Fireworks provide pleasing spectacle

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Winds gusting up to 35 mph threatened to cancel West Texas' biggest fireworks show but it went off, about 10 minutes late but with no major problems.

"Everyone seemed to be real pleased," said coordinator Eddie Cole, who collected the $8,000 in donations for the show.

An estimated 8,000 parked in Southside parking lots, along streets and Comanche Trail Park to watch the half-hour show from South Mountain. When it was over, northbound traffic on U.S. 87 was lined up from F.M. 700 to the Brass Nail.

A small fire on the mountain side and a couple near where more than 261 shells ranging from three-inch to eight-inch were launched were the only reported fires from the show. County firefighters stood by to keep flare ups under control. The two fires near the firing tubes looked merely like small glowing campfires.

However, fireworks by residents may have caused several fires last night. There were nine reported in the city and five more in the county, according to city fire and sheriff departments. Six of the city fires and three or four of the county fires were grass, indicating possible cause from fireworks. No injuries were reported.

"There's no way of knowing for sure," said Big Spring Fire Department Lt. Fred Newman. One county fire was reported to be caused by

The display began at approximately 10 p.m. and lasted nearly 30 minutes. Those who were at the Comanche Trail Park amphitheater Sunday evening were treated to polka music before the start of the fireworks display. Despite the absence of the Big Spring Symphony, the Big Spring Community Band played patriotic music during the display.

No date set in DeAnda's lawsuit

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

A trial date on the contested results of the District 1 city council seat could still be set for next week, even though the plaintiff's lawyer isn't returning calls.

Former councilwoman Pat DeAnda, who lost the May election to Stephanie Horton by one vote, 118-117, filed suit alleging voter irregularities violating several areas of the Texas Election Code. Reported incidents include two votes cast on behalf of a woman, another in which a woman was allowed to vote but her husband, who's lived in the same house with her 30 years, was not allowed to.

A visiting judge asked that pre-trial statements and research be completed this week or early next, said local attorney Lanny Hamby, representing Horton. But DeAnda's attorney, Albert Garcia of San Antonio, isn't responding to efforts to get an agreement on a court date. Hamby said he telephoned and faxed messages to Garcia last week.

"His legal assistant assured me he'll have him call me," Hamby said Thursday just before leaving town on a weekend trip. "It could be he's very busy."

Garcia's office is closed today. Nevertheless, Hamby said he expects Judge John Hyde of Midland to set the date for next week. It will be held in 118th District Court in Big Spring.

"I feel certain that the judge will set it that week," Hamby said. "The law requires that they (voting suits) be disposed of very quickly, so I know the judge was anxious to get it set."

Hyde, who presides over 238th District Court in Midland, was appointed because local District Judge Bob Moore automatically recused himself as required by law, a provision designed to avoid possible conflicts of interest.

District 1 is on the city's Northwest Side. It was part of DeAnda's old District 1, before three single-member districts were split into six single-member districts to phase out at-large districts.

District 1 at the time was the only minority district. From it came two minority districts. Horton is the first black elected to the council.

Perseverance key to life for Dub Martin

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Local resident Dub Martin believes a lifetime of success can be built on perseverance.

Martin retired as an administrative assistant from Big Spring Independent School District in June after 31 years in education. He monitored student attendance and safety.

As he reflects on his life's path, he remembers traveling a rocky road, in his early years. His experiences as a young man were peppered with road blocks - obstacles he overcame at each turn.

"You must persevere in achieving your goal. Don't stop the first time someone says 'No,'" he said. "Regardless of the hazards on the way, you can achieve."

Born in 1935, Martin was the son of a Pecos cowboy. Martin remembers an extremely poor but nurturing home environment as an only child.

"We lived in a wooden shack with a dirt floor and the toilet out back; no electric or gas. We hauled the water from a pump," Martin said. "My dad was promised $35 a month and a side of beef for his work. Mother was a custodian for the Mexican school."

As young as five years old, Martin would help his mother gather coal from a pile in front of the school he would soon attend.

"I was very involved in school. You had to get involved; be a part of the program," he said. "I loved my teachers. I couldn't imagine missing school."

His attitude then mirrored his ethic as an educator, when he encouraged youth to attend school regularly.

Achieving perfect attendance eight out of 12 years, Martin graduated in the top 10 percent of his class. He was a student leader in sports, band and student government.

"Even in high school, we began to talk about four years in college with no way of knowing how I was going to do it without the money," he said. "They would tell me, 'To get ahead, you've got to get this education.'"

His experience making money started as early as eight years old, when he made 25 cents an hour and a sweetroll-a-day washing dishes.

He tried unsuccessfully to obtain a baseball scholarship at Sul Ross University.

His next attempt at maintaining finances for school was a band scholarship at Hardin-Simmons University.

"It wasn't nearly enough; not what I expected, so I left," he said. "I was desperate to go to school, but their were no grants or anything like that back then."

Martin joined the military a year later. A massive downsizing in defense after the Korean Conflict relegated him to the reserve program months later.

Back home, Martin went to work in an automotive parts house. Please see PERSONALITY, page 6A

Houston gangs are more audacious

Gang rape, murder of girls latest crime

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Although crimes such as the recent slayings of two teen-age girls are not typically committed by gangs, Houston police warn that the city's gangs are getting bolder and more violent.

"It's random most of the time, with no real pattern you could say," Lt. Art Carson, the Houston Police Department's head gang coordinator, said Saturday.

"People shouldn't be alarmed that the gang problem exists — but they should be alarmed enough to want to find a solution to the problem."

Jennifer Ertmann, 14, and Elizabeth Pena, 16, were raped and murdered June 24 as they crossed a park on their way home from a party. Police said they apparently stumbled upon gang members drinking in the park.

Five teen-agers, who officials say bragged about the slayings to fellow prisoners after their arrests, have been charged with capital murder. A 14-year-old is being held by juvenile authorities.

Officials say the killings were unusual for Houston gangs, who generally are thought to participate principally in crimes such as theft, drug trafficking and assault.

But gangs also are described as being very opportunistic, a trait that apparently doomed the two teen-age girls last month.

Carson, who started his job last month, said he plans to fight the growing problem through local groups and neighborhoods.

Gina Escamilla, 16, left, and Leslie Rodriguez, 15, are comforted by Anthony Hernandez, 17, after the graveside services for Elizabeth Pena in Houston Friday. Hundreds attended the funeral for Pena who was killed along with her friend Jennifer Ertman while walking home from a party. Police say the two were gang-raped and strangled. Six teenagers are in custody.

"The community has to get involved," he said. "Parents also have to open their eyes and say my kid may be involved in gangs. It's a total effort."

Leonardo Soria, founder of Parents Ganging Up On Gangs, said parental involvement is the key.

"There are a lot of children with one parent out there, who are not getting the attention they need," he said. "We are supposed to be the role models, but unfortunately something went wrong — they are getting younger and younger with their violence."

Soria added that his group has seen gang violence escalate from car theft to rape, drive-by shootings and attacks on member's own parents.

"I go directly to the kids and it's frightening what they tell me," Soria said.

Odometer rollback prosecutions increasing

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Ever since a Houston wholesale auto dealer was caught boasting to a hidden camera on "60 Minutes" in late 1990 that he had changed the mileage on as many as 75 cars a month, the government has sought jail terms for those who would illegally roll back odometers.

That dealer, William Frank Whitlow, 71, is now serving a seven-year term in a federal prison at Fort Worth.

Abe Martinez, an assistant U.S. attorney in Houston, says the 60 Minutes expose provided the impetus for odometer prosecutions that have taken place in the last two years. So far, 12 people have pleaded guilty since 1991.

From 1988 until 1991, the government says, car crooks purchased high-mileage vehicles from out of state, brought them to Houston where body work and detailing were performed, and then rolled the odometers back, thus increasing the market value of the cars by thousands of dollars.

Titles and odometer statements were then falsified to correspond with the rolled-back vehicle odometers.

Not among the dozen who have entered guilty pleas is Monroe Kirkpatrick, 51, of Houston, who recently freely admitted to the Houston Post that he began rolling back odometers on cars at age 12 and has continued doing so ever since.

Or he continued it at least until the day he was indicted, arrested and jailed three months ago.

While Kirkpatrick, the only defendant so far who is insisting on a jury trial, admits to tampering with thousands of odometers over the years, he says he's not about to plead guilty to the government's case against him.

"They can't prove it," he says, noting that he has been working on his own for the past several years, after quitting his job with a wholesale car dealer who was among the 12 who pleaded guilty.

Kirkpatrick, who has a trial date scheduled for August, says he worked six days a week rolling back the odometers of cars to change the mileage.

Individuals, he says, frequently sought his services so they could qualify for warranty repairs on their cars, which were covered by 5-year, 50,000-mile warranties.

"We couldn't keep up with the work," Kirkpatrick said. "Every car dealer in town did it. Business was booming. There's not a car dealer in town who doesn't know who we were and how to get a hold of us."

Kirkpatrick, who remembers Whitlow as one of his best customers, recalls doing plenty of work for various auto dealers, but in recent years he says he conducted most of his business with individuals who had heard by word of mouth how he could wipe off thousands of miles on a vehicle in minutes.

Congress passed a law in 1972 that prohibited tampering with automobile odometers, the very "repairs" Kirkpatrick had been charging individual car owners $45 to perform for years and years.

Bustamante investigation moves into courtroom

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A long-running federal investigation of Albert Bustamante moves into the courtroom Tuesday when the former congressman goes to trial on racketeering and bribery charges.

Bustamante, who lost re-election last November and has kept a low profile since he was indicted in February, maintains his innocence, speaking through his attorney.

Bustamante, 58, and his wife Rebecca, 49, later were named in a 10-count federal indictment accusing Bustamante of accepting bribes in return for his influence in Congress. The indictment alleges Bustamante received a total of $344,000 in several illegal transactions.

Among the accusations are that Bustamante helped a food service company renew its contract with Lackland Air Force Base in exchange for $35,000 and that he accepted $30,000 from a realty company connected to the politically powerful Jaffe family of San Antonio.

DALLAS (AP) — They came from around the world. They left their jobs, sold their homes, uprooted their families and moved to a small Central Texas town.

Now, some 2,000 super collider workers are wondering why.

"We're all here because we thought it was a done deal," said Jim Siegrist, a senior physicist who came from California with his wife, Kathy, and their two children.

"We were warned to stay on schedule and perform. And we succeeded and jumped through all the hoops. Now, they say, 'We forgot to tell you, we didn't agree.'"

The high-energy physicists and engineers who flocked to Waxahachie during the past four years to work on the giant atom smasher say they feel betrayed by the U.S. government.

The collider's staff, about 1,600 of which relocated from outside Texas, is angry and confused over the U.S. House of Representatives' recent vote to halt the $10 billion project.

The Senate could rescue the project — as it did last summer after a similar rejection by members of the House. However, the outcome of that vote is uncertain. Meanwhile, the project has taken on the air of a funeral.

Black tar heroin smuggling increasing

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — There is a new drug of choice among smugglers on the Texas-Mexico border, and federal narcotics agents say this one's more profitable and harder to detect than some drugs of the past.

Black tar heroin, produced on the slopes of the Sierra Madre in the Mexican states of Sinaloa and Durango, is being moved by transporters across the Rio Grande between Del Rio and Brownsville.

Agents say it's destined for distribution centers in Chicago and New York.

By the time it hits the streets, a pound of it is worth more than $1 million. And Texas Department of Public Safety narcotics investigators say the trade is flourishing in "every major city in the state."

