted of kidnapping a woman and her 3-year-old son, who were later killed.

A federal jury, after deliberating more than four hours Tuesday, found Camacho, 36, and Juan Jackson, 27, guilty of abducting Evellyn Banks, 31, and her son Andre in May 1988.

Camacho, Jackson and two other men had stopped by Banks' Pleasant Grove house supposedly to collect a drug debt.

Both men could receive life sentences without parole. They are scheduled to be sentenced Sept. 17 by U.S. District Judge Joe Fish.

Camacho's attorney, James Murphy, said he would file a motion for a new trial based on new evidence related to the trial. He said some of the evidence was found as late as Monday night, but wouldn't elaborate.

Last year, Camacho, was sentenced to death for killing David Wilburn, who had walked into the Pleasant Grove house during the kidnapping. Camacho sat calmly as he heard his conviction on four counts, including conspiracy, kidnapping and using a firearm during a violent crime.

"I'm glad the jury convicted him," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Paul Macaluso, who prosecuted the case. "He's a dangerous man. He did horrible, brutal things to at least four people, including a child."

Healthy tan can come from a bottle

■ Rather than baking their skin in the sun, many people are chosing to tan healthy from a selection of designer self-tanning lotions that are greatly improved from the orange-tan look of yesterday.

By Alexa Boer
N.Y. Times News Service

Remember that first bottle of QT? It promised a healthy, golden tan. It delivered an orange shade of ugly that made your friends wonder if you'd been eating too many carrots.

One application was usually enough to send you back into the sun. But that was when a tan was considered healthy. Before anyone would think of using a 15-plus sunscreen. Before dermatologists — and sunscreen manufacturers — started preaching about the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays and their deadly and unattractive side effects, cancer and wrinkles.

But the alternative is equally unattractive: summertime pallor. Now, for people who limit their time in the sun, there's good news:

The new self-tanners work. They turn skin darker, and most of them even look reasonably natural.

Two male and five female volunteers tested six of the new creams, from the inexpensive formulas to the more expensive.

Designer brands were generally preferred and may be worth the investment. However, our results varied dramatically depending on skin type and on underlying tone, which ranged from pink to yellow. Sunless tanners worked best on medium color skin that tanned easily.

CLINIQUE, LANCOME and Estee Lauder, which claim to have eliminated the orange tone "one often sees with inferior products," did generate a pinker, more natural-looking tan.

The only real loser was Bain de Soleil. Although it produced a reasonable color, it smelled like "chemicals that shouldn't touch your skin" or "paint." Three people reported streaking or unevenness.

Lancome's light fragrance smelled the most pleasant and was the favorite choice of several fair people.

But be warned — the more you apply, the darker you will become. And although the directions say a tan will appear in three hours, it took more like six to eight hours to see real results.

The active ingredient in tanning cream is a chemical called dihydroxyacetone, or DHA, which reacts with amino acids in the top layer of skin to produce a brown color. It's been approved by the FDA since 1973 and dermatologists say it is safe. Sunless tanners are different from bronzers, which can be washed off, and provide no protection from the sun unless they contain sunscreen.

CHANGING THE concentration of DHA and ingredients in the base lotion has made all the difference in creating a more natural color. When dermatologist Warwick Morison from Johns Hopkins University first saw the improved colors, he thought a new chemical had been introduced. "The colors are much more realistic, but I still think that you can pick it out from a real tan."

These improvements have coincided with increasing concerns about the aging effects of the sun and the risk of skin cancer, making self-tanning cream one of the hottest selling items for companies such as Clinique, Lancome and Estee Lauder.

But just like a real tan, it does take some effort. Since DHA only changes the color of the top layer of skin, chemical tans fade as your skin naturally peels off, just like a real tan.

Our "tans" faded considerably after the first day, but some color remained up to six days later. The manufacturers recommend reapplying the creams at least every three days, which could become expensive, since each bottle costs between $7 and $17 and contains four all-body applications.

IT IS ALSO time-consuming. For the 30 minutes immediately after application, tanners should not touch furniture or clothing because they could stain it. For the all- body tanner, this could mean standing around nude for a long time, especially in the winter.

How can you know what will give you the best color? Our results were too varied to declare a winner. Different skin types just reacted too differently to the products. So pool resources with your friends, buy some of the products that sound appealing, have some laughs and find out what works best for you.

Fashion Awards American Style finalists annouced

DALLAS — The Dallas Apparel Mart and American Airlines announced finalists for the 16th Annual Dallas Fashion Awards American Style. The program recognizes leaders in the fashion industry each year for outstanding reatail performance, design innovation and quality workmanship.

Retailers at the Dallas Holiday/Resort Women's and Children's Apparel Market in August vote on one finalist in each of the nine fashion categories. The 1991 Dallas Fashion Awards finalists are:

- Accessories — Carolee Designs, Erwin Pearl Jewerly and Paloma Picasso.
- Bridal and Formal — Moonlight Bridal, Mori Lee and Victor Costa.
- Childrenswear — Basic Elements, Eagle's Eye and Mousefeathers.
- Designer Dresses — Bill Blass, Nicole Miller and U.M.I.
- Designer Sportswear — Dana Buchman, Virani and Kors.
- Dresses — Ann Tobias, Leslie Fay and Gillian.
- Lifestyle — Betsey Johnson, Gottex and Josie Natori.
- Special Sizes — Grace Tone Fashions, I.B. Diffusion and Spencer Alexis Dresses.
- Sportswear — Alfred Dunner, Regina Porter and Russ.

Nominees were selected by a special committe of leaders in the fashion industry, including department and specialty stores, broadcast and print media and apparel buying offices. Retailers from across the country will cast their ballots in Dallas during the August apparel market and attend the awards celebration in October.

Winning resources of this retailer choice award and celebrity honorees will be announced in New York City to the industry and fashion press Sept. 30. The 1991 Awards Gala will take place Oct. 26 at the Dallas Apparel Mart during its Spring women's and children's market. Nominating committee members will be revealed at that time.

Some of last year's winners include Black Tie by Oleg Cassini, Karen Kane, Eleanore P. Brenner and Jessica McClintock.

The Dallas Fashion Awards American Style were first presented in 1976 as an opportunity for retailors to voice their opinions on the most innovative, successful lines in their stores. The signed, limited edition "Femme" statues were designed by renowned San Francisco artist C.B. Johnson.

Midland teen competes in Miss 1992 — Texas World

Staff Report

Jennifer Michele Nichols

Jennifer Michele Nichols, 18, of Midland was selected to represent the Tall City as Miss Midland-Odessa in the Miss 1992 — Texas World in San Antonio.

Miss Nichols is a 1991 graduate of Midland High School where she was National Honor Society sweetheart, a Student Council representative, a baseball team bat girl, Close Up president and a member of Catoico Court. She also was selected to Who's Who Among Students in American High Schools, Scholastic All-American and to attend the Texas Blue Bonnet Girls State. In 1990, Miss Nichols was crowned Miss West Texas T.E.E.N. She plans to attend the University of Texas at Austin in the fall.

Miss Nichols is the daughter of Jeanne Nichols of Midland and Joe R. Nichols of Austin.

Miss Nichols traveled to the Alamo City Saturday to begin 10 days of activities, rehearsal and competition for the title. Preliminary pageant activities will be Saturday evening. Final competition will be Monday at the San Antonio Municipal Auditorium. The statewide telecast will be regionally aired at 8 p.m. Monday on KMID-TV, channel 2.

Contestants will compete in personal interview, swimsuit and evening gown presentation, where the judges will be looking for the individual who posses physical, mental, emotional and spiritual qualities. All categories bear equal weight on the final decision.

The winner of the pageant will receive thousands of dollars in cash and prizes and the opportunity to compete in the Miss 1992 — World America Pageant in spring 1992.

DEAR ABBY

Young job searchers may need new attitude

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: It's summer vacation time, and many high school graduates probably are still out looking for jobs. Two or three years ago, you published some good advice for young people on how to dress, how to act and what to say when applying for a job. I cut it out to save, and now I can't find it. I have a grandson I want to send it to. Please print it again. It could help me — and a lot of young people. Thank you. — DULUTH GRANDPARENT

Van Buren

DEAR GRANDPARENT: The advice to which you refer first appeared in William Raspberry's column. He quoted Karen Rak, a high school English teacher in Strongsville, Ohio, who composed a letter from an employer to let youthful job seekers see themselves as they are seen. I am pleased to print it again. It deserves as much exposure as it can get:

"DEAR KID: Today you came to me for a job. From the look of your shoulders as you walked out, I suspect you've been turned down before, and maybe you believe by now that kids your age can't find jobs.

"But I hired a teen-ager today. You saw him. What was so special about him? Not experience; neither of you had any. Attitude, son. A-T-T-I-T-U-D-E. He did his best to impress me. That is where he edged you out.

"He wasn't dressed like Easter Sunday, but then that wasn't necessary. His clothes were clean, and he had gotten a haircut. He filled out the application form neatly and completely. He did not ask to borrow a pen. He carried his Social Security card, had basic identification and did not ask, 'What's a reference?'

"He didn't start to chew gum or smoke while being interviewed. He didn't keep looking at his watch, giving me the impression that he had something more important to do.

"He took the time to find out how we 'operate' here and what his day-to-day tasks would be. I think he'll keep his eyes open and work for me like he'd work for himself.

"He was willing to start at that point where I could afford to pay. Someday, perhaps, he'll get to the point where he'll have more authority over others and a better paycheck.

