Canine donors

PHILADELPHIA — One of the first donors at a new bloodmobile Thursday was furry, four-legged and equipped with a tail, and answered to the name Barry. The bloodmobile is the nation's first to collect blood for injured canines. The University of Pennsylvania's veterinary hospital will send its fully equipped bloodmobile to animal clinics or kennels for donations, coordinator Donna Oakley said. Barry, a 3-year-old Belgian Malinois, has been a regular blood donor at the hospital, according to his owner-handler, Dan Buckley of the suburban Abington Police Department. Abington police have been sending their dogs to give blood for several years, ever since Buckley's first canine partner was saved with six transfusions. Penn began its donor program in 1987 for canine patients at the hospital, which performs about five transfusions a day.

NEW YORK — Barbara Bush and Nancy Reagan have at least one thing in common: They both recycle gifts at Christmastime.

"Of course," Mrs. Bush says in the December Ladies' Home Journal. "I mean, what am I going to do with 400 scarves? So I just rewrap them." President Bush and his wife "do not do presents" for each other, she said. Mrs. Bush says she would like to see more people move away from "thrusting so many material things upon their children." Magic Johnson says he has AIDS virus

■ Star of the NBA's Los Angeles Lakers announces his retirement the day after he found out he tested positive for HIV.

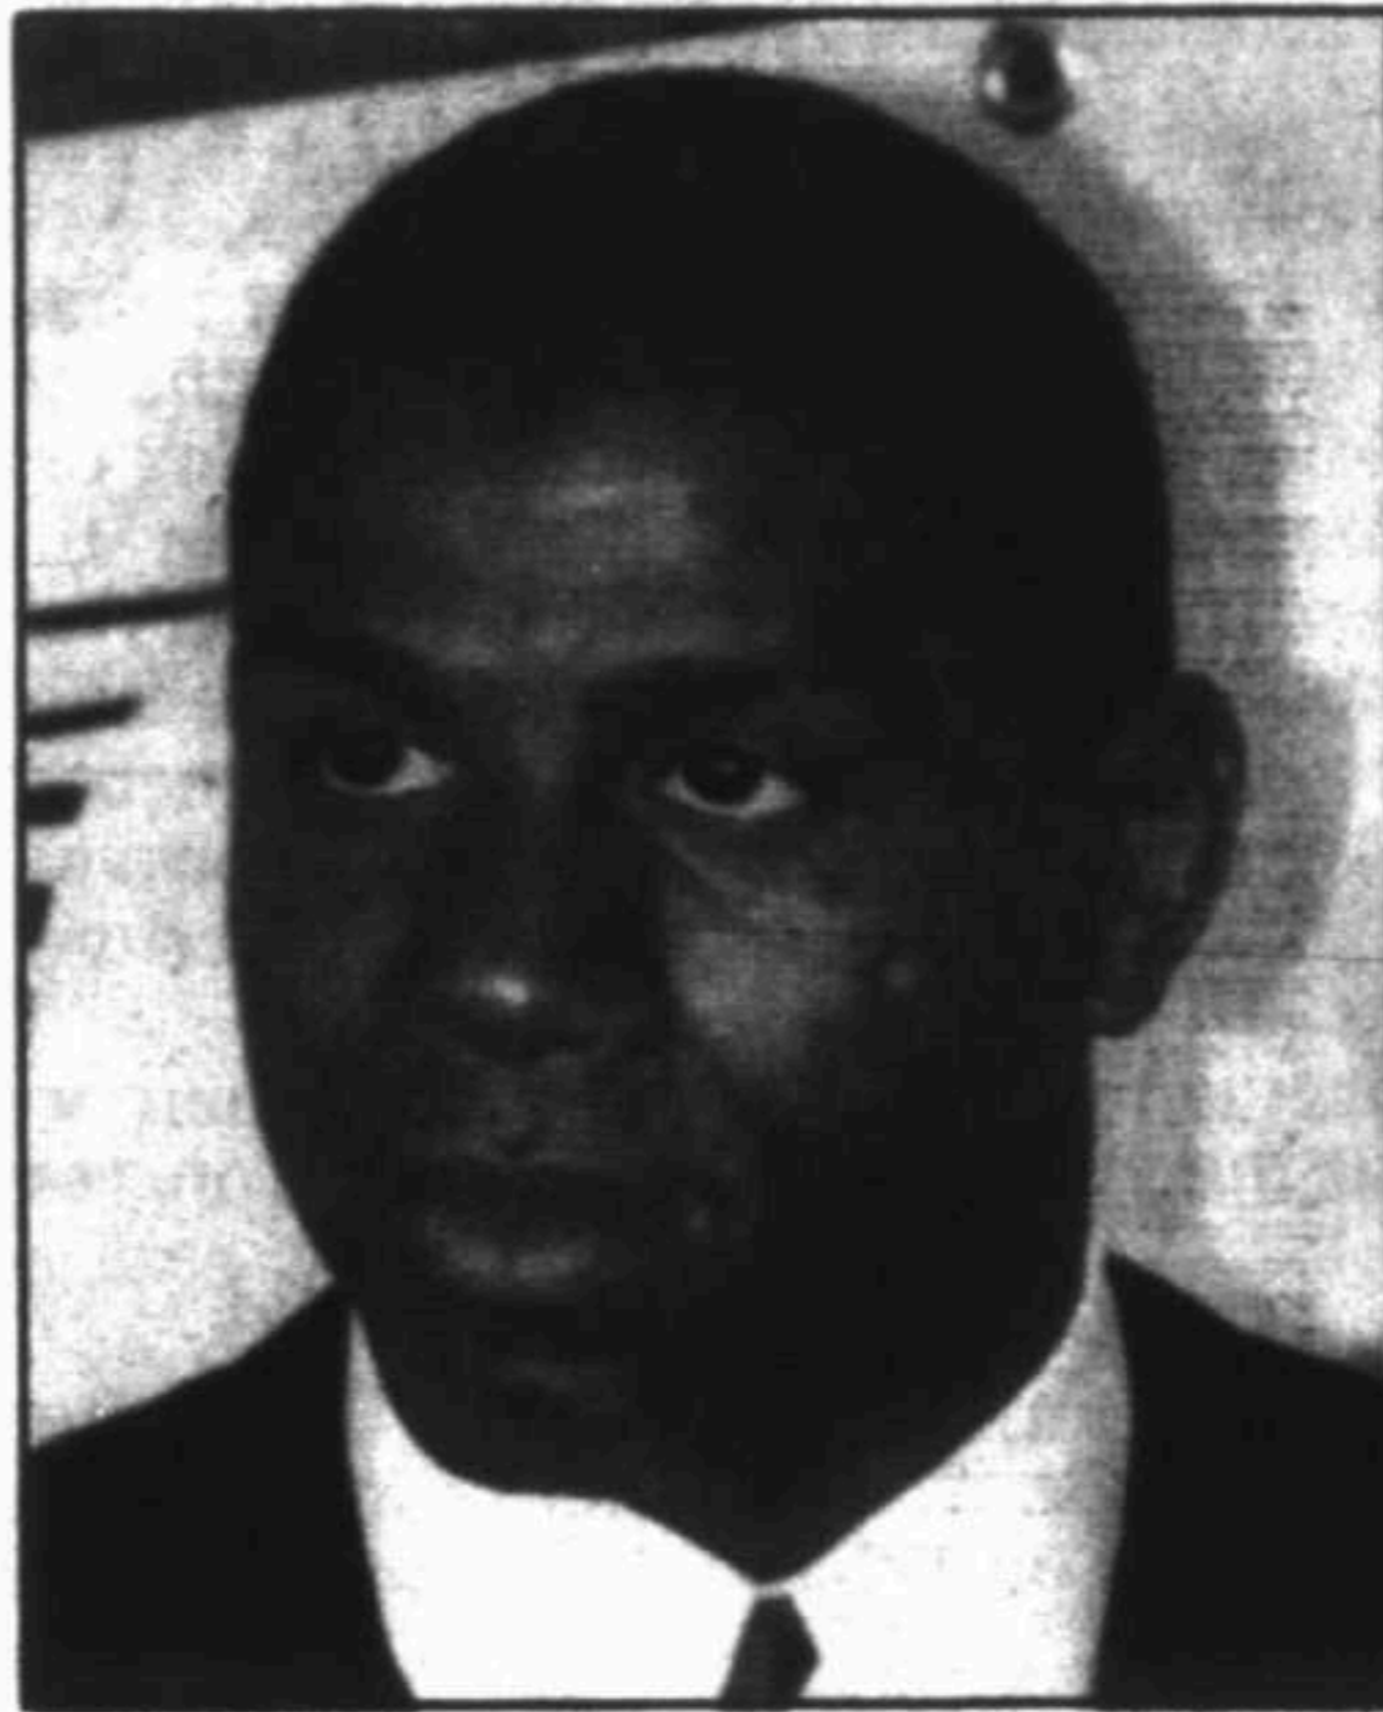

By John Nadel
AP sports writer

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson, whose beaming smile and sparkling play entertained basketball fans for more than a decade, announced Thursday he has tested positive for the AIDS virus and is retiring.

"Because of the HIV virus I have attained, I will have to announce my retirement from the Lakers today," Johnson told reporters at the Forum, where he played for 12 superstar seasons with the Los Angeles Lakers.

"I plan on going on, living for a long time," he said. He said he would become an AIDS activist and campaign for safe sex.

Both Johnson and the Lakers' physician, Dr. Michael Mellman, said he doesn't have AIDS, only the virus that leads to it. "I feel great," Johnson said.

Johnson didn't say how he contracted the virus, usually transmitted through sex or intravenous drug use. He referred questions about that to Mellman, who said, "I don't believe we know at this point, specifically."

Johnson repeatedly stressed that "safe sex is the way to go."

Johnson, 32, led the Lakers to five NBA championships. He is the most prominent American to announce his infection with human immuno-deficiency virus since Rock Hudson.

AIDS activists and medical officials said Johnson's stunning announcement would focus new attention on the deadly disease. Shortly after the announcement, a national AIDS hot line in Raleigh, N.C., was flooded with calls.

More than just a basketball star, Johnson has been a philanthropist, a prominent corporate spokesman and a role model for young people. His broad grin, familiar nickname and electrifying ability have made him familiar to people around the world.

Johnson came in fourth in a recent consumer survey of the appeal of athletes as commercial endorsers, behind

The range of people reacting with sadness and concern to Magic Johnson's illness showed he is respected as much off the court as on.

Emotion was evident from the floor of Congress to the world of entertainment to those who played and coached with and against him to the person on the street — or more importantly, to the youngster in the playground.

Even confirmation from the Los Angeles Lakers star himself on Thursday that he had contracted the HIV virus and would retire from basketball couldn't stop the doubting and grief.

Alliance tells Bush U.S. help important

■ President tells leaders U.S. would never abandon NATO, but they must assure him American presence is wanted.

Associated Press

ROME — President Bush won assurances Thursday from NATO leaders that they still want America's help in defending Europe. In a landmark summit, NATO agreed to invite old Warsaw Pact adversaries to join them in "a new era of partnership."

In a long day of re-evaluation, NATO also adopted a slimmer military structure in a bow to the end of the Cold War and prepared to call on the Soviets to put their armaments under the control of a single central authority.

"We must clasp the outreached hand of the people whose freedom has at last been won by a combination of their courage and our resolve," said Bush.

"We have lost our former enemies," NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner said in opening the meeting. "We all rejoice in that."

But it was Bush's challenge to NATO that dominated the opening sessions of the two-day summit. Bush pledged the United States would never abandon NATO but bluntly told his West European allies they must say whether they need or want America in their drive toward closer European union.

"If, my friends, your ultimate aim is to provide independent-

United Way 'troops' raise $2,755,143 for 'war' effort

By Darren J. Waggoner

The United Way troops came marching home Thursday night to celebrate their convincing victory in the collective war against poverty, homelessness, hunger, poverty, illiteracy and abuse.

The volunteers surpassed their fall campaign goal by raising a total of $2,755,143.

That represented about $2,000 more than the original goal.

"I'm very proud of our group. This represents a record for the city of Midland," said campaign chairman K. Michael Conaway. "I really appreciate the thousands of hours involved in the total campaign. Every volunteer should be commended for their efforts."

Philippines death toll tops 3,000

ORMOC, Philippines (AP) — A wall of water swept up Shirley Erlado, destroyed her home and killed most of her family — among more than 3,300 people who perished in the floods and landslides that struck two Philippine islands.

With thousands more missing and feared dead, Mrs. Erlado, 34, joined other dazed survivors wandering the streets of this devastated port as officials used bulldozers to bury the dead.

Ormoc received the brunt of Tuesday's disastrous floods, which some officials were blaming on illegal logging that depleted vegetation on the surrounding mountains.

"I was on my way home when I was met by water neck-deep," said Mrs. Erlado. "When I got there, we no longer had a house."

Industry shouldn't fight change, Chevron executive tells environmental seminar

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Environmental experts Thursday told members of the Permian Basin oil community there is a need for new attitudes and actions on environmental matters.

More than 400 people attended the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's second annual environmental seminar.

Harry Spannaus, PBPA executive vice president, said the seminar was an overwhelming success. "We had only 300 at last year's seminar, but we had to shut off registrations for this seminar, because there was no more room."

Ray Galvin, Chevron Senior Vice President for Exploration, Lands & Production, and keynote speaker for the seminar, said the industry should not resist change, or try to obstruct change, but, rather, should be a constructive part of the rule-making process.

"We need to anticipate, participate, communicate and educate when it

Michael Jordan, Bo Jackson and Tommy Lasorda. He has endorsed Converse athletic shoes, Slice soft drinks and Kentucky Fried Chicken, among other products. Spokesmen for several of the companies wouldn't immediately say whether they'd use him in the future.

Johnson appeared nervous at the outset of his announcement, but later relaxed and smiled frequently.

"I'm going to go on, I'm going to beat it and I'm going to have fun," he insisted, displaying some of the irrepressible zest for life that he brought daily to the basketball court.

Mellman said: "What we have witnessed today is a courageous act by a very brave man."

"He is not a person who is invisible, and because of his presence, because of his potential impact on society... I think that he should not only be commended but held as a modern-day hero," Mellman said.

Johnson said he learned final results of his HIV test on Wednesday. Mellman said Johnson initially was tested for an insurance policy.

Johnson, who was married two months ago, said his wife tested negative for HIV.

Johnson missed the Lakers' first three games this season because of what was described as the flu. On Monday, he was cleared to begin practicing.

Mellman said he recommended that Johnson not play professional basketball, nor participate in the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, because of the intense level of physical activity both would require. Johnson had been named to the U.S. Olympic squad.

His retirement and news of his HIV infection came as a sharp blow to those who knew him, watched him and followed his career.

"It's devastating to us," Lakers

General Manager Jerry West said. Johnson said he was looking forward to retirement, but would miss professional basketball. "I'll miss the battles and the wars. Most of what I'll miss is the camaraderie with the guys."

But "This is not like my life is over, because it's not. I'm going to live long... I can work out and do everything a normal person can do."

Johnson has been anything but normal in his basketball career. At 6-foot-9, Johnson revolutionized the point-guard position after leading Michigan State to the NCAA championship as a sophomore in 1979.

His 9,921 assists is a National Basketball Association record.

He was the first selection in the 1979 draft and immediately established himself as one of the league's best players, leading the Lakers to the league championship the following spring.

With center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar unable to play because of injury in the sixth game of the finals against Philadelphia, Johnson came through with a storybook performance. Playing all five positions, he had 42 points, 15 rebounds and seven assists in a 123-107 Lakers victory to clinch the title in Philadelphia. He became the first rookie to be named MVP of the finals.

The Lakers reached the finals nine times in Johnson's 12 seasons, most recently in June, when they were beaten by the Chicago Bulls in five games. Johnson earned all-league status for the ninth time.

Johnson, who is from Lansing, was married on Sept. 14 to longtime girlfriend Cookie Kelly. He has a son, Andre, who lives in Lansing.

Johnson, whose given first name is Earvin, received his nickname from a Lansing sportswriter after a 36-point, 18-rebound, 16-assist performance in high school.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Sunny skies in forecast

The forecast for today calls for early morning fog giving way to sunny skies, with a high near 55 and south to southeast winds at 5 to 10 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low between 30 and 35, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Saturday should be fair with a high near 65.

After an overnight low of 37, Thursday's high reached 46 compared to the record high for that date of 88 set in 1963. The record low for that date is 22 set in 1938.

STATE

Temperatures across North Texas dropped steadily Thursday as a cold front knifed deeper into the state.

Skies were mostly cloudy behind the front and there was occasional light rain and some freezing drizzle in the South Plains.

Winds increased to 15 to 20 miles an hour from the north with gusts to 30.

High temperatures reached only the 30s to 70s across much of the state, with readings at 3 p.m. ranging from 29 degrees at Amarillo to 79 in Del Rio.

Forecasters expected high pressure to clear out the clouds, allowing more sunshine to reach the state today.

NATION

More than 50 cities reported record lows Thursday in the fourth day of an early cold wave, and snow fell from the Plains to upstate New York.

Lows of 1 below zero at Omaha, Neb., and Waterloo, Iowa, and 3 below zero at Des Moines, Iowa, were those cities' earliest subzero readings on record.

Bismarck, N.D., and Sheldon, Iowa, tied as the cold spots in the Lower 48 states with record lows of 15 below zero.

guy has not only been such a great player, but he's been such a great ambassador for the game and everything else," said Boston Celtics forward Kevin McHale, Johnson's opponent for two of his five NBA championships. "My heart goes out to him. I think all you can do now is just pray that he handles everything in the best way that he can."

Johnson indicated he will become a spokesman in the fight for awareness about the virus, which can lead to AIDS.

"All my love and support is with him," actress Elizabeth Taylor said from London, where she is making two personal visits on behalf of the AIDS Crisis Trust. "God will help him and let us all pray to God that there will be a cure for him and everyone else soon."

Others began to use the news as a rallying point for AIDS awareness.

"This just points out once again to all of us that the AIDS virus is probably going to touch every single family in the country, and probably every single one of us before the decade is over is going to know somebody who has the AIDS virus or who has died of it," Rep. Dan Burton, R-Indiana, told Congress.

Burton then went on to complain that Congress so far "has not taken any real action" to fight AIDS.

Still, those affected most were the people who watched Johnson help the NBA become one of the world's most popular forms of entertainment.

"That's incredible. I can't believe that," Portland Trail Blazers guard Clyde Drexler said. "That's a shocker, somebody that great. He's helped make the league what it is. My heart goes out to him and his family."

"Wow. This is totally sad," said Seattle SuperSonics coach K.C. Jones, a former coach of the Boston Celtics. "This person, Magic Johnson, has given me so much, and also the league and the world."

"I just hope things work out for him. He's what the league is all about. He came in with Larry Bird and just took the league to another level. That's how he'll always be remembered."

"My thoughts are first and foremost with Earvin and his family," NBA commissioner David Stern said. "No one has contributed more to the success of the NBA than Earvin 'Magic' Johnson, and I know his fans around the world, myself included, will miss the thrill of watching him compete. We expect Earvin to continue to play an important role in the NBA, and the entire NBA family pledges its full support to him in his fight against this disease."

Johnson started to affect those around him as soon as he began to play organized basketball.

"It's unreal what happened," said George Fox, who coached Johnson at Everett High School in Lansing, Mich., from 1976-78.

Donald Mitchell, 22, of Los Angeles, was among those who gathered at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif., where Johnson's news conference was held.

"What a tragedy, it's terrible... someone who's meant so much to basketball," Mitchell said. "Magic is my favorite."

NATO: Leaders invite old adversaries to join them

ly for your own defense, the time to tell us is today," Bush told the allied leaders.

Bush's challenge produced a flurry of pro-American sentiment as the alliance undertook its largest transformation since it was formed in 1949 to counter Soviet expansionism.

A document on future military strategy issued by the summit leaders stressed the importance of the link between the United States and Canada and Europe. It said the presence of U.S. conventional and nuclear arms in Europe remained vital.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III, asked later about Bush's comments, said suggestions that there was a move to eliminate the U.S. role in NATO were "a total red herring." But he said that as the goals of the alliance were redefined, "we want to make certain that there are no ambiguities and that there is no confusion."

Britain, doggedly pro-American, and Italy declared that a NATO political declaration to be issued today spells out what Italian Foreign Minister Gianni De Michelis called an "undoubtedly answer."

"Europe does want to maintain the trans-Atlantic partnership, including the military aspect, including the central role of the alliance," said De Michelis.

But France, always edgy about U.S. domination in Europe and the prime advocate of the West Europeans assuming their own defense role, reacted coolly to Bush's statement.

