Seven Abscam defendants begin serving sentences

By The Associated Press

After long trials, appeals all the way to the Supreme Court and fancy maneuvers by famed criminal defense attorneys, time ran out today for four former congressmen convicted of Abscam crimes.

The former House members, along with a former New Jersey mayor, a former Philadelphia City Council member and a Philadelphia lawyer were ordered to report to federal prisons today in Danbury, Conn.; Lexington, Ky.; and Allenwood, Pa.

They must serve terms of up to six years for their participation in the government's undercover bribery-conspiracy investigation.

Ordered to turn themselves in at Allenwood were former Rep. Michael "Ozzie" Myers, D-Pa., former Rep. Raymond Lederer, D-Pa., and Louis Johanson, a former member of the Philadelphia City Council.

Lederer, Myers and Johanson were all sentenced to three-year prison terms and fined $20,000 each.

Former Rep. John Murphy, D-N.Y., and Angelo Errichetti, former mayor of Camden, N.J., and a former state senator, were scheduled to report to the federal facility at Danbury.

Murphy was sentenced to three years and fined $10,000 while Errichetti was sentenced to six years and fined $40,000.

Former Rep. Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J., who served in Congress for 26 years and chaired the House Administration Committee, avoided reporters and photographers by arriving late Wednesday at the federal penitentiary in Lexington, Ky., said a prison supervisor, Robert Parrish.

The surrenders marked the first incarceration of major political figures convicted in Operation Abscam, an extensive FBI undercover sting operation that featured secretly made videotapes recording bribe payouts.

During Abscam, FBI agents and government operatives posed as influence-buying Arab sheiks and their bagmen, paying bribes in return for special immigration legislation or other political favors.

Thompson was to be examined in a prison hospital to see if he can stand the rigors of prison life. The former congressman underwent heart bypass surgery about 10 years ago and has been treated for heart troubles in recent years. He has not been formally sentenced pending outcome of the testing.

Howard Criden, former law partner of Johanson, was to report to the prison at Lexington. Criden, a middleman in Abscam like Errichetti, was sentenced to six years and fined $40,000.

U.S. District Judge George C. Pratt, who conducted the three bribery-conspiracy trials involving the defendants, had previously given them permission to surrender at the prisons rather than at the U.S. Courthouse in Brooklyn, scene of the trials.

Murphy said in recent court papers that he wanted to surrender directly to the prison to avoid or limit the adverse effects of publicity on his small children.

Earlier this week, Pratt rejected without comment a motion by Murphy to delay the start of his sentence until Aug. 22 — so he could be present for the birth and baptism of a grandchild.

The Abscam investigation has resulted in the convictions of 19 men, including former Sen. Harrison Williams Jr., D-N.J., two other former House members and the former president of the Philadelphia City Council.

A former Immigration and Naturalization Service employee and a meat salesman were the first Abscam defendants to go to prison. The remaining defendants are to begin serving sentences later this year or are awaiting outcome of appeals.

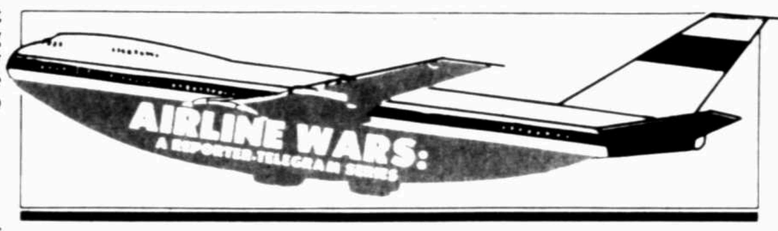
Up, up and away

A Southwest Airlines 737-200 jet takes off from Midland Regional Airport. Southwest carries more passengers to and from Midland than any other airline, and it is making no plans to raise fares during its competitors' scramble to sew up their wounds from airfare wars.

Every Southwest flight a bargain

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is part five in a six-part series detailing commercial airlines — what they can do, how consumers should use them, how a travel agent can help and more.

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer



DALLAS — At a time when major airlines must buy new equipment to replace outdated jets, raise fares to gain back their $550 million in 1982 losses, and limit confusing money-saver fares they've made into labryinths of consumer bargains, Southwest Airlines is 12 years old and going strong.

The airline, founded by lawyer Herb Kelleher and an extremely experienced management team, made $34 million net profit in 1982. Its NYSE stock symbol is "LUV."

Chief executive Kelleher has been pictured in a set of TV commercials as a "real human," said marketing vice president Tom Bolz in a recent interview. One spot shows Kelleher expounding on the virtues of the airline's 10-minute turn, then getting left at the gate as the flight takes off.

This fall, another spot will have Kelleher buying a Southwest ticket at one of its new, automated ticket machines. At the gate, one of his own employees has to tell Kelleher, "Herb, I'm sorry, but your credit card's expired again." Bolz said this is "just the way Herb is."

Southwest employees own about 14 percent of the company, and Bolz said this gives them strong pride-of-ownership feelings in addition to their "Take your job seriously, but not yourself" attitude.

This is why Southwest thinks it is a fun-to-fly airline.

One travel agent in Midland called it the "no-frills" airline because of some of its policies. But it's still providing frequent and (usually) on-time service — at convenient in-town airports in Texas.

Now, it even flies to Los Angeles, Denver, Phoenix, San Francisco, San Diego, Las Vegas, and other points beyond.

Southwest is making no plans to raise fares during its competitors' scramble to sew up their wounds from airfare wars. And Southwest has never been in the business of restricted flights at bargain prices. Every flight is said to be a bargain.

The reason flights are inexpensive on Southwest is the minimized expenses per-passenger and using the "10-minute turn" to maximize use of each jet. Buying tickets is a fast cash-register operation, and no reservation of seats allows quick boarding.

Skelton convicted; Neal's daughter says he should die

ODESSA (AP) — The 19-year-old daughter of a man who was blown up by a bomb rigged to his pickup truck says John Skelton deserves to die the same way.

"I think he ought to be put in a truck with dynamite, just like my dad was," Nancy Neal said Wednesday night after a jury convicted Skelton, 53, of capital murder in the death of Joe Lee Neal.

A state jury was ordered to report back in court at 10 a.m. today to begin the punishment phase of the trial. The jury, after listening to seven days of testimony, received the case at 6 p.m. Wednesday and returned the guilty verdict 2½ hours later.

Skelton, for whom Neal had worked in an Odessa oil service firm, had been free on $150,000 bond, but District Judge I.L. McKim granted a prosecution motion Wednesday night that bond be revoked and Skelton be placed in the Ector County Jail.

"Do not let the community suffer further on his behalf," said Assistant Attorney General Linda Walden, a member of the prosecution team.

Neal, 46, had quit his job with Skelton to start a competing business shortly before he was killed when he turned on the ignition of his pickup truck outside his home in April 1982.

Skelton admitted during the trial that he bought dynamite about a month before the killing, and also admitted telling several people he'd like to break Neal's arms, but he denied any connection with the blast.

Skelton showed no emotion when the verdict was announced. He just hugged his wife, who was seated next to him at the defense table, and handed over his belongings to her.

But Neal's widow, Peggy, sobbed and hugged her daughters when the verdict was pronounced. She said later that she didn't know what kind of sentence Skelton could get.

"I hope that the jury that found him guilty can find the right punishment for him," she said.

Mrs. Neal called the period between her husband's death and Skelton's conviction "13 months of hell."

Nancy Neal said she had no doubts Skelton would be convicted "because I knew he was the one that did it."

In closing arguments Wednesday, defense attorney Cliff Hardwick said everyone who testified for the state talked about how much Skelton had helped them in the past and what a good man he is, Hardwick said.

"Now they're trying to make him look like a mad bomber, a crazy man who runs around wanting to break people's arms and legs and shoot people," Hardwick said.

Skelton said he purchased dynamite and blasting caps, a month before Neal was killed, "to blow stumps from my farm in Arkansas."

However, Department of Public Safety officer Joe Scott of Midland, a state rebuttal witness, said he went to Skelton's farm two weeks after the murder and made an air and ground examination of the land to check for the stumps, but found none.

Prospectors rushing in to claim gold

REDDING, Calif. (AP) — No one knows how much gold is left in them thar hills in Northern California, but prospectors lured by high-quality ore samples are filing hundreds of claims in an new-fangled gold rush.

"Normally it's one or two (mining claim filings) a week," Shasta County Recorder Marjorie Kivley said Wednesday. "We had 114 on one day here. And we had probably 35 or 40 on the fifth (of July). This has all been going on for about three weeks."

"It's a gold rush," said Sam Shoemaker, a mining engineer for Polar Drilling Co. in Redding.

Fueling the rush are reports of "extraordinary" ore samples, including one sample which had 4.4 ounces of gold per ton of ore, according to Polar Drilling and Terramar Resources Corp. of Vancouver, British Columbia.

The two firms said in early June they found that gold-laden ore in the Reid Mine, the center of activity in this rural area 160 miles north of San Francisco.

Terramar stock soared from $1.20 to $7.50 a share on the Vancouver Stock Exchange after the announcement. Trading in Terramar, now down to $4.60 a share, has been halted pending release of additional ore sample results expected today.

Leaks pinned on 'White House mole'

WASHINGTON (AP) — While congressional investigators are pursuing allegations that 1980 Reagan campaign workers used sex to obtain Carter White House documents, memos have surfaced pinning some leaks on a "White House mole."

"There have been people who have made statements to lead us to believe there were sexual favors involved," says Rep. Donald Albosta, D-Mich., chairman of the subcommittee that is formally investigating how the Reagan camp obtained debate briefing materials prepared for Carter.

Donald Albosta

He said the panel is checking out allegations that persons of both sexes established intimate relationships with persons of the opposite sex in the Carter camp.

"It may have been orchestrated by the Reagan people," Albosta said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "We're pursuing it...It's, I think, the most likely (avenue) right now."

Presidential counselor Edwin Meese quickly denied the allegations.

"At no time was there any contemplation or attempt to get any information out of the Carter campaign," he said.

Meanwhile, The Washington Post reported in today's editions that Reagan volunteer Daniel Jones sent memorandums during the campaign to top Reagan officials with information he said he obtained from a "mole" at the White House.

The 1980 memos were addressed to Edwin Meese, now counselor to the president; campaign manager William Casey, now director of the CIA; and campaign deputy director for communications Bob Gray, now a Washington public relations executive.

One memo said: "According to latest information from a 'reliable White House mole' (at) 6:30 on Oct. 27, the following is President Carter's itinerary for the remainder of the campaign."

At the bottom, the memo said: "Attached is recent White House memo re certain economic information."

The White House memo, dated Oct. 24, was from presidential assistants Anne Wexler and Alonzo McDonald to members of the Carter cabinet outlining possible comments on the latest movements in the Consumer Price Index.

Another White House memo from Wexler and McDonald, dated Oct. 10 and also on economics, bore the handwritten notation at the top: "Bob — Report from White House mole."

Boy beaten at religious camp

SOUTH HAVEN, Mich. (AP) — Eleven children, some with bruises and "external physical conditions," were taken from the House of Judah religious camp in ambulances after a 12-year-old boy was beaten to death there, authorities said.

The three girls and eight boys, ages 5 to 6 and some of them siblings, left the camp Wednesday for "further medical examination," said Myrna McNitt, an assistant administrator of the Allegan County Probate Court.

She said the children walked from the settlement of blue-and-white mobile homes to an ambulance to be taken to an unidentified hospital. People were "visibly saddened," she said, but there was no trouble at the compound five miles east of here.

Ms. McNitt said the children were removed because of "some external physical conditions," including some bruises.

A team of about a dozen medical and judicial officials was sent to the camp by Allegan County Probate Judge George Gregg.

Gregg ordered earlier this week that five of Ethyl Yarbough's six children be turned over to the state, after Mrs. Yarbough surrendered following the beating death of her 12-year-old son John.

Mrs. Yarbough, a camp member, was arraigned Wednesday in Allegan on a manslaughter charge. She was held on $50,000 bond.

State Police Lt. Michael Bowie said Wednesday that 55 children at the camp, just off a one-lane dirt road, were checked by officials from state and county health and legal agencies.

The camp is run by William A. Lewis, who calls himself the Prophet and says "black Hebrew Israelite Jews" belong to the group.

Lewis, 61, said late Wednesday that John Yarbough "wasn't beaten to death...When you chastise him with a rod, you don't beat him to death...

"The kid just got a beating and he died, so to me it's an act of God," Lewis said. "The mother of this kid was one of the most strict women there is in this camp...She had permission to give them a whupping when they needed it."

Lewis refused to say how many followers he had since it would be "contrary to the commandment of God."

The judge's order dealt only with the children's health and living conditions, but Bowie said there are "other issues the court feels it wants to take a look at."

Bowie said the team did not investigate each building in the compound during its three-hour stay Wednesday. State troopers confiscated two unregistered handguns, but no one was arrested.

"We didn't see any obvious sores, injuries or wounds that were going untreated or open," on the children, Bowie said, adding that camp members "do a lot of self-medication... it's part of the camp culture."

Bowie said medical facilities at the camp "were not modern...and it is my understanding that no one out there has (medical) qualifications." He said there was some use of "herbal remedies."

Every building in the camp and at least one car are painted with blue and white stripes. Signs quoting biblical phrases are in the compound, a tree-shaded area amid acres of farm fields in southwestern Michigan.

Lewis said the place has been for sale for more than a year and that the group is trying to find land in Louisiana or Mississippi, but there have been no buyers.

Bowie said state troopers and other agencies went to the camp last year as part of a criminal investigation. Lewis and two other camp officials were tried last month on assault charges filed by a woman who used to live at the camp.

A verdict has not been announced in that trial.

"I think it is unfortunate that a questionable death occurs, but we viewed this as an opportunity to do a complete assessment," Bowie said.

The checks were ordered after a child from the camp was beaten to death earlier this week. Eleven of the children were taken from the camp for further medical checks.

Southwest's vice president-scheduling and planning, Harold Reilly, said in an interview, "There is no make-up time in our schedule. We evolved into the 10-minute turn, which helps keep our fares down and our productivity up."

Camille Keith, vice president for public relations, said "We're still offering unrestricted low fares and speedy boarding," because of the airline's unique operation.

Providing invaluable service, the airline has more flights to more places than any Texas regional airline and in 1979 it became a CAB carrier and began interstate flights.

Bolz said the airline "...would probably still be working with its lawyers to become a CAB carrier — even up to 1985 — if deregulation had not come along in 1978. Before that year, there was a lengthy process to join the exclusive club of interstate airlines."

The 70-page Southwest schedule is catching up with major air carriers — American is huge and has 131 pages in its flight summary.

A frequent flier said "There are many times I would have been sunk without Southwest" and its timely service. When travel connections go awry, an airline with a ten-minute ground time between flights comes in mighty handy.

Ms. Keith said many passengers come into the airport 30 to 45 minutes early — and are able to catch an earlier Southwest flight to get a jump on a busy schedule.

How Southwest began makes a fascinating tale. Big airlines apparently recognized how dangerous an airline with new planes and radically-different flight procedures would be. They fought Southwest all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, twice, using various legal measures to try to stop the airline's first flight in 1971.

An airline's lawyer confided to a Southwest executive: "When I went to Washington to file our brief with the high court, the assistant clerk looked at it and asked me, 'Are you people picking on that poor little Texas airline again?' It gave me a sick feeling in my stomach."

Now, Southwest is laughing at the major airlines, who tried to bar it from sheer existence.

Southwest has newer jets (737s) that cost less to fly than those used by the majors on regular routes.

Instead of using a computer to assign a seat, Southwest provides a plastic boarding card with no seat, and lets passengers find their own. Two friends can more easily sit together than on a major airline but some people complain about being "treated like cattle." (Southwest replies that those feelings were "planted" by competitors' advertising.)

Southwest provides peanuts and soup for snacks — nothing more on long flights. Also, they provide name-brand soft drinks, liquor, and other liquid refreshment.

Ms. Keith said it is still a "short-haul" carrier — making several stops in flying from Texas to L.A.

Southwest's 1982 report said, "The new routes added in 1982 were substantially longer hauls than previously flown by Southwest and increased the average trip length..."

Bigger airlines (with higher costs and longer stops for provisioning) can manage to give hungry travelers cold chicken — or some other substantial snack — to pacify them on longer flights.

Muse Air offers nonstop, meal service flights to L.A. at a somewhat higher price. However, Muse doesn't offer all the flights and destinations Southwest has. Southwest executives will admit Muse has a good thing, but say they don't plan to imitate the new carrier in any way.

Southwest still offers cheap fares, but many consumers think of Southwest first without considering booking one of a dwindling number of even-cheaper fares — restricted tickets like Super Savers available on the major airlines. These tickets have assigned seats, special services for children and the handicapped, meals, etc.

For last-minute travel, though, restricted fares are of no use.

Southwest insiders expect more major airlines to close down (Eastern nearly did so two weeks ago). Newer airlines with lower costs of operation — like Southwest — could begin picking up some routes within their main region.

As for full-service, meals, and reserved seats, many passengers want these things.

Southwest is flying people from Dallas to Los Angeles — and some passengers feel they should start to think of it that way, as a long haul flight, instead of saying, "We are actually making that flight between Phoenix and L.A., which is a short hop." Passengers who've just been on a series of these "hops" may stop considering them "short."

FRIDAY: American loses big.

Briefing book leaks pinned on 'mole'

The Post received the memos from a campaign memorabilia collector who said he found them in the trash at the Arlington, Va., Reagan campaign headquarters a few days after the election. The collector, whom the newspaper said wanted to remain anonymous, said the papers had been in a box at home since the campaign.

Gray minimized the importance of the memos. "If I tossed them in the trash can, it's pretty obvious I did not think much of them," he told The Associated Press.

He said Jones might have used the word mole to make himself sound important. "That's the way I assess his personality," he said.

In discussing his subcommittee's investigation of sexual favors, Albosta said "We have allegations but no confirmation...It seems to be coming from people who are reliable sources...."

"It wasn't a true love affair," he said. "They may have purposely tried to orchestrate it. It was mentioned to us (that) it was an effort on somebody's part to cause it to happen — to get information..."

Meese said he thought Reagan would agree to any interview request by the FBI, which is assisting in a formal Justice Department investigation begun at the behest of the White House.

Reagan's chief spokesman, Larry Speakes, responded to repeated questions from reporters by saying:

"I have said that the Justice Department is looking into the matter. The president has said that he wants them to get to the bottom of it. That is firm and final. That is the extent of my comment on the matter. That is as it should be. That is the proper manner. That's the way we're going to do business in this White House, and I have nothing else to say."

Albosta said that after his subcommittee's investigation began June 29, staff members started receiving unsolicited telephone calls from people claiming to know how the Carter briefing material reached the Reagan campaign.

"I think there's good paths toward (finding) the moles," he said, referring to Carter people who may have delivered the material.

"We're getting potential sources we think will give us information toward establishing definite identities," he said. "There's people who are finding ways to get messages to us. These people are willing to talk to us."

The subcommittee staff hopes this week to interview Richard V. Allen, Reagan's former national security adviser, about his recent statements that he received excerpts of reports by Carter's National Security Council staff during the 1980 campaign.

Allen said the "innocuous" material reached him "totally unsolicited." He said he would identify the source only to the appropriate authorities.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, Carter's national security adviser, issued a prepared statement Wednesday terming Allen's comments "a serious and disturbing development."

He said that if the material was not classified, the action amounted to a "disloyal act." If it was classified, "both the source of the information and its recipient were engaging in illegal activity," Brzezinski said.

"At stake is the integrity of the national security system on which the well-being of this country depends," he said. "Given that, and also given the imperative need for public confidence in the functioning of our national security system, I feel strongly that President Reagan should instruct his national security adviser to establish whether the source or the recipient of the said information is or are still in government employment."

Convicted child killer spared death chamber

PARCHMAN, Miss. (AP) — Convicted child killer Jimmy Lee Gray clung to a new legal lifeline today, spared death in Mississippi's gas chamber by a federal appeals court that wanted more time to look at his seven-year-old case.

State attorneys pressed a three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Wednesday for clearance to execute Gray in the state prison's steel, six-sided death chamber Wednesday.

The execution had been scheduled for 12:01 a.m. Wednesday but could have been carried out as late as 11:59 p.m. if the stay had been lifted.

In issuing an original stay Saturday, the appeals court said it wanted to wait for a new U.S. Supreme Court ruling that affected Gray's case. That ruling came Wednesday morning, but the appeals judges said they needed more time to study its implications.

The panel set a July 14 hearing for Gray, 34, convicted in 1976 and again in 1978 for the murder of Deressa Jean Scales, a 3-year-old Pascagoula girl. Trial transcripts show that he raped and sodomized her, suffocated her by holding her head in a muddy ditch and then threw her body from a bridge.

The appeals court ordered attorneys to submit written arguments by July 11 in preparation for the July 14 hearing on whether the stay should be lifted or not.

Prospectors rush in to claim gold

Partial results indicate the later sample "is not as good as the first, but it's not bad," Shoemaker said.

The Reid Mine, about 10 miles northwest of Redding, was closed in 1920. Polar began filing claims and exploring the area in 1980 and Terramar, which provides financing, was brought in this year.

Many of those filing claims have been corporations or their representatives, according to Shoemaker and Mrs. Kivley.

The sudden price increase in gold in the mid-1970s and the recent recession led to an increase in prospecting a few years ago. Few of those prospectors found anything in commercial quantities.

"Boy, it's a lot of work," said Mrs. Kivley, who said she sometimes goes panning for gold as recreation. "You work all day and barely get enough to buy a loaf of bread."

British Parliament will vote on death penalty

LONDON (AP) — British lawmakers vote next week on whether to bring back the hangman's noose for convicted killers, an emotional issue in a country where capital punishment has been banned for 14 years.

Legislators in the 650-seat House of Commons said Wednesday that an informal tally showed opponents of the measure will defeat it by a 20-vote margin. But the debate still rages and some opponents may change their minds before the vote, expected to take place next Wednesday.

Hanging was the traditional method of execution in Britain for hundreds of years. But the government suspended it in 1965 and banned capital punishment in 1969 after doubts emerged about the guilt of some people who had been hanged.

A leading supporter of restoring the Office of Public Hangman is Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, whose Conservative Party swept the national elections last month. Mrs. Thatcher says capital punishment is necessary to deter murderers and other violent criminals.

But Archbishop of Canterbury the Most. Rev. Robert Runcie, spiritual leader of the Anglican Church of England, says capital punishment made judges "too godlike."

"The problems of our society cannot be solved by selective acts of barbarous punishment," he said in a statement against restoration.

Home Secretary Leon Brittan, responsible for the nation's penal system, has not said how he will vote. When the House last voted against restoring hanging in 1982, Brittan opposed its restoration for murder but favored it for what he called "terrorist murder," meaning politically motivated killings.

The renewed demand to resurrect the Office of Public Hangman surfaced after the Conservatives were reelected in the June 9 election, with its House of Commons majority increased from 43 to 144.

But legislators will be able to vote as their conscience dictates, not on party lines.

The debate preceding the vote will be on a motion by Sir Edward Gardner, a barrister and chairman of the Society of Conservative Lawyers. He will ask that capital punishment be restored for murder.

A string of amendments propose the death penalty for categories of murder, including terrorism, killing police and prison guards, murder during robbery and by firearms and explosives.

In the last vote in May 1982, the House voted by a majority of 162 against bringing back the rope, first practiced in 1241 in the reign of King Henry III.

Drawing and quartering — disemboweling while "half dead," decapitating and cutting the body of the hanged person into four pieces — were associated with hanging at that time.

In the 38-year reign of King Henry VIII in the 16th century, more than 72,000 people were hanged.

In 1830, when there were more than 200 offenses for which offenders could be hanged in public — including stealing turnips.

Robots decrease need for humans, but bring efficiency to Japan

FUKAYA, Japan (AP) — To understand how dexterous robots in Japan have become, consider the circuit board inside a color television set.

Inserted into the perforated board are about 500 tiny diodes, condensors, resistors, and other parts as small, and about as delicate, as a cigarette ash.

At Toshiba Corp.'s Fukaya plant, north of Tokyo, four-pronged robots and a variety of other machines have taken over the work of inserting these parts into the circuit board, a job done previously by rows of nimble-fingered Japanese women.

