Funding Plagues Other State Hospital Districts

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

MISERY LOVES company, and perhaps Lubbock County residents can find some comfort in knowing theirs is not the only hospital district in the state with money problems.

Houston, Dallas, San Antonio — these are all cities with vast hospital districts and even bigger financial loads. The problems have not appeared overnight in the other communities any more than they have in Lubbock.

As populations grow and medical care for indigents becomes a larger responsibility, hospital districts are having trouble finding funds to keep their programs going.

Many, if not most, hospital districts in Texas are associated with medical education programs as well as supplying care to the indigent. Competition between medical schools creates a constant push for teaching hospitals to buy the newest and most expensive medical equipment available — another financial millstone.

But almost all the hospital districts are crying for the same thing: state or federal aid. In fact, the Lubbock County Hospital District was created with the notion that the state would pick up the tab for a lot of the teaching costs assumed now by Health Sciences Center Hospital.

LCHD officials have been hounding the Texas legislature for help since before the cornerstone for the hospital was laid, but the results have been disappointing.

There have been other disappointments.

In the early years of the hospital's planning, federal money was easily obtained for hospital construction. However, by the time construction actually began on the hospital, an expected $11 million grant had failed to materialize and was replaced by an $8 million loan.

Delaying the payments on that loan until the district is more financially stable has been the issue of negotiations between the local hospital district and the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Early projections also indicated federal help would come through changes in the medicare laws. A survey in 1966 by the Chicago firm of Booz, Allen and Hamilton urged that the hospital be built, and said that the support of out-of-county indigents probably would not be a problem:

"It appears that by 1975 the financial burden for medical care of the indigent will no longer be a responsibility of the local government unit," according to the survey. "Under Title XIX of the new medicare laws, state and federal funds will pay the cost of caring for indigents; therefore, it is unlikely that Lubbock County will need to support care of indigents from other counties."

That prediction now haunts the hospital district, which is shouldering the burden for indigents coming from as far away as New Mexico.

Hoping that a group effort will get some attention, hospital district representatives from across the state will meet in San Antonio Dec. 10 to plan a pitch for state help. This is not the first time the hospital districts have tried a group lobbying effort, but they are including represntatives from state medical schools as well, hoping that will make a difference.

"We have common problems," Tom Fordyce, chairman of the Bexar County Hospital District said recently. "Teaching costs are definitely a problem," he said, and: "The state is not assuming its proper share of the teaching costs."

The state has reserved powers for educating all its citizens, Fordyce stressed. "Why is it they're not assuming their responsibilities in terms of medical education?"

If teaching hospitals — which are labs for medical students — are not funded, Fordyce believes medical training in general will be affected. Everybody would suffer from a slack in medical training, Fordyce claims, not just indigents.

Bexar County's problems are a mirror image of those in Lubbock in many respects. The tax base is largely residential and the financial burden falls on the av-

Variety Of Subjects Raised At Town Hall

By TRAVIS BROWN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

BILLED AS a "town hall meeting," it was apparent that most of the 200 Lubbockites who attended the meeting Saturday came to hear their Congressman speak on the crisis in Iran.

But many of the constituents of Congressman Kent Hance also demonstrated that they had other issues on their minds. Suprisingly, as many questions were asked about the economy and other domestic affairs as were asked about Iran.

Those in the Evans Junior High School auditorium Saturday were concerned about Iran, but they also wanted to know what Hance thought about federally funded abortions, balancing the national budget and the proposed loan to the Chrysler Corp. One woman even asked Hance about limitations on sales of drug paraphenalia to minors.

Elder Applauded

But the emotional climax of the town hall meeting came during the discussion of Iran. The audience applauded a 75-year-old man who stood up to speak against those who criticize the United States.

"And anybody who doesn't like our country, can get out," he said.

Hance opened the meeting with a 20-minute discussion of the events leading up to the holding of 50 American hostages in the American embassy in Iran. The U.S. representative's comprehensive overview may have answered many question that people had on their minds when they came to the meeting.

End May Come Soon

Hance told the audience that he believed a resolution to the crisis might be discovered this week.

His reasons for this hope included the fact that the Moslem religious holidays are ending; the Shah may be leaving the United States; and an election is being held in Iran today to decide if the Ayatollah Khomeini should be given official control of the country.

"You've got to have faith in what we're doing," Hance said. "You've got to

Three Men Arrested In Beating Murder

THREE Mexican-American men wanted in connection with the Nov. 23 death of a 22-year-old Lubbock man were arrested Saturday by Amarillo Police.

Frank G. Vellesca, 52, and his two sons, Marcus, 23, and Adam, 19, have been charged with the murder of Raymond Padilla. Lubbock Justice of the Peace Charles Smith recommended bond for each of the men, all of Amarillo, be set at $100,000.

Padilla, of 3116 Cornell St., was found about 7:45 a.m. Nov. 21 unconscious lying next to a trash dumpster in the 2700 block of Texas Avenue.

An apparent assault victim, Padilla underwent surgery at Health Sciences Center Hosptial for head injuries but died in the hospital at 1:30 a.m. Nov. 23.

Padilla, who became the city's 29th homicide for 1979, apparently died from massive head injuries.

Reports indicate a police desk sergeant said Padilla's sister reported her brother missing about 10 minutes before Padilla was found. The woman reportedly told police her brother had been in a fight with another man in an Avenue H pool hall either late on Nov. 20 or early Nov. 21.

The three suspects will be transferred from Amarillo to the Lubbock County Jail sometime in the next few days.

U.N. Convenes On Iran Crisis

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Donald F. McHenry told the Security Council Saturday that Americans are "seething" with anger over the harsh treatment of 50 American hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and warned again the United States holds Iran "fully responsible" for their safety.

"I speak today for hostages who are endangered by the frenzy and uncertainty of events, by the inhumane conditions under which they are held and by the threat of the authorities in Iran to compound unjust acts through trials," McHenry said.

"The United States insists that its diplomatic personnel be released and its diplomatic premises restored. These are not negotiable matters," he declared.

McHenry First Speaker To Council

McHenry was the first speaker in the council's Saturday night debate on the U.S.-Iranian crisis.

He said the United States sought "a peaceful resolution to this conflict so that the wounds of the past can be healed" and told the council, "There is not a single grievance alleged or spoken in this situation that could not be heard in an appropriate forum."

Earlier, U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim said he spoke by telephone Saturday with Iran's acting foreign minister who expressed interest in a "peaceful, constructive settlement" to the U.S.-Iranian crisis.

Waldheim told reporters his conversation with acting Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh in Tehran showed "the channels are open" for efforts to free the hostages.

"Interest In Settlement"

"I think there is still interest in working out a peaceful, constructive settlement through negotiation," Waldheim added.

The secretary-general spoke with reporters after the 15 members of the Security Council completed private consultations and before the public meeting.

The council was expected to meet again this evening.

Iran was not present for the meeting. It had announced Friday it would not send a representative and would ignore any action by the council.

"Extreme Provocation"

Sen. Frank Church, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who came to the United Nations as a member of a bipartian Congressional delegation, told reporters earlier the United States had shown restraint under "extreme provocation" during the crisis. "That cannot go on indefinitely," the Idaho Democrat added.

Exemption May Soften Area Oil Tax Blow

By RAY WESTBROOK
A-J Business Editor

OIL PRODUCERS in Lubbock, like other energy companies throughout the nation, currently are monitoring the inexorable advance through Congress of the windfall profits tax on crude production.

While independents and majors alike consider the measure an assault upon the free enterprise system in the U.S., the industry now acknowledges that passage of the tax in some form is inevitable.

A recent Senate move to adopt an amendment exempting 1,000 barrels of oil per day for independents, however, may have assuaged the impending legislation's effects for many of this area's producers.

Sponsored by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, the amendment will exempt the first 1,000 barrels of oil per day produced by an operator who can qualify as an independent. Integrated companies (those with operations in more than one sphere of the industry, such as production, refining, transportation and marketing, or with sales above a given level), would not receive the exemption.

The House of Representatives earlier passed its version of the legislation with most of President Carter's original goals intact.

J. Blair Cherry, Lubbock independent, said unlike the Senate version, the House version offers no exemptions. On newly discovered oil, the tax would amount to 60 percent of everything above $16 a barrel. For upper tier oil, 60 percent of anything above $13 a barrel would be taken, and for lower tier oil, the tax would be 60 percent of everything over $6.50 per barrel.

It is estimated that the measure passed by the House, would generate $290 billion in additional taxes by 1990.

The Senate Finance Committee's bill exempts all newly discovered oil (oil from any property that did not produce in 1978), but imposes a larger tax (75 percent) on lower tier oil. Other Senate exemptions include heavy oil, such as that produced in some California fields, tertiary oil, and stripper wells (10 barrels per day or less), and oil sold by the state, such as that from the school lands of Texas.

The total additional tax estimated to result from the Senate's version is expected to be $138 billion by 1990.

When Senate activity on the bill is complete, a compromise measure will be formulated by the House and Senate Conference Committee before returning it to each for a final vote.

Cherry, who produces oil in the Lubbock area, believes the measure will not fall as heavily on major companies as Congress would like.

"The major companies can make their profits, as they have been doing, on their foreign operations, and on their domestic refining, marketing and pipeline operations.

"What will occur is that the tax that is being put on the oil produced will be passed on to the consumer. The consumer is going to pay it — Exxon is not going to."

The Lubbock independent sees another unwelcome aspect to the tax: "The effect of this on the oil industry will be to force the majors to spend the bulk of their exploration budget outside the country where they can get a free market price.

"Why spend big dollars domestically when the government is going to tax it all away, when you can go to Nigeria, Angola, Libya or someplace like that and get the full price?" he asked.

"It's just plain, simple economics."

Cherry added, "The way a free market works, is that if you pay a high price for something, at least the money goes into finding new supplies and increasing production, which hopefully in the long run would lower the price.

"Under this windfall profit deal, the consumer is going to pay more, but he is not going to get the advantage of paying more, because the government is going to siphon off the money."

Cherry believes that passage of the tax — even the Senate Finance Committee version — will result in the reduction of the nation's productive capacity by over 1 million barrels per day by 1985.

"I will guarantee that the passage of this windfall profits tax will result in a worse crisis, and will do nothing whatsoever to help find new production. It's like handing OPEC the knife to hold at our throat."

He noted that Saudi Arabia recently threatened to increase its posted price for oil unless the windfall profits tax were adopted.

"Can you immagine why OPEC might

Snow Victims Take Emergency Shelter Until Streets Clear

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Snow was piled nearly 2 feet deep in Buffalo Saturday, and several hundred people were camping out in schools and offices until the streets could be cleared.

Some dined on emergency rations, while one group sent next door for pizza and chicken wings.

The students, teachers and travelers at South Park High School were among hundreds forced to stay overnight in schools and factories in south Buffalo after a near-record snowfall in western New York.

Elsewhere, record cold greeted people across much of the Sun Belt. Temperatures were in the 20s in Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana and Georgia — even as far south as Jacksonville, Fla., where it was 28 degrees, the coldest Dec. 1 in 102 years.

The snowstorm swept into western New York on Thursday, picked up huge amounts of moisture while blowing across the unfrozen Great Lakes, and by Saturday had left up to 3 feet of snow in some places.

The storm was blamed for the deaths of at least two people, including a man whose car slid into snowplow blade in Elma, N.Y. Nearly all major roads were jammed by slow-moving traffic and abandoned vehicles, and a 60-mile stretch of the New York Thruway was closed.

Although squalls were expected to continue through the weekend, the snowfall let up Saturday and road crews started making headway.

Buffalo Mayor James Griffin ordered all traffic to stay out of south Buffalo, the hardest hit area of the city.

About 250 people waited at six schools for crews to clear the streets. And more than 100 workers spent Friday night and much of Saturday at businesses and plants in the area.

At South Park High, four pupils, 15 teachers and about 50 stranded travelers spent the night in the school and found that they could make do.

"We were amply supplied with food," said John Mogavero, assistant principal. "We are fortunate to have a pizza shop beside the school. We had deliveries brought in. Last night, we had pizza and chicken wings. This morning we cooked eggs and toast for breakfast.

"We were pretty comfortable. We used the gym for stranded travelers, spreading mats around for them to sleep on. The rest of us had cots at different places in the building."

At the Allied Chemical Corp. plant about 20 to 30 workers were stranded overnight. Todd Adams, the plant accountant, said the plant has kept emergency food supplies on hand since the blizzard of 1977.

During that storm, Buffalo and much of western New York was paralyzed for several days in late January. Thousands of people were stranded and food had to be moved in on an emergency basis.

"Ever since the blizzard, we've had a freezer wih food provisions in it," Adams said. "We also have a microwave oven."

The storm reached Buffalo on Friday and dumped 20.1 inches of snow by Saturday, a near record snowfall for a 24-hour period. The record one-day snowfall for Buffalo was recorded Dec. 15-16, 1945, when 24.3 inches fell.

Elsewhere Saturday, snow fell over the Great Lakes and in parts of the Dakotas, Nebraska, Oregon and Washigton. It was cloudy over southern Florida and southern Texas, and from northern California into western Montana. Most of the rest of the nation had sunny skies.

Temperatures at midday ranged from 8 degrees in International Falls, Minn., and Laramie, Wyo., to 82 degrees in Miramar, Calif.

The forecast for Sunday called for more snow over the lower Great Lakes, the upper Ohio Valley, the north Atlantic coast and the Northern Plateau. Rain was expected along parts of the Pacific coast and possibly in south-central Texas. The Great Basin, northern Rockies and mid-Atlantic coast were expected to be cloudy, with sun predicted elsewhere.

Temperatures in the 60s and 70s were predicted for southern parts of Florida, California and Arizona. The rest of California, western Oregon, the Gulf and south Atlantic coasts and the southern Plains were expecting temperatures in the 50s.

Over the north Atlantic coast, Ohio Valley, Great Lakes and upper Mississippi Valley, it was expected to be in the 20s and 30s.

Temperatures and conditions Saturday afternoon in some key cities around the nation included:

Eastern U.S.: Atlanta 46 fair, Boston 39 partly cloudy, B fair, Cincinnati 40 windy, Cleveland 30 snow, Detroit 29 snow, Knoxville 45 fair, Miami 68 partly cloudy, Nashville 47 fair, New York 39 fair, Philadelphia 40 fair, Pittsburgh 34 partly cloudy, Washington 46 fair.

Tribe Wants Funds For Medicine Man

BARAGA, Mich. (UPI) — Along the shores of Lake Superior, a group of Chippewa Indians wants to convince officials that federal money should be spent to hire a $28,000-a-year medicine man for their alcoholism treatment program.

One official called the request "a bunch of bull from people who don't even know what a medicine man is."

But Pat Racett, director of the Keweenaw Bay Chippewa Tribal Center in this Upper Peninsula village, said hiring a medicine man is a good idea. But the main problem, he said, is no medicine man has been found for the job.

"It would be the equivalent of bringing in a psychiatrist or a psychologist who can deal with traditional Indian values," he said of the medicine man's "spiritual" role in the alcoholism treatment program.

Racett said as many as 25 percent of the Indians who go to the 17-bed alcoholism treatment center could use a medicine man's talents, which could be paid from a $222,000 grant being sought by the 60,000-member tribe.

"We have a number of people interested, to a degree, in traditional medicine, getting into Indian traditional costumes and meanings," he said.

Last summer, a 42-year-old Oibwa Indian, George C. Councillor, was hired to treat illnesses at the Lake of the Woods District Hospital in Kenora, Ont.

He was the first Indian medicine man to be employed full time by a North American hospital but Councillor died in a boating accident shortly after he was hired.

"There are only a few recognized truly traditional medicine men," Racett said. "We would probably have to bring someone in from the Canadian area, or from Wisconsin or Minnesota."

But some area residents are not enthralled by the idea.

"An Indian person is no different from anyone else," said Verna Lawrence, a member of the Upper Peninsula Health Systems Agency substance abuse advisory committee.

"All he's got to do to stop drinking is stop bending his arm," said Mrs. Lawrence, who is half Chippewa.

She also said the Keweenaw Bay Chippewas "are integrated into society.

"This would be a farce. It's money down a rathole."

But Mrs. Lawrence lost her fight Friday when the committee recommended the money, including the funds for the medicine man's salary and expenses, be requested from the National Institute for Alcoholism and Drug Abuse.

"This money would be utilized just like money for another other spiritual adviser," said Charlotte Hewitt, associate director of the agency.

Fair Skies, Warming Trend Predicted For South Plains

Beautiful autumn weather is in store for the South Plains today with fair skies again, light winds and a high temperature in the middle-50s.

The National Weather Service expects even warmer weather Monday when the high temperature in the Lubbock area is expected to be in the upper 50s.

The thermometer, however, will plunge again tonight into the mid-20s.

The long-range forecast, Monday through Thursday, calls for continued fair skies and a warming trend. Daytime temperatures are expected to reach into the 60s and possibly the 70s by Thursday.

A high pressure system from northwestern Colorado with a ridge of high pressure extending to the Central Texas Coast is bringing the expected slow warming trend.

Islamic World Taking Dual Sides On Issue

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter's comment at his news conference that "every Islamic country" has condemned Iran for taking the American hostages "and has been very supportive" of the Uited States may be stretching things a bit.

There has been support, but it has been scattered and often tempered with warnings against the United States trying to settle the issue by force.

A sampling of press comments gathered by the U.S. government shows the events in Iran have sharply divided the Moslem world along unpredictable and complicated lines.

For example, although Libya issued a statement opposing the takeover, the Libyan ambassador to Kuwait, presumably acting on his government's instructions, held a news conference in which he supported Iran.

The Libyan ambassador ended the news conference, according to the Kuwaiti account, "by calling on all Arabs to side with the Iranian people in confronting American threats hostile to their aspirations."

Iraq, which has been hostile the United States, but even more hostile to Iran because of a territorial dispute, experienced ideological contortions trying to decide what to do.

That nation's official party organ resolved the dilemma by denouncing Iran's actions "for persistently carrying out the role of serving the American aggression ... and giving the United States a threat to intervene in the Middle East."

Syria, which has become anti-American because of the U.S. Role in setting up the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, also is denouncing Washington.

The Damascus domestic radio accused the United States of being involved in the takeover of the Mecca mosque. The government-run radio station, the next day, also said:

"The U.S. administration is seeking to crush Iran's patriotic decision because it was against the U.S. hegemony and harms the affluence enjoyed by the monopolist society at the expense of the plundered nations."

Tunisia, however, asked Iran to release the hostages.

Egypt has strongly supported the Uited States, calling repeatedly for the hostages to be released and for any problems to be worked out in the United Nations.

Egypt also has offered asylum to the former shah and President Anwar Sadat has called Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini a "lunatic."

The ruling Algerian politburo issued a statement making no mention of the hostages, but "condemned the measures taken by the American government aimed at creating serious economic problems in Iran and also condemns U.S. threats of military interference, manuevers and military preparations."

State Department officials say some countries that have vocally supported the ranian actions or have remained silent have been helpful serving as diplomatic channels. Officials say the usefulness of such countries depends on their retaining a friendly public attitude towards Iran.

Community Hospital Sets Four Week Class On Childbirth

Community Hospital of Lubbock, 5301 University Ave., is sponsoring a childbirth preparation class for women planning to deliver at the hospital, administrator Walt Allinger announced this week.

The classes are set for four weeks at 7 p.m. on Wednesdays beginning Dec. 5.

The course provides couples with information on pregnancy, labor, delivery and newborn care. Exercises and comfort measures for pregnancy and labor also are discussed.

The class includes instruction on the Lamaze breathing techniques to help mothers cope during the stress of labor and delivery.

The instruction will be given by Kathy Melcher, R.N., and Nita Bolender, both certified instructors in childbirth preparation.

The class also will make women aware of the new birthing chair just obtained by Community Hospital. According to Mrs. Frances Walker, R.N., director of nursing at the hospital, the birthing chair provides a better physiological position for women during childbirth.

"We want to gear the classes to our own hospital environment. I think the classes will work really well to help the patient understand childbirth and to be more comfortable while in labor. I think the course does delete a lot of the fear for the woman," Mrs. Walker said.

The fee for the class is $25, however, other financial arrangements may be made. To register for the classes, call the hospital at 795-9301 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The expectant mother and a support person may attend the sessions.

Television Commercials Not Always Loudest

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Television commercials may seem louder than programs, but two researchers found only slight differences when they took measurements.

Richard C. Potter of Bolt Beranek and Newman Inc. in Cambridge, Mass., and John F. Potter of Lincoln-Sudbury High School in Sudbury, Mass., reported their findings recently at a meeting of the Acoustical Society of America.

They found comedy and sports programs averaged slightly louder — one decibel — than the commercials in the programs.

World War III Feared By Libyan Leader

MILAN, Italy (UPI) — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy says he has asked Iran to release the American hostages because the United States is preparing "neutron bombs" and he fears the beginning of World War III.

"I have bad news: American military bases in Europe are being mobilized," Khadafy told Italian journalist Oriana Fallaci in an interview to be published in Sunday's Corriere della Sera.

"The Americans are preparing parachutists and holding maneuvers with tanks, missiles, gas, neutron bombs and things of that nature," he said. "Yes, a major mobilization. A serious thing.

"If this is truly the beginning of World War III, we must use all our means to stop things from precipitating," he said. "I am seeking to convince the Iranians to release the hostages."

Khadafy said an Iranian delegation "composed of men very close to Khomeini" had gathered in Tripoli.

"I will give them a personal message for the iman asking him to release the hostages," Khadafy said. "This business is becoming too dangerous."

The Libyan strongman said the attacks against American embassies in Tehran and other nations were all part of an "international revolution against America."

"These things are happening because the people hate America," he said. "We are seeing a burst of hate against America. Everyone hates America, everyone: not just the Moslem nations."

Khadafy said he understood why Iranian students had occupied the U.S. Embassy in Tehran though he "personally" opposed the taking of hostages, particularly those belonging to a diplomatic mission.

"You must understand that certain things happen during a revolution," he said. "Revolutions are sometimes chaotic. There isn't even a government in Iran, the students are acting without governmental control.

"Therefore, the incident at the U.S. embassy is not part of a normal conflict between two states, it can't be judged with traditional criteria or, even less, dealt with by traditional methods."

Khadafy warned that "in case of an American attack on Iran, we will not sit still with our hands tied."

Anyway, Khadafy told Miss Fallaci, "I am very happy that the revolution came to Iran and was twice successful: once when they threw out the shah and once when they threw out the Americans.

"I believe that my role as a revolutionary has been reinforced by the revolution in Iran," said Khadafy, whose Revolutionary Command Council came to power in Libya in a 1969 coup d'etat.

Khadafy said OPEC nations were studying the possibility of boycotting the U.S. dollar and substituting it for other currencies. He said not only Iran, Iraq, Algeria and Libya favored the move but also Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the Arab Emirates.

Asked about the threat of an oil embargo, Khadafy said: "Undoubtably it is time to use petroleum as a political weapon and we are already on that road."

He said the embargo would also be extended to include those European nations "who stand by American and therefore are our enemies."

World War Could Be Ahead, Leaders Warn

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Two House Democratic leaders warned Saturday the crisis in Iran could plunge the world into a new war.

House Democratic leader Jim Wright of Texas, suggesting Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini may be insane, said the Iranian religious leader's actions could trigger a war.

Assistant Democratic leader John Brademas of Indiana also warned that the events in Iran were "an ever more dangerous minefield ... for the United States, for Iran and potentially for other nations of the world."

Wright said wars had been touched off by fanatics in the past and called for "skill and restraint" by world leaders to prevent the Middle East crisis from escalating into a war.

"Like many such instances, it has been triggered by a fanatic in a tinderbox," he said. "This time it is the Ayatollah Khomeini — who may indeed by insane — in a collapsing nation made important by oil."

In a statement on the Middle East, Wright noted that World War I was triggered by "an assassin in a minor Balkan state."

"Another fanatic, John Brown, led a raid on Harper's Ferry, Va., which so inflamed passions in the United States that some historians believe the war between the states became inevitable," he said.

"I do not mean to imply that the events in Iran and in other Moslem nations necessarily will lead to war or catastrophe," Wright continued. "That could happen, but it will not if nations and leaders perform sensibly and with both skill and restraint.

The House majority leader said Khomeini will "fail as a leader" because he is not addressing the real problems of Iran.

"He has, with temporary success, fallen back upon the time-worn refuge of the demagogue — if you have no solution, find a scapegoat," Wright said. "In blaming the United States for the attack on Mecca's Great Mosque, Khomeini is using the same technique Hitler used when he accused his enemies of setting fire to the Reichstag, a fire set by Hitler's own henchmen."

"Just as the American people have united in support of the hostages in Tehran, I believe the American people will now unite behind the drive to free our nation from independence on oil imports," Wright said.

Brademas, in a speech prepared for delivery at the University of Notre Dame, said there was a great gap in American knowledge about the Middle East and called for greater emphasis on Mideast and Islamic studies by American colleges and universities.

While Americans are familiar with the Christian and Judaic religions, he said, there is "no such history experience in our country with the religion of Islam and with those who call themselves Moslems."

The House whip said even educated and politically sophisticated Americans had not paid "serious attention" to the Middle East until the Arab oil boycott of 1973.

"Events in succeeding years have caused Americans to realize that the day of our isolation from the Middle East is, whether we like it or not, over," he said.

Helicopters May Aid Coastal Logging

PARKSVILLE, British Columbia (AP) — Within the next decade about 10 percent of British Columbia's coastal logging could be done by huge, military-style helicopters, a forest company executive says.

Bob Sitter, vice-president of forestry and logging of Whonnock Forest Products Ltd., said his company is already doing up to 15 percent of its logging by helicopter.

"This year there are six large helicopters working on the coast and each one is capable of replacing an 80-to 100-man logging camp," Sitter said in an interview at this Vancouver Island resort during a conference Friday on conflicts in resource industries.

He said the machine his company uses is U.S. built, designed originally for military use and capable of carrying 35 passengers.

"Now we can look at the whole coast of B.C. and know we can log every tree within a mile of the water. We can log even on a high bluff. We've logged as high as 7,000 feet."

MEDICAL STUDENTS NUMEROUS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enrollment in the nation's 126 medical schools has reached a record high of 63,000 during the current academic year, the Association of American Medical Colleges says. Dr. John A.D. Cooper, association president, said, however, the figure represents a 2.5 percent growth rate over the previous year — the smallest increase in the past five years.

Prison Renovation Plan Submitted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has sent to President Carter a plan for complete renovation of the Leavenworth, Kan., federal prison, one of the oldest in the nation.

The proposal, included in a House-Senate compromise on a bill providing funding for the Department of Justice, calls for the maximum security prison to be renovated into a medium-security facility by 1985.

It also calls for the inmate population, now at about 1,500, to be cut to 500 unless further study by the U.S. Bureau of Prisons shows a larger number of inmates would make the facility more efficient.

Herbicide Determined Cause In Dog Poisonings

A deadly herbicide normally used to defoliate crops is the cause of a rash of dog poisonings this past week in a rural neighborhood just east of Lubbock, two local veterinarians allege.

The veterinarians, Lubbock Humane Society officials and a local representative of the company that manufactures the liquid herbicide, paraquat,are investigating the possibility that the dogs were deliberately poisoned.

So far, at least 10 dogs have died or were put to sleep as a result of ingesting the herbicide, but officials have yet to determine how the dogs were poisoned or whether it was done deliberately.

"I am suspicious that the poisonings were deliberate because of the number of dogs that showed the same symptoms and the fact that they all come from the same neighborhood," said Dr. Sonja Lee.

Dr. Lee had sent urine samples from one of the dogs to a lab in California where paraquat is made. She received the positive results late Friday.

Dr. Lee said the lab reported there was a "considerable amount" of paraquat in the dog's urine sample, enough to kill a full grown dog. She said the lab reported that a dose of four ounces of paraquat was lethal for humans, and that one-third of that could be lethal to dogs.

One resident in the area of the reported poisonings has posted a $100 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible.

E.F. Harvey, who lives on Pound Road just east of Loop 289 and south of Acuff Road, already has lost his two dogs and believes the poisonings were deliberate.

"I posted the reward because it seems funny that almost all the dogs in the area are sick with the same symptoms. So somebody must have done it deliberately," he said.

Harvey lost a full-blooded German shepherd and a mixture of half collie and half German shepherd.

Another resident of the area, Doris Littlefield, has lost an Alaskan malamute and a German shepherd as a result of the poisoning, and she too says it was deliberate.

"We keep our dogs chained up in the back yard, and they're never allowed to run free. So I can't help feeling it was deliberate."

Mrs. Littlefield said she first noticed her dogs were sick last Saturday (Nov. 24), when they refused to eat.

Dr. Bob Faulk, who also is investigating the poisonings, also believes it was a deliberate act because if it had been an accidental spraying of paraquat, the people in the area would have gotten sick, too.

"When I went out to the area last week, the fields had all been harvested. It's a little late in the season to be spraying the fields."

Rick Smith, local representative of the Chevron Chemical Co. which makes paraquat, said the cotton farmers stopped spraying their fields with paraquat more than a month ago, to prepare the fields for harvest.

Smith said he has talked to several persons in the neighborhood but added his investigation of what might have happened is continuing.

Patty Bradley of the Lubbock Humane Society said her investigations into the incident makes it look deliberate to her, too.

"I heard rumors that someone was placing poison bait along the railroad tracks that run close to the area, but nobody was naming names."

She said deliberately poisoning dogs would be classified as a class A misdemeanor, which calls for up to a year in prison and a $2,000 fine. Bradley also said the affected dog owners could file civil suits for damages.

Dr. Faulk said paraquat-infected animals have a hard time breathing and that it could take anywhere from 24 hours to a week before the animal dies.

"The infected animal suffers horribly before he dies. The animal will have a hard time breathing because his lungs fill up with fluid."

Dr. Faulk said that because paraquat is so deadly to both humans and animals, it should be banned from use as a defoliant.

Dr. Lee advised pet owners that if they see their dogs or cats eating something they haven't given them to induce vomiting immediately and then contact their veterinarian for further treatment.

"If we don't catch it fast enough, the animal probably won't survive," she said.

Dr. Faulk said dog owners can train their pets not to scrounge for food by hooking an electrical shock to some bait. When the dog touches the bait, he gets a shock and learns quickly not to eat anything except the food given to him by his owner.

Scientists Studying Shroud Of Turin Not To Take Stand

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (AP) — A member of the team of scientists studying the Holy Shroud of Turin says the group does not plan to take a stand on its authenticity.

Robert H. Dinegar, a chemist for Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory, said that the scientists would publish their findings and leave it up to others to interpret what those results mean for the shroud, which is revered by some people as the burial shroud of Jesus Christ.

Dinegar, who also is associate rector of Trinity on the Hill Episcopal Church in Los Alamos, declined comment on news reports that quoted another member of the team, Thomas D'Muhala, as saying there was mounting circumstantial evidence that the shroud was the burial cloth of Jesus.

"We, as a group of scientists, are not going to interpret the data," Dinegar said. "We're just going to put out what we have."

He said the team hopes to begin publishing findings early next year.

D'Muhala, president of Nuclear Technologies Corp. in Amston, Conn., was quoted last month as saying all the scientists he had talked to believe the cloth to be authentic.

"Some say maybe this is a love letter, a tool he (Jesus) left behind for the analytical mind," D'Muhala said.

The shroud, which measures 14 feet by three feet, is kept in a silver casket in a Roman Catholic Cathedral in Turin, Italy. The archbishop of Turin, the guardian of the shroud, permitted a group of 40 scientists to make non-destructive tests of the cloth for six days in October 1978.

'The Nutcracker' Proves To Be Crowd-Pleaser

By WILLIAM D. KERNS
A-J Entertainment Editor

A-J BALLET REVIEW

Christmas-time performances of "The Nutcracker" have long been a tradition in the world of ballet, and for good reason. The ballet is not as demanding as the more classical works, it is more family-oriented and can include a lot of fantasy and sugary dreams which even the smallest child can embrace. Lubbock Civic Ballet, with the help of several other dancers and two professional artists now dancing with the Chicago Ballet, is currently keeping that tradition alive with a performance which — despite being more impressive for its individual performances than its group offering — proved to be a definite crowd-pleaser on opening night Friday at the Civic Center theater.

For reasons unknown, the storyline wavers from the classic versions. For example, whereas the most accepted version has the young child Clara creeping into the family living room to try to repair the nutcracker broken by her brother, Lubbock Civic Ballet's story has the toy already repaired during an earlier party scene. Why Clara goes back to the living room is anyone's guess. The second act also lacks clarity; only those familiar with the ballet will understand exactly where Clara and her prince have gone, and just who is entertaining them and why.

As it stands, Act Two is but a series of dances, unconnected no matter how appealing. Indeed, Lubbock Civic Ballet's 1979 "Nutcracker" lacks cohesion and stresses the visual aspect (costumes and color) more than any other — but this is not to say it is not entertaining. Quite the contrary. Though inconsistent, this "Nutcracker" is a very enjoyable rendition which easily fills the bill for a family outing.

The performance opens with a grand Christmas party at Clara's home. Narrator William G. Hartwell III introduces, in hammy phrasing obviously geared toward the youngsters, the guests and the action. Rick Houston's appearance as the mystical toymaker Drosselmeyer saw the children in the audience leaning forward, as he created dancing dolls and bears from puffs of smoke. He also introduced the first superb individual performance, that of Yvonne Racz as the dancing doll. Her mime-like "mechanical" movements seemed always graceful, and she managed to display a great deal of ability and strength in a too-brief routine.

The swarm of kids on stage were entertaining and impressive, and the part of Fritz, Clara's mischievious kid brother, couldn't have been better cast. Young Michael Lamberts was a superb scene-stealer Friday, set off from the rest by an aura of energy. All eyes were on him. Indeed, one local actor was heard to remark after the show, "I sure wouldn't want to share a stage with that kid."

The dream sequence in the second scene, in which Clara discovers an army of mice waging battle with the nutcracker prince and the toy soldiers, was a real hoot. Designed for the children, even the adults were laughing at the melodramatic goings-on, with the exaggerated moments of Clara's fainting and the Mouse King's s-l-o-w, agonizing death scene earning spontaneous applause. On a more serious note, Elizabeth Gillas' dance performance as the Snow Queen, as well as her subsequent appearances, was impressive in its quiet skill and ramatic intensity. Indeed, the Civic Ballet still has room for a lot of improvement (the falling "snowflakes" Friday were lovely, but sounded more like icebergs landing) — but hope for the future is present, providing the company gears its new productions around the talents of Miss Racz and Miss Gillas.

Act Two was but a series of specialty choreography, performed for Clara and her prince in the land of the Sugar Plum Fairy. While the animal costumes and gay colors — not to mention a very Christmasy backdrop — added to the pleasant atmosphere, only certain individuals stood out. Houston re-appeared as Mother Buffoon, a delightful sequence which provided nothing in the way of dance but quite a lot in the way of laughs as clowns kept emerging from beneath his dress. The sequence featuring "Russian dancers," an automatic crowd pleaser every year, was extremely ill-timed, but rewarding nevertheless for the work of John Paul Mouldin.

Mouldin was also extremely impressive as the dew drop's cavalier a bit later. Friday's "Arabian dancers" were also skillful.

The professionals who journeyed to Lubbock to guest with the ballet are Christine Redpath and Steve Majenicz, both of whom were warmly accepted at Friday's performance. And why not? The two worked wonderfully together, adding a sense of style and drama and grace badly needed at that point. Majenicz impressed with his individual spins and lifts, and Miss Repath more than once earned applause with her solo efforts. One only wonders why they were not more prominently featured in the program.

Still, overall one must call Lubbock Civic Ballet's "The Nutcracker" a success. The visuals put all but the Scrooges in the Christmas spirit, the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra offered capable accompaniment, the children in the sellout crowd got to laugh, the adults were never bored and those who have followed Lubbock Civic Ballet and choreographer Neil Hess enjoyed seeing marked improvement from its previous performance in the opera "Faust."

There is a final performance slated for 2:30 p.m. today at the Civic Center theater; word has it that this performance, too, is fast approaching sellout status.

AFTERTHOUGHTS: While kudos go out to the cast and crew for its handling of certain stage mishaps (like the prince's sleigh which barely made it off stage), I'm afraid I do have a few gripes to air. First, at one point a prop was left on stage before a dramatic dance sequence; it should have been removed. Second, while I see nothing wrong with selling Christmasy souvenirs in the lobby, I find it reprehensible to hawk these items from the stage during intermissions. A civic Ballet official did just that Friday, having the same effect as a Saturday morning cartoon commercial, with kids saying, "Daddy, buy me one" or "Mommy, get me a souvenir."

Finally, the program handed out at the door is absolutely miserable. Not only did ballet officials choose to devote an entire page to committee members (does anyone but the committee members really care?), absolutely no space at all was granted to the backgrounds of the guest artists. Also, and this is my biggest gripe, many parts were double-cast and yet the program never noted which dancer was performing on which night. Only by asking around was I able to find out the names of those performing. There is no excuse for this sloppiness, which is just as unfortunate for the dancers as it is for the audience since those featured cannot receive proper recognition.

Surrogate Mother Wanted By Couple

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Unable to have children of their own, a Louisville couple are trying to become parents with the help of a paid surrogate mother, according to their attorney and their physician.

Under the arrangement they seek, the husband would father a child with another woman by artificial insemination, the Courier-Journal reported Saturday in a copyright story. The woman would be paid to carry the child to term and then give it to the couple.

Katie Marie Brophy, the couple's attorney, said she believes — if the effort is successful — that it will be the first time a child has been born by a paid surrogate in the United States.

The couple want to remain anonymous for the time being, Miss Brophy said. They are looking for someone willing to take part through a classified advertisement that began running Nov. 24 in the Courier-Journal and the Louisville Times.

Miss Brophy and Dr. Richard M. Levin, a fertility specialist, said the prospective parents are in their early 30s and have been married for four or five years. They have one adopted child.

Levin said doctors had found the wife unable to conceive and surgery had failed to help her. Levin told the couple about the surrogate mother procedure, which he knew had been used to produce five children in Michigan and several more in New York. But in the Michigan and New York cases, the surrogates were unpaid volunteers.

Levin said the Louisville case will involve a contract to ensure all parties to the transaction are aware of its details.

LANDING GEAR DOORS STICK

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — An Eastern Airlines DC-9 landed safely at Douglas Municipal Airport on Saturday with its landing gear doors open, scraping the runway as it touched down, FAA officials said. Jim Harben, FAA control team supervisor, said Flight 353 landed safely, although the scraping of the doors caused sparks. Eastern officials in Miami said there were 23 passengers aboard the flight from Newark, N.J., to Charlotte.

Taxi Driver Gets Reward For Honesty

NEW YORK (AP) — A cab driver told a Florida advertising executive Saturday he was just doing the right thing by turning in the $33,000 rare coin collection the man left in his taxi, but the driver is going to get a big reward.

Cabbie Michael Konaplanik of Staten Island told Tom Morley he was baffled when he found the 14 United States coins in a cardboard box on the back seat of his cab.

The cabbie discovered the coins Thursday after dropping Morley at Kennedy Airport for his flight home to Cocoa, Fla. The executive had just purchased the 18th century coins, part of Johns Hopkins University's Garrett Collection, at an auction at the St. Moritz Hotel and left them in Konaplanik's cab.

Morley quoted Konaplanik as saying it was not until his son told him he had read about the missing coins in the newspaper that he realized the value of the box.

The cabbie took the coins to the St. Moritz Hotel late Friday.

Meanwhile, Morley had spent the day desperately searching city cab registration records in hopes of locating the vehicle he had taken.

He underwent hypnosis to recall the cab's identification numbers and cross-referenced bits of information about the cab and the driver, looking at records at the city's Taxi and Limousine Commission.

Finally, with the commission's offices closed for the weekend, the executive boarded an early morning flight home Saturday.

"I was in agony all the way down here," said Morley after arriving home.

But when he walked in the door, his son, Todd, told him the coins had been found.

Morley immediately called Konaplanik to thank him and promised to put a $1,000 cashier's check in the mail and up to $1,000 worth of "things he likes."

"I didn't think we'd ever get them back," said Morley's wife, Iris. "I should have had more faith ... The cab driver was so honest."

Disabled Vet Returns Lost Money Bag

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Some friends of Ray Kaquatosh have been telling the disabled veteran lately that he was too honest for returning a lost money bag.

Four weeks ago, while shopping at a Target store in suburban Wauwatosa, Kaquatosh found a bank bag on the floor with $1,254.17 in it. Officials said a clerk had apparently put the bag on a counter and it fell off.

Kaquatosh said that when he turned the money in, the clerk to whom he gave the money told him the store gives rewards for return of money.

Last week, Kaquatosh got a letter from store manager Ted Schwab, thanking him for turning in the bank bag and saying "many people would have walked off with the money not saying a word about it."

Schwab told the Milwaukee Journal, which had heard about the good deed from a friend of Kaquatosh, that it was against store policy to provide a reward.

But after the Journal talked to Schwab, a Target executive from Minneapolis, senior vice president C.J. Miller, called the newspaper and said Kaquatosh would get a $100 reward.

"I've been called stupid and dumb," said Kaquatosh, an unemployed Menominee Indian who lives on a veteran's pension of $197 a month. "They (the friends) said I should have kept it and forgot it."

But Kaquatosh, who suffered a leg injury while serving with the Marines in World War II, said he had never considered keeping the money, adding, "Somewhere along the line the great spirit will reward me."

"He did a ... nice thing," said Miller. "And we hope he'll spend the money at Target."

Israeli Labor Party Leader Denounces Khomeini's Rule

NEW YORK (UPI) — Shimon Peres, the Israeli Labor Party leader and former prime minister, Saturday denounced the rule of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, comparing him to the late Soviet leader V.I. Lenin.

Peres, leader of the opposition to Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, said the ayatollah's rule is "Communism with God. Khomeini has the same appeal as Lenin — The call for purity, the call for self-control.

"He appears to carry with him the spirit of a bitter, fanatic religious impatience. We have a dark age in a religion that was otherwise successful and powerful."

In a speech to the Jewish Labor Committee in Manhattan's Roosevelt Hotel, Peres also criticized the response of U.S. allies to the crisis in Iran.

"In the face of such a danger," Peres said, "I would expect all free countries to be united."

Peres said a stand should be taken against "violence and the taking of hostages" rather than against Moslems, Arabs or Iranians.

"Unless we stand against them," he said of terrorists and their tactics, "we shall suffer separately."

Texas Taking Newer Image — That Of Probable Oil Importer

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Oil, it's one of the first things that comes to mind when Texas is mentioned.

And Texans traveling in distant lands such as England, Japan or Ohio find many folks believe, or would like to believe, that everyone in Texas either owns a big cattle ranch or a big oil field, or both.

More sophisticated folks, of course, know that's not true, but still seem to believe that nearly every acre in Texas lies over a big oil deposit, and that about the only thing needed to solve the nation's energy problem is to go out and stick a pipe in the ground.

Unfortunately, the sad truth of the matter is that Texas has been moving in recent years from being a net exporter of energy to being a net importer of energy.

Part of the reason is that Texas is just running out of oil.

Railroad Commissioner John Poerner underscored that fact, upon which the RRC has been harping for years, at the November statewide allowable hearing.

Last spring, Poerner noted, he predicted that Texas would produce less than one billion barrels of crude oil for the first time in 15 years.

RRC estimates indicate that Texas will produce 980.4 million barrels this year. In 1978 the total was 1.04 billion.

That's not good news for anyone, and it's especially not good news for Texans.

A good portion of state revenues come in from oil and gas taxes and royalties, although sales tax is the biggest revenue producer.

They also have gone into creating the Permanent School Fund and Permanent University Fund.

Increased oil and gas revenues also have contributed to the state's having large "surpluses" in recent years allowing legislators to avoid having to raise other taxes, or impose new ones.

Oil also has been the basis for the development of the massive petrochemical industry in Texas.

Depending on whose figures one uses, Texas has produced from one-fourth to one-third of the energy produced in the United States, which makes the state's energy situation even more ironic.

For years, natural gas users in South and Central Texas found themselves in the situation of paying more for their fuel than residents of New England despite the fact that gas was being produced here.

Now, there is what would appear to be the curious spectacle of the State of Texas attacking the State of Montana for increasing the cost of energy to Texas residents by imposing a 30 per cent severance tax upon coal, which Texas utilities need, because they're eliminating the use of oil and gas (especially the latter) to help provide more fuel for residents of other states.

Texas' pleadings in that legal action note that federal studies indicate Texas is bearing half the total national cost of oil-to-coal conversions.

Also interestingly, many Texans, just as many other Americans, still believe the current energy situation is contrived by the oil companies to increase their profits, although that view seems to be well received among a shrinking minority of Texans.

Indeed, the oil companies have profited as the cost of oil has risen, just as the State of Texas has done for several years.

The point for Texans is that the destiny of Texas remains tied in good part to what happens with its oil.

But the sad part of the present controversy over oil profits and the proposed windfall profits tax is that even if there's more drilling, that doesn't mean there will be more oil found.

Like the old song says "Whatcha gonna do when the well runs dry...?"

Only for Texas the situation will be a lot grimmer than the death of a few crawdads.

Bureau Seeks Sponsors For Yule Program

Activities of the United Way's Christmas Clearance Bureau are underway for the 25th year in Lubbock, according to David Miller, chairman of the Community Planning Council that oversees the coordinating organization.

"It takes the Marines, the Salvation Army and you to bring Christmas to every home," Miller said. "That is the theme for our 25th anniversary of clearing, coordinating and providing Christmas food, toys and cheer to the underprivileged in Lubbock.

"The Christmas Clearance Bureau will help avoid the duplication of effort that occurs when people in organizations, and individually, strive to help others during this season," he said.

Last year, 962 families and individuals were cleared for help through the bureau. The Toys for Tots program of the Marine Corps Reserve and the Salvation Army's toy provision, distributed over 6,800 toys to 2,189 children. This year, toy vouchers will be mailed on Dec. 12 and toy distribution will be handled at the Navy Reserve building, 2903 4th Street on December 20 and 21.

The Salvation Army provided food orders last year to 604 families. In addition, 69 individuals were invited to share Christmas dinner and hospitality at the Salvation Army Dining Hall. This program is provided through private donations and Christmas Cheer kettle contributions.

Individuals, organizations, churches, businesses and school groups sponsored 188 families for Christmas baskets, toys, gift items and clothing last year.

According to Miller, persons wishing to sponsor families this year should contact the bureau at 747-2711 and a family will be provided to fit the desires of the sponsor.

Miller also said the Christmas Clearance Bureau again will seek gifts and sponsorships for people in Lubbock's nursing homes. Last year, 186 elderly people were supplied gifts through the help of a number of organizations and individuals.

Representative Endorses Carter For President

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter won an endorsement for re-election Friday from Rep. Charles Rangel, a New York Democrat.

"To have your support in 1980 is a great credit to you and your political judgment and my policies," Carter joked in the Cabinet Room during the announcement, to which the White House invited television cameras and reporters.

Rangel, who was accompanied by 25 elected Democratic officials from his district, said they would all work for Carter's re-election. He said Carter has "been good for the cities," adding that the "real question is whether the nation can afford a change."

Steel Plants' Closure To Sting Economy

McDONALD, Ohio (AP) — Still troubled by the closing of a big steel operation two years ago, the Mahoning Valley has been hit with another shock — the impending loss of three more plants and the jobs of 5,000 people.

"Ordinarily we would be playing Christmas music," said Alberta Baumhauer, secretary to mayor Tom Leskovac. "But we just don't feel like it now."

This village of 4,000 people, built by U.S. Steel Corp. 65 years ago when it opened its McDonald Works, will lose 72 percent of its payroll withholding tax collections when the works close in mid 1980. Village Clerk Ed Bush says $350,000 of the $487,000 tax collected this year came from U.S. Steel employees.

Only a few hundred U.S. Steel employees live in the village, just outside Youngstown, but all who work at the McDonald mill pay the tax. Bush said the village also gets $63,810 from property taxes paid by U.S. Steel as well as substantial company payments to sewage and water fees.

"It's going to make my job harder," Bush said. "We knew it was coming some day. Now we will have to show the poeple how we cut costs and try to keep reasonable services."

U.S. Steel also is closing its Ohio Works in Youngstown, as part of its plan announced last week to shut down 16 plants across the nation. The two plants employ 3,500 workers.

Jones & Laughlin, meanwhile, says it will furlough 1,400 of its 4,700 steel workers at Brier Hill Works in Youngstown, a city of about 100,000 people.

It was just 26 months ago that Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. announced permanent layoff of about 4,000 steel workers in the Mahoning Valley. Sheet & Tube has since been absorbed by Jones & Laughlin.

Margaret Ague, treasurer for the village school system of 1,010 students, said personal property taxes paid by U.S. Steel provides about 30 percent of the $1.6 million school operating fund.

"I just can't comprehend what will happen," she said. "It will take a while to get my thoughts together on this."

When the shutdowns are completed they will cost public schools in Youngstown $477,373 a year. Irene Gerak, chief deputy auditor for Mahoning County, said that is from tangible personal property taxes that U.S. Steel and Jones & Laughlin pay on inventory and equipment. Mrs. Gerak said Youngstown city government gets a smaller percentage of the tax base and will lose much less.

Youngstown school Superintendent Emanuel Catsoules equates the loss to about 1 percent of the current $42 million city school budget for a system serving 17,700 students. He said schools lost $250,000 two years ago when Youngstown Sheet & Tube closed most of its mills.

Both McDonald and Youngstown will lose more taxes in future years if real estate owned by the two companies is devalued, as expected. The land this year produced $238,784 in tax money and devaluation could take years. A similar case still on appeal came from Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. It wants an $8.7 million tax value reduction on real estate tracing to its cutback two years ago.

Jones & Laughlin and U.S. Steel real estate is valued for taxes at $7.4 million, producing $238,784 in taxes this year.

Community leaders say the closings give them a chance to work for a more diversified economic base.

In Washington, D.C., the U.S. Economic Development Administration has promised Youngstown $225 million in federal aid. Robert T. Hall, director of the agency, said one of his employees will be sent to Youngstown to help the city prepare applications for grants and loans. He said the same person will also help city officials develop economic development plans.

"U.S. Steel created this village but it's not going to destroy it," said Leskovac, mayor of McDonald the past five years. "We're disappointed. We're dismayed. But no one is panic stricken.

"I think it's ironic that the community was founded by U.S. Steel. It is considered a model industrial community. The company built the homes here and sold them to the workers and made a substantial contribution to the community over the years. But as the labor picture changed, the company changed."

Senator Pushes For Start Of Gas Rationing

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sen. Gaylord Nelson urged President Carter on Saturday to impose gasoline rationing immediately as a defense against threats to cut off oil exports to the United States.

Nelson, addressing the annual fall meeting of The Wisconsin Associated Press, also declared that it was "foolish" to allow the deposed Shah of Iran into the United States for medical treatment.

Nelson said that four countries that supply more than 50 percent of the nation's daily petroleum demands "have threatened to cut us off or significantly reduce supply for one reason or another."

"In a worst-case scenario, if all of the potential cutoffs occurred, the American market would experience a shortage of 4.3 million barrels a day," the Wisconsin Democrat said.

"A shortage of this size would require drastic measures equivalent to the economies mandated during World War II," Nelson said. "The president should impose gasoline rationing immediately as a national self-defense."

Nelson proposed that the gasoline rationing be accompanied by a program of accelerated domestic conservation efforts in home heating, industry and transportation.

The nations Nelson said have threatened to cut off or reduce oil supplies to the United States are Nigeria, Libya, Algeria and Saudi Arabia.

Asked to assess congressional sentiment on Iran, Nelson said it was one of "frustration."

"There is no military option," he said. "I think our president has done all he could do. We were foolish enough to let the shah come in. That will become an issue when we get our people back."

Nelson said support of the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty has waned in the Senate since the Iranian crisis developed. He said "there is a powerful campaign around the country" to defeat the treaty.

Shah Remains Isolated, Hunting Place To Go

A-J News Services

NEW YORK — Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, the deposed Shah of Iran, remained secluded in his hospital room Saturday, still looking for a nation that will grant him asylum so he can leave the United States.

Most of his personal belongings were removed from the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center on Friday so he could leave as soon as a haven was found.

Doctors have said he has recovered from cancer therapy and gallstone surgery and is well enough to travel.

However, a spokesman said, "The patient discharge has not been signed. That means we've still got a medical reason for keeping him."

At one point Saturday afternoon, two of the shah's attendants walked into the hospital with several packages that hospital security guards said contained caviar and champagne for the deposed monarch.

Iranian militants holding 50 Americans hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran have said they will not release their hostages until the United States turns the shah over to them for trial for alleged crimes against the Iranian people. The Carter administration has refused.

A spokesman for the former shah announced the shah had intended to leave during the weekend, but then Mexico withdrew permission for him to return there. That news left the deposed ruler "quite distressed," his spokeman, Chris Godek, said Friday.

The shah, 60, asked the Carter administration to help him find refuge elsewhere, but the only official response was that he must make his own travel plans.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat has repeatedly invited the shah to Egypt, saying his personal aircraft is at the shah's disposal to carry him to Cairo. However, the United States reportedly has tried to discourage a flight to Egypt, fearing it could cause trouble for Sadat, who is viewed as an important U.S. ally.

There were reports the shah might consider going to South Africa, where his father, Reza Shah, died in 1944 after being forced into exile during World War II. It was not known if South Africa would accept him.

The militants and Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini have threatened to put all 50 U.S. hostages on trial as "spies" if the United States does not hand over the shah.

On Friday, Iran's new foreign affairs chief hinted the shah's departure from the United States might ease the U.S.-Iranian showdown, but said the departure would not lead to immediate release of the hostages.

Outside the New York hospital, police set up barricades after Iranian students announced they would demonstrate against their former ruler.

But before the students could arrive, police heard word of another anti-shah demonstration at the United Nations and rushed down to keep an eye on about 50 protesters who were showing their support for the Iranian cause.

Reporters who have staked out the hospital ever since the shah arrived Oct. 22 maintained their vigil Saturday, scurrying about to the more than a dozen possible exits from the facility.

Two anti-shah demonstrations were held on First Avenue near the United Nations.

One, organized by the Revolutionary Socialist League, made its way through midtown streets from Herald Square, with the approximately 20 demonstrators shouting: "Death to the shah!" and "One, two, three, four, we don't want your racist war!"

The procession provoked a variety of reactions from passersby, including applause, raised fists and — in one case — a shouting match between a demonstrator and a store owner on East 42nd Street.

At First Avenue, police kept the demonstrators from a group of Moslem protesters, who said they did not want to be near "communists."

The Moslems, who included representatives of the Islamic Association of Iranian Professionals and Merchants in America, carried pictures of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Few Refuges Available, Some Closed To Shah

By The Associated Press

The exiled Shah of Iran looked more than ever like a man without a country Saturday. Several nations mentioned as possible refuges made clear he was unwanted, leaving a scarce few doors open — possibly only one, Egypt.

"I want to disappear quietly and secretly," the West German newspaper Bild am Sonntag quoted him as saying in an interview at the New York hospital where he underwent treatment for gallstones and cancer.

The places most mentioned as new exile homes for deposed monarch Mohammad Reza Pahlavi are South Africa, Morocco, Switzerland, Brazil, Argentina, Bermuda, the Bahamas or some Caribbean island. But only Egypt's President Anwar Sadat has told him he is welcome.

When he fled Iran last January before the Islamic revolution, Pahlavi made brief visits to Egypt, Morocco and the Bahamas before settling in Mexico.

The Mexican government announced unexpectedly Thursday night that he cannot return there. As for Morocco, officials there were known to be unhappy earlier this year about their controversial guest's presence.

Sadat last week repeated his invitation to the shah, but the former monarch does not appear to favor a move to Egypt and there have been reports the United States is discouraging it — fearing his presence in Egypt could cause trouble for Sadat.

The potential for their own showdowns with Iran — like the U.S.-Iranian crisis over the seizure of the American Embassy and hostages in Tehran — seems to have chilled other governments to the idea of admitting the former Iranian ruler to their territory.

Bermuda's Premier David Gibbons told the island's legislature the shah would not be allowed into Bermuda for security reasons.

"In Bermuda's quite unique position there would clearly be security risks of an unacceptable nature," he said, apparently referring to his resort island's small security force and open-door policy to tourists. The risks were "graphically illustrated" by the confrontation over the American hostages, he said.

The shah has not approached Bermuda about visiting at present, Gibbons said, but his statement suggested that the shah had applied earlier this year and been turned down.

Switzerland was thought to be a possible haven because the shah owns a villa in the alpine resort of St. Moritz, but he has not been there since 1975. At that time, after an alleged terrorist threat, Swiss authorities told the shah they would be unable to assure him of total security. They have since repeated that warning, obviously trying to discourage him from returning.

South Africa has been mentioned as a possibility, apparently because that is where Pahlavi's father, Reza Shah, who was forced into exile during World War II, lived before his death in 1944.

South African Secretary of Foreign Affairs Brand Fourie, asked about the possibility of shah's going there, said: "I am too old to indulge in academic speculation.... The whole idea is ridiculous."

A spokesman at Brazil's presidential palace in Brasilia said Saturday the ex-shah "has never asked for asylum in Brazil." Otavio Bonfim said that in his opinion the Brazilian government "would never grant such a request."

Soon after the shah left Iran, Brazil was contacted unofficially to find out if the shah might be accepted there, Bonfim said. The contacts were "discouraged" by the government, Bonfim said.

Argentina, like Brazil a frequent place of refuge for political exiles, indicated earlier in the year that the shah would not be welcome.

Two possible Caribbean refuges — the British Virgin Islands and Haiti — have said they would not offer the shah.

Iran Orders Dollar Halt

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) -Iran's Central Bank has ordered all banks in the country to stop using the American dollar, the daily newspaper Bamdad reported Saturday.

"Transactions will be carried out in other valid currencies," the newspaper quoted a circular from the government bank as saying.

It said the bank order applied to all business deals, imports and exports, credit notes and promissory notes, and to "expenses of Iranian students abroad, travel, medical treatment and similar cases."

"The new CBI (central bank) circular is seen as another step in reducing America's economic influence in Iran, and it is expected that the U.S. dollar will be severely shaken on the world market," the newspaper said.

Economics Minister Abolhassan Bani-Sadr had said earlier Iran would not accept dollars for oil exports.

The latest order also applies to non-U.S. banks extending import credits covered by American banks, according to the newspaper report.

Status Of Hostages Perplexes Officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials were perplexed Saturday by conflicting signals from Iran over the status of Americans held as ransom for the deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

With the Iranian crisis entering its fifth week and the U.N. Security Council poised to begin debate, militant Islamic students holding the U.S. Embassy in Tehran accused three senior American diplomats of being spies and said they must remain in Iran.

This contradicted a statement by the acting foreign minister indicating the three could leave.

The three diplomats are not among the approximately 50 Americans held captive at the U.S. Embassy, but are being detained at the Foreign Ministry in Tehran. They are U.S. Charge d'Affaires L. Bruce Laingen, political officer Victor Tomseh and Michael Holland, the U.S. Embassy's security chief.

Acting Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh had said Friday the three were free to leave. But after the militants objected, he reversed himself and denied he'd ever made that statement.

The Islamic students also claimed that one of their embassy hostages, whom they identified as William Daugherty, had confessed to being a CIA agent.

President Carter was spending the weekend at his Camp David, Md., mountaintop retreat and the White House had no comment on the latest assertion by the Iranian students.

But at the State Department, spokesman David Passage declared that those occupying the embassy "have an ample record of forgery, misrepresentation and fabrication."

In a statement that reflected growing frustration on the part of U.S. officials, Passage said the State Department no longer feels it worthwhile to query the Iranian Foreign Ministry about conflicting reports.

"The foreign minister, whoever he may be, may not have the powers traditionally associated with the foreign ministry," Passage said.

Passage declined to comment on the allegation that Daugherty was a CIA agent.Spokesmen at the CIA in suburban Langley, Va., were not available for comment Saturday.

The administration, meantime, was anxiously awaiting the Security Council debate in hopes of a ringing declaration calling on Iran to release the hostages.

"We believe that all international law and logic is on the side of a unanimous resolution," spokesman Hodding Carter had said Friday.

Spokesman Carter acknowledged at the time that the United States can account for only some of the hostages.

"If the government of Iran is so certain that they are being well treated," he said, "then let the government observe the minimal decencies and meet the minimal requirements in the handling of all kinds of prisoners. ... Let us and the rest of the world know how each and every one of those hostages are."

Those permitted to enter the embassy compound were Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho; the ambassadors of Algeria, France, Sweden and Syria; a representative of the Vatican; and officials of the Red Cross.

None has seen more than a few of the Americans.

Frenship Citizens To Vote On School Bond

By GERRY BURTON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

WOLFFORTH — Hallways, a new gymnasium and eight second-hand barracks buildings have been turned into classrooms to meet the growing needs of Frenship Independent School District in recent years.

Still, the school bulges at the seams with a 4.27 percent normal plus a 5 percent abnormal growth pattern. It needs nine additional classrooms each year.

If a $3 million bond issue, which goes before Frenship voters Tuesday, is approved, the school still will be only on a break-even basis by the time 28 needed classrooms can be occupied.

But breaking even is far better, school officials say, than being behind and having to chop up hall space, move in old buildings and turn badly needed athletic space into classrooms.

The Frenship district, second largest in Lubbock County with 2,534 students, covers 127 square miles. But, its exploding school population comes from sections inside the Lubbock city limits.

Frankford Avenue in Lubbock forms its eastern edge and its northern border reaches two miles north of Lubbock's West Fourth Street.

Growing population, and resulting students, comes from two sources, both Lubbock oriented: a Wolfforth boom in homes for Lubbock workers and a southwest and west expansion of Wolfforth's big city neighbor.

Don E. Davis, president of the Frenship school board, doesn't knock the growth in the district. He approves. He simply wants to meet the demands of added students in Frenship schools.

"It's a critical situation. We have to have more classrooms, and we've got to have more land to put it on."

The Tuesday bond election is the first phase of a master plan for a new high school complete with band and athletic facilities.

It calls for purchase of 54 acres for the new facility and construction of 28 classrooms with accompanying cafeteria, library, and service areas.

The 28 classrooms are to be occupied by the fourth, fifth and sixth grades to alleviate crowded elementary schools until the remaining two phases are completed and the new facility becomes the high school campus.

"The main thing is the urgency of the situation; voter apathy might get us," Davis said.

He credits voter apathy with the failure of a $3 million bond issue two years ago which was designed to build the high school.

Had the 1977 issue passed, Davis stressed, the complete facility could have been constructed for the amount the first phase will cost at current rates. It would now be ready for occupancy.

As it is, the school will "just be breaking even with classrooms" when phase one is completed, according to school superintendent J. Weldon Bennett.

