Iran 'deal' spurs probe

Possible '80 hostage-release delay at issue

FBI checks timing of Silverado seizure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department asked the FBI last fall to investigate allegations that regulators delayed until after Election Day 1988 their closing of a Colorado savings and loan where President Bush's son Neil was a director, documents show.

An FBI spokesman confirmed on Monday that the agency has been investigating Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan Association for more than a year, but he declined to say whether the effort covers charges of pressure to delay Silverado's closing.

The Treasury Department's inspector general, who started the investigation into the savings and loan in June 1990, referred the matter to the FBI last October, letters

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Democratic congressional leaders Monday ordered an investigation into whether senior Reagan-Bush campaign officials tried to delay the release of American hostages in Iran as part of their strategy to defeat incumbent Jimmy Carter in the 1980 presidential election.

The order from House Speaker Tom Foley and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell led immediately to charges from Republicans that the real intent of the investigation is to undermine President Bush's 1992 reelection campaign.

In a joint statement, however, Foley and Mitchell said they accepted Bush's word that he had no knowledge of any attempt by Rea-

Ann Richards scores high in new survey

■ Approval rating is highest of any governor since Texas Poll began.

By R.G. Ratcliffe

AUSTIN — Texans like the job Gov. Ann Richards has done during her first six months in office and feel personally warm toward her, according to The Texas Poll.

Richards' approval rating of 55 percent is the highest any Texas governor has received since The Texas Poll began asking the state's populace for its opinion in 1984. The poll also shows Texans believe Richards is a smart, caring, strong leader who is willing to do what is right even if unpopular.

Among the Republicans polled, Richards received a 47 percent approval rating.

"It says Ann is doing one hell of a good job with as many controversial issues that she's taken a stand on," said Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle. "The public's glad to have a governor who speaks definitively but reasonably about things."

Republican Party Chairman Fred Meyer said Richards adopted Republican positions on efficiency and cost-effective-

Election to sort tax exemption benefits issues

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

While certain exemptions in Saturday's election could benefit some faction of Midlanders, others may have to pick up the tab, officials say.

The ballot in Saturday's joint Constitutional/County Education District election will feature two constitutional amendments and three CED propositions.

At stake is whether taxpayers will get additional exemptions on their school property taxes.

Voters will be asked if they want to give the new County Education Districts (CEDs) the authority to allow exemptions. The CEDs were formed as part of reform of the state school-funding

Commissioners weigh '91-'92 budget cuts

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Taxpayers' woes may be less harsh, but not erased, when the Midland County Commissioners' Court gets through cutting the proposed 1991-92 fiscal year budget, which is about $2.5 million over projected revenues from taxes, fines and fees.

Higher county taxes are guaranteed as surely as cuts in departmental budgets, particularly the sheriff's, according to officials.

"I am not unsympathetic to the plight of the taxpayer," said Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer, the county's chief budgetary officer. "But we have a duty to supply services and personnel to do certain jobs."

Some county jobs, including the sheriff's, are constitutionally mandated and must be funded.

But by how much is the decision to be made by the judge and four commissioners — Durward Wright, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and Win Brown.

In its budget study, the Commissioners' Court is weighing the anticipated in-

Swaggart

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The wife of the Rev. Marvin Gorman testified Monday that they enjoyed "a great sexual life" and she forgave him for his indiscretions.

Virginia Gorman took the stand after sitting in the audience for nearly a month listening to testimony that included allegations her husband had ongoing affairs by 1987 with more than 100 women.

Gorman came to trial with a $90 million defamation suit against rival television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart.

Swaggart has been accused of spreading false accusations about Gorman's sex life to get rid of a rival who was a big competitor in the television ratings war.

Mrs. Gorman, 56, testified that on July 15, 1986, her husband confessed that he had been involved in an affair with a church worker, Linda Savage, wife of another Assembly of God minister.

"I was very shocked, very disappointed but yet I knew I still loved him," she said.

"Did you forgive him?" asked Tom Frazier, one of Gorman's attorneys.

MIAs: Uncertainty about fate of loved ones haunts Texans

By Dave Montgomery
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — On Mother's Day in 1968, as the war raged in Vietnam, a uniformed man arrived at the home of Johnnie and Cordia Widner in Graham, Texas, with a heart-stopping message: Their son was missing in combat.

Twenty-three years later, Sgt. Danny Widner is still missing. And for Cordia Widner, now 77, each Mother's Day resurrects the same questions she has asked year after year.

"I wonder if next Mother's Day whether I'll know what happened to him or whether he's still alive," said the gray-haired mother of seven. "My husband's 85, and he'd sure like to see him before he dies."

The uncertainty that has haunted the Widners for more than two decades is felt in scores of other Texas homes, exacerbated by renewed debate over whether Americans are Twisting Twain?

BERKELEY, Calif. — Scholars of the Mark Twain Papers at the University of California have for years been hunting for the sources of quips credited to Mark Twain. But so far, they have only come up with a long list of what Twain might not have said. They include:

■ "When I feel the urge to exercise, I lie down until it passes away."

■ "Giving up smoking is easy. I've done it hundreds of times."

■ "Don't go to sleep, so many people die there."

■ "I became a newspaperman. I hated to do it, but I couldn't find honest employment."

■ "There's nothing so annoying as to have two people go right on talking when you're interrupting."

Financial terms of the settlement with the Globe weren't disclosed. Selleck filed his Superior Court lawsuit against the publication after the article appeared in the July 2 issue. "Let me make this crystal clear," Selleck said. "I have a wife and daughter. I was married once before and raised a son. PROBE: Congress orders inquiry on '80 campaign gan-Bush campaign officials to delay the hostage release until after the 1980 election.

Foley, responding to reporters' questions following his announcement with Mitchell, reiterated that politics played no part in his decision to authorize the House investigation.

"If it were political we would have started this earlier and had certainly less than reluctance to undertake it," he said. "It's not political in any way."

But House Minority Leader Robert Michel of Illinois labeled the investigation "political shenanigans" and suggested that with Bush preparing for a reelection campaign next year, Foley had been "pushed into having to do it."

Michel said he tried to persuade Foley not to order an investigation, warning him that an expensive probe which produces no new evidence could have negative political consequences for Democrats.

"There's nothing there and the people back home don't give two hoots about it, what happened 10 years ago," Michel said. "Jimmy Carter lost the election. . . . It's just ridiculous."

In their statement, Foley and Mitchell acknowledged that there is "no conclusive evidence of wrongdoing" by 1980 Reagan-Bush campaign officials. But they insisted that "the seriousness of the allegations and the weight of circumstantial information compel an effort to establish the facts."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater responded to the announcement by saying: "The president's always said that if there's legitimate evidence, and real reasons for an investigation, then they ought to get to the bottom of it. If it's just what you call a witch hunt of some kind, then it's foolish."

To avoid charges of a witch hunt, Foley has suggested that witnesses be interviewed privately before determining whether to hold public hearings.

The House investigation will be headed by Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., the Senate's by Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C. Although they will operate separately, the two committees plan to coordinate their efforts.

The congressional committees will build on the work of General Accounting Office (GAO) investigators who have spent nearly six months looking into the allegations.

The GAO inquiry, which Foley called "inconclusive," ended abruptly because the Secret Service declined to provide any information until the GAO publicly disclosed which member of Congress had requested its inquiry.

Rumors of a secret deal between Reagan-Bush campaign officials and representatives of Iran have circulated ever since Ronald Reagan's landslide victory over Carter in the 1980 election.

They were fueled largely by the timing of the release of the 52 Americans captured by Iranian militants who had seized the U.S. embassy in Tehran on Nov. 4, 1979: They were freed just minutes after Reagan was sworn in as president on Jan. 20, 1981.

SILVERADO: Did government delay closing S&L?

obtained under a Freedom of Information Act request show. The Denver-based financial institution was seized by regulators in December 1988, and its failure is expected to cost taxpayers about $1 billion.

Treasury spokeswoman Claire Buchan said Monday that between June and October last year the department "talked with the FBI and held a series of meetings to determine what would be the appropriate way to handle it."

Government agencies usually refer matters to the FBI if they suspect criminal activity.

A Treasury spokesman said last September that the agency had an investigation under way into the alleged delay of Silverado's closing. But Buchan said Monday that Treasury didn't investigate the matter. She said Treasury merely referred it to the FBI because that agency also was investigating Silverado.

In a June 1990 hearing, a former federal thrift regulator told the House Banking Committee that his superiors in Washington had ordered him in October 1988 to wait for two months before closing Silverado. Kermit Mowbray, former president of the now-defunct Federal Home Loan Bank Board in Topeka, Kan., testified under oath that his bosses ordered the delay despite a recommendation by field supervisors that Silverado be seized in October.

At the time, Neil Bush's father, then vice president, was making his successful run for the presidency.

The statements by Mowbray, who was the top S&L regulator for the four-state region that includes Colorado, led to an investigation by Treasury's inspector general, Donald E. Kirkendall.

Mowbray later said he did not recall who among his superiors had told him to postpone Silverado's shutdown. Mowbray could not be reached for comment Monday.

Last October, Kirkendall wrote William J. Esposito, chief of the FBI's White-Collar Crimes Section that "I have closed the Office of Inspector General case on this matter and referred it to you."

"We are interested in determining whether any employee or employees of the (Federal Home Loan Bank Board) delayed the decision to close Silverado. We would appreciate it if you could keep us advised as the case progresses."

Kirkendall also told Timothy Ryan, director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, that he had asked the FBI to include Mowbray's allegations in its inquiry.

FBI spokesman Stephen Markardt said Monday, "We're looking at Silverado in the same context we are looking at all the other (failed) savings and loans."

"At this point, there have been no indictments," he said. "There have been no individuals targeted at this point."

Markardt declined further comment.

CUTS: County considers budgetary requests

coming revenue — about $17.3 million — against the county's total budgetary requests, up to $20 million, from the various departments.

Of all departments, the sheriff wants the most, about $5.25 million to fund his 12-month budget beginning Oct. 1. He commands the most manpower, almost 160 men and women, out of the county's almost 400-strong workforce, and has the most vehicles, 61, out of the county's fleet of 116, cars, pickups, vans and trucks.

Without cuts and without an increase in the 18-cent-per-$100 valuation tax rate, the county is ensured of a $2.4 million to $2.7 million shortfall.

Of the county's $17.3 million in projected income, $6.63 million is from the taxpayers by way of property taxes, $5.8 million is funded by the sales tax, and $4.89 million comes fines, fees and other sources.

"Our current revenue requests from all our agencies and department heads are currently running $2.4 million to $2.7 million more than our projected total revenues, which is $17.3 million," Seltzer said.

By law, the county is required to maintain a balanced budget.

And to make the income and outflow match, the judge and commissioners are considering raising taxes and cutting departmental budgets.

Were the Commissioners' Court to increase taxes to the rollback cutoff, 20.588 cents per $100 valuation from 18 cents, tax revenues would be increased by almost $1 million, $953,269, Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield noted in a report to the Commissioners' Court.

Were that done, the shortfall would drop to $1.5 million or $1.8 million.

And to cut that out, the Commissioners' Court necessarily would have to trim budgets proposed by the county's department heads.

"There are going to have to be cuts from the requests," Seltzer said. "There are no easy places to cut. We have got to prioritize and make budgetary adjustments."

And, he added, those departments that employ the most people, which field the largest fleet of "rolling stock" vehicles, and which maintain the largest percentage of the county's total budget, "are going to be looked at first," Seltzer said.

Sheriff Gary Painter's department is on top of the list.

"The largest number of personnel, the largest number of vehicles, and largest percentage of the budget is the MSO," Seltzer said of the Sheriff Office.

"It's the largest, most obvious target," he said. "That's where the biggest share of the pie is."

Proposed budgets of other departments will be cut, too, Seltzer said.

While the sheriff does maintain the county's largest department, he also takes in some substantial woes and problems, shared by the Commissioners' Court. Those include housing Texas prisoners at the county's expense due to the overcrowded conditions of Institutional Division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice, the old Texas Department of Corrections.

In doing so, Midland County jail space is taken away from federal prisoners. And housing federal prisoners is profitable. Lodging 96 such prisoners on a regular basis per year would bring in about $1.4 million a year.

"We are losing about $1 million a year in revenue from federal prisoners," the judge said. Meanwhile, the county is losing money by being forced to keep state prisoners, who have no place else to go until their "time" is served, and they are released.

And, in cutting the sheriff's budget, the Commissioners' Court may be confronted by criticism from the public and from the ranks of the sheriff's personnel.

Nevertheless, Seltzer said, he and the commissioners "have got to make these hard decisions."

"We can tell him (the sheriff) that his total payroll is 'X,' and he is going to have to fit that total payroll into his manpower structure," Seltzer said. "I'm certain there will be an appeal. There is no legal appeal. He will make his appeal to the public. The hue and cry will be that we are leaving the public of Midland County unprotected" or that county government does not fully support law enforcement.

"There is no way you could say that this (Commissioners') Court is soft on crime or is anti-law enforcement," Seltzer said. Since January 1985, when Painter took office, his budget has increased almost exponentially, Seltzer said.

SURVEY: Richards gets high marks in state poll

ness in government, which resulted in her popularity.

"She has embraced it (the Republican position) and that is the popular position in Texas," Meyer said. "And the people of Texas do want the growth in government to slow down."

The high mark for former Democratic Gov. Mark White was 46 percent approval in the spring of 1985. His approval rating as he left office in 1987 was 42 percent. No poll was conducted during White's first six months in office, and the polls on White were after he signed the first major tax bill in more than a decade.

The high point for former Republican Gov. Bill Clements during his second term in office occurred almost immediately after his swearing-in in 1987, with 36 percent rating him positively.

After revelations about Clements' role in the pay-for-play football scandal at Southern Methodist University and a special session debate on taxes, Clements' approval rating dropped to a low of 22 percent. By the time the last approval rating of Clements was done in early 1989, he had rebounded to 35 percent approving of his work as governor.

For Richards, her approval rating is up slightly from the 52 percent she received shortly after taking office. However, also up is her disapproval rating, from 29 percent in January to 36 percent in the current poll.

Sixty-four percent of all those polled said they feel warmly about Richards. Of those polled, 73 percent said they believe Richards understands complex issues; 70 percent said she provides strong leadership; and 65 percent said she cares about people.

But while 68 percent said they believe Richards is willing to do what is right even if unpopular, only 52 percent said they agree with her position on the state budget.

About 44 percent said they agree with Richards desire to make state agencies directly accountable to the governor rather than to boards appointed by the governor.

TRIAL: Wife forgives Gorman for indiscretions, she says

(From 1A)

"Yes, sir."

Throughout her marriage even up to today, "we've had a caring relationship and a great sexual life," she said.

Swaggart's attorney, Denise Pilie, asked Mrs. Gorman if she forgave him for still another indiscretion with Lynette Goux, once a worker in the church.

"Yes."

During her testimony, Swaggart and Gorman sat at opposite ends of the front row in state district court. Both almost constantly fidgeted, either their legs or feet twitching or their fingers tapping.

Gorman filed suit against Swaggart in 1987, claiming that the Baton Rouge evangelist and close associates schemed to destroy Gorman's budding New Orleans-based TV ministry with false stories of multiple adulterous affairs, demon possession and Mafia connections.

Gorman resigned as pastor of the First Assembly of God Church in New Orleans in 1986 after admitting to one adulterous affair.

In 1988, Gorman provided pictures of Swaggart with a New Orleans prostitute that led to Swaggart's ouster from the Assemblies of God, the nation's largest Pentecostal denomination.

Earlier in the trial, missionary Roger Myers testified that he was told by a Swaggart Ministries official that Gorman "had ongoing affairs with more than 100 women and they had come forward to Jimmy Swaggart confessing."

Before Mrs. Gorman took the stand, an Assemblies of God churchgoer testified that she attended the exorcism of a woman who spoke in a strange voice that identified itself as Gorman.

The voice that came from the woman threatened to bring down the Assemblies of God church, Ruth Turner of New Orleans said. Turner said the woman, identified as Rosary, was exorcised in September 1986 at the Canal Street Assembly of God Church in New Orleans.

Hunter Lundy, another Gorman attorney, was trying to show that the Canal Street church's pastor, the Rev. Tom Miller, was part of a conspiracy with Swaggart to bring down Gorman.

Lundy asked Turner if Miller had told her that the Devil was speaking through Gorman in the exorcised woman's body. But Swaggart's attorneys objected.

"Did that voice (in the possessed woman) identify itself as Marvin Gorman?" asked Lundy.

"Yes," she said, but added that voice did not sound like Gorman.

"What did the voice sound like?" Lundy asked.

"Hideous," Turner said.

"Did that voice say, 'I'm going to destroy the Assembly of God and all you Christians,'" Lundy asked.

"Yes," she replied.

"Was it Marvin Gorman's voice?"

"No, sir."

ELECTION: Ballot features two amendments

system.

The Andrews-Midland CED — which includes Midland, Greenwood and Andrews school districts — will collect and assess its own taxes.

The exemptions will not effect exemptions and freezes already in place.

State law already requires school districts to grant a $5,000 homestead exemption for homeowners and a $10,000 exemption for those who are disabled or are 65 or older.

The first amendment allows voters to make decisions concerning the three exemption propositions. Voting against the first amendment will turn decisions over to the Andrews-Midland CED.

The most controversial proposition (Proposition No. 1 on Midland and Andrews County ballots) would tax personal property, including automobiles, recreational vehicles and airplanes.

Voting against the first constitutional amendment will nullify voting against Proposition No. 1 since the first amendment gives voters the authority to decide on the exemptions which are included in the three propositions.

Proposition No. 2 calls for "the exemption of $10,000 of the market value of the residence homestead of an individual who is disabled and of $10,000 of the market value of the residence homestead of an individual who is 65 or older."

Proposition No. 3 calls for "the exemption of 20 percent of the market value of the residence homestead from ad valorem taxation."

The exemptions would lower the value of property that will be taxed by the county districts.

This would reduce the amount of tax on the property, resulting in a higher tax rate to produce the same amount of revenue, according to sources at the Legislative Education Board in Austin.

The members of the Andrews-Midland County Education District may have to set the tax rate higher than the minimum 72 cents per $100 valuation mandated by the state to recoup lost property value if the exemptions pass.

"The key thing to remember is that 72 cents is a hard number the state says you have to use," said Ron Steagall, chief appraiser for Midland County Central Appraisal District.

Steagall said the state-mandated 72 cents does not take into account local homestead options.

Steagall said the tax may need to be raised to at least 77 cents to recoup exemptions.

Also, if homeowners receive additional exemptions, the tax burden will shift to businesses and minerals in Midland.

Steagall notes that the propositions on the Aug. 10 ballot won't effect homestead exemptions already in place.

J. Kenneth Huff, chairman of the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), said, "It is important that voters realize that on Aug. 10 they will be concerned with both a statewide constitutional ballot and a school-districtwide referendum on exemptions and personal property taxes."

"Amendment 1 on the statewide constitutional referendum must pass or the votes cast in district balloting on tax exemptions will be meaningless," Huff added.

Early (absentee) voting ends today at the elections office, 709 W. Washington. Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Saturday. For more voting information, call 688-1222.

Elaborate effort to adjust census adds up to ambiguity

By Peter Passell
N.Y. Times News Service

■ News analysis

Most experts agree that the 1990 census failed to ferret out about 4 million to 5 million Americans, a disproportionate number of them probably black, Hispanic, or Asian. Most also agree that the Census Bureau's statistical fix would better reflect the nation's total population. But they are deeply divided on the critical question of whether the adjustment would provide more accurate — and fairer — counts for individual cities and congressional districts.

Judging the case for adjustment to be "inconclusive and unconvincing," Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher declined on July 15 to "abandon a 200-year-old tradition of how we actually count people." But Mosbacher's words will certainly not be the last on an issue that mixes race and money with a dollop of partisan politics.