"You know, kid, men have always had to get a job like you get a girl: case the situation, wear a clean shirt and try to appear reasonably willing.

"Maybe jobs aren't as plentiful right now, but there are jobs. You may not believe it, but all around you employers are looking for young men and women smart enough to go after a job in the old-fashioned way.

"If you have even the vaguest idea of what I'm trying to say, let it show the next time you ask for a job. You will be head and shoulders above the rest.

"For both our sakes, get eager, will you? — THE BOSS"

DEAR ABBY: I'm getting married this fall, and I am faced with a difficult question. I am having a large formal wedding, but I do not know who should walk me down the aisle. My father died when I was very young, and I am not really close to any other male family members.

Would it be appropriate for my mother to walk me down the aisle? If not, whom would you recommend? — K.K. IN BOULDER, COLO.

DEAR K.K.: Of course your mother may walk you down the aisle. Or you might consider walking halfway down the aisle alone — the groom could meet you in the middle, and together you could make the trek to the altar.

Products help put on prettier face

N.Y. Times News Service

You buy a vivid red lipstick and later decide the color is too dark for you. Now, using one of a new group of cosmetics, you can make the lipstick more to your liking.

For example, apply a coat of a matte white lipstick called Silicon Valley over or under your red lipstick and the red softens into a deep pink.

If an eye shadow looks too intense for day wear, use it with a charcoal powder called Disc to soften it and give it a smoky look.

Silicon Valley and Disc are two of the 20 new products — nine eye shadows, six lipsticks, and five cheek powders — called the Transformers, made by Ultima II.

The eye shadows are $11.50, cheek colors $16, and lipsticks $12 and $12.50.

Something fishy seen in summer styles

By Francine Parnes

Summer fashion is awash in items with a Neptune touch, ranging from fish-print fabric to octupus earrings.

"There's certainly strong consumer interest in ecology," says Lavelle Olexa, senior vice president of fashion merchandising at Lord & Taylor. "Fashions reflecting the sea, florals and foliage are an offshoot of this interest."

At beach or poolside, one of the most seaworthy looks is Karla Colletto's racy black tank suit with a plunging back and a pave of real clamshells. It's about $450 at Everything But Water, a swimwear store with 22 locations nationwide. Matching black and gold metallic net cover-up with clamshells is about $276.

"Women find the suit attractive because here's a traditional item — seashells — on a not-so-traditional suit," says Monica Acuna of Palm Desert, Calif., a regional manager for Everything But Water.

More traditional is Calvin Klein's navy T-back maillot, printed with natural-color shells. It's $72 at Lord & Taylor. Baja Blue makes a black tank suit with a starfish print in orange, lime, pink or silver. It's $49 at Just Add Water swimwear shops in Dallas and Houston.

After the swim, step into La Blanca's white cotton short-sleeved jumpsuit. It has a large gold metallic shell embroidered across the front, $79 at Everything But Water.

Other afternoon options: a multicolor seashell-print silk shirt by Timney & Fowler, $190 at Neiman Marcus; Hey Max's oversized white cotton shirt with fish of assorted shapes and colors, $74 at Saks, and Tathena's washed-silk sleeveless starfish tank top in salmon or sea green, $48 at Lord & Taylor.

For the conservation-minded, Saks offers cotton T-shirts with prints of humpback whales or dolphins, $24 each.

After five, step out in an Albert Nipon sequinned chemise in a tropical fish print on crepe de chine, about $460 at Lord & Taylor, Saks and Montaldo's in Denver and other cities. A suit with the same print is about $590 at Neiman Marcus, Lord & Taylor and Robinson's.

If only the best Italian couture will do, go for Valentino's sequinned sleeveless mock turtleneck. It's $5,465 in navy, pink and gold with real shells and bits of coral scattered about. Valentino also offers a coral-beaded strapless catsuit with shells under a one-shoulder ankle-length red toga, $10,350. Or try his white crepe beaded bolero jacket bordered with clusters of seashells, $11,980. It goes over a short white crepe strapless dress, $2,185. All are sold at the Valentino boutique in Beverly Hills.

Add Laykin et Cie's 18-karat gold shrimp earrings, $1,900 at I. Magnin, and you won't have to fish for compliments.

Less expensive accessories at I. Magnin include classic goldtone shell earrings, $30; a starfish brooch in matte goldtone with white beads, $55; Maria and Jose Berrera's octopus and barnacle earrings in goldtone with pink or white, $250, and a goldtone snail-shell necklace, $55.

Jewelry designer Foree Hunsicker has a collection dedicated to the sea. A chunky necklace in sterling silver, pearl and mother-of-pearl shells with a woman on a sea horse is about $280.

"It looks below the sea for sure," says Hunsicker. "It's a timeless, calming look from nature."

AT WIT'S END

Communication might transform related strangers into families

By Erma Bombeck

For a nation that has a reputation for state-of-the-art communication, we don't do too well with our children. And they don't know much about their parents.

Bombeck

From ages 12 to 18, the gap just seems to widen. We may share the same house, the same tube of toothpaste and the same TV tuner, but when it comes right down to it, each of us knows more about Cher than we know about one another.

What do kids know about their parents? Did their father ever have a beard? Does he have any scars, and if he does, how did he get them? Oh sure, they know how much he paid for his first car and how old their mother was before she was allowed to pierce her ears, because they told them. But what do they worry about? Laugh about? Think about? What's their favorite song?

If they said to their father, "Give me five!" would he say (A) "Get a job," (B) "Check with your mother" or (C) Slap your hand?

Do they know the real color of their mother's hair? How she voted in the last election? Who was in her wedding? Do they know what she wanted to be when she was a little girl growing up? If she had her life to live over again, would she have children? Be a nun? Study the behavior of gorillas?

Parents are no better. Have they any idea what the three biggest fears of their teen-agers are? Is it never getting use of the car again after last Saturday night? Is it the survival of the planet? Or that they'll have a conversation with their parents to learn more about one another?

Parents know the history of the children. They've been a part of it. But who are their friends? What are some characteristics in people they most admire? How do they feel about authority? Wars? Themselves? What did they do as a child that they never told you about? (If you're sure you want to hear this.) What has been their biggest disappointment? What's their fantasy career? Their dream vacation?

The purpose of the exchange isn't to challenge or to criticize beliefs, but to find some common ground and show one another you care about them.

I know our kids were astounded to know that we were not born fully matured and our first words were not, "Where have you been?"

They would be even more amazed to know that we know Demi Moore is not a paint thinner and sex was invented before 1965.

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers signed a six-year contract Wednesday with Trinity University in San Antonio, five days before the team opens its first training camp at the facility.

The agreement involves two contracts, a one-year pact for this summer's use and a five-year pact for 1992 through 1996. There is also an option for five more years after 1996.

"The Trinity facilities are unsurpassed," Oilers owner and president Bud Adams said. "Our staff and players will be diligent in their efforts to work closely with the university to make training camp a positive experience for everyone concerned."

Howie leads stars

Staff Report

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. — Midland Angel infielder Mark Howie was named tri-Most Valuable Player Wednesday night for his play in the American League's 8-2 win over the National League in the first-ever Class AA All-Star game.

Howie was 2-for-3 with four RBIs and two runs scored. Three of Howie's four RBIs came as a result of a three-run home run in the first inning.

Howie shared MVP honors with Orlando's Pat Mahomes and Canton-Akron's Jim Thome.

A crowd of over 4,000 attended the game, which was modeled after the Class AAA All-Star game.

Howie, batting .367, is currently the leading active hitter in the Texas League.

Bucks sign Moses

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Milwaukee signed Moses Malone to a two-year contract on Wednesday, hoping the 15-year veteran can improve weak rebounding blamed for the Bucks early NBA playoffs exit.

Coach Del Harris, announcing the signing, called Malone "an intense competitor...(who) will give us a big lift in our rebounding and inside game" despite being 36-years-old.

Malone became an unrestricted free agent when the Atlanta Hawks declined to sign him for the 1991-92 season July 1.

That's also the date the Bucks cleared $1.6 million from their salary cap by not picking up the option year of Jack Sikma's contract.

It's on: Champ vs. Tyson

■ The rhetoric and rumors involving George Foreman are over for now, as heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield and Mike Tyson enter the ring November 8.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Evander Holyfield, with a big assist from George Foreman, knocked out rhetoric, stopped one-upsmanship and now will defend the undisputed heavyweight championship against Mike Tyson.

"The fight is done — Nov. 8 at Caesars Palace," Don King, Tyson's promoter said Wednesday after closing a deal with Dan Duva, Holyfield's promoter.

"He had to do it," said Shelly Finkel, Holyfield's manager. "Once it lost Foreman, where was he going?"

King, who has said "we don't need Holyfield," made a major effort to match Tyson and Foreman, the 42-year-old folk hero, but as of Tuesday it appeared Holyfield would fill the Nov. 8 date with a rematch against Foreman, who he outpointed over 12 rounds on April 19.

"We had it (Holyfield-Foreman)," Finkel said. "If they hadn't contacted us yesterday, the deal was done."

Jose Sulaiman, president of the World Boxing Council, contacted Duva Tuesday, saying that King wanted to meet him, according to Duva.

King and Duva met Wednesday at the New York office of King's attorney, Robert Hirth.

"Fine," Holfyfield told Finkel when advised that the fight had been made. It summed up the feelings of most fight fans.