Four years ago, Toshiba, one of Japan's giant electronics companies, decided to create a flexible automated production system, or FAPS, combining computers, a dozen robots and a variety of "mechatronic" machines to automate completely the circuit-board assembly line.

Only a few human workers remain, making sure the machines are kept in working order and that they get the parts they need.

As a result, Toshiba cut the workforce at its color television factory here from 2,000 to 800, increased output by 50 percent and improved quality levels and profits, said Masahide Nanbu, Toshiba's senior executive in charge of factory automation.

Japan's big electronics companies, faced with a shortage of assembly-line workers and competition from low-wage Asian nations, have turned to factory automation in a big way. Matsushita and Hitachi have similiar assembly line technology, Toshiba spokesmen say.

Toshiba invested $10 million between 1975 and 1982 to automate its Fukaya television factory and spent $20 million on factory automation research in 1981 and 1982. About 200 robots are backed up by battalions of other sophisticated machines in Toshiba's 29 factories in Japan.

At Nagoya, midway between Tokyo and Osaka, an even more radical automation drive was conducted at Toshiba's electric fan plant, where 64 assembly line workers were employed before a FAPS system took over.

Here, Nanbu said, Toshiba learned by experience — setting up a line where fans were assembled, tested and boxed, all by machines. The most difficult task was designing a wiring robot which "works as the human hand works," he said.

That wiring robot, which costs about $48,000, has two interconnecting arms and a computer-linked camera which "sees." One of the robot's arms picks up the cable and mounts it in position while another arm solders it in place.

The result: 10 workers oversee the machines and computers which make 24 different types of fans, while production capacity per month has tripled and the profit margin has doubled, Nanbu said.

Honduras has refugee problem

JACALEAPA, Honduras (AP) — Honduras, a haven for Central Americans fleeing violence and civil war, now has a refugee problem of its own.

Residents of the border area with Nicaragua where two American reporters were killed last week have fled to safer areas of the country. The government says the journalists were killed by an anti-tank mine, part of an increasing incidence of cross-border attacks.

"The first ones who left were the rich people," said Horacio Cali, a 30-year-old worker who fled with his wife and six children to this stark village from the border town of Las Trojes.

"Now it's messed up even more there," he said. "Everybody's left."

Honduras has been relatively peaceful despite the recent turbulence in the neighboring countries of Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua. It has been a refuge for 800 Guatemalans, 32,000 Salvadorans and 36,000 Nicaraguans helped by the Office of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, which provides statistics periodically on their numbers.

U.S. EMBASSY OFFICIALS tracking the refugee situation said Hondurans began to leave the tense border area that runs from the towns of Cifuentes to Las Trojes two months ago. They said the pace has accelerated in the past two weeks.

Dial Torgerson of The Los Angeles Times and free-lance photographer Richard Cross were killed on the dirt road between the two border towns. The military says Nicaraguans started attacking the road, which parallels the border, at the end of May.

An unofficial estimate says there now are about 10,000 displaced people in Honduras, from the Cifuentes-Las Trojes area and following an exodus earlier this year from the border town of San Marcos de Colon, to the southwest.

The government has not established a defined policy to help them. The Honduran Red Cross, the Roman Catholic relief agency Caritas and other international organizations offer limited help and services.

The Red Cross in the nearby city of Danli said it is trying to arrange transportation to get 400 more Hondurans — apparently the last there — safely out of Las Trojes. Cifuentes already is a ghost town.

VLADIMIR GEROMINI, Red Cross coordinator in this town 45 miles east of the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa, said most of the displaced Honduran citizens have relatives elsewhere in the country who help them out.

He also said that, unlike the refugees from Nicaragua, El Salvador or Guatemala, the Hondurans are able to work. Immigration regulations prohibit the others from working.

Cali said that he has not had any trouble finding agricultural odd jobs since coming here a month ago, but they pay less than half as much as the five lempiras — $2.50 — he earned each day at a brick factory in Las Trojes.

Experimental growth hormone program helps teen-ager tell tall tale

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Seven years, hundreds of injections, dozens of round-trips from Shreveport to St. Louis and 25 inches later, David Lawrence leads what most people would call a typical teen-age life.

He could have lived his life standing only 3 feet 5 inches tall, with all the inherent problems that accompany hypopituitary dwarfism.

But he participated in an experimental growth hormone program and achieved unimagined success.

The story began 12 years ago. From age 6 to 11, David did not grow even a fraction of an inch. His parents, David Sr. and Diane Lawrence, had been worried about their son's lack of growth, but they were reassured by their family physician that he was a slow grower and would grow in spurts. Not being "doctor hoppers," the Lawrences said, they accepted the medical opinion.

When David showed no growth by age 10, they decided to do something. They learned about a research program at LSU Medical Center. Extensive testing indicated that David possessed somatropin, the chemical which causes the body to grow, but he did not have growth hormones produced by the pituitary gland. These hormones act as a catalyst to stimulate somatropin to cause growth.

LUCKILY FOR DAVID, his condition did not include any of the other maladies which can accompany hypopituitary dwarfism — leukemia, kidney problems or diabetes, for example. And David's body was perfectly shaped.

Because of the absence of such problems, he was accepted into the St. Louis program to take growth hormones. Since the program was still experimental, the Lawrences had to assume liability in case negative effects occurred. They were willing to risk that chance, Mrs. Lawrence said, and by that time David was highly sensitive about his predicament.

Growth hormones for David and others like him come from the pituitary glands of deceased organ donors at research centers. According to Lawrence, it takes 1½ to 2 glands to produce enough hormones for three to seven shots, depending on needed strength for the patient.

Youngsters in the program, at that time, were allowed to remain until they reached age 18 or a height of 5 feet. Too many others needed the hormones from scarce glands to permit patients to continue beyond that age or height.

Once, for eight months, when David was 15 and had reached the desired height, he was suspended from the program. But as soon as glands became available, he was put back on hormones because he was one of the truly phenomenal growth successes, his mother said.

INITIALLY, HE GREW 1 inch in four months and 3 inches in the first year. After the suspension, it took nearly eight months for the hormones to start him growing again.

Today he is 5 feet 6 inches tall and has the potential to grow another 2 inches. Because he is 18, his parents must now pay for the needed hormones. A three-week supply is $600.

Reagan may get commission

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, having trouble winning over Democrats to his program of military and economic aid for friendly regimes in Central America, seems to have hit on a tested and proven method for bringing in opposition support: a bipartisan commission.

Twice in his 2½ years in office, Reagan has turned to a special panel, made up of Republicans and Democrats, after striking out when trying to settle a problem on his own. And twice these presidential commissions have come through.

Now, Democrats are balking at going along not only with specific spending requests, but are also questioning the overall thrust of his policy in Central America. So, Reagan is giving serious consideration to appointing another bipartisan commission, one that would be responsible for studying the direction U.S. foreign policy should take in that troubled region.

Some Democrats feel Reagan's requests for money have put them in a politically dangerous position. They fear that failure to support him will leave them open to attack if left-wing guerrillas, aided, according to Reagan, by Nicaragua, Cuba and the Soviet Union, continue to make advances. But these Democrats are also feeling pressure from party leaders and constituents to fight Reagan's efforts to greatly increase aid to El Salvador.

SO FAR THIS year, Reagan has asked Congress for $136 million in military aid for El Salvador and has gotten $56 million. Overall, he has asked for $392 million in all forms of economic and military assistance. Congress has approved $264 million, balking all the way.

From the debate and the continuing problems he has had winning congressional support, it is clear that Reagan has been unable to develop the bipartisan consensus he says he wants in the area of foreign policy.

He said at his news conference last week that following his speech to Congress last spring on Central America, "there was a decided shift in favor of our position."

But, he said, "there has been a constant drumbeat ever since. I made one speech; but then the drumbeat ever since to the people is somehow denigrating our position there and indicating that there's something wrong in that position."

Enter the bipartisan commission.

WHEN THE president failed to win support for his early plan to bail out the Social Security system from its anticipated shortfall, the political outcry forced him into a quick retreat. He hit on a bipartisan commission, with some of its members named by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill of Massachusetts. The panel, after passing a deadline or two, hit on a plan acceptable to Democrats and Republicans.

When the president first proposed hiding 100 MX missiles in the plains of Wyoming, the ensuing criticism from the West, Reagan's original political base, forced him once again to turn to a special commission. It, too, hit on a solution that enabled him to win the congressional support he needs to keep the MX alive.

Court's ruling removes execution 'roadblock'

AUSTIN (AP) — A U.S. Supreme Court ruling cleared the way for quicker handling of death row inmates' appeals, but no one involved in the process is predicting a sudden parade to the Texas death chamber.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said the Wednesday ruling "removes one more roadblock" to executions, and provides a "new tool" for prosecutors. However, the state's top law enforcement officer foresees no "major leap forward" in executions.

The decision could mean the death of Thomas Barefoot within 45 days, according to a Bell County prosecutor. Barefoot's case was chosen by the high court as a test case on the handling of death row appeals, which can postpone execution dates for years.

None of the 172 people under death sentences in Texas have execution dates, according to Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Rick Hartley. But Bell County District Attorney Cappy Eads said he'll move swiftly to get Barefoot back to Belton to have a death date set.

That date probably will be within 45 days, he said.

"We've waited years," said the prosecutor.

Barefoot had been sentenced to die for the Aug. 7, 1978, shooting death of police officer Carl Levin, 31, who had been investigating a fire at a night club in the town of Harker Heights, near the central Texas city of Killeen.

Attorney General Jim Mattox

The Supreme Court stayed the execution 12 hours before Barefoot was scheduled to die Jan. 25, deciding to use the case to look at the handling of emergency appeals.

The court ruled death row inmates are not entitled to stays of executions in all cases in which appeals are pending. If a federal court does not determine the appeal raises good points, the execution can be carried out on schedule, the 6-3 decision said.

Court rules wife shares in estate's increased value

AUSTIN (AP) — A wife is entitled to a portion of the increase in value of her husband's business, even if he started the business before the marriage, the Texas Supreme Court has ruled.

In a 5-4 decision Wednesday, the court ruled in favor of Burlene Jensen in a 1980 divorce case. Mrs. Jensen tried to claim part of the huge jump in worth of a printing business acquired by Robert Jensen prior to their 1975 marriage.

Jensen, former president of the Dallas Times Herald, prevailed at the divorce trial. But the Tyler Court of Appeals reversed the decision, saying Mrs. Jensen was entitled to a portion of the increased worth of the business.

The Supreme Court affirmed the Tyler court's decision to send the case back to the trial level for redistribution of the money.

Inmates react to court's ruling

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — While inmates on Texas' death row outwardly were concerned with baseball's All-Star game, inwardly they were occupied with a U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing speedier handling of their appeals, a condemned man said.

"Outwardly there will be a lot of concern about the outcome of the All-Star game tonight," Billy Hughes said Wednesday, "but inwardly there will be a lot of letters going out to attorneys."

Hughes, 31, was condemned after his conviction in the slaying of a state trooper.

Prosecutors, defense attorneys and inmates alike agreed that Wednesday's high court decision will mean more executions this year in the state.

"It's really going to affect a lot of cases here — to the point of finality in some cases," said Ronald Clark O'Bryan, who came within days of execution last October for killing his son with cyanide-laced Halloween candy.

Hughes and O'Bryan feared as many as three people would be put to death in Texas in 1983.

Hughes said he was disappointed if the ruling would mean he could be put to death "just like a dog."

"As long as I can stay alive there's hope," Hughes said.

O'Bryan said he had hoped for a high court ruling which would have required inmates to go through courts in specific order to win appeals.

Asked about the mood of the prisoners, O'Bryan replied, "It's about the same as it's been."

Another condemned man at the Ellis Unit near Huntsville said he hoped he would be the first to be executed.

Anthony Williams, 23, sentenced to die for raping and killing a 13-year-old girl, said he would be dropping his appeal next month and hoped for a September or October execution date.

"I hope I'm the first one," he said, when asked if he was concerned about the expedited appeals process. "I'm tired of waiting. I'm ready to die."

Representative reveals topics of conference

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — As he prepared to attend the 23rd annual Mexico-U.S. Interparliamentary Conference in Puebla, Mexico, which begins today, Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, said that "mutual trade issues" would be discussed as well as problems with the fishing industry.

He is chairman of the U.S. delegation.

Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid will attend one of the two plenary sessions of the conference, said De la Garza.

Asked Wednesday if President Reagan would send a message, one White House press aide said he thought the president would do so.

"I am anxious to continue the dialogue that proceeds from year to year with our Mexican counterparts," said De la Garza. "Always I look foward to these yearly meetings to renew friendships with Mexican legislators. These conferences represent a real working rapport on matters of mutual concern.

"This year, I have elected to sit on the Conference's Economic Affairs Committee. With members of the Mexican legislature, I will be discussing mutual trade issues and frontier questions, programs for economic recovery, and maritime issues including the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference and fishing industry questions."

Samantha Smith packs bags of promotional gifts at her home in Manchester, Maine for her trip to the Soviet Union. The eleven-year-old will travel with her parents Thursday for a two-week trip to Russia at the invitation of Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov.

Samantha readies for Soviet visit

MANCHESTER, Maine (AP) — Packing T-shirts, calendars, tote bags and good wishes from the State Department, 11-year-old Samantha Smith prepared for a trip to the Soviet Union, two months after Soviet leader Yuri Andropov invited her.

The Manchester girl was to leave today for Montreal, where she and her family will board an Aeroflot jet to Moscow for a two-week trip.

Earlier this year, Samantha wrote to Andropov asking why the Soviet Union wants to conquer the world. She received a personal reply from Andropov, released by the State Department on April 25, saying that the Soviets want peace and inviting Samantha and her parents to tour his country.

Samantha received "hundreds and hundreds of letters," said her father, Arthur Smith. Some have been appeals from Russian emigres for exit visas for family members or for other kinds of help.

"At this point we're unsure what (to) do with these appeals because Samantha's position as a guest is something we have to consider," Smith said.

The State Department's only comment was, "We hope she has a good trip," said spokeswoman Susan Pittman.

Reporters from all over the world — including the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, France and Britain — have interviewed Samantha, and she has appeared in national magazines and television in the United States and other countries.

Samantha "doesn't have detailed, profound apprehensions about the trip," said her father. "At the same time, she has nothing to measure it against. But it's certainly more of an adventure to her than going to grandma's."

The family is bringing mementos from Maine — tote bags, college T-shirts, calendars, stickers, and other promotional odds and ends — for its Soviet hosts.

"God only knows what the ramifications will be for promoting the state of Maine," said Smith, an English instructor at the University of Maine.

The family's daily itinerary has not been set yet, but Smith said they suggested places they would like to see, based on suggestions from friends who have toured the Soviet Union.

U.S. special envoy leaves for El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard Stone, U.S. special envoy to Central America, was beginning a return trip to that region today, but officials declined to confirm reports he would meet with representatives of Salvadoran guerrillas.

The first scheduled stop on Stone's trip is El Salvador. U.S. officials have not ruled out a meeting between Stone and representatives of the leftist guerrillas fighting the Salvadoran government. They say such a meeting would only be part of efforts to set up talks between the rebels and Salvadoran officials about leftist participation in upcoming elections.

Stone made a 10-nation tour of the region last month.

The State Department, meanwhile, says there are between 8,000 and 10,000 rebels in various groups fighting Nicaragua's leftist government.

The number of anti-government fighters, known as contras, has been previously estimated at between 5,000 and 7,000.

Even in a buyers' market, it's frequently less expensive to add a room or other improvements to your present home. Maybe you should talk to Susi Tucker about a Home Improvement Loan.

Lightning kindles fires in six states

By The Associated Press

Range fires fanned by high winds charred more than 43,000 acres in six Western states, injuring 11 people, and seven of the blazes were burning out of control today in Idaho, authorities said.

The fires, many started by lightning and whipped by 50 mph gusts from an electrical storm, hit tinder-dry timber and range land in Utah, Oregon, Montana, Nevada and Washington.

The largest blaze in Idaho still uncontrolled today was a 10,000-acre fire at Mountain Home, said Chuck Bate, state fire management officer. In the federal Bureau of Land Management's Boise district, six fires were burning out of control, one in the foothills above Idaho's capital.

BLM workers also battled two separate 5,000-acre fires near Mountain Home and a fourth blaze that covered 3,500 acres. None threatened homes or other buildings and no injuries were reported.

Firefighters battled all day Wednesday against two inaccessible fires near Boise, one of 600 acres at Bogus Basin ski area and a second near Table Rock that covered about 200 acres. Both were contained by Wednesday night.

The lightning storm that passed through Tuesday night caused about 30 fires around the state, Bate said.

Violent thunderstorms pounded Montana, setting off two range fires that were burning today, and a tornado hit a remote mountainous area in the northwestern part of the state.

A fire on timberland about 20 miles northeast of Big Timber, Mont., burned about 350 acres by early today, said Mary Kay Daily, a dispatcher at the Sweetgrass County sheriff's office.

Another fire swept across range land nothwest of Columbus, Mont., late Wednesday. Vicky Lukkes, Stillwater County sheriff's dispatcher, said volunteer fire departments from four rural communities were on the scene with dozens of farmers and townspeople.

Lightning sent flames licking through 12,000 acres of dry grassland near Springfield, Utah, on Tuesday and the fire was scorching grass and pinion juniper today near the Dugway Proving Ground in western Utah, said Intermountain Fire Agency spokesman Frank Williams.

Lightning was also blamed for two fires on West Mountain, Utah, where flames had claimed about 440 acres Wednesday night.

In another Utah blaze, 6,000 acres ignited in high winds after two men tried to burn an anthill near Grantsville. About 200 firefighters battled the blaze before it was extinguished Wednesday. No charges were filed against the two men.

No homes were destroyed in any of the Utah fires, but 11 people were reported to have suffered minor burns and smoke inhalation. Smoke and debris were blamed for several traffic accidents, authorities said.

Six homes were temporarily threatened south of Carson City, Nev., by a brush fire that consumed more than 300 acres amid winds gusting to 40 mph, said Debbie Fisher, dispatcher for the BLM. Ms. Fisher said the fire was extinguished Wednesday evening.

"The biggest problem was the dry grass in the area," she said. "With the amount of winter rain, thers

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, July 8, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The late Nelson Rockefeller, former Vice President and Governor of New York, was born on this date, as was his father industrialist-philanthropist John D. Rockefeller. Also sharing your birthday: distinguished theater critic Walter Kerr and ABC News & Sports chief Roone Arledge. Some fears you have harbored in recent years will be washed away by a happy turn of events. Your selfconfidence returns as your bankroll grows. New friends help you mature as a person. Be honest with romantic partner. This could be your last chance to attain certain goals. Those who are "too busy" for their families will lose out.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your concern over a child is natural, but everything should turn out fine. A scholarship could still come through for a deserving student. Travel leads to a career change or new job.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Tackle the big problems first. Results will be quick if you concentrate on finding practical solutions. A home improvement project cheers both you and mate. Your willpower is a strong asset.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Phone calls save you an expensive and time consuming trip. Stop looking to others for satisfaction. You can find it within yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Resolve a family dilemma by being honest about a mistake you made in haste. Career concerns dominate your thoughts. Make a vacation decision before you miss out on the reservations you want.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A cancelled date is disappointing. Do not give up! It may work to your advantage. You have a lot to gain by accepting a social invitation. Deal promptly with financial problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Relatives come to visit. Set some ground rules for their stay. An old friend wants to play matchmaker. You receive some great news regarding a creative project. Keep expenses down.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Maintain a calm, composed exterior when around those who try to involve you in arguments. Bankers should be most cooperative. Applications are viewed with favor. Avoid all forms of gambling.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Useful agreements can be reached today. Do not press those in authority. Singles find this a highly romantic day. Your friends will be helpful if you ask their advice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Pleasure trips are favored. You need to consult colleagues who have an interest in jointly-held funds. Keep everything out in the open. This is no time to get involved in new transactions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Check bills carefully to determine whether you have been overcharged. All forms of creative and artistic work are favored. A talk with mate or employer will prove productive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Higher-ups are demanding. Tackle an assignment or project that requires real concentration. A last-minute change in plans may find you alone this evening. Welcome the chance to read.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Greater personal effort is needed in business. A casual approach serves you better than a formal one. Enliven cut-and-dried procedures. Romance should be especially glamorous and exciting tonight.

Purcell stars in NBC show

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sarah Purcell says she liked the script of "Emergency Room" because the story came down strongly on the side of positive moral values.

"It didn't leave you feeling there was no answer, no way to go," says Miss Purcell, who also stars in NBC's "Real People."

"It's frustrating when you see a film with so many shades of gray. This is black and white," the actress says. "People haven't changed. Our morals haven't changed. I think people are getting confused because they don't see strong interpretations of moral fiber any more.

"I hope people are bringing up their children to believe in a good moral code."

"Emergency Room" is the first of four films to be made for syndication to independent stations by Comworld and Procter & Gamble Productions. The series is called Prime Time Showcase.

The two-hour movie, which also stars LeVar Burton, Gary Frank, Conchata Ferrel, Paul Stewart and Gary Lockwood, will be broadcast across the country at various times during July.

The next movie in the series will be shown in August. It is "Desperate Intruder," which stars Meg Foster, Nick Mancuso and Claude Akins.

"We've achieved prime-time quality by shooting these on tape and utilizing all the latest technology," says Alan Sloan, Comworld's president. "We were able to do them at a considerable savings."

The first two movies were made for about $1 million, compared to the $3 million to $5 million required to produce a two-hour movie on film.

"Emergency Room" takes place during three busy days in the life of Dr. Connie Sullivan, played by Miss Purcell, who is the head of a hospital emergency room. Joe A. Viola wrote the screenplay and Lee H. Katzin directed the movie.

Miss Purcell's father is a doctor, and she says she spent hours on the telephone with him, going over the script and discussing how a real doctor would react.

She found time for her role between assignments for "Real People," which is returning to NBC in the fall for its fifth season. George Schlatter is the producer.

One of her assignments for the new year required her to sky dive over the desert near Los Angeles.

2 ◇	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

There are hands that call for an aggressive defense. But when it seems that declarer has little to spare in the way of high cards, that usually is the time to pull in your horns and let declarer fend for himself.

From the bidding, we wouldn't blame you for thinking that North was a visitor from another planet. He had already promised a hand of 10 points or better with his redouble so, despite the fact that most of his points were in his partner's suits, a simple preference to two hearts would have been adequate.

West led the king of spades and East started an echo with the seven. West continued with the ace of spades, and declarer wasted no time in making the hand via a dummy reversal.

He ruffed the second spade, cashed the king of hearts and crossed to dummy with a trump to the queen. He ruffed another spade, went to the table with the jack of diamonds and ruffed dummy's last spade with his last trump. The king of diamonds was the entry to the board to draw the last trump. One of dummy's clubs went on a diamond, and declarer ended up losing only two club tricks in addition to the ace of spades.

Declarer should have given West half his winnings. It should have been obvious to that defender that declarer had no more spades. Also, there was no place for declarer to get rid of any losers in his own hand — dummy had no long suit. At trick two, therefore, West should simply have shifted to a trump and left declarer to his own devices. Declarer would have been an entry short for his dummy reversal, and he would have ended up going down one trick.

Water solution

Midland and Odessa have a reputation in the state for not getting along. The reputation's mostly deserved.

After all, the cities fought over what's now known as Midland Regional Airport, but services both communities. Then they fought over the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and are still fighting. And in recent years they've fought over medical facilities and equipment and over school district boundaries. In fact, just about every time an opportunity has arisen for the two cities to bury the ax and work together on a mutually beneficial project, they've found a way to fight about it.

A good example is Monahans Draw. Odessa dumps its wastewater into the draw which runs into Midland County. That's where the problem comes in — literally. Midland city and county officials have been complaining for a number of years — and the county has been threatening to sue Odessa — because the officials say the treated effluent is contaminating water wells in the county and seeping into fresh water zones underground.

The battle could be solved temporarily today at a Texas Department of Water Resources hearing in Odessa when Odessa attempts to gain permission to continue releasing wastewater into the draw. There's no question the situation presents a dilemma. Odessa will continue to need to discharge the effluent in increasing amounts until an alternative solution is found. Midland and Midland County still don't want the effluent in its current form.