"We wish the American presence to remain in Europe," French President Francois Mitterrand's spokesman Jean Musitelli told reporters.

"... It is not we Europeans who pressed the Americans to withdraw from Europe," Musitelli said.

Bush had asked during a closed session whether a French-German proposal this month for a European army was intended to exclude the United States. Britain has expressed fears it could undermine the U.S. military commitment to Europe.

Despite the tension, the alliance adopted a new strategy which underlined continuing cohesiveness.

"We no longer face the threat of a massive attack," the draft declaration said, adding that "in an environment of uncertainty and unpredictable challenges our alliance, which provides the essential trans-Atlantic link... retains its enduring value."

Officials said the leaders agreed to invite the Soviet Union and eight other former communist countries to join them in a new North Atlantic "cooperation council."

The others are Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Bulgaria and the three Baltic republics of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia.

Her husband, Wilfredo, had been preparing lunch for the children. Eight-year-old Gilbert scrambled to safety on a roof, but her husband and three of their children died, and three others are missing.

With fears growing of epidemics and food shortages, President Corazon Aquino rushed food and medicine to Ormoc by cargo plane and helicopter. The U.S. military arranged to fly two C-130s with supplies from Subic Bay naval base.

"We are so busy burying the dead and taking care of the living that we don't have time to assess the damage," said Maria Victoria Locsin, mayor of the once-prosperous farming and shipping center of about 160,000 people.

The government in Manila set preliminary damage figures at $14.6 million and said it would ask U.N. General Assembly members for relief assistance.

Officials said Thursday that 3,009 died in Ormoc, on the central island of Leyte, and about 350 died elsewhere on Leyte and on the neighboring island of Negros. More than 2,000 were missing in Ormoc and presumed dead.

Hundreds of bodies were bulldozed into mass graves. Officials believe entire families were wiped out, with no one left alive to claim bodies.

For the survivors, food and fresh water are running low. Mud is spread over stocks of rice, fish and vegetables in the city market. Thick mud covers rice, sugar and coconut fields outside of town.

PBPA: Oil patch needs to change, Guerrero says comes to environmental change," Galvin noted.

He said that sometimes oil companies may have to go further than the regulations, even though economic conditions are difficult. It is cheaper, he noted, to spend a dollar to prevent a problem than $100 to correct it.

The Chevron U.S.A. vice president said his company would not tolerate environmental noncompliance in its operations and would expect compliance from all the contractors and service companies it employs.

It may mean that employees and service companies need to be retained in some areas, because old patterns are hard to break, he said.

Galvin admitted, however, that even with total compliance, it would not be a perfect world. "Pipelines will still leak, costs will increase and there will be unreasonable environmental regulations."

Texas Railroad Commissioner Lena Guerrero said there were many good things happening in the oil patch environmentally, but there were also some things that needed to change.

She said irresponsible operators would have to deal with TRC, but responsible operators would get its support. "We need balance," she said. "We don't need unnecessary regulation, but we need strong enforcement."

Ms. Guerrero said the commission had plugged more than 3,000 wells in the past 16 years, but had identified more than 40,000 that were not in compliance with plugging regulations.

She said in the first year of the program, a new fund would allow TRC to target and plug 1,000 wells closest to fresh water formations.

Ms. Guerrero said the commission would use local contractors for the pluggings to help stimulate local economies.

In other environmental issues, she expressed concern that Congress might reclassify oil and gas wastes as hazardous materials. She also noted that the use of compressed natural gas (CNG) should be expanded not only to help the environment, but to provide an additional market for Texas natural gas.

Judith Espinosa, Secretary of State, New Mexico Environmental Department, said a balanced consensus among industry officials and environmentalists was needed to protect natural resources and the environment while being cost-effective.

"We need industry to participate in building regulations," she said. "Industry will not have it all its way and environmentalists will not have it all their way."

Espinosa said it was time to forget about past abuses of the oil industry and move forward.

Espinosa, discussing Normally Occurring Radioactive Materials (NORM), said New Mexico would have NORM regulations within a year. A committee composed of industry officials and environmentalists is formulating them.

Mike Manka, a senior environmental specialist for Chevron, said in a separate presentation that Normally Occurring Radioactive Materials were everywhere in food, water and soil and that natural radiation was two times greater than man-made.

He said the problem the oil field would be facing was with scale accumulation in pipes and oilfield sludge.

"Radium dissolves in brine water and is concentrated on the inside of pipes as scale," he said. "Radioactive sludge accumulates in oilfield production vessels."

He said much had been made about radioactive scale in used oil field pipe, adding that tests had concluded that one would have to hug contaminated pipe 24 hours a day everyday to get just the normal background exposure of radiation.

He said that Louisiana was the first state to adopt NORM standards, and that Texas was in the process of adopting standards.

Environmental restraints may hamper oil reserve recovery

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Dr. William Fisher sounded a warning note Thursday against unnecessary and costly environmental restraints.

Speaking at the PBPA environmental seminar, he said the Permian Basin still had tremendous potential for oil and gas recovery, but that excessive environmental restraints could reduce the recovery of those reserves by 20-30 percent and result in the loss of 10 billion barrels of reserves.

Fisher, the director of the Bureau of Economic Geology at the University of Texas, added: "With balanced environmental regulations we will be able to cut costs and apply the technology to recover another 30 billion barrels. It could mean the difference between 25 years of economic life for the Permian Basin oil industry and 75 more years of economic life."

Fisher explained that 100 billion barrels of oil had already been discovered in the Permian Basin and that about 15 billion more could be discovered.

He added that 28 billion barrels had been produced already, and that accelerated recovery technology could recover another 30 billion barrels.

The noted professor of geology said recovery of the 30 billion barrels would necessitate the drilling of 200,000 oil wells, 50,000 injector wells and 10,000 disposal wells.

However, if recovery is not accelerated because of excessive environmental restrictions, Fisher said only 15 billion barrels would likely be recovered.

"The question is how fast we will go and how fair we will go. We will need balance. But I think we can achieve balance."

NATO leaders adopt post Cold War strategy

ROME (AP) — NATO leaders, declaring that the huge Soviet military threat "has disappeared," on Thursday adopted a new defense strategy envisioning fewer forces and a reduced role for nuclear weapons.

The document approved by President Bush and 15 other North Atlantic Treaty Organization leaders marked a fundamental change for the alliance, created 42 years ago to block expansionist policies by Josef Stalin's Soviet Union.

"The political division of Europe that was the source of the military confrontation of the Cold War period has thus been overcome," said the document, issued on the opening day of the historic summit.

"The monolithic, massive and potentially immediate threat which was the principle concern of the alliance in its first 40 years has disappeared."

A huge lightning attack on Europe by a major power "no longer provides the focus for allied strategy." Instead, it said, threats to NATO would likely derive from ethnic rivalries, territorial disputes or crises caused by economic or political deterioration.

Such disturbances, it said, could lead to armed conflicts which could "spill over into NATO countries."

The leaders endorsed previous decisions by their defense chiefs to restructure their military forces, creating a 70,000-strong rapid reaction force to defend NATO territory.

The strategy review begun at a London summit in July 1990 concluded that changes in the Soviet Union and Europe have made the use of nuclear weapons highly unlikely. They said important new tools would include "preventive diplomacy and successful management of crises."

But the leaders said they had to maintain adequate military forces and a mix of nuclear and non-nuclear weapons — albeit at greatly reduced levels.

A few thousand Communist supporters loyal to Lenin's legacy gather on Red Square in front of St. Basil's Cathedral Thursday to mark the 74th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, even though communism has fallen into disrepute in the Soviet Union and the government canceled the traditional military parade marking the anniversary.

South Korea pledges removal of nuclear arms

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Roh Tae-woo pledged for the first time Friday to remove all nuclear weapons from South Korea, and urged longtime rival North Korea to open its nuclear facilities to international inspection.

Roh's comments in a nationwide television address were seen as indicating that U.S. nuclear weapons are being withdrawn from South Korea.

"The Republic of Korea will use nuclear energy solely for peaceful purposes, and will not manufacture, possess, store, deploy or use nuclear weapons," Roh said. He also promised to get rid of stocks of biological and chemical weapons.

With this concession, Roh said, "there can be no reason or justification for North Korea to develop nuclear weapons or evade international inspection of its nuclear facilities."

Israel raids south Lebanon sites

BEIRUT, Lebanon (NYT) — Israeli military aircraft attacked Palestinian guerrilla targets in southern Lebanon on Thursday, in a further increase of tension in the area.

Security officials said helicopter gunships made separate air strikes at the seaside Palestinian district of Al Rashidiyeh in the port city of Tyre, 43 miles south of here, and against the Ain Hilweh camp on the outskirts of Sidon 20 miles to the north.

The officials said one man was killed and three wounded when three air-to-surface missiles hit a building at Al Rashidiyeh that served as headquarters for the Marxist Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, one of the factions opposed to peace talks with Israel.

An Israeli military spokesman quoted by the state radio monitored here said that a base of the Democratic Front was hit and that all aircraft returned to base safely.

Two hours later, Israeli helicopters fired six rockets into Ain Hilweh, security officials and witnesses said. There were no immediate reports of casualties.

The officials said that Lebanese army troops deployed in the area opened fire at the aircraft with heavy machine guns.

"We can see red flashes from explosions lighting up the night sky," said a Sidon resident.

Soviet Union cancels parade

MOSCOW (NYT) — Another symbol of communism died Thursday when the annual military parade through Red Square, which was to mark the 74th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, was canceled.

In its place, several thousand Communist diehards appeared in Red Square and chanted for Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to be put on trial for presiding over the end of Communist rule.

As they surged toward the steps of the mausoleum that holds the mummified corpse of the founder of the now-decaying Soviet state, the demonstrators shouted "Lenin! Lenin! Lenin!"

But nearby in Manezh Square, a smaller number of anti-Communists staged their own mock parade to ridicule what they view as seven decades of oppression and economic stagnation under communism.

In St. Petersburg, where the Bolshevik Revolution was launched, numerous anti-Communist rallies attracted tens of thousands of people.

In years past, the annual parade through Moscow's Red Square had attracted throngs of Communist Party faithful who showed up to watch waves of Soviet soldiers and the latest military hardware.

Until Thursday, this had always been a major Soviet holiday, celebrated with the vigor and expense that Americans put into Christmas.

But as the Communists began to lose their grip after Gorbachev came to power, anti-communist protesters started staging counter demonstrations at the annual parades. Earlier this year, Gorbachev canceled all Communist Party celebrations, including the annual Nov. 7 parade.

The man who led the parade last year, former defense minister Dmitri Yazov, was in jail Thursday along with Communist accomplices who took part in August's failed Kremlin coup.

Communism's legacy still showed. People did gather in significant numbers all around the city, filled with an air of weariness rather than celebration. But these folks were lining up by the hundreds to buy bread, which is in short supply because of panic buying and producers holding back supplies in anticipation of higher prices as the country is about to plunge into a free market.

Anastasia Gregoryeva, 76, brushed aside the traditional holiday greeting. "I frankly don't know if this is a holiday. When I go to the store and if I buy some bread, then it will be something to celebrate," she said.

U.S. Coast Guard holds fleeing Haitians

MIAMI (NYT) — Nearly two hundred Haitians seized as they sought to flee their homeland in small boats are being kept aboard two Coast Guard cutters while the United States considers what to do with them. Washington is reluctant to send them back to a country whose elected leader was forcibly overthrown or to admit them and risk encouraging a new surge of Haitian boat people to head north.

Before last month's coup, the Coast Guard routinely returned those Haitians they intercepted sailing for the United States. But officials here said that in the wake of the coup this practice has been suspended and that recently apprehended boatloads of Haitians have been housed aboard the two ships — some for as long as 10 days — while Washington asks other Caribbean countries to offer them temporary sanctuary.

United States officials say that although most of the boat people are economic, not political refugees, they are leery of repatriating Haitians because of the widespread political violence in that country since the Sept. 30 army coup that overthrew President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Three hundred people are estimated to have died so far in coup-related violence.

Officials say they are also concerned, however, that if Washington opens the doors to many of the 185 Haitians the Coast Guard says it has in its custody aboard the two 210-foot ships, thousands more Haitians might be encouraged to attempt the perilous ocean journey to the United States.

Since the treaty allowing the United States to repatriate Haitian boat people was signed 10

'The numbers are building up, the ships involved are building up, and this thing is coming to a boil.'

Anonymous State Department official years ago, immigration officials said, more than 23,000 Haitians have been picked up at sea by the Coast Guard. Only 28 of them were able to convince their interrogators that they had grounds to claim political asylum and were thus allowed to enter the United States.

"Right now, we are examining the situation to determine whether it would be advisable to return these people to Haiti," said a State Department official, who declined to comment on whether a third country was being sought to receive the Haitians already aboard United States ships.

An official at another United States agency involved in the Haitian refugee issue, however, confirmed that other Caribbean countries were being approached to serve as temporary hosts for Haitians until they can be returned home.

"The numbers are building up, the ships involved are building up, and this thing is coming to a boil," said the official, who asked not to be identified. "They are looking for other countries. The U.S. knows it will have to bear the burden of the cost. The question is whether we have enough weight with some of these Caribbean islands to get them to take some of these people."

The Dominican Republic and the Bahamas, the two countries closest to Haiti, already have large numbers of immigrants from that country, and officials said they would be unlikely to accept more.

Asked how long the Coast Guard could maintain its holding pattern with the refugees it has picked up, a spokesman, Chief Petty Officer Luis Diaz, said: "We don't know. We have never run into a situation like this of having so many Haitians or any other aliens aboard our cutters for so long."

Officials said Haitians seeking to reach the United States might have already received some encouragement from the news that 52 Haitians who reached southern Florida by boat shortly after the coup had not been quickly returned home as is usually the case.

After Washington announced a stringent economic embargo against Haiti last week, the country's provisional prime minister, Jean-Jacques Honorat, warned in an interview that the United States should "get ready to receive" what he said would be a wave of refugees.

Some supporters of Honorat's government went further, threatening to encourage Haitians to leave for the United States by boat as retaliation for Washington's economic sanctions.

"We need to tell people that if they are caught by the Coast Guard, the first thing they should say is that they are Lavalas," a businessman said. The claim of membership in Lavalas, Aristide's political movement, would force the United States to provide at least temporary asylum, he said.

Colombia returns half of seized drug fortunes

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Courts have returned nearly half of the millions of dollars in cash, luxury cars and airplanes seized from drug traffickers during a massive crackdown two years ago, a newspaper said Thursday.

El Tiempo of Bogota summarized a government report that local courts had returned $35 million of the $79 million in bonds, checks and U.S. bills seized since 1989 and about half of the 375 confiscated air planes.

The judges said authorities had failed to prove the goods belonged to cocaine smugglers.

Intimidation by drug lords is thought to figure prominently in judicial decisions in Colombia, where about 250 court workers have been killed in the past decade. Hundreds of others were threatened, or accepted bribes to do the bidding of the traffickers.

The government declared war on the powerful Medellin cocaine cartel in August 1989 after the ring was blamed for the assassination of Sen. Luis Carlos Galan, a popular presidential candidate of the governing Liberal Party.

In a yearlong crackdown, police and soldiers seized hundreds of houses, apartments, hotels and ranches.

Moscow gives valuable lesson

The Soviet Union's bloated government bureaucracy is undergoing forced reorganization. Up to 50,000 bureaucrats who once ran the government will be laid off or reassigned.

The process bears watching. Under way in Moscow is a perfect example of what can happen when any government grows so large and unwieldy that it loses sight of its original purpose — to serve man.

Writing in the Fall 1991 edition of Policy Review, Adam Meyerson noted, "Communism was a universal failure because it misunderstood and, worse, was contemptuous of human nature. It has sometimes been said that Communism was a beautiful idea that went astray because of the imperfections of its leaders and of life on this earth. This is completely false. Communism would have failed under even the most benevolent of leaders, because it was an evil idea based on hatred of the institutions that give people the greatest happiness and the greatest opportunity to develop their talents and their moral sense of responsibility."

Although the centralized government in Moscow has been relegated to the "ash heap of history," communism is not dead. It still exists — in China, Vietnam, North Korea and Cuba, at least for the time being. Meyerson adds prophetically, "But international Communism has been smashed at its power center. May it rest in peace."

Other governments around the globe have a golden opportunity to study — and learn — from the failure of communism. In the United States — by far the best of the other forms of government in use today — there is still room for improvement. How? By making government servants more accountable to those they serve and by removing from the American system the attraction to make government service an end within itself.

A bureaucracy breeds waste and generates no economic benefit; it only consumes revenue. With that in mind, the goal should be to reduce government costs to the lowest possible level while still providing for the needs of the majority of people in the country.

Government is merely a device to do for man collectively what he would not be able to do for himself individually. That is the underlying lesson of communism's failure and now nations around the world have the chance to repair their own systems of government.

The lesson is being recited in Moscow. Are we listening?

Capitol Police need to check equipment

WASHINGTON — It was a malfunctioning X-ray machine that apparently allowed a Maryland man to sneak a loaded .357 Magnum into a Senate office building last spring, and our sources say that machine still has not been replaced.

An internal investigation by the Capitol Police, the private squad that protects the Capitol, exposed the problem with the X-ray machine, according to documents we have obtained. The machine had repeatedly malfunctioned in the two weeks prior to May 22 when, police say, Mark Alan Weissberger walked into the Dirksen Senate Office Building with a dark blue Smith and Wesson in his briefcase.

Anderson

Weissberger was arrested after a woman told Capitol Police that she saw a gun in his briefcase as he sat in a Senate hearing. The briefcase also held letters Weissberger had sent to the White House demanding the arrest of several politicians, including Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., who chaired the hearing Weissberger chose to attend.

Weissberger is in jail in Washington sitting out a debate over whether he should have a mental exam.

The Capitol Police are reluctant to admit they can do a better job of protecting the 535 members of Congress. But from where we sit, there is plenty they could do. There are two police for every member of Congress, and their annual budget is $65 million. Keeping weapons out of the Capitol should be their first priority.

Two years ago we exposed security problems at the Capitol by carrying a plastic gun into the building. The police beamed up their security by watching journalists more closely.

After the Weissberger incident, the police said there was little they could do to prevent these things from happening. But the record shows otherwise.

Police determined that the Dirksen auditorium entrance was Weissberger's most likely point of entry, based on his own admission. Problems with that X-ray machine were well-documented before Weissberger came in the door. The internal report of the investigation, obtained by our associate Jim Lynch, notes that there were at least six complaints about equipment failure on the machine in the three months before Weissberger's briefcase went through it. In fact, the day before Weissberger went through, a Capitol Police officer reported that the "X-ray machine lost power." And that it had been doing the "same for the last two weeks."

On the day of the Weissberger incident, Officer Gary Baker reported a malfunction of the machine at 6:45 a.m. He said the screen would go blank and would be blurred at times.

The investigation says that Baker's supervisor was "apparently" aware of the problem and that he reported it up the chain of command. But one Capitol Police officer told us that complaints about the X-ray machines were greeted with yawns, and officers were told to "do the best they could." The investigation also revealed that there were fewer than the recommended number of officers at the post when Weissberger came through.

Since the Weissberger incident, an X-ray machine technician has examined the equipment and recommended that it "probably should be replaced with a new and more efficient model." That has not happened, according to our sources.

The Capitol Police refused to discuss the Weissberger incident with us. A spokesman called it a matter of "congressional security and not open for discussion."

MINI-EDITORIAL — Senator Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., has made a stab at apologizing for his nastiness during the Clarence Thomas-Anita Hill hearings. But Simpson has a lot to be sorry for. He should apologize to Hill personally for claiming that he was "getting stuff over the transom" ... saying, "Watch out for this woman."

Capitalism fails to water capitalistic virtues

Why doesn't the recent news that American companies have helped keep communist Cuba alive through trade deals carried out by foreign subsidiaries knock our socks off? It doesn't knock our socks off because this is the sort of thing capitalists do, with world-class obtuseness and indifference to self-interest.

Businesspersons — how shall I put this? — just aren't real bright about some things. Which is their American right, as it is mine to point out how un-bright they are.

Take the latest tidings. You know of the Capital Research Center in Washington, D.C.? You should. It's a fine organization. Every year, it scrutinizes (among other things) business philanthropy. Every year, it reels backward in dismay.

