Senate adopts tax reductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, adopting one of the most sweeping tax changes in modern times over Reagan administration reservations, is backing automatic annual reductions in personal income taxes to offset the "bracket creep" caused by inflation.

The "indexing" provision, approved on a 57-40 vote Thursday, is supported in principle by half the members of the House and by President Reagan. But the administration unsuccessfully sought to keep the indexing plan off the president's tax-cut bill.

The amendment, sponsored by Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., would adjust personal tax rates, the $1,000 individual exemption and the standard deduction to offset inflation, starting in 1985.

For example, if inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index was 10 percent in 1984, the following year the eIemption would be raised to $1,100, the $3,400 standard deduction for a couple would be increased to about $3,750 and rates would be reduced 10 percent across the board.

That would cut taxes an estimated $37.4 billion in 1985.

With the administration's support, the Senate also approved a major new incentive for savings, aimed partially at solving the financial plight of the homebuilding and savings-and-loan industries. It would cost $8.7 billion from 1982 through 1985.

The new provision, which would allow a person to earn $1,000 in tax-free interest from a special new one-year savings certificate, would benefit mainly people with incomes above $30,000 a year. It would be financed in part by ending a current interest exemption which is claimed widely by low- and middle-income families.

The two amendments, and an unrelated one affecting Social Security, occupied the Senate until almost midnight Thursday as it worked on Reagan's plan for a 25 percent, across-the-board cut in income-tax rates over 33 months, starting Oct. 1.

In the House, meanwhile, the Ways and Means Committee completed the first round of work on its own tax-cut measure, which would reduce tax rates an average of about 15 percent over two years and target extra relief to families with incomes under $50,000 a year.

House and Senate leaders want to wrap up the tax package and get it to Reagan before starting their August vacation. That would ensure a small share of the personal tax cuts in the last three months of this year.

Pay not central postal strike issue

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Although pay increases are being sought, local employees say the central issue in the postal dispute is the Postal Service's refusal to bargain in good faith.

"We want to stress that management is not willing to negotiate," said Calvin Boren, president of the Midland chapter of the American Postal Workers Union.

"Basically, we're asking a 5 percent pay increase in each of the next three years, with an another 2.7 percent 'catch-up' added to this year's 5 percent."

The pay hikes would be in addition to periodic cost of living increases during the course of the proposed contract and, according to Boren, are being sought on the basis of a union-sponsored study showing it would take that amount of money to bring postal employees' pay in line with that of employees in the auto and teamsters unions. Local postal employees now average $21,146 a year.

The current three-year contract between the APWU and the National Association of Letter Carriers expires at midnight Monday, and union leaders say their members will walk out if a new contract isn't signed by then. The unions' combined force is about 500,000 out of a total 600,000 postal employees.

Boren said management has been employing delaying tactics in the negotiations and that the unions have filed an unfair labor practices com-

Through the 'eyes' of the camera

Gary James of "The Eyes of Texas" television program spent several hours Thursday night in the balcony at the Yucca Theatre filming the Summer Mummers for a segment which will be aired next season. James was in Midland Monday through today working on West Texas stories for the regionally syndicated series which is currently aired on a regular basis in Houston, Beaumont, San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Midland-Odessa.

Gary James of "The Eyes of Texas" television program couldn't have picked a better night to film the Summer Mummers. The production went off with relatively few problems and Thursday's packed-house crowd was rowdy, but in good spirits.

Laughing, James said about halfway through the Olio, which follows the melodrama, "I haven't been able to hear anything since the first act. This is really something."

The only point of reference in his own life he could find to relate the Mummers' atmosphere and crowd to was "the Stampede in Big Spring on a Saturday night." James is originally from Big Spring, where he first worked for a radio station at age 16.

Ray Miller, the previous news director at KPRC-TV, Channel 2, in Houston, and James produce "The Eyes of Texas," recently rated by a trade magazine as "the most successful regional show in the country and the only regionally produced syndicated show in the top 10."

James spent this week in West Texas filming different segments of next season's program. The Mummers segment is expected to air sometime next spring.

Calls and letters from two Midlanders brought James to West Texas.

Mary Frances Beverley, free lance writer and publicity chairman for the Mummers, has sent several letters to "The Eyes of Texas" staff. And Guy McCrary, of The First National Bank, called James in Houston. First National Bank is the local sponsor for the Houston-based program.

When McCrary pointed out that the Mummers was currently onstage, James said he decided now would be a good time.

"We'd been wanting to film the Mummers for some time, so I decided to make a week of it and do a bunch of stories while I was out there," he added.

James spent one day working on a chuck wagon story. His sources here were the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library and J. Evetts Haley.

He also filmed two segments in Snyder. One was with Larry Hatfield, "jukebox and nostalgia dealer," and the other was the Diamond M Museum.

Other stories included one in the town of Girvin in Pecos County; a Midlander named Juanitta who has a collection of outhouses; and "an oil patch cartoonist of some note named Gordon Bankston in Odessa."

In all, James said he had gathered enough material this week for seven stories, two of which (chuck wagon and the Mummers) will be turned into major stories.

James has been with "The Eyes of Texas" since its inception at KPRC in 1969. Prior to that he was filming documentaries for KPRC. He won the Peabody Award in the early 70s for his documentary "The Right Man." This piece dealt

Two Odessa women returned to jail in escape case

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The 25-year-old girlfriend of a federal fugitive and her companion were placed under $100,000 bailbonds Thursday and were returned to jail after U.S. Magistrate J. Michael Cunningham revoked their earlier $10,000 bonds for allegedly helping their friend break out of jail in Midland.

The women, Mildred Sue Pittinger, the 25-year-old girl friend of fugitive James Monroe "Cowboy" Crosson, 36, and Donna Ruth Dotson, 29, both of Odessa, had been charged with aiding and abetting Crosson's escape from the Midland City Jail last June 11 and had been released under $10,000 bailbonds each.

Cunningham had reduced the women's initial bailbonds from $50,000 to $10,000 later last month to allow their release pending court hearings and trial. But the women were arrested near midnight on July 5, as they allegedly were returning to Texas from Juarez, Mexico, where Crosson and his fellow fugitives are allegedly seeking refuge.

"It's just particularly shocking," the magistrate said of the women violating conditions of bonded release. Both woman cried as the magistrate set their cash or surety bonds at $100,000. The U.S. deputy marshal returned them to the federal section of the Midland City Jail.

The women allegedly helped Crossen, who was bound to the federal penitentiary to serve a 10-year sentence on a drug conviction, and three others escape from the jail somehow by furnishing them with hack saw blades and a pipe wrench used in cutting through their cell block on the second floor of the Midland Public Safety Building.

Supposedly holed up in Mexico with Crosson are David Wallace, 35, who was bound for the federal white-collar prison in Big Spring, and William Anthony Dugan, 36, and Glen Eugene Stewart, 37.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Bock characterized Dugan and Stewart as "large-scale" importers of marijuana from Mexico.

Bock had recommended that the magistrate set the women's bailbonds at $150,000 each. Were bail continued at $10,000 each, as the women's court-appointed attorney, Roger Jones, had recommended, the women would be "laughing at law-enforcement officers all the way to Mexico," Bock argued.

"It's obvious...that this situation had got to be stopped," the federal prosecutor said.

Bock said that Ms. Pittinger and Ms. Dotson were a "link" to the fugitives.

"They can go back and join their compadres in Mexico" if they are allowed to make bail, Bock reasoned. The prosecutor described the fugitives as "good friends, to say the least, of these young ladies...these two girls."

Jones, an Odessa attorney had put up the bail money for Ms. Pittinger's initial release last month, countered that Bock's conclusions were based on "pure speculation."

"It's rather circumstantial. It's pure gross speculation that they (defendants Ms. Pittinger and Ms. Dot-

U.S. ready to resume shipment of F-16 jets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration neared an announcement today that it is lifting the five-week suspension of F-16 jet deliveries to Israel even as some officials expressed consternation over fresh Israeli attacks into Lebanon.

"They are rubbing our noses in it," said one official source of Israel's raids, which presumably used U.S.-supplied aircraft. "This is not just coincidence; they are trying to drive a wedge between us and the Arabs."

But the official said the announcement was still expected later today, although some consideration apparently had been given to delaying it. He would not, however, rule out a last-minute delay.

The official said Israeli leaders apparently think that by conducting bombings against Lebanon on the same day the administration was announcing it is resuming shipments of the jet fighters to Israel, the United States would be embarrassed in the eyes of Arab nations.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the administration was deeply worried over how it will look to lift the suspension against the background of the attacks and said the administration would try to focus as little attention as possible on the announcement.

The supension was imposed on June 10, after Israel used U.S.-supplied warplanes to bomb Iraq's nuclear reactor in what the administration considered a possible violation of a U.S.-Israeli agreement restricting use of American-supplied weapons to defensive purposes.

Israel's pounding of Palestinian strongholds in Beirut and southern Lebanon from the air and sea today was the heaviest anti-guerrilla action since its 1978 invasion of the southern border area. Police said more than 50 people were killed, but a Lebanese radio station put the death toll at more than 100.

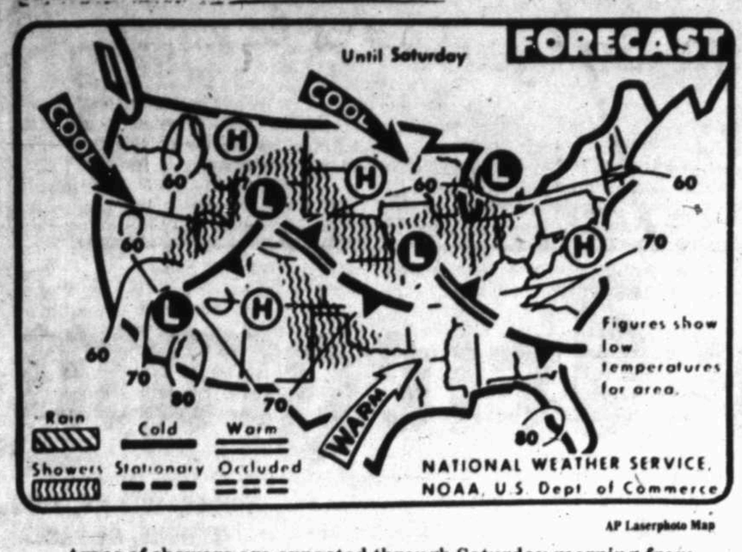

The administration was expected to announce that it is giving the go-ahead to ship 10 F-16s, six that were due today anyway and four that were originally scheduled for delivery June 12.

Hardly anyone familiar with the issue doubted Thursday that the administration would lift the suspension. A senior U.S. official, who asked not to be identified, told reporters weeks ago that Israel would get the planes, and that was reaffirmed by other administration sources.

The only question seemed to be when. Alan Romberg, a deputy press officer at the State Department, answered that Thursday when he told reporters a decision would be announced today.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Areas of showers are expected through Saturday morning from the central Rockies to the Great Lakes. Cool weather is forecast for the Pacific coast and northern tier to the Great Lakes. Other areas will be warm.

Midland statistics

WEATHER FORECAST

Partly cloudy through Saturday with slight chance of thundershowers. Low tonight 70. High Saturday in the upper 90s. Southerly winds diminishing tonight 5-10 mph. Probability of measurable rainfall 20 percent tonight.

Clear skies remain

Warm temperatures and partly cloudy skies will remain in the Permian Basin through Saturday with a slight chance of needed precipitation tonight.

The forecast calls for the temperature Saturday to reach the upper 90s after an overnight low of 70.

Today's southerly winds of 10-15 mph will diminish to 5-10 mph tonight.

The 20 percent chance of rain tonight might bring some relief from the heat. For the third consecutive day, the high temperature reached the 100 degree level Thursday. Thursday's high of 100 fell just one degree shy of the 101 record set last year.

This morning's low of 70 was 10 degrees over the record of 60 set in 1936.

Scattered showers were reported early today over sections of the Texas Panhandle and along the Gulf Coast while the remainder of the state enjoyed fair to partly cloudy skies.

Temperatures hovered in the low 70s over most of Texas. The 4 a.m. extremes were 68 degrees at Dalhart and 83 at Galveston. Winds were from the south at five to 15 mph.

The forecast called for partly cloudy skies over West Texas and sunny conditions across the remainder of the state.

son) were in Mexico to aid and abet these escapees."

Jones said that the government presented "no evidence that they wanted to avoid" court hearings.

Ms. Dotson's initial $10,000 bailbond had been secured through Odessa bondsman Truman "Ike" Isaacs.

The two women were placed under custody at the New Bridge connecting Juarez to El Paso about 11:30 p.m. on July 5 after a U.S. Customs agent had found marijuana seeds in the floorboard of the car, driven by Ms. Dotson, and uncovered 22.5 grams of marijuana seeds in a tin in the truck of the car. However, he said that the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration had "declined prosecution" based on alleged importation of marijuana that incident.

The agent also said he found in Ms. Dotson's possession U.S. Western District Court papers which prohibited the women leaving the court's jurisdiction while their case was pending trial.

" 'I knew we shouldn't have gone (into Mexico),' " the agent said Ms. Dotson had told him. " 'We meant to stay in El Paso.' " The federal court's Western District of Texas extends from Austin-San Antonio westward to El Paso.

In addition, the agent said he uncovered a note, which essentially read, "I was by your house. I missed you. I'll see you later." It was initialed "J.C." presumably for James "Cowboy" Crosson.

New labor tension sweeps Poland

By STEPHEN H. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — New labor tension swept Poland today, and the extraordinary Communist Party Congress was forced into a second ballot on a new central committee.

Sources in the independent labor union Solidarity said that barring agreement, some 40,000 dock workers would report to work at 6 a.m. next Thursday but would then take part in meetings and other protests.

One Solidarity official said there would be "some unloading of ships whose cargo lies in the interest of society, in other words food."

The dockers' protest, potentially the most serious labor demonstration since a nationwide warning strike in March, would involve workers at four vital Baltic ports.

THE DOCKERS want improvements in pay and benefits and recognition under a new charter. Workers for the state airline, LOT, also have scheduled a strike.

Fifteen Solidarity chapters met in the central city of Lodz today to discuss what a spokesman described as Solidarity's "losing control of factories and other industrial enterprises in the face of lengthening food lines and a recent hardening position of authorities."

SOLIDARITY officials in northwest Pila reported that police and prosecutors searched the union's print shop Thursday night, confiscating brochures and Solidarity publications.

The union's editor in Pila, Jaroslaw Grusykowski, was seized for interrogation, as was another editor of a brochure entitled, "Cobblestones Are Our Friends." Cobblestones are a traditional weapon of urban rioters.

Meanwhile, the official PAP news agency reported that Prof. Marian Weiss, a prominent head of a rehabilitation center in the Warsaw suburb of Konstancin, committed suicide.

It said Weiss pioneered several methods of orthopedic rehabilitation and surgery and worked on social rehabilitation of injured persons to help them re-enter society after serious injury.

THE AGENCY did not say where or when Weiss killed himself.

Medical sources said Weiss commanded considerable international prestige in the medical community, and was associated with the World Health Organization in Geneva.

The party congress in Warsaw was still working its way toward election of a new 200-member central committee and a new party chief.

Congress sources reported early today that the new central committee had been elected on first ballot. The same official sources said later that a second ballot had been required because not all positions had been filled.

The 1,955 delegates at the party congress were voting by secret ballot, an unprecedented step in the Soviet bloc. The new central committee is to draw up a slate of candidates for party chief, but for the first time the full congress will be able to add its own nominees.

AT OTHER SOVIET bloc party congresses, as in past ones in Poland, the members of central committees, and other party officers, are proposed by party leaders and elected unanimously, with great fanfare but little suspense.

Poland's Communist Party chief, Stanislaw Kania, had hoped to win re-election on Tuesday, the opening day of the congress, and use the victory to consolidate his control over the proceedings. But he was thwarted when the newly democratized gathering could not agree on voting procedures.

"I think that was an early tip-off that the delegates were going to be a little more difficult to handle than might have been imagined," one Western diplomat said.

THE VOTING DELAY was expected to extend the meeting, originally predicted to end as early as Friday, through next Tuesday, congress officials said.

Kania, a moderate, is still seen as the favorite to keep his job as party chief, but the road to re-election has gotten bumpy. A letter was circulating among delegates earlier in the week implicating Kania in the decision to crack down hard on food price protests in Gdansk in 1970, resulting in a bloody confrontation that is still an emotional issue in Poland.

The signers of the letter purportedly included former party chief Wladyslaw Gomulka, who lost his job in the aftermath of the riots. Congress sources now say the letter is widely believed to be a fake, but even if forged it could be a sign of a struggle for power going on behind the scenes of the congress, which itself is conducted mostly behind closed doors.

EDS weighing options in judgment against Iran

DALLAS (AP) — The partial victory by Electronic Data Systems Inc. in winning a $19 million judgment against Iran is now only part of a continuing struggle to collect the money, EDS officials said Thursday.

Attorneys for the company founded by Dallas millionaire H. Ross Perot must now decide whether to make a last U.S. appeal, or try to be "first in line" to collect the money from an international tribunal.

The U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans has suspended its earlier ruling that the Marine Midland Bank of New York City cannot transfer $20 million in Iranian assets to the Federal Reserve Bank.

The money, attached by EDS to ensure payment of the judgment, is among billions of dollars the Fed is to send to Iran. The appeals court said the company must now take its case to the international tribunal established after the American hostages were released last year. EDS officials say its attachment of the $20 million account and Wednesday's judgment predate the freezing of Iranian assets and the hostages' release.

But the Fifth Circuit court upheld a president's right to suspend claims.

An EDS attorney said company officials must decide whether to appeal the decision to the Supreme Court or to proceed through the claims tribunal.

There have already been several appeals, including three by Iran and one by the U.S. government, the attorney said. Iran also appealed the attachment order in New York.

Merrill Lynch files suit

Midland stockbroker Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. has filed suit in federal court in Midland against eight of its former account executives and representatives who allegedly resigned en masse last June 17 in a conspiracy to work for E.F. Hutton & Co., a competitor which recently opened offices in Midland.

Merrill Lynch is alleging that its eight ex-employees broke contractural agreements by joining E.F. Hutton, that they are guilty of "misappropriation and misuse of trade secrets and other confidential information (and) unfair competition...."

Defendants in the case are former Merrill Lynch account executives Gerald Nobles Jr., Stanley Rogers, William Wise, Craig Campbell and Steve Hamrick, all of whom had signed contracts with the brokerage company, and M.W. Minces, Frank Maggio and Gloria Williams, according to the suit's petition.

Merrill Lynch had sought a court injunction to prohibit the defendants from contacting Merrill Lynch customers and trying to woo them over to E.F. Hutton, and from using Merrill Lynch "trade secrets" while in the employ of E.F. Hutton. Merrill Lynch, also, is seeking return of "all documents...of whatever kind" which the defendants may have moved over to E. F. Hutton.

However, U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton has ordered Merrill Lynch and the defendants to "promptly proceed to arbitrate" in an effort to settle their differences and to report results of their arbitration to the court within 60 days.

The defendants had requested a court order to arbitrate the differences and to settle any controversy "in accordance with the constitution and rules of the New York Stock Exchange."

The plaintiff is alleging that the defendants are "causing irreparable injury to Merrill Lynch and unjust enrichment to Hutton."

Judge recommends TI merger be approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas International Airlines won a major victory today in its bid to take over Continental Airlines as an administrative law judge recommended to the Civil Aeronautics Board that the merger be approved.

Judge William Kane said acquisition of Continental by the Houston-based carrier would "not result in a substantial lessening of competition" on the national level.

The five-member CAB must make the final decision on the matter and oral arguments are planned for next week. Because international routes are involved, President Reagan could overrule the eventual board decision, but such an action is unlikely.

Kane's ruling is a blow to Continental employees seeking to thwart the Texas International takeover attempt. The employees, with management encouragement, are trying to purchase 15.4 million new shares of Continental, the country's 11th largest air carrier, and block the merger.

CONTINENTAL NOW IS racing the calendar in an effort to get the employee-ownership plan in place before the CAB rules on the merger. The Texas carrier already owns 48.5 percent of Continental's stock, enough for control of the airline if the CAB gives the go-ahead.

The CAB has set an Aug. 31 deadline for deciding the issue.

Kane, in making his recommendations, said the merger would not harm competition. He said Texas International and Continental compete on only five of 124 nonstop routes flown by the two carriers. If a merger is approved two routes to Mexico — one by each airline — would have to be eliminated, Kane said.

Texas International began purchasing Continental stock six months ago and by March had accumulated 48.5 percent of the common shares outstanding, enough to control the Los Angeles-based airline. But the CAB ordered the stock kept in a special trust until it decides whether the acquisition should go through.

Trying to thwart the Texas International takeover, 11,000 Continental employees established an association to purchase controlling interest of Continental.

Postal workers say pay not central issue in talks plaint with the National Labor Relations Board. A hearing on the complaint is pending.

"We're not sure why they refuse to negotiate," said Boren. "They filed to have both unions combined into one and the NLRB threw out their request. It caused a six-to-eight week delay in negotiations. Now they come to meetings and just sit there. We think they're trying to force a strike, but we don't know why."

Despite a total pay hike of 31.9 percent in the past three years, union officials say the Consumer Price Index rose 39.1 percent during the same period.

Public employees are forbidden by law from striking, and the Postal Service has issued a strongly worded statement to that effect:

"Although (management) is committed to negotiating new contracts prior to (Monday's deadline), it is important that all postal employees recognize that there are orderly and peaceful procedures provided in the (NLRB Act) and Postal Reorganization Act for resolving an impasse, if one should arise.

"You should be aware that any employee who, in any manner, participates in a strike or other illegal job action will be discharged. Any employee who participates in a strike (also) forfeits the right to any future employment by the United States Government."

Numerous employees nationwide were fired during the 1978 strike, according to Boren, who said many of them still don't have their jobs back.

The total number of local postal workers is 329 — a large majority of whom are unionized. Boren said they would wait to see what develops in Washington before deciding what to do if a new contract doesn't emerge over the weekend.

National Postal Service spokesmen were not available for comment by press time, but local officials said contingency plans for delivery of priority mail would go into effect if a strike is called. Priority mail would include express mail and special delivery, an official said. Other mail delivery would be suspended.

Midland police probing thefts

In theft and burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, Thomas Moore of Odessa told officers an uncirculated Carson City silver dollar, minted in 1880, was missing from his room at the Sheraton Inn, 401 W. Missouri Ave. The coin was valued at $200.

An employee of the Taco Villa restaurant at 3203 Midkiff Road reported the theft of a bank deposit bag containing $1,533 in cash and checks.

Police Roundup

The theft occurred sometime Thursday.

And Jo Anne Arrendondo of 311 E. Pine said someone entered her residence through a west door and took a TV set, stereo equipment and assorted change worth a total of $1,175. There was no sign of forced entry.

Many bridges in U.S. in danger of collapsing

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — About every other bridge in the United States is in danger of falling down and it will take $41 billion to make them safe again.

In New York, 59 percent of the 17,189 bridges are considered structurally deficient and unsafe for vehicle traffic.

Out of Texas's 41,454 bridges, the largest concentration of bridges in any one state, 15,197 are viewed as in need of major rehabilitation.

More than 75 percent of North Carolina's 14,960 bridges have been restricted to light vehicles only, closed to traffic or must be rehabilitated immediately to stay open.

Overall, a still unpublished report from Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis to Congress shows that about half of the 524,866 bridges in the U.S. are officially tagged as structurally deficient or functionally obsolete.

More than 56 percent of local bridges not on the federal-aid system are also deficient or obsolete.

A functionally obsolete bridge is one whose narrow lanes, load capacity, clearance or approach roadway alignment can no longer safely serve its current traffic load.

A deficient bridge is one that is restricted to light vehicles and must be rehabilitated immediately to stay open.

Lewis says that it will cost $41.1 billion to replace and rehabilitate all the deficient and obsolete bridges in the country, with $20.6 billion of that total needed for bridges on the heavily travelled federal system.

The U.S. Bridge Replacement and Rehabilitation program makes $1.3 billion in Federal Highway Trust Fund money available this year.

Under current law, at least 65 percent of those funds must be used for bridges on the federal-aid system.

Streetcar buffs busy restoring old No. 1347

AP Laserphoto

Steve Iverson, left, and Frank Sirinek refinish wooden seats from a 1903 Chicago streetcar being restored at the Illinois Railway Museum at Union, Ill. They've worked on the car for eight years.

UNION, Ill. (AP) — If Chicagoans had loved old No. 1374 the way Steve Iverson loves her, this turn-of-the-century trolley car still would be carrying passengers through the Windy City.

Iverson leaves his family bakery in Rogers, Ark., about twice a month to join other streetcar buffs at the Illinois Railway Museum, where they are restoring No. 1374 to her original splendor.

The streetcar buffs are donating more than $100,000 in labor, and the museum is spending about $25,000 on the project.

"I just fell in love with this place," said Iverson, who became an active member of the museum in 1974, several years before moving to Arkansas. "I come back for the weekend and spend the nights in one of the cabooses out here."

Soon, the 1903 wooden streetcar will carry museum visitors down the mainline and back to the heyday of electric railroading. They probably won't realize how difficult the restoration of No. 1374 was. The seats and much of the brass trim were missing because No. 1374 had been converted to a work car.

"It was completely gone — just a skeleton with a little siding when we got it," said Frank Sirinek of Elgin. "We've been working on this car since 1975."

A tip led the restoration crew to Wisconsin, where an identical Chicago streetcar was being used as a hot dog stand. A farmer took them to a wooded area where the seats had been discarded, and the volunteers chipped out the valuable parts in weather 37 degrees below zero.

The exterior now is perfect in every detail, including the original color and type of paint and the Chicago Surface Lines emblem. Iverson and Sirinek are refinishing the cherry, mahogany and birch wood interior.

When No. 1374 is back on her motorized wheels, she will join a dozen other streetcars, interurbans, a steam train, a diesel-powered streamliner, and some old rubber-tired trolley buses.

"There is no other museum in the country with the mix of equipment we have," said Nick Kallas, museum general manager.

About 100 of the 1,200 members operate equipment that carried 52,000 visitors last year.

"Old railroaders don't really like to do this," said Kallas, an Arlington Heights school teacher. "It's nuts like us who push pencils all day."

Out on the 1½-mile main line, which stretches from a McHenry County farmhouse to downtown Union, Bob Opal is at the controls of a 1923 interurban once owned by the Illinois Terminal.

"Learning to stop smoothly with these air brakes is the hardest thing," said Opal, a Downers Grove attorney who teaches others to be motormen.

His stop is flawless, and he tells riders to flip the backs of their seats so they will be pointing in the right direction for the ride back to the museum station. Trolleys also run on a mile-long loop that takes riders past the metal buildings that house many of the 140 pieces of railroad equipment.

Kallas said members probably would add 1½ miles to the mainline this year. The museum owns a five-mile right-of-way but installing and maintaining track is expensive — $75,000 a mile — and it's hard work, he said.

Still, there is only one reason to fix streetcars and put them on tracks.

"I can't see myself spending half of my life restoring these cars and then not running them," said Sirinek, who enjoys taking the controls when he needs a break from the car shops.

Hormone may help short children

BOSTON (AP) — It may stunt the supply of astronauts and jockeys, but researchers say a common hormone has been found to help short children grow and its use could be expanded.

The hormone, given 20 children ages 8 to 11 whose growth was below the normal rate of 2 to 4 inches a year, shot up "3, 4 or 5 inches a year, so their growth failure was corrected," said Dr. Daniel Rudman, who directed the study.

The study was conducted at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta and was published here in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The natural chemical — the height-regulating protein called human growth hormone — can accelerate a child's creeping growth rate if given in extra doses, Rudman said. Until now, doctors had used it only on children with a rare deficiency that prevents growth entirely.

However, the hormone won't help short people catch up once they reach adulthood. Also, supplies are low because it can be obtained only from human pituitary glands collected at death. However, genetic engineers have found ways to program bacteria to produce the hormone, and the substances are being tested.

"Short children are pretty common ... and in the majority of them, there is no apparent cause for their shortness," Rudman said.

New technique aids cancer fight

BOSTON (AP) — By using a technique that involves dropping cancer cells five feet, University of Minnesota researchers believe they can identify subtypes of a common form of leukemia, according to a report in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The researchers cultured cancer cells, then dropped them from a height of five feet onto slides, stretching the chromosomes so scientists could see more details.

The discovery will permit more specific treatment for the disease, said Dr. Jorge J. Yunis, who developed the technique at the university medical school's department of laboratory medicine and pathology.

"You can divide one cancer into many types, depending on which chromosome differences they have," he said in a telephone interview Wednesday.

Yunis said if a doctor diagnosed a more serious type of leukemia, he might want "to treat the disease more aggressively with new chemotherapy or with bone marrow transplants rater than the tandard treatment.

"Or, you may have a type you treat with the same standard treatment, but milder, because a milder treatment may be good enoughfor that typeand you can avoid the bad side effects of chemotherapy."

"This work may have wider ramifications," added Yunis. "With this technique, you can see where the cancer attacked the chromosome (of a cancerous cell). If you know where the chromosome defects are, that's where the cancer genes may be localized.

"Then you can clone these genes and you may be able to treat leukemia by replacing the defective genes with a good, normal gene."

Wife of Soviet spy suspect calls charges 'pack of lies'

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — With her husband locked away at a secret location, the wife of accused spy Joseph G. Helmich says the federal charges against the former Army officer are "a pack of lies."

Jean Helmich said Thursday the FBI's arrest of her 44-year-old husband Wednesday was reminiscent of the Nazi Gestapo of World War II.

Agents arrested the Jacksonville Beach resident on a four-count indictment returned by a federal grand jury alleging that Helmich, a former U.S. Army warrant officer based in Paris, sold the Soviet Union secret codes entrusted to him.

Helmich, who prosecutors say was awarded the honorary rank of colonel in the Soviet Army, pleaded innocent Thursday to all four counts at a brief arraignment. He is being held under $500,000 bond at an undisclosed location.

"It's a pack of lies," Mrs. Helmich told The Miami Herald.

"They walked up to the gate and said they wanted to talk to us, so I opened the gate," Mrs. Helmich said. "They rushed over to him and arrested him. There was no talking. It was like the Gestapo, and I told them so."

She said she has spoken with her husband only briefly since the arrest. "I told him to keep his chin up," she said.

Striking postal workers will be arrested

By JEFFREY MILLS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department, saying a postal strike would have a "significant detrimental impact on this nation," is threatening to bring criminal charges against postal workers who walk off the job when their contract expires next week.

Echoing the hardline approach taken by Postmaster General William F. Bolger, Assistant Attorney General D. Lowell Johnson said Thursday that a law barring strikes by federal employees "is designed to prevent and punish" walkouts.

A postal strike, he said, "would have a significant detrimental impact on this nation and its citizens."

Bolger has said strikers would be fired and could be barred from future government employment.

No progress has been reported in negotiations with the two largest unions, the American Postal Workers Union and the National Association of Letter Carriers, which represent about 500,000 of the 600,000 unionized employees. The current three-year contracts expire at midnight Monday.

Jensen said the Justice Department reviewed the law recently because of strike threats by air traffic controllers. He said criminal sections of the law could be enforced if federal workers strike without first using civil or administrative remedies.