"We've noticed an increase in heroin trafficking in all major Texas cities — Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio," Jim Murray, assistant commander for the DPS narcotics service in Austin, told the San Antonio Express-News.

Frank Seib of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agreed heroin sales are climbing.

Fire chief found dead

DALLAS (AP) — A fire department official sought in the shooting death of his ex-girlfriend has been found dead in a Dallas motel room.

A routine check for stolen cars led to the discovery Saturday night of the body of Donald Glynn Erwin, 46, a battalion chief in the Dallas Fire Department.

Erwin, a 21-year veteran of the fire department, was found in bed, lying on his right side, with the television on, said Sgt. Jim Chandler, a police spokesman.

Police said he had been dead less than 24 hours. There were no obvious wounds, and an autopsy was ordered.

Erwin was wanted in the shooting death of Stella Vidler, 28, of Plano, who had been living with him earlier this year. She was shot with a .25-caliber handgun as she slept Tuesday afternoon at Texas Instruments in north Dallas. She died on Wednesday at a hospital.

The chief faced an assault charge stemming from an incident involving Ms. Vidler two months earlier.

Record Lotto Texas payoff means big business; Wednesday's pot should equal previous high

The Associated Press

Another record Lotto Texas payoff is looming, setting the stage for several frenzied days at thousands of businesses across Texas over the next several days.

A $30 million jackpot went unclaimed Saturday night, which means the next drawing on Wednesday night should equal or surpass the previous record of $50 million on May 1.

People who don't ordinarily play the Texas lottery may be coaxed into participating in the 9:59 p.m. drawing Wednesday. Odds are only one in 16 million, but at these levels the potential reward is even greater.

"The Lotto Texas fireworks will continue, since no one correctly matched the six numbers drawn on Saturday night," state comptroller John Sharp said Sunday.

The six numbers that popped up Saturday night were 5, 13, 14, 19, 20 and 23.

"Our jackpot for Wednesday night's drawing is estimated to be $50 million. This is the second time in Lotto Texas history that the jackpot has gotten this high," Sharp said.

The state comptroller's office, which supervises the lottery, said 355 people matched five of six numbers, winning $1,466 each, and 21,289 people got four of the six numbers, winning $88 each. Getting three of the numbers right was worth $3 to 397,776 people.

The various retail outlets across the state sold $20.8 million in tickets for the Saturday drawing along, Sharp said, with $14.8 million of it on Saturday.

Traffic at stores selling Lotto Texas tickets was hectic on Saturday.

"It's pretty busy — no, it's extraordinarily busy," Fred Platt, a clerk at a north Dallas 7-Eleven, said shortly before Saturday night's drawing as customers pressed up to the counter to buy more tickets.

He said he wasn't sure how many lottery tickets the store sold Saturday, except that it was thousands more than usual.

According to the comptroller's office, No. 1 on the list of top sellers of Lotto Texas tickets statewide is Hester's Oil, a small gas station in far West Texas that was on the verge of closing its doors before lottery gave it a new lease on life.

From May 29, 1992, to June 26, 1993, Hester's Oil sold $1.94 million in combined Lotto and scratch-off tickets. It's near Hobbs, N.M.

"If you look at the stores that are near the very top in sales, they are stores that are on the border, either with New Mexico, Louisiana or Mexico," said Carmen Luevanos, a spokeswoman for the comptroller's office.

"They are stores where the local population clearly can't account for all the sales," she said.

At No. 2 on the state's top 20 list is McAllen's Town & Country convenience store, which boasts a drive-through window where busy players can buy their chances to win a million or tens of millions without having to leave the comfort of their vehicles.

But its location near the Mexican border is the major reason for the big draw, Ms. Luevanos said.

From May 29, 1992, to June 26, 1993, Town & Country sold $1.56 million in scratch-off and pick-six Lotto tickets.

"Town & Country is on the way to the mall, and we believe there are many Mexican citizens who stop and buy lottery tickets there on their way to or from shopping at the mall," she said.

"Why? Because we pay in dollars," Ms. Luevanos said, adding that several big winners have come from Mexico. "U.S. dollars are worth more. The currency is stable. I have heard from various people that the Mexican citizens like the lottery specifically because we pay in dollars."

Near the bottom of the list of more than 14,000 retailers statewide is the considerably smaller Cowboy Cafe in downtown Tilden. But that doesn't mean there's no interest in the lottery.

Mandela, de Klerk receive Liberty Medal

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Democracy made uneasy friends of South African leaders F.W. de Klerk and Nelson Mandela, and together they accepted honors for their struggle to bring that principle to the land of apartheid.

The former foes — one a vestige of white minority rule, the other a living symbol of an emerging nation — on Sunday received the Liberty Medal and praise from President Clinton in a ceremony outside Independence Hall.

De Klerk, president of South Africa, and Mandela, president of the African National Congress, which has fought the nation's apartheid system of racial separation, arrived in Philadelphia on Saturday and went their separate ways until the award ceremony Sunday afternoon.

Tension between the two arose Friday in Washington, when each met separately with Clinton over the future of their homeland. A photo opportunity for the three leaders was abruptly canceled.

Gunman planned talk show visits after murders

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Gunman Gian Luigi Ferri intended to survive his deadly skyscraper attack and may have planned to discuss his troubles on TV talk shows afterward, a newspaper reported.

A scribbled list police found in Ferri's briefcase included the names and studio addresses of more than a dozen shows, including "Donahue," "Oprah" and "Washington Week in Review," the San Francisco Examiner reported Sunday.

On Thursday, Ferri, 55, walked into the offices of the Pettit & Martin law firm with three guns, killed eight people and wounded six before committing suicide as police closed in on him.

Two receive transplants after drug side effects

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Two people whose livers began to fail because of an experimental drug for hepatitis B received emergency transplants.

Both liver transplants were performed Sunday, one at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center and the other at the University of Virginia Health Science Center in Charlottesville.

The patients had been taking fluridrine, manufactured by Indianapolis-based Eli Lilly & Co.

Last week, clinical trials on 20 patients taking the drug were suspended after they began to suffer side effects including liver and kidney failure, numbness and tingling in the extremities.

In Pittsburgh, a 44-year-old man from Arlington, Va., was in "very critical" condition after the five-hour operation, said hospital spokeswoman Lisa Rossi.

The other patient was admitted to the Virginia hospital on Wednesday.

The drug, which was being tested by the National Institutes of Health, had already passed a preliminary trial phase, Edward A. West, an Eli Lilly spokesman, has said.

Other patients in the study are being treated with antioxidants to combat liver damage.

72-year-old set flying records

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A 72-year-old pilot said "nyet" to adversity, flying solo to and from Moscow through strong head winds to set a couple of records for a single propeller airplane.

Retired Air Force Col. Charles Mack of Hollywood, Fla., landed Sunday afternoon in Portland after an estimated 35-hour journey. Despite plans to make the trip non-stop, head winds forced him to land in Helsinki, Finland, and then Iceland.

Last week, he left Washington, D.C., for Moscow for a scheduled non-stop trip but also was forced to stop in Iceland because of head winds.

"It was really an effort to sustain a spirit of adventure," he said.

The trips earned him his fifth and sixth world flying records for his airplane class. Five years ago, he began setting records with solo trips to Paris and the North Pole.

Though age is taking a toll, Mack said he'll never be grounded completely.

"I'm still looking for a woman with a three-car garage who likes to fly," he said.

Maglaj ablaze as fighting continues

The Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The town of Maglaj, which controls access to some of the last major government strongholds in central Bosnia, was reported ablaze as Serbs and Croats battled Muslim-led troops.

"Maglaj is literally burning and the ground is shaking from detonations," Bosnian radio reporter Hajrudin Feric reported Sunday via ham radio. "The picture of plundered houses on fire now is horrible."

Feric reported close-range combat and constant shelling and said Croat forces were pushing a "living shield" of Muslim civilians toward government lines.

The offensive on the town of 30,000 appeared aimed at gaining land and linking it with areas under Serb and Croat control. Maglaj forms the northern tip of a strategic triangle — including Zepce and Zavidovici — that controls access to some of the last major government-held towns in central Bosnia.

To the southwest, fighting between government and Croat forces continued around Fojnica and several other towns, said Maj. Jose Gallegos, a U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo. Croatian radio reported Sunday night that government forces had taken the town.

Bosnian forces Sunday also blockaded a U.N. base in Visoko, just northwest of Sarajevo, demanding that peacekeepers hand over for trial on war crimes charges a Croat commander who has been at the base since Thursday, a U.N. spokesman said. In retaliation, Croat forces blockaded two U.N. bases, one in Kiseljak, west of Sarajevo, and north of Kiseljak.

French Gen. Philippe Morillon, commander of U.N. forces in Bosnia, was in the main Kiseljak base and planned to return to Sarajevo today, possibly by helicopter.

Croats and Muslim-led government forces were allied at the outset of the 16-month-old war, which erupted when Bosnian Serbs rebelled against Bosnia's declaration of independence from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Muslim-Croat fighting over land in central Bosnia strained the alliance, which collapsed last month when the Serbs and Croats — who now control most of Bosnia — agreed to carve up the country into three ethnic regions.

The Muslims oppose the plan, fearing it would leave them only small patches of territory, even though they constitute Bosnia's majority. They also fear Croats and Serbs eventually will merge their territory with neighboring Croatia and Serbia.

In other developments: —Four mosques in Banja Luka, the largest town held by Serbs in Bosnia, were blown up Sunday, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported. Nine of the town's 16 mosques now have been damaged or destroyed in explosions.

Americans celebrate Fourth of July with activities as varied as the country

The Associated Press

Mike Devito ate more hot dogs than most Fourth-of-July celebrants across the country — and he ate them pretty fast.

Devito, 30, of Manalapan, N.J., wolfed down 17 wieners in 12 minutes Sunday to win Nathan's Famous 77th Annual Fourth of July Hot Dog Contest — an Independence Day fixture in New York City since 1916.