Most of the overload, Bennett said, is in the lower grades due to young families in the district. The overage would be pulled from Wolfforth and Reese elementaries' fourth, fifth and sixth grades.

By the time these students reach the high school level, the complete high school facility could be ready to receive them.

By then, too, Bennett noted, school population should be leveled off with family maturity in the new areas, leaving fewer children within the district.

The current high school, he explained, was built in 1935 to handle 334 students.

At that time there were two red 1920-vintage buildings with six rooms for elementary students. These were replaced with a new elementary school in 1951 with space for 200 students in seven classrooms.

Since that time, district growth has mushroomed constantly.

"We've added on five times," Bennett said of the high school, a long assemblage of connected buildings with multi-level roof lines.

Hall space was divided off for classes through which traffic could flow to the outside in emergencies.

When the 1977 bond issue failed, the district began importing old barracks buildings, about 30 by 80 feet, from the Texas Tech campus. The latest two are under renovation for use next year.

Phase one, Bennett said, will increase school taxes "about one third." Exact amount will not be known until bonds are sold.

The district currently has a tax rate of $1.85 per $100 valuation on an assessed value of $44 million.Rates will be adjusted with next year's real value use.

When the school district goes to true value for tax purposes, Bennett said, the tax rate will be cut in half because "dollars and cents wise, the district cannot collect any more money."

Under the old system, Frenship school taxes were based on 50 percent of true value.

The one-third increase in taxes for phase one would cost the owner of a $35,000 home about $100 a year, he estimated.

Re-evaluation for the true value system, he added, probably will put Frenship's true value in the neighborhood of $180 million.

Bennett, who has been at Frenship for 38 years, put his own feelings into a brochure mailed to Frenship voters:

"This is not the type of decision you make in terms of dollars and cents. The welfare of our children and the future of our community are at stake."

Judge Orders Expelled Youngsters Re-Admitted

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — A judge has ordered a parochial school to re-admit two youngsters who were expelled last month because their mothers did not sell enough tickets to a school fund-raising event.

The boys, Diallo French, 8, and his cousin, Dominic French, 6, who were expelled from school Nov. 13, will be back in class Monday.

The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Kansas City, Kan., which runs the mission school, Our Lady and St. Rose, said the two mothers did not sell their alloted 20 tickets to an Oct. 27 dinner and play.

Soon after the event, they received letters from the school offering them two options: they could either withdraw their children from school or buy the nine unsold tickets, at $3 each, themselves. The women did not respond to the letter, and the boys were turned away from school Nov. 13.

Aletha French, Diallo's mother, and her sister-in-law, Leatha French, Dominic's mother, sought help from a lawyer. After a week of legal wrangling the order temporarily to reinstate the boys was issued Friday.

"I was so happy I was about ready to cry when the judge issued the order," said Aletha French, adding that the boys had become bored staying home while the matter was being decided in court.

"It got so bad that my son was reporting to me on what was happening in the soap operas," she said.

Philip Carson, the Frenchs' attorney, argued that the two boys would suffer irreparable harm to their social and educational development if they were not allowed to return to the all-black mission school near the city's downtown.

Judge William M. Cook of the Wyandotte County District Court granted the restraining order, saying the boys had become accustomed to the school and should be able to complete work they started this year. Dominic was in his second year, and Diallo had just started first grade.

A hearing on whether a temporary injunction should be issued in the case is set for Wednesday.

The controversy stems from an agreement signed by all parents of children who attend the school, stipulating that the parents will participate in two fund-raising efforts during the year.

Tuition at the school depends on ability of the student's family to pay, and the fund-raisers are organized to help build school revenues, said Sister Susan Pryor, school principal.

Sister Susan said the money from the fund-raiser was to pay for windows the school had installed last year "so the children would be warm ... We said if we're going to meet our goal, we had to have everybody involved on the same level."

Carson argued that the contract did not specify that parents had to sell all their tickets and added that the boys' mothers had fulfilled all other school requirements, an assertion Sister Susan did not dispute.

"These people just felt like the school was putting the bite on them," Carson said. "They didn't like it."

First Iran Student Deported From DFW

GRAPEVINE (AP) — An Iranian student, who praised Ayatolla Khomeini and said returning "the shah is a good price" for the 50 Americans being held hostage in Tehran, has left Dallas-Fort Worth Airport under orders from the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Dallas INS director William Chambers said Ali Aminian, 25, was the first Iranian student deported against his will since President Carter ordered a check of Iranians Nov. 10.

Aminian, who was quietly put on a Braniff flight to New York Friday on the first leg of his trip to Tehran, said he was "proud to be the first to go."

The bearded computer sciences student, who had attended Central State University in Edmond, Okla., was arrested Monday in Oklahoma by INS agents for violating the terms of his visa. Officials said he has been in the United States illegally since 1977.

Aminian said he supported Khomeini and militant Moslems holding Americans hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

"It will get more attention for our cause when I return as the first Iranian deported and I join my people in their protest," he said.

First Baby Olympics Set For Next Summer

By DICK WEST

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The world's first Baby Olympics will be staged next summer in the Pikes Peak region of Colorado.

The event, which will be open to athletic infants of both sexes, is being organized by Edwin Paget, 78, a retired speech professor and creator of a baby exercise program.

Paget said the idea came to him as he was watching a Russian therapist demonstrate on television how 6-month-old tots could be taught "vigorous swimming both in and under water."

Although the concept is not yet entirely clear in his mind, the Baby Olympics presumably will feature aquatic competition for miniature Mark Spitzes.

Paget, who is serious about his idea, said in an interview he also will offer "Awards for Superior Babyhood." The honors sound something like the cradle equivalent of the gold metal Bruce Jenner won in the 1976 Olympic decathlon.

Additionally, there will be some "combined baby and great-grandfather swimming and running events," Paget said.

The self-appointed commissioner of amateur nursery athletics sent word of his plans from his winter home in Raleigh, N.C., where he is working out the details.

The Pikes Pike region was chosen as the locale because Paget spends his summers there running up and down that 14,000-foot mountain.

Lst summer, a routine vacation for Paget, he made 41 ascensions, for a career total of 866. And next July 1, he intends to be at the summit when he announces the list of those qualifying for the Baby Olympics.

Since his retirement from the faculty of North Carolina State University, Paget has devoted much of his time to a one-man crusade to force U.S. presidents to undergo periodic "brain scans."

His underlying thesis is that many chief executives don't think clearly because their brains have been damaged by lack of oxygen.

Earlier this year, finding himself ignored at the White House level, he began advocating more vigorous exercise for children under 1-year-old.

They, too, suffer brain deterioration due to inactivity, Paget believes. The Baby Olympics is an offshoot of that promotion, as is the "circular perpetual-motion crib" he hopes to develop.

In a television commercial currently getting a lot of house, an American brewery boasts its suds as "the official beer of the 1980 Winter Olympics." As yet, there are no product tie-ins with the 1980 Baby Olympics, but Paget agrees the possibilities are virtually unlimited.

An "official teething ring," and "official diaper pail" and an "official car seat" are among the myriad designations he would consider.

Paget also promises to consider any proposals for expanding the Baby Olympics, such as a weight-lifting event using lead-filled rattles.

Power Loss Traps Man, Child In Submarine

SEATTLE (AP) — James Ringrose said he and 7-year-old Nicole Rowley sang songs and made up a Christmas shopping list to pass the time as they drifted in the Pacific for 20 days in a homemade submarine.

Their favorite song was "We All Live in a Yellow Submarine," Ringrose, 37, of Newport, Ore., said in a radio-telephone interview Saturday from the freighter Chavez. The Chavez was bringing them back to Seattle.

Ringrose and Nicole, of Gresham, Ore., were rescued by the Chavez's crew Friday night about 35 miles off Cape Disappointment on the southern Washington coast.

Ringrose said both he and Nicole were in good condition.

Nicole's mother, Dianne Rowley, of Gresham, was on her way to Seattle with Ringrose's business partner, Leonard Dahle, the Oregonian reported in Portland, Ore. Dahle and Ringrose are partners in Public Power Supply System, working on energy-related projects.

Coast Guard spokesman Mike Kelley in Seattle said the Coast Guard planned to take the two seafarers to Public Health Service Hospital in Seattle for checkups.

Kelley also said Nicole would be put in the custody of the Washington state Child Protective Services, an agency of the state Department of Social and Health Service. There was no immediate explanation why that was planned.

They survived on a gallon and a half of water and a few cans of tuna and crackers, he said. They also caught fish that swam along side — "Just reach over and scoop them up." — and drank the moisture that condensed inside the submarine.

"I lost a lot of weight," he said. "Nicole didn't lose much. She got most of the food."

"She thought it was high adventure. She thought it was a big vacation," he said. Ringrose said Nicole, whose mother is a friend of his, had been allowed to go along because it was supposed to be just a quick trip.

"I wasn't worried. Most of my time I took keeping her happy," Ringrose said. "We were safe."

He said that if they hadn't been rescued, he had expected that they would have drifted to Vancouver Island in another week.

Ringrose said he and Nicole left Depoe Bay, Ore., west of Corvallis, Ore., on Nov. 10 to check an experimental buoy about a quarter mile offshore. He said he has a contract with the Department of Energy through the Bonneville Power Administration to develop bouys which can generate electricity through wave motion.

But before they could return to shore, "we used all the battery power trying to battle winds," Ringrose said of the electrically powered vessel. "Once the power went out, the current took over."

The Coast Guard had searched for them for two days.

They encountered several violent storms, Ringrose said, but they rode out the weather just below the surface.

"Submarines are good sea boats, better in high seas than big boats — just batten down the hatches and go below," he said. "Since most of the boat is underwater it's pretty stable."

He said the Chavez nearly ran over them. He and Nicole were below and heard the ship's propellers go past. He said he went on top and flagged the freighter down with a flashlight.

"They had already gone by," he said. "It's lucky the watchman saw us."

The submarine had been taking on water because of a broken valve, but Ringrose said he kept pumping it out with a bilge pump.The submarine, which he said cost about $15,000 to build, was abandoned and sank after they were taken aboard the freighter. Ringrose said he will build another.

In June 1978, the Chavez struck a Seattle bridge, which is still closed.

"I guess this makes up for the Chavez hitting the bridge," Ringrose said.

Virginia Retiree Wins Kodak Snapshot Award

An elusive kind of photographic magic, spun of warmth, spontaneity and natural beauty, transformed a Virginia retiree's snapshot of two young neighbors into the grand prize picture in the 1979 Kodak International Newspaper Snapshot Awards (KINSA).

As best of show, the engaging color photo taken by Robert N. Parker, Tabb, Va., topped more than 800 black-and-white and color pictures submitted to the finals of the 41st KINSA competition by 137 newspapers in the United States, Canada and Mexico. Parker's photo reached international competition by winning a local snapshot contest sponsored by The Daily Press, Newport News, Va. More than 350,000 snapshots competed in such local newspaper contests this year.

In all, 219 cash and travel prizes totaling $55,000 were awarded by an international panel of photo experts: Anne Dirkes Kobor, illustrations editor, book services, National Geographic Society; Tom Bochsler, commercial and industrial photographer, Hamilton, Ont., Canada; Hector Hernandez Avile's, public relations director, El Sol de Tampico, Mexico; Manfred H. Strobel, supervisor, photographic services, Chrysler Corporation; and Lee E. Howick, manager, photo illustrations department, Eastman Kodak company.

Judges selected the 202 winners of $100 Special Merit Awards, including one to an Avalanche-Journal finalist. Ten persons won $500 Honor Awards and seven top travel prizes in the contest's black-and-white and color categories. In addition to Parker's top-prize, around-the-world trip for two (or $10,000), first-prize, expense-paid European tours for two (or $4,000) went to a Georgia teacher and a New Jersey engineer. Second-prize trips for two to Mexico (or $2,500) honored the picture-taking prowess of newspaper readers in Green Bay, Wis., and Santa Barbara, Calif.

Thanks to Special Sports Awards given to the best sports picture entered in each category this year, Charles H. Rogers of Saginaw, Mich., and James B. Currie of Mercerville, N.J., will be among the chosen few to travel to the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, N.Y., this coming February. Each won a five-day stay at the world event in the special, one-time-only sports photo competition.

Larry K. Little of 2807 67th St. won a special $100 merit award for a photo of his wife and child in the black-and-white photograph competition.

He was one of six finalists in The Avalanche-Journal snapshot contest conducted earlier in the year. Other A-J finalists included Joanne P. Ross of Clovis; Joan M. Wilson, Henry P. Jennings, Glenda Kniphfer and Jennifer Green, all of Lubbock.

1979 Newspaper Snapshot Award Winners Announced

The second annual A-J contest drew more than 4,000 entries.

All finalists in KINSA '79 will receive Kodak Centennial Medallions for excellence in amateur photography as part of the company's celebration of its 100th birthday in 1980; their photos also will be on view in a major display expected to be seen by exhibit-goers in New York City and a dozen other major cities during 1980. The premier, two-week showing of selected pictures from KINSA '79, including all the top prize winners, will open Monday, Nov. 19, at National Georgraphic Society's Explorers Hall, Washington, D.C. The New York show will open Jan. 8 in The Equitable Gallery, 1285 Avenue of the Americas.

But, just what makes a top prize winner in an international competition of such scope? Judges were drawn early and irretrievably to Parker's candid photo of two young girls, neighbors "Heidi and Holly," ensconced in child-size rockers and caught up in imaginative play with their doll. A retired engineer, who has been taking pictures since he was 12 years old, Parker snapped the picture in the spring of 1979 using the natural light available from a wide living room window in his subjects' home.

"The backlighting is just perfect," raved judges, "and because the girls are wearing light clothes, there's enough reflection into their faces so it's not just a backlit picture — you can see what the kids are doing and how they are relating to each other. It's basically a high-key picture with a great amount of natural warmth. It seems spontaneous, and it gains as you look closer. It's completely animated without looking posed. Just the gesture of the little girl's finger is so great; you know the little girl is talking about the doll."

Summing up the reasons for their top choice, judges called the delicately-toned picture, colored only by the pastels of the girl's long dresses and the wood tones of the window area, "a real beauty — it has that magic! — and yet it's very much in keeping with the spirit of a snapshot contest. It relates to the reason people have cameras and take pictures of people around them."

Lorraine Thompson and Bill Swain took their first prize-winning pictures, an almost-still life of a cat and roses and a multi-toned scenic of a mountain lake, for very different reasons. Yet, judges noted a shared "painting-like quality" that helped elevate each to the top of its category.

Mrs. Thompson, an Austell, Ga., teacher who paints, writes, dances and sculpts, had been taking pictures for just seven years when she snapped her color prize-winner for sentimental reasons.

"My husband and I had gone to the flea market at different times that morning and brought each other back a rose," recalls Mrs. Thompson, who entered KINSA '79 through The Atlanta Journal and Constitution. "I set the roses in a vase on the window sill of our old apartment to take a picture of them. Our cat peered through the screen just as I snapped the picture."

"Very appealing," agreed judges. "It's a still life, but it's more because of the presence of the cat and, especialy, because of the expression on the cat's face. The texture of the screen gives the picture the feeling of a painting. Contrast the very muted, subdued background with the rather vivid roses in front of the screen and you have a very delicate picture...a nicely framed composition...a beautiful photograph."

Fellow first-prize-winner Bill Swain, a Clifton, N.J., engineer who has been taking pictures for 12 years, carefully planned, metered and printed his vacation view of Lake Durant in the Adirondack Mountains. Still, the black-and-white picture which entered KINSA '79 through The Bergen Record, Hackensack, required some split-second timing.

"The sun was setting quickly-there was no chance for more than one shot," says Swain who chose a three-minute exposure to preserve the breathtaking, twilight view, "I took the picture simply because I liked the composition."

Judges also liked the composition — as well as just about everything else about the well-made, black-and-white photograph: "It looks almost like a painting you'd hang in your living room. It's so beautiful, so limpid, so fluid. But what really makes it special are all those gray tones. It's very difficult to get so many tones in one black-and-white picture. The tones capture the scene's sheer beauty."

Beauty and photographic artistry also prevail in this year's second-place photos. Larry H. Hathaway, Green Bay, Wis., was "experimenting with fog shots" and Marcia Joan Maloy was making an informal portrait of her landlord when each hit upon a winning combination of subject and treatment.

Hathaway, a photo hobbyist and collector for 30 years, was vacationing in Algoma, Wis., when he braved dense early morning fog to snap a moody study of a dockside lanteern and seagull linked by a spider web heavy with dew. Hathaway's "only shot of the circumstance" entered international competition through the Green Bay Press-Gazette and captured KINSA '79 judging attention with its "nice triangular composition...superb lighting-muted coolish background, warm lantern in front...and sculptural quality coupled with emotional appeal." At least one judge saw "the complex spirit of the seafaring life, the loneliness, the warmth" in the color close-up.

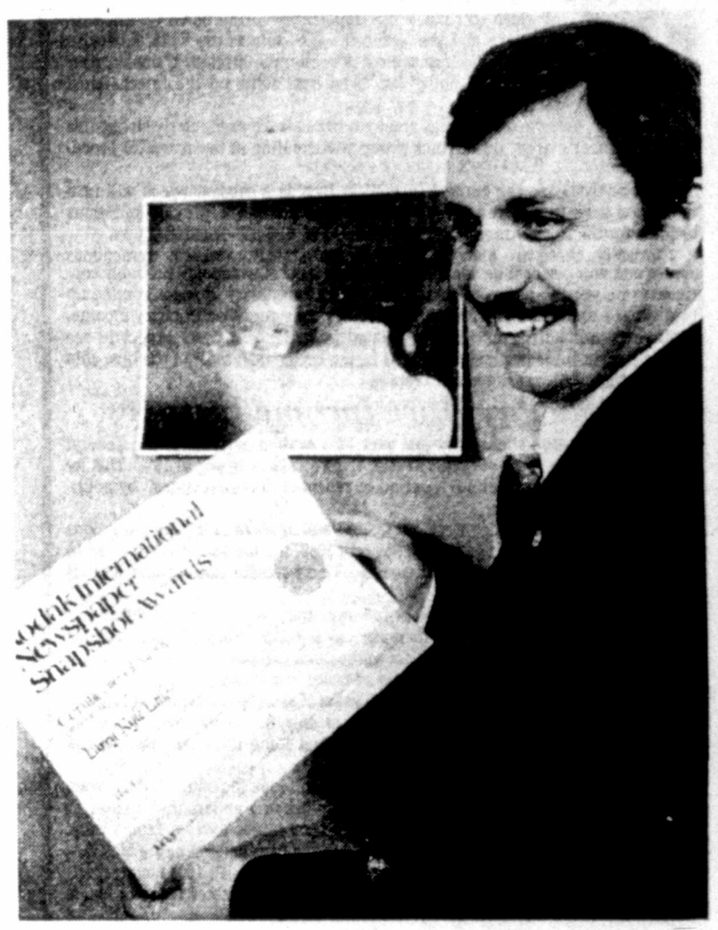
Miss Maloy, a student at Brooks Institute of Photography, had been living in Cecil Neal's back cottage four months, visiting with him and his beloved "Coon Dog" every day after school, when she decided to record a familiar existing-light view.

"He always sat in that chair, his chair, and, while talking to me, he'd keep an eye out on the street for anyone to walk by," says Miss Maloy, who reached KINSA '79 through the San Francisco Examiner's annual snapshot competition. "I asked Cecil just to be natural and keep looking out the window, but not to wiggle his cigarette in his mouth as he was accustomed to doing. I was lucky because a group of children passed in front of the house causing the dog to look out the window, too."

Attracted by "the human element," judges were held by "the nice tones all the way through" the black-and-white photograph. "It's also a good example of how a black-and-white photograph can work through tone gradation. Nowadays, color is the most seen, and you can forgive a lot of sins in color that you can't in black-and-white. You've either got it or you haven't in black-and-white, and this picture has definitely got it!"

Judges looked for "competitiveness, action, drama and impact" in the sports photos that vied for this year's special third prizes. They found what motif thanks to dramatic lighting. This picture has real impact and design. It's eye-catching. It has a special quality, like basketball on another planet. It has the drama a good sports picture should have."

"CURIOUSER AND CURIOUSER" — Curiosity took the color first prize for this cat's owner — Lorraine Thompson, Austell, Ga. — who was trying to take a picture of the roses when the cat decided to see what was going on. The "happy accident" first caught judges" eyes in the local photo contest sponsored by The Atlanta Journal and Constitution. International judges were drawn to the picture because of its nicely framed composition, its painting-like quality, but, first and foremost, "because of the expression on the face of the cat."



LUBBOCK WINNER — Larry Little of Lubbock admires a certificate of merit awarded to him by KINSA for his black-and-white entry in the Avalanche-Journal snapshot contest earlier this year. The award-winning photo, seen in the background, is of his wife and child. Little won $100 for his entry.

THE MAGIC OF CHILD'S PLAY — Dolly makes three in Robert N. Parker's grand prize winning picture of neighbors "Holly and Heidi" submitted to the 1979 Kodak International Newspaper Snapshot Awards (KINSA) by The Daily Press, Newsport News, Va. The retired aeronautical engineer, who has been taking pictures since he was 12, won high praise — as well as a world tour for two — for the "magic" that animates his snapshot. "There's so much going on in this picture," noted judges. "It gains as you look closer. Just the gesture of the finger is so great — you know the little girl is talking about the doll."

SHEER BEAUTY — Bill Swain, of Clifton, N.J., saw beyond the color of sunset over Lake Durant in the Adirondack Mountains to compose this startlingly beautiful, black-and-white scenic, which won first prize in its KINSA '79 category to earn Swain a trip for two to Europe. Judges just couldn't get over "all the tones" evident in the vacation picture entered through The Bergen Record, Hackensack.

U.S.-Iran Economic Confrontation Escalates

BY KRISTIN GOFF

NEW YORK (AP) — While attempts to obtain the freedom of hostages held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran continued this past week, the economic confrontation between the United States and Iran escalated in a flurry of lawsuits.

More than a half dozen major U.S. banks, for instance, have moved to get control over Iranian deposits or assets in companies. The banks want assurance that they aren't left holding worthless paper if the Iranians don't make good on billions of dollars worth of loans.

In turn, the central bank of Iran announced plans to sue at least two of those banks, Bankers Trust and Chase Manhattan, which were among a number of banks that moved to protect themselves on loans to Iran by "offsetting" that debt with Iranian deposits in their banks.

But the dispute over Iran's ebts — estimated at $3 billion or more to U.S. banks — has spread to engulf European banks, which participated with American banks in some loan consortiums. It also touched off some criticism this past week from West Germany, where one American bank acted to seize part of the assets of a German company whose ownership is one-quarter Iranian.

European bankers have been among the harshest critics of President Carter's Nov. 14 decision to freeze Iranian assets. They fear chaos in money markets if other oil-rich Arab countries lose faith in the dollar because of the freeze.

"European countries are very apprehensive about the possibility of further Iranian-U.S. moves that could exacerbate the 'economic war' and involve European countries against their will," according to J. Paul Horne, a European analyst for the Wall Street firm of Smith, Barney Harris Upham & Co.

"Caught in the middle because of their total dependence on OPEC oil and political-military ties to the United States, the (European Common Market) countries are likely to be most reluctant to support any other moves that could destabilize the financial exchange markets or threaten their oil supplies," he wrote in a recent report from Paris.

In West Germany, officials of Dresdner Bank, the nation's second largest, were harshly critical of the U.S. freeze.

Top bank executives declared that if the economic conflict continued, it could throw currency and international money markets into "a totally unnecessary" crisis.

But a suit filed by Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. threatened to involve the Germans even more directly. Morgan Guaranty, in a highly unusual move, obtained a German court order of attachment on a portion of the assets of a huge steelmaking company, Fried Krupp The ordr covered the 25 percent of the Fried Krupp company's assets owned by Iran. The bank is seeking $40 million, which it says is its portion of a $500 million bank loan that the lenders declared in default.

German economic leaders said they were upset that they were not consulted by Morgan before the suit was filed in Essen, where Krupp is headquartered. And, among the business community, fears were raised that Germany might be dragged into the economic conflict.

One observer, who asked not to be named, said the business community in West Germany sympathized with the plight of the Americans being held hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran by Iranian militants.

But he said business leaders were "scared stiff of the political implications" of the conflict being carried into German courts and affecting German companies with Iranian shareholders.

In other business developments this past week:

•Consumer prices jumped sharply again in October, and economists said it looked like 1979 would be the worst inflation year since 1946, when wartime wage and price controls were lifted. For the past 12 months, prices have risen 12.2 percent. The increase in the index in October was largely blamed on higher housing costs.

•U.S. Steel Corp. said it was closing 15 plants and mills and laying off 13,000 workers in eight states. The giant steel company said it was forced to make the drastic cutbacks because it was losing money on some of its older facilities. The cutback represents about 8 percent of the company's 166,000 workers.

•Most major banks reduced their prime lending rates to 15½ percent from 15¾ percent. But Chase Manhattan Bank went a notch lower, reducing its rate to 15¼ percent. The reductions in the prime lending rate — which is the base rate on commercial loans — were the first since last August. Interest rates had risen steeply in recent months in response to strong loan demand and moves by the Federal Reserve to tighten credit in an effort to slow inflation.

•A government index designed to forecast economic activity fell 0.9 percent in October, the largest drop since April, according to the Commerce Department. One big reason for the decline, economists said, was a sharp drop in permits for home construction because of higher lending costs. The index is supposed to signal future economic activity, but government economists said it might be reflecting the actual conditions in October.

The Market Meter

Interest Reduction Sparks Stock Rally

By J.L. Hutcheson
Schneider, Bernet & Hickman, Inc.

An interest rate reduction early in the week by two major U.S. bank followed by other large banks sparked a rally in stock prices as investors began to see signs that the recent spiral upward in interest rates was probably coming to an end sooner than many had anticipated.

Bankers Trust of New York and Wells Fargo in San Francisco both lowered their prime lending rate from 15 3/4% to 15 1/2% Monday morning and kicked off a rally that sent the Dow up more than 16 points in heavy volume. Prices climed on the bond market and a wave of selling swept through many commodity markets. The dollar moved lower on most foreign-exchange markets.

J.L. HUTCHESON

Most analysts feel that Monday's rally was prompted by a belief that interest rates probably have peaked. There is some concern that interest rates won't fall very fast because the pressure is still on the dollar and the government has demonstrated it's inability to solve the inflation problem.

Iran continues to be a drag on the market. The real economic problem from Iran remains a long-term one with few readily available solutions. Iran has initiated a program to reduce the importance of the dollar in world finance and the lessen the U.S. role as the world's banker. While their success has been quite limited, it does appear that the dollar has been hurt some on the international front.

Computer, defense and savings-and-loan issues were particularly strong this week with nearly every other stock group participating in the powerful broad-based rally.

Most analysts see the current turmoil in Iran as a catalyst which will turn the nation back to a more strongly U.S.-oriented policy and provide numerous benefits for the North American energy stocks and defense-oriented stocks.

Currently, there are many stocks that analysts say represent tremendous values and will perform better than the overall market which will probably continue to be volatile and confused. They see extraordinary changes coming up that show very attractive opportunities in the consumer-discretionary income, technology-productivity and energy related industries. Analysts expect to see these issues in these particular fields as faring better than most of the blue chip stock in the Dow Jones industrial average.

People Pay More Income In Taxes

Taxpayers in 1964 shelled out just over 12% of their earnings to the Federal government in the form of taxes. Today, the average is closer to 18%. This increase has come about despite a period of repeated "tax-reductions" by politicians.

Federal income-tax rates were cut in 1964 and again in 1965. The reductions during the two years averaged about 25%. In 1965, the top rate was trimmed to 70% and the bottom rate was cut to 14%. These remain the top and bottom rates.

What amounts to another rate cut for most taxpayers went into affect this year. Personal exemptions were increased to $1,000.00 from $750 and various tax brackets were widened so as to trim many rates slightly.

This paradox of climbing actual rates of taxation and falling official tax rates has developed by no coincidence during 15 years of sharply worsening inflation.

As prices have increased more and more rapidly, so has income. Altogether since 1964, the consumer price index has climbed some 137%, and income has risen at roughly the same pace.

When one first examines this situation it doesn't look too bad. It's only when we look below the surface that the problems become apparent. Whereas in 1964, a family earning $8,132 paid 18% in Federal taxes; today a family must earn $18,815 to have the same standard of living and pays taxes at a rate of 21%.

Because the 1979 family is in a higher tax bracket than it's 1964 counterpart, and pays more for Social Security, its after-tax income, adjusted for inflation, is worth far less.

Many people are now quite concerned over this situation and advance the idea of indexing to offset the problem of inflation. Simply put, this means that tax rates are lowered as individuals are pushed into higher brackets by inflation.

It is imperitive that tax-payers force the government to take such steps that would require that federal tax rates be reduced each year to offset the effects of inflation. It is highly probable that if Congress could not rely on inflation to raise taxes that they would be forced to design a more efficient tax system.

Washington opposes indexing. It opposes it because it would reduce federal tax revenues and a considerable fraction of the fereral bureaucracy, as well as many legislators, take an unenthusiastic view of that eventually.

Market Rallies, Interest Rates Lower

By CHET CURRIER

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Put two or more Wall Streeters in the same place these days, and the question is bound to come up: have interest rates peaked?

That was just what happened over and over again this past week as nearly 1,000 people who make their living in the stocks and bonds business made their annual pilgrimage to Boca Raton for the convention of the Securities Industry Association.

While they golfed, partied and did some collective worrying over whether the markets would fare better in the 1980s than they did in the inflation-plagued 70s, the markets themselves were staging a moderate rally on Wall Street.

The spark for that advance was a continuing decline in interest rates from the record highs they reached in October, after the Federal Reserve announced a stringent new plan to clamp down on credit.

Rates on some U.S. government securities that soared above 12.5 percent in late October were down to just above 11 percent in the waning days of November. That helped push bond yields down and bond prices up. And the stock market, which seems to grow more and more sensitive to credit market developments, responded in kind, although dampened by worries about the Iranian situation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 10.58 to 822.35.

The New York Stock Exchange Composite Index chimed in with a 1.05-point rise to 60.71, and the American Stock Exchange market-value Index was up 4.64 to 227.78.

There was no disputing the downward direction of rates over the past four weeks. But the question before the house was whether this was the real thing, or just another of the "false peaks" that have boobytrapped so many investors over the past few years when rates started to climb again to new highs.

One expert on the convention program, Stanford University finance professor Ezra Solomon, declared flatly, "I think this is the topping out" and forecast a drop in money-market rates to around 9 percent by the end of 1980. But among the once-burned-twice-shy brokers, there were still plenty of doubts.

Robert H.B. Baldwin, president and managing director of Morgan Stanley & Co., told a group of reporters over breakfast that he doubted the peak in rates had yet been seen. And when they eventually do begin to recede, he said, "I don't think they're coming down as far as many people think they are going to."

Although the Fed's new tough line hit the market hard this fall, Baldwin repeated his support of that action. "It's the price we had to pay to bring things under control," he said.

Nevertheless, he said, stubborn inflation, as attested to by Tuesday's report of another 1-percent rise in consumer prices during October, remains a formidable obstacle to achieving any large reduction in interest rates.

"The Fed can't do it alone," he said. "We still have to get an oil policy. And it's going to be a tough battle to get inflation under control because it's just so deeply in people's minds."

Baldwin said individual investors had been "very smart" in taking advantage of such new investment vehicles as money-market mutual funds, with their high current yield and relative safety, rather than exposing themselves to the losses long-term bonds have suffered as inflation accelerated.

But the public's growing awareness of ways to avoid the ravages of inflation, and their very expectations of more inflation ahead, have increased the difficulty of slowing the economy and cooling inflationary pressures, he said.

For that reason, he predicted that any major progress against inflation would come "later rather than sooner."

Solomon argued that there was cause for hope as a direct result of the October surge in interest rates. Until recently, he noted, people were willing to borrow for mortages and consumer purchases at nominally high interest rates because the inflation rate was even higher.

That could be changing now, he said, because interest rates are above the inflation rate for the first time this cycle.

PRISONER RELEASE PLANNED

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — The government will release about 2,000 remaining communist prisoners next Saturday, Indonesia's security commander announced. Adm. Sudomo told reporters Saturday after a one-hour meeting with President Suharto that the release would complete a government program to free political prisoners. But he said 41 prisoners would remain in custody until they reject their political ideology. The human rights group Amnesty International had estimated that up to 100,000 political prisoners were held in the country, many of them since 1965.

Recipe Research Raises Problems For Museum Conservator

By GERRY BURTON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Sometimes historic reproduction can be a problem.

Success can hinge on the strangest things, like the dimensions of an egg when the 1879 recipe calls for "butter the size of an egg."

Bill Green, conservator of historic furnishings at The Museum of Texas Tech University, ran into a few dilemmas while researching recipes for food in the time span of the houses at the Ranching Heritage Center.

Food, being prepared or just displayed as all ready for Christmas feasting, will be a big part of the scenes in the Dec. 5-6 annual Candlelight Christmas tour of the outdoor ranch museum.

For accuracy in cuisine, Green studied vintage cookbooks and also newspapers, railroad expansions and peddler habits of the eras of historic ranch buildings preserved at the museum.

For palatable foodstuffs, he turned to Dr. Minna Lamb, Margaret W. Weeks Professor Emeritus in Food Nutrition at Tech, for assistance in transposing recipes into modern usage.

A call for 18 egg whites, no big deal for a pioneer cook with a yardful of chickens, was a real eyebrow raiser.

Then, there was the quandary over egg size for a bachelor who cooks for himself and knows about small to extra large eggs in the stores.

To make sure everything was right, he tried his hand at a spice marble cake and a "Merry Christmas" white cake from an 1879 cookbook.

According to his tasters, the museum staff, all went well in the transition over the century of time.

Similar cakes, plus a few others, will be at the Christmas scene at the Jowell House, built with gunports for protection against raiding Comanches but located in Palo Pinto County within reach of Weatherford and Fort Worth markets.

Staff members and volunteers will be busy at Christmas tasks in some of the buildings restored from the ranch industry's trail into history, but the Jowell House will be a scene of waiting with table loaded for the annual tour.

The lonely life of the cowboy spending Christmas on the prairie or in the bunkhouse will be shown in contrast to a barn dance in full swing in the Reynolds-Gentry Barn.

Activities in the restored structures at the museum will be as accurate as Green's research can make them from printed accounts of the specific time the building was part of ranching history.

For instance, there would have been coconut available, from peddlers or from railhead towns, for the Merry Christmas cake, so Green topped his as the recipe said.

In the Hedwig Hill double log cabin, he scheduled the first Christmas tree, since research revealed the tree was a German tradition and came to Texas with the Germans, one of whom built Hedwig Hill.

He found no reference to Christmas celebration in line cabins, so the candlelight visitors will see the cowboy segments of ranch history much as usual.

Oranges, according to an old Fort Worth newspaper, were available in parts of Texas a century ago, so oranges are a part of the Christmas scene.

CHECKING THE CHILDREN — While the "children" appear to watch, Maureen Figel of Dallas, a senior fashion design major at Texas Tech University, works on a display which will be part of an upcoming "Kids' Classic Costumes" exhibit at The Museum of Texas Tech University. Historical costumes from the museum collection will be featured, telling the child fashion story from velvet skirts for boys to satin and lace for the girls. (Staff Photo by Gerry Burton)

Army Officer's Body Transported Home

DOVER, Del. (AP) — The body of an Army warrant officer who was killed during an attack on the American embassy in Pakistan last week was transported back to his home state of North Carolina Saturday, officials said.

The body of WO Bryan Ellis, of Spring Lake, N.C., was moved by hearse from Dover Air Force Base to Washington National Airport where it was scheduled to be flown to Fayetteville, N.C., Saturday night, said Senior Airman Edward Haney.

The body was to be taken to the Adcock-Geddie Funeral Home until Monday when a burial service with full military honors is scheduled at 2 p.m. at the Swansboro Baptist Church in Swansboro, N.C.

Ellis' body was returned to the United States Friday from Frankfurt, West Germany.

Ellis was one of two American servicemen killed when the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad was attacked by an angry mob. The body of Marine Cpl. Steven J. Crowley, of New York, was buried Friday in Arlington National Cemetery.

Funding Plagues Other State Hospital Districts

erage citizen there. Inflation has made it impossible to keep up in terms of building needs.

Bexar County is currently considering closing its outpatient service at the Brady Clinic because of the high indigency costs. Of approximately 150,000 visits a year, only about 10 percent were paying patients last year.

At the lower end of the scale, indigents in San Antonio were paying only 75 cents per visit, and that included treatment as well as medicine.

But Bexar County was, in many instances, not even collecting that 75 cents per visit. Like Lubbock County, collections in Bexar County facilities were way behind what they should have been.

"I had a hell of a time trying to get administration to move in that direction," Fordyce said. As the newly appointed chairman for the Bexar County Board of Managers, he hired three investigators (two ex-policemen and an attorney) to start a massive collection effort.

Five months ago, Bexar County had a $3 million bad debt figure. That has been reduced by $250,000 since the collection efforts were increased.

Fordyce has given up trying to turn in a balanced budget to his own county commissioners. He feels it is better to turn in a budget which accurately reflects the needs of the district as compared to money available.

But when asked about real problems, Fordyce points to Dallas County's Parkland Hospital.

Comparing Parkland to Lubbock's Health Sciences Center Hospital is like comparing a toothache to an appendectomy. Whereas Health Sciences is a modern, new facility which has never been criticized for its upkeep, Parkland is described as a disgrace by the people who work there.

The Dallas hospital is dirty, rundown and overcrowded, they say. Patients have been said to suffer and even die there because of inadequate care. The nursing staff is undermanned and overworked.

Dallas County residents voted in 1954 to create a hospital district for the indigent, deciding then that a first class hospital was not needed for the poor. The board of managers didn't even air-condition the hospital when it was built.

But through its association with the Southwestern Medical School, Parkland became a nationally-known trauma unit. With special facilities for burn patients and kidney transplants, the hospital is no longer just a place to dump the poor.

But money remains a problem. The hospital has financed cash shortfalls by delaying the purchase of needed equipment. Hospital finance director McGregor Day said back in April that the hospital probably will suffer bankruptcy through increasing operating losses and the depletion of its cash reserve — a prediction depressingly similar to one made recently for Lubbock County's district.

The Dallas County Hospital District is seeking an almost $80 million bond issue to transfer Parkland into a top-notch medical center. Some board members have spoken against the request for more tax money, saying it will only cover about half of the district's expected shortfall. And nobody's taking any bets on the outcome of the vote, which probably will be paired with a city election in January or February.

Richard Durbin, the first administrator for the Lubbock County Hospital District, is now the administrator for Houston's Harris County Hospital District. Asked for the "Readers' Digest condensed version" of his district's responsibilities and financial status, things didn't sound quite as bad as those in Dallas, San Antonio and Lubbock.

Harris County runs a balanced budget, he said. No bonds are out and there is no indebtedness.

"We use a very strict eligibility program based on income and residence" for indigents, he said. And the district's Ben Taub General and Jefferson Davis Hospitals reflect a 96 percent inpatient occupancy.

But like the other hospital district administrators, Durbin will be traveling to San Antonio to look for help. The problem whcih remains, as always, is the future.

"If inflation exceeds the expansion of the tax base," Durbin mused, "then either services must be reduced or income must be increased — and that means taxes."

New Signs Appear Of Split In Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — The Moslem militants holding the U.S. Embassy claimed Saturday that one of their American hostages had confessed to being a CIA agent. The militants and Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini threaten to put their 50 captives on trial as "spies."

At the same time, new signs appeared of divisions on the Iranian side in the confrontation with the United States.

The embassy militants objected to a statement by acting Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh that three senior U.S. diplomats who have been at the Foreign Ministry were free to leave Iran, and Ghotbzadeh backed down.

In a more surprising development, the foreign minister's more moderate predecessor, Abolhassan Bani Sadr, was quoted as accusing Khomeini and Ghotbzadeh of having undermined efforts at negotiation.

"The point really is we adopted a policy that led to deadlock," Bani Sadr was quoted as saying in an interview published by the afternoon Tehran newspaper Ettelaat.

He reportedly said Ghotbzadeh had spread false propaganda and slandered the U.N. Security Council, and Khomeini's hard-line demand for the extradition of the ousted Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in exchange for the hostages "is not something that would be fruitful."

Khomeini replaced Bani Sadr with the more uncompromising Ghotbzadeh last week, but Bani Sadr remains a member of the all-powerful Revolutionary Council.

The U.N. Security Council, which the Iranians have condemned as a tool of the United States, was meeting to discuss the crisis.

The militants' new charges about espionage at the embassy came in a news conference with more than 100 foreign reporters who were allowed into the embassy compound.

They showed the reporters a message they say was sent from the embassy to Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance in August concerning the arrival at the embassy of a William Daugherty and Malcolm Kalp on "SRF assignments" and indicating that this involved the Central Intelligence Agency. The students did not appear to know what "SRF" signified, telling reporters, "Ask the CIA."

They said both men were among their hostages and that Daugherty had confessed to being a CIA officer. Kalp had not yet been asked, they said.

In Washington, State Department spokesman David Passage would not comment on the allegation that Daugherty was a CIA agent, but said the Iranian militants "have an ample record of forgery, misrepresentation and fabrication."

No List Released

Because no list of the remaining hostages has been released, it could not be determined whether the two men were, indeed, among the captives.

The militants said the document helped prove their allegation that the embassy was an espionage center.

Students said the telex message, allegedly from Charge d'Affaires L. Bruce Laingen, one of the three senior diplomats being held separately at the Foreign Ministry, agreed to the stationing of Kalp and Daugherty in Tehran, "as assigned."

In the message as displayed, Laingen purportedly insisted that because of the "great sensitivity locally to any hint of CIA activity, it is of the highest importance that the cover be the best we can come up with."

Common Practice

It is common practice for major countries to use some diplomatic positions as covers for spies. Iranians, recalling CIA involvement in the shah's restoration to the throne in 1953, are particularly sensitive to any CIA activities.

The students maintained "more important evidence" would be produced at espionage trials of the hostages, which Iran has threatened unless the United States sends back the shah to face trial for alleged mass murder and corruption. They set have set no date for the trials.

Earlier Saturday, the militants contradicted the foreign minister's Friday announcement that Laingen and the two other top envoys were free to leave.

The students said the three were spies and must be held in Iran and face trial, and Ghotbzadeh immediately denied his statement — made before 200 foreign journalists — that the trio would not be tried and were "free to leave," though he could not guarantee their safe conduct to the airport.

Bani Sadr's complaints in the newspaper interview were directed as much against Khomeini for denouncing the Security Council, as against Ghotbzadeh. As director of Iran's state radio and television, the new foreign minister continues to orchestrate massive anti-American demonstrations.

Defending his own policy, Bani Sadr said his objective had been to concentrate on the extradition of the shah "and to reduce the hostages issue to one of secondary importance."

The students Saturday repeated that if the shah left the United States for Egypt or another country, the hostages would not be released. The ex-monarch is reportedly soon to leave the New York hospital where he has been treated for cancer and gallstones, but it was not known whether he would accept Egypt's invitation to live there or try to find another country where he would be welcome.

"Allowing the shah to leave the United States is a bigger crime than allowing him to enter," said a student spokesman.

ALLEGED CIA DOCUMENTS — Alleged documents revealing CIA activity in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran since the Iranian revolution were produced by terrorists holding 49 Americans hostage. The documents were displayed at a press conference Saturday. One document, in photostat form, named tw U.S. agents as Malcolm Kalp and William Daugherty and dealt with the kind of cover they would require because of the "great sensitity locally." ## Variety Of Subjects Raised At Town Hall have faith that everything will work out right."

Hance said he approved of the President's cautious approach to the crisis. "Many of us are tempted to follow a gut reaction to go in there and rescue the hostages," he said. "But the safety of those hostages must be considered first."

Hance discounted any chances of rescuing the hostages through force.

"But if those hostages are harmed, then there's no question we should use military action so severe that no one will ever do this again," he said.

The Congressman suggested that the United States impose a naval blockade around Iran.

One man in the audience asked Hance why the Shah should not be sent back to Iran.

"Is he worth the lives of the 50 hostages?" the man asked.

Hance answered, "The worst thing we could do is send them the Shah back. You couldn't do that because it would be submission to blackmail. It would send us to the depths of world opinion."

In detailing the events that led to the current crisis in Iran, Hance began with the early 1950s, when he said the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency "put the Shah in power."

Although Hance called the Shah "a good friend of the United States," he also admitted that much of the methods the Shah used to rule Iran were not condonable.

Hance likened the Iranians' view of the Shah to the view that Americans had of Hitler during and after World War II.

"In understanding this, you can get a good indication of how the Iranians could be so stirred up over this," he said.

Another member of the audience asked Hance if citizenship could be taken away from the three American women in Iran who, before television cameras, said they supported the holding of the hostages and even condoned the terrorists threats to kill the hostages if the United States tried to rescue them.

"I found that revolting," Hance said. "But I'm not so sure what was behind that." He implied that the women, who had relatives in Iran, may have been pressured into making those statements.

Hance also told the audience that he believed the training of the 276 Iranian fighter pilot trainees in the United States, including three at Reese Air Force Base, should end.

Supports Chrysler Loan

On other issues, Hance said he supported lending the Chrysler Corp. $1.5 billion. He said it would cost the government more in costs such as unemployment compensation if Chrysler was allowed to go bankrupt.

"And after all the federal loans farmers in Texas have been granted, it's kind of hard to go to Washington and say you are against government loans," he said.

Hance also said he believes federally-funded abortions should be provided for pregnancies that were the result of rape or incest, or when the mother's life was in danger.

Hance also said he was opposed to the windfall profits tax on oil companies proposed by President Carter.

The town hall meeting ended after one man complained about mail he received from Washington, D.C. asking for contributions to numerous causes, including those supported by certain Congressmen.

"Ya'll don't get anything done too good," the man said. "And the more you leave us alone, the better. Except for this Iran thing — get after that."

U.N. Told Americans 'Seething' Over Iran

said. "The U.N. is no tool of the United States. But the world community has an interest in world peace and for that reason, the U.N. itself is on trial as to its effectiveness."

Church said the six-member congressional delegation was attending the Security Council session to "demonstrate the solidarity of the American government and the strong bipartisan backing given to the president by the Congress."

The others in the group are Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, who said "We wish the secretary-general well in his great efforts" to solve the dispute; Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., Rep. Peter Peyser, D-N.Y.; Rep. Larry Winn, R-Kan., and Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y. Winn and Rosenthal are members of this year's official U.S. delegation to the United Nations.

Waldheim also met Saturday with Foreign Minister A.C. Shahul Hameed of Sri Lanka, who came to the United Nations after three days of talks with officials in Tehran.

Waldheim said Hameed confirmed his impression that the Iranians were interested in settling the conflict.

He also said Hameed brought "assurances the hostages are safe" and that "authorities have taken all precautions to protect them."

Although the United States was determined to get the council to strongly support its efforts to gain the release of the hostages in the embassy, it was approaching the meeting cautiously.

Jill Schuker, speaking for McHenry before the debate opened, said, "I don't expect that we will introduce a resolution."

Other diplomats arriving for the consultations said they expected only speeches at the Saturday night session, with the council then adjourning until today or Monday when a resolution probably would be introduced.

Miss Schuker said U.S. efforts at the United Nations would be aimed at "getting some action from the council focusing on the hostages. I think what we would say is the intent of the council is some device of the international community to assist in getting the hostages released."

She would not elaborate, but council members are known to have talked about an arrangement under which the hostages would be released and an international tribunal would investigate deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary leader, has insisted that any investigation of the shah be conducted in Iran and that the shah be returned to Iran to face trial. The ousted monarch is in a New York hospital recovering from cancer therapy and gallstone surgery.

Saturday's council session was the second since Waldheim said last Sunday that the U.S.-Iranian conflict threatened world peace and called for an urgent meeting of the international body.

Iranian militants seized the embassy Nov. 4 and Waldheim said if the crisis was not resolved it "could have disastrous consequences" for the whole world.

Three ranking American diplomats also are being held captive at Iran's Foreign Ministry.

The council has issued two statements calling for the release of the hostages and charging that Iran's actions were violations of international law on diplomatic immunity.

In private consultations Friday, the council decided to go ahead with its plans for Saturday night's public meeting at 8 p.m. CST even though Iran decided against sending a representative. The session had been scheduled at that hour so Iran's acting foreign minister at the time, Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, could attend.

On Wednesday, however, the Iranian Revolutionary Council replaced Bani-Sadr with Gotzbadeh, and on Friday it announced that Iran would not participate in the Saturday night meeting.

The five permanent members of the Security Council are the United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain and France, and the 10 other members are Czechoslovakia, Gabon, Nigeria, Kuwait, Bolivia, Bangladesh, Portugal, Jamaica, Norway and Zambia.

Byrd Urges Carter Hit Oil Prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter should rein in oil companies' prices himself unless the Senate greatly strengthens its bill to tax rising oil income, Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd said Saturday.

When the Senate quit for the weekend, its version of a "windfall profits" oil tax stood at $129 billion for the next decade — less than half the levels asked by President Carter and approved by the House.

And if senators don't put another $60 billion to $80 billion of muscle into their version, Byrd said, "I think controls should be slapped back on."

Dubbed a tax on "windfall profits," the proposal would not directly tax profit but rather the $1 trillion in increased income oil companies are expected to receive over the next decade because of Carter's order to phase out controls on U.S. crude oil prices.

Despite stiff opposition to strengthening moves in two weeks of debate, Byrd said he is confident agreement can be reached and that tax foes are realizing "nobody an have it copletely his own way."

Many of those opponents, including Sen. Russell Long, D-La., chairman of the Finance Committee, have shown "a very reasonable attitude" about adding to the tax, but questions remain on how and where the bill might be changed, he said.

Byrd, who said he opposes oil price controls in general, is the latest in a growing list of legislators asking a return to such controls if opponents succeed in watering down the tax proposal.

Action on the Senate bill was held up late last week by oil-state senators.

Asked if he had the votes to break any filibuster, Byrd avoided a yes-or-no answer. "I don't want to resort to cloture, but we're going to have a bill," he said, referring to the process of cutting off debate on the bill.

Byrd said he met Friday on the issue with senators from both parties and expected positions would be clearer after Republicans meet Monday to discuss it in detail.

Brother Sees Optimism On Hostage

REVERE, Mass. (AP) — Ed Kalp, the younger brother of one of the hostages held captive in Iran, says he is optimistic about his brother's release, despite the fact that Iranian students have indicated they believe Malcolm Kalp is a CIA undercover agent.

"He's been in worse jams in his life," Ed Kalp said in a telephone interview. "When I first heard about it (the hostage taking,) I was very put back. But after the first day or two, I became more hopeful that they will be released. I'm optimistic now."

Malcolm Kalp, 42, who served in Vietnam, arrived in Iran three days before the U.S. embassy was seized. Released hostages, upon returning home, have identified Kalp as one of the hostages still held.

On Saturday, Iranian students released a secret Central Intelligence Agency letter, naming Kalp and William Daugherty as "SRF" agents for the CIA. The students said Daugherty has admitted being a CIA agent, but that Kalp has not been asked yet.

The students did not appear to know what "SRF" signified. They told reporters to "Ask the CIA."

Ed Kalp, 32, a rare coin and stamp salesman, said he is satisfied with the efforts of President Carter and the government to get his brother and the other hstages reeased.

"Our government has acted the best it can," he said. "This is the only way we can do it really. Any sort of show of strength will just aggravate the Iranians. It's just a matter of being hopeful."

Kalp, however, said he is very dissatisfied with the way he and his family has been treated by the State Department.

"I wish the State Department would be more upfront with us," said Kalp, whose parents died within the past two years, leaving he and two brothers.

Cruise Missile Makes Successful Test Flight

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah (AP) — The Air Force reports a Boeing cruise missile has made a successful test flight from the Pacific Ocean to Utah.

It was 12th flight of an air-launched Cruise missile in the current flyoff between Boeing and General Dynamics.

The unarmed Boeing AGM 86B was launched Thursday.

Oil Windfall Profits Benefits Debunked

be interested in seeing this windfall profits tax pass? It gives them more power. The only people in the world that can break the OPEC cartel are oil producers. If they are not permitted to produce, then nobody is going to do it—there is nobody else to do it."

John Christman, chairman of Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners, said, "The thing is 100 percent political. What they (Congress) wants is all those funds to pay utility bills for the voters up in the Northeast this election year."

He said an analysis of the major companys' profits shows that the large increases came from overseas operations.

"Congress thinks they are holding down the price of oil for their constituents by all these things. But if they would just let the market place loose, they would have a lot cheaper oil than they have now."

Christman thinks there is plenty of potential for new oil reserves in the United States. "We have tested only about 5 percent of the potential productive sediments in the U.S.," he said.

Rex Fuller, Lubbock independent, thinks the exemption of the first 1,000 barrels of oil for small producers will maintain the present level of exploration with a chance for increases in drilling activity.

He said Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock attempted to introduce an exemption for independents when the bill was in the House Rules Committee, but failed on a 7-7 vote.

The Rules Committee is not known as a committee friendly to the oil industry, according to Fuller, indicating that some support for the exemption would exist in the House.

Independents are not alone in expressing revulsion for the measure.

Walter R. Peirson, executive vice president of Standard, said recently that the size of profits has nothing to do with the windfall tax plan. "The real questions are how much additional consumer revenue government will absorb and what effect this rakeoff will have on domestic oil production."

Peirson projects that if oil companies were allowed to invest the increased revenue for new production," the industry would increase domestic oil production by an estimated 4 million barrels a day in the late 1980s."

Conversely, he said, windfall tax proposals now being considered could limit the increase in production by as much as 2 million barrels a day.

Robert W. Blake, another Lubbock independent, and active worker in the Republican Party, has written an open letter to the President and to members of Congress, detailing a simple plan for avoiding gasoline lines and rationing.

"There are two things you can do in the complicated energy mess to offset the Iranian shutoff," he said.

"You can obtain the production figures for 1979 on all old oil.

"You can then tell all oil producers that you will allow them world price for any increase in production above that in 1979."

—Decrease our dependence on OPEC.

—Offset the Iranian shutoff.

—And, it will not cost the consumer one penny, since we are already paying world prices to OPEC for the oil that we would be displacing.

—The oil producers would infill drill new wells and rework old wells which will increase present old oil production by at least 1,500,000 barrels per day in two years or less."

Unbowed Iranian Deported From U.S.; Other Hearings Slated

By The Associated Press

The first man to be deported in President Carter's campaign against illegal Iranian aliens, launched three weeks ago in response to the captivity of hostages in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, is on his way home, officials say.

Praising Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and urging the extradition of the deposed shah, Ali Aminian left Grapevine, Tex. on Friday evening en route to New York, Frankfurt, Germany and Tehran.

Elsewhere, deportation proceedings continued against Iranians in North Dakota, Kansas, Maryland, Wisconsin and other states.

South Carolina Gov. Dick Riley urged churches to follow President Carter's suggestion to ring their bells each day at noon.

Wisconsin Gov. Lee Dreyfus said Khomeini was protected by international law during his exile in Paris and is now "violating every concept of diplomatic order and international law that it has taken civilization over 10,000 years to develop."

William Chambers, the Dallas director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said Aminian was the first Iranian student deported against his will since Nov. 10 when President Carter ordered a review of the visas of an estimated 50,000 Iranian students.

Vern Jervis, INS spokesman in Washington, said he couldn't confirm that Aminian was the first to go, but said no others had been deported as of Thursday.

Aminian said deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi should be turned over to the Iranian goernment, adding, "the shah is a good price" for the 50 Americans being held hostage.

Two Iranians who were declared unwanted foreign nationals left the United States from Baltimore voluntarily Friday on a flight paid for by the American government.

"We're against the American government, not against the American people," said Abolghassem Zare-Shahneh. He left with his cousin, Ebrahim Zare-Shahneh, who said, "The Americans are good people, really. When they hear something about Iran, they react. That's normal. But first of all, they don't want war. We don't want war. We all want peace."

Iranians in the United States have until Dec. 14 to report to immigration offices. Officials have said that about 10 percent of those reporting so far have violated the terms of their visas, but many of the cases could be tied up in hearings and court appeals.

Two Pennsylvania congressmen, both ex-Marine officers, Friday urged President Carter to create a highly mobile Marine fighting force capable of military rescue and protection operations around the world. Republican Lawrence Coughlin and Democrat John Murtha said the force should be on 24-hour alert.

Radio Station KFGO of Fargo, N.D., sent a letter with 4,000 to 5,000 signatures to Tehran denouncing the holding of the hostages.

Ex-Foreign Minister Charges Iranian TV

TEHRAN, Iran (ap) — Abolhassan Bani Sadr has charged that Iran's radio and television — controlled by the man who replaced him as acting foreign minister — spread false propaganda, forged news and slandered U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim in pursuing a hard-line policy against the United States, according to an interview published here Saturday.

Bani Sadr was quoted by the Tehran newspaper Ettelaat as saying that because of this he was forced to resign his Foreign Ministry post last week.

"That we should ask the United States to extradite the shah (in exchange for 50 hostages held by Iranian militants) is not something that would be fruitful," Bani Sadr was reported as saying.

The remarks as published indicated a deep rift among the Iranian leaders on how the crisis with the United States should be dealt with.

The remarks also seemed directed as well at Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the Islamic leader who has denounced the U.N. Security Council as a U.S. mouthpiece.

Bani Sadr was replaced by Sadegh Ghotbzadeh in the Foreign Ministry post. Iran's state radio and television, which Ghotbzadeh still directs, has been encouraging the massive anti-American demonstrations of the past weeks outside the U.S. Embassy where the hostages have been held since Nov. 4.

"The point really is we adopted a policy that led to deadlock," Bani Sadr was quoted as saying by Ettelaat.

The newspaper gave this account of the interview:

Defending his own policy as head of the Foreign Ministry, Bani Sadr said his objective had been to concentrate on the extradition of the shah "and to reduce the hostages issue to one of secondary importance."

(It was not explained how he went about doing this, but in interviews before his resignation he was quoted as saying Iran would be willing to release the hostages if the United States either denounced the shah as a criminal or returned the millions of dollars Iran claims the shah has in U.S. banks.)

"In order to promote the extradition issue we had to turn the question of the United States and its interference in Iran into the issue of the day," Bani Sadr said.

"The radio and television, however, adopted a policy diametrically opposed to ours. With false propaganda, forging news and slandering the U.N. secretary general, it created an atmospehere under which everybody got the impression that, should we go to the Security Council, they would immediately give us a guilty verdict.

"Hence it became impossible to persuade the U.S. government to extradite the shah by creating a favorable public opinion in the United States and the world. So how could I stay at the Foreign Ministry?"

Bani Sadr added that the Security Council had changed considerably in recent years, and Iran should have attended its meeting in order to influence international public opinion by doing so.

On his second day as acting foreign minister, Ghotbzadeh told a news conference Iran would boycott the Security Council meeting in New York Saturday night and would reject any decision reached by it.

Bani Sadr was quoted as saying in the newspaper interview his plan had been to present evidence during the Security Council meeting proving Iran's charges against the deposed shah. He was quoted as saying he had intended to take along with him to New York the parents of young Iranians who allegedly had been tortured and executed by the shah's secret police, SAVAK.

He also disagreed with the policy of Khomeini and other Iranian leaders to reject any negotiations with the U.S. government, the newspaper said.

Iranian Says Khomeini Rule Failing

HOUSTON (UPI) — An Iranian industrialist who fled to Houston about three months ago said the occupation of the U.S. Embassy was designed to mask failures of the current Iranian government.

Ali Ebrahimi, in an interview published Saturday in Houston, said the embassy takeover is a manuever to create international conflict in order to cover up the economic and social failures of the regime of Ayatollah Khomeini.

Ebrahimi said he has formed the Iranian Committee for the Release of U.S. Hostages, comprised of leading Iranian international industrialists, to express indignation over what the Khomeini government has done.

The committee, he said, has sent a letter to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. Ebrahimi said his committee is supported by 2,000 to 3,000 Iranians who live throughout the world, particulary in Europe and the United States.

Ebrahimi said he moved to Houston with his wife and three children to escape the Iranian government. He was chief executive officer of two Iranian construction companies.

Ebrahimi said he is directing the effort from his temporary home in Houston to assure Americans that most Iranians in this country don't support the policies of Khomeini.

Complaint System To Get Overhaul

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government agency is seeking to reduce the amount of time consumed by resolution of complaints of discrimination against people who question safety in their workplaces.

"We are attempting to streamline the complaint system and make it more responsive to the needs of all parties involved," said Assistant Labor Secretary Eula Bingham.

The department is testing an experimental "accelerated settlement" program aimed at helping settle discrimination complaints without long and costly adversary proceedings. The Occupational Safety and Health Act protects workers who exercise their safety and health rights from discrimination by their bosses.

Aggies Stun Sixth-Ranked Texas!

A&M Upset Cancels Longhorns' Sugar Bowl Date

COLLEGE STATION (AP) —"It was one hell of a game," coach Tom Wilson said of Texas A&M's 13-7 upset of No.6 Texas on Saturday, and the A&M partisans in a record stadium crowd of 69,017 no doubt agreed.

A&M supporters lingered on the field for over an hour after A&M capped a disappointing season with a victory that knocked arch-rival Texas out of the Sugar Bowl.

The loss also cost Texas, 9-2, a share of the Southwest Conference football championship with once-beaten Houston and Arkansas.

Houston will now represent the SWC in the Cotton Bowl against Nebraska, and Arkansas will play top-ranked Alabama in the Sugar Bowl. As a consolation, Texas will meet Washington, 8-3, in the Sun Bowl at El Paso on Dec. 22.

Wilson recognized the importance of A&M kickers David Hardy and David Appleby by saying, "I thought our kicking game was outstanding."

Texas coach Fred Akers said, "For about seven or eight minutes we looked like we were in disguise. We weren't the Longhorns. That's just too many errors, and I wish I knew what caused them."

Texas fumbled four times and lost two, and A&M capitalized for a field goal and a touchdown.

"They (A&M) were sure up for this game," said Akers in what must be considered an understatement.

Texas, playing without its entire starting backfield who were sidelined with injuries, had to rely almost entirely on its nationally third-ranked defense, and it was not enough against aroused A&M.

Hardy kicked first-half field goals of 23 and 22 yards and Curtis Dickey, returning from a rib injury, flashed 20 yards as A&M took a 13-7 hlftime led.

Hardy's first field goal was set up when Ted Constanzo punted only 27 yards to the A&M 40.

His second three-pointer came after Appleby had boomed a 49-yard punt and Texas was penalized 15 yards to its 18-yard line. Leroy King fumbled at the 28, with Carl Grulich recovering and Hardy booted his field goal with only 1:37 left in the first half.