With water being the precious commodity it is in West Texas, it's a shame the two communities are letting all this liquid escape down the draw. In other parts of the state and elsewhere in the nation, water reclamation projects are helping to conserve this valuable resource. We believe Midland, Odessa, Midland County and Ector County should explore the feasibility of constructing a water reclamation plant between the two cities. After all, the city of Midland is spending nearly $20 million just to pump its effluent to a location 15 miles southeast of the city and a similar solution probably will be proposed to Odessa.

Granted, getting the four entities to work together smoothly would not be easy and a water reclamation facility would not be inexpensive, but it would be a long-term answer to one of the cities' most limiting and expensive aspects.

Who knows, Midland and Odessa might even become statewide examples of how to get along.

Scandal's dark stain

To a list that includes Billygate, EPA-gate, and Debategate, we nominate our own proposal for the scandals-ending-in-gate museum: Draft-Registrationgate.

Last year, while roughly nine of 10 young men were busy filling out cards in the post office to comply with the federal draft registration requirement, several hundred thousand weren't. The scam is this: Those young men remained eligible for up to $4,000 a year in various student aid programs. Last Wednesday, the Supreme Court issued a temporary "enough is enough," ruling that for the time being, a federal law that cuts the dodgers off from their federal slush fund can stand.

Still, Draft-Registrationgate is far from dead. In striking down a Minnesota judge's injunction against the law, the court permitted the government to proceed with enforcement this fall. Nevertheless, it must still make its own ruling on the issue of constitutionality, and could decide to reverse its reversal. Now that would be a scandal — Supreme-Courtgate. We're confident, however, that the court will rule there is no constitutional right to a subsidized education for felons.

Even a correct court ruling will not close the books on this ugly episode, though. Because a number of schools, including the likes of Harvard, Dartmouth, Yale, and Princeton, have promised to make up with their own subsidies whatever the federal government takes away. Firm believers in private education, we defend to the death their right to take this action. But we're crossing our fingers that before they sign their next check, alumni from such schools will ask a question or two. What did the president of Princeton know, and when did he know it? Only the full and complete truth will remove the dark stain of Draft-Registrationgate.

Another View:

Made in Moscow

The Warsaw Pact pitch for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to lay down its arms sounds like it was made in Moscow. Which it was.

The call emerged from a one-day gathering of the communist clan in Moscow. It was attended by leaders of the seven nations which make up the Warsaw Pact — the Soviet Union, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Romania and Poland.

As expected, with Soviet boss Yuri V. Andropov leading the way, the communist leaders called for a U.S.-Soviet nuclear weapons freeze and urged European countries to block the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

A statement issued at the conclusion of the meeting urged the European nations "to do everything possible to divert the nuclear menace from Europe, to turn Europe into a continent of peace free from nuclear weapons, both medium-range and tactical."

It is significant to note that the Warsaw Pact leaders also said they "will in no case allow military superiority to be achieved over them." Loosely translated, this means that the Soviet Union and its followers will continue their arms buildup no matter what the Western alliance does.

Typical of the rhetoric employed by the communists, the statement accused President Ronald Reagan's administration of "whipping up the arms race" while claiming to be "striving for flexibility."

There would be no arms race if the Soviets hadn't started it. As for a nuclear weapons freeze, this would suit the Warsaw Pact just fine. It would freeze the communists into a position of superiority. As far as NATO's interests are concerned, any freeze must be preceded by a meltdown in Moscow.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Expose uncovers tale of kindness

WASHINGTON — Investigative reporting can be rewarding in surprising ways sometimes. This is the story of an expose that blew up in my face — and turned into a dramatic story of human kindness and a close brush with death.

Jack Anderson

It began with a dry-as-dust entry in the files of Thunderbird Airways: an unpaid, $8,000 bill to Rep. Gillis Long, D-La., leader of the House Democratic Caucus. According to internal company documents, the bill was for a chartered flight on March 30, 1981, and the debt was recently written off. The amount was not reported in Long's financial records.

Thunderbird is a subsidiary of Lucey Products, an oil pipe company owned by Norman Johnson, a millionaire New Orleans socialite who was sentenced to prison recently for corporate tax evasion. Johnson had made contributions to Long's election campaigns and in 1980 threw a fund-raising party for him. Long acknowledges that he and Johnson are close friends.

Suspecting the worst — an $8,000 junket by a powerful congressman paid for by a tax cheater — my reporters Indy Badhwar and Elena Friedman checked into the unpaid bill. Here's what they learned:

Long had triple-bypass heart surgery in February 1981. In March, his condition deteriorated sharply and he was rushed to Bethesda Naval Hospital with congestive heart failure. Doctors predicted he wouldn't last the night.

The congressman's personal physician, Dr. Arnold Lupin, flew to Washington from New Orleans. Though told by the Navy doctors that "the congressman should make his peace with the Lord," Lupin was sure he could save Long.

"I refused to accept the medical opinion of doctors at Bethesda that Long's life was over," Lupin said. But he insisted that the patient be flown to New Orleans, where he could get better care. Long's administrative aide, Carson Killen, explained: "The quality of care at Bethesda is less than desirable."

Killen tried desperately to get a military plane to take Long to New Orleans. None was available. Finally, at 3 a.m. on March 30, "with the congressman's life at stake," Killen called Norman Johnson for help.

Johnson arranged for a Thunderbird executive plane — outfitted as an ambulance — to fly from Houston to Washington, pick up Long and Lupin and fly them to New Orleans. With this assist from Johnson, Lupin saved Long's life.

The cost of equipping the plane and the trip itself came to $8,000. Thunderbird billed Long. Lupin advised his patient to send the bill to Blue Cross, and he did. But Blue Cross refused to pay. It remains a disputed bill, and Long said he's planning to sue Blue Cross.

Long said his constituents knew he had been hospitalized at the time. But until they read this, they will never know how close he came to dying.

SLOPPY SECURITY: A surprise audit of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta uncovered serious security problems in the computer section, where sensitive medical information is often stored. One problem is that too many employees are allowed into the computer areas, and terminals are left unlocked and unattended. The auditors also found that fire safety measures were inadequate.

What makes the computerized information sensitive is that it includes names and addresses on medical records, trade secrets or proprietary data and details of medical products under investigation.

Though insisting that the auditors made the situation seem worse than it is, the centers' administration conceded that there are security weaknesses. A spokesman told my reporter Bill Bartman that the centers have already begun "tightening up security" in response to the auditors' recommendations.

The security lapse was blamed on continuing changes in requirements for the centers' computer systems; the manual is being revised.

X-CAR EXPOSE: Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., has been investigating for months the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's foot-dragging on the decision to recall 240,000 1980 General Motors X-Cars. In a recent column I detailed the 18-month chronology of death and delay involving rear-brake lockups on that year's X-Cars.

Early this year, Wirth asked the General Accounting Office to examine the safety agency's procedures during the months that the defective brakes were suspected as the cause of several fatal accidents. He particularly wanted to know if agency officials exerted any pressure on safety engineers to go easy on GM. The GAO investigation is nearly complete. It will be highly critical of NHTSA.

SATELLITES' SPLIT: North Korea and Bulgaria have a healthy mutual contempt, according to a top-secret CIA report.

"The undercurrent of hostility that distinguishes Korean relations with Bulgaria is only thinly veiled," the CIA states. "In the North Korean view, Sofia is guilty of an unseemly subservience to Moscow that threatens the attempts of other states to develop their own independent brands of communism. The Bulgarians, in turn, accuse Pyongyang of contributing to disunity in the communist camp. The differences between the two states are long-standing."

GEORGE F. WILL

Stubborn elderly giving bill life

WASHINGTON — Sen. David Boren is, in one particular, the sort of fellow Julius Caesar wanted to have around him. Boren, an ample Oklahoma Democrat, certainly does not have that lean and hungry look that Caesar found so ominous in Cassius. However, Sen. Jack Danforth (R-Mo.) is decidedly lean.

George F. Will

Danforth and Boren, who came to the Senate in 1976 and 1978 respectively, share an idea that deserves more serious consideration than it is apt to receive. The reason it probably will not even come to a vote is (to simplify a bit) Rep. Claude Pepper, the 82-year-old Florida Democrat who first came to Capitol Hill as a 36-year-old senator in 1937, when Danforth was four months old and Boren's birth was still four years off.

The Danforth-Boren idea is to change the indexation of government benefits for four years. Instead of indexing spending to the Consumer Price Index, the Danforth-Boren proposal would index it to the CPI minus three. If inflation were, say, six percent, indexed spending would increase three percent. If the CPI rose three percent or less, benefits would not be increased.

Assume, as the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) does, that the CPI increases in fiscal years 1985-88 will be 4.8, 4.5, 4.5 and 4.4. The savings (in billions) from Danforth-Boren would be $4.7, $12.4, $20.2 and $28.4, for a four-year saving of $65.7 billion.

Now, assume that the price of enacting Danforth-Boren — a price exacted by congressional liberals — would be a similar modification of indexation of income taxes. The revenue increase (in billions) would be $3.6, $10.3, $18 and $27.6, for a total of $59.5 billion. The four-year reduction of the deficit — of government borrowing — as a result of increased revenues and decreased outlays would be $125.2 billion.

But that is not all. The savings (based on OMB interest-rate projections) as a result of reduced borrowing would be $14.1 billion, bringing to $139.3 billion the deficit reduction during the four years.

Clearly the government can not — as a matter of arithmetic, and of politics — come close to balancing its budget with more defense cuts or with nickle-and-dime cuts of domestic programs, cuts that enrage intense, compact, articulate interest groups, producing an intolerably high ratio of political cost to budgetary gain. The Danforth-Boren proposal would involve a big sum, but would get it from marginal changes affecting almost everyone.

Why, then, is the proposal not being publicly embraced by the many legislators who say, privately, that something like it is imperative? Because, of the $65.7 billion in reduced outlays, 80 percent would come from Social Security.

A ritual of modern government involves saving Social Security from insolvency. Every few years the government saves the system for at least a generation. In 1978 the government saved it until the year 2000. In 1983 it needed saving again, so the government, under the cover of the Greenspan Commission, saved the system until (you, there: quit laughing!) the middle of the next century.

Congress agreed to the mild austerities of the 1983 "rescue" only after solemn vows all around that there would be no other reduction in the value of Social Security entitlements. So any change in indexing, even a change as mild as that proposed by Danforth and Boren, would be branded a breach of faith. By whom? Well, for one, by Rep. Pepper, the Robert E. Lee of the army of the elderly. So everyone will go on pretending to believe that economic growth is going to eliminate three-digit deficits.

For the first time in American history, the number of persons 65 and older is larger than the number of teen-agers (those 13-19). Where have you gone, Ricky Nelson? And some gerontologists are making life-expectancy projections that are more optimistic than the assumptions incorporated in the actuarial tables on which public and private pension and medical plans rest, uneasily. The government may be underestimating by 4 million the number of Americans who will be 65 or older in the year 2000.

If Americans stubbornly insist on living past the point at which actuaries say Americans should die (another grim bulletin for government budgeters: we are on the edge of many scientific advances against degenerative diseases), the budget may hemorrhage. So if Americans, in their willful way, live longer than public-spirited, budget-minded citizens would, the case for something like the Danforth-Boren proposal will become compelling.

ART BUCHWALD

'Witch' teachers will merit?

Merit raises for teachers. It's a great idea on paper, but what guidelines do we use to give them out?

Art Buchwald

When I read about the idea, the name of "Terrible" Miss Cantor came to mind. "Terrible" Miss Cantor was, and still is, a household name in our home.

When our kids were going to public school in Washington, D.C., this is how the conversation seemed to go every night.

"Miss Cantor made me write over my whole English composition today because I had one mistake in it," my daughter would say tearfully.

"That's terrible," I would reply. "She must be a real ogre."

"She gives two hours of homework. I hate her."

"I'll bet she's one of those spinsters who just takes out her unhappy life on little kids," my wife would comment.

"I pulled a girl's hair and she made me stand in the clothes closet for two hours," my son would complain.

"Two hours?"

"Well, maybe an hour. The next time I did it she said I'd have to go to the principal's office."

"I can't believe they would allow a woman like that in the Washington school system. I have a good mind to go down there tomorrow morning and ask her how she would like to be put in the clothes closet."

My other daughter would add to the horror stories. "If Miss Cantor catches you whispering in class while she's giving a spelling lesson, she makes you write every word on the blackboard 10 times."

"Does she ever strike you?"

"No, but she carries a ruler in her hand, and she looks like she's going to. You know what she said the other day? She said if she were a nun in a Catholic school she could box our ears every time we didn't hand in a book report on time."

"I'm going to bring it up at the next PTA meeting."

"It won't do any good," my son would say. "Nancy Williams' father complained at the last meeting about Miss Cantor and the principal just laughed at him."

"Miss Cantor is a nut when it comes to grammar. She told us that we'll all wind up as criminals if we don't learn to write a decent sentence. Even when you start crying she doesn't care."

"I don't know any human being who isn't moved by a child's tears. This Miss Cantor is one for the books."

"You should see the homework she gave us tonight. I have to write a whole composition on George Washington."

"I'll help you," I would offer.

"Miss Cantor said parents are not allowed to help us with our homework, and if you do, she'll know it and won't accept the paper."

My son would then tell us, "She says if she isn't satisfied with our improvement we won't get promoted to the next grade."

"I have a good mind to take you out of that place. It sounds more like a prison than a school to me. Are your other teachers as cruel?"

"No, just Miss Cantor. She's a real witch."

My wife would just shake her head. "No wonder you kids don't like school."

Well, the years have passed and the kids have grown up. Whenever we get together for family gatherings the name of "Terrible" Miss Cantor still pops up. So much so that if Miss Cantor is still alive and teaching, I would nominate her right now for a merit raise. If we're going to reward teachers, one of the best guidelines would be to recognize those who inflicted mental pain and anguish on their students, rather than the ones whose names the kids will never remember.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, July 7, the 188th day of 1983. There are 177 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On July 7, 1846, the U.S. annexation of California was proclaimed when a flag was raised at Monterey following the surrender of the Mexican garrison.

On this date:

In 1865, four people were hanged after being named accomplices of John Wilkes Booth in the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln.

In 1898, the United States annexed Hawaii.

In 1913, Britain's House of Commons passed the Irish Home Rule Bill.

And in 1958, President Dwight Eisenhower signed the Alaska statehood bill.

Ten years ago: Iraq executed 23 people accused of having attempted to overthrow the government.

Shultz: No progress in Middle East talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz completed talks with Israeli leaders today and said his fast-paced Middle East mission has produced no progress toward a simultaneous withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon.

Syrian President Hafez Assad told Shultz in Damascus Wednesday that Syria absolutely rejects the Israeli-Lebanese troop-withdrawal pact and will not pull its troops out of Lebanon.

And a senior Israeli official told reporters in Jerusalem today that Israel, although it wants to make a partial withdrawal, is determined to keep its troops in Lebanon for years — keeping Damascus within artillery range — if Syria refuses to withdraw its troops.

"I wish I could report that I see a move toward simultaneous withdrawal but I can't," Shultz said after almost three hours conferring with Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Shultz said he had discussed a partial Israeli withdrawal both here and in Lebanon, and he gave a noncommittal response to a reporter's question about such a move.

"The United States has to look at long-range objectives and then judge any proposal in terms of its impact on those objectives," said Shultz, who is scheduled to return to Washington tonight after stopovers in Jordan and Egypt.

Shultz said he had found "great support for the idea of full withdrawal and for the security of northern Israel and Lebanese sovereignty. We will not give up in our pursuit of these goals."

The senior Israeli official emphasized that Israel's determination to stay in Lebanon unless the Syrians leave "should be brought home to the Syrians."

The official, who briefed reporters on condition he not be identified, said "the United States will understand we have to defend ourselves in the most effective manner. The United States will find it very difficult to argue with that."

Israel is considering a partial pullback of its Lebanon occupation force from the central mountains to more defensible lines in the south, in order to make Israeli troops less vulnerable to guerrilla ambushers.

But the Israeli official said the troops will not be withdrawn from Lebanon unless the Syrians leave too.

"We are going to stay within artillery range of Damascus, and we are not moving an inch," the official said. "What we are talking about is limited redeployment."

Some Israeli positions in east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley are only 20 miles from the Syrian capital, well within range of Israeli guns.

The official said Israel would hold Syria responsible if Palestinian guerrillas attack Israeli soldiers from behind Syrian lines in Lebanon.

PLO faction leader in Moscow to mend split in group

MOSCOW (AP) — A PLO faction leader, believed to be trying to heal a split within the guerrilla organization, has come to Moscow for talks with the Politburo's specialist on national liberation groups, a PLO spokesman said today.

Nayef Hawatmeh arrived Tuesday planned to meet with Boris N. Ponomarev, said the spokesman, who asked not to be named and who did not give other details.

Hawatmeh, the head of the pro-Moscow Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine likely was seeking Soviet help in solving problems of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Ponomarev, a non-voting member of the Politburo and head of the Communist Party Central Committee's international department, specializes in Soviet contacts with non-ruling Communists in other nations and with liberation groups like the PLO.

Earlier this week, a six-man PLO mediating team met for three days in Damascus, Syria, to seek ways to halt fighting between loyalists of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat and mutineers in his Fatah faction.

The committee also has been trying to mend relations between Arafat and the Syrians, who expelled him from Damascus and said he couldn't return until he agreed to demands.

state in brief

White will sign law creating new equal employment agency

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White will sign into law today a bill creating a new state agency to deal with unfair employment practices.

The bill, effective Sept. 1, was one of the last major actions of the recent special legislative session.

After Sept. 1 it will be against state law for an employer, an employment agency or a labor union to engage in discriminatory practices in employment placement or membership because of race, color, handicap, religion, sex, national origin nor age.

The state agency will take over from the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission the investigation of complaints of bias in hiring and promotion practices, including state and local government employees..

"This will speed things up," said Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, a House sponsor. "Complaining to the feds is very tedious. It takes too long, and it costs too much for the average state employee to pursue, especially if she or he has to hire an attorney."

'Mercy killing' jurors quizzed

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys said they would try to complete jury selection today in the murder trial of Billy Ray Clore, the Houston area man accused of killing his terminally ill father to put the man out of his misery.

In the second day of jury selection Wednesday, attorneys and District Judge Ted Poe qualified 55 jurors who said they would not be swayed by pretrial publicity of the case.

The prospective jurors today were undergoing further questioning on their thoughts about euthanisia.

Hansen said he hoped a jury could be seated and presentation of evidence could begin by Friday.

City's equipment still unused

HOUSTON (AP) — A city-owned $200,000 water-analyzing machine remains unused in a health department hallway after two years because city officials haven't found a room to accommodate it, a city councilman said.

Councilman Dale Gorczynski, speaking in a council meeting Wednesday, waved a sample of colored water before his colleagues and said city water had to be scrutinized by Harris County officials because none of the city's three water analysis instruments are in working order.

An assistant to Gorczynski said the councilman's water sample, taken from a north Houston neighborhood, contained iron and manganese, but in amounts within public health standards.

An unidentified spokesman for the city Public Works Department said that agency routinely makes water analysis for the city, and that if they find a public health hazard, then the health department steps in.

Court allows lawsuit

PARIS (AP) — An elderly woman who contends two Air Force doctors accidentally plunged a needle into her brain says the $1.5 million malpractice suit she filed could ensure her adopted daughter's care after her death.

Doctors were searching for the cause of Sibyl Harrison's now 21-year-old headache when the needle scratched her brain, the woman's suit says.

A Tyler federal district court had ruled Mrs. Harrison filed the suit after the statute of limitations expired, but the 5th U.S. Circuit of Appeals on Tuesday sent the suit back to the district level.

Henry Politz, a justice on the New Orleans court, said the statute of limitations does not begin in malpractice cases until a patient discovers "his injury or its cause."

The suit filed by Mrs. Harrison, 65, contends she has trouble talking, damage in one eye and little use of her left arm and hand because of the needle plunged into her brain 17 years ago.

New Mexico fears water's 'zero balance'

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico's water supply someday will be depleted if El Paso is given permission to drill 326 wells in southern Dona Ana County, some water experts say.

"It's like taking money out of a checking account faster than you put money in," says State Agriculture Secretary William Stephens. "Sooner or later you end up with a zero balance."

Attending a Wednesday "public information" meeting in Las Cruces were Stephens, Lt. Gov. Mike Runnels, New Mexico Attorney General Paul Bardacke and State Engineer Steve Reynolds.

El Paso filed a lawsuit in 1980 challenging the constitutionality of a New Mexico law banning the export of any of the state's underground water.

Federal District Judge Howard Bratton last January ruled the law unconstitutional, saying water is an article of commerce.

New Mexico contends that if El Paso were allowed to drill the wells, the water table in southern New Mexico would be depleted and the $100 million-a-year farming industry there eventually would be shut down completely or severely curtailed.

New Mexico also maintains that El Paso has access to plenty of water within Texas borders and that Texas water laws do not encourage water conservation as do New Mexico's laws.

Bardacke said that because the New Mexico Legislature drafted a new water law in its 1983 session, the water lawsuit, now on appeal to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver, no longer involves the constitutionality of the old law.

Bardacke said Bratton's opinion was "reasoned, studied, thoughtful and well-written. He is a knowledgable and competent jurist. However, I think his opinion was wrong."

However, the attorney general said he believes that by handing down his decision the day before the Legislature convened, Bratton "invited" New Mexico to develop a new water law.

The new law allows water to exported out of the state but under strict conditions, including ensuring that existing water rights are not impaired, that New Mexico's water supply is not threatened and that out-of-state use is not contrary to the conservation of water within the state.

Tom Bahr, director of the state Water Resources Research Institute, said the amount of water El Paso wants, 296,000 acre-feet, is more than 3,000 gallons per second.

"You would have to flush a toilet 19 billion times (to equal 296,000 acre-feet of water)," Bahr said. "If every man, woman and child in Las Cruces had their own toilet, they would have to flush them once a second for a year. And most of you would probably agree that that is the most appropriate way to give water to El Paso."

Houston mayor protests Bell's rate-hike proposal

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire was one of about 70 people who showed up at a public hearing to protest Southwestern Bell's rate-hike proposal, which would triple the basic residential phone rate here.

"We in city government are trying very hard to tighten our belts without asking for any tax increases," Mrs. Whitmire said. She said public utilities should "engage in some of the same belt-tightening in these very difficult economic times."

An official for the Texas Public Utility Commission said the agency may reject any rate hike for the telephone company.

"I can tell you this — 'zero' is one of the numbers we're considering," said Allen King, the PUC's general counsel.

Southwestern Bell filed for the increase two weeks ago because company officials say they need an additional $1.7 billion beginning next year due to regulatory changes and the forced breakup of the nationwide Bell system.

"Southwestern Bell urgently needs this increase to assure that we will be a viable stand-alone company able to provide quality telephone service in Texas when we spin off from AT&T," said Paul Roth.

Norris Eugene Moss, 36, of Houston, center, is flanked by Houston arson investigators, John Thornton, left, and Bill Sammons, as he is brought to the Milam County Jail in Cameron. Moss is charged with one count of arson in connection with seven church fires which have been set since Monday.

Suspect in church firebombings claims to be both Jesus, Caesar

CAMERON (AP) — A 34-year-old car salesman, arrested after a string of firebombings at seven central Texas churches and a Masonic hall, claimed to be Jesus Christ and Julius Caesar, investigators say.

Norris Eugene Moss, of Houston, was taken into custody Wednesday on an arrest warrant issued by Milam County Justice of the Peace Doris Allen.

His arrest by Houston arson investigators came after residents in the town of Gause, whose town was hit by four church firebombings Monday, tipped Milam County officials, authorities said.

Moss was transferred to the Milam County jail Wednesday night, pending the filing of formal charges today, Ms. Allen said.

Seven small churches and a Masonic hall used as a church were set on fire Monday and Tuesday by Molotov cocktails — bottles filled with gasoline and plugged with a rag or paper wick.

Milam County Sheriff Leroy Broadus said he suspects the same firebug was involved in all the cases.

In the latest fire, Robertson County investigators on Wednesday found that two bottles had been filled with gasoline and ignited at Mt. Zion Baptist Church, said Deputy Bobby Mathis.

When Moss was taken into custody, "he made statements to us that he was Jesus Christ, that he was Caesar and that he wanted to talk with the president of the United States and the pope," Houston arson investigator Roland Morgan said.