His statement was made in a letter to Bolger, and copies also were sent to leaders of the postal unions.

Dan Driscoll, a spokesman for the postal workers union, said the Jensen statement is "no surprise. It is part of the whole campaign. We are aware of that law, but we also know about the National Labor Relations Act, which requires collective bargaining.

"Collective bargaining is what the Postal Service up to now has refused to enter," he said. "We say that the laws cannot be selectively enforced in this country."

Leaders of the two unions said the Postal Service has made no wage proposal and refuses to meet with them. All discussion is being carried out through federal mediators, the union leaders said.

The Postal Service said contract demands made by the two big unions would cost the Postal Service $25 billion over three years and increase the cost of mailing a letter to 45 cents by 1984.

Union leaders are seeking pay raises and a cost-of-living clause that would amount to an increase of 14.7 percent annually for the next three years, if the annual rate of inflation is in the 10 percent range.

A typical postal worker now makes about $23,300 a year in salary and fringe benefots.

Meanwhile, administration officials said Social Security checks could be made available at local post-offices if a strike makes it impossible to deliver them to homes.

DEATHS

Mrs. F. Orneals

PRESIDIO — Services for Mrs. Francisca Orneals, 80, of Presidio, sister of Jesus Carrasco of Midland, were to be at 9 a.m. today at St. Theresa Catholic Church in Presidio.

She died Tuesday morning at her residence in Presidio after an illness.

Mrs. Orneals was born April 6, 1901, in Ojinaga, Mexico. She married Juan Orneals Dec. 18, 1926, in Presidio.

Other survivors include her husband, three daughters, a son, a sister, 11 grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

3,000 die in Sichuan floods

PEKING (AP) — The world's deadliest flood in 20 years has killed 3,000 people in China's most populous province and injured up to 100,000 others, officials in Sichuan said today.

Another 400,000 people were left homeless by floodwaters, which sometimes surged 16.5 feet deep.

Rescuers used life boats and dropped life-saving devices from the air, while people evacuated earlier to higher ground set up makeshift shelters with tents dropped from planes or sent in by army units, the officials said.

The death toll makes this the world's deadliest flood since October 1960, when 6,000 people were reported killed in Bangladesh.

But the worst floods on record have been in China, where 3.7 million were estimated killed in a 1931 flood, 900,000 in a flood in 1887 and 200,000 in another in 1939.

Three days of torrential rains in southwestern China ended Tuesday, but left thousands of people stranded after their homes were destroyed, according to Sichuan provincial government officials reached by telephone from Peking. Between 50,000 and 100,000 people were reported injured.

By today, however, the last of the 300,000 people marooned by the surging floodwaters had been rescued, the spokesmen added. They had reported earlier that 10,000 flood victims were awaiting rescue Thursday.

Judge denies grand jury appearance

ATLANTA (AP) — A grand jury hearing evidence against Wayne B. Williams in the latest of a string of slayings of 28 young blacks is returning to work after a judge's refusal to allow Williams to appear before the panel.

District Attorney Lewis Slaton said he expected a decision today or at the grand jury's next session Tuesday on whether to indict the 23-year-old black free-lance photographer.

Superior Court Judge Sam McKenzie refused on Thursday to allow Williams and his lawyer to appear before the Fulton County grand jury and also turned down Williams' request to have the judge question each juror to see if any are biased against him. McKenzie earlier denied a motion asking that Williams be released on bond.

The judge said the barrage of recent motions filed on Williams' behalf are better left to the discretion of a trial judge, should Williams be indicted.

The prosecution wants Williams indicted for the murder of Nathaniel Cater, 27, a laborer whose body was found in the Chattahoochee River. Although police have filed murder charges against Williams, Georgia law requires that a murder suspect be indicted by a grand jury before standing trial.

Williams came to police attention May 22, when officers staking out a bridge over the Chattahoochee heard a splash and spotted Williams' car being driven slowly over the bridge.

Two days later, Cater's body was found downstream from the bridge, and Williams was placed under 24-hour surveillance. He was brought in for 12 hours of questioning June 3 but was not arrested and charged with Cater's murder until June 21.

Mary Welcome, Williams' lawyer, argued that Williams should be permitted to testify before the grand jury — a privilege accorded under Georgia law only to law officers and public officials accused of a crime — because of the celebrated nature of the case.

Exxon executive kidnapped

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — An Exxon executive from Corpus Christi was kidnapped off the streets there and forced to drive to the San Antonio area where he was robbed, shot and left on a road, authorities said.

D.E. McKay, 61, identified as Exxon production manager in Corpus Christi, was undergoing emergency knee surgery late Thursday at Bexar County Hospital. He was listed in good condition.

Bexar County sheriff's officials said McKay was kidnapped off of a Corpus Christi street about 8 a.m. Thursday and forced at gunpoint to drive toward San Antonio.

Lt. Ray Paez said McCay had stopped for a traffic light near the Sheraton Marina Hotel in Corpus Christi when a man knocked on his car door window and pointed a gun at him. Another man appeared, and they forced their way into the car, Paez said.

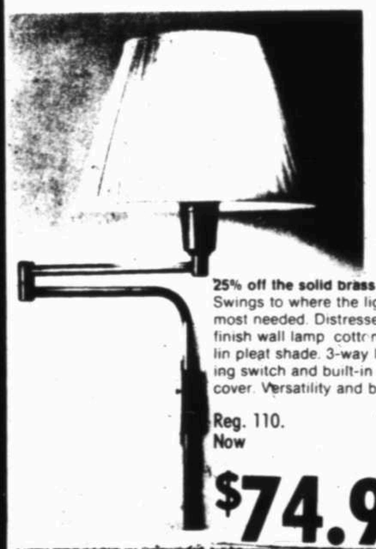

He said they made McKay drive north from Corpus Christi and arrived in the San Antonio area about 6 p.m. The duo then ordered McKay to stop at an intersection, where they ordered him out of the car and told him to empty his pockets, sheriff's reports said.

McKay was carrying about $600 in cash and a negotiable $300 check. He handed that over to the gunman, who then pointed a revolver directly at his head, slowly lowered the gun and shot him in the knee, schattering the kneecap.

One-way solution

Like it or not — and many Midlanders likely will not — Midland needs one-way streets in the downtown business district.

Anyone burdened with the necessity of negotiating overcrowded downtown streets will attest to that fact as will traffic engineers.

So, it came as no surprise earlier this week when representatives of a Dallas firm studying the downtown traffic problem recommended to Midland City Council a plan calling for five pairs of one-way streets.

That's no new development. Back in 1965 the State Highway Department (now the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation) recommended one-way streets for the Tall City. And PAWA has been suggesting that step as at least a partial solution to the city's downtown traffic congestion since 1977.

The council has been considering it for a number of years but so far has stopped short of taking the plunge for several reasons, not the least of which probably was political.

During the most recent series of hearings, in January of 1978, a crowd of opponents filled council chambers. Complaints included possible business effects to retail establishments downtown, confusion created by one-way streets and possible danger caused by motorists who inadvertently drive the wrong way. During the transition period, some of those problems probably will arise.

But most traffic experts claim one-way streets would result in faster and more orderly traffic movement through the downtown district and, they add, if a plan for one-way streets is not adopted by 1990, Midland's downtown will be a virtual disaster area.

PAWA's representatives have further noted that a one-way street system could return a number of parking spaces to downtown visitors. Many of those spaces have been eliminated in the past to provide for additional driving lanes and anyone who has spent a half-hour looking for a parking place downtown before giving up and walking ought to appreciate the parking spaces.

One-way streets may not be totally popular, but at the rate Midland's growing it looks as though they are a viable solution. At least the proposal should give City Council members and Midlanders something to think about the next time they're 10 cars back at a downtown intersection watching the light change to red for the fourth time.

Non-negotiable issue

In the world of politics "compromise" is supposed to be a good word, and "non-negotiable" a bad one. The former suggests sweet reasonableness and a willingness to talk things over, whereas the latter connotes intransigence and stubbornness.

There are times, however, when a principle is of sufficient importance that it should not be compromised, and those who believe in it should stand firm and refuse to negotiate.

Such a principle is freedom of the press, and we are happy to note that Sen. Dan Quayle (R.-Ind.) has called it a "non-negotiable issue."

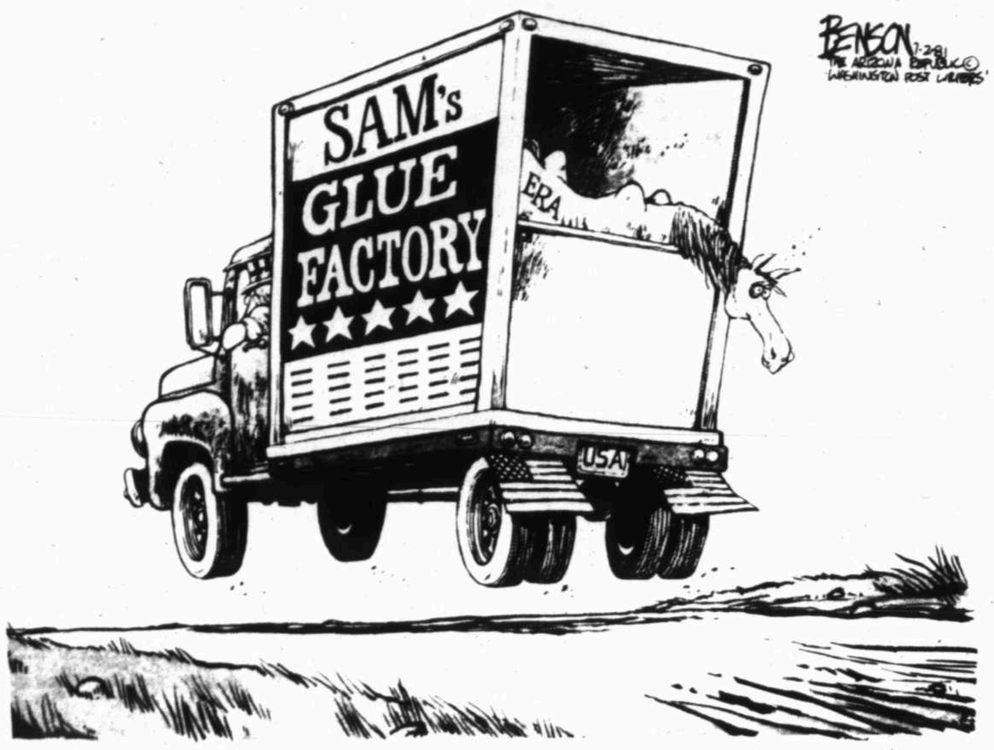

The occasion was a hearing in Washington before the House subcommittee on human rights and international organizations. Sen. Quayle and others were discussing ways to counter the attacks against the free press by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). A group within the UN is attempting to create what it calls a "new world information order," which in essence would be a form of international censorship. The "new order" movement is being promoted by a number of U.N. members from the Third World and the Soviet Union.

Members of the Congress are to be commended for taking note of the threat and fighting back. Sen. Quayle has introduced a resolution asking the Senate to oppose UNESCO's attempts at news management. A similar resolution has been introduced in the House by Democratic Rep. Robert Shamansky of Ohio and Republican Rep. Millicent Fenwick of New Jersey. At the House hearing they urged the Reagan administration to join the battle against any tampering with freedom of the press.

We know that President Reagan, who has been willing to compromise on many issues, knows a "non-negotiable issue" when he sees it.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan trade plan would damage Mexico

WASHINGTON — The secret "Reagan Plan" to give friendly Caribbean nations the opportunity for unlimited duty-free exports to the United States would be an unprecedented break for their struggling economies. But it would create problems for Mexico by giving the other Caribbean nations a competitive edge in the lucrative U.S. market.

Jack Anderson

And this may endanger the success of the entire trade program, because administration officials are counting on Mexico to take a leading role in the program. The president's advisers want Mexico to "act as a patron of the plan" and effectively run it once it gets off the ground. Without Mexico's cooperation, it won't fly.

As I have reported, Reagan already discussed the initiative with Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo earlier this year. According to State Department sources, Lopez Portillo "reserved his commitment, but seemed interested in principle pending further discussions."

There are sound reasons for the Mexican president's reluctance to endorse the Reagan Plan: He is concerned not only about the economic effect on his own country's trade, but about the possible political effects as well. Lopez Portillo values his image as an independent leader of the Third World, and any suggestion that he is being manipulated by Washington could damage his prestige both at home and abroad.

This was acknowledged by a confidential State Department source who said: "Mexico may perceive more real harm than benefits to its vital interests, especially to its exports of specific products to the U.S. and to its Third World image of independence from the U.S."

To sweeten the pot for Mexico and encourage Lopez Portillo to play the crucial part intended for him, Bill Brock, the president's special trade representative, is working feverishly on an overall plan to make the proposal more attractive to Mexico.

Even if Mexico is appeased, the Reagan Plan must be sold to Congress, and this may not be easy. The plan envisages a "one-way" free trade setup: The Caribbean nations that sign up will be allowed to sell their goods without restrictions in this country, but they will not be required to offer similar concessions to U.S. manufacturers.

This is sure to arouse opposition from labor and industry, which will view the one-way free trade idea as unfair competition, with no compensating favors for U.S. exporters.

Perhaps the stiffest opposition will come from Puerto Rico, which would lose its existing trade advantage over its Caribbean neighbors. "Puerto Rico's textile, fruit and vegetable and rum exports could be affected by liberalization of U.S. trade with the Caribbean islands," the State Department has noted.

Despite these legitimate objections, the administration will promote the Reagan Plan as a political plus that will more than offset any economic sacrifices.

"Fundamental causes of instability would be addressed," a State Department source told my associate Bob Sherman. "Other nations, including some uncomfortable with our Central American military role, would be involved with us in a broadly acceptable regional action ... Means would be available to underline the desirability of friendly relations with the United States and of commitment to democracy and pluralism."

On a purely selfish basis, the administration points out that bettering Caribbean countries' economies would tend to relieve the distress which encourages Communist revolutionaries — and which also leads to floods of impoverished refugees to our shores.

SHIELDING US FROM BROOKE: One official explanation by Department of Health and Human Services bureaucrats for killing a series of anti-smoking ads featuring actress Brooke Shields was that they "used an untested, slick, Hollywood-oriented fashion merchandising concept to deal with a serious health problem."

But this was apparently a smokescreen. The real reason may be that the ads were too effective. An internal memo to the director of HHS' Office of Smoking and Health, written before the ads were pulled, states: "We ... have shown the poster to well over 100 people the past five weeks — adults, young people, professional communicators and laymen ... The poster is the most powerful visual any one of us has ever had anything to do with. It absolutely commands attention."

Not only that, the Shields poster "has its greatest strength with the markets we are after — women and girls," the HHS memo notes.

Investigators for Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., learned an interesting fact: One of the HHS officials responsible for the decision to kill the Shields ads was Carl Anderson, counselor to Under Secretary David Swoap. Anderson used to be an aide to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., an ardent supporter of the tobacco industry.

Incidentally, the assistant secretary for health, Edward Brandt, was out of the country when the decision was made. He reportedly had thought the ads were "great."

UNDER THE DOME: Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., is known for his flashes of acerbic Irish wit. The other evening, emerging from a Mozart concert at the Kennedy Center, he was approached by a reporter and was asked what he thought about the proposed sale of AWACS radar aircraft to Saudi Arabia. Cracked Moynihan: "The United States does not need AWACS museum." Ouch.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 17, the 198th day of 1981. There are 167 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 17, 1936, the Spanish Civil War began as General Francisco Franco led an army force in revolt against Spain's government.

On this date:

In 1603, Sir Walter Raleigh was arrested for suspected complicity in a plot to dethrone England's King James I.

In 1832, Spain ceded Florida to the United States.

In 1945, the leaders of the United States, the Soviet Union and Great Britain opened the Potsdam Conference to discuss the occupation of Germany in the aftermath of World War II.

And in 1975, U.S. astronauts and Soviet cosmonauts linked their Apollo and Soyuz spacecrafts while in orbit.

Five years ago: Queen Elizabeth II opened the Olympic Games in Montreal.

One year ago: Zenko Suzuki, an obscure but veteran politician, was tapped as the new prime minister of Japan.

Today's birthday: actor James Cagney is 82 years old.

Thought for today: Nothing can be honorable where justice is absent. — Cicero, Roman statesman-philosopher (106 B.C.-43 B.C.)

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. policy should be clear to all

Former President Jimmy Carter left our defenses in a shambles. That's the reason for the necessity of a rapid increase in defense spending. President Reagan, however, will make an equally serious error if he allows the buildup to precede a carefully thought out strategy.

Charley Reese

Military power is the hand-maiden of policy. You cannot build a proper defense structure unless you first decide what missions you want it to accomplish. And choosing missions is a political, not a military decision.

The area of strategic nuclear weapons provides the easiest example. Obviously, the two missions of that component are to deter a nuclear strike and if deterrence fails to survive that strike with sufficient power to destroy the attacker. Actually, these missions are inseparable since only a force able to survive a first strike and then destroy an aggressor will succeed in deterring the attack.

But when you go beyond that, you run into confusion. Just what missions do we want our conventional forces to perform? Until we decide, we cannot decide such things as manpower, equipment, transport and composition. Choosing these missions should be done within the context of a clearly defined foreign policy. The policy will determine the defense structure.

Take NATO, for example. What is our national objective in regard to Western Europe? What is the threat to that objective? What form would it be most likely to take? What response are we willing to make? All of these questions should be answered before the Pentagon is even brought into the picture. If we intend to start World War III if the Warsaw Pact invades West Germany, then all we need on the ground in West Germany is a little token force. If we intend to respond to such an invasion only with conventional forces, then we need a tremendous increase in manpower, equipment and transport. If we don't know what we would do in the event of an invasion, then we ought to bring all of our forces home until we decide.

The Persian Gulf provides another example. What do we intend to do if the Soviets move troops into Iran? If the Saudi Arabian regime is overthrown by a Marxist group? If Iraq declares war on Kuwait?

The single biggest failure of several past administrations has been the failure to formulate a clear foreign policy based on a public definition of our national objectives. This is a critical necessity. It is impossible to achieve a national consensus if the American people do not know what our national objectives are. It is dangerous, too, for our enemies not to know. In the nuclear age, the old strategy of keeping your enemy in the dark about how you will respond is obsolete. It is in the self-interest of both the Soviet Union and the United States for each to know precisely what action by the other will trigger an all-out war. In the nuclear age, world leaders must do all they can to eliminate miscalculations.

Furthermore, the American people have a right to know. They have a right to know if the present administration intends to go to war if the Soviets threaten the Persian Gulf. They have a right to know to what extent this administration is committed to preventing communist takeovers in Central America.

I, for one, am tired of muddling along in the dark, not knowing what, if any, policy our national government has. I am tired of being told by politicians that they will announce, after the fact, what their positions are on critical issues. Politicians sent a generation to Vietnam to prevent that nation from becoming communist; after 53,000 of them were killed, the politicians changed their mind and let the country go communist. Well, enough is enough.

President Reagan has promised he would not repeat the Vietnam blunder, but so far, he is making the same mistakes that led up to Vietnam. We have no clearer idea today of his foreign policy and strategy than we did of Lyndon Johnson's.

INSIDE REPORT:

Some fear that 'business as usual' is starting over again

WASHINGTON — Sen. Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico transformed himself into a momentary Capitol Hill folk hero July 3 when he lectured budget director David Stockman on Senate "prerogatives," but he also exposed a serious threat to Ronald Reagan's radical economic program.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Raged a Reagan strategist: "How can you worry about Senate prerogatives when so much is at stake?" Domenici was conducting business as usual as chairman of the Senate Budget Committee when he turned down Stockman's request that the Republican Senate accept the spending "reconciliation" resolution passed by the Democratic House.

Domenici is not unique. It was also business as usual the same week with such Republican worthies as Rep. Bob Michel of Illinois and Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas. Indeed, traces of the same syndrome were detectable high within the Reagan administration.

That creates this paradox: While President Reagan's daring initiatives have galvanized the nation and the world, his program is losing momentum. Reagan himself may be too isolated from the process to appreciate, much less reverse, what is happening.

Nothing better illustrates this process than Stockman's failure to circumvent the tedious Senate-House conference committee on the spending resolution by getting Senate acceptance of the House version. His comeuppance was widely celebrated in Washington, where the 34-year-old budget director has collected enemies as the often abrasive foe of business-as-usual.

But far more than Stockman's personal prestige was at stake. At the worst, protracted consideration of the resolution conceivably might reopen the entire spending issue; at best, it detracts from the administration's concentration on its beleaguered tax bill. No mere Stockman brainstorm, the shortcut was administration policy approved by the president.

As such, it was supported by Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, whose steadfast backing of the president's program (even portions he personally questions) has been a most pleasant surprise to the White House. Support also came from Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi, the House Republican whip and a tenacious Reaganite.

They found themselves alone. Michel, the amiable House Republican leader, came down on Domenici's side in behalf of the regular order. From the start, Domenici at the Budget Committee has been reluctant to sacrifice his own inclinations and prestige to further the Reagan program.

At the Finance Committee, Chairman Dole has been less obvious than Domenici — but more difficult. Business lobbyists flatter Dole, saying his stewardship of the tax bill makes him the greatest finance chairman of the age and Reagan's salvation. In truth, the administration got help from the sardonic Kansan only by applying tender, loving and constant care.

Dole last week very nearly negated his substantial accomplishments when he suddenly suggested a tax "compromise" that would skew rate reductions to benefit lower-income taxpayers. That undercut efforts in the House against just such a Democratic redistribution of income. It also complicated Reagan's task in a Senate-House tax conference should the Democrats win the House tax fight.

The Republican congressional drift toward parochialism may be inspired by the administration itself. Whereas House Democrats are desperate for victory on the tax bill at any cost, the White House has been silent. The reason: The president and his senior staff admittedly have neglected the most important single Republican legislative proposal since the New Deal to prepare for the Ottawa summit, another in the unending series of forgettable Western diplomatic conferences.

There is other telltale evidence of business as usual within the administration: budgetary retreat under pressure from business interests seeking corporate welfare, including prospective approval of business subsidies for synthetic fuels.

That helps explain why the widely-applauded nomination of Judge Sandra O'Connor to the Supreme Court bothered a few thoughtful Republicans (including administration officials) with no overriding interest in the abortion question. They fear this administration may lose its reputation as an instrument of radical change. In that case, Pete Domenici hardly could be criticized for putting Senate prerogatives above the Reagan program.

Time to remember

Archie Miyatake sits in his Los Angeles photographer's studio recently and ponders his family's ordeal at the Manzanar relocation camp for Japanese-Americans during WWII. In the background is a bust of his father, Toyo, whose haunting and illicit photos of Manzanar camp life help keep alive the nation's shame for a dark moment in its past.

WWII memories—

Japanese seeking reparations

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Crowded barracks. Little privacy. Despair. Struggling to make a new life after the old one was destroyed.

Those memories of World War II relocation camps are resurfacing as a federal panel in Washington, D.C., holds hearings on possible reparations for the three-year imprisonment of 120,000 people of Japanese ancestry living on the West Coast.

"In the beginning, the general mood was shock, of being stunned to the point that the people couldn't speak," said Los Angeles attorney Frank Chuman, who at the time was in his early 20s and going to law school.

"People would go through the motions — taking care of their children, eating, sleeping — but they were stunned by the swiftness with which they had lost everything they had worked for all their lives: homes, cars, farms, fishing boats," he said.

Chuman was sent to Manzanar, a hot, dusty acre surrounded by barbed wire on the eastern edge of the Sierra Nevada between Lone Pine and Bishop. The lucky people got a week's notice — enough time to try to sell their belongings for a fraction of their cost or store them or give them away. Most got far less.

"The barracks were just wood covered with tarpaper, and the dust blew in through the cracks," Chuman said. "You could go to sleep clean at night and wake up in the moring covered with a layer of dust. Each family got a space 20 feet by 20 feet with a wood-burning pot-bellied stove in the center. Communal mess halls and bathroom and water supplies were at the end of the block."

The hearings are being conducted by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, established by Congress to investigate the treatment of Japanese-Americans in the hysteria that followed the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

About 77,000 Americans of Japanese descent were relocated along with 43,000 Japanese nationals, most of them U.S. residents.

To John Seito, who was 14 when he was placed in the camp, the hardest part was that he could not understand.

"My mother would cry at the hardship, like the days the dust storms came and my mother had to take all our clothes afterward and wash them by hand," said Seito, director of the Japanese-American Citizens League in Los Angeles. "But there were times she would just start crying for no reason that I could see then. It was a sense of hopelessness at having lost everything."

The mildest reaction came from first-generation immigrants, who until 1952 were not permitted to become American citizens. It was more bitter among second- and third-generation Japanese-Americans, who by virtue of their birth in the United States were legally citizens.

"My father felt a certain resentment, but he was first-generation and was considered an enemy alien," says Archie Miyatake, whose father, Toyo, was just establishing himself as a portrait photographer in Los Angeles.

"I was a citizen and I didn't feel it was right for citizens to be locked up. But what could I do? I was only 16," he explained at the studio he took over after his father died two years ago.

Super Bowl preferred to wedding

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The military's American Forces Network television station says the tab for televising the wedding of Price Charles and Lady Diana Spencer is just too high. For one thing, the TV station for U.S. soldiers in West Germany needs to be saving its pennies for the Super Bowl.

"We'd love to televise it," Trent Christman, broadcast manager for AFN-TV, said of the royal wedding. "But when Super Bowl time rolls around and we can't air the game because we spent too much money on wedding coverage — well, you can imagine the possibilities."

Tobacco price supports being reviewed

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government price-support program for tobacco, which critics say inflates costs by millions of dollar annually, will undergo a thorough evaluation in the next seven weeks.

The full-scale review was ordered by Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., a strong supporter of the program and chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on tobacco and peanuts.

"We have not had in this Congress an overview by the (Agriculture Department) of what's right and what's wrong with the tobacco program, and that is something we need," Rose said Wednesday as program supporters prepared for another fight when the Senate considers the new farm bill later this month.

Rose told officials of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service that he wants the review finished by the first week in September and a private briefing on its findings soon after that. The service oversees the program.

"We've got to tighten this program up," Rose said. "We've got stormy days ahead, and if there's any excess baggage on this program we're going to throw it out in September."

Under the tobacco program, growers can agree to accept government acreage allotments and production quotas for the types of tobacco traditionally grown in their regions. If they accept those limits, they receive government price-support loans and the exclusive right to produce the tobacco types involved. It has remained essentially unchanged for three decades.

More than 90 percent of the 1.8 billion pounds of tobacco grown in the United States last year was covered by the government program, which supporters say has ensured adequate supplies to meet demand.

Although Agriculture Department officials say the program has cost the government only $57 million over more than 40 years, Rep. Thomas Petri, R-Wis., and other congressional critics contend its strict production controls result in a windfall of nearly $900 million a year to persons in the industry.

In addition to attacks from what one tobacco-state congressman called "concrete cowboys who come off the streets of New York and Los Angeles," an aide said Rose is also concerned about Agriculture Secretary John Block's comments about the program.

Block, who has urged elimination of strict peanut production controls similar to those for tobacco, said last week he supports the tobacco program only because it's inexpensive.

Annie and Rich have no complaints

NORTH LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — They are the flotsam and jetsam in the big city sea — shabby figures swirling in the eddies of prosperity's tide.

Every day, he rises from his bed in a used car lot restroom to maneuver his junk-filled shopping cart through the traffic. She bids her 14 cats good day and sets her course down Pike Avenue while keeping a sharp lookout for castoff bottles and cans.

They are Adrian Rich and Coke Bottle Annie, two of the indigent but stubbornly proud Americans who sleep on park benches, in railroad yards, in seamy boarding houses and apartments and who daily rummage through other people's garbage.

For Annie, also known as Bertha Birchfield, home is a two-room apartment she shares with her cats and an occasional boarder. "It's just kind of like a cat hospital or a nursing home for cats," said the 72-year-old Mrs. Birchfield, whose neighbors call her the Cat Lady.

Mrs. Birchfield's baggy men's pants, brogans and floppy hats are as familiar to North Little Rock merchants as the rusted shopping cart that she pushes down the city streets.

"I always get along with everybody," she said. "I've been out in the world, and I've learned to give and take."

Like Mrs. Birchfield, Rich, doesn't complain about his life.

His trademark is a shiny pushcart complete with a front-end bicycle basket attachment, two orange flags and license plates from Arkansas, Kentucky, Illinois and Texas.

In the cart are two umbrellas, a can of insect repellant and a portable radio that Rich turns on to listen to Sunday morning church services and Arkansas Razorback football games. Occasionally, he totes a small Bible that he reads on the roadside as he rests and puffs his pipe.

Police wave at the small, white-haired Rich as he makes his daily journey — across the Arkansas River bridge into downtown Little Rock, through MacArthur Park and then back home.

When Rich, 64, hits the road, he packs his clothes and other belongings in his cart. "I can't leave my clothes there," he said. "I left them over a couple or three months ago, and people stole them."

Rich said his 15- to 25-mile walks are good for his sore foot, which was hurt when he was struck by a car about 4½ years ago. "The walking just keeps my foot from going stiff on me," he said.

Rich, who stuffs his daily earnings — a maximum of $5 — in one of his blue and white tennis shoes, said he started collecting bottles after his second wife died in 1946. "I saw somebody else doing it, and I thought I'd see if I could make any money at it," he said.

He'd get out of the business and get into something better — lawn mowing, for instance — but he said, "Every time I go to a job they tell me I'm too old."

Mrs. Birchfield, who claimed she also cleans houses and does laundry, said she earns about $35 to $40 a month.

She said she was married to a retired sheriff for five or 10 years until he died about eight years ago. "I was a housekeeper," she said, "and I decided to marry him and to settle down and to stop my running around."

Mrs. Birchfield said she had been on welfare before but doesn't need it now. "I've paid all my bills and have money to spend," she said. Sometimes, she said, she gets loans from a friend.

Rich said he tried to get welfare but was turned down. If he could get it, he said, "I'd try to get me a fresh steak."

Interest rates baffling and battering

NEW YORK (AP) — High interest rates are baffling the experts and battering the economy. But what people want to know is when rates will go down and stay down.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said the other day that high interest rates, while not a permanent fixture in the American economy, are likely to persist for the next six to 12 months. That is one of the most pessimistic forecasts of the year.

In fact economists have been saying for weeks that rates were peaking and were sure to fall.

In May, for example, when rates on business loans were near record levels, the consensus among economists was that interest rates were headed for a big drop, and soon.

That seemed logical. Inflation was cooling off, and so the price of money was sure to follow.

Some rates actually did drop a notch or two. But then they bounced back up, and people started talking about a recession. Economists revised their forecasts a bit, but still insisted that interest rates were going to tumble.

They didn't.

In the last several days, most interest rates have held to a steady course with the prime rate still in the 20 percent range at banks across the nation.

What ever happened to the interest-rate slide that so many economists have predicted?

The answer is important to million of Americans, particularly those looking for home mortgages, auto loans and other consumer loans. Businesses big and small also are eager for a big drop in their borrowing costs.

In Washington on Tuesday, a regulator of the savings and loan industry said 80 percent of the country's 4,700 S&Ls are operating in the red and that one-third of them may not survive. High interest rates, combined with competitive pressures, have forced the S&Ls to pay more for deposits than they earn on mortgages, many of which were written in past years when interest rates were lower.