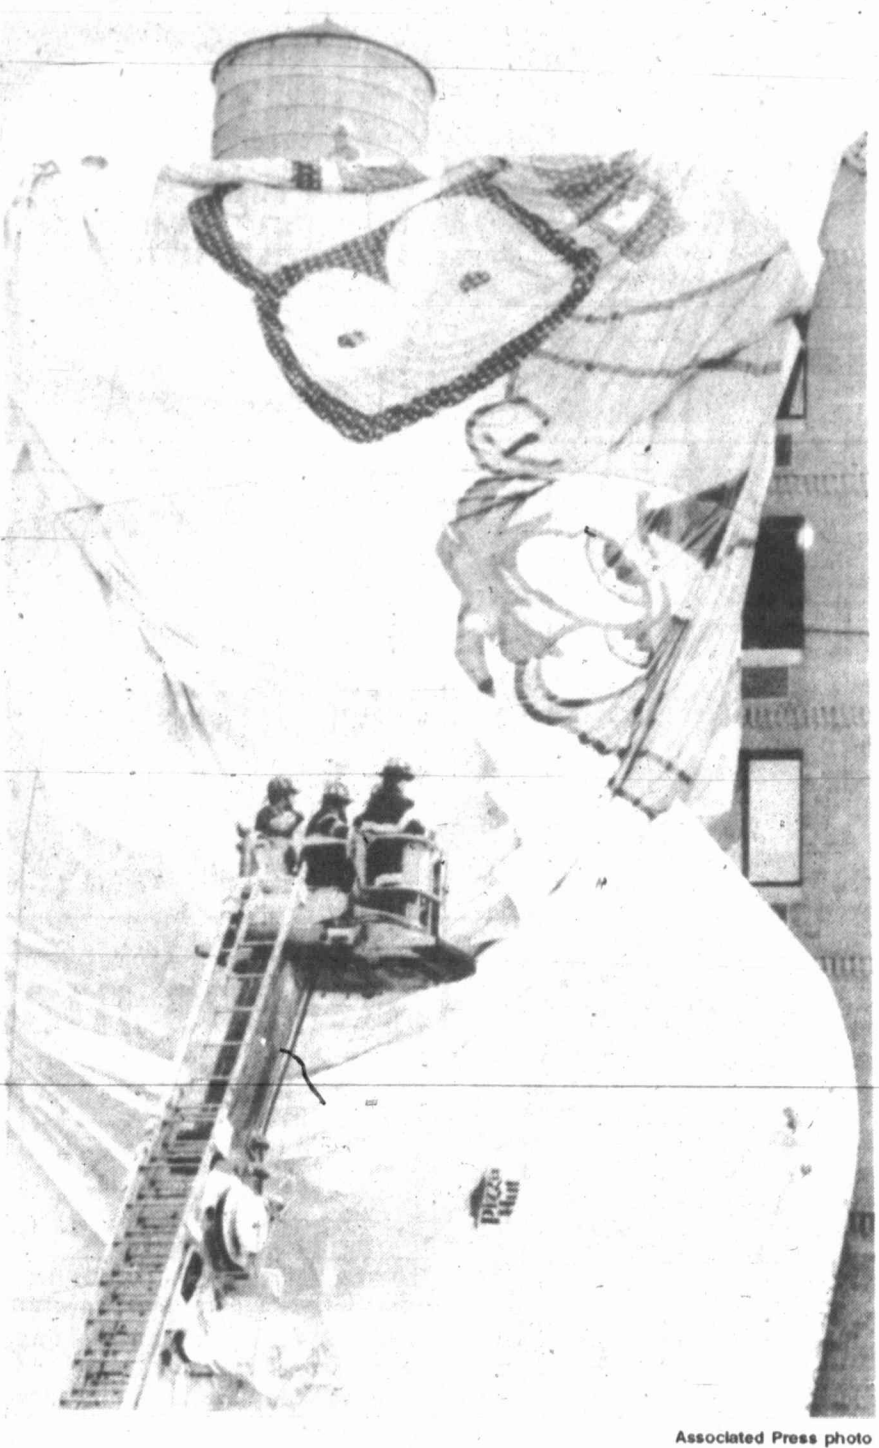

The victory earned him the title of hot dog eating world champion, event organizers said.

"You're just praying for it to be over," Devito said after the contest.

Elsewhere, a mostly scorching-hot nation celebrated its 217th Independence Day in typical red, white and blue fashion with colorful fireworks displays, barbecue picnics and parades.

But some not-so-typical events would have left America's forefathers scratching their heads.

At the state fairgrounds in Raleigh, N.C., pig races were among the featured events for thousands of celebrants. A small track was set up with a sign that read: "The dash for Rescue workers fasten ropes to the blimp "Bigfoot," owned by Pizza Hut that crash-landed on a seven-story apartment house on Manhattan's west side Sunday to keep it from falling into the street and causing further damage. One of the crew members told police they intentionally landed on the roof after deciding against crash landing in the Hudson River.

'Bigfoot' crashes on apartment building

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Joseph Nadreau thought it was all over when he saw a huge blimp spinning out of control and heading straight at him.

"I got out of my chair and I was standing maybe 20 feet away and it hit the chair I'd been sitting in," he said.

The 160-foot blimp, named Bigfoot, crashed on top of a seven-story apartment building Sunday afternoon, scattering a handful of astonished sunbathers. Its pilot and co-pilot suffered minor injuries.

Nadreau, a 22-year-old brokerage auditor, and other witnesses said the blimp was spinning as it approached, and had a large hole in it.

Investigators couldn't immediately account for the hole.

Beverly Johnson, an air safety inspector from the National Transportation Safety Board, said the pilot reported feeling vibrations then losing control. Duncan Pardue, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration, said the crash was caused by structural problems in the blimp's tail section.

Pilot Lee Cermak, 62, was hospitalized with a minor back injury in fair condition. Co-pilot Pat Russell, 41, was hospitalized in good condition with no apparent injuries, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Leased by Pizza Hut to promote a new, large pizza called The Bigfoot, the blimp was on a nationwide tour that included earlier stops in Los Angeles, Dallas, Detroit and Boston.

Workers were using a crane and hook to get the blimp off the roof.

No change in Iraqi attitude

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — U.N. weapons experts pulled out today in a new standoff with President Saddam Hussein's government over its refusal to allow the installation of surveillance cameras at missile testing sites.

"There is no change in the Iraqi stand, so I am preparing to leave," Nikita Smidovich, the leader of the 3-member team, told The Associated Press.

Smidovich, a Russian, was followed by Iraqi secret service agents as he checked out of a hotel and headed with his two assistants to the airport to board a special U.N. plane bound for New York.

Relief promised to flooded Mississippi

The Associated Press

ELDRIDGE, Iowa — President Clinton has offered the Midwest a $1.2 billion package of flood-relief assistance, saying the high water along the Mississippi River is "as bad as it gets."

Clinton, touring the flood-ravaged area Sunday, met with about 100 farmers huddled under a tent on a farm just outside Eldridge. He offered sympathy for those affected and said he would back up the sympathy with more federal money.

"We're trying to be responsive and to be helpful," the president said.

Before leaving Washington, Clinton said he authorized the release of $100 million in federal disaster funds. He also said he would use another $297 million that's available.

And Congress will be asked to approve another $850 million on an emergency basis, something lawmakers are almost certain to endorse, Clinton said.

"I don't think we're going to have any trouble getting it," Clinton said.

In addition, Clinton said he would move to give flood victims more time to seek disaster aid and pledged a "long-term reform" of the nation's system of crop insurance.

While cities along the swollen Mississippi have suffered enormous damage, millions of acres of farmland also have been flooded and officials are projecting heavy crop losses.

In Iowa alone, officials have projected the loss at $750 million.

Clinton, heading for an economic summit in Japan, spent three hours in the region where the Mississippi is experiencing its worst flooding in nearly 30 years.

"I've seen a lot of this in my life and this is as bad as it gets," Clinton said.

The disaster aid package Clinton said he would seek is designed to provide flood victims the same level of relief given victims of Hurricane Andrew.

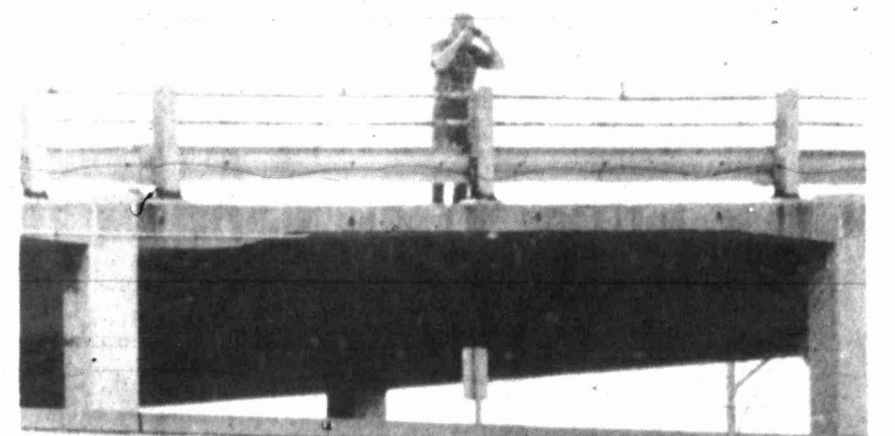

Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy accompanied Clinton to his hour-long meeting with farmers. Dressed in jeans and a flannel shirt, Clinton perched on a hay bale, occasionally chewing on a piece of straw.

He told the crowd that his history as the governor of a small, rural state makes him a sympathetic listener.

"I'm going to be very sensitive to people like you," he said.

Clinton said Congress would be given a choice of either directly appropriating the money or finding spending cuts elsewhere in the budget.

While Clinton got a generally warm reception, 23-year-old Steve Lousaret of nearby Long Grove had a testy exchange with the president over financing the disaster program and tax increases in Clinton's economic package.

Flood waters crowd a mural on a downtown Davenport, Iowa, parking ramp Sunday. Waters from the Mississippi River have kept parts of Davenport closed for a week.

Fourth of July fireworks provided excellent fun

Fourth of July went off with a bang Sunday as the largest fireworks display in the west went off. Thousands of Big Springers enjoyed the display made possible by the generosity of eight local businesses and the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce.

The entire works, including music provided by the Big Spring Community Band and others, was a thrilling combination of sight and sound.

And, best of all there were only two fire associated with the display. And, thanks to the work of the Big Spring Police and Fire departments, these did not become problems. Traffic flow was smooth and the fire department had South Mountain blanketed to prevent any fires.

All in all, the Fourth of July went off with a glorious explosion of color.

Government offices change to meet ethnic diversity

In the mid-1980s, a popular West Texas bumper sticker seen on vehicles read, "One flag, one language."

Fortunately, the display of the stickers with a narrow-minded message was only a testament to the First Amendment right of freedom of expression and was not embraced as a truism.

Today - less than a decade later - when calling the local Department of Human Service office, a friendly, helpful and recorded voice begins by stating the office's hours then it gives the caller the option of continuing the message in Spanish or English.

To meet the diversity of the constituency it serves, DHS, like most state, federal and local agencies, have literature available in English and Spanish, as well as other languages if needed.

The local Social Security office also provides literature in Spanish on retirement benefits, disability benefits, Supplement Security Income benefits, survivors benefit and Medicare. It also provides letters received to be written in Spanish. In its employ, there are five bilingual clerk representatives - half the staff.

Local SSA officials say about 35 to 40 percent of the people they serve are Hispanic, which is in line with national averages. DHS official says their figures are about 70 percent.

Unlike DHS who has become acclimated to automatically ordering bilingual literature, the local SSA office does not get a large amount of requests for literature in Spanish.

Locally, the need is present. Attesting to this is the formation of the Howard County Indigent Care Program's diabetes course taught entirely in Spanish. The program director says applications, as well as an abundance of literature are available in Spanish.

On a national scale, the Office of Minority Health Resource Center offers a list of health information and education material sources for Hispanics written in Spanish.

Greenville: Citizens make the town

GREENVILLE, Miss. — Some day, somebody may convince me that this is a town like any other, that it has no mythical proportions, no spell to cast over writers or photographers or painters who come and stay a while.

So far, nobody has. I don't love Greenville for its looks; its downtown is grubby and worn as a Tallahassee trailer park, with grass islands weaving through the streets like drunks. The ornamental islands were conceived years ago by a landscape architect with more advanced degrees than common sense. They were a bad idea even before weeds defeated the landscaping and the islands became the cause of jokes and rear-end collisions.

The town's outskirts are a labyrinth of fast-food joints, motels and lubes while you wait; nothing special there, either. Even the old levee, where you can go to spoon and watch the fireflies, is about to lose its intrinsic appeal; the casino is coming.

The mystery of Greenville is in its people, the high-stakes farmers who put and dream through winters; the industrious Chinese who came to build the levee and now prosper in business; the redneck river rats who have six months on the barge, six off to dance and drink.

On Greenville's Nelson Street life teems, and if you leave your car windows down or, better yet, walk, you can wade through humidity and expectation. People wear red on Nelson Street, and high heels, and Saturday night is a state of mind, not a day of the week.