On second and 9, Dickey took a pitchout and headed right, pulled up as if to pass and raced through the startled Longhorns for a touchdown.

Texas' only score was set up when tackle Steve McMichael jarred the ball loose from Johnny Hector at the A&M 15 and Ron Bones recovered.

The Longhorns were hampered by the recent loss of starting halfbacks A.J. "Jam" Jones and Rodney Tate, the two fastest backs on the squad, and A&M's 244-pound James Zachary and 230-pound Jacob Green shut off Texas' ground game. A&M also bottled up Olympic sprinter "Lam" Jones with double coverage.

Texas' most promising drive to pull out a possible one-point victory carried to the A&M 25. On second and 7, however, Brad Beck lost the ball and Arlis James recovered for A&M at the 31.

Texas later drove to the A&M 32 but linebacker Cal Peveto stripped tight end Lawrence Sampleton of a pass from quarterback Rick McIvor and on the next play, Sampleton dropped a McIvor bullet that hit him in the chest at the A&M 19.

McIvor, starting only his second game as the result of a foot injury to Donnie Little, scrambled for 15 yards and 17 yards in the closing minutes to keep Texas' hopes alive. But his 4th-and-6 throw from the A&M 47 was ruled incomplete around the Aggie 30 and A&M fans were able to whoop and holler for the final 1:26 of the game.

Mosley held the ball aloft and raced around in the middle of the field as the final seconds ticked away.

The victory somewhat salvaged a disappointing season for A&M, which lost three games by a total of five points.

Cougars Humiliate Rice 63-0

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Cougars, dogged for one year by the memory of a last-second 35-34 loss to Notre Dame in the 1979 Cotton Bowl, got a chance Saturday to redeem themselves when they trounced Rice, 63-0.

The victory, coupled with Texas A&M's 13-7 upset of No.6 Texas, gave the 10th-ranked Cougars a share of their third Southwest Conference championship in four years and the host role in the 1980 Cotton Bowl against Nebraska.

John Newhouse scored three touchdowns, one from 64 yards, as Houston finished in a tie for the SWC crown with Arkansas, both with 8-1 league records.

"This is one Cotton Bowl that we are going to finish," Houston Coach Bill Yeoman shouted above the bedlam in the Cougar dressing room.

"I thought our chances were quite remote going into the game, but it was a great win for our kids. I thought we played real well."

"On behalf of the Cotton Bowl Committee, we extend this invitation to the University of Houston for the third time in four years," Shryock said.

Turning to his team, Yeoman asked jokingly, "Shall we vote?"

Amid wild screaming by the Cougar players, Yeoman said, "On behalf of the team, we accept."

Had Texas beaten A&M, it would have been a three-way tie for the SWC title, with Arkansas going to the Cotton Bowl, Texas to the Sugar Bowl and Houston to the Sun Bowl.

GETTING HIGH — El Paso Coronado running back Forrest Rich (33) gets airborne during third-quarter action Saturday afternoon against the Monterey Plainsmen in a Class AAAA regional football game. Rich, who scored a Coronado touchdown late in the game, picked up only one-yard on this carry, however. Still Coronado went on to win the contest 24-8. # Birds Claw Monterey

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

A little hoofin' music, maestro. And keep those vibes coming. The Monterey offense, with the assistance of El Paso Coronado's defense, is about to teach everyone that new dance step — the Plainsmen Push.

It's a simple little number. First, take two steps forward, then two steps back, slide to the right, and kick. Cha, cha, cha.

Monterey waited until the fourth period of its Class AAAA regional playoff contest against the Thunderbirds to unveil its immitation of the June Taylor Dancers. And their timing couldn't have come at a worst time.

Unable to move the ball against the Thunderbirds in the fourth quarter, Monterey — which trailed only 14-8 heading into the last 12 minutes — saw its season come to an abrupt halt as Coronado went on to score 10 unanswered points and hand the Lubbock school a 24-8 loss. Coronado now moves on to a quarterfinal contest against Lewisville, a 28-12 winner over Fort Worth Arlington Heights, Friday night at Texas Stadium in Dallas.

Monterey head coach James Odom, who guided Monterey to a 10-2 won-loss record, had nothing but praise for the Coronado crew that "just whipped us up and down the line on both offense and defense. They really took it to us. They were certainly the better of the two teams today (Saturday)."

The statistics verify Odom's statement. In the second half, the Coronado defense held Monterey to only two first downs, 10 yards rushing and 14 yards passing. That's a grand total of 24 yards offense, for those counting.

When Webster included the word domination in his dictionary, he must have known something like this was coming.

Coronado, now 11-1 for the year, jumped out to a 14-0 lead, thanks to a 19-yard scoring toss from quarterback Brad Robalin to end Bryan Peer in the first quarter and a three-yard strike from Roablin to Forrest Rich midway through third period. Gilbert Martinez added both extra points.

The first touchdown was set up after defensive back Jay Saad stripped the ball away from Monterey running back Willie Johnson on the CHS 24. The T-Birds then marched 57 yards on 12 plays before Robalin, under heavy pressure from MHS defensive end Kelly Grammer, spotted Peer on the Plainsmen five in front of back Larry Hallman. Rolling to the right, Robalin hit Peer with a bullet. Peer then did the rest on his own.

It was a Johnson fumble in the third quarter, this one picked up by Steve Nichols on the MHS 17, that put the T-Birds back into scoring position for the second time. Again on a play-action pass, Robalin found Rich, who'd swung out of the backfield, all by his lonesome in the end zone.

Both coaches agreed that the Johnson miscues — particularly the first one — helped set the stage for the entire game.

"That (the first fumble) set the tempo of the game for them," said Odom. "If we'd been able to score early, then it might have been a different game. But we didn't."

Coronado coach Don Brooks added: "When he (Saad) took the ball away, I felt then like we had the chance to win the game. It gave us a lot of momentum. I felt we could do anything then."

Red Raiders Rip Buffaloes

By CHUCK McDONALD
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

By the end of Texas Tech's season opener Saturday night in the Municipal Coliseum it was a wonder that any of the 8,771 fans in attendance could still see the action on the floor.

Texas Tech tied a school field goal percentage mark as the Raiders connected on 33 of 50 shots from the floor for a 66 percent mark as Tech took a 78-64 victory from visiting West Texas State. The Raiders are now 1-0 on the young season, the Buffaloes 1-1.

"That's (field goal percentage) one thing we wanted to bring up this year," said Tech coach Gerald Myers after the game. "For an opening game, I thought we played really well. But we're still young," he added, "and we're still learning."

Sophomores David Little and Jeff Taylor are apparently learning well. Those two led the Raider shooting exhibition as each finished with 23 points. Taylor was 10 of 13 from the field, Little was 10 of 15.

The last time the Raiders shot as well as they did Saturday night was back in 1976 when they were 66 percent against the Arkansas Razorbacks.

But somewhere in the course of Saturday's game, the Buffaloes turned a one-sided rout into a nip-and-tuck contest. After leading by as many as 22 in the early going and enjoying a 38-22 halftime spread, the Raiders watched the Buffs cut the margin to 42-40 with 13:39 left in the contest.

The Raiders went 5½ minutes into the second period without scoring a point and WT rattled off 14 unanswered points. Aiding and abetting the Buff cause was a pair of technical fouls called against Tech coach Gerald Myers that resulted in six WT points.

"We missed Kent's (Williams) leadership at the start of the second half," explained Myers. "If he had been in there, I don't feel like we would've gone that long without scoring."

But the reason Williams wasn't in there was because the Raider senior had picked up four fouls in the first half and was watching the WT comeback from the bench.

"But the important thing was that we came back," added Myers. "We could've gotten tight but we kept our poise."

Little hit Tech's first bucket of the second half with a 20-foot jumper and then Taylor came back with a drive to the basket to snap the Raiders out of there slump. But the Buffs stayed close.

Then, with Tech leading 49-48, the Raiders went on a tear ripping off 16 unanswered points and the game was in the bag. Leading the Raider charge was Little.

He hit from 25 feet, then from 20, then from 25 again and once more from 25. Down on the other end of the court, the Buffs were getting only one shot as Ralph Brewster took control of the boards. Brewster ended the night with 12 rebounds while Taylor and Ben Hill each added four.

"Well, I was wide open," explained Little. "I'm supposed to make those kind."

"Coach Myers told me that if I had the open shot to take it," added Tech's 6-6 sophomore, "so that gave me plenty of confidence. But Jeff (Taylor) or Kent (Williams) could've made the shots also — I was just open."

"Taylor or Williams could've also done the job," admitted Myers. "We're a pretty good zone team. Taylor and Little are good basketball players," he added, "but they're still sophomores."

The Raiders came out looking like world beaters, jumping out to an early 18-4 lead. At one point Tech enjoyed a 30-8 spread but then Myers started shuffling people in off the bench.

"We really played well for the first 10 minutes," said Myers, "but we had to play those boys off the bench — they've got to get some playing time."

"(Leslie) Nichols came in there and made some big defensive plays," added Myers. "He'll help us."

Indeed, Nichols brought a roar from the crowd everytime he went onto the floor. And in 12 minutes of playing time the big man picked up three blocked — of the spectacular variety. Besides just delighting the crowd, two of Nichol's rejects keyed Tech baskets.

Dan Elmer keyed the WT attack as he also hit for 23 points, 16 of those in the second half.

Kent Williams, who was five-of-six from the field, had 12 for the Raiders and Brewster added eight.

Taylor did most of his damage in the first half when we was six-of-seven for 12 points. Little had eight in the first half before exploding in the final period.

"You learn something from every game," said Myers. "And this one should help us."

Little claimed that those two technical fouls against Myers were what ignited Tech's second half rally.

"Those technical fouls kind of got us fired us up," said Little smiling. "I mean, he (Myers) was really hacked off."

Alabama Whips Auburn On Late Score

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Steadman Shealy darted eight yards for his second touchdown of the game with 8:17 remaining Saturday, lifting fumble-plagued Alabama to a thrilling 25-18 victory over Auburn that put the Crimson Tide in the Sugar Bowl and may have preserved its No.1 national ranking.

Shealy, who threw a 28-yard touchdown pass to Keith Pugh early in the second period and scored on a 1-yard plunge eight minutes later, took Alabama 82 yards in seven plays to the winning touchdown. Auburn, ranked 14th, had jumped in front 18-17 on Charlie Trotman's touchdown passes of 36 yards to Joe Cribbs and 11 to Mark Robbins 3½ minutes apart.

With their backs to the wall after losing four fumbles in the third quarter, Alabama's defending national champions began their winning drive with 11:31 left, eight seconds after Auburn had taken the lead. Shealy reeled off runs of 9 and 15 yards, passed 9 more to Pugh and Steve Whitman hammered 20 yards as Alabama, aided by a personal foul against Auburn, marched to the Tigers' 8-yard line.

Shealy then ran a keeper play to his left, cut back inside, evaded two would-be tacklers and stormed into the end zone.

The Crimson Tide still had to survive two Auburn threats.

James Brooks' 64-yard kickoff return put the ball at the Alabama 31, but Mike Locklear dropped a fourth-down pass inside the 5 with 6:43 to go. Less than 2½ minutes later, another fourth-down pass went astray at the Alabama 37, killing Auburn's last chance.

Alabama wound up the regular season with an 11-0 record and a 20-game winning streak, longest in the nation. Auburn finished 8-3, but the Tigers are on probation and ineligible for a bowl berth. Alabama also won the Southeastern Conference championship for the eighth time in nine years and extended its record SEC winning streak to 23 games.

Alabama flubbed two scoring chances in the first 10 minutes while Auburn took a 3-0 lead on Jorge Portela's 47-yard field goal with 44 seconds left in the opening period.

Shealy's scoring pass to Pugh capped an 80-yard drive in 11 plays that began late in the first period after Portela's field goal. The big gainer prior to the touchdown was a 16-yard pass to Pugh from seccond-string quarterback Don Jacobs.

On third-and-three at the Auburn 28, Shealy found Pugh in the left flat. The senior split end broke Jerry Beasley's tackle at the 11 and scampered down the sideline into end zone.

After Portela was short on a 52-yard field goal attempt with 6½ minutes left in the half, Alabama struck again, this time on a 65-yard march. Shealy gained 10 yards on a keeper and passed 13 yards to Pugh as the Crimson Tide, helped by another personal foul penalty, drove to the Tigers' 4-yard line.

However, Alabama fumbled the ball away at its 21, 28 and 36 yard lines and also at the Auburn 12, all in the third quarter, but managed a 17-6 lead when Alan McElroy's 23-yard field goal offset a 39-yarder by Portela.

Portela's field goal followed Alabama's second turnover and Trotman's short screen pass to Cribbs made it 17-12 with eight seconds left in the period.

Auburn then stunned the crowd of 75,513 by going 72 yards in five plays, with Trotman firing 11 yards over the middle to Robbins. That gave the Tigers a one-point lead with 11:39 remaining.

McMillan, Schubert Lift Pitt Over Penn State

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Randy McMillan ran for two touchdowns and caught a 50-yard scoring pass while Mark Schubert booted three field goals as 11th-ranked Pittsburgh twice came from behind to beat Penn State 29-14 Saturday and lay claim to the Eastern major college football championship.

The victory was the ninth straight for the Fiesta Bowl-bound Panthers, only the fifth time in the university's 89-year football history a Pitt team managed that feat.

The triumph also completed a 10-1 regular season, just the fourth time a Panther football team won that many games in one season.

Only two big plays kept 19th-ranked Penn State from being blown out of their stadium on a 31-degree day before a sellout crowd of 76,918 fans and a national television audience. The 7-4 Nittany Lions scored on a 65-yard run by Matt Suhey and Curt Warner's 95-yard scoring kickoff return.

Suhey's run with 6:37 remaining in the first period gave Liberty Bowl-bound State a 7-0 lead. Schubert's 26-yard field goal for Pitt made it 7-3 after one period.

In the second quarter, McMillan ripped nine yards for a Pitt touchdown that sent the Panthers ahead 10-7 with 13:32 remaining in the half.

That lead, however, lasted just 14 seconds as Warner dashed 95 yards with the ensuing kickoff to send the Lions ahead again, 14-10.

The rest of the first half was all Pitt, as McMillan finished a 67-yard drive with a 7-yard touchdown run, and Schubert kicked 33 and 41 field goals for a 23-14 Panthers' advantage.

This was Pitt's 37th victory against 39 losses and three ties in the 79-year-old intrastate rivalry.

Midshipmen Blow By Cadets In Renewal Of Service Rivalry

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sophomore Ed Meyers, making only his second varsity start, rushed for 279 yards for a new Army-Navy record and scored three touchdowns as Navy trounced Army 31-7 Saturday in a nationally televised college football game.

Meyer, whose bother Charlie is a starting defensive back for the Midshipmen, pulled yeoman's duty, rushing 43 times. In his only other previous start in Navy's loss to Georgia Tech, Meyers rushed for 183 yards.

Meyer's rushing performance broke the old Navy school record of 277 yards in one game and was believed a new rushing record for the gridiron battles between the two squads.

The victory evened the score for Navy in the rivalry that has spanned 80 years. The series is now tied at 37-37-6 with Navy winning six of the last seven games under Coach George Welsh.

Navy, 7-4, broke out of its four-game losing streak quickly, piling up 17 first downs and 248 yards in offense and taking a 17-7 first-half lead.

Army, 2-8-1, under first-year coach Lou Saban scored for the first time in 12 quarters, and the only time on the ground this season since its upset over Stanford. During that game, freshman halfback Bobby Crumpton tallied with 2:28 left in the first half.

Navy tailback Duane Flowers had fumbled at his own 13 and Army free safety Chris Zawie recovered at the 16 for the Cadets. Fullback Boby Vicci ran twice up the middle and then Crumpton took a pitchout 8 yards for the score.

Vols Outlast Vanderbilt

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Jimmy Streater and Anthony Hancock combined for two touchdown passes and Roland James scored on an 89-yard punt return, as Tennessee came from behind Saturday to defeat Vanderbilt 31-10 in a Southeastern Conference college football game.

Behind 10-0 at the half, the Vols jumped on top when James took a 49-yard Vanderbilt punt on the bounce at Tennessee's 11 yard line and raced up the west sidelines for the score.

Streater, playing the first time since injuring his knee three weeks ago against Notre Dame, opened Tennessee's scoring three minutes after the intermission with a 40-yard pass to Hancock on Vanderbilt's 1 yard line.

Hancock then took a 50-yard bomb from Streater into the end zone on an 85-yard touchdown play with 1:40 left in the third period.

The Commodores, finishing the season with a 1-10 record and a 24-game losing streak in SEC play, grabbed the initiative with a 31-yard field goal by Mike Woodard and a 1-yard plunge by quarterback Van Heflin in the first quarter.

Gary Moore scored on a 17-yard run up the middle and Alan Duncan booted a 27-yard field goal for Tennessee as the demoralized Commodores fell apart in the final quarter.

Tennessee, giving coach Johnny Majors his first winning season in three years back at his alma mater, is headed to the Bluebonnet Bowl with a 7-4 record to face 12th-ranked Purdue on New Year's Eve.

Temple Knocks Plano Out Of State Playoff Action

By The Associated Press

Fullback Basilio Martinez scored from the 1-yard line with 5:30 left as Temple pulled a page from Plano's past and advanced to the Class AAAA quarterfinals with a 19-16 win over the Wildcats Friday night.

The win knocked Plano out of the 1979 schoolboy football playoffs and assured the Wildcats would miss a berth in the state AAAA championship game for the first time since 1976.

Temple used an all-too familar Plano tactic — a come-from-behind drive in the fourth quarter — to nab the victory. Taking over on its own 45 with 7:57 left, Temple put together a seven-play, 55-yard scoring drive and held off a desperation rally by Plano for the win.

The victory gave Temple a taste of revenge since Plano knocked them out of the playoffs last year, 15-14 with a two-point conversion late in the second half.

Lewisville — upset winners last week over top-ranked Abilene Cooper — used two touchdown runs by Freddie Wells and a strong defensive perfomance to down Arlington Heights, 28-12.

"We were a stronger football team," Lewisville Coach Neal Wilson said. "And it became more apparent as the game went along."

John Daley returned a pass interception 62 yards for a touchdown and Dan Leiner added a 30-yard field goal as Houston Memorial blanked Houston Kashmere, 11-0.

Halfback Ernie Balboa rushed for three touchdowns and caught a 40-yard scoring pass as Alice blitzed Austin Reagan, 31-13.

Bay City won a spot in the AAA semifinals by virtue of penetrations. Bay City tied Gregory-Portland, 10-10, but advanced by virtue of a 3-2 lead in crossing the opponents' 20-yard line.

Buckaroos' quarterback Brent Parker and tight end Dale Dixon hooked up on scoring passes of 50, 42 and 47 yards for the Breckenridge tallies.

In other Class AA playoff games Friday, Childress blanked Muleshoe, 20-0; Fabens stomped Stamford, 48-14; Van upset Pittsburg, 7-6; Waller outgunned Port Arthur Austin, 33-24; MacGregor edged Marble Falls, 12-7; Edna creamed Medina Valley, 47-15; and Port Isabel shut out Hallettsville, 10-0.

In Class A regional playoffs, New Deal blasted Stratford, 47-16; Seagraves whitewashed Haskell, 21-0; China Spring blanked San Saba, 7-0; Pilot Point sneaked by Wolfe City, 20-14; Troup downed Hakins, 21-4; Lovelady outfought Waskom, 28-22; Hull-Daisetta edged Bartlett, 8-7; and Falls City won over Comfort, 14-0.

In Class B quarterfinals, Wheeler topped Grand Falls, 31-6; Valley View beat Windthorst, 21-14; and Salado blasted Agua Dulce, 31-7.

If medical insurance forms are a major bottleneck in your practice, IBM may have precisely the cure you're looking for. It's the new IBM 5110 Doctors Office Management System, developed for physicians confronted with increasing office costs and workloads. One of a family of IBM systems for the medical community, it's ideal for offices with one to three doctors. The system can handle up to 120 patient visits a day, and it runs on our smallest computing system, the IBM 5110. The total investment is less than $23,000.

We call it painless because standard insurance forms are a by-product of regular patient billing information. Charges are entered into the 5110 from patients' records and the claims forms are prepared by the system's printer. But the 5110 can do more than help with insurance forms. You can have patients' bills ready before they leave the office. Answer questions on their accounts over the phone. Develop reports for practice analysis. And track patients for follow-up visits and periodic examinations.

Faster completion of claims forms often means faster payment and improved cash flow. And by getting a record of past-due accounts whenever you ask for it, chances are you'll speed the collection of accounts receivable.

The 5110 can handle many routine, repetitive clerican tasks. And someone in your office can usually learn to operate it in just a few days.

The IBM 5110 can help halt spiraling office costs. And give you more time for patient care and keeping up with developments in your field. Which is the best medicine of all.

On Tuesday, December 4, 1979, the Lubbock IBM General Systems Division office will conduct a seminar on the IBM 5110 Doctors Office Management System.

If you'd like to attend this free IBM seminar, call Ronna Davis to reserve a seat. (Because of a limited number of seats, reservations are required.)

Aggies Drop Second Game

ANCHORAGE (AP) — Clarence Kea scored on a baseline drive with two seconds remaining Saturday to give Lamar of Texas a 61-60 upset victory over 14th-ranked Texas A&M in a loser's bracket game of the Great Alaska Shootout basketball tournament.

Second-ranked Kentucky faced University of Alaska-Anchorage in a tournament semifinal game late Saturday afternoon.

In the other semifinal game Saturday night, Iona battled Long Beach State following a loser's bracket contest between Bradley and Pacific.

Texas A&M, which went to the National Invitation Tournament last season and was considered the Southwest Conference preseason favorite, lost for the second straight time here. The Aggies bowed to Iona 78-62 Friday.

Texas A&M went ahead 60-59 with 21 seconds remaining on a 20-foot jump shot from the corner by Steve Sylestine.

Lamar scored five of the game's final seven points. With 1:52 left, Kea rebounded in a shot to tie the score at 58-58. Mike Olliver hit a free throw for the Aggies with 44 seconds to go to put them in front 59-58.

Olliver, with 18 points, and Robert Williams, with 17, paced Lamar, which led 31-27 at halftime. Kea added 12.

Buccaneers Get Another Shot To Clinch First Title

By The Associated Press

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers get another chance today to clinch the first title of the 1979 National Football League season when they face their only challengers, the Chicago Bears.

When the Bears were beaten 20-0 by Detroit back on Thanksgiving Day it gave the Bucs an opportunity to clinch the National Football Conference's Central Division championship, but their kicking game faltered against Minnesota, resulting in a 23-22 loss to the Vikings last Sunday.

It was a most fitting that the Vikings should be the team to prevent the division's title from being secured. After all, the Vikings won the championship the past six years.

Still, the Bucs, a laughable, winless team only four years ago and one which had amassed only seven victories in its first three years, goes into Sunday's home game with a 9-4 record and a two-game lead over Chicago. A victory would give Tampa Bay a season sweep against the Bears (The Bucs won the first meeting 17-13 in Chicago on Oct. 30) and a playoff berth.

Even if Chicago beats the Bucs and wins its other two games, Tampa Bay can clinch the division title with a victory against either San Francisco or Kansas City by virtue of a better NFC Central Record.

Both defenses have to worry about the opposition ground game. Walter Payton of the Bears, despite failing in his last three games to gain 100 yards, still as 1,261 for the year, third in the NFC and fourth in the league. Ricky Bell of the Bucs, meanwhile, had his fourth 100-yard game of the season last Sunday and is right behind Payton at 1,010.

The Steelers and Oilers each hope the other team loses to break the deadlock atop the American Football Conference's Central Division. If they remain tied, they'll have a chance to break it Monday night, Dec. 10, in Houston, where the Oilers will be out to avenge the 38-7 drubbing they absorbed in Pittsburgh on the season's second Sunday. A victory by the Oilers over Cleveland will guarantee them their second straight playoff berth, while the Steelers are gunning for their eighth straight postseason appearance, which would tie the league records set by Dallas from 1966-73. The Bengals have played nine games in Pittsburgh and are still looking for a victory.

If the Oilers beat Cleveland and the Chargers defeat Atlanta, San Diego would clinch its first playoff berth in 14 years. The Chargers are seeking their fifth straight victory, a feat they haven't achieved since 1964. Dan Fouts, who passed for 350 yards and three TDs against Kansas City last week, has five 300-yard games this year, one shy of Joe Namath's NFL record set 12 years ago.

The Broncos, who fell out of a first-place tie with San Diego in the AFC West by losing to Oakland, will have a tough time catching up. For one thing, they play their remaining three games on the road, including Sunday's in Buffalo.

Dallas Seeks Much-Needed Win Over Capable New York Giants

IRVING (AP) — There's just something about the New York Giants that causes the heavens to smile on the Dallas Cowboys and their 38-year-old quarterback, Roger Staubach.

The struggling Cowboys are in dire need of good fortune and the Giants usually provide it.

Dallas has a 10-game winning streak over New York and a whopping 25-9-2 all-time record.

Staubach has a 15-1 career mark against the Giants. He's had seven games of 200 yards passing or more against New York.

He rallied the Cowboys to a 16-14 last-second victory over New York Nov. 4 after rookie Phil Simms had helped the Giants build a seemingly insurmountable 14-6 lead.

Since then the Cowboys have lost to Philadelphia, Washington and Houston.

They have dropped into a second-place tie at 8-5 in the National Conference Eastern Division with Washington, one full game behind Philadelphia.

"We expect Dallas to be fresh and at a season high," said Giants Coach Ray Perkins.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry hopes so.

"We can win three in a row and take the division championship," he said. "I believe our chances are excellent. I was very much encouraged by our performance against Houston although we lost (30-26). Philadelphia is in the driver's seat because we still have to play them at home."

The Giants have a 6-7 record but are 6-2 since Simms took over at quarterback.

"Simms has a lot of poise for a rookie," said Cowboys special assistant Ermal Allen. "He doesn't panic and he can run. He has a strong arm and a very quick release."

Landry said that although the Cowboys are 10-point favorites they will be in for a struggle.

"The Giants are a very spirited football team...they swarm, hit and move," Landry added.

Oilers, Browns Meet In Own Super Bowl

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Browns will be involved in their own version of the Super Bowl when they take on the Houston Oilers today in a game that will either enhance or snuff out their flickering playoff hopes.

The Browns, 8-5, are coming off a disheartening 33-30 overtime loss at Pittsburgh and are well aware they cannot afford to lose any of their three remaining National Football League games.

"This one is like the Super Bowl for us," said wide receiver Dave Logan. "Everything's on the line because we've got to win 'em all and Houston is one of the teams we're competing against for a playoff spot."

The Oilers appear to be in much better shape than the Browns, coming into Sunday's game with a 10-3 record and tied with the Steelers for the AFC Central Division lead.

However, the Oilers still must play Pittsburgh and NFC East leader Philadelphia in the last two games of the season, while the Browns take their show on the road to Oakland and Cincinnati.

"We want the division championship," said Houston Coach Bum Phillips, whose team is coming off a satisfying 30-26 victory over intrastate rival Dallas. "But we're not getting ahead of ourselves. We have to beat Cleveland first, then worry about Pittsburgh."

Cleveland Coach Sam Rutigliano said, "The Oilers are in a race to win the division, so you know how they're going to come in here. From a motivation standpoint, they'll be coming in sky high. But we feel the same way about the game. Everyone connected with the Cleveland Browns is aware of the situation and the fact that we've got to beat Houston if we want to stay alive (in the playoff chase)."

"From a tactical standpoint, their big key is (fullback) Earl Campbell. You know how productive he can be. We've done pretty well in defensing him in the past, but he's leading the NFL in rushing (with 1,346 yards) and he's going to get his yardage. The big thing is to keep him from hurting you with the big play."

The Oilers handed the Browns their worst defeat of the season, stomping them 31-10 on Sept. 30 in the Astrodome. More than coincidentally, that also was the worst day of the season for the explosive Cleveland offense, which has carried a porous and injury riddled defensive unit through much of the year.

Even another in a series of outstanding passing performances by Cleveland quarterback Brian Sipe, who now has thrown for 26 touchdowns this season, wasn't enough to offset the fact that the Browns' defense gave up 606 yards total offense in Pittsburgh.

"We're not really happy going up against teams like Pittsburgh and Houston with a makeshift defense," Rutigliano said. "But, when you have injuries and lack depth, you have to do what's necessary and hope for the best."

A crowd of more than 70,000 is expected to be on hand for the 12:05 p.m. CST kickoff at Cleveland's Municipal Stadium.

Henderson Says Law Officers Harassing Him

DALLAS — (AP) Deposed Dallas Cowboy linebacker Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson says he is being harassed by law enforcement officers.

"I don't know whether it's based on associations or something, but I'm just getting harassed," he said. "I'm absolutely innocent. Totally clean. And I wish if somebody has suspicions about me or something that they'd just bring it out in the open."

But local, county, state and federal agencies queried said they are not looking into Henderson's activities.

Henderson said two weeks before his Nov. 19 release from the Cowboys, that coach Tom Landry told the team that Dallas computer magnate Ross Perot had called to warn players about any drug involvement.

Perot, who heads a stage panel on drug abuse, said the names of two Cowboys surfaced in an East Texas drug investigation, but Henderson was not one of the two.

"At no time was Hollywood Henderson's name mentioned," Perot said. "I have not heard anyone in the field narcotics enforcement even mention Henderson's name."

Henderson said he has never been directly contacted by a law enforcement officer, but he believes he has been followed at least once.

"Maybe I'm paranoid, but I've just heard this from too many sources," he said. "I have a family here. I have a baby here. I don't have no stuff. I don't know if someone's just searching for a reason for my release or what. All I want to do is live a normal life.

"I'm in my house with my brothers, my daughter and my lady. I don't care who you are, if you're a criminal, you're a criminal.

"But I'm not. Not this smiling face."

Federal Funds Aid Bighorn

SANTA FE, N.M. — Game Conservation International has appropriated $10,000 to the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish for its Desert Bighorn Rescue Operation, currently under way at White Sands Missile Range.

The funds will be supplied to match federal Pittman-Robertson Project funds, derived from excise taxes on ammunition, firearms and archery sales.

"The high level of performance by the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish in other projects supported by Game Conservation International has given the board of directors utmost confidence in lending financial support for the rescue of desert sheep at San Andres Wildlife Refuge," said Harry Tennison, president of the conservation organization.

A scabie mite infestation among the historic sheep population on the wildlife refuge on White Sands Missile Range has depleted the herd's numbers from approximately 250 last year to about 70 this year. Emergency rescue of the sheep was initiated to capture, treat and possibly relocate as many of the remaining sheep as possible.

Game Conservation International has previously funded New Mexico Department of Game and Fish projects with exotic animals and propagation of desert bighorn sheep, as well as other wildlife conservation projects across the United States and in Africa.

Basic Safety Rules Will Prevent Firearms Accidents As Hunting Season Reaches Peak

By J.D. PEER
TP&WD Information Officer

The key to hunting safety is your ability to handle a gun in the right way.

If you follow a few simple rules on how to hold and point a gun, you can avoid most gun accidents.

In fact, if you follow these three basic rules, you will stop most tragedy around firearms.

1. Treat every gun as if it was loaded.
2. Always point the muzzle in a safe direction.
3. Be sure of your target — and beyond.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department has already recorded 23 firearm accidents from January 1 to the opening of the November Texas deer season. Of these accidents, two were fatal, but the highest accident period is during the November-December hunting seasons — yet to be tallied.

The TP&WD suggests everyone attend a volunteer hunter safety class prior to going afield. Over 2,170 students were certified in October by the P&WD. This set a new record for a one month period of the hunter safety program which is conducted by civilian instructors across Texas.

More information on hunter safety classes and hunting information is available by contacting P&WD field offices across the state or by writing P&WD, Hunter Safety Coordinator, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin, TX 78744.

MYSTERY BIRD — Raymond Trider, Jr. of Lazbuddie recently bagged an unusual looking duck and is seeking identification of the specie. Napoleon Meletti at Meletti's Taxidermy in Lubbock has the bird on display in hopes it will be properly classified. There's a possibility, because of the shape of the duck's bill and markings, that it is a cross between a bufflehead and a wood duck. The multi-colored bird stands 12 inches tall and has a wingspread of 20 inches. (Staff Photo by Bill Janscha)

Emile Griffith Consoles Scypion

NEW YORK (AP) — Emile Griffith, whose punches 17 years ago caused the death of boxer Benny Paret, was in Wilford Scypion's corner during the Nov. 23 fight that resulted in Willie Classen's death.

According to Saturday's editions of the New York Times, Griffith, the former welterweight champion, told Scypion's manager, Mike Jones, early in the fight: "Oh my God, I see myself when I was younger, in there."

Scypion, who now has scored 13 knockouts in 13 professional fights, was consoled by Griffith in the dressing room at the Felt Forum. "I know Emile wanted to do anything he could to comfort Wilford," Jones said. "But he was so upset himself he left early."

Classen died Wednesday of brain injuries.

Ducks Unlimited Reaches Milestone

After more than four decades of conservation pioneering across the Canadian wetlands where more than 70 percent of North America's waterfowl are produced, Ducks Unlimited announced in Chicago at its national headquarters that it has raised its 100 millionth dollar on behalf of waterfowl.

Commenting on the nonprofit organization's $100,000,000 landmark, Ducks Unlimited president S. Preston Williams said, "To put our growth into some kind of perspective, it's significant to note that, although DU is 42 years old, we have raised $51,000,000 — fifty-one per cent of this record total since 1976. Eighty per cent of our funds have been generated within this decade, due in large part to the volunteer fund-raising efforts of DU area committees nationwide."

Williams went on to say that nearly 80 per cent of the $100,000,000 raised during the organization's 42-year history is being channeled directly into wetland habitat projects.

David Whiteside in Lubbock, president of the West Texas chapter of DU, said, "The enormous success of DU International is certainly a boon to the conservation of waterfowl, all wildlife in general, and the balance of nature."

He added, "Because of the higher costs of wetland acquisition and improvement of habitat, it's more important than ever that we increase our efforts for financial support of DU's conservation projects. Last year sportsmen-conservationists in this area of Texas sent $20,000 to Ducks Unlimited. Hopefully, our forthcoming banquet will generate enough money to beat last year's figure."

The annual Lubbock Ducks Unlimited banquet is scheduled for Thursday, starting at 6:30 p.m., at Van's KoKo Palace. Tickets for the banquet will be $25 each which includes the banquet and membership in the national organization. Persons interested in DU membership and banquet tickets should call 765-6733 in Lubbock and speak with Whiteside.

Lazbuddie Issues Bird Permits

LAZBUDDIE (Special) — With 8,000 acres of land for walking and the pheasants for hunting, the Lazbuddie Volunteer Fire Department is looking for hunters who need the land and want the birds.

Pheasant hunting season begins Dec. 8, and the Lazbuddie Firemen are accepting reservations for hunting permits. Persons wishing to use the hunting leases can pay $25 per weekend or $50 for the entire season, according to Glenn Lust, fire chief.

The hunting season stretches from Dec. 8 until Jan. 6.

Permits for hunting the 8,000-acre spread will be available at the Lazbuddie High School cafeteria next Saturday. From 6-9 a.m. on opening day, the firemen will serve breakfast, $3.50 per plate.

However, hunters must have their hunting licenses; these will not be available from the firemen, Lust reported.

The firemen are sponsoring the hunts on preserves licensed by the state Parks & Wildlife Department.

All monies received from the hunting permits will be used to help pay the fire department's operating expenses and also to purchase new equipment.

Hunting limit is two roosters per day, four in possession.

Regulations for the hunt will be available at the Lazbuddie school when permits are issued, Lust reported.

New Oregon State Boss Seeking Staff Members

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Joe Avezanno, Tennessee's line coach and offensive coordinator who Friday night accepted the football coaching job at Oregon State, says he may take some Vols' coaches with him to Corvallis.

Interviewed Saturday, shortly after Tennessee thumped Southeastern Conference rival Vanderbilt, 31-10, Avzanno said he has offered Bobby Roper, Tennessee's linebacker coach, a job as Oregon State's defensive coordinator.

Jerry Sullivan, a receiver coach at South Carolina will be offered the offensive coordinator's post, while Ron Cox and John Julies, two part-time assistants on Tennessee's football staff, also will invited to join him at his new coaching post.

"I hate to see him go, but I'm glad to see anybody go on to further his career," said Tennessee Coach Johnny Majors in the Vols' dressing room after the Vanderbilt game.

Avezanno, 36, said he became somewhat teary-eyed when Majors announced his departure at a team meeting earlier Saturday.

"I became pretty emotional," he said. "I have seen his soft side before and I wasn't really prepared for it. He's put up with a lot from me over the years and I've always tried to repay him with hard work."

As offensive coordinator at Iowa State, Pittsburgh and Tennessee, Avezanno help Majors build successful football programs at each school. He succeeds Craig Fertig, who was fired.

Oregon State University President Robert MacVicar said Friday night in announcing Avezanno's selection that he was given a four-year contract at $40,000 annually.

Avezanno graduated from Florida State University in 1965. He was an offensive guard with the National Football League's Boston Patriots in 1966.

Aransas Hunt Succeeds

AUSTWELL — The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service reported that the hunts which took place on the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge were safe and successful. This was the 13th hunt that archers have enjoyed on the refuge, but only the 3rd gun hunt in the refuge's history.

The archer's season covered seven days in late September, while the gun hunters pursued their sport for ten days in early October. The archers had a one per cent success, while gun hunters had an understandably higher success of 38 per cent. Archers harvested a total of 47 deer and gun hunters took 288.

The largest deer by weight was a 158 pound buck and the largest rack was 14 points. Hogs were also hunted; interestingly, the bowhunters harvest 12 hogs while the gunhunters took only 11 of the animals.

A total of 5,506 hunters from throughout the state participated in these hunts, making them the largest single unit public hunt available in Texas.

Hunting and fishing are management tools that Fish and Wildlife Managers utilize to maintiain healthy, vigorous, populations of fish and wildlife.

Houston Bombs Rice, Shares SWC Crown

virtue of its victory over Arkansas earlier in the season.

There was little apparent interest in the Rice-UH game after the Cougars took their big second-quarter lead. Instead, the red-and-white clad Houston band cheered to the playing of the Aggie War Hymn throughout the rest of the game as they followed Texas A&M's upset.

The loudest cheering in the game came after each periodic announcement of the Aggies' lead in College Station. When the final score was announced, the Aggie War Hymn rang out once again.

Houston made it a rout in the third quarter when Terald Clark scored on a 12-yard run and Polk got his second score from two yards out.

Third-string quarterback Mark Jermstad scored Houston's seventh touchdown on an 11-yard run midway through the fourth quarter, and Eddie Wright scored on a 2-yard run with 1:01 left to play to complete the victory.

Clark finished with 93 yards on 17 carries to become only the second junior in UH history to gain over 1,000 yards in a season.

The Owls, who climaxed a disappointing 1-10 season, were victims of their own errors. Houston's first touchdown came after quarterback Randy Hertel fumbled on the second play of the game.

Newhouse's 21-yard run came in a drive that was kept alive by a penalty against Rice on Houston's punt. Rice was penalized for having 12 men on the field.

Newhouse, who finished with 122 yards on 13 carries, started his touchdown show shortly after UH linebacker David Hodge recovered Hertel's fumble at the Rice 18. Newhouse bulled the final yard in the short drive.

Later in the first quarter, Newhouse broke through the middle of the porous Rice defense, shook off an attemped jersey tackle by David Darr at the 46 and outran cornerback Freddy Johnson on the 64-yard jaunt.

Newhouse, UH's No. 2 rusher this season, put the Cougars ahead 21-0 in the second quarter, on a 21-yard run. Rice's 12th-man penalty kept the drive going.

The Cougars rushed for 522 yards, which approached their school record of 555 set in 1968 in a 100-6 victory over Tulsa. Houston got 29 rushing first downs against the Owls, equalling the record set against Tulsa.

T-Birds Eliminate MHS

game, however. Known as a second-half team — particulary after coming from behind to defeat Amarillo 23-7 last week in bi-district play — Monterey bounced back with three minutes left in the third period and cut CHS' lead to 14-8.

First, Steve Coleman recovered a Kelly Boren fumble on the CHS 38. After five straight running plays had moved the ball to the CHS 23, quarterback Kent Potts and wingback Rick teammed up for Monterey's only TD of the day. Potts, who connected on only 4-of-15 passes for the day, scrambled to his right and lofted an easy pass to Pinkerton who'd somehow managed to get behind Saad.

Johnson, who upped his season rushing mark to 1,705 yards after gaining 106 steps on 25 carries against Coronado, added two points on a conversion run over left tackle. Monterey trailed 14-8.

Things were certainly looking good for the hometowners. But not for long.

The Plainsmen got the ball for two more possessions after that score, but the offense had more bugs in it than a Hudson radiator. After forcing Coronado to punt on its following set of downs, Monterey picked up three yards on two Johnson carries and Potts attempted to hit tight end Mac Tatum over the middle. When that didn't work, Dwayne Smith was brought on to punt.

The Monterey defense stiffened again. But just like the previous set of downs, again the offense could not move the ball. Potts hit Pinkerton with a perfect strike down the right sideline for what appeared to be a long gainer, but the wingback was unable to hold on, then Johnson lost two yards on a draw, and Potts was sacked by Mark Musgrave for a 10-yard loss, setting up a fourth-and-22 at the MHS five.

So much for offense.

Following Smith's 30-yard punt, Coronado moved eight yards to set up what Odom would eventually call "the real killer." In a surprise move, Brooks gave Martinez a chance to show off his kicking leg from 42-yards out.

"We still had a chance," said Odom, "but that killed us. I didn't think he'd make it, but I was wrong. That really hurt."

Coronado got one more score, this one on a one-yard run by Saad to up the count to 24-8, following Martinez' kick. The TD came with just 29 seconds left on the clock. By that time, it just elementary.

West Texas' Bill Yung Claims MVC Coach-Of-Year Honors

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — "There was a lot of love on this team," West Texas State football Coach Bill Yung says about his Missouri Valley Conference championship squad.

"It's been a miraculous year in so many ways," Yung said. "This may have been the closest team I have ever been around because we were all for one another."

Yung took a young squad, picked in the preseason to finish last in the Valley, and fashioned a 5-0 league record on the way to the title. That was in spite of a 5-5-1 overall mark.

This weekend, Valley officials announced Yung had been named the league's coach of the year in a poll of conference coaches and media.

He won by a slim margin over Indiana State's Dick Jamieson, who directed the Sycamores to an 8-3 record after a 3-8 season in 1978.

Yung received 18 votes to Jamieson's 16, while Southern Illinois' Rey Dempsey got four votes.

It was the third straight year Yung's team had disregarded preseason predictions.

Before the 1977 season, Yung's first with the Buffaloes, the team was picked to finish last. West Texas State ended the season tied for first with Tulsa. In 1978, the Buffs were picked first and finished last. In 1979, they were picked last and again finished first.

Predictors may be somewhat forgiven because Yung accomplished the league championship this year with just eight seniors. The Buffs led the Valley in rushing offense (252.9), rushing defense (159.3) and total defense (285.2).

"You just have to be honest with yourself — winning the honor is really a reflection on your coaching staff," Yung said. "Even during the tough times this past year, they were always positive and did the hard work necessary for being prepared.

"Also, it indicates the character of the players. I know that when I was at Baylor with Grant Teaff when he won the national coach of the year, the same ingredients were there."

Yung said when his team stumbled in non-conference games, he made sure to give his younger players plenty of experience.

"Everyone has the idea that unless you have the great record, you're not successful," Yung said. "You have to set your priorities. For us that meant winning the league."

White, Sims Expected To Lead Heisman Balloting

NEW YORK (AP) — As envisioned in most quarters before the season, running backs Billy Sims of Oklahoma, the 1978 winner, and Charles White of Southern California are expected to be the top two names in the voting when the 1979 Heisman Trophy winner is announced Monday.

Sims, the 1978 winner and one of only six juniors ever to win the Heisman, was thought to be pretty much out of the 1979 race until two weeks ago when he exploded for 282 yards against Missouri and then added 247 against Nebraska last weekend, a game televised to most of the nation.

The 529 yards was nine short of the national two-game record of 538 set by Colorado's Charlie Davis in 1971 but it may have come too late for Sims to overtake White, who captured the national rushing crown with 1,803 yards in 10 games — he missed one entire contest and half of another — averaged 6.2 yards a carry and scored 18 touchdowns.

Sims finished fourth with 1,506 yards in 11 games, a 6.7 per-carry average, and led the country in scoring with 22 touchdowns.

While Sims was setting an NCAA two-game mark, White established a five-game standard of 1,090 by rushing for 221 against Stanford, 261 against Notre Dame (on national television), 198 against California, 167 against Arizona and 243 against Washington (regional TV). That erased the record of 1,085 by Cornell's Ed Marinaro in 1971.

White was fourth in the 1978 Heisman balloting. Quarterbacks Rick Leach of Michigan and Chuck Fusina of Penn State finished between Sims and White, but both were seniors in 1978.

If anyone is going to intrude on the Sims-White race, it probably will be either Notre Dame running back Vagas Ferguson or quarterbacks Marc Wilson of Brigham Young and Art Schlichter of Ohio State.

Wilson, the national total offense leader with 3,580 yards and one of only seven collegians to pass for more than 7,000 career yards, completed 250 of 427 passes this season for 3,720 yards — he lost 140 rushing — and 29 touchdowns with only 15 interceptions.

Schlichter, a sophomore who led Ohio State to a surprising 11-0 regular-season record and a Rose Bowl berth against Southern Cal, completed 94 of 179 pases for 1,519 yards and 13 touchdowns, with five interceptions. He also rushed 124 times for 436 yards.

Ferguson, Notre Dame's career rushing king, finished fifth nationally with 1,437 yards and scored 17 times.

The only two-time Heisman winner is Ohio State running back Archie Griffin in 1974-75. Doc Blanchard of Army (1945), Doak Walker of Southern Methodist (1948), Vic Janowicz of Ohio State (1950) and Roger Staubach of Navy (1963) all won it as juniors but failed to repeat.

Since halfback Jay Berwanger of the University of Chicago won the first Heisman Trophy in 1935, it has gone to an offensive back every year except for 1936 when it went to Larry Kelley of Yale and 1949 when Leon Hart of Notre Dame was the recipient. Both Kelley and Hart were two-way ends. No interior lineman has ever won the Heisman.

Voting for the Heisman Trophy, which is awarded annually by the Downtown Athletic Club of New York, closed last Friday. There were 1,050 eligible voters in six regions of the country.

James Scott Pounds Out Decision

WOODBRIDGE, N.J. (AP) — Rahway State Prison inmate James Scott, the aggressor from the opening bell, pounded out a unanimous 10-round decision Saturday over No. 1-ranked light-heavyweight Yaqui Lopez at the prison.

Scott maintained a furious paee in the nationally televised bout by rushing at Lopez — ranked as the top contender by the World Boxing Association — from the very start.

Scott, 177 pounds, landed numerous ferocious left jabs and hooks that opened a deep gash on the bridge of Lopez's nose in the first round. Lopez bled profusely for the rest of the bout.

Scott, serving 30-40 years for armed robbery, recently was stripped of his No. 2-ranking by the WBA because he is an inmate. He seemed to take out his frustration on the 28-year-old Lopez, who was in serious trouble many times during the bout.

Lopez, who fought and lost three 15-round decisions for the light-heavyweight title, was rocked by the 31-year-old Scott's punishing left in the second and third rounds and by two looping lefts in the fourth round.

Referee Tony Perez scored the bout 8-2, judge Paul Cavaliere had it 6-3-1 and judge Harold Lederman had it 7-3.

Lopez, 176, of Stockton, Calif., hurt Scott with a well-executed combination in the second round and a quick right in the sixth. Other than that, Lopez never did any real damage in losing his ninth fight in 55 bouts.

The fight nearly was stopped between the fifth and sixth rounds when Dr. Herbert Cassidy inspected Lopez's cut nose, but decided to let the fight continue.

Leonard Praises Benitez

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard is a champion and a smarter fighter.

"He taught me so much in those 15 rounds, more than I've accumulated in my 25 (previous) fights," Leonard said the morning after he won the World Boxing Council welterweight championship by stopping Wilfred Benitez of Puerto Rico with six seconds left in the 15th round Friday night.

But Leonard knew he was in a fight. In fact he went to a hospital to see he had some broken knuckles. He didn't.

Leonard also is in the driver's seat in the welterweight division, although he doesn't hold the whole title. Pipino Cuevas is recognized as champion by the World Boxing Association.

However, Leonard probably is the most popular fighter in the country and he has built a large following. The former Olympic champion, who got $1 million Friday night, has been seen on television 21 times in his all-winning 26-bout career.

Promoter Bob Arum said Saturday he would like to match Leonard with Cuevas and he felt Cuevas would be receptive to such a fight. But Leonard, of Palmer Park, Md., most likely is to make a first defense against a less formidable opponent. Arum mention Dave "Boy" Green of Britain as a possible opponent.

It also is understood that promoter Don King would like to have former lightweight champion Roberto Duran fight Leonard in football stadium here in September as part of a doubleheader with a heavyweight fight between WBC champion Larry Holmes and WBA champion John Tate here. Arum favors both fights but not on the same card.

Arum also would like to have Vito Antuofermo make his next defense of the undisputed middleight championship a rematch against Marvin Hagler. Antuofermo, an Italian living in New York, and Hagler, of Brockton, Mass., battled to a 15-round draw Friday night on the Leonard-Benitez card at Caesars Palace. The draw enabled Antuofermo, a 4-1 underdog to retain the title.

"When I'm in the ring it's only him and me, and those odds ain't gonna help anybody," said Antuofermo.

Antuofermo said he is willing to fight Hagler again but his concerned that the WBC might strip him of title recognition if he doesn't make his next defense against Alan Minter of Britain, who is the WBC's No. 1-ranked contender.

"I'm the only one who owns both titles and I want to keep it like that," said the champion.

"He (Hagler) didn't beat Antuofermo but he didn't lose to him either and he still is the No. 1 contender," said Goody Petronelli, Hagler's co-manager.

Increased Prices No Hindrance To Tree Sales

By RAYNIE HARDESTY
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Prices of Christmas trees are up about 10 percent over last year, local tree salesmen say, but the demand for cut trees in Lubbock is growing.

"Trees are going faster this year than they ever have," said Rick Austin, who operates a Christmas tree lot at 58th Street and Slide Road. "By Dec. 11, we'll be sold out."

Other spokesmen across the city also are saying the increase is not stopping Lubbock shoppers from buying the trees freighted to Texas from northern New Mexico and the northern United States.

Lubbock nurserymen and other tree sellers speculate that getting the trees, which are transported south by refrigerated rail cars, is the root of this year's price increase, although many report that the cost of the seasonal trees has gone up the past three years.

The added cost of transporting the trees is being passed on by the tree sellers to the consumer this year at a rate of $2 to $5 a tree, although some civic groups say that they absorbed the difference instead.

But, the price hike doesn't seem to be slowing the shoppers. Most nurserymen say that business "is about the same," as in 1978, but those manning the Christmas tree lots along major thoroughfares in the city claim their merchandise is going faster this year.

"Our sales are ahead of this calendar date last year," said a member of the Monterey Optimist Club, which has a Christmas tree lot at 50th Street and Indiana Avenue. "We normally sell out by the 17th of December, but we ordered more trees this year."

Tree prices rise with the height of the merchandise and the variety chosen, but lot owner Austin advised, "People can expect to pay $3 to $4 a foot for their trees."

Those waiting on customers claim the Douglas Firs are the most popular trees this season. "They're the answer to the Scotch Pine," said Bob Covington, co-owner of Holden-Dodson nursery.

"They're sappier, smellier, and the freshest, best tree for this part of the world," he said.

Scotch Pines, the least expensive trees on the market, are noted for sharp prickly needles, and a tendency to dry and drop needles faster than most firs that are sold as Christmas trees.

Prices for a Douglas Fir, 6 to 8 feet tall, can range from $25 at some nursuries to $12 at the temporary tree lots set up in Lubbock.

Scotch Pines are marked about $4 cheaper than the Douglas Fir, but other varieties of fir trees the same height may run as high as $35.

The market for Christmas trees in Lubbock may be strong this year, but a couple shopping for trees this week, Dauvin and Cindy McNeely of 2510 35th St., made note of the price tags and commented, "Next year, we'll get an artificial tree."

Tax Fight Simmering; Schools Caught In Middle Of Dispute

By TRAVIS BROWN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Little stirs the blood of small town Texans more quickly than high school football. But this fall, a battle even more intense than that fought on the gridiron is being waged within several South Plains communities.

What transcended the importance of Friday night football in Lorenzo, Hale Center and New Deal was taxes.

It's no fun being around a rabid football fan after the home team has been soundly whipped. But that fan's fury is dwarfed compared to the anger of taxpayers who believe they have been robbed, or have been treated unfairly.

"They can close that school down for all I care, but I'm not going to pay those taxes," fumed one embittered taxpayer from Hale Center.

No schools are likely to be closed because of unhappy taxpayers. But the most serious consequences of the taxpayer rebellion occured last month when lawsuits were filed by landowners against the Lorenzo and Hale Center school districts.

The suits claim that recent reappraisals of land in the districts were full of mistakes, and that tax equalization boards unfairly adjusted land values for certain persons. Both suits sought injunctions preventing the districts from collecting taxes.

Land values and taxes weren't the only issues taxpayers were raising a ruckus about in New Deal. Disgruntled residents of the district also accused their school trustees of trying to hide their actions from the public.

Disenchantment with the school board in New Deal jumped sharply when trustees, as they now concede, approved a budget for this school year without advertising notice of a public hearing on the proposal.

The mistake was corrected only after an observer at a later meeting warned the board that it had broken the law.

One result of the debate over taxes in these three towns has been animosity between school officials and the public. The controversy has pitted neighbor against neighbor in some instances.

Taxpayers have lambasted their school trustees as everything from "spineless" to "a bunch of egotists who have a lot of power in a small town, who aren't going to listen to anyone."

School officials, on the other hand, have dismissed many of the protestors as "a minority of troublemakers."

One school trustee pointed out how easy it is to make enemies when you wield power over a parent's child or a taxpayer's wallet.

> "They can close that school down for all I care, but I'm not going to pay those taxes." — Hale Center taxpayer
>
> "...your're always going to have people who holler, either about taxes or the superintendent, or something." — RAYMOND BUFE, New Deal school board president

"And you're always going to have people who holler, either about taxes or the superintendent, or something," said New Deal school board president Raymond Bufe.

Taxpayers began grumbling in August as soon as they received their tax notices. As usual, another tax increase had been necessitated by inflation.

In Hale Center and Lorenzo, as many as 100 unhappy landowners began meeting in community centers. Those meetings sparked as much emotion as you probably could find in the grandstands on Friday night.

What irritated taxpayers the most in Hale Center and Lorenzo were the reappraisals that were conducted this year of all land in the district. In both districts, land had not been appraised in more than 20 years.

"There were some mistakes made in the appraisal," admitted Hale Center school board president C.P. Smith.

Because of those mistakes, the district's tax equalization board rejected the appraisal. The school board then asked the appraising company to go back and reappraise the agricultural land in the district.

Smith said the second appraisal of the rural land did not result in any great changes. "But we did try to correct some inequities," he said. "And I think most of the people in this district know justice has been done as much as we can do it."

Many taxpayers, however, still weren't satisfied. Two weeks ago, a civil suit signed by 56 landowners was filed against the Hale Center school district in 64th District Court in Plainview.

However, the plaintiffs dropped their suit this week.

The same company that appraised land in the Hale Center school district also valued land in the Lorenzo school district this year, and land in the New Deal school district last year.

But the Hale Center school board president says he doesn't believe the errors "were any more than those that probably would have been made by any other company. Most of the mistakes were human mistakes, instances where the company was unaware of certain changes in boundary lines," Smith said.

One who disagrees with Smith is a landowner who saw taxes on her homestead increase this year from $438.85 to $1,687.23.

"There were so many mistakes in that appraisal that it was absolutely unacceptable," said Helen Russ. "We've accused them of doing this behind a desk, or just by riding up and down the roads. I don't

Five Clovis Family Members Found Dead Of Asphyxiation

Deaths Ruled Accidental By Examiner

CLOVIS, N.M. (Special) — Five members of a Clovis family were found dead in their small two-bedroom frame home Saturday, the result of carbon monoxide poisoning, officials ruled.

Although the bodies were not discovered until about 11 a.m. Saturday, the family had complained to a relative by telephone late Friday night that they were suffering from headaches and nausea.

The dead were identified as Harry Simpson, 69, found in a bedroom; his sister, Bessie Vann, 63, found in another bedroom; Mrs. Vann's daughter, Roylene Raney, 28, found in the bathroom; and Mrs. Raney's two sons, Mel, 11, and Jessie Jr., 5, found in the room with their grandmother.

Reports show that Mrs. Raney called her sister, Cora Carter, who lived less than two blocks away, shortly after midnight Friday and said everyone at the Vann home felt like they had been "picked with Pins."

Mrs. Carter said she sent her son to the Vann home to check on the family at about 12:30 a.m. but that no one answered the door, so he thought maybe they had gone to a hospital. Mrs. Carter's daughter was sent to the house Saturday morning to check on the family and she too found no one answered the door.

She then entered the house through a window and discovered the bodies.

Medical examiner Joe Thomas pronounced all five dead at the scene at 11:20 a.m. and ruled the deaths accidental. Clovis Fire Chief Jerry Carter, who took air samples in all rooms of the house, said the average reading was 90 parts per million of carbon monoxide and that 10 parts could cause illness.

Gas company officials were called to the scene to check the heating system and told officials the gas-forced furnance was functioning normally. But the investigation revealed that a vent cap on the roof was missing and the vent was clogged with gravel.

A power outage in the area shortly before 10 p.m. Friday occured when a transformer failed. Thomas theorized that the family turned the furnance all the way up in an effort to provide more warmth from the outside 20 degree temperature.

Thomas said that when he arrived at the house Saturday morning the thermostat was turned up all the way and the temperature inside the house was in excess of 90 degrees.

A pet cat also was found dead inside the home. Neighbors, who gathered around the house as two ambulances arrived for the bodies, said another pet, a small dog chained to the carport, was "strangely quiet."

Funeral services for the family are pending at Muffley Funeral Home.

Armed Robbery, Burglaries Probed

A Texas Tech University student told police that he was robbed and two of his companions threatened Friday night in the parking lot of a club in the 2200 block of Fourth Street.

Reports indicate Green, and James Brian Saylor, 19, and Gary Wayne Worthington, 19, also Texas Tech students had just left the club and walked to walked to a pickup truck when three unidentified men jumped out of another vehicle.

Green said one of the suspects told him to "give me everything or I'll blow you away." The suspect then reportedly stepped beside Green and poked the student under the left arm with the weapon.

Reports indicate the man then took Green's wallet from his left back pocket and removed the money from it.

Police said another suspect approached Saylors, demanded the teenager give him everything and then reportedly pulled a long knife from his pocket.

Reports indicate the third suspect threatened Worthington, but never showed him a weapon. Worthington told police the third suspect kept his hands in his pockets as if he had a gun.

Although Saylors and Worthington were threatened by the men, neither one was robbed.

The three students told police the suspects got in a light-colored car and drove east on Fourth Street.

Guns, cameras, jewelry, clothing, a television set and a pink-and-white stripped piggy bank, worth more than $3,000 reportedly, were stolen from three Texas Tech students.

James Wiley Eagan, Eric Lindstrom and Dirk Wilson, all of 2319 27th St., told police someone entered their house between 8 and 10:30 p.m. Thursday and stole items ranging from after shave to a cartridge and needle from a stereo.

Police reports indicate brute force apparently was used to open a dead bolt locked front door of the students' house.

In other activity, an 83-year-old Lubbock man told police someone stole an American flag, reportedly sent to the man from now retired U.S. Rep. George Mahon, and the pole the flag was flying on, from his front yard.

George Leftwich told officers someone took the 3 foot by 5 1/2 foot flag and the 8 foot pole between 4 and 6:30 p.m. Friday.

Forgotten Cemetery Provides Woman With 'Religious Experience,' Goal

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — Marge Anderson could barely make out, in the moonglow, that the weed-grown thicket where she was standing was a cemetery. How odd a place for a new life to begin.

"Four small grave markers were spaced inside the remains of an old wooden fence," she recalled.

"Something came over me. Suddenly I knew, I had no doubt, that this place would mean a great deal to me. It was almost like a religious experience. I the zeal of an evangelist, se has conerted that forgotten graveyard into an archeological treasure trove listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The cemetery is four miles from Plymouth Rock. One more historic site in a town awash with them would seem of little import. Except that this one marks that strain of America's heritage which is black, right back to the Pilgrims.

"I grew up in Plymouth but never felt a part of the historical community," Miss Anderson said. It was not that there was a conscious effort to exclude blacks, but it was if everybody assumed that blacks just weren't here.

"All the black schoolchildren who came here on class trips never saw a reflection of themselves. Well, now they will."

The cemetery that so moved Miss Anderson that moonlit night is called Parting Ways; the site is at a fork in the road. At one time it was a black settlement of perhaps 30 residents.

Miss Anderson, a woman in her late twenties, said that although she had not previously troubled to go search for evidence of the old settlement, she had known about it from girlhood. Her parents had told her the story of its founders.

They were four black men: Cato Howe, Prince Goodwin, Plato Turner and Quamany Quash. The four, in 1792, were granted freedom and 94 acres of land as reward for service in the Revolutionary War.

When the last house in the settlement burned down, in 1908, the land reverted to the town, its history forgotten.

"Ironically," Miss Anderson said, "the town had plans to turn the land into, of all things, a cemetery." Instead, the town has leased the land to the corporation Miss Anderson organized.

That was after she pored over musty records, wrote letters, begged money, pep-talked upwards of 40 archeologists and historians and finally got Parting Ways excavated and studied.

The diggers found pottery and other artifacts suggesting African origins. A museum is planned.

MARJORIE ANDERSON

In the course of all her research, Miss Anderson located, in California, a descendant of one Abraham Pierce.

Records make Pierce out to be the black slave of ship captain John Pierce who arrived in Plymouth aboard the vessel "Anne" in 1623, when the colony was less than three years old.

"There are numerous references to Abraham Pierce," Miss Anderson said, "but no reference before 1635 to the fact that he was black.

"We can presume from this that his race simply was not of concern to the other colonists, that he just fit in.

"So when schoolchildren come to visit Parting Ways, maybe they will discover something about the Pilgrims that they didn't know before, something about attitudes."