Moss voluntarily went with officers Wednesday to the Houston police department after he had been questioned by arson officials at the car dealership where he worked, said Paul Gray, a Houston-based arson investigator for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Broadus declined to reveal what authorities consider the motive for the firebombings.

Congregations of the churches are mostly black, but authorities earlier said they did not believe the attacks were racially motivated.

Moss, who is black, used to attend one of the churches that was firebombed, according to its pastor.

American League finds recipe for victory

Lynn hits first All-Star game grand slam, named MVP

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — There was nothing to it, really.

You start with a couple of timely hits here and a couple of helpful errors there. Mix in a generous supply of long ball, courtesy of Jim Rice and Fred Lynn, and you have the recipe for the first American League All-Star victory in a dozen years.

It wasn't just a victory. It was a 13-3 laugher for the downtrodden Americans. They did it so easily, you had to wonder why it took them so long to figure out the formula.

The AL was beginning to develop a giant-sized inferiority complex about these midseason conventions of baseball's best players. They had, after all, lost 11 in a row and 19 of 20. They were trailing 34-18-1 in a series they once led 12-4. That sort of thing can get to you.

So when they suddenly found themselves leading the Nationals by a comfy 9-1 score after three innings Wednesday night, they dared to begin thinking about actually winning an All-Star game.

THEY HAD scored a record seven runs in the third inning, the first on a line-drive homer by Rice, the last four on the first grand slam in All-Star history by Lynn. And in the AL dugout, a sombre place for so many years, they actually started celebrating.

"A whole lot of yelling and that stuff was going on," said winning pitcher Dave Stieb, who threw three hitless innings at the Nationals. "Lynn's grand slam did it. I thought we had a good shot after that."

Lynn, who had been on the losing side in this game eight times, had to agree. As he rounded first base, he allowed himself an uncharacteristic display of emotion, an arm thrust in the air.

"Everything just came out," he said. "At that point, I thought we might win."

On the bench, even Harvey Kuenn, the low-key Milwaukee Brewer manager who was in charge of the AL stars, allowed himself a bit of a smile.

"I was elated," said Kuenn, "and just very glad it wasn't against Milwaukee."

THE GAME had not started very promisingly for the AL. Steve Sax, leading off for the Nationals, tapped back to Stieb, who fielded the ball and threw it about 10 feet over Rod Carew's head at first base.

"I didn't have a good grip on the ball," Stieb said. "I kind of launched it."

Sax stole second and then Tim Raines bounced to Stieb. This time, the pitcher's throw was on-target, but Carew, fighting the glare of the setting sun, never saw it. The ball glanced off his glove for another error, Sax scoring and Raines steaming into third.

"I thought," noted Lynn, "here we go again."

But Stieb was having none of that. Dealing with the heart of the NL batting order, he merely struck out Andre Dawson and, after walking Al Oliver, also fanned Dale Murphy and Mike Schmidt.

"Escaping that first inning was a big part of the game," said Stieb. "I wasn't looking for strikeouts, just to make good pitches. As soon as the third out was made, I felt we had a good shot. The game could have been blown out in that inning."

CATCHER TED Simmons complimented the pitcher.

"After the first two batters got on that way, he came back and got them out. The credit is all his. He's the top right-handed pitcher in the American League. His slider is electric."

Pumped up after squirming off the hook in the first inning, Stieb mowed down the NL in order in the second and third innings. Meanwhile, the Americans recovered to take the lead.

Carew opened the first with a single and, with one out, Lynn walked. Rice banged a grounder to third and when Schmidt booted it for the game's third error, the bases were loaded. George Brett's sacrifice fly tied the score.

In the second, Dave Winfield opened with a double, the first of his three hits. Sax, elected to start at second base for the NL despite 24 errors this season, threw away Manny Trillo's grounder, putting runners at first and third with none out. Stieb sacrificed and, after Carew was walked intentionally, Robin Yount's sacrifice fly put the AL in front 2-1.

THEN CAME the third.

Atlee Hammaker relieved for the NL and the Americans responded as if he were throwing batting practice. Rice ripped a leadoff homer, a line drive into the lower deck in left field that set off Comiskey Park's exploding scoreboard. But the real fireworks were still ahead.

Brett, the only player to go the full nine innings, tripled and, after Simmons popped up, Winfield drilled an RBI single, making it 4-1. Trillo singled and one out later Carew singled for another run. Trillo took third and Carew second on the throw home and when Yount was walked intentionally, it loaded the bases for Lynn.

Hammaker got in front on the count and came tantalizingly close to a called third strike that would have ended the inning.

"I thought the pitch was a strike," said catcher Gary Carter. Umpire George Maloney did not agree.

"George's strike zone was up a bit," Carter continued. "And since he was calling it all night, I was surprised he didn't ring him up. Let me put it this way — it was an American League strike zone."

Diablos win fourth straight game from Cubs, 7-6

By TED BATTLES
R-T Sports Editor

After a triumphant 8-4 tour of Beaumont and San Antonio, Midland came home atop the Texas League West, ready to expand a one-game lead into something more comfortable.

After a fourth straight defeat at the hands of El Paso, 7-6, at Cubs Stadium Wednesday, Midland is two games behind the Diablos. And there is no hope of pulling even in tonight's final game of the series before the Cubs go on a 10-game road trip that will take them to the perils and hazards of tropical Jackson and Little Rock.

El Paso, meanwhile, returns home to cozy Dudley Field for a 10-game homestand against Tulsa and Shreveport. Diablos Manager Tony Muser should be ecstatic. He sounds cautious.

"Well, our pitching always seems to struggle when we first get home, but, you know, we're the only team in the division that is playing .500, or better ball, at home."

Midland's Tom Harmon, meanwhile, looks for some answers. "We come off a good road trip and could have won four-out-of-five at home. Instead, we have lost four-out-of-five. We are making ridiculous mental errors, the kind a Double A team shouldn't be making at this stage of the season."

Early in the series, the Cubs weren't getting enough hits. Wednesday they collected 13 hits and lost when the Diablos, trailing 4-2, rallied for five runs in the eighth.

THE DECISIVE blow came on a three-run homer by Carlos Ponce over the left-center field fence.

Midland rallied in the home eighth when Carlos Lezcano doubled, A.J. Hill singled and Jay Loviglio drove in one run with his fourth single of the night. Rick Baker drilled a single through the right side and it was suddnely 6-7 with one out and runners on first and second and Bill Hatcher, three straight singles, coming up.

Bill's bunt attempt to catch the infield back was popped up to pitcher Dan Burns, who responded to the reprieve by getting dangerous Tom Lombarski on a grounder to first for the final out.

"We have been consistent," says Muser of his team's climb to the top. "We have had good defense, clutch hitting and super pitching. And we have been capitalizing on the opposition's mistakes. Like tonight with runners on first and second in the eighth and that error on Stan Davis' grounder."

Juan Castillo opened the eighth with a bunt single and then Ernest Riles walked, not exactly the kind of robust rally that would chase a guy who was working on a five-hitter as was Jim Wright.

"His shoulder was tightening up," explained Harmon, "That's the trouble he had last year and I felt he had lost his fast ball when he walked Riles. Jim Gerlach has been doing a good job for us, so I made the move. Tonight he couldn't get his curve over."

Davis dribbled a medium speed grounder that second baseman Jay Loviglio first bobbled and then shovel-passed away in a last ditch attempt to get Davis. The second error let the second, and tying, run score.

Eric Peyton then singled to right and Ponce knocked No. 17 into the night.

Jim Paciorek's seventh inning homer over the double-deck monster in center in the seventh got the Diablos close.

THE LATE-inning letdown and loss Wright's fine pitching effort to get lost in the shuffle and as long as the Cubs continue to get this kind of hill effort, games will always remain in reach.

The 6-6, 220-pound right hander who last year opened the season with Kansas City had a no-hitter going through 4 2/3 innings before Garrett Nago singled to spoil it.

The Diablos strung together one-out singles by Riles, Davis and Peyton to spoil the shutout in the sixth and Paciorek's homer made it 2-4 in the seventh. But Wright was still in control.

Tim Crews had a shutout going until Hatcher singled, took second on an error and scored on Trey Brooks' double to left in the fourth. The Cubs added three more in the sixth. Hatcher singled, Jim Anicich doubled into the left field corner and when Lezcano walked, Kevin McCoy, 1-0, replaced Crews. McCoy walked Don Hyman and Hill delivered a single. When Loviglio was hit by a pitch and the Cubs were on the verge of something big, but first baseman Ponce gloved Rick Baker's liner for the third out.

CUB PRINTS—Mike Capel, University of Texas pitcher who joined Midland fresh off the campus on the recent road trip, is being sent to Quad Cities. Ron Richardson, meanwhile, is being reactivated...Brandon Davis, national scouting coordinator for Chicago, is in Midland for a quickie visit. He had just come from the A clubs at Salinas and Quad Cities and is heading for Geneva, which is composed of primarily of players signed in the recent draft...Rene Quinones, 6-2, comes back for the Diablos tonight against Darryl Banks, 9-5, winner of the first game in the series.

John Henry won't admit he's old

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The thing about John Henry, the horse, is, he's like a lot of Hollywood producers I know. He doesn't want to admit he's almost 60 years old.

If he was human he'd be going around in all these gold chains, he'd have rings on all his fingers, he wouldn't be wearing socks with his Gucci loafers and he'd have all the latest funk on his stereo.

He'd be driving a Ferrari even if it scared him to death. He'd go to discos even if his feet hurt. His conversational gambit would run from, "What's happenin', man?" to "Outta sight!" and, "Like, Wow!" He'd be on a fad diet and have his teeth capped.

But John Henry is not your basic phony think-young type. John Henry is the real article. John Henry goes around beating 21-year-olds at their own game.

This must be the year of the gaffer. Gaylord Perry just signed on with the Kansas City Royals. Pete Rose is still sliding in head-first in the National League. Carl Yastrzemski is batting .323. The Washington Redskins, a collection of guys who have to eat strained foods and read with bifocals, are the champions of all football. Lawrence Welk quit too soon. You expect Archie Moore to show up back in the gym any day.

Racing, which could use it, got a great break in that John Henry, when he was young, was a terrible-tempered brat who would make John McEnroe look monkish. He wouldn't train, he wouldn't run. He'd rather bite you than beat you. He was from the wrong side of the tracks. His daddy, Ol Bob Bowers, was a kind of raffish old rogue who didn't put himself out, either. They were kind of riffraff, is what they were.

John Henry really belonged in a rodeo. He'd try to buck jockeys and he hated starting gates. The two little old ladies who owned him couldn't do a thing with him.

With a horse like that, you do one of two things: hitch him to a plow or turn him into a soprano.

John Henry drew the short straw. His trouble was, he could run a little. And he was so unfashionably bred that it seemed a small loss to society, equine division, if he couldn't duplicate himself. It's somewhat the same attitude they had when they hanged horse thieves. Or tried to keep the Vatican boys choir intact.

They would never have done it to Secretariat. Anyone who suggested castrating Man o' War would have been court-martialed.

Which is kind of funny because all race horses are descended from the same three stallions. Horse breeders are sure that what makes one horse faster than another is his concentration, his attention to detail, his single-mindedness. They think that gelding him calms him down, makes him more of a 9-to-5 guy who will take orders. Gelding him gets his attention. I don't know about horses, but it would sure get mine.

It sure got John Henry's, too. He not only kept his mind on business, he has become a sort of George Burns of the race track. A cult symbol.

The trouble with racing is, it builds up its stars and, right at the peak of their drawing power, it loses them. The sport has no marquee value. It has no Paul Newman, Robert Redford or Laurence Olivier. It loses them all to the stud barns.

But John Henry didn't just keep running. He became the money-winningest horse of all time. He won two Santa Anita Handicaps, 30 other races and $3,706,297.

"Now we're the establishment. We're no longer the new kid on the block. I can't wish them bad. I guess I have a 'no comment' because I just don't know enough about them. 1923 — Pitcher Lefty O'Doul of the Boston Red Sox gave up 13 runs in the sixth inning in a 27-3 loss to the Cleveland Indians.

1936 — The National League won its first All-Star Game, 4-3 at Braves Field in Boston.

1937 — Lou Gherig drove in four runs with a home run and a double to pace the American League to an 8-3 victory over the National League in the All-Star Game at Washington's Griffith Stadium.

1959 — The first of two All-Star games played that season, at Forbes Field in Pittsburgh, went to the National League, 5-4. The NL scored the tying and winning runs in the bottom of the eighth when Hank Aaron singled in a run and scored on a triple by Willie Mays.

SMU's Carter wins shot put at World University Games

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Money doesn't mean everything, at least not to Michael Carter.

The burly senior from Southern Methodist University decided about two weeks ago to forgo a possible lucrative contract in pro football next year to concentrate on his shot putting for the 1984 Olympic Games.

Wednesday night, after Carter had won his second straight shot put gold medal in the World University Games with a heave of 64-feet, 9¼-inches, he was asked about losing the possible big money for a possible Olympic gold medal.

"Well, I never had it (the money). I might lose a lot of money, but I'd rather be happy," said the 280-pound Carter, an All-Southwest Conference selecation as a football nose guard last season when the Mustangs were ranked second nationally after finishing with an 11-0-1 record, including a victory over Pitt in the Cotton Bowl.

Still, he believes he made the right decision.

Lewis faces Wilander in Davis Cup

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Chris Lewis, the 26-year-old New Zealander who reached the men's singles final at Wimbledon last Sunday, will play Sweden's Mats Wilander in Davis Cup singles here Friday.

The series opens with Russell Simpson of New Zealand playing Sweden's Henrik Sundstrom before Lewis faces Wilander. Lewis was a 6-2, 6-2, 6-2 loser to American John McEnroe at Wimbledon. Wilander was eliminated in the first week of Wimbledon and has been home in Sweden practicing since then.

Lewis and Simpson will also contest Saturday's doubles against Anders Jarryd and Hans Simonsson. The two Swedes won the men's doubles title at the French championships and were semifinalists at Wimbledon before losing to the eventual champions, McEnroe and Peter Fleming.

It is the first time the two countries have met in the Davis Cup since 1972, when Bjorn Borg made his debut in the competition as a 15-year-old

Several top golfers to play in GMO

MILWAUKEE (AP) — After 15 years of debts, growing pains and rejection by most of the top names in golf, the Greater Milwaukee Open finally may be established.

The $250,000 tournament, which opens Thursday at Tuckaway Country Club, has struggled for most of its existence because of its relatively low prize money and its conflict with the British Open, which is scheduled next week. Most superstars usually have skipped Milwaukee in order to prepare for the British Open.

This year, however, tournament officials are delighted with the field, which includes 13 of the top 60 players on the Professional Golfers Association earnings list.

They include Calvin Peete, the defending GMO champion who in May charged from behind to win at Atlanta.

Other 1983 tour winners committed here are Larry Mize, who won at Memphis June 26, and 1972 GMO champion Jim Colbert, who won at Fort Worth in May.

"I would like to have a couple of more (big names), naturally," GMO president Gordon Kress said. "Everyone would like to have a couple more. But I am happy about Jerry Pate and Jay Haas and the names in the top 60."

Pate, one of the best players on the tour when healthy, is making his first GMO appearance. He has been hampered by shoulder and neck injuries for nearly a year, but has impeccable credentials. He won the U.S. Amateur in 1974, the 1976 U.S. Open, the 1976 Canadian Open, the 1981 Memphis Open and the 1982 Tournament Players Championship.

"I wanted to give my best effort to support the tour," Pate said. "There are only three tournaments on the tour I haven't played in -Milwaukee, Quad Cities and Hartford.

"I'm playing Milwaukee and Hartford this year," he said. "The Quad Cities is the same week as the British Open, so that's kind of hard. I've never been to Milwaukee."

Haas won here by three strokes in 1981. That started a streak which has seen him win the B.C. Open in 1981, the 1982 Hall of Fame Classic and the 1982 Texas Open.

Other major names entered include area favorite Andy North, former U.S. Open winner from Madison, Wis.; Lon Hinkle; Dan Pohl; Mark O'Meara; Payne Stewart, and Jim Dent.

Gators blank Dodgers, 6-0

By The Associated Press

Ray Hayward, the San Diego Padres' No. 1 pick in the recent baseball draft, tossed a five-hitter while leading Beaumont to a 6-0 win over San Antonio in Texas League action.

Hayward, 1-0, struck out eight while pitching the first complete game of his professional career and posting his initial win.

In other TL games Wednesday night, El Paso edged Midland 7-6, Shreveport beat Jackson 3-1 and Tulsa defeated Arkansas 5-1.

James Steels had three hits in five trips to the plate for Beaumont and drove in two runs.

San Antonio's Ken Howell, 7-9, was the losing pitcher.

Shreveport's Bengie Biggus, 9-3, pitched an eight-hitter and struck out six while going the distance. John Stevenson led the Captains' attack with three hits, including an RBI single in the second and an RBI double in the fourth.

John Christensen drove in Jackson's lone run with a first-inning single.

Former University of Texas ace Calvin Schiraldi, 1-1, took the loss for the Mets.

Steve Buchele hit a two-run homer during a four-run eighth inning to lead the Tulsa attack.

The Drillers' John Buckley, 1-1, picked up the win in relief. Arkansas starter John Adams, 2-7, was the loser.

WBC threatens Hagler's crown

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Another champion is in hot water with World Boxing Council President Jose Sulaiman.

One day after renewing his warning that WBC heavyweight champion Larry Holmes faces loss of his title, Sulaiman had the same warning Wednesday for undisputed middleweight titlist Marvin Hagler.

The latest issue concerns Hagler's defiance of the WBC's newly imposed 12-round limit for championship fights. As a result, Sulaiman says "there is every indication" that Hagler has decided to forfeit his WBC title.

"If he will not respect our rules," said Sulaiman, "then the WBC will accept his rejection of our title and our belt and we will look for another world champion."

Hagler defied the 12-round limit in a May 27 defense against Wilford Scypion and promoter Bob Arum said Wednesday that Hagler's proposed November fight with Roberto Duran also would be scheduled for 15 rounds.

"He fought a fight for 15 rounds and now he's doing it again," said Sulaiman, an outspoken defender of the 12-round limit.

The 12-round limit was imposed as a safety measure following the death of South Korean lightweight Duk Koo Kim of brain injuries suffered last year in a title fight with champion Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini.

Asked if the WBC would automatically strip Hagler of the title for violating the limit a second time, Sulaiman said, "that is a matter for the executive committee to decide."

Hagler also is recognized as champion by the World Boxing Association and the United States Boxing Association-International.

Sulaiman accused Hagler and his managers of treating the Mexican-based organization that "gave Hagler an opportunity to become world champion" with nothing but "disrespect and slaps in the face."

Despite his anger, however, Sulaiman said the WBC could possibly sanction the bout with Duran if its 21-member executive committee agreed to do so. The WBA already said it would sanction the fight, according to Arum.

Asked if Hagler still wanted to be recognized by the WBC, the fighter's co-manager, Goody Petronelli, said:"We don't have to make a mandatory defense for the WBC until next February. As far as we are concerned, we're not defying the WBC. Why make a decision now?"

Sulaiman's battle with Hagler isn't the only problem facing the beleagured WBC chief these days. Holmes faces a loss of his title because of his refusal to meet top-ranked challenger Greg Page.

Churchill's Vollmer joins MC golf team

Jim Vollmer, golfer for San Antonio Churchill's Class 5A runnerup, is the latest recruit to sign to play for Midland College, Coach Delnor Poss announced.

Vollmer lettered four years and was second team all-District 27-5A second team as a senior and first team as a junior.l

In junior high, Jim played football, basketball, golf and track and was named outstanding athlete in seventh grade and outstanding golfer in the eighth. He also was a member and president of the National Honor Society in junior High.

His golf honors include medalist in four Junior Golf Association of South Texas tournaments; second in the San Marcos Invitational 1981; San Antonio Northside, 1982; second low qualifier PGA Junior. He also has played in the 1980-81 North-South Junior at Pinehurst, N.C., and the 1982 Orange Bowl Junior.

His granddad, Allan Mitchell, San Antonio, has been lefthanded champion of Texas four times...

Two Midlanders named All-State

Three District 4-5A baseball players were named to the 1983 5A All-State team this year with a player from each Midland school earning a berth.

From Midland Lee, Rebel shortstop Barry Blackwell was named along with Midland High's Tim Davis. San Angelo catcher Henry Klepac was the third representative.

In Class 4A, state champion Snyder placed one player on the squad: shortstop Brent Roemisch. Andrews catcher Arturo Gonzales also made the team.

MSA holding first GWG skeet shoot

The Midland Shooter's Association is holding the first annual George W. Glass Memorial skeet championship this weekend starting Friday and running through Sunday.

The shoot is registred by the NSSA and the rules of the organization will govern. All participants residing in Texas must have a current TSSA card.

Entry fee for the shoot will be $5 per event with all money returned to the shooters by class. More than $3,000 has been added to the prize fund.

Cards release Kaat to make room on roster for Rucker

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Veteran lefthander Jim Kaat was given his unconditional release Wednesday to make room on the roster for Dave Rucker, the St. Louis Cardinals said.

Kaat, 44, who broke into the majors with the Washington Senators in 1959, had been with the Cardinals since 1980. He also played with the Minnesota Twins, Chicago White Sox, Philadelphia Phillies and New York Yankees.

Kaat appeared in 24 games during the 1983 season for the defending world champions. He had no record.

His career record is 283-237.

Rucker, a 25-year-old left-hander, came to the Cardinals Tuesday from the Detroit Tigers organization as part of a June 22 trade that saw Doug Bair go to the Tigers.

Kaat was unavailable for comment.

UNTIL HIS release Kaat had been the second oldest player in the majors. He is 53 days younger than pitcher Gaylord Perry, signed this week by Kansas City after being released by Seattle.

Kaat is one of a select group to play in four decades. The others are Willie McCovey, Mickey Vernon, Ted Williams, Early Wynn, Minnie Minoso and Tim McCarver.

Kaat made major league history on April 6, 1962 when he appeared in the Cards' opening game and became the first pitcher ever to appear in 24 big league seasons, surpassing Wynn's record of 23.

He also hit 16 career home runs, which had been the most for an active pitcher.

TPWD accepts dove applications

Combative Blue fish invade Texas Gulf

BY RODNEY RIEHLE

Texas Parks and Wildlife officials are accepting applications for a two-day white-winged dove hunt at Las Palomas Wildlife Management Area in Cameron County Sept. 3-4. Obtain applications from the TPWD, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin 78744.

A drawing for 100 permits is scheduled 10 a.m. July 28. Shooting hours for the two-day hunt will be noon to sunset with daily bag limit 10 whitewings and 12 mourning doves...

Oystermen along the Texas Gulf Coast harvested an all time record 6.3 million pounds of oysters during the 1982-83 season, according to TPWD officials. C.E.Bryan, director of the shellfish programs, said an estimated $8.4 million dockside value of the catch also was an all-time high.

Previous six-month high was the 4.9 million pounds in 1965-66. About 80 percent of the Texas oyster harvest occurs in the Galveston Bay system...

Summer is the time for fishermen to seek speckled trout around the oil well platforms in Texas' shallow bays. James A. Dailey, TPWD biologist, says there are a few tricks which can help catch fish which congregate around the shell pads on which the oil rigs stand.

"Approach slowly from the up wind side, adjusting for tidal currents. Anchor the boat so you will be casting downwind toward the fishing area. This is usually better than tying up to the rig, because that often scares the fish away.

Dailey believes plastic worms and live shrimp are the best baits. "Work these under a cork or on the bottom. One of the best methods is to free shrimp with live baiting, using No. 6 and 8 treble hook and a few small split shot sinkers attached above the hook. Allow the shrimp to bump along the bottom close to the rig."...

Clear water conditions may be causing bluefish to move into Texas' shallow inshore areas, says biologist Glen Cordova of Seabrook. Cordova reports a fisherman recently caught a nine-inch long blue fish from Galveston Bay near the Texas City Dike, using live shrimp for bait.

"This is unusual because bluefish are seldom seen in the bays." Offshore anglers often find blues in the three to five pound class around oil rigs in the Gulf.

"Bluefish are considered excellent food and sport fish along the Atlantic Coast, where they are common and reach weights of 30 pounds. However, they are usually smaller in the Gulf where the state record is 10 pounds, 12½ ounces."