Nelson is Memphis' Beale Street before it went Disney, a hodgepodge of blues joints and churches and stores that sell Malcolm X shirts and cheap suede shoes, smells that range from sweet perfume to stale beer or sausage, and the sounds of an exuberant people who are not the least afraid of midnight or its sins.

And on Nelson Street there is that Delta institution, Doe's Eat Place, of course, the rickety restaurant that attracts New York food critics and dark strangers driving white Mercedes and bums who can afford only a coffee can of tamales. You go to Doe's for a cholesterol high, to celebrate a grandchild's graduation, to impress a Northern friend.

Going to Doe's is an admission that money cannot buy everything, especially atmosphere, but that it can buy a good piece of beef.

During my short seven months in Greenville last decade, I ate only once at Doe's; the Chinese take-out joints were better suited to my budget and appetite. If you eat at Doe's, you have eaten for the week.

But, oh, how I admired it, those leaning walls and spongy floors and cookstoves in every room weighed down with unwashed cast-iron pots and pans so thick with greasy soot that a roach could live off one for a lifetime. The ceilings were low and the lights high.

And I've always wanted to return, even after they sold Doe's Eat Place franchises, which made me feel the same sad way I felt when I learned that for a price you could have the Eiffel Tower lights blink in honor of an anniversary or some other personal occasion. There are just certain things that should not be for sale.

So I climbed aboard the Good Ship Doe's one Saturday night not long ago, and it was exactly as I remembered, even more so. I followed a big waitress into a little room where tables were crowded in just such a way that it was no strain to hear everyone else's conversations.

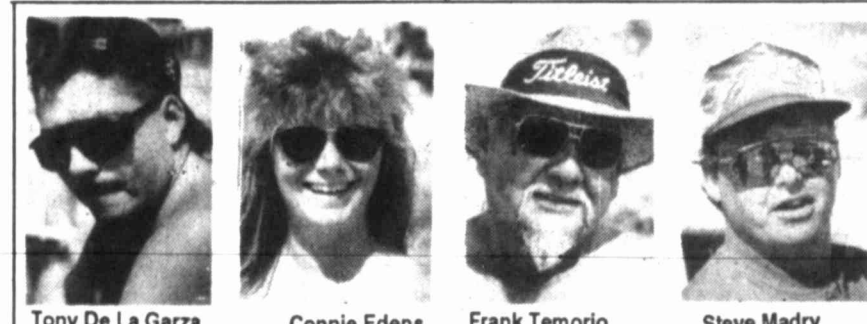

Two Sansabelt men and their younger, chirping wives were talking about one of the couples' last trips to Vegas. At another table, a man was talking about a basketball game, and at another, an antique auction.

A waitress, sensing I wasn't a regular, brought me tamales as an appetizer, compliments of the house. And people all around ate and burped and went home and slept a heavy sleep.

And I drove around Greenville for a while, thinking about my time here, how long ago and how relatively uneventful it had been. Greenville was a good town for a reporter, especially one who likes to write about people.

It lacks the mansions of Natchez, the beauty of the hills. But Greenville cannot be beat for interesting people. Or a steak the size of a dinghy.

We asked:

What do you think about the proposal to ban alcohol at Moss Creek Lake?

"I think it's wrong. It's not as if there is a lot of boat traffic. If there were a lot of boats, then maybe, but not the people on the side. Bottles, yes, but not cans."

Tony De La Garza

"I think you should be able to drink out here so long as you're not endangering the kids or anybody else by acting crazy. Glass bottles should be banned altogether, including cola bottles. But just so long as you pick up your trash, cans should be okay."

Connie Edens

"To tell you the truth, I just heard about that yesterday. I'm really upset because we're not drunks, but we're social drinkers. It wouldn't be any fun to come here and barbecue. I think they're driving people out."

Frank Temorio

"I think it's a crock. I think the proposal in itself will kill the traffic out here. I think alcohol consumed in an adult manner is not a problem. It's a few people that are destroying it for all. I wouldn't mind meeting the people who oppose the alcohol halfway, like maybe a cooler fee."

The glass is breaking

Scripts Howard News Service

The male supremacist who created the glass ceiling to keep talented women from reaching the top must be in a state of shock.

Women may not be running the world — yet — but that crash you hear is the sound of breaking glass. A few examples:

— Kim Campbell, a lawyer from Vancouver, is about to become prime minister of Canada, the first woman ever to hold that post.

— Tansu Ciller, who studied economics at the University of Connecticut, could become the first female prime minister of Turkey.

— Kay Bailey Hutchison easily won the U.S. Senate seat from Texas formerly held by Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen. There now are seven women in the Senate, including both senators from California. That's an all-time high.

— Ruth Bader Ginsburg is President Clinton's nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court seat held by the retiring Byron White. She is expected to be confirmed without serious opposition. She'll be the second woman on the court, joining Sandra Day O'Connor.

We're not saying that sexism is dead. We're just saying that fewer women are bumping their heads on the way up the ladder these days.

Lewis Grizzard

The author from hell

Here's the way the story was reported in the newspapers:

Not everyone thinks humorist and columnist Lewis Grizzard is a hoot. Literary escorts who cart visiting writers from interview to interview vote annually on the Golden Dart Award, better known as the Author from Hell Award.

The escorts voted Grizzard a lifetime award at a recent publishing industry convention in Miami. His offenses: insensitivity and refusal to leave for interviews when there's a playoff game on television. In Grizzard's absence, fellow humorist Roy Blount, Jr. accepted the award, "with apologies on behalf of the state of Georgia."

Well, stitch my britches, as they say at the New Yorker when Roy Blount, Jr. turns in another hilarious piece.

In the first place, if they had told me of the award and had invited me, I would have come to Miami to accept it myself.

In the second place, if there are any apologies to be made here, I'll make them myself.

I apologize for saying to the escort in Cleveland—who nearly ran head-on into a semi because she was so short she couldn't see over the steering wheel—"My God, lady, this is a book tour, not a performance by Joey Whitwood and the Hell Drivers."

I didn't realize she had something in her good eye.

I do not apologize for not wanting to leave a Braves-Pirates playoff game to drive halfway across New Orleans to some campus radio station whose signal wouldn't reach to the gymnasium.

In the third place, allow me to explain a little further how this escort thing works:

This isn't one of those deals where you look in a phone book and call Foxy Lady Escort Service for someone to accompany you to the Christian Science Reading Room, or wherever.

When an author has a book published, the publisher foots the bill for a publicity tour. The author goes from city to city doing radio, television and newspaper interviews about his or her book.

Because it's cheaper than limousines, the publisher hires a literary escort in each city, usually one who owns a very old and small car to motor the author around the city.

The author is very tired because it's the 13th day of the tour and he or she has just flown in from St. Louis, where the day's previous escort had brought along her cat, and some airhead at a television station had asked, "So, tell us what your book is about?"

Don't get me wrong. I've had some very nice escorts over the past 300 years I've been doing book tours. One in Jacksonville brought Tab, my favorite drink, with her. Do you know how hard it is to find Tab anymore?

The lady in Dallas always takes me to my favorite barbecue place there (if there's time for lunch), and I fell in love with my escort in Nashville once. (Unfortunately, she was married to a successful picker.)

And not all interviews are bad ones, either. I even had an interviewer in Chicago once who had read the book. Maybe that's why he gave me such a bad review.

Still, it's not my style going around being the Author from Hell, even during a publicity tour. So I'll try to be better this fall. Besides, it doesn't look like the Braves are going to make the playoffs this year anyway.

And I just thought of another great escort I had in Birmingham. She brought along her husband to drive, and I said to her, "You're the best escort I've ever had."

And they call me insensitive. c 1993 by Cowles Syndicate, Inc.

Dear Abby - Letters...

Giggles can be mistaken for grief

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from "Embarrassed in Boston," whose adult son and his cousin got the giggles during the funeral of a deceased relative, I had to write.

My Uncle Joe passed away at the ripe old age of 92. He had been a member of the American Legion, so at his funeral an elderly comrade stood off to the side of the casket and proceeded to blow "Taps" on a beat-up trumpet. He was pathetically out of tune, which struck me funny, so I buried my face in my hands to conceal my laughter. Other family members, thinking I was taking my uncle's death very hard, gathered around to "console" me.

At another funeral, while the minister delivered the eulogy, I whispered to my husband, "Doesn't the minister remind you of 'Bozo'?" The minister's head was bald in the middle with a lot of fluffy hair over each ear. It looked like someone had run a lawn mower clean up the middle of his head. My husband replied, "What an uncanny resemblance!" I discreetly laughed hysterically into several wadded up Kleenex tissues hoping others would think I was grieving.

Many times, my younger brother Charles and I would just look at each other at the dinner table and we'd break up. Once during one of these giggling fits, our parents started to laugh. Poor Dad kept biting the inside of his cheek to keep from laughing, but it didn't help. Charles and I are both in our 40s now and our parents have passed away, but we still go on these contagious laughing jags. — NOSTALGIC IN BALTIMORE

DEAR NOSTALGIC: What a collection of letters I received concerning inappropriate laughter. Here's the topper:
DEAR ABBY: Having read your letters about inappropriate laughter at funerals, I would like to share this:

Every time my father and sister visited me in Montana, the airline lost their luggage on the return trip to Pittsburgh. When my father died in Montana and his body was flown to Pittsburgh, I jokingly remarked, "I hope they don't lose Dad like they always lost his luggage."

You guessed it — they lost Dad! The first night of the viewing, friends and relatives went to the mortuary to pay their last respects, but Dad wasn't there. There were lots of flowers surrounding a big empty space — but no Daddy. It seems that there had been a tornado warning and the pilot had to fly to Atlanta, so that's where Dad went!

Two days later, Dad showed up. My brothers and sisters and I had a good laugh over this. Dad had a great sense of humor, too, and he would have enjoyed this last flight he took to Pittsburgh, delaying his funeral two days.

In our case, the laughter helped to ease the pain of losing a wonderful father. You may use my name. — DIANE BOHY HILLIARD, CLINTON, MONT.

DEAR ABBY: Here's another one for your problematic name collection:

Since I married into the Jesu (pronounced Jay-Sue) family, I have faced the constant battle of keeping the second "s" off the end of my name.

At my baby shower, a beautifully decorated cake was presented to me bearing the following message: "WELCOME, BABY JESUS!"

However, our laughter didn't stop my mom from checking the sky for an east-rising star. — KIM JESU, VENTURA, CALIF.

Fireworks

Continued from page 6A fireworks. In addition, four warnings concerning handling of fireworks were given in the county. City police were unavailable for comment.

City fires during the Fourth of July were up over the last two years. There were two fires caused by fireworks last year, one in 1991 and 15 in 1990.

Gusting winds were one hazard. If winds were sustained at 35 mph, the show from South Mountain would have been canceled, Cole said. It began about 9:50 as a full moon began rising to light up the background.

Accompanying the show was music at the amphitheater in Comanche Trail Park. Adolph Labbe and a five-piece Polka band began playing at 8 p.m., followed by the 30-member Big Spring Community Concert Band at 9, and Labbe's six-member Dixieland Band at 9:30. Patriotic music on compact discs was played from the stage during the fireworks.

Reunion pulls together veterans of Vietnam

The Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — The conversations recall a war far away but not so long ago, with discussions of rice paddies, grunts and helicopters.

Especially helicopters, for the men talking are attending the Vietnam Helicopter Pilots Association's 10th annual reunion.

They tell of swooping down on a landing zone to disgorge or pick up troops in jungle clearings, using machine guns and rockets to attack ground targets and toting artillery pieces and other heavy equipment on slings.