NOTICE
The City of Shallowater has filed its 1979 Survey of Local Government Finances Municipalities and Townships. Interested persons may review the report and its supporting documents any time, Monday through Friday, 8:00-12:00-1:00-5:00, at the office of the City Secretary, City Hall, City of Shallowater.

Official notice has been received by the City of Shallowater that it has been granted a variance from the maximum level of fluoride allowable under the Texas Department of Health's "Drinking Water Standards."
In sampling conducted by the department, late in 1978, Shallowater's supply was found to contain 4.9 milligrams of fluoride per liter, whereas the department's limit for this area has been set at 1.6 milligrams per liter.
The city applied for a variance because of the lack of an alternate source to take the place of the city's wells and because the water is not considered a threat to the public health, some mottling of teeth being the only noticeable effect.
In addition, it has been determined that the cost of equipment to remove excess fluoride is prohibitive.
As required, the city issued a notice of an "opportunity for public hearing" on the fluoride level, noted that dentists are aware of the situation and has published notices to the public.
Noting that no request for a hearing has been made, the health department now finds that:
"1. A variance from the fluoride maximum constituent level of 1.6 mg/l will not result in an unreasonable risk to the public health.
"2. The closest public water system meeting the maximum constituent level for fluoride is 14 miles from the City of Shallowater.
"3. No treatment technique for the removal of fluoride is economically feasible.
"4. There is no alternate source of raw water meeting the maximum constituent level for fluoride.
"Therefore, the Texas Department of Health grants to the City of Shallowater a variance from the maximum constituent level for fluoride as specified in Section III-A of this Department's 'Drinking Water Standards.'"
"The variance is subject to the following conditions:
"1. Written notice of the variance shall be provided to all dentists in the area you serve.
"2. Customers will be notified quarterly that a variance for fluoride has been granted.
"3. The City of Shallowater will continue investigating alternate sources of water.
"4. Within 180 days (of March 30) a timetable shall be submitted for bringing your system into compliance with this Department's 'Drinking Water Standards.'
"Any appeals concerning the granting of this variance must be made in writing to G.R. Herzik, Jr., P.E., Deputy Commission for Environmental and Consumer Health Protection, by April 17, 1980."

School Funds Affected By Tax Debate

The suit against the Lorenzo school district is similar to that filed against Hale Center, except that only one man is named as the plaintiff.

Lorenzo farmer and businessman Tommy Fondren claims that the tax equalization board refused to review the new values placed on his property, and that it "arbitrarily dictated across the board percentage decreases in valuation of various and numerous tracts of property without presentation of any evidence."

"I asked the tax equalization board to back up and look at how they had valued my property," Fondren explained. "But, they asked me to leave so they could go into executive session. I have to admit I was a little hot."

> "When I was on the board, even I couldn't find out where all of it (money) was going . . ."
>
> "I was told that if I didn't back off, this community would rip me to shreds . . ."

Fondren's suit also alleges the school board broke the law when it conducted a public hearing on the proposed tax rate at 7 p.m. on Aug. 31, but the public notice advertised stated the hearing would begin at 8 p.m.

"I got a phone call just after seven from a friend who said the meeting already had begun," Fondren said. He said he arrived at the meeting in time to voice his complaints, but that about 75 others, who showed up at 8 p.m., missed the hearing.

Critics of the New Deal school board say the failure of their trustees to advertise the public hearing on the budget is only a symbol of the communication gap that exists between the board and the public.

"People are asking questions, but not getting any answers," said a former school trustee who asked not to be named. "We keep wondering why the board is creating all this dissension if they aren't hiding something."

When the New Deal trustees approved a budget of $1,095,750 on Aug. 24, only one person showed up to ask questions. The year before, an angry crowd of about 50 persons attended a hearing on the budget.

The New Deal trustees and the superintendent said they were unaware that the budget hearing had not been advertised until the board's next meeting on Sept. 10. During that meeting, an observer heard the reading of the minutes for the Aug. 24 meeting, which included mention of approval of the budget.

The observer asked why a public hearing had not been held. The board said a hearing had been conducted, and that notice had been advertised.

Another member of the audience then produced a newspaper clipping that showed a hearing on the new tax rate was to be held Aug. 24, but no mention was made of a hearing on the budget.

After consulting with the school's attorney, the trustees said they had not followed correct procedure and called a special meeting to approve the budget, again.

Superintendent Foye Flood accepted responsibility for the mistake. "Nothing malicious was done by the board," Flood said. "I simply slipped up and forgot to advertise the hearing on the budget."

New Deal trustees also corrected another error when they changed the location of posted notices of meetings. Until September, meeting notices were posted in the board room inside the school's administrative offices.

However, some residents of the district complained that the trustees were violating the Texas Open Meetings Law by not posting the notices where the public could easily read them.

"So at the advice of our attorney, we did start posting notices on the front door of the school building," Flood said.

Critics of the New Deal school board, including three former trustees, say the school's budget is too large in light of declining enrollment, from an average daily attendance of 561 in 1977-78 to an expected 500 this year.

They also complain that although they've studied the school's budget and asked questions, they still don't understand where their money is being spent.

"When I was on the board, even I couldn't find out where all of it was going," said a former trustee.

Trustee John Dooley, who resigned in August, was so troubled by the school's finances that he traveled to Austin last spring to request an audit of the district by the Texas Education Agency.

Dooley's request was refused. The state cannot audit a school, except for spot checks of enrollment or transportation, areas where the state supplies direct support, said W.W. Magnus, assistant director of audits for TEA.

"As far as I know, it's never been done," Magnus said. He added that all annual audits of the New Deal school district have been approved by TEA, and that several bookeeping problems cited in recent years have been "steadily improving."

Persons unhappy with the New Deal school board include newcomers to the community, and those who have lived there all their lives.

"I have never felt welcome at a school board meeting," said New Deal native Fred Ford.

One newcomer to the community, Linda Salitros, said she and her family were harassed after she challenged some of the trustee's decisions, and then unsuccessfully ran for a seat on the school board.

A teacher at the school warned Mrs. Salitros not to make waves.

"I was told that if I didn't back off, this community would rip me to shreds," she said. "This teacher said she was frightened for me."

Mrs. Salitros said she discovered others in New Deal who were frightened when she campaigned for a seat on the school board. Some residents were afraid to vote against established members of the board for fear of their children's well-being or because their livelihood depended on business with a school board member, she said.

School trustees admit their dislike of Mrs. Salitros, a 32-year-old mother of two.

"She thought she was going to relay the world from Houston to New Deal," said trustee Perry Looney. "She also thought she was going to be the district's first lady trustee. But all she did was become a thorn in our side."

Trustees explain that one reason for discontent is the board's decision this year not to allow anyone to speak at a meeting who did not ask to be put on the agenda.

"We used to let them talk whether they were on the agenda or not," President Bufe said. "Then things got out of hand, and we couldn't carry on our business. We would end up discussing everything from Hogan's goat to Billy's beer."

When New Deal trustees approved the budget a second time, about 25 persons showed up to ask questions. Bufe explained to the audience that the increased budget of about 10 percent was the result of teacher pay raises, several tax exemptions and inflation, "which is running well above 10 percent."

A criticism often hurled at the New Deal school trustees was they they served as only a rubber stamp for the wishes of the school superintendent.

Flood, who has been New Deal superintendent for 10 years, admitted that any superintendent, but particularly those in smaller schools, exercise great power.

"And as superintendent, you've got to call the shots the way you see them," he said. "If the way I call those shots doesn't please the people, then they should run me off."

Flood said he believed much of the criticism levelled at the school board stemmed from a small group waging "a personal vendetta against me."

"But instead of complaining, those with complaints should resort to the democratic process to change things," he said.

The trouble brewing in Lorenzo, Hale Center and New Deal this year may be only a preview for next year, when a county-wide land assessment will go into effect for all taxing entities.

Because of that new law, the Hale Center taxpayers decided to drop their suit against the school district.

"Any relief the taxpayers would have gotten through the suit would have been good only for this year," said Attorney Mark Laney of Plainview, who represented the Hale Center landowners. "They still aren't satisfied, but they won't be taking any action until they see what happens next year."

One complaint echoed by taxpayers in Lorenzo and Hale Center concerned money spent for a reappraisal this year when the entire county will be appraised again next year.

"If we had known that the legislature was going to pass such a law, we certainly wouldn't have ordered an appraisal," explained the Hale Center school board president.

The school trustee predicted, "Not everyone's going to be happy after the appraisal next year either."

Lubbock's Maid of Cotton Hopeful Goes To Memphis

Lubbock's candidate for the Maid of Cotton, Janis Johnson, will model her all-cotton wardrobe for the Lubbock Cotton Auxiliary's Christmas Tea Saturday at 2:30 at the Lubbock Women's Club.

Miss Johnson, chosen as a finalist in the 1980 Maid of Cotton selection, will go to Memphis, Tenn., to compete against some 20 other girls from cotton-producing states for the title of "Maid of Cotton" just after Christmas (in fact, she and her parents will drive to Lubbock Christmas night and fly to Memphis early the next morning).

Traditionally, the local girl chosen for the title of Maid of Cotton is entertained by the Lubbock Cotton Auxiliary at its December seated tea, at which her wardrobe, featuring formal and informal outfits which best illustrate the beauty and utility of cotton, is also shown to members of the auxiliary.

A native of Pampa, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Johnson, Janis is a Texas Tech University junior, studying elementary education. Not your typical beauty queen, she speaks with pride of her older brother and two sisters who have completed advanced degrees, and plans to go on to graduate study herself — probably in education administration.

With this in mind, she is delighted with the $500 in scholarships which goes with her title, from the Texas Cotton Growers Association and the Texas Cottonseed Associates. She also is given her all-cotton wardrobe and lots of opportunities to appear in public, a job at which, with her ready smile and low-key approach, she should excell.

In preparation for the Memphis trip, Janis is spending much of her time learning all about cotton. If she should be chosen National Maid of Cotton in Memphis, she will spend the following several months representing the cotton industry in this country and abroad, and she will need to know a great deal about this crop which is so important to the economy of this part of the country.

Janis is active on campus in many social and scholarly organizations. She is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, and is on the Dean's List and the National Dean's List. She also is busy in Panhellenic, her education society, and as a President's hostess. In her spare time, she likes sports (especially snow skiing) and, during quieter moments, to hook rugs.

By FRANCES LOWE

They set off in late afternoon, the little boy pulling his sled. They went down the dirt road until it forked, one lane going off into the woods by the beaver pond, the other winding down the mountain into town. There they lifted the barbed wire and started up into the wheat field, dried brown sticks protruding through a light layer of old snow. Now and again, along the hedgerow, they saw deer prints.

The little boy wore an intent expression, his brows beetled beneath the brown knit cap. Both he and his sister struggled to keep up with their father's long strides, their breath in clouds around their faces.

At the top of the hill they turned and walked along the lee of the woods, but at the corner of the corn field the wind caught them. They followed the cleared power lines to where they could look down and see the little lake, ringed by summer cottages, and beyond that the village and the pale reflection of the river, and, still beyond, the dark violet mountains. Here, in a little ill-shaped field good for little else was a stand of young pine trees, into which they made their way. The boy, his eyes barely visible over his muffler, walked around each tree carefully, studying it, while his father and sister followed him. Eventually, as he showed no signs of being satisfied, they began to urge him to hurry. "How about this one?" his father would ask, but the boy would point out a broken branch, a crooked limb or missing center.

"It has to be perfect," he insisted.

Finally, the girl and her father grew exasperated. Quickly, with the axe he had worn strapped to his belt, the man cut a tree, and they tied it loosely onto the sled. Then he again looked around for the boy, shouted, and heard an answering shout from the other side of the field. "Come on, now, son — we have one!" he called again. There was a silence, and then the ring of an axe against a tree trunk, sharp on the cold air. The father and the girl grinned at each other. With a final shout, they started out, pulling the sled. The late December day was already growing dark under threatening skies, and, with the wind behind them now and the path downhill all the way the return was quicker than the ascent had been. When they came to the barn they looked back and saw him just at the top of the hill, a small form barely visible against the snow.

As they came into the warm kitchen, the mother asked at once, "Where is John?"

"Coming," the father grunted, taking off his boots and leaving a smudge of dirty snow on the kitchen floor.

"Did you get a tree?"

"Yes — a big one," the girl answered.

Soon they heard the stamp of the boy's boots on the back porch. His mother went to open the door for him and he came all the way into the kitchen, dragging his tree with him. "I got my own tree, Mom!" he declared.

His father took hold of the tree and stood it up in the middle of the kitchen. The drag down the mountain had been hard on it. Most of the needles were gone, and several branches were broken. The girl started to laugh; then, at a glance from her mother, ducked her head.

His mother, frowning, searched the boy's face, but he was grinning, his eyes bright with triumph. "Isn't it a nice one, Mama?" he asked.

They are The Ultimate Dream (full length mink), Sugar 'n Spice, Designers Delight, Fun and Games and Busy Holidays.

Mrs. Gragg is president of Gragg Furs, Inc. and has received wide recognition for her creative and imaginative designs in furs. In Wichita, she is active in many civic groups and has served as a regional governor of the South Central Region of Soroptimists International.

This event is one of two major fund-raising events for the Lubbock club women. Soroptimists International is the largest classified service organization for women in the world. There are clubs in more than 50 countries.

Soroptimists International of Lubbock was chartered Aug. 13, 1977. When the club was only five months old, it gave away its first Women's Resident Grant. Since that first award, four more of these $500 grants have been given by the club to women resident doctors at the Texas Tech University School of Medicine.

Program Offers Vocational Aid

By JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

Before her husband's death several months ago, Jean Roberts had been strictly a homemaker. Her most important job had been taking care of the couple's three school-age children. She did the cooking, did the family laundry, maintained the house and sometimes mowed the lawn.

But homemaking skills were not what employers wanted, she found when she began looking for work. One employer she contacted wanted someone to type (she had never learned); a real estate office needed a licensed agent (she had no license); and a hospital was looking for a person with nurses' aide training (which she lacked). The fact of the matter was, employers wanted skills and experience; Jean had neither.

Another individual, Betty Smith, has a loving, supportive husband and four children. The kids are all in school, making it possible for Betty to work and provide some of the extras her family needs. But Betty is locked into a clerk's job, which pays barely minimum wage and which Betty finds boring and futureless.

Betty grew up on a farm. There she learned to do everything, including making simple repairs on farm equipment. As she thinks about this, and learns how much money a welder can make, Betty thinks she would like to train as a welder, a job that is non-traditional for a woman.

Still another individual, Joe Wilson, feels uncomfortable in the job he presently holds, that of a truck driver. What would he prefer to do? Joe thinks he'd like to work with children. But is there a program to help a man "cross the sexual barrier" and get a job that traditionally only women hold?

Jennie Teague is the sole support of five children. She barely ekes out an existence on welfare. Jennie is proud and doesn't want to live on welfare forever, nor does she like trying to subsist on welfare monies. Jennie dreams of the future, and wants college educations for all her children. She would like to try to acquire vocational skills, preferably in some work involving health care.

Betty Reed is multiply-handicapped. She could continue living comfortably with her parents, who would look after her as long as she lives. But she doesn't want to just observe life; she wants to be a participant. Perhaps, she thinks, she could begin her college career slowly. Would taking a typing course be a wise choice for starting a career that could possibly lead to a teaching position, something she'd like very much to do?

All these people have two things in common. First, they need vocational education. Second, they can all be aided in achieving their goals through a newly-funded program of the Texas Education Agency called "Vocational Education for Displaced Homemakers and Other Special Groups."

The program is being offered on the Plainview campus of South Plains College. Officials emphasize that the program is a "pilot" project for similar programs that will eventually be offered on each SPC campus.

According to Sam Parker, coordinator of the program, there are several reasons why women become displaced homemakers.

"If there is a death of the major wage earner in the family; if divorce occurs; if the major wage earner deserts the family; if someone in the family becomes suddenly disabled and unable to perform a major economic role, then the homemaker quite frequently finds herself in the position of being a displaced homemaker.

"But," Parker stated, "often it isn't enough that these individuals are involved in a family undergoing transition due to the loss of a principle wage earner by death, desertion, divorce or disability. Often these people have to seek employment whether they possess job skills or not. In addition, such individuals may lack the most fundamental orientation towards the world of work.

"Frequently, due to the trauma of dissolution of marriage or family life style, they also require special individualized counseling and social services intervention.

"Other 'special groups' are people interested in entering the job fields considered sex role stereotyped; for them, non-traditional. Generally, similar activities are needed to help them successfully complete a vocational course of study, such as men in child development."

Parker says that over and above regular campus services, special needs of the handicapped entering the program will be considered. To succeed, handicapped students may need specialized individual counseling, including referral to community services; tutoring and individualized practice or drill; safe transportation to and from classes; and modification of campus facilities, including obtaining use of special or adapated equipment.

"Displaced homemakers" and "other special groups" may have other needs beyond acquiring job skills. "During the transition period," Parker said, "some individuals may need social service assistance. Certainly our program will include this."

Social services needs may include crisis intervention; needs assessment in child care, housing, financial management and social adjustment; and information and referral to community resources. The provision of these special student services is intended to maximize the ability of the persons involved to complete job training and acquiring skills.

Although classes under the Displaced Homemakers program do not begin until the Spring Semester (Jan. 7), Parker urges prospective students to contact his office for information as soon as possible. Parker may be reached through the Human Services department of the Plainview campus of SPC at 708 Yonkers, or by calling (806) 293-3605.

TRIMMING THE TREE — Sarah Foote, left, and Carolyn Okoumian sparsely decorate this two-story dugout to authenticate the era. All activities during "Candlelight at The Museum" will be appropriate to the period and lifestyle it represents.

Vistors are welcomed to the "Candlelight at The Museum" presentation from 6-8:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday at the Ranching Heritage Center. Adding festive touches to the Harrell House are, left, Judy Gibbs and Pat Pournell.

Nutrition Becomes Confusing Issue

SAN ANTONIO (Special) — The average American supermarket offers consumers the opportunity to choose from among some 11,000 different items. While new products are introduced almost daily, others disappear from the shelves. Our food supply is a kaleidoscope of constantly changing packages, formulas and conveniences.

It's no wonder that consumers begin to feel dizzy at the array of products and information confronting them. Nutrition experts' conflicting claims about what foods are good and bad add to a food shopper's confusion.

A 1975 Food and Drug Administration study of consumers' nutrition knowledge showed that shoppers were knowledgeable about sources of protein, fat and carbohydrate. But when asked about some of the lesser nutrients — thiamine (vitamin B1), riboflavin (vitamin B2), vitamin D, iron and calcium — many food shoppers either gave the wrong answer or were not sure about which foods contain which nutrients.

The Department of Agriculture has devised a method anyone can use for basic food buying and meal planning that will insure good nutrition. The method is called the food grouping system. In this system, all foods are grouped according to their nutrient content into one of these categories: milk/cheese; vegetable/fruit; bread/cereal; or meat/fish/poultry/bean (high protein). The fifth (high-calorie) group includes foods high in fats, sugar or alcohol.

Dairy Council, Inc. nutritionists suggest that you check to see if your daily intake is balanced among the four main food groups. An adult needs at least two servings daily from the milk group, two from the meat group, four from the bread/cereal group and four from the vegetable/fruit group (A serving size is about ½ cup, one piece of fruit or one slice of bread). Once you see which food group your family is low in, you can plan your shopping with good nutrition in mind.

Tips May Relieve Mailing Problems

By LYNN HOHERTZ
Family News Staff

Don't try and put the blame on Santa and his reindeer if your Christmas cards and parcels don't arrive on time! With a little planning and some helpful tips from the Post Office, Christmas mail should arrive with a blink of Rudolf's nose.

Don Bloyd, director of finances of the Lubbock Post Office, doesn't foresee any problems with Christmas bundles, however, he encourages all to shop early and mail early just to be sure the Christmas Grinch doesn't creep into the holiday festivities.

To keep from disappointing anyone on your Christmas list and avoid some of the holiday hassles, Bloyd offers these Postal guidelines.

First of all, mailers should be conscious of the new mailing standards for envelopes. The minimum size for cards is 3½x5 inches. Mailers should also keep in mind that the maximum parcel size is 84 inches (length and girth combined) and shouldn't weigh more than 40 pounds.

"Mailing deadlines are pretty much the same," said Bloyd, three to four days for cards and letters and six to seven days for parcels; however, suggested holiday deadlines will be Dec. 16-17 for cards and Dec. 12-13 for packages.

Bloyd suggested mailing military mail this week, although there are options such as first class, Partial Air Lift, Priority and Space Available.

For mail going to Mexico and Canada, Monday is a recommended mailing date to ensure adequate arrival time. Mail to other countries should be sent air mail.

When mailing packages, make sure you pack gifts in a strong corrugated fiberboard box. (Boxes should give test weight). The box should be strong enough to prevent damage from handling, transportation and compression. Bloyd recommends using pressure sensitive filament tape or reinforced paper tape. "String, twine or rope can get caught in postal equipment," he pointed out.

If you shake a package and it rattles you know it isn't properly padded. Each box should be cushioned firmly. "I advise if mailing more than one item in a box, to wrap items individually," he said. Ideal cushioning material includes old newspapers (crushed), styrofoam and foam rubber.

Perhaps one of the biggest problems during the holiday mailing season is that of illegible addresses. Make sure the address, Zip Code and return address is clearly visible from arm's length. As an extra precaution, Bloyd believes mailers should always take another completed address label and place it inside the package so that if anything does happen, the Dead Parcel Post Branch may forward it on.

Anyone sending fragile items or who desires mailing proof may find insurance or registered mail a way to ease the mind.

"Insurance varies according to the value of the item," Bloyd said. Insurance may be purchased at $.50 for items up to $15 and for $2.75 items may be insured up to $400. For anything more than $400, registered mail is "by far the safest means," he added. "This means that everyone handling the package must sign for it," he explained. For $4.90 items may be registered up to $1000 and so on.

Now, those last minute shoppers haven't been forgotten. If you've waited you may consider Express Mail, the Postal Service's guaranteed overnight delivery service. (Although there is an extra charge and it is more expensive). For more information on this type of service you can check with a window clerk).

¼ tsp. caraway seeds
8 eggs, beaten
2 tbsps. butter
½ cup (2 oz.) shredded Swiss cheese

In large bowl combine corned beef, sauerkraut, caraway seeds and eggs. Heat butter in large ovenproof skillet (ovenproof by wrapping handle tightly with aluminum foil.) until just hot enough to sizzle a drop of water. Pour in egg mixture. ## Dear Abby,

DEAR ABBY: My mother, who is 50, has always been a model mother — until now. She and my father were divorced three years ago. Mom and I recently moved to California where we share an apartment. Now I'm suddenly finding out some things about her I never knew before.

She has been getting frequent telephone calls from a man who lives in the Middle East. She tells me he is coming to the States next month and she plans to meet him in New York! I started asking questions and learned that she had known this man for 10 years.

Now, I ask you, is this the way for a respectable 50-year-old woman to act? It's really changed the way I feel about my mother, Abby. But if you say it's all right, I'll accept your decision.

Let me known soon. I am building some bad feelings for a person for whom I've always had a lot of respect.

TORN IN CALIF.

Dear Torn: Don't jump to conclusions. And don't judge your mother until you have walked in her moccasins for three years. Better make that 10!

• • •

DEAR ABBY: I'm astonished that you and your other readers seem to be so completely uninformed on why women knit, crochet and do needlepoint.

The reason is obvious. It gives them something to think about while they're talking.

ED IN SAN FRANCISCO

Dear Ed: Men also do needlwork. Case in point: YOU appear to be quite handy with the needle. Does the same hold true for men?

• • •

DEAR ABBY: Diane, our 21-year-old daughter, phoned last week to inform us that she and her boyfriend have decided to get married. In closing the conversation, she said, "When can we pick out my wedding dress, Mom? You're supposed to pay for it, aren't you?"

Abby, what are the obligations of the bride's parents when the bride and groom have been living together openly for over a year?

My husband and I never approved of that setup, but we accept it since she was of age and we had no choice. Our family and friends were aware of our daughter's lifestyle; we made no effort to hide it, although we weren't exactly proud of it.

Now that the wedding date has been set, Diane expects a lovely church wedding with all the trimmings — at our expense.

Both Diane and her boyfriend work, have cars and a fairly nice apartment. I know they have nothing saved because I've had to help Diane out when emergencies and unexpected bills popped up.

My husband is a kind and generous man who will go along with my decision. My question: Under the circustances, are we obligated to foot the bill for the kind of wedding our daughter wants?

WITHHOLD MY NAME

Dear Withhold: No. Your obligations to Diane ceased when she became of age. Do only that which will give YOU pleasure.

• • •

CONFIDENTIAL TO "SHOULD I GIVE IN?": Your question can best be answered by something I came across today:

"When I met him, I liked him.
When I liked him, I loved him.
When I loved him, I let him.
When I let him, I lost him."

VA Begins Program

WASHINGTON (AP) — An effort to bring artists and works of art into Veterans Administration facilities has been announced.

Initially, the program will place more than $500,000 in art works in 15 VA facilities and create an artist-in-residence pilot program at its Medical Center in Hines, Ill.

The announcement was made jointly by Max Cleland, Adminstrator of Veterans Affairs, and Livingston L. Biddle Jr., chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts.

Smith Show Planned

NEW YORK (AP) — The first major retrospective of drawings by sculptor David Smith, "David Smith: The Drawings," will be shown at the Whitney Museum of American Art Dec. 4 through Feb. 10, 1980.

The show consists of some 140 works representing all periods of Smith's career. It will present works on paper that, the museum says, "show the development of his individual graphic style as it evolved to what Paul Cummings in the exhibition catalog describes as 'an inventiveness paralleling that of his sculpture.'"

INSTANT ENERGY

Television personality Phyllis George told Beauty Digest magazine her special plan for giving herself a lift. "Nothing peps me up like 15 minutes of sleep and witch hazel pads on my eyes. plus I drink a glass of orange juice prior to any big activity."

Holiday Guests Deserve Cheese Ball Treat

SAN ANTONIO (Special) — The holiday season always calls for at least a few special treats from the kitchen, even if you're not planning on entertaining with a party. It's so nice to have decorated butter cookies, fruitcake or cheese snacks on hand for special friends who may drop by, or for gifts that say "love from our house to yours."

Dairy Council, Inc. home economists offer this recipe for Versatile Cheese Ball as the answer to all such occasions. The mixture may be shaped into small balls and rolled in sesame seeds, finely chopped parsley or finely chopped smoked sliced beef. The bite-sized balls make perfect snacks or appetizers. The mixture is a good stuffing for celery, making that vegetable a nutritious snack or dinner accompaniment. Or, best of all, it makes into an attractive and festive treat.

VERSATILE CHEESE BALL

2 cups (8 oz.) shredded Cheddar cheese
1 cup (4 oz.) crumbled Blue cheese
½ cup shredded Provolone cheese
1 pkg. (3 oz.) cream cheese
1 tbsp. milk
1 tbsp. grated onion
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
½ tsp. dry mustard
½ tsp. paprika
¼ tsp garlic salt
¼ tsp. celery salt
¼ cup toasted sesame seed

In a large mixing bowl beat together Cheddar, Blue, Provolone and cream cheeses until smooth. Blend in milk, onion, Worcestershire sauce, mustard, paprika, garlic and celery salts. Chill for ease in handling. Shape into a ball; roll in sesame seed or chopped nuts. Wrap in protective wrapping; chill.

Holiday Greeting Cards:

UNICEF, Christmas Letters Provide Holiday Card Alternative

By FRANCES LOWE
Family News Editor

There is surely no more enduring staple of the American Christmas scene than the Christmas card. And yet even this perennial has fallen into disfavor, accused by its detractors of being wasteful of money and trees and heartless as well, now that we receive cards with printed names from people we can't identify.

Some of the alternatives which have gained in popularity, (apart from not sending cards at all,) are homemade cards, the Christmas letter (itself the target of criticism and humour) and the Christmas card whose purchase serves some larger purpose.

One of the best known and respected of the groups sponsoring these kinds of cards is UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Relief Organization, which uses the proceeds from the sale of its cards to benefit children around the world.

"When you buy and send our cards and gifts you are helping UNICEF's children," says the 1979 brochure. "These are your children. They all need you. This is one way, a small way, but a significant way, to find them and care for them."

The cards, of various styles and representing all parts of the world, come in both secular and sacred versions. The UNICEF brochure also features birthday and note cards, the ever-popular calendar (this year titled "The Magical World of Children,") and small books, puzzles, etc., for children.

This year, UNICEF is also selling an "International Year of the Child 1979 Commemorative," ranging from nearly $1000 for a platinum medallion to a $17.50 bronze pendant. The first edition of the "Children of the World" porcelain collection is also available this Christmas at $30.00.

Other organizations also feature cards with a purpose, from saving the endangered species to preserving our forests by printing on recycled paper.

The family with a do-it-yourself bent can find delight in designing its own cards. An evening of sitting around the table with construction paper, glue and crayons can result in a batch of cards sure to be original, or mass-production techniques can be used, such as potato or linoleum or other stamping methods (the latter are also useful for designing your own wrapping paper).

Many families continue to enjoy the photo-card, and grandparents and other fond relatives are sure to love this kind of greeting, (even if you have to line the kids up by an artificial tree in October to take their picture). Most photo supply houses have sample forms in which you can insert your own photographs, or will incorporate your family portrait into a greeting card.

In spite of the jokes, the Christmas newsletter is a handy and efficient way to exchange the news of the family with faraway friends and relatives. These can be run off on a borrowed mimeograph or copy machine at the church or office, or the quick-copy services will run off a replica of your letter in a matter of minutes at low cost. Some creative families include line drawings, poetry, or other personal greetings by each member of the family in addition to the paw-print of the family pet...

If you want a "traditional" card but are dissatisfied with those you find in the stores, museums and galleries are often a good source of really fine cards. Perhaps the best known is the Metropolitan, whose catalogue offers, in addition to cards with paintings, sketches and other art forms by the masters, reproductions of museum pieces ranging from jewelry to scarves to miniatures, often at surprisingly reasonable prices.

The Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Boston Museum Shop, 29 Sleeper St., Boston, Mass. 02210.

The Brooklyn Museum Gallery Shop, 188 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11238.

A quick check of the local scene revealed several sources of unique and unusual cards and small gifts. The Museum gift shop, while small, offers a surprising variety of gifts in a wide price range. Three of the local Episcopal Churches — St. Paul's downtown; St. Stephen's on Slide Road and St. Christopher's at 42nd and Elgin — have small gift shops featuring cards, religious jewelry, medallions and decorative pieces, as well as ornaments and other decorative items. A continuing source of unique items is the craft fairs and bazaars sponsored by church and other community groups, where the person who is not creative can, for a price, buy and give the handmade work of others.

Yuletide Cards Ingredient For Home Decoration

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (Special) — If decorating the house for the holiday spells trouble for your shopping budget, wait a few days.

The ingredients for some of the most beautiful, do-it-yourself, Christmas decorations soon will be arriving in the mail, says Marie Smith, a card designer.

"We all enjoy sending and receiving holiday greeting cards," Smith said, "but too often those we receive are stacked on a desk or stashed in a drawer. With a little ingenuity, Christmas cards — each one a work of art — can be used to create lovely holiday decor pieces."

Smith believes that decorating with Christmas cards gives a home a "personality" that complements store-bought decorations.

"Filling your home with the cheerful holiday wishes of your friends also evokes fond memories," the designer said, "and guests enjoy the spirit of the season the cards represent."

Smith has made a variety of decorations using Christmas cards, ranging from hanging card mobiles to placemats. Although she lists only three here, she notes that the number of decorations that can be made from Chnstmas cards varies with the number of cards received.

For starters, here are her decorating suggestions. From these, one can develop decorating ideas to fit individual home interiors.

FRIENDSHIP WREATH. Make a wreath from real or artificial greenery. Thread yarn gift tye through the fold of each card, leaving enough yarn to tie a bow. Drape the bows over the small branches of the greenery to hang the cards securely. Fill empty spots with red ornaments and make a bow with braided yarn tye, accenting the center with a sprig of holly.

CARD TREE. Place a styrofoam base in a large basket with a tall handle. Insert small tree branches that have been painted white, tying them to the handle for support. Fill in bare areas at the bottom with greenery. Use a paper punch to make holes in the tops of the Christmas cards. Thread yarn tye through the holes and tie the cards to the branches.

STAIRWAY GARLAND. Drape greenery on the stairway banister, securing it with florist's wire. Punch holes in the tops of the cards and thread yarn tye through the holes. Tie cards to garland, making bows with yarn. To accent the decoration, make small bouquets from dried red flowers and baby's breath. Place them in strategic locations to fill in any empty spaces.

"Crafts in the exhibition date from 1850 to the present," says the institution, "and emphasize the adaptation of traditional African designs to meet the utilitarian and decorative needs of white as well as black America."

RHINO EXTINCTION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The World Wildlife Fund has announced a worldwide, $2 million emergency campaign to save the black rhinoceros and four other rhino species it says are in danger of becoming extinct. Poachers are killing Kenya's black rhinoceros to supply the market for rhino horn, and the animal may become extinct in 1980, said a spokesman.

LAERS Receives Special Van

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

The donation of a specially equipped van from the board of the now defunct Citizens for Improved Transportation to the directors of the Lubbock Area Extended Rehabilitation Services this week assured that means of transportation for some of the city's handicapped citizens will still be available in the city. The transfer of the special vehicle along with the transfer of radio equipment took place this week.

CFIT was begun in April of 1976 for the purpose of "seeking ways of coordinating services for community residents unable to find transportation to health care centers, services to combat hunger and social service agencies," according to an Avalanche-Journal article of May 14, 1976. The emphasis on the service offered was to aid the elderly and the handicapped.

Following a period of planning, the actual transportation operation of CFIT began in November of 1877. From its beginning through the end of the program in September of this year, CFIT had four executive directors. They were Margie Rudd, Robbie Albright, Jane Taylor and Leonard Sprouse.

In receiving the van this week, George Park, the director of LAERS, said the vehicle would be used to transport several severely handicapped persons from their homes to their jobs at Goodwill Industries. "At least that portion of the program can be kept alive," commented Park.

Former director and the last CFIT board treasurer, Jane Taylor, expressed a similar hope that the transfer of the van would assure the continuing help for at least some of the needy in Lubbock.

A final statistical report prepared by the staff of CFIT indicates that people in Lubbock with special transportation needs had been greatly helped by the services of CFIT. Those figures show that from March 1978 through September 1979, a total of 36,510 passengers were served by CFIT vehicles and that this service involved a total of 81,878.6 passenger miles. Monthly figures for this same 18-month period also show that the average number of trips per month was 1,568.2, and that the average passenger miles per month were 4,309.4; and that the average number of gallons of gas consumed during a month ran at 570.6.

Mrs. Taylor points to the statistics to illustrate that not only did the number of persons helped by the program increase, but also, through efficient routing and dispatch procedures, the system became more economical to run. Another factor which has also hit all agencies in transporation is the skyrocketing cost of fuel. During the same 18-month period, gas costs went from $.54 to $.87, Mrs. Taylor said.

In addition to the special van which LAERS now owns, the specially outfitted CITIBus which was part of the CFIT fleet has gone back to the Community Services and five other vehicles have gone back to the city and are used by the Parks and Recreation Department, Mrs. Taylor said.

Mrs. Taylor, who has been involved in the CFIT program from its inception, is concerned for those people whom the organization served. "What's going to happen to them now? There is no substitute," she said.

Reasons which she gives for the demise of CFIT include that the organization did not receive federal funding which it had been led to believe was coming and that agencies and the city did not give the program the support it needed. She also cites the fact that CFIT was not awarded the contact for transportation for the Senior Citizens Nutrition program as a factor.

TRANSPORTATION FOR THE HANDICAPPED — A van specially equipped to transport handicapped persons was presented to Lubbock Area Extended Rehabilitation Services (LAERS) by the board of Citizens for Improved Transportation (CFIT). Present at the time of the transfer were, from left, Dennis Brice of Goodwill Industries, Jane Taylor of CFIT, Rex Webster of the LAERS board and George H. Park, LAERS executive director. # Diabetes Researchers Study Eye Signals

By FRANCES LOWE
Family News Editor

Researchers in the Department of Opthalmology and Visual Sciences at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center are conducting research which may result in refining the art of diagnosing diabetes and predicting the progress of the disease.

Ultimately, such techniques, which involve measuring the electrical signals eminating from the eye, may result in earlier diagnosis and thus earlier treatment of the disease.

Dr. Perry Speros, assistant professor, and Dr. James Price, professor and chairman of the department, are supported in this research by a grant from the American Diabetes Association — one of the uses of the funds for which the local association is currently campaigning.

Diabetes is well known for its effects on the eye, Speros pointed out, resulting eventually, for many victims, in partial or total blindness. "It is, in fact, the major cause of visual impairment in this country," he said.

Not until the last two decades, however, was this aspect of the disease widely regarded or studied, since in previous years most diabetes victims died before reaching the advanced stages of the disease. With the development of insulin and diet control treatment, victims of diabetes are living longer, and more effective lives, and researchers are able to concentrate upon some of the later aspects of this disease.

Very refined and delicate instrumentation has been developed on the Tech campus, one of the few laboratories in the nation with this kind of special instrumentation, for recording and measuring the very fine electrical impulses of the eye. The amplification techniques used must be very critical, Speros points out, because of the very low levels of the signals, and the instruments must have the capacity to separate out the signals from the many background noises which are always present. A goal of the Tech researchers is to develop the instrumentation to the degree that the singals from only a very small portion of the retina can eventually be separated out, measured and studied, and thus compared over periods of time.

"The usefulness of the electroretinogram in the diagnosis and possibly in the prognosis of retinal disease has not been fully explored," the researchers pointed out. "Almost all of the investigations to date have dealt with changes in these wavelets during the advancement of diabetic retinopathy."

"Perhaps the addition of a systematic evaluation of ERG oscillatory potentials could aid in the staging of diabetic retinopathy clinical studies, and be helpful in establishing a prognosis for patients afflicted with this disease and for the physician trying to treat it."

"Questions about electroretinographic changes in diabetic retinopathy should be raised in a manner that makes them subject to experimental inquiry and also to provide a definite answer as to whether or not any of the subcomponents of the ERG, in particular the oscillatory potentials, could be used as a prognostic tool in diabetic retinopathy."

Studies are conducted with patients at the University Clinic, who, on their initial visit, are subjected to a general eye examination, and a battery of specialized testing techniques, including electroretinography. During follow-up visits, on a regular schedule of every three months, the tests are redone for the basis of comparison. Baseline photography at the initial and follow-up visits are conducted. Fluorescein angiography is performed on patients over 12 when evidence of retinopathy exists. Nothing in the tests is dangerous or uncomfortable for the patients involved.

The researchers have thus far examined the oscillatory potentials in 53 patients afflicted with diabetic retinography — damage to the eye as a result of diabetes. They plan to follow these patients periodically. Their emphasis thus far in the study has been with respect to the classification of the patients' retinopathy and the selection of a group of patients for participation in a long period of follow-up study. The researchers are interested in the sequential analysis, particularly in the juvenile diabetic population.

This basic research being conducted at Tech is an example of the way that funds contributed to the American Diabetes Association are used to gain knowledge of the disease which afflicts many Americans.

Natural Creativity Helps Children Develop Into Independent Adults

(Editor's Note: Second in a series)

By Kenneth R. Blessing, Ph.D.

MADISON, WIS. (NEA) — Adults frequently view creativity as a luxury to be "practiced" by only a select few. Every child, however, is born with the desire and the need for creative activities.

Early nuturing of children's natural creativity, imagination and self-expression helps them become independent, self-confident people. Thus, parents must provide them with these learning opportunities from birth.

There are no recipes for creativity. Rather, parents should allow the child to take the lead, providing encouragement and then respecting the results.

Infants' alertness depends on the stimulation they receive.

The amount babies babble, communicate and interact with family members may have far-reaching consequences for their intellectual development and general maturation. Willpower, eagerness to learn, drive, creativity, body and ego are all molded by these early experiences.

Infants tend to withdraw if their environment does not provide enough to see, hear and touch or if their spontaneous responses to these stimuli are inhibited. That results in poor self-image, which in turn results in further withdrawal.

Parents and siblings play a vital role during this stage in enabling infants to explore their world and begin to label its components verbally.

When children begin to crawl and later to walk, they want to see, touch and handle everything. It is parents' responsibility to prepare a safe but enriching environment of toys and household objects for inquisitive crawlers.

During the preschool years, creative play is the most important means for children to learn and grow.

Experience at home or in early-childhood programs should include activities that allow children to learn about themselves through movement, painting, dramatics and language. Cooking a meal together, planning a birthday party or decorating the house for the holidays are all opportunities for creative expression.

In home and classroom, letting the unexpected happen is essential. Whether or not it is specifically on parents' or teachers' schedules, it is crucial to allow children to follow their own unique interests.

Accepting what the child produces is also important. If parents can capture the child in themselves, they can more easily appreciate their child's forms of expression.

If parents, day-care workers and teachers feel that creative art is only achieved by drawing a building that looks realistic or by writing a poem that rhymes, a child's true fantasy and creativity may be destroyed.

Fortunately, today's educators are acknowledging the importance of play as a learning tool.

They now realize children do not learn from one or two play experiences but gain confidence every time they master the elements in their serious world of play. And they realize that overly rigid coloring books cannot compare with the freedom of paper, paint brush and washable poster paint.

Through play, children grow in ability to use symbols to understand and describe their world.

For example, educators have found that the one common element in all successful approaches to reading is enlisting children's creativity by encouraging them from the beginning to write their own words and stories. These programs also allow children to proceed at their own pace and, as far as possible, in their own way.

If children can express themselves freely, they also have another tool to cope with stress. Frequently, hospitalized children find painting, drawing, water play and creative writing helpful outlets for release of tension in an unfamiliar, stressful setting.

Children who produce many original ideas or have unique talents are labeled gifted or talented at school.

Even within this group, however, there are highly intellectual and creative children who do not achieve their full potential, often because they perceive pressure at home or school. Some worry about what others think of them and so avoid situations where they might make mistakes.

It is important, therefore, that parents and professionals realize the full value of talking to, playing with and including children in activities and decision making as often as possible. It is equally important that they encourage creativity, accept trial and error, and make creative play a natural part of learning.

THOUGHTS ON CHILDREN

My father had always said that there are four things a child needs — plenty of love, nourishing food, regular sleep and lots of soap and water — and after those, what he needs most is some intelligent neglect.

WH—WHAT?

YOUR HUSBAND IS LOCKED IN THE SHIP'S VAULT...

YOU WILL WALK ASHORE WITH ME! IF YOU CRY OUT, I SHALL KILL YOU—AND YOUR HUSBAND WILL SUFFOCATE!

ONCE WE ARE SAFELY OFF THIS U.S. SHIP, I SHALL TAKE YOU INLAND

—AND SET YOU FREE TO RETURN TO THE VESSEL AND SAVE YOUR HUSBAND

THEN THE FUGITIVE REMOVES THE GOATEE, HEAVY BROWS AND WIG OF HIS DISGUISE!

Prince Valiant — In the Days of King Arthur

by Hal Foster

Our Story: THORALF, THE VIKING CHIEFTAIN, STILL DOES NOT TRUST ARN AND HE QUESTIONS HIM AT LENGTH, FOR HE IS TOO WELL-EDUCATED TO BE A BRUTAL RAIDER. BUT ARN MENTIONS HIS FRIENDSHIP WITH BOLTAR, HERO OF ALL VIKINGS, THAT APPEARS TO SATISFY THE CHIEF.

THE NEXT DAY A FLEET OF LONGSHIPS LANDS ON THE BEACH BELOW THE VILLAGE OF PEEL AND UNLOADS BUILDING MATERIAL AND TOOLS. ARN IS NOT LONG IN FINDING OUT TO WHAT USE THIS IS TO BE PUT.

ALL HANDS ARE ORDERED TO HELP TRANSPORT THE CARGOES TO ST. PATRICK'S ISLAND WHERE A FORTRESS IS BEING CONSTRUCTED TOGETHER WITH A CAUSEWAY TO THE MAINLAND.

THIS IS WHAT ARN HAS RISKED HIS LIFE TO DISCOVER, BUT HIS INFORMATION IS USELESS UNLESS HE CAN RETURN TO BRITAIN... AND HE IS WATCHED.

WEEKS GO BY BEFORE A CHANCE COMES. ARN IS SENT WITH SEVERAL ARMED MEN TO COLLECT SUPPLIES OF FOOD FROM THE ENSLAVED MANXMEN.

AT THE END OF THE DAY WHEN EVERYONE IS TIRED AND A BIT CARELESS, ARN SLIPS AWAY TO THE TANGLE OF FALLEN TREES AND ROCKS WHERE HE HAD ENCOUNTERED THE 'LITTLE' MAN.

FOR A MINUTE HIS LIFE HANGS IN THE BALANCE. THEN HE IS RECOGNIZED AND AGAIN ENTERS THE UNDERGROUND HABITAT OF THESE 'LITTLE PEOPLE'.

Tour Planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — An exhibition of works from all departments of the Hermitage in Leningrad will open at the National Gallery of Art in the spring of 1980 and tour the country through 1982.

The gallery says it will be "the first such exhibition ever to leave the Soviet Union."

The more than 400 objects in the show, "The Hermitage of Leningrad: Doorway to World Art," will include prehistoric, Assyrian, ancient Greek, Roman, Chinese, Japanese, Indian, Islamic, Russian and Western European art.

RETAIN COLOR
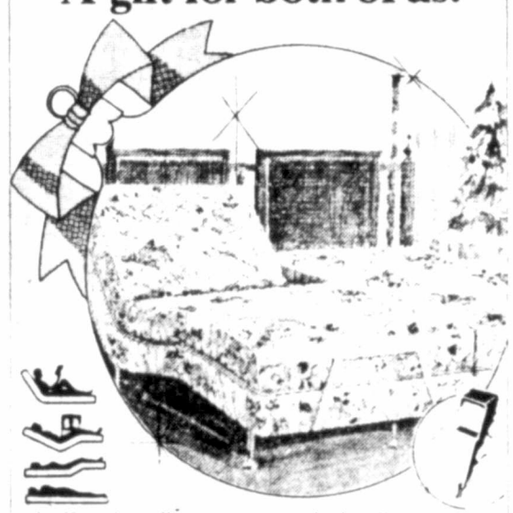
To retain colors in fabrics that tend to "run," immerse them in white vinegar before washing. The color will then remain fast.

GENTEEL DRESS-DOWN — The ultimate in genteel dress-down. Country Britches brings it off to perfection with just the right proportions of muted plaid Harris tweed, gloossy velvet; elegant cashmere plus more than a dash of total assurance. The equestrian sport coat has pigskin elbow patches, loop windtab, generous side vents, lower hacking pockets and flap-besom breast pocket. Pleated velvet pants come in such uninhibited colors as cinnamon, navy, slate, sage green, coffee and rose.

A gift for both of us.



A gift to last all seasons...one which will give you a lifetime of relaxing pleasure. Come in today and see how the Flex-a-Bed automatically adjusts to thousands of positions. Experience the ultimate luxury.

ROAST DUCK

1 3-4 lb. duck
1 garlic clove, split
Salt and pepper to taste
1 small onion, sliced
1 bay leaf
¼ tsp. ground ginger
¼ tsp. thyme
3 celery stalks, sliced
Sauce for roast duck

Clean duck thoroughly. Remove and discard any excess fat from the cavity. Rub the duck with the garlic clove. Sprinkle both the inside and outside with salt and pepper. Combine remaining ingredients and stuff them into the cavity. Brush duck with sauce. Put the duck in a roasting pan and place in preheated 450 degree oven. Reduce heat to 350 degrees and cook until tender, about 20 minutes per pound, basting every 20 minutes with sauce. When duck has been in the oven for 30 minutes, remove and turn to other side. Drain fat from pan and return to oven. Serves 2.

SAUCE FOR ROAST DUCK: 1 cup red currant jelly, ½ cup red cooking wine, 1 teaspoon ginger, juice of ½ orange, juice of ½ lemon, granted rind of ½ orange, 2 teaspoons cornstarch.

In a saucepan, simmer ingredients for 5 minutes, stirring constantly. Makes 2 cups.

Lubbock Nurserymen Display Variety Of Trees

BY JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

West Texans who are sentimental about such things still go out at Christmas to chop down a cedar tree growing somewhere along the Caprock. And, some brave souls, willing to brave the cold, will again journey to Ruidoso and environs to "cut their own" in tree-cutting and control programs sponsored by the national forests.

But most of us will have to rely on local nurseries, stores and tree lots to find and buy "the perfect tree" for Christmas.

Do you usually wait until the coldest day of the year to purchase your tree? Or, do you wait until the very last minute before Christmas to make this important purchase?

"Unfortunately, many people do wait and then are disappointed in the quality of trees left," manager J.B. Merritt of Wolfe Nursery said. "So, I would urge everybody to buy early, while there are still ample and excellent stocks to choose from. And now is not too early."

Merritt said that Wolfe's most popular Christmas tree is the Scotch pine. "But we also have many more varieties to choose from," Merritt said, "including blue and white spruces and three different kinds of firs. All these are fresh and should be long-lasting throughout the holiday season. For those desiring to have their trees flocked, we have that service."

Bob Covington of Holden-Dodson Nursery agrees it is best to purchase a Christmas tree early. "There are no shortages, however," Covington said, "but your shopping may be more successful now than later, to be able to choose the kind and quality of tree desired.

"About prices, the cost of trees may be up some this year, reflecting as with everything else the effects of inflation.

"Concerning our best-selling varieties, we expect to again sell more firs than ever before. Why? The firs last longer and have less falling of needles. Some of the varieties we will feature this year are: Balsam firs, Concolor or White firs, Grand fir and many others. Incidentally, our Balsam firs come from Taos; and people like them especially, because they are so fresh. Because these firs grow in whirls, having spaces of growth, they're particularly adaptable for decorating — that makes the Balsams popular, too.

"Remember the trees you used to see at all the stores when you were a kid? The trees were probably Douglas firs; and the reason these have stayed around so long is that the trees just don't drop their needles as quickly, as other varieties."

Finally, Covington said, "Buy early and take your time about selecting the tree best suited to your needs and wishes. And by putting your tree in water or moist soil, it will stay fresh longer. Also, it will not be as apt to dry out and create a potential fire hazard."

Larry Best of Holland Gardens says his firm has many varieties of Christmas trees to choose from. "We have Scotch pines — a favorite of many people — but we also expect to sell many more firs this year," he said.

Best believes, as do other nurserymen, that fir trees are definitely becoming more popular. "As others may have told you," Best said, "the fir makes an excellent Christmas tree. With its firm branches and needles, firs decorate well. The firs hold up especially well for flocking. When you add these things to the fact of being longer-lasting, then the firs could well be the most popular Christmas tree of the future."

— Choose a tree that has upright needles and branches;

— If a tree is already dropping needles, just think what it will do to your living-room carpet when you bring it indoors;

— Trees that have been subjected to drought will look like it so don't buy;

— If sap is oozing from the cut stump, then the tree you've selected is probably fresh.

Wood Serves As Economic Fuel Source

NEW YORK (MNS) — While many government leaders have made wood burning patriotic, chain saw manufacturers have made it easy.

Woodcutting is the only home improvement activity that can produce a better looking exterior and a warmer exterior.

As homeowners face the possibility of shortages of heating fuel, leaders at the federal and state level at the federal and state level are urging increased use of man's oldest and most enduring form of energy.

Higher petroleum costs have made wood burning an increasingly economical and convenient way to heat homes in many parts of the country.

Sales of wood stoves have skyrocketed in the recent years and devices are available to capture heat from ornamental fireplaces.

Turning to wood fuel is increasingly cost efficient for homeowners when it is combined with exterior clean-up. Valuable firewood can be found in dead trees or stumps, damaged or diseased limbs removed during fall pruning or even in discarded lumber.

Those who own, rent or can borrow a chain saw are welcome in many national and state forests, where rangers will direct them to dead wood that may be cut and removed under permit.

Weekend woodcutters should be aware that spark screens must be attached to chain saw mufflers in order for a saw to be operated on most public land.

Those who are on the move for firewood will appreciate the convenience and safety of a heavy duty carrying case.

Inexperienced woodcutters should shop for the best available combination of safety features as standard equipment.

Among the most important are a chain brake to help protect the operator if the saw should kick back, a shield to prevent coming in contact with the scorching muffler, a safety trigger to prevent accidental acceleration, a throttle latch for safe starting, and a chain catcher that will keep a broken chain from lashing back toward the operator.

In addition, design features to watch for include electronic ignition for easy starter and reliable performance, anti-vibration system for comfortable cutting, and a manual override for the automatic chain oiler, to assure positive bar and chain lubrication in extreme cutting conditions.

With the proper equipment and source of wood, using one's fireplace grate to help cut down on home heating bills can be as easy as...rolling on a log.

Adolescence Tagged Middle Class Luxury

By JUDITH SERRIN

NEW YORK (UPI) — Adolescence, that renowned transition zone between childhood and adulthood, may be a middle class luxury in America, a Columbia University researcher says.

"It may be that adolescence for some groups in our society is dead," said Francis A.J. Ianni, professor of education at Teachers College-Columbia University. "It may very well be that in some social classes, in some circumstances, kids move directly from childhood to adulthood."

Ianni, an anthropologist, is directing a three-year study of adolescence that seeks to determine when a child becomes an adult.

Describing his early findings in an interview, Ianni said that adolescence appears to be elastic, stretching out for some people but disappearing in a snap for others.

"Our social policy behaves as if everybody has this marvelous period of searching and seeking for their identity," Ianni said. That impression, he said, is not true.

"In lower-class families kids take on adult responsibilities, or irresponsibilities, at a much, much earlier age," he said. "As young as nine or 10 years of age they're functioning as adults in some areas."

Pregnancies and marriages among teen-agers are one example of this rush to adulthood, Ianni said.

So is crime; in an earlier national study of safe schools, Ianni found the seventh grade the most violent of all.

So is employment, he said.

For example, he pointed out that a 12-year-old who, because of his superior English, is the cashier in the family restaurant in New York's Chinatown is hardly a child.

Ianni said having a job appears the most important distinction — greater even than marriage or babies — in separating the men from the boys, the women from the girls.

He said the job market points out some inconsistencies of measuring adulthood by age.

What with graduate school and dropping-out among the middle and upper classes, "A Lot of people are not starting to work until they're 30 — and parents react to them" as children, he said.

On the other hand, he said, among economic classes where adult responsibilities are assumed early, a work-study program that pays young people to stay in school "is trying to re-create a childhood dependency" that has long been passed.

Ianni also found geographical and sex differences in measuring adolescence.

Adolescence passes faster in urban areas, he said, "because the pace of life is faster in the city."

Girls may no longer be speeding towards adulthood several steps ahead of boys. "We used to think that girls ended adolescence earlier than boys," Ianni said. "That's speculative ... Those differences are starting to disappear."

He said the definition of adolescence is important because, "Many social policies, including the ages when a person may be tried in an adult court, purchase alcohol, and marry without parental consent, concern this crucial phase of life."

At this stage, Ianni said, he is inclined to think such social policies should be based on demonstrated ability, not age, but:

"Look, I'm Italian. I started drinking when I was three years old ... There are some kids who could probably start driving at age 15 and there are others that shouldn't be driving until age 18.

KITCHEN DUTY

If you must be in the kitchen during your next party, take your guests with you. Be sure to have party snacks there for guests to nibble on, while you attend to last minute preparations.

"I think that rather than basing it (social policy) upon age, it really should be based upon a process in which you set certain standards that have to be met," such as driver education and voter education.

In the first phase of the study, Ianni and his 15 coworkers are focusing on young people in three areas — the lower East Side of New York, a New Jersey suburb and a rural town in upstate New York. Their work is being funded by a $187,200 grant from the Spenser Foundation of Chicago.

New Report Notes Progress Of Women, Work

By FRANCES LOWE
Family News Editor

The word is that although women are making progress toward equality in the job market, they have not yet arrived.

The Education Fund of the League of Women Voters has released a six-part report, "Women and Work," which makes note of the strides women have made during the last decade — and of the work that remains to be done.

Compiled and written with the attention to detail which characterizes League publications, the six-part series is available through the League of Women Voters of the United States, 1730 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

In the first of the series, a "status report" dated June 1979, the roles of women in the home, as volunteers and in paid employment are considered.

Acknowledging that home and volunteer work by women are important to the community, the report points out that the increasing participation of women in the labor force is "no longer a trend but an established fact."

Women now comprise about 41 percent of the nation's work force, and 90 percent of all American women work outside the home for pay sometime during their lives. While middle-aged women, returning to work after their children are grown or at least in school, accounted for most of the increase in working women a decade ago, the report states, the largest gains since 1965 have been made by women under 35, the majority of them married and with young children.

The report reiterates that American women work for the same reasons men do — to support themselves, their families, or other dependents. More women are now the sole wage earners for their families; more work to supplement their husbands' incomes during times of inflatin, and more are now sole heads of households.

In spite of these facts, the gap between the earnings of working women and those of men increased during the two decades between 1955 and 1975, the League report says. Women tend to be concentrated in lowpaying occupations, but even in the same occupations, men consistently earn more than women. The average woman with four years of colleged (a traditional means to a higher-paying job) were paid less than men with only a high school education. Even women who have worked full time each year since leaving school earn only about three-fourths as much as men.

Working women, especially when they have children, are in need of flexibility and accommodation in their work schedules, the report points out. Among the possibilities which are being explored with some success are permanent part-time work, job sharing, flexitime, and temporary full time.

Some recent legislation has affected women's employement and economic status, the report states, citing the Equal Pay Act of 1963, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act ot 1964, and the Equal Credit Opportunity Act. But enforcement of statutes has been weak, the League says.

Day Care

The Day-Care Dilemma," the second of the League series, looks at a problem which affects greater numbers of working women than ever before — what to do with the children while they work. Because many working mothers leave their children in informal, at-home arrangements (with relatives or neighbors) opponents of federal funding of day care argue that it is the care of choice by the mothers.

Such reasoning takes no notice of the fact that these informal arrangements are often the only day care the parents can afford; that children are frequently left at home in the care of siblings or with no care at all, while the mother works; that thousands of "latch-key" children, in essence care for themselves.

The cost of quality day care is often beyond the means of the working family. According to the National Child Care Consumer Study, the average cost of full-time care in a day-care center ranges from about $105 to $175 a month. Some $2 billion federal support of day care is provided through various programs including Title XX, day-care tax credit, Head-start, "income disregard," a child-feeding program, and the work incentive program.

The quality of day care is even more difficult to assess than its quantity, the report states. A survey in 1970 by the National Council of Jewish Women rated half of the proprietary centers "poor" in the care provided, while about half of the nonprofit centers were rated "fair."

According to an "appropriateness study" of the nation's 18,000 day-care centers by HEW in 1978, centers getting federal aid rated higher generally in the quality of care provided. The cost of providing care that meets federal standards is estimated to be between $185 and $250 a month, a price tag clearly exceeding the budget of many working parents.

The conclusion is inescapable, the report says, that "high quality developmental day care at prices working parents can afford requires substantial federal support."

Vocational Education

Discussing "vocational education" in the third report of the series, the League considered the fact that women tend to be concentrated in lower-paid, less-skilled, low-status occupations. Voc-ed, the League concludes, was once a "dead end" for women, concentrating their training in skills that had been considered "women's occupations." Title IX of the Education Amendment of 1972 prohibits sex discrimination in such programs. The education amendments of 1976 took an even stronger approach, recognizing the fact that overcoming sex discrimination and stereotyping in voc ed programs is one of the purposes of federally assisted state vocational programs, and putting teeth into the laws affecting grants to states for voc ed.

Social Security

Social security, the fourth of the LWV reports, considers one of the continuing sources of problems for women coping with the economics of a changing society. Changes in marriage, family and working patterns have resulted in some modifications of the system so that now, with a few minor and technical exceptions, it is administered to men and women equally.

Problems of equity arise from the availability of dependents' benefits for spouses who may or may not have paid Social Security taxes. It is possible, for instance, for a couple with two incomes to receive fewer benefits than a one-earner couple with the same average lifteime earnings. A number of proposals have been developed and are being studied to deal with some of the problems.

Basic questions concerning the system remain to be resolved: how can the dual objectives of adequacy and equity be integrated? Is the dependent status awarded many women still applicable? What sort of recognition should be given to the work women do in the home?

Federal Job Programs

The fifth report in the series on "Women and Work" questions federal job programs and how much they really help poor women. Women participate in a number of federally supported employment and training programs intended to improve skills and earnings, the report states, but no major programs are designed to deal with women's special employment needs.

"While existing programs have a potential for improving the job skills of poor women, too often they merely perpetuate existing conditions that keep women in low-paid occupations," the report says.

Calling the Work Incentive Program (WIN), enacted in 1967 and revised as WIN II in 1971 "the wrong solution to the wrong problem," the League comments. "The very welfare recipients selected for services are the ones most likely to find jobs on their own...white men in their prime working years with high-school education receive a disproportionate share of WIN services and have higher placement rates."

The report continues, "the WIN experience indicates that employment programs stressing immediate job placement instead of longer-term training and supportive services will have little long-range impact on the earnings of welfare recipients."

Too often, the League states, federal employment and training programs succomb to the tyranny of numbers. Instead of fulfilling their real mission — improving job skills of the unemployed and disadvantaged — they concentrate on providing minimal services to the largest number of participants. In an effort to boost placement rates, services go first to the most employable — the very people who would probably find jobs on their own.

"Ideally," the League report concludes, "all employment and training programs should be tailored to the needs of individual participants, local labor market opportunities, and employer needs."

"Recognition of women's employment needs at all levels of program administration and a refocusing of training efforts — along with strict enforcement of sex discrimination laws — could improve women's employment opportunities significantly."

Successful Approaches

The other side of the efforts to improve the work picture for women is the final report in the series, "Successful Approaches to Improving Women's Employment."

The League cites as routes to progress in this area successful court action (especially in the construction industry); Wider Opportunities for Women (WOW), a Washington-based women's employment organization helping women enter non-traditional occupations; progress toward compensating women for skills they already have; building "career ladders" into lower-level positions; identifying the job-relevant skills acquired by women in their roles as homemakers, parents and volunteers; a project operated by the New York-based Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation (MDRC) which gives participants employment experience in a "supported work" environment.

"By proving that women can hang a telephone line and set the gap on a spark plug," some of the experimental models "play a key role in destroying some of the stereotypes surrounding women and work," the report says. "Such examples help undermine traditional prejudices about what women can do."

If the success of such pilot programs leads to their widespread use in the employment and training policies of government and industry alike, the "long process of opening up the world of paid employment to women will be significantly shortened," the League report concludes.