New York City is challenging his decision in federal court, and parallel suits have been filed in Georgia and Illinois. Unfortunately, the experts that the plaintiffs and the Commerce Department will be calling on for support will not be able to lean too heavily on science.

For while statisticians had high hopes for straightforward answers as to whether the adjustment would be an improvement, they have instead found disappointingly ambiguous results, because of the sheer complexity of the adjustment process. What began as an attempt to clear the air has further clouded it.

David Freedman, a statistician at the University of California, at Berkeley, said that the Census Bureau did a better job of enumeration in the actual 1990 census than anyone might reasonably expect. In just one year, the bureau hired and trained about 500,000 temporary employees — more than the workforce of General Motors. And by independent analysis based on birth, death, and immigration records, just 2 percent of the population escaped the bureau's dragnet — half the rate of undercount that marred the 1960 census.

But for some purposes, a good job may not be good enough. According to the Census Bureau's own demographic analysis, the percentage undercount of blacks has been 3 to 4 times as large as nonblacks in the last three censuses. And it has been widely assumed that the effects of the undercount have been magnified in big cities, where non-whites represent a larger fraction of the population.

MIAs: Issue strikes especially deep in Texas

still alive in Southeast Asia.

President Bush weighed in on the issue late last week by promising to "go the extra mile" to find missing Americans, although he said there is no hard evidence that any are still alive. A Senate committee has called for a congressional inquiry on the subject.

The issue strikes especially deep in Texas, which is second only to California in the number of servicemen still unaccounted for from the Indochina conflict. Texas has 146 and California 227.

Some of the families resent the latest wave of publicity and are quick to point out that they were struggling for answers about missing servicemen at a time when most Americans had turned away.

"The press wrote us off as a bunch of kooks," said Rosemary Jersak of Arlington, Texas, state coordinator for the National League of Families, which was formed in the 1970s to galvanize support for missing servicemen and prisoners of war.

Many of the families believe that U.S. servicemen — including their own — may still be alive somewhere in the jungles of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. And in carrying out their emotional search — whether for remains or live men — they have plowed through Pentagon documents, pressured the White House and Congress, and become experts in arcane military terminology.

Some regard the government as a helpful ally. Others consider it an enemy that has blocked information. But nearly all say they will press on until the Vietnamese return their missing men — alive or dead.

Here is a look at the cases of missing Texas servicemen and what their families hope to achieve:

Maj. Edward M. Hudgens, Arlington:

For years, Doug Hudgens has stalked a paper trail of cryptic military reports for every detail about the flight of Sandy 06, a prop-driven A-1 Skyraider that went down with his father on March 21, 1970.

The 31-year-old Arlington theater manager has little hope of finding his father alive. But he desperately wants U.S. officials to locate the wreckage of Sandy 06 and return the pilot's remains for a proper military burial.

"I want my dad back," Hudgens said. "It's the least this country can do for someone who made the ultimate sacrifice."

His father, Air Force Maj. Edward M. Hudgens, was flying his 113th mission when the plane was hit by enemy gunfire, spun to earth and crashed. A pilot in a nearby plane radioed Hudgens to "get out," but there was no answer. Search planes found no signs of life.

Nevertheless, his son and other family members are as relentless in their efforts to retrieve Hudgens' remains as are other families who chase clues that their servicemen may still be alive.

"I was an Army captain," the younger Hudgens explained. "And one of the things I believed is you get a round-trip ticket. You might come back in a body bag, but this country should do everything possible to get you back."

Hudgens, who was 10 when his father disappeared, is the family point man for news about the missing flier. In that role, he has sifted through dozens of reports, befriended U.S. officials charged with hunting the remains of missing servicemen and endured countless disappointments over false leads.

The most arduous experience came in 1989 after he was notified that Dr. Michael Charney, a controversial pathologist who works with POW activists, had identified a set of bones as those of an "Edward Hutchins." Military forensic experts later dismissed the findings.

Hudgens said the bones apparently were obtained by a Laotian with known drug connections and turned over to a group of POW activists in the United States. At one point, they made their way to a congressman, who in turn shipped them by Federal Express to government analysts.

"That is gross," Hudgens said. "How would you like to have your dad Fed-Exed across the country."

The origin of the bones was never determined, but Hudgens said the experience heightened his distrust of "flake groups" and increased his faith in government efforts to retrieve and identify remains. U.S. officials are methodically looking for crash sites in the Laotian jungles, he said, and may be close to finding the wreckage of Sandy 06.

Hudgens believes that Americans could still be alive in Southeast Asia — but probably not his father.

"In a way, I'm glad it's not my dad," he said. "It's . . . years of captivity — that's a scary thought."

Capt. Michael Marker, Wichita Falls:

Kay Marker braced for the worst when she opened the door of her Wichita Falls home in March 1971 and saw two grim-faced military men.

"When you open the door to two uniformed men when your husband's in Vietnam, you know exactly what they're going to tell you," she recalled. "All I remember are the words, "is missing.'"

Army Capt. Michael Marker, a college sweetheart whom she had married four years earlier, had gone down while flying his JU-21A on a classified mission, the men told her. Within 90 days, he was listed as "killed in action — body not recovered."

For Kay Marker, it was the beginning of a frustrating 20-year battle with the government while struggling on her own as an Army widow and the mother of two.

Along the way, she was struck with further tragedy — the 1988 death of her 18-year-old daughter, who was found to have leukemia less than two years after Michael Marker was reported missing.

"This wasn't how I imagined my life," the 46-year-old airline reservation agent said last week from her home in San Antonio, where she moved to obtain advanced medical treatment for her daughter. "This is not how I had written the script."

Marker removed her wedding ring and presumed herself a widow a few months after her husband was reported missing. But she still harbors a slim hope that he may be alive, and she is furious at the government for giving conflicting and incomplete information about her husband's case.

She has written to the president, members of Congress and "anyone who will listen" to get a full accounting. Thus far, said Marker, she has more questions than answers.

"It's been 20 years of not knowing," she said. "Twenty years of battling a government that refuses to give accurate information."

Col. William L. Brooks, Tolar:

Karen Brooks Folger began searching for her father when she was 8 years old — the day he was reported missing. Twenty-one years later, she is still searching.

"I can't put this to rest," said the 29-year-old Abilene homemaker. "There's a strong possibility he could still be alive."

Col. William L. Brooks, who grew up in Tolar outside Fort Worth, was declared missing in action on April 22, 1970, when his AC-130 gunship was shot down over Laos.

One crew member was rescued and several electronic radio beacons were heard from the ground, suggesting that there may have been other survivors. U.S. officials never located the crash site or the remains of other crew members.

For more than two decades, these sketchy details have fueled the Brooks family's hopes that the Air Force pilot is still out there somewhere in the jungles of Laos.

In the 1970s, the family bought space on a billboard between Dallas and Fort Worth describing Brooks' case. The pilot's mother, Oleta Brooks, was a pioneer activist in the POW-MIA issue and often took her granddaughter to rallies in downtown Fort Worth.

Folger also would assist her grandmother by passing out petitions and bumper stickers to draw attention to the missing pilot and other servicemen unaccounted for in Southeast Asia.

"We've continued on this path forever," said Folger, who still is haunted by nightmares that began shortly after her father's disappearance. "This is agonizing for us."

The uncertainty of not knowing whether Brooks is alive or dead has been especially hard on her mother, Folger said.

"She's torn up. She lives in the same house. She has no interest in ever remarrying.

"My father may not be the one alive over there, but I do have a right to know if he died and how he died," Folger said.

Georgia ties to BCCI include top politicians

ATLANTA (AP) — A seemingly obscure piece of legislation and the international interests of Jimmy Carter, Bert Lance and Andrew Young helped draw Georgia into the Bank of Credit and Commerce International scandal.

A federal grand jury in Atlanta is reportedly examining a 1987 bill in the General Assembly that allowed a BCCI-controlled company to buy a major Georgia bank. The scandal has even focused attention on charitable donations to the Atlanta-based Carter Center.

Amid complaints of "guilt by association," many prominent Georgians say they have had only arms-length relationships with BCCI. They say they were unaware until recent news reports of any wrongdoing on the part of the Luxembourg-based bank now linked to money laundering, arms sales and other unlawful acts.

"Anybody who knows me ... knows that I would not deal with anybody with a criminal purpose," said Lance, a former federal budget director.

The bank's operations were shut down by regulators in the United States and seven other countries July 5. The bank has been indicted by a state grand jury in New York on charges of bribery and fraud.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said federal grand jury investigations of BCCI are under way in Tampa, Fla., Miami, Washington and Atlanta.

Federal officials have said the 1977 purchase of Lance's National Bank of Georgia by Saudi businessman Ghaith Pharaon helped BCCI make its initial penetration into the U.S. market.

An investigative report issued last week by the Federal Reserve Bank said that Pharaon, a key BCCI stockholder who has had a range of Georgia interests, acted as a front for BCCI in that deal. It said half of his investment in the Georgia bank was actually controlled by BCCI.

Pharaon sold the Georgia Bank in 1987 to First American Bankshares Inc., a Washington-based holding company that authorities say was secretly controlled by BCCI.

Investigators have been looking into a bill that easily passed the Legislature that year, clearing the way for the sale of National Bank of Georgia by expanding the Southeast region in which Georgia banks are permitted to do business.

Robert Moler, a former state banking official, said he was interviewed by a New York district attorney's investigator who seemed interested in the possibility that huge sums of money were spent lobbying for the bill.

But Moler and legislators recall the bill, proposed by the National Bank of Georgia, was unopposed by other state banks and thus no hard sell was necessary to get it passed.

State Sen. Culver Kidd, who introduced the bill, said he acted after the state banking department reviewed the proposed legislation and found nothing wrong with it.

Democratic Sen. Loyce W. Turner, the current banking committee chairman, said he recalled no intensive lobbying for the bill. "If anything like that was going on it wasn't brought to my attention."

Mother of Dahmer victim sues city

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A woman whose son was slain after police questioned but didn't arrest Jeffrey Dahmer sued the city for $3 million Monday, alleging the officers were discriminatory and failed to stop a killing spree.

Three officers were suspended July 26 for failing to intervene when a 14-year-old naked and bleeding Laotian boy was found stumbling outside Dahmer's apartment on May 27.

Black neighbors pleaded that the boy, Konerak Sinthasomphone, needed help but police concluded he was Dahmer's homosexual lover and an adult, and they returned him to Dahmer's apartment.

The boy's remains was among 11 dismembered bodies discovered July 22 in the apartment. Dahmer has confessed to killing 17 people since 1978, including the boy and at least four other people after him, authorities said.

Catherine Lacy filed a federal lawsuit alleging that her 23-year-old son, Oliver, was killed by Dahmer on or about July 14 and that police could have prevented the slaying.

A criminal complaint against Dahmer alleges he lured Lacy to his apartment, strangled him, had sex with him after death, dismembered his body and cut out his heart "to eat later."

The lawsuit alleges that officers didn't thoroughly investigate the incident in May because the victim was Laotian and the complainants were black. Two officers entered Dahmer's apartment but noticed nothing unusual.

"There was racial animus," said Attorney David E. Wittenberg, who is representing Mrs. Lacy.

"If this boy had been white there is a high probability there would have been a more thorough investigation and Mr. Dahmer would have been taken off the streets, not left out there to sacrifice people," he said.

The lawsuit names as defendants the city of Milwaukee and the three officers, whose names haven't been released.

City Attorney Grant Langley said he hadn't seen the lawsuit and couldn't immediately comment.

Police Chief Philip Arreola was attending a city council meeting Monday during which he said: "Our officers didn't murder anybody."

"The police department is not responsible for Jeffrey Dahmer," Arreola said. He wasn't addressing the lawsuit but making a request for more officers in his department.

Police recordings released last week showed the officers dismissed statements from neighbors that the boy was bleeding, had been molested and was endangered.

In Washington, meanwhile, the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson urged Attorney General Dick Thornburgh to open a Justice Department investigation of the murders and the failure of Milwaukee police to stop the spree.

Thornburgh later issued a statement saying that while "these brutal crimes are a shock to all of us ... there appears to be no federal criminal jurisdiction."

The attorney general noted that the Justice Department's community relations service had sent a representative to Milwaukee to help defuse racial tension that has heightened since the killings were disclosed.

Thornburgh said the FBI would continue to help local police pursue out-of-state leads and conduct laboratory tests.

Defense lobbyists adopt aggressive tactics

WASHINGTON (AP) — At a Washington hotel in May, the Northrop Corp. summoned the top executives of 100 companies that supply parts and services to the B-2 Stealth bomber for an extraordinary war council.

Congress was again threatening to cancel the bat-winged plane and its $865-million-a-copy price tag, and Northrop and its suppliers needed to fight back or face financial ruin.

Senior Air Force officials wheeled out charts showing that eight radar-evading F-117's were able to accomplish the same mission in the Persian Gulf war that it took 60 conventional warplanes to do.

Even better, no F-117's were hit by Iraqi fire. Now imagine two larger, stealthier B-2's, the officials said, that could do the job of eight F-117's.

"Stealth saves lives," Northrop's chairman, Kent Kresa, said.

With this rallying cry ringing in their ears, the executives fanned out across Washington to lobby their lawmakers and then returned home to urge their employees to do the same in a full-court press on the fate of the B-2, a heated and pivotal issue in the current congressional battle over how to cut the military budget.

The nation's military contractors and their lobbyists, under intense pressure from sharply shrinking Pentagon budgets and the collapse of cold-war tensions, have developed new and in some ways more aggressive strategies than ever to tailor their tactics to the changing times and to preserve as much as they can of their multibillion-dollar industry.

They are seizing on another stalwart of the gulf war, the Scud-busting Patriot antimissile missile, as a justification for reviving "Star Wars," the vast antimissile defense system first proposed by Ronald Reagan in 1983.

Some companies have increased their lobbying staffs in Washington or have decided to relocate their headquarters there to be nearer the decision makers. They are enlisting help from all quarters — local Chambers of Commerce, churches, school boards and unions.

They have taken to criticizing competing contractors' weapons or programs — long a taboo — and when this has not worked, these old archenemies have been teaming up to lobby together and share contracts.

Nevertheless, it is a fact that about 12 percent has already been cut from the Pentagon budget in the last five years, and an additional 25 percent — or more — seems destined to go by the mid-1990s.

Day in orbit provides eye-opening experience

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Atlantis' astronauts logged their fourth day in orbit Monday by testing futuristic spaceship technology and conducting a real eye-opening experiment — inserting eyedrops in space.

James Adamson squirted eyedrops into his right eye, then left. A middeck camera zoomed in on each wet eye.

"It turns out it's pretty easy," Adamson said, blinking and wiping away tears. "You get a little bit around somewhere, but ... it works OK."

"Anything for science, right?" Mission Control's Jan Davis asked.

"Anything at all," Adamson replied.

Liquid forms into little floating beads in weightlessness. A NASA optometrist wanted to see how eyedrops would work and asked the crew to tape the event on video.

In addition to magnified pictures of Adamson's eyes, the crew of four men and one woman beamed back video images of an even bigger eye, that of Hurricane Fefa, located over the Pacific Ocean east of Hawaii.

There were other striking views of the planet 184 miles below — clear skies over the Sinai peninsula, black smoke rising from burning Kuwaiti oil fields, wispy flecks of clouds over Indonesia, hazy patches over western Australia.

"This planet is an absolutely beautiful place. When you're up here looking down on it, you really realize that," said shuttle commander John Blaha. "We sure need to take care of it."

After testing the eyedrops, Adamson turned his attention to fiber optics.

City council out of town during Berkeley protests

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP)—Afteralmost a week of protests, arrests and street battles over the future of People's Park, the absence of Berkeley's elected leaders has created a power vacuum in the politically charged city.

The nine-member Berkeley City Council is in its annual summer recess until September 10. As the struggle over the University of California's construction of volleyball courts at People's Park turned violent last week and police fired wooden and putty bullets to disperse demonstrators, the normally active voices of Berkeley's elected officials were unusually quiet.

Berkeley Mayor Loni Hancock is vacationing with her family in remote areas of Eastern Europe, members of her staff said, and will not return until the middle of the month.

"We are desperately trying to reach her," said Bob Lawson, Hancock's chief of staff.

■ Smith wants fast trial

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — In a move legal observers called unprecedented, the prosecutor in the William Kennedy Smith case filed legal papers Monday demanding that Smith's trial be held within 60 days.

"The victim feels her rights are being disregarded by the court," Assistant State Attorney Moira Lasch wrote. "The rights of the victim in this case have been, and are continuing to be violated by the defendant."

Circuit Judge Mary Lupo granted a request by Smith's attorneys last week to postpone the trial. Smith's attorneys had asked for a 90-day postponement. Lupo has not set a new trial date.

In her motion Monday, Lasch cited a Florida law that gives prosecutors and defendants the right to request a speedy trial. Defendants are also given additional speedy-trial rights under the Florida Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Bert Winker, president of the Palm Beach County Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, said he had never heard of a prosecutor demanding a speedy trial.

"The victim doesn't have a right to a speedy trial," Winkler said. "It's absolutely unheard of."

Smith waived his right to a speedy trial at a court hearing earlier this summer.

Lasch's request Monday marks the second time in a week that she has made a request normally made by defense attorneys. After Smith's attorneys withdrew their request to move the trial last week, Lasch fired off her own demand to move the trial — a maneuver some legal experts called unprecedented.

Smith is accused of raping a 29-year-old Jupiter woman at his family's Palm Beach estate on March 30. He has pleaded innocent.

■ Show biz tradition dies

NEW YORK — Variety Sigs End Gig.

Another show business tradition is gone. Variety, the 86-year-old entertainment weekly, has ended its policy of abbreviating its critics' names, called "sigs," and started publishing their full bylines.

Until this week, Variety's New York theater critic was Remy., instead of Jeremy Gerard. Its London theater critic, Jack Pitman, went by Pit. Los Angeles film reviewer Brian Lowry was Bril. Television watcher David Bushman was Bush. Music critic Kevin Zimmerman was Kezi.

"Times have changed and so must Variety," editor Peter Bart wrote in the Aug. 5 issue of the show business bible.

"Longtime Variety readers ... felt like members of an elite club. The present-day Variety, with a third of its readers overseas, has perhaps lost that 'clubbiness' but gained a clarity demanded by its sophisticated readership. And now even its critics have come out of hiding," Bart said in an editorial.

The origin of Variety's odd abbreviations is unclear, Bart wrote, but they began appearing in 1905, the first year the weekly was published. Founder Sime Silverman signed off his pieces as Sime. His wife, Hattie, wrote under the name Skirt. Even Sid, their son, had his own abbreviation. He was known as Skigie. when he reviewed vaudeville acts — at the age of 7.

At the time, the abbreviations gave critics protection against irate theater owners, Bart wrote. Silverman often was at odds with the Shuberts, Broadway's biggest landlords, as well as with a syndicate of agents called the White Rats.

■ Public won't see video

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. — A woman who prosecutors say was raped by a former boyfriend as a video camera recorded the attack is fighting to bar the public and reporters from court when the tape is shown.

"I don't feel this has to be shown to the public," the 29-year-old woman said in The Detroit News on Monday. "They're literally raping me again if they show it to the public. Only the judge, jury, the attorneys and myself have to see it."

A 35-year-old man is scheduled for trial next month on charges of criminal sexual conduct in the case.

The defendant, who made the 20-minute videotape with a handheld camera, said the woman consented to the act. The woman, however, told police that her former boyfriend threatened to "snap her neck" and kill her cat if she didn't obey him.

Assistant Prosecutor Thomas Landy has recommended showing the video to the jury in court on a monitor visible only to them.

Deborah Servitto, a Macomb County circuit court judge, said she wants to balance the man's right to a fair trial with the woman's right to privacy.

"I'm not certain how we're going to handle it, but we're going to make it as private as possible," Servitto said

Judge blasts protesters

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A federal judge Monday said he'll use any means necessary — even ordering the governor arrested and filling jails across the state — to break blockades by anti-abortion protesters at two women's clinics.