They tell of enjoying each other's camaraderie and now. And they tell of helping each other remember what they want to remember. The rest, well, is mostly in the past.

One injured in 'copter crash

By GARY SHANKS Staff Writer

A California man is in critical but stable condition in a Lubbock hospital, following a helicopter crash about one mile north of Lake J.B. Thomas.

James Ladd, Jr., 30, was piloting his helicopter Sunday afternoon, laying sensor lines for a seismograph company in Borden County.

Witnesses at the scene said they heard a loud popping noise, looked up and saw the helicopter plunging toward the earth.

The craft fell into a ravine or arroyo, flipping over and coming to rest in an inverted position, according to Borden County Sheriff's Department reports.

The full extent of Ladd's injuries has not been released, but he was reportedly conscious when an emergency medical team extricated him from the wreckage.

The helicopter suffered severe damage, according to the report. The vehicle's entire rotary mechanism was torn away. The helicopter is thought to be a total loss, suffering damage to all parts of the airframe.

Ladd was transported to Lubbock by ambulance.

Witnesses reported the accident occurred at a higher altitude and away from nearby electrical lines. The Federal Aviation Administration's Lubbock office is investigating the crash, but has not yet determined the cause.

The kind of low-altitude work the helicopter pilot was performing is inherently dangerous, a Borden County deputy said.

Ladd's mission in the seismograph was laying miles of sensor lines in a grid pattern. The helicopter can perform this task much faster than workers on foot.

The Scurry County Department of Public Safety also is assisting in the investigation, filing accident reports on the helicopter crash.

"As my friends would come home, I would hear their tales of college," he said. "I knew I was capable of doing more."

After getting a band and baseball scholarship at Tarleton State Junior College in Stephenville, he earned an associate of arts. During that time, he graded papers after school and swept out the "Ford House" each morning before class to make money to fund his schooling.

It was at Tarleton that he met his wife, Virginia Ann. By 1962 he graduated from North Texas State Teachers College. Once again, he had ensured his funds for school by working as a night clerk in a motel, a gas pumper at a filling station as well as a residence hall counselor. His first teaching job was in a poor experiment #1 Burning Metals. WHAT YOU NEED: Magnet - permission and help from a grown-up - the glowing, burning coals left over from a cookout - safety goggles. WHAT TO DO: Put on your safety glasses to protect your eyes. Drag the magnet around in the gutters of a paved street. Be very careful. Do not do this if cars are zooming around. Safety is the first reason why you need a grown-up to help. Save the fuzzy black stuff that sticks to the magnet until you have 1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon. Wash your hands well.

MORE STUFF: When it's dark, ask your grown-up helper to sprinkle the black powder onto the glowing coals. Pay close attention. There will be a very short, bright white sparkle. Note: The powder you burned is not good to handle. It's another grown-up-type thing. WHAT IS GOING ON: The sparkle comes from burning steel. A sparkler works something like this, only with a fuel that keeps burning the steel for a longer time.

SO WHAT: All fireworks work the same way - a metal or metal-salt for color and a fuel that gets incredibly hot to burn it up. The black powder you got from the street is rather upsetting. It's really powdered car parts. As cars drive, they give off little shavings of metal. If you weren't able to find very much of it, you're lucky. It means your street is free of this kind of pollution.

Dear Amanda, Fireworks work because metal burns, and when metals and metal-salts burn, they give off different colors. We usually don't think of something like iron as burning. But it can burn - bright white. Fireworks use intense heat to burn metals and metal-salts. The heat comes from gunpowder, which is mostly fine granules of charcoal with other chemicals added. Experiments with fire are not a good idea because they are extremely dangerous. But there is an experiment your family can do to show you that metals can burn. Do not try this without help from a grown-up! Okay? Okay.

How to spice up Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England — If the snoozer of a final between Pete Sampras and Jim Courier proved anything, it's that Wimbledon needs to be made safe for television once again.

Ratings have been melting faster than an ice cream cone left on a sun-baked Centre Court since Jimmy Connors, John McEnroe and Bjorn Borg stopped reaching the championship round some 10 years ago. And you don't have to be a television executive to understand it isn't solely a matter of personality — because Borg never owned one.

In contrast to those classic matches, Sunday's Sampras-Courier tilt produced exactly one memorable point — it came, fittingly, in the final game — even if Princess Diana was sighted on the edge of her seat in the Royal Box clapping every now and then.

"Maybe she has a crush on me," Sampras said after winning his second Grand Slam title.

That's as plausible an explanation as any. It couldn't have been the tennis that made her so jumpy.

The match was five minutes old before a rally went beyond three shots. Thirty-seven minutes passed before a rally lasted long enough for the crowd to inject "oohs" and "aahs" (these are Brits, after all) between shots. Ninety minutes elapsed before either player held a break point; that would have been Courier, who managed exactly two of them.

"Really, I didn't have many chances to break him and when I did, I generally broke," Courier said. "It was just grass court tennis — roll the dice."

Viewers more likely changed the channel.

So what's to be done? Since the All England Club won't stand for ripping up the grass, and the manufacturers making millions off the high-tech howitzers being wielded by the players won't allow a return to wood rackets, the cheap, easy solution is this: Speed up the ball.

"I know it sounds crazy," said Tony Trabert, a former Wimbledon champion who now works as a television commentator, "but it will work."

"Grass has always been a serve-and-volleyer's surface, but the equipment and players are developing to the point where it's like playing indoors on a wood court. Even players we used to think of as baseliners, like (Andre) Agassi and Courier, hit their groundstrokes so aggressively, they're almost like volleys."

So far, most suggestions have centered on slowing down the ball by making it heavier. But with the incredible topspin today's players already generate, they're likely to adapt to such a change quickly. The beauty of speeding up the ball is that it would force them to throttle back on the power themselves.

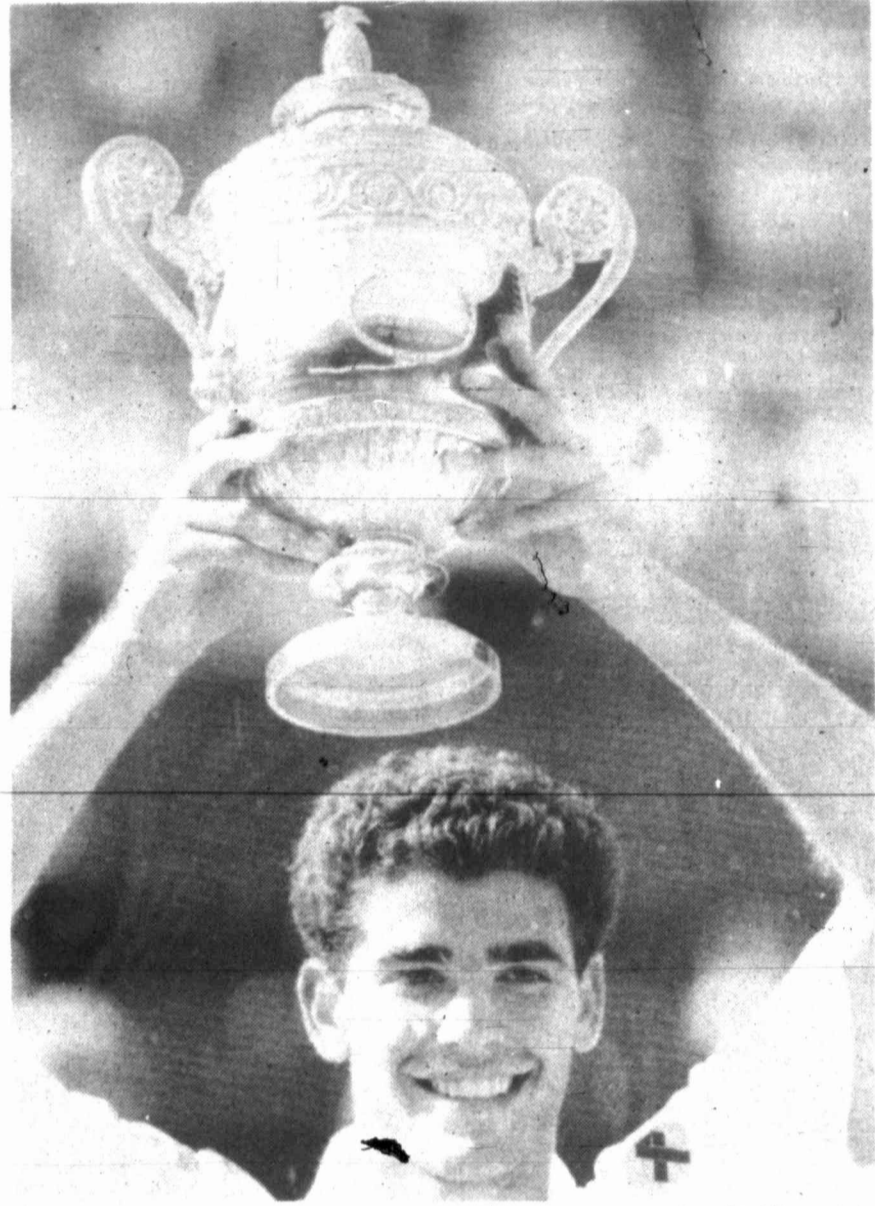

Trabert recalled practicing for matches in the rarefied air of Mexico City some years ago, watching ball after ball sail way past the baseline.

"Because you couldn't hit the ball hard without hitting it out, you had to learn to protect the court, to use all of it, to set up your points better. ... Because the arc of the ball wouldn't bend as much in the thin air, you couldn't hit such flat serves. You had to make certain it had plenty of spin."

"Those things would put some of the rallying back in the game here."

The 1991 Wimbledon final between Michael Stich and Boris Becker lasted 2 hours, 33 minutes and someone calculated the ball was in play for a little longer than nine minutes. Last year's final between Agassi and Goran Ivanisevic, who had 34 aces in the match and 206 for the fortnight, went 2:50 and most of the people who stayed with it either worked for Nike or was under the age of 19.

This year's final clocked in two minutes shy of three hours, most of it consumed by the players changing sides after launching one missile after another past each other.

Pete Sampras holds his trophy aloft after winning the Men's Singles Final at Wimbledon Sunday. Sampras defeated Jim Courier 7-6 (7-3), 7-6 (8-6), 3-6, 6-3 to take his first Wimbledon title.

Wimbledon win shows Sampras ready for elite

By The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Pete Sampras couldn't handle Grand Slam success the first time. This time, he says he's ready.

"This is something that I'm more prepared for than I was in 1990," Sampras said Sunday after serving his way past Jim Courier on a scorching Fourth of July to win his first Wimbledon championship.

Three years ago, Sampras became the youngest man to win the U.S. Open at the age of 19. But he felt uncomfortable in the spotlight and frequently complained that the Open mantle was too heavy to bear.

"In 1990, I was very new at being a top player in the world and had a tough time with that at first," Sampras said. "But I'm more prepared to handle this. The only goal that I made for myself since I was a little kid was to one day win this tournament. Winning this in my mind is priceless."

"This victory means just a little bit more than the U.S. Open victory. The U.S. Open happened so fast that I never really had too much time to really think about what had happened. Now, being a top player the last couple of years, I can kind of appreciate what it takes to win a Grand Slam."

The Wimbledon title is one the 21-year-old Sampras intends to savor for all its worth.

"I'll take three weeks off, get away from everybody, spend some time with my girlfriend, reflect and enjoy it," he said. "After winning in 1990, I did exhibition after exhibition. Now I can just sit back and let it all sink in."

