Midland County commissioners are exploring the possibilities of Midland County to host a proposed 5000-bed private regional jail to help alleviate overcrowded jail conditions.

Dallas-based Sgt. Corplan wants to build a regional jail with private funds and then lease out space to West Texas counties, such as Midland and Ector, which have severely overcrowded jails.

We want to know your views.

Do you think Midland County should agree to host the regional jail?

Hutchison to comply

HOUSTON — U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison will comply with a subpoena ordering her to testify this week before a Travis County grand jury, even though she had the right to forgo the order, a spokesman said. Travis County grand jurors are examining allegations that Mrs. Hutchison used state workers and equipment for personal and political purposes during her 2½-year tenure at the state Treasury./1B

Tax-free benefits

WASHINGTON — Workers' existing health benefits would remain tax-free even if they exceed the benefits in the Clinton health plan, a White House spokesman said Monday. The Clinton administration sought to allay concerns about the new limit on tax breaks for employer-provided health benefits that will be part of its forthcoming reform package./7A

Labor leaders take aim at NAFTA while basin bids adieu to summer

ODESSA — Area labor leaders Monday said America's proposed free-trade agreement with Mexico and Canada would devastate the state's economy if it is ratified.

No-autonomy groups rattle guns in Gaza

■ Activists appear divided about whether bullets or rhetoric will defeat accord.

By Neil MacFarquhar

JABALIYA CAMP, Occupied Gaza Strip — Wall slogans signed by Islamic activists scream for Jewish blood and prayer leaders espouse the gun as the only way to achieve a Palestinian state.

But Islamic activists in groups like Hamas and Islamic Jihad appear divided about whether bullets or just violent words will defeat the plan to start Palestinian autonomy in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank city of Jericho.

■ Arafat readies next step/4A

A minority argues that a guerrilla campaign against Israel and the PLO is the only way to destroy the Jewish state.

The others, while not ruling out guns entirely, think the limited scope of the plan combined with the corruption that has long plagued the PLO will sink Yasser Arafat in Gaza.

They could then use their already formidable strength in the fetid alleyways of the refugee camps to win at the ballot box.

"Seven years ago the Islamic groups had few supporters in Gaza. Now they have at least 50 percent," said Dr. Saud Shawa, a 37-year-old veterinarian and Hamas supporter. "In the end the only realistic alternative is an Islamic state."

A few scuffles and scattered gunshots are the only violence to date. But

Clinton presidential tour disintegrates into shouting match with critical voter

MIAMI (NYT) — His administration under strain and his leadership questioned over his efforts to advance several sweeping and disparate initiatives simultaneously this fall, President Clinton opened a public relations campaign on Monday to portray the diverse aims as interlocking parts of one grand plan.

President Clinton

"In the next few weeks, you're going to see the Congress deal with an enormous number of issues, but they all have one thing in common," the president said here in a brief speech that was styled and delivered like a campaign address. "We've got to deal with them to pull our country together and move our country forward."

Clinton linked passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement with several other administration measures — the health care program, the recently announced crime bill and the plan for government assistance in college tuition and job training — with a rhetorical flourish he repeated four times.

If any of the measures fails to win ap-

War, distance forge father-son bond

Party politics: Influence of Christian activists alters face of GOP

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a three-part series.

By John King
Associated Press writer

WEST CHESTER, Pa. — Jim Hanak was elected last year to the Chester County Republican Committee, one of those obscure party posts that often draw little interest but can carry a big voice in recruiting and endorsing candidates for local offices.

A soft-spoken man with passionate politics, he represents a growing force that is splitting the personality of local Republican politics across the United States.

Hanak is also state director for the American Family Ministries, a conservative, anti-abortion group. His dual roles represent an evolving nightmare to moderate Republicans: the quiet takeover of local GOP organizations by religious activists they view as obsessed with abortion and homosexuality and intolerant of those who don't share their views.

"These people are zealots," argues Ellen Harley, a state representative from suburban Philadelphia. "They want to impose their idea of God and their idea of values and push the social issues to the fore. That has never been what Republicans are about. A political party should not be about the business of trying to define God."

It's a festering feud that belies all the recent talk of Republican unity against President Clinton's tax increases. Unity over economic issues only masks the GOP's deep cultural divide.

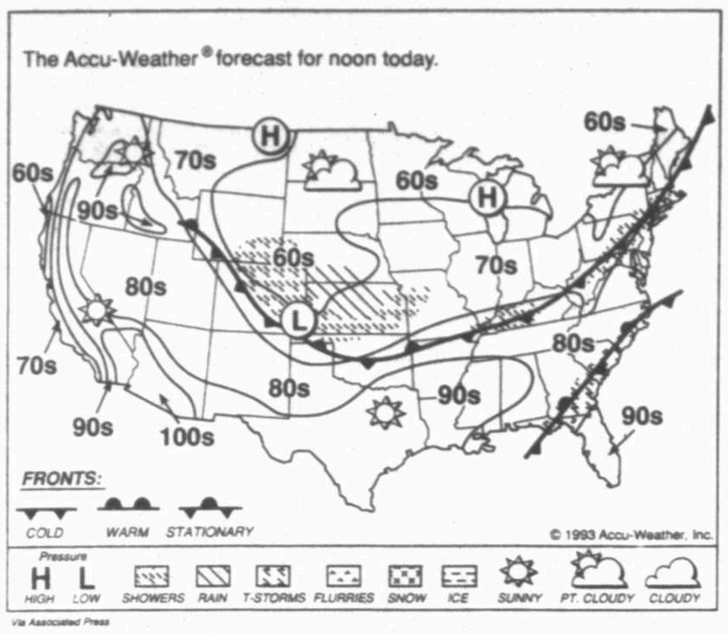

"It is not going to go away," Republican National Committee member Elsie Hillman says of the split. "We just have to deal with it."

Because of their strength at local levels, religious conservatives now control or have significant influence over Republican parties in at least 18 states: Alaska, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Louisi-

Some clouds, upper 80s on tap

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the upper 80s and south winds at 10 to 15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the upper 80s.

After an overnight low of 64, Monday's high reached 87 compared to the record high for that date of 104 set in 1948. The record low for that date is 55 set in 1988.

STATE

Showers and a cold front in north and west Texas brought lower temperatures across the state Monday.

Showers were reported from the Hill Country south along the Rio Grande plains because of an upper level disturbance southwest of Del Rio. Other showers were located from Victoria to near Brownsville.

Otherwise, skies were cloudy with winds at 5 to 15 mph. Temperatures ranged from the 70s to the lower 90s.

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies with scattered thunderstorms for all but southeast Texas. Highs will be in the 90s.

A weak cold front extended from west of Wichita Falls to near Abilene and Midland Monday. Scattered showers developed near the front.

North Texas skies were cloudy with winds at 5 to 15 mph. Temperatures ranged from the upper 80s to mid-90s.

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a slight chance of thunderstorms. Highs will be in the lower to mid-90s.

A cold front fell between Lubbock and Midland-Odessa in West Texas Monday. A few rain showers were located near the front.

Skies were generally cloudy north of the front and partly cloudy south of it. Temperatures were 66 degrees at Dalhart; 92 at El Paso. Winds were 5 to 15 mph.

NATION

Low clouds and rain spread chilly weather on Labor Day from the Great Lakes to Texas, with frost in Michigan. Thunderstorms dotted much of the East, while the West was sunny and warm.

Thunderstorms overnight dumped heavy rain across portions of Illinois. Many roads were closed or covered with water in Mason County, located about halfway between Peoria and Springfield.

Low clouds and rain brought low temperatures to the nation's midsection from the lower Great Lakes, across southern Georgia and the upper Texas Gulf Coast and into northwest Texas.

Frost was reported at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., where temperatures went down to 34 degrees, tying the record low for the day.

West of the Rockies, skies were sunny, with hot weather in parts of the Southwest.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

LABOR: Speakers take shots at free trade

hard-line stances against NAFTA — much to the delight of nearly 100 union members, many who were clad in anti-NAFTA shirts.

"The pact would simply eliminate thousands of jobs for Americans and Texans. Many people would have to pull up their roots and head to Latin America where wages are much, much lower and where conditions are horrible," Martinez said. "I recently was told of a woman who had a miscarriage on the floor in a multi-national factory in Mexico. She had sought medical attention, but was denied."

Martinez said the free-trade agreement signed by Canada and the United States in 1989 already has caused Canada to lose 400,000 jobs to the United States because of cheaper real estate costs and lower taxes. He warned the crowd that many more people would lose their jobs if NAFTA is ratified.

"It would be a disaster. It does not advance the overall public interest," he said. "Texas could lose tens of thousands of jobs."

Unions fear that if NAFTA is signed, Mexico's lower wages — averaging $1.85 an hour, according to union officials — will put pressure on Canadian and U.S. wages by forcing workers to lower their salary demands or risk losing their jobs.

Martinez praised federal judge Charles Richey, who ruled that the pact is illegal until the completion of an environmental impact study. The Clinton administration is appealing the decision.

"His ruling is a landmark one. Mr. Richey is a very brave man for stepping out. He is a hero among us," Martinez said. "Children are being born without brains in Mexico because companies are polluting the water."

Baird said public opinion is starting to change in opposition of NAFTA.

"The key is to get people to call their congressman and let them know how you feel. Believe me, politicians take such sentiment to heart," he said.

Monday's event, sponsored by the Permian Basin Central Labor Union, was held at Sherwood Park.

BOND: War, distance build father, son love

sought safe refuge elsewhere.

"Before the war we lived our own lives, but when the war started I saw that he was lost and helpless," Maid said, sitting in a rocking chair in the family apartment surrounded by his father's books. "I realized how much I loved him. I would give 100 lives for him."

Hundreds of miles away, the eyes of Nedim, a refugee sitting at a cafe table in Frankfurt, Germany, misted over and he turned his head away frequently as he talked about the son who kept him alive for eight awful months.

Maid, with his closely cropped military-type haircut, is a young and healthy version of his father. But Nedim said his son was lazy as a teen-ager, the type of student who would sleep until 1 p.m. When Nedi sent his wife and two other sons out of the country before the war started last year, he worried how he and Maid were going to survive.

The polio has left him with almost no use of one arm and limited use of one leg.

"For me, opening a can or washing myself with a few liters of water in a pot is impossible. But Maid did the laundry, cooked, took care of me and spent night after night fighting in the trench," the father said.

Nedim has documented his eight months of horror in a book dedicated to his son. The one time he walked across Sarajevo to collect water himself was a terrifying experience.

"Snipers were shooting all along the way," Nedim said. "I felt so alone with this damned canister, the can and one arm."

He would pick up the canister, carry it a few steps along the street, go back for the can, then repeat the whole process.

Thus they survived together, the soldier son and the writer father.

"It is amazing how capable he is in civilization," Maid said of his father. "But in this wildness where there are no rules, he is helpless. He is perfect for a world where words count, but this is not a time for words."

"Weapons are talking now, and I had to stand in front of him," the son said. Finally, with winter coming, the crippled father was smuggled out of Sarajevo to join the rest of the family in Germany.

Maid, who as a soldier had no choice but to stay behind, reread his father's books and articles in Oslobodjenje, the main Sarajevo daily newspaper, and gained a deeper appreciation of him. His father wrote during the winter and told him to burn the furniture, and even his beloved books, to keep warm. Maid didn't.

The younger man did find himself a wife, 23-year-old Dijana, whom his father has never met. But he is convinced that "she must be a good girl if my son decided to marry her."

What remains for the relationship is reunion when the war is over.

"I'd like to see him again," Maid said of his father. "I'd like to see him sitting next to a fireplace, reading and writing. I'm stronger, I'm a soldier. He is a poet. He was not made for war."

RATTLE: Islamic groups weigh guns, words

threats hover everywhere.

Banners say things like "To the sellers of Palestine: The bullet that shot at the heart of Sadat will be shot at your hearts," referring to the 1981 assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat after he signed a peace treaty with Israel.

Wall slogans, the Gaza equivalent of a town crier, scream: "We don't recognize Gaza and Jericho and we will continue slaughtering the Jews until the last drop of our blood."

It's in sermons, too.

"The solution will come through the gun," Dr. Jasim Muttawa, a pediatrician, told followers at Ezzedin Al-Kassem Mosque.

In an interview, Muttawa said he would rally opponents by stressing the plan's flaws, not violence.

"We will resist fragmenting the Palestinian people," he said.

While Israel and the PLO have agreed on the plan's details, expected recognition between Israel and the PLO is delaying its signing. Authorities are bracing for violence both from Islamic activists and from militant Jewish nationalists who think the plan betrays the biblical vision of Greater Israel.

Arab rejectionists attack the delay in discussing the status of Jerusalem, whose eastern, Arab sector fell to Israel in the 1967 Middle East war. They want it as their capital because it contains Al-Aqsa Mosque, the third holiest in the faith, and key secular institutions.

Muttawa said about 10 percent of the Islamic leaders preach violence, with an unwritten consensus among 90 percent that mosque rallies were enough to educate people against the plan.

"We are not talking about demonstrations," Muttawa said. "Demonstrate against who?"

Instead, they make fun of the PLO.

"Now everything has changed, even the name of the PLO. Now it's the Gaza Liberation Organization," said Shawa.

Islamic activists know they are battling three factors. First, Arafat retains hero status

Second, Israel's sealing the territories last March means the unemployment rate among the 750,000 Gazans hovers around 70 percent. There are high hopes that peace will bring development jobs.

Third, no one wants Israeli soldiers around.

But more than an Israeli withdrawal, the agreement spells out that the Palestinians will stop attacks on Israel.

"The Islamic opponents established a clear red line. They said, 'Go ahead and sign the agreement. We are not going to cut off your hands,'" said Adnan Salim, a former activist. "But in return you are not going to stop us from continuing our armed struggle."

SHOUT: Clinton encounters critical voter

proval, he said, "we will never be the nation we ought to be."

But even as Clinton tried to focus attention on the future, he found himself in a brief face-to-face encounter with a critical voter that degenerated into an unusual public argument between the president and a citizen.

Clinton's speech echoed the message of his national radio address last Saturday, but Monday was the first time the president had developed his argument in a campaign-style stump speech. Delivered to a small audience under a broiling sun at an apartment complex in South Miami Heights, the speech was intended to set the theme of the administration's fall push to win its ambitious legislative agenda.

Lorraine Voles, a White House spokeswoman, said that over the next few weeks the administration would try to weave a thematic whole out of the free-trade pact, the health care program and the "reinventing government" plan, which is to be unveiled Tuesday by Clinton and Vice President Al Gore.

"We're working on three very important things that we know some people regard as disparate, but which we think are unified in the way they affect the economy," she said. "What the president will try to do over the course of the coming month will be to try to talk about how all three things fit together and to make the case that they aren't disparate."

The plan to streamline the government may get the bulk of the attention this week, beginning Tuesday, when it is presented at a White House ceremony. Gore will go to New York on Wednesday to talk about the plan on "The Late Show" with David Letterman on CBS television, and the president and vice president will travel together later in the week to promote the proposal.

Before giving his speech, Clinton met with residents of Homestead, Fla., the city that was severely damaged by Hurricane Andrew last year. There, he listened to generally warm thanks for government assistance that has totaled more than $3 billion, numerous suggestions for more aid, and a few minor complaints from more than a dozen area residents selected by the White House to participate in a campaign-style "town meeting" with the president, Labor Secretary Robert Reich and the housing and urban development secretary, Henry G. Cisneros.

Afterward, Clinton toured a few blocks in a neighborhood that had been heavily damaged and then spoke briefly to a hundred or so residents who had waited several hours in the oppressive heat to hear him speak.

"I just want to say to all of you, we are all in this for the long run," the president said. "I heard today about some things that still need to be done. And we will not have our work done until everybody in this part of our country who wants a job has one, until people are back in their homes, until these communities are rebuilt."

But as the president shook hands among the crowd gathered along a rope line in Homestead, a man who declined to be identified as anyone other than "a disgruntled voter" initiated what soon turned into the presidential equivalent of a street-corner fight.

"Can you name one country that taxed and spent itself into prosperity?" the man shouted at the president, using a line that Rush Limbaugh, the conservative radio and television talk show host, often suggests that listeners ask the president.

Clinton shouted back, "Can you name one country that has borrowed and spent itself into prosperity, went from a one- to a four-trillion-dollar debt?"

He then moved on, shaking more hands as the man shouted rejoinders at his back. Clearly irritated, Clinton could not resist returning to the engagement. "Let me ask you a fact question," he shouted. "One fact? One fact? Did the last two presidents or the Democratic Congress recommend the largest amount of spending and the biggest deficit in the last 12 years? Answer: the last two presidents."

The opponent hollered: "The Democrats did! The Democrats did!"

Clinton moved away, then turned to toss off another comeback, then moved on and turned back again, as the argument degenerated into the sort of did-so-did-not spat familiar to mothers of young children and viewers of the McLaughlin Group.

"You didn't answer the question. Answer the question," the president shouted, "The presidents or the Congress? You never answered the questions. The presidents did."

As Clinton turned away for the final time, the man said: "Good luck, sir, good luck."

ALTERS: Christian activists transform Republican party

ana, Minnesota, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas, Washington and Virginia.

Since 1988, when religious broadcaster Pat Robertson showed surprising strength in GOP presidential caucuses, Christian activists have realized the influence of low-level party posts, and the ease with which these positions can be won because of low interest.

"I could have been a Nazi or a communist and still have gotten elected," Hanak said last year after his election to the county GOP committee.

While the Republican National Committee and most state GOP committees remain in the hands of "party regulars," local strength gives Christian activists power to endorse candidates for school boards, county commissions and state legislatures.

Christian political leaders deny any attempt to control the GOP, notwithstanding Robertson's 1991 pledge to have "a working majority of the Republican Party in the hands of pro-family Christians by 1996."

Ralph Reed, executive director of the national Christian Coalition, explains, "We are involved in the party but we don't seek to become the party. A political party is not a church. Its job is not to promulgate a doctrine of faith and save souls, its job is to field candidates and win elections."

Burt Day remembers the day he discovered the inroads of the religious right.

He was standing by the door of his Iowa GOP district meeting in May 1992 when he noticed a most unusual thing: a crowd. As the room filled, most of the newcomers headed straight to Christian activist Cindy Lyons for instructions.

"It became apparent that there was a real stealth campaign to put some new people on the committee," Day said. He survived a challenge but two other moderates did not. When it came time to pick Iowa delegates for the national convention, Day realized his local experience was hardly unique.

"There were only four delegates to the national convention that weren't in some way controlled by the Christian Coalition," he said. In all, some 40 percent of the 2,000 Republican convention delegates were loyal or sympathetic to the religious right.

(Nationally, Christian right involvement in Democratic politics has been negligible. But here in Pennsylvania, where Gov. Robert P. Casey is among prominent anti-abortion Democrats, there is a potential for modest inroads. South Carolina and Virginia are other targets for gaining Democratic Party slots.)

Some longtime Republicans have begun organizing to dilute the influence of the religious activists. In South Carolina, for example, a former state chairman has established the Republican Leadership Council, named deliberately after the Democratic centrist group that Clinton once led.

"I sense the beginning of an awakening by moderates," says Pennsylvania's Rep. Harley.

"It's a problem we moderates brought upon ourselves," says Sue Mullins, a former legislator in Iowa now active among Republicans who oppose the religious right. "We got lazy and they got active and they are very dedicated to keeping their power. Getting that same degree of dedication from moderates is going to be difficult."

Indeed, the Christian groups are putting together some impressive numbers.

In South Carolina and Florida, state Christian Coalition chapters are building 100,000-name voter files; in Pennsylvania, the goal is for at least that many.

There are some examples of cooperation that could signal a more pragmatic relationship between the moderate and religious GOP factions.

In Pennsylvania and a few other states, for example, the Christian Coalition has supported several GOP candidates who favor abortion rights. "Sometimes you've got to choose the lesser of two evils," said Pennsylvania Christian Coalition director Rick Schenker.

In Kansas, Christian conservative forces control much of the party at the county and precinct level but decided at the last minute not to challenge the moderate state GOP leaders, pledging instead to work with them.

In California, moderate Gov. Pete Wilson is trying to at least reach detente with the religious right. He faces an uphill re-election fight next year and can hardly afford intraparty wars.

NEWARK, N.J. — In the winter of 1944, near the close of World War II, two Austrian mountaineers escaped from a British prison camp in India and fled on foot over the Himalayas toward Tibet.

After an arduous journey of two years, they reached the "Forbidden City" of Lhasa, the capital of Tibet and the home of its incarnated God-King, the Dalai Lama. Once there, they stayed on for five remarkable years, first as tolerated refugees, then as trusted officials in the Tibetan government.