WOOL MUFFLER — An English muffler is doubled around the neck leaving one end longer than the other. Then the ends are looped one over the other, and the longer end is pulled only part way through, creating a pouf.

City Teachers Share Knowledge

The average elementary-school teacher, during a thirty-year career, will live with, work with, and love more than 1,000 children, according to Lubbock Educational Para Professional Association.

Teachers see similar types pop up in their classroom year after year...the shy ones...the show-offs...the bookworms...the sullen ones...the tomboys...the girl who wears too much lipstick too early. They observe children at their best and at their worst.

Even before they start their teaching careers, they receive extensive training in child psychology. They learn to recognize the danger signals of potential delinquency...they learn that a reading difficulty may be the result of serious emotional problems...they learn how to recognize gifted children hiding behind a smoke-screen of apathy...they learn what characteristics children reveal at different age levels.

Below, teachers share some of their knowledge, with the hope that it will give new understanding of children as a growing, changing personality.

FOR PARENTS OF
2 TO 5 YEAR-OLDS

1. Pre-schoolers who play with other children adjust more quickly to school life.

If your children have few chances to play with others, try to make such opportunities. Invite other children to your home, take them to parks and playgrounds.

2. Pre-schoolers who are read to at home are more likely to be ready for learning to read.

Surround your children with books and read to them often. Introduce them to your local library at an early age.

3. Pre-schoolers who are accustomed to being away from home and mother find it easier to adjust to school life.

Leave them with friends or relatives occasionally — for several hours, a whole day or overnight. Leaving home to go to school will come as a pleasant experience rather than a psychological shock.

4. Pre-schoolers who do things for themselves at home find it easier to get along at school.

Encourage your children to wash and dress themselves, turn lights on and off, put away their toys. The more independent they are, the more readily they will adjust to being on their own in school.

5. Pre-schoolers should have experience in respecting the property and rights of others.

Encourage your children to take turns and to get permission when using the belongings of others. They will adjust more easily to the group life of school, if you help them become more considerate of others.

FOR PARENTS OF
6 TO 10 YEAR-OLDS

1. Children from 6-10 are full of curiosity and eagerness to learn.

You can take advantage of this by helping your children to develop hobbies, to read widely, and to make simple science experiments.

2. One of a student's biggest worries is taking tests; their fears may reflect the attitudes of the adults in their families.

You can help your children take tests successfully by being calm and relaxed about them yourself. Don't tell yarns about how tests always scared you.

3. It is possible to raise your children's mental alertness during the early elementary school years.

Expose your children to a rich variety of family activities...take them on trips, to children's plays. Expose them to good art and music...surround them with many books and magazines.

4. Children develop at different rates of speed; each has their own rate of growth and maturity.

Do not compare your children's behavior or school work with that of their classmates or their brothers and sisters. They may be a slow developers. Try to discover how to help and encourage them.

5. At these ages, children are still interested in the world of fantasy.

Encourage creative activities of all kinds — art, dancing, music and playacting. They'll throw themselves wholeheartedly into such projects, and may develop long-lasting interests.

FOR PARENTS OF
11 TO 14 YEAR-OLDS

1. Children differ greatly in size and maturity during their early teens. Some are taller, some shorter than the average.

Do not expect your children to be the same as all the others, or exactly the height you were at their age. They will be more successful in all their activities if you accept them as they are.

2. In junior high school, children look strongly to their own age-group for approval.

Don't worry if your children take up odd clothing fads because they want to "look like everyone else." They will outgrow this urge for conformity.

3. Students in junior high school want to know the WHY of what they are learning.

Encourage family discussions on a variety of topics, and make a point of tracking down the facts behind general statements. Your children will enjoy airing their opinions, and they will be learning to think, and to check the facts.

4. Girls often are one or two years more advanced physically and socially than boys during childhood and early youth.

Do not be too concerned if your daughter says she likes "older boys," perhaps the boys in her class are shorter than she is and "act so juvenile."

5. Young adolescents want to argue, talk, make themselves heard.

Don't worry if your children can't restrain their urge to speak up loud and clear. Remember — they have just discovered that they have ideas and opinions. Help them to practice courtesy and to listen to others.

FOR PARENTS OF
15 TO 17 YEAR-OLDS

1. Teenagers often worry about their life plans and occupations, and discuss these more easily with teachers and friends than with parents.

Visit your teenagers teachers and counselors, and find out how you can help them make important decisions. Don't feel left out and resentful because they have turned to outsiders for advice and counsel. Be thakful for their help.

2. When teenagers own cars, their grades are likely to suffer.

Let your teenagers drive the family car, when qualified by age and training, but discourage them from having a car of their own until they complete high school. Straight-A students rarely own cars, many failing students do.

3. Teenagers like to help make their own rules of conduct.

Let your teenagers help make the family regulations about household chores, dating, etc., for they are more likely to observe the rules they helped to make.

4. It is an age of reading...two out of three teen-agers are currently reading a book not related to school work.

Keep your teenagers well provided with a variety of interesting books, magazines and newspapers. Good reading habits they establish may last throughout their life-time.

5. They're half adult, half child, and veer from one to the other.

Try not to point out this fact to your teenagers. Being told to "act your age" sometimes, and "you're too young for that" at other times, may compound their confusion.

LIFT WINTER CHILL — The reality of winter winds dictates that layers of clothing do the best job of maintaining body heat. The top layer is what the world sees, and topcoats have never looked so good. Three outstanding examples are sketched here. Left, a single breasted classic from premier coat maker, Malcolm Kenneth. Center, putting-on-the ritz is literally translated by designer Bill Blass. This double breasted coat is 46 inches in length with a long roll on this genuine beaver collar. Right, a double breasted British warm in fine saxony, all wool herringbone. The pocket and collar are welted.

SHINING HAIR

To make dull, lifeless hair come alive again try this at-home method: after shampooing, thoroughly rinse your hair. Now mix one teaspoon of baking soda to five ounces of water, stir well, apply to hair, comb through, and rinse out. This will strip hair of any soapy residue that may be left and leave it fresh and shining.

Calling All Homemakers

By SYD MOORE

What is good decorating, anyway? Can it be defined or even described — perhaps not with any universal, scientific precision. But today's designers generally agree that a well decorated home has three primary elements. First of all, it must be functional. The environment must meet the lifestyle and living needs of the people who use it. Second, it must have eye appeal. The home that is without beauty can never be a place of happiness and contentment. The third element is individuality. That quality which makes the home uniquely yours.

Of these three, the most difficult to create can be the third — individuality. That's why you should look at decorating as a form of self-expression. Don't believe that there are a set of ironclad rules that apply to good interior design. The fundamental question is, does the home make you happy? When you start out to decorate a home or apartment, the first consideration must be you!

What turns you on? Is it bold colors? Contemporary furniture and an action atmosphere? Or are you the romantic type that craves serenity, muted tones and the old warmth of antiques? Whatever your decorating personality, extrovert, romantic, achiever or trendsetter — the first step toward good interior design should be self-identification. Psychologists tell us that room environment has much to do with a person's happiness and well being.

DELIGHT HOLIDAY GUESTS

Buffet Fits Hectic Schedule

NEW YORK (Special) — Entertaining family and friends is one of the delights of the holidays. But if you're among the more than 53 percent of women working today, it may be more than you care to even think about. Besides, a full-course dinner for a crowd can be expensive.

Instead, why not invite friends to a festive dessert buffet. Offer coffee and, if you wish, liqueurs plus a selection of delectable temptations. Each of the four recipes that follow can be made a day or more ahead of time. It requires just a few minutes on party night to add the finishing touches.

Start with cocoa, pure chocolate in highly concentrated form. You don't have to melt cocoa before using it, which simplifies and shortens kitchen duty — and means one less pan to wash. Another plus, six ounces of cocoa goes as far as eight of baking chocolate, so it's more economical, too.

For fudgy Brandied Cocoa-Nut Squares, combine ingredients in a sauce pot, press into a pan and chill till set. No baking required. Mix the Brandy-Cocoa Glaze in a bowl and spoon over squares. Cut squares shortly before serving.

To save time, use a frozen pastry shell or prepared graham cracker crust for Fluffy Cocoa Cream Pie. Blend the creamy cocoa filling in advance. Fill pie shell and garnish with whipped topping and cherries at the last minute.

Double-Decker Espresso Mousse combines chocolate and coffee in a smooth blend of complementary flavors. It freezes and separates into two distinct layers, so show it off in your prettiest glass bowl before serving. Again, prepare everything but the whipped cream "crown" the night before.

FLUFFY COCOA-CREAM PIE

9-inch baked pie shell or crumb crust (use frozen pastry shell or prepared graham cracker crust, if desired)
2 envelopes unflavored gelatine
½ cup cold water
1 cup boiling water
¼ cup cocoa
1 pt. cherry vanilla ice cream
2 cups (8 oz. container) frozen whipped topping, partially thawed
Garnish: Whipped topping, red and green glace cherries

Prepare pie shell; cool. Sprinkle gelatine onto cold water in blender container; let stand until softened. Add boiling water; blend 30 seconds. Add cocoa and ice cream in scoops; blend until smooth. Pour into large mixing bowl; fold in whipped topping. Quickly pour into pie shell. Spoon whipped topping around edge; decorate with cherries.

BRANDIED COCOA-NUT SQUARES

(About 32 squares)
½ cup butter or margarine
½ cup sugar
¼ cup cocoa
1 tsp. brandy extract
1 egg
1¾ cups vanilla wafer crumbs
1 cup finely chopped walnuts
¾ cup flaked coconut
Brandy-Cocoa Glaze

Melt butter in saucepan; add sugar, cocoa, brandy extract and egg. Cook, stirring constantly until slightly thickened. Remove from heat; stir in crumbs, walnuts and coconut. Press firmly into two ungreased 8-inch square pans. Refrigerate, uncovered, until firm. Drizzle — or spread — Brandy-Cocoa Glaze over surface. Chill until set; cut into squares.

Brandy-Cocoa Glaze: Combine 1 cup confectioners' sugar, 3 tablespoons cocoa, 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, ½ teaspoon brandy extract and 2 tablespoons boiling water in a medium-size bowl; stir until well-blended.

DOUBLE DECKER ESPRESSO MOUSSE

(10-12 servings)
1/3 cup cocoa
1¼ cups sugar
2 envelopes unflavored gelatine
2 cups cold espresso
2 eggs, separated
1 tsp. vanilla extract
1 pkg. (8 oz.) cream cheese, softened
1 cup heavy cream
Garnish: Whipped cream, slivered orange peel
(Chocolate curls, optional)

Combine cocoa, 1 cup sugar, gelatine and espresso in saucepan. Beat egg yolks lightly; add to cocoa mixture. Cook, stirring, over medium heat until gelatine is dissolved and mixture is slightly thickened. Remove from heat; add vanilla. Cool to room temperature. Whip cream cheese in large mixer bowl; add gelatine mixture blending well. Beat egg whites until foamy. Add ¼ cup sugar, a tablespoon at a time; continue beating until soft peaks form. Beat heavy cream; fold egg whites and cream into gelatine mixture. Pour into a large 1½ quart serving bowl. Cover; chill several hours or overnight. To serve, spoon mounds of whipped cream around edge of mousse. Sprinkle with orange slivers and, if desired, chocolate curls.

Espresso for this recipe was made by combining 2 tablespoons instant espresso coffee and 2 cups cold water.

COCOA-RUM OLD FASHIONEDS

½ cup cocoa
½ cup sugar
1 tsp. cinnamon
2 cups heavy cream
1 tsp. rum or rum extract
12 cinnamon sugar cookies, crushed (about 1 cup)
Garnish: Additional coconut
Red food color

Combine cocoa, sugar and cinnamon in large mixer bowl. Add heavy cream and rum extract; beat until stiff. Fold in cookie crumbs and coconut. Spoon into old-fashioned glasses; cover and freeze until hard. Before serving, mix coconut with a few drops red food coloring; stir to completely coat coconut. Sprinkle on top of each serving.

Consultant Provides Financial Advice

LOUISVILLE, KY. (Special) — A man is taught from childhood that he will be a provider. He is weaned on the psychology of money, a psychology which is male-produced and to this day, male-dominated.

A woman, on the other hand, hears little about the psychology of money as a child. What she hears, if anything, is how to be a bargain shopper.

This is the reason, believes financial consultant and Kentucky Fried Chicken Time Out Institute member Susan Hirshfield, that women on their own often have a difficult time coping with financial matters. Mrs. Hirshfield states, "It is crucial for all women to understand just how money matters," (which is also the name of her financial consulting business for women in Larchmont, N.Y.)

Throughout 1979, Mrs. Hirshfield brings her expertise as a woman's financial consultant to the Time Out Institute program. Founded in 1977, the Institute was established to examine the changing role of today's American Women and to contribute to the information available about their problems, attitudes, needs and concerns. This year's focus on single parenting reflects the fact that 90 percent of all single parents are women. To promote better understanding of this group, KFC is underwriting national research about single parents and will be announcing the research results this fall.

The courts want to ensure that both husband and wife separate with an equitable division of income shares. But what happens then? "The husband generally has investments and raises in his salary over the years, while the woman is still operating on a fixed income."

"Knowing how to be a bargain shopper is not enough at this time," asserts Mrs. Hirshfield. "In fact, some women confuse managing their family's daily finances with control over their economic life. Lawyers don't have the time to sit down with those women and go through their finances. She is besieged by creditors, and her attorney becomes totally frustrated with her inability to fill out forms."

Mrs. Hirshfield does not actually manage her clients' money in most cases. "We take the time to sit down with these women, go through their records, and give them a picture of the total financial situation." Short and long-term budgeting are the priorities as well as establishing credit and learning how to keep it.

Although for each person the decisions are different, "Money Matters" counseling usually begins with an analysis of the client's particulars — assets, debits, shopping habits, necessities, housing and basic knowledge of finance.

Long-term plans, according to Mrs. Hirshfield, go hand-in-hand with career planning. Especially in the case of women becoming single parents, she advises: "Know what you are worth. Many cities now have women's centers which offer counseling on re-entering the job market. The skills of a homemaker have already provided you with organizational abilities, experience in consumer affairs, and in some cases, a network of friends, perhaps your husband's friends, who are already in the business world and may provide some interesting leads for employment."

Almost all women operate on decreased funds after being widowed, divorced or separated. They may suffer from a loss of status in the community. They may be fearful of being perceived as "dumb" because of their lack of financial finesse.

To these women, and all women, Mrs. Hirshfield says, "It's never too late to start learing about finance," and offers the following tips to start.

1. Start reading financial and business pages in newspapers, magazines...anything you can get your hands on. This way, if nothing else, you begin to familiarize yourself with "money jargon."

2. Establish credit in your name. Under new laws a woman may now establish joint credit with her husband. If she hasn't already done this before a divorce, the best steps to credit are: 1) secure a charge account through a local store or pharmacy; b) move on and obtain a gasoline company card; and c) finally, apply for a major bank credit card. The process will take about 1½ years.

3. Think ahead. Starting right now. Career-wise and financially, you must be prepared for a day when you may be alone, and the sole support of your family.

4. Set up appointments with your insurance agent(s) and, if you have one, your banker. Ask them to explain policies and procedures.

5. Check your local libraries and bookstores for the books which have been released in the past few years for women on finance.

6. If you are going through a divorce, allow yourself, if possible, plenty of time to make the correct decisions (at least six months). Try not to make financial decisions based solely on emotions. And seek professional help to sort out your lifestyle, career and housing options.

7. If you are a single parent, be open with your children about the money situation. Pull the family together to work out finances. The sooner they learn, the more prepared they will be to handle their own finances.

Susan Hirshfield's goal, she declares, is to be put out of business by getting women to the point where they are competent enough to handle their own finances.

Until that day, however, Mrs. Hirshfield contends that "there is a great unmet need for full-scale financial services tailored for women."

Regardless, says Mrs. Hirshfield, women must starting thinking about money as men do — "It is not a necessary evil; it is your key to power and freedom."

LARGE WOMEN

Larger women need not feel left out of today's currant fashion trends. A fuller-figured woman looks great in today's straight-leg pants, tailored skirts and soft, unconstructed blouses. She should avoid the layered look or too many accessories, but otherwise she can be right in fashion.

By Jessie Lee Sharpley

Looking your best really pays, especially to the women who work! In recent research studies, potential employers were asked to estimate salaries for women who had received professional grooming make-overs. They were shown "before" and "after" photographs together with entry level resumes. The results show an astounding eight to 20% higher salary for the "after" photos with comments like "self-confident," "sharp-looking," "looks efficient," all on a basis of first impressions.

This is important information to the many women who enter the work force every year. First impressions are never more important than at a job interview.

A complete make-over can be valuable to you whether your purpose is for a job interview or just because you feel that now is the time for a new you.

These services are available at Jessie Lee's, either by students working out a personal program designed for you by one of our instructors, or by one of our professional salon stylists.

We know beauty in hair color, perms, make-up, skin care, nails, and the proper hair cut will give you renewed confidence in your appearance and will effect your attitude and enthusiasm about nearly everything in your life.

We would like to help you prove that it pays to Be Beautiful. Call Jessie Lee's today at 792-6311. 12-2

Cranberry Christmas House Serves As Focal Point For Festivities

NEW YORK (Special) — Looking for a challenge. Here it is: a Cranberry Christmas House or a Cranberry Candy Cane Cake that could well be the focal point for all your holiday festivities. Both cakes are time consuming but not difficult. To make the going easier, get the entire family to pitch in and help. The rewards are the fun of creating a holiday spectacular and last but not least a super cake that's really delicious to eat.

CRANBERRY CHRISTMAS HOUSE

Several days ahead do the following:

1. Purchase one 3/8-inch-wide, 36-inch long dowel from a housewares store or lumberyard.

2. Cut one piece of corrugated cardboard 7x10 inches; set aside.

3. Cut three pieces of corrugated cardboard, 14x13 inches each. Secure pieces with cellophane tape. Cover with white waxed freezer paper or aluminum foil to make a triple layer serving board.

Day ahead:

4. Prepare ¼ pound Frosted Cranberries (recipe follows); set aside.

On day of baking:

5. Prepare two recipes, one at a time, of Cranberry Cake (recipe follows). Cool at least one hour.

6. Prepare four recipes of Butter-Cranberry Frosting (recipe follows).

Assembling:

7. Place first cake layer on center of serving board. Frost on the surface with just enough frosting to secure second layer. Repeat with third and fourth layer.

8. Stick uncut dowel into corner of cake about 1½-inches in from each edge. Pull dowel out. Frosting mark on dowel indicated how high each dowel should be. Cut four dowels with kitchen shears or hacksaw. Insert dowels at corners.

9. Place the 7x10-inch cardboard on top of fourth cake layer. Add fifth layer, frost. Repeat with sixth layer.

10. Cut seventh layer into two pieces — one 5½x11 inches; one 2½x11-inches. Add larger layer; frost. Add last piece.

11. Using a bread knife, or one with a serrated edge, carefully shave away cake to make a slanted roof. Refrigerate an hour or two so it will be firm to frost all over.

12. With a clean damp spatula, frost all sides and top of cake very carefully. Dip spatula in warm water frequently to keep it free from frosting crystals.

Decorating:

13. When cake is completely frosted follow the design in the photograph for placing the cranberries.

14. Tint a little frosting with more red food coloring. Prepare a "make-do" decorating cone from an envelope. Reinforce the seams of the envelope with cellophane tape. Cut envelope in half crosswise to make two cones. Cut a tiny hole in the corner. Fill with frosting. If using a decorating or pastry bag, place number 2 or 3 metal tip in bag. Outline windows, doors and other details with frosting. To mark off doors and windows use the bottom of a small spice can to make a slight impression. Press frosted cranberries in place.

15. To make cranberry bushes, squirt a circle of frosting on serving board. Cover with a layer of sugared cranberries, more frosting and cranberries until of desired height. Place chimney on rooftop the same way.

16. To make marzipan figures buy marzipan in a roll at gourmet stores or supermarket. Color portions of marzipan with food coloring. Mold any creatures you'd like to have around the house.

CANDY CANE CAKE

Several days ahead do the following:

1. Cut three pieces of corrugated cardboard 22x10-inches. Secure pieces together with cellophane tape. Cover with white waxed freezer paper or foil to make a serving board.

Day ahead:

2. Prepare ¼ pound Frosted Cranberries; set aside.

On day of baking:

3. Prepare one recipe of Cranberry Cake. Bake one half of mixture in a 9-inch round layer cake pan, the other half in an 8-or 9-inch square cake pan. Cool for at least one hour.

4. Prepare one recipe of Butter-Cranberry Frosting.

Assembling:

5. Cut the round cake following the illustration. Cut the square cake into two 3½-inch-wide strips. Cut away from edges. Assemble on serving board or large platter following illustration. Frost entire cake. Wipe away any excess frosting from bottom edge of cake.

Decorating:

6. With a decorating cone and number 10 tip pipe frosting around edge next to the serving board.

7. Alternate sugar-frosted and plain cranberries in a striped design as shown.

CRANBERRY CAKE

2 pkgs. (18½-oz. each) yellow cake mix
1 jar (14 oz.) cranberry-orange relish, well drained
Grease and flour 8x11 or 7x11-inch baking pans, set aside

Prepare cake mix according to package directions, folding one-half of the cranberry-orange relish into cake batter. Measure 2½ cups of batter into each pan.

Bake in a preheated 350 degree oven 25-30 minutes or until cakes are golden brown. Remove to racks; cool 10 minutes. Remove from pans. Cool at least one hour.

Wash and dry pans; grease and flour three. Prepare second recipe of cake folding in remaining relish. (Bake extra batter in 2½-inch muffin pans to make 9 cupcakes). Bake and cool as directed.

BUTTER-CRANBERRY FROSTING

6 tbsps. butter or margarine, softened
6 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
½ tsp. salt
Scant ¼ cup cranberry juice cocktail
1½ tsps. vanilla

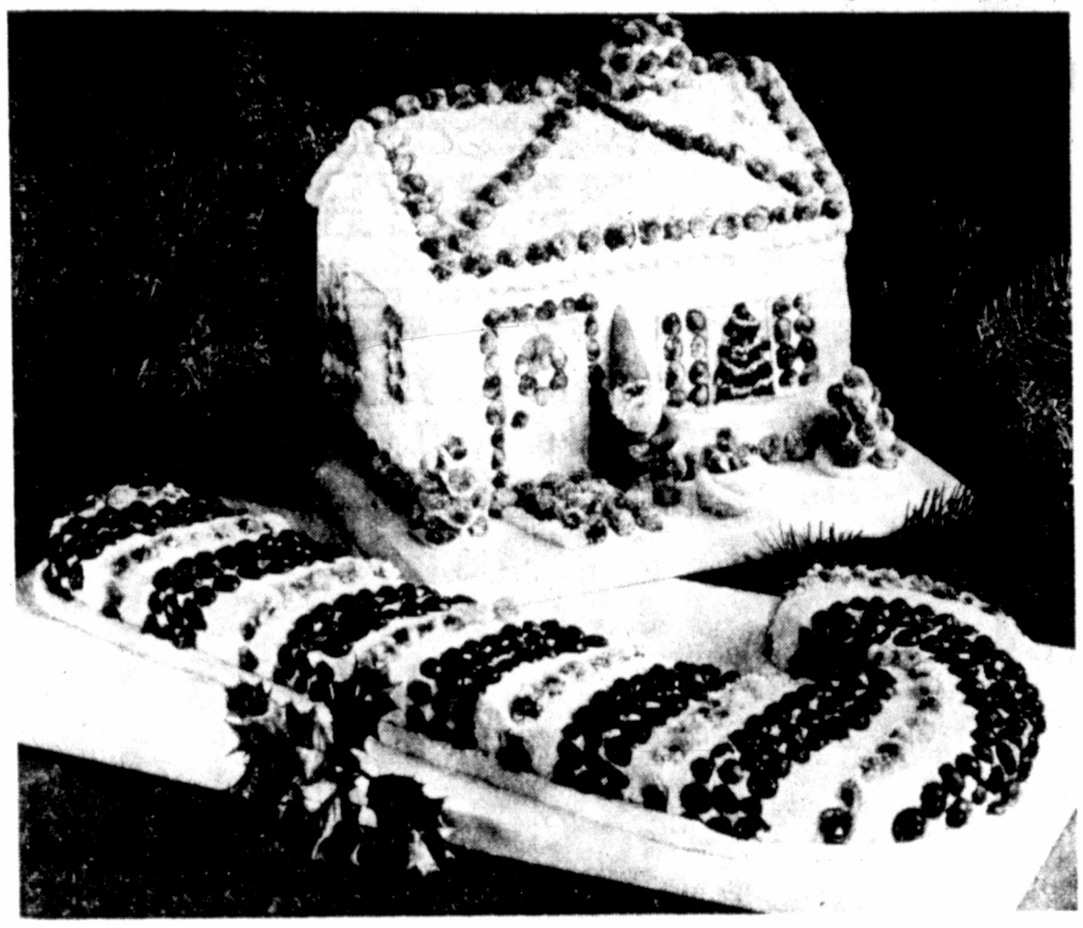
Cream butter. Slowly add sugar and salt. Continue beating until well-blended. Add cranberry juice cocktail a tablespoon at a time, then add a teaspoon at a time until frosting is of spreading consistency. Stir in vanilla. Cover with a damp towel; keep at room temperature.

FROSTED CRANBERRIES

1. Lightly beat one egg white until frothy. Dip whole cranberries a few at a time, into egg white. Spoon berries into a strainer; let egg white drip back into the bowl.

2. Place berries in a large rectangular cake pan. Sprinkle with granulated sugar. Shake pan from side to side until each cranberry is coated with sugar. Repeat until all cranberries are frosted.

3. Let stand three hours to allow sugar to set, shaking pan from time to time. Do not refrigerate.



CRANBERRY CHRISTMAS HOUSE AND CANE

Traditional Show Features Favorite Toys

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (Special) — Many favorite toys from the Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Center's large collection will be featured in the museum's annual Christmas show, titled, "The Toys and Joys of Christmas," opening Dec. 14.

Among the array of playthings included in the exhibit will be dolls and doll houses, a whole train-load of wheeled iron and tin toys made by American manufacturers before 1900, a village of German wooden toys, rocking horses, doll buggies and Noah's ark.

Dominating the museum lobby will be a traditional tree trimmed with handmade ornaments of natural materials, many of which have been contributed in recent years by Williamsburg residents. Easy-to-follow directions for making many of these ornaments are featured in a book, "Christmas Decorations from Williamsburg's Folk Art Collection."

Award-winning doll houses and their furnishings made in competition among employees of Colonial Williamsburg will be mounted on the lobby walls along with two cases of small toys from the collection.

Gallery One will feature that perennial favorite of Christmas visitors, the museum's own dollhouse. Accompanying it will be a large selelction of antique dolls including a remarkable group of English peddler dolls dating from about 1850.

Much of Gallery Two will be taken up by a colorful over-sized train, built and painted by Colonial Williamsburg artisans, that was modeled after a toy in the collection. The coach windows will display a variety of American iron and tin toys, some produced by unidentified makers and others made by Bergmann, Fallows, Lehman and Ives. Completing this exhibit will be views of Victorian towns and a facsimile of an 1880 railroad station where weary visitors might want to take a rest on the benches while the youngsters explore the train's engine.

Across the lobby, the Gallery Three there will be created a scaled-up version of a 19th-century wooden toy Bavarian village that is in the musuem's collection. Cases concealed in the brightly-decorated buildings will contain hundreds of different kinds of German playthings and the village scene will be further enlivened by the presence of several circus animals along with other whimsical carvings.

Gallery Four will be devoted to a selection of favorite large toys such as rocking horses, doll carriages and a tricycle, plus some children's furniture similar to the pieces pictured in the portraits of youngsters and in 19th-century illustrations mounted on the surrounding walls. As a souvenir gift, visitors will receive instructions on how to assemble an ornament for their own Christmas tree.

The exhibit will continue through Jan. 1 between 10 a.m. and 9 p.m.

Whipped Cream Adds Touch Of Luxury

SAN ANTONIO (Special) — Whipped cream is the ingredient that can magically transform rather ordinary dinner foods into special holiday dishes. It is one of the darlings of the dairy products in that it adds a special creamy taste and rich texture to any menu.

A dollop of it, sprinkled with salt, lifts a cream soup out of the ordinary. Whipped cream adds a touch of luxury to chicken breasts supreme, elegant shrimp casserole, jello salads, cake frostings, fillings for cream puffs or even simple salad dressings or dips.

To whip cream, use a chilled, glass or metal bowl and chilled beaters for best results. Do not freeze whipped cream since it may be difficult to whip to the desired volume and appearance. However, freezing sweetened, already whipped cream in individual portions can be a holiday time saver. The dollops of cream will keep their appearance and flavor, and will thaw in just a few minutes.

Whipped cream is a luxury item to weight-watchers as well as 'taste-watchers.' It is about half milkfat in content, making it about five times as rich in calories as milk. But the heavenly taste makes the calories well worth while.

Asparagus in Lemon Cream is a recipe you will want to serve to your favorite dinner guests. The ingredients are few and the preparation easy.

ASPARAGUS IN LEMON CREAM
1 lb. fresh asparagus or 1 pkg. (10 oz.) frozen asparagus spears
2 tbsps. butter
½ cup whipping cream
1 egg yolk, slightly beaten
⅛ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. nutmeg
Dash pepper
1 tsp. grated lemon peel
2 tbsps. grated Parmesan cheese

Cook or steam asparagus just until tender. Melt butter in heavy skillet. Stir in cream, egg yolk, salt, nutmeg and pepper. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens slightly. Remove from heat. Add lemon peel. Pour over hot, cooked, well-drained asparagus. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Serves 3.

TREASURED CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS

Wreaths Make Treasured Gifts

By "Mr. Do-It-Yourself"
Steve Ellingson

Treasured Christmas decorations have always been handmade. If you're uncrafty enough to have failed paper chains, here's your chance to shine and prove how 'creative' you are.

These 12" kings present their gifts garbed in corduroy that's been dipped in wallpaper paste and draped around styrofoam cones. The paste dries clear and the folds take on a sculptured look. The pattern also includes a burlap angel.

Complete your holiday house with a collection of unusual wreaths. Red and green ponpom fringe covers a 12" styrofoam ring, while another wreath is of burlap, dipped and twisted around a wire coathanger. A fruit-and-nut ring is easy to make and will keep forever. Full-size traceable patterns, step-by-step instructions and lots of photos make these projects easy.

To obtain THREE KINGS & ANGEL pattern No. 567, send $2.75. For WREATHS instruction sheet No. 568, send $2.75. Both prices include first class postage & handling. Send check or money order to Steve Ellingson, c/o: Avalanche-Journal Pattern Dept., P.O. Box 2383, Van Nuys, California 91409.

ALL NEW! The 1979-80 edition of PATTERNS FOR BETTER LIVING! 112 pages containing over 600 ideas for woodworking & handicraft projects. $1.75 (includes postage).

Foreign Youth Need 'Survival Language'

By CHARLES GOODMAN
Memphis Press-Scimitar

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The children were having a picnic under some trees, and Beth Warren looked about and said, "They are a little afraid."

She has been teaching survival language — simple words to help strangers survive in a new country — to 59 Vietnamese and Laotian youngsters who until a few months ago knew nothing about their new homeland except its name.

The children arrived in Memphis in January. Mrs. Warren has been teaching them the rudiments of English so they can attend public school.

Survival language, said Mrs. Warren, begins with the child learning to smile and tell an American, "I'm fine, thank you."

"They say it, but they know they're not fine," she said. "They know they are strangers."

The children are taught to smile and say "I am happy to meet you."

One of her students is a little girl whose mother and brother pulled her across a river in Vietnam. They crossed at night so soldiers with machine guns wouldn't see them, she said.

The father of one little boy was a fisherman who decided to leave after soldiers demanded money. They fled with a hundred other refugees in a boat that was so crowded no one could sit down.

"The first words a refugee uses in English are apt to be words about food," Mrs. Warren said. "They know hunger."

A boy sitting near her looked up.

"We hungry all time," he said of the bad times in Vietnam. "Just a little rice. I could not find a chicken. Nothing. Everybody hungry."

"The children have an amazing ability to survive," Mrs. Warren said.

"They walked down to the coast and stepped on a small boat and pushed off into an unknown sea. They left behind everything they were familiar with ... They began a journey without knowing where it would end.

"Now they are here, gathered around us in a strange land. They are surviving," she said.

Buying Suggestions Benefit Shoppers

By BETTY YARMON

NEW YORK (WNS) — It should be well worth your while this year to do your Christmas shopping earlier than ever. Retailers already are pushing promotions and price discounts early in the holiday buying period.

The reason? Economists say retailers, with all the talk about recession and high interest rates, are uneasy about being stuck with large inventories, and are therefore clearing those inventories this far ahead of time.

Whatever the reason, Christmas buying tip No. 1 this year seems to be: Go in the store now and seek out bargains that will serve your budget in good stead later on in the year.

Here are some other buying tips for the holiday season:

— Use the catalogues that are flooding your mailbox these mornings as references. That is, study them for ideas as well as for price and quality information, thus letting you make decisions at your leisure before you actually do any buying.

— If you feel confident about what you want, try to do as much shopping as you can by telephone, thus avoiding the exasperation ultimately of having to wait interminably at the counters.

— If you plan to do any ordering by mail, get mail orders early so you have all the time you need. No one need remind you about the problems these days with the mails and you can be certain things will be worse in the rush period ahead.

— Give care to your giving. Remember that an expensive gift chosen thoughtlessly will not be as appreciated as will the gift, even when inexpensive, that shows you have given care in its selection. A gift should be as personal as possible and the recipient will know and appreciate it when the giver has put something of himself or herself into the choice. Sometimes this means learning the hobbies, lifestyle and special interests of others, particularly of people you don't see very often.

— Seek out unusual places to shop for special gifts — the sales counter at the local museum, a charity bazaar, an antiques show and the like — for here you will find imaginative items that will intrigue the recipient.

— While doing your own shopping, keep in mind that you probably will have need of miscellaneous gifts or last-minute giving — you may be called upon to contribute to a grab-bag lunch, for example — so it may be useful to pick up such small items as you go along.

— Since luxury items have gone up in price probably more than the average, stick to practical items wherever you can. You probably will find that those to whom you give gifts will appreciate such a common-sense approach.

— One of the reasons to shop early is to avoid shortages at the end, along with the last-minute crush. It is by no means unlikely, given the current caution of many retailers, that some items will be impossible to locate in time for Christmas if you wait too long.

— If clothing is on your mind, make sure you have checked correct sizes and, if possible, preferred color and style. That way you will have a chance of avoiding unnecessary trouble that too often makes holiday-giving such a headache.

— Of course, deal only with reputable merchants who assure you they will handle any adjustments that may be called for after the holidays. Street vendors, who seem to be out in droves in so many U.S. cities this season, are the last people to care about customer satisfaction.

— Try to keep within your holiday shopping budget, difficult as that will be this inflation-ridden year. Impulse buying and overspending are always at their height during the holiday season, particularly with easy credit pushed on you, and it is easy to lose track of what you are actually spending until it is too late.

Judy Nelson Receives Top Employee Honor

Judy Nelson was recently named Plains Machinery Co.'s Employee of the Year at an annual employee recognition program.

Mrs. Nelson was presented a $200 U.S. Savings Bond by Morris E. Bailey, president and chief executive officer of Plains' Amarillo Headquarters, and Charles Tibbit, general manager of the Lubbock branch.

The recognition dinner was held at the Gridiron restaurant, and was attended by all of the firm's Lubbock personnel.

Mrs. Nelson is now eligible for consideration as the Plains statewide Employee of the Year to be honored with a $500 U.S. Savings Bond and a luxury Texas-style weekend for two.

The award is bestowed through an election by fellow employees, followed by a comprehensive evaluation in which attitude, cooperation, dependability and job performance are important considerations.

Birth Control Plan Offered

NEW YORK (UPI) — A major new program to promote birth control through social marketing of contraceptives will be set up in Mexico by Population Services International.

The project by the New York-based non-profit organization is funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development.

PSI executive director Robert L. Ciszewski says the first two years of the new program, which began in November, will cost $3.5 million.

It is designed to help millions of poor families for whom contraception has been unavailable or too expensive. The program is expected to provide reliable birth control to at least 500,000 families.

The principle of social marketing of contraceptives has been used successfully by PSI In Bangladesh and other countries. It employs business methods and commercial distribution channels to promote and deliver products for public benefit instead of financial gain.

The USAID grant for the Mexican program will make possible the sale of contraceptives — condoms, pills, and other products — at prices even the poor can afford.

Fiber Glass Usage Grows In Industry

TOLEDO, Ohio (UPI) — The demand for new fuel-efficient transportation and corrosion-resistant industrial equipment has caused fiber glass composites to replace metals in many products.

To meet the demand, Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. is building the world's largest fiber glass reinforcement plant in Amarillo, Texas.

The company plans to start up the more than $100 million facility early next year. The plant will be capable of producing 200 million pounds of reinforcements annually.

'Candy Man' Already Has Tombstone

DU QUOIN, Ill. (AP) — Sam Clark is one guy who's getting a lot of use out of his tombstone — before he dies.

He's Sam "The Candy Man." And he uses the slab, inscription side down, to cool the fudge he molds and sells to fairgoers across the country.

"No matter where I am, when I die, I've got my tombstone ready," said the 60-year-old Florida resident from his perch on the stage of his mobile candy factory on the Du Quoin State Fairgrounds.

The marble slab makes sense, he added, since it cools and creams the candy. Although he makes no big deal about the writing on the other side, "people always seem to hear about it and ask," he said.

"I was 8 years old then, and I knew I was destined to be a candy man," Clark said. He added that he originally went to Purdue University to play football and learn how to be a basketball coach, but wound up in the candy business, his livelihood for the past 42 years.

As with a few other fair attractions, Sam's has been a Du Quoin tradition for 30 years.

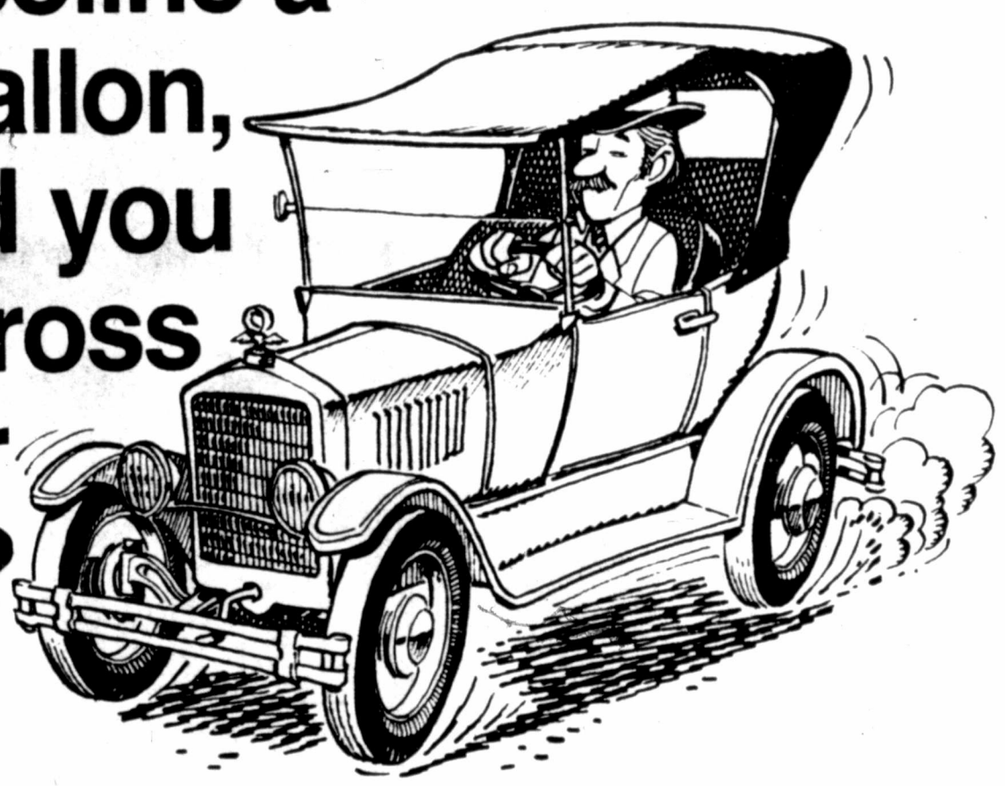
With gasoline a $1.00 a gallon, would you drive across town for 22 cents?



Some people in Lubbock are driving across town to "save" 22 cents. They stop by the Plains Express Bank to make a deposit in their checking account, then drive to another institution to make a savings deposit. The extra ¼% interest they earn someplace else amounts to only 22 cents per thousand dollars per month.

It's always made sense to save where you bank. Now that energy is so expensive, it makes even more sense to save where you bank.

Next time you want to save money, come to the middle of Lubbock. Next time you need a bank, come to Plains.

Real To Reel

By William D. Kerns

If calls to this film critic were any sort of viable statistic, one would have to assume that "Star Trek: The Motion Picture" heads the list of the most anxiously awaited films of this or any other year. I truly believe I've fielded more questions about this picture during the past month than even "Apocalypse Now." But James Doohan, who played chief engineer Montgomery ("Scotty") Scott for three years on the televison series and continued his role in the upcoming feature film, sure wasn't offering any sympathy last week. And why should he? Not only did the series stereotype him, it also introduced him to thousands of fanatics who besiege him with requests for appearances, photographs, autographs and, in one instance, even his blood.

Mind you, it has also sent a few extra bucks in his direction, but the fact remains he has to put up with a lot more than a few phone calls.

In a telephone conversation last week with Doohan, who was resting in a San Antonio hotel evidently found just as attractive by pigeons — "three of them just walked into the room; I'll throw them some grapes" — the actor revealed that his affiliation with the hit series was not all rosy. When informed that DeForest Kelly, who played Dr. Leonard ("Bones") McCoy on "Star Trek," had once told A-J reporter Joe Gulick that the show's popularity had hurt his career, Doohan wasted not a moment in responding. "Oh, that's definitely true. Absolutely. Hollywood immediately tends to typecast you when you do a role for at least a couple years.

"The casting directors and producers had all looked at 'Star Trek.' They've confessed that to me. The point is, I'm typecast as a Scotsman in Hollywood and that's it. Even though I only played a Scotsman once before in Hollywood, or anywhere else in the world for that matter."

Asked how one goes about waging war with a stereotype, the actor sighed and explained, "I tell you, it's too difficult to deal with really, at least when it comes down to Hollywood. You go out and you do plays, and you never do a Scotty. I've done about 25 months of plays and three movies. One of the movies was 'Man In the Wilderness.' I played a French-Canadian in that. I played a plain old American sergeant in an awful movie called 'Pretty Maids All In A Row,' with Telly Savalas and Rock Hudson. It's one of those things that's shown on TV at about 3 in the morning. And there's also a film I made in Canada called 'Festival,' which hasn't played here (in the United States) yet.

"Then of course, I do a lot of personal appearances at colleges, as well as at the Star Trek conventions. And I have a syndicated television show of my own I'm trying to sell."

Doohan, who hopes to come to Lubbock to visit his niece (the former Mary Doohan, now married to newly appointed Texas Tech University symphony conductor Philip Lehrman), was quite open when discussing why his character and that of DeForest Kelly were kept out of the limelight. In his mind, it was a matter of William Shatner's ego and traditional Hollywood policy. Reminded that he was forced to repeat a lot of lines about "beaming" crew members on and off board the good ship Enterprise and "losing power" in the engine room, he said, "Yes, well, both DeForest and I had to fight those kinds of things. But in those days — and it's not so true now — the star was the star, and the star got what he wanted. That's the way it was. There wasn't much you could do about it.

"We had stories come in that would definitely feature myself or DeForest Kelly in at least 75 per cent of the whole script. And all that would be changed before we ever got around to seeing a final script. . . Yes, it was a matter of egos and of (stars) hanging on to what they want. But that was true of any series at that time."

Still, he's not denying his good fortune. On the one hand, yes, he's been typecast — but on the other, as he put it, "I've become world famous. I know it. I get letters from all over the world. Seventeen members of my international fan club are Japanese. And 70 of them are Scottish, even though they are all aware that I am not really Scottish."

According to Doohan, the cast of "Star Trek" was proud of its product, and the cancellation in 1969 really caught quite a lot of them off guard. He still feels there must be "something wrong" with the system of using Nielson ratings to judge a show's popularity. Certainly in the case of "Star Trek," he has a point. One need look no further than the massive Star Trek Conventions to see the popularity which is still growing rather than diminishing. Doohan says the most gratifying part of the conventions is "the love. You are surprised in a way, because you've never been that famous before. And you can actually feel the tremendous charge coming right from the audience."

The only other experience which came close was his receiving 3,000 fan letters applauding his acting in a Canadian program called "Flight Into Danger," which he described as the first airplane story ever written by Arthur ("Airport") Hailey. "You know, one fan letter equals 1,000 people. That's what statistics say. So that was fantastic. But it was letters; it wasn't right in front of me, like all those people at the conventions."

And though he finds only one fan in 1,000 bothersome, that one can certainly be a doozy — as evidenced by the time a child approached him and, quite matter-of-factly, requested some of his blood.

"It was a little fellow in New York," he recalled, "somewhere between the ages of 10 and 12. He asked me if he could have a sample of my blood. This was in about 1974. I said, 'Oh son, only under the strictest medical conditions.' Well, the next day I was waiting for an elevator . . . and he came up with his little kit, with all the syringes and things wrapped in plastic, and he said, 'Can I get your blood now, Mr. Doohan?' I tried to put him off the best I could. Then I got inside the elevator and the people inside were asking, 'He really wanted your blood?' Like: what the hell's going on?' That kid was so eager. He told me, 'I've already done 250 others' and all I could say was, 'Well, son, I don't think you're going to do me.'"

No doubt this young, rather unique collector was one of the millions who stayed confused for several years in the mid-'70s when news of a "Star Trek" revival arose. Conflicting interviews were often printed regarding who had agreed to do the film and for a long while it was thought the TV series would be revived for a fourth national television network. Doohan, however, was able to clear things up by offering what he termed a "capsule chronology." He said, "In about 1975 or '76, Paramount starting thinking about doing a 'Star Trek' movie. They were not yet talking series. They had two writers on contract. I forget their names. And they told them, 'Here, you work out your contract by writing this movie.'

"They wrote it, took six months and came up with nothing. I mean, it was terrible. The director, who was also under contract, was allowed to take the script and try to make something of it. Well, he didn't do much better. Obviously, these people just didn't understand 'Star Trek.'

"Just about this time, Gulf & Western was thinking about starting a fourth television network. They thought the movie scripts were terrible, so instead they'd do a series. And they would open the series with a two-hour episode that would be the flagship of the new network. Anyway, two days after 'Star Wars' came out — which really had nothing to do with it, because the decision had already been made — we were informed there would be a series. That was in May of 1977. Then, 10 days before we were supposed to start shooting the series, they said they weren't going to do it. But they still liked the script (for the two-hour premiere), so they decided to do a movie. So they had to pay us off for the (TV) show. They had to pay off the director and pay off the writer.

"The following April, they announced that Robert Wise would direct the movie. Then everything had to be enlarged; the script had to be changed from that little box to the enormous screen. Models had to be changed. And we now have the biggest production Paramount has ever done. They never held back money. If someone said they needed something, they just wrote out a check. I'm very pleased with the way everything has turned out."

Even having seen only one reel — in black and white and without opticals, no less — Doohan insists he can tell the suspense is built up with admirable style by director Wise. And when the subject of "hardware movies" came up, he was just as quick to insist that the new feature emphasizes the characters more than special effects. "We only use effects when necessary," he said. "You have to have opticals and special effects in outer space. But we're not going into 45-minute long battles in space like 'Battlestar Galactica.' Our characters are already well established, and people want to see these characters in new situations."

People might also be seeing Doohan in new situations in the future. He is very high on his television show about science, dealing with "what is coming up in the future and what is new and what is exciting," but he's having trouble getting it on the air. "It's an expensive show to do," he said, "while 'The Gong Show' and 'The $1.98 Beauty Show' are real cheapies and can get on. What I like to do is excite people about the future." But he's just as excited about his past. He's had "numerous offers" to write his biography, and he's already begun to sit down and draw up headings.

"I've led a very interesting life," he said. "I'm kind of a feisty Irishman, you know. I was nearly court martialed twice in the army but, unfortunately for them, they found out I was right. . . I'd tell friends about my experiences in life, and they's all say I should write a book."

But more than one chapter would have to be dedicated to "Star Trek," the series which gained him international fame and not as much money as people think. Some might assume he still gets a residual check every time the show is aired, but Doohan explained that "back then everyone had short-term contracts, and the last checks we got were in April of 1971." Indeed, someone is getting rich from that show, and it's not the actors. And don't look for the actors to get a second shot at a series. Asked if he would have preferred doing another series instead of the film, Doohan answered, "Well, if they had a TV series, I would have made more money and the fans would have been more pleased. But I don't think there will ever be another 'Star Trek' television series.

"I think there will be a series of episodes done motion picture style and, hopefully, they'll all be as well done as this first one."

"Star Trek: The Motion Picture" opens Friday at Showplace Six in Lubbock. Fans should also note that the new "Star Trek" comic strip will premiere Monday morning on the Avalanche-Journal comic pages.

'Star Trek' To Join A-J Comics Family

Captain Kirk, Mr. Spock and the other popular characters of Star Trek join the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal comic family starting Monday (Dec. 3).

Remember the Star Trek television show? Well, plenty of fans do. The show has become the most popular series in syndication and has produced a legion of followers. These fans, dubbed "Trekkies" or "Trekkers," formed their own clubs, held almost weekly conventions drawing up to 20,000 people and produced countless publications. They have turned Star Trek into an entertainment industry phenomenon.

This Christmas season Paramount Pictures is releasing the lavish feature "Star Trek: The Motion Picture," with the original television cast. (It opens Friday at Showplace Six in Lubbock.) At the same time, a new Star Trek comic strip is making its debut.

The new comic strip faithfully recreates the mood and excitement of the original Star Trek. The creator and producer, Gene Roddenberry, when reviewing the strip, said he was "...deeply impressed with the obvious care and attention to detail in the strip. The character likenesses are excellent and Thomas really captures that special Star Trek feeling."

Roddenberry was referring to Thomas Warkentin, a devoted Trekkie, unique in the comics world because he both illustrates and writes the strip.

Warkentin is a Utah native who for many years has been a highly regarded Southern California artist. He has served as an art director at two California companies and contributed material to National Lampoon, Heavy Metal and Road and Track magazines. He has also illustrated several record album covers.

Warkentin's background makes him perfect for this assignment. He was weaned on H.G. Wells, Jules Verne and the Buck Rogers radio shows. He was also artistic director on many Star Trek Fotonovels.

Star Trek is another exclusive feature of the Avalanche-Journal.

Lab Theatre To Present 'Of Mice And Men'

"Of Mice and Men," John Steinbeck's moving tale of friendship, will be staged at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday through Dec. 12 at Texas Tech University's Lab Theater.

The play is the story of George and Lennie, two migrant farm hands who dream of someday owning their own farm. Their plan to find work on a farm in the Salinas Valley of California, and earn a grubstake towards buying their own farm, is shattered when contact between Lennie and the adventurous wife of the foreman ends in her unintentional death.

Steinbeck turned to poet Robert Burn's phrase, "The best laid schemes o' mice an' men often go awry," in illustrating the men's shattered dream.

An immediate best seller when published as a novel in February 1937, "Of Mice and Men" opened on Broadway as a play in November of that same year. "Of Mice and Men" was released as a movie in January 1940, starring Burgess Merideth and Lon Chaney, Jr. One month later, another Steinbeck success, "The Grapes of Wrath," also opened to stunning nationwide reviews.

The Lab Theatre production is directed by Tech graduate student Sara O'Neil, whose concept of the play deals with the dreams of people and how those dreams make their lives worth living. "It's the fulfillment of that dream," says Miss O'Neil, "that makes George and Lennie's relationship so emotional — even enveloping other people in their dream."

Miss O'Neil uses the emotional ties of friendship between George and Lennie as the springboard for propelling the drama towards the shattering conclusion. It is that same emotion which motivated her to direct the play as part of her master's degree, confiding the first time she read the play it made her cry. "I prefer to work with plays that move me emotionally. I have a better feel for them."

The cast of "Of Mice and Men" includes T.H. Maynor as Lennie, Bruce Dubose as George, David Graham as Curley, Patrick Remmert as Slim, Jerry Smith as Carlson, G.W. Frazier as Candy, Deirdre Jamison as Curley's wife, Robert Coonrad as the Boss, Charles Cilny as Whit and Tom Jeffreys as Crooks.

A limited number of reserved seats are available. For ticket reservations and information, call the University Theatre box office at 742-3601 from 9 a.m. to noon and 1-5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Fitter also revealed that the film has set an all-time high for a single theatre in Canada with a 12-week gross of $1,003,042 at the University Theatre in Toronto. This is the first time any Canadian theatre has ever grossed more than one million dollars for a comparable period, said Fitter.

The UA sales chief also reported a 12-week gross of $1,737,367 for the Ziegfeld Theatre, New York, where the film has just completed its run. On November 6, it began a special engagement at 20 select theatres in the metropolitan area and ran up an excellent opening day tally of $72,149. At the Cinerama Dome Theatre, Los Angeles, the 12-week receipts were $1,248,528.

Starring Marlon Brando, Robert Duvall and Martin Sheen with Frederic Forrest, Albert Hall, Sam Bottoms, Larry Fishburne and Dennis Hopper, "Apocalypse Now" was produced and directed by Coppola. The film was written by John Millius and Francis Coppola and co-produced by Fred Roos, Gray Frederickson and Tom Sternberg. Narration is by Michael Herr; Vittorio Storaro is the director of photography; Dean Tavoularis is the production designer; Richard Marks is the editor; sound design is by Walter Murch and the music is by Carmine Coppola and Francis Coppola.

MORE BLUES FROM THE MUDMAN — Blues legend Muddy Waters will appear in concert Saturday at what is being called the grand re-opening of the Cotton Club by new owners C.B. Stubblefield and Joe Ely. Waters drew a packed house at his earlier Cotton Club appearance. Also booked to play is a younger blues band called The Millionaires. I had heard a lot about Jimmie Gilmore before I ever met him. I knew he was a Lubbock boy who almost made good with a band called Jimmie Dale & The Flatlanders, a group that included Joe Ely and Butch Hancock. I knew that when that deal soured after recording an album that was never released, it had affected Gilmore deeply and he had joined some Eastern religious group headed by a kid named Guru Maharaj Gi.

I knew he was a sensitive man and a good lyricist from his songs "Dallas," "Lights" (recorded by Ely as "Treat Me Like a Saturday Night") and "Tonight I Think I'm Going To Go Downtown," also recorded by Ely. I knew from watching him on stage that he has an aura about him, a kind of glow, especially when he's singing.

JIMMIE GILMORE

But, as is almost always true, trying to know a man by his history is like trying to know the ocean bottom by looking at the choppy surface. There is much more to Jimmie Gilmore than meets the eye.

The episode of The Flatlanders' album is one of those tangled webs that can only happen when artists meet businessmen. Today, eight years after the actual recording session, Gilmore still does not understand exactly what happened.

"I ended up feeling, I can't even say deceived because it wasn't that clear cut," he says. "I never did get the vibes that any person actually misrepresented anything, but it got to be this confused situation where we had made this record that we expected this and that to happen with that didn't happen.

"They (the record company) released a couple of DJ promotional copies, feelers I guess, but that was all. For a long time I thought, 'Wow, we've made it.' Even now, I'm still proud of the music. I'm never sick of it. We never were a tight, cooking band. We were just a fun-time band that had a lot of great material. The Flatlanders went a whole lot more on creative energy than finesse."

Indeed, that is a fairly accurate description of Gilmore, the musician. His voice is not one of those appealing, pretty ones you're apt to hear on the radio, but instead a high, haunting one which grabs you with its power.

Gilmore is a philosophical, introspective person constantly trying to understand the world around him and how he fits into it. He once was disillusioned and confused, not only about the business aspect of music but about the fundamental morality of it.

He said, "Basically, I kept finding a whole lot of psychological things in the whole atmosphere of the music business that I couldn't handle at the time. The confusion of the record thing was one, but not the heaviest. I found myself asking what's music for. I got into this whole conciousness of what are my motives on stage. What are my reasons for being there. Are they honorable?

"I didn't think about it in quite those terms, but those kind of thoughts kept drifting across my mind. I began to be very reflective and real questioning of what the whole thing was about. I came to the conclusion that I didn't know what I was doing. I didn't know what it was for. I didn't have a proper understanding of why I was doing a lot of this stuff. It wasn't just in the music world either.

"I began questioning where I was at in my whole life."

A friendship with Tommy Hancock and his Supernatural Family Band turned Gilmore on to the Maharaj Gi. What he says he has learned from the religion is not so much the answers to his questions, but a way to find the the answers.

"It has made me feel a whole lot more like the solution to my problems lie more within me instead of within changing my circumstances," he said. "A lot of what is going on within me is trying to integrate what I got from that whole professional musician thing. I've come to a certain understanding of it now. I mean, music exists in the darkest of places, but it is the lightest of forces. If I can have that there in my music, I'll have succeeded beyond any professional goals.

"To me, the purpose of music is to uplift people, to make people feel better, to make people see a brighter side. Even the most low-down blues singer, if you can empathize with him even if he's singing about something negative or bad, the fact that he's singing about it with a certain kind of life can help put life into you.

"It's like all those questions I was asking so deeply got answered for me. Not in an absolute, positive, clear kind of way, but there's a direction to my thinking now that makes it feel together."

Second-Generation Stars Making Marks

Judging from what's happening these days on the Hollywood scene, the answer is a resounding "yes!" And there's no better example than the star roster of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Hero At Large," which is headed by John Ritter, son of country and western star Tex Ritter, and Anne Archer, daughter of John Archer and Marjorie Lord.

"Being raised in a show business atmosphere has a tendency to get you involved in the industry," Ritter admits. "When I was in college at the University of Southern California, I was convinced I was going to become a psychologist. Then I got into a play — and everything changed."

Miss Archer said, "There was never any question about what I was going to be when I grew up. My childhood was crammed with lessons in singing, dancing and piano. I was still college age when I joined Ann Sothern for a national stage tour in 'Glad Tiddings.'"

Today the list of second-generation performers who have made it is a long one and it's filled with some very outstanding examples. To name just a few:

Tatum O'Neal, daughter of Ryan O'Neal, has already won an Academy Award, a prize that has eluded her famous pop during his illustrious career.

The Arnaz family boasts a double-barreled salvo of seond-generation success. Desi Arnaz, Jr., like his famous dad, has emerged as a romantic leading man in such films as "Red Sky At Morning" and "Marco." Sister Lucie Arnaz, like her famous mom, Lucille Ball, has become a ranking star of films, TV and stage, most recently on Broadway in the hit musical comedy, Neil Simon's "They're Playing Our Song."

John Carradine's clan has hit it big on TV and in films, led by David Carradine and his hit TV series, "Kung-Fu." David and his acting brothers, Keith and Robert, are currently all together in an unusual Western, "The Longriders."

Danny Thomas' talented daughter, Marlo, starred in her own TV series, "That Girl," and has starred on the big screen in such films as "Jenny" and "Thieves."

Kirk Douglas' son, Michael, has become a multi-millionaire, not only by producing such films as "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" and "The China Syndrome" but also by co-starring in the latter as well as MGM's "Coma."

Judy Garland's fabulous career as an actress and singer has been matched by her eqully talented daughter, Liza Minnelli, who leaped to stardom in "The Sterile Cuckoo," won an Oscar for her grand performance in "Cabaret," electrified TV audiences with her musical specials, and scored a solid hit on the musical stage in "Chicago."

Carrie Fisher, daughter of Eddie Fisher and Debbie Reynolds, was the feminine star of the most successful motion picture of all time, "Star Wars," and is now co-starring again with Mark Hamill in the sci-fi sequel, "The Empire Strikes Back."

The list seems to go on and on. Lloyd Bridges' long and successful star career is being matched these days by both of his sons, Beau and Jeff. Beau Bridges is currently in England starring in a new movie, "Silver Dream Racer." Pat Boone had a lot of hit records but none any greater than that of Debbie Boone, his singing daughter: "You Light Up My Life." And Tim McIntire, the son of John McIntire and Jeanette Nolan, has a co-starring role with Robert Redford in "Brubaker."

How does John Ritter feel about second-generation successes? The talented young comedian, who has now added films like "Hero At Large" to his success on TV as one of the stars of the number one series last season, couldn't resist. He said, "It's a very good scion."

MGM's "Hero At Large" was produced by Stephen Friedman and directed by Martin Davidson from an original screenplay by A.J. Carothers. It is being released in the United States and Canada by United Artists and throughout the rest of the world by Cinema International Corporation.

Annual Film Festival Slated In Dallas

The tenth annual USA Film Festival will be held in Dallas on March 21-30, 1980. Traditionally, half of the features premiered at the Festival are produced by independent filmmakers. The Festival has a commitment to maintaining the 50 per cent studio, 50 per cent independent mix it has presented in the past, but this is becoming increasingly hard to do, says Festival Executive Director, G. William Jones.

Jones further states that: "Because the major distributors realize the benefits of premiering their features at a major festival such as ours, those films are not so difficult to fine. However, the USA Film Festival is equally committed to the work of the independent filmmaker, and they're the ones that are difficult to reach."

The USA Film Festival is interested in independent feature films which meet the following requirements: They must have been completed within the last six months, and not yet be in general release. The films must also be predominately USA-made in terms of cast and crew.

The USA Film Festival is a non-competitive, critics' choice Festival which premieres (either locally, regionally or nationally) 10 to 12 films each year. The Festival's Selecting Critics (Hollis Alpert, American Film; Charles Champlin, Los Angeles Times; Judith Crist, TV Guide; Roger Ebert, Chicago Sun-Times; Arthur Knight, Hollywood Reporter) each select the features they deem most outstanding, and bring them to the Festival along with the film's major creators.

Each screening is then followed by onstage discussions with the audience.

Some of the independent films which have premiered at the Festival are "Hester Street, "Bushman," "Tomorrow," "Lords of Flatbush" "A Boy And His Dog," "Grey Gardens, "Harlan County, USA," "Pumping Iron," "Running Fence," "The Whole Shootin' Match," "The Mafu Cage," "Stevie" and "Dawn of the Dead."

If you have a feature you would like the USA Film Festival to consider for its 1980 celebration, contact: G. William Jone, Executive Director, USA Film Festival, P.O. Box 3105, S.M.U., Dallas, Texas 75275 or call (214) 692-2979.