High interest rates are being blamed for much of what ails the economy. But are high rates all bad?

The economics department at Marine Midland Bank reports that the share of individuals' total income derived from interest-earning investments has grown nearly twice! as fast over the last eight years as their wages.

"High interest rates are no longer the shock element they once were," the bank concluded.

What may shock people is that interest rates, after discounting for inflation, are now even higher than last year when high rates helped push the economy into a recession.

Inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index has fallen below the double-digit level, and the Reagan administration says interest rates eventually will follow.

The Federal Reserve Board has been saying all along that high interest rates are necessary to stop the inflation spiral. Once inflation is controlled, they said, interest rates will return to single-digit levels.

So far it has not happened, and the administration is hard pressed to explain why. When Regan, the Treasury secretary, was reminded the other day that the Fed's scenario had not worked out, he said that was because Wall Street is still "skeptical".

Lufkin legislator among those happy with districts

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Charlie Wilson, D-Lufkin, is happy with a redistricting plan drawn up by the Texas Senate that would take 100,000 voters from a Republican area of Montgomery County out of his district.

"I kept Conroe. That I like. And Cut 'N Shoot. I've always liked Cut 'N Shoot," said Wilson. The 27,000 residents of Montgomery County still in his Southeast Texas district are in a traditional Democratic stronghold.

"It doesn't make them sad either," Wilson hastened to add about the Woodlands area of south Montgomery County who will no longer be represented by him if the Senate remapping plan holds up.

"Many people around in there have expressed the wish they could be represented by a Republican. They will be much happier with their representation under this bill," he said, grinning.

Most of them, Wilson added, have been placed in the 6th congressional district of Rep. Phil Gramm of College Station. Gramm is a Democrat but has voted with the Reagan administration so consistently that some Democratic loyalists have asked that he be booted out of the party.

Others in the Republican sections of Montgomery County, who Wilson said are more likely than any other of his constituents to cast a straight Republican ticket, have been placed in the 8th congressional district of Rep. Jack Fields, R-Humble.

Two congressmen who didn't fare so well in the Texas Senate plan are Rep. Jim Mattox and Rep. Martin Frost, a pair of Dallas Democrats.

The plan obviously hurts him, Mattox said, since tens of thousands of Republican voters were placed in his district.

"They gave me all of Highland Park, University Park, Lake Highlands and White Rock Lake, and they took away all my Hispanic and black area, all my old East Dallas area," Mattox said.

Wilson said the bill, if approved, would give Republicans five more seats in Congress, just from Texas.

"I believe they'll win every new seat, and the bill just kills Mattox. Even he will admit that," said Wilson.

Because of population gains in the 1980 census, Texas adds three seats in the 1982 elections. Wilson predicted the GOP will win all three and pick up a swing of two more votes by taking Mattox' seat from him.

Mattox refused to throw in any towels.

"I've made some phone calls, and I don't think it's over yet. They've got to vote on it again, and I think we can reverse it. Some Texas Democrats are pretty upset about it," Mattox added.

"The Senate bill was the one we had our most hopes in, but the battle's not over yet," Mattox added.

Asked if it appeared someone was out to get him, the Dallas Democrat shrugged.

"It doesn't bother me. If I was in their position, I'd do the same thing. But it surprises me that other Democrats went along with it. It's hard for a loyal Democrat like me to understand why other Democrats would go against me."

A colleague, who asked anonymity, called Mattox "a super campaigner and a good legislator, but he's very aggressive. I think several people wanted to actively give him a bump. He's one of the few congressmen they actually wanted to get. And they sure did."

The minority votes Mattox lost were placed in Frost's district, making his district about 67 percent minority. Frost wasn't happy either.

"It's not the way I would have liked to have seen it drawn up, but I'm going to run for reelection no matter how they do it. I think I'll be reelected either way. I didn't want to see Mattox' district destroyed, which is what that bill does. We'll just have to wait and see how it turns out," Frost said.

He too was surprised that Democrats went along with the bill.

Final vote due today on redistricting plan

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Dallas blacks who want their own congressman rose Thursday and applauded Sen. John Wilson, D-La Grange, author of a Senate plan that gives them their wish.

Senators were scheduled to take a final vote today on Wilson's statewide congressional redistricting plan, to which they voted preliminary approval Wednesday.

Al Lipscomb of Dallas, a speaker for the Coalition for Minority Representation, urged the House redistricting committee Thursday to issue a similar plan.

He asked the blacks accompanying him to stand and applaud Wilson, who was at the House hearing. After the applause ended, Lipscomb said, "Contrary to what you might believe, there will be no crosses burned on your lawn."

Wilson's plan also satisfied Republicans, because by packing blacks and Hispanics into one district, it weakens the chances of Democratic Congressmen Jim Mattox and Martin Frost to be reelected.

Gov. Bill Clements has recommended just such a plan, saying blacks should get one of the three new congressmen to which the 1980 census entitles Texas.

Lipscomb also praised the Senate majority and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who cast one of the Senate votes for Wilson's plan.

The House committee is divided over how to deal with the question of black representation versus preservation of Democrats Frost and Mattox in Congress.

It also has to fight out the question of drawing a new district in western Harris County, which Republicans are all but guaranteed.

GOP State Reps. Brad Wright and Don Henderson of Houston both want to go to Congress from the new district.

Rep. Tim Von Dohlen, D-Goliad, redistricting committee chairman, was criticized by Rep. Hugo Berlanga for sending all Republican representatives a letter asking them whether the new district should be Henderson's or Wright's.

"Our mission is to create congressional districts, and these districts don't belong to any one person. ... It is outrageous for the chairman of this committee to be soliciting support in favor of one person or another when our mission is to create districts that are equitable to everybody," protested Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, a member of the committee.

Von Dohlen later told reporters he received replies from only 10 of the 38 House Republicans and defended his action in soliciting their advice.

"That is the most rapidly growing portion of the state. The Republican House members have a right to an opinion. The area is clearly Republican," he said.

He's pleased with progress

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says legislators are doing so well with the five special session topics he gave them that he might add some other summer reruns to the schedule.

"A day does not go by where we do not talk about adding to the call," Clements told reporters Thursday, adding, "I wouldn't be surprised to see it opened up to a few particular items."

The special session opened Monday with lawmakers facing a list of items unresolved in the regular session, including congressional redistricting, a Medical Practices Act, "fine tuning" the Property Tax Code, abolishing the state property tax and a water trust fund.

Clements said only the Medical Practices Act seems to be "really stuck."

"I want these five items addressed first," he said.

The list of proposed additions for the 30-day summer session has topped 100. Measures to legalize bingo and give gasohol a tax break are the two most favored by letter-writers, according to Clements.

However, the first priority could be finding a new way to finance 17 state universities that don't share in the Permanent University Fund. Legislators now are working towards a constitutional amendment that would abolish the state property tax that once was used to fund the non-PUF schools.

"We are continuing to discuss it. Certainly it's being given consideration," Clements said of college funding.

Emmanual Treadway carries some of his belongings from the Chester County Prison near Pocopson, Pa., Thursday. Treadway has been in various institutions for some 29 years, although he was never convicted of a crime. Robin Patchell, a social worker, accompanies him.

Man 'lost in prison' has some catching up to do

WEST CHESTER, Pa. (AP) — Emmanuel Treadway, free after 29 years in prison without being convicted of a crime, says he has some catching up to do.

"Prices have gone up, I know that," said Treadway, whose few possessions include a radio, a tape recorder and a television without sound.

Treadway is moving into an apartment that has a color television, and he said he would like to buy new clothes. But the first thing he planned Thursday after leaving Chester County Prison here was to get a good dinner.

A small humpbacked man, Treadway, 46, entered prison as a "defective delinquent" at 17, when he was charged with attempted rape and assault, officials said.

"Someone lost a paper on me a long time ago," said Treadway, who said he had no worries about starting life in the outside world.

"It feels good," he said. "I knew I'd get out one of these days."

He spent 18 years in prisons at Huntington and Dallas before being moved in 1970 to the Pennhurst Center for the retarded, where he was diagnosed as mildly retarded.

"It went pretty smooth," he said of confinement. "It's OK, as long as you don't talk back to the man."

With no family or lawyer to press for his release, he remained at Pennhurst for seven years, until charged with raping his girlfriend at the institution. He then was transferred to Chester County.

"This man was lost in the system. I think they forgot about him," said public defender R. Kerry Kalmbach, who became Treadway's lawyer in 1977, got the charge dismissed and began working for his release.

Treadway's plight also came to the attention of Chester County Warden Thomas Frame.

Last year, Frame found a job for Treadway at a nursing home "just to get him out of jail." Treadway will keep his job stacking shelves at the home near the prison while living with another man and a mental health supervisor in an apartment nearby.

For the past year, Treadway has worked evenings in the prison gardens, Frame said.

"I came to like him so much I hate to see him leave. He's like an adopted son," the warden said. "I don't think he comprehends what's going on. He's been saying he's going home for years."

Kalmbach said it may take a while for Treadway to adjust to not having people to tell him what to do.

Dr. Steve Chafetz, mental retardation coordinator for Delaware County, which now is responsible for Treadway, said, "anyone coming out of an institution, particularly the mentally retarded, have a difficult time adjusting.

"It will be difficult, but he'll have continuity in keeping the same job and he will be supervised all the time."

Treadway will be able to return to prison to visit friends or spend a night, Chafetz said. "It's been his home so many years."

Business group denies anti-government plot

By EDUARDO VASQUEZ BECKER
Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A prominent business group is denying an accusation by President Jose Napoleon Duarte that leading Salvadoran businessmen are plotting to topple his civilian-military junta.

Charges that the private sector is out to overthrow the junta are "totally unfounded and lacking in truth," said a statement issued Thursday by El Salvador's Productive Alliance.

In an interview last Monday with The Associated Press, Duarte said it is not the left but the right, spurred on by the country's most conservative businessmen, that represents the biggest threat to his government.

Such charges are aimed at "creating a distorted image abroad of the patriotic and constructive part that the private sector is playing to save the country," the Productive Alliance said.

In the last month, business leaders have been pressing the junta to give conservatives control of nine agencies responsible for economic policy. They claim they are being passed over by the government in areas that directly concern them.

The conservative pressure on Duarte's government has been described as a "creeping coup to the right" by some observers.

Duarte has said he will oppose any move that would give his conservative opponents direct political power.

It was under the Duarte-led junta last year that land reform was introduced to El Salvador, a measure which, together with the nationalization of banking and most exports, served to antagonize conservatives..

In Washington, Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders said right-wing extremists and Marxist insurgents are responsible for continued strife in the Central American country.

In a speech Thursday night, Enders denounced the "left's violent methods" and said there is "an equally violent minority on the extreme right that seeks to return El Salvador to the domination of a small elite."

The Reagan administration has provided $35.5 million in military equipment and has 48 military advisers remaining in El Salvador.

U.S. pledges continued aid to El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, now blaming right-wing extremists as well as Marxist insurgents for El Salvador's civil strife, is pledging continued U.S. military and economic aid to ensure a political solution to the Central American country's "long agony."

In a speech Thursday night intended as a major policy statement, Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders said the ultimate answer to El Salvador's problems rests with a democratic process now under way that will culminate in presidential elections in two years.

But he said a "rational and legitimate political process" could not be achieved unless U.S. assistance is sustained.

Enders was vague about future military aid, saying only that it should continue at the current "limited" level.

The administration has provided $35.5 million in military equipment and has 48 military advisers remaining in El Salvador. It also has committed $144 million in economic aid.

While Enders was delivering his address to the World Affairs Council, several dozen demonstrators outside chanted, "Money for jobs, not war, U.S. out of El Salvador."

The speech was notably milder than the administration's early approach to El Salvador. Last winter, the administration sought to portray the conflict as indirect, armed communist aggression and threatened punitive action against Cuba because of its alleged role as a source of weapons for Salvadoran guerrillas.

But Enders gave no hint that any such measures are being considered now. He said there has been an "ominous upswing" recently in arms deliveries from Cuba and Nicaragua but limited himself to saying that "Cuban and Nicaraguan supplies to the guerrillas must stop."

He also made clear more forcefully than the administration has before that leftist insurgents are only partially to blame for El Salvador's bloody civil war.

While denouncing the "left's violent methods," Enders said there is "an equally violent minority on the extreme right that seeks to return El Salvador to the domination of a small elite."

"More Salvadoran Army leadership is needed, both to fight rightist death squads and to control security force violence," he said. "This is a primary objective of our military training effort. There must be improvement."

Enders strongly endorsed the Salvadoran government's plan to elect a constituent assembly next March charged with writing a constitution, and to hold presidential elections in 1983.

"We believe that elections open to all who are willing to renounce violence and abide by the procedures of democracy can help end El Salvador's long agony," he said.

But he added: "Should members of the guerrilla command believe that they can make gains by military means, no participation, no meaningful negotiations, no political solutions are likely to be forthcoming.

"The point is not that sustained U.S. assistance might lead to a government military victory," Enders said. "It is that a political solution can only be achieved if the guerrillas realize they cannot win by force of arms."

Earlier Thursday, Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said the United States, Cuba and Nicaragua should agree to halt arms supplies to El Salvador and then press for peace negotiations. He said he made that proposal to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. on Tuesday but got no response.

Solarz said he also favors elections in El Salvador, but he said they would be useless unless the junta and guerrillas first agree to a peace plan including elections. He said he drew that conclusion after an 11-day trip through South America last week that included talks with Cuban President Fidel Castro and leaders in El Salvador and Nicaragua.

FBI investigating jail suspect

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A photograph identified by the El Salvadoran government as that of an anti-government leader was released Thursday and depicts facial characteristics similar to a woman held in the Nueces County jail.

The photograph was taken by Salvadoran national police when "Commander Norma Guevara" was a young girl. The picture was released in the wake of the July 1 arrest of a woman identifying herself as Ana Estela Flores Guevara, 32.

Three Corpus Christi physicians studied the photograph yesterday and one recently taken of Mrs. Guevara by a Corpus Christi Caller photographer. All three physicians noted similarities between the women depicted. One doctor, a plastic surgeon, stated unequivocally that both photographs depict the same person.

The woman held in Nueces County was convicted June 24 for violations of U.S. immigration laws and is serving a 90-day sentence. In an interview with Caller reporters, she denied she is a leader of a Salvadoran leftist political faction known as Union Democratica Nacional (National Democratic Union.)

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Normal weight returns within 6 weeks after giving birth

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am in my sixth month of pregnancy. What I'd like to know is how soon after giving birth I will be able to return to my normal weight. — Ann

Dear Ann: You should be at your normal weight within six weeks after giving birth.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Will you please describe the symptoms of angina? Sometimes when I play tennis I feel a sticking pain in my chest. After a minute or two of rest, it goes away. Is this angina? — Bert

Dear Bert: Angina pectoris is characterized by a feeling of discomfort in the chest, which may or may not be painful, and which is caused by a lack of sufficient oxygen reaching the heart. It may be experienced as a burning sensation or a feeling of pressure, usually in the middle of the chest and occasionally radiating to the jaw or left arm.

It is important to realize that conditions other than angina, such as arthritis of the spine or other chest diseases, may bring about the same symptoms. Trying to perform a self-diagnosis can be a risky matter. Why not check with your physician to try to determine the cause of your discomfort? It may be that the sticking pain you describe is of little consequence and you are worrying needlessly. If, on the other hand, it indicates a condition for which you should be receiving treatment, the sooner it is begun, the better. Ignoring a problem will not make it disappear.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Two years ago, a very close friend of mine gave birth to a child with serious defects. She has been blaming herself ever since because it was her habit to have a drink in the evening when her husband returned home from work, and then to serve wine with their dinner. She believes it was the alcohol that caused the birth defects, even though her obstetrician says it played no part.

I've also been reading that smoking may have a harmful effect on the fetus, and that some doctors feel that even coffee may be dangerous. But what about all the chemicals we're exposed to? If some of them have the potential for causing cancer, can't they be responsible for birth defects as well? — Hattie

Dear Hattie: Scientists are giving an increasing amount of attention to the possibility that chemicals may be hazardous to the fetus. The government's Council on Environmental Quality reports that reproduction may be adversely affected by a variety of chemical substances

However, few of these agents have been tested to determine their effects on pregnancy and the fetus, so no definite conclusions can be reached. Until the needed research that would demonstrate the effects of these chemicals is done, the evidence will have to remain circumstantial.

For example, the Council noted that more birth defects occur in the western part of the United States than in the East, a fact that may suggest the influence of environmental factors. But "suggestions" are no proof.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D, 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Thursday night's partial lunar eclipse is seen in three stages over Midland. The eclipse began about 10:35 p.m. and reached 55 percent of total eclipse at about 12:15 a.m. today.

AP Laserphoto

The moon passed through several phases of its eclipse early Friday morning as it reached 55 percent of total about 1:15 a.m. EDT before it started to return to its natural state. This photograph of the moon was made with a 600mm lens and the moon was exposed on the same piece of film five separate times at 22-minute intervals. The photograph of the Boston skyline was taken on a separate piece of film from the same location and then sandwiched with the negative from the eclipse.

Lunar eclipse shines in night sky

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The heavens' biggest cheese, from the vantage point of Earth, was eaten away for several hours early today.

Most Americans had a good chance of viewing the partial eclipse of the moon that began at 11:25 p.m. EDT Thursday and lasted until after 2 a.m. today, the National Weather Service here said.

Viewing conditions appeared "to have been pretty good in the Northeast, the southern third of the country, along the Pacific Coast and in the northern Plains," the weather service said.

"Thunderstorms in central sections, the desert Southwest and the south Atlantic region would have impaired viewing in those areas."

A lunar eclipse occurs when the Earth casts a shadow on the moon. This eclipse removed from view about 55 percent of the moon's surface.

Although less common than a solar eclipse, lunar eclipses still will number 28 before the end of the century.

Israeli warplanes attack PLO offices

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes bombed the headquarters of two Palestinian guerrilla movements today in the first air raids on Beirut since the 1978 Israeli invasion of southern Lebanon.

Just as the jets attacked, Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat appealed to Arab heads of state for help in the rapidly escalating battle with Israel.

"I want your swords, not your blessings," Arafat said in identical messages to Arab kings and presidents, according to the Palestine news agency WAFA.

The Israeli military command said Palestinian guerrillas fired intermittent barrages of Katyusha rockets today into northeastern Galilee and the Mediterranean town of Nahariya, injuring five Israelis.

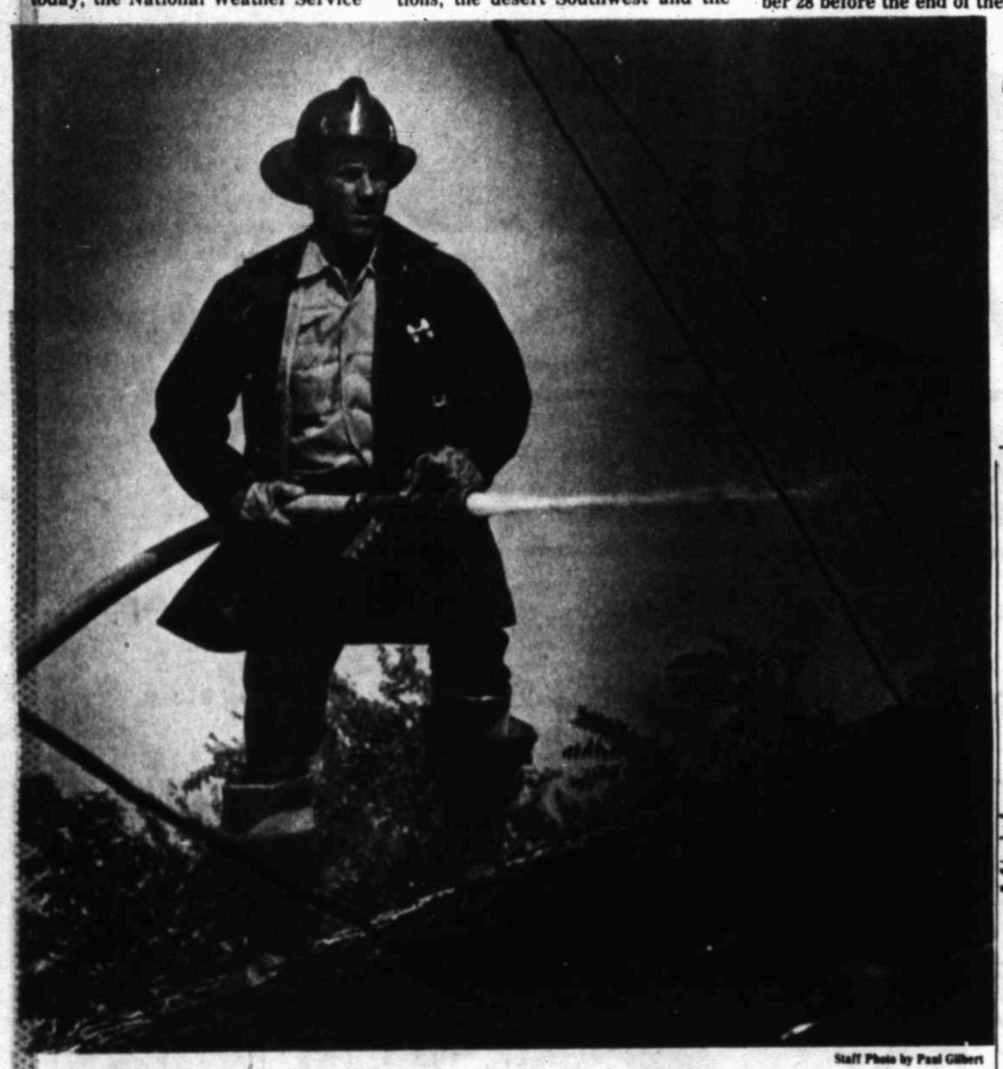

The command said Israeli artillery batteries returned fire to guerrilla positions in Lebanon.

It was the third straight day of Palestinian rocket attacks on settlements in northern Israel.

A communique from the Israeli military command said its planes destroyed the "central headquarters" of Al Fatah, the largest guerrilla organization in the PLO military command, and of the Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. It said all its planes returned safely.

Privately owned radio stations in Beirut said fires broke out in the Chatilla and Sabra refugee camps on the southern flank of Beirut in the city's predominantly Moslem district and reported that the Kuwaiti Embassy facing the Chatilla camp was hit by the bombs.

Reporters watching from rooftops counted six medium-altitude runs as Israeli jets staged their fifth air raid.

An unidentified city fireman pours water on the roof of the Jesse Leon residence during a fire that virtually destroyed the wood frame structure at the intersection of New York Avenue and South Weatherford Street about 5:15 p.m. Thursday.

Family watches fire destroy home

The nine members of the Jesse Leon family watched their house and most of their belongings go up in smoke during a fire that all but destroyed their three-bedroom, uninsured southside home late Thursday afternoon.

Leon said he, his wife and two of their seven children were in the kitchen when he heard a small roar "like a TV set exploding" in a corner bedroom shortly after 5 p.m.

"Flames started shooting and we got out in a hurry," he added. The other children were playing at a neighbor's house across the street.

"This is the first time anything like this has happened," said Leon, who has been off work the past three months because of an arm injury. Firemen used 3,000 gallons of water to extinguish the blaze, which was blamed on a short in an electrical cord.

The home is located at the intersection of New York Avenue and South Weatherford Street.

Quiet returns to British streets; Tempers explode in Parliament

LONDON (AP) — Calm returned to Britain's riot-torn inner cities for the first night in two weeks but tempers flared in Parliament, where a marathon debate on the violence reflected deep concern for race relations in the country.

By 3:30 a.m. today — 10:30 EDT — police had reported no recurrence of the mob violence that has swept the country, resulting in more than 3,000 arrests and scores of injuries. The riots of the past two weeks typically erupted shortly after midnight and were quelled within a few hours.

Earlier Thursday, in an eight-hour parliamentary debate on the riots, Home Secretary William Whitelaw annnounced that two government ministers will be dispatched to riot-scarred Liverpool to investigate inner city conditions. That northwest port city's Toxteth district, a West Indian immigrant neighborhood, was torn by some of the worst rioting.

Whitelaw also announced a special inquiry into Wednesday's pre-dawn police raid on 11 West Indian homes in the south London suburb of Brixton, where a search for gasoline bombs and factories rekindled rioting late Wednesday. Residents claimed police beat them and vandalized their property. Scotland Yard acknowledged in a statement that forced entry had been necessary in some cases and promised to pay for damage.

The Brixton clash between police about 300 mainly black youths was the last reported incident in the current spate of urban warfare.

Whitelaw told legislators Thursday that although the immediate task of the government was to "remove the scourge of civil violence" from Britain's angry streets, "at the same time we must develop policies of mutual toleration on which the whole future of our British democratic society depends."

The debate opened after a special Cabinet meeting on the riots, which Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher described as the "most worrying" time since her Conservative Party came to power 2½ years ago.

Whitelaw has already announced a package of new anti-riot measures for police, including use of tear gas, water cannons and plastic bullets.

Whitelaw's stand in Parliament was generally supported, but was challenged by leading anti-immigration campaigner Enoch Powell, whose remarks drew angry shouts of "racist!" from fellow legislators in the House of Commons.

Powell claimed the rising non-white population in Britain would render many of Britain's cities "ungovernable." Powell, a former health minister, belongs to Northern Ireland's Protestant Ulster Unionist Party. He has long campaigned for repatriation of Britain's non-white immigrants.

He said the recent riots had brought many people to accept the need for measures to stop what he termed "the inevitable increase and doubling" of the non-white population.

Non-white immigration has been constantly reduced through successive controls imposed over the past 15 years by both Conservative and Labor administrations. The country's 2.4 million non-whites represent 4 percent of the population, but are largely concentrated in low-income inner city areas.

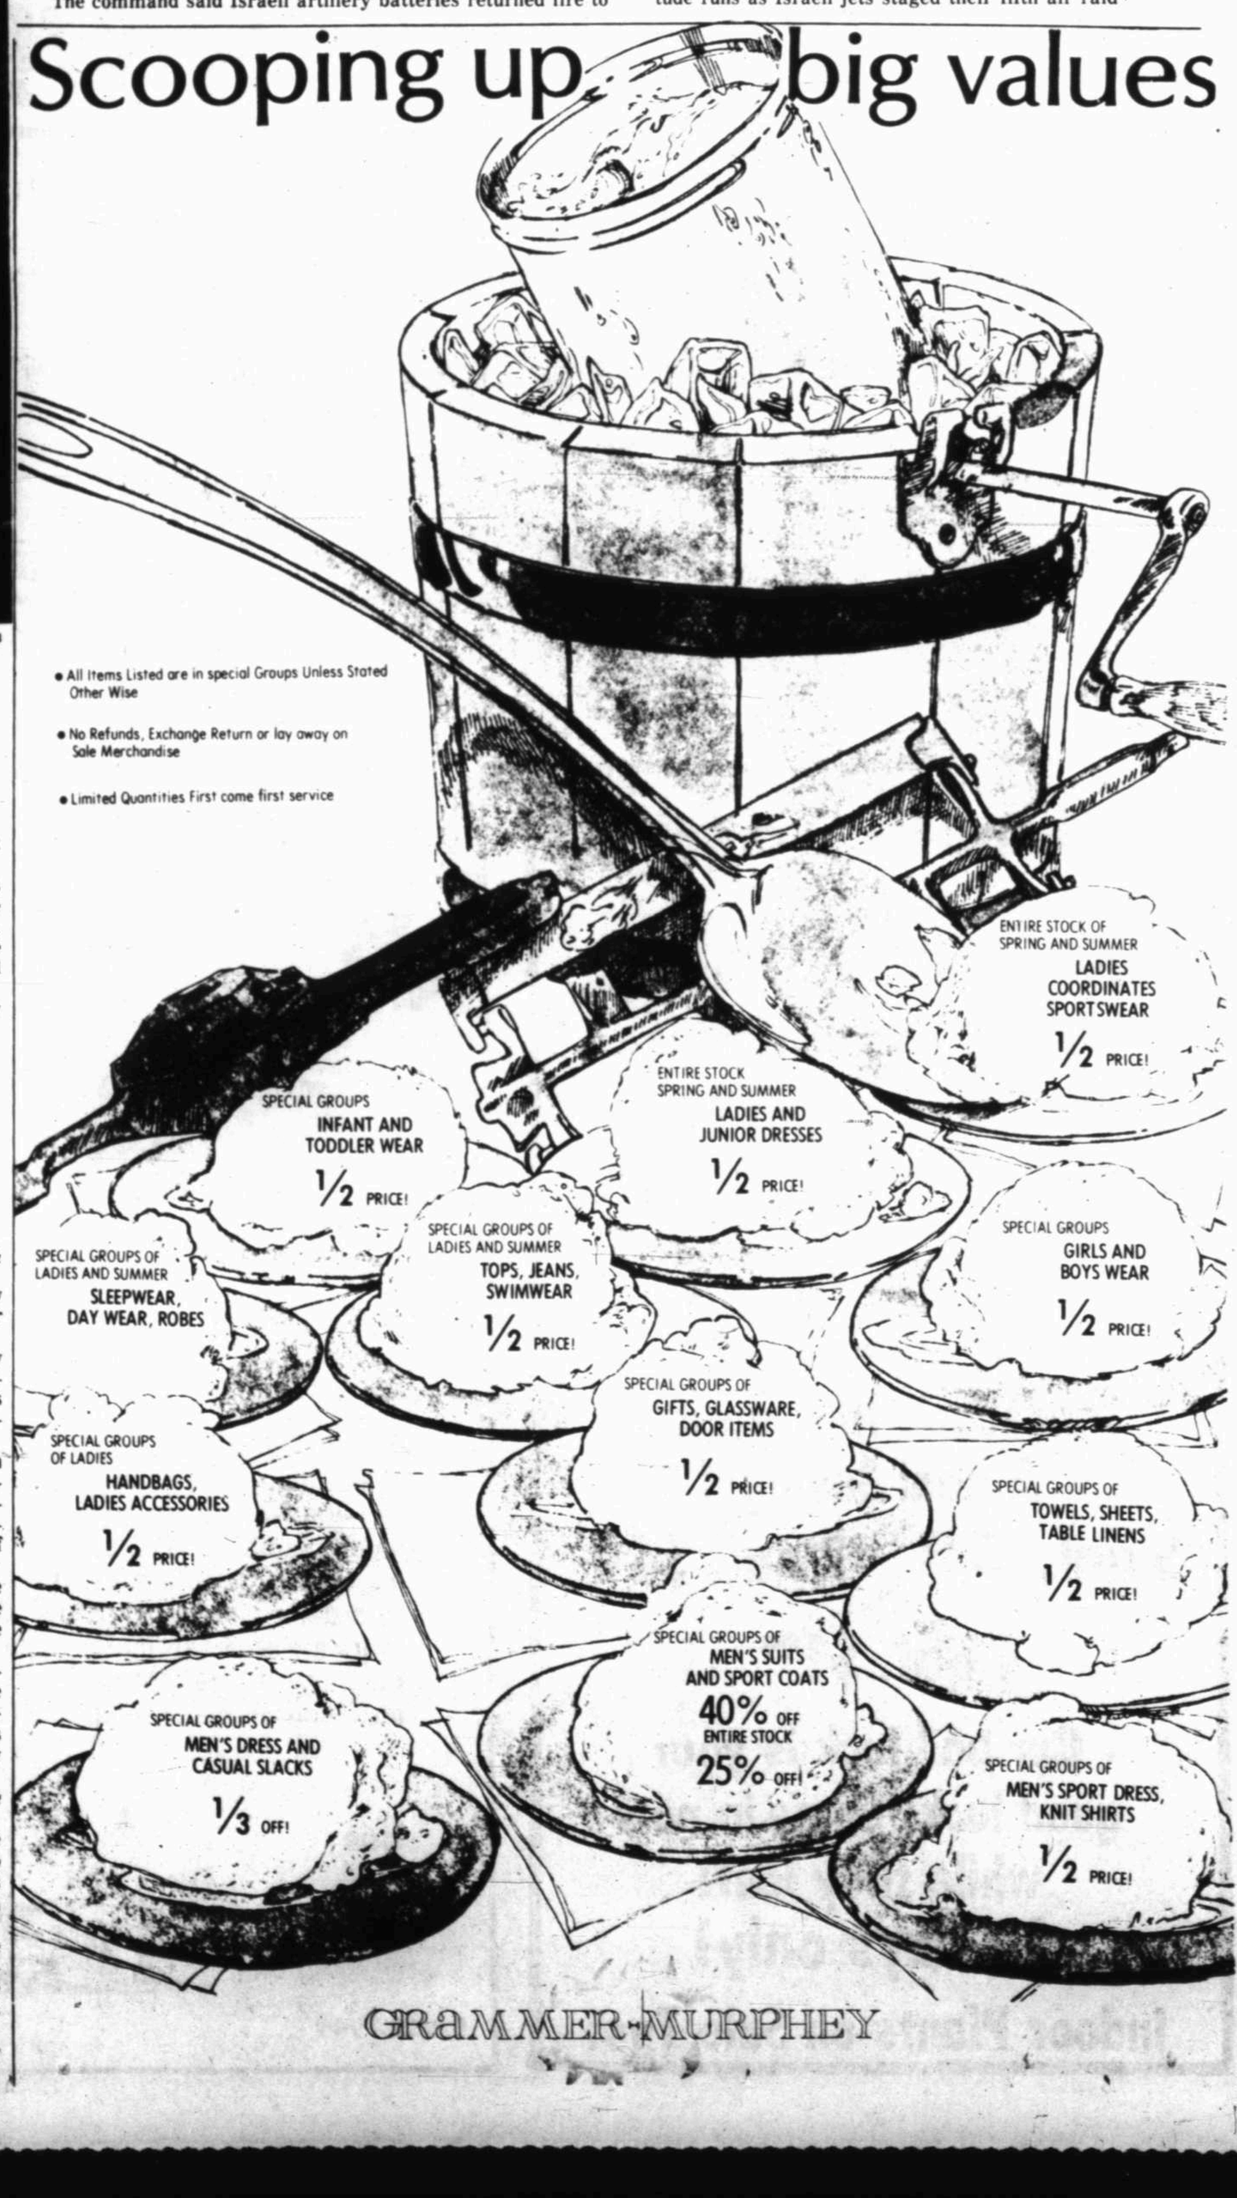

Many elderly Britons are "relieved that they are too old to see what lies ahead," Powell said.

