PLO leader's supporters, rebels fight

RAYAK, Lebanon (AP) — PLO rebels and supporters of guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat battled with artillery and mortars Saturday in the Bekaa Valley. Police said eight people were killed and 17 wounded in the first sizable fighting since a mutiny against Arafat began May 7.

The one-hour battle apparently was over a supply route in the Bekaa, and it marked a serious escalation of tension between loyalists of Arafat's own Fatah faction and the mutineers led by Fatah Col. Saeed Mousa.

Arafat visited Romania and Algeria on Saturday, apparently trying to drum up outside support against the mutiny — the first formidable challenge to his leadership in 15 years as chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The official Palestinian news agency, WAFA, said Soviet Communist Party chief Yuri V. Andropov had sent a personal message supporting Arafat's "legitimate leadership" of the PLO.

According to police and radio reports, the fighting erupted near the Roman ruins town of Baalbek, in villages about seven miles from the Syrian border and 40 miles east of Beirut.

Residents of Baalbek who were reached by telephone said they heard the thud of explosions and gunfire for about an hour at midmorning. Police said four of eight people killed in the fighting were Lebanese whose car was trapped in a cross-fire.

Christian-owned radio stations that oppose the PLO presence in the Bekaa, where guerrillas are entrenched on the Syrian side of the cease-fire line with the Israeli army, said 40 people were wounded, including 10 Arafat partisans.

But spokesmen for the mutineers and Fatah, the largest PLO faction, played down the seriousness of the fighting. Both accused the other side of provoking bloodshed.

Jihad Saleh, a spokesman for the rebels in Damascus, Syria, said "artillery fire was opened against our positions at 9 a.m. (3 a.m. EDT)," but that the rebels were ordered not to return the fire.

Saleh claimed some Fatah regulars approached the rebels' position but "did not fire a single shot" and instead defected.

Khalil Al-Wazir, Arafat's military commander who is known by the code name Abu Jihad, took reporters into the Bekaa from Syria. He said the fighting broke out about 10:30 a.m. when the rebels tried to block the main highway to Baalbek.

The highway links the rebel stronghold of Housh Barada, just west of Baalbek, with the Syrian town of Zabadani and is the mutineers' only supply route.

Abu Jihad said PLO regulars loyal to Arafat tried to remove the roadblock but they were fired on by the rebels and the clash continued sporadically for one hour with machine guns, mortars and lighter weapons.

"Friendly forces in the area, Syrians and Palestinians, intervened to reopen the highway and end the clash," said Abu Jihad.

Reporters who tried to reach the scene were stopped by Syrian soldiers at Rayak, 18 miles south of Baalbek. A reporter toured other Palestinian positions in the Bekaa Valley and saw no evidence of fighting between guerrilla forces.

The mutiny began in early May when Mousa led a rebellion against two commanders appointed by Arafat. The rebels claimed the commanders had fled in the face of the Israeli invasion last June, and also wanted more say in setting Fatah policy.

Beirut press reports have said Arafat rescinded the appointments, but the rebellion clearly has continued. A week ago, a band of rebels seized a half-dozen Fatah warehouses in Damascus and reportedly killed two Fatah guards.

Coroner: Gunman probably Kahl

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A medical examiner said Saturday he had tentatively identified a gunman killed in a shootout with police as fugitive tax protester Gordon Kahl.

Dr. Fahmy Malak said there is a "great probability" that the man is Kahl, but that he can't make positive identification until he gets dental records Monday.

However, Malak said he made a tentative identification based on Kahl's general description, scars from surgery Kahl underwent, an old bullet fragment in the left hip, and a verbal description of Kahl's dental work given by a daughter of Kahl.

He would not further identify the daughter or say where she lives.

The body believed to be Kahl was found Friday night inside a munitions-filled concrete house that exploded and burned after police tossed in tear gas. A fatally wounded sheriff fell or stumbled to a door before the fire and was grabbed by a marshal.

The couple who owned the house outside the northeastern Arkansas town of Walnut Ridge, also tax protesters, were arrested outside the house before the shooting started. They were charged Saturday with capital murder of the dead sheriff. Capital murder in Arkansas may be punished by execution or life imprisonment without parole.

Kahl, 63, a retired North Dakota farmer, was wanted for the shooting deaths four months ago of two U.S. marshals near Medina, N.D. He was a member of a militant, survivalist, anti-tax group called Posse Comitatus and was on probation for a 1977 conviction for failure to file federal income tax forms.

Kahl fled after the shooting and an extensive manhunt was launched. U.S. Attorney Rodney Webb of Fargo, N.D., said he understood that Kahl had lived in Arkansas from July 1981 to July 1982.

Malak said the man believed to be Kahl had been shot once in the side of the head ear with a .41-caliber handgun.

"The probability is great the sheriff shot him," Malak said. "To be sure we have to match the bullet with the sheriff's gun ...." Kahl was dead before the house burned, Malak said.

Malak said Sheriff Gene Matthews, 37, died from loss of blood.

Matthews was shot twice, Malak said, once from a rifle fired from more than 3 feet away.

Kahl's daughter leaves Odessa to attend her father's funeral

ODESSA (AP) — A daughter of fugitive tax protestor Gordon Kahl left her home here Saturday, saying she was going to North Dakota to attend the funeral of her father who died not just "for his freedom," but for "everybody elses."

Linda Holder said her father died because he and God were "ready for him to go."

Kahl, 63, a retired North Dakota farmer, was wanted for the shooting deaths four months ago of two U.S. marshals near Medina, N.D. He was a member of a militant, survivalist, anti-tax group called Posse Comitatus and was on probation for a 1977 conviction for failure to file federal income tax forms.

Kahl fled after the shooting. A manhunt extended into West Texas, where some of Kahl's relatives were reportedly living.

Mrs. Holder, who declined to give her age, said the two U.S. marshals slain in North Dakota "were sent out to assassinate my father and mother."

Brucellosis control issue both political, medical

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The federal-state brucellosis clash has taken on an apparent "political" overtone rather than being a genuine health issue affecting both cattle and people.

"It's kind of a political football," said Midland rancher Bill Evans.

The federal government has threatened to put a quarantine on Texas breeder cattle — heifers, mother cows and bulls — not bound for the slaughterhouse and to bar them from being shipped out of state unless Texas complies with U.S. Department of Agriculture regulations.

USDA regulations require market-bound cattle be tested for brucellosis, known as Bang's disease in cattle and in man as the rare undulant fever, an infectious disease similar to the flu and leads to chills, aches and pains, fever and a general weakness and loss of appetite. In cattle, the disease affects organs and can cause miscarriages and abortions in heifers and mother cows and a loss of weight.

The disease, virtually nil in semi-arid West Texas, is more common in the humid South and East Texas.

Most Texas cattlemen-ranchers are conscientious in testing their herds and ensuring that none of their head is infested with the "Brucella abortus" bacteria.

IN SLAUGHTER and dairy cattle, brucellosis poses no dangers to humans as long as the meat is cooked and the milk is pasteurized.

But the Texas rub came after 1979 when South Texas rancher R.J. "Red" Nunley of Sabinal got a court injunction which, on constitutional grounds, barred the Texas Animal Health Commission from going on the cattleman's ranch and inspecting the herd for brucellosis. Nunley ships cattle throughout the country.

Due to that Catch-22 situation and the rancher's ploy in shirking the federal regulations, the USDA decided to quarantine Texas cattle. A hearing on that proposed quarantine is to be held in federal court in Austin June 16.

Evans suggested the federal threat is a means to force the South Texas rancher to comply with testing regulations. Evidently, other ranchers do.

The situation now is in limbo, noted Evans, who is co-operator of Midland's Southwestern Livestock Auction Co. which each Tuesday processes 800 to 1,200 head of cattle. "It'll be another costly increase, I'm afraid," if the quarantine is imposed.

WITH IMPOSITION of a 30-day quarantine, breeding cattle could not be shipped out of Texas unless those cattle came from "qualified herds" which passed two brucellosis tests. Not affected by the quarantine would be steers, spayed heifers and other cattle, such as culled bulls and old dairy cows, headed for packing houses.

The feed and other costs while just holding the cattle under quarantine would get quite expensive, he said.

"It's just another blow in the day-to-day fight for survival (of Texas cattlemen)," said Evans. "Most of them could weather it all right."

In West Texas, brucellosis is rare.

"It (the bacteria) thrives in moist conditions, and we don't have much much of that," he said.

Enos Howle, co-operator of the auction barn, noted, "We don't know for sure that there will be a quarantine.

Is it shearing season?

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Cindy Christian's hair is so long, she's afraid she'll have trouble with her balance when she finally trims her 6-foot-plus locks.

Miss Christian said she decided at age 13 to begin her hair-raising adventure because her short hair style "looked awful."

Now, at age 28, she's tired of the hassles of having locks long enough to walk on and is planning to cut off the locks this summer.

Her hair now measures 74½ inches. Miss Christian herself is 5-foot-8 — or 68 inches.

The Guinness Book of World Records lists 10-feet-6 as the longest head of hair, measured from a woman in Canada in 1927.

"Because of the weight of it, I think I'm going to have to make two cuts," she said. The hair weighs 2 pounds.

"The main thing is just being able to move without stepping on it or slamming it in a door — getting it caught on things," she said.

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said Saturday the KGB secret police picked up a U.S. diplomat who was "caught red-handed" spying and the government ordered him expelled.

The diplomat, Louis Thomas, the attache of the administration section of the embassy's security division, is the second U.S. diplomat ordered out of the Soviet Union this year after being accused of espionage.

"Louis Thomas was caught red-handed during a spy action in Moscow on June 2," the Soviet news agency Tass said. "In the course of the investigation, the evidence was obtained which fully exposes this American diplomat as a person engaged in intelligence activities which are incompatible with his official status."

Tass did not say what Thomas was doing when he was caught.

Embassy spokesman Frank Tonini confirmed Thomas had been ordered expelled, but said he could not comment on the Soviets' espionage accusation."He is preparing to leave some time next week," the embassy spokesman said.

In Washington, the U.S. State Department confirmed Thomas was being expelled, but would not give details.

State Department spokeswoman Sondra McCarty would not comment on whether the Soviets were retaliating for U.S. expulsions of Soviet diplomats earlier this year. She said personal information about Thomas, including his hometown and age, was confidential, and would not comment on the nature of his duties in Moscow.

Tonini said Thomas was due to complete the normal two-year duty in Moscow this summer and was to be transferred to an unspecified new post. He had served in the embassy for 22 months.

Thomas, according to a U.S. Embassy staff directory, was married to Elizabeth K. Thomas and lived in an apartment at the embassy compound.

Repeated attempts to reach Thomas by telephone were unsuccessful. The embassy switchboard operator reported the line was "out of order."

On March 7, the Soviets announced that Richard Osborne, a first secretary at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, had been caught with a "portable intelligence special-purpose apparatus for the transmission of espionage information via the U.S. Marisat satellite."

The United States expelled Yevgeny Barmyantsev, an assistant military attache with the Soviet Embassy in Washington, on April 19 after the FBI intercepted him picking up undeveloped film in a "dead drop" in rural Maryland.

The next day, the United States expelled Alexander Mikheyev, a member of a Soviet think tank, The Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada, who was on a three-month assignment to the Soviet mission in New York. He was accused of trying to obtain classified documents from a U.S. congressional aide.

Differing brucellosis rates blamed on herd management

LUBBOCK — Brucellosis rates in cattle herds can be attributed to management and not breed, says Texas Tech University veterinarian J.M. Hellman.

"The cattle in Southeast Texas are more infected than those in West Texas because they are congregated closer together and managed in more intense herds," Hellman says.

Because of differing management practices brought on by topographical characteristics, Interstate 35 from Fort Worth to Laredo divides the brucellosis problems of East Texas from the few isolated cases in West Texas.

"I can sympathize with the people out of state who have already gone through the test-and-slaughter process," Hellman said. Brucellosis eradication programs were begun in some states as early as the 1940s with marked success.

Brucellosis, which also is known as Bang's disease, is evidenced by Brucella bacteria attaching to the lymph glands, the udders and reproductive organs of cows and bulls. In mother cows, brucellosis leads to abortions.

Mesquite control outlined

COLLEGE STATION — Aerial spraying of herbicides can be effective in battling mesquite and other nuisance brush species in late spring and early summer.

"Most ranchers want to apply herbicides during a year they can expect good control," says Dr. Tommy Welch, range brush and weed control specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"Thus," he says, "it's necessary to take a look at weather conditions beginning last fall. Mesquite growth appears to be closely related to climatic conditions which precede the spraying date. Herbicides used to control mesquite and associated brush are growth-regulating chemicals that must be translocated from the leaves to the stems and roots to be most effective. And translocation of the herbicide is strongly influenced by growing conditions when the herbicide is applied."

Studies indicate that mesquite control is most effective when rainfall has been average or above average for at least three months before treatment. Mesquite kill is greatest when the leaves are fully extended and dark green in color and when the soil temperature at the 18-inch depth is 75 degrees or higher, Welch said.

Three registered and effective herbicides for mesquite control on Texas rangeland by aerial spray are 2,4,5-T; a 1-1 mixture of picloram (Grazon PC) and 2,4,5-T, and a 1-1 mixture of dicamba (Banvel) and 2,4,5-T.

TFB favors export expansion

WACO — Texas Farm Bureau is appealing to its members to prod their U.S. representatives to support legislation to expand agricultural exports.

The Export Equity Act of 1983 to expand agricultural trade needs the support of Congress, says Ed McKay, TFB national affairs director.

The acts provides for:

—Exporting the PIK (payment-in-kind) program by authorizing the giving of "bonus" commodities to foreign purchasers who buy more than they have in the past.

—Making Commodity Credit Corp. commodities available to exports, so they can meet subsidized competition.

—Urging increased use of "blended interest credit" to gain new customers and to counter subsidized competition.

—Urging that not less than $1 billion be made available to the export credit revolving fund authorized by the 1981 Farm Bill.

—Expanding Food-for-Peace programs and broadening laws governing donations of dairy surpluses to include donations of other commodities.

Heritage applicants sought

AUSTIN — Registration for the 1983 Family Land Heritage Program to honor families who own land which has been kept in agricultural production for at least 100 years will continue through Aug. 16.

"Hard times have dogged the farmer constantly," said Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, "making it all the more commendable that some families have managed to keep the old home place in production for a century or more."

The heritage program was created by the Texas Department of Agriculture in 1974. Since then, 1,588 farm and ranch properties in Texas have qualified for the program.

"The major emphasis of my administration is to protect and encourage the family-farm system," said Hightower, "and no one is more representative of the ingenuity and perseverance of that system than these families. They are living, productive symbols of an entrepreneurial unit that is our lifeblood. While we will celebrate their achievements of the past, we really are pointing out the importance they hold in the future."

Agricultural landowners who wish to apply for the program may obtain applications from county judges, county historical commission chairmen, Texas Department of Agriculture district offices or by writing the Family Land Heritage Program, Texas Department of Agriculture, P.O. Box 12847, Austin, Texas 78711.

Cycle rodeo slated June 18

LAMESA — Motorcyles and three-wheel land-daubers will be kicking up dust, sand and dirt June 18 when the Dawson County 4-H Motorcycle and Three-Wheeler Rodeo will be held in the Lamesa Rodeo Arena, according to John Farris, Dawson County agricultural agent.

The 7 p.m. event will include the keyhole, barrel race, wheelie, osbtacle jump, pole bending and the flat track.

Motorcycle and three-wheeler classes will be held for all age groups.

Entry forms, available at the Texas Agricultural Extension Service office in the Dawson County Courthouse, may be mailed to Jimmie Williams, 111 N.E. 24th St., Lamesa, Texas 79331, or may be filled out at the 5 p.m. registration just prior to the rodeo.

Weather may boost corn crop

WASHINGTON (AP) — The recent cloud of strange weather that brought a warmer-than-normal winter and a wetter-than-usual spring to much of the country may have a silver lining for corn, researchers say.

Looking back into history at the impact of similar weather phenomenon, scientists at the University of Illinois at Urbana say the changes in Pacific Ocean temperatures that have been influencing the world's weather are linked to bumper farm crops.

Dr. Paul Handler and his wife, Dr. Ellen Handler, looked at corn production and the occurrences of so-called "El Nino" events going back 112 years.

Farmers miss Saturday night banking

FREDERIKA, Iowa (AP) — Things just weren't the same around town on the first Saturday in 57 years — except holidays — that the Farmers Savings Bank wasn't open at night.

Two bank employees locked the doors shortly after noon, closing business until Monday morning and ending a service which had attracted customers for more than half a century.

Many people in this northeastern Iowa community of 250 people said they would miss being able to bank from 7 to 9 p.m. Saturdays, but they could understand why it was being discontinued.

"I think it is a service that is no longer needed," said C.W. Davison, as he waited on customers at Davison's Hardware across Main Street from the bank.

Frederika has changed, residents said, since farmers would flock into town on Saturday nights to eat, drink or catch the free, black-and-white movies shown on an outdoor screen.

"We've been here for 30 years and at one time it was an important thing in the bank's business," Davison said.

AGRICULTURE

"We used to have a lot of 80-acre farms in the area, and farmers used to come to see the free movies. They used to come and watch our television through the window, and they'd go in and do their banking."

But the free movies ended, it wasn't long before people had their own television sets in their own living rooms. The number of farmers needing extra banking hours dropped drastically as their operations swelled to 320 acres or more.

It was not for lack of business, however, that Frederic Rewoldt, 55, president of the family-run bank, decided to end the long-time Saturday night practice.

"In summer, we would have probably 18 people waiting to get waited on," he said. "That thing (the bank) is full."

Fleas, ticks persistent pests

This spring there have been increasing reports of large populations of fleas and ticks infesting homes, yards and pet animals. Hopefully, this is not a harbinger of what may be in store for us the rest of the season. Fleas, because of their persistent occurrence over the past 2 or 3 years, have almost become "old hat." Yet, homeowners still have difficulty in achieving the desired degree of control of these pesky critters.

Ticks, especially the species that attack man and his pets, have resurged into urban and suburban areas in large populations. The American dog tick is abundant and the disease it transmits — Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever — is on the increase. The brown dog tick is also abundant, causing home dwellers and their pets no end of misery.

This issue deals with the often sensitive problem of recommending pesticide products for the control of pet animal external parasites. Pets are important to the American family. It is a fact that more money is spent annually for pet food than baby food in the U.S. Often dogs and cats as pets become so popular that they are practically considered family members.

Due to this great recreational and companionship importance in an American way of life it is essential that the health of these pets be safeguarded. Unfortunately, dogs and cats are often attacked by fleas, ticks, lice, mites and other troublesome pests.

The pest attack may persist throughout the year. Infested dogs and cats often scratch to relieve irritation; rub off patches of hair around the neck, shoulders and body; lose their appetite; and become weak and susceptible to disease.

Today with the proper use and timing of pesticides, it is possible to greatly reduce and sometimes eliminate these troublesome insect and mite attacks. Treating, as well as recommending treatment of pet animals for external parasites, is a sensitive issue. The following must be stressed to the inquirer in order that results are achieved with no problems resulting:

—Treat only the pets listed on the pesticide label. Do not use on pets any pesticide product labeled for crops and livestock, unless the formulation is so authorized.

—Use no more than the recommended dosage and only at the time recommended.

—Encourage consultation with a veterinarian, if the problem persists (resulting in several applications), or if the pet animal is old or infirm.

—Effective control requires simultaneous treatment of the pets and the premises, both indoors and outdoors. Treating only the pet, or the premises, often results in frequent retreatments and unnecessary pesticide applications.

The International Color Marketing Group (I.C.M.G.) meets yearly to forecast the color trends that will most likely prevail in the upcoming year. This year's forecast was arrived at with no small amount of argument among members. The I.C.M.G. did read a consensus, however, that the overall trend in 1984 will be toward a warmer palette. This stands in contrast to the predisposition toward grayer tones in recent years. Reds and burgundies will give way to grape colors. Mauves and dusty roses will maintain important positions, while beiges will become yellower. Browns will approach raisin. Rust color will cease to be important. And peaches and apricots will brighten up to pumpkin color.

Gov. Mark White's honeymoon relationship with the legislature is over now, having given way to a power struggle, and the governor has lost the battles for his two top projects. White said he pushed vigorously in the closing weeks of the session, and don't know what else he could have done.

Honeymoon with legislature, Texas governor ends quickly

AUSTIN (AP) — The relationship was honeymoon-fresh when Gov. Mark White, hailed like a family hero by the heavily Democratic Legislature, made his first speech to lawmakers.

"Our relationship is going to be one of partners. I have no desire to try to impose my will on this Legislature," he promised on Jan. 27, less than two weeks after taking the oath of office.

But four months later, when it was all over, White admitted he needed to go back and read "the separation of powers section of the state constitution." The honeymoon had given way to a power struggle, and the governor had lost the battles for his two top projects.

On the session's final night, the freshman governor ventured back into the House in a conciliatory mood.

"We have had our differences, but that is only because we are all true Texans, and true to our heritage we fight hard for what we believe," he told representatives, calling the night a "time to shake hands and recognize our common bonds."

In the January speech, White promised not to make legislative recommendations just "for the sake of compiling a scorecard." As he returned to the House last Monday night, his office released a scorecard.

Under "Governor's Program Passed," 19 measures were listed, including:

Utility regulation bills viewed as pro-consumer and in line with White's call for fairer rates. "The people have lost faith in the ability and purpose of the Public Utility Commission," White said in his January call for an elected commission.

He did not get the elected commission — but during the session all three PUC members quit, and White appointed replacements.

The governor did win legislative approval for other portions of his PUC package — electric utilities will no longer be allowed to automatically pass to customers the increasing cost of fuel; a "public counsel" will be established to represent ratepayers at PUC hearings; and the pass-through to customers of construction costs will be limited.

Criminal justice reform bills aimed at reducing prison overcrowding, including a proposed constitutional amendment set for the November ballot that would take the governor out of the parole process and quicken inmate releases.

Another measure will set up community restitution centers to house non-violent offenders who otherwise would go to prison.

A drop in the interest rate ceiling on credit cards. The 1981 Legislature set a 24 percent ceiling. As of July 1, there will be a 22 percent maximum, with review of the rate every 90 days.

Under "Governor's Program Failed" in the press handout White's staff distributed, there were but two — teacher pay raise and an elected PUC. The measures were White's top priorities.

Both chambers voted against the governor's call for an elected PUC.

Scientist: Suit to be filed over Evolution Rule

AUSTIN (AP) — A decision by a State Board of Education committee to leave intact rules governing the way evolution is presented in public school textbooks will lead to a lawsuit, says one scientist.

The committee's recommendation on evolution, along with proposed changes on textbook rules, will be sent to the board for study next week.

Current rules say the theory of evolution should be identified as only one of several explanations for the origin of humans and that textbooks "shall avoid limiting young people in their search for meanings of their human existence."

"It's totally ridiculous," said Steve Schafersman, president of the Texas Council for Science Education. "The members of the board are extremely conservative and are sensitive to the religious views of their constituents."

Board member Will Davis of Austin failed Friday in an effort to amend the rule to identify evolution as a scientific explanation of origin. The term "evolution" means different things to different people, Davis said. "Maybe we ought to call it what it is — a scientific theory," he said.

Faulty support causes smoke in airline cabin

HOUSTON (AP) — A faulty ground support system pumped smoke through an air conditioner duct of a Continental Airlines jet, forcing a brief evacuation of 108 passengers and delaying the flight for 38 minutes, officials said.

Smoke filled the cabin of the DC9 minutes before it was scheduled to take off from Houston Intercontinental Airport on Friday night. The crew and passengers quickly were ushered from the plane while emergency crews repaired the problem.

A minor malfunction in the ground support apparatus attached to the air conditioner allowed smoke to filter into the airliner, officials said. The problem was corrected immediately and there were no injuries, officials said.

The episode, which a company release called "a minor incident," came one night after an Air Canada jetliner caught fire, killing 23 passengers. Officials said that fire apparently began in a restroom.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Showers for most of the South and Midwest are forecast today by the National Weather Service.

Saturday's high reached 99 degrees

After the mercury flirted with the century mark Saturday, temperatures are expected to be near 90 today, according to the National Weather Service forecast.

The NWS at Midland Regional Airport is predicting a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms today with the high near 90 and southerly winds at 10-20 mph. The chance of thunderstorms decreases to 20 percent tonight when the low should dip into the low 60s. Monday is expected to be partly cloudy and warm with a high in the mid-80s.

Saturday's high of 99 dropped only four degrees short of the record 103 set in 1933.

A trace of rain at Midland Regional Airport Saturday wasn't enough to budge the monthly and yearly precipitation totals, which stand at a trace and 2.17 inches, respectively.

Sunset tonight is at 8:52 p.m.; sunrise Monday comes at 6:43 a.m.

South Texas: Partly cloudy, hot and humid through Monday with scattered mainly afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Lows Sunday night in the 70s, near 80 along the coast. Highs Sunday and Monday in the 80s and 90s.

Upper coast: South and southwest winds near 15 knots through Sunday night. Winds locally higher and gusty near shore Sunday afternoon. Seas three to five feet Sunday. Winds and waves higher in and near widely scattered thundershowers.

Lower coast: South and southeast winds 15 to 20 knots through Sunday night. Winds locally gusty near shore Sunday afternoon. Seas four to six feet Sunday. Winds and waves higher in and near widely scattered thundershowers.

Winds blow across Texas

By The Associated Press

Heavy thunderstorms, high winds and some hail blew through western and northern sections of Texas on Saturday.

A tornado watch was posted Saturday evening for an area extending from the Panhandle to the Texas Hill Country.

Strong winds damaged plate-glass windows and some roofs in Brownwood and surrounding Brown County, the Department of Public Safety said.

Several trees were uprooted by high winds in San Angelo, where at least .58 inches of rain and hail fell Saturday.

Santa Anna, located between San Angelo and Brownwood, recorded three inches of rain in a 30-minute span Saturday.

A worker places a ladder, which will be used as support during an examination of the plane's interior, atop the burned-out fuselage of an Air Canada DC-9. Three Texans and 20 Canadians died despite the craft's emergency landing in Cincinnati.

Plane's electrical system probed

CINCINNATI (AP) — A federal investigator said Saturday that the fire that engulfed an Air Canada flight and killed 23 people probably wasn't set and that the probe is focusing on the possibility that the plane's electrical system was involved.

Donald Engen, of the National Transportation Safety Board, said the FBI had made a preliminary examination of the plane and that the tests "did not develop any evidence of sabotage or foul play."

Air Canada spokesman David Pember confirmed Saturday that the plane that caught fire and was forced to make an emergency landing Thursday was the same one that lost a tail cone during a flight over the Atlantic Ocean in 1979. In that incident, the jet landed safely in Boston with four minor injuries reported.

"Both incidents are not related whatsover," Pember said.

Engen said investigators weren't yet sure how the fire began but are concentrating on the earlier assumption that it started in a rear lavatory.

A circuit breaker for the lavatory's electrical system tripped during the flight and pilot Donald Cameron tried unsuccessfully to reset it, Engen said.

Cameron entered the note into the flight log, but Engen said he didn't know whether it occurred just before the fire was discovered or earlier in the flight.

Engen pointed out that the circuit breaker could have been tripped either by a short circuit or by a fire interfering with the electrical system. But he stressed that the cause of the fire remains undetermined.

Air Canada Flight 797 caught fire en route from Dallas to Toronto Thursday night and the DC-9 made an emergency landing at Greater Cincinnati Airport in northern Kentucky.

The fire spewed smoke and toxic fumes into the aircraft. Of the 46 people aboard, 23 passengers perished.

Engen had conceded Friday it was possible that the fire was started by a lighted cigarette discarded in a lavatory waste container. But on Saturday he said further investigation has made that possibility appear more remote.

Air Canada officials declined to make the crew available to reporters again Saturday, saying they were still unwinding from the incident.

"These guys have had very little sleep," Pember said. "They've been through an incredible ordeal."

Later in the day, the captain and four crew members met reporters and photographers for a three-minute photo session but made no statements and no questions were allowed. Air Canada officials said no questions were allowed because federal investigators haven't completed interviewing them. They said they probably would be made available to reporters when they return to Canada in several days.

Sixteen passengers were hospitalized because of smoke inhalation, but all but two had been released by Saturday.

A physician who helped remove 23 bodies from the fiery jet said another half minute could have meant survival for many victims, whose bodies had "the cherry red color" that indicates carbon monoxide poisoning.

"They were so close," said Dr. James Schrand, one of several physicians who removed bodies from the burned fuselage.

"The closest body was about six feet back from an exit," he said.

"That's how close they were to getting out. Whether one person became bogged down, we don't know," Schrand said. "One person blocks an exit, and others can't get around that person. Just 30 seconds to a minute or so more, maybe more would have been able to get out."

The cause of death of the victims was not immediately known. Some bodies were charred beyond recognition by flames that whipped through the craft after it landed.

Schrand said there were obvious signs of carbon monoxide poisoning in some of the victims. "There was the cherry red color of the body that goes with carbon monoxide poisoning," he said. "The blood is saturated with carbon monoxide."

"Anyone who got out alive, got out in those first 30 seconds," said Jack Barry, assistant airport operations chief. Barry said he believes most victims died after the plane landed and the plane's fuel may have contributed to the fire.

"I was the last, or close to the last, person to get out," said Richard Forrest, 63, of Toronto. "I know there were people back in the plane, but there was no movement when I came out. When I came down the chute, I felt no presence behind me, no pressure of anyone following me out."

Ten years ago, after a fire in the cargo hold of a Pan Am jet in Boston, the Airline Pilots Asociation recommended that cabin and fuel compartment smoke detectors be made mandatory on commercial jets. The recommendation, submitted to the FAA, never was implemented.

Another safety recommendation not implemented by the FAA called for automatic-discharge fire extinguishers in lavatory wastepaper containers.

Engen said he wasn't being critical of the FAA and that the agency does an excellent job of testing the materials used in cabins.

Meanwhile, U.S. Sen. Mark Andrews, chairman of the Senate Transportation subcommitee on air transit, said "there are new materials that should have been adopted some time ago" in cabins and "the hesitance in the FAA to issue the directive probably contributed to this catastrophe."

Canadians killed in plane fire all had Texas connections

DALLAS (AP) — Stan Rogers had come to Texas to sing at the Kerrville Folk Festival. Three women had won a trip to Dallas in a Mary Kay Cosmetics raffle.

They were among 20 Canadians who never made it home from their visits to Texas. They and three Texans died after fire broke out aboard an Air Canada DC9 as it headed to Toronto from Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport Thursday evening.

Another 23 people — 18 of them passengers, including seven Texans — escaped the burning plane after it made an emergency landing at Cincinnati.

The Canadians may have been strangers to each other, but all had ties to Texas.

Rogers, 33, had just completed a six-city tour that ended in Kerrville Thursday. The popular folk singer had performed May 29 for an audience of about 4,000 at the Kerrville Folk Festival and spent the rest of the week in workshops and guitar classes, said festival organizer Rod Kennedy.

"He loved it dowdn here," Kennedy told The Dallas Morning News. "He probably was happiest in his career when he left here Thursday after singing around a campfire down at the ranch."

He ended his stay at the festival about 3 a.m. Thursday with a campfire session at Quiet Valley Ranch, 9 miles south of Kerrville.

Kennedy said festival staff members and participants lowered to half-mast the Canadian flag flying at the festival in respect for the three Canadian acts performing this year.

"Sunday, we will plant a tree in his memory at Chapel Hill (on the ranch) at our folk Mass," Kennedy said.

"We were certain he would have been one of the top singer-song writers in Canada in the next two years," said Rogers' manager, Jim Fleming. "He was very prolific and wrote almost all of his songs. Many of his songs have become classics."

Rogers had just finished a West Coast tour that included Vancouver and Victoria, British Columbia; Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

His brother, Garnett Rogers, was scheduled to leave on the same flight but left two days early, Kennedy said. The bass player of the trio, Jim Morrison, left Wednesday.

Carol Korycki, 23, sat on the plane with five other Canadian women who were returning home from a two-day free trip to Dallas. The six — all Mary Kay saleswomen — had makeup instruction, sales classes and meetings with company executives, including founder Mary Kay Ash.

Three of the women died in the blaze and three were injured.

AARP to sponsor talk focusing on volunteer efforts of elderly

The American Association of Retired Persons will sponsor a program in Odessa Wednesday, focusing on the increase of older persons on public and private boards.

According to Ella Mae Swenson, the program's Texas volunteer coordinator, the Citizen Representative Program is designed to place informed older persons on boards, commissions, advisory councils, consumer panels and task forces which deal with key consumer issues — utilities, health, insurance, food professional services and public benefits.

Ms. Swenson will conduct the one-day seminar from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Ector County Senior Center, 13th and Adams. The presentation will cover the types of boards on which older persons should be serving, strategies for getting appointed and being effective as a board member. Also, the group will discuss advisory councils, such as those associated with utilities, supermarkets and state and local boards.

For registration contact G. Edward Jones at 362-1775. Those who register are encouraged to bring a list of the boards that exist in their cities.

Children injured in gasoline fire

BIG LAKE — Two Big Lake children were listed in critical condition Saturday in Galveston's Shrine Burn Institute with third-degree burns they suffered during a Friday afternoon gasoline fire at their home.

According to the Big Lake Fire Chief Doc Robertson, Jose McGanna, 8, was burned over 30 percent of his body and Rachel McGanna, 4, was burned over 20 percent of her body. A hospital spokesman Saturday said the children were in critical condition.

Robertson said the accident occurred as the children's mother was using gasoline to clean the floor in their home. The gasoline can caught fire and when the mother threw it out the door, the children were struck by the flaming liquid.

Big Lake's Fire Department ambulance transported the children to San Angelo's Mathis Field and from there they were flown to Galveston.

Midland man, 56, free on bond

A 56-year-old Midland man is free on $26,500 bond and faces four counts of felony drug possession in connection with a drug raid Friday night at a southeast Midland residence.

Milton Goosby Jr., of 508 S. Tilden St., is charged with four counts of possession of a controlled substance with intent to distribute. Goosby was arrested Friday night after Midland police raided his residence about 10:40 p.m.

More than 100 assorted drug tablets — including Preludin, Talwin, Tripelennamine and Valium — were confiscated in the raid. Police estimated street value of the drugs at $1,879.

Police also seized $5,508.10 at the scene, including two $10 bills which they identified as having been passed on during an earlier, undercover drug buy.

Woman dies in highway mishap

HOWARD COUNTY — A 42-year-old New Mexico woman was killed Saturday morning when her car left U.S. Highway 87 and rolled over once about 20 miles north of Big Spring.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Millie Bishop, of Hobbs, was alone in her 1979 Ford when it ran off the road about 9:15 a.m. She was pronounced dead at the scene by Howard County Justice of the Peace Willie Grant.

Her body was taken to Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home in Big Spring to be transported to Griffin Funeral Home in Hobbs.

Brucellosis issue political, medical

"But it's going to hurt the rancher and cattleman who run heifers and bulls that are shipped out of state...It's a big expense."

In West Texas, brucellosis is "no problem," Tillett said.

Any blood-tested animal which tests positive immediately is branded with a "B" on the jaw and shipped off to the slaughterhouse. Cattle which are suspected carriers are branded "S" and are held in feedlots and watched until they are declared free of the disease or are branded "B" and shipped off to slaughter.

Available to cattlemen is a brucellosis vaccine.

"It's optional with the rancher whether they vaccinated or not," he said.

Brucellosis in a herd could have a severe economic impact on the rancher: affected mother cows abort calves at about seven months in the nine-month gestation period. In addition, the non-fatal disease causes weight loss in cattle.

"You never get over it once you get it," Tillett said. "You cannot treat it successfully."

As far as the proposed quarantine is concerned, the veterinarian said he doesn't "look for it to go into effect. I think the Legislature will work it out."

"What they (the feds) are trying to do is get that South Texas bunch to comply with the (testing) law," Tillett said.

The Texas Senate failed to pass legislation conforming to the federal wishes that the state pass a brucellosis bill.

Green, as did the Independent Cattlemen's Association of Texas, noted the federal quarantine particularly would hurt the smaller cattle raiser.

"THROUGHOUT the entire brucellosis debate, the small cattle raiser has been ignored and kicked around," said Roy G. Wheeler, president of the Austin-based cattlemen's association. He contended that "certain federal officials" tried to intimidate the State Legislature into passing "the most controversial and poorly thought-out bills that's ever come out of the hopper."

Wheeler questioned the propriety of federal officials using their power to interfere in state affairs.

Should the quarantine be put into effect, its effect on Texas cattle wouldn't be until this fall when cattle are shipped out of state to be fattened up by grazing on the wheat fields of Oklahoma and Kansas and then to feedlots, said Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent.

"It's very regulated (even now)," he said of cattle shipping and testing.

Due to the economic and health impact of a carrier, a "rancher does not want a brucellosis cow in his herd in the first place," Kiker said. "He's going to cull her out. He doesn't want cows that won't calve in his herd. Most of our ranch herd are clean."

Beirut invasion 'was planned'

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel Radio said Saturday that Prime Minister Menachem Begin planned the invasion of west Beirut last June, despite Begin's statements that the sweep was a reaction to the assassination of Lebanese President-elect Bashir Gemayel in September.

The radio report also said Begin told then-Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. about a planned assault on west Beirut and he was "understanding." It said Haig clashed with other Washington officials on the issue and that this was a factor in his resignation on June 25.

Begin decided to go ahead with plans to send Israeli soldiers into west Beirut after he met with Haig in Washington shortly before Haig's resignation, the radio said.

Israel Radio did not give a source for the report by diplomatic correspondent Shimon Schiffer, who is known to have close access to top Israeli officials. Attempts to reach Haig for comment were unsuccessful; his telephone number is unlisted.

Other news accounts Saturday of the invasion of Lebanon that began June 6, 1982, and the thrust into west Beirut more than three months later, also suggested the attack on the Moslem sector of the capital had been planned in advance.

At the time of the invasion, Begin said he wanted to eradicate the Palestine Liberation Organization bases in southern Lebanon and secure Israel's northern border.

But Schiffer said Begin told Haig in Washington in June that he was convinced "Israel must finish the job and arrive at the elimination of the PLO in west Beirut."

Gemayel's Christian Phalangist militia controlled the eastern part of Beirut and Israel Radio quoted Haig as saying he felt it would be better if the militia carried out an attack on the Moslem-populated western sector.

Physicist: Nuclear power safest

AUSTIN (AP) — Physicist Edward Teller, who played a major role in developing the hydrogen bomb, says nuclear power is the nation's safest energy option.

"The only thing safer than a nuclear reactor is an Egyptian pyramid," said Teller, senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution in Stanford, Calif.

Teller spoke to the Texas Energy Science Symposium on Friday.

Trial set for disruptive atheist

AUSTIN (AP) — An Aug. 8 trial date has been set for atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair on a misdemeanor charge that she disrupted an Austin City Council meeting.

O'Hair, who played a major role in the 1962 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that outlawed organized prayer in public schools, was arrested in November 1977 after repeatedly interrupting attempts by the council to open meetings with a prayer.

Council meetings still begin with a prayer.

Paper on superport being revised

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers says an environmental impact statement on the proposed Galveston superport is being revised to correct deficiencies cited by a federal appeals court.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans in January ruled that the impact statement failed to consider a "worst case" oil spill analysis and the effects that bulk commodity activities would have on the environment.

The proposed superport, designed to offload crude oil carriers of up to 320,000 deadweight tons, has been in the planning stages since 1974.

The Pelican Terminal Co., a consortium of three companies, is fund ing the project.

Parents file suit for $6.5 million

AUSTIN (AP) — The parents of a girl killed last week in a wreck with a teen-age driver have filed suit for $6.5 million in damages.

Nick Cole, 19, was named in the suit by Ross Carnes, 34, and Katherine Carnes, 32. Their daughter, Abigail Carnes, 2, died in the accident.

The child was with her mother when their car, which was stopped at a traffic light, was hit from behind. The girl was thrown out and died an hour and 15 minutes after the 5:45 p.m. collision. The mother suffered head and internal injuries and was in fair condition at Brackenridge Hospital.

Cole was charged with involuntary manslaughter, a felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison. He was released from Travis County Jail on Thursday after posting $2,500 cash bond.

Staff recommends reduction

AUSTIN (AP) — Homeowners would pay 5.9 percent less in property insurance rates if the State Board of Insurance adopts the recommendation of its staff.

The homeowner proposal was part of an overall recommendation Friday for a 3.8 percent reduction in property insurance, which would cut annual premiums by $42 million.

If the three-member board approves the proposed reduction, the change in an individual homeowner's premium would vary with coverage, location and type of insured building.

NAACP agrees to halt monitoring

AUSTIN (AP) — The NAACP has accepted an agreement to halt court monitoring in the 13-year-old Austin school desegregation case, says chapter president John Hall.

The other intervenor in the case, the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund, has not announced whether it has agreed to a settlement, but school district superintendent John Ellis said he understood MALDEF had accepted the proposed agreement.

Decline in workforce continues

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' unemployment dropped to 8 percent of the work force during May, one-tenth lower than April, the Texas Employment Commission said Friday.

"The decline is slight but it is encouraging to see it continue," said James Barnes, labor market analyst. "The decline also reflected continued improvement in the labor force although there was a slight increase in those entering the labor market."

Barnes said the June figures probably would reflect the expected large numbers of college and high school graduates looking for jobs.

The small drop in unemployment "reinforces the prevailing view that the economy is experiencing a modest recovery," said Bryan Richey of Dallas, U.S. Labor Department regional commissioner for labor statistics.

He said border towns and counties showed no marked improvement because of devaluation of the peso in Mexico. Laredo, he said, had an unemployment rate of more than 20 percent.

"At other places in the state, the unemployment rate is very low — a little better than 3 percent," he said.

The TEC figures show a total of 7,469,400 in the labor force with 6,873,300 total employed. There were 596,100 unemployed.

The small recovery in unemployment affected women more than men because of a drop in oil, drilling and heavy force equipment industries, Richey said.

The unemployment figure rate for women dropped 5.9 percent, down from 6.8 percent in April.

Questions about hurricane season persist

HOUSTON (AP) — Weather service and civil defense officials along the Texas Gulf coast have a problem: During the hurricane season, how do you keep people concerned, but not terrified? Calm, but not apathetic? Alert, but not panicky?

It's a problem the officials face every June 1, when hurricane season starts. They have yet to find an ideal solution. Even the experts can't agree.

This year is no exception. It's June again, and some experts are making doomsday forecasts while others say, "Relax, folks, it's not that bad."

THERE ARE SOME FACTS, though, that are clear.

A rare severe hurricane striking the highly populated areas of the Texas Gulf coast could cause one of the largest natural disasters in the nation's history, with thousands of deaths and more than a billion dollars worth of destruction.

Experts say such a maximum-strength storm has not struck Texas, but it could during any particular year.

Texas has been hit by more than 100 hurricanes since 1766. The worst of those hit Galveston Island in September 1900, killing at least 6,000. The death toll from a hurricane 15 years later in Galveston — after a protective seawall was built and the grade of the island raised — was estimated at 275.

The potential for lost lives is worse this year than last year because more people are living in areas susceptible to the killing surge tides of a hurricane. There's also more property that could be destroyed.

It's also true that to survive a hurricane, residents along the coast are largely on their own. They have to decide when to flee, or when to stay, what to take and where to go. Each person has to make these decisions — and deciding correctly could mean the difference between life and death.

THIS LAST POINT IS at the core of the disagreements among the experts. Some believe in a strong public emphasis on the worst possibilities. Others believe such an approach will lead eventually to public complacency, the "crying wolf" syndrome.

The state's largest coastal metropolitan area has all of the classic problems that hurricane experts worry about most.

There has been huge population growth centered in Houston and spanning outward, with thousands of houses and businesses built in floodplain areas. Many of the new residents — by some estimates up to a third of the population — have never experienced a hurricane and don't fully realize the danger.

Escape routes from the coastal areas are limited. The 60,000 people living on Galveston Island have only three ways to flee — two bridges and a ferry. One of the bridges floods with only a modest tidal rise and the ferry must shut down even earlier. That leaves only one route, Interstate 45. By some estimates, an evacuation order would have to precede the arrival of a major storm by 38 hours to assure that all residents leave the island.

THESE FACTORS HAVE led many experts to make dire predictions for the Houston-Galveston area in a major storm.

Neil Frank, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami, warned that "Galveston potentially could be a death trap."

Bill Blum, director of the Galveston office of the Weather Service, said that a severe hurricane, with winds of 150 mph or more, could inundate most of Galveston Island for hours with a surge tide of 19 feet or more.

Such a storm would destroy the west end of the island, he said, beyond the manmade seawall, and then wash on over the island from the Gulf side. Homes built near the water would be ripped apart and the debris would become "battering rams" for buildings farther inland, said Blum.

Blum said that many hurricanes are preceded by torrential rains that could cause some escape routes to flood long before the storm arrives. For that reason, he advises residents to evacuate very early.

"My advice is that when the storm is 36 to 48 hours away is the point when you must make a decision," said Blum.

OTHERS DISAGREE.

Galveston Mayor E. Gus Manuel believes the danger is being overstated.

"The seawall captures the main force of a storm," said Manuel. He predicted Galveston could withstand a major hurricane without the loss of a single life.

The island city "is in pretty good shape" for a major hurricane, with a good plan for evacuation and emergencies, he said.

Such statements angered Galvestonian Fletcher Harris Jr. so much that he resigned as the county Civil Defense cmmunications director. He claimed that Galveston officials are apathetic about the danger and have not taken adequate measures to protect the citizens.

Harris said he believes a major storm hitting Galveston directly could kill 10,000 people.

He said the Civil Defense preparations on the island are inadequate and unnecessarily put thousands of people at risk.

Texans...get ready for bad weather

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Orderly evacuation is the key to storm survival, authorities tell Texans living along the Gulf Coast.

Agencies used to dealing with natural disasters, including the National Weather Service, Texas Department of Public Safety and American Red Cross, advise people in the path of a tropical storm or hurricane to seek shelter on higher ground if they live in low-lying areas prone to flooding.

The storm surge, or flood tide, often associated with such destructive weather systems is the most deadly weapon among an arsenal including flooding from torrential rains and powerful winds flinging loose debris like a blast from a giant shotgun.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has conducted studies indicating coastal flooding is likely as far inland as the point where the land rises to 15 feet above mean sea level.

In order to minimize the death and destruction done by vicious storms, guidelines have been develped by the people involved at opposite ends of the phenomenon — the weather forecasters who track the storm and warn of its approach — and the insurance adjustors who decide how much of a storm victim's losses will be repaid.

Here are tips on how to get ready for an approaching storm, as suggested by the National Weather Service and the Property Claim Services of the American Insurance Association:

—Make sure you have an up-to-date list of your private property. Keep it and your insurance policy in a secure place outside your home, such as a safe deposit box.

—Monitor the latest official storm progress bulletins on radio and TV.

—Top off the gas tank of your car or truck and keep it full.

—Stock up on canned food and any special medications.

—Put away or secure any loose material outdoors, such as lawn furniture or woodpiles.

—Shutter, board or tape windows to prevent breaking. Wedge sliding glass doors so they don't lift from their tracks.

—Move valuables to upper floors or the attic in order to prevent damage from flooding.

—Turn refrigerator thermostat to maximum cold and avoid opening the door.

Reagan criticizes auto 'domestic content' bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Saturday criticized as a "cruel hoax" legislation aimed at encouraging foreign automakers to establish U.S. plants, saying the measure would increase car prices and cost Americans their jobs.

In his weekly radio address, Reagan cited the so-called domestic content bill as an example of "quick fixes and protectionism" that could jeopardize the progress made by leaders of the seven major industrialized democracies during their summit meeting in Williamsburg, Va., a week ago.

The legislation, which passed the House last year and died in the Senate, is again before the House Energy and Commerce Committee, whose chairman, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., is a major backer who has said he hopes to get the bill to the House floor this summer.

The measure would require any automaker selling more than 100,000 cars and light trucks in this country to produce an increasing percentage of each vehicle in U.S. plants. Cars with the largest total sales would be required to contain at least 90 percent American-made parts.

"Well, it's a cruel hoax," Reagan said. "New cars would be more expensive. More jobs would be destroyed than protected. We would buy less from our trading partners. They would buy less from us. And the world economic pie would shrink. Recrimination and retaliation would increase."