ART TALK: By La Wanda Murfee

The middle aged lady shyly cme into the studio, uncomfortable in strange surroundings. She had agreed to sit for a figure painting class without any idea of what would take place. Commenting on the fragrance of turpentine that gradually subsided while she became acquainted with the goals for the day, she engaged in small talk with he instructor and students. She was encouraged in becoming the focal point for several stretches of 20-minute poses.

After taking her place on the model stand, several background fabrics were draped on the screen behind her. Screning was removed leaving nothing but the shapes about the room for background. Having no natural light in the studio, spotlights were placed in various positions, lighting backdrops, illuminating the model from different angles.

As soon as the mood was set, a discussion was held about the model's garments. The effect of their coloring upon skin tones was studied. Ribbons, scarves, a sweater and bright jacket were lain near the face to observe the change of color, especially on the neck and chin. Shapes of the hair, covered and uncovered, against the background were considered.

The model was directed to move about until a comfortable, relaxed pose was assumed, unconsciously. If there is the least strain observed in positioning, that tension carries over into the finished painting.

Lighting on the features stimulated a lengthy discussion. The whole mood of the painting would be set by the final decision on lighting. Would the eyes be in shadow or light, the side of the face in subdued light or spotlighted? The triangle of shadow under the nose might be enlarged or diminished.

Already half the morning had passed. Arranging the set and pose were as important as painting itself. No paint had been squeezed onto any palette. The lesson resolved around the importance and trials of posing the model for portrait and figure painting. The next step was to consider coloring. Untrained eyes could not walk up to the easel and begin painting without first studying the sitter. Under the expert guidance of the instructor, proportions, bone structure and shapes were discussed as well as colors in skin, hair, clothes and background.

The morning passed and not a single stroke went onto a canvas. The new experience was ended, only to begin again the next day, and continue for several more.

Twelve years later I chanced to meet the Spanish lady who had been the model. Her whole life had changed since that hesitant visit to the studio. For the first time in her life, that day she had become an object of concern, important to several people. Having her good physical attributes pointed out by the interest and kindness of instructor and students, she had placed her viewpoint of herself in a different perspective. While posing and being looked upon as almost an inanimate object by the class, she was in metamorphosis, a butterfly coming out of a cocoon.

CIVIL ACTION NO. CA5-76-130
CLASS ACTION

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION AND OF RIGHTS OF CLASS MEMBERS

TO: All persons who purchased retail alcoholic beverages, including beer and wine, during the period from March 1967 through December 1974 from retail stores located in Lubbock County, Texas, owned, operated or controlled by Pinkie's, Inc., Cecil's, Inc., Crossed Keys Package Store, Inc., The All Star Company, Bob Grimes, Hubert Odom, or Kenneth Odom. A person is a retail purchaser if such a purchase was not for resale or solely for profit. Retail purchases of alcoholic beverages include purchases by private clubs for its members and case lot purchases.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to you that the plaintiff above named has filed a suit in the above entitled United States District Court in behalf of himself and all members of the class herein addressed. By order dated September 18, 1978, the Court determined that this action should be maintained as a class action under the provisions of Rule 23(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and directed the giving of notice to class members.

NOTICE IS FURTHER GIVEN as follows:

1. Plaintiff's Complaint alleges a conspiracy among the defendants to raise, fix, stabilize and maintain the prices at which retail alcoholic beverages, including beer and wine, were sold in retail stores located in Lubbock County, Texas, owned and operated by the defendants named above. The time period of the alleged conspiracy extended from as early as March 1967 until at least December 1974. As a result of the alleged unlawful conspiracy plaintiff and other members of the class were compelled to pay substantially higher prices for retail alcoholic beverges purchased at these retail stores than they would have paid in the absence of such a conspiracy to the injury of the plaintiff and the members of the class. Recovery of money damages is sought for three times the amount of the alleged overcharge on the purchases made from the defendants by plaintiff and the members of the class. Recovery is also sought for attorneys' fees and costs of this suit. The overcharge is the difference between the higher price for alcoholic beverages resulting from the alleged conspiracy and the price at which such alcoholic beverages would have been sold in the absence of such conspiracy. In response to the plaintiff's claims, all defendants have denied any wrongdoing and have denied any liability to plaintiff or any member of the class. This Notice is not to be construed as an expression of any opinion by the Court with respect to the merits of the claims or defenses of any of the parties. This Notice is sent merely to advise you of the pendency of the action and the rights which you have with respect to it.

2. The Court will exclude any member of the class to whom this Notice is addressed on written request for such exclusion on the attached "Request for Exclusion" form, postmarked on or before February 1, 1979. 3. All members of the class who do not request exclusion as prescribed in the preceding paragraph, and who are therefore deemed to have elected to partipate in this action, will be entitled to share prorata in the benefits of any judgment favorable to the class or in any settlement of their claims, after deduction of attorneys' fees and disbursements, but they will also be bound by any judgment unfavorable to the class. Included class members will also be subject to the orders and notices hereafter given in this action with reference to the furnishing of statements and other matters of that nature.

4. If any class member does not desire to be excluded, but does wish to appear in his own behalf, such class member may enter an appearance through counsel of his own choosing. All members who do not request exclusion or who do not enter an appearance through counsel of their own choosing will be represented by plaintiff through his counsel hereinafter named.

5. Counsel for plaintiff and for members of the class included in this action is the law firm of Locke, Purnell, Boren, Laney & Neely (A Professional Corporation), whose address is 3600 Republic National Bank Tower, Dallas, Texas 75201, and whose telephone number is (214) 746-7400. All communications and questions concerning this notice should be sent to such attorneys, c/o Stanley E. Neely, Orrin Harrison III, or Nathan L. # Symphony Orchestra Slates Concert

The Texas Tech University Symphony Orchestra will present a concert at 2 p.m. Dec. 9 in the campus' Hemmle Recital Hall. The concert will feature works by Ludwig van Beethoven, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, and Igor Stravinsky, and will be conducted by Phillip Lehrman.

There is no admission charge.

Lehrman, a native of New York City, holds his bachelor and master of music degrees from the University of Southern California. He has been conductor of the orchestras at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and has held positions as assistant conductor with the New York Philharmonic and Buffalo Philharmonic orchestras. He was also a fellowship conductor at the Berkshire Music Center (Tanglewood) and has conducted the Madison Symphony Orchestra and the Wisconsin Youth Symphony. Among the teachers with whom he has studied are Daniel Lewis, Ingolf Dahl and Leonard Bernstein.

PHILIP LEHRMAN
Tech symphony conductor

The orchestra will perform the "Egmont Overture "by Beethoven, written for a production of Goethe's drama "Egmont" in 1810. The overture was the first and largest of the 10 pieces composed to accompany the spoken drama and was performed separately many times during Beethoven's lifetime. It has since become a staple of the standard orchestral repertoire.

The "Symphony No. 39 in E Flat Major" by Mozart was written during a very brief period of the summer of 1788. Mozart wrote this symphony as part of a final trilogy of major works before his death, and the symphony was not performed during his lifetime.

"Jeu De Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, was composed for a ballet in which dancers, dressed as playing cards, would perform against a painted gaming-table backrop. Stravinsky spoke of his delight in games of cards, particularly poker, and played the game during rest periods between composition. This was a favorite piece of German audiences prior to World War II, and was also premiered in New York and Paris. The work was the composition Stravinsky conducted in Europe before the war, during a concert in La Scala in May of 1939.

Museum Slates Exhibition Of Works Of Victor Banks On Eagle

"American Eagle: Symbol for Survival," an exhibition of more than 80 full color and black and white photographs of the national bird of the United States, opens Dec. 16 at The Texas Tech University Museum.

The photographs by Victor M. Banks are complemented by text which explores the history of the American bald eagle and examines its lifestyle, characteristics and habitat.

The exhibition was produced as part of a special exhibits program and is touring nationally under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service. It will remain on exhibit at The Museum through Jan. 13.

The American bald eagle, which has a wing span of from six to eight feet, has come to signify the independence and strength of the United States throughout the world. But the bird was almost ignored in favor of the wild turkey. After six years of discussion, in 1782, the American bald eagle was chosen as the national symbol over the objections of Benjamin Franklin. He said the wild turkey was a much more respectable bird.

The bald eagle eats carrion and catches crippled water fowl for food, but its main food is fish. Its continued existence is today in grave doubt for a variety of reasons: illegal hunting, poaching, the encroachment of civilization and man-made pollutants.

AMERICAN SYMBOL — "American Eagle: Symbol For Survival," an exhibition of photographs and facts about the bald eagle, national emblem of the United States, will be shown Dec. 16 through Jan. 13 at The Texas Tech University Museum. The show is part of a special exhibits program touring nationally under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service.

The living embodiment of the national symbol has been hunted in the past for as little as a 50-cent bounty. Although protected by an act of Congress, the eagle still is threatened by deliberate shooting.

The young of the golden eagle and the bald eagle look similar in color, and the bald eagle does not acquire its white plumage until it is about four years old. Both are protected by the law.

At one time found throughout North America, the bald eagle breeds now only in Alaska, Canada and, rarely, in the southern part of the nation, including Florida.

Because of pollutants which enter the bodies of fish eaten by the American bald eagle, the number of birds also has decreased. DDT, for instance, can be ingested by the bald eagle by eating contaminated fish.

The DDT on plants washes off and onto nearby streams where it enters the fish. By the time the poison enters the eagle's body, the eagle does not die but cannot lay an egg with a sufficiently hard shell. As a consequence, the soft shell is broken accidentally by the parent in the nest before the baby bird can mature and hatch.

The American bald eagle is occasionally seen in West Texas. Bird watchers find it most frequently in this area in winter in the Mulshoe Wildlife Range.

The exhibit at The Museum is sponsored by the West Texas Museum Association.

Actress Making Debut In 'Wolfen'

NEW YORK (Special) — Diane Venora will make her motion picture debut in Orion's "Wolfen," the story of terror revolving around a series of bizarre murders committed by a mysterious breed of carnivores who are stalking the streets of New York City. She will appear opposite Albert Finney portraying a criminal psychologist who joins forces with the English actor to solve the gruesome crimes.

A recent graduate of Julliard School of the Arts, Venora beat out over 200 actresses for the plum assignment of appearing opposite one of the world's most respected actors in a major motion picture. While studying at Julliard, the actress appeared in numerous productions, including "Romeo and Juliet," "The Cherry Orchard" and "The Matchmaker." She also appeared in regional theatre productions of "The Three Sisters" and "The Country Wife."

A King-Hitzig Production, "Wolfen" is based on Whitley Streiber's best-selling novel. Michael Wadleigh will direct from a script he co-authored with David Eyre. Alan King is the executive producer and Rupert Hitzig the producer of the film, which is now before the cameras in New York and is an Orion Pictures release through Warner Bros.

Dr. Westney To Present Piano Recital On Tuesday

WILLIAM WESTNEY

William Westney, associate professor of piano and Browning Artist-In-Residence at Texas Tech University, will be featured in faculty recital at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday at the University Center theater.

There is no admission charge.

Westney's playing has been described by Harold Schonberg of the New York Times as "brilliant." On the occasion of his winning the top prize at the 1975 Geneva International Music Competition, the Journal de Geneva wrote, "Westney finally brought to the competition that spark of musicality, investiveness and poetry that had been so long awaited."

Other awards for Westney have included a Fulbright grant for European study, winning the 1973 competition of the Piano Teacher's Congress of New York, and being selected as the only American winner in auditions held by Radiotelevisione Italiana. Westney received his Bachelor's degree from Queens College in New York and the Doctor of Musical Arts degree in performance from Yale University.

In addition to recitals, broadcast performances and orchestral appearances throughout the Eastern seaboard, Westney has appeared abroad as soloist with L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande (a concert carried on European radio and TV), the Collegium Musicum of Basel, and L'Orchestre de Mulhouse. His recitals in Geneva, Milan, Bologna, Turin and Genoa earned him high critical acclaim, as has his recent recording on the CRI label of the striking futurist music of rediscovered American composer Leo Ornstein.

This recording was singled out by Newsweek as "one of the 10 best American music records of 1975."

The Tuesday evening program will include three works by Domenico Scarlatti: "Sonata in D Major, L. 164;" "Sonata in E Minor, L. 427;" and "Sonata in A Minor, L. 379". Westney will also play the "Sonata No. 7 in B Flat Major, Op. 83" by Sergei Prokofieff, "Variations serieuses, Op. 54" by Felix Mendelssohn, four works from "Piano-pieces, Op. 119" by Johannes Brahms, and the famous "Mephisto-Waltz" by Franz Liszt.

'Madrigal Dinner' Tickets Now On Sale

The Texas Tech music department and Tech University Center will combine efforts to stage the third annual Madrigal Dinner at 6:30 p.m. Thursday through Saturday at the University Center Ballroom. Doors will open at 6:30 p.m. and, due to the nature of the program, close promptly at 6:50 p.m.

Reserved seat tickets are now on sale at the University Center ticket booth. Call 742-3610 for information.

The Madrigal Dinner is an atmospheric recreation of the yuletide season in Old England during the 15th century. Dressed in appropriate medieval costumes, the Madrigal singers will sing of the Christmas season while patrons are seated at a table laden with a wassail bowl, boar's head dinner and plum pudding.

Entertainment will be announced by trumpet fanfares.

The Madrigal Singers include sopranos Helen Dewey Reikofski and Suzi Graham, altos Shannon Campbell and Karen Cremer, tenors Mark Moeller and John Priddy and basses Terry Cook and Mike Medley. They will be assisted by a group of strolling musicians.

Work To Start On Fonda Film

NEW YORK (Special) — Shooting will begin at 20th Century-Fox's Century City lot on January 14, 1980 on the IPC Films' Production, "Nine to Five," to be produced by Bruce Gilbert who has assembled the all-star cast of Jane Fonda, Lily Tomlin and Dolly Parton.

Working from an original screenplay by himself and Patricia Resnick, director Colin Higgins will precede filming with a week of rehearsal on the ensemble-style comedy. A major set duplicating two floors of a modern office complex is under construction on Fox's Stage 6 for the madcap comedy/fantasy about the travails of a trio of office workers. The pivotal role of their boss is yet to be cast.

Miss Fonda, coming off her Oscar-winning performance in "Coming Home," is joined by country-western singer Dolly Parton who is making her motion picture debut. Film, stage and television star Lily Tomlin is currently completing her latest picture, "The Invisible Shrinking Woman."

Higgins, who recently directed "Foul Play," contributed the screenplay for Fox's boxoffice hit, "Silver Streak," and the long-running film sensation, "Harold and Maude," currently in rehearsal for a Broadway production. Resnick, author of the PBS TV play "Ladies in Waiting," co-wrote the Altman film, "A Wedding."

"Nine to Five" marks the third collaboration of IPC Film partners Fonda and Gilbert whose previous entries include "Coming Home" and "The China Syndrome."

The contemporary comedy, to be released in 1980, will be filmed entirely in Los Angeles and environs during a 12-week shooting schedule.

Just Shake it and Let it Fall Into Place. The Precision Haircut.

Because your head is unique the way your hair grows is equally unique. Really quite different from every one else's.

Precision haircutting is a technique for cutting the hair in harmony with the way it grows. Your hair eventually grows out but it doesn't lose its shape with a precision haircut. Consequently your haircut will look as good after five days as it does after five minutes. And because the hair falls naturally into place you won't have to keep fussing with it. Usually a shake of the head does it.

At Command Performance we shampoo, precision-cut and blow dry your hair for fourteen dollars, whether you're a gal or a guy. And no appointments are ever necessary.

We also offer permanent waves, coloring, frosting and conditioning. But we really shine with precision. And so will you.

HEAD EAST HEADS OUR WAY — Rock band Head East will appear in concert Tuesday and Wednesday nights at Rox in Lubbock. Tickets are on sale at Rox, Lips Records and B&B Records, with the price slated to go up the night of each show. Rox manager Carlo Campanelli has revealed the Tuesday show is "closing in on sellout status." A-J rock columnist Doug Pullen discusses Head East's new LP, titled "A Different Kind Of Crazy," in today's Rock-It column.

Rock-It

By Doug Pullen

Head East wandered from its native Illinois in 1975 with an impressive debut album called "Flat As A Pancake." Many will remember that album because it contained the song "Never Been Any Reason." The song's hook-laden nature and infectious chorus attracted a swarm of listeners to Head East's side of the fence.

But, like so many groups who have one hit single, Head East faded back somewhat, never maintaining the momentum it gained with its initial breaks. Three succeeding studio albums and a live set have helped maintain a sizable following for the group. Unfortunately, too many fans have come to expect more songs like "Never Been Any Reason."

As a result, Head East has wrestled with the problems of becoming a formula band, like Styx or Ted Nugent, and found that wasn't to its liking.

The group's newest album should serve to change things a bit and perhaps lighten the ever-growing burden that "Flat As A Pancake" and "Never Been Any Reason" created. "A Different Kind Of Crazy" (A&M) is just that. The album is a departure from the group's past attempts. No longer does Head East sound like it is trying to come up with another song the magnitude of its earlier hit. Instead, Head East plays with an ease and comfort never before heard on one of its albums.

The group has opted for a more cohesive, song-oriented approach. The inconsistencies that mired albums like "Head East" and "Gettin' Lucky" in mediocrity is practically absent. Though "A Different Kind Of Crazy" is hampered by shallow lyrics and inconsistent vocals, it is Head East's first full-fledged attempt at creating a complete album.

It sounds as if the band spent more time with this album. Memory recalls guitarist Mike Somerville explaining that the group's fourth studio LP "Head East" took about a month to record. If an album is to have the longevity and quality so necessary to a group's survival, then some time must be invested in the development of that album.

And development is what Head East has lacked. The group is by no means a factory, producing album after album of the same stuff. But its reputation as a stage band has never surrendered ground to its recording prowess, or apparent lack of it. "A Different Kind Of Crazy" should change that. The songs are better conceived, especially those of guitarist Somerville and keyboardist Roger Boyd. And the album contains a few surprises, like "Morning," a simplistic, though picturesque instrumental which perhaps expresses better with music what the group has failed to express with lyrics.

Somerville and Boyd exchange riffs in that song much like a group of seasoned jazz musicians might trade licks during a jam. "Morning" may sound like filler material to most, but may prove one of the most important songs on the album.

"Keep a Secret" draws from a disco influence, though the song is far from disco classification. John Schlitt's enticing, though limited vocals help propel the beat conscious rhythm through its motions, resulting in what could become the group's first significant hit since "Never Been Any Reason."

Other songs on "A Different Kind Of Crazy" come closer to being easily forgotten. But this is less noticeable here than on previous albums. The new material contains some semblance of cohesion, as opposed to past efforts which all too often sounded as though they were slapped together under deadline duress.

Songs like "Feelin' Is Right" and "Got To Be Real" smack of the longevity so commonly absent from the group's earlier work. Catchy melodies and effective repitition are evident in "Hard Drivin' Days" and album opener "Specialty."

"A Different Kind Of Crazy" is a definite step forward for Head East. The band has long been in search of a more positive direction, falling victim to the mediocrity which can result from initially misguided attempts at maintaining a musical status quo. Head East has found itself to be a more progressive band then originally conceived, a factor which may contribute to the growing success of the band.

The group has suffered a certain amount of anonymity the past few years. Once building itself up as support act for several big name acts, Head East deteriorated to the level that it has had to book several club dates. Now, the band is rebuilding the good reputation it attained earlier in its existence.

A new album like "A Different Kind Of Crazy" and a current swing through the nation's nightclubs may give the band the kind of momentum and accessibility (not allowed in large halls) to push the band back in the driver's seat.

At last, Head East has found its direction.

Head East will be featured in concert Tuesday and Wednesday at Rox. Tickets are now on sale at Rox, Lips Record Store and B&B Records; barring advance sellouts, the price will jump the night of the show.

Short-Term Rollover Loan Rules Circulated

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN (Special) — Proposed rules on "short-term rollover loans" for one-to four-family residences are being circulated to lenders by the Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission.

Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff notes the proposal would provide an additional approach to mortgage lenders, in addition to the traditional fixed rate mortgages, and the graduated payment and variable rate mortgage programs approved for use in Texas (the latter plans getting approval this summer).

Basically, the proposed rules allow for a program similar to the so-called "Canadian rollover plan," with the following major provisions:

—Loans would be for an initial period of not less than five years, and would be renewed for periods of not less than five years.

—Payments would be at least quarterly, but not more frequently than monthly.

—Loans would be set up to be amortized over a period of at least 20 years.

—Lenders would be required to offer a standard fixed interest rate loan along with the rollover plan (similar provisions are in effect on the graduated payment and variable rate programs).

—Applicants would be furnished with a written explanation "in plain English" disclosing how a short-term rollover differs from a standard mortgage, "including the possible increase in interest rate for any additional term of the loan."

The proposed rules also provide that a lender may not charge higher interest rates for renewing or extending a loan without notifying the borrower 60 days prior to the date of that action—giving the date on which the entire loan is due and payable, and the rate of interest to be charged, or the highest amount permitted by law, and the amount of payments to be made during the term of the new loan.

The idea is that that will give the borrower a chance to shop for a better rate.

Lenders believe the rollover approach will give them some flexibility and allow periodic adjustment in loan rates.

Such an approach also can help borrowers, they contend, since borrowers would be able to find a better rate in instances where rates decline between the time the loan is made and when it is renewed or extended.

But lenders also note that the plan isn't likely to help while prime rates remain high and the cost of money to lenders is in excess of that permitted under Texas usury ceilings.

Is There A Doctor In The House?

ALL SORTS OF problems surround first impressions — that indiscriminate sire of hasty conclusions. Things, according to Teddy Kennedy, are never as they would immediately seem.

Your favorite Texas Tech football team of the season just passed may be a classroom example of how initial perception can get symptoms all confused with causes. And, as all you medical experts so basically know, calamine won't do the trick if the rash is caused by some malady way down in the gizzard.

What we have here, superficially of course, is a gridball team that zeroed in on Great Expectations but was responded to by Maggie's Drawers. That means, to those of you who never pulled KP, that no part of the bullet hit any part of the target. No one ever gained an affectionate hug from a drill instructor or rabid fan by merely coming close a time or two.

• • •

SO WHAT IS ITCHING and smarting right now is your basic 3-6-2 syndrome, aggravated by a 3-3 tie to TCU that reminds everybody of the time mama said shhhhh' Get the sulphur and grease and don't say a word about this to noooobody.

There is an even further depressant quality to it when one begins to drift into thoughts of next year. It is a little reminiscent of the time a Houston writer picked Rice to finish in the cellar, explaining "the Owls were 0-7 last season and they got 'em all back."

Tech's odds against immediate recovery are not quite so overwhelming, of course. But things have looked better. The Raiders do lose heavily in some critical areas, such as most of their (Hadnot) offense and a batch of other fine football players. In the science of today, most anything is possible, but practicality hints strongly that neither the common cold nor whatever keeps Tech out of the Cotton Bowl may be cured during the course of one recruiting season and spring training session.

What we have here, sports fans, is one of those spots that breaks out and itches, but should be scratched only with due caution and clean nails.

• • •

IT WAS SOMEWHERE in this same ledger some months back that a knowledgeable sort was quoted on the possible pitfalls of changing guards and athletic successes. The story was dealing at the time with Dr. Cecil Mackey and his goals and plans for the Red Raider athletic future. A four-hour interview with the Tech president addressed those potential problems, among other things, but most of the real good questions went unanswered. Rhetoric, to a writer, is one of those things blessed to give, frustrating to receive.

But the one point of clarity that seeped through was the definite feeling that Mackey did have a plan all his own for things athletic. He gave credence to that assumption when he personally interviewed and selected an athletic director with no consultation from other members of the so-called "selection committee." Earlier, he had appointed as chairman of the athletic council a professor who had been on campus less than a semester.

During the interview, he revealed that the athletic council was now an "advisory committee" with absolutely no line authority. Hmm. Translated, that could only mean that the administration was directly running the athletic program and that the athletic council continues to exist simply because the Southwest Conference and NCAA regulations requiring faculty control of athletics.

• • •

INSINUATIONS, IN THIS etching, will not be allowed a rampant path. Dick Tamburo is not hereby held up as some sort of chesspiece to be moved about by administrators who are athletically uninformed.

What is the thesis is that the time-proven structure of Tech's athletic program has been dismantled. Many persons who for years have been closely involved will tell you that Raider jockdom was able to rise from Border Conference obscurity into perennial SWC contention mainly through a base built by a strong athletic administration working THROUGH a strong athletic council.

For years, the president's office and the board of regents acted on recommendations so channeled.

Today, that structure does not exist. Okay, so what does?

• • •

AN ATHLETIC DIRECTOR not on the job long enough to have all his papers graded, a head football who in two years has tasted both the ecstacy of victory and the agony of criticism, and a passel of longtime supporters who can but wonder what the yell is going on. That's what is available beyond what can be read on the scoreboard.

It would be unfair not to say Tamburo may become the best athletic director in Tech history. But one can logically wonder what made Dick appear to Mackey as the best of the candidates. Certainly it wasn't scoreboard success.

Tamburo was a part of Cecil Coleman's staff at Illinois, and throughout the Coleman reign as AD, the Illini never had a single winning football season. Coleman, with Tamburo's help, did get the program into the black.

But a funny thing about Lubbock, Tex., is that the bottom line on a computer printout would dim drastically against the light of seven consecutive losing seasons.

Dockery, meanwhile, is sitting on a hotter stool than either Tamburo (who doesn't mold football strategy) or the athletic council (which for the first time in history can truthfully turn palms upward when approached with any sort of policy question).

So, here we are, back at scratching and dobbing symptoms.

• • •

OBVIOUSLY, REX NEEDS help, not firing. A guy's IQ can not fluctuate to the point that he can be a genius in 1978 and an imbecile in 1979.

Whatever it is that Dockery needs should be made available, be it assistant coaches or speedy tailbacks.

The point of this entire dissertation is, to be quite blunt, that Mackey was taking the athletic department in a direction it should best avoid. And that is said by a feller here who admittedly never did figure out just what course ol' Cecil had in mind — not even after asking him, point blank, and examining his response from all directions.

Timing is critical. That 3-6-2 may be easy to cure. But, as any symptom, must not be allowed to persist. And an interim president can do little but sustain and retain and keep the boat off the rocks.

So whoever the next guv... er, person is that runs the place likely holds the key.

Hopefully, in the meantime, the Tech regents will realize that the entire athletic anatomy is due a thorough examination.

Something sure is itching.

Wideman Given Seedmen's Post

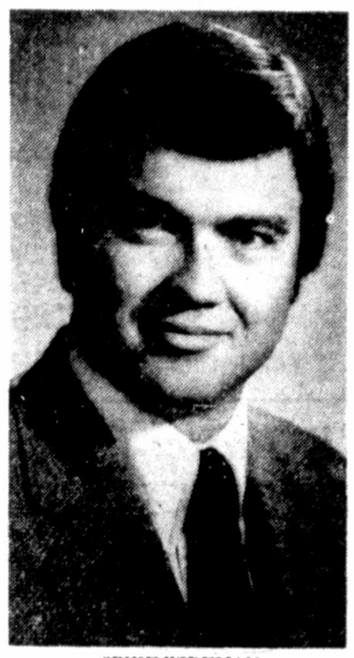
Spike Wideman, a South Plains farm broadcaster for more than seven years, has been named director of communications for Growers Seed Association, according to George B. Babcock, executive vice president and general manager of the Lubbock-based company.

Wideman replaces Walt Olivo, who retired from a similar position earlier this year.



SPIKE WIDEMAN

Babcock said Wideman will be in charge of advertising, public relations, and information.

Wideman, 31, is a graduate of Floydada High School and Texas Tech University. At Tech, he received a degree in secondary education, with teaching fields in journalism and speech.

Wideman's broadcasting career began in Floydada in 1965. He later became the farm director of KCBD-TV in Lubbock in 1972, and served in similar capacities at KKYN Radio, Plainview, and KFYO Radio, Lubbock, during the past seven years.

In 1977, Wideman was named Outstanding Young Man of America by the American Jaycees. He has received numerous awards during his broadcasting career, including the Distinguished Service Award from the Texas Future Farmers of America.

He is married to the former Camilla Nash. They are the parents of two sons, Matt and Mitch.

Fire Mountain Park Has Seven Craters

BOGOTA, Colombia (UPI) — Purace National Park near the historic town of Popayan, 300 miles southwest of Bogota, boasts seven volcano craters — including Mount Purace, whose name in the Quechua indian language means Fire Mountain.

The park covers 336 square miles, has altitudes varying from 5,000-8,000 feet and is dotted by waterfalls and trout-filled lakes. Among 200 species of birds found there are the Andean condor, hawks and eagles.

It's easy to see where many of our priorities are.

"The children of today are looking to us for ways they can prepare for their own style of life . . . families . . . and job opportunities. To help, we'll need more electricity. It's true, electricity will play a big role toward helping expand the job market to include these adults of tomorrow. The modern use of electricity has contributed to a better educational system to prepare our young people for the new experiences yet to come."

Almost 10 years ago, the folks at Southwestern Public Service wanted to make sure there was enough electricity to keep today's wage earner working. They decided that the fuel used in their power plants should be coal because, coal would be more abundant and cheaper to use than the conventional fuel . . . natural gas.

Now, Southwestern Public Service has a new coal plant in operation and more on the way. Yes, coal plants will help stabilize fuel costs while providing a long-term, reliable, energy source to provide electricity.

It's good to be able to tell someone what they can depend on.

THE SUPERMARKET SHOPPER

By MARTIN SLOANE

By MARTIN SLOANE

Dear Supermarket Shopper — I really need to save money and would like to try couponing and refunding. But I work and don't have a lot of free time.

Are there any shortcuts you can recommend? — Wendy J., Philadelphia.

Dear Wendy — Basic couponing will take you only 30 minutes each week. And you will be reimbursed at the rate of $20 an hour!

Just do these things:

1. Clip every coupon you can find (15 minutes a week).

2. File all your coupons into easy-to-use product groups, the same ones that we use to list our refund offers (five minutes a week).

3. Look through your coupon files to try to find a coupon for every item on your weekly shopping list (10 minutes a week).

That's all there is to it.

Once your inventory of coupons builds up, you will save as much as $10 on your weekly trip to the supermarket; $10 for 30 minutes of work is just like being paid for couponing at the rate of $20 an hour.

Dear Supermarket Shopper — I used to enjoy doing many things with my wife. But ever since she became an avid couponer and refunder, she has been off on her own, clipping, filing, mailing and planning her shopping trips.

She is having a great time, but I feel left out. How do I get back into the game? — Stanley B., Hollywood, Fla.

Dear Stan — You can get back into the game if you start tearing out coupons whereever you find them. Almost every magazine has a few.

You can also surprise your wife by bringing home a second "food day" edition of your newspaper to double her newspaper coupons.

Ask you wife to plan her weekly shopping trip for a time when you can go along. There's nothing wrong with your taking a look around the store and helping her search for refund forms and unexpected bargains.

If you show your interest, your wife will soon give you an important position on her coupon team.

Couponing and refunding should be a project for the whole family. Everyone can contribute and everyone should enjoy the fun and the savings.k

Dear Supermarket Shopper — After waiting several weeks for a $1 refund, I just received my proofs of purchase back with a rejection letter.

The letter says I didn't have the proper number of proofs. But I did. They were stapled to a 3-by-5 card.

If the people counting them had looked carefully, they would have seen this. Obviously they gave the card a quick look and didn't see that the proofs were all there.

Who should I complain to? Who will reimburse me for all the postage I have spent? — Lorraine T., Pittsburgh.

Dear Lorraine — The refund clearing houses used by manufacturers do make mistakes.

The person who looked at your refund request has to sort through many thousands of them each day. He or she has only a second or two to look at each of them. Sometimes that isn't enough.

You sent the proper number of proofs and you should certainly complain about the mistake. But the complaint should be sent to the manufacturer's customer-relations department — not to the clearing house.

Experience has shown that you will get better results by going straight to the horse's mouth. Also ask the manufacturer to refund your postage.

Most manufacturers' customer-relations departments are very considerate of people with complaints like yours.

You can find the manufacturer's address on the product package. Even if there is just a city and a ZIP code, your letter will get there.

Dear Supermarket Shopper — Here is a hint your readers may want to think about: I send for all the manufacturers' offers of free toys, children's items and gifts even though I have no children.

I use these things for Christmas and birthday gifts for little friends and relatives. If friends are in the hospital, I also have something to take to them.

It is also nice to put items in community Christmas baskets. Our town gives out more than 150 baskets to needy families every year, and more than 300 children enjoy their Christmas a little more because of them.

I try to encourage service groups to send for these gifts so there will be enough to fill every basket.

My husband and I are on a fixed income and don't have money for all the gifts we would like to give at Christmas. But through refunding I have lots of gifts to give these needy children — Shirley T., Cleveland, Okla.

Dear Shirley — You are an inspiration to all of us. We send you our warmest holiday wishes.

Big Brother May Have 'Ears On'

By MIKE WENDLAND

If the FCC enacts a new CB radio service at 900 MHz, one thing you can be sure will be seriously discussed is ATIS —or an Automatic Transmitter Identification System.

Ever since 1975, the FCC has been kicking around the idea for such a system. As originally envisioned, it would have been incorporated on the present 27 MHz 40-ohannel band.

But that idea was quickly dropped.

ATIS is not now practical at 27 MHz because of the tremendous number of transmitters (estimated in excess of 30 million) that are already in use and do not have, and could not be readily adapted to incorporate, a useful ATIS system, says the FCC.

CB Break

But, with a new radio servioe on unused frequencies such as the 900 MHz band, such a procedure easily could be adapted.

Basically, ATIS would activate each time a microphone was keyed, transmitting a rapid code that, when tape-recorded and played back at a slower speed by FCC field enforcement personnel, would instantly identify the transmitter's owner.

Like fingerprints, the code for each transmitter would be different. When sold, a transmitter would have to be registered with the FCC.

The FCC recognizes the bureaucratic problems such a service will create, not counting the public disdain toward what many view as Big Brotherism.

But, says the agency in the notice of inquiry filed with its proposed 900 MHz CB plan, nearly everybody who has submitted informal comments in favor of a new Personal Radio Service has emphasized the need for effective rule enforcement.

And to this end, it may well be necessary to equip 900 MHz transmitters with some type of automatic transmitter identification system.

If you have strong feelings either way, let the FCC know.

• • •

Q. We were told that a neighbor's CB interferes with our television beoause we use rabbit ears. Would an outside antenna help eliminate this?—R. B., St. Clair Shores, Mich.

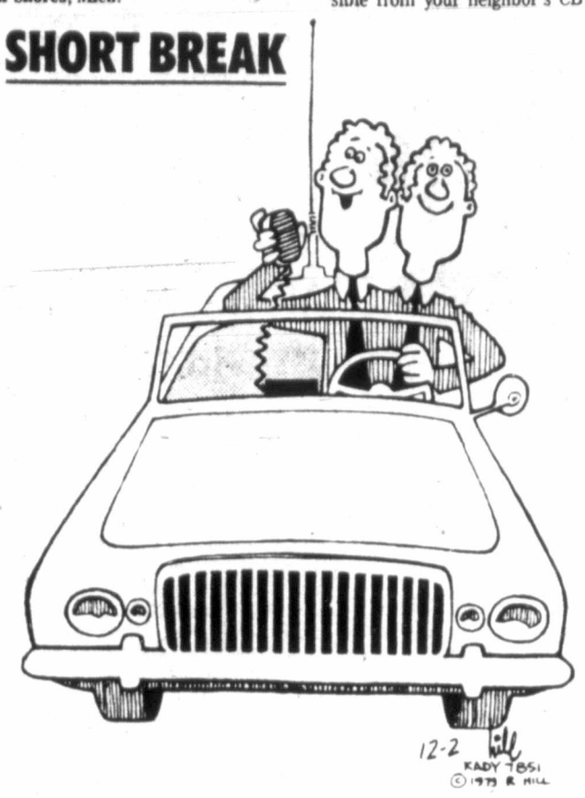
A. It probably would, though be sure to mount your TV antenna as far as possible from your neighbor's CB antenna.



YOU GOT YOUR EARS ON, GOODBUDDY? YOU GOT "GEMINI" HERE, C'MON...

Also, there's a new shielded TV antenna lead-in wire on the market that does an excellent job in filtering out unwanted signals. Check with the nearest electronic specialty store like Radio Shack.

• • •

Q. We are plagued with very bad TV interference from a CB operator. The CBer said it's because we have a black and white set. He said the color TVs are immune from interference. Is this right? —T. R., Anaheim, Calif.

A. No. Your neighbor is feeding you a line. Color television receivers are hardly immune from CB interference. Just ask the 100,000 people who complain about that to the FCC each year.

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: Everyone on CB is always complaining about how noisy the skip makes the channels. Yet most whose sets are equipped with an RF control don't use this control wisely. Turning the RF gain down will cut out most of the skip. Sure, it also cuts down operating range. But it's better to talk across town in peace than to try to talk over The Texas Ranger talking to the Bandito in Mexico.—J. G., McMinnville, Ore.

• • •

Dear Static: I read all the time about how bad CBers are who operate linear amplifiers that illegally increase their output power from 4 watts to 1,000 watts. But what about hams who do the same thing? Hams are allowed to use up to 2,000 watts. But it's common knowledge that there are amateurs on the air using many times that amount of power. That's just as bad as on CB —T. R., Rapid City, S. D.

• • •

Dear Mr. Wendland: I think that it should be against the law to sell amateur radio transmitters to CBers, unless the CBer also is a ham. Now that CB linears are so hard to buy, a lot of CBers are retooling ham transmitters to work on the CB channels. They're really messing things up with interference —R. C., Irving, Texas.

Careers

By Joyce Lain Kennedy

Assume you strike it rich, inherit enough money to live well for the rest of your life. Would you continue to work?

Yes? If so, you agree with 70 percent of Americans.

How satisfied are today's workers? Conflicting data make it hard to give definitive answers, but some studies help:

Approximately 80 percent say they're rather satisfied, with 10 percent expressing active overall dissatisfaction. Yet only about half would, if given the choice, continue in the same line of work.

Satisfaction is highest among older, middle-class workers who, unsurprisingly, have high-paying, challenging jobs in humane work settings.

Least pleased are minorities, workers under 30, blue collar workers — those who feel less control over their work. Among those most dissatisfied are workers who have had some college education but did not graduate.

Trends for the '80s? Again, data show diversity, but greater influence is expected from what pollster Daniel Yankelovich calls the "New Breed."

New Breed? These under-35 pbst World War II babies will soon comprise the majority of all workers. Nurtured in prosperity, ambitious, young and educated, this "now" generation expects far more from a day's work than a day's pay.

UNLIKE THEIR OLDER COUNTERPARTS, New Breeders place less stock in the concrete symbols of success — the new car, the nuclear family comfortably ensconsed in a suburban home.

Preoccupied with themselves, this "me" generation has the ephemeral goal of self-fulfillment. While not rejecting success outright, greater priority is placed on a lifestyle defined largely by leisure.

As the New Breed sees it, employment is not a privilege but a right. Economic security has fostered high expectations, described by Jerome Rosow of the Work In America Institute as a "psychology of entitlement."

The New Breed wants a variety of more interesting and flexible jobs; it also demands more control over the workplace.

Skepticism, spawned by a culture heavily influenced by Watergate, Vietnam and the Civil Rights movement, arms these younger workers with sometimes sharp tongues.

Distrust of big business is evident: 70 percent of those polled by the Opinion Research Corporation say they need not take orders from a supervisor if they disagree.

Yet Rosow contends that the work ethic is alive and well. He advises, however, that management must respond flexibly to draw forth effort from this fiesty generation. If so, says Rosow, we can build "industrialism with a human face."

Comment Sought On Standards

WASHINGTON (Special) — Secretary of Energy Charles Duncan has urged an extension of the comment period for six months on proposed federal energy performance standards that could add as much as $1,755 to the cost of constructing a new home.

The complex regulations, called the Building Energy Performance Standards, were released recently with a 60-day comment period.

Herman J. Smith, vice president-treasurer of the National Association of Home Builders, also requested that the implementation powers remain with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which "already has in place through its regional and area offices a network designed to work with state and local governments and the building community on codes and standards."

Smith testified before a hearing of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which is considering legislation that would transfer the implementation powers of the energy standards to the Department of Energy from HUD.

"DOE has no existing network designed to work with state and local governments or with local builders, engineers, architects and others in the building community," Smith said. "It is one thing for the federal government to develop a set of national building energy performance standards here in Washington, but quite another to assure these standards are being met by thousands of builders throughout the country."

HUD, Smith added, is best equipped to implement the standards as well as to monitor state and local compliance.

Design Features Impressive Floor Plan, Striking Exterior

By HIAWATHA ESTES

The striking exterior and impressive floor plan combine to give this home a charming personality all its own. Such a floor plan helps make a home more comfortable and pleasant in which to live. There is also more leisure time for family fun and outside pursuits.

This modest size home has been visually enlarged by the sweeping horizontal lines of the roof. Note how the used brick veneer on the front wall of the bedroom ties in with the planter which partially shields the double entry doors from the street. Each area of the plan is accessible from the spacious entry. Such an arrangement is convenient and eliminates much housework.

The "dead-end" living room is directly off the entry. A wide fireplace faces the entry. Large windows guarantee ample air circulation, light and a wide view.

The family room -kitchen is conveniently accessible from both the front and rear of the house. With the advent of the family room and ever-increasing popularity of outdoor living, an exciting dimension has been added to family entertainment. Here, the family room is only separated from the patio by a glass wall. The room itself is well lighted, airy and designed for maximum livability.

An extra large master bedroom with dressing room and private bath completes a luxurious suite usually found only in much larger homes. The other bedroom is sufficiently large for twin beds and features an 11-foot wardrobe.

There are two pullman lavatories in the back-to-back bath and additional storage is provided by three hall closets.

Complete working drawings for plan 2913 can be purchased for only $19.95 for the first set and $10 for each additional set ordered at the same time. This plan will be available at these special prices until April 2, 1980. Please allow at least three weeks for delivery. Also available are six home plan books illustrating nearly 1,000 plans — a $13 value — for only $9.95 plus $1 for postage and handling. Send all orders to: Hiawatha Estes, P.O. Box 404-J, Northridge, California 91328.

Inmates Get Training In Solar Energy

SOMERS, Conn. (AP) — Bill Shelton, Anderson Atkinson and Norman Theriault hope to find a place in the sun as solar-energy technicians when they are released from Connecticut's maximum-security state prison.

"The thing that's pleasing is that this is the first solar-energy training program in a corrections institution in the country," said Edmund Gubbins, superintendent of the correctional school district.

The program, which began a year ago with funding from the federal Energy Department, is designed to teach inmates at the Connecticut Correctional Institution at Somers skills which will make them employable when they are released.

"One of the things I learned was that very, very few people were trained as solar-energy technicians," Gubbins said.

The program, which began with a handful of textbooks, has now developed several working models of various energy-saving devices.

The instructors say the solar-energy program, which combines solar-energy technology with skills relating to air conditioning and refrigeration, also builds confidence and pride in the inmates.

"For most of us, or a lot of us, it's the first thing that's really caught our interest," said Shelton.

Robert Anderson, vocational-education instructor, who developed the course from scratch, believes the program channels the inmates' interests and energies into something that is new and fascinating.

He says it makes them feel important to be part of a field like solar energy, which is still in its infancy.

"Most of them have never had a chance. . . and they also get basic skills, which most of them have also never had," explained Anderson, who has worked at the prison for 5½ years.

The skills the inmates learn also include plumbing, electrical work and carpentry, Anderson said.

City Building Permits Dip

The Lubbock Building Inspection Department has issued permits for $472,070 in future construction activity, with commercial projects accounting for $436,670 of that total, and residential programs making up the balance of $35,400.

Mike Klein General Contractor received the largest permit—one for $225,170 in expected construction costs—to complete the basement portion of the Goddard Ranch and Wildlife Building at Texas Tech University.

A permit for $30,000 in estimated costs has been issued to Ram Construction Corp. for remodeling work at a Seven-Eleven store at 2219 4th St.

Phoenix General Construction plans to complete retail space at the South Plains Mall for an estimated cost of $21,500 for 483 square feet of floor space.

A metal warehouse has been scheduled at 3601 Globe by Nel-Ray Construction. Estimated cost is $24,000 for 6,187 square feet of space.

Hunter Construction Co. will renovate an existing building at 1101 North University for use by the City of Lubbock as a party house in the Canyon Lakes area. The work, which includes an addition to the building, is expected to cost $100,000.

A Matter Of National Honor

IT IS NOW apparent that no matter what the final outcome of the U.S.-Iranian confrontation may be that American foreign policy will be markedly affected, if not changed, in the months ahead.

It also is apparent that what direction U.S. policy takes in the future will be an issue, as it should be, in the upcoming Presidential campaign.

It is ironic that in seizing U.S. hostages, Iran's fanatical Ayatollah Khomeini has done something several presidents, Soviet challenges and concern among many in the U.S. itself have failed to do since Vietnam—that is unify American public opinion on a major foreign policy issue.

IN THAT respect, the radical "religious" rulers, who maintain a tenuous control over Iran's uncertain destiny, have done this nation and the Free World a favor.

They have alerted millions, including diplomats and heads of state, that the world indeed has slipped dangerously close to the precipice of selected anarchy.

And in so doing, they have awakened many to the fact that in the months ahead, the Free World, the Third World and Communist-dominated nations, for that matter, must get a handle on things or risk common destruction at the hands of fanatics who follow no rules and listen to no reason.

That, in essence, is the main lesson to be learned from Tehran.

BACK HOME, we would be remiss if we did not say that thus far in the crisis, President Carter has handled himself and the nation's interests most ably.

No matter what one's personal feelings and pride might dictate, from bombing the bums to mounting an Entebbe-like rescue effort, the President has followed about the only rational course possible.

His message to the Ayatollah Khomeini, and indeed the rest of the world, during his news conference last week was unmistakable. He is doing the right thing in utilizing every conceivable diplomatic avenue in a search for a solution.

And he was right in indicating that at some point in time—that to be decided in the best interests of this nation—we will take whatever steps are necessary to protect the hostages and maintain the integrity of the nation.

WE THINK Mr. Carter is to be commended for "setting the record straight" concerning the role former Sec. of State Henry Kissinger may have played in the decision to permit the Shah to come to the U.S. for needed medical treatment.

Far too many in the media have been slobbering all over themselves seeking to dig up some "plot" involving Mr. Kissinger and banker David Rockefeller.

The truth of the matter is that it matters not one whit who was responsible for the Shah coming to the U.S., it was an act of mercy and no one else's business.

We recognize the inherent reaction to such a move involved in the volatile situation which exists in Iran, but this nation can never let irrational, goaded-to-fury fanatics dictate how it conducts its business, particularly to whom it offers medical, political or religious haven.

THIS IS NOT to say that the American people themselves should not take a second look at how we are conducting our affairs abroad and at home. We should.

While commending Mr. Carter for his handling of the latest in a long line of challenges to U.S. stature, it is valid to note that he and a wishy-washy State Department, not to mention former UN Amb. Andrew Young's constant harping on "human rights," helped bring on some of our current troubles.

Selective morality and a double standard foreign policy, which at times seemed geared more to domestic political and racial results than a consistent position abroad, have played a part in "inviting" some of the insults heaped upon America in recent months.

IN THAT CONTEXT, the issue is a valid one for discussion in the months ahead.

As for the immediate future, the U.S. should have by now geared up its embassies to the extent that it can adequately protect its officials and American citizens.

And, no matter what the final disposition regarding the hostages, the Iranian leaders, who have repeatedly defied all rules of international conduct and human decency under whatever God they may claim to worship, must be punished.

Iran's leaders, the mobs who follow them and any others around the world, must be made to understand that this nation will no longer tolerate such conduct and will mete out punishment on any who dare engage in it in the future.

No matter what one might think of Israel's overall policy, its handling of terrorists, especially the PLO, is one to be admired. As a high Isaeli official told this newspaper recently: "There is one thing you, and Iran, must learn. For crime, there must be punishment."

National honor and respect demand no less.

Letters to the Editor

He Asks If Decent People Of Iran Fear To Speak Up

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

It is not reasonable to conceive that there are no mature-minded people in Iran, people who can guide themselves by their own intelligence rather than by their emotions, people who realize that theirs is a religion of reason and love and compassion rather than of hate and terror?

And yet, if there are such mature and dependable persons, why do they not take control of governmental matters in Iran and present to the world the better face of their nation and her people?

Is it that there is a silent majority of Iranians who stand idle while a very vocal and impetuous minority ruins the true image of Iran before the nations and all the peoples of the world and devastates the technological and cultural progress of Iran?

The supreme God of all creation surely does not approve. He looks with equal disfavor upon those who refuse to restrain and those who lack restraint.

Jack E. Grady, 2212 18th St.

Plainview Reader Has Say Over Wine-Growing Project

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Regarding your 11-4-79 story "U.T. Wine Industry Doomed." Wonderful!

Isn't it amazing what projects some employes of our state—especially the college system—can find on which to spend our hard-won tax dollars?

Texas needs a wine industry just like a big hole in our pockets or a hole in our heads. Maybe that is to funnel the fluid?

Nationwide we taxpayers spend huge amounts of money on rehabilitation for alcoholics, aid and welfare for families of same, expenses due to accidents by drinking drivers or on-the-job accidents, and other factors due to alcohol. More money is spent to correct the results of alcoholism than is spent on education for our children.

Now we must not only put up with the sale of alcohol but some want to even grow the grapes and battle the juice locally to create more alcoholics. Fantastic!

Why not use such educational expertise to find methods which will help wean people from that alcoholic crutch, teach the dangers of and resulting damages from alcohol? Why don't we instead of wasting the dollars use them to alleviate unwholesome conditions in our area in any number of beneficial projects? Educational opportunities for adults with little education would be advantageous.

Or far out—how about a tax deduction for nondrinkers?

Lucile Davis, 1109 Yonkers, Plainview

City Reader Says Magnet Junior High Now Needed

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Now that the Lubbock School system has a magnet elementary school and an exemplary program in a senior high school, it seems logical to me for the school system to fill the education void and create a magnet junior high school as soon as possible.

Busing Seen As Gross Waste Of Fuel In Critical Times

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

A few weeks ago, the federal judiciary ordered the Austin school board to "mix 'em up" some more, requiring the purchase of additional big yellow buses to consume more gallons of fuel which is becoming scarcer and more expensive by the hour.

On or about the same day, a directive came from the White House urging all citizens to conserve energy (drive slower, carpool, insulate, freeze in winter, swelter in summer, prepare for gas rationing and lower living standards, etc.)

Now to the point. When gasoline gets scarcer and even more expensive than it is now, will the law require the thousands of big yellow buses to continue to spew their exhaust fumes shuttling kids back and forth across the cities when neighborhood schools are available in most instances? And you know who pays the bill for this unnecessary gasoline gulping.

I will begin to believe that conservation measures should be strictly observed when the feds show their sincerity by eliminating this disgraceful waste of precious fuel.

Some say this practice should continue because it is the "law of the land." When our very existence is threatened, it's time to change such laws.

Everett Maxwell, 5411 27th St.

Influx Of Refugees From Red Nations Major Concern

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

The Communist plan of the overthrow of the U.S. government is more than likely on schedule. And what better way to overthrow us than through legal and illegal immigration?

Perfect, isn't it? The Communists said they would defeat us within, with no shots fired. Then they would bury us. Right? This is what is happening.

Where are most the immigrants coming from? Korea, Vietnam, Cuba, Panama and Nicaragua, all countries where we either lost a war or land or something we built.

And all are Communist countries. Schooled and raised and brain washed by the Communists. Plus we are now about to receive the Boat People, and are about to help the Cambodians. All Communists.

So what better way to overthrow the U.S.? And our leaders who we the people of the U.S. voted into office are not doing anything about the problem. We should wake up. We are on a downhill plunge to destruction.

What can we do? 1. Stop all immigration of communist countries. 2. Help the people in our country who need help first. Charity starts at home, not abroad. Granted we have too many people on welfare now that should not be. The most important thing that we can do is for each state to pass a law which stipulates that when a senator or House member does not vote the way that the people of his state want him to, he can be recalled and another person sent to replace him or her.

This is the main thing that we the people who foot the bills can do.

Sam H. Scroggins, Jr., 2319 35th St.

U.S. Must Count 200 Aging B-52s In SALT II, He Notes

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Most peole are aware of many obvious concessions to the Soviets granted in the proposed SALT II treaty, such as granting them the right not to count their new Backfire bomber.

However, most are not aware that more than 200 B-52s mothballed in Arizona are counted against us as part of our arsenal when it would require around a year to have them ready for combat performance. Isn't that great?

It Pays To Butter Up Man With The Bread

WASHINGTON—Neil E. Goldschmidt is not a household name. The reason for this is that he is a member of President Carter's Cabinet. Mr. Goldschmidt is Secretary of Transportation.

He would have probably remained anonymous for the rest of his term except that last week he told reporters that he would look for opportunities to deny federal funds to Chicago because Mayor Jane Byrne had decided to support Sen. Teddy Kennedy.

Since Secretary Goldschmidt is new to Washington he can't be blamed for putting Chicago on the President's hit list. He told reporters the decision had been made after consulting with White House officials.

WHAT PEOPLE didn't know until Goldschmidt's meeting with reporters is that the Department of Transportation has a $2 billion government slush fund which can be distributed to the cities for their needs at the discretion of the secretary.

While it is the taxpayers' money, the Carter people have decided to use it to keep the mayors in line.

I have no vested interest in Chicago, except never to go there in the winter, but as a taxpayer I didn't know that my money would be used to guarantee Carter's nomination in 1980.

I was so upset to hear that Secretary Goldschmidt had the authority to give or withhold government money, according to a mayor's loyalty to the President, that I called the Department of Transportation to protest.

"HOW COULD you do something like that?" I asked someone in charge.

He replied, "In spite of what you read in the newspapers Secretary Goldschmidt's decision was not a political one. We're cutting Mayor Byrne off because we feel Chicago would only waste the funds on improving its urban transportation system."

"But isn't that what the Department of Transportation's money is supposed to go for?"

"Up to a point," he said. "But it was not Congress' intent to vote appropriations which would be used by a mayor who would turn her back on the greatest President the United States has ever known."

"Then you are playing politics with the taxpayers' money."

"We most certainly are not. We have guidelines before we give federal funds to the cities.

"THE MOST important question is, does the mayor have the intelligence and executive ability to use the money wisely in improving her transportation system?

"The secretary, after consulting with transportation experts at the 'Carter for President' organization, decided that Mayor Byrne failed to meet this test."

"But you decided this only after she came out for Kennedy."

"We decided it long before that, but only announced it after she came out for Kennedy so we wouldn't hurt Mayor Byrne's feelings.

"We'd much prefer for her to believe it was a political decision rather than tell her the truth, that when it comes to transportation matters she's a very poor mayor."

"CAN YOU assure me that your action against Chicago, and any future actions you take in withholding funds from a city, has absolutely nothing to do with the upcoming election?" I demanded.

"Of course I can," he said. "The secretary has told me many times, 'My only job is to see that America's trains run on time.'

"'But I would not be serving the interests of the American people if I gave money to a mayor who doesn't even know which side her bread is buttered on.'"

Get Used To It...

DALLAS—Here I sit, in my $350 designer dress label and all), typing as fast as I can to tell you how to beat the high cost of new clothes. Buy used ones.

It's as simple as that. I took myself to a rummage sale, pawed through the racks and found just what I wanted—for $50. I also came away with a warm-up suit for $6...a tennis dress for $8...and a pair of tailored wool slacks (lined and everything) for $10.

If I'd been a little faster on the claw (sic), I'd have snagged a mink coat, too, but she outweighed me by 80 pounds of solid muscle. (I forgot to mention, you sort of have to be in shape for this kind of shopping. I'm now haunting garage sales for weight-lifting cast-offs.)

Children's clothes were a steal at this sale, and the little granddaughters are now sporting half a dozen Florence Eisemans that cost me less than $10 each.

Husbands weren't neglected either; next time you see Old Dad in an embroidered western rig, ask him where he got it.

ALL IN all, I figure I saved at least $400. And, boy, are we haute couture.

There are tricks to the kind of bargain-hunting, of course, but mastering them is merely a matter of the right motivation. And if laying out a bundle for a dress that falls apart the first time you put it on doesn't motivate you, the high price of everything else will.

You don't just wander into any old garage sale, you understand. Not unless you're running low on old jelly glasses. Leave those for the peasants while you concentrate on tracking down the quality stuff.

Almost every city worth its pollution has at least one shop that peddles used cothing to shoppers on penny-pinching budgets. They're cheaper than the discount houses, but you hardly ever stumble across a Dior or a Chloe in those places.

Your best bet is to watch the newspapers for word that the society ladies in town are putting on a charity sale to raise money for a pet cause. This is where the real goodies are, thanks to a certain spirit of competition that prevails among the upper crust.

MRS. A., FOR instance, wouldn't dream of donating a dress with an inferior label for fear Mrs. B. who always brings in Halstons and Mary McFaddens, might think twice about asking her to her daughter's debutante ball.

You think I'm kidding? Listen, there were ball gowns on those racks that had to cost anywhere from $600 to $1,000 new, and they didn't look as if they'd been worn to one deb party, never mind two or three.

Not only that, a lady who parts with her pet Adolfo suit or the latest wrinkle in Ultrasuede earns for herself a brief moment of one-upmanship and a discreet murmur of peer acceptance for her generosity. (The woman who donated her $5,000 ranch mink coat will probably be elected president of the group.)

Sales like this are big business—and hard work. The members spend all year gathering up high-priced duds from their own closets and those of their husbands, friends, neighbors and families.

COMES THE big day, they also pitch in as saleslades, cashiers, clean-up crew, whatever. And they take in $80,000. (Partly because, knowing a good thing when they see it, a lot of them turn around and buy several outfits for themselves.)

The charity cash register rings even louder in Manhattan, where the society set runs its annual "Posh sale" for the New York Association for the Blind. Last year they raised $102,000.

But they have a special gimmick going for them: They're close to the show-business world, which makes it easy to put the arm on celebrities.

This year's offering included Frank Sinatra's Saville Row suit for $100 (they start at $500) and Liza Minnelli's sequined jacket for $50 (she probably paid $250).

JOANNE WOODWARD donated a black chiffon trimmed in jewels that somebody snapped up for $150; somebody else is wearing Lauren Bacall's red leather jacket ($50); and a brown cut-velvet suit from Eli Wallach went to a local dandy for $35.

A three-piece Yves Saint Laurent cost $110; Halston's yellow Ultrasuede jacket, $45; a Molly Parnis cape, $60, Bill Blass fur-trimmed outfit, $150; and a white satin Valentino pants suit, $35.

Wearing someone else's clothes is all part of the daily business of survival, so why not face it in feathers you could never afford any other way? The trick is to carry it off with a flair.

Hint: When friends ask where you got your new Givenchy, laugh gaily and say "at a rummage sale." They won't believe you.

It could be stickier when the next luncheon you go to turns out to be in the home of the lady who donated the dress you're wearing. Tell her you had to take it in three inches all around.

Dr. Carlos McLeod Labels Himself 'People-Centered' Preacher

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
A-J Religion Writer

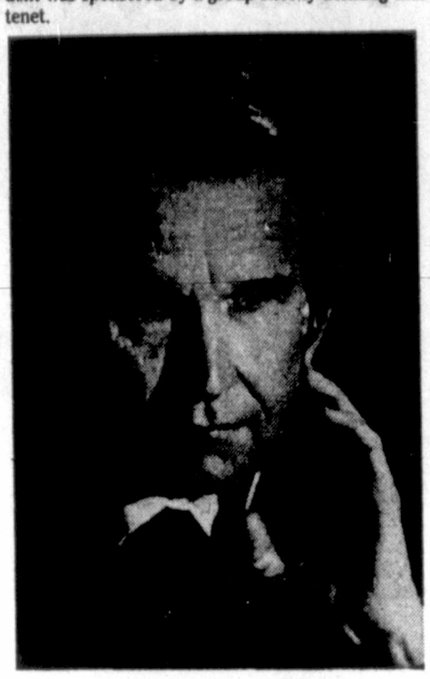
PLAINVIEW — Dr. Carlos McLeod, the first man from this part of Texas to serve as president of the Baptist General Convention of Texas in many years, considers himself first and foremost "a people-centered preacher," he told the A-J in an interview this past week.

Since his election Oct. 31 as the president of the statewide Baptist group, his mail and telephone calls have markedly increased and he has received numerous invitations to speak for church groups, he reported. He also now makes frequent trips to Dallas for meetings with other officers and staff of the church. Otherwise, he still sees his main responsibility to be for his Plainview congregation.

The West Texas pastor is looking forward to a January trip to Brazil where he will attend the Brazilian Baptist Convention and reinforce ties with churches in that country with which Texas congregations are matched in a mission emphasis exchange. The new state president also will spend some time in February at Green Lake, Wis., meeting with pastors and their spouses from that state and Minnesota, an area in this country for which Texas Baptists also have a missionary responsibility.

With the perspective of a month's reflection on the action of the state convention which was held in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center, McLeod commented on some of the issues which came before that meeting.

One of those issues which the Texas meeting inherited from the Southern Baptist Convention meeting in Houston in June was the question of belief in inerrancy of the Bible. Following his election, McLeod had affirmed his belief in this basic Baptist tenet which says that the original autographs of the Bible "are without mixture of error." He had denied, however, that his candidacy for state president was sponsored by a group strictly defining that tenet.



DR. CARLOS McLEOD

Asked to define his meaning of this concept, he said that to him it means "that the authors of the original manuscripts were divinely inspired and what they wrote contains no error."

Turning to a pastoral point of reference with which he seems most comfortable, McLeod said, "It seems inconceivable to me that anyone would come to church to hear a preacher question what God has done. What people need most is to hear what God does with human lives."

People come to church, he suggested, because of the lives they see other Christians lead. "For each mention of a pulpit witness in the Bible there are nine examples of personal witness," he pointed out.

McLeod said since his election he has often been asked about the theological question concerning his views on the Bible. He said that his pastoral experience has led him to think that theological issues often receive too much atttention when the real need within the church is for the healing news of the Gospel. He said a story from history illustrates how he feels about the attention theological issues receive. During the time of the Mohammedan seige of Constantinople, according to the story, a church council was meeting. In spite of the dangers of the seige, the main topic of the council's discussion was 'If a fly fell into holy water, would the water be contaminated or the fly sanctified?' The church today, the Plainview pastor said, is in much that kind of a situation, often answering questions which are not relevant to the day-to-day lives of church members.

On the statement which was passed at the Lubbock meeting affirming the belief in the 1963 "Baptist Faith and Message," McLeod said, "I think nearly everybody was satisfied by the action taken."