Part of the deal, Finkel said, was for "the winner to make a good-faith deal to fight Foreman."

"Dan will promote in association with Don King," Finkel said. "Evander will be guaranteed $30 million and Tyson $15 million. Evander will get 60 percent of revenues over $48 million and there will be 40 percent over $48 million for Tyson."

TVKO will handle the pay-per-view television fight.

King had gone to the WBC seeking a 55-45 percent split instead of the traditional 75-25 percent split favoring the champion, should a mandatory defense go to purse bids because an agreement could not be negotiated.

'Evander will be guaranteed $30 million and Tyson $15 million. Evander will get 60 percent of revenues over $48 million and there will be 40 percent over $48 million for Tyson.'

— Holyfield manager Shelly Finkel

Bowls sign pact

■ A new agreement makes a postseason bowl meeting between the two top-ranked college football teams a probability.

Associated Press

MIAMI — They were great games that never took place: No. 1 Colorado vs. No. 2 Georgia Tech for the 1990 national championship, and No. 1 Colorado vs. No. 2 Miami for the 1989 crown.

Those postseason showdowns would have happened under an agreement announced Wednesday that involves four bowls, five conferences and Notre Dame.

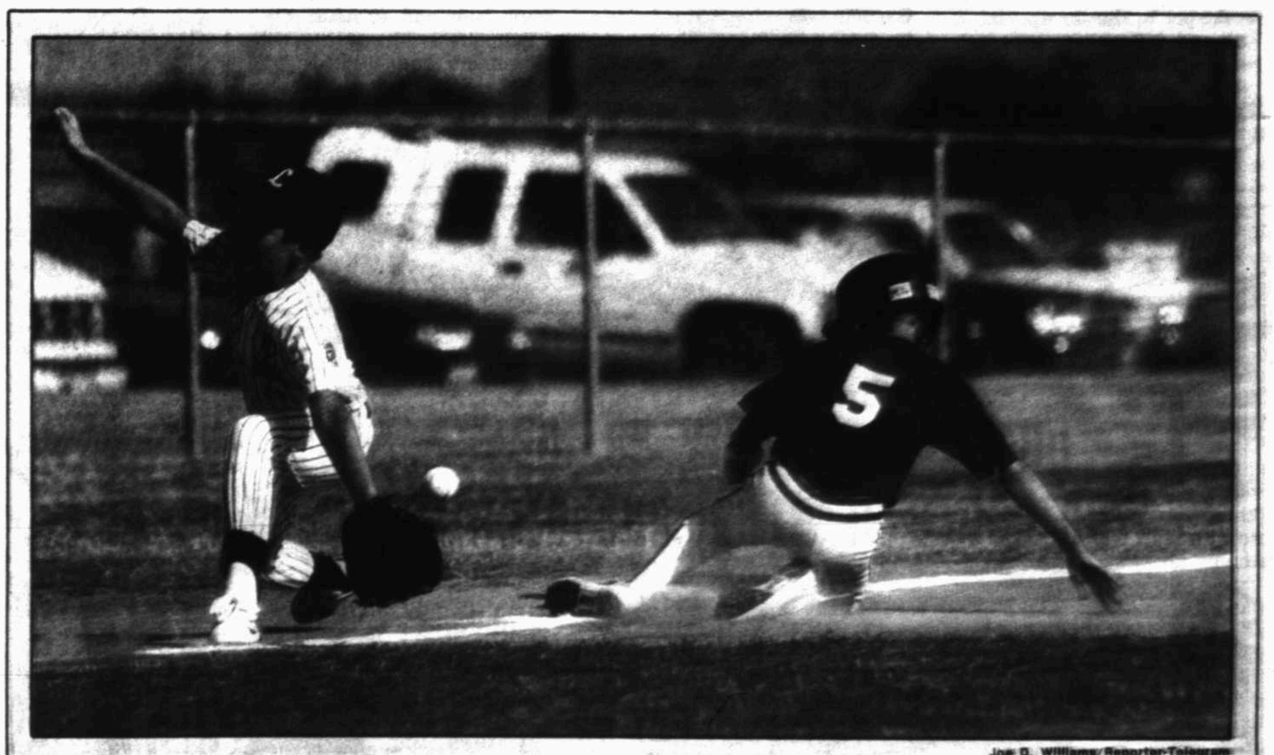

The alliance is designed to make a national championship matchup more likely each year between the nation's two top-ranked teams.

"This is not a utopia, but it is the closest to it," said Harper Davidson, president of the Orange Bowl Committee.

The agreement, negotiated during the past several months, could quiet proponents of a playoff system who holler loudest when the two top-ranked teams play in different bowl games. That's happened the past three seasons and six of the past eight.

The alliance will include the Orange, Cotton, Sugar and Fiesta bowls. The Fiesta Bowl was a last-minute choice over the Citrus, Gator, Blockbuster and Holiday

Harper, Johnston lead Midland American

Staff Report

Pitcher Britt Harper led Midland American to a 23-5 win over Coahoma Wednesday in District 3 Junior League (13 year old) tournament action at Redfern Field.

Clay Johnston was 4-for-5 with five RBIs to pace American's offensive attack.

The win sets up an 8 p.m. showdown Friday featuring American and Midland Northern, two of the four remaining undefeated teams in the Junior League tourney.

Big Spring International defeated Big Spring National, 5-2, in losers bracket action at the Junior League

SENIOR LEAGUE

Wednesday was elimination day for two teams in the District 3 Senior League (14-15 year olds) tournament, and it was not a good day for Odessa teams.

Odessa Salinas was sent home after an 8-5 loss to El Paso, and West Odessa fell to Big Spring National, 18-6.

LITTLE LEAGUE

Daniel Subia was the winning pitcher as Midland Western defeated Big Spring American in winners bracket action of the District 3 Little League (11-12 year olds) tournament. No score was available.

In losers bracket action, Midland Northern fell to Lamesa, 7-6, in eight innings. Rudolph Fernandez was the winner for Lamesa, Brett Powell was the losing pitcher for Midland.

Elsewhere, Big Spring National downed Coahoma, 4-2, and Odessa Floyd Gwynn defeated West Odessa, 8-4.

The eight undefeated teams — including Midland Mid City, Midland North Central, and Midland Eastern — play today at 6 p.m.

Rangers hope to stay on top

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers, betrayed by a rotation that was supposed to be its strength but bolstered by the best lineup in baseball, leave the All-Star break atop the AL West for the first time since 1983.

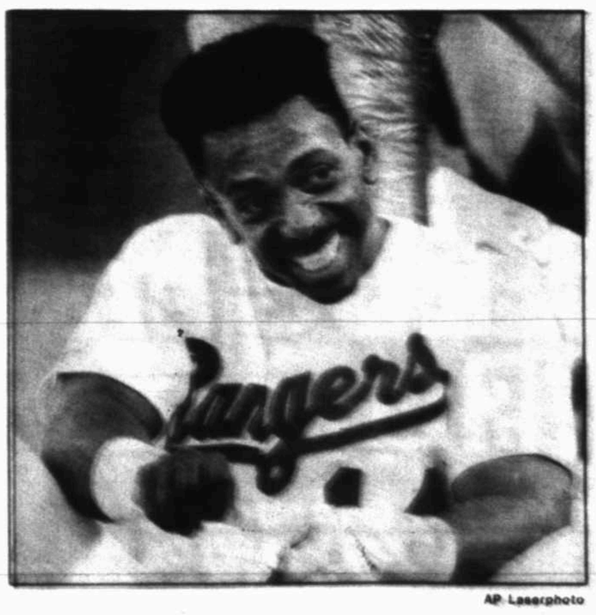

They've no time to relish the moment, however.

Only 2½ games separate the top five teams in the division and the Rangers' initial second-half test is a tough one — a visit to the Toronto Skydome and a four-game series against the AL East-leading Blue Jays beginning Thursday night.

"This is not a bad place to be," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said after Nolan Ryan came within six outs of his eighth no-hitter Sunday as Texas moved into first place by five percentage points over the Minnesota Twins.

"We've had some players, especially the young guys, step in and do a fantastic job," Valentine said. "What we need is some consistency in the bullpen and with our starters, and clash, which is slated for July 22 at El Paso's Cohen Stadium.

Howie, who also appeared last night in the first Class AA All-Star Game in Huntsville, Ala., leads current TL players in hitting with a .367 batting average and is second in runs batted in with 82.

James leads the Angels in victories with nine.

Gonzales is hitting .282 with 30 RBI.

Leader's crash gives LeMond lead

Associated Press

VALENCIENNES, France — A bone-breaking fall Wednesday by frontrunner Rolf Sorensen has put three-time winner Greg LeMond into the lead of the Tour de France sooner than he wanted.

Sorensen, a Dane who had held the lead since Sunday, broke his left collarbone in the spill and dropped out of the race after completing Wednesday's fifth stage with the overall lead. LeMond was in second place, nine seconds back, but on Thursday he will move into the lead by one second over Ireland's Sean Kelly.

"No, I'm not going," said Sorensen, his arm immobilized across his chest and a bandage around his left knee. "Maybe I will come to the start and put on the yellow jersey. But that's it."

Sorensen's team director Giancarlo Ferretti said the rider will leave Thursday to be treated at a sports clinic in Bergamo, Italy.

A first set of official standings gave LeMond the overall lead by one second over Kelly. The race jury put Sorensen 1:07 behind in the stage.

