Emperor Hirohito dies of cancer

Emperor Hirohito

TOKYO (AP) — Emperor Hirohito, who held divine status until Japan's defeat in World War II and endured to reign for 62 years, died today of intestinal cancer. He was 87.

Crown Prince Akihito, 55, the emperor's oldest son, immediately became the 125th occupant of the Chrysanthemum Throne and received the imperial regalia.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Kenzo Obuchi said the emperor died at 6:33 a.m. (4:33 p.m. EST Friday).

Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita said in a somber address on national television, "The death of the emperor is an extremly sad thing."

He recounted Hirohito's extraordinary reign, through the Great Depression and "the very sad ruins of World War II...and the period of rapid economic growth" after the war.

Hirohito will go to his grave with a mixed reputation due to his role as Japan's titular wartime leader, but Takeshita said he "lived for world peace and the happiness of the people."

"He decided to end the war after he could no longer stand to see the suffering of the people," Takeshita said.

The emperor had urged his country to surrender after the atomic bombing of Japan by the United States in the closing days of the war.

In Washington, President Reagan offered condolences and lauded Hirohito for playing "a truly heroic role" in bringing World War II to an end.

"On behalf of the people and government of the United States, we extend our deepest condolences to His Imperial Majesty, the Emperor, to the Imperial family, and to the People of Japan," the president said in a statement released by the White House.

Shoichi Fujimori, grand steward of the Imperial Household Agency, told a nationally televised news conference that Hirohito died of cancer of the upper duodenum.

The frail monarch underwent intestinal bypass surgery in September 1987. At the time, his doctors said a growth blocking his intestine was not cancerous.

On Sept. 19, 1988, the emperor vomited blood and remained in serious condition after that with internal bleeding, but until the death announcement, the household agency refused to confirm local news reports he was suffering from cancer. Japanese custom is not to let cancer patients know they have the disease.

The world's oldest imperial line — held by the same family since at least the 8th century and by legend since 660 B.C. — passed automatically to Akihito.

Less than six hours after his father's death, Akihito received the sacred imperial treasures that symbolize the throne and were handed down through generations of emperors. Legend says they came from the Sun Goddess, the imperial family's mythic ancestor.

In a ceremony that lasted only four minutes and without a word spoken, imperial chamberlains carried cases containing an ancient sword, jewels and the imperial and national seals, and placed them on tables before Akihito.

The new emperor, wearing a black morning coat and gray trousers and flanked by six male members of the imperial family, bowed in acknowledgement.

Witnessing the ceremony in the main palace building were the prime minister, 19 Cabinet members, the two top officials from both houses of Parliament, and two Supreme Court justices.

Akihito looked deeply solemn through the brief ceremony, which closely mirrored an ascension rite his father had on Christmas Day 1926.

Akihito's formal coronation will take place in about two years if his father's pattern is followed. But the pattern is so old — Hirohito reigned for 62 years and 13 days — and Japan is so different now that precedent may not be followed.

Libya claims 14 jets attack two fighters

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Libya said Friday that 14 U.S. jets attacked the two Libyan fighters shot down this week over the Mediterranean, not two U.S. planes as Washington says.

Meanwhile, warplanes in position for takeoff appeared on the tarmac at Tripoli's airport, and soldiers guarded the fortress of Col. Moammar Gadhafi, who was reported to fear a U.S. attack.

A Western diplomat said he was told that Gadhafi had ousted his military chief, but he said the report could not be confirmed. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Rajab Abou Dabbous, secretary of the Libyan information ministry, told a news conference Friday evening that the U.S. account of Wednesday's air attack was "a fabrication."

He said 14 U.S. jets were involved and that the shooting was premeditated. U.S. officials have said two U.S. jets fired after the Libyan MiG-23s pursued them.

"The truth is that 14 (U.S. planes) — count them — attacked two Libyan planes on a normal reconnaissance flight," said Dabbous.

Libyan television broadcast similar charges.

Libyan officials say the planes were unarmed reconnaissance craft, but U.S. officials have produced video footage that they say shows missiles on the Libyan planes.

The atmosphere in Tripoli was tense, and many residents took flight. The Western diplomat compared the mood in the city to the days surrounding a U.S. raid on Libya in April 1986.

Gadhafi has not been seen or heard from since Wednesday, when he vowed to challenge the United States over this week's air battle.

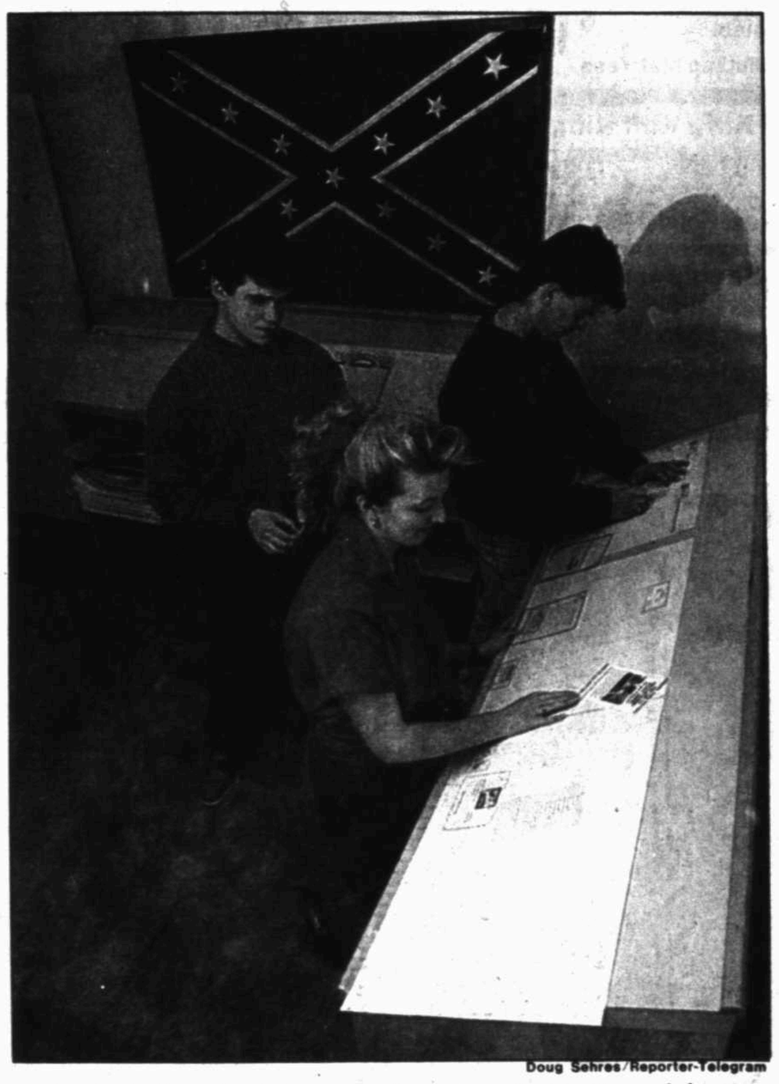

Tensions between the United States and Libya already had been high because of U.S. allegations that a plant outside Tripoli was designed to manufacture chemical weapons. Libya says the plant is for manufacture of pharmaceuticals.

The diplomat said he received a telephone call Friday from "a usually credible source" saying Gadhafi had dismissed his military chief, Col. Abu Bakr Younis Jaber.

However, the diplomat said he was unable to confirm the report and added that such rumors have circulated before. He said Gadhafi reshuffled the military a few weeks ago, but it was unclear if the military head had been affected.

Yugoslavia's Tanjug news agency said Wednesday that Gadhafi fired his military chief to tighten control over the military in anticipation of a U.S. assault.

Lee High School Dixie Dispatch staffers Todd Giese, left, Kate Raney and Joe Stephens are joining the LHS band in Washington, D.C., for the Jan. 20 inauguration of George Bush, who is to become the 41st president of the United States.

LHS staffers will cover inauguration

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

When five Dixie Dispatch staffers arrive in Washington, D.C., on Jan. 19, it won't matter that they write for a high school newspaper.

They'll be treated like any other member of the press — they'll have to present credentials, pass tight security checks and fight throngs of reporters and photographers along the way.

No matter.

That's the price for covering the big event of the year: the inauguration of George Herbert Walker Bush as the 41st president of the United States.

The five staffers, Tim Walker, Joe Stephens, Todd Giese, Natalie Peacock and Kate Raney, already have a pretty good idea of what their assignments will be.

Stephens, a high school senior, is to cover the band, which is slated to march in the inaugural parade down Pennsylvania Avenue.

Giese, a sophomore, will shadow his fellow students to find out what they are doing in their spare time when they're not rehearsing or marching.

Miss Raney, also a senior, is to fill the general assignment slot. She'll tackle anything and everything that might be of interest to her readership.

The staffers got word of their impending trip to the nation's capital Jan. 3, after the Rebel Band was notified of the their invitation to perform on Inauguration Day.

However, the band's appearance is dependent upon their ability to raise $160,000 to pay for the cost of the trip.

Last Saturday, band members combed half the city for donations and raised more than $10,000. Rebel band members will march through the other half of the city this weekend in hopes of raising more money.

The Lee High School journalists, who will attend at a cost of $600 per student, are responsible for financing the trip on their own.

"When Bush came to town (last October), the kids came to me and told me that there was a good possibility that the band would be getting to go to Washington, D.C. And so I went over and talked with our principal... We just kind of worked from there," said LHS publications advisor Kim Massey.

WWII soldier's remains buried after 44 years

WAUSAU, Wis. (AP) — Nearly 44 years after he disappeared on a remote island in Alaska's Aleutian chain, the remains of Cpl. Carl "Bud" Houston were returned Friday to a final resting place in Wisconsin.

About two dozen relatives and friends attended a brief, private funeral service for Houston, whose remains were found last summer by biologists studying geese on the island.

"Uncle Bud is finally home and I look forward to meeting him some day in the hereafter," said Jay Gitchel, who was four months old when his 21-year-old uncle disappeared.

Although he never knew his uncle, Gitchel said older relatives in the family spoke so fondly of Houston that Gitchel named his son after him.

Houston, who grew up in Manitowoc in eastern Wisconsin, disappeared March 3, 1945, while hiking on Buldir Island, where he was one of five volunteers assigned to operate a weather station.

Ex-WWII POW discovers family that saved him

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — In the 44 years since he survived a massacre of Americans at a Japanese prisoner of war camp in World War II, Glenn McDole had often wondered what happened to h' Filipino rescuers.

A telephone answering machine almost cost him a chance to find out. But thanks to the persistence of a Wisconsin nurse named Mary Anne Ancheta, McDole finally has been able to track down the guerrilla band that saved him.

Forty-four years ago, she was Mary Anne Major, a 7-year-old whose father ran a guerrilla camp in the Philippines; he was a young Marine who was brought into the camp with malaria.

"He was shaking like a leaf, he had the chills," she said Friday. "I remember him, although I didn't remember his name."

Last month, she noticed an article about a reunion of American prisoners of war in the Philippines, saw McDole's name and called his home on New Year's Eve. But the tape on his answering machine ran out and he didn't get her last name or phone number.

Publicity about his request to have "Mary Anne" call again resulted in a story in a Green Bay newspaper Wednesday. Mrs. Ancheta saw it and called McDole on Thursday.

"I saw it at 11 at night and it was too late to call. I couldn't sleep and I called the next morning," she said. "I felt like I have known him all that while. It's overwhelming. I'm so glad to know he's alive and well after all that ordeal."

For McDole, the conversation recalled December 1944, when he and about 150 other Americans were held by the Japanese in Palawan Prison.

He had been there 33 months when American forces invaded nearby.

"They made a feint to come toward us but turned away," McDole recalled. "That's when the Japanese decided to annihilate the group of prisoners. They had us down in trenches, and they threw in gasoline and torches. The ones who climbed over the edge were machine gunned."

McDole's trench was the one nearest to a 60-foot cliff overlooking a bay.

"We had started digging through anyway, and we knocked the side of ours out and went over the cliff. I think 20, 25 of us made it to the beach, but some of them panicked and they were gunned down.

"I got pinned down and hid under a pile of garbage. I stayed there all night and part of the next day. I thought I was the only man of the 150 to be alive. You do a lot of praying and crying, and I knew that if I didn't make it, nobody would know what happened. They (the Japanese) would probably blame it on our own planes."

Of the 150 prisoners, 11 escaped and six were brought to the guerrilla camp run by Maziro Major, now 88 and retired in Manilla after a career in the Army.

"It turns out he was educated in Kansas, which is where he met his wife," McDole said. "They were wonderful to us. They saved our lives."

MCH layoffs, pay cuts to result in 'realistic' budget

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The layoff of 28 persons in 13 departments, salary reductions and increased benefit costs are expected to bring expenditures at Medical Center Hospital in line with the revised budget approved by the board of managers and Ector County Commissioners last month.

Interim Administrator J. Michael Stephans said Friday night that the six-part reduction plan will reduce hospital spending by more than $1.83 million, which will result in what he termed a "very realistic" 1989 budget for the county-owned hospital.

Stephans said it would have been much simpler to use a "meat axe approach" and cut everything by 5 or 6 percent.

However, he said, the staff "has worked hard for about three weeks to develop a reduction plan that would be as equitable as possible and still address budgetary problems.

The layoff of 28 employees in 13 departments, he said, will save about $424,084. Three employees in two departments taking early retirement will result in the saving of another $49,250.

The elimination of vacant positions — nine in nine departments — will reduce the budget by $215,296.

The reduction of shift differential pay by 5 percent will save $356,966.

The cost of the hospital's employee health care plan will increase $15 per month for individual employees, plus an additional $10 a month for dependent coverage. Average monthly cost will be about $75, Stephans said, which he termed "still a very reasonable cost."

Slight change in protein may trigger cancer, researchers say

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — In biology, the face of good may be eerily similar to the face of evil, say scientists from the University of California at Berkeley and their colleagues from Japan.

An extremely slight change of shape can cause a normal, healthy, all-American protein to trigger a rampaging cancer, according to a new discovery.

That may be bad news for researchers hoping to develop an anti-cancer drug. Since the "good" protein looks almost exactly like the "bad" cancer-causing one, a drug might have trouble figuring out which protein to attack, experts say.

The achievement by chemistry professor Sung-Hou Kim of Berkeley builds on his discovery last year of the structure of the so-called "ras" protein. The ras protein tells cells when to divide and when to quit dividing.

Last year, Kim and his colleagues found the three-dimensional structure of the ras protein to be highly squiggly — like a deformed pretzel.

Now comes Kim's latest, related finding. In the British science journal, Nature, Kim and eight others report that the ras protein and a cancer-causing protein have almost exactly the same shape.

In fact, the cancer-causing protein seems to be a defective, mutated version of the ras protein, Kim says.

And like a car with a stuck accelerator, the mutated ras protein can roar off, triggering uncontrolled cell growth.

"This mutant ras protein is believed to act like a switch stuck in the 'on' position, signaling cells to start dividing with no subsequent signal to stop," said a university spokesperson. "The resultant massive growth can become a deadly tumor."

The mutant protein is tantalizingly ubiquitous, too. It has been found in almost all pancreas tumors and in about 50 percent of colon cancers. It also lurks within tumors of the bladder, lung and breast, among others.

Last year, Kim determined the normal protein's structure using an advanced version of a time-honored scientific tool: X-ray crystallography.

X-rays are focused upon a particular substance (in this case, a crystallized protein). The result is a photo-like image covered with shadowy images, which represent atoms within the protein. By analyzing the image, biologists can determine the exact arrangement of the protein's atoms.

Using this technique last year, Kim learned that the normal ras protein consists of six long, ribbon-like strands and four coiled structures. Nine loops connect thicket of strands and coils.

And now, in his latest work, Kim says he has found that in the cancer-causing protein, one of those nine loops is slightly askew — by a mere two hundred millionths of a centimeter.

Yet biologically speaking, that miniscule deviation can make a potentially fatal difference.

Here's why: a normal ras protein contains a molecule called guanosine triphosphate or GTP. Normally the protein chops an ion off the GTP molecule in order to signal the cell, "Stop dividing."

Reagan to have surgery to correct finger curvature

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, saying he felt fine, entered Walter Reed Army Hospital on Friday to prepare for surgery early this morning to correct a curvature of his left ring finger.

The president, accompanied by his wife Nancy, waved to reporters as he entered the emergency room of the military hospital. Asked how he felt, the president called out, "Fine."

Due to heavy cloud cover, the president went to the hospital by motorcade, rather than by helicopter.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the operation is scheduled for 7:30 a.m. EST and doctors expect the president to be "up and around...following the operation."

The presidential physician, Col. John Hutton, has said Reagan's arm would be numbed for the two- to three-hour procedure and he did not expect general anesthesia to be used.

Reagan will remain at the hospital until Sunday as a precautionary measure, Fitzwater said, to "be sure everything goes well."

The surgery, designed to alleviate an ailment known as Dupuytren's contracture, is considered to be routine and often doesn't require an overnight stay in the hospital.

Dr. Robert J. Neviaser, chairman of the orthopedic surgery department and director of the hand surgery service at George Washington University Medical Center, said Dupuytren's contraction is a fairly common problem in men of Irish or Scottish ancestry. Reagan is a descendent of Irish immigrants.

Dupuytren's contraction, named for a 19th century French surgeon who first characterized the condition, is caused by a build-up in the palm of the hand of a tissue called fascia. This tissue slowly forms tough, rubbery nodules and bands which extend from the palm into the fingers. The fascia joins to the skin of the palm and contracts, forcing the fingers to close.

"You can close the finger into the palm, but it gets to where you can't open the finger or fingers that are involved," said Neviaser. "After a while it becomes difficult to place your hand into a pocket or a glove because you lose the ability to straighten the finger. It leads to a loss of function."

The ring finger — the digit next to the smallest finger — is most commonly affected. Reagan's problem is with the ring finger on his left hand. Untreated, the condition eventually may involve all four fingers but the thumb, leaving the hand in a clenched, claw-like position.

To relieve the contraction, Neviaser said surgeons make an incision over the area in the palm where the band of tissue has formed. The fascia is carefully separated from the skin and removed. The incision in the skin then is stitched back together.

"It's a tedious operation," said Neviaser, who is not involved in the treatment of Reagan. "It can take anywhere from a half an hour to two hours or more."

Neviaser said only the tissue directly involved with the finger contraction is removed.

"This means you might end up leaving behind what appears to be an uninvolved portion which later on would become involved," he said. "So it can reoccur and other fingers can become involved later."

Severe cases, however, can take much longer, said Neviaser, and can sometimes require splints to help the fingers straighten out after the contracted tissue is removed.

Neviaser said the palms have a special type of fascia that usually forms a thin, protective layer.