One of the men, Heinrich Harrer — now 81, with a distinguished career as a photojournalist behind him — recorded his experiences in the now-classic book "Seven Years in Tibet," first published in 1954. Part field report, part diary, it is the study not only of an insular culture but of the author's gradual shift in attitude from skepticism at what he took to be the crudities of a foreign land to a profound sense of respect and finally love.

At least as evocative as his words, however, are the hundreds of stunning photographs that Harrer took during these years. Using a Leica camera and film that had serendipitously found its way to wartime Lhasa, he became the first person to visually document a centuries-old culture that is all but extinct today.

A show of 42 black-and-white photographs titled "Seven Years in Tibet, 1944-1951" is on view, through Dec. 19, at the Newark Museum. Organized by Leslie DiRusso, it has been touring the United States since 1991. But it can surely have found no more apt or receptive a venue than the Newark Museum's Himalayan Galleries, which hold not only the religious objects — including a full-scale altar — dedicated by the Dalai Lamai in 1989 but also a gathering of artifacts of Tibetan material culture.

The world that Harrer chronicles was in every sense extraordinary, and little of it escaped his fascinated eye. He recorded the topography of Lhasa: the great pyramidal Western Gate through which he first entered the city, the monumental obelisk, dating from the 8th century A.D., whose inscription celebrates an ancient victory of the Tibetans over the Chinese, and the 17th-century Potala Place, looming as vast and white as a glacier over the city.

Ceremonies of state are documented, with ministers dressed in fabulous robes, an example of which, made of layers of French, Indian, Tibetan and Chinese silk, is on display in the museum collections.

Although Harrer also photographed many details of daily life in Lhasa — its beggers and children and laborers — few of these images are included in the exhibition, a curatorial decision that unfortunately skews the show away from the realities of the rigid hierarchical structure of Tibetan society, with its wealthy aristocracy and impoverished underclass. (For such images one must turn to the book of Harrer's photographs titled "Lost Lhasa," published in 1992.)

What is ever-present in these pictures is the evidence of religion. The image of 30 joyous monks carrying an immense, rolled-up tanka, or religious painting, on their shoulders is matched by the shot of a similar tanka — identified as the world's largest — hanging, several stories in height, from the walls of the Potala.

No object, however, embodies the spirituality of this culture as completely as the Dalai Lama himself. Born in 1935, he is regarded as a living incarnation of the Buddha, and his authority is absolute in matters temporal and spiritual. It was the present, 14th Dalai Lama, deeply interested in Western technology and fearful of the threat posed to his country by international postwar politics, who encouraged Harrer's interest in photography and commissioned him to document a Tibetan way of life.

These premonitions were realized with the Chinese takeover of the country in 1951. In November of that year, with Mao Tse-tung's troops advancing on Lhasa, the Dalai Lama left the city and headed south toward India, knowing that as long as he eluded capture, the spiritual core of Tibetan culture would be preserved.

Harrer ruefully records the progress of that flight. The last photograph of the Dalai Lama taken in a free Tibet shows a frail-looking 16-year-old blessing an urn holding relics of the Buddha. The final photograph in the show is of four small figures — the Dalai Lama among them — hurrying on foot across a frozen, windswept plain.

In 1982, Harrer returned to Lhasa and found it dramatically altered. The great Western Gate was gone, the inscription on the obelisk obscured, and many of the monasteries and schools were destroyed.

Four sets of twins confuse teachers

STREATOR, Ill. (AP) — Kindergarten teachers Vicki Cheffer and Ann Ludwig have both been seeing double since school started this week. Glasses won't help.

Each teacher has two of four sets of identical twins.

In their own classes, no problem. But four or five times a day, they pool classes as team teachers at Centennial Elementary School in this north-central Illinois town.

That brings together the Davis twins, Matthew and William; the Anderson twins, Brett and Conner; the Haynes twins, Lauren and Ronnie; and the Reinemann twins, Alyce and Shae.

"I've been teaching for 19 years, and I've had twins in class before, but this is unbelievable," Mrs. Cheffer lamented. "When they stand together, it's really hard to tell them apart, especially the girls."

Said Mrs. Ludwig: "I don't know how their mothers are able to tell them apart."

Mrs. Cheffer and Mrs. Ludwig can tell the Davis boys apart because one is right-handed and the other is a lefty. (Don't ask which is which). They're learning to tell Brett from Conner because their personalities differ.

"Brett's a little more outgoing and sure of himself — Conner's the worrier," Mrs. Cheffer said Wednesday.

The girls are puzzlers. Their parents dress them alike and the teachers don't yet know them well.

"The personalities are the only way we may be able to tell," Mrs. Cheffer said, "but so far we don't really know their personalities."

She said the twins, all eight, have been the center of attention since school started Aug. 25.

"The other kids are just so interested in them — they don't know what to think," Mrs. Cheffer said.

Many psychologists fine-tune treatment strategy of addicts

By Daniel Goleman
N.Y. Times News Service

Sobered by high rates of failure in helping people quit addictions ranging from smoking to narcotics, psychologists are reporting better luck with a new approach.

The method tailors the way a psychologist approaches a patient according to exactly where in the cycle of addiction the person is at the moment. It even allows for counseling people who deny that their addiction is a problem. This fine-tuned strategy is proving more effective than most large-scale campaigns or fixed treatment programs that send a single message to everyone, psychologists say.

For example, in a comparison with programs in wide use by the American Cancer Society and the American Lung Association to help people quit smoking, the new method proved twice as effective over 18 months with men and women who had been smoking an average of 25 years and who at the start of the program smoked more than a pack a day.

With the new approach, 24 percent were still not smoking after a year and a half, compared with only 11 percent who had quit using the old program, said Dr. Carlo DiClemente, a psychologist at the University of Houston, and Dr. James Prochaska, a psychologist at the University of Rhode Island, the developers of the method. Their study will be published late this year in Health Psychology.

The approach, called stage matching, which has been developed over the last decade, involves an initial interview or questionnaire to determine where in the process of change someone is. The efforts to encourage quitting are fitted to the person's circumstances, with a focus on moving him or her along to the next phase in changing.

"This model definitely advances the field with a more realistic picture of how people actually wean themselves from an addictive habit," said Gary Stuart, head of a national program at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that tries to get pregnant women to stop smoking. "The research shows people change in a cyclic way, not all-or-nothing. It's a process of lapses, new tries and continuous learning over several years."

Stage-matching was cited as promising in the 1990 surgeon general's report on ways to stop smoking. Most thoroughly tested with smokers who want to quit, it is also being used to help people stop a wide range of undesirable habits, including overeating, alcoholism and cocaine abuse. At the University of North Carolina, for example, a study of people trying to cut the amount of fat in their diets found that stage-matching added to standard diet counseling brought a 23 percent reduction in fat intake, while the standard program alone produced only a 9 percent drop.

While no one knows exactly how widely used the approach is, it has already been adopted by several prominent organizations, to supplement their usual strategies. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta is using it to try to get groups at high risk for AIDS to use condoms, and the National Cancer Institute uses it in its telephone service for smokers who are trying to quit. The National Health Service in Britain is using stage-matching to get people to stop smoking, to improve unhealthy diets and to quit alcohol and drugs.

"By recognizing and identifying stages of readiness, instead of offering the same program to everybody, you can even approach people who are not yet convinced they want to quit," said DiClemente.

At that early point, DiClemente said, "you try to find a way to acknowledge the problem from their perspective and help them start to get a more realistic picture of the cost of the habit."

Intense attempts to persuade someone at this stage to stop often backfire. DiClemente suggests that a low-key approach attuned to a person's particular kind of resistance is best.

With confirmed smokers, for example, the goal is to instill hope and point out concrete ways they might overcome what they presume are barriers to changing. With, say, a smoker who has rationalized away the dangers — for instance with the line, "I have a 90-year-old grandfather who chain smokes" — the best approach is to empathize with the smoker's position and acknowledge its logic, but point out other facts that belie it. The goal with recalcitrant smokers is merely to move them to the next stage, where they begin to consider trying to change.

People who have reached the stage of considering quitting are open to information about why they should quit but are often waiting for the one crucial piece of knowledge that will make the decision for them. It seldom comes.

SEE BETTER. LIVE BETTER.

Don't let nearsightedness (myopia) or astigmatism limit your ambitions or restrict your lifestyle.

At the Turner Eye Clinic we use a proven surgical procedure called Radial Keratotomy to dramatically reduce your need for glasses.

Thomas Turner is speciality trained in nearsightedness and astigmatism surgeries and is certified by the American Board of Ophthalmology.

It's same-day, minor surgery without hospitalization or disruption of your normal schedule.

Often called R.K., Radial Keratotomy may eliminate the need for glasses entirely. While R.K. has been a blessing for hundreds of thousands of people, it is not for everyone.

Is R.K. for you? Discover for yourself at our FREE SEMINAR AND EVALUATION, Tuesday, September 7, at 7 p.m. Call today to make a reservation for the seminar or more information.

■ Blacks rally; weekend death toll hits 50

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Thousands of blacks rallied Monday behind an ANC demand to oust white police from Johannesburg-area townships where 26 blacks died in weekend violence.

Four more blacks were killed Monday, including a man shot by police searching for illegal weapons outside a rally in Katlehong township. Three blacks who had been hacked and shot to death were found in nearby Tokoza, police Capt. Burger van Rooyen said.

Police said more than 50 blacks died nationwide over the weekend, following a series of peace rallies Thursday calling for an end to factional fighting.

■ Marcos' body is returned to Philippines

LAOAG, Philippines — Nearly four years after his death in exile, the body of President Ferdinand Marcos was returned today to the Philippines and a lavish welcome by thousands of supporters.

As the chartered Continental Airlines jet touched down, women in the crowd wept. A horn was sounded in a wailing tone as part of a ritual announcing death.

Marcos was overthrown 7½ years ago in a people's uprising. He died Sept. 28, 1989, in Honolulu of a heart attack. Corazon Aquino, who succeeded Marcos as president, had refused to allow the body to be returned for burial and it was stored in Hawaii in an air-conditioned crypt.

The crowd, jubilant at President Fidel Ramos' decision to allow the body to be returned, pushed and shouted as the 727 jet, which bore an image of Marcos and the words "I am a Filipino," taxied to the terminal.

■ Yeltsin seals vice president's office

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin sealed his rebellious vice president's Kremlin office on Monday and severed all of his official telephones.

A presidential statement said the measure was taken to protect a corruption investigation against Alexander Rutskoi.

Rutskoi, a former Yeltsin ally who now sides with the president's hard-line opponents, called the Russian leader's actions a "full-scale state coup."

Yeltsin also faced a miners strike Monday and found himself squaring off with lawmakers over a law to curb religious proselytizing in Russia.

In August, Yeltsin warned of an autumn offensive against political enemies like Rutskoi, who have blocked political reforms and prevented the president from calling new parliamentary elections and adopting a new constitution.

Last week, Yeltsin suspended Rutskoi and First Deputy Prime Minister Vladimir Shumeiko from office, saying corruption charges against both of them were damaging the integrity of the government.

■ Nigerian oil workers' union cuts strike

Members of the Nigerian oil workers' union suspended their 10-day-old strike on Monday, which has paralyzed factories and businesses across Africa's most populous nation.

But the government did not give in to the main worker demand, which was to publish the results of last June's presidential elections, which were annulled by the former military leader, Gen. Ibrahim Babangida.

The annullment of the election, widely believed to have been won by Moshood Abiola, a wealthy publisher and industrialist, has thrown Nigeria into its worst political crisis since the Biafran civil war of the late 1960s.

Arafat readies next step in forging support

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Yasser Arafat brought his campaign to sell the PLO-Israeli peace agreement to Egypt on Monday after receiving lukewarm support in Syria.

The agreement calls for Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho — a small portion of the Arab land Israel has occupied since 1967.

Before arriving in Egypt, the only Arab country that has given wholehearted support to the plan, the PLO chief picked up endorsements for the accord from the Gulf Cooperation Council, a six-nation group lead by Saudi Arabia.

It called the accord "a first step toward reaching a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement to the Palestinian problem and the Arab-Israeli conflict."

In Syria, Arafat met for 6½ hours with President Hafez Assad, who asked to study the plan more fully. The Palestine Liberation Organization took Assad's request as an expression of support, with reservations, a PLO official said in Cairo, speaking on condition of anonymity.

If Assad's backing materializes, it could help Arafat secure approval for the plan from the PLO's ruling Executive Committee. Hardline PLO factions based in Damascus are represented in the ruling body, and Assad has influence over them, although he does not control them.

The PLO Executive Committee meeting could begin this week. Israel has already approved the deal.

Radical Palestinian groups and even members of Arafat's own faction have said the agreement contains no guarantees for a Palestinian state and avoids dealing with the status of Jerusalem, Israeli settlements and the 3.5 million Palestinian refugees who live outside the occupied territories.

Muslim fundamentalist groups oppose any deal with Israel.

After Arafat's visit to Damascus, Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa went to Lebanon, apparently to try to soften Lebanese outrage over the PLO's separate deal with Israel. Israel was exchanging mortar fire with Lebanese militias less than a week ago.

Sources at the headquarters of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine — the two largest groups in the PLO after Arafat's Fatah faction — said they rejected Arafat's request for meetings in Damascus.

In Egypt, Arafat was likely to have an easier time.

Egypt's foreign policy is based on its peace with Israel, which President Anwar Sadat signed in 1979, and friendship with the United States. Arafat and most other Arabs broke relations with Cairo because of that peace agreement.

The draft Arafat is ready to sign with Israel grants Palestinian autonomy in the Gaza Strip and Jericho. The fate of the rest of the Israeli-occupied lands, including Arab east Jerusalem, is left undetermined for as long as five years.

Arafat was greeted at Cairo International Airport by Foreign Minister Amr Moussa and was to meet today with President Hosni Mubarak.

Egypt was the first to endorse the plan, and Moussa has urged the Arabs to support it as a springboard to eventual Palestinian control over all the occupied lands — the same appeal Arafat has been making.

Yoel Singer, an Israeli negotiator, and an Arab source close to the peace talks who spoke on condition of anonymity said Israel and the PLO were near final agreement on letters of mutual recognition that would permit the peace plan to proceed.

Israel wants the PLO to amend a 1968 covenant calling for the use of armed force to supplant the Jewish state with a Palestinian one. It also wants the PLO to declare an end to terrorism and violence, including the nearly six-year Palestinian uprising against Israeli military rule.

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he believed an agreement with Jordan would quickly follow the signing of the autonomy plan with the Palestinians.

U.N. evacuates some; Jablanica refugees tell of torture

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Fifteen seriously wounded Muslims were evacuated from Mostar on Monday after several days of delays caused by heavy fighting between Croats and Muslims in central Bosnia.

In another town, a U.N. official reported that thousands of Muslims who fled the fighting had little food and few belongings. Some of the refugees also told of torture at the hands of Croat forces, the official said.

Fourteen wounded adults and one child were removed under U.N. escort from the besieged eastern sector of Mostar, where more than 50,000 Muslims are isolated by Croat forces.

The group was taken to Medjugorje, a Croat-held town to the southwest, and then flown by a Bosnian government helicopter to Zenica in central Bosnia, said Richard Calver, a U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, Croatia.

Overshadowing the small humanitarian success were tales of torture and imprisonment from hundreds of former prisoners at Croat camps who sought shelter in Jablanica, on the highway between Mostar and Sarajevo.

A U.N. official confirmed earlier reports that Jablanica was crowded with between 7,000 and 10,000 mostly Muslim refugees who were expelled from Croat-held territory the last two weeks.

"Overall, people do not have any possessions with them, they are hungry," spokesman Ray Wilkinson said. "There are many people in the streets without shelter, without food."

One aid convoy reached the town last week, and Wilkinson said U.N. officials would try to get another one through. But there were problems ensuring its safety because of heavy fighting between Croats and troops of Bosnia's Muslim-led government that surged after peace talks collapsed last week.

Peter Kessler, the U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, quoted a U.N. field worker who reached Jablanica as saying she saw about 100 former prisoners from two Croat detention camps in western Herzegovina: Gabela and Dretelj. She was told that over 400 prisoners from the two camps had been released late last month.

They told tales of beatings, filthy living conditions and starvation rations. They also reported being stripped naked and forced to run across a no man's land upon being freed two months after being captured, the official said.

Kessler said the field worker was told that up to 2,500 more people were being detained by Croat troops at Dretelj and in two ammunition storage tunnels.

The field worker, who was not identified, said the people she saw were extremely thin, and the five men she interviewed had bruises and injuries consistent with severe beatings. Two of the men were hospitalized, Kessler said.

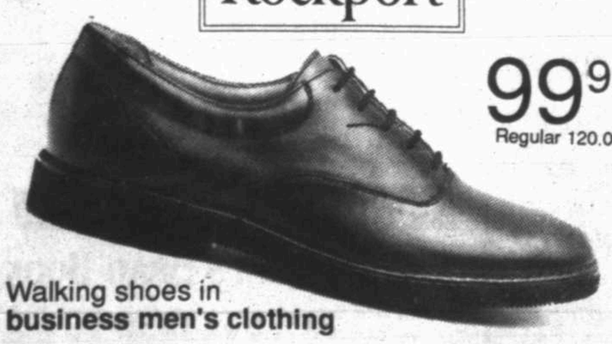

Heavy fighting, meanwhile, was reported between Croats and government forces around Fojnica and Vitez.

Bosnian government forces apparently were trying to gain control of a road near Vitez.

Writers just keep churning out books on JFK conspiracy

By A.S. Ross
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Despite the 4,744 works already published on the assassination of John F. Kennedy, there's a new wave of conspiracy books either in or on their way to your local bookstore in the next few months.

New evidence! Definitive proof! The truth exposed!

Joe McGinniss, in his infamous "biography" of Ted Kennedy, "The Last Brother," says the Mafia did it because JFK failed to appreciate how they had helped fix his 1960 election. As with the McGinniss book, so with the new crop of conspiracy books: "Caveat emptor!"

The following is a preview of the new books, organized by category:

THE CIA DID IT:

"JFK: The CIA, Vietnam and the Plot to Assassinate John F. Kennedy," by L. Fletcher Prouty (Birch Lane). Prouty, a retired Air Force colonel who worked closely with U.S. intelligence in the 50s and 60s, is the man on whom Oliver Stone based the shadowy "Mr. X" character in "JFK." Others regard Prouty as a crackpot who spends most of his time with members of the fascist right.

"First Hand Knowledge: How I Participated in the CIA-Mafia Murder of President Kennedy," by Robert D. Morrow (S.P.I.). This fellow claims he was a CIA contract agent hired to supply a three-man hit team with duplicates of Oswald's Mannlicher-Carcano rifle and sophisticated communications equipment. Morrow says he's sorry and ready to go to jail for his role in the assassination. So far, no takers.

THE MAFIA DID IT:

"Fatal Hour: The Assassination of President Kennedy by Organized Crime," by G. Robert Blakey and Richard N. Billings (Berkley). Blakey was chief counsel to the 1978 House Assassinations Committee. All the various conspiracy theories fell apart under the committee's close, scientific scrutiny. Blakey, nonetheless, clings to his obsessive belief that the assassination was a hit ordered by Louisiana crime boss Carlos Marcello.

ANYONE BUT OSWALD:

"The Killing of a President: The Complete Photographic Record of the John F. Kennedy Assassination, the Conspiracy and the Cover-up," by Robert J. Groden (Viking Studio). Groden, a photographic consultant to the House Committee on Assassinations, details, with some previously unpublished and often grisly photographs, the oft-repeated allegation that the JFK autopsy photos were forged. He also insists that the fatal bullet came from the front.

"Killing the Truth: Deceit and Deception in the JFK Case," by Harrison Edward Livingstone (Carroll and Graf). The most baroque of the current conspiratorialists, Livingstone goes after other assassination researchers who, he says, have their own agendas and disinformation plans. In previous bestsellers, "High Treason" (with Groden), and "High Treason 2: The Great Cover-up," Livingstone had gunmen in manholes in Dealey Plaza, forged medical records, the police framing Oswald, and Stone's film as part of the cover-up.

"The Last Investigation," by Gaeton Fonzi (Thunder's Mouth Press). Fonzi was a field investigator for the 1978-79 House Assassinations Committee, and didn't like how the committee's investigation was conducted — especially when it came to the CIA. Fonzi admits he doesn't know who did it, but looks fondly on a CIA/anti-Castro Cuban connection.

"Cause of Death: The Final Diagnosis," by Cyril Wecht (Dutton). Of all the forensic pathologists called by the House Assassinations Committee, only Wecht continues to dispute the single-bullet theory. He also reportedly has "new information" on the President's missing brain.