It was the strongest statement Reagan has made about the legislation, which has the backing of the United Auto Workers but is opposed by the "Big Three" U.S. manufacturers as well as the makers of most imported cars.

Although he did not say what he would do if the bill reaches his desk, the president said he is prepared "to defend with presidential vetoes" the summit's call for limiting budget deficits that could threaten economic recovery.

"We must keep going forward and not undo the progress that we've made," Reagan said in his five-minute speech from Camp David, the presidential retreat atop Catoctin Mountain in Maryland. "I sincerely hope the Congress will work with us, but let there be no misunderstanding of my position: Hardworking families are already overtaxed...We don't need tax increases; we need spending restraint.

"That's why the Williamsburg communique makes an explicit call, one I'm prepared to defend with presidential vetoes.

Former captive of guerrillas dies

SEATTLE (AP) — The life of Richard Starr, a former Peace Corps volunteer held captive for three years by guerrillas in the Colombian jungles, was something of a mystery to those who knew him. Now his untimely death has become a mystery as well.

He once called himself "a bit of a loner," and acquaintances agree that Starr, who was found dead Tuesday in the bathroom of his Port Angeles apartment a few days before his 36th birthday, kept to himself.

An autopsy failed to disclose the cause of death. Authorities have ruled out foul play, however, and laboratory tests are still being conducted. His mother, Charlotte Starr Jensen of Edmonds, believes he may have contracted a disease during his jungle confinement that finally caught up with him.

What is known is that Starr was serious and soft-spoken and led a quiet life. He loved classical music, books and tropical plants, and was devoted to a creed of personal and political freedom. Since his release from captivity three years ago, he enjoyed his work in the forests and fields of the Olympic Mountains as a botanist for the National Park Service, associates say.

"It was hard to get to know Dick Starr," said Woody Jones, who worked with Starr at Olympic National Park. Jones went to Starr's apartment Tuesday when Starr failed to show up for work.

Starr's mother also traveled Tuesday from her home across Puget Sound to Port Angeles. She became worried when her son didn't answer his telephone. "I still don't understand why I got in my car that morning," she said.

She asked park employees for help when he didn't come to the door.

Richard Starr holds his pet parrot Sakahrov at the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport following their return on March 21, 1980, from Columbia after being held captive by guerrillas for three years. Starr was found dead in his Port Angeles, Wash., apartment Tuesday.

Originally from Edmonds, Wash., Starr had been a botany instuctor for two years at Northern Arizona State University in Flagstaff when he joined the Peace Corps in June 1976. He had hoped to do research in Colombia for his doctoral degree, his mother said.

He had been working as a Peace Corps botanist in a small Colombian village when it was overrun by leftist guerrillas on Feb. 14, 1977, and he was taken captive.

For three years, his captors forced him from jungle camp to jungle camp, feeding him rice, corn, bananas and wild pig and monkey meat. He lost weight and contracted parasites. Once he heard a radio report that he was dead.

His mother fought tirelessly for his release, traveling to Colombia four times to talk to officials.

He was freed in February 198 after syndicated columnist Jac Anderson raised $250,000 in ranso demanded by the guerrillas. O returning home, Starr left the Peac Corps and moved to Port Angeles o the Olympic Peninsula.

The captivity left him "preocc pied with the notion of freedom, said Joe Hess, a U.S. Fish and Wil life Service biologist in Olympia wh met Starr in the Peace Corps i Colombia. They kept in touch afte Starr's return.

Starr gave Hess books about pe ple living under as little governmen as possible. Starr — who named tw pet parrots Sakharov and Solzheni syn — admired the Soviet dissiden movement and felt a tie with dissi dents in captivity, Hess said. Th names of the birds "in a nutshel should tell you philosophically where he's coming from," Hess said.

Colleagues say Starr discussed his captivity matter-of-factly when it related to work or came up in conversation.

"He'd tell me what monkey meat tasted like or the time a snake crawled into his hammock," said coworker Paul Crawford.

Starr talked of how inept and disorganized his captors were, saying they could hardly fend for themselves, let alone lead a revolution.

Starr was "hurt very deeply by what happened to him. It's not something that you forget in just a few years," Hess added.

Yet Starr told Crawford he would like to return to Colombia to study the country's plants.

At the time of his death, Starr had been studying the effects of humans and exotic goats on the parks' environment.

Jurors award millions

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A jury has sent a $3 million "message" to the city of Richmond that police shootings — like two that prompted a lawsuit from the families of two dead black men — must stop, say lawyers who tried the case.

A four-month civil rights trial ended Friday with a U.S. District Court jury awarding $1.5 million each to the families of Michael Guillory and Johnny Roman, who were shot to death in separate incidents.

"This litigation has never really been about money. It's been about reform," said John Scott, a lawyer for the families.

Scott said the city has been so resistant to change that "the only thing left was for a jury to send a message in terms of dollars. And I believe the jury sent a message."

About 25 witnesses testified that they were beaten, harassed and abused by police officers, and several black officers supported the allegations.

Guillory, 21, died in police crossfire Jan. 8, 1982, in his father's home. The officer who started the shooting said he fired when Guillory pulled something shiny from his pocket. It turned out to be a neck chain and a plastic bag of marijuana.

Police said they shot Roman, 25, as he lay in bed Oct. 9, 1980. Officers, attempting to arrest Roman for investigation of burglary, said they fired only after Roman pointed a shotgun at them. The family testified there was no shotgun in the house.

Similar lawsuits were filed following the deaths of Willie Lee Drumgoole on Sept. 27, 1982, and Donald Lee Kizart, who died Jan. 25. Drumgoole died of traumatic neck injuries following a scuffle in the City Jail with two police officers and two jailers, who said Drumgoole tried to escape. Kizart was shot during a police raid.

During the trial, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People lawyer Oliver Jones said a group of officers known as "the cowboys" acted with "reckless disregard of human life" and that Chief Leon Garfield and other department officials did nothing to stop the "violence-prone, deviant cult."

Cranston paid for voice lessons from Senate expenses, article says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential hopeful Alan Cranston paid nearly $4,000 to a voice coach from funds set aside for his expenses as a senator, according to an article in the current issue of The New Republic.

The article said Cranston, a California Democrat, has the largest of many unnofficial accounts drawn from surplus Senate campaign funds and used by senators to help pay for their expenses. He transferred $66,000 of leftover campaign contributions into the account in 1981 and 1982.

The magazine said funds from the account were used not only for the voice coach, but for Cranston's wife's travel and lodging, and the services of speechwriters and other activities "related to his fledgling presidential campaign."

The expenditures were made before Cranston became a candidate for his party's presidential nomination, but while he was exploring the possibility.

Cranston, who is spending the Senate's Memorial Day recess in California, issued this statement through his Senate office:

"My unofficial office account is not a private personal checking account, nor have we attempted to keep it secret. The account enables my Senate office to use non-government funds for necessary Senate business expenditures that might give the appearance of being political.

"My staff sought and received advice from the Senate Ethics Committee and the Internal Revenue Service on how to operate the account. The account is structured and used only for purposes consistent with that advice and only in ways consistent with Senate rules and the law of the land.

"In light of the innuendoes in the current New Republic article, I have invited both the Senate Ethics Committee and the Internal Revenue Service to examine and audit the account."

Roy Greenaway, the senator's administrative assistant, said no expenses of Cranston or his wife had been paid from the fund since the senator announced his presidential candidacy on Feb. 2.

Greenaway said Mrs. Cranston's travel expenses had previously been paid on trips Cranston was making as a senator "in which there was a role for her." Otherwise, Cranston paid his wife's travel expenses himself, the aide said.

As for the payment to New York voice coach Lilyan Wilder, Greenaway said the lessons might make Cranston a more persuasive speaker in the Senate.

Cranston has a reputation as a lackluster speaker, and even his own presidential advisory committee has conceded, while discounting, the fears of some that his "plain-speaking style" would be a campaign liability.

The Internal Revenue Service ruled in 1980 that surplus campaign funds transferred to an office account are gross income, but amounts disbursed for official expenses are deductible.

Brothers plead guilty to rape

DETROIT (AP) — A pair of brothers could face life in prison after pleading guilty in the March rape of a singing messenger, authorities said.

Reuben Heard, 21, and Larry Grant, 23, both of Detroit, pleaded guilty Friday in Detroit Recorder's Court to two counts each of first-degree criminal sexual conduct for the attack on a 31-year-old "Eastern Onion" messenger. Heard also pleaded guilty to possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony.

In exchange for the men's pleas, the Wayne County prosecutor's office agreed to drop four other counts of first-degree criminal sexual conduct.

Murderers win stay of execution

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Federal judges in Miami have issued stays of execution for two convicted murderers who had been scheduled to die Tuesday in Florida's electric chair.

Wardell Riley, convicted in 1976 of murdering his employer in an argument over $30, was given a temporary stay Friday night by Chief U.S. District Judge Joe Eaton. Paul William Scott, convicted in 1979 of beating a man to death during a robbery in Boca Raton, was given a stay late Friday by U.S. District Judge Stanley Aronovitz.

Both condemned men had been scheduled for execution at 7 a.m. Tuesday in Florida State Prison near Starke.

Prison section closed down

BOSTON (AP) — The "new man's section" at Walpole State Prison has been declared a no man's land by a federal judge who found conditions there so bad they amount to "cruel and unusual punishment" for the inmates.

In a ruling Friday, U.S. District Court Judge John J. McNaught ordered the section closed permanently. The section, which is below ground and has no natural light or ventilation, houses about 26 inmates, usually until their transfer to another section or because they fear being killed by other inmates.

Some of the cells hold two or three inmates, and one section, known as "the cage," houses 10 inmates and has no toilet or sink facilities, McNaught said.

Protesters cleared of charges

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Despite admitting in court that they ignored police orders, 36 demonstrators were cleared of misdemeanor trespassing charges from a peace protest at Honeywell Inc. headquarters.

The 36 were among 151 people arrested in the April 18 demonstration, and the others still await trial. The group blocked doors at Honeywell to object to the company's manufacture of military parts for weapons.

The six municipal jurors, who deliberated for four hours before delivering the verdict Friday, agreed with the defendants' claim that they had a right to stay on the property because of their moral opposition to Honeywell's participation in the arms race.

Small quake hits California

SAN LEANDRO, Calif. (AP) — A minor earthquake rattled dishes in four counties around San Francisco Bay early Saturday but caused no major damage or injuries, a state official said.

The temblor, measuring 3.8 on the Richter scale, shuddered through Alameda, Contra Costa, San Mateo and Santa Clara counties at 4:25 a.m., said Mike Browne, spokesman for the state Office of Emergency Services in Sacramento.

Residents reported feeling the quake, which was centered four miles east of San Leandro, across the bay from San Francisco, as two sharp jolts that briefly shook dishes and windows.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded by seismographs. A quake measuring 3.5 can cause minor damage.

Faulty light prompts landing

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A panel light that apparently inaccurately indicated a fire on a freight plane prompted the pilot to make an emergency landing here Saturday, officials said.

A Boeing 727 owned by Emory World Wide air freight landed safely at Norfolk International Airport here at 8:47 a.m. after radioing the control tower that it had a fire in its wheel well, said Cameron Connor, area supervisor of the Federal Aviation Administration.

After the plane landed, there was no sign of fire damage, Connor said.

Baker: Conflicts should be discussed not fought

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The conflicts in Central America should be settled at conference tables in Washington and Moscow, not in the streets and jungles south of the border, U.S. Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said Saturday.

Baker said he supports using American military trainers and doctors in Central America, but not troops.

"I have urged the president to consider in his upcoming negotiations on arms limitations and control that he add another item to the agenda: How do we get the Cuban mischief-makers and their Russian masters back on the reservation?" Baker told reporters.

The Tennessee Republican was in New Hampshire to promote the expected re-election bid of U.S. Sen. Gordon Humphrey.

"I think we can win our purpose without American troops there and I think we should make our efforts in that direction."

Schoolhouse door opened wider for blacks

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — On the broiling hot morning of June 11, 1963, Gov. George C. Wallace, arms folded, chin jutting, stood fiercely behind a portable podium set before the front door of a University of Alabama auditorium.

It was an ideal spot for a faceoff with federal officials, and for the legions of reporters and television cameramen come to record the spectacle of a chief of state physically forbidding the admittance of two young blacks to the all-white state university.

But Wallace's promised "stand in the schoolhouse door" failed to stop Vivian Malone and Jimmy Hood from enrolling. The door opened that day for blacks — only a crack, then — but it swung open wider as semesters turned into years and years into decades.

Ten percent of the students at the University of Alabama are now black, some 1,300 blacks in all on a campus that 20 years ago had but two.

And Wallace — elected last year to a record fourth term with the help of black voters — has acknowledged he "was wrong" about keeping the races separate.

FOR YOUNG blacks who stroll the shaded campus quadrangle now and talk over cups of coffee at student hangouts, it is a different world.

Vivian Malone Jones, recalling the day she registered for classes 20 years ago, said her main worry was about June 12. "Nobody knew what was going to happen the next day," she said. "We were told all about the possibilities. The threat of violence was real.

"I can tell you truthfully that I didn't sleep well that night. I didn't sleep well at all."

Her footsteps that morning had made history as a worried White House and an anxious nation watched.

Gov. George Wallace

For its first 125 years, the University of Alabama was exclusively white. The first black to try to enroll was Autherine Lucy in 1956, but she stayed only three days — days filled with riots that ended only when school trustees invoked police powers and expelled her for her own protection.

Seven years later, in the spring of 1963, U.S. District Judge Hobart Grooms of Birmingham upheld his ruling in Miss Lucy's case that applicants could not be rejected on the basis of race. The judge directed the school to admit Vivian Malone and Jimmy Hood.

THE YEAR BEFORE, Wallace had run for governor on a segregation platform. With court action already afoot to desegregate schools, he pledged to "stand in the schoolhouse door" to back up his views. At his inauguration he promised "segregation today, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever."

On June 11, federal officials came to the University of Alabama to enroll blacks. It was time for Wallace's showdown.

The day was so hot that U.S. Deputy Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach "was about to die," recalled J. Jefferson Bennett, then an aide to the university president.

"My most vivid recollection is how quiet the campus was," said Joab Thomas, the current university president, who was an associate professor in 1963. "They blocked all the traffic and it was beautifully quiet."

Bennett said that every soft drink machine on the campus had been changed from bottles to paper cups and that "there wasn't a stick of wood on the campus. There was nothing to throw."

As for Wallace, said Bennett, now an assistant to the chancellor of the state university system, "We weren't absolutely certain just what he would do, but it was understood that when push came to shove, he wouldn't physically oppose the United States."

THE PUSH CAME when Wallace, flanked by Alabama National Guardsmen, took his position in the door of Foster Auditorium, blocking the admittance of Katzenbach and the two young blacks.

Katzenbach tried to read Kennedy's order to desegregate the school.

"We don't need your speech," Wallace interrupted. "I have a five-page statement which I want to read...I proclaim and forbid this illegal act."

Katzenbach said: "I take it that you are resisting. I am not interested in your show..."

Wallace stood his ground and Katzenbach and his assistants escorted the two blacks to dormitories. They waited.

The shove came within hours, when President John F. Kennedy federalized 17,000 Alabama National Guardsmen, removing them from the governor's control, on grounds that Wallace had disobeyed his commands against "unlawful obstructions of justice."

WITHOUT THE GUARD to back up his drama, Wallace walked away, and Miss Malone and Hood walked in to register. One era had ended and another had begun.

Hood withdrew from the university after six weeks and later became a deputy police chief in Detroit, but Miss Malone in 1965 became its first black graduate. She is now a real estate agent in Atlanta, married to Dr. Mack Jones, a physician. She worked for a time as director of the Voter Education Project in Atlanta.

Wallace, she said in a recent interview, "had made the talk about state's rights and all that day. But I was a citizen of the state, too. I had my rights...I resent what he did, not to me personally, but to all the black people.

"If I had it all to do again, however, I'd do it," she said, but added, "I was really glad when it was over. Nobody ever committed an act of violence against me, although some shouted 'nigger' at me."

In 1973, Wallace went to the middle of the university's football field and crowned a black homecoming queen. In later years he soft-pedaled the racial aspects of his stand in the door, saying he was merely trying to control the potential violence of anguished whites while carrying out a pledge to maintain the state government's authority over its educational affairs.

"The issue then was whether the federal government was going to run everything," Wallace said in an interview. "I again say it was not race."

WALLACE SAID he had gone to Tuscaloosa to "make sure it was all peaceful and it was."

"We were wrong," he added, "and we live in a new day and the issue now is to look forward and to make this country stronger...My administration is dedicated to trying to make the lot of every Alabamian, whatever their color, better."

Frank Rose, president of the university in 1963, remembered those days "as a troubling time for educational institutions. As I look back on that day, I see it not only as a very significant moment in American history, but as a time when the people of the state and the educational institutions were able to accept the social change and at the same time move forward."

Rose, now chairman of University Associates, a management consulting business in Washington, said "You always have trepidations in your mind that a lot of things could happen, but we had planned a long time and had worked very hard to see that that kind of thing wouldn't happen," Rose said.

Servicemen's remains returned to U.S soil

HONOLULU (AP) — More than 10 years after the end of the Vietnam War, the remains of nine U.S. servicemen killed in Southeast Asia were brought home Saturday to full military honors.

The names of the nine have not been disclosed, said Marine Maj. Rick Stepien, a spokesman for the commander-in-chief of U.S. forces in the Pacific.

Following the ceremony at Hickam Air Force Base in Honolulu, the remains were taken to the Army's Central Identification Laboratory, where positive identification will be made before the bodies are released to relatives, Stepien said.

The remains were turned over by Vietnam on Thursday to a U.S. delegation led by Lt. Col. Joe Harvey, commander of the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center in Honolulu.

The Hanoi government also provided the mission with what the Pentagon described as "identification-type information" on three other U.S. servicemen listed as missing in action.

According to the Pentagon, the Vietnamese government has returned the remains of 79 Americans since 1973.

Nearly 2,500 U.S. servicemen who fought in Southeast Asia remain unaccounted for, the Defense Department said.

Blacks make inroads in politics, education

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the two decades since Gov. George C. Wallace stood in the schoolhouse door to bar black students from the University of Alabama, blacks in America have made dramatic gains in education and in politics.

More blacks are going to school, more are graduating from high school and more are getting their college degrees.

Seven of the nation's biggest cities now have black mayors, as black voter registration and turnout jumped to close the gap with white political participation. And the prospect of a black candidate for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination is getting serious consideration.

But the combination of education and political power has not yet turned out to be the ticket to economic equality. While some blacks have moved firmly into the nation's middle class, as a group black families' income in 1981 stood at 56 percent of white families' income — almost exactly the same percentage as found in 1960, a recent study said.

"Clearly, the black American is at still another crossroads on the very difficult path from complete slavery, to serfdom, to token acceptance by the majority, to complete partnership in the system that is called the United States," wrote Howard University sociologist John Reid in a study released last year by the Population Reference Bureau.

BLACKS IN THE United States now number just over 27 million, government figures estimate, making them about 11.8 percent of the nation's population, up from 10.6 percent in 1960.

Since the 1954 Supreme Court decision that outlawed legally segregated school systems, blacks have been going to school in record numbers.

In 1960, only 20.1 percent of the blacks over age 25 had actually gone to four years or more in high school. By 1981, Census figures said 52.9 percent had attended high school long enough to graduate in most cases.

In 1960, only 3.1 percent of the black population had received a college degree. Twenty years later, 8.2 percent of blacks had college degrees. While that latest figure less than half that for whites — 17.8 percent — enrollment figures suggest the gap will narrow more. For example, school attendance is now at about equal levels for whites and blacks 18-19 years old.

And in overall attendance levels, blacks have made major strides. The median number of years of education for blacks in 1981 was 12.1, up sharply from the 8.0 years in 1960. The median level for whites two years ago was only slightly above blacks, 12.6 years.

Equal time in school doesn't mean equal learning or education, of course, for much depends on the quality of the school and the teachers.

IN POLITICS, black gains have been substantial as well.

The voting rights laws of the last two years have battered down many barriers to black political action. One result has been a narrowing of the gap between black and white registration and turnout.

In 1966, Census Bureau figures put white voting rates at 15.3 percent higher than blacks in the congressional elections. In the 1982 elections, the gap had narrowed to 6.9 percentage points, the lowest ever found.

With increased black voting, blacks candidates have taken more and more elected offices. The Joint Center for Political Studies said there were 5,160 black elected officials nationwide in 1982, up from 1,469 in 1970. That means blacks held 1.1 percent of the 490,800 elected slots in 1982, the center said.

Last year, even George Wallace relied on substantial black support to complete his comeback and be elected governor of Alabama again.

This has been a year for blacks in city elections. Harold Washington was elected the first black mayor of Chicago, the nation's second largest metropolis, while Wilson Goode is bidding to become the first black mayor of Philadelphia. Blacks already head the city governments in Los Angeles; Atlanta; Detroit; Newark, N.J.; Gary, Ind., and New Orleans.

BLACK LEADERS are talking of a serious black candidacy for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination to make the concerns of blacks a key feature of debate. The Rev. Jesse Jackson, head of People United to Serve Humanity (PUSH), has been mentioned as a possible candidate. He is currently touring the country in an effort to register more black voters. In 1972, Shirley Chisolm, then the black congresswoman from New York City, sought the nomination but failed to attract much support.

For all the progress in education and politics, blacks have not closed the income gap with white America.

Reid's study put median black family income in 1981 at $13,266, versus $25,517 for white families. That meant black income was 56 percent of white income, not much different from 1960, when Reid says black income was 57 percent of white families'.

Death of NAACP officer paved way for blacks, brother says

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The South was already embroiled in racial strife 20 years ago when a soft-nosed rifle bullet ripped into civil rights leader Medgar Evers. His death heralded a social revolution.

Charles Evers, who succeeded his brother as state field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, says the vast changes that have swept over Mississippi in the years since the ambush slaying proved "Medgar didn't die in vain."

Medgar Evers, 37, was shot and killed with a high-powered rifle on June 12, 1963, as he stepped out of his car after returning to his north Jackson home from a night rally. The day before, 180 miles away, Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace had tried to block two young blacks from enrolling at the all-white University of Alabama, prompting action from President John F. Kennedy.

The 30-06 rifle bullet, fired from behind a clump of bushes on a vacant lot about 200 feet away, hit Evers in the back, emerged through his chest, smashed through a living room window, glanced off the refrigerator in the kitchen, broke a coffee pot and came to rest atop a cabinet.

Byron de La Beckwith, a dapper 42-year-old Greenwood fertilizer salesman, was arrested on murder charges and tried twice by all-white juries. Testimony by alibi witnesses placed him in Greenwood at the time of the shooting, and the juries in each trial deadlocked. After two mistrials, Beckwith was released.

The vigorous prosecution by then-District Attorney William L. Waller drew praise from black leaders and helped elect him governor in 1971. Waller appointed a number of blacks to state offices.

From the NAACP job, Charles Evers, who was three years older than Medgar, went into voter registration work and later was elected mayor of Fayette, a predominantly black county seat town in southwestern Mississippi.

A decade ago, he began the Medgar Evers Homecoming, a weekend of entertainment, cultural events, speeches and other events, which he moved to Jackson after he lost a re-election bid in 1981. This year's program also included renaming a Jackson street in his honor.

At the 20th anniversary observance this weekend Evers said, "We are using the theme of how far we have come since Medgar's death. We have made real progress and his sacrifice helped make it possible.

"There wasn't a single black elected official in the state when Medgar was killed. We now have the largest percentage of black officeholders in the country. We have one of the biggest black registrations with over 300,000 registered voters. Then, we had less than 25,000."

When his brother was killed, Charles Evers was living in Chicago, where he says he operated a group of prostitutes, ran a gambling game, sold whisky and even taught school. "Medgar's death changed me," Evers said later.

He said when he returned to the volatile situation in Mississippi, where he and Medgar had grown up, "I didn't know what to expect."

His goal as an NAACP worker was "to get people registered and voting. We got a whole lot more done than we expected. We haven't made it yet but we have made progress."

Bekaa Valley...bubbling mass of chaos

BAALBEK, Lebanon (AP) — The focus of the confrontation between Syria and Israel is central Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, home for a bubbling mixture of armies and militias, ideologies and hashish traders.

The Israeli army occupies only a small portion of the Bekaa's 1,652 square miles, an area about 400 square miles larger than Rhode Island. The rest is nominally held by Syria, which once owned and still covets the broad and fertile valley, with its vineyards, grain fields fruit orchards and, most valuable right now, wide fields of marijuana, which when processed into hashish accounted in 1980 for about a third of Lebanon's foreign-exchange earnings — something in the order of $150 million to $200 million.

But the Syrians actually control only the main roads, the front lines and a few rear areas where their forces are concentrated.

Elsewhere in the valley are Iranians, Libyans, Palestinians of various factions and half a million Lebanese — Moslems of the Shiite and Sunni sects and Christians, with their own militias ranging from rightist to leftist.

The Syrians have invited in, armed and supported so many different groups that the Bekaa's residents live in fear of either a renewed war between Syria and Israel there or among the thousands of foreign and Lebanese armed units that roam the valley.

Here in Baalbek, 37 miles north of the main front line, bursts of gunfire can be heard almost every night. The shooting can be the result of almost anything — fighting between paramilitary groups, an argument over a traffic accident, or even a celebration of a birth or wedding.

A Western diplomat, who declined to be named, said the Syrians apparently want it known they have outside support, as in the case of the Libyans and Iranians, and have the ability to project the force of politics behind Israel's lines — especially true of the 10,000 or so Palestinian guerrillas, who have infiltrated to ambush Israelis, whose overall strength in Lebanon is estimated at about 30,000 men. Diplomats trace this to the presence of 1,000 to 1,500 Iranians. Some guerrilla raids have provoked shooting across the Syrian-Israeli cease-fire line.

Several hundred Iranian Revolutionary Guards are based near this central valley town of 20,000 and 400 Libyan soldiers are on the front line further south at Sultan Yaqoub.

The Iranians, sent to Lebanon during last summer's Israeli invasion, are said to have a strong influence on Lebanon's Shiite Moslems, the predominant sect in Iran.

To the south of here is the bustling town of Chtaura, now headquarters for the 35,000 Syrian troops and the Palestinian forces in Lebanon.

The Western diplomat said Soviet military advisers, whose numbers are not known, assist Syria's army in the operation of anti-aircraft weapons, including surface-to-air missiles.

Soviet-made anti-aircraft guns sit among sandbags and bunkers in the fields. But the guns, many from World War II or the Korean War, are useless against Israel's U.S.-made F-15 and F-16 jets that make reconnaissance sweeps over the valley every few days.

Sources: More than 1,500 rebels again attack northern Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An estimated 1,500 rebels fighting against the leftist Sandinista government have launched another attack from bases in Honduras and intense fighting continued Saturday in northern Nicaragua, military sources said.

The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry claimed in a note of protest sent to Honduras late Friday said Honduran troops pounded Nicaraguan military positions with mortar fire to provide cover for rebels crossing the border Thursday.

"This is the third large-scale invasion the counterrevolutionaries have launched, but this time with the open support of the Honduran army," the sources said, asking not to be identified for security reasons.

"We believe there are more than 1,500 invaders, who penetrated since Thursday and have caused large-scale damage, especially in the towns of Teotecacinte and El Provenir," the sources, who have access to battle reports, said.

There was no immediate response from the Honduran government, or reports of casualties.

Government spokesmen have repeatedly accused the United States and Honduras of secretly training and arming rebels as part of an "undeclared war" to topple the leftist Sandinista government.

The sources said intense fighting continued Saturday in the towns of El Escambray, Fila los Coyotes, el Corozo and El Porvenir, in Nueva Segovia province, near the Honduran border.

Many residents of Teotecacinte and El Porvenir had to flee to Jalapa, 181 miles north of the capital, because of the fighting, the sources said.

However, the reports could not be immediately verified by reporters. The area is remote and difficult to get to.

Government officials claim the rebels made unssuccessful large-scale attacks April 30 and May 5 in an attempt to seize Jalapa, Nueva Segovia's largest city.

Commander Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the three-man junta, said May 10 the rebels had pulled back to Honduras to regroup for another offensive he predicted would be launched in early June.

Junta member Sergio Ramirez claimed Friday that 600 Nicaraguan soldiers have been killed since the rebels intensified their border raids in February. A Defense Ministry bulletin said nine rebels and three soldiers were killed in fighting since Thursday, but the sources claimed the casualties were much higher.

The bulletin claimed that Honduran army troops fired 41 mortar rounds on the border crossing in Teotecacinte Thursday to provide cover for the attacking rebels.

The Foreign Ministry's note of protest, sent to Honduras late Friday, said Honduran soldiers provided "direct support" for anti-government rebels, but made no mention of casualties.

"This provocative act by the Honduran army confirms once again the participation of said army in the crimminal plans being promoted by the Reagan administration against Nicaragua," the ministry statement said.

Issue may tilt policy

WASHINGTON (AP)- A Chinese political specialist says Peking will seek improved relations with both Moscow and Washington, but the Taiwan issue may tilt its policy in favor of one of the superpowers.

Writing in the current issue of the quarterly Foreign Policy magazine, the Chinese expert predicted a gradual policy move by the People's Republic of China toward the Soviet Union but said a broad reconciliation would create significant problems.

The author used the pseudonym of Edmund Lee, and was described by the magazine as a Chinese scholar specializing in Far Eastern politics. It said his article represented a rare, unofficial Chinese view of Chinese foreign policy.

CONTINUING tensions with the Soviet Union would cost Peking a high defense budget, with increased military deployment along its borders, and would lead to a greater dependence on the United States, Lee wrote.

But all-out accomodation with Moscow would mean sacrificing independence in return for peace, and a cutback in economic ties with the West.

However, a gradual, limited improvement of ties with Moscow could mean less arms spending for Peking, improvement of relations with radical Third World countries, and would not seriously risk economic relations with the West, Lee said.

As for Peking's options toward the United States, Lee said if China downgraded relations this might appease nationalist feelings but would mean the loss of negotiating leverage with Moscow and might hurt economic gains with the West.

ON THE other hand, greater dependence on the United States would "be politically and ideologically unacceptable" even if meant increased U.S. military and economic aid, the scholar claimed. Also, Peking "would be faced with a strong reaction from Moscow," he said.

A middle approach, breaking a little with Washington but continuing some cooperation in the area of Asian security, would mitigate most of Peking's problems, Lee wrote.

As for the Taiwan issue, he said it "probably will not be settled in the near future. It will decided by "forces outside the direct control of existing governments, by internal political and economic developments in both Chinese regimes, and by changes in the power balance in the Far East."

Lee suggested that Washington is not likely to encourage reunification of Taiwan with China because of its strategic importance in the event of a U.S.-Soviet naval confrontation in the western Pacific or a second war in Korea.

Furthermore, he said, any U.S. administration would have trouble withdrawing support from Taiwan because of its strong support from many conservative American politicians.

But the Chinese scholar declared that "barring reckless behavior, present and future American handling of the Taiwan issue will only be one factor behind changes in Chinese foreign policy."

Fundamentalists thrive in Central America; Turmoil may be spur

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Meeting in movie theaters and office buildings, under tents and in modern churches, evangelical Protestants are making unprecedented advances in Central America, once solidly Roman Catholic.

Their success is perhaps most visible in Guatemala, the region's most populous country, where they claim a following of one-third of the country's 7 million people, assembled into more than 6,000 churches.

Roman Catholics and some "mainline" Protestants say that figure is overstated. But many say at least 20 percent of Guatemalans are part of the evangelical movement — double the number a decade ago. One of them, Efrain Rios Montt, a fervent member of the California-based Church of the Word, became Guatemalan president after a military coup in March 1982.

Estimates of evangelical strength throughout Central America range from 5 to 20 percent of the population, making up the great majority of Protestants in the region. They are also strong in El Salvador, but less so in Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Honduras.

THE FUNDAMENTALISTS' growth is attributed by some observers to a yearning for immediate spiritual comfort amid the violence and political uncertainty afflicting the area.

"People see the condition of the world. All the neighboring countries have problems.... They are seeking a solution for their own satisfaction because they feel empty," said Rachel Nieto, of the evangelical Cenaculo Church in Tegucigalpa, Honduras. Founded 10 years ago, her church now boasts a large new headquarters.

Roman Catholics cite the evangelical movement's promises of what they claim is "instant euphoria" as a reason for its success. Some Catholics also blame their own church's slowness in adapting to contemporary problems, and others say the church is resented either for its historic links to the ruling classes or some priests' ties with radical politics.

Combining gospel with programs to help the poor — especially among the backward Indian peasants who are a majority in Guatemala — evangelicals make sophisticated use of the mass media, money, personnel and know-how sent by American church groups.

FOR INSTANCE, evangelical programs taped in the United States, such as the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart's, and the 700 Club and the PTL Club, can all be seen on Central American television.

Radio programs — important in areas of high illiteracy — offer practical help, from tips on health and hygiene to lessons in geography.

"They have a lot of financial support," said a Roman Catholic bishop, who spoke with a reporter on condition he not be identified. "Their preaching mixes the gospel with the American way of life. They don't take critical positions on social questions, as the Catholic Church does."

One group here, the Christian Brotherhood of Guatemala, meets each Sunday at a movie theater that holds about 1,500 people. Baskets of fresh flowers make the stage altar-like, and blue and white banners beside the movie screen welcome worshippers with an "Hola" — Hello.

The congregation is middle-class — doctors, storeowners, travel agents, salesmen.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS is taught in the lobby next to the popcorn stand, alongside posters advertising "Blue Thunder" and "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

Pastor Jorge H. Lopez said the Brotherhood, founded three years ago with 35 people meeting in a private home, has outgrown two hotel meeting rooms and the movie house and is now buying land to build an auditorium holding 2,500 to 3,000 people.

Lopez said his preaching emphasizes family life, with a message for the poor to shake off their poverty, and for the rich to share their wealth.

"We have seen the need to preach a gospel that does not put up barriers between people. Before it was believed in this country that the gospel was only for the poor," he said, claiming many people resent the work of leftist activists in the Catholic priesthood, adherents of the "Theology of Liberation" that grew in the 1960s and 1970s.

"Our message goes beyond Marxism or capitalism. There are no differences, only unity in God," he said.

Arsonists set fire to headquarters

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Arsonists set fire early Saturday to the Londonderry campaign headquarters of the Social Democratic and Labor Party, Northern Ireland's main Roman Catholic political party, police said.

The building was heavily damaged, but there were no injuries, according to police. No one was inside at the time.

Party leader John Hume said he believed the fire was started by a gasoline bomb.

Rains cause landslides, floods

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Torrential rains in Taiwan triggered landslides and caused floods which have killed 12 people and left nine others missing, police said Saturday.

Damage was reported Friday in Natou county and in Taichung county, south of Taipei, and in Yilan county, northeast of Taipei.

Officials said the downpour also damaged the highway linking east and west Taiwan.The rains eased on Saturday but the weather bureau forecast possible heavy rains in the next few days.

Police safely dismantle two bombs

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Police safely dismantled two large bombs near Jerusalem's Old City Saturday, averting a possibly heavy loss of life in an area frequented by tourists, the Jerusalem police spokesman said.

Ziv Rotem said one bomb was discovered by a passer-by who immediately alerted the police. After dismantling the explosives, police found another bomb and defused it too, he said.

Rotem said police haddetained 12 or 13 suspects for questioning.

Pope meets with six U.S.senators

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II told six U.S. senators Saturday to uphold the human rights of "every man, woman and child" and urged the visitors to recognize their "influence on the world community."

"I would encourage you to reflect constantly on the moral implications and consequences of your actions and on your influence on the world community," John Paul said in the Throne Room of the Apostolic Palace.

The pope said, "Maintain a keen awareness of the dignity of the human person and be courageous in upholding the inalienable rights which flow from that dignity: the inalienable rights of every human person — every man, woman and child."

The six senators at the audience were Richard Lugar, R-Ind., Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., Orrin Hatch, R-Utah., Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., Mack Mattingly, R-Ga., and Arlen Specter, R-Pa. They are on an official fact-finding visit to Europe focusing on economic matters, a U.S. Embassy spokesman in Rome said.

General disfavors troops

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. John Vessey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has publicly underscored the opposition of military and civilian Pentagon officials to any use of U.S. combat troops in Central America.

"Neither I, nor any member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, nor the civilian leaders in the Department of Defense advocate introducing U.S. combat forces to try to implement an American military solution to the problems of Central America," Vessey said.

"We don't want that to happen, and the governments down there that are trying to get our help don't want it to happen. But military assistance and training assistance are urgently needed."

Vessey, the nation's top military officer, made those comments to an audience in New Orleans May 13. A partial transcript his remarks was made available here Saturday.

Meanwhile, a source close to the Joint Chiefs said "no study is under way or contemplated" by the top military panel on what the United States might have to commit in the way of troops and equipment to the government of El Salvador.

Vessey's remarks reflected a viewpoint known to have been held consistently at the upper levels of the Defense Department, both among senior military officers and top cilivians since the Reagan administration began increasing U.S. training and other aid to El Salvador and Honduras.

With the memory of Vietnam still vivid, senior U.S. military officers are known to believe that no U.S. military intervention in Central America or any other place could be undertaken and sustained without broad public support.

These officers long had been concerned that any such direct U.S. involvement probably would boomerang by turning U.S. public opinion against the U.S. military and fuel congressional opposition to growing defense spending.

On a number of occasions, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has indicated he shares the view of his military chiefs.

The source close to the Joint Chiefs, who asked to remain anonymous, said the prevailing view among the top officers is that the United States should give the Salvadorans, the Hondurans, and any other threatened nation in Central America whatever is necessary for those countries to deal with insurgency problems.

The Reagan administration has pledged that it will not send U.S. combat troops into Central America. In El Salvador, it has decreed rules aimed at keeping U.S. trainers and advisers out of the way of shooting between government and anti-government forces.

The administration has imposed on itself a limit of 55 U.S. military advisers in El Salvador. Some military officers believe such a ceiling is too small, but they stopped well short of favoring commitment of large numbers of Americans to the advisory effort.

A Clear Choice

"Since 1958 Ozarka Water has been a recognized and respected name in bottled water in West Texas and Eastern New Mexico. And, since 1979, the Airis water company has served the same market with its fine products. Early this year I purchased both of these companies, Ozarka and Airis, and incorporated them under a new name, "The American Pure Water Corporation", better known as Ampure.

Ampure will bottle Ozarka and Airis under the Ampure banner and both will continue to be distributed by the company to their present customers. All water will be bottled in the Midland plant while Odessa will remain the primary service and sales center.

What this means for bottled water users is that they can be assured of enhanced quality and service from experienced professionals in the water business.

As a locally owned company, Ampure will be operated under a local board of directors, whose goals will be to maintain the highest standards of operation, management, service and products for its many customers and other friends.

And I want to personally thank these people for their many years of patronage and support and to assure them that we are dedicated to meeting their pure water needs in the years ahead."

African leaders meet to heal continent's wounds

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — African leaders assemble here this week in another attempt — some say it could be the last — to bind up the wounds of a continent beset by political strife, starvation and debt.

At stake is the future of the 20-year-old Organization of African Unity, the world's largest regional grouping.

The planned six days of private discussions, starting Monday, could produce an answer to a persistent question: Can 50 military and civilian governments, representing a diverse population of some 450 million, speak with one voice on the issues that affect Africa?

"The summit will take place as planned," President Daniel arap Moi of Kenya, the current OAU chairman, said. In the circumstances, that would be a kind of triumph.

North African conflicts led to boycotts that torpedoed two attempts to convene an OAU summit in Libya last year.

One issue was whether President Hissene Habre would represent Chad instead of his defeated rival, Goukouni Oueddei. The other was whether the Sahara Arab Democratic Republic, proclaimed by the Polisario Front, would attend as the OAU's 51st member.

Both disputes will come up again in Addis Ababa, where the OAU was formed in 1963 with 32 founding members as the continent shed colonial rule.

The OAU has dispensed with the usual preparatory foreign ministers' meeting in order to avoid pre-summit wrangles.

A spokesman for Goukouni said in Paris recently that his government-in-exile would come to the meeting. Sudan has accused the Libyan leader, Col. Moammar Khadafy, of planning to send troops into Chad again to back Goukouni against Habre in that north-central African nation's on-again, off-again civil war.

A spokesman for the Polisario Front said in Paris that the guerrilla movement would seek to sit in the summit. That raised the prospect of a repeat of a Moroccan-led boycott that blocked last year's planned summits.

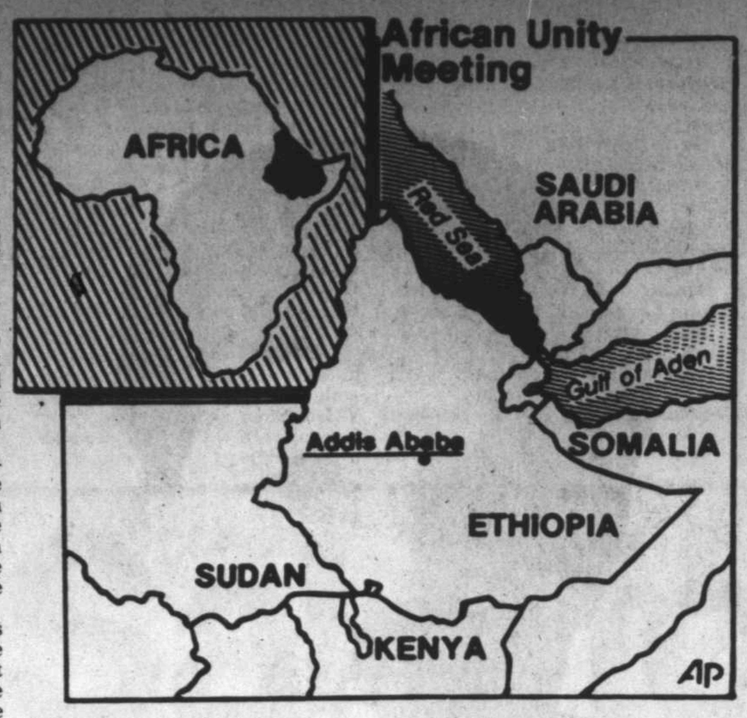
The Libyan-backed Polisario Front has been fighting for eight years from havens in Algeria and Mauritania to wrest control of the former Spanish Sahara from Morocco.

Another issue is who would succeed Moi as OAU chairman. If the 1983 summit had been held in Guinea, as intended, it would have been President Sekou Toure, in accordance with the custom that the host country's leader assume the chairmanship.

At week's end, Libyan diplomats were still campaigning to postpone the conference here and hold it later in Libya, which would make Khadafy the next chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government.

Addis Ababa, the home of the OAU Secretariat, was chosen as a compromise site after the failure last August and November to convene summits in Tripoli, Libya.

Some of Africa's most influential leaders are raising more far-raching issues. President Julius Nyerere, a socialist theoretician who has turned Tanzania into a military power in East Africa, has said the OAU needs to "re-examine our present constitution and our present Secretariat structure."



The OAU has been paralyzed by the disputed ruling of Secretary-General Edem Kodjo of Togo in February 1982 to admit the Sahara Arab Democratic Republic, and by the subsequent failures to achieve the 34-member quorum required for summits.

The paralysis has slowed OAU work on non-political development projects in farming, economics and culture and has exacerbated the organization's debt problem. By some estimates, OAU members owe more than $30 million in dues going back to its founding two decades ago.

Brazil: Melting pot of various groups

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — There's Ibrahim Abi-Ackel, Ernesto Geisel, Shigeaki Ueki, Israel Klabin, Emerson Fittipaldi and Rita Lee Jones. What they all have in common is that they are prominent Brazilians of non-Portuguese origin and attest to the apparent success of the "melting pot" in Latin America's biggest country.

Brazil has maintained the language and cultural traditions of Portugal, the mother country, for nearly 500 years. Yet the nation has large numbers of political leaders, captains of industry, artists, media figures and sports stars whose roots are from non-Iberian Europe, the Orient, the Middle East and even North America.

"Of all the Latin American countries, Brazil is the one that opened its doors widest to immigration and whose people welcomed all those who came, without distinction of national origin or religion," wrote Brazilian historian Fernando L. B. Basto.

Figures are imprecise. But of Brazil's 125 million people, the number from non-Portuguese backgrounds certainly runs to the tens of millions, researchers agree.

Following 300 years of nearly exclusive colonization by Roman Catholics from Portugal — and by African slaves who were baptized and given Portuguese surnames such as Silva, Oliveira and Nascimento — Brazil in 1808 decided to welcome settlers from all over the globe.

Immigrants streamed in. Most came from Italy, followed by those from Spain, Germany and the Middle Eastern part of what then was the Turkish Ottoman Empire. Food-short Japan sent shiploads of farm colonists. Jews fleeing oppression in Russia and Eastern Europe arrived. People came also from the Balkan countries, Scandinavia, Britain, Ireland, France, Switzerland and the United States.

The newcomers quickly picked up what they could of the language and then set out to make new lives for themselves in this exotic, unknown land.

"The amalgamation of races and cultures is characteristic of Brazilian development and has been the main dissolver of rigid limits of race and class," writes Gilberto Freyre, widely regarded as this country's most important contemporary sociologist.

Thus, no one thought it surprising or unusual when in 1974 the military government picked Gen. Ernesto Geisel, the son of an immigrant German Lutheran pastor, to be president until 1979.

Weinberger: Soviet missiles in Eastern Europe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, stating what some U.S. military officials previously have maintained, says the Soviet Union has nuclear weapons in Eastern Europe and has had them there for years.

At a news conference on arriving in Norway on Thursday, Weinberger told reporters "there would be nothing new about the placement of Soviet nuclear weapons in Eastern Europe."

"They have been there for some time and many of them are mobile and can go in and out," Weinberger added.

His comments came in response to a Soviet statement that the Moscow government would introduce nuclear weapons in Warsaw Pact nations facing NATO if the United States persisted in its plans to install 572 intermediate range nuclear missiles in Western Europe starting late this year.

At another news conference earlier in the week in Bonn, Weinberger responded to a question by saying Soviets already have missiles in Warsaw Pact countries and have had them there "for a long time."

When a reporter stood up and contradicted him, saying the Soviets have no nuclear warheads outside the Soviet Union, Weinberger said, "They (the missiles in the Warsaw Pact) are capable of carrying them (nuclear warheads)."

He then repeated that the SS-20s are mobile and said it hardly matters where they are based since they can be moved around.

In early 1979, Gen. David Jones told Congress in his annual report as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff that, "Warsaw Pact ground theater nuclear forces confronting NATO include large quantities of surface-to-surface tactical nuclear missiles."

"There are Soviet tactical missile launchers ... deployed in Eastern Europe and more based in the Soviet Union which probably are earmarked for the NATO area ... ground forces of all non-Soviet Warsaw Pact countries possess weapons with nuclear delivery capability. However, all nuclear warheads appear to be under Soviet control."

Britain's four main candidates portrayed

LONDON (AP) — Following are thumbnail sketches of the four main party leaders in the June 9 general election:

MARGARET HILDA THATCHER, Conservative

The incumbent prime minister was born Oct. 13, 1925, in a room above the grocery story of her father, Alfred Roberts, in the market town of Grantham, Lincolnshire.

Her Methodist home instilled in her Victorian values such as "if a thing's worth doing, it's worth doing well."

In 1951 she married oil executive Denis Thatcher, now retired, and two years later they had twin children, Mark and Carol.

At Oxford University she had qualified as a chemist, and later as a patent lawyer, but both careers were sidelined by politics.

She was first elected to the House of Commons in 1959 and 16 years later she challenged Edward Heath, who'd lost an election, for the Conservative Party leadership and won.

Her dispatch of the mightiest British task force since World War II to recapture the Falkland Islands from Argentina in 1982 transformed her adverse ratings into a substantial opinion poll lead. This influenced her decision to call elections 11 months early.

* * *

MICHAEL FOOT, Labor

Mrs. Thatcher's 69-year-old chief opponent comes from a middle-class family of booklovers and public figures. His father, Isaac, was a Liberal Party legislator.

After graduation from Oxford, Michael Foot became a political journalist, author and peace marcher.

He entered Parliament in 1945, never held Cabinet office until he was 60, and became the Labor Party leader in 1980 as a compromise candidate who has tried to unite the socialist-leaning party in opposition to Thatcherism.

Sunday Observer columnist Clive James has commented that Foot "is a man who has been mastered by the English language."

Once a left-wing firebrand famed for his oratory, he now is criticized by those who say they are left baffled by muddled answers.