Later, the director of the Tour de France, Jean-Marie LeBlanc, explained that Sorensen actually crossed the finish line right behind LeMond and was misplaced.

Dutchman Jelle Nijdam won the stage, pulling away in the last kilometer. LeMond was credited with 16th place.

Last remnant of Steeler glory retires

Associated Press

Cornerback Dwayne Woodruff, the last remaining member of a Pittsburgh Steelers' Super Bowl champion, retired on Wednesday.

Woodruff, 34, had been without a contract since Feb. 1. He had wrestled with the decision of whether to try to return for his 13th season or concentrate full time on his law career.

"This is a good time," he said. "You don't want to overstay your welcome."

Woodruff made the announcement at a news conference at St. Vincent College in Latrobe, Pa., where the Steelers opened camp. But he stressed he wasn't forced to retire, like many veterans, who are faced with the choice of going out voluntarily or being cut.

"We were in contract negotiations," he said. "There is an offer on the table now if I wanted to play. It was my decision to retire.

Woodruff, drafted in the sixth round out of Louisville, was a rookie on the Steelers' fourth Super Bowl championship team in 1979. He is the fourth-leading pass interceptor in team history with 37.

He said his fondest memories were of playing in the Super Bowl and being voted by his teammates as Most Valuable Player in 1982.

NFL Roundup

Broncos

Denver Broncos running back Steve Sewell has agreed to a three-year contract, leaving the Broncos with five unsigned veterans.

Eight of the team's 10 draft choices also are without contracts, but general manager John Beake said he expects most to be in by Friday, when the team opens training camp.

To help make room, the Broncos released linebacker Paris McCurdy, a former basketball player from Ball State who was on the club's developmental roster last season, and defensive end Jon Wood, a rookie free agent from Texas Tech.

Colts

Unlike a year ago, when the Indianapolis Colts faced an unhappy Eric Dickerson, a quarterback controversy and other distractions, the start of training camp this year is expected to be smooth and orderly.

Quarterbacks, rookies, free agents and selected veterans arrive Thursday night with remaining veterans expected July 18.

Quarterback Jeff George expects a more relaxed atmosphere at the NFL team's training headquarters at Anderson University.

"There's not that animosity toward each other like there was last year," George said Wednesday. "To have everybody in camp and working together, that has to be a key."

Last year, quarterback Chris Chandler, who was ultimately traded to Tampa Bay, was unhappy that George had been taken with the first pick of the draft.

RANGERS: Texas overcomes slow start

started the season with four straight losses.

Juan Gonzalez, who missed the first two weeks of the season with a knee injury, has been a fixture in the field and a menace at the plate, hitting .303 with 12 homers and 54 RBIs.

Mario Diaz, signed to fill a Class AAA roster, emerged from a crowded corps of shortstops to pad the Rangers' only weak spot in the lineup. His 13 RBIs and .287 average are a welcome addition, along with his reliable glove — his .993 fielding percentage is second-best among AL shortstops.

The defensive play of Ivan "Pudge" Rodriguez, the team's teen-age catcher, has been among the best in the majors. The staff ERA is 3.40 with Rodriguez catching, 4.28 with all other catchers.

Rodriguez was promoted for his defense. But he's equally impressive at the plate as he is behind it. Using all fields, he's hit in 14 of 16 games, amassing a .365 average.

Right-handed starter Jose Guzman was relegated to relief in spring training, then cut from the team. His mentor, bullpen coach Orlando Gomez, talked him into signing a minor league contract.

He's kept the Rangers' rotation afloat since his callup, winning four games, including a two-hitter. His 2.82 ERA is second on the team to Ryan's 2.71.

Ruben Sierra is having another MVP-like season with 12 homers, 58 RBIs and a .325 average that ranks third in the league.

After a slow start, Julio Franco, who joined Sierra and Palmeiro as All-Stars, has raised his average to .318 with nine home runs and 40 RBIs.

Palmeiro is hitting .319 with 13 homers and 40 RBIs, and Buechele is having a career year at the plate with 12 homers and 38 RBIs and in the field with a .991 percentage.

Hurley leads U.S. world team

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Point guard Bobby Hurley of national champion Duke was among 12 players selected Wednesday to represent the United States at the World University Games beginning next week, USA Basketball anounced.

Joining Hurley will be guards Hubert Davis of North Carolina, Adonis Jordan of Kansas and Sean Miller of Pittsburgh; forwards Eric Anderson and Calbert Cheaney of Indiana, George Lynch of North Carolina, Rodney Rogers of Wake Forest and Alex Blackwell of Monmouth, N.J.; and centers Josh Grant of Utah, Ervin Johnson of New Orleans and Luther Wright of Seton Hall.

P.J. Carlesimo of Seton Hall is the coach, assisted by Roy Williams of Kansas, Pete Gillen of Xavier, Ohio and Herb Kenny of Connecticut Wesleyan.

The World University Games will be held July 15-24 in Sheffield, England. The United States is the defending gold medalist, winning in Germany in 1989. The U.S. has won seven of the 11 gold medals for basketball.

COLORADO BEND: Water murky, 78 degrees, normal level; black bass are poor; striper are poor; crappie are poor; white bass poor; yellow catfish are good to 15 pounds on live bait with trotlines; channel catfish are good to 5 pounds on cut bait and worms.

LBJ: Water clear, 88 degrees, lake full; black bass are fair through 3 pounds, 12 ounces on dark worms; striper are slow; crappie are fair on docks with structure in 15-18 feet of water on minnows; white bass are fair on lower end of lake on points early with topwaters; catfish are fair through 6 pounds in baited holes on cheese baits.

SQUAW CREEK: Water clear, 86 degrees, normal level; black bass are slow, some caught in 5-7 feet of water on cranks, worms and Rattle Traps; striper are slow; crappie are fair from the bank on slabs; catfish are good in the 3-10 pound range in 17-30 feet of water on shrimp, liver and stinkbait.

bowls.

Also included are the Big East and Atlantic Coast conferences, which last year added to their fold perennial national title contenders Miami and Florida State, respectively. The Big Eight Conference will continue to send its champion to the Orange Bowl; Southwest Conference-Cotton Bowl and Southeastern Conference-Sugar Bowl affiliations will also continue.

"This alliance certainly has a chance to be a bonanza and is great for college football and intercollegiate athletics," said Jim Brock, executive vice president of the Cotton Bowl.

The agreement still must be put into writing.

"We've been through scenario after scenario," Davidson said, "and most everybody says this sounds like, looks like and smells like it's going to be a great situation."

Most everybody does not include playoff proponents such as Nebraska athletic director Bob Devaney.

"The thing is that they're still trying to make a national championship forgetting half the country," Devaney said. "So it's not going to be a real national championship, but it will be a little closer than what we have now."

Under the plan, scheduled to take effect in the 1992 season, the lineups for the four bowls would be decided by a prearranged system.

After the Big Eight, SWC and SEC champions are determined, the other slots for the four bowl games would be filled by a five-team pool, which would include Notre Dame, the champions of the Big East and ACC, and two other highly ranked at-large teams. The at-large teams could be independents or conference members.

The highest-ranked team in the pool would go to the bowl that offers the highest-ranked opponent. For example, if Colorado was No. 1 and bound for the Orange Bowl, the highest-ranked team in the pool also would play in Miami on Jan. 1.

Notre Dame has agreed to drop out of the pool if it has a mediocre season. The coalition would then select three at-large teams instead of two.

The alliance would have matched Colorado against Georgia Tech in the Orange Bowl last January, and Colorado against Miami in the Orange Bowl the year before.

Because of the arrangement, the much-criticized annual midseason scramble by top bowls to fill out the postseason lineup will become a thing of a past.

FIGHT: Tyson looking to regain championship bids June 11, and Duva topped eight other bidders with an offer of $51,101,000, of which Holyfield would have gotten, 75 percent, or $38,325,750.

Duva's Main Events monitor had deposited $10.2 million in the United National Bank of Plainfield (N.J.) as the 20 percent escrow amount required under IBF rules.

King refused to accept the IBF purse bids, saying he and Tyson refused to recognize the organization because of its ties to South African fighters.

Earlier Wednesday, the IBF dropped Tyson from No. 1 to No. 5 in its ranking behind Foreman, Pierre Coetzee of South Africa, Riddick Bowe, Lennox Lewis of Britain because of Tyson and King's refusal to recognize the purse bid.

After the fight was made, Lee said he would still consider it a mandatory defense for Holyfield because Tyson was No. 1 at the time of the purse bids.

Bush reappoints Greenspan

■ Reappointment 'should be reassuring signal to markets,' president says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Wednesday he will appoint Alan Greenspan to a second term as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, endorsing the central bank's efforts to lift the economy from recession.

He praised Greenspan for his skill in juggling the competing economic concerns of keeping inflation low while stimulating growth.

"He has done an outstanding job," Bush said. "... He's been a fierce fighter against inflation, but I think he also is as strongly committed to growth."

He said Greenspan's reappointment, which is subject to confirmation by the Senate, "certainly should be a reassuring signal not only to domestic markets but to world markets."

The announcement, although withheld until Greenspan had only a month left in his four-year term, was expected.

"The markets would have been really, really upset if he hadn't been reappointed," said economist Jay Goldinger of Capital Insight Inc. in Beverly Hills, Calif. "Markets like predictability and a new Fed chairman would have brought a lot of uncertainty into the economy."