Business, as the center discovers with dismayingly regularity, is subsidizing its foes: interest groups with minimal if any regard for the free market, for entrepreneurship, for the sober, sensible values that a climate of economic liberty should foster. Over and over, the corporate givers make the same stupid mistakes. I am talking of giant economy-size stupidity on the part of American Express, ARCO, Coca-Cola, General Mills, J.P. Godalmighty Morgan, and such like. I give you examples from the CRC's new study, "Patterns of Corporate Philanthropy: Funding False Compassion." The figures are mostly from 1989, the latest year for which they are available. Ford Motor Co. in 1988 and 1987 gives $30,000 to the American Assembly, which advocates higher gasoline taxes. The Center for Community Change promotes higher federal taxes yet receives money from Chevron, CIGNA, Dayton Hudson, Ford and General Mills.

How about the National Women's Law Center, which is trying to make sex discrimination suits easier to file? AT&T, which won a discrimination suit NWLC denounces, dutifully coughs up $15,000. The unspoken plea, I guess, is, when you call us Male Chauvinist Pigs, smile.

American Express gives to Gay Men's Health Crisis, which sponsors interactive workshops "for gay and bisexual men to build self-confidence and safer sex negotiating skills." Just why millions carry American Express, right?

Naturally, and properly, business wants to help blacks. On whom, then, does it lay $1.8 million? Why, on the NAACP and its Legal and Education Fund, which did all in their power to defeat the first black in 35 years nominated to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Well, true, it's the companies' money. But does this entail no obligation to use these large sums sensibly? Even if your aim is selling to absolutely everyone, no law requires feeding the hand that bites you.

Lenin's related dictum about capitalists selling the rope to hang themselves with is well-known. Or is it well enough known? Because maybe what capitalists need, even more than capital gains cuts, is some earnest attempts at self-examination. "Just what kind of society are we trying to build?" is what the capitalist should ask. What kind of customers? What sort of employees and stockholders?

Actions have consequences, including unforeseen ones. What we water takes root; whatever we fail to water browns up like a Boston fern under a heating vent. It suffices, in a sad, ironic way, to note that corporate givers have mostly decided against watering the familiar capitalistic virtues: freedom, thrift, hard work, self-reliance.

CHARLEY REESE

Government overestimates advertising power

When I was a barefoot lad in a rural Georgia town, still shy of entering the first grade, the subject of tobacco chewing presented itself for my consideration.

There were many adults in my little town who liked a chew. In fact, that was one of the hazards of going barefoot in town on Saturdays when the farm folk came to shop, socialize, and in the process chew and spit.

Moreover I had been enormously impressed by Henry Fonda's screen portrayal of the outlaw Frank James. Fonda's outlaw chewed with the most philosophic deliberation and spit at the most dramatic of moments. It seemed to me a most desirable thing to do.

So one day I asked a man if I could try a piece of his chewing tobacco. He smiled and cut me a plug. I popped it in my mouth, began to chew, and within about 90 seconds decided that I never again in my life wanted to chew tobacco. And I haven't.

I tell you this anecdote from my childhood because the United States government does not believe you and 240 million and some-odd other Americans have the brains of a 6-year-old.

The Federal Trade Commission, that august protector of American minds, has decreed under the authority of the Smokeless Tobacco Act of 1986 (one of many pieces of useless legislation Congress has passed while neglecting its constitutional duties and running up 22 consecutive budget deficits) that television shows of truck and tractor-pulling contests may not allow the viewer to see Red Man chewing tobacco signs which are located at the sites of these events.

Presumably if you see a Red Man chewing tobacco sign you will be irresistibly compelled to run out, buy some, and immediately begin to chew. The federal government presumes that you — unlike me at the age of 6 — cannot be trusted to make such a critical decision as to whether or not to chew tobacco.

It may be that our august Senate and House, so full of enlightened politicians, have a superstitious awe of the power of advertising. It's too bad for my business, which depends on advertising, they are wrong.

I can cite not only common sense observation, numerous scientific studies, and innumerable case histories of products that failed despite heavy advertising, but my own personal experience.

I do not know how many millions of dollars have been spent on chewing tobacco advertising and promotion since the 1940s, but whatever the amount, it is has been insufficient to overcome the effect of one chew at the age of 6.

Part of this endemic stupidity of modern politicians is just ignorance of business. Virtually no advertising is designed to create desire for a product in the generic sense; rather advertising is aimed at getting people who already want a product to buy a particular brand.

Car dealers do not advertise with the intention of creating a desire in people to own cars. The desire is already there. They advertise to persuade people who already want a car to buy their particular car. This is true of all product advertising from tobacco to Bibles.

You cannot sell chewing tobacco to people who don't want to chew just as you cannot sell a Bible to people who don't want a Bible. The art of selling boils down to finding those people who want your product. Marketing is the search for those people. Pricing, packaging, advertising and point of sale displays are efforts to persuade those people wanting your product (in the generic sense) to buy yours rather than a competitor's.

This country is half way to hell in a handbasket because foolish politicians, blown about like leaves by special interest groups, pass infantile legislation regulating personal decisions that properly are none of the government's business.

Working with youths makes difference

In the process of working with people in the social service setting, we sometimes question ourselves as well as being questioned by others as to our effectiveness. Are we really making a difference or is it worth the money expended on behalf of those with whom we are working?

When your primary area of service is preventive in nature it becomes even more difficult at times to prove you are really making a difference. I'm reminded of a story that occurred many years ago at Father Flanagan's home for boys in Omaha, Neb. It was during the annual meeting of the board of directors and the supporters of Father Flanagan's Home that this incident happened.

Father Flanagan, in his remarks to the gathering, indicated the budget that year went over a million dollars. "Although that was a lot of money," Father Flanagan went on to say, "if we saved just one boy it was worth it."

After his comment he returned to his seat which was next to John D. Rockefeller, who served on the board at that time. Rockefeller turned to Father Flanagan at this point and said, "Father Flanagan, you must be kidding; one boy saved is worth a million dollars?"

Father Flanagan turned to Rockefeller and remarked, "What if it were your boy, would it be worth it?"

Our YMCA through the generous financial support from our United Way works with hundreds of youth every day in a variety of programs and services all across our city. Is it worth it? Yes, I believe it is, for what greater investment is there than the wholesome development of our youth.

I urge all of our citizens to support our United Way for so much of the good work in our community is made possible with funds contributed to the United Way. You really do make a difference and it is worth it. Give to your United Way today.

Democrats announce benefits bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic leaders introduced legislation Thursday extending benefits for the long-term unemployed, saying it was time to end their three-month fight over the issue with President Bush.

An administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity said the White House opposed the plan because it would give Bush a choice of three options to raise money for the extra benefits.

Acceptance might encourage Congress to try the same approach on future bills, making it easier for lawmakers to box the president in by giving him unpalatable options, the official said.

The administration flatly opposes at least two of the financing options, one reducing the growth of foreign aid and one using federal borrowing.

The plan also drew a negative reaction from Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. Dole said the measure's benefits were still too generous. He also criticized provisions that would give Bush three choices for paying the cost. "We ought to agree to a single approach, not government by multiple choice," Dole said.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said House leaders had not decided whether to support the plan or pursue their own approach.

But he added, "It's a good effort to find the magic combination to try to get George Bush to sign this bill."

Like two measures Bush has killed since August, the proposal would provide up to 20 weeks of extra benefits to people who have used up the regular 26 weeks of coverage. It would cost about $5.5 billion.

"Winter is here; Thanksgiving is nearly upon us, and we feel it's critical that they get these benefits," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said of jobless Americans.

Mitchell, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and other top Democrats did not say when they would try to bring the legislation to the Senate floor, but they said they wanted the benefits in the mail by Thanksgiving.

Democrats have used the battle to sharpen what they hope will be a major issue for next year's elections: what they claim is Bush's inattention to suffering Americans and his absorption in foreign affairs.

To pay for the proposal's benefits, Bush could authorize the government to borrow the money by declaring an emergency, which he has opposed because such borrowing would drive up the deficit.

A second option would be to pay for the benefits largely by cutting projected foreign aid spending by $3.6 billion over the next four years. Administration officials have said they oppose this, and even many Democrats are against the idea because it could jeopardize aid to Israel and could eventually, because of budget rules, lead to cuts in domestic programs. The third choice involves a collection of minor tax changes.

House overwhelmingly passes major civil rights bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ending two years of charged debate over racial quotas, the House on Thursday overwhelmingly passed a major civil rights bill that makes it easier for victims of job discrimination to sue and collect damages.

The passage, on a 381-38 vote, sends the measure to President Bush, who has said he will sign it. Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., hailed the House action as "a historic moment."

"The struggle to enact civil rights legislation in 1991 has engaged us for a very long time," he said.

The House vote was to accept the same bill passed by the Senate last week. It was the product of long negotiations between Bush aides and Senate sponsors.

Five Democrats joined 33 Republicans in voting against the civil rights bill. Supporting the bill were 252 Democrats, 128 Republicans and the one independent.

The bill expands the rights of job discrimination victims, including the objects of sexual harassment, to sue and collect damages. It overturns a series of Supreme Court rulings that had increased the burdens of proof on plaintiffs in job discrimination cases.

With approval a foregone conclusion, the final action came after partisans on both sides debated who had blinked in the negotiations with the White House.

Rep. Dana Rohrabacher, a conservative Republican from California, charged that despite Bush's claims to the contrary, the bill "enshrines race-based quotas."

"This bill is not a retreat — it's a complete surrender," Rohrabacher said.

Rep. Craig Washington, a black Democrat from Texas, said Bush's quotas charge had always been a "red herring." He said the success of Louisiana Republican gubernatorial nominee David Duke, a former Ku Klux Klan leader, prompted Bush to abandon the racially divisive argument.

"David Duke took the sheet off the quotas argument," Washington said.

The final debate was dominated by outrage over a provision added by the Senate that exempts from its provisions the plaintiffs in one case, some 2,000 Asian-American and other minority employees of an Alaska salmon cannery known as Wards Cove Packing Co.

Their case resulted in a 1989 Supreme Court ruling that significantly narrowed the rights of plaintiffs in some job discrimination cases. Undoing that court ruling was one of the primary motivations of supporters of the bill, but Senate sponsors agreed to include the provision exempting that case alone from the change in law.

In an emotional speech, Rep. Neil Abercrombie, D-Hawaii, denounced the compromise as an "extortion" that subjects two minority groups — Asian-Americans and Alaskan natives — to unfair treatment. He said Congress would never agree to such treatment for more politically powerful minorities.

"Do you think this would be happening if it was 2,000 Irish-

For more national news/8B

Americans, or 2,000 Jewish-Americans?" Abercrombie demanded.

However, the House voted to go along with Democratic leaders who proposed a rule permitting only a straight vote on whether to accept the Senate bill, without any amendments. They said Bush had threatened to veto the bill if the exemption were removed.

"This bill is so fragile, we're just afraid any amendment will sink it," said House Rules Chairman Joe Moakley, D-Mass.

The criticism prompted Foley to come to the House floor to cool tempers. He promised to back a separate bill removing the exemption from the Wards Cove case and urged House members to accept the Senate's bill and the House leadership's resolution ruling any amendments out of order. "It is not a perfect bill," Foley said. "... I will exercise every effort on my part to see that it is corrected."

The Senate approved the measure a week ago on a 93-5 vote.

Senators accepted changes that would apply the bill's job protections, and those of other anti-discrimination laws, to their employees and to those of the White House. In addition, the Senate agreed to require its own members to pay any judgments in such cases out of their own pockets.

The House adopted no similar provisions for its own employees. But House leaders contended their employees were covered already by job-rights laws and have an office to hear complaints from House employees. House employees, however, have no right to appeal to the courts, as the bill provides for Senate employees.

The legislation has been in the works for two years, since the Supreme Court issued several rulings in 1989 that made it more difficult for victims of job bias to win lawsuits against their employers.

The agreement with Bush averted a second threatened veto. A year ago, the Senate sustained Bush's veto of a similar bill by a single vote.

The bill expands the rights of victims of sexual harassment and discrimination to sue for damages. They currently can collect only back pay and attorney fees. But as part of the compromise, such cases would be subject to dollar limits on awards, ranging from $50,000 to $300,000, depending on the size of the company.

Victims of racial discrimination face no such limits. Some supporters have complained about the limits in sexual discrimination cases, and they have promised to file a separate bill eliminating those limits.

The exemption applies only to the case against Wards Cove Packing Co., a Seattle-based cannery operating in Alaska that is the defendant in a discrimination suit filed in 1974. Lobbyists for the company have pushed hard for the exemption, and it was added in the Senate at the behest of Alaska's two Republican senators.

City salary panel starts comparison review

■ After reviewing comparable positions in industry and government, the panel will make recommendations to the council.

By Debbie Lincocum
Staff Writer

A city of Midland salary panel Thursday recommended a comparison survey of the total compensation of workers in north and central Texas cities as well as five cities in the surrounding area.

"We're talking about looking at what they are really being paid — total compensation packages, including everything related to benefits," said city Administrative Services Director David Hunter. Surveys will include information about insurance costs, retirement contribution, car allowances and other benefits.

Members of the panel — department heads, city councilmen, private industry representatives and a member of Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse — agreed to compare city employee salary information with not only Abilene, Amarillo, Lubbock, Odessa and San Angelo, but Richardson, Mesquite, Garland and Waco as well. Other comparisons will be made with private corporations in the local area.

A comparative salary survey is the panel's major tool for its task — determining if city employee compensation is equitable and competitive. A similar panel last year generated some education and certification pay increases.

Information is collected from similar-sized cities and local industries for city jobs with closely matched job descriptions. Last year's comparisons came from area cities and Richardson. The two additional Dallas-area cities and Waco were added this year, but panel members said they wanted to keep those results separate from cities in West Texas.

For some positions, comparison with the central and north Texas cities would be especially useful, panelists determined, because city employees may leave Midland for a higher-paying job in those areas, or higher salaries may make recruiting more difficult. Dispatchers for emergency 911 service were cited as an example.

At-large Councilman J.D. Faircloth, co-chairman of the panel, said the planned survey, slated to include such details as take-home cars, would give a more complete picture than was available last year.

"We're after a comparison level that's equal," he said. "Compensation packages

Medical experts differ on cause of baby's death

Conflicting opinions about whether an infant can die from a three-foot fall was the center of testimony Thursday in the trial of a 23-year-old man accused of killing his 9-month-old daughter.

Citing medical articles, experiments and professional experience, forensic pathologists argued the possibility of whether the child, Maritza Vidana, could have died from falling off a couch.

The girl's father, Jesus Manuel Vidana, pleaded not guilty in Judge John Hyde's 238th District Court Monday to intentionally causing the death.

The infant died on Jan. 10 during surgery after being injured while in the care of her father, testimony showed. The girl, who suffered a fractured skull, died as a result of brain swelling, medical doctors testified.

After the accident, Vidana told medical personnel, police, relatives and a neighbor that he left his daughter on a couch, went to get a drink of water in the kitchen, heard a thud and discovered the injured infant on the floor, repeated testimony revealed.

Dr. Linda Norton, a private forensic pathologist from Dallas, discredited Vidana's story.

"The injury is that of a moving head forcefully thrown into a flat object," Ms. Norton testified.

Ms. Norton demonstrated the force necessary to injure the child to the extent suffered by slinging a doll against the courtroom wall.

Ms. Norton also explained to the jury that the girl died from being accelerated into a surface and not from being struck while stationary.

Midland police put impounded vehicles on the block

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

An array of seized and seemingly unwanted cars and trucks are cluttering a parking lot on the southeast side of Midland. Many of the neglected vehicles will eventually be gutted and sold for scrap.

Impounded from drunk drivers, felony criminal offenders or towed away from wrecks, many of the vehicles are never reclaimed by their owners and are ultimately sold to junk dealers. The majority of the vehicles were heavily damaged in accidents, causing owners to choose abandonment over the high cost of repair.

The autos in question are resting in a lot owned by C&L Recovery Services Inc. C&L provides all towing and impounding services for the Midland Police Department.

tion this year will start at 9 a.m., beginning with some 40 bicycles.

Auction-goers must register at the office before bidding on any items. For safety reasons, no one will be allowed to leave with their newly-purchased autos until the end of the auction.

"Periodically, we will hold these auctions to make some room. We basically schedule them randomly depending on how crowded the lot is," said Gary Lane, who has been involved with impounding for 10 years.

Once a car is impounded, the department must notify the owner and lien holder within 10 days. Upon receiving the letter, the owner has 20 days to claim the vehicle.

If they do, legal proof of ownership and identification must be presented before a release form is obtained from the department's traffic division. If they don't, the vehicle becomes the property of the city of Midland.

Unless, of course, the lien holder steps in.

"Lien holders typically are biggest source of trouble and anger," said traffic patrol Sergeant Mike Roberts. "They'll say the owner is behind on payments and attempt to repossess the car. But then find they can't. At least not until all reasonable ef-

AUSTIN — Remember when President Truman ended the Korean War by dropping the atomic bomb? Heard about Napoleon's victory at Waterloo?

Those mistakes and more than 200 other factual errors in American history textbooks prompted the State Board of Education Thursday to postpone adoption of new history books until next year.

The unprecedented move came on a voice vote after citizen watch groups presented Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno with data that showed an all-time high in the number and degree of errors that had made the final versions of all six books.

Meno asked the board to postpone adoption of all textbooks submitted under state guidelines and to consider fines for publishers who submitted materials with uncorrected mistakes.

"Part of the issue here is that it should not be the responsibility of the Texas Education Agency to go through page by page and edit these (books)," Meno said. "What we should be doing is getting a finished product."

The board, however, postponed only the adoption of the much maligned history books.

State Board of Education member Jane Nelson of Lewisville said Texans should be "outraged" at the errors in the history books, including a statement in one book that the United States settled the Korean conflict by "using the bomb."

That mistake was cited in a proposed book by Scott Foresman and

Co. Raul Castilla, regional vice president of the company, said the error only appeared in the teacher's edition, and would be corrected. "Nobody wants error free books more than we do," he said.

Board member Will Davis of Austin questioned whether the books were written by professionals with backgrounds in American history.