"This court has now taken charge," said U.S. District Judge Patrick F. Kelly, who has ordered demonstrators to allow access to the clinics.

Police have made more than 1,900 arrests outside the clinics since the national anti-abortion group Operation Rescue began demonstrations July 15. Many protesters have been arrested repeatedly. One of the clinics is one of few nationwide that perform late-term abortions.

On Monday, 65 people were arrested after crossing police barricades outside a clinic and another man was charged for allegedly confronting Kelly outside the judge's home.

In court, Kelly ordered Operation Rescue to post a $100,000 bond for damages that may be proven in a lawsuit filed by the clinics.

The two clinics, Women's Health Care Services and Wichita Family Planning Inc., sued on July 23 seeking an order requiring protesters to permit access to the clinics.

Sailing custom worth retaining

Modern technology was the hero of the daring rescue of nearly 600 people Sunday from a Greek cruise ship that sank in the storm-tossed Indian Ocean off Africa's Wild Coast.

Helicopters working with members of the South African TFC tour company helped airlift the passengers off the floudering ship, Oceanos. It sank only 90 minutes after the last passenger was carried to safety.

In fact, news accounts indicated that employees and entertainers of the tour company which had leased the Oceanos took over the launching of lifeboats and assisting passengers who were airlifted by helicopters after the captain and crew left the ship.

The story's ending might not have been so happy had the cruise ship been further out to sea or if helicopters were unavailable for the rescue. There is a long and sad list of sea tragedies that attest to the deadly nature of ship sinkings when the circumstances were not as favorable and rescue crews were not standing by.

A number of angry passengers have complained that the ship captain, Yiannis Avranas, and the crew left the sinking ship on the first available lifeboat, leaving hundreds of people behind on the ship. But the captain has responded by saying he left to direct the rescue operation from the shore.

"When I order abandon ship, it doesn't matter what time I leave. Abandon is for everybody. If some people like to stay, they can stay," he said.

That seems awfully callous in light of the number of people still in danger at the time of the captain's departure. Directing the rescue operation from the shore may have been important, but when a ship is in trouble sailing tradition insists that the captain's place is with the ship until all passengers have been evacuated.

Although that custom may be no more than a romantic notion in the eyes of some, the captain's presence can have a dramatically calming effect on the passengers. It makes us wonder if there are not still some traditions — even in 1991 — that should be retained simply for their psychological impact.

Several passengers were upset that the captain and crew left the ship before the passengers were rescued, and to our way of thinking they have every right to make their displeasure known. Valor is still a worthwhile commodity in our day and age.

Gorbachev's 'error' saving communists

Mikhail Gorbachev's high-wire act continues. The utter incompatibility of his latest moves suggests that he cannot continue to defy gravity much longer.

In the same breath...the Soviet president urged the Communist Party of the Soviet Union to transform itself into a normal European-style political party — and vowed to block the Russian president's decree disbanding the party cells in workplaces. He can't have it both ways.

Gorbachev the reformer scored another of his victories when the Central Committee adopted his liberal platform (July 26). This document eliminates some of the most odious communist tenets: the dogma of class war, Marxism-Leninism as the exclusive source of political wisdom, the requirement that party members be atheists, and top-down quasi-military discipline in the party ranks.

In their place, the new platform endorses social democracy, private property and the integration of the Soviet Union into the world economy.

Despite all that, Gorbachev the communist is headed for collision with the true democratic reformers, led by Boris Yeltsin-....Yeltsin has ordered party cells out of factories, farms and government offices....

Gorbachev's mistake is trying to save the Communist Party while also building a humane, democratic society....

License-plate crisis resolved with a smile

The budget shortfall still yawns like a vast chasm between Texas and fiscal solvency, but at least the license-plate crisis has been resolved.

The Texas Highway Commission touched off pandemonium two years ago when it decided to add the state motto — "The Friendship State" — to state license plates.

The citizenry rose in protest at the very thought of driving around with so un-macho a sentiment embossed on their plates. The Legislature urged that "The Lone Star State" be stamped on them instead. Problem solved.

Welcome to the New Texas: leaner, meaner and not prone to mince words about it. At least not on its license plates. The Friendship State? Better smile when you say that, pardner.

Bribery scandal looms at Pentagon

WASHINGTON — An FBI investigation of bribery allegations may split open yet another Pentagon procurement scandal, this one exposing contractors who don't do the work the taxpayers pay them to do.

Anderson

The early focus of the investigation is on Sooner Defense of Florida, which took $11 million in advance payments from the Army to build detonation devices, and gave excuses in return.

We reported in 1989 that the Army kept giving Sooner money and business, despite many indicators that the small company was not delivering on its end of the bargain. By the time the Pentagon got wise to Sooner, the firm was liquidating its assets in bankruptcy.

Pentagon investigators initially reported that Sooner had been cheating the government. The FBI has since discovered that the Army weapons inspector assigned to monitor the Sooner contract may have been reluctant to blow the whistle on the company because Sooner was giving her gifts.

Army contract specialist Bonnie K. Hurd has admitted in court that she accepted an array of gifts from Sooner executives, including hotel rooms, meals and entertainment when she made 25 trips to the Sooner plant in Lakeland, Fla., over a three-year period. Hurd also admitted that Sooner's chairman bought her son airplane tickets to go to Tampa for spring break in 1985, and also paid his way to Disney World and Busch Gardens.

Hurd's attorney says Hurd was not manipulated by Sooner, and Sooner officials say they weren't trying to get anything from Hurd. But Hurd was convicted last month of accepting bribes. As part of her plea agreement she is cooperating with the ongoing investigation, which sources tell us is spreading fast.

The Justice Department's "Ill Wind" investigation exposed how some top-level Pentagon officials used their insider leverage to the benefit of the highest bidders and the nation's big defense contractors. The Sooner investigation means that the little people were getting in on the act too — small contractors and rank-and-file federal workers all the way down to plant inspectors.

Pentagon sources told our associate Jim Lynch that there have long been tales of bribery and gratuities floating around the Army munitions agency in Rock Island, Ill., — the agency that supervised the Sooner contract. This procurement hub deals exclusively with small munitions manufacturers. The Pentagon often gets a better deal working with the little guys, but sources close to the Pentagon's procurement process tell us that some small contractors get good at conning the military into believing they can complete a big contract.

Sooner first began making fuses and other small munitions for the Army in 1982. One of its first jobs was to build safety devices for an artillery round. The Army paid Sooner $524,471, but the company apparently never delivered the goods.

The lack of return on investment didn't stop the Army from giving Sooner more contracts. In 1987 the company got an $8.7 million contract to build fuses for 25mm shells on Bradley Fighting Vehicles. At that time, Sooner had already failed to complete five prior contracts.

Before the Army stopped paying Sooner in March 1988, the company had received $12.1 million for six contracts, and there was no return on four of those contracts. Last December, a Sooner official pleaded guilty to participating in a scheme to give the Army fraudulent test results.

NAACP, AFL-CIO resurrect Jim Crow ideology

Waaaahhhhh! goes the NAACP. The AFL-CIO slams the screen door and kicks the cat. The clout these old-line liberal organizations once exercised is as dead as Lyndon Johnson, and what's more, they don't like it. They'll show us. They'll oppose the Thomas nomination, that's what they'll do.

Murchison

The NAACP and the AFL-CIO can't get a liberal onto the Supreme Court to save their souls, given that they can't get a liberal into the White House anymore.

They were all for packing the Supreme Court with judges of their own kidney, back when presidents of their kidney did the packing. Today the shoe is on the other foot. The voters grew tired of rule by unelected federal judges. They elected presidents who promised to put no more "jurocrats" on the federal bench and then proceeded to keep that promise.

The NAACP and the AFL-CIO haven't the grace to accept vox populi. They want to close their eyes and pretend Lyndon Johnson still is president.

But that's not the most interesting thing coming out of the decision to whup up on Thomas. A confession of sorts escapes the anti-Thomasites' lips — strangulated, muttered through clenched teeth, but a confession nonetheless.

It is that, yes, just as we've always said, Race and Ethnicity Matter Tremendously in the Filling of Important Posts — but that (a softer voice now) ideology matters more. Yes, we're an equal opportunity society. The kind of people who should have opportunities are the kind who agree with us.

A liberal black like Thurgood Marshall? One who'll smite the conservative establishment with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm? Fine, wonderful! Put him on the court. Plump up his seat cushion, fill his inkwell. Let him gush forth liberalism 'til the world looks level.

But a conservative black like Thomas? Seated — O ultimate indignity! — in Marshall's chair? Why, this won't do for one minute. Black jurists have no right to refuse the duty of writing law from the bench, no right to speak sympathetically of colorblindness in hiring.

Black isn't beautiful when black is conservative, only when it's statist, pro-big government, pro-affirmative action.

If only the NAACP and the AFL-CIO had the courage to speak these sentiments publicly. They don't. But that's what they mean. And pretty unedifying it is.

It's always nice to know, of course, what some of the more vociferous apostles of equal rights really are up to. They aren't peddling — not they! — the good old American message of hard work and upward mobility, the message that Clarence Thomas carries in his life and his words. Their obsession is with ideology. They don't want a government that guarantees equal treatment, they want one that doles out favors to people of their choosing.

This implies the creation of a new serf class — ideological Jim Crow. Conservative blacks — a class that includes some of the country's foremost black thinkers — are second-class citizens.

To the rear of the bus, Judge Thomas! If you want to ride up front with the drivers — with Ben Hooks of the NAACP, with Lane Kirkland of the AFL-CIO — you'd better think and say the right things.

It could be argued, I guess, that the new Jim Crow vindicates the civil rights movement. The NAACP reserves the right to despise Clarence Thomas, a black man, as heartily as it despises Ronald Reagan, a white man.

The message that gets through, nonetheless, is of discrimination by those who claim self-righteously to hate the whole idea of discrimination. The message is of political correctness tests — of hobbles for heretics and guidelines for the independent-minded.

Where have we really gotten in this country, when the likes of Ben Hooks and Lane Kirkland suggest that there's just one acceptable way for a black man to think and that's the way they think?

Dead Iraqi children won't attack Saddam

I am glad President Bush has let us all know that he does not wish innocent Iraqi children to suffer and will do something to allow the Iraqis to get food and medicine, perhaps even before the first frost in the Midwest. He didn't mention the guilty children.

Reese

For awhile, I thought our president had ditched the "kinder and gentler thing" for the "cold and cruel thing." He was saying for awhile there'd be no relief from sanctions until the Iraqis overthrew Saddam Hussein.

Never could figure out the logic of that. Saddam Hussein has been in power 11 years and if Iraqis could overthrow him, they probably would have. Some of our Air Force people have spilled the beans about special efforts to bomb the Iraqi dictator despite the president's fib that we weren't trying to kill him. Even so, we could never get to him, and if we couldn't get to him with satellites and stealth bombers, I don't know how a group of Iraqi children or mothers can get to him with spoons and empty plates.

But I am not one of those Washington insiders and no doubt the CIA knows more about the fighting prowess of hungry Iraqi children and grieving Iraqi mothers than I do.

At any rate, the president has decided that even if Saddam remains in power, we probably ought not to continue denying medicine and food to the remaining Iraqi children who have so far managed to dodge death. I don't know the reason for the decision. Maybe he decided all those dying children are bad for our image, especially going into an election year. Maybe he decided those children and widows aren't going to overthrow Saddam no matter how hungry or sick or dead they get.

Maybe the Kuwaiti government reminded him that if the Iraqis don't sell some oil, they can't pay the Kuwaitis any reparations. The Kuwaitis are real smart about money matters and seem to have a lot of influence in the White House.

Maybe Billy Graham sneaked up the backstairs of the White House and reminded the president that Jesus loves children, even Moslem kids who refuse to storm Saddam Hussein's bunker and shoot him like the president wants them to do.

How the heck should I know? Being neither rich nor a foreign dictator, I just don't move in those circles and worse yet, I don't know a single anonymous source. Anybody who doesn't know a lot of anonymous sources is a nobody in Beltway society.

It may take awhile for all the consultations and briefings and votes, so some Iraqi children will die before any food or medicine gets there, but we shouldn't carp about that. It took nearly six months to get ready to kill 100,000 to 200,000 Iraqis and so it's bound to take some time to get to the point where we will finally allow the Iraqis to buy some vaccines and vegetables. After all, the New World Order wasn't built in a day.

And, golly, you can't be too careful when you are dealing with Iraqis who are apparently the most dangerous people in the world. Even with the country bombed back into the pre-industrial age, no air force, and lots of cholera and hunger, people seem to be afraid of the Iraqis. To hear some people talk, you have to conclude that the Iraqis are the most dangerous defeated enemy in the history of mankind.

Just the other night I heard two Washington biggies on TV say that one of the problems we have in this country is that we focus on short-range problems like starving children instead of looking at the larger strategic picture.

That's certainly true of us plain Americans. We are always getting sentimental about kids dying or suffering. I guess we just don't have the right stuff, so it's probably a good thing our politicians and bureaucrats are made of the sterner variety of stuff.

Sentimental or not, I'm glad the big shots decided a few Iraqi children are going to be allowed to live in the New World Order.

Baker invites Libyans to peace talks

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III, pushing for broad Arab support of a Mideast peace conference, said Monday that Libya would be welcome to send an observer.

Baker, at a news conference before returning to Washington from his sixth Mideast peace mission, said he did not think Israel would object to a Libyan observer at the October talks being planned by the United States and Soviet Union.

"That would be something that would be consistent with Israel's policy" of willingness to talk to Arab neighbors, Baker said.

Algeria was Baker's final stop on a Mideast trip focused on efforts to organize a peace conference that would bring Israelis and Arabs face-to-face to resolve their 43-year dispute.

Libya, long a militant foe of Israel's existence, has also long been accused by the United States of fomenting terrorism. Nonetheless, Baker said, "The multilateral negotiations, in our view, should not be closed to any country in the region."

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said Monday that following Baker's mission "prospects for launching a negotiating process have been significantly enhanced."

But Baker's weekend stops in Israel, Jordan, Tunis and Morocco, failed to dislodge the final sticking point for Arab-Israeli negotiations: the issue of which Palestinians would attend.

Baker discussed the matter with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid, who had met Sunday with Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Palestinian sources said Bendjedid and Arafat discussed holding a meeting of the Palestinian parliament-in-exile to debate the issue of representation at the peace conference.

Algerian Foreign Minister Lakhdar Brahimi, speaking at a joint news conference with Baker, said the PLO "wants to support the peace process."

The Bush administration has avoided dealing directly with the PLO, but Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria and Jordan all have been in touch with Arafat's organization.

Through them, said spokesman Bassam Abu Sharif on Sunday, the PLO has exchanged views with the U.S. government.

Baker did not respond directly when asked whether the PLO might attend the conference as well — a step that would be certain to keep the Israelis away.

"It's the position of the United States that there should be a dialogue and negotiations between Israel and Palestinians so that we can have a comprehensive approach" to peace, Baker said.

Team finds Iraqi lab, but no weapons

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A U.N. inspection team visited a site once used by Iraq as a germ warfare research lab but found no evidence Saddam Hussein's army has biological weapons, the chief inspector said Monday.

Baghdad newspapers reported the research was abandoned amid fears the facility would be bombed. The work apparently was halted after Iraq occupied Kuwait a year ago, beginning the seven-month occupation that ended when Saddam's forces were defeated by a U.S.-led coalition in the Gulf War.

David Kelly, leader of the 28-member U.N. biological inspection team, said inspectors went to Salman Pak, about 20 miles south of Baghdad, where the Iraqis now acknowledge they once did biological weapons research.

Iraq has always denied having such weapons but had remained publicly silent on whether it conducted research. Under the U.N. cease-fire resolution that ended the Gulf War, Iraq must eliminate its weapons of mass destruction.

At the United Nations on Monday, U.N. officials read a statement saying Iraqi authorities reported they carried out biological research for defensive military purposes at Salman Pak for four years.

Iraqi authorities said the work was terminated in August 1990 "and the agents on which the research was being carried out were destroyed," said the statement from the U.N. Special Commission overseeing the elimination of Iraq's weapons arsenal.

Saddam's government acknowledged it had a germ warfare lab after the U.N. team's arrival Friday, Kelly told reporters in Baghdad. He said three days of inspections turned up no evidence of biological weapons.

He said the Salman Pak site was known to inspectors before they came to Iraq, but would disclose no details on the team's findings there.

Kelly did say, however, that the Iraqis "are cooperating with us."

Baghdad newspapers quoted an unidentified Foreign Ministry spokesman as saying Iraqi authorities "fully cooperated with the team to facilitate its mission."

Cooperation is a sensitive issue because of disclosures that Iraq was less than candid with the first U.N. nuclear inspection teams. It was later learned Iraq had a program to enrich uranium, a process that is used in the making of atomic bombs.

President Bush and other Western leaders reacted strongly. Bush threatened to attack Iraq again if it did not come clean on all its nuclear secrets.

A U.N. nuclear inspection team is in the midst of a two-week visit.

■ Famous leftist poet dies in Greece

ATHENS, Greece — Nikiforos Vrettakos, one of Greece's best-known poets and the first leftist member of the Athens Academy of Arts and Sciences, died of a stroke Sunday. He was 79.

He fell ill at his village home at Ploumitsa in the Peloponnesus peninsula and died on the way to a hospital in Sparta, friends of his family said Monday.

Vrettakos was born in 1912 and began writing poetry at the age of nine. His first book was published in 1929, the first of scores of collections of emotionally charged and simply written verse.

Vrettakos twice won the country's prestigious State Poetry Prize and his work was translated into several languages.

Many of his poems were set to music, some by composer Mikis Theodorakis.

Vrettakos wrote about his experiences as a soldier in World War II and on the plight of the left after losing the 1946-49 civil war. He was never a hard-line Communist, however, and was an ardent spokesman for national reconciliation.

■ Bomb threat causes havoc for rail system

MADRID, Spain — Bomb threats by Basque separatists have created havoc in the Spanish rail system, delaying trains between Madrid and northern Spain on three of the last four days, a railroad spokeswoman said Monday.

Charo Delgado, a spokeswoman for the state railway, said brief delays were caused Monday when traffic was suspended along an 18-mile stretch of track north of Madrid to check for bombs a caller said had been placed there.

The first threat came on Friday. On Saturday, two small bombs caused minor damage to tracks but no injuries.

The terrorist group ETA — whose initials stand for Basque Homeland and Liberty in the Basque langauge — has threatened the summer railroad traffic for three consecutive years.

The separatists' campaign is aimed at throwing Spain's vital tourism industry into chaos to force the government into negotiations over independence for the three-province Basque country in northern Spain.

A statement published Saturday in a radical Basque newspaper said the ETA threat against rail routes would be in effect from Aug. 3 to Aug. 25, the height of the summer holiday season.

■ Police in Lebanon crack down on Aoun

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The police have cracked down on supporters of Gen. Michel Aoun, who was ousted in October by Syrian forces after a long rebellion against the government of President Elias Hrawi.

Security officials said dozens of people were arrested over the weekend for "jeopardizing state security" as they were hanging banners in support of the general, who is in the French Embassy here awaiting permission to take up political asylum in France.

Although France had granted Aoun asylum, the Lebanese government has been blocking his departure, demanding that he stand trial on charges of embezzlement and treason.

Aoun, a former army commander, seized power in Lebanon on Sept. 22, 1988, when Parliament failed to elect a successor to President Amin Gemayel.

While in power, the general led two devastating campaigns: one against the 40,000-member Syrian force in Lebanon, which lasted seven months, and the other against the hardline Christian Lebanese Forces militia of Samir Geagea. It was estimated that 4,000 people were killed and 20,000 others wounded in the battles.

■ Cholera outbreaks threaten economy

MEXICO CITY — Should the cholera outbreaks now popping up across Mexico become epidemic, the country's multibillion-dollar tourism, agriculture and seafood industries could be threatened by panic among North American consumers, experts say.