When the problem occurs, "for reasons that are not quite clear, there is a cellular activity that changes the fascia, causing formation of bands and nodules. The skin becomes thin over the fascia and the contraction of the fingers start," he said. "We don't know what causes it."

The contracture was minimal when Reagan took office in 1981 but has progressed enough during the past year to require surgical treatment, Hutton said.

If the procedure goes well, said Neviaser, Reagan should be out of bandages within two weeks, perhaps in time for the inauguration of President-elect Bush on Jan. 20. In minor cases, full recovery with return of all function can occur in a month.

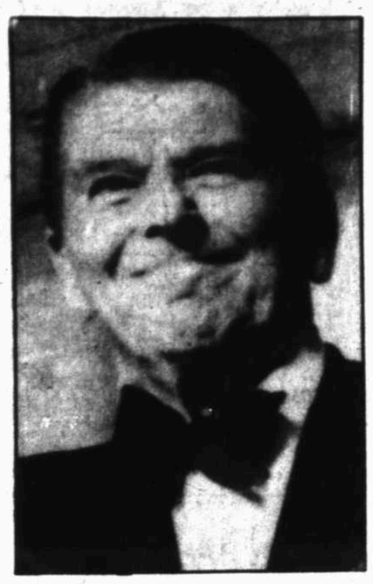

The president is to leave office Jan. 20, but the spokesman said Reagan chose to go ahead with the surgery while still in Washington because he preferred to make use of the "experts in this kind of surgery" at the military hospital.

"He wanted to have it done at Walter Reed...After he leaves office, of course, he's going to California," Fitzwater said.

The spokesman added that Reagan has been putting off the procedure for some time, even though his doctors had been suggesting it be done for several months.

Hutton said the physicians involved, besides himself, would be Dr. George Bogumill of Georgetown University, a consultant at Walter Reed; Col. Alan Smith and Maj. Paul Perlik of the Hand Service at Walter Reed.

The anesthesiologist will be Lt. Col Charles Gandy. Lt. Col. Lawrence Mohr of the White House medical unit and members of the Department of Medicine at Walter Reed will take part as consultants, Hutton said.

Grand jury files first indictments in Pentagon procurement case

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — A federal grand jury filed the first charges in the two-year Pentagon procurement investigation Friday, accusing a defense contractor, a Navy employee and five other men with crimes including conspiracy, bribery and theft of government property.

Assistant Attorney General Edward S.G. Dennis, head of the Justice Department's criminal division, called the first indictments in the complex case "very significant," but he and others said they were only the beginning of the prosecution phase of Operation Ill Wind.

"In the next few months, you'll see a great deal of additional activity," said U.S. Attorney Henry Hudson, who is leading the nationwide investigation into the Defense Department's $150 billion-a-year defense contracting system.

In addition to prosecuting people accused of illegal acts, Hudson said, a goal of the investigation was to have a "deterring effect" on corruption inside the Pentagon. At the heart of the case are allegations that private consultants bribed government employees for information that gave companies an edge in winning contracts.

Friday's indictment came a few hours after Hazeltine Corp. of Greenlawn, N.Y., two of its former employees and another man pleaded guilty to related charges stemming from the probe. Prosecutors said those who pleaded guilty to reduced charges are cooperating with the government.

The 86-page indictment, which has 27 counts, focuses on activities alleged to have been undertaken by Teledyne Electronics, a branch of Teledyne Industries of Newberry Park, Calif., and three men: Navy procurement specialist Stuart E. Berlin and private consultants Fred H. Lackner and William L. Parkin, a former Navy acquisitions official.

Specifically, the indictment charges that Teledyne and three of its officers agreed to pay Parkin $160,000 to assist them in obtaining a Navy contract related to radar worth $100 million.

To obtain the contract, the indictment contends Parkin paid Lackner, a California-based private consultant, who "in turn paid Stuart E. Berlin...for his assistance in manipulating the procurement process to insure that the...contract was awarded to Teledyne," Hudson said.

Berlin participated in various decisions within the Navy affecting the contract and is accused of giving Teledyne advance information so the company could tailor its bids, Hudson said.

The Justice Department said in an affidavit released this week that Berlin received about $1,000 every few months from Parkin and Lackner in exchange for documents.

If convicted of all charges, Berlin, Parkin and Lackner could face maximum penalties of 185 years in prison and fines of $5.5 million each, Hudson said at a news conference. Teledyne faces a fine of up to $6.5 million.

Also named in the indictment were Teledyne employees George H. Kaub, Eugene R. Sullivan and Dale Schnittjer. They could face confinement ranging between 50 and 85 years and fines of up to $2.5 million if convicted on all counts.

The overall conspiracy charge says the defendants worked together to defraud the Navy and the Air Force, to bribe a public official, to make false statements and to commit wire fraud.

In advance of the indictment, Teledyne's attorney, Thomas Patten, said the company had been offered a deal by the government but was unsatisfied with the terms. Attorneys for Parkin and Lackner have contended their clients did nothing wrong and would be vindicated in court.

The guilty pleas entered before Judge Claude M. Hilton in U.S. District Court were linked to the indictment. Those who pleaded guilty had relationships with Parkin and Lackner.

Hazeltine, a division of Emerson Electric Co., agreed to plead guilty to conspiracy to defraud the United States, conversion of government property and making false statements to the government, company attorney Scott Muller said.

Affidavits released last week suggested that Hazeltine hired Parkin to obtain inside information from Pentagon employees that would allow the company to compete for a $15.9 million contract for battlefield equipment.

Under terms of the agreement Hazeltine, which is cooperating with the government, agreed to pay fines of nearly $2 million, including court costs.

Two former Hazeltine employees, Joseph Colarusso, 58, who was the company's senior vice president, and Charles Furciniti, 54, who was a marketing representative, pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to defraud the government and commit wire fraud.

The maximum sentence they could face is five years in jail and a $250,000 fine. Hilton set sentencing for March 17.

Michael Savaides, 41, an employee of Teledyne Electronics, pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit bribery. He, too, could be sentenced to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Cold weather in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Gray skies return to the Permian Basin today as a cold front, which blasted the Pacific Northwest earlier in the week, pushes across the region.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, skies will be cloudy today and temperatures should be much colder.

The high will reach only into the upper 50s and winds will be out the west to northwest at 15 to 25 mph.

Tonight, cloudy skies and colder temperatures in the upper 20s are forecast.

By Sunday, temperatures will reach only to near 40 degrees under continued cloudy skies.

Friday's high of 74 was 1 degree cooler than the record of 75, set in 1935. The low Friday of 30 was 19 degrees warmer than the record of 11, set in 1970.

STATE

A stationary front stretched across the Lone Star State Friday, and its south-to-southwest wind flow allowed temperatures to soar to near-record levels in many areas.

The front stretched from near Longview to San Antonio to north of Laredo. Temperatures climbed into the 70s and 80s while the Panhandle and South Plains saw readings in the 60s. Breezes ranged from 10 to 20 miles per hour.

Fog was reported along the upper Gulf Coast while low-level cloudiness covered much of the coastal plains from Beaumont to Brownsville. High-level cloudiness covered far west and northwest Texas and skies were mostly clear over the rest of the state.

A cold front is forecast to move rapidly across Texas. Partly to mostly cloudy skies and cooler temperatures are expected with a chance of showers and thunderstorms over east and southeast Texas.

NATION

A winter storm socked the mid-Atlantic region on Friday, dumping up to 5 inches of snow, and a new storm blasted through the West, creating blizzard conditions in Idaho, where gusty winds whipped snow to cut visibility to zero.

A low pressure system over the Ohio Valley was absorbing Atlantic moisture, bringing snow from New York City to Philadelphia and Washington, D.C., Friday afternoon.

Winter storm warnings issued from southeast Pennsylvania through northern New Jersey into Long Island, where inland areas could receive 6 inches of snow.

Snow was falling throughout New York City. Two inches of snow was on the ground at La Guardia Airport Friday afternoon. In Washington, D.C., up to 5 inches of snow fell.

In Philadelphia, snow was heavy Friday afternoon, falling at a rate of an inch an hour. Three inches of new snow hit Philadelphia in the morning. Elsewhere in Pennsylvania, up to 4 inches were reported at West Chester, Harrisburg and Lansdale.

In New Jersey, up to 4½ inches of snow fell at Pitman, 3½ at Verga, Marlton and Hammonton.

In southeast Idaho, blinding snow was reported as winds gusted to 47 mph at Pocatello. Snowfall ranged from 2 inches at Magic Valley, to 3 to 5 inches across the southwest, and up to a foot in the mountains.

Utah's western valleys got up to 6 inches and as much as 18 inches fell in the Wasatch Mountains.

HIROHITO

Two rising-sun flags on the Imperial Palace were lowered to half-staff, the Tokyo and Osaka stock exchanges suspended their usual half-day's trading today and Japan headed into a mourning period that followed much quiet preparation as the emperor lingered on his deathbed for 3½ months.

The government called for six days of national mourning in all public offices, ordering flags lowered to half-staff and banning celebrations, ceremonies or dancing with official sponsorship, said Obuchi, the Cabinet spokesman.

"We ask for the cooperation of central government offices, regional government offices and the people in expressing mourning for the death of the emperor," Obuchi said.

Banks remained open for their usual half-day today.

By late morning several thousand people had gone to the palace in central Tokyo to sign a condolence register.

Takeshita's Cabinet was meeting later in the day to decide a name for the new emperor's reign. Hirohito's reign was known as Showa, and year Showa 64 on the Japanese calendar began on Jan. 1.

His funeral, likely to be held in about six weeks, will be a massive event to mark the figurative and literal turning of an era, since years in Japan are counted according to the emperor's reign.

Takeshita's government will be under pressure to handle the passage correctly, to honor Hirohito properly without giving too much rein to those who want to restore the prewar imperial aura of divinity.

Officials say Emperor Hirohito's state funeral will closely follow precedents set 62 years ago when his father, Emperor Taisho, died and was buried 45 days later.

"Although there have been many changes since then, including major changes in the constitution, in practical terms there won't be many alterations in the funeral rites," a palace official said.

If those precedents are followed, there will be at least 61 different ceremonies, rites and court appearances extending over at least two years. Many are directly linked to the Shinto religion, for which the emperor by tradition serves as chief priest.

Of the 61 ceremonies, the grand state funeral, or "taiso no rei," is expected in about 45 days, and will be one of three rites officially sponsored by the government.

The other ceremonies and rites are to be conducted by the imperial household, in legal conformity with the constitutional separation of religion and state.

Officials say Hirohito's body will be placed in a casket two or three days after his death. The formal state funeral in about 45 days is likely to include a procession of top officials and foreign dignitaries to a royal burial ground. Palace officials say he will not be cremated, in a departure from common practice in Japan.

But the palace official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Imperial Household Agency was "closely studying the ceremonies in the past," and would base the observances after Hirohito's death on them.

"The 45-day period following the death of Taisho was probably related to the extended time required for foreign dignitaries to travel to Japan, since only boat transportation was available then," he said. "But we generally are using the precedents of the past."

Saudi tanker sinks after explosion, fire

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A Saudi Arabian tanker split in two and sank while being towed to port Friday after an explosion and fire killed six crewmen in the southern Persian Gulf, shipping executives reported.

The 36,904-ton Sagheera may have been hit by a drifting mine when it was rocked by an explosion Thursday during a storm in the Strait of Hormuz, the gateway to the gulf, the executives said on condition of anonymity.

They said the vessel's Greek captain, Constantinos Sardinis, was among six crew members killed and that the Oman coast guard rescued the other 26 crewmen from lifeboats on Thursday. Two other Greeks were killed along with three Sri Lankan seamen.

The vessel split as it was being towed by a tug boat toward the coast of Oman. Its stern section sank quickly and the forward section went down several hours later, the executives said.

The explosion rocked the Sagheera and set it on fire as it was steaming into the storm-lashed Strait of Hormuz, headed for the Saudi Arabian port of Mina Saud.

The London-based Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit, which monitors shipping traffic around the world, reported that an explosion in the tanker's pump room triggered the fire.

It did not say what could have caused the blast. U.S. Navy officers have warned for weeks that mines laid during the Iran-Iraq war could be torn loose from their moorings during winter storms and sent adrift into shipping lanes.

Winds gusted more than 30 mph Thursday, whipping waves as high as 30 feet.

The stormy weather grounded a small Honduran freighter, the Moajil-5, off the southern Gulf port of Sharjah.

An Iranian ferry with about 420 passengers on board sailing from Sharjah to the Iranian port of Bandar Abbas was forced to anchor in the neighboring port of Ras Al-Khaimah, the shipping executives said.

The U.S. Navy has estimated as many as 200 mines are still in the gulf, despite mine sweeping operations by the United States and other countries.

LIBYA

Diplomats in the capital said if true, the report could mean Gadhafi feared his top military leaders might resist his orders in the heat of an attack.

The military chief, who like Gadhafi holds the highest rank in the Libyan military, is one of a handful of survivors of the clique that supported Gadhafi's 1969 coup, which overthrew the Western-backed monarchy.

At least two MiG-23 jet fighters sat at Tripoli's airport Friday, poised to enter the takeoff runway. On Thursday, no military planes were seen on any runway.

Soldiers with machine guns and protected by sandbags guarded the fortified complex of offices and housing where Gadhafi makes his headquarters in Tripoli. As usual, tanks with mounted anti-missile guns were parked inside.

The compound, ringed by 25-foot concrete walls topped by barbed wire, was a target of the 1986 U.S. raid. Gadhafi's whereabouts were not known.

The Western diplomat said that on Friday, as the capital closed for the Moslem Sabbath, rumors circulated the United States bombed the alleged chemical weapons plant at Rabta, 60 miles outside Tripoli.

The fears of a U.S. attack prompted many Tripoli residents to leave the city.

President Reagan has said he would not rule out military action against the disputed plant.

The diplomat also said he believed there were "contacts between the United States and Libya through a third, neutral country that has sufficient relations with both" since the air battle. He declined to name the country or provide further details.

Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley confirmed Thursday that Libya has attempted some back-channel contacts with the United States recently, but she refused to define the substance of the messages or how they were transmitted.

ABC News reported Friday that Gadhafi last week asked Italy's foreign minister to relay to Reagan a proposal to work out a deal so the United States would not bomb the plant.

The diplomat said the government was sending many civilians to visit or stay at the plant, including schoolchildren.

According to Libyan media, doctors and nurses have been holding a sit-in at the factory to "defend" it, and demonstrations have occurred there frequently in recent days.

The diplomat said the government apparently wanted to ensure that in the event of a raid, the plant would appear to be a civilian target.

SOLDIER

For years, Army officials and the family believed Houston was caught in a landslide on the coast of the snowy, rugged island. His body was never found, despite ground and aerial searches by his four fellow team members.

Jacqueline Gitchel, Houston's sister and closest surviving family member, said relatives never thought his body would be found because it was assumed to be buried.

But Mrs. Gitchel was surprised to learn last summer that a U.S. Fish and Wildlife team found a WWII vintage M-1 rifle and skeletal remains further inland on the 4,250-acre island.

The remains were found by a woman looking for a stone to pound tent pegs, Mrs. Gitchel said.

After an investigation by the Army, military officials confirmed the remains were Houston's, Mrs. Gitchel said.

Mrs. Gitchel said she hoped Friday's service at a mausoleum at the Restlawn Memorial Park in north-central Wisconsin was the final chapter in her brother's story.

Mrs. Gitchel, 69, remembered her younger brother as a young man who liked to hunt and fish. He had worked at a number of jobs, taken classes at a University of Wisconsin extension and worked at a Manitowoc shipyard before enlisting in 1942.

In the Army, he received arctic survival training and was assigned in 1944 to a weather observation squadron in the Aleutian islands. Once he volunteered for duty on the remote island, the family heard little from him because mail was picked up only about twice a year, Mrs. Gitchel said.

Mrs. Gitchel said she believes her mother once thought Houston may have been captured by the Japanese.

"I think she was sorry she didn't have a grave to take care of," Mrs. Gitchel said.

Before he died in 1980, Houston's father talked about going to see the island where his son died and wrote to shipping companies asking about passage without luck, Gitchel said.

"The father made a real strong effort to get to Buldir. I don't think he realized how remote it is," he said.

The rebels protected and healed the Americans for a month, when they were picked up by a Navy sea plane. The two groups never made contact again.

Mary Anne eventually became a nurse in the office of her husband, Dr. Valentino Ancheta, in Algoma, Wis., while McDole, 67, is now chief of the patrol division of the Polk County sheriff's office.

McDole said he, too, was overwhelmed by the call. "It's brought back some of the concerns of what happened to the family. I've thought about them all a lot. Then all of a sudden, boom, you get a call and I find out the captain is still alive and this is his daughter. I'm going to get a letter off to the captain today. I feel real good."

"All these years, I had been hoping to meet one of those men," she said. She and McDole said they both hope to attend a reunion next December.

Ms. Massey said the staffers were selected based upon their ability to pay for the trip. In addition, the ones who have expressed a sincere interest in pursuing a career in journalism were given due consideration.

So far, the staffers have not received their press credentials, although they are on the list of media approved to cover the inaugural events.

"They'll be covering, certainly, the band, the inauguration and the parade. From there, it's going to depend on what we can get them into," the advisor said.

For Tim Walker, a senior and editor of the high school publication, there's plenty of people on his list of potential sources. That includes senators, congressmen and inside staffers.

Although he doesn't expect it to happen, Walker expressed a reporter's ultimate hope.

"It would be great if I could actually talk to Bush," he said.

The salary reduction portion of the plan will include a 5 percent cut for administrative employees and a 2 percent cut for licensed nursing personnel not affected by the reduction in shift differential pay.

All other employees not affected by the shift differential reduction will take a 3 percent pay reduction.

Explaining the cost reduction plan at a news conference late Friday afternoon, Stephans said every effort had been made to develop the type of plan necessary to effectively meet the hospital's 1989 operating budget, while maintaining high quality patient care for the community.

NATION IN BRIEF

Developer fined for disturbing eagles' nest

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A judge fined a developer for disturbing the nest of a pair of bald eagles, an endangered species he claimed took up residence in his $9 million subdivision after it was 90 percent complete.

Stephen M. Fedders was fined $4,000 Thursday and his company, Flotilla Inc., was ordered to pay $20,000. He also must perform 100 hours of community service in a wildlife protection program under terms of a plea agreement.

Fedders pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges of disturbing the nest on Dec. 28, 1987.

Someone tipped off state wildlife officers that the nest was disturbed and Fedders was forced to devote 40 of the project's 176 acres as a preserve. The developer claimed the state's demand makes it impossible to complete or sell his Braden River Lake subdivision and he is on the brink of bankruptcy.

Fedders admitted telling workers to continue to work near the tree where the eagles had nested to try to frighten them off, but denied destroying the nest. He said he didn't know who rocked the tree with a bulldozer or who scaled the pine and removed the nest.