Environment Secretary Michael Heseltine — one of the ministers being sent to Liverpool to look into the causes of the riots — said Powell's remarks would only "ferment the very anxieties and tensions you are forecasting."

Sydney Bidwell, Labor parliamentarian for the predominantly Asian west London suburb of Southall, scene of angry race riots at the start of the current troubles, said repatriation of non-whites was not the answer.

"We would lose the best and most talented of our newcomers and their children," he said.

Oval office clone

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — They're cloning the White House Oval Office here.

Workmen are putting the finishing touches to a replica of the Oval Office in the new Gerald R. Ford Presidential Museum that will open Sept. 18. The nation's only full-scale replica of the office will be open to the public and furnished with memorabilia from the Ford administration.

The $7.3 million museum was financed by the people of Grand Rapids, President Ford's home town, as a gift to the American people.

Profitable catch

LITTLE RIVER, S.C. (AP) — This fish story says fish can cost nearly $700 per pound.

That's the price Gary Hull and Tony Lawson, material handlers for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco, were paid for a 36-pound king mackerel that took first place in the fourth annual Arthur Smith King Mackerel tournament here.

They received top honors, worth $25,000 in cash and merchandise, in a field of 4,000 fishermen.

A dusty burgundy, wool-blend tweed blazer and a matching pleated trouser are paired with a cream ruffle blouse. Quality fabrics such as wools will be the best value for fall. Rust, burgundy, beige and cream will be the colors for the season.

Women's clothes must be versatile, individualistic

It's difficult to pigeonhole a woman today with all the interests and responsibilities she has.

Her clothes don't fit into a particular category either. They have to be as versatile, mobile and individualistic as she is.

Currently, there are some 58 million women in the nation's workforce. Manyof them are supporting families, so price is an important consideration in planning a wardrobe.

"Tailored clothing represents the best value for today's women," noted Dennis O'Sullivan, fashion director for Sears Women's Stores. "Suit separates, blazers, skirts and pants form the backbone, while blouses, sweaters and vests are the cosmetics that alter the appearance."

O'Sullivan also stresses the importance of accessories such as belts, handbags, scarves and shoes for unifying a look. "It's these added touches," he says, "that personalize an outfit and gives it the mobility to move with ease from one place to another."

For fall '81, women's wear follows classic, traditional lines with the emphasis on value. Corduroy, pigsuede and wool-blend blazers are mix-and-matchable with items such as wool-blend skirts and slacks. Complementing these pieces are oxford-cloth shirts, crewneck sweaters and ruffle sweaters.

Outerwear, too, stresses value with reversible pant coats as well as bubble jackets, that have zip-off sleeves so they can double as a vest.

The western influence still dominates casual wear and the season's new color is dusty burgundy.

Government is advising expectant mothers to avoid drinking alcohol

WASHINGTON (AP) — In its first official warning on alcohol and pregnancy, the government is advising expectant mothers and those considering pregnancy that they may be endangering the health of their unborn children by drinking alcoholic beverages.

Women who drink even small amounts of alcohol during pregnancy have a significantly higher risk of spontaneous abortion and giving birth to smaller babies or infants with birth defects, the Food and Drug Administration said Thursday.

In a bulletin to 10,000 doctors and other health professionals, the FDA asked physicians to deliver the warning to their pregnant patients, inquire about their drinking habits and include that information in medical records.

Women just "considering" pregnancy also should refrain from liquor because alcohol is especially dangerous to the fetus during the early months of pregnancy, the FDA notice said.

Previous government statements on the subject, never before formalized in a written warning, urged mothers-to-be to hold down their drinking and said abstention was the "safest" thing to do.

Some doctors have recommended that labels on beer, liquor and wine bottles spell out the potential dangers of alcohol on fetuses, but the Health and Human Services and Treasury departments advised against the proposal.

In a joint statement last November, however, the departments recommended that the government and liquor industry begin a major campaign to educate the public on all the dangers of alcohol.

The new warning said women who drink as little as one ounce of alcohol twice a week during pregnancy show sizable increases in spontaneous abortion. One ounce of alcohol is the amount contained in a little more than two glasses of wine.

Women who drink an ounce of alcohol a day bear significantly smaller babies, the FDA said.

Alcoholics are more likely to give birth to babies with fetal alcohol syndrome, which includes disorders of the central nervous system, growth deficiencies, facial abnormalities and malformations of the skeleton, genitals and heart, the warning said.

Heavy drinkers are more likely to give birth to babies with one or more of the problems in fetal alcohol syndrome, according to the FDA.

In addition to the danger to the fetus, alcohol readily enters breast milk and is transmitted to a nursing infant, the FDA said. It also reduces the amount of milk the mother produces.

The administration's choice for surgeon general, Dr. C. Everett Koop, has not been nominated formally because he has passed his 64th birthday.

Elegant dinner table returns

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Whoever said politics and home fashions have nothing in common?

If anyone did, he is being proved wrong. Today's conservative political climate appears to be mirrored in a corresponding rise of conservatism in home furnishings. Nowhere is this more evident than at the dinner table.

"In the mid '70s, young people didn't want to do the things their parents had done. They rejected weddings and sterling silver," said Tony LaChapelle, an executive with Reed & Barton.

But now, many young adults are not rejecting their parents' version of the good life. "We've noticed a return to traditionalism in the past two to three years," added Lachapelle.

The results of this return are better sales for the finer things such as china, crystal and silver, according to manufacturers interviewed recently during and after the New York tabletop market.

Among trends that showed up at the market, which consumers may expect to see on retail sales floors and in illustrated magazines in the near future, is a return to the formal table. New dinnerware in pastels and with floral motifs was widely shown at the market, as were revivals of old, florid patterns.

The mixing of patterns on the table is an idea advanced several years ago which is catchng on with consumers, according to those who watch the trends. And the interest in setting a lovely table is also leading to a wider array of accessory products, such as table linens and decorative centerpieces.

The new trends were made known in a market dominated by the introduction of conservative merchandise.

Engine diagnosis

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Diagnosing spark plug symptoms can help motorists prevent future engine problems, according to Dave Bowman, technical services manager for an auto parts manufacturer.

According to Bowman, black, charred-looking spark plugs can mean incorrect ignition timing or fuel with the wrong octane level. White flakes around the insulator tip indicate a burnt spark plug. Black oil deposits mean excessive oil consumption in the engine.

Brown, grayish-tan ash deposits on the electrodes are normal. They indicate the spark plugs are performing as they should, said Bowman, of the Fram Corp.

Fur talk

NEW YORK (AP) — Natural ranch mink is the choice of more women than any other fur, says Maurice de la Valette, vice president of Revillon Furs. He estimates that ranch mink accounts for at least 65 percent of furs sold in the United States.

Tips for the home owner

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to the home owner:

Federal regulations are making it easier for lending institutions to get adjustable mortgage loan rates to make up for the fact that these lenders must pay higher rates to attract savings. But Housing Magazine predicts that the long-term, fixed-rate mortgage will survive because many investors, including pension funds, want a fixed rate of return. A kind of compromise would be a fixed payment mortgage with variable rates. Payments would remain level even when interest rates rise and fall. The proportion of the steady monthly payment that goes for interest charges would be adjusted to the prevailing interest rates. One drawback for consumers would be the possibility that the life of the loan would be extended beyond its original term.

A New York manufacturer has been awarded a patent for a new insulation product consisting of tiny beads of pre-formed, expanded polystyrene. The company says it is an alternative to urea formaldedhyde without its controversial effects. The new material is made of the same kind of beads used in producing the insulating material for drinking cups for hot liquids, coolers and supermarket meat trays. The company discovered that bonding these beads with a special liquid binder during injection into any closed cavity wall created a dense aggregate mass with excellent insulating properties.

DEAR ABBY

Granny's 'gaiety' makes relatives uneasy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am married to a wonderful man, but when I married him I acquired a gay mother-in-law. She has a live-in girlfriend who not only shares her home but her bedroom. (Double bed.)

The problem is that we have moved out of state, and when we come back to visit her, we are expected to stay at her home. We have small children, and I don't want to expose them to this unnatural lifestyle.

My husband says the children will be oblivious to his mother's living arrangements, but I am not so sure. He is also afraid that his mother's feelings would be hurt if we stopped staying with her. How should this delicate matter be handled? — WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: If you don't make an issue of your mother-in-law's living arrangements, your children will probably think nothing of it. But if they question it, a non-judgmental explanation is in order: "It's a fact of life that some men sleep with men, and some women sleep with women."

DEAR ABBY: Not long ago you published a letter from a man whose wife had left him. He commented on your defense of divorce. You said, "It's more important to save people than marriages."

Abby, I totally agree. I am 16 years old and lived nine years of my life listening to my mother and father fight every night. I used to lie trembling in my bed, praying they wouldn't kill each other.

Now, three years after the divorce, our family is much better off, although it took a lot of courage on my mother's part to finally go through with it. She had to figure out how to support herself and two children on one income, and debated if maybe it wouldn't be better for us kids if she stayed with my father and put up with his abuse.

I personally feel that she made the right decision. It hasn't been easy for her. She has to work two jobs to make ends meet, but our household is so much happier. — HAPPY IN IDAHO

DEAR HAPPY: Thanks for the reassurance. Many of my younger readers wrote to say they feel the same way about their divided families.

DEAR ABBY: I wish you'd please keep reminding people that their friends and relatives are in a hospital to get well — not to entertain visitors.

I just got home from a 10-day stay in a hospital and I'm glad I had the good sense to tell my friends and relatives I would appreciate it if they didn't come to visit me. Nobody got mad. In fact, they thanked me for my frankness.

My hospital roommate acted so pleased when people came to see her by the dozens, but after they left, the poor thing was exhausted because she really wasn't up to having company. She later told me she really didn't want company but didn't want to hurt their feelings. I'll bet she had 50 visitors every day.

Abby, tell your readers to ask their hospitalized friends and relatives if they honestly want visitors before popping in for a surprise call. A card or telephone call would be so much more appreciated by most folks. — ON THE MEND IN BEND, ORE.

DEAR ON: Well said. And while we're on the subject, I wonder why everyone thinks a "No Visitors" sign on the door means everyone except HIM?

DEAR ABBY: Please say something in your column about mothers who treat their children who are NOT twins like they ARE twins.

A relative of mine has two daughters, 6 and 4. She dresses them exactly alike, combs their hair the same way and buys them identical toys. (She says, "If everything is identical, one can't be jealous of the other.")

That's not all. The 6-year-old can't go anywhere unless she takes her little sister. And if the big one has a playmate her own age over, the mother shoves the younger one off on both of them.

Both girls are constantly upset because they are expected always to be together, play together and stay together. That mother doesn't realize that their interests as well as their capabilities are not the same.

I tried to tell her that I thought she should start treating each child as an individual and drop the twin bit, and she nearly took my head off. If you agree with me, Abby, print this letter so she will see how wrong she is. — AUNTIE

DEAR AUNTIE: I'm with you, and I hope your relative reconsiders and takes your advice.

Pregnant women should avoid alcohol, Surgeon General says

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The surgeon general on Thursday warned that pregnant women should avoid alcoholic beverages and beware of food and drugs containing alcohol or risk endangering the health of their children.

A special advisory sent to 10,000 doctors and other health professionals noted that:

—The children of some women who during pregnancy consumed as little as two drinks a day or about one ounce of alcohol have been found to have significantly decreased weight at birth.

—Sizable increases in spontaneous abortions have been reported among women who drank as little as one ounce of alcohol twice a week.

—Women alcoholics risk bearing children with physical and mental defects known as fetal alcohol syndrome.

—A woman who drinks heavily is more likely to bear a child with one or more of the birth defects associated with fetal alcohol syndrome. They include central nervous system disorders, growth deficiencies, facial abnormalities and skeletal, genital and heart malformations.

The warning was issued by the acting surgeon general, Dr. Edward N. Brandt, who is assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health and Human Services. President Reagan's choice for the surgeon general's job, Dr. C. Everett Koop, has not been formally nominated because of requirements that the surgeon general not be older than 64 and Koop has passed his 64th birthday. The Reagan administration is trying to persuade Congress to exempt Koop from the age limit.

The alcohol warning should apply to women who intend to become pregnant as well as those who already are, the notice in a Food and Drug Administration drug bulletin said.

The effects of alcohol during pregnancy occur independently of other variables such as poor eating habits and smoking, the drug bulletin said. In addition, alcohol is known to enter breast milk readily and thus can be transmitted to a nursing infant. Heavy drinking also decreases the quantity of breast milk a woman's body produces.

By HENRY MITCHELL
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — On a hot June day I looked up into the small tree shading the bus stop and noticed, for the first time, a hundred little creamy clouds the size of a hand, suspended beneath the dense foliage.

It was, of course, the linden in bloom, or the lime-tree, as some gardeners call it. Even in the middle of a city there were a handful of bees working the flowers, which are like clusters of white-cream threads touched with green, and turning to tan as they age. Six of these thready clusters are borne together, and two clusters (thus 12 flowers) hang on one stem from the twig.

I lived as a boy near a street called Linden Circle, but there were no lindens on it, and the first linden tree I ever knew personally was at Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's farmhouse out from Charlottesville, Va. When I was a youth, I visited there and heard this great buzzing, which proved to be bees in the large old linden near the house.

The flowers, smelled up close, are not sweetly perfumed and suggest all too closely the privet bloom. But outdoors, beneath a great old linden tree, the air is sweet. The linden at my bus stop is not large, and the scent does not drift out on the air, at least not while I am catching buses.

But I thought of all the people standing around waiting for the bus in distinctly poor humor, and I thought I'd be as irritated as the rest of them if I hadn't happened to glance up to notice the linden at its peak of bloom. Viewed from the side, you would hardly see a flower, but looking straight up into the tree, you see millions of blooms, clustered together like small, billowy clouds the size of a human hand.

Lindens are wonderful trees — scarcely any tree is less than wonderful — and their beauty depends on a general rightness of leaf and branching. Lindens always remind me of those neat, middle-class women you see who are well turned out and who have taken some pains with their appearance, such as it is, and who even when they are not much to look at, see to it their shoes are trim, their hems are neat and so on.

The beauty of trees is a subjective business, no doubt, and I think no linden is ever going to be as elegant, as lithe and graceful, as the black locust. Now that the locust blooms have fallen, and the fresh new leaves have turned a richer green, they are still the most beautiful of trees.

It is true they drop branches not only in storms, but even on still nights. The world is just too much with the locust, and it lets go. And of course the locust gets borers. All the same, no tree is more beautiful, and hardly any other American tree is so lovely, and I have never thought much of those "tree experts," as they are ludicrously called, who regard the locust as a weed tree.

If a tree is not supremely beautiful, I see no great reason for it to exist in a garden.

There are, after all, such things as arbors and summer houses and awnings over terraces, and if shade is the only thing desired from a tree, there are easier and quicker ways of providing it than planting one. But no awning does what the locust does in the way of soft sheaves of foliage, and hardly any tree makes such a gentle shade, excluding the sun but not providing even the least gloom.

There are those unreal trees in some of the landscapes of Claude and Poussin, and there are no trees that look like those in nature, but the locust comes closest in effect.

People who pronounce upon trees seem to have got it into their heads, such as their heads are, that the ideal tree is the tree without disease problems, without bugs, without invasive roots, without dropping fruit or dropping flowers or dropping leaves. And in their efforts to find such trees they have quite lost their minds and have forgot one little factor: some trees are very beautiful; so beautiful that a good many trifling faults must be forgiven them, and among the beautiful and the damned (as you might say) the locust ranks high.

It merely occurred to me one recent night, visiting a hospital, that I should not like to be squashed by a bus without having gone on record in praise of the locust, and now, no doubt, it's all right to get killed.

In the event one lasts till fall, however, there may as well be a few snapdragons. I know perfectly well that many town gardeners simply have not the space nor the inclination to undertake any of those long-range plans that writers keep urging them to do, and I see those gardeners roaming about garden centers hopefully.

Among the best things anyone can acquire is a few pots or flats of snapdragons. They bloom right through till cold weather, and in many gardens they will last two or even three or four years, though usually they are treated as annuals and replaced each spring.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Borrowed playpen returned 'meshed up'

DEAR HELOISE
It seems a sacrilege to request any of your valuable space for a reprint, but I am desperate.

I had lent most of my baby things to people who swore they would take good care of them. Now, with a new baby on the way, they're being returned.

The playpen came back in terrible shape and, since this will be our last child, I can't justify buying a new one.

The nylon mesh is dusty and dirty. Could you please tell me how to clean it? — Judy

+ + +

If the playpen is all mesh and plastic coated (as most are these days), take it down to your local car wash for a good sudsing and rinsing. The pressure is greater and will do a better cleaning job than the garden hose. Just make sure the mesh is strong enough to withstand the spray.

If the mesh has turned black and looks moldy, make up a sudsy solution of half bleach and half water with a couple of squirts of liquid dishwashing detergent.

Hold an old towel on one side of the mesh (to keep the mesh from moving) while you scrub the other.

Rinse down outdoors with the garden hose, then pour a couple of capfuls of liquid fabric softener into a spray bottle of water. Spray the mesh well, then rinse again. The fabric softener will help remove the smell of the bleach.

Let dry throughly and the playpen will be sparkling clean when that wee one is ready for it. — Heloise

KEEPING COOL
Dear Heloise: When traveling in the car in hot weather without air conditioning, take a small cooler of ice and a few plastic cups.

Eating the ice keeps you cool, not to mention rubbing it on your arms and face for added relief.

Sucking on the ice is fun and you don't get a great intake of water at once. — Vada Corder

ROCK-A-BYE
Dear Heloise; Having a disabled hip, my rocker is the most comfortable chair for me to sit in but it constantly scoots across the floor when I rock.

How can I keep my chair from floorwalking? — Hilda O'Neill

It's easy as rockin' in a chair. Just purchase a piece of weather stripping and glue it to the rockers.

You'll stay in place, for sure! — Heloise

HANDY DISPENSER
Dear Heloise: I use a lot of hand lotion and like to keep it handy.

After my soft soap dispenser was used up, I decided to put some of my hand lotion into it for convenient use in the bath.

Just perfect — and it coordinates with the bath. — Linda Leonard

DUSTING POWDER
Dear Heloise: We all know cornstarh makes a great, unscented dusting powder. You can scent it, as well as stretch your favorite dusting powder, by mixing the two.

But did you know you can give unique fragrance to the cornstarch by adding fresh flower petals to a closed container of cornstarch?

Shake the mixture several times a day, then pour it through a course sieve the next day or so, discarding the flower petals.

Add fresh petals to the cornstarch and repeat the process for about four or five days.

When you've reached the desired fragrance, stop and enjoy! — C. Pines

Small-time entrepreneur Richard Dudgeion of Mountain View, Calif., tries to pick up some extra money selling protective masks during California's aerieal sprayin scare. Dudgeion says he bought 50 masks for $14 and hope to sell them for $1 each. He got few takers.

Medfly battle 'lost,' agriculture experts fear

By JACK SCHREIBMAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS GATOS, Calif. (AP) — As the Mediterranean fruit fly expands its turf, agricultural experts say the battle to save the state's produce industry from the insect may already be lost, despite aerial spraying of pesticides.

Five helicopters took off early today, trying to bring the program back on schedule after mechanical problems during the first three days curtailed spraying. The aircraft were to remain in the air until after sunrise.

The fruit fly, which attacks 200 varieties of fruits and vegetables, has moved to within 20 miles of San Francisco and within 40 miles of the rich farmlands of the San Joaquin Valley, officials said.

The area considered heavily infested with maggots rose to 175 square miles Thursday, and critics charged that a lackluster performance by helicopter crews spraying the insecticide malathion hasbrought California and its $14 billion agricultural industry to the brink of disaster. In the first three days of spraying, 25 square miles were sprayed.

"If they've fouled up for over a year, they're certainly not going to eradicate it now," said entomologist Terrance Allen, who headed the medfly eradication effort last year.

"It's a matter of time before we'll be picking up Mediterranean fruit fly in the San Joaquin Valley, Santa Barbara Valley, (and) Imperial" Valley, Allen said, naming the famed farm areas further south of the infestation.

"It even has a chance to go into northern California, into Oregon and maybe Washington," he said.

Allen claims that Gov. Edmund Brown waited too long to order aerial malathion sprays. He said he was demoted to a lesser state government job because of his advocacy of stronger action against the pest.

Allen's opinions were echoed by Frank Gilstrap, a Texas A&M University entomologist and member of the California Medfly Technical Advisory Committee. He charged Thursday that failure to spray by air when the heavy infestation 2as discovered in June was "absolutely unconscionable."

He said the spraying is desperately behind schedule and predicted only a 50-50 chance of success.

Santa Clara, San Mateo and Alameda counties, which are under a produce quarantine, "must be sprayed within 10 days to catch the pupas' development into an adult insect," he said. "When that cycle is allowed to take place uninterrupted, another generation of pests joins the population."

Brown, however, brushed off the criticism and said Thursday that containment efforts, based here, are "on track," and prospects for eradication are good.

Brown initially refused to order aerial spraying, saying he feared that it might be harmful to human health, but reversed himself after the federal government threatened to impose a quarantine on all state produce.

On Wednesday, he asked President Reagan to declare a federal disaster area in three counties, saying the problem "was beyond the control of the state."

There has been no White House response to Brown's request, but on Thursday, Richard Lyng, deputy secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, said Brown was "absolutely wrong in saying the fly is out of control." Jerry Scribner, director of the eradication project, said Thursday that he, too, disagreed with Brown.

Fly maggots now have been found found in Milpitas, which is separated from the rich farmlands of the San Joaquin Valley by 40 air miles and a range of coastal mountains. The valley accounts for about 40 percent of the farm income in California, which supplies half the nation's fruits and vegetables.

Research reveals no easy method for fighting fruit fly

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here have sought a way for the past two years to kill the Mediterranean fruit fly without chemicals or a substance that would harm people or crops.

But the best solution they have come up with so far — treating fruit with a pressurized mixture of nitrogen and carbon dioxide devoid of oxygen — can be used only after fruit has been picked and not in open fields, said physiologists Jackie Jacobs and James Roseboro.

Among other methods studied by scientists here and at University of California campuses at Los Angeles and Riverside were gamma rays, microwaves and extreme heat and cold.

Authorities in California have been conducting aerial spraying with the pesticide malathion in an effort to combat the pest, which attacks 200 varieties of fruits and vegetables.

The idea of a non-chemical crop treatment to kill the fly and its larvae was credited to Henry Warren, retired head of the Exclusion and Detection Department of the state Food and Agriculture Department.

Warren said he became aware in 1974 that the medfly would pose a problem for California's $14 billion agricultural industry. "When we read about what might be up the road for chemical treatments, it frightened us," he said.

He tried unsuccessfully to convince several universities to do research on a non-chemical treatment before giving the idea to officials at the laboratory here, Warren said.

PARTING...SORROWFUL BUT SWEET!

"Let me say plainly," said Paul, "that no man's blood can be laid at my door, for I didn't shrink from declaring all God's message to you. And now beware! Be sure that you feed and sheperd God's flock -- his church, purchased with His blood -- for the Holy Spirit is holding you responsible as overseers. I know full well that after I leave you, false teachers, like vicious wolves, will appear among you, not sparing the flock. Some of you yourselves will distort the truth in order to draw a following.

"Watch out! Remember the three years I was with you -- my constant watchcare over you night and day and my tears for you And now I entrust you to God and His care and to His wonderful words which are able to build your faith and give you all the inheritance of those who are set apart for Himself.

"I have never been hungry for money or fine clothing -- you know that these hands of mine worked to pay my own way and even to supply the needs of those who were with me. And I was a constant example to you in helping the poor; for I remembered the words of the Lord Jesus, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

When he had finished speaking, he knelt and prayed with them, and they wept aloud as they embraced him in farewell, sorrowing most of all because he said that he would never see them again. Then they accompanied him down to the ship.

Will Casey's 'problem' become his albatross?

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — So Max Hugel is out.

Not many people ever knew he was in as the CIA's spy chief.

And the operation that led to his resignation was a swift piece of political surgery calculated to keep it that way.

Hours after The Washington Post published accusations by two brokers that Hugel had engaged in improper stock market practices — which he denied — the CIA deputy director for operations turned in his resignation.

President Reagan's aides said the White House didn't put him into the CIA and didn't force him out. But the message from Pennsylvania Avenue to the suburban Virginia headquarters of the CIA was unmistakeable: This one wasn't worth fighting about.

"The administration is not embarrassed," spokesman David R. Gergen said after Hugel's abrupt resignation. "The alleged activities happened seven years ago, not during his service to the administration." Besides, Gergen said, they were unproven.

Hugel said he had not done anything wrong.

But as any reader of spy novels knows, undercover agents are expendable. Hugel was boss of the CIA's covert intelligence operations worldwide. The appointment of a businessman, Reagan campaign aide and longtime friend of CIA Director William J. Casey dismayed career intelligence officials, who said the job should have gone to an agency veteran in the first place.

Reagan said the right things. Aides reported him saddened at the accusations. "Once again we seem to be taking an accusation as a conviction," the president said after Hugel's resignation.

But deft staff work kept the Hugel episode away from Reagan and the White House doorstep. Administration aides had been looking into the case for four days before the accusations were published. Reagan was told of the accusations against Hugel late Monday and got word he had resigned Tuesday morning.

An AP Analysis

two. The New York Times quoted a Reagan aide as saying: "Hugel was Casey's choice, Casey's buddy and Casey's problem."

It was a setback for Casey's determined effort to lower the profile of the CIA and keep the agency out of the newspapers. But that was contained, too, by Hugel's departure and immediate replacement. Casey named CIA veteran John Stein — an experienced hand with service on several continents — to succeed him.

Ironically, while all that was unfolding, Casey ran up against stock accusations himself, with publication of a New York federal court ruling that he and associates knowingly misled investors in a New Orleans business venture. That ruling was issued May 19. Casey's lawyers denied any impropriety. The CIA said Casey would have no comment.

On Wednesday, Reagan's spokesman said the president has confidence in Casey and wants him to remain boss at the CIA. "The matter is still subject to further appeal in the court system," said deputy press secretary Lary Speake.

None of that serves the goals of an administration that wants the CIA strengthened and back under cover. Hugel's departure and Casey's silence were efforts to get the whole episode behind the agency and the administration as quickly as possible.

The White House line was that Hugel was Casey's man, and that the resignation was a decision reached at the CIA after discussions between the

It may not work. The White House deemed it necessary to come to Casey's defense. And another federal court ruling has surfaced involving the same defunct company, this one holding that Casey and other directors managed the firm deep into debt in attempting to serve their own interests.

The Hugel operation was an exercise in cutting losses. But Reagan's aides may not be done with the problem of choosing when to fight and when to come in from the cold.

Reagan answers youngster's letter about seal slaughter

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — President Reagan was so impressed by a letter from a 9-year-old boy protesting the slaughter of fur seals that he wrote the youngster a personal reply.

Mario Urrutia Jr. received the letter from the president Wednesday.

"It was the first time I ever wrote anybody a letter," said the boy, who lives in San Pedro, near the Los Angeles Harbor.

"Our teacher told us in class how hunters were clubbing baby seals to death. I was so upset about those hunters I went home from school that night and wrote the letter to the president," Mario recalled.

"I ASKED the president to tell the hunters to quit clubbing the baby seals to death. I said the world doesn't need real fur."

Mario said he thought if anybody could stop the hunters from killing the seals, it would be the president.

"I told Mr. Reagan some other stuff in the letter, but I don't remember what else I said."

REAGAN'S LETTER, on White House stationary, read:

"Dear Mario: It is always a pleasure to hear from young Americans who care so deeply about the many problems facing America today.

"I was very moved by your sincere expression of love for animals and concerned for the cruel ways in which some people mistreat them.

"Your letter shows a sensitive understanding of the important role animals, both domestic and wild, play in our lives.

"I want you to know that I share this concern and commend your courage in speaking out on behalf of those who cannot defend themselves.

"I hope that you will always be counted on to stand up for those weaker than you are. This is a virtue on which you may be very proud." It was signed by the president.

"I remember how he came home from school really upset about what his teacher told him that day," said the boy's mother, Pat Urrutia.