Over the past year, as the economy sunk into its first recession in eight years, Bush and his senior advisers have constantly pressured Greenspan and his fellow board members to stimulate an economic recovery by quickly and steeply lowering interest rates.

Central bank officials, however, have resisted loosening credit as forcefully as the administration had wanted, fearing that would lead to resurgent inflation.

At an news conference earlier in the day, Bush said he had "high regard" for Greenspan but had been too busy to focus on reappointing the 65-year-old economist.

He waited until the financial markets closed to make his announcement.

Bush's triumvirate of top economic advisers — Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers Michael Boskin and budget director Richard Darman — joined the president and Greenspan in the White House briefing room for the announcement.

Greenspan, whose current term expires Aug. 11, told reporters that he believed the recession had ended.

"I think the evidence is increasing week by week, that the bottom is passed and the economy is beginning to move up. We still do not know how rapid the recovery is or the underlying strength of it, but I think it's a pretty safe bet at this stage to conclude the decline is behind us," Greenspan said.

In the last month, various economic indicators have given signals of an upturn in the economy, ranging from higher retail sales to increased output at the na-

Prices rally

NEW YORK — Oil prices rallied Wednesday, with heating oil futures surprising some traders by leading the charge on news that the nation's stockpile shrank last week.

The American Petroleum Institute had reported on Tuesday night that the U.S. supply of gasoline and heating oil fell during the week ended Friday. That pushed the oil market higher Wednesday.

Home heating oil for delivery in August settled at 58.38 cents a gallon, up 1.07 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in August settled at $21.43 per barrel, up 14 cents.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in August settled at 64.21 cents a gallon, up .77 cent.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock, Permian and Texaco Trading and Transportion raised their posted price 25 cents to $20.25.

Citicorp comes

SAN ANTONIO — A day after confirming the layoff of up to 17,000 workers worldwide, Citicorp said Wednesday it is opening a national service center here for its bank customers.

The non-banking subsidiary Citicorp Data Systems Inc. will operate the center. It will handle operations consolidated from nine regional centers around the country, said new center president Richard Boverie.

The service center is expected to employ about 100 people by year's end. Employees will answer calls from Citicorp bank customers who have inquiries about their accounts, Boverie said.

The number of employees is expected to increase to about 750 in 1995, when the projected payroll will be about $18 million, Boverie said.

Wal-Mart expands

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the largest retailer in the United States, is expanding into Mexico in a joint venture with that country's biggest retailing company.

Wal-Mart spokesman Don Shinkle said Wednesday the venture with CIFRA SA will open the first discount warehouse store in Mexico City by the end of this year.

Dollar slips

NEW YORK — The dollar fell marginally against most major currencies Wednesday as speculation intensified about German interest rates in advance of a meeting by officials of Germany's central bank.

Gold was higher.

In New York, the precious metal rose 60 cents a troy ounce to $370 on the Commodity Exchange.

Recording compromise

A dispute between the music and electronics industries over the payment of royalties for digital home recording devices has been resolved, experts familiar with the agreement said Wednesday.

Top U.S. corporations unlikely to reinvest in South Africa

NEW YORK (AP) — Several top U.S. corporations pressured to sell their South African investments said President Bush's decision Wednesday to lift 5-year-old sanctions was unlikely to lure them back.

The companies said it would require enormous investments for them to re-establish themselves in South Africa. They said it would be unlikely to see a financial return that could justify such moves.

"We have no current plans for investments in South Africa," said Ronald Theis of General Motors Corp., the world's biggest industrial company. "Any proposal to invest in South Africa today would really have to stand on its own."

That feeling was echoed by Ford and Chrysler and several other major corporations.

The Rev. Leon Sullivan, a black minister who wrote a code of conduct for U.S. businesses as a way to encourage an end to apartheid, said Bush made a mistake and urged state and local goverments to keep sanctions in place.

"We have to look ahead to see how we can continue to apply pressure on the South African government for opening democracy and equal voting rights for blacks, which is essential for the real ending of apartheid," said the author of the so-called "Sullivan Principles."

"I urge and hope cities and states applying sanctions will hold the line and that companies will not be too energetic in going back into South Africa until democracy becomes a reality for blacks in that country," he said in Philadelphia.

Mobil Corp. spokesman John Lord said he was unaware of plans for the return of his company, one of the last major U.S. oil companies to withdraw from South Africa.

Many U.S. corporations left South Africa as public and stockholder sentiment turned against maintaining ties with the country because of its racially segregated social system, apartheid.

State and local governments also made it difficult for companies to remain in South Africa by refusing to do business with them. It was too early to gauge the impact of Bush's move on other sanction efforts, but company officials had not forgotten them.

Firm's failure could cost $248 million

DALLAS (AP) — Texas taxpayers could pay as much as $248 million for the failure of Dallas-based Texas Employers Insurance Association, far exceeding previous payouts for failed insurance companies, officials said.

The company was the leading workers' comp provider in Texas three years ago. By late 1989, Texas Employers said it was getting out of the business. It was put under state supervision last year and into receivership this year.

Paying the company's liabilities from the state guaranty fund could take up to 40 years because some on-the-job injuries it covered demand lifetime benefits.

And taxpayers may indirectly shoulder much of the burden because state law allows insurers to eventually deduct from Texas taxes their contributions to the guaranty fund.

The guaranty fund assessment to property and casualty insurers this year will reach $81 million, the maximum allowed by state law.

The amount means $71 million for unfunded TEIA liabilities and about $10 million for the insolvency of Irving-based American Guardian Insurance Underwriters Lloyds, John James, deputy liquidator for the State Board of Insurance, said Monday.

The $248 million estimate of Texas Employers' liability dwarfs the state's $35.7 million cost for the high-profile 1988 failure of National County Mutual Fire Insurance Co.

Nichols joins Midland Hilton

Staff Report

David A. Nichols has joined the Midland Hilton as general manager. He will direct all operations for the 260-room hotel.

Nichols

Nichols has extensive experience managing hotel properties throughout the East Coast, according to Fred Eydt, president and chief executive officer of Medallion Hotels Inc., manager of the local establishment.

"David was instrumental in obtaining the prestigious four-star and four-diamond ratings for the hotels that he previously managed," Eydt said. "We are confident he will achieve success for the Midland Hilton by building on the hotel's current position as the leading luxury hotel in the Permian Basin."

He added that Nichols has demonstrated a strong commitment to the local communities in his previous positions, which was a deciding factor in his new appointment.

"The Midland Hilton's prominent position in the Midland/Odessa area brings with it a certain responsibility from a community perspective," Nichols said.

Before joining the Hilton, Nichols was general manager of The Mulberry Hotel in Savannah, Ga., a 119-room historical hotel. He previously was general manager of The Orchards Hotel in Williamstown, Mass. and The Lord Jeffery Inn in Amherst, Mass. He also worked seven years with the Hanover Inn in Hanover, N.H., which is owned by Dartmouth College. He earned a bachelor's degree from Dartmouth in 1973.

The Midland Hilton is a full-service hotel managed by Medallion. It features two 11-story towers with 260 guest rooms — including 15 suites — as well as two concierge floors, fitness center, atrium lobby, restaurants and a lounge.

Medallion is a hotel management and development company that operates mid-size full-service hotels that cater primarily to business travelers. In addition to the Midland Hilton, Medallion operates hotels in Houston and Austin, Louisville and Chicago.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Discount figured in basis for tax purposes

By Bill Doyle

Q. All six companies in which I own stock have dividend reinvestment plans (DRP). In five of those DRPs, my dividends are used to buy more shares at the going market price. The sixth DRP purchases additional shares at a 5 percent discount.

I know I must report, as income, the full value of shares purchased through dividend reinvestment when I file my income tax return. But is the discount considered in the "basis" — cost for tax purposes — when and if I sell the stock?

Doyle

A. Yes. When stock is purchased at a discount through reinvested dividends, the basis for those shares is their market value on the dividend payment date. The same basis applies to shares bought by sending in more money through a DRP with an optional additional investment feature.

That's reasonable, because the taxable amount of a reinvested dividend is the market value of the shares on the dividend payment date and, when you buy more shares at a discount through an optional additional investment, you have additional taxable dividend income — the difference between the price you paid and the market value of the shares.

You needn't worry about learning the amount of taxable dividends you must report on your income tax return. Every January, payers of dividends are required to send to every recipient a Form 1099-DIV, listing the exact taxable amount of the previous year's dividends.

Many companies with DRPs also inform participants of the basis of shares received through discount dividend reinvestments. If yours does not, you would be wise to record that stock's market price on its dividend payment dates. To get that information, you might have to go through newspaper stock tables on microfilm at a public library. But that will make it easier to calculate your profit or loss if you ever sell that stock.

Q. Where, on the Form 1040A federal income tax return does one report reinvested dividends?

A. The same place dividends received by check are reported

That's Line 9 on short Form 1040A. If the total amount you list there is more than $400, you are required to use Form 1040A's Schedule 1 and, on Part III, list each dividend payer and the dividend amount — even though the dividends were reinvested.

On long Form 1040, the total amount of dividends are reported on Line 9. If they top $400, each dividend paid and the amount must be listed on Part II, Schedule B.

You can't use super-short Form 1040EZ if you have dividends.

Q. I have a dividend reinvestment plan in utility stock, for which there supposedly is no charge. My shares are held by a major brokerage firm, which also says it does not charge for DRPs.

When I inquired about a $6.30 "commission" on my statement, my broker said it was a charge by the transfer agent and that most agents do not charge. Is there any way I can have transfer agents changed?