The birds built a new nest, and the agency ordered Fedders to create a 750-foot buffer zone around the site.

Minister sentenced in death

VICKSBURG, Miss. (AP) — A minister who preached a sermon hours after shooting his live-in girlfriend last summer was sentenced Friday to 15 years in prison.

The Rev. Jonathan Hamlin, 24, was originally charged with murder in the July 3 death of Lula Denise Sims, a 24-year-old mother of three. He pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of manslaughter Dec. 5 and was sentenced in Warren County Circuit Court.

Authorities say Hamlin shot Sims in the head and chest, buried her body in woods about 40 miles southeast of Vicksburg, and hours later preached at one of three Missionary Baptist churches he served.

About a week after Sims was discovered missing, Hamlin led authorities to her grave.

Hamlin, who is married and has three children, admitted in his guilty plea that he had killed Sims during an argument.

The preacher told the court that Sims fired a .22-caliber pistol at him. Hamlin said the two then fought over the weapon, which went off twice more, hitting Sims.

Georgia inmates riot

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Inmates at the Youthful Correctional Offender Institution rioted late Friday afternoon, and three tactical units were called in to quell the uprising, authorities said.

There was no immediate word on injuries in the riot, which broke out around 4:45 p.m. and was still in progress nearly an hour later.

Eighteen crowd control officers used tear gas to halt an uprising in the Kemper Building, one of three units at the prison near Milledgeville, said Kathy Drake, a spokeswoman for the Department of Corrections in Atlanta.

"When they did (use tear gas), they immediately began to quiet down. It then spilled over" into a second building, she said.

Ms. Drake said she did not know what set off the disturbance or how many inmates were involved. Despite the name of the lockup, the average age of the 970 inmates at the prison is 24, Ms. Drake said.

Two police tactical units from Milledgeville and one from Reidsville were on the scene, Ms. Drake said.

Inmates' actions rewarded

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Forty-eight inmates called for assistance, then locked themselves in their jail cells after their guard passed out, officials said.

The men were rewarded with ice cream at their next meal for following correct emergency procedure, as shown during a jail orientation film, according to Jail Commander Bob Conroy.

Conroy said Santa Clara County's newest jail with 48 cells surrounding a common dayroom was designed to foster better conditions by having officers mingle with inmates.

The incident occurred Tuesday when the lone correctional officer, Veronica Foley, passed out because of a suspected virus. She has recovered.

One inmate picked up a red emergency phone and explained the situation to officers in the building's central control room, then the prisoners went back to their cells and closed the doors, Conroy said.

Bradley's opponent quits

LOS ANGELES (AP) — City Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky dropped out of the mayor's race today, leaving Tom Bradley with no serious opposition in his bid for an unprecedented fifth term in the nation's second-largest city.

Yaroslavsky, 40, said he had concluded he would probably lose to Bradley. A councilman since 1975, Yaroslavsky said he will instead seek re-election.

City Council President John Ferraro said that without Yaroslavsky in the race, the 71-year-old Bradley should be elected easily

Couple didn't buy food because money 'belonged to God'

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — An unemployed former minister and his wife had more than $3,700 but didn't use the money to save their teen-age son from starvation because it "belonged to God," police said Friday.

"There's just no excuse for having money available...and having your son starve to death. It's just unjutifiable, both morally and legally," Luzerne County District Attorney Correale Stevens said Friday.

Larry and Leona Cottam were arraigned at Mercy Hospital late Thursday night on charges of criminal homicide in the death of their 14-year-old son, Eric.

The couple and their 12-year-old daughter, Laura, were listed in serious condition Friday with varying degrees of malnutrition, dehydration and vitamin deficiencies.

"Larry Cottam said he did not spend the money because it did not belong to them," according to an affidavit by state Trooper James J. Henry Jr. "He stated that the money was 'tithe' money and belonged to God.

"The money was 10 percent of all their earnings that was to be turned over to God. At that time, Leona Cottam stated that he shouldn't have shown the money to this officer because nobody would understand."

State police found the teen-ager dead Wednesday in the Cottam's modest Nuangola home, just outside Wilkes-Barre in northeastern Pennsylvania. The 5-foot-10 youth weighed just 69 pounds.

Police said they found no food in the house, but Cottam turned over $2,131 in cash, two $50 savings bonds, a Hazleton National Bank savings account book showing a balance of $1,281 and a Franklin First Federal checkbook showing a balance of $263, the affidavit said.

Cottam, 39, a former Seventh-day Adventist pastor who was fired from his job as a truck driver in March, said the family hadn't eaten since Nov. 22.

Pastor Paul Jensen, who works at the church's state headquarters in Reading, said 10 percent tithes are standard for Seventh-Day Adventists, but not at the expense of the family.

"We don't believe in starving people," Jensen said. "We don't believe you should neglect your family for your tithe."

Seventh-day Adventists are fundamentally evangelical and take the Bible as their sole rule of faith and practice.

In addition to the murder charges, Larry and Leona Cottam, 37, face two counts each of recklessly endangering another person and two counts each of endangering the welfare of children.

They could face the death penalty if convicted on the homicide charge. District Magistrate Ronald Swank set a preliminary hearing for Jan. 13.

The Cottams were placed under guard at the hospital and will be held without bail at Luzerne County Jail when they are released, which wasn't expected before Tuesday.

Laura Cottam was also being treated at hospital, spokesman Mark Stephens said.

Joseph Loftus-Vergari, executive director of the Luzerne County Children and Youth Services, said his agency on Thursday received a child abuse and neglect report about Laura Cottam and would investigate her case.

By law the agency must decide within 30 days whether the Cottams are fit to care for their daughter.

Cottam told police all four family members had discussed using the tithe to buy food, according to the affidavit.

"They all agreed they would not use the money to buy food because it belonged to God," the afffidavit said.

Dr. George E. Hudock Jr., Luzerne County Coroner, ruled Eric Cottam's death a homicide.

"I don't hold God responsible," Larry Cottam said Thursday night from Mercy Hospital. "The error was on my part, not God's.

"My wife and I feel terrible about Eric's death, but my faith in God is not shaken," said Cottam, who was arraigned at the hospital as he sat in a wheelchair with an intravenous tube running from his left arm.

The Cottams' neighbors said the family was friendly but reclusive, rarely leaving their two-story home at the end of a dead end road. Neighbors also said the family was too proud to accept handouts, believing God would provide for them.

Cottam was pastor of four local Seventh-day Adventist churches, with a total congregation of about 250, when he was transferred to Pittsburgh. He lost the post in 1985 and the family moved back to Nuangola.

Roy Dieffenbach, Cottam's former boss at Norandex Inc. in Wilkes-Barre, said he fired Cottam in March in a dispute over the condition of a truck Cottam was supposed to drive.

Dead cadet's parents settle with academy

FARMINGTON, Maine (AP) — The parents of a cadet killed by a mob while on a training cruise on a Portuguese island have settled a lawsuit for an undisclosed sum, attorneys said Friday.

Leroy and Grace Blauvelt, the parents of Maine Maritime Academy cadet Paul S. Blauvelt, 19, sued the academy last June for $350,000, charging the academy with allowing their son to suffer "great physical and mental pain, shock and agony."

None of the parties would disclose the amount, but Steven Silin, an attorney for Blauvelt's parents, said the settlement was fair.

State law limits recovery against state entities such as the academy to $300,000, and the settlement reached in December was "far less than that," said attorney Thomas F. Monaghan, who represents the academy's insurance companies.

Blauvelt was one of 350 cadets on the academy's ship, State of Maine, when it docked for a spring training cruise in June 1986 on Madeira, about 400 miles off the West African coast in the Atlantic Ocean.

Midshipmen on shore leave and islanders engaged in a brawl at a disco. Blauvelt was not involved in the fight, but when he returned to the dock early in the morning, he was met by a pipe-wielding gang, pulled from his taxi and beaten.

The academy freshman staggered away from his attackers and fell into the harbor and drowned.

Interior of taxi cab decorated

CHICAGO (AP) — Step inside Yogi Ward's taxi and enter a fantasyland where the driver is king and every day's a holiday.

Flashing lights rim the ceiling and tinsel brushes a rider's head as the car rumbles through city streets.

The decor changes with the season, but Ward, armed with phone, beeper and taped words of wisdom, remains the same.

Ward, 44, figures he'll keep the New Year's decorations for a few weeks, before it's time to bring out the pink paper hearts, arrows and cupids for Valentine's Day.

"It's cheerful, it's an idealistic type of thing, it's a situation that keeps a lot of stress off of you and it's a happy cab," said Ward, who owns the cab and drives for Checker Taxi Co.

Ward said he decided to decorate his taxi a few years ago, when he was working for another cab company.

"I had seen a few cabs around the city that had some ornaments and they were not displayed correctly, as I would think they should have been," Ward said.

"So I decided to display them in the proper way," he said while cruising north on a Chicago expressway.

Ward serached the city's variety stores, picking up bundles of tacky decorations for every occasion.

"I give away little hearts and candies for Valentine's Day," he said. "St. Patrick's Day, I mostly have those four-leaf clovers and have the Irish green (on) different things in the car."

"Everyone loves it and nobody wants me to take the decorations down," he said. "People are waving at me down the street. I had a police paddy wagon wave at me. State troopers wave at me. An ambulance tipped their lights at me.

"I had one lady that came to the cab and said, ' "Ooh, the Christmas cab is here!" '

Another woman took one look at his cab and said, ' "That's just too Christmassy.' She decided that she'd wait for the next cab," he recalled.

But there's more to Ward's cab than decorations. He plays cassettes of his own weather reports, news items, and offers words of wisdom.

"If you're out there...smoking, bebopping or doing something that you're not supposed to be doing...the police are out in droves and they'll be waiting for you," says Ward's tape for the New Year.

He's working on his Valentine's Day message.

For those who think one ride with Ward is not enough, he hands out gold business cards with the number of his car phone, his beeper number, his home number, and a phone number for an answering service.

Beverly Morris, a 36-year-old advertising saleswoman, has been a Ward customer for about five years.

"It's a nice refreshing thing...especially the Christmas (decorations)," she said. "You walk in and it really makes you feel like Christmas."

But even Mrs. Morris gets tired of the hoopla.

"Sometimes I have to act like I'm asleep," she said. "He'll just keep talking."

Memorial for Pres. Harding being restored

MARION, Ohio (AP) — Forrest Dotson stood guard over the burial vault of President Warren G. Harding when the cornerstone was laid for the Harding Memorial on May 30, 1926.

Now, after watching for years as the memorial was ravaged by weather, pigeons and vandals, he hopes to be around when a facelift is completed on the burial place of the 29th president and Mrs. Harding.

"It's hard to replace something like that," said Dotson as he visited the marble monument.

The Ohio Historical Society is spending $538,000 on the restoration — the most extensive since it was completed in 1927 at a cost of $783,000.

Dotson was a member of a U.S. Army unit stationed at Fort Hayes in Columbus, which drew the assignment of guarding Harding's burial vault at the Marion cemetery.

"Sometimes Mrs. Harding would drive by very slowly," he says. "But she never got out of the car.

"We had to be real serious," says Dotson, 82. "One day a colonel in civilian clothes came by and asked one soldier, 'Is Harding really in there?' The boy said, 'No, he's out to lunch. He'll be back shortly.' They sent that boy back to camp."

Harding was elected in 1920 after his famous front-porch campaign that brought thousands of visitors to his Marion home. He died in San Francisco in 1923.

"When he died, he was described as the most popular president since Lincoln," says Robert O. Rupp, an assistant professor of history at the Ohio State University branch campus in Marion.

A private organization was established to build a memorial, and hundreds of thousands of Americans contributed money. More than 200,000 schoolchildren sent pennies.

"This is a monument that shows the popularity of Harding and the grief of the nation at his sudden death," Rupp says.

But as the memorial went up, Harding's popularity waned. Scandals involving Cabinet officers came to light. An extramarital affair was revealed, further damaging the late president's reputation.

By 1927, Harding's successors wanted to maintain their distance. The Harding Memorial was dedicated in 1931 by President Herbert Hoover.

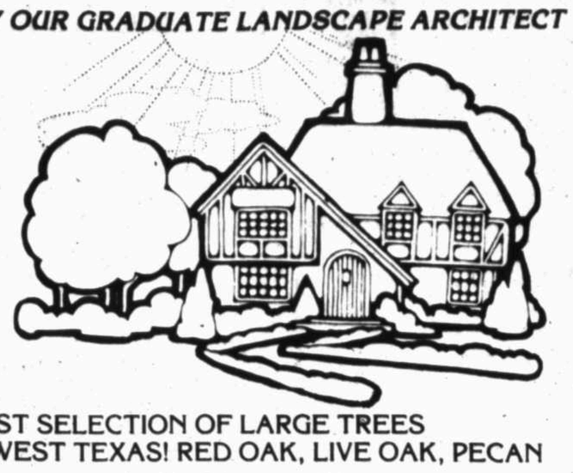

Built of white Georgia marble, the circular monument is 80 feet in diameter and 50 feet high.

From a distance, it appears to be an exterior colonnade hiding an interior wall with more columns.

According to Harding's wishes, it is open to the sky, and plantings surround the black granite tombstones of Harding and his wife, Florence.

Hightower confirms he won't be running for Senate

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower lowered his political sights Friday and formally bowed out of the 1990 U.S. Senate race, intensifying speculation about which Texas Democrat might tackle incumbent Republican Phil Gramm.

Hightower confirmed at a news conference the word his staff leaked earlier this week — that he plans to seek re-election and lead "populist" organizing efforts rather than run for the Senate.

Two prominent Democrats who both are aiming at the 1990 governor's race — Attorney General Jim Mattox and Treasurer Ann Richards — each suggested Friday that the other would make a good Senate candidate.

Mattox said Ms. Richards' fundraising base is outside of Texas and that he thinks she would be better suited for a Senate run. "I think we'll find that in the end, she'd make a far better candidate for that race. Obviously, you don't want to have your strongest candidates in the same race together," he said.

Ms. Richards rejected that. She said she has raised plenty of money to put her on track for a competitive gubernatorial bid and suggested that one-time congressman Mattox look at a Gramm challenge.

"I'm not at all interested in making a race for the Senate. I think that it would be admirable if Attorney General Mattox would like to make the Senate race," she said.

Across the state, names of Democratic politicians were surfacing as possibile contenders for a fight with Gramm.

The expanding list included San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, former Gov. Mark White, Dallas Congressman John Bryant, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and U.S. Reps. Mike Andrews and Mickey Leland, both of Houston.

While choosing not to face Gramm, Hightower insisted the first-term Republican is vulnerable.

"Phil Gramm could be had," Hightower said, claiming he could have raised $8 million to $10 million for the challenge and that Gramm's lead in opinion polls isn't insurmountable. He also rejected any suggestion that Gramm's threat to raise $20 million if necessary played a part in his decsion.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower discusses reasons why he won't be running for the U.S. Senate in 1990. He confirmed he woul seek re-election instead.

Suspect said voice in his head told him to kill Dallas deputy

Alfonzo Seward...told Detective Stan McNear...that the voice told him to take Deputy Suzanne Kays' gun and kill her, according to police.

DALLAS (AP) — An Arkansas man told a homicide investigator that he shot a Dallas County deputy because a voice in his head told him to, but a judge said a psychiatrist who examined the suspect last month reported he had faked insanity to stay in jail.

Alfonzo Seward, 37, of Forrest City, Ark., told Detective Stan McNear at Parkland Memorial Hospital earlier this week that the voice told him to take Deputy Suzanne Kays' gun and kill her, according to police.

McNear on Friday referred all calls about Seward's statement to Deputy Police Chief Ray Hawkins, who confirmed the statement but declined to release more information.

Hawkins, in a prepared statement, told The Associated Press: "As a matter of policy, we do not acknowledge the existence or lack of a voluntary statement. It was unfortunate that that information was released. An appropriate time would have been at the trial."

Seward has been charged with capital murder, attempted capital murder and attempted murder in the shooting Wednesday at the Lew Sterrett Justice Center.

Seward's mental state could become a factor in his court case.

Under Texas law, a person arrested for a criminal offense cannot be tried if found mentally incompetent.

If it is determined the defendant was insane at the time of the offense, the court is compelled to enter a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity. The defendant could be committed to a mental hospital, but state law also says he must be released as soon as behavior is stabilized.

Kays, a top graduate of the Dallas County Sheriff's Academy last week, was killed with her own gun on her second day on the job. She was trying to lead Seward out of a restricted hallway of the jail he had been released from hours before.

Officials said Seward had been jailed at Lew Sterrett on Monday after he failed to pay a restaurant bill, saying Jesus would pick up the tab. He was released a day early, six hours before Kays was shot, when a court clerk misread his release date.

Dallas police who heard gunfire in the jailhouse confronted Seward in another hallway and shot him three times in an ankle, the lower abdomen and buttocks. He was in fair condition Friday at Parkland, officials said.

Seward had no history of violent crimes, but had been arrested by Forrest City police for minor thefts, loitering and other incidents during the past five years. He arrived in Dallas in November.

He had been arrested five times since Nov. 9 on misdemeanor theft or trespassing charges. In each case, he was released within days either pending trial or after being found guilty and serving a minimal sentence.

Seward had been treated at least eight times over the last 12 years at Arkansas, Tennessee and Michigan mental institutions, according to records compiled by The Dallas Morning News.

A Dallas psychiatrist who examined Seward last month reported that he was faking insanity to stay in jail, The Morning News quoted state District Judge Keith Dean as saying.

Dean's clerk said he was not in court Friday afternoon and Dean did not immediately answer a message left by The Associated Press on his home telephone answering machine.

Suit seeks approval for aliens to apply for asylum at destination

HARLINGEN (AP) — The Immigration and Naturalization Service on Friday more than doubled its political asylum staff in South Texas, but faced a lawsuit and criticism that new INS procedures are flooding the area with displaced Central Americans living in makeshift tents and condemned buildings.

Immigration attorneys filed suit Friday against the INS, seeking to force the agency to once again allow the immigrants to travel to their U.S. destinations to apply for asylum.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Brownsville, seeks to reverse INS rules that since Dec. 16 have made it impossible for most asylum-seekers to travel out of South Texas or work while awaiting approval or denial of their cases, a period of at least 30 days.

INS officials in Washington declined comment on the suit, which they had not seen.

"It would allow the asylum applicant to have the interview and the adjudication of the asylum claim heard and decided by the INS office nearest their intended residence in the U.S.," said Robert Rubin, who heads the national Immigrant and Refugee Rights Project for the San Francisco Lawyers' Committee for Urban Affairs.

Rubin and Brownsville immigration attorney Linda Yanez are lead attorneys in the suit filed against U.S. Attorney General Richard Thornburgh and INS Commissioner Allen Nelson.