"Mario was sure the president would write him back. I never thought he would. Mario kept checking the mailbox for an answer for a couple of weeks, then kind of forgot about it.

The boy's father beamed with pride in his barber shop Wednesday and told his customers about his son's correspondence with the White House.

Setzler is a 1980 graduate of Lee High School where he was a member of JETS and ACS. The other Adams award winner was Kenneth Kaiser who is attending Sul Ross State University in Alpine.

ON THE ROAD

Dealing with occasional emergencies

By SUE ALFORD

The checklist from "How to Deal with Motor Vehicle Emergencies" is concluded this week with information on various emergencies which happen occasionally...and that we can deal with.

Loss of Lug Nuts on the Wheels: Often caused by improperly tightened nuts when a tire is replaced, or by faulty threads on a lug bolt, this problem can be serious. Your warning sign would be a wobble in a wheel or a rattling noise from a wheel, especially at slow speeds.

If you experience these warning signs, check and fix them immediately, or you'll lose a wheel. To check: remove hub caps or wheel covers, and check the tightness of all nuts; tighten as needed with lug wrench. If more than one nut is missing, borrow one from another tire, then make sure all nuts are tight. You can run one nut short temporarily. If two or more of the wheel studs are too badly stripped to permit retightening of any loose nuts, leave the car parked until you can have faulty items replaced.

However, if on checking, you see none of these problems, you could have a faulty or burned out wheel bearing. In that case, you should drive immediately to the nearest service facility for repairs.

Exhaust System Failure: The fixture holding mufflers or tailpipes in place can break due to rust or corrosion. You'll know when its happened by the dragging noise on the pavement or the loud engine noise or both you'll hear. When this happens, pull off the road and try to do a temporary fix...after the muffler has cooled off. The fix: push it back into place or raising and holding it in place with a piece of wire. Until the system is properly repaired, drive with a side window at least partially open to insure against carbon monoxide poisoning of passengers.

Flats and blowouts: If this happens to you, especially at high speeds, get a firm grip on the wheel and apply your brakes gently to slow down. Pull well off the road. Notice that you don't slam on the brakes — that may throw you out of control.

How do you know? A blowout will be sudden, the car will probably dip and you'll hear a loud noise. The flat will yield gradually increasingly difficulty in steering and handling.

To change the tire, limp along to level ground. Use emergency flashers throughout. Carefully jack up the car, having already loosened the lug nuts.

Dropped Drive Shaft: One of the most dangerous problems to occur on the highway is a dropped driveshaft. This problem doesn't occur often, but when it does, it happens suddenly.

In vehicles with front-mounted engines, the driveshaft is the long tubular device underneath your car. It is connected on one end to the transmission and on the other to the differential in the rear end. Its purpose is to transfer power from the transmission to the rear end to turn the rear wheels and propel the car. The driveshaft connections at the front and back are called universal joints. If one of these fails, on some vehicles the driveshaft may drop to the roadway.

Failure of the rear universal joint is not as serious, from a safety standpoint, as failure of the one in front. If the universal joint in the rear fails, the rear end of the driveshaft may drop to the roadway. Motive power will be lost, and the car cannot be driven until the driveshaft is repaired.

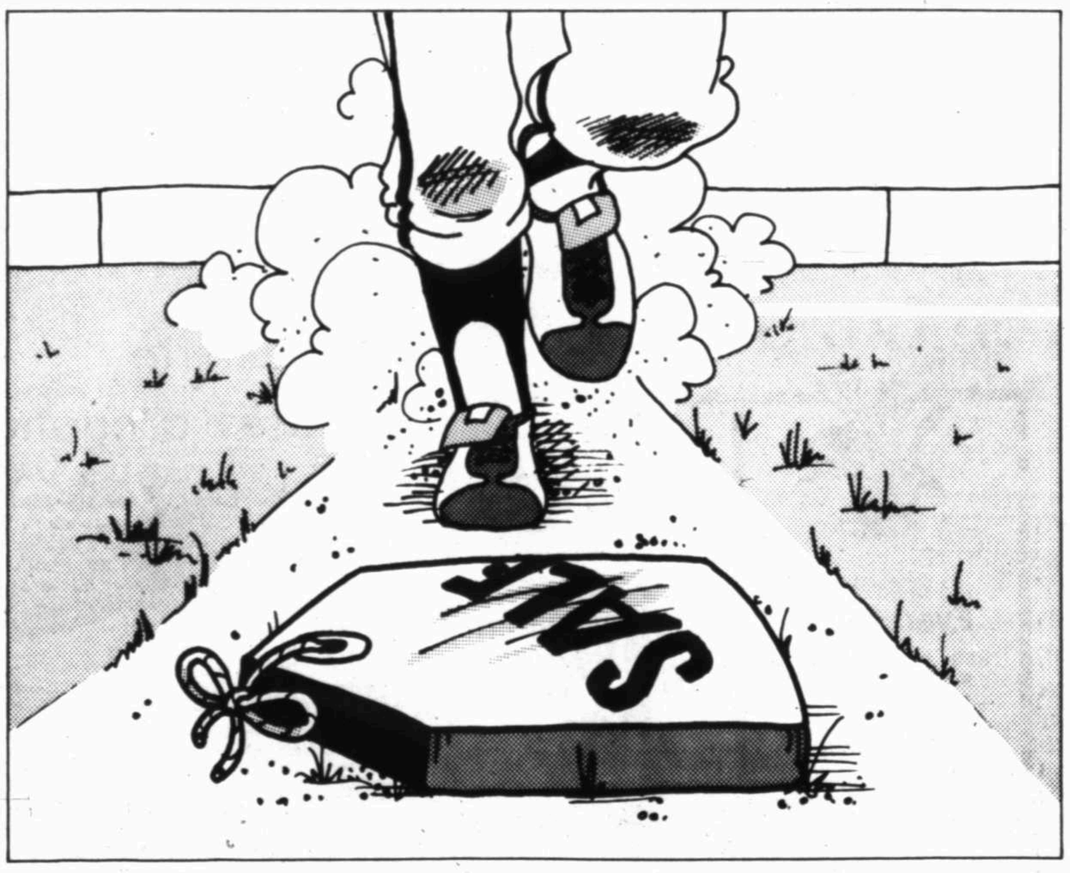

If the front universal joint fails, a serious accident can result, and the faster the car is moving the greater the danger. In this case, the front of the driveshaft may drop and can dig into the pavement. The forward motion of the car can then lift up the rear end of the car and flip the car over. Your first and most important precaution is to slow down before pulling off the road to prevent the drive train from digging into the rough berm.

To reduce the chance of this happening to your car, have your service facility examine and lubricate your car's universal joints periodically and check for possible looseness in the joint assemblies or in the bearings. Universal joints will be obviously noisy before they fall completely. Generally, this is accomplished by a severe vibration throughout the vehicle at all speeds.

Hood Popup: Failure of a hood latch (both primary and secondary) or improper closure of hood and subsequent failure of the secondary latch, can result in the hood popping open while you are driving. When the hood opens in this fashion, it will block your view of the road in front of you.

The first thing to remember is don't panic and don't panic-stop. If you apply your brakes suddenly and hard, you may be inviting a rear end collision. Instead, ease the car to the right or left (depending on the lane of traffic you're in and the room you have on either side) and depend on your limited view from left window for forward steering reference (i.e., you may have to stick your head out the window to look). Also, glance in your rear view mirror to see how much room you have between you and the vehicle behind you. Remove your foot from the accelerator and apply your brakes slowly. Turn on your emergency flashers and give a hand signal to indicate that you are going to stop. After you've signaled drivers to the rear, pull off the road.

If for some reason you cannot get the car off the highway (e.g., driving on a bridge, or guardrail to the right), do not leave you car. After traffic has cleared behind you, proceed with caution to the nearest point at which you can exit the highway.

Lack of language skills hurts America's cause

By ARSENE DAVIGNON
Hearst Feature Service

The venerable American slogan "Body by Fisher" once appeared in Flemish as "Corpse by Fisher" to the befuddled amusement of would-be Belgian car-buyers.

Similarly the normally innocuous, if essentially meaningless, "Come Alive with Pepsi" once in translation urged startled Germans to "Come alive out of the grave."

These are but two of the gaffs American tradesmen and advertisers, in hot pursuit of overseas markets, have been guilty of through their ignorance of foreign languages, according to a recent book by U.S. Rep. Paul Simon (D-Ill.).

According to Simon in "The Tongue-Tied American," (Continium Publishing, N.Y.), no small part of America's trade imbalance is due to her trans-oceanic salesmen being outdone by cannier Europeans and Asians who have taken the time to learn the language of their customers.

All else being equal, says Simon, the buyer will deal with someone who literally speaks his language.

However serious the consequences of our relative monolingualism to American trade, Simon feels they pale by comparison to the implications for national security and foreign policy.

He says: "Before our heavy intervention in Vietnam, fewer than five American-born experts on Vietnam, Cambodia or Laos -- in all our universities and the State Department combined -- could speak with ease one of the languages of that area . . .

"What if, a big if, we had had in our nation at that point a mere 20 Americans who spoke Vietnamese fluently, who understood the culture, aspirations, political history? Maybe, just maybe, we would have avoided that conflict."

But even as he wrote, 56,226 American lives and $135 billion later, Simon could count only 29 persons enrolled in the study of Vietnamese in the entire United States. That's despite the fact that Vietnam is the world's third most populous communist country.

Panda may be pregnant

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Chin-Chin, one of the world's few remaining pandas, may be pregnant again, a Mexico City Zoo veterinarian said.

"We are monitoring her on a 24-hour period with closed circuit television and if she does deliver, we won't make the same mistakes as last time," said Dr. Juan Tellez Giron Wednesday.

The 6-year-old Chin-Chin delivered the first panda conceived in captivity on Aug. 11, 1980, but it died eight days later when she apparently squashed it.

"The front of the cage will be shut off from the public to cut down noise, and security will be very tight," the doctor said.

Tellez said he believes Chin-Chin and male panda Pe-Pe mated in mid-March. She is showing physical signs of pregnancy, but "if she is ready to deliver, we don't want to upset her with an examination and cause her to abort," he said.

A panda's gestation cycle is 127 days and the end of that period is next week, Tellez said.

Chin-Chin and Pe-Pe have been living together since they were brought to the zoo in 1976, a gift from China to then-President Luis Echeverria.

There are pandas in zoos in London, Washington and Tokyo, but none of the pairs produced an offspring naturally. An artificially inseminated panda in China gave birth to two cubs in 1978.

There are about 250 pandas in the world. The black and white animals are members of the raccoon family and native of the Chinese highlands.

Helicopter rescue plan criticized

HOUSTON (AP) — A plan to use helicopters to rescue victims of floods, refinery explosions and high-rise fires encourages people could "endanger rather than save lives," a Houston Fire Department official says.

A committee of officials trying to coordinate emergency use of the choppers made the proposal Tuesday, but Deputy Fire Chief David Fuller criticized the release of the rescue plan before his department had tested and approved it.

"Unnecessary evacuation by helicopter could endanger rather than save lives," he said.

But Coast Guard Cmdr. Jay Crouthers said the idea should not be kept from the public. "I'm sure Nero was doing something important while Rome was burning, too," he said.

Crouthers said department representives failed to attend the Aircraft Assistance in Disaster Committee meeting when the plan was unveiled.

Fuller said he would have attended the meeting if he had known the plan would be discussed.

Crouthers said Houston, the nation's fifth largest city, has had a 'few ce quiet years" without major disaster but eds a helicopter rescue n.

Lack of linguistic experts hurting CIA operations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A growing scarcity of persons adequately trained in foreign languages, particularly Middle Eastern dialects, is hampering operations, CIA and Pentagon officials have told a House subcommittee.

"We have been impacted severely," Adm. Bobby R. Inman, deputy CIA director, testified Wednesday. He said he could not publicly reveal "the statistical effect declining foreign language ability has had on our operations."

Craig L. Wilson, a special assistant to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, said the military's problem filling foreign language slots "may increase as we press on in the development of the Rapid Deployment Force."

They appeared before the House postsecondary education subcommittee during hearings on a bill to provide $80 million a year in federal grants to schools and colleges to promote expanded foreign language programs.

"Although we have a great many analysts and intelligence officers who have some foreign language ability, many do not have the professional level of competence needed to conduct their jobs," Inman said.

"In the operations area, we are now losing many of our most experienced (clandestine) people who have had 20 or so years of service using a second or third language," he said. "Replacement ... has been made difficult by the fact that many universities and colleges no longer have foreign language requirements as part of their mandatory curriculum."

Inman said the use of electronic eavesdropping posts around the world has increased the need for foreign language specialists.

Wilson said that military "intelligence units to support the RDF will require an estimated additional 874 linguists in six major Middle East and African languages and dialects."

He said that although about 80 percent of the military's 13,060 foreign language slots were filled last December, only half the incoming linguistic personnel "possess the necessary competence level."

Superlatives describe Cheyenne Frontier Days

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Some residents plan vacations, out-of-state license plates proliferate, stock rolls into town and merchants hire extra help — Cheyenne Frontier Days is here again.

The 10-day Western celebration, featuring the Daddy of 'Em All, the world's largest outdoor rodeo, begins Friday.

The Frontier Days Committee is using superlatives to describe the 85th annual edition of the event.

A record 1,500 entries have been made by cowboys and cowgirls to compete for the record $450,000 purse, according to contestants Chairman Kent Rutledge.

"We have record entries in all three riding events this year, plus our usual number in the timed events," he said. "The way it sets up now we will have more than 40 bull riders per day, 39 saddle bronc riders and 30 bareback contestants per performance.

"Cheyenne will buck more stock in one performance than the majority of rodeos will during their entire show," he said.

And members of the Northern Chuckwagon Association will compete for more than $70,000 in prize money.

Parades feature "the world's largest parade collection of horse-drawn vehicles," a Frontier Days schedule says.

Organizers got a record number of inquiries during the year for Frontier Days activities, Executive Director Gene Bryan said Wednesday.

Visitors from Colorado's Front Range and from the Midwest are again expected to lead the hundreds of thousands of visitors who come each year to the state capital of 47,000, he said.

Some Cheyenne residents are not as enthusiastic about the annual Western celebration as the organizers and visitors.

German asks for apology

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A leading West German parliamentarian has called on Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin to withdraw his remark that all Germans were responsible for the Nazi Holocaust, the West German magazine Quick reported.

In an interview published today, Annemarie Renger, vice president of the lower house of Parliament, also said Begin should take back the comment that Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was Adolf Hitler's faithful soldier "to the end."

Mrs. Renger was asked how good relations between West Germany and Israel could continue in light of Begin's accusations, according to the weekly magazine.

"It would be honorable if Prime Minister Begin, at least after the election, would withdraw his accusations against the chancellor as well as his wider assertions condemning the Germans for Nazi crimes to the last man," Mrs. Renger was quoted as saying.

"We will on our part do everything to continue the good relations," she added.

In June Begin told the Israeli Parliament "for what happened to the Jewish people in the 1930s and 1940s the entire German people is responsible ... They all served in the German army, including Mr. Schmidt, who swore allegiance to the Fuehrer and stood by his vow to the end."

Two discoveries, eight tests filed in West Texas; N.M.

Two discoveries, a field confirmation and eight wildcats have been filed in the Permian Basin counties of West Texas and eastern New Mexico.

REEVES DISCOVERY

R.K. Petroleum, Midland, has discovered gas in an undesignated pay, seven miles west of Arno.

Potential of the No. 1 R.K. State is: calculated absolute open flow 65,000 cubic feet of gas per day; no oil; through a 4/64-inch choke. The gas is 57 gravity. Production is through perforations between 3,781 and 3,804 feet, acidized with 100 gallons.

Casing is 4 1/2 -inch, set at 3,874 feet.

The well is about 3/4 mile south-southwest of the 3,841-foot dry hole, E.T. Warren No. 1 State, which was abandoned January 4, 1966.

The location is 660 feet from the south and east lines of section 10, block C-20 of the Public School Land survey.

RUNNELS WILDCATS

JEM Petroleum Corp., Midland, will drill the No. 1 Davis, as a 5,100-foot wildcat, test at 4,850 feet to attempt to reopen Caddo gas production in the Motley, North (Palo Pinto, Goen lime, Odom lime and Caddo lime oil and Odom lime gas) field and test at 4,790 feet as a 1 5/8 miles south outpost to the Modley, West (Odom lime gas) field and 13 miles northwest of Ballinger.

Location is 467 feet from the north and east lines of section 21, of the H&GNRR survey, abstract 280.

****

Wood Enterprises, Inc., Abilene, will drill the No. 2 H.D. Poe, a 4,850-foot wildcat, six miles west of Winters, in Runnels County.

Location is 2,624 feet from the north and 2,678 feet from the east lines of the John L. Lynch No. 442 survey, abstract 346.

****

Premium Oil & Gas, Inc., San Angelo, will drill the No. 1 Lindeman, a 4,600-foot wildcat in Runnels County, 2 1/2 miles northwest of Ballinger.

Location is 3,771 feet from the southwest and 467 feet from the southeast lines of the HE&WT survey No. 1.

SCHLEICHER PROSPECT

Walter Exploration, Inc., Dallas, will drill the No. 4 Josephine, a 4,500-foot wildcat in Schleicher County, 20 miles east of Menard.

Location is 467 feet from the north line and 660 feet from the east line of section 5 of the BS&F survey, abstract 39.

EDDY WILDCAT TESTS

Fuller Petroleum, Inc., Fort Worth, announced location for a 15,000-foot deeper-pool wildcat in Eddy County, New Mexico, 16 miles southeast of Malaga, 1/8 mile soth of Delaware oil production in the Brushy Draw field, and six miles southeast of Morrow gas production in the Corral Draw field.

The wildcat is the No. 1 Brushy Draw Deep Federal, located 990 feet from the north and west lines of section 24, township 26 south, range 29 east.

****

Union Oil Co. of California, Midland, will drill the No. 1 Federal "FI" as a 4,600-foot new field wildcat in Eddy County, 29 miles east of Carlsbad.

Drillsite is 660 feet from the north and west lines of section 35, township 21 south, range 31 east.

The site is 4 1/2 miles east of Atoka production in the Cabin Lake field.

****

Also in Eddy County, 1/2 mile east of Carlsbad, Delta Drilling Co., Midland, has completed a workover—well as an undesignated Wolfcamp gas producer.

Reentry is the No. 1 XL, which flowed 3,060,000 cubic feet of gas per day from Wolfcamp perforations at 9,722 to 9,756 feet.

The project was originally completed in 1976 as a Morrow gas well in the Carlsbad, South field by Morris R. Antweil.

Total depth is 11,782 feet with 5 1/2 inch liper set at 9,982 feet.

Location is section 20, township 22 south, range 27 east.

CHAVES CONFIRMATION

Yates Petroleum Corp., Artesia, No. 1 Long Arroyo "OW" Federal, has been completed as the second well and 5/8 mile southwest extension in the Springer Basin (Morrow gas) field, seven miles southeast of Hagerman in Chaves County.

Producing from perforations at 7,926 to 7,943 feet, the well flowed 1,200,000 cubic feet of gas per day through a 1/2-inch choke, with a flowing tubing pressure of 175 pounds per square inch.

Total depth is 8,232 feet with 4 1/2 inch casing set on bottom.

Location is section 23, township 14 south, range 27 east.

The discovery well for the field was the same firm's No. 1 Phillips "KH" Federal Com., completed in 1979 for a flow of 1,100,000 cubic feet of gas per day from perforations at 8,050 feet.

****

Yates Petroleum Corp. also announced location for a 4,450-foot new field wildcat in Chaves County, 21 miles northwest of Boaz and 2 1/2 miles northeast of Abo gas production in an unnamed field.

The new test is the No. 1 Doris "RI" Federal, located 1,980 feet from the south line and 660 feet frm the west line of section 27, township 5 south, range 25 east.

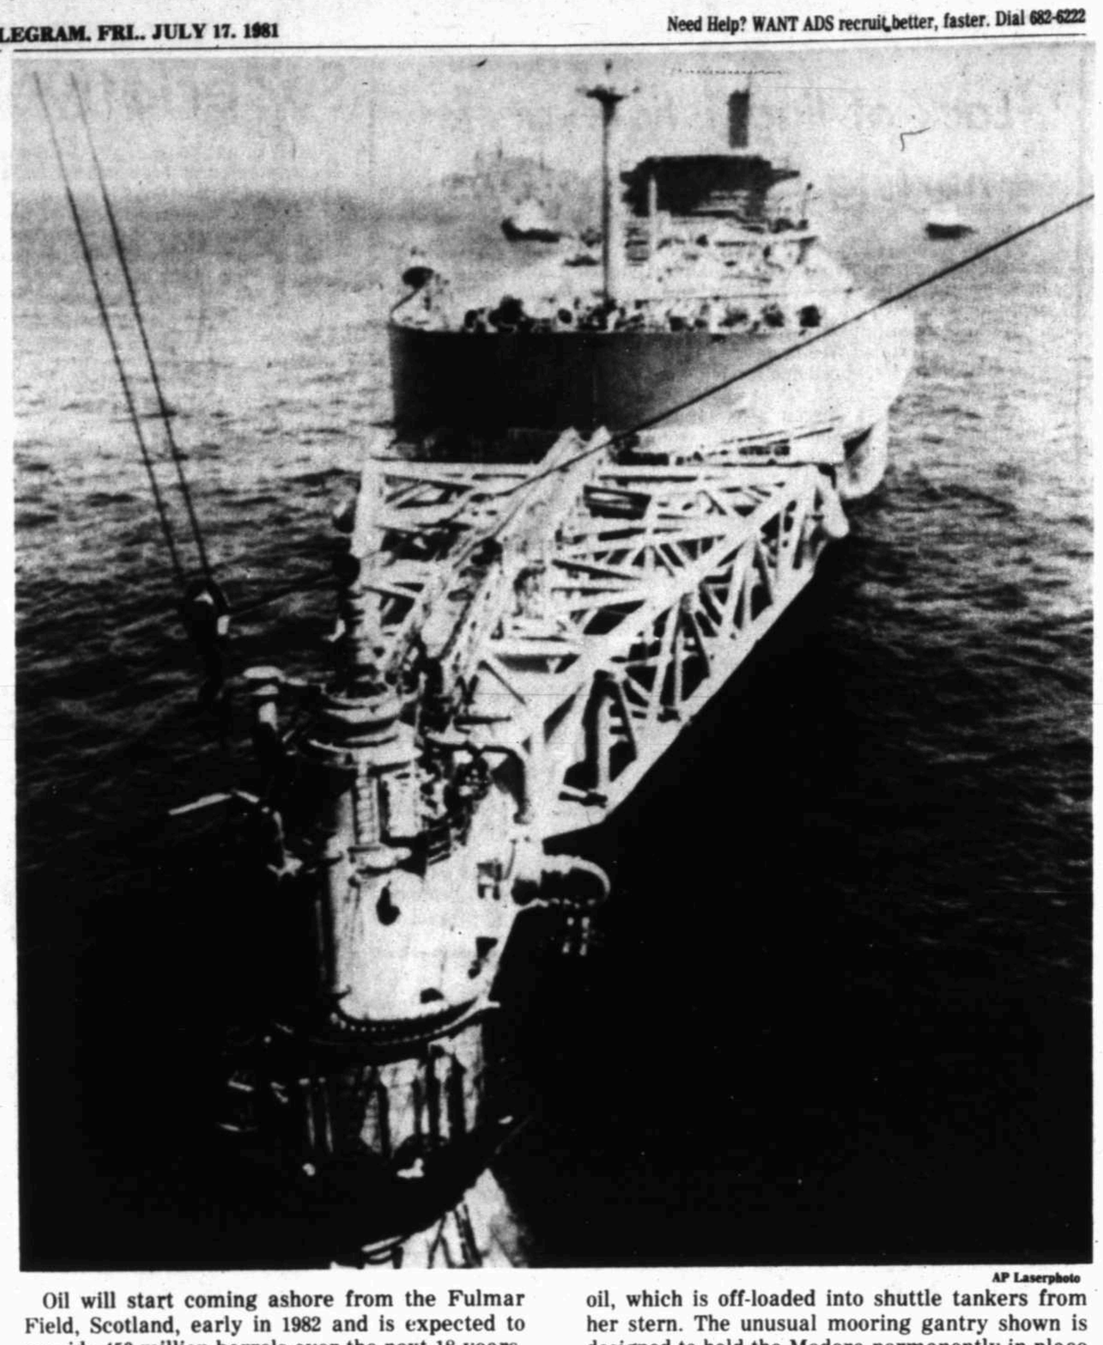

LEA WILDCAT

Marathon Oil Co., Hobbs, will drill the No. 1 Delmont L. Hatfield, as an 8,500-foot wildcat in Lea County, 14 miles southeast of Lovington.

It is scheduled as a test of the Drinkard formation.

Location is 1,980 feet from the south line and 1,760 feet from the east line of section 23, township 16 south, range 33 east.

The site is two miles east of 8,292-foot Drinkard oil production in the Garrett field.

AP Laserphoto

Oil will start coming ashore from the Fulmar Field, Scotland, early in 1982 and is expected to provide 450 million barrels over the next 18 years. Oil is piped frm the oil rig (background) to the tower in the foreground, which is built up from the sea bed. The 210,000 ton takner Medora stores the oil, which is off-loaded into shuttle tankers from her stern. The unusual mooring gantry shown is designed to hold the Medora permanently in place in winds up to 98 miles per hour, with 88-foot waves.

Second incident of possible sabotage at nuclear plant

SOUTHPORT, N.C. (AP) — A spokesman for Carolina Power & Light Co. said Thursday the utility is investigating another possible attempt to sabotage one of its nuclear power plants.

The latest possible sabotage attempt is believed to have caused a shutdown of Unit 1 at the Brunswick Nuclear Plant that is expected to last for the rest of the summer.

Last week, while Unit 1 was being returned to service after an earlier incident of "deliberate" sabotage, debris slowed the turbine to a stop, said Caudle Julian, chief of the reactor operations section of the NRC in Atlanta.

An investigation turned up small bits of foreign metal imbedded in the turbine bearings, Julian said.

In the earlier incident, dirt, gravel and other foreign substances were found May 18 in oil lubricating the Unit 1 turbine generator, according to Mac Harris of CP&L's Raleigh office.

Harris told The Associated Press Thursday night that the earlier incident was considered to be "deliberate" and occurred while the reactor was out of service for scheduled maintenance.

The first incident was reported to the Federal Bureau of Investigation and to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, he added.

Plant Manager Charles Dietz described the materials found in the turbine bearings last week as "foreign metallic chips not normally found in that area." The metal bits are small enough to be held in the palm of the hand, he said.

"The investigation is too premature to arrive at any conclusion," Dietz said. He would not rule out the possibility of sabotage.

Dietz could not offer any estimate of the cost of the damaged equipment.

Harris said he does not know if the two incidents are related. He said both CP&L employees and contract laborers routinely work in the area of the turbine lubrication system.

Harris said there was no danger of damage to other portions of the facility, and noted that the turbine was not a part of the plant's nuclear reactor.

Company officials have estimated Unit 1 will be out of commission until mid-September. The utility announced earlier this week it is reducing its voltage by 5 percent in an effort to conserve power.

No decision made on shale project

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, facing a contempt of Congress citation, is delaying until next week a decision on whether to provide federal price guarantees to a commercial shale oil project.

"The president will make a decision on the contracts next week," said Rep. Joel Deckard, R-Ind.

Deckard is the ranking Republican on the House Government Operations subcommittee that has subpoenaed all Energy Department documents concerning the western Colorado project.

Energy Secretary James Edwards has refused repeatedly to comply with that subpoena.

With Deckard's support, Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., the subcommittee chairman, had planned to initiate contempt proceedings against Edwards on Thursday. But Deckard urged a postponement after learning that Edwards was meeting with top White House officials to discuss the possibility of turning over the documents.

Moffett rescheduled consideration of contempt proceedings for Tuesday.

Deckard said the White House meeting only yielded a decision not to sign the contracts with the Union Oil Co. this week.

Although the administration still has not decided whether to turn over the documents, Deckard said he was assured by "one of the principals" at the session that "discussions on the documents will continue.

"There will be a good faith attempt made (by Edwards) to try to resolve the problem," he said.

In May 1980, Moffett's subcommittee, brandishing a similar threat of contempt, forced then-Energy Secretary Charles Duncan to turn over Carter administration documents on a plan to impose a 10-cent-a-gallon conservation tax on gasoline. That plan as ultimtely overturned by Congress.

Under the pending Union Oil proposal, the government would make up the difference when the market price is below a set level and Union Oil would repay some of that when the market price rises above that figure. The facility is to be in operation by 1983.

The subcommittee has been trying to obtain the Union Oil project documents for nearly six weeks. Moffett has said they are needed to determine whether subcommittee members are justified in their concerns about the project.

Some members of the panel have said they fear the department failed to determine whether Union Oil would build the plant even without federal assistance. They also have said the price guarantee appears to be too high.

Edwards and other Energy Department officials have claimed disclosure of the documents would impede negotiations between the government and Union Oil over the price guarantee. Edwards had said the documents would be turned over as soon as the contract was signed.

"Congressional oversight is an ongoing responsibility and consequently is not limited to after the fact reviews," Moffett said Thursday.

"The large amount of taxpayer money at stake is one reason for our acute interest," he said, contending that the proposed contract could cost between $400 million and $500 million over 10 years.

Geothermal power to be produced from volcano

PUNA, Hawaii (AP) — The lightbulbs and ceiling fans of 2,500 homes in this district of Hawaii Island will get electricity Friday from a new source of energy — the most active volcano on Earth.

The Hawaii Geothermal Plant will become the first in the United States to tap the energy of an active volcano.

"Utilizing the heat of our volcanoes to produce energy has long be3n a dream of scientists and planners," said Gov. George Ariyoshi. "Now this dream is being realized."

California, the only other state with commercially available geothermal power, taps into underground steam at The Geysers.

Hawaii's geothermal power uses energy along the super-hot east rift of Kilauea Caldera by releasing steam through a well. The steam is formed when rain seeps into pockets around the hot rock.

The 6,300-foot well is "one of the hottest and most promising in the world," according to John Shupe, chairman of a state advisory committee on alternate energy development.

The plant was built on a volcano that erupted just two years ago. But major equipment can be removed if lava threatens the site.

Because Hawaii's volcanic eruptions are non-explosive lava flows, scientists are counting on having enough advance warning to move.

But residents are not as confident that this intrusion into the home of the fire goddess Pele will be well-received.

Ancient Hawaiians revered the goddess, said to punish those who displeased her by sending cascades of fiery lava over their villages.

Says Everett Kinney, a community organizer and urban geographer who is part Hawaiian: "Some of us do feel somewhat bothered by drilling into an area that is Pele's traditional home. We have a healthy respect for the goddess, and among traditional Hawaiians there is some fear that she might retaliate."

The experimental well, an eight-year $13.4 million project funded by the U.S. Department of Energy and the state, was intended to ease future commercial development of geothermal power.

State energy planners, concerned over Hawaii's heavy dependence on imported oil and its increasing home energy costs, now view geothermal power as the most promising of a number of alternative energy sources under study.

But Hawaii —sland, the biggest in the archipelago, accounts for less than 10 percent of the state's population. And nearly half the electricity needs of its rural communities are already met by burning bagasse, or sugar cane residue.