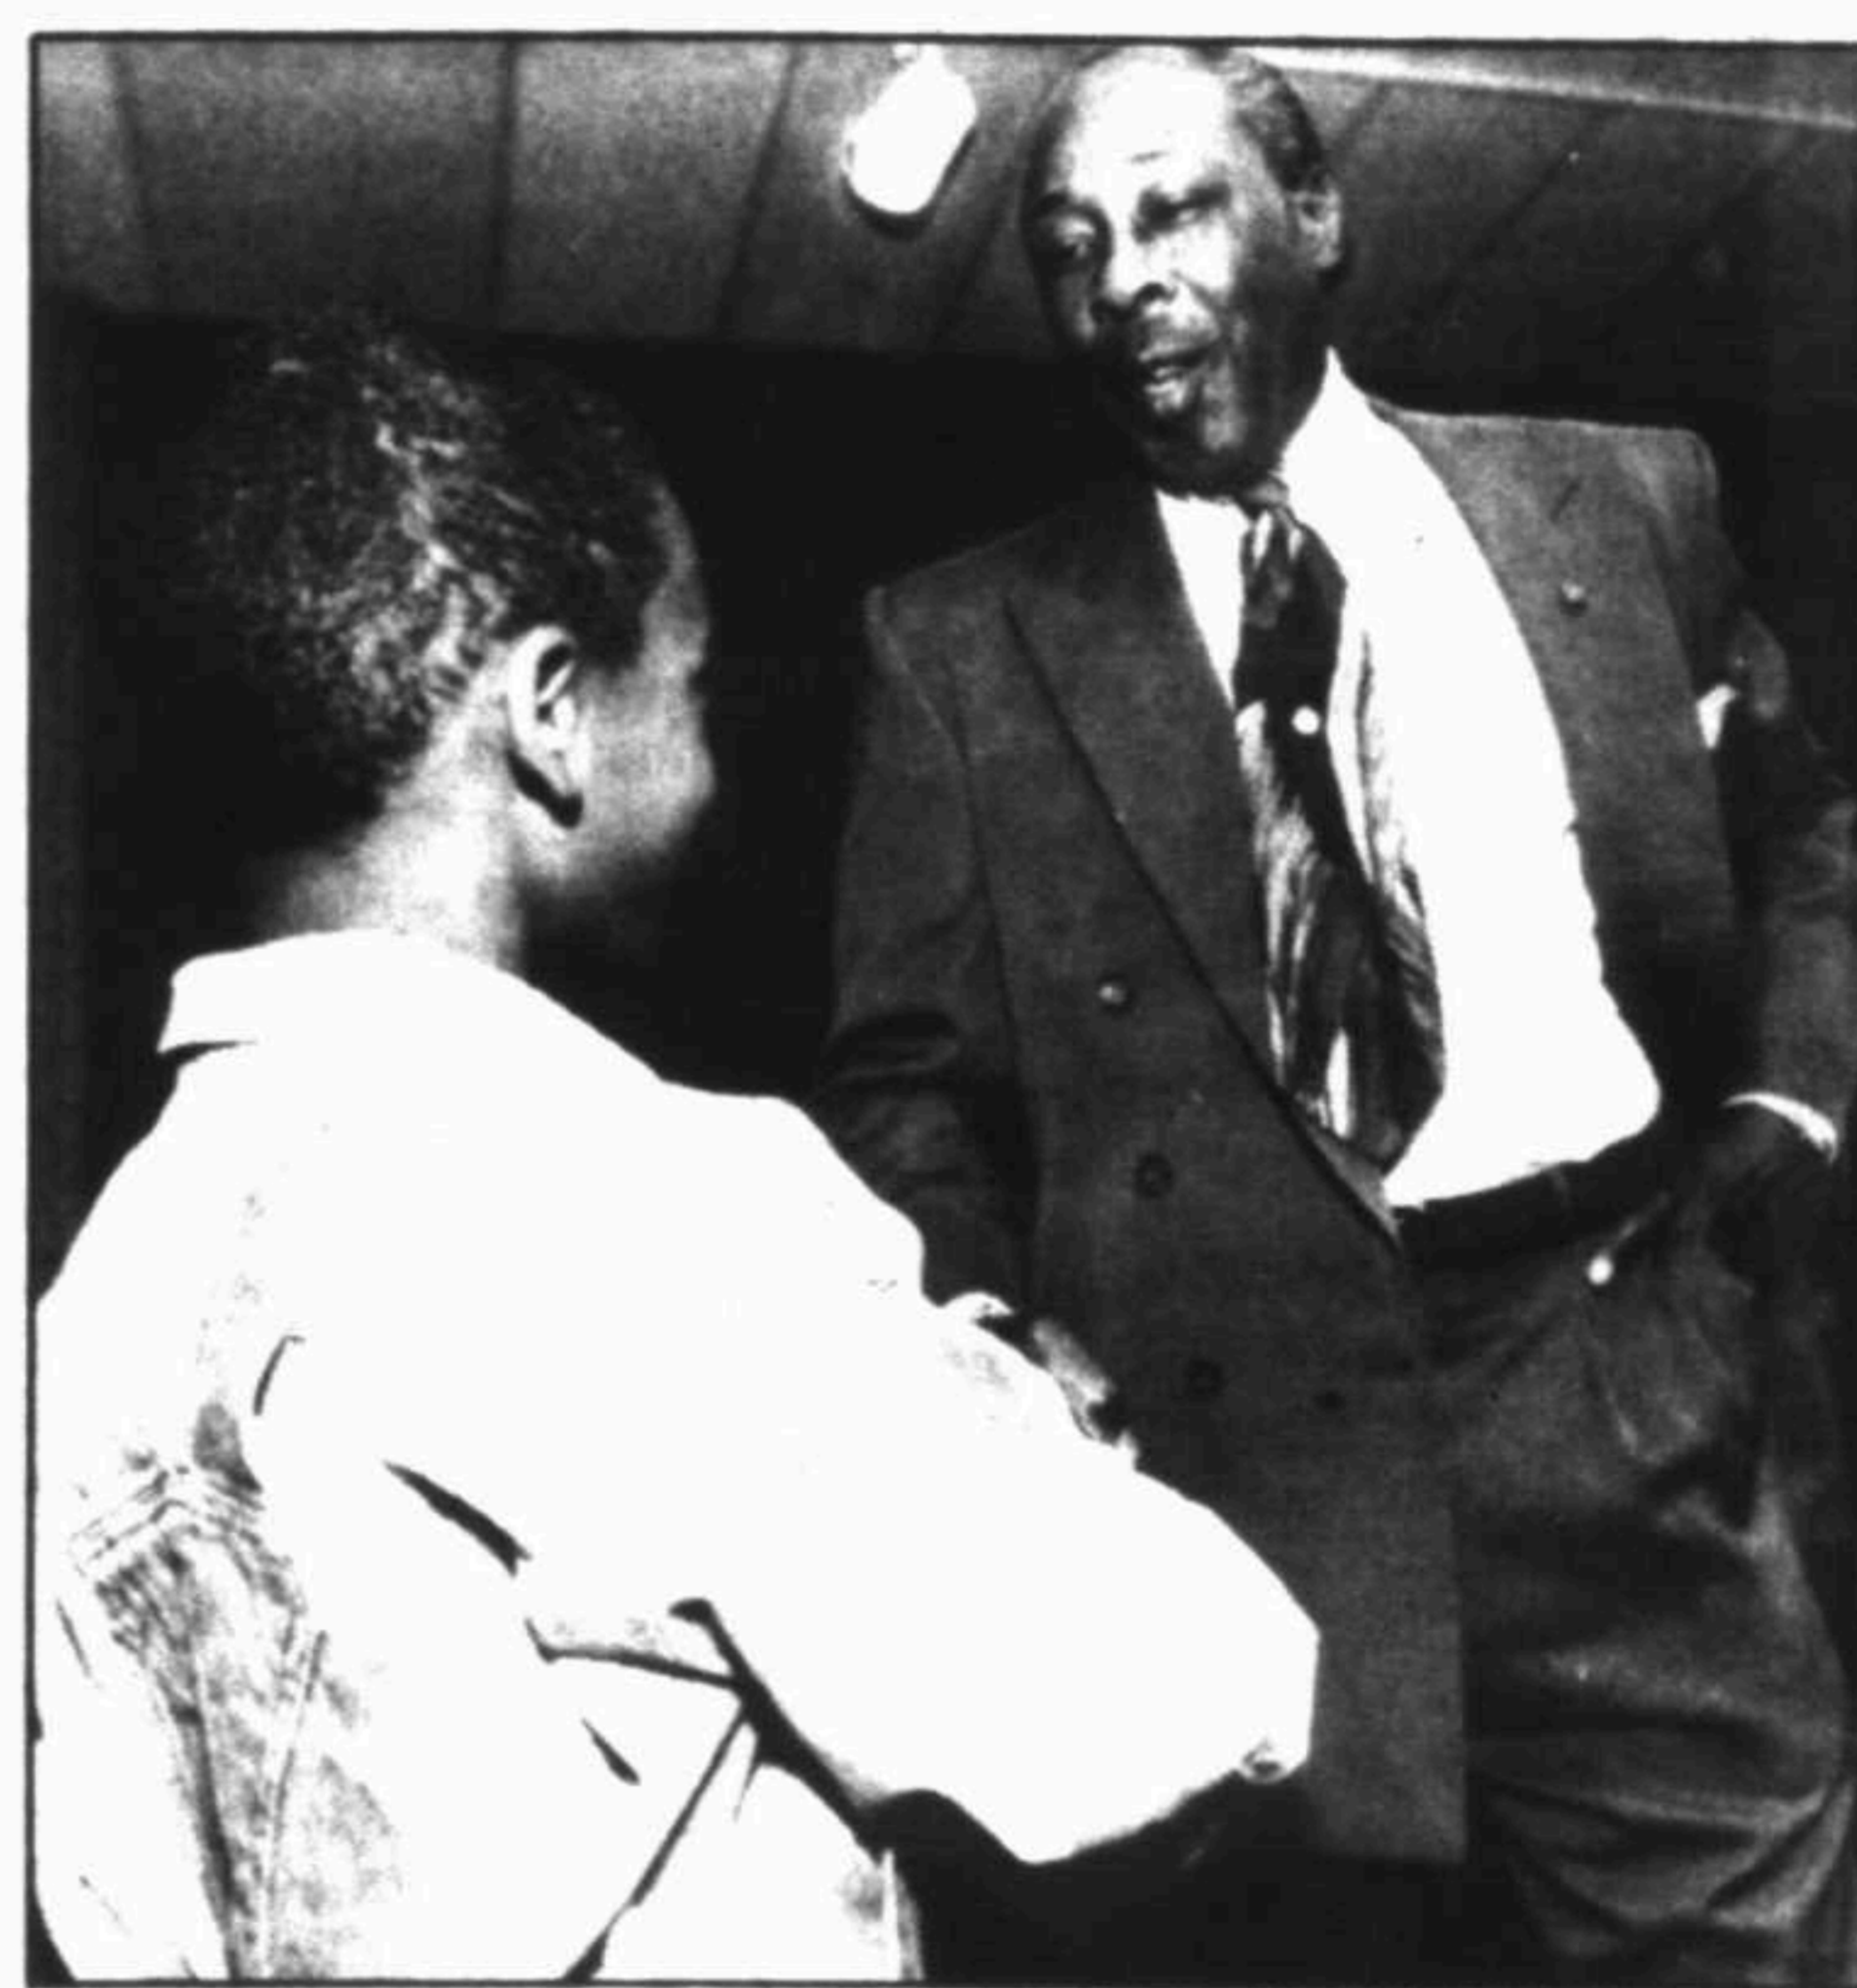

"Anybody who is an American citizen knows it was not the Korean War that ended with an atomic explosion, but World War II," Davis said.

"I don't understand how that happened," he said. "That is a fundamental axiomatic part of American history. That is not an error; that is ignorance, pure ignorance."

The board was scheduled to approve a list of four to six books from which local districts could choose the text they would use for high school history next school year.

Joe Clark greets Charles Gordon, 8, Thursday night.

Bat-wielding principal reveals his strengths

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Joe Clark didn't wield a bat when he took the podium Thursday night. But he didn't need one, his words were powerful enough.

More than 700 people packed into the university's Student Center. When the 600 available seats were taken, people stood along the walls all around the room to hear his address.

UTPB spokesperson Travis Woodard said she was "just amazed at the turnout, especially with this drizzly weather."

The nationally-known former principal of Eastside High School in Patterson, N.J., commanded the stage for more than an hour at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The former principal generated a storm of controversy when he turned the New Jersey high school into a security zone, violating fire codes while locking drug pushers out.

"I felt like a man dangling from a wire over a boiling cauldron," Clark said, speaking of his Eastside High days. "The adversarial forces — with the combined brain power of an ing skull stopping after coming in contact with a surface and the brain continuing to move, she testified.

Ms. Norton likened the phenomenon to being in a moving car that hits a telephone pole. The car, like the skull, comes to a stop yet the passenger, as with the brain, keeps moving within the vehicle, she testified.

The free-fall force necessary to cause the brain movement that could result in the massive brain swelling of a 9-month-old would have to be from two or three stories high, Ms. Norton told jurors.

Dr. Charles Odom, a medical examiner for the Dallas County Medical Examiner's Office, staunchly disagreed.

"You do find children who fall short distances and sustain fatal (head) injuries," Odom testified.

When given the situation of an infant falling from a couch, Odom replied, "the injuries she sustained could have occurred in that fashion."

Odom cited medical documentation of similar instances having occurred.

In addition, if a small child was flung as demonstrated, other injuries would have been prevalent, Odom testified.

Ms. Norton dismissed the necessary presence of other injuries and heavily criticized the accuracy of the various medical articles Odom produced.

The medical journal articles centered on studies of infants reported to have fallen and died as a result.

Ms. Norton claims the studies make an erroneous presumption that the infants suffered injuries from short falls when the children's caretakers could have exaggerated or lied about the incidents.

In addition, studies using biomechanical engineering dummies and monkeys show that it is not possible for an infant to sustain massive brain swelling as in the case of Maritza Vidana, Ms. Norton said.

A third forensic pathologist, Dr. Ralph Erdmann of Lubbock, who performed an autopsy on the infant, testified he thought a greater force than falling off a couch was necessary to cause such injuries.

Erdmann said he could not say at what height a baby must fall for such brain swelling to occur.

Testimony has been scheduled to resume Tuesday morning.

forts to get the owner to claim it have been exhausted."

According to Roberts, the policies provide a safeguard against releasing a vehicle to the wrong person.

"We're certainly not trying to collect cars but we also don't want to give them out to anyone off the streets," said Roberts.

Most of the money earned from the auctions goes directly to the city, said Lane. However, money received from the sale of vehicles involved in narcotics cases goes toward law enforcement work, a system established several years ago by the state.

C & L Recovery Services charges seven dollars a day to hold a vehicle. If a vehicle remains unclaimed after several months and is eventually sold at an auction, the police department will reimburse the company for all accumulated fees, said Lane.

According to C & L employee Tonya Homer, security is provided around the clock at the lot.

"There have been few instances of theft," she said. "Some of those cars have been sitting out there for three and four months. I don't know what the people are thinking but I guess they aren't too interested in getting them back."

PAY: Panel begins salary review

might be different and it's important to determine exactly what someone is making."

Faircloth gave fellow members a set of statistics he termed a "gentle reminder" that city funds are limited. Among those is a cost of living survey that lists Midland slightly higher than Abilene, Amarillo and Lubbock, but about equal with Odessa.

A graph showing municipal tax rates, however, shows Midland — at 65.9 cents per $100 of valuation — slightly above Lubbock, Houston and Dallas, as well as 11 cents above Odessa, but lower than San Angelo.

"I hope you will keep in mind that any 1 percent increase in the general fund will equal a 1-cent increase in ad valorem (property) taxes," Faircloth told the panel. "We need to know if there's a problem (with salaries) but we also need to know if we can pay for it."

Panel members did not determine exactly which employee salaries they would compare this year. Hunter said he would conduct individual meetings with department heads to determine areas of salary concern.

The panel is expected to examine survey information at a December meeting and make a recommendation to the city council by early January.

Meanwhile, staffers of the personnel department will be charged with collection of the data with mailings and phone calls to cities and corporations. Hunter estimated the process would take about a month.

Once the salary survey is complete and any recommendations made, city employee members of the panel are expected to continue meeting periodically to evaluate personnel changes, including reclassification of jobs.

CLARK: Principal displays famous bat

amoeba — conspired against me, but I tell you this: People only throw stones at trees with fruit."

"Amen," a woman responded from the audience.

Clark admitted he generated a flurry of complaints from parents and teachers when he was principal. But even though his tactics were often viewed as offensive, many visitors to the school noted that there was "a tremendous spirit" there, according to a section of 60 Minutes which was shown to the UTPB audience.

The former principal — who usually stalked the corridors of the high school with a bat in one hand and a bullhorn in the other — was also the subject of the film "Lean on Me."

"I've seen 'Lean on Me' about a hundred times," said Anthony Rhodes, 13, of Odessa. "And I've read about Mr. Clark in People magazine. He made a difference, but he was controversial."

"Controversy is the essence of success," Clark said, in his address to the audience. "There is no correlation between tranquility and productivity."

Clark joked, cajoled, and waxed poetic. He generated gasps and laughter from the crowd which even responded with some shouts of agreement.

He said he left his principalship, in part, because he wanted "to exit at the appropriate time and save my posterior."

"Also, I was sick and tired of being poor," Clark said. "That is what is wrong with being a teacher today. Teachers are individuals who are overworked and underpaid. Let's start paying them commensurate with our expectations."

"I was sick and tired of some bureaucrat paying me a salary they would not accept in a similar position," Clark said to thunderous applause.

BOOKS: Panel halts purchase

mous Red-baiter of the 1950s.

Another cited President Jimmy Carter's 1976 election as the first Democratic victory at the national level in six elections — omitting that Texas' home-grown president, Lyndon Johnson, had won office three terms earlier in 1964.

Sputnik, according to one text, was "the first successful intercontinental ballistic missile launched by the Soviet Union (and) carried a nuclear warhead."

Texas schools are expected to buy 621,000 high school history books next year at a cost of roughly $35 each. Prototypes for the nearly 3 million textbooks to be purchased by school districts on a variety of subjects were brought before the board's review process this year.

Books adopted for use in Texas public schools have national significance because the volume required to fill orders here makes it virtually impossible for major publishers to write totally different books for smaller states.

erential treatment or handouts, you are in the wrong country."

Clark also offered his recipe for success in the "Garden of Life."

"First plant five rows of p's — preparedness, promptness, perseverance, politeness and prayer. Squash those criticisms and squash indifference. Then plant four rows of lettuce. Lettuce be thankful, fruitful, unselfish, and love one another. Then plant two rows of turnips. Turnip with a new idea and turnip a better tomorrow than today."

The speaker addressed several social issues and the power of religion. He said that he was in the hospital last year for open-heart surgery. "When you are in the hospital for a prolonged period of time, you get religious," he said. "My mom also told me that the Lord may not come when you want him to, but he always comes at the right time."

"When I had some liberals singing my posterior, I asked the Lord what my message should be. This is it: It's your turn at bat. Do you want to strike out or hit a home run?"

Clark's lecture was sponsored by the UTPB Cultural Committee.

Feds set up mental health fraud probe

N.Y. Times News Service

The federal government, responding to claims of widespread abuses by the mental health industry that surfaced first in Texas, has set up a clearinghouse of technical advice to help investigators pursue health-care fraud cases nationwide.

Meanwhile, eight separate inter-agency task forces investigating health insurance fraud have been launched in recent weeks in Texas, California and Ohio, a Defense Department official said from Washington.

The task forces, involving the FBI, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Veterans Administration and the Defense Department, were looking into billing for treatment never delivered and other types of insurance fraud, he said.

U.S. attorneys were leading many of the cases, some of which have the participation of state agencies, said the official, who said he did not have authorization to be quoted by name.

"When things in Texas happened, U.S. attorneys said we need a task force," he said, referring to highly publicized cases involving private, for-profit psychiatric hospitals.

"Now, if we move in on a doctor or hospital defrauding CHAMPUS (a Defense Department medical plan), a private insurer or a state insurer, we can take immediate steps," the official said. "Health care (fraud) has gone from a low priority to high at the Department of Justice."

The Justice Department attorney heading the health fraud data clearinghouse, known as the Health Care Working Group, canceled a telephone interview on its operations. Department spokesman Doug Tillett explained that any statement might jeopardize investigations. But other agencies confirmed its function.

The working group, based in the Justice Department, involves the same agencies cooperating in the task forces, the Defense Department source said.

It will field queries on anything from background information on an individual suspect to advice on how to craft the prosecution case. And what might start out as fraudulent billing to Medicare or CHAMPUS might involve commercial, non-government plans.

"If a guy is defrauding Medicare/Medicaid, nine times out of 10, he is also defrauding private insurers," who, the source said, now are eager to urge criminal prosecution after previously seeking only civil action.

On Oct. 26, Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, who earlier had filed a civil suit against Psychiatric Institute of America, said that 10 to 12 states had already begun investigations into abuses at private psychiatric facilities or were about to launch them.

PIA, which owns Psychiatric Institute of Fort Worth, has denied any illegal or unethical actions. It announced an exhaustive internal inquiry into Morales' charges that the chain paid for patient referrals, which is illegal under Texas law. It also denied an allegation by Morales, based on complaints from the public, of unnecessary hospitalizations that led to billing to the state's crime victims compensation fund.

Without the support of one of the new federal task forces, a former Bedford psychologist and his Oklahoma administrator were indicted last month in federal court in Fort Worth on 17 counts of filing fraudulent claims for bed-wetting therapy and other psychological services to CHAMPUS between 1985 and 1988.

FDIC, RTC find buyers anxious for purchase

DALLAS (AP) — The government has stepped up efforts to sell properties from failed Texas banks and thrifts as fears in the real estate community of a weakened market have given way to eagerness for an end to business by bureaucracy.

Newspapers across the state have carried ads touting property sales and auctions by the Resolution Trust Corp. and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. At least five major sales are taking place this month or in early December, a flurry of activity previously unseen at the agencies.

The intensified selling is happening amid heightened pressure from Congress for the agencies to move the properties.

And, in Texas at least, it is being helped by real estate brokers who have become less worried about properties being dumped on the market.

"There's a bottleneck in moving the property in the public sector because it's such a bureaucratic way to do business," said Tom Clark, president of the Greater Dallas Association of Realtors.

Police investigate pre-teen 'rape club'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police are investigating whether two boys, ages 11 and 12, had sex with two 10-year-old girls as part of an initiation rite for a local gang, a police spokeswoman said Thursday.

The investigation was sparked by a claim from Juvenile Judge Tom Rickhoff that several girls in a local apartment complex had been sexually assaulted by a group of boys. The group was allegedly headed by a boy in custody of juvenile authorities on an unrelated charge.

Police spokeswoman Sandy Perez said Thursday that no charges had been filed against the two boys and that neither was in custody.

Two sexual incident reports concerning the boys were filed, but it hasn't been determined whether the sexual acts were consensual or forced, she said.

The judge told the San Antonio Light Wednesday a group of boys involved in a so-called "rape club" attacked as many as 15 girls from an apartment complex.

But Ms. Perez said the two reports are the only evidence of suggested sexual activity among youngsters at the complex. Rickhoff, in Austin Thursday on business, did not immediately return a phone call from The Associated Press for comment.