Most Central Americans enter the United States illegally in the Brownsville area of the Lower Rio Grande Valley, the nearest land point to Central America.

Officials with the INS' Harlingen District said the nine personnel added Friday, bringing the total of Harlingen asylum adjudicators to 16, will speed up processing and eliminate a backlog.

"Our ability to process applications has more than doubled," said Virginia Kice, INS spokeswoman in Harlingen. "We'll be able to interview and process almost 300 individuals a day" compared to the 115 it has averaged with seven adjudicators.

The lawsuit accuses the INS of implementing a policy change without allowing public comment; of denying aliens access to the asylum process and access to counsel; and improperly restricting the right to work.

AP Laserphoto

Maria Esther Flores, 45, of El Salvador, one of more than 150 Central Americans living at a makeshift campsite in Brownsville, cleans a duck.

It cites the case of a 69-year-old Nicaraguan woman who said she slept outside the INS office in Harlingen for three nights to keep her place in line, then was told she needed a fingerprint card. She said she then walked four miles to the Harlingen Police Department to obtain the prints, then returned to the INS office where she again slept outside to keep her place.

Before Dec. 16, asylum-seekers in Harlingen were allowed to travel to their U.S. destinations to apply for asylum, often Miami or Los Angeles.

INS officials said they adopted the new procedure in Harlingen to reduce huge case backlogs in those cities and to curb abuses of the system that delayed processing for legitimate asylum cases. They also said the new procedure apparently has begun to deter frivolous claims, with the more than 2,000 a week in early December reduced to about 1,000 a week since Dec. 16.

Security measures could cost DFW 'million of dollars'

GRAPEVINE (AP) — New security measures mandated this week by the federal government could cost Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport "tens of millions of dollars" and maybe more, an airport spokesman said.

"It will be an extraordinary expense to the airport and the airlines alike," airport spokesman Joe Dealey Jr. said Thursday.

"I don't want to leave you with the impression that we don't place a high value on security. I think our track record speaks for itself," Dealey said. "But at the same time I think that every airport...is concerned about how much of an investment will be required."

The Transportation Department announced Wednesday that it plans to impose tighter restrictions on employee access in the nation's 270 largest airports.

Specific requirements have yet to be formulated, but they may require airports to install computer-controlled identification systems or implement other elaborate procedures to limit access to baggage areas and aircraft.

Large airports such as DFW will be required to install the systems by early 1991.

Group developing proposal for rural regional airport

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — A real estate developer and a team of planners have been working for about a year on a proposal to build a rural regional airport on 30,000 acres in Montague County, a newspaper reported Friday.

Developer Joe Burris met with landowners and business leaders in Wichita Falls to discuss the "wayport," a regional airport that would relieve air traffic congestion in the Southwest, the Times Record News reported Frdiay.

The city's Board of Commerce and Industry said it will sponsor a meeting Feb. 7 that will include a Federal Aviation Administration official who advocates construction of wayports.

Among those attending the meeting will be James E. Sheppard, manager of the district FAA office in Orlando, Fla., and Dr. Louis Rodriguez, commerce board president.

Wayports would be in unused airspace and in rural, unpopulated areas to serve a large regional or multi-state area, according to an overview paper produced by Sheppard. "Passengers would be on the 'way' and would not originate or terminate at a wayport," the paper says.

The FAA has given Sheppard permission to discuss his idea with officials around the country, but the agency has not officially embraced it. Sheppard said he's not familiar with the specific proposal for an airport in Montague County.

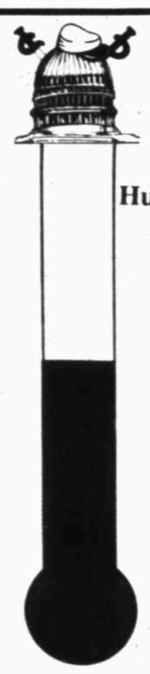

"I think it's great that this has gone from theory or concept to the real world," he said.

So far, no recommendation concerning an airport site in Montague County has been presented to FAA officials in Washington, although they've expressed a willingness to listen, said Marc Lubin, legislative aide to Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas.

Burris said when he first heard about a proposal similar to Sheppard's, which called for the construction of "super-hub" airports, he was immediately interested.

However, FAA officials in Fort Worth told him that a Denton-area site would be too close to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport airspace. "They said if it was going to work, it had to be placed up, toward Oklahoma," Burris said. "After looking at these considerations, we looked around and felt that Montague County would be a good site."

Burris met with about 30 landowners in the area and "they seemed to be very favorable toward it," he said. "We haven't had any negative feedback, as far as the selling of their land."

NCAA puts Oklahoma State's Heisman in TV closet

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — No bowls for three years. No TV for two. But one more year of Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders. That was the word Friday at Oklahoma State, placed on four years' probation by the NCAA.

The football team was banned from bowl games for three years and television appearances for two years as part of its penalty for recruiting violations. One more infraction and the Cowboys could draw the "death penalty."

"I'll be back at Oklahoma State next year," the junior running back said.

One NCAA investigator said the penalty was the most severe since Southern Methodist football in 1987 received the most extreme punishment, the death penalty, which shut down the program.

Because of the three-year ban on postseason play, NCAA rules would allow players who still have three years of eligibility, or less, remaining to transfer to other schools and play.

"Barry Sanders could play for anybody he wants next year," NCAA enforcement director David Berst said.

But Sanders said he wouldn't abandon the Cowboys, who finished the season ranked 11th at 10-2, not even for the NFL.

"It would be nice to sign for all those millions. I'm sure you can appreciate that. That can wait." "Barry Sanders will be back at Oklahoma State next year, and they won't be able to tackle him then, either," Coach Pat Jones said.

More on 4B

The penalty comes three weeks after the NCAA hit the University of Oklahoma with three years' probation. The Sooners cannot play in bowl games after the 1989 and 1990 seasons, will be kept off television in 1989 and must reduce their scholarships and paid recruiting visits.

The NCAA's Committee on Infractions found more than 40 recruiting violations, including the purchase of cars and cash payments made to football players by boosters.

Oklahoma State's football staffs and athletic representatives have been operating "without regard for NCAA rules for most of the period since 1972," the NCAA's report said.

It also warned that "the full force of the so-called death penalty for repeat major violators ... faces the university and its supporters in the event of any serious violation in the foreseeble future."

Under the death penalty, a sports program is suspended and all games are canceled.

The infractions committee said the most serious finding involved a former assistant who became involved in a bidding war with a "very talented and highly visible prospective student athlete."

The NCAA report said the athlete received $5,000 cash after signing his letter of intent to play at Oklahoma State, and payments in cash averaging $125 during the first year of enrollment and $200 during the second year.

The athlete was provided with an "expensive and distinctive" sports car at no cost, the NCAA report said, with payments for the car and insurance being made by three university boosters.

Earlier reports have said All-America wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes was at the center of the NCAA's investigation. Dykes reportedly received immunity from the NCAA for his testimony about the recruiting practices of Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Texas A&M and Illinois.

The former assistant is believed to be Willie Anderson, who served as recruiting coordinator when Dykes was recruited. Anderson was release early 1986.

The report said the assistant coach had been cited previously by the committee for unethical conduct for violations at another school that received severe sanctions.

Hosses defeat Rebels

ODESSA — Patrick Brown provided the offense and the entire team provided the defense as Odessa High downed Midland Lee 54-45 in District 4-5A play Friday night.

Brown scored 25 points, 17 in the second half, while the defense hustled to hold the Rebels to 14 points in the middle two quarters.

The Bronchos are now the top team in the district with a perfect 2-0 record, while the Rebs fall to 1-1 in district play. Lee Coach Paul Stueckler had words of praise for the Odessa team following the game, stating, "They did a real good job with their defense, they had real good quickness on the floor. They outquicked us on defense and they outquicked us on offense. They showed a lot of poise with their four corners business, isolated us, and made us look foolish with it."

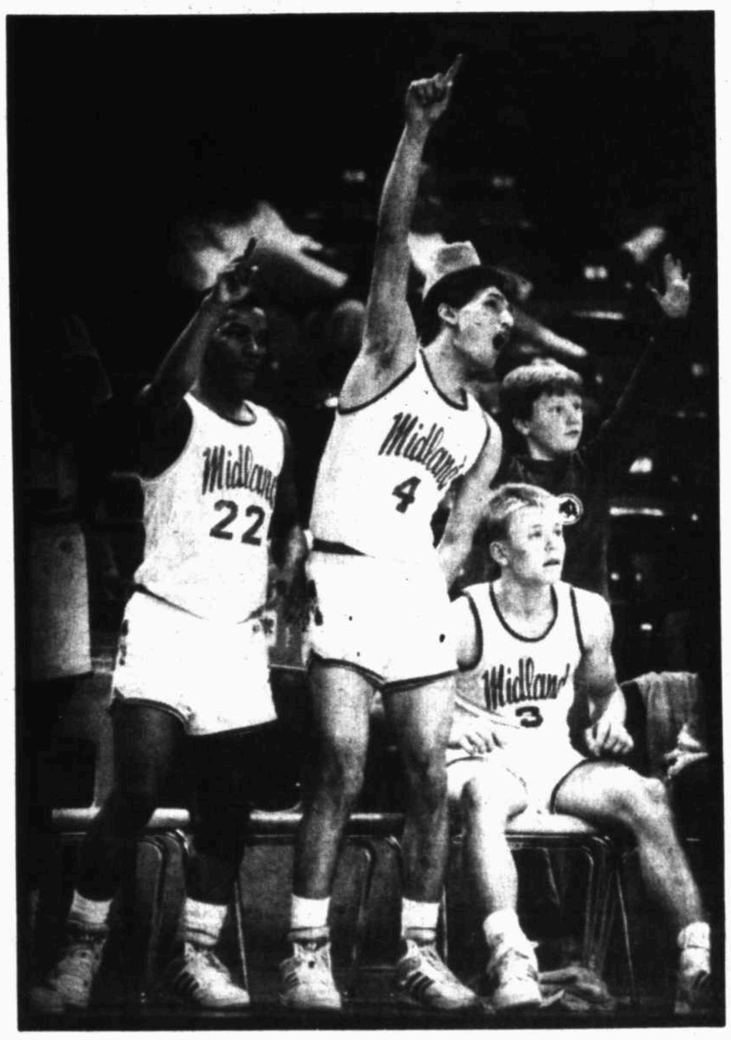

The game started as if the fans would be treated to an offensive show, Lee leading 16-14 after the first period. The middle two quarters were a different story as Odessa gained a halftime 23-22 advantage by outscoring Lee 9-6 in the second quarter. In the third period, the Bronchos outscored the Rebels 10-8 to lead 33-30 entering the final eight minutes of the game. Patrick Brown sparked the Odessa offense in the third quarter with eight straight points, starting at the 3:40 mark in the period, the first score Odessa put on the board that quarter.

The fourth quarter began with Jared Edwards of Lee carrying the hot hand. Edwards nailed a three-point field goal with 6:48 left in the game and then scored the next six points for the Rebels. Midway through the last period, Lee had the lead 42-41 following a Ed Hartmann field goal. The game's next 10 points though would be scored by Odessa High, beginning with two free throws by Damien Bars, giving the Bronchos a one-point lead they would never relinquish. Patrick Brown iced the game with a late three-point play.

Midland Lee's leading scorer on the season, Torval Crisp, was held to two points by the stingy Odessa defense. His only score came in the second quarter, a layup with 1:30 remaining, after a steal. Lee's top scorer was Edwards, with 14, nine at the start of the fourth quarter. Darren Dortch, after scoring 19 against Midland High earlier in the week, tallied nine Friday, all in the first half. Ed Brown also scored nine points for Lee.

Along with Brown's 25, the other double figure scorer for Odessa was Walter McCoy, who finished with 11. The Bronchos were hurt by poor free throw shooting...for the game, 10 of 20 from the line...but only three of 11 in the first three quarters, including missing the front end of five

Bulldogs defeat Mojo

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland High Bulldogs couldn't hit the broad side of a backboard at Chaparral Center Friday night, but the Purple Pack played good enough defense to spill Odessa Permian, 61-52, to jump back into the thick of the District 4-5A basketball race.

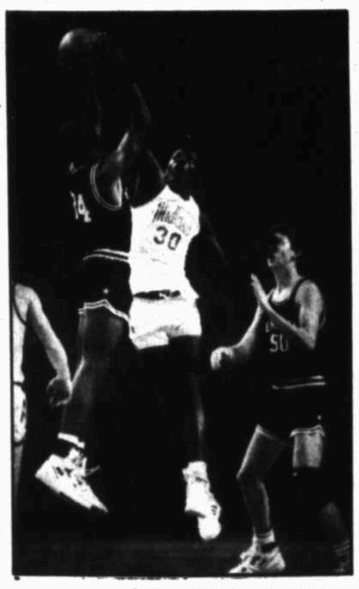

The Bulldogs hit just 37 percent from the field, but even that total was aided by a nine of 16 effort in the fourth quarter when the Pack produced a spurt to glide past the Panthers.

MHS hit only 31 percent through the first three frames, allowing Permian to erase two seven-point leads. In fact the Panthers led 44-42 at the end of three periods after the Bulldogs experienced an eight-point third period on a 4-of-17 shooting eye.

"Our shooting was horrid," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "But I think it was one of our better defensive outings of the year. We didn't shoot well and we are still having problems on the boards. We're certainly not blocking out on free throws."

GREG LEWIS, who led all Bulldogs with 14 points, got six in the fourth period run that eventually killed Permian. Bart Saddler, who scored 13 points and seven in the fourth period, gave MHS a 47-44 lead with 6:22 left in the game and the Pack never trailed again. Also, Aundria Shaw had one of his better outings of the season with 12 points.

"Bart (Saddler) has started 18 games for me, but he didn't start tonight," said Stephenson. "He hasn't been playing very well and sometimes you have to shake a kid up. I don't know if he will start in our next game or not, but I thought he played very well. In fact, our guard play was good overall."

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Midland High's Ben Wilson ...blocking Permian's Sean Butler

Guard Dorey Thompson scored all 10 of his points in the first half.

Saddler said, "We didn't get nervous when we got behind. We just relaxed and did what we had to do."

Shaw said, "I've been practicing on my shot all week and Permian gave it to me and I took it."

DEXTURE Young, who scored 17 points against Midland Lee Tuesday, was 0-for-8 against Permian, leaving him to say, "The shot comes and goes, but I promise it will get better."

Tracey Bascus also had a bad shooting night, hitting four of 15 from the field. MHS only shot four free throws in the game, hitting three of them.

Permian was led by 12 points each from Sean Butler and Cory Williamson, but the thorn was Shawn Almond, who hit nine of his 11 points in the third period to give Permian a brief lead. Almond had 18 against Odessa High Tuesday.

"We just let Midland get inside too much there at the end," said Permian coach Charles Pattillo. "We probably stayed in our gimmick defense about a minute too long in the fourth period and Shaw and Lewis heated up on us."

MHS is now 9-10 on the year and 1-1 in 4-5A play while Permian is 4-11 and 0-2. MHS will host Hobbs, N.M., Tuesday at the MHS gym in a non-conference game while Permian hosts league favorite Abilene High Tuesday.

In junior varsity action, MHS took a 71-62 win over Permian with Michael Wright hitting 17 points. Jeff O'Neal and Keith Gilbreath each had 12 and Roderick Hickey added 10 points. Permian was led by a game high 25 points from D.J. Ross.

In sophomore play, MHS got 32 points from Eric Johnson in a 77-5(victory. Eric is the younger brother of former MHS star Kenneth Johnson.

Midland Lee girls defeat Odessa High, 79-46

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee girls basketball team learned what it's like to lean on past accomplishments.

No fun.

After getting a licking in the first quarter of Friday's District 4-5A showdown with Odessa High, the Lady Rebs exploded offensively and played airtight defense in a 79-46 romp at the LHS gym for their fifth straight win.

The win gives Lee, 14-5 overall and 3-1 in district play, sole possession of second place in the fledgling district race. District leader Abilene Cooper drubbed winless San Angelo Central 66-52 to remain one-half game ahead of the Lady Rebs, while Abilene High fell a game behind Lee despite pounding Wichita Falls 61-29 in non-district play.

AFTER Odessa High busted the LHS press to take a 15-6 first quarter lead, the Bronchos got bucked when Lee held the visitors scoreless for all but a 77-second stretch midway through the second period.

OHS was held without a field goal for a six-minute, 39-second run in the first half. After Michelle Griffin hit a medium-range set shot with 2:30 left in the period, the Bronchos went without a field goal for almost a full eight minutes until backup post Stephanie Graham hit a 15-footer with 2:35 left in the third period.

Meanwhile, Lee was getting balanced scoring for a change — posting four players into double figures. Monica Ramirez led the Lady Rebs as usual with 22 points, but Kim Davis added 13, Mary Ann Isom 12 and Gina Navarrete 10.

Ramirez got her game-high total despite getting blanked by a sagging Odessa defense in the first quarter and sitting out most of the third period with foul trouble.

But her absence then opened things up for Davis to post double figures for only the second time this season, while Isom made double digits for the eighth straight game.

IT DIDN'T appear that any Lee player would approach double figures based on an abysmal one-for-10 shooting performance in the first quarter, while Griffin was spearheading Odessa to a 15-6 lead with five points and a like number of assists.

"They ran through our press like we were standing still," Lee coach Shirley Stephenson said. "But I felt like we needed to stay with the press anyway."

The persistence paid off when Lee ran off 14 unanswered points at the beginning of the second quarter to take the lead for good. The Lady Rebs outscored Odessa 73-31 in the last three quarters.

OHS mentor June Owen was at a loss to explain the Broncho collapse.

"The momentum was on our side," she said. "I guess Lee wasn't playing like they were capable of playing, but whenever they started, they didn't stop."

Levy wants huddle

By BARRY WILNER

CINCINNATI (AP) — Marv Levy is mad and he isn't going to take it anymore.

What has the Bills' coach upset is the way Cincinnati uses the no-huddle offense — he strongly suggested Friday that the Bengals go to it for the wrong reasons.

AFC

"I have nothing against the no-huddle," Levy said. "But it should not be a ploy to draw a penalty.

"Over the years, an agreement has been made among the coaches not to use a ploy to go outside the spirit of the rules. I know the league doesn't want this and they asked us not to go outside the bounds of the agreement."

Levy received a call from Bengals coach Sam Wyche this week and each assured the other there would be no faking of penalties to allow for defensive substitutions, something Seattle was accused of doing when it lost to Cincinnati last week.