Planners are studying two ways of developing geothermal potential: Linking Hawaii Island with the population enter of Oahu via submarine cable; or building large, energy-intensive industries such as aluminum refining plants on the Big Island, a prospect that leads Kinney to warn against a "Pittsburgh of the Pacific" located in Puna.

Georges Bank drilling to start soon

HYANNIS, Mass. (AP) — After years of court battles and controvery, exploratory drilling for oil finally will begin today or Saturday in the rich fishing grounds of Georges Bank, an oil company says.

Shell Oil Co., the first company to set up drilling operations off the New England coast, had hoped to begin drilling Thursday, but last-minute details forced a delay.

Biological tests were finished shortly before midnight Wednesday, said ...esman Norman Altstedter. These are necessary so scientists will be able to determine later whether the drilling has had any effect on the environment.

Another task involves installing a discharge pipe that will spew out mud and rock churned up by the drilling bit.

The drilling rig, the Zapata Saratoga, is setting up in 450 feet of water 200 miles east of Hyannis on Cape Cod. The project is expected to take about 200 days and cost $24 million.

Shell will be followed soon by rigs from Exxon, Mobil and Getty.

Mobil joins bidding for Conoco, Inc.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mobil Corp., the nation's second-largest oil company, has joined the bidding war for Conoco Inc., a battle that has been escalating since Conoco directors endorsed a competing bid from Du Pont Co., a newspaper reported today.

The New York Times said Mobil has bid $90 a share in cash for 43.5 million shares for an offer of $3.92 billion. Mobil is seeking 51 percent of Conoco's outstanding shares, the Times said.

It was reported earlier this week that Mobil had negotiated $5 billion of credit to make the offer.

The offer exceeded one made by Seagram Co. Ltd., the Canadian distiller, which bid $85 cash a share for 51 percent of the stock, or $3.8 billion. A federal judge in Manhattan Thursday denied Conoco's efforts to block Seagram from proceeding with the offer.

Conoco has agreed to be acquired by the chemical giant Du Pont for cash and stock worth $7.4 billion. The Du Pont offer would pay $95 a share for 40 percent of Conoco and 1.7 shares of stock for each share of the remaining 60 percent.

Texaco Inc. also has expressed an interest in Conoco, but a Texaco spokesman could not be reached for comment Thursday.

A spokesman for Conoco, reached at home by The Times late Thursday night, said the company would have no comment on the Mobil bid.

Meanwhile, the chairman of one of America's largest oil companies says he is "distressed" that other oil companies are considering trying to acquire Conoco and says he fears such a merger would cause a battle beween the government and oil companies.

George Keller, the chairman of Standard Oil Co. of California, said a takeover of Conoco by either Mobil or Texaco would represent "a terrible challenge to the antitrust laws."

"There's a risk it might be seen as a situation where big oil is trying to overwhelm the government," Keller said in a telephone interview Thursday night. That followed an interview in the Oakland (Calif.) Tribune where he expressed alarm about the possibility of a merger.

Keller emphasized he was not saying a "giant oil-oil merger" would violate the antitrust laws because he was not an expert on those laws. But he said it would be sure to lead to "a giant battle fought in Washington."

Keller said he would like to see the Du Pont deal go through.

Socal has an interest in allowing large mergers. Earlier this year Socal proposed a $4.3 billion takeover of Amax Inc., a large mining company in which Socal already has a 20 percent interest. But it dropped the proposal when Amax officials opposed it.

Dr. Robert Mueller and his wife, Pamela Schopp, center, leave the Vermilion County Courthouse, Danville, Ill., Wednesday after a preliminary hearing on charges they tried to starve their siamese twin boys to death.

Judge asked to drop charges against twins' parents, doctor

By ROBERT LEE ZIMMER
Associated Press Writer

DANVILLE, Ill. (AP) — A judge has been asked to dismiss charges that the parents and family doctor of severely deformed Siamese twins tried to starve the infants.

Defense attorneys told Circuit Judge Richard Scott Thursday that Vermilion County State's Attorney Ed Litak had not produced enough evidence at a preliminary hearing to warrant the charges. Scott said he would rule today.

Dr. Robert Mueller; his wife, Pamela Schopp; and the family physician, Dr. Petra Warren, were charged with attempted murder, conspiracy to murder and endangering the life and health of the children. In addition, the parents were charged with solicitation of murder and cruelty to children.

They could be sentenced to 30 years in prison if convicted.

Defense attorneys contended Thursday that testimony from a key state witness failed to link the three defendants with orders to withhold food from the twins, Scott and Jeff, after their birth May 5 at Lakeview Medical Center.

Litak has said nurses violated orders and fed the twins several times during the eight days they were at Lakeview before they were taken into state custody.

During the hearing, however, a witness — Lakeview nurse Margery Stuart — said she could not remember whether she had received such orders from Mrs. Warren. But she did read an entry from a medical chart that said, "Do not feed in accordance with parents' wishes."

Litak, who later said he was surprised that Mrs. Stuart could not remember anything, asked the judge to accept a transcript of secret grand jury testimony into evidence. The defense objected, and Scott took the request under advisement.

Litak said that if Scott did not order the three defendants to stand trial, he would take the case back to the grand jury and seek indictments. A grand jury investigated the case, but Litak decided to file the criminal charges himself.

The Illinois Department of Children and Family Services claimed that the boys, who are joined at the waist, were neglected at the Lakeview hospital. A judge in May agreed and placed them in state custody.

On their ninth day, they were taken from Lakeview to Children's Memorial Hospital in Chicago. Doctors have concluded after extensive medical tests that an operation to separate the boys would result in death for both, according to Don Schlosser of DCFS.

They share a lower spine, one deformed leg and part of the digestive system.

The twins' weight dropped 40 percent at Lakeview but increased overnight at the Chicago hospital, where they were fed regularly, testimony at the May custody hearing indicated.

Vermont assembly revokes teen-agers' 'license to kill'

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Just two months after the arrest of a 15-year-old boy in the torture-slaying of a little girl, the General Assembly has voted to revoke what a top state official called Vermont teen-agers' "license to kill."

A compromise bill passed by the House and Senate Thursday night would allow the state to jail juveniles convicted of serious crimes until age 21, rather than the current age 18. It also would permit children as young as 10 to be tried in adult court for any of a dozen serious crimes.

The current law came under public fire after one of the two boys accused of the brutal slaying of Melissa Walbridge of Essex Junction turned out to be a 15-year-old who, if convicted, could go free at 18 with no criminal record.

"It is a sad truth that in many parts of the country, the events which led to this special session would not even be front-page news," said Gov. Richard Snelling, who called the special two-day session, the General Assembly's first in six years.

"But, here in Vermont, we have not been so hardened and so accustomed to crime, and we will never accept thoughtless violence as a necessary part of our lives."

The governor did not indicate when he would sign the bill into law.

The current law — which allows those under 16 convicted of serious crime to go free at 18 with no criminal record — was adopted in 1968 when, according to its sponsor, no one envisioned children being accused of murder.

But then the unforeseen happened.

Melissa, who was 12, was found stabbed to death behind a town recreation center May 15. A friend, also 12, was stabbed and found stumbling around in shock nearby. Both girls were naked, and police said they had been tortured with pellet guns and raped.

Louis Hamlin, 16, and James Savage, 15, were arrested in the attack. Hamlin has been charged with murder and aggravated sexual assault. His trial is to begin in the fall, and prosecutors say Savage has agreed to testify against him.

Savage is accused of taking part in the torture slaying. But because he is 15, he has been charged with delinquency. Both he and Hamlin are in the custody of the state.

Fear among state residents was compounded in late May when a 16-year-old Morgan youth was charged with beating to death a 16-year-old girl who he thought was pregnant with his child.

Attorney General John Easton, joining in the call for a new law, said the 1968 law gave Vermont teen-agers a "license to kill."

Petitions bearing 30,000 signatures in the state of 500,000 urging a special legislative session were presented to the governor. The petitions asked the state's 180 legislators, who normally meet just in the winter, to ensure that juveniles no longer be treated with kid gloves.

A controversial plan that would have increased the possible punishment for Savage was scuttled before the final bill was passed.

Sen. David Gibson, R-Windham, had suggested a retroactive measure to lengthen state custody over juveniles. The plan won preliminary Senate approval Wednesday despite a warning by the attorney general that it was probably unconstitutional, but it was cut out of the final version of the bill.

"This is has not been a session of retribution or hatred," Snelling told the lawmakers. "In the finest tradition of this citizen Legislature, you have answered the call of the people of Vermont."

Gramm may face discipline

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Tip O'Neill said Thursday he will call a Democratic caucus in September to deal with requests for disciplinary action against Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas.

"We've never had discipline in our party. We've never had punishment in our party," O'Neill told reporters at his daily press conference when asked about an anti-Gramm petition reportedly making the rounds.

But he went on to say Gramm had entered the Republican caucus to help them work up strategy for the budget battle after having earlier participated in Democratic strategy sessions.

Gramm also conferred frequently with David Stockman, the administration's chief budget official, O'Neill added.

Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., has been leading an effort for party punishment of Gramm for playing a leading role in President Reagan's call for wide-ranging spending cuts, which were passed in the House over a Democratic leadership alternative.

"There will be a caucus on the matter after Congress returns from its August recess," O'Neill said.

"The pendulum swings in politics. Today you have a fellow with you. Tomorrow you don't," the speaker added.

Gramm, asked about the comments, said if a caucus is held concerning him, "I suspect I'll come, and I've never suffered in silence. Whatever they want to do, let them have at it."

It was a bad day for Jack Nicklaus at the British Open. He wipes sand from his neck with some help from caddie Jimmie Dickinson after hitting another bunker. Nicklaus ended up with an 83, the worst score of his professional career.

Nobody breaks par

Nicklaus, Watson, Palmer all have problems

SANDWICH, England (AP) — Since the British Open golf championship began in 1860, there never was a first day like this.

Nobody broke par.

Jack Nicklaus, a three-time champion, shot 83 — his worst round in 20 British Opens — after hearing that his son Steve had been charged with drunken driving back in Ohio.

Tom Watson, defending champion, predicted the title may be won with an unprecedented total of 6-over par.

AND AMID all the high scoring in the shifting winds, 51-year-old Arnold Palmer lost an argument with officials over a free drop and probably was robbed of a share in the lead.

The 6,829-yard Royal St. George's links lived up to its reputation as a terror for golfers unfamiliar with the hump-backed fairways, invisible bunkers and winds that blow in from Pegwell Bay.

Only two of the 153 players, Vicente Fernandez of Argentina and Nick Job of Britain, made par 70. They shared the lead, with six men one stroke behind them — Johnny Miller and U.S. Amateur champion Hal Sutton of the United States, U.S. Open winner David Graham of Australia, Isao Aoki of Japan, Simon Owen of New Zealand and Tony Jacklin of Britain.

All the top players had predicted the course would be difficult, but probably none of them expected it to be as tough as this. The pins were awkwardly placed, the wind differed from hole to hole and the greens were slow.

At the center of the drama was the tragic figure of Nicklaus, who has never finished outside the top six in the last 15 years.

FEW OF the 19,000 fans who lined the undulating fairways knew of his family worries. All they saw was a great golfer making a mess of hole after hole. At the turn, with one birdie and five bogeys. he was at 39, four over par.

But worse was to come. On the first five of the inward nine he had four double bogeys and a bogey.

Nicklaus said afterward he had talked to his son on the phone.

"I'm not greatly excited by what has happened, but it had nothing to do with my performance," he said. "There has to be one day when you shoot the worst round of your life."

Watson double-bogeyed the first hole after twice hitting into heavy rough. He finished with 73.

That left him three strokes off the pace. With the high scoring likely to continue, it appeared to be a contending position.

Palmer posted a 72, and it would almost certainly have been 70 if he had not run into a bizarre situation at the 15th and had a double bogey six.

Palmer's second shot ran through the green and down a slope to a flat area close to the spectators' stand. He found he had no room to swing his club.

He claimed a free drop, under the rules of golf.

Officials said he could have it, but must drop his ball in the nearest approved drop area. Palmer found the area a mass of long grass and decided to play from where he was. He went through the green again and had to chip back.

PALMER WAS British Open champion in 1961 and 1962. Last week he won the U.S. Senior Open championship.

He diplomatically turned newsmen's questions aside, but finally said he thought the ruling was unfair.

"I don't think you should be penalized because you are in an unplayable area that is part of the putting area." Palmer said. "That's all I'll say about it."

But Graham, who was paired with Palmer, spoke out more strongly.

"Arnold was 100 per cent right," the Australian said. "There should be no local rule that overrides the general rules.

"A player should not be penalized for unintentionally hitting the ball into the spectators' area. It is not right to take a man's ball from a good lie and drop it into a lie that is unplayable."

Everybody appeared to sympathize with Palmer except the tournament committee of the R and A (Royal and Ancient Club.) John Salvesen, chairman of the committee, said the rules must be observed and added: "You are bound to find some cases that are more unlucky than others."

Graham himself was in a rumpus on the fourth fairway, where he got into a difficult bunker and a group of spectators laughed loudly.

The little Australian stormed up to them and said, "If you guys want to laugh, why don't you go to the circus instead of a golf tournament? If you don't go to the circus I'll bury my 8-iron in your heads."

Kennedy is surprise, but won't join tour

JERICHO, N.Y. (AP) — Edwina Kennedy, a 22-year-old amateur from Australia, has been playing golf ever since her grandmother taught her to swing a club at the age of 2.

Twenty years later, however, Kennedy has no desire to join the Ladies Professional Golfers Association tour.

Not even a 2-under-par 70 in the opening round of the $125,000 Western Union International Classic at the Meadow Brook Club Thursday will change her mind.

The native of Sydney hit every green as she carded a 34-36 with four birdies and two bogeys on the 6,347-yard course. Kennedy found herself in a four-way tie for sixth place in the four-day, 72-hole competition that is offering $18,750 as top money.

Sally Little, a 29-year-old South African who is the defending champion, and Vivian Brownlee shared the lead at 4-under 68.

Cathy Reynolds, Jerilyn Britz and Vicki Fergon followed with 69.

"I came over here to play in six tournaments over eight weeks," said Kennedy, who finished in an 11-way tie for 30th place in last week's Mayflower Classic in Indianapolis.

Cubs beat Arkansas, 10-8

Nastu turns out lights

By TED BATTLES

After watching Arkansas and Midland play Alfonse-Gaston with the lead for six innings in a peformance that would have killed vaudeville if it wasn't already dead, Phil Nastu arrived on the scene with his Eddie Feiner act and put an end to the nonsense as Midland made it nine wins in 11 games and raised its second half Texas League West record to 15-8.

Nastu gave a three inning impersonation of the King and his Court to nail down a 10-8 win for Midland in the opener of a five-game series with the Arkansas Travelers at Cubs Stadium.

Henry Mack was credited with the win when Midland scored twice in the seventh to go in front 9-8, but it was former major leaguer Nastu who made it stick, earning his third save with what just might have been his best outing of the year.

BUT UNTIL Nastu's arrival, it was a follies...five errors, two passed balls, three wild pitches, and a total of 15 bases on balls. It looked like the Travelers indeed had spent the morning sleeping in the bus after an all-night drive while waiting for their motel rooms to open up and the Cubs had joined them. But the Travelers found out the Mets weren't going to check out until Wednesday morning, so they spent the night in Amarillo, arriving in Midland at noon fresh and rested.

SUNDAY—Arkansas-Cubs, 6 p.m. 25-cent Soft Drink Night.

MONDAY—Arkansas-Cubs, 7:30 p.m.

With Arkansas leading 3-2 in the third, Midland erupted for five unearned runs as Carmelo Martinez hit a three-run homer, his 12th. It looked like enough to win under ordinary circumstances, but Arkansas tied it and chased Midland starter Mike King with a four-run fourth.

THE TRAVELERS nudged ahead in the sixth when Fred Tisdale singled home his fourth run of the night. But the Cubs rallied for two in home sixth. Starter Kevin Hagen, 5-8, fanned Martinez and J.W.Mitchell, but Mike Shepston singled, David Pagel walked and Javier Fierro singled to right to score Shepston. That brought in Dave Jorn who walked Mel Hall intentionally and Jack Upton unintentionally to force in the go-ahead run.

Midland then scored another run in the ninth when Pagel walked, Fierro cracked out his fourth hit, Hall moved the runners up with a bunt and then Mark Riggins, the only lefty on the Arkansas staff, fooled catcher Dennis Delaney with a strike zone breaking pitch that went by for a passed ball and let a run score.

But the way Nastu was pitching, the Cubs really didn't need it. The Rumianian from Bridgeport, Conn., who was 3-4 for San Francisco in 1979, kept it between himself, catcher Shepston and first baseman Upton in the seventh and eighth, getting three strikeouts and three bouncers back to the box. In the ninth, Tisdale, who had three hits, grounded out to second, but Nastu then sandwiched strikeouts around a walk to Delaney to end it.

The Cubs and Travs play a Beer Night contest tonight with Jon Perlman, 1-0, going against Arkansas' Ralph Citarella, 5-7, a righthander from Colonial, N.J., who attended Bloomfield, N.J., College and Florida Southern.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Hall, Upton and Martinez all extended their hitting streaks to eight. Martinez did it most impressively with his third inning homer, the type you can almost tell is gone by the swing and sound. That gives Carmelo 11 rbi in the home stand and 12-for-25...Fierro's 4-for-5 spree gave him 12 for 28 in the current homestand...Arkansas scored two first inning runs without the aid of a hit. Gotay Mills ledoff with a walk, stole second and took third when the throw wound up in the outfield. Peaches Gutierrez then walked and Jeff Doyle's fly plated a run. Gutierrez took second on a wild pitch and when Shepston's desperation throw to second went into center, Gutierrez came all the way home...and the show, Anything Goes, was on, until Nastu arrived.

Jury exonerates Tony Mason

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Tears of joy welled in Tony Mason's eyes as a clerk read a Superior Court jury's innocent verdict on each of 15 criminal counts against the former University of Arizona football coach.

The panel of seven woman and five men deliberated almost 6½ hours Wednesday and Thursday before exonerating the 53-year-old Mason, who had been accused of collecting reimbursement from the university for seven false airline ticket receipts.

Mason had faced charges of theft, conspiracy, tampering with a public record, willful concealment and presenting a false claim.

Dare W. Griffith, the jury foreman, said most members voted not to convict Mason initially. He said they only voted once on 12 of the counts. Of the other three, he said, "We went over them one by one and found there was reasonable doubt in each case." Another juror, Victor Velo, concurred.

After the verdict, prosecutor Lindsay E. Brew told several jurors: "I don't blame you. I didn't envy your position. You all did a good job."

Mason, his wife and attorneys shook hands, hugged and embraced the jurors; then Mason walked over and shook Brew's hand, but was too filled with emotion to speak. A few seconds later, he was mobbed by well-wishers.

Later, a philosophical Brew said in his office, "My job is a prosecutor. I never second-guess jurors."

He refused comment on whether Mason's six former assistants, who also were indicted, will be tried.

Mason's attorney, William T. Healy, said the victory had been costly to his client. "It ruined his career, his job, his life and his future. That's a tragedy that will never be undone."

Mason, who said he had "waited a long time to get under oath," said he considered that the most important part of the trial, which lasted 18 days over five weeks.

"The most important aspect of the trial was my client, Mr. Mason," he said. Mason, he added, "hasn't talked in a year and a half, and he got his chance."

He said Americans typically favor an underdog, and "I think they made him out" to be one.

Mason had faced a possible 30-years prison sentence had he been convicted on all counts.

The attorney, who had held his head in his hands atop the defense table as the verdicts were read, said college football should not go through "house-cleaning in the courts," but rather in administrative offices. Healy had argued during his summation that college football was "on trial," and that because of its pressures, Mason had succumbed to "human misjudgments."

Talks fail again as Washington sounds people's voice

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan Administration, billing itself as the voice of the American people, has stepped into the major league baseball strike following another day of fruitless negotiations in which each side rejected propoals made by the other.

Shortly after the club owners rejected Thursday night a union proposal that the entire issue be turned over to final and binding arbitration, U.S. Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan invited both sides to his Washington office today.

"I FIRMLY believe Mr. (Marvin) Miller and Mr. (Ray) Grebey will be in Washington at my office tomorrow (Friday) and we'll take it from there," Donovan said in an interview with Enterprise Radio late Thursday night. He called the walkout "a strike against the American people, from one point of view," and said he would "try to be the voice of the American people I think has been missing at that (bargaining) table."

Frustrated after five weeks on strike, the players association offered the arbitration route as a possible solution to the walkout, now in its 36th day. The strike, which began June 12, has canceled 419 games, nearly 20 percent of the full major league season, and forced postponement of the All-Star Game last Tuesday night. But the Player Relations Committee, bargaining arm of the owners, turned down the arbitration idea.

Donovan said that Miller, head of the players' union, and Grebey, chief negotiator for the 26 major league club owners, "will be at a meeting in my office separately for conversation" and added that he was "still optimistic that over the weekend they'll be able to get this thing back on the table."

"I think Washington would provide a better atmosphere for the talks," said federal mediator Kenneth Moffett. "Several things can happen in Washington. For one thing, we can get away from this press business. I don't like the two sides reading all the papers across the country before showing up to bargain each day. We've been negotiating in a fishbowl."

DONOVAN NOTED that the government cannot invoke any laws to bring about a settlement because the strike does not affect the nation's health and welfare. But he said, "The power of persuasion of this office I hope will get this thing back on track."

Donovan emphasized that he will discuss with Miller and Grebey "exactly what has to be done," adding, "Hopefully, we can get the entire bargaining group back at the table on Monday."

He went on to say that the strike "could be settled in a matter of hours" and said if it isn't, "then the height of obstinancy and stubbornness will have been reached in collective bargaining."

Both sides made proposals Thursday which they said were aimed at ending the walkout. But each side rejected the other's ideas and the bargainers seemed at a dead end.

There had seemed to be movement on significant issues with the owners shuffling numbers in their proposal on free agent compensation and the players accepting levels of compensation for two-thirds of eligible ranking free agents.

"You reach a point," said Miller, "when you get a feeling nothing will happen to solve the issue through negotiations. The events of yesterday (Wednesday) and today (Thursday) were convincing that this will not be resolved through negotiation."

So Miller suggested the arbitration route, something both sides had previously rejected. But Grebey wouldn't buy the proposal, calling it "a public relations ploy."

In a formal statement issued by the PRC after Miller's proposal, the owners said that arbitration "is not an acceptable alternative on the issue of compensation." And Grebey noted that Miller's arbitration proposal came about one hour after talks had adjourned.

THE LONG, frustrating day began with a new proposal submitted by management to the players. It reduced to eight the number of ranking free agents who would require professional player compensation in 1981. That number would increase to 10 next year and to a maximum of 14 in 1983. The owners also increased to 23, 25 and 27 the numbers of players who could be protected by clubs required to supply professional players as compensation for signing free agents.

But tied to the proposal was the troublesome question of service time. The owners said no service time would be credited for the period of the strike. The union has insisted throughout the walkout, which began June 12, that there could be no settlement without fuecause benefits such as eligibility for free agency and salary arbitration are computed by credited service time. A player must have six years of credited service to file for free agency and two years of service to qualify for salary arbitration.

"Our position is the contract is clear," Miller said of the issue. "The Basic Agreement says you get credited service every day you are on an active roster, disabled list or suspended. Even a player suspended for cause and found guilty by the arbitrator gets credit for service time. They (the owners) know that. There is no industry where you subtract service time (in a strike). It's never happened."

Miller said the owners also asked that as part of the deal the union drop its charges of unfair labor practice, which were tried by the National Labor Relations Board before an administrative law judge last week.

The players association rejected the owners' package, which Miller said still called for direct compensation and was not substantially different than the proposal the owners have had on the table.

Hugh Looney, left, gives partner Joe Gieb some putting instructions as they eye a repeat title in Midland Country Club's annaul High-Low golf tournament set for July 25-26. Entry deadline for the tournament is 6 p.m. Thursday at the MCC pro shop. Handicap players 13 through 16 may play either high or low.

Rod Curl is on a mild mini-streak

COAL VALLEY, Ill. (AP) — Rod Curl says he's in one of his mini-streaks, nothing that compares to those for golf's big games, but still good enough to lead the Quad Cities Open.

"I played good at Milwaukee last week. There's a carryover here. I feel I shouldn't be over par, especially on this course," said the 35-year-old veteran, a Wintu Indian.

"Tom Kite, Ray Floyd, Tom Watson — their streaks last forever, 10-15 years. My best one has been good for four-five weeks," said Curl, a one-stroke leader going into the second round of this $200,000 tourpament today.

Curl, tied for 17th at Milwaukee last week, opened with a 5-under-65 and said, "It was a very unusual round. I turned a regular round into a good round."

Curl, whose only victory in 13 Tour seasons came in the Colonial seven years ago, did not have a single four in his first nine holes, posting seven threes.

"That's the most threes I ever had in one nine," said Curl, who used the performance for a front side of 31, 4 under for the Oakwood Country Club course.

Curl's successive birdies at 14 and 15 first moved him into a five-way tie for the lead and then the sole leadership over this mediocre field, shy of the sport's big names who are competing in the British Open or taking the week off.

And he promised more of the same today, saying, "I don't see why I should be over par. I feel good. I'm healthy. I'm working hard."

Some obscure names were chasing Curl.

In second place, 4-under-par 66, were one-time victor Jack Renner, non-winner Sammy Rachels and slumping veteran Allen Miller.

Next, all at 67, were former tennis pro Frank Conner, Vance Heafner, Clarence Rose, Mike Preston and Joe Hager. None has a Tour victory to his credit.

In a logjam at 68 were defending champion Scott Hoch, millionaire Miller Barber and former U.S. Open champion Andy North.

Curtis Strange, No.10 on the current money list and the only big money winner in this competition, was in threatening position at 69. Chi Chi Rodriguez, the Milwaukee runnerup to Jay Haas last week, settled for a 72. At stake is a first prize of $36,000.

The tournament is not being televised nationally this weekend.

Lions defeat Argonauts behind Paopao, Gray

TORONTO (AP) — Quarterback Joe Paopao and wide receiver Tyron Gray combined on touchdowns covering 91 and 62 yards as the British Columbia Lions rallied for 32-29 Canadian Football League victory over the Toronto Argonauts Thursday night.

Lions' defensive back Ken Hinton returned an errant Condredge Holloway pass 41 yards for another score, while Larry Key completed a 16-yard pass play from Paopao for another score.

Kicker Lui Passaglia converted the four scores and added a single and a field goal as the Lions rebounded from a 14-point halftime deficit with 18 unanswered points in the third quarter.

Tom Sneva leads Michigan 500 field

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Tom Sneva has always been fast.

He holds track qualifying records at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and Michigan International Speedway and has started from the pole in numerous races.

But, even though the 33-year-old driver from Spokane, Wash., has twice been national champion, he has won only four races in an Indy car career that now spans 11 seasons.

Since the former junior high school principal also is outspoken, opinionated and sometimes controversial, it is with some glee that critics and some fellow drivers shrug off his accomplishments.

He is known mostly as "a great qualifier."

"Yeah, I guess that's the way a lot of people think of me. I think I'm a great race driver, too, but I haven't convinced people of that, yet."

Those words were uttered with only a bit of tongue in cheek. Sneva knows he's good and he'd just love to prove it to everyone else with a few victories in races like Sunday's $500,000 Norton Michigan 500.

Sneva, driving a British-made March, powered by a Cosworth engine, outsped the big names of the sport again Thursday to gain the pole position for the inaugural 500-miler on Michigan International Speedway's two-mile, high-banked oval.

His 201.359 mph pole-winning lap was well below his track record of 211.392 mph, set in 1978 during the pre-manifold pressure restriction days. But it was quick enough to put him at the front of the 33-car field, although 19 other cars qualified Thursday at more than 190 mph.

Three-time Indy 500 winner Johnny Rutherford put his Chaparral, owned by Midland's Jim Hall, in the middle of the front row with a fast lap of 200.892, and Rick Mears placed his Penske PC-9B on the outside of the first row at 200.183.

"The March is a heckuva car," said Sneva, who is driving this year for the new team put together by master mecnanic George Bignotti, six-time Indy winner, and Chicago businessman Dan Cotter.

"We really don't have any idea if we've even scratched the surface with it," the driver added. "We've had only six or seven hot laps in practice here, and this is only the third race for this car.

"Our team just doesn't have the budget right now to run the kind of testing program some of these other teams do. That puts us behind."

Blister may slow Coe

GATESHEAD, England (AP) — Sebastian Coe defies a painful foot blister to run for Britain in a two-day international track and field meet against the Soviet Union today and Saturday.

Coe, who rarely misses a chance to turn out for the national team, was scheduled to run the 800 meters today. Steve Ovett and Alan Wells, two other Olympic champions, declared themselves unavailable for the meet.

The 24-year-old Coe has had a marvelous season, breaking the 800-meter and 1,000-meter world records, but is expected to run at a more sedate pace against the Soviets.

Coe, who teams up with Gary Cook in the 800, was expected to get the toughest resistance from Vladimir Malozemlin, who has a best time of 1 minute, 46.8 seconds for the distance.

Both teams are far from full strength. Twelve of the original British lineup withdrew for various reasons, while a number of the top Soviet athletes are to compete at the World University Games next week in Bucharest, Romania.

Spinks goes for title Saturday

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Michael Spinks is the favorite in his World Boxing Association light-heavyweight title bout against champion Eddie Mustafa Muhammad Saturday, but he says that doesn't mean a thing once they get into the ring.

"I respet any man tha has two fists that would hit me," Spinks said. "I'm not going to stand in front of him and let him ht me." Spinks, rated the No. 1 contender by both the WBA and the Worlu Boxing Council, finally gets his chance to step out of his older brother's shadow in the scheduled 15-round bout at the Imperial Palace on the Strip. The fight will be televised by ABC.

"It's the biggest fight of my career," he said. "I don't know if it's the toughest opponent, but it's the biggest fight. I'm going for all the marbles."

Spinks' brother, former heavyweight champion Leon Spinks, will be at ringside, the younger Spinks said. He said his controversial sibling's well-known brushes with the law had not distracted him.

"Not one bit," he said. "He's not coming here and driving his Cadillac through my training session."

Michael, now 16-0 with 11 knockouts, was in his seventh professional fight on the undercard at the Las Vegas Hilton in February 1978 when Leon scored a split decision over Muhammad Ali to win the undisputed heavyweight championship. Michael's 10-round decision over Mike Bethea went virtually unnoticed in the hubbub over one of the great upsets in boxing history.

Following his brother's victory — and the controversy surrounding the WBC's decision to strip him of its half of the title — Michael didn't fight for 10 months.

"I just had to take a layoff," he said. "There wasn't any reason for both of us fighting. There was too much going on. I wouldn't have been comfortable."

The younger Spinks has been in his brother's shadow since 1976, when both won gold medals at the Montreal Olympics. Leon scored two knockouts and two unanimous decisions to win his gold, while Michael had an easier route, including a decision and a third-round knockout.

Players seeking binding arbitration

NEW YORK (AP) — Binding arbitration is the only route left to a settlement of the major league baseball strike, according to National League player representative Bob Boone.

