Members of the Lee High School Chorale say good-bye as they prepare to take off from Midland Regional Airport this morning for Vienna, Austria. The LHS Chorale will be one of only a select few choirs from the United States participating in the International Music Festival in Vienna. The group will return to Midland in late July.

Council adds public housing to HAP plan

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland City Council has changed gears and in a letter being mailed today to the Department of Housing and Urban Development in Dallas the city is including 280 rental units for low-income persons over the next three years.

With that addition to its Community Development Block Grant application, the city stands a good chance of receiving more than $1 million in federal funds that will be directed toward south and east Midland.

The inclusion of 140 units for low-income families under Section 8 New Construction and 140 units for elderly and handicapped persons under Low Income Housing Assistance is an addition to the city's Housing Assistance Plan. The council was told last week by two HUD officials if construction of rental units for low income persons — including families — wasn't included in the HAP's three year goals, the city's application for more than $1 million of Community Development Block Grant funds would be denied.

Mayor G. Thane Akins said today that in the last conversation with Dallas HUD officials, which was Tuesday, they indicated the application — with public housing added — would be sent to Washington, D.C. with a favorable recommendation. This marks a 180-degree turn in the attitude of the City Council.

The last application for CD monies was made by Midland in 1977. At that time, HUD officials instructed Midland to add a segment for rental assistance. But the council refused, saying it didn't want to be told by the federal government what to do. Plus, the council had misgivings about the operation of public housing in other cities.

This was the first year since the 1977 confrontation with HUD that the city has applied for the money. This year, it failed to include in its HAP goals new construction to meet demands for housing by the low-income sector.

Akins said the application still "must go through all those different folks. But they said verbally they think they can recommend it to Washington."

The mayor explained that, according to the revised three-year HAP, the CDBG application for the second and third years will request funds to build 140 rental units for low-income families under Section 8 New Construction.

"From our point of view, we said we needed to include some housing for elderly and handicapped. So we added 50 units for the elderly and handicapped in the first year and 90 units in the second year. This comes under the Low Income Housing Assistance plan," he added.

The CDBG application and accompanying HAP had been approved by the council last spring without the new construction. Akins explained the council's change in attitude: "It got down to the fact the Dallas office wouldn't recommend approval for it."

Without that approval, the city would lose another $1 million that would have gone to paving streets and housing rehabilitation in south and east Midland.

"The majority of the council's feelings was to go ahead and make the changes," he added.

But when it comes down to the bare facts, the city may never see those 140 units for low-income families, Akins said that there are no fund this year for any units under the New Construction portion.

An application for 80 apartment units in west Midland submitted earlier this year by a New Mexico developer is on hold because the money supply has run out. And the Reagan Administration could change the housing programs.

However, there was some horse-trading that went on between HUD and the City Council. Akins said Midland convinced HUD to change the boundary lines in target areas. This will allow the city to place the additional units for elderly and handicapped next to Hillcrest Manor — the only existing apartment complex for elderly and handicapped that was built with HUD money. This location will make it easier to operate the additional units and the city will have lower administration costs, he noted.

The change in boundaries better fits the situation today, the mayor said.

The Housing Authority, which operates Hillcrest Manor, will administer the additional units. However, the city probably would have to add some people to the staff, Akins said.

Akins said the council will support the letter, which states the revisions. Last Thursday, the council voted to proceed with making the changes, he explained.

But his personal opposition to public housing for low-income families hasn't changed, he said. "I'm following the council's instructions. I only have one vote."

O'Connor confirmation expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — With praise from both ends of the political spectrum, Sandra D. O'Connor seems headed for easy Senate confirmation to take "her place in history" as the first woman ever on the U.S. Supreme Court.

From the moment President Reagan's choice of the 51-year-old Arizona appeals judge was announced Tuesday, senators applauded her legal credentials as "brilliant" and "eminently well qualified" and hailed Reagan's fulfillment of a campaign pledge to appoint a woman justice.

Republican leaders promised to heed Reagan's request for swift confirmation "so that as soon as possible she may take her seat on the court, and her place in history." It may be September, however, before hearings begin.

Public opposition came from the fundamentalist group Moral Majority and the National Right to Life Committee, both normally Reagan allies, which bitterly questioned Mrs. O'Connor's record on abortion and vowed to try to defeat the nomination.

But Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, a leading Republican conservative, said anyone who wants to fight Mrs. O'Connor's confirmation will have to fight him.

At a news conference in Phoenix, Mrs. O'Connor declined to answer questions on abortion and other substantive issues pending the confirmation process.

But deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said she is truly against abortion, and Reagan said he was "completely satisfied" on the matter.

Mrs. O'Connor was the only candidate whom Reagan interviewed personally to replace Stewart Potter, who retired last Friday, and become the 102nd justice in the Supreme Court's 191-year history. "One of the reasons Reagan was attracted to her was when he looked at the total woman," said deputy White House chief of staff Michael K. Deaver. "She had not been an activist on either side. She had taken a moderate position."

Happy judge

Congressional sources, however, said Sen. John East, R-N.C., who is leading the fight for anti-abortion legislation that may ultimately be tested on constitutional grounds before the Supreme Court, would assail Mrs. O'Connor's votes on the issue in the Arizona Legislature.

East was considering announcing his opposition to the nomination, perhaps today.

The prevailing sentiment in the Senate, though, was positive.

Praise came from senators as divergent in their outlook as Democrats Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Joseph Biden of Delaware, Alan Cranston of California and Dennis DeConcini of Arizona and Republicans Orrin Hatch of Utah, Goldwater and Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

Goldwater lashed out at critics of Mrs. O'Connor's positions on abortion and the Equal Rights Amendment.

"I don't buy this idea that a justice of the Supreme Court has to stand for this, that or the other thing," he said. "And I'm getting a little tired of people in this country raising hell because they don't happen to subscribe to every thought that person has."

He added: "If it's going to take a fight, they're going to find old Goldy fighting like hell."

Kennedy said he was "extremely pleased," and Hatch, a noted opponent of legalized abortions, said he was "elated" that a woman was chosen.

Thurmond, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee which will consider the nomination before it goes to the full Senate, said: "I will do everything I can to help."

Biden, senior Democrat on the committee, said Mrs. O'Connor "seems to be eminently well qualified for the position."

Cranston, the Senate's No. 2 Democrat, called her "a brilliant legal scholar with considerable legal experience" and said Reagan had taken a "major step in the battle to eliminate sex discrimination."

School budget's now only $1.3 million short

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

School trustees got some good news during a two-hour budget study session late Tuesday afternoon: Instead of falling $2 million short of being able to meet their 1981-82 budget, they're only $1.3 million short.

Finance Director Don Ferguson told trustees that final figures from projected oil and mineral revenues will add an unexpected $220 million to the assessed value of land taxed by the school district.

Given a 97 percent tax collection rate, the total anticipated income from all revenue sources available to the district will come to $35.7 million, which is $1.3 million short of preliminary budget estimates that approach the $37 million mark.

That figure is 16 percent higher than the current budget, and if trustees can shave the increase by 4 percent, they say there will be no tax hike this year.

A 12 percent budget increase would be absorbed by the rapidly expanding tax base the county is enjoying.

Since salaries account for 80 percent of the school district's budget, trustees spent the bulk of the budget study session wrestling with the thorny issue of cutting personnel.

"Our ratio is 16.7 (students for every teacher)," said Trustee Ed Runyan. "Can we get it to 18?"

Noting the district has 30 percent more teachers than the minimum state requirement — while other districts run about 20 percent — Trustee Bill Jackson said:

"We need every good person we can get, but we need to see if they're being utilized to the fullest extent possible."

The "extra" teachers cost the district about $4.5 million.

Other budget areas under consideration for paring include printing expenses and student travel. No academic programs are expected to be cut.

In finally dumping the budget-hacking task on the administration, board President Parker Humes told Superintendent Dr. James Malley, "We need to get the budget as close to our income as possible.

"We feel it would be better for you people to look for ways to cut it than us. We need to cut it by $1.5 million. If there's a good reason why you can't — if it would hurt (the education we're providing) — then we'd really be interested in listening to it."

Said Trustee Joyce Sherrod: "Like any organization, there are always ways to cut."

"We have all the confidence in the world in you," Jackson told Malley.

Malley told trustees he would try to have a preliminary progress report ready by next Tuesday's regular school board meeting.

Auto mishap claims Midlander's life

A second person has died of injuries suffered in a two-car collision near the intersection of North Big Spring Street and FM 868 June 28.

David Hensley, 20, of 109 Wadley Ave., Space 23, died at 8:45 p.m. Tuesday in Midland Memorial Hospital. He suffered multiple injuries in the crash, which killed his 17-year-old wife, Kitty, instantly.

She was driving the couple's 1980 Ford northbound on Big Spring when it crossed the center line and struck a southbound car driven by 45-year-old Judy Halsey of 5007 Belle Grove. She remains in stable condition with multiple injuries this morning at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa, where she was taken after initial treatment at MMH.

Hensley's body was taken to Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Watching commuters grow

Fifteen years ago Harry Rodgers would have sworn that commuter airlines would be gone tomorrow. But today, Rodgers, the director of the air carrier administration of the Texas Aeronautics Commission, admits he was wrong about the commuter airlines. In 1980, about six million passengers boarded commuter flights in Texas.

Inmates' privileges are suspended

Keeping silent about escape cost county jail prisoners

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"They didn't tell anyone, and by their silence they must pay."

That's one deputy sheriff's analysis of the reason inmates in the felony tank of the county jail have had their privileges suspended in the wake of the escape of three fellow prisoners last Sunday.

"It was common knowledge among the immates that this (the escape) was going to happen," said the deputy. "They could have notified us anonymously by mail or with their phone privileges. There was plenty of opportunity to slip the word out safely, but they didn't tell anyone."

Among the privileges taken away for an indefinite period of time are use of the phone and access to television.

"It may not seem like much to someone on the outside," said Sheriff Dallas Smith. "But it means a lot to someone who's up there day in and day out with nothing to do. The privileges are ones we created as a disciplinary tool. We're not required to provide them."

The three prisoners escaped by removing a light fixture in their cellblock, then crawling along the top of the cellblock and dropping on an unsuspecting jailer who was making his routine rounds in the hallway outside the cellblock.

A second jailer, who was inside a locked control room, became suspicious when the first one didn't return and left the control room — against jail policy — to look for him. The escapees jumped him and obtained keys that allowed them to open a fire escape door in the jail and go down an interior courthouse stairway to freedom.

"There were errors on our part," said Smith. "Someone left a bucket and mop in the cellblock. And the (second jailer) went to check on the first without the precaution of notifying the dispatcher."

The escapees used the bucket to batter out metal reinforcements that had been welded above the light fixture. Light fixtures in the jail were considered a "weak link" in the security system and new ones that might have prevented the escape had been ordered.

Ironically, they arrived at the jail Friday and were to be installed this week.

No disciplinary action will be taken against the jail staff, according to Smith, because those on duty at the time were new.

"They've been here only a short time and didn't have a chance to learn the significance of our policies," said Smith. "If someone's to blame, it's me. I set policy, hire the people and instruct them."

One factor in the high turnover rate at the jail has been pay, and a general salary increase of 25 percent has been partially instituted. Employees have already received a 6 percent hike, with the other 19 percent scheduled to take effect in January.

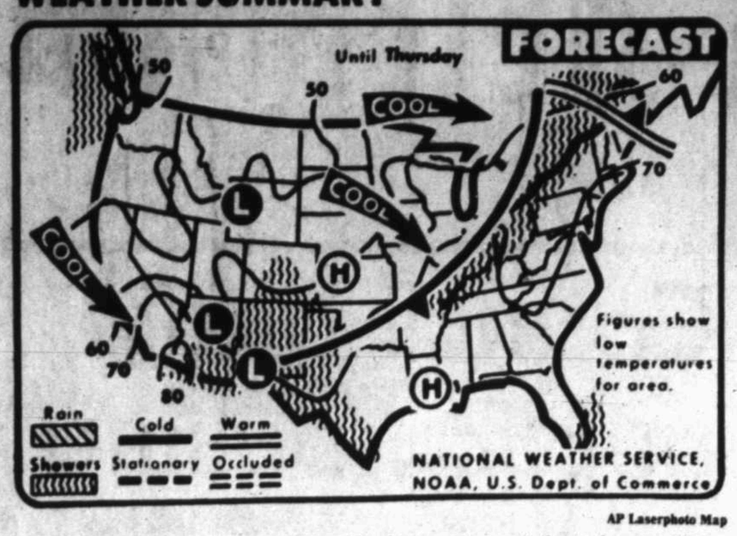

Meanwhile, the escapees are still at large and inmates who've had their privileges taken away are grumbling.

"It's not fair," said a woman whose husband is in jail awaiting transfer to Huntsville on a probation revocation charge. "They (the sheriff's department) screwed up, not my husband.

"This is the second time he's been punished for something he didn't do. He was picked up in Florida and brought here about six weeks ago — just after a disturbance at the jail. He was denied privileges along with the rest, even though he wasn't there when the disturbance occurred.

"Dallas Smith runs too tight a ship. I believe he'd have fewer problems if he'd loosen up a bit."

Texas area forecasts

West Texas: Scattered afternoon and nighttime showers and thunderstorms through thursday, a few possibly heavy in the Panhandle tonight. Continued warm and humid. Lows tonight near 60 mountains to low 70s south. Highs Thursday mid 80s Panhandle to near 100 Big Bend.

North Texas: Considerable morning cloudiness or fog central and east, otherwise partly cloudy and warm through Thursday. Widely scattered thundershowers today. Highs 93 to 97. Lows 70 to 76.

South Texas: Scattered showers and thunderstorms mainly central and south today. Partly cloudy tonight and Thursday. Continued warm with highs mostly in the low 90s and lows in the 70s.

Upper Coast: Southeast winds 10 to 15 knots through Thursday, seas 3 to 5 feet, winds and seas higher near widely scattered thundershowers.

Lower Coast: Southeast winds near 15 knots through Thursday, seas 4 to 6 feet, winds and seas higher near scattered showers and thunderstorms today. Isolated showers tonight and Thursday.

Extended forecasts

Friday Through Sunday

West Texas: Clear to partly cloudy. A little warmer Friday. Chance of thunderstorms at the weekend mainly Panhandle and mountains. Highs in the 90s except near 105 lower elevations of the Big Bend. Lows mid 60s north to the mid 70s south except near 60 mountains.

North Texas: Partly cloudy and continued warm. Highs in the 90s. Lows in the 70s.

South Texas: A chance of mostly afternoon and evening showers and thundershowers, mainly coastal bend and south central and southeast Texas. Highs in the 80s and 90s. Lows in te 70s, near 80 immediate coast.

Border states forecasts

Oklahoma: Partly cloudy and warm with scattered showers and thunderstorms through Thursday. Highs upper 80s to low 90s. Lows tonight mid 60s Panhandle to mid 70s east.

New Mexico: Variable clouds with scattered showers most areas through thursday. Localized heavy rainfall possible. Gusty east winds through the passes of the central mountains developing tonight. Lows tonight mid 40s to the 50s mountains with 60s elsewhere. Highs Thursday 70s to low 80s northcentral mountains and extreme northeast, low to mid 90s in the southwest.

Louisiana: Scattered afternoon and early evening thundershowers through Thursday. Highs in the 90s. Lows in the 70s.

Thunderstorms may bring temps down

Partly cloudy skies and a chance of afternoon and nighttime thunderstorms may bring the temperatures down slightly in the Permian Basin as the area receives its second sprinkling of the month, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Continued warm and humid days will be joined by possible light showers through Thursday as rainfall is predicted at 30 percent tonight and 20 percent on Thursday.

As of 8 a.m. today, the overnight rainfall recorded at the airport showed .19 of an inch, bringing the monthly total to .29 of an inch and the year-to-date total to 6.91 inches.

However, the weatherman said he did not expect rainfall this evening and Thursday to amount to much, whereas the Panhandle area could experience severe thunderstorms tonight and Thursday.

Temperatures will slide slightly into the upper 60s tonight with southeasterly winds at 5-10 mph. This morning's low was a warm 72 degrees, compared to a record low for the date of 56 degrees as set in 1952.

Thursday's high should be somewhat cooler than in recent days reaching only near 90 degrees. Tuesday's high was 95 degrees, but it was not as warm as the record high of 103 degrees set on the date in 1969.

Winds will again be from the southeast at 10-15 mph on Thursday.

Few commuter airlines holding own

Editor's Note: Commercial air service is important to the pride, prestige and economic vitality of cities. In some Texas cities, commuter airlines have tried to fill voids left by the major carriers. But the success rate of Texas commuter airlines is less than one in three.

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Commuter airlines go in and out of business, listen to pleas from small-town mayors, and take federal "bribes" to fly into towns where few people climb into planes.

"Fifteen years ago I'd have said we'll wake up tomorrow and they'll be gone," said Harry Rodgers of the Texas Aeronautics Commission.

The tomorrows have passed and Rodgers, TAC director for air carrier administration, admits he was wrong about commuter airlines. The small carriers have weathered questions about safety and high fares. In 1980, about six million passengers boarded commuter flights in Texas.

Ten airlines now hold TAC certificates to serve Texas points. Only Texas and Alaska issue such certificates. Southwest Airlines still carries a TAC permit, although it has outgrown commuter status.

In all, 36 lines received TAC approval, but many gave up. The brassy public relations that preceded the airlines into small cities often faded into silence when there were not enough passengers to support the flights.

SEVERAL TEXAS CITIES have had many commuter lines quit on them. Del Rio, Lufkin and Big Spring, said Rodgers, have had many airlines come and go.

Big Spring may be the champion loser, having seen six airlines fly away.

"I gave them my 'Put your money where your mouth is' speech," Rodgers said. That's when he tells local officials to guarantee the airline at least a small profit.

"They think it's fine in theory, but at this time no one has put his money where his mouth is," he said.

The people of Paris, Texas, have the system beat. The federal government puts its money where Paris' mouth is to keep air service in the Northeast Texas town.

Metro Airlines is paid about $333,000 a year to guarantee a profit on its two flights a day into Paris, the only Texas city still getting federally subsidized air service.

It's "money down the rathole...so the people in Paris can say they have air service," Rodgers said.

BOB SOLTYS OF METRO said the airline also gets federal money to fly to McAlester and Stillwater, Okla. The Clear Lake City-based airline took over the Paris route when Frontier, which got a federal subsidy, pulled out in 1977. Smaller cities have had federal financial help in attracting airlines since 1947, according to Rodgers. The original program ended with the deregulation of 1978.

"To cover their rear ends, (congressmen) established another subsidy program," said Rodgers. "It's another bribery ... a different version."

Soltys said Metro "lost a lot of money" in the first 18 months — before deregulation — that it served Paris. After deregulation, Metro said it would pull out of Paris unless it got a federal subsidy.

Out of the 72 seats available daily on Metro flights to Paris, only 12 to 15 are usually filled, Soltys said.

Metro, Eagle, Rio and some of the other succesful Texas commuter lines have managed to overcome "small-plane syndrome," according to Rodgers.

"Some people won't fly on small planes. My mother, your mother, lots of people's mothers," he said.

For many years the TAC has said it's the Federal Aviation Administration's job to check on commuter plane safety. However, the FAA, until 1978, did not make close checks of the commuter lines.

The Texas Legislature this year told the TAC to hire a safety inspector. The FAA also has tightened its watch over the commuter lines. Bob Hazlett of the FAA in Fort Worth said federal inspectors now have almost daily contact with larger commuter lines like Rio.

"THE REQUIREMENTS ARE virtually equal (to rules for major airlines) and the surveillance is probably greater on the commuters," Hazlett said.

Texas commuter airlines suffered a black eye in March 1980 when eight people died in an Eagle flight in Houston. Rodgers said the National Transportation Safety Board blamed pilot error.

The plane lost one of its two engines on takeoff, but could have landed safely, Rodgers said.

"But he (the co-pilot) elected to turn right, into the bad engine. Survivors testified they heard screaming in the cockpit ..." and the copilot said, 'My God what do we do now,'" he said. The plane skidded to a halt on the ground after hitting five cars, four planes and a hangar. The victims burned to death.

In addition to safety, some passengers are concerned with the cost of plane tickets on the commuters, said Hal Salfen, consumer affairs director for the Airline Passengers Association.

"The fare discrepancies are tremendous," he said. "We tell passengers that under deregulation that's the fare they're going to have to pay."

Lozano case set for jury trial in federal court

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The federal civil rights suit which pits the sons of the late Larry Ortega Lozano against Ector County sheriff's deputies and county officials and possibly against former U.S. Justice Department officials is set for jury trial Aug. 17 in federal court in Midland.

The action seeks to redress alleged violations of the civil rights of Lozano, who, the plaintiff-sons claim, was "inflicted" with "cruel and unusual punishment " and was "deprived of life without due process."

Lozano, 27, died Jan. 22, 1978, just outside his padded isolation Ector County Jail cell after he allegedly went berserk and punishingly rammed himself into the cells' door and porthole window while several lawmen, including deputies and jailers, tried to subdue, control and calm him.

His death was ruled accidental by an Ector County inquest jury, which also held that reasonable force was used to subdue Lozano.

The original petition names 30 to 40 defendants, but several have been cut loose from the case by Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Among those severed from the case are former U.S. Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti and former Deputy Attorney General Drew S. Days III. However, attorneys for the sons, Randy Rene Lozano and Lawrence Derek Lozano, are appealing to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal in New Orleans, La., to get the two reinstated in the case.

The sons are claiming that the former Justice Department officials were remiss in their duty by dismissing a federal grand jury investigating alleged violation of Lozano's civil rights and in not pursuing the Lozano issue. The grand jury, meeting in Midland in July 1978, interviewed scores of witnesses and took no action.

Lozano was arrested by deputies in Odessa on Jan. 10, 1978, after he had an accident in his pickup truck, was arrested after allegedly fighting with the lawmen and died almost two weeks later.

Elton Faught, then the Ector County sheriff, initially maintained that Lozano, whom he later admitted needed treatment psychiatric treatment rather than jailhouse confinement, had committed suicide.

In addition to Faught, the Ector County commissioners and County Judge Gary Watkins and the lawmen and jailers are named as defendants in the suit.

The Lozano case has been kept before the court in part by the prodding of Mexican-American forces, including the League of United Latin American Citizens.

Among those severed from the case were officials of the Texas Attorney General's Office; Ector County Commissioners Willie Hammond and Bill Hicks, who were not commissioners until almost a year after Lozano's death; and John Fenner, director of the Permian Basin Community Center for Mental Health-Mental Retardation.

Man held in hit-and-run deaths of two children

NEW YORK (AP) — A Miami man was held today in the hit-and-run deaths of two 10-year-old boys killed by a car speeding along a West Side mid-Manhattan sidewalk, police reported.

Both children were hit Tuesday evening as the auto bumped and careened along at high speed along an avenue. They were pronounced dead on arrival at St. Clare's Hospital.

One of the boys was the only child of a widow.

"I saw death coming," said Mari Pifko of West 66th Street. She was taking a driving lesson when she saw the car. "I just knew that at any moment we were going to go through the windows."

Police spokesman Sgt. Leroy Barr said the man had not been charged with the killings because police were unsure whether he was the original driver of the car.

The episode started when a 1975 beige Chevrolet with Florida license plates emerged quickly from a service station and immediately hit a car.

"I heard this screeching noise and I looked in the rear-view mirror," said Barry Weiss of the Automobile Club of America, Ms. Pifko's driving instructor. "A car was weaving and bobbing in the lane. I tried to get out of his way but I was hit and spun around and heading south."

The driver, then steered the vehicle onto the sidewalk and hit Rene Mercado, who was riding his bicycle on the sidewalk.

The car, containing three other passengers, continued along the sidewalk and struck another child, Daniel Salvador Calivar, who was walking. The child was the only son of Fanni Martinez, according to Diane Brevetti, spokeswoman for St. Clare's.

Daniel's blue sneakers apparently were knocked off his feet by the impact of the car and a hubcap and piece of a grill that appeared to have come from the auto lay near his body.

By then the car was being pursued by the driver of a tow truck who had seen the two children mowed down. Police officers in a radio car stopped the auto and seized the driver.

Police said the other occupants apparently got out of the car and fled before police stopped it.

Police said they found six .38-caliber bullets in the car, but no gun.

Odessa women held in El Paso

Two women charged last week with aiding the escape of four federal prisoners from the city jail last month were arrested in El Paso over the weekend as they attempted to cross the border with a small amount of marijuana.

Donna Dotson, 29, and 21-year-old Kathy Havner, both of Odessa, were being detained in El Paso after border officials said marijuana was found in the purse of one of the women as they were re-entering the country from Juarez Sunday.

Officials said the marijuana charge may be dropped so the women could be returned to Midland to face charges of not living up to the terms of their bonds. The women were released on bond in connection with the escape of four federal prisoners from the city jail June 11.

The women, along with two other persons, were charged June 30 with aiding in the escape. The escapees are still at large.

Scarfo free today

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Nicodemo "Little Nicky" Scarfo, identified by the FBI as Philadelphia's new organized crime boss, is free today as he appeals a two-year federal prison term for a firearms charge conviction.

U.S. District Judge Stanley S. Brotman, citing "the potentially violent and anti-social behavior of his character," sentenced Scarfo to the maximum jail term Tuesday for an April 9 conviction of possession by a felon of a firearm used in an illegal interstate transfer.

Brotman also fined Scarfo $5,000.

"Mr. Scarfo, this court feels, is surrounded by violence," Brotman said.

Police checking aggravated robbery

Police are investigating an aggravated robbery which occurred about 2 a.m. today.

Carrie Brown of 3313 W. Storey Ave. reported that while cleaning her bedroom, she noticed an intruder with a gun. The man threatened her and hit her on the forehead before grabbing her purse and running.

The intruder is believed to have entered the residence through an unlocked sliding door. The stolen purse contained no money.

Mrs. Brown described the intruder as being a white male, 5 feet 8 inches tall and weighing 160 pounds. His age was estimated to be in the mid-to-late 20s.

Police later spotted the suspect attempting to break into a vehicle at the Midland Elms apartment complex at 3601 Andrews Highway. The suspect ran from police and pulled what appeared to be a weapon. Officers fired one round, but missed the suspect, who escaped on foot.

In a report to the sheriff's department, Charles E. Hannon of the Wel-Tex Oil Co. reported the theft of oil well tubing worth $23,115 from a rig located on County Road 1050-S, in the eastern part of the county.

In other police complaints during the past 24 hours, Leslie King of 1910 Morgan Way said burglars entered his home and stole a stereo and TV valued at $1150.

A stereo, attache case and and cash were taken from an automobile parked at the First Methodist Church. Owner Vernie Burns of Vinegrove, Ky., estimated the value of the stolen items at more than $1075.

Marjorie Singleton of 500 W. Eugene Ave. said a .357 Colt pistol, two 12-gauge shotguns and a compound bow were taken in a burglary. She said the value of the weapons was $956.

A Colt .45 pistol and a calculator were reported stolen from Frank James of 1311 S. Moran St. The thieves entered the residence through a bathroom window. The missing items were valued at $366.

'Good buddies' no way to talk to high court

By LEE JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — "Good buddies" is not the way to address the Texas Supreme Court — even though one lawyer tried it — says Chief Justice Joe Greenhill.

And don't insult the court when asking it for a rehearing of a decision that went against you, Greenhill advised lawyers in a recent Texas Bar Journal article.

Greenhill's article and a follow-up interview shed some light on the inner workings of the state's highest court for non-criminal cases.

"Begin, 'May it please the court,'" Greenhill told attorneys. "We get a lot of 'Good morning, gentlemen.' Refer to the court as 'the court,' not gentlemen, men, buddies, you fellows. One lawyer referred to us as 'you good buddies.'"

HE SAID in an interview that when a lawyer gets chummy or uses slang or cuss words, it's "like somebody setting off a firecracker" in the courtroom.

"But it doesn't prejudice the lawyer's case. It's not his case or her case; it's the client's case. It would be unfair for us to decide against a litigant because of a faux pas by counsel," Greenhill said.

The chief justice said the court isn't swayed by stacks of amicus curiae ("friend of the court") briefs.

"The court can generally tell when amicus briefs have been solicited by a party. From time to time, we get a flood of amicus briefs in a case. They generally say the same thing, and the court is not impressed. They indicate pressure rather than help to the court," Greenhill said.

MANY OF THE cases in which the court is inundated with amicus curiae briefs involve oil and gas rights in which large sums of money are at stake, the chief justice said.

He said it is not unusual for the court to change its mind on rehearing.

"But changing our minds is best done by friendly persuasion, not pressure or abuse," Greenhill said.

One lawyer's motion said, "If the court would just read our brief, it will see the error of its ways." Another wrote, "If the law clerk who handled this writ would just..."

Greenhill said some motions for rehearing have been written in rhyme to get the court's attention. One had colored American flags on the cover.

HE DISCLOSED that it takes the votes of only three of the nine justices to grant a writ of error, the means by which the court accepts a case for review.

"The odds of a writ being granted is about one in six or seven ... But if the writ is granted with three or more judges voting to grant, the odds change drastically. We affirm only about 25 percent of the court of civil appeals judgments in which writs are granted," Greenhill said.

The court decides 15 to 20 writ of error cases every Wednesday, most of the time leaving the court of civil appeals opinion as the last word by refusing to grant review.

Writ of error cases are assigned to each of the nine judges in rotation.

Greenhill said the "most striking change" on the court was his decision four years ago that justices must write memoranda backing their recommendations to their colleagues on writs of error. Before then, the justice reviewing a writ of error case explained it and made his recommendation orally in the court's Monday and Tuesday conferences.

The chief justice said the court sits in panels of three on habeas corpus cases, in which somebody is trying to get out of being jailed for violating a trial court order.