"Deep Politics and the Death of JFK," by Peter Dale Scott (University of California Press). Unfounded speculation, it seems, is no longer the monopoly of commercial publishers. Here the prestigious, Berkeley-based university press puts its imprimatur on Prof. Peter Dale Scott's "secret cabal" theory of American politics. Scott believes the assassination — plotted and covered up by an unholy alliance including the CIA, the military and the Dallas police — was sparked by JFK's supposed desire to get out of Vietnam.

PAY MONEY, TAKE CHOICE:

"Who Shot JFK? A Guide to the Major Conspiracy Theories," by Bob Callahan (Simon & Schuster/Fireside). This former speech writer for Robert Kennedy became an Oliver Stone acolyte after visiting the assassination site, believing (without a shred of hard evidence) that JFK was killed in a cross-fire. But he's not pushing that line. "We're just trying to give the range of opinions. We're not trying to convert anyone."

OLIVER STONE, THE SEQUEL:

"Columbo: The Grassy Knoll," by William Harrington (Forge). Complete with photo of actor Peter Falk on the dust jacket, and blurb from syndicated columnist Jack Anderson ("Our greatest detective tackles our greatest unsolved crime.").

POLITICALLY INCORRECT:

"Case Closed: Lee Harvey Oswald and the Assassination of JFK," by Gerald L. Posner (Random House). Posner, a lawyer who previously wrote about the Joseph Mengele case, says the conspiracy theories are either just plain crazy, or are based on "witnesses" who were either delusional, or had changed their stories after being pumped by conspiracy theorists.

Members of the Prince George County Fire Department look over a remote-controlled robot that was used to flush a murder suspect out of his hiding place Thursday in Greenbelt, Md. The robot, normally used by the fire department to defuse bombs, discovered the suspect hiding under a pile of clothes in a closed and hit him with a blast from a water cannon.

College requires students to come clean

N.Y. Times News Service

With crime an increasing concern on college and university campuses, new security measures that range from added lights to extra guards are greeting students this fall as they begin the 1993-94 school year. But in Raleigh, N.C., St. Augustine's College has taken a particularly far-reaching step to improve campus safety.

Last year the 1,900 students at St. Augustine's, a 127-year-old, historically black private college affiliated with the Episcopal Church, were shaken by a rash of violence that included muggings, shootings, assaults and a killing. This year the college requires all prospective students to produce a statement from their hometown police department certifying whether they have a criminal record.

School officials said that 95 percent of this year's 3,400 applicants complied with the requirement, and that some had police records. The officials refuse to disclose whether any of those with records were denied admission.

"Our new policy is that the presence of a police record is something to consider in admission, but by no means is that the only consideration," said Tracey Todd, spokesman for the college. "We also use all of the other more traditional considerations, like test scores and grade averages and involvement in sports. Parents look upon us as guardians of their children, and there's no reason to bring Jack the Ripper onto campus just because he applies."

According to the National Campus Violence Prevention Center, an organization that tracks developments in campus crime, most colleges and universities have begun taking special measures to reduce the problem in recent years. But the center, which is at Towson State University in Maryland, said it knew of no other college or university that requires prospective students to produce a police statement.

"This is an extraordinary step that seems to be a reaction to an extraordinary situation," said Dorothy Siegel, the center's executive director. "St. Augustine's had some bad crime problems. A few other schools, including Towson State, have begun including a question on their admission form that asks the applicant to state whether he or she has a police record. But nobody has gone as far as St. Augustine's."

"No one has been taken to court yet," Ms. Siegel said. "A serious problem often requires a serious solution. In any case, the St. Augustine's requirement is one measure of how serious the campus crime problem is viewed today."

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company (SWBT) is asking the Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUC) for approval to offer Caller ID service in Texas. This service includes Calling Number Delivery, Calling Name Delivery and Anonymous Call Rejection (ACR). This service will be deployed statewide on a staggered, city-by-city basis, over a period of years in Texas in association with residence, business single and multiline services, but not PBX, Centrex or Plexar services, where facilities are available. Caller ID is an optional service which allows a subscriber to see date, time, and the phone number (Calling Number Delivery) and/or name associated with the number (Calling Name Delivery) of most direct dialed local calls and some select long distance calls before the telephone is answered. Anonymous Call Rejection is a Caller ID service which permits a subscriber to automatically reject calls from callers who have blocked their number/name. Per-call and per-line blocking will be available when the service is deployed. Detailed information on Caller ID service and how to block will be sent to each customer in their telephone bill during the next few weeks.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in this proceeding should notify the PUC before October 6, 1993. Other parties may seek to also obtain Caller ID service in association with PBX, Centrex and Plexar service. A request to intervene, participate or receive further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information may also be obtained by calling the PUC Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256 or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf. For information regarding Caller ID service, residence customers should call 1-800-464-7928, and business customers should call 1-800-499-7928.

Hurricane season returns once more

On a balmy September morning in 1938, The New York Times ran a weather forecast on the bottom of page 27 predicting "Rain and Cooler." Nothing more, nothing less. Just a typical September day.

Twenty-four hours later most of the Eastern Seaboard — from Cape Hatteras to Kennebunkport — lay in shambles. As William Manchester later described it in his book "The Glory and the Dream," 153 houses on Westhampton beach had vanished; Atlantic City, Quogue, Providence and Springfield were under water; the Shore Line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad was trying to figure out what to do with a 300-foot steamship that lay across its tracks in New London. The great hurricane of 1938 had struck, leaving some 600 dead and 65,000 homeless in its wake.

Hurricanes do more than point out our fallibility as weather forecasters. They surprise us profoundly with their random power. Even in this age of satellite tracking, Doppler radar and the Weather Channel, each storm is an anomaly, each battering a one-time-only, singular event that divides memory into two new compartments: before the storm and after.

Yet this really shouldn't be the case. September, as any adult who lives on the East Coast can attest, is hurricane season. The clockwise vortexes churn up our shorelines with clocklike regularity; the almanacs and history books are filled with death tolls and damage estimates. Eliza Doolittle may have sung that "In Hertford, Hereford and Hampshire, hurricanes hardly happen," but people in Hatteras, Hempstead and the Hamptons know otherwise. Mild-mannered Emily may have missed many spots last week, but just as Bob, Hugo and Andrew left their mark in the past, surely other hurricanes with other names will do the same in the future.

And people will undoubtedly be shocked, and then stunned, and then determined to rebuild, like small children, endlessly recreating sand castles against the tide. Is it folly? Denial? Perhaps. Or maybe it's just human nature to be continually surprised at the routine cataclysms of the natural world.

Tax plan punishes producers of wealth

The point is, well, that a populist president ought to understand people: the way, say, an atomic scientist is supposed to understand atoms. The subsidiary point is, when a populist doesn't understand people, something is wrong and needs to change, pronto.

Murchison

The New York Times brings these considerations into focus with an article laying out the melancholy viewpoint that Bill Clinton's vaunted tax hike, hard as he fought for it, may shrink the deficit less than predicted.

We recall that the tax hike was sold to the country as a swift kick planted on the rumps of the rich. These rotten people would make up for the favors they had won in the '80s. At last they would pay their "fair share."

So what's going on? Human nature is going on. The rich have been summoned to pay, but they don't want to. According to the Times, they are exploring, with their financial advisers, every possible means of avoiding or postponing the new taxes. The specific means will vary from taxpayer to taxpayer; not so the unitive sentiment that, where the tax man is concerned, it is more blessed to shelter than to give.

A preliminary temptation with some Americans may be to cry out angrily at the rich. Too late; the president has done enough of that for you and me and John down the street. And that is just what's wrong. Clinton has underestimated the determination of people — a category that includes rich and poor alike — to defend and protect what is theirs.

The failing is a common one with tax-and-spend Democrats of the old school. These folk commonly begin with one fallacious proposition regarding human success, from which they proceed to a second fallacy.

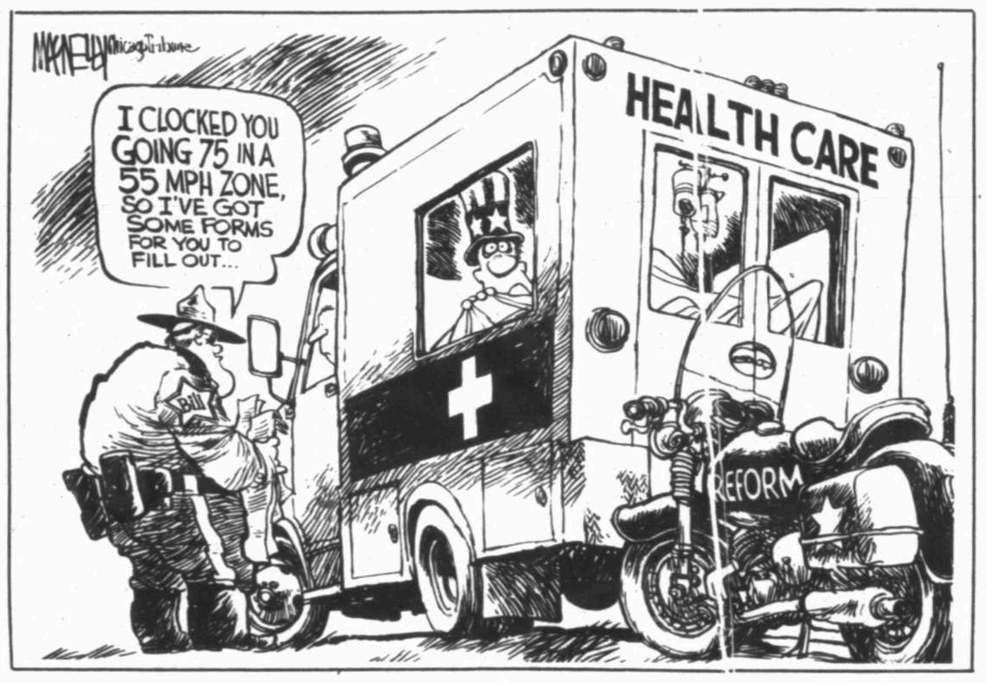

The first is that ordinary people can be whipped consistently to fury over other people's worldly success. Now and again they can be, envy ranking among the seven deadly sins; but in due course, matters get out of hand. Many of those cheering the loudest while Wall Street is scourged find others, of lesser financial means, looking greedily at them. It always happens when someone lets envy out of the basket. It runs around and bites people one never meant to hurt.

And the second fallacy: that the designated victims can be intimidated or inveigled into tamely handing over rather than taking remedial action. Rarely does this happen. More common is the adoption of measures, as mentioned above, that lawfully reduce the tax bill Congress intended to present. These remedial actions do not always help the economy. Maybe the victim works less hard or finds some financially barren shelter for his wealth.

Congress and the president, when they come up emptier-handed than expected, have only themselves to blame. Would they, in similar circumstances, stand and deliver? Certainly Hillary Clinton wouldn't and didn't. She advanced into 1992 law firm payments due her; this made the money taxable at 1992 rates, rather than the higher rates her husband had promised to impose on his fellow rich.

Doesn't Bill understand as well as Hillary that to snap one's fingers and say x tax will raise y amount is absurd? How does one get to be president without understanding the complexities of human incentives? No one has more cogently expressed the heart of the matter than the Nobel Prize-winning Milton Friedman, who says, if you want more of something, subsidize it; if you want less, tax it.

CHARLEY REESE

Americans have nothing to fear from Islam

Eight million of your fellow Americans practice the religion of Islam. As a matter of fact, some Americans have practiced Islam since the 1800s. They are, many of them, greatly afraid that the massive anti-Islam propaganda campaign currently underway is going to result in discrimination and attacks against them and their families.

Reese

There is a propaganda campaign underway. In part, its source is Israel and the Israeli lobby. Now that there is no Soviet threat, Israel needs some justification for the massive U.S. support. Hence, it is taking the line that it is America's only ally in a sea of genetically anti-Western, anti-American Muslims. That's hogwash, of course.

A good example is a book recently written by an Israeli who served as director of the Republican Task Force on International Terrorism. To hear him tell it, every Muslim in the world is a terrorist. Of course it is as dumb to hire an Israeli to be your expert on terrorism as it would be to hire Saddam Hussein to be the surveyor to determine the border between Iraq and Kuwait. You can't blame Israeli intelligence for manipulating gullible Americans, but you can sure blame Americans for being so naive and gullible.

But the Israelis aren't the only players. The military-industrial complex has likewise been deprived of a much-needed enemy to justify its billions and thus is eager for Islam to be the green menace that replaces the red menace.

So Mamoun Khanfar, a senior at Barry University in Miami, is trying to communicate with Americans to tell them they have nothing to fear from Islam.

"I tell my fellow students there is not one Judeo-Christian value that is not the same in Islam," he said. "Islam teaches against lying, adultery, cheating, and killing just as other religions. Islam is about peace and brotherhood, about charity and kindness."

Khanfar says part of the confusion in some minds arise from not realizing, for example, that the present governments in most of the Islamic world are secular governments and in the Arab world, all are dictatorships.

"Unfortunately, the U.S. supports many of these dictators and doesn't realize that the people trying to move toward a more democratic society are the very people these dictators brand as Islamic fundamentalists. In Algeria," he pointed out, "the Islamic party won a clear majority in a free election but the government threw out the results and imposed a dictatorship. Yet, the U.S. supports the dictators rather than the legitimately elected Islamists."

Khanfar also explained why Muslims cannot share the concept of church and state separation in the Western sense.

"Muslims believe that God's laws cannot be repealed or amended by man, so how could we say God forbids murder but, as a legislator, we can make it legal? So Muslims believe that whatever is God's laws must be obeyed and cannot be altered by government, but in purely secular matters, Muslims believe these should be decided in a democratic manner," he said.

Khanfar would also like people to understand that there are 1.2 billion Muslims in the world of which only 250 million are Arab.

"Islam teaches that no one person, no one nation, no one race, no one tribe or ethnic group is superior to any other," he said. "All are equal in the sight of God and their merit is to be measured solely by their piety — or how closely they follow God's teachings.

"Americans have nothing to fear from Islam. Muslims, Christians, and Jews lived together peacefully for centuries and I hope Americans will not confuse secular ideologies or political issues with Islam," he said.

He also hopes that when Americans have questions about Islam they will consult American Muslims and not go to Tel Aviv to find an Israeli "expert" on Islam. "We have nothing to hide; we are eager to share our faith," he said.

Separate peace: Can an Arafat change his spots?

WASHINGTON — When Menachem Begin came down from Camp David, I asked him if he had not gone too far in accepting the phrase "legitimate rights" of Palestinian Arabs. He countered with a biblical allusion: "Has my right hand lost its cunning?"

Safire

Begin knew that the "legitimate" right of Arabs was to self-government, control of local affairs; he doubted that the PLO would settle for autonomy but would demand sovereignty over Israel's Judea and Samaria, to him an illegitimate claim. Begin was right: The arrogant PLO rejected its chance to work out self-rule in the disputed territories.

Today's prime minister, Yitzhak Rabin, offered Palestinians a new version of step-by-step self-government. When their delegation froze, Rabin sent Shimon Peres on an end run to the PLO, whose aging and bankrupt boss was not about to make the same all-or-nothing mistake again.

As a result, Gaza — containing 800,000 of the two million Palestinians in the territories — is to be PLO-administered, which to Israel is like giving away a permanent migraine headache. Israel also accepted a symbolic PLO presence on the West Bank in Jericho, though autonomy there does not extend to the Allenby Bridge across the Jordan.

The stunner is the mutual recognition being worked out in Norway and likely to be signed here. The Palestinians could tear themselves apart and ruin the deal, but this week Arab-Israeli relations have undergone a Mediterranean sea-change.

What we have is the prospect of a separate peace, bugaboo of Arab negotiators. Jordan's King Hussein doesn't like it because he rules the other half of the Palestinians, who will want the same kind of self-rule. Syria's Hafez al-Assad is grumpy because his thunder has been stolen by Yasir Arafat, and he no longer has an excuse to delay a Golan deal. Hamas and Hezbollah terrorists will seek to sabotage Palestinian autonomy.

Our State Department is emitting ludicrous little bleats suggesting that Warren Christopher was the hero because Israel kept him informed of the dealings and he didn't blab. But this is not our deal; it was truly worked out "between the parties."

What bugs hard-liners most about taking the PLO as a negotiating partner is not only the memory of the slaughtered Israeli Olympic athletes or the Arabs dancing on the rooftops as Iraqi Scud missiles slammed into Tel Aviv. It is that Shimon Peres, the superdove Yossi Beilin and PLO sympathizers abroad — all of whom would have caved in to Arafat years ago, when he was running terrorists and demanding a state — will now claim to have been right all along.

Having been softened by 15 years of Israeli hard line, Arafat finally appears ready to accept Begin's approach, adding the Gaza-Jericho twist. The irony is that now the Israeli doves will take political credit for the breakthrough when the pressure of time and the loss of dictator sponsors have forced the PLO to become reasonable.

Drilling rigs stand silent as production sinks

By Scott Sheffield

More than a decade ago we counted operating drilling rigs by the thousands. Today we count by the hundreds. At the same time, reliance on foreign oil has increased dramatically. Critical to the task of cutting our dependence on foreign oil is increasing the strength and vitality of our domestic oil and natural gas producers."

When candidate Bill Clinton made that statement during last fall's presidential campaign he found an eager and receptive audience in Texas. Who in the heart of the state's oil patch could deny the terrible toll our country's cheap foreign oil policy had taken on the nation? Hundreds of thousands of jobs lost, thousands of once productive rigs standing idle and silent. The effects of those numbers rippled through America's energy producing communities, uprooting families and wrecking local economies. Defending our cheap oil policy had an even higher cost in human terms, the hundreds of American servicemen and women who died in Operation Desert Storm. We haven't even begun to calculate the true cost of our cheap oil policy.

At the time Bill Clinton spoke those words many of us in the domestic industry figured things couldn't get worse . . . we were wrong. A few weeks ago the United States imported 7.9 million barrels of oil a day, hitting the highest level of imports for any week on record. At the same time domestic production of crude oil hit its lowest level in 35 years. The price of crude is falling way below break-even levels as OPEC tries in vain to rein in members of the cartel. These factors together have taken us across a very dangerous threshold. We are now importing half of the oil we need to run our economy each and every day. Just a few years ago it was inconceivable that we would pass that 50 percent mark. Today it is reality.

During the campaign many independent producers and oil field workers supported Clinton because he said we couldn't simply tax our way to an energy policy. Yet, many of those who thought the election of Bill Clinton would mean jobs, jobs, jobs in the oil field have been disappointed by President Clinton, because all they've seen so far is taxes, taxes, taxes on this depressed industry.

For the timber industry, which is losing 60,000 jobs because of the spotted owl, President Clinton held a "Timber Summit" and proposed $1.3 billion dollars in federal aid to retrain displaced workers. The domestic natural gas and oil industry has lost 10 times as many jobs as the timber industry, and has seen oil imports jump to over 50 percent. In Texas alone, 130,000 workers in the natural gas and oil industry have lost their jobs in the last decade.

Many domestic oil and gas workers wonder if anyone in Washington really sees the silent crisis we are facing.

Fortunately, Bill Clinton is also the president who has asked his Energy Secretary to submit a domestic energy initiative to him by Labor Day. This plan is intended to be the blueprint for a new domestic energy policy. The Clinton administration has asked for the views of the domestic industry and recently many industry leaders banded together to support a plan which would deal with the core issue of our nation's oil import dependency and get more rigs drilling right here at home for a stronger America.

The plan includes provisions for price stability through a floor price that would level the playing field with OPEC. It proposes new tax laws that would encourage new drilling and preserve existing marginal production. The plan calls for reason and balance in the way the government imposes new environmental regulations on the industry and restricts access to public lands. As the segment of the industry which produces 60 percent of the domestic natural gas, independent producers believe in the bright promise of natural gas as the clean-burning fuel of the future. But in order to fulfill that promise we must have access to the land to be able to drill for it.

The domestic industry has spoken, we hope the administration is listening. We look to the Clinton administration to give the nation a plan for action, on Labor Day, that really will put America's domestic oil and gas industry back to work.

Scott Sheffield is president and chairman of Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., a member of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

Existing health benefits would be tax-free under Clinton plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Workers' existing health benefits would remain tax-free even if they exceed the benefits in the Clinton health plan, a White House spokesman said Monday.

The Clinton administration sought to allay concerns about the new limit on tax breaks for employer-provided health benefits that will be part of its forthcoming reform package.

Senior administration officials said Saturday they were expecting to raise several billion dollars a year from the so-called tax cap, but most people would not pay any taxes on their health benefits.

Kevin Anderson, a spokesman for Clinton's health reform team, said Monday that employers will be able to secure permanent tax exemptions for health benefits their workers currently enjoy.

Clinton was meeting again with advisers on health care after returning Monday from a two-day trip to Florida. He held high-level meetings last week to complete the package he will pitch to Congress later this month.

Clinton has promised to guarantee an extensive benefit package for all Americans, primarily by requiring all employers to help pay for the insurance.