In response to a question asking for an update on the controversy surrounding the book "People of the Covenant" and its author, Dr. H. Jack Flanders, head of the Baylor University Religion Department, McLeod said he expects to have a report from the academic affairs committee of the Baylor Board of Trustees early in 1980. He reiterated the statement which was made at the state meeting that "We are committed to using the channels that are in place." He agreed that the investigation currently under way under the direction of McLeod's predecessor as BGCT president, Dr. Milton Cunningham of Houston, would be neither a whitewash nor a witchhunt but, he said, "it will be done and done right."

Commenting on the future of the Southern Baptist Church in Texas, the president said local churches are the key to continued growth. He said that people in local churches have so many hurts and stresses that they most need to hear that while God does not condone sin, He does forgive and love the sinner, as the Gospel says.

As congregations, Texas Baptists should continue doing those things for which they are noted, he said. These include a strong emphasis on evangelism, growing Sunday Schools and general strengthening of the local church.

McLeod has been pastor of the 4,241 member Plainview First Baptist Church for ten years. His wife Bonnie who will accompany him to Brazil, teaches a Sunday School class and is Mission Study chairman for the local WMU. The McLeods are parents of three daughters.

McLeod was graduated from Wayland Baptist College and Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. He serves now as a trustee of Wayland.

Armstrong Loses Case

SAN FRANCISCO (Special) — The California Supreme Court has ruled 4-3 that the state may force Worldwide Church of God head Herbert W. Armstrong to submit to questioning over the financial dealings of the church.

The Nov. 17 action clears the way for the state to take a legal deposition from the 86-year-old Armstrong, who, along with the church's chief attorney, Stanley R. Rader, has been accused by former members of the sabbatarian denominaion of misusing church funds.

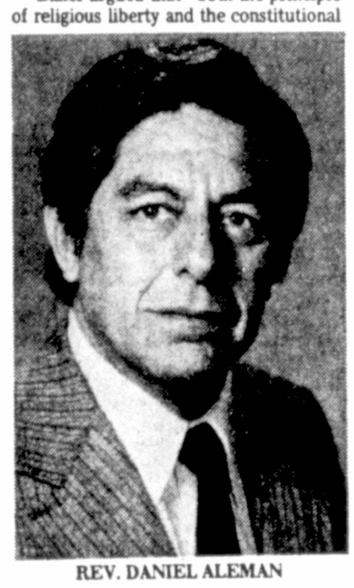
RELIGION NEWS

Last January, under orders from State Attorney General George Deukmejian, California, in effect, took over ownership of the 100,000-member denomination, claiming that churches are actually public trusts and thereby subject to inspection action by state officials.

Armstrong's supporters in his legal battle include at least 15 widely diverse religious organizatons, many of which have sought to file friend-of-the-court briefs on his behalf.

Last month, for example, John W. Baker of the Washington, D. C.-based Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, protested Deukmejian's effort to force Armstrong to submit to the deposition.

Baker argued that "both the principle of religious liberty and the constitutional doctrine of separation of church and state are jeopardized" by such an effort. He had also informed the California high court that if it granted Armstrong a hearing to argue against the deposition order, the Baptist Joint Committee would enter the case as a friend-of-the-court.



REV. DANIEL ALEMAN

The California court's split decision not to hold such a hearing means that Armstrong must wait to make his constitutional arguments if and when the case comes to trial. Thus far, the state has not brought formal charges against either Armstrong or Rader.

Although the court gave no reasons for denying the request for a preliminary hearing, three members, Chief Justice Rose Bird and Associate Justices Stanley Mosk and Frank Newman, dissented from the majority action.

Meet Features Rev. Aleman

The Rev. Daniel Aleman, an associate in the Stewardship Department of the Baptist General Convention of Texas, will be the inspirational speaker for the monthly program of the Emmanuel Fellowship today at 2 p.m. The fellowship meets at the First Mexican Mission in Idalou.

The Emmanuel Fellowship is made up of the Hispanic congregations of the Lubbock Baptist Association and meets monthly for a period of conferences and planning and an inspitrational service.

The Rev. Eugenio Valenzuela, pastor of the First Mexican Mission of Ralls, is the president of the fellowship. Juan Tovias is in charge of this month's program.

Catholic Youth: 'Good News Of Church'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (Special) — Catholic youths are "the good news of the Church," 3,200 teenagers and youth ministers were told, and with that encouraging message, they met for four days of activity at the 15th biennial National Catholic Youth Convention here in the middle of November.

The good word came from Merissa Guerin, director of the National CYO Federation at the opening session of the convention which focused on the theme, "Today We Expereience, Tomorrow We Reach Out."

Participants also explored ways to strengthen Catholic youth ministry. One of the ministry's major weaknesses is a failure to correct the perception of an instant Christian, said Mike Yaconelli, co-director of Youth Specialities and Co.

"We have to help the young understand that the Christian life is a beginning, a struggle," he said. "It doesn't happen overnight and nothing about it is black and white."

As Yaconelli said in his workshop, this instantaneous perception carries over into youth programs.

"We seem to want a youth program that is quick and effortless," he said. "One that solves everything in 45 minutes and tries to get everyone to react to God in the same way. But I'm here to say it doesn't work that way and there is no reason why it should."

Effective programs already begun in dioceses affiliated with the youth federation were outlined in workshops on fiances, sexuality, sportsmanship and retreats.

Peer ministry was another topic, and according to Brian Reynolds, program coordinator at the Northeast Center for Youth Ministry, it is necessary to maintain effectiveness in Catholic youth programs.

One often hears, he said, that the youth are the future of the church. "But I would like to offer a different perspective. They're not the future of the Church. They are the Church now."

Pat Bonner, federation executive council member, encouraged teens to reach out by offering encuragement and caring. "We don't minister in a loud voice, but in a whispery secret. We show our love and concern in quiet ways, not in words only, but in action and gifts — actions of acceptance and gifts of time," she said.

According to the Rev. Michael Tierney, youth director of the Diocese of Kansas City-St. Joseph, the choice of Kansas City as the convention site was a gift to Midwest youth programs.

"Organized Catholic youth programs are far less common in this part of the country than they are on the coasts," he said. The convention provided high visibility for Catholic youth work, he said, and it gave a shot in the arm to those already in the field, and created a learning opportunity by the presence of leaders in youth ministry.

Chinese Hard To 'Sell' On Kentucky

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Extolling the charms and advantages of Kentucky to the Chinese for possible trade contracts can run into snags because of language and cultural differences.

But officials of Kentucky's Departments of Commerce and Public Information have confronted that problem with a color-slide presentation that has been translated into the main Chinese dialect.

The multimedia division of the Public Information Department developed the slide presentation — complete with background music and multi-screen photographs—two years ago to help the state attract industrial prospects.

While it has been translated into several European languages, its adaptation to Chinese presented other difficulties.

"Some of the things did present problems," said Richard Stringer, a Commerce Department employee who translated the script into Mandarin Chinese.

Stringer said he had had problems with such things as burley tobacco, horse racing and even coal technology. He said the problem with coal technology had been with the language, but cultural differences had hampered the explanation of burley tobacco and horse racing.

"There were problems with explaining Kentuckians' love for the horse industry to people who aren't that geared to thinking about horses in a sporting capacity," Stringer said.

"Burley, as I found out, is distinct in that it is air-cured, while most tobacco is fire-cured," he said. "Instead of just saying burley tobacco, like we could in some European languages, we had to explain that it is air-cured and distinct to Kentucky."

There were also some difficulties in translating Kentucky's state song, "My Old Kentucky Home," into Chinese. One part of the song mentions "children rolling on the cabin floor."

"There is no real concept of log cabin in China; it just doesn't exist and hasn't been known to exist," Stringer said. "One can't translate into Chinese the feeling behind the log cabin, what it means to American culture and Kentucky history. So you lose in the translation when you have to explain it only as my old Kentucky home.

"But if it was translated as cabin, it wouldn't make any sense."

Stringer learned Chinese while studying and teaching for two years in Taiwan.

University of Kentucky engineering professor David Koa, a native of China, read the script, while Stringer helped members of the multimedia division place Chinese characters in the proper place on the slides.

Redeemer Lutheran Church Installing New Pastor Today

The Rev. Francis Mennenga will be installed as pastor of the Redeemer Lutheran Church, 2221 Ave. W, today at 3 p.m. Participating in the installation service will be the Rev. Richard Rist, pastor of St. Paul Lutheran Church of Wilson, and the Rev. Paul Rueckwald, interim pastor of the host church.

Mennenga comes to Lubbock from Hartley, Iowa, where he served for seven years as pastor of St. Paul Lutheran Church.

The new Lubbock minister was graduated from Nebraska State Teachers College in Kearney, Neb., and also was graduated from Concordia Theological Seminary, Springfield, Ill. He has done graduate study at Concordia Seminary in St. Louis and and also at Concordia Theological Seminary in Fort Wayne, Ind.

He served as director of continuing education for the Iowa District West.

Mennenga and his wife, the former Martha Tabor Shumway, are parents of two sons.

Following today's installation, a recpetion will be held in the parish hall honoring the new pastor and his family.

FLASHOVER PHENOMENON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A small fire needs only two minutes to become a major blaze. A phenomenon called flashover can spread a minor incident throughout a room, says the National Bureau of Standards, which is researching to the subject. In only two minutes, a dropped match or cigarette, a wastebasket or a kitchen grease fire can spread through the room, the agency says. If such a fire cannot be easily put out by one person before the two minutes have elapsed, NBS recommends vacating the house immediately and calling the fire department from a neighbor's residence.

Supreme Court Rejects Methodist Camp Claim

WASHINGTON (Special) — The U.S. Supreme Court has rejected a claim by a United Methodist camp meeting that it should be reinstated as a legitimate local government with police powers.

The high court's action in effect leaves standing a ruling earlier this year by New Jersey's supreme court striking down a state law which conferred municipal status on the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting, a seaside resort town run by Methodists since 1870.

Questions concerning the constitutionality of Ocean Grove's special status arose in 1976, after town police picked up Louis J. Celmer Jr. charging him with driving while intoxicated, speeding and disregarding a traffic signal. When the local court convicted him, Celmer appealed in Monmouth County Court. That court held that the Ocean Grove Municipal Court was not lawfully established and was therefore without jurisdiction in the case.

The state of New Jersey then appealed to a higher state court which reversed the county court. But that court was in turn reversed by the state supreme court, setting the stage for a final appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Ocean Grove was settled around 1870 by a small group of Methodist clergymen. Although it has served as something of a resort retreat center ever since, the town itself was incorporated in 1870 and was gradually given increased authority to run its own affairs, including having a police force and a municipal court.

In 1894 similar police powers were expanded by the state legislature to apply to "any camp meeting association or other corporation. . . for the purpose of providing any religious body or society with a permanent camp meeting ground or place for religious service."

The Ocean Grove Association argued unsuccessfully in a written brief submitted to high court justices that all powers specified in the law were "secular in nature, directed toward the good order, health and welfare" of the town.

In its 7-0 decision last June striking down the law, the New Jersey high court ruled that "in effect, the legislature has decreed that in Ocean Grove the church shall be the state and the state shall be the church." Ocean Grove has now been placed under the jurisdiction of Neptune Township.

Most Inventions Result Of Systematic Attempts To Solve Specific Problems

CONNECTIONS
TECHNOLOGY AND CHANGE

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the 13th in a series of 15 articles exploring "Connections: Technology and Change." In this article historian Lynn White Jr. examines how inventions come about. This series was written for Courss By Newspaper, a program of University Extension, University of California, San Diego, funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities. By LYNN WHITE Jr.

How the minds of invntors work is a puzzling problem. Why people invent what they do, when they do, remains a mystery.

Indeed, there may be no such single thing as "the innovative process." A study of a number of different inventions shows that a variety of factors enters into technological creativity. Most inventions, however, result from systematic attempts to solve specific problems.

Take the horseshoe. The world should be full of monuments to the unknown genius who first nailed iron shoes to the feet of a horse.

For nearly 3,000 years after its domestication, the horse was used in warfare and sport, but only for fairly light hauling — for example, of chariots. One difficulty arose because the yoke-harness was transferred from oxen, to which it was well adapted, to horses, on which it was very inefficient for reasons of anatomy.

At last, about A.D. 800, a new harness, consisting of a rigid horse collar connected to the wagon by traces, appeared in Europe, perhaps having come from Central Asia. Without adding cost, it increased the pulling capacity of a team of horses by four or five times.

But another problem had to be solved before the new harness could become really effective. In moist regions like northern Europe, the hoofs of horses are much more fragile than those of oxen. They break easily and wear down quickly with hard usage.

OUR INVENTOR, DOUBTLESS A BLACKSMITH who lived in northern Europe during the late ninth century, was probably familiar with the iron sandals that ancient veterinarians wired to broken hoofs to help their healing. But he also knew that these often worked loose and chafed the horse's feet.

He had a sudden, breakthrough idea: to reduce wear and breakage, he would "nail" iron shoes to the hoofs! It was a bold, even foolhardy, notion. Horses were valuable, and to lame one deliberately would certainly have been a crime in his society. But he hammered on those shoes and they worked.

About A.D. 900 nailed horseshoes began to spread swiftly on the plains from the Atlantic into central Siberia. The importance of horses in the medieval and early modern development of agriculture, transport, and early industrialization is indicated by the fact that even today, when horses are used mainly for sport, the standard measure for the work capacity of any engine — electrical, internal combustion, or other — is called "horsepower."

Our debt to that anonymous blacksmth is immense. Clearly, he had thought his problem through before he drove those nails.

THERE ARE TIMES, HOWEVER, when too much awareness of past experience can handicap inventors. The development of the internal combustion engine — which evolved from the cannon — offers an example.

The formula for gunpowder reached Europe from China by 1260. But in both East and West, gunpowder was used not in guns but simply in rockets, "Roman" candles, and firecrackrs, although often for military ends. The cannon was invented in Europe, more than half a century later. It appears at Florence in 1326, and we have a picture of one in England in 1327. The first known Chinese cannon is dated 1332: the idea was probably taken to China by an Italian merchant, for many of them were trading there at that time.

The cannon is a one-cylinder internal combustion engine. Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519) was the first engineer to glimpse its non-military potential: he tried to substitute a piston for the ball, but failed. Several inventors in the 17th and 18th centuries followed Leonardo's intuition, but without success. The trouble was that all of them were too keenly aware of the cannon as the source of their ideas, so they kept trying to use gunpowder as their fuel.

Not until the 19th century did engineers conclude that powder was too clumsy to run a continuously operating engine. They then turned for their power to the lighter distillates of petroleum — like kerosene or gasoline — that first had been produced by medieval Byzantine and Islamic alchemists for chemical warfare.

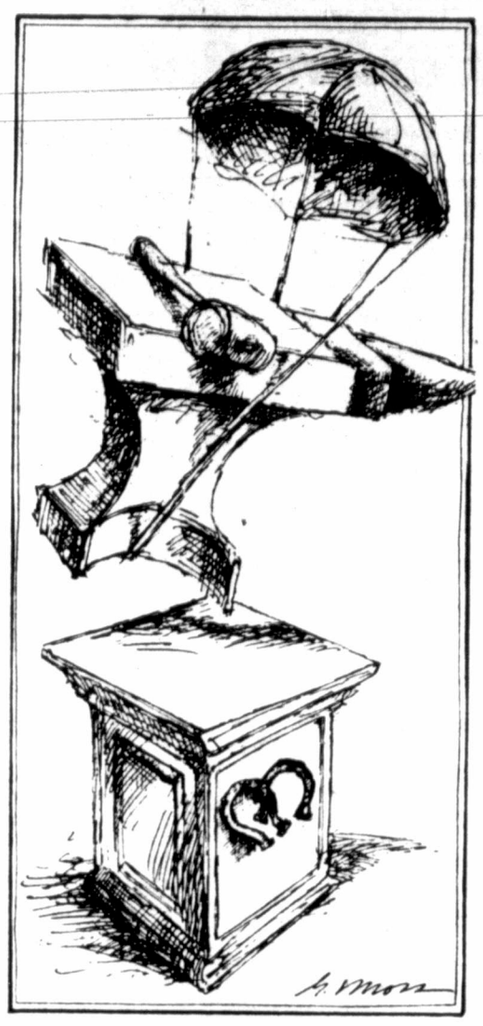
In inventing, knowing too much may be as great an obstacle as knowing too little because it may hinder spontaneity.

CONCERN FOR HUMAN SAFETY has often been a motive for invention —as in the case of the crankshaft.

Many of our internal combustion engines today depend on crankshafts for conversion and transmission of motion. Indeed, modern machine design is inconceivable without the crankshaft. It was invented shortly before 1335 by Guido da Vigevano, a famous medic who was then in Paris as personal physician to the queen of France.

Guido was interested in reducing casualties among soldiers pushing siege towers toward enemy walls. If the men could move a tower from inside it rather than from the outside, they would be better protected from enemy fire. So he drew two diagrams of rolling towers, each equipped with a double or compound crank in the center of each of its two axles. He was so pleased with this notion that he also sketched a submarine propelled by paddle-wheels turned from inside by man-operated crankshafts.

Engineers in the French royal service were clearly interested. They developed Guido's device for the theatrical machinery of the great pageants of the court at Paris.



In the 15th century, crankshafts became part of the accepted engineering repertory of Europe.

THERE IS ONE EARLY instance when we can almost look into the inventor's mind at the moment when he produced an invention of much significance for our own century: the parachute.

In London there is the sketchbook of an anonymous engineer, probably of Siena in Tuscany, that dates from the late 1470s and early 1480s. At one point, he seems to be worrying about a friend imprisoed in a tower. Is there any way for the captive to jump and still survive? We see a drawing of a man dropping from a considerable height, his fall braked by two large, fluttering cloth streamers attached to his belt. In his mouth is a sponge to protect his jaws from the shock of landing. He looks terrified — and should be.

The next pages of the manuscript are filled with military engines and the like. But our engineer-sketcher is worried about that man jumping. The streamers won't decelerate his fall enough. Something more effective is needed. So, after 21 pages, our jumper reappears. The sponge is now strapped around his head so that if he cries out in fright he will not lose it. The streamers have been replaced by a conical parachute, the world's first.

A very few years later, Leonarda da Vinci sketeched a pyramidal parachute. About 1615 a Hungarian bishop published a book on new engineering devices that contained the first printed picture of a parachute. Thereafter, every European engineer knew the theoretical possibility of parachutes; but there were no actual situations in which one was needed.

ONLY AFTER THE MONTGOLFIER brothers of France started ballooning in 1783 did the parachute find a function — to allow descent from a gas-filled balloon. The first human jump with one was made that same year. Our anonymous Senese engineer had created the idea of a device that remained dormant, althouh known, for 300 years before it was used.

In our own time, in every major army, parachute troops are the spearhead of swift infantry attack, and without parachutes the manned exploration of space might well have proved infeasible.

In pure science, great discovery, especially if it has technological overtones, occasionally comes by accident or happy chance to researchers. Famous examples are Hans Christian Oersted's observation in 1819 of the relation between magnetism and electricity, William H. Perkin's discovery of aniline dyes in 1856, and Alexander Fleming's of penicillin in 1928.

In engineering, such luck is curiously rare. Inventors seem to have to work for everything they invent.

For them, fairy godmothers are in short supply.

RAPID STRIKE—Paratroopers of the 2nd Batallion, 505th-Infantry descend on the drop zone in a joint Army-Air Force exercise in 1966. The idea for the parachute was developed 500 years ago, centuries before it had any practical application.

Positive Thinking

By Norman Vincent Peale

LIKE MANY OTHER PEOPLE these days, I lead a very busy and active life in a world of rush and tension. And, while my mission in life is to do what I can to help other people find solutions to their problems, I also must solve my own problems.

I had this brought home to me recently in a curious way. I had arrived at Grand Central Station in New York with only a few minutes to catch my train. On the run, I picked up a newspaper and looked for something else to read on my trip at the newsstand. My attention was caught by a title on the cover of one magazine, "How To Have All the Strength You Need In Fifteen Minutes". The price of that particular magazine was seventy-five cents and I decided it was worth the investment; I needed some additional strength at that moment. So I threw down my change, pocketed the magazine and caught my train with only seconds to spare.

After I finished reading the paper, I remembered "All The Strength You Need In Fifteen Minutes". It was an intriguing title and I thought I might get an idea for a sermon or a column from it. So I turned to the page on which the article appeared. Imagine my astonishment when I was confronted by my picture and found that I was the author of the piece! My publisher had sold a selection from one of my books to this magazine, and the editor had selected a new title for it.

I felt cheated, let down; I wanted my money back. Then I was amused to think I had fallen for the title. "You were looking for somebody to give you additional strength", I reminded myself, "only to find that the somebody was you."

ISN'T THIS EQUALLY TRUE for each of us? The Bible says that "The Kingdom of God is within you" and I take that to mean that all of God's blessings of strength and peace and power and achievement are real potentials within us waiting only to be released. Unfortunately, we do not have enough faith in ourselves and in our own resources; we look to somebody else to solve our problems for us. We reach for any panacea offered by another person; we fail to remember that the final solution is without ourselves all the time and cannot be found until we reach within for it.

How do you release these forces within you? How do you tap this inner power? There is a simple and practical technique for doing so. First, develop faith enough in yourself to believe that you can find a solution to every problem, no matter how baffling and difficult. Tell yourself, "The answer is within me to meet this situation and I am now summoning my mind to deliver the insights and strengths which this solution calls for." Such affirmation of faith in your own creative powers will bring your powers into play. Your own personality will try to measure up to the faith you have in yourself.

Make use of one of the greatest abilities you possess, that of imagination. That word means the process of "image-ing", that is, the forming of mental images. That which we image or imagine when printed upon the mind and firmly held there becomes in time our deepest desire. One of the basic principles of psychology is the power of the realizable wish. Every force you possess tries to make actual that which with all your heart you really seek. There is a deep difference between what we think we want and what we really want to do or be. That which you print indelibly on your mind and which you build by images tends to come to you (either good or bad); so be sure it's the image of something good and worthwhile.

But more is required than faith in yourself or the use of imagination. The real power that is within you can only be released by the one who put it there, namely God.

Dr. Teegarden Elected To Church Post

ST. LOUIS (Special) — Dr. Kenneth L. Teegarden of Indianapolis, Ind., was re-elected as general minister and president of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) during the recent General assembly of that denomination.

Teegarden, a native of Cushing, Okla., was formerly regional minister of Texas. He will continue to lead the General Assembly for the next six years, but then cannot be elected to another term because the age limit for that office is 65.

Dr. Thomas J. Youngblood Jr., minister of Central Chritian Church of San Antonio, was elected as the sixth moderator of the 1.2 million member denomination by the representatives meeting at the General Assembly.

In other action, the General Assembly turned down a bid to insist that Disciples use male pronouns in referring to God on the grounds that it would limit freedom of expression.

Delegates to the St. Louis meeting took up an offering which amounted to $30,000 for Cambodian refugee relief.

Evil Intent Of Hoodlums Must Be Countered By Householder

By SGT. SIDNEY LYLE
Odessa Police Department

To millions of Americans, the motto "Be Prepared" is their daily byword. The alert citizen must prepare each day for work, prepare for planned changes in his life-styles, and always remain prepared to meet the unexpected.

We aren't the only ones who live up to that motto of preparedness. The thief, the hoodlum, the degenerate who believes he can do no wrong is also planning ahead. He is prepared to take your possessions and leave in his wake the destruction of what he doesn't want.

It is therefore essential that we counter his evil intent with safety and security preparation that make it difficult for the thief to operate. We must have adequate locks on our doors—and use them. A lock that is not locked becomes nothing more than decorative hardware. Certainly an unlocked lock will not keep out a thief or burglar.

But doors aren't the only problem. Windows have been found to be the point of entry in one of five resedential burglaries. Unfortunately 80 percent of the illegal entries made through windows were through those that were

To have secure doors and windows will all but eliminate most burglaries and other related crimes against the home and against the family and will give you that extra margin of security. Being prepared will make the marginal difference.

Government Is Inflation Culprit

Esther Peterson is Special Assistant to the President for Consumer Affairs. Her ignorance about inflation is illustrated by this recent remark: "The dictionary definition of inflation has become somewhat obsolete; an increase in the money supply is only one of many causes of inflation. If it were [the basic cause], we would have been able to solve our inflation problem long ago. Today inflation refers to the general increase in prices."

Mrs. Peterson is not the only government official who is deceiving people about inflation. Alfred E. Kahn, President Carter's chief inflation fighter, blames television! Kahn told TV Guide magazine that television programs show "big cars, one-family houses, luxurious consumption, no car pools,...(but) no wonder ing how to stretch a five dollar bill to buy enough hamburger." He said that "television can help us understand that inflation results, in the last analysis, from all of us demanding more than our economy can supply." In short, consumers are the cause of inflation, he says.

It is because such ignorance — if that is all it is — permeates the Carter Administration that this country now suffers a 15 percent increase in the cost of living.

In short, Esther Peterson, Alfred Kahn, and big spending liberals in Congress are wrong, as government data reveals, and as many noted economists have explained.

Many big spenders in the Congress have joined Esther Peterson in looking for a scapegoat. OPEC is currently a popular one. But information published by the federal Government itself puts the lie to that notion. Nearby is a table that illustrates that the Federal Government, not OPEC, is the chief creator of inflation. From 1974 to 1978 the OPEC price per barrel rose 18 percent, while the consumer price index rose 32 percent — almost twice as fast.

As the Table shows, during the same period that OPEC prices rose 18 percent, federal government spending approved by Congress rose by 54 percent, three times as fast. The huge deficits Congressmen voted for raised the Federal debt by 60 percent, which in turn forced up the U.S. money supply by 42 percent, all several times the rise in OPEC prices.

One of the reasons why OPEC raised its prices again this year is that the increasing number of American dollars printed by the Federal Government make each dollar worth less. Proof of this is the fact that, measured in terms of gold, a barrel of OPEC oil today costs less than it did twenty years ago!

Financial columnist Louis Rukeyser points out that "rising wages and prices no more cause inflation than a baby gives birth to its parents. Higher prices may be the way the average person finally perceives inflation, but they are merely its pernicious symptoms. Inflation is a money disease.

THE CAUSE OF INFLATION — GOVERNMENT

| | 1974 | 1978 | % Change |
|---|---|---|---|
| OPEC OIL PRICE | $11.11 | $13.10 | 18% |
| CONSUMER PRICE INDEX | $147.7 | $195.3 | 32% |
| PETROLEUM'S SHARE OF PERSONAL CONSUMPTION $ | 5.2% | 4.9% | -6% |
| FEDERAL SPENDING (BILLIONS) | $299.3 | $461.0 | 54% |
| FEDERAL DEBT (BILLIONS) | $486 | $780 | 60% |
| M-2 MONEY SUPPLY (BILLIONS) | $612 | $872 | 42% |
| VALUE OF DOLLAR COMPOSITE INDEX | 102 | 89 | -13% |

Warren Brookes — Boston Herald American

"The cost of the things we buy is relevant to a serious discussion of inflation only to the extent that the excessive printing of paper money is the cause of higher price tags. Look at it this way: Even in terms of a constant dollar, changing forces of supply and demand will quite naturally raise some prices and lower others..."

But there is a solution, if enough Americans demand it. It is that the Federal Government stop the printing presses that are turning out increasingly worthless dollars. As internationally acclaimed economist Milton Friedman has said, "There is one thing which government and government alone can do. Government...has an effective printing press on which it can turn out green pieces of paper as a result, government and government alone is the source of inflation. Nobody else is responsible for it.

Now that you realize that the Federal Government causes inflation, we urge you to join us in demanding that the Congress take appropriate action. Fill in the coupon on this page and return it to the Committee which printed this Bulletin. It Can Be Done!

It's time for lower taxes.

Because many "hidden taxes" are never seen by consumers, some people find it hard to believe that governments at all levels are now consuming over 45% of an average person's earnings. TAX REFORM IMMEDIATELY (TRIM) is a nonprofit, nonpartisan, nationwide network of educational committees founded by The John Birch Society to achieve "lower taxes through less government."

Taxpayers Taken For A Ride

The cost to taxpayers of travel by federal personnel is estimated at more than $10 billion a year. While politicians and bureaucrats are scheming to stop private citizens from driving their automobiles, at any given time some 22,000 "civil servants" are traveling somewhere at taxpayers expense. Moreover, even the Federal Government's own General Accounting Office considers 17 percent of such travel to be frivolous.

Taxes — And Your Car

Howard Jarvis, author of the famous Proposition 13, bought a new car this year for $8,000. He did a study of all the many different taxes imposed during production of the vehicle and discovered they amounted to $4,550. This is more than half the total cost of the automobile!

Influence Americans...

Government Propaganda

The Federal Government is taxing and spending at least $2.5 billion annually to influence the way American people think. A survey conducted by U.S. News & World Report turned up thousands of government information specialists in 47 federal agencies and commissions earning a total of $109 million, a sum they said is "only a fraction of the actual payroll" for propaganda. In fact, "nobody knows how many people are engaged in 'trumpeting the works of government.' Official estimates are about 20,000." Every audit and effort to determine the actual number has fizzled, the survey said, "because the publicity network is so widespread and the identities and activities of many of those involved are disguised by vague titles."

The survey noted: "Uncle Sam is one of the nation's top 20 advertisers, with outlays rivaling those of such business giants as Coca-Cola and Procter & Gamble."

The Federal Government has so many welfare and subsidy programs it cannot even count them all!

About the Votes

On Page Four

TRIM chooses final votes on bills involving a billion dollars or more of your taxes. On a few occasions we discuss bills which do not have a precise dollar figure, but which nevertheless will have a significant economic impact.

The general public is little interested in how Congress decided to spend billions of tax dollars, but that it did so. The general public is interested in results. They can and do understand that Congress passes laws. In short, they are especially interested in votes on final passage.

The votes on page four involve $263 billion of your tax dollars, which costs each household $3,457. Please study these votes, and then let your Representative know whether or not you agree with the way he voted. After all, it is your hard-earned money that is involved.

Congress slapped HEW on the wrist by deducting $500 million from its budget request because of "waste, fraud and abuse," but H.E.W. still ended up with $4 billion more than it had received in fiscal 1979! | FISCAL 1980 APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE COMMERCE, JUSTICE AND RELATED AGENCIES. H.R. 4392. The State Department constantly plays a major role in overthrowing anti-Communist governments, and in rushing millions of dollars of aid to Communist terrorists who then seize control of such governments (such as in Nicaragua). The Commerce Dept. continues to encourage American businessmen to trade with Communist countries. It is treason, pure and simple. But the bill passed 299-93. (Congressional Record 7/12/79, pg. ## PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

AN INNOVATION IN THE MERCHANDISING of High Plains cotton has been introduced this season with a new Telcot on-call fast-flow contract.

The contract, under which growers get a stipulated premium over the average Telcot trading price and have the option of fixing their prices (or selling) based on how cotton has been trading on the electronic medium, is offered by Hohenberg Brothers Cotton, now a division of Cargill, Inc.

Growers, once their cotton is green-carded and in Telcot, can fix their price on all or any portion of the crop on any trading day of their choice through next July 31. The premiums, which are keyed on the quality — primarily micronaire — at different gin points, range mostly from 35 to 150 points.

Hohenberg is obligated for any storage charges against the cotton after the warehouse receipts — which are to be turned over promptly — have been delivered. This means, in the great majority of instances, that growers would have no further storage charges beyond the standard costs for the fi rst month, regardless of when they fixed their prices (or sold).

"PROMPT SHIPMENT OF A BALE OF COTTON after delivery to a warehouse can produce significant savings in storage and interest costs," officials explain, "and may facilitate additional export sales that otherwise would be lost."

An important, forward-looking aspect is that the pricing mechanism is separated from the physical movement of the cotton. The new contract is aimed at providing a fast, systematic and orderly flow of cotton.

Bottlenecks or inefficiency in the movement of cotton add to costs, and all system costs eventually and inevitably are passed back to the farmer. Costs from f.o.b. the gin to f.o.b. the mill are reported to be rising at about twice the general rate of inflation.

These rising costs are described by some as "horrendous." When cotton doesn't flow through to the customer rapidly and expeditiously, industry officials point out, costs escalate to burdensome proportions very quickly.

Under the fast-flow concept, where time is of the proverbial essence, cost-flow savings can be passed back to the farmer. The premium to the farmer is based on Hohenberg's gamble of being able to move the cotton rapidly against sales commitments the firm already has made or is making.

THE UNIQUE HIGH PLAINS CONTRACT gives area growers an on-call price-fixing option similar to successful marketing options which have been available to producers in the Mid-South and Far West for many years.

Hohenberg initiated an on-call contract in the Memphis territory about 13 years ago. That concept has grown steadily there and has been expanded to other areas of the Cotton Belt, with the notable exception of West Texas.

The on-call contract elsewhere is based on the New York futures market. But neither farmer nor merchant has been amenable to on-call volume transactions for West Texas cotton tied to the New York market because of the erratic behavior of the basis, the difference between local spot prices and futures.

With an on-call option in this region now tailored to the Telcot system, described by some as the most accurate barometer of spot market values in the United States or per haps even the world because it reflects what actually is happening on a large volume of trading within certain quality parameters, the new contract is seen as offering benefits to everyone involved.

Growers entering the contract get an irrevocable letter of credit, backed by the Bank of America, to assure payment on all cotton entering the fast-flow program.

"WE BELIEVE EXPORT SALES OF U. S. cotton this season could be in excess of 8.5 million bales," says Julian Hohenberg, board chairman of the Memphis-based Hohenberg firm.

"If we in the United States are going to live up to our commitments, we have to get the cotton out," he adds. "And the more we get out, the stronger the price is in the country."

Last season, he points out, exports totaled about 6.2 million bales (480 pounds). But there were carryover sales of unshipped cotton of about 900,000 bales. Export sales this season already had reached almost 6.7 million running bales through Nov. 18. The demand is there, Hohenberg says, if the cotton can physically be shipped.

"We are very anxious to make this (new on-call progra m) work," says the head of the 100-year-old Hohenberg firm.

The company has moved a "first team" into Lubbock for the cotton season. The head traffic manager is here, along with computer heads — assistants in the computer department now are running that aspect of the Memphis operation — and a force of classers.

Included are experts to coordinate warehouse-transportation functions. Cargill has its own fleet of leased rail cars and trucks and operates port facilities on the Gulf Coast.

But since the whole program is predicated on timeliness, volume contracting must be achieved quickly. Otherwise, although there have been no indications of this to date, the on-call option could be withdrawn from those not already in the program or the premiums could be reduced for late-comers.

Veteran Grain Head To Retire

GRAIN LEADER RETIRES — Frank M. Phariss has announced his retirement as general manager of Producers Grain Corp., based in Amarillo, effective Jan. 1. Milo, wheat and corn are marketed to 19 foreign countries by PGC, which annually handles about 120 million bushels of grain, compared with only 3 million bushels after it was organized in 1938. The PGC has an 8-million-bushel terminal elevator in Lubbock.

AMARILLO (Special) — Frank M. Phariss — who has strived to sell grain for farmers since before the second world war — has announced his retirement as general manager of Producers Grain Corp.

However, even though Phariss has the itch to go on his way, he will remain with PGC one more year as an adviser consultant.

"Our sole purpose in this thing is to find markets for the farmer," says Phariss, noting that PGC recently agreed upon a $90 million grain contract with a Japanese firm.

"Through our contacts, we are in the world market and offer the farmer's grain to foreign countries practically every day."

But in 1938, recalls Phariss, the exporting of grain was virtually unheard of, especially on the High Plains of Texas and Oklahoma. But a group of country elevator owners in Texas decided wheat of the plains could be marketed more efficiently. Thus, PGC was born.

In April of that year, says Phariss, 29 elevators borrowed $1,900 and organized the cooperative. A 2-million-bushel elevator was leased in Amarillo.

In 1941, a Fort Worth terminal was built. In 1944, another PGC entity, feed production, began when a feed mill was built here. Later, PGC expanded to Plainview, Lubbock and Corpus Christi with terminals to upgrade the grain pipeline for farmers.

Today, PGC has a 7-million bushel terminal and a 5-million bushel facility in Plainveiw; a terminal with a 6.5-million bushel capacity in Fort Worth; an 8-million bushel terminal in Lubbock; and a 7-million bushel export facility on the Gulf Coast at Corpus Christi.

Phariss is a native of Wichita Falls and has lived in the Rolling-High Plains area of Texas all his life. Before joining PGC, he was with the Santa Fe Railway accounting department.

"I then took a temporary assignment with Farmers National Grain Corp.," says Phariss, which was "an old association for cooperatives that went bankrupt that year (1938).

"Then came the regional cooeratives — PGC, Union Equity and others, about eight in all," he adds.

Phariss had planned to take a job with the U.S. Department of Agriculture. But in a decision for which farmers can be thankful, he remained with PGC.

In 1942, he was named controller of the cooperative, a job he held until 1948, when he was appointed assistant general manager.

Phariss became executive vice president of the cooperative in 1952 and general manager in 1965, replacing PGC's then head man, J. Frank Triplett.

Phariss, in his entire PGC career, has worked to sell, sell, sell — from Tokyo to Israel.

"The export market became a major part of the business in 1945 and 1946," he says, "even though domestic markets were the leading sales points just after the war.

"Now, the domestic business is probably not over 15 or 20 percent of the grain trade," adds the veteran grain handler, who points out that farmers 30 and 40 years ago had a grain transport system the opposite of what is seen today.

"Years ago, we had sufficient rairoad cars and not as many markets. Now, the transporation system is lagging behind the demands of export markets," he says.

PGC has been known as the nation's largest exporter of grain sorghum, a market created after the development of hybrid seed and irrigation on the High Plains.

Milo, wheat and corn are marketed to 19 foreign countries by PGC, which annually handles about 120 million bushels of grain, compared with only 3 million bushels in 1938.

"PGC's major accomplishments have been getting the markets we have and the fact that we have become a real factor in the world market," notes Phariss, who urges producers to continue to search for new markets worldwide.

"The best advice I can give to farmers is for whatever association they might belong to look at constant market development in foreign countries and every possibility for market growth," he says.

Phariss is one of about 300 PGC employees. The cooperative has 219 member elevators in Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Nebraska, New Mexico and Arizona. It has a major cattle feeding operation in the Texas High PLains as well.

The modest Phariss does not like to mention the numerous professional groups with which he is associated. But to name a few, he has served on boards or been a member of the Texas Grain and Feed Association, U.S. Feed Grains Concil, Texas Federation of Cooperatives and the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives.

He also has served as a member of the Agricultural Policy Advisory Committee for the USDA. He and his wife, Dorothy, are members of the Methodist Church.

Those involved with the grain industry agree PGC has lost an outstanding leader with PHariss' retirement. They also agree that farmers have lost a good friend at the marketplace.

Mexico Boosts Cotton Exports

MEXICO CITY (Reuters) — Mexican cotton exports for the 1979-80 July to June crop year are expected to reach 1 million bales, compared with 963,000 in the previous season, the Agriculture Department said.

It said production for the 1979-80 year is likely to be slightly higher than the 1.49-million-bale output the previous year.

The department said that for 1978-79, Mexico's principal buyers of cotton were China (439,000 bales), Japan (247,000), Chile (72,000), Italy (51,000), United States (38,000), and Taiwan (28,000).

Cotton Output In Pakistan Due Increase

ISLAMABAD (Reuters) — Pakistan is expected to produce around 4 million bales of cotton during the 1979-80 season, a government announcement said.

This would be up from 2.9 million last season and a recent U. S. Department of Agriculture estimate of 2.85 million.

The government has directed the Cotton Export Corp. to export 1.5 million to 2 million bales this season, the announcement said. The USDA recently estimated 1979-80 exports at 800,000 bales after 250,000 last year.

The CEC already has purchased 700,000 bales from the new crop for export, much of which already has been contracted, the government announcement said.

1980 Prices For Corn Projected

URBANA, Ill. (Reuters) — University of Illinois agricultural economist Thomas A. Heironymous said he believes corn prices may be stable next year but that soybean meal prices may slide.

Writing in the latest edition of the National Pork Council's "Pork Trends" magazine, Heironymous said corn supplies are in near balance in relation to feed requirements while meal supplies are abundant.

He said cash corn prices may hover around $2.70 a bushel next year until the 1980 crop becomes a factor. He noted that current livestock prices indicate that a Chicago cash corn price of $2.70 is the breakeven point.

Heironymous said he based his forest on corn feed availability of 4.5 billion bushels with exports in 1980 as large as 2.5 billion bushels.

Heironymous said an expected large soybean carryover, abundant meal and unprofitable hogs suggest 1980 meal prices lower than in the past year, probably between $1.50 and $170 bulk in decatur, Ill.

He forecast 1980 soybean meal feed availability at 19.2 million tons, adding that USDA crush projections indicate 25.9 million tons of meal will be produced and that exports will likely be steady to smaller.

"Meal will be abundant in relation to corn," he wrote. "As meal supplies are large relative to corn, the price is low relative to corn and vice years."

The economist said he believes transport problems, coupled with another huge corn crop in western U.S. areas, will lead to unusually large locational differences next year.

Noting that most of the carryover is west of the Mississippi River, he said transportation tie-ups will put corn prices higher in the south and east Corn Belts and keep then lower in the west.

MORE RESIDUE

The number of tons of wood residues now removed from national forests is more than six times greater than in 1973 when the federal government first opened the woods to the public for free firewood. More than 7.3 million green tons were picked up in fiscal 1978, compared with 1.1 million in 1973.

GRAVITY TECHNIQUE—The most common method used to remove coal from unit train cars at their destination is to turn the cars upside down and invoke the law of gravity. Cars remain coupled during the procedure and are emptied one at a time in a rotary dumper. Each is equipped at one end with a rotary coupler that permits emptying without disengaging couplers. Typical unloading time, according to Burlington Northern, is two minutes per car, or four hours per train.

Domestic Petroleum Industry Sets Record For Amount Of Acreage Held Under Lease

By MAX B. SKELTON

HOUSTON (AP) — After nearly two decades, the domestic petroleum industry has set another record for acreage held under lease.

The industry moved into 1979 with leases on an estimated 432.1 million acres.

That is 19.1 percent of the total land area of the 50 states.

Between the two records, the industry let its leaseholdings slip sharply as it moved through a 15-year drilling slump that cut well completions from an all-time high of 58,160 in 1956 to a modern low of 27,300 in 1971.

Huge blocks of leases were dropped as drilling operations continued to decline. Acreage holdings were slashed in eight of nine years before lease totals hit a low of 325.1 million acres at the end of 1967. That was 14.3 percent of the nation's total land area.

As the drilling slump eased off, leaseholdings began another upward swing. As opposed to only 27,300 well completions in 1971, last year's completions totaled 48,513.

Alaska figured prominently in both the old and new lease records.

When admitted as the 49th state in 1959, Alaska had only 3,500 productive acres under lease but 34.2 million acres in non-productive leases boosted the industry over the 400 million mark the first time.

The new record was compiled during 1978 operations despite sharply revised Alaskan figures.

Since statehood, Alaska's productive leases have increased to 320,490 acres but its nondproductive leases have been slashed to just 4,810,410 acres.

The new lease estimates were published in the 1979 edition of "The Oil Producing Industry in Your State." The Independent Petroleum Association of America annual publication presents 120 pages of statistics on oil operations nationwide and in 32 individual states.

The new record of 424.2 million acres includes an all-time high for productive acreage but a non-productive lease total still well below the 1959 level.

Productive leases at the end of 1978 involved 48.5 million acres, compared with only 25 million at the end of 1959. The new record, however, includes only 383.6 million non-productive acres as opposed to an all-time high of 399.1 million at the end of 1959.

The number of producing oil wells also dropped sharply during the long drilling slump.

The nation had 617,057 producing wells in 1961 but abandonments over 13 consecutive years dropped the total to 494,352 in 1974.

Increased drilling operations and a reduced rate for abandonments, particularly for stripper wells, shoved the number of producing wells back to 516,238 by the end of 1978.

Stripper wells, those that produce less than 10 barrels of oil a day, accounted for 13 percent of the nation's crude oil output last year.

While the number of oil producers dropped sharply between 1961 and 1974, natural gas producers increased from 79,359 to 126,997, recording increases in all but four of the 13 years. By the end of 1978, the nation had 153,655 natural gas wells.

Excluding service wells, all-time records indicate the industry had drilled 2,476,932 wells through 1978.

Of that total, 1,465,385 or 59.2 percent were completed as oil wells and 250,244 or 10.1 percent as gas wells. The remaining 761,303 or 30.7 percent were dry holes.

Domestic crude oil production peaked in 1970 at 9,636,849 barrels a day. By 1976, the daily average had dropped to 8,131,641 barrels.

The start of production from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay area boosted daily output to 8,244,562 in 1977 and to 8,701,170 in 1978.

The independents have estimated current crude output at about 8,560,000 barrels a day.

THE ROUSTABOUT

By RAY WESTBROOK

A TEXAS RAILROAD COMMISSIONER has asked President Carter to initiate an intensive search for domestic energy supplies by invoking the National Defense Production Act of 1950.

Mack Wallace, in a letter to the president, said implementation of the act would "signal the firm and immediate resolve of the United States to establish an all-out production effort" to cope with Iran and similar crises.

Wallace notes that under the act, the President has broad powers to assist in the production and development of oil, gas and other minerals he deems critical to national defense programs threatened by inadequate supplies.

"In my opinion, such action coupled with a commitment to an all-out production effort would do more than any other to relieve the critical situation in Tehran and prevent recurrence of such international terrorism and blackmail."

Wallace said, "I believe it is absolutely vital that the President and the Department of Energy begin speaking directly and forcefully to this issue. Our government can no longer afford to speak with so many tongues."

THE RAILROAD COMMISSIONER believes the prospect of a long-term cutoff of Iran as a source of imported oil and the uncertainties surrounding Middle East petroleum supplies are solid proof that increased energy production—in addition to conservation—is mandatory "if Americans are to regain their pride as a people and their security as a nation."

Wallace says he is dismayed over federal actions that have locked up over 3 million square miles of potential oil and gas lands from petroleum exploration in the face of dependence on foreign suppliers.

"There can be no doubt that our heavy dependence upon foreign oil ... stems in large measure from misguided governmental policies and Congressional actions motivated by politics rather than economics."

Wallace said, "Production has been developed on 50,000 square miles (of federal lands). Extreme environmentalists and their allies in Washington would have us walk away from the potential of the other 98 percent."

He thinks the public should be aware that the U.S. has only a 30-day reserve of gasoline apart from a continual resupply.

In placing the reserve in perspective, Wallace said, "Within the first two days of this 30-day supply, some gasoline stations will close; some trucks will be unable to carry groceries to market; and some workers in some parts of the country may be unable to get to their jobs."

THE STATE OFFICIAL reminded Carter in the letter that the government recently increased available home heating stocks by 20 percent in New England while paring available diesel oil stocks by 16 percent in the South's major products distribution region.

"People in the Northeast may be warm this winter, but they may be hungry, too, if there is not enough fuel to get trucks to market," he said.

"Furthermore, while gasoline supplies have dropped only 2.3 percent in New England since 1977, they have dropped over 15 percent in the Texas-Louisiana region," he added.

"It makes no sense to take gasoline from the Gulf Coast area at a time when people are moving here in large numbers from the Northeast," he noted.

Wallace said, "Synthetics and solar energy are energies of the future. ... We need oil now; we need gas now; and we need assurances from the federal government that it will do whatever is necessary to get this nation producing again."

Referring to the Iranian developments, Wallace said, "I am convinced at the same time that this situation makes it all the more imperative that prompt actions be taken to avoid the worst energy crisis in this nation's historty."

JOHN H. POERNER, chairman of the Railroad Commission, says his fears that Texas oil production will fall below the billion-barrel mark this year has become a fact.

Poerner predicted last spring at a monthly statewide oil and gas hearing that Texas would produce less than a billion barrels of oil in 1979 for the first time in 15 years unless producers were provided with some incentive to boost output.

"Tragic as it is in light of recent events around the world and our increasing dependence on foreign imports," December nominations filed by Texas oil purchasers "confirm my earlier suspicions."

Poerner blames Washington policies for dwindling domestic oil production that has cost the U.S. its ranking as the world's top oil producer from 1902 until 1974.

"Today, the role of top producer is being filled by the Soviet Union with 11.2 million barrels per day," the commission chairman said.

Poerner said the approaching decade of the 1980s raises compelling needs for America to remove overregulation by the federal government and to establish a national attitude that encourages producers to invest in efforts to find and develop energy resources.

A-J Oil News

China Encountering Petroleum Reserves

TULSA, Okla. (Special) -China has reported further exploration success onshore and offshore in its widening search for more petroleum reserves, the Oil and Gas Journal reports.

Size of the new discoveries is still unknown. But location of the strikes outside of China's main northeastern oil producing region enhances their potential importance.

The latest oil strikes coincide with disclosure of more data on Chinese oil and gas production. Much of the recent information has been gleaned from on-the-spot visits by western observers and by interviews with Peking officials.

What's most apparent is that China's petroleum exploration is in a state of dynamic growth that should continue through the 1980s, barring political turmoil.

China says it has found about 1,400 oil-bearing structures.

Even so, it seems unlikely that the vigorous exploration campaign currently under way can provide hefty production gains until the mid-1980s.

This year's economic plan calls for only a 1.9 percent increase in crude output over 1978, when flow was 2.1 million barrels a day. That contrasts sharply with the 11.1 percent jump registered last year and the 8 to 15 percent hikes achieved during 1975-77.

Probably the most significant new Chinese exploration successes from the western standpoint have been in or bordering the South China Sea near Hainan Island and Hong Kong.

Combined with earlier strikes in Po Hai (Gulf of Chihli) to the North, the latest discoveries confirm that China's coastal shelves have excellent petroleum potential.

China has provided few details on its Hainan area exploration, according to the Journal. One reason is the politically sensitive nature of Gulf of Tonkin sectors off Hainan's western and southwestern coasts, which also are claimed by Viet Nam.

Chinese Petroleum Minister Song Zhenming told an American Gas Association delegation that oil has been found south of Hainan Island in a well drilled to 2,000 meters (6,562 feet) in 70 meters (230 feet) of water. He also disclosed that wildcats on the Luichow Peninsula directly north of Hainan have yielded 500-600 barrels a day of oil.

Reports of Chinese oil discoveries in the Hainan area have been numerous but vague during recent years.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., said he had been told during a trip to China last August that light, low-sulphur crude was found near the island.

China has its own mobile drilling rigs operating in the Hainan area. A dozen U.S. firms are participating in geophysical surveys either off Hainan or northeast along China's South China Sea coast as far as the Formosa Strait.

A second area of South China Sea drilling activity is in the Zhujiang (Pearl) River Estuary near Hong Kong. Prospecting has been under way in the district since 1975, with rigs visible from Hong Kong, the Journal reports.

The official weekly Peking Review in late October reported that "a high-yield Zhujiang Estuary well gushed light, low-sulphur oil from a depth of more than 2,000 meters."

The Zinhua news agency said that five other wildcats had been drilled in the Zhujiang Estuary basin during the past two years. Two of these holes found oil in unspecified quantities.

The Zhujiang basin on the South China Sea shelf off Guangdong (Kwangtung) Province has an area of 150,000 square kilometers (57,900 square miles), according to Peking Review. It said, "Successful drilling of the latest Zhujiang Estuary well indicates there are rich oil deposits in the South China Sea."

Offshore Area System Hit By Geologist

HOUSTON (AP) — An internationally known geologist says there obviously is something drastically wrong with the system for opening U.S. offshore areas to oil and gas explorations.

"In a time of emergency we should know what resources in oil and gas we have in this vast domain and be able to make effective use of that knowledge," said Hollis P. Hedberg, professor emeritus at Princeton University.

"Yet we have done practically nothing. Our offshore may be rich in petroleum, or it may be poor; but we need to know, and to be able to act accordingly."

Hedberg said the total offshore area approximates 1.8 million square miles but, to date, less than 3 percent has ever been leased, let alone drilled.

He said the procedure of auctioning tiny 5,700-acre blocks with tremendous initial costs in bonus bidding is a painful piecemeal system that "is far too slow, too costly, too dimming of incentive and too generally ineffective, to meet the emergency of today."

As a supplement, Hedberg suggets blocks "on the order of millions of acres," blocks that would be offered to industry Consortiums, with, perhaps, participation by federal and state governments.

Hedberg discusses his "germ of an idea" in the second edition of AAPG Explorer, the new bi-monthly publication of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

"These blocks would be offered to industry Consortiums, without bonus payments, with rights of both exploration and exploitation, with suitable government royalties, and with such exploration commitments for each block as would seem necessary to assure conclusive results," he said.

"Provisions for tax benefits to offset unsuccessful ventures plus limitations to prevent excessive returns from successful ones would be in order."

Hedberg said the operational management would be by the Consortium, working under much the same sort of an arrangement as was used quite successfully by a consortium of companies in Iran in the 1950s.

"The members of a Consortium would each have equal shares and would be entities with requisite experience in offshore petroleum operations and willing and able to commit to the Consortium as openers 'X' million dollars for exploration over a specified period," he said.

Normally, he added, the members would be major oil companies or associations of smaller oil companies.

THE U.S. AND YOU

William Steif

"A WOMAN IS SAFER ON THE street than in her own home," says June H. Zeitlin, director of the new Office on Domestic Violence in the Health, Education and Welfare Department.

The federal government is a latecomer to the battered wives scene. But it has finally arrived, and wants to help. Here's the problem.

— About 1.8 million wives are physically abused by their husbands yearly, according to the National Institute of Mental Health. A Louis Harris poll in Kentucky shows that 10 percent of the surveyed wives reported a violent incident with their husbands in 1979. NIMH says one couple in six has a violent incident in marriage.

— "Wife battering" affects families from all economic, social and cultural groups, not just the minorities and the poor.

— "The severity of injury usually increases over time. That is, the first injury may not amount to much, but the second will be worse.

— Pregnancy seems to trigger husbands' assaults. NIMH has found that a quarter of "battered" women were attacked while pregnant.

POLICE ARE RELUCTANT TO step into these "domestic" disputes. One reason: In a recent year the FBI found that 23 percent of policemen who died on duty were killed trying to stop family fights.

And even if police step in, many wives refuse to follow up with prosecution of their husband-assailants.

There are now 270 "shelters" for battered wives, and their children, around the nation. The shelters usually have been created by women's religious or social service groups, on a voluntary basis. Usually, they're staffed by volunteers.

On any given day, Miss Zeitlin estimates "conservatively," 5,000 women and their children are in the shelters.

Until now the federal government has not been supportive. A little money has dribbled into the shelters in "training" and "demonstration" grants. But there's been no direct support at all, and even now the new office has only $1.2 million for "technical assistance."

Miss Zeitlin, 31 and unmarried, hopes this will change. She's a Newburgh, N.Y., native who got her law degree at New York University in 1973, worked for a New York State commission investigating nursing homes, worked for former Rep. Bela Abzug, D-N.Y., then joined the office of HEW's general counsel in early 1977.

SHE ALREADY HAS DEVELOPED a National Clearinghouse on Domestic Violence, which offers information on where a battered wife can find help. If you want such information, write Office on Domestic Violence, P.O. Box 1182, Washington, DC 20013.

There's something else you can do. The House Education and Labor Committtee has approved a bill permitting HEW to give the states money to fund shelters and service for battered women and their families. The state would have to pass the money on to private, non-profit organizations. The bill would provide $15 million in 1981, $20 million in 1982, $30 million in 1983.

There are more than 60 co-sponsors but the chief backers — whom you can write — are Rep. Corrine C. "Lindy" Boggs, D-La., Room 1524, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515; Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., Room 1531, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC 20515; Rep. Barbar Mikulski, D-Md., Room 238, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC 20515.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., has introduced a similar bill in the Senate.

Social Security . . . Out West

By BILL WEST
S.S. Field Representative

IN THE LAST COLUMN I said that I would tell you what services were covered by Medicare, implying that it could all be done in one week's column. A gross overstatement!

Medicare is divided into two parts — hospital insurance (Part A) and medical insurance (Part B). Medicare does not pay the entire cost for all covered services. You pay for deductibles and co-payments. A deductible is an initial dollar amount which Medicare does not pay . . . a co-payment is your share of expenses for covered services above the deductible.

This week we will discuss hospital insurance (Part A) and what it pays. Part A will help pay for medically necessary in hospital care . . . and after a hospital stay, for medically necessary inpatient care in a skilled nursing facility or for home health care. (Note: There is only one skilled nursing facility participating in Medicare in the twelve county area serviced by the Lubbock Social Security office and it is almost always filed to capacity). Medicare benefits are payable only if the skilled nursing facility is certified by Medicare. Most nursing homes in the United States are not skilled nursing facilities and many skilled nursing facilities are not certified by Medicare.

Part A pays for all covered services for the first 60 days of inpatient hospital care in a benefit period except for $60, the current Part A deductible. For the next 30 days, Part A pays for all covered services except for $40 a day. Every person enrolled in Part A also has a 60-day lifetime reserve for inpatient hospital care in case you have to be hospitalized more than 60 days in one stretch. Part A covers all but $80 a day when you are using your lifetime reserve days. Once a lifetime reserve day is used it is gone forever. The other days are renewed after you have been out of a hospital or skilled nursing facility for 60 days in row. Part A covers all services customarily furnished by hospitals and certified skilled nursing facilities.

PART A DOES NOT COVER private duty nursing, charges for a private room unless medically necessary or convenience items such as telephones or television. It does not cover the first 3 pints of blood you receive during an inpatient stay (but you cannot be charged for blood it it is replaced by a blood plan or through a blood donation in your behalf).

Part A pays for some home health care. It pays the entire cost of up to 100 medically necessary home health visits, after a hospital stay, for each benefit period. These visits must be used within one year from your most recent discharge. Part A covers part-time services of a visiting nurse or physical or speech therapist from a Medicare certified home health agency. Lubbock does have at least two certified home health agencies. Call the Lubbock Social Security office for the names of these agencies. Your doctor must make the arrangements for these home health visits for you. If you receive any of these services, Part A can also cover part-time home health aide services, occupational therapy, medical social services and medical supplies and equipment.

Part A does not cover full-time nursing care, drugs, meals delivered to your home or homemaker services that are primarlily to assist you in meeting personal care or housekeeping needs.

Next week . . . What Part B pays.

Church Epitomizes Christianity In Japan

KAGOSHIMA CITY, Japan (UPI) — St. Xavier's memorial church in Kagoshima City in Kyushu is in a way the epitome of Christianity in Shinto Japan.

The church was built in 1949 to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the arrival in the city of St. Francis Xavier (1506-1552), a Spanish missionary of the Society of Jesus.

St. Francis was instrumental in bringing the teachings of Christ into Japan. His two-year evangelical trips to Hirado and Kyoto have given Christians in Japan a sense of pride and have been received with a certain awe by non-Christians.

LAST 'AUTHENTIC' MILL

HOLLAND, Mich. (UPI) — The 200-year-old "DeZwann' is the only authentic Dutch windmill still operating in the United States, according to the Michigan Travel Bureau. The windmill — 125 feet high from the ground to the tip of the upright sail — still grinds grain into flour, it says.

Born-Again Spirit Drives Moral Re-Armament

By ROBERT MUSEL

LONDON (UPI) — Moral Rearmament, the ideological movement that flourished before and after World War I, is making a comeback.

"There's more initiative than there's ever been," says Gordon Wise, an Australian who is a spokesman for the British wing of MRA. "MRA is quietly but steadily expanding."

Under such leaders as Dr. Frank Buchman and Peter Howard, MRA enjoyed vast media coverage and was one of the most admired, misunderstood and controversial ideological movements of the 20th century.

Buchman died in 1961, however, and Howard died in 1965. The deaths were traumatic for MRA and resulted in a lower profile for the organization.

MRA groups continue their efforts to transform men and governments in many parts of the globe, loosely cooperating with one another through bonds of common commitment and by means of international assemblies.

MRA in the United States sponsors community programs, keeps in contact with congressmen and State Department officials, sells books and distributes films.

Its New York headquarters reported a 50 percent increase in the number of individuals contributing to MRA in 1978, but it did not disclose the actual number of contributors. Total U.S. contributions were $145,808, an increase of 20 percent over 1977.

Buchman's centenary was celebrated in 1978, the 40th anniversary of the formation of the Moral Re-armament movement. In London, the million dollar Westminster Memorial Trust was set up to commemorate it.

Buchman was born in Pennsburg, Pa. — Pennsylvania declared June 4, 1978, Dr. Frank bbuchman Day — and raised in Allentown. He prepared for the Lutheran ministry but resigned in 1908. The next year he had what his followers describe as "a spiritual experience" while listening to a sermon in a small church at Keswick in the lake district of Britain.

As Garth Lean, another member of the British MRA Council puts it, "He began to help other men, not from a position of rectitude but from the experience of his own sin met by grace."

As a result of the "experience," Buchman accepted four "absolutes" as a summary of the Sermon on the Mount — Honesty, purity, unselfishness and love. Armed with these, he set about trying to change human nature, initially not by mass evangelism but by quiet person to person work. His aim, said Lean, was nothing less than "the remaking of the world."

So Buchman, meeting kings and presidents, became a familiar figure in newspapers, newsreels and on television. He was credited with winning the appreciation of Presidents Roosevelt and Truman for his work in strengthening Allied morale in World War II, with helping improve relations between Japan and her former enemies, with aiding the coming of indpendence in Morocco and many other intercessions in world affairs.

Buchman did not discuss his own role in events; other participants did. His message struck a chord in pre-war days. More than 100,000 attended a meeting at Utrecht, the Netherlands, in 1937.

Buchman did make one serious misjudgment that plagued MRA for years. In an interview with a New York newspaper in 1936 he was quoted as "thanking heaven" for Adolf Hitler's "front-line defense against the anti-Christ of communism."

the COIN Box

By NORMAN DAVIS

HERE ARE SOME excerpts from the testimony prepared for Stella B Hackel, Director of the Mint, to deliver before the Consumer Affairs Subcommittee of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee.

"The Mint, which has been a statutory bureau of the Treasury Department since 1873, is essentially a manufacturing organization employing approximately 2,300 men and women.

"Our primary mission is to manufacture coins for the nation's trade and commerce. The coins are distributed by the Mint to and among the Federal Reserve Banks and branches, which in turn release them to commercial banks.

"In addition, we manufacture and sell directly to the general public numismatic coins and medals; maintain custody of the government's gold and silver assets; and refine gold and silver.

"WHILE THE BUREAU is headquartered in Washington, our production and storage facilities are located throughout the country.

"The New York Assay Office refines and stores gold and silver bullion.

"At our depository at West Point, we store the government's silver, and have been producing one-cent coins for circulation since 1973, when the Congress authorized the use of any Mint facility for the production of coins and medals.