HE ADVISED lawyers to call the court clerk before setting out for Austin to present a writ of habeas corpus to be sure three justices will be avaiable.

"Weekends are difficult times for such purposes, but we consider it our job to be available. I remember sitting on a habeas panel during the playing of the Cotton Bowl. It wasn't fun, but it was important to the person in custody," Greenhill said.

Greenhill said the court now tape records all oral arguments for the use of the justices, lawyers and the news media. He said access to the tapes can be gained through the court's administrative assistant.

Cat survives fall from tall building

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — People said it was a miracle when a 2-year-old baby fell nine stories from the North Park Place Apartments three years ago and lived. Now they're saying it's "just incredible" that a 6-month-old kitten survived a 15-story plunge out of the same building.

In both cases, the landscaping around the building gets the credit for saving the little ones from serious injury.

"It's just a charmed building and I hope it continues to be," Patricia Powell, manager of the apartment high-rise, said Monday.

In September 1978, Danielle Searcy fell out of a window on the north end of the building, landing in a 5-foot-tall bush, Mrs. Powell said. The child had been bouncing up and down on a bed about level with the ledge of an open window, apparently lost her balance and went out the window. She spent several several days under hospital observation, and doctors found she had suffered no serious injuries.

Last week, Anna, an orange and white domestic long-hair cat, plunged from a 4-foot balcony at the south end of the building into the shrubbery 180 feet below.

The cat was treated by a veterinarian for minor injuries and shock — no broken bones — and now she's running around again, but not outside anymore. Her owners, Stewart and Iris Finsilver, have made the balcony off-limits.

"Anna was just sitting on the balcony and looking up at the sky," said Mrs. Finsilver. "When I called her, she jumped. I think I startled her. I thought sure she had died."

"It's incredible," said the vet, Dr. Irving Feld. "Cats are pretty durable, but I never heard of a cat falling that far in this area. My friends in New York say it's common to see cats fall out of windows of tall buildings, but they usually die."

Vacationing president

A vacation can do a person a world of good. Even despite the eyebrows raised when it was learned that President Ronald Reagan is considering a month-long vacation away from the rigors of the Oval Office.

Just this week, Newsweek reported that the president intends to spend most of August, plus perhaps the first week of September, at his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch. There are those who will say Reagan is becoming a figure head president, but we think it's really a little early to begin questioning Mr. Reagan's commitment to his job.

According to the magazine, some presidential aides have worried that Reagan may jeopardize his popularity and create political problems if he goes through with his vacation plans.

Well, a vacation of a month's duration — or longer — is ambitious. But we must keep in mind with whom we are dealing. It's true that this vacation, if the president goes through with it, would be the longest of any since Richard Nixon spent a month at San Clemente in 1969.

Why shouldn't the president take an extended vacation if he believes the world is safe at the present time? No doubt there will be some griping and finger-pointing because the president simply isn't supposed to take a vacation in excess of a week or so. At least that's the story the traditionalists tell.

Seriously, though, there seems to be little to stop Mr. Reagan from getting out of Washington occasionally to enjoy himself. Vice President George Bush is more than capable of handling the tasks of the presidency in Mr. Reagan's absence. And in the event the president's skills were needed for quick action, he's only seconds away from downtown Washington by telephone and only hours away by Air Force One.

While we do believe a vacation can be overdone, we think a good get-away-from-it-all vacation can do a world of good for the nation's leaders.

We don't see anything wrong with the president's plans.

A costly gamble

Despite all the negatives from Congress and the American public, the nine-digit ZIP code sought by the Postal Service will be implemented.

"Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds," the old saying goes. And the Postal Service says its faster with a few more digits. In all honesty, we question that assertion.

The "ZIP plus four" system is voluntary but widespread use, particularly by business, will save up to $450 million a year, the Postal Service claims. The service also says such a saving will hold down future rate increases.

We think the system likely will be unworkable for the public and the business community, and will amount to more of a hardship than a help. Statistics have shown nine digits will be next to impossible for the average person to recall, not to mention the additional expense on business of converting postal machines.

The new system is to become effective July 29. The first three numbers will mark the major city post office. The fourth and fifth numbers identify the branch post office, and the next two numbers the neighborhood. The last two identify the block, a floor of a building or other specific location.

We hope the system proves to be workable — and a monetary savings. But we'll believe it when we see it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

As of this writing, a replacement for Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart is being sought. Why? What could be more Reaganesque than to close down all courts above the county level and convert the Supreme Court into a blacksmith shop?

●

In keeping with the administration's vision of America — the tree-shaded town-square with the cannon in front of the county courthouse is all we need. And, if the Interior Department will permit it, a few pigeons.

●

Why pay nine justices in Washington when the buck can stop at the old county courthouse — with a rope hanging from a tree out back?

●

Then, when the county courthouse is the highest court in the land, we'll limit all law schools to the study of horse theft.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Franchise holders seeing their dreams sour

WASHINGTON — Owning a business is the dream of many Americans. But it turned into a nightmare for Barbara Boghetich.

Jack Anderson

She and her late husband decided that a franchise operation was the path to financial independence. So they sank their life savings into a ZIP'Z ice-cream shop franchise. In return for the $9,500 franchise fee, the company promised to help the Boghetiches pick a location, set up the store and get a Small Business Administration loan for the necessary equipment and supplies.

But the location — in the Chicago suburb of Wheaton, Ill. — was plagued with problems; it had in fact been rejected by ZIP'Z officials for an earlier franchise applicant. So Barbara Boghetich told the House Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee.

"Three months after we opened, all development stopped near our store," she recalled. "We learned things that an experienced site locator would have found out for us" — things like a court fight over a proposed site for development, and a planned school that was actually five years away.

As for the SBA, officials there approved the Boghetich loan even though the agency's files showed four defaults by ZIP'Z franchise holders in the two previous years.

Instead of warning the Boghetiches that their franchise dream might not come true, according to the unpublished subcommitee transcripts, the SBA required them to put up their home as collateral for the government-guaranteed loan. So when their ice-cream parlor failed a little over two years later, they lost not only their dream but their home as well.

Both the General Accounting Office and the House subcommittee, headed by Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., are investigating SBA's handling of loans to franchise holders. One basic problem is that the SBA does not require the franchisors — many of which are among the biggest corporations in the country — to shoulder any share of the loan risk to their franchise holders.

When a franchised outlet goes under, the franchise holder loses everything he put into it, the government loses whatever amount of the loan is left unpaid by sale of the assets — and the franchisor corporation loses little or nothing. In fact, it can — and frequently does — peddle the franchise to the next sucker who comes along, and the whole process starts over again.

Rosenthal characterized the SBA's policy as "a kind of welfare for Mobil Oil, Phillips Petroleum, Ramada Inn, U.S. Suzuki, Lafayette Radio, Gulf Oil and Texaco."

Most SBA-guaranteed franchised loans are for auto dealerships, gas stations and fast-food outlets. And the blue-ribbon status of the companies involved is no guarantee of success.

Arco Petroleum Products Co., for example, sold 36 franchises in the period studied by GAO auditors, and 12 of the franchise holders went broke. During the same period, 34 out of 107 Shell Oil Co. franchisees failed, leaving the SBA with $346,000 in defaulted loans.

All told, SBA has written off about $27 million in franchise loans as uncollectible, and is trying to salvage what it can from an additional $65 million worth of defaulted loans.

The SBA is now considering some helpful changes. One would require the franchising corporations to bear some of the risk; another would make default information on various franchise operations routinely available to district offices, so that prospective franchise holders can get fair warning about their chances of success.

Footnote: A ZIP'Z spokesman told my associate Vicki Warren that the company gives its franchisees complete training, and said they don't have an abnormal failure rate: "The one problem is that franchisees don't listen to us," he said.

OFF THE PIGS!: Haitian President-for-life Jean Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier has sent an urgent request to Canada, Mexico and the United States: He wants $14 million to slaughter the country's entire 1.4 million pig population.

No, Haiti is not going kosher. Its hogs have become incurably diseased, and the Haitian goverment has decided the only way to solve the problem is to kill them all and bury them. Most of the $10 per pig would go to compensate individual farmers for the loss of their livestock — or so Duvalier claims.

The rub is that the Haitian goverment wants to administer the slaughtering program — but the Duvalier regime is incurably corrupt. U.S. officials are reluctant to provide funds without retaining control; they want to deal directly with the farmers.

So far, my sources tell me, Duvalier has not agreed to these terms.

UNDER THE DOME: The increase in House staff members — nearly 8,000 in the past decade — led to a brief crisis recently. All 10,000 telephone numbers in the "225" Capitol exchange were filled. So Ma Bell had to open a new exchange (226) for two House annexes.

— An investigator for the House Select Committee on Narcotics, John Thorne, is himself the subject of a goverment inquiry. Charges of misusing travel funds were lodged against him last year, when he was an official in the Customs Service. He denied wrongdoing and quit soon afterward. But the Treasury is still considering "enforcement proceedings."

World oil glut causing a few political problems for Mexico

Mexico now is facing up to a problem most of the other nations of the hemisphere might like to have.

The oil glut.

William Giandoni

Estimates are that already it is costing the Aztec Republic around $7 million a day in lost sales.

And that may be only the beginning, if the pessimistic predictions of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) that oil supply will be greater than demand for two or three years, are borne out.

Mexico's plight is worse than that of most of the world's traditional big supplier.

The lightly populated Arab nations for decades have been charging so many more dollars for their oil than they have been spending on imported goods, food, machinery, consumer items and service, that they have highly favorable balances of trade.

Mexico, a nation whose population is approaching 70 million, has been using its oil dollars to buy food, goods and service that are not produced in the country and which it needs for its economic and social development.

And Mexico's balance of trade is highly unfavorable. Government figures indicate, for example, that the trade deficit with the United States for the first four months of the year was a whopping $1.4 billion, nearly 12 times what it was for the same period in 1980.

The fact that Mexico is now the United States' third most important customer, behind Japan and Canada, means that any belt-tightening south of the border will have a significant economic impact to the north.

The oil glut, though, comes at a most inconvenient time for Mexico as the country is starting the peculiar political process in which the nation's next president will be chosen, nominated and elected.

That involves the elimination, one by one, of the cabinet members and other prominent men who are perceived to entertain presidential aspirations.

First apparent victim was Jorge Diaz Serrano, director-general of Petroleos Mexicanos, the government oil monopoly.

He is the man popularly credited with having made Mexico the fourth biggest oil-producing nation in the world, behind only the Soviet Union, Saudi Arabia and the United States, in less than five years.

When President Jose Lopez Portillo named Diaz Serrano head of Pemex in December 1976 Mexico was ranked 15th in the world. Oil production then was around 900,000 barrels a day. Now it is over 2.5 million.

Some increase in production was to have been expected if only because Diaz Serrano knew the business, having been involved in drilling wells for Pemex as a contractor for many years. But under Diaz Serrano, Pemex developed what Mexicans term "the greatest offshore field ever" in the Gulf of Campeche, with wells that produced as many as 50,000 barrels of oil a day. Keep in mind that less than a decade ago, Pemex' wells were producing an average of only 120 barrels a day.

Obviously, Diaz Serrano, like many others, saw the oil glut coming and, realizing how dependent Mexico has become on the income derived from its oil exports, decided to cut export prices $4 a barrel so as to hold on to Pemex' foreign customers. A few days after the decrease was announced, Diaz Serrano submitted his "resignation" to Lopez Portillo because, he said, "My decision to lower the price of oil did not receive unanimous support of the economic cabinet."

That might sound like a reasonable explanation to those who do not know much about the way Mexican governments are run or who do not realize that a decision of that magnitude could not have been made without the approval of Lopez Portillo.

Yet Diaz Serrano was sacrificed for taking a step that subsequently has been taken by oil producers in other parts of the world.

Now Pemex is talking about reducing its output and raising its price to recoup a part of that $4-a-barrel decrease.

Of course, the departure of Diaz Serrano was applauded by such Marxist commentators as Herberto Castillo in the magazine Proceso.

But on the other hand, Enrique Padilla Aragon, writing in the Marxist daily, El Dia, noted that expansion of Pemex in recent years has served "to overcome the crisis, economic stagnation, inflation and devaluation."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 8, the 189th day of 1981. There are 176 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 8, 1940, the government of Norway moved to London after 62 days of resisting Nazi invaders during World War II.

On this date:

In 1663, King Charles II of England granted a charter to Rhode Island.

In 1822, English poet Percy Shelley drowned when his boat capsized in the Italian Gulf of Spezzia.

In 1944, U.S. forces won the Pacific Battle of Saipan in World War II.

And in 1969, bishops and priests of the Church of England defeated a proposal for unification with the Methodist Church.

Ten years ago: An earthquake rattled Chile, killing 90 people and injuring 200 others.

Five years ago: The appellate division of the New York State Supreme Court disbarred former President Richard Nixon on charges related to the Watergate scandal.

One year ago: Platform writers for the Republican Party abandoned the GOP's 40-year support of the Equal Rights Amendment by voting that the issue be left to the states.

ART BUCHWALD

'Sweetening' up the pot Reagan-style

President Reagan is given full credit for his budget-cutting victory in the House. He used the telephone to persuade 29 "boll weevil" Democrats to vote for this program, which gave him just enough of a majority to get all the cuts through without debate.

Art Buchwald

This was the same tactic Lyndon Johnson used to get his "Great Society" program through. But whereas Lyndon did his by arm-twisting, President Reagan's style was entirely different.

I wasn't listening on the phone when he made the calls, but I heard they went something like this.

"Congressman Lighter, this is Ronnie Reagan. I have a great favor to ask of you."

"Yes, sir, Mr. President."

"I would like you to break from your party and the Democratic leadership, and vote your conscience by passing my budget recommendations without reading them."

"That's pretty tough to do, Mr. President."

"Before you say no, Tom, I would like to tell you a story. When I was playing college football, there was a fellow on the team named George Gipp. We used to call him the Gipper. George had a rare terminal illness, and I used to visit him at the hospital every chance I got.

"One day, when it looked as if the end was near, he said to me, 'Ronnie, some day you're going to be president of the United States and you will be up against it. You're going to want to balance the budget, and cut taxes and bring a new prosperity and hope to the American people. It's going to be tough because with the fat and waste, you will have to cut out some meaningful programs that people need and want. And they're going to fight you in the House of Representatives where they will demand an up and down vote on each cut.'

"Are you still with me, Tom?"

"Yes, sir, Mr. President."

"Gipp continued, 'And because they're Democrats, Ronnie, they're going to want their own budget-cutting package, which will not do the job, and sabotage your well-thought-out economic package. These free spenders, who don't care what happens to the taxpayers' money, will forget the mandate that you won from the American people to cut out all the social programs that destroy incentive and cause inflation that hurts every man, woman and child in America.'"

"Is there much more to this story, Mr. President?"

"Gipp was having a hard time breathing by then, but he told me, 'The day before the vote, the Speaker is going to do some dirty maneuvering to see that all the reforms you worked for will go down the drain. It is then, Ronnie, when you think all is lost, that I want you to do something for me.'

"'Anything, George,' I told him. And he said, 'I want you to call up 29 Democratic congressmen, men who would vote their convictions over their party loyalty, and tell them — and tell them, to win this one for the Gipper.' That's the end of my story, Tom."

"Did George Gipp say anything about sugar?"

"I don't think so."

"Well, in Florida we raise a lot of sugar and we're interested in farm supports for our crop. The world price of sugar is ridiculous, and unless the federal government steps in and keeps the price above 19 and a half cents a pound, I'm going to have a lot of unhappy farmers in my district."

"Come to think of it, Tom, the Gipp did mention sugar subsidies. I think his exact last words were, 'Ronnie, I got one more favor to ask of you. Whatever you do, don't ever let imported sugar drive down the domestic price, so our own farmers can't sell theirs at a profit.'"

"He said that?"

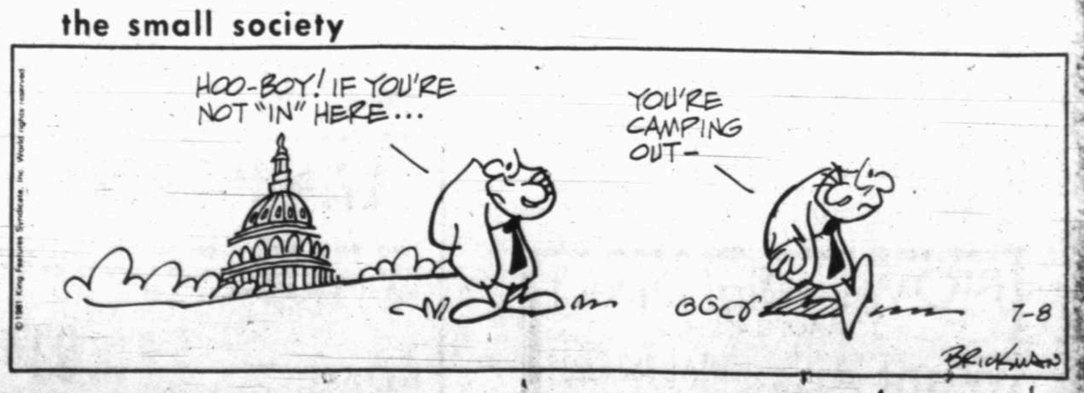

"The Gipper loved sugar, Tom, as much as he loved life itself."

"That's a wonderful story, Mr. President. I'm glad you called me up and told it to me. I'm going to go out there tomorrow and win one for sug — I mean for the Gipper."

"Bless you, Tom. By the way, who else has a sugar problem in your state?"

Singer George Jones back on the bottle

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Award-winning singer George Jones, the ex-husband of fellow country music stylist Tammy Wynette, is again suffering from a drinking problem, his manager says.

Paul Richey, Jones' manager, said Tuesday that Jones has canceled his personal appearances for the next month.

Richey told a reporter by telephone that Jones, 49, was hospitalized for exhaustion for about four days last week in Beaumont, Texas.

Asked if Jones was again suffering from a previously highly-publicized drinking problem, the manager said, "Yes."

Jones' drinking problem was a focal point of a made-for-television movie in May, "Stand by Your Man," based on Miss Wynette's autobiography.

Richey said he talked with Jones by telephone Tuesday, but would not say where Jones was staying. He said Jones was not under a doctor's care.

"You can't tell much a2out a person over the phone," Richey said.

Jones, a 28-year country music veteran, was married to Miss Wynette, "the First Lady of Country Music," from 1969 until they divorced in 1975. They have been singing partners since the late 1960s — even after divorcing.

Jones, of Florence, Ala., was treated for alcoholism last year during a month's hospitalization in Birmingham, Ala. He has said that he nearly died because of his drinking.

During the past year, he has won several awards for his throbbing hit "He Stopped Loving Her Today." The song earned him top male vocalist honors from the Country Music Association, the Academy of Country Music and in a readers' poll conducted by the Music City News, a Nashville-based country music publication. He also won a Grammy award for the song.

Some of his other big hits include "She Thinks I Still Care" and "The Race is On." His hit duets with Miss Wynette include "Golden Ring" and "Near You."

PATCO says informants used in contract talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department used "union informants" to gain an advantage over the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization in the final predawn hours of contract negotiations June 22, the union president says.

The accusation, denied by the government, was made Tuesday by PATCO president Robert E. Poli, who predicted the tentative contract which averted a strike would be rejected by the 15,000-member union.

Poli said the department strengthened its bargaining position June 22 by using "union informants" to learn that PATCO members had not endorsed a strike by the minimum 80 percent vote union leaders were seeking.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis knew the strike-vote results about the same time as union leaders and used the knowledge to force a contract settlement, Poli charged.

Poli said he had no choice but to take the government's offer. "It was the best possible deal I could get at the time," he said.

Spokesmen for Lewis and the Federal Aviation Administration denied that he knew of the strike vote outcome before PATCO announced it.

"We thought all along that they had the vote for a strike," said Linda Gosden, the department's assistant secretary for public affairs who sat in on the contract talks.

"The only solid information that we had on the vote was when it was announced by PATCO," FAA spokesman Fred Farrar said.

Poli said he has "a pretty strong feeling" the tentative contract will be rejected through a process which began today with the mailing of ballots to union members. He said the results will not be known for several weeks.

The union's executive board has recommended rejection of the 42-month pact, which calls for $40 million in increased wages and benefits the first year — the same level as originally offered by the government.

Poli said that if the rank-and-file turns down the contract he will immediately seek to reopen negotiations in hopes of reaching "a reasonable settlement" without controllers walking off their jobs.

The Reagan administration, however, will stand firm on its money offer no matter what the outcome of the union vote, the Transportation Department spokesman said.

Poli said there are no immediate plans a new strike deadline but added that the government's threat of seeking civil penalties, including possibly heavy fines, would not prevent a walkout.

Corporations pledge $25,000 each for presidential yacht

WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservative businessmen who bought the former presidential yacht Sequoia and offered it for Ronald Reagan's use say 15 major corporations have pledged at least $25,000 each to keep the ship in Washington.

Edgar Skinner, head of the Presidential Yacht Trust and an official of the conservative American Enterprise Institute, said the 15 corporations included insurance, manufacturing and banking firms. But he refused to name the companies.

"We're not going to be publicizing the names of our major donors automatically until we get permission (from them)," Skinner said Tuesday. "It's not that they are being kept secret. It's respecting the anonymity of the donors. There's no intent for secrecy."

The trust, directed by conservative businessmen and politicians, bought the 105-foot yacht in Florida last month. They said that as a part of American history, the Sequoia should be preserved and made available to Reagan and his successors.

White House spokesmen, however,have said tha in light of the president's proposed social spending cuts, Reagan has "no immediate plans" to use the ship, which has been newly redecorated with silk brocade drapes, emerald-green carpeting and silver candelabras.

The Sequia served presidents from Herbert Hoover to Gerald Ford, but it is perhaps best remembered as Richard M. Nixon's frequent retreat during the days of the Watergate scandal. President Carter sold the yacht in 1977 for $286,000 as "an unjustified and unnecessary frill."

The trust also plans to use the Sequoia for seminars and meetings to be arranged by Dale Tahinten, a senior scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative research group.

Michael Doud Gill, a Washington business consultant and member of the trust, said that because of the generally conservative makeup of the Sequoia's board of directors, he expects many of the programs to reflect a conservative point-of-view.

"You don't find too many people with a liberal bent who want to get involved in this sort of thing," said Gill, a nephew of the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The trust is seeking 50 pledges of $25,000 each for up to five years. The contributions are intended to cover the yacht's $1.1 million price tag and establish a $4 million endowment to pay for future maintenance costs.

Skinner said he expected the 50 contributors to be signed up by mid-September, at which time, he added, the list of donors would probably be made public.

Besides the 15 corporations that have pledged money, Skinner said two individuals have agreed to donate $25,000 a year and about a dozen other executives were "fairly enthusiastic" about the fund-raising effort.

The only donor whose name has been made public is Richard W. Arendsee, the owner of Four Winds Enterprises.

Senator says state paid high price for T-bones

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A Mother's Day meal served to prisoners at the state prison at Chino was "outrageously expensive," consisting of $4.90-a-pound T-bone steaks, a state senator says.

Democratic Sen. Dan Boatwright demanded an auditor general's investigation Tuesday, saying Los Angeles markets were selling T-bones at the time for $2.59 to $3.09 per pound.

"I am hard pressed to explain to the families I represent in Contra Costa County why the State of California is paying $4.90 a pound for T-bone steaks, or why the state is even buying T-bone steaks in the first place," Boatwright said.

Boatwright said the price of the steaks served at the Institution for Men at Chino included a large fee charged by the vendor for cutting all the steaks the same size. The state senator said the Department of Corrections insists that the steaks must be identical to prevent a riot.

Department officials could not immediately be reached to comment on Boatwright's statement.

John Babich, chief of procurement for the General Service Department, confirmed that the steaks cost $4.90 a pound, but said they were part of a $170,000 contract for beef for six months at the prison. He said the low bid by Specialty Meat Products of Long Beach was $10,000 below the next highest of three bids.

Babich said he welcomed an auditor general's investigation. "We've cooperated with them on other investigations, and will be happy to make everything available to them," he said.

Boatwright said Chino Food Manager F.D. Lisenbery told him he could have bought the steaks for $2.99 a pound. He said Lisenbery did buy the "traditional" Mothers Day T-bones outside the contract in 1979 and 1980, but this year was overruled by the General Services Department.

Babich confirmed that Lisenbery had bought the steaks separately in previous years, but explained that this year he was late with his request.

On Mother's Day, visitors are allowed at the prison and inmates are given "enhanced dinners" that day, officials said.

Boatwright said he also wants the auditor general to investigate why 3,500 steaks were ordered and 3,916 were delivered, when there were only 2,960 inmates and either 32 or 110 guests, depending on whose count you use.

The senator said Lisenbery told him General Services allows contractors a 10-percent leeway, and that the prison can't stop inmates from going back for seconds.

Lisenbery says the extra steaks are in the prison's freezer awaiting another special occasion.

Boatwright said such incidents "undermine public confidence in our administration of penal institutions at a time when we are telling our constituents we must somehow come up with the money to construct additional prisons."

Inmates fear prison return

ALLEGAN, Mich. (AP) — Eleven inmates housed at the Allegan County Jail after aiding guards during a riot at Southern Michigan Prison are fearful that a return to the prison could mean death.

The 11 helped rescue six guards during the riot May 26 at the prison in Jackson. Afterward, they received threats from fellow inmates.

"They'd probably just stick a couple of knives in us and that would be that," said Ron Hinds, 32.

"We got a lot of threats before we left there," said Hinds, who is serving a sentence of five to 15 years for a 1978 perjury conviction. "And now, none of us knows what's going to happen next. We're just sitting here waiting."

Because of the threats, the 11 inmates were transferred to the jail in the small farm community of Allegan, about 60 miles northwest of Jackson.

Riots at Jackson and two other state prisons left scores of inmates and guards injured. Damage and administrative costs linked to the riots totaled more than $9 million, state officials have said.

Hinds and seven others were credited with helping the guards escape a fire during the second day of rioting at Jackson. The inmates joined the guards in a catwalk, breaking waterpipes for them and passing around wet shirts to help them breathe through thick smoke.

Three other men also aided guards, including Don Beaver who dragged an injured guard to safety and administered first aid.

Redistricting witness challenges county splits

By LEE JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A witness says the Legislature didn't need to slice off chunks of five urban counties and place them with rural areas when it drew new House districts in May.

George Korbel, coordinator of litigation for Texas Rural Legal Aid, resumes testimony before State District Judge Harley Clark today.

Korbel testified Tuesday for a group of plaintiffs, including three Mexican-American state representatives, who want Clark to declare the House redistricting bill unconstitutional.

The plaintiffs say the bill unnecessarily split counties in violation of a provision of the Texas Constitution that says counties must be kept intact except to equalize population.

Korbel, who represented Mexican-Americans in lawsuits challenging Texas' 1971 post-census redistricting plans, made these contentions about major urban counties:

— El Paso County, with 479,899 people, could have been divided into five districts of 95,580. The deviation from the ideal district of 94,856 would have been an acceptable 2.3 percent. The House plan created five districts ranging from 90,936 to 97,831 people and split off 5,000 people to flesh out an adjacent district.

— Tarrant County, with 860,880 people, could have been cut into nine districts of 95,653 people, with a deviation of less than 1 percent from the ideal. The House bill, however, put 11,402 residents into an adjoining rural district represented by Rep. Bill Coody, D-Weatherford.

— Dallas County, with 1,556,000 people, could have been carved into 16 districts with an average deviation of 2.65 percent. Instead, the House bill put 45,102 of the county's people in a rural district including Kaufman and Rockwall Counties.

— Bexar County, wth 988,800 people, could have been sliced into 10 districts with a 3.9 percent deviation, yet the House took out 18,684 people and added them to a rural district.

Rep. Tim Von Dohlen, D-Goliad, chairman of the House Redistricting Committee, arrrives at district court in Austin Tuesday.

Fifth Irish hunger striker dies

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Joe McDonnell, the fifth Irish nationalist to die on hunger strike in Northern Ireland's Maze prison, refused to join an earlier fast, saying, "I have too much to live for."

But the burly, 30-year-old gunman changed his mind when he became embittered at what he claimed was British duplicity in ending that fast last December.

McDonnell took the place of Bobby Sands, who launched the second hunger strike March 1, and who died on his 66th day without food May 5. McDonnell died early Wednesday on the 61st day of his fast in the same bed in the prison hospital wing that had been occupied by another hunger striker, Francis Hughes, who died May 12 after 59 days.

McDonnell, who was a close friend of Sands, and was captured with him after a bombing mission, was married and had two children: Bernadette, 10, and Joseph, 9.

Family friends said that the boy in a recent essay for a school test on the release of the American hostages in Iran, wrote: "I wonder how many ribbons they will put when our hostages are freed, when my daddy and his friends are out of jail." McDonnell's 29-year-old wife Goretti was at his bedside when he died.

McDonnell, who came from the staunchly Roman Catholic Andersonstown district of West Belfast, was the fifth of nine children. His brother, Frankie, 24, is serving a five-year term in the Maze for membership of the IRA. Frankie took part in a cell-block protest demanding political status by refusing to wear prison clothes. He is scheduled for release in December.

Friends said McDonnell, an upholsterer by trade, was caught up in Northern Ireland's sectarian conflict soon after his marriage. He and his wife lived with her sister in the Lenadoon district, one of only two Catholic households a predominantly Protestant street. They fled to a Catholic neighborhood after a Protestant mob wrecked the house.

McDonnell was interned by the British as a suspected guerrilla in 1972 and was held for several months.

He joined the IRA Provisional wing when he was released and was active with a unit of the so-called Belfast Brigade in the Andersonstown area.

He was interned again in 1973 and was released the following year. Sources close to the IRA said he was active in ambushes and bombing missions and called him a "cool customer."

At about this time, McDonnell became friends with Bobby Sands and from then on their lives and deaths were to be closely linked.