Such a possibility has contributed to the less-than-candid approach adopted by Mexican officials to the outbreaks, international health experts say. Cholera has stricken nearly 300 Mexicans in six states and killed at least one of them, according to the government.

The disease, which favors the poor sanitary and health conditions of the world's poorest people, was detected six weeks ago in an isolated mountain village 100 miles southwest of Mexico City.

Health Ministry officials at first consistently denied, then later confirmed, press reports of subsequent outbreaks.

Now, with half of Mexico's 81 million people living in poverty and 17 million of them facing desperate economic straits, there is a possibility that cholera could spread rapidly here. The confirmed outbreaks have occurred in poor and isolated regions throughout south and central Mexico. One unconfirmed case was reported in the Mexican capital last week.

South Korea applies to U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — South Korea applied for membership in the United Nations on Monday and Seoul's envoy said it will be admitted simultaneously with rival North Korea when the General Assembly convenes Sept. 17.

He called membership for both Koreas "a symbol of the end of the Cold War."

North Korea applied separately for its own U.N. seat last month, after abandoning its call for a single, joint seat for the two nations.

"Simultaneous entry of both south and north will help smooth and improve relations between the two Koreas and will be a positive step forward for the peaceful reunification of the Korean peninsula," South Korean Ambassador Roe Chang-hee told a news conference.

The Security Council is expected later this week to recommend simultaneous membership for the two Koreas in the General Assembly.

Roe said East-West conflict had prevented the two Koreas from joining as long as the United States backed South Korea and the Soviet Union was allied with the north.

Double-deck London bus might go

LONDON (AP) — The red double-decker bus, on which dogs ride free and tourists ride on top, could soon be rolling off into the English sunset.

As part of a program to improve Britain's wobbly public services, Prime Minister John Major has pledged to deregulate London's buses and sell the system to private owners.

"Every company will choose it's own livery to run under, so the red bus is probably already gone," said David Hales, a press officer for London Regional Transport.

"It's a great shame I think. We've already lost the red phone boxes; next we'll be losing the royal guardsmen."

Among passengers and crew interviewed on London's oldest existing bus route, the No. 9, the plan is extremely unpopular.

"The buses are going to be painted any color you like," said driver Alf Basauri. "The company will say, 'I'll have mine pink, with black spots.' Who will stop them?"

"Red London buses are part of our heritage!" said passenger Penny Bevan-Jones. "You see a postcard of a red bus and you know what city you're in. I think that's awfully sad."

Transportation department spokesman Duncan Stroud said London's fleet of 5,000 buses would simply have new owners under privatization.

Passengers claim crew jumped ship

EAST LONDON, South Africa (AP) — Angry passengers said Monday that some officers and crew members grabbed the first available lifeboat and abandoned hundreds of people on a Greek cruise liner that later sank in stormy seas.

All of the more than 570 passengers and crew were confirmed safe, said Ian Hunter, managing director of TFC Tours of Johannesburg, which leased the Oceanos liner.

Those aboard the ship were rescued in a dramatic operation Sunday that was completed only 90 minutes before the ship sank a mile from the country's Indian Ocean coast near the village of Coffee Bay.

Passengers praised rescue efforts by the South African military and tour company officials aboard the ship, but said they were outraged with the behavior of the crew.

They claimed crew members took the ship's only two motorized lifeboats, leaving tourists to try to launch regular lifeboats. Also, many complained that no announcements were made during the 12-hour ordeal.

"They left us in the lurch. They knew ... the ship was going to sink and didn't say a thing," passenger Kevin Ellis said of the crew. "All the crew who knew how to operate lifeboats had gone."

Many passengers said the chief engineer and other officers were among the first to abandon ship.

Capt. Yiannis Avranas was not among the first to leave, but passengers said he left while there were still many tourists on board. Avranas defended his action, saying he had to direct the rescue effort from shore.

"I don't care what these people say about me. I am separated from my family, who were rescued by one of the other ships, and I lost my own ship — what more do they want?" he told reporters late Sunday night.

"When I order abandon ship, it doesn't matter what time I leave," Avranas said in a separate interview with ABC-TV. "Abandon is for everybody. If some people like to stay, they can stay."

After most crew members abandoned ship, employees and entertainers of the South African TFC tour company, which leased the Oceanos, reportedly took over, launching lifeboats and helping people who were airlifted by helicopters.

Magician Robin Boltman took the bridge and monitored radio traffic, and musician Moss Hill tried to keep passengers calm by playing Beatles songs on an acoustic guitar, passengers said.

Epirotiki Lines, the Greek owners of the Oceanos, said the evacuation took place according to a plan that called for non-essential crew and younger passengers to be the first into lifeboats.

"These passengers also had to board cargo ships from the lifeboats, which required substantial crew assistance," said Capt. Alevizos Klaudatos, an Epirotiki spokesman.

Remaining passengers stayed on board in relative safety and were lifted off the ship by helicopter, Klaudatos said.

"Our prime concern was to evacuate the passengers, which was successful," he added.

Hostage release possible

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A state-run Iranian newspaper says an American and a British hostage in Lebanon may be freed within a week.

The English-language Tehran Times, which is close to President Hashemi Rafsanjani's administration, reported the information from its Beirut correspondent in editions to be published Tuesday.

"Activities have been intensified for the release of the two Western hostages seized by certain groups in Lebanon and the result may bring fruit," the newspaper said.

"Hectic activities are continuing for the release of the hostages on humanitarian grounds and it is expected that an American and a British hostage will be able to go to their homes by the weekend," the report said.

The daily said its Lebanon correspondent "failed to get details such as names and exact times relating to the release of the hostages."

The newspaper is believed to closely reflect Rafsanjani's thinking. On March 6, 1990, it said an effort was under way to free the hostages. The next day, Rafsanjani said the issue "is going to be solved." About six weeks later, American Robert Polhill was freed.

Croats 'will fight with bare hands' if needed

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Croatia's president declared Monday he would ask citizens to fight "with their bare hands" if necessary to defend their republic, and said he had derailed an effort to oust him.

New fighting in the breakaway republic reportedly claimed at least five lives.

After the failure Sunday of a European Community peace mission, the 12 EC foreign ministers were to meet Tuesday to discuss their next moves. Serbia, which objected to EC monitors overseeing a cease-fire in Croatia, said the EC mission had been biased.

The collapse of the EC-sponsored peace talks reduced the chances of avoiding all-out war between rival Serbs and Croats, Yugoslavia's two main ethnic groups. Scores of people have died in clashes between Croatian security forces and Serb militias since Croatia declared independence June 25.

The Serbs in Croatia claim discrimination and many are haunted by the memory of the mass killing of Serbs by Croatia's Nazi puppet regime in World War II. Many ethnic Serbs there want autonomy or to join neighboring Serbia.

Croats accuse Serbia of seeking to dominate Yugoslavia and keep it socialist.

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman told a news conference his government would do all it could to prevent open warfare but warned it would "not hesitate, if necessary, to call up in arms our entire population — to call on them to resist aggression and occupation with their bare hands."

"If Croatian independence cannot be ensured ... then we will call up our people, regardless of the victims involved," he added.

City's social study produces results

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Midland Introspective, the innovative study of community needs commissioned by social service organizations, was never meant to gather dust on the shelf.

Supporters say it hasn't. The effort, now under the direction of the United Way of Midland, spawned a series of task force groups and pilot programs designed to serve the needs it originally identified in 1989.

"So many times you think the problem is so huge, how can we solve it? But if you can make one little inroad, you've done something important. That's what this is about," said Nancy Rea, a United Way volunteer who has coordinated development of task forces.

"This is such a can-do community," said United Way coordinator Jane Wolf. "We've shown we can meet and overcome challenges."

The study, which polled Midland residents about the conditions in their community, resulted in the formation of groups currently operating to tackle issues of information and referral, education, transportation, health care, child care, problems of adolescents and employment. From those groups, some pilot programs have developed to serve identified needs.

Information and referral has become the task of the Volunteer Center of Midland, which now distributes fliers written in English and Spanish, urging those in need to contact the agency for referral. Latest reports indicate they're getting more than 600 calls each month.

Addressing education deficiencies is a program at DeZavala Elementary School. A seven-week summer course known as "DeZavala College" is designed to encourage students to enjoy learning and experts say it may prevent drop outs.

The study found many local residents lack basic transportation. A task force developed a program utilizing Casa De Amigos and the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) that, using grant money, provides rides to about 20 people per day.

Casa De Amigos also participates in a program to serve health care needs for the community. A clinic utilizing volunteer staff to see the public one or two nights a week is expected to open at the center next month, while a more full-service clinic that could coordinate its work with Memorial Hospital & Medical

Water district set to open pipeline bids

■ Bids on $155 million in revenue bonds are for financing Colorado River Municipal Water District's 155-mile water-pipeline project.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Bids on $115 million in revenue bonds to finance the building of a 155-mile water pipeline from O.H. Ivie Reservoir to Midland-Odessa by way of San Angelo and Garden City are to be opened at 11 a.m. today by directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) at the CRMWD headquarters here.

Sealed bids have been submitted from several financial companies in the Northeast.

The bonds will be sold to the bidder who offers the lowest interest rate on the $115 million in revenue bonds, which are to be paid off by Midland, San Angelo, and CRMWD and its member cities of Odessa, Big Spring and Snyder. Midland and San Angelo are "contract" cities that buy water under contract with the CRMWD.

The money will be used to pay for the custom manufacture of the 60-inch and 51-inch pipeline, to buy the right-of-way to bury the pipeline, and to build pumping stations necessary to move the water uphill to higher elevations.

Manufacturing of the 155 miles of pipe, CRMWD official Joe Pickle said, will take more than 2½ years.

Meanwhile, Lake Ivie, which is impounded by S.W. Freese Dam southeast of Ballinger along the Colorado River, will be taking on more water.

The $70-million lake-dam project was completed in the spring of 1990.

The 60-inch (five feet in diameter) pipeline is to run from Ivie to San Angelo. From there on to Midland-Odessa, the pipeline will drop down to a 51-inch line.

The city Abilene, which, like Midland, will be buying Ivie water from the CRMDW, will build its own pipeline from Ivie to Abilene.

With the completion of the $115-million pipeline from Ivie to Midland, Midland will be getting water from three surface sources, the CRMWD-owned Lake Ivie, Lake J.B. Thomas southwest of Snyder, and the E.V. Spence Reservoir near Robert Lee, and from underground water sources.

Indebtedness incurred in the sale of the revenue bonds will be paid off through revenue generated by the sale of water to customers, such as Midland homeowners, businesses, and industries.

Gladys Davis, a Midland hairdresser for more than 60 years, now spends most of her leisure time working with a paint brush instead of a hair brush.

60 years later, color her a realist

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Midlander Gladys Davis got a slow start at her favorite hobby.

After making her first painting at age 10, the local hairdresser waited almost 55 years to create another.

"I painted some horses, and a relative of mine kind of laughed at it," she explained. "I tore the picture up and didn't paint again until I was 65."

Davis said she took up painting after deciding to retire. She began to take lessons, and soon resumed working to help support her hobby.

"I just make my living dressing hair. I've done it so long," Davis said. "Once I thought I might accidentally get a gallery. But I never did. I kept dressing hair."

Although her age is a closely guarded secret, Davis will say she's been fixing hair for more than 60 years. In that time, she's heard a lot of people's confessions.

"I have more people's secrets up here," Davis said, tapping her temple. "All hairdressers hear secrets. When you get your head wet, you'll tell anything."

When she's not painting or dressing hair, Davis may be working other odd jobs to make extra money for painting supplies. She house-sits, dog-sits and cares for an ill friend.

"Paint's expensive. Lessons are expensive. Like any vices," she said. "You've got to do something, so painting's what I do."

Davis and fellow painting enthusiasts get together every Monday night to learn and practice at the Paint & Palette studio. She said working with a group helps keep her motivated and gives her new ideas.

"I have to paint with a group," she said. "I'd get lazy." Although she's worked in watercolors and acrylics, oils are her medium of choice.

Oak trees, barns and bluebonnets are some of her favorite subjects. She paints from pictures and out of memory.

A native of Runnels County, Davis raised three children in Coleman. She came to Midland in 1956 with the goal of purchasing her own beauty salon.

"At that time, Midland was the best hairdressing place there was," Davis said. "There was so much money." Now, though, fewer women want the "wet set" Davis makes her

MBCE seeks reallocation of city funds

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs (MBCE) wants the City Council to revise its preliminary distribution of funds for 1991-92, MBCE representatives said at a monthly meeting Monday night.

"We are asking that they go back in and allocate the money fairly. We are asking for an equal piece of the economic pie," said Robbyne Fuller, chamber president.

Recently, the Black Chamber was left off the preliminary funding list, pending the outcome of an audit and changes in the chamber's bylaws, according to city leaders.

The results of the audit showed all MBCE finances were in order.

Mrs. Fuller said she feels the MBCE was unjustly penalized because the city decided to audit during the period of allocation, and now remaining funds are not enough to cover the Black Chamber's request.

Councilman John Castro stated at the time that the MBCE would also need to change bylaws to allow members of the chamber board to vote.

Mrs. Fuller, however, said that the Black Chamber's bylaws already list this provision.

In addition, the city requires that separate request applications be made for economic development funds and cultural enhancement funds, which the MBCE failed to do.

The chamber filed one application that lumped together both requests, Mrs. Fuller said, as was its understanding from the previous year.

MBCE was not informed of the dual application procedure, she added.

Separate applications have been drawn up, and the chamber plans to request City Council members to re-allocate funding.

The Black Chamber wants $114,000 from the economic development fund: $64,000 for staffing and office expenses, and $50,000 to finance a study on how to develop the business district in the Lamesa Road-Lee Street area.

Another $38,000 is being requested from hotel/motel revenues to fund black cultural events.

But according to preliminary funding figures, only $28,100 is left in the economic development account — less than 30 percent of the MBCE's request.

"They have tentatively funded the other chambers ... and funds (to the Black Chamber) are as important as to the (Midland) Hispanic Chamber (of Commerce) and to the downtown chamber," Mrs. Fuller said.

A MBCE representative is expected to appear before the next City Council meeting, Mrs. Fuller said.

Monday's meeting also included announcements on upcoming cultural events sponsored by the Black Chamber and a promotion of Mrs. Fuller in the state association for black chambers.

A concert by the Preservation Hall Jazz Band has been secured. The New Orleans jazz group is slated to perform in Midland on Feb. 22, in conjunction with Black History Month and the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneur's sixth anniversary.

Mrs. Fuller, past vice-president for the Texas Association for Black Chambers of Commerce, was recently elected as interim president for the state organization, which is based in Austin.

Migrant workers harvest only hardship due to rain

PECOS (AP) — Heavy rains over the past month have slowed the cantaloupe harvest in this West Texas region, leaving migrant workers with little work and unbearable living conditions.

"We will never come here again," said Nora Valenzuela, who along with her two children, 8-year-old Rene and 13-year-old Mary, have lived in a one-room apartment since July 14 waiting for work.

"(The apartment) does not even have hot water," she said.

Constant rain has made it impossible for trucks to move into the fields to harvest this year's crop.

The scarcity of work has left many without enough money to afford decent housing.

Rodolfo Mares Jr., an attorney for Texas Rural Legal Aid, said the steady rains have left many families unemployed for as long as three weeks.

Many of the families who have trekked north from the Rio Grande Valley lack the money to return home.

Jose Montalvo, who lives with Valenzuela, said he has worked a little more than 10 hours over the last week.

"I have earned about $48," Montalvo said. "We're not comfortable here. We prefer to be in the valley."

Officials said this year's Cantaloupe Festival, which was celebrated in Pecos last weekend, was more subdued than in years' past.

"As the town celebrates its most famous crop, many of these people aren't sure how they will provide a meal for their families," Mares said.

House OKs giving Texans chance to vote on lottery

■ Proposal now must clear Senate before going on Nov. 5 ballot.

AUSTIN (NYT) — Lottery backers finally hit the winning combination as the Texas House voted by a one-vote margin to give Texans the chance to vote on the game of chance in November.

The state's looming budget shortfall, combined with some arm-twisting by House Speaker Gib Lewis and Gov. Ann Richards, pushed the lottery proposal over the top on Monday in a 101-46 vote, one more than the necessary two-thirds majority of the 150-member chamber.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, voted against the measure while Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, and Troy Fraser, R-Big Spring, voted in favor. Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, was absent.

The proposal also must clear the Senate before it goes on the Nov. 5 ballot. The Senate previously has approved lottery bills, and lottery sponsor Sen. John Montford said he expects it to pass that chamber again this week.

'I've never led the people to believe the lottery is the solution to our problems'

— Gov. Richards comment after vote

If voters lift the constitutional ban on the numbers game, Texas would become the 32nd state to create a lottery.

Experts have said the soonest Texans could buy lottery tickets would be six months after voters approve the ballot measure in November. What games would be offered and when will be determined later.

The lottery vote came on the heels of the House's approval early Monday morning of a two-year budget that falls $1.8 billion short of available revenue. A Senate panel, meanwhile, approved another version of the budget that is $3.6 billion higher than current revenue.

Gov. Ann Richards, who has campaigned relentlessly for a lottery, said the game of chance would provide a hedge against a huge and unpopular tax bill but would be no panacea. A tax increase will still be required to balance the books, she said.

"I've never led the people to believe the lottery is the solution to our problems," a victorious Richards said after the House vote.

The lottery is expected to raise $450 million for the state treasury in the next two years. Thereafter, it could raise $1 billion each two-year budget period.

Supporters of the measure said the lottery vote presented House members with a revenue-raising option that many taxpayers want. Opinion polls have shown that up to 70 percent of Texans favor a lottery.

Center is a future possibility.

With help from the Midland Independent School District, a child care task force developed two proposed facilities set to open this fall as well. The YMCA and Camp Fire will operate centers to care for children not currently served by other local facilities, and the service will be based on the family's ability to pay.

Adolescents, the study found, are the most under-served group in the community. A task force, through surveying youth, discovered three major problems the group faces are health care, counseling and substance abuse.

"We know what the issues are, what the needs are, now we're ready to do something," Ms. Rea said. The task force plans a workshop next month to develop a plan of action for assisting Midland's youth.

Problems with income and employment are evident in the community, the study revealed. Now a group of bankers and community leaders has developed a program to teach people about budgeting and saving money. Representatives of First City Texas, Community National Bank, Texas National Bank, Midland American Bank and Texas Commerce Bank will offer seminars to groups and organizations.

'We know what the issues are, what the needs are, now we're ready to do something.'

— Nancy Rea, Mls task-force coordinator

A related task force formed a coalition for job training. Midland Introspective Network for Employment (MINE), which works for cooperation between many local agencies and Midland College, has an ultimate goal of assisting people in getting and keeping jobs.

Substance abuse and housing problems, two issues revealed by the survey as community-wide ills, will also be tackled by Introspective task forces. Both are problems of such large scope, Ms. Rea said, developing an effective plan will take more time.

The entire study, in which many local agencies participated, has effectively become a United Way project, leaders said. Ms. Rea said its success has demonstrated an important strong point of the local community — the willingness to give valuable time to help others.

"Every time there's a need, someone, many times someone who's also working full-time, comes forward," said Ms. Rea, a long-time United Way volunteer. "I'm always amazed at the amount of time and energy they're willing to give. That gives me a lot of hope for Midland."

Ms. Wolf said pilot programs are "just that" and not designed as cure-alls.

"We hope to develop comprehensive strategies for dealing with these issues, and pilot programs are a place to tee off," she said.

"We devise a pilot program and hope it mushrooms," Ms. Rea said.

Leaders said in the future, Midland Introspective may in some way become a permanent part of the United Way.

"It's really an ad hoc activity at this point," Wolf said. "But the leadership for it is in the United Way. We expect our United Way agencies will initiate strategies and take a leadership role in their implementation."

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Accident, injury

Staff Report

ODESSA — An 18-year-old man was critically injured when a car he was in crashed into a house and the driver fled Monday morning, police said.

Brody Dooley of Odessa remained in critical condition Monday at Medical Center Hospital, hospital officials said.