The so-called tax cap would come into play where a worker gets health benefits over and above the standard benefit package.

Anderson said there will be special provisions to cushion union workers and others from the tax cap.

Workers' current health benefits "will never, ever become taxable income to the employee," said Anderson.

For example, a worker with full dental coverage would not be taxed on that benefit, even though the Clinton plan in its early years would cover dental services only for children. Clinton is aiming to provide dental coverage for adults in 2000 and beyond.

The AFL-CIO in the past has adamantly opposed any tax on health benefits.

To assuage big labor, the White House said its proposal will exempt from taxation health benefits won under collective bargaining agreements for eight to 10 years after the new system starts in 1996.

That is a recognition that many unions sacrificed wages for health benefits throughout the 1980s, Anderson said. "We believe it will ultimately be acceptable to most union leaders."

Making workers pay taxes on a portion of their health benefits is a fundamental tenet of managed competition, the idea around which Clinton is building his reform plan. Clinton is trying to make both consumers and providers of health care more conscious about what they spend.

"We believe the limitation on the tax-free status of benefits is . . . a key to getting the kind of behavior we want under the new system," Anderson said.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine predicted Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press" that, "there will be very few people affected by the limitation."

Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., the chairman of a Senate GOP task force on health reform, said people should be free to choose bigger benefits, "but the taxpayers shouldn't subsidize them."

The White House is counting on somewhere between $1 billion and $9 billion a year for its health reforms from the tax cap.

Some workers rally, others relax

Associated Press

Most people took Labor Day as a long weekend, the last big hurrah of summer. Jeff Trent observed the spirit of the holiday, manning a United Mine Workers union picket line at a coal mine in the heart of Appalachia.

Workers in Rhode Island rallied to support efforts to unionize hospital workers. Iron ore miners in Minnesota got a new contract.

In Los Angeles, thousands of striking city water and power workers chanted their response to a court order last week demanding their return to work.

"No way! no way!" shouted some of about 2,000 union members at a rally and picnic. The strike by about 9,000 members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 18 stretched into its sixth day Monday.

On the coal mine picket line, Trent showed up at the Hobet Mining Co.'s No. 7 mine in southern West Virginia's Logan County. He is among 17,000 miners the UMW says are on strike against members of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association in seven states. The strike over job security began May 10.

On the Iron Range of northern Minnesota, more than 700 United Steelworkers prepared to go back to work at Hibbing Taconite after a 35-day strike against the mining company. Taconite is the name of the type of iron ore in the region.

Workers and management reached a tentative agreement late Sunday night on a six-year contract.

In Pawtucket, R.I., 10,000 people strolled through downtown to enjoy Mediterranean food and Calypso, Celtic and Cajun music in a dual celebration of Labor Day and the state's diverse heritage.

"It was a natural bond to make it a dual event because so many working people are immigrants," said Rick Brooks, director of education at the Institute of Labor Studies, Cranston, R.I.

In nearby Providence, national Teamsters president Ron Carey led a rally at Rhode Island Hospital, where about 1,700 service, maintenance and clerical workers have been seeking to unionize.

The ralliers charged the hospital and National Labor Relations Board were stalling a union affiliation election. The hospital denied it was trying to stave off union affiliation.

In Philadelphia, members of 10 newspaper unions — working for a week under a day-to-day contract extension at The Philadelphia Inquirer and The Philadelphia Daily News — led marchers from about 100 unions in the city's sixth annual Labor Day parade.

1993 Property Tax Rates in Greenwood I.S.D.

This notice concerns 1993 property tax rates for Greenwood I.S.D. it presents information about three tax rates. Last year's tax rate is the actual rate the school district used to determine property taxes last year. This year's effective tax rate would impose the same total taxes as last year if you compare properties taxed in both years. This year's rollback tax rate is the highest tax rate the school district can set before it must hold a rollback election. In each case these rates are found by dividing the total amount of taxes and state funds by the tax base (the total value of taxable property) with adjustments as required by state law. The rates are given per $100 of property value.

Last year's tax rate:

	Last year's operating taxes	$747,149.39
	Last year's debt taxes	$1,157,827.01
	Last year's total taxes	$1,905,021.40
	Last year's tax base	$177,872,740.00
	Last year's total tax rate	$1.071/$100

This year's effective tax rate:

	Last year's adjusted taxes (after subtracting taxes on lost property)	$1,888,739.00
+	This year's adjusted tax base (after subtracting value of new property)	$ 180,365,779.00
=	This year's effective tax rate	$1.0472/$100
x	1.03= maximum rate unless the school district publishes notices and holds hearing	$1.0786/$100

This year's rollback tax rate:

	School maintenance and operations component	$2,258,010.00
+	This year's tax base	$181,047,769.00
=	This year's local maintenance and operating rate	$1.2472/$100
+	$.06 = this year's maximum operating rate	$1.3072/$100
+	This year's debt rate	$ .6252/$100
=	This year's rollback rate	$1.9324/$100

Schedule A- Unencumbered Fund Balances

The following estimated balances will be left inthe unit's property tax accounts at the end of the fiscal year. These balances are not encumbered by a corresponding debt obligation.

Type of Property Tax Fund	Balance
Local Maintenance	900,000.00
Debit Service	120,000.00

Schedule B- 1993 Debt Service

The unit plans to pay the following amounts for long-term debts that are secured by property taxes. These amounts will be paid from property tax revenues (or additional sales tax revenues, if applicable).

Description of Debt	Principal or Contract Payment to be Paid from Property Taxes	Interest to to be Paid from Property Taxes	Other Amounts to be Paid	Total Payment
1984 Bond Refunding	$710,000.00	$65,320.00	$ -0-	$775,320.00
1992 Bond Refunding	$175,000.00	$208,520.00	$ -0-	$383,520.00

	Total required for 1993 debt service	$1,158,840.00
-	Amount (if any) paid from funds listed in Schedule A	$27,000.00
-	Excess collections last year	$ -0-
=	Total to be paid from taxes in 1993	$1,131,840.00
+	Amount added in anticipation that the unit will collect only 100% of its taxes in 1993	$ -0-
=	Total Debt Levy	$1,131,840.00

THE SANCTITY OF LIFE

"Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart; I appointed you as a prophet to the nations" (Jeremiah 1:5).

There is a sanctity of life that is purposefully being opposed in our society today. Each day, in so called "God blessed America", more than 4,000 preborn lives are snuffed out. These are real people who suffer capital punishment with no trial and no benefit of counsel before they are executed in a cruel and inhumane manner.

We the members of the Fairmont Park Church of Christ, stand in opposition to the Planned Parenthood abortion clinic. We do stand behind the powerful case for life as stated in Psalm 139:13-16:

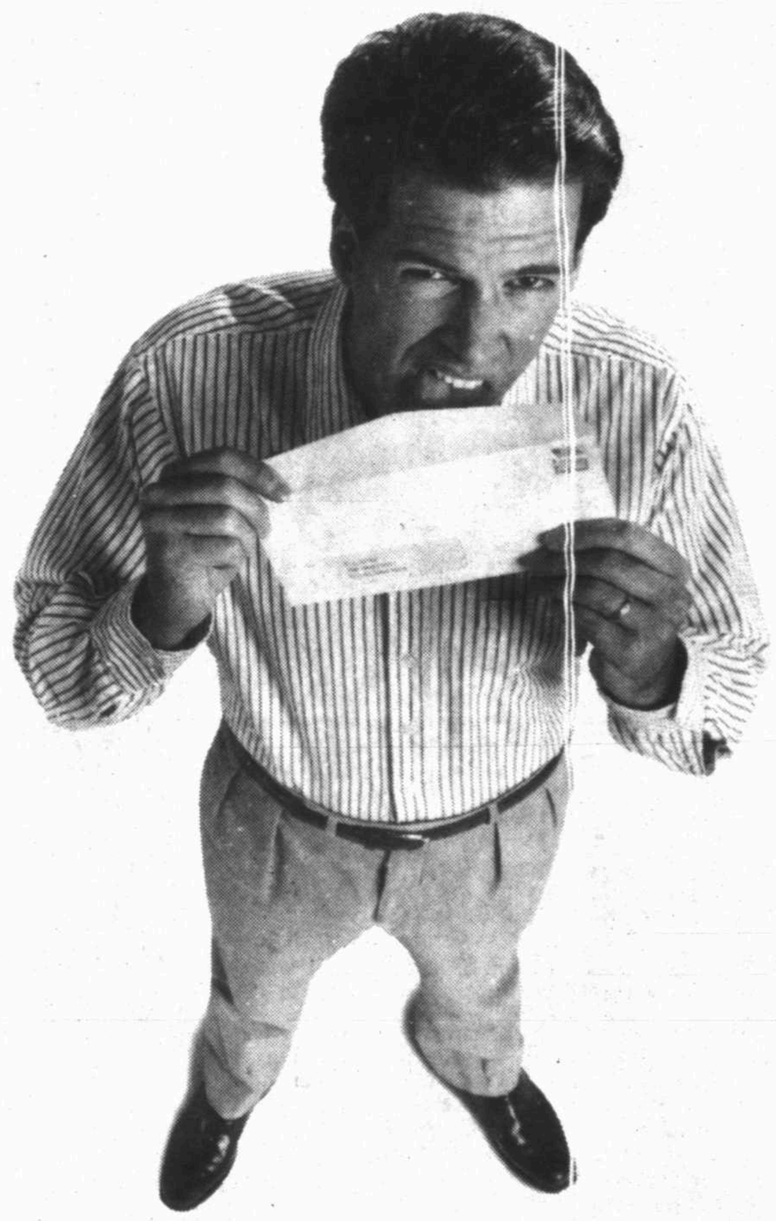

"For you (God) created my inmost being; you knit me together in my mother's womb. I praise you because I am fearfully and wonderfully made; your works are wonderful, I know that full well. My frame was not hidden from you when I was made in the secret place. When I was woven together in the depths of the earth, your eyes saw my unformed body."

Many have unwittingly, unknowingly allowed an abortion. If that has happened to you we stand ready to be a source of assistance and encouragement. And, if you want to do something in honor of that aborted baby, why not work to help other mothers avoid the same mistake.

Team develops solution that tenderizes beef

CLAY CENTER, Neb. (AP) — Meat scientists at the U.S. Meat Animal Research Center have passed major taste and processing tests with a process they say will allow meatpackers to turn tough meat into tender meat.

Mohammad Koohmaraie, a muscle biochemistry specialist at the center, heads the scientific team that developed the new meat tenderizer. He said it is ready to hit the market.

The product is a weak liquid solution of calcium chloride and water.

"All our important data shows it improves meat tenderness and it has no adverse effects on any other meat quality attributes, such as color, shelf life, flavor and overall palatability," Koohmaraie said.

He told The Lincoln Journal and Star in an interview at a federal facility about 20 miles east of Hastings that the product has had favorable outcomes at a meatpacking plant in the Texas Panhandle and a "white tablecloth restaurant" in Texas.

Credit for apparent success also goes to Tommy L. Wheeler, a research food technologist at Clay Center, and Mark Miller, a meat specialist at Texas Tech, Koohmaraie said.

He said a decade of research on the interaction of calcium chloride and protein won't continue without a meat processor, a restaurant chain or some other private sector interest stepping into the picture.

But he said the motivation should be there for meat merchandisers who want to guarantee tenderness and put their own label on a meat package.

"The reason no packing plant has put their name on it is because they can't guarantee that."

Regardless of what happens in the marketplace, the scientific foundation for calcium chloride injections is sound.

The solution contains about 2 percent calcium chloride and 98 percent water. It has been effective in breaking down proteins that toughen round steak and other common cuts of meat.

Aide: Hutchison to comply with subpoena

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison will comply with a subpoena ordering her to testify this week before a Travis County grand jury, even though she had the right to forgo the order, a spokesman said.

Travis County grand jurors are examining allegations that Mrs. Hutchison used state workers and equipment for personal and political purposes during her 2½-year tenure at the state Treasury.

The panel had asked Mrs. Hutchison to appear Thursday or Friday. The subpoena was issued after Mrs. Hutchison offered to show up the following Monday instead.

David Beckwith, an aide to the Republican senator, said Sunday that Mrs. Hutchison will appear before the panel and forgo her constitutional right to ignore the subpoena issued for a day when the Senate will be in session.

"She voluntarily agreed to appear one working day later," Beckwith told The Houston Post. "But (District Attorney) Ronnie Earle is so arrogant and so obsessed with conducting this political witch hunt that he is going to yank her out of the United States Senate to stage this media circus at the courthouse."

'But Ronnie Earle is so arrogant and so obsessed with conducting this political witch hunt that he is going to yank her out of the United States Senate to stage this media circus at the courthouse.'

— David Beckwith, Senate aide

Mrs. Hutchison has adamantly denied any wrongdoing and has said the 11-week-old probe is an attempt to damage her reelection efforts next year.

Beckwith would not say if there are areas of questioning that could prompt Mrs. Hutchison to refuse to answer and claim her Fifth Amendment right.

But he did say that Mrs. Hutchison and her attorneys believe the subpoena is part of an attempt "to get her on some technicality."

Beckwith said there is suspicion that prosecutors will try to entrap Mrs. Hutchison on a "minor matter that she can't remember."

The allegations against Mrs. Hutchison include misuse of state employees for political and personal chores and possible tampering with state records.

Mrs. Hutchison was state treasurer from January 1991 through June, when she defeated interim Sen. Bob Krueger in a runoff for the seat previously held by Lloyd Bentsen.

Reality leads to task force

■ Months of therapy, positive peer pressure helped teen escape world of drug abuse.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Christine Lewellen has had more experiences in her 14 short years than most people have in a lifetime. Drug use and delinquent activity plummeted her to the point where her parents finally had her taken to a rehabilitation center by the police.

She was only 12 when she started running away from home, getting stoned and getting into trouble. By her own admission she was getting high before, during and after school.

But now she is putting herself on the line — taking a stand — to help persuade other teens to avoid the rocky climb she has had to make to get her life straight again.

The Midland High School sophomore and her family are involved in both the Teen Task Force and Project Awaken in efforts to provide other teens with the information and life experiences to keep them from making the same mistakes Christine made.

Christine, who will turn 15 in January, has come full-circle from her past and told how she ended up running with the wrong crowd, made it through "rehab" and finally got to come home a new person.

"It started when my parents got separated for the first time. My dad moved to South Carolina and I was a daddy's girl, so I started running away. That was the sixth grade. I was getting in a lot of trouble — running away, not doing what my mom told me do to," she said.

She would go to a friend's home and stay for a couple of days at a time.

"In the seventh grade I started skipping school — I didn't want to go so I didn't — I was drinking every once in a while. I was sneaking out like every night I was home. I'd get stoned on the way to school and at lunch and whenever I could," she said.

The marijuana came from her older friends, or, in some cases, from other people's

Teachers tell what they wish more parents knew

SLATON (AP) — America's teachers want parents to sing silly songs, hug their teen-agers and venture inside the school cafeteria once in awhile.

Turn off the TV set, the teachers plead, and make children read at home.

Educators repeated these thoughts and more in the new book "What America's Teachers Wish Parents Knew," a mostly upbeat collection of 275 helpful hints.

Tony and Judy Privett compiled the material from the cozy basement in their Slaton home in Southeast Lubbock County.

Some of the wishes are practical: "I wish that parents knew I do not need to know the gory details of a sickness in an absent note."

Other wishes are more philosophical: "I wish that parents would remember that young people are like fresh cement — anything dropped on them will make

Five die in automobile accident

FLORESVILLE (AP) — Five people were killed when a pickup traveling on the wrong side of the road struck a car head-on near Floresville, southeast of San Antonio, officials said.

The accident occurred about 10:30 p.m. Sunday on U.S. 181 in Wilson County, said Laureen Chernow, a spokeswoman for the Department of Public Safety.

A 1984 Nissan pickup was traveling south in the northbound lane of the road when it collided with the car, Chernow said.

The driver of the car, Bernadine Mutz, 36, of Floresville, died in the crash. Also killed were her husband, Peter, 39, and son Dustin, 13.

James Dugie Jr., 24, the driver of the pickup, and a passenger, Richard Howton, 17, both of San Antonio, also died in the wreck.

The Mutz' other son, Joshua, 10, was in critical condition Monday at Wilford Hall Medical Center in San Antonio, said Blair Bossie, a spokesman for the hospital.

Investigators weren't sure whether alcohol was a factor.

He died Monday at a Martin County hospital.

TASK: Teen discovers reality in recovery

parents. Since she got the drugs and alcohol from friends, she never had to buy it herself.

Christine hesitated to go into specific activities from her past, apparently embarrassed, but she admitted to smoking marijuana, drinking alchohol and trying acid."

"In the eighth grade I was getting into trouble all the time — you know, getting put in Culver (Youth Home) all the time . . . for running away. That is where I met my exboyfriend — he stabbed somebody at school. Then I would run away to his house all the time and stay over there with him.

"Then I just kept getting in trouble, then my parents put me in (a psychiatric hospital) the day after my birthday because I ran away the day before my 13th birthday," she said.

"I came home one night . . . we started fighting real bad and they told me they were going to take me to the hospital and I refused and my mom called the cops and they took me out there," Christine said.

She was there for two weeks — until her parents' insurance would no longer pay for the treatment — then she came home and was OK for a while.

"Then I started getting in more trouble and more trouble — running away, skipping school all the time," she said.

At that point her mother, Joan Johnson, who remarried soon after Christine's trouble started, learned of a rehabilitation center outside Houston that was designed for troubled teens. It was a "wilderness camp" where Christine stayed for 13 months.

"The first two or three months I didn't care about being there. . . . I was rowdy and rude . . . verbally going off," Christine said.

Then, she experienced a turning point this past February while she was home for a month after having her tonsils removed. Christine said she realized just how badly she missed being home with her family.

"When I went back in March I got serious with my program and I decided drugs and alcohol, running away and crime and stuff wasn't what I needed, so I quit. I had made a decision not to do that stuff anymore, but I hadn't really taken that step. Then I did and I came home July 28."

The youths at the wilderness camp learned to live off the land. They cut down trees to build their own home, she said. They lived in lean-tos and suffered through the cold of winter and the heat of the summer.

"That was part of the motivation to get out of there, we all hated it. . . . It was tiring — it was hot in the summer and freezing cold in the winter. We would have on layers and layers of clothes and still be cold," she said.

But the physical aspects weren't necessarily the toughest parts of the camp.

"It wasn't easy. I did 13 months of reality therapy and positive peer pressure . . . realizing, understanding what you did and what you have to do to fix it," she said.

Once a month she was allowed home visits for four days. It was during one of these that she got involved in Teen Task Force with her mother.

Ms. Johnson said this ordeal has strengthened her relationship with her daughter. Both communicate better and Christine has developed her strengths in positive ways now.

"Being involved in the task force together has been good too because it gives us something in common," she added.

Ms. Johnson said she believes Christine's participation in the task force provides positive reinforcement to help keep her from relapsing.

"The most critical thing with me was that she didn't get back with the same peer group. . . . Everybody is going to be holding her accountable. Its not going to be just me," Ms. Johnson said.

Because her relationship with her daughter is improving, Ms. Johnson is just now really learning how serious Christine's problems were. She also recalled how she found out about her daughter's activities.

"I didn't even know all the times that she did it, I just happened to catch her a couple of times. She was real strong-willed. It didn't matter what you did."

"At one point — after back and forth between one parent and the other — right after I got married . . . she kept taking off. I suspected there was drinking and I kept asking her but I didn't really see the signs," she said.

She thought the indications of trouble she saw were the result of Christine skipping school and taking off for a day or two at a time. She finally called the police to pick her daughter up and take her to a rehabilitation center for intervention. She knew Christine would not go on her own.

"I didn't realize the extent of the problem as to what it really was. Because she has talked about the marijuana use and I sort of suspected, but I kept looking and I didn't really see it. . . . I was kind of in denial although I was trying to uncover all that," she said.

Ms. Johnson puts all that behind her now to support her daughter in taking a stand against the substances that led her to hit rock bottom.

"If she is willing to share to help someone else I feel like that is what we are here for. I hope I have conveyed that to her and she will continue on," Ms. Johnson said. "Only time is going to really, really tell. She has made huge strides just in the way we deal with each other and in the way she responds to correction or discipline. It is an amazing difference."

So far, with several weeks of school behind her, Christine already has encountered the temptations to return her "old ways," but she has resisted.

"I just say no. Just the other day somebody asked me about it. It was an old friend of mine who called me. He said 'Hey we're gonna get stoned, you wanna go?' and I said no. He asked me if I would call him back and I told him I didn't want to talk to him if he was going to get stoned and he said OK."

She said other friends have admitted to her that they don't want to continue their drug use, but because all of their "friends do it" they don't know what to do.