They were captured by British troops and police in October 1976 following a firebomb attack on a furniture company warehouse in southwest Belfast. Sands led the mission and called in McDonnell to back him up. The bombs destroyed the building but Sands, McDonnell and two other guerrillas, who were all in the same car, were arrested and were all jailed in September 1977 for 14 years for possession of the same handgun.

Brock outlines U. S. trade practices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration will not help U.S. industry compete in international trade unless the foreign products are subsidized or the competition poses a threat to national security, U.S. Trade Representative William H. Brock told Congress today.

"Where other nations have a natural competitive advantage, U.S. industry must either find a way of upgrading its own capabilities or shift its resources to other activities," Brock said.

"When the foreign advantage is based upon government subsidies and other trade-distorting practices," he added, "U.S. policy will be to enforce U.S. trade laws and to work to eliminate such practices."

He said U.S. trade policies "will take into account the fact that the economic vitality of certain sectors of our domestic economy is clearly essential to national security."

Brock was releasing the report today at a Senate subcommittee hearing on trade policy issues.

Brock said President Reagan's trade policy would be based on a domestic program that results in strong economic growth without inflation. That, he added, would make U.S. products better able to compete against foreign products both in this country and in others.

The United States is losing its lead in technology, he said, but the administration's economic program can reverse that trend "by improving incentives to invest in capital equipment as well as in research and development."

Brock said the administration also will try to reduce what he called "self-imposed export disincentives," including taxation of Americans working abroad and the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

The administration supports bills that would revise the anti-bribery law and reduce the income tax burden on Americans working abroad, he said. He did not elaborate.

Industry has pressured the administration for both measures.

Bonilla blasts attorney general

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Attorney General Mark White should drop "his personal war against bilingual education," says a top official of the League of United Latin-American Citizens.

Ruben Bonilla, LULAC general counsel, reacted sharply Tuesday to White's Monday request for a delay in a federal order requiring bilingual education in all grades.

"I am beginning to believe that the attorney general will never accept the fact that Texas has committed educational crimes against Hispanics," said Bonilla, immediate past president of LULAC.

White wants U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler to delay implementation of his April 17 order. Bonilla said any delay would "lead to chaos and disorder in the implementation of any program."

"There is no need for the attorney general to continue his personal war against bilingual education, the Legislature has acted, it is now a reality, and comments such as (White's) only serve to undermine and discredit the need for educational equity and opportunity," said Bonilla.

Federal judge rejects award in Houston cable TV suit

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has thrown out a $6.3 million damage award to a cable TV company that complained Mayor Jim McConn, the city of Houston and another cable company conspired to exclude it from Houston's lucrative cable TV market.

The decision Tuesday wiped out a federal jury's award last February to Billy Golberg and his affiliated Capital Corp.

U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue conceded there was enough evidence to support a finding that a conspiracy among the defendants may have existed — but he said there was not evidence that it damaged Goldberg.

City officials and Gulf Coast Cable Television have admitted that cable TV companies — with the blessing of the City Council — worked on their own to divide the city into five franchise areas.

However, when Gulf Coast won the southwestern sector of Houston, an area sought by Goldberg's firm, Goldberg sued, claiming foul play.

Jurors awarded the damages, one lawyer said, not so much in favor of Goldberg, but against the politics-as-usual attitude of city officials, in particular McConn.

Bue said he was unable to substantiate the damage award because of the jury's answers to two key questions he asked them in his instructions before deliberations began.

The main problem, he said, was that jurors found that Gulf Coast's participation with other companies to divide up the city did not constitute a conspiracy to violate anti-trust laws.

At the same time, in answer to a more general question, jurors ruled there was an overall conspiracy to restrain trade, and they awarded the damages based on that finding.

Bue did not exonerate the defendants, but said if jurors did not object to the companies' agreeing among themselves to franchise boundaries, he could find no other independent evidence of a conspiracy that specifically damaged Goldberg's firm.

"The evidence demonstrates clearly that the mayor and the city not only supported the lobbying efforts of Gulf Coast, but also manipulated certain aspects of the conspiracy," the judge said.

Weinberger in no hurry on bomber, MX missile

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is in no hurry to decide either on a new Air Force bomber to replace the aging B-52 or a basing plan for the MX missile system, a Pentagon spokesman says.

"These are enormously weighty things that are going to determine the future balance (of nuclear power with the Soviet Union) for many, many years to come, and there will be no artificial deadlines," spokesman Henry Catto said Tuesday.

Weiberger ha asked for more information on the new strategic bomber and has no timetable for submitting a recommendation to President Reagan despite his statement earlier this year he would make the recommendation in mid-June, according to Catto.

An independent commission headed by Nobel Prize-winning physicist Charles Townes was to report to Weinberger by July 1 on its choice among more than 30 possible basing methods for the MX missile.

Townes gave Weinberger a status briefing June 30, but Catto said "nobody knows" when the commission will submit its report.

On Tuesday, Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., released a study saying that whatever MX basing system is used, an attack on it would produce a swarth of radioactive fallout that could kill millions of people.

Catto said he did not know the nature of the new information Weinberger wants on the bomber or from whom it was being sought.

Weinberger is expected to choose among three basic options: an updated version of the B-1 that President Carter rejected in 1977; a plane that uses advanced "stealth" technology to make it virtually invisible to enemy radar and other detectors; or, as the Air Force wants, simultaneous development of both planes.

The study released by Skelton, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, combines weather patterns at various times of the year with proposed MX basing options to produce a map showing where fallout from a nuclear attack on the sites would spread.

"Many millions of Americans could be killed by fallout from an attack on MX missiles in Nevada, Utah, Texas or New Mexico even though they live far from those states," Skelton said.

The most optimistic picture, said Skelton press aide Gary Edwards, is for missiles based in Nevada and Utah, the site preferred by the Air Force. The highest radiation spread is from split basing, or deployment of missiles both in Nevada and Utah and at the other proposed site in New Mexico and Texas.

Charles Sears, identified by New York police as the so-called Skid Row Slasher is shown as he entered Criminal Court in New York Tuesday. An ex-convict, Sears, 32, was charged Monday night with one count of homicide after questioning to determine if he is the man who attacked 16 derelicts in the last 10 days, killing two of them.

Officials say suspect former mental patient

NEW YORK (AP) — A Bowery hotel resident held as the suspected skid row slasher who killed two derelicts and wounded 13 others is a former patient at a Florida mental hospital and has been diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic, authorities say.

Assistant District Attorney Harvey Rosen disclosed the psychiatric background of Charles Sears, 32, an ex-convict and Vietnam veteran, as Sears was arraigned Tuesday on one count of murder and assault.

Rosen said the hospital is in Tidewater, Fla., but gave no further details, including how long Sears was there.

Judge Michel Corriero in Manhattan Criminal Court ordered Sears held without bail in the Men's House of Detention on Rikers Island and ordered that he undergo psychiatric examination.

When the judge asked Sears if he understood the charges against him, the man charged with being the "Skid Row Slasher" replied:

"I'm charged with killing a man and assaulting a man."

Sears' Legal Aid Society lawyer, Robert Stein, said he did not oppose the holding of his client without bail, but did object to the order for psychiatric tests.

Corriero scheduled a hearing for Friday.

Sears is charged with the fatal throat slashing of Michael Fiorentino, 40, killed as he slept on a park bench. Police have said they believe the same man carried out four other slashing attacks during the same night, including the killing of Harold Wilson, 50, and nine earlier neck-slashing attacks on derelicts who all survived.

Police sources said Sears, who lived in the Bronx with his wife and four children before she "kicked him out" after another assault arrest in 1977, may have struck out at the derelicts because he saw in them his own "image."

Since leaving home, except for a brief period in late 1979 and early 1980 w... he worked for a security firm in Brooklyn, the former Consolidatd Edison mechanic had been unemployed and gravitated from one seedy Bowery flophouse to another.

His last address was the Hotel Delevan on the Bowery, where the $3.50-a-night rooms can be obtained with tickets from a city men's shelter.

A bystander, at right, tests the loose ground Tuesday at the edge of a 1,000 foot long gorge caused by the release of millions of gallons of water from an underground reservoir. Newark water officials believe the valve, at center, was tampered with causing the water loss and creating a water supply emergency in Newark.

City cuts down in water use

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — City residents have been ordered to use as little water as possible after vandals spun open pipeline valves, loosing a cascade up to 100 million gallons that ruptured mains and cut off the city's principal source of water.

Mayor Kenneth Gibson declared a state of emergency, prohibiting all non-essential uses of water, including car-washing and lawn-watering. The action came as the as city faced its biggest heatwave of the summer.

Just a few months ago, Newark and most northern New Jersey cities were under strict rationing imposed by the governor because of a drought that began last year and brought reservoirs to perilously low levels.

A wet spring eased the danger, and the restrictions that threatened to close major industries and recreation spots were lifted. But now Newark must "juggle supplies around so we can keep in service," said city civil engineer Jim Conley.

"It was a major catastrophe," Conley said.

The city's backup reservoir has a nine-day supply, Conley said, and it is hoped that neighboring communities can help supply Newark with water until the damage can be repaired. City spokesman Doug Eldridge said that would take four to six weeks.

The Pequannock Townhsip watershed, where the break occurred, supplies 50 million of the 100 million gallons that the 330,000 people of Newark use each day.

Vandals apparently got to the valves late Monday or early Tuesday by breaking into a concrete blockhouse, Eldridge said. The valves were reached through a manhole and opened, causing an estimated 50 million to 100 millions gallons of water to spill from the twin pipelines that stretch 28 miles to the city, Conley said.

Sections of the pipelines nearly a quarter of mile long broke away, and the cascade of water and gathering silt "cut a gorge 200 feet wide, 100 feet deep and 1,000 feet long, flooded out some properties out there and went into the Pompton River," Conley said.

Workers managed to turn off valves further up the pipeline and stem the flow, Eldridge said. Law officials said no one was injured and no houses were seriously damaged.

Kitchen taps did not run dry after the spill, and Eldridge said there were no other service interruptions Tuesday.

The blockhouse was on the side of Pompton Notch Mountain and houses the valves that control the 48-inch and 42-inch pipelines, Eldridge said. The water ran open until Pequannock residents called police.

"Two workers were attempting to shut off the valve when the erosion and undermining caused the whole thing to collapse," Eldridge said. "Two pipelines were ruptured and the water had to be shut off further down the line."

Sandra Perry, whose family lives at the foot of the mountain, said she "could hear the rumbling of the water as it came down and it was bringing down the whole hillside with it."

Mrs. Perry said police knocked on her door about 4 a.m. and warned her to be prepared to evacuate.

"It's just covered everything with about eight feet of silt ... a couple of acres of our property," she said. "It just buried a couple of trees. It just missed the barn and the house. We still look out the window and just can't believe it."

The city lost no time starting negotiations on water contracts with Jersey City, the Passaic Valley Water Commission, the private Elizabethtown Water Co. and operators of the Wanapue Reservoir.

It was not known how much water Newark's neighbors could provide.

"There's plenty of water there, and it will stay there until we get it fixed," he said. Eldridge called the cutoff "the most serious interruption we have had in the water system since it was opened in 1900."

New editor named

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — William F. McIlwain, executive managing editor of the Washington Star, was named Tuesday as the editor of the Arkansas Gazette.

Gazette Publisher Hugh B. Patterson Jr. said McIlwain, 55, would have overall responsibility for the news and editorial functions of the newspaper.

A native of South Carolina, McIlwain joined the Washington Star in January 1979 as deputy editor and was named executive managing editor in April.

He previously had served as editor of the Boston Herald American, editor of Newsday, managing editor of the Bergen (N.J.) Record and deputy managing editor of the Toronto Star.

Iran trying to prevent Bani-Sadr escape

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran reinforced patrols along Turkey's eastern frontier to prevent fugitive ex-President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr from fleeing the country, a government spokesman said today.

The spokesman for the Kommiteh, Iran's revolutionary police command, told The Associated Press in Beirut by telephone that authorities were certain Bani-Sadr was hiding in Kurdistan, a northwest province seeking autonomy.

The spokesman, who declined to be named, said the deposed president had close relations with Abdul-Rahman Ghassemlou, leader of the outlawed Kurdish Democratic Party, and Massoud Rajavi, head of the Mujahedeen Khalq, the Islamic-Marxist guerrilla group leading the campaign against Iran's ruling fundamentalist Moslem clergy.

"With the links he has with Ghassemlou and Rajavi, Bani-Sadr cannot be anywhere other than Kurdistan," the Kommiteh spokesman said.

He said Bani-Sadr's chances of escape from Kurdistan to Turkey were slim because the border is closed and heavily patrolled. He did not elaborate.

The president's supporters were no longer able to distribute leaflets criticizing the government, the spokesman said, "because people will kill them wherever they find them distributing."

He said citizens were demanding that the leaflet distributors "be executed in public squares."

The official Pars news agency said two Mujahedeen Khalq supporters were arrested in the town of Miyandoab in western Azerbaijan province, and five in Ahwaz, capital of the southwest oil-rich province of Khuzistan on Sunday and Monday.

More than 140 people from Mujahedeen Khalq and other secular, Marxist and nationalist groups supporting Bani-Sadr have been officially reported executed in various parts of the country since his ouster 18 days ago.

Newly appointed Foreign Minister Hussein Musavi said in an interview with the state-run radio in Tehran he would seek to strengthen Iran's ties and diplomatic representation with Asian and Islamic nations at the expense of links with the West.

"We shall move in the direction of cutting down our embassies in Western countries," Musavi said in his first broadcast interview since the Majlis, Iran's Parliament, approved his appointment last week.

"We shall leave only enough staff there to deal with student affairs and other necessary matters," he said. "We shall concentrate on establishing intensive ties with other Moslem nations, and we shall stop at nothing to achieve this."

He also pledged continue Iranian efforts to help "liberate all occupied Arab land, including East Jerusalem, from Israeli occupation."

An Iranian foreign ministry spokesman said the government had decided to downgrade diplomatic relations with South Korea to charge d'affaires level, without saying why.

The spokesman said in a statement broadcast by Tehran Radio the South Korean Embassy in Tehran will be run by three diplomats plus non-diplomatic personnel. The rest of the staff was given two weeks to wind up affairs and leave.

Reuters news agency, one of the few Western news organizations in Iran, was ordered to close its offices Tuesday.

Captain says company delayed ship search

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland (AP) — The Texas firm that chartered the ill-fated Arctic Explorer waited 24 hours before telling authorities the ship might be in trouble, the Coast Guard chief of the rescue center in Halifax says.

"If we knew the moment she went down, and depending on weather conditions, we likely could have saved more," Coast Guard Capt. Kip Powick said Tuesday.

The seismic survey ship, which was chartered by Geophysical Services Inc. of Dallas, sank Friday morning in icy waters off Newfoundland's Great Northern Peninsula, but the search for survivors did not begin until the next day. Eleven bodies and 19 survivors were recovered, and no hope is held for two men still missing.

No distress call was received from the 990-ton ship, but its routine radio check message Friday morning was not received. However, the Coast Guard was not told, Powick said.

Polish dockworkers begin one-hour warning strike

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Dockworkers in major Polish ports walked off their jobs for a one-hour warning strike today, demanding improved living and working conditions, a Solidarity union spokesman said.

The spokesman, reached by telephone in the port city of Szczecin at the East German border, said the strikes began without the traditional wail of sirens or other dramatic acts. The workers planned to stay at their posts through the work stoppage.

The brief strike threatened to be only the first in a series of blows to Poland's crumbling economy at a crucial moment — less than a week before the July 14 opening of a reforming party congress viewed with alarm by the Soviet Union.

Solidarity employees at LOT, the Polish government-run airline, are on strike alert and plan a four-hour warning strike Thursday, demanding the right to name the airline's new director. Airline management said the strike would cause serious disruption in foreign flights and cancel many domestic flights.

Miners in Silesia are threatening to cut coal production in half unless the government ensures that food supplies "will be no worse than in other places in the country," a Solidarity spokesman said. He said miners' families have rationing cards, but nothing to buy with them.

The labor troubles are certain to embarrass Poland's Communist leaders in the eyes of their restless Soviet allies.

The dockworkers dropped their chores at 10 a.m. today in Szczecin, Gdansk, Gdynia, Kolobrzeg and Swinoujsice, all on the Baltic Coast.

A spokesman for the Solidarity chapter in Szczecin, Jan Kaska, said the economic effect of the one-hour work stoppage would be "symbolic, it would be nil, because let's face it, one hour means nothing for a port of this size."

The dockworkers are demanding a "dockers' charter," guaranteeing workers rights and improved working and living conditions. They contend the government has failed to implement past agreements regarding the charter.

Representatives of the dockworkers negotiated late into the night in Warsaw with Minister of Maritime Economy Stanislaw Bejger in a futile attempt to head off the protest, Warsaw Radio said.

The radio did not elaborate on the reasons for the failure of the talks with Bejger, who was appointed to his position less than a week ago during a major Cabinet reshuffle.

Union sources said failure to reach an agreement on these issues before the opening of the party congress on Tuesday could prompt a general strike of Polish ports and port-relate enterprises.

A dockworker interviewed over Warsaw Radio said: "The port of Gdansk is so neglected that one has to work like in ancient times. ... The government should take care of such hard-working groups."

Gdansk, formerly Danzig, is the Baltic cast city here the independent union Solidarity was born last summer in strikes sparked by meat price increases.

An extended strike could stall shipments of food and other vital goods already in desperately short supply while also cutting coal exports, Poland's chief earner of hard currency.

Even without strikes, Polish consumers appear to be in for tough times. The official news agency PAP reported Tuesday that Poles will have to live with a 5,000-ton meat shortage this month.

Meat has been subject to rationing since April 1. Other rationed items include sugar, flour, certain grains and, in some areas, cigarettes. Despite the rationing program, meat lines seem to be growing longer in Poland and store shelves emptier.

Speaking at a union election conference in Gdansk, Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said the deteriorating economy could make all the debating about last year's agreements futile.

"We are debating here for yet another day and for what?" he asked. "Nothing but to sit down and cry. Has anyone considered that cigarettes run even shorter, that market supply is going to the dogs? If this continues, those who applauded us in August 1980 would be throwing stones at us."

A union official said the talks between the dockworkers and maritime officials were convened at the request of the Roman Catholic Church, and that representatives of the coal miners had also accepted an appeal from the church to come to Warsaw to negotiate their grievances.

A new leader was named Tuesday for the Polish church. The Vatican announced that Pope John Paul II had chosen Bishop Jozef Glemp of the Warmia diocese as Polish primate, succeeding the late Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, who was a key force for moderation in union-government confrontations of the past year.

Meanwhile, prosecutors said they would appeal a judge's refusal to imprison four anti-Communist dissidents pending their trial on charges including plotting the violent overthrow of the state.

Leszek Moczulski, 51, the only one of the defendants to testify so far, told the court Tuesday that the Communist system "led the country into the biggest catastrophe in its history" and must be changed.

Moczulski and three fellow members of the Confederation of Independent Poland, known by its Polish acronym KPN, were freed June 5. Prosecutors argued that they have engaged in political activities since their release.

Court officials said the trial, Poland's first political trial since the drive for national reform began last year, should last into next month.

Street violence continues in Britain

LONDON (AP) — Five hundred youths rampaged through a North London suburb, looting shops and injuring passersby, in the fifth successive night of street violence in Britain.

The mob in the Wood Green district "went absolutely mad" Tuesday night, said cafe owner Saul Liasi. "It was not racial, just pure hooliganism. Undoubtedly, they want excitement and they want to destroy things — they are not short of money."

"All it is, we've been taking tick from the police — now we're giving it back," a 14-year-old West Indian youth who would not give his name told a reporter for Independent Radio News.

"I've been arrested every week, man. Stop, search, stop, search. Now I'm getting my own back. I don't care, I don't care about anything. I threw a couple of bricks, hit a couple of policemen. Just getting my revenge back."

Jeff Crawford, a West Indian community relations officer in the area, said most of the mob was black, but a "significant" number of young whites took part, "white lads and a number of Cypriots."

Scotland Yard reported 50 youths were arrested and 40 shops were broken into before the violence subsided at 1 a.m. today. The London Ambulance Service said it took four people to a hospital, including a man with a slashed throat and another man with a stab wound. No police injuries were reported.

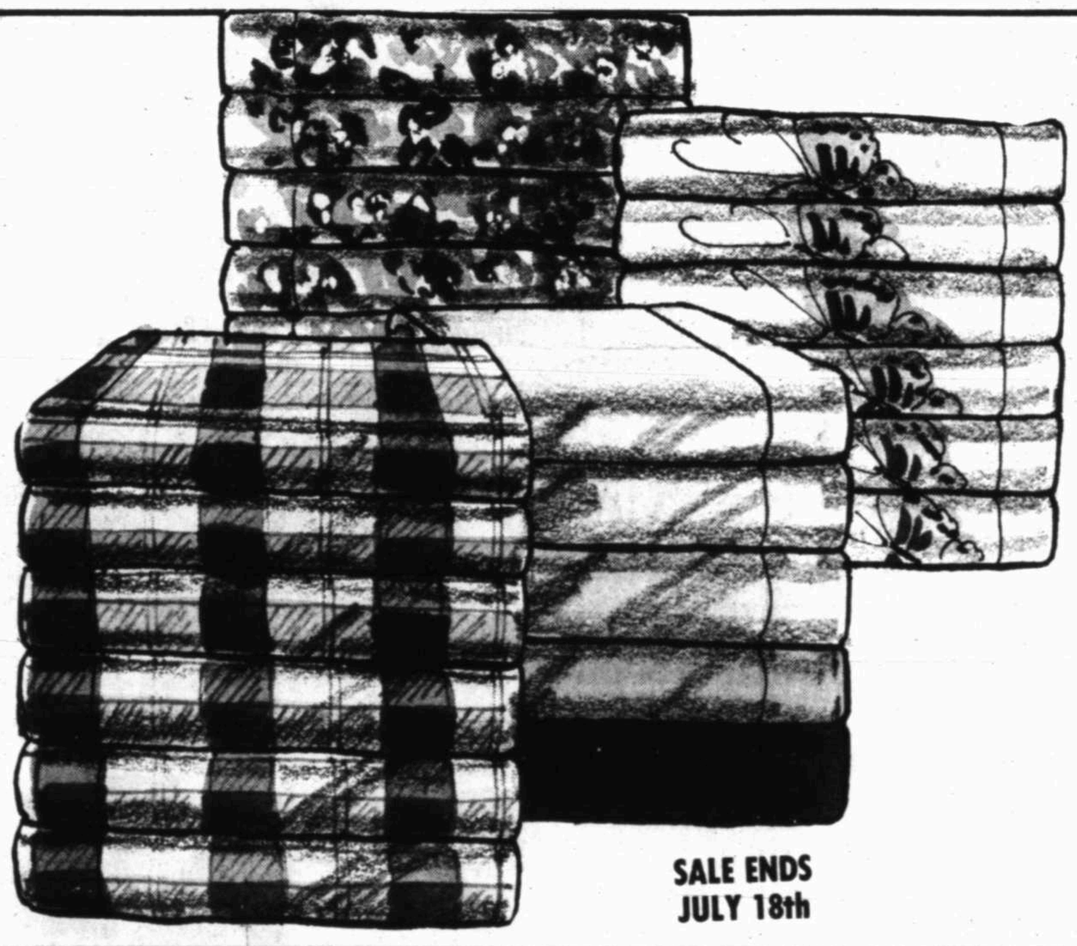

Wood Green is a densely populated working-class area, with many West Indians, Asians, Cypriots, Greeks and Turks, six miles north of central London.

Crawford said he thought the outbreak was a "childish attempt to imitate what has been happening in Liverpool," the northwest port city where mobs of black and white youths attacked police, set fire to buildings and looted stores Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights.

A woman resident said the fighting started "with almost army-like precision." A police officer involved said the youths smashed windows "as if they were goading the police."

The current outbreak of violence started last Friday night in West London's Southall district, where young Asian residents battled white hooligans.

Graffiti makes move from subway to canvas

NEW YORK (AP) — Their paintings don't hang in museums or in galleries, and their talents aren't feted at parties or shows.

Nevertheless, Frenzy and Chaos are famous. Their art rides the rails in New York's netherworld, as black webs of graffiti on subway windows and walls.

David Riggs, a graduate student of sociology, knows both the artists and the art. For three weeks, his Columbia University apartment became a Who's Who of graffiti artists, as Chaos, Frenzy and 28 others responded to his offer of free paper and paint.

The youths got a chance to indulge their talents away from security guards.

Riggs got a rare glimpse of a thriving subculture.

He also got thrown out of his apartment. The university deemed the graffiti project a masterpiece of mischief.

Riggs' now-vacant quarters look like a Sherwin Williams testing ground. Rorschach blots of orange blotch the gray carpets. Squiggly blue tadpoles swim on the windows, and spatters of red form endless dot-to-dot puzzles on oak tables.

"I guess I overestimated my ability to control accidental paint spillage," was how Riggs summed it up.

Columbia moved Riggs to a new apartment, after he agreed to pay for the damage and promised never to do it again.

Now the bushy-bearded student is shopping around for an old building to house his project, which he touts as a way to get teen-agers' subterranean signatures off subway cars and onto canvases.

The spray-painted scrawling known as graffiti is plastered across New York's subways like a blighted rainbow, obscuring windows, walls and destination maps and frustrating the city's commuters.

While the much-maligned messages are indecipherable to many, Riggs said, they come through loud and clear to other graffiti artists. At first glance, the paintings that hang on his walls look like meaningless doodles. Look closer.

That strange, stylized design is a "G." The next one's an "L," then an "O" ... Glow! The interlocking letters, twisted together like pretzels in cellophane, spell the artist's pen name — his "tag."

The tags of the prominent graffiti artists are instantly recognized by their peers, said Riggs, and that's the whole point: recognition.

"In the past, teen-agers accomplished the same thing by taking part in demonstrations, or wearing their hair in outlandish styles," he said.

In Riggs' view, the leap from conventional art to graffiti is a short one if creative young people lack access to proper materials. A subway car becomes a vast canvas, a supply of spray paint a suitable palette.

His theory seems bolstered by his observations that the teen-agers quickly picked up the classical art books he bought them, that some "students" were abandoning graffiti in favor of cityscapes and portraits, that the artists were starting to work in groups and give each other face-to-face feedback — and that all-important recognition.

But people like Ruth Fredericks of the Metropolitan Transit Authority are skeptical that the pursuit of art lies behind the ever-renewed scrawl of graffiti. According to Mrs. Fredericks, it costs $3.8 million a year to clean graffiti from New York's 6,400 subway cars.

"That's just labor cost and cost of materials," she said. "It also costs us in terms of quality of life and service."

Riggs became acquainted with the graffiti problem while working with troubled teen-agers.

"I met a 15-year-old kid who was arrested for writing on the subways in the train yards of the Bronx," Riggs said. He bought some materials and invited the artist, name of Haze, to use his apartment instead.

Haze brought Chaos, and Chaos brought Frenzy. Riggs placed an ad in The Village Voice looking for more. He tapped into the cult; in no time, his apartment walls were graced by the work of such notables as Mikal, Keka and Jade.

Riggs sank $300 into paper, canvas and paint. He had collected another $200 in donations when Columbia officials cracked down at the end of last month.

Despite the damage to the apartment, Riggs rejects the notion that graffiti artists are delinquents at heart.

"They're really decent. I've found them to be perfectly honest," he said.

From subway to canvas

David Riggs, a graduate student of sociology, right, watches as unidentified graffiti artists paint away at his Columbia University apartment in New York recently. Riggs offered the graffiti artists free paper and paint to indulge their talents and in return was evicted from his apartment when the university took a dim view of the project.

Number of antitrust suits now shows decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Justice Department officials, acknowledging that the Reagan administration has created a "more favorable atmosphere for mergers," have virtually stopped filing major new antitrust suits.

Since March, when Assistant Attorney General William Baxter became chief of the department's antitrust division, only four antitrust suits have been filed, according to department records.

Those four cases involved price-fixing charges against highway pavers in Kansas and Tennessee and resulted from investigations begun by the Carter administration.

"There's no question that businesses see a more favorable atmosphere for mergers and acquisitions," said one Washington lawyer who specializes in antitrust law.

"I'm having to restrain the enthusiasm of some of my clients (for mergers) by reminding them that even if the government isn't likely to sue them, private firms still can," said the lawyer, who asked not to be identified.

Baxter agreed. "In many senses, there is a more favorable atmosphere for mergers," he said.

The staff of a Cabinet-level task force has recommended that the White House drop an antitrust suit against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., but Baxter has vehemently opposed halting the litigation. A final task force recommendation has not yet been completed, but a decision is expected soon.

If the case is dropped, "I think you'll see widespread resignations in the antitrust division," said a department staff attorney, who asked not to be identified.

Many conservative economists contend that the antitrust laws, based on concepts of the 1890s, are now hindering the ability of American firms to compete in world markets.

Baxter said Tuesday that the small number of antitrust suits filed since he took office should not be taken as an indication that additional cases won't be brought in the future.

He said he didn't think the number of cases filed "is greatly significant. The work here tends to be reactive; it responds to what corporations do."

Baxter said it was possible his predecessor, Sandy Litvack, "pushed to get the decks cleared before he left. I simply haven't had many recommendations from the staff."

The antitrust chief has received fewer proposals for lawsuits because he and Attorney General William French Smith have indicated that they will reject proposals that might have been approved in the past, said the staff attorney.

Baxter has said he objects to several features of the Carter administration's antitrust policies, particularly those hampering mergers between firms in unrelated industries and "vertical" mergers, where a firm seeks to acquire another firm in a separate branch of the same industry.

The Reagan administration's filing of four new antitrust suits since March compares with 25 filed by the Carter administration during the comparable period in 1977 and 14 brought by the Nixon Justice Department during the same period in 1969.