A. It's most unlikely a complaint from one stockholder would result in a company changing its transfer agent. It's even less likely the transfer agent charges a commission.

There is no charge to participants in many DRPs. Others levy small service charges. When the shares participants buy in a DRP are purchased in the open market by the plan agent, which very often is the transfer agent, each participant might or might not be required to pay a proportionate share of the total commission cost.

Unless you are a mighty big stockholder and are reinvesting very large dividends, that $6.30 charge seems way out of line.

My advice is read the literature that company sent you about its DRP and, if necessary, phone the company's shareholder relations department to find out what charges — if any — are levied by the company and its agents on DRP participants. Don't be overcome with surprise if you learn that $6.30 cost can be traced to your brokerage firm.

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — An afternoon round of selling left the stock market with little to show for a broad early gain in Wall Street activity Wednesday.

The session's mixed results were very much in keeping with the "trading range" environment that has prevailed in the market for the past several weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up more than 30 points at its midday peak, finished with a 2.46 loss at 2,944.77.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 6 to 5 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 178.20 million shares as of 4 p.m. EDT, against 151.43 million at the same point Tuesday.

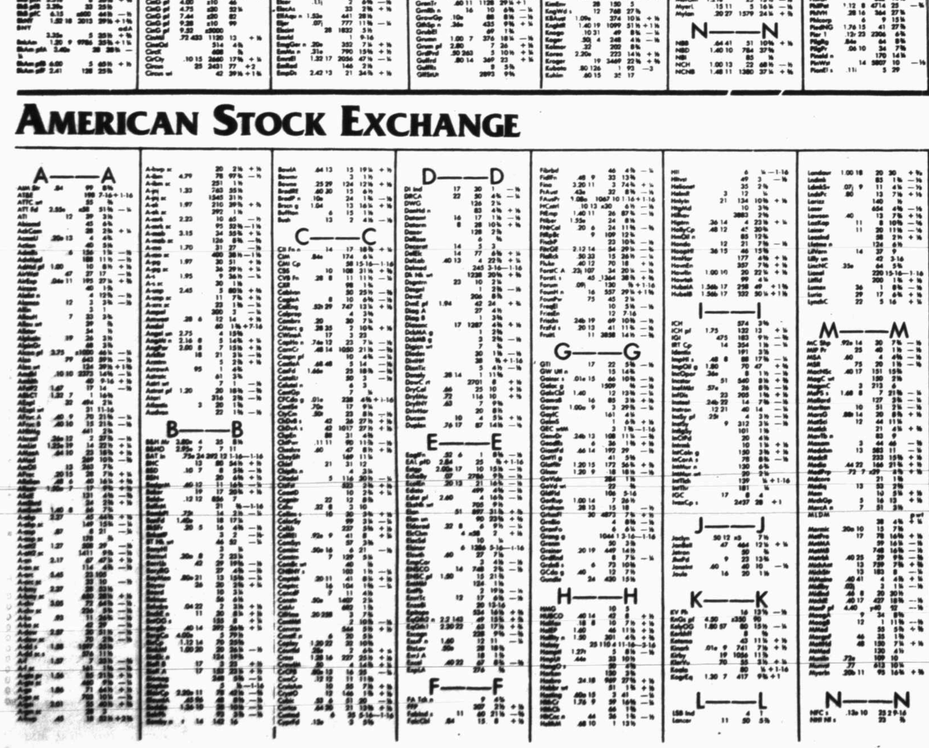

The market got a boost at the outset from an overnight rally in Japanese stock prices, which have been under pressure of late. The Nikkei index of 225 stocks traded in Tokyo climbed 2.3 percent, posting its second consecutive gain.

That helped to relieve worries that a weak Japanese market and the scandal in that country's securities industry might produce unsettling ripple effects on Wall Street.

But as the U.S. trading day progressed the market ran into resistance from sellers, and then turned downward again.

Federal National Mortgage gained ⅞ to 51¾ in active trading. The company posted second-quarter earnings of $1.21 a share, up from $1.10 a share in the corresponding period last year.

Troubled Pan Am appears to be nearing its final landing

NEW YORK (AP) — United Airlines offered Wednesday to buy Pan Am's Latin American routes and some trans-Atlantic operations, making it more likely that the sickly pioneer of commercial aviation soon will be devoured by rivals.

Others interested in buying pieces of Pan American World Airways include Delta Air Lines, Northwest Airlines and Hyatt Hotel chief Jay A. Pritzker.

None of the prospective buyers have disclosed how much they're willing to pay for the parts. But if sold piecemeal, Pan Am would become the second airline to die amid troubles caused by the Persian Gulf crisis and recession.

Eastern Airlines, overcome by years of losses and a prolonged strike, stopped flying in January, the same month Pan Am sought shelter from creditors in bankruptcy court.

Pan Am, based in New York, opened the door to a wholesale sell-off almost two weeks ago, when it invited Delta to make an offer on its trans-Atlantic operations and other assets.

Since then, others have shown an interest in acquiring the choice morsels of Pan Am, which has fallen into such desperate trouble that it has survived in recent years only by selling one asset after another.

If sold piecemeal, Pan Am would become the second airline to die amid troubles caused by the war and recession.

Executives from Chicago-based United were in New York on Wednesday, making an unspecified offer for Pan Am's operations in South America, Mexico and the Caribbean, as well as trans-Atlantic route authority out of Miami and routes between New York and France.

United wants 21 Pan Am aircraft to fly the routes it would obtain and would offer employment to "a number" of Pan Am employees, Stephen M. Wolf, chairman of United's parent UAL Corp., said in a letter to Pan Am Chairman Thomas G. Plaskett. Pan Am has 22,000 workers.

"We are prepared to enter into negotiations leading toward a definitive purchase agreement as promptly as possible," Wolf said.

Pan Am spokeswoman Elizabeth Hlinko said the company was evaluating the plan and other offers.

Atlanta-based Delta, which at first considered buying all of Pan Am, said last month it would be interested only in the trans-Atlantic routes; the hub in Frankfurt, Germany; the Pan Am Shuttle; 45 aircraft and 6,000 employees.

GREENSPAN: Central bank officials resist loosening credit tion's factories. Even so, unemployment last month reached its five-year high of 7 percent.

Bush said he believed Greenspan shared his view that economic growth is important.

"I wouldn't be standing next to Chairman Greenspan . . . if I didn't have full confidence. That isn't to say that you're never going to have differences," Bush said.

Both Bush and Greenspan sidestepped questions of whether the Fed should work to further reduce interest rates.

Greenspan is a longtime consultant to Republican presidents and one of Bush's tennis partners. He served as chief economic adviser in Gerald Ford's White House. In 1987, Ronald Reagan appointed him to succeed Paul Volcker as chairman of the seven-member board governing the central bank.

Only two months after taking the job, Greenspan faced the October 1987 stock market crash. He received high marks for his handling of the crisis. He encouraged banks to keep loans flowing to cash-strapped stock brokers and later loosened credit to cushion the crash's blow on the economy.

Before Wednesday's announcement, financial market analysts had speculated that the renomination was delayed to maintain pressure on the central bank to keep interest rates low.

Bush's announcement came a day after The Wall Street Journal reported that Fed officials decided in a closed-door meeting last week not to lower their money growth targets.

In the past, the Fed has regularly reduced the targets in an effort to fight inflation, but officials reportedly believed a further reduction would endanger the economic recovery.

Greenspan is scheduled to appear before a House subcommittee on Tuesday to announce and explain the new targets.

Meanwhile, the Senate Banking Committee on Wednesday approved two previous Fed nominations, clearing the way for confirmation by the full Senate.

By a voice vote, it endorsed the nomination of David Mullins to be vice chairman of the Fed. Mullins, a former assistant treasury secretary and an architect of the 1989 S&L bailout law, already serves on the board. Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., was the only panel member heard to dissent.

The committee voted 16-5 to recommend Lawrence Lindsey, a White House economist and former Harvard professor, to fill one of two vacancies on the seven-member board.

Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., the committee chairman and one of five Democrats to oppose the nomination, said he believed Bush should nominate someone with practical business experience in addition to academic qualifications.

Bush has yet to nominate a candidate for the remaining Fed board vacancy, but speculation has centered on Susan M. Phillips, a former chairwoman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Conflict resolution offers alternative to court

By Mike Feinsilber
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A tree falls and destroys a fence between two neighbors and they squabble over who pays for the repairs. Is this a case for the courts?

The car comes out with a bent fender, but the parking lot won't make restitution. Tell it to the judge?

Going to court is often a clumsy way to resolve these little person-to-person disputes. Increasingly, Americans are trying something else: It's called "alternative dispute resolution" or "conflict resolution."

Mostly, it just means hashing things out with a neutral third party. And last year, it was used to resolve 615,000 disputes that otherwise might have landed in — and languished in — court.

So far, 410 communities have established dispute resolution programs, usually run by a handful of professionals and a staff of volunteer mediators, often teachers, lawyers, housewives.

They're set up to settle disputes without the formality, rigidity and cost of a trial.

Mediation is the process most often employed. A neutral person helps the two sides discuss their differences and reach a solution they both can live with.

Disputes settled by mediation have a better chance of staying settled than those resolved in court.

That's because people get "invested in finding their own solutions," said Madeleine Crohn, president of the National Institute for Dispute Resolution, a non-profit organization that raises and distributes funds for local experiments in dispute resolution.