By beating Courier 7-6 (7-3), 7-6 (8-6), 3-6, 6-3, Sampras maintained the world No. 1 ranking that he took over from his American rival in April. Since then, many — including Courier — have wondered how Sampras could be No. 1 without having won a Grand Slam title since 1990.

"He can't take this title away from me, and now that I'm No. 1 for the past three months, I don't think there'll be any more controversy," Sampras said.

Certainly not after the way he played Sunday in the first all-American final since 1984.

With the on-court temperature at 105 degrees, there were few long rallies or exciting points. But that was also due to the dominant serve of both players, particularly Sampras.

For a man nearly forced to skip the tournament with a shoulder injury, Sampras served brilliantly — or "huge" as Courier put it. He blasted 22 aces, serving at an average speed of 110 mph, with a maximum of 123 mph.

Sampras was especially effective with his second serve, mixing it up so that Courier couldn't get into a rhythm to tee off on his returns. Courier had only two break points against Sampras in the match, both of which he converted to win the third set.

"The difference was Pete served a lot bigger on the second serve, and I wasn't able to handle it as well as he was able to handle my second serve," Courier said.

Courier had one real chance to take control of the match — when he reached set point at 6-5 in the second set tiebreaker. Sampras floated a tentative forehand volley. Courier thought the ball was going long, but it dropped on the baseline to even the score. Sampras won the next two points for the set.

"He hit a choker volley, but it was in so it counts," Courier said.

Sampras conceded he was fortunate to win that crucial point.

"It was a very tense moment," he said. "It was a very tense volley. I admit I didn't get all of it."

Price keeps Norman at bay to take Western

By The Associated Press

LEMONT, Ill. — Nick Price put Greg Norman behind him — for the second time this year — and now has Nick Faldo in his future.

Faldo, the tall Englishman who owns the British Open title, generally is regarded as the world's leading player. But Price suddenly finds himself in position to dispute that ranking.

A wire-to-wire, 5-shot triumph over Norman in the Western Open on Sunday marked his second triumph in as many weeks, his third of the year and seventh around the world in the last 12 months.

He also became the first $1 million winner of the year, pushing his season's earnings to $1,037,879 with the $216,000 winner's check.

Those exploits, along with an earlier loss to Price at the Players Championship, were enough to convince Norman about who's No. 1 in the world.

Price is "doing kind of like what Freddie Couples did a year ago," Norman said. "You have to put him up there as the best player in the world."

It could be decided next week in the British Open at Sandwich, England. It will be Price's next start and Faldo will be defending.

"I'm physically and mentally exhausted," Price said after running away from the field on the Dubs-dread course at Cog Hill with a closing 67 and a 269 total, 19 under par.

"The last three weeks, I think I can say they're the toughest I've had playing golf."

So Price, who grew up in what was then Rhodesia but now lives in Orlando, Fla., said he will take five days off, "not touch a club, get golf out of my mind, go fishing," before the journey to England. The exhaustion, Price said, came from the pressure of leading throughout the tournament, suffocating heat and humidity, and the mental anguish of a controversy that surrounded his putter.

Nick Price and his wife Sue smile after he won the Western Open in Lemont, Ill. Sunday. Price led all four days and shot a 5-under 67 Sunday to finish five strokes ahead of Greg Norman.

It began at the U.S. Open three weeks ago where he made a run at the title despite very poor putting.

At the same time, a problem developed with a club manufacturer to whom Price was under contract.

A change in the brand of putter Price used was desired. But he couldn't find one he liked. Finally, he borrowed one from close friend Denis Watson. It worked.

And it is still working.

"It's all the putter. I can't believe I'm putting this well," Price said.

Norman agreed. "Nickie's on a roll. He's in the zone. He's playing with a lot of confidence. He doesn't believe he can miss a putt."

He made more than his share over the final round. Armed with a 2-shot lead after 54 holes, Price birdied four of the first six holes in the final round and never looked back.

Included in that stretch — which Norman said "slammed the door on me" — were a couple of 25-foot putts.

And then he rammed in a 40-footer on the 10th.

"That was the turning point," Norman said. "After that, I was trying to force it."

But he didn't have much of a chance and trailed by a minimum of four strokes the rest of the way.

"Nickie just blew me out of the water," Norman said after his closing round of 70 produced a 274 total.

It marked the third year in a row, and fifth time overall, Norman had been runnerup in this event.

Bob Lohr holed a bunker shot for a birdie on the final hole for a 69 and third place at 277.

Brian Henninger, Mark Wiebe and John Adams followed at 278. Henninger shot 68, Wiebe 69 and Adams 72.

Pitching puts Canseco's career in jeopardy

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Aesop's fabled hound wanted more than he had, so when the hungry mongrel snapped for the bone in his reflection, into the pond plopped his meal.

All Jose Canseco wanted was to pitch. And when the slugger took to the mound and blew out his arm, into the drink went his season.

Canseco will undergo surgery Friday to replace a torn ligament in his right elbow and is expected to be out until at least spring training. Dr. Frank Jobe, the Los Angeles Dodgers team physician, performed a similar operation on Tommy John in 1974 that revived the pitcher's career.

The procedure involves transplanting a ligament from Canseco's wrist into his elbow.

Canseco had a solid start this year, making good on his vow to rebound from a sub-par 1992 season that hit bottom in August when he was called back from the on-deck circle by Oakland manager Tony La Russa to learn he had been traded to the Texas Rangers.

Following his fourth stay on the disabled list in the last 4 1/2 seasons, Canseco finished the year with a .255 average in 60 games, 10 homers and 46 RBIs. And a $4.1 million salary.

Canseco was batting over .300, hitting in the clutch and adding his typical flair this year — until May 29.

On that day, the Rangers were being belted by the Boston Red Sox, and rookie manager Kevin Kennedy made the monumental mistake of his young career. He sent Canseco to the mound to mop up.

At the time, it was a prank designed to send a message to a faltering bullpen and humor Canseco. A happier Canseco would be a more productive Canseco; he threw a scoreless inning in an exhibition game in April against Triple A Oklahoma City and then went on an offensive tear.

Canseco kept asking to pitch in a real game and kept working on his two-pitch repertoire of fastball and knuckleball. Finally, the front office gave Kennedy the go-ahead.

It made all the highlight films, but many questioned the logic of using the high-priced, injury-prone slugger on the mound.

And sure enough, days later, Canseco began to miss games because of everything from a sore arm to back problems to migraine headaches — although some have suggested that last one may have been a result of the ball that bounced off his head for a homer by Cleveland's Carlos Martinez in May.

"I think if anything is going to happen freakish, it'll happen to me," Canseco said. "I think everything involving myself is unfortunate."

Canseco threw 33 pitches against the Red Sox, but believes he hurt his arm on the second pitch. Not being a pitcher, he thought the twinge in his elbow was just soreness or a muscle spasm he could work through, not a season-ending injury that might affect his career.

For a while, didn't it appear as though there was nothing Canseco couldn't or wouldn't do?

He was the first man to hit 40 homers and steal 40 bases in one season, and he did it so nonchalantly, could 50-50 be that far behind?

He hit a baseball into the fifth deck at Skydome in 1989 during a playoff game after denting a television camera at Los Angeles in 1988 with a grand slam in his first World Series at-bat.

He was king of, well, the hill. But even before his elbow injury, Canseco was showing signs of decline.

In 82 games with Texas — he has missed 23 others — Canseco has hit 250 with 14 homers and 61 RBIs in 304 at-bats, well off the pace that produced 44 home runs and 122 RBIs just two seasons ago.

Lately, Canseco has seemed less like himself and more like his twin brother, Ozzie, who never had the skills of Jose and quit baseball this year rather than languish in the minor leagues.

Old man Winfield rolls on

By The Associated Press

Dave Winfield, baseball's oldest everyday player at 41, is not ready to join his contemporaries on the old-timers' tour.

Not by a long shot. Winfield hit a two-run homer to give Minnesota the lead and robbed Robin Yount of an extra-base hit with a run-saving, leaping catch in right field Sunday, leading the Twins to a 4-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Winfield, who also singled twice, said the old-timers' game prior to the Twins' contest supplied him with inspiration. Participants in the four-inning game included his former peers Dick Allen, Jimmy Wynn and George Foster.

"I played with about two-thirds of those guys and I'm sure they're glad to see that I'm still kicking," said Winfield, who's 10-for-25 in his last six games and hitting .250 with 10 homers and 38 RBIs on the season.

In other games Sunday, Texas outscored Detroit 8-6, Chicago beat Baltimore 3-1, Boston blanked Seattle 6-0, Kansas City swept Toronto 3-1, Oakland rallied past New York 7-6, and California outlasted Cleveland 7-6 in 11 innings.

Winfield became the oldest position player in baseball when 45-year-old catcher Carlton Fisk was released by the Chicago White Sox on June 28. Only Nolan Ryan of Texas, 46, and Charlie Hough of Florida, 45, are older.

"Regardless of his age, I always liked the way he's hustled," said Milwaukee manager Phil Garner, who is 44. "I've played against him in the National League and watched him now for a couple of years. He plays the game the way it's supposed to be played. I've never seen him loaf."

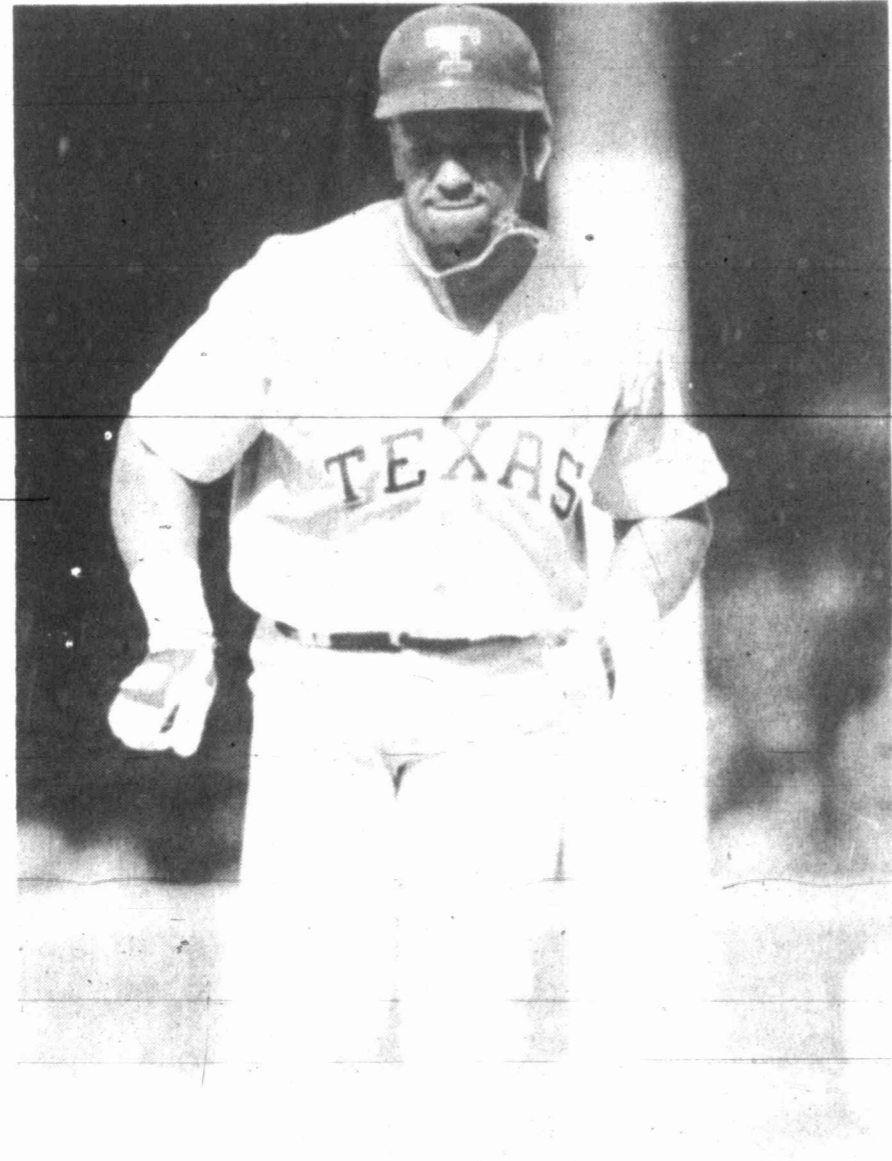

Winfield, in his 21st big-league season, continued his climb up baseball's career lists. His homer off Jamie Navarro (5-5) was No. 442, inning. He struck out six and walked three.