The Carter administration's antitrust targets included such companies as Borden Inc., Armco Steel and the Schlitz Brewing Co., while the Nixon administration sought to break up International Telephone and Telegraph Co., U.S. Steel Corp. and Crocker National Bank, among others.

As the number of antitrust suits declines under the Reagan administration, the number of corporate mergers is increasing. Just this week, for example, Du Pont, the nation's largest chemical company, announced a $7.3 billion merger with Conoco Inc., the ninth-largest oil company. The transaction would make Du Pont the seventh-largest industrial company in the nation.

MC Watercolor Workshop has additional openings

Due to last-minute cancellations, there are a limited number of openings for the Midland College Watercolor Workshop, slated July 13-23.

The workshop is being conducted by Dr. Charles A. Stewart, chairman of the Midland College Fine Arts Division, and by Dr. Clarence E. Kincaid, noted Texas Tech University watercolorist. Dr. Stewart will be teaching both weeks and Dr. Kindcaid will be teaching the second week of the workshop.

Classes begin at 8 a.m. each day. The four-hour sessions will be primarily class instruction and activity, including lectures, critiques and demonstrations. These will be augmented by selected film strips, color slides and films.

The four-hour lab sessions start at 1:30 p.m. each day, with students expected to complete seven or eight exercises or paintings during the course.

Persons interested may contact Dr. Charles Stewart at 684-7851, extension 271, or the Office of Student Services, Administration Building, 684-7851, extension 166.

Fall fashion to be boldly assertive, predicts area clothing specialist

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

It's hot outside. But, within the air-conditioned rooms of Midland's clothing and department stores, racks are already being hung with fall fashions.

And according to the predicionts of Becky Saunders, the fashion statement is rich, full and boldly assertive in luxurious fabrics and voluminous silhouettes.

From the English Country Squire plaids and tweeds to the romanticism of lacey pirate whites to knockout movie star glamour, fall '81 will be a season of fashion opulence, she claims.

Ms. Saunders is a clothing specialist on the home economics staff of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. She left her office based in Amarillo recently to tour the state, visiting with media specialists and county extension offices.

"My predictions are based purely on what I have gathered by talking to store buyers and from reading high-fashion publications," she said. "It's always hard to predict this far in advance, and everything depends on the consumer."

However, she believes that colors will follow the same trend established this spring of peach and coral that will darken into rust and apricot for fall. "Greens and yellows will still be popular, but it will be a dull yellow green," she said.

She said that designers have moved away from the bright purple and intense red-blue colors, and that they are moving from contrasting colors to monochromatic colors (colors in the same family) for an all-around look.

"This is more elegant," said Ms. Saunders.

She gives First Lady Nancy Reagan credit for the trend to elegance.

One of the biggest surprises which has been introduced for fall is the gold lame look for daytime wear, so popular a few years back.

"All of the high-fashion magazines such as Harper's and Vogue are pushing this look on their pages," said Ms. Saunders.

She added that the look has been quite bold and splashy, with models wearing gold lame pants and tunics.

The gold look has even been extended to shoes, belts and bags.

"The average woman will tone down this look for daytime wear with gold Lurex thread in the fiber, gold piping used as accent, metallic embroidered dots and figures and gold accents in accessories," she predicted.

She believes this splasy look is a faddish trend, and is a designer's version of elegance. "It's also a rebellion against the preppy look of last year," she said.

The clothing specialist said that women who want real elegance will choose fabrics of cashmere, fine woolens and mohair for fall and winter wear.

"The wool outlook is particularly good because of the consumer concern with investment dressing—buying quality clothes and fabrics that will last," she said.

She said that velvets and corduroys will also be big.

"People are ready for a change; they are buying more quality clothes that will last," she said.

She believes that blanket fabrics, batiks, prints and plaids will also be popular.

Another look, which contrasts greatly with the flashy gold lame look, is the split skirt or long culotte silhouette. Ms. Saunders said that this should also be popular for fall.

The culotte look is a return to earthy basics, also popular a few years ago with the ethnic look. It will look best when worn in leather and suede type fabrics. Leather fringe will be a popular addition to the look.

"It will be a combination of the American Indian and East African look," said Ms. Saunders. Shawls, panchos and capes will complete the look.

She also predicts that tunics will make a big statement in fall fashion. "These will be worn over both pants and dresses, she said. "Tall women will look best in the 7/8th hem length, with tunics a little above the knees. Shorter women will look better with tunics a little below the hips."

She said that tunics should be great for both daytime and nighttime wear—and should look great when worn in soft fabrics, such as silk, metallics, soft cotton, etc.

"You've got contrasts in these predictions," said Mrs. Saunders. "There are really two silhouettes—short and slim, and long and full. Both looks are predicted to be popular, and this is confusing.

"It may be that the consumer will need to decide what is best for him/her."

Funny playmates

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — James H. Rider and Will Rogers, the American humorist, were childhood playmates.

While Rogers moved to Hollywood, Rider got married and had seven children, five of whom were girls. When the seventh child was born, Rider wired from his ranch 20 miles southeast of Bartlesville to Rogers in California this message: "Hot dog! I got another boy. What should I name him?"

Rogers wired back, "Put boots and spurs on him and name him Will Rogers." Rider did that.

Today, his son, Will Rogers Rider, is a supervisor of automated graphics here and serves in the Army Reserves.

LIVING TODAY
Self-worth

By SHARON A. HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Self, what are you worth?

You are worth more than any single element in the society.

Without you, this entire society can neither function nor progress, much less fight the battle against inflation.

With the high level of interest in the economy today, value is placed on things—but seldom on people.

Without self-worth, people do not have the initiative to meet and solve economical crises that affect the entire society's standard of living.

Attaining self-worth is indeed similar to business and/or financial success—all are directly related to goal setting, decision-making and achievement of goals.

Some components of self-woth, like business, include:

- sense of identity
- sense of integrity
- sense of direction
- significant purpose

As a bonus of continued success in the process of building self-worth, these additional elements are created: adventure, stimulation, challenge, self-respect, concern for others and feelings of personal security and freedom from the numerous fears many people suffer.

SELF-WORTH, FAMILY SUCCESS

Self-worth of family members, especially the primary adults in the family, affects the success of the entire family—and that of its individual members.

How people look at family success, sometimes termed "an abundant life," is highly variable, of course, but self-worth feelings play the major role.

Obviously, self-worth plays a dominant role in a family's success regarding unity, enjoyment as a family group, and levels of self-satisfying lifestyles that each member eventually reaches, but self-worth also plays a key role in the family's economic success.

In looking at family economics, it's interesting to observe the cycle of economic well-being for different stages of family life today.

The per-capita-income peak for most families occurs when the famiy head is age 55-65, a time when most children have left home.

Family budget is closely related to the philosophy of life and the values the family holds most dear—material and non-material, utilitarian (purposeful), and symbolic or status-producing.

All of these values, in turn, are linked to the felingsof self-worth of the primary adults in the family—directly or indirectly.

SELF-WORTH, WORK

Work, the source of most families' wealth, has some parts that are "dirty work" and may challenge the integrity—or self-worth—of a person.

When the major part of an occupation is viewed by a person as having prestige and value, the more likely he will identify it as an activity of self and put more effort into the job.

SELF-WORTH, DOLLARS

A dollar-value can be placed on heads-of-households, contributions to the market place that dual-career families make, and the value of women in the labor force.

On the other hand, no dollar value can be attached to self-worth.

Without self-confidence and feelings of worthiness, though, people cannot become a contributing element to a society that is trying to fight inflation and improve the quality of living for all individuals and families.

Sneaker strategy

NEW YORK (AP) — Some types of sneakers worn continuously may be harmful to your feet. Synthetic materials such as nylon and vinyl don't allow enough perspiration to evaporate into the air. trapped moisture can spawn fungi, micro-organisms and viruses, reports a sports podiatrist.

If the skin gets soft, fungi could penetrate and cause painful infection. If your child won't wear shoes, consider buying two pairs of sneakers, so they can be rotated. Cotton socks which "breathe" should be worn and changed daily.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Banish musty rug odor

DEAR HELOISE:

I have a rug with foam backing which got partially wet.

It has a very musty smell, even after I have given it a good shampooing. What can I do to get rid of the odor? — Betty Hafer

+ + +

Just because a rug feels dry to the touch, if it has a padding or heavy backing there's a pretty good chance it could still be wet underneath.

When shampooing a rug, be careful not to oversaturate it. That backing absorbs moisture which is hard to dry out.

If your carpet or rug does become so saturated with water that the backing or padding gets wet, pull the rug up, even if it's nailed down, 'cause that's the only way you can let it completely dry. (Let fans blow directly on it to help dry it out more quickly.) If it's not thoroughly dry, then it's going to mildew and you're really asking for an odor problem.

If it's an area rug, you can just roll it up and take it outside and let old Mother Nature do her sun-drying thing.

If you can't pull up your carpeting, there are professional carpet cleaning establishments that can help. Check in the yellow pages for more information.

The main thing is to make sure the carpet is DRY, and if that means pulling up the carpet to check the padding, then do it, but don't sit and wonder while your carpet slowly deteriorates.

If you know your carpet is completely dry, yet a musty odor remains, sprinkle baking soda on the area and leave it for a few days before vacuuming. — Heloise

WHOOPS!

Dear Heloise: If you've boiled potatoes for mashing and they've cooked dry and are slightly scorched, don't throw them out!

Dump them into a skillet with a little cooking oil and fry them.

Don't scrape out the heavily scorched potatoes or those stuck to the pan — just the ones that fall out freely. — Donna J. Mathews

LETTER OF LOVE (FROM HIM)

Dear Heloise: Just have loads of thanks to say
For the helpful hints you write each day.
They save me money, they save me time,
So, to you, I dedicate this simple rhyme.
As I begin the chores in my studio pad,
A complete book from you I wish I had.
This quote from the past can help those like me:
'Short pencil better than long memory.' — David Arthur

+ + +

And thank you, sir, for taking the time to express your feelings.

But, put that pencil down, 'cause now my book is out in paperback, and just chock full of helpful hints to speed you through your chores.

Check with your local bookstore. If they are out of it, ask them to order you a copy of "Hints From Heloise" published by Avon Books — Hugs, Heloise

EASY CANNING

Dear Heloise: At jelly-making time I eliminate a messy cleanup job by chipping paraffin directly into my empty jelly glasses, THEN pouring in the hot jelly.

The heat melts the paraffin, and it rises to the tops of the jars, making a perfect seal.

This method of sealing the jelly also removes the risk of burns from handling hot, melted paraffin. — Julia Smiley

Tennessee man waits for disaster to hit

By TOM McCORD
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Surrounded by muted radios and a clacking weather teletype, Danny Newton sits in a 16-by-18-foot command center and waits for disaster.

The hours tick by slowly for Newton, 31, if Tennessee's weather is good, firefighters stay on the job and tractor-trailers ferrying hazardous wastes remain on the road.

But if something goes wrong, Newton, an assistant operations officer for the state Emergency Management Agency, is one of the first to know.

Tennessee's EMA still is commonly known as Civil Defense, and Newton is one of dozens of people across the state connected with the agency, a non-military section of the National Guard.

"Civil defense was set up a long time ago to deal with mostly war-and-peace-type things," he said. "Now we've gotten involved in so much other stuff, such as toxic waste."

In a concrete block command center in the basement of Nashville's National Guard armory, Newton and his colleagues maintain a 24-hour watch on Tennessee's roads, airways, forests and nuclear plants.

In front of Newton, 14 radios murmur constantly, enabling him to monitor channels ranging from those used by the Tennessee Highway Patrol to those belonging to state wildlife officers and to the Army Corps of Engineers.

Two television screens nearby are keyed in to the Tennessee Valley Authority's Sequoyah nuclear plant near Chattanooga, Newton said, allowing him to gather up-to-date information in case of nuclear emergency.

To his right is a shelf containing nearly 50 volumes, half of which are about hazardous materials.

Any time a private plane goes down in Tennessee, a wildlife officer is shot at, a tornado strikes or mountain roads are flooded, it is the job of Newton or whoever is on duty to coordinate communication.

Weather poses the most frequent problem, he said.

"If we get a watch or a warning for 20 counties, we have to notify each of the 20 ... and if they're not part of the national warning system, we have to call them," he said. "It gets pretty hectic if you've got five or six watches in a few hours."

The warning system in Tennessee, he said, includes 106 drops — or checkpoints — involving Highway Patrol and sheriff's dispatchers. Roll calls — or checks — are taken every eight hours, he said.

Parents warned of hazards

NEW YORK (AP) — A master plan for childproofing outdoor play areas could save parents of toddlers a great deal of worry and grief, since children under the age of 3 simply do not understand the concept of safety, advises a magazine for expectant and new mothers.

It's up to parents to establish rules, explain them, and then repeat and repeat, while keeping ever watchful and checking regularly to make sure the plan is working well, warn the editors of Mothers' Manual.

The first step, the publication points out, is to establish clear boundaries for the outdoor play area and provide an assortment of toys and activities that will keep youngsters busy and content to stay within limits.

Animals, insects, yard tools, chemicals, garbage and barbecues are among the outdoor hazards very young children could encounter.

Cars, garages and driveways can all be prime sources of danger. The magazine suggests that parents make it a habit to remove keys from the ignition of parked cars and lock the doors. Even a very young toddler can put a car in gear or push in — and pull out — a cigarette lighter.

Keep garage doors closed at all times when not in use. If you have an automatic door opener, be especially careful: children holding on have been lifted up by them, and others have been strangled under them.

Driveways, too, can be a major source of trouble, and children should never, never play in them, the editors warn.

DEAR ABBY

To switch or not to switch

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for 39 years to a man who thinks he knows everything. Please settle this. How much energy is consumed when an electric light is left on for 15 or 20 minutes, compared to turning it off and then turning it back on again?

I have always turned the lights off when leaving a room, even though I know I will be turning them back on in 15 minutes or so. My husband insists that en-ergy-wise, I'd be ahead just to leave the lights on. He says turning them off and on wastes more energy than leaving them on. Who is right? — ME IN LINDEN, N.J.

DEAR ME: You are. The energy used in switching a light off and then on again is so insignificant that it hardly matters. But there are just so many hours' life in an electric bulb, so you would be ahead to turn off the lights when you leave the room. (Now can somebody tell me why light bulbs don't last anywhere near as long as they used to?)

DEAR ABBY: I'm leaving for college in the fall, and I've been somewhat downhearted because my parents have talked of selling our house, which has been my home all my life. (My father built it.) I finally saw the light when I read the letter signed TAX POOR AND IGNORED. She was the daughter who blamed her parents for selling their big home and moving into a condo too small for the usual Easter dinners, with no room to keep the grandchildren overnight. She said such parents were "selfish and inconsiderate."

Well, my mother doesn't owe me one damn thing! I owe her my life, and after raising a family, she deserves a break. I've had one for 18 years. — GRATEFUL IN SALEM, VA.

Keeping birds from seeds

By AL CARRELL

While I may occasionally have a black-and-blue thumb from carelessness, I never admit to that. However, I do admit to the failure of my thumb when it comes to growing things. I do not have a green thumb.

However, my lack of agricultural accomplishments does not stop me from giving advice. I'd like to pass along some of the hints and tips you folks have sent in that have enabled me to make suggestions to my wife Jean while I watched her dig or plant or plow. (It's tiring to be that close to hard work.)

One thing for sure: Varmints and vegetation don't mix. Here are some tips to keep the varmints away:

Did you ever sow grass seeds on a new lawn and notice the birds out pecking away at the dirt? They are systematically eating all your grass seeds. If you soak the seeds in blue food coloring mixed into only enough water to cover the seeds, the blue cast somehow prevents the birds from seeing the newly sown seeds.

Birds can be spooked away from the seeds by a "scarecrow," too. Try one of these. Hang strips of aluminum foil from strings going across the garden. These bright strips move with the slightest breeze, and the glint from the sun adds to the effect that there's something alive there. A similar trick involves using tin can lids hung in pairs. They not only move and glint, they also add sound as they hit together. One reader used shiny Christmas tree balls for this purpose and reported good results. Anything shiny that will wave in the breeze might work.

Most birds don't like snakes. I've known people to wind toy rubber snakes around the branches of fruit trees to keep the birds from eating the fruit. Reportedly, even cut up sections of old garden hose can be wound around the branches to resemble snakes. One reader had a stuffed owl that he used to keep the birds away. Still another hung a potato from a wire and poked several large feathers into the potato. The hanging potato moved around, and maybe the birds mistook it for an owl. I always felt that a bird that dumb probably wouldn't find the fruit anyway.

For some reason, stringing black thread all around the branches deters birds. (Anybody know what this would look like to a bird?) With these things that use fake predators to scare away pests, I've always been afraid that the larger predators like eagles, hawks and buzzards would be attracted.

A surefire way to protect a fruit tree from birds is with a blanket of nylon net over the entire tree. This still lets the tree have light and water, but keeps the birds away from the fruit.

There are also garden predators that eat insects. Frogs, lizards and snakes will serve you better than some insecticides. However, many folks don't take kindly to having reptiles around.

Ladybugs and praying mantises are beneficial insects that eat other species of insects. There are even companies that sell the eggs of these insects so you raise your own to hatch out at the proper time to take care of the bugs they most desire.

Birds also eat insects. That's one reason for the popularity of martin houses. Presumably, they fill up on bugs and don't go after your crop.

Among my favorite ways to fight pests is by planting other things among your plants. Intermingle onion and garlic in your garden, and the odor drives away many insects and rodents. Planting mint protects cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower and brussel sprouts. Plus you can use the mint in mint juleps. Lots of herbs also keep away bugs. Anything aromatic can probably repel some sort of bug.

One of my all-time favorite suggestions is a control for snails and slugs. It's to leave a dish of stale beer around. They crawl in and drink their fill and then drown.

Butting out

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Though many Americans smoke on the job, most of their co-workers apparently wish they wouldn't. About a third of workers interviewed in a Lou Harris survey said they smoke while on the job, but over half of their co-workers said they wish they would light up in separate areas.

The Harris study, a survey of office attitudes and productivity, was commissioned by Steelcase, Inc., a manufacturer of office furniture.

Reflections on the first lady's birthday

(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Draped in flags and banners, outfitted in red, white and blue rain umbrellas, Washington celebrated a double set of birthdays this dreary holiday weekend: The country's and first lady Nancy Reagan's.

Historians generally agree on 1776 as the year of America's official birth. For Mrs. Reagan, there is less accord.

"Life began for me in July 1923, in New York City," Nancy Reagan wrote in "Nancy," her chatty autobiography. And a White House staffer, supervising the details of Mrs. Reagan's birthday celebration, was firm.

"She was born in 1923," the aide said. "July 6, 1923. That makes her...um..." Calculatorless, the aide paused for some quick arithmetic. "...58."

But records at Smith College, Mrs. Reagan's alma mater, list the birth date of the former Anne Frances Robbins as July 6, 1921. Smith's records further show that the future first lady enrolled in the college in 1939 when she was 18 years old.

Which would put Mrs. Reagan's age at...um....

But what's two years among friends? Friends, that is, like the coterie of Californians — the "Coasties," as they are known here — who descended on Washington this weekend to help celebrate Nancy Reagan's birthday. The group included most of the president's so-called kitchen cabinet: the close friends and supporters of the president, his unofficial advisers and official confidants, the loyalists who have backed Ronald Reagan since his "GE Theater" days 25 years ago.

At the Watergate Hotel, resurrected by this administration as a stronghold of Republican opulence, the weekend guest list looked like a replay of Inauguration week, or maybe a reunion of the alumni of President Reagan's 70th birthday in February.

There, for example, were Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Jorgensen, who, with the William Wilsons, have hosted birthday barbecues for Nancy and Ronald Reagan for 20 years. Jorgensen, manning the phone in their Watergate suite while his wife stepped down for an early breakfast, was unperturbed by the thick, gray skies that hung over the city hours before Saturday's birthday barbecue.

"I don't know what they'll do if it rains," Jorgensen said. "Call the White House. They'll know."

"I really don't get into these things," he said, and laughed. "That's my wife's job."

Holed up in her own Watergate suite, meanwhile, Mrs. Justin Dart was equally secretive about what one gives a first lady (who, presumably, has just about everything).

"Oh, it's nothing, really," Dart said, "just a little nudnik, a little something to make her laugh."

If nothing else, Mrs. Reagan should have drawn at least a smile of amusement from the sight of so many friends and top-ranking advisers (chief lieutenants Ed Meese, Michael Deaver and Lyn Nofziger, for example; or maybe Assistant Secretary of State William P. Clark Jr., Attorney General William French Smith, presidential deputy Morgan Mason or U.S. Protocol Chief Leonore Annenberg) waltzing around in, as an official White House release described it, "red, white and blue skimmer hats...For the gentlemen...gondolier hats for the ladies."

Everyone wore red, white and blue to Nancy Reagan's birthday barbecue; they sat at red, white and blue covered tables artfully arranged on the grounds of historic Woodlawn Plantation, not far from Mount Vernon, and danced in a tent festooned with red, white and blue balloons. Even Nancy Reagan's birthday cake was — if not exactly red, white and blue — four tiers of white cake with red raspberry filling.

But the red-hottest touch of all may have been the 24 quarts of cheese and onion-topped chili the Jorgensens arranged to have shipped in from Chasen's, the Beverly Hills eatery where Nancy Reagan had her birthday luncheon last year.

Chasen's chili was served on a buffet table decorated with a floral hot air balloon — red, white and blue, of course — and filled with tiny American flags.

Obviously, Mrs. Reagan's close friends were more interested in celebrating the first lady's birthday than in calculating her age or any other such nonsense.

No less so, for that matter, were the conferees at a miniconvention of Foster Grandparents here who feted the first lady with a birthday cake four days before the actual fact.

Instead, the action that mattered to these Foster Grandparents, and others of the 17,370 such volunteers across the country, may have been the increase their program received in President Reagan's 1982 federal budget. Not only did the Foster Grandparents program survive the budgetary scythe that sliced through virtually every other federally funded social program, but its funding was fattened slightly: from $48.4 million in 1981 to $49.6 million in the 1982 U.S. budget.

"Well, it's so nice to see you all here, I can't tell you how wonderful it is," Mrs. Reagan said as she greeted the Foster Grandparents.

Then, recalling how she happened on the program 14 years ago during her days as First Lady of California, and how she came to embrace it as her own special cause, she commented, "I'm sure you all know that the Foster Grandparents program is...Well, I feel like it's my baby." Mrs. Reagan laughed, and her audience laughed with her.

Watching the continued success of this program, in which senior citizens volunteer to work with emotionally, physically and mentally handicapped children, the first lady said, "Well, it's like watching your child grow. And you just become so happy and pleased as it grows."

Mrs. Reagan digresed slightly, philosophizing a bit on the virtues and wisdom that come with age. "As you get older you develop characteristics that the young don't develop until they get older. You're more patient, more tolerant." She smiled; her audience hung on expectantly to every word. "These are all things that the young will learn. These are all very special qualities."

Matchmakers trying to preserve Judaism

By MARIANNE BERNHARD
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The children are off to school, the toddlers are tucked in for a nap and Phyllis Katz and Sharon Butler sit down to their day's work. Clutter builds as they scatter files across the desk top searching for number 317, the 36-year-old, 5-foot-9 executive who likes music and children.

Butler thinks he'd be simply smashing with number 378, the attorney and concert cellist who wants a large family.

Katz and Butler are "shadchans," or matchmakers, carrying on an old and honored Jewish tradition from their neighboring homes in Wheaton, Md. As proprietors of a Jewish dating service called Shalom Adventure, Katz and Butler, both observant Jews and mothers of three, are doing more than having fun and earning spending money. They believe they are making a contribution to Judaism by helping Jews marry within their faith.

"We were always running into people saying, 'Do you know anybody for me?' ... Often we didn't know anybody," said Katz. "We feel strongly that Jews should marry each other and we wanted to do something about it. Finally we came up with this idea," said Katz, who met her husband 12 years ago through a similar service.

So far they've arranged four to 10 dates each for approximately 400 area persons, said Katz, adding that at least five of those couples have married.

Although that figure may seem relatively low, Katz said she's delighted because "that's five more couples who wouldn't have married otherwise." She said it is possible that others have married but are reluctant to announce marriage plans by writing to a post office box number, which is how the service does its business.

Modern-day matchmaking is "absolutely necessary if Judaism is to survive," according to Rabbi Stephen Listfield, who himself gives nature a nudge by holding singles sabbath services, brunches and Judaic studies courses at Adas Israel synagogue in Washington.

"Jews are a tiny minority ... 2.7 percent of the population," said Listfield, who was not familiar with Shalom Adventure but likes the idea. "If a Jew wants to get married, they have a chance of 97-2 that it's going to be a gentile.

"Every marriage out of the faith lowers the number of Jewish people and reduces the chances of Jewish continuity. So I feel very happy to create conditions that enable Jewish people to meet, date and maybe marry each other."

Butler echoes that attitude, saying, "When you get the nice letters or find out somebody got married, it makes you happy." That happiness has been her and Katz's primary reward from Shalom Adventure so far. They say the service netted them a couple hundred dollars apiece last year, but expect to earn much more this year because of a rise in fees and applications.

A four-month membership in Shalom Adventure has risen from $7.50 when it opened three years ago to $18 and is offered only to single Jews.

Applicants are asked to fill out a questionnaire describing, among other things, their own and their desired match's physical attributes, degree of religious observance, musical taste and political feelings. They are also asked to write several paragraphs describing themselves and outlining what overall qualities are most important to them.

As applications arrive, usually 30 to 40 a month, Katz, a former teacher, and Butler, a former rehabilitation counselor, check through the files by hand, matching age, height and common interests. Within six weeks, they say, applicants receive a form letter listing the names and phone numbers of potential dates. Applications are then filed according to age and sex to be used for future matches.

Katz, 34, and Butler, 30, have different approaches to their work. Butler, the romantic, gets a feel for the person and sometimes overlooks height or age requirements if she "feels" the overall match works. "You get a certain satisfaction when two applications look good together."

Katz said she is more likely to match very closely to the applicants' stated desires, "which isn't always easy," she said.

Their work is loaded with surprises, they said. For instance, they hadn't expected to find the "under-30 male" file so crowded, said Katz, pulling out an inch-think manila folder bulging with forms. But the "over-40 male" file is skimpy.

Sometimes they return applications, such as those filled out by parents disppointed that their children weren't dating Jews, and a half-dozen from non-Jews interested in dating Jews. "We've even gotten an obscene application," said Katz, "which we returned with a letter saying we don't have anyone who fits that description."

Here's the answer: Replacing damaged plumbing

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

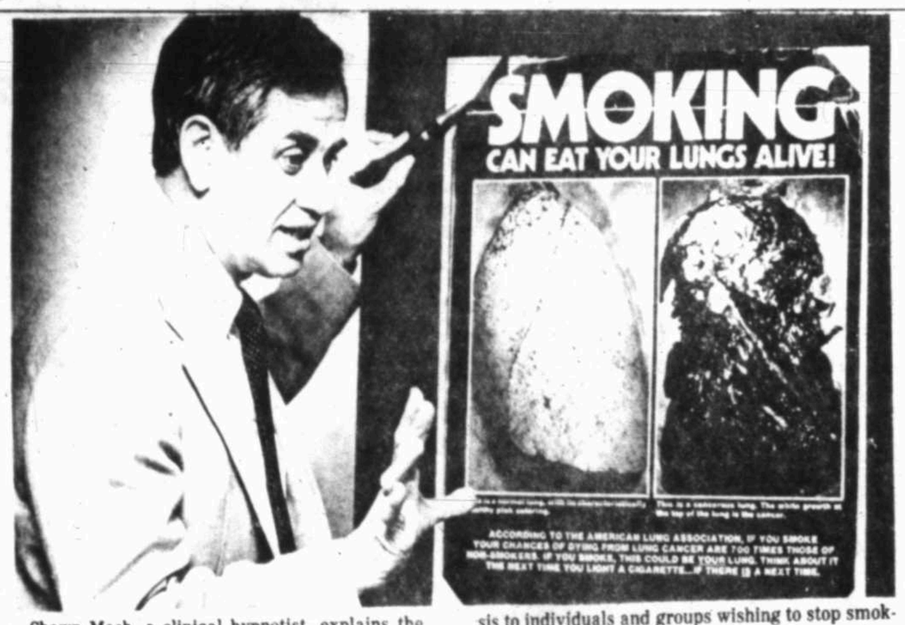

Q. — How can I replace a section of damaged pipe?

A. — While some plumbers do it with a single piece of pipe, don't you try it. Instead, use two pieces. Shut off the water. Cut the pipe with a hacksaw about 4 to 6 inches from a joint. Unscrew the short length of pipe. Then unscrew the long length from the other joint. Take the two pieces of pipe to your dealer and explain to him your problem. He will give you two pieces of new pipe, plus a union. Screw one length of pipe into one joint. Add the union into the open end. Screw in the other piece of pipe, then bring the two pieces together with the union. All threads should be coated with pipe compound before doing this. Now for a note of caution. Some plumbing codes forbid making a repair of that type without a plumber's license. Better check before you start, making certain you explain to local authorities exactly which type of pipe you want to repair.

Q. — Do I use the same kind of washer for hot and cold water faucets?

A. — You can, but there are special washers for hot water faucets.

(Leaky faucets, clogged drains, toilet tank repairs, pipe leaks and moist pipes are among the subjects discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Simple Plumbing Repairs," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents plus a long, stamped. self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondents cannot be undertaken because of the heavy volume of mail.)

Shawn Mash, a clinical hypnotist, explains the damage smoking can do at a quit-smoking session at Health Clinics International at 2503 W. Ohio Ave. Mash hypnotizes as well as teaches self-hypnosis to individuals and groups wishing to stop smoking, lose weight or deal with stress. New sessions begin each week. Health Clinics' hypnotist wants to help all failures

Health Clinics International has recently opened an office in Midland at 2503 W. Ohio Ave.