According to police reports, Dooley was a passenger in a 1977 Chevrolet Caprice Classic four-door that ran into a house at 1400 N. Kelly Ave. about 5:50 a.m., police said.

The car had been traveling at a high rate of speed north bound in the 1400 block of 14th Street when the driver apparently failed to negotiate a curve, police said.

After the car went into a broadside skid hitting a fence, a well house, and a house, the driver fled the scene.

Police were attempting to locate the driver, described a white man with long dirty blond hair and numerous tattoos. He was last seen shirtless wearing blue jeans.

Assault, injuries

Four men were assaulted by two other men wielding knives and a board Sunday night, police said.

According to police reports, the four men — aged 20 to 34 — were arguing with the other men about 10:25 p.m. at 409 E. Maple Ave. when violence erupted.

The four men were treated for stab wounds and cuts. One remained at Midland Memorial Hospital Monday in satifactory condition, hospital officials said.

No clear motive for the attack was established by police, officials said.

The assailants were described as Hispanic men, both about 5 feet 7 inches tall. One was about 23 to 24 years old armed with a unknown type of knife, the other 26 to 27 years old armed with a board with nails and a unknown type of knife.

Store robbery

A man armed with what appeared to be a .22-caliber rifle robbed a convenience store of an undetermined amount of money early Saturday morning, police said.

A clerk at the E-Z Mart, 2210 N. Big Spring St., told police that an armed man entered the store about 2:20 a.m. and demanded money from the register. Afer the clerk complied, the robber ran east from the store.

The suspect was described as Hispanic, 18 to 20 years old, about 5 feet 9 inches tall, 165 pounds with black hair. He was last seen wearing a purple and white shirt and white shorts.

way to generate revenue," Richards said when she convened the special session on the budget three weeks ago.

Longtime lottery sponsor Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, also alluded to the popularity of the measure.

"A lottery is the one thing they do favor," Wilson said. "If you ask them how they feel about a sales tax, we'll get run out of the room. If you ask them how they feel about income-related taxes, they'll hang most of us."

Opponents called the lottery an unreliable source of revenue that preys on society's most vulnerable citizens.

"I don't want to have the state of Texas turned into a huckster and to really breed on the philosophy that there's a sucker born every minute," said Rep. Al Price, D-Beaumont. "And I think that (when) we get the lottery in place, we'll be saying to the people of the state of Texas that we think you're chumps, and we're going to take advantage of you."

An analysis of the lottery proposal by the neutral House Research Organization said that for the lottery to raise $340 million in 1992-93 — less than what now is being predicted — ticket sales would have to total $923 million. That's the equivalent of every man, woman and child in Texas spending $60 a year on lottery tickets.

Studies cited by lottery opponents have shown that 20 percent of lottery players account for 60 percent of the ticket sales.

The lottery had been defeated eight times in the House since 1983, most recently in February. Nine House members changed their votes on Monday from their February positions.

Participants on both sides of the issue said that Lewis played a pivotal role in swinging the votes. While Lewis had in previous votes shied away from trying to persuade members who had taken positions on moral or other grounds, several participants said he actively encouraged his top lieutenants to vote with him.

"Before, Gib had not been so enthusiastically for it," said lottery opponent Rep. Billy Clemons, D-Pollok. "He was for it and let everyone just sort of do their own thing. And now he's aggressively lobbying on behalf of it."

Those who changed their votes, a group that included several key lawmakers and committee chairmen loyal to Lewis, said that pressure from their districts and the potential for a large tax bill swayed them.

"I've had a very intricate role in looking at this tax bill and $350 million in this state is very hard to find," said Rep. Robert Earley, D-Portland, and a member of the tax-writing committee. "I've just gotten to the point of saying it's probably time to let my district decide rather than me deciding up here for them."

Richards also waged an aggressive campaign for the lottery, meeting individually with several House members and capping off her efforts with a television broadcast Sunday night.

Within hours of the lottery's approval, the House granted a major tax break to the state's greyhound racing industry, fueling talk of a deal to gain votes. Greyhound and horse-racing interests have opposed the lottery because of the competition it would bring.

Reporter comes face-to-face with crime

EDITOR'S NOTE — Journalists write about crime almost every day of their careers. Some are big crimes, some are little crimes. But the crimes usually involve others, people we know only from the police blotter. But on Sunday afternoon, AP staffer Gary Garrison came face-to-face with crime while on a routine trip to the supermarket.

By Gary Garrison
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — It was just a routine pre-lunch trip to the supermarket.

My wife wanted some spaghetti and a slice of watermelon and I needed some bananas and a loaf of bread. So I joined about 50-75 other shoppers on a Sunday afternoon at a neighborhood grocery.

Somewhere between the frozen food and the produce, I was suddenly in that no man's land that can be anywhere.

Out of the corner of my eye, I had watched a man walking down the aisle behind me. At first glance, he looked like any other shopper. I stood beside my cart, preparing to move to the next aisle.

"POW."

Suddenly, small pieces of ceiling tile were falling around me.

I turned to see what had happened. I was not ready for what I saw.

Not now or ever.

Suddenly I was looking into the still-smoking barrel of a sawed-off shotgun and into the wild eyes of a man struggling to insert another shell into the weapon.

"This is a ----- robbery! Get down, we're robbing this ——— store!," the man shouted as he pointed the shotgun at my face.

I hit the floor and tried to hug the polished tiles.

The man raced a few feet, jumped onto a newspaper display and climbed into the small cage-like compartment where you can cash checks or buy car licenses or postage stamps.

A woman inside ran out the door as the man climbed into the office.

There was more shouting across the store as I realized that there were at least two other men robbing the store. People were hitting the floor as fast as they could.

As soon as I realized that I was out of sight of the men and out of their line of fire, I began crawling to the back of the store.

They must be filming a "Dirty Harry" movie, I thought. But I didn't see Clint Eastwood.

I reached the back of the store and sought refuge in a storeroom with about 10-15 other people. Some were hiding behind boxes in a semi-darkened room.

Others, like me, ventured a glance through the windows of the door into the store. At the front of the store, people were sprawled between the aisles leading to cash registers. In every aisle, people were prone beside or behind their shopping carts.

"Is there a way out of the building here?" I asked some of the others in the storeroom. "No," was not the answer I wanted to hear.

I grabbed a telephone from the wall in hopes of calling 911, but it had been disabled.

For a few terrifying moments I joined the people crouching behind the boxes.

Someone who had been watching through the window of the storeroom door shouted, "It's over."

I never did finish my shopping trip. I went home empty-handed, scared and relieved.

Hours later, I could still smell the scent of the gunsmoke.

Lawmakers begin debate on tax, fee increases

■ Senate unveils its own plan to overhaul state's major business tax.

AUSTIN (AP) — House members voted to cut an estimated $630 million from a proposed $3 billion tax plan as debate on the measure continued late Monday night.

After repeated moves that would reduce the plan's revenue take, House Speaker Gib Lewis told lawmakers: "I hope by the time that this is all over we don't end up in the posture of where we have to give rebates."

During the first six hours of debate on the bill, representatives rejected several efforts to kill a proposal 8-cent per gallon increase in the gasoline tax. But they adopted an amendment that would phase in the hike in 4-cent increments in October 1992 and 1993, instead of raising it the entire 8 cents this October.

The House also refused to repeal several tax breaks. They voted 111-27 to retain motor fuels tax exemptions for numerous special interests, including agriculture, shipping and railroads, which reduced the tax bill by $325 million.

Lewis, D-Fort Worth, after that vote told lawmakers to get serious about making "adjustments in our tax code and tax structure to make sure that we can fund the level of state government we all want to see."

■ Senate, House differ on budget/4B

House members also voted 69-67 to cut the state's share of greyhound racing wagers.

The greyhound amendment, sponsored by Rep. Hugo Berlanga, would replace the state's 6 percent tax on each dog racing dollar wagered with a sliding scale of 3 percent to 6 percent, depending on how much business the track does.

Critics said it was an effort by greyhound tracks to protect their profits from competition from a state lottery, approved by the House only hours earlier.

"Lo and behold, here comes what might be viewed as a little competition, and we get into a 'me-too' syndrome," said Rep. Talmadge Heflin, R-Houston. "Friends, this is not need. This is in the greed category."

Rep. Kevin Brady R-The Woodlands, said: "This is a group that defines the word sleazy. They do not deserve this tax break."

But Berlanga said dog tracks simply deserve the same break the Legislature gave horse racing tracks earlier this year, when lawmakers OK'd a sliding scale levy beginning a 1 percent on the first $100 million wagered at a track.

"The real issue here is whether we're going to have a pari-mutuel industry here that's going to continue to have the economic impact that we expect," said Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi.

The House also adopted amendments to extend the state sales tax to mail-order catalog and television sales and to all food items sold from vending machines.

The tax plan put forward by the Ways and Means Committee last week would extend the franchise tax to all businesses by taxing either net business income or capital, whichever is greater. Businesses wouldn't be taxed on the first $45,000 of income.

It also would raise tuition at state colleges from the current $20 per semester credit hour to $32 in 1996-97, and hike the gasoline tax from 15 cents per gallon to 23 cents.

Numerous fee increases also are proposed in the House plan, including a driver's license fee hike, from $16 for four years to $25 for five years; a new sales and use tax of 6.25 percent for a boat or outboard motor; and an additional court cost of $2.50 for those convicted of most misdemeanor offenses, while those convicted of driving while intoxicated would pay an additional court cost of $30.

In another development, Senate leaders proposed their own plan to overhaul the state's major business tax, saying it would raise an additional $800 million for the state while protecting small businesses.

Group takes state to task over new voting boundaries

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — A group that says legislators discriminated against minorities by using faulty census data to draw up new voting boundaries took the state to court Monday in an attempt to get those lines redrawn.

Attorneys for several South Texas residents who say they were not counted in last year's census petitioned 332nd District Judge Mario E. Ramirez to issue an injunction that would force legislators to accept adjusted census data.

They also asked that the court order a new set of plans be drawn up using the data, which would take into account a large portion of the state's population that was not counted.

The '90 census missed 500,000 to 600,000 Texans, especially minorities, in its final tally, said Jim Harrington, the lead attorney for the plaintiffs.

"The Legislature failed in its duty to create an opportunity for minorities" to vote equally, Harrington told the judge. "This court has the right to make the determination under Texas laws as to what voting rights are."

The state's lead attorney, Renea Hicks of the Texas Attorney General's office, countered by saying that since neither of the reapportionment plans devised by the Legislature has been approved on the federal level, no one was being harmed by the new lines.

In addition, Hicks said the state was currently fighting it's own battle in federal court to get the government to release adjusted census figures.

But Harrington said the Texas Legislature had other means of ensuring minorities were properly accounted for and represented. As it stands, their voting strength is being diluted by the new districts, he said.

Harrington presented several witnesses who testified that Hispanics had been undercounted last year and that South Texas residents would suffer as a result.

Hidalgo County Judge Edgar Ruiz, who said census takers missed some 35,000 county residents, testified that the new district lines would dilute the votes of Hispanic residents.

Ruiz also said that the undercount would cost the county millions in terms of state funding.

Another witness, Alan Lichtman, a history professor at American University in Washington, D.C., said that the census had been traditionally flawed.

The count of the nation's population always misses people, but especially minorities, who wind up being underrepresented as a result, said Lichtman, who was presented as an expert witness on redistricting and census taking.

U.S. Senate agrees to triage for nation's trauma centers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has authorized $50 million in aid for the nation's trauma centers, which are suffering staggering financial losses as they treat the victims of gang violence and drug wars, says Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

The Senate agreed late Friday to a bill sponsored by Bentsen, D-Texas, that would authorize $50 million in direct grants to hospital trauma centers whose existence is threatened by escalating violence. Funding for the measure would also have to be provided by Congress.

"Many of our cities have become war zones," says Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., a cosponsor of the Trauma Center Revitalization Act. "Residents are getting caught in the cross fire and are being injured and in many cases killed. Yet, in these same areas, trauma centers are closing because they lack the funds to stay open."

Bentsen said the centers most at risk are generally in larger cities where battles between gangs and drug traffickers have become a way of life.

"Each night the wounded are transported to these specialized emergency rooms," he told the Senate. But trauma centers are losing millions of dollars because patients frequently can't or don't pay for their treatment.

The legislation, approved on a voice vote as an amendment to another bill, focuses largely on the unpaid care trauma centers given to victims of drug-related, penetrating trauma such as gunshot and stab wounds. But it would also include unpaid care given to victims of blunt trauma, such as car and motorcycle accidents.

"These wounds and injuries consume vast amounts of care," said Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "Grant priority would go to those centers which are providing the only trauma care in a community and which are at risk of closing because of staggering losses. These grants are needed to help keep these centers open."

Bentsen said centers would have to agree to remain open for two years for every year a grant is received. A center could receive grants for up to four years.

A General Accounting Office report in May found that about 60 trauma centers nationwide had been closed in the last five years. A survey of 15 of those centers found they had been forced to close because of losses from uncompensated trauma care, Bentsen said.

State, feds battling jail overcrowding

WACO (AP) — County jailers here could make better use of their facility by removing federal inmates, Texas prison authorities said. But a sheriff's official says crowding wouldn't be a problem if the state would do its job.

Like other counties in Texas, McLennan County is battling the state over what few vacancies exist in local jails.

While state officials predict bed space would increase if federal prisoners were removed, the county says the same is true if Texas Department of Corrections inmates were removed.

"Today, we're holding 126 state prisoners," said Chief Deputy Dan Weyenberg, who said he was speaking for himself. "We're drawing nothing for them.

"The taxpayers here are paying their keep. We're also holding 104 federal prisoners who are more than paying their way," he said. "Which ones should we have to get rid of? It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure that one out."

Last week, the Commission on Jail Standards put a cap on the county jail population, effective Sept. 25. If enacted, the cap would limit the number of prisoners to 431.

Recently, the McLennan County Jail's population has soared to more than 500 prisoners.

On Friday, there were 530 inmates. Of those, 104 were federal prisoners.

Wayne Gondeck, planner for the jail standards commission, said the panel has made no demands concerning federal prisoners.

"We just questioned county officials as to whether that was the best use the county could make of its jail space," Gondeck said. "No directive was given to the county. They were given further time to review their needs and what they're going to do about them."

The State

■ State sending boundaries plan to Justice

AUSTIN — Texas' plans for redrawing legislative boundaries will be submitted this week for pre-clearance by the U.S. Justice Department, Secretary of State John Hannah said.

Hannah said Monday that he would submit the plan to the department's Civil Rights Division, which "will review the plans for a discriminatory purpose or discriminatory effect."

Such submissions are required by the Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965, he said.

Some legislative leaders had said they would prefer to send the redistricting plans to a three-judge federal court in Washington.

However, civil rights leaders objected to going straight to the court, saying officials were trying to protect white incumbents by bypassing the Justice Department.

Attorney General Dan Morales last week advised legislative leaders that submitting the plan to the agency would be faster than going through the court.

■ Alberto-Culver to modify hair-spray labels

AUSTIN — The Alberto-Culver Co. has agreed to change how it advertises its hair spray products, removing what Attorney General Dan Morales called misleading and unsubstantiated environmental claims.

Morales said Monday the company agreed after negotiations with 10 states to modify its "green" claims and pay some legal costs for the states.

Alberto-Culver claimed that the absence of chlorofluorocarbons in several of its hair sprays made the products neutral to the earth's upper ozone level, and therefore environmentally safe, Morales said.

However, the company did not acknowledge in advertising or packaging that the presence of pollutants such as butane and propane in the hair sprays contributes to the concentration of hazardous ground level ozone or smog, Morales said.

■ Crime wave spreads to candidate's office

HOUSTON — A mayoral candidate's pledge to fight crime didn't stop a burglar from breaking into his campaign office and stealing a television, police said.

A burglar broke into the headquarters of state Rep. Sylvester Turner during the weekend, breaking two windows after an aide forgot to switch on the burglar alarm, Turner's staff said.

"Basically what it says is no one is immune," said Turner, a Democrat who has focused his mayoral campaign on fighting crime. "It's just another indication we do need to increase police presence in this city."

Violent felonies in Houston have increased 19 percent this year compared to the first half of last year.

Turner is running against Mayor Kathy Whitmire in the Nov. 5 nonpartisan election.

Senate, House differ on state budget

By Jack Keever and Michael Holmes
Associated Press writers

AUSTIN — Senate leaders Monday were adding up the total cost of their proposed state budget, a tally that likely will run about $2.2 billion higher than a controversial spending plan passed by the House.

Lawmakers are struggling in a special session that ends Aug. 13 to write a 1992-93 state budget in the face of a projected $4.8 billion deficit.

After more than 14 hours of debate, the House voted at 3:33 a.m. Monday to adopt an approximately $56.1 billion spending plan.

That budget would spend $32.5 billion in general, tax-supported revenues. That is about $1.8 billion more than the state comptroller says will be available, but $2.9 billion less than the cost to continue current services, according to budget staff members.

In contrast, the Senate Finance Committee's plan would require about $34.8 billion in general revenue, according to committee Chairman John Montford.

Jim Oliver, director of the Legislative Budget Board, said the House and Senate budgets, both in funding and spending priorities, were as far apart as he had ever seen.

Montford, D-Lubbock, said a fiscal management bill that would consolidate many state funds could save $1 billion, closing the gap between proposed Senate spending and expected tax revenue to approximately $2.5 billion.

'It just looks like they are playing games with us over there.'

— Sen. Jim Turner, D-Crockett, on House's $56.1 billion spending plan

"We've still got a lot of work to do," Montford said. "We've still got a tax bill."

The House-passed budget would allow an additional $1.57 billion in spending on such items as education, prisons and welfare — but only if lawmakers find enough extra money through a lottery, tax increases or cuts in other spending.

The House budget was adopted on an 80-66 vote and sent to the Senate, but no one appeared satisfied.

Some lawmakers said the bill was too stingy, taking money from higher education, prisons and other critical areas; others said it was excessive, totaling an estimated $2 billion more than the current spending.

Rep. Jim Rudd, who heads the House Appropriations Committee, said the budget made no one happy but urged approval so a compromise could be worked out with the Senate.

"On the right, it hasn't been cut enough, and on the left, it's cut too much," said Rudd, D-Brownfield.

"I will tell you it is not a good bill ... But if you ask me if it's a fair bill under the time and circumstances ... it's a fair bill," Rudd said.

House Speaker Gib Lewis called it a "bare-bones budget."

The House plan would lower by $200 million the spending increase for human services, making fewer Texans eligible for nursing home care, lawmakers said. The Senate bill would restore at least that amount, senators said.

It also would take $500 million from higher education, lawmakers said. And the House approved an amendment that would force Texas A&M University and the University of Texas to absorb a larger share of those cuts.

"What they did was vote to destroy the University of Texas and Texas A&M," complained UT-Austin President William Cunningham.

Montford said, "What it does is hits right between the eyes of the South Texas initiative" to upgrade higher education in that area by aligning certain schools with the UT and A&M systems.

"I am little dumfounded they did it really, because I guarantee you that's what is going to be cut, and to me I think it's ill-advised," Montford said.

Montford said the Senate bill would increase higher education by about 7 percent, a raise that lawmakers say is necessary to keep up with growing student enrollment.

On public education, senators added $1.7 billion while the House measure would spend about $725 million less than called for under the state's new school finance law, which lawmakers said would force local school property taxes to go up.

Necessary funding for operating new prisons and settling an overcrowding lawsuit with several counties was excluded from the House bill, while the Senate proposal would plug in those funds. That is a difference of almost $1 billion.

"It just looks like they are playing games with us over there," Sen. Jim Turner, D-Crockett, said of the House proposal.

Senate OKs insurance, commerce legislation

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved a bill that would give the governor power to appoint the executive director of the Texas Department of Commerce, which Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown said could lead to politicians taking charge of state agencies.

Brown's amendment to eliminate the provision failed 22-8 Monday.