The incident involving the two boys allegedly occurred on Oct. 15.

Rickhoff told The Light another 12-year-old boy in custody on an unrelated charge may be a possible ringleader in the matter.

"As far as the so-called rape gang is concerned, it may be part of an initiation into a gang," Ms. Perez said late Thursday.

Rickhoff said he learned of the allegations at the complex from a state Department of Human Services supervisor who has monitored the activities surrounding the 12-year-old boy and his family.

DHS spokeswoman Sherron Heinemann said she wasn't able to verify the agency's role with colleagues in San Antonio.

DEAR ABBY Readers debate knuckling under to buckle-up laws

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter from "J.C. in Gainesville" who wondered if he was wrong for ordering his passenger to "buckle up or get out!"

If he was writing from Gainesville, Fla., he should know that buckling up is the law in Florida. He could receive a ticket if he or his passenger does not have on a seat belt.

Recently a father was arrested in Florida when his unbuckled child died in a car accident. It is the driver's responsibility to make sure that everyone in his car is buckled up! J.C. definitely did the right thing. — M.P. IN FORT LAUDERDALE

DEAR M.P.: Read on for an opposing view:

DEAR ABBY: In regard to your column on Sept. 12, "Buckle Up or Bail Out": The person who didn't want to use a seat belt may have had a serious phobia about it. I wish the do-gooders would use their own seat belts but keep their noses out of other people's lives. There have been cases of UN-belted survivors who would have been killed if they had been belted — but that information is withheld from the average citizen.

I have done enough investigating on my own around here and have found that when nothing is said about a traffic fatality being belted or not, they were belted. Regarding the state trooper who said, "I have yet to unbuckle a seat belt from a dead person," I have also heard that only medical personnel can remove a body from a car. (Maybe that varies from state to state; I don't know.) I prevented an accident some years ago while I was a front-seat passenger and the driver fell asleep at the wheel. I couldn't have acted in time had I been belted. If the driver demands the passenger use a seat belt, then the passenger has the right to demand that the driver obey every law and rule, too! It's possible to be belted and dead.

I'd feel a whole lot safer on the road if the seat belt zealots put as much effort into preventing accidents as they do in protecting their great god and savior, the Seat Belt Law!

This letter is not intended to stop anyone from using his belt. I'm not opposed to healthy diets, either. But I don't think anyone would want a law enacted and enforced that would penalize everyone who has gotten overweight or let his blood cholesterol get too high — even though such a law might save lives. — H.O. IN SUMNER, IOWA

DEAR ABBY: Your column on "faking it" created a big stir in Mesa, Ariz. A radio station in our town asked women over the age of 18 to call in and tell listeners whether they "faked it" or not. The results were: Out of 100 women, 58 said they did not fake it, and 42 said they did. — NOT FAKING IT IN MESA

Okefenokee, Everglades studied

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The Okefenokee Swamp and the Everglades are being studied by researchers to determine how much natural and human factors contribute to mercury contamination. Mercury occurs naturally in Florida's peat soil and also can come from batteries, paints, dyes, electronics, fluorescent lights and plastics. It also is spread by coal-fired generating plants and municipal trash-burning incinerators. The metal moves up the food chain, concentrating more at each level, a process called biomagnification.

In humans, it can cause nerve and brain damage. In pregnant women, mercury can cause cerebral palsy, blindness and deafness in their babies.

In South Florida, contamination levels are twice what it considered harmful by state officials. As a result, the state Department of Environmental Regulation has issued health warnings for fish caught in the region.

By correlating data from dated soil samples with possible sources of mercury, the researchers expect to be able to tell when and how mercury has been deposited and, theoretically, how much of it is human-related.

FAMILY MATTERS Finances hurt by divorce

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My daughter recently filed for divorce. I am sorry it has come to that, but I certainly support her decision. Her husband was a domineering, controlling person who I always thought was bad for her and the children. What concerns me is that she called yesterday very depressed about the divorce and her financial state. She was so upset that she was even talking about trying to get back with him just because of where it's (the divorce) going to leave her and the children financially.

May

I want to do the right thing, but I didn't know what to say to her. Her dad and I can help her some, but we have our retirement to think of too. It doesn't seem fair that he can be such a jerk and now he gets most of the money and half of everything else. He has a great job that she helped him get and keep. Now she's not going to be able to keep the house and probably will have to go to work to just support herself and her children in any kind of style. I don't understand a legal system that allows that to happen.

What can I do to help her? I want to help her but I don't know how. WORRIED AND ANGRY

DEAR WORRIED: Unfortunately your daughter's experience is all too common. One very well-researched document reported that: "One year after the divorce (in marriages that last fewer than 10 years) husbands have post-divorce incomes equivalent to at least three-fourths of the family's total income before the divorce." The report also found that: "The contrast is most pronounced among middle- and higher-income families. The wife's income is reduced to 39 percent of the family's former standard while her husband maintains 75 percent of their divorce income." In general, women like your daughter face a sad financial report.

Individuals often experience an entire range of emotions, such as depression, detachment, anger, hopelessness, self-pity, helplessness, confusion, fury and sadness, during the "Legal Divorce and Economic Divorce" stages of the divorce process. You can help your daughter by being emotionally supportive of her in this process. Encourage her to talk to her clergyman and perhaps become involved in a divorce workshop or divorce recovery group. Professional counseling might be helpful for both her and the children. You and your husband need to make the disinction between emotional and financial support. You can be very supportive emotionally and yet only be able to provide limited financial support. Divorce recovery is a long, slow process, found by most current research to take about four to six years.

Also, remember that your former son-in-law will still be involved with your grandchildren. This is a difficult time and the holidays may make it even more difficult. Keep being there emotionally for your daughter.

DEAR FAMILY: I have a problem that I don't know how to deal with. My father has just informed me that he and my stepmother will be coming for Thanksgiving. I normally have been able to avoid being with them by saying we already have plans. He called so early this time that it caught me by surprise and I didn't have an excuse.

My father is generally OK, but his wife is a mess. She complains all the time. I have only been around her on a limited basis at his house. I can only imagine what it will be like to have her around for four days! I don't want to hurt my father's feelings, but the more I think about this, the more I dread it. What can I tell him to get out of this? STUCK

DEAR STUCK: First, discuss this with your husband and then your entire family (if appropriate). Do they share your feelings? I suggest that because there will be consequences to whatever you decide to do. You did not mention children in your letter, but they should be considered. They may not notice their "step-grandmother" at all, but may want to visit with their grandfather no matter what.

This problem has no simple answer. Could they stay fewer than four days (a family decision?) or stay in a hotel instead of in your home? Sometimes it is possible to see the humor in the other person and rise above what she is saying. It may also be that, independent of what others may think, you may not be up with having her in your house. Do not be violated. These can certainly be trying times, but you may decide to make the choice to demonstrate to your stepmother another way of experiencing the joy of Thanksgiving.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

PRIME TIME

It's Your Life

Self-image important aspect of life

By Steve Edwards

QUESTION: Is self image really that important?

ANSWER: More than you can imagine! Because all your actions, feelings, behavior and abilities are always consistent with your self image. In other words, you act like the person you perceive yourself to be.

Edwards

The person who believes that he or she is a failure-type will find some way to fail, in spite of good intentions. The student who believes he is dumb in school will invariably find that his report cards will bear him out. The salesman who believes he cannot earn more than a certain figure will prove this out by his order book. But the person who believes she can achieve, probably will achieve.

Your picture of yourself is that important, because it's the basis upon which your entire personality and behavior is built.

So, how good is your self image? Remember, if you want to, you can change. You're never too old or too young to live a new life.

QUESTION: What is low blood sugar?

ANSWER: When your blood sugar falls below the normal range, your body doesn't work as well as it should. For most people, the result becomes unpleasant symptoms like feeling shaky, tired or hungry; becoming sweaty, crabby or confused; or even experiencing rapid heartbeat. These symptoms, whether physical or emotional, can come on quite quickly and are usually the result of poor eating habits, taking too much diabetes medicine or over-exercising. Low blood sugar is usually easy to treat, but you need to know what to do before it happens. Symptoms vary and low blood sugar feels different to different people. But however you feel, it will probably be very different from your normal self. Check with your doctor about finding out your blood sugar level and what it should be — as well as for more information.

QUESTION: Why do we procrastinate?

ANSWER: Three basic reasons — the first of which is simply that we don't want to hassle ourselves. Our real priority is our own comfort rather than doing anything. So we put it off until tomorrow. But there also are some deeper reasons as well, such as self doubt.

If we're not sure of ourselves, we spend a lot of time hesitating and second guessing. Our lack of ability to handle problem-solving skills or some of the challenges that come our way, cause us to back off and don't respond. While it's true that part of this attitude is good — that we need at times to relax and slow down — this attitude can also create some real problems at home, school or work during those moments when our lives should be marked by a sense of doing.

Procrastinators take note: No matter what our age is, doing and accomplishing are still important to our personal development. So structure your time, allow flexibility; but leave time available to accomplish set goals.

QUESTION: What is another clue to apply on my road to happiness?

ANSWER: Change the way you talk to yourself! All of us go through each day "talking to ourselves" in our thoughts. We either talk in a positive or negative, critical tone. If we constantly criticize ourselves, we'll undoubtedly hold grudges against ourselves and get depressed. So quit condemning yourself! Look at the positive in your life, or at your accomplishments instead of dwelling on past failures. Would you ever criticize another person as much as you subconsciously criticize yourself?

Probably not. You may think you need all that harsh talk, but you don't; so get off your back and lighten up.

QUESTION: Does it help to sleep on a problem?

ANSWER: Remember the story about the shoemaker and the elves? The shoemaker found that if he cut out the leather and laid the patterns out before retiring, little elves came and actually put the shoes together for him while he was sleeping. Fantasy? Yes, but our thinking process works for us in a similar way when we allow it to relax, to be refreshed and to not be cluttered with so much interference and feelings. It's amazing the new options, decisiveness and clearer reasoning that seem to come to us when our minds are rested. The old adage is true: "Tired and distraught minds usually don't accomplish anything." So if you've been wrestling with a problem without any apparent success, let it go for a while, get away from it, maybe even sleep on it. Not only will your concentration be better, but you'll probably also be surprised by new insights as well.

Fluid retention has many different causes

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

Ladies, when the good doctor gently pokes your foot with his finger or squeezes your ankle, do not prepare to sue him for sexual harassment — it is just one more way to evaluate your circulatory status as manifested by fluid retention. The Greeks termed it "Hydor," the Romans, "Hydrops," the early English, "Drop-sy," the Americans, "Edema" — all referring to a demonstrable accumulation of excessive fluid in the subcutaneous tissue. In olden days, this meant that the sufferer would continue to swell like a stuck pig and then expire. Happily, this is no longer the case because the situation is now manageable no matter what the cause. Thereby it is one of the principle reasons for the present day increased life-span.

The causes of edema — some serious, most not — are multitudinous, involving nearly all the body's many systems. For example, look at a swollen black eye with its Japanese sunset effect; or a wet lung after abrupt ascent to a high altitude; or a grossly swollen abdomen due to liver disease; or swollen extremities due to deep venous blockage or kidney disease with blood too low in protein or too high in sodium; or some weakening of the general circulation; or the effect of gravity on unused muscles. All these conditions can be successfully treated, but only after your doctor has determined wherein lies the fault.

As recently as 50 years ago, treatment consisted of mechanical drainage with tubes and needles, plus beef-steak for the eye and large doses of Epsom Salts. Modern diuretics and diets have simplified the procedure along with appreciation of the importance of exercise to help the circulation. Some situations require supportive wraps or stockings, along with elevation of the legs while at rest. Whatever the program, it should be continued until the patient is instructed otherwise by his physician.

The common denominator to all of the above is partial obstruction of the return flow of both lymph (tissue fluid) and venous blood into the circulation. Do not aid and abet this by wearing tight clothing, garters, rolled stockings or any such accoutrement that impedes the free flow of lymph and blood. Remember also that it is muscular interaction that supplies the needed push.

A moderate amount of dependent swelling poses no real problem. With grateful thanks to the Law of Gravity, appreciate the fact that is much better to have water and fat in the ankle than on the brain!

Grandmother from Sherman debuts in primetime

By Ralph Montano

SHERMAN (AP) — It took almost 85 years for Stella Nowlin to be, as they say in showbiz, discovered.

She'd come close before. Well, sort of. She owns this pail that was once used in a yogurt ad.

Maybe you've seen the yogurt ad in "People" magazine. The one with the pretty blonde sitting on a pail as she's washing a Thunderbird?

No. Well, it doesn't matter. Because Stella is now a star in her own right, appearing in a nationwide cereal commercial.

If you haven't seen the commercial yet, or if you don't usually pay attention to them, here's a summary. Kellogg is pledging its support for the upcoming Olympic Games. The first half of the commercial, which is in color, shows some training athletes. The second half, in black and white, is a slice of Americana. A portrait of folks posing with a bowl or box of cereal. Each person says who they are and where they are from.

Stella makes her appearance at the very end, her voice is slightly hoarse, but strong. There is a nice Texas twang to the way she says, "Stella Nowlin... Sherman, Texas."

The commercial is currently getting primetime play.

Like a lot of things in life, Stella's discovery was a matter of knowing the right person and having a little luck.

Stella's granddaughter works for a Chicago photographer who was commissioned by Kellogg to take the black and white portraits. After traveling across the country shooting pictures, the photographer sent photos of 28 people (including Stella) back to the company. Kellogg chose Stella and eight others for the commercial.

Being in a commercial is a lot harder than it looks, Stella said. Work started, she says, when the photographer and his eight assistants pulled up with their moving van full of equipment.

The way Stella describes the event sounds like a modern fairy tale in which grandma's cottage is visited by nine professional gremlins for a day of mischief.

The gremlins put grandma in a new dress as they set up equipment and move around furniture. Then they make grandma say her name and where she is from at least 50 times as they take lots of pictures.

And as the gremlins drive off into the sunset, grandma wonders for a moment if it was just a silly dream. But she knows it isn't because she still has the new dress and her once-white doorway has been painted wedgewood blue.

"I couldn't understand why they painted the door blue for a black and white picture," Stella said. "But I don't understand a lot of things about their business."

Does one commercial make Stella a star?

Old friends and actors' unions think so.

"I have gotten calls from eight states by people I've known through the years," Stella said. "It's wonderful. They say, 'I just saw you on television and ran to the phone.'"

Also, Stella received an invitation to join Screen Actors Guild. The letter says the cost of becoming a union member comes to just over $900. If she does not join the union and appears in a second commercial, the letter said, then she will automatically become a member and owe the union the money.

Stella said she has no plans to do another commercial. Besides, joining the union would cost more than she was paid while the commercial was being made. Although she might get a little money every time the commercial runs.

"I have no idea what I'll get paid when the commercial runs. But if I don't get anything it's been fun."

One final note. The picture appearing on television was not taken in Sherman, or in Texas, but in Michigan at Stella's cottage.

Ah, the mysterious ways of professional gremlins and ad agencies.

Custody hearing set for teen found chained in home

DALLAS (AP) — A hearing next week will determine temporary custody of two boys, one of whom remains comatose in a Tarrant County hospital after authorities found him chained in his home and nearly starved to death.

The 55-pound teen is suffering from malnutrition and a blood infection caused by malnutrition. He went into cardiac arrest Sunday at his trailer home in White Settlement. He weighs about half the normal weight for a boy his age.

"During the first 24 hours or so the hospital was reporting to us that the prognosis was as dire as it could be," child welfare supervisor Gloria Corder said Thursday.

Doctors had reported marginal improvements by Tuesday, she said. Jay and Linda Hill have been charged with injury to a child, a first-degree felony. Mrs. Hill told police that she and her husband disciplined Stephen by chaining him to a cabinet and depriving him of food. The parents are being held in Tarrant County Jail in lieu of $100,000 bond each.

Their 12-year-old son, Douglas, was placed in custody of Child Protective Services officials. Douglas reportedly was bruised but in otherwise good condition. Fort Worth attorney Bob Hoover has been appointed to represent the boys in the hearing Nov. 13.

The civil procedure will name temporary custodians for the boys and determine their placement, he said.

"This is not what I would call a normal case. We have a child in such a serious condition," Hoover said.

No relatives have requested custody of Stephen and Douglas, Ms. Corder said. All relative are thought to live out of state.

Girl dies before lung transplant

WILLS POINT (AP) — Local residents, who raised thousands of dollars for the care of an ailing teenager, set aside their grief Thursday over the youngster's death to field calls from other needy patients seeking the unused donations.

Amy Louise Harris, 18, whose tiny hometown in northeast Texas raised $316,000 for the care of the cystic fibrosis patient, died Tuesday night at Presbyterian Hospital in Dallas shortly after making a hospital donor list. She needed a double lung transplant to survive her battle with the disease.

On Thursday, many residents in the town of 3,000, about 40 miles west of Dallas, say they were disappointed they couldn't buy the teen-ager enough time.

"It's just hard for everybody," said resident Theta Martin. "I thought if we just got the money, we could do this. That's the hardest thing."

But Miss Harris, whose weight rarely rose above 60 pounds, needed money and time. She was unable to accept adult-sized lungs and the arduous search for child lungs took more than two months until her death, said Justice of the Peace Ozelle Wilcoxson, who helped coordinate fund-raising efforts for the teen-ager.

"There's got to be something good to come out of this," said Ms. Wilcoxson. "And we're hoping that out of all of this more people will understand donor awareness."

A 33 member steering committee will decide within the next few weeks what to do with the funds raised so far. A foundation for other needy transplant patients is one idea being considered.

Meanwhile, city officials were deluged with phone calls from other patients statewide waiting for their own transplants. Ms. Martin said most of the callers were trying to persuade officials to donate the money raised for Miss Harris to their own transplant searches and operations.

"The phone did not stop ringing," said Ms. Martin. "And half the time you are crying."

"They're telling us their stories. And we listen." The town's only three florists were flooded with calls for orders for the teen-ager's funeral Friday. The service, to be held at the Russell Memorial United Methodist Church, will be televised.

El Paso sets teen curfew

EL PASO (AP) — Children in El Paso 16 and younger will have to be home by 11 p.m. starting Friday night. If not, they face police escorts home and their parents could be fined up to $500.

The curfew will require all children to be home between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m., seven nights a week.

An increase in the number of drive-by shootings, gang violence and other juvenile crimes led to the curfew.

"Now we can take some sort of action to curb it," police spokesman Lt. Eddie Ortega said.

"We realize it's not going to solve the problem, but it's a good tool for us to use," he said.

The curfew was approved by the City Council Oct. 8. Police will pick up children 16 and younger who are not under their parents' supervision during curfew hours. Parents will then be notified. Violations carry fines of up to $500.

"The most important part is that their parents are notified and maybe their parents will be involved and nip it in the bud," Ortega said.

Exceptions to the curfew will be made for minors involved in official school, civic or religious activities. Also exempt are minors running errands for parents as long as they have a note from their parents.

A similar curfew implemented in Dallas is being challenged in court.

The El Paso curfew goes into effect just days after a 16-year-old high school honor roll student, Edmundo Dena Jr., was shot in the head while sitting in the back seat of a friend's car.

Two teens have been arrested and charged with attempted murder. The bullet remains lodged in Dena's head and he is expected to lose some of his sight. The hospital said Thursday Dena's condition has been upgraded from serious to stable.

Judge apologizes for racist remark

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County Judge Jon Lindsay says he will publicly apologize for making a racially insensitive remark during a commissioners court meeting.

Lindsay's remark this week, which was videotaped by a KRIV-TV cameraman, came in response to a question from Precinct 2 Commissioner Jim Fonteno about a zoo donation.

"What's the difference between a Vietnamese pig and plain pot belly pig?" Fonteno asked Tuesday.

Lindsay responded, "One's got slanted eyes." Fonteno then responded, "Slanted eyes."

Lindsay, who initially denied making the remark, said Wednesday he has called Asian community leaders to apologize. But he said he also will make a public apology at the next commissioners meeting.

"It was just a mistake — a serious mistake," Lindsay said. "Certainly, I didn't think about it being offensive to anybody. I've already told some Asian leaders I was sorry it happened. They all seem to take it very well. Maybe it's a good lesson for all of us to be very careful about what we do and say."

There has been no public reaction from the Asian community to Lindsay's remark. However, Robert Quan of the Asian-American Democrats of Texas said the remark should not have been made in a public arena.

Plants need winter prepping

Evergreen plants frequently suffer from lack of moisture during winter dry periods that occur in Texas. Also adequate soil moisture provides the best protection you can give your plants against winter cold injury.

Don't get in a hurry to prune woody plants. Late December through February is usually the best time to prune them.