"The Philadelphia Mint produces nearly 50 percent of our circulating coinage. In addition, it manufactures our national and other medals; and produces some portion of the brass, cupronickel and clad strip used for coinage.

"At the Fort Knox, Ky., Bullion Depository we store the major portion of the nation's gold holdings.

"The Denver Mint, also, produces nearly half of our domestic circulating coinage requirements.

"LASTLY, WE HAVE two facilities in San Francisco, the San Francisco Assay Office and the Old Mint. They Assay Office manufactures our Proof coins as well as cents and dollars for circulation. It also packages and ships our Proof and Uncirculated mint sets to the general public. The Old Mint, in addition to serving as a museum, houses our computer facility.

"In view of the coinage demand forecasts of the Mint and the GAO for the period through the year 1985, it is essential that we expand our production capabilities.

"However, rather than seeking the construction of an entirely new Mint facility at Denver, we have taken the position that the expansion could be achieved by improving the present Denver Mint facility as well as acquiring and remodeling at least three vacant buildings within the surplus Frankford Arsenal complex in Philadelphia."

Next Week: "Inside The Bureau Of The Mint," Part 2 — Some prediction of coins to come.

Backgammon

by Omar Sharif

Black rolls 4-2. How should he play?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

Black has a hopelessly lost game. The only object he should have in mind is how to avoid being gammoned. He must try to find the best way to accomplish that.

There is a gambling play. If Black can secure White's 1-point, he will have a good chance to avoid the gammon and, on a good day, he might even get a shot at winning the game if White leaves a blot early in the bear-off and Black should happen to hit. Therefore, there is a certain appeal in hitting the White blot on the Black 8-point with the 2, and using the 4 to play the man from the 8-point to the 4-point. On re-entering, White will have to hit one of the Black blots in his home board. If Black can then roll a 1, he will have salvaged something from the position.

Unfortunately, there is one serious drawback to this play. Have you spotted it? First, White might not only come in and hit a blot in Black's home board, but his second number might be a 1, 2 or 6, allowing him to hit the blot on his own 1-point as well, as putting two Black men on the bar. Now Black will need two 1's quickly if he is to prevent White from closing his board. But even if White does not succeed in hitting the blot on his 1-point, he is still likely to hit a second Black blot and place two men on the bar. And lastly, even if White hits only one Black blot at this turn, Black is still a 25-to-11 underdog to roll a 1 at his next turn, and White will still have three men bearing on his 1-point.

While hitting and moving on might represent Black's best chance of avoiding a gammon, it is also, the play most likely to guarantee the gammon.

Potatoes Not Getting Smaller But Maine Farmers Are...

RICHARD H. GROWALD

OAKFIELD, Maine (UPI) — The Aroostock County farmhouse front room is the kitchen and the Crandall family steps in over the eroded red linoleum for lunch.

A well-populated sticky length of browned fly paper hangs above the scrubbed table where Kenneth (Junior) Crandall, 44, takes the first chair.

"What's for lunch?" the farmer said.

"Surprise," said his wife Carolyn. "Potatoes."

"Ah, my glory and my curse," Junior said.

Maine produces timber, paper pulp, vacations, lobster and summer fog but potatoes is the nation's usual answer when the question is Maine in a game of word association.

"In Maine, the potato is still king. But a smaller king," farmer Crandall said.

His son, Kenneth III, a 5-foot—5 likeness of his 5-foot-10 father, lopes into the room, nods at mother at the stove, falls onto a chair opposite his father. They toyed with calling him "Junior Junior" and even "The Third" but settled on "Kenneth" because no one but grandmother calls grandfather "Kenneth" anymore and the 10-year-old is unlikely to be confused by that.

"I got 50 acres of potatoes. Oh, I got 100 acres in all. Cut stove wood and a little pulp now and then.

"But the money crop is potatoes. What money there is in them. Which ain't much," Junior said.

"Not much," his wife said.

Junior fingered the salt shaker. "Last year was a total loss. Cost $7 a barrel to raise the potatoes. And sold them for an average of $5 a barrel."

Silence except for Mrs. Crandall busy among the pots.

The porch door is opened and closed without a slam. No son this time. In across the linoleum come daughters Elizabeth Anne, 18, and Lisa Lynn, 16, the former naMed for an English queen and the second for a newer tradition in English name-giving. They kiss parents and sit.

"We used to have dairy cows before Dad retired," said Junior. "Got rid of the cows five years ago."

"Three years ago," said his wife.

"Kind of easy now. September's busy," said Junior. "That's when we harvest the potatoes. About Sept. 20."

"Between the 18th and 20th of every September," his wife said.

Junior: "Yes, they let out school for three weeks."

Wife: "Thirty."

The final child, the eldest, Bruce, 19, was at the door rubbing his boots on the porch mat. He works at the local starch factory and tracks white powder about. He sat at the foot of the table, opposite his mother.

On the table were sliced cucumber in vinegar sauce, a plate of ham and bologna, bread and potato salad.

"We eat 100 pounds of potatoes a week," Mrs. Crandall said. "Long live the king."

Junior serves himself potatoes before reaching for the meat or cucumbers. "We average about 5,500 or 6,000 barrels a year. About 165 pounds of potatoes in a barrel. Crops down the past few years. Don't know what's the woe."

CORSETED FEET

NEW YORK (UPI) — For most people, oxford shoes have no special advantages over other styles, says Dr. William A. Rossi. Writing in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Podiatry Association, the Massachusetts podiatrist said the corseting provided by oxfords deny feet much of their normal exercise, "and this effect would seem to hamper, rather than enhance the strengthening of the tissues involved in normal foot support."

Bread Dough Used To Make Ornaments For Christmas

By SHARI LEWIS

Holiday ornaments that you make will give you years of pleasure. Have you ever made them out of bread dough? I bet you have everything you need in your own kitchen: two cups of all-purpose flour, one cup of salt and one cup of water.

Mix flour and salt in a large bowl. Stir in the water. The dough will be very stiff. It needs to be kneaded for 10 minutes. (Ask your folks to give you a hand —preferably two hands — with the kneading. It's hard work!)

When the dough is smooth and soft, it's ready to shape. You can flatten it, squeeze it, braid it, pinch it, curl, coil or cut it into snowmen, Santas, gingerbread men, Christmas trees, stars, animals, dreidels, stars of David, menorahs and so forth.

Bake your ornaments for about an hour at 350 degrees. Stick a pin through the top of your ornaments as they are baking in order to make a hole. (Later you can put a string or wire through the hole for hanging.)

Now, things scupltured out of bread dough have to be sealed against moisture if they are to last. Watercolor paints just won't do it. Paint your ornament on both sides with acrylic paints, varnish, shellac or lacquer.

FRIDAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: How many words can you think of that speak of going up or down (like "climb" or "sag")?

ANSWER: I've searched high and low and here's what I came up with: arise, ascend, bend, bow, climb, collapse, decline, descend, dip, dive, droop, drop, duck, elevate, escalate, fall, flop, heighten, hoist, kneel, launch, lift, lower, mount, plunge, rise, sag, scale, sink, skyrocket, stoop, submerge, swoop, tumble.

The Almanac
TODAY IN HISTORY

By United Press International

Today is Sunday, Dec. 2, the 336th day of 1979 with 29 to follow.

The moon is moving toward its full phase.

The morning stars are Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and Mercury.

The evening star is Venus.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Sagittarius.

American statesman Frank Kellogg was born Dec. 2, 1856.

On this date in history:

In 1859, John Brown was hanged for his raid on Harper's Ferry. On the way to the gallows, he said of the Virginia countryside "this is a beautiful country!"

In 1927, the Model-A Ford was introduced as the successor to the famous Model-T and was available for the first time in a variety of colors. The roadster sold for $395.

In 1942, the "Atomic Age" was born. A group of scientists demonstrated a self-sustaining nuclear chain reaction at a makeshift laboratory beneath the University of Chicago football stadium.

In 1961, Cuban Premier Fidel Castro revealed himself to be a Communist and said he had formed a single political party with himself as its head. He admitted he had concealed his true political philosophy until he had solidified his hold on Cuba.

A thought for the day: American automobile pioneer Henry Ford said, "History is more or less bunk."

Argentines Film First Color Series

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Argentina's first color television series — 13 half-hour programs on the nation's wildlife — is being filmed for sale abroad.

Producer Andy Pruna and the government's color television company, Argentina TV Color 78, began filming recently on the Valdes peninsula, the home of sea lions and se-elephants. "We are trying to make the series more than just a series of documentaries," Pruna said. "We would like to achieve something more modern that is not boring."

Pruna says Italian television ha already expressed interest in the series. It will show heavy influence from wildlife films made previously by French explorer Jacques Cousteau.

ELT'S NEW HOME

NEW YORK (UPI) — Equity Library Theater, which has operated for 37 years without a home of its own, will take over a rebuilt Promenade Theater in April next year. ELT, sponsored by Actors' Equity as a showcase for theatrical talent, is launching a $1.5 million fund drive to pay for the theater and reconstruction. The refurbishing is part of renovation of The Opera Hotel on upper Broadway of which the Promenade is part.

Pledge Unfulfilled: Bureaucracy Runs Rampant

By DONALD LAMBRO

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite President Carter's campaign pledge to "cut the bureaucracy down to size" and throw out wasteful programs, few government agencies actully have been abolished since he took office.

One of Carter's major campign promises in 1986 was to consolidate nearly 2,000 federal agencies and programs down to about 200 tightly-organized units of government.

While much of the reduction, Carter said, would be achieved by reorganization, he also vowed that zero-base budgeting — under which each program must justify its existence every year — would be used to cut "unneeded or obsolescnt programs."

"The challenge before the nation is to cut the bureaucracy down to size," he said in Columbus, Ohio, on Sept. 9, 1976. If elected, he promised he would "shut own out-dated agencies and programs once and nor all."

How has the president succeeded two and a half years later?

Despite ambitious plans, only a few functioning agencies have actually been abolished, most of them representing a relatively small savings. By virtually every measurable criterai, the government continues to grow substantially.

By this fall, yearly spending will have increased by $70 billion sinceGerald Ford left office — up to $532 billion. Since January 1977, the federal payroll has risen byover 34,000 workers to more than 2.8 million, excluding 2 million militry men and women.

But this is only part of the story. Other growth areas are hidden. The budget does not include about $9 billion in "off-budget" agencies. Excluded from employee rolls are about 1 million workers in quasi-government agencies and more than 6 million contractors, researchers, consultants and local and state employees whose salaries are paid by the government.

As for Carter's campaign pledge to shrink government down to 200 consolidated units, White House officials would rather forget that he made it.

"I don't know where that figure actually came from," reorganization chief Harrison Wellford said in an interview. "Frankly, I wish it had never been used."

It came from Carter, who said on a "Face the Nation" interview, March 14, 1976: "But we now have about 1,900 agencies, perhaps more, in the federal government, and I intend to cut those down to no more than 200. It's a goal that I've set for myself that I think is achievable."

Wellford believes the administration has had success in its efforts, but notes there is tremendous opposition to elimination of existing federal agencies.

"The reality is that there is no office so humble or useless that it doesn't have some passionate defender," Wellford said. "You don't have anyone lobbying for the elimination of unnecessary agencies. You never feel any pressure on that. But there is always someone pushing for one of these limpalong, useless groups."

A White House inventory — the first ever undertaken — found there were 1,845 departments, agencies, boards, commissions, administrations and advisory committees, which alone numbered over 1,000. (Excluded from this count are hundreds of inter-agency committees spread throughout the government which theWhite House says would be impossible to tabulate.)

From this master list, the administration says it has trimmed a total of 760 units of government and added another 48 for a net reduction of 412.

The cuts, however, are not as substantiv as they may appear. This is because 677 of them were from the informal advisory committees which meet only occasionally, rarely involve any permanent staff, and represent very little cost to a budget now spending $1.5 billion a day.

Even so, the cost on advisory committees is up — from $64.9 million lastr year to an estimated $74.1 million this year. That is because Congress and the White House continue to create new committees. In 1978, 204 were added.

Excluding the 677, that leaves 83 actual Cabinet or non-Cabinet agencies which the White House says it has abolished.

Closer examination, however, reveals that most of the 83 were merged into other, larger programs — with their missions and payroll still intact, and often enlarged.

In fact, only about a dozen functioning governmental units or gencies have been terminated as a result of Carter's efforts. Most of them are small advisory offices or councils, some with little or no staffing. And in most instances the employees remain, moving to other government jobs. One of the "abolished" agencies was the White House Office of Telecommunications, which was created by President Nixon to research and coordinate communications policies and technology.

Actually, OTP was transferred to the Commerce Deprtment and merged with its Office of Telecommunications. The merged agency, with some programs from HEW, was renamed the National Telecommunications and Information Administration.

Did the merger result in savings? Before consolidation, the combind cost of the two agencies was less than $10 million a year. Their cost for this fiscal year is nearly $12 million.

"It certainly cannot be considered a termination," a Commerce official said. "The program was simply lifted out of the White House and moved over here." Thus, while the White House unit was eliminted on paper, its costs, employees, and functions continue to exist.

Similarly, while the Domestic Council, created under President Nixon, is considered abolished by the White House, its functions and job slots remain alive and well in Carter's now-named Domestic Policy Staff.

Other White House offices abolished by Carter, like the Energy Resources Council, the Federal Property Council, and the Economic Opportunity Council were nothing but "Shadow Agencies," according to one White House official who said "they were pretty much moribund by the time we got to them."

Several independent agencies listed as abolished were killed because Congress did not extend their authority despite support for them by the administration.

One was the Renegotiation Board, which died March 31 despite Carter's support. The president's fiscal 1980 budget asked $7.3 million for the agency, an increase of $1 million.

What happened to the board's 180 employes? Some retired or got jobs elsewhere; many went to the White House Council on Wage and Price Stability.

Other agencies like the Commission on Federal Paperwork and the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration appear on the White House kll list. Both went out of business because wcongress enacted "sunset" expiration deadlines for them. This was also the case with the Indian Claims Commission which went out of business last September. Congress in 1976 set a deadline for it to cease operations.

The National Center for Productivity and Quality of Working Life, for which Carter provided $3 million in his 1979 budget, closed last fall — again, because Congress placed a termination date in its authorization law.

Yet the Center hasn't totally disappeared. Two employees continue part of its work at the Commerce Department's National Technical Information Service. And last October Carter created a "National Productivity Board."

Others the White House placed on its "loss" column were just renamed and moved into larger agencies.

The National Fire Prevention and Control Administration was moved from Commerce, renamed the U.S. Fire Administration, and placed in a new agency called the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

FEMA will be the repository for many small agencies, including the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration, the Federal Insurance Administration, the Federal Preparedness Agency, and the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency.

The Agriculture Department's 1,000-employee Economic Research Service, which does marketing reports for big agricultural industries, was merged with the Statistical Reporting Service and renamed the Economic Research and Statistics Service. A spokeswoman at ERS said that no jobs were lost.

Other existing agencies such as the Energy Research and Development Administration and the Federal Power Commission, now called the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, were moved intact into the new Department of Energy.

Similar transfers occurred when the Civil Service Commission was abolished and renamed the Office of Personnel Management. The Office inherited at least seven sub-agencies from the Commission.

"I don't see too much evicence of programs being knocked out," said Senate Appropriations Committee staffer Tom Van der Voort. "Instead of getting rid of old programs, they are starting new ones."

Carter is using much the same approach to organization he did as governor of Georgia when he consolidated 300 state offices, boards and commissions into 22 super agencies. His critics claimed during the 1976 campaign this effort resulted in a payroll increase of 8,000 employees and the state budget rising by 58.5 percent.

The White House is sensitive about keeping its list of 760 abolished agencies and committees intact, believing it represents the truest picture of what the administration's reorganization efforts have accomplished.

White House reorganization officials speak bluntly about the obstacles they have had to combat in their two-year bureaucracy-cutting exercise.

Glad you asked that!

BY MARILYN AND HY GARDNER

Q: With all the rotten things Marlon Brando's ex-wife, Anna Kashfi, has said about his lovemaking, I'm curious. Why did she go to bed withhim the first time? — Pat Ryan, Las Vegas.

A: "It was mostly out of curiosity," acknowledges Anna. "His seduction technique showed all the subtlety of a guillotine...Physically, Marlon is not well-appointed," she wickedly reveals in her "Brando for Breakfast" book. Speaking like a woman scorned, she sums up her ex-husband this way: "As a conversationalist, he is stumbling, inarticulate, sometimes incoherent." No, we don't know whether or not Brando has a book in the offing with his version of the kiss-and-tell marriage.

Q: When comic Steve Martin first started playing nightclubs, I understand he went over like a lead balloon. What changed his luck? — Ellen G., Minneapolis.

A: He changed his look. "I just got bored with the weird looks," muses the amusing clown. "The jewelry, the long hair and the beard. It seemed out of date to me." Instead, this zany dressed in an elegant manner. "Now it works because it is incongrous," he feels. "You don't expect a guy dressed like an insurance salesman to come out and be insane!"

Q: I once heard Andrew Young say he first learned how to be a diplomat when he was in grammer school. What did he mean? — Shelby Clark, Pitsburgh.

A: Others kids were bigger than he was, is the way Andy explains it. "I knew I couldn't settle arguments by fighting," he says. "But I wasn't a coward, either. My father told me, 'Don't get mad — get smart.' So I learned to talk."

Q: I was on a cruise ship some months ago and my old favorite, Ginger Rogers, was also aboard. She still looks and acts so youthful. How old is she? And how come we don't see her in the movies anymore? — Vincent C., Miami.

A: Now 67, Ginger is still sugar and spice and everything nice. "I'd rather dig ditches than act in today's movies," the deeply religious actress insists. "I just wonder if those films will pay off for them as well as the ones produced by a company like Disney, which makes films that can run again and again and again."

The tireless performer still keeps busy at her craft. She's toured the country in shows like "No, No, Nanette," "Hello, Dolly!" "Mame," and most recently, "The Ginger Rogers Show." She appears on TV talk shows and specials still dancing and singing. And recently cut an album for EMI that includes a dozen of her favorite songs. "I just don't believe in age, or in limitations," says Miss Rogers. "If there's been limitations, nobody would ever have reached the moon!"

For this week's "Ain't We Got Class Award, we'd like to nominate the fellow who came up with the name for a new punk rock group. They call themselves "The Cramps."

Q: I read a rumor in a fan magazine that former child stars Bobby Breen and Deanna Durbin are coming out of retirement to appear as a team on TV. Anything to this? — Mrs. Loretta V., Baltimore.

A: We checked with Bobby — who tells us they are trying to get Deanna interested in flying here from her home in Switzerland to appear with him in a Merv Griffin flashback show. From recent photos we've seen of Miss Durbin, she's gotten rather plump through the years, and this may be one reason she's been rather reticent about making a comeback.

Bobby, now is his early 50s, runs a talent booking agency in Florida. He still sings up a storm in clubs and condos when the requests come in.

United Way Under Attack As 'Anti-Minority'

By SUSAN GARLAND

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United Way's "Thanks to you, there is help for all of us" is a slogan that has found its way into the language, but it is also a battle cry for critics of the nation's largest charitable fundraiser.

In recent years, United Way, which collected $1.3 billion for charity in 1978, has come under attack by those who dispute the "all of us" part of the slogan. They claim United Way favors a select group on middle class charities and ignores controversial or minority-oriented causes.

And an increasing number of charities, minority groups and otherorganizations accuse United Way of attempting to monopolize payroll deduction fundraising in offices, stores and factories and of trying to drive other fundraisers out of business.

United Way says it never uses tactics aimed at killing competitors and that its success is based on good work. It says businesses favor United Way because it collects for a wide range of community services and ensures, through regular reviews, that member charities are not wasting money. And it points to many of its member agencies that serve blacks and the poor.

"People are out to destroy the United Way system. They are anti-establishment basically," says Jerry Bergman, United Way's director of public information, of the critics. "You have groups who see the United Way as large and successful, and because they see that, they say, 'We can be successful too.'"

In some regions, the disputes have led to lawsuits and boycotts of United Way campaigns.

The Concerned Citizens for Charity, a San Francisco-based group, calls it "The Charity War," — "a bitter controversy whose outcome will determine which charities will be allowed to solicit you at work and how much say you'll have about who gets your donations."

Charity is a big business. Last year, Americans gave nearly $9 billion to private health and social welfare agencies; $38.1 billion to all causes, including churches. But the American Association of Fund Raising Counsel estimated that total giving in 1978 increased 8.2 percent over 1977, well below the inflation rate. A 1975 report for the Commission on Private Philanthropy and Public Needs, found the percentage of corporate gifts dropped while employee donations rose during 20 years.

Meanwhile, competition has intensified for available slices of the payroll deduction system — the cheapest and most efficient fundraising technique.

United Way, with 2,300 chapters serving 39,000 agencies, is the pioneer of that system. It asks employees to pledge a "fair share" based on their salaries and to authorize regular paycheck deductions to pay it.

Because of payroll deductions, United Way has kept fundraising costs to about 11 cents for every dollar raised.

Most companies that allow United Way payroll deductions do not give other charities or fundraisers the same right. And, according to Robert Bothwell, executive director of the National Committee for Responsive Philanthropy, United Way "fights tooth and nail" to keep it that way.

"Challenges by outside groups to the virtual monopoly United Way has established in payroll deductions are being met by many United Way tactics, fair and foul," Bothwell said.

—In Los Angeles, a group of health agncies called Associated In-group Donors complained in 1977 that United Way pressured businesses and government to revoke AID's solicitation privileges and threatened United Way member agencies with ouster if they accepted $1 million from AID.

AID accused the United Way of restraint of trade and of trying to "force AID out of business." Under a court-approved agreement, United Way allowed its members to accept AID money.

—In St. Louis, federation of black charities sued the Chrysler Corp. for $550,000 because Chrysler refused to allow 900 plant workers to designate the federation to rceive payroll deductions. The suit said the company refused because it was committed to United Way. The judge dismissed the suit.

—In August 1977, the Combined Health Agencies Drive, sued four San Francisco area United Way chapters, charging local United Way officials sought to influence businesses for exclusive workplace solicitation rights.

Robert Trefry, CHAD's executive vice president, said United Way in Santa Clara County threatened to boycott businesses that allowed CHAD to campaign. The California Superior Court rejected the charge of monopoly and found no conspiracy between employers and the United Way.

While the court rejected the notion of monopoly, some critics cite a memo of the American Heart Association in 1976 to contend that United Way is out to eliminate its competition.

The "Heart Memo" describes a meeting with United Way director William Aramony who reportedly said United Way planned to collect $3.2 million by 1985 by reducing or eliminating "competitive" campaigns in Baltimore, San Diego, Texas, San Francisco and Washington state.

To do that, United Way would seek partnerships with the American Heart Association and the American Cancer Society — usually health drives' biggest draws.

"We won't sit back and let Combined Health Agency Drives happen," the memo quotes Aramony as saying. "We anticipate cooperation or confrontation."

Grady Stevens, a spokesman for the American Heart Association in Dallas, said the organization stands behind the memo.

"It is obvious that because of United Way's arrangement with most corporations, it is next to impossible for federated health groups to have access to the marketplace," Stevens said. "We have seen the United Way try to keep out federated health drives... I think we'll be seeing more suits filed accusing the United Way of restraint of trade."

The concept of unified local charity fundraising began in Denver, Colo., in 1887, when 10charities formed a single community-based campaign. In 1913, the first Community Chest was created in Cleveland.

By 1960, many of the federated campaigns became affiliated. In 1970, the national organization, seeking a stronger identity, encouraged the campaigns to adopt the United Way name and built a headquarters in Alexandria, Va.

Local communities still control campaigns and fund allocation, and the national organization lends management and other services.

The appeal of United Way to private business is that it eliminates endless fundraising in the workplace. And while it represents only a fraction of charities in a community, it offers "a simple, low cost opportunity to develop and maintain a good, socially responsible image," according to researcher Smith.

Bothwell believes "peer pressure" is an important factor in United Way's success. "Businessmen who have turned down a United Way monopoly have come under severe pressure from their peers, usually a social pressure."

"The people at United Way are not advocates of services. Their sole purpose is to raise money," he said. "So you see the same thing as you see in the corporate world: get rid of your competitors."

Leo Benade, vice president and counsel of United Way, said the group has been the target of such criticism because of the limited amount of dollars and the increasing needs of charities.

"United Way finds itself squeezed in the middle between agencies that have a legitimate need for more funds and others who feel that there is favoritism and that they should get money."

Benade said United Way does believe it is in a business' best interest to have only one federation soliciting in the workplace and that the fundraiser should be United Way, which he says is "the only organization of its kind because it tries to be responsive to the total needs of the community."

But he said United Way does not try to "squeeze out" competitors or to use peer pressure.

"If corporations feel that United Way is not helping the community and is not the best mechanism and the most responsive, United Way would not have payroll privileges," Benade said. "I know of absolutely no instances of pressure. United Way is a supplicant and goes heart-in-hand to businesses tore-earn the privilege each year."

And in the case of the "Heart Memo," Benade, who was at that meeting, said that at no time did Aramony threaten federated health drives.

Because corporate and community leaders decide on fund allocations from United Way, its critics say agencies that benefit most are basically middle-class, while the truly needy and the controversial are overlooked. In one case, a Planned Parenthood affiliate in Indiana lost funding when it opened an abortion clinic.

In recent years, nearly half of United Way's money went to local chapters of about 10 large national organizations, such as American Red Cross, Girl Scouts, Salvation Army and YMCA.

Several black organizations say the giant fundraiser does not meet needs of minority agencies.

"Less than 2 percent of the United Way executives are black, less than 3 percent of the money goes to support black organizations and an even lesser percent goes to women, other poor and Third World organizations," said Walter Bremond, director of the National Black United Fund, a federation of black charities.

While many charities fear extinction, the United Way has inaugurated a 10 year program that aims at $3 billion by 1985 — the minimum it says it needs to keep up with inflation and add member agencies.

Nature Produced Gigantic Nuclear Reaction Billion Years Ago

By EDWARD ROBY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than a billion years ago in Africa, nature produced a nuclear reaction that spawned all the lethal fission products created in a modern atomic reactor. But somehow they decayed harmlessly deep in the earth.

Geological evidence for the Gab phenomenon, as it is known, is occasionally cited by the nuclear industry as proof that atomic wastes can be stowed safely in rock formations without surfacing again to menace society.

But the United States and other advanced countries that have harnessed the nuclear chain reaction for peace and war have so far failed to show that modern technology can duplicate what nature once did in Africa.

In the 35 years since man first split the atom, no satisfactory way has been found to dispose of poisonous, long-lived fission waste products. And the growing heap of radioactive refuse at defense plants, commercial reactors, research laboratories, uranium mines and temporary storage sites around the country has mushroomed into a national political issue.

Now, "No Nuke" groups active even before the Three Mile Island accident and the Seabrook sit-ins are marching on lesser-known outposts of the nuclear presence such as New York's defunct West Valley atomic waste recycling plant and Colorado's Rocky Flats test center.

Alarmed citizens tried to close Virginia's port of Portsmouth to wastes shipments from foreign reactors — shipments already banned from half a dozen East Coast harbors.

The governors of Washington, Nevada and South Carolina, three formerly pro-nuclear states with active dump sites, threatened to bar some incoming shipments if a rash of waste transportation mishaps persists.

Twenty-eight states have enacted or are considering laws making it difficult for the federal government to put a permanent waste repository within their borders.

Even the most ardent nuclear boosters seem not to relish the idea of a radioactive dump in their own backyards. But everyone agrees atomic wastes must eventually be disposed of.

"If the word 'scandal' can be applied to nuclear power, it is that this industry has been allowed to expand for two and a half decades without an acceptable solution for waste disposal," said Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo.

Soon after taking office, Energy Secretary Charles Duncan remarked that pehaps no new nuclear reactors should be licensed "until we've gotten a better handle on the waste management problem."

Hart introduced a bill that would stop licensing in 1985 unless an acceptable technique for permanently storing wastes has been demonstrated. California already has banned reactor construction until government comes up with a waste disposal plan.

Dr. Chauncey Starr, vice chairman of the Electric Power Research Institute, admitted waste disposal has become "a very big emotional issue."

"To EPRI, the radioactive waste issue is a publicly perceived barrier to the extension of nuclear power," he said.

A General Accounting Office report said in June that unless safe disposal methods "are decided on and effectively demonstrated and the public is convinced there is a permanent solution to the problem, construction of additional nuclear power plants may be prevented and existing reactors could be forced to close."

Commercial reactors are the most visible targets of protest, but the Pentagon has generated most of the waste problem. Starr said the weapons program already has created "10 to 30 times the amount of waste that is even likely to come out of the nuclear business."

Estimates place the volume of highly radioactive liquid defense wastes at 70 million gallons. Spent fuel from the nation's 72 reactors exceeds 5,000 metric tons.

The figures don't include a far larger amount of less dangerous uranium mill tailings, contaminated clothing and equipment from nuclear installations, research animal carcasses or decommissioned reactors.

President Carter's 1977 decision to ban recycling of spent commercial reactor fuel for fear that bomb-grade plutonium might fall into the wrong hands lent new urgency to finding suitable disposal methods.

• • •

Assuming the first repository would be underground, a federal task force called for further consideration of such alternatives as disposal in ocean sediments and very deep drilled holes. It urged evaluation of geological formations such as salt, granite and basalt and said planners should try to have two or three repositories licensed by 2000.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission would license any national high-level waste repository after the Energy Department develops it. The Environmental Protection Agency is completing its work on safety standards for disposal of the high-level — spent reactor fuel and defense waste.

Evidence trickling out of the Soviet Union on the "Kyshtym disaster" of the late 1950s suggests just how careful the agency must be.

A defecting scientist, partly corroborated by U.S. intelligence data, told of a large area in the Ural Mountains that was contaminated and made unhabitable by a nuclear blast, possibly from stored wastes accidentally reaching criticality.

The EPA standards must somehow ensure no such thing happens and that the wastes remain isolated from the human environment for as long as they are hazardous — Perhaps thousands of years.

"It's a new problem," conceded EPA planner David Smith. "Nobody has ever made a standard to last a thousand years."

In effect, EPA will say a site must be designed so the chance is small that some future natural or man-made calamity will jeopardize health or pollute water supplies.

Deputy Energy Under Secretary Worth Bateman said the more difficult job of choosing a site and preparing a repository would probably take 15 years.

Without the option of recycling spent fuel, nuclear utilities have an expensive dilemma.

Many of the storage ponds built to hold five year's worth of spent fuel at reactor sites will be filled by 1983. At least two utilities, Virginia Electric and Power and Duke Power, have warned that the waste glut could force reactor shutdowns unless it is somehow resolved.

"The utilities are annoyed because the federal government said years ago that they were going to handle all this," said Starr.

The administration offered a bill this year permitting the Energy Department to place spent fuel in temporary storage and collect a fee from utilities.

The proposed temporary sites included defunct reprocessing plants at Barnwell, S.C.; West Valley, N.Y., and Morris, Ill., as well as two unidentified locations.

But the legislation, which provoked a protest from New York, has stalled in Congress. Utilities are pushing ahead with stopgap solutions.

Some are constructing new storage ponds or additional fuel racks. Duke wants to move spent fuel from its Oconee, S.C., plant to a pond at its McGuire, N.C., plant.

Starr said there is an industry consensus that chemical reprocessing to extract plutonium from spent fuel will eventually take place. But it will have to wait for breeder reactors fueled with plutonium — the best waste disposal method, he said.

But physicist Ron Lipschutz said he sensed the United States might permit reprocessing in two or three years, despite the present policy.

The fact that three of the proposed temporary sites are at former reprocessing centers has raised the same suspicion in Congress. But when the search for a repository in the Pacific seemed to focus on the tiny U.S. atoll of Palmyra near Hawaii, Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., objected.

Nuclear waste management always has been mired in politics.

Even efforts to place high-level reprocessing wastes in permanent storage have gone awry. A decade ago, the Atomic Energy Commission had to abandon its attempt to create a repository in a Lyons, Kan., salt formation.

Political pressures fed by a plutonium fire at Rocky Flats caused the agency to rush ahead without a making a thorough study and consulting state and local officials. The Kansas site turned out to be honeycombed with holes drilled for oil and gas exploration.

Today those pressures have risen a notch and critics fear government is about to repeat its mistake with plans for a defense waste repository called the Waste Isolation Pilot Project near Carlsbad, N.M.

"They are try to slip it by the public," charged Peter Franchot of the Union of Concerned Scientists. "There are definite technical problems. When they get kicked out of New Mexico, they'll probably go on to Nevada and Washington."

The Carlsbad project has somehow polarized public opinion in a state that takes pride in nuclear facilities like Los Alamos and Sandia and played host to early atomic testing.

Opponents want the state to demand veto power over the project, although New Mexico has never enacted a ban on nuclear waste storage.

The project became a congressional issue when the Energy Department suggested it also could be used to store some commercial reactor wastes and the Pentagon objected on national security grounds.

About half a million gallons of waste leaked from 149 tanks over a period of years, reaching a peak in 1973, but the National Academy of Science found no public radiation hazard.

Modern Housing Borrowing Ideas From Cave Men

By JO-ANNE BYRNE
United Press International

In the scramble to save energy, modern housing may borrow more and more ideas from the days when the world was young.

When men lived in caves because there was nothing better, they kept themselves warm, sheltered by mother earth and scraggly shrubs to cut the wind. Later the Indians built tepees, some resembling geodesic domes, and energy-efficient adobe houses.

With shelter one of the basic elements of human survivl, variations on those ideas have been repeated down through the years with ever increasing sophistication.

Today an Illinois electrician is selling franchises for his cave homes, the ideas from a windbreak sheltering project of the 1930s look useful for present housing, and earthsheltering is becoming a new housing catchword.

In a few years, because of energy problems and land values, Americn will be living in multi-family dwellings, probably townhouses, in the core cities, predicts Martin Tunde of the Minneapolis design firm of Bressler, Armitage and Lunde.

The trek back to the cities has already begun, and in the future, Lunde says, those affluent suburbs we once yearned for will be housing a poorer segment of society.

Lunde's firm is a leader in exploring alternatives that save energy and construction costs for homeowners.

"Houses built in the last 20 years were not efficient," he says. "They're expensive to maintain and hard to improve. In downtown areas, new homes can be built which are energy efficient — or structurally sound old homes can be rehabilitated."

The unusual in homes — Earth-sheltered dwellings, caves and domes — are viable methods of construction, Lunde says.

"They save energy, and although they can be a little more costly than the conventional home, I think they will gradually prove a good bet in outstate areas. They are hard to work into an urban environment, with the exception of structures like the underground book store at the University of Minnesota."

The bookstore opened in 1977. Charles Lane, associate director of the Underground Space Center at the university, says preliminary figures show "an 80 percent savings in heating costs, and solar collectors haven't even been activated yet."

The center monitors the bookstore as it does several other buildings to acquire heat loss information and data on the marketability of this type of structure.

"It's just common sense," says James Buesing, an assistant professor of environment, textiles and design at the University of Wisconsin, about the 40-year-old windbreak project which showed a shrubbery protected home used 40 percent less fuel than an unprotected house.

Trees should be planted on the north and west, Buesing says, since winter winds blow out of the north and northwest.

Deciduous trees are recommended for the south side since they shade the house in the summer, and drop their leaves in winter to let the winter sun heat through south-facing windows.

Today North Dakota has one of the most active windbreak programs in the country, planting Chinese elms and evergreens in thick profusion to prevent erosion and catch moisture for the wheat crops, as well as provide wind shelter for humans and livestock.

In St. Louis, Jon Mullinax lives in a modern version of Kubla Khan's pleasure dome and he says everyone should follow his example because it conserves energy and is less expensive than a conventional home.

The Mullinax home is a geodesic dome with 5,000 square feet of living space and an attached garage.

It's warm in winter, cool in summer, strong enough to withstand tornadoes and earthquakes, and less expensive to build than conventional homes with the same area, the owner says.

Mullinax, an executive with General Motors, studied under R. Buckminster Fuller, who designed the geodesic dome and built the first model 7 year ago.

A solar collector and specially designed triangular windows facing south help keep utility bills down in the Mullinax home. During the past year, bills for the all-electric house never topped $45 a month.

A kit for the dome costs $19,000, and contains everything necessary for the dome shell, including the windows. Everything else is extra.

Davis is the father of the "earth-powered" Davis caves, an infant Illinois company with 70 franchises in 24 states.

Davis decided to construct the home after seeing prices for building materials escalate, the quality of the materials cheapen and the cost of energy soar.

The home saves energy, requires little maintenance and insurance rates are cheap, he says.

"For me personally, the main advantage is the security. You just feel completely different. I can hardly sleep when I'm away from home because of the noises. We don't hear anything inside."

Since Davis and his famly cut their own wood for the Franklin stove, the cost of heating the home is virtually nothing. The constant temperature of the earth keeps it warm in the winter and cool in the summer.

"The coldest January on record when it was 25 below and an 80 below wind chill factor outside, we were without heat for four days. The temperature went from 70 degrees to 62 degrees inside."

The Davis cave cost $15,000 to build in 1976, but the price included only building materials since family members were responsible for construction and there were no labor costs.

An earth-sheltered home in Burnsville, Minn., which had 100 percent of its roof and 60 percent of its wall area covered by earth, sold recently for $110,000. Another such home on display at Willmar, Minn., sold quickly for $81,000.

Both homes are part of the Underground Space Center's demonstration program to determine the energy saving capabilities of earth shelters.

The portion of each home that is 5 feet or more below ground derives a constant temperature of 50-55 degrees from the earth, both in winter and summer.

Twelve earth sheltered townhouses, also part of the university project, are expected to be completed in November in Minneapolis.

Although earth-sheltered housing is similar or higher in cost than conventional housing at present, architectural designer John Kosmas says it is hoped such housing will cut heating and cooling costs by as much as 50-75 percent.

Buesing claims the public has moved ahead of the building profession.

"Lots of people are dedicated to building energy efficient homes," he says, "but they can't find contractors familiar enough with the new ideas, or even contractors who will admit such ideas exist."

But you can't blame them, he says. "They're not trained structural engineers. They know a conventional house will work. As soon as you change it, they don't have a good feel for it."

He says it's important for the consumer to educate himself to the point of a competent designer. He has to know how to assess a contractor's competence and the best way to do that is to find a house the contractor has constructed and ask for energy figures.

He warns that contractors who don't take into consideration sun orientation, good insulation throughout the structure and energy efficient appliances should be avoided.

Buesing predicts an explosion in passive solar home design within the next few years because it is less expensive than active solar heating. A passive system reflects heat into the house during the day where it is stored up to keep interiors warm at night.

Active solar heating uses roof collectors, fans, pumps and ducts to move heat from the sun into storage tanks or bins for later use.

"What is needed is a concise homebuyer's educational pamphlet on what to look for.

"People also need to demand more from builders. That would change the trend in housing."

He is harder on the contractors than Buesing, saying their unwillingness to modify standard home building techniques results because they don't understand and don't want to learn something new.

"No matter what you are looking at in alternative energy," says Lunde, "the necessary starting point is a very efficient house."

For that homebuyers must look to their insulation, a better orientation of windows, earth sheltering up to the windows on the north and west corners and better caulking around the windows and doors.

Threat Growing From Industrial Waste Dumping

By D.J. ROSENBAUM
United Press International

The danger of industrial wastes may seem remote — something that happens to somebody else — but it could be as near as the food you eat, the air you breathe or the water you drink.

Odds are you won't know you have been exposed to deadly chemicals until well after the fact.

Slowly, an awareness of the danger of chemical wastes has seeped into the public and political consciousnesses even as the wastes themselves have seeped into the nation's land, water and air.

The sharpened perceptions have been caused by a variety of events and scenes that include the stark reality of Kentucky's "Valley of the Drums," the human upheaval of the Love Canal in New York State, the death of a teen-age truck driver in Louisiana.

It was the predawn hours of July 25, 1978, when 19-year-old Kirtley Jackson rolled a 5,000-gallon tank truck down a dirt road through the Atchafalaya Basin in Bayou Sorrel, La. He hooked up a hose and began dumping his cargo of "spent industrial caustics."

He died while unloading the wastes. An invstigation showed that Jackson had inhaled six times the lethal dose of sulfide fumes.

In Niagara Falls, N.Y., an elementary school and a housing development were built on top of a sealed chemical dump, one which had been inactive for 25 years. In August, 1978, toxic chemicals began leaking out of the ground at the Love Canal, and 239 famlies were forced to permanently evacuate their homes at state expense.

Kentucky's "Valley of the Drums," where more than 21,000 drums of chemicals are rusting in open, shale-rock graves, recently made national headlines.

More than 1 million pounds of dangerous wastes are now being stored in Michigan, double the 1980 figure — wastes that cannot be legally or safely disposed of. A county health official says "There is no way to estimte the number of illegal dump sites."

A Colorado Health Department official notes, "There is a threat. We just don't know how much of a threat. They (the chemical companies) will tell us what we want to know, but we have to ask the right questions. And most of them aren't volunteering anything." Much of that state's trouble is with mining residues, mercury and arsenic.

The Love Canal evacuation created attention that eventually turned the issue of toxic waste disposal into the Environmental Protection Agency's "highest agency priority."

The EPA says there may be from 30,000 to 50,000 dump sites across the country containing hazardous wastes. Of those, 1,000 to 2,000 may beEespecially dangerous. Of them, EPA says 151 sites may pose imminent problems. But that list is growing — 60 of those sites were added in July.

There is no way of knowing whether you live near a clandestine dump site. They are simple to establish, difficult to pinpoint.

You do not need to be so unlucky as to have bought property at the Love Canal. All it takes is for a tank truck operated by a less-than-reputable disposal firm to drive down your block on a rainy day with a valve open.

The wastes leak out, seep into the ground, the groundwater, and the well from which you draw your drinking water.

The fish you eat might have been caught from a river or lake in which someone dumped benzene, toline, lindane, PCO, Chloroform, dioxin or any one of thousands os such materials — because it was cheaper than disposing of it properly.

The results of prolongd eating, drinking or breathing those compounds include skin irritation, narcosis — defined as "a condition of deep stupor" — convulsions, high white cell counts, paralysis, leukemia, liver tumors and death.

Although many wastes are disposed of on the grounds of industrial plants, offsite disposal is sometimes contracted out to an independent firm.

The Love Canal was operated legally by Hooker Chemical, which owned the land. Kirtley Jackson worked for an outside contractor: the Environmental Purification Advancement Corp. That dump was also legal.

With no comprehensive federal guidelines, enforced, regulation of waste dumps is left to the states. And some states, such as Louisiana, until recently had imposed almost no restrictions on dumping at all.

Dr. Ronld J. Buchanan, chief of the New Jereey Bureau of Chemical and Hazardous Wastes, puts the price tag on legitimate disposal at anywhere from 10 cents to $1 a gallon, depending on the type of waste and method of disposal. And as approved dump sites fill up, available space becomes more valuable and costly, especially since officials lately have become less willing to approve new sites. Illicit dumping, therefore, is a great temptation.

"One of the favorite methods is for a 6,000 gallon tank truck to travel down the road on a rainy day with the valve open," says Buchanan. A truck could be emptied anywhere: a vacnt lot, a city sewer, a wooded area.

Elapsed time: about 10 minutes. Cost on the illegal disposal: about 6 cents a gallon.

Last year, Buchanan said, such a truck dumped wastes in Perth Amboy and contaminated the city's entire well-water system for several weeks. Another in Ocean County was blamed as the source for organic industrial chemicals that contaminted 162 wells.

The danger posed by toxic chemical waste is threefold: The material may be touched, inhaled or ingested. Of the three, visible pools of contamination are most obvious. Despite years of suspicion fueled by what seemed to be high incidences of birth defects and chronic illness, residents of the Love Canal became aware that they were living above an abandoned dump only when chemicals began collecting in yards and basements.

But the most insidious way the wastes get into the food chain is through drinking water. Obviously, chemicals dumped illegally by the side of the road easily seep into groundwater, then into wells. But even wastes stored in metal drums and buried in approved dump sites find their way out, because metal rusts and deteriorates.

"Even when you bury some of these chemicals in concrete vaults they'll eat their way through it and leak out," says Mike Vandenheuvl, a Muskegon County, Mich., public health official. "Then they mix with other chemicals under there and form something more toxic."

Whether the chemicals get as far as the water table is often a matter of luck. Kentucky's "Valley of the Drums" — where more than 21,000 drums of chemicals are sitting in open air — is over hard shale, which prevented the wastes from seeping too far into the ground before a clean-up was begun. But in Michigan, many dumps were intentionally put in sandy areas — the worst possible choice, although it used to be considered reasonable technology.

The case of Ward Transformer Co. is a good example of the legal and technical problems caused by illegal dumping.

Robert Burns, owner of Transformer Sales Co. of Jamestown, N.Y., pleaded guilty wih his two sons to dumping oil laced with cancer-linked polychlorinated biphenals (PCB) along 210 miles of North Carolina roadways in July 1978.

The Burnses claimed that the people who hired them — Robert E. "Buck" Ward, Jr. and Robert E. "Bob" Ward III Of Ward Transformer Co., Raleigh, N.C. — knew that the oil would be illegally disposed of.

Buck Ward was acquitted of state accessory charges, but still faces federal prosecution. Charges against Bob Ward were dropped.

The PCBs are still there. EPA rejected a proposal to treat them with activated charcoal where they lie and insisted that they be moved to an approved disposal site. But all 14 counties where the chemical was dumped have refused to be the waste's final resting place.

Part of the difficulty surrounding the control of toxic waste is that the material is often dumped a great distance from where it is generated. Dennis McGuire, chief of the air pollution control division of Gary, Ind., says his city "has been a chemical dumping ground for a number of years.

"Trucks come into the state, go to a part of Gary that's open field, dump their toxic materials and go off. Once we lick up all those drums from scattered areas, we have to come up with a way to stop other trucks from dumping. I suppose we'll need armed guards.

"They just drop their waste chemical drums on the highway and let them leak out. We can clean it up here in Gary and then they'll go to Hammond or East Chicago. That's why it should be controlled by federal law."

Indina's problem is mainly with metallic wastes, created in electroplating. Other wastes, such as PCBs, are shipped out of state.

Most of 3.2 million tons of liquid waste generated last year in New Jersey was dumped 100 miles off the coast. About 300,000 tons were incinerated, reclaimed or buried on-site. Approximately 250,000 tons of wastes were hauled to New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and as far away as Texas.

But Maryland Water Resources Administration officials reported that a group of ducks were killed when a tank truck bearing New Jersey license plates discharged its contents along a roadside on the Eastern Shore. Officials were unable to trace the truck or identify its cargo.

The LaBounty landfill along the Cedar River in northern Iowa was used for 25 years by Salsbury laboratories to dump residue, including arsenic.

Used Crankcase Oil Cuts College Heating Costs

By JAMES H. LUDWIN

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.H. (UPI) — "We took a deep breath and fired the boiler. It worked."

That's the way Robert Jarvis, director of plant operations at Skidmore College, described an experiment to determine if boilers at the school could be converted to burn used crankcase oil instead of conventional, more costly, fuel oil.

As a result of the three-day trial in early June, Skidmore decided to convert its boilers to burn used automotive oil on a permanent basis to provide heat and hot water for the 2,000 student campus here.

During the experiment, the campus heating system operated with only moderate modification of the boiler system, and no damage, according to Stephan F. Harran Jr., director of business operations for the college.

The conversion will cost only about $20,000, and may return a yearly savings of $90,000 or more on that investment, Harran said.

In addition, Skidmore also will have the capability to switch to backup systems, using conventional, thick No. 6 heating oil or natural gas.

Harran also noted that reconversion to No. 6 heating oil would not be an involved or expensive process.

"The only reservation we have about all this is talking about it," Jarvis said. "If everyone starts doing the same thing, the supply of crankcase oil might become a problem."

Harran said, however, that a contract is being negotiated with a company to guarantee Skidmore 250,000 gallons of used oil at 23 cents per gallon for a year. Harran said the school would try on its own to obtain an additonal 150,000 to 250,000 gallons of waste oil from gas station operators at a cost of about 20 cents a gallon.

College officials have mailed letters to about 150 gasoline station operators in upstate New York, offering to collect their used oil in exchange for tax deductable gift receipts, the same kind they would get for making cash gifts, at a rate of 8 cents per gallon. It would cost Skidmore about 12 cents a gallon to collect and store the oil.

By comparison, the tar-like No. 6 heating oil is expected to sell for about 49 cents a gallon this winter, while residential heating oil, a thinner, No.2 grade, will probably cost 80 cents or more.

Harran said the commercial potential of such a system is large, but doubted whether residential customers would find the conversion economical, even with the comparatively low cost of waste oil.

"Most homes use No. 2 fuel oil," he said, noting the waste oil is thicker, about a No. 4 grade.

"I won't say it's impossible, but you'd have to get into a whole different kind of furnace."

Even if the process catches on, Harran said, there should be enough waste oil available, since the federal Environmental Protection Agency estimated in 1974 that more than half a billion gallons of waste automotive oil are available yearly nationwide. New York state accounted for about 32 million gallons a year, according to EPA figures.

Some waste oil is already reprocessed commercially, appearing on store shelves as a small machine lubricant, Harran said.

But much of the waste oil was simply a pollutant, sometimes dumped illegally in isolated areas.

The idea for the conversion project came about in the fall of 1978 when Skidmore officials learned that the University of Rhode Island tried mixing small amounts of crankcase oil, about 20 percent, with their regular fuel.

"They had problems," Harran said, because it was difficult to maintain a 20 percent blend of fuels at all times.

So Skidmore decided to test the possibility of using 100 percent waste oil. In the test, Jarvis said, the crankcase oil actually burned more efficiently, by 5 to 6 percent.

The college must get a permit for the changeover from the Department of Environmental Conservation, but Harran said that En Con is very optimistic about the project.

The main question mark, Harran said, will be control of pollutants. But he expects the new system will effectively filter out dangerous pollutants.

The Voice of Business

By RICHARD L. LESHER
President, U.S. Chamber Of Commerce

WASHINGTON — Throughout most of our history, owning a home was an impossible dream. It's only during the past 20 years that it has become an attainable goal for 60 percent of the American people. Now there are ominuous signs that, unless we shape up and correct some of our mistakes, home ownership will begin to decline. We face a future in which the opportunity to buy a home could be relegated to a small elite, perhaps one as small as 20 percent of the population.

Already the wedding-out process is underway. The price of a new home has almost doubled since 1972, and in some areas prices have shot up even faster. When a typical couple decides to venture into the housing market, they often find price tags averaging $75,000. So let's say the couple has managed to save $15,000 for a down payment, which is a feat in itself, and thus needs a $60,000 loan. If mortgage money is available, and there is no guarantee of that, the man and his wife might be quoted an interest rate above 13 percent. That means the couple will face monthly payments exceeding $700. If an entire loan is paid off over 30 years, the actual cost of the mortgage will be over a quarter of a million dollars. They don't call a man's home his castle for nothing.

What's gone wrong? Many people look at the high interest rates and cite them as the chief culprit of runaway housing costs. The problem with that explanation is it puts the cart before the horse. Interest rates represent the price you must pay to borrow money, and neither prices, nor, for that matter, wages and profits, cause inflation any more than wet streets cause rain. Inflation results, quite simply, from a decline in the value of the currency produced by the government.

DURING THE PAST 15 years, the federal government has been printing and spending money at a far more rapid rate — as much as three times faster — than our underlying economy could produce new goods and services. Those in Washington will go to almost any length to deny this is true, but the American people, who must cope with the real world, know better. That is why they have been rushing to invest their paper money in fixed assets like homes that can appreciate rather than decline in value.

Added to these underlying inflationary pressures have been special problems within the housing market itself that have exacerbated the price spiral. For example, the near explosion in the demand for new homes has been accompanied by severe constraints on the ability of builders to supply them. Land now costs 25 percent of the base price of housing — up from about 10 percent earlier — because of various development restrictions such as excessive zoning requirements. Also, the government has squeezed the supply of timber and driven up its price by restricting harvesting on huge areas of public lands.

FEDERAL, STATE AND local regulations also increase the cost of housing. Housing experts feel that 20 percent of the current cost of housing can be traced to excessive or antiquated government regulations. In North Carolina, approximately $6,000 has been added to the cost of a new home just from regulations since 1970. One builder in the Midwest noted that no less than six different inspectors had to approve a house before it could be occupied. The longer they take, the more you pay.

What to do? One popular idea is to establish a graduated mortgage which scheduled monthly payments starting at a lower level than a standard fixed-payment, and which then gradually increase to a pre-determined level. This is an interesting idea, but we should understand that it treats only the symptoms, not the cause of the disease. Another proposal would extend credit allocations. When this basically protectionist strategy fails, as it has in the past, housing is left with no financing. Also, the cost of this special allocation will be increased interest rates to the rest of the economy. In other words, the consumer will end up paying the same bill in a different form.

To keep the price of new homes within reach of the average American family we must do three things and do them fast: First, resolve to fight inflation, and I mean really fight it by insisting politicians either stop their wild spending or be voted out of office; second, develop common sense performance-oriented building codes and development regulations, and third, free-up some of the vast forest areas now locked up.

If we don't take these measures, only kings and shieks will be wealthy enough to buy our homes.

American Moved To Australia 'Because Of Nuclear Threats

BY JEFF FRANCIS

PERTH, Australia (UPI) — Nearly a year ago, Alexander "Sandy" Kerr fled what he considers the danger of life in the United States to settle with his family in what he believes is the comparative safety of western Australia.

The Three Mile Island nuclear accident symbolizes he says, "one of my main reasons in migrating to Australia — to escape from such hazards."

Kerr is 32, a city and regional planner by trade. From Oakland, Calif., he is the son of Clark Kerr, the former University of California president who is currently chairman of the Carnegie Council of Policy Studies in Higher Education at Berkeley.

Why did he choose Australia?

"The articles I have read convinced me that in a nuclear explosion 80 to 90 percent of radioactive fallouts would be confined to the northern hemisphere. Only 10 to 20 percent would move to the southern hemisphere.

"The likelihood of a nuclear war in the year 2000 was expounded in an article I read in a Harvard University magazine," Kerr said.

"This possibility and the threat of possible radioactive fallouts, coupled with the increasing violent crimes and juvenile delinquency, made me believe that the United States is no longer a place to raise my own family.

"I don't know 'what other people think, but that is my feeling."

Kerr, his wife, and their son, Rex, arrived here last summer, eight months before the accident at Harrisburg. They are settling in Albany, 245 miles south of Perth and, in the process, are building, more than seeking, a new lifestyle.

The couple chose the southern coast of Western Australia after reading reports of air circulation and air pollution in the area. They also decided in favor of the area for its weather, its scenic beauty, which reminds Kerr of his hometown in the San Francisco Bay area, and the light population which totals only about 15,000.

They have bought for $27,500, a 160-acre tract of land on a coastal reserve 10 miles west of Albany. There, they intend to build a self-sustaining home with solar heating and its own water supply. They say they will grow their own food.

To this end, Kerr completed an intensive course on solar energy in the United States and is designing the house to have a massive glass front facing north.

He says the system will retain natural heat and radiate it through the house. He wants to develop a system to reduce temperature by day and increase it at night with stored energy.

"Sandy and I work as a team, sometimes sharing duties, sometimes dividing them," says April Jerr, who recalls being a high school cheer leader in her native Solana Beach, north of San Diego.

"We are both involved in drawing up a master plan for our property, planning the garden and orchard and in designing our solar house.

"I find that the creativity, skill and challenge required are almost a reward in themselves," she said.

"Our parents have been very understanding and have given us complete support," Kerr said. "Naturally, they are watching our progress with keen interest."

Kerr said the possible dangers of low level radiation had entered into his decision to move here. He believes it may cause genetic mutilation, eventually affecting many generations.

He also said he believes Three Mile Island is an example of his belief the advantages of nuclear energy are outweighed by radiation exposure and the problem of safe disposal of nuclear waste.

"I believe that the billions of dollars spent on nurlear energy should be channeled to the development of elternative sources of energy such as solar energy."

Innovative Corn Crops Possible

By HARRIET LEEDS

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — The discovery that may someday lead to the development of perennial corn almost didn't happen.

A perennial species of wild corn was found about a year ago in the remote Sierra de Manantlan mountain region of southwestern Mexico by an international team of scientists.

"Five cows in the wrong place and that plant would have been wiped out," said Hugh H. Iltis, a University of Wisconsin botanist who led the expedition.

Other members of the team were John Doebley of the University of Wisconsin, Batia Pazy of Hebrew University in Jerusalem and Rafael Guzman of the University of Guadalajara in Mexico.

The species of wild corn they discovered and named Zea diploperennis has the same number of chromosomes as domesticated corn. This makes cross-breeding possible, something that could not be done with another form of perennial wild corn called teocinte which was discovered in 1910 by Albert S. Hitchcock of the Smithsonian Institution. When bred with corn, teocinte, with twice as many chromosomes, formed sterile hybrids.

Iltis and his colleagues published an article about their discovery about nine months ago. Since then, scientists all over the world have begun research that may lead to corn crops that spring up each year with no need for replanting.

Iltis sent seeds to such countries as West Germany, Spain, Italy, Israel, Columbia, India, Pakistan, Japan, China and the Soviet Union.

At a seminar in Irkutsk, Siberia, this summer, Iltis said he bumped into one Soviet researcher who was "excited as a kid" to get the seeds.

Development of a seed to produce an economically feasible, marketable product may be 10 to 100 years in the future, depending on the optimism of the scientist speaking.

"I've been skeptical," Doebley said. "People have to wait and see. It may take 100 years for the genetic technology to develop. Perennialism can be controlled by many genes."

Iltis said other benefits of the discovery — such as disease-resistant hybrids — are likely to come sooner.

Iltis said he had long suspected the existence of an even more primitive plant than teocinte and felt if it survived it would be growing somewhere near the plants Hitchcock found.

He and his group reached the area with the help of a supporting party of local Indians, four mules, two horses and one donkey.

The new-found plant is thought to be an ancestor of corn, but does not closely resemble it. The plant produces rows of six to 10 triangular seeds fitted together in one husk.

Corn, one of the world's top three food crops (the others are wheat and rice), is the United States' biggest and most valuable agricultural crop.

About 10 percent of the U.S. crop is eaten by people in a wide variety of forms from corn-on-the-cob to popcorn. The rest is consumed by animals and ultimately provides food for people in the form of meat, milk, and eggs.

Dr. Lowell R. Nault of the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center told Iltis his early experiments showed Zea diploperennis highly resistant to several viruses.

"The locals considered the plant a mala yerba — a bad weed — and were trying to eliminate it," Iltis said. "It's immune to everything."

Students Oppose Move To Demolish Apartments

By ROLAND LINDSEY

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Rows of World War II style barracks buildings line the tree-shaded street in West Austin, but children playing outside the buildings dispell any hint of a military establishment.

The barracks — known for more than three decades as Brackenridge and Deep Eddy apartments — provide low cost housing for married students attending the University of Texas.

Kelly Saenz, a leader of the Brackenridge Neighborhood Council which was organized to oppose any destruction or extensive renovation of the apartments, said the residents are genuinely worried.

"None of use would be living here if we could afford Gateway and Colorado, the other housing for married students," she said. "The university and the board of regents do not understand that we love this place. We love the aesthetics of it. It's a beautiful and very close knit community. He (UT Housing Director Robert Cooke) was stunned that we sincerely liked living here."

The barracks buildings were brought to UT in 1946 to help provide housing for the flood of returning veterans after World War II, and have been used since that time as low cost housing for married students.

A family attending UT can rent an apartment in the frame buildings for $69 to $88 a month, plus electricity. Miss Saenz said the university's complaints against the buildings are that they are firetraps, are expensive to maintain, and are not energy efficient.

She says all those arguments can be easily countered. There has never been a major fire in the units, and they are self supporting, not requiring any expenditure of university funds for maintenance, she contends. And the students who live there have little income so they have learned to be energy efficient regardless of the construction of the buildings.

UT officials have estimated the cost of an extensive renovation at $6 million to $12 million for the 400-plus units, and that cost inevitably would raise the rent beyond the budgets of most of the present occupants, Miss Saenz said.

How many of the students live at Brackenridge and Deep Eddy because they can't afford to live elsewhere?

"The majority, 99 percent," she said. "In most of these households, both spouses are in school. Living here is what allows that. That's what happened to my husband and I. Otherwise I would have worked until he finished school, then I would have gone to school while he worked, but we chose to live here and both of us go.

"In my case, I will definitely have to drop out if they close them down. Very few of the families here now are on food stamps, but if we have to move out and start paying high rent, the food stamp rolls will swell."

The comraderie among the residents is unusual in a time when many apartment dwellers don't know the names of their neighbors.

"This is a supportive community, people watch each others' children so we can attend school. We help each other out when we can, and it's a very happy community. This place is a unique community," she said.

"People are desperately frightened they are going to have to discontinue their education, they're going to have to give up their homes."

The apartments sit on prime land near the shores of Lake Austin, and the students are concerned that UT regents may be interested in selling the site to a developer.

A decision by the UT housing director not to accept contracts for fall leases on the units increased their concern, prompting speculation the decision already has been made to demolish the units.

"These places have been here since 1946, and the regents have been trying about every five years to get rid of them," Miss Saenz said. "Even conservative estimates are that there are about 10 good years left in these units.

Old-Time Barber Teaches Others Skills Of Trade

"The whole family, because of dad, has learned to cut hair pretty well," Mrs. Coulter said.

W.T. Evans Jr., and Harry C. Evans, two sons now dead, took up the trade and at one time all three barbered together in a shop. Mrs. Coulter said a cousin of hers had learned the profession from the elder Evans. And husband Buford operates — what else? — a barber shop.

"He always believed in hard work, but plenty of rest with it. It seems to have worked real well. After all, he drove a car until he was 90 years old," Mrs. Coulter said of her father.

She said Evans, born in Rockwood, had had his first job as a frail 13-year-old — working in an Illinois coal mine. "When he took him into the mines, his daddy said it really made a man out of him," she said, laughing.

He returned later to Rockwood, then came to Chattanooga and opened the Chattanooga Barber College in 1924. He trained young men in the business until World War II, when many potential students began heading off into military service.

He then closed the college, opened a barber shop and kept at it until he retired at 76.

But his cutting days weren't over. Mrs. Coulter said Evans had worked part-time at W.T. Evans Jr.'s shop until he turned 80 — when he hung up the shears.

These days, Buford Coulter cuts Evans' hair. Evans suffered a stroke five years ago and complains he has a lack of feeling in his right hand, his daughter said, but he can still feed and dress himself.

"We had a big birthday cake and it had 95 candles on it. It took several people to light them all," Mrs. Coulter said.