Christine said she tells her friends to "wake up . . . these people aren't going to be around too much longer."

"I don't think any kid should be put in the position that we put ourselves in. I don't think a lot of kids understand what they're doing to themselves," she said.

Christine said she is prepared to offer advice to anyone who has gotten involved with drugs and alcohol.

"I would tell them to look at your life. Really think about what you're doing . . . once most people sit down, clear their head — they can understand that their life is just screwed up. Understand there are people out there who are willing to help you, to take that step," she added.

"A lot of them say, 'You don't understand' but I do understand. I do understand too well."

WISH: Book reveals vices, virtues of parents

a big impression."

The 111-page book rages on the vices of bad breath and juice boxes to the virtues of bedtime stories.

Some entries are defensive, many are witty and all speak from the heart.

"I wish parents would learn to let go," one kindergarten teacher wrote. "Sad little faces crying at the classroom door, pitiful looks of abandonment, hanging around the halls, peeping through windows, prolonged kisses at the door and repeated declarations of 'I love you' have got to stop. Parents, your behavior is embarrassing. Get a grip!"

The Privetts say they wanted to put together an easy-to-read guidebook. The inspiration came when Mrs. Privett, an accountant, was taking classes to earn her teaching certificate. She got bogged down in heavy theory of classroom management, she said.

"I knew you really had to be there to know what's going on," Mrs. Privett said. "As a parent, I'd like to know what teachers had to say."

So the couple in January mailed questionnaires to principals at more than 6,000 schools in all 50 states. The forms asked teachers to complete the phrase, "I wish that parents ... ."

Replies came back from 415 teachers, including 58 in Texas.

Annette Cootes, information officer for the Texas State Teachers Association in Austin, liked the book's premise.

"We say right on, and every parent should be forced to read it," Ms. Cootes said.

The teachers say they need parental backup. Mom and Dad should stop doing Johnny's homework, stop telling him math is hard and stop forcing him to compete in athletics.

"These are common sense things, but sometimes we forget," said Mrs. Privett, mother of Matthew, 15, and Meredith, 11. "This puts you back in touch."

Many of the teachers said they wished parents would substitute teach so they could get a taste for the stress — and joys — involved in the classroom.

"You could read the frustration, but they are there because they want to be," said Privett, who works for an education publishing company. "There is hope for education because they care."

Former Tarrant County sheriff goes to trial on perjury charge

FORT WORTH (NYT) — Don Carpenter is expected to return to court Tuesday to face trial on a felony perjury charge, the latest step in a special prosecutor's pursuit of allegations of misconduct by the former Tarrant County sheriff.

The charge of aggravated perjury stems from Carpenter's testimony in October 1991 before a grand jury investigating accusations that he took guns from the Sheriff's Department property room and falsified property room records.

Carpenter, 62, who lost the Republican primary in March 1992 and left office at the end of the year, was named in eight indictments last year charging him with official theft, misapplication of property, tampering with government records and perjury. All are third-degree felonies stemming from the allegations about missing guns.

Carpenter's attorneys are disputing all the charges. Carpenter could not be reached for comment.

Around the Tarrant County courthouse, most attorneys and officials had expected that the cases against Carpenter would languish and eventually be dropped after his election defeat and the loss of his $74,000-a-year post.

But special prosecutor Galen Sumrow, who was appointed in September 1991 to pursue then-emerging allegations against Carpenter, said last week that he has never considered dropping the matter.

"Would that be fair to people who aren't public officials?" he said. "To me it is immaterial if he is in office or not. I just don't look at the position people are in before I go forward with a case. I don't care."

Last November, state District Judge Bill Burdock threw out on a technicality the first of the cases against Carpenter to go to trial, a charge of theft by a public servant. The .38-caliber derringer that Carpenter was accused of taking from the property room in 1987 and giving to County Commissioner J.D. Johnson was found to be worth less than $200, which lowered the charge from a felony to a misdemeanor and placed the case outside the two-year statute of limitations for misdemeanors.

Sumrow, the Rockwall County district attorney named as special prosecutor by state District Judge Joe Drago III, said after the first trial that he would pursue the perjury charge next. Ten months later, that case is scheduled to go to trial in 371st District Court, where jury selection is expected to begin this morning.

Carpenter's attorneys have said in the past that they believe the perjury case is weaker than the one Burdock dismissed in November.

Hi-tech security reaches troubled Houston school

HOUSTON (AP) — Security has gone high-tech at Worthing High School, where five real cameras and two fake ones are keeping an eye on the campus and even the surrounding community.

"We've got to be in the preventive mode," said Principal Larry Alexander, himself a graduate of the school.

The $15,000 system was installed nearly a year ago soon after Alexander took charge of the 1,100-student school, which has been an easy target for outside troublemakers in the past.

A retired coach is paid to monitor the system and report anything suspicious to the principal or to the two police officers who patrol the campus on the city's south side.

The security system, coupled with a strict dress code and an ever-vigilant staff checking passes in the hallways, has curtailed problems at the school.

Since the security system was installed, school administrators said, only two student fights have occurred.

Houston Independent School District police reported only 19 incidents ranging from assaults to trespassing last year — compared to 70 the year before.

"It would be a great piece of equipment in all of our schools if we could come up with the bucks," said Les Burton, director of security for HISD.

The Worthing cameras watch the campus, but they also are powerful enough to keep tabs on the surrounding neighborhood.

One camera can zoom in on the door of a known crack house a block away, or check out a bus stop nearly two blocks away where drug deals have been witnessed.

The first week of school last month, a camera at Worthing caught a 17-year-old student smashing a coach's rear windshield with a pipe. School officials watched as the teen left the campus, then returned with a BB gun-toting brother and a friend.

The three looked ready for trouble, but police officers were waiting for them.

Alexander said administrators from other schools have visited Worthing to examine the system, one of the first in the Houston area.

"We're not saying by any stretch of the imagination that we've got it licked," Alexander said. "But we feel we are on top of it."

Rested lawmakers return for weighty fall agenda

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fresh from their summer sabbatical, members of Congress return to Capitol Hill facing a crush of weighty business.

Texans will figure squarely in the deliberations on the North American Free Trade Agreement and health care reform — the two biggest issues on Congress' plate.

While NAFTA and especially the health care debate are sure to drag on, one project being keenly watched by Texans — the fate of the super collider — is all but sure to be resolved this month.

The $10 billion-plus giant atom smasher faces a crucial Senate vote during the third week of September after being knocked on the ropes by the House's vote in June to terminate funding.

Last year, senators rescued the massive science project from a similar House snub. But the deficit-cutting fever hanging heavy over Washington has supporters concerned that the collider may become a trophy for lawmakers eager to demonstrate their frugality.

Texas Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison have repeatedly collared their 42 fellow Republican senators in recent months to tout the collider's merits; and Louisiana Democrat Bennett Johnston is working the other side of the aisle. The Texans, who claim 30 to 35 GOP votes are on their side, are cautiously optimistic.

But a longtime collider foe, Arkansas Democratic Sen. Dale Bumpers, is spearheading the opposition — helped this year by a newly-formed coalition of organizations eager to pull the plug on the collider.

Critics have been brandishing several audits and reports critical of the collider's management, while proponents point to Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary's recent steps to overhaul the program's construction and finances.

"I don't believe they are going to be successful," Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas, whose district includes most of the collider, said of the project's opponents.

NAFTA's passage is no more assured than that of the super collider.

Congress is sharply divided over the trade pact, which President Clinton intends to officially send to Capitol Hill by mid-September. That will trigger an onslaught of committee hearings in both the House and Senate.

Anti-NAFTA forces, led by labor unions and environmentalists, contend that the agreement will spur job flight from the United States to Mexico and cause further environmental degradation along the border.

Texan Ross Perot has launched a scathing attack against NAFTA, most recently in a new book critical of the 2,000-page agreement. The book, titled "Save Your Job, Save Our Country: Why NAFTA Must Be Stopped — Now," hits bookstores nationwide after Labor Day.

While Texas Gov. Ann Richards and most of the state's 30 House members favor the free trade accord, the debate is causing much dissension in Democratic ranks elsewhere.

But U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor says the debate "isn't going to be a civil war in the Democratic Party."

"There will be Democrats for it and Democrats against it just as there will be Republicans for it and against it. But I am confident there will be bipartisan support for NAFTA," Kantor said last week.

Whether Democrats and Republicans come together on health care reform remains to be seen.

While a group of two dozen GOP senators has embraced some of the same goals the Clinton administration has endorsed, Gramm and several other Republican colleagues have struck off with their own proposal.

Gramm's press secretary, Larry Neal, says the Texan is likely to offer his own answer to the nation's health care crisis later this month.

Autopsy shows abducted girl was strangled

PLANO (AP) — A girl abducted from her brother's soccer match was strangled, an autopsy revealed. But police declined Monday to say if she had been sexually assaulted.

Plano police also refused to release any more detailed information about the injuries to 7-year-old Ashley Nicole Estell, whose body was found Sunday near a gravel road six miles from the suburban park where she disappeared 24 hours earlier.

"We don't want to release anything that might hinder our investigation," said Lt. Steve Nagy, who confirmed that the cause of death was strangulation.

Nagy said officers have been in contact with several area police departments and planned to investigate any possible links to the death last month of Kim Nguyen, an 8-year-old autistic boy who disappeared from his Garland home.

His decomposing body was found in a field July 31, two weeks after he disappeared.

"There is nothing to directly link the cases at this time," Nagy said. "But I'm sure as the holiday weekend ends, there will be a more coordinated effort. We are exploring every possibility."

Nagy said the department was putting all of its energy into the investigation of the first child murder police could recall in this mostly upper middle class suburb north of Dallas.

"We have looked at many different sites through that area. As far as types of evidence, we are trying to piece things together. We found bits and pieces of different items throughout the area at different locations."

Officers also were following up phone tips and reviewing video tapes and rolls of film brought to the police station by families who took pictures at the soccer tournament where Ashley was last seen.

Ashley was last seen by her parents, Diana and Richard Estell of Dallas, walking to a play area of Carpenter Park about 11:20 Saturday. They called police when they couldn't find her shortly after noon.

Nagy said a number of people saw the girl playing, but there had been no confirmed sightings of her abduction.

"We are receiving a lot of phone tips," he said. "We are trying to coordinate similar looking events. ... We have pulled together a large group of investigators. We are putting all available personnel on it."

Funeral services for Ashley are scheduled at 11 a.m. Wednesday at St. Andrew Methodist Church in Plano. She will be buried at Restland Memorial Park in Dallas.

Texans say goodbye to summer during long weekend

By Laura Tolley
Associated Press writer

Texans paid their last respects to the 1993 summer this holiday weekend by making tracks to beaches and lakes, barbecuing in their back yards and feasting on football.

It is called Labor Day, but it was anything but work Monday for many Lone Star residents who sought rest and recreation on the final day of the holiday weekend.

Thousands who had flocked to Galveston Island and other Texas beaches were finishing up work on their tans and catching a few last waves before packing up their belongings for the trek back to work.

"The crowds have been steady," said Galveston Beach Patrol Maj. Vic Macio. "We've been real lucky. The water conditions have been great. It's been beautiful."

And while some were outside exercising their holiday away, others slipped into their recliners to while away the hours on another favorite pastime — watching football.

On Saturday, for the first time since 1968, every Southwest Conference team opened the season on the same day. And Sunday marked the season debut for the Houston Oilers.

But it turned out to be a weekend of disappointment for many since the Oilers, the University of Texas, Rice University, Southern Methodist and the University of Houston all lost their games.

However, the football frenzy was just picking up steam for Dallas Cowboy fans, who were getting the beer and peanuts ready to watch the defending Super Bowl champions take on the Washington Redskins on Monday Night Football.

Although much of the labor force was at rest, Monday was a day of work for some less fortunate Texans. Some even mixed business with pleasure.

Labor Day also marks the unofficial start of the election campaign, and Texas Gov. Ann Richards used the time to talk to union workers in Houston and Beaumont.

"We've got an election year coming up and it's going to be tough," said Richards, who attended a breakfast with Houston-area union members at the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Union hall.

"It is going to be a dogfight," she said.

And later in Beaumont, the Democratic governor praised unions and paid tribute to workers at a picnic sponsored by the Sabine Area Central Labor Council.

"I've been here I think every Labor Day for about the past 7-8 years. It means the recognition of the glue that holds the country together," Richards said.

Later, Richards talked about her support for the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement.

But a few anti-NAFTA signs were displayed by workers at the holiday outing in Beaumont. Some believe the agreement will result in a loss of American jobs.

"We just disagree on it," Richards said. "I feel very strongly that NAFTA means they're going to get jobs. But I also understand it's an emotional issue."

Five family members perish in house blaze

FLORESVILLE (AP) — All five members of a South Texas family died in a fire that destroyed their rural home, Wilson County authorities said Monday.

The fire in the Eagle Creek Ranch subdivision was believed to have been Saturday night but was not discovered until Sunday, said Sheriff Joe Tackitt.

He identified the victims as Vernon and Charlene Pollok, both 34, and their three boys, 10-year-old Brad, 8-year-old Craig and 2-year-old Darren.

The sheriff was being assisted in his investigation by the state fire marshall and a Texas Ranger.

The Polloks owned a daycare center in southern Bexar County and had lived in their fairly new home for about six months, neighbors said.

Investigators spent most of Monday trying to find a possible sixth body in the rubble, but were unable to confirm reports another person had been spending the night.

The elder Polloks were found in their bed, Tackitt said. One boy's body was in another bedroom and two brothers in a second bedroom, even though each boy had his own room, the sheriff said.

Pollok's father, Leonard Pollok, said he was certain the home had smoke detectors.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's conscience is clean after washing man's clothes

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 21-year-old college student. My boyfriend and I have dated for three years and plan to marry eventually.

Van Buren

My boyfriend makes no demands on me. However, I have done his laundry four times in the three years we have dated when he was pressed for time. My mother and father are furious about this but can't explain why.

When I meet women, one of the first things they ask me is if I do my boyfriend's laundry, but they cannot explain why it would be so horrible if I did. Even sitcoms occasionally touch on the subject. I don't understand the gravity of the issue.

Then, I read a letter in your column written by a woman who wanted to warn other women about doing their boyfriends' laundry. She said women should break up with any man who asks them to wash their clothes. The woman (signed "Stupid") did not mention in her letter how doing her boyfriend's laundry made her boyfriend a "user," and all your response said was, "Thanks for giving other women the benefit of your experience."

Obviously, the woman's boyfriend was demanding in ways other than asking her to do his laundry. And, if he asked her to do his laundry continually, she could have said no, even after the first couple of times.

By the way, my boyfriend has done my laundry three times, and no one thinks he is being used because of it. Why are people so uptight when women help their boyfriends every once in a while? What's the big deal? Would you please explain? — CONFUSED IN LAS CRUCES

DEAR CONFUSED: In pre-feminist times, "doing laundry" was considered the "housewifely" thing to do — and women washed and ironed to impress prospective husbands with how lucky they would be to get them as wives. (The fellows, on the other hand, could string the women along for years without any commitment.)

The difference between you and your boyfriend and the woman who wrote the letter about which you are asking, is that you and your boyfriend help each other. That's the way it SHOULD be.

DEAR ABBY: I want to thank you for a letter you published in your column about the missing persons office of the Salvation Army.

I wrote to them asking if they could help me locate my father, whom I hadn't seen or talked to in almost 30 years. Well, everything worked out fine. My father called me after he received their letter.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart for helping to give my father back to me. Maybe someday I will be able to go and see him, but I guess for now we can write to each other. He's in Texas and I'm in Pennsylvania, but I will write.

With all my love and thanks . . . CARMEN

DEAR CARMEN: My pleasure. Write again and keep me posted.

AT WIT'S END

Need to start living now before ripe age

By Erma Bombeck

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Erma Bombeck is on vacation. She left behind a few of the "classics" that are most often requested by readers. This one first appeared in 1989.)

At some point in your life — if you're lucky — you throw practicality to the wind and start living.

Bombeck

A lot of things can bring about your rebirth. Maybe you read in the paper that someone your age had a heart attack and you say to yourself, "That's it! I'm going to grab all the gusto I can get while I'm still here." The next day you and your credit union go out and buy a sailboat.

With me, it was a case of the 6 o'clock news. I was sitting around one night flipping between Dan, Peter and Tom, who were giving me my state-of-the-world fix. After hearing about drugs, crime, bad air, tainted fish, holes in the atmosphere, cyanide-laced fruits and people blowing each other up, I said aloud, "That tears it. Life is too short to eat brown bananas."

I know that's a strange metaphor, but the bananas sort of sum up my life. Every week I buy fresh bananas, but I can't eat them until I have eaten up the semi-rotten ones. By the time I eat them, the fresh ones are rotten. This has been going on for 30 years.

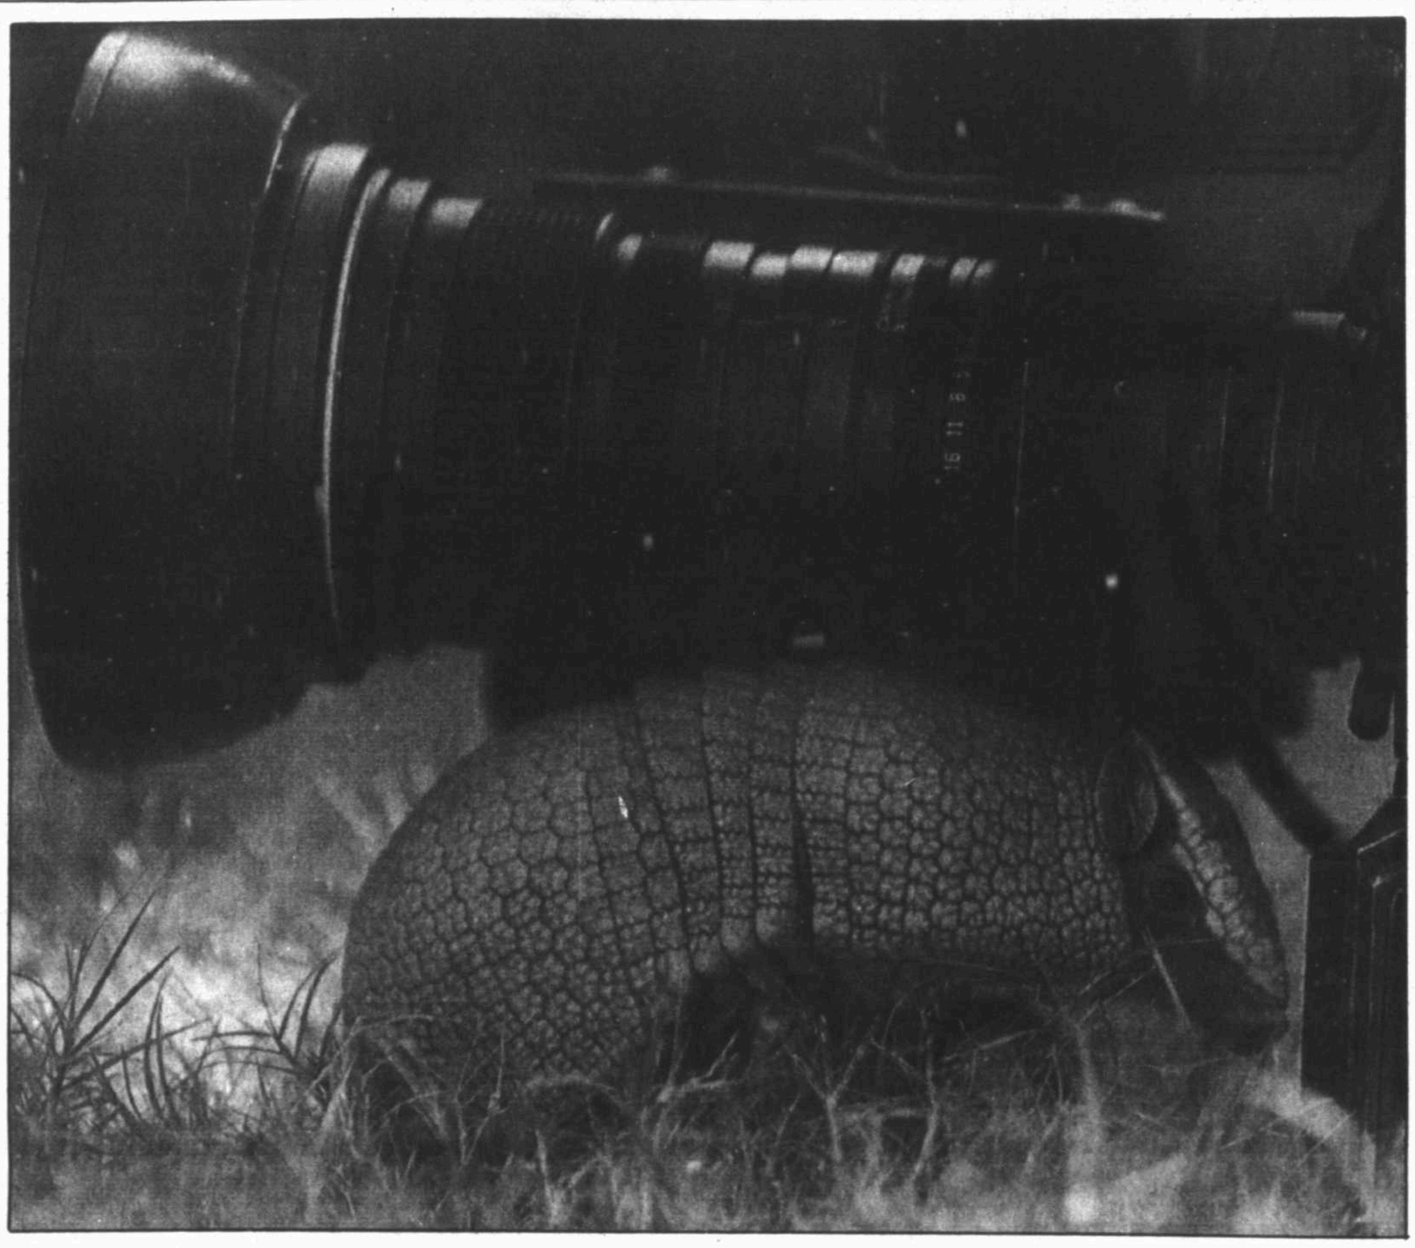

I took a long, hard look at my sensible life and began to question it. I remembered the colorful candles I bought in Israel a few years ago. They were shaped like fish, and I refused to burn them because they were too pretty. They melted last year when the air conditioning went out. I never saw them as they were meant to be — flickering and reflecting pleasure.