The bill by Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, would allow the executive director to employ personnel, including an auditor and human rights officer.

Middle school encourages uniformed look

HOUSTON (AP) — Some Key Middle School students already are outfitted for the new school year, and they all chose the same thing.

The students are the city's first to wear uniforms, which are encouraged but not required by the school. Some predict the trend will catch on, while others say identical clothes won't keep kids from finding something to fight about.

Carol Galloway, former president of the school's PTA, said she once watched two students fighting because one student wearing designer clothes taunted the other student's less distinctive clothes.

She said she thought at the time that uniforms would help prevent such brawls.

With uniforms, she said, "you don't know the rich child from the poor child."

The first school in the Houston Independent School District to approve the use of uniforms, Key will join a growing number of public schools nationwide doing what private schools have done for centuries.

Key Middle School is in a poor section of Houston, and most of the students are from single-parent homes. About 60 percent of the students qualify for free-lunch programs.

Girls would wear navy blue jumpers or skirts and light blue or white blouses. Boys would wear navy slacks and light blue or white shirts. Three complete outfits cost about $133 for the boys and $148 for the girls.

But Key cannot require uniforms, only encourage them.

Principal Charles Henderson and parents who promoted the idea say the uniforms will prove popular and will translate into fewer discipline problems, greater school pride, a more studious atmosphere and ultimately, higher test scores.

"In this day of change, we have to do something to get kids back into the mode of studying, and we have to do something to attract them to stay here," Henderson said.

The PTA voted in May to ask Henderson to sanction the uniforms. Students were called together at the end of the school year to discuss them and see them modeled.

Henderson said parents have had "the phone ringing off the wall all summer long" trying to get the uniforms.

Although some students have said they don't want the uniforms, eighth-grader Victoria Montgomery said, "If everybody else gets them, they'll get them."

Brad Hamilton, a spokesman for Supreme Water Treatment, explained how his company's system can make a difference for you. "Midland water contains 1800 to 3000 parts per million of total dissolved solids. With our system, it drops the solids to 200 parts per million. Some other systems water, after treatment, contains 1200 parts per million. Texas requirements for bottled water are under 500 parts per million, so our system drops it well under state standards."

"We also use an auto shut off valve on our reverse osmosis systems. When the tank is full, the system shuts down. Most systems on the market use a check valve system that allows good and bad water to pass down the drain when the tank is full. Our system saves about 1000 gallons of water a month."

Royals lose fairy-tale romance, tabloids insist

By Craig R. Whitney
N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — Ten years ago it was all pageantry and splendor, trumpet fanfares at St. Paul's Cathedral, the romance and the wedding of the century.

Lady Diana Spencer and Charles, prince of Wales and heir to the throne, enthralled Britain and the world with their royal romance. But if the popular tabloids and the gossip columns are to be believed, they did not live happily ever after.

There was always plenty of material there for spoilsports. Charles is 12 years older than his wife; he prefers calm and classical music and she likes discos.

Their tin anniversary on July 29 has been kicked around by Fleet Street so hard it almost rattles, but millions of Britons and other royal-watchers around the world are wont to hear all the dirt, making publishers of racy newspapers and glossy magazines rich. Punch, the satirical weekly, observed: "Perhaps they don't quarrel at all. Perhaps the papers just make it up."

Not so, says Police Constable Andrew Jacques, a guard at the prince and the princess' country house, Highgate, in Gloucestershire. He told the tabloid Today this spring, "The only time they meet up is at meal times, and very often that ends in a blazing row for all to hear."

Charles sleeps alone with a teddy bear in his bedroom, leaving the princess in the master bedroom by herself, Jacques said; during the day, the prince prefers the company of the vegetables he cultivates and talks to in the garden to that of his wife. "They never smile, laugh or do anything together," the constable averred.

So what about it? Did the royal couple celebrate their private wedding anniversary dinner by hurling crockery at each other, or with stars in their eyes? Buckingham Palace would say only that they observed it privately.

Yes, but happily or unhappily? "Private means private," a nannyish spokeswoman said reprovingly, in a tone that brooked no further questions. Buckingham Palace seldom does.

That's why the gossip is so juicy, according to Harold B. Brooks-Baker, publishing director of Burke's Peerage, a man who takes the royals very seriously and deigns to view the tabloids at most once a week.

AP Laserphoto

According to the British tabloids, the Prince and Princess of Wales, who recently celebrated their 10th anniversary, haven't lived happily ever after.

"You can't break down a marriage that's been put up the way the press has put this one up," he said disdainfully. "I've always suggested that this was an arranged marriage. Lady Diana Spencer filled the requirements; she was non-Roman Catholic, she was a virgin and she was the right age — 20 when they were married — to produce an heir."

"The least you can say," Brooks-Baker insisted, "is that this is a traditional marriage, with respect on both sides, and that there's friendship. The press made a lot out of the fact that they were apart on her 30th birthday last month, but very little out of the fact that on the following weekend she and her husband were together, there was a birthday cake, and he gave her a lovely bracelet."

The Daily Mail, a newspaper that bannered the birthday split and surrounded it with a black border of mourning, says it doesn't mean a thing.

"The marriage is dormant in many aspects," said Nigel Dempster, the paper's diary editor and the premier gossip columnist of the land. "It is very significant that there has been no child following the birth of Harry in 1984." Prince Harry was born on Sept. 15 that year, two years after the birth of Prince William on June 21, 1982.

"One member of the royal family told me that in the 1950s and 1960s Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip also spent 10 years apart, but then came Prince Andrew. What we hope is that a similar miracle will occur and produce another child."

Dempster said that Charles is more interested in pursuing his interests in architecture, education, polo and the environment than in pursuing his marriage, and feels more comfortable with his old friend Camilla Parker-Bowles, whom he's been close to for the last 10 to 15 years, than he does with the princess.

"Diana basically blames the re-emergence of Camilla Parker-Bowles for the breakup of the marriage," Dempster said, as if it were all over already. But, catching himself, he noted, "There can never be a divorce, obviously, because it's the end of Charles' claim to the monarchy if there is."

The last ruler who preferred quality time with the woman he loved to public duty was Edward VIII, who abdicated in 1936 to marry a twice-divorced American commoner, Wallis Warfield Simpson.

Quayle: U.S. not progressing in war on drugs

MACUTO, Venezuela (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle said Monday that the United States had made little headway in its war against drug-trafficking in Latin America.

"We are not going to be satisfied until we lick the problem," Quayle said, pledging continued aid to Latin American nations trying to curb the flow of drugs into the United States.

Quayle, accompanied by Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, is on a tour aimed at strengthening U.S. trade and investment in the region under the Bush administration's Enterprise for the Americas initiative.

The four-nation trip includes Argentina, Brazil and Haiti.

The vice president was asked about the drug war after four hours of talks with President Carlos Andres Perez at the presidential retreat.

Venezuela has become a major base for drug operations, partly as a result of a government crackdown in neighboring Colombia that forced traffickers to find alternate sea and land routes to Europe and the United States.

Quayle said both Bush and Perez "are committed to an all-out war against drugs."

People come to Hiroshima's memorial to remember

HIROSHIMA, Japan (AP) — On the eve of the 46th anniversary of the world's first atomic attack, as on every other day, Hiroshima remembers.

The city that rose from the ashes of the bombing on Aug. 6, 1945, is peppered with reminders: gutted buildings, memorial tablets and statues heaped with rainbow-hued paper cranes.

The differences among the thousands of people who have converged here seem to reflect Japan's soul-searching over its post-war pacifism.

Rightists have called for a rearmed, stronger Japan, while anti-war leftists have protested Japan's $13 billion contribution to the Gulf War.

Japan's constitution, written at U.S. insistence after World War II, bans using force except defensively, but Parliament is debating whether the nation's Self Defense Forces should be allowed to join international peacekeeping operations.

Outside the Peace Memorial Museum and Hiroshima city hall Monday, hundreds of riot policemen stood guard against ultra-rightist groups in convoys of black trucks that held up rush-hour traffic and blasted passers-by with loudspeakers.

The rightists lambasted the government's efforts toward rapprochement with the Soviet Union and North Korea.

"Smash U.S. and Soviet bullying," a banner on one truck read. Another urged building up the military.

Thousands of leftist groups also gathered to renew their protests against nuclear weapons and war.

Religious groups also have gathered in the city. A Western man shouldering a cross on a wheel made his way through one end of the vast Peace Memorial Park, shaking hands when he stopped to rest.

Deep inside the park, a group of Buddhist priests chanted before memorial altars while a colleague beat a drum.

Most remembrances of the war are private, silent prayers before altars scented with incense for the 140,000 people who died after the bomb exploded with a blinding flash just above what is now the park.

"War is a very complicated thing. Anyone who experienced the wretchedness and desolation of war knows that no war is good, but each side always has its reasons," says Tsunehiko Miyake, 77, a retiree who fought in World War II.

He says the Hiroshima atomic bomb attack, carried out by the United States to defeat Japan and end World War II, couldn't be helped. Nor could the Gulf War.

Yoshitaka Kawamoto, president of the Peace Memorial Museum and the lone survivor of a class of 47 junior high school students, doesn't mince words as he grimly recounts his own escape from the inferno that followed the bomb's blast — three months of blindness, bleeding and baldness.

Bubka flies again

MALMO, Sweden (AP) — Sergei Bubka became the first to clear 20 feet outdoors in the pole vault, breaking his own world record by a half-inch at Monday's iDag Galan track meet.

But he was not hopeful during warmups. Bubka, who holds the indoor mark of 20-1, was tired and felt some pain in his left leg while preparing for the competition.

Almost five hours later on his final attempt, however, the 28-year-old Soviet topped his outdoor mark of 19-11¾ set in Italy on July 8.

"It was so difficult jumping early in the competition," said Bubka, who made his first two heights at 18-8¼ and 19-2¼.

"I only had one rest day after competing in Monaco Saturday and my leg was hurting, so I only planned to make one try at 6.10."

But the fans changed his mind. With most of crowd still chanting "Bubka, Bubka", the Soviet vaulter got all the motivaion he needed.

"The atmosphere was great," Bubka said. "The fans helped me. They gave me power. I felt very fast and very strong."

It was the fourth time this year Bubka broke the outdoor record.

Leroy Burrell retained his edge over Carl Lewis in the 100 meters, beating his Santa Monica Track Club teammate by .7 seconds to win the "Kings of Sprint" event.

Burrell, facing Lewis for the second time in the 100 this season, took the lead early and won in 10.06 seconds.

Legendary Brown dies at age of 82

■ Funeral services for Paul Brown, the father of the Cleveland Browns and Cincinnati Bengals, are set for Wednesday.

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Paul Brown, one of football's brightest innovators and most successful coaches, died Monday at age 82.

Brown helped form the Cleveland Browns and later the Cincinnati Bengals, for whom he was still part owner and general manager. His colleagues and former players remembered Brown for helping shape the National Football League and the way football coaching is done.

"He was a stickler for detail, a well-organized person and — like any successful man — he was able to delegate responsibility to his assistants," said Lou Groza, who played for Brown in high school, college and the pros.

Brown died early Monday at his suburban Cincinnati home of complications from pneumonia. Funeral services are Wednesday in Massillon, Ohio, the city where Brown coached Massillon 1932 to 1940.

Washington High School's football team to six state championships and four national titles from Former NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle credited Brown with encouraging Rozelle to become commissioner when he was asked in 1960 at age 33.

"Whether they know it or not, nearly everyone in the game of football has been affected by Paul Brown. His wealth of ideas changed the game," Rozelle said from his San Diego home. "When I was approached about becoming NFL commissioner, I expressed some initial reservations because I was so young, but Paul Brown reassured me and said, 'Don't worry. You'll grow with the job.'"

Paul Tagliabue, who succeeded Rozelle as NFL commissioner, said: "He brought innovation and meticulous organization to every level of the game and was a true founder of the NFL's modern era ... What he taught everyone in football would fill volumes."

More than 50 of Brown's former players and assistants have been NFL coaches, including Sam Wyche, Chuck Noll, Bill Walsh, Don Shula, Bruce

Angels drop Wichita, 5-3

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

As a set-up man out of the Midland Angels bullpen, Mike Butcher has found his niche.

Monday night, Butcher was called upon to handle closing duties. And he just may have a future there, also.

Butcher, forced into the closer role after Doug Robertson was given a night off, was the third of three Angel pitchers. The former starter retired all four Wichita batters he faced to earn his second save of the season as Midland shut down the Wranglers 5-3 in one of the quickest games of the season at Angels Stadium.

By no means was Butcher the only Midland pitcher worthy of mention, however. Angel starter Don Vidmar threw 6⅔ innings and struck out four to earn his 11th win of the season. And Hector Berrios pitched portions of the seventh and eighth, retiring all three batters he faced. The three pitchers combined to strike out seven Wichita batters.

Despite the win, Midland will remain in second place, one game behind San Antonio. The Missions (22-19), who scored 11 runs in the second inning, went on to thrash El Paso, 18-6.

"It fits my aggressive personality," Butcher said of his duty as a reliever, be it as a closer or set-up man. "As a reliever, you know you're going to go out there and pitch one to three innings and you can just go out there and go after the batter."

Americans cry foul in Havana

Associated Press

HAVANA — Americans were cheated of three golds and flat out beaten in every other event on the worst track and field day for the United States in Pan American Games history.

While the best U.S. sprinters were cavorting in Europe, America's "B" team showed up Monday and watched Cubans and Brazilians dance gleefully to the victory stand in Havana.

The United States won 26 Pan Am golds in track and field in 1987, but after 14 events so far this year it has only one — a 3,000-meter victory by Sabrina Dornhoefer.

The U.S. posted easy wins in baseball and men's and women's basketball. But in nine track and field events, the Americans came out without a single gold.

Cuba won six gold medals and Brazil three. The United States collected five silvers and four bronzes.

The U.S. team's biggest disappointment was in the most glamorous event, the men's 100 meters, where Andre Cason finished second behind Brazil's Robson da Silva's 10:32 clocking.

Twice called back to the starting blocks after dubious false starts by other runners, Cason simply couldn't keep up his strength the third time.

"My explosiveness wasn't there," said Cason, who complained that he had lost six pounds in the two days since he arrived because he couldn't adjust to the food. "It was just a bad day at the office."

He led at 20 meters on the second false start, which was charged to John Mair of Jamaica.

"If that start was valid, I would have lost," da Silva acknowledged.

A more blatant injustice ruined the chances for an American gold in the long jump as Llewellyn Starks lost because of an official's error.

Starks leaped to about 27 feet, 7 inches on his second jump, enough to give him the gold. But an official ruled that

AP Laserphoto

Argentina's Marcela Andreozi pulls down a rebound amid a flurry of U.S. activity in the Pan Am Games.

Starks' toe had touched the foul line, voiding the jump. Sweepers immediately cleared his mark while he went back to argue with the official.

After a long look at the line, the official agreed with Starks, but the mark was gone and Starks had to settle for an extra jump.

"They covered up the mark before he said, "You're right,"' said Starks, from Jonesboro, La.

Starks wound up winning a silver with a jump of 26-3½, shy of the 27-1¾ winning jump of Jaime Jefferson of Cuba.

"I don't want it, because I deserve the gold," Starks fumed. "They know I deserve the gold. Because if I didn't deserve the gold I wouldn't have got the jump over. So they know I deserve the gold. That's why I don't want the silver. If I'd have gotten the silver legitimately, I'd accepted it with pride. I can't do that now. I'm mad."

Starks came out to the medal ceremony waving an American flag, but said he would put the silver "in a drawer somewhere or give it away."

American Chryste Gaines complained that foul play by officials thwarted her in the women's 100 meters. A false start was called at least 20 meters into the race, with Gaines way out in front.

"If we'd gone with the first one, I'd had won," said Gaines, who finished second to Cuba's Liliana Allen. "We didn't false start."

Asked if she'd ever seen so many false starts in a meet, she said, "Yes, I've run in Cuba before. In '87, we had a lot of false starts like this. They just like the Cubans to win."

The most popular victory with the crowd was by another Cuban, Ana Quirot, in the 400-meter run.

In women's basketball, the Americans reacted to the shock of defeat with no less viciousness than a swarm of killer bees, mercilessly attacking an unfortunate Argentine team that happened to get in their way.

After seeing their streak of international victories end at 42 games Sunday against Brazil, the U.S. women stung Argentina 97-40 to guarantee a spot in the medal round, where all records are wiped clean.

Brazil also moved on by beating Canada 74-66.

For the Americans, it wasn't a workout so much as a warning to the other teams in the tournament. The United States (2-1) might have let up a little after leading 52-30 at halftime. Instead they kept most of their best players in and held Argentina to three field goals in a 45-10 second half.

"We wanted to maintain the defensive intensity," U.S. coach Vivian Stringer said.

Mid-City wins 4-3

■ Midland Mid-City downs Hallettsville in its Little League state tournament opener.

Staff Report

WACO — Competing in its second straight Little League state baseball tournament, Midland Mid-City claimed its tourney opener here Monday with a 4-3 win over Hallettsville.

The wins sets up a second-round match between Mid-City and Falfurrias at 8 p.m. tonight in the double-elimination tournament.

On Monday, the game remained scoreless until the top of the third inning, when Hallettsville scored three runs on two home runs. But Mid-City came back in the bottom of the third with a two-RBI double by Jason Rogers and a squeeze bunt by Ross Nobles to score Rogers.

The game remained tied until the bottom of the sixth and final inning, when Midland's Blake Moravcik took a full-count base on balls with the bases loaded to earn the game-winning RBI.

Rogers threw a complete game for Mid-City, allowing four hits while striking out six and walking none, and was backed up by excellent defensive efforts from shortstop Eric Eschberger and rightfielder Clifford Morris, according to Mid-City coach Joe Nobles.

AL

ARLINGTON — Mark Whiten hit two home runs in a game for the first time in his career and Eric King pitched a two-hitter Monday night, giving the Cleveland Indians a 9-0 victory over the Texas Rangers.

The Indians, the lowest-scoring team in the majors, got 19 hits. They won for just the fourth time in 14 games.

King (5-6) struck out seven and walked one in his fifth lifetime shutout and first since June 22, 1990. It was King's best low-hit game, surpassing a three-hit shutout against Seattle on April 22, 1989.

Whiten, obtained June 27 from Toronto, hit a 418-foot homer over the center field wall to open a three-run second inning against Kevin Brown (7-9). Two singles, an error, Felix Fermin's groundout and Glenallen Hill's single scored the other two runs.

Whiten hit his eighth home run of the season in the fourth inning. The Indians added a fifth run in the fifth on a single by Carlos Baerga and a double by Albert Belle. Brown gave up nine hits in 4 2-3 innings.

The Indians scored their sixth run in the seventh on consecutive doubles by Belle and Joel Skinner, and got another run in the eighth on a triple by Alex Cole and Hill's single off Mike Jeffcoat. Cole and Baerga hit RBI singles in the ninth.

Yankees 7, Tigers 5

DETROIT — Mel Hall homered and drove in five runs, leading the New York Yankees past Detroit.

Hall went 4-for-4 and tied his career high for RBIs. Don Mattingly also homered for the Yankees.

Cecil Fielder hit his major league-leading 32nd home run for Detroit. Dave Bergman, Lou Whitaker and Tony Phillips each connected for the Tigers.

Scott Sanderson (11-7) struck out a career-high 12 in six innings, allowing four runs on as many hits. Lee Guetterman got three outs for his sixth save.

Walt Terrell (7-10) gave up five runs on seven hits and two walks in 4 1-3 innings.

Mattingly hit his seventh home run, and first since June 21, in the first inning. Bergman tied it in the second with his third homer.

The Yankees took a 2-1 lead in the third when Bernie Williams doubled and later scored on Hall's single. Hall hit a bases-loaded, two-run double in the fifth and Matt Nokes followed with a sacrifice fly.

Sanderson had a two-hitter and 10 strikeouts through five innings, but ran into trouble in the sixth. Milt Cuyler drew a leadoff walk and Whitaker and Phillips hit consecutive home runs.