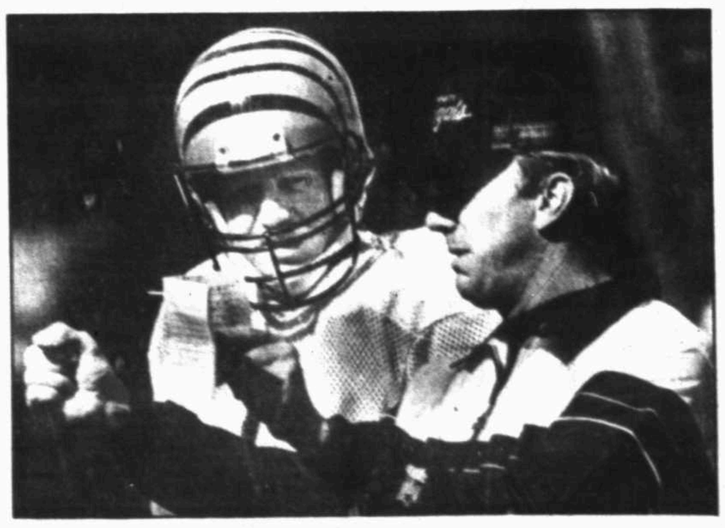

"I assured Sam we wouldn't as long as you don't quick snap, as long as we have an opportunity to get people on the field," Levy said. "He said he couldn't assure me of that.

"He told me they have gotten eight or 10 penalties that way. Those are his words.

"Their ploy is when they see 12 or 13 (defensive) men on the field, the receivers go deep and they snap the ball and either get a touchdown or a penalty.

"The no-huddle is perfectly legitimate, as long as it doesn't go outside the spirit of the rules."

McMahon to start

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Call the NFC title game the game for the championship of the half-decade, at least.

Consider the cast when the Chicago Bears and San Francisco 49ers meet at Soldier Field Sunday:

NFC

Two high-profile coaches radically different in style but markedly similar in success — cool, intellecttal Bill Walsh of the 49ers vs. volatile, emotional Mike Ditka of the Bears. Ditka the victim of a mid-season heart attack; Walsh considering stepping down after a decade running the 49ers.

Two high-profile quarterbacks — Joe Montana, who won a Super Bowl in early and mid-career and is now seeking his third at 32 vs. Jim McMahon, who quarterbacked the Bears to the 1986 championship.

McMahon, who publicly lobbied to start at quarterback in the NFC championship game, was given the starting job Friday by Ditka.

"Jim McMahon will start at quarterback," Ditka said, ending a week of suspense by naming him to start over ailing Mike Tomczak, who started against Philadelphia last week. "He's (McMahon) the healiest," Ditka said. I don't know if Mike can take the hits."

The interesting matchups don't end at quarterback.

The NFL's offensive player of the year, San Francisco running back Roger Craig, vs. the defensive player, Mike Singletary. Yet the offensive-minded 49ers, featuring Montana, Jerry Rice and Roger Craig, were third in the NFL on defense, one spot behind the Bears, who have been known for their defense.

So if the game isn't for the right to be called "The team of the '80s," — "Talk to the people in Washington about that," Ditka says — it certainly matches the most successful franchises of the past five years.

Starting in 1984 and excluding the three "replacement games" played during last season's strike, Chicago has the best 5-year regular-season record in the NFL, a 60-16 regular-season somewhat inflated by a 29-1 record against Detroit, Tampa Bay and Green Bay, three NFC Central rivals consistently among the NFL's patsies.

San Francisco is 55-20-1, followed by Denver, 51-24-1, the New York Giants, 49-27 and the "people in Washington" at 48-28, 7-9 this year after winning last season's Super Bowl. The Redskins also went to the Super Bowl twice in the first half of the decade, winning after the 1982 season and losing after 1983.

Yet the Bears and 49ers arrive here each after going without a playoff win since their Super Bowl victories — the Bears losing two straight to the Redskins before last week's fog-shrouded 20-12 win over Philadelphia; the 49ers losing twice to the Giants and once to the Vikings before their 34-9 revenge win over Minnesota last Sunday.

Each team has some elements in its favor — in Chicago's case, "elements" being the key word.

The Bears, who lost at San Francisco 23-0 in the 1984 title game, are slightly favored because they're home and the home team has won the last eight NFC title games. San Francisco, on the other hand, is 0-4 in road playoff games since beating the Vikings 17-14 in 1970, when the oldest 49ers were just starting high school and the youngest not yet in kindergarten.

Moreover, the game is likely to be played in "Bear weather," — temperatures in the 20s, although the fog that obscured the second half of last week's win over Philadelphia is unlikely to recur.

One injury — the inevitable one to McMahon — led to the quarterback controversy. It occurred to his left knee on Oct. 30 against New England and gave the job to Tomczak.

Tomczak, in turn, separated his left shouler a month later but was back for last week's game with the Eagles.

Tomczak reinjured the shoulder last Saturday but had recovered sufficiently to play Sunday — to the dismay of some teammates and Chicago fans, who voted nearly 2-1 in a telephone poll for McMahon, the man who quarterbacked the Bears to their first Super Bowl.

The 49ers have recovered from a 6-5 start that included the loss to the Bears at Soldier Field to win five of their last six — the only loss a 38-16 thrashing by the Los Angeles Rams after they had clinched the NFC West. It put the Rams in the playoffs and knocked the Giants out and led New York quarterback Phil Simms to say of the 49ers: "They lay down like dogs."

The dogs that will be at Soldier Field now are more like Dobermans — the only team in the NFL to rank in the top ten in all six offensive and defensive categories. Rice, though he was named All-Pro after averaging 20.4 yards on 64 catches, is just getting healthy after ankle troubles and had three touchdown catches last week.

LEE

While Ramirez scored only six points in the first half, she managed to set several teammates for easy buckets. The Lady Rebs took the lead for good on one such play with 3:04 left in the half, when Davis received a Ramirez pass to set up an easy two.

"A lot of teams play a zone against us, so that gives our outside people a chance to show what they have," Ramirez said.

The game was marred by 55 personal fouls asssesed on the two teams. Odessa High finished with only four players on the court for the final 46 seconds, but by then it was too late to alter the outcome anyway.

Griffin led OHS, 6-12, 2-1, with 14 points, while Tina Medders added 13.

Lee travels to San Angelo Tuesday.

Vikings Wiggin not interested

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Minnesota Vikings defensive line coach Paul Wiggin has told the Denver Broncos he's not interested in replacing fired defensive coordinator Joe Collier.

Wiggin said Thursday that he called Denver head coach Dan Reeves and said he'd decided to stay in Minnesota.

"When I returned to coaching, I didn't have such promotions in my goal structure," said Wiggin, 54. "I enjoy working with my group.

different one-and-one situations. Lee wasn't much better at seven of 13 from the line for the game, and only one of four the second half.

Rather than give his team a tongue lashing, Coach Stueckler of Lee had words of praise for the opponent. "You have to give Coach (Keith) Thompson and those Odessa High guys a lot of credit. They had us completely out of our ball game, had us so flustered we didn't run our offense, and so flustered we couldn't attack their press. It was their quickness, their quick hands."

Odessa Coach Thompson did give credit to his team's defense and hustle for the win. The one area of improvement he wishes to see from his Bronchos is at the free throw line. On allowing a number of offensive rebounds, Coach Thompson said that's to be expected when "your tallest player is 6-2."

For Midland Lee, their next district game will be Tuesday night at the Chap Center against San Angelo, a 68-57 loser to Abilene Cooper Friday.

TAINT SO, SAYS JERRY— Houston Oilers coach Jerry Glanville denied he had asked for permission to talk with other NFL teams. ESPN reported Oilers owner Bud Adams had given Glanville permission to talk with Kansas City...

TARK OFF THE HOOK, FOR NOW— The NCAA Committee on Infractions will not consider any response to a U.S. Supreme Court decision involving Nevada-Las Vegas basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian until April at the earliest. The high court ruled Dec. 12 that the NCAA was a private agency and did not have to consider due process when ordering a member institution to suspend a coach. The high court decision presented a Catch 22 for public colleges and universities, saying the schools would be required to afford due process when carrying out NCAA-ordered suspensions.

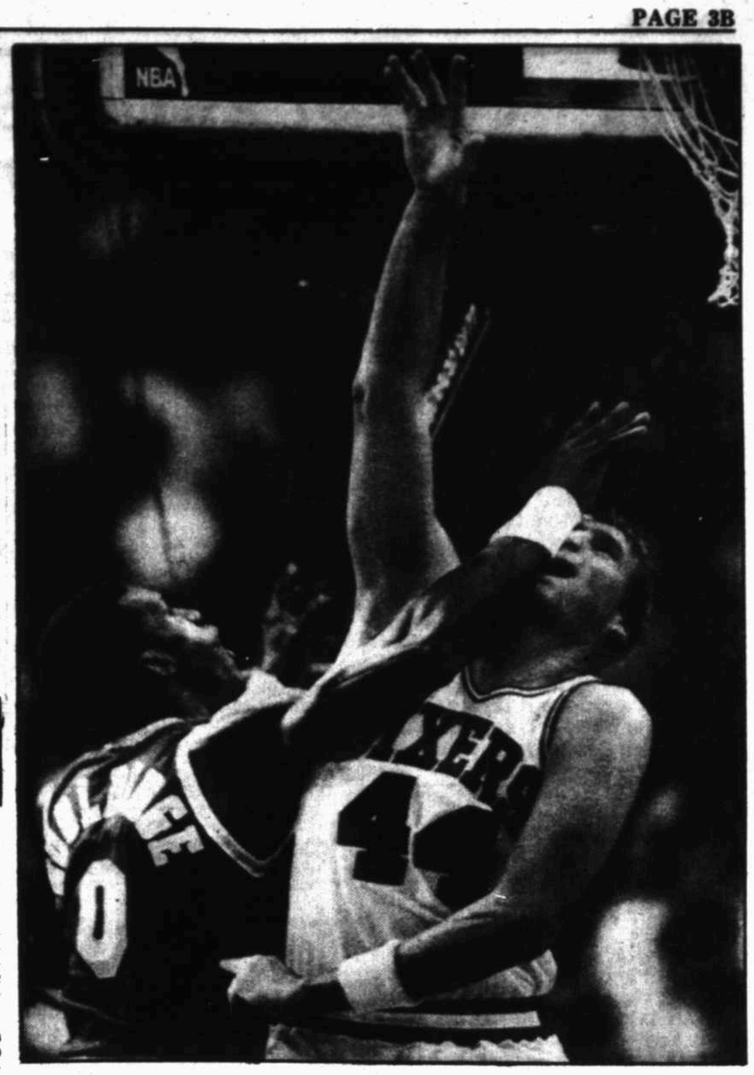

NHL ROOKIE— The Islanders David Volek, with 13 points in 12 games, was named the NHL Rookie of the December. Volek had five goals and eight assists, and leads all rookies with four game-winning goals.

NBA GATE UP — Average NBA attendance through the first third of the season is up 9.9 percent over last year, continuing a trend that began in 1983 with 16 of last year's 23 NBA clubs showed increases at the gate, while three others were down less than 1 percent. Including two Charlotte and Miami expansion franchises, total attendance was up 22.6 percent. The Charlotte Hornets averaged 22,785 per game through 15 home dates, leading the league. Miami averaged 14,865.

KERSEY WANTS TRADE— Jerome Kersey says the Trail Blazers should trade him or Kiki Vandeweghe and stop trying to fit the two small forwards on the team. "Kiki isn't going to be as effective as he can be if he doesn't get enough (playing) minutes...We both need (playing) time." Vandeweghe has asked to be traded but was told it would not happen.

MOSS PLEADS INNOCENT— Gary Moss, former West Texas State basketball coach, denies wrongdoing but says he will not fight NCAA sanctions against him and the school. Moss, now at Sam Houston State, said "It would be a waste of our time and our resources to go through an appeals process."

ETC...Ohio State assistant Jim Colletto, is withdrawing as a UTEP coaching candidate. "... I would just have a hard time leaving Ohio State right now with the job half finished," Colletto, 44, came to Ohio State with coach John Cooper from Arizona State last year....Leon Hart, offensive coordinator at Eastern Kentucky for eight years, was named Elon College football coach... Larry Dixon, who coordinated athletic compliance procedures at Texas Tech during the past year, has joined Texas A&M as director of intercollegiate athletics compliance...

Laimbeer ends slump to spark Piston win

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Detroit's Bill Laimbeer broke out of a six-game slump and keyed a second-quarter surge with both his scoring and elbows as the Pistons defeated the Atlanta Hawks 111-88 Friday night, giving Chuck Daly his 300th win as Detroit's coach.

With 7:55 remaining in the second quarter, Laimbeer and Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins got into a shoving match under the Hawks basket and both drew a technical foul. When order was restored, the Pistons — who led 34-28 at the time — went on a 20-12 run to forge a 54-40 halftime lead.

Laimbeer scored seven of his 11 second-quarter points after the fracas while Wilkins scored only two and finished the first half with just four points.

It was only Atlanta's fifth loss in its last 19 games. The rough-and-tumble victory was

JIM MURRAY

America's disgrace is its 'soccer' sportsmanship

Murray

In the second quarter, with the score Good Guys, a.k.a. USC Trojans, 14, Bad Guys, a.k.a. Michigan Wolverines, 3, I saw something I've never seen in 30 years of Rose Bowls. And hope I never do again.

As the Michigan marching band, all 300-strong or whatever it was, came streaming to the staging area in front of the SC stands for their preparation for the half-time show, the student body in the seats rose to pelt the musicians with plastic cushions.

I couldn't believe these were sane adults. I mean, what was this Yankee Stadium? The Metrodome? Ebbets Field?

This was the Rose Bowl. Not the bleachers in Wrigley Field. This was Pasadena, citadel of culture and charm. This was a fiesta of flowers and music, not a dock fight.

THESE WERE our guests. They hadn't come to steal the silverware. They had come to take part in a pageant, not a gang war. They were to add their bit to our New Year's festival, not dodge missiles.

Well, you say, so what? Just a little pillow fight? Well, I saw one cushion knock a fellow's glasses off. I don't know about you but, with me, that would be serious.

Anyway, when did we become ruffians? Bullies? A mob, not an audience?

These were not even 250-pound linebackers they were pelting. These were fluegelhornists. These guys looked like a whole bunch of Saturday Evening Post covers. All they wanted to do was prance onto the field in their spats and go into "Hail to the Victors Valiant," not gang-tackle Rodney Peete. They looked like Orel Hershiser carrying a glockenspiel, not Dick Butkus carrying a grudge.

I DON'T know what's happened to the American sports fan in this decade, anyway. I would read the stories about the riots at English soccer games and think, "Oh, well, those people badly need a war. If they don't get one every 20 years or so, they get edgy."

But, what's our excuse?

I don't know when this country's sports fans felt they had to get into the act. I know it's recent. When I was a kid, I can remember going to Fenway Park in Boston, which had the most rabid fans in the whole spectrum. But if a rival pitcher had a shutout going, or even a well-pitched game, by the ninth inning and he came to bat, they didn't pelt him with cushions and abuse. They rose to give him a standing ovation. I thought it was what sportsmanship was all about.

Today, intimidation is what it's all about. I was at Yankee Stadium one night when somebody threw a knife at Wally Joyner.

FOOTBALL is a national disgrace. In the domed stadiums, the fans set up a deliberate, malicious, meretricious din when the visiting team has the ball, which has the effect of demoralizing its attack. Pro football, with its sophisticated, adjustable defenses, often requires changing the play at the line of scrimmage. It is necessary to make a play work. The play designed in the huddle has been neutralized by an artful zone.

Except, you can't call a new play at the line of scrimmage in, say, Seattle's Kingdome, Minneapolis' Metrodome, Houston's Astrodome or any place else where a hostile, power-lunged crowd is drowning you out. This is cheating, plain and simple. It is giving an unfair advantage to the home team, about like letting them hold or interfere with impunity.

FANS, OF course, like football coaches, are copycats. The fan in Duluth sees the fan in Denver do something that looks like mayhem fans in Denver once pelted a kicker with snowballs to make him miss they want to do it, too.

It is like coughing on a guy's backswing in golf, pitching coins on the ice in hockey, waving a white handkerchief in a pitcher's eyes from a dugout box seat in baseball, as some lady in Shea Stadium did at the baseball playoffs last year.

I guess it gives some cretins a great deal of satisfaction to be able to go home and say, "Well, I beat the Raiders today. Their quarterback won't be able to hear or talk for a month."

It's never been our style out here. We're a people who go home in the seventh inning. Unless there are fireworks after the game. The California credo has been. "Please try to win, baby!" and not the Eastern "Stick it in his ear, Sal!" Our cheers are, "Way to go, Duke!" not "We will, we will rock you!"

And, we don't throw cushions at trombone players. We throw roses.

Bailey honored again

Associated Press

Running backs Johnny Bailey of Texas A&I and Terry Underwood of Wagner, the rushing leaders in the NCAA's Division II and III, respectively, were named to the Associated Press Little All-America college football team.

It marked the third selection in a row for Bailey, who led Division II with 144.2 yards a game — 1,442 yards on 229 carries. He also scored 15 touchdowns. Underwood paced Division III with 1,809 yards on 245 carries in nine games — he averaged 201 yards a game — and also shared the division scoring lead with 21 touchdowns.

The only other Little All-America repeater from 1987 is center Mike Favor, one of three players from North Dakota State's national Division II champions on the 1988 team.

The wide receivers are Otis Amy of Austin College and Troy Slusser of Washburn. Amy caught 74 passes for 1,231 yards and 11 touchdowns while Slusser had 63 receptions for 1,394 yards and 19 TDs. The tight end, Portland State's Barry Naone, caught 48 passes for 530 yards.

The Little All-America team is composed of players from Divisions II and III of the NCAA and all NAIA schools.

The quarterback is Portland State's Chris Crawford.

OSU to hang tough

Home grid schedule saved

Pat Jones, Oklahoma State coach, explains how cat ate the cabbage at news conference.

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma State's president said Friday he will count on the "extraordinary staying power of the OSU family" to see the football team through a four-year probation imposed by the NCAA.

"It simply is not in the character of OSU alums and friends to leave when times get tough," John Campbell said at a Friday news conference.

Students and staff members on a campus still quiet during holiday break appeared to be accepting the penalty with resignation.

THE PENALTIES, for recruiting violations, will keep the Cowboy football team off television through 1990 and out of postseason bowl games through 1991.

But the NCCA said it was suspending part of the penalty that would have eliminated three Oklahoma State home football games in 1989.

Before the announcement, there had been speculation that the NCAA would force cancellation of part of the Cowboy football season.

"I heard that and thought, 'Oh no, they can't do that,'" said Jon Brock, an Oklahoma State senior from Oklahoma City. "As far as business is concerned, that's terrible. This town is unbelievable on game day."