"At this point in time, I see it as the only viable alternative to use to reach a settlement," Boone said Thursday night. "We've exhausted every other avenue to settle the strike."

Boone made his comment before Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan announced he had called the chief negotiators to his office Friday for meetings.

Boone, the Philadelphia Phillies' catcher, spoke after negotiations in the five-week-old strike broke off and the Major League Players Association asked for the case to be submitted to an independent arbitrator.

However, management promptly rejected the idea, drawing this reaction from Mark Belanger, the Baltimore Orioles' player representative:

"What is the alternative as far as they're concerned? We feel that they (the owners) are not negotiating in good faith. We feel without this (arbitration) process that the 1981 season could be in jeopardy. We always have been trying to reach an agreement. We felt it could not be reached in collective bargaining the way they have stonewalled negotiations. We think this (arbitration) is appropriate."

Raymond Grebey, director of the Player Relations Committee and the club owners' chief bargainer, has repeatedly turned down proposals by federal mediator Kenneth Moffett to go to arbitration. And Doug DeCinces, the American League player rep, said the time may have come for Grebey to be overruled.

"It's up to the 26 owners to decide that, if they want to play baseball, they might have to not listen to Ray Grebey," said DeCinces, the Baltimore Orioles' third baseman. "It will show their true colors, won't it?"

DeCinces acknowledged that the players were taking a chance in asking a third party to decide their fate, but added that they had no choice.

"When you reach the point where no matter what you do won't work, you have to crapshoot a little bit," he said. "You're talking about the whole season."

There had been optimism earlier Thursday that a settlement of the strike might be near. Donovan had said he was encouraged after meeting with the two sides Wednesday, and the owners were to present a new package on the issue of free-agent compensation.

But when Grebey also announced that the plan would strip the players of credit for major-league service for at least the first 35 days of the strike, the optimism cooled.

"It's a public relations game," said Boone. "We were held for seven hours yesterday (Wednesday), and we got nothing."

Western Company faces Stars today

The Western Company Astros, who have won the National League Hi-Junior title four years in a row, will meet the NL All-Stars today at 8 p.m. at Simon Field in Hogan Park.

The Astros won the Hi-Junior title for the fourth consecutive time Tuesday by defeating Commercial Bank, 7-5.

The Astros first won the Hi-Junior title in 1978 under head coach Tom Ruiz, who has been with the Astros all four years. Ruiz has won five straight MJBA championships. He was an assistant in 1977. Jerry Navarette, assistant coach, has been with the Astros four years, two as a player.

The Astros ended the season with a 9-3 record after a 2-3 start. Over the four years the Astros have compiled a 42-14 record under Ruiz.

North Central nips Mid City nine, 2-1

BIG SPRING — Midland North Central defeated Midland Mid City, 2-1, here Wednesday night in a first round game of the District 4 double elimination Little League tournament.

All three runs in the game came in the first inning. Mid City struck first when Scott Mowles reached safely on a two base error and scored on Jeff Burchard's single. North Central got the winning runs in the bottom of the frame when Lance Wood singled and scored on Jason Logi's triple for one run and Logi came in with the winner on a single by Eric Boyt.

Logi was the winner and had nine strikeouts in the game, giving up no earned runs, while Mowles was charged with the loss despite 10 strikeouts to his credit.

North Central does not play again until Monday at 8 p.m. when they meet the winner of the Midland Tower-Big Spring Texas game. Mid City will play a loser's bracket game today.

OVC to use tie-breaker system

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Football teams in the Ohio Valley Conference will use a tie-breaker in upcoming regular season games, the conference commissioner has announced.

James Delany said Thursday that the league athletic directors recently approved the change by a 7-2 vote, with Austin Peay State University and Western Kentucky University dissenting.

Delany said the tie-breaker is an extension of a rule that has been in effect for several years in National Collegiate Athletic Association post-season playoff games.

The tie-breaker will only be used if needed in games involving two league teams, Delany said. The league's first game is Sept. 5, when Middle Tennessee State University visits the University of Akron.

If a regulation game ends in a tie, a coin toss will determine which squad gets possession of the ball in overtime. The winner of the coin toss may take possession on the opponent's 15-yard line or play defense.

After the team with the ball scores or loses possession on downs, the other team would place the ball on the 15 and try to score. The procedure would continue until a winner was determined. A fumble recovered by the defense would be a dead ball.

Delany explained that the change is being made to avoid the possibility that there would be a tie for the league championship that would require a coin flip to determine the OVC representative for post-season play.

"We don't want our NCAA representative to be determined off the field, but on the field," Delany said.

Baseball may not lose its antitrust exemption

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chairman Peter Rodino of the House Judiciary Committee sees little chance for legislative action to strip baseball of its antitrust exemption before next year, if then.

Rodino, a New Jersey Democrat who gained national fame for his handling of the Watergate hearings, said the subcommittee on monopoly and commercial law, which he also chairs, will need to gather more information on the impact of antitrust laws on professional sports before making a decision.

The subcommittee concluded three days of hearings Thursday on the current applications of federal antitrust laws to pro sports, such as the purchase and sale of franchises, territorial restrictions, movement of franchises, player entry and mobility and broadcasting.

The panel also is studying specific legislation to eliminate baseball's antitrust exemption, limit the movement of franchises, and to broaden the distribution of television revenues among the teams of a league.

"I think the testimony has disclosed that this committee ought to act," said Rodino. "How is the question."

He said future hearings will be scheduled, probably after the August Congressional recess.

"It is important to schedule other hearings to get the full range of testimony," he said.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn is expected to be called, but not until after the 36-day-old baseball strike is resolved.

"We have not asked the commissioner to appear because of our reluctance to get into the strike," said Rodino.

He said he did not know whether the committee would take any action in the area of pro sports, despite the overwhelming weight of testimony calling for the stripping baseball of its antitrust exemption and putting it on the same level as other sports and businesses.

"The reason for all this (the hearings) is to decide whether we should act," he said.

State judge suspends Legion team for summer

GRETNA, La. (AP) — A state judge has upheld the suspension of an American Legion baseball team and its coach for the rest of the season for an attack on an umpire.

However, District Judge Thomas C. Wicker's ruling Thursday revised a Legion commissioner's indefinite suspension of Coach Wayne Silva. Wicker said Silva could return to coaching next season.

The Metairie Legion Post 350 and Silva were involved in a bench-clearing melee last Sunday when umpire Clem Froeba, 43, was confronted by a black player and was attacked by several Post 350 players.

Froeba testified Thursday that the trouble started in the sixth inning of the game with Shamrock — which won 3-1 — when he called a Post 350 player out on a third base play.

"Wayne Silva disagreed with my call," Froeba said. "He said it was a lousy call and he charged me. He was a couple of inches from my face and he brushed me."

He said he told Silva to return to the dugout, but Silva continued shouting.

7-8 Bell is learning basketball

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At 7-foot-8, George Bell has decided that perhaps he should make the most of his height. So he's begun learning the fine points of basketball.

Bell was 6-7 in high school, and a growth hormone surplus kept his physical development in progress for several more years. Bell said he has now stopped growing.

"I really didn't know what basketball was," he said. "I was told by everybody to play basketball or football, or something."

Bell, 24, is now looking for a basketball investor.

At the moment, he's a novelty in the Southern California Summer Pro League. He's the fourth center on the Cleveland Cavaliers' summer team. He admits he'd like to play for Cleveland one day.

"I know I need time to develop," said Bell, a native of Portsmouth, Va. "This is the first team I've been associated with, and I feel it's been a good experience. The players certainly have been helpful to me."

A Cavaliers' assistant coach, Gerald Oliver, is in charge of the summer team and the Bell project. Cavaliers' owner Ted Stepien and player personnel director Bill Musselman are paying close attention to Bell's progress.

"George was at the league tryout camp, and he and his agent had been talking with Ted Stepien and Bill Musselman," Oliver said. "We just felt he deserved an opportunity to get some work."

An operation to correct foot problems was performed recently, and Oliver said Bell is learning footwork and movement on the court.

Notice From Midland County Commissioners' Court

Reference: Setting of 1981 Tax Rate

The increase of 41 percent as shown opposite is misleading. The computation of the effective tax rate as per Article 7244c, V.T.C.S. resulted in an effective tax rate of $.27 per $100 assessed value. Allowing a 3% increase without a public hearing, the maximum rate is $.28 per $100 assessed value.

Changes in the tax statutes require that all property be taxed on 100% of value in 1981. In 1980, the county tax rate was $.95 per $100 on 32% of assessed value.

The percent of increase in the official notice (opposite) includes additional values added to the tax rolls during 1981.

The budget process has not been concluded at the time this official notice was required to be published by statute.

The rate, as published in the official notice, is believed to be well in excess of the final rate to be set when the budget is concluded and adopted.

Your individual property taxes are expected to increase only slightly, if any.

NOTICE OF TAX INCREASE

The Midland County Commissioners' Court proposes to increase your property taxes by 41 per cent.

A public hearing on the increase will be held on July 27, 1981 at 5:00 p.m. in the Commissioners' Courtroom on the Second Floor of the Midland County Courthouse, Midland, Texas.

The Midland County Commissioners have considered the proposal and voted in a meeting of the Commissioners' Court as follows:

FOR the proposal:

William B. Ahders, County Judge, Chairman
Durward Wright, Commissioner, Precinct 1
DeWayne Davis, Commissioner, Precinct 3
Winfree Brown, Commissioner, Precinct 4

AGAINST the proposal:

In what could be mistaken as a tryout for Dallas Cowboys cheerleaders rather than the football team, a group of Cowboy rookies show some fancy footwork in agility drill at the Pokes' summer camp at Thousand Oaks, Calif. Veterans report to camp this weekend.

Army's Hall wants to be Cowboy

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Army 1st Lt. Leamon Hall dreams of commanding a small squad of seasoned veterans locked in combat with a wily and determined enemy.

But unlike some West Point graduates, this field artillery officer longs to do battle as a weekend warrior.

For the second summer in a row Hall has exchanged his olive drab uniform for the silver and blue of the Dallas Cowboys — spending his two-week leave enduring the rigors of two-a-day drills at the team's training camp.

"I would play professional football for lieutenant's pay," the former West Point quarterback said Thursday with a military fervor.

And for the time being, Army pay may have to be enough because Hall is not scheduled for discharge until the fall of 1983 — five years after his final season at West Point.

ALTHOUGH THE odds are enormous, Hall remains undaunted in his pursuit of a future place as a quarterback on the Cowboy roster.

"People said that I'd never been able to play college football because I was too tall and skinny," said Hall. "Now people are saying that there's no way that I'll ever be able to play (in the NFL). Well, Roger Staubach set the precedent and that could make it easier for me."

Staubach, a graduate of the Naval Academy, rose to become one of the premier quarterbacks in the NFL after his four-year stint in the Navy. But he had at least two assets Hall lacks, the Heisman Trophy to bolster confidence by coaches and the speed to instill misgiving in defenders.

Hall, who signed a free agent contract with Dallas last season, says he has got only a little encouragement from Cowboy Coach Tom Landry.

"He didn't paint me any pie-in-the-sky picture ... but he did outline some things that could happen if I stayed with it. Everything was preceded by an 'if.' Which, to my way of thinking, is both realisic and far.

"And if the time comes when the Cowboys decide they don't need my services, maybe there will be some other team in the league that does," said Hall.

In the mean time, Hall spends two weeks a summer working out with the Cowboys and weekends in the fall directing the attack of the Fort Benning Doughboys.

"PLAYING FOR the base team is OK, in that it at least gives me the feeling of game-type conditions, but really, it's hard to make much progress in that caliber of play," said Hall.

"Out here (at training camp), though, working as a professional, going through the learning process for a couple of weeks, makes me feel like I'm getting somewhere. People back home don't seem to really understand it, but for the past couple of years I've worked daily just to prepare for the time I can spend here," he said.

"One day I expect the time will come when they (the coaches) will have to look at things and make a choice between a rookie straight out of college or a guy who has a few more years under his belt.

"I have 110 percent confidence in my ability," said Hall. "To me, there's no doubt I can play somewhere in the NFL. I'd like to think that one day it will be for the Cowboys."

Tom Landry is owner's dream

By Melvin Durslag
Hearst Feature Service

Thousand Oaks, Calif. -- You sit here a spell at training camp with Tom Landry, coach of the Dallas Cowboys, and the thought suddenly occurs that the guy who owns the team has to be the luckiest cuss in football.

Mind you, he has a coach who now has produced a winner for 15 straight years. He has gone to 14 playoffs and five Super Bowls.

And he comes to camp unobtrusively with his Bible and doesn't hold out for a whopping raise, turning the case over to his agent, lawyer and accountant.

He doesn't ask for stock options and doesn't even threaten to jump to another club.

MOST GUYS with Landry's record wouldn't let the owner sleep. They would have a limousine, a driver, a social secretary and a personal massage artist.

But Landry comes to camp today as he did 22 years ago, somewhat wiser, more self-assured and convinced he can continue to pull the string as he has during his magnificent run as commander of the Texas team.

Twenty-two years at the same post isn't common in football, so we ask Tom idly if he was running scared when he first took the job in 1960, moving to Dallas from an assistant's position in New York.

"I may be more scared today," he jokes. "When I took the job in Dallas in 1960, I wasn't worried in the least, mainly because I had no intention to stay in football. I had earned a business degree at Texas and I had just added a degree in industrial engineering at Houston. I felt it was a matter of time until I found a good job and went into it. Coaching the Cowboys was just a stop-gap proposition for me."

When Tom went 0-11-1 in his first season with the team, the job began to look more stop-gap than ever.

But, gradually, Landry was to rally his forces, lifting them from catastrophic depths to where they actually played .500 in 1965.

From that point forward, they were never again to dispense a losing season.

AND DO you know what Tom does today? He credits the owner, who is never around.

"The secret to winning is constant management," Landry explains, "and that quality comes down from the owner. Our organization has been steady from the beginning. Many of us have grown with it and I think this has paid off. When your organization is constant in football, confidence spreads throughout the whole picture."

Tom didn't mention those constant organizations which have been stupid, spreading stupidity throughout the whole picture. But, plainly, this wouldn't be the case at Dallas, which offers some of the smartest management in football.

Landry proved his coaching skill when he came to a critical point at the start of last season. His quarterback of long standing, Roger Staubach, retired. The dirty rat wanted to get out of football while he still had all his marbles.

Faced with other retirements and with injuries and made to start anew with a fresh quarterback, Danny White, Landry came home with 12-and-4 and made his customary appearance in the playoffs, lasting all the way to the final.

If Dallas suffered a deficiency last year, Landry is convinced it wasn't at quarterback, but on defense.

"Defense is what wins in football," says Tom. "We aren't yet solid enough in that department. We blew far too many big plays last year."

Traditionally a coach who opens his camp among the earliest in the NFL, Landry always has embraced the feeling that the team that gets away fast at the start of the season is the one that is going to run best. Dallas has now won its opener for 16 years in a row.

TO FACILITATE his science, Tom arranged a program this year that would summon rookies on July 12, veteran quarterbacks, centers, receivers and ball carriers July 19 and the rest of the squad July 23.

"We allow an extra four days for those people who handle the ball," he says. "We want those in the skill positions to get the feel of it."

He acknowledges that the advantage of this programming may lie mostly in his mind, but that's an important place for a coach, who essentially is a salesman compelled to believe in what he sells."

"If you believe it, you can sell it," says Tom, who, we insist, still comes to terms too readily each year with an owner he has enriched in so many ways.

Do you know something about this Landry fellow? He's never even threatened to go to Canada.

Mel Hall picked as Texas All-Star

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Don "Ducky" LeJohn of San Antonio has been selected manager of the 1981 Texas League All-Star Team after being judged the league's best in balloting by players, managers and coaches.

Second baseman Steve Sax of San Antonio was the top vote-getter. Sax is batting .369 and leads the league in hitting.

Midland's only selection to the All-Star team was outfielder Mel Hall, who owns a .313 average with 15 homers and 54 RBI.

Other selections and their respective positions are:

First base — Stan Davis, El Paso.

Third base — Tom O'Malley, Shreveport

Shortstop — Willie Lozado, El Paso.

Catchers — Ron Tingley, Amarillo; Mike Fitzgerald, Jackson.

Outfielders — Gotay Mills, Arkansas; Dale Holman, San Antonio; Mark Bradley, San Antonio; Mel Hall, Midland.

Designated hitter — John Evans, El Paso;

Utility — Marty Scott, Tulsa; and David Sax, San Antonio.

Pitchers — Rich Rodas, San Antonio; Alan Fowlkes, Shreveport; Rick Ownbey, Jackson; John Femprini, Jackson; Mark Dempsey, Shreveport; Tom Niedenfuer, San Antonio.

This year's All-Star bame will be held Wednesday in Amarillo. The All-Stars will play the host club Tulsa Drillers at Robert B. Sutton Stadium.

Tom Newton faces another challenge

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Five years ago it was his status as a free agent. Last year it was Ralph Clayton. This year it's Freeman McNeil and Marion Barber.

Each season people find another reason to dismiss running back Tom Newton.

"Don't write me off yet," Newton said Thursday at the New York Jets' training camp. "I'm tired of being written off every season. I'm tired of hearing that I'm over the hill or finished or whatever. Don't write me off yet ... Back in 1977, I didn't even have an idea I'd make the team. Now I'm more confident — but I know that as soon as somebody relaxes, the bubble can burst."

The Jets' bubble burst last year — a 1-12 after preseason predictions that they'd be a playoff team and perhaps a National Football League division champion — as one running back after another went down with injuries.

Among them was Clayton, a second-round draft choice. By the time the end of the season approached, Newton was a starter. And he insists: "I'm coming to camp as a starter."

But with Clayton back, plus top two draft choices McNeil and Barber and veterans Clark Gaines, Kevin Long, Bruce Harper, Scott Dierking and others among the 101 players on the roster as camp opened Thursday, Newton faces the same old challenge all over again.

"The Jets drafted running backs on the first two rounds. It's no different from usual because they always seem to draft running backs," Newton said. "But they're not going to draft them and get rid of them. They're committed to their draft picks. They've invested a lot. Sometimes I look around at the salaries and get disturbed. I get kind of mad because I think I've proved myself. But it seems every year I have to prove myself again."

One of those salaries that might be bothering Newton is McNeil's. The Jets' top draft choice from UCLA won't talk money, but it's likely his contract isn't that much different from last year's No. 1 pick, wide receiver Johnny "Lam" Jones, who has a six-year package worth something in the neighborhood of $2 million.

Jodie Mudd stays alive

HOUSTON (AP) — Defending champion Jodie Mudd, who survived two scares to reach today's quarterfinals of the U.S. Amateur Public Links golf championships, had to work on his powers of positive thinking to keep alive his hopes for back-to-back titles.

Mudd, Louisville, Ky. put on a late charge in his first match Thursday to defeat Mark Saatzer, Saint Cloud, Minn. 1-up in 19 holes following a pressure birdie putt on the 18th hole to tie the match.

Mudd then promptly fell three strokes behind after 10 holes in his second match against Doug Hixon, Crooked River, Ore. This time, Mudd birdied three of four holes and wrapped it up on No. 17 for a 2-and-1 victory.

"I kept telling myself not to worry," Mudd said. "I told myself that when I was two down. On the next hole I went three down. But I just hung in there."

Midlanders advance in national net tourney

DENVER — Midland's Pete Barizon and Dennis Brittain advanced to the quarterfinals of the USTA National Men's 40 Hard Court tennis championships here Thursday.

The Tall City duo drew a first round bye and then defeated Ben Varn and Barry Hughes of San Antonio in the second round, 6-4, 6-4. They were scheduled to meet Gordon Smith and Dick Wright of San Francisco in the quarterfinals today.

McNally, Messersmith changed it all

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Dave McNally sells cans with his brother, Jim, in Billings, Mont. Andy Messersmith invests in real estate and works around his new house in the northern California city of Santa Cruz.

In one sense, both men are light years away from baseball's war between owners and players. Yet in another, both are very close to it because they helped bring it about 5½ years ago.

"I knew it (free agency) was going to be a problem," Messersmith said in a recent phone interview. "I think the owners made a few faux pas early on. They didn't control themselves very well with the players' salaries. Now, they may be seeing the error of their ways. They may be looking back and seeing they should have handled it a little differently, But hindsight is always 20-20."

"I never had any idea it would come to this," McNally said. "I'm very sorry to see it happen because no one wins a strike. But I can understand how the players feel. If I were still playing, I'd be right there with them."

MESSERSMITH and McNally are pioneers. They created their spots in history by challenging and beating baseball's reserve clause. They became the first free agents to play out their options and earn the right to sell their services to the highest bidder.

Arbitrator Peter Seitz, who also declared Jim "Catfish" Hunter a free agent in December 1974, because of breach of contract by Oakland owner Charlie Finley, ruled on the Messersmith-McNally case on Dec. 23, 1975. He said the reserve clause was illegal, thus eliminating teams' "lifetime ownership" of their players. Baseball hasn't been the same since.

"I sure didn't do it for any recognition," Messersmith said. "I just got angry with the way I was treated and the way I saw other players treated. The owners had total control over us."

MESSERSMITH, a right-handed pitcher, was a 20-game winner with California before he was traded to Los Angeles in 1973. He went 14-10, 20-6 and 19-14 in his first three seasons with the Dodgers and asked for a no-trade clause in his contract. When the team refused, he decided to play out his option and take his chances.

"I thought I'd check it out and see what a contract really was."

Seitz ruled against the reserve clause, and Messersmith signed a multiyear deal with Atlanta as the start of the 1976 season for an estimated $1.75 million. Owner Ted Turner's generosity astounded him.

"Of course it was a surprise," he said. "That's still a lot of money. It sure was an interesting experience."

McNally never got the pot of gold Messersmith did. After building a 181-113 record in 12 seasons at Baltimore, he was traded to Montreal in December, 1974. He retired in June of '75 with a 3-6 record and never threw another pitch, but he still pressed for free agency.

"I had enough," McNally said. "My arm wasn't feeling good the last couple of years and I was ready to leave. I just did it to challenge the reserve clause.

Saints holdout found by stork

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Defensive end Frank Warren, one of three New Orleans Saints rookie holdouts, said he was waiting for the stork.

Warren, from Auburn, has a 5-year-old adopted son and, on Tuesday, his wife gave birth to a daughter, Ebony Shante Warren.

"I was ready to sign last week," Warren said Thursday.

He was one of three Saints holdouts. Second round draft choice Russell Gary, a defensive back, and another third round choice, tight end Hoby Brenner of Southern Cal, are still unsigned.

Flying a good hobby, aid to business people

Learning to fly an airplane can be an exciting hobby as well as an invaluable aid to a busy business person.

Chaparral Aviation Inc. located at the Midland-Odessa Regional Air Terminal is fully qualified to give lessons and also has an air taxi service.

Chaparral Aviation is a member of the Beech Aero Club, which means they have professional flight instructors, primary and advanced flight training programs and a fleet of Beechcraft planes.

The Beech Aero Club is sponsered by Beech Aircraft and anyone who joins the local chapter automatically becomes a national member. Beech Aero members also have full privileges at any Aero Club in the U.S. Other benefits of the club membership are reduced rates on aircraft rental and instruction, use of club facilities, including a training room with films, a lounge with a game table, television, and video disc player.

Once a year Beech sponsers a round-up at a resort area for members and they handle much of the expense involved. At the round-up new products are shown, flight rallies are held and future plans discussed. This year's round-up will be held at the Olympia Resort in Oconomowoc, Wisconsin.

Chaparral Aviation has qualified instructors for anyone interested in flight instruction and 4 planes are used for instructional purposes. The Beechcraft Skipper is the primary trainer, the Sundowner is used for instrument training, the Sierra is for more complex flight training, and the Duchess is a multi-engine trainer.

Chaparral Aviation offers an air-taxi service for persons interested in chartering an aircraft. Airline-rated pilots will take you to your destination in a comfortable 4-passenger pressurized twin aircraft.

For all your flight needs call Don Gatlin, manager of the flight department at Chaparral Aviation at (915) 563-2033.

No-smoking airline begins service

DALLAS (AP) — Passengers for the maiden flight of Muse Air Corp. were treated to champagne bubbling from a fountain and classical music.

But no smoke got in their eyes, said Lamar Muse, who banned smoking on all his airline's flights.

As they boarded the 7:20 p.m. sold-out flight, passengers were reminded to "extinguish all smoking materials" by stewardesses.

"I hope no one had a nicotine fit," said Muse at the end of Wednesday's 50-minute flight. The former president of Southwest Airlines, he was ousted in a power struggle in 1978.

"Southwest made me a helluva lot of money and I'm grateful to them for that, no matter what else happened," Muse said. "Now we have to beat them, and it won't be easy."

He's starting small, but with a good base.

Muse Air sold $37.5 million worth of common stock last March, and got a $57 million line of credit with banks in Dallas and Chicago.

And McDonnell Douglas has volunteered $17 million in credit to help him buy four new Super 80s.

Muse says his funds, including $9 million in working capital, can last 17 weeks even if he doesn't make a penny. The company's 28 weekday flights and 34 weekend runs would have to be an average of 49 percent full to break even.

"We know there will be some lonely planes at first," he said. "That will give our crews plenty of time to learn how to provide service."

Muse Air has a 20-minute turnaround time set for its shuttling planes, and some industry watchers wonder whether the crews can pull it off.

"They probably will fall behind at first," he said. "We hope they will get better as they go along."

A Muse Air ticket to Houston is $40 regular, $25 for early morning and late evening — the same price charged by Southwest Airlines.

"I hope to hell that they don't cut the fares on me," Muse said. "Southwest will be tougher than horseradisn to compete with."

Carrasco's Spanish Inn serves variety of dishes

Aida, Melinda, Celina, and Rudy Carrasco would like to invite you to the friendly atmosphere at Carrasco's Spanish Inn located at 1030-A Andrews Highway, Western Park Plaza. Reservations and take-out orders may be made by calling 697-0663.

Looking for some place new to eat?

Rudy and Aida Carrasco would like to invite you to try Carrasco's Spanish Inn located at 1030-A Andrews Highway in the Western Park Plaza across from Handy Dan. Rudy, a native Midlander, and his family have been open for business 3 months.

The "Special" includes guacomole salad, beef taco, cheese enchilada, tamale, quesadilla, chile relleno, fried beans, fried rice. The "Carne" has meat simmered in special sauces, rice, and beans. The "Guadalajara" has 1 tapatia, 1 chalupa, and 1 quesadilla. The "Juarez" has 1 cheese-chile relleno, 1 cheese enchilada,and 1 quesadilla. Margaritas,sangria wine, domestic and imported beer are available.

Carrasco's Spanish Inn is open Monday-Saturday from 11-2 for lunch and from 5-9:30 for dinner. Rudy says, "Always a warm welcome and fine Mexican food awaits you! Relax and enjoy your meal!" Reservations and take out orders may be made by calling 697-0663.

So for a friendly atmosphere, courteous service, and reasonable prices stop by Carrasco's Spanish Inn at 1030-A Andrews Highway, Western Park Plaza, or give them a call at 697-0663.

Free tickets lead to commotion

CLEVELAND (AP) — It began as a promotion to publicize a new airline service out of Cleveland Hopkins International Airport.

It ended with a loud, raucous commotion that attracted police tactical units and was more than the airline had anticipated.

Texas International Airlines promoted its new services from Cleveland to such southern cities as Houston and New Orleans and certain western cities.

The airline said it would give away 50 free round-trip standby passes on Wednesday to the first 50 people at the reservation desk with 50 items of a certain kind or an object 50 inches tall.

By about 5:30 a.m. Wednesday, more than 400 people were at the desk area. Many stormed what line there had been, ending any semblence of order.

The few Cleveland policemen at the airport were reinforced by other patrolmen and the Community Response and Special Weapons and Tactics units.

Perjury counts dismissed

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge who earlier said he did not wish to turn a fraud trial into a murder trial Thursday dismissed a perjury charge against a Memphis man who had been questioned in connection with the 1980 slaying of a Houston commodities dealer.

U.S. District Judge Robert O'Conor Jr. granted a judgment of acquittal to a perjury charge filed against Larry T. Lee.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, July 18, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Comedian Red Skelton, western character actor Chill Wills and actor/writer/director Hume Cronyn are among the celebrities sharing this birthday with you. A wide range of new opportunities will test your judgment in the year ahead. The choices you make will determine the level of financial success you attain. You love a challenge and are likely to find business ventures fascinating. Resist the temptation to indulge in extended travel; it is unlikely to live up to your expectations. Romance is lively and adventurous for those who are eligible. Temper your forcefulness with diplomacy when trying to influence friends and loved ones.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Other people can help you make financial gains now. Keep your calendar open so you can accept an important business invitation. Community service may boost your stock.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A promising day may be marred by someone else's careless mistake. Money could be lost. Timing is a key factor in keeping your professional life intact.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid arguing or someone could withhold the valuable information you need to forge ahead. Help romance along by being less aggressive this evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Social plans may have to be put aside. You derive a lot of pleasure from artistic, creative enterprises now. An outdoor art show can be both entertaining and lucrative.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Exciting ideas will help you come to grips with an obstacle that baffles you. Some plans you make today could lead to additional income. Loved ones may behave unpredictably.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Difficult people or situations will tax your patience today. Answer any financial demands calmly and tactfully. A serious discussion with mate should lead to greater domestic harmony.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Trips, visits should be completed before midday. Avoid extravagance. Devote more time to self-improvement activities and enjoy the company of people from different walks of life.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A certain amount of confusion is likely today. Verify arrangements. You need to keep a clear head when doing business. Avoid indulging in gossip. It could come back to haunt you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take better care of yourself and those around you. A physician-approved diet and exercise regimen is a good first step. Your romantic fortunes will improve along with your appearance!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21-Jan. 19): Certain family members may try to stifle those efforts they do not approve of. Stick to your guns if you know you are right. An old flame may reappear, rekindling the fires of romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Social functions could prove disappointing today. Staying home offers you the best chance for a good time. Take advantage of the opportunity to relax. Be more gentle with loved one.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Family relationships may be somewhat topsy-turvy now. A long-term arrangement could be jeopardized by incorrect information. Loved ones act as a buffer until the situation cools.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	3 NT	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

The average player expects to make a normal number of errors during a session of play. However, he tends to think that the expert is immune to such human failings—an impression perhaps fostered by bridge columns. Nothing could be further from the truth! Just as the expert has a tremendous talent for making the right play, every now and then he will commit a spectacular gaffe. This example is from the European Championship some years ago, with two of Europe's finest players sitting North-South.

The bidding needs some explanation. The opening bid was the artificial club used by proponents of the Roman System to cover a wide variety of hands—in this case, opener intended to describe a strong, balanced hand with his rebid. That is what his double showed. South's jump to three no trump was gambling, based on a long, strong minor and some outside cards. North was overimpressed with his queen-jack of diamonds when he elected to pass in the close-out seat—prudence seems to suggest a retreat to four clubs, which was obviously his partner's suit. We will never know where East-West would have ended up had North not passed.

Fortunately for the defenders, West could not lead a club even if he wanted to. Instead, he made his natural lead of the queen of hearts. East rose with the ace and declarer's king was a pleasant surprise for the defenders! To cut a long story short, when the queen of spades dropped as well, the defenders ended up collecting all thirteen tricks for a penalty of 2,600 points.