I've decided life is too fragile to finish a book I dislike just because it cost $16.95 and everyone else loved it. Or eat a fried egg with a broken yolk (which I hate) when the dog would leap over the St. Louis arch for it. You're smiling. How many of you women have stood outside of a pay restroom booth waiting to make eye contact with someone who might hold the door open for you? Your kidneys are destroyed for a lousy dime!

Our generation is sometimes critical of the "baby boomers" for their priorites: a cappuccino maker today, next year the steam iron. We come from a time warp where we read about the Titanic and observed, "What a shame! I'll bet some still had film in their cameras." Maybe baby boomers know something.

This week I bought the greenest bananas I could find. I'm in control. I'll eat them when I say they're ready to be eaten. Auntie Mame wouldn't consider that much of a banquet, but it's a start.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Out-of-state 'dillo

A 7-week-old LaPlata three-banded armadillo baby boy inspects the underside of a video camera lens during its first day on public exhibit at the Phoenix Zoo last Wednesday. This is the first birth of an armadillo at the zoo as well as for the male and female parents which are on loan from the Lincoln Park Zoo in Chicago.

Jerry Lewis pushes positive at 28th telethon

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Jerry Lewis rebuked critics who accuse him of "pity-mongering" and showcased the achievements of muscular dystrophy sufferers as he coaxed a record $46 million from viewers of his celebrity-studded telethon.

"Let somebody come to me and tell me what I do ain't good stuff," a jubilant Lewis said as the tote board registered a final figure of $46,014,922 on Monday.

"That's America talking," Lewis said.

Another $36,849,732 was donated by corporate sponsors, telethon spokesman Jim Brown said.

Lewis ended the 21½-hour telethon by singing "You'll Never Walk Alone" — a song he says has been requested often by his "kids."

Dozens of celebrities took the stage at telethon headquarters on the Las Vegas Strip and others performed live from New York City, Los Angeles and Branson, Mo. Steve Lawrence, Eydie Gorme, Norm Crosby, Mel Tillis and Wayne Newton were among those who performed.

Lewis had set the tone at the start of the 28th annual Labor Day Telethon on Sunday night when he promised his audience: "We are gonna beat this."

Physicians involved in the battle against 40 neuromuscular diseases were on hand to outline new medical breakthroughs.

The show focused on success stories like Marlana Kirk.

"My wheelchair is a thing of the past," said Mrs. Kirk, who was near death from muscular dystrophy 15 years ago. "It sits in my parents' garage and gathers dust."

Mrs. Kirk, from Kernersville, N.C., was saved when doctors tried a blood plasma exchange process that switches bad blood for good. The procedure, developed by MDA-funded research, saved her life.

Her father, Dover Sharpe, was shown in a videotape walking his daughter down the aisle at her recent marriage.

"Jerry, a month ago I gave my daughter away, and thanks to you, it wasn't to muscular dystrophy," he said.

Some muscular dystrophy sufferers have said they object to being labeled "Jerry's Kids."

About 15 disabled people protested Monday outside a Manhattan hotel where local phone banks for the telethon were set up, and protests were held at some of the 200 television stations carrying the telethon.

Marta Russell, 41, who headed a three-hour demonstration of 50 people outside KTLA-TV in Los Angeles, said she wants to see telethons banned altogether.

"We're here to protest Jerry Lewis' continual degradation of people to raise money," said Russell, who had cerebral palsy and uses a wheelchair. "The whole essence of telethon is about begging, but our goals are towards equality and rights."

In Philadelphia, about a dozen people protested outside WPVI-TV, carrying signs that read: "I'm not one of Jerry's Kids" and "Pride Not Pity."

Friends said Lewis, who has helped raise more than $1.3 billion for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, is angry and hurt by the criticism.

Foster may walk

PITTSBURGH — Barry Foster's agent has denied a CBS-TV report that the Pro Bowl running back won't play Sunday against the Los Angeles Rams if he doesn't get a contract extension by Friday.

"Barry wants a contract done by Friday," agent Jordan Woy told the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. "But we never said he won't play."

The Steelers also denied that Foster or Woy had given the team an ultimatum.

Foster has been trying to negotiate an extension since the end of last season. He missed the first 20 days of training camp before reporting with the promise that earnest negotiations would begin on an extension.

The Steelers have a club policy against renegotiating contracts and have refused to tear up the two-year deal Foster signed last season. That contract also contains an option year that binds Foster to Pittsburgh through the 1994 season.

Brett may retire

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — George Brett, who turned 40 this season, said Monday he will decide by the last homestand of the season if he will return for another season.

Brett said he had discussed next season with Royals general manager Herk Robinson.

"Herk said we want you to come back if you want to come back," Brett said. "If I want to come back, I can. I'm going to have to make that decision."

Brett, who is in the option year of his contract, said he would make a decision by the time of the homestand that begins Sept. 24.

Brett, who is in his 20th season — all with the Royals — will be offered an executive position with the team when he retires.

Brett thought about retiring after getting his 3,000th hit in the last week of last season. But he waited through the winter to announce his decision after having a misunderstanding with the late Royals owner Ewing Kauffman.

Kauffman apparently suggested that Brett should retire after getting the 3,000th hit, and Brett took offense. Kauffman, who died earlier this year, later issued a public apology to Brett.

Brett is hitting .261 with 15 homers and 59 runs batted in. Manager Hal McRae asked Brett to hit for more power this season, and his homer total is the most since he hit 24 in 1988.

Brett, who was given six standing ovations during a weekend series in Boston, this year became only the third player in major league history with 3,000 hits, 300 homers and 200 stolen bases.

Brett was given a standing ovation in Fenway when he doubled Sunday. His last at-bat there was a groundout to second.

"I've probably grounded out to second more than any player in history," Brett said with a laugh. "The fans in Boston have been the best to me of any city outside of Kansas City.

ABILENE — Tailback Glenn Starks and defensive back Elton Rhoades of Central Oklahoma are the Lone Star Conference players of the week.

Starks rushed for 162 yards and a touchdown as the Bronchos beat Mesa State (Colo.) 37-7 on Saturday.

Rhoades had eight tackles, including five unassisted, and returned an interception 23 yards for a touchdown.

Starks is a senior from Covington, Tenn. Rhoades is a junior from Guthrie, Okla.

Washington Redskins defenders Kurt Gouveia (54), Monte Coleman (51), Danny Copeland (26) and Charles Mann (71) stops Dallas running back Derrick Lassic in the first quarter of the Redskins' 28-16 win over the Cowboys in the NFL opener for both teams.

■ Three first half turnovers proved costly as Dallas dropped its season opener to Washington, 35-16.

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

WASHINGTON — Don't blame the Dallas Cowboys' 35-16 loss to the Washington Redskins Monday night on Emmitt Smith's holdout.

The whole Dallas team failed to show up.

Mark Rypien threw for three touchdowns, including one to Art Monk at the end of a 99-yard, third-quarter drive as the 1991 Super Bowl champions beat the 1992 version.

In fact, the preordained dynasty of the '90s showed clear signs of post-Super Bowl malaise.

The Cowboys lost the ball four times on fumbles, twice on punts, dropped a half dozen passes, never came close to sacking Rypien and were penalized seven times for 63 yards.

They would have lost by more had Washington not made its share of mistakes in coach Richie Petitbon's first game as Joe Gibbs' successor. It got so bad that on a fourth-quarter punt, rookie Dave Thomas was waving all his Dallas teammates away from the bouncing ball.

It wasn't just the absence of Smith, the league's leading rusher the past two years — rookie Derrick Lassic, his replacement, gained 75 yards in 16 carries and was guilty of only one gross misdemeanor, a dropped pass with a lot of room to run.

It was a general run of mistakes that began with a fumbled snap on the first play of the game. And they even accompanied success — an 80-yard TD pass from Troy Aikman to Alvin Harper that gave the Cowboys a 6-0 lead was followed by a missed extra point by Lin Elliott.

Horse makes dash a classic at Futurity

By Pete Herrera
AP Sports Writer

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — A Classic Dash spotted his competition a brief lead, then closed with a rush in the final 100 yards Monday to beat Heza Fast Man by a nose in the 35th running of the $2 million All American Futurity.

■ All-American Futurity

Pre-race favorite and previously unbeaten Treacherously got off to a slow start, collided with Merganser Line two jumps out of the gate, and ran a well-beaten third, 1¼ lengths behind the winner.

It was the first loss after eight straight wins for Treacherously, a gray gelding trying to become the second horse to win quarterhorse racing's version of the Triple Crown.

But a bit of history was still made in quarter horse racing's biggest event.

With the victory, A Classic Dash's trainer Connie Hall became the first woman to win the futurity.

A Classic Dash, an average starter but an awesome finisher, trailed Heza Fast Man and Merganser Line through the first half of the 440-yard sprint, but steadily wore down both of the frontrunners and then outdueled Heza Fast Man over the final 100 yards.

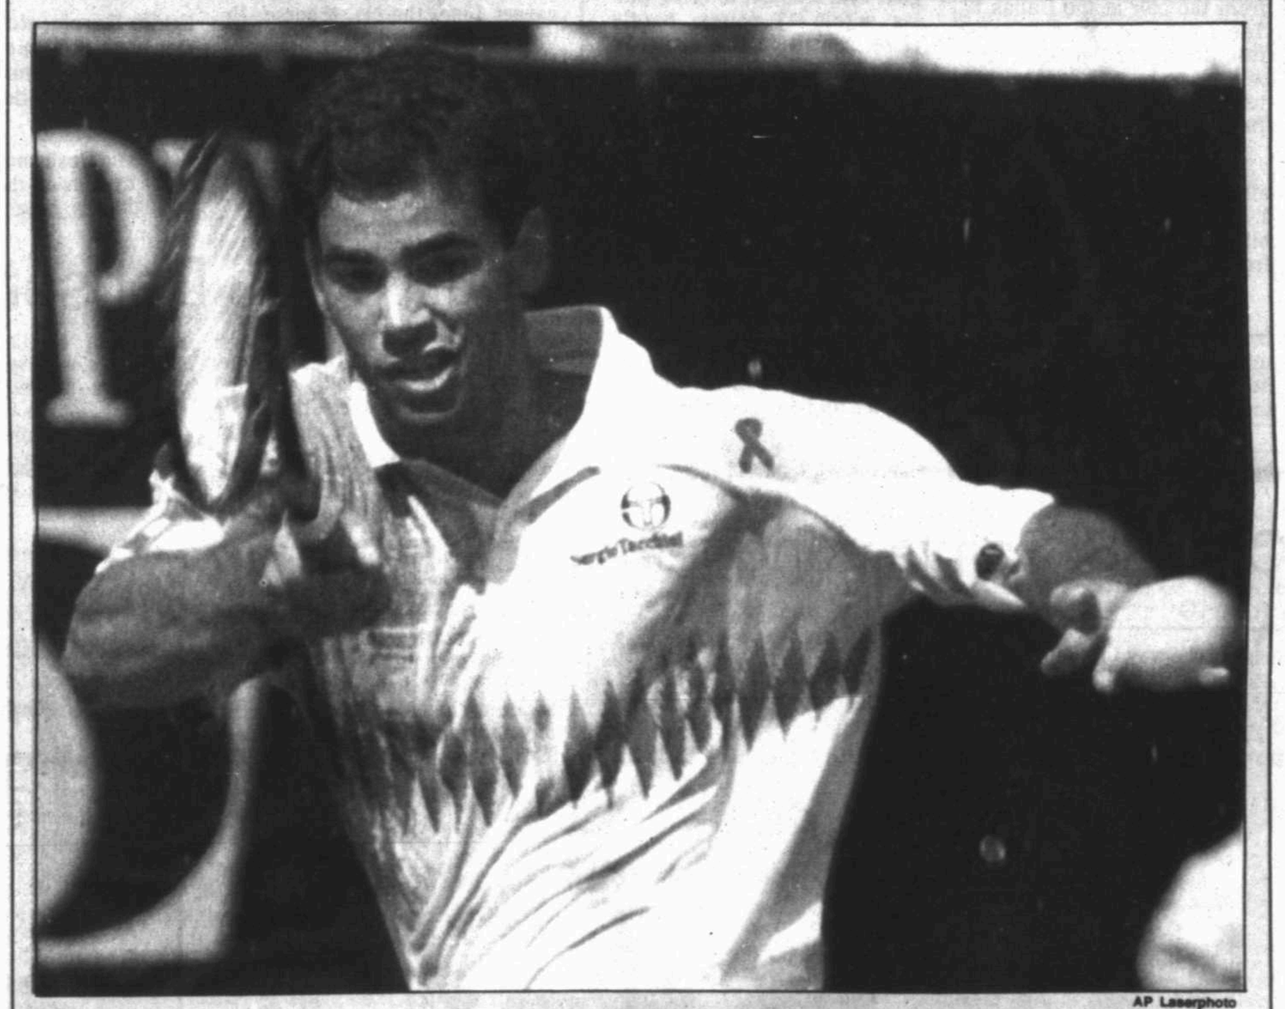

The win was worth $1 million for owner Abigail Kekaulike Kawananakoa of Honolulu — a descendent of Hawaii's last reigning monarch, Queen Lili'uokalani.

The victory was the seventh in eight races this season for the 2-year-old chestnut colt. His only defeat came in May at the California Sires Futurity, when he broke slowly, then had to jump over a horse that went down in front of him. But he showed his late kick there, too, rallying to finish second.

On Monday, A Classic Dash made no

Martina loses, considers retiring

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

NEW YORK — The sad look in Martina Navratilova's eyes, the weak, final wave to the crowd, the disgust in her voice, all told the story U.S. Open fans hated to hear.

Suddenly, she was gone in the round of 16 Monday, beaten by Helena Sukova again at a crucial moment in her career.

This time, Sukova won 7-5, 6-4, her long arms reaching out to swat returns that Navratilova was a bit too slow to catch. Once before, Sukova was there to stop Navratilova's bid for a Grand Slam, in 1984 at the Australian Open, and end her 74-match winning streak.

The loss left the United States without a women's singles quarterfinalist for the first time in the tournament's history, dating to 1887.

Navratilova, a month shy of 37, was the oldest player in the Open and she gave it more life than anyone. Fans packed her matches, cheered her almost the way they cheered Jimmy Connors when he made his final charges at 39 and 40. They wanted her to win a fifth Open, show everyone she wasn't too old, too slow to do it again.

In truth, she was. She couldn't get to the net quickly enough to pick up Sukova's returns. She couldn't volley with the agility and sharpness she had for so many years. She hit too many shots just a tad wide or long, and she couldn't put pressure on Sukova's serves.

"They just weren't falling," Navratilova said. "I felt like I was playing golf. They weren't going in by inches. I didn't make one lob. I

Authorities arrest college quarterback

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — South Carolina quarterback Steve Taneyhill was arrested on an underage drinking charge Sunday night, a day after leading his team to an upset of Georgia.

Taneyhill, 20, was picked up just after 10 p.m. CDT at a student apartment near the school's Columbia campus and charged with possession of alcohol by a minor, according to a police report.

The quarterback, who led South Carolina to a 23-21 victory against Georgia Saturday, was booked on the misdemeanor charge Sunday night at the Richland County Detention Center and released a short time later.

The charge, which carries a maximum penalty of 30 days in prison and a $200 fine, is usually handled with a pretrial diversion program if it is a first offense and the defendant has no previous criminal record, said Solicitor Dick Harpootlian.

Taneyhill said he didn't want to discuss the matter, which is also being evaluated by the athletic department.

Houston continues embarrassing ways

■ Houston carries over last season's loss to Buffalo with setback to Saints.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — It was another game, another embarrassment for the Houston Oilers, who started this season as they ended last season, with a humbling loss.

Embarrassment was a word tossed around frequently in the aftermath of Sunday night's 33-21 loss to the New Orleans Saints although it lacked the drama of the Oilers' 41-38 overtime playoff defeat to Buffalo.

"They were frustrated and embarrassed and trying to make plays," Pardee said. "They didn't want to take it and I'm glad to see that. But when you have a chance to win the game, you can only compound problems when you do that (fight)."

If the Oilers are mad at their performance, they could turn it on themselves for coughing up five turnovers and falling victim to the aggressive New Orleans defense.

"They weren't really blitzing us, they were bringing five guys and dropping off six," Pardee said. "I'm impressed that we played hard. We just had too many mental errors on defense. They were flying to the ball."

Warren Moon was sacked three times and eventually left the game with bruised ribs in the fourth quarter. Pardee isn't sure if he'll revamp the already shuffled offensive line.

"All of those guys played well but we took turns making mistakes," Pardee said. "I can't find a guy who didn't play well but they all made mistakes too."

That's what's been happening to the Oilers over the years, in their quest to become more than just a team that always makes the playoffs.

"That's the story with this offense," center Bruce Matthews said. "Nobody ever really stops us. We stop ourselves. You can talk yourself into circles sometimes. The bottom line is you have to make the plays and we didn't."

Wide receiver Haywood Jeffires, who caught a touchdown pass on the Oilers' first drive, had a more drastic suggestion.

"We were horrible," he said. "They can't fire all of us because we wouldn't have a team, but they should at least

OPEN: Navratilova suffers loss in round of 16

tried that shot too many times. If I play well, I win easily. If I'm a little off it's always a struggle. There wasn't any luck for me today. She made some great shots and I didn't.

"The crowd was fantastic. This is what I always wanted. To have the chance and the crowd. Then I blow it. I was tied up in knots. I didn't let myself go and play with reckless abandon."

It was Sukova, 6-foot-2 with long pipestem arms, who had the lucky net cords, the shots that nicked the edges of the lines, the calls that went her way. She needed all that luck. She had been out 2½ months this year with a broken foot, and she was the second oldest in the tournament at 28.

And just like that, in 1 hour, 23 minutes, Navratilova was gone, like so many other top players in this Open.

This loss, Navratilova said, makes her think about quitting tennis. And it makes her think about fighting back, going for a championship once more.

"Unfortunately, all those things go through my head in the match," she said. "It doesn't matter how much you win. You want to win one more time. I had a chance here and I blew it. It's like a drug. You want to taste it one more time. It's not like I need it. It would be a nice way to go. I know my game is there. My mind won't let me perform. That's what aggravates me, and why I bang my head on the wall."

In other women's matches, No. 2 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario beat No. 14 Nathalie Tauziat 6-4, 6-3; No. 10 Magdalena Maleeva defeated her sister Katerina 6-2, 6-3, and Natalia Zvereva beat the "lucky loser" from qualifying, Maria Jose Gaidano, to reach the quarters.

Among the men, Pete Sampras and Michael Chang set up a quarterfinal match and got to ruminate on old times. Alexander Volkov also advanced to the quarters, beating Chuck Adams 6-2, 7-6 (7-2), 6-1. Volkov will play No. 12 Thomas Muster, who beat Brad Gilbert 6-4, 7-5, 6-7 (5-7), 6-2.