BROCK watched a live telecast of the news conference held by Oklahoma State athletic department officials at the student union. Other than selling an occasional soft drink, Brock's post at a student union game center was quiet.

"It's not as bad as everybody thought it was going to be — not the death penalty," said Ken Murray, a barber at the student union Style Shop.

The so-called death penalty could have forced the school to drop football for a period of time.

Shawn Mercer, another barber at the shop, was mournful about the penalty announced Friday.

"That's bad," she said. "Gosh, this is awful."

Brock said his family has been involved with Oklahoma State since his grandmother attended school there.

He said students and fans will miss the possibility of bowl games for the Cowboys, who finished the season ranked No. 11 after a Holiday Bowl victory over Wyoming Dec. 30.

"I'M GLAD I went to the Holiday Bowl," he said. "It seems like the bowl games we always bring a pretty good crowd."

Brock said he also has gone to the Sun Bowl and Gator Bowl as an Oklahoma State student.

As for missing television, Oklahoma State fans said they already are accustomed to minimal exposure for the Cowboys.

"We never get on television anyway," Brock said. "Everybody said, 'Oh, hurt us, hurt us. Take our television away.'"

Even with Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders, the Cowboys were on television only twice this season — against Oklahoma and Wyoming.

LAST MONTH, the NCAA imposed penalties against Oklahoma banning the Sooners from television and bowl appearances.

Oklahoma State athletic director Myron Roderick said missing bowl and television appearances will mean less revenue for the school's athletic program, but he said he has not calculated the impact. He said he is more concerned about attendance at home games in the wake of the penalties, which include a reduction in scholarships.

"I'm concerned about that. I think our people are great people and I believe they'll support us," Roderick said.

Cowboy head coach Pat Jones, who was given a clean report by the NCAA, said he believes his players will remain "proud and loyal."

"I also have full confidence that we can remain among the most successful and competitive football programs in the nation," Jones said.

Campbell said he believes Oklahoma State supporters will "close ranks, roll up our sleeves and do whatever is necessary to move beyond the point where we find ourselves today."

Lou Holtz
...too much too soon?

Now that Lou Holtz is threatening to turn Notre Dame's holy trinity of Rockne, Leahy and Parseghian into a quartet after leading the Fighting Irish to an eighth national title this week, the countdown begins.

Suddenly, Holtz is closer to becoming a former Notre Dame head football coach because of the Irish's rout of West Virginia in the Fiesta Bowl.

I'll give him three more seasons at Notre Dame, maybe two. Holtz's longevity with the Irish will depend on how well he handles the sledgehammers that are headed his way during the next few months.

Consider this: Some of my many relatives who live around the Golden Dome phoned me after Notre Dame players hoisted Holtz to the sky Monday. The consensus was, "The Irish finished 12-0 this season, but wait until next season when they really get good."

POW! And consider, too, that those who will be swinging sledgehammers at Holtz this year reside in South Bend, Ind., and anyplace else in the universe where Notre Dame is expected to shake down the thunder as long as there are football seasons.

In other words, Holtz won this thing too fast. It was only three seasons ago that he inherited a jewel that had lost its sparkle after five years under Gerry Faust.

EVEN SO, after Notre Dame finished 5-6 and 8-3 in Holtz's first two seasons, the miracle began for the Irish against Michigan during their 1988 season opener.

Notre Dame's starting lineup featured three seniors on defense, two on offense, four newcomers on the offensive line, a defensive end who used to be a fullback, an offensive tackle who used to be a tight end and a schedule that was ranked the seventh toughest in the country by the NCAA.

With no time left, Michigan's most prolific kicker missed a field goal by inches to give the Irish a two-point victory. Then, in mid-season, the Irish survived No. 1-ranked Miami in the final seconds, and suddenly, there was a blue-and-gold steamroller loose in the land as its shaky passing game became solid, its kicking problems became invisible and its confidence level became gigantic.

Frank Stams, the fullback turned defensive end, and Andy Heck, the tight end turned offensive tackle, were named first- team All-Americans. Tony Rice, the quarterback who couldn't throw, sank West Virginia with seven completions for 213 yards.

They call them magic teams. If you're lucky, they come along once in a generation. If you're at Notre Dame, they happen nearly every decade, and if you're the Notre Dame head coach for one of these teams, the pressure that you already feel on campus becomes something that sends you screaming into the night.

Arnie threatens to walk in T of C

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Steve Jones took the lead and Arnold Palmer very nearly took a walk Friday in the second round of golf's Tournament of Champions.

Jones, a rookie in the competition that brings together only the winners from 1988 PGA Tour events, managed a second straight 69 in the blustery winds and completed two rounds in 6-under-par 138.

Chip Beck was one shot back at 139 after a 70. PGA champion Jeff Sluman, veteran Lanny Wadkins and Mark Calcavecchia were next at 141. Calcavecchia had a 69, Wadkins a 70 and Sluman a 71.

But it was Palmer, competing in the separate but simultaneous competition for Senior players, who drew the most attention.

"That's the closest I've ever come to walking off the golf course," Palmer said after he was assessed a two-shot penalty for playing from the wrong tees.

Palmer made it clear that his anger was not over the penalty but was directed at the unique situation under which Seniors play from shorter tees on nine of the 18 holes — long a very sore point with Palmer.

"Ridiculous," Palmer said after he and Harold Henning had been assessed two-shot penalties for playing from the wrong tee on the second hole.

The Seniors, players 50 and older, and the regular Tour players both are competing on the La Costa Country Club course. On nine of the 18 holes, there are two sets of tees. The front ones are for the seniors.

Winfield sues Steinbrenner

NEW YORK (AP) — Yankee All-Star Dave Winfield sued his boss, George Steinbrenner, on Friday for more than $1 million that the outfielder says is owed to his foundation that fights drug abuse.

In a lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan, Winfield charged that Steinbrenner has not complied with an agreement to pay $300,000 a year to the David M. Winfield Foundation.

Steinbrenner, in a statement, said a year-long investigation of Winfield's foundation discovered "numerous questionable practices" that would be outlined in a counter-lawsuit to be filed on Monday.

"I think there will be some far-reaching effects from what is about to become public and some of those things could be quite devastating, not only to the foundation, but to David. I just wish he had chosen another course, but there can be no turning back now," Steinbrenner said.

Kenneth E. Warner, Steinbrenner's attorney, said the Yankees will complain in a suit of excessive and wasteful limousine travel expenses amounting to more than $40,000 over a two-year period, excessive and disproportionate management and administrative costs and other items.

Hall of Fame could get a flood of entries in '89

By PHIL COLLIER
Copley News Service

Normally, members of the Baseball Writers Association of America vote one or two players into the Hall of Fame each year. However, as many as four, five or six former stars may be inducted next summer at Cooperstown, N.Y.

Four of the leading candidates this year are on the ballot for the first time — catcher Johnny Bench, outfielder Carl Yastrzemski, righthander Gaylord Perry and righthander Ferguson Jenkins.

There will be support for former Detroit and Philadelphia righthander Jim Bunning, who barely missed getting enough votes for induction last year; former Cubs third baseman Ron Santo and former San Francisco and St. Louis first baseman Orlando Cepeda.

Bench hit 389 homers and drove in 1,376 runs in his 17 seasons with the Reds. He was the National League's most valuable player twice (1979-72), won 10 Gold Gloves, made 14 All-Star teams, set a major-league home run record for a catcher (327) and holds NL records for most putouts (9,260) and chances (10,110) for a receiver.

Yastrzemski hit 452 homers, drove in 1,844 runs and batted .285 in 23 seasons with Boston. He won the AL triple crown in 1967, won six Gold Gloves, was on 18 All-Star teams, won three AL batting titles and holds the AL record for most games played lifetime (3,308).

Perry had a 314-265 career won-lost record along with a 3.10 ERA and 3,534 lifetime strikeouts. He was a 20-game winner five times. He won the AL Cy Young Award in 1972 and the NL Cy Young Award in 1978.

JENKINS, who starred for the Cubs and Texas, had a 284-226 record and lifetime 3.34 ERA, striking out 3,192 batters.He had seven 20-victory seasons, including six in a row.

Bunning was 224-184 lifetime with a 3.27 ERA and 2,855 strikeouts. He was 20-8 in 1957 and a 19-game winner four times. Bunning won 100 games in each league, made nine All-Star teams, pitched a no-hitter against the Red Sox in 1958 and a perfect game against the Mets in 1964. He is 11th on the all-time strikeout list.

Santo hit 342 homers, drove in 1,331 runs and averaged .277 in his 15-year career. He won five Gold Gloves, batted .300 or better four times, made 10 All-Star teams. He holds NL records for most lifetime assists (4,532) and double plays (389) by a third baseman as well as a major-league record for leading the league in fielding chances by a third baseman (9).

Like Santo, Cepeda has been on the Hall of Fame ballot for a number of years but neither has received the necessary 75 percent of the votes.

TSWA picks Lewis, Ritter as the tops

HOUSTON (AP) — The Texas Sports Writers Association has named Olympic gold medalists Louise Ritter and Carl Lewis as its 1988 Texas amateur athletes of the year.

Ritter, 30, won the gold medal in the high jump at the Seoul Olympics, the the first U.S. woman to do so in 32 years. She is Texas Woman's University graduate from the Dallas suburb of Red Oak.

Lewis won the long jump and 100-meter dash in Seoul and placed second to Bay City's Joe DeLoach in the 200. The former University of Houston star also was a four-time gold medalist at the Los Angeles Games in 1984, winning the long jump, 100, 200 and running on the victorious U.S. sprint relay team. The sprint relay unit was disqualified in the preliminaries in Seoul.

Ritter was a runaway winner in the five-person female athlete category, out-pointing runnerup Phoebe Mills 295-228 in total points and 49-10 in first-place votes. Mills, a Houston resident, was a bronze medalist in the balance beam in Seoul. University of Texas swimmer Betsy Mitchell was third.

Lewis defeated DeLoach and six others in the male athlete category. Lewis totaled 376 points and 18-first place votes to 361 and 16 for DeLoach.

Hula shakes today

HONOLULU (AP) — Sixty-eight college football players hope to impress pro scouts with individual efforts in today's Hula Bowl, but many say that goal doesn't make winning the all-star classic any less important.

Dozens of scouts are on hand to see quarterbacks Troy Aikman of UCLA and Rodney Peete of Southern Cal lead the West against an East squad that fields six All-Americans on defense, including award winners Tracy Rocker of Auburn and Derrick Thomas of Alabama.

"Everybody's out there first of all to have a good time and play well, but you go out to win," said Mike Utley, an All-American offensive guard from Washington State who will play for the West.

Some players say trying hard Saturday is simply a matter of survival.

"If you slack off a little bit, that's when you get hurt," said Frank Stams, an All-American defensive end from national champion Notre Dame.

The players have been treated to hula lessons, banquets, sightseeing trips and hours on the beach, but Rocker insists that come gametime the hits will be real.

Rocker, a 6-foot-3, 270-pound defensive tackle, captured the Outland Trophy for outstanding interior lineman, the Lombardi Award for oustanding lineman and the Butkus Award, as the nation's outstanding linebacker.

Other All-Americans on the East defense are tackle Mark Messner of Michigan, cornerback Deion Sanders of Florida State and free safety Louis Oliver of Florida.

The West has three All-Americans on offense: Utley, wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes of Oklahoma State and place kicker Kendall Trainor of Arkansas. All-American Broderick Thomas of Nebraska will anchor the West defense.

Both Aikman, who passed for 2,599 yards and 23 touchdowns, and Peete, 2,654 yards and 18 touchdowns, say the Hula Bowl probably won't affect their status as NFL prospects.

"I've played 24 games the last two years with UCLA and I think that speaks for itself," Aikman said. "I don't think the Hula Bowl is going to make me or break me."

Anthony Dilweg of Duke, the Atlantic Coast Conference player of the year, and Iowa's Chuck Hartlieb are the quarterbacks for the East.

Lou Holtz of Notre Dame coaches the East, while Baylor's Grant Teaff coaches the West.

Hatfield, Broyles bury the hatchet

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — University of Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles and Ken Hatfield, head football coach, said at a joint news conference today that they had worked out their differences.

"We're both tough, we're both hard headed but we both wanted to get together," Hatfield said. "We're here to say we've agreed in principle and are ready to move forward. We got everything we wanted."

What Hatfield apparently wanted was security for his assistant coaches and a new five-year contract.

"This gives us a chance to recruit and the kids will know we'll be here to be their coaches," Hatfield said.

Broyles said he was looking at things two ways in his negotiations with Hatfield: "I was in an unusual position. I had to get Ken the things he wanted and also represent the university."

Hatfield praised his boss for an attitude that allowed them to work out their differences.

A year ago Broyles and Hatfield battled over philosophical differences as well as assistant coaches.

Jette, ex-OSU aide, resigns

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas assistant football coach Paul Jette resigned Friday after receiving unethical conduct citations from the NCAA for his involvement in infractions committed at Oklahoma State, officials said.

Jette coached at Oklahoma State from 1979 to 1984 before leaving to become the defensive coordinator at the University of Miami. He returned to his alma mater, Texas, in 1986 as the Longhorns' defensive coordinator.

At a news conference at UT, Jette read a brief statement that made no mention of the charges and then declined to comment further.

"This is in the best interests of the University of Texas, and I am doing this out of loyalty and love for this great school," said Jette, a former defensive player for the Longhorns.

The NCAA, citing more than 40 rules violations, placed Oklahoma State's football program on four years probation, banned the Cowboys from post-season play for three years and prohibited them from live television appearances for two years.

Jette received an unethical conduct violation for rules violations at Oklahoma State, and an unethical conduct charge at Texas, according to Texas Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds.

Dodds said Jette's charge while at Texas stemmed from not complying with the NCAA when they contacted him about the Oklahoma State investigation.

Ex-lawmaker tired of being fugitive

LONGVIEW (AP) — Tired of "fighting a losing battle," a former state representative who attracted national attention in 1981 when he was mysteriously shot, says he will be a fugitive no more.

Mike Martin, who has been visiting his family in Longview, said he decided to resolve a child custody dispute that started more than two years ago and had turned into a federal case.

Martin and his wife, Debbe, were divorced in 1984, and Martin disappeared with the couple's two children in July 1986. He was indicted on a state charge of interfering with child custody, then charged with a federal offense of flight to avoid prosecution.

Martin said he decided to return the children after the FBI found him living and working in Wellington, New Zealand, the Longview News-Journal reported.

Martin said his son, Michael Trent, 11, and daughter, Arianne, 7, were taken to his ex-wife at her home in Garland two weeks ago. He said charges were dismissed after he agreed to return the youngsters.

"It just got to the point I was fighting a losing battle and was just postponing the inevitable," Martin said.

The U.S. Justice Department had tried to extradite him, but Martin said the New Zealand courts decided he had done nothing wrong in that country and refused the extradition request.

Martin was planning to leave today for his new home in New Zealand, the News-Journal said.

In 1981 Martin catapulted into the national spotlight after he was shot in the arm while in Austin. He blamed the shooting on a Satanic cult, but his cousin Charles Goff later said Martin hired him to shoot him with a shotgun as a publicity stunt.

NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST CHURCH

In the Sleep Hollow Cemetery at Concord, Massachusetts, one will find the grave of Ezra Ripley. Who Ripley was or what he did is unknown.

On Ripley's tombstone the following epitaph is cut: "He came of a long line of Pilgrim ancestors and Concord ministers, and he was worthy of his lineage."

Although the epitaph is brief, it says a lot about Ripley's character.

Learn with us how God can improve our characters.

Profit and Prophet

A simple definition of the word PROFIT means to benefit or gain. A PROPHET is defined as one who predicts the future.

Although similar in sound, different in definition, these two words have a way of saying something that can affect our lives.

Prophets demand wise decisions. Profits demand wise decisions, too. Both have a common relationship as to what we can lose or gain.

False profits are attractions of materialism and wealth accumulation. False prophets deny us our basic needs and are unpredictable.

Profit by attending your house of worship. It is an investment in our future — promises of wonderful things to come.

GOD'S 20TH CENTURY GIANTS

Jewish sage calls Jesus 'Great Brother'

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a five-part series on great modern theologians, "God's 20th Century Giants." It is about Martin Buber and his discerning of truth in encounter.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

"He who takes his stand in relation shares in a reality...a being that neither merely belongs to him nor merely lies outside of him."
— theologian Martin Buber

Out of friendship for one of its leaders, Martin Buber was marching in a street procession. As it passed a cafe, a musician with whom he had dined the day before appeared in the doorway. Their gazes met.

The musician "apparently saw me alone, and waved to me," Buber recounted. "Straightway it seemed to me as though I were taken out of the procession and the presence of my marching friends, and set there confronting the musician.

"I forgot that I was walking along with the same step; I felt that I was standing over there by the man who had called out to me, and without a word, with a smile of understanding, was answering him."

By the time Buber again became conscious that he was in the procession, the cafe was far behind.

The incident — that minor, transporting moment of interchange with the musician, even though silent and fleeting — reflected the pervasive thesis of a man regarded as the 20th century's greatest Jewish philosopher.

Buber maintained that human wholeness, its vitalizing true reality, exists only "in between" separate persons, other creatures, nature and God — a connecting mutuality recognizeable only in their genuine encounter.

"All real living is meeting," he says. He says actualized life resides only in honest, open give-and-take between separate selves, an interflow that surpasses both and augments each.

"HE WHO TAKES his stand in relation shares in a reality...a being that neither merely belongs to him nor merely lies outside of him," Buber says.

Through unaffected personal engagement in the encounter, participants are lifted out of themselves and their "being made real," he says. "All reality is an activity in which I share without being able to appropriate for myself. Where there is no sharing, there is no reality."

He says the "extended lines of relations meet in the Eternal Thou," the "Center," in the consumate reality of God. "Every relational event is a state that affords a glimpse into the consumating event."

In every genuinely open contact, "we are stirred by the breath of a Thou, that is, of eternal life," he says. "If you hallow this life, you meet the living God."

Buber's ideas have spawned a widespread "relational" theology throughout Christianity and also in Judaism, sometimes in simplified popular versions.

He coined a special, almost poetic, terminology to distinguish between common, deadening "I-it" relations — which stereotype and reduce everyone and everything to utilitarian objects — and sensitively attentive "I-Thou" relations which enhance and authenticate the being of both partners.

"The person becomes conscious of himself as sharing in being, as coexisting and thus as being," he says. "It fills the heavens. This does not mean that nothing else exists; but all else lives in its light."

As a simple example, he notes that in a conversation the "meaning is to be found in neither of the two partners, nor in both together, but only in their dialogue itself, in this 'between' which they live together."

BUBER, WHOSE Christian wife converted to Judaism, was an influential figure in the expanding concourse between these linked traditions. He saw Jesus' relations to others and God as the acme of "I-Thou" mutuality.