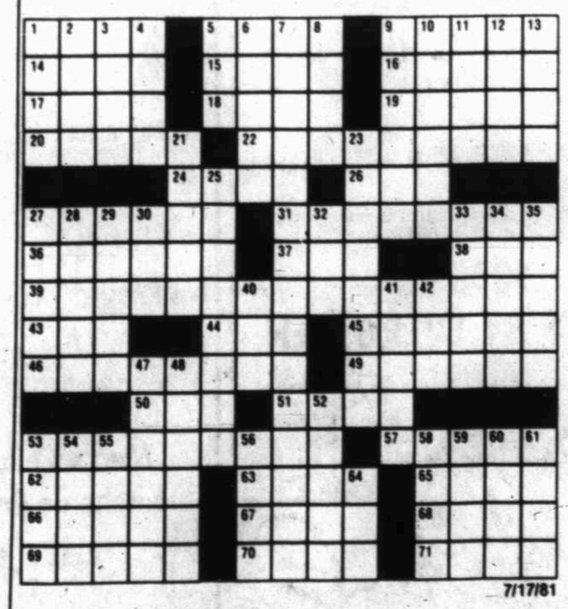

Even that was not a record for the European Championship. However, North's comment at the end is worth preserving for the record: "Well, we're an old partnership. It happens to us all the time!"

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to NEWSPAPERBOOKS.

Helms won't reveal stand on appointment

By KEVIN M. COSTELLOE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, saying one meeting with Sandra Day O'Connor wasn't enough, is refusing to say if he will use his conservative clout to try to block her nomination to the Supreme Court.

"I look forward to following this lady's career with great interest," the North Carolina Republican, a leading abortion foe, told a hoard of reporters and cameramen after a 40-minute meeting with Mrs. O'Connor on Thursday evening.

Asked if he would help that career, Helms, who earlier this year held up confirmation of some of President Reagan's nominees to the State Department, replied: "Why should I do otherwise?"

"I hope we have many more meetings," Helms added before disappearing into his office.

Mrs. O'Connor, who has drawn rave reviews and predictions of easy confirmation from most other congressmen during a week of Capitol campaigning, was grim-faced as she tried to avoid reporters when she walked away from Helms' office.

"We had a productive visit," she said.

The 51-year-old Arizona appeals court judge had tended toward more upbeat descriptions — "wonderful," "just fine," "very helpful" — after meetings with other key senators.

Powell Moore, the administration lobbyist who has been ushering Mrs. O'Connor from office to office, first shook his head when asked how the meeting with Helms went. He later responded by calling it "a nice, good meeting."

Helms has expressed the most outright skepticism about Mrs. O'Connor, who has been criticized by the religious and political right for her stand on abortion and women's rights.

An Associated Press-NBC News poll says Americans overwhelmingly approve of Reagan's choice of Mrs. O'Connor to replace retired Justice Potter Stewart and become the first woman on the Supreme Court.

Nearly two-thirds of those questioned — 65 percent — said they approved of Reagan's choice. Only 6 percent said they opposed the nomination. Twenty-nine percent of the 1,599 adults interviewed nationwide by telephone Monday and Tuesday were not sure.

On her fourth and probably last day of courting members of Congress, Mrs. O'Connor was scheduled to meet today with another potential foe: Sen. John East, R-N.C., a Helms protege and staunch anti-abortion activist.

East has said he could not support any Supreme Court nominee who agreed with the 1973 decision legalizing abortion in the first six months of pregnancy.

Mrs. O'Connor has maintained her personal opposition to abortion but has been quoted as telling one senator she believes Supreme Court justices should follow legal precedents, including the 1973 decision.

Mrs. O'Connor said Thursday that she wasn't sure when she would leave Washington and return to Phoenix to await the start of Senate confirmation hearings, probably in September.

The White House press office, which has been coordinating her visits, also declined to say when she would return.

On Thursday, she met with Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who said he did not see any significant opposition to Mrs. O'Connor but added that he would not make up his own mind until after the committee hearings.

O'Connor nomination 'OK by us'

NEW YORK (AP) — Ronald Reagan's nomination of Sandra D. O'Connor to be the first woman on the U.S. Supreme Court draws overwhelming approval from the American public.

The latest Associated Press-NBC News poll said that support for the nomination of the Arizona appeals judge comes from just about every major group: liberals and conservatives, those who voted for Reagan last year and those who voted for Jimmy Carter, men and women. Her support from Democrats and conservatives was not quite as strong as from the public as a whole.

Sixty-five percent of those questioned said they approved of Reagan's choice of Mrs. O'Connor. Only 6 percent said they opposed the nomination. Twenty-nine percent of the 1,599 adults interviewed nationwide by telephone Monday and Tuesday were not sure.

The Senate, which must pass on the nomination, is not expected to hold hearings on it until September.

Men and women were about equally approving of the nomination — with 66 percent of the men in favor and 63 percent of the women. Because of the margin of error for results based on each group, that difference is not statistically significant.

Democrats were, by a small margin, less positive about Mrs. O'Connor than other partisans. Sixty-one percent of the Democrats approved of the nomination, versus 70 percent of the Republicans and 65 percent of the independents.

Across the political spectrum, 74 percent of the liberals, 69 percent of the moderates and 67 percent of the conservatives said they approved of Reagan's choice.

The leaders of conservative groups that are opposed to abortion and the Equal Rights Amendment have been the only significant opposition to Mrs. O'Connor's nomination that has surfaced. Mrs. O'Connor has not stated her views on either topic since her nomination, but her opponents say her votes in the Arizona legislature several years ago show that she supports abortion and the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution.

But the Americans who oppose abortion and those who oppose the ERA nevertheless supported Mrs. O'Connor as the replacement on the high court for Potter Stewart, who retired.

The poll did not question the respondents on whether they knew Mrs. O'Connor's position on ERA or on abortion, nor did it link either issue to her nomination.

For example, sixty-five percent of those who oppose the proposed ERA said they approve of her nomination. Only 8 percent of that group opposed the nomination.

Nearly three-quarters — 74 percent — of those who back the ERA supported the elevation of a woman to the high court, while 4 percent of them were opposed.

Similarly, among those who oppose abortion, 53 percent backed Mrs. O'Connor's nomination and 13 percent were opposed. Those who support abortion approved of the nomination by a 68-5 edge.

Poll conducted by telephone

NEW YORK (AP) — Telephone interviews with 1,599 adults across the country on July 13 and 14 were the basis for the Associated Press-NBC News Poll on the nomination of Sandra D. O'Connor to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Telephone numbers were selected for the survey in such a way as to give every household in the country with a telephone a roughly equal chance of being chosen. The sample was drawn in order to reflect accurately the makeup of the country by region and by city size. A procedure was used to give a proper balance of men and women in the sample.

As with all sample surveys, the results of the AP-NBC News polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variations in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,600 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of such chance variations. That is, if one could have talked this week to all Americans with telephones, there is only one chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this one by more than 3 percentage points.

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for a number of additional reasons. Differences in the exact wording of questions, differences in when the interviews were conducted and different methods of interviewing could also cause variations.

Here are some of the questions and the results from the AP-NBC News poll:

1. President Reagan has nominated a woman, Sandra D. O'Connor, to fill a vacancy on the U.S. Supreme Court. Do you approve or disapprove of his choice or don't you know enough about it to have an opinion?
Approve — 65 percent.
Disapprove — 6 percent.
Not sure — 29 percent.

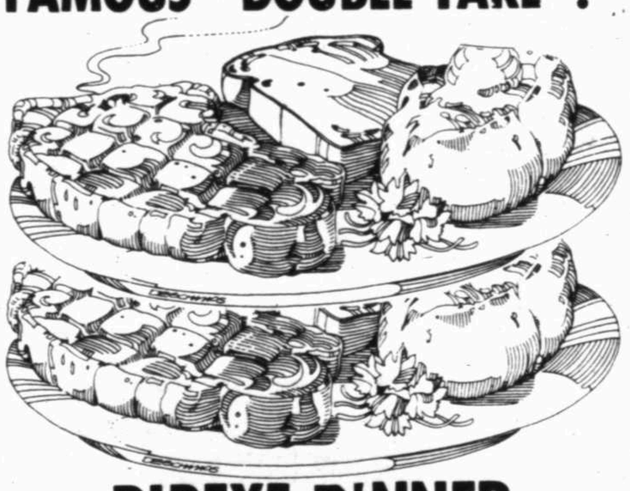

2. Have you heard or read enough about the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution, often referred to as the ERA, to have an opinion? (If yes) Do you favor or oppose the Equal Rights Amendment?
Haven't heard — 26 percent.
Favor — 39 percent.
Oppose — 25 percent.
Not sure — 10 percent.

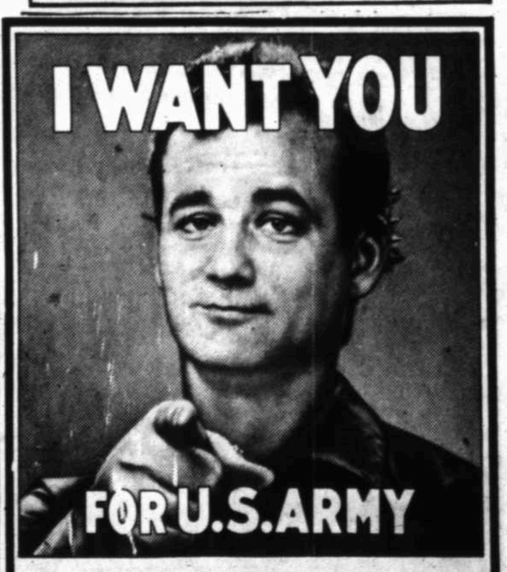

3. Do you agree or disagree with the following statement: "The decision to have an abortion should be left to a woman and her physician."
Agree — 77 percent.
Disagree — 20 percent.
Not sure — 3 percent.

Punk-rock singer released on bond

LYNWOOD, Ill. (AP) — Punk-rocker Wendy O. Williams of Plasmatics fame has been released on $300 cash bond on a charge of assault and battery against a photographer.

The claim was filed by free-lance photographer Dick Barnes, who said Miss Williams attacked him as he was trying to take her picture early Wednesday morning. Miss Williams was jogging along a Lake Michigan beach after finishing a show with her band at a club in this Chicago suburb.

Barnes said he was taking pictures on the North Avenue beach when he spotted the singer, unmistakable in her Mohawk-style hairdo.

W.O. Williams

Miss Williams, known for destroying television sets on stage with a chain saw, said the photographer startled her. In a statement released by her record company, Stiff Records, she said: "There are some things in life that I regard as private, and I don't need egotistical photographers trying to score cheap shots by harassing me in my more personal pursuits."

LONDON (AP) — Buckingham Palace has announced that the 2-month-old daughter of Princess Anne and Capt. Mark Phillips will be christened at a private ceremony in Windsor Castle chapel July 27.

The christening of Zara Anne Elizabeth Phillips will be just two days before the royal wedding of her uncle Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer.

Prince Andrew, younger brother of Princess Anne, and Mrs. Jackie Stewart, wife of the racing driver, are among five godparents.

●

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Officials at Methodist Hospital South, where Jerry Lee Lewis is recuperating from two stomach operations, have restricted visitors to the critically ill entertainer.

"The most important factor at this time is rest and conservation of his strength during the period of recovery," said a medical bulletin issued Thursday.

Lewis, 45, was admitted June 30, complaining of stomach pains. He was operated on the same day for a ruptured stomach and had a second operation July 10 after X-rays showed a number of abscesses had developed on his stomach.

The flamboyant rock 'n' roll star has remained in critical condition since the second operation but had been allowed visitors.

H. Kissinger

E.B. Williams

DENVER (AP) — Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has been named to the board of directors of Twentieth Century-Fox, according to a company statement.

Washington attorney Edward Bennett Williams will be joining him.

The owner of the film company, the multimillionaire Denver oilman Marvin Davis, made the announcements Thursday.

Earlier in the week, he named former President Gerald R. Ford to the Fox board.

"The additions of...Kissinger and Williams bring a broad range of experience and abilities to the Fox board," Davis said. "Dr. Kissinger's background both in the diplomatic and academic worlds will be a tremendous resource for us, and Mr. Williams' knowledge of legal and business affairs will prove a great asset."

Honeymooners win their suit

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The luxurious Manila Hotel has been ordered to pay $5,700 to a honeymooning couple bumped out of their bridal suite five hours before thier time was up.

Justice Onofre Villaluz declared the hotel failed in 1977 to meet provisions of an advertised "bridal package."

Tinker: 'Great things' expected

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Grant Tinker says that if NBC can stay away from "dreadful" programs, the Moral Majority and the Coalition for Better Television "would bother somebody else."

Tinker, 55, in his second week as NBC's chairman and chief executive officer, told a news conference Thursday that he had received a congratulatory letter from the Rev. Jerry Falwell, the fundamentalist founder of the Moral Majority.

"Rev. Falwell is expecting great things from me," said Tinker, who was hired July 7 when Fred Silverman resigned because he did not get a long-term endorsement from Thornton Bradshaw, chairman of NBC's parent company, RCA.

Tinker said he had felt "threatened" by a sponsor boycott which the Coalition for Better Television, headed by the Rev. Donald Wildmon, had proposed to combat sex and violence in television.

"If we did some better shows, some of the complaints of these gentlemen would go away, and so would the gentlemen," said Tinker. "Then they would bother somebody else."

Although the boycott was called off two weeks ago, Tinker said he would resist pressure from conservative groups. "He (Falwell) is just another viewer. I don't see him doing my job for me."

Tinker, who worked twice before at NBC in the programming department, headed MTM Enterprises for the past 11 years. MTM was responsible for such highly acclaimed shows as "Mary Tyler Moore," "Lou Grant" and "Hill Street Blues."

"MTM shows are better than things NBC is now running, although I know NBC can't be seven nights of MTM," Tinker said. "It will be a mixed bag of things... What I'd like to happen is for people not to say about any of our programs, 'That's just dreadful.'"

Last season, NBC finished last in the network ratings. Figures from the A.C. Nielsen company showed CBS ahead with a 19.8, followed by ABC's 18.2 and NBC's 16.6. A rating reflects the percentage of homes equipped with TVs watching an average minute of prime time.

Silverman, who was the head of programming at CBS and then at ABC during the periods when each was the top-rated network, found that he could not elevate NBC's position after he arrived in 1978.

"Fred Silverman had a lot of bad luck, and I hope not to have a lot of bad luck," Tinker said.

Tinker said he planned no changes in NBC's announced fall schedule, now set to debut Sept. 28. He offered no timetable for an NBC resurgence, but he did say: "NBC will get healthy."

Kaiser accepts rebuttal time

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Co. says it has accepted an offer of prime time to rebut allegations leveled against the company in an ABC-TV newsmagazine program more than a year ago.

Kaiser spokesman Art Miller said Thursday his company would air its case during the premiere of an ABC News program called "Viewpoint" to be broadcast at 10 p.m. EDT next Friday.

ABC, in its weekly "20-20" show, accused Kaiser of marketing electrical home wiring with a potential for causing fires and of withholding information on the product's performance from users.

Accusing ABC of "trial by television," Kaiser demanded time to rebut the charges on "20-20." ABC said it stood by its story but later offered some time to Kaiser, which said that offer was not acceptable.

"The charges were wrong, and we could not allow them to stand unchallenged," said Kaiser chairman Cornell C. Maier.

He said with the new program, "ABC News appears to be making a bold attempt to correct one of the greatest weaknesses of television — that is the inability to get the other side heard or redress error."

A four-minute videotape prepared by the company will be aired during the "Viewpoint" show.

Networks may open bureaus

PEKING (AP) — The three major U.S. networks will be allowed to open Peking bureaus almost immediately, although they must still submit credentials applications for the individual correspondents, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today.

The reporters from ABC, NBC and CBS will have credentials as radio correspondents, the spokesman said. Television crews from the three networks have visited China for occasional reports in recent years.

The spokesman said all three networks would receive equal treatment. NBC had already announced its plans to open a Peking bureau this summer.

The Foreign Ministry's information department said Voice of America radio also has received permission to station a correspondent in Peking.

Federal judge to rule on Miss USA lawsuit

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal judge agreed Thursday to rule on a lawsuit filed by Miss New York State that would bar CBS from televising the Miss Universe Pageant and block the winner of the Miss USA crown from competing in the contest.

U.S. District Judge Vincent L. Broderick scheduled a hearing for 2 p.m. EDT Friday.

The plaintiff, Deborah Ann Fountain, was disqualified from the competition for Miss USA because she allegedly wore "falsies."

Social worker, songwriter: Harry Chapin dead at 38

NEW YORK (AP) — Harry Chapin, the pop balladeer who sang about extraordinary moments in ordinary lives and used his fame in the fight against world hunger, has died in a highway crash at age 38.

He was a poet, a guitar player, a moviemaker and a writer for Broadway, the singer of the hit songs "Taxi" and "Cat's in the Cradle."

But he also was "kind of a social worker-songwriter" who "did a lot of reaching out and supporting people who were less fortunate than himself," said Kathleen Dwyer, one of about 300 fans who lingered Thursday at a park where Chapin was to have given a free concert.

CHAPIN WAS ALONE Thursday in a blue 1975 Volkswagen Rabbit when he passed a tractor-trailer on the Long Island Expressway. The truck collided with his car, and the car burst into flames.

The truck driver cut Chapin's seat belt and pulled him through a window. Chapin was rushed to Nassau County Medical Center in East Meadow, where he was pronounced dead. No charges were filed against the truck driver, officials said.

Although Chapin was badly burned and suffered internal injuries, a hospital spokesman said he had suffered a heart attack and died of cardiac arrest. The spokesman said there was no way to tell whether the heart attack came before or after the accident.

CHAPIN WAS DRIVING from his Long Island house to New York City on business, said Guy Thomas, a publicist for his management company.

Chapin was the son of a jazz drummer, Jim Chapin, who worked with bandleaders Tommy Dorsey and Woody Herman. Harry Chapin, born Dec. 7, 1942, in New York's Greenwich Village, learned to play the trumpet as a child before taking up the guitar.

Chapin and his brothers Tom and Steve formed the Chapin Brothers folk singing group. He attended the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs and Cornell University, then returned to singing.

CHAPIN, WHO ONCE applied for a taxi driver's license, had his first big hit in 1972 — "Taxi," a 6-minute song about two former lovers who meet as taxi driver and passenger. None of his later recordings matched the success of that song.

"Cat's in the Cradle," a 1974 gold-record hit about a son who grows up to be just as aloof as his father, was written to a poem by Chapin's wife, Sandy, who chided him about neglecting his family. He had five children.

Chapin served on President Carter's Presidential Commission on Hunger and said recently that he had campaigned last fall for five Republicans and 19 Democrats in congressional races because they were "good on food and hunger issues."

CONSUMER ADVOCATE Ralph Nader once said he knew of no entertainer "who dedicated so many hours or so much imagination to a civic cause," and Chapin's manager, Bob Hinkle, said Thursday that the singer had raised more than $5 million over eight years in the fight against hunger.

Chapin said in an Associated Press interview last February that he had given 250 concerts in 1980, more than half of them benefits.

He also said in describing his music that "for stories of ordinary people and cosmic moments in their non-cosmic lives, you have to turn back to Harry Chapin."

The fans who lingered Thursday in Eisenhower Park in East Meadow sat on blankets or lawn chairs, some weeping, and sang Chapin songs accompanied by a young woman with a guitar.

"HIS SONGS WERE about normal people," said Michael Ciantro. "They're people like me, like everybody else."

In addition to recording 11 albums, Chapin wrote, edited and directed a documentary film, "Legendary Champions," which was nominated for an Academy Award in 1969, and wrote a 1975 multimedia Broadway show, "The Night that Made American Famous," for which he got two Tony nominations. He also wrote two books of poetry.

Plans to kill bear prompt protest by children

VIENNA, Ill. (AP) — Five hundred children at a summer camp formed a human chain around the cage of a bear to stop authorities from beheading it for a rabies test after a small boy was bitten.

The 11-year-old child was bitten down to the bone of his right forearm when he petted the former dancing bear, which was given to Camp Ondessonk in southern Illinois 17 years ago.

Scott Burrelsman's family filed a court petition Thursday asking that the bear be tested for rabies and camp officials agreed, following the recommendation of the child's physician and a rabies expert from the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

But when news of the decision reached Camp Ondessonk, the campers quickly lined up around the cage of Tommy the Bear and vowed to resist any effort to kill their mascot. Their protest was later disbanded, and they were put to bed.

"Everybody at camp is so sad," said Stephen Kernan, a director of the camp, which is operated by the Belleville Catholic Diocese.

St. Clair County Judge Thomas Daley in Belleville signed an order for the bear's death, although the bear was still at the camp early today. Camp officials said they planned to issue a statement later in the day.

The alternative to killing the 22-year-old bear and testing it for rabies is giving the Fairview Heights boy a series of rabies shots.

Rabies experts consulted in the case said it was unlikely that the bear had rabies, but the only way to find out was killing the animal so that its brain tissue could be tested.

Officials say the bear's head will be taken to an Illinois Public Health laboratory in Centralia and results of the rabies tests will be known Friday afternoon.

Haig aide violates Senate rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — State Department officials say an aide to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was unaware that he was violating Senate Foreign Relations Committee rules when he tape-recorded Haig's closed-door meeting with the panel last week.

Richard Fairbanks, assistant secretary of state for congressional affairs, said Thursday that he has apologized to the committee for the breach of its rules by Keith Schuette, a special assistant to Haig.

Fairbanks said Schuette had not tried to conceal the tape recorder and was simply unfamiliar with the committee's ban on the recording of executive sessions.

THE COMMITTEE protested use of the tape recorder after a staff aide discovered a tape cassette of the first half of Haig's testimony, which Schuette apparently had left behind inadvertently.

Fairbanks said that after the committee protested, the tapes of the rest of the hearing were destroyed.

Schuette was unavailable for comment, but the department's deputy press spokesman Alan Romberg said Schuette was acting "on his own initiative" when he taped the meeting.

"This is not something that the secretary said, 'do this'," Romberg said. "This is the first time he has taped something like this — and the last."

Haig appeared before the committee July 8 to discuss his recent trip to the Far East.

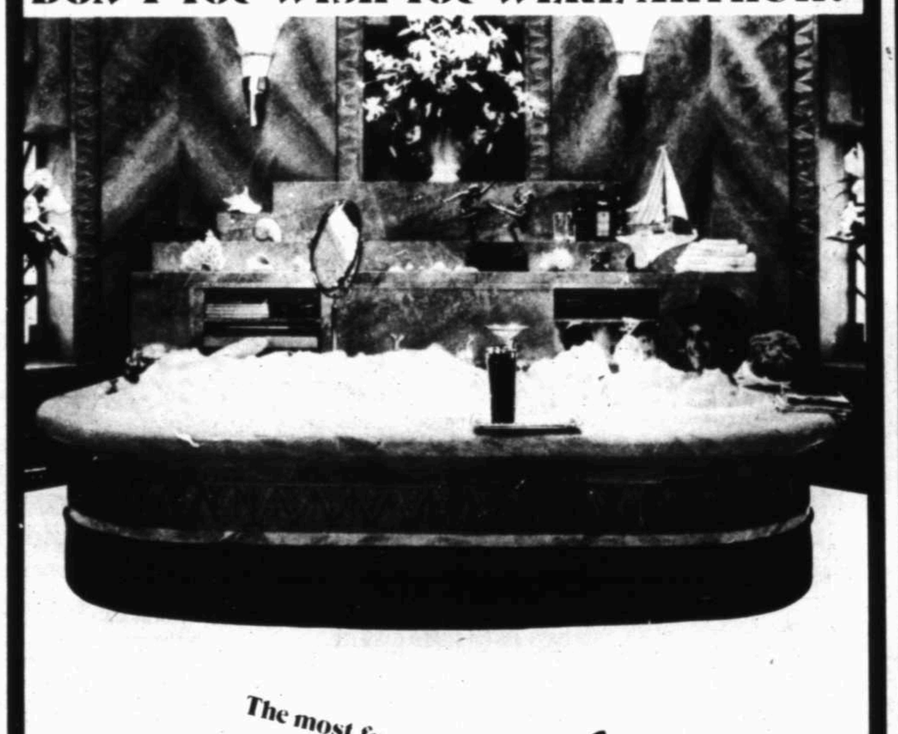

The committee permits only its own stenographer to record testimony at executive sessions and the transcripts are closely guarded to avoid leaks to the press, said Ed Sanders, committee staff director.

Dirt farmers are being taught new methods in Brazil

OURICURI, Brazil (AP) — Experimental techniques that combine the modern with the ancient are being taught to dirt farmers in an effort to turn Brazil's drought-prone northeast into a productive agricultural region.

Brazilian government agricultural researchers, using low-cost techniques within the means of northeastern subsistence farmers, are showing that survival is possible in this region, with its chronic poverty and the problem of millions of migrants that have fled to escape hunger and disease.

Essentially the program is built around techniques that preserve water when it rains and to use it when dry spells set in.

One of the farmers who applied for and received government help in the project is Luis Pereira de Araujo, 45, and he now is harvesting 75 acres of corn, beans, sorghum and cotton while his neighbors lost their crops in this year's drought.

"Most of the people around here don't believe this is all mine," Pereira recently told a visitor. "They don't believe the government lets me keep all of this."

He added that his production is good enough to care for his wife and seven children and his 15 cows and 22 goats.

The semihumid tropics division of the Brazilian Farm Research Institute, EMBRAPA, is responsible for the program. It is using Pereira's farm to encourage government support for their method of combating drought with simple solutions.

The organization says state governments are preparing to provide funding to bring simplified technology to large numbers of farm families in the region. The adjoining state of Rio Grande do Norte is preparing a program for 65,000 farmers. Other states are following, EMBRAPA says.

Drought is a problem here because rain is not evenly distributed over the year, institute technicians say. So they've developed ways of capturing the water that does fall in reservoirs, which are strategically placed to provide low-cost irrigation.

In the first half of the year, there were 23 inches of rain here. But of that amount, all but three inches fell in March. It did not rain at all here in May or June.

With the reservoir and cistern collection systems, the rains of March would be enough to store supplies for much of the year.

The agricultural technicians built a small reservoir on Pereira's property, designed to be on higher ground than the land it irrigates. So by installing an inexpensive pipe system and digging earthen canals, the water collected can be rationed to provide emergency moisture for crops threatened by drought. It is a main irrigation source in normal rain conditions.

An existing pond on the property has also been used. The researchers taught Pereira how to use residual moisture from the pond to grow survival crops. As the pond dries up, he plants successive rows of beans and corn parallel to the receding water line.

Both planting schemes make use of animal-drawn plows, which the officials say prove better on the fragile, shallow topsoil of the northeast, than the tractors which cut deeper into the earth.

Other projects include irrigating beans and other crops with buried clay pots, their tops open and filled periodically with water in a method known for several thousand years. A modern version of the same technique uses a capsule system which sucks water from a tube and tank device as the soil moisture level drops.

The Ouricuri farm also is fitted with a biodigestor unit, which converts animal waste into cooking fuel and powers a tiny electric generator.

"What we were looking for was a simple, complete system for helping (the subsistence farmer), on his own level," said Antonio Jose Simoes, a coordinator at the EMBRAPA research institute at Petrolina, 120 miles south of here. "Our program provides the three types of water the northeasterner needs" — irrigation, drinking water for humans and for animals.

Italian quake survivors are still struggling

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Vincenzo d'Alessandro, who lost his house, his wife and his four children in last November's earthquake, is still living in a tiny camper in a gravel lot in the mountain village of Balvano. He cooks outside and washes in primitive public toilets.

He is one of 100,000 earthquake survivors living in campers in more than 70 cities and towns in southern Italy. The government says it will have prefabricated houses for all by fall, but it will be three to seven years before permanent housing is built.

"We don't want a big house. All we want is two little rooms," said Vincenzo's brother, Pasquale, who shares the 6- by 12-foot metal camper with him.

Reconstruction has not begun in Balvano or the other cities and towns hit by the earthquake Nov. 23 that killed 2,737 people. And many in Balvano and other villages claim the temporary housing has been allocated according to political patronage rather than need.

In the winter, snow and rain seeped through the cracks in the campers. Now, the summer sun is beating down on them, making them unbearably hot. The sewage from the public toilets in the camps is causing health hazards, and the risk of infection is high, according to Balvano's health official, Dr. Giuseppe Sarro.

The physical conditions are grim, but the psychological conditions may be just as bad. Some survivors say they have cronic insomnia and crying spells. Others say they are withdrawn and listless after losing their families, their houses and their jobs.

"I worked in Germany for 11 years to earn a little money to support my family," Vincenzo d'Alessandro said. "I made all the sacrifices. It cost me some. Now I ask, what's the point of working? What does it serve? If you think about it, you go crazy."

He came back to Balvano, a town of 3,000 about 90 miles east of Naples, to bury his family. He has no work — he was laid off from a construction job last month — and his pretty medieval hill town has been reduced to a pile of rubble. But he decided to stay.

It's harvest time in the mountains. The farmers are cutting the hay, some using hand sickles, and piling it in haystacks to dry. Donkeys carry big baskets of vegetables from the fields to towns.

Soon the grapes will be ready. But the villagers in Ricigliano, about six miles from Balvano, say the grapes will rot on the vines because their wineries, wine presses and wine cellars were destroyed by the quake.

In Ricigliano, 90 percent destroyed by the quake, the streets are still piled high with rubble. Only 150 of the town's 1,350 inhabitants live in prefabricated houses. About 800 live in campers lined up along dusty mountain roads. Some, crippled by the earthquake, hobble along on crutches.

Maria Iacullo, who lost her husband in the quake, still has a swollen leg from the gash she got the night the walls came tumbling down. She lives in a small prefabricated house with her 5-year-old daughter, Gerarda, and her 6-month-old son, Pasquale, born two months after the quake.

"My daughter still cries, 'Where is Papa? When is Papa coming back?'," said the 25-year-old widow, dressed in the traditional mourning with a black dress, black stockings and shoes and a black scarf over her head. "There are some days I'm so upset I don't know what to do. I'm so lonely when I go to sleep at night."

The villagers in Ricigliano say they can't understand why foreign aid that they heard was coming hasn't arrived. Rescue officials say much of the foreign aid is earmarked for long-term reconstruction such as building schools.

The U.S. Congress allocated $46 million to build 12 schools. Officials say construction of the schools will start late this year or early next spring. The United States gave $4 million in relief supplies such as tents and blankets immediately after the earthquake.

Ricigliano's mayor, Vito Saracco, defends the efforts of building temporary housing. "I don't think any other government would have done better. It's not disorganization. It's just that there isn't enough money."

The government rescue headquarters in Naples says everything is going according to plan. About 30,000 prefabricated houses for about 120,000 people have already been built. About 20,000 people are staying in hotels at government expense. Several thousand others are staying with friends or living in schools.

In May, the Italian Parliament approved a bill to provide $8 billion over a three-year period for reconstruction. The law calls for the regional and local governments to draw up plans for permanent housing within three months.

Enzo Mosino, spokesman for the government rescue office, acknowledges that not a single permanent house has been built in the earthquake zone but stresses that careful reconstruction must take time.

"It would be a mistake to build permanent housing now," Mosino said. "You have to draw up plans. To rebuild in less time than three to seven years would be foolishness."