"Our statistics indicate that there is a 90 to 95 percent chance that people who keep their appointments will reach an agreement," said Larry Ray, staff director of the American Bar Association's committee on dispute resolution. "And six months later, there's an 85 percent chance that they will do what they say they agreed to do."

By contrast, he said, a study of small claims courts in Maine found that the winner of an award had only a 60 percent chance of actually collecting an award "even if it was judge-blessed."

Mostly, it just means hashing things out with a neutral third party. And last year, it was used to resolve 615,000 disputes that otherwise might have landed in . . . court.

Some dispute resolution centers also use arbitration, in which the neutral person hears both sides, much as a judge would, then proposes a solution.

Participants are not bound to reach an agreement, of course, but if they do and if they put it in writing, it can become a contract, enforceable in court.

Judges, overwhelmed by ever increasing caseloads, foresee a big future for the process. Lawyers, once suspicious, have come along.

"The enlightened bar is supportive," said Christine Carlson, director of the Ohio Commission on Dispute Resolution and Conflict Management, a state agency. "Lawyers see that the system needs help and they are realizing that there are many ways to solve problems besides litigation."

Compromise, however, is not necessarily one of those solutions.

Mediators stress that their goal is to aid both parties to reach a solution useful to both, not simply a mechanical, split-the-difference arrangement satisfactory to neither.

"Compromise is not the issue," said Ray of the bar association, himself a volunteer mediator. "Meeting each other's interest is."

"Mediation is not finding a compromise," agreed Edith Primm, director of research at the 12-year-old Justice Center of Atlanta, one of the country's busiest resolution centers. "It is finding the best solution. It may be you want X, I want Y and Z is the best way to go."

William R. Drake of the National Institute for Dispute Resolution described how a mediator might work:

First the mediator asks one party to state the problem. Then he asks the other to restate his antagonist's contentions (and often finds the second person simply wasn't listening). Then he has the second person lay out how he sees the issue.

Next the mediator might meet privately with each party and asks what he really wants. Slowly, he nudges both to a settlement acceptable to both.

And mediation is now being used to settle huge cases as well as barking dog disputes.

In New Jersey, state mediator Eric Max worked out a $10 million settlement when an Exxon oil spill soiled waters.

In Florida, the state Legislature provided funds for a Florida Growth management Conflict Resolution Consortium to work out land use.

Mexico struggles with prison reform

SALTILLO, Mexico (AP) — Prison reform sometimes works in Mexico, as at Saltillo, and sometimes gets nowhere, as at Matamoros, where a drug lord ran a prison for two weeks after a shootout that killed 18 people.

Mexicans were outraged, but not surprised, when Oliverio Chavez Araujo and his gang took over the Matamoros prison in May.

"There has been tremendous corruption for years," said Warden Francisco Martin Aguirre Lopez of the Coahuila state prison in Saltillo, which is considered a model of reform.

Gabriel Martinez, head of the Matamoros Bar Association, said: "The main problems are the prisons themselves. They are putting too many people in too small a space."

On paper, Mexican penal laws are among the most progressive. Conjugal and family visits are common, even for maximum-security prisoners.

A few years ago, state prisons were renamed Centers for for Social Readaptation, with the commitment to educate prisoners and teach them trades so they could re-enter society.

In March, President Carlos Salinas de Gortari announced new measures for modernizing a system of 445 state and federal prisons that have a capacity of 61,000 inmates but house 93,000.

His plan includes early release, remodeling and expansion of work, education and training programs.

The National Commission on Human Rights says the border states of Tamaulipas, where Matamoros is located, and Baja California have the worst prisons. Their jails are loaded with people caught trying to move drugs across the frontier by land or water to San Diego, Calif., or Brownsville.

Troubled prisons are no novelty in Mexico, and the shootout in at Matamoros put the spotlight on what everybody knew: Chavez was running his drug empire from a prison he virtually controlled and there were others like him in other jails.

Chavez, shot in the face, brought his own doctors into the prison. They performed surgery in the cell from which he is said to have run a cocaine business worth $100 million a year.

He rubbed it in by arranging a behind-bars fiesta on his saint's day, with live music, clowns, barbecued goat and beer. Chavez finally surrendered after negotiating with Federico Ponce Rojas, an assistant attorney general, and was flown to a Mexico City hospital.

Other drug lords enjoy similar power and privileges in Mexican prisons.

Some jails, for a price, provide luxurious suites with rooms for visitors, private gyms, cellular telephones and armed bodyguards.

In others, however, beatings and torture are routine.

President Salinas fired Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo because of Matamoros. The prison warden, federal judicial police commander and other officials were charged with allowing weapons into the prison and taking bribes.

At Saltillo, reform-minded officials were installed in March after a minor riot over bad food and abuses by guards.

The 30-year-old prison has a capacity of 400, but has 454 inmates, including eight Americans. Women are in a separate, adjacent facility.

Most of the Saltillo prisoners are in for murder or drug trafficking.

"You don't create privileges in prisons," Warden Aguirre said. "That's where the problems start."

Because families of prisoners suffer, often turning to theft and prostitution, Aguirre said, he asked businessmen to finance workshops so prisoners could earn money for their dependents.

Saltillo prison now has workshops for carpentry, pottery, broom and brick making and greeting cards.

Whooper hatch sets new mark

LAUREL, Md. (AP) — A whooping crane chick was hatched in captivity for the first time without the aid of artificial insemination, researchers announced.

The whooping crane is a nearly extinct North American bird. About 50 exist in captivity and about 150 in the wild, according to the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center.

The chick was born April 27, the center announced Monday.

Researchers delayed the announcement until they were sure it would survive.

Handlers previously didn't know what whooping cranes needed for normal mating, said Kathleen O'Malley, an animal caretaker who is raising the chick.

Researchers speculated that pens large enough to accommodate a crane-size wingspan made the difference. An adult crane's wingspan is about eight feet.

Destruction of the bird's marsh habitat during the 1960s depleted its population in the wild to about 16.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A financial turnaround is possible now. Your intuition will be right on target in the fall. Do not let pride prevent you from getting the job done in November. Ask for help if you need it. Ending a romantic triangle puts you on the road to true happiness in December. A favorite child passes a test with flying colors in early 1992. Take an overdue vacation next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Yul Brynner, author E. B. White, boxer Leon Spinks, actress Susan Seaforth Hayes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your attitude is an important ingredient in your success formula. Learn to delegate routine chores, freeing you to spend more time on creative projects. Socialize this evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel and communication are featured. Study all written communications very carefully. Consult an attorney if legal questions arise. Romance is rocky but will smooth out.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Check for gaps in supplies. You will not be disappointed by a financial agreement. Romance lives up to your expectations this evening. Someone at a distance is thinking about you. Write more letters.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Resolve a domestic problem before leaving home this morning. A meeting of minds is essential to your well-being. Replace bad habits with good ones. Certain possessions are worth more than you imagined.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Follow a regular schedule at work today. Your performance may be scrutinized by your employer. Avoid making any hasty decisions involving money or real estate. A dream could turn out to be prophetic.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Follow your own good instincts. Keep in close touch with anyone who can further your goals. A financial situation shows steady improvement. Highlight your good sense of humor — it is a wonderful asset.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be willing to revise or discard outmoded methods. Health and employment matters deserve top priority. You are bubbling with inventive ideas; emphasize their practicality. A romantic admirer boosts your ego.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A personal relationship intensifies. What you thought was merely a fling becomes something special. Curb a tendency to flit from project to project. A steady manner will impress higher-ups.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Today's emphasis is on joint finances and big spending plans. A pioneering venture promises to pay off handsomely if you leave old prejudices behind. Your views about life and love are slowly changing.

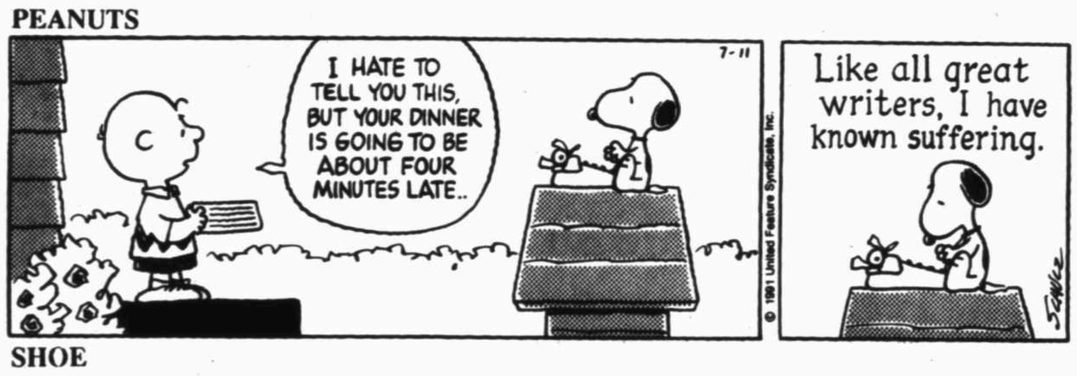

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An excellent day to reorganize your household or place of business. Focus on mutual financial interests. Buying a big-ticket item could be a shrewd move. Comparison-shopping will help you save money.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You see brighter days just ahead. A romantic dream could come true. Distant locales may play a role in your business success. Someone older and wiser teaches you an important lesson.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): More work and less play is featured today. Open the lines of communication with your co-workers or fellow students. Letters and travel put you where you wish to be. Romance continues to thrive.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are very sensitive to their loved ones' moods and criticism. A harsh comment or sad event sends their spirits plummeting. Conversely, a kind word or a pat on the back will make them smile at the world! Naturally conservative and conventional, these Cancerians are still interested in everything that is new.