"How powerful, even to being overpowering, and how legitimate, even to being self-evident, is the saying of 'I' by Jesus," Buber says. "For it is the 'I' of the unconditional relation in which the man calls his Thou Father in such a way that he himself is simply Son...raised into unconditional being.

"If separation ever touches him, his solidarity of relation is greater. He speaks to others out of this solidarity."

Buber, in a book about Christian-Jewish ties, "Two Types of Faith," says: "From my youth onwards I have found in Jesus my great brother.

"That Christianity has regarded and does regard him as God and savior has always appeared to me a fact of the highest importance which, for his sake and my own, I must endeavor to understand...

"My own fraternally open relationship to him has grown ever stronger and clearer."

A short, stocky man with a flowing white beard and disarming smile, Buber was born in Austria and taught at universities in Germany until silenced by the Nazis in 1934.

Immigrating to Israel, he taught at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, lectured widely and wrote many books, including a German translation of the Bible and his best-selling "I and Thou."

An Hasidic scholar and independent-minded Zionist, he advocated Arab-Jewish cooperation and was criticized by some fellow Jews for it. His death in 1965 produced an unprecedented event: A delegation of Arab students placed a wreath on his grave.

BUBER SAW MODERN humanity as trapped in a self-insulating "I" of individualism that "hardens into the world of It," viewing persons and everything as impersonal, convenient tools.

In an atmosphere of depersonalizing forces and mechanized systems, people adjust themselves to "the apparatus" as if mere cogs in it, he says, debasing "man's power to enter into relation."

"The sickness of our age is like that of no other age" under the "tyranny of the exuberantly growing It," traversing "gaily and unsuspectingly the death track," he says.

"The quasi-biological and quasi-historical thought of today...have worked together to establish a more tenacious and oppressive" fatalism "than has ever before existed."

This is the "exalted melancholy of our age, that every Thou in our world must become an It," he says.

Yet at times a person, "shuddering at the alienation between the I and the world, comes to reflect that something is to be done," Buber says.

"As when in the grave night-hour you lie racked by waking dream — bulwarks have fallen away and the abyss is screaming — and note amid your torment: there is life, if I could only get through to it."

Buber sees earthly existence as "twofold," like sleeping and waking, a duality in which people much of the time necessarily objectify their surroundings as "Its" so as to make for orderly arrangements in various fields, bounded, measured and codified.

THIS STRUCTURING is needed for functioning of institutions, sciences and societies and is not itself evil, but can be degradingly so if it is the predominating attitude, shrinking "substance and fullness to the functional point," he says, adding:

"Without It man cannot live. But he who lives with It alone is not a man."

"If a man lets It have the mastery, the continually growing world of It overruns him and robs him of the reality of his own I, till the incubus over him and the ghost within him whisper to one another of their nonsalvation."

To truly live requires a continual "turning" to relations, he says, a repeated "crossing the threshold" between an objectified, functional environment of things binding people most of the time and the "holy place" of dialogue, connections and mutuality.

He says mere greetings can reflect the different dispositions, such as the virtually impersonal "Hello, how are you?" and other mostly arid formulas of Western cultures, and the direct and body-relating greeting of African Kaffirs, "I see you."

The fuller reality — the "revealing by two people of the Thou to one another" — can be seen especially in good marriages, he says, adding:

"He who lives with a woman, and brings her life to present realization in his, is able to look in the Thou of her eyes into a beam of the eternal Thou...When a man is together with his wife, the longing of the eternal hills blows round about them."

Buber says this enlarging, connecting quality can be realized not only between persons, but with other creatures and all nature. For example, a cat or tree can be viewed merely objectively as of a certain type, dimension, conformation and coloration.

BUT NONE NOR ALL of these are the whole "being" of the cat or tree, which includes the quantifying descriptions, but which becomes something quite different and more in relation to their real being, Buber says.

If alert to the "simple magic of life" in nature, "there is a reciprocity of the being itself," he says. "If I have both will and grace, in considering the tree, I become bound up in a relation to it...

"Between you and it there is mutual giving; you say Thou to it and give yourself to it, and it says Thou to you and gives itself to you....Something lights up and approaches us from the source of being."

Buber attributes this innate reality of all created being to the "primal, the origin," and says it shows up in primitive people's intercourse with nature and in a young child's personification of toys, animals and objects.

"It is the instinct to make everything into Thou, to give relation to the universe," he says.

An overshadowing modern peril to true humanity is to sink into self-absorbed individualism, sundered from connected "being," Buber says. The confining, discordant "word I is the shibboleth of mankind," he says.

"Individualism neither shares in nor obtains any reality. The more a man, humanity, is mastered by individuality, the deeper does the I sink into the unreality" of a "hidden subterranean...cancelled existence."

He says people "need, and it is granted to them, to confirm one another in their individual being by means of genuine meeting...It is from one man to another that the heavenly bread is passed."

Liturgical impact of Vatican studied

New York Times News Service

Twenty-five years the Roman Catholic Church made one of the biggest gambles in its history, and scholars and church leaders are still assessing what was won and lost.

On Dec. 4, 1963, the world's Catholic bishops, in the first document published by the Second Vatican Council, mandated a thoroughgoing reform of the Catholic liturgy, which had remained virtually unchanged for 400 years.

Priests no longer addressed God silently at Mass with their backs to the faithful but faced the congregation across the altar. Latin was abandoned for the people's own language. The laity took an active part in the rituals through responses, congregational singing, processions and other gestures.

Opinion polls in the 1970s and 1980s indicate that American Catholics have been generally receptive to the new rites.

Yet the 25th anniversary of the Vatican Council's action also finds many of the reform's most informed supporters asking whether the whole effort has wandered off course.

Recently, a number of them met at Georgetown University to discuss a study of a small number of parishes known for the changes in their liturgies.

Among other things, the study showed that peripheral elements eliciting feelings of togetherness — entrance processions, clasping hands during the Lord's Prayer, exchanging greetings — frequently overshadowed the central and more religiously challenging parts of the Mass, the proclamation of Scripture and offering of the Eucharistic prayer.

Mark Searle, an associate professor of liturgy at the University of Notre Dame, recently wrote in the journal Commonweal that "the liturgical life of the American church is pretty much in the doldrums."

The Rev. John F. Baldovin, of the Jesuit School of Theology in Berkeley, paraphrases T.S. Eliot's poem "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock": "This isn't what we meant at all."

Many participants at the Georgetown meeting were more positive about the changes.

There is a recognition that earlier hopes for immediately understandable rituals may have been naive and that the grammar of ritual operates in indirect ways and over a period of time.

"Ritual communication is not about the communication of information," Searle has written, "but about the rehearsal of meaning, bonding people together in a common stance toward life."

Recently, there has been a new appreciation of invariable elements in the rite and of ancient symbols. There is less talk of the congregation shaping the liturgy and more of the liturgy shaping the congregation.

Texts that right after the Council were hastily translated with an eye toward simplicity are being retranslated, "making the text a little fuller, a little more poetic, maybe more reminiscent of the Latin sentence structure," said John R. Page, executive secretary of the commission that translates the rites for English-speaking countries.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, some Catholics felt a nearly giddy sense of release from what they had come to experience as rote and obscure rituals.

Liturgical planners sought spontaneity and continual innovation but often achieved only banality and weariness. "Who gave these nice Catholics guitars?" the essayist Annie Dillard wrote in mockery of the popular folk Masses.

"The days of balloons and clowns are over, thank God," said Sister Kathleen Hughes, who teaches liturgical studies at Catholic Theological Union in Chicago.

Few changes in religious life are as important — or as traumatic — as changes in the forms of worship.

Episcopalians still debate the most recent revision of the Book of Common Prayer.

An avalanche of letters protested reports that the commission revising the hymnal for the United Methodist Church might eliminate "Onward, Christian Soldiers" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." (It didn't.)

Almost no one denies the profound impact of the dramatic liturgical reforms of the Second Vatican Council. The very fact that long immutable rites were altered raised the question of what other aspects of Catholic teaching and organization might be legitimatly changed.

Provisions made for adapting rites to different cultures, most dramatically illustrated by the incorporation of indigenous music and symbols in Africa and Asia, conveyed a deep message about pluralism in the church.

Laity who began to take an active role in the liturgy eventually expected to play an active role in the whole life of the church, said Hughes.

Appreciation of these changes distinguishes the liturgists undertaking the current rethinking from individuals who long for the restoration of Latin Masses, lamenting a beauty and solemnity that was never in fact the norm in most parishes.

Not only do liturgists like those at the Georgetown meeting have no desire to return to earlier days, but they realize that Catholic forms of worship face at least two additional challenges.

One is the feminist demand for more inclusive language; the other is making provisions for Catholic parishes that will suffer from the growing shortage of priests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid spending more than you must. Do your best to please family and friends within your budget. Romance is best postponed. Pursue self-improvement projects to feel and look better.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Watch your step today. Do not jump into new financial arrangements. If friends come to you for advice, give it freely. Devote more attention to loved ones. Read newspapers, magazines in your spare time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sunday newspapers yield new employment leads; follow up tomorrow. Do not expect too much from a journey. Relatives could act in a contrary fashion. Do not try to figure them out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The atmosphere at home should be relaxed and happy. Loved ones are willing to go along with your ideas. An engagement announced today is likely to result in a happy marriage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not try to live beyond your means. Refuse to fall in with your friends' extravagant plans. Travel is unlikely to be worth the expense. Postpone contacting influential people. Keep a low profile.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Getting outdoors helps you shake off the blues. Brisk air is invigorating. Business can be mixed with pleasure later today. Dress to impress. You could end up meeting your heart of hearts!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Influential people will take you into their confidence. Obscure information will let you return to a creative project you had put on hold. Avoid rushing things.

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

Gabor in dog house with airline

ATLANTA (AP) — Zsa Zsa Gabor says she never wants to hear the name of Delta Air Lines again — and Delta officials probably feel the same way about her.

Police escorted the 69-year-old entertainer off a Delta flight Thursday night after she refused to keep her dogs in travel kennels, an airline spokesman said.

The confrontation occurred during a stopover in Atlanta. Airline officials said Ms. Gabor, who was traveling from Los Angeles to her home in Palm Beach, Fla., let two Shih Tzu dogs out of their kennels in the first-class section of the Delta jet.

"The Delta agent came aboard," airline spokesman William D. Berry said. "He asked her six times to comply. She refused to comply. Each time he was responded to with considerable vulgarity."

Atlanta police were then called to escort Ms. Gabor off the aircraft.

Ms. Gabor contended the dogs were not disturbing anyone, and said the Delta agent "was screaming at me like I was some criminal."

"I was so upset you can't imagine. This is not the end of this," she said before boarding an Eastern Airlines flight to complete the trip.

Collins

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Former Gov. Martha Layne Collins, who taught high school before getting into politics, may be returning to the classroom at Harvard University.

Associates say Collins is talking to Harvard officials about a teaching fellowship, The (Louisville) Courier-Journal reported Thursday. The former governor was away from her Lexington office Friday and could not be reached for comment.

Steve Singer, director of press relations for Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government, refused to say whether Collins was being considered for a fellowship.

However, he said the school "often has fellows who come from top positions in government to teach a non-credit study group to graduates and undergraduates. If Governor Collins were coming here, that's what she would be doing."

Sabato

JERUSALEM (AP) — Argentinian writer Ernesto Sabato was named Friday to receive the 1989 Jerusalem Prize, which is awarded to an author whose work focuses on the freedom of the individual.

The decision was announced by the office of Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek.

The prize, a scroll and $5,000, is to be given during the Jerusalem International Book Fair in March.

The jury was headed by Abba Eban, the former Israeli foreign minister. Previous award winners include V.S. Naipaul, Graham Greene, Simone de Beauvoir and Eugene Ionesco.

Sabato, 77, originally a physicist, wrote his first novel, "The Silent Well," while doing post-graduate studies in Paris. In 1943 he abandoned scientific work to devote himself to writing. His fictional works include "The Tunnel," "Of Heroes and Graves" and "Abadon, the Exterminator."

In 1983, Sabato was appointed by Argentinian President Raul Alfonsin to head the public committee investigating the thousands of Argentinians who were abducted, and presumed murdered, during the earlier military regime.

CHELTENHAM, England (AP) — Ski-jumper Eddie "The Eagle" Edwards, the world's best-loved Olympic loser, has been hospitalized again for treatment of injuries he sustained in an Austrian training session.

After leaving an Innsbruck hospital Thursday, Edwards returned home to western England and checked into Cheltenham General Hospital. His mother, Janette Edwards, said the hapless ski jumper "is very stiff from his injuries."

Edwards broke his collar bone and bruised a kidney when he took a tumble Tuesday while training for a World Cup ski event.

In a statement, Cheltenham General Hospital said Edwards was being kept for observation: "It is not expected to be for long, probably a few days. He is comfortable."

In last winter's Calgary Olympics, the 24-year-old plasterer came last in the 90-meter and 70-meter events and rocketed to instant fame under the tag "Eddie The Eagle."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Sheelah Ryan, winner of the nation's single biggest lottery jackpot, has formed a foundation to help the needy with some of her $55.1 million.

"It's a dream I want to live on long after I'm gone," Ms. Ryan said Thursday in announcing the formation of the private, non-profit Ryan Foundation.

Ms. Ryan, 63, of Winter Springs, said the foundation will provide shelter for the homeless, help the elderly, feed the hungry and protect abused women and children.

Hirohito had been last of WWII leaders

WORLD

TOKYO (AP) — Emperor Hirohito, the 124th occupant of Japan's Chrysanthemum Throne, was the last survivor among the national leaders of the World War II era.

For most of his 62-year reign, the "Son of Heaven" was a figurehead, isolated from his subjects by tradition and worshipped during the first 20 years as a divine being descended from the Sun Goddess Amaterasu.

While most historians agree Hirohito played no significant role in Japan's military adventures in the 1930s and 1940s, it was his decision as emperor that ended World War II.

On Aug. 10, 1945, four days after history's first atomic bomb devastated Hiroshima and one day after a U.S. bomber dropped the second on Nagasaki, the generals and admirals of the wartime government met in the bomb shelter beneath the Tokyo palace to argue over whether to surrender to the Allies.

Speaking in what some of those present described as a slow and nervous monotone, the emperor offered his opinion for the first time. He spoke of his sorrow over the men killed in the war, and of families who had lost everything in the air raids.

"I cannot bear to see my innocent people suffer any longer," he said. "Ending the war is the only way to restore world peace and to relieve the nations from the terrible distress with which it is burdened..."

THE EMPEROR added: "The time has come when we must bear the unbearable."

In the days that followed, Hirohito continued his break with tradition. In a national radio broadcast Aug. 15 — the first time the Japanese people had heard his voice — he announced the decision to surrender.

Three weeks later, Hirohito went to the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo to meet the Allied commander, Gen. Douglas MacArthur. It was the first time Hirohito had gone to see anyone, and the first of several calls on the general who had led the Pacific war against Japn and became its postwar governor.

On New Year's Day of 1946, at MacArthur's insistence, the emperor renounced his divinity. It was a choice that enabled Hirohito to remain as symbolic head of Japan and assured that he would not face charges as a war criminal.

It also was an act that seemed to relieve no one as much as this gentle, shy and retiring man who was more comfortable working as a marine biologist than playing the role of a "living god."

Indeed, the emperor was a widely respected authority on biology, having written or co-authored at least 12 books on hydrozoa, or sea animals, his specialty.

Hirohito was born April 29, 1901. In accordance with Imperial custom, he was taken from his parents as an infant to be reared by household functionaries and trained to become emperor.

HE STUDIED government and law with tutors, and at age 20 his father, Emperor Taisho, sent him abroad. It was the first time any member of the immediate Imperial family had been allowed outside Japan.

Hirohito visited England, Scotland, France, Belgium, Holland and Italy. During the trip, he handled money for the first time — buying a ticket on the Paris Metro — and developed a passion for bacon-and-egg breakfasts. A palace chamberlain said in 1980 that Hirohito shunned Japanese food "unless it is forced on him by an unwitting host."

On the European tour, he also acquired a preference for Western clothes. He was never seen in public wearing traditional Japanese garb.

Hiroito became prince regent on Nov. 25, 1921, after his father became an invalid. He became emperor on Christmas Day of 1926, at age 25, and was enthroned two years later, designating his reign "Showa," meaning "enlightenment and peace."

During his regency, Hirohito was betrothed to Princess Nagako, one of several possible brides chosen by court officials. They were married in 1924.

After the empress produced four daughters, court officials urged Hirohito to take a concubine to ensure a male heir. He refused, and on Dec. 23, 1933, Crown Prince Akihito was born.

The greatest mystery of Hirohito's life was the exact role he played as Japan moved toward war.

Gen. Hideki Tojo, the wartime prime minister, testified before the War Crimes Tribunal that would sentence him to hang that the emperor had reluctantly agreed to war partly "in view of my advice."

AND WHEN the question arose among occupation authorities whether Hirohito should be tried as a war criminal, MacArthur is said to have told the chief prosecutor: "Don't call the emperor into court. If you do, he'll probably offer to assume all of the blame himself. He's that kind of man."

In a rare audience with foreign journalists in 1975, Hirohito said he was informed about military operations before they took place. "But I only received reports after everything, down to the most minute detail, had been decided upon by the staff of the high command," he said.

After the war, Hirohito's wealth was put into the national treasury. He was officially designated a "symbol of state" by the U.S.-drafted postwar constitution in 1948.

When the emperor began to venture out among the people, they found him very different from the splendidly uniformed figure they had glimpsed on a white horse in wartime military parades.They saw his jerky walk, his hesitant, shy manner, his myopic squint. They saw that his face had numerous moles — a sign of luck in Japan — and that he sometimes neglected to shave.

From a "living god," the emperor's status in the eyes of many Japanese changed to that of a kind uncle.

In recent years, his life has been the subject of a popular comic book series.

Still, Hirohito and the imperial system remain important to Japan. The Japanese measure years according to the reign of their regent — 1989 in Japan is referred to as Showa 64.

AND A nationwide survey by the daily newspaper Mainichi Shimbun in March 1987 showed more than 80 percent of 2,184 people polled supported the imperial system, while only 11 percent said it should be abolished. Five percent said the emperor should have more power.

Opposition comes mostly from leftists who link the emperor with past militarism.

Hirohito took his ceremonial tasks seriously. He spent hours each day signing documents, inspected schools and factories, opened sports events and became a fan of sumo wrestling. But he once slept through a performance of kabuki, the traditional Japanese theater.

But his passion was marine biology. He spent hours, often working far into the night, in his laboratory at the palace in Tokyo. Sometimes he collected specimens at the royal summer home on the seashore south of Tokyo, and gathered fungi in the palace gardens.