Despite their generally small size, bluefish are voracious feeders equipped with razor sharp teeth. "During feeding frenzies, bluefish have been known to bite a hooked trout or other fish in half before the fisherman can reel it in," Cordova said. Often confused with bass, jackfish or other ocean predators, bluefish can be identified by their blue-green color above, shading to silver-white on the belly.

Black duck regulations proposed

NEW YORK (AP) — The mystery of the disappearing black duck has prompted the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to propose new hunting regulations, including stricter bag limits and shorter seasons.

Officials hope that the revisions, the first to be imposed in five years, will cut the 1983-84 harvest by 25 percent.

Bob Smith, the government biologist in charge of developing the regulations, called them "the toughest ever."

He said hunting for blacks during duck season would be delayed "for as much as a week or more" in virtually all eastern states along the Atlantic flyway. The Mississippi flyway states want to make the black duck a 100-point bird, meaning only one shot fills a hunter's daily bag limit, Smith said.

Smith said the black duck is not endangered, but added that there is a question whether there are enough birds to allow continued sport hunting.

STATISTICS SHOWING a 50 percent drop in the black duck population in the past 30 years led the Humane Society of the United States to file suit to ban hunting of the species. Last year, the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., ruled that hunting could continue. The Humane Society is appealing that decision.

"Until 1969, the black duck was the No.1 bird in the bag of all East Coast states," said Smith. "It now ranks third, behind the mallard and the wood duck."

The black duck's name is a misnomer. It's actually sooty brown in color with conspicuous white wing linings and a greenish bill. It appears black only at a distance. But the trained eye can usually distinguish it from the multi-colored mallard with its green head, white neck-ring, chestnut breast and grayish body. And blacks tend to fly in smaller flocks.

Officials don't know why the black is declining. Smith said it's probably the result of a combination of factors.

He said a recent study showed "harvest rates of black ducks are very high," but he said evidence of overhunting is inconclusive. "We can't tell the hunter that if he stops hunting black ducks he's going to have twice as many 10 years from now," Smith said. "We don't want to mislead anybody."

It's generally believed that interbreeding between blacks and mallards has resulted in a decrease of "pure" blacks. Alan Wentz, a biologist with the National Wildlife Federation, also cites habitat destruction, the impact of pesticides and acid rain on the bird's food supply, and possibly lead shot pellet poisoning.

EPA wants millions to study effects of dioxin poisoning on nation's fish

By The Associated Press

Environmental Protection Agency officials are preparing to ask Congress for $12 million to $15 million to study the effects of dioxin poisoning, including the effects on fish in the nation's waterways.

The nationwide study would cover not only rivers, lakes and streams in the Great Lakes Basin, where dioxin has been found in several species of fish, but also in Missouri, New York, New Jersey and other states where the highly toxic chemical has been found in soil in populated areas.

Recent research in Michigan revealed dioxin in its most toxic form in bottom-feeding fish such as carp and catfish, according to Dr. Harold Humphrey, an environmental epidemiologist with the Michigan Department of Public Health.

Humphrey said there's no data available on whether popular species like trout and bass are being contaminated. But he said, "The national study will monitor a greater number of fish over a greater range."

'Gandhi' makes film's villain cry

BOMBAY, India (AP) — Some moviegoers saw him as a haughty, sneering villain in the Academy Award-winning film, "Gandhi," but actor Alyque Padamsee says he wept each time he saw the movie.

Padamsee played Mohammed Ali Jinnah, the founder of Pakistan and the man responsible for the partition of the Asian subcontinent in the screen story about Indian independence leader Mohandas K. Gandhi.

Padamsee's portrayal of the monocle-wearing Jinnah as a dour antagonist of the saint-like Gandhi has been denounced in Pakistan as unsympathetic and distorted. Screening of the movie has not been permitted in Pakistan movie houses, although many Pakistanis have seen videotapes or read about it.

"Jinnah is the antagonist to Gandhi's protagonist and their interaction has tremendous dramatic effect in the film," says Padamsee, who has seen the movie four times.

"Gandhi" was the 52-year-old stage actor's first film. He is perhaps the most prominent actor-director of the English language stage in India.

Padamsee regularly produces British and American plays. His adaptation of the musical "Evita" is running to packed houses in Bombay.

Sir Richard Attenborough, who directed "Gandhi," selected him for Jinnah after he saw Padamsee on the stage as Willy Loman in a local production of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman."

Producers, networks in uneasy alliance

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — At best, the alliance between producers, who make the shows, and the networks, which buy them, is an uneasy one.

Both groups lust for successful shows, the kind that make Nielsen's numbers stand up and take notice. But, because of different needs, concerns and goals, they often disagree on how to to make a hit.

The producer cares deeply about his show. The network is concerned about how that one show fits into its entire schedule, composed of a collection of single shows from different producers.

Producers say the networks buy the creator's idea and vision, then often do everything possible to mold the program into something else. The networks say producers, being creative sorts, have no understanding of research, the right audience flow from one show into another and the pressure from advertisers.

The result can be programs that aren't clearly focused. One week, it may be a show geared to kids, the next week a show targeted for adults. Audiences are understandably confused, and they move on to another choice — on another network, an independent station or cable.

That's one reason there's such a high failure rate for new programs.

MICHAEL GLEASON, executive producer of NBC's "Remington Steele," was so incensed by network tampering that he left television for the movies in the late 1970s. This was a time when Fred Silverman was running NBC, and he was known to act impulsively to get immediate results.

"His idea was to change 'B.J. and the Bear' into 'B.J. and the Seven Lady Truckers,' " says Gleason, who wasn't involved with that show. "That's network tampering. It was ghastly."

Gleason said the audience that wanted corny comedy and car chases with a trucker and his chimp named Bear didn't watch a show with seven chesty actresses. The altered show didn't last long.

Sometimes a network doesn't know what it wants. Gleason recalled how Universal sold NBC "Oregon Trail," starring Rod Taylor. It was supposed to be about a wagon train heading west in the 1840s.

Universal wanted it to be another "Wagon Train," a sprawling western with big guest stars. NBC wanted it to be more family oriented, a "Little House On Wheels." Taylor wanted it to have more action, featuring him as a tough guy.

"Oregon Trail," with Gleason as executive producer, lasted one month.

"The secret is to say 'Yes,' and then do exactly what I want," says Gleason. "At least, if it's a flop, it's my flop."

THAT'S WHAT happened with Larry Gelbart's "United States." His success, as creator of "M*A*S*H," gave him the clout to do a television show his way. Each week, a married couple talked about their problems in the bedroom, the living room and the kitchen. Research was right on this one. Audiences didn't want a sitcom that was too close to their own lives. It lasted two months.

"If you understand research, some say it automatically means you're not creative, which is ridiculous," says Harvey Shephard, CBS' vice president for programming. "Research is a tool, a way of analyzing data and see what the audience is telling you."

Sometimes the research is used by networks to change the integrity of a show or its characters. Bruce Paltrow, executive producer of "St. Elsewhere," said NBC's research indicated that audiences loved David Morse, who plays the sincere, sensitive Dr. Jack Morrison.

"NBC suggested that he be single, that something could happen to his wife," says Paltrow. "But Morrison wasn't a woman-chaser. He wasn't that kind of character. We weren't going to mate him with Valerie Perrine. To NBC's credit, they didn't try to force anything on me."

CBS once resisted beginning the "Lou Grant" season with "The Prisoner" episode, which examined an editor's inability to resolve being tortured and imprisoned while on assignment in Latin America years before.

No excuses good enough to miss rerun of 'Brideshead'

By GUS STEVENS
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Pay attention. If you missed it on PBS last year and if you missed it when it was on the USA network early this year, you don't have any more excuses.

"Brideshead Revisited," the Evelyn Waugh masterpiece set in Britain, Italy and Africa during the 1930s, is returning to public television for 11 Monday nights starting July 11 and running through Sept. 19.

Episode one will run from 9 to 11 p.m. The next nine will be an hour each, all starting at 9 p.m. and the conclusion will be 90 minutes, also starting at 9 p.m.

You don't have any excuses. The air times will allow you to watch Monday Night Football and, if you're willing to deny yourself the pleasures of watching "The Jeffersons" reruns and "Monday Night at the Movies", there's absolutely no inconvenience.

For snobs who won't have a TV set in the house because there's never anything worth watching, here's another chance for you to join the world.

For those who never have seen "Brideshead Revisited" and are bored stiff by friends talking about the series for the last year, now you can catch up.

"Brideshead Revisited," a part of PBS' "Great Performances" series is, as a press agent here promoting the show said, "one time when 'Great Pers' really lives up to its name." "Great Pers" is flack talk but here she was telling the unvarnished truth.

Anthony Andrews, the unforgettable Sebastian Flyte, was here finishing a movie called "Sparkling Cyanide" for CBS when the TV press came winging in from Phoenix. He invited everybody up for tea and about a dozen of us responded.

"Tourists going through 'Brideshead' castle have gone up 66 percent," Andrews said.

Ruling may affect future inmates

By The Associated Press

Prosecutors around the nation say a U.S. Supreme Court ruling expediting procedures for executions will have little immediate effect on the 1,000-plus inmates on death row — but may in the future.

"We're going to continue doing just what we've been doing all along — trying to bring these cases to as early a resolution as possible," Georgia Attorney General Mike Bowers said Wednesday.

State prison records showed 106 prisoners in Georgia under death penalty as of mid-May, although the state has not carried out an execution since 1964.

In Nebraska, where 12 inmates are on death row, J. Kirk Brown, assistant attorney general, said he didn't see Wednesday's high court ruling as empowering prosecutors to hasten death penalty cases.

"I don't see that we can speed up anything," Brown said. "The decision apparenty gave guidelines to judges, and the authority is with the judges."

The Supreme Court, by a 6-3 vote, said a federal appeals court, when asked to delay an execution until a death row inmate's formal appeal can be studied, may choose to reject the postponement request if it finds the appeal is meritless.

The Justice Department said Monday that a record 1,050 prisoners were awaiting execution at the end of 1982. That year, 264 people were condemned to die but only two were executed.

Some lawyers said Wednesday's ruling would result in more executions, but the decision gave convicted Mississippi child killer Jimmy Lee Gray a new legal lifeline. A federal appeals court decided it wanted to study the implications of the ruling on his 7-year-old case.

Gray had been scheduled for execution at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday for the rape and murder of a 3-year-old Pascagoula, Miss., girl. A hearing is slated for July 14 to decide if the stay should be lifted.

Missouri Attorney General John Ashcroft said the Supreme Court ruling was "in the state's best interest."

"One agreed-upon need we have is that we don't take five to 10 years for execution as we have done in the past," Ashcroft said. "I think the Supreme Court has said it's not automatically mandatory to grant a stay. I think that's good."

In Florida, the state with the largest collection of killers on death row — 202 as of Wednesday — Attorney General Jim Smith predicted executions would begin this fall.

"The Supreme Court has made a clear statement that the system of justice need no longer tolerate frivolous, delaying appeals entered at the 11th hour for the sole purpose of frustrating the sentences of our courts," Smith said.

The Supreme Court decision came in the case of Thomas Barefoot, who is sentenced to die by lethal injection for the 1978 slaying of Carl Levin, a Harker Heights, Texas, police officer. The ruling said the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals did not exceed its authority in denying Barefoot's request for an execution postponement. Texas authorities are now free to reschedule Barefoot's death.

Some attorneys saw Wednesday's decision as increasing the likelihood that innocent people will be put to death.

"It probably means that over the longer haul, roughly twice as many people will be executed as would otherwise be if you had a more deliberate process in considering the appeals," said John Duncan, director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union.

In Phoenix, Ariz., defense attorney John Foreman said he did not foresee Arizona inmates filing the type of appeals covered in Wednesday's decision for a year or two. But he said the decision might have a faster effect in other states.

nation in brief

Utility wants fine reduced

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Calling an $850,000 penalty "harsh and punitive," a utility wants the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to reduce the fine for safety system failures at the Salem 1 nuclear plant.

Public Service Electric & Gas, which operates twin Salem reactors in Lower Alloways Creek, did not suggest a specific reduction in its request Wednesday.

The NRC proposed its highest fine May 6 after an investigation showed an automatic safety system failed to shut down the Salem 1 unit upon indications of trouble on Feb. 22 and 25. The failures were blamed on circuit breakers that malfunctioned because of inadequate maintenance. Control-room operators had to shut down the reactor manually.

Men indicted for violent plot

CHICAGO (AP) — More than two dozen bombings and plans for more have been blamed on four men indicted in an alleged plot to use "terror and violence" to obtain the independence of Puerto Rico.

They were indicted Wednesday on charges of conspiring to set off explosions at military centers during the Fourth of July weekend. They were also charged with plotting to rob Chicago Transit Authority money collectors.

The indictment claims the four, who were arrested a week ago, worked since 1975 with unindicted co-conspirator William Morales, who was arrested on other charges in Mexico in May. The indictment specified 28 bombings in the Chicago area between 1975 and 1979 as part of the conspiracy.

Castro gets tough with hijackers

MIAMI (AP) — Cubans so homesick that they hijack planes to Havana will see relatives only on prison visiting days under tough new penalties by the Castro government, U.S. officials say.

Cuban President Fidel Castro "does not plan to return the hijackers but he plans to give out stiff sentences," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Jack Barker.

Sentences of 10 to 20 years in Cuban prison have been levied against air pirates, he said Wednesday, adding: "If homesick Cubans are trying to get back to see their family in Cuba the only way they'll see them is on visiting day at the prison, if there is such a thing."

Brain-dead woman births baby

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — A baby girl delivered from a brain-dead woman before life-support equipment was turned off will be hospitalized for a few weeks but is "extraordinarily normal," doctors say.

The 21-year-old mother, kept breathing mechanically for 84 days so the fetus could develop, died 17 hours after the 3-pound 11-ounce baby was delivered by Caesarean section, doctors at Roanoke Memorial Hospital said Wednesday.

They said the unidentified woman was kept alive briefly after the Tuesday night delivery to let her family arrive from West Virginia. The mother was comatose after a brain hemorrhage.

Dr. Robert Allen said the baby's only problem is nutrition and she will probably have to stay at the hospital for four to six weeks.

Disciples celebrate Master's Day

RAJNEESHPURAM, Ore. (AP) — About 15,000 disciples of Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh danced and chanted to celebrate the climax of a week-long festival in this remote city-commune.

The celebration of Master's Day came Wednesday. Followers began arriving a month ago from throughout the world to celebrate life and to honor their relationship with the 51-year-old guru. He moved to Oregon from India two years ago.

The religion, drawing from Eastern and Western traditions, claims 300,000 members worldwide.

Senior citizen shoots at robber

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Police just missed catching a robber speeding away on a bicycle, but they nabbed his victim — a 79-year-old man who fired three shots at the youth from an unregistered handgun.

The youth got away with $475 stolen Wednesday from Joseph Bryant, who was arrested moments later and charged with weapons offenses and recklessly endangering another person.

But prosecuters said the charges will be dropped.

Oil industry rebound: Slow train coming

Business-Energy Writer

Experts gathered at a press conference Wednesday said they think we have reached bottom and rebounded from an oil drilling slump, and that the last half of 1983 should see a gradually increasing Permian Basin rig count.

An upturn and a healthy industry is foreseen, but no more boom times for the moment.

A wide variety of experts met Wednesday at the American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical, and Petroleum Engineers (AIME) executive committee gathering. "We can talk about the mining industry for coal, metals, etc .... all of which directly affect the oil industry," said AIME president Edward E. Runyan.

The presidents of four major engineering societies, including a representative of the Society of Petroleum Engineers, were able to talk about the wide spectrum of problems and economic factors affecting their industries.

Runyan, president of Bell Petroleum Services, headquartered in Midland, spoke on the gradual revitalizing of oil drilling here. Later, a Bell vice president noted that the average depth of well Bell works on has increased by 300 feet in recent months, and medium-to-deep wells have seen a boom in service with only shallow wells lagging in number.

Louis Kuchinic Jr., a coal expert and president of the Society of Mining Engineers, said "The coal industry has experienced the same problems the oil industry has. Right now only 60 percent of the coal-mining capacity of the U.S. is being put to use."

Kuchinic said a coal upturn won't come before 1984 and cited tough unemployment figures of 22 percent in West Virginia's coal mine towns.

Howard N. Hubbard Jr., president of AIME's Iron and Steel Society, said better times are anticipated for his industry toward the close of 1983. "The Japanese are teaching us competition on an international basis," he said. "Steel will never return to its former status.

"We've lost so much capacity," Hubbard said, "U.S. production will level off right around 70 million tons a year." Restrictions on imported Korean and Japanese steels will not work — initiative and ingenuity will be required for American steelmakers to get back in the market, Hubbard said.

The U.S. steelworker gets roughly $26 an hour, Japanese get $12, and Koreans are paid $3 an hour. This forces steel prices up so the Japanese or Korean product actually gives a builder or manufacturer more for his money — a better product with less labor cost.

Arlen Edgar, a Midlander representing the Society of Petroleum Engineers, said Congress could "Leave us alone," but added, "That's too simplistic. We need less total (energy) legislation, less restrictions on doing business, and an open mind to our problems.

"Let the marketplace decide price, supply levels, etc.," Edgar said.

Milton E. Wadsworth, president of The Mining Society, said "The extractive industries are weak. They will survive — although at lower levels than before."

Runyan said that the prime thrust of AIME is making sure engineering education meets with industry requirements for broadly-based, advanced engineering knowledge in graduates.

AIME deals with many potential sources of energy. Coal competes on a sulfur-content (because of EPA) and energy-content basis with fuel oil. The cost per British thermal unit (Btu) is one way industry chooses which fuel to use.

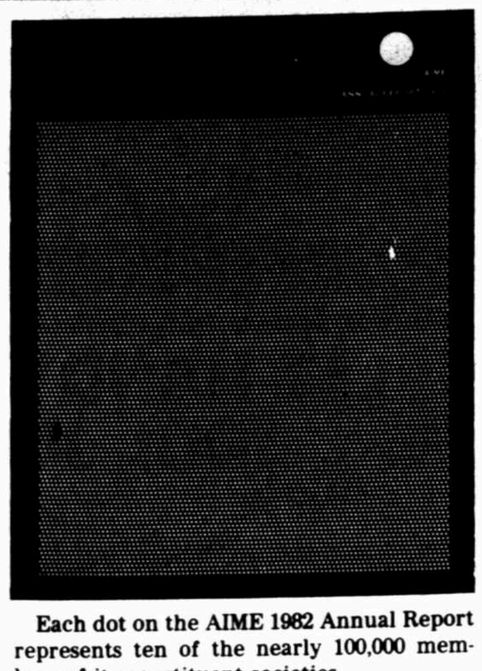
Runyan said that industry — right now — would probably use gas as a fuel if it is available to them. "It's a premium fuel. It's clean. If there is any sulfur in it it's easily removed. Gas will be our country's first long-term shortage (after deregulation in 1985) because it is so expensive and difficult to import.

"Oil can be imported easily, but it is a politically unstable energy source," Runyan said.

Kuchinic said the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, under administrator William Ruckleshaus, will be "making coal environmentally acceptable. Acid rain regulations are coming, by legislation or by edict.

"Utilities will be forced," Kuchinic said, "to use pollution control devices or switch to a compliance (low-sulfur) coal."

Kuchinic and the other AIME executive committee members said they believe environmental regulation is a major factor in every energy industry except for passive sources like wind, sea, or solar power — which supply only a small part of America's energy appetite.



Each dot on the AIME 1982 Annual Report represents ten of the nearly 100,000 members of its constituent societies.

RRC cuts gas rate

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has approved a decrease in contract gas rates between Esperanza Transmission Co. and Lone Star Gas Co. that will decrease Lone Star's weighted average cost of gas.

Esperanza's estimated annual revenues will decrease by approximately $4.1 million.

The changes will be effective July 7.

1983 forecast: Weird weather for West Texas

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Volcanic ash. Abnormal warming of Pacific waters. Tampering by the Russians.

Take your pick. They've all been blamed by one source or another this past year for the bizarre weather that's deluged South America and the land of the Confederacy in floods, buried the Rockies in late spring snow, baked West Texas in July heat and wrung it dry.

"Weather has been strange virtually all over the world this past year," said Roger Mallory, weather forecaster with the National Weather Service at Midland Air Terminal.

Conditions may be inexplicable, but walk outside in mid-afternoon and kick the soil and you'll find they're certainly observable. And the NWS stats back them up.

"Going back at least to '72, this seems to be the driest (first half) of the year," said Mallory. "Also, it's unusually hot."

As for precipitation, the first six months of 1983 hold a sizable disadvantage over those of recent years. Through the end of June, only 2.36 inches of precipitation had been recorded, and some of that was in the form of winter snow. During the same period last year, 6.28 inches had fallen, while the 30-year average from 1950-1980 is 5.84 inches.

If you're statistically minded, that figures out to a 63 percent drop in 1983 from 1982 and a 60 percent drop from the 30-year average.

But averages, said Mallory, sometimes can be deceiving.

"'Normal' doesn't have a lot of meaning in this part of the country (because) normals are just made up of averages of extremes," he said. "We rarely have a year where we're normal. Frequently, if you go back and look at a large number of years, you'll find more years below normal than above. Heavy rainfalls that come all at once come into the average."

At any rate, in the 12-year period for which Mallory has kept half-year precipitation totals, 1983 has an easy lock on "driest," undercutting its nearest challenger (1974, 3.26 inches) by 30 percent. Other years in competition for this dubious honor were 1972, 3.60 inches, and 1978, 3.77 inches.

"For agricultural purposes, this is marginal country," said Mallory, "and I think any farmer or rancher knows — when they decide to go into business — they're in an area where they're going to have some bad years...Some people try to see cycles to this...but whether there's any definable cycles is hard to say. We've only got records going back here to 1930."

The mercury, as well, has had a field day in recent times, despite a cooling trend the last couple of days.

"We equalled the record high temperature for Monday of 106," noted Mallory. "We usually set a few high records every year, and a few low records. It's been hot, but the previous month it was kind of cool. I've seen hotter summers than this."

West Texas traditionally has blazing summers, agreed Mallory, but a great deal of variation exists as well. In his personal study of 100-degree days in Midland over the last 53 years, Mallory uncovered no pattern or discernable cycle.

"For example, in the year 1941 we never reached 100 degrees, which is a relatively unusual thing," he said. "To cite the other extreme, in 1964 we had 52 days where we hit 100 or more. And in 1977, we had 43 days where we made 100 degrees or more. But to show you how rapidly that varies, the previous year, 1976, we only hit 100 or higher 2 days. It's a highly variable thing."

OK, so it's hot and dry. But like the old-timers will tell you, if you don't like West Texas weather just wait a minute.

And then what?

Mallory, for one, isn't sure. "I don't have any idea," he said. "The weather service puts out a 30-day outlook, a map, but the accuracy leaves something to be desired. For example, for the month of July, it calls for temperatures to be below normal. Making a 30-day forecast is a pretty chancy thing."

But he did offer some slight hope to those whose livelihood lies in the soil.

"Whenever you have moisture in the air, as now, it will stay here until something comes along to move it out," he explained. "And having this moisture you have a little better chance of rain, spotty showers here and there. The chance of hitting one area, though, is pretty doubtful — 20 percent."

But there also exists the possibility of September and October rains spawned by remnants of hurricanes. "We had a couple of years when we had pretty good rains in September as a result of tropical storms," he said. "In September, 1975 we got 3.44 inches."

But, he added, tropical storms and hurricanes are not the norm, but the unexpected.

Watering hole

Mid-Tex of Midland's Woody Skelton adds finishing touches to the brick facing on the Wall Street Bar & Grill. The Wall Street, attempting to hold its own in the face of strong competition, has been a Midland tradition since 1981. "Traditions have to start somewhere," said general manager Paul Downs.

Wall Street receives commendation

Business-Energy Writer

The Wall Street Bar & Grill is a labor of love. Paul Downs and Mike McMahan have worked extremely hard — and put in a lot of hours — to make this Midland restaurant and lounge a success.

On its second anniversary this June, Wall Street operators Downs and McMahan received a pleasant surprise: The Texas Historical Foundation gave them the Lone Star Commendation for Historical Restoration.

The award is for restoring and adapting a historic structure for commercial purposes. In this fashion, THF believes business can preserve "the rich heritage and economic vitality of the State of Texas."