Opening lead: Nine of ♠

If we were to tell you that South succeeded in raking in 12 tricks at his contract of one spade, your first reaction might be, in the words of the Bard: "'Tis a tale told by idiots, signifying nothing." But if we were to add that this hand was played in a world championship, it might give you an idea of how experts can go wrong once they've built a wrong picture of the hand.

With the points just about evenly distributed between North-South and East-West, and with the major suits belonging to North-South, it was difficult for East-West to enter the bidding. Thus, South was able to buy the hand at a contract that left a considerable margin of safety.

The trouble started with West's somewhat strange choice of the nine of clubs as the initial salvo. East felt that declarer was now marked with both the king and jack of clubs and saw no reason to rise with the ace, so declarer scored the singleton king.

Declarer led a low diamond, West followed low and dummy's queen won. When declarer now tried a low club off the board, East decided that declarer was trying to steal a trick with the jack, so that defender shot up with the ace. Declarer ruffed, crossed to the king of hearts and discarded the king of diamonds on the queen of clubs. The defenders' second ace had now gone to bed.

Declarer returned to hand with a diamond ruff and led a low trump toward the queen—with dazzling success. West decided it was a good time to go up with the king, an assessment that East found faulty when forced to win with the singleton ace. When the queen of hearts later dropped doubleton, declarer had lost only one trick to the ace of trumps!

Demi Moore, 8 months pregnant, poses nude for magazine cover

NEW YORK — Demi Moore sets a new standard of glamour by showing up pregnant and nude on a magazine cover, at least in the opinion of the magazine's editor.

Moore

The 28-year-old actress has one hand under her bulging belly and the other across her exposed breasts on the August cover of Vanity Fair.

The cover "breaks the mold of every stereotype of celebrity glamour" and shows that "there is nothing more glorious than the sight of a woman carrying a child," said Vanity Fair editor Tina Brown.

Both Moore's baby and her next film, "The Butcher's Wife," are expected in late August. She and her husband, actor Bruce Willis, already have a daughter, Rumer, who is almost 3.

Celebrity photographer Annie Leibovitz told USA Today in Wednesday's editions that the photo session with Moore was "very natural. ... I thought she was more beautiful like that than with her clothes on."

Inside, a photo shows Moore with her hands on her abdomen wearing a black brassiere and panties and high-heeled shoes, another shows her wearing a robe with her belly exposed, and a third is a head-and-shoulders shot with her hands over her bare breasts.

"Pregnancy agrees with me," the magazine quoted her as saying. "I feel comfortable."

Moore's other pictures include "Ghost," "St. Elmo's Fire," "About Last Night," and "Mortal Thoughts."

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — New Kids on the Block's Donnie Wahlberg has a new critic, the Louisville fire chief.

The chief isn't happy with the 21-year-old singer's latest video — public service announcements on fire safety, drunken driving and drug abuse made as a condition for dismissal of a second-degree criminal mischief charge.

"There's no visual accompaniment, no sound to better get the point across," said Fire Chief Russell Sanders after showing the tape to reporters Tuesday. "He did what he was required to do and nothing more."

Fire officials have only themselves to blame, because they wanted a serious message, says Wahlberg's attorney, Frank Haddad Jr.

"We could have jazzed it up," said Haddad. "But they wanted their scripts, and they wanted it to have a serious message. They didn't want it to be a promotion for the New Kids on the Block."

The group would be willing to do the spots over, Haddad said, but city officials said never mind.

"I'm looking at it from a legal standpoint; I'm not looking at it from an artistic standpoint," said Jefferson County Attorney Mike Conliffe. "He read the scripts word for word. He is complying with the terms and conditions of the diversion program."

The scripts were written by a national fire association and two local residents, and approved by Sanders and other fire officials.

Wahlberg was accused in March of dumping vodka on a hotel hallway carpet and setting it afire. The hotel was filled with young fans who had come to town for a New Kids' concert.

BERKELEY, Calif. — Muhammad Ali came out signing, his fist-swinging days behind him, and claimed another title.

Ali

The former heavyweight boxing champion wrested his new title from baseball's all-time home run king, Henry Aaron, in a book-signing session Tuesday night at Cody's Bookstore. Ali signed more than 1,000 copies of the recently released "Muhammad Ali: His Life and Times."

Aaron set the store's single-session record earlier this year by signing 796 copies of his autobiography, "I Had a Hammer," according to a Cody's official, Charles Browning.

Ali spent about four hours at the Berkeley store, chatting with customers and posing for snapshots as well as signing books. At times, the line of people waiting to enter the store stretched for more than two blocks.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Musician M.C. Hammer, honored as Oakland's Booster of the Year, thinks his native city has been getting a bad rap.

"Opportunity is here in Oakland," the rap star said when he received the award Monday. "Don't give up on Oakland."

Hammer sounded like a man who knows the city has problems but figures they can be overcome.

"Everything I learned, good and bad, I learned here," he said. "I survived the streets of Oakland. I can survive anywhere."

Retired Rear Adm. Robert Toney, head of the chamber of commerce, said Hammer was the "perfect choice" for the award, which was given for the first time.

Operators ready the telescope at Mauna Kea Observatory for the eclipse Wednesday.

Eclipse a bright spot for tourism

By Keay Davidson
Hearst News Service

KAILUA-KONA, Hawaii — Hawaiians plan to make hay while the sun doesn't shine.

Thousands of tourists are flocking to the big island of Hawaii to watch the sun go out today, and awaiting them are thousands of locals with dollar signs in their eyes.

Tourism has been slow this year, a victim of the recession and gulf war jitters. So Hawaii officials are delighted by the economic respite offered by the total solar eclipse, one of the most spectacular and long-lasting of the century.

"For a few brief moments, an eclipse dramatically expands our perception of space and time," sums up Bryan Brewer, whose book "Eclipse" is a bestseller. "In its essence, the eclipse experience reminds us on a deep level of our intimate connection with Earth."

By the time the moon begins nibbling at the sun shortly after dawn today, the number of tourists should be 60,000 more than the average 24,000 for a July week, tourism officials say.

The sun will rise at 5:55 a.m. Shortly after 6 a.m., the moon will begin to pass in front of it. Totality arrives at 7:28 a.m.

And since the islands' next total eclipse won't occur until May 3, 2106, Hawaiians are seizing this moment with zest and zaniness:

— An eclipse hairstyle is being promoted by Suzi Poore of Kailua-Kona. It looks like a black skullcap atop Poore's otherwise blond mane.

— A dizzying variety of eclipse T-shirts has prompted one resort to sponsor an eclipse T-shirt fashion show. Others resorts are offering "eclipse cuisine" (whatever that is), says Noelani Whittington of the Kohala Coast Resort Association. The Kona Hilton is offering two $10 all-you-can-eat eclipse parties, one the night before the eclipse and the other two days later.

— An official Hawaiian eclipse coin, billed as 0.099 percent pure silver, is being sold by Lowe's Rare Coins for $29.95. But it's only $24.95 if you bring a coupon clipped from a local newspaper.

— Eclipse eyeglasses, costing $1.99 each, with which one can allegedly watch the eclipse without risking eye damage are being hawked. Still, "probably the safest and most comfortable method of viewing would be to watch the whole event on television," said local eye doctor John Tsue.

— Coinciding with the eclipse will be one of the oddest and shortest-lived "sports" in history: eclipse diving. While the rest of Hawaii looks up, diver and writer Dick Dresie of the Kona Reefers Dive Club will lead a group under the waves. Their goal is admirably scientific: to observe the reactions of fish to the unexpected darkness.

— Another strange scheme is for 30 parachutists to jump from an aircraft and form a "ring" around the eclipsed sun.

Gridlock is expected on Hawaii roads on eclipse morning as drivers stop to watch the celestial spectacle. Traffic officials are warning drivers to turn on their lights during totality.

Everyone's darkest fear, of course, is a cloudy day. The skies are expected to be clear. But even a cloud-covered eclipse can be an astonishing sight: One sees the lunar shadow approaching on the underside of distant clouds and realizes the shadow is circular –just like the moon. At totality, the entire horizon appears to catch on fire, as if the sun were setting in all directions.

Book royalties make First Dog Millie rich

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millie, the Bush family dog, is now a millionaire, at least vicariously.

President Bush revealed Wednesday that "Millie's Book," the dog's-eye view of life in the White House, has generated $1.1 million in royalties for Barbara Bush's family literacy foundation.

The droll book, thick with pictures of the English springer spaniel with assorted politicians and celebrities, was a best-seller for seven months last autumn and winter.

Mrs. Bush, the ghostwriter, has earmarked all royalties for the non-profit Barbara Bush Foundation for Family Literacy.

Bush, addressing the White House Conference on Libraries and Information Services, jokingly griped that despite Millie's literary success, she still "is not allowed to get a library card."

The robust sales show "the power of books and the power of what can happen," Bush said to loud applause from the librarians.

He paid tribute to librarians as quiet "revolutionaries ... (who) preserve democracy's greatest resource: the ideas that have helped reshape an entire world."

Some 700 voting delegates are attending the five-day conference through Saturday to make policy recommendations to the president and Congress on improving the nation's libraries.

It is the second White House conference on libraries. The first was held in 1979.