Reduce or stop completely the fertilization of indoor plants from late October to mid-March. An exception would be plants in an atrium or a well lighted window. Drain power sprayers to prevent freeze damage to pump and nozzle. November through February is a good time to plant trees and shrubs. Clean, repair and oil garden tools and equipment. A coat of linseed oil on wooden handles will help preserve the wood. Drain the gasoline from power tools and run the engines until fuel in the carburetor is used. Drain and store garden hoses and watering equipment in a readily accessible location. The lawn and plants will need watering during the winter.

Now is the time to start lining up trees for this year's fruit and nut tree planting. The months to plant bare root fruit and nut trees are December through mid-March. If you wait until planting time to find your trees, the varieties you want may not be available.

The following list of varieties has been selected for adaptation to West Texas disease resistant fruit quality and ripening date.

Apples (need a pollinator)-varieties are Starkrimson Red Delicious, Mollies, Delicious, Starkrimson Golden Delicious, Holland (pollinator), Johnagold and Granny Smith. Apricots - varieties are Royal, Blenheim, Bryan, Hungarian, Wilson and Moorpark.

Blackberries - varieties include Brazon and Womack. Cherries are not recommended.

Fig varieties - Texas Everbearing and Celeste.

Grapes - Seedless table grapes, Thompson seedless and Flame. Peach - varieties include Ranger, Redglobe and Denman.

Important Reminder: Midland County 4-H Parents Association will be sponsoring a dance with Jody Nix on November 8 at the Midland Center from 8 p.m. until midnight. Bring the whole family for a fun time. For more information call the Extension office at 687-1351.

Bug threatens pecan crop

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — A fast-breeding insect that defoliates trees is threatening the Southeastern pecan crop.

The insect, known as the black aphid, injects a toxin into the leaves of pecan trees while feeding. The leaves eventually turn brown and die.

Defoliated trees don't produce enough carbohydrates, resulting in unhealthy pecans and sluggish growth the following year.

Scientists say large numbers of black aphids have been reported from North Carolina to eastern Texas.

"We've got heavier populations of black pecan aphids than anyone has seen in years in the Southeast," said HC Ellis, an insect specialist with the University of Georgia Extension Service in Tifton. "We run a significant risk of losing some quality in this year's crop. If the trees are defoliated before Oct. 1, then next year's crop will also suffer."

U.S. growers produced 205 million pounds of pecans last year. Georgia was the leader with 65 million pounds, followed by Texas, with 60 million pounds. Pecans also are produced in the Carolinas, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Oklahoma, New Mexico and California.

Georgia growers normally spray when they find one aphid per leaf, but this year they are finding 50 to 75 per leaf, Ellis said Wednesday.

Produce prices slip in month of October

WASHINGTON (AP) — Produce prices slipped in October, paced by a sharp decline in orange prices and tumbling receipts at the farm for hogs, soybeans and apples, the Agriculture Department said Thursday.

USDA said the all-farm products index of prices decreased 7 points — or 4.7 percent — from September, to 141 percent of its 1977 average.

The decline in orange prices, to more normal levels as the harvest of the new Florida crop progresses, accounted for 6 points of the decline.

Decreases in the prices of oranges, hogs, soybeans and apples were partially offset, however, by higher farm prices for grapefruit, wheat, milk and cattle from September.

The October index was 5 points, or 3.4 percent, below a year ago. At the same time, farmers were paying more for their supplies, such as livestock feed and fertilizer, than a year ago, although the quarterly index was unchanged from July.

USDA said the index of prices paid by producers was at 189 percent of its 1977 level, up 2 points, or 1.1 percent, from October 1990.

USDA said lower October fertilizer and feeder livestock prices were offset by higher livestock feed, tractor and self-propelled machinery costs. Since July, prices for tractors, combines and mixed poultry feeds had the greatest upward impact on the index.

Bob Milton, chief of the economics statistics branch for USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service, said the October numbers show rebounding milk, corn and wheat prices from a year ago, but that hog and cattle prices remain depressed.

According to USDA, October milk prices were $13.20 per hundred pounds, compared with $13.10 a year earlier, while wheat prices were running at $3.08 a bushel, compared with $2.43 a bushel last year.

Corn prices also showed a 10 cent increase — from $2.19 last October to $2.29 a bushel in October 1991.

Hog prices, however, were down to $44.40 per hundred pounds in October.

Smith criticizes prosecutor; judge shields identities

WEST-PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — William Kennedy Smith on Thursday described the prosecutor in his rape case as incompetent, a term she had used to describe a prospective juror.

During the heated sixth day of jury selection, Circuit Judge Mary Lupo took steps to shield prospective jurors' identities after a tabloid television show purportedly offered an outspoken juror "a gift."

However, the judge again upheld live television coverage of the proceedings.

Smith, a 31-year-old medical school graduate, told reporters he objected to prosecutor Moira Lasch's criticism of the 78-year-old juror, whose television appearance led to the new arguments about banning cameras in the courtroom.

Ms. Lasch had described Florence Orbach, whose colorful and salty answers to questions about the Kennedys on Tuesday rocked the courtroom with laughter, as "borderline incompetent" and asked that Ms. Lupo dismiss her from the jury pool, which the judge did Wednesday.

Smith, nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said he had worked with older people in hospitals and found "anybody of any age can be incompetent."

"The way I feel today... I'd say Moira is walking proof of it," Smith told reporters outside court.

When he left the courthouse at day's end, Smith tried to walk quickly past reporters and joked that his lunchtime comment about Ms. Lasch had been off the record.

"My mother told me not to say anything bad about anybody, so if she finds out I said that I'll get in trouble," he said.

Earlier, Ms. Lasch complained to Ms. Lupo that while defense attorney Roy Black claims that publicity is threatening Smith's right to a fair trial, "he's doing everything he can to pander to it."

"Mr. Black and his entourage have press conferences at noon and at night," Ms. Lasch said.

Mrs. Orbach also had a few things to say Thursday, appearing on a talk show on WJNO radio in West Palm Beach.

"The Kennedys couldn't care less about us nobodies," she said. "It's the Kennedy magic. It pollutes the world. It polluted and hurt me."

Ms. Lupo revealed that Mrs. Orbach had called her Wednesday to complain that she had been besieged by calls from reporters around the country and offered "a gift" by the tabloid television show "Hard Copy."

"Hard Copy" said in a statement late Thursday that it contacted Mrs. Orbach to request an interview, but she declined. "At no time did 'Hard Copy' offer money, gifts or any other incentive to Mrs. Orbach," the statement read.

The judge said most reporters covering the trial have been cooperative. However, she said, "The problem here is not the honesty of the jurors, it's the unscrupulous conduct of certain members of the media."

The judge refused defense attorney Roy Black's request to start jury selection without cameras and to dismiss the 20 people who remained in the jury pool after the first five days of questioning.

However, she said Mrs. Orbach's call prompted her to take steps to shield jurors. Among other things, the judge dropped her practice of calling prospective jurors by their names.

The judge began emphasizing to prospective jurors they should not discuss the case with anyone and advised them that they would be on television.

Court officials will investigate any contacts to prospective jurors made by journalists. Ms. Lupo warned that she would begin yanking the press credentials of violators.

Rights advocates ask for high court ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abortion rights advocates, hoping to ignite a major political fight in next year's elections, asked the Supreme Court on Thursday to state definitively whether it has abandoned its 1973 ruling that legalized abortion.

The groups said they expect the increasingly conservative court to overturn its 18-year-old ruling in Roe vs. Wade and spark a heated election-year battle.

But they said that even if their appeal in a Pennsylvania case still were pending before the justices next November, the issue would be on the front burner for candidates and voters in 1992.

Meanwhile, the Democratic-controlled Congress sent to President Bush legislation allowing abortion counseling at federally subsidized family planning clinics.

The Senate vote Thursday was 72-25, more than enough to override a veto. But the House vote Wednesday fell short of the two-thirds majority that would be needed to enact the bill over Bush's objections.

Abortion rights groups held a news conference to announce that they had asked the Supreme Court to review a federal appeals court ruling that upheld a new Pennsylvania law restricting abortions. The groups asked the high court to use the case to decide whether it still believes abortion is a fundamental right for women.

"The Supreme Court's failure to reaffirm Roe has fostered a steady erosion of (women's) liberties," said Kathryn Kolbert of the American Civil Liberties Union. "We therefore call upon the Supreme Court ... to determine whether Roe vs. Wade remains the law of the land."

"If the answer is no," she said, "American women must look elsewhere for redress."

The abortion rights advocates said they intend to turn to the ballot box for help.

"From county sheriff to the U.S. president, no elected official will escape scrutiny," said Faye Wattleton, president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

"The political road is the only road left to travel to secure our right to choose," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action

League. "We must elect a pro-choice president or a veto-proof, pro-choice Congress."

Thursday's appeal may increase the chances the Pennsylvania case will be heard by the high court in its current term, and will be decided sometime before the 1992 presidential election. But the timetable remains uncertain.

Pennsylvania officials previously announced they will ask the high court to review an Oct. 21 ruling by the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that upheld some, but not all, of the anti-abortion restrictions contained in the new state law.

The abortion rights groups, with 90 days to seek Supreme Court review, waited less than three weeks to appeal.

Family's bodies found

BARRINGTON, R.I. (AP) — The bodies of a family of three missing for seven weeks were unearthed Thursday from a shallow wooded gravesite a half mile from their home, an official said.

The bodies were of lawyer Ernest Brendel, 52; his librarian wife, Alice, 46; and their 8-year-old daughter, Emily, said Attorney General James E. O'Neill. The family vanished Sept. 20.

"Our hearts and souls obviously reach out to relatives of the Brendel family and the other citizens of this community," O'Neill said at a news conference.

State Police Capt. Brian Andrews said two bodies were found in one grave, and the third in a nearby grave. "It was a very difficult experience for us at the crime scene, unearthing these bodies," he said.

FBI agents and state and local police had converged on the site. Barrington Chief Charles Bruie said police were led to the scene Thursday "based on information we received." He wouldn't elaborate.

The street where the Brendels lived in this affluent Providence suburb was closed at midmorning and a large area cordoned off with police tape.

Police could be seen photographing what appeared to be clothing on a creek bank. At least two vans from the state medical examiner's office arrived, and a city backhoe was rolled in to clear away brush.

Pee-wee enters no-contest plea

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — The actor who plays Pee-wee Herman pleaded no contest Thursday to indecent exposure charges in a plea bargain that requires him to make an anti-drug public service commercial.

Prosecutors said Paul Reubens' plea, if successfully completed, would leave him with no criminal record.

"Why go through a trial when this can be resolved ... in a plea that's extremely fair and reasonable to him and will allow him to get on with his life?" asked Reubens' attorney, Richard Gerstein.

"Mr. Reubens continues to insist upon his innocence — it was a plea of convenience."

Reubens showed up in Sarasota County Courthouse clean-shaven and with his hair cropped short in Pee-wee style, in contrast to the mugshot of him with a goatee, glasses and long hair after his arrest at an adult theater July 26.

Reubens, 39, plays a chuckling, bow-tied and nerdy character in television's "Pee-wee's Playhouse" and such movies as "Pee-wee's Big Adventure."

Lee hosts playoff tuneup

■ The Rebels take on San Angelo in a regular-season finale that has lost some of its luster since both teams are already bound for the postseason.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Place your mind back in the August mode, take out your District 45A schedule and look at the Nov. 8 matchup. Midland Lee vs. San Angelo, 8 p.m., Memorial Stadium.

This game has the makings of passion and fire, right? Wrong!

This was supposed to have playoff implications, drama, nail-biting and heated rivalry. But the mind never lets us live in the past, and we quickly learn that there just isn't much at stake tonight.

Oh, both teams are playoff bound. That was decided two weeks ago. San Angelo is Big School, meeting either Lubbock Coronado or Amarillo Tascosa next week while Small School Lee will face either Amarillo Palo Duro or Tascosa next Saturday in Amarillo at a time still to be decided.

Yes, there is that matter of second place at stake, but in this day and age, that is quickly forgotten once they ring that playoff bell. Neither team will really suffer from a loss, other than losing "Big Mo," that coaching catch-phrase for such games as this.

"I don't really like this three-team playoff system," says Lee coach Earl Miller. "I've never seen a season with so little pressure. If we still had the two team format, this game would really mean something."

"This is a tough game because you want to win against a good team and improve your record, but you can't over-emphasize it, or you might leave it on the field. Next week is when it starts counting. You have to be realistic about it."

However, San Angelo coach Dan Gandy still expects a battle.

"If you can convince Earl Miller that this game doesn't mean anything, then we can sit back and not hit each other," Gandy says. "But I know Earl and Lee and that's just not going to happen. They're big, strong and physical and will knock your helmets off. We better be ready to play."

But Gandy admits that the playoffs are

Steers already trail, 12-0

■ Big Spring's playoff hopes hinge on beating the Andrews Mustangs by at least 12 points.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — The players have yet to assemble. There is not a referee in sight. Yet the Big Spring Steers are already the dubious owners of a whopping 12-0 deficit as they prepare for tonight's 8 p.m. District 34A showdown here with the Andrews Mustangs.

In the most down-to-the-wire district race in area football, Andrews (4-0) and

Big Spring (3-1) will plug in the 21-point playoff tie-breaker system used to unravel three-way ties in 3-4A with a trip to the playoffs and a league championship hanging in the balance.

Of course Andrews — 3-4A's only undefeated member — can make the tie-breaker moot, push the Steers out of the race and clinch the 3-4A title with a win tonight and again next week against winless Lake View in the last regular-season game.

But Big Spring cannot simply win out. The Steers must defeat Andrews by no fewer than 12 points to stay alive in the playoff hunt, then knock off Monahans in the season finale.

"It puts a different twist on things from a coaching perspective," said An-draws coach W.T. Stapler, whose team enters the game with a plus 3 tie-breaker rating thanks to a 13-10 win over Sweetwater, which is the other 3-4A team with eyes on the postseason.

In fact, Sweetwater (4-1) can clinch at least a playoff berth with a win in its regular-season finale tonight against 1-3 Fort Stockton because those Mustangs romped over Big Spring 35-7 to turn their minus 3 from the Andrews game into a district-best plus 18.

And it is the likelihood that Sweetwater will down Fort Stockton that leaves Andrews and Big Spring vying for the other spot and puts the three-team tie-breaker system into perspective.

MHS spikers ousted from state playoffs

■ Powerful Amarillo Tascosa serves up 12 aces to drop the Lady Bulldogs 15-7, 15-7 in bi-district volleyball.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

LEVELLAND — Midland High's couple of spurts were no match for powerful Amarillo Tascosa here Thursday night, as the Lady Rebels defeated the Lady Bulldogs 15-7, 15-7 in a Class 5A bi-district volleyball playoff at Levelland High School.

The loss ended MHS' season at 17-10, while Tascosa takes its 26-6 record against the El Paso Coronado-El Paso Eastwood winner in area play at a site and time to be determined.

On Thursday, the difference in the match was Tascosa's serving, as the Lady

5A Volleyball

Rebels chalked up 12 aces against MHS. "Our serving was the difference. It took them out of their game. We were serving tough," said Tascosa head coach Dana Hatch.

"We were a little sluggish at times tonight. I just didn't feel we were in our rhythm. We had more service error than I would have liked, but we did OK."

"We made their serves look pretty good. They had about four great serves of the 15 or so we mishandled. We played great about 50 percent of the time and not very good the other 50," said MHS head coach Sonja Pittman.

But according to Tascosa senior Melissa Hobbs, the Lady Rebels make a lot of people look bad when they serve.

"Yeah, we do that pretty much most of the time. We were really up for this

Richardson leads A&M past Texas Christian

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Bucky Richardson passed for a career-high 321 yards and accounted for four touchdowns Thursday night as 12th-ranked Texas A&M rolled to a 44-7 Southwest Conference victory over Texas Christian.

Texas A&M (7-1 overall, 5-0 SWC), which defeated TCU for the 19th consecutive time, remained the league's only unbeaten as scouts from the Cotton, Peach, Independence and Copper bowls looked on.

TCU, which lost two quarterbacks to injury, dropped to 6-3 and 3-3.

Richardson, a fifth-year senior from Baton Rouge, La., ran for two touchdowns and passed for two against the injury-plagued Horned Frogs.

He completed 16 of 25 passes and rushed seven times for 27 yards for the second-highest yardage total in school history, bested only by Edd

SWC Football

Hargett's 376 yards against SMU in 1988.

A&M running back Greg Hill rushed for 115 yards to become the first SWC freshman to reach 1,000 yards. Hill, who has 1,005, broke the SWC freshman rushing record of 928 yards set by Earl Campbell of Texas in 1974.

Richardson ran for a touchdown and passed for two as the Aggies built a 31-7 halftime lead in the numbing cold weather with a wind chill factor of 13 degrees. A hearty crowd of 27,762 fans looked on.

Terry Venetoulas kicked a 22-yard field goal on A&M's opening possession. It was the eighth straight time the Aggies have scored the first time they had the ball.

Morenz: Worth the price of admission

Ok, so we've spent a lot of time the last two weeks talking about how little there is to play for as football's regular season winds to a close in District 4-5A. Now we can spend a little time trying to explain just why you might want to be in Memorial Stadium tonight when San Angelo meets Midland Lee.

All you have to know is one name — Shea Morenz. He's a complete Air Force with a laser bomb arm. If Iraqi Scuds were as accurate as Morenz' missiles, Israel would have been in real trouble.

Morenz can dial long distance without an access code. He can throw from one zip code to another with the ball landing on target. He can throw a ball 60 yards on a line while running to his left. This arm needs an insurance policy.

He is a blue chip, Division I quarterback. Morenz is simply the best overall player in the district this year. MVP, no question.

"He is the best quarterback I've ever seen in high school," says Lee coach Earl Miller. "He runs well, throws well, is smart and physical. I'd say something else, but I don't know what else you could want from one kid."

"You watch, this kid is going to lead someone to a national championship if he doesn't get hurt."

High praise coming from an opponent, but Morenz is for real. He can drill a hole through a jersey number or give a soft kiss from 50 yards away. He never seems to have a bad night. He's hotter than Kevin Costner. One thing is for sure, he can dance better in a pack of wolves.

If one player is worth the price of admission, this is it. Even if Lee finds a way to slow him down, it would be worth seeing. And Miller has promised to try.

"We're going to try something new," Miller says. "It will either blow up in our face, or maybe, it will help us."

Intrigue? Maybe this game has more going for it than we ever expected.

Here's how regular season ends in District 4-5A and one short look and another game — one with meaning:

San Angelo 28, Midland Lee 14: These two teams are parting ways in the playoffs and have no chance of meeting again. The Bobcats better enjoy this one because things won't be as promising in the Concho City next year as Air America takes wings out of town.

Odessa Permian 45, Abilene Cooper 7: Cooper coach Randy Allen said this game will show exactly where his program stands after the first year, and he will find out that it stands just long enough to take a rude fall — just like everyone else in the league.

Odessa High 30, Abilene High 14: Bill Barron's first year turns into a fine 6-4 winning season after some picked his Bronchos for last place, an error we deeply regret. But then again, who listens to media types anyway.

Big Spring 17, Andrews 10: When does a victory mean a loss? Attend this game and find out. The Steers have to win by 12 points to keep playoff hopes alive. At least, there are games out there with meaning.

Dickerson is out

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Eric Dickerson, suspended for six weeks last year for refusing to take a physical exam, was exiled again on Thursday after refusing to practice with the winless Indianapolis Colts.

The unhappy running back, fourth in NFL career rushing, was suspended this time "for insubordination and conduct detrimental" to the team.

In a brief statement, the NFL's only winless team announced it had suspended Dickerson for four weeks, without pay, and fined him an additional week's pay because he would not participate in Wednesday's practice.

Thursday's action came four days after Dickerson said he was insulted by the team's decision to pull him from the offensive unit on several key plays in Sunday's 10-8 loss to Miami.

"This matter is between the club and the player and we will have no further comment," general manager and vice president Jim Irsay said Thursday.

Dickerson needs 63 yards rushing to move past Jim Brown for third place on the NFL's career rushing list.

The action would cost Dickerson almost $600,000 from the $2 million he was due to earn under the contract extension he signed last year following his first suspension.

Coach blasts refs

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — An assistant Nebraska football coach blasted Big Eight Conference officials Thursday, saying they missed calls in the Cornhuskers' 19-19 tie against Colorado.

"The league needs to get more young officials," Mill Tenopir told about 200 people at a Cornhuskers football breakfast gathering. "It's like a fraternity. Once they're in, you can't get rid of them."

Tenopir, offensive line coach, has been an assistant at Nebraska 17 years.