Renown in Dallas as a foremost clinic to reduce weight and stop smoking, Health Clinics International offers a three-prong approach centered around hypnosis.

Shawn Mash, a clinical hypnotist for both the Dallas center and the Midland center, says Health Clinic's work is different from other "quit" groups. "We want all the failures," he said, "because we'll get them and help them."

Beginning with a free orientation session, the Clinic explains how participants will learn to help themselves in curbing appetites, cigarette addiction or anxiety attacks. The orientation helps the individual understand why he or she is addicted, why he or she started this habit and how he or she can control it.

Mash uses his "bull-rope of addiction" speech to show participants they must first break down the problem before they can begin to control it.

In the second session, participants are hypnotized as a group. Unlike theatrical hypnotism, Health Clinic's hypnotism processes do not force anyone to "act like a chicken." At Health Clinic, only certified professional hypnotists with at least 200 hours of instruction and practice will help you to get to your subconscious.

What's more, Health Clinics International offers a third step — behavior modification — for your continued progress. Providing a special diet, doing a personality study and teaching a mind-writing technique are but a few modifications done at Health Clinics.

"Mind-writing is used to ventilate the situation and it gives them the something to do," Mash explained. "Their thoughts tend to work themselves out of the body. It's the same system I developed for myself."

Himself a reformed smoker, Mash suffers from arterial phlebitis, which causes clotting in the circulatory system. He quit smoking through the techniques he teaches.

To learn more about Health Clinics International and what hypnosis and self-hypnosis can do for your or your company's personnel, give them a call at 686-0336, or come by 2503 W. Ohio Ave.

Pro-sterilization group turns to advertising

NEW YORK (AP) — In the teeming subways of New York, an oppressive world of far too many people, the eye passes through a forest of swaying, contorted limbs and alights on a placard of bold, black letters:

"12 million Americans have chosen permanent birth control over all other methods."

The signs are the work of the Association for Voluntary Sterilization, a private group which extols sterilization as a form of population control and as a way of freeing men and women from the fear of having unplanned children.

AVS only recently turned to advertising to advance the cause of vasectomies and tubal sterilizations. It is, AVS officials admit, a sensitive subject, and there was much debate within the organization as to whether the advertising could be done tastefully.

The decision was to go ahead. Last year, AVS placed ads in Penthouse and Ms. magazines. And now, in 3,000 subway cars, the message is getting around.

"The phone hasn't stopped ringing," said Miriam Ruben, 59, the AVS spokeswoman. She pointed to a button on her telephone, the number posted in the subway ads — during the interview, it was never dark for more than a few seconds.

Reaction to the $17,000 campaign has been mixed.

"We've had a lot of cards pulled down, torn up," said Mrs. Ruben. "It obviously is a sensitive subject. ... The city is made up of minorities, and it has been a sore subject with minority groups."

Minorities fear sterilization may be used to eradicate their nationalities or races; that bigots may talk unwitting, illiterate men or women into having the operations, or might sterilize them without their permission. These things have happened.

"And every time it happens, it sets us back," Mrs. Ruben said. "We're tarred by that broad brush."

Mrs. Ruben is quick to point out that AVS supports sterilization for anybody, and not just minorities; for men and women, not just one sex. "The one who is most firmly convinced, the one who feels it is necessary to end his or her fertility should do it," she said.

In 1943, AVS split off from a now defunct organization over the issue of "eugenics" — a school of thought, considered progressive early in this century, which claimed that retardation could be eradicated by removing it from the gene pool, by sterilization if necessary. AVS opposed the theory.

AVS disassociated itself from compulsory and selective sterilization while at the same time fighting for the right of voluntary sterilization, which was prohibited or limited in some states.

A major battlefront was the "120 rule," which was supported by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists and through the 1960s amounted to the prevailing criterion for hospitals that performed sterilizations. Under it, some hospitals refused to perform sterilizations unless a woman's age multiplied by the number of her children totaled 120, Mrs. Ruben said.

Most of those battles were won by the mid-1970s, but Mrs. Ruben says the war is not over. Despite a recent study showing 13 million Americans were sterilized in the 1970s — compared with 3 million in the '60s — Mrs. Ruben says America is "still a pro-natalist country, as you can see from the pro-life movement."

"Even if they don't ban sterilization, a ban on abortion might foree people into sterilization. They will have no place else to go. We don't want that to happen. They'll have no choice, and the purpose of this organization is choice ... voluntary sterilization."

AVS spends $11.5 million each year to spread its message. The Agency for International Development provides $10.9 million of that sum for programs overseas. The remaining money comes from 2,500 members who pay annual dues of $15 apiece, and from small foundation grants.

AVS promotes research on sterilization, helps train health professionals in sterilization techniques and, with Planned Parenthood, distributes "seed money" for birth control clinics.

But the major priority is education. The group answers questions from those considering sterilization and refers them to facilities willing to perform the operations.

THE MIDLAND REPORTER-TELEGRAM, WED., JULY 8, 1981

West African tribe demands return of its monarchy

KRINJABO, Ivory Coast (AP) — The words on the blue cloth wrapped around a massive, old tree in the center of this village say literally in the native language, "We need someone."

But to the people of Krinjabo they mean, "We want our king."

The tree is the gathering place for elders in this village deep in the forest of the southeastern Ivory Coast. It was planted about 150 years ago by people who moved west from what was then the Gold Coast and now is Ghana to escape slavers, soldiers and tax collectors.

The question of a king for the Agni Sanwi, as the people of Krinjabo and the surrounding region are called, is a sensitive one. It nearly led to succession in the late 1950s when the Sanwi considered leaving the French colony of the Ivory Coast to join the newly independent Republic of Ghana.

The Ivorian government of President Felix Houphouet-Boigny has apparently agreed in principle to the seating of a new king, but it is obvious it would rather the Sanwi embraced republican practices. The French-colonial administrators were uncomfortable with traditional rulers, unlike their British colonial counterparts in the Gold Coast who found royalty easier to deal with.

"It's not that we don't respect Houphouet-Boigny, but a king is important to our sense of community, to remembering who we are," said Pierre Katche, an Ivorian businessman who was born in Krinjabo.

Krinjabo is the center of the Sanwi group of the Akan culture, a large body of people who today live on both sides of the Ivory Coast-Ghana border in West Africa. The Akan produce much of the cocoa and coffee that account for their countries' wealth. They are known for a love of gold, a fierce spirit of independence and loyalty to traditional kings.

The last king of the Sanwi died two years ago. One of his heirs is an officer in the Ghanaian army. The other is a lawyer in London. The military man is reportedly willing to assume the kingship. Now the people of Krinjabo have to find the funds to build him a proper residence.

Katche, 50, and Assemian N'Douba, 43, were born and grew up in Krinjabo, but both left to find work. N'Douba has returned and is one of the most successful cocoa and coffee planters in the region. Katche still lives in Abidjan, the capital two hours' drive to the west, where he owns a large garage and several apartment buildings.

But nearly every weekend he is back in Krinjabo, strolling down the sandy streets with his friend, N'Douba, and talking with the other influential men in the village about how to make life better there and what to do about the king.

There are about 2,000 people in Krinjabo, and they like to think they can take care of themselves. Their homes are solidly built of concrete blocks with corrugated metal roofs. All have inner courtyards that serve as kitchens, laundries, playgrounds and central gathering places for the households that normally include several generations.

There is electricity and running water throughout the village, and many residents have television sets in their sitting rooms where everyone gathers in the evening to watch the news and old American series like "Serpico" and "Hawaii Five-0."

By African standards Krinjabo is a prosperous village. Nearly everyone has plots of land to grow manioc, yams and plantain bananas, the foundation of daily meals. The children seem lively and healthy, and their fathers grow the highest quality cocoa in the country. But they are starting to look around for alternative cash crops because the world price for cocoa keeps dropping, and they fear the government will not be able to maintain its price stabilization program.

A visitor to the village followed the custom of presenting the men of the household where he stays with a bottle of gin. After it had been opened and a few symbolic drops poured on the ground, N'Douba's father, Koublan — who does not know his age but remembers he was already a husband and father when the French drafted him for military service in World War I — said a traditional maxim that served as a greeting to the stranger. "The most wonderful thing in the world is man for he is the sum of the universe."

Koublan N'Douba said he has had five wives, but only one is still alive. He married her in a Roman Catholic ceremony several months ago although they have lived as man and wife for 30 years. Like many Agni, Koublan was baptized a Catholic, but he left Christianity aside in favor of the traditional religion of his people, which considers the forest and the spirits in them as sacred. Now that he is old he has returned to the church and shuffles to Mass each Sunday morning, dressed in his best toga-like "pagne."

Monster of Lake Champlain town's mascot

PORT HENRY, N.Y. (AP) — The "sea monster" of Lake Champlain is the summer's hot news all along this 125-mile inland sea. Here in Port Henry, across the lake from Vermont's Green Mountains, "Champ" is king.

Nearly everyone in town claims, or knows somebody who claims, to have seen the monster whose purported picture was published in The New York Times last week. Sandra Mansi, now of Winchester, N.H., said she took the copyright photo on July 5, 1977, from somewhere on Lake Champlain's coastline in northern Vermont.

The existence of a dragon-like creature in the lake has been talked about for 350 years, since the days of explorer Samuel de Champlain himself. Sightings have been reported all along, but given far more credibility in recent years as serious scientific research into "Nessie," the sea serpent of Scotland's Loch Ness.

Scientists who examined Mrs. Mansi's photo say it does not look like a forgery, but they stop short of saying it looks like a monster. Further investigation is difficult because Mrs. Mansi says she no longer has the negative and does not remember the exact spot where the shot was taken.

The photo seems to show a creature with a long, serpentine neck and a rounded dorsal area above the water. It's a lot like the caricatures of Champ that dot the landscape in Port Henry.

For many in Port Henry, no further proof is needed. Champ already serves as the town's all-but-official mascot.

Last fall, the town passed a resolution declaring the local part of the lake, Bulwagga Bay, off limits "to anyone who would in any way harm, harass or destroy the Lake Champlain Sea Monster."

Drawings of a friendly dragon appear in Main Street shop windows. Signs at the village line read, "Welcome to Port Henry — Home of 'Champ.'" A sign along state route 9N near a lakeside campground cautions, "Monster Xing." Another roadside sign lists village residents who claim to have seen the monster since 1926.

Champ T-shirts, buttons and postcards all proclaim the civic pride these days. Soon, a fluffy stuffed Champ will be part of Port Henry's cottage monster industry.

Mayor Robert Brown says he thinks many earlier sightings probably went unreported because monster-watchers "thought people would laugh at them."

Yet despite Port Henry's effort to adopt Champ, and Brown's estimate that the town has received millions of dollars worth of free publicity, the village of 1,400 appears ill-equipped for throngs of tourists.

It has no big hotels and only a few small ones. Some of the lakeside campgrounds are already full. The town usually attracts so few visitors that the off-season atmosphere sometimes lingers well past the Fourth of July.

Port Henry could use some monster-sized economic help. A decade ago, Republic Steel closed its iron mines here, forcing older residents into retirement and younger ones to travel up to 50 miles for work. One out of every 15 residents moved away between the censuses of 1970 and 1980.

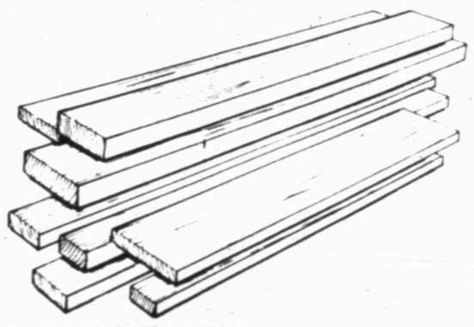

But although Brown said he would welcome an economic boom — if tourists can find someplace to spend their money — he conceded, "We're really not ready for it."

Talking with other locals, however, gives a visitor the feeling that Champ is considered more than just a possible money-making freak show.

"I believe there's something out there," said 24-year-old Tom Scozzafava, manager of the town campground. "I've never seen it, but last week two of my men saw something. They were picking up the garbage from along the beach."

At Laura's coffee shop downtown, business is so slow that closing time is 3 p.m. A young woman there who did not want to give her name scoffed at the monster stories.

Despite space rockets, mechanical horses still tops at shopping centers

EDITOR'S NOTE — As things change all about us, mechanical horses remain as we remember them from childhood. Just drop a coin in the slot and ride the range of imagination. The cost may have gone up a bit, but the fun is still priceless.

By LILLIAN SWANSON
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — For the past 30 years, patient brown mechanical steeds have waited outside shopping center stores, tempting young riders to gallop as far as their imaginations would carry them.

The coin-operated horses, draped with black leather saddles and responsive to thin reins, look the same today as they did in the 1950s.

"That's the one ride that has stayed the same all these years," says Edna Braunstein, president of Standard Kiddie Rides Inc.

Despite a trend of rides geared to outer space, the horse's lure to dance across the lonesome prairie remains the top choice of kids, she says.

Standard Kiddie Rides, a family-run business based here, has 2,000 rides of all kinds stationed outside stores, zoos, bowling alleys, fast-food shops and supermarkets in 40 states. It says it is the oldest of such firms still in business and one of the largest.

"It all began with one of these coin-operated horses," the 62-year-old company president says, pointing to a photo on her office wall.

She says her husband tethered one of the motorized mounts outside a G.C. Murphy Store in downtown Pittsburgh 30 years ago, charging would-be cowboys and cowgirls a dime a ride.

"Murphy's saw how attractive they were and put them in their other stores. Little by little, we covered practically all their stores," she says.

The cost of the ride has jumped to a quarter over the years, but Mrs. Braunstein says the price hasn't kept up with inflation.

Standard Kiddie Rides now offers about 50 different amusements, including carousels, helicopters, police vans, trains, submarines, clowns, moon rockets, fire trucks and even double-decker buses.

Most of the rides are awash in the brightest reds and blues. Some are custom lettered, to include the names of the stores or towns where they are located.

G.C. Murphy is still a customer, along with other stores in the Northeast, South and Midwest.

The rides remain at the stores about one year before they are called in for overhauling.

"It's very, very important that it looks well. A paint job can make an enormous difference," Mrs. Braunstein says.

The firm also stresses safety in its products, she says.

"We are extremely careful. There are no sharp edges, no spaces where hands or feet can get caught. The electrical equipment is grounded in a three-prong plug," Mrs. Braunstein says.

"Kids manage to get into trouble on things that are troubleless. They try to pull off buttons and knobs. Kids are kids," says her daughter, Joni, a lawyer.

Chewing gum and soda slipped into the coin slots are some of the reasons the workshop is full. Mrs. Braunstein takes it all in stride.

"We know when we're getting a lot of service (calls) we're getting a lot of action," she says, smiling.

As they walk through the large rooms, Mrs. Braunstein and Janet Zack, the firm's vice president, talk engagingly of new designs. They say the 15 workers are encouraged to add their own suggestions as new equipment takes shape.

"We all work together to come up with new ideas," Mrs. Braunstein says.

Shelved in the basement storage rooms are pieces of "Andy the Astronaut" which was offered during the space flights of the 1960s. "Batman" has seen his ups and downs, too.

"It's amazing how these go in cycles, like cars or fashions," says daughter Joni.

The one ride that hasn't gone out of style, however, is the horse. The firm often places two or three different rides at stores to give kids a choice. The outcome is a sure bet.

"The horse is always the winner," Mrs. Braunstein says.

Deregulation keeps airline fares down

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new study by the Civil Aeronautics Board concludes the deregulation of the airline industry has helped to keep fares down and is providing better air service for most travelers.

The report by the board's office of economic analysis comes at a time when the Reagan administration is intent on getting the government out of the airline regulating business ahead of schedule.

The administration wants to close the CAB in October 1982 instead of 1985, as currently is required by law. The CAB has proposed closing its doors as early as January 1983 if some of its functions are shifted to the Transportatin Department.

A broad spectrum of the aviation industry also supports the efforts to quicken the pace of deregulation, started by the CAB started in 1977 and enacted into law a year later.

In the report, which was to be submitted to a Senate aviation subcommittee today, CAB economists concluded that airline deregulation is working better than its proponents had envisioned three years ago.

"Deregulation has brought about fundamental changes in the (airline) industry, which will continue to bring better and lower cost air travel to the vast majority of air travelers," the report said.

Air fares increased steadily last year largely because of skyrocketing fuel costs. But the report said the fare increases would have been more severe had airlines been unable to adjust prices in a competitive environment.

The report said deregulation has brought about the wide use of discount fares by airlines and led to the emergence of a number of "low cost" airlines, such as New York Air and Peoples Express, that have forced ticket prices down.

About 60 percent of passengers are traveling on discount fares today, twice the percentage that did so in 1976, when the government controlled airline fares, the report said.

The study also said there has been no evidence that deregulation will result in the concentration of the industry in a few dominating airlines.

Teamster president gets 10 years, $50,000 fine

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — After a choked denial to accusations he sold out his the interests of union members, Teamsters Local 560 President Nunzio Provenzano was sentenced to 10 years in prison and fined $50,000 for racketeering.

U.S. District Judge H. Lee Sarokin refused federal prosecutors' request Tuesday to jail Provenzano immediately as a danger to the community. The judge released him pending appeal.

Provenzano told the judge he rejected government charges that he is a close associate of organized crime, and asked for mercy.

Provenzano, convicted of operating the 8,500-member Local 560 in Union City through a pattern of racketeering, said, "I've done the job the best I know how...

"Local 560 has never been controlled by anybody in organized crime. You can believe that the only people who control Local 560 is each and every one of those members," the short, gray-haired, bespectacled 58-year-old union official told the judge.

Provenzano was convicted April 30 on charges of accepting $187,000 in labor peace payoffs from four interstate trucking companies. In return, he let the companies avoid contract rules for hiring Local 560 truck drivers.

During a sentencing hearing, Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas McKay said Provenzano was controlled by Matthew "Matty the Horse" Ianiello, a reputed New York mobster.

He said Provenzano was an associate of convicted labor racketeer Eugene Boffa, Sr.; Philadelphia union leader Frank Sheeran; and such reputed organized crime figures as Russell Buffalino of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; former South Jersey bartenders' union leader Ralph Natale; garbage carter Tobias DeMicco; Bobby Manna of Jersey City; the late boss Frank Tieri of Brooklyn, N.Y.; the late Local 560 business agent Salvatore Briguglio; and his own brother, Anthony.

Provenzano also rejected the alleged tie to Ianiello, a reputed Genovese crime family captain.

Explaining a meeting the government said Provenzano held with Ianiello, he said he was "walking south on Mulberry Street (in New York's Little Italy section) with my nephew...to have some seafood in Umberto's clam bar. ...If I bump into somebody the government believes is organized crime, I'm not going to turn my back on him."

He asked that the judge not send him to jail immediately because of his family.

"If that's asking for mercy, then let the press publish it. I'm a man," he said.

Sarokin said Provenzano had worked "to the detriment" of Local 560, and ordered that he sever all connections with the Teamsters Union until an appeal of the conviction is resolved.

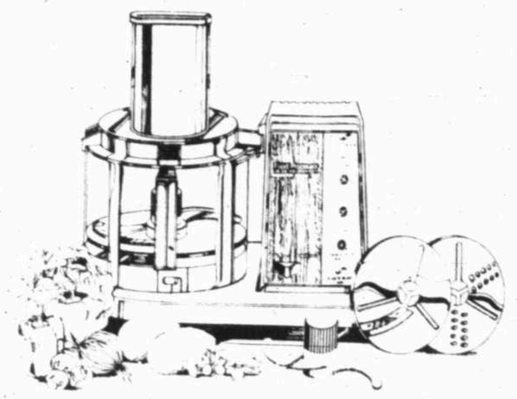

Provenzano's lawyer, Jay Goldberg, urged the judge not to be affected by the reputation of his client's older brother, Anthony.

Nunzio Provenzano faced up to 20 years for each of two racketeering counts on which he was convicted.

Anthony, or "Tony Pro," is a former Local 560 president also convicted of labor racketeering. He is serving a 20-year sentence.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

FDA doesn't require color listings on ice cream

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some of the food products I purchase list color additives on the label, but I have never seen such a listing on ice cream. Don't any brands of ice cream contain color additivies? — Sue

Dear Sue: Current Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations do not require the listing of artificial colors on ice-cream labels. The FDA hopes to change this by requiring manufacturers to list tartrazine, a dye to which many people appear to be allergic.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why do alcoholics often suffer from nutritional problems? I enjoy having wine with my meals and I do some social drinking on occasion; yet I still manage to have a well-balanced diet. I'm not suggesting that alcoholics should not be helped to curb their drinking, but I don't understand why their nutritional needs cannot be satisfied at the same time. If a person does continue to drink, to excess, can anything be done to help him get the nutrients he needs? — Bill

Dear Bill: People like yourself, who from long range I would classify as moderate drinkers, ordinarily are not considered to be at risk of nutritional deficiency. When you speak of alcoholics, however, you should bear in mind that people who drink to excess often consume at least 20 percent of their total caloric intake in the form of alcohol. While alcohol provides calories, it does not furnish the nutrients needed for good health. Moreover, excessive drinking interfers with the way the body uses the nutrients the person does consume.

Obviously, the best treatment for a person suffering from malnutrition because of alcoholism is for him or her to stop drinking and start enjoying nutritious, well-balanced meals. Until this happens, however, it may be necessary to resort to vitamin and mineral supplements.

As I have noted on a number of occasions, vitamin and mineral supplements are not needed except when there is a specific medical indication for them. This is one of the exceptions.

Alcoholics are frequently found to be deficient in a number of vitamins and minerals. These include folic acid, which is found in fresh fruits and vegetables, eggs, and liver; thiamin (vitamin B1); pyridoxine (vitamin B6), which is contained in meats, cereals, and lentils; ascorbic acid (vitamin C); vitamin A, which may be obtained from butter, margarine, and vegetables; and vitamin D, which is added to fortified milk.

The excessive use of alcohol also interfers with the absorption of calcium, while it increases the absorption of iron. Unless the person is known to be suffering from iron deficiency, therefore, the alcoholic patient should use iron-free vitamin and mineral supplements. Magnesium and zinc are other minerals that may be lacking in these patients.

Until the alcoholic is able to curb his or her drinking and adopt an adequate and varied diet, nutritional support in the form of these supplements may prove helpful.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington takes on important missions

By DAVID MASON
Chief European Correspondent

LONDON (AP) — Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington has become Western Europe's busiest top-ranking diplomat. He has taken up the tasks of finding peace in Afghanistan and the Middle East, two exacting tests of his negotiating skills.

He starts his Afghanistan mission Sunday with a flight to Moscow, where the Soviet news agency Tass on Saturday rejected the Afghan proposal Carrington is carrying from the Common Market. Whether he can alter the Soviet's negative attitude will be a major test of skills for the 62-year-old British peer.

His first venture into complex diplomacy came several months after he was named foreign secretary by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher a little more than two years ago.

This was when he tackled the long-festering Rhodesia problem. The talks Carrington led ended in the much hailed, largely peaceful evolution of the British colony in Africa into independent Zimbabwe, governed by its black majority. Carrington's efforts earned him a Nobel Peace Prize nomination.

Now Carrington has placed at the top of his priorities efforts to get the Soviets out of Afghanistan where they have been for 18 months, placing a severe strain on East-West detente.

The Carrington plan was embraced last week by the 10-nation European Common Market and has also won endorsement of the United States.

While criticizing parts of the plan, the Soviets are interested enough to permit Carrington to discuss it with Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

Carrington has proposed a two-stage conference whose goal would be withdrawal of the estimated 85,000 Soviet troops from Afghanistan and assurance of the country's future as an independent and non-aligned state.

The plan is carefully worded to encompass both the Soviet argument that external threats from Pakistan, Iran, China and the United States obliged them to intervene militarily, and the West's view that the only outside interference came, without valid reason, from the Soviets themselves.

Neither contention is specifically mentioned in the Carrington plan. Instead it calls broadly for "cessation of external intervention."

The first stage of the conference would deal with this question, with the permanent members of the U.N. Security Council — the Soviet Union, the United States, France, Britain and China — taking part, along with Iran, Pakistan, India and the Islamic Conference.

The second stage would group these participants plus "the representives of the Afghan people." Again, careful wording sidesteps Moscow's argument that the present government in Kabul represents the Afghan people and the West's support of the Afghan rebels or "freedom fighters."

In the West's view, the Soviet presence in Afghanistan creates a threat to Middle East oil arteries and stability of the entire southwest Asian region.

Meanwhile, Carrington has just taken over the rotating presidency of the Common Market foreign ministers' council. Besides directing efforts to resolve the market's internal problems, Carrington will be seeking to advance its Middle East peace initiative.

The West Europeans view their plan as complementary to the U.S.-sponsored Camp David peace process between Egypt and Israel.

The sticking point is that the Europeans, unlike the Americans, believe the Palestine Liberation Organization "will have to be associated" with the peace process, on condition it recognizes Israel's right to exist. The United States rejects a PLO role, claiming the PLO is only a terrorist organization.

Both of Carrington's foreign policy thrusts will be sharp challenges for a man championed by his supporters as "the most consistently successful star" in the British government.

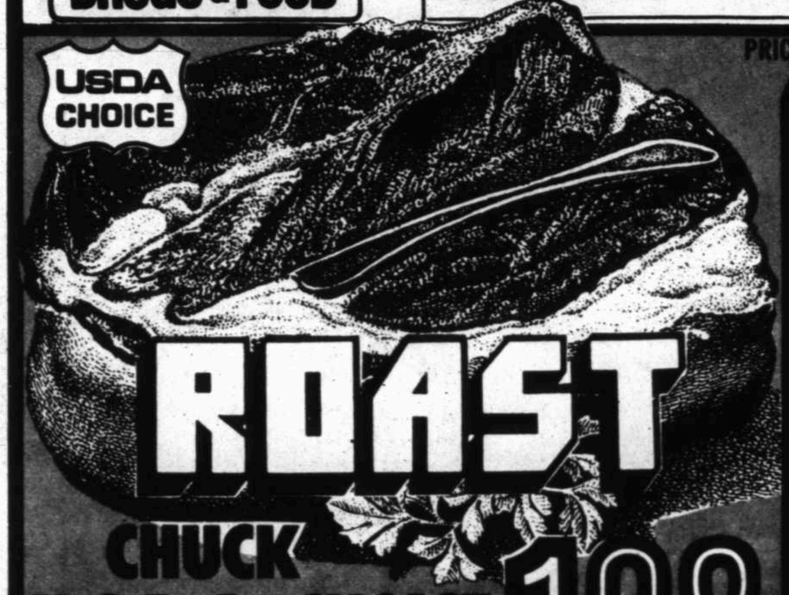

Carrington, a World War II hero and scion of a land-owning and banking family, received his first government post from Sir Winston Churchill who made him a junior minister for agriculture. He later served as defense and energy minister before reaching his goal as foreign secretary.

JIM MURRAY

'Hit Man' doesn't even carry equalizer in holster

Los Angeles Times

When you're asked to have lunch with a man known far and wide, to friend and foe, alike, as "The Hit Man," certain precautions are in order. You get the bulletproof vest, you go to the restaurant by a circuitous route, you sit with you back to the wall with an eye on all the exits and entrances. You got to be careful what you say. Particularly if you have school-age kids.

You figure you're going to meet a character without much couth. He'll lick his fingers which'll look like sausages. He'll eat with his hat on, also his overcoat, in the pockets of which he'll have strips of piano wire. He'll put a horse in your bed or a bomb in your car or a finger in your eye without stopping eating the chicken cacciatore while he does. He drinks wine from a bottle, and his idea of humor is to hold you by your legs from a hotel room window on the 29th floor.

My "Hit Man" was a bit of a disappointment. In the first place, he was tall and slim. If it weren't for the broken nose, you'd never know he made his living violently. He was introduced by his right name, and not as "Johnny The Bump," or "Joey Lucky," or "Tommy The Throat."

HE WORE glasses, for crying out loud. He spoke so softly you had to see his lips move to know he was talking. Guys make more noise robbing a safe, or saying a Rosary.

He didn't order wine and then bite the cork off. He ordered iced tea. He skipped the pasta and went for the pineapple salad with the crab meat. He passed on the bread. He was so tall and slim, if he had been in the Mob, his nickname probably would have been "The Dancer."

This is no "Mean Streets" thug. This contract killer is "Hit Man" Hearns, and his reputation distresses him. Thomas Hearns, esq., wants to be recognized as just another American businessman who makes his living in a legal, if exotic way. To be sure, he puts contracts out on people, he maims them for a living. But not permanently. And the contract is not for life.

There's a contract out on Sugar Ray Leonard Sept. 16 in Las Vegas for him and it looks to this hit man like a nice clean $20 million job with no clues, fingerprints or complications. The guys won't have to hit the mattresses for this one. Sugar Ray will not be killed, just eliminated. The hit man will just make him an offer he can't refuse.

Defending players getting tougher

Strike taking its toll

By SCOTT OSTLER
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

It's getting tougher. I'm weakening. I don't know how much longer I can hold out.

I'm not talking about trying to make it through the summer without baseball. I'm talking about trying to make it through the summer without getting punched out for defending the striking major league players.

For weeks now, since even before the strikers struck, I've been sticking up for these guys, arguing that the players are right, basically.

"How can you feel sorry for a bunch of greedy jerks making a million dollars playing a game?" somebody always asks.

"Easy, if the alternative is feeling sorry for the owners," I always answer.

I think I may have even convinced a few people that while the players are unquestionably motivated by greed, it is an all-American type of greed, protected by our Constitution, upheld by our courts and supported by our ticket purchases.