* * *

ROY JENKINS, Social Democratic

The son of a Welsh miners' union leader and educated at Oxford, Jenkins entered Parliament in 1948 and held several Cabinet posts in Labor Party governments. In 1977 he left Britain to become president of the European Common Market Commission.

His penchant for claret wine has become a sort of national joke — the Conservatives offer a case for the best guess at Social Democratic policies.

Jenkins, 62, was a heavy favorite to become prime minister after reentering the House of Commons in March 1982 by winning the seat for Glasgow Hillhead. Bookmakers make him a very long shot now.

In electoral alliance with the Liberal Party, ratings soared to a near 50 percent peak two Christmases ago. But it was not to last.

* * *

DAVID STEEL, Liberal

Often rated as Britain's best-liked party leader, the 45-year-old Scotsman became Liberal leader in 1976.

Son of the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, he was a television interviewer after graduating from Edinburgh University and, at 26, became the youngest member of the Commons.

He made an impact quickly by sponsoring a bill to liberalize abortion laws.

He carried the Liberals — some reluctantly — into the alliance with the Social Democrats

Parties listed

LONDON (AP) — Here is a breakdown of the number of House of Commons seats held by British political parties in the current Parliament.

Conservatives — 334
Labor — 239
Social Democrats — 29
Liberal — 13
Scottish Nationalist — 2
Plaid Cymru — 2
Ulster Unionist — 5
Ulster Democratic Unionist — 3
Ulster Progressive Unionist — 1
United Ulster Unionist — 1
Anti-H Block — 1 (Northern Ireland) — 1
Labor Independent — 1
TOTAL — 635

Thatcher looks unstoppable

LONDON (AP) — Despite near-record unemployment, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher appears headed for victory in this week's election. She would become the first Conservative leader since 1900 to win successive terms in office.

Not since the opposition Labor Party swept Winston Churchill from power in 1945 and set up the welfare state has the division between Britain's two major parties been so great.

"The choice facing the nation is between two totally different ways of life," Mrs. Thatcher, 57, said in opening her campaign for the balloting June 9. "What a prize we have to fight for — no less than a chance to banish from our land the dark, divisive clouds of Marxist socialism."

Or as Labor Party leader Michael Foot, 69, put it: "The Tories (Conservatives) promise more of the same dogmatic, monetarist economics, devil-take-the-hindmost social policies, care and compassion thrown out of the window in reckless pursuit of the money test."

AMID THE INSULT-TRADING, shopping center walkabouts and saturation television coverage that go with Britain's four-week election campaigns, the choice has been presented as capitalism vs. socialism.

Few seriously doubt the message from opinion polls that Mrs. Thatcher will win. Oddsmakers rate her the heavy favorite.

If the left-dominated Labor Party goes down badly, Britain's 42.5 million voters will signal that Labor's radical socialism and unilateral nuclear disarmament are not for them.

"The losers of this battle are not going to be able to dust themselves off and walk away; their entire philosophy will have been rejected," said commentator Brian Walden.

Between the giants lies the election's wild card, the 20-month-old centrist alliance between the Social Democratic and Liberal Parties.

The alliance hopes to break the two-party axis that has dominated British politics for 60 years by winning enough seats to hold the balance of power in the new House of Commons — or at least live to fight another day.

In the current 635-member House, the Conservatives hold 334 seats, the Laborites 239, the Social Democrats 29 and the Liberals 13, with the remainder in the hands of minor parties or independents.

IN THIS ELECTION the Commons' membership is being increased to 650 to account for electoral boundary changes.

The Conservative platform promises more of the tough Thatcher economic medicine that cut annual inflation to a 15-year low of 4 percent, but almost trebled unemployment to a current near-record 3.17 million people, or 13.3 percent.

With that comes another term of Mrs. Thatcher's foreign policy, which pledges to deploy U.S. cruise nuclear missiles in Britain this year and spend billions updating the nation's own nuclear arsenal.

After losing power in 1979, the Labor Party has adopted the most left-wing platform of its 83-year history — little to the taste of party moderates headed by deputy leader Denis Healey.

It pledges an immediate 11-billion-pound ($17.7 billion) spending boost — which would more than double the current low 8-billion-pound ($12.9 billion) deficit — to create 2.5 million jobs in five years. This would be backed up by monetary exchange controls and more state intervention, including taking over banks if they don't cooperate.

In pledges that enrage the Tories, Labor promises unilateral nuclear disarmament and withdrawal from the 10-nation European Common Market, which Britain joined in 1973.

Labor would ban cruise missiles and close U.S. nuclear bases in Britain. Whether it would actually scrap Britain's Polaris nuclear weapons unilaterally, which polls show large majorities oppose, has become bogged down in conflicting statements from party leaders.

The Social Democrat-Liberal alliance envisages a modest 3-billion-pound ($4.8 billion) job creation program and, apart from wanting to cancel Mrs. Thatcher's order to buy U.S. Trident missiles, is close to the Tories on defense and continued Common Market membership.

MRS. THATCHER CALLED the election 11 months before the end of the ordinary five-year term in order to take advantage of a long-held 12-point lead in opinion polls, unprecedented for a British leader.

Polls through the campaign show that lead holding up, with nearly half the electorate favoring the Tories, and the alliance running third behind Labor.

Most voters tell pollsters unemployment is the most important issue; but then, in smaller majorities, say they'll vote for Mrs. Thatcher — who refuses even to estimate when the jobless rate might drop.

The independent Sunday Times noted: "Unemployment isn't working for Foot."

"She has destroyed the self-confidence of the British people," Healy has asserted. "She has made many of them believe there is no alternative to mass unemployment."

Whether they believe Mrs. Thatcher's message that somebody had to do something to curb union power and state spending and to streamline industry, what many voters, according to polls, clearly do not believe is that Labor's plan can work.

Many others regard Foot as Labor's major problem. He is an intellectual, compassionate man who will be 70 in July, and looks older, and scores around 20 percent in popularity polls.

Elected 2½ years ago as a compromise candidate to head the strife-torn party, his campaign performance has been given very low marks.

Meditation: Discipline of losing control

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

It has something in common with sex and drugs, but it is a more disciplined form of pushing past boundaries and arriving at a "sense of the oceanic."

Like a drug trip or an orgasm, meditation is a way of losing control, according to theologian, educator and philosopher John E. Bradshaw.

Bradshaw led about 70 people on the path toward losing control during a workshop Friday night and Saturday sponsored by the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Episcopal Church of The Holy Trinity.

It's hard to let go.

Bradshaw, also a public speaker and management consultant, admitted that during his almost 10 years of "trying to become a Catholic priest," many hours in the monastary were spent "acting like I was meditating."

"There were certain superficialities about it for me," he said. "There were certainly real limitations and ego involved in what I was doing."

What he was trying to do, as well as the sometimes fidgety group, was to totally remove himself from his ego.

To do that, one must have a strong ego.

"You have to have a strong ego to lose your ego," he said. "You have to lose yourself to find yourself."

He added a person with a weak ego is scared to give up control.

"For someone who doesn't feel they can cope with the world, I wouldn't advise meditation," he said. "I would advise strengthening your ego."

Calling them deficiency needs, Bradshaw said the ego depends on self worth; security, or food, clothing and shelter; strokes, or attention and compliments; structure, a sense of order like knowing the sun will rise tomorrow; and stimulation.

But the spiritual needs, which most people are unaware of when in their typical ego stage, are goodness, creativity, self actualization and love.

To find the inner peace, "it has to start in our own hearts," he said. "You have to accept your powerlessness. You have to accept it and turn it over to God."

The struggle to become conscious of a power stronger and more important than the mundane things of life is tough.

Counties resist waste inquiries

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Several area counties are being scrutinized by the state in its search for a radioactive waste disposal site.

However, the potential of constructing such a plant by Texas Low-level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority already is meeting with preliminary resistance by some county officials.

"We don't like that at all; we're really going to fight that thing," said Judge Roland Lowe of Sterling County, the northern third of which is being considered along with portions of Howard, Dawson, Mitchell, Scurry, Borden, Kent, Lynn, Garza and Crosby counties.

"There's a lot of opposition on that (from) the entire county...(The Authority) considered San Angelo, but they said it had too much oil activity. And we've got more than they do...There's too many wide-open spaces besides Sterling County that would be eligible for that and there's always some health reasons too, some danger."

"I think there would be heavy resistance because of the water situation," said Dawson County Judge Glenn White. "We feel it would be detrimental to our land. You take agriculture away from our area and you do away with us."

"You start putting waste in a water zone and you don't know where it's going," added Scurry County Judge Preston Wilson.

The Authority was created by the 67th Legislature in 1981 to develop a site for the disposal of low-level radiation originating in Texas, said Authority general manager Rick Jacobi.

"The type of waste would be radioactive material waste from hospitals, universities, industries such as oil and gas industry and manufacturing. We'll also receive a certain amount of waste from nuclear power plants to be operating in the state by the end of the decade, but not spent radioactive fuel. That is the responsibility of the federal government."

The Authority began operation in September 1982 and 15 areas comprising parts of 105 Texas counties came under study beginning in February.

MMH's 'Caring' attitude helps when parents lose a child

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

When a child dies, the parents need support to cope with that time in their lives.

Midland Memorial Hospital staff members are learning to give that support.

"The death of a child is one of the most tragic events that can happen to parents," said Alan Schroeder, MMH's social worker.

Schroeder conducted an education session last week to teach health professionals how to assist parents whose child has died.

"As I understand it — not having been through it myself — the biggest sensation, feeling the parent has is shock and pain," he said. "Sort of like tumbling, falling, grasping for anything to put a handle on what has happened.

"There's a feeling of powerlessness. They search every crevice of their being for an answer...but those bad things do happen to good people."

Schroeder said support for these people must start at the hospital. As health professionals, these nurses, clinicians or technicians can begin by being sensitive, not only to the parents, but sensitive to their own feelings.

"Be honest with your own emotions. They reflect," Schroeder said.

"Have sensitivity. Be in tune to these families. Know their names, don't allow the uniform and professionalism to get in the way. It's important to reach out and put your arm around these parents. Have good eye contact and be honest.

"Provide clear, concise information in the simplist terms possible. Nurses are often uncomfortable telling the parents anything and tend to leave it up to the doctor. That's pooey. You can share what you know, just present it that way."

"Bereavement is an individual process, nobody does it the same way. Give them options; give them time to say good-bye," Schroeder said, explaining that parents should be allowed to view their child's body, if they desire.

He told the nurses to acknowledge there's nothing fair about the parents' child dying and to offer them help.

The help in Midland comes in the form of a support group, named "Caring," sponsored by the Junior League of Midland, Inc., Schroeder said.

The group — originally formed for parents whose children died from miscarriages, stillbirths or neonatal diease — now includes all bereaved parents.

"Caring," which meets the first Tuesday each month in an Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity Sunday school classroom, is a group of bereaved parents helping other parents with the grief proces.

"Make the parents aware of this group," Schroeder said. "Call them. Let them know somebody cares."

Nostalgia: Altering present by changing past

There's much of the 1940s and the 1950s in the 1980s.

The hangers-on from the past are trying to recapture or to relive their youth of the mid-1900s when they, in reflection, perceived they were in happier times. A part of nostalgia is a futile effort to alter the present by changing the past.

Radio signals are radiating one of the memorable upbeat pleasures of the past: The Big Band sounds of the swing and jazz masters, such as brothers Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey, Glenn Miller, Duke Ellington, Fats Waller and sentimental voices of Jo Stafford, Frank Sinatra, Dick Haymes and crooner Bing Crosby.

They reflect the romantic era of pop music — music which allows the listener to dream without regard to reality. It's a pleasant escape. But that escaping can lead to heartache resentment if the whimsical does not give way to coping with reality.

Today's long-dress style is a link to the '40s and '50s, as is the restoration of the classic cars, including the early Thunderbirds and Corvettes and the '57 Chevrolet.

Confederate Air Force colonels tend to dwell over the past "glory" of the old U.S. Army Air Corps, the Luftwaffe, Imperial Japanese Air Force and Royal Air Force. The CAF colonels restore and fly the old "warbirds" — the bombers and pursuit aircraft — without resurrecting the terrible terror of war.

As in the '50s, people again are fearful of atomic holocaust. But there's no rush to build fallout shelters or to establish hideaways atop mountains or on isolated islands. The populous seems resigned to the "que sera sera" syndrome. The world's fate is beyond their power or control. There's no escape.

The appearance of frozen yogurt parlors and a mass return to the movies reflect a lingering for the wholesome, which was reflected in Norman Rockwell's paintings and in the 1940s and 1950s drug store crowd at the soda fountain and at Sunday outings.

"E.T." of the 1980s is a return of the miracle and innocence of Walt Disney; "Star Wars" is an outer-space cowboys-and-indians Western film wherein the good-hearted chaps win over the evil-doers; and "Chariots of Fire" is a study in discipline, determination, the human spirit and noble ideas not unlike "The Bridge on the River Kwai" and "The Old Man and the Sea."

The musicals "South Pacific," "Oklahoma," "Show Boat" and "West Side Story" may return for encores and make hearts both glad and sad.

In the early '50s, television began to revolutionize entertainment just as the home video computer today is altering pastime on the home-front. Thirty years ago, many movie houses shutdown, as folks stayed at home to watch "The Ed Sullivan Show," "I Love Lucy" and "See It Now" even though many screens were filled with drifting "snow flakes."

The downtown visitation complexion of small towns on Saturday night was changed; a starkness prevailed. Family members stayed around the house but not necessarily together.

Just like the onset of the '80s, the '50s for the most part was marred by Cold Wars and mini-wars which never got to world war proportion.

Consumer awareness gained impetus with the stimulus of Vance Packard's book "The Hidden Persuaders." Ralph Nader is doing the follow-through.

That part of the '40s after the World War and the '50s after the Korean Conflict were groping years for Americans. The nation's priorities were based on a house and two cars for each family, college education for the children, a fall-out shelter in the backyard, and efforts by Joe McCarthy and the Federal Bureau of Investigation's J. Edgar Hoover to block the communists' threat to take over the United States by insidious means.

There was no real national purpose other than to stay out of war and depression. Peace in the States prevailed, and the unifying effect of World War II had faded.

But were those happier times? Was there a song in every heart? Was life carefree and without the omens of impending disaster. Was life a dream?

No. But in songs of the day, life was either a lullaby, a romance or a heartache.

Even then, there were job insecurities; rumors of wars, famines and pestilences; broken marriages; suicides; discouragement; crashing airlines, sinking ships; and death and taxes.

There's the same and more today.

As in the past, there is the promise of a better tomorrow based on the deeds done today. And for those who live in the present and not in the past or future, there are the simple joys, sorrows, rewards and disappointments of living each day in God's world.

"Our ego is limited to the object of immediate concern. It has to do with survival. We cannot survive without an ego."

—John Bradshaw

Speaker helps group explore meditation

"It's hard to go into an altered consciousness when you've got the toilet overflowing," he said.

"Our ego is limited to the object of immediate concern," he stated in literature distributed during the workshop. "It has to do with survival. We can not survive without an ego. Still, it blinds us to the whole picture."

"Personal power cannot be gotten on the outside," he explained. "As much as people think, it can't be gotten through money, politics, prestige or worldly fame."

He pointed out the difference in the terms selfish and selfness: "Selfness is the divine likeness. It is the ultimate creative essence — what God intended for me and you in our being. What makes me me and you you."

One of the most natural ways to extend the limits of a person's ego is through often-ignored dreams, he said, adding four years of a person's life are spent dreaming.

"We are much more aware (of the state of higher consciousness through dreams) than we know," he said, noting dreams, premonitions and visions make up half the Bible.

"The ego diminishes in dreams," he said. "You open the axis and move out of the boundaries. You see something inside that you couldn't have seen from the outside. You go to that still, quiet voice within, where you encounter directly with the Divine."

When the letter "t" is removed from meditation, the word mediation appears. According to Bradshaw, mediation between the human and the divine is found through meditation.

"People who meditate are shown to be more calm," he said. "They look at the cosmic scheme of things and don't worry about the toothpaste being squeezed in the middle."

DEATHS

Adelya Cloud

SAN ANGELO — Services for Adelya "Dee" Cloud, 76, of San Angelo, sister of Mrs. O.D. Huckabee of Midland, will be at 11 a.m. Monday in the First Presbyterian Church with the Rev. Dewayne Bechaum, of St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Dallas, officiating. Burial will be in Terry County Memorial Cemetery in Brownfield directed by Brownfield Funeral Home.

Mrs. Cloud died Friday night in a San Angelo hospital.

She was born April 15, 1907, in Stanton. She married John B. Cloud Sr. Dec. 10, 1923, in New Mexico. He died in 1967. She was a member of the Presbyterian church.

He was born July 3, 1943, in Lubbock, where he spent his early life. He attended schools in El Paso. He entered the United States Air Force at the age of 18, and served in Vietnam.

Upon discharge, he began work with Westinghouse Electric in the electronic division and worked in Japan, Okinawa, Hawaii and California. He moved to Midland in 1979 and was employed with BTA for the past two years. He married Kim Jones in 1980 in Midland.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; two daughters, Shawn LeNen Blankenship and Kristi Lee Blankenship, both of Midland; a son, Jeffery Lloyd Blankenship of Midland; and his stepmother, Harriett Blankenship of El Paso.

The family requests memorials be made to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas 79702.

18 Midlanders 'in it' as park triathlon opens

When the sun raised its head over Midland and squinted open an eye Saturday morning, 18 hardy souls were ready to take on each other in the opening round of "Life. Be In It." Day.

The contestants ranged in age from 10 to over 50. And they were prepared to put their skills to the test in the Mini-mini Triathlon. It started with a 100-meter swim at 8 a.m. in the City of Midland pool, a three-mile bicycle ride and a 1¼ mile run.

Other events in the local celebration of national Parks and Recreation Month included canoe rides, coed recreational softball tournament, swimming, bingo, parachute play, a summer fashion show and dancing under the stars at Hogan Park.

Contestants in the triathlon were timed from when they started the swim until they finished the run.

Winner in the male division was Stan Carson, 23, with a time of 21:54. Female winner was Michaela Hasek, 12, with a time of 22:06.

The rest of the contestants finished in the following order: Kyle Cook, 12, 22:18; Sam Perry, 14, 22:34; Jay Greer, 14, 22:51; David Braswell, 38, 23; Al Spinks, 18, 23:30; Suzi Simpson, 17, 23:38; Barbara Olsen, 26, 23:58; Teri Valero, 31, 25:58; Chad Barbee, 12, 27; Howard Barbee, 42, 27:24; Norman Gould, 55, 31:47; Laura Morse, 13, 32:11; Tracey Delany, 14, 32:13; Rebecca Simpson, 14, 32:27; Tracy Rickets, 10, 37:05; and Dina Braswell, 11, 37:50.

Counties voice resistance to waste disposal queries

The preliminary report, said Jacobi, indicates the most favorable locales as the western, northwestern and southwestern portions of the state where rainfall is less and the soil is less acidic and includes more alkaline clay. The northeastern sector of Midland County lies in one of those geographical areas.

The study, by Dames and Moore Consultants of Houston, is to end with selection of a prime site Aug. 31. A public hearing and meetings with local officials will follow, after which the site may be chosen by the six scientists-engineers who make up the Authority's board. A one-year on-site study and another public hearing will be held prior to initiation of plant operations Jan. 1, 1988.

The waste site, which will be surrounded by a buffer zone of 300 to 400 acres, will comprise 10 to 50 acres, said Jacobi.

"The waste will be received in 55 gallon steel drums," he explained. "We dig a trench about 40 feet deep, 50 feet wide and about 100 yards long. The waste comes in on a truck, the semi drives down into the trench, and a crane picks up the drums and lowers them to the floor of the trench. A bulldozer then pushes soil over the top of the drums, and we come along and bury them until it gets 15 feet from the surface. Then we cap it with natural soils..and re-seed with natural grasses."

Aware that the mention of radioactive waste sometimes stirs emotions, Jacobi emphasized that "we are certainly not headed for any specific area in the state right now...If there is any concern by local officials or citizens, who want to know more about what we're doing, give me or Tom Blackburn a call at 512-835-6795 and we'd be glad to share with them, or send someone to talk to them."

Midland Memorial offers weekly tours for children having surgery

Midland Memorial Hospital has started regularly scheduled tours for children, ages 3 to 12, who will be having surgery, according to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director.

The tours, which begin at 2 p.m. every Wednesday, will include visits to the lab, X-ray, recovery room and pediatric floor. Ms. Strickland said hospital staff members will be on hand to explain anesthesia procedures, pre-operative shots, blood workup and IVs.

According to Ms. Strickland, the program's goal is to ease anxiety and reduce the child's fear of both the hospital and the staff. Parents are encouraged to accompany their child on the 45-minute tour.

Persons interested in having their child become acquainted with MMH before surgery or a scheduled admission may call MMH public relations department, 685-1541.

Firemen ask you to 'Fill the Boot'

Midland firemen will hold their second annual fund drive for the Muscular Dystrophy Association on Saturday. The campaign, called "Fill the Boot," will be at two of the major Midland intersections including Midkiff at Wadley.

"Fill the Boot" is a special fund raising tool used by many firemen across the country for MDA. Several firemen are assigned at each of several major intersections across the city and use official firemen's boots to collect donations from motorists stopped at traffic lights and stop signs.

Persons wantint to make a donation to MDA on behalf of the Midland Fire Department's drive may contact the Fire Chief's office at the Central Fire Station.

Y accepting swim, gym students

Swim classes begin Wednesday and continue through Aug. 4. Classes begin at 6-months to 3 years for Parents and Tots, 3 to 6 for tadpoles and 6 and older for progressive swim.

Adult and senior swim classes are also available. For more information contact the Alamo Y, 901 Midland Drive, or call 694-2528.

Classes, instructed by Dave Wheeler, will meet from 7 to 9 p.m., Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Program fee, including a student kit, will be $220 for Y members and $250 for limited members.

For more information contact the Central Y, 800 N. Big Spring St., or call 682-2551.

Memorial Christian Church, 1001 Andrews Highway, will hold its Vacation Church School Monday through Friday.

Classes for children, pre-schooler through sixth grade, will be held from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. School age children will attend classes based upon their grade placement from the past school year.

Theme of this year's school is "God's Own People." Children are asked to bring a large can of juice and a package of cookies.

For more information call director Jill Groves at 682-5701.

JA honors year's top company

Lone Star Production Co., a Junior Achievement firm made up of 10 Midland high school students, was named company of the year along with other honors.

Sponsored by Gulf Oil Corp., it was one of 13 JA firms and was named a $1,000 sales company registering $1,500 in sales of its products.

Juan Rivera, a member of the company, was named Achiever of the Year in Midland.

Gulf employees advising the company were Mona Barbee, Mike Hart, Jerry Hunter, JoDee Janson and Camille Mickey.

Final sign-ups for the Red Cross Advanced Lifesaving Course will be from 9 to 10 a.m. Monday at the Doug Russell Pool.

The course, offered by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department, will begin Monday at the pool and run from 10 a.m. to noon for the next 10 consecutive weekdays. Students completing the course will receive lifeguard certification.

For more information, call Charles Vetter on Monday from 9 to 10 a.m. at 694-9121.

'Bunch of blueberries' irresistable

Sesame Place designed for children

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

It invites — "Try me. I'm fun. Jump in." For children of any age, it's impossible to walk by without doing so.

"One hundred and eighty thousand plastic balls on top of a waterbed, when people see it, they just have to dive in," Bill Monty, general manager of Sesame Place, said of the park's Count's Ballroom during a recent Midland visit.

"It looks like a bunch of blueberries. The balls are waist deep and you can go under and breathe," he said. Chuckling, he explained that the only problem is getting the same amount of "kids" out that dive in.

Laughter is something with which Monty is familiar. After all, his business is making sure others laugh. And his frequent chuckle indicates he enjoys his work.

Sesame Place, located in Irving, is in its second year of operation. The park is open daily from 9:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. through Aug. 28, and 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays from Sept. 3 through Oct. 30. It is also open Labor Day.

Designed with children in mind, the park features several rest stops for adults.

"We have a lot of outdoor shade built into the park, one-third of the outdoor is shade. There's plenty of opportunity to cool off either by getting wet or getting out of the sun," Monty said.

That's important at a park of this type because kids may have boundless energy, but adults don't.

In addition to adults receiving a price break — $5.50 as opposed to the $7.50 charge for children over 2 — this year the park has added more Adult Oasis areas. Parents who are played out, can watch the activity from a shaded oasis where adult-style frozen juice bar drinks are served.

Last summer's No. 1 attraction was the Water Maize.

"During our first season, which didn't start until last June, we hosted some 400,000 visitors and introduced them to our new park concept of kid-powered play activities," Monty said. The activities included indoor science exhibits where participation is encouraged; a Sesame Studio, where visitors can see themselves on closed circuit television; and more than 60 computer games as well as the 30-plus outdoor games.

This year the seven-acre park, built on a 30.3-acre site five miles west of Texas Stadium, has spent an additional $1 million on new shows and entertainment. The new outdoor rides include:

—Sesame 500, a 500-foot long track with electronic starting and timing devices for "big-wheel" type pedal devices.

—Zoom Flume, a 120-foot long tube slide, propels riders on an ice-slick wet and spongy vinyl surface down a 20-foot drop, into a spin-out basin with another 6-foot drop ending in a splash pool.

—Slippery Slope, a 45-foot long slide with eight lanes, carries riders on a slick surface down a hillside into a wading pool at the bottom.

Monty, who believes "names are half the fun," is also thrilled about this year's newest residents — Muppet characters Bert and Ernie.

That wouldn't be possible except that Sesame Place amusement parks are the result of years of planning by creators of Sesame Street, which is now in its 14th year on television.

"In the middle 1970s the Children's Television Workshop (creators of Sesame Street) people started a three-year research project to identify the perfect kids park. In 1979, they felt they had a complete model," Monty says.

Sesame Place, Inc., is a joint venture of the "non-profit" CTW and the "for profit" Busch Entertainment Corp., Monty says. The prototype opened in the Philadelphia area in July 1980 and Monty was its first general manager.

Bill Monty

"This is one of the few industries with truly upward mobility. Work hard, be lucky and move up," says Monty, who has 12 years in the business.

And he should know. His first job was as a "$2 an hour monorail driver giving an animal safari tour.

For those in the theme park business the challenge is always there because there's no perfect park.

"Just as we think we have it just perfect for our visitors, the visitor changes. We're in a constant state of flux," he says.

And being general manager of an amusement park does has its rewards. As Monty says, "I'm the most popular Dad in my neighborhood."

Gershwin songs have vitality, sister says

ENTERTAINMENT

NEW YORK (AP) — They called her Frankie, the kid sister with the beautiful dark eyes and curly hair. She was the first member of the family to earn a living in show business, and the first person to sing some of the songs written by her older brothers, George and Ira Gershwin.

On Sunday, George and Ira will be honored on the 1983 Tony Awards show (to be aired at 8 p.m. CDT on CBS) when the name of Broadway's Uris Theater is changed to the Gershwin Theater during the live broadcast.

And Frances Gershwin, now Frances Godowsky, couldn't be more pleased. George's music and Ira's lyrics are still an important part of her life.

"They have a vitality," she said recently, referring to her brothers' songs during an interview in her art-filled East Side apartment. "It's difficult to explain those things, you know. It's like looking at a Matisse painting. You say, 'What makes it so special?' It's just something that hits you."

What hits you about Frances Godowsky at age 76 is her vitality. You can picture her as a tiny 10-year-old girl, dressed like a cossack, dancing across vaudeville stages in places like Philadelphia and Boston. She was a smash, first in a children's act called "Storyland" and later another called "Daintyland," all the while earning the grand sum of $50 a week — a lot of money in 1917.

It ended a few months later when her mother, Rose, decided her daughter had enough and brought her home to New York.

"When I came back, I was a very conceited little girl," Mrs. Godowsky laughed. "I used to walk down the street saying, 'If only these people knew who I was or what I've been doing.' Of course, I got off of it rather quickly."

She had to. There was no time in the Gershwin household, especially for a period in the 1920s when the entire family lived together in a building at 316 West 103rd Street.

"It was a very lively place. My mother and father had one floor. On the next floor Ira and his wife, Leonore, had their apartment. And my brother Arthur and I had our bedrooms on that floor," she said.

It was here that the Gershwins gave some of their fabled parties — George playing the piano, Ira sitting shyly in the corner with friends, Frankie singing their songs.

George would bring her up to his top-floor studio to hear new songs or to teach her a new dance step he learned from Fred Astaire, who starred in two big Gershwin hits, "Lady, Be Good" and "Funny Face."

It was George and Ira who chaperoned their young sister to Europe in 1928 when George started to work on "An American in Paris." In Paris, at a party given by Elsa Maxwell, George and Frankie performed. Cole Porter heard her and put her in a revue at Les Ambassadeurs, at that time the swankiest nightclub in Paris. She became a big success singing her brothers' songs.

"My voice isn't very large but I could always put a song over because I just thought of telling people the story of what I was singing about," Mrs. Godowsky said. "I just did them naturally."

Despite her triumph, the protective Gershwin brothers made Frankie return home with them that summer, but not before she met Leopold Godowsky Jr., the son of the famed concert pianist.

The younger Godowsky, an accomplished violinist, was the co-inventor of the Kodachrome color photography process. He and Frankie were married in 1930, and thoughts of a career in show business slipped away.

But music and then art and sculpture became an important part of her life.

"I took up painting because I loved working with color," said Mrs. Godowsky. "I had to have an outlet. I just wasn't a bridge player or up to having lunches with women."

Museum of the Southwest to show summer film festival

The Museum of the Southwest is offering three film festivals this summer — one for children and two for adults.

The children's festival includes "Bambi," Wednesday; "Winnie the Pooh," June 15; "Robin Hood," June 22; and "Cinderella," June 29. Each will be shown at 2 p.m. at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

The first festival for adults, "Suspense and Intrigue," begins Thursday at 7:30 p.m. with the 1952 release "Five Fingers," starring James Mason as one of the most famous spies in history who must elude the police in three countries when the Germans began to doubt the authenticity of his information.

The festival continues June 16 at 7:30 p.m. with the 1966 release "The Spy Who Came in From the Cold," written by John Le Carre, starring Richard Burton as a British intelligence agent.

The last two films are on June 23 with the 1951 release "The Big Carnival," starring Kirk Douglas as a New York reporter who deliberately delays rescue operations for a man trapped in a New Mexico cave so that his newspaper will gain national recognition; and on June 30 with the 1975 release "Picnic at Hanging Rock," directed by Australian Peter Weir.

All films will be shown at 7:30 p.m. at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

The final festival, "Musical Delights," begins July 14 with the 1945 release "State Fair" by Rogers and Hammerstein. The rest of the series includes the 1945 release "A Star is Born," July 21; the 1955 release "Daddy Longlegs," July 28; and the 1945 release "Top Hat," Aug. 4. This festival also begins at 7:30 p.m., but it will be held at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Suggested donation for any film in the three series is $1. For more information call the museum, 683-2882.

Graves: I'm not old 'iron-pants'

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Peter Graves has this problem. Every time he hosts some charity event or other, there's always somebody who thinks he has an original way of introducing him.

"They'll want to play this tape that someone did...'Good Evening, Mr. Phelps. Your mission tonight is to raise $10,000 for the Kiwanis Club,' or something like that. And each guy is convinced that he's the first one who ever thought of it."

Graves laughs. He doesn't really mind, of course. After all, that famous opening for "Mission: Impossible" is an instantly recognizable piece of television history throughout the world and helped catapult him to stardom.

In fact, "Mission: Impossible" has been seen in more than 90 countries around the world, by his estimate, and has been translated into dozens of languages.

That has resulted in a few surprises for both Graves and fans of the popular series which ran from 1966 to 1973. While the show looks the same on television screens in every country, the voices are dubbed and this can lead to some confusion.

"I went on a live talk show in Tokyo," the 57-year-old Graves recalls, "and as soon as I started talking, I got funny looks from the live audience. They knew my face from 'Mission,' but the voice has always been dubbed by an actor in Japan."

And then there was the time the imposing 6-foot-3 Graves met the man who did his voice in Greek. "He was 5-foot-6 and bald," he says, shaking his head.

Yet, there are advantages.

"I get great service in restaurants and airlines," he quips. "It's wonderful. You show me an actor who doesn't want to be recognized and I'll show you something strange. That's a motion picture actor's applause. It's just great to be someplace on the other side of the world and have somebody say, 'I saw your work and I thought it was very good.'"

Until recently, however, many people thought of Graves as, well, a bit wooden.

"I'm not an old iron-pants," retorts the silver-haired actor. "But I guess you would have to say that has been the most notable trait of the characters I've played. It's been an image I've had on the screen."

While he isn't about to admit that the serious, take-charge characters he has portrayed throughout his enormously successful 33-year career reflect his own personality, he doesn't quite rule it out either. "I guess you'd have to ask my kids about that," he jokes.

Maybe he has been stereotyped into certain kinds of roles, Graves says.

"If you're good at something and you are offered a job doing that, you go ahead and do it. It's work. I'm not independently wealthy; you have to work in this business."

But there have been changes of late. True, earlier this year he appeared in televison's "Winds of War" mini-series as an atomic scientist, but he also had the added touch of a love interest in Polly Bergen. His performance in "Airplane" a couple of years ago showed his comic sense (his question of a small boy, "Have you ever seen a grown man naked?" is now part of movie lore).

Suddenly people realized that he did not take himself so seriously. He continued that tack with "Airplane II: The Sequel," in which he played the pilot of a trouble-ridden lunar shuttle.

Still, he remains one of the most credible men in America thanks to his television roles, and in that guise he narrates "Discover: The World of Science," a series of one-hour specials.

Odessa Cultural Council to sponsor Artreach IV

ODESSA — Odessa Cultural Council, in conjunction with Texas Commission on the Arts, is sponsoring a June 20 workshop here.

The workshop deals with how to select qualified board members for non-profit organizations, how to designate responsibilities, establish organizational goals and insure effective communication between staff and board members.

Artreach IV is the fourth is a series of TCA workshops designed to strengthen the administrative skills of arts organizations. TCA representative Frances Poteet will lead the one-day workshop and will be assisted by Grace King, assistant to the president of W.D. Noel Oil Company, and former president of Texas Assembly of Arts Council Board.

The workshop lasts from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and requires a $15 registration fee. Attendance is limited to the first 30 registrants.

Director makes hit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Bob Balaban, hoping to get a directing assignment, spent $2,000 on a 12-minute film to demonstrate his ability.

He hasn't gotten a job as a director yet but his movie, "SPFX 1140," has become something of a minor hit.

'Psycho II' brings back original survivors

Martin has two brains in latest flick

A Review

As the tale unravels and backtracks to set up the present for anyone who missed "Psycho," there are only hints at what happened. What we get is basically that Norman lost his sanity over a demanding and relentless mother, causing him to commit murder. Actually, the original story is that Norman lost his sanity over the murder of his mother and her lover, causing Norman to develop the psychosis which led to his murder of Marion Crane.

To tell any more about "Psycho II" is to tell too much since this plot, crafted by Tom Holland, is based upon the original. But suffice it to say, "Psycho II" picks up the thread of Norman Bates' life 22 years later when he would like to forget what happened but others can't.

THERE IS AN effort to use the techniques for which Hitchcock was known — camera angles askew and from above, fast cutting of murder scenes and a shrieking orchestra of strings to heighten the moment of terror. "Psycho II" works well as long as the creators (direction by Richard Franklin) stay with the formula. But roughly halfway through "Psycho II," the method gives way to the modern, more graphic technique of blood tales, showing gashed bodies and gory artifacts — only this time in color.

Nevertheless, "Psycho II" is worth seeing for Anthony Perkins alone. He steps so gingerly along that tenuous thread of a line between clinical sanity and insanity that when the actions of other characters are so obviously demented, we still suspect him.

Twenty-two years ago the sleepy California town of Fairville was rocked by the multiple stabbing murder of Marion Crane, an attractive young secretary from Phoenix, Ariz. Attacked by a crazed young man, Norman Bates, her body was pierced 14 times by the savage edge of a common kitchen knife as she stood defenseless and exposed in her shower.

The resultant furor would forever alter that one-cafe town and the bathing habits of millions of impressionable moviegoers because that scene — too horrible to imagine in 1960 — was played out across the movie screens of America in Alfred Hitchcock's horror thriller, "Psycho."

Shot in black and white because Hitchcock feared the shower scene would be too brutal for viewers, the movie actually used chocolate sauce for blood and both stars had doubles for the scene, but it was the final product that redefined the horror movie genre.

Now, "Psycho II" brings back some of the survivors of that house on the hill and carries on the tradition of "slash and splatter."

ANTHONY PERKINS returns as the rehabilitated Norman Bates and Vera Miles as Lila Crane Loomis, Marion's sister. Actress Meg Tilly (who apparently is supposed to resemble her father, Sam Loomis, played in "Psycho" by John Gavin) is Lila's daughter.

Missing, of course, is the master himself, Hitchcock — who appeared in the original as he did in many of his films — John McIntire as the sheriff, Martin Balsam as the private eye, and Gavin. And though we are reminded in the opening scene of "Psycho II" of what happened before — as we are curiously shown the infamous shower scene — there is more missing than just the original actors and director in this sequel.

Rated R, "Psycho II" is not the frightening film the original was. It may be a matter of audience sophistication, our increased exposure to violence through the media, or it may be as simple as leaving nothing to the imagination.

"THE MAN WITH Two Brains," Steve Martin's latest movie, is a half-baked comedy about a brain surgeon who has developed a revolutionary surgical technique. It is called the "screw-top" method and allows the surgeon to enter the brain, repair the damage and replace the top of the head with a specially fitted and coiffed prosthesis. It also comes with a child-proof feature — push in and turn to remove the top of the skull.

Martin, who co-wrote "The Man With Two Brains" with Carl Reiner, uses his approach to brain surgery on Kathleen Turner ("Body Heat") after he accidentally runs her down with his car. What follows is her brazen attempt to seduce Martin with promised favors that she seldom delivers and she succeeds. They marry and go off to Vienna for a honeymoon.

There, Martin meets a scientist who claims he can keep brains alive for extended periods of time. But there is a catch — the brains must come from bodies that have been killed with an injection of window washing liquid. Luckily, there is a madman roaming the city streets who is conveniently killing people in just that way.

He decides to take the brain out boating on a lake and through the facility of telepathy gets her permission to afix artificial lips to the glass jar her brain is in so that they may kiss.

But this kind of love is fragile and Martin is forced to find a body for the brain before it dies. What happens makes for a few more laughs before "The Man With Two Brains" shows that two brains aren't always better than one.

In fact, what Martin and Reiner have here is a nonsense premise with occasional funny lines, a few sight gags, and the tremendous effort of Kathleen Turner who spoofs her "Body Heat" role of the sensuous villainess.

Rated R, "The Man With Two Brains" lacks the slick style and pacing of "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid" and earns its rating with a preoccupation of the nude female form.

Summer Mummer girls tryouts will be held

Tryouts for the Summer Mummers' Summertime Girls will be held at 3 p.m. June 12 at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

Twenty-one to 28 young women will be chosen to introduce Summer Mummers, assist in seating guests at the Yucca and sell hats, flags and other novelties.

During tryouts auditioners will be expected to read the Mummers' introduction number, to show the ability to be heard in a theater production and to demonstrate a desire to work with people and convey the spirit of fun that is a part of Mummers.

Although this summer's production, "Ripsnorting on the Roaring Fork," will run every Thursday, Friday and Saturday from July 1 to Sept. 3, Summertime Girls will have an alternating schedule and work every third or fourth performance.

Rock musician faces sentence

DALLAS (AP) — Rock musician David Crosby will be sentenced July 15 for possessing cocaine and illegally carrying a loaded gun into a Dallas nightclub.

Crosby was convicted of the two felonies Friday by State District Judge Pat McDowell.

The 41-year-old singer faces a maximum penalty of 30 years in prison and fines up to $15,000. Defense attorney Jay Ethington asked the judge to put Crosby on probation.

Crosby, who gained popularity as a member of the Crosby, Stills and Nash group, was arrested three times last year, twice on drug and weapons charges. He is serving three years' probation for a misdemeanor California conviction for reckless driving.

presents

"Stress Control"

"The Parent, The Child, and The School"

The two part seminar on Stress Control will be offered 1:30 p.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays, June 18 and June 25.

The seminar on stress control is designed to help people identify the signs and symptoms of stress, reactions to stress, stress-inducing situations, and to describe specific ways to prevent and/or deal with stress. The seminar leaders will be Dr. Joel Greenspoon and Dr. James Olson. Dr. Greenspoon is director of the Center for Behavioral Analysis and professor of psychology at UT Permian Basin. Dr. Olson is chairman of the department of psychology at UT Permian Basin and an associate psychologist for the Center for Behavioral Analysis.

A registration form is included below for your convenience in pre-registering. Interested persons are encouraged to mail the registration form and fees, although one may register at the door June 18.

The two part seminar on The Parent, The Child, and The School will be offered from 9 a.m. to 12 noon Saturdays on June 18 and June 25.

This seminar will emphasize the application of principles of psychology to the problems of the child in the school situation. The seminar leader will be Dr. Robert Rothstein, education consultant for the Center of Behavioral Analysis. He will describe the various principles and their method of application to these school-related problems.

Both seminars require attendance on both dates to provide the maximum benefit to the registrant. The total registration fee for each seminar is $50. Persons may register for both seminars. The seminars will be held at the Founder's Building on the south campus of UT Permian Basin. Direction signs will be posted.

area in brief

Archaeological project open

LUBBOCK — Lubbock Lake archaeological project at the northwest edge of Lubbock has opened for public summer tours.

Trained guides will explain research activity.

Free tours for individuals and groups are available from 9 a.m. to noon each Saturday through July 16. Groups can make arrangements by calling Pat Northington at 742-2479 or 762-9773.

Lubbock Lake National and State Landmark is considered a foremost archaeological site in North America. Findings have included cultural evidence and animal remains from the Clovis Man era of 12,000 years ago.

Security program planned

MIDKIFF — A rural crime prevention program will be held at 8 p.m. Friday at Midkiff Community Center, sponsored by Upton County Porgram Building Committee and Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

A film entitled "Home Security Survey" will be shown and Midland law officials will provide information on rural crime prevention.

Disaster loan deadline nears

LUBBOCK — Several area counties declared as disaster areas have until June 23 to file for Economic Injury Disaster Loans from the U.S. Small Business Administration.

They include Andrews, Howard, Midland and Reagan.

They were declared disaster areas Sept. 23, 1982.

School plans balancing act

BIG SPRING — Three new programs have been initiated by Bauer Magnet School to balance the school's ethnic count, according to Harold Bently, Big Spring Independent School District assistant superintendent.

An extended-day program will allow students to remain at Bauer after the regular school day ends until 5 p.m. It includes swimming, gymnastics, art, music, woodworking, sign language and tutoring classes.

Signal will be a gifted and talented program for fourth and fifth grade students.

According to a recent school board report, the school should have a 44 percent Anglo enrollment and 56 percent minority.

Events will include the Miss Deaf Texas pageant at 6:30 p.m. June 25. Tickets are $8 per person.

Big Spring sets rodeo, reunion

BIG SPRING — Rodeo Gold, the 50th annual Big Spring cowboy reunion's rodeo, will be held June 22-25.

Advance tickets at a discount are available through June 24 at Big Spring and Highland malls. Regular admission tickets will be $4 for adults and $2 for children.

Other events will include an old time fiddlers contest and arts and crafts fair.

Park's summer hours listed

PINE SPRINGS — Guadalupe Mountains National Park has set summer hours.

Opening time for the Frijole Ranger Station has been moved up an hour to 7 a.m. MDT.

McKittrick Canyon entrance gate will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

He's not 'Judge Roy' Beane, but he is Crane's constable

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

CRANE — He came to Crane in the year of its birth, saw its residents create a county, witnessed the transformation of an oil boom town into a peaceful hamlet.

He's E.N. "Beanie" Beane, the affable 75-year-old Crane constable, amateur historian and sometime lecturer.

"It was pretty wild," he said of the city's early years during which he once saw gamblers severely pistol-whip a man. "They had red light districts, gambling houses. People always asked me to write a book about Crane. I told them I'd like to, but I couldn't, in order to protect the living. They said, 'Who's the living?' I said, 'ME!' "

Beane was born Aug. 10, 1907, in a tent along the far reaches of the Permian Basin in Portales, N.M. But by age three weeks he already was out in the world — headed for Oklahoma via covered wagon. He returned to Texas in 1919 and moved in 1920 to Colorado City, where much of his boyhood was spent. But it was in the fields of Midland County four years later that he witnessed an event which remains clear in his mind six decades later.

"They had red light districts, gambling houses. People always asked me to write a book about Crane. I told them I'd like to, but I couldn't, in order to protect the living. They said, 'Who's the living?' I said, 'ME!' "

— E.N. Beane

HIS FATHER had purchased a farm 3½ miles south of present Midland Regional Airport. "We had a good crop, but jackrabbits just cut it off with their teeth," recalled Beane. "So Dad said, 'Son, there's not but one thing for you to do, and that's for you to get your saddle horse and your Winchester pump rifle and kill those things.' "

Beane proceeded to do just that. He rode the quarter section day after day, emptying box after box of shells in a never-ending war with the pests.

"One morning, instead of saddling up my horse, I decided that I would just take my rifle and walk it. It was a beautiful morning, damp, and no noise — you could hear. I had walked off from our home...about a quarter mile, maybe a little further, and I heard an eerie sound. Oh, it was pitiful. It was just ear-piercing. I can still hear it today. It would quit, and then it would come back on for just a short time.

"I followed the sound to its source, and when I got up there, there was a rattlesnake some 3½ feet long and he was pointed away from me. There was a little cottontail rabbit out in front of him, I'd say seven, eight, 10 feet. How far it was when it started, I do not know. The rabbit was real small, maybe a fourth grown, maybe two or three weeks old.

"EVERY TIME this little rabbit would make that eerie sound, he'd hop about two or three hops toward the snake. That went on for some time, and I stood there. He got up to the snake, and the snake opened his mouth and the little rabbit stuck his head in. When he did that I took my rifle and shot the snake behind the neck, to be sure and not hit the little rabbit. I got the little rabbit out — he didn't get hurt — and turned him loose."

Beane said he has never heard of another person in West Texas witnessing such an occurrence. "If someone tells you that snakes don't charm, they do — I saw it," he said.

Beane likely never would have made it to Crane had it not been for a "worn-out" Harley Davidson motorcycle. In 1926 he got tired of farming and decided to head for Santa Rita, N.M., hoping to gain employment in a machine shop there. He never made it. Between Snyder and Lamesa the cycle burst a piston, and he had to take refuge with a brother in Lamesa.

"I was too broke to go to New Mexico so I headed for McCamey and went to work for an uncle and a friend in a grocery store in October 1926," he recalled. On Feb. 13, 1927, the then-new town of Crane beckoned with its promise of a job in a second grocery store.

"I CAME OUT here on a grocery truck. Business just started booming. They started moving in rigs and McCamey started slowing down. So my uncle sent word to the manager, 'Tell that kid just to stay up there.' Well, I took 'em at their word, I will have been here 57 years if I don't get run out of town."

Beane found indoor work too confining, so he opted for sunshine and spent the next several decades in such jobs as an engineer at a power plant, mail carrier, production foreman and Gulf pipeline employee. "I did everything except work for the bakery, and (they) were afraid I'd eat too much if I worked there," he quipped.

Beane, now widowed, met his future wife in Crane in March 1927. The following July he married her in one of the first weddings in the area. "We were the first couple that met here and married and stayed," he said. "We never had a home any farther than seven miles from town."

While still employed with Gulf in 1968, Beane was elected constable, a post he has not relinquished since. He spends his spare time dabbling with recording equipment and reminiscing about the good old days.

He still smiles in recollection of an event involving his late wife, who was an avid football fan.

During a Monday night football game, her favorite quarterback was not faring too well, so she began suggesting to Beane the plays he should call. After they retired for the night, Beane was awakened at 2 a.m. by his wife talking in her sleep.

"I sat up in bed and she was calling signals," he recalled. "She said something like, '59! 61! 63! 66!' and then she said, 'Hut, hut!' She let go when she delivered a bomb into the end zone. Her arm came around and hit me in the face and put me back on my pillow. After I had regained my wits — what few I had left — and she was wide awake, I asked her if she had completed the pass. She said she did not know, but the ball was right on target and she had a receiver in the end zone all alone."