Fourteen years ago, Sampras and Chang played each other for the first time on a school court in Poway, Calif., near San Diego. They were about 7 years old, toting big rackets they needed both hands to swing.

Neither one can remember who won, though Sampras thinks he might have taken it and Chang recalls it went three sets.

Now the U.S. Open quarters will be their playground following Sampras' 6-4, 6-4 7-6 (7-4) victory over Thomas Enqvist and Chang's 6-4, 6-3, 6-4 decision over Wayne Ferreira.

"It is pretty amazing where we have come from and now where we are," Sampras said. "He is the youngest French Open winner. I am the youngest U.S. Open winner. There are pretty interesting memories to go back to."

They played each other all the way through the juniors, and then eight matches as professionals, Chang winning six of those.

"He had a great two-hand backhand down the line, great forehand down the line that he still has," Chang said of the young Sampras. "He didn't have any volleys then."

Instead of ribbons and trophies, the stakes this time go far beyond the $535,000 to the Open winner or the $70,000 to an Open quarterfinalist.

Sampras, the 1990 Open champion who is coming off a Wimbledon victory, is trying to regain the No. 1 ranking he held so briefly this year. Chang, the 1989 French Open champion, is going for a second Grand Slam that would significantly raise his status in tennis.

"When we were younger, Pete was pretty much winning the majority of the time," Chang recalled.

Chang sneaked one in at the French four years ago in the second round, winning 6-1, 6-1, 6-1, then went on to take the title at 17. Chang also won their next four matches, all on hard courts like the ones at the U.S. Open.

COWBOYS: Dallas drops season opener

From 1C

Washington came right back after that to go 80 yards in 13 plays, the final one a 15-yard pass from Rypien to Ricky Sanders early in the second quarter. Rookie Reggie Brooks had 48 yards in eight carries on the drive.

Then came two gift touchdowns six minutes apart on either side of halftime that gave the Skins a 21-6 lead.

One, a 1-yard run by Brian Mitchell with 40 seconds left in the half, followed a recovery by Pat Eilers of a punt that bounced off James Washington as he was trying to get away from the ball at the Dallas 17. The second, a 1-yard TD pass from Rypien to Ron Middleton, was set up by a 36-yard pass interference call on Dallas' Larry Brown.

The Cowboys finally got going after that one — taking just 2:13 to go 80 yards with Aikman hitting Harper on a post pattern from 32 yards out for the score.

But they couldn't benefit from a horrible Washington mistake — Mitchell, thinking he was in the end zone, knelt on the 1-yard-line with the kickoff and the Redskins had to take over there.

Instead, the Redskins went 99 yards in 13 plays and ate up more than seven minutes as Rypien, who was 22 of 34 for 161 yards, hit Monk from 15 yards for the TD. Rypien, who did not have a three-TD game last season, was 9 of 10 for 79 yards on the drive.

That just about did it.

Dallas got one life when Al Noga went offside on a fourth-and-3 from the Redskins' 45 — another mistake in a the error-filled game. But three incomplete passes later, they were forced to punt.

Elliott had a 22-yard field goal with 6:30 left to bring Dallas within 12 points, hardly close enough on this night. In fact, it was followed by the last mistake — a kickoff out of bounds that gave Washington field position on the 35.

Mitchell, who carried 20 times for 116 yards, took advantage of that by bursting up the middle for 29 yards on fourth down with 2:12 left to cap the scoring.

Aikman completed 17 of 29 passes for 269 yards, 140 to Harper on five receptions.

mistakes and ended Treacherously's and jockey Nancy Summers' run of victories, denying both a place in quarter horse history.

Summers, who has ridden Treacherously in every race this year, sought to become the first woman jockey to win the All American and the first to capture the Triple Crown. A win would have made Treacherously the first horse since Special Effort in 1981 to win the Triple Crown series of races — the Ruidoso, Rainbow and All American futurities.

But Treacherously's sizzling summer ended almost as soon as the gates opened for the race run on a sloppy track.

Breaking from the middle of the pack in the No. 5 post position, Treacherously bobbled slightly at the start, then collided with Merganser Line, the No. 6 horse. He then drifted in and brushed Shiney Dancer, the No. 4 horse.

Treacherously, who had seen only the lead most of the summer, found himself a length and a half behind. He made a brief rush at the 200-yard mark of the race, but then lost his momentum again as A Classic Dash and Heza Fast Man went by him on the outside of the straighaway race.

Three Colorado athletes face obstruction charges

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — University of Colorado basketball star Donnie Boyce faces obstruction charges and two football players face weapons charges stemming from two separate incidents over the weekend.

Boyce, 20, was arrested Saturday night for allegedly interfering with a police officer's investigation, Boulder police said Monday.

Officer Robert Sullenberger said he saw several men exchanging money outside a fast food restaurant and saw Boyce handing a "white object" to another man. When Sullenberger asked Boyce to hand over the object, Boyce turned away, according to the officer's report.

Boyce and Sullenberger struggled and a crowd of about 50 gathered, the officer said. By the time Sullenberger handcuffed Boyce, the white object had disappeared.

Boyce, Colorado's all-Big Eight guard last winter and the team's leading scorer the past two seasons, was arrested on suspicion of obstructing a governmental operation and was taken to a police car, the report said.

George Hemingway, 25, a former CU football player, was arrested on suspicion of obstructing a police officer and while en route to Boulder County Jail threatened officer Barry Hartkopp.

Both men were taken to Boulder County Jail and released on bond.

In a separate incident early Sunday, campus police arrested Thadus Swazer and Keenan Gardner, both 18-year-old CU football players.

An unidentified witness had told campus police the men had been overheard "talking about retaliation due to an altercation at a dance on campus," CU Boulder spokeswoman Pauline Hale said Monday.

The witness told police he had heard what sounded like a gun being loaded.

Tour rookie Dobson wins LPGA event in playoff

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Helen Dobson, a 22-year-old tour rookie from England, defeated Dottie Mochrie on the fifth playoff hole Monday to win the LPGA State Farm Rail Golf Classic.

Both players finished 54 holes of regulation at 13-under-par 203. Mochrie closed with a 4-under 68 on a course soaked by an overnight rain and Dobson with a 71.

Dobson, who missed her plane to the West Coast because of the playoff, won for the first time on the LPGA Tour.

"I was nervous the last few holes, but when the playoff started, my nerves disappeared," she said. "I couldn't do anything about what Dottie was doing. I just had to do my best."

Joan Zedlitz, another rookie, finished third with a 68 for a 205. Nancy Lopez, the defending champion, had the day's low round (67) and shared fourth at 207 with Page Dunlap (69).

fine us. The way I look at it, all the individuals, the high paid guys, didn't do a damn thing."

The Oilers' new 46 defense was taken on and conquered by Saints quarterback Wade Wilson, who was able to complete 16 of 25 passes for 206 yards.

"The things that went wrong are correctable," Pardee said. "Wilson is a streak player. When he's on a role, he can do that. He went to the right place before we could get a hit on him."

The Oilers' next task is even greater. They play host to Kansas City and quarterback Joe Montana in their home opener on Sunday.

Palmeiro homers in Rangers win

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Rafael Palmeiro hit two home runs, just missing two more, as Texas beat New York 8-5 Monday night before an Arlington Stadium crowd eroded by Dallas football mania.

■ AL Roundup

The game was played before an announced sellout crowd of 41,148, although there were at least 8,000 no-shows as many fans likely stayed home to watch the defending Super Bowl champion Cowboys open the season on television against the Washington Redskins.

Texas' victory knocked the Yankees out of a first-place tie with Toronto in the AL East.

Palmeiro, who drove in four runs, now has 34 homers and 93 RBIs. He is eligible to become a free agent after the season.

Texas moved into second place in the AL West, six games behind the Chicago White Sox.

Brewers 3, Royals 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Seldom-used Matt Mieske singled in the winning run and Pat Listach hit his first homer in a month as Milwaukee beat Kansas City.

Mieske, hitting .194 on 6-for-31 with four RBIs, knocked in the winning run in the seventh off Greg Cadaret (1-1), who had relieved Mike Magnante.

Jaime Navarro (10-9) won his third consecutive decision, giving up two runs and six hits in seven innings. He struck out six and walked one.

Red Sox 3, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Rob Deer hit two home runs, including a tie-breaking shot in the seventh inning, as Boston beat Jack McDowell and Chicago in a game delayed by a bench-clearing brawl.

The Red Sox snapped a five-game losing streak, while first-place Chicago lost for only the second time in 10 games.

McDowell (21-8) lost for only the second time in his last 11 decisions, giving up three runs on 10 hits. McDowell was ejected after Deer hit his second homer of the game with one out in the ninth for arguing a previous pitch during the at-bat.

In more controversy, George Bell was ejected in the second inning when he charged Red Sox rookie starter Aaron Sele after being hit by a pitch.

Orioles 5, Mariners 1

BALTIMORE — Jack Voigt and Mike Devereaux each hit home runs as Baltimore beat Seattle, extending its winning streak to eight and moving within two games of first place in the AL East.

Starter Ben McDonald (11-11) allowed six hits in 7 1-3 innings and won for the seventh time in his last 12 starts. Alan Mills pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his second save.

Giants extend lead in NL West

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Scott Sanderson pitched six shutout innings Monday in San Francisco's 4-1 victory over Pittsburgh as the Giants returned home trying to hold on in the NL West.

■ NL Roundup

The Giants widened their lead to three games over Altanta, which was to play later Monday at Los Angeles, and sent the Pirates to their fifth straight loss.

Sanderson (3-1), who has won his last three starts with the Giants after 10 straight losses, mostly with California, retired 12 of the 13 batters after the second inning. He allowed two hits, struck out four and walked one.

Expos 4, Rockies 3

MONTREAL — Marquis Grissom singled home the winning run as Montreal rallied for two runs in the eighth inning to defeat Colorado.

Tim Scott (5-2) pitched one inning for the win despite allowing Dante Bichette's 21st home run, which gave Colorado a 3-2 lead in the eighth. John Wetteland got three outs for his 34th save.

Astros 7, Mets 2

HOUSTON — Luis Gonzalez tied his career high with five RBIs and Pete Harnisch pitched four-hit ball over seven innings for his career-best 13th victory as Houston beat New York.

Harnisch (13-8), who struck out five and walked three, beat the Mets for the second time in seven days and the third time this year. He is 4-0 against New York in his career.

Cubs 7, Phillies 6

PHILADELPHIA — Chicago hit three consecutive home runs in the sixth inning — including Willie Wilson's first homer since 1990 — as the Cubs beat Philadelphia for their fourth straight victory.

Both starting pitchers left the game because of injuries. Winning pitcher Mike Harkey (8-8) left after backing up a play at third with two outs in the sixth. Harkey, who allowed two runs on six hits with no strikeouts or walks, was diagnosed with a mild strain of a tendon in his right knee and listed as day-to-day.

Phillies starter Terry Mulholland left after loading the bases with no outs in the first inning, aggravating a hip problem. Mike Williams (1-1) relieved.

Dodgers 2, Braves 1

LOS ANGELES — Atlanta took a rare step backward in their pursuit of San Francisco, losing a tense decision to Los Angeles.

The loss snapped a four-game winning streak for the Braves and was only their fifth defeat in their last 26 games. The Braves dropped 3½ games behind San Francisco in the NL West.

Marlins 2, Padres 0

SAN DIEGO — Benito Santiago hit a two-run homer off former batterymate Andy Benes and David Weathers pitched eight shutout innings in his first major-league start as Florida beat San Diego.

Bryan Harvey got the final three outs for his 41st save to preserve Florida's fourth shutout.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: If you must travel a great deal, combine business with pleasure whenever possible. Do not let others rush you into making a major decision in December. Having a well-thought-out plan is essential to success. Next spring, keeping a confidence will improve your position with a large company. New, more interesting job opportunities arise. Family ties grow stronger during the summer of '94.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Corbin Bernsen, heart surgeon Dr. Michael DeBakey, movie director Elia Kazan, Sen. Daniel Inouye.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could find yourself shouldering heavy responsibilities or partnership woes today. Do not despair; you will emerge a winner. Daydreams can bring valuable insights. You have reason to feel confident about the future.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A co-worker is a model of productivity and cooperation today. Special rewards may be up for grabs. You are in a position to win your share. Sign contracts only after a careful reading.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A lack of warmth or openness affects certain relationships now. The less said, the better. Income gains go hand-in-hand with a positive, cheerful attitude.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): News from someone at a distance may lead you to put aside an important project to accommodate a friend. Loved one's gratitude makes you feel great.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can have an uplifting effect on a business partner this week. Take a positive approach and you will succeed in almost everything you attempt. Romance takes a dramatic turn.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Try to see what is behind an attractive offer; it may have a hidden barb. Dangerous assignments should not be accepted right now. Postpone signing contracts until more data are available.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The next two days are very important for your finances. Utilize all of your special talents. Hidden hopes and desires need to be expressed. Do not say "yes" when you mean "no."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Although your intentions are good, others may not be convinced. The same skepticism applies if you do have ulterior motives. Stay alert. Leaving things unfinished could cost you money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do the best job you can but avoid wasting energy on trifling matters. Useful agreements can be reached with others. Stand up for your principles when dealing with less scrupulous types.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Once again, curb a rash impulse to strike out blindly. Those at the top are not ready to cede their places or privileges. Romance keeps you guessing!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis today is on expanding your interests. The result of your efforts will be determined by the use you make of your opportunities. New relationships demand a lot of emotional growth.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What was left over from yesterday should be pushed to a successful conclusion. Try to stay serene. Reading an amusing book or watching a video will help you relax tonight.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are very conscious of the passage of time and will want to pack a lot of activity into each day. Even as youngsters, they will be highly creative. Count on these quick-witted Virgos to choose their best option, then try to manipulate others into doing their bidding. Somewhat shy, they prefer small gatherings to large ones. Powerful personal magnetism will bring them a great deal of attention and gifts. They expect much of themselves and their loved ones.

To call them "juniors" is something of a misnomer—the age limit is 25. Certainly, the skill of the players in the World Junior Championship, held recently in Arhus, Denmark, showed the sureness of experience. Witness the dummy play technique of Murray Green of Australia on this hand from an early round in the tournament.

North's one-diamond opening bid systemically showed a spade suit and East made a questionable double—our choice would have been an overcall of one heart to direct a lead, or a quiet pass. Three no trump was reached in quick time.

West led the ten of diamonds, East produced the jack and declarer held up the ace. After cashing the king of hearts, East reverted to the queen of diamonds. Had declarer again withheld the ace, West would have been able to overtake with the king and switch back to a heart, giving the defenders three heart tricks and two diamonds. But declarer rose with the ace and now had to make eight more tricks without giving up the lead.

The obvious way to go about that would be to take the spade finesse, but declarer was convinced by East's double that the queen of spades was offside. To neutralize the lady declarer crossed to the jack of clubs and led the jack of spades!

Had East covered with the queen, declarer would have won with the king and then led a spade to the nine to complete the backward finesse. When East withheld the queen, declarer played low from hand and the jack won. Declarer continued with a spade to the king, returned to dummy with the ace of clubs and cashed the ace of spades. When the suit broke evenly, declarer had 10 tricks.

Kelsey Grammer finds acting a refuge from life's twists, turns

RADNOR, Pa. — Kelsey Grammer considers acting a refuge from the twists and turns of a life that hasn't always been kind.

"Work is where I'm insulated," the former "Cheers" star told TV Guide. "It's a great part of my life. I don't bring my troubles to work."

Grammer

Beginning this fall, Grammer will continue his "Cheers" role, Dr. Frasier Crane, in his "Frasier" series on NBC.

Grammer, 38, is fresh from a rancorous public estrangement from his second wife, former exotic dancer Leigh-Anne Csuhany. He sought an annulment in June, saying she broke promises, hid mental illness and threatened him with a kitchen knife. She denies the allegations.

In the past, Grammer has dealt with the murders of his father and younger sister and the accidental deaths of his two stepbrothers.

He also rode out publicized bouts with drug and alcohol abuse in 1987 and 1988 and was sentenced to 30 days in prison in 1990 on drug charges.

Jail wasn't that bad, Grammer said. "I've been in worse spots. It was really the first peaceful time I'd had in years."

NORFOLK, Va. — Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg was 9 when she smashed a bottle of champagne on the USS John F. Kennedy. She's all grown up now and returned to Norfolk to mark the aircraft carrier's 25th anniversary.

"It's really an honor to be back," she said Sunday at Norfolk Naval Base. "My father would be so proud of this memorial. I'm proud of it."

Mrs. Schlossberg used a bowling pin to practice her swing as a child. When the christening took place, she said the spray of champagne surprised her.

"I remember so well how extremely nervous I was christening, because I didn't know how hard to swing the bottle," she said. "I never practiced with a bottle. It broke and champagne went all over the place."

She attended a gala on the ship and presented the carrier's crew a copy of "Profiles in Courage," her father's book about politicians he admired.

PORTLAND, Ore. — Mel Gibson and Jodie Foster will share the screen with a historic riverboat.

The newly restored Portland lured Icon Productions to the Columbia River, filling in for the Mississippi River in the film "Maverick."

The movie is based on the 1950s television series that starred James Garner. Icon craftsmen modified the Portland to look like an 1880s riverboat.

"They've added about 30 feet to the upper deck, put on a lot of froufrou and a lot of guy wires," said William Peterson, a retired Navy captain and director of the Oregon Maritime Center and Museum.

Gibson plays the role of gambler Bret Maverick and Garner plays the honest lawman Zane Cooper. The two compete for the affections of a con woman named Annabelle, played by Foster.

The film will be directed by Richard Donner. Shooting on the Columbia River was scheduled for later this month.

BANGKOK, Thailand — Bosnia's tragedy shows the United Nations can't be relied upon as a world policeman, former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Monday.

"Humanitarian aid cannot stop the massacres or the ethnic cleansing," she said at a luncheon hosted by Citibank, sponsor of her visit to Thailand.

Serbia has been allowed to gain from aggression and unless that stops, other aggressors throughout the world will be encouraged, Mrs. Thatcher said.

"The second general lesson from the tragedy of Bosnia is that international organizations cannot be relied upon in the last resort to enforce what is right," she said.

"The euphoric talk, of which so much was heard just a year or two ago, of the United Nations as an effective arbiter and world policeman has been shown to be just that — and no more."

She said the West, especially the United States, must keep its military superiority.

CHICAGO — Jerry Seinfeld said he was "in a tabloid rocket to the moon" after he dated a 17-year-old girl.

The supermarket tabloids had a field day after the 39-year-old star of NBC's "Seinfeld" appeared at a basketball game with the teen-ager.

"She's a very sweet girl and very pretty," the comedian said in an interview in the October issue of Playboy magazine. "I didn't know how old she was. I knew she wasn't 40. I took her to a basketball game, and that was the whole thing."

The tabloid stories didn't bother him, but friends' reactions ranged from absolute horror to pride in knowing a man who dated a teen-ager.

"Guys I hadn't heard from in years called to say, 'Congratulations! Good for you,'" he said. "Women I know wouldn't even call me back. My assistant punched me."

BUSINESS WATCH

Muni probe

WASHINGTON — The $1.2 trillion securities market that raises money for state and local public works projects like schools and highways comes under congressional scrutiny this week with the release of three key studies.

House members asked federal and industry regulators this spring to look into the process used by state and local governments to award bond offerings to underwriters.

Of special interest are political contributions made by underwriters to politicians. They have been called into question because of a federal investigation into allegations of illegal payments and other possible violations in connection with a $2.9 billion New Jersey Turnpike bond issue.

Reports by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the National Association of Securities Dealers and the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board will be the subject of a hearing Thursday before the House telecommunications and finance subcommittee.

Banks on Windsor

LONDON — As a prospective brand name, the House of Windsor might seem a bit tarnished, what with the late unpleasantness about Charles and Di, Andy and Fergie, the queen's taxes and so forth.

But a new British-American company is convinced that at least to consumers in the United States, the royal family is still synonymous with class and quality.

Later this month the company will introduce the House of Windsor Collection, a catalogue to be distributed in the United States through which it will offer British glassware, picture frames, jewelry, knick-knacks and the like, at prices ranging from $50 to several thousand dollars.

All the merchandise will be made by holders of the Royal Warrant, a designation indicating that members of the royal family consider the manufacturers to be the best in their field in Britain.

As marketing ploys go, this one might be easily dismissed, except that the House of Windsor Collection has the backing of the House of Windsor itself.

New IBM models

IBM will introduce more powerful minicomputers today in the company's latest effort to defend its profitable midsized computer business against increasing competition.

The three new models of the IBM AS-400 minicomputer will be up to 80 percent more powerful than the current machines. IBM will also introduce new software and disk storage features to make the AS-400 better able to operate as a "server" — a central machine feeding and collecting data to and from many work stations linked by a computer network.