Tenopir said officials missed a clipping and an unspotted conduct call against Colorado in the No. 14 Buffaloes' 19-19 tie with No. 11 Nebraska last Saturday.

REBELS: Winner should gain playoff momentum

the major concern.

"I guess this game doesn't mean a great deal other than the fact that you want to build momentum for the playoffs, but you want to play well," Gandy said. "Still, if you get a kid with a minor injury during the game, you might be hesitant to let him go back into the game."

Miller says it will be hard for his Rebels to matchup with the Bobcats whether a lot is riding on the game or not.

"It's like jumping into a room of snakes for us," Miller said. "They are a fine, complete football team. Offensively, they have the best quarterback (Shea Morenz) I've seen in high school and they gave up only 11 first downs to Permian last week. This seems to be their year. The only thing we can hope for is for the quarterback to have a bad day or for their receivers to have a bad day. Rain would be nice."

Morenz is the third leading passer in the state with 2,112 yards and 25 touchdowns. He also has 247 yards rushing. Receiver Damon Carroll also leads the league in receptions with 38 catches for 822 yards and 13 touchdowns. In all, the Bobcats have four of the top six receivers in the league.

Meanwhile, Lee has no one to shout any passing or rushing statistics at you. No Rebel is headed for a 1,000-yard rushing season, but seven backs are averaging over four yards per carry, the benchmark for success in any league.

Lee is 8-1 on the year while San Angelo is 7-1-1, both losing to Permian.

Both teams are healthy, suffering from minor pains and bruises, expected at this time of year.

"Of course, (defensive back) Michael Lambert and (defensive end) Brett McNeill are out for the season, but we're in better shape than we were a week ago. Only guard Max Stuart is nursing a bad ankle, but I think he'll play. You just want to get out of this game without any injuries. That's the most important thing."

3-4A: Andrews can take league title with two wins

(From 1C)

Big Spring's devastating loss to Sweetwater set the Steers back at minus 21 which is the most a single game can swing under the 21-point system that is determined solely by the outcome of games between the three teams which are tied.

That means Big Spring must defeat Andrews by at least 12 points, a margin that would pull the plus 3 Mustangs and the minus 21 Steers into a minus 9 deadlock.

The head-to-head system used between two teams tied for second place would then go in Big Spring's favor. But it would hold up only if the Steers next get by dangerous Monahans in the finale. Yet Big Spring coach Dwight Butler is far more concerned about this week than next.

"Heck, our biggest problem is finding a way to beat Andrews, much less by so many points," Butler said.

"You can shoot yourself in the foot by going in and playing panic football. We're going to try and win, and when we get down to the points deal we'll see what happens."

Stapler said he waited until Wednesday to discuss the points scenario with his players and only did so because they would be reading about it in the newspapers.

"It's a factor, yes," Stapler said. "But it's not something that we've dwelt on."

"I don't know what Big Spring will do. They may go for it on every fourth down, but our game is three yards and a cloud of dust and that won't change."

Andrews, 7-1 overall, pretty well dusted Monahans last week with a 21-14 victory that pushed the Lobos to 3-2 in league play and out of the playoff picture. The Mustangs would like to do the same thing to the Steers, but Stapler is never one to count a victory before it's claimed.

"They (Steers) should win," he said. "I saw the film of their (21-18) win over fifth-ranked Estacado and it was frightening. I know they lost to Sweetwater, but do you know that the stats from that game were even? They both had 12 first downs.

"That kind of game, where a couple of big plays let things get out of hand, can happen to anybody."

Andrews comes in with the state's 11th-ranked 4A defense, allowing just 159 yards a game.

Big Spring — with the 14th-ranked defense — already trails 12-0. The Steers know exactly where they stand.

"To get to the playoffs we have to win out and we have to beat Andrews by at least 12 points," Butler said. "But we can't go in trying to win by a certain number of points because you can fail in the first quarter, panic and be swamped."

"I think our kids have done a very good job of keeping their minds on what they need to do."

IN OTHER AREA GAMES, sixth-ranked Rankin (7-1, 3-0) wraps up its run toward the playoffs with a regular-season finale at 8 p.m. in Ft. Davis; Greenwood (4-5, 1-3) hosts Colorado City in a season-ender at 7:30 p.m.; Stanton (1-8, 1-5) looks for one last win at 8 p.m. in Eldorado; Lamesa (2-5-2, 0-4) closes out the season at Snyder beginning at 7:30 p.m.; No. 6 Garden City (7-1, 3-1) plays out its home schedule against Roby at 7:30 p.m.; McCamey (3-6, 2-4) plays its final game at 8 p.m. in Forsan; and Midland Christian (8-1) visits Abilene Christian in a 7:30 game that wraps up the regular season.

East Carolina enters Tobacco Road spotlight

Associated Press

GREENVILLE, N.C. — They still get second billing compared to their big-time neighbors, but East Carolina has gone out this season and upstaged college football on Tobacco Road.

A pair of precedent-setting victories have ensured the Pirates will have their first winning season since 1983. The 7-1 record has inserted coach Bill Lewis' program into the regular-season top 25 for the first time ever. Three more victories could take the school to a bowl game, the first since the Independence Bowl in 1978.

All this for a school nestled among the tobacco fields of eastern North Carolina, living in the shadows of the Atlantic Coast Conference and left in the dust when independents rushed for conference alignments two years ago.

"I don't think this is a flash in the pan," East Carolina athletic director Dave Hart said. "I really think we've stabilized our program and I think our coaches have done a great job in doing so. I think we're at the point where we're going to have a good program. Some faces will change but the program will be solid."

Lewis can't pin down just when the transformation occurred.

"I think it's just something that's come very gradually. This is a football team I really think was serious about its preparation last winter and in spring coming into the season," he said. "I think they started to believe they could win some football games."

It didn't always look that promising in Greenville, a town of about 46,000 located 90 miles east of Raleigh. Lewis is the school's sixth coach since 1970, following the likes of Pat Dye, now at Auburn; Mike McGee, Southern California athletic director, and Sonny Randle, a former NFL wide receiver. It was even suggested by one local columnist that East Carolina drop to NCAA Division I-AA.

McGee went 3-8 in 1970, his only season at Greenville, and headed to Duke, his alma mater. Randle followed and, after a 4-6 start, compiled a composite 18-4 mark the next two years and went to Virginia.

Dye never had a losing season in six years at East Carolina, and it was his 1978 club that capped its season with a 35-13 victory over Louisiana Tech in the Independence Bowl.

Ed Emory, whose malapropisms rivaled Yogi Berra, had an 8-3 record in 1983. But for a combined 16 points against the three Florida teams, East Carolina could have gone unbeaten. Emory was fired following a 2-9 record in 1984 in which the only victories came against Division I-AA schools.

Art Baker, the offensive coordinator who orchestrated the 1983 success, followed Emory, but never had a winning season and left in 1988. Lewis came in, and the school's fortunes began to change. Hart would like to think he's locked the revolving door for a while.

"If you look at our administration through our coaches, we've probably had less turnover than most people in the country in that four-year period," Hart says. "I think this is somewhat of a transient business by its very nature."

match and we had a lot of confidence. We try not to look past anybody because we know they can always come back," said Hobbs, who recorded three aces and five kills.

Leading the Lady Dawgs in the final match of the season were seniors Sally Gibson and Mich Neatherlin. Their intense play resulted in eight kills for Gibson and three kills and five digs for Neatherlin.

"Sally had a real good match, especially at the net. Sally and Mich both have been a real big part of the team for the past two years," Pittman said.

In the first game, Tascosa got off to a 4-0 start before MHS scored, and strung together four more points before the Lady Dawgs managed their second point.

Tascosa eventually led 13-2 when MHS started a five-point run that, though late in the game, may have given the Bulldogs some momentum going to the next game of the match.

Just when it looked like MHS might provide a spark, it went out. The Lady Rebels broke MHS' serve to open the second game and scored six straight points as Hobbs zinged a pair of aces across the net.

Gibson forced the next two sideouts in MHS' favor, though, as one of her serves and one of Bridget Thackeray's were returned out of bounds, bring the Dawgs to within 6-2.

Tascosa regained the service, however, and again began clicking the scoreboard with alarming speed.

By the time the Lady Rebs were done with their latest spurge, MHS was behind by seven points at 9-2, and again at 12-5.

Other Lady Bulldogs who added to the fight were Thackeray with five kills and setter Lisa Sanchez, who recorded a pair of digs and an ace.

For Tascosa, Jesilyn Hatch and Holly Ridings both had five kills while Ridings had three aces and Hatch two. April Ridings also scored two aces.

"I'm real proud of this team. They've played well all season long and did some good things tonight. It's just tough to go against a powerhouse like that right off the bat," Pittman said.

In other bi-district play Thursday, District 4-5A champion Abilene High downed Amarillo High 15-7, 15-11 at Brownfield.

Lee Freshman Maroon put the finishing touches on the Midland-Odessa Ninth Grade Conference championship Thursday with a 33-0 win over Odessa Nimitz, finishing the season at 8-1.

Maroon rolled out 422 yards of offense as Jeff Jackson rushed for 215 yards and two touchdowns. Lee Lauderdale had 108 yards and one TD while Melvin Dunson had 88 yards and two TDs.

The Maroon defense forced seven Nimitz turnovers with two interceptions by Kevin Jordan and one each by Joe Flores and Mark Hunter. Three fumble recoveries were turned in by David Langley, Jason Bush and Carlos Villegas.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You find the way or means to carry out a highly desirable household or creative project. Be enthusiastic without being impractical. Share specialized knowledge with an inexperienced person.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be frugal. Buy only what you really need and not what appeals at the moment. It would be smart to draw up a list of must-haves and stick to it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are able to apply the final touch to stabilize your domestic or monetary arrangements today. Examine a romantic relationship with greater objectivity before making any decisions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Changing circumstances provide an opening for you to improve your financial standing. Forcing an issue will only lead to unwanted results. Be patient.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It pays to be alert. Try to foresee possible threats to your status or property and take protective measures. Keep a low profile. Being indiscreet could hurt your reputation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make it your main purpose to keep everyone calm and serene this morning. Good investments should not be replaced with others that are more risky. Donate to a worthy cause.

defenders would then have at least five tricks to cash before declarer could get a ninth. There was only one hope—at trick two South should have banged out the king of clubs!

Actually, that play had two things going for it. The most likely possibility is that, with five clubs to the jack sitting in dummy, a defender with the ace of clubs, but not the queen as well, might duck the trick to prevent declarer from establishing and running the suit. If that happened, declarer would then revert to diamonds and could no longer be stopped from scoring nine tricks. The second chance was if the club suit was distributed as above. If West wins the ace, declarer can later take two finesses for West's marked ten of clubs, bringing home the contract by taking three spade tricks, two hearts and four clubs.

On some hands we might gently chide a declarer or a defender for failing to find the winning play. However, there is no excuse for adopting a line which stands no chance at all!

South's opening was an old-fashioned, strong three no trump showing a balanced 25-27 points. The contract would have been easy had North's only queen not been wasted. Add a low heart to the North or South hand and nine tricks could have been a piece of cake.

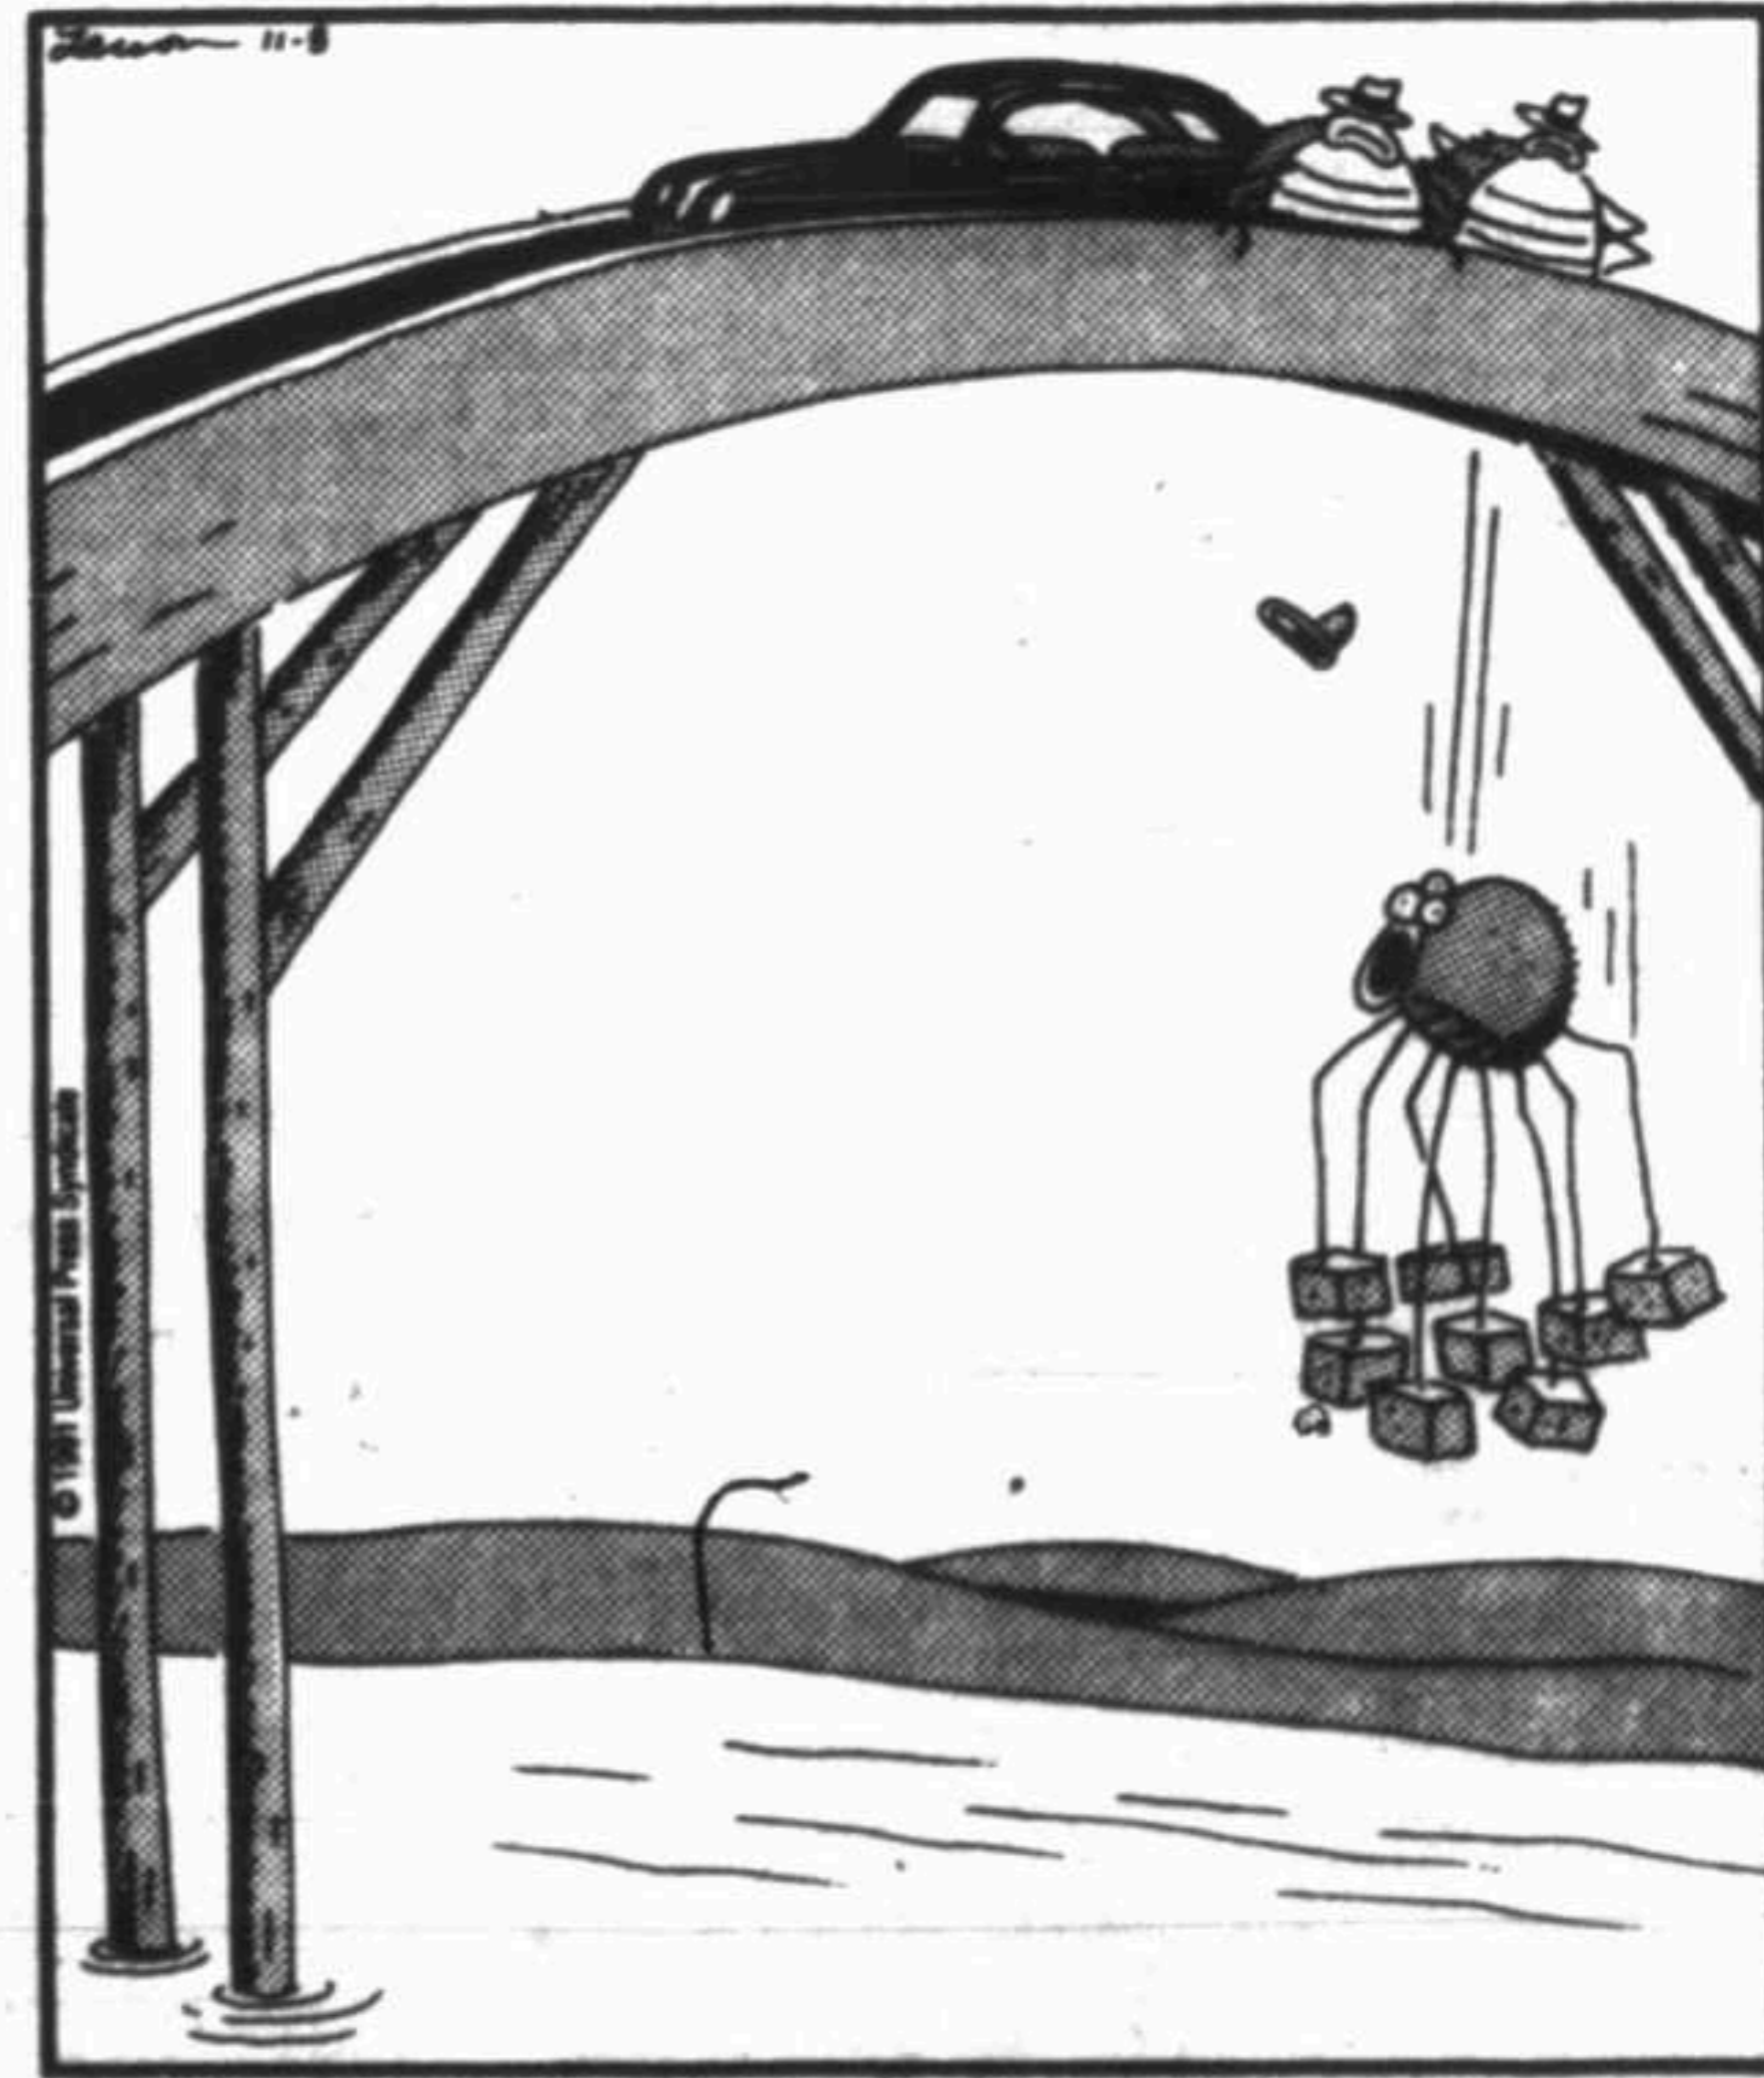

West led a heart, perforce won in the closed hand, and declarer had only five fast tricks. In an attempt to set up more, declarer led the king of diamonds from hand. East grabbed the ace and returned a heart, and declarer had to be content with the eight tricks he had gone to such lengths to establish.