Regional planning board to discuss crime prevention plan, subdivision

Funding applications for crime prevention units and an application for an environmental review of a proposed subdivision will be considered by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission board of directors during its monthly meeting Wednesday.

The city of Big Spring and the Ector County Sheriff's Department are both seeking funding from the state for crime prevention units, officers who will provide information to citizens on ways to better aid crime prevention.

Big Spring is applying for $27,401 and Ector County is seeking $35,599, both to be matched with local funds.

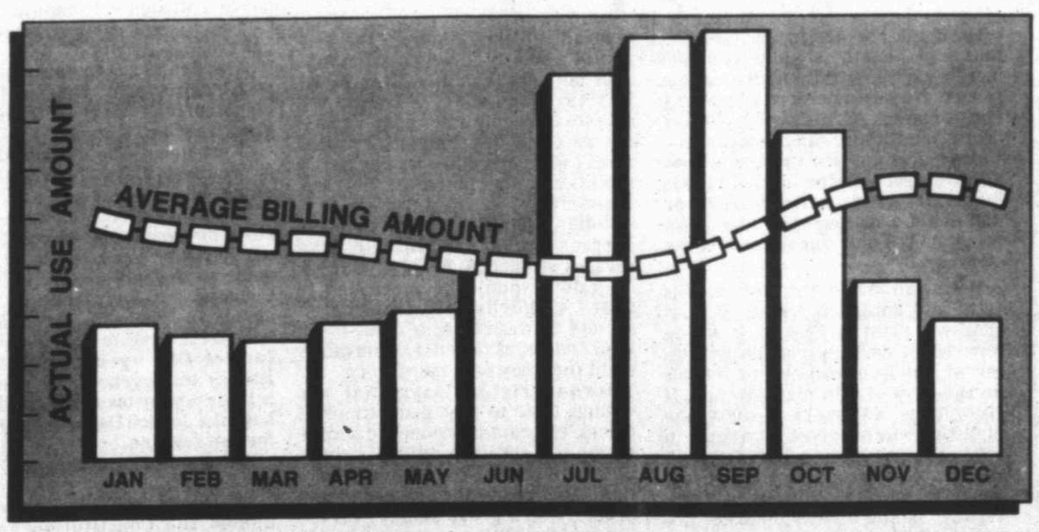
Dovecote, Inc. of Odessa is making application to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development for an environmental review of the proposed Longview Estates subdivision in northwest Midland County.

The proposed subdivision includes a total of 558 lots on almost 232 acres of land four miles north of Midland Regional Airport. A plat of the subdivision, primarily designed for mobile homes, has been approved by the city of Midland and Midland County.

Dovecote is seeking HUD approval for the subdivision so they can provide prospective buyers with an additional source of financing.

In other action, the board will consider appointing a committee responsible for the nominating process called for under the Job Training Partnership Act. The committee will be chaired by PBRPC Chairman W.O. "Bill" Pigman.

Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills.



In the summer, intense Texas heat can make your air conditioner work longer and drive your electric bill up in a hurry.

Our Average Billing Plan can help by "averaging out" your payments. You still pay for all the electricity you use, and your payments will still vary from month to month. However, in high-use months you pay for less electricity than you use, and in low-use months you pay for more.

Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills. It's available to both residential customers and churches. If you'd like to know more, give us a call at Texas Electric.

Call it, governor!

There seems to be a definite difference of opinion over whether a special session of the Legislature should be called this summer. Most of that difference, though, is political posturing because the question of whether the session's needed is answered by the number of unresolved issues.

A number of legislators contend the session should be called. When the regular session ended Monday, legislators still had not resolved a brucellosis control bill that has already resulted in at least one state prohibiting the import of Texas cattle and the federal government attempting to quarantine Texas cattle. Another major issue — a statewide water plan — died in the final hours because of an environmental debate, but definitely deserves immediate legislative attention. Furthermore, the Texas Employment Commission will come to an end without action by the Legislature to keep it alive and the teacher pay question is still up in the air.

But Gov. Mark White says he's not going to call a special session until he knows the Legislature is prepared to take action on these and possibly other issues. The governor is being diplomatic and playing his cards to fullest advantage. He knows full well that a special session is needed this year just as it has been in years past when legislators have failed to act quickly enough. More likely than not the session will be called.

Call them back to Austin, governor. The state's business is more important than vacation plans. As we noted just the other day, Texas' business has become a little too voluminous and complex to be handled in one 140-day session every two years. Special sessions now are virtually standard operating procedure.

Call them back, but wouldn't it be less complicated to amend the constitution to keep the legislators in Austin longer?

Doing what he said

The new director of the Environmental Protection Agency, William Ruckelshaus, meant what he said when he announced that the agency should operate "in a fishbowl." His first move after confirmation by the Senate was to implement that announcement.

— He cautioned his colleagues about the dangers of discussing pending legislation with companies except through EPA lawyers.

— Although he is not about to monitor their every move, he wants officials to go public with whatever relations they have with private interest groups.

— To cap this "fishbowl" atmosphere, he wants the public to be able to look over his shoulder and those of his aides and see everything they put down on their weekly appointment calendars.

These requests are radical departures from general practices in most federal government agencies, and no one knows to what extent they will succeed. But what they tell the nation is that William Ruckelshaus is aware of past EPA troubles, believes in a "fishbowl" policy as a remedy and has the courage to pursue that conviction.

We think it's a good way to rebuild the agency.

Another View:

Rights in quicksand

The Supreme Court of the United States legitimized bureaucratic arrogance in its 8-1 ruling that the Internal Revenue Service has authority to withhold tax-exemption status for racially discriminatory private schools.

A public policy issue of such magnitude is properly a legislative matter which should be determined by Congress, not by government employees in the federal tax collection agency.

The high court's ruling could open the gates of unrestrained, irresponsible bureaucratic ambition to a degree that could threaten large areas of individual and collective freedom.

The past two decades have seen flagrant abuses of freedom by non-elected federal officials in a variety of supposed "rights" cases in which the end result was not the protection but the trampling of rights.

The Supreme Court's decision also paves the way for an immense new layer of bureaucracy with what amounts to open-ended authority to intrude into every conceivable phase of the operation of the private schools attended by more than 8 million students.

The consequent abuses of human rights at the hands of overzealous bureaucrats could dwarf the issue of racial discrimination in private schools in the sheer scope of the number of pupils, teachers, administrators and institutions involved.

The obvious danger, which should have been clear to the eight members of the court that made this ill-advised decision, is that bureaucrats, in the absence of strong, sharp, explicit legislative limits on their authority, all too often act as though their authority had no limits.

In the case under consideration, the IRS arrogated law-making power to itself in its public policy action against the schools. The Constitution, as the justices know and ought to acknowledge, gives the legislative power to Congress.

The reason for giving the legislative power to Congress is also self-evident. The members of Congress are elected by the people and accountable to the people.

The bureaucrats of the IRS are elected by no one. They certainly are not accountable to the people because they cannot be voted out of office. Their policy deliberations, in contrast to the open public debate in Congress on policy issues, are virtually made in secret.

The Supreme Court since the Warren era has demonstrated a keen readiness to enact items in the so-called liberal agenda which should be dealt with, if they are to be dealt with at all, by legislation.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger in his opinion in this case left no doubt that he believed the end justified the means. That concept is where the danger lies. Closed-door or secret non-legislative, non-accountable bureaucratic government actions far more often work toward undemocratic, corrupt, evil, liberty-destroying ends than toward good ones.

The court, under the impression that it was protecting rights, has led rights into quicksand.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Fiesty Afghans counter Soviets

WASHINGTON — The sketchy few reports the American public gets from Afghanistan are often contradictory: The Soviets are winning, or the Soviets are losing; Afghan morale is crumbling, or Afghan resistance is spreading.

Jack Anderson

But what is President Reagan being told about the situation — the same confusing jumble of speculation, third-hand gossip and politically-inspired propaganda? Hardly.

From spy-satellite surveillance around the clock, human intelligence agents operating inside Afghanistan and reports by professional analysts in our embassies in the area, Ronald Reagan has access to the best information available this side of the Kremlin.

"The situation... can be best described as a standoff," one summary concludes, "with parameters defined by the inability of the Mujahideen to force the Soviets out of Afghanistan and Moscow's failure to crush the resistance... Soviet mastery over the Afghan people must still be considered as a very long-term proposition indeed."

Within the limits of this overall stalemate, however, it is clear that the doughty Afghan tribesmen — whose ancestors fought off invaders from Alexander the Great to the British Raj — have managed to raise some welts on the hide of the Russian bear. How much punishment the Soviets will find acceptable is known only to the coldblooded chess players in the Kremlin, but the increasing savagery of Soviet military operations suggests that the guerrillas are hurting the invaders.

The rebel forces have even succeeded in carrying the unequal contest into the heavily guarded streets of the capital city. From last November to March, "the Afghan resistance was more active in and around Kabul than in any of the three preceding winters of the Afghan-Soviet war," according to a recent cable, which added:

"The Mujahideen brought the war into the heart of the city this winter."

Here are some highlights of resistance activities culled from recent intelligence reports:

— There have been numerous attacks on Soviet military and civilian installations. It is not safe for a Russian soldier to walk the streets of an Afghan city alone after dark. In Kabul, the Soviet Embassy has been repeatedly peppered with small-arms fire and occasional rocket attacks at night.

— The compounds where Soviet and Eastern European embassy personnel live have been attacked, and U.S. intelligence experts suspect that casualties have been heavy. In January, residents of the Soviets' Microrayon housing complex were terrorized by an hour-long mortar attack and subsequent raking by rockets and machine guns.

— In late April, during the celebration marking the fifth anniversary of the coup that installed a pro-Soviet regime, two major attacks on Microrayon occurred, "killing a still undetermined number of people." The brightly lighted, isolated housing complex, which the Soviets built, is the target of widespread resentment by Kabul's oppressed citizenry as well as rebel weapons.

— The past few weeks have seen a dramatic increase in assassinations of individual Russians, members of the puppet regime and its supporters, and anyone suspected of cooperating with the brutal, Soviet-created secret police, the KHAD. "The number of assassinations in Kabul," according to one cable, "rose during the period of the coup anniversary celebrations.... The regime's secret police counted 30 such killings during an unspecified period of a few days surrounding the holiday." In one incident, an Afghan officer in full uniform was gunned down a few blocks from the Soviet Embassy.

— The guerrillas have frequently succeeded in blacking out large areas of Kabul by sabotaging power plants and lines outside the capital. The repeated power failures have evidently sapped Soviet morale.

One recent blackout "darkened much of the city, including the normally sacrosanct prime ministry and secret police headquarters," one cable reports. "Right after the lights went out, shouting soldiers moved out into the streets, even threatening a diplomat trying to drive home.... The almost hysterical reaction of the regime's troops suggest they believe reports that a large number of armed Mujahideen have found their way into the city and are awaiting an opportune time to make their presence known."

One report said "it is difficult to see how the Soviets can counter the resistance's ability to lay siege to Kabul."

This frustration has, understandably, had its effects on the communist regime's morale. "We hear tales of growing discouragement and defeatism," a cable notes, citing sources close to the regime, "and a spreading sense in the regime that events are slipping out of control."

Sifting all these signs of growing problems, the State Department's analysts have concluded that time is on the side of the Afghan tribesmen. Though the situation is militarily a stalemate, the Afghans have shown they can withstand the worst the Soviets could throw at them for three-and-a-half years. Like the Greeks, Persians, Mongols, British and other "conquerors" through the ages, the Russians may soon decide that the Afghans are just too tough to chew up and swallow.

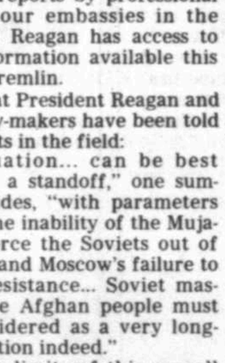
GEORGE F. WILL

Racism doesn't justify prejudice

WASHINGTON — Consider Vernon Jordan's cab criterion. Jordan says: Put Brad Reynolds on one street corner and me on the other. Let us both hail a cab, and see at which corner the cab stops. Jordan is black; Reynolds, assistant attorney general for civil rights, is white; and Jordan is right: Racism remains. He is wrong in arguing that this justifies government policies preferring one race.



George F. Will

Jordan recently attacked Reynolds for a speech in which Reynolds praised the principle that was until recently the cardinal tenet of the civil-rights movement: the principle that the use of race to justify treating individuals differently can never be legitimate. Jordan called the administration in which Reynolds serves hostile "to black people and to the very concept of a decent society."

Well. In 1896, the Supreme Court held that Mr. Plessy, who was one-eighth black, could be excluded by law from "white" railroad carriages. Justice John M. Harlan dissented: "Our Constitution is color blind....The law...takes no account of...color." In 1954, Thurgood Marshall, the NAACP's lawyer in the school cases, said that all anyone could reasonably want is that "children be assigned a school without regard to race or color." In debate about the 1964 Civil Rights Act, Hubert Humphrey said the act "would prohibit preferential treatment for any particular group."

Until the late 1960s, Harlan's dissent expressed the civil-rights movement's aspiration. Then that movement began seeking racial entitlements. As Alexander Bickel wrote, suddenly Americans were supposed to unlearn the lesson that discrimination on the basis of race is inherently wrong, and to learn "that this is not a matter of fundamental principle but only a matter of whose ox is gored."

If Harlan was right, Reynolds is right and Jordan is wrong. If Marshall was right in 1954, he is wrong now when he supports forced busing of children assigned to schools on the basis of skin pigmentation. If Humphrey was right in 1964, the civil-rights movement is wrong in 1983. For associating himself with Harlan, Marshall and Humphrey, Reynolds is called a racist. But the ferocity of the attacks does not disguise the apostasy of the attackers, or drown out this insistent question: By what criteria will those who now oppose a color-blind legal code say the nation is ready for such a code?

Jordan says that because America has discriminated against blacks, it needs a "temporary period" of "positive discrimination" favoring blacks. But the period will be perpetual. Jordan says the law cannot be racially neutral until "society" is neutral. And proof of society's neutrality will be — what? Inevitably the criterion will be equality of attainment.

The NAACP's Benjamin Hooks cites the paucity of blacks on corporate boards and in university presidencies and says reverse discrimination will be needed until America "begins to treat all of its citizens alike." Inevitably, equal outcomes will be considered the only proof of equal "treatment."

Jordan says: "Color blindness makes sense in a context of a society that has already dismantled its structures of discrimination. Racial neutrality makes sense in the context of a society in which advantage does not accrue to any given race." But the fact that "advantage" accrues unevenly among the races is not proof of discriminatory "structures," and certainly does not justify intentional discrimination by race-based laws.

Policy certainly should strive to overcome what Jordan calls "the ravages of unequal history." But not all values should be sacrificed to that. A thoroughly integrated society is desirable; a color-blind legal code is, as the civil-rights movement formerly said, mandatory.

Jordan rightly says that the wrongs done to past generations of blacks by state-sanctioned discrimination was directed against a caste, not individuals. He wrongly says that that means the "remedy" can properly be a group remedy involving racial entitlements for persons who are not victims of such discrimination and injuring whites who are not guilty of discrimination. The fact that a contemporary injury to whites may be symmetrical with a past injury to blacks does not dignify the injurious policy as a "remedy."

Jordan says racial preference for blacks does not cause "undue hardship" for the white majority. That is true in the sense that the injury is done to a relatively few individuals. But what is irredeemably pernicious about racially based government action is precisely that it teaches disregard for individuals, and teaches the doctrine that rights do not inhere in individuals but derive from race membership.

To my friend Vernon Jordan, I ask: Do policies that legitimize racial thinking, that taint black achievements and stigmatize blacks as wards of the state, in perpetuity, hasten the day when cab drivers will be color blind?

ART BUCHWALD

Correct answer yes ... and no!

"I saw your advertisement in the Sunday newspaper and I wish to join the CIA."

"We're happy to have you. Please repeat after me, 'I swear to uphold the Constitution, and all the laws of the land.'"

"I do."

Art Buchwald

"Why?"

"Because sometimes in the agency it's impossible to uphold all the laws of the land and still do the mission."

"Then why did you make me take the oath?"

"Just to test you to see if you had what it takes to be a member of the 'company.'"

"Give me another chance. I'd be willing to say no to the oath in a shot."

"How do you feel about congressional watchdog committees who are always prying into our covert affairs?"

"I guess in a democracy they're a necessary evil."

"You can leave now. We don't think we have an opening."

"That wasn't the answer you wanted?"

"Covert activities are too serious to be left to the politicians."

"I agree 100 percent, sir. Congressmen and senators should stop prying in what we're up to."

"What do you mean 'we'?"

"I just meant 'we' in case you changed your mind and gave me the job. I assure you, sir, if I become a member of the 'company' I'll lie to Congress through my teeth."

"The agency doesn't OFFICIALLY approve of lying."

"Neither does my mother. But I lie to her all the time."

"That's a good answer. Maybe you have the makings of a CIA agent after all. As you know we have two functions here. One is to gather intelligence and information from all over the world, and the other is to instigate covert operations to destabilize governments that threaten our national security. Which branch would you prefer to work for?"

"I'd like to get into covert operations. I've always wanted to see Nicaragua."

"How do you know we're in Nicaragua?"

"The president said we are, and he's real mad that the Senate will only let us stay there until September."

"That information happens to be classified."

"I read it in The Washington Post."

"If you work for us everything you read in The Washington Post is classified. Is that understood?"

"Yes, sir. I'll shred it every morning after I read it."

"Let's say we sent you to Nicaragua, and we weren't able to destabilize the Sandinista government by September. What would you do?"

"Come back to Langley."

"No you wouldn't. You would become a member of the U.S. Agricultural Mission in Honduras."

"I don't know anything about agriculture."

"You don't have to know anything about agriculture. Your job would be to smuggle arms to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters."

"I get it, sir. The agriculture title is my cover. Boy, whoever thought of that one is a genius."

"Now sooner or later some smart-aleck newspaperman is going to get wind of what you're up to, at which point we're going to have to deny to Congress any knowledge of having agents in Nicaragua after September. We'll have to say you were a former CIA agent who left the agency in disgrace and you were acting on your own. We might even have the Justice Department try you for gun-running."

"It sounds like a neat job. When can I start?"

"As soon as you take your oath to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the land. By the way, when I give it to you the answer is, 'Yes and no.'"

"What do you mean, 'Yes and no?'"

"Yes for your personnel files, which Congress has access to, and no to assure the people you will be working for."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history: On June 5, 1968, Sen. Robert Kennedy was shot in Los Angeles after claiming victory in the California presidential primary. He died the next day.

In 1917, more than 9 million American men registered for the draft in World War I.

In 1940, the Battle of France began during World War II.

Who's who — and where — in Central America?

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — A somber report was circulated by our government the other day about Cuba fomenting subversion in Central America. This has been a comradely plan, synchronized between the Soviet Union and its top surrogate in the Caribbean, Fidel Castro. It was begun four years ago when Yuri Andropov directed the KGB which runs Castroite secret services in Havana.

By this time many of us are aware that Castro has been paying for Soviet aid with Cuban legions he assigned abroad to Africa and the Middle East. The casualties the Cubans suffered in foreign fields doing service for a foreign master are considerable.

More importantly for the average American here at home is what Castro is doing in Central America, closer to him and closer to us but 6,000 miles or so from the U.S.S.R. Castro and Co. managed to seize the fruits of a revolt from folks of all classes in Nicaragua. In turn, these Marxists feed Soviet and Cuban supplies to guerrillas trying to oust a freely-elected government next door in El Salvador.

Then their program is to turn neighboring Honduras inside out and install a communist regime. If it sounds like dominoes, that because, as President Reagan has said, it is dominoes. In the first place, Central America is an isthmus of seven small countries with a population of nearly 23 million, the largest being Guatemala. The biggest prize, after communist conquest of Central America, is Mexico. That's at the end of the line after the others are absorbed.

Losing control of Central America to a militantly hostile anti-U.S. ideology means that we'd have to find other routes via the Caribbean or mount a huge offensive to remove the enemy. As President Reagan reminded us, that sea route accounts for about 50 percent of our trade with the West and imports coming here.

EDITOR'S REPORT

The importance of the region is pointed up daily in the media but the warring factions and their names confuse folks. For years I have known that we paid too little attention to the area, indeed to all of Latin America. To try to sort things out in a primer sense, I consulted my old friend and colleague, Si Freidin.

We both were war correspondents during World War II and Si subsequently roamed Eastern Europe and much of the world. He became foreign editor of the old N.Y. Herald Tribune and subsequently went abroad for The Hearst Newspapers. His travels and studies frequently took him to Central and Latin America. I asked him, therefore, if he'd share some of his understanding with me in terms that you could quickly grasp rather than have our eyes glaze over.

Freidin says that right off the bat we should name the seven countries comprising Central America. Here goes: Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and little Belize with a tiny population of 144,000 which was once British Honduras. All but Belize wrested independence from Spain more than a century ago and frequently fought each other since. A decade ago, for instance, El Salvador and Honduras actually fought a long forgotten "soccer war."

It's not comic opera any more. A dictatorship that refused any real reforms in Nicaragua was overthrown. The revolution was waged by all segments of society against Anastasio Somoza who fled. But Soviet-Cuban chicanery stole the revolution from the people who fought it. The result? A Marxist junta in Nicaragua which has Cuban, North Korean, East bloc and even PLO "advisers" running the country.

The communist Nicaraguan regime has grandly taken over the name "Sandinists," for a national hero of 60-odd years ago. Gen. Augusto Cesar Sandino led insurrectionists during a U.S. Marine occupation. He was, from most accounts, a nationalist. In 1934, after asking his troops to lay down their arms, Sandino left the Presidential Palace and was murdered.

Having betrayed the revolution that ousted Somoza by bringing in Castro and his gang, the new Nicaraguan junta promptly tried to steal popularity by declaring itself named for Sandino. Hence, we have Sandinista. Yet a dogged revolutionary who vows to bring down the regime is leading troops against it. He is known as "Commander Zero" who fought against Somoza and was horrified to see Cubans and East bloc atheist "advisers" infiltrated into Nicaragua.

The Nicaraguan junta has lately been heavily supplied by the Cubans and Russians with arms, more through the first four months of 1983 than all of last year. Weapons are transshipped clandestinely to "guerrillas" next door in El Salvador. The Soviet-Castro blueprint is for overwhelming El Salvador and then to charge into Honduras.

Then we come to the use of the term "guerrilla." These are irregular troops whose origins are in Spain particularly during the Napoleonic campaigns. In Central America, the Cuban-Russian guerrillas are outlaw forces seeking to overthrow an elected government by wearing down its troops and U.S. determination to help.

Should El Salvador go by the boards, then Honduras becomes a sitting duck for communist expansion. Directly to the west, traditionally democratic Costa Rica — which still doesn't have an army — is easy prey. And after Honduras is toppled, Guatemala, sitting adjacent to Mexico and the most populous state in Central America, awaits impalement on the hammer and sickle. As you can see, Nicargua is the focal point on which the Soviet-Castro program operates.

Now let's take a look at what terrorists are up to in trying to force the U.S. out of Puerto Rico. Last week "FALN" terror chief Willie Morales was captured in Mexico after a blazing gun battle. The FALN demands independence from the U.S., which repeatedly has been rejected by a huge majority. Morales led terrorists in New York and Chicago in wanton bomb attacks, one on Fraunces Tavern which killed several diners and maimed many.

Morales made his way to Mexico where he had been in contact with Nicaraguan Communists, agents of the Cuban "DCI" secret service, PLO gunsels and assorted Latin American terrorists on the lam.

There you have it. If you have any questions, write me and I'll ask Si to reply.

Changing adoption policy reflects need

By LAEL CORDES

Lael Cordes, a resident of Midland since October 1980, is regional director for the Permian Basin Office of Lutheran Social Service of Texas. A graduate of the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill and Texas Lutheran College in Sequin, she holds the master's degree in social work.

As our country has moved into the 80s, a nationwide trend occurred which economically, religiously and politically pulled us back to a more conservative perspective on most issues. Contradicting this trend, however, (and the federal cutbacks in funding for social service programming) adoption has moved toward a more open approach to the needs of all clients involved with the adoption process. It is hoped the move toward openness will break past barriers and change some of the myths and negative attitudes concerning adoption.

The movement toward openness in the adoption process has roots with some birthparents of the 50s and 60s who felt a personal need to address their unresolved emotional and mental anxieties related to the relinquishment of a child. Assumptions had often been made that once a woman delivered her baby and relinquished it, her life would resume with normalcy. Little thought was given to any emotions or feelings she might have as a biological parent who gave birth, but did not choose to parent her child.

One excellent and representative resource is a personal account by Sandra Kay Musser. In her book entitled, "I Would Have Searched Forever," she describes her feelings, efforts, and needs related to resolving the relinquishment of a child for adoption in the 50s. A group called Concerned United Birthparents (CUB) is another example of efforts by birthparents to shatter the myths that their babies were unwanted and that they would automatically forget with time.

Also contributing to the trend in openness related to adoption is the fact that many adoptees have long asked questions without response or wanted to search for their biological parents. Doing so, however, has meant facing many difficult obstacles. First, some adoptive parents may have felt threatened by any questions an adopted child might ask. They perhaps assumed the child did not appreciate all they had done to parent them or wrongly looked at their own needs and fears rather than those of the child(ren).

So often a common outlook on adoption is that it is a "happy solution for everyone." While it does indeed provide infertile couples with the children they want, unfortunately, amidst this positive and superficial outlook on adoption, birthmothers and adoptees are looked upon as the resources rather than the adoptive couple being the resource for the birthmother and child who need the help.

A second obstacle has been that many placements before the 1974 Texas state law legalizing agency adoptions were done privately — i.e., through lawyers, clergymen, doctors, and county judges. While this was an excellent and informal means of providing housing for children, in many of the placements, no records were kept of personal rights and needs were ignored.

Today adoption agencies are licensed by the Texas Department of Human Resources and maintain careful records of home studies with adoptive couples and social history and medical backgrounds of birthparents. However, at present, it takes a court order to be allowed to read any of the confidential information included in the files or permission by both parties before information can be shared. (Note: Texas does have a voluntary registry bill which has been approved in the House and is awaiting vote in the Senate. This will make change in the laws in 1984).

Thus, many agencies which are involved in adoptions have begun to take a look at some of the needs voiced by two of their three primary clients. In response, many have begun to include optional practices which increase the communication channels between all members of the adoption triangle: the adoptees, the birthparents, and the adoptive couple.

Lutheran Social Service of Texas in the past decade has included a number of options in its program for birthparents and adoptive parents. For example, birthparents now can — but are not required to — name the child on the original birth certificate, participate in the selection of the adoptive parents and even meet with the adoptive couple at the agency office.

Options extended to adoptive parents include, among others, learning the first names of the birthparents and even meet them at a pre-arranged meeting. They also can obtain a more complete social and medical history on birthfamilies.

These overall recent practices toward openness in adoption have increased the range of responses and actions available to members of the adoption triangle. They have allowed better service relating to the complex demand of human relations and human needs as clients have been allowed to express their hopes, concerns needs and frustrations.

With an open adoption, adoptive parents are exhibiting lack of fear toward the birthparents, a feeling that has typically haunted many adoptive parents. Also, the birthparents appear to more quickly resolve the grief of not being able to parent their child and are expressing healthier acceptance of their child's life away from them.

By opening the doors to communication, the adopted individual more readily has access to the typical questions of "Who do I look like?" "Why was I adopted?" "What did my birthmother look like?" and "Why did they place me for adoption?"

The long term expectation is that the main beneficiary of openness in adoption is the individual in whose best interest the adoption plan was made — the adopted child.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Misunderstood

To The Editor:

In view of the fact that Thomas E. Moses says that he does not understand what he read in the paper and on the outside chance that someone else could not understand what he read in the paper, I should like to answer Moses' questions as much as I can. Of course, since he is a former employee of Midland Memorial Hospital and was in management he knows and I know that this dialogue could have been handled much more expeditiously had he simply called and asked about the matters he did not understand. But since he has chosen this method of communication, I shall attempt to respond by the same method.

As a member of the Planning Committee of the Board of Trustees, I agreed with other members of that committee that we should have some idea of where we are going as a hospital in the future. We should look to 20 or perhaps 30 years down the road as best we can to know if more property will be required or if more buildings should be built on the present location or if, indeed, the present site could accommodate additional expansion over the next 20 or 30 years. After much study and consultations with planners, it was decided by the committee that AS MANY AS 400 beds could be built on the present property IF NEED BE before it would be necessary to look to other properties for any expansion that may be needed in the future. The committee recommended to the trustees and they in turn recommended to the directors that future expansion, IF THE NEED AROSE, be accomplished on the present site until the hospital reaches 400 beds before any other location is considered. Whether this will ever be done is not projected at this time. It is too far in the future and the future too uncertain to project.

As far as other remarks about competition free enterprise and MMH wanting to be the only hospital in Midland, the only concern that the people I serve with on the Board of Trustees is that we are charged by the directors of the district to provide the best medical care for the community at the most reasonable price we can. If we had felt that 110 beds were needed at this time, we would have applied for approval of that number instead of 77. If we had felt that some other hospital operation could have provided better and/or cheaper service to Midland then we would have proposed it.

It simply is not enough to wave the flag of free enterprise and yell "foul" in order to discredit what hundreds of volunteer people are trying to do through the efforts called Midland Memorial Hospital. Most of us who are on the boards or committees or other organizations are deeply entrenched in the free enterprise system in our personal liyes but we know that often times by cooperative efforts of groups like MMH we can do more and better than we can any other way. Sure we have our problems but we are working on it. In the few years that I have been associated with the hospital, I can see improvements in fields where my interest lies and I know that others can see improvements in fields where their interest lie. Space will not allow me to enumerate all the changes for the better that we see. But this does not mean that we cannot stand improvements in many areas and we are working on them.

Thank you for this opportunity to respond to this letter and perhaps to enlighten some who may be wondering what is being planned and done at MMH.

Poor coverage

To The Editor:

I would like to comment on the poor media coverage of the severe weather which occurred Monday night, May 30th in Midland and Odessa.

The television coverage was appalling. KTPX (Channel 9) was completely off the air during the most threatening hour between 6:30 and 7:30 p.m. and KMID (Channel 2) was off part of the time. This left us with KOSA (Channel 7) which broke in with an incoherent, somewhat hysterical report of tornado sightings by the DPS in west Odessa and for everyone to take cover immediately.

J. Gordon Lunn babbled on and on with bits and peices of misinformation (his DPS sighting was corrected to an unconfirmed civilian weather spotter sighting) and no real facts could be ascertained from his report.

During the time KMID was on the air, they twice sounded the emergency warning signal and both times nothing followed. We have all been told by this station during "the test" that should we hear ths signal during an emergency situation we would be given instructions on what to do. We were told nothing following the two emergency warning signals that sounded during this critical hour.

Radio did not seem to provide us with any better information. I could not pick up any reports of the immediate weather conditions. Of course, the lack of radio coverage could be due to the fact that the TV stations had created the threatening scenario by their panic broadcasting and no real danger existed. Although later it was determined that Midland had not come under an immediate threat we were thoroughly confused as to exactly what was happening at the time.

Luckily for Midland and Odessa, no damaging weather resulted from the system that passed through the two cities. All that resulted from this weather was the frightening realization that the media in this area may not be prepared for an emergency situation which requires concise and accurate broadcasting. Midland has been extremely fortunate in the last few years in escaping a natural disaster. Preparation is needed now before our luck runs out.

Santa Rita

To The Editor:

I wish to thank David C. Sodamann and his staff for the very excellent group of articles commemorating the 60th aniversary of the Santa Rita P 1 well which blew in the morning of May 28, 1923.

It is probable that the lives of most of us who inhabit the Permian Basin would have been very different had it not been for the promotions of Frank T Pickrell. The Reporter-Telegram is to be commended for marking this event. You relate not only the basic facts of how it all came about, but also how the lives of many people were affected.

The articles are well researched and very timely. Incidentally, it is interesting to note that the daughter of Carl Cromwell (Santa Rita P 1 driller) and the widow of Dee Locklin (Santa Rita P1 tool dresser) pronounce "Texon" with a long O sound when referring to the oil company and the town. Frank Pickrell also used the same pronunciation in taped interviews.

Zoning issue

To The Editor:

On June 20, 1983, at 3:30 p.m., a matter of great importance to the residents of northwest Midland will be heard by the City Council. The hearing will involve a request for rezoning by John F. Younger of approximately 47 acres of land at the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Midland Drive. Younger wishes to have the area rezoned for commercial use, thereby allowing him to construct 20 condominium units, a five story office building and a shopping mall. The first thought of the residents of this area will probably be, "How convenient!" It would, however, do the residents of this area well to take a second, more in-depth look at Younger's proposed construction.

Since the widening and repaving of Midland Drive this main artery of traffic has come to rival the Indianapolis Speedway. The traffic signal at the intersection of Wadley and Midland Drive has not put a damper on the fast traffic traveling Midland Drive. With the opening of the new Albertson's store at the intersection of these two streets we will see an increase in traffic and accidents in this area. If Younger prevails in his rezoning attempt and constructs his commercial buildings at this intersection, traffic congestion in this area can only get worse. It is already almost an impossibility to get onto Midland Drive from such streets as Nelson, Ferncliff, Greenbriar and Dengar. If the proposed new construction is allowed, these streets and others may as well be closed to Midland Drive.

There are also elementary schools proximate to the area now in question. Can the added traffic the proposed construction will attract create a hazard for the young children attending these schools? It is my considered opinion that such will be the case.

I urge everyone living in the area of Younger's proposed project, or for that matter, everyone living off Midland Drive who will be affected by the increased traffic flow, to voice your opposition to the rezoning of the area in queston by showing up at the June 20 hearing or by writing your councilmen and Planning and Zoning Commission. Don't expect "George" to do it for you. Act now.

Sick society

To The Editor:

In regards to the letter in Sunday's paper by Joe Hathaway, I am not a "little old lady in tennis shoes" but a young mother of three children. I was born and raised right here in Midland and have always thought it was a very decent and clean place to live.

Due to the very widely publicized Midland Communit Theatre production of "Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," I am changing my mind. Stuart A. Chase calls it a good step in creative arts in this area. I call it stooping to the sick society of the rest of the world.

What do you tell your 10-year-old daughter when she asks, "Mommy, what is a whorehouse?"

If it's really true that our local clergymen have really been seen at the production, then Heaven help us all.

BIBLE VERSE

There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death. Prov 16:25

Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov. 26:12

BILL MODISETT

'Ethical infants' now paying nuclear piper

Bill Modisett

Funny how simple, inescapable truths become more comprehensible with the passage of time.

A number of years ago, Gen. Omar Bradley observed "ours is a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants. If we continue to develop our technology without wisdom or prudence, our servant may prove to be our executioner."

What the general did not say, because he undoubtedly was making another point, is that "our servant" can endanger us in more than one way. Now that fact is becoming all too clear.

Nuclear energy holds the power to save man...or destroy him. In more than one way. Probably the most visible way is the awe-inspiring mushroom cloud that appeared over Hiroshima, Japan, Aug. 6, 1945, and three days later over Nagasaki. Another is the unexpected type of accident that assured Three-Mile Island a place in the history books.

But the most overlooked aspect of nuclear energy is the waste products processing leaves behind. That problem became obvious for Texas earlier this year when the Department of Energy announced the Lone Star State is one of six under consideration as possible sites for commercial nuclear waste repositories.

When environmental assessment hearings were conducted in May at Hereford, it was obvious Texans don't want their state turned into a nuclear dumping ground. But that's a common position when you talk about something as potentially deadly and long-term as nuclear waste. New Yorkers don't want it; neither do Californians or Arizonians or Oregonians.

It's here, though, and dealing with it is a necessity that won't diminish as long as technology and demand push man toward greater and greater reliance on nuclear power.

Ah, if we could but set the clock back to July 16, 1945, when in that empty desert near Alamogordo, N.M., the atomic age began and the issue of dealing with all that came after met mankind face to face. Perhaps wiser men could peer into the future and list nuclear power's ramifications. Maybe, but perhaps not, man would not be so inclined to rush headlong into the nuclear tomorrow.

Certainly there are countless benefits to be noted of man's excursion into the nuclear age. But in opening the bottle to taste the wine, man let the genie out.

Now we're discovering that finding the safest and best ways to dispose of nuclear waste is no simple task. Obviously the waste must be kept away from people, plant life and animals. But population growth in the United States has made that task next to impossible.

In Texas, opponents of the DOE plan — including Congressman Kent Hance of Lubbock — cited water and agriculture as primary reasons why a repository would not be suitable or wise. But it's likely that those or other arguments will be cited for every location the DOE studies. There are, in fact, any number of reasons why Texas wouldn't be a good location for dumping nuclear waste.

Texas is one of the fastest growing states in the nation and already stands at third in population. There are other regions of the country more desirable for repository sites because of sparsity of population — like California's Death Valley or one of Arizona's desert regions. Right? Try to convince residents of those states of that argument. Call it human nature but while everyone wants the benefits of nuclear power, no one wants a nuclear waste dump in their backyard.

The nuclear dilemma Texas and the rest of the nation is facing today is a sad commentary on man's ability to think ahead, to plan for the future and be ready when problems arise.

Said a gentleman named Vernon Law, "Experience is the worst teacher; it gives the test before presenting the lesson."

My question is: I understand when the Courthouse jail was last remodeled, there were about one fourth of the jail cells never completed. If we need jail space so badly, why not complete these cells and relieve the crowded jail? — M.G. Mitchell

ANSWER: Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith says that in the original fifth floor plans there was space for additional cells, but it is not economically feasible now. Converting the space into single prisoner cells, according to state jail standards regulations, would cost about $300,000. The converted space would accommodate a maximum of 10 prisoners.

Smith says that at the present time, this "extra" space is used as a recreational area for single cell prisoners and for storage.

The soil around our home is infested with nematodes. Will root vegetables grown in this soil also be infested? Will these root vegetables be edible? — Mrs. W.D.

ANSWER: Earnest C. Kiker, Midland County Extension Agent - Agriculture, reports that nematodes can infest all vegetables. Especially susceptible are the non-resistant types. According to Mr. Kiker, if the vegetables survive the nematodes, they would be edible. He recommends that a garden area should be sterilized at least three weeks before planting with resistant varieties of plants.

Could you please print the telephone number and whomever is to be contacted if one should need to call "Tipsy Taxi"? I failed to write it down when it was first listed. — C.B.

ANSWER: The "Tipsy Taxi" telephone number is 561-8336. The person answering will be able to make arrangements for the service.

What may a resident do so that they can park their own cars in the shade in front of their own residence, but are unable to because various construction crews and Texas Electric crews and others park their machines or vehicles right in front — leaving them for hours at a time?

Guests who were attending a bridal shower at my home recently had no place to park because a Texas Electric van was parked right in the center a greater part of the day. Big machinery parked in front is not only unsightly but an inconvenience to the property owner. Also it makes it unhandy for our yard men to do the mowing and watering.

A private citizen does not have much luck in trying to solve this problem. Could you possibly check with the firms and print the results in your column? — A Grateful Citizen

P.S. There are other places they can park.

ANSWER: "It is occasionally necessary for Texas Electric service and construction trucks to park on residential streets in order to read meters or to repair, install and maintain our distribution electric lines," says Sara St. Clair, senior customer representative for TESCO.

"In this instance, we don't know any details since the writer did not indicate date, time, address, etc. However, please call Texas Electric at 683-8600 or 683-4651 if our TESCO work vehicles are causing an obstruction or inconvenience. We will be able to promptly determine the reason the vehicle is in your neighborhood and can solve any parking problems."

I would like to know if there is something a person can do to keep sugar from hardening. Have a five pound package, never been opened, and it's as hard as a rock. Can't even break it up with a hammer. I have tried an apple and that was no good. — E.I.

ANSWER: You do not specify whether it is brown or white sugar you are referring to, but if it is brown sugar, heat your oven to 350 degrees. Turn the oven off, place the sugar in a container in the oven and close the door, says Diane Calley, consumer information specialist with Energas. When the sugar warms, it should be soft. She recommends basically the same procedure for white sugar.

Ms. Calley also suggests that brown sugar be stored in an air-tight container with a slice of grapefruit, orange or lemon peel added. When the peel dries out, substitute another one. She also says that the fruit peel can be used to soften already hard brown sugar.

First Baptist sets seminar

MC interviewing nursing students

A limited number of applicants will be selected for the class, which begins study in late August for a year. Applicants must be 18 years or older and have a high school diploma or a GED certificate, which should be presented at the interview.

Interested persons may call the Vocational Nursing program office at 684-7851, extension 185, to arrange for an interview time. Interviews will be conducted from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays in room 124 of the Occupational/Technical building.

Deadline for making applications is Aug. 11.

Those persons who are selected for the new class will receive classroom instruction at Midland College plus supervised clinical training and study at Midland Memorial Hospital for 35 weeks. They will rotate through all departments at Midland Memorial during their clinical studies.

Upon satisfactory completion of the course, students are eligible to take the State Board Exam, which would qualify them to become Licensed Vocational Nurses upon passing the exam.

"There are a great many openings for LVN's in the Midland area," said Pat Myers, director of Midland College's vocational nursing program. "It is a stable occupational field, with a variety of employment opportunities available — in hospitals, clinics, nursing homes and physicians' offices."

Qualified applicants who require financial assistance also may be eligible to receive financial aid grants to defray costs of tuition, fees, books and uniforms required for the course.

MC summer school registration to close

Monday is the final day for students to register for Midland College first summer session classes.

By Thursday, Midland College had enrolled 1,144 students in its first summer term, an increase of 151 students over the same period last year.

Persons who wish to sign up for academic or vocational classes may visit the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday.

"There are still a number of classes which have openings for additional students," said Dr. Don Hunt, vice president for instruction.

Persons wanting to find out about classes that still have openings may call 684-7851, extension 166, Monday morning.

Lloyd wins record-tying fifth French Open

PARIS (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd moved neatly and methodically to a 6-1, 6-2 victory over Mima Jausovec Saturday, winning the French Open tennis title for a record-tying fifth time and reaching the halfway mark of a special Grand Slam prize of $1 million.

The men's title will be decided Sunday when Yannick Noah, seeking to become the first Frenchman since 1946 to capture the French Open, takes on 18-year-old Mats Wilander of Sweden, who is defending the title he won last year. The final will be televised live by NBC.

Lloyd, who won a first prize of around $70,000, equaled the record of Margaret Smith Court of Australia. Lloyd has also won Wimbledon three times, the U.S. Open six times and the Australian Open once.

The 15 Grand Slam titles she has won since 1973 are way behind Court, who won 24, and Helen Wills Moody, who won 18.

"I guess this was my fastest and easiest Grand Slam final," Lloyd said of her 65-minute match on the slow, red clay of center court at Roland Garros stadium in roasting sunshine before 16,500 fans.

THE INTERNATIONAL Tennis Federation later issued a statement about the confused situation of the Grand Slam.

According to the statement, Lloyd is three-quarters of the way toward the Grand Slam, having won the U.S. and Australian Opens last year. If she wins Wimbledon next month, that will be recognized by the ITF as a Grand Slam, even though it began halfway through the year.

But she is only halfway toward the $1 million bonus since this was offered by the ITF last Sept. 15 after the U.S. Open. To win this, Lloyd has to win both the Wimbledon and U.S. Open titles this year.

"I will let other people work this out," Lloyd said. "I'm not going to worry about it. I'm just going on to try to win Wimbledon."

The term Grand Slam was first coined by New York Times writer Allison Danzig in 1938 when Don Budge became the first player to win all four major titles in the same year.

The feat was duplicated by Maureen Connolly, Margaret Court and twice by Rod Laver.

While the ITF will recognize four consecutive titles, a number of tennis observers, including the U.S. Tennis Writers Association, say they will continue to recognize a Grand Slam as being won in the same calendar year.

ONCE AGAIN Lloyd was queen of Roland Garros, where the ball bounces slowly and most rallies are fought from the baseline.

But she and the 26-year-old Jausovec, an experienced clay-court player, mixed their shots, varied the pace and drew each other to the net with drop shots.

Lloyd, 28, did it more skillfully and consistently than her opponent. They have now played each other 14 times and Lloyd has won every time.

"I think Chris played her best today," the Yugoslavian player said. "She only missed two or three shots in the whole match, and it is difficult to play against that kind of form.

"She has played better with each match of this tournament."

A Swedish pair, Anders Jarryd and Hans Simonsson, won the men's doubles title, beating Mark Edmondson of Australia and Sherwood Stewart of the United States 7-6, 6-4, 6-2 in the final.

BJORN BORN, who won the French Open singles title six times before retiring two months ago, said in an interview earlier: "I feel very proud of how the young Swedish players are doing, because I think my own success has had something to do with it."

In the men's singles, these red clay courts have again been the Americans' graveyard. Jimmy Connors and John McEnroe both were tumbled out of the singles in the quarterfinals. No American has won the singles title since Tony Trabert in 1955.

Lloyd was asked why she has won the French title so often and American men could not win here at all.

"It's because I come from Florida, which is clay-court territory," she explained. "Most of our leading men, including Connors and McEnroe, were brought up on cement."

Borg said there was no reason why Americans should not win in Paris.

"I think the problem is they are not as patient as they should be on this slow surface," Borg said.

"There are some good American clay-court players, but compared with Europeans, who grew up on this kind of surface, they are not good enough to win big ones like this.

"You have to be very patient on these courts and sometimes you have to wait a long time for the right opportunity to attack. American players don't make the right approach shots."

Diablos post 11-7 victory over Cubs

EL PASO — The El Paso Diablos made it four straight over the Midland Cubs by posting an 11-7 Texas League victory here Saturday night.

Wild pitching proved costly for both teams. Rick Baker led off the Cubs' first inning attack when he was hit by a Rene Quinones pitch and moved to third on Trey Brooks double. Tom Lombarski grounded out to score Brooks for a 2-0 lead.

El Paso came back in the bottom of the inning. Stan Levi and Juan Castillo each connected for two-run doubles as the Diablos jumped out to a 5-2 lead.

Midland retook the lead in the second when Randy LaVigne led off with a walk and, two outs later, Bruce Chaney reached first on a catcher's interference call. Quinones had caught Chaney's third-out pop up.

With the new life, Baker came up with a single to load the bases and Brooks walked to score LaVigne. Hatcher was hit by a second Quinones wild pitch for a second run and Lombarski followed with a two RBI single for 6-5 lead.

The Cubs made it 7-5 off reliever Mark Effrig when Carlos Lezcano and Don Hyman walked. Two outs later, Hatcher Hatcher and Brook both walked for the final run.

After tying the game in the third at 7-7, El Paso came up with the winning run in the fourth when Mike Felder scored on Bill Max' ground out. Frankie Thomas brought home the ninth run by stealing home plate.

The Cubs will play two more games in El Paso before returning home Wednesday to start a 12-day home stand against Beaumont and San Antonio to conclude the first half of the season. Tonight's game will begin at 7:30 with Steve Parrott on the mound for the Diablos and Jim Wright pitching for Midland.

NAIA Series rained out

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Lewis-Clark State and Lubbock Christian College got an unexpected day of rest Saturday when rain forced postponement of their showdown in the 27th annual NAIA World Series.

Officials said a doubleheader would be played Sunday if LCC wins the first game. Lewis-Clark, of Idaho, could win the double elimination tournament with a victory in the opening contest.

Rich Medina, 13-1, was listed as the starting pitcher for Lewis-Clark. Medina, who has a 4.09 ERA, beat St. Francis in the opening round of the tournament Monday.

Bob Hinson was expected to get the call for LCC. Hinson is 15-5 with a 4.05 ERA after defeating Southwestern Tuesday.

Michigan, 'Bama win CWS play

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Junior Chris Sabo hit a three-run homer and Michigan stopped an eighth inning rally to escape with a 6-5 victory over Maine in a first-round game of the 37th Annual College World Series.

Maine, 29-15, scored on a second inning homer from Brad Colton, who led the three-run eighth inning rally with a double. Kevin Beriner homered in the fifth for the Black Bears.

Michigan, 49-7, struck for two in the seventh when Larkin doubled and Watter singled and scored off a Sabo shot to deep right field.