Bosio (2-4), who pitched a no-hitter against Boston on April 22, held the Red Sox hitless until the seventh, when Mike Greenwell and Andre Dawson singled in front of Mo Vaughn's 12th home run of the season.

ROYALS 3, BLUE JAYS 1

George Brett's 652nd career double and a combined seven-hitter by Chris Haney (5-1) and three relievers carried Kansas City, which handed Toronto its fourth straight loss and first sweep of more than a two-game series since 1991.

Brett's double in the fourth off Todd Stottlemyre (5-6) moved him past Honus Wagner and into fifth place on the career list. It also started a two-run rally as Gary Gaetti doubled Brett home and scored on Texas' Julio Franco rounds the bases after hitting a two-run homer against the Detroit Tigers in the seventh inning of their game Sunday.

Greg Gagne's single. Jeff Montgomery pitched the ninth for his league-leading 25th save. ATHLETICS 7, YANKEES 6

Rickey Henderson's sacrifice fly capped a five-run rally in the eighth inning, giving Oakland a sweep of New York and a six-game winning streak.

New York led 6-2 entering the eighth, but the A's got five straight singles. Bobby Munoz (2-1), followed by a bases-loaded walk and two sacrifice flies against closer Steve Furr to take the lead.

Dennis Eckersley got his 18th save in relief of Shawn Hillegas (3-6).

Wade Boggs hit his second homer as a Yankee, a three-run shot, and Rickey Henderson and Dave Henderson hit their 10th homers of the season for the A's. ANGELS 7, INDIANS 6

Torey Lovullo drew a walk with a bases loaded in the 11th inning for California, which snapped visiting Cleveland's eight-game winning streak.

Luis Polonia and Stan Javier singled off Matt Young (1-6) to start the rally and Tim Salmon was hit by a pitch. Lovullo then walked on five pitches, giving California its first victory in seven games and ending the Indians' longest winning streak since a 10-game run in 1986.

Mike Butcher (1-0) won it after Cleveland, which trailed 6-3 entering the ninth, tied it on five straight singles before a batter was retired. RANGERS 8, TIGERS 6

Julio Franco homered and singled to drive in three runs as Texas built an 8-3 lead and held on, sending Detroit to its 12th loss in 13 games.

Roger Pavlik (4-4) allowed three runs in 6 1-3 innings to win for the first time since June 13. Tom Henke allowed three runs in the ninth before striking out pinch-hitter Chad Kreuter with the bases loaded to end the game.

Mark Leiter (6-5) gave up five runs and remained winless since June 8. WHITE SOX 3, ORIOLES 1

Tim Lincecum's sixth-inning triple drove home the go-ahead run and Chicago's pitchers retired Baltimore's final 20 batters at Comiskey Park.

Raines' triple off Ben McDonald (4-8) scored Ozzie Guillen, and Raines came home on Joey Cora's squeeze bunt, giving Rod Bolton (1-4) his first major league victory. Roberto Hernandez pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

Cal Ripken's 10th homer in the first accounted for Baltimore's run. RED SOX 6, MARINERS 0

Rookie Paul Quantrill pitched a two-hitter for his first big league shutout and complete game, outdueling no-hit challenger Chris Bosio and leading visiting Boston to its fourth straight victory and 11th in 12 games.

Quantrill (4-5) allowed only a single by Jay Buhner and a double by Mackey Sasser, both in the second tying Dave Kingman for 19th place, and his first three-hit game since May 17 gave him 2,931 in his career, moving him into a tie with Jake Beckley for 23rd place.

"He's incredible," Milwaukee's Darryl Hamilton said. "The guy's over 40 and he's out there jumping, diving."

Twins manager Tom Kelly said he thinks the pursuit of 3,000 hits may have contributed to Winfield's recent 30-game drought, during which he hit .182.

"He was trying to get 3,000 hits with one swing," Kelly said.

Sanders coaxes balk to give Braves a win; Houston romps

By The Associated Press

Deion Sanders was dancing off third base, trying to draw Matt Turner's attention.

Sanders got more than a look from the rookie pitcher. He got a balk call in the ninth inning Sunday that gave the Atlanta Braves a 4-3 victory over the Florida Marlins.

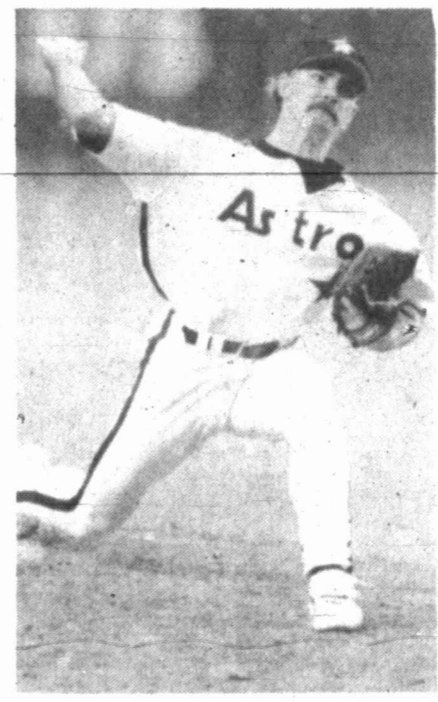

"I think it was a terrible call to end a game like that," Turner said. "I stepped off on my left foot. He said I broke my shoulder toward the plate. I don't know if he was too hot and tired behind the plate and wanted to get the game over with."

The balk was called by plate umpire Ed Rapuano.

Crew chief Harry Wendelstedt, speaking for the umpires, said, "The pitcher came to a set with the hands together in front. If you break the hands and step off the rubber, it's a balk."

"Once the hands come together, you can only throw home or to a base," he said. "You see this sort of balk every now and then. It's not unusual."

In other games, Philadelphia topped San Diego 8-4, San Francisco beat New York 10-8, Los Angeles defeated Montreal 1-0 in 11 innings, Houston stopped St. Louis 9-4, Cincinnati downed Pittsburgh 7-2 and Colorado beat Chicago 3-1.

Doug Drabek of the Houston Astros delivers to the plate in the fifth inning against the St. Louis Cardinals Sunday in Houston.

ASTROS 9, CARDINALS 4

Eddie Taubensee homered twice in a game for the first time in his career as Houston again beat St. Louis at the Astrodome. The Astros have won the first three games of the series, which ends today.

Drabek (7-8) gave up eight hits in his sixth complete game of the season, one more than the entire Houston staff had last year. He struck out nine and walked none.

Taubensee hit a two-run homer off Rene Arocha (6-3) in the second inning and his fifth home run of the season, a solo drive, in the fourth.

PHILLIES 8, PADRES 4

Lenny Dykstra had three hits, three runs and two RBIs and Ben Rivera won his fifth straight start, leading Philadelphia past visiting San Diego.

Rivera (9-3) allowed six hits and three runs in seven innings. He struck out six and walked four.

Dykstra led off the game with a single off Tim Worrell (0-2) and scored on Milt Thompson's triple. Dykstra added a two-run single in the second inning and doubled to start a three-run rally in the sixth. GIANTS 10, METS 8

Darren Lewis hit a two-run single that broke an eighth-inning tie, and San Francisco went on to its 19th victory in 26 games.

New York has lost 20 of 25 and has not won consecutive home games since their first two of the season against Colorado.

Mark Carreon and Mike Benjamin hit home runs for the Giants, and Royce Clayton had four hits. Lewis' single off Mike Maddux (0-6) made it 9-7. Mike Jackson (5-2) was the winner and Rod Beck got his 24th save.

Peers recall Drysdale as 'a warrior, a fighter'

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The man who caught most of Don Drysdale's pitches for the Brooklyn and Los Angeles Dodgers believes intimidation helped make the man known as the "Big D" a Hall of Famer.

"I think he was a little bit above a competitor," John Roseboro said Sunday. "He was kind of a warrior out there, a fighter. He went out to destroy you any way he could. And when he was in the lineup, we had another good bat."

"I don't think too many people liked to hit against him. If somebody knocked down one of our players, Drysdale would try to get two-for-one, at least. He was a very nice guy off the field, but when he put that uniform on and got on the mound, he was all business."

"He kept the hitter a little intimidated at all times. I think the intimidation factor helped make him a great pitcher, definitely. It was like pulling teeth to bat against him."

Roseboro could hardly believe his former batterymate died, just a week after Hall of Fame catcher Roy Campanella passed away.

"It's been a bad week," Roseboro said. "I saw Don at Campy's funeral on Wednesday. Here he is, 6-foot-6, in his loud clothes, as happy as ever."

News of Drysdale's death of an apparent heart attack in his Montreal hotel room on Saturday was a shock to a lot of people. After all, he appeared the picture of perfect health at age 56, and there were no outward indications of any problems.

Sandy Koufax, who teamed with Drysdale to make up one of the best-ever 1-2 starting pitching punches in big-league history, found out about Drysdale's death while watching the Dodgers-Expos game on television in nearby Anaheim, where he appeared at a card show over the weekend.

"At first, I didn't want to believe it," Koufax told reporters Sunday. "It's taken a while to set in and it still hasn't. It's been a rough week with Campy dying and now Drysdale. But Don wouldn't want us to mourn over him, he'd want us to go on."

Ironically, Drysdale died in a city where he once played as a minor leaguer and later began his big-league broadcasting career. This season was his sixth as a member of the Dodgers broadcast team.

"We played here, he was my roommate, I took him under my wing," Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda recalled Sunday.