BUT NOW my strong stand is being eroded by the very people I seek to defend. The players and their wives have started talking and what they are saying sometimes brings out emotions other than sympathy.

They say this strike is a real crisis. If it drags on interminably, some of them may be forced to sell their extra homes. They don't know what to do with their spare time. They are beginning to panic at the possibility of having to find careers outside of baseball (the same panic that the rest of us had to deal with at the age of 12.)

Some fans just don't want to hear about it. Take Bad Shoes, for instance. Bad Shoes is a follower of the sports scene, a guy who can sympathize with even the richest of strikers, but enough is enough.

"I was reading an article about players' wives' reactions to the strike, and I started screaming," Bad Shoes screamed over the phone. "The one that really got me was Fran Cey.

M-Cubs sweep Dodgers

SAN ANTONIO—There was a time when the Midland Cubs couldn't win here and now it seems they can't lose. Well, at least, they've won three straight including a 4-2 and 2-1 doubleheader sweep before 2,509 fans Tuesday night.

The sweep enabled the Cubs to retain first place in the Texas League West Division.

Jon Perlman, making his starting debut after returning from Iowa of the American Association, pitched a six hitter in the opener as the Cubs struck for two runs in the seventh inning to win it.

In the nightcap, the Cubs were forced to go nine innings before winning. Lefthander Mike Thompson started, but reliever Rob Blyth got the win and Henry Mack pitched the final inning for his second save since rejoining the Cubs after a spring spent in Sarasota recovering from a pulled groin muscle.

(See box scores 2C)

Fritz Connally was the Cubs' batting hero with four hits for the night. In the first game his two-run homer gave the Cubs a 2-2 tie in the fourth inning. Jack Upton beat out an infield hit and then Connally, the former All-SWC third baseman from Baylor, rocketed his eighth homer over the left field fence at the 380 mark.

CONNALLY then opened the seventh with a single and Joe Carter moved him to second with a sacrifice. Randy LaVigne was walked intentionally before Carmelo Martinez whistled a single past third to score Connally. Mike Shepston's bunt to the right side then squeezed the run home.

San Antonio scored in the second when Bill Sobbe grounded to first after Perlman had loaded the bases with a walk to Leo Hernandez, a single to Mytron White and hit Ross Jones with a pitch. The third inning run came as a result of a walk to Dale Holman, Perlman's wild pick off throw and Mark Bradley's two-out single.

IN THE nightcap, Jack Upton had two hits and an rbi to pace the Cubs. Thompson went 5 2/3 innings and was lifted in favor of Blyth when the Dodgers tied the score. San Antonio had collected 10 hits off Mike.

The teams conclude the series with games tonight and tomorrow. Midland returns home Saturday to open a 10-game stand against Jackson and Arkansas.

In other Tuesday night action, Shreveport and Arkansas remained tied at the top of the Eastern Division — the Captains with a 4-3 win over Jackson while the Travelers nudged Tulsa 4-2 — and El Paso thumped Amarillo 7-5.

El Paso enjoyed its biggest inning of the second season before the smallest crowd of the entire season, scoring six runs in the first enroute to the win over Amarillo. Only 832 fans watched

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Major leagues are about to lose audience

If the baseball strike isn't settled this week, they might as well forget it. In fact, despite the thrashing and gagging of the abused, but still faithful fan, the major leagues may already have lost their audience.

In another couple of weeks pro football will be shouldering baseball aside, even though it is only summer training and the exhibition season. Baseball will have lost the All-Star game, its mid-summer hype, and be left with little more than mini, who cares pennant races.

IT'S TOUGH enough keeping pro football from hogging more than its share of the late summer headlines, but this year it will be murder. Once the head-knocking begins, the world of sports will be held in a state of suspense over the New Orleans story. Can Bum Phillips and George Rogers change the Saints to Sinners or, at least, Winners?

After major league baseball's withdrawal from prime time summer exposure, the TV networks will pounce on something they can focus a camera on, even if it's Earl Campbell running stands.

As it turned out, it would have been an opportune time to launch a World Football League and one wonders if TV people aren't a little sorry they didn't allot some time for the AFA, the summer football league that named Bill Kilmer commissioner in hopes that he could gain them some national exposure.

STILL, THE baseball strike has been a break for events like the U.S. Open, even if Jack Nicklaus didn't win it. And Wimbledon never had it so good mediawise in the U.S. Of course, John McEnroe's antics, distasteful and inexcusable as they may have been, provided reporters with more fun than a Billy Martin-Terry Cooney belly-bumping bash.

The strike, indeed, has been an opportunity to make time for other sports and one thing seems apparent. Despite an open field in which to run, soccer isn't the answer to the American spectators' prayer. The rap against soccer, like hockey, is that there isn't enough scoring. In fact, the rules seems to legislate against some of the most spectacular displays of team work. One other disadvantage is that in the U. S., it lacks the crowd hysteria of a match in Europe. Soccer in the U.S, is like playing a football game in West Germany.

From one viewer's vantage point, rugby and Australian football have a better chance of catching the TV viewer's fancy. And perhaps Canadian Football will win a few fans, now that TV sports watchers are desperate, but probably the pace is too fast for most Americans who like more time to go to the icebox between plays.

HOWEVER, when all is said and done, we find ourselves watching AAA baseball, and enjoying it. For one thing a lot of the players are familiar faces from the Texas League, even if they now perform for major league farm clubs that do not have affiliates in the TL. Sunday, for example, ex-Midland Cub Kurt Seibert hit a bases-loaded, two-run doubles for the Toledo Mud Hens (Twins) against Richmond (Atlanta). Dave Machemer, ex-Dodger Kelly Snider and several others in the game also went through our league.

Former Cub catcher Greg Keatley was backstopping for Denver at Omaha and ex-Diablo Dan Briggs was in the outfield the other night.

And while all major league stadiums look boringly alike these days, it's interesting to catch glimpses of minor league parks and their locale. Basically, they are much the same, but each seems to have its own personality, like that collector's item scoreboard in left-center at Indianapolis, the picnic area down the rightfield line at Richmond where one concession stand is in a field level runway between the playing field and the bleachers...a great view for the guy selling hot dogs...and for the fan buying them.

Judge denies motion to toss out Davis claim

LOS ANGELES (AP) — U.S. District Judge Harry Pregerson has denied a motion by the National Football League that he reject what could be determined by the jury to be a very significant claim by Al Davis, the managing general partner of the Oakland Raiders.

Pregerson denied Tuesday the motion by the NFL that he throw out Davis' claim that he had an oral agreement with league officials that he could move his football team as he saw fit.

Davis has insisted at the antitrust trial in which the Raiders and the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission have sued the NFL over the league's refusal to allow the Raiders to move to Los Angeles that he changed a "no" vote to "abstain" at an NFL meeting in October 1978, allowing the league to make a key rule change because he could reserve his right to move.

UNTIL THEN, it took a unanimous vote of the league to permit a team to transfer, and it took a unanimous vote to change the rule. The change made it a three-quarters vote of the 28 members to allow a franchise move.

"We're very happy about the judge's ruling," said Joseph Alioto, the Raiders' attorney, late Tuesday. "I think it's very significant. I think it's a very important issue tactically because of the overwhelming evidence on the oral contract issue."

Lamar Hunt, owner of the Kansas City Chiefs, testified Tuesday that he approved the rule change that Davis had opposed, saying he saw it as a way to 'soften the blow" of a lawsuit by the Los Angeles Coliseum over the rule restricting teams from moving.

THE LOS Angeles Rams moved to nearby Anaheim starting with the 1980 season, having announced such plans two years earlier.

Hunt denied that Davis gained the right during the NFL meeting in Chicago to move his football team as he saw fit.

Players Association presents solid front after long meeting

By BARRY WILNER

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty seven days into their strike, the major league baseball players insist they are even more solid than when the walkout began.

The executive board of the Major League Players Association met Tuesday night and, when the four-hour session was over, solidarity was the main word being bandied about.

"If anything, the players are getting stronger," said Kansas City Royals pitcher Dan Quisenberry, one of about 40 players at the meeting. "Each team was polled and each one is taking a much harder line than on June 1. It was a surprise to me."

THE MEETING was called to gauge the feelings of the striking association members and to update the player representatives on the status of negotiations with the owners. There have been no talks since Saturday when the players rejected management's latest proposal on free agent compensation, which led to the strike on June 12.

Marvin Miller, executive director of the players association, said he believed that federal mediator Kenneth Moffett was interested in calling another negotiating session for Friday but that he had not beenacted by Moffett.

"We had asked each of our representatives 10 or 12 days ago to call all their players," said Miller, "and get their views, reactions and thoughts. Each member of the board reported on the results of those calls."

The results showed total support of the strike.

"The players unanimously agreed that we have given them a very good proposal and unanimously disagree with the owners last proposal," said Quisenberry. "We talked about every aspect of strike.

"We're confused. Bob Boone and Doug DeCinces (player reps of each league) are extremely frustrated over the negotiations. They think the negotiations are a waste of time. They can't believe it. They think the obners are playing games."

DeCinces concurred.

"The mood (of the players) is definitely one of unity," said the Orioles third baseman. "We get more and more militant as time goes by.

"Players are competitive people and if you push them to the wall, they just get tougher. I would love to see the owners here (at the negotiations). Even a hard-liner would be welcome. If the owners aren't actually going to get the feeling first-hand, I don't trust Ray Grebey to give it to them."

Grebey is the chief negotiator for the owners.

"If the owners got involved, there'd be no strike," concluded DeCinces.

But there is i strike and Miller says it isn't getting any easier to settle.

"As you who have been involved in strikes know, as time goes on, you get more militant, solid and stronger," he said. "That has happened here without any question.

"That's not always good — it makes it more difficult to get a settlement. What was acceptable in April and May is not acceptable in June and July."

"I wish the owners would sit in on the meetings," said Ray Burris, a pitcher for the Montreal Expos. "I can't understand the owners' philosophy. The negotiations are hard to describe ... they'd probably even make you mad. How you can even get something done is beyond me. They mess around for two hours and then go to lunch."

Miller noted that the issue of accredited service time — time counting toward pensions and attaining enough major league experience to become a free agent — would be a meaningful one in any settlement.

"Accredited time was mentioned (at the meeting)," he said. "There will be no settlement without it. That is written in stone."

The players acknowledged that they were in a holding pattern at the moment, with the owners scheduled to meet here Thursday.

Texas Rangers pitcher Jon Matlack said the fact that the owners had called their first meeting since the strike began might be encouraging.

"I guess it was a good sign that the owners themselves called a meeting," he noted. "Maybe they'll find out which way they want to sail. We still don't have any logical reasons for (the owners' stand on compensation). Hopefully the owners will get their house together."

New York Mets outfielder Rusty Staub was encouraged by Tuesday's players' gathering.

"The meeting reinforced the players' feelings with lots of nails ... it was just awesome!

"Not playing baseball tears at me, especially with the type of negotiations that they are going through now. The game is in jeopardy."

According to Staub, even "the possibility of a new league does exist. It has been talked about."

NLRB hearings continue

Club owners meet Thursday

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

The player union's executive board has met, the club owners will meet, the National Labor Relations Board hearing continues ... and the baseball strike is now in its 27th day, with no end in sight and the All-Star Game all but left for dead.

Marvin Miller, the union's executive director, said following Tuesday night's meeting in New York — which lasted more than four hours and was attended by at least one player from each of the 26 teams — that the players were as unified as ever.

"As you who have been involved in strikes know, as time goes on you get more militant, solid and stronger," said Miller. "That has happened here without any question. That's not always good. It makes it more difficult to get a settlement.

"What was acceptable in April and May is not acceptable in June or July."

What is not acceptable to the players right now is management's plan for compensation to teams losing free agents. The dispute has been over what free agents, and how many, will be subject to compensation by professional players rather than amateur draft choices, and how the compensation will be determined.

THE CLUB owners will meet Thursday in New York with their chief negotiator, Ray Grebey, and other members of the Player Relations Committee. Commissioner Bowie Kuhn will also attend the session, at the owner's invitation. It's the first such meeting for the owners since the strike began June 12.

"We have meetings once in awhile and Mr. Grebey brings us up to date. We don't express our views," said Minnesota Twins President Calvin Griffith.

But a growing number of owners who are dissatisfied with the pace of negotiations reportedly plan to voice their feelings t the meting.

Meanwhile, Kuhn testified at Tuesday's NLRB hearings that player salaries are escalating at a rate exceeding the one he quoted in a speech to club owners last December, when he cited projections by the certified public accounting firm of Ernst and Whinney which said the average salary would reach $320,000 by 1983.

"I think they're low," Kuhn said of those estimates. "I think the salary has gone up faster than their estimates."

The Players Association has filed an unfair labor practices charge against the owners, claiming they have not bargained in good faith and seeking to force the clubs to make public their financial records. Chief administrative law judge Melvin Welles is hearing the case and will decide whether to seek an enforcement order requiring the clubs to comply.

THE UNION has cited several quotes from various owners, as well as Kuhn, regarding baseball's fiscal condition and claims that if free agency is creating a financial hardship, the books should be opened to prove it. Management's position is that high salaries brought about in part by free agency have not caused a financial problem, and no such problem has ever been claimed in bargaining.

"This is a sham charge," declared Louis Hoynes, attorney for the National League, at Tuesday's hearing. "We shouldn't be here today. We should be in collective bargaining."

When will collective bargaining resume? Talks broke off Saturday and federal mediator Kenneth Moffett said he did not expect to get the two sides together until at least the end of the week, after the players and owners have held their separate meetings.

Asked to forecast when the strike might end, Moffett said, "I really would rather not say. But I have some ideas. Anything can be mediated. Life is a compromise."

THE INABILITY of the owners and players to reach a compromise on the compensation issue has forced the cancellation of 338 games to date. The All-Star Game, scheduled for July 14 in Cleveland, has not been officially called off as yet, but with no face-to-face negotiations scheduled that seems to be only a technicality.

Miller said that if and when an agreement on compensation is reached, the union will press for accredited service during the strike for players who would be eligible to become free agents, as well as toward pensions.

"There will be no settlement without it (accredited time)," said Miller. "That is written in stone."

BESIDES KUHN, the NLRB heard testimony Tuesday from player agents Dick Moss and Tom Reich and owners Griffith, Ruly Carpenter of the Philadelphia Phillies and Jerry Reinsdorf of the Chicago White Sox.

Griffith, who testified that the Twins lost $1.2 million in 1980, argued against the union's claim that compensation will decrease the bargaining power of free agents.

"If a club wants a player, they're going to go after him no matter what happens," said Griffith. "I say we've got to get a replacement for the fellow we lose."

The NLRB hearings continue today. In the meantime, the financial impact of the baseball strike on major league cities rises.

That is why a group of 14 congressmen representing major league cities sent a letter to Kuhn urging the commissioner to use his "extraordinary powers" to end the strike.

"It would be difficult to conceive of an event that would have a more devastating impact than a prolonged absence of major league baseball coupled with the public spectacle of bickering players and owners," the letter said. It added that the strike "does not require a clear winner and a clear loser. It can be settled by compromise."

The letter, whose signees included House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., was the brainchild of Rep. Wyche Fowler Jr., D-Ga., a follower of the Atlanta Braves.

But right now Fowler, who calls himself "a baseball fan, pure and simple," is a fan without a game to watch.

Alouettes grab Steelers' top pick

MONTREAL (AP) — Keith Gary, the No.1 draft pick of the Pittsburgh Steelers, says the Montreal Alouettes made him an offer he couldn't refuse.

"The opportunity was just so much better here, and it left my future wide open," Gary said Tuesday after he signed a two-year contract with the Canadian Football League club.

The Steelers had hoped the 6-foot-3, 257-pounder from the University of Oklahoma would bolster their pass rush. But Gary will be in a Montreal uniform Friday night against Toronto.

"I liked Pittsburgh and I think it would have been a great organization to play for," Gary said.

"But if I'm going to put my body on the line for four or five years, then I think I should be paid fairly. The opportunity was there for them and they declined to work things out, so I had no other choice."

Gary said that a week ago he felt convinced he would be a Steeler.

"Then the walls just crumbled down because they seemed uninterested," he said. "So I felt I had to move on, and the situation here was open for me. They needed help right away and they were willing to pay for it."

It's the first time the Steelers have failed to sign their No.1 draft pick since 1960, when running back Jack Spikes of Texas Christian signed with the American Football League.

"We're disappointed. We thought Keith was going to come in here and be a fine defensive lineman," Steeler President Dan Rooney said in Pittsburgh.

Gary's agent, Jerry Argovitz, said the two-year deal from the Alouettes surpassed the value of a five-year pact proposed by Pittsburgh.

"I got him more money in two years, based on net dollars, than Pittsburgh was offering him for four years plus an option year," Argovitz told Pittsburgh radio station KQV in a telephone interview from Montreal.

Though terms were not disclosed, Gary's Montreal contract was reportedly worth about $500,000.

Purtzer breaks record

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — Tom Purtzer broke the course record by two strokes en route to winning the Fifth Annual Jerry Ford Invitational golf tournament at Vail Golf Club Tuesday with a 36-hole total of 132.

Purtzer shot a 63 in Tuesday's second and final round to clinch the $18,000 first prize. He broke the previous record for the par 71, 7,009-yard course shared by Jack Nicklaus, Bob Murphy and Tom Kite.

In a three-way tie for second at 133, worth $8,833 each, were Curtis Strange, Craig Stadler and John Cook.

Lee Elder was fifth with a 134, worth $5,000.

In best-ball team play, the fivesome headed by D.A. Weibring won with a 53-below par 160.

Spec Richardson holds no grudges

By DAVID EINSTEIN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — H.B. "Spec" Richardson says he has no hard feelings toward San Francisco Giants owner Bob Lurie, who fired him as vice president of baseball operations for the National League team.

"Bob Lurie is a very fine person ... my relationship with the Giants has been good," the 58-year-old Richardson said Tuesday following the announcement that he had been replaced by Giants minor league director Tom Haller.

Lurie told a news conference that the current baseball strike had given him "the chance to reflect and review a lot of things, and I just felt it was time to make a change."

LURIE SAID he had offered Richardson a consulting job, but Richardson, reached at his home in nearby Foster City, said, "I haven't decided if I'm going to take it at this point."

The Giants owner said he decided to drop Richardson because "when you sit in the spot that Spec did, you have to look at performance, and obviously over the last few years our performance has not been good."

Richardson, in his seventh season with the Giants, was criticized for some player deals he negotiated, including paying Rennie Stennett $3 million over five years after Stennett became a free agent from the Pittsburgh Pirates. Stennett has seen only spot duty in his two seasons with the Giants.

RICHARDSON denied that the trade had influenced Lurie's decision, however, adding that "Lurie approved all the trades anyway."

He said there was "nothing I would have done differently," with the Giants.

Richardson was fired once before, in 1975 after 14 years with the Houston organization. He was named by the National League to operate the San Francisco franchise during the interim period prior to Lurie's purchase of the team, and soon afterward, Lurie named him general manager. Last November, he was promoted to vice presdent of baseball operations.

LURIE SAID he believed Haller, 44, would help the Giants with experience gained in two years as the club's director of player development.

"I've said the way for the Giants to develop will be through the minor league system, and Tom has done an outstanding job in revitalizing that," said Lurie.

"We're going to emphasize our minor league operation ... and work from within," said Haller. He said trades "that are necessary" would be made, "but primarily we must emphasize our minor league operation."

Haller caught in the major leagues for 11 years, the first five with the Giants and the last four with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Baseball Today

Wednesday, July 8

On this date in baseball in 1941:

Ted Williams cracked a three-run, two-out, ninth-inning home run off Claude Passeau to give the American League a last-gasp, 7-5 victory in the All-Star Game at Detroit's Briggs Stadium.

The Nationals carried a 5-3 lead into the ninth, but singles by Ken Keltner and Joe Gordon, and a walk to Cecil Travis loaded the bases. Keltner scored when Joe DiMaggio hit into a force at second. And then Williams put a Passeau pitch into the right field upper deck to end the game.

Williams' heroics wiped out a superb showing by Pittsburgh shortstop Arky Vaughan, who became the first man in All-Star history to hit two homers in one game. Williams, Billy Herman and Lou Boudreau each had a pair of hits, while Joe DiMaggio scored three runs.

Today's Birthdays:

Houston Astros catcher Alan Ashby is 30. Astros outfielder Terry Puhl is 25.

Seniors take final run

BIRMINGHAM, Mich. (AP) — A field of 150 golfers takes a final practice run today at rugged Oakland Hills Country Club prior to Thursday's opening round in the $150,000 U.S. Senior Open.

Tournament officials have shortened the suburban Detroit course somewhat since the PGA Championship was held there two years ago. But host pro Al Mengert said the 6,798-yard layout still will play tough.

Mengert, who is entered in the tournament, said he thinks the winner will not break par 280 for the 72-hole championship. But he said "it's probable that the winner will break par at least once."

Other players weren't so sure how the course would play.

Best laid plans sometimes flop and flop

Ski dream still hanging

BY TED BATTLES

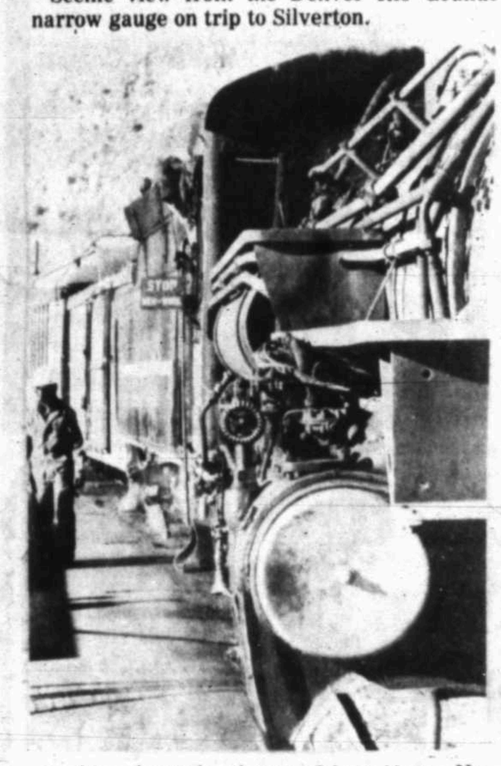

Ever take a trip where everything you did came out precisely the way you planned it?

The Cubs were out of town, so it looked like a great opportunity to line up a dream ski trip we had last December while riding the lift at Wolf Creek Pass on the Continental Divide after being forced to abandon a planned trip to Taos for lack of snow.

Wouldn't it be a great ski week, we gazed into the future, as we enjoyed the creaking solitude of the lift trip to the top of the mountain, to ski a couple of days at Telluride, drive over to Purgatory for a couple of more then swing by Wolf Creek and wind up at Taos.

Scenic view from the Denver Rio Grande narrow gauge on trip to Silverton.

Looking down the throat of Iron Horse No. 473.

Instead of pigeon-holing the idea and letting it die a natural death, it was revived by a nightmare in which we were being pursued up a steep slope by a sinister gang of Amazons and the hoplessness of our plight was compounded by the fact that we had no ski poles. You can imagine the panic such an impossible situation created. But, still, instead of vowing to give up skiing forever...

DESPITE THE realization of the dreadful consequences involved in the event should the dream become a reality, the nightmare rekindled our interest. The main concern was the Telluride-Purgatory connection. Could such a trip be made over the mountains to Silverton and Ouray during the winter?

A trip to Colorado, then, would give us the answer. Although we'd disguise it as a sightseeing, bird-watching, golfing pleasure jaunt.

We even had our trout rod ready for a few days on the San Juan or at Lake Valletica.

But the Mrs. would have none of it. She wanted to see the Rangers play in Dallas, so in deference to "she who must be obeyed", we made arrangements to see the Texas Rangers, although cloaking our distress with feigned enthusiasm.

Then, lo and behold, the baseball strike and the trip to Taos and Colorado was on. The Mrs., of course, was furious, but had to agree that we had little choice...unless..."aren't the Cubs going to be in El Paso?"

WE COULD sympathize with the Mrs.' disappointment. She had been given a new baseball scorebook on her wedding anniversary and wanted to try it out.

The trip seemed to be working to perfection. Taos, as always, was super. In fact, we passed up an opportunity to cast for trout in the Rio Grande in our anxiety to get on with it. Wolf Creek, ye gods, is as cold in the summer as winter...and a slight setback...the road up the pass is being torn up and one wonders if they can have it widened by winter. Without the Runaway Truck Lane operative, it's no place to be during a snowstorm.

On to Durango, and even a trip on the narrow gauge Denver Rio Grande. Normally, an application for a ticket without a month's notice could prompt an investigation as a subversive for one making such a request. But in June, there are cancellations and we were in luck. Conceding a day on the train to placate the Mrs., we envisioned trout fishing and the trip to Telluride later in the week. The allergy probably struck out on the golf course. One day the Mrs. was normal looking, the next her eyes were so puffed up she had to wear sunglasses to hide the sore sight.

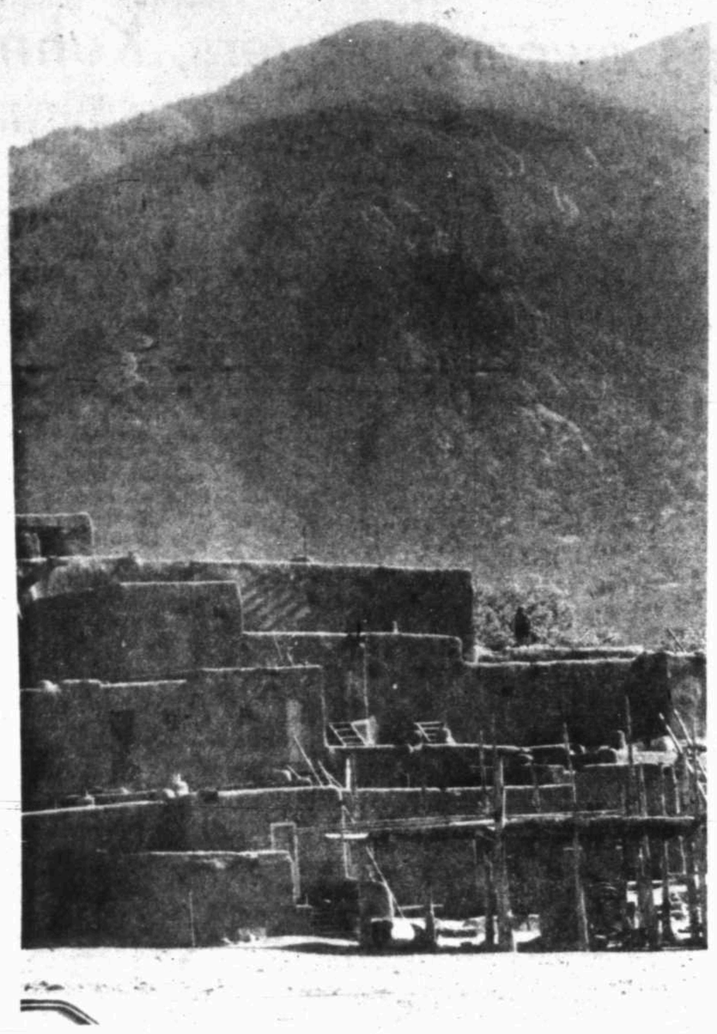

"But what of the disappointed trout and Telluride?" we whined. "Can't you take something?"

She hemmed. "It's an allergy. But I'll stay if you insist."

"Yes, but if you take off your sun glesses everyone will think I hit you after hitting one of my slices," I conceded.

IT WAS on the way through the tropical forests that blot out the view of the mountains on either side of the Rio Grande on the trip between Albuquerque and El Paso. We stopped at a gas station and the Mrs. took off her sun glasses. The allergy had disappeared as mysteriously as it had appeared. Good old dry, desert air.

"After we go to Juarez, we can see the Cubs and Diablos play," she said. But our thoughts remained with the trout in Colorado and we still didn't know whether our flight from the Amazons...er, the road from Telluride to Purgatory was passable in the winter.

Ellenberger faces the music

By JIM McELROY

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Former University of New Mexico basketball Coach Norm Ellenberger, who still vows he's an innocent man, faced sentencing today for convictions on 21 counts of fraud and making false public vouchers.

The flamboyant former coach who was as well known for his courtside antics as his winning teams, could receive maximum sentences of 18 months in prison on each of the 21 counts, all fourth-degree felonies.

Sentencing was set for today by District Judge Phillip Baiamonte after a seven-man, five-woman district court jury returned the guilty verdicts Tuesday. The jury found Ellenberger innocent on one count of fraud over $2,500, a third-degree felony carrying a maximum penalty of three years imprisonment.

"I don't like it," Ellenberger told reporters when asked about the guilty verdicts as he emerged from the courtroom. "This is not right. It isn't right. It is wrong, this is an absolute wrong."

He and his attorney, Leon Taylor, said they would appeal.

"We're not through yet," Ellenberger said. "Maybe we've just begun to fight. More than one case has been reversed."

"It's not over yet," Taylor said. "There's an appeal coming. A wrong has been committed against this man. It will be reversed."

Ellenberger, 48, was indicted by a state grand jury in May 1980 on 12 counts of making false public vouchers, one count of fraud in excess of $2,500 and nine counts of fraud in excess of $100.

Ellenberger also was indicted by a federal grand jury in 1980 on five counts mail fraud, one count of interstate travel in aid of racketeering enterprises and one count of wire fraud. He was acquitted on all seven counts at a trial last summer.

The state and federal charges stemmed from investigations into the UNM basketball program.

McEnroe ranked No. 1 in doubles and singles

DALLAS (AP) — Wimbledon champion John McEnroe Tuesday became the first tennis player ever to simultaneously hold the No.1 ranking in both singles and doubles by the Association of Tennis Professionals.

Borg had held the No.1 position on the ATP computer since April 1979, except for two one-week periods in which McEnroe edged ahead of him.