Hall, however, hit a two-run homer in the seventh. His 15th homer made it 7-4.

Fielder hit a 410-foot shot into the left field upper deck in the eighth off Eric Plunk.

Brewers 6, Orioles 5

BALTIMORE — Robin Yount doubled home the tiebreaking run in the ninth inning, spoiling Baltimore's comeback and sending the Milwaukee Brewers over the Orioles.

The Brewers blew a 5-0 lead, then won it in the ninth when Darryl Hamilton singled off Mark Williamson (3-5) and Yount doubled. It was Milwaukee's second straight victory after losing 10 of 12.

Baltimore pulled even in the eighth against Doug Henry (2-0). Edwin Nunez pitched the ninth for his fourth save, and first since May 3.

Milwaukee used two doubles, two walks and a single in the second inning to grab a 3-0 lead. After Roy Smith gave up an RBI single to Dale Sveum, Willie Randolph walked to load the bases with two out and Hamilton hit a two-run double off Stacy Jones.

Royals 5, Red Sox 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — George Brett's second double and 1,001st career extra-base hit ignited a three-run rally in the eighth inning, leading the Kansas City Royals over the Boston Red Sox.

Brett, who doubled in the sixth inning for extra-base hit No. 1,000, doubled again in the eighth. Brian McRae scored from first base on the play when left fielder Mike Greenwell mishandled the ball, tying it at 3.

One out later, Bill Pecota was walked intentionally and Gary Thurman's single to deep short scored pinch runner Kevin Seitzer. David Howard's double drove in Pecota.

Athletics 3, Mariners 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Ron Darling made his first American League start a gem, pitching two-hit ball in seven innings for his 100th career victory as the Oakland Athletics beat the Seattle Mariners.

Dave Henderson singled home a run in the third inning and Oakland scored twice in the eighth. The Athletics stopped Seattle's three-game winning streak.

Darling won four days after he was traded to the A's by Montreal for two minor league pitchers. He went 0-3 with a 7.41 ERA for the Expos after the New York Mets traded him there on July 15. He was 5-5 with the Mets.

Giants beat Bills again in Super Bowl rematch

Associated Press

NFL Preseason

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New York Giants made Ray Handley's coaching debut a success by beating the Buffalo Bills 23-17 on Monday night in a rematch of Super Bowl XXV.

Lewis Tillman's 3-yard touchdown run ignited a 13-point second-half outburst as the Giants beat the Bills at Giants Stadium in August the same way they did at Tampa Stadium in January — by controlling the ball. New York, which held the ball for more than 40 minutes in winning the Super Bowl, had it for 38 minutes in its exhibition opener.

However, the game did not shed any light on Handley's biggest dilemma — the question of who should be his starting quarterback.

Both Phil Simms and Jeff Hostetler played well. Simms hit 6 of 11 for 46 yards and led New York to 10 points, while Hostetler was 10 of 13 for 136 yards and helped the Giants to 13 points.

Hostetler's big play was a 48-yard, third-quarter pass to fullback Maurice Carthon that gave New York a first down at Buffalo's 4. Two plays later, Tillman, who had 11 carries for 61 yards, ran off right tackle to break a 10-10 halftime tie.

Field goals of 31 and 26 yards by free agent Philip Doyle stretched the lead to 23-10 early in the fourth quarter.

Buffalo narrowed the gap to six points just 25 seconds later on a 69-yard pass play from Gale Gilbert to Carwell Gardner on which the Giants missed three tackles.

Buccaneers 23, Browns 10

CLEVELAND — Starter Vinny Testaverde completed all four of his passes and backups Chris Chandler and Jeff Carlson each directed touchdown drives as the Tampa Bay Buccaneers beat the Cleveland Browns.

The exhibition opener for both teams marked the head coaching debut of Cleveland's Bill Belichick, formerly defensive coordinator for the Super Bowl champion New York Giants. Tampa Bay's Richard Williamson is starting his first full season as coach after taking over with three games left last year.

The crowd of 64,753 observed 30 seconds of silence before the game in honor of Paul Brown, who died earlier Monday. Brown founded the Browns and later the Cincinnati Bengals.

Testaverde, playing only the first two series, was 4-for-4 for 44 yards, putting the Bucs in range for Steve Christie's field goals of 44 and 20 yards.

Chandler played the rest of the half, finishing off an 80-yard drive with a 5-yard scramble for a touchdown with 23 seconds left in the second quarter. Chandler's dive into the end zone was reviewed by instant replay and upheld.

Carlson threw a 6-yard touchdown pass to John Harvey in the third quarter.

Astro win streak goes to eight games

Associated Press

NL

HOUSTON — The Houston Astros extended their winning steak to a season-high eight games as Craig Biggio's 12th-inning single drove in Rafael Ramirez with the deciding run in a 2-1 win over the San Diego Padres on Monday night.

It was the last-place Astros' fourth straight one-run victory, all in their last at-bat. The winning streak is Houston's longest since winning 10 straight from May 26 to June 4, 1989.

San Diego tied the game in the ninth with a run off reliever Curt Schilling. Tony Gwynn led off with a double and moved to third on Jerald Clark's two-out infield single. Thomas Howard then lined a single to left to score Gwynn.

Houston starter Pete Harnisch held the Padres scoreless for seven innings, striking out a career-high 12. Harnisch lowered his ERA to 2.37 while allowing only two runners to advance as far as second base.

San Diego starter Greg Harris held Houston to four hits in seven innings, giving up one unearned run. Harris struck out eight and walked two.

Harris held the Astros hitless until Jeff Bagwell singled with two outs in the fourth. Bagwell went to third on a single by Luis Gonzalez and scored on catcher Benito Santiago's throwing error when Santiago attempted to pick off Gonzalez at first.

There were 28 strikeouts in the game, a major league-high this season. The previous high was 27 set July 25 by Cincinnati and the Chicago Cubs.

Cubs 7, Mets 2

NEW YORK — The Chicago Cubs completed their first four-game sweep at Shea Stadium since 1965 by beating New York, sending the Mets to their sixth straight loss.

The Cubs (52-52) have picked up five games in the past eight days to move within 9½ games of first-place Pittsburgh in the National League East. Chicago has won 10 of its last 14 games.

In a matchup of 22-year-old rookies, Frank Castillo (4-2) survived the first inning better than Pete Schourek (2-2) as the Cubs reached the .500 mark for the first time since June 16.

The Cubs, who outscored the Mets 28-9 in the four games, got off to another fast start by loading the bases with none out in the first. Andre Dawson made it 1-0 with a foul sacrifice fly and Luis Salazar added a two-run single.

New York rattled Castillo in the bottom of the first on Howard Johnson's RBI single, but then he settled down and scattered nine hits for his third complete game.

With two out in the fifth, Dawson hit his 19th homer of the season and 365th of his career. It was Dawson's 32nd lifetime homer off Mets pitching.

Reds 10, Dodgers 6

CINCINNATI — Glenn Braggs started a six-run third inning off Ramon Martinez with one of his two homers as the Cincinnati Reds tightened the National League West race with a victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The third-place Reds moved to 5½ games behind Los Angeles with only their eighth victory in 25 games. The Dodgers have lost their last four and 14 of their 16 road games since the All-Star break to let the Reds and second-place Atlanta back into the race. The Braves closed within 2½ games by beating San Francisco 5-2.

Cincinnati won the opener of a four-game series by ending Martinez's invincibility at Riverfront Stadium. Martinez (14-6) had won all three of his career starts in Cincinnati, allowing just six earned runs.

The Reds scored that many in the third inning, sending 10 batters to the plate to overcome a 3-0 deficit.

Braves 5, Giants 2

ATLANTA — John Smoltz pitched a six-hitter for his fifth win in six starts and Tommy Gregg hit a two-run homer to cap a five-run third inning as the Atlanta Braves beat the San Francisco Giants.

The Braves have won six of eight as they try to catch Los Angeles in the NL West race. The Giants have dropped two straight and three of four since winning 11 consecutive games.

Smoltz (7-12) didn't walk a batter and struck out six for his second complete game this season. Both have come against San Francisco.

The Braves got to Giants starter Don Robinson (5-8), just activated from the disabled list, when Greg Olson led off the third with a single and was sacrificed to second by Smoltz.

Otis Nixon doubled Olson home and Jeff Treadway followed with a single, scoring Nixon.

Cowboys just can't get rid of Tuinei

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Mark Tuinei has faced his share of challenges from young, hungry offensive lineman brought in to become star players for the Dallas Cowboys.

But the 6-5, 293-pounder has always managed to outlast the rookies and free agents trying to take away his starting job. This time around, Tuinei is trying to keep another highly-touted rookie, Erik Williams, on the bench.

"He (Tuinei) is the toughest guy on the team — mentally and physically," says offensive line coach Tony Wise. "If he is starting, it's because he is doing as good a job as anybody on the offensive line, not because someone else is not doing better."

Tuinei is one of the Cowboys most versatile players. The nine-year veteran made the team in 1983 as a free-agent defensive tackle out of Hawaii. Two years later he was backing up Tom Rafferty at center.

In 1986 he began spring training rotating between center, guard and tackle, but injuries forced him back to the other side of the line. After starting at defensive tackle one week during the season, he started at offensive tackle the next.

Tuinei is one of only five current Cowboy players remaining that participated in Dallas' last playoff game in 1985. Tuinei says he believes the six-year drought may be over following the team's 7-9 record last season.

"There is such a different attitude coming in this season," said Tuinei, who started 13 games at left tackle in 1990. "Everybody is so upbeat and optimistic and people are really behind us."

Tuinei said that the familiarity with this year's squad had made a world of difference.

"There weren't a whole lot of moves made during or after the season and that helps you to settle down. You don't have to worry about someone coming in next week and taking your job."

"We look pretty good on paper and that makes me extremely optimistic."

His optimism for the team's success seems to overshadow his own desire to stay in the starting lineup. But Wise says Tuinei may be a fixture in Dallas.

"His attitude has a lot to do with it," Wise said. "You just can't get rid of the guy."

Neon Deion complains

Associated Press

SUWANEE, Ga. — Deion Sanders, fresh off a four-day rest stop following the conclusion of his baseball season, complained Monday about being fined for showing up late at the Atlanta Falcons training camp.

"I want to see my fine sheet," Sanders said after ducking into the locker room.

Sanders faces fines of $1,500 a day for missing the first 17 days of camp. He was playing baseball for the Atlanta Braves until four days ago, when he took some time off for fishing and relaxation.

"They knew about my situation," he said. "I don't see how they could fine me for time that they knew I was going to be gone.

"They should have let me know that ahead of time, which is only right," he said. "I just don't want to feel like I'm being punished. I want to feel like everyone else, and they knew about my situation. I don't want it to go any further than this."

The Falcons already were on the field for their afternoon practice when Sanders suddenly strolled into the locker room.

"I've been running around getting my 15th physical of the year," he said.

Sanders was wearing his own line of clothing — a lime green and blue shirt and shorts outfit, with the shirt unbuttoned to show a gold chain and medallion.

When Sanders came back from the locker room and strolled toward a car for the trip to have his knee examined, some of his teammates shouted, "Deion, Deion. Hey, Deion, put some pads on."

Sanders turned toward the field and pumped his right arm into the air several times.

ANGELS: Salmon takes TL home run lead at 22 mound, Midland bats also came through. Kevin Flora hits his ninth home run of the year, a two-run shot in the second which drove in Reggie Williams to give Midland an early 2-0 lead.

Tim Salmon homered for the 22nd time this season to extend the Angels' lead to 5-3 in the eighth. The solo shot was a typical Salmon homer, the towering kind that appears for a while like it'll go forever. This one, though, found its way over the center field wall, as opposed to Salmon's normal spot over the left field fence. Salmon's blast put him in sole possession of the Texas League home run mark. Entering Monday's contest, Salmon was tied with El Paso's John Jaha, both of whom had 21.

Midland took the lead for good in the sixth inning when Bobby Jones doubled and came home on another two-bagger by Larry Gonzales one pitch later.

The Angels also scored in the second when Williams came in on a grounder by Flora.

Butcher says the key for the Angels to make an appearance in the TL playoffs as winner of the second half race will be the upcoming road trip. Following the completion of the Wichita series Wednesday, Midland embarks on a 10 game trip to El Paso and San Antonio. The Angels, Missions and Diablos are currently bunched atop the West Division standings.

"We've got to play at least .500 ball," Butcher said of the road trip. "We're doing a great job, and everything's starting to gel. Things are going our way."

The Angel clubhouse, while anxious about the possibilities of winning a divisonal crown, is keeping an even keel, according to Butcher.

"It's been the same all year, win or lose," Butcher said of the mood in the locker room. "Donnie (Midland manager Don Long) is the kind of guy who's going to be the same no matter what. We win, we're OK. We lose, it hurts a little bit. But we're not a lot of rah, rah type guys."

ANGEL NOTES: The win Monday night allowed the Angels to go over the .500 mark (21-20). ... Mark Howie, the league's leading hitter (.360 entering the game), was 0-for-4 to bring to an end his 12-game hitting streak. ... Reggie Williams (2-for-4) has now hit safely in nine straight. ... Midland is now 9-16 against Wichita, including 6-8 at Angels Stadium.

BROWN: Playbooks among innovations

(From 1C)

Coslet and Weeb Ewbank. Two of Brown's sons are Bengals administrators: Mike, as assistant general manager, and Pete, as director of player personnel.

"I feel privileged to have played under him," said Shula, coach of the Miami Dolphins, who was a Cleveland defensive back in 1951-52. "He had a profound impact on my development as a coach, and I know he will be missed by his many friends in and out of football."

Wyche, who played quarterback for Brown in the Bengals' first season of 1968 and has been Cincinnati's head coach since 1984, said he learned principles of loyalty, dedication and commitment from Brown. Wyche said Brown's encouragement in 1968 when Wyche was a free-agent quarterback trying to make the Bengals prompted Wyche to remain in football rather than quit to pursue a post-graduate degree.

Wyche credited Brown with instituting modern football standards such as use of face-masks, pass patterns, playbooks, full-time position coaches and housing a team together the night before a game.

Brown also was among the first to have classroom preparations for games, use game films to prepare for games and use guards as messengers to carry in plays from the sidelines.

Brown made a request that the Bengals not change their routine, including practices and season preparation, after his death, Wyche said. The Bengals have no immediate plans to wear a remembrance of Brown on their uniforms, Wyche said.

"One of his final requests was that absolutely nothing be disturbed, that everything would be done as usual — 'business as usual,' as he put it," Wyche said. "I will honor his request, and that'll be that nothing will be changed. That's because that's the way he wanted it."

Brown was born in Norwalk, Ohio, on Sept. 7, 1908. His overall coaching record of 351-134-15 from 1930 through 1975 includes high school, college, wartime and pro jobs. He was 170-108-6 in 21 NFL seasons and 222-112-9 overall as a pro coach.

Brown started coaching in 1930 at Severn Prep in Maryland, where his teams compiled a 16-1-1 record. At Massillon, his Tiger teams were 80-8-2 and won six state titles and four national crowns.

He brought a national champion to Ohio State University and amassed an 18-8-1 record there, coached a powerhouse at the Great Lakes Naval Station during World War II with a 15-5-2 record in 1944-45, then made his name in professional football by founding the Cleveland Browns of the All-America Conference.

The Browns were 47-4-3 and captured all four titles in the league's existence before entering the NFL in 1950. They won the championship that year — the first of their three titles in the 1950s. Brown's Cleveland teams were 167-53-8 overall and 115-49-5 in the NFL when new Browns owner Art Modell fired Brown in 1963.

The bidding:

Opening lead: Ten of ◇

When this hand was played in a major national championship, 13 of 15 declarers made the obvious play at the first trick. By no strange coincidence, all of them failed to bring home their contract.

North had just about enough to raise to two hearts after the overcall. Once the fit was revealed, South was happy to go on to game.

The ten of diamonds was the universal choice for the opening lead. Most declarers covered with dummy's jack, captured East's queen with the ace and then drew trumps. Declarer then tried to set up a diamond for a club discard. Unfortunately, East won the diamond with the eight and shifted to the jack of clubs, and declarer could not avoid losing a trick in each black suit in addition to the two diamond tricks that were the defenders due. Down one.

The two successful declarers realized the opening lead marked East with the king-queen of diamonds, so West almost surely had the king of clubs to justify the overcall. Therefore, East had to be kept off lead as long as possible to shut out a play through the ace of clubs.

As the first stage in that campaign the two declarers did not cover West's ten of diamonds with the jack. East could not split the honors without surrendering a diamond trick, and both declarers allowed West's ten to win!

It made no difference what West did next. In the event both shifted to a trump. Declarer extracted all the trumps, cashed the ace of diamonds and exited with a diamond, setting up a long card in dummy.

East shifted to a club, but in vain. Declarer rose with the ace and reached the table with a diamond to discard the losing club on the 13th diamond—making four-odd.

Did Kenison renege on Rivers because of the food or drink?

NEW YORK — High-decibel comedian Sam Kinison blamed some bad Chinese food for his no-show as the sole guest on a forthcoming "Joan Rivers Show," but his hostess on Monday blamed his nonappearance on booze.

Kinison

"He did a program earlier today, 'The Howard Stern Show,' and he got upset when they talked about drugs and alcohol," Rivers told her audience Friday after waiting four hours for Kinison.

"He said, 'I've been slipping a little lately.' Well, he skidded," Miss Rivers said. She has devoted Wednesday's show to the circumstances surrounding Kinison's failure to appear.

Jama Podell, a production assistant sent to pick up Kinison at the Plaza Hotel, where the show had put him up, said she found Kinison "reeked of alcohol" and was "staggering" when she found him in the lobby.

The comedian's brother, Bill Kinison, who also serves as his agent, told staffers two hours later that he would not be appearing.

Rivers took a camera crew to the hotel, but Kinison did not come to the door. His brother spoke briefly to Rivers, and blamed the comedian's behavior on some Chinese food he'd eaten after appearing on the Stern show.

Kinison also did not make a scheduled appearance on Friday's edition of "Late Night with David Letterman" on NBC, a spokesman said.

Calls to Kinison's agent and publicists were not immediately returned.

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Queen Beatrix returned from her summer home in northern Italy on Monday with a broken leg, the government said.

Queen Beatrix

The 53-year-old queen tripped while walking and fractured her fibula during the latter part of a one-month visit to the Italian alps, said Henk Bax, spokesman for the Government Information Service.

Beatrix received immediate medical attention, he said. No other details of the accident were disclosed. She is resting at her palace but will have follow-up treatment from a Dutch physician, Bax said.

The estate is near the village of Tavarnelle, about 50 miles west of Venice. Beatrix had gone there with her sons Johan Friso, Willem-Alexander and Constantijn.

The royal family often goes on sightseeing trips and visits friends elsewhere in southern Europe during the summer vacation, Bax said.

She returned to Holland several times to see her German-born husband, Claus, who was hospitalized with depression on July 1.

INTERLOCHEN, Mich. — Violinist Itzhak Perlman accepted the first Interlochen Arts Award after a sold-out performance at the Interlochen Arts Camp, a summer music retreat.

"At a time when education in the arts is being severely hampered by lack of funding, Interlochen serves as a shining example for educational arts organizations throughout the world," Perlman said at Sunday's ceremony.

The Interlochen Center for the Arts, 15 miles southwest of Traverse City, established the award to recognize contributions to the arts through performance, education or philanthropy.

LONDON — The Archbishop of Canterbury, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Anglican Church in Papua New Guinea, said the world needs to be "re-missionized."

The Most Rev. George Carey praised the work of missionaries during a visit to Papua New Guinea. The church was brought there by missionaries from Australia.

"England itself may need missionaries to come to us with the same verve and fervor as they did 100 years ago to this land," Carey said in Port Moresby on Saturday. "We now need to be 're-missionized,' if that is the word."

"As some of the great 'isms' of recent years such as communism have been almost annihilated, Christianity is being given a great opportunity to fill the vacuum," he added.