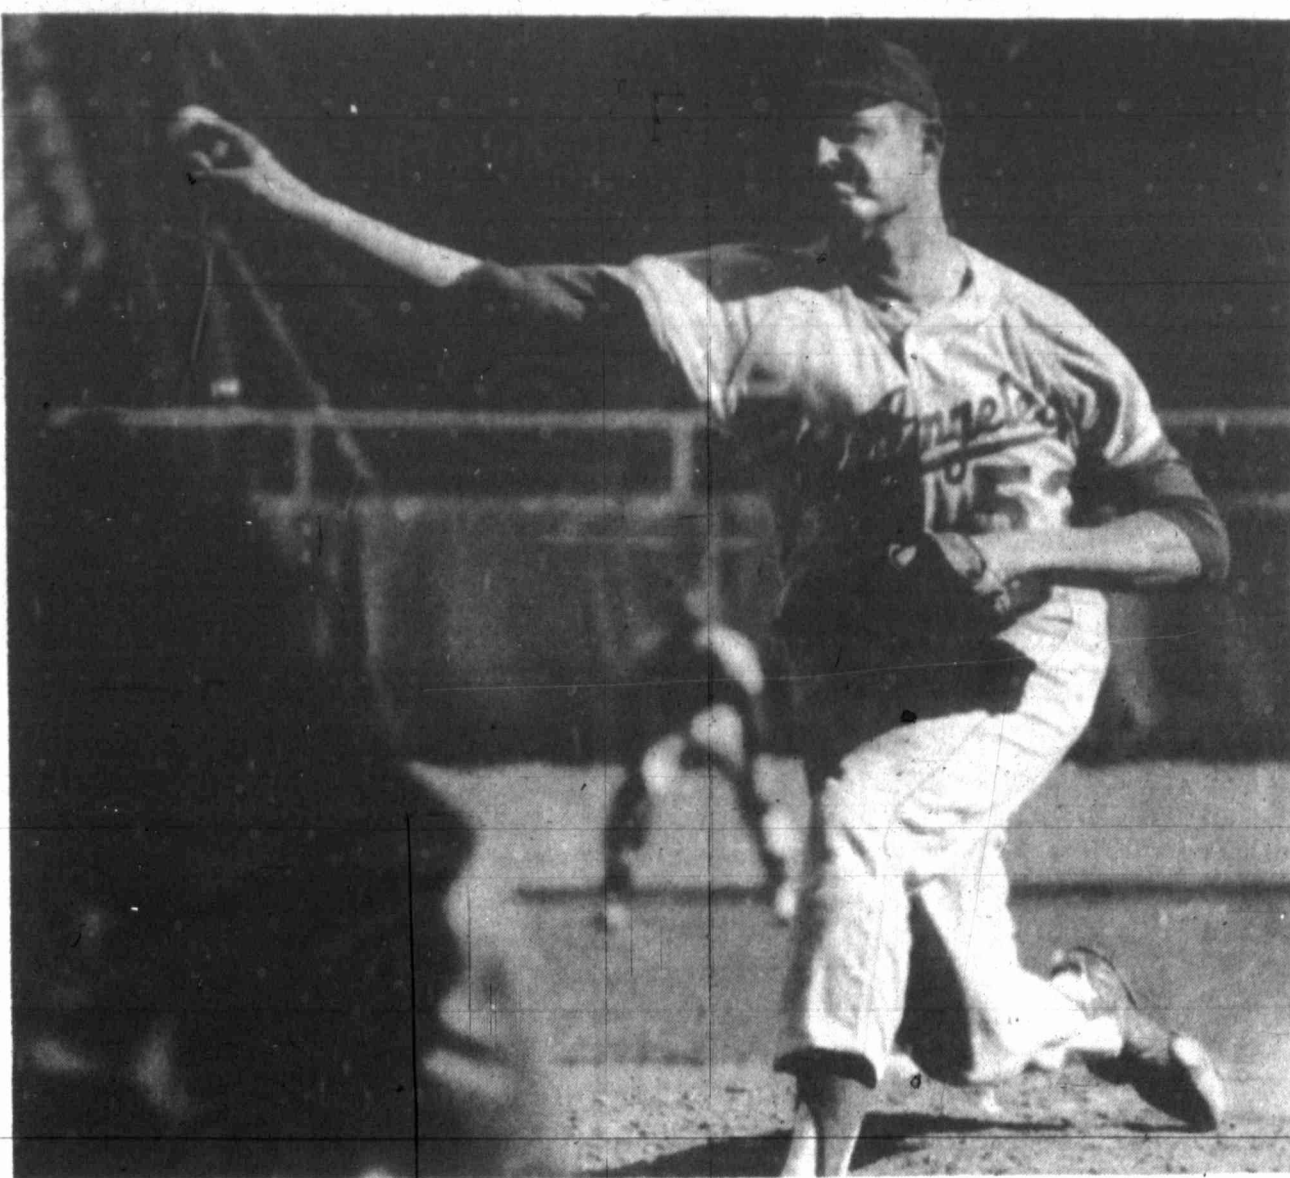

"On the field, he was as mean as a snake," Lasorda said. "Off the field, he was as nice a guy as you'd want to meet."

Known as a fierce competitor with a sidearm delivery that made him particularly tough on right-handed batters, Drysdale was 209-166 with a 2.95 ERA in 14 seasons with the Dodgers from 1956-69. He was elected to baseball's Hall of Fame in 1984.

Older fans certainly remember some of the great confrontations between Drysdale and Hall of Fame hitters such as Hank Aaron, Willie Mays, Frank Robinson and Willie McCovey.

McCovey, in particular, owned Drysdale. And Aaron hit more of his 755 homers against Drysdale (17) than any other pitcher.

"I respected Don not only as a player, but as a man," Aaron said. "I just saw him a couple of weeks ago and we had the best conversation since he retired. We were both unhappy about some of the things going on in the game."

Hall of Famer Don Drysdale delivers a pitch against the Milwaukee Braves in this 1962 file photo. Drysdale, who won the Cy Young Award while compiling a 25-9 record with the Los Angeles Dodgers that year, died Saturday of a heart attack. He was 56.

Not even Slamming Sammy can elude time's toll

By The Associated Press

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. — About 75 years have passed since Sam Snead first played golf, and "Slammin' Sammy" still can hit balls farther and more accurately than most.

His ample knowledge of golf and its lore is matched only by his seemingly endless supply of jokes.

And his fiery competitiveness remains as solid as the stomach he challenges old pals to hit.

Snead, 81, has sports immortality, assured by his victories in 81 PGA Tour events and 54 other pro tournaments, and his induction into the halls of fame of the Professional Golfers' Association of America and others.

Yet his own mortality is not far from mind.

"They always had this picture out in front of the clubhouse at Augusta," he said. "And, by God, you know I looked at that thing (recently) and half of them were dead."

"You couldn't believe it. ... Some-

"You couldn't believe it. ... Sometimes I lie in bed, (and think) 'What did I do today?' I know the time's coming. You try to think if it was for something or was it any good or are you satisfied with what you did."

times I lie in bed, (and think) 'What did I do today?' I know the time's coming. You try to think if it was for something or was it any good or are you satisfied with what you did," he said.

The years and their toll creep on.

Snead recently smashed his right foot in a door, forcing amputation of half of his middle toe.

Persisting pain that feels "like you put a match under your foot" will require the rest of the toe to come off in August, he said.

"It's hell. I notice every year there's something different," Snead said. "I don't remember as well now as I did. I ... go away from it and try to come back and a lot of time it's just like you pressed a button. Oh, Christ, I hope I'm not getting Alzheimer's." It didn't seem so moments before. Fans listened intently as he talked in detail about a foe who kept walking in between his ball and the hole just before he took shots.

That effort to rattle him didn't work decades ago, and neither can his own melancholy derail him for long now.

He turns to one of his many bawdy stories to cope.

"The old guy was 84, sitting on a park bench, when another guy came up and set down beside of him and they started talking," Snead said. "Finally the old bird said, 'You know something, I have me a 26-year-old girl, best bed partner a man ever had,' and tears started coming down his cheeks."

"She's the best cook in the whole world," the guy said, and then the tears really started coming. The other guy said, 'If she's that good, what does she have you crying for?'"

"He said, 'I forgot where I live,'" he said.

Snead is back as golf pro emeritus at The Greenbrier resort, where he was pro for 38 years until a contract dispute in 1974.

Snead likes The Greenbrier's offer to start a museum, tavern, memorabilia shop and academy in his name, with subsequent royalty payments.

Plus, Snead wants to add to the inheritance of his two children and two grandchildren, who he says already stand to receive the family's 240-acre farm outside Hot Springs, Va., not too far away.

That Snead is instructing and playing with Greenbrier corporate guests at an age when "you should smell some flowers, do a little fishing, play a little golf and sleep a little" is a reminder of the PGA Tour's humbler years.

"For instance, in 1946, I went over to play in the British Open. I was playing well then and I thought I had a good chance and I won. ... It cost $2,000 to go play it and I won $600. And you know, they asked me, 'Are you going to come back and defend next year?' I said, 'Are you kidding?'"

Snead anticipates more young athletes will become golfers as television continues to sweeten purses. He wonders how far the sport could go "if you could sit right there and see it all from one hole."

"There's more suspense, I think, in coming out of a trap or getting in the water or behind a tree or in a bush," he said. "With baseball, it's all cut and dried. Basketball, you have the same court. Tennis, it's the same court. But golf is something different with almost every shot."

Better late than never for Hobnay

By The Associated Press

MASON, Ohio — Now that Simon Hobday, a former cattle farmer and car salesman in Zambia, has won his first American golf tournament, he's kicking himself for not trying the U.S. tour 25 years ago.

"When I was younger and my time came to come over here and play — I was playing in Europe — I chickened out," said Hobday, who shot a 5-under-par 66 Sunday to win the $850,000 Kroger Senior Classic.

He stayed overseas because he didn't see any future playing against the likes of Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson week after week.

"Over the years I thought, 'Hang on, you made a mistake.' So when the Senior Tour came up again, I didn't even hesitate. I was here like a shot."

Hobday has won more than $1 million since 1991, when he joined the Senior Tour. In retrospect, even the thought of facing the regulars on the PGA Tour is less daunting.

"After you'd played with them a few times in Europe ... I knew they were good, but they weren't miles ahead," Hobday said.

Hobday won the Zambian Amateur five successive times, had two wins on the European tour between 1969 and 1986 and four victories on the South African tour.

"The biggest check I ever won was $8,000 in the old days," Hobday said.

Sunday's win was worth $127,500. He finished the 54 holes in 11-under 202, one stroke better than defending champion Gibby Gilbert, Bob Reith and Mike Hill.

"I'm surprised he hasn't won before this," said Gilbert, who had seven birdies and shared the lead until he bogeyed No. 16, missing a 2-footer for par.

"He's a character. That's the thing about the Senior Tour. We're not a bunch of clones. We all have fun."

Hobday said he would call home to Pretoria, South Africa, to let his family know that he had won — finally.

Takes the lead

Two-time defending champion Miguel Indurain of Spain waves to the crowd after he won the prologue of the 80th Tour de France cycling race Saturday. Indurain is trying for his third straight Tour victory.

DODGERS 1, EXPOS 0
Two throwing errors by shortstop Mike Lansing and a passed ball by Tim Laker enabled Los Angeles to score in the 11th inning against Montreal at Olympic Stadium.

Cory Snyder singled with one out against Jeff Shaw (1-5) and Lansing threw away consecutive grounders, loading the bases. With Eric Davis at the plate, Laker let a pitch from Jeff Passero get past him.

Dodgers starter Tom Candiotti gave up only two hits in seven innings. He struck out six, walked none and did not allow a runner past first base. Expos starter Chris Nabholz gave up five hits in eight innings. He struck out six and walked none.

REDS 7, PIRATES 2
Barry Larkin, Hal Morris, Joe Oliver and Reggie Sanders hit home runs, leading Cincinnati past Pittsburgh at Riverfront Stadium.

The Reds have nine home runs in the first four games of the series, which ends today: The Pirates have lost six of seven.

Larkin hit a two-run homer off Paul Wagner (3-5) in the third inning. Morris and Oliver hit solo shots during a four-run sixth. Jay Bell homered for Pittsburgh.

ROCKIES 3, CUBS 1
Jeff Parrett made the most of a rare start, pitching Colorado past Chicago at Mile High Stadium.

Parrett (3-2) took a one-hit shutout into the seventh inning, but left with two outs after a pair of singles scored a run. Darren Holmes got his sixth save.

Parrett struck out five and walked one in the longest outing of his career. He has started only twice since 1990. Andres Galarraga went 2-for-4, raising his league-leading average to .402. He doubled and scored the first run in the fourth on Charlie Hayes' single off Mike Morgan (5-9).