Despite the humanization of the Imperial family, Hirohito remained under strict control of the Imperial Household Agency. Protocol was maintained at nearly all times and he was prohibited from speaking on any controversial subject.

In 1971, Hirohito and his wife went to Europe, and in 1975 to the United States, where their tour included a visit to Disneyland. After the trip, he was photographed wearing a Mickey Mouse watch.

On Aug. 22, 1982, the death of 83-year-old King Sobhuza of Swaziland made Hirohito the world's oldest reigning monarch.

Hirohito and the empress had two sons, five daughters and nine grandchildren.

Czechs to help with investigation

Experts to determine if Semtex used

LONDON (AP) — Bomb experts from Czechoslovakia will help Britain determine whether a Czech-made plastic explosive blew up Pan Am Flight 103, the Foreign Office said Friday.

British investigators now believe the explosive that blew up the Boeing 747 on Dec. 21 was placed aboard the flight in London, rather than in Frankfurt, West Germany, where Flight 103 originated, a West German newspaper reported.

Meanwhile, Yasser Arafat was quoted as telling a Saudi newspaper that his Palestine Liberation Organization had "plenty of important information" on the bombing, which killed all 259 people aboard the jumbo jet and 11 on the ground.

Also Friday, tighter security measures aimed primarily at U.S. airlines went into effect at all British airports, including more rigorous luggage searches.

The Munich Abendzeitung newspaper said British aviation authorities have told West German officials that they believe the bomb was attached to the outside of the aircraft while it was at London's Heathrow airport.

West German government press spokesman Ulrich Strempel said: "I cannot confirm or deny such a report."

Flight 103 began in Frankfurt with a Boeing 727, then changed planes in London before departing for New York.

Part of Heathrow's Terminal 3 departure building was evacuated for 20 minutes Friday while bomb squad officers checked an unattended black plastic bag near the Air-India check-in desk. It turned out to be harmless.

In the Scottish town of Lockerbie, where parts of the wings and fuselage fell, police said another 20 bodies were released to relatives Friday, bringing the total released so far to 196.

Searchers have recovered 242 bodies and are hunting for 28 others.

Police said the search for wreckage Friday centered on the Kielder Forest in Northumberland, 30 miles east of Lockerbie, where thousands of items ranging from credit cards and passports to aircraft insulation fragments have been recovered.

Arafat was quoted by the newspaper Al-Madina as saying the PLO was "cooperating with a number of European states and the United States in a joint international bid to expose the perpetrators." He did not elaborate.

Authorities say evidence shows that the aircraft was blown out of the sky by an explosive.

Czechoslovakia has offered to send experts to join the forensic investigation, and "the British government are grateful for this offer," the Foreign Office said. The Czechoslovak experts are expected next week.

Czechoslovakia is a major manufacturer of Semtex, but its Communist Party daily newspaper, Rude Pravo, rejected Western terrorism experts' suppositions that Semtex blew up the Boeing 747.

In Prague, Czechoslovakia on Friday reiterated to British Embassy charge John MacGregor that it "unequivocally opposes all forms of terrorism and has never supplied weapons, explosives or any other material to any terrorist organization," the official news agency CTK reported.

Orange-colored Semtex can be detected only by extremely sophisticated monitoring machines still undergoing tests in the United States. Britain says it has asked Czechoslovakia five times to make Semtex more easily detectable, and until now has received no response.

Anti-terrorism experts and U.S. State Department officials say Syria and Libya have obtained Semtex from Czechoslovakia and passed it on to terrorists. Transport Secretary Paul Channon announced stepped-up security checks on cargo, mislaid luggage and cabin bags following a crisis meeting Thursday of the National Aviation Security Committee in London.

Passengers at Heathrow faced long lines to have their hand baggage examined before boarding Pan Am and TWA flights Friday.

"I certainly believe that it's best to take a few extra precautions and be safe, rather than rush things and be sorry," said Miami-bound passenger Lee Godman.

In London, the International Foundation of Airline Passengers Associations proposed that all air travelers should pay a $1 levy on tickets to raise $1 billion for the development of high-technology explosives detection systems and better anti-terrorism training.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Some restaurants serve phony shark fin soup

HONG KONG (AP) — Fake designer clothes and other imitation brand name goods are nothing new in Hong Kong, but now the government says some restaurants are ladling out phony shark's fin soup.

K.S. Tong, deputy commissioner of the Customs and Excise Department, said Friday that enough of the imitation product to make at least 1 million bowls of the prized soup was imported from Singapore and Japan in the first nine months of 1988.

The fake product — a gelatin concoction that costs roughly one-fifth the price of average-quality shark's fin — is used in "majority of lower class restaurants" that sell the soup, he said.

An ordinary bowl of shark's fin soup, which aficionados believe can help preserve one's youth, can cost as little as $5 or less, Tong said. Top-quality shark's fin soup, however, can run up to about $35 a bowl.

Tong believes some restaurants can offer the soup at the lower prices only by mixing the phony product with the real shark's fins.

Serving a soup containing a mixture of the gelatin and shark's fin is not illegal unless the customer specifically requests genuine shark's fin, Tong said.

The official said the department and the Consumer Council intend to conduct a survey to determine how widespread the use of phony shark's fin is.

Crib death advance made

LONDON (AP) — Doctors say they have found a new "trail to point the way" to solving the mystery of sudden infant death syndrome, or crib death.

In research published in today's issue of the British Medical Journal, they say they found "grossly raised concentrations" of immunoglobulins, or antibodies, in the lungs of 16 babies who died of crib death and who were compared with a control group of babies who died for other reasons.

This "suggests that the respiratory tract is the prime target organ in the sudden infant death syndrome," wrote the research team headed by Kevin D. Forsyth of Flinders University in Australia.

Research also showed that many babies had minor breathing infections in the week before they died, they wrote.

Forsyth told reporters: "I think it is certainly a step forward in the research but it is not a step forward in prevention.

"It provides a basis for further investigation and it lays a trail to point the way we should be looking more carefully."

Dr. Pamela Davies, who advises the Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths, said experts had realized for many years that respiratory tract infection was likely to be linked to many of the deaths. She said the foundation would study Forsyth's findings.

Official says ambush fake

ROME (AP) — A prison official confessed Friday that he staged an ambush on himself — an attack he first blamed on Red Brigades terrorists — to try to win a job transfer, the Italian news agency AGI reported.

Egidio de Luca, assistant director of Rome's Rebibbia prison, had said earlier this week that terrorists forced him to stop his car as he was driving home Tuesday, and shot him in the thigh.

De Luca had said the attackers belonged to the New Red Brigades terrorist group and that his bodyguard, Carmine Panicciari, had chased and shot at them.

Authorities arrested De Luca and Panicciari on Thursday and charged them with planning the shooting. Italian media reported investigators had discovered a notebook in De Luca's briefcase indicating he had planned the attack on himself.

Authorities believe De Luca had asked Panicciari or an unidentified accomplice to shoot him in the leg, the reports said.

The reports said the prison official was depressed eabout his job and had recently been pressing his superiors for a transfer from the prison.

250 Ugandan rebels killed

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Government troops killed 250 guerrillas last month in an army offensive in northwestern Uganda, an official report said Friday.

Government troops engaged in three battles with rebels of the Holy Spirit Movement in December that claimed the lives of 30 soldiers and wounded another 20, said the newspaper New Vision.

Maj. Gen. Fred Rwigyema, deputy army commander, said the rebels were forced to retreat and hide among the civilian population, the report said.

The latest casualty figures brought to more than 700 the number of Holy Spirit rebels reported killed by the army since last year.

The Holy Spirit Movement, one of nine rebel groups fighting the government, was founded in 1986 by self-proclaimed warrior priestess Alice Lakwena. Her fighters believe oil smeared on their chests would ward off bullets and the stones they carried would explode like grenades.

Most of Lakwena's 7,000 fighters have been killed and she has escaped to Kenya.

China to develop software

BEIJING (AP) — China on Friday announced it has set up a joint venture with a U.S. company to develop computer software for international markets.

The company, Astro-UniHorn Computer Technology Co., is a conglomerate of UniHorn Inc., a San Francisco-based subsidiary of Unison Inc.; the Chinese aerospace ministry's six research institutes; and the Great Wall Industry Corp. Several thousand Chinese experts working for the ministry have developed software that "is very interesting and can be commercialized," said the vice president of UniHorn, James H. Spear Jr.

Among the new products the new company is to develop is software that enables computers to do engineering design work, Spear said.

He said UniHorn sought out the Chinese partners because of their low-cost expertise.

Unison has four other joint ventures in China, including the Great Wall Hotel in Beijing, one of the city's largest hotels.

Sister of Franco dies

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Pilar Franco, the sister of the late Spanish ruler Gen. Francisco Franco, died Friday at the age of 94.

She died from a cerebral hemorrhage after remaining in a coma for three days, said her son, Francisco Jaraiz Franco, a reserve navy admiral.

Her 1980 book, "We, the Francos," told the history of the family.

Mrs. Franco had been the last survivor of the two brothers and two sisters of the former head of state, who died Nov. 20, 1975. He ruled Spain for 39 years following the victory of his rebel army officers in the 1936-39 Civil War.

Balance diet for golden, active lifestyle

Copley News Service

It has been said that age is simply a state of mind. Maybe. But many senior citizens probably would agree that the state of mind depends on the state of health.

Maintaining good health in the later years is more crucial than at any other time except infancy.

A nutritious and balanced diet can be the key to a long and active life. However, as we grow older, the same diet that we ate as a child requires a few alterations.

Just how much altering is needed is not clear. Margaret McLaren, registered dietitian and nutritional consultant, explains that there are no current dietary guidelines available for seniors.

Basically, McLaren advises seniors to eat a balanced diet from the four food groups — the same as she would suggest to anyone at any age — with limits on salt, sugars and fats.

Although little research has been done on the nutritional needs of the geriatric population, existing data has prompted dietitians to recommend the following basic modifications in a senior's diet:

Reduce calories. Currently, the RDAs recognize two distinct ages for the caloric needs of the elderly.

A person between the ages of 51 to 75 needs 90 percent of the calories recommended for young adults, or about 2,400 calories a day for men and 1,800 a day for women.

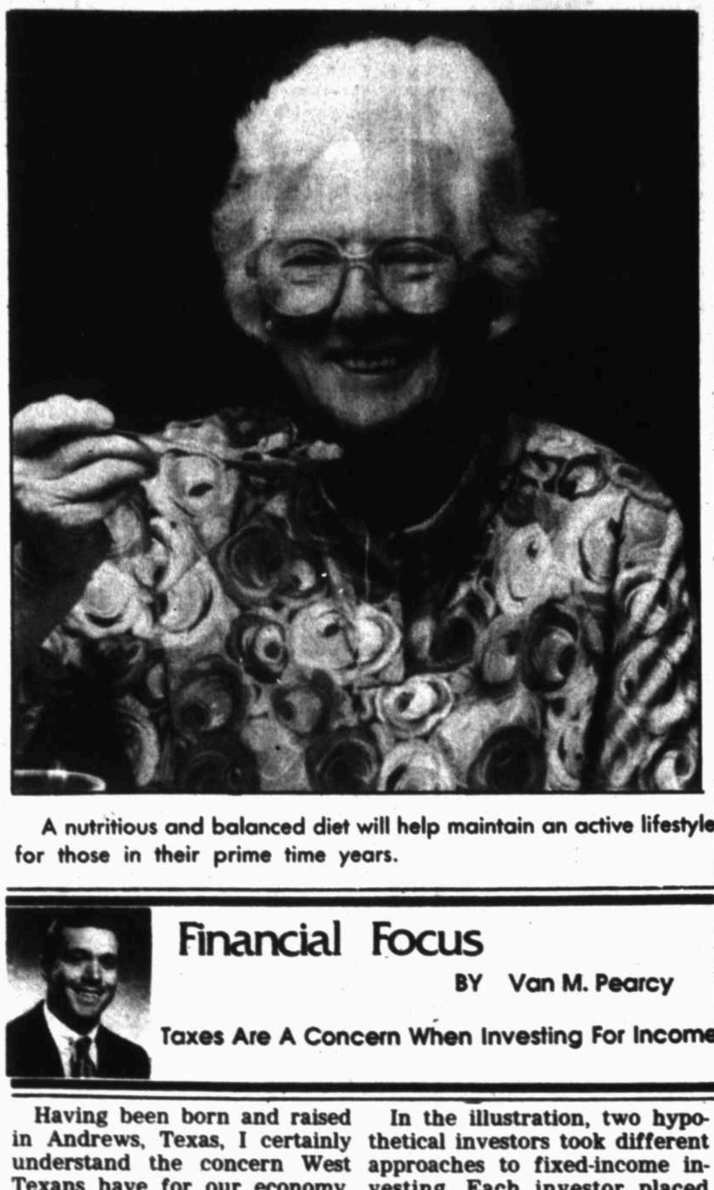

Then, at age 75 and older, the caloric needs are calculated to decrease by another 10 to 15 percent, or about 2,100 calories a day for men and 1,600 for women.

Exercise regularly. An exercise regimen of moderate intensity (walking is excellent) also is suggested, as it has proved beneficial in improving the calorie balance of the elderly.

Increase protein intake. Several studies have suggested that seniors have a higher protein need because they may not digest protein and utilize the end products as efficiently as a younger person.

McLaren recommends lean meats, fish, poultry without the skin and some legume and grain combinations.

Raw fruits and vegetables are suggested, along with whole grain breads, cereals and pastas.

A nutritious and balanced diet will help maintain an active lifestyle for those in their prime time years.

Senior exercise can be pleasing, healthy

Copley News Service

There's an anti-aging process that is as good as the fabled Fountain of Youth. Ponce de Leon would have been pleased.

It reduces depression and the risk of heart disease. It improves joint flexibility. It retards or reverses the effects of osteoarthritis.

You may be disappointed when you discover that this amazing anti-aging process is exercise. To most people, it's an answer that is neither easy nor fun.

"It's hard to start exercising," 74-year-old fitness guru Jack LaLanne said in an interview with Mature Outlook magazine.

"But I think everyone has the dedication inside. You've got to believe in yourself. I see so many people selling themselves short. They feel old. On the other hand, there are 80-year-olds who act like 40. You can have a new life. But you've got to reach out and grab it each day."

If you feel more like lying down than reaching out, here's good news: there are ways to make exercise easier and more enjoyable.

"The biggest mistake I see is beginners who try too hard and expect too much too soon," says 57-year-old physical educator Joan Sullivan-Morris.

She suggests you find a fitness class tailored to people of your ability. Don't be discouraged if it takes six to eight weeks before you notice any improvement. "But once that happens," she says, "you'll be hooked for life."

Dr. Kenneth Cooper, founder of the Aerobics Center in Dallas, recommends that you begin with a complete medical exam, including an exercise stress test. The stress test will show how your heart will perform under exercise conditions. It also will help determine how much exercise is safe for you.

A higher level of oxygen in your body tissues will not only slow aging, it will improve your memory, concentration, and overall mental alertness.

How do you give your tissues a healthy dose of oxygen? Choose an aerobic exercise: brisk walking, easy jogging, bicycling, swimming, gentle aerobic dance, cross-country skiing, jumping rope, exercising on a stationary bicycle or using a rowing machine.

A walking workout is one of the simplest and most enjoyable forms of aerobic exercise. These suggestions from Alice Faye's "Wake Up & Exercise" program will get you going:

Wear comfortable shoes with good arch supports. They should be made of materials that breathe, like leather or nylon.

Start a routine by walking every other day for about 15 minutes. Warm up by walking slowly for about five minutes, then walk faster for five more minutes. Cool down by walking slowly for the last five minutes.

Listen to your body. Brisk walking should make your heart beat faster and your breathing deeper. But stop if you find yourself panting, feeling nauseous, or if you are unable to get your breathing back to normal after 10 minutes.

Gradually increase your distance and the length of your stride. In five weeks, you should be ready to increase the frequency of your walking to five times a week. Keep to five minutes of slow walking at the start and the finish, but extend your brisk walking period.

Add a time and distance goal to your walking sessions. After seven weeks, try walking a mile in about 20 minutes. Next, increase your distance and stick to the 20-minute goal. A good goal to work up to (over about 15 weeks): walking three miles in about 45 minutes.

Financial Focus

BY Van M. Pearcy

Taxes Are A Concern When Investing For Income

Having been born and raised in Andrews, Texas, I certainly understand the concern West Texans have for our economy. The turmoil that our banking industry experienced had us all on the edge of our seats. And now, with our national budget deficit problem, taxes seem to be on everyone's mind.

If you are an income investor, probably one of your concerns is having enough spendable income after taxes to keep up with inflation and still get a reasonable return on your investment. Because of these factors, taxes have become a major consideration in investment planning.

A recent study reported by XEROX Financial Services, a major fixed-income money manager, illustrates the difference in spendable income a taxpayer in a 35 percent marginal tax bracket would recognize by investing in 60-month tax exempt municipal bonds versus 12-month Certificates of Deposit.

The study covered 1982 through 1986 (the reason a 35 percent tax bracket is used), a period of widely fluctuating interest rates. XEROX based the illustration on average annual CD prime rates and average annual yields for high-quality general obligation municipal bonds.

During those times the wide fluctuation in average annual CD rates ranged from 13.16 percent in 1982 to 7.39 percent in 1986. Each year, except 1984, as the CD matured, investors were faced with the decision of whether or not to reinvest at a lower rate.

In contrast, 60-month municipal bonds remained stable at 8.71 percent. At the end of that time, the principal matured and was returned. Investors then had the opportunity to re-evaluate investment objectives.

In the illustration, two hypothetical investors took different approaches to fixed-income investing. Each investor placed $100,000, for which they had no foreseeable need in the short term, into two different investments.

Investor #1, we'll call Mr. CD, selected 12-month taxable CDs, while Investor #2, we'll name Mr. TaxFree, opted for a 60-month tax-free municipal bond. Over the five year period, Mr. CD earned $50,360 in interest, $17,626 of which was lost to taxes. This left Mr. CD with $32,734 of spendable income, money he could either reinvest or use for living expenses.

Mr. TaxFree earned $43,550 on his investment, slightly less than Mr. CD, but since this was tax-free income, it was all his to keep. The bottom line is Mr. TaxFree enjoyed an extra $10,816 of spendable income that otherwise would have been lost to taxes.

The important thing about income from your investments is only the part you are allowed to keep after taxes is of any benefit to you.

In the illustration, Mr. Tax Free made certain he kept more income by eliminating the federal taxes due on it. That additional spendable income could be used for five IRA contributions, one to two years of college expenses, five great vacations, a new car or whatever else you may decide to do with it. It's income saved in taxes.

Although taxes should not be your main concern when investing, they are an essential consideration. To ignore the effect of taxes on your income could be a very expensive oversight.