Declarer's play was the height of futility. It should have been obvious that the defenders would remove South's remaining heart stopper as soon as they gained the lead and the

Actress Gene Tierney dies

HOUSTON — Actress Gene Tierney, who played the enigmatic victim in the murder mystery "Laura" and was nominated for an Academy Award for "Leave Her To Heaven," has died, a funeral home spokesman said Thursday. She was 70.

Tierney

Tierney, who had suffered from emphysema, died late Wednesday at her home. James Allen of Geo. H. Lewis & Sons funeral home in Houston said Thursday that funeral arrangements were pending.

She had lived in Houston since 1960, when she married oilman W. Howard Lee, who died in 1981.

The actress' striking, high-cheekboned good looks helped propel her to stardom before the age of 20. But she battled a series of tragedies, including the birth of a daughter who was mentally retarded because Tierney had German measles during her pregnancy, and a bout of mental illness during the mid-1950s.

"Laura," directed by Otto Preminger and released in 1944, is perhaps her best-known role. She played a socialite who is apparently a murder victim; Dana Andrews plays a police detective who falls in love with her through her portraits. The film also starred Vincent Price and Clifton Webb.

"Leave Her to Heaven," 1945, was about an selfish woman who causes unhappiness for those around her and eventually commits suicide. Tierney received her only Oscar nomination for that role, but lost out to Joan Crawford, selected as best actress for "Mildred Pierce."

Among Tierney's other films were "Belle Starr," 1941; "Heaven Can Wait," 1943; "A Bell for Adano," 1945; "Dragonwyck," 1946; "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir," 1947; and "Night and the City," 1950.

She was married to designer Oleg Cassini from 1941 to 1952. They had two children, Daria, born in 1943, who was born retarded, and Christina, in 1948. In the 1950s, she had a celebrated romance with Aly Khan; then came her marriage to Lee after she recovered from her illness.

She still worked occasionally after that, appearing in "Advise and Consent" in 1962 and a few other films.

Tierney was born Nov. 20, 1920, in the New York City borough of Brooklyn, a daughter of a wealthy businessman. She was educated at private schools in Connecticut and Switzerland.

She overcame family disapproval to pursue an acting career, first on Broadway in 1939.

She was appearing in a supporting role in "The Male Animal," 1940, when she was spotted by producer Darryl F. Zanuck and signed by 20th Century Fox. She made her film, "The Return of Jesse James," that same year. Tierney's autobiography, "Self Portrait," was published in 1979.

PHILADELPHIA — Gov. Robert F. Casey transcribed a portion of the U.S. Constitution during a live television show Thursday as part of a nationwide observance of the 200th anniversary of the Bill of Rights.

Casey hand-copied a small section of the Constitution in an appearance at Independence Hall, where the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution were ratified. The event was captured by ABC's "Good Morning America."

Governors, educators and students in all 50 states and the five U.S. territories are transcribing the document line-by-line. The completed text will be the focus of a Dec. 15 closing ceremony of the Bicentennial celebration in Philadelphia.

"I'm sure this document will inspire generations to study and revitalize our unique experiment in self-government," Casey said.

TEMPE, Ariz. — Syndicated columnist George Will has won the Walter Cronkite Award for excellence in journalism.

The award, announced Wednesday, is presented each year by the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication at Arizona State University. It will be presented by the retired newscaster on Tuesday.

Previous recipients include Malcolm Forbes, Allen Neuharth, Bill Mauldin, Otis Chandler, William S. Paley, Frank Stanton and television mogul Ted Turner, who won last year.

Will, who won a Pulitzer Prize for commentary in 1977, is a regular panelist on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley."

FOX CHAPEL, Pa. — Retired Gen. Matthew Ridgway, who jumped behind enemy lines with his D-Day troops and took over a troubled army in the Korean War, was honored Thursday with the Congressional Gold Medal.

Ridgway, 96, the last surviving prominent World War II general, accepted the medal from Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Colin Powell in a brief ceremony at his suburban Pittsburgh home.

"I always felt it was the place of a commander to be there when a crisis is going to erupt — that is a tenet of my faith," a witness quoted Ridgway as telling Powell. Reporters weren't allowed in the ceremony.

Ridgway assumed command of the Eighth Army in Korea after Lt. Gen. William Walton was killed in a jeep accident just before Christmas 1950.

He was commander of U.S. forces in the Caribbean in the late 1940s and Allied forces in Europe in the 1950s.

Prices fall

NEW YORK — Oil prices fell Thursday as rumors that Iraq would resume large-scale oil exports gave traders an excuse to take profits.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in December, which fell 38 cents on Wednesday, fell another 20 cents to $23.20 per barrel at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock Permian, Marathon, Phillips and Texaco Trading and Transportation lowered their posted price 25 cents to $22.

Traders said they sold oil futures on a rumor that Iraq agreed to meet United Nations conditions for selling $1.6 billion of oil over the next six months.

Traders also reacted to reports that Kuwait was pumping more oil than the market initially thought, said James Steel, a research analyst at Refco Inc.

Natural gas for delivery in December settled at $2.082 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.9 cents.

Dollar off

NEW YORK — The dollar was narrowly mixed against other currencies Thursday following a series of losses.

The dollar was marginally lower against the Japanese yen in New York, falling to 129.865 yen from late Wednesday's 129.90.

The British pound fell against the dollar, slipping to $1.7705 in New York from $1.7750 late Wednesday.

Stocks boosted

NEW YORK — Stock prices put together a moderate gain Thursday with encouragement from a strong bond market.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 15.65 points to 3,054.11.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 9 to 5 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Guilty pleas

BALTIMORE — One of the biggest figures named so far in an ongoing probe of the generic drug industry pleaded guilty to five counts of defrauding the federal Food and Drug Administration.

Robert Shulman, former chairman and chief executive officer of Bolar Pharmaceutical Inc., faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine on each count. He entered the plea Thursday.

In March, Bolar agreed to pay a $10 million fine, the largest ever imposed by the FDA, for selling $192 million of nine adulterated and mislabeled generic drugs.

Agencies issue loan guidelines

■ Federal banking agencies explain when real estate loans should be classified as being in danger of default and the extent to which bank examiners should require lenders to set aside funds as a reserve against possible losses.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Pressed by a Bush administration anxious to revive the sluggish economy, four federal banking agencies on Thursday cautioned their examiners not to be too tough.

In a 20-page statement also sent to bank chief executives, the agencies outlined guidelines on commercial real estate lending and said they are aimed at ensuring that "regulatory policies and actions do not inadvertently curtail the availability of credit to sound borrowers."

To make sure the message sinks in, the agencies are summoning 500 senior examiners from across the country to Dec. 16-17 meeting in Baltimore to review the guidelines.

Separately, a consumer advocacy group complained that banks are holding back the economy by refusing to fully pass on lowered interest rates to the American public and called on consumers to demand a better deal from lenders.

The regulators' lending guidelines were immediately praised by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, who called them a "coordinated, sensible approach to alleviate the credit crunch ... necessary to sustaining economic recovery."

The agencies participating are the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Office of Thrift Supervision. Together, they supervise 12,000 banks and 2,200 savings and loans.

The guidelines spell out in detail when real estate loans should be classified as being in danger of default and the extent to which examiners should require lenders to set aside funds as a reserve against possible losses.

At a briefing, senior officials of the agencies emphasized that the guidelines essentially codify current practices, which they believed most examiners were following.

But, they said it should help credit conditions marginally by giving clear instructions to the few examiners who may be overly tough.

"We're attempting to make sure we're all singing from the same sheet of music," said Jonathan Fiechter, deputy director of the thrift office.

Industry groups welcomed the guidelines but were skeptical about whether they would make much difference.

"Bankers have seen this before and it will take awhile before they believe it enough to change their lending practices," said Wendy Samuel, general counsel of the National Council of Community Bankers.

Thursday's actions expand on two previous rounds of regulatory tinkering aimed at encouraging bankers to make more loans — one in March, the other in July.

Lobby groups representing home builders and real estate developers have maintained that a regulatory crackdown in reaction to the savings and loan crisis is stifling the economy.

But regulators and the bankers themselves have said the so-called credit crunch is more a symptom than a cause of the recession. Lenders say they have found little demand for credit from cautious businesses and skittish consumers.

Meanwhile, Stephen Brobeck, executive director of the Consumer Federation of America, said rates on bank certificates of deposit have fallen by nearly 4 percentage points between April 1989 and last month.

Yet, he said, auto loan rates have fallen by only about 1 percentage point and personal consumer loans by about three-quarters of a point. Credit card rates have actually risen by nearly a percentage point.

Computer controversy

IBM Chairman John F. Akers, right, tells reporters at a Tokyo news conference Thursday that the American computer giant may assemble more machines in Japan if a new U.S. tariff intended to help American screen makers is not lifted. The controversy stems from a tariff that was imposed following charges that Japanese computer screen makers were dumping flat-panel screens on the U.S. market. At left is Takeo Shina, president of IBM Japan.

Bank regulator plans to remain in office

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top banking regulator Robert L. Clarke said Thursday he will remain in office, for now, even though his nomination to a second term was rejected by the Senate Banking Committee.

"I believe it is essential that the office ... continue to have leadership during this critical period for banks," Clarke, the comptroller of the currency, said in a statement.

"I have agreed to continue serving ... to provide continuity to the agency," he said.

The comptroller, a Treasury Department official, regulates nationally chartered banks, including most of the nation's largest and most prominent institutions.

On Wednesday, the Senate Banking Committee killed his nomination in a 12-9 party-line vote. Despite the rejection, Clarke under the law can remain in the position until a successor is found.

House Republican Leader Newt Gingrich of Georgia asked President Bush in a letter Thursday to nominate Clarke again. Gingrich said the president should insist that the full Senate vote on the nomination, and call on Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., the chairman of the committee, to recuse himself from the confirmation process.

Administration officials have suggested they were in no hurry to recruit another nominee.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Broker to blame for fund misinformation

By Bill Doyle

Q. Through the brokerage unit of a large bank, I purchased shares of a mutual fund, which I was told was 100 percent invested in U.S. government securities.

After seven phone calls and one month after the purchase confirmation date, I received the mutual fund's prospectus from the brokerage. To my dismay, I read that only 65 percent of the fund's assets is in U.S. government securities. The rest is invested in commercial banks and savings and loan associations.

When I confronted the broker with these facts, he told me the representative of the mutual fund had told him over the phone that the fund was 100 percent invested in U.S. government securities.

How can a broker sell to a client any investment for which the broker himself has not read the prospectus?

A. It shouldn't happen and wouldn't if you had an on-the-ball broker. Unfortunately, the work habits of some members of the brokerage fraternity leave a great deal to be desired.

You have a legitimate gripe, based on both misinformation and delay in receiving the prospectus. The Securities and Exchange Commission has a rule that every mutual fund sales effort must be accompanied or preceded by delivery of the effective prospectus.

Based on your letter, you should be able to "bust the trade" and get your money back. Tell that to the broker, his office manager and, if necessary, to the compliance officer at the brokerage headquarters.

If you get no results, address your complaint to Director of Arbitration, National Association of Securities Dealers, 33 Whitehall Street, New York, NY 10004. And, if the brokerage is a member of the New York Stock Exchange, write to that exchange's arbitration director, 11 Wall Street, New York, NY 10006.

Q. In 1987, my wife and I bought 3,000 shares of a government securities "plus" mutual fund at $10 per share. It now is $9.38. In 1985, we had purchased 978 shares of a different U.S. securities "plus" fund at $10.22, which now is $9.10.

We get monthly payments from each fund. In your opinion, are these good investments? Could we do better? If so, how?

A. The results show they both are investment duds. That's the sorry story with virtually all U.S. government securities mutual funds with "plus" and/or "high-yield" in their names.

Such funds invest in U.S. Treasury and government agency securities and use other tactics to increase the distributions paid to shareholders.

Some sell options on their holdings, collect premiums on those sales and, after deducting their operating expenses, pass both interest and premiums along to shareholders. That method usually backfires and reduces the value of fund shares.

Why? Because, if the market values of the securities on which call options are written rise, the securities are called away by the option buyers. That reduces the fund's assets — usually more than the amount of the premiums collected. Other "plus" and "high-yield" funds fatten up their distributions by handing back some of the shareholders' capital — again reducing fund assets and share values.

Both of these tactics give the mistaken impression the funds are producing high dividend yields. In fact, the dividends are the part of such distributions that result only from the interest, minus fund expenses, such funds pay out.

Although it's impossible to predict the investment future, you probably will do better by switching to a true income investment, such as a mutual fund holding bonds — without exotic "plus" or "high-yield" tactics.

You certainly would have in the past, because the distributions would not have lowered the values of your shares and eroded the total value of your investments.

Retail sale outlook dim, experts say

Associated Press

Business stagnated in October for many of the nation's largest retailers. Consumers, traumatized by worries about the economy, cut back further on purchases of clothes and household items.

Sales figures released by storeowners Thursday dimmed the outlook for the economic recovery and Christmas shopping season.

"These are very disappointing numbers," said Daniel Barry, a retail industry analyst with Kidder, Peabody & Co., a New York investment firm.

Barry predicted the Christmas season would be mediocre, and added that "shoppers will shop later as they typically do in recessions."

Retailers were well aware of the hard time ahead.

As in previous months, a few retailers finished well ahead of the pack in October.

Discount retailer Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the nation's largest storeowner, outperformed rivals as consumers sought the lowest prices. Gap Inc. and Merry-Go-Round Enterprises Inc., both specialty apparel retailers, once again outran other clothing merchants.

Many retailers resorted to price markdowns to lure reluctant shoppers. Dayton Hudson Corp. president Stephen Watson said the discounting would significantly affect his company's third-quarter earnings.

Some retailers, while still reporting sluggish sales, saw improvements. Sears sales, which had fallen in recent months, marginally increased in October over year-earlier results.

But analysts warned that some of the October sales reports looked healthier than they actually were. That is because last year's sales were also poor.

The slump in consumer spending came as little surprise after several prominent national surveys showed consumers were increasingly edgy about the economy and their own job security in October.

Croatian children search for shrapnel souvenirs as residents of the Adriatic port of Dubrovnik look at damaged cars Thursday morning following Wednesday's heavy shelling by Yugoslav federal army forces.

Yugoslav federal troops bomb Croatian cities

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Federal jets bombed a dozen Croatian towns Thursday, with skirmishes and explosions reported on the outskirts of the capital of the separatist republic. The defenders of the Adriatic port of Dubrovnik said they had refused an army ultimatum to surrender, raising the specter of further fighting that could damage the medieval walled old city, considered a cultural treasure. Croatian Deputy Defense Minister Stjepan Adanic said air force planes rocketed a mountain north of Zagreb, the republic's capital, apparently aiming at TV transmitters there. Velika Buna, near Zagreb airport, also was bombed. The army blew up its own ammunition dumps on Zagreb's outskirts. "They'd rather blow it up than leave it to us," Adanic said. There was also an exchange of fire around barracks on the southern edge of Zagreb, said local defense officials. Djuro Kolic, of Dubrovnik's civil defense committee, said army commanders on Wednesday had demanded that Croatian forces surrender before a deadline expired at noon Thursday. "We shall fight, even house-by-house or flat-by-flat," he said defiantly. Zagreb radio Thursday night reported attacks from air and sea on Dubrovnik and coastal islands. It quoted Dubrovnik defense command as saying gunboats attacked Dubrovnik's western Lapad district and said aircraft fired rockets at Sipan island north of Dubrovnik. One person was wounded, the radio said. The attacks came a day before the European Community's foreign ministers were to meet in Rome to decide on sanctions against Serbia, the largest Yugoslav republic, which has rejected EC peace proposals. Croatia's parliament Thursday appealed for foreign intervention to stop the four-month-old war, which is thought to have claimed some 2,000 lives.

Explosion damages American University of Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A powerful explosion wrecked an administration building at the American University of Beirut before dawn Friday, but no one was hurt, police said. The blast toppled in ruins the main tower of the building at the school, the Middle East's most prestigious university, which was founded by an American missionary 125 years ago. Teachers, administrators and students at the school frequently were kidnapped by various factions during Lebanon's civil upheaval. Some of the Western hostages taken by Shiite Moslem terrorists were kidnapped from the school. A police spokesman said the explosion destroyed about half of the administration building, but no one was inside at the time. The spokesman can not be named under standing regulations. Many of Beirut's residence were jolted in bed by the loud blast at 3:40 A.M. (7:40 p.m. Thursday CST). No one immediately claimed responsibility for the attack. Iranian-backed fundamentalist factions have threatened attacks on American targets to protest the Arab-Israeli peace talks that opened in Madrid on Oct. 31 under joint U.S. and Soviet auspices. The fundamentalists, grouped in the Hezbollah or Party of God, have kidnapped many foreign teachers, administrators and students from the university over the past seven years. Two of them remain hostages: Thomas Sutherland, the school's agriculture dean, who was seized June 10, 1985, and comptroller Joseph Cicippio, taken on Sept. 12, 1986. American Frank Regier, an engineering professor, was rescued after two months.

Canada OKs stringent gun control bill

TORONTO (AP) — The House of Commons overwhelmingly passed a bill tightening Canada's gun control laws Thursday, a compromise between those who wanted tougher measures and rural lawmakers defending traditional firearms freedoms.

"It's a moral victory, very certainly," said Suzanne Laplante-Edwards, whose daughter, Anne-Marie, was one of 14 women killed in a massacre last year at Montreal's Ecole Polytechnique.

"It's a beginning of gun control, a very modest bill," she said. Canadian gun control laws already are much more stringent than those in the United States. The measure, which now goes to the Senate, imposes a 28-day waiting period for firearms acquisition certificates, raises the gun ownership age from 16 to 18, requires as yet unspecified storage regulations, bans automatic firearms converted to fire semiautomatically, stiffens penalties for crimes with guns and reduces magazine sizes.

Passage is assured in the Senate, which is controlled by the governing Conservatives, but the measure may be amended. Justice Minister Kim Campbell, a strong supporter of the bill, said the Senate will have to be very careful in proposing amendments.

She has been trying to get a gun control bill passed in Parliament since the tragic attack by Laplante in Montreal on Dec. 6, 1989.

"I don't think we can ever, through some law, outlaw insanity," she said. "What it does is make it very much more difficult for Marc Laplante to do what he did."

The measure was passed 189-14, with all political parties voting in favor. Among the opponents were eight members of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's ruling Progressive Conservatives.

Members of all parties were split on the issue during committee discussions. Some wanted a tougher law to help police and others did not want the law to impose on hunters and other legitimate gun users.