Second anniversary celebrations at Wall Street included a week-long happy hour and Thank-Yous scrawled in white shoe polish on the mirror behind the Wall Street's bar.

The Wall Street has become a favored spot for downtown lunches and business meetings and also is a popular watering hole for Midlanders.

Prices on its menu have been steady for a year now, and the operators feel that "With good food and good service, we'll do alright. Other restaurants can worry about competing with us."

Wall Street Bar & Grill is housed in a building owned by Wright Cowden Jr., who put up half the money for the most recent refurbishment of the Wall Street's exterior. Workmen painted brick facings and put in a new wall in the back recently.

Inside the Wall Street, if you can forget your day/date watch and the latest stock quotations, you could imagine Texas at the turn of the century.

A handcarved mahogany bar from Chicago that has seen service in many small Texas towns is the main piece of furniture. Two matching service cabinets complete the set. The bar was made in 1867 during the Civil War — it's labeled "Manufactured in the Union" under a right-hand drawer.

The original 1916 saddle-shop walls and pressed-tin roof are still used (although repainted in shades of deep green and ochre).

Stained-glass lamps, whirring fans, and bentwood chairs complete this picture. With a little imagination, the Wall Street is much like favorite bars in Washington D.C., New York, or Chicago. Atmosphere is connected to the history of the place, its furnishings, and its personnel.

Ross Bigham, former operator of In Cahoots, and now an at-home cheesecake chef for area restaurants, is selling the Wall Street to Downs and McMahan on a lease-purchase basis.

From the beginning in June 1981, Downs said in an interview, "We have had a loyal and steady clientele. The mahogany bar, tin ceiling, and ceiling fans give the Wall Street a touch of class. (Unlike a chain-operated restaurant,)...we're not a clone. We're not reproduced every day in other cities far away from here."

Downs said his business relies on strong word-of-mouth advertising and repeat customers that show loyalty to the Wall Street. But more competition springs up daily. The cachet of "newness" at restaurants around Loop 250 has hurt evening business.

"Everyone's going to eat on the Loop now," Downs said. "It hurts us at dinnertime because after people get in their cars and go home, they don't think of coming back downtown."

Downs thinks the Wall Street is unique to Midland, and said that "traditions have to start somewhere" if the town is going to have one local bar that symbolizes its spirit. "The Bar and Wall Street have been here the longest."

Repeat customers know the day bartender (Celinda Beene) and the night bartender (Rhonda Pinnell) and this recognition allows confidence that the bar's concoctions will always taste right.

"Our bartenders still freepour, like the old days," said Downs. "They don't measure an exact ounce-and-¼ on a computer."

Housing program may heat up

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

If Midland receives $214,000 for a federal jobs program, it will heat up the housing rehabilitation program almost to the sizzling $1 million mark.

During the Midland Housing Authority monthly meeting Wednesday in City Hall Council Chambers, the board heard reports on the housing rehabilitation program, the jobs bill and an application for elderly and/or handicapped housing.

A housing rehabilitation program began last September with $500,000 from a Community Development Block Grant fund. On the heels of that came another $250,000 from the next year's CDBG fund. The first amount repaired about 90 houses. With the second allotment, 43 houses have been or are being repaired, said Horace Berry, rehabilitation inspector.

Total for the 43 houses is $218,734.25, or $5,086.84 per house. Berry estimated there is enough money left to do about four more houses.

And if the jobs bill money comes through, the city can rehabilitate 40 more houses, he said.

Susan Howell, CD coordinator, explained the Midland City Council had approved the concept to use the jobs bill money for continuing the rehabilitation program.

"The council feels the housing rehabilitation program is the most labor intensive program we have going and we do have a waiting list" of homeowners wanting repairs. "Their feeling was to use the money to continue the program."

Midland's unemployment rate is not as high as elsewhere, she said, and the jobs bill money will keep the small contractors who have been doing the rehabilitation working. "A lot of these small contractors are just two to three people," Ms. Howell said.

"Gosh, this money keeps falling on us. It does a lot of good for a lot of folks," said Chairman Gene Abbott.

Berry added, "Since September we'll have 140 of these houses repaired. For the amount of money we've had, it's really helped a lot of people."

Midland's application for loan money from the federal government made it to Dallas on time, according to Ms. Howell. The $2.793 million would construct an 85-unit apartment complex on Pecos Street east of Hillcrest Manor, which is a 100-unit complex for low-income elderly and/or handicapped persons.

The complex will be called Langtry Village, Inc.

"With the land being donated, we think it will be beneficial to our application," said Ms. Howell. "Everyone seems to be pretty positive about it. We should hear something by the end of September."

Lutherans to lease nursing home

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midland nursing home Sage Healthcare Center could receive a new name and more residents when management switches to another corporation next month.

Lutheran Social Service of Texas, Inc., will assume total operation of the 114-bed facility through a long-term lease with Great Southwest Care Centers of Arlington.

According to a spokesman in Austin for LSST, the acquisition by lease of the Midland facility, located at 3203 Sage St., is similar to one entered recently in Lubbock.

"For a long time, the Lutheran contingency has been crying out in Lubbock and Midland to come out to provide quality nursing home facilities," said the Rev. Dwight Anderson, vice president for residential services.

The Texas Health Facilities Commission, which has accepted the Lutheran organization's application, is expected to rule a certificate of need is not required for the acquisition by lease, Anderson said.

"We'll be assuming operation of the facility Aug. 16," Anderson said. "In terms of the certificate of need, we don't need one. We just did (an acquisition by lease without a certificate of need) in Lubbock. The lease is signed and it's merely a formality."

The Lubbock facility, Holiday House Nursing Home, was leased from Jewell Enterprise, a partner of Great Southwest Care Centers, Inc. which also runs the Midland facility, according to Donna Hallman, Sage Healthcare Center administrator.

LSST will assume operation and management of the Lubbock nursing home July 16.

According to Anderson, feedback on the need for quality nursing care was received from the medical, social services and religious community in Midland.

"From a variety of people from various disciplines, we got the reading pretty loud that there was a need for a quality nursing facility," Anderson said. "As far as a non-profit church-related facility, there is no other in Midland."

Although entering long-term lease agreements in Midland and Lubbock is expensive, Anderson said the THFC probably wouldn't grant a certificate of need for the construction of new facilities in either area.

"Believe me, we're taking a financial pounding," Anderson said. "It's going to take a lot of support from the community.

"My preference would be to come in and start from scratch — but both Midland and Lubbock are overbuilt."

According to Carol Daniels of the THFC, all requests for acquiring an existing healthcare facility must come through the THFC for approval. A certificate of need is necessary if plans are to change services offered or the bed count.

If a request is for building a new facility, however, "you have to go the full-blown certificate of need process," Ms. Daniels said.

In those cases, the applicant's history of care is reviewed and the commission looks at the elderly population and the number of existing facilities in the area, Ms. Daniels said.

Midland lawyer disbarred for alleged 'misconduct'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland lawyer Harold B. Jones has been disbarred and is prohibited from practicing law in Texas due to alleged "professional misconduct."

He was accused of violating State Bar of Texas disciplinary rules and the code of professional responsibility in 1979 and 1982.

Jones, 58, had been licensed to practice law since 1954.

He was disbarred upon the motion of the State of Texas by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin. Jones was "permanently enjoined from practicing law in Texas," "holding himself out as an attorney at law," or "performing any legal service for others." Jones did not appear before the court to contest the disbarment judgment.

Jones, however, said Wednesday he has been "assured" that he eventually could get re-instated to the State Bar after he has made restitution and amends.

The ex-lawyer, who had practiced law at 405 W. Carver St., was indicted in 1982 for misuse of his clients' money. He was accused of misapplication of fiduciary funds by failing to return $1,500 to a Midland couple and for misusing more than $10,000 of another client's money.

The indictments against Jones still are pending.

"It's been set for trial twice," said Howard County District Attorney Rick Hamby, who, as a disinterested prosecutor, is handling the Jones case for Midland County District Attorney Vern Martin. "It's still very active," Hamby said. If prosecuted and convicted, Jones could be sentenced from two to 10 years in prison and fined up to $5,000 for the third-degree offense and sentenced from two to 20 years and fined $10,000 for the second-degree offense. Any sentence could be probated.

Investigation by the State Bar preceded the indictments.

"The (disbarment) proceedings were already in the mill several weeks prior to the grand jury indictment," Martin said following return of the indictments last year.

The State Bar noted that Jones, in one case, "had settled a client matter, endorsed the client's signature to the settlement draft without the client's knowledge, commingled the settlement proceeds with his own funds, and misapplied the settlement proceeds."

In the other case, the court found that Jones accepted funds from his client to pay toward satisfying a judgment but "was unable to locate the judgment creditor," the State Bar reported. "When his client requested the return of the funds, Jones wrote an insufficient funds check on his trust account."

"The court finds...the defendant guilty of professional misconduct," said Baskin's judgment against Jones, "and he is hereby disbarred as an attorney at law in the State of Texas..."

The court further ordered Jones to surrender his Texas law license and State Bar card to the clerk of the Supreme Court of Texas.

John Hyde, president of the 310-member Midland County Bar Association, said of Jones' disbarment: "I regret that it happened, although I'm not aware of the background information that led to the indictment."

The disciplinary action taken against Jones strictly was a State Bar matter and was not a function of the Midland Bar, which, Hyde said, "does not have any authority to discipline by suspension, disbarment or by reprimand."

Hyde said he surmises that most State Bar disciplinary actions stem from "unprofessional conduct," which could range from embezzlement of a client's funds to the commission of a felony crime. Disciplinary measures may originate from "breach of trust" if an attorney at law "fails to do something that he was hired to do."

Hyde said that "the public is well served" by notice of the State Bar's disciplinary procedures and how the bar "polices its members. It's an important function." Hyde, who has been practicing law in Midland since 1970, said "It's been a long time" since any other Midland lawyer has been disbarred. "There have been some reprimands. They were published in the Bar (Journal)."

Jones could, after five years, be re-admitted to the Bar, according to a spokesman for the State Bar's general counsel.

"If you are disbarred," he said, "you cannot practice law for a minimum of five years."

Five years after disbarment, the ex-lawyer may petition the state district court for reinstatement to the Bar but must make full amends and restitution. "There is life after disbarment."

"A disbarment because of a felony conviction is really no different than disbarment for misconduct," the spokesman said.

Of the approximately 35,500 State Bar members who are practicing law in Texas, only 15 were disbarred in the State Bar's June 1-May 31 1982-83 year, according to the Bar's general counsel. Ten members resigned, 31 were suspended, 35 received public reprimands and 34 were given private reprimands. During that year's span, three disbarred lawyers were re-instated to the bar.

In mid-1988, Jones may petition for re-instatement to the State Bar.

Jones, a native of Fort Worth, attended Prairie View A&M University, Lincoln University in Missouri and the Lincoln University School of Law. He had practiced civil and criminal law in Midland since the late 1960s or early 1970s.

DEATHS

Jim Dobbins

Jim Dobbins, 65, of rural Midland, died this morning at his home.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Saturday in Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Curtis Hollis, pastor of Temple Baptist Church officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Dobbins was born Feb. 8, 1918, in Bluebell, Okla., and spent his early life in Bristow, Okla. He served in the European Theater during World War II. He received his discharge in 1945 and moved to Enid, Okla.

He married Wynema Pruitt Dec. 3, 1945, in Fayetteville, Ark. They moved to Snyder where Dobbins began work as an oil well driller. He came to Midland in 1951 and was employed by Tri Service Drilling Company until his retirement in 1982.

He was a member of Temple Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife; three daughters, Tanya Lowe, Pam Haywood and Sherry Sander, all of Midland; two sisters, Cleo Maclin of Bartlesville, Okla., and Kewpie Kidd of Pawhuska, Okla.; and five grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, 79702.

Stewart Bailey

PLANO — Services for Stewart Byron Bailey, 22, of Plano, grandson of Mr. and Mrs. J.R. Bailey of Midland, were Wednesday at Harrington-Bratcher-Dickey Funeral Home in Plano. Burial was in Plano Mutual Cemetery.

Bailey died Monday in a Plano hospital.

He was born Feb. 10, 1961, in Odessa and was a computer technician for Commercial General Agency.

Other survivors include his parents, a brother and two grandparents.

Man found guilty of escaping

ABILENE (AP) — A man allowed out of jail to make a buy from a suspected dope dealer has been convicted of escape because he never completed the transaction but fled the scene as officers waited outside.

A state jury deliberated 18 minutes Wednesday before finding Steve Ray Hickman, 24, guilty. Later, it set his sentence at seven years in prison.

Lutherans to lease home

LSST is a multi-service agency with seven regional offices throughout the state — including one in Midland and one in Lubbock.

According to Anderson, although it originally was known as an adoption agency, the corporation has expanded to provide services such as marriage, family and individual counseling, referrals and emergency responses such as Lifeline for the elderly, adult day care centers and immigrant and refugee resettlements.

The corporation also has several nursing and residential homes for the elderly and women located primarily in Austin, Round Rock and Shriner.

A feasibility study for a major life-care retirement center or community in Dallas and Houston recently was completed, Anderson said.

"We've provided nursing care services for decades and now we're branching out into retirement communities," Anderson said.

According to the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau, the 114-bed facility in Midland will be named the Lutheran Home-Permian Basin.

Occupancy at the center is very low, according to Anderson, who added although the licensed capacity is 114 beds, "we'll probably only go up to 108 (residents)."

According to Ms. Hallman, 62 residents reside at the 15-year-old facility as of this morning. Last October, residency had dropped to 37.

Ms. Hallman said when she left the home three years ago, after serving as administrator for a year and half, the number was around 90. She returned to her position in October and said she plans to stay.

"As far as I know, I'll be here and we'll all be here," she said. "I've been dealing with them (LSST) since January and I think it will be a real asset, to not just Midland, but Odessa and the whole area."

According to Lael Cordes of the LSST Midland office, "I really have had positive (feedback) everywhere I've turned."

With the strong volunteerism associated with TSST, she said the nursing home would benefit.

Police probe armed robberies

Police are investigating two convenience store robberies that occurred in the past 24 hours.

The first holdup took place shortly after midnight Wednesday when a man walked into the Colonial Food Store at 4519 N. Garfield Ave., displayed a chrome-plated Derringer and fled on foot with a paper sack containing an undisclosed amount of cash.

He was described as black, 6 feet, 1 inch tall, of slender build and in his 30s.

About 10:35 p.m. Wednesday, a man matching the same general description asked to use the phone before pulling a large caliber handgun from his pants and robbing the Preston Milk Store at 438 Andrews Highway.

He fled on foot with an undisclosed amount of money he scooped out of the cash register after forcing the clerk to open the drawer.

MC teacher to tour China

A Midland man will be among a team of petroleum specialists participating in a three-week technical exchange program with the People's Republic of China.

Ed Poulter, a petroleum technology instructor at Midland College, has been selected for the bilateral tour with Chinese engineers and specialists in petroleum drilling and production. Poulter, who came to MC with 20 years experience in the petroleum industry, has been the college's only fulltime petroleum technology instructor since 1976.

The group, selected by People-to-People International, will spend the first three weeks of August in meetings, field trips and discussions in six Chinese cities. The team will visit with its Chinese counterparts from the China National Oil and Gas Exploration and Development Corp. in Peking, Shanghai, Canton, Shengli, Nanjing and the Sichuan Basin.

Leading the delegation will be Dr. Ben Caudle, professor of petroleum engineering at The University of Texas at Austin. Caudle said China is just beginning to develop a modern petroleum industry and needs technical assistance with offshore platform engineering, enhanced oil recovery techniques, drilling engineering and petroleum equipment evaluation.

Ed Poulter

People-to-People International was founded by President Dwight Eisenhower in 1956.

Word of Life Church burglarized

Russ Austin, pastor of the Word of Life Church at the Sandpiper Inn, 3838 W. Wall Ave., told police $1,975 worth of public address equipment was taken in a break-in at the church late Tuesday night. Entry was gained by prying a lock off a door.

In another burglary complaint, Vicki Inman of 610 W. Cuthbert told officers cameras, jewelry and other items were stolen after someone broke into her home sometime Wednesday. Total loss was placed at $1,550. Entry was gained through a window.

Life-threatening bulimia increases among women

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

Bulimia is another horrifying eating disorder that is similar in some respects and with similar causes to those of anorexia nervosa. Both diseases are increasing with alarming frequency particularly in young women in every corner of the country.

What is triggering these horrendous diseases to come out of the closet in almost epidemic proportions today?

The answers to these and other questions of causes and treatment were addressed at a recent seminar at UCLA School of Medicine, which I attended. It turns young women into virtual skeletons and is the result of their distorted attempts to become and stay "thin."

Bulimia is the name given to the syndrome of eating and purging that seems to be affecting increasing percentages of college-age girls. They secretly eat huge quantities of food, especially carbohydrates (starches and sugars), usually stuffing it into their mouths as rapidly as possible, often consuming as much as 20,000 calories at one time. They then make themselves vomit the food back to avoid having it digested and utilized by their body as calories.

Bulimia is described as addictive behavior and they may eat and vomit as many as 10, 12 or 14 times a day. It is not only time-consuming, but may cause severe damage to the stomach and esophagus, as well as the rest of the gastrointestinal tract.

The mental distress may be equally devastating. Fear of being discovered and guilt can create severe emotional distress. Bulimic patients are usually unhappy and often depressed with wide swings of mood fluctuation. As many as 15 to 20 percent may attempt suicide, according to Dr. Peter Vash, clinical instructor, Department of Medicine, UCLA School of Medicine.

Bulimic behavior is triggered by stress, and like anorexia nervosa, the greatest fear is that of being fat. Such fanatical eating restrictions can cause acute physical nutritional deficiencies that in turn can affect normal hormone production. Estrogen, a female hormone may become so depleted that menstruation may be altered or even stopped. Cessation of periods is not uncommon in anorexic or bulimic young women.

Psychological illness and serious medical complication reflect the various stresses that have occurred earlier in life for both anorexia nervosa and bulimia sufferers.

Dr. Michael Strober, associate professor of psychiatry, director of Teenage Eating Disorder Clinic, UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute, cited three distinctive characteristics that may predispose youngsters to such eating disorders.

To put his findings into simplified language, there are :

1. A lack of instability of self image and neurotic apprehensiveness.
2. Self-doubt.
3. Overly rigid discipline and adherence to it.

The personalities of these patients usually were shy, timid and temperamental.

Anorexia nervosa and bulimia seem to be interrelated diseases with similar if not identical family disturbances that predispose the mostly female children to develop symptoms around the age of puberty, and to continue possibly into early adulthood.

One interesting fact about bulimia patients was that in their family backgrounds, there seemed to be a high rate of alcoholism.

Bizarre eating habits should be grounds for suspicion of the beginning of these diseases by anyone, family or friends who may witness them.

Male infertility researched

By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — The long-snouted tree shrew from Thailand looks more like a Walt Disney character than the key to unlocking the mysteries of man's reproductive processes.

Endocrinologist Peter M. Collins, 42, is studying a breeding colony of these shrews at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

"We need a lot more information about what causes infertility in human males and how to treat it," Collins said. "Surprisingly, the anatomy of the reproductive system of these little characters is amazingly similar to human males."

If two male tree shrews are placed in the same cage, one will become the boss. If they are placed side by side in separate cages, the subservient shrew's reproductive system will shut down in a matter of time.

Because of that, Collins said, the tree shrew is a good subject for the study of stress on male fertility.

"In the human male it is difficult to study the hormone requirement for sexual development spread out over a period of 12 to 14 years," the scientist said.

"But the puberty span is only 40 days with tree shrews. And, the biochemical pathway by which male tree shrews produce the sex hormone, testosterone, is similar to the manner in which it is reproduced in man."

Collins' research project is being funded by a $186,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

While the tree shrew has been used in medical research, this apparently is the first time it has been used in male reproductive studies.

The tree shrew colony in Collins' lab is only one of two or three breeding colonies of the animals in the United States. Thailand no longer permits the exportation of the animals.

The long-snouted tree shrew may hold the key to unlocking the mystery of male infertility, according to endocrinologist Peter Collins of the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Exec explains Planned Parenthood's services, goals

EDITOR'S NOTE: Faye Wattleton is president of the Planned Parenthood Federation. Wattleton is the first black and the youngest executive to head the national family planning organization, the largest voluntary health agency in the United States.

She met recently with Copley editors. Here are excerpts of that conversation.

Copley News Service

Q: What is the Planned Parenthood Federation and what are its goals?

A: The Planned Parenthood Federation is comprised of 190 affiliates in 43 states and the District of Columbia.

As the name implies, we are a federation of organizations run by volunteers who provide medical counseling and educational services at the community level. We also operate an international family planning program.

There are between 2,000 and 3,000 staff members worldwide.

Basically, we are committed to providing family planning services.

That program includes meeting the needs of individuals who want to plan their families, working with teenagers who have made the decision to be sexually active, continuing efforts to preserve access to safe and legal abortions and working to promote the improved contraceptive technology.

Q: How is the program funded?

A: Of our $150 million combined budget, we receive about $50 million from the federal government; $12 million of our budget supports our international programs.

Q: Is your organization in conflict in any way with the traditional family role?

A: First of all, parents remain the primary educators of their children. We serve families as well as individuals, enabling them to do a better job. Over 90 percent of our affiliates have organized programs for parents.

But there are times young people need our services. By the time youngsters go to school, it's likely that their attitudes about their bodies and sex already are formed. In some instances, parents and children are unable to discuss these matters together.

What we are doing is attempting to keep the channels of communication between parent and child open.

Q: Are the schools doing all they can insofar as sex education is concerned?

A: It is estimated that less than 10 percent of all the school districts in this country offer sex education programs, and when they do it's usually in high school. That's long after young people have decided to be sexually active, and certainly long after their attitudes about sex have been formed.

Schools need to be encouraged to look at sex education as just one aspect of organized education. At this point, while some improvement is seen, schools really are not doing an effective job.

Q: Are young people promiscuous?

A: Our experience is that young people frequently have one sexual partner and that they have stable relationships with that partner. We often see young people characterized as being promiscuous, as having a different partner every night and that they are irrational and irresponsible. That is not the case.

Starla Adams

Sisters qualify for nationals

Starla Adams, age 9, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Adams of Midland, won first place at the Texas State Twirling Pageant recently in San Antonio.

Starla was judged on twirling, T-strut, modeling and an interview. This is the fourth consecutive year she has qualified for the National World Competition to be held this month at Notre Dame University in South Bend, Indiana.

Starla's older sister, Gina, age 13, will also attend the competition since she qualified recently by winning the 1983 Miss Southwest Regional Majorette title in Kansas City, Kansas. Starla also won first runner-up in that competition.

Starla attends Emerson Elementary School and is the new junior varsity twirler for the "Steelers" in her school.

AT WIT'S END

She doesn't believe

By ERMA BOMBECK

We're a country of believers. Especially we believe everything we read.

It probably goes back to the days of Virginia O'Hanlon, who questioned the existence of Santa Claus and was told by her father, "If you read it in the New York Sun it is so."

I believe most of what I read. Let us just say I've been cautious since the day I followed a recipe that had me adding eight cups of rice to 1/2 cup boiling water.

Besides, there are a lot of crazies around who write with their terminals on overload.

For example, I've read a rash of stories lately about how you can perform simple exercises while going about your daily routine so that no one will notice. Like while you are pushing a grocery cart you can use the cart handles as a ballet bar, sweeping down into a plie position and up again, pretending to pick up a piece of lettuce.

I wouldn't do that if I were you.

Another one had you doing entire routines while cleaning your house. It sounded so simple to bend over my vacuum sweeper and extend my right leg straight behind me while I touched my head to my knee. That was just before the sweeper sucked my nightgown into it, causing me to nearly pass out.

Still another story suggested that exercises can be done so discreetly on an airline that your fellow passengers would have no clue as to what you are doing.

Wrap both arms around your shoulders and give yourself a big hug. Then let your head drop back and look up in the overhead compartment and start to chew to relax your facial muscles.

Now if someone hasn't tapped out an SOS on the call button by this time, relax your shoulders and arms to make a circle with one shoulder 10 times before you reverse and roll your shoulders backward.