Rizzo reaches finals

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Patti Rizzo, considered one of the top amateur women golfers in the nation, gained the finals of the 39th annual Broadmoor Ladies Invitational Golf Tournament on Tuesday by defeating Cindy Kelliher.

Rizzo, 21, of Miami, who attends the University of Miami, defeated Kelliher, 23, of Riverton, Wyo., 6-and-5, and will face Kris Monaghan of Albuquerque, N.M., in Wednesday's finals on the 6,156-yard, par-71 Broadmoor South golf course. Monaghan, 20, a University of New Mexico student, defeated Kris Hanson, 18, of Fort Worth, Texas, 3-and-2 on Tuesday.

Stanton gets 5 years

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — Larry Stanton, 29, a leading junior welterweight boxing contender, was given five years probation Tuesday for bank robbery. The fighter, from Merrick, N.Y., had pleaded guilty to robbing the Rosyln Savings Bank in Bellmore, N.Y., of $2,000 on March 18, 1980.

Baker wins Denver bowling

DENVER (AP) — Tom Baker defeated Art Trask 191-178 to win the Denver Open and clinch his third consecutive Professional Bowlers Association championship.

The Buffalo, N.Y., bowler averaged 242 over 42 games while setting five PBA scoring records. In Tuesday's final, he left a 2-8-10 split in the tenth frame.

John Tate maps out climb back

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Saying he's fighting his way back to the crown, John Tate will meet Jody Ballard on Aug. 8 under the lights at Bill Myer's Baseball Stadium in East Knoxville.

"Ballard is a quality opponent who some say can beat John," Ace Miller, Tate's manager, told sportswriters Tuesday. "John wants to beat somebody with a reputation. He doesn't prove anything by beating just anybody."

Tate, 26, has a 21-2 record and Ballard, 30, of Jacksonville, Fla., a 25-12 mark. Tate was knocked out by Mike Weaver in 1979 to lose his World Boxing Association heavyweight title to his first challenger. Ballard dropped a 10-round decision to Weaver in 1976.

Tate stands 6-feet, 4-inches and weighs 240 pounds. Ballard stands 6-1 and weighs 212 pounds, Miller said.

It's the third scheduled bout between Tate, a Marion City, Ark., native who adopted Knoxville as his home, and Ballard.

Their first match was postponed from April 30 to June 10 when Tate suffered a back injury in training.

No social life for ballplayer

She's talking about how they are having the first social life they've had in 10 years. Hey, the guy only works six months a year! He ought to have four times the social life any of us do, especially since he has enough money to do what he wants.

"Then she's whimpering about how they might have to dip into their savings! That's something a lot of us will never have to worry about."

"What — dipping?" I asked.

"NO —SAVINGS ... Geez, the guy makes $600,000 a year. I'm not saying he's overpaid or underpaid, but he's well paid. Off what he's made the last few years, he should never have to work again. It's like we're supposed to feel sorry for these guys at their economic level.

"She's talking about how she and Ron might have to go out and get jobs ... she's talking about the psychological effects of the strike, how this is a crisis situation ... AAAAGH!"

It might be better for all concerned if the players were to rent Acapulco for the summer and all go away quietly until the crisis is past.

Meanwhile the proposed solutions to the strike get crazier and crazier. Some of the fans are on hunger strikes. One sportswriter suggests that we lock the owners and players in a room together without food until the issues are settled. A fan suggested restocking the major league teams with athletes from other sports.

SOME PEOPLE are even taking the whole thing seriously. Like Los Angeles County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn, who has written to the nation's Fan-in-Chief, President Reagan.

"What the negotiators need and what the nation needs," Hahn wrote, "is for you to intervene on behalf of the American people and use the prestige of your office to bring about a settlement of the baseball strike."

Hahn wants the Fan-in-Chief to convene the principals in the Oval Office. And, presumably so the negotiators don't think that this is a paid vacation, Hahn suggests that it may be necessary to house them at the Quantico Marine Base, "to iron out all the fine points."

Maybe I'm hopelessly negative, but it's my impression that the Fan-in-Chief has more pressing concerns.

I guess I'm still not convinced that our country's morale and emotional well being is threatened by a temporary lack of major league baseball.

Somehow I feel a lot better knowing President Reagan is spending his allotted study time and money solving baseball strikes. In our society there are specialists who are paid to offer silly solutions to mundane problems. We're called sportswriters.

Only in Cleveland... Duran booked for fight

CLEVELAND (AP) — The last time Cleveland hosted a major professional fight, heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali needed everything he had to knock out a burly unknown named Chuck Wepner in the 15th round.

That was in March 1975. More than six years later, the city is likely to host the return to the ring of former lightweight and welterweight champion Roberto Duran in his Aug. 9 bout against junior middleweight Nino Gonzalez.

"Cleveland has always been a good fight city. The interest has to be revitalized and rekindled. If the (baseball) All-Star game doesn't occur, the city will really need something like this to cure its appetite. It's 90 percent certain," Clarence Rogers, a local attorney and one of the fight's main sponsors, said Tuesday.

The fight will be the first for the 30-year-old Duran since Nov. 25, when he complained of stomach cramps and quit his World Boxing Council welterweight championship bout against Sugar Ray Leonard.

Milwaukee attracts worse field than usual

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Greater Milwaukee Open golf tournament, which annually fights a losing battle to attract the top names on the tour, begins its 14th run Thursday with what officials concede is even a less attractive field than usual.

But, the same officials say, the no-name field's deterrent effect on the tournament's success probably is overrated.

That's because the 7,010-yard, par-72 Tuckaway Country Club course offers little challenge to the pros, who usually record some of the best scores of the yer here. Ad Milwaukee fans have shown they will turn out to watch low rounds, regardless of who shoots them.

"We feel that people come out here to watch the pros make birdies," said Ken Thelen, a GMO past president.

The GMO lost $135,000 when it offered a $200,000 purse, at the time a sum very competitive with other tournaments, for the first try here in 1968.

Hard work and persistent promotion helped to erase the last of the debts a few years ago, and record crowds have been the rule since the late 1970s. Good turnouts are expected again, especially because the baseball players' strike has sharply reduced competition for the sports dollar.

The pros score well at Tuckaway primarily because the course usually is in impeccable condition and because most of them can reach the four par-5 holes in two shots.

"Some pros have told us that it's one of the best courses they've ever played, condition-wise," Thelen said.

Hearns resents well earned ring reputation

Tommy resents his reputation as a guy who can empty gyms when he walks in a ring, and who can make a town hide the women and children. In his pro ring career, he has left 32 opponents for dead. And about half of them retired from the ring when they woke up.

It's not that Tommy Hearns wants people to think he's the kind of guy who cries when the cannary dies or carries poodles with jewel collars on his trips with him. What Tommy Hearns wants you to know is that he doesn't have to hit people over the head to keep his standing in this mob.

You see, Sugar Ray Leonard, who gets the kind of press a Disney reindeer does, has put out the story that Tommy the Hit Man is a kind of brainless soldier of the syndicate who wins fights the way a train wins wrecks, that he is what they say he is and not much more -- a hit man. In other words, take away his piano wire, in this case, his right cross, and he'll be shining shoes for a living.

The Hit Man resents this. "What I do in the ring, I out think," he insists. This will come as news to the 30 guys who got carried out of the ring who didn't realize there were in a contest of wits, who thought they just got mugged on the way through the ropes. Only two guys have gone the distance with The Hit Man -- Mike Colbert and Alfonso Hayman. And Colbert got knocked down five times and got his jaw broken in three places. It could hardly have occurred to him that he just lost a spelling bee.

BUT, TOMMY Hearns point out a little-known fact. In his amateur career, which spanned almost 10 years, The Hit Man hit 167 people in the ring -- and only knocked out 12 of them. The future Hit Man was more of a hit-and-run man. The Godfather would have been disgusted. It was not till he turned pro that Tommy went from point man to hit man.

Still, he thinks he may revert for the Leonard fight in Caesars Palace in September, just to teach Sugar Ray a lesson. That may be a dangerous option. The law of the Mafia, "When you shoot at a don, kill him," may apply here. A lot of people think The Hit Man should stick to the old ways. Kiss Sugar Ray on both cheeks beforehand -- and then go for the jugular. I mean, hit men don't try to win split decisions. They just send flowers afterward.

Bill on agents wins approval

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Agents representing professional athletes in California would have to register with the state under a bill that won state assembly approval Tuesday.

With no debate, the bill, sponsored by Assemblyman Bill Lockyer, D-San Leandro, was sent to the Senate by a 51-19 vote.

The bill, sponsored by the National Football League Players Association, would establish a licensing program similar to that for talent agents in the Department of Industrial Relations.

Agents would have to register with the state labor commissioner and pay an annual fee that Lockyer said would be about $500.

Pakistan's General Zia starts fifth year in power stronger than ever

By BARRY SHLACHTER
Associated Press Writer

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — No military parades, mass celebrations or speeches are planned Sunday to mark the beginning of President Gen. Mohammed Zia ul-Haq's fifth year in power.

But, the unobserved anniversary finds the 56-year-old career army officer more firmly in control than almost any other time since July 5, 1977, when he toppled the late Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto in a bloodless coup. Bhutto was later hanged.

"Nothing is planned," said a ranking official of the press information department, the regime's propaganda arm. "We haven't even prepared any articles for the (local) newspapers. It's all very low profile."

Despite the absence of fanfare and hoopla, the day is a milestone.

Zia has now ruled by martial law decree longer than any of Pakistan's three other military strongmen, surpassing the late Gen. Ayub Khan who ended martial law in 1962 after three years and eight months and continued to govern another six years under a new constitution.

Pakistan, which gained independence from Britain in 1947, is not yet ready for civilian rule, asserts Zia. He had promised free elections soon after his takeover and then repeatedly postponed them until he announced the country could ill afford the luxury of Western-style democracy.

Since 1977, he made numerous overtures to the country's 82 million people but, in his own words, his "constituency" remains the armed forces which he still commands although he has reached the normal retirement age for a chief of staff.

As one Western diplomat here put it, Zia is not so much unpopular as he is just not popular.

The former armored corps commander has turned to his advantage two rather disastrous developments: the December 1979 Soviet military intervention in neighboring Afghanistan, and the March 1981 hijacking of a Pakistani jetliner which ended after the regime met the the sky pirates' demands for releasing 54 political prisoners.

While the Afghan crisis has saddled Pakistan with an enormous refugee problem and directly threatened its security, it also changed Western thinking about the south Asian country's strategic importance. With the new perception came offers of billions of dollars in economic and military assistance, which had been cutoff or curtailed after Bhutto was hanged April 1, 1979, for the murder of a political opponent.

The hijacking by Bhutto supporters last March created widespread disenchantment with opposition polit8cs in general and Bhutto's once powerful Pakistan People's Party in particular. Zia exploited the changed mood to detain hundreds of dissidents, including Bhutto's widow and eldest daughter, who remain in jail.

The anti-regime parties are still in disarray and efforts by Zia to win over right-wing Moslem groups in this overwhelmingly Moslem nation appear to be making headway, Pakistani sources said.

Clergymen, who were a strong force in the 1977 anti-Bhutto movement that indirectly led to the army takeover, either have been neutralized or converted into supporters because of Zia's fundamentalist "Islamization" campaign.

The regime has ordered the national airline to stop serving alcohol, gave powers to the religious courts, introduced a mandatory Islamic "charity" tax and interest-free loans as well as martial law punishment for daytime eating or smoking during the fasting, holy month of Ramadan.

AFL-CIO president predicts 'social disaster' ahead with Reaganomics

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland describes President Reagan's proposed budget cutbacks as "a one-sided reactionary economic policy" and says it will create social disaster.

Kirkland spoke this week at a convention of the Communication Workers of America, where he warned union members that the Reagan program would close hospitals, damage schools, reduce fire and police protection and dismantle worker protection regulations.

"The AFL-CIO believes that it is possible for our country to avoid the social disaster we see taking shape behind the Reagan economic program," he said.

"Our job is to bring these facts home to those we represent and to all of our fellow citizens who have not yet seen through the fog of piety and promises of a one-sided reactionary economic policy."

Addressing the convention later in the day, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., criticized the Reagan Administration for pushing through "the most anti-environment, anti-woman, anti-health, anti-worker, anti-middle class budget in our national history."

"I am convinced that in due time this anti-union, anti-worker, anti-labor attitude will pass," he said.

"The vast majority of our people will soon come to understand that the prevailing philsophy of this day is alien to all our history, and contrary to all our hopes."

Kirkland said many people have forgotten conditions in the 1920s and '30s, before most federal social legislation was passed.

"Free enterprise had every opportunity to work its will, unrestrained by regulation and unburdened by tax-supported human services," he said, but some parts of the country were burdened "with social attitudes and policies that would have embarrassed South Africa."

Among programs adopted since then were the Public Health Service, federal bank insurance, the federal highway system and Social Security.

"To destroy these programs and others like them — programs that brought hope, jobs and dignity to people in need — is the real aim of those who talk about getting government off our backs," he said.

He urged members to lobby congressmen to support labor's goals, and he pledged that the union would work during the next election to support congressmen friendly to labor and to defeat its foes.

"To do that, we have to make sure that America's working people understand the issues in the most real and human terms and are not fooled by the fancy mirages projected by right-wing economic fakers."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, July 9, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Those born on this date are forceful, fearless and intensely interested in the world around them. In the months ahead, romance will be on a very exciting course. And if you marry, it will probably be to someone of considerable wealth and influence. To avoid misunderstandings, explain your feelings, intentions to loved ones. Where employment is concerned, the grass may not be nearly as green as it looks on the other side of the fence. Think twice before changing jobs. Certain promises might not be kept. Be wary of investing in ususual business, financial schemes. While one may work out just fine, another could be a huge fiasco!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Intellectual ties become stronger now. You are likely to form an important, lasting friendship. This is a very productive period for those seeking new work for the fall.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Certain restrictions are lifted now and you are able to take off in a number of important directions. Do not try to move too quickly. Let romance develop at its own pace.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If unable to take a vacation this summer, do "armchair traveling." Read book that will make other places come alive for you. Mate helps you develop a more positive self-image.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pay more attention to co-workers' suggestions; they could save time or money. Keep in touch with close friends. To improve your mind, enroll in a special course.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some information you receive from a close friend comes in handy. Unusual circumstances and hidden clauses may startle you, triggering sudden decisions. Concentrate now on your personal life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A financial disagreement could cause a rift. Work away from the public eye. Keep in touch with an older person who can provide valuable information.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your creativity and powers of concentration are at their peak. Keep expenses down by becoming a comparison shopper. See a friend's advice tonight. Be more loving.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Heed your intuition when making decisions or looking for way to get your ideas across today. Avoid going to extremes. You need to give things a chance to settle down.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Plan for the future. You need to have a clearer vision of what lies ahead. Watch out for an individual who views you as an opponent. Learn to listen more and talk less.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be determined, but not stubborn. There is a critical difference which is especially important when dealing with employers or employees. Dining out is a good idea this evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Being on time is particularly important right now. Your job could depend on it! Romance may also be affected. The financial outlook begins to improve thanks to certain new developments.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for those in the arts. Take care of old business before becoming involved in a new project. Bargains abound for those who comparison shop. Process paperwork promptly.

The threat that a particular distribution might exist can be as dangerous as the fact that it does exist! East took advantage of this phenomenon to bring off a sparkling defense.

The auction was routine. West tried to exploit the favorable vulnerability when he overcalled without too much in the way of high cards. North had ample values for a jump raise of his partner's suit and South had more than enough to continue on to game.

West led the king of spades, and when dummy appeared, the defensive prospects seemed rather bleak. Declarer surely held the ace-jack of hearts, so it seemed that the most the defenders could hope for were two spade tricks and a club. However, East found a diabolical way to take advantage of the auction and the fact that declarer would have no time to find out how the cards lay. Thus, an "impregnable" contract was headed for defeat.

After dummy followed to the spade lead, East overtook the king with the ace and returned the two, trying for all the world to look like a man who started out with only two spades. West went along with the deception by winning the second trick with the queen of spades and continuing the jack.

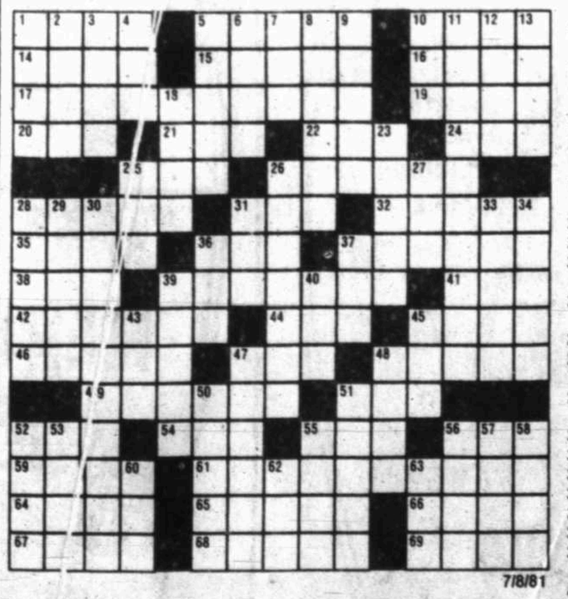

Consider declarer's plight. West did not have much in the way of high cards, so it was quite possible, even likely, that he had started out with six spades. What was more, the early defense had strengthened that possibility. If that were the case, to ruff the third spade with one of dummy's low trumps would court defeat by way of an overruff.

Considering that a 4-0 trump break was far less likely than a 6-2 spade division and that the club finesse might succeed, declarer made the reasonable play of ruffing the third spade with the queen of trumps. When East followed to this trick, declarer began to suspect foul play. West's failure to follow to the first heart confirmed declarer's fears, and when East turned up with the king of clubs, the contract was down one.

Investigators examining body

TYLER, Texas (AP) — As medical examiners ran tests on a body taken from a muddy creek to see if it was that of an 11-year-old girl abducted from her home, an anonymous donor put up a $50,000 reward for the return of the child.

AP Laserphoto

This is a recent but undated photo of 11-year-old Trisha McRoy who is believed to have been kidnapped from her home in Tyler, Texas early Saturday morning.

Smith County Sheriff J.B. Smith said a fisherman found the decomposed body lying face-down Tuesday afternoon in a small creek five miles from Trisha McRoy's home on the outskirts of Tyler in east Texas.

Gene McRoy and his wife, Jan, said at a news conference at their house shortly before the body was found that an anonymous donor had put $50,000 in a Tyler bank as a reward for the return of their daughter.

McRoy, who has a hereditary eye disease that has taken 90 percent of his sight, said he would have offered reward money for the return of his daughter if he could. But he said, "We don't have any. The only thing we could give her was love. We want our little girl back."

Dallas County Medical examiners were expected to complete an autopsy on the body and positive identification from dental records today, Smith said.

Trisha was abducted early Saturday after someone cut a hold in the screen door of her home, opened the latch and forced open the door. The girl had been sleeping on a living room sofa by the door.

Smith said investigators hadn't ruled out the possibility that the body found Tuesday was that of another Tyler girl who was aso missing, 14-year-old Sharon Irving. She disappeared in Galveston June 26 while on a family vacation, he said.

Mrs. McRoy said FBI agents in Tyler, who had been assisting the sheriff's department in the search for the girl, verified that the reward money was placed in a bank. She said the donor had offered the money only if Trisha was returned safely.

Almost 50 police officers from Smith and Van Zandt counties had joined in the search.

Texans to observe Sesquicentennial

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A handbook with 101 entries? Not another edition of the Son of a Son of 101 Aggie jokes!

Nope.

The handbook of 101 ideas that will go out in Texas shortly is from the Texas Sesquicentennial Commission.

Sesquicentennial means 1½ centuries, and the pamphlet has 101 suggestions for community projects that towns and cities across the state can come up with to commemorate the 150th anniversary since Texas became a republic in 1836.

The célebration, in 1986, is still five years away, but the commission counsels that there's no substitute for an early start.

To help communities get off the mark, the commission will soon make available its handbook of ideas — ranging from strewing roadsides with wildflower seeds, as Nacogdoches is doing, to collecting oral histories and folk tales as special projects for high school students.

Rep. Jim Mattox, D-Dallas, says the state commission has already met two of its goals.

The commission, chaired by State Rep. Chris Victor Semos of Oak Cliff, has a commitment from the U.S. Postal Service to issue a special Texas stamp in 1986. And it has picked, through a statewide contest, a winning design for the logo that will symbolize the Sesquicentennial.

"As a member of the Texas Congressional Sesquicentennial Advisory Committee, I'm happy to see all these preparations moving forward and to help in whatever way I can," Mattox said.

The handbook can be ordered from the Texas 1986 Sesquicentennial Commission, P.O. Box 19860, Southeast Station, Austin, Texas 78760.

By following the guidelines in the handbook, a community or county can be designated a Texas Independence community or county.

"The greatest good of the Sesquicentennial celebration could be the drawing together of a broad cross-section of a community in the creation of domething special — a new awareness of our unique history, a renovation, a festival, or any of the many worthwhile projects suggested by the commission," Mattox said.

Watt wants Texas to take control of refuge

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Conservationists say they are worried about a proposal to let the state of Texas manage part of the federal refuge used by whooping cranes during their winter stay on the coast.

"The state has indicated its desire to increase the public recreational use of the area and our fear is that it would sacrifice some of the wildlife benefits the area presently is providing," said Bevery Strassmann, director of the Washington-based Defenders of Wildlife refuge project.

Interior Secretary James Watt wrote Gov. Bill Clements May 29, stating his desire to tranfer "management responsibilities to states wherever possible."

AN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT official will meet with state authorities at an undetermined date to discuss the proposal, said Tom Wilson, an federal agency spokesman.

He said G. Ray Arnett, assistant interior secretary for the Fish, Wildlife and Parks Department, would conduct the meeting.

"The conservative view is that a lot of administrative things are best left to the states," Wilson said.

A 18,999-acre tract within the 54,829-acre Aransas National Wildlife Refuge is being considered for transfer.

State officials have pushed for control of the land since 1975 when the former base and bombing range was abandoned by the Air Force.

The acreage on Matagorda Island belongs to the federal General Services Administration but is managed by the Interior Department as part of the refuge, which has mainland and island sections.

THE STATE NOW OWNS 17,500 acres of bayfront land on the island. Another 11,500 acres on the island's southern tip is owned by Dallas oilman Toddie Lee Wynne.

Last winter, 72 adult whooping cranes and six juveniles stayed on the Texas coast. The majestic birds roam about 10,000 acres of the refuge and some roost on private land nearby.

Conservationists fear the state would open the land to development.

"If you had a lot of recreation and a lot of human activity out here, it wouldn't do the whoopers any good," said Ken Butts, assistant refuge manager.

"Whooping cranes have been shown to be quite intolerant of traffic and stuff," he added. "If the state was gong to do with it what we do with it, I wouldn't worry. But if they're talking about a lot of development, high-rise condominiums and stuff, they (whooping cranes) are going to be in trouble."

SOME SORT OF BEACH and wildlife recreation would be considered, said Ted Clark, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department wildlife director.

"The solitude of the island is one of its greatest drawing cards," Clark said. No causeways would be provided, leaving it as a relaively limited access area that would be far away from whooping crane wintering areas, he said.

Wildlife activities such as hunting and fishing could be regulated so that they could occur only three months or so each year to further minimize the impact on migratory birds, he said.

Judge overrules motion to dismiss Klan case

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — U.S. District Judge David Belew has overruled a defense motion to dismiss the case against Texas Ku Klux Klan leader Louis Beam, accused of demonstrating without permission on the Lyndon B. Johnson National Grasslands.

Defense attorney W.R. Malone said Tuesday the government had failed to prove "beyond a reasonable doubt" that Beam conducted what the indictment against him called "guerrilla warfare-type maneuvers."

Malone also contended the regulation governing permits on the federal property is unclear, that Beam was prosecuted because of his public anti-government statements and that prosecutors failed to show Beam willfully violated park regulations.

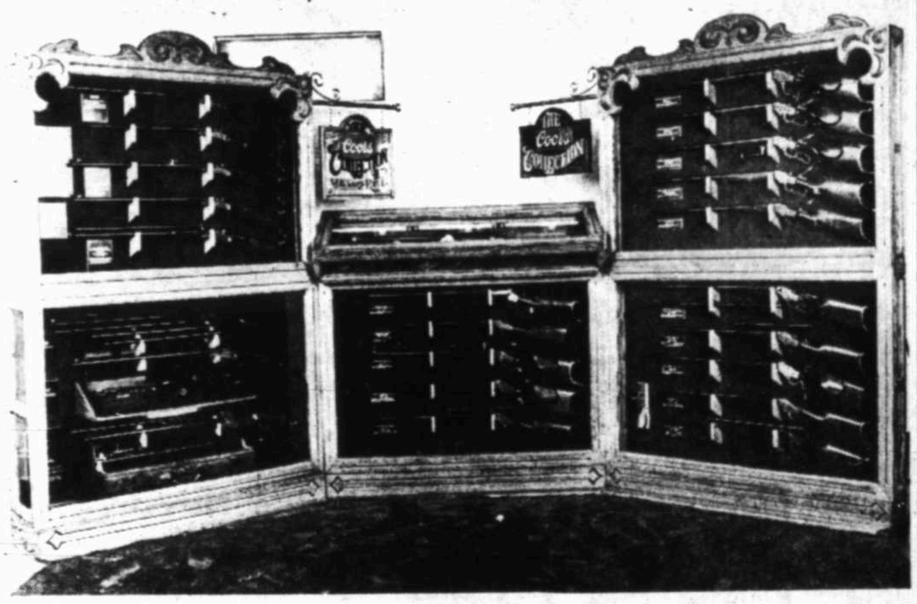

Malone said it hasn't been determined if Beam will testify in the nonjury trial this week.

Beam was indicted in April on one count of demonstrating on federal lands without a permit last February at the grassland, near Decatur.

California's 'Steam Man' loves life in the Mojave

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's tough enough to find water in the Mojave Desert. Finding people who live in the hot and arid area is almost a mirage. Yet, there he is. Virgil Ramey, the "steam man," living atop a natural steam well and loving it.

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

STEAM WELL, Calif. (AP) — It's lonely out here in the Mojave Desert, a half-dozen miles from the nearest paved road and even farther from a phone or human being. And it's hot. So hot even the rattlesnakes hide under the sparse shade of the juniper trees.

No place for man and hardly a place for beast, but home for Virgil "Steam Man" Ramey. A retirement home atop a high-pressure natural steam well.

"I couldn't afford Palm Springs. And I can't afford no $275-a-month place in town, either," he says, brushing his long silver beard with a grimy hand. "Social Security wouldn't buy my groceries in town ... or even a beer now and then."

Don't get the idea that Steam Man worries about money. No sirree.

He just loves the desert. Sitting in his wheelchair, wearing a pair of cut-off shorts and a hard hat, Steam Man takes a sip of beer and grins like a 49er with a gold nugget in his hand.

"It's just paradise out here," he says.

OH, STEAM MAN has had his problems. His hip was injured and his left leg severed in a truck accident 21 years ago. Navigating the hallway in his tiny shack can be a burden. And his hard hat carries a hearing aid amplifier. At age 67, he concedes, "I can't do a lot of things I used to."

The doctor suggested he move to town where the living is easier, help just a phone call away and an air conditioner hums in every window.

Steam Man won't have any of it. After all, his CB radio keeps him company. He uses a kerosene lamp for light. And he takes his dusty Falcon to town for supplies every week or so.

"I'm not one to sit in the doggone rest home and just vegetate. But I wouldn't trade two shovels of my soil for Los Angeles. There are a few elements to put up with out here, but I couldn't stand to live in the asphalt jungle."

The key to Steam Man's survival — and the source of his moniker — is the natural steam well that hisses and bubbles inside his home. He's got a steel vent on it, and controls the output by opening a valve. The well's been here 5,000 years, give or take a few hundred. Steam Man's only been here 10, and he's still figuring out new ways to use the 240-degree steam.

"I CAN PERCULATE coffee in just a few moments, boil eggs and cook corn on the cob in a hurry," he says. He lets the steam condense in a box on top of his house, then funnels the water into a tank where it remains until it's cool. He's fixing up a shower, but needs to figure a way to reroute some of the cool water back into the house.

And he hasn't yet found a way to purge his house of the pungent odor of sulphur that accompanies the well. "You get used to it after a while," he says.

Rabbits, quail, dove, bobcats and other wildlife make shy appearances around his homestead, sipping cool water from the troughs Steam Man keeps filled. The water helped produce two bushels of tomatoes last year in his makeshift greenhouse and it sustains the cottonwood, poplar, palm and bamboo trees he's planted. Sunflowers, 10 inches in diameter, thrive here. They wouldn't live a week without Steam Man's water.

"I got that steam working for me," he says proudly.

HE GIVES TOURS of the steam well for the Bureau of Land Management, which owns the land and the well. Visitors are ushered through a front door with "K.G.R.A." posted in letters Steam Man cut from poster board. They stand for Known Geothermal Resources Area.

A narrow hallway runs from the front to the back of his white frame cabin, with a kitchen on one side and the steam room on the other. The square steam room is 15 feet across, with the well sitting against one wall. Steam Man uncorks the steam for a few moments and explains the history of the well.

He gets an average of one or two visitors a week, but he'll go weeks without a knock on his door. They register in a dusty guestbook; some proffer their business cards for his bulletin boards. Then he hands out brochures on desert lore from an old plastic shoe bag. End of tour.

"It gets a little lonely out here ... a man needs people. I get plenty of visitors, but a little solitude doesn't hurt either. It gives a man time to think."

STEAM MAN'S own business card offers a map of the winding, rutted roads that run the eight miles from Johannesburg to his house, the place he calls Steam Well, north of Red Mountain on a plateau jutting out from a small hill. It's not on any conventional map. "Some people get a little lost," he explains.