Alabama 6, Arizona State 5

Alabama's Craig Shipley topped a game-winning infield single in the 11th-inning and teammate David Magadan — college baseball's batting champion — tied a tournament record with five hits, to pace the Crimson Tide to a 6-5 victory over Arizona State Saturday night in the first-round of the 37th annual College World Series.

Alabama, 43-9, jumped to a 3-0 first-inning lead, which held until the fifth. Arizona State's Barry Bonds and Bert Martinez singled and Steve Moses doubled to produce four runs.

Alabama countered in their half of the inning when Magadan stroked his third hit of the night to score Bret Elbin. Stallings then drove in Jack Turek.

SMU wins its first mens' NCAA Outdoor Track title

HOUSTON (AP) — Victories by shot putter Michael Carter and triple jumper Keith Connor plus a comeback fourth-place finish in the final race, the 1,600-meter relay, gave Southern Methodist its first mens' title in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships Saturday night.

The Mustangs, the first Southwest Conference team to capture the outdoor title in the meet's 62-year history, finished the week-long meet with 104 points to 102 for runner-up Tennessee.

The title, which matched the championship the Mustangs won for the first time in the NCAA indoor meet in March at Pontiac, Mich., boiled down to the 1,600 relay.

Going into the race, Tennessee led SMU 102-95. Under the scoring system of 15-12-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1, the Mustangs had to finish fifth or better to grab the crown.

AFTER LESLIE Brooks' 400-meter first leg, their chances appeared grim. Brooks was last in the field of eight when he handed off the baton to Russell Carter.

Carter made up some ground before handing off to Eric Josjo of Sweden, with SMU seventh and closing.

Josjo also ran a strong leg, and when he handed off to anchorman Rod Jones, SMU was sixth. Jones quickly moved into fifth place around the first turn, and when the Baylor anchorman fell down coming around the final turn, Jones was fourth.

He held that position, finishing behind Texas Christian, the winner in a meet-record 3 minutes, 2.09 seconds, Alabama and Michigan State.

Earlier, Carter won his sixth NCAA shot put title in six attempts — thre indoors and three outdoors — with a heave of 68 feet, 7 inches, and Connor repeated as triple jumper champion at 56-7½.

SMU ALSO had two winners in Friday's 17-event final program, Sven Nylander of Sweden scoring a surprising victory in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles and Robert Weir leading a 1-3-9 Mustangs' finish in the hammer throw.

SMU's other points came from Carter's third-place finish in the discus, Roald Bradstock's third in the javelin and Henry Andrade's fifth in the 110-meter high hurdles.

Tennessee's narrow loss came because of the failure of Willie Gault to win either the 100-meter dash or the 110-meter high hurdles.

THE 100 produced the first 1-2 finish by two members of the same team since Eddie Hart and Isaac Curtis of California did it in 1970. Emmit King of Alabama edged teammate Calvin Smith, 10.15 seconds to 10.16.

"I didn't have a very good start and that's what hurt me," said Smith, who also finished second in the 200 Friday night.

Gault also had a poor start and could do no better than sixth in 10.32.

In the hurdles, the surprise winner was Roger Kingdom of Pittsburgh in 13.54, with Tennessee teammates Reggie Towns and Gault second and third, respectively, in 13.63 each.

Gault, again struggling at the start, put on a burst of speed, but he could not catch the unheralded Kingdom, who had signed a Southeastern Conference letter of intent with Tennessee before signing a national letter of intent with Pittsburgh.

Alabama finished third in the men's team scoring with 88 points, followed by four-time defending champion Texas-El Paso with 84½, favored Washington State with 66, Oregon with 59½, and Arkansas with 59.

Texas-El Paso's Gidamis Shahanga and Zakariah Barie, repeated their 1-2 finish from Friday night's 10,000 meters in Saturday's 5,000 meters.

The two Tanzanians raced the final 404 meters in an unofficial 54 seconds, with Shahanga outkicking his teammate and winning in 13:54.13. Barie was clocked in 13:54.38.

Shahanga's two victories duplicated the accomplishment of his former teammate and countryman, Suleiman Nyambui, who won the 5,000 and 10,000 each of the past three years.

Cameron, the two-time indoor quarter-mile champion, took the lead Saturday night coming into the final straightaway and pulled away to win in 44.62, the fastest time in the world this year.

Arkansas' Frank O'Mara of Ireland ran a 54-second final lap to capture the men's 1,500 meters in 3:40.51.

The prerace favorite, Oregon freshman Joaquim Cruz from Brazil, withdrew prior to the start of the event because of stomach cramps. Cruz won the 800 Friday night in the meet-record time of 1:44.91.

UCLA repeated as women's champion and won its fourth national title since 1975, finishing with 116⅛ points to 108 for runner-up Florida State.

Like the men, the women's crown came down to the final event, but it wasn't quite as dramatic.

Heading into that event, the long jump, UCLA trailed Florida State 108-106½. Each team had one entrant in the long jump, but UCLA's Jackie Joyner was considered one of the best in the field, while Florida State's Alice Bennett was one of the weaker competitors.

UCLA had the title, as Bennett had failed to get through the 14-woman prelims and make the 12-woman final.

Nebraska wound up third in the team scoring with 106 2-3 points, with Tennessee fourth at 87 and Oregon fifth at 66.

Jones new Celtics coach?

BOSTON (AP) — K.C. Jones, an assistant coach of the Boston Celtics for the last five seasons and a star player with the team 20 years ago, will be named head coach of the National Basketball Association club, The Boston Globe reports.

Celtics general manager Arnold "Red" Auerbach refused to confirm or deny the report.

"We haven't appointed anybody officially to coach the Celtics yet," Auerbach said when reached at his home in Washington, D.C., late Saturday night.

"I don't want to discuss it," he said when asked if Jones were a possibility.

The Globe says in its Sunday editions that Auerbach and Celtics owner Harry Mangurian have picked Jones to succeed Bill Fitch as head coach.

Fitch resigned 10 days ago. Six days later, he took the job as head coach of the Houston Rockets.

Jones, 51, was a guard on the Celtics during the glory years from 1958 to 1967. The team won seven NBA championships during that time.

Fitch coached the Celtics for four seasons, winning the NBA crown in 1980-81. He was named NBA Coach of the Year the previous season.

The Globe says Auerbach wanted Jones for the head coaching job almost from the time Fitch said he was leaving but wanted time to think about it.

The newspaper also says Jones is popular with Celtics players and that they were pulling for him to get ther job.

Invaders win, 34-21

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Fred Besana, the leading passer in the United States Football League, got the best of top rusher Herschel Walker by firing three touchdown passes and leading the Oakland Invaders to a 34-21 victory over the New Jersey Generals Saturday night.

Oakland, 7-7, took the Pacific Division lead, moving ahead of Los Angeles which is 6-7 going into a Sunday game.

Walker took the league scoring lead, raising his season point total to 98 with two touchdown plunges and a 2-point conversion run. But the Generals' rookie fumbled the ball away on his first carry and was held to 72 yards on 21 carries.

Walker, the 1982 Heisman Trophy winner from Georgia, helped attract the Invaders' third best home crowd. There were 32,908 tickets sold.

For the season, Walker has 1,545 yards rushing. His total yardage rushing and receiving is 2,007.

Besana completed 10 of his first 11 passes including touchdown tosses of 8 yards to Arthur Whittington and 24 to Raymond Chester. In the second half, he hit Wyatt Henderson on an 8-yard TD pass.

Rookie quarterback Gene Bradley, who replaced Jeff Knapple in the fourth quarter, threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to Mark Slawson. But with 5:11 left in the game, Oakland cornerback Derrick Martin intercepted a Bradley pass and returned the ball 72 yards for a victory-clinching touchdown.

The Invaders do not announce actual attendance. It appeared that actual attendance was slightly under 30,000.

Liz Ameel: Sugar among the Snakes

Make no mistake about it. Elizabeth Ameel is sugar and spice and everything nice, but she is more than just holding her own in the Little League world of snakes and snails and hard ball.

"Liz", as her teammates call her, is more than just a girl playing in a sport dominated by boys — she is a leader. The facts speak for themselves.

At age 11, Ameel is in her third year of Little League competition, playing for North Central's National League Yankees. The Yanks won the city championship when she was nine. She was the first girl to make the North Central All-Star team at age 10 and this year her batting average hovers over the .600 mark (.654 at one point in the season).

The young phenom hits in the cleanup position and is also a pitcher for the Yankees. When she isn't pitching, she plays shortstop, catcher or first base. She had a 5-1 pitching record at one point in the season.

With those kind of statistics backing her, it's easy to see that she is holding her own with the boys. In fact, she is better than most of them. Several coaches in the North Central American League want her to move to the "A" League next year.

But with the abundant opportunities to play in a girl oriented softball program, why did she choose to play in a boys' league?

"I tried softball, but it was very boring for me," says Liz. "You would play forever and nothing would happen. There was no hitting and no competition. I just didn't enjoy it.

"I like playing Little League. It's more fun for me and I'll probably play in the 'A' League next year."

"It's kind of interesting how Liz got into Little League. One year when my father and I were coaching a team, one of our draft choices decided not to play," Chris says. "We knew Liz could play as good as anyone else we could get at that date because she has played ball with the family ever since she was old enough to throw a ball, so we let her have a chance. She's proved herself as far as I'm concerned."

But how is she treated by her teammates, who are all boys?

"Oh, that's really no problem. They treat me like they would treat anyone else. No one ever mentions that I'm a girl," Liz said.

One of her teammates said, "Yea, I know she's a girl, but she's pretty good. She doesn't give anyone any problems."

No one, that is, except opposing teams. In one recent Yankee victory, Liz singled and doubled in her first two at-bats. The third time up the other team elected to walk her intentionally. Defensively, she threw out two runners from her shortstop position and also played a little first base.

Liz has no major baseball plans past next year, her final year of Little League eligibility.

Atlanta Brave Dale Murphy tosses the bat in the air after taking a fourth ball for a walk against St. Louis Saturday. The pitch came close to hitting the centerfielder in the neck.

Astros bombard Reds, 13-0

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Alan Ashby knocked in six runs with two homers and a triple and Mike Scott pitched a four-hitter as the Houston Astros scored a 13-0 victory over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday night.

Scott, 1-3, didn't allow a Cincinnati runner to get past second base nor walk a batter in recording his first win for the Astros. He struck out two.

With Reds right-hander Bruce Berenyi, 3-6, pitching, Jose Cruz opened the Astros' fourth with a single off third baseman Johnny Bench's glove and rode home on Ashby's home run, a drive well over 400 feet, high over the center field fence.

The Astros added three runs in the fifth. Dickie Thon singled with two out and scored on Phil Garner's double and Garner rode home on Cruz's single. Cruz later scored the Astros' final run of the inning on a single by Ray Knight which drove Berenyi from the mound.

Ashby slugged his second homer of the game, and sixth of the season, following Knight's single in the eighth, one of four hits by the Houston first baseman. The Astros added six runs in the ninth with Garner's solo homer and Ashby's two-run triple keying the outburst.

Giants 4, Expos 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Darrell Evans' tie-breaking two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth inning lifted the San Francisco Giants to a 4-2 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Evans' homer, following a leadoff single by Max Venable off Jeff Reardon, 2-4, was his 13th of the year, giving him the National League lead. It was the seventh game-winning RBI for Evans and gave Gary Lavelle, 3-0, the win.

Cubs 5, Pirates 2

CHICAGO — Jody Davis homered, Ryne Sandberg stole home and Larry Bowa scored on a balk to lead Ferguson Jenkins and the Chicago Cubs to a 5-2 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The triumph stretched the Cubs' winning streak to four games, their longest of the season, while the Pirates lost their fifth in a row for the second time this year.

Jenkins, 2-3, drove in the first run of the game and picked up his 280th career victory after failing in six previous starts. He allowed five hits, walked two and had a season-high seven strikeouts before departing in the seventh inning.

National League

Braves 6, Cardinals 4

ATLANTA — Terry Harper drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a tie-breaking single in the sixth inning as the Atlanta Braves stretched their winning streak to five games with a 6-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Braves are unbeaten in six games against St. Louis, which beat them in last year's National League playoffs.

Atlanta broke a 3-3 tie against Joaquin Andujar, 3-8, with two away in the sixth when Bob Horner and Chris Chambliss walked and Harper singled to left, Horner crossing the plate just before Chambliss was thrown out at third to end the inning.

Dodgers 2, Mets 1

LOS ANGELES — Greg Brock and Steve Yeager slugged solo home runs and Burt Hooton and Dave Stewart combined on an nine-hitter, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers over the New York Mets 2-1.

The victory was the Dodgers' fifth in their last six games, enabling them to retain a 1½-game lead over Atlanta in the National League West. The Mets dropped their ninth in their last 12.

Hooton, 4-2, struck out seven and walked no one before leaving with none out and a man on first in the ninth. Stewart came on at this point and shut the Mets down to gain his sixth save.

Padres 5, Phillies 4

SAN DIEGO — Kurt Bevacqua's two-run, pinch single in the bottom of the seventh inning carried the San Diego Padres to a 5-4 victory over the slumping Philadelphia Phillies.

The Phillies now have lost six straight games for the second time this season.

Bevacqua, who had the game-winning hit in Friday night's 8-5 San Diego victory, drove home Mario Ramirez and Alan Wiggins as he greeted reliever Al Holland with a liner to center, giving the Padres a 5-3 lead.

Ramirez and Wiggins had reached on singles off starter Marty Bystrom, 0-3, who allowed eight hits in 6 1-3 innings. John Montefusco, 4-1, the third of five Padre pitchers, earned the victory with two hitless innings.

Rangers beat Tigers, 5-2

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Texas' Larry Parrish drove in two runs with a homer and a single and Charlie Hough moved into the win column for the first time since April 30 Saturday night in a 5-2 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Hough, 3-5, set a career high by striking out nine batters. He scattered eight hits and walked three before leaving with two out in the ninth in favor of Odell Jones, who gained his seventh save.

The Tigers' Dan Petry, who gave up solo homers to Parrish, Billy Sample, and George Wright, suffered the loss, his third against five victories.

Texas built a 2-0 lead on homers by Parrish and Sample before Detroit's Larry Herndon homered in the fifth inning.

Larry O'Brien's triple and Bucky Dent's groundout made it 3-1 Texas in the bottom of the fifth.

Alan Trammell's single, a walk, and Lance Parrish's RBI single brought the Tigers to within a run in the top of the sixth.

Larry Parrish's run-scoring single in the sixth inning and Wright's first homer of the year in the seventh gave Hough a winning cushion.

A's 6, Indians 3

CLEVELAND — Dwayne Murphy singled home the tie-breaking run in a three-run ninth, his second RBI of the game, triggering the Oakland A's a 6-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Tom Burgmeier, 3-2, retired the final four Cleveland hitters to give the A's only their second victory in last nine games, and snap a four-game Indian winning streak.

Mariners 5, Yankees 4

NEW YORK — Richie Zisk drove in three runs with two homers and a single to lead the Seattle Mariners to a 5-4 victory over New York, the Yankees' third consecutive defeat.

Zisk homered to open Seattle's two-run second inning against left-hander Bob Shirley, 2-4, and led off the ninth against reliever George Frazier with what proved to be the Mariners' decisive run — his second homer of the game, fifth of the year and the 200th of his major-league career.

Red Sox 8, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Tony Armas, Boston's designated hitter, collected four runs batted in with two homers and two singles to lead the Red Sox to an 8-6 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Dennis Eckersley, 4-2, scattered eight hits, struck out five and walked three in six innings. Luis Aponte pitched the final three innings for his third save, yielding Randy Bush's third homer in the eighth inning and Gary Gaetti's double-play grounder that produced a run in the ninth.

The Twins scored three times in the fifth on John Castino's two-run single and Kent Hrbek's run-scoring double.

American League

Boston added three runs in the eighth inning off Twins' relievers Rick Lysander, Ron Davis and Len Whitehouse on Reid Nichols' RBI single, a sacrifice fly by Dave Stapleton and a run-scoring double by Glenn Hoffman.

Angels 8, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Tim Foli followed Bob Boone's two-run single with a three-run homer in the sixth inning to catapult Tommy John and the California Angels to an 8-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Angels overcame a 3-2 deficit with their big burst. A single by Ron Jackson, a walk to Bobby Grich and a bunt single by Ellis Valentine loaded the bases, chasing Jerry Augustine, 2-1. Boone's single to left off Jim Slaton put California on top, then Foli made it 7-3 with his second homer of the year, a shot over the wall in left.

John, 5-2, who scattered nine hits en route to his fifth complete game of the year, was touched for two runs in the first inning when Robin Yount was safe on an error by Foli at short and Cecil Cooper hit his 10th homer, a line drive into the right-field bleachers.

Orioles 6, Blue Jays 4

BALTIMORE — Eddie Murray, Al Bumbry and John Lowenstein cracked home runs off Toronto ace Dave Stieb in the first three innings as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Blue Jays 6-4.

The victory was the sixth in eight games for the Orioles, following a seven-game losing streak, and gave them a 33-7 lifetime record against Toronto in Memorial Stadium.

Murray, with five homers and 12 RBI while hitting safely in his last eight games, connected in the first inning following a two-out walk to Cal Ripken Jr. It was his seventh homer of the season.

Bumbry led off the third with his second homer and Lowenstein hit his sixth after Murray drew a two-out walk. That blow finished Stieb, 8-4, who had allowed only three homers in 97⅓ previous innings and entered the game with a 1.66 earned run average.

Royals 7, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — George Brett knocked in three runs with a homer and a double and Frank White drove in two more with a triple to lead the Kansas City Royals to a 7-1 decision over the Chicago White Sox.

Brett gave Paul Splittorff, 3-1, all the runs he needed in the first inning with a two-run homer, his 12th of the season, after U.L. Washington had walked.

The White Sox got one of the runs back in the bottom of the inning. Tony Bernazard singled and Splittorff walked Carlton Fisk and Harold Baines to load the bases. Bernazard scored Chicago's only run when Greg Luzinski grounded into a double play.

Splittorff, who issued six walks and surrendered five hits, won his third straight game despite leaving after six innings because of stiffness in his back.

BMW AND MERCEDES OWNERS: COME IN AND TRADE UP TO A VOLVO.

Last year, 30% of all Volvo sales were to people who were also tempted to buy one of these prestige German cars. And didn't.

This year, with the introduction of the Volvo 760 GLE, we expect even more people to be led into Volvos and not temptation.

That's because the 760 GLE is, simply, the finest Volvo sedan ever built. Ten years of design and development went into it. And two million test miles are behind it. This is what a driver will get out of it:

Even more predictable handling. A unique, patent pending rear suspension system keeps the drive wheels in constant alignment, reducing the chance of losing your rear end on sharp curves. (Especially if the road surface is wet and slippery.)

Faster take-off. The turbo-diesel engine and gearing system produce 40% more torque (turning power at the wheels) than last year's conventional 6-cylinder diesel/drive train. The results (with manual transmission): 0-55 mph in 9.54 seconds; 0-60 mph in 11.7 seconds. In an on-ramp 30-50 mph acceleration test, the 760 GLE turbo-diesel made it in 4.71 seconds...a fearless figure for entering any freeway or autobahn. (Also available: a V-6 gas engine with automatic that's no slouch either.)

See for yourself how the 760 GLE performs compared to a Mercedes or BMW. Come in for a test drive soon and, while you're at it, check out the price tag. We all know that prestige has a price. But with this all-new Volvo, it isn't as steep.

THE VOLVO 760 GLE.
WE NEVER SOLD A VOLVO THAT WAS WORTH SO MUCH.

Frazier decisions Bugner

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Marvis Frazier, using pressure and effective body punching, pounded out a unanimous 10-round decision over Joe Bugner Saturday, 10 years after his father, former heavyweight champion Joe Frazier, scored a 12-round decision over Bugner.

The 22-year-old Frazier, who at the age of 12 was a spectator when his dad beat Bugner in London, took charge at the outset, and the 33-year-old Bugner was never in the fight.

Judge Charles Spina saw the fight as a surprisingly close one, scoring it 6-4 for Frazier. Judge Harold Lederman scored it 8-2, Frazier, and judge Richard F. Murry saw it 10-0 for the winner.

The AP favored Frazier 9-1.

"The 10 years seem just like yesterday," Bugner had said before the fight.

The result was the same as 10 years ago — a Frazier winning — but a young Bugner gave Joe a tougher fight than an aging and heavy Bugner gave Marvis.

Bugner was never off his feet — he was knocked down in the 10th round 10 years ago — but he took a severe body pounding and was marked about both eyes.

The 6-foot-4 Bugner, weighing 237¾, enjoyed a reach advantage over the 6-foot Frazier, who weighed 200½. It did him no good as Frazier was too fast and was in much better physical condition.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

Tilling a garden plot by hand can be a back-breaking chore. Buying a lawn tiller to perform this twice yearly task can save your back but empty your wallet. The simple answer is to rent a tiller. Using a tiller, the first pass should be to break the surface of the ground. This can be accomplished by setting the skid till approximately one inch below ground surface. Also, the wheels for the first pass should be set at a 45-degree angle by setting the pin in the first hole of the wheel carriage. As greater depths are tilled, it should be done without the rear wheels which should be set in the "UP" position.

The beautiful thoughts of tasty garden vegetables are quickly lost with every back breaking shovelful of dirt we turn over in the garden. Let those pleasant thoughts last--from tilling to harvest--by renting the equipment you need from BOB's RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294. We help you get your garden started and if it grows bigger than you expect, we probably have the equipment and tools to help you harvest it. Come in and see us soon. We're as healthy as green vegetables. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

HANDY HINT:

If the tiller should become stuck, raise up on the handles and rock it from side to side.

Five enter Texas Hall of Fame

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys quarterback Roger Staubach and Texas schoolboy football coaching legend Gordon Wood of Brownwood were inducted into the Texas Sports Hall of Fame Saturday along with four other sports greats.

Joining Staubach and Wood at the enshrinement ceremonies were former Texas All-American Bud McFadin, Houston golf coach Dave Williams, New York Jet former wide receiver Don Maynard, and former major league baseball player Pinkey Whitney.

Staubach won two Super Bowls as a quarterback for the Cowboys.

Although he was raised in Cincinnati and went to school at the Naval Academy, he said, "I feel a part of Texas because Texas has been the only state my family has known. This gives us all a closer tie to the state."

WOOD HAS coached Brownwood High School to a 383-77-11 record for an .825 winning percentage. In more than 40 years, his teams have won nine state championships.

"Maybe my induction will be a stepping stone for other high school coaches (getting into the Hall of Fame)," Wood said.

McFadin was a consensus All-America lineman for the Longhorns during the 1950s and became an All-Pro in the early 1960s.

Maynard, who is from El Paso where he attended college, is the second all-time leading receiver in professional football history.

"I'm excited about being in the Hall of Fame," he said. "Just look at the people who are here."

Williams, who has taken his Cougar golf teams to 14 NCAA championships, said, "Being in the Hall of Fame makes you humble. You have to be lucky."

Whitney, 78, a former third baseman, had a career batting average of .295, and lives in San Antonio.

McFadin said, "There's a lot of nostalgia involved and I know there are some great athletes in the Hall. I've played against Don Maynard and I can tell you he was great."

Miller rolls 237 to win Tucson title

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Hugh Miller, continuing his history of clutch performances on national television, rolled a 237 Saturday to beat Bob Handley by 12 pins and win the $100,000 Tucson Open on the Pro Bowlers Tour.

Miller, a fifth-year pro, won two straight games en route to the third title of his career and the $13,000 first-place prize.

The 26-year-old left-hander, who last won in 1980, has now emerged victorious all three times he has appeared in the nationally televised championship round.

Miller's victory, however, was aided by a series of bad breaks for Handley, the hottest tour member who was making his fourth consecutive championship-round appearance.

BOWLING BEAT

Seven pin ends Smith's 300 bid

By RANDY ISENBERG

A tall standing seven pin was the only thing in the way of Billy Smith recording a perfect game in the Civic Summer League recently at Dellwood Lanes.

Andy Needler's 279 game and 706 series in the Busy Men's League was the pace setting series for the week while Randy Prince fired a 692 series and Ruben Urias a 246 game to go with a 669 series in other top performances over the week.

Dennis Childs rolled a 266 game and 699 series in the Petroleum National and Bob Thames, in the Gutter Club Mixed, had a 276 game and 694 set to go with a 226-631 in the Midland Memorial Hospital Mixed.

Mary Jo White continued her fine bowling performance, rolling a 241 game and 604 series in the Ladies Nite Out. Becky O'Neal, rolling in the same league, bowled her first 200 game, a 220, to produce her first 500 series.

UP COMING EVENTS: The Texas Bowling Center's Association 4th of July Handicap Tournament will be held at Bronco Bowl in Dallas. A prize fund, including a guaranteed first place total of $5,000, will give the bowlers something to shoot for.

The Whitewater Singles Classic will be held at Bowlerland and Fiesta bowling centers in Garland, July 23. Entry forms are available for both state events at all local bowling centers.

Locally, the PABA Handicap Singles Tournament, July 1-3, will be held at Dellwood Lanes and the Southwest Amateur B.A. Singles tournament will follow at the same site, July 8-9.

Dellwood league bowlers will be rolling qualifying rounds of the Most Over Average Tournament, beginning June 18-19.

Bud 400 should be fast

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — If the qualifying speeds were any indication, Sunday's Budweiser 400-kilometer stock car race at Riverside should be a fast one.

Darrell Waltrip's former record for Riverside, the only road course on the Winston Cup Grand National circuit, was bettered three times during qualifying. But when the qualifying ended, Waltrip, the defending Winston Cup points champion, still owned the Riverside record and got the pole position in the process.

On Friday, Waltrip's record of 114.995 mph, set in November 1982, fell first to Tim Richmond, who reached 115.925 mph in his Pontiac, and then to Terry Labonte, who completed the course in a Chevrolet in 115.003 mph.

But then Waltrip, also driving a Chevrolet, smashed those short-lived marks with a speed of 116.421 mph in the late afternoon Friday.

The final 17 spots in the 37-car field were determined during qualifying Saturday at the 2.62-mile, nine-turn Riverside International Raceway course.

Among the second-day qualifiers were Kyle Petty, who drove his Pontiac at a speed of 110.855 mph to earn the 23rd starting post. His father, Richard, will be starting from the eighth spot on the grid.

Scott Simpson blasts his way out of a trap on the third hole of Saturday's Kemper Open. After three rounds, Simpson and Fred Couples are tied for the lead.

Miller holds Classic lead

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Alice Miller battled blustery winds and a rain-soaked course to shoot a 1-over-par 73 Saturday for a 1-shot lead over Debbie Massey after two rounds of the $150,000 West Virginia LPGA Classic.

Miller had a two-round total of 143, while Massey was in at 144. First-round leader LeAnn Cassadday was at 145 along with Silvia Bertolaccini, Susie McAllister and Alexandra Reinhardt.

Miller birdied the 10th and 15th holes in windy conditions at the Speidel course where only eight golfers managed par or better in the second day of play.

Massey had a second-round score of 74. Cassaday, who shot an opening-round 69, bogeyed the first three holes Saturday before recovering on the back nine to finish the round at 4-over.

Second-year pro Laura Hurlbut was disqualified from the tournament Friday for failure to sign her scorecard. Hurlbut, who posted an 85, was playing in her first event in five weeks.

Simpson, Couples share Kemper lead

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) -Fred Couples completed a 3-under-par 69 with a birdie on the final hole and tied Scott Simpson for the lead Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 Kemper Open Golf Tournament.

Couples, 23, got his approach within six feet of the flag on the 18th hole and dropped the putt that enabled him to finish three rounds over the difficult, 7,173-yard Congressional Country Club course in 210, 6-under par.

Simpson, who led by four strokes at the turn, had to make a scrambling par from deep rough on the side of a hill on the 18th to retain a share of the top spot. Simpson, who had made only one bogey in two rounds, had three this cloudy, muggy day and shot a 74.

Tze-Chung Chen, a 24-year-old tour rookie from Taiwan who prefers to be known as T.C., was a single stroke back at 211. He closed up with a 69.

Tom Kite, often the most steady of all the tour players, was within in a single stroke of the lead before he finished bogey-bogey-bogey.

That sent Kite, who had the Tour's low stroke average the last two seasons, reeling four strokes off the pace going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize. He had a fat 76 and was fourth at 214.

GEORGE BURNS, with a 74, was the only other man under par for 54 holes. He was at 215.

The group at par 216 included Craig Stadler, the winner of this title the last two seasons, And Bean, South African Nick Price and John Mahaffey. Stadler closed up with a 69. Price shot 70. Mahaffey and Bean matched par 72.

Couples, now in his third year of PGA Tour activity, put himself in position to make a run at his first title by some spectacular scrambling.

He missed eight greens, but saved par on seven of them. He had a dozen one-putts, including 15 and 20 footers for par. Over one stretch, he one-putted seven greens in a row.

"If I'm on the practice tee hitting balls, I can't see myself, don't know what I'm doing," he said. "If I'm putting, I figure I'm working on something that may pay off.

"I'd rather make a 10-footer than hit a drive 260 yards down the middle. It's all putting is mainly the way I figure it."

AFTER MAKING bogey from a bunker on the third, he saved par on the next two holes with the long, 15-20 foot putts.

He birdied the sixth after a sand wedge shot came to rest inside of 18 inches from the flag. He missed the green and saved par on the seventh, then birdied the next three in a row, starting with a 35-foot putt on the eighth.

He got pitches close on the ninth and 10th, both par-5s, scrambled out of trouble on four more holes, then got a share of the lead on the 18th.

Simpson stretched his 36-hole lead by playing the front side in par, but lost four strokes to Couples on the back. Couples played that side in 34, while Simpson required 38 strokes. He bogeyed the 12th after missing the green, 3-putted the 14th and had to work hard for par on the last.

Hoboes find shade, shelter in 'the jungle'

By DEBBYE HALE

"Some hobos and winos and transients really are doing bad." They haven't worked five or six years, and they'll kill you" for money.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — You can see their footprints, their broken wine bottles and even a few pages ripped from "Playboy" as you hike down the dusty Missouri-Pacific railroad tracks.

They are hobos, vagrants, and they are among the 500,000 to 2 million people the U.S. Conference of Mayors describes as homeless Americans. In Arkansas, the Union Rescue Mission, which ministers to the poor, says about 1,500 of the state's 4,000 to 4,500 homeless men are hobos — people who choose that way of life.

To the north of the Mo-Pac tracks is the Arkansas River. It is noon, and a white yacht cruises by; two figures lie in lawn chairs on deck, bathing in the sun. To the south is "the jungle." It is a place where hobos find shade and shelter amid a wilderness of trees and bee-infested honeysuckle bushes.

Stumbling down the tracks, where ties are splitting with age, a hiker might mistake the jungle for an uninhabited wilderness if it were not for a narrow dirt path — one trodden by brogans and open-soled shoes.

At the path's end lies a clearing — a place where men like Don Paxton and Richard Williams sometimes sleep on flattened cardboard boxes. They cook on open fires made of rocks and wood, something like a campfire scene from a Gene Autry movie. But in a hobo camp, there's less Hollywood than jungle. A grill lies upside down on a floor of dried leaves; it is rusted and dirty. Beside it is a bent Igloo water can. A wine bottle leans against a rotting tree. The cap has been carefully replaced; there's another swig left. Across the clearing is an arched roof of vines and trees — a place to get out of the rain.

At the top of the hill are sections of a building's basement or foundation — almost cabinet-like cubicles. Hobos can find shelter here. Peering out, a person can't see the river. A teepee of railroad ties obstructs the view.

About a mile away, sitting in front of the Salvation Army, Williams said he usually stays with two or three other men for protection when he sleeps outdoors, often in an icebox crate that he bends and molds. On cold nights, a smaller box is his blanket.

"Some hobos and winos and transients really are doing bad," said Williams, 30, who carries a pistol. "They haven't worked five or six years, and they'll kill you" for money.

Some say a password is necessary to enter a hobo camp. Not so, he said. But: "If I felt I wasn't wanted, I would walk the street" or get put in jail — "the safest place in town."

Like Williams, Paxton, 49, of Southgate, Calif., carries protection — a 2-by-10 board. Whenever possible, Paxton avoids wilderness camps because mosquitoes and ticks annoy him. When he can't afford the Salvation Army's $5 nightly boarding fee, he often sleeps beneath a railroad bridge.

Paxton, whose wife was run over by a freight train last year, keeps his only possessions in a duffle bag in a locker at the Greyhound bus station. He thinks that it's safer not to carry them and that it's better to sleep alone "unless you want to get your throat cut or hit in the head."

Though Williams and Paxton occasionally find odd jobs, they often live off other people's castoffs. Williams, for example, pointed to his blue cloth shoes. They were too big for him. "In the wintertime," he said, "you might have to steal your coat" from a laundry.

It's hard to find a good job, they said, when you can't even afford to buy a toothbrush and clean up.

Sitting between Williams and Paxton was Wayne Whitener, an unemployed college graduate who's been sleeping at the Salvation Army. Eventually, he fears he, too, may have to sleep outdoors. "I guess it'll be inevitable," he said. "You're trapped here."

Young seal pups, beached during recent storms, seem to ignore food offered to them at the Marineland clinic in Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif. The survival rate for the mammals has been about 75 percent this year compared to 55 percent during a normal season.

Clinic nurses seagoing waifs

Beached pups recover at Marineland

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

RANCHO PALOS VERDES, Calif. — They were tossed up on beaches all over Southern California: young, frail sea mammals that became helpless victims of Mother Nature's wrath.

Now they have become something of an impromptu family, all brought together at Marineland in a clinic for seagoing waifs.

Scott Rutherford, dressed in gear that seems suitable for far more ferocious beasts, reached into one of the kennels and picked a sickly baby sea lion by the skin on its nape.

With a volume totally out of proportion to his size, the undernourished sea mammal let out a yelp that drew the attention of everyone nearby — and set off a chain reaction of yelping throughout the kennels. Rutherford turned to the gathering crowd and explained, "It may seem as if I'm being cruel, but they do bite." Rutherford has the scars to prove it.

He could have added that what he is doing is saving lives.

Rutherford, an assistant curator at Marineland here, along with Mike Jett and Steve Gomez, has been force-feeding more than 130 sea lions and other sea mammals that were rudely deposited on various Southern California beaches during this winter's storms. Most of them are less than a year old and had not been fully weaned when they were separated from their mothers, he said.

During an average year, the facility nurses 170 beached mammals. That total has almost been reached in the first three months of this year, Rutherford said. At the peak period during and immediately after the late February storm, Rutherford said that the number of stranded mammals reached about 12 a day.

But none of the mammals brought by various animal care centers or individuals has been turned away, he added.

The Marineland clinic was started as a joint venture with the Los Angeles County health department in 1971. Union Oil became the official sponsor in 1980.

Although the storms have probably subsided, Rutherford said the worst for the clinic is yet to come. California sea lions are generally born in late June and mid-July, and he is expecting to receive more beached pups then.

To cope with the current and expected increase, other Marineland employees have lent a hand to the facility's three-man staff.

When the sea mammals are brought to the $200,000 facility, they are often suffering from dehydration, emaciation, hypoglycemia (low blood sugar) or internal parasites such as roundworms, tapeworms or lungworms.

Treatment for the furry water creatures consists of a "fish milkshake," Rutherford said. This special concoction is a liquid mixture of ground fish. Antibiotics, vitamins and other drugs are administered as needed, he added.

The survival rate for the beached mammals has been 75 percent so far this year, compared to an average of 55 percent during a normal season, Rutherford said.

Although a "noticeable recovery" generally takes two weeks, the mammals will not regain their former strength for two to three months. As they recover, they are placed farther down in the line of kennels. Most of the recovered mammals are released back to their natural habitat while others are retained and incorporated into Marineland's entertainment attractions or transferred to zoos or oceanariums throughout the world, Rutherford said.

Other stranded [redacted] mammals residing at the facility include a harbor seal, several northern elephant seals and a variety of marine birds, some of which are already "working for their keep" in Marineland exhibits.

Photographer who was late made history

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — For a Marine, being first is a way of life.

Thirty-eight years ago, a Marine photographer named Lou Lowery made the first picture of the historic Marine flag-raising during the battle of the Japanese island of Iwo Jima — and lost out to the photographer who showed up second.

The second picture — a far better photograph of a second group of Marines placing a larger flag — was the one that stuck in the American consciousness.

Taken by an Associated Press photographer who climed up Mount Suribachi a few hours after Lowery came down, the picture was distributed nationally, and within weeks became the theme photograph for the nation's seventh World War II bond drive.

The man who shot it, Joe Rosenthal, still basks in its fame.

Lowery lives in anonymity.

The tale was relived recently when survivors of the battle for Iwo Jima held a convention here and mingled with a regular meeting of the local chapter of the Marine Corps Correspondents.

This was the story they told:

It was Feb. 23, 1945. Lowery, a sergeant assigned to cover the Iwo Jima invasion for the Marine Corps, was accompanying a 40-man patrol from the 28th Marine Regiment to the top of Mount Suribachi on the fourth day of the invasion, which had been launched in an effort to capture the 4½-square-mile Iwo Jima airfield.

It was a small flag, measuring 54 by 28 inches.

The Marines found a broken section of steel pipe the Japanese defenders had used for their water system and made it into a makeshift flagstaff.

They assembled it about 35 feet from the top of the mountain, then rushed up and put the pole in place.

Joe Rosenthal

For a few seconds the only sound was of the flag snapping in the wind. The time was 10:20 a.m.

"Then the silence was broken by the sirens and horns aboard ships in the harbor and by the cheering of Marines down the side of the mountain," Lowery, now 66, who lives in Springfield, Va., said.

Then came the gunfire.

"Apparently the sight of the flag so enraged the Japanese that they came out of their caves (heavily reinforced dwellings in the side of the mountain) and began firing at us," he said.

The combat patrol went back to the war and began flushing the enemy out of their caves.

One cave nearly became Lowery's undoing.

He approached the entrance to a cave that a Marine had just torched with a flame thrower when a Japanese soldier stuck his head out, saw Lowery and threw a hand grenade.

"There wasn't much choice at the time. I dove over the side of the mountain, rolling and sliding about 40 feet," he said.

Skinned and bleeding, but uninjured by the grenade, Lowery figured that he had enough pictures and began making his way down the mountain.

As he neared the bottom, he met Joe Rosenthal.

"He was with Sgt. Bill Genaust, who was a cinematographer, and another Marine (Pfc. Bob Campbell). I told him we had pictures of the flag raising," Lowery said.

Rosenthal "sort of looked disappointed," Lowery said, and in an effort to encourage him, Lowery said: "You should go up there. There is a hell of a view of the harbor."

Said Rosenthal, now 72 and living in San Francisco: "I remember another Marine telling me, 'You guys are too late, we've got the pictures' in a manner of saying, 'It's no use you guys going up there.' "

"I just sort of thought casually, 'I'll just see what I get when I get there.'

"I had no idea what I would get."

"I came up over the brow of a hill. I could see the flag in the breeze, fully unfurled. I tell you, I still get this feeling of a patriotic jolt when I recall seeing our flag flying up there."

Near the top, Rosenthal began trying to find the men who had raised the flag but was unable to do so.

"About this time, another group of Marines, about 50, were coming up near the top. Most of them were occupied checking out caves and firing weapons.

"At this point, I looked around and saw several Marines near where the flagpole was planted, working on another pole that was lying on the ground," Rosenthal said.

"I said, 'What's doing, fellas?' One of them said, 'We are going to take down the other flag, keep that and put up this larger flag.' I said, 'What for?' and one of them answered 'So it could be seen better by everybody.' "

The new flag, which had come from a landing ship, was 96 by 56 inches.

"I then simply walked around to where I could get a view of it," Rosenthal said.

He said the Marines were going to make a quick exchange, taking one flag down and raising the second.

He debated for a few minutes about trying to take a picture of both flags, then decided against it.

"The wheels in my head went spinning around and I simply rejected the (two flag) idea as competing (photographic) action," he said.

Genaust, the cinematographer, came over to Rosenthal's position.

"He said, 'I'm not in your way, am I Joe?' "

"As we were talking, I saw something out of the corner of my eye and I said, 'Hey Bill, there it goes,' " Rosenthal said.

"We both swung our cameras around. I held for a half-second, to get the best action, and then made the picture."

Genaust, who was killed nine days later on Iwo Jima, was also able to capture the flag-raising but ran out of movie film several seconds after it was up.

Rosenthal then made two other pictures of Marines on the mountaintop. In one of them, he had a group stand near the flag and toss their helmets up, as if in jubilation.

The other, now frozen in history, captured six Marines planting the staff of the new flag.

It was there that the controversy started.

Words of congratulations began coming Rosenthal's way. He did not know that they were for the flag-raising picture. He thought they were for the "jubilation" picture he had orchestrated.

When one person in the lab said, "That's a good picture," Rosenthal responded, "I thought so when I set it up."

The rumor that the flag placement was not spontaneous started on Guam and was picked up by a magazine correspondent.

"I was ordered back home because of the (publicity) flag picture," Rosenthal said. "I arrived in Hawaii and there was, waiting for me, an inquiry (by The Associated Press).

"The reporter had filed a story to the effect that me, by name, having arrived late on the scene, could not resist re-staging the event. And that was a terrible problem."

Thirty-eight years later, Lowery said: "I'm not bitter. I was just glad to get off that island alive."

Said Rosenthal: "It's like a discussion I once had with Lou Lowery. There may be some argument as to who is the better photographer, but there is no argument as to who is the luckier."

POSITIVE THINKING

Focus energy on problems

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

How to handle uptightness and worry is an important know-how in this hectic age. I encountered one man who did it so well that I want to tell you about him.

Peale

I was in the office of a well-known industrialist, a self-made man in the automotive industry. It was late afternoon, quitting time. I knew he had a tremendously heavy schedule, but his desk was completely clear, not a single piece of unfinished business on it. I complimented him on that. "How do you do it?" I asked him.

"Well," he said, "there was a time when I would finish up a day with papers all over my desk, each one representing an unsolved problem. I tried to figure out what was wrong, and finally came to the conclusion that I was worrying too much. I hesitated to make decisions because I worried about whether they were the right decisions. I worried about the consequences of the decisions I did make. Worry was acting as a kind of paralysis, slowing me down, holding me back and boy was I tense."

"Evidently you got rid of it," I said."How did you manage that?"

"If you watch as we leave this office," he said,"I think you'll see."

When we did leave a few minutes later, I noticed on the wall near the door a calendar, the kind where each day is indicated on a page that can be torn off and discarded. Underneath the calendar was a scrap basket. My friend paused at the door, tore off the top sheet of the calendar, and slowly crumpled it into a ball. He closed his eyes and his lips moved soundlessly. Finally he opened his hand and let the crumpled piece of paper drop into the scrap basket.

"Great invention, the wastebasket," he said with a smile. "When you want to get rid of something, all you have to do is drop it there and it is gone. So that's what I do with my worries at the end of every day. As you see, I open my hand and let the worries and the problems of the day simply disappear into the wastebasket." He snapped his fingers. "Just like that!" This struck me as a very effective procedure.

"I know there will be new problems tomorrow, but I don't worry about them. The good Lord will help me deal with them. And anyway, the energy I save by eliminating worry will be channeled into problem solving tomorrow!" That man had taken a crucial step on the road to success by asking God to be a "spiritual partner" in handling worry and uptightness. All of this spilled over into his decision making process. He discovered a new clarity of mind. Insights came, which enhanced his problem solving ability.

The old worry which had closed off much of his thought power and creativity opened up miraculously. And he seemed to feel a new support and guidance.

This man told me that he imaged the wisdom and sagacity of the Almighty being focused on his problems, untangling them, working out solutions that would appear, when the time was right, in flashes of insight or nudges of intuition in his own mind. He built his house upon a rock, knowing that when the sea of troubles swirled around it, it would still stand.

When you do that, you don't have to worry about pursuing success or happiness. They will come to you.

As we walked along the street he said, "The process of thinking, which I now use, really works. At last I'm on top of worry and tension. I am for sure and," he added, "my blood pressure doesn't jump around anymore. It's real good. And I feel terrific."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Parent's height indicates child's

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son is very small for his age (seven years old) and I'd like to know if there are any shots he can take that would make him grow taller. I am five feet tall and my husband is six inches taller, and I would like my son to be taller. — Mrs. D.L., Cleveland

Solomon

Dear Mrs. L.: I can appreciate the concern you express for your son, but I wonder whether it isn't misplaced. Parental height is an important indication of the height a child will achieve; in view of your own height and that of your husband, the fact that your son might be smaller than other boys his age does not necessarily mean that his growth is retarded.

On the other hand, it would be wrong to assume from the details you include in your letter that there is no problem, and I suggest that you check with your pediatrician. Your son's medical records will show his growth over the past few years and can serve as a basis for determining pathology.

If, in fact, your son's height is shown to be normal (despite the fact that he may be short in relation to his peers), I can only suggest that you help him to accept that fact by not making an issue of it. The truly important qualities of a person — traits such as decency, compassion, honesty, and consideration for others — have nothing to do with height.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am in my fifties and lately I have noticed some dark spots in front of my eyes. I mentioned it to my brother and he said he has the same thing, and that his doctor told him it was just part of growing older. Can I just ignore them? — Sal, Newport News, Va.

Dear Sal: It is true that in most cases the appearance of "floaters" is a normal part of the aging process; in some cases, however, the condition may be associated with detachment of the retina or some other disease. I suggest you see an opthalmologist so that the presence of a condition requiring medical attention can be ruled out.

Dear Dr. Solomon: For the past few months I have not been able to have an erection. Is it possible that this will clear up by itself? — Al, New Orleans, La.

Dear Al: You apparently assume that your condition stems from psychological rather than physical causes. The possibility of spontaneous remission would of course depend on the cause.

If you have not seen a physician, I suggest you do so. There may be some underlying condition that is contributing to your impotence. If this is the case, you should be receiving treatment rather than waiting for the condition to resolve by itself.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING ON APPLICATION FOR WASTE DISCHARGE PERMIT RENEWAL

CITY OF ODESSA, P. O. Box 4398, Odessa, Texas 79760 has applied to the Texas Department of Water Resources for a renewal for Permit No. 10238-02 which authorizes a discharge of treated wastewater effluent at a volume not to exceed a maximum flow of 6,260,000 gallons per day from the East Water Reclamation Plant which is located southeast of the City of Odessa approximately 4 miles south of the intersection of IH-20 and East Loop 338 in Midland County, Texas. The effluent is discharged into Monahan's Draw; thence to Johnson's Draw; thence into Mustang Creek; thence into Beal's Creek; thence into the Colorado River in Segment No. 1412 of the Colorado River Basin.

The permit, if renewed by the Commission, will specify conditions and limitations generally the same as those currently enforced by the existing permit, except the applicant proposes an increase in discharge of treated wastewater effluent from a volume not to exceed a maximum flow of 6,260,000 gallons per day to 7,800,000 gallons per day. The expiration date of the existing permit was August 31, 1982. It is proposed that the expiration date be specified as midnight, five years after date of Commission approval.

A Hearings Examiner of the Texas Water Commission will conduct a public hearing at 9:00 a.m. - Thursday, July 7, 1983
Odessa City Hall Council Chambers
411 West 8th Street - Odessa, Texas 79760
to receive evidence on the conditions, if any, under which the permit may be issued, and determine whether State Certification in accordance with Section 401 of the Federal Clean Water Act may be issued. This hearing will be held under the authority of Sections 26.020, 26.021 and 26.028 of the Texas Water Code, as amended, the rules of Procedure of the Texas Water Commission and the Rules of the Texas Department of Water Resources.

The record of this proceeding will include evidence and testimony taken at the public hearing. The hearing may be continued from time to time and place to place, if necessary, to develop all relevant evidence bearing on the subject of the hearing. The Texas Water Commission reserves the right to schedule or reschedule hearings as it deems necessary. Further information concerning any aspect of the application, if available, may be obtained by writing James Haley, Staff Attorney, P.O. Box 13087, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711, Telephone (512)475-7845.

Persons desiring to protest the granting of this application may file written protests with the Commission at least 8 days prior to the hearing date and shall serve copies of the written protest on the applicant and all designated parties, if any. The written protest shall: show the name and address of the protestant; identify the pending application; state the basis of the protestant's interest any relevant facts and conclusions; describe the location of the protestant's property relative to the application; and, propose any amendment or adjustment to the application which, if made, would result in withdrawal of the protest. Persons desiring to present information relating to the application must appear at the public hearing either in person or by representative and present such information, subject to all applicable rules of evidence. Information offered in written form without the writer's presence will be noted by the Commission but will not be considered as evidence since the right to cross examine is absent. No person will be admitted as a party to the proceeding unless the person complies with Commission Rules which require a justiciable interest and attendance at the hearing either in person or by qualified representative.