I'm not telling you what to do, mind you, but when the kids were smaller, I read where you could exercise in the privacy of your car as you went about your daily errands. Since my stomach muscles had fallen around my knees, I chose to do the old Traffic Light Muscle Toner. Whenever I stopped the car, I would inhale, contract my stomach muscles together and squeeze my buttocks to the count of 10. One day I saw a driver in the car next to mine stare at my beet-red face with some concern. I smiled. He made a U-turn over a median and went the other way very fast.

That's the day I realized Virginia O'Hanlon's father lied.

Fall pants on narrow path

Hearst
Feature Service

Pants will follow the straight and fairly narrow path next fall.

Taken as "no news" by much of the world press covering the fashion previews at home and abroad, this was the principal reason why many reports said that pants just weren't in the lineup for the upcoming season, even though there were actually lots of them on the international runways.

The fact that trend-setting designers have foregone any variations on the pants theme – after all, what's left? – and have reverted to the same unexaggerated, simple shape that made them popular for city wear in the first place comes as good news to the many women who have taken to trousers as an integral part of their wardrobes. For a while there, it seemed that women who didn't go for bloomers or culottes, harems or skin tights or city shorts were destined to wear skirts, day and night.

Many big-names designers have included complete pantsuits in their fall collections, and others have made coordinated jackets and tops. Yves St. Laurent has done this, and nothing could be a smarter addition to the wardrobe of the dedicated pants-wearer than YSL's velvet pants in jewel tones, with a long, big-shouldered coat in the same fabric.

DEAR ABBY

Majority silent

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: So Dear Abby is recommending that 40-year-old widows indulge in torrid love affairs with inexperienced boys of 18, and vice versa, is she? Shame on her! At least that was the impression you gave when you published the letters from a "painfully shy, 18-year-old boy" and three 40-year-old widows, with the announcement that your mail was running 10-to-1 in their favor.

At least you might have allowed some space for the other opinion, even though it was only 10 percent.

After all, the widows who have indulged in such love affairs were more likely to write in than the many more who haven't. And as you should know, the truth of the matter doesn't depend on the majority opinion — least of all on the opinion of the vocal majority.

May I remind you that "empty vessels make the most noise"? — MALE READER, TOKYO, JAPAN

DEAR READERS: You're right. I should have given space to the other side, and I apologize for the omission. But may I remind you, sir, that a woman is neither a "vessel" nor is she necessarily "empty."

Some full vessels have been known to make a lot of noise — depending upon what they're full of.

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to tell the father in Texas who hit the roof when his 17-year-old son wanted to cook dinner for the family that he should have encouraged his son to do so.

If that teen-aged boy were to take a serious interest in cooking, he could end up becoming a gourmet chef and perhaps even owning his own restaurant one day.

The man I am going to marry is no sissy. He holds several records for weightlifting and is a graduate of the Culinary Institute of America. Plus, he owns his own restaurant in the Pocono Mountains.

I am thrilled! I will eat well for the rest of my life because he has promised to do all the cooking after we're married. Sign me ... PROUD AND PLUMP IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR P. AND P.: Congratulations. But who's going to do the dishes?

DEAR ABBY: I am a 44-year-old successful professional woman. My husband is a 48-year-old unemployed college graduate. We've been married for nine years. (This is the second marriage for both of us.)

Since our marriage, he has had 14 jobs! He is healthy, able-bodied and intelligent, but he always has a good excuse for not working. I'm never sure whether he quit or was fired.

We are buying a home that will not be paid for until the year 2000! Last night he informed me that he was not happy working at any job, and since he has the right to be "happy," he intends to stay home and look after our dog. (We have no children.)

So that means I am to continue working to support us! He is so lazy that when he's home doing nothing, he hires someone to mow the lawn and water the plants!

Where do I go from here? — HAD IT

DEAR HAD IT: Face it, you married a lazy loser. Only you know whether you'd be better off with him than without him. Answer that question, and you won't need Dear Abby to tell you where you should go from here.

(If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

An intimate corner for dining is created in a portion of a living room, using a glass table and two upholstered chairs. Glass top is supported by a glass base delicately edged in a foliage motif.

Create your own dining room

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I have no dining room in my apartment but I want to create a small space for dining at one end of my living room.

I also have to install curtains in the room with two large windows.

The room is already carpeted in a soft sea green and walls matching.

I have a pair of off-white sofas and cream lacquer coffee table.

What fabric should I use in curtains. I would like to add more color to the room. What should it be? — C.A.M.

A. Often dining space can be created with a glass-top table and upholstered chairs which can double for occasional chairs in the living room.

To create an airy feeling choose a light green, cream and perhaps rose, coral or pink sheer fabric. Cover a curtain rod in the shirred fabric with side panels of the print fabric.

Cover a small, light screen in fabric to use to close off the dining area when you wish. Choose the rose, coral or pink from the print fabric for dining chair seats.

Accessorize with cream lamps and interesting prints and art objects.

Ingenuity stretches cosmetics dollars

By COLLETTE BOUCHEZ
Copley News Service

Although buying new cosmetics is an inexpensive way of giving us a lift in these tough economic times, your beauty budget often has to go for other things. So we simply make do with what we have.

What we have on hand doesn't last forever! However, with a little ingenuity, we can make our products last longer and really get the most for our beauty dollar. Try these helpful hints to make products "go the distance!"

NAIL POLISH: If your favorite color is running low, simply puncture a hole in a capsule of vitamin E and squeeze the liquid into your polish bottle. Shake vigorously and you'll have a rejuvenated "nail slicker" that conditions as it colors.

LIQUID FOUNDATION: To get the most out of your liquid makeup, add a few drops of your favorite oil-free moisturizer and shake well. The foundation won't change color, will be easier to apply and better for your skin. Even if your foundation is water-based, don't add water to thin. All foundations contain some oil which will separate from the color when water is added.

CREME BLUSHER: If creme blush becomes dry and hard to spread, dip your finger in a solid consistency hand or body cream before touching blush.

Nutrition key to diet

By COLLETTE BOUCHEZ
Copley News Service

"I went through every kind of fad diet there was. ... I tried high protein, low protein, Scarsdale, Beverly Hills, anything I could find. They all helped me lose weight, but none helped me keep it off until I discovered the secret of dieting that works!"

The quote is from the gorgeous (and very slim!) MARKIE POST, who appears each week as Terri Michaels, the sassy, sexy law student-bail bondswoman who often aids the equally sexy LEE MAJORS in and out of capers on the hit show, "The Fall Guy," and she definitely has the secret to good looks!

"About four years ago," said Markie, "I quit smoking and began to nibble. And although I didn't get obese, I put on more weight than I needed and I began to panic, running around trying all the fad diets.

"Then," she continues, "one day I picked up a copy of James Brody's nutrition book, which advocates eating three square meals a day, just like you learned in nutrition class; I started doing that and the weight came off and stayed off.

"What I realized was that when the body is starved for proper nutrition, it can't function right, and the weight loss is not a healthy one. By eating right I lost weight, had energy, was never hungry, and I stayed slim."

In addition to this sound nutritional plan, which Markie continues to follow even though she is down to her ideal weight, she also exercises every day, but for far less time than you might expect.

"I have one of these small trampolines," she says, "and I run on it for about 15 minutes a day. I used to jog on the track, but I found that my muscles were always sore and I was getting bulky, especially in my claves."

Judy Alter demonstrates the wrong way to do a sit-up, (top) and the right way.

Author warns exercise may stretch the point

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

You do exercises, right?

You have this little routine you do at home in the morning or you go to the gym for a warm-up before you jog.

You twist to whittle your waist, do sit-ups to strengthen your abdomen, neck rolls to avoid a double chin, back bends for suppleness and bouncy calf stretches to loosen up vour leg muscles, right?

Well, you may be doing your body more harm than good. Those exercises are some of the most harmful you can do, says Judy Alter, a dancer and assistant professor of dance at the University of Wisconsin in Madison, because they do not both stretch and strengthen the muscles involved. They contract the muscles.

Alter's theory is that in order for muscles to be toned they must be both stretched and strengthened. And her just-released soft-cover book, "Surviving Exercise" ($5.95), published by Houghton Mifflin Co., is about her theory on how to exercise correctly.

So how come this dance teacher knows so much about exercising, and the rest of us are out there doing it all wrong?

Good question, Alter says. Not everybody is wrong; in fact, most people just haven't thought enough about the exercising they are doing. The guidelines she has set up in her book are based, she says, on information from physical education instructors and anatomy specialists.

"It's not me against the world," she said in an interview, "but my way of getting people stretched is a breakthrough."

"Stretch" and "strengthen" are the principles behind the series of exercises Alter recommends. To illustrate: bend your hand at the wrist; the muscles on the palm side shorten, or contract, while the muscles at the back of the wrist lengthen, or stretch. Movement almost always involves the contraction of some muscles and the stretching of others, Alter said.

"The problem is that daily activity does not produce a balance of stretching and strengthening for muscles. A balance is necessary to tone the muscles so the body can move efficiently and smoothly.

"Take walking, running, biking and swimming. They're all excellent activities for building and maintaining cardiovascular fitness, which is tone in the heart and lungs. But these activities mainly contract muscles." And if the contracted muscles don't get fully stretched out, she says, the joints become vulnerable and susceptible to excess stress, which in turn leads to injury.

The key to exercising correctly is to stretch muscles you have strengthened, to strengthen muscles you have stretched and to stop any and all activity if it hurts, she says.

She analyzes some of the drawbacks of current exercising programs:

— Machines. Workouts on such equipment as Nautilus. "Good because slow down-and-up is built into the machines. Should be a safe system but instructors often don't teach exercisers to stretch their muscles before and after ... what the machines do to the low back is so straining, so stressful that I cringe. Instructors may know how to work the machines, but they don't know about the body."

— Weights. "Working with weights has more dangers than the machines, but they are similar. Normal people don't need all this much competitive training. Back and knee strain."

— Aerobic Dancing. "Jacki Sorensen has packaged a popular, good idea but she doesn't have the proper warm-up. To get the body ready for cardiovascular fitness you have to get the body's temperature up from resting, and that could take an hour. This program does not ready muscles in a balanced way. You don't get the calf muscles ready or correctly strengthen the abdominal muscles. There's unnecessary swinging and bouncing."

Muffins nutritious breakfast treat

OATMEAL MUFFINS

1 cup plain low-fat yogurt
1 egg
1¼ cups flour
¾ cup quick-cooking rolled oats
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon baking soda

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Grease muffin tins lightly or line with cupcake papers. In a 2-cup measuring cup, measure yogurt and oil; and egg; stir to combine. In a bowl combine remaining dry ingredients. Add yogurt mixture to flour mixture, stirring approximately 25 strokes. Fill muffin tins to the rim. Bake for 20 minutes. Yield: 8 large muffins.

Teen-age girls accused in death of paraplegic vet

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — The scene described was as chilling as it was bizarre in the blackness of Cleveland National Forest in Southern California.

Investigators say that four girls — ranging from the pudgy-cheeked innocence of a 13-year-old to a street-toughened companion four years older — wrestled a weakened, blood-soaked paraplegic from his shiny new van.

With a heave in unison, according to court testimony and records, they tumbled the nude figure 40 feet down a rugged embankment along an isolated road in the forest.

"He didn't roll all the way," the 13-year-old would tell sheriff's detectives later. "Then Joyce (Largo) goes, 'Let's push him more down.'"

She scrambled after the motionless figure, raised a large rock high above her head and hurled it — twice — into his skull, the youngest girl said.

Dick Harry Sherwood, who had survived Vietnam and a crippling car injury in Germany, did not die from those blows but lived on to succumb to wintry exposure.

With what authorities called incredible endurance, he had already lived through stab wounds in his legs, burns on his abdomen and buttocks, choking and beatings from an unlikely quartet of young female attackers.

In the end, the 36-year-old Yuma, Ariz., resident died in the mountains he had traveled to admire. The raw elements nearly 4,000 feet up on the mountainside proved to be his final torture.

San Diego County Sheriff's Detectives Dave Decker and Norm Crawford searched three nights later, on March 18, through intermittent snow and rain to find his body. Sherwood's right hand still clutched a barren clump of sagebrush.

Prosecutors called it a case of escalating savagery; a defense lawyer for the youngest termed it an "animal-like" attack by the older girls. What apparently started only as a way of silencing the twisted cries of Sherwood for help soon became systematic brutality.

Details began emerging in the first trial in the case, where the 13-year-old was convicted of second-degree murder. However, the evidence — and interviews with those willing to talk about it — hardly answer the question of how four females of tender age could commit such brutal acts.

The diminutive 13-year-old, from the Logan Heights section of San Diego, casually chatted with Crawford and Decker about a television show involving a lie detector before her March 23 questioning. With occasional profanity and seeming nonchalance about her role, she was pressed on why she had participated.

"I knew it was wrong, but I don't know why," she said. "I didn't hit him that much."

Her friend of three years, a 14-year-old, also will be tried. Largo, 16, and 17-year-old Margarita Ann Benjamin have pleaded not guilty and will face charges as adults. The four are accused of the March 15 robbery, kidnapping and killing of Sherwood.

While the defendants are no strangers to the juvenile justice system, none had been handled for serious offenses. Glimpses into their backgrounds show indications of broken homes, early bouts with alcohol, some drug usage and a communal-type existence where fundamental family life and schooling were already forgotten in young minds.

"This cannot be viewed in traditional terms of a middle-class existence," said San Diego Deputy District Attorney Craig Rooten. "These were different lifestyles."

The 68-year-old father of the youngest defendant brushed tears back from his eyes as he emerged from a rest room during one break in the trial of his daughter.

"It has been rough, trying for the past 11 years to be mother and father to three children," he said. "I tried to do the best I could, but I'm bitter now about a lot of things. When this is all over I'm going to tell other parents about the schools and the other problems."

The Social Security retiree hustled odd jobs and struggled to rebound from a 1972 divorce. His daughter told police that her mother's last known address was a house in Tijuana, Mexico, that had since burned down.

The girl had a brief stay in a foster home, had been ejected from her house and was a dropout from junior high school.

The others, from east San Diego County communities of Alpine and Campo and the Viejas Indian Reservation, reflected similar difficulties in their pasts.

"Joyce Largo lived pretty much to her own will, wishes and dictates over the last year, not only in defiance but in ignorance," Juvenile Court Referee Bruce Ferguson said in determining that she would be tried as an adult. "She comes across as a girl who is unhappy."

Ferguson reviewed previous probation reports and parental interviews on the girl in making his finding.

"She does not like to be bossed around or controlled by others," he said. "She gets into fights a lot — and feels that the others deserved it."

Joyce Largo, 16, left, and Magarita Ann Benjamin, 17, are accused of murder in the brutal death of Dick Harry Sherwood, a paraplegic Vietnam War veteran. Sherwood died on a Southern California mountainside while he was visiting a national forest.

Time, money not spent wisely on diet plans

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Are Americans spending their dollars and time wisely on diet and exercise programs?

"No," says Dr. Peter Wood, professor of medicine (research), Stanford University School of Medicine, and deputy director of the Stanford Heart Disease Prevention Program.

"In view of the millions of dollars Americans spend on weight loss programs and fitness, it is incredible that they swallow so much dietary nonsense," he says.

"We pay large sums of money to support legitimate scientific research on health, and then perversely choose to follow the latest unschooled huckster who promises to show us how to lose 20 pounds in a week," adds Wood.

According to Wood, to be acceptable, any diet plan should incorporate these 10 features:

— Safety: The diet must provide through various foods sufficient nutrients and vitamins to meet the body's needs.

— Effectiveness: Proper, well-balanced diets take time. Diets that are too fast, too ambitious or make ridiculous claims will usually fail.

— Inexpensive: A successful weight loss diet will stress inexpensive, healthful foods as well as exercise that can be designed to suit your lifestyle. Walking, cycling, swimming and jogging are basically sound, inexpensive exercises and burn off many calories. No pills, expensive "diet aids" or health spas are needed.

— Scientific: A successful and permanent reduction of weight is based on science. It is always nice to dream about effortless and struggle-free weight loss programs, but science tells us otherwise.

Rod Stewart food poisoned

Rod Stewart

ROME (AP) — La Dolce Vita has caught up with rock star Rod Stewart, who was forced to cancel a concert because he was suffering from food poisoning.

Concert promoter Francesco Sanvio said the singer canceled Wednesday's performance after a doctor gave him the bad news.

Stewart, 38, became ill early in the day at his Rome hotel. Sanvio said Dr. Paolo Palange told Stewart that he had food poisoning and would have to stay in bed for at least three days.

The Scotland native was scheduled to play his second concert on a tour of Italy at Pisa.

Jackie Gleason

NEW YORK (AP) — Jackie Gleason's bus driver's uniform, worn when he played Brooklynite Ralph Cramden in "The Honeymooners," may be put on display at Brooklyn Borough Hall before being donated to the Smithsonian Institution.

Assemblyman Thomas Catapano of Brooklyn said Wednesday that the uniform, purchased for $650 Saturday at an auction at Gleason's North Miami mansion, symbolizes the fact that "the honeymoon is not yet over between Americans and 'The Honeymooners.' "

Catapano, who helped raise money to buy the uniform, said he was working to have it displayed at Borough Hall. Before it goes to the Smithsonian, he said, the uniform will be displayed at the March convention of RALPH, the Greenvale-based Royal Association for the Longevity and Preservation of the Honeymooners.

The legislator is a member of RALPH, which raised the money to buy the uniform.

Loretta Lynn

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Country music star Loretta Lynn, hospitalized three days for exhaustion, was resting at a motel here before heading to Nevada for a Friday night performance.

Miss Lynn, 48, checked out of Springhill Memorial Hospital on Wednesday. She was admitted Sunday after becoming ill at the airport.

"All we can say is that she was suffering from exhaustion," a hospital spokeswoman said.

Miss Lynn had performed at an outdoor country music festival in Freeport, Fla., and was scheduled to fly to Los Angeles for NBC's "Tonight Show" Wednesday.

The "Tonight Show" appearance was canceled, but a spokeswoman at Loretta Lynn Enterprises Inc. in Nashville said Miss Lynn will open an engagement at Harrah's in Lake Tahoe, Nev., on Friday.

Miss Lynn has experienced similar problems with exhaustion in the past.

John Y. Brown

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — When Gov. John Y. Brown Jr., who is recovering from open-heart surgery, finally leaves the intensive care ward, he won't go into a semiprivate room like other patients.

Instead, the governor will recuperate in a private hallway.

Doctors at the University of Kentucky Medical Center have set aside an area adjacent to the unit where Brown has been recovering from open-heart surgery and a severe lung condition since June 26.

The governor will be able to confer with his aides and will have privacy, according to Dr. Edward P. Todd, his surgeon.

"Most patients would later go to a semiprivate room, but this man deserves an opportunity to recover as any normal patient would," Todd said Wednesday. "Every time that man would have been taken into the hall to walk, to do the exercises necessary, he would not have been allowed to do that in an appropriate fashion."

Brown, 49, was restless and frustrated earlier in the week but by Wednesday was smiling repeatedly at his wife, former Miss America Phyllis George Brown, 34, when she visited him.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock 'n' roller Ozzy Osbourne, who once bit the head off a bat during a concert, has been offered a lifetime membership in the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The invitation from the ASPCA's New York office arrived this week after the organization received a $1,000 check courtesy of Osbourne, the British singer's press agent Kevin Kennedy said Wednesday.

As winner of two Ampex Golden Reel Awards last month for selling a million copies each of his "Blizzard of Ozz" and "Diary of a Madman" albums, Osbourne was entitled to have a $1,000 check sent to each of two charities of his choice.

Osbourne donated the other $1,000 check to the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Los Angeles, which wrote a thank-you note but has so far issued no membership offer.

The former Black Sabbath lead singer has denied that unusual acts involving animals are a part of his flamboyant stage show. Kennedy said the bat-biting incident in Des Moines, Iowa, was totally "off the cuff."

'M*A*S*H,' 'Archie Bunker's Place' makes CBS No. 1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was like a brief return to the good old days: "M*A*S*H" was first in the television ratings for the past week and "Archie Bunker's Place" was third.

The two venerable shows, both leaving the air at the end of summer, demonstrated they still pack ratings muscle. They helped give CBS another first-place finish in the Nielsen ratings for the week ended July 3.

CBS was at the top of the A.C. Nielsen Co. survey with a rating of 12.6. ABC was second with 11.6 and NBC was in third place with 11.2. The networks say this means that in an average prime time minute, 12.6 percent of the country's TV homes were tuned to CBS.

"M*A*S*H" ended the 1982-83 season in third place, due in part to its smashing windup of 11 years on the air. The 2½-hour final original episode on Feb. 28 broke all viewing records. The series temporarily left the air and on its return on April 18 it was out of the money for a while until it bounced back in the ratings in June.

CBS' "Archie Bunker's Place," which began life as "All in the Family," was a ratings hit after a slow start. But all of the original cast but Carroll O'Connor left, and its ratings slipped.

Walesa says Solidarity leaders planning action

SOKOLOW PODLASKI, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, putting himself squarely into Solidarity's future, said today the outlawed labor movement's leaders were completing "an effective program" of action.

He did not rule out further strikes or demonstrations.

On a fishing holiday, he was asked in an interview with The Associated Press about possible disruptive action.

"It is too early today, but I will make a statement on that," he said.

Walesa said 90 percent of Poland was behind the Solidarity movement. In any case, he said, "small groups are working out the program ....Figures are not important."

Since Pope John Paul II visited his native Poland last month, reports have persisted that Walesa might step out of his role as Solidarity leader.

"We will never leave the road we are on now ....Me and people like me. I want to continue the struggle for our ideas, and Solidarity's banner fits that best," Walesa said.

He declined comment on his private meeting with the pope or on the impact of the papal visit. But he predicted a difficult struggle for Solidarity.

"Some of our action will bear fruit, and sometimes we will be in jail," he said, speaking calmly as he loaded spinning gear into his van.

As he spoke, a bare-chested burly man in coveralls took pictures from across the road. His colleague spoke into a police radio. A second unmarked car waited up the road.

Walesa took his wife, Danuta, and three of his children to visit Danuta's sister in this lakeside town 60 miles east of Warsaw.

He went on vacation in defiance of authorities at his workplace in Gdansk, the Lenin Shipyards where the independent trade union Solidarity was forged in 1980.Officials of the Gdansk shipyard, where he works as an electrician, said he left without leave from work Monday and might be fired if he did not report back.

Asked if he expected fellow workers to protest if disciplinary action was taken against him, he replied, smiling: 'Everything is possible in Poland. It's a strange country."

He vowed on Wednesday to go to court to battle for his job if necessary.

"If they do fire me, at least I'll have more time for myself, and I'll be free from surveillance more easily," Walesa said.

Shipyard personnel director Danuta Oczki told the AP by telephone today, "Nothing has changed. We don't make rash decisions as far as our staff is concerned. If he presents a justifiable excuse, he will be able to return to normal work. Nobody stands in his way."

In the interview today, Walesa stressed that he hoped Solidarity's objectives could be met without damaging Poland's crippled economy.

"At the first stage of our struggle, on the basis of Solidarity, bright people with brains and ideas appeared. We should get them together to work on the program."

Meanwhile, he said, small groups of unionists were making plans. He said he hoped for peaceful solutions but did not exclude strikes and demonstrations.

Ten reported dead in building collapse

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Six French soldiers and four Lebanese construction workers were found dead in the rubble of a bomb-damaged four-story building, a French officer said today.

The body of the last French soldier was dug out early today after a nightlong search under floodlights by French soldiers in the multinational peacekeeping force, Maj. Rene Roqes said.

He said one Lebanese worker was found alive with only minor injuries during the night.

Nazih Chamoun, chief of the Lebanese Civil Defense, said today the search for victims was over and bulldozers and cranes were clearing up the rubble.

Roqes said two French soldiers were found alive but injured in the rubble. The major said one was seriously hurt "but his life is not in danger."

The building in mostly Moslem west Beirut's lighthouse district was badly damaged by a bomb June 11, 1982, and later was declared unsafe for habitation.

The bombing, during the first week of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, killed at least 19 people.

Teen-ager's kidnapper wants John Paul's attacker freed

ROME (AP) — An extortionist who seized the teen-age daughter of a Vatican messenger says he will free her if authorities release the Turkish gunman who shot Pope John Paul II, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

The agency said Wednesday that an anonymous caller claimed he abducted Emanuela Orlandi, 15, who disappeared June 22 after leaving a music lesson.