Some folks come for more than a look; Steam Man lets them strip down and let their pores open up in the steam room. A few of them, who swear by the healing effects of the steam, stay for a week or two, moving into a natural cave across from his house.

Steam Man charges nothing for the steam baths. "We all — you and I and everyone who comes to visit — own this well," he says.

Steam Man is his own best customer. When he moved here 10 years ago, he had emphysema "so bad I could hardly breathe." But "I haven't had any problem since and I'm sill smoking these," he adds, waving one of his ever-present cigarettes.

HE SLEEPS ON a lumpy couch in the steam room during the cool desert nights. But during the day, "it gets too hot and I have to spend a lot of time outside" in the 100-degree plus weather.

One wonders when the high-pressure steam well will loosen its steel vent and blow Steam Man, wheelchair and all, to kingdom come. Steam Man doesn't worry.

"You might see me sitting on a geyser one day, spinning the wheels of my wheelchair and roasting like a lobster," he says with a hoarse laugh. "I'm sure not going to run from it."

Wherever you're lucky enough to find water in the Mojave, you'll find people like Steam Man, people who love the solitary life of the desert.

"People all the time ask me what I'm doing out in this God-forsaken land. Well, it isn't God forsaken. It's always fascinating. There's something different every day."

The Newspaper BIBLE

A VOICE SAID, "DON'T BE AFRAID!"

One night the Lord spoke to Paul in a vision and told him, "Don't be afraid! Speak out!

Don't quit! For I am with you and no one can harm you. Many people here in this city belong to me." So Paul stayed there the next year and a half, teaching the truths of God.

But when Gallio became governor of Achaia, the Jews rose in concerted action against Paul and brought him before the governor for judgment. They accused Paul of "persuading men to worship God in ways that are contrary to Roman law."

But just as Paul started to make his defense, Gallio turned to his accusers and said, "Listen, you Jews, if this were a case involving some crime, I would be obliged to listen to you, but since it is merely a bunch of questions of semantics and personalities and your silly Jewish laws, you take care of it. I'm not interested and I'm not touching it." And he drove them out of the courtroom.

Then the mob grabbed Sosthenes, the new leader of the synagogue, and beat him outside the courtroom! But Gallio couldn't have cared less.

Paul stayed in the city several days after that and then said goodbye to the Christians and sailed for the coast of Syria, taking Priscilla and Aquila with him. At Cenchreae, Paul had his head shaved according to Jewish custom, for he had taken a vow.

Police detaining student leaders

By CYNTHIA STEVENS
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Aziz Jardine, a detained high school student leader, was brought to his home in a mixed-race township recently by security police for a search of his room.

He was in handcuffs and had welts on his back, his mother was quoted as saying in an account by the newspaper Sunday Express.

The 18-year-old student, youngest of 13 children in the family, told his mother he hadn't been able to wash for three days, the Express said.

The detention of the previously unknown Jardine sparked off protests early in June by mixed-race colleagues in townships in western Johannesburg. The police use of tear gas and truncheons to break up the demonstrations prompted Asian and mixed-race pupils in Cape Town and Durban to stage their own protests, resulting in the closure of four schools for a week and suspension of more than 700 students.

Police action against Jardine at the end of May was the start of a new crackdown on critics of the white-minority government. At least nine university student activists, as well as black journalists and black trade unionists, have been detained.

A five-year banning order issued June 18 against 25-year-old Sammy Adelman, the white president of the Student Representatives Council at the University of the Witwatersrand here, unleashed a storm of protest among whites, who rarely are touched by security legislation in the way that members of the 23 million non-white majority are.

A banning order is commonly used against outspoken critics of the governing National Party's racial segregation policies. It attempts to restrict their influence by forbidding meetings with more than two other people at a time, attendance at public gatherings, movement outside the magisterial district and quotation in the South African press.

University of Cape Town student leader, Andrew Boraine, 21, son of Alex Boraine, a prominent opposition member in the all-white Parliament, is the other white student affected by the recent crackdown. Like Jardine he was being held indefinitely under the Internal Security Act.

The most recent statistics released by the Institute of Race Relations, a private, anti-apartheid research body, said at least 152 people were believed to be currently held without trial in South Africa and at least 161 currently known to be banned.

Given the nation's policy of apartheid — a 30-year-old system of legal racial discrimination and separation — there are few similarities between the backgrounds of Adelman and Boraine and that of Jardine. South Africans live and are educated, at least through secondary school, with people of their own race.

What the student leaders do have in common is opposition to the government of the Dutch-descended Afrikaners, who comprise 58 percent of the nearly 5 million-member white minority, and more specifically, their efforts to organize boycotts of festivities leading up to the May 31 Republic Day, which apparently landed Jardine and Boraine in jail.

The official holiday marked the 20th anniversary of South Africa's becoming a republic independent of the Commonwealth.

Adelman's council also organized anti-Republic Ray rallies, which especially infuriated the government because they involved the burning of a South African flag.

His banning, however, followed his invitation to American activist Jane Fonda, the actress, and her husband, Tom Hayden, to speak at the university. They were denied visas.

"Five years is such a lifetime for a boy as clever and bright as Sammy. He will be 30 when the order is lifted. It seems excessive," Bella Adelman said of her law-student son.

The Sunday Express said Fatima Jardine was mystified about the reasons for her son's detention. She was quoted as saying that when police escorted him home they demanded to know the source of something he had said or written.

"He asked me to bring him his history book, and I had to hold it while he turned the pages because he still had the handcuffs on. He found the section on the Russian revolution and found the reference and showed them it was part of the syllabus," the paper quoted her as saying.

"One policeman said he had never been taught that at school, but the major told them to forget it. I think he was embarrassed that it was in the school history book."

The elder Boraine, the Progressive Federal Party spokesman on education, said a visit to Andrew "reinforced my long-held view that bannings and imprisonment without trial are the symptoms of a very sick society," according to an account in the Rand Daily Mail.

Clayton defends water fund

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Speaker Bill Clayton says it's not true that his proposal to channel half the state treasury surplus into a water fund would lead to future tax increases.

He spoke at the first meeting of a Texas Water Task Force created by Gov. Bill Clements, who backs Clayton's idea to use future surpluses for water projects.

"Some have linked it to a necessity for a tax bill," Clayton said. "We can dispel that right readily."

He said the same arguments were used to oppose dedicating funds for public education, universities and highways in Texas. Predicting the water trust fund would lead to new taxes is "a whitewash to try to oppose the issue," Clayton said.

"WE NEED this group talking up this project," he told the panel.

Opponents point out that only biennial surpluses resulting from Texas' economic growth have prevented the passage of any new state taxes since 1971.

Clayton's proposal was approved by the House during the recent legislative session, but died in the Senate. Clements put the water trust fund on the list of topics to be considered at the special session that opens Monday.

"The work has to be done all over again. We had the votes, but the project has to be sold again," Clayton said.

HERBERT GRUBB, director of planning and development for the Texas Department of Water Resources, told the task force as many as 25 new reservoirs would be needed in the next 50 years to meet the state's population growth.

"Over $50 billion will be needed to meet this growth curve we are looking at," he said.

Louis Beecherl of Dallas, task force chairman, said he anticipated the Clayton plan would win approval during the regular session and appointed a subcommittee to lobby for it.

If approved by lawmakers, Texas voters would get to vote on a constitutional amendment establishing the fund.

Dallas bond lawyer Ray Hutchison, who has worked with Clayton on the project, said $500 million in the fund could guarantee no less than $1 billion in local government bonds for water projects.

"How much money is that? Nobody really knows," Hutchison said.

He said the surplus has ranged from $25 million to $500 million.

Evolution fuss moves to Texas

BEDFORD, Texas (AP) — School trustees say they are perfectly content to let Arkansas courts show them the way in deciding how to add the biblical version of creation to their public school curriculum.

The Hurst-Euless-Bedford school board voted Tuesday night to abandon its evolution-only instruction policy in favor of a new plan that would include the teaching of religious theories about creation of the universe. However, trustees delayed implementing the new plan for at least a year.

"What we are trying to do is wait, instead of spending $50,000 to $100,000 of taxpayers' money in legal battles," said board member Steve Meeks. "There is a case going in Arkansas federal court which is exactly the same issue. We are going to wait to see the outcome of the court rulings."

"INSTEAD OF running the risk of incurring a lawsuit ourselves, I think it would be opportune to let the state of Arkansas do it for us," chimed in board member John Eden.

Members of the school board are chosen from Hurst, Euless and Bedford, three conservative Fort Worth suburbs. Fiery, controversial television evangelist James Robison — a longtime critic of the theory of evolution — makes his headquarters in Hurst.

Board members voted unanimously to require both theories of creation — evolutionary and biblical — be taught in the public schools starting with the 1982 fall term, pending the resolution of the Arkansas case.

If no final ruling is forthcoming by Aug. 1, 1982, however, Meeks said the board will reconsider the plan in light of any court orders currently in effect.

THE BOARD HAS been wrestling with the problem of adding biblical theories to the curriculum since march.

Initially, board members wanted to have the biblical theories taught along with the evolutionary theories, but were warned that would violate recent court opinions on separation of church and state.

Trustees said they finally adopted a compromise program that tells teachers how to point out discrepancies in the evolutionary theory without reference to the Bible or religion.

The Arkansas case was filed May 27, on behalf of 23 plaintiffs, to challenge a new state law requiring the teaching of biblical theories in public schools.

Plaintiffs include parents, teachers and a number of religious leaders from Presbyterian, Episcopal, Catholic, Baptist, United Methodist and Jewish groups.

Testing can show thyroid condition

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A simple test that can save an infant from a lifetime of deformity and mental retardation has detected 106 cases of hypothyroidism in just over a year.

The State Health Department, following orders from the Legislature, set up the screening program, which also checks newborns for two other rare conditions, galactosemia and homocystinuria, in February 1980.

Hypothyroidism — also called cretinism — is the absence of a thyroid gland or the gland's failure to function properly. Without screening, its presence can't be detected until symptoms begin to appear about three months after birth.

It takes about $20 worth of medication a year to keep hypothyroidism under control and enable an infant to grow up normally, says Lois Brown, coordinator of the department's Newborn Screening Program.

"A child with untreated congenital hypothyroidism soon shows signs of cretinism — stunted growth and mental deficiency. With treatment, a baby can develop into a productive member of society. Without it, the future prospects are dismal at best," Mrs. Brown said.

THE DEPARTMENT said hypothyroidism occurs in one in 4,000 births, galactosemia in one in 88,000 births, and homocystinuria in one in 264,000 births.

Since the screening program began, six cases of galactosemia and one case of homocysinuria have been detected.

The health department has conducted a screening program for another cause of retardation, phenylketonuria (PKU) since 1966, detecting 217 cases, all treatable with a special diet.

Hypothyroidism is the biggest cause of retardation found by the screening program.

Screening is done with a simple blood test. Blood is taken from an infant's heel on a special filter paper that is sent either to the department or to a private laboratory certified by the department. The department's laboratory here processes about 40,000 blood samples a month.

If any of the conditions are found, the baby's physician is contacted by telephone or mail for follow-up tests.

Plan to use air base for refugee housing scrapped

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposal to use Ellington Air Force Base in Houston as a holding area for Cuban and Haitian refugees has been scrapped, Sen. John Tower says.

The Immigration and Nationalization Service had expressed interest in the proposal, and Rep. Ron Paul, R-Lake Jackson, deplored the possibility in a recent town hall meeting in his district.

"The Air Force assured me today it will not support such a use for facilities at the Houston base," Tower said Tuesday. The base had been suggested as a holding area for refugees entering the United States illegally.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell, in accordance with the rules of the Public Utility Commission of Texas, hereby gives notice of the company's intent to implement a new schedule of telephone rates in Texas effective July 21, 1981, unless otherwise determined by the Commission.

It is expected that the requested rate schedule will furnish a 15.8 percent increase in the company's intrastate revenues.

A complete copy of the new rate schedule is on file with the Public Utility Commission at Austin, Texas, and with each affected municipality served by Southwestern Bell, and is available for inspection in each of the company's public business offices in Texas.

Notice to Customers of Other Telephone Companies

The filing includes, but is not limited to, proposals to increase rates for interexchange private line and foreign exchange (FX) service. Changes in such rates would also affect customers of other telephone companies because such companies provide interexchange private line and foreign exchange service in accordance with rates specified in Southwestern Bell's tariffs.

Aviso Público

Southwestern Bell, en conformidad a las reglas del Public Utility Commission (Comisión de Servicios Públicos) de Texas, por la presente hace saber su intención de establecer un nuevo arancel para servicio de teléfono en Texas con vigencia a partir del 21 de Julio de 1981, a menos que la Comisión haga otra determinación.

Se espera que el nuevo arancel que se ha solicitado rendirá un aumento de 15.8 por ciento en los ingresos intraestatales de la compañía.

Una copia completa del nuevo arancel se ha archivado en las oficinas del Public Utility Commission en Austin, Texas, al igual que en cada municipalidad afectada y servida por Southwestern Bell, y cada una de las oficinas de la compañía para negocios con el público en Texas tiene una copia para lectura pública.

Aviso a los Clientes de Otras Compañías de Teléfono

El registro incluye, pero no se limita a, propuestas para aumentar las tarifas para servicio de línea privada entre centrales telefónicas (interexchange private line) y servicio de central telefónica extranjera (foreign exchange FX). Cambios en dichas tarifas de servicio tambien afectarían a clientes de otras compañías de teléfono porque dichas compañías proveen los servicios ya mencionados en conformidad a tarifas especificadas por Southwestern Bell.

16 Permian Basin wildcats scheduled

Sixteen wildcats have been scheduled in the Permian Basin counties of West Texas and eastern New Mexico.

MARTIN COUNTY

MGF Corp. of Midland has scheduled a 11,200-foot wildcat in Martin County,15 miles northeast of Stanton.

Designated the No. 1 Grantham, the location is 1,880 feet from the north and 1,980 feet from the west lines of section 14, block 35, township 2 north of the T&P survey.

The site is 7,000 feet northwest of the 10,190-foot Baxter, abandoned July 9, 1965.

WARD COUNTY

S&W Enterprises of Wink will reenter the No. 1-D S&W Barbara A in the Delstrat (Brushy Canyon) field of Ward County.

The location is 1,320 feet from the north and east lines of section 88, block F of the G&MMB&A survey and is eight miles south of Wink. Contract depth is 3,850 feet.

The location is two miles southwest of 3,600-foot production.

ANDREWS COUNTY

MSW Drilling of Hobbs has scheduled a 5,500-foot field test in the Emma (Glorietta) field of Andrews County.

The No. 5 Emma Cowden (Glorietta) is located 1,320 feet from the north and 1,740 feet from the west lines of section 1, block 44, township 2 north of the T&P survey and is 15 miles southwest of Andrews.

The site is 1 mile southeast of the 5,205-foot Plymouth University abandoned April 10, 1944.

TOM GREEN COUNTY

J.A. March of Dallas will drill the No. 2 Clifton Simcik, a 6,000-foot wildcat and as a location west offset to the Cisco oil opener, in Tom Green County, five miles southwest of Wall.

Location is 7,333 feet from the north and 1,667 feet from the east lines of the J.S. Grant No. 6 abstract 5536 survey. Ground elevation is 1,922.2 feet.

****

Carlton Drilling Co. of Austin will drill the nO. 1 Krueger Unit, a 5,000-foot Ellenburger wildcat in Tom Green County, 7/8 mile south of a scheduled wildcat, and eight miles southeast of Miles.

Location is 467 feet from the third most easterly south line and 2,750 feet from the most easterly west line of section 1 of the E.J. Vaughn survey.

SUTTON COUNTY

Florida Exploration Co. of Midland will drill the No. 1 Tompson, a 3,100-foot wildcat in Sutton County, 15 miles northeast of Sonora.

Location is 1,980 feet from the north and 600 feet from the east lines of section 35, block 9 of the TW&NG survey. Ground elevation is 2,378.6 feet.

American Stephen Ptacek, 28, pilot of the Solar Challenger (background) is welcomed by it's designer Dr. Paul McCready (right) follwing the successful flight, Tuesday by the aircraft across the English Channel from Cormeilles in France to Manston Royal Air Force base 20 miles north of Dover. The Solar Challenger is powered by more than 16,000 solar cells on moveable panels on top of the plane's wings and was in the air for a total of five and a half hours.

Solar plane Channel crossing is success

MANSTON, England (AP) — American pilot Stephen Ptacek says his success in the first solar flight across the English Channel was "everything I expected and more."

Ptacek, 28, of Golden, Colo., made the 185-mile crossing Tuesday to England's southern coast from Cormeilles-en-Vexin, near Paris, in 5½ hours at a speed of 37 mph.

His 217-pound "Solar Challenger," built by a team of aeronautical engineers from California led by scientist Paul MacCready, was powered by 16,000 photoelectric cells spread on the craft's light plastic wings. It flew at 11,000 feet in bright sunshine.

Ptacek, climbing from the plastic cockpit after a smooth landing at Manston airport, said the craft handled perfectly.

"The only real problem was with chase planes — not our own, but some others, one of which was a helicopter," he said. "As we crossed the French coast it created a problem of weight turbulence."

MacCready, who made aviation history by designing the Gossamer Albatross, the first human-powered craft to cross the channel, said Tuesday's flight proved sunshine is a serious energy alternative.

"If solar cells can carry a man from France to England, it proves they have muscle and are useful for more than just wrist-watches," he said.

"Our thinking over the past 70 years has been conditioned by the ready availability of lots of cheap energy and relatively inexpensive materials. Times are changing and we are going to have to get by on less."

The Solar Challenger team waited a month on the European continent for the right conditions to cross. An attempt June 10 was scrubbed due to bad weather.

The solar cells, worth about $114,000, were loaned by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The Du Pont chemical company sponsored the project.

Watt is unmoved by reservations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary James Watt remains committed to speeding up offshore drilling for oil despite petroleum industry reservations that his leasing plan is too broad, department officials say.

Watt, who is expected to propose a leasing plan to Congress soon, wants the government to offer between 200 million and 300 million acres for lease during the next five years, according to officials.

The Carter administration's five-year plan proposed leasing about 15 million acres annually. Watt envisions leasing entire planning regions ranging in size from 9 million to 160 million acres.

Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, said Tuesday that despite industry reservations the organization is "100 percent supportive" of Watt's goal of accelerating offshore oil exploration.

DiBona took issue with an Associated Press story saying the organization and and many of its members believed the speedup was too ambitious and would strain oil company resources.

Although there are "differences of opinion" in the industry over the precise timing of the leases, "the preponderance of opinion favors opening up as many acres of land as possible as rapidly as possible," DiBona said.

However, in a May 29 letter to the Interior Department commenting on the leasing schedule, DiBona questioned a key aspect of the plan — the amount of acreage to be leased at any one time.

"With some possible exceptions, API member companies believe there are alternative methods of achieving the objectives of the streamlining process which are preferable to offering entire planning areas in individual lease sales," he wrote.

The letter said the department could insure that the most promising tracts in a planning area are leased first by continuing the current process of letting oil companies nominate the initial sites for exploration.

Several companies, including Exxon, Atlantic Richfield and Mobil, also were critical of the large-acreage leasing part of Watt's plan in their comments to the department.

"We do not believe that the industry can respond effectively and efficiently year after year to such extensive offerings," Atlantic Richfield said. "Several factors are likely to limit the industry's ability to participate — inadequate capital, unavailability of rigs, limited technical manpower and limited geophysical data on offered areas."

Mobil said: "Offerings in excess of 2 to 3 million acres ... will rapidly produce counter productive stresses on industry capacity to respond effectively."

Major oil companies express interest in Appalachian oil

CALHOUN, Tenn. (AP) — Major oil companies are expressing more interest in Appalachian oil and natural gas exploration because of discoveries made in the Rocky Mountains, officials say.

A Texas-based oil and natural gas exploration firm has become the latest energy company to prepare for some prospecting in Tennessee, joining some of the industry's better known names.

SONAT Exploration Co. of Houston, a subsidiary of Southern Natural Resources Inc. based in Birmingham, Ala., has leased for 10 years the oil and gas exploration rights for 175,000 acres of land owned by Bowater North America Corp. Most of the Bowater land is located in eastern Tennessee between Chattanooga and Knoxville, with some of it also in northern Georgia and Alabama.

"We're enthusiastic about it and so are a lot of the major oil companies," W. Michael Kern, an assistant vice president of Southern Natural Resources, said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "All of the areas look good, but really you don't know what you're going to find until you go down and do the testing and the drilling."

Kern said SONAT obtained permission to do seismic testing and drilling on the Bowater holdings, and will dig its first well this year. SONAT has also leased the oil and gas rights to another 100,000 acres elsewhere in the South, the Gulf of Mexico and Rocky Mountains region.

The first test will, costing about $5 million, will be drilled late this year in Dade County, Ga., Kern said.

SONAT joins oil firms including Amoco, Atlantic Richfield Co., Chevron, Shell and Gulf that have leased oil exploration rights in eastern Tennessee, said Bob Hershey, director of the state Department of Conservation's geology division. Exploration firms are also interested in probing some West Tennessee tracts, he said.

"We have estimated there's at least five and a half million acres under lease for exploration in Tennessee," Hershey said.

Last year, the state issued a record 927 permits for drilling and it is ahead of that pace this year, he said.

The Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama areas, included within the range of the Appalachian Mountains, are part of what the oil industry considers the Eastern overthrust belt. The oil companies are interested in the area because of recent fuel discoveries in the Western overthrust belt in the Rocky Mountains region.

Smaller independent operators, most of them working on the Cumberland Plateau in East Tennessee, have produced most of the state's oil and natural gas in recent years. Last year, production totaled more than 700,000 barrels of oil and about 1 billion cubic feet of natural gas.

"Not much, but it's better than we've had," Hershey said.

Bowater, based in Old Greenwich, Conn., is the nation's largest producer of paper used to print newspapers and operates, at Calhoun, the nation's largest newsprint mill. The firm also makes pulp for paper production, coated paper for magazines and periodicals and operates a lumber mill at Albertville, Ala.

'Four Seasons' a welcome return to earth people

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"THE FOUR SEASONS" is a welcome return to earth people amid a movie summer suffused with monsters, macho and Muppets. Like Robert Redford with "Ordinary People," Alan Alda displays an unexpected sensitivity for the human condition. Unlike Redford, Alda not only wrote but stars in the film marking his debut as a director. It is a totally satisfying debut, offering promise of a bright future in film making. Alda's premise is not entirely probable: that three New York couples would choose to vacation together four times in a year. Alda's deftness makes the situation believable and useful, observing the shift in relationships (one couple divorces) with the flow of love, hate and boredom. All of the couples are fully developed: Alda-Carol Burnett, Jack Weston-Rita Moreno, Len Cariou-Sandy Dennis, the latter supplanted by Bess Armstrong. Each is allowed strong or funny moments. Each is effective, but Weston, who sometimes over-extends himself, is especially endearing. Rated PG, with mature themes and a little swearing.

Motion Picture Association of America rating definitions:

G — General audiences. All ages admitted.

PG — Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

'Young Lives' causes nasty controversy

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Post-Newsweek Productions has a reputation in the TV syndication business built on serious-minded stuff like "Agronsky & Co." and the "The Charlie Rose Show." So no wonder the concern when a proposed series called "Young Lives" found itself embroiled in rather nasty controversy.

The high — or low — point came during the TV programmer's convention in March, when at least five church-related groups complained about "Young Lives" — though Post-Newsweek insisted at the time that none of the protesters had seen the show.

Ken Livesay, the series' producer, took part in a panel discussion during the convention on "Sex and Morality on TV," along with Cal Thomas, a spokesman for the Moral Majority, one of several groups behind a campaign to boycott companies that advertise on programs considered "inapproriate."

Thomas spoke largely in general terms of TV's fascination with sex, and maintained television does not portray life in America as it is. Livesay insisted, "We're trying to provide what Cal says — a broad spectrum of life."

In an interview some time after the convention, Joel Chaseman, president of Post-Newsweek Stations, Inc., expanded on Livesay's observation, with a dig at the people he called "suppressionists."

"They say that widespread teen-age sexuality and drug use are major problems in our society," Chaseman said, "but they say that any program that attempts to deal with these problems should be suppressed.

"I think that's entirely wrong, short-sighted and counterproductive.

"We think it's possible," he said, "to do a program that is on the one hand realistic, and on the other provides parents and kids and others with role models and genuine solutions to problems they might face."

Post-Newsweek is partly responsible for the controversy. The original promotional material for "Young Lives" was at least mildly suggestive, despite the syndicator's claim that the show "is for all who strive to understand and deal with the crises that dominate so many young lives. Identity. Peer group pressure. Sex. Drugs. Parental communication."

Take, for instance, this "quick cut" from a promotional note for the program:

"Monday: Mutually attracted, Brad and Melanie are paired off for a study group project in class — on sexuality and health. Later in the day, Brad starts inviting his friends to his unchaperoned party on Friday night. His mother, Cheryl Hoffman, a nurse who works the graveyard shift, is at home getting dressed after making love to Johnny Royce. Her daughter Susan walks in. Susan — talented, precocious, hates Royce — convinced he is a 'hood.' ... "

On film, the scenes described in the promotional material are almost tame — hardly the stuff of controversy, comparable perhaps to the films church groups themselves produce on "teen-age problems" for Sunday morning broadcast.

"It was a tough show to decide to do," Chaseman said. "We were concerned it would be labled a teen-age soap opera. It's hard not to be overwhelmed by categories and labels and cliches.

"We had in mind an honest-to-God family show, that dealt in a real way with real problems."

The series' producers, Chaseman said, sought the counsel of experts on adolescent development and psychology at two major institutions, Stanford and UCLA. "It was important to do something that rang true," he said, "and yet would show troubled people that their problems can be solved."

Alas, programmers were not receptive to "Young Lives," and Post-Newsweek, perhaps under a bit of pressure from the parent Washington Post Co., decided to offer "Young Lives" to stations in major TV markets, free of charge, for week-long trial in July.

By mid-June, several stations, including the four in the Post-Newsweek group — in Detroit, Hartford, Conn., Miami and Jacksonville, Fla. — had agreed to run "Young Lives" on the test basis.

"We took considerable risks," Chaseman said. "We could have done another game show, but we took the tough course. We didn't do one pilot, we did five. We didn't hire one expert, we got two universities.

"We did everything we were supposed to do, but maybe we did it in the wrong year," he said.

Funeral held for coma victim

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — An 18-year-old student, comatose for two weeks following routine preparations for dental surgery, was cremated after his family decided to have life support systems removed.

Tarrant County Medical Examiner Dr. N.S. Peerwani said the student, Vikram-Jeet Bajaj, may have reacted adversely to one of the drugs or anesthetics administered.

Bajaj died Monday from cardiac arrest resulting from "brain death" after the life support systems were removed, the medical examiner's office has ruled.

He went into a coma June 26 while being prepared for removal of his wisdom teeth in the office of Dr. Edward Menton.

Peerwani said the doses of the three drugs he was given — sedatives Valium and Sublimaze plus Xylocaine, a local anesthetic — appeared "quite normal." But he said he suspected Bajaj had "some kind of idiosympathetic reaction to one of the drugs he was given."

Peerwani said that in such cases, a person is "more sympathetic to a narcotic," or the effect of the drug is greater than in most people.

An inquiry into the case probably will not begin until toxicology tests are completed later this month, he said.

The youth's parents have declined comment. So has Menton.

The family, natives of India, moved to the United States 18 years ago. Bajaj, an honor student, had seen Menton once before. He was to have his four wisdom teeth removed when he lapsed into a coma.

Bajaj became the second Tarrant County teenager to die from complications of oral surgery in the past month and the Texas Board of Dental Examination is investigating four other recent deaths in the state.

Seventeen-year-old Shonia Crumpton died June 2 in a Fort Worth hospital. Her mother, a registered nurse, said she was told that a tube inserted into her daughter's nose to keep her breathing became dislodged or was inserted improperly during oral surgery May 27.

Darrell Keith, a malpractice attorney representing Bajaj's family, has filed two unrelated negligence suits against Menton.

Deputy indicted

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A Webb County deputy has been indicted by a federal grand jury in this South Texas city for striking a man he had arrested for drunk and disorderly behavior.

Arcadio Gil Alegria claimed Webb County Chief Deputy Augustine M. Juarez violated his civil rights when the deputy allegedly assaulted him August 1978. Alegria, who was handcuffed, sustained bruises.

According to the indictment, Juarez and Laredo policeman Alonza Garcia were summoned to investigate a domestic problem between a woman and Alegria. The indictment says Alegria got into an argument with the officers, and Juarez handcuffed him.

U.S. Attorney David Almaraz said Juarez, who could receive a one-year sentence and a $1,000 fine, will be arraigned in a few weeks. Almarez said a bond hearing would be set for today or Thursday.

Plane crash kills man

LIVINGSTON, Texas (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration has launched an investigation into the death of an Illinois man who was killed Tuesday afternoon when his light plane crashed outside this Southeast Texas town, officials said.

Killed was Lawrence R. Dillendeck, 64, of Sterling Ill., said Department of Public Safety spokesman Larry Todd.

The flight plan for the single-engine plane indicated a trip from Fort Smith, Ark., to Houston's Hobby airport, Todd said.

Cholera kills Texas man

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — Complications arising from the rare intestinal disease cholera have killed a 66-year-old man in this Southeast Texas city, his doctor says.

Robert Green was admitted to the intensive care unit at Orange Memorial Hospital when the cholera caused gastrointeritis, which in turn caused "a kidney failure and a liver failure," said Dr. Kanti Gandhi.

Green died Sunday afternoon.

The case of cholera was the second in Texas in eight years. The first victim, whose May illness was traced to improperly cooked seafood, has recovered.

State health officials are investigating the cause of Green's illness.