The visit was Carey's first trip abroad since he was confirmed as archbishop of Canterbury, the spiritual leader of the Anglican Communion.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles' rating as a polo player has been lowered by the sports' ruling body. In its annual review of players' ratings, the Hurlingham Polo Association in England made a unanimous decision to lower the prince's handicap from four to three.

The four-goal handicap had put the prince among the world's top 35 players, a ranking he held since 1984.

Last season, the prince fell and fractured his arm. This season, he was sidelined by a bad back. He returned to polo last month.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices gave ground today in a quiet summer session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 8.72 points to 2,997.54 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

Losers outnumbered gainers by more than 9 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 516 up, 972 down and 525 unchanged.

The market came up short last week in a run at the Dow Jones industrial average's record closing high of 3,035.33, set on June 3.

Analysts cited worries over weaker-than-expected employment statistics for July, reported by the Labor Department on Friday.

The news did prompt a substantial decline in interest rates. But traders seem worried that rates might turn upward again as the bond market digests a record $38 billion offering of Treasury bonds and notes.

The Treasury is set to sell $14 billion in three-year notes on Tuesday; $12 billion in 10-year notes Wednesday, and $12 billion in 30-year bonds Thursday.

Among actively traded blue chips, General Motors rose ¼ to 40⅛; Boeing added ½ to 46; Philip Morris was unchanged at 68⅞, and Pepsico dropped ⅛ to 31⅛.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks fell .94 to 211.09. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 1.83 at 366.57.

Volume on the Big Board came to 85.86 million shares with two hours to go.

Prices advance

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices advanced Monday in a quiet session marked by strong buying of gasoline futures contracts on perceptions that demand is rising while supplies remain tight.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for delivery in September settled at 67.16 cents a gallon, up .76 cent, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in September settled at $21.47 per barrel, up 15 cents.

Crude oil showed little change, with neither news nor rumors moving the market.

Natural gas prices finished mixed Monday, with contracts for delivery in September settling at $1.275 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.5 cents.

Honda dies

TOKYO (AP) — Soichiro Honda, the blacksmith's son who applied his mechanical gift brilliantly to motorcycles and later to the small cars that fit the bill of the energy-conscious 1970s, died Monday of liver failure at age 84.

Company officials announced his death, at a Tokyo hospital.

Honda Motor Co., which he founded in 1946, now is Japan's No. 3 car manufacturer. In the United States, where it began production in 1982, it ranks fourth, after General Motors, Ford and Chrysler.

Honda had been top adviser to the company since he retired as president in 1973, the company's 25th anniversary under the Honda Motor name.

Mesa to become corporation

■ Pickens says the restructuring move will attract institutional investors who have capital to spend.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Mesa Limited Partnership announced plans Monday to turn into a corporation, a move general partner T. Boone Pickens said will bring institutional investors to replace individuals who left when dividends ended last year with the natural gas price slump.

"The institutional investors have historically had little interest in limited partnerships," Pickens said.

Before Mesa became a partnership to take advantage of tax laws in 1985, more than half of its investors were institutions, such as pensions and brokerage houses. Now between 20 and 25 percent of Mesa's partnership units are owned by institutions, who typically have access to more capital.

Individuals invested in Mesa because of the large cash distributions it was paying, about $1.1 billion between 1985 and 1990. In 1989, when a preference unit sold between $8 and $12.375, the owner received a distribution of $1.50 per unit.

But Mesa suspended distributions for common units in 1989 and preference units last year due to declining revenue from the fall in price of natural gas, about 75 percent of its energy mix.

Trading volume has "dried up," Pickens said.

Mesa needs natural gas prices to rise to $2.30 per thousand cubic feet to break even, Pickens said. Mesa received an average $1.54 per thousand cubic feet of natural gas during the first two quarters of the year, when it lost $20.8 million on revenue of $121.2 million.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission Monday, Mesa proposed issuing new common stock to replace its existing common and preference ownership units.

Owners would typically get one share of new common stock for each common unit and 1.25 common shares for each preferred unit. Preferred shareholders receive slightly more to compensate for money Mesa owes them for cash distributions that haven't been made since the first quarter of last year, a spokesman said.

At the same time, Mesa plans a one-for-five reverse stock split, reducing the number of outstanding shares by 80 percent.

The conversion would also will relieve Mesa partners of cumbersome tax-reporting procedures, Pickens said. They will likely be called to a special meeting this fall to vote on the proposal, he said.

The proposal comes as the Texas Legislature is writing a bill to take away one of the tax benefits Mesa had as a partnership. The lawmakers plan to include partnerships and sole proprietorships in the state's franchise tax.

A spokesman said Mesa's proposal is not tied to the legislative action. Pickens told unitholders at Mesa's annual meeting in May that he favored returning to a corporate structure.

The conversion is Mesa's second strategic objective for 1991, after a $1 billion debt restructuring it completed this summer by selling assets and put $600 million of bank debt in private hands.

U.S.S.R. offers incentives for oil industry

■ Soviet government seeks increased production because slump in oil exports caused a 10-percent decline in nation's economy in first half of the year.

Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet government on Monday took steps to stimulate energy production, raising the price it pays for oil and cutting taxes on oil and gas producers.

Falling production caused Soviet oil exports to plunge from 120 million tons to 60 million tons last year, costing the Soviet Union about 9 billion dollars in revenues.

That contributed to a 10-percent decline in the Soviet economy in the first half of this year. Many Soviet factories had to cut production when their usual supplies of foreign raw materials and spare parts were cut because there was insufficient foreign currency to purchase them.

The oil industry incentives came on the heels of a plan to put more food and consumer goods on the shelves. Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced over the weekend that he would release more foreign exchange to import food and equipment and material for consumer goods.

Half of all imported consumer goods will be offered to workers on state-run farms as an incentive to bring in a bountiful harvest, said Deputy Prime Minister Vladimir Shcherbakov.

The incentives are intended to entice farmers to sell more grain and other crops to the government rather than in flourishing peasant markets where they would get higher prices.

Shcherbakov said the Soviet economy had pulled out of its slump and predicted gradual improvement beginning in October. He told Soviet television Sunday night the economy stabilized in June and July, but that "more serious steps must be taken to stabilize the situation" in August and September.

"It resembles the very first fragile ice on the river which can be broken by an incautious move," Shcherbakov said.

The Cabinet of Ministers issued a decree Monday cutting several taxes on oil and gas producers, the official news agency Tass reported. The government also increased the price it pays for oil from 60 rubles to 74 rubles per metric ton.

But oil officials noted that oil was already selling at far higher prices on the private market — 200 rubles a ton on the new Soviet commodities exchanges, noted Sergei Voroshilov, an oil driller from Surgut in Western Siberia.

Soviet oil producers have been fighting for the right to sell their oil for hard currency directly on the world market, where the current price is about $155 a ton.

The state price of 74 rubles per ton is only worth $1.50 on the new Moscow currency auction, which is the only legal way for the producers to obtain hard currency if they are not allowed to sell their oil themselves.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin traveled Monday to the Soviet oil region of Tyumen, where he was expected to consider making the area a special economic zone with incentives for foreign investment.

RTC sells more valuable properties

DALLAS (AP) — The federal thrift bailout agency sold 82 percent of its Texas properties valued under $100,000 during the first half of the year and has started shifting its sales focus to more valuable real estate, the agency's top official in Texas said Monday.

"There's much more energy and priority being given to structured sale transactions," said Carmen Sullivan, regional director for the Resolution Trust Corp.

While sales of lower-value properties have been taking place, the RTC has been putting in the infrastructure to offer financing for the bigger deals, Ms. Sullivan said.

"Seller financing has been almost non-existent in the private sector," she said.

The RTC's Dallas-based Southwest regional office, which has jurisdiction over Texas, is on target for selling $8 billion in properties and other assets in fiscal 1991, which ends Sept. 30, Ms. Sullivan said. The agency has a nationwide sales goal of $65 billion.

"We've been encouraging investors and others who want to buy from the RTC to make us an offer," Ms. Sullivan said.

There will be less emphasis on selling the lower-valued properties during the next few months. But the RTC has tentatively scheduled some sealed-bid auctions as about 2,000 properties valued at less than $100,000 remain in its portfolio.

The RTC sold 9,570 Texas properties valued under $100,000 from January to June. The properties, mostly single-family houses and condominiums, came from the portfolios of failed savings and loans.

The agency received $208.3 million for the properties, typically considered its most expensive to keep up and laborious to sell.

About half the properties — 4,611 — were sold through the RTC's affordable housing program, which targeted low- and middle-income buyers. The program required a buyer to live in the property, rather than use it as an investment by leasing or renting to someone else.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

New S&L owners can change account rules

By Bill Doyle

Q. I am 67 and have about $20,000 in an individual retirement account at a savings and loan association recently taken over by the federal government's Resolution Trust Corp (RTC). Each month, $200 is transferred to my checking account and I can take out any amount without penalty at any time.

Doyle

If and when this S&L is sold to another S&L or bank, can the new owner change the rules and charge fees for what I now enjoy free of charge?

A. Yes. The institution at which you will then have your IRA will have leeway on how it handles your account. That S&L or bank will be allowed to levy fees you are not paying now. It might or it might not.

Assuming your money is in certificates of deposit or other interest-paying accounts, the new institution also will have the right to change the interest rates. That's a provision of the S&L bailout law passed by Congress in 1988.

"When" is more likely to be the case than "if." Naturally enough, the RTC is trying to unload the busted S&Ls it has taken over. As taxpayers, we should all be reasonably happy about that and hope the job is accomplished without the federal government's cost going further out of sight. The latest estimates put the tab at more than $500 billion.

Here's an important point for you and others in the same fix. The institution acquiring your S&L will be required to notify you and give two weeks' notice before lowering interest rates. During that period, you'll be able to withdraw your money without any penalty.

In order to keep your IRA money deferred from income tax, you will have to put it in an IRA elsewhere. But you will have 60 days after receiving the check to accomplish that.

Q. Brokerage firms purchase CDs in multimillion dollar amounts from banks and S&Ls, then sell CDs in smaller amounts to customers. Since each of these brokered CDs is part of a big block and is held in "street name" by a brokerage, how is Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage of $100,000 per customer per institution passed on the customers?

A. That's no problem. In that situation, the brokerage is the holder of record and acts as each customer's nominee. The customer is the beneficial owner — the real owner — and is entitled to CD interest and FDIC coverage.

This is similar to the arrangement in which stocks are left in street name. A brokerage then is holder of record and the customer is the real owner, thereby being entitled to dividends and the right to vote at stockholder meetings.

Q. CDs purchased through brokers are touted as having a "secondary" market. How liquid is that market?

A. It's a very active secondary market — meaning previously issued CDs can be bought and sold quickly — if you deal with an on-the-ball broker. However, there is no central marketplace where you can check prices. As a result, those prices can vary widely.

Q. In view of pending federal legislation, wherein high-yielding CDs will not be FDIC insured, how safe will CDs already issued by brokers be?

A. "Pending" is the word. There are all kinds of proposals on the table for changing banking laws in general and FDIC rules in particular. However, when Congress finally enacts new legislation, the rules on existing CDs will remain the same. The U.S. Constitution prohibits passage of ex post facto laws.

In 1984, the FDIC proposed ending deposit insurance on brokered CD. But members of Congress, with their hands out for campaign contributions, killed that idea. If the FDIC plan had been adopted, the S&L and banking industries would not be in the sorry shape they are today.

DEAR ABBY

'Mother of grandchildren' works well in this case

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Four years ago our son, "Al," got his girlfriend, "Tara," pregnant. Tara was 15 and Al was 18 at the time. A week after our grandson was born, Tara's parents kicked her out of their house, so we took her and the baby into our home where we lived happily as a family.

Van Buren

As time went on, Tara got pregnant again — also from our son — and when she became of age to marry without her parents' consent, she and Al selected a date in September (1990). Al was a college student living at our home with Tara and the babies.

One month before the wedding, Al was killed in an auto accident. During his funeral, we treated Tara as his widow.

Tara has since reconciled with her parents, and she and her children have moved back with them. She is now 19, but she doesn't date yet because she's still grieving for Al. We hope that one day she will have a normal life, but she is not interested yet.

She attends all of our family functions, birthdays, weddings, Christmas, Easter, Mother's Day, etc., just as though she were Al's widow.

Abby, we feel that it may be an embarrassment to her when we introduce her as "Tara, the mother of our grandchildren." Since she and Al were never married, she is not technically our daughter-in-law. So, how should she be introduced? — AL'S FATHER IN GEORGIA

DEAR FATHER: Introduce her as "Tara, the mother of our grandchildren." Your family and close friends will know the background, and casual acquaintances and strangers do not need to know her history. Or ask Tara how she would like to be introduced and abide by her wishes.

DEAR ABBY: My heart went out to "Guilty in Antigo, Wis." — the smoker who was made to feel like a leper by society because she smokes.

I am not a smoker, but my mother was. I have inhaled my share of secondhand smoke, which, in turn, may have made me more tolerant of smokers today, but nonsmokers should check their own bad habits before looking down their noses at smokers.

Put me next to a smoker anytime on an airplane, in a restaurant or theater, before you put me next to a squawling baby or a loud, obnoxious person! Most of my friends who smoke go outside to do so out of consideration for non-smokers, but how many people do you see actually leaving a restaurant or a theater when their child acts up?

What I'm saying is, we all have habits and/or actions that may annoy others.

If smoking is the only bad habit "Guilty in Antigo" has, I'd love to have her over for coffee and a cigarette sometime. If she can handle my nail-biting and gossiping, I can handle her cigarette-smoking. — NOT PERFECT IN WESTMINSTER, CALIF.

AT WIT'S END

Advice from children nothing to worry about

By Erma Bombeck

One of the dumbest pieces of advice ever given to me by my kids is, "Don't worry."

Are they crazy? That's my job. It's listed on my driver's license in the space marked "Occupation." On my resume under "Experience," I list worrying, 1953-. If I were a contestant on "Wheel of Fortune," I'd tell Pat Sajak, "I have three beautiful children, a loving husband, and I worry for a major institution: me."

Bombeck

Oh sure, you can tell yourself that your kids are grown, you no longer have control over their lives, you've done all you can do and your job is over. In your dreams.

I have elevated worrying to an art form. This means I can take something as insignificant as, "Mom, I'm staying home on New Year's Eve, so don't worry about me," and lie awake all night long wondering why my son has no social life.

If one of them drives an old car, I worry that some night on a dark road, the car will die and someone will tap him over the head with a tire iron. If he buys new wheels, I worry he's living on a diet of plastic.

If he takes a vacation, I worry he can't afford it. If he stays home, I think he will kill himself with stress. If he changes jobs, I worry he is unstable. If he stays at one job too long, I worry he's in a rut and will never get ahead.

If he comes home too often, it is probably because he has no friends. If he never comes home, I know he plans to put his parents on an ice floe and have the will probated. If he eats too much, I worry about his cholesterol. If he looks too thin, I worry he has an eating disorder.

Parents worry when their kids are dependent and they worry when they no longer need them for anything. They worry when their children get married and they worry if they don't.

In all the years of child raising, you would think that my husband would assume some of the worrying. You'd think he'd get depressed with me over his grown children's lives, but he doesn't. It's like living with Betty White: Everything is for the best.

The other night my husband said, "Do you realize all three kids are employed and their cars are running? What do you think the odds of that happening are? You have nothing to worry about."

Fool. How long can that last?

Undetectable laser gun nails speeders

The light beam fired from the laser gun, by contrast, will be only 3 feet wide 1,000 feet away from the device. That means officers can aim it more accurately.

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Police agencies are experimenting with the latest weapon in the war against speeders — a laser gun whose signal radar detectors cannot pick up.

Patrolmen say the lasers are especially effective when trying to gauge the speed of vehicles on crowded roads.

"An officer can be surgical with it. He can zero in on a vehicle that's darting in and out of traffic," said Mike Phippen, a director of marketing and sales at Laser Technology Inc., of Englewood, Colo., one of two major manufacturers of the laser guns.

Radar guns gauge speed by emitting radio waves at vehicles and evaluating the size of the signals that bounce back. But the radio waves tend to disperse as they get farther from the gun — the beam will spread out 250 feet after 1,000 feet — and police say that can make it difficult or impossible to get a good reading on one vehicle speeding through heavy traffic.

The light beam fired from the laser gun, by contrast, will be only 3 feet wide 1,000 feet away from the device. That means officers can aim it more accurately.

Sgt. Paul Semanek called the laser gun "a real nice device" after New York State Police experimented with it this spring.

Sgt. Kathleen Plesich said members of the Ohio State Highway Patrol had successful trials with the gun recently in the Dayton area.

"Officers on traffic duty decide by looking at traffic that a certain car is moving faster than others and you put the radar gun on it," she said. "But if it's in heavy traffic you can't tell a radar gun 'this is the car I want' and pick it out. The gun gets flooded with too many signals. That's not the case with a laser gun."

Another drawback to radar guns is that their radio waves disperse over several thousands of feet, giving drivers with radar detectors time to slow down when their devices pick up stray radio waves.

Lasers, which operate on a line-of-sight basis, have no "spill over" of signals.

It takes only a half-second for a laser gun to bounce its light beam off a car and get a speed reading, said John Kusek, senior vice president for the other major manufacturer of laser guns, Kustom Signals Inc. in Overland Park, Kan.

"Technically, it would be possible to make a laser detecting device for vehicles," Kusek said. "But the energy is reaching the vehicle so fast and the laser can calculate the speed so fast that by the time a driver realizes the police are there it's too late."

Police agencies have also found that the laser device can accurately record distances, which makes it useful for accident investigators and even SWAT team sharpshooters trying to zero in on targets, officials said. Some drug agencies are using lasers to check for false backs or compartments in tractor-trailer trucks, according to Phippen.

State police agencies in Michigan, South Carolina, Washington, Louisiana, Utah and Maryland and local departments in Dayton, Portland, Ore., Charleston County, S.C., and Cedar Rapids, Iowa, have either experimented with laser guns or already ordered units, Kusek and Phippen said.

Police have written thousands of tickets based on evidence produced by the laser guns, said Arnie Clarke, a marketing manager for Laser Technology.

So far, he said, no laser gun evidence has been struck down. However, authorities in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Baton Rouge, La., expect that a case may be filed soon.

"I'm sure people will challenge it. They'll challenge any way, shape or form of evidence they don't like — as is their right," said Sgt. Hamilton Mixon of the Louisiana State Police, which has been using the laser gun since May.

The chief drawback is the price. Laser units sell for $3,500 to $4,500 each — about three times the cost of the conventional radar guns. In a time when many state and local governments are on austerity budgets, if not facing deficits, the cost has deterred some potential buyers.

Maj. Raymond Datcher, director of traffic services for the New York State Police, said officials are hoping the laser guns come down in price as more units are ordered. But in the meantime, New York's budget deficit will prevent the state from buying any laser guns in the near future.

Another drawback is that laser guns can only be used from a fixed point. Radar guns can also be employed from a moving patrol car.

Lasers will probably be used widely by police agencies, but they are unlikely to supplant radar guns, police say.

Regional English, D-H, heads to bookstores

BOSTON (AP) — Six years after the ABCs of folk speech were spelled out in Part I of the "Dictionary of American Regional English," the second volume in this recording of indigenous voices is on its way to bookstores.

Part II covers letters D-H, adding 11,000 regional words to the dictionary.

Here you will find "felon" in its Southern context as an inflammation of the toe or finger; "deacon" as a young calf to Northerners; "doghouse" as a shelter used by oil and farm workers in the West; and the widely scattered "40 miles of bad road" to describe an unattractive person.

The 1,175 pages confirm that DARE, one of the biggest language projects ever undertaken in this country, is firmly set on its path to completion.

"It's certainly well along now," said 83-year-old Frederic G. Cassidy, DARE editor in chief and professor emeritus at the University of Wisconsin. "We've been doing a cliffhanger for a long time."

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