Issued this 19th day of May, 1983.

MIDLAND AREA

Thomas Regional Directory Company, a national leader in the publication of industrial directories is seeking an independent contractor to cover the Midland territory. Every once in a while, we find an extraordinary salesperson who thrives upon working independently, meeting challenges head on, and having no limit to their commission potential. If you pride yourself on a masterful sales track record, Thomas is offering you more than an opportunity.
The ideal candidate will have the ambition, energy and sales seasoning that have made you surpass most of your colleagues. An easy finesse in dealing with people and the demand for independence will put you in business for yourself and yet give you the benefits of working for a recognized industry leader. We realize that there are those out there, however few, that know if they were given the opportunity would succeed. We haven't grown at the pace we have because we've overlooked talent. Let us hear from you, too.

Please send resume (including salary history and cover letter) in strictest confidence to: Mr. Larry Swenson, VP Sales.

INTRODUCING THE FIRST SPORTS SEDAN CAPABLE OF REPLACING A LEGEND.

The BMW 320i was once designated by Car and Driver magazine as "the sort of car enthusiasts turn into legend."

Now, after six years of refinement, BMW introduces the rightful heir to that legend—the new 318i.

With improvements in road holding, fuel injection, braking, aerodynamics, technology, and comfort, the 318i is, as AutoWeek noted, a "dramatic" advance in the evolution of the sports sedan.

To experience it, contact us for a test drive.

It's Not Necessary To Sacrifice Quality Apartment Living For Lower Rates

At Fairmont Apartments we have now reduced rates on all our 1 and 2 bedroom flats and studios, but we won't sacrifice quality maintenance and management for lower rates! We still offer superior apartment living in a congenial environment. Our landscaped grounds, swimming pool and tennis courts is the perfect setting for this all-adult community. Come by and let us show you how quality apartment living can be affordable. We're now open Saturday 9am-5pm and Sunday 1-5 pm.

PET cemetery

Text
By Diane Booth
Photos
by Ron Jaap

Nu was Mrs. Frances Metcalfe's "best friend" and "beloved companion," so it was only natural for the Midland woman to hold a graveside memorial service for her sidekick when she died.

What is unusual is that Nu was the Midland's woman's two-pound, black teacup poodle.

For nine years, the frisky dog was "the love of my life," said Mrs. Metcalfe. Her miniature poodle, Bridgette, is buried beside Nu. A statue of St. Francis Assisi holding a bird, which was taken from Mrs. Metcalfe's garden, watches over the two graves.

The dog fancier, who shares her home with three poodles, plans to bury them at the cemetery when the time comes.

"They are part of my family and some of my best friends," she said. "They are a big part of my life. Your pets deserve a proper burial just like people do."

(See PETS, Page 2E)

Mrs. Frances Metcalfe visits Nu and Bridgette who are buried in the Permian Basin Pet Cemetery. The poodle lover believes pets deserve a proper burial.

Pasha, a member of the Mitchell family for 18 years, has been catnapping here since 1978.

Ed Armstrong

Pets...

Pet cemeteries are for people who take loving care of their pets in life, said Ed Armstrong, the cemetery owner. "They want to take final care of the animals when they die."

Pet owners who want their cats, canaries and chihuahuas buried in a pet cemetery, he said, "are unequivocably devoted pet owners."

Not far from Mrs. Metcalfe's poodles' graves, Mildred Owen of Midland has buried six dogs beneath a tree. She purchased four more spaces for her other dogs when they die. Stone markers tell where Teenie, Ginger, Terry, Brownie, Buddy Boy and Ginger Lea rest in peace.

Three pots of artificial white lilies decorate the family burial plots. According to Armstrong, Mrs. Owen brings new plastic arrangements to the grounds once a month and frequently perks up the area with several American flags.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Reynolds, who raise elkhounds, buried their treasured Nikki at the cemetery and bought enough space to bury five more dogs.

Nearby is a memorial to "Stormy," Dorothy Kurtz's beagle, who died at 8 years of age in 1976. The marker is inscribed with this message: "Mama will always miss you, big girl."

One of the more well-known pets buried at the cemetery is Arco, a German Shepherd. The trained dog earned the classification of "schutzhund," which is the highest rating for his line, said Armstrong.

The shepherd fathered several of the dogs used by the Midland Police Department, according to Armstrong.

The longevity record for a pet buried at the cemetery is held by "Pretty Polly," a parrot owned by Cal Glass. The fine-feathered pet lived to be 80 years old.

Not only are cats and all breeds of dogs from terriers to St. Bernards buried side-by-side in the cemetery, but parakeets, boa constrictors and even ferrets, an animal akin to the weasel, are there too.

Although the cemetery handles almost any domestic pet, Armstrong said, "We don't get into horses. There is just no room for them. They would eat up all the room."

Chamois, a snowy-white ferret from Andrews, passed away Monday and is one of the newest residents among the markers, Amstrong said.

The first pet was laid to rest at the cemetery about 1950 and since then several thousand domestic animals have been buried on the grassy four acres, Armstrong said. The facility can accomodate new pet graves for another 25 years, he said, based on current occupancy rates.

Established in about 1948 by a humane organization, Armstrong said, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals assumed control of the cemetery. In 1980, Armstrong bought the cemetery.

Formerly employed by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, Armstrong is studying for his master's degree in behavioral science at the University of Texas Permian Basin.

Running the cemetery, the animal lover said, gives him a chance to "base his operations here," while he earns his degree. He hopes to conduct studies in animal behavior in the future.

The operation is not a profitable one, he said, but Armstrong said he enjoys the work because of his devotion to animals. He has several dogs, a seven-foot king snake and two cats including, a tortoise-shell who scouts the cemetery for mice, birds and anything else that moves.

Pet burial costs, based on the animal's size, are enough to cover maintenance at the cemetery, he said. The fee is a one-time charge, he said. There are no additional bills for upkeep.

Burying a cat costs $75-$85, Armstrong said, and the price tag for dogs starts at $85 and goes up to about $150.

Local humane organizations and the S.P.C.A. help to maintain the grounds, Armstrong said. "They have really worked hard to preserve this place."

When a pet dies, the owner or veterinarian contacts Armstrong on his pager or answering service. He is starting an ambulance service for pets called Pet Tenders which would transport a sick or injured animal to a veterinarian or carry a dead animal to the cemetery.

A Midland city ordinance forbids residents from burying pets in their backyards or on property not designated as a pet cemetery, Armstrong said.

If a dog or cat succumbs at home, he said he attempts to pick it up as soon as possible. "The owner doesn't want to be sitting around with a dead pet. That's too traumatic."

The cemetery owner handles pets from all over including Big Spring, Andrews, Odessa and Colorado City.

The body is laid out with "some semblance of respect," Armstrong said. He always buries an animal on its left side with the head pointing south. There is no meaning behind his technique, Armstrong said. "It is just a thing I started."

The body is wrapped in a biodegradable plastic filament or bag, and is usually interred the day it is readied for burial.

Concrete headstones made at the cemetery are placed on each pet's grave, Armstrong said, or the owner can order a bronze or granite marker at an additional cost.

Names found on markers around the cemetery vary from the unusual — Blimp — to the usual — Sassie, Baby and Butch. Luckey, Mitch, Jezebel, Honey Bear and Chico are right next to Baron and Caesar. Winky and Inky are neighbors.

"Every cotton pickin' name a person could come up with is out here," Armstrong said.

Whether Spot or Kitty is a fancy or plain old pet, his owner is probably devoted to those big, droopy brown eyes or that conversational meow.

Although Armstrong said people do not know much about the relationship between themselves and their pets, he said people do take on their pet's traits and pets learn human traits.

Because pets are dependent on their owners, he said, "people allow their pets to take over their lifestyles."

Pet owners choose to bury their loved ones as a final gesture of their devotion, Armstrong said. "Pets get cared for and loved for what they give. People are close to their pets because the love returned by a pet is a pure form of love."

Teens have healthy babies

Hearst Feature Service

Although smaller, the babies of teen-age mothers are healthier and smarter than the newborns of older mothers, according to a study by two University of Michigan researchers.

The largest study of its kind ever conducted in the United States shows that newborns and infants of teen-age mothers scored higher in physical and mental development tests than the offspring of women in their 20s. The findings dispel widely-held scientific and medical beliefts that teen-age pregnancy presented health risks to both mother and child. Instead, the study, reported in the April issue of American Journal of Diseases of Children, suggests that just the opposite may be true.

"Teen-agers are well-equipped biologically to have a child," said Dr. Stanley Garn, co-author of the 20-year study. But Garn, a professor of nutrition and member of the Center for Human Growth and Development at Michigan, added, "This does not mean we should encourage 13-year-olds to become pregnant."

Garn said the study proved newborns of teens are smaller than average because of the mother's size, not of her age.

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The Minuet Club will present fifteen young women at its 27th annual debutante ball November 26 in Midland Country Club, president Suzy (Mrs. Jim) Boldrick has announced. The debutantes will be entertained at parties throughout the summer months and during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays.

The 1983 debs are:

Margie Britton, daughter of Libby and Hill Britton, who plans to attend the University of Arizona. She is being sponsored by her aunt and uncle, Susan and Ronald Britton.

Kelly McCrary, who attends Midland College and is being presented by her grandparents, Sue and Frank Houghton.

Michal Marcum, daughter of Margaret and Gordon Marcum, who is studying at Texas A&M University.

Julie Norris, daughter of Jeanette and Terry Stallter and granddaughter of Eileen and Rosy Stallter, who will attend Texas Tech this fall. Eileen was president when the first group of debutantes was presented in 1956. She is currently secretary-treasurer.

Heather Trotter, daughter of Yvonne and Dr. Bill Trotter and planning to attend North Texas State University this fall.

DR. JOE WARREN surprised his wife, Ava Jane, on their 25th wedding anniversary Thursday with a cocktail buffet in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club.

The Warrens were married on June 2, 1958, in Shreveport and moved to Midland in 1960, when Joe established his dental practice here. Ava Jane is director of the Girl Scout Program Center. They have two daughters, who are both studying for their master's degrees. Diana is a student at the University of Oregon in Eugene, and Kaki is at Vanderbilt in Nashville.

Co-hosts for the party were Tressye and Joe Burrell. Special guests invited for the occasion were the best man, Cumbie Ivey Jr. of Robert Lee, Texas; the maid of honor, Ginger (Mrs. Warren) Didion of Houston; Ava Jane's mother, Ava (Mrs. Marshall) Martin Sr., and her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Martin Jr., all of Shreveport.

The silver anniversary theme was carried out in the invitations and decor, including a beautiful wedding cake. A display of wedding pictures and other mementos were a conversation piece.

TO HONOR long-time Midlander, Tany (Mrs. T.N.) Sloan, a cocktail buffet was given by her son and daughter-in-law, Tom and Mary Ann Sloan, recently at their home. A strolling mariachi band entertained the guests, who enjoyed the beautiful spring evening on the Sloan's patio and gazebo.

LONG-TIME FRIENDS Virginia (Mrs. Billie) Gilbert of Midland and Gladys (Mrs. W.W.) Thomason of Denver City have returned from a memorable visit to the Holy Land, Egypt and Greece. Traveling with a group of 30 led by Virginia's nephew, Methodist minister Rev. Jerry Vogt of Wichita, Kansas, they flew from New York City to Rome for the start of their 15-day journey.

After touring the Italian capital, they went on to Jordan, where from Mount Nebo, they gazed at the Promised Land as Moses did 3,300 years ago. By horseback, they went to the ancient city of Petra. Going on to Israel, they visited many of the familiar cities and sites of the Bible.

In Egypt, their tour included Cairo, the Pyramids, Luxor and Thebes. Highlights of Greece were Athens, the ancient city of Corinth and a tour of three Greek islands.

DON BROWN, who has received his MBA from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, was honored by his wife, Gale, with a graduation party in their home. Guests included his Dowell co-workers, as well as friends from Midland nd Monahans, where the couple formerly lived.

AN ITALIAN DINNER recently honored Lee High graduate Kim Portele. Hostesses were Dolores (Mrs. Donald) Gunn, Betty (Mrs. Gil) Naert, Joan (Mrs. Gene) Nivens and Marjorie (Mrs. Sam) Snoddy in the latter's home. Special guests were the honoree's mother, Evelyn (Mrs. T.J.) Portele, and her sister, Elaine (Mrs. Bryan) Vinson.

Wedding gowns at club luncheon

A review of wedding dresses dating from 1925 to today will be highlighted at a luncheon held by the Midland Christian Women's Club at noon, Wednesday, at Midland Country Club.

Models wearing their families' dresses will include Karen Scharbauer, Debbie Vasicek, Dee Holly, Diana Hewett and Missy Rasnick. The wedding dresses of Mrs. John P. Butler and Mrs. Sam Conner will also be featured.

Music will be provided by Mrs. Robert Pollard, who will perform a solo, accompanied on piano by Mrs. Watson La Force.

The speaker will be Gennie McAferty, a Grapevine homemaker. Married to a former Braniff Airlines pilot, she will talk about the trials of unemployment.

Cost of the luncheon is $10. Mothers who bring children to the nursery at Midland Bible Church should provide a sack lunch. Call 682-5851 or 683-7074 by Monday for luncheon reservations or free nursery care. The public is invited.

Broiler muffins

GRANNY MUFFIN SNACKS

4 English muffins, split
½ cup peanut butter
2 Granny Smith apples, cored and thickly sliced
6 ounces Cheddar cheese, cut into ¼-inch strips

Invert and spread each half with 1 tablespoon of peanut butter. Top each muffin with apple slices. Place strips of cheese on top.

Broil three to five minutes or until cheese melts. Makes four servings.

Hormone linked to lupus

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Seven women stricken by the potentially-fatal disease known as "lupus" are being treated with the male hormone testosterone because their bodies don't have enough of it, researchers told a medical conference here.

"The fundamental question is whether testosterone protects against lupus or its absence makes the disease work," Dr. Robert G. Lahita said at a Thursday meeting sponsored by the Arthritis Foundation.

More than 100,000 Americans, predominantly women of child-bearing age, have systemic lupus erythematopsus (lupus or SLE) — a disorder of the body's immune system that may affect the joints, skin, kidneys.

Nine times as many women as men have the disease, and researchers have been experimenting with hormones in an effort to find out why.

According to the results from a research team at Rockefeller University in New York, women with SLE have a defect in the way their bodies use testosterone, which all women have in their bodies in lesser quantities than the female hormone, estrogen.

"The decrease in testosterone and the increase in the feminizing compound may explain why women are preferentially getting the disease over men," Lahita said.

However, he stressed that testosterone treatment of women with lupus is not a final solution to the disease.

Removing ring sign of trouble

"Losing" a wedding ring, "forgetting" to wear it, getting a rash on the finger so one is "forced" to stop wearing it or losing-gaining weight so the ring doesn't fit are examples of what Dr. Barry Berkey calls "wedding ring syndrome."

The psychiatrist believes that what happens to the ring is an indication of what may be happening to the marriage.

"Usually, removal of a wedding ring for a prolonged period represents marital disharmony even if both husband and wife deny it consciously."

Valid reasons exist, of course, for taking off the wedding ring. People often remove wedding bands for safety reasons, or due to illness such as arthritis. But in those cases, the ring is returned to the finger as soon as possible. — CNS

Hugh Hefner's daughter corporate pioneer

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Christie Hefner, 30, daughter of the man who gave us Playboy and all of its various enterprises, is a pioneer in the board room. As one of the few women heading major American corporations, she is attempting to respond to the changes in the work force by embracing management techniques that reflect respect for employees, their private lives and their obligations to their families.

"If you establish a philosophy that people who get ahead are those who are never home with their families, you're not going to have a very healthy company or very healthy workers," she said in a speech this week to the Washington chapter of Women in Communications.

Hugh Hefner's only daughter was named president of Playboy Enterprises in April of last year, after eight years of on-the-job training in the corporation. Her credentials are impressive: She was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in her junior year at Brandeis University, and graduated summa cum laude with a degree in English and American literature. She worked for a year for the Boston Phoenix and then went to work at Playboy in 1975 as special assistant to her father, who is chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the corporation.

In her speech, she tackled the delicate issue of who she is and what she does by describing herself as an oxymoron. "Like jumbo shrimp. Or for those who travel a lot, airline food. Some people think being a woman president of Playboy enterprises is an oxymoron. Being president of Playboy is not as easy or ideologically pure as editing Ms. But here I am in Washington, D.C., and from my point of view it's not as hard as being a Republican woman right now." The company, she points out, has given financial support to such feminist causes as abortion rights. "No matter how you feel about erotic pictures," says Hefner, "it's a company that has a pretty good track record on women's issues."

Christie Hefner runs a corporation that does about $200 million in sales annually and employs 1,700 people in its four divisions. The publishing division puts out Playboy and Games magazines and the nine international editions of Playboy and is, she says, the largest overseas distributor of American magazines and books. The video division does programming for cable television, video cassettes and the Playboy channel. Playboy products division puts out everything from sunglasses to athletic footwear, selling domestically and overseas. The fourth division runs the 15 Playboy clubs and has a half interest in the Playboy hotel and casino in Atlantic City. Playboy lost money last year and she does not expect to make a profit this year, but the company is moving out of the leisure time entertainment field and focusing more on communications, she says, and its stock is going up. "This is our year of transition."

While the company does not offer job sharing, it has a permanent part-time work force of people who work 20 or 30 hours a week. Hefner's mother, for example, works four days a week in the personnel department, which allows her to adjust her days off to those of her husband's. Flextime exists throughout the company. Full-time benefits are offered to part-time employes in response, says Hefner, to the needs of mothers with young children who wanted to work part time. "They wanted to continue to have their seniority and profit-sharing and access to benefits. We had the feeling people going through that transition should continue to have their time in the company and their seniority be recognized." She thinks in the future even more workers will want to be employed only part time.

Hancock Anniversary

Earl and Lovell Hancock

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Hancock of Midland celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Saturday at Christian Life Center. The anniversary party was hosted by their children — Jerry P. Hancock of El Paso and Earline Hancock of Dallas — grandchildren and their families.

The former Lovell Henley of Henryetta, Oklahoma married Earl Hancock in Okmulgee, Oklahoma on June 3, 1933. They transferred to Midland with Southwestern Bell Telephone Company in 1950.

Mr. and Mrs. Hancock have two children and six grandchildren.

Strawberry, champagne brunch duo

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

When the topic of the day is strawberries, can champagne or Riesling be far behind?

The strawberry is to the fruit world what champagne is to wine: Both are sybaritic delights, neither is inexpensive, but both are worth splurging on, now and then. And when they are matched at a Sunday brunch, it's hard to remember the frustrations of the past week, or the one to come.

Unfortunately, most Sunday brunches at restaurants around the United States offer poor quality strawberries (or, heaven forbid, none at all), and poorer quality sparkling wine. So the best thing to do is do it yourself.

I prefer strawberry crepes, very lightly sweetened, as the main dish of such a brunch (along with all the other accouterments, of course). And to start: a glass of premium champagne with two fresh strawberries inside.

The champagne that most restaurants serve is Andre, and I find that that sparkling wine is a bit sweet for my palate — though it is the most popular selling sparkling wine in the United States, selling some 5 million cases a year.

Drier sparkling wine can enhance the natural sweetness of the strawberry, and I prefer something on the order of Korbel Extra Dry or Mirassou Extra Dry, both in the $9 a bottle price range. For those who prefer even drier styles, the best would include Piper-Sonoma Brut or Blanc de Noirs, Sebastiani Brut Three-Star, Domaine Chandon Blanc de Noirs, and Mirassou Brut.

The main difference between the Andre-style sparkling wines and the others is the high level of acidity in the better wines.

Husband hunters caught in squeeze

Women born between 1947 and 1954 hold the dubious distinction of having the hardest time finding mates out of all the women born in the 20th century, according to a University of Southern California sociologist.

Dr. David Heer calls it a "marriage squeeze," a cyclical phenomenon, alternately affecting men and then women. It has to do with the number of men and women born in every given year.

Women born in 1947, for example, will tend to look to men born between 1944 and 1945 for mates. The problem arises because there were 3.8 million babies born in 1947, in the famous postwar "baby boom," but only 2.8 million babies born in 1945.

Make stains disappear

— For kids grass-stained pants, pour some corn syrup on the stain, rub lightly and toss into the washer.

— For baby formula stains, rub a paste of unseasoned meat tenderizer on the stain, roll the clothes up and wait a few hours before washing.

— Remove ink stains by rubbing whole milk into the spot and launder as usual. For more stubborn ink stains, saturate the area with hairspray, let set for a few moments and then rub with a clean, dry cloth. This might take several applications, but the ink usually disappears if the person laundering the clothing perseveres.

Birthday jewels perfect gift for bridesmaids, best man

Copley News Service

Trying to think of a gift for your bridesmaids, ushers or best man? A gift that will last forever and show your gratitude? Why not give each girl a pendant, pin or ring bearing her birthstone? For men — a tie tack, cuff links or ring.

January, garnet

If you can keep a cool head even when those around you lose theirs and blame you, you were probably born in January, according to gem lore. The stone associated with January, the garnet, charms with a deep rich red or purple-red color and is said to help you maintain your cool.

February, amethyst

You can be the life of the party and imbibe your share of spirits, yet awake the morning after bright-eyed and bushy tailed. You can, that is, if you were born in February, according to folklore. February's stone, the amethyst, which ranges from pale lilac to deep violet, is named after the Greek word for "not drunk" — "amethystos." The amethyst is also thought to sharpen the wits and bring success in business.

March, aquamarine

You are fearless and ready to tame lions before breakfast, for you were born in March. Women born in March have the greenish-blue to crystal-blue aquamarine as their talisman. Male counterparts are bequeathed with the dark-green, red-spotted bloodstone. The stones are said to impart courage and wisdom.

April, diamond

If all politicians were born in April, all politicians would be honest. April's birthstone, the diamond, is said to make those born in April incorruptible. It is the hardest of all natural substances and is beloved for its brilliant fire. The dazzling stone also brings power, riches and success, according to ancient belief.

May, emerald

They say love is blind, but the birthstone favored by the goddess of love can improve eyesight for those born in May, according to gem lore. May's stone and Venus' favorite gem is the clear-green emerald. Fine emeralds are extremely hard to find, so carat for carat they may be more valuable than diamonds, reports the Jewelry Industry Council.

June, pearl

The pearl, a June gem, brings out that healthy glow, according to folk belief. The birthstone's round shape and subtle glow endears the pearl to the moon goddess, Diana. Pearls glow subtly in a range of hues from white to black.

July, ruby

The ruby promises those born in July peaceful, sunny lives, according to Hindu legend. The red-hot, colored ruby is dedicated to high noon and midsummer. The Hindus believed that the stone would shelter them from discord and storms and keep them mentally and physically fit.

August, peridot

According to ancient lore, the August birthstone — peridot — will make you as eloquent as a great statesman. The stone is transparent, bright olive green to golden-colored; the greener the gem, the greater its value. Peridot also guarantees pleasant dreams and guards against things that go bump in the night, legend says.

September, sapphire

If your thoughts are as limpid and lofty as the heavens, you were probably born in September, birthstone lore says. This best of September's stone, sapphire, is called Kashmir because many stones of clear, nighttime sky-blue color are found in that Eastern region. Attractive sapphires also come in yellow, brown, violet, green and pink.

October, opal

If you're vain about your blond hair and want to keep it golden, you're in luck if you were born in October. The opal is said to keep yellow hair from fading or darkening. Opals are characterized by a play of varied colors. White opals can flash red, orange, green, yellow and blue. These colors — plus purple — highlight black, dark blue or gray stones, the most valuable ones, notes the Jewelry Industry Council.

November, topaz

True-blue friends may be hard to find, but chances are their birthstone is topaz. The topaz is said to make those born in November loyal to friends. Although the transparent stone is usually associated with a golden hue, the most valuable topaz is a luminous sherry brown. The gem is also said to reward those born in November with long life, intelligence and beauty.

December, turquoise

Surefootedness and horseback riding come easily to those whose birthstone is turquoise, according to legend. December's stone is a talisman for preventing falls, especially from horses. Southwestern American Indians believed that turquoise embodied sea and sky spirits. The finest turquoise is high-pitched medium blue.

Thelma and I.R. "Boots" Johnston

Johnston Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. I.R. "Boots" Johnston of Midland celebrated their 50th anniversary Saturday at an open house for family and close friends hosted by their son and daughter-in-law, Jerry and Connie Johnston.

The former Thelma Mitchell married Mr. Johnston on June 7, 1933 in Lake Charles, Louisiana. They now have one son, four grandchildren and one great-grandson.

Drug soothes panic ills

Hearst Feature Service

A drug that represents a new direction in panic-attack treatment is being tested in five U.S. hospitals. If Alprazolam, which goes by the trade name Xanax, is effective, it would be the first medication specifically approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for treatment of panic attack. The drug also is being tested in Europe, Canada, Mexico and Australia.

Experts describe panic attacks as "sudden crescendos of fear and apprehension," a quick rush of anxiety that hits unexpectedly, leaving its victims badly shaken. Once the attacks begin, they generally reach full intensity within one minute, then cease just as quickly and mysteriously.

But the effects are often lingering. As victims restrict their daily activities to avoid another episode, the fear of having another attack becomes as important as the attack itself, and tasks like driving a car often can turn into terrifying experiences.

Dr. Ira Lesser, a psychiatrist with Harbor-University of California-Los Angeles Medical Center, which is testing the drug as part of the most comprehensive study ever conducted into the pathophysiology of panic, calls it a "fear of fear" syndrome. In its worst manifestations, it can lead to agoraphobia, in which its victims are too frightened to even leave the house.

The international study, sponsored by Upjohn Co., will involve 1,500 subjects. Besides testing the effectiveness of the drug, researchers will look into other aspects of the disorder, such as possible links to depression, the role of genetic factors, and their impact on the families of victims.

Alprazolam will be given to test subjects in steadily increasing dosages for eight weeks, with half of the subjects receiving placebos. If subjects respond to the medication, it will be administered for another four months as part of a follow-up study. "It's the first intense look we've had at the disease," says Dr. Robert Rubin, a psychiatrist at Harbor-UCLA and a leading neuroendocrinologist. "Nobody has looked at this large a number of people with panic attacks before." Panic attacks have only begun to be closely studied in the last few years. The variety of treatments indicates differences of opinion and a lack of knowledge about the nature of the disorder.

Some therapists say panic attacks are phobias that can be treated by "desensitizing" patients — in other words, curing a "fear of freeways" by gradually acclimating a patient to driving on one — while others believe they're brought on by a chemical imbalance in the brain and can be stopped only with drugs.

Millions of Americans are hit by these sudden bursts of helpless terror or impending disaster. An article in the Archives of General Psychiatry said that 2 million Americans suffer from the most severe form of panic attacks, with an estimated annual price tag of more than $100 million a year in long-term unemployment, disability benefits and health-care costs.

Rubin notes that both of the antidepressant drugs now in use have potentially dangerous side effects. One medication is potentially toxic to heart patients. It also can produce a so-called paradoxical effect that causes a "super panic attack" in about one out of five patients. A second drug requires users to maintain a strict diet that's too restrictive for many people.

Modern dentists treat patients' fears before teeth

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Faster than a speeding drill, able to leap tall patients with a single bound. Look up in the dentist's office, it's a bird, it's a plane, no, it's Dr. Supertooth!

Every morning, before leaving home, Stephen J. Howard gets into his work outfit. He slips into white tights and blue trunks, puts on white wrestling boots and fastens a red cape.

Both the cape and the front of the costume show a tooth, for Howard is a dentist in Southern California. He goes by the name of Dr. Supertooth.

"A lot of dentists couldn't handle working like this," he said in the understatement of the year. "I don't mind it a bit. I guess that for Halloween I should wear a shirt and tie."

Not only does he work in the costume, he goes out to lunch in it, and remains thusly clad as he sometimes stops off at the supermarket on the way home. Comments from passers-by bounce away like bullets off Superman's chest: "Where's Lois Lane?" "Shouldn't you be in a phone booth?"

BUT WHEN YOU are a pediatric dentist, which Howard is, you give the kids what they want. And if your practice includes adults, you do likewise, as more and more members of the profession across the nation are discovering.

"In addition to offering several other extras, I furnish my patients the use of tape cassette players with headsets while I am working," said Dr. Stephen H. Hook.

"I have one woman who has run through all my comedy tapes, and brings her own. The problem is that she laughs so hard, the chair shakes."

Better a shaky chair than a shaky dental business.

"We are seeing a whole movement in the profession toward dealing with the psyche of the patient in addition to his or her physical needs," explained Marci Judd, public information manager of the California Dental Association.

Thus when Dr. John Puttkammer opened his new offices in Lawrence Welk Village in Escondido, Calif., in April, he personally designed the plans to include a putting green in the reception room.

The area allows a maximum putt of 18 inches over an Astro Turf floor and toward a wall-photo mural showing autumn trees. A selection of putters is supplied by the dentist. Scorecards are not checked.

"I FIGURED IT would be an alternative to sitting there and reading two-year-old magazines," Puttkammer said. "A lot of my patients are golfers. Some of them even hang around after their treatment to work on their game. The only complaint I've gotten is that the hole on the green is three inches, which is slightly smaller than on a course."

Such is the new ambiance in dentistry that more than one patient nowadays — be it child or adult — lingers afterward.

Take the Oxnard, Calif., offices of Dr. Barry Cantor and Dr. Mark Lisagor, pediatric dentists. A year ago they enlisted the services of architect Margo Hebald-Heymann to transform a visit to their premises by youngsters into a space adventure.

"After registering at a preflight check-in counter, the children while away their time at the controls of a spaceship panel, or watch tapes on a huge television screen, or play free video games," Cantor said.

"When it comes time for treatment, the child commands 'Open wide,' and a nurse pushes a button activating the doors to an aluminum time warp tunnel," the dentist went on. "The patient either emerges into Invader Detection for X-rays or settles into a flight chair in Pedo Bay for treatment."

THE CHAIR, he said, has remote controls operating stereo headphones and an overhead TV monitor shows the teeth being worked on.

"To create a spaceship effect, I designed large overhead portholes simulating by means of lights a starry sky," explained architect Hebald-Heymann.

Cantor said that the important thing was that it was a "non-threatening" atmosphere for a kid. And so successful has the approach been that the two dentists have retained the architect to design a facility, which Cantor disclosed will draw on the theme of Starship Enterprise in "Star Trek."

"Be it an eye-catching theme or an idea, a comfortable temperature in the office, courtesy by the staff, pleasing colors on the walls — the whole point is to distract the patient from the reason he came to the dentist in the first place," said Judd of the California Dental Association.

"WE HAVE TWO dental conventions every year," she continued. "If you looked at a program 10 years ago you would have found almost all scientific presentations. At every convention now there is always at least one presentation dealing with the psychological needs of the patient.

"Fifty percent of the population doesn't visit a dentist regularly. We know that one of the main reasons they don't is fear. If we can make the visit a positive and pleasant experience, we have overcome that fear."

Bob Goodman accomplishes it with dolls.

More than 1,000 dental practices in 42 states and in England, Israel, Japan and Canada make use of soft sculptures such as Sore Tooth, Sweet Tooth, Little Slugger, the Tooth Fairy, Wisdom Tooth, Ms. Hygiene, each one of the footlong cuddly creatures resembling a tooth.

Goodman's company, Patients Plus Inc., started distributing the $15 dolls about a year ago and met with instant success.

"SOME DENTISTS HAVE them suspended from the ceiling," he said. "But they (the dolls, not the dentists) are very squeezable, and many patients like to do just that during a procedure. There is a term called white-knuckling the chair. The squeezing allows a sublimation of negative energy."

One who swears by the critters is Dr. Fred Grosso, who said that he had gone through more than 100 of them in the last six months.

"Once a month we have a drawing for one," said Grosso, whose office has them dangling from the ceiling and from lamps in the operatories. "I give them for referrals. Sometimes, when we don't keep track, kids walk out with them."

Another practitioner, Judd said, has his reception area in the motif of a hot-air balloon, complete with an appropriate covering on the ceiling. The various operatories have clouds overhead, suggesting that the patient is sailing away.

Dr. William A. Ayer, assistant director for the Behavioral Sciences Division of the American Dental Association in Chicago, said by phone that some dentists are using biofeedback techniques, training patients to control their breathing and blood pressure.

"About 5 percent of the U.S. population are dental phobics, that is they have an extremely irrational fear of dentistry," Ayer said. "In many cases, systematic desensitization via behavioral therapy is being used to get them to relax.

"This involves gradually exposing the patient to what he was fearful of — in imaginal form while he or she is relaxed."

MORE DOWN TO EARTH — or more accurately beyond earth — is increased usage of video games in the offices. Ayer said that in many instances the joysticks are mounted right on the arm of the chair.

One local evangelist for this is Dr. Scott Jacks. A year ago he had five arcade video games on the premises for free use by patients. Now, having just moved into a new location, he has a dozen on hand.

Even the office language of the New Dentistry, as it were, is undergoing changes. Seldom is heard a discouraging word.

"Rather than taking a needle and saying he is going to stick you," Judd said, "the wording now is probably something to the effect that 'This may be a little uncomfortable.'"

The only thing uncomfortable in the setup of Stephen Howard, aka Dr. Supertooth, is the costume he has inflicted on himself.

"I make only one concession, and that is to the summer weather," he admitted. "When that comes, because I go outside every day, I wear a modified outfit of shorts instead of the long tights, plus a short-sleeved leotard."

OTHER THAN THAT, when the small fry come in, they get the full performance.

"This is Benjamin's first visit ever to a dentist, and he's been talking all morning about going to see Dr. Supertooth," said Keith Schmitz, his 3-year-old son in tow in the dentist's office.

The two of them were in a waiting room that the dentist prefers calling the "family room." Soon, as the father was filling out a new patient form, the boy was immersed in a Mickey Mouse cartoon slide show being flashed onto a screen.

A nearby newspaper cartoon taped to the wall showed Dennis the Menace pointing to his mouth and telling an ice cream vendor: "See how loose it is. Soon as it comes out, the tooth fairy will give me the money to pay you."

Then the big moment arrived. An assistant instructed Benjamin on the challenge of crawling up into the big blue dental chair, and fitted him with a pair of stereo headsets and a book, so that he could follow the story line of the "Star Wars" tape to which he was listening.

Should that approach have failed, there were all manner of alternatives on hand — a simplified Rubik's cube, a drawing game, water basketball. In one hand the son clutched his toy motorcycle.

It was showtime.

IN FULL REGALIA entered the 35-year-old Dr. Supertooth, himself the father of two small children, his professional credentials including former board chairmanship of Dental Health for the San Fernando Valley (Calif.) Dental Society.

"Ben, how you doing?" he asked brightly.

"I'm going to take you backward in the chair," the dentist continued. "Here we go. Don't go to sleep on me."

Peering into the patient's mouth, he intoned, as an assistant took notes: "Slight inflammation. This tooth needs filling...." The father, seated alongside, was invited to take a look for himself.

X-rays were taken. Before the child departed, he was given a red balloon filled from a helium tank on the spot, plus a toothbrush encased in a plastic holder shaped like a dachshund.

Later, over pizza at lunch, the dentist recalled how he had come up with the costume approach.

"I HAD BEEN WEARING one while giving programs for preschoolers in my spare time. If you want to keep their attention, you have to present material at a level they will accept.

"Parents started asking me if I would portray Dr. Supertooth when their child came in — and we would stipulate it that way in the appointment book.

"So about 18 months ago I asked a tailor to custom-make two costumes (wash and wear) that I could have on while working. He asked me if I was crazy."

Dr. Supertooth, who competes in triathlons, is even a crime buster. A while back, as he was arriving in full uniform for work one morning, a man who had just robbed the building's pharmacy was fleeing down the hallway.

When the thief saw the sight in front of him, he stopped dead in his tracks, then went into overdrive on foot and headed for his car, Howard in frantic pursuit. Right out of a comic book.

A secretary in the building saw the chase, took down the license number of the getaway car, and the robber was later arrested.

So much for heroics. Whenever Dr. Supertooth finds his ego getting out of hand, he is brought back to earth by instances such as the time he was walking to his car and a kid asked:

"Are you a singing telegram?"

Scientists study cancer in China

DETROIT (AP) — The high incidence of certain cancers in families in China which have lived in the same area and eat the same diet for centuries is giving scientists a unique opportunity to study the relationship of diet, environment and cancer, researchers said Sunday.

To take advantage of that opportunity, Chinese researchers recently undertook the largest statistical survey of cancer ever. Some 700,000 workers were sent to all parts of China to question residents about their histories, habits, diet and health.

The data collected by those workers can now be analyzed to determine, for example, whether people with a given form of cancer have diets different from those without that cancer. Because of the geographic stability of the Chinese population, the study is more valuable in some respects than studies done in this country, researchers said.

"It provides insights into how cancers develop," said Dr. Thomas London of the Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia. "When you do a study in Philadelphia, half of those people haven't been there for five years and half won't be there in five years."

The situation is much different in China, says Dr. Wu Min of the Chinese Academy of Medical Sciences in Peking. "The Chinese people are inclined to stay where they were born for generations, for centuries," he said.

"One reason it is almost impossible to do diet studies in the United States is if you ask somebody what they ate 20 years ago, the answer is meaningless," London said.

But in many parts of China, diets seldom change, he said, and thus researchers can establish relatively accurate statistical correlations between diet and the incidence of cancer.

Chinese scientists have confirmed, for example, that a substance called aflatoxin, produced by fungus that grows in corn, rice and peanuts, is strongly linked to liver cancer, London said.

"Within a county where there's a lot of liver cancer, they (Chinese scientists) tested the rice, corn and peanuts for aflatoxin levels and ther!appeared to be a very good correlation between aflatoxin and liver cancer," London said. If the study is correct, London said, it is the strongest indictment of aflatoxin yet.

Center teaches Polynesian culture

Copley News Service

It might seem unusual for a church to run what ranks as the top tourist attraction in a state.

But in the case of Hawaii, that's hardly surprising.

After all, today's alohaland owes much to the 19th century missionaries who greatly influenced its cultural and economic development.

The non-profit Polynesian cultural center, the state's top, paid-admission visitor attraction since 1979, was established by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to preserve and showcase the arts, crafts and lifestyles of the various Polynesian islanders.

Located about an hour's drive from Waikiki Beach in the small community of Laie, the 42-acre facility will be celebrating its 20th anniversary this year with additional arts and crafts demonstrations, a special edition of its popular Pageant of the Long Canoes and a new version of the "Invitation to Paradise" evening extravaganza that features more than 150 performers.

Most of the center's 1,000 staffers hail from various islands in the Pacific and are students at the nearby Hawaii campus of the Utah-based Brigham Young University working their way through college as guides, office and restaurant workers or performers.

Seven authentically re-created villages showcase the ancient lifestyles of Tahiti, Fiji, the Marquesas, Tonga, Samoa, New Zealand's Maoris and Hawaii, and visitors may explore them at their leisure on foot, riding a tram shuttle or taking a half-hour canoe tour.

On the guided walking tour, guests watch islanders making ngatu or tapa cloth from the inner bark of the mulberry tree, as in Tonga; climbing a coconut tree and then husking and opening the fruit as in Samoa and pounding boiled taro root into the staple food, poi, as in Hawaii.

Shuttle tram service, with narration by a guide, is available throughout the day to take visitors around the villages.

The canoe tour sails down a winding waterway fed by natural artesian wells. Highlights of the half-hour voyage include viewing a Maori waka taua, or 40-man war canoe, originally carved for King George V of England, and passing under the niu kapakahi, a coconut tree that stretches and winds for 75 feet but stands only 15 feet high.

Visitor participation is encouraged in a wide variety of activities. For example, in the Fijian village guests learn how to play the derua or bamboo resonators; the Tahitians gladly share the secret of their famous hip-shaking otea dance; and the Maoris teach how to untangle and twirl their poi balls, which are used to mimic the sounds of nature.

Ancient Polynesians loved playing games and a number of these have been preserved at the center. Thus, visitors try to match skills with the Tongans in a shuffleboardlike game called lafo that's played on a long, woven mat with large brown seeds; or they learn a lesson in hand-eye coordination in the funny Maori game of titorea, which is played to music.

Guests wishing to learn more of the practical handicrafts may watch Polynesian women weaving baskets, mats, fans and bags from the long, dried leaves of hala or pandanus trees and coconut fronds — painstaking work which yields articles of surprising strength and natural beauty. The weavers in the hut near the Tahitian village also welcome those who want to try their hand at creating birds, fish and even grasshoppers with pieces of palm frond. Try it, then take your own handicraft home.

Another favorite, the wood-carvers hut in the Maori village, houses master craftsmen who fashion weapons, miniature canoes and bowls from various woods found on the islands.

Polynesian souvenirs and gifts are available at a curio shop or you may browse among the authentic handicrafts in the center's attractive Hale Kuai market.

Tastebuds are also catered to appropriately. The Gateway, reputed to be the largest restaurant in the Pacific area, offers delicious buffet luncheons and dinners featuring Polynesian delicacies adapted for the American and European palate. The array of exotic fare includes fried deep-sea fish, sweet-and-sour spareribs, fresh island fruits and vegetables, raw fish samplers prepared in the Tahitian style and a very moist cake made with Hawaiian poi that's baked only at the center. Several snack bars are open throughout the day for those who prefer a lighter meal.

Each day's program features three exciting shows and special programs that highlight the music and dances of the South Pacific.

Club Med has fun, sun in Cancun

By JOANNE OSTROW
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Not everyone falls in love at Club Med. Me? I won a medal as a beginning water skier from an instructor built like Conan the Barbarian.

Only when I found myself dancing in step with 600 people, my plastic-bead necklace swaying in time to the resort's theme song, was I sure I'd been Clubbed. That was after a week of sun, sport and personal guidance from Conan, California's blondest bodybuilder. The margaritas didn't hurt, either.

I picked Club Mediterranee as the only affordable vacation with sun-sports-lessons-meals-tips-flights-transfers and congenial company all included. I paid $800 in advance (got a refund on the peso due to devaluation) and put my mind on the rinse cycle.

I chose Cancun, which opened in 1976, because it boasts more sports facilities and an older crowd than the seriously swinging sites like Martinique.

THE COST COVERS a week of wind-surfing, snorkeling, scuba diving, water skiing, volleyball, jazzercise, basketball and tennis (on six courts), with group instruction. Guests take it all in or choose to sit by the pool with their Walkman. The 108 "G.O.'s" or gentils organiseurs coax the 615 "G.M.'s" or gentils membres into the proper attitude, yelling, "Smile!" and "My friend, why are you so serieux?" After a few days of franglais, some New Jerseyites adopted the accent.

What you've heard is true: the unlocked rooms are Spartan with two single beds, no TV, a shower and air conditioning. Valuables are checked at the bank. Beads, sold in $8 or $15 bags, are the only currency accepted at the bar. Beads, boutique items and excursions may be charged to your room and settled at week's end. The absence of room keys is a holdover from the days when the club began — in tents. "We have no more theft than a normal hotel," says Serge Trigano, chairman of Club Med Inc.

The only prohibition concerns drugs: "I don't want to see it or smell it," Cancun's chef du village Patrick Cormery told the G.M.'s gathered at the weekly orientation meeting. Mexican authorities are watching the club carefully, he says; a French G.O. reportedly served five years in jail for possession of marijuana.

THE DRESS CODE calls for comfort. No matter how lightly you pack, you won't wear half the clothes you take. Shorts or a sundress are considered semi-formal evening wear after a full day in a bathing suit.

Happy hour is no bargain (a Mai Tai costs nine orange beads, about $3.60), and meals aren't as exotic as they might be. Due to the high tax on imports, the food and house wine are Mexican. But local specialties plus frogs legs and quiche are quite good and the lunchtime buffet is endless. Wine and beer flow at lunch and dinner, gratis. Hostesses seat the crowd at tables for eight and a mariachi band serenades diners. Breakfast (omelets, tropical fruits, fresh croissants and rolls, strong coffee, Tang instead of real orange juice) and lunch are buffet style, with service at dinner.

The nightly cabaret is long on costuming and lip-synching — an effort by the G.O.'s, most of whom are better suited to sports instruction or jobs in the boutique. But the crowd is a pushover, joining in the dance steps and song at the close of each show. "Hands up! Baby, hands up, gimme your heart, gimme, gimme. ..." Whereupon cynics retreat to the bar. The disco overlooking the ocean opens at midnight, replete with colored lights and soap bubbles. The beach is a quiet escape from the beat and the hokum.

CELEBRITY STATUS IS conferred on the counselor — G.O.'s by many of the camper-G.M.'s. Typical dinner table opener by a wide-eyed guest to a bronzed G.O.: "What do you think it takes to make a good G.O.?" To summarize: "You've got to enjoy being with people." In most cases though, the G.O.'s physiques outclass their social skills. They are perky party people who mingle relentlessly for six months before being transferred to another Club Med village. Thin and tan, they work long days, rehearsing the evening shows until late at night. Some 90 percent of the G.M.'s are American, 5 to 8 percent European, 2 or 3 percent Mexican and South American. The Americans are mostly Californians and Texans, with the minority of New Yorkers making a pitch for recognition.

We never determined whether Cancun's chef du village Patrick is running for office or for talk show host. He carries his administrative duties to the stage as emcee for the evening entertainment, punctuating each sentence with, "O-kay!" He also acts as host and referee for "Crazy Sports Day."

About 30 of us skipped the day of pink team-vs.-black team relays and cheers to see the Mayan ruins at Chichen Itza — a short plane hop away for $50. Spectacular. We wished we'd taken the day-long bus excursion for a longer tour. The restored pyramid and Temple of the Warriors are even more exciting than the prop's touchdown on a dirt landing strip in the middle of the Yucatan jungle. (We got back in time to witness the body-painting competition.)

SOME 130,000 AMERICANS tried "le club" last year, more than half of them for the second time, and the numbers are growing. The club, meanwhile, is updating its image. The summer camp atmosphere, songs and bar beads remain, but the "swingles" days are over. The 92 villages in 26 countries increasingly draw couples (including honeymooners), the middle-aged and children. In fact, Club Med has opened 35 "mini-clubs" for kids in the process of cleaning up its act.

Only a few families attend Cancun each week (enough to irritate more than one young single who asked to be seated at a table free of knee-biters). A vice president for Morgan Guaranty Trust and his wife spent the last week in August there with their three children. "You wouldn't think Club Med would be great for kids," he said, "but it is. They don't enjoy sitting around drinking and reading a book all day, which is typical hotel life."

THE CLOSEST MINI-CLUBS are at Eleuthera in the Caribbean; Copper Mountain, a new ski resort in Colorado; Fort Royal in Guadeloupe; and Itaparica, Brazil. Luxor is the newest site, offering "no sports but a quiet place to discover Egypt," Trigano says. Construction begins this fall on a club in China close to Canton, due to open in 1984. And the company is eyeing property in Arizona and Key West.

Tourists given passport pointers

Copley News Service

TRAVEL ADVISORY: BRAZIL — The American Embassy in Brazil would like to remind U.S. citizens that a valid visa is required for entry into Brazil. Officials responsible for entry into Brazil are currently being very strict about the requirements for a visa and do not hesitate to require travelers without a visa to return to the United States on the next flight.

Q: My previous passport was issued the week before my 18th birthday. May I use the mail-in application form?

A: No — a previous passport must have been issued after the applicant's 18th birthday if the mail-in application form is to be used. Glad you asked this question as there was a mistake in a recent Pointers column, using the word "prior" rather than "after" in reference to the 18th birthday mail-in procedure. Best advice: Read the instructions on the reverse of the mail-in form and follow them carefully.

Q: I did not show a departure date on my application mailed to you a couple of weeks ago. Now I find I must leave on a business trip as soon as possible. How long does it take to issue a passport?

A: We are issuing passports approximately three weeks after receipt of an application in our office, if everything is in order.

If you wish personalized information about passport requirements, send your questions to Gene Burke, Passport Agency, 11000 Wilshire Blvd., Federal Building, Suite 13100, West Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

Camping advice

Copley News Service

For Leonard Lee Rue III, safe yet exciting outdoor adventures seem to come naturally. One day he may be photographing caribou in Alaska. The next, he may be on an excursion through the Okefenokee (Fla.) swamp.