ANSA also said the caller claimed he had contacted the Vatican and presented his demand but was ignored. The agency said police confirmed the Vatican had received a message from the kidnapper. The Vatican refused to comment.

"Listen to me well," ANSA quoted the caller as saying. "We have Emanuela Orlandi, the music student. We will free her only when Mehmet Ali Agca, the papal attacker, is freed."

Agca shot John Paul in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981. He was sentenced to life in prison for the crime.

Patrol finds decapitated bodies

AYACUCHO, Peru (AP) — The military command says an army patrol found the bodies of six men and two women who were decapitated by members of the radical Shining Path guerrilla group.

A communique issued Wednesday by the Anti-Subversive Operations Command said the bodies were found near the town of Palca in southern Peru. It also said the guerrillas had stolen 300 head of sheep and 150 head of cattle.

Private firms can compete

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Private firms will be allowed to compete in banking, insurance and certain other industries now run by the government, under a new law approved by Portugal's Parliament.

The law, proposed by the Socialist-led government of Prime Minister Mario Soares and approved by a 149-44 vote Wednesday, is viewed by economists as a first step toward liberalizing the nationalized economy.

The law allows private firms to compete with the state sector in banking, insurance and the cement and fertilizer industries. It does not call for outright denationalization of sectors taken over by the state after a 1974 leftist revolution.

Suspected gangsters sentenced

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Sixty-eight suspected members of the Camorra crime gang have been sentenced to jail terms ranging from 16 months to six years.

All the defendants were accused of criminal delinquency, a catch-all charge used by police to prosecute suspected gangsters.They were accused of belonging to the Nuova Famiglia (New Family) branch of the Camorra, the Naples version of the Sicilian Mafia.

Court officials said the stiffest sentence issued Wednesday was given to Luigi Vollaro, considered a leading member of the gang that makes huge profits from drug smuggling, extortion and other rackets.

Japanese to go to Moscow

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese Foreign Ministry delegation will travel to Moscow next week to sound out Soviet officials on nuclear arms control talks in Geneva and other international issues, a ministry spokesman said today.

Japan is strongly against deployment of Soviet SS-20 missiles in Soviet Asia and has urged that arms reduction negotiations not be carried out "at the expense of Asia."

During working-level meetings scheduled for July 14-15, the delegates also will discuss the agenda for the forthcoming U.N. General Assembly session, the official said.

The meeting will be the first official Japanese-Soviet contact on the intermediate-range nuclear missile issue since the Williamsburg, Va., summit, where the major Western allies agreed that nuclear talks should be held on a "global basis." Japan has protested Soviet statements that it might transfer SS-20 missiles to Siberia in exchange for reduction of missiles deployed in Europe.

Pope thanks Black Madonna

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, speaking in Polish at his general audience in St. Peter's Square, thanked the Black Madonna of Jasna Gora for his pilgrimage to Poland last month.

"Mother of Jasna Gora, you allowed me to fulfill the desire of my heart, and at the same time, the wish of so many of my compatriots," the pope said Wednesday."I pray to you once again, place the entire nation under your protection."

The religious highlight of the trip was the pope's stop at the Jasna Gora shrine at Czestochowa to mark the 600th anniversary of the arrival there of the Black Madonna icon.

The pope made no reference to the political situation in his homeland, or the recent visit with Polish bishops who came to Rome last week.

Divers to search for soldiers

TOKYO (AP) — A team of divers and other experts will be sent to the Truk Islands this fall to search for the remains of 530 Japanese soldiers who died when their ships were sunk during World War II.

Most of the 33 ships sank when American bombers attacked the Truk Islands on Feb. 17-18, 1944, according to Shigeto Hirabayashi, an official of the Ministry of Health and Welfare who announced the plan Wednesday.

Last month the government of Truk, a U.S. trust territory, approved a Japanese request for preliminary explorations, and the ministry will send a team to locate some of the ships known to have sunk in the area, Hirabayashi said.

Japanese, American toys in competition

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Hello Kitty, the Japanese line of children's novelties and accessories bearing the moon-faced feline logo, has taken aim at a share of the American toy business. At the same time, Mattel Toys has introduced a Poochie fancy goods line that it says is already yapping at Kitty's heels.

Such fluffy nonsense is big business for novelty and toy retailers. Hello Kitty in the U.S. alone racked up sales last year of $32 million.

Now Sanrio Inc., the American subsidiary of the Tokyo-based Sanrio Co. Ltd., has licensed CBS Toys of New York to make and sell the cat's likeness on plush toys, juvenile furniture and figurines. CBS introduced the line – targeted at a preschool audience – into the toy market this February, and orders are already 25 percent ahead of projection, according to Don Y. Yamada, Sanrio Inc.'s vice president of sales/marketing.

"Now Hello Kitty will be in the toy market, which will bring in more awareness and exposure to Hello Kitty," Yamada said in a telephone interview from his New York office.

The recession and increased competitive pressure in the licensing industry brought Sanrio its first flat year in fiscal 1982 in its six-year American venture, Yamada said.

To try to recapture its early success, the firm is "revitalizing" its campaign by expanding distribution of its present line – which includes My Melody rabbit, Little Twin Stars angels and the Tuxedo Sam penquin, along with related animals and items like hard candy, erasers, grooming items all the way up to the operational Hello Kitty telephone – into more department and gift stores, as well as some toy outlets.

"We also hope to double the number of independent Sanrio boutique stores from 60 to 120 in our next fiscal year," says David Andrusia, marketing manager for Sanrio Inc.

Geared to kid-size wallets, the line retails for 5 cents to $140, with most items selling for $3 to $3.50.

Eleven-year-old wins Rolls-Royce

MIAMI (AP) — An 11-year-old girl beat out about 60,000 other entrants to win a drawing for a $55,000 Rolls-Royce, and she says the sleek automobile will probably help put her through college.

Kimberly Shuler of Monroe, N.Y., was visiting her grandparents in April when she put her name in the pot at the Place For Steak restaurant.

She had to wait until Tuesday to hear the result of the drawing Monday, because the family was "out watching fireworks," said her grandfather, Dr. Harry Weisberger of Miami.

"She didn't want to believe it," he said. "I had to keep reassuring her."

Kimberly said she isn't sure what to do with the luxury automobile, a Rolls Silver Cloud III seven years older than she is, but she did say it was better than a Chevrolet.

"It's nicer and bigger and it costs a lot more," she said.

Weisberger, 63, a retired physician from Michigan, said he and his wife Mollie saw the drawing Monday night on television.

FDA advises against use of experimental Cambridge diet

Dear Dr. Solomon: You may have written about the Cambridge diet before but, if so, I missed it. Can I have your opinion of it? — Lois, Port Arthur, Texas

Dear Lois: How about the opinion of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA)? The FDA advises against the unsupervised use of the Cambridge diet or, for that matter, of any very low-calorie diet, because they are experimental. The agency has received well over 100 reports of illness associated with use of the diet since November 1981.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If all the people who were heavy on the salt got high blood pressure, there would be a lot more people with high blood pressure than I think there are. If that's the case, why do doctors recommend that everyone cut down on the amount of salt they use? It would make more sense to me if they went after those who were getting high blood pressure. — Edwin, Dallas

Dear Edwin: It has been estimated that from 25 to 30 percent of people who have a high-sodium diet eventually develop hypertension. If there were some way to identify this segment of the population, the recommendations about following a salt-restricted diet could be limited to this group. The trouble is that it is not possible to identify these people in advance.

On the other hand there is no evidence that restricting the intake of salt is harmful. It therefore seems advisable to recommend moderation in the use of salt for everyone.

Dear Dr. Solomon: It is well known that patients with cancer often lose their appetite. Is there anything that can be done by the family to get them to try to eat a little more? — Francine, Newport, R.I.

Dear Francine: Dr. David A. Karlin, of the University of Texas in Houston, has written about the problem of weight loss in cancer patients. He suggests that an effort be made to make the general environment and the food as attractive as possible, thus alleviating some of the psychological factors that might discourage a patient from eating. If the patient has an aversion to a certain food, a substitute should be sought. And if a patient complains of feeling full shortly after beginning to eat, smaller feedings should be given more often.

Some patients may benefit from liquid nutritional supplements, and some from zinc supplements. The use of alcohol as an appetite stimulant is another possibility. Finally, drugs may be used to combat the nausea and the pain that often interfere with eating.

For Selma, Philadelphia, Penn.: Sugar substitutes can be used in cooking, but you should be careful about what you use for which purpose. For example, if you are preparing sauces or syrups or other items of liquid nature, a liquid sweetener might be best. On the other hand, granulated sugar substitutes are good for baking because they add to the volume of the food being prepared. Saccharin however, becomes bitter if it is heated for any length of time.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have psoriasis and I would like to know if moving to a drier climate would help me. I work from out of my house, so I could actually live anywhere in the United States and run my business exactly as I do now. Would getting away from some of this humidity help me? — Mr. J.J., Tampa, Fla.

Dear Mr. J.: There is some evidence that a dry climate may aggravate psoriasis rather than improve the condition. Psoriasis hardly is known in some regions, such as the southern part of Japan, where the humidity is very high. However, the incidence of psoriasis is high in northern Japan, where the humidity is rather low.

It appears that patients with psoriasis who live in humid areas, where the skin remains moist, do better than those who live in arid regions.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine is a career woman who was married for 12 years before she decided to start a family. Because she was in her middle thirties, she had her fluid tested to see if the baby was alright. It turned out bad and she has had an abortion. But the doctor waited a very long time before my friend was given the choice. Is there any sense to waiting so long after the test is made before doing the abortion? — Ms. D.S., Philadelphia

Dear Ms. S.: The delay between amniocentesis and abortion, assuming the fetus is malformed and the parents choose to have the pregnancy aborted, is not a matter of choice but of necessity. If a diagnosis of a fetal malformation is made on the basis of findings as the result of amniocentesis, there is a delay of from three to four weeks. This is a fact of life that the physician can do nothing about.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has a wart on her hand and she wants to get it removed. Is this a good idea? If you feel it should be taken off, what is the best way to have it done? — Mrs. J.H., Lexington, Mass.

Dear Mrs. H.: Most warts will disappear with time, so often the best treatment is no treatment. However, a patient may want to have a wart removed if it is growing larger or is becoming painful. Cosmetic considerations may also prompt a person to have it removed.

There is no single treatment that is most effective for removing warts. Among the available procedures are cryotherapy (the use of cold), chemotherapy, and electrosurgery. Some og the newer methods may produce adverse side effects and I suggest that they not be used. The best approach would be to have your daughter seen by a dermatologist.

For Sean, Duluth, Minn.: According to researchers at Florida State University, smoking may have a depressing effect on a man's sex life. They emphasize that their findings apply to the short-term effects of smoking, and do not suggest that smoking is a cause of impotence.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Crane has female justices

CRANE (AP) — When Justice of the Peace Imogene Garrett used to be an Avon lady, she had trouble collecting bills. That's one of the reasons she likes being a judge better.

"You always get paid in this job," she told the Dallas Morning News.

Mrs. Garrett, who is on her third term in office, is one the four female peace justices in Crane County, whose only city is Crane.

There is also Mary Teague, who was elected in 1958 and at 74 is the veteran of the four, Mildred Chandler, who was elected last fall, and Wilma Clark who was elected in 1975.

"We have a lot of power," Mrs. Garrett said, "We can rap the best and put them in jail. It seems like the justice of the peace has always been funny business, where someone slips off to get married. But we handle some pretty serious business."

Texas officials say it's not unusual for Texas to have female justices; one out of every four JPs in Texas is a woman. But they don't offer any revelations why Crane County appears to have corned the market.

It may have to do with the frontier spirit of the city, which has a population of 3,600 and is located about 30 miles south of Odessa in West Texas. The countryside is flat, except for the scrub brush dotting the land and oil rigs quietly pumping gas.

Lawyer fined for conduct on plane

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A lawyer was fined $300 and assessed $8,250 in civil penalties for conduct aboard a United Airlines jet after crew members said he and his friends grabbed stewardesses, burned money and made statements about hijacking the plane to Cuba.

At a hearing Tuesday, Charles O'Reilly, 42, a Los Angeles attorney, was also given a 90-day suspended jail sentence and six months probation.

Criminal charges were dropped against O'Reilly's brothers Paul, 29, and Steven, 27, and Ray Laska, 33, all of the Los Angeles area, but $250 civil penalties were assessed for their conduct.

Man's message is 'exercise, exercise'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — After three of his relatives died of heart attacks in the same year, Robert Sweetgall took a look at his 30 extra pounds and decided he'd better start exercising in a big way.

Now, he's almost finished with a 10,500-mile trek through the country's perimeter states to spread a message of health and physical fitness.

Sweetgall, 35, set out last October from Washington, D.C., following a route through rural and urban areas of the states that form the outline of the country.

"I feel pretty good," he said Wednesday night after 270 days on the road and 10,380 miles. "My legs are as strong as ever."

He expects to return to his starting point, the Ellipse behind the White House, on July 15.

Sweetgall says he has spoken to more than 100,000 students around the country, telling them to get regular exercise, take care of their hearts, watch their weight and avoid smoking.

He considers exercise the most important part of his advice.

"Get exercise, any exercise," he said in Providence, R.I. "Get the heart pumping. Just exercise every day. Even mowing the lawn is good exercise, as long as it is a hand mower."

Sweetgall, formerly a chemical engineer in Newark, Del., decided to undertake his mission after his father, uncle and aunt died of heart attacks in 1979.

Sweetgall, then 30 pounds overweight, started slowly, running a quarter-mile a day and working up. He began entering marathons, and in 1981 he ran around the outside of his native state of Delaware.

"After a lot of exercise and a lot of research, I could see what my new lifestyle was doing for me — how much better for me it was. And, I thought, 'If this can do this for me, why couldn't kids do this?' "

So he started the "Run for American Youth" on Oct. 9. Running down the East Coast, he reached Florida by Thanksgiving. He was in Texas at Christmas and in Montana by Easter.

A companion driving a support van quit after 4,000 miles and Sweetgall had to go on alone. He switched from running to walking, carrying all his supplies in a waist pack.

He averages 40 miles a day, walking from early morning until late evening, with time out for lectures and interviews.

He also is serving as a human guinea pig. His physical condition is being monitored along the way, to study the effect of prolonged exercise on the body.

Aside from some sinus problems, Sweetgall's biggest health problem has been blisters — more than 70 of them. He has worn through about 25 pairs of running shoes, with fresh pairs mailed ahead.

Problems have been rare. Sweetgall plowed through a snowstorm in western Texas, and in Mesa, Ariz., he was questioned by police looking for a "jogging bandit."

Sharon Wilson, 8, of Allen, Texas, visited the State Capitol Tuesday and had to hop up on a granite post to see eye-to-eye with Vernon Ridenour of Austin, who stands 7 feet 4 inches tall. He claims ownership to the names "Hy Cotton" and the "World's Tallest Texan."

Blood-cleansing technique only experimental

Benefits of treatment have been partial, temporary or uncertain

WASHINGTON (AP) — A blood-cleansing technique considered to have potential for preventing many illnesses and death will continue to be classified as experimental until its effectiveness, safety and cost can be determined.

The congressional Office of Technology Assessment said Wednesday that benefits of the treatment known as apheresis have only been partial, temporary or uncertain.

"Until evidence is available, therapeutic apheresis will largely be viewed as an experimental technique, not to be considered as a part of routine care," the agency said in a report.

Apheresis, the separation and selective removal of plasma and several types of blood cells, has been used to treat a small number of obscure diseases. But the agency says researchers are testing the technique as a treatment for rheumatoid arthritis, multiple sclerosis and certain cancers.

"The rational for performing apheresis is to remove one or more components of blood that conceivably contain and carry pathogenic substances linked to a patient's disease process."

—Office of Technology Assessment

The office, which assesses new technology for Congress and suggests policy options, said that the treatment may have great potential for reducing illness and death.

"The rationale for performing apheresis is to remove one or more components of blood that conceivably contain and carry pathogenic substances linked to a patient's disease process," said the report.

The process has been used experimentally since the late 1950s and has been tried in the treatment of more than 75 diseases.

Between 1977 and 1980, the use of apheresis increased more than 500 percent to about 40,000 procedures a year, the report said. The office estimated that approximately 20,000 patients undergo the therapy, in come cases getting multiple treatments.

The agency said the high cost of the procedure, ranging from $400 to $1,200 per treatment, has sparked controversies over the use of apheresis. Estimates of national expenditures on apheresis therapy range from $3.2 million to $240 million, it said.

"If, however, apheresis therapy is extended in the future to the wider array of diseases to which it has been only experimentally applied thus far," the office said, "total treatment costs could range from $650 million to over $7 billion per year."

Currently, federal health programs such as Medicare cover apheresis costs only for a small, selective number of disease conditions, said the report, and private insurers also have been conservative in their coverage.

Wood stoves big polluters

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The crackling fire of the wood stove has become the biggest unregulated polluter in Oregon.

As a result, a new law setting pollution emission limits on the stoves has been approved by state legislators. The measure, the first statewide law in the nation, was signed Tuesday by Gov. Vic Atiyeh.

Margaret McCue, a spokeswoman for the air quality division of the state Department of Environmental Quality, says wood heat not only is the state's biggest unregulated polluter but also is "the fastest-growing pollution source in Oregon."

The stoves share a major portion of the blame for polluted skies in the Portland, Medford and Eugene areas, three of the four biggest metropolitan areas in the state. All three cities fail to meet federal clean air standards.

THE LAW is the product of an unlikely coalition of environmentalists and industry.

John Charles, executive director of the Oregon Environmental Council, admits the irony in knowing that wood heating, long considered a good alternative to nuclear power or gas or oil, has become an environmental problem on its own.

"That's one of the reasons some of our own constituents aren't real fond of the bill," Charles said. "It (wood heating) seems like a real funky alternative energy thing. Suddenly it's proving to be the worst pollution source in the state."

The bill approved by the 1983 Oregon Legislature gives the DEQ until July 1984 to establish an accurate method of testing wood stove emissions and a standard for wood stove manufacturers and retailers to follow.

Stoves that meet the standard are equipped with one of several types of devices to make sure most gases and other material is burned in the stove instead of being released into the atmosphere.

THE LAW bans retailers from selling stoves that don't meet the standards after July 1, 1986. Critics say there is no single way to test all stoves and it will be easy for people to purchase stoves from nearby states that don't meet the standards.

"Our enforcement will monitor all wood stoves," said Barbara Tombleson, air quality specialist for the DEQ. "It will be illegal to sell a stove that has not been certified. There are penalties."

They will include fines on retailers of $50 to $10,000, depending on the amount of possible pollution.

In testimony before the Legislature, DEQ officials estimated stoves that meet the tentative standards cost $300 to $500 more than models that don't. But Ms. McCue said the price of the cleaner stoves is rapidly coming down. She said the cheapest clean-burning models in January cost $900. Now, they are down to $600, she said.

Associated Oregon Industries, the state's largest business and industrial lobby, worked with the DEQ and the Oregon Environmental Council in developing the bill.

"IT'S REALLY the antithesis of a lot of things we normally do," said Tom Donaca, general counsel for the lobbying group, referring to industry finding itself in the unusual position of supporting another layer of government regulation on businesses.

The coalition of environmentalists and labor is one reason Oregon was the first state to adopt the law.

Another reason was its access to reliable data on the extent of the problem. Extensive studies in the Portland and Medford areas in the late 1970s indicated wood stoves were a major source of wintertime pollution. More recent studies have confirmed those findings.

Among the statistics compiled by the DEQ:

—Industrial sources in the Portland area are responsible for less than one ton of particulate air pollution per year. Wood stoves in the Portland area contribute more than seven tons.

—THE AVERAGE wood stove emits 20 grams of particulate pollution — smoke and ash particles — per kilogram of wood burned. Tentative standards being used by the DEQ would limit the emission to seven grams.

—Typical "air-tight" wood stoves, one of the most popular designs, produce 460 times as much smoke and soot as gas furnaces and 220 times as much as oil furnaces.

—Since 1973, the use of wood stoves in Oregon has doubled and redoubled until 55 percent of the state's homes burned at least some wood last year. Oregon has 250,000 wood stoves, each burning an average of 1.7 cords per year.

Now, Bell Interstate 800 Service is a good call for any size business.

Legislation opposes Reagan's cotton plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the House Agriculture Committee says he feels the Agriculture Department misled the nation's cotton farmers when it said there was enough surplus cotton to meet payment-in-kind program needs.

And Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, says USDA's plan to remedy its 1 million-bale shortfall for PIK compensation will "create chaos in the cotton industry" and cost already strapped farmers millions of dollars.

To head off those losses, de la Garza is pushing legislation to void USDA's original plan and instead force it to offer cotton farmers substantial incentives to turn over their unsold 1980, 1981 and 1982 crops to the government for use in PIK.

The full Agriculture Committee is taking up that bill today. It was unanimously endorsed by the cotton subcommittee on Tuesday. The incentive would be 20 percent more than farmers would receive under federal price support programs.

The Reagan administration strongly opposes the measure, contending it would increase taxpayer costs of the 1983 PIK program for cotton by $97 million. The Reagan plan would require cotton farmers participating in PIK to turn over at least part of this year's crop to USDA to meet program compensation requirements.

The disagreement over how to handle the PIK shortfall is the result of unexpected bad weather through the nation's cotton belt this year that bolstered market prices to the point that farmers can now get more for their cotton on the open market then through government price-support programs.

Because of those government assurances, de la Garza said, many farmers have already sold some of their 1983 crop for delivery in the future. If they now have to turn it over for use in PIK, they'll be forced to default on those private contracts or buy cotton at a higher price to fulfill them.

Either way, de la Garza said, farmers will lose money because of a government program originally intended to improve their income.

Through PIK, which is in effect for major grain crops as well, USDA hoped to bolster depressed market prices by depleting stockpiled crops through major cutbacks in this year's harvest.

Under PIK, cotton farmers idling up to half their land receive free surplus cotton from the government equal to 80 percent of the cotton they would normally harvest on the idled acres in excess of the first 20 percent.

The response was unprecedented with about 45 percent of the land normally planted in cotton idled. To compensate farmers for giving up that production USDA needed 4.1 million bales of cotton, and officials originally thought there was enough surplus cotton in USDA's pipeline to meet most of that need.

For the remainder, USDA this spring offered cotton farmers participating in PIK a 7 percent incentive to turn over their unsold 1982 crop to the government. USDA officials said cotton industry representatives indicated 7 percent would be enough to attract the cotton needed to fill PIK requirements.

But after the offer was made, cool, wet weather struck the nation's cotton belt, cutting prospects for an already reduced 1983 crop and bolstering market prices 12 to 15 cents a pound.

Baker calls for paring down food-farm budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker is telling congressional negotiators to pare down House and Senate versions of the 1984 budget for federal food and farm programs or face stiff opposition to any compromise they reach.

"I'm going to vote for this bill today," the Tennessee Republican said Wednesday as the Senate overwhelmingly passed a $34.1 billion agriculture budget despite veto threats from the Reagan administration.

"But unless significant improvement is made in this bill in the (compromise) conference, ... I intend to vote against the (compromise) conference report," Baker said.

The budget bill, passed on a 77-18 vote, has been the butt of some of the Reagan administration's sharpest criticism of congressional spending actions.

It exceeds President Reagan's budget proposal in many areas and is also between $100 million and $200 million more than Congress earmarked for food and farm programs in the 1984 budget blueprint it adopted last week.

But the bill is very similar to the $34 billion version passed by a bipartisan majority of the House early this month. Differences between the two now must be worked out by House and Senate negotiators. But since the conflicts are generally minor, it appears the final compromise will still be objectionable to the administration.

"The Senate (is) acknowledging that we have given up on budget restraint," Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., charged in unsuccessfully trying to cut yome of the spending.

Not only did the Senate reject Helms' effort on a 73-24 vote, it endorsed proposals by other senators that added more than $100 million to various programs covered by a bill administration officials said was already too expensive.

"This bill is a prime candidate to be one of the first, if not the first, bills to be vetoed because of the excessive spending in it," Helms warned.

But Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., chairman of the agriculture appropriation subcommittee, said the proposal represented a concerted effort to rein in the growth of federal spending, and Cochran said he hoped Reagan would ultimately see it that way.