B&N to go public

Joining the fall rush to cash in on the voracious appetite for new public stock offerings, Barnes & Noble Inc., the country's largest operator of book superstores and owner of the B. Dalton, Doubleday and Scribner's bookstore chains, is planning to sell a stake in its future.

That future, the company says, holds almost 300 book superstores, which are fast becoming the libraries of choice for many readers.

In documents filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission Thursday, the company said it planned to sell 8,235,000 shares priced between $16 and $18 a share. The offering is subject to a review by the SEC, which could take from six weeks to three months.

Mutual funds grow; concerns mount

■ On Wall Street, the worry is growing that funds have become the gorilla of the stock market.

By Leslie Wayne
N.Y. Times News Service

As millions of Americans pour money into mutual funds at a record rate — nearly $1 billion a day — concerns are growing that the funds are bringing new risk to the savings of many people and instability to the markets in which they invest.

A whole generation of savers, seeking alternatives to the 2 percent and 3 percent returns available at banks, is now being transformed into investors.

Since the start of the current bull stock market, at the end of 1990, more than $450 billion has poured into mutual funds — which include stock, bond and money-market funds — bringing their total assets to nearly $1.8 trillion.

But as the money mounts, so do the concerns. In large part, people putting their money into mutual funds are middle-income and often first-time investors — betting a larger part of their savings on increasingly uncertain and unstable markets. One in every four American homes invests in mutual funds and nearly half of all fund owners earn less than $50,000 a year.

"Mutual funds are becoming increasingly responsible for people's savings," said Arthur Zeikel, president of Merrill Lynch Asset Management, the nation's second largest mutual fund group. "This is a cultural change. There are so many unknowns. Given the huge flow of dollars, more of these people's savings will become more volatile and less stable."

Most of the money for mutual funds has come from the banking system. Nearly $350 billion has been drained from banks since mutual funds took off. And unlike bank deposits, which are government-insured and guaranteed never to lose a penny, mutual funds are bets on the far riskier financial markets, where there is no certainty that investors will ever see all their money again.

There are now twice as many mutual funds — about 4,300 — than stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and the demand for these funds has brought many more into existence, 1,000 in the last year alone. Mutual funds are the biggest buyers of municipal bonds and are an important source of capital for corporate America and to emerging companies, and they provide billions of dollars to the home mortgage market.

But on Wall Street, the worry is growing that mutual funds have become the gorilla of the stock market. Statistics compiled by Laszlo Birinyi Jr., head of his own market analysis firm in Greenwich, Conn., show that the major reason for large price changes in the stock market in recent months has been investments of mutual funds, pushing up prices, rather than the fundamental health of the economy or of the companies whose stocks are traded.

During the 1980s, the stock market was propelled by two dominant players — pension plans investing on behalf of future retirees and corporations buying back their own stock through leveraged buyouts and takeovers of other corporations.

But that has changed since 1990, as mutual funds have invested nearly $140 billion into the stock markets. Mutual funds account for as much new money into the stock market as from pension funds and individuals combined.

While mutual funds account for about 10 percent of all stock ownership, they account for 30 percent of the trading volume on the New York Stock Exchange, Birinyi said, and, on hectic days, for more than 40 percent of all trades.

This high volatility results from a troubling aspect of mutual fund behavior: unlike pension funds and individuals, which tend to buy and hold, mutual funds are generally short-term traders.

Tiny utility El Paso Electric focus of fierce takeover bid

By Kathryn Jones
N.Y. Times News Service

Small utility, just across from Juarez, controls one of the few major power transmission links between the United States and Mexico.

DALLAS — The fierce bidding war for El Paso Electric Co. at first glance might seem like a big play for a relatively meager prize. The small utility is operating under federal bankruptcy protection, it continues to lose money and serves only 258,000 customers in El Paso; Las Cruces, N.M., and small farming communities along the Rio Grande.

But across the river lies a vast market for U.S. utilities wanting to export electricity. If the North American Free Trade Agreement wins approval, U.S. utility companies will be able to build and operate independent power plants in Mexico, form joint ventures with Mexican businesses and sell even more wholesale electricity to a country hungry for power.

And tiny El Paso Electric, just across from Juarez, controls one of the few major power transmission links between the United States and Mexico.

"El Paso Electric's greatest value to any utility is its geographic location, and not just because it's along the border," said Barry M. Abramson, a utility analyst at Prudential Securities. "They have the infrastructure already in place — the big high-voltage lines to move large amounts of power."

The strategic advantage has placed El Paso Electric in the middle of a complex takeover battle between the Central & South West Co. of Dallas, one of the nation's largest utilities, and the much smaller Southwestern Public Service Co. of Amarillo, Texas.

The bidding, which began in May after Central and South West and El Paso Electric announced they had agreed on a $2.1 billion merger, is now up to $2.2 billion.

El Paso Electric has been selling power in Mexico for decades, as have some Central and South West units in South Texas. If its proposed merger with El Paso Electric is successful, Central and South West will control all the major electric interconnections along the border between the United States and Mexico, except for one in San Diego.

Through El Paso Electric's interconnection with the electrical grid that serves the Western United States, Central and South West or Southwestern also would be able to sell or buy power from utilities out west.

This week the four-month fight could take a critical turn. A federal bankruptcy judge in Austin, Texas, will hear on Thursday Southwestern's request to file a competing reorganization plan for El Paso Electric, which has vowed to go to court rather than accept a merger with Southwestern.

A refusal by Judge Frank Monroe would deal a serious blow to Southwestern's takeover attempt, but not necessarily stop its pursuit.

"At that point, we'd evaluate our options," said a Southwestern spokesman, Ken Vaughn. He said Southwestern would continue to participate in the process of confirming a reorganization plan in bankruptcy court and gaining the necessary federal and state regulatory approval, which could take up to two years. "We feel like we have a strong plan," he said.

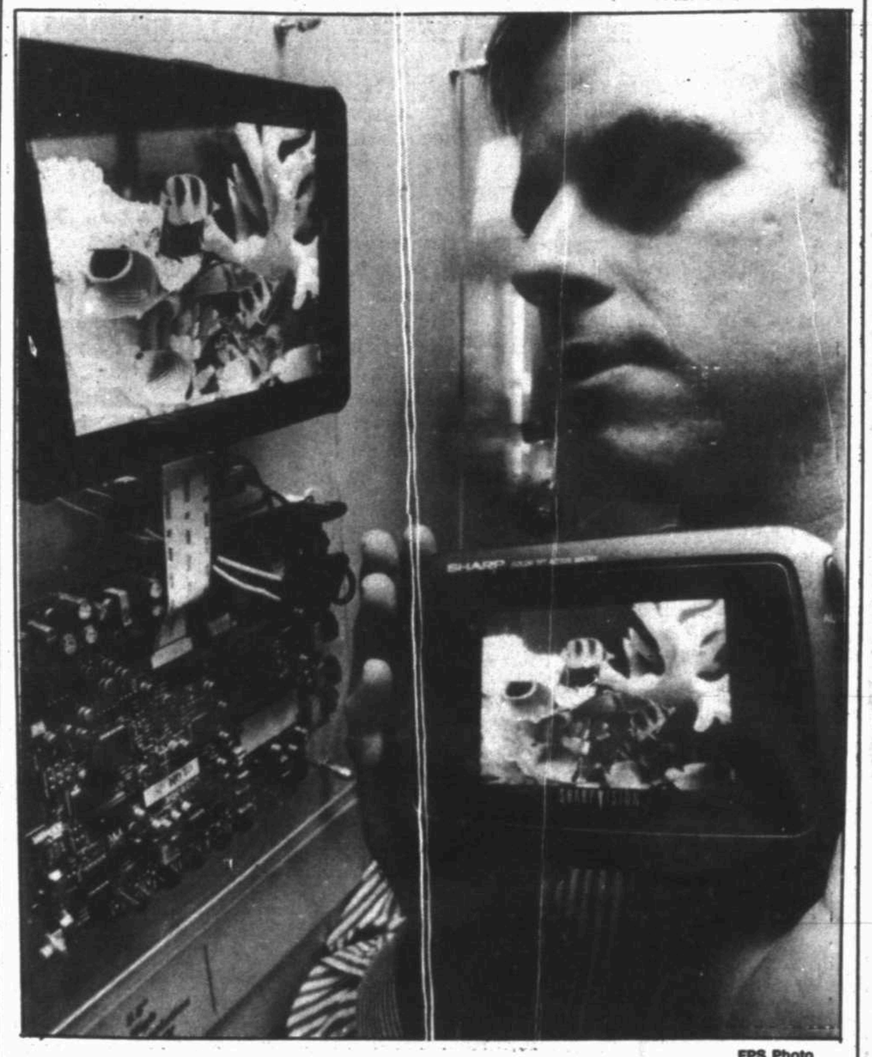

E.R. (Dick) Brooks, Central and South West's chairman, president and chief executive, said last week that he was "very confident" his company would eventually prevail.

About three-fourths of El Paso Electric's creditors have endorsed Central and South West's plan.

On Tuesday El Paso Electric's preferred and common shareholders will file documents with the bankruptcy court offering "unequivocal support" for Central and South West's proposal, said Benjamin Waisbren, a partner in the Chicago law firm of Lord, Bissell & Brook, which is representing the shareholders committee.

"We certainly feel optimistic that the judge will go forward with our plan," Brooks said. "It has the best chance of being done in a reasonable period of time."

The judge's rulings so far have largely favored Central and South West.

Renault SA, Volvo AB announce merger

PARIS (AP) — The merger between France's Renault SA and Sweden's Volvo AB announced Monday will form the world's sixth largest automaker.

The companies together produced more than 2.4 million vehicles last year, with combined sales of about $38 billion. Only General Motors, Ford, Toyota, Volkswagen and Nissan are larger.

Renault will own 65 percent of the combined entity, with Volvo owning the rest and having veto power on major strategic decisions. The united company will be called Renault-Volvo RVA and be based at Renault's existing headquarters in Boulogne-Billancourt on the southwestern edge of Paris.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Rules differ for those with resident alien status

By Bill Doyle

Q: My wife and I have resident alien status, but have lived in the United States for more than 30 years. During that time, we have paid all our federal, state and local taxes. We are both past age 65, retired and have no intention of leaving this country except for vacations.

Doyle

Recently, it was suggested to us that, when one of us dies, he or she will be unable to leave everything to the other. In other words, there apparently are some regulations regarding wealth left by a resident alien to a surviving spouse who is not a not a U.S. citizen. Is there any truth to this?

A: Yes, but things are not as drastic as you indicate. Each of you will be able to leave what you own to the other. However, unless you do some advance planning, the amount you leave will be reduced by federal estate tax.

Besides that, all states levy estate or inheritance taxes, and some levy both. The list is far too varied to be detailed here. For this column's purposes, we'll stick with the federal "death" tax.

Under present law, one spouse can leave to the other who is a U.S. citizen unlimited amounts, free of federal estate tax. That's known as the "marital deduction."

There is no marital deduction when the surviving spouse is not a U.S. citizen. As a result, the entire value of the bequest can be subject to federal estate tax.

Q: How severe is the federal estate tax?

A: It starts at 18 percent and increases in 16 steps to 55 percent. That top rate applies to the taxable amount of an estate exceeding $3 million.

Q: When was the marital deduction removed for estates left to surviving spouses who are not U.S. citizens?

A: On Nov. 10, 1988. It results from one of the provisions in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988. Congress passed that complicated piece of legislation to raise tax revenues from many different sources.

Q: Having watched the workings of the U.S. Congress for decades, I have learned those law givers often leave loopholes in legislation through which taxes can be avoided. Getting through a loophole typically involves substantial legal expense.

Is there any such arrangement allowing a non-U.S. citizen who is a surviving spouse to duck the federal estate tax?

A: You are an astute observer of the congressional scene and probably are aware that many members of the Senate and House are lawyers.

Indeed, there is a way to reduce or avoid the federal estate tax when the surviving spouse is not a U.S. citizen. The marital deduction is allowed if that surviving spouse's interest is in a qualifying domestic trust -- QDT, for short.

If you go that route, things do get complicated. You will need an experienced tax lawyer to set up the trust and plan the distribution provisions.

At least one trustee must be an individual U.S. citizen or domestic corporation with power to withhold estate tax due on distributions from the trust. The trust must maintain sufficient assets, as required by Internal Revenue Service regulations.

For the marital deduction to apply, the executor must make an irrevocable election on the dead spouse's federal estate tax return. Estate tax applies to distributions from the trust made prior to the surviving spouse's death and to the value of the trust property remaining at the surviving spouse's death.

You called it: The procedure fattens up lawyers' coffers. Members of Congress do look out for the members of the legal fraternity.

Cruise off to a fantastic vacation with Cruise Connection

Deciding where to go on vacation can often be a difficult choice. Everybody has different tastes, needs and wants in a holiday destination and it can often be a chore to find one that satisfies the whole family.

Cruising is a wonderful alternative to a land based vacation, but unfortunately it is often overlooked as an option because it is perceived to be outrageously expensive.

However, unlike conventional resort holidays, prices quoted for cruises tend to be all inclusive, (food, entertainment, travel costs etc) and work out to be very good value indeed.

Cruise Connection is the only travel agency in Midland that specializes solely in cruises.

Believing in the personal touch, they have a wealth of experience in all types of cruising and destinations; from the Caribbean to Alaska, South America to European tours.

Ramona Drickey, the owner of Cruise Connection has been on many cruises and has studied for, and passed exams, to become an Accredited Cruise Counselor for the Cruise Lines International Association.

Acting as agents for virtually all of the cruise lines, Ramona and her office manager Debbie Marszal find that cruising offers surprisingly good value for money, not to mention the most hassle free vacation possible for you and your family.

But most importantly, cruising is a lot of fun. Visiting a variety of different islands or countries while staying in the same hotel is very easy and relaxing: especially when one is enjoying five star cuisine and superlative service.

The emphasis is on relaxation, choice and informality. There are dozens of things to do on board, but it is all up to the passenger.

One can choose from as diverse a range of activities as wine tasting or clay pigeon shooting, sun bathing or dancing, everything is laid on for your convenience. The hard part is deciding what to do.

Where the ports of call are will obviously depend on the cruise, but they have all been selected for their natural beauty, facilities and friendliness, so that scuba diving or shopping are as easy and as fun as each other.

If you are interested in the Mexican Riviera, this years most popular destination or the old favorite the Caribbean call Ramona and Debbie at 686-1001 or stop by and see them at their location in Mission Square in Midland.

Protecting your investment

Most people do not pay any attention to the exhaust system of their car or truck, but proper maintenance can save a lot of time, money and can keep the vehicle operating safely.

There are three important reasons why vehicles have exhaust systems. They:

- quieten the vehicle,
- transport dangerous fumes away from the car,
- help protect the environment by using catalytic converters.

The principle reason behind an exhaust system is to muffle the engine, which reduces environmental noise. Holes and cracks in the system can increase noise levels above permissible levels.

Holes and cracks in the system also increase the possibility of noxious fumes getting into the vehicle which pose a significant health risk.

Exhaust systems also include catalytic converters which help to decrease toxic emissions. If they do not work properly, not only will the fumes be more dangerous but it can cause increased fuel consumption and loss of engine performance.

It is for these reasons that in order to pass a state inspection the whole system must be in perfect working order.

Midland Muffler specializes in all aspects of exhaust system repair and installation. They have been in the business for over 11-years, providing Midland with the very best in customer satisfaction and competitive prices.

Midland Muffler also has facilities for brake servicing and front end alignment. Using high-tech, computer controlled equipment, they have the experience and technical know-how to keep vital brake systems in good working order.

Brake systems are obviously very important but few people get them checked on a regular basis. As a rough guide, a vehicles brakes should be checked roughly every 35,000 miles for wear and damage. Front wheel drive cars and trucks should be inspected more often due to the extra wear on the brakes.

Midland Muffler's technicians are all professionally trained and qualified technicians, in order to provide the highest quality of service.

For more information about Midland Muffler and Brake Inc.'s range of services and competitive prices call 699-7924 or stop by their location at 3201 West Front, Midland.

Prosecutor holds up charred remains of black tourist's shirt

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A prosecutor held up the charred tatters of Christopher Wilson's shirt Monday and described how the black tourist ran screaming in flames after he was doused with gasoline.

"This is a case about the horror of burning flesh," State Attorney Harry Lee Coe said during closing arguments in the trial of two white men accused of abducting Wilson on New Year's Day and setting him on fire.

"This case is about men who have no regard for human life."

As Coe played to the emotions of the jury, a lawyer for one of the defendants urged jurors to set aside their sympathy and "decide the case on the facts."

After nine days of testimony, the jury of five whites and one black got the case late Monday afternoon.

Jurors sent Circuit Judge Donald C. Evans a note after about 3½ hours of deliberations. The contents weren't disclosed; Evans said he would address the note this morning and he dismissed the panel for the night.

Evans said earlier he would delay announcing a verdict for at least an hour, but he didn't say why.

Wilson, 32, a stock brokerage clerk from New York City, suffered burns over nearly 40 percent of his body. He was abducted as he attempted to buy a newspaper at a shopping plaza, then forced at gunpoint to drive to a remote field where he was showered with gasoline and burned.

Wilson took the stand last week to identify Mark Kohut, 27, and Charles Rourk, 33, as his attackers. He described Rourk as "the mean one" who barked racial slurs during the abduction near Tampa, forced him to drive to a remote field and poured gasoline over him.

Kohut, he said, was "the one with bright eyes" who spoke little during the ordeal.

If convicted on charges of attempted murder, kidnapping and robbery, Kohut and Rourk could face life in prison.

"There's no doubt Christopher Wilson had the most horrendous act done to him . . . and our hearts go out to him," said Julianne Holt, Kohut's attorney. "But you must set aside that sympathy and decide the case on the facts.

"That does not say to Christopher Wilson we don't care. What it says is you heard the facts and they just weren't there," she said.

Ms. Holt said there were no finger prints, hairs, fibers or any other physical evidence tying the men to the scene.

A key prosecution witness, 18-year-old Jeffery Pellett, was originally charged in the attack and struck a deal to testify against his friends. He admitted on the stand he had changed his story several times and would lie to protect his own interests.

The prosecutor said the lack of physical evidence alone doesn't mean the two day laborers did or did not commit the crime.

He said Pellett's testimony, no matter how inconsistent, is bolstered by his detailed knowledge of the crime and the corroborating testimony of witnesses who saw men fitting the descriptions of Kohut and Rourk around the shopping plaza where Wilson was abducted.

Study: Educating girls will improve Third World's future

WASHINGTON (AP) — Educating girls as well as boys may be the best investment developing countries can make in their futures, according to a new study by the World Bank.

Women with even an elementary education raise the living standard in a poor country, argues Elizabeth M. King, one of the study's authors. They have fewer children, take better care of those they do have, work better at home and earn more when they take a job or market their own crops, she said.

"Education of girls may seem an odd subject for an economist to address," said former World Bank official Lawrence H. Summers, who is undersecretary of the Treasury for international affairs. "But enhancing women's contribution to development is as much an economic as a social issue."

Summers, former chief economist at the World Bank, wrote the foreword to the study, called "Women's Education in Developing Countries: Barriers, Benefits and Policies." The World Bank, owned by 176 countries, is the largest source of aid loans to the Third World. The United States is the biggest stockholder.

There are obstacles in many countries to a girl's getting into school and staying there, Ms. King said in an interview.

She quoted the headmistress of a girl's school in Pakistan:

"There's no light, no fan. It is very depressing and dreary and suffocating. . . . There is no toilet. When they need a latrine, the girls have to go home during school hours, wasting a considerable amount of time."

Many parents feel they cannot afford the cost of sending a girl to school, Ms. King said. In some countries, the smallest girls — often as young as 5 — are expected to help their mothers, much more than boys.

The study takes a look at the education of 18-year-olds in some poor and some richer countries.

A million times we've needed you,
A million times we've cried.
If loving could have saved you
You never would have died.
For reasons we can't understand,
God told you to sleep on.
He took our ray of sunshine,
And left us so alone.
It broke our hearts to lose you,
But you did not go alone.

...In Other Words, SHOW OFF YOUR Grandchild In Our Upcoming

1993 GRANDPARENT'S BRAG BOOK!

To Be Published In Honor Of

National Grandparents Day, Sunday, Sept. 12, 1993

Here's How:

Send a photo (b&w or color) of your grandchild or grandchildren in care of this newspaper before (September 9th). On back of photo be sure to include grandchild's name and date of birth, grandparents name(s) and a phone number where you can be reached. Please make your check or money order payable to Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Just $20.00 per photo buys a keepsake that you will cherish for a lifetime!

Parents-

Send us a photo of your child and give Grandma and Grandpa a big surprise with their very own copy of Grandparent's Brag Book.