But if Leonard seems at home in the great outdoors, it's not because the wilderness is such an easy place to pass the time. It's because Leonard is prepared for the unexpected.

— Wear good, sturdy boots that will protect your ankles. When buying hiking shoes, hold as much as 40 pounds in your arms — to simulate hikes during which you'll carry considerable gear. (Your feet will spread out when you carry weight; choose shoes accordingly.)

— Poison ivy is one of the most frequent spoilers of any outdoor excursion, warns Rue. He advises: Know how to recognize poison ivy, oak and sumac and try to avoid them. If you touch the poisonous plants, wash the area with soap or just water if that's all that is available. Remove contaminated clothing. Use Cortaid to relieve the itch and swelling of any rash that develops.

— Always carry a compass and a map of the area. Also, make mental notes of unusual rock or tree formations along your route. Don't panic if you get lost. A police whistle can be used to signal for help.

Off-season lure: bargains beckon Caribbean visitors

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

Fresh travel adventures at bargain rates.

In short, that's the lure of the Caribbean now through November when the winter crowds have gone home, prices drop by as much as half and temperatures rise an average of only five degrees.

In addition to lower rates, accommodations during these uncrowded months are easier to find — and that applies to hotels, apartments, bungalows and villas. The same goes for airlines and cruise lines which, as a rule, there is more space available and offer money-saving fares.

Dubbed "The Season of Sweet Savings" by the Caribbean Tourism Association, the eight-month period is also studded with numerous festivals as well as sporting and other events. The following list highlights some of the savings and includes mention of my favorite hotels, restaurants and special events or experiences.

BARBADOS — Though independent since 1966, this island nation retains a number of British traditions. The Hilton's popular week-long "Pleasure Chest" packages now start at $303 per person, based on double occupancy, a rate that's about 33 percent lower than that in effect during winter. Favorite hotel: the Hilton International on historic Neddham Point — efficiently run and fine location with great views of the capital, Bridgetown. Restaurant: the Witch Doctor for West Indian specialties as well as beef. Highlight event: the Crop Over Festival that celebrates the sugarcane harvest and runs from the middle of June through July 4.

CURACAO — One of the six isles that make up The Netherlands Antilles. A slice of Holland in the tropics, especially the capital city of Willemstad. Under the local tourist board's "Bon Bini" or "welcome" program, the seven luxury hotels on the island offer seven-night packages from $154, with complimentary cheese, liqueur and discounts for restaurants, merchandise and services. Favorite hotel: the Coral Cliff on the beach at Santa Martha Bay — a cozy and quiet place on a neat stretch of shore. Restaurant: the Bellevue for okra gumbo, "keshi yena" (cheese shell stuffed with shrimp) and other local treats. Special here is a visit to the 251-year-old Mikve Israel-Emanuel Synagogue.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC — A Latin soul with overtones of Old Spain and thus spirited but conservative. Use of Spanish prompts smiles and opens doors. Lots of reasonable hotel rates here, including the posh resort Casa de Campo in La Romana, about two road hours from the capital city of Santo Domingo, where tabs are about 50 percent below those charged in winter. Favorites: Casa de Campo for rural setting, the Hostal Nicolas de Ovando in the capital for 17th century elegance. Restaurant: La Bahia near Santo Domingo's old quarter for great seafood in a very simple setting with casual atmosphere. Highlight event: the Merengue Festival from mid-July through Aug.4.

GUADELOUPE — Creole country, full of color, very scenic and very French. Also home to two of Club Med's most popular villages with Americans and Canadians. The PLM Arawak on the shore at Gosier offers doubles with breakfast from around $60, a 45 percent reduction from winter rates. Other money-saving options through "Fete Francaise" packages here and elsewhere on the French West Indies. Favorite hostelry: the casual Auberge du Grand Large on Ste.-Anne Beach near the namesake village — a casual affair with a great staff and location. Restaurant: Madame Chaville's Chez Violetta for super creole (often hot) dishes in most colorful setting just outside Gosier. Highlight event: one-day Festival of the Women Chefs in August.

JAMAICA — Impressive economic recovery has translated into greatly improved roads, hotels and other facilities. Added lures include hospitable islanders; new direct flights from the United States, and a lush and scenic land. Substantial hotel rate reductions throughout the country under its "Boonoonoonoos" program. Favorite hotel: the award-winning Half Moon Club in Montego Bay — delightful setting and classy service. Restaurant: the Calabash, also in "MoBay" and certain to appeal to those wishing to sample spicy salt fish, pepperpot soup and other Jamaican foods; highlight event: the Reggae Sunsplash music festival Aug. 2-6.

PUERTO RICO — At once very American and distinctly Latin, a vacation gem whose many and accessible facets are often overlooked by those rushing through San Juan to and from cruise ships. Rates from 30 to 50 percent lower than in the winter season. Worth considering are the privately operated but government supervised "Paradores," or inns, around Puerto Rico and the "Bed & Breakfast" guest houses.

American dollars coveted in Brazil

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Amidst all the high times and scenic fascination to be found in Brazil, one thing to watch for is the treatment extended your money.

Brazil doesn't see great numbers of American tourists — the cost of getting here is just too high. But U.S. dollars are wanted in Brazil, even coveted. The reason is their relative stability in a land of ballooning inflation, expected to surge to 150 percent in 1983.

Brazil's unit of currency, the cruzeiro, is devalued against the U.S. dollar with almost clockword precision every other week. New "Official" rates of exchange are posted in newspapers and in banks, while wages and prices are loosely tied to the fluctuations by a government system of indexing.

This doesn't mean much to a foreigner with dollars to spend in Brazil, because the official rate of exchange is not the going one. The dollar that bought 42 cruzeiros two years ago was buying 255 in January 1983 — "officially," that is, which means at the rate set by the government and paid out by banks. At the same time, hotels, travel agencies and other businesses with an interest in foreign exchange routinely were paying up to 150 cruzeiros more. Jewelry stores were crediting as many as 470 cruzeiros on purchases paid for in cash. On the even more unofficial market, a Yank with bucks could realize 500 cruzeiros for his imported dollar bills.

A currency blackmarket thrives in Brazil, and finding it is simple. A discreet inquiry on where to obtain the most cruzeiros for your money could lead to a bell boy in your hotel, a taxi driver, a merchant or to the pocket of the person being addressed. Or it could lead, as it did for me, to an elderly lady in a ninth floor Ipanema apartment who was willing to pay twice the official rate. Her hedge against inflation will probably pay off within the year.

Hard cash is worth more in Brazil than traveler's checks or credit cards, which ultimately must be processed through a bank at the official rate of exchange.

Removatron is a safe method of permanent and painless hair removal. It works but it does not hurt.

John Holland dreams of A lake in Midland

One day not too long ago John Holland of Midland was at a friend's ranch near Brownwood in the northern part of the Hill Country. His friend, Perry Day, spent much of his leisure time fishing in his own 25-acre lake there among the green hills.

Holland liked that.

"Basically, what I thought," he said, "was why can't we have something like that. Let's just stick one in our backyard."

Holland admits he is an implusive person.

In March he began breaking ground behind his own house on the flat, arid plain just west of Midland for what he plans on making the "most beautiful backyard in Midland."

Holland has finished digging out a one-acre lake running from two to 10 feet deep. He designed the lake himself and is providing most of the labor, except for the actual heavy excavation, with the help of just one friend, Dennis Maze.

Holland and another Midlander, Scott Bowden who owned land next to Holland, have teamed up to sell eight one-acre lots around the lake to help pay for the venture.

"What we're doing is just passing the cost of the lake onto others so we get the lake for free," said Holland.

"Every house would be lake front property. People could have their canoes moored out here," he said as he pointed at one end of the lake.

He described how people could race canoes around the island he has left standing in the widest part of the lake. Holland is planning on planting some flowering trees on the island.

"Problem is I'll have to swim out here to water it," he said.

The posts of a wooden bridge that will span the lake, but not touch the island, have already been placed.

Holland has erected one of two windmills which are going to pump water which will cascade down two waterfalls.

(See HOLLAND, Page 4F)

From the back balcony of his house, John Holland surveys the area he plans on making "the most beautiful backyard in Midland."

Two windmills are being set up to pump water that will cascade over waterfalls.

AT WORK

Starting a new career

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q — I have two careers and want a third. I have a master's degree in genetics and horticulture and I've been a songwriter and singer for TV and radio commercials. Now I want to try science reporting for TV. Any ideas? A — Yes. Do the same for science reporting as you did for singing and songwriting. Propose and pitch. List 100 ideas and write out 6 full treatments with low budgets for a local TV station and show them to the director of news. Ask for a tryout on TV. And, if you can, ask viewers to send in questions to show interest. If that doesn't work, go to another local station.

Q — After six years in industrial engineering, I have built a strong reputation as a quality assurance analyst and have improved division after division. I've been promoted; but I've had to move around the country four out of five times. I never minded before, but now I really want to settle down, start a family, and enjoy a support system of friends.

A — This is a tough dilemma. The only way out is to become indispensable not only to your corporation but also to your division and the city you wish to remain in.

Gain visibility for yourself and your company by writing for professional journals and by presenting papers to local professional associates. You might get yourself on the faculty of a local university; you can start in the extension division.

Q — I am a registered nurse in a pediatric intensive care unit. I love the patient interaction but hate the scut work that is a big part of my job. I want to move up to primary health care. Do I need a master's in public health?

A — To find out what goes on in your profession in your city, try these steps: 1) Talk to the admissions officer of a graduate public health program and ask how its graduates fare. Then find a graduate who is in a primary health care center and ask her if it was worth the extra schooling or if she could have gotten there without it. 2) Call the American Nurses' Association and find someone on the certification or career committee and ask for advice. 3) Go to a primary health care center, meet one of the supervisors, and sell her on hiring you. Remember the old adage, "Nothing ventured, nothing gained."

Q — I am an electronics engineer in my mid-50s. I'm feeling a bit obsolete. Should I charge ahead and learn the new technology, or retire with what I have built up? My gut feeling is the latter, but I feel guilty in wanting to slack off.

A — There isn't any reason not to know what's new in your field. Learning keeps you young at heart and you may see new opportunities.

Or, you may decide to work part time or on a consulting basis. This will leave you more free time. But there's the rub — free time to do what? Figure that out and you'll know how to spend the next period of your life.

Got a career problem? Dr. Scheele can help. Write to her in care of this newspaper.

Blood substitute from humans keeps baboons alive and well

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

DETROIT (AP) — A solution of human hemoglobin has kept baboons alive with half their blood removed, showing that it won't damage red blood cells and marking an important step in the development of emergency blood substitutes, researchers say.

The most recently developed version of the hemoglobin solution, called poly SFH-P, remains in the animals' bloodstreams almost eight times longer than previous formulations, said Dr. Gerald Moss, one of the developers of the hemoglobin solution.

Moss, of the Michael Reese Hospital and Medical Center in Chicago, said that with the earliest of the hemoglobin solutions, it would take only six hours for half of the solution to disappear from the bloodstream and be excreted.

With the new solution, it takes 46 hours for half of the solution to be excreted, Moss said Tuesday at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

One advantage of such hemoglobin solutions over blood transfusions is they do not have to be matched to the blood type of the recipient. Blood type is determined by substances attached to the outer walls of red blood cells. If the body of a blood transfusion recipient does not recognize those substances as identical to its own, it will attack the transfused red blood cells.

Hemoglobin does not contain these substances, and so does not provoke the same kind of response from the body, although it is not known for certain whether hemoglobin may trigger the body's immune system in some other way, Moss said.

If the hemoglobin solution is found not to stimulate the immune system, it would be possible for a hemoglobin solution to be given to accident victims arriving at a hospital emergency room, for example, when there there is not enough time to determine their blood types.

A second advantage of a hemoglobin solution is that it could be stored for a much longer time than blood, relieving some of the burden on hospital blood banks.

The hemoglobin solution does only one thing: it carries oxygen from the lungs to the other parts of the body, and returns carbon dioxide to the lungs to be exhaled.

The solution does not clot nor does it perform any of the myriad other functions of blood, such as fighting disease or carrying nutrients throughout the body.

Fiberglass rejuvenated with paint

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. I enjoy your column each week. We have two problems that we need help with. We just moved to this property last year and the house is about 8 years old.

First, can I paint the underside of a fiberglass patio roof? It is now pale yellow and I would like to paint it green.

Second, during this year's rainy spell, our garage floor seems to have a salty-looking substance on the floor, evident each morning after the rains. It is found under the cars. The previous owners used the garage for refinishing furniture. Buy the way, the salty substance can be swept away.

We want to paint the garage floor, but do not want to do this job if this substance will come back. We plan to use a water-base paint first before we use the finish paint.

Any advice you can give us on the above problems will be appreciated. — Bill K., El Cajon, Calif.

A. Fiberglass awning or covers can be painted with special paints made by fiberglass-reinforced plastic product manufacturers. This probably can be obtained from the dealer from whom the awnings or roof were purchased.

Great care should be exercised in choosing the new color. The awning or roof color goes clear through the fiberglass and both upper and lower surfaces should be painted in most circumstances.

If the present fiberglass is opaque, you will have no problem as to the color choice. However, if the roof is translucent — if light goes through the cover — complementary colors should be used, keeping in mind that the original color will "bleed" through. In other words, if your roof is now yellow and is painted blue, the result, seen through the light, will be a green hue. However, first test this painting on a small area, as there are many different shades of blue and yellow.

About your second question, the frostlike substance on your garage floor is called efflorescence and is caused by moisture working up through the concrete.

First clean the surface with a solution of two-thirds cup of trisodium phosphate, one quart of household bleach, mixed in three quarts of warm water, scrub with a stiff brush and rinse well.

Solvent-thinned rubber-base paints are ideal for painting concrete surfaces, such as garage floors, basements, or walks exposed to weather. They provide excellent resistance to alkali and water penetration, which is what causes efflorescence.

After an alkali-resistant primer has been applied, the finish coat should be used to resist exposure. Two finish coats should be used to resist exposure. Two finish coats will be more satisfactory than a one-coat finish. For best results, always choose a quality paint and use a special masonry brush or roller to make your job even easier.

Q. The articles in our paper (about making fire logs from old newsprint) do not tell us how long to put the rolled papers in the recommended solution, or how long to dry them out. Do the paper logs absorb all the solution? — M.J.P., Lynwood, Ill.

A. For the benefit of readers who may have missed previous columns on this subject, we'll repeat the whole process:

To make the logs, you'll need these items — old newspapers, magazines and scrap paper of all types (a good use for junk mail); two pounds each of coarse salt and borax; heavy twine; transparent tape; a four- or five-gallon non-metallic container, such as earthenware, enamelware or plastic not affected by boiling water (some families have used five-gallon plastic garbage cans that cost less than $2, but the price may be higher now).

Then make the solution. Put the salt and borax into the container. Pour in two gallons of boiling water, stir vigorously to dissolve the solids as much as possible. Let the solution cool, stirring from time to time.

One ingredient drugs safest

Approximately one-third of the medically active ingredients in over-the-counter drugs are unsafe of ineffective, or both, a third require further study and a third are safe and effective.

These are the preliminary findings of an unfinished study commissioned by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) according to "Guide to the Best Over-the-Counter Drugs."

The FDA and the panels of independent experts it commissioned for this ongoing study recommend using a single-ingredient product, says the article.

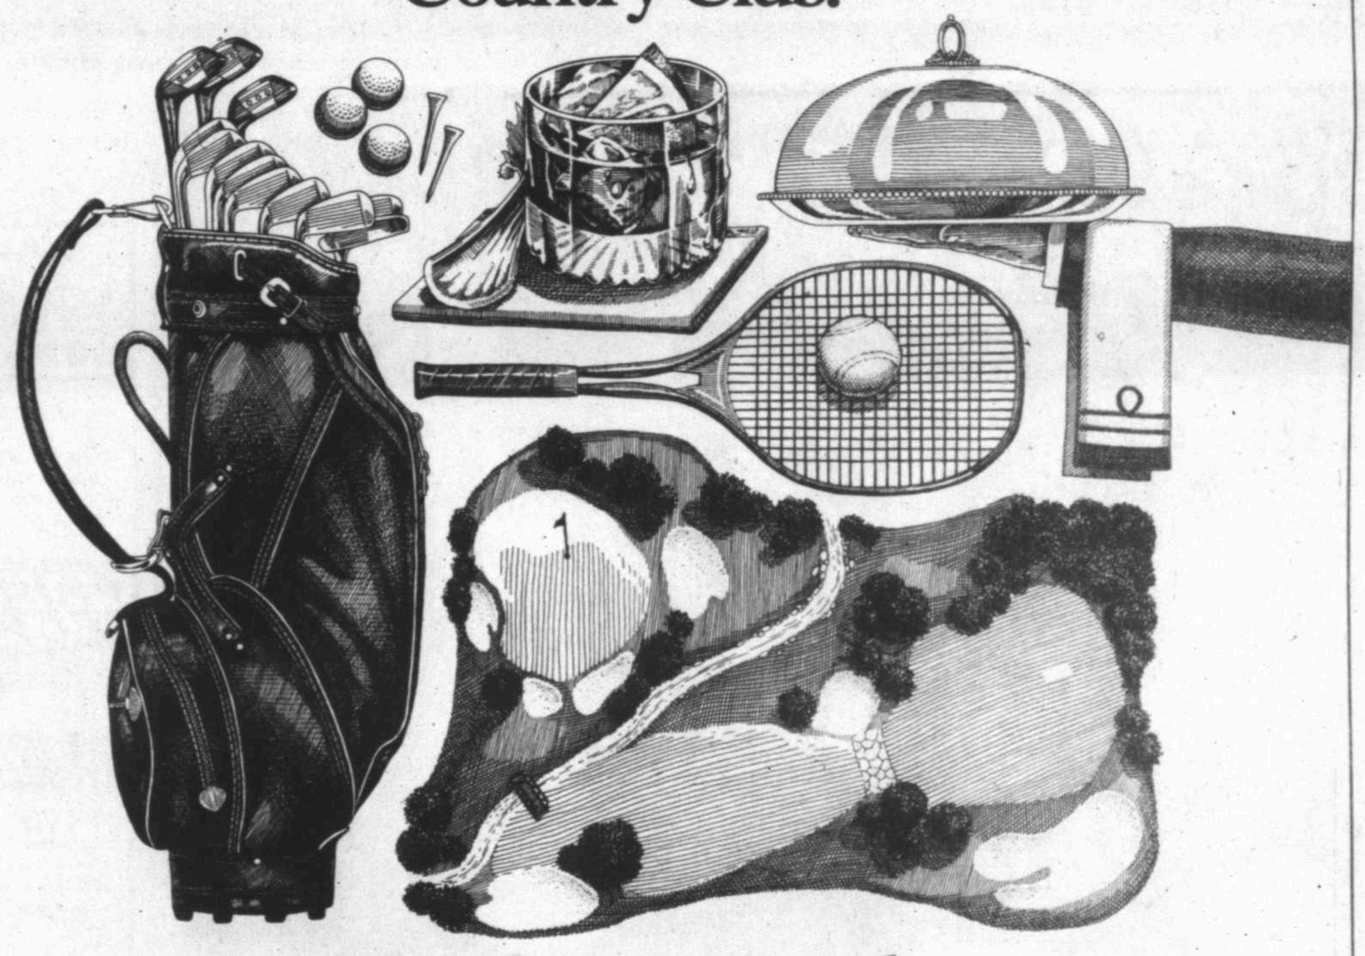
Mission Country Club.



Never has so much been so easy to attain.

The most beautiful, well-planned, comprehensive golf and country club in West Texas is on its way toward completion. And now, for a limited time and as little as $1500 down, you can be on your way to enjoying the most desirable membership opportunity Midland-Odessa has ever seen.

With its man-made lakes, waterfall, hundreds of trees, and magnificent clubhouse, Mission Country Club is destined to be one of the most dramatic social and athletic gathering places within the Permian Basin.

As part of Mission Dorado, a totally planned residential, commercial and business center sprawling over 2,262 acres, Mission Country Club has been carefully designed to provide an open and comfortable center of activity for members and their families.

Its clubhouse was conceived by world-famous architect O'Neil Ford. And in addition to an excellent championship golf course, Mission Country Club's plans also include a separate Athletic Center, with tennis, racquetball, steam room, exercise room and swimming pool.

Mission Country Club's new 18 hole course is opening in July of this year. An initial payment of $1500 now will secure your private or corporate membership, and entitle you to the immediate use of all existing facilities. Once your initial corporate membership has been acquired, subsequent memberships will be available at a substantial reduction.

Mission Country Club promises to be the most exciting country club in our part of the state. Call us today, or take Highway 80, then exit north to Old Bankhead Highway.

There's never been anything like it. And there's never been a better way to attain such a quality membership.

Next to where he plans on having the taller of the waterfalls, Holland is going to stack large boulders to dive off of into the water.

He is in the process of lining most of the banks with sandstone and flagstone stacked on top of concrete curbs to look like low rocky cliffs. It will take more than 200 tons of stone.

This week Holland and two other men are going to unload two 28-ton shipments of rock off from trailers, over 9 tons of rock per person.

"It hurts," the tall, husky 31-year-old Holland said. "I had to buy a shower massager. It's a good kind of hurt, though."

Holland picked up the pieces of concrete, while cruising subdivisions where curbs were being knocked out for driveway entrances. He used them for the bases for the cliffs.

He is also plans to plant 200 live oaks, red oaks and flowering trees around the lake and atop some low hills of dirt he has built up in the area.

Holland wants to select trees which will provide some color year-round. He plans on having green live oaks in winter, the color of red oaks' leaves turning in the fall, and bright blossoms on flowering trees in the spring.

Otherwise, Holland said, the lake will be "a hole filled with water surrounded by dead grass," most of the year.

He also plans to plant 1,000 Afghan pines — one every five feet — around the perimeter of the area to form a windbreak.

"I grew up in New Mexico and got real fond of yuccas," Holland said.

Holland graduated with a psychology degree from New Mexico State University at Las Cruces, where he worked his way through school at the university's golf course. He decided to become a golf pro after graduation.

Holland and his wife, Susan, who also is a golf pro, moved to Midland seven years ago. They worked at Hogan Park Golf Course for two years and at Midland Country Club's course for three years.

In February 1979, the Hollands started the Islands Swimwear and Exercise Shop, a women's swimwear store in San Miguel Square, which has since grown into a business in Midland Park Mall. Mrs. Holland runs the store.

The store is typical of the Hollands' approach to business he said, because it is an "unorthodox" business to open in West Texas.

"It's a swimwear store in the middle of the desert," he pointed out.

"The main reason I can do all these things is because my wife supports me at the store. That lets me do all these projects to get us ahead in the long run," he added.

Once his lake is finished, Holland has high hopes for an even more ambitious project, building a 100-acre public golf course near Midland with three five-acre lakes connected by rocky running streams, which would be fed by 10 windmills.

"Everything I do is in a logical progression," he said. "Every project has another project coming behind it.

Holland believes he might have his golf course underway by next January. Already he is filling notebooks with sketches and weaving long-range plans of developing a residential and retail area around the course, with a restaurant on piers projecting out over one of the lakes.

Among his original designs for the golf course is a system using standard toilet bowl floats and electronic switches to maintain the water levels in the lakes.

"That's a simple design, but it'll actually give you running rocky streams in West Texas," Holland said.

Holland radiated confidence about obtaining financial support necessary for such a mammoth undertaking. He is fond of the phrase "creative financing."

Part of his financial philosophy is what he called "The Wimpy Principle," which is based on the line often used by the Wimpy character in Popeye cartoons, "I'll gladly pay you Tuesday for a hamburger today."

Anyone can undertake projects the size of Holland's, he believes, if they can obtain sufficient credit and will pay the loans back promptly.

"The number one business principle is the old saying 'fast payments make fast friends,'" said Holland.

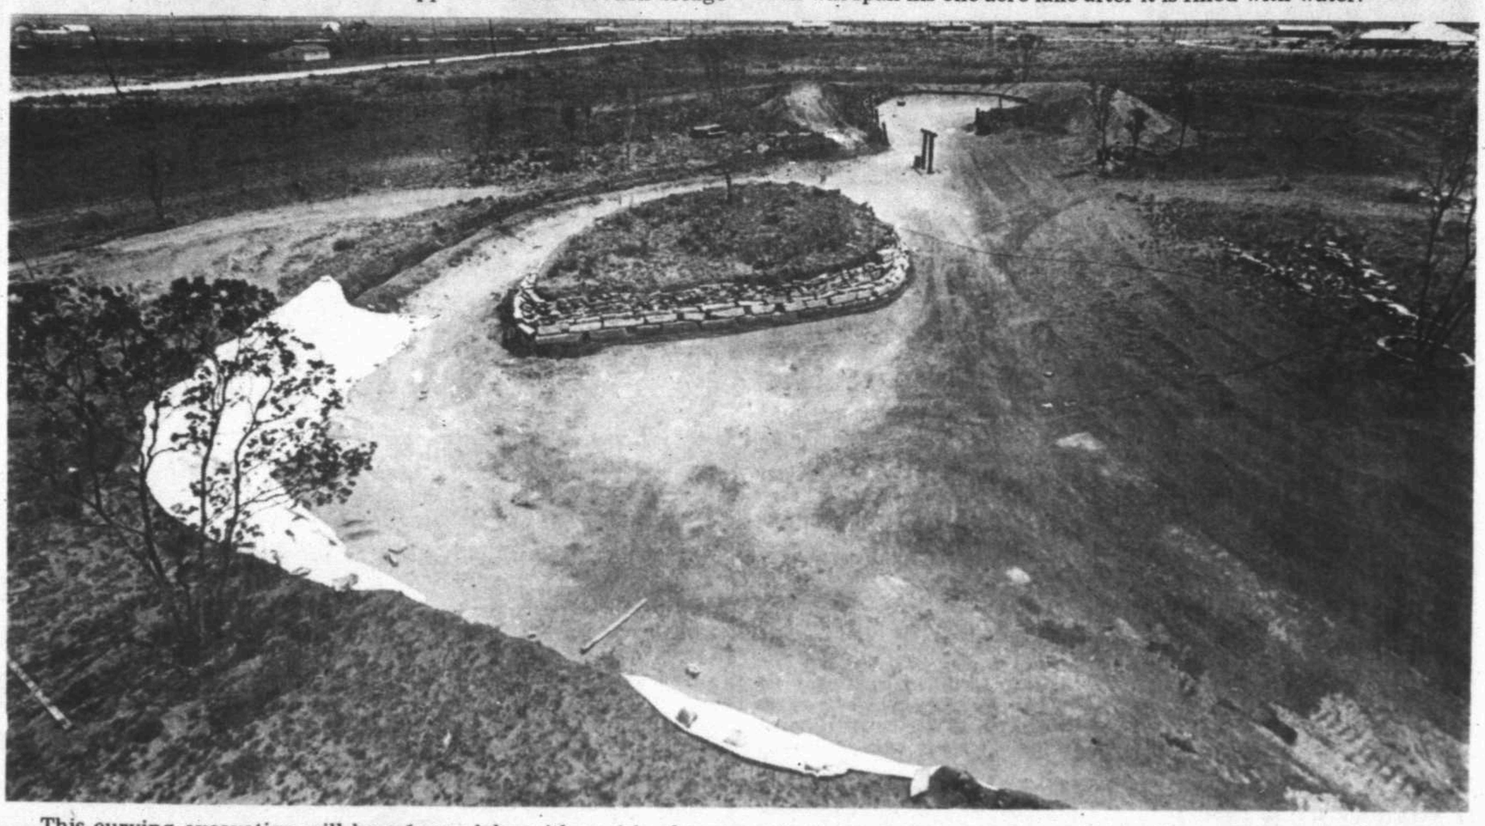
He also said the friends he made with people in the Midland banking business while he worked at the country club has helped.

"The secret of our success is our friends," Holland said. He also stressed Midland, with its entrepreneurial spirit, is the ideal area for his golf course project.

He wants a course that "the workingman can play at every bit as nice as our new country clubs here.

"A guy should be able to walk among tall trees and nice lakes," Holland said.

John Holland sits atop one of the supports for the wooden bridge which will span his one-acre lake after it is filled with water.



This curving excavation will be a 1-acre lake with an island surrounded by rocky bluffs, once it is completed and filled with water.

Trail rides require patience and practice for horse and rider to work as a team. It takes months of work to give the horse confidence to conquer obstacles on the trail.

Trail riding: Teamwork

Copley News Service

"Riding is a confidence game," says veteran horsewoman Cathy Biggs.

Perhaps no sport demands communication between man and animal as much as horseback riding.

"The horse looks to the rider for confidence," continues Biggs.

"If you come to an area where you're not confident and the horse can feel it ... they are big beautiful animals but they are not brave, maybe that's why God built them to run."

Trust. Teamwork.

"To develop a good riding horse, it takes months, even years, of riding and professional training — a blend of work and loving. And you're learning as much as the horse.

"So much practice and a lot of professional training go into this. You just don't go out and enter a trail ride. At times, you come to a point where you don't want to ride. It stops being pleasurable.

"But you ride."

The bond between owner and horse represents one of the strongest cross-species ties known.

"People on the outside have a hard time understanding the love between a rider and the horse," said Jean Austin, 54, who has competed in trail rides for a decade.

"What's the saying, 'The outside of the horse is good for the inside of man.' All I know is that it's good for my well-being."

Biggs and her horse, Classy, have become a team.

"It's hard to stand here and talk about my feelings for this animal," she said, while grooming the animal after a trail ride in less than desirable conditions.

"Like today. If I thought the ride was going to be a risk to Classy, well, I would have pulled out quicker if I felt danger for her than if I felt it for myself."

The ride Biggs referred to took the teams through one obstacle that horse and rider fear — the bog.

Sinking to its knees in a bog can cause a horse to panic. In times of panic, horses can also do tremendous damage to themselves.

It is the months of work together that give the horse the confidence to conquer such obstacles as the bog without injuring itself or its rider.

BETTY MARTIN
Gathering and shirring always imparts graceful fullness to a design. Gathers are small, soft folds made by drawing fabric up on a line of machine stitching. Shirring is formed by numerous rows of gathers and is both decorative and functional. It can be used to achieve varied surface effects, such as smocking, and may be used at the waistline, yokes and sleeves. Use extra strength thread in the bobbin to make it easier to pull up the gathers without breaking the threads. Try approximately 8 stitches per inch. If the fabric does not easily gather, lengthen the stitch accordingly.
There is still plenty of time to update your summer wardrobe with a few new creations. At LEGGETTS FABRICS, you will find many patterns using gathering and shirring if this is the look you prefer. Of course, if you like a straighter and more tailored look we'll be happy to help you locate these patterns also. We are located at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No.9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101. Visa and Master Card. "Quality, Your only Real Bargain." Hours Mon.-Sat 10-6.
HINT:

Monterey Tomato Salad is a bright combination of fresh tomatoes, Monterey Jack cheese and red onion rings in a spicy chili dressing.

Tomato salad zesty

Simple yet colorful salads with fresh tomatoes can be a welcome change from the omnipresent "tossed greens." To make sure the tomatoes you pick are at their peak, however, it's usually necessary to "brighten" them yourself at home.

When you buy them at your market the tomatoes shipped this time of year may not be fully ripe. In order to reach this point leave them on the kitchen counter for a few days until they're ready. They should be a true tomoto-red color and yield slightly to the touch.

By all means, don't refrigerate them, it kills the flavor.

Monterey tomato salad makes a great combination with cold cuts for a buffet lunch or a find salad-stuffer in tacos or pita bread. The blending of Monterey Jack cheese, red onion and Tex-Mex seasonings of chili powder, garlic and black pepper in the dressing makes a nice foil for the tomatoes' flavor and texture.

MONTEREY TOMATO SALAD

4 medium-sized tomatoes
1 medium-sized red onion, sliced
lettuce leaves
½ cup diced or shredded Monterey Jack Cheese
¼ cup vegetable oil
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 teaspoon chili powder
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
pinch ground black pepper

Use tomatoes held at room temperature until fully ripe. Remove cores and slice ¼-inch thick. Arrange tomatoes and onions in any desired pattern on a lettuce lined serving platter. Sprinkle with cheese. Combine oil, vinegar, chili powder, salt, garlic and black pepper; spoon dressing over salad. Yields four servings.

Spicy lunchtime tomato soup

16-ounce can whole tomatoes, undrained
1 small onion
1 small white inner rib celery minus leaves
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon butter
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon curry powder
1½ cups milk
1 tablespoon tomato paste
½ cup heavy cream
2 tablespoons sugar

In an electric blender puree tomatoes, onion, celery, salt and pepper. Force through a fine-mesh strainer placed over a 2-quart saucepan; discard residue. Over low heat cook tomato mixture until simmering; keep hot over very low heat. In a 3-quart saucepan over medium-low heat, melt butter; stir in corn starch and curry powder until smooth. Off heat, gradually stir in milk until smooth. Stirring constantly, cook until boiling and thickened. Gradually whisk in until blended the hot tomato mixture, then tomato paste, cream and sugar. Cook over low heat until serving temperature — do not boil. Makes 3½ cups. —(AP)

Ethnic dishes adapted to U.S. tastes

In regions where different cultures have been assimilated over the years there is still a strong sense of cultural heritage that results in a truly cosmopolitan cuisine.

A classic recipe is for Greek Shrimp with Feta Cheese. This dish is a marvelous melange of flavors: shallots and garlic, feta, lemon, parsley and basil.

SHRIMP WITH FETA

1 pound shrimp, peeled leaving tails intact and deveined
2 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ cup minced shallots
1 teaspoon minced garlic
3 tablespoons olive oil
½ cup tomato sauce
2 large tomatoes, chopped
⅓ cup parsley
1 teaspoon dried basil leaves
1 package (16 ounces) frozen cod fish
4 ounces feta cheese, crumbled
1 sheet frozen puff pastry
1 egg beaten with 1 teaspoon water

Toss cleaned shrimp with lemon juice and set aside. In a large skillet, saute shallots and garlic in olive oil until tender. Add tomato sauce, tomatoes, parsley and basil; simmer 10 to 15 minutes. Meanwhile, unwrap cod fish and let stand at room temperature 10 minutes. Cut into ¾-inch cubes.

Add frozen fish to tomato sauce and bake 10 minutes at 350 degrees. Remove from oven and add shrimp and sprinkle with feta cheese. Bake 10 minutes longer. Thaw puff pastry sheet 20 minutes. Unfold on a lightly floured surface.

Using a pastry wheel or sharp knife cut pastry into 3-inch long fish. Brush with egg mixture and place on baking sheet. Bake at 375 degrees for about 10 minutes or until puffed and golden brown. To serve, place puff pastry fish on top of seafood mixture. Makes about 6 servings.

Wine merchant talks Italian

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

You won't find an Italian wine being served at a fancy dinner party involving members of wine's Elite Set.

Not that there's anything wrong with Italian wine, mind you. Some Italian red wines, with proper bottle age, will rival nearly anything you can put against them.

But for various reasons, those in the Elite Set drink Chateau Lafite-Rothschild, Domaine de la Romanee-Conti and Ch. Yquem. Never shall an Italian wine darken the wine cellar door.

One wine lover I know has a phrase for these Elite Set people: "I call them name drinkers, not name droppers," he says.

Of course some of them are in good company. In Michael Broadbent's "Great Vintage Wine Book," nary a page is given to Italian wine, though in other publications Broadbent has allowed as how he has enjoyed some Italian wines on occasion.

That sort of backhand compliment is what bothers people like Neil Empson, but not too much. Empson is a good-natured Englishman now residing in Milan, Italy, who plies the honorable trade of wine merchant, and who accepts the fact that Italian wine is simply never going to be viewed as Bordeaux or Burgundy.

Empson is not just another wine salesman. He sees himself as a sort of latter-day Johnny Appleseed, sowing the word about the greatness of Italian wine, making it clear that many Italian wines represent great value. Empson is a bit mystified as to why Americans don't rush down to their local package store to demand Italian wine by the caseload.

Burn patients risk infections

CHICAGO (AP) — Potentially fatal staph infections are increasingly hiding in hospital burn units, where medical workers unwittingly pick them up and carry them to other patients, researchers reported today.

Among 146 hospitals surveyed from 1975 through 1980, outbreaks of antibiotic-resistant staph infections occurred significantly more often at facilities with burn units, doctors said in today's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Such infections were seldom found in U.S. patients before 1975, but are increasing, according to the doctors at the University of Mississippi Medical Center in Jackson.

Healthy people often carry staphylococcus aureus in their noses, mouths or genital areas. But when the germ enters some other part of the body through wound or injury, it can cause maladies ranging from boils to blood poisoning.

Antibiotics are ineffective against some strains of staph, but those are rarely found in the general population and most often turn up in hospitals, the doctors said. Even methicillin, an antibiotic made specifically to fight penicillin-resistant staph, is powerless against some types.

In June 1979, the University of Mississippi Medical Center found such staph organisms in five burn patients. The germs were identical to some that had been found earlier in two plastic surgery patients, leading doctors to believe plastic surgery staffers may have spread the infection to the burn unit.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Impatiens good for sun, shade

By ELVIN MCDONALD

New Guinea impatiens

Since the 1950s, impatiens have risen to the top as popular plants to grow outdoors for flowers in the shade. I see them all over, in public and private gardens, in the ground, in pots, and spilling from hanging baskets.

Give this type impatiens a humus-rich potting medium kept evenly moist, never bone-dry or soggy wet for long, and hardly anything can go wrong. If such a plant thrives, grows lots of leaves but few flowers, try more light.

Another reason common impatiens (geraniums too) don't bloom is too-rich soil. Applications of low-nitrogen fertilizer are the rememdy. One, "Flower Cracker," has 1 percent nitrogen, 6 percent phosphorus and 5 percent potash. (If not on local shelves, write Clarel Laboratories, Inc., 513 Grove, Deerfield, Ill. 60015.)

A new wave of interest in impatiens centers around hybrids being developed from species collected recently in New Guinea. These stand out in having brightly variegated leaves, unusually large blossoms.

One such impatiens is visiting my desk now. It came from a neighborhood florist with a printed label that could well be a model for the industry.

First, the plant's need for sunshine is clearly indicated on both sides, along with the full name: New Guinea Hybrid Impatiens, cultivar 'Zodiac,' hybridized by Mikkelsens, Inc. (an Ohio firm that distributes improved plant materials to professional growers).

Mikkelsens is, of course, where the label originated, with these helpful instructions in fine print: "If used as a house plant, place in window for full sunlight and keep well watered. When grown outside, plant in full sunlight but protected from harsh winds. Water daily until established and during dry periods. Apply well balanced fertilizers every 2 - 3 weeks. This plant not for human consumption."

Q. Where can I obtain an old-fashioned impatiens I recall fondly as having gray leaves edged in white and large rosy pink flowers?

A. The plant you long for is listed as Impatiens walleriana sultanii variegata in the catalog ($2) of Country Hills Greenhouse, Route 2, Corning, Ohio 43730. Several other old or unusual types are also available, along with the miniature Hawaiians, new from Japan.

Q. Less than a month after I bought flower-covered impatiens to set in a row on my window sill the blooms are gone and most of the leaves. Tiny spider webs are spun among what's left. What happened?

A. Scattered small pots dry out quickly. Impatiens that wilt over and over for lack of moisture are especially vulnerable to red spider-mites, the tiny insects that have spun the webs you describe.

Treatment is twofold. First wash the mite-infected plants by dipping them up and down in mild soapy, lukewarm water. Do this every three days for at least two weeks. If mites persist, discard plants, or try a serious miticide such as Kelthane.

Second, improve your growing conditions. Impatiens need an abundance of fresh air. Transplant to larger pots. Keep soil nicely moist to the touch; avoid extremes of wet and dry. Give plants a routine weekly showering with water, being sure to direct a fairly strong stream to leaf undersides.

Q. Is there anything I can do to make a 7-foot fiddleleaf ficus look less awkward? Three main branches go this way and that, with leaves toward the tips.

A. Try air-layering. It's no threat to the old plant and yields a rooted new one in a few months. About 6 inches below the bottom leaf make a slanting cut halfway through the stem. Insert a toothpick to hold slightly open. Surround with a fistful of moist sphagnum moss; enclose in plastic and seal top and bottom with a twist-tie. Keep moss constantly moist. New roots will grow into it. When plainly visible cut off just below these and transplant to a new pot.

Details and drawings for layering trees and shrubs indoors and out are in my notebook bulletin. For your copy send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Layer" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305; in Canada, 4141 Glenayr Ave., Niagara Falls, Ont. Quick Take: If too much rain has left your patio slippery with moss and algae, one answer is Safer's De-Moss, a completely safe cryptocidal soap from Safer Agro-Chem, Inc., 13910 Lyons Valley Rd., Jamul, Calif. 92035.

Q.T.: Grow miniature daffodils in pots, some to force early indoors, some to enjoy outdoors in spring. Recommended cultivars 'Hawera,' 'Jumblie,' 'Minnow' and more are in the new list (50) of imported Dutch bulbs from Mary Mattison van Schaik, Cavendish, Vt. 05142.

Memories outlast gifts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Last year you ran an invitation to an anniversary party asking guests to please write a little piece recalling a fond memory of the honorees rather than bring a gift. We hope to celebrate our golden wedding anniversary this summer and we honestly do not want any gifts.

Please run it soon before our children go hog wild! Thank you, and God bless you. – MRS. A. G.IN BINGHAMTON, N.Y.

DEAR MRS. G.: I'm glad you asked. Every day my mail brings me requests for this item. I have had to mimeograph it to meet the demand.

I am not complaining. The many responses I have received from grateful readers who have used this invitation more than compensate for the work involved:

"The children of Iver and Helen Dahl invite you to celebrate with them the 50th wedding anniversary of their parents. A reception will be held May 7, at 2 p.m., at the Elmhurst Country Club.

"We request your help in compiling a book which recalls memories from our parents' first 50 years of marriage. On the enclosed sheet, we ask that you write one memory or experience that you have shared with them and return it to us by April 26. We believe that the loving memories they have shared with you, their friends, would be the most treasured gift they could receive; therefore, we request that no other gift be sent."

DEAR ABBY: About 10 years ago, when I was a newlywed, after noticing how much my husband admired ladies with large breasts, I went to a plastic surgeon and had mine enlarged (silicone implants).

About a year later my breasts started to harden. Today they are as hard as rocks, and I am divorced and lonely. I am so embarrassed because of my breasts that I avoid any relationship that might lead to intimacy.

Abby, can this situation be corrected? If so, please tell me how. – WANT TO LOVE AGAIN

DEAR WANTS: Go back to the plastic surgeon who performed the operation and see what he has to say. If you cannot return to the original doctor (or do not want to), consult with a board-certified plastic surgeon and get his opinion.

Your original implants may have to be replaced, but my experts say your present situation can be corrected.

DEAR ABBY: You asked your readers to tell you the difference between a lady and a tramp. I'm not sure I know what a lady is, but I do know that a tramp is not the same as a bum. Not in England, anyway.

In 1932, Al Jolson starred in a film titled, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum." When it was shown in England, the title was changed to 'Hallelujah, I'm a Tramp."

The reason: In England a "bum" is slang for "derriere," which is French for "tuchis," which is Yiddish for "fanny," which is slang for backside. – MOVIE BUFF

Peachy dessert

GEORGIA PEACH SHORTCAKE

1 package plain English muffins
1 pint heavy cream
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
3 tablespoons confectioner's sugar
3 tablespoons butter
1 can (1 pound 13 ounces peach slices

Split muffins in half. Place in moderate oven until heated, about 5 minutes. Whip cream until soft peaks form; add vanilla and sugar, continue whipping until cream is desired thickness. Spread cut sides of muffins with soft butter. On bottom half of each muffin place a dollop of whipped cream and several peach slices. Top with remaining muffin halves and repeat process ending with peach slices. Makes 6 servings.

More lean, more mean forecast for Oil

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

"If you're an oilman right now, I think you're real smart to plan on a fairly long and sustained period of flat prices. You've got to pay down your debt, cut your staff, all that kind of stuff. If you don't do it then you're going to die."

That's George Davis' advice to oilmen. He thinks the price of oil will remain flat for the next five to eight years.

Claremont Economics Institute, based in Claremont, California, is a private consulting frim specializing in political and economic forecasting and investment advising. The firm serves more than 150 clients, Davis said, including The White House, the government of Kuwait, a number of large corporations and banks and oil companies like Getty, Ensearch, Diamond Shamrock and Petro-Lewis.

CEI recently invested over $180,000 in a study of the oil industry. The study revealed some things oil men in Midland should find interesting, Davis said.

"WHEN I CAME in (at CEI)," he said, "I knew something about the oil industry I discovered about three years ago. We had a hunch it would happen, and the more we looked, the more we realized it would happen, and that is that oil prices would be flat — and falling in real terms — for quite some time.

"Everybody bet on the fact the price of oil would keep rising indefinitely. Three years ago you were talking about $90 or $100 oil in 1990 or 2000.

"It's not going to happen in the '80s, because what's going to happen — this is the most important idea — is you're going to have a resource market correction in the same sense you have a stock market correction. Except in resource markets, you do it in slow motion."

Davis said CEI economists believe the correction will take at least five years — maybe eight.

In resource markets, Davis explained, responses to rapid price increases are slow in coming. Not everyone bought a new car when the price of gasoline started going up or immediately began to insulate their houses as heating costs increased. It took time for fuel efficient cars and other conservation measures to take effect, he said.

THE SEVEN LARGEST industrial nations now use 30 percent less oil per unit of Gross National Product than they did in 1971, Davis said. "That means 30 percent less oil to make the same unit of output."

The U.S. is using 27 1/2 percent less oil per unit of output.

The downturn in demand for oil in the United States is the product of two things, Davis said: the recession and conservation or substitution that is slowly arising from the initial OPEC price increase.

"Our analysis strongly suggests the price of oil is going to be flat for five to eight years," he said. "That means the structure and nature of the domestic oil industry is going to be very different than it was in the 1970s.

"There's going to be increasing concentration, less independence. These guys (the nation's oilmen) know that. But they don't know why and they don't know how long it's going to last. All they know right now is you've got to be lean and mean," he said.

This more conservative mode will continue for a long time, Davis said. He blamed the change on decisions made at OPEC's winter meetings.

"Most of the guys out here, I don't believe, understand the importance of the last OPEC meeting and what happened there," he said.

"ON THE SURFACE of it, apparently nothing happened there. What was important about the meeeting is that Saudi Arabia and the other Arab oil producers on the Persian Gulf realized OPEC never has been, and never will be, a cartel. And, they never will be able to effectively control the production of the other members of OPEC — the non-Persian Gulf countries."

Davis said during the 1970s Saudi Arabia and other Arab producers tried to pull OPEC together into a true cartel. But, after each price setting meeting, the "little guys," the smaller oil producers within OPEC, would "go home and cheat," by selling under the official price in an effort to make more money by selling oil in volume.

"It went that way over and over and over again until 1981, when OPEC went to $34 a barrel," Davis said.

"The Saudis knew intuitively when they did that, they over shot the market," he added.

At that point, demand began to fall short of supply.

"THE SAME GUYS WHO drug the Persian Gulf producers to $34 also started cutting the price to maintain full production on a falling market, which meant the guys that suffered the downturn in oil production were, by and large, the Persian Gulf Arab states," Davis said.

Production in those states today has fallen off by more than 75 percent, he said. "If you look at the rest of OPEC, excluding Iran, their production is up over 120 percent."

The Arab producing nations are never going to be able to control the "cheaters" in OPEC, Davis said.

"What they said to themselves is, 'What we have to do is set the price of oil where we think it is, in our best long term interest.'"

— And thirdly, a price increase would cause a search for more oil and prompt the increased use of enhanced recovery techniques, which would ultimately reduce demand for Arab oil.

"So, they're in a position now where it doesn't do them much good to jack the price up," Davis said. "They brought it down to $29 because that's the price they can maintain in the long run to make their oil more competitive."

The Arabs read the Oil and Gas Journal, Davis quipped, and they know some big oil fields have been discovered and that production will be coming on line in the late '80s or early '90s.

Thus, they have to reduce the price of their oil so they can remain competitive in the 1990s.

"Our analysis shows, if they raise the price of their oil in lock-sync with inflation, they won't be in the market in 1990 — they won't be selling any oil at all.

"THAT'S A REAL scare to them. So how do you get the price down? It's easy. You just hold it at $29 a barrel, because inflation discounts that price over time, makes it more competitive. This maximizes your short term position and also your long term position."

Davis said if the $29 a barrel price were discounted by inflation, for example 4 percent inflation for the next eight years, in 1983 dollars, then $29 equals $18 or $19 a barrel. "If inflation turns out to be 6 percent, the price comes out at $11 a barrel."

Davis said he believes the Arab producers are going to have to hold their price at $29 a barrel "until which time they begin to sop up some of the excess oil production existing in the world. Right now, today, there is 14 million barrels of excess oil production capacity in the Persian Gulf that is operable. They can literally turn it on. That excludes three million barrels a day destroyed in the Iran-Iraq war."

When the Iran-Iraq war ends, another two million BOD could easily be added to Persian Gulf production, Davis said.

"LAST YEAR, TWO million BOD of non-OPEC production came on line. We have every expectation non-OPEC production is going to increase as much as one million BOD per year for the next eight years."

"Mexico's broke. What are they going to do? There's only one thing they can do. They've only got one cash cow, they're going to milk it. They don't have any choice. What they're going to do is under-price the Saudis by 50 cents and sell as much oil as they can produce."

CEI economists think Saudi Arabia will not be willing to raise the price of oil until they reach a much higher level of production than they currently have. The Saudis are currently producing about four million BOD.

"That's a very deceptive number though," Davis said. "Two million of the four million barrels ... they're exporting to the Iraqi customers, because Iraq's out of the business because of the war. Production for their own coffers is about two million BOD. So, the Saudis are going to wait until eight million BOD. Well, if > "The asset play is over. Holding oil doesn't pay in the '80s. The smartest thing to do is get out and produce as much oil as you can. Get out and produce it. Go to work guys. And do it right. No slop in the system. Get a good crew out there and produce more oil."

A lesson

"Two of my clients," Davis related, "two different oil companies that I can't name, happen to have a joint venture and they decided to drill two wells on the joint venture — development wells, about a quarter-mile apart, you could see one of the wells from the other.

"Well, the one company is a lot bigger than the other. The bigger company did theirs, and the little company did theirs. The little company contracted out. The big company put in their own staff. The big company's well cost twice as much — same depth, same strata, everything. They've got a problem. That's exactly the kind of guy that's not going to survive in the '80s.

Money makes the bits go 'round

"The price of oil has been the major factor driving drilling activity in the 1970s," said George Davis, economist. "Actually though, it was the asset play on the oil in the ground. Just to own oil, you made a lot of money, even if you didn't produce it. That's because the price of oil went up rapidly in the '70s — real rapidly."

From 1970 to 1981 drilling activity increased over 230 percent, Davis said. It was driven by an increase in the international price of oil from $1.80 in 1970 to $34, a 19-fold increase in 10 years.

"Now price theory says you can't change the price of something 19 times in 10 years — something's got to happen," Davis said.

"The structure of drilling activity in the '80s is therefore going to be very different too. How's it going to be different? Well, the high risk plays in oil are going to be out," Davis said. "What's going to happen is you're going to have to be more risk adverse. You're going to have to bet on more sure things. Those high risk things were fine as long as you saw your assets increasing 19-fold in 10 years.

"Actually this (Texas) is going to be one of the healthier areas," Davis said. "The areas like the Overthrust, they're really dicey and highly speculative. That kind of exploration work is going to end up dying on the vine. What we're going to see is a lot more production and development drilling. People are going to try to get more oil more efficiently out of existing fields.

"The guys that can help the industry find more efficient ways of doing what they're doing are going to be in business. The guys that sit on their duffs and do the same thing they did 10 years ago won't have a job. They're not going to be here.

"The wash-out is not complete yet. A lot of companies are still dying.

"But these guys, I know they know they've got to be lean and mean now, but I don't think they know they may have to be lean and mean for quite awhile," Davis said.

"That's going to alter a lot of things. The only thing that's different about it is offshore plays will be improving more rapidly than the onshore. Some of the best big plays are offshore, simply because they couldn't go out and drill for them before.

"One very important point: we just had a lease sale in the Gulf — an outstanding lease sale of huge volume, more dollars than anyone expected. Those guys aren't scared, no more than the guys in the Beaufort Sea are scared, because they realize by the time you get to 1990 the price of oil will be rising. Those guys aren't thinking about bringing that oil on line in a big way until the very late '80s or early '90s. That's a long-term play, so they're not afraid.

"But land drilling," Davis continued, "is going to be different. And what kind of rigs are going to be needed? The handwriting's on the wall. Those deep rigs are going to have a hard time finding any work. You're looking at medium depth to shallow drilling. Workover rigs are going to be big stuff."

The message in this for drilling contractors is, Davis said, "Get rid of the junk. Get rid of the deep ones, keep the workover rigs, keep the shallow rigs, keep the medium range rigs; but keep the good equipment and get rid of the bad stuff because you're going to have to be efficient."

Many drilling rigs are now owned by banks who repossessed them, Davis said. "What's interesting right now is the banks are not auctioning off all their rigs. They're sitting on that inventory. I've talked to the banks that hold the rigs, they're clients of ours — I've got banks that have 150 rigs. These guys realize rigs are worth 30 cents on the dollar right now, but if you wait a year and one-half they will be worth 60 or 70 cents on the dollar. It's worth holding on to the rigs because that's a rapid rate of increase. That's why you don't have the big auction sales going on, because they're all sitting on those things."

Davis said his company, Claremont Economics Institute, is forecasting an average annual rig count for 1983 in the 2,200 to 2,300 range. At present the rig count is running below that level. An increase in drilling activity during the last half of the year is anticipated.

Governor may sign legislation favoring producers

HB 171.....Hanna, D-Breckenridge
.....Senate sponsor: Montford, D-Lubbock
RE:.....Oil and gas equipment offenses

Sent to Gov. White — not signed yet.

The bill would make it a felony (second degree) to steal oilfield service equipment, regardless of the equipment's value. Current law covers only exploration and production equipment. The law also would make it a third-degree felony to tamper with permanent identification markings on petroleum equipment.

The law allows for Texas Rangers or other DPS-commissioned officers to make inspections of the records of dealers selling used oilfield equipment.

HB 593.....Messer, D-Belton
.....Senate sponsor: Howard, D-Texarkana
RE:.....Continuation of the Texas Railroad Commission

Signed into law by Gov. White.

This bill re-authorizes the Railroad Commission until Sunset Review, 1995. Makes some changes in the Commission's jurisdiction — none of which were opposed by the oil and gas producers of the state. Amended to include oil-transport manifest requirements, an anti-oil theft measure sought by TIPRO, the independent producers' organization. The amendment, sponsored by Hanna, D-Breckenridge, makes it a crime to transport oil without proper documentation.

HB 846.....Craddick, R-Midland
.....Senate sponsor: Montford, D-Lubbock
RE:.....Certain oil and gas security interests and product liens.

Sent to the governor.

Amending Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, this bill gives royalty owners and working owners a security interest in oil, gas, and proceeds. No filings are necessary. The lien attaches when a "first purchaser" buys the production. Subsequent purchasers can cancel the lien by taking certain actions to assure payment to the producers and royalty owners. The bill, according to TIPRO, will preserve millions of dollars of proceeds if there is a future wave of purchaser bankruptcies like the one that hit the industry in 1981 and 1982.

HB 1445.....Craddick, R-Midland
.....Senate sponsor: Montford, D-Lubbock
RE:.....Pollution and safety violations

Sent to Gov. White.

Authorizes the Railroad Commission to impose up to $10,000 a day in administrative fines for pollution and safety violations. The violator must be given the right to a hearing before the penalty is assessed. Provides for refunds if administrative or judicial review reverses the original penalty.

HB 1775.....Hanna, D-Breckenridge
.....Senate sponsor: Traeger, D-Seguin
RE:.....Deadlines for paying royalty and other oil and gas proceeds

Signed into law by the governor.

Payments now must begin within 120 days after the month of first purchase. Thereafter, payments for oil are to be within 60 days from the end of the month when sold, and payments for gas within 90 days of that point. Annual payments are authorized when the amount owed is $25 or less.

HB 1914.....Kemp, D-Manvel
.....Senate sponsor: Brown, R-Lake Jackson
RE:.....Tampering with oil and gas wells

Sent to the governor.

Makes it a third-degree felony for any unauthorized person to tamper with a seal or other device on a well.

HB 1970.....Geistweidt, R-Mason
.....Senate sponsor: Caperton, D-College Station
RE:.....Pollution and safety violations

Sent to the governor.

Authorizes courts to impose up to $10,000 a day in fines for pollution or safety violations. Charges a $100 fee for oil or gas drilling applications — the proceeds to be used for a special well-plugging fund. Removes existing financial responsibility which landowners may have under some conditions for plugging abandoned wells on their property.

HB 2112.....Geistweidt, R-Mason
.....Senate sponsor: Sims, D-San Angelo
RE:.....Injection well permits

Sent to the governor.

Authorizes the Railroad Commission to prohibit use of fresh water in waterflood projects if there is another substance available which is "economically and technically feasible" to use instead. Allows existing projects which use fresh water to continue doing so.

SENATE BILL:

SR 288.....Leedom, R-Dallas
.....House sponsor: Presnal, D-Bryan
RE:.....Increase in state agency fees

Signed by Gov. White. Will become law.

Increases fees for over 20 state agencies. Will charge the public $5 for requests to see Railroad Commission files. As the bill was introduced, this charge would have been $10.

A BILL THAT FAILED:

HB 2195.....Craddick, R-Midland
Died in House committee
RE:.....RRC electric logs

This bill would have required operators to file "any electric log made in connection with drilling the well" and would have made logs public information unless the person filing requests confidentiality.

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

House Bill 846, sent to Governor Mark White on May 29, is seen as one of the most important bills for White to sign, if he is to come to the aid of independent producers, royalty owners, and anyone else involved in producing oil and gas.

"The industry should be most hopeful that the governor will sign it," said Midland attorney Martin Allday late last week.

"This bill creates a security interest — or lien — in favor of the producer of oil and gas and the royalty owners, in the production sold," Allday said, "and/or the proceeds paid therefrom."

According to both Allday and the bill's sponsor, Representative Tom Craddick (R-Midland), the legislation will protect major oil companies, independents, mom-and-pop royalty owners by benefitting everyone who sells production to a first purchaser.

The need for such a bill became apparent to New Mexico several years ago. The Texas bill is reported to be a much modified version of New Mexico's law.

Last year, when Basin Inc., Rio, and other first purchasers bought crude oil and then went bankrupt, it was found that the busted companies had sold off the production and the producers were "way down" on the list of those to be paid back in bankruptcy court.

"This bill makes (producers and those with a financial stake in the production) Number One in the event of a similar bankruptcy" by an oil buyer, Allday said.

Craddick agreed on the importance of this bill. He also said his bill HB 1445, providing administrative penalties through the Texas Railroad Commission, is very important.

"There were many incidents involving pollution and safety violations that helped this legislation to pass," Craddick said. "This bill will allow the Railroad Commission to have more authority. They will have more power to act and get it (a violator's well) shut down."

Craddick said he had no problem getting access to Governor Mark White. "He has been very cooperative" during the session and Craddick expects both of these bills to be signed into law.

HB 1345 is another of Craddick's bills. It provides for regulation of pipelines transporting hazardous liquids. Drafted by a major oil company here, it was deemed sound by the legislature and by committee.

Craddick sponsored HB 1346, relating to in-situ recovery of tar sands.

Already signed into law is Craddick's bill, HB 2194, which gives Texas gas delivery systems the ability to purchase gas supplies from the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) lands off the state's coast.

One of Craddick's efforts that failed, HB 2195, would have required operators to file any electric log (except for seismic surveys and dipmeter logs) made on a well with the Texas Railroad Commission. This bill was proposed at the behest of geological and geophysical organizations in the state.

"That bill was basically wanted by the geological people," Craddick said, "because once a well is drilled, logs are made. If something happens to those logs — and the results have not been filed with a library and have been kept tight — then the information from the logs would be lost forever.

"The idea was to file the logs with the Railroad Commission, and keep them tight for five years if the filer requests it," he said.

The bill would cause "too much more paperwork," for operators, said Craddick. "They didn't feel like they should have to divulge their logs to anyone."

they're going to wait for that, they're going to have to wait probably to the very late '80s or early '90s to raise the price of oil. They'd be silly to raise it sooner.

"If you read what Sheik Yamani has said, he understands the time-value of money. He understands that very clearly. These guys aren't dumb. The government of Kuwait is one of our clients. We talk to them one-to-one. I talk to the Kuwati petroleum minister. These guys have made it painfully clear, that they understand all these things.

"WE EXPECT OIL prices are going to be flat for five to eight years, unless, there is a major supply disruption. But we can't predict that. I'm an economist, not a fortune teller. I can't see that happening today. But if you had a war in the Persian Gulf, and somebody nuked Saudi Arabia, and took 10 1/2 million barrels a day in production capacity out of the market, it would cause the price of oil to rise.

"But, we can't predict that. I wouldn't want to bet on it if I was an oil guy, standing here in Midland. I wouldn't want to bet on war in the Persian Gulf."

If the $29 a barrel price holds in the Persian Gulf, the average well head price in the U.S. will be about $26 a barrel for some time, Davis said. Later, the price will fall in real terms.

"I think we can say that safely, for the next five years."

Davis is so confident his computers are giving him the straight story, he said, "I'll bet you dollars to donuts I'm right about the $26 a barrel for the next five years."

"THAT MEANS THE character of the domestic oil industry, the guys right here in Midland, the game in the '80s is going to be like the game they played in the '60s when the price of oil was basically flat."

Davis said the situation means that for oil companies to compete, to be successful, they must produce more oil more cheaply by cutting costs and being more efficient.

"These guys can do it. They're pros. And all that riff raff that ran through Texas when the oil prices were going the roof ... they're gone. We're going to get back to business.

"But don't get me wrong. I'm not saying the price of oil is going to fall indefinitely. This is a resource market correction."

Davis said in the 1990s the price of oil is going to be rising again in real terms; probably as much as two or three percentage points over inflation.

"But, we also see there is going to be a fairly strong recovery from this recession and in that recovery we'll build demand for oil. This growth will produce about a 40 percent larger economy than the one we have today. And implicit in that larger economy is increased oil consumption.

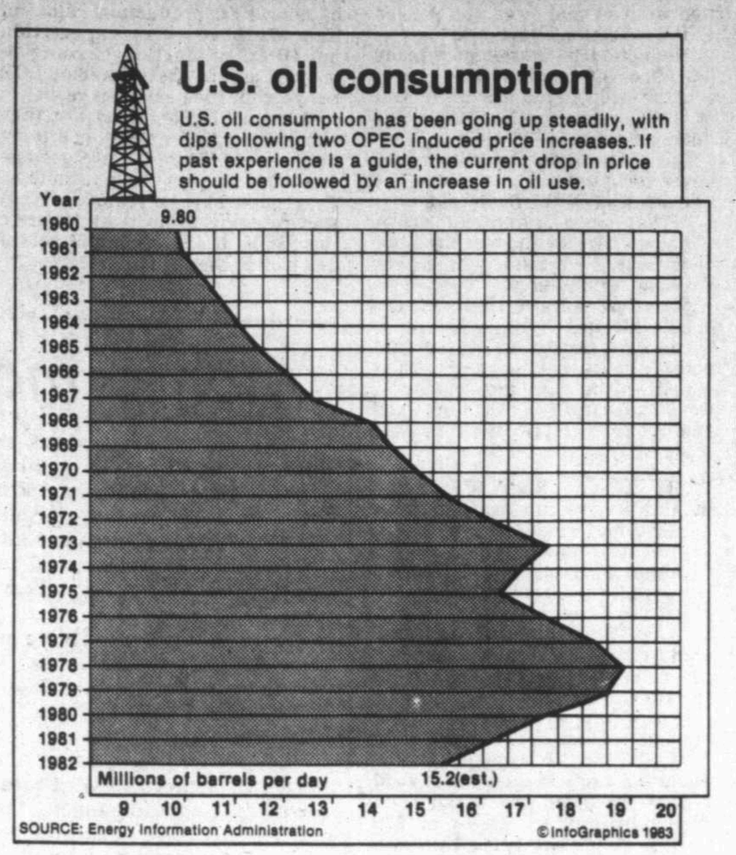
"WE THINK THE low this year, in terms of total petroleum consumption, will be about 14.3 million BOD — that's oil equivalent, includes gas and other things in that. Then rising to 16.5 million BOD by 1990. But notice we never get back to the high we had in 1979. That's because that conservation sticks. But this is a healthy environment for oil.

"Oil comapanies then will have increasing revenues from increasing volume of sales. The asset play is over. Holding oil doesn't pay in the 80s. The smartest thing to do is get out and produce as much oil as you can. Get out and produce it. Go to work guys. And do it right. No slop in the system. Get a good crew out there and produce more oil."

Increasing oil volumes will provide the revenues for increasing drilling activity, Davis said. However, he pointed out, although more money will be spent on drilling, in real terms, allowing for inflation, the expenditure will not, by 1990 anyway, ever match the level reached during the recent boom.

"Domestic oil guys can sell all the oil they can produce at the going price. So we think the price of oil is going to be weak this year, probably below $25 a barrel at the well head, and then rise to about $26 and stay flat. But at $26 a barrel, you can sell every barrel you can produce."

Davis said predictions of oil prices in the neighborhood of $18 to $20 a barrel are way too low.



Conoco president bullish on industry

C.S. "Dino" Nicandros predicted long-term price strength for crude oil and an increase in worldwide demand.

The marketplace perceives OPEC as resolved to defend its price levels, the free-fall in prices has been halted, and the $29 benchmark price for oil is holding. The reason, the Houston-based executive said, is because in March OPEC reached, for the first time, substantial agreement on both prices and production levels.

"In my view, that is reason for optimism," he said.

With a caution, however, that oil prices will remain Volatile, Nicandros ventured a three-way prediction for the remainder of 1983: an increase in OPEC production above 17.5 million barrels per day, a pickup in demand and a rise in spot prices to a level slightly above official quotes.

The long-term outlook is for free world oil demand to increase from about 45 million barrels per day this year to about 50 million barrels per day in 1990, Nicandros told his audience of Norwegian Petroleum Society members.

The major portion of this increased demand will occur in the newly industrialized countries, OPEC and other lesser developed countries where economic growth is expected to be the greatest. Given the large populations involved, even a small per capita increase in demand will yield a significant overall increase, he said.

By 1990, about half of the free world's oil needs will still come from OPEC, he said, adding that he envisions OPEC's marker price then to be about $35 per barrel in today's dollars.

Nicandros cautioned that the possibility of politically induced oil price shocks during this decade remains a very real threat which consuming countries simply cannot afford to ignore.

"We are at a critical junction on the road from reliance on low-cost Middle East oil to higher cost 'frontier' developments such as North Sea, North Slope (Alaska) and deep gas sands in the United States," he said.

Long-term, transition-thinking countries are adjusting their relationships with industry to promote investments and activities, he said, citing the U.K.'s recent reduction in petroleum taxes and increased exploration incentives.

"The challenge for industry and producer governments is to continue the brisk pace of exploration and development in the less accessible, higher cost areas," Nicandros said.

Stock brokers clean up

From Wire Reports

NEW YORK — Benefitting from the surging stock market, the brokerage business last year reported record revenues of $23.2 billion and after-tax profits of $1.7 billion — a 44 percent jump over 1981, the industry's leading trade association said Thursday.

But despite the rosy 1982 picture, the research department of the Securities Industry Association warned that expenses are rising at a rate staggering enough to raise questions about the industry's profitability during less prosperous times.

Over the three year period ending with 1982, the annual compound growth rate for total expenses was reported at almost 26 percent, a figure which "flabbergasted" Jeffrey M. Schaefer, the SIA senior vice president and director of research. Revenues over the same period rose 27.4 percent.

Significantly, occupancy and equipment costs rose by 26 percent for the industry, raising serious questions about the viability of New York City as a headquarters, staff and communications center for increasingly automated brokeage transactions.

While much of American industry suffered in 1982, the securities business did not. While nationwide sales fell by 5.7 percent, revenues in the brokerage business jumped by 17 percent. And, while the Fortune 500's profitability fell by 27 percent, the securities industry's profits jumped by 43 percent.

Schaefer said the dramatic surge in industry expenses was particularly surprising in light of the fact that "traditionally the business has been thought of as a fixed cost" field.

"Costs are no longer fixed in the securities business," Schaefer said. "Costs are relentlessly going up."

Data processing and communications expenses rose by a rate of almost 31 percent, registered representative compensation by 29.1 percent, promotional costs by 28.7 percent, and regulatory fees and expenses by 28 percent.

These figures, reflecting trends like the dramatic expansion of industry marketing and advertising, reflect both the success of the industry and the new competition traditional brokerage houses face from discounters, banks, savings and loans and others. In addition, the data processing costs, in large part, reflect the fact that financial instititutions are spending enormous amounts of money in updating data processing systems to keep pace with evolving technologies.

Ruff gives tax tips by satellite

Just when you've paid 1982 taxes, Edgar B. Francis of Odessa says "Save some of that money next year." He suggests doing it by coming to the "Are tax shelters for you?" seminar, to be held Wednesday at the Odessa Petroleum Club.

The via-satellite presentation will be beamed in and broadcast on big screens. It will include questions and answers and will star financial guru Howard Ruff and tax-shelter expert Robert Grossman, who worked on some of the most recent U.S. tax laws.

Francis says the local audience should get much out of the program since tax laws changed so radically for '82 and the coming '83 filing period.

"If you can save even $50 on your taxes with a sound, untaxed investment — then you have saved the cost of the seminar," asserted Francis.

For more information about the Wednesday, 5:30 p.m. event, call (915) 333-1832.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

DON'T LET THE HIGH RATES SCARE YOU

It's a shame to see potential homebuyers give up buying a home without even trying just because of high interest rates. These same people could be living in the home of their dreams had they dropped into a Realtor's office.

A recent survey found that nine out of ten Realtors use creative financing to some extent and it has had the effect of reducing the effective interest rate three to five percent in many instances. On a national basis, this reduces the monthly principal and interest on a median price existing home by about $175. Creative financing has helped overcome the problem of affordability facing many potential home buyers.

Creative financing can consist of mortgage takeovers, seller takebacks of first mortgages, second mortgages by sellers and buy downs. These are some of the simpler methods. Where there's a will to buy or sell—creative financing can be arranged in most cases.

Dispute solving conference set

DALLAS — Negotiation, mediation and arbitration are methods being used increasingly to settle disputes out of court. How these processes work will be the subject of a daylong conference, "Solving Disputes in the 1980's" to be held June 9 at the Sheraton Park Central, Dallas.

The event is being sponsored by the American Arbitration Association and the Dispute Mediation Service of Dallas, Inc.

The morning program will begin with an overview of conflict, followed by discussions of the concepts and processes of negotiation, mediation and arbitration.

The afternoon sessions will be devoted to a demonstration of these three processes. Each resolution technique will be applied to a stimulated, complex commercial case involving a computer. In the arbitration session, a mock hearing will be staged; two attorneys representing each party will present their case to the arbitrator.

Faculty members include Helmut O. Wolff and W. Richard Evarts, Directors of the AAA and Dispute Meditation Service respectively and Arnold Marks from the Jewish Family Services of Dallas. Also consultant Richard A. Salem from Chicago and Fran Goodwin from the U. S. Small Business administration. Speakers from the academic world are: Dr. John J. Mikrut, Jr. of the University of Missouri, and Dr. Howard F. Van Zandt of the University of Texas. The legal profession is represented by panelist Jackson D. Wilson 11 and Jeffrey A. Ford of Dallas and Richard K. Robinson of Richardson.

Welcoming remarks will be given by President Elect of the State Bar of Texas Blake Tartt of Fulbright and Jaworski. The luncheon speaker will be Robert S. Strauss of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field of Dallas.

Other groups cooperating in presenting the conference are the: Dallas Bar Association, Dallas Women Lawyers Assocaition; State Bar of Texas; Alternative Dispute Resolution Committee; Business and Professional Women of Dallas, Inc.; Industrial Relations Research Association, North Texas Chapter, Inc.; Society of Professionals in Dispute Resolution; and Southern Methodist University School of Law.

The registration fee for the conference including luncheon is $70; or $20 for the luncheon program only.

For information, contact the American Arbitration Association, 1115 Praetorian Building, 1607 Main St., Dallas, Texas 75201.

Enjoy steaks at Cattleman's

Bill and Pat Henkel, owners of Cattleman's Steak House, are currently celebrating their two year anniversary at the 3300 North Big Spring location.

Prime and choice cut steaks, an expanding variety of seafood and the 30-40 item salad bar are served six days a week. Cattleman's luncheon is served weekdays from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Dinner is served weekdays and Saturdays from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Cattleman's Steak House offers only the finest cuts of beef. Sirloin, ribeye, filet and T-bone steaks are prepared to your palate's preferance.

Twenty-five percent of the beef served at Cattleman's is prime cut. This percentage increases in relation to the availability of prime cut beef. All other beef served is choice cut. Their beef is imported from the Handy Packing Co. in San Angelo, Texas.

Owner Bill Henkel explains that Cattleman's Steak House "offers, by far, the best steaks in Midland...and that's the truth."

Each steak is complimented with the choice of baked potato or french fries. A 30-40 item salad bar and vegetables are included at no extra charge.

Recognizing the need for quality seafood in Midland, Cattleman's is continously adding to their seafood selection. Bill and Pat Henkel recently employed a seafood specialist - Dave Lucciano.

Chef Dave Lucciano brings 12½ years of cooking experience to Cattleman's. Dave has studied at Maximes in Paris and New Orleans' Antoinnes.

As the seafood specialist, Dave is continuosly adding a wider fish selection to the menu. In the near future, Cattleman's plans to serve shrimp from Mississippi, Alaskan king crablegs, New Zealand lobster, Mississippi farmed catfish and oysters.

"The Mercedes of sole", Dover sole, will soon arrive from Dover, England. This sole is the elite of the fish bar and will be a welcome addition to the Cattleman's Steak House menu.

Cattleman's Steak House offers quality dining, whether your choice is a prime cut steak or a seafood selection. To compliment your dinner, Bill and Pat Henkel offer a fine selection of wine, champagne, beer and mixed drinks. Children are always welcome and special childs' plates are available.

For the best steak in Midland and a constantly expanding menu of seafood, treat yourself to Cattleman's Steak House. Cattleman's is located at 3300 N. Big Spring, at the corner of Big Spring and Wadley. For reservations call hosts Bill and Pat Henkel at 682-5668.

Cattleman's Steak House staff (l. to r.): Owners Bill and Pat Henkel, Maybelle Felming, Toni Gollnick, Kim Bellamy, Glenda Vandergriff, Louise Lonider, Tammy Pownell, Charlene Moody, Luis Flores, Karen Kinsey and Mildred Liou. Cattleman's Steak House is located at 3300 North Big Spring in Midland.

Ground School enrollment at Hank's

All things considered, it is safer to travel by air than by land. Moreover, the requirements to obtain a pilot's license are no different than those to obtain a driver's license.

To obtain a drivers license in the state of Texas, a candidate must take three exams: an eye exam (eye chart), a written exam and a driving test.

Similarly, candidacy for a pilot's license requires three exams issued by the Federal Aviation Administration (F.A.A.). These exams include a medical eye test, a written exam and a flight test.

Preparation for the F.A.A. exam is now available in Midland - at Hank's Flite Center Inc., located at the Midland Regional Airport.

Owner of Hank's Flite Center, "Hank", was F.A.A. certified in 1930. Certification then required 40 hours flying time, 20 hours dual and 20 hours solo. At the time of his certification planes were not equipped with the technology available today.

During the 30's planes were not equipped with radios, instruments, flaps, runway access, cross-country or cross-wind landing capability. Today, these six factors are rudimentary elements of aviation.

Aviaton instruction at Hank's Flite is enhanced by his philosophy of "training for the ego." Self-confidence, a key factor in-flight, must be achieved to insure successful solo flights. Hank explains that self-confidence coupled with proper ground instruction, flight time and proficiency in radio communication will prepare pilot candidates for F.A.A. certification.

Hank's Flite is currently offering Ground School through weekend aviation seminars to be held June 4/5 and June 11/12. The aviation seminar is taught by a team of professional airline pilots.

Their program includes a slide/lecture presentation. "This exclusive visual presentation is the best way to learn." Unlike a home study aviation course, questions are answered on the spot. Hank's aviation seminar offers personal attention through professional instructors.

Completion of Hank's Ground School exposes the pilot candidate to enough material to take the F.A.A. exam. F.A.A. tests are available directly following the weekend seminar when material is freshest in your mind. Hank states that "95% of candidates pass the exam the first time." If you don't, the Ground School allows a second enrollment free of charge. If after two tries you still don't pass, 100% of your money will be refunded. Following F.A.A. certification, a review seminar is offered within the year, also free of charge.

Hank encourages anyone interested in obtaining a pilot's license to take advantage of air time prior to enrollment in Ground School. This would familiarize a student with rudiments and terminology related to aviation.

Four single engine low-winged planes are available for flight instruction at Hank's Flite Center. Aspiring pilots should direct any questions regarding Ground School or flight instruction to Hank at Hank's Flite Center at 563-1192 or 366-3365. See you in the wild blue yonder.

The Cabana Motor Inn offers 20 completely remodeled suites.

The Cabana Motor Inn offers an ideal living arrangment at more than reasonable prices. Twenty completely remodeled suites are available on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. Each suite is comprised of three separate living areas: kitchen, living room and bedroom.

Manager Neva Parker explains that the three-room suites are ideal for business executives in the process of relocation or guests who may feel cramped in one room. The quality of the suites and the service of the management by far outweigh the rates of the Cabana Motor Inn. Negotiable corporate rates are available.

Owner David Zuckerman, of Oceangate Management in Palm Springs, California, redesigned and remodeled an apartment complex to achieve the "home-away-from-home" atmosphere of the Cabana Motor Inn. Midland Chamber of Commerce member Neva Parker was chosen to act as manager. As a member of the board of directors of the Hotel/Motel Association, Neva brings West Texas hospitality in a completely professional manner to the Cabana Motor Inn. Reservations may be arranged through Neva on a 24 hour basis.

Each suite is comprised of three separate living areas: kitchen, living room and bedroom. Throughout each suite is wall-to-wall carpeting. The living room is elegantly furnished with a sofa ensemble, coffee table, magazines and silk flower arrangments. Cable television is available in each suite, offering Spotlight movies. The kitchen area is equipped with dishwasher, stove/oven, double sink, disposal and cabinets. Coffee, tea, cream and sugar are supplied compliments of the management.

The bedrooms of the Cabana Motor Inn are furnished with king-sized beds, a chest of drawers and a walk-in closet. The phone extension cord measures 14 ft. which allows for conversation in several different areas of the suite.

The Cabana Motor Inn offers its' 20 luxurious suites situated around a central recreational courtyard. The pool area is bedecked with tables and umbrellas. The atmosphere of the Cabana Motor Inn is relaxed and friendly, yet ideal for small business meetings or family gatherings.

The Cabana Motor Inn is located at 712 W. Michigan, at the corner of Michigan and "A". Reservations can be arranged by calling 682-3173 on a 24 hour basis.

Airline Child Care Center celebrates first birthday

The Airline Child Care Center, located in the Airline mobile home park, is currently celebrating its first birthday. Owners Carl and Bonnie Stewart have experienced tremendous success throughout all areas of their "truly caring environment."

Much of the success of the Airline Child Care Center is due to the dedication and enthusiasm of the staff. Many of the 16-member staff have been with the Airline Child Care Center since its inception June 1, 1982. As a result, a genuine repor has developed between teachers and children.

The program is designed to meet the needs of individual children in all areas of development: social, intellectual, emotional, nutritional and physical. Airline Child Care Center adheres only to first-class standards. Owner Bonnie Stewart stresses that "in early child development we can't risk to be any other way." One of the prime goals of the Center is to develop "the total child" while giving emphasis to individual needs and talents.

Consultant Jo Miller plans the educational ciriculum at the Airline Child Care Center. Jo brings an extensive backround in child development to the Center. She has designed a ciriculum which enables children to gain a positive self-concept and a sense of independence, while at the same time developing skills which enhance learning.

Director Sherry Clifton coordinates the 16-member staff. Prior to becoming director in December 1982, Sherry was a teacher at the Center. Her duties now include overseeing the qualified staff, strictly adhering to all state laws and requirements and enrollment.

Sherry is currently accepting enrollment in the "Summer Fun Program." This program is open to all children of the Midland/Odessa area ages six through 10. The Summer Fun Program offers directed activities within an educational ciriculum. The program extends from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. in order to allow for ample pick-up time. Half-day enrollment is available for children involved in outside activities.

Airline Child Care Center's first birthday was celebrated with special guest Timbo the Clown, balloons, napkins decorated by the children, punch and cupcakes. April Dickey (l.) age 8, and Aaron Medrand (r.) age 7, were all smiles on the big day.

The Summer Fum Program initiates a "theme of the week" covering a wide array of subjects. Art, music, spelling, energy and the animal kingdom are but a few examples of weekly themes. The week's activities - exibits, science projects, artwork, games and music - are all coordinated around the prescribed theme.

To compliment weekly themes, field trips of an educational nature will be offered. Visits to museums, the planetarium, the newspaper and the fire station will arouse a sense of curiosity and awareness of life surrounding the child.

The Summer Fun Program incorporates a physical education program which allows children to participate in outdoor activities weather permitting. Due to the fact that the Airline Child Care Center is privately owned, playground equipment and educational toys are consistently being added.

Meals are prepared at the Center by a full-time nutritionist. Well-balanced meals are planned within the structure of the four basic food groups. Snacks served are natural, with a minimum of sugar, salt and caffeine. Teachers participate during mealtime by eating with the children. As a result, table etiquette and self-sufficiency is achieved.

The Airline Child Care Center is conveniently located off Interstate-80 (by the yellow Mobile America billboard). Parents of the Midland/Odessa area are given ample time for drop-off and pick-up of their children - 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. The management and staff of the Airline Child Care Center extends appreciation to parents for their promptness and cooperation.

When a crying child claims "I don't want to go home", rest assured this "truly caring environment" is just that - a truly caring environment. Call 694-1686 for further information regarding enrollment. Congratulations to the Airline Child Care Center on their first birthday.

Auto owners to carry more liability

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas automobile owners will be required to carry higher limits of liability on their insurance policies under a bill passed in the just-concluded legislative session.

Present law requires motorists to carry $10,000 bodily injury per person, $20,000 bodily injury for two or more persons in an accident, and $5,000 property damage.

SB 583 by Sen. Kent Casperton of Bryan will increase the limits to $14,000, $30,000 amd $15,000, respectively, as of Jan. 1, 1984, and to 20,000, $40,000, $15,000 as of Jan. 1, 1986.

These limits were set by the House after revisions were made in Caperton's bill.

Rep. Don Lee, D-Harlingen, House sponsor of the bill, argues many Texas drivers already are carrying higher limits than those required under the safety-responsibility law, so that increases would not be required for all drivers.

Insurance industry representatives made only a low-key endorsement of the legislation, saying that a decision on increasing the limits was a matter of state policy.

• • •

State Board of Insurance has been directed, under a resolution passed by the legislature, to make a study of the advantages and disadvantages of various forms of property/casulaty ratemaking and policy form implementation.

SCR 213 was sponsored by Rep. Bob Simpson, D-Amarillo. It provides for the results of the study to be presented to the 1985 Legislature.

Funds for the effort were included under the general appropriations bill.

• • •

One of the measures winning late approval by the Legislature was SB 429 by Sen. O. H. (Ike) Harris, R-Dallas, relating to bank deposit agreements, subpoenas for bank records, etc.

The bill provides that a depository contract between a bank and a depositor, whether evidenced by a deposit ticket, signature card or "other specified documents," shall be deemed a contract in writing "for all purposes.

The bill also provides for amendment of a depository contract by mailing written notice to the depository, with the effective date of the amendments to be at least 30 days after the notice is mailed (except if the change is to comply with a law authorizing the change to be made at an earlier time, or to change the rate of interest paid on an interest-bearing account or for "security of accounts).

The law says banks need not disclose records of accounts or other bank records to a third party except in the case of a legal proceeding.

"Reasonable compensation" to banks for expenses incurred in complying with orders is provided.

Unless otherwise ordered by a court, an agency or party requesting bank records must give 10 days notice to the bank customer and certify to the bank that the customer has been notified.

Bank customers are given authority to seek to quash subpoenas or orders, and the bill provides that a customer's failure to receive notification doesn't render notice ineffective — if notice was properly mailed.

• • •

Final passage was given by lawmakers to HB 2118 by Rep. Owen Shea, R-Irving, expanding the types of loans eligible to be covered under private mortgage guaranty insurance.

The measure is aimed at including wrap-around mortgages and other recently developed types of mortgage instruments, and increases the reinsurance capabilities of companies to expand availability of coverage.

The bill also adds credit unions to the list of lenders eligible for such insurance.

• • •

Also winning final legislative passage was SE 1091, Harris, providing for use of "point of sale" terminals to allow electronic transfer of funds from accounts of customers to the accounts of merchants at the same or different financial institutions.

Rep. Ralph Wallace, D-Houston, House sponsor of the bill, said the program is to provide an option for payment, and not to create a system which would require electronic transfers to be used.

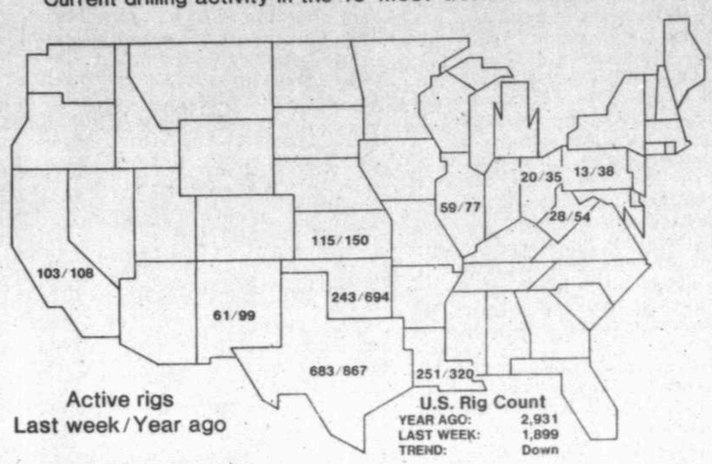
Current drilling activity in the 10 most active states of 1982



EVENTS

The Midland Desk & Derrick Club will meet Thursday, June 9, at 7:00 p.m. at the Petroleum Club.

Clifford Nutter, HNG Oil Company, will speak on "The Canyon Sands of Sutton County" and give a slide presentation. In 1980, a designation from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission provided for a tight sand incentive pricing category in Sutton County.

Nutter will discuss drilling procedures, completion problems and production data, as well as geologic interpretation.

Market tests local builders

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

The soft real estate market in Midland is testing the mettle of Midland builders, not to mention their balance sheets.

Many of them have closed their shops and many builders from out of town have withdrawn from the local market entirely.

Still, the executive vice president of the Permian Basin Homebuilders Association predicts an increase in single family home starts in the next six months as the inventory of homes gradually is whittled away.

"Over the last three months we've seen a steady amount of permits and I think you'll see an increase," said Tookie Berry last week.

In March the city of Midland issued 71 permits for single family homes. In both April and May, the city issued 72 such permits.

Berry said he's noticed from talking to the builder members of the association that many homes which have been sitting on the market for the last six months to a year are now finally selling.

Last spring the interest rate on a conventional 30-year mortgage was up to 16 percent. Today, buyers can move into a home more easily — the interest rate is 12 3/4 percent. Interest rates can be even lower with the many flexible mortgage packages builders and Realtors are able to offer now.

Realtors who are members of the association also report their activity is picking up, he added.

That is not to say local builders are not struggling in many cases to work through the glut of new homes here, high interest payments on unsold homes, and a downturn in the economy.

Some local lending institutions can't hold out any longer and they are foreclosing on such homes. According to Berry, one local bank took back an entire section of land in northeast Midland which had been purchased by a consortium of Midland builders in 1982. The group had made ambitious plans for a cooperative effort to develop a planned community.

The economic downturn has not hurt the smaller builder or the long-time Midland builder as much as the high volume builders or those who concentrated on the higher-priced homes, Berry said.

"They had higher costs, but of course, they were taking higher risks in hopes of getting a return of higher profits."

Those builders were caught with the highest interest payments for their interim construction loans, just when the Midland economy softened and just when the number of homes on the market peaked in 1982.

Smaller builders may have wanted to help with the lack of housing in Midland during the boom of 1980-81, Berry said, but were not able to get enough financing. Today, those same builders are surviving because their financial exposure with lenders is less.

"A lot of the homes sitting on the market not moving are the higher priced ones," Berry said. "But I predict there will be a demand for the homes in the $75,000 to $125,000 range in the next six months."

To Berry, it is a positive sign that out-of-town builders have left the Midland market, freeing up possibilities for the local ones.

"It seems to me that for the local builders, things are getting better. From a builders' standpoint, for those who have been able to hang on — stay up with interest rates at the bank — it's looking better than it has in the last nine months," Berry said.

The same holds true for local subcontractors, he added.

Commercial building permit activity in Midland is running slightly ahead of last year's pace but residential construction is still well below 1982's numbers.

Valuations are down in both cases, however, from last year's totals. For the first five months of the year, valuations are down by almost 50 percent. Builders this year have sought permits for construction worth $75,268,019. By this time last year, that figure had reached $137,315,160.

The difference is that a year ago, many more permits were issued for single family housing and several large commercial structures.

According to figures released by the city's department of permits and inspections, builders received 91 permits through the end of May for commercial structures. Last year, 85 permits had been issued through the same period.

In May alone, the city issued 18 commercial permits versus 12 in May 1982.

H.P.C. Construction will build a 6,900 square-foot office building at 5100 Andrews Highway for $339,000.

John Williams, Williams and Associates, has begun work on a shopping center at 350 North Midland Drive near Safeway. The city has issued permits for a 13,450 square-foot building on the site.

Other noteworthy permits were issued for buildings which signal the start of the Courtyard Shopping Center at 4410 North Midkiff Drive at Loop 250.

South Texas Construction was issued a permit to pave a parking lot area at 201 West Missouri Street south of the First National Bank of Midland. The bank's Eagle Plaza office tower announced two years ago has been indefinitely postponed, shareholders were told at the bank's annual meeting May 26.

Although commercial development in the city seems to be on a level near that of a year ago, new residential construction continues to lag 1982 activity. Through the end of May, the city had issued 345 permits for new residences, versus 824 issued in the first five months of 1982.

New Mexico energy industry suffers setbacks in '82

SANTA FE — The state's leading single revenue source reported setbacks in several areas in 1982, according to "New Mexico Oil & Gas Facts '82".

Such factors as lower oil prices, reduced markets for both oil and gas, and the general economic recession last year had combined to cause slowdowns in exploration, drilling, production, and other activities, said Peter Flanagan, executive vice president of the New Mexico Oil & Gas Association.

Although the industry will long remain a vital part of New Mexico's economy, Hanagan said it was doubtful the state will ever again see the large leaps in oil and gas revenues that it enjoyed each year from 1971 to 1981.

Annual revenue from oil and gas rose from $100.5 million to $1 billion, almost 900 percent, during that 10-year period.

1. Number of wells drilled: 2,313 compared to 1981's 2,727 wells, an all-time high. The total feet drilled dropped from 14 million to 12 million.

2. Average number of drilling rigs operating each day was 103.3 compared to 134.9, a 23 percent reduction.

3. Natural gas production from 1.118 trillion cubic feet to 900 billion cubic feet. That 11.5 percent drop was the largest in many years.

4. Oil production from 72.6 million to 71 million barrels. However, that 1.6 percent decline was one of the smallest in several years. Oil production has declined 40 percent since 1971.

5. Direct taxes and revenues from the oil and gas industry declined 7 percent ($73.8 million) going from $1 billion in 1981 to $937 million in 1982.

6. Price of crude oil. Average price was $31.67 per barrel, compared to $34.29 the previous year, a decrease of $2.26. It has been estimated that every $1 drop in the price of oil means a $10 million loss of income for the State of New Mexico.

7. Operating refineries. There were 5 at the end of 1982. Since then another has closed, resulting in a 50 percent decrease in the number of operating refineries since 1980.

8. The estimated number of service stations continued to decline, going from 1,200 in 1981 to 1,139 in 1982.

9. The total number of New Mexicans employed in jobs related to oil and gas production, refining, processing, marketing, transportation and field services decreased 6 percent from 27,300 to 25,700.

However, the oil and gas statistical report did list increases in other areas:

1. Public Education: About $488 million in oil and gas revenues went to public schools, colleges and other educational institutions during the 1981-1982 school year, an increase of $133 million (37 percent) over the previous year.

Sixty-six percent of the Operational Fund for New Mexico's public schools, grades 1-12, derived from oil and gas assessments. The public schools' share was more than enough to pay the salaries of every school teacher, administrator, librarian, counselor and school nurse in each of the 88 school districts, as well as to pay for all textbooks.

2. Oil and gas provided half ($555.7 million) the monies in the State General Fund, which is used to pay the basic costs of state government. New Mexico's current revenue shortfalls are due in large part to the decline in oil and gas activities.

3. There were 313 "wildcat" oil and gas wells, seeking new fields, drilled in 1982; 168 were dry holes. That amounted to 54 percent dry holes, compared to 42 percent in 1981.

4. The cost of drilling all types of wells went up. The average price for an oil well was $438,998 in 1982, an increase of $86,976 (25 percent) over 1981. For the average gas well the cost rose $128,810 (29 percent) to $568,119. It frequently costs more than $2 million to drill a 13,000 foot gas well in the Carlsbad area.

Job interviews, tennis, require similar skills

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

If telephone contact is poker and resume contact is roulette, interview contact can surely be likened to a game of tennis. Or so says Jeffrey Allen, a job placement counselor-turned job placement attorney who specializes in the hiring process.

"Interviewing and tennis do not depend upon the chance of roulette or the nerves of poker," said the Los Angeles attorney in a telephone interview. "Instead, they depend upon approach, practice and hundreds of conditioned responses. Actual experience is critical to developing skills at winning a chance for a job following an interview."

Allen is winding up business at his Los Angeles law office to go on a nationwide tour to promote his first book, "How To Turn An Interview Into A Job" (Simon & Schuster, $5.95).

"Last year, the job statistics were dismal for new college graduates. Actually, they don't look any more promising this year," Allen said. "I was asked to field questions from telephone callers about job interviewing at a local radio station last summer.

"After the show, the switchboard was jammed. I appeared on most every television talk show in Los Angeles and at another 15 to 20 radio shows. And every time, the result was the same — the switchboards were jammed."

After his appearances, the telephone lines into Allen's law practice became so busy that clients couldn't get through.

"Finally, one radio personality asked if I couldn't at least offer the listening public the title to my book," Allen remembered. "I said, 'What book?' There was no book, just my smiling face. The woman (radio moderator) just shook her head and told me to 'get busy.'"

And so Allen did. He worked with an editor from Simon & Schuster to offer tips to prospective job applicants, drawing from his 20 years of experience on the other side of the desk. He was the personnel executive job seekers came to see. He was the one who filed thousands of resumes either for "immediate attention," "future reference" or in the trash can.

"Some novices believe interviewing is a frightening and uncertain mystery," he said. "It isn't. That's why I've developed the 'irresistible interview' technique. Identify and control 12 simple chronological steps and the chances are one in three that the company will offer you the job you're after.

"It's not a matter of playing the statistics — it's more a matter of being in control and feeding the interviewer what he wants. The object is to get as many job options as possible. Follow my rules and you'll get a lot of job offers."

Allen admits that certain people are made for the interview situation. They feel at home and enjoy the experience. He knows he did, right from his first interview. So what do these people know that the rest of us don't?

"They know — and practice — the irresistible interview technique," Allen said. And he offers this, only a portion of the advice he provides to job seekers in his book:

"First, familiarize yourself with the employer. Developing a profile of each employer you visit not only dramatically increases your ability to impress the interviewer, but it's an important first step in reducing your fear of the unknown.

"As you become adept at doing your homework for each employer, you will find that you can take almost 95 percent of the mystery out of interviewing. From the very beginning, your confidence shows."

So where do you find the information you need? Allen suggests checking out corporate profiles in annual reports, "Dun & Bradstreet's Million Dollar Directory," "Moody's News Reports" and "MacRae's Blue Book."
